THE object of this work is to present in a compendious form biographical memoirs of distinguished personages of all ages and countries, and more particularly of eminent natives of Great Britain and Ireland.

Great care has been taken to insure accuracy as to facts and dates, the best authorities, both printed and manuscript, having been consulted. Among the latter may be mentioned the voluminous collections of the Rev. Wm. Cole, of the Rev. Thomas Baker, B.D., "Socius ejectus," and of Mr. Davy in the British Museum and the University Library at Cambridge; and the MS. treasures preserved in the library of the Vatican, and in various monasteries and colleges in Rome.

The MS. materials, laboriously gathered together by the Editor, in conjunction with his father, the late Mr. Charles Henry Cooper, F.S.A., in illustration of the biography of eminent men educated at the University of Cambridge, have been constantly laid under contribution; and most of the memoirs in the third (unpublished) volume of 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses' have been substantially reproduced in the present work.

The exigencies of space have rendered it necessary to confine the notices of emperors, kings, popes, and other sovereigns to a mere enumeration of the dates of their birth, accession, and death, although this rule has been departed from in not a few instances.

As the work has been for eight years in preparation, a number of eminent individuals who have departed this life during that period could not be noticed in it. Even since the last pages were delivered to the printer, Napoleon III., Lord Lytton, and several other persons of note have died, who could not, while living, be included in a work which does not profess to deal with contemporary biography.

Without making any invidious comparisons, it may be confidently asserted that this dictionary is the most comprehensive work of its kind in the English language, and that it comprises memoirs of hundreds of persons whose names are not to be found in any other general or special collection of biography.

AA.

AA, CHRISTIAN CHARLES HENRY VAN DER, a Dutch Lutheran preacher and writer on divinity, was born 1718 and died 1792. He was one of the founders of the scientific society (Maatschappij der Wetenschappen) established at Haarlem in 1752.

AA, HILDEBRAND VAN DER, an engraver of Leyden, who flourished about the beginning of the eighteenth century.

AA, PETER VAN DER (in Latin, Petrus Vanderanus), a distinguished legal writer, born at Louvain, where he became professor of law in 1559. In 1574 he was promoted to the presidency of the high court of justice at Luxemburg. Died 1594. He wrote two legal works in Latin.

AA, PETER VAN DER, a learned bookseller, of Leyden, who died about 1730. He published no fewer than 86 folio volumes of standard works. The most extensive of his publications is 'La Galerie agréable du Monde,' in 66 folio volumes.

AACS, or ACS, MICHAEL, a Hungarian philosopher and divine, born 1631; died 23 Dec., 1708. His son, of the same name, was also a writer on divinity; born 1672; died 2 Feb., 1711.

AAGARD, CHRISTIAN, a distinguished Danish writer of Latin poetry, born 1616; died 5 Feb., 1664. He was extraordinary professor of poetry at Copenhagen.

AAGARD, NICHOLAS, a Danish writer on theology and criticism, was born 1612, became professor of eloquence at Sorbø 1647, and died 22 Jan., 1657.

AAGESEN, SVEND, called in Latin Sueno, filius Aggonis, is the first Danish historian. By order of Absalon, archbishop of Lund, he wrote a history of the kings of Denmark from A.D. 300 to his own time, viz., 1187. When he died is unknown.

AALST. See AELST.

AARON, St., was martyred with St. Julius, at Caerleon-upon-Usk, in Monmouthshire, probably about 303. He and St. Julius are commemorated on July 1. Another St. Aaron was an abbot in Brittany in the sixth century. His festival is kept on June 22 in the diocese of St. Malo.

AARON, or AHRUN, of Alexandria, a Christian priest and physician in Egypt about 622, and the first person who treated of the small-pox and measles. He composed a large medical work, which is now lost.

AARON ABHAS, a learned rabbi, flourished at Amsterdam in 1703.

AARON ACHARON, a learned rabbi among the Karaité Jews, was living in 1346. His principal work is 'The Garden of Eden, or Book of Precepts,' which contains an account of the rites and doctrines of the Karaites.

ABAGA.

AARON ARISCON, a learned rabbi and physician of the Karaité sect, wrote comments on many books of the Old Testament. He flourished at Constantinople in the thirteenth century.

AARON BEN ASHER, a learned rabbi and commentator on the Pentateuch. Some writers have erroneously ascribed to him the invention of the Hebrew vowel points. He flourished about 940.

AARON BEN CHAIM, chief of the synagogues of Fez and Morocco at the beginning of the seventeenth century, wrote several commentaries on the Holy Scriptures.

AARON-BEN-JOSEPH SASON, a rabbi of Thesalonica. His chief works are 'The Law of Truth' (Venice, 1631) and 'The Lip of Truth.'

AARON THE LEVITTE, a Jew of Barcelona, died in or about 1292. He composed a catechism of 613 precepts of the law of Moses, in Hebrew, printed in 1523.

AARON, PETER, a monk of Florence, and canon of Rimini, wrote some valuable treatises on music, between 1516 and 1547.

AARSENS, FRANCIS, a distinguished Dutch diplomatist (born 1572, died 1641), was in 1598 appointed agent of the United Provinces at Paris, and was afterwards recognized by the title of ambassador. He also came twice as ambassador to England. Cardinal Richelieu used to say that during his whole career he had only known three really great politicians, and that Aarsens was one of them.

AARTGEN, or AERTGENS. See CLAESSON.

ABA, or SAMUEL, king of Hungary, was brother-in-law of St. Stephen, the first Christian sovereign of that country. He was elected to the throne in 1041. He vanquished his rival Peter, the nephew of St. Stephen, but was afterwards defeated by the Emperor Henry III., called 'the Black,' and massacred by his own subjects in 1044.

ABACCO, ANTONIO, a Roman architect of the sixteenth century, published in 1558 an elaborate work on architecture, entitled 'Libro d'Antonio Abbaco.'

ABACCO, PAUL DALL, a mathematician and poet of Florence, died in 1365. His real name was Dagomari, but he was generally called Abacco from his treatise on the Abacus. He was the first who used commas to separate numeral figures into threes when their numbers render them difficult to read.

ABAGA, or ABAKA-KHAN, second Mogul emperor of Persia, of the dynasty of Jengis Khan, succeeded his father, Holakou Khan, in 1265, and died in 1282. He reunited under one empire nearly the whole of Western Asia.

ABAILARD, or ABELARD, PETER, born of a noble family, in the village of Palais, four leagues from Nantes in Brittany, in 1079, was at first a teacher of philosophy, applying himself particularly to logic. His principal rival was William de Champeaux, against whom he disputed one day so forcibly, on the nature of universals, that he obliged him to give up his opinion. Abelard afterwards taught theology with great reputation; but his passion for Eloise, niece of Fulbert, canon of Paris, being discovered, he was obliged to marry her. Fearing that this engagement might prove an obstacle to his advancement, he took the utmost care to keep it a secret, which drew upon him the hatred of the canon's relations, from an idea that he wanted to make Eloise take the veil. To revenge themselves, they forcibly entered his chamber, and mutilated him in a shocking and degrading manner. "Crudelissima et pudentissima ultione punierunt, et quam summa admiratione muodus excipit, eis videlicet corporis mei partibus amputatis, quibus id quod plangebant commiseram."

Overwhelmed with confusion, Abailard hid himself in the abbey of St. Denis, where he assumed the monastic habit. He afterwards retired to Provins, and established a school there, which became very famous. He was accused of teaching erroneous opinions, chiefly about the Holy Trinity, for which he was condemned by a council at Soissons, in 1121, and by that of Sens, 1140, at the solicitation of St. Bernard. Returning afterwards to St. Denis, he was ill-treated by the monks for having said unguardedly that St. Dionysius, bishop of Paris, was not the Areopagite, contrary to the opinion of those times. They obliged him to retire again into the diocese of Troyes, where he built an oratory, which he named the Paraclete. Some time after, the monks of the abbey of Ruys, in the diocese of Vannes, elected him their superior. This happened very opportunely for Eloise, who, with her companions, was forced to quit the monastery of Argenteuil, to which she had retired, the abbat of St. Denis wanting to establish some monks there. Abailard gave her the Paraclete, where she lived in so exemplary a manner, that her prudence, mildness, and piety were admired by all France. At length Abailard, unable to reform his monks at Ruys, resolved to go to Rome, and seek redress for the censures passed against him in France. Stopping at Cluni, Peter the Venerable, who was abbat there, received him with great humanity, and reconciled him to St. Bernard and Pope Innocent II., who had approved his condemnation. This was Abailard's last retreat; he took the habit at Cluni, instructed the monks, and edified them by his austerities. Being grown very infirm, they sent him to the priory of St. Marcellus, a very pleasant situation on the Saône, near Chalons, where he died 21 April, 1142, and where his cenotaph is still to be seen. Eloise passed the remainder of her life at the Paraclete, surviving Abailard 20 years. According to her request she was buried side by side with her beloved Abailard in the same stone coffin. Their remains, after being removed several times, were at last, in 1817, deposited in the cemetery of Pere la Chaise. Francis d'Amboise, councillor of state, published Abailard's works in 1616, with the notes of André du Chene. In the 'Thesaurus Anec-dotarum' of Martenne may be found his Theology, his treatise on the Trinity, and his explication of 'The Work of the Six Days.' The letters of Abailard and Eloise, which make the principal part of his works, were printed separately at London in 1718. The French translation of these letters, with the Latin original, 1723, and the life of Abailard by Dom. Gervais, ancient abbat of La Trappe, are genuine. There are also pretended but fictitious translations in verse and prose.

ABAMONTI, or ABBAMONTE, JOSEPH, a distinguished advocate of Naples, who in 1793 was appointed secretary of the Cisalpine Republic, and member of the executive commission. Died 1818.

ABANO. See APONO.

ABARIS, ambassador from the Hyperboreans to Athens, about 564 B.C.; one of those barbarians whose wisdom and virtue were the admiration of Greece. He is said to have been skilled in foretelling tempests and earthquakes, and to have travelled about the world delivering oracles.

ABASSA, or ABBASSA, sister of Haroun-al-Raschid, the celebrated caliph of the Saracens, was married by her brother to Jafar the Barmecide, it being stipulated that the marriage should not be consummated. This condition, however, being disregarded, Abassa was delivered of a son, who was secretly sent to Mecca to be educated. The affair, however, was made known to Haroun-al-Raschid, who was so incensed that he caused Jafar to be executed, together with his father, his son, and many relatives and adherents. This event happened A.D. 803. Abassa was turned out of her palace, with orders that no one should give her relief. In this wretched state she went about clad in a sheep's skin, reciting her story in verse to excite compassion.

ABATE, ANDREA, a Neapolitan painter, who excelled in representing fruit, flowers, vases, and other inanimate objects. He was one of the artists employed by Charles II. of Spain, and in conjunction with Luca Giordano, executed several of the ornaments of the Escorial. Pilkington states that he died in 1732.

ABAUZIT, FIRMIN, a noted French author, was born at Uzès, in Languedoc, 1679. By the care of his mother he received a good education, and in 1698 set out on a kind of literary tour through Germany, Holland, and England, cultivating the acquaintance of Bayle, Rousseau, Basnage, Jurieu, Sir Isaac Newton, and other celebrated men. King William III. tried to persuade him to fix his abode in England; but affection for his mother led him back to Geneva, where he constantly resided until his death, which took place 20 March, 1767. The reputation of Abauzit rests not so much upon his published writings as upon the high opinion entertained of him by his contemporaries. Though nominally a Protestant, he was by no means orthodox, and there is little doubt that in heart he was a Unitarian.

ABBADIE, JAMES, a Protestant divine, was born at Hay, in Berne, in 1668, or, according to some writers, 1654. He studied at Saumur, Paris, and Sedan, taking at the last-named place the degree of D.D. Thence he went to Holland, and afterwards to Berlin, whence he was appointed pastor of the French church recently established by the elector of Brandenburg. He remained at Berlin for many years. The elector dying in 1688, Abbadie accepted Marshal Schomberg's proposal to go with him first to Holland and then to England with the Prince of Orange. In the autumn of 1689 he accompanied Schomberg to Ireland, where he continued till after the battle of the Boyne, in July, 1690, in which his patron was killed. This occasioned his return to London, where he was appointed pastor of the French church in the Savoy. Some time afterwards he was promoted to the deanery of Killaloe, in Ireland. On returning from a tour to Holland, he was taken ill in London, and died in the parish of St. Marylebone, 23 Sept., 1727. He wrote in French (1) Sermons on several texts of Scripture, 1680, (2) Panegyric on the Elector of Brandenburg, 1684, (3) A Treatise on the Truth of the Christian Religion, 1684, (4) Reflections on the Real Presence in the Eucharist, 1685, (5) The Art of Knowing Oneself, or an Inquiry into the Sources of Morality, 1692, (6) A Defence of the Revolution in England, (7) Panegyric on Mary, Queen of William III., 1695, (8) History of the late Conspiracy in England, 1696, (9) The Truth of the Reformed Religion, 1708, (10) The Triumph of Providence and Religion, or the Opening of the Seven Seals by the Son of God, 1723. He was zealously attached to the Protestant religion, and the cause of King William.

ABBAN, ST., an abbat in Ireland, founded the monasteries of Kil-abbain, in the north of Leinster, and Magharnoidhe, in Kinselach. He died towards the end of the sixth century.

ABBAS, the paternal uncle of Mahomet, was at first a vehement opponent, and afterwards as zealous a disciple of the Prophet. He died A.D. 652 or 653.

ABBAS (Shah) I., the Great, seventh king of Persia, of the Sophi race, born 1557, succeeded his father, Codabende, 1585. He retrieved the affairs of his kingdom, retook several provinces from the Turks and Tartars, and, with the assistance of the English, made himself master of the isle and city of Ormus, April 25, 1622, which the Portuguese had possessed from 1507. His name is in the highest veneration among the Persians. It was this prince who made Ispahan the capital of Persia. Died 1627.

ABBAS (Shah) II., ninth king of Persia, of the race of Sophi, and great-grandson of Abbas the Great, was born 1629, and succeeded to the throne 1642. He recaptured the city of Candahar, which had been ceded to the Mogul in his father's reign. Abbas had formed the design of extending the limits of his empire towards the north; but his death, in 1666, put an end to the project.

ABBAS (Shah) III., the last king of Persia of the race of Sophi, was son of Thamas, and was born 1722. When he was eight months old he was proclaimed king by the usurper, Nadir-Shah, who assumed the regency, and who, on the youthful prince's death, in 1736, succeeded to the throne.

ABBATINI, ANTONIO MARIA, a musical composer, whose works were produced at Rome between 1630 and 1670.

ABBATIO, BALDI ANGELO, an Italian physician of the sixteenth century, wrote a very learned work on the anatomy of the viper.

ABBATISSA, PAUL. See BADESSA.

ABBATUCCI, GIACOMO PIETRO, who occupies a distinguished place in the military annals of Corsica, was born 1726, and died 1812.

ABBEVILLE, CLAUDE D', a Capuchin friar, published, in French, in 1614, a History of the Mission of the Capuchin Fathers to the Island of Maragan, on the coast of Brazil.

ABBIATI, FILIPPO, a noted Milanese painter, was born 1640, and died 1715.

ABBO CERNUUS, a monk of St. Germain-des-Prés at Paris, died between 921 and 927. He wrote a Latin poem on the siege of Paris by the Northmen.

ABBO OF FLEURY (in Latin, ABBO FLORIACENSIS), a distinguished member of the Benedictine order, flourished in the tenth century. He was born in the district of Orleans, in France, and educated at Fleury, Paris, and Rheims. Coming to this country, he spent two years at Ramsay Abbey, in Huntingdonshire, and, after his return to his own country, was elected abbot of Fleury. He died 13th November, 1004, at La Réole, in Gascony, in consequence of a wound received in a brawl between some of his attendants and the inhabitants of the place. He wrote a life of St. Edmund the Martyr, and some other works, most of which have perished. His life was written by Aimoinus, a monk of Fleury.

ABBOT, ABIEL, an American divine, author of 'Letters written in the Interior of Cuba.' Died 1828.

ABBOT, CHARLES, Lord Colchester. See COLCHESTER.

ABBOT, GEORGE, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Guildford in Surrey, 1562, being the son of Robert Abbot, a clothworker in that town. After completing his preliminary education, he was sent to Balliol College, Oxford, and was created D.D. 1597, in which year, also, he was elected master of University College. He thrice filled the office of vice-chancellor. In 1599 he was installed dean of Winchester. In 1609 King James I. promoted him to the see of Lichfield and Coventry, and about a month afterwards translated him to London, and in March, 1610-11, conferred upon him the archbishopric of Canterbury. Towards the close of his life he met with a lamentable misfortune; for, being upon a visit at the seat of Lord Zouch, he was persuaded to exercise himself in the park with a crossbow, and by accident shot the keeper instead of the deer. A commission was appointed to examine whether this irregularity incapacitated him from the office of primate, and the determination being left to King James, he decided in favour of the archbishop, who ever after kept a monthly fast on account of the disaster, and settled 200*l.* a year on the keeper's widow. In 1627 Charles I. suspended him for a time from the functions of the primacy, but restored him shortly afterwards, and he retained his see till his death, which took place in his native town, 4 Aug., 1633. Archbishop Abbot was a prelate of great learning and piety; but he was esteemed a Puritan in doctrine, and in discipline too remiss for one placed at the head of the church. He wrote several works on theology, the most popular of which was his 'Exposition of the Prophet Jonah.' He also had a considerable hand in the Jacobean translation of the New Testament, and was founder of the Lambeth Library.

ABBOT, GEORGE, fellow of Merton College, Oxford, wrote a Paraphrase on the Book of Job, a Vindication of the Sabbath, and Notes on the Psalms. He sided with the Parliament in the civil war, and took up arms in that cause, but died at the age of forty-four, on 2 February, 1648-9.

ABBOT, JOHN, received his education at Sidney

ABBOT.

College, Cambridge, graduating B.A. 1606-7, M.A. 1610, and B.D. 1617. Having embraced the Catholic religion, he retired to the Continent, and in 1623 was a member of the convent of St. John the Baptist at Antwerp. He is author of a very scarce poetical work entitled, 'Jesus Præfigured; or, a Poem of the Holy Name of Jesus, in Five Bookes. Permissu Superiorum,' 1623, 4to. Only two books, however, were completed. There are dedications in English verse to Charles, prince of Wales, and in Spanish to Donna Maria of Austria, infanta of Spain and princess of Wales, dated from the convent of St. John the Baptist at Antwerp, 12 November, 1623. This shows that the news of the breaking off of the Spanish match had not then reached that city.

ABBOT, SIR MAURICE, the youngest brother of the archbishop, became an eminent London merchant, and was one of the first directors of the East India Company. On the accession of Charles I. he received the honour of knighthood, and sat in the first parliament called in that reign. He died in 1640.

ABBOT, ROBERT, elder brother of the archbishop, and in learning much his superior, was born 1560. He was some time master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Divinity in that university. In 1615 he was preferred to the see of Salisbury. The most celebrated of his writings, which are mostly controversial, was his book, 'De Antichristo.' Died 2 March, 1617-18. It is a curious circumstance that he was one of five bishops who held the see of Salisbury in the course of six years.

ABBOT, ROBERT, was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took both his degrees in arts (1606, 1610). He was afterwards vicar of Cranbrook, Kent, and minister of Southwick, Hampshire. In 1642 the House of Commons deprived him of Cranbrook because he had another living. He nevertheless sided with the parliament, and obtained the rectory of St. Austin, Watling Street, London, where he ended his days; but the time of his death has not been ascertained. He was living in 1653. Mr. Abbot published various sermons and other theological works. His 'Milk for Babes; or, a Mother's Catechism for her Children,' first published in 1646, has enjoyed much popularity, it having been frequently reprinted in modern times. There was another Robert Abbot, of Hatfield, near St. Albans, who was a learned preacher and a diligent botanist. He was a contributor to Gerard's 'Herbal,' published in 1597.

ABBOTT, CHARLES, Lord Tenterden. See TENTERDEN.

ABBOTT, LEMUEL, became curate of Ansty, Leicestershire, 1756, vicar of Thornton, in the same county, 1773, and died in April, 1776. He wrote 'Poems on Various Subjects, whereto is prefixed a short Essay on the Structure of English Verse.' Nottingham, 8vo., 1765.

ABBOTT, LEMUEL, son of the preceding, was a portrait-painter of some merit. He was born in 1762, and died in 1803.

ABBOTT, THOMAS EASTOE, author of several poetical works of some merit. Died at Darlington, 18 Feb., 1854, aged 76.

ABBOTT, WILLIAM, a popular comedian, and author of several dramatic pieces; was born at Bath, Somersetshire, 1788, and died at Baltimore, U.S., 7 June, 1843.

ABEILLE.

ABBT, THOMAS, a German author, born 1738, at Ulm, died 1766, at Bückeberg. He is one of the earliest German writers who retain a classical rank, and would probably have excelled as an historian if his life had been prolonged. Besides his translation of Sallust into German, he published a volume 'Concerning Merit,' and another concerning 'Death for one's Country.'

ABDALLAH, the father of Mahomet. He was the most modest and beautiful of the Arabian youth, and when he married Amina, of the noble race of the Zahrites, 200 virgins are said to have died of jealousy and despair. He died about A.D. 570. Several other eminent Arabians bore the same name.

ABDALLAH BEN ZOBAIR, caliph of Mecca, was born in the first year of the Hegira, A.D. 622, and died A.D. 692.

ABDALLATIF, an Arabian philosopher and physician. Born 1162, died 1231.

ABDALMALEC, fifth caliph of the race of the Ommiads, succeeded his father A.D. 685, and reigned 21 years. In the progress of his reign he concluded a treaty with the Greek emperor, reduced Persia, or rather Irak, under his dominion, and captured Mecca. Thus he became the sole and absolute master of the Moslem empire. He died 705. Though deemed brave, learned, and wise, he was so avaricious as to be derisively called by his enemies, the sweat of a stone. It is related that his breath was so fetid, that the flies which accidentally lighted upon his lips were poisoned by it.

ABD-ER-RAHMAN, surnamed the Just, was of the race of the Ommiads, and was born in 731. In 754 he was invited by the Saracens into Spain, and having defeated King Joseph, he assumed the title of king of Cordova, and that of caliph in 762. He died in 787. There were three other kings of Cordova named Ab-der-rahman.

ABDON, ST., a Persian who was martyred at Rome in 250, together with his fellow-countryman St. Sennen.

ABDUL-MEDJID, sultan of Turkey, was son of Mahmoud II. He was born 1823, and succeeded his father in 1839. He introduced many reforms into his empire. Died 1861.

ABDY, EDWARD STRUTT, born about 1790, was educated at Cambridge, where he became a fellow of Jesus College, and died at Bath, 12 Oct., 1846. He is author of 'Journal of a Residence and Tour in the United States,' &c.

A'BECKETT, THOMAS. [BECKET.]

A'BECKETT, GILBERT ABBOTT, a comic writer, born 1811; died 30 Aug., 1856. In early life he edited a comic paper called 'Figaro in London,' and afterwards contributed comic articles to 'The Times' and 'Punch.' Having been employed as an assistant poor-law commissioner, he produced a very able report, which led to his appointment as stipendiary magistrate for Southwark. Among his works are the 'Comic History of England,' the 'Comic Blackstone,' the 'Comic History of Rome,' and a small volume ridiculing the absurdities of the modern English stage, under the title of 'Quizology of the British Drama.' On 23 Oct., 1856, a civil-list pension of 100*l.* was granted to his widow, Mrs. Mary Anne A'Beckett.

ABEILLE, GASPARD, a French poet and dramatist; born 1648, died 1718. His writings are for the most part dull, but an exception must be made in favour of his comedy entitled 'Crispin bel esprit.'

ABEILLE, SCIPIO, brother of the preceding, was a military surgeon, and died 1697. He versified treatises on anatomy and physic—rather dry subjects for the poetic muse. His 'New History of the Bones, according to the Ancients and Moderns,' shows that he was a better poet than anatomist.

ABEL, a Scotchman, who became archbishop of Rheims in 749, and died 5 Aug., 765; wrote in Latin several theological works.

ABEL, CHARLES FREDERICK, a musical composer, born in Germany. He spent the greater part of his life in this country, and died in London, 30 June, 1787.

ABEL, CLARKE, M.D., accompanied Lord Amherst's embassy to China, in the capacity of chief medical officer and naturalist. Subsequently he became surgeon to the governor-general of India, in which country he died, 26 Dec., 1826. His 'Narrative of a Journey in the Interior of China, and of a Voyage to and from that Country in the years 1816 and 1817' (London, 4to., 1818), is a work of great merit.

ABEL, GASPAR, a German divine, poet, and historian. Born 1676, died 1763.

ABEL, JOHN, an architect of note and reputation, was at the siege of Hereford in 1645, and invented a sort of hand-mill to grind wheat for the soldiers. His ingenuity obtained the praise of Charles I. and the honourable title of the king's carpenter. He designed and erected the town-halls of Hereford, Brecon, Kingston, Leominster, and Weobley, all admirable specimens of the timber edifices of the period. The town-hall at Leominster was taken down in 1853, but was soon afterwards re-erected with great care, beam by beam, and rafter by rafter, in a place called the Grange, in that town. Abel died in 1694, in the ninety-seventh year of his age.

ABEL, NICHOLAS HENRY, a Swedish mathematician; born 1802, died 1829. Notwithstanding his premature death, he attained to the first rank among mathematicians. His writings were published in French by Holmboe—Christiana, 2 vols., 1839.

ABEL, RICHARD, an alderman of London, was concerned with Richard Kilvert in a grant from Charles I. of 400. a ton upon wines. The Long Parliament in 1641 denounced this grant as a grievance, ordered a bill to be prepared to make Abel and Kilvert examples, and appointed a committee to examine as to the drawers, advisers, sharers, contractors, or complotters, or who received any bribe or benefit by the project. The matter forms the subject of several caricatures and curious pamphlets. One of the former is by Hollar, and amongst the pamphlets is one by the veteran dramatist, Thomas Heywood, denouncing Archbishop Laud, Lord Chancellor Finch, and Alderman Abel, as a priest, a judge, a patentee.

ABEL, THOMAS, chaplain to Queen Catharine of Arragon, wife of Henry VIII., and a man of profound erudition, distinguished himself by his staunch opposition to the divorce of the queen. He composed a treatise 'De non dissolvendo Henrici et Catharinæ matrimonio.' He was condemned to death for denying the king's supremacy, and executed 30 July, 1540.

ABELA, JOHN FRANCIS, an archaeologist; born at Malta, 1582; died 1655. He is chiefly known by his rare and curious work, entitled 'Malta Illustrata, ovvero della descrizione di Malta, con le sue antichità, ed altre notizie.' A Latin translation by Seiner is inserted in Grævius's 'Thesaurus Antiquitatum et Historiarum Siciliæ.'

ABELARD. See ABAILARD.

ABELL, JOHN, an English musician, was attached to the royal chapel in the reigns of Charles II. and James II.; but after the revolution he was discharged on account of his being a Catholic. Thereupon he went abroad, and distinguished himself by singing in public in Holland, at Hamburg, and other places. In 1701 he published at London a collection of songs, with a dedication to William III. Towards the end of Queen Anne's reign he was at Cambridge with his lute, but met with little encouragement. How long he lived afterwards is not known.

ABELLI, LOUIS, a French divine, was born in 1603, and became bishop of Rhodes; but in 1664 he resigned his see and retired to Paris, where he died 4 Oct., 1691. He was a great opponent of the Port Royalists. He wrote 'Medulla Theologica,' a life of St. Vincent de Paul, &c.

ABENDANA, JACOB, a Spanish Jew; died prefect of a synagogue in London, 1685. He wrote a Spicilegium of notes on various passages of Scripture.

ABEN-EZRA, ABRAHAM, an erudite Jewish rabbi; born at Toledo about 1119; died at Rhodes, 1174.

ABERCORN, JAMES HAMILTON, seventh earl of, wrote 'Calculations and Tables relating to the Attractive Power of Loadstones,' 1729. Died 11 Jan., 1743-4.

ABERCROMBIE, JOHN, a Scotch writer on horticulture; born 1726, died at Somers Town, 1806. He wrote 'The Universal Gardener and Botanist; or, a General Dictionary of Gardening and Botany,' Lond., 1778, and a large number of other works relating to the same subject.

ABERCROMBIE, JOHN, M.D., a celebrated metaphysician, practised as a surgeon at Edinburgh, where he died 14 Nov., 1844. His chief works are treatises on 'The Intellectual Powers and the Investigation of Truth,' and on 'The Philosophy of Moral Feeling.' The university of Oxford showed its sense of his merits by conferring upon him the honorary degree of M.D. in 1834.

ABERCROMBY, ALEXANDER, youngest brother of Sir Ralph Abercromby; born 1745, died 17 Nov., 1795. He studied the Scottish law, and became a judge of the Court of Session, 1792. He contributed some papers to the 'Mirror' and 'Lounger.'

ABERCROMBY, DAVID, M.D., a Scotch physician, spent a considerable portion of the early part of his life on the Continent, and while at Amsterdam was received into the college of physicians in that city. It is likely that he also practised medicine in London. He wrote several medical treatises, besides works on other subjects, of which the principal is his 'Fur Academicus,' He died in Oct., 1701.

ABERCROMBY, JAMES, Lord DUNFERMLINE. See DUNFERMLINE.

ABERCROMBY, JOHN, a Scotch Benedictine, who suffered death about 1561, on account of his opposition to the reformed doctrines. He wrote 'A Defence of the Truth' and 'The Confusion of Heresy.'

ABERCROMBY, Sir JOHN, second son of Sir Ralph Abercromby, entered the army, and rose to the rank of general. In 1810, being then governor of Madras, he took the island of Mauritius from the French. Died 1817.

ABERCROMBY, PATRICK, M.D., a noted Jacobite, was born at Forfar in Angusshire, 1656, and educated at St. Andrew's, where he took his doctor's degree, 1685. He embraced the Catholic religion in the reign of James II., and was appointed one of that sovereign's court physicians. According to another account, however, he was third son of Alexander Abercromby, afterwards Baron Glassford, and was educated abroad. At any rate, he wrote a work, published in 1711, entitled 'Martial Achievements of the Scots Nation,' of which a second volume appeared in 1715. A new edition of the whole work appeared at Edinburgh, 2 vols. 8vo., 1762. The date of his death is uncertain. Watt assigns the event to the year 1720; the General Biographical Dictionary to 1726.

ABERCROMBY, SIR RALPH, a British general, born at Tillibodie, in Clackmannanshire, 1738. On the commencement of the war with France in 1793 he was employed, with the local rank of lieutenant-general, and commanded the advanced guard at the heights of Cateau. In the retreat from Holland he conducted the Guards, and the sick, from Deventer to Oldensall, with equal bravery and humanity. In 1795 he received the order of the Bath, and was appointed commander-in-chief of the forces in the West Indies, where he took the island of Grenada, the settlements of Demerara and Essequibo, and the islands of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, and Trinidad. On his return to Europe he was employed as commander-in-chief in Ireland, and afterwards was removed successively to the command of the forts Augustus and St. George in Scotland and of the Isle of Wight. In the unsuccessful attempt made upon Holland in 1799 Sir Ralph had a principal command, and distinguished himself by his bravery. The last service in which this gallant officer was employed was the expedition to Egypt, where he landed at Aboukir, 8 May, 1801, after a severe contest. On the 13th of the same month was fought the battle of Alexandria, which was followed by a general action on the 21st, when the French were completely defeated. At the onset Sir Ralph was unhorsed, and wounded in two places, but he nevertheless wrested the sabre from his antagonist, and afterwards gave the weapon to Sir Sidney Smith. The gallant hero kept the field throughout the whole of the day, and then was conveyed to the admiral's ship, where he died, 28 March, 1801. His merits were acknowledged by his country, parliament voting a monument to his memory in St. Paul's and 2000*l.* a year to his family, while his widow was created Baroness Abercromby with remainder to her issue male by her late husband.

ABERCROMBY, ROBERT, a Scotch Jesuit, who died at Braunsberg 27 April, 1613, æt. 80, after having undergone imprisonment and great hardships on account of his sacerdotal character.

ABERCROMBY, SIR ROBERT, a British general, brother of Sir Ralph, was successively appointed governor of Bombay, and commander-in-chief in India. It is supposed that he died 1827.

ABERDEEN, GEORGE GORDON, first earl of, was brother of Sir John Gordon, bart., of Haddo, to whose title he succeeded 1637. He studied Scottish law, was admitted an advocate, and eventually created lord chancellor of Scotland and earl of Aberdeen. He held the chancellorship from 1682 to 1684, and died 20 April, 1720, æt. 83.

ABERDEEN, GEORGE HAMILTON-GORDON, earl of, K.C., eldest son of George, Lord Haddo, son of the third earl, was born at Edinburgh 28 Jan., 1784, and educated at Harrow and St. John's College, Cambridge. He proceeded M.A. in 1804, having previously succeeded to the earldom on the death of his grandfather. On the temporary accession of the Whigs to office, in 1806, he formally entered upon public life, being chosen one of the representative peers for Scotland. In 1813 he was sent ambassador to Vienna, where he succeeded in detaching the emperor of Austria from the French alliance. He met with equal success, too, in working on the hopes and fears of Joachim Murat. On the conclusion of the war he was advanced to the British peerage by the title of Viscount Gordon, but he then retired from the public service, which he did not again enter till 1828, when he became foreign secretary under the duke of Wellington. In 1830 he quitted office along with the duke, and (with the exception of a few months in 1834-5) it was not until 1841 that he returned to Downing Street, in the cabinet of Sir Robert Peel. His tenure of office extended to 1846, and then he was in opposition until Dec., 1852, when he became premier, at the head of the coalition ministry on the retirement of the earl of Derby. The doctrine of non-intervention in the affairs of foreign states was the great principle of Lord Aberdeen throughout his political life. As premier, however, his career was by no means successful. Much against his own convictions, he found himself obliged to make war against his old friend the emperor of Russia, in behalf of the integrity of Turkey. Disatisfaction with the conduct of the war was freely expressed, and the consequence was that Lord Aberdeen finally quitted office on 30 Jan., 1855. The remainder of his life was spent in retirement. His death happened 14th Dec., 1860, at Argyll House, London. Lord Aberdeen was a man of high literary culture, and took a deep interest in classical subjects, as was evidenced by an elaborate article on Trojan topography contributed by him to the 'Edinburgh Review,' and by a valuable introduction to Wilkins's translation of Vitruvius, in which he discussed the principles of beauty in Grecian architecture.

ABERGAVENTNY, LADY FRANCES, daughter of Thomas, earl of Rutland, and wife of Henry Neville, Lord Abergavenny; died 1576. She wrote 'Precious Perles of Perfect Godlines,' and several pieces in Bentley's 'Monument of Matrones.'

ABERLI, JOHN LEWIS, a Swiss landscape-painter; born 1723, died 1786.

ABERNETHY, JOHN, a Scotch prelate and writer, was bishop of Caithness, of which see he was deprived in 1638.

ABERNETHY, JOHN, a dissenting minister, was born in 1680, at Coleraine, in Ireland, and received his education at Glasgow, where he proceeded M.A. In 1708 he was called to the ministry, by the Presbyterian congregation at Antrim, where he laboured with great diligence. When, however, the controversy arose about subscription to the Westminster Confession of Faith, Mr. Abernethy acted with so much energy on the side of liberty, as to give offence to his congregation. A separation consequently took place, and he removed to Dublin, where he officiated in Wood Street meeting until his death in Dec., 1740. After he came to Dublin he preached a set of sermons upon the Divine attributes, and published in one volume those relating to the existence and natural perfectimes of the Deity. After his death the second volume, on the moral attributes, was published by his friends. Other sermons by him have also been published.

ABERNETHY, JOHN, one of the most distinguished of English surgeons, was grandson of the Rev. John Abernethy, the Presbyterian divine, and was born in London, 1765. After a preliminary education received in a day-school in Lothbury, he was apprenticed to Mr., afterwards Sir Charles, Blucke, one of the surgeons of St. Bartholomew's Hospital. In 1787 he was elected assistant-surgeon at St. Bartholomew's, and twenty-eight years afterwards became full surgeon. He died at Enfield, 30 April, 1831. For many years Mr. Abernethy was regarded as the most popular teacher of medicine in this country, and his works, which are numerous, are justly held in high estimation by the members of his profession.

ABERSHAW, LEWIS JEREMIAH, a notorious English highwayman, executed in 1795.

ABILDGAARD, NICHOLAS ABRAHAM, the greatest painter that Denmark has produced, was born in 1744, at Copenhagen, where he died 4 June, 1809. His works exhibit profound study, great richness of imagination, and a remarkable power of expression.

ABILGAARD, PETER CHRISTIAN, a renowned Danish physician and naturalist; born about 1740, died 1808.

ABINGDON, WILLOUGHBY BERTIE, earl of; born 1740, died 26 Oct., 1799. He was educated at Geneva, where he imbibed democratic doctrines. A pamphlet by him entitled 'Thoughts on the Letter of Edmund Burke, Esq., to the Sheriffs of Bristol, on the Affairs of America,' created a sensation, and passed through six editions. He also published a rhapsodical 'Letter to Lady Loughborough, in consequence of her Presentation of the Colours to the Bloomsbury and Inns of Court Association; with a Public Letter to the University of Oxford.'

ABINGER, JAMES SCARLETT, Lord, was born 1769, in Jamaica, where his family had long been resident, and held considerable property. He was the second son of Robert Scarlett, Esq. At an early age he was sent to England, for the purpose of education, and at the age of 17 was entered as a fellow-commoner at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1790, M.A. 1794. He was called to the bar in 1791, and rapidly rose to a high position as an advocate. In 1812, and again in 1816, he unsuccessfully contested the borough of Lewes, but in 1818 he entered the House of Commons as member for Peterborough. Mr. Scarlett was not, however, so successful in parliament as he was in the forensic arena. In 1822 he unsuccessfully contested the university of Cambridge, but was at the bottom of the poll. He was, however, re-elected for Peterborough. On the breaking up of the Liverpool administration in 1827, Mr. Canning invoked the assistance of the Whigs, and Mr. Scarlett became attorney-general, and received the honour of knighthood. From that period he was a consistent supporter of Conservative principles. He continued to be Attorney-General till Jan., 1836, when he was succeeded by Sir Charles Wetherell. In May, 1829, Sir Charles was dismissed from office by the duke of Wellington, on account of his bigoted speech against the Catholic Relief Bill, and the vacant post filled up by the appointment of Sir J. Scarlett, who, without delay, filed criminal informations against the principal newspapers which had opposed the policy of the government in regard to Catholic emancipation. He held the attorney-generalship until the accession of the Whigs to office in 1830. He subsequently was returned to parliament for Coker-mouth and Norwich. Upon the formation of the Peel cabinet in Dec., 1834, he was made Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and created Baron Abinger. He died at Bury St. Edmunds, while travelling the Norfolk circuit, 7 April, 1844.

ABINGTON. See HABINGTON.

ABINGTON, MRS. FRANCES, whose maiden name was Baron, a popular English actress; born in London, 1731; died 4 March, 1815. For a long series of years she was the unrivalled female ornament of the British stage in comedy. Her principal parts were mostly in concert with David Garrick, in all the best comedies of Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Congreve, and Cibber. Latterly, she was more particularly distinguished for her representation of Lady Teazle in the 'School for Scandal.'

ABINGTON WILLIAM JAMES ACHILLES, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards went to the bar. Subsequently he adopted the theatrical profession, and became lessee of the Richmond Theatre, where he died, 21 Nov., 1848. He wrote 'The Creation,' a poem.

ABNEY, SIR THOMAS, was born at Willesley, Derbyshire, 1639, and educated at Loughborough. He afterwards became a merchant in London, and a member of the corporation. In 1693 he was elected sheriff, and in the year following, alderman. He also received the honour of knighthood. In 1700 he served the office of lord mayor, and was elected one of the members of parliament for the city. He had a principal share in founding the Bank of England; but he will be chiefly remembered as the steadfast friend of Dr. Watts, who resided with him at Stoke Newington. Sir Thomas died 6 Feb., 1721-2.

ABNEY, SIR THOMAS, appointed baron of the Exchequer, 1740; justice of the Common Pleas, 1743; died 10 May, 1750. of the gaol distemper contracted at the 'Black Sessions.' Baron Clarke, Sir Samuel Pennant, lord mayor, Alderman Sir Daniel Lambert, and several of the counsel and jurymen, also fell a sacrifice to the pestilence.

ABRABANEL, ISAAC, a famous rabbi, was born at Lisbon, 1437, and died at Venice, 1508. His writings, while they show that he was profoundly acquainted with the Hebrew Scriptures, are marked by a most rancorous enmity to Christianity.

ABRAHAM-BEN-CHAILA, a Spanish rabbi; died 1303. He predicted the advent of the Messiah, which event he fixed for the year 1358.

ABRAHAM, ROBERT, an English architect of some repute; died 11 Dec., 1850, aged 77.

ACOSTA, URIEL, an eccentric character, born at

ACQUAVIVA.

Oporto towards the end of the sixteenth century. He was educated in the Catholic religion, which his father, though descended from a Jewish family, also sincerely professed. The study of the Scriptures, however, unsettled his brain, and he came to the conclusion that he could only secure eternal salvation by embracing the Jewish faith. Accordingly he went to Amsterdam, and was admitted into the synagogue. He soon, however, became disgusted with his new co-religionists, and was excommunicated by them, whereupon he turned Sadducee, and wrote a treatise against the immortality of the soul. All the copies, however, were seized, and the author imprisoned for a short time and fined 300 florins. He proceeded still further with his scepticism, and became a Deist, though, inconsistently enough, he continued in the Jewish communion. A nephew of his, however, accused him of not conforming to the laws of the synagogue in regard to eating and many other points. The consequence was that the Jews again expelled him, and for seven years he lived in a most wretched condition. At length he was readmitted to the synagogue, after submitting to a severe penance. Shortly afterwards he endeavoured to shoot his principal enemy as he passed his door, but the pistol missing fire, he immediately retired into the house, and shot himself with another pistol. This event occurred in 1640 or 1647. A life of Acosta was published at London in 1740.

ACUNA, FERNANDO DE, a Spanish poet, who died 1580. He translated Ovid into Spanish verse.

ACUTUS, JOANNES. See HAWKWOOD.

ACWORTH, GEORGE, an English divine, was educated at Cambridge, where he was created LL.D. He was very intimate with Archbishop Parker, in whose house he resided for some years. Being deprived of his preferments in England, in consequence of his dissolute habits, he went to Ireland, having been appointed master of the faculties and judge of the prerogative court in that country. He was living in 1577. He assisted Parker in the compilation of 'De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ,' and wrote a reply to Nicholas Sanders's treatise 'De Visibili Monarchia Ecclesiæ.'

ADAIR, JAMES, sergeant-at-law, was born in London and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. 1767. After completing his studies in the Temple, he was called to the bar, and became eminent about the time when Wilkes engaged the public attention. In 1779 he was chosen recorder of London, which post he resigned ten years afterwards. When the French revolution broke out, Mr. Adair separated from his Whig connections, and at the state trials had a principal share as counsel for the crown. At his death, which happened 21 July, 1798, he was member of parliament for Higham Ferrers, king's prime sergeant-at-law, and chief justice of Chester. He published a anonymously 'Observations on the Power of Alienation in the Crown,' 1768. This pamphlet had reference to the great contest between the duke of Portland and Sir James Lowther.

ADAIR, JAMES MAKITTRICK, M.D., a native of Scotland, was born 1728, and practised as a physician in the island of Antigua and other parts of the West Indies, where he also presided as one of the judges of the courts. On his return to England he settled at Bath. He died at Harrowgate in 1802. He wrote several works, principally on

ADAMS.

ADAMS, JOHN, originally a Calvinist minister, became a priest of the church of Rome, and suffered death at Tyburn on account of his sacerdotal character, 8 Oct., 1586.

ADAMS, JOHN, a native of London, was educated at Eton, whence he proceeded to King's College, Cambridge, in 1678, becoming a fellow in due course. After travelling in Spain, Italy, France, and Ireland, he held at various times the rectory of Higham-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire, the lectureship of St. Clements, the rectories of St. Albans, Wood Street, and St. Bartholomew, London, and Hornsey, Middlesex, also canonic at Canterbury and Windsor. He was chaplain to Queen Anne, and in 1705 was created D.D., at Cambridge. In 1712 he became provost of King's College. Dr. Adams, who died of apoplexy in 1719-20, published a considerable number of occasional sermons.

ADAMS, JOHN, second president of the United States, born 1735. He was educated at Cambridge University, Massachusetts, and adopted the legal profession. After practising in different towns, he finally moved to Boston. He took an active part in asserting the independence of the United States and in severing them from the British crown, and he was mainly instrumental in obtaining the appointment of Washington as commander-in-chief. In 1777, he was one of the commissioners of congress at the court of Versailles, and shortly after his return to America in the autumn of 1778, he was chosen minister plenipotentiary for negotiating a treaty of peace with Great Britain. He first went to Paris, and subsequently to Holland, where he was received as the United States plenipotentiary. The definitive ratification of the treaty with England took place 14 Jan., 1784; and in the following year, Adams was appointed the first minister sent by the United States to the court of St. James's. He resided in London till Oct., 1787. In 1789 he was elected vice-president of the United States, and in 1793 was re-elected to the same office. On the retirement of Washington he was elected president. At the expiration of his four years of office he was defeated by Jefferson, and he devoted the remainder of his life to agricultural and literary pursuits and to political speculation. Died 4 July, 1826. Adams wrote 'Defence of the Constitutions of Government of the United States,' 'Letters upon Interesting Subjects respecting the Revolution in America,' and 'Dissertation on the Canon and Feudal Law.'

ADAMS, REV. JOHN, born at Aberdeen about 1750, settled in London, where he became minister of the Scotch church in Hatton Garden. He also kept an academy at Putney. He compiled 'Flowers of Ancient History,' 'Flowers of Modern History,' 'Flowers of Modern Travels,' &c. Died 1814.

ADAMS, JOHN, called the patriarch of Pitcairn's Island, was born in England about 1764, and was one of the ringleaders in the mutiny of the 'Bounty.' Having set the captain adrift in a boat, Adams, with his fellow-mutineers, steered for Otaheite, whence they proceeded to Pitcairn's Island, where they established a small colony. They landed on the island 23 Jan., 1790. A feud soon sprang up between the English settlers and some natives whom they had brought from Otaheite, and hostilities were carried to such a pitch, that the black men were utterly exterminated.

ADAMS.

In 1792 the population consisted of Adams, three of his fellow-countrymen, ten women, and a few children, and in 1799, the only men remaining were Adams and a companion named Young. These misfortunes led Adams to turn his thoughts to religious matters, and he commenced celebrating Divine service and superintending the moral education of the young people. In this work he was assisted by Young, who, however, died in 1801, after which event Adams had sole charge of the education of nineteen children between seven and nine years of age. When Captain Bery visited the island, in 1825, he found Adams, who was then sixty years old, wearing the costume of an English sailor. The number of the converts was then sixty-six, and they were living very happily together. Adams died 5 May, 1824.

ADAMS, JOHN, serjeant-at-law and assistant-justice of the Middlesex sessions, died 10 Jan., 1820, aged seventy. He wrote a treatise on the acts of ejectment.

ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY, son of John Adams, the second president of the United States, was born 1797. He graduated at Harvard University with distinction, 1797, and afterwards commenced the practice of the law in Boston. In 1794 he was appointed United States minister at the Hague, and in 1796 he went in the same capacity to Berlin. He returned to the United States in 1801. In 1809 he was sent to represent the States at the court of St. Petersburg, where he obtained the utmost distinction and influence, from which resulted the intervention of Russia and the commission at Ghent, of which he was the head, and which terminated in a treaty of peace with Great Britain. After the peace he was appointed ambassador to the court of St. James's, and from the duties of this mission was recalled to act as secretary of state, which office he held during the whole administration of Mr. Monroe. In 1815, the House of Representatives, on the failure of an election by the people, chose Mr. Adams president of the United States. His administration of the presidency is agreed to have been a perfect illustration of the principles of the constitution, and of a republic purely and faithfully governed. Nevertheless, he was not re-elected after the expiration of his term of office. He died at Washington 23 Feb., 1848.

ADAMS, JOSEPH, M.D., physician to the Finsbury and Central Dispensary, born 1756; died 20 June, 1818. He wrote 'Memoirs of the Life and Doctrines of John Hunter,' and a large number of medical treatises.

ADAMS, RICHARD, second son of Sir Thomas Adams, alderman of London, was born 6 Jan., 1619-20, and educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, where he was admitted as a fellow-commoner 28 April, 1635. He died 13 June, 1661. He is supposed to be the author of a volume of poems preserved in the Harleian MSS., 3889.

ADAMS, ROBERT, architect and engraver, died 1595.

ADAMS, SAMUEL, an American politician, who for many years was governor of Massachusetts, born 1722; died 1803.

ADAMS, THOMAS, D.D., a famous preacher, was minister at Willington, Bedfordshire, and afterwards rector of St. Bennet's, Paul's Wharf. He was sequestered for his loyalty in the Rebellion, and died before the Restoration. The Rev. W. H.

ADAMSON.

Stowell published in 1847 a selection from his sermons, which are numerous.

ADAMS, Sir THOMAS, was born at Wem, in Shropshire, 1586, educated at Cambridge, and afterwards became a draper in London. In 1609 he was chosen an alderman, and, in 1645, lord mayor. As a reward for his loyalty, Charles II. created him first a knight, and afterwards a baronet. He died 24 Feb., 1687-8. He founded a school at Wem, and an Arabic professorship at Cambridge.

ADAMS, THOMAS, a native of Cheshire, and fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, was ejected for nonconformity in 1662, and died 11 Dec., 1670. He wrote 'Protestant Union; or, Principles of Religion.'

ADAMS, WILLIAM, D.D., a divine, born at Shrewsbury, 1707, and educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, of which he was elected master, 1775. Afterwards he was appointed archdeacon of Llandaff and prebendary of Gloucester. Died 13 Feb., 1789. He was an intimate friend of Dr. Johnson. His principal work is a reply to Hume's 'Essay on Miracles.'

ADAMS, Rev. WILLIAM, son of Mr. Serjeant Adams, was educated at Oxford. He died at Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, 17 Jan., 1848, at the early age of 33. His 'Sacred Allegories' were very popular. A collected edition of them was published in 1849.

ADAMS, WILLIAM, LL.D., a civilian and diplomatist, was born in London, 1772, and educated first at Tunbridge School, under Dr. Vicesimus Knox, and afterwards at Trinity Hall Cambridge, of which society he was elected a fellow. In 1779 he was created LL.D., and admitted an advocate. His professional practice soon became very extensive. In 1814 he was one of the commissioners appointed to negotiate a treaty of peace with the United States, and he was also engaged in other public transactions. His death took place at Thorpe, Surrey, 11 June, 1851.

ADAMS, Sir WILLIAM. See RAWSON.

ADAMSON, JOHN, a learned writer on Portuguese literature, was born at Gateshead, 1772, and died at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 27 Sept., 1855. He received his education, under the Rev. Edward Moises, at the Newcastle Grammar School, and was sent at an early age to Lisbon, of which city his elder brother was one of the principal merchants. He soon returned to England, however, and was admitted as an attorney. In 1811 he was appointed under-sheriff of Newcastle-on-Tyne, which office he retained till the passing of the Municipal Reform Act. He was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and one of the founders of the Antiquarian Society at Newcastle. He was throughout life a diligent student, his attention being chiefly directed to the literature of Portugal. His works are, Conchological Tables; a translation of the 'Tragedy of Dona Inez de Castro,' by Nicola Luiz, Newcastle, 1808; 'Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Camoens,' 2 vols., 1820; 'Bibliotheca Lusitana, or Catalogue of Books and Tracts Relating to the Literature, History, and Poetry of Portugal: forming Part of the Library of John Adamson, M.R.S.L., &c.,' Newcastle, 8vo., 1836, (the splendid collection described in this volume was unfortunately destroyed by fire in 1849; 'Lusitania Illustrata; Notices on the History, Literature, &c., of Portugal,' Newcastle, 8vo., 1842. He also edited several publications issued by the Typographical Society of Newcastle. As an acknowledge of his services in the illustration of Portuguese literature, he received the orders of the knighthood of Christ, and the Tower and Sword.

ADAMSON, PATRICK, archbishop of St. Andrew's, was born at Perth 1543. Having been first licensed to be a preacher, he next applied himself to the study of the law, and went to France as tutor to a young gentleman. On his return to Scotland, in 1573, he took orders and became minister of Paisley; and was, in 1576, elevated by his patron, the earl of Morton, regent of Scotland, to the archiepiscopal see of St. Andrew's, though it does not appear that he ever received ecclesiastical consecration. He was very obnoxious to the Presbyterians, with whom he had many contests respecting episcopacy. He died 19 Feb., 1591-2. His works were printed at London in 1619. It is probable that the archbishop was a relation of John Adamson, D.D., a Dominican friar who was provincial of his order in Scotland.

ADAMSON, THOMAS, master-gunner in King Charles II.'s train of artillery, published in 1680, with additions of his own, a treatise of Leonard Digges's, the mathematician, entitled 'England's Defence. A Treatise concerning Invasion.'

ADANSON, MICHAEL, a famous French botanist, born 1727; died 1806. He explored Senegal, and made vast collections relating to the botany of that country. These, which formed 120 MSS. volumes, accompanied by 75,000 drawings, he presented to the French Academy.

ADAUCTUS, St., suffered martyrdom together with St. Felix, in 303. The church of Rome commemorates the event on Aug. 30.

ADDENBROOKE, JOHN, a physician, was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1701; M.A. 1705; M.D. 1712), of which he became fellow. Died 7 June, 1719, æt. 39. He published a short essay on freethinking, and founded Addenbrooke's Hospital at Cambridge.

ADDINGTON, ANTHONY, M.D., an English physician, born 1713; died 1790. He was educated at Oxford, and practised his profession at Reading. Dr. Addington wrote some medical works, and a political pamphlet concerning a negotiation between Lord Chatham and Lord Bute. He was the father of Viscount Sidmouth.

ADDINGTON, HENRY, Lord Sidmouth. See SIDMOUTH.

ADDINGTON, STEPHEN, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Northampton 1729; died in London 1796. He published a system of arithmetic; a Greek grammar; the 'Youth's Geographical Grammar'; a life of St. Paul; and several religious tracts.

ADDINGTON, Sir WILLIAM, for upwards of 28 years a magistrate at Bow Street; died 7 April, 1811, aged 83. He compiled 'An Abridgment of Penal Statutes.'

ADDISON, JOHN, an English Catholic divine, was D.D. of Cambridge. In or about 1538 he wrote a book in favour of the pope's supremacy, to which a reply was made by Bishops Stokesley and Tunstal.

ADDISON, JOHN, an English musician and composer; died 30 Jan., 1844, aged 79.

ADDISON, JOSEPH, one of the greatest ornaments of English literature, was the son of Dr. Lancelot Addison, and was born at Milston, Wiltshire, 1 May, 1672. Being unlikely to live, he was baptized the same day. At the Charterhouse, which he entered at an early age he commenced an intimacy, which lasted during life, with Richard (afterwards Sir Richard) Steele. In 1687 he was removed to Queen's College, Oxford, and two years later was elected a demy of Magdalen College. In the course of a few years his Latin poetry gained for him a high and well-merited reputation. His first attempt in English poetry was made in the twenty-second year of his age, when he addressed to Dryden a copy of verses which was very much admired by the best judges. It appears that he intended to follow the example of his father, and join the ministry of the Established Church, but this resolution he was induced to abandon. His friend Lord Somers, however, procured for him an annual pension of 300*l.*, which enabled him, towards the close of the year 1699, to gratify his inclination of making a tour through Italy. On returning to England he published an account of his travels, and dedicated it to Lord Somers. On the death of King William III. his pension was discontinued, and in consequence of the seclusion of his friends from office he remained for a considerable time inactive and unreciprocated. In 1704, however, Lord Halifax recommended him to the Lord Treasurer Godolphin, as a fit person to celebrate in verse the duke of Marlborough's victory at Blenheim. This produced the poem entitled 'The Campaign,' which was received with loud and general applause, and led to the appointment of its author as a commissioner of appeals. In 1706 he was made under secretary of state, and about this time he composed the opera of 'Rosamond,' and also assisted Sir Richard Steele in his play, 'The Tender Husband,' to which he wrote a humorous prologue. In 1709 he went over to Ireland as secretary to the marquis of Wharton, the lord lieutenant. While acting in this capacity, Queen Anne conferred upon him the office of keeper of the records in Ireland, with an augmented salary. At this period the 'Tatler' first made its appearance, and Addison soon made the discovery, in consequence of an observation on Virgil contained in one of the early numbers, that the author was no other than his old friend Steele. He communicated with him without delay, and rendered him great assistance by contributing to the periodical a number of brilliant and humorous papers. In the preface to the first collected edition of the 'Tatler,' Steele acknowledges in handsome terms the aid given by Addison: 'I have only,' he says, 'one gentleman, who will be nameless, to thank for any frequent assistance to me, which, indeed, it would be barbarous in him to have denied to one with whom he has lived in an intimacy from childhood, considering the great ease with which he is able to dispatch the most entertaining pieces of this nature. This good office he performed with such force and genius, humour, wit, and learning, that I fared like a distressed prince who calls in a powerful neighbour to his aid—I was undone by my auxiliary; when I had once called him in I could not subsist without dependence on him.' The 'Tatler' being discontinued in 1711, was succeeded by the 'Spectator,' upon a plan concerted between Steele and Addison. It was published daily, with the exception of Sundays, from 1 March, 1711, to 6 Sept., 1712. Addison's papers—the excellence of which has been very highly appreciated—are signed with one of the letters forming the name of the muse CLIO. So great a popularity did the 'Spectator' attain to, that it is said 20,000 copies were sometimes sold in one day. The 'Guardian,' in which Addison took a principal share, appeared in 1713 and 1714. The papers contributed to it by him are marked with a G. In 1713 appeared his tragedy of 'Cato,' with a sublime prologue by Pope and a humorous epilogue by Garth. It enjoyed an uninterrupted run of thirty-five nights, and was read with a satisfaction and commendation equal to the eagerness and pleasure with which its representation on the stage was attended. While the earl of Sunderland held the lord-lieutenancy of Ireland, Addison acted as his secretary, but on that nobleman's removal he was appointed one of the lords of trade. In 1715 he began to publish the 'Freeholder,' which is a kind of political 'Spectator.' In the following year he married the countess of Warwick, without deriving from the alliance, it is said, any great addition to his happiness. In 1717, King George I. made him one of his principal secretaries of state; but the application and parliamentary attendance which this office required concurred with an asthmatic disorder, to which he was subject, in impairing his health and hastening his dissolution. He therefore resigned the appointment, and received in lieu of it a pension of 1000*l.* a year. He now employed his leisure in composing his 'Treatise of the Christian Religion,' which, however, he did not live to complete. His death took place at Holland House, near Kensington, 17 June, 1719. Mr. Addison was formerly regarded as a great English poet; but his fame in the present day is mostly sustained by his excellent Latin poems, and his inimitable essays in the 'Spectator' and other periodicals. His style has always been regarded as a model of purity and correctness. 'Whoever,' says Dr. Johnson, 'wishes to attain an English style, familiar but not coarse, and elegant but not ostentatious, must give his days and nights to the volumes of Addison.' Lord Macaulay speaks of him as 'the great satirist who alone knew how to use ridicule without abusing it, who, without inflicting a wound, effected a great social reform, and who reconciled wit and virtue after a long and disastrous separation, during which wit had been led astray by prodigality, and virtue by fanaticism.'

ADDISON.

ADDISON, LANCELOT, D.D., an English divine, was born at Crosby Ravensworth, Westmorland, 1632. From Appleby School he was sent to Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. He was chosen one of the tertiarii at the act in 1658; but being satirical in his oration on the men in power, he was obliged to ask pardon on his knees. He quitted Oxford shortly afterwards, and lived in retirement till the Restoration, when he was appointed chaplain to the garrison at Dunkirk; and in 1663 to that at Tangier. On his return to England, in 1670, he was made chaplain in ordinary to King Charles II. Soon afterwards he obtained the living of Milston, Wiltshire, with a prebend in the church of Salisbury, and in 1683 he was promoted to the deanery of Lichfield. He died 20 April, 1703. His principal writings are a 'Description of West Barbary,' 'An Account of the Present State of the Jews,' and a 'Life of Mahomet.'

ADDY, WILLIAM, an English writer on shorthand, published at London, in 1695, 'Stenographia, or the Art of Short Writing completed in a far more Compensious Method than any yet Extant.'

ADELAIDE, Madame, aunt of Louis XVI., was born 1732, and died 1800.

ADELAIDE, princess of Orleans, sister of Louis Philippe, was born 1777, and died 1847.

ADELAIDE, queen of England, was born 13 Aug., 1792, being the eldest child of George duke of Saxe Coburg Meiningen. On 18 July, 1818, she was married to the duke of Clarence, afterwards King William IV. She died at Bentley Priory, near Stanmore, Middlesex, 2 Dec., 1849.

ADELARD. See ADALARD.

ADELARD, a monk of Bath in the twelfth century. He travelled into Egypt and Arabia, and translated Euclid's Elements out of Arabic into Latin, before any Greek copies were discovered.

ADELARIUS, ST., a native of Scotland, accompanied St. Boniface to Germany, and was afterwards consecrated the first bishop of Hereford. He was martyred by the Frisians 5 June, 754. He wrote 'Ad Infidèles,' and 'Ad Pontifices.'

ADELBERT. See ADALBERT.

ADELER, CURTIUS SIVERSEN, a celebrated naval commander of the seventeenth century; born in Norway, 1622; died at Copenhagen, 1675.

ADELUNG, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, a celebrated German philologist, born 1734, appointed professor at Erfurt, 1759, and in 1787 librarian to the elector of Dresden, where he died, 1806. He wrote no fewer than seventy volumes. Among his works are a grammatical and critical dictionary, 'Glossarium Manuale ad Scriptores Mediæ et Infimæ Latinitatis,' 'A History of Philology,' and 'Mithridates, or a Universal Table of Languages, with the Lord's Prayer in Five Hundred Languages or Dialects.'

ADEMAR, or AIMAR, a monk, born about 988, died about 1030. He wrote a chronicle of the French monarchy from its establishment to the year 1029.

ADEODATUS. See DIEUDONNÉ.

ADER, WILLIAM, a physician of Toulouse, who died about 1630, published a Latin work, in which he shows that the diseases which Christ healed were incurable by the art of medicine.

ADIMARI, ALEXANDER, a Florentine poet, born 1579, died 1649.

ADIMARI, LOUIS, a satirical poet, professor at Florence; born 1644, died 1708.

ADLERBETH, GUDMUND GEORGE, a Swedish poet, born 1751, died 1818. He translated Virgil, Horace, and Ovid into Swedish.

ADLERFELDT, GUSTAVUS, a Swedish nobleman, born 1671. He accompanied Charles XII. in all his campaigns, and wrote a journal of the strategic operations of the Swedish army, which was published under the title of 'The Military History of Charles XII.' He fell in the battle of Pultawa, 1709.

ADLZREITTER, JOHN, chancellor of the elector of Bavaria, born 1596, died 1662. He wrote a history of Bavaria.

ADO, ST., archbishop of Vienne, in Dauphiné, died 875, aged 76. He wrote in Latin a universal chronicle, which has been several times printed.

ADOLPH, JOSEPH, a German painter, who lived in England about 1750, and distinguished himself by his paintings of horses.

ADOLPHUS, earl of Nassau, elected king of the Romans 1292, and crowned emperor at Aix-la-Chapelle. He was deposed 1298, and attempted in vain to regain his empire. He was slain by his rival, Albert of Austria, 2 July, 1298.

ADOLPHUS FREDERICK II., king of Sweden, born 1710, died 1771. He succeeded his father, Frederick I., in 1743.

ADOLPHUS FREDERICK, Prince, duke of Cambridge. See CAMBRIDGE.

ADOLPHUS, JOHN, F.S.A., an historical writer, born in London 1764 or 1765. He was first admitted an attorney, but afterwards he went to the bar, and gained a large practice and much reputation as an advocate. His speech in defence of Thistlewood the conspirator was regarded as an admirable effort of eloquence. Died 16 July, 1845. Among Mr. Adolphus's writings are 'Biographical Anecdotes of the Founders of the French Revolution;' 'The British Cabinet, containing Portraits of Illustrious Personages, with Biographical Memoirs;' 'The History of England from the Accession of George III. to the Peace of 1783;' 'The History of France from 1790 to the Peace of 1802;' 'The Political State of the British Empire;' 'Observations on the Vagrant Act and some other Statutes, and on the Powers and Duties of Justices of the Peace;' 'Memoirs of John Bannister, Comedian;' and 'History of the Reign of George III.' He also assisted the historian Coxe in preparing for the press the 'Memoirs of Lord Burghley.'

ADOMNAN, St., probably a native of Ireland, was born, according to one account, in 624, and in 679 was elected abbat of Iona. He was converted to the orthodox or Roman doctrine as to the time of celebrating Easter, and though he could not persuade the monks at Iona to adopt his notions, he went to Ireland, where he brought over to the right faith almost all the teachers of religion. Died 703. He wrote a Latin life of St. Columba.

ADORNO, CATHARINE, a member of the noble house of Fieschi, and wife of Julian Adorno, was born 1447. After her husband's death she retired to Geneva, where she visited the poor in the hospitals. Died 1510. She wrote in Italian a 'Treatise on Purgatory' and 'A Dialogue between the Soul and the Body.'

ADORNO, FRANCIS, a Jesuit, born at Genoa, 1531, and died there 1586. He wrote 'De ratione illustrandi Ligurum historiae,' &c.

ADORNO, JOHN AUGUSTINE, founder of the congregation of regular clerks minors, approved by Sixtus V., 1588. He died at Naples, 1590, in great reputation for sanctity.

ADRETS, FRANÇOIS BEAUMONT, Baron Des, a French military adventurer, born 1515, first espoused the cause of the Huguenots, and afterwards joined the Catholics. He died 1586, abhorred by both parties.

ADRIAM, MARIE, a heroine, who at the age of sixteen assumed a man's dress and served as a gunner during the siege of Lyons, 1793. After the siege she was condemned to death by the revolutionary commission.

ADRIAN I., elected pope 7 Feb., 772, was distinguished for his talents, zeal, and charity. He sent his legates to the second general council of Nice, 789. Charlemagne avenged him of Desiderius, king of the Lombards, who had caused many vexations. He died 26 Nov., 795. A great number of his letters are extant.

ADRIAN II., Pope, born at Rome, 791, succeeded Nicholas I. 14 Dec., 867, after having twice refused the tiara. He held a council at Rome against Photius, and sent two legates to that of Constantinople, held 869, where Photius was deposed and Ignatius re-established. Adrian approved of what was done in this council, but quarrelled afterwards with the Greek emperor and the patriarch Ignatius about Bulgaria, which the latter pretended to belong to his patriarchate. He had also some differences with Charles the Bald about Hincmar, bishop of Laon, who had appealed to the Holy See from the sentence of the council of Verberic, 869. Adrian died piously 872, and left several epistles.

ADRIAN III., a Roman, elected pope 884. Basilus, the Macedonian, emperor of the East, urged him very importunately to annul the sentence passed against Photius, and to admit that famous patriarch to communion, but Adrian refused. Much was hoped from his virtue, zeal, and firmness, when he died, 9 May, 885. A decree is attributed to him which authorizes in future the ordination of the pope, without the ambassadors of the empire being present.

ADRIAN IV., Pope, the only Englishman who ever had the honour of sitting in the chair of St. Peter. His name was NICHOLAS BREAKSPERE, and he was born at Langley, near St. Albans, in Hertfordshire, about 1100. In the early part of his life he was reduced to the necessity of submitting to servile offices for bread. He desired to assume the monastic garb in the monastery of St. Albans, but the abbat refused to admit him in consequence of the insufficiency of his learning. Afterwards he went to Paris, and then to Provence, where he became an inmate of the monastery of St. Rufus. After prosecuting his studies for some time with great success, he was admitted into the order, and eventually attained to the dignity of abbat. In 1146 he was created a cardinal, and two years afterwards was sent by Pope Eugenius as legate to Denmark and Norway, the barbarous inhabitants of which countries were converted by him to the Christian faith. In 1154, he succeeded Anastasius IV. in the pontificate. He told one of his intimate friends that all the former hardships of his life were mere amusement compared with the burden of the papacy; that he looked upon St. Peter's chair as the most uneasy seat in the world; and that his crown seemed to be clapped burning on his head. Adrian left the States of the Church in a more flourishing condition than he found them. He died 1 Sept., 1159, and was buried in St. Peter's, near the tomb of his predecessor, Eugenius. The story that he was choked by a fly which got into his throat rests on no solid foundation. Several homilies and letters of Pope Adrian are extant. A memoir of this pontiff, by Richard Raby, was published in 1849.

ADRIAN V., nephew of Innocent IV., was of Genoa, and elected sovereign pontiff 12 July, 1276, and died on the 18th of the following month. It is said that when at the point of death he was congratulated by his relations on his elevation. 'I had much rather,' he replied, 'you saw me a cardinal in good health than a dying pope.'

ADRIAN VI., Pope, before his elevation called Adrian Florentius, son of a weaver, or, according to others, of a brewer or a boatwright. He was born at Utrecht, 2 March, 1459; and became successively professor of divinity at Louvain, dean of the church in that city, bishop of Tortosa, and victor in Spain. He was elevated to the papacy, 9 Jan. 1523. The Italians regarded him with dislike, because he wished to reform the abuses of the court of Rome, and left the Emperor Charles V. master of that city. Adrian used to say that 'He would never build upon his own blood,' that is, advance his relations to ecclesiastical dignities. He died 14 Sept., 1523, and declared, when dying, 'That the greatest misfortune he had met with in the world, was having been obliged to govern.' He wrote 'Questiones quodlibeticæ,' &c.

ADRIAN, AELIUS, Roman emperor, born A.D. 76, at Italica, adopted by Trajan, and ascended the throne, 117. Having made peace with the Parthians, and remitted the debts of the Romans, he defeated the Alans, Sarmatians, and Dacians, and spent the greater part of his reign in visiting the provinces of the empire. He built a wall eighty miles long, between England and Scotland, to prevent the incursions of the barbarians. He opposed the violent persecutions raised against the Christians, and promised them they should never be molested on account of their religion. Adrian, after conquering the revolted Jews, gave the name of Ælia to Jerusalem when it was rebuilt, placed a marble hog over one of the gates, erected a temple to Jupiter on Mount Calvary, and set up a statue of Adonis upon the manger at Bethlehem. He died 10 July, 138, at Baize, and was buried at Puzosoli. Adrian was handsome, had an easy air, a serene and robust constitution; always went bare-headed; had a great memory; was a lover of poetry, arts, and sciences; but his attachment to the pagan superstitions, and his infamous passion for Antinous, dishonour him. He was the first Roman emperor who wore a beard, which fashion he introduced for the purpose of concealing warts that grew on his chin.

ADRIAN, a Greek author, who lived in 430, wrote an 'Introduction to the Holy Scriptures.'

ADRIAN DE CASTELLO, born at Corneto, in Tuscany, about 1450, became agent for English affairs at the court of Rome in the reign of Henry VII. He was elected a cardinal, and in 1502 he was appointed bishop of Hereford, whence he was translated to Bath and Wells, 1505. He was alive in 1518, but when he died is unknown. Besides some excellent Latin poetry, he wrote 'De Sermone Latino et de Modis Latine loquendi,' and 'De Vera Philosophia.'

ADRIAN, CORNELIUS, a famous Flemish preacher, of the order of St. Francis, and a native of Dort. He died 1581, aged 60.

ADRIANI, ADRIAN, Adrianus ab Adriano, a Jesuit of Antwerp, celebrated for his piety, died 1520, at Louvaine. His works are chiefly of an ascetic cast, and written in German.

ADRIANI, JOHN BAPTIST, a celebrated historian, born at Florence, 1511, and died 1579 in that city. He wrote the history of his own time, from 1536, where that of Guicciardini ends. His son Marcel (born 1533; died 1604) was a member of the academy at Florence and author of several works.

ADRIANO, a Spanish painter, born at Cordova, where he died, 1630. He was a lay brother of the order of disacalced Carmelites. So greatly did he distrust his own powers, that at one time he was in the habit of destroying his pictures as soon as they were finished. His most remarkable work is a painting of the crucifixion.

grapher; born at Delft 1533; ordained priest 1561; died 1585. He wrote 'The Theatre of the Holy Land,' in Latin; and a life of Jesus Christ.

ADRY, JEAN FELICISSIME, French philologist and bibliographer, born 1749; died 1818.

ADY, JOSEPH, an impostor, who at one time carried on the business of a hatter in London. He hit upon the device of 'raising the wind' by means of circular letters promising, on the receipt of a suitable fee, to inform those whom he addressed of 'something to their advantage.' In many instances he succeeded in baffling the magistrates and the post-office authorities. Died 1852, aged 82.

ÆGIDIUS, JOHN, an Englishman, entered the order of St. Dominic at Paris in 1222. He wrote several able works on scholastic theology.

ÆGIDIUS, PETER, a lawyer, born at Antwerp, 1486; died there 1533. He was educated under Erasmus, at whose recommendation he obtained the friendship of Sir Thomas More. He wrote 'Enchiridion Principis ac Magistratus Christiani,' &c.

ÆGIDIUS ROMANUS. See COLONNA.

ÆGINETA, PAULUS, a celebrated Greek physician in the seventh century, so called because he was born in the isle of Ægina. He has left an abridgment of Galen, and several other works in Greek, very curious and interesting.

ÆGINHARD. See EGINHARD.

ÆLFRIC, an Anglo-Saxon prelate, assumed the Benedictine habit at Abingdon, and afterwards became abbat of St. Albans. In 969 he was created bishop of Wilton, and in 994 was promoted to the archbishopric of Canterbury, where he died 1005. His works, which have been printed, consist of a Latin and Saxon vocabulary, a grammar, Latin colloquies, and a Saxon translation of most of the historical books of the Old Testament, and of homilies from the Fathers.

ÆLFSIN, an Anglo-Saxon monk, who flourished about the end of the tenth century, distinguished himself by his manuscripts and their miniature illuminations.

ÆLIAN CLAUDIUS, an historical writer, was born at Præneste about 160. He taught rhetoric at Rome under the Emperor Antoninus. His 'Various History' is a curious collection of anecdotes; and his 'History of Animals' is also valuable.

ÆLIUS, DONATUS. See DONATUS.

ÆLIUS, SPARTIANUS. See SPARTIANUS.

ÆLRED. See AILRED.

ÆLST, EVERHARD VAN, a Dutch painter, born 1602; died 1658. His nephew, William van Ælst (born 1620; died 1679) was also a painter, and attained to greater eminence in his profession than his uncle.

ÆMILIANUS, a native of Mauritania, became governor of Pannonia and Moesia under Hostilianus and Gallus, and was proclaimed emperor by his soldiers for some successes over the barbarians. His reign, however, was but of short duration, for he was murdered by his own troops A.D. 253.

ÆMILIUS, PAULUS. See PAULUS.

ÆNEAS, or ÆNGUS, an Irish ecclesiastic and historian, was called Hagiographus, from having written the lives of the saints. Died about 820.

ÆNEAS, GAZEUS, a Platonic philosopher, who embraced Christianity in the fifth century. He wrote a dialogue on the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body.

ÆNEAS, TACTICUS, an ancient writer on military tactics. By some he is supposed to have flourished B.C. 148; but Casaubon suspects that he is the same with Æneas of Stymphalus, commander of the Arcadians at the time of the battle of Mantinea, about B.C. 360.

ÆPINUS, FRANCIS MARY ULRIC THEODORE, a celebrated electrician; born at Rostock, 1724; died at Dorpat, in Livonia, 1802.

ÆPINUS, JOHN, a German reformer; born 1499; died 1553.

ÆRSENS, AERTSEN, OR AARSENS, PETER, a Dutch painter, called Long Peter, on account of his tall stature; born 1507; died 1575.

AERTZ, RICHARD, a Dutch historical painter, born 1482; died at Antwerp, 1577. He was called Ryk met de stell, or Dick with the wooden leg.

ÆSCHINES, a celebrated orator, the rival of Demosthenes; born at Athens, 380 B.C. He accused Ctesiphon, that great orator's friend, who had proposed that a crown of gold should be decreed to him, but Demosthenes defended his friend's cause, and procured the banishment of Æschines from Athens. Æschines thereupon retired to Rhodes, and having taught rhetoric there for some time, went to Samos, where he died 314 B.C. The eloquence of Æschines was so much admired that the Greeks gave the names of the three graces to his three orations, and those of the nine muses to his epistles. Æschines is not equal to Demosthenes in strength and loftiness of style, but excels him in copiousness, ornament, and flowery expressions.

ÆSCHYLUS, a very celebrated tragic poet, born about 525 B.C., of an illustrious family in Attica. He distinguished himself by his courage at the memorable battles of Marathon, Salamis, and Plataea; and furnished the theatre with a great number of tragedies, which were universally applauded by the Greeks. In the latter part of his life, being disappointed at Sophocles winning from him the tragic prize, he withdrew to Hiero, king of Syracuse, who was his particular friend. It is said that he was killed in the field by an eagle, which, mistaking his bald head for the point of a rock, let fall a tortoise upon it; but however that may be, Æschylus died 456 B.C. Seven of his tragedies remain in Greek, and have been many times printed.

ÆSOP, the fabulist, was a native of Phrygia, according to the most commonly received opinion. His history is so obscure as to leave little that can be properly said to deserve credit. It seems, however, that he was a Phrygian, and became a slave at Athens to Xanthus and Idmon, the last of whom gave him his liberty. The celebrity which he gained by his wit induced Croesus, king of Lydia, to send for him to his court, where he became the friend of Solon. Being sent to Delphi with an offering, he so irritated the people by his censures on their manners, that they threw him from the top of a rock. The Athenians erected a statue to his memory, and all Greece lamented his death, which took place about 560 B.C. The fables which go under his name have been frequently printed and translated into almost every language.

ÆTHICUS, a writer of whom nothing is known except that his name is attached to a geographical work in Latin, entitled 'Æthici Cosmographia.'

ÆTION, a painter, who appears to have lived in the time of the Emperor Trajan, or Hadrian. His picture of Alexander's nuptials with Roxana was his masterpiece.

ÆTIUS, surnamed the Impious, a heretic of the fourth century, one of the most zealous defenders of Arianism, died at Constantinople 367.

ÆTIUS, governor of the Gauls, defeated Theodoric, vanquished the Franks, and defeated Gondacairus and Attila. Valentinian III., jealous of the merit of this great man, slew him with his own hand 454.

ÆTIUS, a celebrated physician, was born at Amida, in Mesopotamia, and studied at Alexandria. He flourished at the end of the fifth century, or beginning of the sixth. His work entitled 'Tetrabiblos' has been printed.

AFER, DOMITIUS, a famous orator, a native of Nîmes, and Quintilian's master; died A.D. 59.

APFLECK. See AUCHINLECK.

AFFO, IRENÆUS, a Recollect friar, and professor of history at Parma, born 1741; died 1797. He wrote a 'History of Parma,' and other works.

AFFRE, DENIS AUGUSTE, a pious and learned archbishop of Paris, was born in 1793, and was shot on a barricade in the streets of Paris during the French revolution in June, 1848, while essaying to speak words of peace to the insurgents.

AFRANIUS, LUCIUS, a Roman comic poet, flourished B.C. 100. Only some fragments of his works have been preserved. He must be distinguished from Quinctianus Afranius, who was put to death by Nero, for being engaged in the conspiracy which cost Seneca his life.

AFRICANUS, JULIUS, an historian of the third century, author of a chronology which is much esteemed.

AGAPETUS, St., was martyred at Palestrina, near Rome, under Aurelian, about 275. His festival occurs on 18 Aug.

AGAPETUS I., elected pope 535. He distinguished himself by his firmness, for when the Emperor Justinian I. would have obliged him to communicate with Anthemius, patriarch of Constantinople, who was an Eutychian, threatening him with exile, 'I thought,' replied Agapetus, 'to have found a Catholic emperor, but I find I am under a Domitian; know, however, that I fear not your menaces.' This noble answer was the cause of Anthemius being deposed. Agapetus died some days after, in 536. He left several epistles. This pope was so poor that he was obliged to pawn the sacred vessels of St. Peter to enable him to travel to Constantinople.

AGAPETUS II., elected pope 946, and distinguished for his zeal and virtue. He called the Emperor Otto to Rome against Berenger II., who wanted to be king of Italy. Died 956.

AGAR, CHARLES, educated at Westminster and Oxford, became bishop of Cloyne 1768, bishop of Cashel 1779, archbishop of Dublin 1801, and, dying 14 July, 1809, was buried in Westminster Abbey.

AGARDE, ARTHUR, a famous English antiquary, born about 1540, died 21 Aug., 1615. In the first year of the reign of James I. he was appointed one of the deputy chamberlains of the exchequer, and consequently had under his care a large portion of the public records, to the study of which he assiduously applied himself. To the old Society of Antiquaries, of which he was a distinguished member, he read a number of papers, which are printed in Hearn's 'Curious Discourses.'

AGAS, RADULPH, frequently called Ralph

AGASIAS.

Agas, was a land surveyor, who practised in England in the latter part of the sixteenth century. He resided principally at Stoke, near Nayland, Suffolk. Agas published plans of Oxford and Cambridge, but his principal published work is a large plan or view of London, which was re-engraved by Vertue in 1737.

AGASIAS, a sculptor of Ephesus, celebrated for his beautiful statue of 'The Dying Gladiator,' which was found with the 'Apollo Belvidere' at Nicusa. Agasias lived in the fourth century B.C.

AGATHA, St., virgin and martyr, suffered at Catania, in Sicily, 251. She is commemorated on 5 Feb.

AGATHANGELUS, an Armenian, author of a Life of St. Gregory, first patriarch of Armenia. When he flourished is unknown.

AGATHIAS, the Scholastic, was an advocate at Syrtina in the sixth century. He wrote a continuation of Procopius's history.

AGATHO, St., a Benedictine, born at Palermo, was elected pope 679, and died 682. He is commemorated on Feb. 14.

AGATHOCLES, a famous tyrant of Sicily, and son of a potter of Terra del Reggio. He gained many victories over the Carthaginians, and was poisoned by order of his grandson, Archagathus, 241 B.C.

AGELLUS, ANTHONY, a regular canon, afterwards bishop of Acerno, died 1608. He wrote biblical commentaries, and assisted in the edition of the Septuagint, Rome, 1587, fol.

AGELNOTH, surnamed the Good, was archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of Canute. He governed his province for seventeen years, and died 20 Oct., 1038.

AGESANDER, a celebrated Rhodian sculptor in the reign of Vespasian. In conjunction with his two sons he executed the famous group of Laocoon.

AGESILAUS I., king of Sparta, ascended the throne 938 B.C., and reigned forty-four years.

AGESILAUS II., king of Sparta, son of Archidamus, was raised to the throne in preference to Lestrychides. He gained a signal victory over Tissaphernes, general of the Persians, defeated the Thebans and their allies at Coronæ, conquered the Arcadians, and made himself master of Corinth. He died in Cyrenaica about 360 B.C. His sister, Cynisca, had learnt to manage horses at the invitation of her brother. She entered the lists, and was the first woman who gained the prize at the Olympic games.

AGGAS, RALPH. See AGAS.

AGGAS, OF AUGUS, ROBERT, a landscape painter, died in London, 1679, aged about sixty.

AGILULPH, duke of Jurin, and king of the Lombards, died about 616, after having conquered all Italy except Ravenna.

AGIS I., king of Sparta, succeeded his father, Eurysthenes, 1030 B.C.

AGIS II., king of Sparta, died about 398 B.C. He ravaged Argolis, and signalized himself in the Peloponnesian war.

AGIS III., king of Sparta, ascended the throne 333 B.C., and died 324 B.C.

AGIS IV., king of Sparta, formed a plan to restore the ancient discipline of Lacedæmon, to abolish debts, and make the possessions of the inhabitants common, according to the laws of Lycurgus; but the rich, the women, and Leonidas his colleague opposed him, and Leonidas caused him to be strangled, 240 B.C.

AGREDA.

AGLIONBY, EDWARD, an English writer, born at Carlisle, was educated at Eton and Cambridge (B.A. 1540-1, M.A. 1544). Subsequently he became a justice of the peace for Warwickshire, and in 1571 was returned as M.P. for Warwick. The following year he was elected recorder of Warwick, which post he resigned in Nov., 1587, 'because of his great age and impotency to travel and failing of sight.' He translated 'A Notable and Marvellous Epistle of the famous Doctor Mathew Grimalde, Professor of the Law in the Universitie of Padua' (1550), and was author of an Oration to Queen Elizabeth, printed in 'Nichols's Progresses.'

AGLIONBY, JOHN, D.D., was educated at Oxford, where he became a fellow of Queen's College, and afterwards principal of St. Edmund's Hall. He had a considerable hand in the authorized translation of the New Testament. Dr. Aglionby died at Islip, Oxfordshire, of which parish he was rector, 6 Feb., 1609-10.

AGNES, St., celebrated virgin, martyred at Rome about 303, at the age of thirteen. Her festival occurs on 21 Jan.

AGNESI, MARIA GAETANA, an Italian woman of letters, born at Milan, 1718, died there 1799. She was an extraordinary instance of juvenile precocity. When only eleven years old she knew eight languages, and at twenty she published a collection of ninety-one theses which she had publicly maintained. Pope Benedict XIV. appointed her honorary lecturer and professor of mathematics in the university of Bologna. Her sister, Maria Teresa, was born about 1724, and is author of some musical compositions.

AGNOLO, BACCIO, a sculptor and architect of Florence, born 1460, died 1543.

AGOBARD, archbishop of Lyons, one of the most learned prelates of the ninth century. He was deposed at the council of Thionville, 834, by order of Louis le Debonnaire, for being concerned in the revolt of Lotharus, but coming again into favour, he was re-established. He died 840. Agobard wrote against Felix of Urgella, condemned duels and trials by fire and water, and composed a book to prove that tempests are not raised by sorcerers.

AGOSTINI, LEONARD, an antiquary of Sienna in the seventeenth century, published the Medals of Sicily, which are joined to the Sicily of Paruta. He also wrote 'Le Gemme antiche figurate,' Rome, 1686.

AGOSTINO, PAUL, master of the pontifical chapel of St. Peter at Rome, composed much church music. Born 1593, died 1629.

AGOULT, GUILLAUME, a gentleman and poet of Provence in the twelfth century, the handsomest and the wittiest man of his time. He wrote, besides a great number of songs, a poem, entitled 'La maniera d'amor dal tems passat,' in which he maintains, in a chain of reasoning, that no one can be happy, unless he is a worthy man; that no one can be a worthy man, without being in love; and that no man knows how to love, who is not careful of his mistress's honour.

AGREDA, MARIA D', daughter of Francis Coronela, was born at Agreda, in Spain. Her father converted his house into a convent of female Cordeliers, under the title of 'The Immaculate Conception,' among whom his wife and daughters made profession, he himself joining the Cordeliers. Maria was chosen superior of the convent, and died there 1665, aged 63. She wrote her fama book of 'The Mystical City of God' by order, as she asserted, of God and the Blessed Virgin. The book was condemned at Rome, and the French translation of it was censured by the Sorbonne.

AGRICOLA, ST., suffered martyrdom about 304. His festival is celebrated on 4th November.

AGRICOLA, CNEIUS JULIUS, a Roman commander, born A.D. 38 at Frejus, in the reign of Caligula, by whom his father, Julius Græcinus, was put to death for refusing to plead against Marcus Silanus. The first military service of Agricola was under Suetonius Paulinus in Britain. On his return to Rome he married a lady of rank, and was made quæstor in Asia, where he maintained the strictest integrity. He was chosen tribune of the people, and quæstor, under Nero; and under Galba he was appointed commissioner to examine the state of the treasures belonging to the temples which Nero had avariciously confiscated. By Vespasian he was made a patrician and governor of Aquitania. The dignity of consul followed, and in the same year he married his daughter to the historian Tacitus. Soon afterwards he was made governor of Britain, and carried his conquests into a remote district of Scotland, where the famous engagement took place between the Romans and the Caledonians, under the able, though unsuccessful leadership of Galgacus. Domitian, envying Agricola's virtues, recalled him, and ordered him to enter Rome in the night, that no triumph might be granted to him. He obeyed, and, without betraying any resentment, retired into private life. He died A.D. 93, not without suspicion of having been poisoned by the tyrant.

AGRICOLA, GEORGE, a German metallurgist, whose real name was Landmann, was born at Chemnitz, Saxony, 1494, and studied medicine at Leipsic. He afterwards travelled into Italy, and remained two years at Venice. On his return he settled at Joachimsthal, where he familiarized himself with mining operations. Died at Chemnitz, 1555. His works are written in elegant Latin.

AGRICOLA, IGNATIUS, a German Jesuit, wrote 'Historia Provinciæ Societatis Jesu Germaniæ Superioris.' The second part appeared in 1729, and the author died shortly afterwards.

AGRICOLA, JOHN, a disciple of Luther, born at Eisleben, 1492. He separated from his master because he drew conclusions from his principles respecting justification, which Luther himself did not. Luther said that men are justified by faith, and that works are not necessary to salvation. Then, said Agricola, there is no law for a man who has faith, because if he is not a just man, he will become so by an act of faith. Those principles must therefore be preached which lead to a belief of the Gospel, and not the law of the Gospel. He had his followers, who were called 'Antinomians,' i.e., enemies of the law. Agricola was minister at Wittenberg and Berlin, in which last-named city he died 1566. He wrote commentaries on St. Luke; 'History of the Passion of Jesus Christ;' and other works, most of which are in German.

AGRICOLA, MARTIN, a musician, born at Zorowe, in Silesia, 1486; died at Magdeburg, 1556. He wrote several works relating to his art.

AGRICOLA, RODOLPHUS, a celebrated professor of philosophy at Worms and Heidelberg, born at Bafflon, near Groeningen, 1442. He was one of those who revived a taste for the belles lettres in Germany and the Low Countries. He was a great traveller, and gained friends and admirers wherever he went. He died, 1485, at Heidelberg, and was buried in the habit of a Cordelier. His works were printed at Cologne 1539, 2 vols.

AGRIPPA, MARCUS VIPSANIUS, a Roman consul, favourite and son-in-law of Augustus; who rose by his valour to the first dignities of the empire. He was one of the wisest captains of his age, and Augustus owed to him the empire of the world, from the victories he gained over Mark Anthony and the younger Pompey. Born 63 B.C.; died in March, 12 B.C.

AGRIPPA I. (Herod), son of Aristobulus and Bernice, and grandson of Herod the Great. Caligula gave him the kingdom of Judea, A.D. 37. He put St. James the Great to death, imprisoned St. Peter, and died himself in the greatest agonies, eaten up with worms, in the seventh year of his reign, aged 54, in the year 43.

AGRIPPA II., son of the preceding, and last king of the Jews, succeeded his uncle Herod; but the Emperor Claudius took away his kingdom, and gave him other provinces in exchange. He died about the year 94. It was before this prince and his sister Bernice, with whom he was suspected of incest, that St. Paul pleaded his cause at Cæsarea.

AGRIPPA, HENRY CORNELIUS, born 1486, of an illustrious family, at Cologne. He acquired great reputation as a scholar after having distinguished himself as a soldier. He was well skilled in divinity, physic, and jurisprudence, and passed with weak people for a great magician, though his extreme poverty clearly proved the contrary. Agrippa wrote well and possessed much learning, but loved to maintain paradoxes. He wrote a treatise on the 'Excellency of Women above Men,' to insinuate himself into the favour of Margaret of Austria, who governed the Low Countries, and who procured him the title of historiographer to her brother, the emperor. He was imprisoned in France, for writing against Louisa of Savoy, mother of Francis I., and upon regaining his liberty went to Grenoble, where he died, 14th Sept., 1535. Agrippa was thrice married, and left several children. Of his numerous works perhaps the most remarkable is a treatise on 'The Vanity of the Sciences,' in which he undertakes to prove that there is nothing more pernicious and dangerous to the lives of men, and to the salvation of their souls, than the arts and sciences.

AGRIPPA, MENENIUS, a Roman consul, about 502 B.C. He conquered the Sabines, and by the fable of the belly and members, appeased the people, who, being overwhelmed with debts and misery, had revolted and retired to the sacred hill.

AGRIPPINA, daughter of Agrippa and Julia, married to Germanicus, whom she accompanied in all his expeditions. After the death of her husband she returned to Rome with his ashes, and there was a universal grief in the city. Tiberius, jealous of the people's love for Agrippina, banished her to an island, where she starved herself, A.D. 33. She left nine children, among whom Caligula and Agrippina are best known.

AGRIPPINA, daughter of the preceding, and mother of the Emperor Nero, who caused her to be assassinated A.D. 60.

AGUESSEAU, HENRI FRANÇOIS D', chancellor of France, was born at Limoges 1608. At the age of 22 he became advocate-general of the parliament of Paris. After holding this office six years he was

AGUILAR.

Eade procureur-général. In 1709 the responsibilities of his position were greatly increased by the famine, which added to the disasters caused by the war. A commission was formed of which d'Agueceau was the very heart and soul. He preserved strict discipline in the tribunals, improved the proceedings in criminal matters, and made many excellent regulations. He devoted his attention principally, however, to the administration of the hospitals. After the death of Louis XIV., the regent, duke of Orleans, made him chancellor, but in 1718 he was displaced. The seals, however, were restored to him two years afterwards, and with short intervals, he held them till a year before his death, which took place 9th Feb., 1751. His works in 13 vols. 4to are much esteemed.

AGUILAR, GRACE, an English authoress, was born at the Paragon, at Hackney, 1816, being the only daughter of Emanuel and Sarah Aguilar. Her parents professed the Hebrew faith, to which she was always deeply attached. From the age of seven, this extraordinary child kept a daily journal, and before her twelfth year was completed she had written a little drama called 'Gustavus Vasa.' Her life presents few incidents. It was chiefly spent in the composition of works having for their object the elevation of the character of the Jewish people in the eyes of the Christian world. Among those works are 'Home Influence;' 'The Magic Wreath;' 'The Spirit of Judaism;' 'The Women of Israel;' 'The Records of Israel;' 'The Jewish Faith;' and 'History of the English Jews.' Her death took place at Frankfort, where she was buried, 16th Sept., 1847.

AGULLON, FRANCIS, a Jesuit, born at Brussels; and died 1617, aged 50. He left a valuable treatise on optics.

AGUIRRA, JEAN SAENS D', a native of Logrono, was born 1630, entered the Benedictine order, and subsequently became divinity professor at Salamanca, secretary of the holy office, and a cardinal. Died at Rome 1699. His principal work is 'A Defence of the Chair of St. Peter.'

AGUTTER, WILLIAM, an English divine, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and afterwards became chaplain and secretary to the Asylum for Female Orphans. Died 26th March, 1835, aged 77. His published sermons are numerous. One of them, preached before the university of Oxford, is entitled 'The Difference between the Death of the Righteous and the Wicked, illustrated in the instances of Dr. Samuel Johnson and David Hume, Esq.'

AGYLEUS, HENRY, a literary man, native of Bou-le-Duc, very learned in the Greek language, died 1505, aged 62. He translated the Nomo-Canon of Ptolemy.

AHLWARDT, PETER, the son of a shoemaker at Greiswald, where he was born 1710, and died 1791. He left several works, the most remarkable being 'Phosus Meditations on the Phenomena of Thunder and Lightning,' and dissertations on the immortality of the soul and the liberty of God. He founded a society called the 'Abelites,' the members of which professed perfect candour and sincerity.

AHRENDT, MARTIN FREDERICK, an antiquary, born at Holstein 1769, died 1824. He made a valuable collection of Icelandic manuscripts and Runic inscriptions.

AICHEK, OTTO, a German antiquary and historian, born 1628. He joined the Benedictine order, and in 1657 was appointed a professor in the university of Salzburg, where he died 17th January, 1705.

AIDAN, king of the Dalriadic Scots, died about 605.

AIDAN, Sr., an Irish monk, became bishop of Lindisfarne, where he founded a monastery, 635. Died, 31st Aug., 651. He is annually commemorated on the day of his death.

AIGNAN, ETIENNE, a French writer, born at Beaugency-sur-Loire, 1773, died at Paris, 1824. He wrote several tragedies and other dramatic pieces, and translated Pope's 'Essay on Criticism,' Goldsmith's 'Vicar of Wakefield,' and Homer's 'Iliad.'

AIKEN, JAMES, a Scotch prelate, born at Kirkwall 1613. He studied at Edinburgh and Oxford, and became chaplain to the marquis of Hamilton. Afterwards he was presented by Charles I. to the living of Birs, in Orkney. When Montrose visited the Orkneys, Aiken was deputed to draw up a declaration expressive of loyalty to the exiled king. In consequence of this, the privy council at Edinburgh issued a warrant for his apprehension, but he being warned, fled to Holland, where he lived in straitened circumstances till 1653. In 1677 he was made bishop of Moray, and in 1680 was translated to Galloway. Died at Edinburgh, 28th Oct., 1687.

AIKIN, ANNA LETITIA. See BARBAULD.

AIKIN, ARTHUR, eldest son of John Aikin, M.D. and brother to Miss Lucy Aikin, the historical writer, was born at Warrington, Lancashire, 19 May, 1773. After receiving a classical education he was initiated into the science of chemistry by Dr. Priestley. In 1796 he settled in London, where his quiet, unambitious life was devoted to the labours of scientific literature as an author and lecturer. In 1817, on the death of Dr. Charles Taylor, Mr. Aikin was elected secretary of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce; and he remained for twenty-three years resident in their house in John Street, Adelphi. He died in London, 15 April, 1854. His works are 'The Natural History of the Year;' 'Journal of a Tour through North Wales and parts of Shropshire;' a translation from the French of 'Denon's Travels in Egypt;' 'A Dictionary of Chemistry and Mineralogy' (in conjunction with his brother Charles); and 'A Manual of Mineralogy.' For four years he was editor of the 'Annual Review.'

AIKIN, JOHN, M.D., was born at Kibworth-Harcourt, Leicestershire, 1747, being the only son of the Rev. John Aikin, for many years tutor in divinity at the dissenting academy at Warrington, in Lancashire. Though it was originally intended that he should become a dissenting minister, he resolved to adopt the medical profession. In 1770 he settled at Chester, and after remaining there about a year removed to Warrington. He was created M.D. by the university of Leyden, 1784. Some time afterwards he removed to Great Yarmouth; but in 1798 he was compelled, in consequence of ill-health, to give up the practice of his profession, whereupon he retired to Stoke Newington, and there resided until his death, 7 Dec., 1822. The principal works of Dr. Aikin, exclusive of those relating to medical subjects, are as follows:—'Essays on Song Writing,' afterwards republished, with additions, under the title of 'Vocal Poetry;' translations of Tacitus's 'Life of Agricola,' and 'Manners of the Germans;' 'Biographical Memoirs of

AIKIN.

Medicine in Great Britain from the Revival of Literature to the time of Hervey; 'The Calendar of Nature,' afterwards republished with the title of 'The Natural History of the Year;' 'England Delineated;' 'A View of the Character and Public Services of John Howard, LL.D., F.R.S.:' 'Evenings at Home,' conjointly with his sister, Mrs. Barbauld; 'Letters from a Father to his Son on Various Topics relative to Literature and the Conduct of Life;' 'Description of the Country from thirty to forty miles round Manchester;' 'General Biography,' 10 vols. 4to. In this, his greatest work, he had the assistance, first of Dr. Enfield, and afterwards of Dr. Thomas Morgan; 'The Arts of Life;' 'The Woodland Companion, or a Brief Description of British Trees, with some Account of their Uses;' 'Letters to a Young Lady, on a Course of English Poetry;' and biographies and critical notices in his 'Select Works of the British Poets.' In 1796, Dr. Aikin became literary editor of the 'Monthly Magazine,' and continued to occupy that position for ten years. He was also for some time editor of Dodsley's 'Annual Register.'

AIKIN, LUCY, a popular authoress, only daughter of John Aikin, M.D., died 29 Jan., 1864, aged 83. Her principal works are 'Epistles on Women,' 1810; 'Lorimer, a Tale,' 1814; 'Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth,' 1818; 'Memoirs of James I.,' 1822; 'Memoirs of Dr. Aikin,' 1823; 'Memoirs of Mrs. Barbauld,' 1825; 'Memoirs of Charles I.,' 1833; 'Memoirs of Addison,' 1843.

AIKMAN, ALEXANDER, born in Scotland 1755, settled in Jamaica 1778, and there established, 'The Jamaica Mercury,' the title of which was subsequently changed to 'The Royal Gazette.' Died 6 July, 1838.

AIKMAN, WILLIAM, a painter, born at Cairney, in Scotland, 1682, died in London 4 June, 1731. It was originally intended that he should go to the Scotch bar, but he chose to devote himself to the fine arts, and particularly to painting, which he studied first in England, and afterwards at Rome. In 1723 he settled in London, and was patronized by the duke of Argyle, the earl of Burlington, Sir Godfrey Kneller, and other noted persons. His pictures consist chiefly of portraits of persons of rank.

AILLY, PIERRE D', born at Compiègne, 1350, was first bursar to the college of Navarre, in Paris, then doctor of the Sorbonne 1380, afterwards chancellor of the university, confessor and almoner to Charles VI., bishop of Puy, then of Cambrai, and cardinal. He was one of the most learned bishops at the councils of Pisa and Constance. He was legate from the Holy See to Germany, where he died 9 Oct., 1425. Most of his works were printed at Strasburg, 1490.

AILRED, abbot of the Cistercian monastery of Rievaulx, Yorkshire, was born in or about 1109, and died 1166. He wrote several historical and theological works, which have been printed. Five of his treatises on divinity appeared at Douay 1631, under the editorship of Richard Gibbons, an English Jesuit.

AIMOIN, a Benedictine of Fleury-sur-Loire, and one of the most illustrious disciples of the celebrated Abbo, wrote a 'History of France,' and died 1008.

AINGER, THOMAS, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took both degrees in arts (1821-24), became perpetual curate of Hampstead, Middlesex, in 1841, and died 15 Nov., 1863.

AITZEMA.

He published in his lifetime several volumes of sermons, which are held in esteem, and in 1864 another volume appeared, to which is prefixed a memoir of the author.

AINSLIE, HENRY, M.D., a very eminent English physician, died 26 Oct., 1834.

AINSWORTH, HENRY, an English nonconformist divine, and biblical commentator, born about 1590. He united with the Brownists, and, after struggling for some years with the dangers and troubles to which members of that sect were exposed, he retired, with many of his co-religionists, to Holland. At Amsterdam, Ainsworth, and one of his brethren in exile named Johnson, established a church, and in 1602 published a confession of faith of the people called Brownists. The church, however, was very soon rent in pieces by schisms and dissensions, and in the end Johnson retired to Emden, while Ainsworth went to Ireland, though some time afterwards he returned to Holland. He died suddenly at Amsterdam in 1622 or 1623. His reputation mainly rests upon his rudite 'Annotations on the five books of Moses, the Psalms, and the Song of Songs.'

AINSWORTH, ROBERT, a lexicographer, born at Woodyale, in the parish of Eccles, near Manchester, 1660. He received his education at Bolton, Lancashire, where he afterwards kept a school. From Bolton he removed to Bethnal Green, London, and there continued the profession of a schoolmaster. Died 4 April, 1743. His chief work is a Latin dictionary, first published 1736, with this title, 'Thesaurus Lingue Latinæ Compendiarius; or a Compendious Dictionary of the Latin Tongue, designed principally for the Use of the British Nations.'

AIRAULT. See AYRAUT.

AIRAY, CHRISTOPHER, an English writer on logic, died 1670.

AIRAY, HENRY, an English divine, was born in Westmorland, 1559, and educated first at St. Edmund Hall, and afterwards at Queen's College, Oxford, of which in 1598 he became provost. He was a constant and zealous preacher at Oxford. His principal work is a 'Course of Lectures on St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians,' the best edition of which is that by Rev. A. B. Grosart, Edinburgh, 1864. Airay published a treatise on bowing at the name of Jesus, but not a single copy is known to have escaped the ravages of time. His death occurred on 10 Oct., 1616.

AISTULPHUS, king of the Lombards, besieged Rome 750, but Pepin, king of France, hastening to the assistance of Pope Stephen III., besieged Aistulphus in Pavia, and forced him to restore the Exarchate of Ravenna and the Roman Pentapolis to the Holy See for ever. The keys were sent to Rome and placed upon St. Peter's tomb, in signum veri et perpetui dominii. Aistulphus designed to retake these cities, but died 756.

AITON, WILLIAM, an eminent horticulturist and botanist, born in Scotland 1731, died 1 Feb., 1793. For many years he was manager of Kew Gardens, and he published an elaborate description of the plants there, under the title of 'Hortus Kewensis,' 3 vols. He was succeeded at Kew by his son, William Townsend Aiton, who died in 1849, aged 84, after having ably superintended the botanical department for fifty years.

AITZEMA, LEO VAN, a gentleman of Friesland, born 1600. He was councillor of the Hanse Towns and their resident at the Hague, where he died,

AJALA.

1669. He wrote 'A History of the Peace of Munster,' and 'A History of the United Provinces.'

AJALA, MARTIN PÉREZ DE, a Spanish prelate, was bishop successively of Guadix and Segovia, and eventually archbishop of Valencia. He assisted at the council of Trent. His most important work is a Latin treatise on 'The Apostolic Traditions.' Born 1604, died 1666.

AKAKIA, MARTIN, of Chalons-sur-Marne, physician to Francis I. of France; died 1551. He was called Sans Malice (without malice), and took the name of Akakia, which signifies the same in Greek.

AKAKIA, MARTIN, son of the preceding, royal professor of surgery and physic to Henry III. of France, died 1588. He wrote some medical works in Latin.

AKBAR, sultan of the Moguls, was born 1542, succeeded to the throne 1556, and died 1605. He recovered Delhi from the Patans, and conquered Bengal, Cashmere, and Scinde.

AKENSIDE, MARK, M.D., who is more known as a poet than as a physician, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne 1721. He resolved to follow the medical profession, and accordingly went to Leyden, where he was created M.D. 1774. On his return to England he settled as a physician at Northampton. Thence he removed to Hampstead, and finally to London. Notwithstanding his acknowledged abilities, he never attained to any considerable eminence in his profession. Died 23 June, 1770. Dr. Akenside wrote some medical treatises, which it is not necessary to enumerate. In 1774 he published his poem 'On Pleasures of the Imagination,' which was received with great applause. His next publication was 'An Epistle to Curio,' which contained a warm invective against Pulteney, earl of Bath, on account of his political conduct. In 1745 Dr. Akenside published ten odes on different subjects and in different styles. Most of his remaining poetical effusions appeared in Dodsley's collection, and of these the most considerable is a 'Hymn to the Naiads.'

AKERBLAD, JOHN DAVID, an eminent Egyptologist, was born in Sweden about 1760, and died at Rome 1819.

AKIBA, a famous rabbi of the second century, and one of the doctors of the college of Tiberias. He declared at first for the impostor Barchochebas, encouraged the Jews to revolt, and joined with them in the commission of unheard-of barbarities. The Emperor Adrian condemned him to a cruel death, with his wife and a great number of his disciples, A.D. 135. The book called 'Jezira' is attributed to him.

ALABASTER, WM., was born in or about 1567, and educated at Trinity College, Cambr.idge. In 1596 he accompanied the expedition to Cadiz in the capacity of chaplain to the earl of Essex. During his stay in Spain he was converted to the Catholic religion, but in 1610 he returned to the Established Church. After his reconversion he was created D.D., and obtained the deanery of St. Paul's and the rich parsonage of Tharfield, Herefordshire. Died April, 1640. He wrote 'Lexicon Pentaglotton, Hebraicum, Chaldaicum, Syriacum, Tamedico-Rabbinicum, et Arabicum,' Lond., fol., 1637, and some theological treatises, but is chiefly known by his Latin tragedy of 'Roxana,' which was acted in the hall of Trinity College, Cambridge. This play has been praised by Dr. Johnson, but in fact it is for the most part merely a translation of Luigi Groto's Italian tragedy entitled 'La Daidia.'

ALACOQUE, MARGUERITE MARIE, a holy nun of the convent of La Visitation de Sainte Marie of Paray le Monnial, in Charolais. She was born 1647, and died 17 Oct., 1690. Many miracles have been ascribed to her, and she was beatified in 1865 by his holiness Pius IX. She wrote a work in French 'On Devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus.'

ALAIN, CHARTIER. See CHARTIER.

ALAIN, JOHN, a Danish writer, born 1569, died 1630. He wrote 'On the Origin of the Cimbri,' and other treatises.

ALAMANNI, LUIGI, of a distinguished family at Florence, was born 1495. He fled into France to avoid the anger of Julius de Medicis, afterwards Clement VII., who governed Florence, and against whom he had conspired. After Rome was plundered, he returned to his country, whose fall he could not prevent, though he sacrificed his whole fortune to prevent it. Francis I. received him with great kindness, gave him the collar of St. Michael, and sent him as ambassador to Charles V. He died, 1566, at Amboise, where the court was. His works consist of elegies, epilogues, dramas, satires, and hymns in Italian.

ALAN. See ALLEYN.

ALAN DE INSULIS, or of Lille in Flanders, called Doctor Universalis, from the extent of his learning, was born in the first half of the twelfth century, and died at the beginning of the next. It is yet an undecided point whether he is identical with Alanus, also de Insulis, the friend of St. Bernard, and bishop of Auxerre. A collected edition of his works was published by Charles de Visch, Antwerp, 1654.

ALAN OF LYNN, D.D. of Cambridge, became prior of the house of Carmelites, at Lynn in Norfolk, and died 1420. He won much esteem in his day as a philosopher and divine, and compiled a great number of summaries and indexes.

ALAN OF TEWKESBURY, D.D. of Oxford, and prior of the Benedictine monastery at Tewkesbury, in the latter part of the twelfth century. He was a friend of St. Thomas à Becket, by whom he was greatly beloved. Alan wrote 'De Vita et Exilio Thomæ Cantuariensis;' 'Acta Clarendonensis;' and several books of epistles.

ALAND, SIR JOHN FORTESCUE. See FORTESCUE.

ALANE, ALEXANDER. See ALES.

ALANSON, EDWARD, an eminent surgeon, born at Newton, Lancashire, 1747; died at Wavertree, near Liverpool, 1823. He introduced many important improvements in the mode of amputating limbs.

ALARD, WILLIAM, born 1572; died 1645. He was pastor of Krempe, in Holstein, and wrote two small volumes of Latin hymns and other works.

ALARIC I., king of the Goths, one of the most cruel enemies of the Roman empire; who embraced Christianity, and followed Arianism. He laid waste many eastern provinces, carried fire and sword into Italy, and sacked Rome 409. After being conquered by Stilicho, he retired to Rome, and died at Cosenza 410.

ALARIC II., king of the Visigoths. After having reigned 23 years over all the country between the Rhone and the Garonne, he was killed by the hand of Clovis 507, in a battle at Vouillé, in Poitou. He published a code of laws, called from him the 'Code of Alaric.'

ALASCO, JOHN, uncle to the king of Poland, was born 1499, and for some time was a bishop of the church of Rome. Afterwards he embraced the doctrines of Luther, and was in consequence driven from his country. He settled at Embden, where he was chosen pastor to a congregation of Protestants, who, under the terror of persecution, fled with him to London. They were incorporated by charter, and had a grant of the church of Austin Friars. These Protestants differed in some modes of worship from the Established church. On the accession of Mary, Alasco was ordered to quit the kingdom. He died in Poland 1560.

ALBAN, ST., the first English martyr, beheaded about 287. He is commemorated June 22.

ALBANI, ALEXANDER, Cardinal, born at Urbino, 1694. He was ambassador to the court of Vienna, and librarian of the Vatican. The cardinal embellished his country house, the Villa Albani, with statues and pictures, and was a great patron of men of letters. Died 1779. His historical and literary compositions are held in esteem.

ALBANI, OF ALBANO, FRANCIS, a celebrated Italian painter, born at Bologna 1578; died 1660.

ALBANI, JOHN JEROME, of Bergamo, a learned lawyer, served with the Venetian troops, and became first magistrate of his country. After the death of his wife, 1570, Pius V. made him a cardinal. Died 1591. His works are 'De immunitate ecclesiarum;' 'De potestate Papæ et concilii;' 'De cardinalibus;' and 'De donatione Constantini.'

ALBANY, LOUISE MAXIMILIENNE DE STOLBERG, countess of, born 1752, at Mons, in Hainault, became at an early age the wife of Prince Charles Edward, the last Pretender to the throne of the Stuarts. The courts of the house of Bourbon, who deemed themselves interested in preventing the Stuart family from becoming extinct, arranged this marriage, and made suitable provision for the young couple. After the death of Charles Edward, the countess of Albany contracted a secret marriage with the poet Alfieri, with whom she resided at Florence. She again became a widow in 1803, and notwithstanding her display of grief at the death of the poet, who for twenty years had been the companion of her life, it is believed that she was married a third time. Died 29 Jan., 1824.

ALBATEGNIUS, or ALBATENIUS, a learned Arabian astronomer, of the religion of the Sabæans, flourished at Araete, in Syria, and died 929. He made his observations in Mesopotamia 882, and wrote 'A Treatise on the Science of the Stars,' a bad Latin translation of which has been twice printed. The original Arabic MS. is preserved in the Vatican. Albategnius made important observations on the precession of the equinoxes, and added 11 deg. 30 min. 20 sec. to the places of the stars, as they had been determined by Ptolemy.

ALBEMARLE, duke of. See MONK.

ALBEMARLE, earl of. See KEPPEL.

ALBERGATI CAPACELLI, FRANCIS, marquis, and senator of Bologna, born 1728; died 1804. His whole life was passed in dissipation. He wrote some dramatic pieces, the best of which is 'I Pregiudizi del falso onore.'

ALBERGOTTI, FRANCIS, a celebrated civilian, born at Azezzo, and died at Florence 1376.

ALBERIC, a native of France, who lived in the twelfth century, and after being a monk in the monastery of Clugni, was made prior of St. Martin's at Paris; afterwards abbat of Verelay 1124; then cardinal and bishop of Ostia 1138. Pope

ALBERT.

Innocent II. sent him as legate into England and Scotland, which displeased the English clergy. Alberic, however, was received in England after some difficulties, and held a national council in Westminster Abbey 13 Dec., 1138. He returned to Italy 1139, and was afterwards legate in Sicily, in the East, and in France. Died 1147.

ALBERIC, a Cistercian monk of the thirteenth century, wrote a chronicle of remarkable events from the creation down to the year 1241. It has been printed by Leibnitz and Mencken.

ALBERONI, JULIUS, cardinal, and prime minister to the king of Spain, was born, 1664, near Parma. Having taken priest's orders, he obtained a small living. While in that situation he rendered some essential service to the secretary of the duke de Vendome, which led to his acquaintance with that general, who was indebted to him in a time of exigency for the discovery of the corn which the country people had concealed. After this, Alberoni followed the duke to Spain, where, by his address, he brought about a marriage between the princess of Parma and Philip V. This stroke of fortune raised him to the post of prime minister of Spain, the dignity of a cardinal, and archbishop of Valencia. In 1720 he was obliged to retire to Parma, and from thence to Rome, where he was confined for twelve months in the Jesuits' college. On regaining his liberty, he visited his native place, where he founded a seminary for young men designed for the church. He died at Rome 1752. The 'Political Testament' which bears his name is fictitious.

ALBERT I., son of the Emperor Rodolphus of Hapsburg, and first duke of Austria, killed in battle Adolphus, who had been chosen to the empire in preference to him 1298. He was afterwards crowned emperor. He engaged in twelve battles, and was killed at the passage of the Reuss, near Windisch, in Switzerland, 1308, by John, duke of Suabia, his nephew, whose possessions he had usurped.

ALBERT II., duke of Austria, and marquis of Moravia, was elected emperor 1 Jan., 1438, and died 27 Oct., 1439.

ALBERT I., the Bear, son of Otho, prince of Anhalt, born 1106. He was much favoured by the German princes, especially the Emperor Conrad III., who made him marquis and elector of Brandenburg. Albert cleared the forests of the Marche of Brandenburg to build cities, churches, and colleges. Died 1168.

ALBERT, the Courageous, duke of Saxony, governor of Friesland, 1494, and father of George of Saxony, who was one of Luther's greatest protectors. He made himself illustrious by his wisdom and by his exploits under the Emperor Maximilian I. Died 1500.

ALBERT, margrave of Baireuth, called the Alcibiades of Germany, took a leading part in the German wars of the sixteenth century. Born 1522; died 1558.

ALBERT, archduke of Austria, born 1559, sixth son of the Emperor Maximilian. He was first cardinal and archbishop of Toledo, governor of Portugal, then of the Low Countries, 1596. Philip II., despairing to get the Low Countries again under his dominion, gave them as a dowry with his daughter Isabella-Clara-Eugenia, whom he married to the Archduke Albert. This prince, after several campaigns, made a truce with the States General, and died 1621, without posterity.

ALBERT VI.

ALBERT VI., duke of Bavaria, born 1584; died 1600. He was distinguished for learning and piety. There is a book of his on the marriage of priests.

ALBERT, Prince, was second son of the duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and of a princess of the elect house of Saxe-Coburg-Altenburg. He was born at Ehrenberg 26 Aug., 1819, and received his education at the university of Bonn. On 10 Feb., 1840, he married Victoria, queen of England, at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. A proposal was made by the ministry for an allowance to him of £50,000 a year; but, on the motion of Colonel Sartorius, the House of Commons cut it down to £30,000. In 1857, in consequence of some questions having been raised as to his status by the pious German courts, he was declared the 'Prince Consort.' He was also raised to the military rank of field-marshal, and other honours were numerous periods conferred upon him. His death, which occurred at Windsor Castle 14 Dec., 1861, overwhelmed the nation with grief. Prince Albert was, to quote his own words, the 'consort and confidential adviser of a female sovereign,' and it is universally admitted that he discharged the duties of his somewhat delicate and anomalous position in a most admirable and prudent manner. He was an earnest promoter of science and art, and it was he who first suggested the idea of the International Exhibition of 1851. A volume of the principal speeches and addresses delivered by him was published shortly after his death.

ALBERT, by some writers improperly called ADALBERT, or ADELBERT, was of the family of the counts of Saarbrück. While he was only priest, he was made secretary, or chancellor, to Prince Henry, son of the Emperor Henry IV., and was one of the chief promoters of the prince's rebellion against his father. When Henry V. came to the throne, Albert was greatly in favour. He was sent on several embassies to the pope, and in 1109 succeeded Richard in the archbishopric of Mentz. Afterwards, however, he leagued with several German princes against Henry, who caused him to be imprisoned for three years. Albert presided at the council of Mentz 1131, and died 1137.

ALBERT, CHARLES D', duke of Luynes, high constable and grand falconer of France, was born 1578, and died 1621. He was page of the bedchamber to Henry IV., who afterwards placed him with the dauphin. Charles d'Albert soon became a favourite with the young prince, by training specked magpies to catch sparrows. After the death of Henry IV., Louis XIII. appointed him gentleman of his bedchamber, governor of Amboise, captain of the Tuileries, counsellor of state, first commander of the gentlemen, and grand falconer, and high constable of France.

ALBERT, ERASMUS, a German Lutheran divine, author of 'The Koran of the Cordeliers,' a satirical work directed against the Franciscans. Died 1553.

ALBERT, LOUIS JOSEPH D', de Luynes, prince of Grimbergen, and ambassador in France, from the Emperor Charles VII., died 1758, aged 87. He was author of a collection of pieces of literature, containing 'Timander instructed by his Genius,' and 'The Dream of Alcibiades.'

ALBERTANO, of Brescia, a writer of the thirteenth century. Being appointed governor of Gavardo by the emperor, the place fell into the hands of the enemy, and Albertano was thrown into prison, where he wrote a book, 'De dilectione

'Dei et Proximi.' He was also the author of some other works, particularly one on the duty of speaking and keeping silence. His writings have been frequently reprinted.

ALBERTAZZI, EMMA, an English vocalist, born in London in 1813, was the daughter of Mr. Francis Howson, a teacher of music. In 1829, when only sixteen years and a half old, she became the wife of Signor Albertazzi. As an opera and concert singer she acquired a high reputation, and gained great applause in London, Milan, and Paris. She died of consumption 25 Sept., 1847.

ALBERTET, a mathematician and poet of the thirteenth century, was a native of Provence, and died at Sisteron, of grief, it is said, on the loss of his poems, which he had entrusted to a friend, who sold them to Faber d'Uzes, by whom they were published as his own. The plagiarist was justly condemned to be whipped.

ALBERTI, ANDREW, author of a much esteemed treatise on Perspective, printed in Latin at Nuremberg, 1670.

ALBERTI, ARISTOTILE, a celebrated mechanician of the fifteenth century, native of Bologna. In 1455 he transported a stone tower thirty-five paces; and at Ceuto he set up another which was five feet out of the perpendicular. The king of Hungary gave him the title of chevalier, and permitted him to coin money in his own name. He afterwards went to Russia, where he built several churches.

ALBERTI, CNERUBINO, an Italian painter and engraver, born 1552; died 1615.

ALBERTI, DOMINICO, a musician born at Venice towards the close of the seventeenth century. He set to music the 'Endymion' of Metastasio.

ALBERTI, GIOVANNI, painter, brother of Andrew Alberti; died 1681.

ALBERTI, JOHN, a German lawyer of Widmanstadt in the sixteenth century, was very learned in the Oriental languages. He published an abridgment of the Koran at Nuremberg, 1543, with notes, exposing the imposture of Mahomet. The emperor appointed him chancellor of Austria, and knight of St. James. In 1556 he printed the Syriac New Testament for the use of the Jacobites, at the expense of the Emperor Ferdinand I. The 2nd Epistle of St. Peter, the 2nd and 3rd of St. John, that of St. Jude, and the Apocalypse, are wanting. Alberti also published a Syriac grammar, with a very curious preface.

ALBERTI, JOHN, a Lutheran divine and philologist, born at Assen, in Holland, 1608; died 1702. He was educated at Franeker, and became divinity professor at Leyden. His works are, 'Observationes philologicæ in sacros novi fœderis libros,' 'Periculum criticum,' 'Glossarium Græcum in sacros libros,' and the first volume of an edition of Hesychius. The last-named work was interrupted by the death of Alberti; but the second volume appeared in 1766 under the editorship of Ruhnkens.

ALBERTI, LEANDER, of Bologna, a celebrated provincial of the Dominicans, who died about 1552, aged 73. He published eulogiums of the illustrious men of his order, a 'Description of Italy,' and 'The History of Bologna.'

ALBERTI, or DE ALBERTIS, LEON BAPTISTA, a theologian, man of letters, architect, painter, sculptor, and mathematician, born at Florence 1308. After having been created doctor of both the laws, he entered the priesthood, but continued to study the fine arts, and above all, architecture,

ALBERTI.

In which he became such a proficient that he was styled the Florentine Vitruvius. A large number of buildings erected from his designs may be seen at Rome, Mantua, Rimini, Florence, and other cities of Italy. The chief of these are the churches of St. Sebastian and St. Andrew at Mantua; and the church of St. Francis at Rimini, which is his masterpiece. As a writer also Alberti gained a great reputation. His principal works are treatises on painting and architecture. The date of his death is not precisely known. Probably, however, it took place about 1480.

ALBERTI, MICHAEL, a German physician, born at Nuremberg, 1682, was appointed professor at Halle, where he became very famous. Died 1737. His writings are in Latin.

ALBERTI, SOLOMON, professor of medicine at Wittenberg, and a celebrated writer on anatomy, was born at Nuremberg 1540, and died 1600.

ALBERTI, WILLIAM GEORGE, a native of Germany, was born 1723, and after studying theology at Göttingen, came to this country, where he resided for some time. In 1745 he published at London an English essay against Hume's 'Natural Religion,' and on returning to his own country he published a work on the Quakers, and another on the state of religion and philosophy in Great Britain. Died at Tündern, in Hanover, 1758.

ALBERTI DI VILLANOVA, FRANCESCO D', a lexicographer, born at Nice 1757; died at Lucca 1800. He is author of a very valuable French-Italian and Italian-French dictionary, which has passed through several editions; and of 'Dizionario Universale Critico Enciclopedico della lingua Italiana.' Six vols. 4to.

ALBERTINI, FRANCIS, of Cantazaro, a Jesuit, distinguished for his learning and piety, died 1619. He left a work on theology, and a small treatise, 'De Angelo Custode,' wherein he maintains the singular opinion that animals have guardian angels. Another person of the same name was an ecclesiastic of Florence in the sixteenth century, and wrote 'De Mirabilibus novæ et veteris urbis Romæ,' 1505; 'Tractatus brevis de laudibus Florentiæ et Saonæ,' 1509, &c.

ALBERTINI, PAUL, a writer of Venice, was born 1430, and entered the order of Servites. He became famous as a preacher, and his skill in politics was such that the senate employed him as ambassador to Turkey. He died 1475. He left several works in Latin, including notes on passages of Dante, and a history of the order of Servites.

ALBERTRANDY, JOHN CHRISTIAN, a Jesuit, born at Warsaw 1751; died 1808. He was appointed director and historian of King Stanislaus-Augustus' cabinet of antiquities. He was famous as an antiquary and numismatist, and founded the society of 'Les Amis des Sciences' in his native city.

ALBERTUS, MAGNUS, a native of Laningen in Bavaria, provincial of the Dominicans, and afterwards bishop of Ratisbon, 1260, which dignity he quitted to return to the employments of the cloister. He assisted at the general council of Lyons 1274, and died 1282, at Cologne, in great reputation for sanctity. His works occupy twenty-one folio volumes.

ALBI, HENRI, born at Bolné, in the earldom of Venaisin, 1590, took the Jesuits' habit 1606, taught philosophy and divinity, went through the offices of his order, and died at Arles 1659. He wrote a history of the cardinals who have been employed in state affairs.

ALBIZZI.

ALBIN, ELEAZAR, a teacher of drawing and water-colour painting in London. He published several works on natural history, with illustrations by himself. When he died is unknown, but he appears to have been living in 1759.

ALBIN, HENRY, a nonconformist divine, was born at Batcombe, Somersetshire, 1624, educated in grammar-learning at Glastonbury, and thence sent to Oxford. Under the Act of Uniformity he was ejected from the living of West Camel 1660, and from that of Donyatt 1662. Retiring to his native place, he lived there during the remainder of his life. For many years he preached twice every Sunday at the house of Thomas Moore, Esq., at Spargrove; and in 1687 he became a stated preacher at Frome-Selwood, Shepton-Mallet, Bruton, and Wincanton. Died 25 Sept., 1696. His works are, 'A Practical Discourse on Loving the World,' and 'The Dying Pastor's last Farewell to his Friends in Frome-Selwood,' &c., 1697, 8vo.

ALBINI, ALEXANDER, an Italian painter, died 1646.

ALBINUS, abbot of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, died 732. He assisted Bede in writing his Ecclesiastical History.

ALBINUS, BERNARD, a German physician, and author of numerous works relating to his profession, was born at Dessau 1653, and died at Leyden 1721. Two of his sons distinguished themselves by their writings on anatomical subjects, viz., Bernard Siegfried Albinus (born 1697; died 1770), who became professor at Leyden; and Christian Bernard Albinus, who was professor at Utrecht, where he died 1752.

ALBINUS, DECIMUS CLAUDIUS, a native of Adrumetum, in Africa, surnamed Albinus from the whiteness of his skin. He was first made governor of Gaul, and afterwards of Britain, by Commodus. After the murder of Pertinax, he was elected emperor by the soldiers in Britain. But Severus had also been invested with the imperial dignity; and these two rivals, with about 150,000 men each, came into Gaul to decide the fate of the empire. Severus was conqueror, and he ordered the head of Albinus to be cut off, and his body to be thrown into the Rhone A.D. 198.

ALBINUS, L. POSTHUMIUS, consul with Licinius Lucullus A.D.C. 600, B.C. 154, wrote in Greek a history of Rome.

ALBINUS, PETER, a German historian, whose real name was Wess, i. e. White, was a native of Misnia, became professor of philosophy and mathematics at Wittenberg, and died at Dresden 1598. He wrote 'The Chronicles of Misnia,' and other antiquarian and genealogical works.

ALBIS, or ALBIUS. See WHITE, THOMAS.

ALBITTE, ANTOINE LOUIS, a French advocate, who acted a conspicuous part during the French Revolution. Born 1760; died 1812.

ALBIZZI, or DE ALBIZIS, BARTHOLOMEW, a famous Cordelier of the fourteenth century, born at Rivano, in Tuscany. He was called Bartholomæus of Pisa, from his having made his profession at Pisa. He distinguished himself by his preaching, and by several works, of which the best known is that entitled 'The Conformities of St. Francis with Jesus Christ.' By an indiscreet and injudicious zeal, the author not only raises the actions of St. Francis, in this book, above those of all the other saints, but, what is to the last degree shocking, pretends to equal them to those of the Son of God. Albizzi died, very old, at Pisa, 1401.

ALBIZZI.

ALBIZZI, FRANCIS, a cardinal and able lawyer, died 1604, aged 61. He drew up the bull against the book of Jansenius, in the time of Urban VIII.

ALBONUS, a king of the Lombards, who, after making himself master of almost all Italy, was assassinated at Verona, 573.

ALBON, JACQUES D', marquis de Fronsac, vicomte de St. Andre, marechal of France, and one of the great captains of the sixteenth century. He is best known by the name of Marechal de St. Jean. He had the command of the army of Champagne 1552, and contributed much to the taking of Marenberg 1554. He destroyed Cateau-Cambresis, and acquired great glory at the retreat of Quezon; was at the battle of Rentz; was taken prisoner at that of St. Quintin 1557, and bore an active part in the peace of Cateau-Cambresis. Afterwards he joined the friends of the duke of Guise, and was killed by Babigny de Mezières, at the battle of Dreux, 1562.

ALBURESI, JAMES, a painter of Bologna, died 1677, aged 45.

ALBORNOZ, GILES ALVAREZ CARILLO, a native of Orense, archbishop of Toledo, cardinal, and one of the greatest men that Spain has produced. He resigned his archbishopric on being made cardinal, as he to those who disapproved of the resignation, that he should be much to blame if he kept a wife from whom he could be of no service. He reduced Italy to the dominion of the Holy See, brought Urban V. back to Rome, and afterwards retired to Fermo, where he died 24 Aug., 1367, after having founded the magnificent college of the Spaniards at Bologna. It is said that Urban V., demanding account of the large sums with which Albornoz had been intrusted for the conquest of Italy, the cardinal presented to the pope a wagon loaded with locks and keys, saying, 'Holy Father, these sums have been spent to make you master of all the cities of which the locks and keys are in this wagon.' Upon this Urban embraced him, and all further inquiries were dropped.

ALBRECHTSBERGER, JOHN GEORGE, a famous musical composer, born at Klosterneuburg, in Austria, 1736; died at Vienna 7 March, 1809. Among his pupils were Beethoven, Eybler, John Fas, and Joseph Weigl.

ALBRET. See D'ALBRET.

ALBRICIUS, or ALBERICUS, an English physician and philosopher, who is supposed to have lived in the reigns of John and Henry III. He was born in London, and educated at Bedford and Cambridge. Scarcely anything more respecting him has been recorded.

ALBUCASSIS, an Arabian physician in the reign of the Emperor Henry IV., about 1085. His works were printed in Latin, at Augsburg, 1519. A new edition was published in Arabic and Latin by John Channing, Oxford, 2 vols. 4to., 1778.

ALBUMAZAR, or ABU-MACHAR, an Arabian astronomer, born in the 190th year of the Hegira (A.D. 805-806); died 885. His works were printed in Latin, at Venice, 1506.

ALBUQUERQUE, ALPHONSUS, duke of, appointed viceroy of the East Indies by Emmanuel, king of Portugal, succeeded Almeida. He conquered Goa, Malacca, and Ceylon, and so distinguished himself by his wise conduct and worthy actions that he gained the title of the Great. He died on board ship in the port of Goa, as he returned from the conquest of Ormuz, 1515. His son, Blaise D'Albuquerque, was raised to the first employments of the kingdom of Portugal, and published memoirs of his father in Portuguese, which were printed at Lisbon 1576.

ALBUQUERQUE, MATTHIAS D', a Portuguese general, was sent to Brazil 1628, and defeated the Spaniards at Campo-Mayor 1644. Died 1648.

ALBUQUERQUE-COELHO, EDWARD D', marquis of Basto, and count of Pernambuco, in Brazil, knight of Christ in Portugal, and gentleman of the bedchamber to King Philip IV., wrote a journal of the war in Brazil, begun in 1630. He died at Madrid about 1658.

ALCÆUS OF MITYLENE, one of the greatest lyric poets of antiquity, and a zealous enemy of Pittacus, Periander, and other tyrants. He was the inventor of that pleasing kind of verse called Alcaics. Only fragments of his works have been preserved. Alcæus lived in the time of Sappho, about 604 B.C. His dialect is Æolic. He is to be distinguished from an Athenian of the same name, who, according to Suidas, was the first inventor of tragedy.

ALCAMENES, a famous Athenian sculptor, who flourished about 428 B.C.

ALCASAR, LOUIS, a Jesuit, born at Seville 1554; died 1613; wrote comments on the Apocalypse, and other works.

ALCHIN, WILLIAM TURNER, an English antiquarian writer, was for some years librarian to the city of London. Died 3 Feb., 1866.

ALCIATI, ANDREW, born at Milan 1592. He was a famous civilian, and practised the law at Avignon, Bourges, and in several cities of Italy, which vied with each other in offering him the largest appointments. He died at Pavia 1550. M. de Thou praises him for having banished the barbarous style which before his time prevailed in the writings of lawyers. His legal works were numerous, but he is chiefly known by his 'Emblems,' which entitle him to rank among the poets.

ALCIATI, JOHN PAUL, an Italian Protestant, born at Milan in the sixteenth century. He denied the doctrine of the Trinity, and maintained that Jesus did not exist before he was born of Mary. He went to Geneva, but being obliged to leave that city, he retired to Dantzic, where he died. He published two letters, in which he denied the pre-existence of Jesus Christ.

ALCIATI, TERENCE, a Jesuit, much esteemed by Urban VIII., who intended to raise him to the purple. The design was frustrated by Alciati's death, which took place in 1651. He left materials for a history of the council of Trent, which were afterwards used by Cardinal Pallavicino, in the history he composed in reply to that of Father Paul Sarpi.

ALCIBIADES, a famous Athenian general, son of Clinias, and a disciple of Socrates. He signalized himself on every occasion, and gained the prize at the Olympic games. Being accused of sacrilege, he took refuge at Thebes, in Bœotia, and joined the Lacedæmonians, whom he persuaded to enter into an alliance with the king of Persia. At Lacedæmon he lived like the Lacedæmonians, though accustomed to the Athenian luxury. Nevertheless the Spartan generals grew jealous of him, whereupon he went to Tissaphernes, the general of Darius, and found means to get himself recalled to Athens. Before he went thither, he obliged the Lacedæmonians to sue for peace, and captured several cities on the frontier of Asia. Upon his return the Athenians restored his property, and loaded him with honours. Some years afterwards his lieutenant Antiochus having lost a battle against the Lacedæmonians, Alcibiades was deposed, and obliged to retire to Pharnabazus, who caused him to be shot to death with arrows, at the solicitation of Lysander, king of Sparta. Thus died this great man, b.c. 404, aged 50.

ALCINOUS, a Platonic philosopher, whose 'Epitome or Manual of the doctrines of Plato' has been translated into English by Stanley. At what period he flourished is uncertain.

ALCIPHON, a Greek sophist, author of some curious Epistles, which have been printed. He flourished in the third or fourth century before Christ.

ALCMAN, a lyric poet, and one of the most ancient Greek authors, is said to have been the first who composed amorous verses, about 672 b.c. Some fragments of his are to be found in Athenæus and with Alcaeus.

ALCOCK, JOHN, an English prelate, was educated at Cambridge. After being employed in several embassies, he was appointed bishop of Rochester 1472, and lord chancellor conjointly with Rotherham, bishop of Lincoln, 1474. In 1476 he was translated to Worcester, and in 1486 to Ely. He died 1 Oct., 1500, and was buried in his beautiful chapel in Ely Cathedral. He wrote several works, but is now chiefly remembered as the founder of Jesus College, Cambridge.

ALCOCK, JOHN, a musical composer, born at London, 1715. After being organist at Plymouth for five, and at Reading for eight years, he was in 1749 installed vicar-choral of the cathedral church of Lichfield. In 1755 the university of Oxford created him bachelor, and in 1763 doctor of music. He was organist of Sutton, Coldfield, and Tamworth for 25 years. Died 23 Feb., 1806. He published songs, anthems, &c.

ALCOCK, NATHAN, born at Runcorn, Cheshire, 1707, studied medicine at Edinburgh and Leyden, proceeding M.D. at the latter university in 1737. In 1741 he was created M.A. at Oxford, where he proceeded M.B. 1744, and M.D. 1749, as a member of Jesus College. In 1754 he became a fellow of the College of Physicians. For some years he practised at Oxford, but eventually removed to Runcorn, where he died 8 Dec., 1779. He wrote a treatise on 'The Effects of Climate on the Constitutions and Manners of Men,' and several papers on physical and philosophical subjects, but none of his works were published. In 1780 appeared anonymously 'Some Memoirs of the Life of Dr. Nathan Alcock, lately deceased.' This was written by the doctor's brother, the Rev. Thomas Alcock, vicar of Runcorn.

ALCOCK, SIMON, an English divine, who flourished about 1380, wrote an exposition of the Sentences, and other works.

ALCOCK, THOMAS, born 1709, was educated at Brazenose College, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He afterwards was presented to the vicarage of Runcorn, Cheshire, where he died 24 Aug., 1798. Mr. Alcock published 'Observations on the Defects of the Poor Laws,' which Mr. Mc'Culloch considered to be one of the best treatises in opposition to a compulsory system; 'Remarks on Dr. Baker's Essay on the Endemical Colic of Devonshire;' 'Observations on that part of a late Act of Parliament which lays an additional duty on Cider and Perry,' 1764. He also wrote, anonymously, memoirs of his brother, Dr. Nathan Alcock.

ALCOCK, THOMAS, a surgeon, who practised in London. He was born at Rothbury, Northumberland, 1784, and died 1833. Mr. Alcock wrote 'Lectures on Practical and Medical Surgery,' and other professional works.

ALCUIN, whose full name is Flaccus Albinus Alcuinus, was a native of York, where he was born 735. He entered the church, and Charlemagne summoned him to the council of Frankfort 794, in order to combat the errors of Felix and Elipand. This prince honoured Alcuin with his friendship, employed him in his negotiations, and gave him several abbey. He died 19 May, 804, at that of St. Martin, at Tours, of which he was abbot. His works were printed at Paris, 1617, fol. Father Chifflet also published a MS. entitled 'Confession d'Alcuin,' 1656, which Mabillon proved to be written by Alcuin. M. Froben, prince-abbot of St. Emeran, at Ratisbon, published a new edition of his works, 1777, two vols. fol., each volume consisting of two parts. Alcuin was one of the most learned men of his age.

ALCYONIUS, PETER, an Italian; corrector of the press to Aldus Manutius; and afterwards Greek professor at Florence. Born 1487; died in or about 1527. It is said by some writers that Alcyonius, being in possession of Cicero's treatise 'De Gloria,' burnt that only copy there was in the world, after having stolen from it all he wanted for his work 'De Exilio,' published at Venice in 1522. Others accuse Philiphus of this deed.

ALDAY, JOHN, translated into English the 'Theatrum Mundi,' originally written in French and Latin by Pierre Boistuaud de Launai. Alday's translation was published at London 1574-1581.

ALDBOROUGH, EDWARD STRATFORD, earl of, succeeded his father, the first earl, 1777, and died 2 Jan., 1801. He is author of 'An Essay on the True Interest and Resources of the Empire of the King of Great Britain and Ireland,' 1783. Other works have also been ascribed to him.

ALDEGREVER, HENRY, a painter and engraver, born in Westphalia 1502. It is supposed that he died in 1562.

ALDERETE, BERNARD and JOSEPH, two learned Spanish Jesuits, natives of Malaga, in the beginning of the seventeenth century. They wrote 'The History of the Castilian Language,' 1606; and 'The Antiquities of Spain,' 1614. Joseph was born 1560, and died 1616.

ALDERETE, BERNARD, a Spanish Jesuit, professor at Salamanca; died 1657. He wrote a commentary on St. Thomas Aquinas, and several theological treatises.

ALDERSON, AMELIA. See OPIE, Mrs.

ALDERSON, Sir EDWARD HALL, was born at Great Yarmouth 1787, and after a preliminary education, went to Cambridge, where he took high honours. Afterwards he was called to the bar; was appointed justice of the Common Pleas 1830; and baron of the Exchequer 1834. He died 27 Jan., 1857. In conjunction with Mr. Barnewell he for some time edited the 'Queen's Bench Reports.'

ALDERSON, JOHN, M.D., an English physician, born at Lowestoft 1758; died 1829. For many years he was physician to the General Infirmary at Hull. Dr. Alderson published several works on subjects connected with his profession.

ALDHLM, St., was born among the West

ALDRED.

SAXONS, being a near relation of King Ina. He was educated at Canterbury, under St. Adrian, and in 675 became abbat of Malmesbury. After holding the abbacy thirty years, he was taken out of his cell by force, and consecrated the first bishop of Sherburn, which see was afterwards removed to Salisbury. He died May 25, 709, on which day he is commemorated in the Catholic church. He was the first among our English ancestors who cultivated the Latin and English or Saxon poetry. His principal work is a treatise on the praises of virginity.

ALDRED, called the Glossator and the Presbyter, wrote the Anglo-Saxon gloss, or interpretation interlined on the celebrated copy of the Gospels known as the Durham book, or St. Cuthbert's book, preserved among the Cottonian MSS.

ALDRED, was originally a monk of Worcester; afterwards abbat of Tavistock; bishop of Worcester 1046; archbishop of York 1060. He died 10 Sept., 1069. Archbishop Aldred was an intimate friend of King Edward the Confessor.

ALDRIC, ST., bishop of Mans; died 856. He was of the blood-royal, and distinguished for his learning and piety. There remain of his works three sermons, and a regulation for Divine service in the 'Analecta' of Mabillon, and in the 'Miscellaneous' of Baluze.

ALDRICH, HENRY, an eminent scholar and divine, was born at Westminster 1647, and educated at Westminster School, under the famous Bossy. Removing to Christ Church, Oxford, he became an eminent tutor of his college. In Feb., 1661, he was installed canon of Christ Church, and in May following acquired the degrees of bachelor and doctor in divinity. By his attacks on the church of Rome he rendered himself so conspicuous that at the Revolution he was appointed to the deanery of Christ Church. He also held the rectory of Wem, in Shropshire, and in 1702 was prolocutor of the convocation. He died at Christ Church 14 Dec., 1710. In imitation of his predecessor, Bishop Fell, he published generally every year some Greek classic, or a portion of one, as a gift to the students of his house. He wrote also a very popular system of logic, entitled 'Artis Logicæ Compendium,' some controversial treatises, and a Latin work on the elements of architecture. The publication of Clarendon's 'History of the Rebellion' was committed to him and Bishop Spratt, who were accused by Oldmixon with having altered that work; but the charge appears to have been groundless. In addition to his literary attainments, Dr. Aldrich possessed great skill in architecture. The three sides of the quadrangle of Christ Church, Oxford, called Peck-water Square, were designed by him; as were also the chapel of Trinity College and the church of All Saints. He also cultivated music, particularly that branch of it which related to his profession and office. To this end he made a noble collection of church music, and formed also a design of writing a history of the science, having collected materials which are still extant in the library of his own college. He composed many services and anthems for the church. In the 'Pleasant Musical Companion,' 1726, are two catches of his, one entitled 'Hark, the bonny Christ Church Bells,' and the other 'A Smoking Catch,' he himself being, it appears, devotedly attached to tobacco.

ALDRICH, ROBERT, an English prelate, was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He commenced

D.D. at Oxford 1530, and was constituted registrar of the order of the Garter and canon of Windsor 1534. In 1536 he was elected provost of Eton, and in 1537 was nominated bishop of Carlisle. During Queen Mary's reign he complied with the change of religion. His death occurred 5 March, 1555-6. Erasmus and Leland highly extol his learning. He compiled 'The Register of the Order of the Garter, commonly called the Black Book,' which was published by Anstis, 1724.

ALDRIDGE, WILLIAM, a nonconformist preacher, was born at Warminster, Wiltshire, 1737. From 1776 until his death on 28 Feb., 1797, he was minister of a congregation of Calvinistic Methodists in Jewry Street, London. His works are, 'The Doctrine of the Trinity Stated, Proved, and Defended,' and 'A Funeral Sermon on the Death of the Countess of Huntingdon.'

ALDROVANDUS, ULYSSES, a famous naturalist, was born, 1547, at Bologna, where he became professor of physic and philosophy. He died 1605, poor and quite blind, having ruined his health and spent his fortune in his researches after knowledge. His works occupy 13 folio volumes.

ALDUS, MANUTIUS. See MANUTIUS.

ALEANDER, JEROME, a celebrated cardinal, born, 1480, at Motta, on the confines of Friuli and Istria. He was rector of the university of Paris, then librarian of the Vatican, and afterwards nuncio in Germany, where he distinguished himself greatly, particularly at the diet of Worms, against Luther, 1519. He understood mathematics, divinity, physic, and the Hebrew and Greek languages. Clement VII. made him archbishop of Brindisi, and sent him into France as nuncio. He was near Francis I. at the battle of Pavia, and taken prisoner. Paul III. honoured him with the purple. He died at Rome 1 Feb., 1542. His works are a Greek and Latin Lexicon, a Greek Grammar, and a poem in elegiac verse.

ALEANDER, JEROME, great-nephew to Cardinal Aleander, was a famous lawyer, and followed Cardinal Barberini as legate à latere into France 1625. He died at Rome 1629. His chief works are a commentary on the institutes of Gaius, some explanations of antiques, and poems.

ALEGAMBE, PHILIP, a Jesuit, born at Brussels 1592, took the religious habit, 1613, at Palermo. At a subsequent period he taught philosophy in the university of Grätz, in Austria, and afterwards he was retained, by the general of the Jesuits at Rome, as secretary of the Latin despatches for Germany. After holding this laborious office for four years, Alegambe was obliged to resign it in consequence of failing sight. Died at Rome 6 Sept., 1652. He wrote the following valuable works illustrative of the biography of the eminent men of his order:—'Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu,' Antwerp, fol., 1643; 'Vita P. Joannis Cardin. Lusitani, ex societate Jesu,' Rome, 12mo., 1649; 'Heroes et victimæ charitatis societatis Jesu,' Rome, 4to., 1558; and 'Mortes illustres et gesta eorum de societate Jesu, qui in odium fidei ab hæreticis vel aliis occisi sunt,' Rome, fol., 1657.

ALEMAN, LOUIS, cardinal and archbishop of Arles, was born at the castle of Arhent, Bugey, France, 1390. He was president of the council of Basle, and crowned the duke of Savoy pope, by the title of Felix V. Eugenius, his competitor, degraded the cardinal, but he was restored by Nicholas V., and sent as legate into Germany. Died at Salon, 1450.

ALEMAN.

ALEMAN, MATTHEW, a Spanish writer, born at Seville in the sixteenth century. In 1609 he was in Mexico, where he published his 'Ortografia Castellana.' His most celebrated work, however, is his romance 'Guzman de Alfarache.'

ALEN, JOHN VAN, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam 1651; died 1698.

ALENÇON, FRANCIS duke d'. See FRANCIS OF FRANCE.

ALENIO, JULIUS, a Jesuit, born at Brescia 1582. He travelled into the eastern countries and arrived in 1610 at Macao, where he taught mathematics. From thence he went to the empire of China, where he continued to propagate the Christian religion for thirty-six years. He was the first who planted the faith in the province of Shan-si, and he built several churches in the province of Fo-Kien. Died Aug., 1649. He composed several works in the Chinese language.

ALER, PAUL, a Jesuit, born near Luxemburg 1656; died at Duren 1725. He wrote a large number of theological, philosophical, and literary works, and was the original author of the 'Gradus ad Parnassum.'

ALBS, OF ALESIVS, ALEXANDER, a Scotch divine, whose real name was Aiane, was born in Edinburgh in 1500. Having adopted the Lutheran faith, he left his native country in 1530, and never returned to it. He visited England, however, in 1535, and was admitted a member of Queen's College, Cambridge. For some time he practised physic in London, and eventually became professor of divinity at Leipsic, where he died 17 March, 1565-6. Twenty-nine of his works, chiefly theological, are enumerated in 'Athenæ Cantab.'

ALESIO, MATTHEW PETER, a Roman painter and engraver, died 1600.

ALESSI, GALEAS, a celebrated Italian architect, born 1500; died 1572. He designed many of the buildings in Genoa.

ALEXANDER the Great, son of Philip, king of Macedon and Olympias, born, B.C. 356, at Pella. In his youth he tamed the horse Bucephalus; saved the life of Philip in a battle; became the admiration of the most experienced captains, and gained the affection of the people by his kindness and liberality. Having succeeded his father, at the age of 20, he conquered Thrace and Illyrium, and destroyed Thebes. At the taking of the last-mentioned city, he preserved the family and the house of Pindar for the sake of his poems. He then declared war against the Persians, forced the passage of the Granicus, and rapidly conquered Lydia, Ionia, Caria, Pamphylia, and Cappadocia. After having cut the Gordian knot, he defeated the army of Darius near Issus, seized his treasures, and took a vast number of prisoners, among whom were the mother, wife, son, and two daughters of that unfortunate prince. Alexander's honourable treatment of these princesses cannot be too highly praised, and is perhaps the brightest passage in his life. The victory of Issus was followed by the reduction of many important towns and provinces. After the taking of Tyre he marched against the Jews, who had offended him, but Jaddus, their high priest, having shown him the book of Daniel, in which it was written that a Grecian prince should destroy the Persian empire, obtained from him whatever he desired. Alexander then went into Egypt, where he built Alexandria; he afterwards defeated Darius at the battle of Arbela, B.C. 330. The fatal end of Darius, who was murdered by the traitor Bessus, drew tears from Alexander. At length, having defeated King Porus, subdued all Asia, and even the Indies, he died at Babylon, either by poison or excessive drinking, B.C. 325. Alexander was of the middle stature, rather short than tall, his neck somewhat awry, his eyes prominent, and his looks lofty. To an insatiable desire of glory and conquest he joined an unhappy passion for Bagoas, and the foolish vanity of wanting to be thought the son of Jupiter, which has led some authors to suppose that he was not the son of Philip, but of Nectenabo, an Egyptian magi and a lover of Olympias. Anger and wine made him guilty of excesses, of which he was himself ashamed, particularly after he had killed Clytus. These vices excepted, Alexander was a most accomplished prince. He had great veneration for the sciences and men of learning; always honoured Aristotle, his tutor, and loaded him with riches. In the midst of his conquests he sent him the immense sum of 800 talents, to assist him in his pursuit of natural history. Alexander was so fond of Homer's works that he carried them always about him. He would permit but three artists to take his likeness—Praxiteles, a statuary, Lysippus, the sculptor, and the famous painter Apelles.

ALEXANDER, king of the Jews, son of Aristobulus II., was conquered near Mount Tabor by the Romans, and being sent to Antioch, was there beheaded B.C. 49.

ALEXANDER I. (St.) Pope, succeeded St. Evaristus 109, and died 119. He is ranked among the martyrs in the canon of the mass, and is commemorated on May 11.

ALEXANDER II., Anselm de Badage, a Milanese, originally called Anselme, was bishop of Lucca, when he was elected pope 1061. Agnes, wife of the Emperor Henry IV., opposed his election, and procured that of Cadalois, bishop of Parma, who took the name of Honorius II. This caused a great schism, which only ended with the death of Honorius in 1064, though it had been condemned by several councils. Alexander II. employed with success the celebrated Peter Damiani, and made Hildebrand his legate, who, being assisted by the arms of the Countess Matilda, retook the lands of the holy see, which had been usurped by the Norman princes. He favoured the pretensions of William, duke of Normandy, who disputed the kingdom of England with Harold. Alexander died 22 April, 1073, in great reputation for sanctity. There are many of his epistles remaining. In those to the bishops of France he commends them for not joining in the murder of the Jews, who, through a mistaken zeal, were massacred in all places.

ALEXANDER III., Roland Ranuci, a native of Sienna, cardinal and chancellor of the Roman church; elected pope 7 Sept., 1159. The Cardinal John Morson, and Guy de Creme, discontented with this promotion, elected Octavian, of the family of Frescati, who took the name of Victor IV. The Emperor Barbarossa got this antipope acknowledged in a council held at Pavia 1160. This obliged Alexander to retire into France. On the death of Victor, 1164, Guy de Creme was put in his place by the name of Paschal III., who also dying, John, abbat of Sturn, succeeded him, by the title of Calixtus III. At length, after great troubles, Alexander was reconciled to the emperor in an interview at Venice, and the antipope Calixto shroud the schism. This, however, did not prevent the schismatics from electing another pope, whom they named Innocent III. Alexander III. had been in France long before, and had held a council at Tours. He celebrated the third council of the Lateran, granted great and honourable privileges to the doge of Venice, and first introduced the Venetian ceremony of espousing the sea on Ascension Day. He governed the church piously, repressed servitude, triumphed over the schismatics, and died, 30 Aug., 1181, at Rome, leaving several epistles. It was this pope who limited the power of canonizing saints to the sovereign pontiff. Previously the metropolitans possessed that right, but since the time of Alexander III. the pope alone canonizes. The canonization of St. Gueter, abbat of Pontoise, by the archbishop of Reims, 1153, is the last example recorded in history of saints who have not been canonized by the pope.

ALEXANDER IV., Rinald, or Roland, cardinal, bishop of Ostia, of the house of the earls of Segni, and nephew to the Popes Gregory IX. and Innocent III., succeeded Innocent IV. in the chair of St. Peter 25 Dec., 1254. Following the example of his uncle, Gregory IX., he openly took the part of the mendicant orders against the university of Paris. He sent the bishop of Orvieto to Theodore Lacomus, to reunite the Greek and Latin churches, and resolved to renew the war against the infidels, but without effect. Extraordinary privileges and dispensations were granted by him with a facility which has few examples. He died 25 May, 1261.

ALEXANDER V., Peter Philargi, from a poor mendicant of the isle of Candia, or rather of Candia, a Milanese villager, became a Cordelier, and doctor of the Sorbonne, then bishop of Novara, afterwards bishop of Milan and cardinal, and was at last elected pope at the council of Pisa. He was accustomed to say that he should never be tempted, like his predecessors, to aggrandize his family, having never known either father, mother, brother, sister, or nephew. He died 1410, after having confirmed the council of Pisa, at which he had presided.

ALEXANDER VI., Roderic Lenzuoli, afterwards Borgia, born at Valencia in Spain 1430, made archbishop, and succeeded Pope Innocent III. 11 Aug., 1492. Calixtus III., his maternal uncle, had made him cardinal 1455. He procured his election to the papal chair by spending his whole fortune in bribing the conclave. During the time he was cardinal he had four sons and a daughter by Vanostia, a Roman lady, wife of Dominic Armano. The second of these sons was Cæsar Borgia, a cardinal, and afterwards duke of Valentinois. Alexander's fondness for him was so great that he trampled on all laws, Divine and human, to advance him, sacrificing everything to his advance and ambition, usurping the property of others, and selling benefices, which gave occasion to this detestable:—

'Vendit Alexander claves, altaria, Christum;
Vendere jure potest, emerat ille prius.'

Heaven put an end to his crimes, for it is said that this pope and his son Cæsar, intending to poison some cardinals they disliked, were poisoned themselves by the mistake of a servant. Borgia recovered by being put into the belly of a mule; but Alexander died 18 Aug., 1503. This is the account given by most historians, though there is reason to believe that he died a natural death.

ALEXANDER VII., Fabio Chigi, a learned pope, born 16 Feb., 1599, at Sienna, bishop of Imola, and cardinal, succeeded Innocent X. 7 April, 1655. He signalized himself by his zeal for the propagation of the faith and the embellishment of the city of Rome. Died 16 March, 1667. His poems were printed at the Louvre, 1656, fol.

ALEXANDER VIII., Peter Ottoboni, was born at Venice 1610, being son of the grand chancellor of the republic. After finishing his studies at Padua he went to Rome, where he made himself master of ecclesiastical affairs. He was made bishop of Brescia, cardinal, and on 6 Oct., 1689, pope. He died 1 Feb., 1691, after having published a bull against the proceedings of the assembly of the clergy of France 1682.

ALEXANDER I., king of Scotland, was son of Malcolm III., and succeeded his brother Edgar 1107. From the vigour and impetuosity of his character he obtained the appellation of the Fierce, though this disposition had been so concealed by his piety and devotion before he came to the throne, that his unruly subjects were equally surprised and discontented when it declared itself. Died 27 April, 1124.

ALEXANDER II., king of Scotland, son of William the Lion, succeeded his father in 1214, being then in his sixteenth year. During the reign of John he made several incursions into England. In 1221, however, he married Joan, sister of Henry III. of England, by whose means the two kingdoms were kept at peace with each other for eighteen years. Died 8 July, 1249.

ALEXANDER III., king of Scotland, son of the preceding, succeeded to the crown 1249, when only eight years of age. Shortly afterwards he married Margaret, daughter of Henry III. of England. He lived upon terms of close friendship with his father-in-law, whom he assisted in his wars with the barons with 5000 men. Alexander was accidentally killed while hunting 16 March, 1285-6.

ALEXANDER I., emperor of Russia, eldest son of Paul I., was born 1777. He was educated under the care of his grandmother, Catherine II., who intended that he should fill the throne to the exclusion of his father. At the age of 16 he married the Princess Louise Maria of Baden. On the night of the 23rd or 24th of March, 1801, Paul I. was assassinated in the palace of Michaelof, and the conspirators immediately saluted Alexander as emperor. There is no evidence to show that he foresaw so terrible a termination of the plot, but it is certain that he had been in communication with the conspirators. The first indication of the policy of Alexander was the conclusion of peace with England. Afterwards, refusing to acknowledge Napoleon as emperor of the French, a war ensued, and Alexander formed a coalition, in 1805, with Austria, England, and Sweden. The campaign was eminently disastrous to the allied powers. On the 2nd of Dec. the Austrian and Russian troops, commanded by the two emperors in person, were beaten at the battle of Austerlitz. This led to the conclusion of a convention between France and Austria, and Alexander's departure to Russia with the remains of his army. A coalition between Prussia and England was concluded in 1806. On the 8th of Oct. hostilities recommenced, and the victory of Jena, gained by Napoleon, laid the

ALEXANDER.

Prussian monarchy at his feet. The battles of Eylau and Friedland, in which the Russian armies were signally defeated, terminated the campaign. An armistice was arranged on the 21st of June; and five days afterwards Alexander and Napoleon met in a tent erected on a raft in the middle of the Niemen. A treaty of peace was signed between the two at Tilsit on the 7th July, by a secret article of which Alexander engaged to join France against England. He accordingly declared war against his late ally on the 26th Oct. following. The friendly relations of Alexander with France continued for nearly five years. His policy entailed a vast amount of privation on his people, by severing their commercial connection with England. It was found impossible to carry out the continental system of Napoleon, and a rupture with France became inevitable. On the 19th March, 1812, Alexander declared war against France, and on the 24th April left St. Petersburg to join his army on the western frontier of Lithuania. The immense army of France, led by Napoleon, entered the Russian territory on the 25th June. As it advanced the inhabitants fled as one man, and left the invaders to march through a silent desert. On the 7th Sept. took place the first serious encounter between the two armies, the battle of Borodino, in which 25,000 men perished on each side. On the 14th the French entered Moscow. In a few hours the city was a smoking ruin. Napoleon's homeward march, and the destruction of his magnificent army were the first decisive blows to the mighty fabric of the French empire. In the early part of 1813 Prussia and Austria successively became parties to the alliance against France. Alexander continued to accompany the allied troops throughout the campaign of the summer, and was present at the battles of Dresden and Leipsic. On the 30th March, 1814, 150,000 of the troops of the allies were before the walls of Paris; and on the following day at noon Alexander and William Frederick entered that capital. After the deposition of Napoleon, Alexander and the king of Prussia visited England. The congress at Vienna opened on the 3rd Nov., 1814. In the political arrangements made by this assembly Alexander obtained his share of advantages, having been recognized as king of Poland. Before the members of the congress separated, however, news arrived of Napoleon's escape from Elba. They remained together till after the battle of Waterloo, when Alexander, with the emperor of Austria and the king of Prussia, proceeded to Paris, where, on the 26th Sept., 1815, they signed the very questionable treaty to which they gave the name of the Holy Alliance. After these great events the remaining years of Alexander's life appear comparatively unimportant. He died 1 Dec., 1825.

ALEXANDER, St., the Collier, a celebrated bishop of Comana, was burnt, under the Emperor Decius, about 250 or 251. Festival Aug. 11.

ALEXANDER, St., studied in the great Christian school of Alexandria under St. Pantenus, and his successor St. Clement. He was afterwards chosen bishop of a certain city in Cappadocia. During the persecution of Severus he made a glorious confession of his faith, and suffered several years' imprisonment. In 212 he became bishop of Jerusalem jointly with St. Narcissus. He was seized by the persecutors under Decius, confessed Christ a second time, and died in chains at Cæsarea in 251. He is honoured in the Roman martyrology on March 18, and in the Greek church on May 16 and Dec. 22.

ALEXANDER, St., succeeded St. Achilles in the see of Alexandria 313. He excommunicated Arius, assisted at the council of Nice, and died 26 Feb., 320, on which day he is mentioned in the Roman martyrology.

ALEXANDER, St., bishop of Byzantium, at whose prayer God is said to have punished Arius 336. Died 337. Festival Aug. 28.

ALEXANDER, St., died about 430. He retired to the borders of the Euxine Sea, after having held an office in the palace of the emperor. He founded the order of Accemetes, a Greek word, signifying persons who never sleep; because out of the six choirs of anchorites, which composed his society, one was always employed in singing to the Lord.

ALEXANDER a Benedictine monk of Christ Church, Canterbury, wrote 'Dicta Anselmi Archiepiscopi.'

ALEXANDER, a native of France, was consecrated bishop of Lincoln 1123. In 1142 he convened a synod, which passed several salutary canons for the government of the church in this country. He died on Ash Wednesday 1147.

ALEXANDER, was appointed abbot of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, 1212. His attachment to the cause of King John rendered him very obnoxious to the enemies of that monarch, after whose death, Pandulphus, the papal legate, deprived Alexander of his ecclesiastical preferments. It is said that he died in poverty. He was a man of learning, and wrote several works.

ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO, of Naples, a celebrated lawyer, died 1523 aged 62. He wrote 'Genialium dierum libri Sex.'

ALEXANDER APHRODISIENSIS, a famous commentator on Aristotle, lived at the end of the second century and beginning of the third.

ALEXANDER DE ST. ELPIDO, general of the Augustinian hermits 1312, and archbishop of Amalfi 1325, wrote by order of John XXII. a treatise on the jurisdiction of the emperor and the authority of the pope.

ALEXANDER ESSEBIENSIS, was prior of the monastery of Ashby Canons, in Northamptonshire, as early as 1200. He wrote many works, including 'Historiæ Britannicæ Epitome,' 'Compendium Historiarum Bibliæ,' and 'De Fastis seu Sacris Diebus.' In the last-mentioned work he describes the church festivals in elegiac verse. His 'Chronicle of Events from the Birth of Christ to the Year 1247' is preserved in the Lambeth library.

ALEXANDER DE FRANCISCIS, a converted rabbi, a native of Rome, and a member of the Franciscan order. He was celebrated for his great learning and eloquence as a preacher. He was highly esteemed by Pope Clement VIII., who, in 1594, appointed him bishop of Forlì, but he resigned the see three years afterwards, and retired to his convent at Rome, where he died about 1600. He wrote a work in Hebrew, in which he reconciles with the Hebrew original some passages of the Vulgate which appear to deviate from it.

ALEXANDER, OF INOLA. See TARTAGUI.

ALEXANDER JAGELLON, elected king of Poland 1501; died 1507.

ALEXANDER JANNÆUS, king of the Jews, son of Hyrcanus, and brother of Aristobulus, was a very cruel prince. He died B.C. 70.

ALEXANDER.

ALEXANDER NEVSKOI, a Russian hero, born 1157, was son of the Grand Duke Jaroslaw II. He defeated the Swedes, the Danes, and the knights of the united Teutonic order at the battle of the Neva. He also conquered the Tartars, and rescued Russia from the tribute which Ghengis Khan had imposed. He died at Kassinow 1263. In the Greek church he is regarded as a saint.

ALEXANDER, OF PARIS, a French poet of the twelfth century, who wrote a poem on Alexander the Great in verses of twelve syllables, from which that verse was called 'Alexandrine.'

ALEXANDER POLYHISTOR, born at Miletus 250, wrote forty-two treatises on grammar, philosophy, and history—of which nothing but fragments remain.

ALEXANDER SEVERUS, elected Roman emperor 232, conquered the Germans and Persians, and was killed by order of Maximin, near Mentz, 235. This prince was just and amiable, a lover of arts and sciences, and his whole study was the happiness of his people. He was much inclined to Christianity; indeed it is said that he had in his closet pictures of Jesus Christ and Abraham. He would never suffer himself to be addressed as Lord God, or by any of the ambitious titles of his predecessors.

ALEXANDER TRALLIANUS, a celebrated physician and philosopher of the sixth century. His works have been published in Greek and Latin.

ALEXANDER, DANIEL ASHER, an English architect, died at Exeter 3 March, 1846. His principal public works were the buildings in the London Docks, till 1831; the Prison of War at Dartmoor; the county prison at Maidstone; the Royal Naval Asylum at Greenwich; and the light-houses of Heligoland, Holyhead, Harwich, Lundy, and the Faroe Islands.

ALEXANDER, JOHN, an engraver, was born in Scotland, and visited Rome about 1718. His prints are slight etchings, principally after Raffaele. He was living in 1721.

ALEXANDER, JOHN, a dissenting minister, was born in Ireland in 1736. He received his education at Daventry, after which he became pastor of a congregation at Longdon, near Birmingham, where he died suddenly in 1765. After his death was printed a work by him, entitled 'A Paraphrase on the 15th Chapter of the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians, &c.' He also wrote some papers on a work called 'The Library.'

ALEXANDER, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, was born about 1703, elected bishop of Dunkeld 1743, and died 1776. He was greatly revered by his countrymen.

ALEXANDER, NATALIS, OR NOEL, a Dominican, one of the most learned and laborious divines of the seventeenth century, was born at Rouen 1639, and died at Paris 31 Aug., 1724. His principal work is an ecclesiastical history in Latin, extending to 24 vols. in 8vo.

ALEXANDER, NICHOLAS, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, born 1654, died 1728. He was author of 'Physic and Surgery for the Poor,' and 'The Botanical Dictionary.'

ALEXANDER, SAMUEL, a banker, of Needham Market, Suffolk, and an influential member of the Society of Friends, died 1824. He wrote 'An Address to the Members of the Two Monthly Meetings Constituting the Quarterly Meeting of Friends of the County of Suffolk.' Ipswich, 12mo., 1812; and 'Brief Remarks on the Discipline amongst Friends, particularly as it relates to Tithes, and those that pay them.' York, 12mo., 1818.

ALEXANDER, SOLOMON, a Jew, was born in the grand duchy of Posen 1799. Being persuaded to conform to the Protestant religion, he came to London, and was appointed Hebrew professor at King's College. He was the first holder of the Protestant bishopric of Jerusalem, erected in 1841, under the protection of Great Britain and Prussia. Died 23 Nov., 1845.

ALEXANDER, THOMAS, earl of Selkirk. See SELKIRK.

ALEXANDER, WILLIAM, an artist, was born at Maidstone 1767. In 1792 he was appointed draughtsman to the embassy to China, and the drawings which accompany Sir George Staunton's account of that expedition were almost exclusively from his pencil. He was appointed in 1802 professor of drawing at the military college at Great Marlow, which office he resigned 1808, on being appointed assistant-keeper of the antiquities in the British Museum. He died 23 July, 1816. Besides his works as a draughtsman, he executed several engravings.

ALEXANDER, WILLIAM, Viscount Stirling. See STIRLING.

ALEXANDRINI DE NEUSTAIN, JULIUS, a medical writer, was a native of Trent, and physician to Maximilian II. Born 1506; died 1590.

ALEXIS, a Greek comic poet, uncle of Menander, lived in the time of Alexander the Great, and wrote for the stage 245 pieces, of which only a few fragments are extant.

ALEXIS, COMNENUS, emperor of Constantinople, more remarkable for his stratagems than for his noble actions, usurped the throne of Nicephorus Botaniates 1081. He gained several victories over the Turks, Robert Guiscard, and the Scythians; entered into a treaty with the Crusaders, who accused him of having broken it, and defeated him at the battle of Epidamnus 1097. He made peace with them, and died 1118.

ALEXIS, DUCAS, surnamed Murzuphlus, from the thickness of his eyebrows, ascended the throne of Constantinople by deposing Alexius Angelus, whom he caused to be strangled. The Crusaders, who had just established Alexius Angelus, declared war against the usurper, and took possession of Constantinople. Theodore Lascaris was elected emperor by the Greeks, and reigned over some provinces of Asia. Baldwin, earl of Flanders, being elected emperor of Constantinople by the Crusaders, condemned Alexius, whose eyes were put out, after which he was thrown from the top of a lofty column 1204, in the second year of his usurpation.

ALEXIS, MICHAELOWITZ, czar of Russia, succeeded his father Michael 1645; took Smolensk, and a considerable part of the Ukraine. Died 1676.

ALEXIS, PETROWITZ, son of the Czar Peter the Great, was born 1695. He was much opposed to the reforms introduced by his father, who, accordingly, disinherited him. He afterwards retired to Naples, but returning to Russia at the summons of his father, was condemned to death, and died in dreadful convulsions the next day, A.D. 1718.

ALEXIS DEL ARCO, a Spanish painter, born 1625; died 1700.

ALEXIUS, OR ALEXIS, ST., a native of Rome, flourished in the reign of the Emperor Honorius, Innocent I. being bishop of Rome. He is honoured in the calendars of the Latins; Greeks; Syrians, Moronites, and Armenians. His festival occurs on July 17.

ALEYN, CHARLES, a poet, was educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, and afterwards became a schoolmaster in London, where he died about 1643. He is author of two poems published together, 1631 and again 1633, entitled 'The Battles of Crecsey and Poictiers, under the Fortunes and Valour of Edward, the Third of that Name, and his Son Edward Prince of Wales, named the Black;' and of another poem, published 1638, entitled 'The Historie of that wise and fortunate Prince Henric, of that name the Seventh, King of England; with that famed Battaile fought between the said King Henry and Richard III., named Crook-back, upon Redmore, near Bosworth.'

ALEYN, JOHN, a barrister, published a volume of common-law reports 1681.

ALFANI, HORATIO, an Italian painter, born about 1510; died 1585. He was a friend of Raffaele, and the founder of an academy at Perugia.

ALFARABI, a celebrated Arabian philosopher, died at Damascus 950. His reputation mainly rests upon an encyclopædia, the MS. of which is preserved in the Écurial, and a treatise on music.

AL-FARGAN (Ahmed-Ebn-Cothair Al-Farganensis, or Al-Fraganius), an Arabian astronomer, died 820. His 'Introduction to Astronomy' has been translated into Latin and published.

ALFARO-Y-GAMON, JUAN D', a Spanish painter and biographer, born at Cordova 1640; died 1680.

ALFES, or ALPHES, ISAAC, a famous rabbi, died 1103. The Jews set great value on his abridgement of the Talmud, entitled 'Siphra.'

ALFIERI, VITTORIO, an Italian poet, born 1749 of an ancient family at Asti in Piedmont, and educated at Turin. His progress in learning, however, gave but little promise of future eminence, and he left the academy at the age of 18, almost as ignorant as when he entered it. After this he became passionately fond of riding, and next he indulged in a humour for travelling; but though he visited many countries, he took no pains to acquire the language of any of them. He was twice in England, where he became distinguished by affairs of gallantry, and after remaining in London, on the last occasion, about seven months, he returned to Turin, when love inspired him with a taste for poetry. In 1775 he produced at the theatre of that city a tragedy called 'Cleopatra,' and a farce, entitled 'The Poets,' the latter being a burlesque of the former. The pieces were so successful that Alfieri resolved to make literature his chief pursuit. Within less than seven years he produced fourteen dramas, besides various other works in prose and verse, among which were a version of Sallust and a treatise on tyranny. He afterwards renewed his travels, and visited Paris with his wife, who was the widow of Charles Edward, the Young Pretender. [See ALBANY.] This was at the period when the Revolution was raging with all its horrors, in consequence of which Alfieri quitted France in haste, leaving behind him considerable property, which was sequestered and sold. From this time he always regarded the French people with abhorrence. At the age of 48 he began to study Greek, and succeeded in translating some works from that language. He died at Florence 1803. He wrote his own life, which has been printed in two volumes, and his posthumous works were published at Florence, with London on the title-page, in thirteen volumes, 1804. An interesting memoir of this poet may be found in 'Alfieri and Goldoni, their Lives and Adventures. By Edward Copping.' London, 8vo., 1857.

ALFORD, HENRY, was born at Curry Rivell, Somersetshire, 1782, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, of which he became fellow. He studied for the bar, to which he was called 1811, but left it in 1813, and entered the church. He was appointed rector of Ampton, Suffolk, 1826, and of Aston Sandford, Bucks, 1842. Died at Tunbridge 23 Sept., 1852. A memorial of him, consisting of extracts from his correspondence, six selected sermons, and a biographical memoir, was published 1855 by his eldest son, Dr. Henry Alford, dean of Canterbury.

ALFORD, MICHAEL, a Jesuit, born in London in or about 1587. He entered the novitiate at Louvain 1607, and two years afterwards made the simple vows. In due course he took holy orders, and was sent on the English mission. Immediately on his arrival in this country he was apprehended, but regained his liberty in a short time through the mediation of Henrietta Maria, consort of King Charles I. The county of Leicester was the scene of his missionary labours. His leisure hours were devoted to the study of ecclesiastical history. In 1652 he left England, intending to complete and methodize his 'Annals' abroad, but falling sick at St. Omer, he died there 11 Aug., 1652. His works are 'The Admirable Life of St. Winefride,' 1655; 'Britannia Illustrata, sive Lucii, Helenæ, Constantini Patriæ et Fides,' 1641, an extremely rare work; and 'Annales Ecclesiastici et Civiles Britannorum, Saxonum, et Anglorum,' Liege, 4 vols. fol., 1663. Bishop Fleetwood has pronounced this to be a very valuable treasury of the ecclesiastical history of our nation, and Serenus Cressy, the Benedictine, acknowledges his many obligations to the profound researches of Father Alford.

ALFRED, king of Northumberland, was an illegitimate son of Oswin. He succeeded his brother Alfred 685, and died 705.

ALFRED the Great, the glory of our Saxon monarchs, was the youngest son of Ethelwolf, king of the West Saxons, and was born at Wantanage (supposed to be Wantage in Berkshire) A.D. 849. Ethelwolf, being a man of great piety, sent Alfred to Rome when about five years of age, to receive confirmation at the hands of Pope Leo X. His three elder brothers, Ethelbald, Ethelbert, and Ethelred, having regularly succeeded to the throne, and died after short reigns, Alfred assumed the sovereignty, and was crowned at Winchester 871. He was immediately placed under the necessity of fighting for his crown, as the Danes had poured innumerable multitudes into the island, and in the year of Alfred's accession eight battles were fought between them and the Saxons. The strife was continued with varying success, but at length the Danes so far gained the superiority that Alfred deemed it prudent to assume a disguise, and to keep the place of his retreat unknown to all except a few of his tried and faithful followers. His chief abode was in the isle of Athelney, where a remarkable monument of his misfortune has since been found in a beautifully enamelled jewel bearing his name, and now preserved in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford. This spot was the scene of the interesting legend so often repeated by modern writers. The king, according to the oldest document in which the legend is noticed, 'then went lurking through hedges and ways, through woods and fields, so that he through God's guidance arrived safe at Athelney, and begged shelter in the house of a certain swain, and even diligently served him and his evil wife. It happened one day that this swain's wife heated her oven, and the king sat thereby warming himself by the fire, the swain not knowing that he was the king. Then was the evil woman suddenly stirred up, and said to the king, in angry mood, "Turn thou the loaves that they burn not; for I see daily that thou art a great eater." He was quickly obedient to the evil woman, because he needs must.' When the king had been about a year in this retreat, being informed that some of his subjects under the brave Odo, duke of Devonshire, had routed a great army of the Danes, he issued letters giving notice where he was, and inviting his nobility to come and consult with him. Before they came to a final determination, Alfred, disguised as an itinerant harper, strolled into the enemy's camp, where he was admitted without suspicion, not only to the tents of the common soldiers, but even into those of the chief Danish commanders. Having retired again to Athelney, he summoned his followers to meet him in arms, and falling upon the Danes at Eddington, forced them to surrender at discretion. Alfred, however, treated them as a merciful prince, giving to such of them as would embrace Christianity the kingdom of the East Angles, on the condition that they should change the rest of their countrymen to quit the land. Many of the Danes were baptized, kept their estates, and quietly settled in the country assigned to them. Other swarms of their countrymen, however, came into the country, and gave Alfred much trouble. At last he took twenty Danish piratical vessels, and having tried the prisoners at Winchester, condemned them all to death. This well-timed severity, coupled with the excellent posture of defence everywhere established, restored tranquillity in England for the three remaining years of Alfred's reign, which he chiefly employed in establishing and regulating his government for the security of himself and his successors, and the ease and benefit of all his subjects. Died 28 Oct., 901. The title of the Great was never more deservedly given than to Alfred, who had in his character a happy mixture of all that could dignify or adorn a prince. Having rescued his country from slavery, he enacted excellent laws, built a fleet, restored learning, and laid the foundation of the English constitution. It was a misfortune which the king frequently lamented, that Saxon literature contained no books of science. To supply the deficiency, he himself undertook the task. Of his translations two were historical and two didactic; the first were Bede's 'Ecclesiastical History,' and Orosius's 'Eptome.' Of the others one was meant for general reading, 'The Consolation of Philosophy,' by Boetius, a treatise deservedly held in high estimation at that period, and the second was destined for the instruction of the clergy, the 'Pastoral of Gregory the Great,' a work recommended both by its own excellence and the reputation of its author. Of this he sent a copy to every bishop in his dominions, with a request that it might be preserved in the cathedral for the use of the diocesan clergy.

ALFRED.

ALFRED ANGLICUS, an English ecclesiastic, philosopher, and physician, who flourished in the latter part of the thirteenth century.

ALFRED, a Benedictine monk of Malmesbury, afterwards bishop of Exeter, flourished in the tenth century, and was one of the most learned men of his time. He wrote a treatise, 'De Naturis Rerum,' 'The Life of Adelmus,' and a history of his own abbey.

ALFRED, an Anglo-Saxon prince, was son of King Ethelred II. and brother of Edward the Confessor. By order of King Harold his eyes were torn out, and he died a few days afterwards. The date of the occurrence is not precisely known. It probably took place before 1040.

ALFRED, of BEVERLEY, an English historian, wrote his 'Annals,' published by Hearne, between 1148 and 1150.

ALGARDI, ALEXANDER, a sculptor and architect, born at Bologna 1593; died at Rome 1654.

ALGAROTTI, FRANCIS, born at Venice 1712, gained the esteem of the learned by his taste for the fine arts, erudition, and the belles lettres. The king of Prussia honoured him with his favour. Died at Pisa 1764. He wrote an explanation of the Newtonian system; essays on architecture, painting, music, &c. The most complete edition of his works appeared at Venice 1771-94 in 17 vols. 8vo.

ALGER, a pious and learned priest, born at Liege. He retired to Clugny, and died about 1131. He wrote an excellent treatise on 'The Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour.' The perusal of this, it is said, convinced Erasmus of the truth of the doctrine of the Real Presence.

ALGHISI, FRANCIS, a musical composer, born at Brescia 1666; died 1733.

ALI, son-in-law of Mahomet, and husband of Fatima. He should have been caliph after Mahomet, but Omar and Othman opposing him, he retired into Arabia, where he composed a collection of the doctrines of Mahomet, in which he allowed several things which were condemned by Abubeker. This indulgence gained him many proselytes. After the death of Othman he was declared caliph by the Egyptians, and by the people of Mecca and Medina. He gained a great victory near Bassora, against a party who opposed him, but was afterwards assassinated 661. His motto was, 'I adore the Lord my God with a sincere heart.' The Persians follow his doctrine, and abhor Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, who are followed by the Turks.

ALI-BEG, first dragoman or interpreter to Mahomet IV., was born in Poland, and died at Constantinople 1675. His greatest work is on the liturgy of the Turks. He understood English, and translated the Church of England catechism and all the Bible into the Turkish language.

ALI-BEY, pasha of Egypt, born 1728; died 1773. He was a native of Circassia, and brought up as a slave till in his fourteenth year, when he was carried away by robbers to Cairo. He was incorporated with the Mamelukes, who raised him to the highest honours. When disasters overtook the Porte in the struggle with Catherine II., he ventured to declare himself independent, but did not live to carry out the ambitious designs which it was supposed he entertained.

he assumed the title of bey of Tepelin. Subsequently he intrigued with the Porte. He distinguished himself as a warrior, but was guilty of many acts of the grossest cruelty. He contrived to extend his dominions until, in the latter part of his life, they comprised all Epirus, one half of Albania Proper, and the whole of Western Greece, from the lake of Ochrida on the north to the gulf of Lepanto on the south, and from Mount Pindus to the Adriatic. In 1820 the sultan declared against Ali-Pacha, who was murdered in Feb., 1822, his head being cut off and sent to Constantinople.

ALISON, ARCHIBALD, born at Edinburgh 1757. He was educated at Glasgow and Oxford; and having taken orders became perpetual curate of Kenley, Shropshire, and prebend of Salisbury. He retired to his native country 1800, and died 1839. Mr. Alison's 'Essays on the Nature and Principles of Taste,' entitle him to an honourable place among British authors.

ALLAINVAL, LEONOR-JEAN-CHRIST SOULAS, Abbe d', a French dramatic writer, died 1753.

ALLAM, ANDREW, an English antiquary, was born in Oxfordshire 1655, and educated at St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford, where he continued to reside until his death on 17 June, 1685. A list of his works is given by Wood in the 'Athenæ Oxonienses,' to which Allam contributed several memoirs.

ALLAN, DAVID, a painter, born at Alloa, Stirlingshire, 1744; died 6 Aug., 1796. He was completely at home in the delineation of grave humour and open drollery; and Burns, some of whose subjects he illustrated, said that himself and Mr. Allan were the only genuine and real painters of Scottish costume in the world.

ALLAN, GEORGE, an English antiquary, was an attorney at Darlington. He was elected F.S.A. 1774, and died July, 1800. Mr. Allan printed at his own house collections relating to Sherburn Hospital 1773; collections relating to Greatham and St. Edmund's Hospital at Gateshead; 'A Sketch of the Life and Character of Bishop Trevor,' 'The Life of St. Cuthbert.' He was well acquainted with the antiquities of Durham, and greatly assisted Hutchinson in compiling the history of that county.

ALLAN, PETER, an ingenious excavator, born in 1708, who conceived and carried out the strange project of founding a colony at Marsden, a wild, rocky bay below the mouth of the Tyne, five miles from Sunderland and three from South Shields. He made a series of most remarkable excavations in the solid rock, and in this romantic grotto resided with his family and friends. After twenty-two years' possession of the caverns, the proprietor of the adjoining lands served him with a process of ejectment, and a tedious lawsuit followed. Judgment was given in Peter's favour, but he had to pay the costs. The anxieties of the lawsuit broke his heart, and he never recovered his health or spirits. He died 31 Aug., 1849, and was buried in Whitburn churchyard, the following inscription being placed over his grave, 'The Lord is my rock and my salvation.'

ALLAN, PETER JOHN, born at York, 1825, died at Fredericton, New Brunswick, 1848. His poetical remains were published at London, 1853, under the editorship of the Rev. Henry Christmas.

ALLAN, ROBERT, a surgeon and philologist, born at Edinburgh 1778; died 1826. He published 'Number First of a Dictionary of the Ancient Language of Scotland, with the Etymons, containing the Cognate Words in the Anglo-Saxon, Gothic, Danish, Swedish, Icelandic, Belgic, Irish, British, Latin, and French Languages; and a treatise on the operation of lithotomy.

ALLAN, ROBERT, a Scotch poet, was born 1774, being the son of a respectable flax-dresser in the village of Kibbarhan, Renfrewshire. He followed the occupation of a muslin-weaver in his native place, and composed many of his best verses at the loom. Allan was an extensive contributor to the 'Scottish Minstrel,' published by R. A. Smith, his songs being set to music by the editor. In 1820 a number of his songs appeared in the 'Harp of Renfrewshire.' His only separate volume was published 1836, under the editorial supervision of Robert Burns Hardy. In his 67th year Allan emigrated to the United States, but survived the passage only six days, dying at New York June 1, 1841. Several of his best songs will be found in the second volume of Dr. Charles Rogers's 'Modern Scottish Minstrel.'

ALLAN, SIR WILLIAM, a painter, was born at Edinburgh in or about 1783, and bred a coach-painter. Afterwards he was educated at the Trustees' Academy at Edinburgh, and in 1805 exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy. In the same year he visited St. Petersburg. He was made A.R.A. 1835; chosen to fill the chair of the Royal Scottish Academy, 1837; succeeded Wilkie as limner to the queen for Scotland, 1841; was created a knight 1842; and died at Edinburgh 23 Feb., 1850. He will be remembered in the history of Scottish art by the impulse which he gave to historical composition, while his name will also be endeared to the admirers of Sir Walter Scott by the partiality which the great novelist evinced on all occasions for his friend 'Willie Allan.'

ALLARD, GUY, a French writer, who is principally known by his writings relating to the history and genealogy of Dauphine. He is also the author of a romance entitled 'The Amorous History of Prince Zizime.' Died 1716.

ALLARD, JEAN-FRANÇOIS, generalissimo of the forces of the king of Lahore, was born in France 1785, and died 1840.

ALLARDICE, ROBERT BARCLAY, a noted pedestrian, was eldest son of Robert Barclay, M.P. for Kincardineshire, and was born at Ury, in that county, 1779. He was educated at Richmond, Brixton Causeway, and Cambridge. Subsequently he entered the army, and attained to the rank of captain. After the death of his mother in 1833, he took steps, which proved unavailing, to procure the earldom of Airth. About this time, also, he appears to have assumed the name of Allardice. He died at his native village 8 May, 1854. Captain Barclay was much distinguished for his great bodily strength, and at an early age evinced a strong predilection for many sports. As a pedestrian he gained high renown. He will be chiefly remembered in connection with the feat—until then without precedent—of walking 1000 miles in 1000 successive hours. Believing that he could easily accomplish it, he did not go into regular training, although previous attempts had failed, the pedestrians giving in at the end of fifteen, twenty-two, or thirty days from over-fatigue. Barclay commenced his task at Newmarket on 1 June, 1809, at midnight, and finished it forty-two days afterwards, on the 12th of July, about three o'clock, amidst thousands of spectators. The pain he sus-fired during the undertaking was excessive; but, although he was so stiff that he had to be lifted after resting, his legs never swelled, and his appetite remained good during the whole period. About 2,000,000 depended on the match; but the most remarkable circumstance attending it was, that after a sleep of about seventeen hours, when he finished the journey, he was in perfect health and vigour. Five days later he set off for Walden.

ALLATIUS, or ALLAZZI, LEO, born 1586, in the city of Chio. He went to Italy in his infancy, was appointed librarian to Cardinal Barberini, and afterwards keeper of the Vatican Library, under Alexander VII. He lived unmarried, but did not take orders, and died 1609, at Rome, aged 83. Most of his works are upon the reunion of the Greek church.

ALLEGRAIN, CHRISTOPHER GABRIEL, a French pastor, born 1710; died 1795.

ALLEGRI. See CORREGGIO.

ALLEGRI, ALEXANDER, a Florentine poet, who flourished at the end of the sixteenth century.

ALLEIN, RICHARD, was born at Ditcheat, Somersetshire, of which parish his father was rector. In 1627, being then sixteen years old, he became a chorister of St. Alban Hall, Oxford, but afterwards migrated to New Inn. At length, taking orders, he assisted his father, and became a frequent preacher in his own county. In March, 1641, he became rector of Batcombe in the same county. Here, to use Wood's words, he became a preacher-up of sedition and a zealous covenanter. On the Restoration he was ejected for nonconformity. Eventually he settled at Fromwood. Died 22 Dec., 1681. His principal work is 'Vindiciae Pietatis; or, a Vindication of Godliness in the greatest Strictness and Spirituality of it, from the Imputations of Folly and Fancy: on Ephes. v. 15, and on John i. 47.' Lond., 8vo., 1664, 1669.

ALLEIN, WILLIAM, son of Richard Allein, the author of 'Vindiciae Pietatis,' was born in or about 1624, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1653 he became minister of Blandford, Dorsetshire, but was ejected for nonconformity at the Restoration. He died at Yeovil, Somersetshire, in October, 1677. He wrote two books on the millennium, and 'Six Discourses on the Unspeakable Riches of Christ.'

ALLEINE, JOSEPH, was born at Devizes, 1633, and educated at Oxford. From the university he went to Taunton, where he became very popular as a preacher. In 1663 he was indicted at the assizes for having convened a riotous and seditious assembly, and was fined 100 marks. This he could not or would not pay, and the consequence was that he remained in prison for a year. He was again apprehended in 1665, and committed to Leicester gaol. His health was greatly injured by the confinement, and he died 1668, being only thirty-five years of age. His celebrated 'Alarm to the Unconverted,' has passed through numberless editions, and still retains its popularity both in this country and the United States. It is sometimes printed under the title of 'The Sure Guide to Heaven.'

ALLEINE, JOSEPH, a writing-master of London, died 1703, aged about seventy-seven. He wrote 'Epigrams Divine and Moral, for the Exercises of Youth that Learn to Write,' 1706; 'Introduction to Book-keeping; The Young Accountant's Assistant,' &c.

ALLEN, ALEXANDER, son of John Allen, the author of 'Modern Judaism,' was born at Hackney 1814, educated at the university of London, made doctor of philosophy at Leipzig, and died 6 Nov., 1842. He is author of several elementary works on the study of Latin and Greek.

ALLEN, ANTHONY, an English lawyer and antiquary, was born at Great Hadham, Hertfordshire, and educated at Eton, whence he proceeded to King's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1707; M.A. 1711). He was afterwards called to the bar, and by the influence of Speaker Onslow was appointed a master in chancery. As a lawyer his reputation was inconsiderable, but he was esteemed a good classical scholar and a man of wit and convivial habits. Ultimately he became an alderman of the corporation of Guildford and a useful magistrate in the neighbourhood. Died 11 April, 1754. He compiled a biographical account of the members of Eton College, which by his will he ordered to be deposited in the libraries of Eton College and King's College, Cambridge, a third copy being bequeathed to Mr. Onslow. He also made collections for an English dictionary of obsolete words and of words which have changed their meaning; but what became of this MS. is not known.

ALLEN, REV. BENNET, author of 'A Poem inscribed to his Britannic Majesty,' 1761, for some years connected with the 'Morning Post.' In 1782, owing to an article which appeared in that newspaper reflecting on the character of Mr. Daniel Dulany, Mr. Allen received a challenge from his brother, Mr. Lloyd Dulany, a gentleman possessed of large property in Maryland. The duel was fought in Hyde Park 18 June, 1782, when Mr. Dulany received a wound which occasioned his death on the 21st of that month. On the 5th of July Mr. Allen surrendered himself at the Old Bailey, and was found guilty of manslaughter.

ALLEN, EDMUND, an English divine, was educated at Cambridge, and nominated to the see of Rochester 1559, but died before consecration. Buried 30 Aug., 1559. He wrote six theological works.

ALLEN, ETHAN, a native of Connecticut, settled in Vermont, and, at the head of his 'Mountain Boys,' frequently came into collision with the New Yorkers in consequence of a dispute about boundaries. After the battle of Lexington he took the forts of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Subsequently, however, he was captured by the British troops, and lay in prison until the conclusion of peace, when he retired to his farming pursuits. Died 13 Feb., 1789. Of his works, that entitled 'Reason the only Oracle of Man, or a Complete System of Natural Religion,' 1784, is remarkable as being the first book published in America in direct opposition to Christianity.

ALLEN, HANNAH, daughter of Mr. John Archer of Snelston, Derbyshire, was born about 1638, and became the wife first of Hannibal Allen, a merchant, and next of a person named Hatt. In 1683 was published a rhapsodical 'Narrative of God's Gracious Dealings with that Choice Christian, Mrs. Hannah Alien (afterwards married to Mr. Hatt), reciting the Great Advantages the Devil made of her Deep Melancholy, and the Triumphant Victories, Rich and Sovereign Graces, God gave her over all his Stratagems and Deceits.'

ALLEN, ISAAC NICHOLSON, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford (B.A. 1835), and was appointed chaplain to General Nott's force at Candahar, in which capacity he accompanied the army in its triumphant march to Cabool and so to Ferizepore. Died at Poona 23 April, 1855. He published a 'Diary of a March through Sindh and Afghanistan, with the Troops under the Command of General Sir William Nott, K.C.B., &c.; and Sermons delivered on Various Occasions during the Campaign of 1842.' London, 12mo., 1843.

ALLEN, JAMES, was born 1733, and educated at Cambridge for the Church of England, but became a dissenting minister without any fixed charge. Died 1804. He is author of 'The Danger of Philosophy to the Faith and Order of the Churches of Christ: an Essay,' 2nd edit. Beverley, 8vo., 1852.

ALLEN, JOHN, an Irish prelate, was educated at Cambridge. Archbishop Warham sent him to Rome, where he remained nine years. On his return Cardinal Wolsey appointed him one of his chaplains and judge of his legatine court. In 1528-9 he was promoted to the archbishopric of Dublin and chancellorship of Ireland. He was murdered at Artane near Clontarf 28 July, 1534, his brains being beaten out with a club in the presence of the earl of Kildare.

ALLEN, JOHN, a Puritan divine, born, 1596, and probably educated at Cambridge. In consequence of the persecution of the Puritans in this country, he went to New England about 1637, and became pastor of the church at Dedham, where he died 26 Aug., 1671. He is author of 'A Defence of the Nine Positions;' 'A Discourse in Defence of the Synod held at Boston in the year 1662;' and two sermons published by his congregation after his death. He also, with the assistance of Thomas Shepard, wrote upon 'Church Reformation.'

ALLEN, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., an English physician, died 16 Sept., 1741. He wrote several professional works, the most valuable of which is 'Synopsis Universæ Medicæ Practicæ,' first published at London 1719.

ALLEN, JOHN, a dissenting minister, who in 1764 was appointed pastor of the Baptist church in Petticoat Lane, London. On his settlement in the metropolis, he set up a linendraper's shop, but in this pursuit he failed. After this he was tried at the Old Bailey for forgery, and acquitted, and subsequently becoming involved in debt he spent some time in the King's Bench prison. In May, 1767, the church in Petticoat Lane withdrew from him on account of his conduct in the world. Our worthy thereupon went to Newcastle, but his conduct there was so bad that his congregation soon got rid of him. He then crossed the Atlantic, and preached to a large congregation in America until his death, the date of which event is not recorded. He wrote 'The Royal Spiritual Magazine,' 3 vols., 1752; 'A Chain of Truths,' 1764; 'The Beauties of Truth Vindicated,' 1765; 'The Christian Pilgrim,' 1765; notes on the Bible in 2 vols. folio; and other works, the titles of which are far too long for transcription in these columns.

ALLEN, JOHN, a bookseller at Hereford, compiled 'Bibliotheca Herefordensis; or, a Descriptive Catalogue of Books, Pamphlets, Maps, Prints, &c., relating to the County of Hereford.' Died 1831.

ALLEN, JOHN, a learned dissenting layman, born at Truro, Cornwall, 1771. For thirty years he kept a private academy at Hackney, near London, where he died 17 June, 1839. His principal work is 'Modern Judaism; or, a Brief Account of the Opinions, Traditions, Rites, and Ceremonies of the Jews in Modern Times.'

ALLEN, JOHN, a political and historical writer, born at Redford, near Edinburgh, 1770. He studied medicine, and was created M.D. at Edinburgh 1791. In the following year he became a zealous member of an association formed for the purpose of promoting parliamentary reform. At the beginning of the present century he removed to London, and for upwards of forty years was an inmate of Holland House. For some years he was master of Dulwich College. Died 3 April, 1843. Among his works are 'An Inquiry into the Rise and Growth of the Royal Prerogative in England;' 'A Vindication of the Independence of Scotland;' and articles in the 'Edinburgh Review.'

ALLEN, JOSEPH, an English portrait painter, born at Birmingham about 1770; died at Erdington, Warwickshire, 19 Nov., 1830.

ALLEN, JOSEPH W., an English painter, was born in Lambeth, and educated at St. Paul's School. After being for some time usher in a school at Taunton, he returned to London, and devoted himself to the pursuit of art. As a painter of pastoral landscape he acquired a considerable reputation. Died at Hammersmith 26 Aug., 1852. Mr. Allen took an active part in establishing the Society of British Artists.

ALLEN, RALPH, obtained in 1720 a grant of the farm of all bye-way or cross-road letters throughout England and Wales. During the forty-two years that he enjoyed this privilege he realized a large fortune. He was intimate with several eminent men of letters, particularly Pope and Warburton, the latter of whom married his niece, and so came eventually into possession of Allen's splendid mansion at Prior Park, near Bath. Died 29 June, 1764.

ALLEN, RICHARD, who was born in or near Abingdon, Berkshire, and educated at Oxford, published in 1648 'An Antidote against Heresy; or, a Preservative for Protestants against the Poison of Papists, Anabaptists, &c.'

ALLEN, RICHARD, a Baptist minister in London, died Feb. 1717. He wrote 'Biographia Ecclesiastica, or the Lives of the most eminent Fathers of the Christian Church, who flourished in the first Four Centuries, and part of the Fifth,' 2 vols. 8vo.; and 'An Essay to Prove Singing of Psalms with conjoined Voices a Christian Duty,' 1666.

ALLEN, SAMUEL JAMES, was born in London 1798, educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. He became vicar of Easingwold, Yorkshire, and died 29 April, 1856. Mr. Allen was author of 'Lectures in Defence of the Church of England as a National and Spiritual Institution,' and of some published sermons.

ALLEN, THOMAS, mathematician, born at Uttoxeter 1542; died 30 Sept., 1632. Going to Oxford he became fellow of Trinity College, but afterwards migrated to Gloucester Hall, where he lived a close student many years, and at length became an eminent antiquary, philosopher, and mathematician. He composed in Latin an exposition of the 2nd and 3rd books of Ptolemy, 'On the Judgment of the Stars.' Arthony a Wood gives an account of his very copious and valuable collection of MSS. in various branches of science, and of the books which he composed but never printed. Some of them are preserved in the Bodleian Library.

ALLEN.

ALLEN, THOMAS, divine; educated at Worcester School and Merton College, Oxford. He subsequently became a fellow of Eton, and died in Oct., 1638. He wrote 'Observations in libellum Chrysostrami in Basiam.' Another divine of the same name was a minister at Norwich, and wrote 'The Glory of Christ,' published in 1683, after the decease of the author.

ALLEN, SIR THOMAS, an English admiral, born at Lowestoft in or about 1614. In 1662 he was appointed commodore and commander-in-chief of all the vessels in the Downs, and in 1664 commodore and commander-in-chief of the fleet in the Mediterranean. In the latter capacity he concluded a peace with Algiers. Shortly afterwards, war having been proclaimed against the Dutch, Allen fell in with the Dutch fleet of from thirty to forty merchantmen homeward bound, laden, from Smyrna, with a convoy of four men-of-war. With only eight ships he immediately attacked this superior force, and gained a complete victory. He returned to England in time to take a part in the victory off Harwich, 3 June, 1663, by the English fleet under the command of the duke of York. Afterwards he rendered timely assistance to Albemarle at the conclusion of his famous engagement with the Dutch in the Downs. In 1666 he was created an elder brother of the Trinity House, and in 1666 was sent in command of a squadron to the Mediterranean for the purpose of again bringing the Algerians to terms. In the following year he went there again to enforce the observance of a treaty which had been broken. After his return home he was appointed controller of the navy, and on 7 Feb., 1673, was created a baronet. In 1678, on the expectation of a war with France, he was appointed commander-in-chief of the fleet in the narrow seas, but no war took place, and he retired to Somerleyton, Suffolk, where he resided until his death. He was buried in Somerleyton Church, where a marble bust of him may still be seen, and under it the following inscription:—'Near this place lies interr'd Sir Thomas Allen, Bart., whose unshaken fidelity to his Sovereign Charles 2<sup>d</sup> and was rewarded with many marks of his royal favour, having had the honour of serving him as Admiral of his fleets in the British and Mediterranean Seas, Controller of the Navy, Capt. of Sandgate Castle, and Master of the Trinity House. He died in 1686, in y<sup>e</sup> 73<sup>r</sup>d year of his age.' According to the entry in the parish register, however, he was buried 5 Oct., 1685 (MS. Add. 1406, 268 b. 277; Biog. Dict. Soc. D. U. K.)

ALLEN, THOMAS, was born at Oxford about 1662, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. In 1715 he obtained the rectory of Kettering, Northamptonshire, and died while reading prayers in his church 31 May, 1755. His chief work is entitled 'The Practice of a Holy Life; or, the Christian's Daily Exercise in Meditations, Prayers, and Rules of Holy Living. Fitted to the Capacity of the Meanest Devout Reader.'

ALLEN, THOMAS, a topographical writer, draughtsman, and engineer, born about 1803, died in London of cholera 20 July, 1833. His works are, 'History and Antiquities of the Parish of Lambeth,' 'History and Antiquities of London, Westminster, Southwark, and Parts Adjacent,' 4 vols.; 'New and Complete History of the County of York,' 6 vols. (1823-32); 'History of the Counties of Surrey and Part of Sussex'; and 'History of the County of Lincoln.'

ALLESTRY.

ALLEN, ALAN, or ALLEYN, WILLIAM, an English cardinal, born in Lancashire 1532, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, of which he was elected a fellow. He subsequently became principal of St. Mary's Hall and canon of York; but soon after the accession of Queen Elizabeth he left his country and retired to Louvain, as did several other eminent divines who were attached to the Catholic faith. After a time, however, he ventured to return to England, where he spent three years in secretly disseminating the doctrines of his church and administering the sacraments to its persecuted adherents. Being forced once more to quit the country, he proceeded to Mechlin, where he was appointed divinity reader. Afterwards he became professor of divinity at Douay, where he established the famous English college for the reception of all such learned English Catholics as had fled their country for religion's sake. He also established seminaries at Rheims, Rome, and in Spain, to the end that English youths might be trained up for the purpose of maintaining the Catholic religion in this country. For these great and indefatigable labours Pope Sixtus V. created him a cardinal 1587, and two years afterwards bestowed upon him the archbishopric of Mechlin. Dying 6 Oct., 1594, he was buried in the chapel of the English College at Rome. In this country he was intensely hated, in consequence of his having exhorted the people of England to renounce their allegiance to Elizabeth and join the Spanish forces. Cardinal Allen published a number of works in defence of the Church of Rome.

ALLEN, WILLIAM, F.R.S., died at Lindfield, Sussex, 30 Dec., 1843, æt. 74. He was long distinguished by his great chemical attainments, having been an intimate friend of Sir Humphry Davy. In conjunction with Mr. Pepys, he made a celebrated series of experiments on the composition of the atmosphere and its influence upon animal life. He took an active part in the formation of the Pharmaceutical Society, of which he was president. For many years he was lecturer on chemistry and natural philosophy at Guy's Hospital and at the Royal Institution. His life, with selections from his correspondence, was published in 1846-7, 3 vols. 8vo.; and a memoir of him by James Sherman appeared in 1851.

ALLENSON, JOHN, a Puritan divine, was born at Durham and educated at Cambridge (B.A. 1579-80; M.A. 1583; B.D. 1590). He edited several works of the famous Dr. Wm. Whitaker, whose pupil he had been. He was alive in 1609, but when he died is not recorded.

ALLERSTAIN, AUGUSTUS, a German Jesuit, and missionary to China. On account of his great attainments as a mathematician and astronomer, he was much esteemed at the court of Peking. The exact date of his death is unknown, but it occurred before 1777.

ALLESTREE, CHARLES, was born at Derby, in or about 1652, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1677). Taking orders, he became vicar, first of Cassington, Derbyshire, and afterwards of Daventry, Northamptonshire. Died 27 March, 1707. He published several sermons, and translated from Latin into English the life of Eumenes, among the 'Lives of Illustrious Men,' by Cornelius Nepos, Oxford, 1684.

ALLESTRY, JACOB, an English poet, nephew of Dr. Richard Allestry. He was born in or about

ALLBISTRY.

1653, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. Died 15 Oct., 1680. Several of his pieces may be found in a small collection entitled 'Examen Poeticum,' 1693.

ALLBISTRY, RICHARD, D.D., an English divine, born at Uppington, Shropshire, 1619. He was educated in the Grammar School at Coventry, under Dr. Philemon Holland, and afterwards at Christ Church, Oxford, under Richard Busby. His parts, which were very extraordinary, were improved by a no less extraordinary industry. He was seen, when he bore arms for Charles I., to carry his musket in one hand and his book in the other. He was very active in the service of Charles II. before his restoration, and was employed more than once by the Royalists in transacting business with that prince during his exile. In 1660 he was made a canon of Christ Church, and chaplain in ordinary to the king, being appointed soon afterwards regius professor of divinity. He sat in the chair for seventeen years, and acquitted himself in it with honour. In 1665 he was appointed provost of Eton College, where he raised the school, which he found in a low condition, to an uncommon pitch of reputation. The west side of the outward quadrangle of the college was built at his expense. His eagerness for study, and his intention of mind when he was employed in it, was so great that it impaired his constitution and hastened his death, which occurred 27 Jan., 1680-1. Forty of his sermons, with his life prefixed, were published by Bishop Fell.

ALLEY, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born at Chipping Wycombe, Bucks, and educated at Eton, Cambridge, and Oxford. In Mary's reign he lived in retirement, but Queen Elizabeth appointed him divinity reader at St. Paul's, and in 1560 promoted him to the bishopric of Exeter. He died 15 April, 1570. He wrote 'The Poore Man's Librarie,' and a Hebrew grammar, and revised the translation of Deuteronomy for the Bishops' Bible.

ALLEYN, EDWARD, a famous English actor, born in London, 1566. For many years he was in partnership with Philip Henslowe, one of the principal theatrical managers of that day. They built the Fortune Theatre, in Cripplegate, near Red Cross Street, in 1600, and subsequently became patentees of the office of mastership of the king's games of bears, bulls, and dogs. Having amassed a large fortune, Alleyn retired from the stage, and in 1613 commenced the building of Dulwich College, or as he called it, the 'College of God's Gift.' The college, on which he settled an endowment of £800 a year, was for the support and maintenance of one master—who was always to be a person of the name of Alleyn, or Allen—one warden, and four fellows, three of whom were to be ecclesiastics, and the other a skilful organist; also six poor men, the like number of women, and twelve boys to be educated in good literature. Alleyn himself became the first master of the college, and having voluntarily dispossessed himself of the greater part of his fortune, he resided there, on a footing of equality with the other inmates, until his death, which occurred 25 Nov., 1626. In consequence of Alleyn having been connected with the stage at the time when Shakespeare shed a lustre upon it, his life has been minutely investigated. Every one interested in the early-history of the British drama ought to consult Mr. John Payne Collier's 'Memoirs of Edward Alleyn, ALLIBOND, JOHN, D.D., a native of Buckinghamshire, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and died at Bradwell, Gloucestershire, of which place he was rector, 1658. He was an excellent Latin poet, and published 'Rustica Academia Oxoniensis nuper reformatæ descriptio: una cum comitiis ibidem, 1648, habitis.' This is a poem in macaronic Latin, being a country clergyman's comical lament upon revisiting Oxford after the root and branch reform of 1648. It was reprinted at Oxford as late as 1834, with an English translation.

ALLIBOND, PETER, was born at Wardenton, Oxfordshire, about 1560, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. Afterwards he became rector of Cheneys, Buckinghamshire, and died 6 March, 1628-9. He translated several works on theology.

ALLIBOND, SIR RICHARD, was born in or about 1636, and at the age of sixteen was sent to the English college at Douay. On his return to England he studied the law, and was called to the bar. In 1687 James II. made him a knight and a justice of the King's Bench, but although Allibond was a competent lawyer, this appointment was very unpopular, on account of his being a member of the Roman church. He died 22 Aug., 1688, and consequently did not live to witness the misfortunes of his royal patron.

ALLIES, Jabez, F.S.A., an English antiquary, born in Worcestershire, 1787; died at Cheltenham, 29 Jan., 1856. He wrote a number of papers on antiquarian subjects, which were collected and published, in 1852, under the title of 'The Ancient British, Roman, and Saxon Antiquities and Folklore of Worcestershire.'

ALLINGHAM, JOHN TILL, an English dramatist, who appears to have been living in London in 1812. There is a memoir of him in the 'Biog. Dict. of the Soc. D.U.K.:' but it is very vague and unsatisfactory, not giving any precise date, nor the title of any of Mr. Allingham's works.

ALLIONI, CHARLES, an Italian physician and botanist, born 1725; died 1804. He was professor of botany at Turin.

ALLIX, PETER, a Protestant divine, born at Alençon, in France, 1641. He became minister of the reformed church at Rouen, and afterwards of that at Charenton; but on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes he came to England, where he met with a flattering reception, being created D.D. at Cambridge, and appointed treasurer of the church of Salisbury. He died at London, 21 Feb., 1716-7. His most esteemed works are 'Reflections on all the Books of Holy Scripture;' 'A Vindication of the Ancient Jewish Church against the Unitarians;' and 'Remarks on the Ecclesiastical History of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont.' His son, Peter Allix, D.D., became dean of Ely, and died 1758.

ALLORI, ALEXANDER, a Florentine painter, born 1533; died 1607.

ALLORI, CHRISTOPHER, son of the preceding was born at Florence, 1577; died 1619. His chief works are the pictures of Judith and St. Julian, in the Pitti Palace at Florence.

ALLOT, WILLIAM, an English Catholic divine, was educated at Cambridge, but on Queen Elizabeth's accession retired to Louvain, where he was ordained priest. After residing for some time at Cologne he returned to England, and was much esteemed by Mary queen of Scots, whom he visited in her confinement. At length, however, he was banished, with many other priests, and going to France, became canon of St. Quentin, in Picardy. He died at Spa, about 1590. His work, entitled 'Thesaurus Bibliorum,' went through several editions.

ALLSOP, CHARLES, an English geologist, died 31 Aug. 1836, aged 56. He wrote a geological history of Charnwood Forest, and also a pamphlet on the relation of the Græcedium miracle.

ALLSTON, WASHINGTON, a distinguished historical and landscape painter, was born in South Carolina, 1779, and died at Cambridge, Massachusetts, 8 July, 1843.

ALLWOOD, PHILIP, born in or about 1767, was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, and afterwards became a clergyman of the Church of England. He died at Wandsworth, Surrey, 14 March, 1838. His works are 'Literary Antiquities of Greece,' 'Twelve Lectures on the Prophecies relating to the Christian Church,' &c.

ALMAGRO, DIEGO DE, a Spanish captain, who accompanied Pizarro in the conquest of Peru. Almagro penetrated to Chili, leaving marks of his avarice and cruelty everywhere. Having taken the town of Cuzco, he placed Pizarro's brothers under arrest, and assumed the title of captain-general. Pizarro, however, marched against him and took him prisoner. He was condemned to death, and executed 1536. His son, Diego, endeavored to avenge the murder of his father, but failed in the attempt, and was executed 1542.

ALMAIN, JAMES, of Sens, a celebrated doctor of the Sorbonne, and professor of divinity at the college of Navarre, died 1515. He was chosen to write a panegyric of Louis XII. against Pope Julius II., and to defend the authority of ecclesiastical councils against Cardinal Cajetan.

AL-MAMOUN, or ABDALLAH III., seventh caliph of the Abbassides, gained many victories over the Greeks, and was yet more illustrious for his love of learning. He had the best Greek philosophers translated into Arabic, and collected a library at great expense. Died 833.

ALMEIDA, APOLLINARIUS, a Portuguese Jesuit, became a missionary in Ethiopia, from which country he was banished; but afterwards ventured to return, and was put to death in 1638.

ALMEIDA, FRANCIS, a Portuguese gentleman; the first governor of the East Indies, whither he was sent by King Emanuel, 1505. Died 1 March, 1509. His son, Laurence Almeida (died 1508), was, like his father, an enterprising commander and discoverer.

ALMEIDA, JOHN, whose real name was Mead, was born in London about 1550. Going to Brazil, he entered the Society of Jesus, and spent his life in missionary work amongst the savage tribes of that country. He died at Rio Janeiro, 12 Sept., 1632. His life, written in Portuguese by Vasconcelos, was published at Lisbon, 1638.

ALMEIDA, MANUEL, a Portuguese Jesuit, was sent ambassador to the king of Abyssinia, 1622, but when the Jesuits were expelled he was obliged to remove to Goa, where he became provincial of his order and inquisitor. Died 1646. He wrote 'A History of Upper Ethiopia,' and 'Historical Letters,' written from Abyssinia to the general of the Jesuits at Rome.

ALMEIDA, THEODORE, a Portuguese priest of the oratory, born 1722; died at Lisbon, 1803. He published a celebrated work entitled 'Recreação Filisófica,' 5 vols. 8vo., 1751, which gave a new turn to the philosophical studies of his countrymen. His works amount to forty volumes, exclusive of five vols. of translations. He was a member of the Academy of Sciences at Lisbon, and a fellow of the Royal Society of London.

ALMELOVEEN, THEODORE JANSEN VAN, a learned Dutch writer, born 1657; died at Amsterdam, 1712. He was professor of history, Greek, and physic at Harderwick, and left many curious and valuable works, the principal of which are, 'De Vitis Stephanorum;' 'Onomasticon rerum inventarum et inventa nova-antiqua;' 'Bibliotheca promissa et latens,' an account of books promised but never published; 'Amönitates Theologico-Philologicæ;' 'Plantarum Syllabus;' and 'Fasti Consulares.'

ALMICI, PETER CAMILLUS, a priest of the Oratory, born 1714 at Brescia, where he died 1779. He wrote several works on classical subjects, and a treatise on the art of autobiography.

ALMON, JOHN, a political writer, born at Liverpool about 1738; died 12 Dec., 1805. For some time he carried on the business of a bookseller in Piccadilly. Besides a number of party pamphlets, he wrote 'Anecdotes of Lord Chatham,' 3 vols. 8vo.; 'Biographical Anecdotes of Eminent Persons,' 3 vols. 8vo.; and an edition of 'Junius's Letters,' in which he attempted to prove that Hugh Boyd was the author of them.

ALOADDIN, or ALA-EDDYN, better known by the appellation of the Old Man of the Mountains, was born 1211. He was prince of the Assassins, or Assassins, whence the word assassin is derived. The residence of Aloaddin was a castle between Antioch and Damascus; and he had a number of followers who were so devoted to his will as to engage in any undertaking he chose to send them upon.

ALOYSIUS GONZAGA, St., was born in the castle of Castiglione, in the diocese of Brescia, 1568, being son of Ferdinand Gonzaga, prince of the holy empire and marquis of Castiglione. From an early age he cultivated habits of piety, and in 1585 entered the novitiate of the Society of Jesus at Rome, having previously resigned the marquise to his younger brother Ralph. He was in due time admitted to the priesthood, and died in the odour of sanctity, 21 June, 1591, being 23 years 3 months and 11 days old. He was beatified by Gregory XV. in 1621, and canonized by Benedict XIII. in 1726. He is commemorated June 21.

ALPAGO, ANDREW, an Italian physician, travelled for many years in the east, and on his return to Europe became professor of philosophy and medicine at Padua, where he died, 1555. He published an edition of Avicenna, and wrote a history of Arabian philosophers and physicians.

ALP-ARSLAN, the Brave Lion, second sultan of the dynasty of the Seljukides, and one of the bravest and most powerful monarchs of Asia, succeeded his uncle, Togrul Beg, 1063, and died 1072 at Merve in Khorasan. The following epitaph was placed upon his tomb: 'All ye who have seen the greatness of Alp-Arsian raised to the skies, come to Merve, and ye shall behold him buried in the dust.'

ALPHERY, MIKEPHER, or NICEPHORUS, a Russian prince, who, when that country was torn by civil dissensions at the end of the sixteenth century, was sent with his two brothers to England, under the care of a Russian merchant, by whom they were placed at the university of Oxford, where the others died of smallpox. Alpher entered into orders, and in 1618 obtained the rectory of Warboys, Huntingdonshire, from whence he was ejected in the Civil War, and barbarously treated by the Republicans. At the Restoration he was reinstated in his living, but being old and infirm, he committed the care of it to a curate, and retired to Hammersmith, where he died at the age of 80.

ALPHONSO, the Catholic, took above thirty cities from the Mussulmen, by which he aggrandized his kingdom of the Asturias. Died 757.

ALPHONSO, the Chaste, king of the Asturias, gained several victories over the Mahometans, and took Lisbon. He died 842, after reigning fifty years.

ALPHONSO III., king of the Asturias, put out the eyes of four of his brothers; but by repeopleing the cities and building churches, he gained the surname of the Great. He died 912, having reigned forty-six years.

ALPHONSO I., king of Naples. See ALPHONSO V., king of Arragon.

ALPHONSO II., king of Naples, succeeded Ferdinand, 1494, but abdicated the throne in the year following in favour of his son, Ferdinand II. Died 1495.

ALPHONSO V., the Magnanimous, king of Arragon, Naples, and Sicily, was born 1384, and succeeded his father, Ferdinand the Just, in 1416. Soon after his accession a confederacy was formed against him, which he frustrated, though he pardoned the conspirators. He laid claim to the throne of Naples, by an agreement with Joan, queen of that kingdom, that he should be her heir. This embroiled him in a war with several of the Italian states, and he and his fleet were taken by the Genoese. The king was conveyed to Milan, where he made the duke his friend, and was thereby enabled to conquer Naples, 1442. He died there, 1458. Alphonso possessed all the qualities of a great king, his only fault being that he was too much devoted to the pursuit of pleasure.

ALPHONSO IX., king of Leon and Castile, surnamed the Noble and the Good, succeeded to the throne, 1157, when he was but four years old. All that had been usurped from him by his neighbours during his infancy he regained; but was defeated by the Moors, and wounded in the thigh, in a great battle, 1195. Some time afterwards he had his revenge, and killed 20,000 Saracens. He also conquered them at the battle of Murad, 1212, where they are said to have lost 100,000 foot and 30,000 horse. Died 1214.

ALPHONSO X., king of Leon and Castile, surnamed the Wise and the Astronomer, succeeded his father, Ferdinand III., 1252. He was author of the famous astronomical tables called the 'Alphonsine Tables.' He was dethroned by his son, Don Sancho, and died of grief, 1284.

ALSOP.

ALPHONSO I., HENRIQUEZ, king of Portugal, son of Henry of Burgundy, of the family of France, defeated five Moorish kings at the battle of Ourique, 1139, and in the same year was proclaimed by his army the first king of Portugal, his title being confirmed by the pope, 1145. He is said to have taken for his arms as many crowns as he had vanquished kings. Died at Coimbra, 1185, aged 76.

ALPHONSO II., the Fat, king of Portugal, born 1185; succeeded his father, Sancho I., 1211; died 1223.

ALPHONSO III., king of Portugal, born 1209 or 1210; proclaimed king 1246; died 1279. He took the kingdom of Algarve from the Moors.

ALPHONSO IV., the Brave, king of Portugal, born 1290; succeeded his father, Denis, the Liberal, 1325; died 1356.

ALPHONSO V., the African, king of Portugal, ascended the throne 1438, and died 1481.

ALPHONSO VI., king of Portugal, succeeded his father, John IV., 1656; and died 1683, aged 41.

ALPHONSO DE CASTRO. See CASTRO.

ALPHONSO DE ZAMORA, a learned Jew, who, being converted to Christianity, was employed by Cardinal Ximenes in compiling the famous Complutensian Polyglott. He afterwards wrote 'Introductiones Hebraicæ Compluti,' 1526, and other grammatical works, and died about 1530.

ALPHONSO, PETER, a Spanish Jew, who embraced Christianity, and had Alphonso, king of Arragon, for his godfather in 1106. He wrote a vindication of the Christian religion, Cologne, 1536.

ALPHONSUS, TOSTATUS, a learned Spaniard, born at Madrigala, distinguished himself so much by his learning that he was admitted to a doctor's degree at Salamanca when but 22 years of age. He was afterwards bishop of Avila, appeared with great honour at the council of Basle, and died 1454, leaving commentaries on the chronicle of Eusebius, commentaries on the Holy Scriptures, and other learned works. His epitaph says: 'Hic stupor est mundi, qui scibile discuit omne.'

ALPINI, PROSPER, an Italian physician and writer on botany and medicine, was born at Marostica, in the republic of Venice, 1553, professed botany at Padua with great reputation, and died 1617.

ALSOP, ANTHONY, was educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, where he proceeded B.D. 1706. In 1698 he published 'Fabularum Æsopiarum Delectus,' with a preface, in which he took the side of Boyle against Bentley. This book made a great noise at the time of its appearance. Alsop was for many years a distinguished tutor in his college, till Bishop Trelawney appointed him his chaplain, and gave him a prebend in his cathedral, with the rectory of Brightwell, in Berkshire. He died 10 June, 1727. His Latin odes were published in 1752 by Sir Francis Bernard. He was also author of some poetical pieces in English.

ALSOP, VINCENT, a nonconformist divine, is said to have been a native of Northamptonshire. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. He first received deacon's orders in the Church of England, but was ordained a priest in the Presbyterian way. In 1662 he was ejected for nonconformity from the living of Wilby, Northamptonshire. After undergoing much persecution on account of his religion, he removed to London, where he acquired great fame as a preacher and writer. He died at Westminster, 28 May, 1703. His principal works were: 'Anti-Sozzo; in Vindication of some Great Truths expressed by Mr. William Sherlock,' 8vo., 1675; 'Melus Inquirendum; or, Sober Inquiry into the Preaching and Practices of the Nonconformists, against Dr. Goodman,' 8vo., 1679; 'The Mischief of Impositions. In Answer to Dr. Stillingfleet's Mischief of Separation,' 1680; and a life of Mr. Daniel Cawdry.

ALSTEDIUS, JOHN HENRY, a Protestant writer, born at Herborn, in the duchy of Nassau, 1588; died 1638. Among his works are an encyclopædia in Latin, and 'The Encyclopædia of the Bible,' in which he endeavours to show the necessity of seeking in the Holy Scriptures for the principles of all the arts and sciences. He had a daughter who adopted the opinions of the Millenarians, as her father had done in his treatise, 'De mille annis.'

ALSTON, CHARLES, M.D., a physician and botanist, born in Scotland, 1683, died at Edinburgh, 22 Nov., 1760. His 'Tyrocinium Botanicum Edinburgense' was written in opposition to Linnæus, whose arguments on the sexes of plants he strove hard to invalidate. His fame, however, rests mainly upon his 'Lectures on the Materia Medica,' which were published after the author's death.

ALSTRÖMER, CLAUDE, the eldest son of Jonas Alströmer, who is noticed below, was born 1736, and died 1794. He was a pupil of Linnæus, and travelled over a great part of Europe. In the course of his travels he sent many valuable plants to his illustrious preceptor, who named one of them the Lily of Alströmer. Claude's three brothers, Patrick, John, and Augustus, were also distinguished by their talents.

ALSTRÖMER, JONAS, a patriotic Swede, born at Alingsås, in West Gothland, 1685; died 1761. He amassed a fortune in London, and on returning to his native country devoted his energies to the improvement of manufactures and agriculture and the extension of commerce. For his patriotic exertions he was rewarded with letters of nobility, the order of the Polar Star, and the title of councillor of commerce. After his death his bust was placed in the Bourse at Stockholm, with this inscription:—'Alströmer, artium fabricium in patriâ restaurator.'

ALTDORFER, ALBERT. See ALTFORER.

ALTER, FRANCIS CHARLES, a celebrated philosopher, was born at Engelsberg, in Silesia, 1749, and became a member of the Society of Jesus. For many years he was teacher of Greek in the school of St. Anne, at Vienna, where he died 29 March, 1804. He published no fewer than two hundred and fifty books or dissertations.

ALTHAMERUS, ANDREW, a Lutheran divine of Nuremberg and Anspach, died about 1540.

ALTHUSIUS, JOHN, a German lawyer, born 1557; died 1638. In his 'Politica methodice digesta' he maintains that the sovereignty of the state belongs to the people.

ALTIUS, GABRIEL, a poet of the fifteenth century, was preceptor to Ferdinand the younger, king of Naples, and afterwards bishop of Policastro. He died about 1501. His poems are in the 'Deliciae Poetarum Italorum,' vol. i., and also in the Sanzarum of 1728.

ALTING, HENRY, a famous Protestant divine, born at Embden, 1583. In 1612 he accompanied the Count Palatine Frederic V. to England, when that prince was married to Elizabeth, daughter of King James I. On his return he was appointed divinity professor at Heidelberg, on which occasion he took his doctor's degree. In 1616 he became rector of the Collegium Sapientiæ, and was nominated one of the deputies to the synod of Dort. In 1622 he very narrowly escaped with his life when Count Tilly took Heidelberg by storm. Afterwards he removed to his native town, and in 1627 was appointed professor of divinity at Groningen. Died 1644. He left several works in Latin, all relating to theology.

ALTING, JAMES, son of Henry Alting, was born at Heidelberg, 1618. Having completed his studies he came to England, and was ordained by Dr. Prideaux, bishop of Worcester. Afterwards he became professor of Hebrew, and then of divinity, at Groningen, where he engaged in a fierce dispute with his colleague Desmarts. He died in 1679, and his works were printed at Amsterdam, 5 vols. fol., 1687.

ALTING, MENSON, a learned burgomaster of Groningen, died 1713, aged 76. He left an excellent description of the Low Countries, entitled, 'Descriptio Germaniæ Inferioris,' and a book on the topography and antiquities of Priesland.

ALTORFER, ALBERT, the earliest painter of Helvetia, was born at Altorf, 1488, and died 1538. As an engraver he excelled all the old German masters, with the exception only of Albert Dürer.

ALUNNO, FRANCIS, a writer of the sixteenth century resided at Ferrara. His works are 'Observations on Petrarch;' 'Riches of the Italian Tongue;' and 'Della Fabrica del Mondo.' He was celebrated as a calligrapher, and presented to the Emperor Charles V. the first chapter of the Gospel of St. John and the Apostles' Creed written in the compass of a farthing.

ALURED OF BEVERLEY. See ALFRED.

ALVA, FERDINAND ALVAREZ DE TOLEDO, duke of, was born 1508. He first distinguished himself at the battle of Pavia and the siege of Tunis, under the Emperor Charles V., who in 1538 appointed him general of the Spanish army. He served his country with success against France in Navarre and Catalonia, and marched to oppose the German Protestants, 1546, as generalissimo of the imperial troops. In the following year he gained the famous battle of Mühlberg, when the Protestants were entirely defeated and compelled to submit. The duke of Alva was sent into Spain with Prince Philip, but Charles V. having died before Maurice, the new elector of Saxony, whom he had raised to the electorate, contrary to his general's advice, recalled him to Germany, 1552. It was also against the duke's advice that the emperor undertook the siege of Metz, which proved unsuccessful. After the abdication of Charles V., the duke of Alva was sent into Italy, where he obliged the French to quit the kingdom of Naples, and Pope Paul IV. to abandon their interests. Philip II. having attempted to introduce the inquisition into the Netherlands, great tumults arose; and the king, seeing that everything tended to an open rebellion, sent the duke of Alva there in 1567, whose extreme rigour only served to rouse still more the minds of the people, already ripe for rebellion. The general laid the foundations of the citadel of Antwerp, established a council, called the 'Council of Blood,' over which he presided, condemned the prince of Orange, with his brothers, and several other lords, to death, and caused the earls of Egmont and Horn to be executed publicly. These executions augmented the tumults; and Count Louis of Nassau entered the Netherlands with a body of German troops, as auxiliaries to the prince of Orange, but the duke of Alva defeated them, and, proud of his success, set up his statue in bronze, in the 'Place d'Armes,' at Antwerp. Some new taxes, which he afterwards attempted to levy, effectually roused the people, and the duke met with so much opposition that he requested to be recalled. In the meantime almost all Holland rose in favour of the rebels, and they began to reduce their government to a form. Such was the origin of the republic of Holland and the United Provinces. The duke of Alva refused to acknowledge the new governor of La Cerda, and sent his son, Frederic de Toledo, to besiege Mons, which city he took, after defeating the troops brought to its relief from France by Genlis. He also made himself master of Haarlem, 1573, where the Spaniards committed the most horrible cruelties. The Spanish fleet being afterwards beaten by the Dutch, the duke, vexed at all his ill success, again asked to be recalled, and his request was this time granted, 1574. In 1581 he was placed at the head of the army sent to Portugal, where he defeated Don Antonio de Crato, who had been elected king. Taking advantage of his victory, the duke made himself master of Lisbon, and gained there a very valuable booty. The Spaniards, however, were guilty of so much rapine and violence that Philip II. appointed commissioners to inform against the whole army, not even excepting its general; but afterwards the king was appeased, and felt ashamed to treat a subject so ill, to whom he owed the conquest of Portugal. The duke of Alva died shortly afterwards, 12 Jan., 1582.

ALVA Y ASTORGA, PETER DE, a Spaniard, who took the habit of St. Francis in Peru. He returned to Spain, travelled into various parts of Europe, and died in the Low Countries, 1667. His most singular work is a life of St. Francis, which he entitled 'Naturæ Prodigiū, Gratia Portentum,' &c. Madrid, fol., 1651.

ALVAREZ DE LUNA, favourite of John II., king of Castile. He made himself odious by his despotic government and eagerness to amass wealth. Being convicted of having received money from the Moors to prevent the siege of Granada, he was beheaded at Valladolid, 1453.

ALVAREZ, DIEGO, a Spanish polemical divine, was a member of the Dominican order, and archbishop of Trani. Died 1635.

ALVAREZ, EMANUEL, a Portuguese Jesuit, born 1526, in the island of Madeira. He was rector of the colleges of Coimbra and Evora, and of the professed house at Lisbon. Died 1582. His Latin grammar, 'De Institutione Grammatica,' 1599, is much valued.

ALVAREZ, FERDINAND, duke of Alva. See ALVA.

ALVAREZ, FRANCIS, a Portuguese priest, born 1515, who accompanied the embassy sent by Emanuel, king of Portugal, to David, king of Ethiopia or Abyssinia. Alvarez remained in Ethiopia six years, and on his return wrote a description of that country. Died about 1540.

ALVAREZ, JOSEPH, a celebrated Spanish sculptor, born 1768; died 1830.

ALVENSLEBEN, PHILIP CHARLES, COUNT D', a Prussian diplomatist, who died 1802, wrote 'A Chronological Table of the Events of the War, from the Peace of Munster to that of Habertsburg.' Berlin, 1792.

AMALASONTHA.

ALVIANO, BARTHOLOMEW, captain-general of the Venetians, was taken prisoner at the battle of Aignadel, and lost that of La Motte, without losing the reputation he had acquired in his other expeditions. He signalized himself at the battle of Marignan, and died very poor in 1515, aged 60.

ALYPIUS, a Greek author, who flourished at Alexandria in the reign of the Emperor Julian. He wrote a treatise on music, of which only a fragment has come down to our times.

AMADEUS V., the Great, count of Savoy in 1285, engaged in thirty-two sieges, and was successful in all his undertakings. He supported the knights in the isle of Rhodes against the Turks, 1311, since which time the dukes of Savoy bore the cross of Malta for their arms. Died 1323.

AMADEUS VI., or LE COMTE VERT, count of Savoy in 1373. He went into Greece, to the assistance of John Paleologus, and was the arbiter of Italy. Died 1383.

AMADEUS VII., the Red, count of Savoy, born 1360; died 1391.

AMADEUS VIII., the Pacific, count of Savoy, succeeded Amadeus VII., 1391, and erected Saxony into a duchy, 1416. He had so high a character for wisdom, as to be called the Solomon of his age. The greatest princes often chose him for their arbiter. He left his states to his son, 1434, retired to the priory of Ripaglia, and founded the military order of St. Maurice. While he there enjoyed, like a holy hermit, the innocent pleasures of the country, he was elected pope by the council of Basle, 24 June, 1442, and took the name of Felix V.; but he abdicated the pontificate at Lyons, 1449, putting an end to the schism by this edifying submission. Nicholas V., who was then pope, made him dean of the sacred college. He died 7 Jan., 1451, in great reputation for sanctity, aged 69.

AMADEUS IX., count or duke of Savoy, was born 1435, and died 1472.

AMAJA, FRANCIS, of Antequera, professor of law at Ossuna and Salamanca, died at Valladolid, about 1640. He wrote several legal works.

AMALARIC, or AMAURY, king of the Visigoths, son and successor of Alaric II., married, in 517, Clotilda, daughter of Clovis and St. Clotilda. Amalaric, being an Arian, used so much violence to compel his wife to embrace Arianism, that she sent her brother a veil stained with her blood. Childebert, to revenge her, invaded the states of the Visigoths, and defeated Amalaric, who was killed, 531.

AMALARIUS, FORTUNATUS, archbishop of Trèves, one of the most illustrious prelates in the reign of Charlemagne, was sent by that prince to the Emperor Michael Curopalate, at Constantinople; died 814. He wrote the book on the sacrament of baptism, printed under the name of Alcuin in that author's works.

AMALARIUS, SYMPHOSIUS, deacon of the church of Metz, and afterwards an abbat, died about 840. He is author of the 'Ecclesiastical Offices,' and other liturgical tracts, which are in the Library of the Fathers.

AMALASONTHA, niece of Clovis, and daughter of Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, was one of the most accomplished princesses of her time. She understood Greek, Latin, and all the other languages spoken by the peoples who composed the Roman empire. In 515 she married Eutharic

AMALRIC.

Cúcas, by whom she had a son, Athalaric, who succeeded his grandfather, Theodoric. On Athalaric's death, in 534, Amalasontha seized the reins of government, and put the crown on the head of her cousin, Theodatus, who perfidiously caused her to be strangled in Jan., 535.

AMALRIC, ARNAUD, abbot of the Cistercian house at Cîteaux, in France, and afterwards archbishop of Narbonne. He was a friend of Pope Innocent III., and distinguished himself by his zeal against the Albigenses. He reunited the princes of Spain against the Moors. These princes gained a celebrated victory in 1212, of which Amalric, who was present, has left an account. Died 1225.

AMALTEO. See AMALTHEUS.

AMALTEO, POMPONIO, an Italian painter; born 1505; died about 1588.

AMALTHEUS, JEROME, JOHN BAPTIST, and CORNELIUS, three celebrated Latin poets of Italy in the sixteenth century. Their poems were printed at Amsterdam, 1728, 8vo., in the 'Sannazar variorum,' and separately, Amst., 17mo., 1689. The best piece among them is an epigram on two beautiful children, each of whom had lost an eye:—

'Lumen Acon dextro, capta est Leonilla sinistro:
Et poterat forma vincere uterque Deos.
Parvæ puer, lumen quod habes concede sorori
Sic tæcæ Amor, sic erit illa Venus.'

Cornelius Amaltheus (d. 1603) translated into Latin the Catechism of the council of Trent. John Baptist (d. 1573) was secretary to the cardinals at the same council. Jerome, who was a physician, died 1574.

AMAMA, SIXTINUS, a Dutch Protestant divine, died 1639. In 1613 he visited Oxford, where he taught Hebrew for some time. His chief work is a treatise of the Vulgate version of the Pentateuch.

AMAND, ST., bishop of Bordeaux, 404, and friend of St. Paulinus.

AMAND, ST., bishop of Maestricht; apostle of part of the Low Countries, died 679. He founded the abbey of Elnon, or, as it is more commonly styled, of St. Amand, near Tournay, and several other religious houses.

AMASEO, GREGORIO, a native of Udina; professor of Latin at Venice; died 1541. He wrote a history of the town of Aquileia.

AMASEO, POMPILIO, son of Romolo Amaseo, taught Greek at Bologna, and died 1584. He published two fragments of a translation of Polybius, and wrote a history of the poets of his own time. The latter work has never been printed.

AMASEO, ROMOLO, an Italian writer, born at Udina, 1489. He was professor of Greek at Bologna, and secretary to the senate of that city. Being appointed to deliver a Latin speech before Pope Clement VII. and the Emperor Charles V. on the subject of the peace concluded between the two sovereigns, he performed the task so admirably as to gain the applause of the whole assembly. He was engaged in several important political missions on behalf of the Holy See. In 1550 Julius III. appointed him secretary of the briefs. Died 1552. He translated into Latin Xenophon's 'Cyrus' and Pausanias, and published a volume of Latin orations delivered by him on various occasions.

AMATI, JEROME, a celebrated maker of violins, a native of Cremona, flourished about 1600. His son Anthony and his grandson Nicholas were also excellent makers. Several other persons of the name of Amati were celebrated for their skill in the construction of violins.

AMATO, GIOVANNI ANTONIO D', a celebrated painter and engraver, born at Naples, 1475; died 1555.

AMATUS, JOHANNES RODERICUS, Amatus Lusitanus, a Portuguese physician, of Jewish origin, was born at Castel Bianco, 1511, studied at Salamanca, and travelled in several countries. He practised medicine with success at Ferrara and Ancona. Being suspected of being secretly inclined to the Hebrew faith, he escaped the Inquisition by retiring to Pesaro in 1555, then to Ragusa, and finally to Thessalonica, where he publicly professed Judaism. He was alive in 1561, but the date of his decease has not been ascertained. Amatus was author of two celebrated works, which have frequently been reprinted—'Exegemeta in priores duos Dioscoridis de Materia Medica libros,' and 'Curatorium Medicinalium Centuria Septem.'

AMAURI, OF CHARTRES, a heretic of the thirteenth century, condemned by Innocent III. His disciples maintained that there was no other heaven than the satisfaction of doing right; nor any other hell than ignorance and sin; that the sacraments were useless; and that no actions could be bad which were done in a spirit of charity—not even adultery. They were condemned by a council held at Paris, 1209, and a great number of them burnt.

AMAURY I., king of Jerusalem, after the death of his brother, Baldwin III., made war upon Egypt with great success. He besieged Cairo, but lost it by his avarice, for while the sultan was pretending to amass the money he had promised him, Noureddin raised the siege: He also miscarried at Damiatta. Died 1173.

AMAURY II., of Lusignan, became king of Jerusalem by marrying Isabella, second daughter of Amaury I. He held his court at Acre, but could never re-enter Jerusalem, which was occupied by the Saracens. Died 1205.

AMBERGER, CHRISTOPHER, a painter of Nuremberg, born about 1490; died about 1569. He was a disciple of the younger Holbein, whose style he happily imitated. He designed correctly, disposed his figures well, excelled in perspective, and was a good colourist: His best works are twelve pictures illustrative of the history of Joseph. Several of his paintings are preserved in the royal gallery at Munich.

AMBOISE, FRANÇOIS D', son of John d'Amboise, surgeon to Charles IX., was born at Paris 1550, and educated at the cost of the king at the college of Navarre, where he afterwards taught for some time. He then attached himself to the law, and became a very able advocate in the parliament of Paris; was afterwards appointed councillor to the parliament of Brittany; and, at last, master of requests and councillor of state. He accompanied Henry III. to Poland, and wrote a description of that kingdom. Died 1620: He was author of 'The Neapolitans,' a comedy in French, and several other pieces for the stage.

AMBOISE, GEORGE D', a celebrated cardinal, archbishop of Rouen, and minister of state under Louis XII., after having been bishop of Montauban, and archbishop of Narbonne. Louis conquered the Milanese by this prelate's counsel, 1499. At the death of Alexander VI. it is supposed that he would have been pope, had not cardinal de la Rovere contrived to secure the tiara for himself; Cardinal Amboise governed with mildness, and had nothing in view but the advancement of religion, the glory of the king, and the happiness of the people. He was a great benefactor to the city of Rouen, protected men of letters, and reformed the religious communities in his capacity of legate from the Holy See: He never held more than one benefice, and employed two-thirds of the revenue, according to the canons, in feeding the poor and maintaining the churches. He died 25 May, 1510, at Lyons, aged 50, regretted by all France. During his last illness he often said to a worthy Celestine friar who attended him, 'Brother John, would I had been all my life brother John!' His letters to Louis XII: were printed at Brussels, 4 vols. 12mo., 1712, and his life has been written by Le Gendre.

AMBOISE, MICHAEL D', seigneur de Chevillon, a Neapolitan, natural son of Michael Amboise, admiral of France. He was bred to the law, but neglected it for poetry, and died poor, 1547. His works are numerous.

AMBROGI, ANTOINE MARIE, was born at Florence 1713, and died at Rome 1788, having been for thirty years professor of eloquence and poetry at the Roman College. He published a description of Kircher's Museum, and a translation of Virgil in Italian blank verse.

AMBROGIO, THESEUS, a learned Italian, born 1469. At an early age he entered the order of canons regular of St. John, and in 1512 went to Rome. It is said that he knew eighteen languages, and could speak them all as correctly as he could his native tongue. Leo X. appointed him teacher of Syriac and Chaldean in the university of Bologna. Subsequently he repaired to Venice, where he became acquainted with the celebrated William Postel. Died at Pavia, 1540. His works are, 'Linguarum X. characteribus differentium alphabetum, introductio, ac legendi methodus,' and an 'Introduction to the Chaldean, Syriac, Armenian, and Ten other Languages.' He also translated the Psalter into Chaldean, but never published it.

AMBROSE, deacon of Alexandria, and husband of St. Marcella, was converted to the Catholic faith by going, out of curiosity, to hear Origen. Ambrose possessed great genius and eloquence. He incessantly urged Origen to write upon the Holy Scriptures, maintaining fourteen persons to write under his direction; and engaged him to refute Celsus. He boldly confessed the faith of Christ before Maximin, and died about 250.

AMBROSE, Sr., archbishop of Milan, and one of the doctors of the church. His father was prætorian præfect of Gaul, and in this province Ambrose was born, probably at Trèves, about 340. Having completed his studies at Rome, Aricius Probus, the præfect, sent him to Liguria as governor, saying, 'Go, and govern more like a bishop than a judge.' These words seemed a prediction of what happened, for on the death of Auxentius, archbishop of Milan, a great contest arose between the Arians and the Catholics about choosing his successor. Ambrose went to the church, in order to quell the tumult, and spoke with so much wisdom that he was unanimously proclaimed archbishop. This election was confirmed by the Emperor Valentinian, and Ambrose was consecrated 7 Dec., 374. He enjoined to himself the performance of three duties—to let no day pass without celebrating the holy mysteries; to preach the Gospel to his people every Sunday; and to omit nothing that tended to the spread of Christianity. He converted St. Augustine, condemned the Arians at the council of Aquileia, 381, and resolutely forbade the Emperor Theodosius to enter the church, obliging him to do penance for the massacre of Thessalonica. St. Ambrose had a sweetness of expression, which procured for him the appellation of the Mellifluus Doctor. He died on Easter Eve, 4 April, 397. Paulinus, a priest of Milan, who is to be distinguished from St. Paulinus, wrote his life at the request of St. Augustine. The best edition of the works of St. Ambrose is that published by the Benedictines, Paris, 2 vols. folio, 1686, 1690. His 'Offices,' and some of his other pieces, have been translated into English. The celebrated hymn, 'Te Deum Laudamus,' is generally ascribed to St. Ambrose, though some modern critics have expressed doubts as to whether he were really the author of it. A writer in the Biographical Dictionary published by the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, gives the following account of the connection of the name of Ambrose with the earliest improvement of church music:—"The name of Ambrosius is connected with the earliest improvement of church music. The writings of the early fathers concur in recording the employment of music as a part of public worship, although no regular ritual was in existence to determine its precise form and use. This appears to have been first applied by Ambrosius, who instituted that method of singing known by the name of 'cantus Ambrosianus,' which is said to have had reference to the modes of the ancients, especially of Ptolemy. This is rather matter of conjecture than certainty, although the eastern origin of Christianity, and the practice of the Greek fathers render the supposition probable. The effect of the Ambrosian chant is described in glowing terms by those who heard it in the cathedral of Milan. 'The voices,' says Augustine, 'flowed in at my ears, truth was distilled into my heart, and the affection of piety overflowed in sweet tears of joy.' Whether any genuine relics of the music thus described exist at the present time is exceedingly doubtful: the style of singing it may, however, have been preserved; and this is still said to be applied at Milan to compositions of a date comparatively recent." The festival of St. Ambrose is observed on Dec. 7 in the Roman church.

AMBROSE, the Camaldulite, was born at Portici, in the kingdom of Naples, 1378, and became general of his order 1431. He distinguished himself at the councils of Basle, Ferrara, and Florence, where his readiness in speaking Greek was much admired. His friendship was sought by all the learned. Paul Jovius says of him, 'Study did not render him unsovereign, nor piety austere.' He wrote 'Hodocopicon, or a Visit to the Monasteries of his Order,' Florence, 4to., 1680, and left translations of several Greek books, and other works, which are in the collection of Martenne. Died 21 Oct., 1439.

AMBROSE, ISAAC, an English divine, was born in Lancashire, 1604, and educated at Brazenose College, Oxford, where he proceeded B.A. Taking orders, he obtained a small cure in his native county. At the breaking out of the Rebellion, he sided with the Presbyterians, took the covenant, and became a preacher of the Gospel, first at Garstang and afterwards at Preston. In 1654 he was appointed assistant to the commissioners for the ejecting of scandalous and ignorant ministers and schoolmasters. It was his practice to retire for a month every year to a little hut in a wood, where he shunned all society, and devoted himself to religious contemplation. Died 1663-4. His most esteemed work is entitled 'Looking unto Jesus. A View of the Everlasting Gospel, or the Soul's eyeing of Jesus, as carrying on the Great Work of Man's Salvation.'

AMBROSE DE LOMBEZ, a learned Capuchin, author of several treatises on spiritual subjects, was born at Lombez, 1708, and died at St. Saviour, near Barèges, 1778.

AMBROSINI, BARTHOLOMEW, director of the botanic garden at Bologna, published 'De capsicum varietate,' &c. Died 1657.

AMBROSINI, HYACINTHE, brother of the preceding, professor of botany, published 'Hortus Bolognensis' and 'Phytologia, hoc est, de plantis.' Bologna, fol., 1665-6. The latter work was to consist of many volumes, but was left imperfect by the death of the author.

AMBROSIUS AURELIANUS, was first general and afterwards king of Britain. He was brought up at the court of Adroen, king of Armorica, whence he proceeded, in 457, with 10,000 men, to assist his countrymen in their struggle with the Saxons, under Vortigern. So great was his success, that after the death or abdication of Vortigern he was elected sovereign of all England. He was killed in battle, 508, by Cerdic, the leader of the West Saxons.

AMEILHON, HUBERT PASCAL, a French writer, born 1730; died 1811. He is chiefly known by his 'History of the Commerce and Navigation of the Equinoxes.'

AMELIA, Princess, daughter of George III., King of England, was born 7 Aug., 1783, and died 13 Nov., 1810.

AMELIA, Princess, duchess-dowager of Saxony, was born in Italy, 1739; married Duke Ernest Augustus Constantine, 1756; became a widow, 1758; and governed her states from the latter date until 1775, when she resigned the government to her son. Died Dec., 1809. She was a great patroness of men of letters.

AMELIA ANNA, princess of Prussia, sister of Frederic II., was born 1723; and died 1787. She was celebrated for her skill in music, having composed some remarkable pieces.

AMELOT DE LA HOUSAYE, ABRAHAM NICHOLAS, a French writer, born 1654; died 1706. He translated several works, including Machiavelli's 'Prince,' and Father Paul Sarpi's 'History of the Council of Trent.' There is also attributed to him 'Memoires critiques et litteraires,' 3 vols. 12mo., 1727.

AMELOTTE, DENIS, a pious priest of the Oratory, a native of Saintes, died at Paris, 1678, aged 52. He left a French translation of the New Testament, with notes, 4 vols. 8vo., 1666; 2 vols. 4to., 1668. The younger Daille and Valentin Conrart accommodated this translation to their opinions, by making use of that of Mons., and printed it at Paris, 1671. This edition is very scarce, it having been suppressed soon after its appearance. Amelotte wrote also a system of divinity, the life of Pere Coudren, and other works.

AMELUNGH, JEROME, an Italian poet, called Il Gobbo di Pisa, flourished in the sixteenth century. He is regarded as the inventor of mock-heroic poetry.

AMERBACH, JOHN, a native of Reutlingen, in Swabia, became a celebrated printer at Basle. He finished, in 1506, the first edition of St. Augustine, which he had commenced in 1495; and shortly before his death made his children promise that they would print the edition of St. Jerome, which they accordingly did. Died 1515. Boniface, his son, became a famous lawyer at Basle, and died 1562.

AMERBACH, VITUS, a native of Wendingen, in Bavaria, studied philosophy, law, and divinity, at Wittenberg, where he adopted the opinions of Luther. On returning to his native country he abjured the Protestant doctrines, and was received again into the bosom of the Catholic church. He became professor of philosophy at Ingolstadt, where he died about 1557, aged 70. He published works 'On the Soul' and on 'Natural Philosophy,' besides commentaries on several classical authors.

AMERICUS, VESPUTIUS, born, in 1451, at Florence. Hearing of the discoveries of Columbus, 1492, he resolved to try his fortune in the same way, and made two voyages at the expense of Ferdinand of Spain, during which he discovered the continent of America, to which he gave his name. Being dissatisfied with Ferdinand, he went to Emanuel the Great, king of Portugal, for whom he discovered Brazil. He died 22 Feb., 1510, on his return from his second voyage from Portugal to the Azores.

AMES, FISHER, a celebrated American politician, born 1758; died 4 July, 1808.

AMES, JOSEPH, a native of Great Yarmouth, was born 1619, and, having entered the navy, became a distinguished captain under the Commonwealth. In the action of 31 July, 1653, when the Dutch were signally defeated, and Van Tromp, their admiral, killed, Captain Ames so greatly distinguished himself that the parliament presented to him a gold medal, engraved by Simon, and bearing a most flattering inscription. Died 1 Dec., 1695.

AMES, JOSEPH, F.S.A., an English bibliographer, born at Great Yarmouth, 1689. He settled in Wapping, where he carried on the business of a ship-chandler until his death, which occurred 7 Oct., 1759. He devoted his spare time to the study of antiquities, in which he attained to great proficiency. The work by which he is chiefly remembered is 'Typographical Antiquities, being an Historical Account of Printing in England, with Some Memoirs of our Antient Printers, and a Register of the Books printed by them, from the year MCCCCLXXI. to MDC.; with an Appendix Concerning Printing in Scotland and Ireland to the Same Time.' Lond. 4to., 1749. Herbert afterwards published a greatly-improved edition of this excellent work in 3 vols. 4to. Ames also compiled a list of engraved English portraits, and 'Parentalia; or, Memoirs of the Family of the Wrens.'

AMES, WILLIAM, D.D., a celebrated Puritan divine, was born in Norfolk, 1576, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he adopted such rigid principles that, to avoid expulsion, he went abroad, and became professor of divinity at Franeker, where he remained twelve years. He was at the synod of Dort, 1618. He resigned his professorship on being invited to the charge of the English congregation at Rotterdam, where he died 14 Nov., 1633. He wrote a system of divinity, and some violent pieces against the Church of England.

AMHERST, JEFFERY, Lord Amherst, was descended from a very ancient family at Riverhead, near Sevenoaks, Kent, where he was born 29 Jan., 1717. He entered the army 1731, and in 1741 was appointed aide-de-camp to General Ligonier, with whom he served at the battles of Dettingen, Fontenoy, and Roconux. In 1756 he was appointed colonel of the 15th Regiment of Foot. He went to America 1758, and commanded the troops at the siege of Louisburg. The same year he was appointed commander-in-chief of all the forces in America and governor of Virginia. On the accession of George III. he was created a K.B. He returned to England, 1763. In 1771 he was appointed governor of Guernsey, and in the following year lieutenant-general of the ordnance. In 1776 he was created Baron Amherst of Holmesdale. In 1778 he had the command of the army in England, and in 1782 he received the gold stick from the king, but on the change of ministry his military appointments were transferred to other hands. He was again appointed to the command of the army of Great Britain, 1793, but in 1795 it was taken from him, and given to the duke of York, Lord Amherst being complimented with the rank of field-marshal. He died 3 Aug., 1797. The character of Lord Amherst will always stand high in the military history of England. Though a strict disciplinarian, he was the soldier's friend. He was twice married, but leaving no issue, the title descended to his nephew.

AMHERST, WILLIAM PITT, Earl Amherst, eldest son of Lieutenant-General William Amherst, brother of Jeffery, first Lord Amherst. He was born 14 Jan., 1773, and succeeded to the barony on the death of his uncle Jeffery in Aug., 1797. In 1816 he was appointed ambassador extraordinary to the emperor of China. He left England in the 'Alceste' in February of that year. On reaching the precincts of the imperial palace at Peking, and refusing to submit to the humiliating ceremonies of the emperor's court, he was denied admission to the presence of the emperor, and the mission was thus rendered fruitless. On his return in the 'Alceste,' he was wrecked off the island of Pulo Leat, from which he proceeded in one of the boats of the wrecked vessel to Batavia. On his return to England, in 1817, he visited Napoleon at St. Helena, and was honoured with several interviews with the illustrious captive. Subsequently he was appointed governor-general of India, and for his services there was, in 1826, created Earl Amherst and Viscount Holmesdale. He died at Knowle House, near Sevenoaks, Kent, 13 March, 1857.

AMHURST, NICHOLAS, was born at Marden, Kent, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he was removed to St. John's College, Oxford, where his conduct was so irregular that he was expelled. This induced him to publish, in 1721, a periodical entitled 'Terre Filius,' in which he held up to ridicule the studies and discipline of the university. Settling in London, he became an author by profession. His most celebrated undertaking was 'The Craftsman,' which was carried on for many years with great success. In this paper he was assisted by Lord Bolingbroke and Mr. Pulteney, who totally neglected him when they got into office. He died at Twickenham, it is supposed of a broken heart, 27 April, 1742.

AMICI, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian physician and astronomer, born at Modena, 1784; died 23 April, 1863

AMMAN.

AMICO, ANTONINE, of Messina, became a canon of Palermo, where he died 1641. He wrote several able antiquarian works, including the chronology of the viceroys, &c., of Sicily, and the history of the ancient archbishops of Syracuse.

AMICONI, or AMIGONI, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, born at Brescia, 1605, was a scholar of Antonio Gandini. His chief excellence was in fresco painting, which he treated with great ability. Died 1661.

AMICONI, or AMIGONI, JACOPO, an Italian painter, born at Venice, 1675. He painted history and portraits. His first works at Venice were two altar-pieces in the church of the fathers of the Oratory, and a picture of St. Catharine and St. Andrew for the church of St. Eustachio. He afterwards visited Rome, and from thence went to Munich, where he settled for some time; but his chief performances are in England, where he came in 1729, and resided many years. Whatever may be the merit of his works, they were for some time in great vogue. He was employed by several of the nobility in ornamenting their houses. After leaving England he visited Spain, and died at Madrid in Sept., 1752.

AMIOT, JOSEPH, a Jesuit missionary, born at Toulon, 1718. Being sent on the Chinese mission, he arrived at Macao 1750, and at Peking, whither he was summoned by the emperor, 1751. He remained at Peking until his death, which happened 1794. Father Amiot was profoundly acquainted with the Chinese and Tartar languages, and with the mathematics, literature, history, and arts of China. He published a French translation of a Chinese poem by the Emperor Kien-Long, in praise of the city of Moukden. Paris, 8vo., 1770; 'The Chinese Military Art,' 4to., 1772; 'Letters on the Chinese Characters,' addressed to the Royal Society of London, and printed in their Transactions; dissertations on the music, printing, agriculture, and other arts of the Chinese, printed in the 'Mémoires sur les Chinois;' the life of Confucius, forming the twelfth volume of the same collection; and a dictionary of the Tartar-Mantchou language.

AMLING, CHARLES GUSTAVUS, a painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg, 1651; died at Munich, 1702.

AMMAN, JOHN, son of John Conrad Amman, was born at Schaffhausen, in Switzerland, 1707, and became professor of botany at St. Petersburg. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of London. Died 1740. He wrote 'Stirpium rariorum, icones et descriptiones.' St. Petersburg, 4to., 1739.

AMMAN, JOHN CONRAD, a Swiss physician, of Schaffhausen, acquired a great reputation by his skill in teaching the dumb to speak. He published a curious book, entitled 'Surdus loquens,' 1692, reprinted under the title 'De Loquela.' He likewise published an edition of Cælius Aurelianus. Born 1669; died 1724.

AMMAN, JUSTUS, a painter and engraver, born at Zurich, 1539; died at Nuremberg, 1591.

AMMAN, PAUL, a German botanist and physician, born at Breslau, 1634. He studied at several German universities, and after travelling in Holland and England, settled, in 1674, at Leipzig, where he became professor of botany and physiology. Died 1691. His works are 'Paracensis ad discentes circa institutionum medicarum emendationem occupata,' 12mo., 1675; 'Archæus syn-republici Ricardi Leichneri, &c., 12mo., 1674; 'Ireorum Numae Pompilii cum Hippocrate,' Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1680; 'Character Naturalis Plantarum,' 1676, and augmented by Nebel, 1700.

AMMANATI, BARTOLOMEO, a famous architect and sculptor, born at Florence 1511; died about 1594. He is the author of a work in architecture entitled 'La Città.' His wife, Laura Battiferri, was a celebrated poet. After her death, in 1589, he devoted the greater portion of his wealth to pious purposes.

AMMIANUS, MARCELLINUS, an historian, a native of Antioch, died at Rome about 390. He wrote a Roman history, in thirty-one books, from Nerva to Valens (A.D. 96—378). The first thirteen books are lost. The work may be regarded as a continuation of Tacitus and Suetonius. It derives its merit, not from the style, which is affected and often rough and inaccurate, but from its various matter. It is interspersed with numerous digressions and observations, which render it instructive and entertaining. Though a heathen, Ammianus speaks of the Christians, not only with moderation, but praise. Gibbon says, 'It is not without sincere regret that I must now take leave of an accurate and faithful guide, who has composed the history of his own times without indulging the prejudices and passions which usually affect the mind of a contemporary.' An English translation, by Philemon Holland, of the 'Rerum Gestarum' appeared at London, fol., 1609.

AMMIRATO, SCIPIO, an Italian historian, born 1531, at Lecce, in the kingdom of Naples. He was brought up to the legal profession, but abandoned it for the ecclesiastical state, which he thought would better accord with the taste he had formed for literary pursuits. He died at Florence, 30 Jan., 1601. His works are 'A Discourse in Italian upon Tacitus'; 'The History of Florence,' 3 vols. fol., 1647; 'History of the Neapolitan Families,' 1580 and 1651, 2 vols. fol.; 'Opuscula,' 3 vols. 4to., 1640; and 'History of the Florentine Families,' fol., 1615.

AMMON, CHRISTOPHER FREDERIC, a celebrated Protestant preacher and writer, born at Baireuth, 1750, died 21 May, 1830. Among his works are a treatise on the propagation of Christianity; a sketch of a pure biblical Christianity; a collection of sermons; and an edition of the 'Hecuba' of Euripides.

AMMONIUS, OF ALEXANDRIA, a celebrated philosopher, born about 160; died 243. He obtained the surname of Saccas, because his original trade was to carry corn in sacks. Among his disciples were Origen and Plotinus, to whom he taught the philosophy of the eclectics, or new platonics, which was first taught by Potamon. He composed a harmony of the four Gospels, which was much esteemed, and is in the library of the fathers. Although he was a Christian, Plotinus, Longinus, Porphyry, and Hierocles, who followed his principles, speak highly in his praise.

AMMONIUS, the Lithotomist, a famous surgeon of Alexandria, so called because he was the first to perform the operation of cutting for the stone.

AMMONIUS, ANDREW, a Latin poet, and friend of Erasmus, was born at Lucca, 1477. He went first to Rome and then to England, where he was patronized by the great Sir Thomas More. About 1515 he was appointed Latin secretary to Henry VIII., whom he followed in his campaign in France. He afterwards composed a Latin poem in celebration of the victories then gained. Leo X. having appointed him papal legate in England, he retained that dignity until his death, which occurred at London, 1517. His Latin poems are not extant, but some of his letters are printed with those of his friend Erasmus.

AMNER, JOHN, organist of Ely cathedral, published 'Sacred Hymns of three, four, five, and six parts, for Voices and Viols,' 1615. He died 1641.

AMNER, RALPH, an English musical composer, probably a son of the preceding; died 1664.

AMNER, RICHARD, a dissenting minister, born at Hinckley, Leicestershire, 1736. For many years he was a preacher at Hampstead, near London, and afterwards at Coseley, Staffordshire, whence he retired in his later years to his native town, where he died, 8 June, 1803. Mr. Amner was a man of some learning in biblical criticism, as appears from his various publications on theological subjects. He gave some offence to George Steevens, who took his revenge in a most unjustifiable manner by writing several notes on indecent passages in Shakespeare in a gross and immoral style, and appending Mr. Amner's name to them.

AMOLO, archbishop of Lyons, illustrious for his learning and piety, wrote against Godeschale, and died about 854.

AMONTONS, GUILLAUME, a skillful machinist, born at Paris, 1663. He was son of an advocate of Normandy, and from his youth applied himself to constructing machines. He was admitted into the Academy of Sciences, 1699, and died 11 Oct., 1705. He wrote a book upon barometers, thermometers, and hygrometers, 12mo., 1695, and some pieces in the memoirs of the Academy. Amontons was the original inventor of the telegraph.

AMORT, EUSEBIUS, a canon regular of St. Augustine, was born 1692, near Teiz, in Bavaria, and died 5 Feb., 1775. He wrote theological works in Latin, several of them with the object of proving that Thomas à Kempis was the veritable author of the 'Imitation of Jesus Christ.'

AMORY, THOMAS, D.D., a dissenting minister, was born 28 Jan., 1700-1, at Taunton, Somersetshire, where he acquired his classical learning under the care of Mr. Chadwick. In 1717 his education was intrusted to Mr. Stephen James and Mr. Henry Grove, who kept a famous academy at Taunton for bringing up young persons to the ministry. In 1722 he was approved of as a candidate for the ministry, and in 1730 was ordained. He preached at Taunton, and on Mr. Grove's death became principal tutor to the academy in that town. In 1759 he removed to London on being appointed afternoon preacher to the society in the Old Jewry, of which he was in 1766 chosen a pastor. In 1768 the university of Edinburgh created him D.D., and in the same year he was elected one of the six Tuesday lecturers at Salter's Hall. In 1770 he became morning preacher at Newington Green. When the dissenting ministers, in 1772, formed the design of endeavouring to procure an enlargement of the Toleration Act, he was placed upon the committee, and prosecuted the scheme with the utmost zeal. Dr. Amory continued to be one of the pastors of the society in the Old Jewry until his death, which took place 24 June, 1774. He published two volumes of sermons; 'The Life of Mr. Henry Grove' and Memoirs of Dr. Benson and of Dr. Samuel Chandler.

AMORY, THOMAS, author of 'John Bun- cle,' was born about 1691, being the son of an Irish counsellor. It is conjectured that he was brought up as a physician, but it does not appear that he followed any profession. In 1755 he published a singularly heterogeneous work, entitled 'Memoirs of several Ladies of Great Britain; interspersed with Literary Reflections, and Accounts of Anti- quities and Curious Things; in several Letters;' and in 1756 appeared the first volume of 'The Life of John Bun- cle, Esq.' The second volume of this strange book came out in 1766, and the whole work was afterwards reprinted in 4 vols. 12mo. Another edition appeared in 1825, in 3 vols. 12mo. Mr. Amory was married, and led a very re- cluse life in his house at Westminster, carefully shunning company, and never stirring out until evening. He died 25 Nov., 1788. On account of the strange character of his writings, it is supposed by some that he was insane; but the author of an article in the 'Retrospective Review' styles the 'Memoirs' and 'The Life of John Bun- cle' two of the most extraordinary productions of British intellect, and without disputing Amory's enthusiastic promul- gation of Unitarian principles, assigns to him a deep veneration for the New Testament, an intense conviction of its truth, a vivacious temperament, a social heart, great erudition, and acute reasoning powers.

AMOS, ANDREW, was educated at Cambridge, and after being for some years a member of the Supreme Council of India, was elected Downing Professor of Laws at Cambridge, where he died 18 April, 1860, aged 86. He wrote several works on legal and miscellaneous subjects.

AMOS, WILLIAM, author of several agricultural treatises of some merit, was born in Scotland, but resided at Brothertoft, near Boston, Lincolnshire. Died 1824.

AMOTT, JAMES, musical composer, organist of Gloucester cathedral, died 10 Feb., 1865.

AMPERE, ANDRÉ MARIE, a celebrated physician, mathematician, and chemist, born at Lyons, 1775; died 10 June, 1836.

AMPERE, JEAN JACQUES, a French miscellaneous writer, son of André Marie Ampère, was born 12 Aug., 1800; and died 27 March, 1864.

AMPHILOCHIUS, ST., an illustrious bishop of Iconium, in the fourth century, and a zealous de- fender of the faith, assisted at the first general council of Constantinople, 381, and presided at the council of Sidon. This holy bishop, seeing that Theodosius listened to the Arians, went to the emperor's palace, and approaching his son Arcadius, caressed him as a young child, but did not show him the usual respect. Theodosius was offended, thinking himself affronted in the person of his child, and commanded the bishop to be sent out. This order was about to be executed, when Am- philochius, turning to the emperor, said, 'Sir, you cannot bear an affront offered to your son, and are angry with those who do not treat him with respect: be assured that the God of the universe in like manner abhors those who blaspheme against his only Son.' Theodosius, perceiving the wisdom of the holy prelate, recalled him, begged his pardon, and shortly afterwards published severe laws against the Arian assemblies. St. Amphilo- chius died about 394, and his festival is kept on Nov. 23. Father Combéfis published his works, Paris, fol., 1644. They are also in the library of the fathers.

AMYNTAS.

Misia, 1483, became a disciple of Luther, and wrote with great warmth against the Catholics. Luther made him bishop of Naumburg, conferring upon him a dignity he possessed not himself. Amsdorf ventured to maintain that 'Good works are an impediment to salvation.' This is the title of one of his books, but upon reading the work, it appears that he only considered them hindrances to the salvation of those who trusted in them, and esteemed them meritorious. He died at Eisenach, 14 May, 1565.

AMSNICK, PAUL, master of the ceremonies at Tunbridge Wells, died at Bath, 19 April, 1814. He is author of a topographical work entitled 'Tun- bridge Wells and its Neighbourhood, Illustrated by a series of Etchings and Historical Descriptions: the Etchings by L. Byrne.' Lond., 4to., 1810.

AMURATH I., emperor of the Turks, one of the greatest of the Ottoman princes, succeeded his father, Orchan, 1359. He took Thrace, Gallipoli, and Adrianople from the Greeks, and fixed his court at the last named city in 1362. He established the soldiers called Janizaries; defeated the prince of the Bulgarians; conquered Lower Mysia; chastised his rebellious bashaws; put out his son's eyes; and was killed in a combat, 1389, after having gained thirty-seven battles.

AMURATH II., emperor of the Turks, ascended the throne 1421. He besieged Constantinople and Belgrade without success, but took Thessalonica from the Venetians, and made the prince of Bosnia, and John Castriot, prince of Albania, tributaries. The latter was forced to send his five sons as hostages, whom Amurath circumcised, contrary to his promise. John Hunniades conquered his troops, and obliged him to make peace with the Christian princes, which they afterwards breaking, were defeated by Amurath at the famous battle of Varna, 10 Nov., 1444, when Ladislaus, king of Hungary, was slain. He afterwards was victorious over Hunniades, and killed above 20,000 of his men; but George Castriot, more generally known by the name of Scanderberg, having re-established himself in his father's dominions, defeated the Turks several times, and compelled Amurath to raise the siege of Croia, the capital of Albania. Amurath, going a second time to besiege that city, was killed before it, 11 Feb., 1451, aged 75.

AMURATH III., sixteenth emperor of the Turks, a debauched and cruel prince, succeeded his father, Selim II., 1574. He strangled his five brothers, and took Tauris, 1585. His troops were defeated by the Croats, and by the army of the Emperor Rodolphus II. Died 1595, aged 48.

AMURATH IV., emperor of the Turks, suc- ceeded Mustapha, 1623. He made himself feared by the Janizaries, and took Bagdad, 1638. Died 8 Feb., 1640, in consequence of his debaucheries, aged 42.

AMYAND, CLAUDIUS, serjeant-surgeon to King George II., was admitted, in 1717, a fellow of the Royal Society, to the Transactions of which he contributed several interesting papers. He died 6 July, 1740, of injuries received by a fall as he was walking in Greenwich Park on the previous day. His son Claudius became receiver-general of the land-tax for London and Middlesex, and died 1 April, 1774.

AMYNTAS I., king of Macedonia, succeeded his father, Alectas, about 547 B.C., and died 480 B.C.

succeeded Pausanias about 392 B.C. His army was defeated by the Illyrians and the Olynthians. Died about 371 B.C.

AMYNTAS III., king of Macedonia, was probably grandson of Amyntas II. He ascended the throne on the assassination of Pausanias, 392 B.C., but was afterwards forced to abdicate, whereupon he retired into Thessaly. He eventually succeeded in regaining possession of the crown, and died 368 B.C.

ANYOT, Jacques, son of a mercer of Melun, where he was born, 1513. He studied at Paris, in the college of Cardinal le Moine, and was tutor to the children of Guillaume de Sassi Bouchereil, who was then secretary of state. Amyst was afterwards for ten years public lecturer on Greek and Latin in the university of Bourges, and during that time translated 'Theagenes et Chariclea.' Francis I. was so pleased with this translation, that he gave him the abbey of Belozanc, vacant by the death of Vatable. Anyot accompanied M. de Morvilliers on his first, gained the esteem of Cardinal de Tournon, and of Odet de Selve, ambassador at Venice, and pronounced at the Council of Trent, 1551, that bold yet judicious protestation which is recorded in the acts of that council. Upon his return from Italy he was made preceptor to the children of Henry II. Charles IX., coming to the crown, appointed him grand almoner of France, 1590, and gave him the abbey of St. Corneille de Compiègne, and the bishopric of Auxerre. Henry III., to whom also he had been preceptor, continued him in the office of grand almoner, and let the abbey annexed to it the order of the Holy Ghost for ever. He died 6 Feb., 1593. His translations of Plutarch, of the pastorals of Longus, and of Diodorus Siculus are much esteemed. His miscellaneous works were printed at Lyons, 8vo., 1711.

ANYOT, THOMAS, a native of Norwich, adopted the legal profession, and for a time practised as a solicitor in the city of his nativity. Afterwards he removed to London, where he died 28 Sept., 1850. Mr Anyot was a fellow of the Royal Society and of the Society of Antiquaries, acting as treasurer of the latter for upwards of twenty-two years. He was also one of the founders of the Camden Society, and acted as its director from 1839 to the end of his life. He published the speeches of his friend and patron, the Right Hon. W. Windham, with an account of his life; and contributed several papers to the 'Archæologia.'

AMYRAUT, MOSES, a French Calvinistic divine, professor of divinity at Saumur, was born at Bourges, in Touraine, 1596, and died 8 Feb., 1664, greatly esteemed, not only by the Calvinists, but also by the greatest Catholic lords. His principal works are a paraphrase upon the New Testament; another upon the Psalms; an apology for his religion; a treatise on free will; and a system of Christian morality.

ANACHARSIS, a famous Scythian philosopher, went about 592 B.C. to Athens, where he conferred with Solon, and became illustrious by his learning, contempt of riches, and austere manner of life. After he returned from his travels he was put to death by the king of Scythia, for attempting to introduce the Grecian laws into his native country. Many beautiful apothegms of this philosopher have been preserved by Laertius, Plutarch, and other writers. He used to say that 'the vine bore three kinds of fruit—drunkenness, voluptuousness, and repentance; and that whoever was temperate in his speech, his eating, and his pleasures, might be called a perfectly good man.' Struck with the demagogical system of government at Athens, he expressed his surprise that in all their public assemblies wise men should debate matters and fools determine them. He used to compare laws to cobwebs, and to ridicule Solon, who pretended to restrain the passions of men by pieces of writing. Aldus, in his collection of the Greek 'Epistolographers,' Venice, 4to., 1699, published nine letters under the name of Anacharsis, but they are pronounced by Bentley to be forgeries.

ANACLETUS, raised to the see of Rome in 83, and suffered martyrdom in 96. Festival, July 13. He must not be confounded with the Antipope Anacletus, who died 1138. See INNOCENT II.

ANACREON, one of the most famous lyric poets of Greece, was born at Teos, in Ionia, probably about 560 B.C. He fled with his parents from Persian oppression, to Abdera, in Thrace. Subsequently he resided at Samos, under the protection of Polycrates, the king. He died in his native place, or at Abdera, in the 87th year of his age. Common tradition reported that he died of suffocation from swallowing a grape-stone, while in the act of drinking wine. He wrote that light kind of ode, of which love, social pleasures, and wine form the subjects, and which—from him—has received the name Anacreontic. The collection of odes ascribed to him contains many belonging to other authors, some of whom were of a later age. Anacreon has been translated into English by Stanley, Addison, and Thomas Moore.

ANASTASIUS I., Pope, succeeded Syricus, 399, and died 401. He reconciled the Orientals to the Church of Rome, and condemned the Origenists.

ANASTASIUS II., elected pope 496, died 498. He wrote to the Emperor Anastasius in favour of the Catholic religion, and to Clovis, to congratulate him upon his conversion.

ANASTASIUS III., elected pope 912, filled the holy see but two years, during which time he governed the church with great wisdom.

ANASTASIUS IV., elected pope 1153, distinguished himself by his charity at the time of a great famine. Died 4 Dec., 1154.

ANASTASIUS I., emperor of the East, a native of Durazzo. He was called the Silencer, because he was chosen from among the officers whose business it was to keep silence in the palace. He ascended the throne of Constantinople, 491, by the intrigues of Ariadne, with whom he had a private connection. At first he gave proofs of piety, moderation, and justice; but soon made himself odious by his violence and avarice. He drove Euphemius from the patriarchal seat, persecuted the Catholics, and purchased peace with the Persians and Bulgarians by a sum of money. He was found killed by a thunderbolt 18 July, 518, aged 88. It was this emperor who abolished those public shows in which wild beasts rioted in human blood.

ANASTASIUS II., emperor of the East, succeeded Bardanes, 713. Having placed a deacon, named John, at the head of his troops, the soldiers murdered their general, and elected Theodosius emperor, who shut Anastasius up in a monastery, 714. Attempting afterwards to dethrone Leo, the Isaurian, he was put to death, 719.

ANASTASIUS, the Sinaite, a monk of Mount Sinai, supposed to be the same who was elected patriarch of Antioch, 561, and died 1 April, 599.

ANASTASIUS.

He left several treatises, the principal being 'Contemplationes in Hexamerum, Græc. et Lat.'

ANASTASIUS, the Librarian, an abbat, librarian of the Vatican, and one of the most learned men of the ninth century. He assisted at the eighth general council held at Constantinople, and translated its acts and canons from Greek into Latin. He wrote the lives of several popes, and other works.

ANASTASIUS, became patriarch of Constantinople 730, and died 753.

ANATOLIUS, St., of Alexandria, bishop of Laodicea, 269, one of the most learned men of the third century. He is said, by St. Jerome, to have excelled in arithmetic, geometry, physic, astronomy, grammar, and rhetoric. Eusebius says he wrote few books, but they were all excellent. Some still remain: among them a treatise on Easter, printed in the 'Doctrina Temporum' of Bucherius. Antwerp, fol., 1634.

ANATOLIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Flavian, 449, and assisted at the council of Chalcedon, where he had three canons inserted asserting the pre-eminence of his see. This proceeding was opposed by the legates of St. Leo. Died 458.

ANAXAGORAS, one of the most celebrated philosophers of antiquity, born at Clazomene about 500 B.C. He became a disciple, it is said, of Anaximenes, and was surnamed Mind, vovv, because he affirmed that the divine mind was the cause of the universe. He travelled into Egypt, and applied himself entirely to the study of nature, without concerning himself with public affairs. He maintained the homoimery, i.e., that this vast universe is composed of similar particles; that the sun is a mass of fire, much larger than Peloponnesus; that the moon is inhabited; and that the supreme happiness of man consists in contemplation. Being reproached with having no regard for his country, he pointed to heaven, saying, 'On the contrary, I esteem it infinitely.' He died of poverty, at Lampsacus, about 428 B.C.

ANAXANDRIDES, a comic poet, who, according to Suidas, first introduced love scenes upon the stage, about 376 B.C. He was condemned to be starved to death for having censured the government of Athens.

ANAXIMANDER, a celebrated philosopher of Miletus, and disciple of Thales, said by Pliny to have invented the sphere, and by Strabo to have made the first maps. Diogenes Laertius ascribes the invention of dials to him, and Pliny calls him the first who discovered the obliquity of the ecliptic. He lived about 547 B.C.

ANAXIMENES, of Miletus, a famous philosopher, was the disciple and successor of Anaximander. He thought that air was the principle of all things. Pliny asserts that he made the first sundial.

ANAXIMENES, of LAMPSCACUS, a famous orator and historian, one of the preceptors of Alexander the Great, whom he followed to the wars, preventing him from destroying Lampsacus, about 334 B.C. Alexander had said that he would grant nothing which Anaximenes might ask, whereupon the philosopher requested him to destroy that place.

ANCELL, SAMUEL, an English military writer, died 19 Oct., 1802. His chief work is, 'A Circumstantial Journal of the Siege of Gibraltar, from the 12th of September, 1779, to the 23rd of February, 1783.' Liverpool, 8vo., 1784.

ANCHARANO, JAMES D'. See PALLADINO.

ANCHARANO, PETER D', a learned Italian lawyer, born about 1330 at Bologna, where he died in 1410, or 1417.

ANCHIETA, JOSEPH D', a Portuguese missionary, who is styled the Apostle of the New World. He was born, 1533, in the island of Tenerife, of noble and wealthy parents, and at the age of 17 entered the Society of Jesus. Animated by an extraordinary zeal for the propagation of the faith, he went to Brazil, 1553, with Don Edward d'Acosta, the second governor-general of that country, and six religious of his own order. At Piratingua he founded the first college established in Brazil for the purpose of promoting the conversion and civilization of the people of that country. The savages and the Portuguese creoles flocked to Anchieta, who taught them Latin, while he learnt from them the language of the country, of which he afterwards compiled a grammar and vocabulary. His influence increased under the government of Memdesa, and he greatly exerted himself to put down the practice of cannibalism. During the protracted and disastrous war waged by the Portuguese against the Tamoyos, Anchieta was the faithful companion of the celebrated Nobrega. At a time when a general attack was about to be made by the Tamoyos, Anchieta and Nobrega undertook the perilous task of going among these ferocious cannibals, in the hope of concluding a peace. So great was the veneration they inspired, that they attained their object, and their embassy was regarded as the salvation of the Portuguese colonies. Anchieta assisted the converted Indians in founding the town of St. Sebastian, the present metropolis of Portuguese America. Died 9 June, 1597. He composed a Latin poem in honour of the Blessed Virgin.

ANCILLON, CHARLES, eldest son of David Ancillon, mentioned below, was born at Metz, 1659, and became inspector of the French courts of justice at Berlin, and historiographer to the king of Prussia. Died 1715. He published 'A Miscellany of Critical Literature, collected from the Conversations of his Father,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1698; 'The Life of Soliman II.,' 8vo., 1706; 'A Treatise on Eunuchs,' 12mo., 1707; 'Memoirs of several Literary Persons,' 12mo., 1709; and 'History of the Establishment of the French in Prussia,' 8vo., 1690.

ANCILLON, DAVID, a French Protestant divine, born 1617, at Metz; died 3 Sept., 1692, at Berlin. He wrote 'A Relation of the Controversy concerning Traditions;' 'An Apology for Luther, Zuiniglius, and Beza;' and 'The Life of William Farel.'

ANCILLON, JOHN PETER FREDERIC, grandson of Charles Ancillon, was born at Berlin, 1766, and having entered the ministry, distinguished himself by pulpit eloquence. The king of Prussia appointed him preceptor to his son and nephew, and gave him other proofs of his confidence and esteem. In 1819 he was nominated minister of public instruction, and afterwards, in the capacity of minister for foreign affairs, he conferred great benefits on trade and commerce by advocating a peace policy. He died 10 April, 1837, regretted by all Europe. Ancillon wrote several works in French, including 'Literary and Philosophical Miscellanies;' 'Philosophical Essays;' and 'A Table of the Revolutions in the political system of Europe, since the close of the fifteenth century.'

ANCILLON, JOSEPH, a younger son of David

ANCOURT.

ANCOURT was born at Metz, 1626, and followed his father to Berlin, where he acquired considerable fame as a lawyer. He died 1719, leaving several treatises of high merit.

ANCOURT, FLORENT CARTON D', a French actor and dramatist, born at Fontainebleau, 1661. He was educated in the Jesuits' college at Paris, and at seventeen years of age was admitted an advocate. Afterwards he went on the stage, and attained great distinction, both as an actor and writer. In 1718 he quitted the theatre, and retired to his estate of Courcelles le Roy, in Berry, where he applied himself wholly to devotion, and composed a metrical translation of the Psalms, and a sacred tragedy, which were never printed. Died 6 Dec., 1726.

ANCRAM, ROBERT KERR, earl of, long served as Sir Robert Kerr King James I., his son Prince Henry, and King Charles, in the quality of a gentleman of the privy-chamber or bed-chamber, and was in 1633 raised to the peerage by the title of the earl of Ancram. Of this distinction he not only showed himself worthy by his probity, taste, and accomplishments, but also by his faithful adherence to Charles I. in every vicissitude of fortune throughout his disastrous reign. On the death of the king he retired to Holland, where, after experiencing many hardships, he died before the Restoration, at an advanced age. He is author of a beautiful sonnet, which he sent to Drummond of Hawthornden.

ANCRAM, WILLIAM HENRY, earl of, succeeded his father July, 1767, as fourth marquis of Lothian. He was aide-de-camp to the duke of Cumberland at the battle of Fontenoy, where he received a severe wound in the head, and commanded the cavalry at the battle of Culloden. In 1770 he advanced to the rank of general, and died 12 April, 1775, aged 65.

ANDERSON, ADAM, a native of Scotland, and brother of Dr. James Anderson, the author of 'Royal Genealogies.' For forty years he was a clerk in the South Sea House, and at length was appointed chief clerk of the stock and new annuities, which office he retained till his death. He was appointed one of the trustees for establishing the colony of Georgia, in America, 1736. He was also one of the assistants of the Scots corporation in London. Died at his house in Red Lion Street, Cerkwell, 10 Jan., 1775. He wrote a useful work entitled 'Historical and Chronological Deduction of Trade and Commerce,' 2 vols. fol., first printed about 1762, and afterwards reprinted in 4 vols. 4to.

ANDERSON, ADAM, professor of natural philosophy in the university of St. Andrew's, died 5 Dec., 1846. He contributed to the 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia' the articles Barometer, Cold, Dyeing, Fermentation, Evaporation, Hygrometry, Navigation, and Physical Geography; and the article Gas Light to the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'

ANDERSON, ALEXANDER, an eminent mathematician, born at Aberdeen in or about 1582. He became professor of mathematics at Paris, where he published 'Supplementum Apollonii Redivivi,' 1612; 'Αριθμητικὴ, pro Zeteticis Apolloniani problematis, &c.,' 1615; 'Francisci vietz de Equatorum recognitione et emendatione tractatus dec.,' 1615; and 'Viezæ Angulares Sectiones.' Whether he were a professor in the university or not does not appear.

ANDERSON.

ANDERSON, ALEXANDER, M.D., a celebrated botanist, for many years superintendent of the botanical garden in the island of St. Vincent; died about 1813.

ANDERSON, ANDREW, a printer of Edinburgh, who, in the reign of Charles II., obtained a patent for printing everything in Scotland for forty-one years. Subsequently the monopoly was restricted to Bibles and acts of parliament.

ANDERSON, ANDREW, lieutenant-general in the East India Company's service, founded at Elgin, his native town, an institution for the support of old age and the education of youth. Born about 1746; died in London, 16 Dec., 1824.

ANDERSON, ANDREW, the champion draught-player of Scotland, was a stocking-weaver by trade, and continued to work at his business until within a short period of his death, which took place at Braidwood, near Carlisle, Lanarkshire, 1 March, 1861. He published 'The Game of Draughts Simplified,' 8vo., Glasgow, 1852, a work regarded as an authority on the subject of which it treats.

ANDERSON, ANTHONY, an English divine, appointed to the rectory of Medbourne, Leicestershire, 1573, on the presentation of John Lord Scrope of Bolton. He published 'The Shield of our Safetie; set forth by the faithful preacher of God's Holye Worde, A. Anderson, upon Symeon's Sight in his Nunc Dimittis,' 1581; 'An Exposition of the Hymne commonly called Benedictus;' with an ample and comfortable application of the same to our age and people,' 1573; 'Godly Prayers,' 1591; and several sermons. He probably died about 1592. One Anthony Anderson was collated to the rectory of Stepney, 1586.

ANDERSON, CHRISTOPHER, was born in Edinburgh in or about 1782, being the son of a rich trader in that metropolis. Having resolved to adopt the theological profession, he went to Bristol, and prosecuted his studies under Dr. Ryland, president of the Baptist college. It was his original intention to go to India as a missionary, but on discovering that his constitution was not fitted for so hot a climate, he returned to Edinburgh, where in 1808 he became the pastor of a Baptist congregation. This charge he retained till within a few months of his death, which took place on 18 Feb., 1852. He wrote 'On the Genius and Design of the Domestic Constitution,' 1826; 'The Native Irish,' 1828; and 'The Annals of the English Bible,' 2 vols., 1825.

ANDERSON, DAVID, the Perthshire statuary, died at Liverpool, 1847.

ANDERSON, EDMUND, an English lawyer, was made Chief Justice of the Common Pleas 1822, and died 1 August, 1605. He is author of legal reports.

ANDERSON, GEORGE, born at Tundern, in the duchy of Schleswig, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, travelled in the East from 1644 to 1650, and wrote an account of his travels, which was published by Olearius.

ANDERSON, GEORGE, a mathematician, born at Weston, Buckinghamshire, 1760. His parents were peasants, and he was obliged to work as a day labourer. His genius, however, overcame every difficulty, and he attained to so great a knowledge of mathematics as to procure the patronage of the Rev. Mr. King, of Whitechurch, who sent him to a grammar-school, and next to Wadham College, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He entered into deacon's orders, but having some dislike to the clerical profession, he came to London in 1786, and, by the interest of Mr. King, obtained a clerk's place at the Board of Control, and afterwards the situation of accountant-general. He attended with so much assiduity to business as to lay the foundation of a disorder which carried him off, 30 April, 1796. He left a widow, who, in consideration of her husband's merits, obtained a pension. Mr. Anderson published 'Arenarius, or a Treatise on Numbering the Sand, translated from the Greek of Archimedes;' and 'A General View of the Affairs of the East India Company since the conclusion of the War in 1784.'

ANDERSON, GEORGE, son of Dr. James Anderson, the author of 'Essays on Agriculture,' &c., was greatly skilled in botanical science. He died at West Ham, Essex, 10 Jan., 1817, in consequence of a fall from his gig. His only published work appears to be a paper in the 'Transactions of the Horticultural Society,' vol. ii., p. 330.

ANDERSON, JAMES, a Scotch antiquary, son of the Rev. Patrick Anderson, was born 5 Aug., 1662, and received his education at the university of Edinburgh (M.A. 1680). In 1691 he was admitted a writer to the signet, and 1705 appeared his 'Historical Essay; showing that the crown and kingdom of Scotland is imperial and independent.' For the services rendered by this work Anderson received the acknowledgments of the parliament, which adopted with alacrity his proposal for engraving and publishing a series of the ancient charters and great seals of Scotland. In Nov., 1706, the parliament gave him £300 as a mark of their approbation, and as a contribution towards the expense of the work. This sum, however, was spent before the following March, in addition to £290 drawn from his own funds. A committee reported these facts, whereupon the parliament voted him an additional contribution of £1,050, and recommended him to the queen as a person who merited her gracious favour. One of the last acts of the Union parliament was a recommendation in favour of Mr. Anderson. This so encouraged him that he gave up his profession, though it is said that the money so readily granted was never paid. Soon after the union he removed to London, where for many years his time was divided between the labour of completing his projected work, and unsuccessful efforts to get his claims attended to by the government. On 24 June, 1715, he was appointed postmaster-general for Scotland, but was superseded for some cause which does not appear, 29 Nov., 1717. It would seem, however, that he continued to draw the salary of the office in the form of a pension of £200 a year. While engaged in examining the national records, he was induced to make inquiries respecting the life and character of the ill-fated Mary Stuart. The result was the publication of 'Collections relating to the History of Mary, Queen of Scotland,' 4 vols. 4to., 1724-8. Mr. Anderson died 3 April, 1728. He had been compelled to pledge the plates of his 'Diplomata,' which in 1729 were sold by auction for £530. They were afterwards put into the hands of Ruddiman, by whom the long-contemplated work was published in 1739, with the following title:—Selectus Diplomatum et Numismatum Scotiae Thesaurus, in duas Partes, distributus: Prior Syllogem complectitur veterum Diplomatum sive Chartarum Regum et Procerum Scotiae una cum eorum sigillis, a Duncano II. ad Jacobum I., id est, ab anno 1094 ad 1412, Adjuncta sunt reliquorum

ANDERSON.

Scotiae et Magnae Britanniae Regum Sigilla, a praedicto Jacobo I. ad nuperam duorum Regnorum in unum, anno 1707, Coalitionem; item Characteres et Abbreviaturae in antiquis Codicibus usitatae. Posterior continet Numismata tam aurea quam argentea singulorum Scotiae Regum, ab Alexandro I. ad supradictam Regnorum Coalitionem perpetua Serie deducta: subnexis quae reperiri poterant eorundem Regum Symbolis heroicis.' It is a fine folio volume, with fine plates by Sturt, and a learned preface by Ruddiman.

ANDERSON, JAMES, a genealogical compiler, who is often confounded with the author of the 'Diplomata Scotiae.' He was brother of William Anderson, the historian of commerce, and for many years was pastor of the Presbyterian congregation in Swallow Street, Piccadilly. Among his friends he was nicknamed 'Bishop' Anderson. Died in London, 28 May, 1739. His works, which are more elaborate and bulky than learned and useful, are 'Royal Genealogies, or the Genealogical Tables of Emperors, Kings, and Princes, from Adam to these times; in two parts,' fol., 1732; 'A Genealogical History of the House of Ybery,' 2 vols., Lond., 8vo., 1742; and 'The Constitutions of Freemasons,' 1723.

ANDERSON, JAMES, M.D., physician-general of the East India Company's army at Madras, died 5 Aug., 1809. He was distinguished by the zeal and ability with which he laboured for the purpose of increasing the productive resources of the British possessions in Hindostan. His published writings have reference to this important subject.

ANDERSON, SIR JAMES CALEB, a celebrated experimentalist in steam-coaching, was son of John Anderson, the founder of Fermanoy. He was created a baronet 1813, and died in London, 4 April, 1861, aged 68. (Patents 6,147, 7,407, 11,273.)

ANDERSON, JOHN, a Scotch divine, was born 1678, and received his education at St. Andrew's, where he proceeded M.A. In 1704 he became minister of Dumbarton, whence he removed in 1716 to Glasgow. He was a zealous defender of Presbyterianism, and died 1720-1.

ANDERSON, JOHN, a lawyer, born at Hamburg 1674; died 1743. Among other works he wrote a book upon Greenland and Davis's Straits.

ANDERSON, JOHN, professor of natural history in the university of Glasgow, was born at Roseneath, Dumbartonshire, 1726, and died 13 Jan., 1796. His 'Institutes of Physics' first appeared in 1786, being several times afterwards reprinted. He also wrote 'Observations upon the Roman Antiquities lately discovered between the Forth and the Clyde,' appended to Roy's 'Military Antiquities,' 1793, and afterwards reprinted separately. He founded, in Glasgow, an institution which bears his name.

ANDERSON, JOHN, M.D., F.S.A., took his doctor's degree at Edinburgh, and practised for some time at Kingston, Surrey. Afterwards he became physician to the sea-bathing infirmary at Margate, where he died in June, 1804. He wrote an inaugural dissertation, 'De Scorbuto,' printed at Edinburgh, 1772; 'Medical Remarks on the Natural, Spontaneous, and Artificial Evacuations,' Lond., 8vo., 1787 and 1788; and 'A Practical Essay on the good and bad effects of Sea Water and Sea Bathing,' Lond., 8vo., 1795.

ANDERSON, JOHN, a Scotchman of humble circumstances, settled in Glasgow about 1784, and by a fortunate venture in herrings acquired £500.

ANDERSON.

He thereupon determined to settle in Ireland, and accordingly he became an export merchant at Cork. In a very few years he realised £25,000, with which he purchased four-sixths of the Fermoy estate in Munster. He resolved to make a town at Fermoy, and succeeded in constructing the handsomest country town in Ireland. Mr. D. O. Madden, writing in 1848, says:—'The streets are spacious, and the town is tastefully designed. There is a neat square, fine churches for religious worship, and several private residences of respectability in the neighbourhood. The place looks bright and happy—not like the other dreary and dilapidated country towns in Ireland. Two large barracks, built in squares, on the northern side of the town, contribute to the imposing appearance of the place. Fermoy has now 7000 inhabitants. Sixty years since the place was a dirty hamlet, consisting of hovels, and a carmen's public-house at the end of the narrow old bridge; now there is a cheerful and agreeable town, pleasant society, a good deal of trade, and more prosperity than might be expected.' With the view of reforming the mode of travelling in Ireland, he got up a mail coach company, and the first coach which ran between Dublin and Cork was established by him. He likewise established an agricultural society, and a military college, and laboured in every possible way to civilize and improve his adopted country. As a token that his efforts in this direction were not unappreciated, the government offered him a baronetcy, which he declined, though he allowed his son to accept it. Subsequently he sustained considerable losses in consequence of his speculation, and a meeting of his creditors was held 19 June, 1816. With regard to his subsequent career and the date of his death, the compiler of these pages has obtained no particulars.

ANDERSON, JOHN, a Scotch genealogist, was a surgeon, and practised his profession at Hamilton, Lanarkshire. In 1825 he published 'Historical and Genealogical Memoirs of the House of Hamilton,' to which work he added a supplement in 1827. Born 1789; died 24 Dec., 1832.

ANDERSON, JOHN, an English writer, was in early life employed in diplomatic missions of considerable importance in the Eastern Archipelago. He died 15 Jan., 1845, aged 75. His works are, 'Mission to the East Coast of Sumatra in 1823,' and 'Acheen, &c., with Incidental Notices of the Trade in the Eastern Seas.'

ANDERSON, MRS. JOSEPHINE, a celebrated English vocalist, was one of the daughters of the engraver Bartolozzi. She became the wife of Mr. Joshua Anderson, who was a singer at the Haymarket and Drury Lane theatres. Died in London, 1 May, 1848, aged 41.

ANDERSON, LAURENCE, chancellor of Sweden, and prime minister to Gustavus Vasa, was born 1480, and died 1552. It was he who in 1527 caused the church to be placed at the disposal of the king by the diet of Westera.

ANDERSON, PATRICK, a Scotch physician of the seventeenth century, who wrote 'The Colde Spring of Kinghorne Craig, his admirable and new tried Properties, so far forth as yet are found true by experience,' 1618; a Latin work eulogising a pill vended by him, and which is known in Scotland to the present day as 'Anderson's pill;' and a MS. history of Scotland.

ANDERSON, PATRICK, a Scotch Jesuit, and rector of the Scotch college in Rome (1615), died at London, 24 Sept., 1624, æt. 40. He wrote 'The Ground of the Catholicke and Roman Religion in the Word of God,' 1623; and 'Memoirs of the Scotch Saints,' MS.

ANDERSON, PHILIP, a native of India, was the son of an officer in the East India Company's service, and received his education at St. Paul's School, London, and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. After graduating he proceeded to Durham, and there passed the examination for a licence in theology. In 1839 he was appointed to the curacy of Gateshead. He was afterwards successively curate of St. George's, Bloomsbury, and St. Peter's, Ashton-under-Lyne. In January, 1842, he left England for India, and was employed for some time as chaplain at Malligaum, and afterwards at Surat. Ill health obliged him to visit England on sick leave in 1847, but he returned to India two years afterwards, and was stationed at Colaba, where he laboured till his death, which occurred 13 Dec., 1857. Mr. Anderson's principal work was 'The English in Western India,' a revised edition of which came out in 1856. He also published 'Forms of Private Prayer, drawn from various sources, and designed especially for the use of persons in India.' Mr. Anderson's pen was also actively engaged in periodical literature. He started the 'Bombay Quarterly Magazine' in 1850, and was editor of the 'Bombay Quarterly Review,' which was commenced in 1855.

ANDERSON, ROBERT, a London silk weaver of the seventeenth century, published 'Stereometric Propositions,' 1668, and 'Gauging Perfected,' 1660.

ANDERSON, ROBERT, M.D., editor of 'The British Poets,' was born 7 Jan., 1750, being the son of a feuar, in the village of Carnwath, Lanarkshire. After studying medicine, he entered into practice as surgeon to the dispensary of Bamborough Castle, in Northumberland, but in 1784 removed to Edinburgh, where he spent the remainder of his life. There he began to prepare his edition of 'The British Poets,' which appeared in 14 vols. large 8vo., between the years 1792 and 1807. To the works of each poet is prefixed a biographical memoir. Dr. Anderson also published 'A Life of Dr. Samuel Johnson, with Critical Observations on his Works,' and 'The Life of Tobias Smollett, M.D., with Critical Observations on his Works.' He was a kind friend to young literary aspirants, and as an illustration of the feeling he thus created it may be mentioned that Thomas Campbell dedicated to him the first edition of 'The Pleasures of Hope.' Died 20 Feb., 1830.

ANDERSON, ROBERT, the Cumbrian poet, was born at Carlisle, 1 Feb., 1770, of very poor parents. After receiving some slight education at a charity school, he was apprenticed to a pattern drawer in London. A visit which he paid to Vauxhall in 1794 called forth his talent for composition. He was so disgusted with the words of the songs he heard there that the next morning he produced a ballad called 'Lucy Gray,' and three others, which he offered to Mr. Hook, the musical composer to the gardens, by whom they were set to music. In 1796 he removed to Carlisle, and two years afterwards published a volume of poetry. In 1801 he composed a poem, 'Betty Brown,' in the Cumberland dialect. This being well received, he was encouraged to make further efforts in the same direction, and the result was that in 1805 he brought out 'Ballads in the Cumberland Dialect.' Two other volumes of his poems were published in 1820, accompanied by an essay by Mr. Sanderson on the character and manners of the Cumbrian peasantry, and an autobiography of the poet. Anderson died at Carlisle, 27 Sept., 1833. His works are highly esteemed in his native district.

ANDERSON, THOMAS, a surgeon of Leith, in Scotland, contributed to the 'Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh' a very able paper on the pathology of the brain, 1790. He was likewise the author of other papers on professional subjects.

ANDERSON, WALTER, D.D., a native of Scotland, was for many years minister of Chirnside, Berwickshire, where he died 31 Aug., 1800. He wrote 'The History of Cræsus, King of Lydia,' 1755 (anon.); 'The History of France'; and 'The Philosophy of Ancient Greece.'

ANDERSON, WILLIAM, a naturalist, was appointed surgeon's mate on board the 'Resolution' in Cooke's second voyage round the world, in the years 1772-5. There are several interesting papers by him in the 'Transactions of the Royal Society.' When he died does not appear.

ANDERSON, WILLIAM, a painter of marine subjects, born at Scarborough, 21 April, 1757; died 12 May, 1837.

ANDERTON, HENRY, an English painter of history and portraits, died about 1665.

ANDERTON, JAMES, an English Catholic writer, who flourished in the early part of the seventeenth century. The historian Dodd emphatically asserts that he was a layman, though on this point grave doubts have been raised. At all events, Anderton published the following works under the assumed name of John Brekeley:—1. 'The Protestant's Apologie for the Roman Church,' 4to., 1604, 1608, 1615. This book excited much attention, and was answered by Dr. Morton, afterwards bishop of Durham, in a work entitled 'A Catholic's Appelle for Protestants.' 2. 'A Treatise of the Liturgie of the Masse, concerning the Sacrifice, Real Presence, and Service in Latin.' Cologne, 4to., 1620. 3. 'St. Augustin's Religion: giving an account of his Opinion in matters of Controversy between Catholics and Protestants,' 8vo., 1620.

ANDERTON, LAURENCE, born in Lancashire, 1576, educated at Blackburn School, and at Christ's College, Cambridge. Converted to the Catholic religion while actually a minister of the Established Church, he became a novice of the Society of Jesus in 1604. The principal scene of his labours was the county of Lancaster, where he appears to have died 17 April, 1643. He wrote 'One God, one Faith, by W. B.,' 1625; 'The Progenie of Catholics and Protestants,' 1603; 'The Triple Cord; or, a Treatise, proving the Truth of the Roman Catholic Religion by the Bible,' 1634.

ANDIER DES ROCHES, STEPHEN JOHN, an engraver, a native of Lyons; died at Paris, 1741.

ANDOQUE, PETER, a counsellor of the presidial court of Beziers, in France, where he died in 1664. He wrote 'Histoire de Languedoc avec l'Etat des Provinces Voisines,' Beziers, fol., 1648; and a catalogue of the bishops of Beziers, 4to., 1650.

ANDRADA, ALPHONSUS D', a Jesuit, born, 1590, at Toledo, where he taught philosophy. After his admission into the Society of Jesus, he became professor of philosophy. Died at Madrid, 20 June, 1672. His works are 'An Historical Itinerary,'

ANDRE.

2 vols. 4to.; 'Meditations for every day in the Year'; and 'Lives of Illustrious Jesuits,' 2 vols. fol.

ANDRADA, ANTHONY, a Portuguese Jesuit, and a zealous missionary, the first who discovered Thibet, of which country he has given an account. He died 1634, in great reputation for sanctity.

ANDRADA, DIEGO PAVVA D', a celebrated divine of an illustrious family at Coimbra, where he was born, 1528. He made the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers his chief study, and greatly distinguished himself at the council of Trent. Died 1 Dec., 1575. He wrote a defence of the council of Trent, against the examination of Chemnitz; 'Orthodoxæ Quaestiones adversus Hæreticos,' and several other works.

ANDRADA, FRANCIS D', brother of Diego Andrada and Thomas de Jesu, was appointed historiographer to King Philip III. He is author of a history of the reign of John III., king of Portugal, and other works. He was living in 1600.

ANDRADA, THOMAS D', commonly called Thomas de Jesu, was son of Fernando Alvarez d'Andrada, descended from one of the first families of Portugal. He took the Augustinian habit when only fifteen, and, after finishing his studies at Coimbra, preached with great success. Some years after this he attempted to introduce a reform in his order, and a more austere way of living, but encountered so many obstacles, that he was obliged to abandon the project. Sebastian, king of Portugal, being made acquainted with his merit and his kindness to the poor, took him with him in his unfortunate expedition to Portugal, 1578. There Thomas de Jesu laboured zealously to succour all the afflicted; but while he was exhorting the soldiers, during the battle of Alcazer, to fight bravely against the infidels, an arrow pierced his shoulder, and he became the prisoner of a Moor, who sold him to a Mahometan priest. This Marabut treated him at first with tolerable mildness; but, finding that he would not renounce Christianity, he afterwards cast him, loaded with chains, into a horrid prison, where he experienced very cruel usage. On being taken from this dungeon, he was placed with a Christian merchant to recover his strength, and went a few days afterwards to Morocco, where the Portuguese lords wanted to detain him among them; but, in compliance with his most earnest entreaties, he was sent to the 'Sagene,' the prison of the poor Christian slaves, and did infinite good there, by consoling and instructing them in their affliction. The countess de Linarez, his sister, and Philip II., king of Spain, would have ransomed him, but he chose to remain with the captives in order to instruct them. He spent four years in this pious employment, and died in the exercise of it, 17 April, 1682, aged 53. Thomas de Jesu composed an excellent devotional work, entitled 'The Sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ.'

ANDRE. See ANDREA, ANDREÆ, ANDREAS, ANDREW.

ANDRE, JEAN, a French painter, born, 1662, at Paris, where he died, 1753. He was a member of the Dominican order.

ANDRE, JOHN, a German musical composer, born 1741; died 18 June, 1799.

ANDRE, JOHN, an unfortunate British officer, born 1751. He was originally a merchant's clerk, but quitting the counting-house for the camp, he so highly distinguished himself in the American war, as to be raised to the rank of major. When the noted General Arnold made an overture to the British commander-in-chief, Sir Henry Clinton, the latter appointed Major André to negotiate this dangerous business, in the performance of which he fell into the hands of the Americans, who tried him as a spy, and caused him to be executed 1 Oct., 1780. A monument was afterwards erected to his memory in Westminster Abbey. He wrote an ingenious poem, called 'The Cow Chase.'

ANDRÉ, YVES MARIE, born 22 May, 1675, at Châteaulin, in Lower Brittany, entered the Society of Jesus, and from 1726 to 1759 was professor of mathematics at Caen, where he died 26 Feb., 1764. His 'Essay on the Beautiful' has been much admired. A complete edition of his works appeared at Paris, 1 vol., 12mo., 1766.

ANDREA DA PISA, an early Italian architect and sculptor, born at Pisa, 1270; died at Florence, 1345.

ANDREA DEL SARTO, or VANNUCCI, a painter, was born at Florence, 1488, being the son of a tailor. He was a pupil of Peter da Cosimo. After working some time for Leo X., he went into France, where he was employed by Francis I., who loaded him with wealth and honours; but being afterwards pressed by his wife to return to Italy, he recrossed the Alps, under pretence of fetching his family into France. Having spent in building, and in treating his friends, a large sum of money, which had been given to him by Francis I. for the purpose of buying paintings in Italy, this dishonourable conduct obliged him to return to Florence, where, after painting some very fine pictures, he died of the plague, 1530. He was excessively fond of his wife, who was his model for female beauty.

ANDRÉE, JOHN GERHARD REINHARD, an ingenious naturalist, of Hanover, was born 1724. His father was an apothecary, whom he succeeded in his business. He gained an extensive knowledge of chemistry, botany, and natural history, and travelled through several countries to make himself acquainted with their productions. He published 'A Tour in Switzerland,' 4to., 1776, and a 'Treatise on the several kinds of Earth in Hanover.' Died 1 May, 1793.

ANDRÉE, TOBIAS, professor of history and Greek at Groningen. He was a zealous Cartesian, and wrote a treatise, entitled 'Methodi Cartesianæ asserio,' printed in 1653. He died in 1676, aged 72.

ANDREANI, ANDREW, a painter and wood engraver, born at Mantua, 1540; died 1623.

ANDREAS, BERNARD, born at Toulouse, became an Augustinian friar, and probably accompanied Henry VII. to England. He was appointed poet laureate and royal historiographer; and also held some tutorial office at Oxford. In 1498 the bishop of Lincoln conferred upon him the hospital of St. Leonard's, Bedford, which he resigned the following year. He also held other ecclesiastical offices. In or about 1496 he was appointed tutor to Arthur, prince of Wales, and he was a witness of his pupil's marriage, by proxy, to Catharine of Arragon. It is said that it was he who induced Henry VIII. to write the famous book against Luther, which gained for that monarch the title of 'Defender of the Faith.' Andreas was alive in 1521, but probably died soon after. Besides some poems, Andreas wrote a valuable history of the reign of Henry VII., published under this title, 'Historia Regis Henrici Septimi, à Bernardo Andrea Theologo conscripta.' Edited by James Gairdner. Lond., 8vo., 1858.

ANDREAS.

ANDREAS, JAMES, chancellor and rector of the university of Tubingen, a very zealous Lutheran, born at Waiblingen, in the duchy of Württemberg, 25 March, 1528. He was much esteemed by all his party, and the greatest princes of the confession of Augsburg employed him on various occasions. Died 7 Jan., 1590. His principal work is the 'Form of Concord,' 4to., 1582.

ANDREAS, JOHN, a canonist, born at Mugello, near Florence, about 1275, studied the canon law at Bologna, under the Professor Guy de Baif. About 1330 he was professor at Padua, but was afterwards recalled to Bologna, where he acquired the greatest reputation. Andreas had a beautiful daughter, named Novella, whom he loved extremely. It is said he instructed her so well in all branches of learning, that when anything prevented him from reading to his scholars, he sent his daughter to supply his place, a small curtain being drawn before her, lest her beauty might distract the attention of the hearers. To perpetuate the memory of this daughter, he entitled his commentary upon the decretals of Gregory IX. the 'Novellæ.' He married her to John Calderinus, a learned canonist. Andreas wrote many works, and died of the plague at Bologna, 7 July, 1348.

ANDREAS, JOHN, of Ratishon, an old German chronicler, known also by the name of Andreas Magister. He was an Augustinian canon, and was living in 1410.

ANDREAS, JOHN, secretary to the library of the Vatican under Popes Paul II. and Sixtus IV., was born a subject to the duke of Milan. Cardinal de Cusa, whose fellow student he had been, procured for him the bishopric of Accia, in the island of Corsica, and Paul II. afterwards translated him to that of Alleria, in the same island, where he died 1493. When Conrad Swengheim and Arnoul Panartz brought the art of printing to Rome, in the time of Paul II., John Andreas was intrusted by his holiness with the care of the works that were to be printed. He furnished the greater part of the MSS., prepared the editions, added the epistles dedicatory, and prefaces, and even corrected the proof-sheets. He published editions of Titus Livius; of Aulus Gellius, fol., Rome, 1469; of St. Cyprian's 'Epistles;' of 'Herodoti Historiæ;' 1475; of the works of St. Leo; and of Strabo, fol., Venice, 1472. He also wrote a funeral oration upon Cardinal de Cusa, his friend and benefactor.

ANDREAS, JOHN, was born at Jativa, in Spain, being son of an alfaqui, or chief doctor, of that city. He was brought up in the Mahometan religion, and became alfaqui himself, but in 1487 embraced Catholicism, and was ordained priest. There is a book of his in Spanish, entitled 'The Confusion of the Sect of Mahomet,' Seville, 1537. This work has furnished the writers against the Mahometans with their best arguments.

ANDREAS, JOHN VALENTINE, a German Protestant divine who wrote several mystical books in Latin, which have led some to believe that he was the founder of the sect of Rosicrucians. Born 1586; died 27 June, 1654.

ANDREAS, VALERIUS, a celebrated librarian of the university of Louvaine, born 25 Nov., 1588, at Desser, a village of Brabant. He immortalized his name by a great number of works, the most esteemed of which is his 'Library of the Authors of the Low Countries,' originally published 1643, and reprinted with additions by Froppen, in 2 vols., 4to., 1739. Died 1660.

ANDREE.

ANDREE, JOHN, M.D., an English physician and medical writer, born 1698 or 1099, and died at London, 1764.

ANDREE JOHN, M.D., probably son of the preceding, was also a writer on professional subjects. He was living 1819.

ANDREINI, FRANCIS, an Italian dramatist, who wrote 'Le Bravure del Capitan Spavento,' 4to., Venice, 1607, and other pieces. He died about 1620.

ANDREINI, ISABELLA, wife of the preceding, was a native of Padua, and, if we may believe her husband, one of the most beautiful, witty, and virtuous women of the age she lived in. She was received into the academy of the 'Intenti' at Padua, and died at Lyons, 10 June, 1604, aged 42. Her poems are in great esteem.

ANDREINI, JOHN BAPTIST, son of the preceding, was born at Florence, 1578. Of his dramatic works the only one deserving of notice is 'Adamo,' a sacred poem, 1613. This is supposed to have suggested to Milton the idea of the 'Paradise Lost.' We have no account of the author's death.

ANDRELINUS, PUBLIUS FAUSTUS, a Latin poet, a native of Forli, in the States of the Church, died 25 Feb., 1518. He received the poetical crown at Rome, and went to Paris, where he professed the belles lettres and mathematics, conferring upon himself the title of poet to the king and queen. His letters in the form of proverbs were printed at Strasburg, 1571; and his poems are in the 'Deliciae Poetarum Italorum.'

ANDREOSSI, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, great-grandson of François Andreossi, who is noticed below, was born at Castelnaudary, 1761. He entered the army, and was a warm promoter of the French Revolution. In 1767, being then a chief of brigade, he and General Joubert were deputed to present to the Directory the colours which had been captured by the army in Italy. He accompanied the expedition to Egypt, whence he followed Buonaparte to Paris, and concurred in the revolution of the 18th Brumaire. He was rewarded with several honourable offices and the rank of lieutenant-general. After the treaty of Amiens he was ambassador at London, and subsequently he went to Constantinople in the same capacity. On his return to France in 1814 he communicated some most important memoirs to the Institute, on the subject of hydrostatics. He adhered to the revolution of 1815, and accepted a peerage and the presidency of the war department. After the battle of Waterloo he was one of the commissioners appointed to negotiate with the allied powers. Died 10th Sept., 1828. His works are 'Memoires sur le Lac Menzaleh, sur la Vallée du Lac de Natron, sur le Fleuve sans eau,' 4to., Paris, 1800, reprinted in the 'Memoires sur l'Egypte'; 'Campagne sur le Mein et la Rednitz de l'armée gallo-batave aux ordres du général Augereau,' 8vo., 1802; 'Mémoires sur l'irruption du Pont Euxin dans la Méditerranée, et sur le système des eaux qui abreuvent Constantinople,' et 'Constantinople et le Bosphore de Thrace pendant les années 1812, 1813, 1818, et 1826,' 8vo., Paris, 1828.

ANDREOSSI, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French engineer, born at Paris, 1633; died at Castelnaudary, 1688. In conjunction with Riquet he projected the famous canal of Languedoc.

ANDREOZZI, GAETANO, a musical composer, born at Naples, 1763, died Dec., 1826.

ANDREWS.

ANDRES, JUAN, a learned Jesuit, one of the most laborious writers of the eighteenth century, was born, 1740, at Planes, in Valentia, Spain. On the suppression of his order, he retired to Italy, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. Died 13 Jan., 1817. His chief works are, an essay on Galileo's philosophy; a treatise on the origin, progress, and present state of every literature; and 'Cartas familiares con la noticia del viaje a varias ciudades de Europa,' 6 vols. 4to., Madrid, 1794.

ANDREW I., king of Hungary, ascended the throne 1047, and died 1061.

ANDREW II. the Jerusalemite, king of Hungary, 1205. He took the cross 1217, and displayed great courage in the Holy Land. He was engaged in various wars, all of which he managed with success. Died 7 March, 1235.

ANDREW III., the Venetian, king of Hungary, was grandson of the preceding. He ascended the throne 1290, and died 14 Jan., 1301.

ANDREW, REV. JAMES, LL.D., F.R.S., a native of Scotland, became principal of the East India Company's military seminary at Addiscombe. Born 1774; died at Edinburgh, 13 June, 1833. He wrote, 'Institutes of Grammar, as applicable to the English Language, or as Introductory to the Study of other Languages,' 8vo., London, 1817; 'Key to Scripture Chronology,' 8vo., London, 1822; 'Astronomical and Nautical Tables,' 8vo., 1810; and 'A Hebrew Grammar and Dictionary.'

ANDREW, WILLIAM, D.D., an English Dominican, was appointed bishop of Achonry, in Ireland, 1374, and six years afterwards was translated to Meath. Died 28 Sept., 1385. He was a prelate of great wisdom and learning, yet, after the manner of Socrates, he would never publish any of his writings.

ANDREWE, LAURENCE, a translator and printer, flourished in the early part of the sixteenth century. He appears to have been a native of Calais. Soon after 1510 he settled as a printer in London, where he published several books. His last work was 'The Valuation of Golde and Siluer, made in the famous Cite of Antwarpe, and newly translated into English by me Laurens Andrewe.'

ANDREWE, THOMAS, an English poet. All that is known concerning him is that he was at the battle of Nicuport, in Flanders, 1600, and that he wrote a poem entitled, 'The Unmasking of a Feminine Machiavell,' 4to., London, 1604.

ANDREWES, GERARD, D.D., born at Leicester, 1750, educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge, became alternate evening preacher at the Magdalen, and was successively rector of St. James, Westminster, and dean of Canterbury. Died 2 June, 1825. As a preacher he enjoyed great popularity; but his writings consist of a single sermon, and some notes of lectures on the liturgy, published in 'The Pulpit of Onsimus.'

ANDREWS, HENRY, an English astronomer, born at Frieston, near Grantham, Lincolnshire, 4 Feb., 1744; died at Royston, Herts, 26 Jan., 1820. He was astronomical calculator to the Board of Longitude, and for many years corresponded with Maskelyne and other eminent men. For upwards of forty years he was compiler of Moore's Almanack, and by his talent and management he raised its sale from 100,000 to 500,000, yet all he received for his services from the Company of Stationers was the munificent sum of £25 per annum. He left MS. collections for the history of Royston.

ANDREWS, Henry, an English writer on botany,

resided in London during most of his life, and died there, but in what year has not been ascertained. He was alive in 1828.

ANDREWS, JAMES PETTIT, an historical and miscellaneous writer, was son of Joseph Andrews, of Shaw House, near Newbury, Berks, where he was born, 1757. He was educated under a private tutor, and afterwards led a retired and studious life. On the establishment of the London police magistracy in 1792, he was appointed magistrate for Queen Square and St. Margaret's, Westminster. He died in London, 6 Aug., 1797. His principal works are, a collection of anecdotes; 'The History of Great Britain connected with the Chronology of Europe;' and a continuation of Henry's 'History of Great Britain.' In conjunction with the pre-laureate Pye, he composed 'The Inquirer,' a tragedy.

ANDREWS, JOHN, an English theological writer, was educated at Oxford. He was living 1630. He wrote 'The Converted Man's New Birth,' &c.

ANDREWS, JOHN, LL.D., an English historical writer, born in or about 1727; died at Kennington, Surrey, 22 Jan., 1800. He wrote, 'History of the Kingdoms of Denmark, with an Account of the Present State of that Kingdom and People,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1774; 'History of the War with America, France, Spain and Holland, commencing in 1775, and ending in 1783,' 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1780-9; 'Inquiry into the Manners, Taste, and Amusements of the last two Centuries in England,' 8vo., London, 1782; 'Characteristical Views of the Past and Present State of the People of Spain and Italy,' 1808, &c.

ANDREWS, LANCELOT, D.D., successively bishop of Chichester, Ely, and Winchester, was born in London, 25 Sept., 1595, being the son of a painter who was a master of the Trinity House. He was educated first at Cooper's Free School in London, whence he was removed to Merchant Taylor's School, and obtained an exhibition at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where, having taken his degrees in arts, he applied himself to divinity. Subsequently he was nominated one of the original fellows of Jesus College, Oxford. Sir Francis Walsingham obtained for him the living of St. Geo. Cripplegate, and afterwards a prebend and rectorship of St. Paul's. On the death of Dr. Fauce he was chosen master of Pembroke Hall, to which he was a great benefactor. He was also appointed one of the chaplains to Queen Elizabeth, who greatly admired his preaching. King James I. employed him to defend the sovereignty of kings against Bellarmine, who had lately attacked it under the name of Matthæus Tortus. Dr. Andrews did this with much spirit, in a piece called 'Tortura Torti,' for which the king gave him the bishopric of Chichester, 1605, at the same time making him his almoner. In 1609 he was translated to Ely, and appointed one of the privy council for England and also for Scotland. In 1618 he was removed to Winchester, and appointed dean of the king's chapel. He died on the anniversary of his birth, 25 Sept., 1626, at Winchester House, in Southwark. Dr. Andrews had a share in the authorized translation of the Bible, and a volume of his sermons was published after his death by Bishops Laud and Buckridge. His private devotions and meditations, in Greek, were translated into English by Dr. Stanhope.

ANDREWS, MILES PETER, author of some dramatic pieces of little merit, was the second son of a merchant in London. He was a member of parliament, and renowned as a man of fashion. Died 18 July, 1814.

ANDREWS, ROBERT, descended from an ancient family long seated at Rivington Hall, near Bolton, Lancashire, was chosen in 1747 minister of the Presbyterian congregation at Lydgate, in the parish of Kirkburton, Yorkshire. He continued to hold this charge till about 1753. Mr. Andrews, who is described as a man of considerable scholarship and taste, published a volume of poems, entitled, 'Ecdylla,' and a translation of Virgil into blank verse, 1766.

ANDREWS, WILLIAM, an English astrologer and almanack maker, who flourished in the latter half of the sixteenth century. It appears that in 1656 he was residing at Ashdon in Essex. His chief work is 'The Astrological Physician,' 12mo., London, 1656, 1658. The celebrated William Lilly supplied the preface. Andrews was alive in 1683, but when he died is unknown.

ANDREWS, WILLIAM EUSEBIUS, an English Catholic writer, was born at Norwich, 15 Dec., 1773. He established himself as a bookseller in London, and started several periodicals in support of the Roman church. The principal of these was 'The Orthodox Journal.' He also wrote 'A Critical and Historical Review of Fox's Book of Martyrs, showing the Inaccuracies, Falsehoods, and Misrepresentations of that work,' and several controversial pamphlets. Died 7 April, 1837.

ANDRIEU, BERTRAND, the restorer, in France, of the art of engraving medals, was born at Bordeaux, 24 Nov., 1761; and died at Paris, 6 Dec., 1822.

ANDRIEU X, FEANÇOIS GUILLAUME JEAN STANISLAS, a prolific French author, born at Strasburg, 6 May, 1759; died 9 May, 1833. He was permanent secretary to the French Academy, and professor of literature in the College of France. Andrieux' works, in all branches of literature, are very numerous.

ANDROMACHUS, OF CRETE physician, to the Emperor Nero, about A.D. 65. He invented 'Theriac,' and wrote a description thereof in elegiac verse. It was this Andromachus who first took the title of 'Archiatr,' or first physician to the emperors.

ANDRONICUS I., COMNENUS, strangled his pupil, Alexius II., and took possession of the throne of Constantinople 1183, but the people, irritated by his cruelties, proclaimed Isaac Angelus emperor, and put Andronicus in irons. His eyes being put out, he was led ignominiously about the city, mutilated, and afterwards hanged, 12 Sept., 1185.

ANDRONICUS, II., PALÆOLOGUS, called the Elder, emperor of Constantinople, was born about 1258, proclaimed emperor 1282, and died 13 Feb., 1332.

ANDRONICUS III., PALÆOLOGUS, called the Younger, was grandson of the preceding. He was born about 1295, ascended the throne 1328, and died 15 June, 1341.

ANDRONICUS, LIVIUS, the most ancient of the Latin comic poets. His first piece was acted about 240 B.C. Some fragments of his writings are preserved.

ANDRONICUS OF RHODES, a peripatetic philosopher, who lived at Rome in the time of Cicero, 63 B.C. He restored and published the works of Aristotle, which Sylla had brought from Greece. He also wrote some commentaries on Aristotle, which were published in Greek and Latin at Cambridge, 8vo., 1679.

ANDRONICUS.

ANDRONICUS, of THESSALONICA, one of the earned men who quitted Greece after Constantino-ple was taken, 1453. He went into Italy, and taught Greek at Florence, Rome, and Paris. Died about 1478.

ANDROS, SIR EDMUND, born in London, 6 Dec., 1637, was appointed governor of New York 1674. He was recalled 1681, and on his arrival in England was created a knight. In 1686 he was nominated governor of New England, in which capacity he acted with such harshness as to render himself odious to the people. Soon after the news arrived across the Atlantic of the landing of William, prince of Orange in England, the citizens of Boston rose in insurrection, and compelled Andros to surrender his office. To the astonishment of the Americans, however, King William appointed him, in 1692, to the governorship of Virginia, which post he held till 1698. He died at Westminster, 24 Feb., 1713. His only work is a vindication of his proceedings in New York, 1691, 1773.

ANDROUET DU CERCEAU, JAMES, a famous French architect of the sixteenth century, drew the plans of the Tuileries, the Pont Neuf, &c. His 'Architecture,' 1559, fol., has been reprinted. He left besides, 'Les plus excellens Bâtimens de France,' 1576; and 'Leçons de Perspective,' fol., Paris, 1576. Died 1592.

ANDRY DE BOISREGARD, NICHOLAS, a French medical writer, born 1658; died 13 May, 1742.

ANEAU, BARTHOLOMEW, a Latin poet and French historian, lawyer, and orator, was born at Bourges, and became professor of rhetoric at Lyons, where he was made principal of Trinity College. In 1565, on the festival of Corpus Christi, as the priest was carrying the holy sacrament in procession, a stone was thrown upon him from a window in that college. The Catholics, irritated, rushed in directly, and meeting with Aneau, who was thought secretly to be a Calvinist, struck him down, and tore him to pieces. Among his works are 'Des Chants Royaux;' 'A Mystery of the Nativity;' 'Lyon Marchand,' a French satire; and 'Alector, ou le Coq.'

ANEL, DOMINIQUE, a French surgeon, who attained considerable celebrity by his operations for aneurism and fistula lachrymalis. Born at Toulouse 1678 or 1679; died about 1730.

ANESI, PAUL, a Florentine landscape and architectural painter, flourished in the middle of the eighteenth century. He was the master of Zuccharelli.

ANEURIN, a celebrated Welsh poet, lived in the early part of the sixth century. About 540 the battle of Cattaeth was fought between the Saxons and Britons, when the latter were defeated with such slaughter that out of 363 British chieftains, three only, of whom Aneurin was one, escaped with their lives. He was afterwards taken prisoner, loaded with chains, and thrown into a dungeon, from which he was released by Cenen, a son of Llywarch Hen. The disastrous battle of Cattaeth caused the migration of numbers of the northern Britons to their kindred race in Wales, and Aneurin is said to have found a refuge at the famous college of Cattwg, in South Wales, where, about A.D. 570, he was treacherously slain by one Eiddin. The battle of Cattaeth is the subject of a noble heroic poem by Aneurin, which is still extant, and the authenticity of which has been proved by Sharon Turner, in his 'Vindication of the Ancient British Poems.' This great poem is entitled the 'Gododin,' from the Ottadini, which was the name of that tribe of Britons to which Aneurin belonged. It is printed in the 'Myvyrian Archaeology.' Another poem by him, being stanzas on the months of the year, entitled 'Englynyon y Misocdd,' is preserved in the same collection. Dr. Owen Pughe has advanced some arguments to show that Aneurin and Gildas were one and the same person.

ANGAS, CALEB, a celebrated Yorkshire agriculturist, died at Driffield, 6 Feb., 1860, aged 78. His letters to the 'Sun' newspaper, in favour of free trade, excited much attention, and were frequently referred to by Mr. Cobden during the Anti-Corn Law crusade.

ANGE DE ST. JOSEPH, FATHER, a bare-footed Carmelite, whose original name was Joseph de la Brosse. He studied the oriental languages, and was employed in the missions of the Levant and of England. On his return he retired to Toulouse, his native place, and died at Perpignan, 29 Dec., 1697, aged 61. He wrote 'Pharmacopœia Persica,' 8vo., 1681; and 'Gazophilacium Linguae Persarum,' fol., 1684.

ANGE DE ST. ROSALIE, a French Augustinian, compiled a history of the royal family of France and of the great officers of the crown. Born 1655; died 1726.

ANGEL, JOHN, an English Catholic writer, was chaplain to King Philip and Queen Mary. He published a treatise concerning the real presence, entitled 'The Agreement of the Holy Fathers,' 12mo., 1555.

ANGELA, MERICIA (St.), or Angela di Brescia, a native of Desenzano, on the lake of Garda. She founded the Ursuline order at Brescia, 1537, and it was approved by Paul III., 1544. She died piously, 1540, aged 34. Festival, May 31.

ANGELI, BONAVENTURA, an Italian lawyer, who wrote a history of Parma, and other works. Born about 1525; died 1576.

ANGELI, PETER, Angelus Bergeus, a famous Latin poet, born at Barga, a village of Tuscany, 1517. With his scholars he bravely defended the city of Pisa against Peter Strozzi, who besieged it. He died 29 Feb., 1596. His poem on hunting, in the collection of his poetry, 8vo., Florence, 1568, and 4to., Rome, 1585, is esteemed. Another, entitled 'The Syriad,' or conquest of Jerusalem, was printed fol., 1582, and again at Florence, 4to., 1591.

ANGELI, PHILIP, a painter, native of Rome, but called, from his long residence in Naples, the Neapolitan. In 1612 he was invited to the court of Cosmo, grand duke of Florence. His works are rarely to be met with, and realise high prices. Born 1600; died 1640.

ANGELICO, GIOVANNI, was born at Fiesole 1387, and is often called, from his birthplace, Fra Giovanni da Fiesole. He took the habit of St. Dominic, and immortalized his name by his skill in painting, and his virtue. Nicholas V. employed him to paint his chapel, and offered him the archbishopric of Florence, but Angelico refused it. He chose only religious subjects for his pictures. Died at Rome 1455.

ANGELIS, DOMINIC D', an Italian priest, born at Lecce, the capital of Otranto, 1675, and died there 9 Aug., 1719. He wrote the lives of several persons of eminence; an historical discourse on the foundation of the city of Lecce; and Italian poems.

ANGELIS.

ANGELIS, PETER, a painter, born at Dunkirk, 1665. He painted landscapes with figures, and also conversation pieces. About 1712 he came to England, and after residing here several years, went to Rome, where his works were eagerly sought for; yet, owing to his modesty, he profited little in his fortune by the popularity he acquired. On his return from Italy he settled at Rennes, in France, where he died 1734.

ANGELL, JOHN, an English nonconformist divine, was born about the latter end of the sixteenth century, in Gloucestershire, and died 1655. His works are, 'The Right Government of Thoughts,' 8vo., London, 1659; and 'Four Sermons,' 8vo., London, 1659.

ANGELL, JOHN, a writer on stenography, published 'Stenography, or Short-hand Improved; being the most compendious, lineal, and easy method hitherto extant. The Persons, Moods, Tenses, and Particles which most frequently occur, are adapted to join with Ease and Accuracy at pleasure. The Rules are laid down with such Propriety, Consistency, and Perspicuity, that the Practitioner will need no other Assistance. The whole illustrated with an Alphabetical Praxis, adapted to all purposes in general, but more particularly to the three Learned Professions, namely, Law, Physic, and Divinity.' By John Angell, who has practised this art above thirty years,' 8vo., London, [1758]. Boswell, in his life of Johnson, records the circumstance of a person being mentioned who, it was said, could take down in short-hand the speeches a parliament with perfect exactness. Upon this Johnson said — 'Sir, it is impossible. I remember one Angell who came to me to write for him a preface or dedication to a book upon short-hand, and he professed to write as fast as a man could speak. In order to try him, I took down a book he read while he wrote; and I favoured him, for I read more deliberately than usual. I had proceeded but a very little way, when he begged I would desist, for he could not follow me.' A perusal of the preface to the above-named work will convince any one that Dr. Johnson was not the author of it. Angell's system of stenography a slight variation of the admirable method invented by William Mason. He also wrote 'An Essay on Prayer, the nature, method, and importance of that duty. To which is added a variety of specimens of Prayer, as delivered by several eminent dissenting ministers in London, taken in short-hand by the Editor,' 12mo., London, 1761. When Angell died I have been unable to ascertain, but a person of the same name died 'extremely old,' at Stockwell, Surrey, 19 March, 1784, aged 84.

ANGELO DE CLAVASIO, a Franciscan, and famous casuist, who wrote a summary of cases of conscience, entitled 'Summa Angelica,' fol., Venice, 1487. It was printed ten times before 1499. The author died at Conti, 1495.

ANGELO, HENRY, a celebrated fencer, and superintendent of sword exercise to the British army, died at Brighton 14 Oct., 1852, aged 72.

ANGELO, MICHAEL. See MICHAEL ANGELO.

ANGELONI, FRANCIS, an antiquary, born at Terni, in Umbria, became secretary to Cardinal Albobrandini, and died at Rome, 1652, leaving a most valuable cabinet of antiquities. His principal works are a history of the Roman emperors by means of medals, and a history of Terni.

ANGELONI, LOUIS, an Italian politician and writer, born at Frosinone, 1758, died at London,

ANGERVILLE.

1842. At the time of the French revolution he became a member of the government of the Roman republic. Subsequently he went to Paris, where he was implicated in the conspiracy of Ceracchi and Tobino-Lebrun, 1801. After ten months' imprisonment he was set at liberty, but in 1823 he was banished from France, whereupon he retired to England, and remained here until his death.

ANGELUS À SANCTO FRANCISCO, an English Franciscan, whose real name was Richard Mason, wrote 'Certamen Seraphicum Provincie Angliæ,' and other works, and died at Douay, 30 Dec., 1678, æt. 78. Harris claims him as an Irishman, but the probability is that he was a native of Yorkshire.

ANGELUS, CHRISTOPHER, a native of Greece, came to this country, and after studying for a time at Cambridge, settled at Oxford, where he resided until his death, on 1 Feb., 1638-9. His works are 'Enchiridion de Institutis Græcorum;' 'An Ecomium of the famous kingdom of Great Britain;' and 'De Apostasiâ Ecclesiæ.'

ANGENNES, CHARLES D', bishop of Mans, well known by the name of Cardinal de Rambouillet, son of James d'Angennes and Elizabeth Cottereau, of a noble and ancient family, originally of Perche, in France, born 30 Oct., 1530. He was nominated to the bishopric of Mans by King Charles IX., 1559, and was at the conclusion of the council of Trent, 1563. Being sent on an embassy to Pius V., that pope made him a cardinal, 1570. He was present at the election of Sixtus V., who gave him the government of Corneto, where he died, 23 March, 1587, not without suspicion of poison. While he was bishop of Mans that city was taken by the Calvinists, and the cathedral of St. Julian plundered.

ANGENNES, CLAUDE, brother of the cardinal de Rambouillet, was born 1538, became bishop of Noyon 1577, and of Mans 1588. He established a seminary in the latter city, where he died 15 May, 1601. There is a letter by him against the action of James Clement, 8vo., 1599. It is joined to the answer of a doctor of divinity, who is thought to be John Boucher.

ANGERSTEIN, JOHN JULIUS, was born at St. Petersburg, 1735, and about 1749 came to London, where he soon became eminent as a broker and underwriter. He rendered great services to Lloyd's Coffee-house, and to the Veterinary College, and it should be recorded to his honour that he was the first who proposed a reward of £2000 from the fund at Lloyd's for that humane and meritorious invention, the life-boat, which has been the means of saving so many human beings from destruction. During the commercial period of his life, Mr. Angerstein was connected in business with several individuals of great eminence in the city. The first firm was Angerstein and Dick; the second, Angerstein and Lewis; the third, Angerstein, Lewis, and Warren; and the last, Angerstein and Rivaz. Having at length accumulated a princely fortune, Mr. Angerstein, on 1 Aug., 1811, retired from active life, and thenceforward divided his time chiefly between his house in Pall Mall and his delightful villa at Blackheath, called Woodlands. Died 22 Jan., 1823. His celebrated collection of pictures was purchased by the government for £60,000 and furnished the nucleus of the National Gallery.

ANGIER.

ANGIER, SAMUEL, an English nonconformist divine, born at Dedham, Essex, 28 Aug., 1639; died 8 Nov., 1713. He was expelled from Oxford for nonconformity, and passed the remainder of his life at Dukenfield, near Stockport.

ANGIERS, PAUL, an engraver, who lived in London, in the early part of the seventeenth century. He was chiefly employed in engraving landscapes and small plates for booksellers. Flourished 1753.

ANGILBERT, St., was descended from a noble family of Neustria, and brought up at the court of Charlemagne, where he studied with him and other courtiers under the learned Alcuin. When Pepin, the son of Charlemagne, was crowned king of Italy, his father gave him Angilbert for 'primicier' of his palace, or prime minister. He followed the young prince to Italy, and returned to France some years afterwards. Charlemagne then gave him his daughter Bertha in marriage, by whom he had two sons, Harnid, and Nitard the historian. Being now son-in-law of Charlemagne, he was made duke or governor of maritime France, from the Scheldt to the Seine; also secretary to the king, and his principal minister. In 790 Alcuin and Adalar, abbat of Corby, prevailed upon him to turn monk, in the monastery of Centule, or St. Riquier, with the consent of his wife, and permission of the king. Notwithstanding his love of retirement he was often forced to leave the monastery, in order to assist in the affairs of the church and state. In or before 794 he was elected abbat of Centule. Died 18 Feb., 814. Angilbert cultivated learning, and had so great a taste for poetry that Charlemagne used to call him his Homer. Some of his pieces are to be found in the collection of the historians of France, in Alcuin, and in the 'Spicilegium.' The history which he left of his monastery is in the 'Acts' of Mabillon.

ANGIOLELLO, GIOVANNI MARIO, a native of Vicenza, wrote a history of Mahomet II. in Italian and Turkish, and presented it to that sultan, by whom it was well received. He was slave to the young sultan, Mustapha, whom he had followed into Persia, 1473. Died about 1530.

ANGLESEY, ARTHUR ANNESLEY, earl of, was born at Dublin, 10 July, 1614. At the age of sixteen he was entered of Magdalen College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, where he studied the law, and then went on his travels. At the beginning of the Rebellion he joined the Royalist party, and sat in the parliament at Oxford in 1643; but afterwards he made his peace with the Republicans, and was sent commissioner, in 1645, to Ulster, where he rendered great service to the Protestant interest. He took an active part in promoting the restoration of the king, with whom he held a correspondence while his majesty was in exile. For this he was created earl of Anglesey, 1661, and in 1667 made treasurer of the navy. In 1672 he was appointed a commissioner for inspecting the settlements of Ireland, and the next year was made lord privy seal. In 1680 he was accused by Dangerfield, at the bar of the House of Commons, of endeavouring to stifle evidence concerning the popish plot. In 1682 he presented a spirited remonstrance to Charles II. relative to the state of the nation, and the danger to be apprehended from the duke of York being a Catholic. Soon afterwards he was dismissed from his office, whereupon he retired to his country seat, where he devoted himself to study. He died 6 April,

ANGOULEME.

1686, leaving several children. His writings which remain show him to have been a man of learning and sagacity; but the most valuable of his works is lost. It was entitled 'History of the Troubles in Ireland, from 1641 to 1660.' His 'Memoirs,' published in 1693, by Sir Peter Pett, are full of curious and entertaining matter.

ANGLESEY, HENRY WILLIAM PAGET, marquis of, K.G., born 17 May, 1768, being eldest child of Henry, first earl of Uxbridge. After receiving his education at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A., 1786), he adopted the profession of arms. His first military distinction was acquired during the campaign in Holland in 1794. He also served with great distinction in Spain in 1808. In the autumn of that year Lord Paget returned to London, where he remained for some time, taking no part in the subsequent Peninsular campaigns. He succeeded his father as earl of Uxbridge in 1812. In 1815 all Europe was thunderstruck by Napoleon's sudden burst into France from his island cage; and the allies, recalling their scattered armies, again took the field. The command of the large cavalry forces attached to the Anglo-Belgian army was given to the earl of Uxbridge, to whose exertions, next to those of the great duke of Wellington himself, the glorious victory of Waterloo was mainly owing. After performing prodigies of valour, and apparently getting through the arduous struggles of the day, the earl received a wound in the knee from almost the last shot that was fired. The wound was of so serious a nature that it was found necessary to amputate the leg. A few days afterwards his lordship was created marquis of Anglesey. In 1837 he succeeded the duke of Wellington as master-general of the ordnance, on which occasion he was sworn a member of the privy council, and took his seat in the cabinet. The following year he was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland. This office he held about a twelvemonth only, but he became viceroy again at the close of 1830, under the Grey administration. In 1831 came the great trial of strength between him and O'Connell. The marquis called for coercion acts, which were fatal to Lord Grey's government. The marquis became extremely unpopular, and was frequently mobbed in the streets of Dublin. He again became master-general of the ordnance, on the formation of Lord John Russell's administration in 1846, and continued to hold that office till Lord Derby came into power in March, 1852. He was nominated to the command of the Horse Guards, 1842, and was advanced to the rank of field marshal. Died 29 April, 1854. Buried in Lichfield cathedral.

ANGLOS, THOMAS. See WHITE.

ANGOULEME, CHARLES DE VALOIS, duke of, the illegitimate son of Charles IX. and of Marie Touchet, was born 28 April, 1573. From his infancy he was designed for the order of Malta, but quitted it, 1591, by papal dispensation, and married Charlotte, daughter of the Constable de Montmorenci. Catharine de Medicis bequeathed to him the earldoms of Auvergne and Lauragais, and though the will was set aside by the parliament in 1606, Charles retained the title of count of Auvergne until 1610, in which year he was created duke of Angouleme. He was one of the first to acknowledge Henry IV., in whose service he fought with distinction at the battles of Arques (1589), Ivry (1590), and Fontaine-Française (1595). Being implicated in the conspiracy of Biron, he was cast into the Bastille, but afterwards obtained a pardon. In 1604 he was arrested, together with his sister, the marchioness of Verneuil, and in the following year was condemned to death, but the sentence was afterwards commuted to one of perpetual imprisonment. In 1616 he was again set at liberty, and he gave fresh proofs of valour at the sieges of Soissons and Rochelle, and in the wars in Germany, Languedoc, and Flanders. Died at Paris, 24 Sept., 1650. He left 'Memoirs,' which were first printed in 1662, some historical treatises, and a translation of Diego de Torres' 'History of Mexico.'

ANGOULEME, MARIE THERESE CHARLOTTE, duchess of, daughter of Louis XVI. of France and Marie Antoinette, was born at Versailles, 19 Dec., 1778. She shared the captivity of her ill-fated parents, and, although but a child, displayed uncommon heroism. She was released in 1795, and in 1799 married her cousin the duke of Angoulême. Her subsequent life was full of vicissitudes. Died 19 Oct., 1851.

ANGRIANI, AYGNANI, OF DE AYGNONIS, MICHAEL, a famous general of the Carmelite order, 1572, a native of Bologna. His principal work is a commentary on the Psalms, entitled 'Incognitus in Psalmis' 2 vols. folio, 1626. Died 16 Nov., 1600.

ANGUIER, FRANCIS, a French sculptor, executed the altar of the Val de Grace, the crucifix for the great altar of the Sorbonne, &c. Born 1604; died 1669.

ANGUIER, MICHAEL, brother of the preceding, also acquired celebrity as a sculptor. Born 1612; died 1680.

ANGULBERT, THEOBALD, M.D., of the university of Paris, was a native of Ireland, and wrote a book called 'Mensa Philosophica.' It is a treatise of table-talk, with some jokes and witticisms annexed, and was printed at Paris, 1530. The work has been ascribed by some to Michael Scott, under whose name it was printed at Leipsic, 1603.

ANGUILLARA, JOHN ANDREW DELL', an Italian poet, born 1517; died about 1570. He translated the 'Œdipus' of Sophocles, and Ovid's 'Metamorphoses.'

ANGUILLARA, LOUIS, a celebrated Italian botanist, for upwards of twenty years director of the botanical garden at Padua, died at Florence, 1570.

ANGUSCIOLA, SOPHONISBA, an Italian painter, born at Cremona, 1533; died 1626. Her sisters, Lucia and Europa, also acquired some distinction as artists.

ANGUS. See ÆNEAS.

ANGUS, ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, earl of, married Margaret, widow of James IV., and regent of Scotland. During the minority of James V., his son-in-law, he was one of his privy councillors. In 1521 he was made chancellor of Scotland. Afterwards, falling under the king's displeasure, he was outlawed, and retiring to England, was graciously received by Henry VIII., who took him into his privy council. Upon the death of James he returned to Scotland. He commanded the vanguard of the Scotch army against the English at the disastrous battle of Pinkiefield, where he gave sufficient proof of his bravery. Died 1557.

ANGUS, JOHN, a pious Independent minister, born at Styrford, near Hexham, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1747 he settled at Bishop's Stortford, where he remained until his death, on 22 Dec., 1801. He published a few occasional discourses.

ANNE.

ANGUS, WILLIAM DOUGLAS, earl of, eldest son of William, the ninth earl, was employed to suppress an insurrection. Afterwards he made public profession of the Catholic religion, and retired to France, where he entered some religious order. Dying in 1616, he was buried in the church of St. Germain's. He wrote 'A Chronicle of the House of Douglas,' and other antiquarian pieces.

ANGUS, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born 1752; died 12 Oct., 1821.

ANICETUS, ST., a Syrian, elected pope 157, held a conference with St. Polycarp, on the proper time of celebrating Easter. Although they differed in opinions they preserved peace, union, and charity. He suffered martyrdom, 17 April, 161.

ANICH, PETER, son of a labourer, who understood turning, was born, 1723, three leagues from Innspruck, and worked as a turner or labourer till the age of 25. He went into the fields before day-break, and returned very late. His delight was to admire the stars and their revolutions, though he had no idea that there were rules to determine them; but hearing that persons might be found at Innspruck who understood all these great things, he went there directly, and addressed himself to Father Hell, who, delighted with his sensible questions and answers, taught him astronomy. Anich in a short time constructed celestial and terrestrial globes, more exact than those used at the college of Innspruck. The empress, being informed of his rapid progress, employed him to draw a map of the Tyrol, and was about to reward him for it, when he was taken away by death, 1706.

ANIELLO, THOMAS. See MASSANIELLO.

ANIMOSUS, an Irish writer, composed 'The Life of St. Bridget, in many books.' The age in which he flourished is unknown.

ANLABY, WILLIAM, was educated at Cambridge (B.A. 1571), but being converted to the Catholic faith, he entered Douay college, and was ordained priest. Afterwards being sent as a missionary to his native county of York, he laboured in that capacity for twenty years, but being at length apprehended, he was hanged at York, 4 July, 1597.

ANNA COMNENA, daughter of the Emperor Alexius Comnenus the elder, a princess famous for her wit and learning, wrote the history of her father's reign, from 1081 to 1118. Born 1083; died 1148.

ANNA IVANOWNA, empress of Russia, was born 1693, being daughter of Ivan V., eldest brother of Peter the Great. She ascended the throne 1730; and died 28 Oct., 1740.

ANNALY, JOHN GORE, Lord, chief justice of the King's Bench in Ireland, died 1783.

ANNAND, WILLIAM, D.D., a Scotch Episcopal divine, was born at Ayr, 1633, and educated at University College, Oxford. In 1676 he was appointed dean of Edinburgh, and in 1685 was created doctor of divinity by the university of St. Andrews. He lived to see the re-establishment of the Presbyterian religion and the downfall of the episcopal church of Scotland, to which he was ardently attached. Died 16 June, 1689. He wrote several polemical tracts and sermons.

ANNAT, FRANCIS, a famous Jesuit, born at Rhodes, 5 Feb., 1590; died at Paris, 14 June, 1670. He was confessor to Louis XIV., and wrote several works against the Jansenists.

ANNE, queen of Great Britain, was the second daughter of James II., by Lady Anne Hyde, and was born 6 Feb., 1664. On 28 July, 1683, she married Prince George of Denmark, by whom she had several children, but all of them died young. She succeeded to the crown on the death of William III., 8 March, 1701-2. Her reign was distinguished by great glory, and, on account of the eminent literary characters which adorned it, has been called the Augustan age of Britain. But the spirit of party never, perhaps, rose higher than it did in her time. She died 1 Aug., 1714, and with her ended the line of the Stuarts, which, from the accession of James I., in 1603, had swayed the sceptre of England 111 years.

ANNE OF AUSTRIA, queen of France, eldest daughter of Philip III., king of Spain, was born 22 Sept., 1601. She married Louis XIII. of France, in 1615, and on 18 May, 1643, was declared regent of the kingdom during the minority of her son Louis XIV. This queen built the magnificent church of Val de Grace. Died 20 Jan., 1666. She was a princess of great courage and haughtiness, and it was only out of deference to Cardinal Mazarin that she, on different occasions, yielded to the wishes of the people. She was, however, firm in her determination not to allow her son to marry that minister's niece. 'If,' said she, 'the king were capable of such a meanness, I would place myself at the head of the whole nation with my second son, against the king and against you.'

ANNE OF BOHEMIA, daughter of the Emperor Charles IV., and sister of Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia, became the queen of Richard II., king of England, and died at Sheene, in Surrey, 1395.

ANNE OF BRITTANY, queen of France, and duchess of Brittany, was daughter and heiress of duke Francis II. and Margaret de Foix. She was born at Nantes, 26 Jan., 1476. She had been promised to Maximilian of Austria, but the duke, her father, dying, she married Charles VIII., king of France. Anne had a large share of sense, beauty, greatness of mind, and piety. She governed with great prudence during the absence of Charles VIII. in Italy. After his death she married Louis XII., who had been in love with her before her marriage to Charles. Died 9 Jan., 1514.

ANNE OF CLEVES, sister to William, duke of Cleves, and fourth wife of Henry VIII., king of England. Her portrait, drawn by the flattering hand of Holbein, was not displeasing to the king, but her ungraceful behaviour shocked his delicacy at first sight, and he peevishly asked 'whether they had brought him a Flanders mare.' However, on 6 Jan., 1539-40, he completed his engagement by marrying her at Greenwich. His aversion increasing after marriage, he soon came to the determination of obtaining a divorce. This was proposed to Anne, and her sensibility of mind not being affected by it, an accommodation soon took place. In the following year she retired into privacy, with a pension of £3000 per annum. The reason which the king gave as a ground for the divorce was, that having espoused her against his will, he had not given an inward consent to the marriage. Anne died at Chelsea, 16 July, 1557, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

ANNE OF DENMARK, the second daughter of Frederick II., king of Denmark and Norway, was married on 24 Nov., 1589, to James I., king of England, bringing with her as her dower the Shetlands and the Orkneys, which for a century had been pawned to the crown of Scotland. She died at Hampton Court, 1 March, 1618-19.

ANNE OF HUNGARY, daughter of Ladislaus VI.,

king of Poland, was born 1503, and married Ferdinand, emperor of Austria, 1527. She brought to her husband the crowns of Hungary and Bohemia. Died 27 Jan., 1547.

ANNE NEVILLE, queen of Richard III., king of England, was widow of Prince Edward, son of Henry VI. Edward was slain at Tewkesbury by Richard, to whom she was married shortly afterwards. Richard's treatment of her is said to have been such as a woman may be supposed to have merited who married the murderer of her husband. The admirable scene in Shakspeare between Richard and Anne is well known. Anne died 1484.

ANNEBAUT, CLAUDE, a French politician and warrior under Francis I., died 2 Nov., 1552. When Francis conceived the daring project, in 1545, of invading England, Annebaut was intrusted with its execution, but he contented himself with making a vain demonstration before Portsmouth.

ANNESLEY. See ANGLESEY.

ANNESLEY, ALEXANDER, a political and legal writer, was a solicitor by profession, and resided in the Inner Temple. He died at Hyde Hall, Hertfordshire, 6 Dec., 1813. He wrote 'Strictures on the True Causes of the present Scarcity of Grain and other Provisions, and a plan for permanent Relief, humbly submitted to public Consideration. With an Historical Deduction of the Prices of Provisions, interspersed with various matters connected with the Commerce and Navigation of Great Britain, together with a Chronological Account of the several Statutes, Proclamations, and Parliamentary Regulations for controlling the Markets, and preventing Monopoly, Engrossing, &c., from the Norman Conquest to the present Era.' 8vo., London, 1800; and 'A Compendium of the Law of Marine Insurances, Bottomry, Insurance on Lives, and of Insurance against Fire.' 8vo., London, 1808. Mr. Annesley also assisted Tomlins in the compilation of his 'Law Dictionary,' and contributed some articles to the 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia.'

ANNESLEY, SAMUEL, LL.D., a Puritan divine, was born, 1620, at Kenilworth, Warwickshire, of a good family, being first cousin to Arthur Annesley, earl of Anglesey. He received his education at Queen's College, Oxford, and on leaving the university was ordained by a bishop, though at a later period of his life he received Presbyterian ordination. After being for some time minister of Cliffe, in Kent, he was chosen, in 1652, minister of St. John the Evangelist, Friday Street, London. In 1657 the Protector Oliver appointed him preacher at St. Paul's; and in 1658 he obtained the living of St. Giles, Cripplegate. At the Restoration he was deprived of his preferments, though he still continued to preach. In 1672 he licensed a meeting-house in Little St. Helen's, where he gathered a flourishing congregation, of which he continued the pastor until his death, on 31 Dec., 1696. He left a son and two daughters, the younger of whom married the Rev. Samuel Wesley, and became the mother of the celebrated John Wesley, and of his brothers Charles and Samuel. Dr. Annesley's published works consist principally of sermons.

ANNETT, PETER, an English deistical writer, was, it is said, a native of Liverpool, and originally educated for the ministry among the Protestant dissenters, which society he quitted, and became a most virulent writer against Christianity. His earliest known publication in this way was an attack upon Bishop Sherlock's admirable tract on the resurrection. Afterwards he printed, without name, 'The History of the Man after God's own Heart,' in one small volume, which was answered by Dean Delany, Dr. Samuel Chandler, and Dr. afterwards Bishop, Porteus. In 1762 Annet published a paper, entitled 'The Free Enquirer,' for which he was prosecuted, pilloried, and imprisoned. While in the King's Bench, Archbishop Secker administered to his necessities. The late Mr. Newbery also waited upon him, and, merely out of charity, offered him a sum to complete a grammar, which Annet declined to do. His name was suffered to appear in the title-page—a condition too imprudent to be complied with. Among his works is a system of shorthand, which, though it passed through two editions, is entirely devoid of merit, and inferior in every respect to many methods that had preceded it. Died 1778.

ANNIUS OF VITERBO, whose real name was John Anni, a famous Dominican, born about 1432, at Viterbo, in the States of the Church. He became master of the holy palace under Alexander VI., and died 13 Nov., 1502. He published commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures, and seventeen books of antiquities, under the title 'Antiquitatum variarum volumina seu libri XVII.' fol., Rome, 1497; 8vo., 1528. This collection professes to contain the works of Berossus, Fabius Pictor, Myrses, and other writers of the highest antiquity. Many the learned were taken in by the publication; but it afterwards became known that these works were forgeries, which Annius had credulously, though in good faith, inserted in his book.

ANQUETIL, LOUIS PIERRE, was born at Paris, 22 Jan., 1723, and entered, at an early age, the congregation of St. Genevieve. After having professed the belles-lettres, philosophy, and divinity, he applied himself especially to historical studies. He became master of the college of Sensis, and a member of the French Institute, and of the Legion d'Honneur. Died 6 Sept., 1808. Among his many works are a history of Rheims; 'L'Esprit de la Logique,' 'Abridgment of Universal History,' 'History of France,' and a biography of his brother, Abraham Hyacinthe Anquetil-Duperron.

ANQUETIL-DUPERRON, ABRAHAM HYACINTHE, a French orientalist, brother of Louis Pierre Anquetil, was born at Paris, 7 Dec., 1731. He was called to the church, but not being inclined to the orders, he turned soldier, and went to India, 1754. After spending some years in that country, he came to London, and subsequently visited Genoa, arriving in Paris, 1762, without fortune, but the possessor of 180 oriental MSS. He now obtained a pension, and the place of oriental interpreter in the royal library. In 1771 he published the 'Zend-Avesta,' accompanied by an account of his travels, and a life of Zoroaster, 3 vols. 8vo. In 1778, his 'Legislation Orientale,' in 1786, 'Recherches Historiques et Geographiques sur l'Inde,' in 1785, 'De la Dignité du Commerce et de l'Etat du Commerçant.' His other works are, 'L'Inde en rapport avec l'Europe,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1790; a Latin translation of the 'Goupnek'hat,' a Persian work, the title of which means, 'Secrets not to be revealed,' and memoirs read before the French Academy. Died 17 Jan., 1805.

ANSALDI, CASTO INNOCENT, an antiquary, was born in 1710, at Plaisance, and in 1726 took the Dominican habit. He became professor of philosophy at Turin, where he died, 1770. Of his numerous works, it is sufficient to mention—'Patriarchæ Josephi, Ægyptii olim preteritis, religio, &c.,' 'Dissertatio de veteri Ægyptiorum idolatria,' 'De causis inopie veterum monumentis precepta martyrum dignoscenda,' 'De principiorum legis naturalis traditione.'

ANSALDI, INNOCENT, an Italian painter and author, born at Pescia, in Tuscany, 1734; died 1816.

ANSALONI, GIORDANO, a distinguished missionary and martyr, was born at St. Angelo, in Sicily, and at an early age entered the order of St. Dominic. He was one of the Dominican missionaries who, in 1623, set out for the Philippine islands. On arriving at Manilla, Father Anseloni devoted himself to the service of the sick inmates of the hospital, and spent all his leisure hours in studying the Chinese language. By order of his superiors, he proceeded with a companion to Japan in 1632, at which period the Christians were being grievously persecuted in that country. For two years he contrived to evade the pursuit of his enemies, but ultimately both he and his companion were captured. Sixty-nine Christians, who were arrested at the same time, were beheaded. Ansaloni, after suffering a variety of the most dreadful tortures, was hung up with his head downwards, and left to starve. In this horrible condition he lived seven days, dying on 18 Nov., 1634. During his residence in Mexico he translated into Latin the lives of the saints of his order, written originally in Spanish by Ferdinand Castillo. The manuscript, which is very elegant, is still preserved at Seville.

ANSCARIUS, bishop of Hamburg and Bremen, was born in France, 801. He was very successful in converting the Danes and Swedes to Christianity, and died 3 Feb., 864. His life of St. Wilahad was printed at Cologne, 1642.

ANSEGEISE, a celebrated abbot of Fontenelles, much respected by the bishops and princes of his time, died 20 July, 834. He left a collection of the 'Capitularia' of Charlemagne and of Louis le Debonnaire, of which Baluze published a good edition, 1677, 2 vols. fol.

ANSEGEISE, a priest of the diocese of Rheims, abbot of St. Michael, and afterwards archbishop of Sens, 871. Charles the Bald sent him to Pope John VIII., who made him primate of the Gauls, and of Germany, but Hincmar, and several other bishops, opposed this new primacy. Died 883.

ANSELM, ST., was born at Mantua about 1036; became bishop of Lucca 1061; and died 18 March, 1086. There is a treatise by him against the antipope Guibert, and several other works in the library of the fathers.

ANSELM, ST., archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Aosta, in Piedmont, 1033. After having travelled for some time in France, he took the monastic habit in the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, of which he afterwards became the superior. In 1092 he came to England, and soon after his arrival William Rufus nominated him to the see of Canterbury. His consecration took place 4 Dec., 1093. Subsequently a serious misunderstanding arose between the king and the archbishop, owing to the attachment of the latter to Urban II., whom the king did not acknowledge as pope, being in the interest of his competitor Guibert. The bishops, influenced by the court, renounced Anselm for their archbishop. Finding himself too weak to oppose the corruptions of the times, he left the country, and as soon as he was gone the king seized the revenues of the archbishopric. Anselm got safely to Rome, and was honourably received by the pope, whom he accompanied to his country seat near Capua, where he wrote a book concerning the incarnation of our Saviour. He was very serviceable to his holiness in the council of Bari, held to oppose the errors of the Greek church with respect to the procession of the Holy Ghost. In this synod he answered the objections of the Greeks in such a manner that he silenced them, and gave general satisfaction to the western church. After the synod of Bari was ended, the pope and Anselm returned to Rome, where an ambassador from England had arrived, in order to disprove Anselm's allegations and complaints against his master. Ultimately the court of Rome was induced to desert Anselm, who would have gone to Lyons, but the pope would not permit this, and, in order to soothe him after his disappointment, lodged him in a noble palace, and frequently visited him there. A council being summoned about this time to sit at Rome, Anselm had a very honourable place in it assigned to him, this being the first instance of an archbishop of Canterbury appearing at a Roman synod. On the death of William Rufus, Anselm returned to England, and was received with extraordinary respect by Henry I.; but when it was required that he should be reinvested by the king, and do the customary homage of his predecessors, he refused to comply, alleging the canons of the late synod at Rome, which excommunicated all lay persons who should give investitures for abbey or cathedrals, and all ecclesiastics who should receive investitures from lay hands, or come under the tenure of homage for any ecclesiastical promotion. The dispute was referred to the pope, who, after lengthened negotiations, gave the bishops and abbots permission to do homage for their temporalities, though he steadily refused to yield with regard to the investitures. The compromise was accepted, and all differences between the king and the archbishop amicably adjusted. Anselm, who, pending the dispute, had retired to France, came back to England, and was received with unusual demonstrations of honour and respect. After his arrival nothing remarkable happened in the life of this great prelate, excepting his dispute with Thomas, archbishop of York, who endeavoured to throw off his dependency on the see of Canterbury. Before the determination of this quarrel, Anselm died at Canterbury, 21 April, 1109. He was author of many works, a complete collection of which was published by Father Gabriel Gerberon, O.S.B., in 1775. William of Malmesbury tells us that Anselm was a person of great strictness and self-denial, and his temper and sedateness such, that he was never heard to utter the least reproachful word. He was the first archbishop who restrained the English clergy from marrying. This was done in the national synod held at Westminster in 1102, the fourth canon of which provides that no archdeacon, priest, deacon, or canon should be allowed to marry, or to live with his wife already married. Anselm was canonized in the reign of Henry VII., at the instance of Cardinal Merten, archbishop of Canterbury.

ANSELM of Laon, was born in that city, of obscure parents, about 1030, and became a teacher at the university of Paris, of which, indeed, some writers regard him as the founder. He was afterwards placed at the head of the school at Laon, which for fifty years he conducted with such extraordinary success, that students flocked to it from every part of Europe. Died 15 July, 1117. His chief work is an interlinear gloss upon the Holy Scriptures.

ANSELM, Father, Peter Gibours, a celebrated barefooted Carmelite, born 1625, at Paris, where he died 17 Jan., 1694. His principal work is a 'Genealogical and Chronological History of the Royal House of France, and of the great Officers of the Crown.'

ANSELM, Father. See MANNOCK, JOHN.

ANSELME, ANTHONY, a celebrated French preacher and writer, was born 13 Jan., 1652, in the Isle Jourdain, in the province of Armagnac; made abbat of the rich monastery of Severe, in Gascony, 1699; and died 8 Aug., 1737.

ANSON, GEORGE, Lord, an eminent naval commander, was son of William Anson, Esq., of Colwich, Staffordshire, where he was born, 1697. He was bred to the sea, and in 1722 was appointed captain of the Weazle sloop. The year following he was made captain of the Scarborough man-of-war, in which capacity he displayed the greatest intrepidity and valour. On the breaking out of the Spanish war, he was appointed to command a fleet of five ships destined to annoy the Spanish settlements in the Pacific ocean. His departure being unaccountably delayed some months beyond the proper season, he sailed about the middle of September, 1740; and about the vernal equinox, in the most tempestuous weather, arrived in the latitude of Cape Horn. He doubted that dangerous cape in March, 1741, after a bad passage of forty days, in which he lost two ships, and by the scurvy four or five men a day. In June he arrived off Juan Fernandez, with only two ships, besides two attendants on the squadron, and 335 men. He left it in September, took some prizes, and burnt Payta. In May, 1742, he crossed the southern ocean, proceeding with the Centurion only, the other ships having been destroyed in August. Having refreshed his crew at Tinian, he sailed in October for China, where he remained till the beginning of 1743. In June that year he captured the annual Acapulco ship at the Philippine isles. After selling the prize in China, he set sail for England, and arrived at Spithead 15 June, 1744, having sailed in a fog through the midst of a French fleet then cruising in the channel. Soon afterwards he was made rear-admiral of the blue and one of the lords of the admiralty. He was also chosen M.P. for Heydon. In 1747 he commanded the channel fleet, and captured six French men-of-war and four East Indiamen. Two of the vessels were named the Invincible and the Glory, and when the French admiral surrendered his sword, he paid the conqueror this compliment: 'Monsieur, vous avez vaincu l'Invincible, et la Gloire vous suit.' For his signal services he was raised to the peerage, in 1747, by the title of Lord Anson, baron of Soberton, in Hants, and soon afterwards made vice-admiral of England. In 1758 he sailed from Spithead with a formidable fleet, and by cruising continually before Brest, covered the descents made in the summer of that year at St. Malo and Cherbourg. After this he was appointed admiral and commander-in-chief of his Majesty's fleets. He died at his seat, Moor Park, Hertfordshire, 6 June, 1762. The well-known work, entitled 'Lord Anson's Voyage round the

ANSPACH.

World,' was composed by Mr. Benjamin Robins, from materials furnished by his lordship.

ANSPACH, ELIZABETH BERKELEY, margravine of, daughter of Augustus fourth earl of Berkeley, was born Dec., 1750, and in 1767 was married to William Craven, nephew and heir of the fifth Earl Craven, whom he succeeded, in 1759. Subsequently she charged her husband with infidelity, and a separation took place. At this time she was the mother of seven children. Some time afterwards she met in France the margrave of Anspach, with whom she formed a sudden friendship. To sever her own words, they agreed to regard each other as brother and sister. In 1785 she travelled through various parts of Europe, and published an account of the tour, with a dedication to the Margrave, in which she says, 'Beside curiosity my main aim in these letters see, at least for some time, where the real Lady Craven has been, and where she is to be found, it having been the practice for some years past for a Birmingham coin of itself to pass in most of the inns in France, Switzerland, and England for the wife of my husband.' This work is interesting on account of the many sketches it contains of eminent people. After paying a visit to England she returned to France, where she joined the Margrave and accompanied him to Anspach. Here, during a residence of a few years, she established a theatre, which was chiefly supplied with dramatic entertainments of her own composition. They were collected in two volumes 8vo., under the title of 'Nouveau Theatre d'Anspach et de Triendorf.' In company with the Margrave she visited the congenial court of Naples, where her conduct was the subject of much censure. Lord Craven died in 1791, and as soon as intelligence of the event reached his widow she was married to the margrave of Anspach. A few weeks afterwards, on 2 Dec., 1791, the Margrave died; his margravate to Prussia, and came to reside in England. The British court, however, refused to receive the Margravine, who was even repudiated by her own children. The Margrave purchased Brandenburgh House, which, until his death in 1800, was a scene of continued profusion and gaiety. After his decease the Margravine spent most of her time on the continent. Died 13 Feb., 1828. She wrote German, English, and French with facility and elegance. The best known of her works is 'Memoirs of the Margravine of Anspach, formerly Lady Craven, written by herself,' 2 vols., London, 1835.

ANSTAY, CHRISTOPHER, an English poet, born 31 Oct., 1724, being son of the Rev. Christopher Anstey, D.D., of Brinkley, Cambridgeshire. He was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. In 1754 he succeeded to the estates of his maternal grandfather, whereupon he quitted the university and resided alternately at Bath and Trimpington, near Cambridge. He died at Harnage, Wilts, 3 Aug., 1805. His reputation rests upon the humorous poem entitled 'The New Bath Guide.'

ANSTAY, JOHN, son of the preceding, published an edition of his father's works, preceded by a biographical memoir, and wrote a comic poem called 'The Reader's Guide.' At the time of his death, which took place in Hertford Street, Mayfair, London, 22 Nov., 1819, he was one of his majesty's commissioners for auditing public accounts.

ANSTICE, JOSEPH, was born in or about 1809, and in 1823 was admitted on the foundation of Westminster school, being elected to Christ Church, Oxford, in 1827. In the following year he obtained the Newdigate prize, the subject being 'Richard Cœur de Lion.' He graduated with great distinction (B.A. 1831, M.A. 1835), and in 1834 carried off the university prize for the English essay. He also won the prize given by Christ Church for a Latin essay by a bachelor of that house, the subject being 'The Influence of the Roman Conquests upon Literature and the Arts in Rome.' On leaving the university he was elected the first classical professor at King's College, London. His inaugural address, on 'The Advantages of Classical Literature,' was deservedly admired, and published after its delivery. Before long, however, Mr. Anstice's constitution, originally feeble, sank under the pressure of unceasing toil and the ungenial atmosphere of London. He retired to Torquay and took pupils, intending to enter into holy orders. About this period he composed a volume of beautiful hymns, which was privately printed. Died 29 Feb., 1836. Besides the works already mentioned Mr. Anstice published 'Selections from the Choice Poetry of the Greek Dramatic Writers: translated into English verse,' 8vo., London, 1832.

ANSTIS, JOHN, son of John Anstis of St. Neot's, Cornwall, was born 28 Sept., 1669, admitted at Exeter College, Oxford, 1685, and three years afterwards entered the Middle Temple. As a gentleman of good fortune he became well known in his county, and the borough of St. Germans returned him as one of its representatives to the first parliament called by Queen Anne. In the last parliament of her reign he sat for Dunhered, or Launceston, and he was a member also of the first parliament of George I. On 20 April, 1718, he was created Garter king at arms, and held that office during the remainder of his life. He died at Mortlake, Surrey, 4 March, 1744-5, and was buried at Dulo in Cornwall. He published a 'Letter concerning the Honor of Earl Marshal,' 8vo., 1706; 'The Form of the Installation of the Garter,' 8vo., 1720; 'The Register of the most noble Order of the Garter, usually called the Black Book, with a Specimen of the Lives of the Knights Companions,' 2 vols. fol., 1724; and 'Observations introductory to an Historical Essay on the Knighthood of the Bath,' 4to., 1725. He also left a work entitled 'Aspiologia, a Discourse on Seals in England,' nearly fit for publication, besides a number of MSS. on heraldic and antiquarian subjects.

ANSTIS, JOHN, LL.D., F.S.A., eldest son of the preceding, was educated as a gentleman commoner at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and succeeded to the office of Garter on the death of his father, 1744. He was created LL.D. at Oxford, 1749, and died at Mortlake, 5 Dec., 1754, aged 46.

ANSTRUTHER, Sir ALEXANDER, an English lawyer, was successively advocate-general at Madras and recorder of Bombay, and died July, 1819. He published a volume of reports of cases argued in the court of Exchequer.

ANSTRUTHER, Sir JOHN, baronet, son of Sir John Anstruther, succeeded to the title on his father's death, in 1746, and died July, 1799. He wrote 'Remarks on Drill Husbandry, by which the superior advantages of that method of cultivation are pointed out, and its profits ascertained from actual experiments; also a comparison of it with the most approved methods of broadcast husbandry,' 8vo., London, 1796.

ANSTRUTHER, Sir JOHN, born 1753, was created a baronet of Great Britain 18 May, 1798, when appointed chief justice of the supreme court of judicature at Bengal. He retired from the bench 1806, and died 26 Oct., 1811.

ANSTRUTHER, ROBERT, a distinguished general, eldest son of Sir Philip Anstruther, born 3 March, 1768. In 1800, being then captain, he went to Egypt as quartermaster-general to the army under the command of Sir Ralph Abercromby, at which time the order of the Crescent was conferred upon him by the sultan. In 1808 he went to Portugal as brigadier-general, and distinguished himself at the battle of Vimiera. In the subsequent disastrous campaign in Spain under the gallant Sir John Moore, General Anstruther commanded the rear guard of the army, which he brought safely into Corunna on the night of the 12 Jan., 1809, but survived only one day the extraordinary exertions he had made and the fatigue he had endured during the retreat. He died 14 Jan., 1809, and lies interred in the north-east bastion of the city of Corunna. Sir John Moore, by his own desire, was buried by the side of General Anstruther.

ANSTRUTHER, Sir WILLIAM, was M.P. for Fifeshire from 1681 to 1707. He was created a lord of session 1689, and a baronet 1694. In 1704 he was nominated one of the lords of justiciary. Died at Edinburgh 24 Jan., 1711. He wrote 'Essays Moral and Divine.'

ANTARAH, an Arabian poet, author of one of the seven 'Moallahahs,' flourished in the sixth century. Sir William Jones published this poem with an English version.

ANTELMI, JOSEPH, a learned canon of Frejus in Provence, where he died 21 June, 1697, aged 49. He wrote dissertations on the ecclesiastical history of Frejus; on St. Prosper and St. Leo; on the Athanasian Creed; on St. Martin; and on St. Eucherius.

ANTEROS, ST., a Greek, was elected pope 23 Nov., 235, and died the next year, 3 Jan.

ANTHELM, ST., bishop of Belley in France, son of Hardein, of a noble family in Savoy. After having possessed the two first dignities of the chapters of Geneva and Belley, he entered among the Carthusians, and was elected prior of the Grand Chartreux, 1141. During the schism of Victor IV. he brought all the Carthusians to declare in favour of Alexander III. This pope obliged him to accept the bishopric of Belley, 1193, where he died 1178, aged above 70.

ANTHEMIUS, Roman emperor of the West, 467, was slain 11 July, 472.

ANTHEMIUS, a celebrated architect, ingenious sculptor, and learned mathematician of Tralles under the Emperor Justinian in the sixth century. He is said by Agathias to have invented several methods of imitating earthquakes, thunder, and lightning. Died 534.

ANTHONY, ST., the founder of the monastic institution, was born 251 at the village of Come in Egypt. His parents died when he was but seventeen, leaving him very rich. It is said that, going into a church when that passage of the Gospel was read in which Christ says to a rich young man, 'If thou wilt be perfect, go, sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come follow me,' he determined to renounce the world. Accordingly he distributed his inheritance among his neighbours, gave the price of his goods to the poor, and retired into solitude about 270. He built several monasteries in the deserts, and went to Alexandria, 335, for the defence of the faith. Anthony devoted himself to prayer and meditation. He was assaulted by various temptations; it is also said that devils appeared in frightful forms and beat him severely. Many miracles are ascribed to him, and those who had embraced the monastic life were animated by his discourse and example. He died 17 Jan., 356, aged 105. His life was written by St. Athanasius. Although St. Anthony had no learning, he left seven letters in Latin, with a 'Rule,' and some sermons in the library of the fathers.

ANTHONY OF LEBRIXA, or ANTONIUS NEDRISSENSIS, so called from a town of Andalusia, where he was born 1444. He was one of the chief contributors to the revival of the belles lettres. After having been a professor at Salamanca twenty years, being discontented with that university, he attached himself to Cardinal Ximenes, who drew him to his university of Alcalá. Anthony of Lebrixa taught there until his death, which took place 11 July, 1522. He assisted in the edition of the polyglot Bible, and wrote commentaries on several ancient authors; lexicons: the history of Ferdinand and Isabella; and explanations of the Holy Scriptures.

ANTHONY OF MESSINA, also called Antonello, a famous painter, was born at Messina 1447, and died 1496. He was the first who taught the Italians the art of painting in oil, having learned the secret from John de Bruges.

ANTHONY OF PADUA (ST.), the Thaumaturgus of his age, born 1195, at Lisbon. He led an austere life from his youth, and entered the Franciscan order, while St. Francis was yet living. Having embarked for Africa to convert the heathens, he was cast away in Italy, where he studied divinity, and preached with reputation. Afterwards he taught in Montpellier, Toulouse, and Padua, in which last city he settled, and died there, 13 June, 1231. The best edition of his works is that of 1641, fol. He was canonized by Gregory IX.

ANTHONY OF PALERMO. See BECCADELLI.

ANTHONY DE BOURBON, king of Navarre, was son of Charles de Bourbon, and father of Henry IV. of France. He was born 1518, and in 1548 married Jeanne d'Albret, who brought to him the principality of Béarn, and the title of king of Navarre. On the death of Francis II. he was created lieutenant-general of the kingdom of France. He took Blois, Tours, Bourges, and Rouen from the Protestants. At the last-named place he received a wound, of which he died, 17 Nov., 1562.

ANTHONY, titular king of Portugal, son of Don Louis de Beja, second son of the king Don Emanuel and Yolande de Gomez, attempted to prove his title to the throne of Portugal after the death of his uncle, the Cardinal Henry. He pretended that his father and mother had been privately married, but that Philip II. had conveyed away the writings which proved his legitimacy, and had always treated him as a bastard. He was, however, proclaimed king of Portugal by the people, but Philip II. forced him to take refuge in France, where he died, 26 Aug., 1595, aged 64, leaving his rights to Henry IV.

ANTHONY, FRANCIS, M.D., a famous empiric, born in London 1550, and educated at Cambridge, where he studied chemistry, which he applied to a humane purpose in London, by the sale of a medicine said to be prepared from gold, and called 'Aurum Potabile.' He was, however, imprisoned for prescribing and vending physic without a licence, but was set at liberty by the lord chief justice. Being again apprehended and fined heavily for the same offence, he published a defence of himself in a Latin treatise, entitled 'Medicina Chymica,' Cambridge, 1610. He died, extremely rich, 26 May, 1623. His son John is noticed below. He had another son, named Charles, who settled at Bedford.

ANTHONY, ISAAC, a dissenting minister of some note, was born at Bedford, 20 Dec., 1802, and educated at Homerton College. Afterwards he became minister of Cambridge Independent Chapel, Bedford. Died at Torquay, 28 Jan., 1848. A memoir of him, by John Hayden, appeared shortly after his death.

ANTHONY, JOHN, M.D., was son of Dr. Francis Anstey, to whose practice he succeeded. It is said that he lived very handsomely by the sale of his father's nostrum, called 'Aurum Potabile.' He died 28 April, 1655, aged 70, leaving behind him one son and three daughters, as appears from the monument erected for himself and his father in the church of St. Bartholomew the Great, London. He was author of 'Lucas Redivivus; or the Gospel Preached; prescribing (by way of Meditation) Divine Physick to prevent Diseases not yet entered upon the soul, and to cure those Maladies which have already seized upon the Spirit,' 4to., 1656. His portrait is prefixed to this book.

ANTHONY, PAUL GABRIEL, a Jesuit of Lorraine, was born 1679, and died 22 Jan., 1743, at Pont à Mousson. He was author of systems of scholastic and moral theology.

ANTIGONUS, one of the most valiant and prudent generals of Alexander the Great. He was king of Asia after the death of that conqueror, B.C. 321, vanquished Eumenes, and put him to death; gained a great victory over Ptolemy Lagus, B.C. 313; built Antigonias seven years afterwards; and was killed in a battle against Cassander, Seleucus, and Lycimachus, B.C. 301, aged 80.

ANTIGONUS, king of the Jews, and son of Antiochus II., having formed an alliance with the king of the Parthians, took Jerusalem, and cut off the ears of his uncle Hyrcanus, to render him incapable of the high-priesthood; but Herod, who had married Mariamne, granddaughter of Hyrcanus, retook Jerusalem, and sent Antigonus to Mark Anthony, who beheld him, B.C. 37.

ANTIGONUS DOSON, king of Macedonia from 231 B.C. until his death, in 221 B.C.

ANTIGONUS GONATUS, king of Macedonia, succeeded the throne 310 B.C., and died 230 B.C.

ANTIMACO, MARC ANTHONY, a learned Italian, born at Mantua about 1473. He taught Greek with great reputation at Ferrara, where he died 1522. He translated some pieces from the Greek, and wrote Latin poems and letters.

ANTINE, MARC FRANÇOIS D', a French antiquary, born 1684, at Gouvioux, in the diocese of Liege. He became a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur at the age of 30, and died 3 Nov., 1746. He assisted in the first five volumes of the glossary of Domage of 1736, and in the collection of the Essais of France by Bouquet. It was he who projected the famous 'Art de Verifier les Dates.'

ANTIOCHUS SOTER, or the Saviour, king of

ANTON.

Syria, born about 323 B.C.; died 261 B.C. He defeated the Bithynians, Macedonians, and Galatians.

ANTIOCHUS THEUS, or the God, king of Syria, succeeded his brother, Antiochus Soter. He engaged in a war with Ptolemy Philadelphus, and ended it by marrying Berenice, though he had two sons by Laodice, who, to revenge herself, poisoned him 246 B.C.

ANTIOCHUS THE GREAT, king of Syria, succeeded his brother, Seleucus Ceraunus, 223 B.C. He was vanquished in a bloody battle by Ptolemy Philopater, near Raphia, 217 B.C. Some time afterwards he took Sardes, attacked the Medes and Parthians, seized Judea, Phoenicia, and Coele Syria, and formed a plan for subduing Smyrna, Lampascus, and all the cities of Asiatic Greece. These cities applied for help to the Romans, who sent ambassadors to Antiochus, to oblige him to restore the country he had gained by conquest from Ptolemy Epiphanes, and to leave the free cities of Greece unmolested. Antiochus, irritated at this, declared war against the Romans 192 B.C., at the solicitation of Hannibal, but he was defeated by Acilius Glabrio, and lost an important battle near Magnesia, against Scipio Asiaticus. At length the Romans granted him peace, but on hard terms. He was killed in Elymas, whither he had gone to plunder the temple of Belus, 187 B.C.

ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES, or the Illustrious, usurped the throne of Syria from his nephew Demetrius 175 B.C., and attempted to take Egypt from his nephew Ptolemy Philometor, but was repulsed. He deposed the high priest Onias, captured Jerusalem 170 B.C., profaned the temple, and committed unnumbered cruelties. Returning to Antioch, 167 B.C., he put to death the seven brothers of the Maccabees, and the venerable old man Eleazar. Mattathias and Judas Maccabeus defeated his army; and he was himself routed by the Elymeans, and obliged to return to Babylon, where he was seized with a horrible disease, and died in despair 164 B.C.

ANTIPATER, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who, during the expedition into Asia, appointed him governor of Macedonia and the whole of Greece. He subdued the Thracians, the Lacedaemonians, and some other Greek peoples who revolted, 331 B.C. After Alexander's death the generals divided the empire among themselves, and Macedonia was allotted to Antipater, who afterwards subjugated the republics of Greece, and changed the government to a monarchy. His advice to his successor was 'never to admit a woman to meddle in state affairs.' Died 310 B.C.

ANTIQUUS, JOHN, a Dutch historical painter, born at Groningen, 11 Oct., 1702; died 1750.

ANTOINETTE, MARIE. See MARIE.

ANTON, GEORGE, born at Stratheldsaye, Berks, in or about 1550, was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, and afterwards became recorder of Lincoln, which city he also represented in parliament. The date of his death has not been ascertained. He has left a MS. journal of the proceedings in the House of Commons in 1592.

ANTON, ROBERT, an English poet, was not improbably a son of George Anton, recorder of Lincoln. He was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1609-10. No entry of his matriculation, however, is to be found. He wrote 'The Philosophers Satyrs, or the Philosophers Seven Satyrs, alluding to the Seven Planets,' 4to., London, 1616. In the edition of 1617 they are entitled 'Vices Anatomie scoured and corrected, in new Satires, lately written by R. A., of Magdalen College, Cambridge.'

ANTONELLI, LEONARD, a learned cardinal, born 1730, at Sinigaglia, in the Roman States, where he died 23 Jan., 1811. His 'Letter to the Irish Bishops' proves that his opinions were not of that intolerant kind which have been attributed to him by some biographers.

ANTONELLI, NICHOLAS MARIA, an Italian cardinal, born 1697; died 24 Sept., 1767. He published a MS. commentary of St. Athanasius on the Psalms; an ancient Roman missal, with notes; and several poems.

ANTONELLO. See ANTHONY OF MESSINA.

ANTONIANO, SYLVIVS, a learned cardinal, born at Rome, 1540; died 15 Aug., 1603. He left a Latin treatise on the Christian education of youth, and other esteemed works; and is said to have been concerned in the catechism of the council of Trent.

ANTONIDES, JOHN, called also Van der Goez, a celebrated Dutch poet, was born 1647, and died 18 Sept., 1684.

ANTONINUS, MARCUS AURELIUS. See MARCUS.

ANTONINUS PIUS, Roman emperor, was born at Lanuvium, in Italy, A.D. 86, and succeeded the Emperor Adrian, 138. He immediately set at liberty several persons who had been condemned to death, and gained the esteem and love of the people by his wisdom and moderation. He had the tenderness of a father towards his subjects, often repeating that noble sentence of Scipio Africanus, 'I had rather save the life of one citizen than kill a thousand enemies.' More attentive to preserve the limits of his empire than to extend them, he avoided wars, and held the barbarians in subjection to his virtues. Though this generous prince was ready to assist every one in distress, he carefully managed the revenues of the empire. No edicts were published against the Christians by Antoninus; indeed, he even wrote letters in their favour. One of these may be seen in Eusebius, at the end of St. Justin's apology. He died 7 March, 161, aged 73, universally lamented.

ANTONINUS, ST., a celebrated Dominican archbishop of Florence, born in that city 1389. He went through all the offices of his order, and was employed in various embassies. Pope Eugenius IV. nominated him in 1446 to the archbishopric of Florence, in which station his conduct was exemplary. Died 2 May, 1459. He left a chronicle in Latin, a summary of theology, and several other works.

ANTONIO, MARC, engraver. See RAIMONDI.

ANTONIO, NICHOLAS, a Spanish bibliographer, born at Seville, 1617. He studied at Salamanca, and afterwards became agent-general for the affairs of Spain at Rome, where he resided twenty-two years, and was then recalled to be a member of the council at Madrid, where he died 13 April, 1684. His principal works are 'Bibliotheca Hispana Vetus,' 2 vols. fol., Rome, 1696, reprinted by Ibarra, 2 vols. fol., Madrid, 1788; and 'Bibliotheca Hispana Nova,' 2 vols. fol., Rome, 1672, and Madrid, 1783. Antonio likewise wrote a treatise, 'De Exilio,' and 'Censura de Istorias Fabulosas.'

ANVARI, one of the best poets of Persia, a native of Belenah, a village of Khorassan. He died at Balkh, about 1200.

APICIUS.

ANVILLE, JEAN BAPTISTE BOURGUIGNON D', geographer to the king of France, was born in Paris, 11 July, 1697, and died 28 Jan., 1782. His works are numerous. It is said that he laboured fifteen hours a day for fifty years in improving his favourite science.

ANYTA, a Grecian poetess, some of whose pieces are in the collection entitled 'Carmina novem Poetarum Fœminarum,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1568; 4to., Hamburg, 1734.

ANYTUS, an Athenian rhetorician, the avowed enemy of Socrates, after whose decease he took refuge in Heraclea, and, according to Themistius, was there stoned to death about 339 B.C.

APELLES, a celebrated painter of Cos, or, as others say, of Ephesus, son of Pithius. He lived in the age of Alexander the Great, who honoured him so much that he forbade any man but Apelles to draw his picture. He was so attentive to his profession that he never spent a day without employing his pencil, whence the proverb of 'Nulla dies sine lineâ.' His most perfect picture was Venus Anadyomene, which was not totally finished when the painter died. He made a painting of Alexander holding thunder in his hand, so much like life, that Pliny, who saw it, says the hand of the king with the thunder seemed to come out of the picture. This picture was placed in Diana's temple at Ephesus. He made another of Alexander, but the king expressed but little satisfaction at the sight of it; and at that moment a horse passing by, neighed at the horse which was represented in the piece, supposing it to be alive; upon which the painter said, 'One would imagine that the horse is a better judge of painting than your majesty.' When Alexander ordered him to draw the picture of Campaspe, one of his mistresses, Apelles became enamoured of her, and the king permitted him to marry her. He wrote three volumes upon painting, which were still extant in the age of Pliny. It is said that he was accused in Egypt of conspiring against the life of Ptolemy, and that he would have been put to death had not the real conspirator discovered himself, and saved the painter. Apelles never put his name to any pictures but three—a sleeping Venus, Venus Anadyomene, and an Alexander.

APELLES, the founder of an heretical sect in the second century, was born in Syria. He was at first a Marcionite, but attached himself afterwards to a pretended prophetess called Philemina, whose revelations he published. This sect denied the prophets, the law of Moses, and the resurrection.

APIANUS, PETER, a voluminous writer on mathematics and astronomy, was professor of those sciences at Ingolstadt. Born 1495; died 21 April, 1551.

APICIUS, the name of three Romans famous for their gluttony. The second, who is most remarkable, lived in the reigns of Augustus and Tiberius. He invented cakes, which bore his name; kept a public school for gluttony at Rome; and, after spending immense sums, poisoned himself, because he had but 250,000 crowns, which he thought not enough to keep him from starving! He wrote a treatise, 'De Opioniis et Condimentis, sive de Arte Coquinaria, lib. X.,' 8vo., Amsterdam, 1709. Pliny calls him 'Nepotum omnium altissimi gurgis.' The third, who lived in the time of Trajan, possessed an admirable secret for keeping oysters fresh. He sent some to Trajan, as far as Parthia.

APION.

APION, a famous grammarian of Oasis, a city of Egypt, head of the embassy sent by the Alexandrians to Caesarea, with complaints against the Jews, in the year 40. He wrote a history of Egypt, which has been refuted by Josephus.

APINO, or ABANO, PETER DE, an Italian physician, who held the professorship of medicine at Pisa, and wrote several professional works, was born 1250, and died 1310.

APPEL, JAMES, a Dutch painter, born at Amsterdam, 20 Nov., 1680; died 7 May, 1751.

APPELLICON, a peripatetic philosopher of Theos, died 80 A.D. He purchased the works of Aristotle and Theophrastus, which had long been hidden from the world, and caused them to be translated and put in order, though he ill-performed the difficult task.

APOLLINARIS, CLAUDIUS, a learned bishop of Hierapolis, in Phrygia, who presented an excellent apology for the Christians to Marcus Aurelius, A.D. 170.

APOLLINARIS, the Elder, a Christian writer, flourished in the fourth century. In conjunction with his son he composed several works, which were intended as substitutes for the writings of profane authors.

APOLLINARIS the Younger, so called to distinguish him from his father, Apollinaris the Elder, was a learned bishop of Laodicea in the fourth century, was at first a friend of St. Athanasius, and St. Basil, and a great defender of the faith; but afterwards, by an abuse of his talents and learning, became the author of new heresies, and gave name to the sect of the Apollinarists, who believed that Jesus Christ had no other soul than the divinity. He wrote several works. One is a treatise against Porphyry, in thirty books. His interpretation of the Psalms is in the Library of the Fathers, and separately, in Greek and Latin verse, 8vo., Paris, 1613. The tragedy of Jesus Christ's suffering is attributed to him; it is in the works of St. Gregory of Nazianzen. He died about 380.

APOLLINARIS, C. Sulpicius, was, it is said, a native of Carthage, and lived under the Antonines. He is supposed to be the author of the verses prefixed to Terence's comedies, and containing the argument of them. Anulus Gellius, who studied under him, speaks in the highest terms of his writings.

APOLLINARIS, SIDONIUS, whose full name was Cuius Sominus Apollinaris Modestus Sidonius, was born at Lugdunum, in Gaul, and married the daughter of Avitus, who was named emperor of the West, A.D. 455. Amid the changes of the times he repeatedly rose to office and rank at Rome, and again repeatedly retired to Gaul. At length in 472, he became bishop of Clermont (Aurillac-erometum), and held that dignity until his death in 484. He is known as the author of poems, and of a series of letters. The best edition of his works is by J. Sirmond, 4to., Paris, 1652.

APOLLODORUS, a celebrated grammarian of Athens, was a disciple of Aristarchus, and flourished 150 B.C. His 'History of the Gods,' three books of which have come down to us, throws considerable light upon the ancient mythology.

APOLLONIUS PERGÆUS, an eminent mathematician of Perga in Pamphylia, flourished in the reign of Ptolemy Euergetes, about 240 B.C. Of the various mathematical works which he composed the only one now extant is his treatise on conic sections, and even this has been transmitted to us in an imperfect state.

APOLLONIUS RHODIUS, a Greek poet, was a native of Naucratis, or perhaps of Alexandria, in Egypt, and flourished about 125 B.C. The name Rhodius was occasioned by his residence at Rhodes, where for a time he taught rhetoric. He was a pupil of Callimachus, and became keeper of the famous Alexandrian Library. His chief work was an epic poem, 'Ἀππολωνικά,' on the 'Expedition of the Argonauts.' He imitated Homer, with talents much inferior, though his poem evinces great application, and contains some beautiful passages, particularly the episode on the passion of Medea; yet in poetical genius and style he is rather surpassed by his imitator among the Romans, Valerius Flaccus. An English translation of Apollonius, by Francis Fawkes, appeared at London, 1780, 2 vols., folio.

APOLLONIUS of Tyana, a town of Cappadocia, a famous impostor, born three or four years before Christ. He professed the Pythagorean philosophy, renouncing wine, women, the use of flesh and fish, and leading a very austere life. By his artifices he was revered as a god, and had a large number of disciples. After having long deceived the world he died, in a very advanced age, about the end of the first century. No one was witness of his death, not even his favourite disciple, Damis, who was the companion of his impostures. This Damis wrote the life of Apollonius, as did Philostratus afterwards. It may be seen in the works of the latter, where are also some letters by Apollonius, M. Dupin, in his 'Histoire d'Apollonius de Tyana,' proves, first, that the history of Apollonius is destitute of any credible witnesses; secondly, that Philostratus has written a mere romance; thirdly, that the miracles attributed to Apollonius bear visible marks of falsehood, and that there is not one which may not be attributed to cunning, chance, or fraud; fourthly, that his doctrine is contrary to sound reason.

APOLLIOS, ST., a Jew, originally of Alexandria, embraced Christianity about the year 54. He acquired so great a reputation at Corinth as to be ranked with St. Peter and Paul, some saying 'I am of Paul,' and others 'I am of Apollios.'

APPERLEY, CHARLES JAMES, an English writer on sporting subjects; died 1843.

APPIAN, an ancient historian, was descended from one of the best families of Alexandria, lived under Trajan, Adrian, and Antoninus Pius, about 123, and was governor of a province. He composed in the Greek language, a Roman history, 'Ἱστορία Ρωμαίων,' in twenty-four books, of which we have only eleven, with some fragments. It extends from the destruction of Troy to the time of Augustus. The order of narration is not chronological, but the events are arranged with reference to the countries or nations particularly concerned. In this work much is borrowed from others, especially from Polybius and Plutarch. It is particularly serviceable in giving an idea of the Roman system of war and military affairs. The best edition is by Schweighäuser, Greek and Latin, 3 vols., 8vo., Leipzig, 1785. An English translation, by Davies, was published at London, 1679, 1703, folio.

APPLEGARTH, ROBERT, an English writer, was bred a Quaker, but ultimately conformed to the church of England. The date of his death is unascertained. He published several works between APROSIO, ANGELICO, an Augustinian monk, born 29 Oct., 1607, at Ventimiglia in Sardinia; died 23 Feb., 1681. He left 'Bibliotheca Aprosiana,' or a catalogue of the books which had been given to him, with an account of their authors.

APULEIUS, LUCIUS, a Platonic philosopher, was native of Madaura, a Roman colony in Africa, and lived about the close of the second century. He was a lawyer at Rome, and married a rich elderly widow, of Oea (Tripolis), where he was taken sick on a journey from Carthage to Alexandria. He was afterwards prosecuted by a brother of her former husband, on a charge of having employed magical arts to obtain her affections. His defence or apology on the trial is extant, and has been pronounced by St. Augustine to be an excellent specimen of eloquence. The writings of Apuleius, although characterized by a style deficient in accuracy, and often unnatural, contain frequent turns of wit, and are, on the whole, very entertaining. His principal work is the 'Golden Ass,' a kind of satirical romance.

AQUAPENDE. See FABRICIUS, JEROME.

AQUAVIVA, ANDREW MATTHEW, duke of Atri, was born 1456, and after passing through a military career, and fighting on the side of Charles VIII. of France, at the time of that monarch's expedition into Italy, devoted the remainder of his life to the cultivation of literature, and died in 1528. His only known work is a commentary upon a Latin translation of Plutarch's treatise of moral virtue.

AQUAVIVA, CLAUDE, a son of the duke of Atri, was born at Naples, 1542. He was elected general of the Jesuits, 1581, governed the society with great mildness and prudence, and died 31 Jan., 1615. He left several works of piety, among them 'Industria ad curandos Animæ Morbos,' 12mo., 1600. It was he who caused the famous 'Ratio Studiorum' to be drawn up. This work was condemned by the Inquisition.

AQUAVIVA, OCTAVIUS, a cardinal, was son of John Jerome Aquaviva, duke of Atri, of an ancient and illustrious family in the kingdom of Naples. He held several important ecclesiastical offices, and was eventually appointed archbishop of Naples, where he died, 15 Dec., 1612, aged 52. Cardinal Aquaviva was a great patron of learned men.

AQUEPONTANUS. See BRIDGWATER.

AQUILANO, SERAFINO, a celebrated Italian poet, born at Aquila, in the kingdom of Naples, 1466; died 10 Aug., 1500.

AQUINAS, ST. THOMAS, born 1227, descended from the illustrious and ancient family of the earls of Aquino. He took the Dominican habit at Naples, 1243, and going from thence to Paris, pursued his studies there till he went to finish them at Cologne, 1244, under Albertus Magnus. The year following he attended that celebrated doctor to Paris, and was his pupil till 1248, when he returned with him to Cologne, and there taught philosophy, the Holy Scriptures, and the sentences. St. Thomas went again to Paris, 1253, was admitted doctor there, 1257, and distinguished himself by his lectures and sermons. Some years after he went into Italy, but returned to Paris, 1269, and taught theology with such high reputation that he was surnamed the Angelic Doctor, the Angel of the Schools, and the Eagle of the Divines. Charles, king of Sicily, brother of St. Louis, who had formerly offered St. Thomas the archbishopric of Naples, requested so earnestly, in 1272, his residence in that city as a teacher, that it could not be refused. St. Thomas remained at Naples till 1274, when, being on his way to the general council of Lyons, he fell sick, and was carried to the Cistercian monastery of Fossanova, where he died piously, 7 March, 1274, aged forty-eight. John XXII. canonized him, 1313, and Pius V. declared him a doctor of the church, 1567. His works, which occupy eighteen folio volumes, and in particular his 'Summary' and his 'Opuscula,' are written with great judgment, clearness, and precision, and discover an extensive and deep genius. St. Thomas is considered as one of the greatest divines of the western church. He composed the noble office for the holy sacrament.

AQUINO, PHILIP, a converted Jew, a native of Carpentras, was baptized at Aquino, in the kingdom of Naples, and took his name from that place. He taught Hebrew at Paris, and was one of the correctors of Le Jay's Polyglott. Died 1650.

ARABELLA STUART. See STEART.

ARABSCHAH, a famous Mahometan historian, author of a history of Tamerlane, in Arabic, and other works, died 1450, at Damascus, his native place.

ARAGO, FRANÇOIS JEAN DOMINIQUE, an eminent French astronomer and man of science, born 1786; died 2 Oct., 1853.

ARAJA, FRANCIS, a musical composer, born at Naples, 1700; died after 1755.

ARALDI, MICHAEL, a celebrated Italian physiologist and mathematician, was born at Modena, 10 Feb., 1740, and died at Milan, 3 Nov., 1813.

ARAM, EUGENE, a self-taught genius, born at Ramsgill, Yorkshire, 1704. He received from his parents a very scanty education, but by the most persevering industry he obtained a good knowledge of the mathematics, and an extensive acquaintance with the Latin and Greek languages, together with the Hebrew and Chaldee. In 1744 he taught Latin and writing at a school in London, and after staying there two years, became an assistant in a boarding-school at Hayes, in Middlesex. He was afterwards employed to transcribe the acts of parliament to be registered in Chancery, and in 1757 assisted in the free school at Lynn. During this period he studied history, antiquities, and heraldry, and obtained some knowledge of botany. He was likewise a tolerable poet. It is to be lamented that a man of such talents should have disgraced them by the commission of the most atrocious of all crimes. In 1758 he was apprehended at Lynn for the murder of Daniel Clarke, a shoemaker, of Knaresborough, thirteen years before. He was removed to York Castle, and brought to trial 3 Aug., 1759, when he made an admirable defence, but was found guilty. The next morning he confessed his guilt, alleging that he was prompted to the crime by a suspicion of Clarke having a criminal intercourse with his wife. On being called from his bed to have his irons taken off, it was found that he had cut his arm in two places with a razor, and in that condition he was taken to the gallows at York, and there executed, 6 Aug., 1659. The story of Eugene Aram furnishes the subject of a beautiful poem by Thomas Hood, and of a well-known romance by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

ARANTIUS.

ARANTIUS, JULIUS CÆSAR, a writer on surgery and anatomy, of which he was professor for thirty-two years at Bologna, his native place. Born 1530; died 1580.

ARATUS, a Greek poet of Soli, afterwards called Pempholis, in Cilicia, flourished about 278 B.C. At the request of Antigonos, king of Macedonia, he wrote an astronomical poem under the title of Ἰαστέρα καὶ Διοσκουρίας. It was not strictly original, as the request of the king, his patron, was that he should clothe in verse two treatises of Eudoxus. This poem is memorable on account of Cicero's metrical translation of it. Of this translation, however, only slight fragments remain. It was also translated into Latin verse by Cæsar Germanicus and by Festus Avienus.

ARATUS OF SICYON, general of the Achæans, and one of the greatest captains whom Greece has produced, was born 271 B.C. He compelled Nabis, tyrant of Sicyon, to quit the city; engaged his fellow-citizens to join the Achæan league, composed of thirteen cities; and being made their general, surprised the fortress of Corinth, drove away the king of Macedonia, and defeated Argos from its tyrants. He was poisoned, by order of Philip II. of Macedonia, 231 B.C. Aratus wrote a history of the Achæans, which is highly praised by Polybius.

ARBOGAST, LOUIS FRANÇOIS ANTOINE, a French writer on geometry, was born at Mutzig, in Alsace, 1759, and became mathematical professor at the school of artillery at Strasburg, where he died 8 April, 1803. His 'Traité du Calcul des Derivations' is highly esteemed.

ARBRISSEL, ROBERT D', born at Arbrissel, in the diocese of Rennes, in France, about 1047. He retired to Angers, where he preached with such success, that he was followed by prodigious numbers of persons of both sexes, for whom he built cells in the wood of Fontevault, and became founder of the famous monastery and order of that name, about 1100. He died at the priory of Orsac, 25 Feb., 1117.

ARBUCKLE, JAMES, a Scotch poet, was born in Glasgow in 1700, and kept a school somewhere in the north of Ireland. His poems were published in one vol. 12mo. Died 1734.

ARBU'HTNOT, ALEXANDER, a Scotch divine, born 1532. He edited Buchanan's history of Scotland, and was a strenuous champion of the Reformation, and an encourager of learning. He died at Aberdeen, 17 Oct., 1583. He wrote 'Orationes de Origine et Dignitate Juris,' 4to., Edinburgh, 1572, but no copy of the work is known to exist.

ARBU'HTNOT, JOHN, M.D., a celebrated writer, was born at Arbutnot, near Montrose, 1675, and educated at Aberdeen, where he took his degree of M.D., after which he came to London, and supported himself at first by teaching mathematics. By accidentally administering relief to prince George of Denmark, he obtained the appointment of physician to his royal highness, and in 1709 he was appointed physician in ordinary to Queen Anne, and admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians. In 1714 he engaged with Pope and Swift in a scheme to write a satire on the abuse of human learning, under the title of 'Memoirs of Marcus Scriblerus,' but the death of the queen put an end to the project. In 1727 he published 'Tales of ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures,' 4to. In 1732 he published an 'Essay concerning Aliments,' &c., which was followed by another 'On the Effects of Air on Human Bodies.' He seems to have chosen these subjects from the consideration of his own case, an incurable asthma, of which he died, 27 Feb., 1735. Dr. Arbuthnot was one of that bright constellation of wits which adorned the reign of Queen Anne. 'The Miscellaneous Works of the late Dr. Arbuthnot' appeared at Glasgow in 2 vols., 1751, but some of the pieces in this collection are not genuine.

ARC, JOAN OF. See JOAN.

ARCADIUS, emperor of the East, son of Theodosius the Great and Flaccia, was associated in the empire 383, and succeeded Theodosius 395. His brother Honorius was emperor of the West. Rufinus, prefect of the pretorium, disappointed that he could not marry his daughter to Arcadius, called in the barbarians, and threw the East into a strange confusion, but was afterwards killed at Constantinople. Eutropius, favourite of Arcadius, who had induced him to marry Eudoxia, had the same fate, by the solicitation of Gamas, a Goth, and an Arian, who was himself defeated and slain, 400. Arcadius afterwards confirmed the laws of Theodosius, and published new ones, but obscured the glory of his reign by banishing and persecuting St. John Chrysostom, through a weak condescension to Eudoxia. He died 1 May, 408, aged 31.

ARCÈRE, ANTOINE, a French priest of the oratory, and a noted orientalist, died at Marseilles, 1699, aged 35. He composed a Turkish, Latin, and French dictionary, the MS. of which is preserved in the Bibliothèque Impériale.

ARCÈRE, LOUIS ETIENNE, a priest of the oratory, and nephew of the preceding, was born at Marseilles, 1698, and died at Rochelle, 7 Feb., 1782. In conjunction with Father Julliot he wrote 'Histoire de la Rochelle et du pays d'Aunis.' He was intrusted with the task of preparing his uncle's dictionary for publication, but old age and feeble sight prevented him from completing this undertaking.

ARCESILAUS, a celebrated Greek philosopher of Pistane, succeeded Crates, and was the founder of the sect called the Middle Academy. He maintained that everything is uncertain, and that truth cannot be distinguished from falsehood. He died in the fourth year of the 134th Olympiad.

ARCE'T, JEAN D', an eminent French chemist, born 7 Sept., 1725; died 12 Feb., 1801. He was the intimate friend of Montesquieu, who expired in his arms.

ARCHDALL, MERVYN, an Irish clergyman and antiquary, born at Dublin, 1723; died at Slane, in the county of Meath, of which parish he was rector, 6 Aug., 1691. He published 'Monasticum Hibernicum;' or, a History of the Abbies, Priors, and other Religious Houses in Ireland, 4to., Dublin, 1786; and a revised edition of Lodge's 'Peccage of Ireland,' 7 vols. 8vo., 1780.

ARCHDEKIN, RICHARD, born at Kilkenny, 1610, was admitted into the Society of Jesus at Mechin, and for many years taught humanities, philosophy, moral divinity, and Scripture, chiefly at Louvain and Antwerp. He died in the latter city about 1690. His principal work is 'Theologia Tripartita Universa;' besides which he wrote 'A Treatise on Miracles' (in English and Irish) and 'Vitæ et Miraculorum S. Patricii Epitome.'

ARCHENHOLZ, JOHN WILLIAM, a Prussian historian and journalist, born at Dantzig, 3 Sept., 1741; died at Hamburg, 28 Feb., 1812. Among his numerous works are, 'England and Italy,' in which he gives an account of his travels in those countries; a 'History of the Seven Years' War,' which has been translated into English, Latin, French, and many other languages; a 'Life of Pope Sixtus V.' and a 'History of the Buccaneers,' translated into English by Mason. He also published the 'Annales der Britischen Geschichte,' 1789-1798. It is an annual register of the proceedings of parliament, of public events, and of the progress of literature, chiefly compiled from the English periodicals.

ARCHER, HENRY, an English inventor, died at Pau, 2 March, 1863. He was a man of high classical attainments, and inventor of the machine for perforating postage stamps.

ARCHER, JOHN WYKHAM, an English engraver and antiquary, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1808, and died at Kentish Town, London, 25 May, 1864.

ARCHER, Sir SYMON, knight, an English antiquary, born 21 Sept., 1581; died 1662. He collected valuable materials relating to the topography of Warwickshire, which were afterwards incorporated in Dugdale's history of that county.

ARCHER, THOMAS, an English architect, died 23 April, 1743.

ARCHER, THOMAS, an English actor and dramatist, died in London, 3 May, 1848.

ARCHILOCHUS, one of the greatest poets of Greece, was a native of the island of Paros, and flourished about 680 B.C. He wrote satires, elegies, triumphal hymns, and lyrical pieces, of which only trifling fragments remain. It is generally supposed that he was the inventor of Iambic verse.

ARCHIMEDES, an ancient mathematician, was born at Syracuse, 287 B.C., being related to Hiero, king of that place. He boasted, that if he had a place to fix his machines, he would move the earth. His method of discovering the fraud of a jeweller, who had been employed to make a crown for Hiero, discovers the singular penetration of his mind. That monarch, suspecting that the crown which he had ordered did not contain the quantity of gold which he had given to the workman, desired Archimedes to find out the fraud. His thoughts being intent upon this problem while he was in the bath, he observed that a quantity of water overflowed equal to the bulk of his body. This showed him at once how the problem was to be solved, and he ran homewards, crying out, εὕρηκα! εὕρηκα! 'I have found it! I have found it!' Then procuring two masses of gold and silver of equal weight with the crown, he carefully noticed the quantity of water which each displaced, after which he observed how much the crown caused to flow over, and on comparing this quantity with each of the former, he was able to ascertain the proportions of gold and silver in the crown. Some ancient authors celebrate a glass machine made by Archimedes, which, according to them, represented exactly the motions of the heavenly bodies; and he is also said to have made burning glasses which destroyed ships at a great distance. In the siege of Syracuse by Marcellus, Archimedes contrived a variety of machines for annoying the enemy; but the place was taken at last, and the Roman commander gave strict orders that the house and person of Archimedes should be respected. He was, however, slain by a soldier, who did not know him, while he was deeply engaged in solving a geometrical problem, and inattentive to all the noise and uproar occasioned by the taking of the city. This happened about 212 years before the Christian era. Several of his works are extant, but some of the most valuable are lost. Those which remain were printed at Basle, in folio, 1554, and at London in 1792.

ARCHYTAS OF TARENTUM, a famous Pythagorean philosopher and learned mathematician, about 408 B.C., who, according to Eutocius, discovered the screw, the pulley, and the duplication of the cube, and made mathematics useful in the common affairs of life. He was shipwrecked in the Adriatic Sea, and found dead on the shore of Apulia.

ARCO, ALONZO DEL, a deaf and dumb Spanish painter, born 1625, at Madrid, where he died 1700.

ARCO, NICHOLAS, count of, a Latin poet, born at Arco, in the Tyrol, 3 Dec., 1479; died 1546. According to a recent writer, the poems of Arco are among the best that any modern has produced in an ancient language.

ARCQ, PHILIPPE AUGUSTE DE SAINTE-FOI, chevalier d', a native of Paris, was the natural son of the count de Toulouse, who was the natural son of Louis XIV. He wrote 'Loisirs,' 8vo., 1755; 'Le Temple du Silence'; 'Letters of Osman,' 3 vols. 12mo.; 'General History of Wars,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'History of Commerce and Navigation.' At the close of his life he retired to Gentilly, where he devoted the remainder of his days to devotion. Died 1779.

ARCUDI, ALEXANDER THOMAS D', a Dominican of Venice, who wrote several works, chiefly biographical, of which the 'Galatana Letterata' is the principal. His last performance was the 'History of Athanasius.' He was born 1655, and died about 1720.

ARCUDIUS, PETER, a Greek priest, of the island of Corfu, who studied at Rome, and was sent into Russia by Clement VIII., to settle affairs respecting religion. He afterwards attached himself to Cardinal Borghese, and died between 1633 and 1637, at the Greek college. He wrote some zealous Latin treatises in defence of the Roman church against the Greek and Protestant churches.

ARDEN, EDWARD, a Catholic gentleman of a good family in Warwickshire, was born 1531. He was executed in Smithfield, 20 Dec., 1583, for a supposed plot against Queen Elizabeth.

ARDEN, RICHARD PEPPER, Lord Alvanley, was born at Stockport, 1745, and educated at Cambridge. He went to the bar, and in 1781 was appointed solicitor-general. In 1784 he became attorney-general, and held that office for four years. In 1788 he was made master of the rolls, and in 1801 chief justice of the common pleas, being on the latter occasion created a peer by the title of Baron Alvanley. Died 19 March, 1804.

ARDERN, JOHN, an English surgeon of the fourteenth century, appears to have been one of the earliest who practised his art upon anything like enlightened principles in his native country. He resided at Newark from 1349 to 1370, when he removed to London, whither his reputation had already extended. He has left a large Latin volume of physic and surgery, of which several MSS. are extant; but no part has been printed except a treatise 'On the Fistula in Ano,' translated by John Read, in 1588.

ARDERNE, JAMES, D.D., born in Cheshire, 1636, matriculated at Cambridge, as a member of Christ's College, 1653, proceeded B.A. there, 1656, and was ultimately created D.D. He also studied for some time at Oxford. In 1666 he became rector of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate. He was chaplain in ordinary to Charles II., by whom he was promoted, on 11 Sept., to the rectory of Davenham, Oxford, 10 Jan., 1681. In July, 1682, he was created dean of Chester. Died 18 Sept., 1691. He wrote 'Directions concerning Matter and Form of Sermons, 12mo., 1671; 'Conjectura circa Errorum D. Clementis Romani. Cui subiunguntur Constitutiones in Epiphaniam et Petavium de Eucharistia, de Cœlibatu Clericorum, et de Ordine pro Vita functis,' 4to., London, 1683; and sermons. His will, which is printed in Ormerod's Cheshire, commences with the following pious confession of faith: 'First of all, I commend my soul into the hands of Almighty God, professing to die in the communion of the Catholic church, and more immediately of that part of it in England; and next to this, the best branch of the Catholic I do esteem to be the Greek church, except only as to their practice of invocation of angels and saints.' Dr. Arderne bequeathed his books and part of his estate to purchase and maintain a public library in the cathedral church of Chester, for the use of the city and county.

ARDO, a French monk of the Benedictine abbey of St. Saviour, at Aniano. He is sometimes known by the name of Smaragdus. He wrote 'Vita Sancti Benedicti, abbatii Anianensis, in Gallia Narbonensi,' printed in Mabillon's 'Acta Sanctorum, O.S.B.' Died 7 March, 863.

AREMBERG, CHARLES, was born at Brussels, 1739, became a Franciscan friar, 1762; and died at Rome, 1690. Under the title of 'Flores Seraphici,' published memoirs of the illustrious members of his order from 1225 to 1860.

ARENA, ANTOINE DE, DE LA SABLE, a French poet of the sixteenth century. His poem on the War of Provence, carried on by Charles V., was printed in 1747. His other pieces were printed in 1670, 12mo. Died 1544.

ARENDT, MARTIN FREDERICK, a Danish antiquary, born at Altona, 1769; died in the suburbs of Venice, 1824. He gained great celebrity by his scientific travels over a great portion of Europe.

ARESI, PAUL, bishop of Tortona, a Theatine, who gloried in being the Mæcenas of the learned. He wrote a treatise on sacred devices, 'Della Sacra Imprezza,' Milan, 1625, 8 vols. 4to., and other works. Died 13 June, 1644.

ARETEUS OF CAPPADOCIA, probably lived towards the close of the first century, at least not later than Pliny the elder and Dioscorides. He was one of the most distinguished of the Greek physicians, and left two works, 'On the Causes and Signs of Acute and Chronic Diseases,' and 'On the Cure' of the same. Both of them have come to us only in a mutilated state.

ARÉTIN, JOHN CHRISTOPHER ANTHONY MARIA, Baron von, a celebrated German politician and writer, was born 2 Dec., 1773, and studied at Heidelberg, Göttingen, and Paris. He held various important judicial and scientific appointments under the Bavarian government. Died at Munich, 24 Dec., 1824. His numerous works comprise treatises on mnemonics; 'Literature of the History of Bavaria'; 'Facts relating to the History of Bavaria, drawn from sources hitherto neglected,' &c. A complete list of his works is given in Bauer's 'Gelehrtes Bayern.'

ARÉTINO, FRANCIS. See ACCOLTI.

ARGENSOLA.

ARÉTINO, LEONARD, an Italian historian, whose family name was Bruni, was born at Arezzo about 1369. He was secretary to several popes, and afterwards to the republic of Florence. He added a supplement to Livy on the Punic war, and wrote the history of Italy, with other valuable works. Died 9 March, 1444.

ARÉTINO, PETER, was born at Arezzo, 1492, and became famous for his ingenious, satirical, and obscene poetry. He levied contributions on the princes and grandees of his time, who, to avoid his lash, made him considerable presents, from whence he was called the Scourge of Princes. He boasted that his writings did more good in the world than sermons. The reading of his indecent and impious works was condemned, particularly his dialogues, his letters, and his sonnets upon the sixteen infamous postures, engraved by Mark Anthony, 1525, from the drawings of Julio Romano. He died at Venice, 1557, aged 66. It is said of him in an epitaph, 'That if he has not blasphemed God, it was because he did not know Him.'

ARÉTINO, SPINELLO, a distinguished Italian painter, born about 1316; died after 1408.

ARGALL, JOHN, an English divine, who was born in London and educated at Oxford, became rector of Halesworth, Suffolk, where he was buried, 8 Oct., 1666. His works are, De Vera Penitentia, 8vo., London, 1604; and 'Introductio ad Artem Dialecticam,' 8vo., London, 1605.

ARGALL, RICHARD, an English poet, who lived in the reign of James I. He wrote 'The Song of Songs, which was Solomon's metaphrased in English heroics'; 'The Bride's Ornament'; 'Poetical Essays upon a Divine Subject,' &c.

ARGAND, AIMÉ, a physician and chemist, born at Geneva about the middle of the eighteenth century, and died 24 Oct., 1803. He is well known as the inventor of the kind of lamp which commonly bears his name.

ARGELLATI, PHILIP, an Italian antiquary, was born at Bologna, 1685, and died at Milan, 25 Jan., 1755. His most important undertaking was the part he took in the great collection of Muratori, entitled 'Rerum Italarum Scriptores.' His son Francis (born 8 May, 1712; died 13 Feb., 1754) was also a man of letters, and was likewise distinguished by his scientific attainments.

ARGENS, JEAN BAPTISTE DE BOYER, marquis d', a French writer, was born at Aix, in Provence, 24 June, 1704. He served some time in the army, but retired in disgust, and went to Holland, where he wrote some pieces, which recommended him to the notice of the king of Prussia, who called him to his court, and made him chamberlain. After spending about twenty-five years at Berlin, he returned to his native place, where he died, 11 June, 1771. His works are, 'Jewish Letters,' 'Chinese Letters,' 'Cabalistic Letters,' the 'Philosophy of Good Sense,' &c. Learning and ingenuity are evident in these productions, though they are disfigured by infidelity and licentiousness.

ARGENSOLA, the name of two Spanish poets, who were also brothers, and natives of Balbastro, in Aragon. The eldest, Lupercio, or Lobergo, was born about 1565, and died at Naples in 1613. Bartholomew d'Argensola was an ecclesiastic, and died at Saragossa in 1611. Their poems were published together at Saragossa in 1634, 4to.; besides which the elder wrote three tragedies, and the younger two historical works, one 'An Account of the Conquest of the Moluccas,' and the other the 'Annals of Arragon.'

ARGENSON, MARC RENÉ LE VOYER, marquis d', a statesman, was born, in 1562, at Venice, where his father was then ambassador from France. He was brought up to the law, and became lieutenant-general of the police at Paris, which city never enjoyed more security than it did under his administration. His conduct in this situation procured him the rank of counsellor of state; and in 1718 he was made keeper of the seals and president of the council of finance. In 1720 he was appointed minister of state; but was soon after deprived of that, and his other preferments, for what cause has never been ascertained. Died 1721.

ARGENTIER, JOHN, in Latin Argentarius, a celebrated physician, born at Castel-Nuovo, in Piedmont, 1513; died at Turin, 13 May, 1572. His works were printed, 1610, 3 vols. fol.

ARGENTINE, alias SEXTEN, RICHARD, an English divine, was M.D. of Cambridge, and practised physic and divinity at Ipswich. He was a Protestant under Edward VI., a Catholic under Mary, and a Protestant again under Elizabeth. He probably died 1608. He wrote and translated several theological works.

ARGENTRÉ, BERTRAND D', an able lawyer, and one of the most ingenious men of his age, was born at Vitré, 1519, being descended from a very ancient and noble family of Brittany. The vexations he felt at the factions of the league occasioned his death, 13 Feb., 1590. He left commentaries on the 'Custom of Brittany,' the 'History of Brittany,' and other works.

ARGENTRÉ, CHARLES DUPLESSIS D', born 16 May, 1673, at the Castle Duplessis, in the parish of Argentré, near Vitré, in Brittany, son of Alexandre Duplessis d'Argentré, dean of the nobility of Provence. He was admitted into the house of Sorbonne, 1696; doctor, in 1700; and almoner to the king, 1709, being the first to whom that high office was given gratuitously. In 1723 he was raised to the bishopric of Tulle, and leaving the Sorbonne, went to reside in his diocese, where he spent the remainder of his life. Died 27 Oct., 1740. He published many interesting and useful works, the principal of which are 'Elementa Theologica;' 'Explication des Sacramens de l'Eglise;' and 'Collectio Judiciorum de novis Erroribus, qui ab initio Duodecimi Seculi usque ad Annum, 1713, in Ecclesiâ proscripti sunt et notati, &c., cum Notis et Observationibus,' 3 vols. fol., Paris, 1725-1736, reprinted 1755.

ARGENVILLE. See D'ARGENVILLE.

ARGOLI, ANDREW, an Italian mathematician, born 1608, at Tagliacozzo. Being persecuted by the ignorant portion of his fellow-countrymen on account of his skill in mathematics, he retired to Venice, and was appointed by the senate to the mathematical professorship at Padua. Died 1657. He left 'De Diebus Criticis,' 4to. 1652; 'Ephemérides,' from 1620; and other works.

ARGOLI, JOHN, son of the preceding, was born about 1600, and died about 1660. He distinguished himself by his Latin and Italian poetry, particularly his 'Endymion,' 12mo., 1620.

ARGONNE, NOEL, afterwards Bonaventure, born at Paris, 1040, was first an advocate and afterwards a Carthusian monk of the Chartreuse of Gaillon, near Rouen, where he died 28 Jan., 1704. He is author of a very useful work, 'Traité de la Lecture des Peres de l'Eglise, ou Methode pour les lire utilement.' He also wrote 'Mélanges d'Histoire et de Litterature,' under the name of Vigneul-Marville. This last work is very learned, and full of literary anecdotes and criticisms.

ARGYLE, GERRARD DES, See DESARGUES.

ARGYLE, ARCHIBALD, first marquis of, was born 1598, and educated in the Protestant religion. He all along acted the part of a patriot and a good subject, though he did not approve of all the measures of King Charles I.'s ministers. In particular, he opposed Laud's scheme for changing the constitution of the church. In 1641 he was created marquis of Argyle. He exerted himself in defence of the king, and opposed Cromwell on his entering Scotland. He favoured the reception and coronation of Charles II., set the crown upon that monarch's head at Scone, and was the first nobleman who did homage and swore allegiance to him. But after the Restoration he was accused by his enemy, the earl of Middleton, with a multitude of crimes, especially with having complied with Cromwell as to the death of Charles I. He was condemned by the parliament, and beheaded at the market cross, Edinburgh, 27 May, 1661. During his imprisonment he wrote 'Instructions to a Son,' Edinburgh, 1661.

ARGYLE, ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, ninth earl of, eldest son of the preceding. On the death of King Charles II. he concerted measures with the duke of Monmouth, and at the head of a considerable force made a descent upon Argyle, but he was disappointed in his expectations of support, and being taken prisoner, was conveyed to Edinburgh, and there beheaded, 30 June, 1685.

ARGYLE and GREENWICH, JOHN CAMPBELL, duke of, was born 10 Oct., 1678, being eldest son of the tenth earl and first duke of Argyle. He took a leading part in promoting the union of Scotland with England, and greatly distinguished himself as a soldier in the Low Countries under the duke of Marlborough. At the breaking out of the rebellion in 1715, being commander-in-chief in Scotland, he defeated the earl of Mar's army at Sheriffmuir, and forced the Pretender to retire from the kingdom. He was created duke of Greenwich 1718, and field-marshal Jan., 1735-6. Died 4 Oct., 1743.

ARGYROPYLUS, a famous Greek of Constantinople, who went into Italy after that city was taken by the Turks, 1453. He was kindly received by Cosmo de Medici, who appointed him tutor to his son, and Greek professor at Florence. Argropylus testified his gratitude by a translation of the physics and ethics of Aristotle, and other works. He died after 1489, in the 70th year of his age.

ARIOSTO, GABRIEL, a younger brother of Lodovico Ariosto, was a good Latin poet. His poems were printed at Ferrara 1552. Died about 1552. His son Horace wrote an heroic poem in Italian, entitled 'L'Alfeo.'

ARIOSTO, LODOVICO, one of the greatest of the Italian poets, born at the castle of Reggio, near Modena, in Sept., 1474. He was patronised by the Cardinal d'Este, who obtained for him several employments. He afterwards entered into the service of Alfonso, duke of Ferrara, who appointed him governor of Grassignana. His most famous piece is entitled 'Orlando Furioso,' of which there are translations into English by Sir John Harrington, John Hoole, and S. Rose. Ariosto also wrote some comedies, which were performed in the hall of Ferrara before the duke and his court. He died at Ferrara, 9 June, 1535, in which year he had been honoured with the laurel by Charles V. His remains were interred in the church of the Benedicines, where there is a tomb to his memory.

ARISI, FRANCIS, a learned Italian, born of a noble family at Cremona, 3 Feb., 1667, and died there, 15 Jan., 1743. Of his printed works, which are few in number, the principal is 'Cremona Literaria,' 3 vols. fol.

ARISTARCHUS OF SAMOS, a celebrated Greek philosopher, was one of the first, it is said, who maintained that the earth turned upon its centre, and described an annual revolution round the sun. He lived before Archimedes. His only extant work is a treatise on the magnitude and distance of the sun and moon. It has been published in Greek and Latin.

ARISTARCHUS OF SAMOTHRACE, one of the most acute and excellent critics of antiquity, lived about 148 B.C. Ptolemy Philometor intrusted him with the education of his son. He confined himself chiefly to the revision of Homer's poems, which he criticised with great severity. Hence his name became a common designation for a severe critic. Being a drowsy, and despairing of a cure, he starved himself to death in the isle of Cyprus, at the age of 72.

ARISTIDES, a celebrated Athenian, who rose to the highest offices in the state, and discharged them with so much credit as to obtain the honourable surname of the Just. He was a great admirer of the laws of Lycurgus, being very rigid in his notions of public justice. At the battle of Marathon he distinguished himself by his bravery, but though he had the charge of the spoils he took nothing for himself. The party of Themistocles which prevailed against him, and he was banished by the ostracism. When the Athenians were apprehensive of a visit from Xerxes, they recalled Aristides, who, nobly forgiving all past injuries, gave his assistance to Themistocles for the good of the commonwealth, and when that commander was afterwards prosecuted, he refused his assent to the sentence of his banishment. Aristides died very poor about 468 B.C. The Athenians bestowed a magnificent funeral on him, gave an estate and a pension to his son Lyimachus, and portioned his daughters at the public expense.

ARISTIDES OF MILETUS, author of the Megalomata, romantic and licentious stories, often quoted by the ancients.

ARISTIDES, ST., an Athenian philosopher, who presented an excellent apology for the Christians to the emperor Adrian, about 125.

ARISTIDES, ÆLIUS, a celebrated Greek orator, born about 120, in Mysia. The best edition of his works is that by Samuel Jebb, Greek and Latin, 2 vols. 4to, Oxford, 1722, 1730.

ARISTIDES OF THEBES, a famous painter, contemporary with Apelles, about 300 B.C.

ARISTIPPUS OF CYRENE, called the Elder, a famous Greek philosopher, disciple of Socrates, and founder of the Cyrenaic sect, about 306 B.C. He taught that the happiness of man consisted in tranquillity, and held pain and pleasure to be the principles of action. The greater part of his life was spent at the court of Dionysius the Tyrant.

ARISTIPPUS the Younger, grandson of the preceding, was instructed in the Cyrenaic philosophy by his mother Areta, and became one of its most zealous defenders, about 364 B.C.

ARISTOTLE.

ARISTOBULUS I., king of the Jews, was at first high priest, in which office he succeeded his father Hyrcanus. He took his elder brother Antigonus into partnership with him in the government, but put his mother and two younger brothers into prison, where they were starved. He afterwards caused Antigonus to be put to death. He died 106 B.C., having reigned but a year.

ARISTOBULUS II. was the son of Alexander Jannæus. In 70 B.C. he dethroned his brother Hyrcanus, but was deposed in his turn by the Romans under Pompey, who caused him to be poisoned B.C. 49.

ARISTOBULUS, a Jew of Alexandria, who joined the peripatetic philosophy with the law of Moses. He is frequently quoted by Eusebius, but his works are lost. He flourished about 120 B.C.

ARISTOMENES, a general of the Messenians, famous for his valour and his virtue, who engaged his country to rise against the Lacedæmonians, and gained great advantages over them about 685 B.C. Being abandoned by his allies, he retired to a strong place, the siege of which he sustained eleven years, and went afterwards to Rhodes, where he was slain, 668 B.C.

ARISTOPHANES, an Athenian comic poet, was probably a native of Ægina, and lived at Athens about 340 B.C. He is the only comic poet of the Greeks from whom complete plays now remain. Aristophanes possessed a very fertile genius, a lively wit, true comic power, and Attic elegance. He is chargeable, however, with bitter personal satire and ridicule of worthy men, especially of Socrates and Euripides. This was in accordance with the character of Grecian comedy at the time, as was also his abundant contempt for the common religious belief. It is supposed that he died about 380 B.C., at the age of 80. Of more than fifty comedies written by him, only eleven are extant. They are styled 'The Acharnians,' 'The Knights,' 'The Clouds,' 'The Wasps,' 'Peace,' 'The Birds,' 'Lysistrata,' 'Females keeping the Festival in honour of Ceres,' 'The Frogs,' 'Females in Assembly,' and 'Plutus.' An English translation, by Thomas Mitchell, of the works of Aristophanes, was published at Cambridge, 8vo., 3 vols., 1817, with valuable notes and preliminary dissertations.

ARISTOTLE, son of Nicomachus, who was physician to Amyntas II., king of Macedonia, was born 384 B.C., at Stagira, a Greek colony from Andros. Hence he is frequently called the Stagyræite. After his father's death he went to Athens to hear Plato's lectures, where he soon signalled himself by the brightness of his genius. He had been of an inactive and dissolute disposition in his youth, but now he applied himself with uncommon diligence. He was moderate in his meals, and slept little. Indeed, Diogenes Laertius relates, that for fear of oversleeping he lay with one hand out of bed, and held in it a brass ball, that he might be awake by the noise it made on falling into a basin. After the death of Plato, 348 B.C., he retired to Atarneus, in Mysia, where his old friend Hermas reigned, who gave him his sister, or, according to others, his daughter or granddaughter Pythias, in marriage. Aristotle loved his wife so passionately that he offered sacrifices to her. Some years afterwards, Philip, King of Macedonia, chose him to be preceptor to his son Alexander (the Great). He continued eight years with that prince, and then went to Athens, where he established a new school. The magistrates granted him the Lyceum, in which he taught philosophy as he walked about with his disciples, from which circumstance his followers were termed Peripatetics. Alexander ordered him to study the history of animals, and sent him 800 talents, an immense sum, to defray the cost of his inquiries, besides several fishermen to be employed as he thought fit, and men who were skilful in the chase. Being accused of impiety by Eurymedon, priest of Ceres, and fearing the fate of Socrates, he retired to Chalcis, in Eubœa, where he died 322 B.C. No philosopher ever enjoyed so great and universal a reputation as Aristotle, whose authority was for many ages supreme in the schools, and though his doctrinal system is now obscured, his writings are still of inestimable value. His logic is an amazing instance of mental energy, his morals are the purest of any of the ancients, and his 'Politics' may be pronounced a monument of practical wisdom in the science of government; but his 'Rhetorics' and 'Poetics' are perhaps the greatest and most useful of all his works. The editions of Aristotle, and of his several treatises, are very numerous. The editio princeps is that printed at Venice, by Aldus Manutius, 5 vols. fol., 1495-1498. There is a complete English translation of Aristotle by Thomas Taylor, 9 vols. 4to., London, 1812, with extracts from the ancient commentators on Aristotle, and a dissertation on his system of philosophy.

ARIUS, a famous heresiarch, head of the Arians, born at Libya, or, according to some, at Alexandria. After the death of Achilles, bishop of the last-named city, Arius, being angry that he was not chosen to succeed him, set himself to oppose the Catholic doctrine, and gave out that Jesus was not God, but merely a creature. St. Alexandria, bishop of Alexandria, condemned him, but he was warmly defended by Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia. He was afterwards condemned in several councils, and in that of Nice, 325. After being two years in exile, he was recalled to Constantinople, by the intrigues of the Eusebians, and presented to Constantius a profession of faith, very artfully drawn up, by which the emperor was appeased. When Arius returned to Alexandria, St. Athanasius, who had succeeded St. Alexander, refused to admit him to communion. Upon this he retired, and assisted at the council of Tyre, held against St. Athanasius, 335. He returned again to Alexandria, during the absence of the bishop, but the people would not admit him to communion, which occasioned much confusion. Constantine, hearing of it, summoned Arius to Constantinople, and asked whether he followed the faith of Nice. Arius assured him of it with an oath, and presented to him a new confession of faith. Constantine, being persuaded that his reformation was sincere, commanded St. Alexander, bishop of Constantinople, to admit him to communion. The holy bishop had recourse to prayer, and, prostrate at the foot of the altar, begged of God, either to take him out of the world, or prevent the heresiarch from being received into the church. His prayer was heard, for while the Arians were conducting their chief in triumph to the church, Arius was suddenly taken ill, and died shortly afterwards. This occurred A.D. 336. The errors of Arius have greatly troubled the church. He had inserted them in a poem called 'Thalia,' a name borrowed from a piece by Sotades, a licentious and effeminate poet of Egypt. Arius intended to have these impious verses sung by the youths at the festivals, but they were condemned by the church.

ARKEL, CORNELIUS VAN, a Dutch divine, born at Amsterdam, 1670, and educated under Limborch and Le Clerc. He was a celebrated preacher among the Remonstrants, and died in 1724. He published 'Hadriani Junii Romani Medici animadversio, ejusdemque de Coma Commentarius,' &c.

ARKENHOLZ, JOHN, a Swedish writer, was born at Helsingfors, 1695, studied at Upsal, and then travelled through a great part of Europe. While at Paris he wrote a piece, entitled 'Considerations sur la France par rapport à la Suede,' in which he censured Cardinal Fleury, who complained of him to the Swedish court, in consequence of which he lost his place of registrar. In 1743 he obtained the office of secretary of public accounts, and in 1746 was made keeper of the cabinet of curiosities at Cassel. He was afterwards employed in writing a history of Frederic I., which he never completed. Died 1777. He published the letters of Grotius to Queen Christina, memoirs of the same queen, and several miscellaneous pieces on political and other subjects.

ARKWRIGHT, SIR RICHARD, an English manufacturer, born at Preston, 23 Dec., 1732. He was originally a barber at Wirksworth, in Derbyshire, which situation he quitted about 1767, and went about the country buying hair. At Warrington he got acquainted with one Kay, a clockmaker, and projected, with him, a machine for spinning cotton. In perfecting this they were assisted by Mr. Atherton, of Liverpool. Arkwright afterwards went into partnership with Mr. Smalley, of Preston, but not succeeding there, they removed to Nottingham, where they erected a cotton mill, which was worked by horses. By this time Arkwright had taken out a patent for his machine, which, however, was set aside in 1785, in the Court of King's Bench. He afterwards erected works at Crumford, in Derbyshire, and acquired a fortune of near half a million sterling. He was knighted on presenting an address to his Majesty, in 1786, as high sheriff of the county of Derby, and died at his seat, 3 August, 1792. Of the rapid increase of the cotton manufacture, after the machinery of Arkwright became common property, and the stimulating effect of his improvements upon every branch of this department of national industry had become fully manifest, an idea may be formed from the fact, that the imports of cotton-wool, which had averaged less than 5,000,000 lbs. in the five years from 1771 to 1775, rose to an annual average of 6,766,613 lbs. in the next similar period; of 11,328,989 lbs. in the five years ending with 1785; and of 25,443,270 lbs. in the five years ending with 1790. His only son, Richard (born 1755, died 1843) became the richest commoner in England.

ARLAUD, JACQUES ANTOINE, an eminent painter, born at Geneva, 1668, died 25 May, 1743.

ARLINGTON, HENRY BENNET, earl of, was grandson of Sir John Bennet, judge of the prerogative court of Canterbury, who died 1627. The subject of this notice—who became noted as a statesman in the reign of Charles II.—was born at Arlington, Middlesex, 1618. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and in the civil war served in the royal army. In 1668 he received the honour of knighthood at Bruges from Charles II., who senior minister to Madrid. At the Restoration he was made secretary of state, and created Baron Arlotto. He was one of the cabinet known by the name of the Cabal, a word formed from the initials of the noblemen who composed it, viz., Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale. In 1672 he was created an earl, and about the same time invested with the order of the garter. In 1674 he resigned the office of secretary, and was appointed lord chamberlain. He died 28 July, 1685.

ARLOTTO, whose real name was Mainardo, was born at Florence, 1395, took orders, and became a parish priest. It is said that he died in 1430 or 1474. He is only known by a collection of epigrams, published at Venice in 1550, 8vo., under the title of 'Facetie piacevoli, fabule e motti del Fazio Arlotto, prete Fiorentino.'

ARMIS, ROBERT, an actor and dramatist, was a player in Shakespeare's company. He is author of 'A Nest of Ninnies: simply of themselves without expound,' 1608, reprinted by the Shakespeare Society, 1842. This is a collection of anecdotes of the domestic foibles of the writer's own period. He likewise translated a little novel, 'The Italian Taylor and his Boy,' and wrote a dramatic piece, entitled 'The History of the Two Maids of More Cliffe.' A play called 'The Valiant Welchman' has also been ascribed to his pen.

ARMINE, LADY MARY, was daughter of Henry Talbot, fourth son of George, earl of Shrewsbury, and wife of Sir William Armine. She was mistress of the Latin and French languages, and skilled in history and divinity. It was her custom to distribute books among the poor, and she gave large sums to the missionaries employed in converting the Indians in North America. She endowed three hospitals, and performed other noble deeds of charity. Died 1675.

ARMINIUS, the deliverer of Germany, was the son of Sigimer, a chieftain of the Catti. He served with reputation in the Roman armies, and was honoured by Augustus with knighthood and the citizenship of Rome. His attachment to his native country, however, prevailed over all other notions, and therefore he began to rouse the Germans to a revolt. By his contrivance, Varus was got into an ambuscade, where he perished with nearly all his forces, A.D. 10. In 16 Germanicus marched to revenge the death of Varus, being in his army a brother of Arminius, named Flaccus, who was greatly attached to the Romans. The Germans suffered some terrible defeats, but the spirit of their leader was unconquered, and he, in his turn, defeated Maroboduus, a German king who was in the interest of the Romans. At last he was taken off by the treachery of some of his own relations, in the 37th year of his age, after having denied the strength of the Romans twelve years.

ARMINIUS, JAMES, a famous Protestant divine, and founder of the Arminians, or Remonstrants, was born at Oudewater, in Holland, 1560. He contracted a friendship with Theodore Beza, was minister at Amsterdam, and afterwards professor of divinity at Leyden, 1603. His doctrines are opposed to those of Calvin, and his lectures on predestination and free will, which he exalted by favouring the operations of grace, produced great confusion. He was summoned to the Hague to give an account of his doctrines, but before the proposed synod could be held he died, 19 Oct.,

ARMSTRONG.

1609. His death was most painful, and to bedily suffering was added mental anguish. His friend Bartius says: 'How often have we heard him in bitter groans cry out, when by himself, as the prophet did, "O me, O mother! why did you bear me, a man at enmity with all the world? I have neither put out to usury nor taken in upon usury from any one, and yet every one curseth me.'" The aim of Arminius was to unite all sects of Christians, with the exception of the Catholics, into one community, as is evident from the following passage in his will: 'I have studied to inculcate everything which might contribute, according to the Word of God, to the propagation and increase of truth, of the Christian religion, of the true worship of God, of general piety, and a holy conversation among men; and, finally, to that tranquillity and peace which befit the Christian name, excluding Papacy, with which no unity of faith, no bond of piety or of Christian faith can be maintained.'

ARMSTRONG, ARCHY, or ARCHIBALD, a great master of grimace and buffoonery, was jester to James I. and his son Charles I. He had a particular dislike to Archbishop Laud, upon whom he was sometimes very sarcastical. Once, in the presence of that prelate, he asked leave to say grace, which, being granted, he said, 'Great praise be given to God, and little Laud to the devil.' When the liturgy, which Laud endeavoured to introduce into Scotland, was absolutely rejected, and great tumults were raised on that account, Archy tauntingly said to the prelate, 'Who is the fool now?' The king was much offended at this impudent jest, ordered its perpetrator to pull off his coat, and dismissed him (1637-8). He was succeeded by Muckle John, who was the last person retained as fool at the English court. After his disgrace Archy retired to Arthuret, in Cumberland, the place of his birth, and died there in 1672. His 'Jests' were published in 12mo., with his portrait preixed.

ARMSTRONG, EDMUND JOHN, of Dublin, wrote a volume of poems, published shortly after his death, which occurred 24 Feb., 1805.

ARMSTRONG, FRANCIS, M.D., a physician at Uppingham, in Rutland, known as the inventor of a vegetable green paint, of which he published an account, died May, 1789.

ARMSTRONG, GEORGE, M.D., brother to the author of the 'Art of Preserving Health,' practised in London, where, in 1709, he established a dispensary for the relief of the infant poor. He died after the year 1781. He wrote an essay on the diseases most fatal to infants.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, of Gilmockie, in Westmorland, a noted freebooter, and the hero of a romantic ballad printed in Scott's 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.' He was executed by order of King James V. of Scotland, about 1220.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, F.R.S., major-general and quartermaster-general in the army, colonel of the royal regiment of foot in Ireland, surveyor of the ordnance, and his majesty's chief engineer, was born 1673, and died 15 April, 1742. He wrote, among other works, 'The History of the Ancient and Present state of the Navigation of the Port of King's Lynn, and of Cambridge, and the rest of the trading towns in those parts; and of the navigable rivers that have their course through the great level of the fens, called Bedford Level.'

army, author of 'The History of the Island of Minorca' (London, 1752 and 1756), died 27 March, 1758.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, M.D., a poet and physician, born at Castleton, Roxburghshire, about 1709. He was educated at Edinburgh, where he graduated M.D. 1732, and afterwards practised his profession in London. In 1735 he published an anonymous tract, entitled 'An Essay for Abridging the Study of Physic.' This was followed, about 1737, by the 'Economy of Love,' a poem which could not be published in our days, and which was an outrage upon decency a century ago. From the edition of 1768 many of the most offensive passages were omitted. His reputation mainly rests upon his 'Art of Preserving Health,' which was formerly regarded as one of the finest didactic poems in the language. His shorter poetical pieces were collected under the title of 'Miscellanies,' in 1770. Died 7 Sept., 1779.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, a Scotch writer, was born at Leith, 1771, and educated at Edinburgh, where he studied divinity, and took his degree of M.A. While at Edinburgh he published a volume of juvenile poems, to which he appended an essay on the means of punishing and preventing crimes; for which, in 1789, he had been honoured with the gold medal given by the Edinburgh Pantheon Society. In 1790 he came to London, where he supported himself by writing for the daily papers. He also preached to dissenting congregations, and promised to make a shining figure in life, when he was prematurely cut off on 21 July, 1797.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, M.D., an eminent physician and medical writer, was born at Ayres Quay, near Bishopwearmouth and Sunderland, in the county of Durham, 8 May, 1784, and died 12 Dec., 1829, in London, where he had practised his profession for eleven years. There is a memoir of him by Dr. Francis Boott, in 2 vols. 8vo.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN, D.D., an English colonial prelate, was born at Bishopwearmouth, 22 Aug., 1813, and educated at Charterhouse and Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1843 he was instituted to the rectory of St. Paul's, Exeter, which he exchanged, in 1843, for the vicarage of Tidenham. In 1853 he was appointed bishop of Graham's Town, and arrived at Cape Town on 29 Sept. in the following year. He died at Graham's Town, 16 May, 1856. He wrote 'Sermons on the Festivals,' 12mo., Oxford, 1845; 'The Pastor in his Closet,' 1847; 'Parochial Sermons,' 1854; and 'Essays on Church Penitentiaries,' edited by T. T. Carter, 8vo., London, 1858. He was also editor of, and a contributor to, the 'Tracts for the Christian Seasons,' and other works of a similar character. A memoir of him, by T. T. Carter, M.A., rector of Clewer, was published at Oxford, 8vo., 1857, with an introduction by Samuel Wilberforce, bishop of Oxford.

ARMSTRONG, SIR THOMAS, an English politician, was a great sufferer for the royal cause, and before the Restoration was actively engaged on behalf of Charles II. His enterprising spirit excited the jealousy of Cromwell, who threw him into prison, and even threatened his life. He was an avowed enemy of the Catholic religion, and engaged with all the zeal that was natural to him in the service of the duke of Monmouth. Soon after the new sheriffs were imposed upon the city by the influence of the court, an insurrection was planned by the country party, not only in London, but also in several other parts of the kingdom.

ARNAUD.

Sir Thomas went, at this time, with the duke of Monmouth, to view the king's guards, in order to judge whether they might venture to attack them in the projected insurrection. Finding himself obnoxious to the court, he fled the country, and his flight was soon followed by an outlawry. He was seized abroad, and sent to London, where he was condemned and executed without a trial, and under peculiar circumstances of rigour, having been conducted to death by the sorrowing soldiers who had been accustomed to obey his command. He suffered at Tyburn, 20 June, 1684.

ARMSTRONG, WILLIAM, of Gilmockie, the last Border freebooter of any note, flourished about 1646. There was another freebooter named William Armstrong, of Kynmouth, respecting whom particulars may be found in Scott's 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.'

ARNALD, GEORGE, A.R.A., an English artist, died at Pentonville, London, 21 Nov., 1841, aged 78.

ARNALD, RICHARD, an English divine, was born in London, about 1696, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, from whence he removed, in 1718, to Emmanuel College, where he took his degree of M.A., and was elected fellow in 1721. In 1728 he took the degree of B.D., and about the same time was presented by his college to the rectory of Thurcaston, Leicestershire. He published several single sermons, but his most celebrated performance is his 'Commentary on the Apocrypha,' which usually accompanies the commentaries of Patrick, Lowth, and Whithy. Died 4 Sept., 1756.

ARNALL, WILLIAM, an English political pamphleteer of the reign of George II. He edited 'The British Journal,' and 'The Free Briton,' by Francis Walsingham, Esq. He was employed by Sir Robert Walpole to defend his administration, and it is said that in four years he received nearly £11,000 for his services. He squandered the whole of this large sum, and committed suicide in 1741, aged 26.

ARNAU, JOHN, a Spanish painter, born 1595, died 1693.

ARNAUD DE MARVEIL, or DE MARUELL, a poet of Provence, who wrote a collection of poems, is supposed to have died at the end of the twelfth century. Some critics place him at the head of the amorous poets of his age and country.

ARNAUD, FRANÇOIS, abbat of Grandchamp, a French writer, born 27 July, 1721; died 2 Dec., 1784. He was employed, in conjunction with M. Suard, in writing the 'Journal Étranger' and the 'Gazette Littéraire de l'Europe.' He also published a collection of pieces on Philosophy, Literature, and the Arts, 4 vols. 12mo., Paris, 1770.

ARNAUD, FRANÇOIS THOMAS MARIE DE BACULARD D', a French writer of tales, plays, essays, and poems, was born at Paris, 14 Sept., 1718, and educated among the Jesuits. In very early youth he gave proofs of a poetical genius, which procured him the friendship of Voltaire. He visited Frederick the Great, king of Prussia, who called him his Ovid, which excited the envy and ridicule of Voltaire and his followers. On one occasion Frederick and others were very freely discussing the existence of a Deity, when Arnaud's opinion was asked. With great solemnity, he said he rejoiced to think that there existed a Being greater than kings. Died 8 Nov., 1805.

ARNAUD, GEORGE D', a Dutch lawyer and

philologist, born at Franeker, 16 Sept., 1711; died 1 June, 1740.

ARNAUD DE RONSIL, GEORGE, a native of France, was born 1697, came to England, and attained to eminence as a surgeon in London. He published several medical works, and died 27 Feb., 1774.

ARNAUD, HENRI, a celebrated pastor, and military leader of the Vaudois, was born at La Torre, Piedmont, 1641, and died at Schönberg, 1721.

ARNAUD DE VILLA NOVA, a celebrated physician at Paris, was born about 1235. He studied Greek, Hebrew, and Arabic, and omitted nothing to perfect himself in the sciences. His passion for astrology betrayed him into the folly of asserting that the world was to end about the middle of the fourteenth century. Some time after he maintained that works of mercy are preferable to the sacrifice of the mass; that the human nature of Christ was equal to his divine; and that the establishment of religious orders was very wrong; for which he was condemned by the university of Paris. Arnould withdrew into Sicily, where he was kindly received by the king, who sent him into France to attend Pope Clement V., who was sick there. He died 1313, on the coast of Genoa. His works were printed at Lyons, 1520, and at Basil, in fol., 1585. The imaginary book, 'De Tribus Impostoribus,' has been falsely ascribed to him. M. de Haisse published his life, under the name of 'Pietro Joseph,' Aix, 12mo., 1719.

ARNAUD, ANGELIQUE DE ST. JEAN, second daughter of Arnauld d'Andilly, was born 1624, and entered the convent of Port Royal, 1644. For twenty years she was mistress of the novices, and performed the arduous duties of that office with great zeal and success. Died 29 Jan. 1684. D. Clemençon published her 'Conferences,' 3 vols. 12mo., 1790.

ARNAUD, ANTOINE, was born 6 August, 1560, at Paris, where he pursued his studies, and took his degree of Master of Arts in 1573. Some time afterwards he was admitted advocate of the parliament of Paris, in which capacity he acquired great reputation by his integrity and extraordinary eloquence. Henri IV. had great esteem for Arnould, who was appointed councillor and procureur-general to Queen Catharine de Medicis. One of the most famous causes which Arnould pleaded was that of the university against the Jesuits, in 1594. Died 29 Dec., 1619.

ARNAUD, ANTOINE, the youngest and the greatest of the ten surviving children of Antoine Arnould, the advocate, and his wife, Catharine Manon, was born at Paris, 8 Feb., 1612, and studied philosophy at the college of Calvi, from whence he removed to that of the Sorbonne. In 1641 he commenced doctor, and in 1643 published a book on frequent communion, which gave offence to the Jesuits. The controversy between them and the Jansenists was then at its height, and M. Arnould joined the latter, whom he defended with great ability. For this he was expelled the Sorbonne, whereupon he went into retirement, and employed himself in writing a great number of treatises on divinity, grammar, geometry, logic, metaphysics, and other subjects. When the Jansenist controversy had subsided, in 1668, Arnould turned his polemical weapons against the Calvinists. His treatise entitled 'La Perpetuité de la Foi de l'Eglise Catholique touchant l'Eucharistie,' in which he was largely assisted by Nicole, led to the grand dispute between them and M. Claude, in which each party claimed the victory. This work is said to have converted to Catholicism the Prince de Tarente, the Marshals De Lorges and De Duras, and to have put an end to all the doubts of Turenne. In 1679 Arnould quitted France, and went to the Low Countries, where he continued to write against the Jesuits and Protestants with equal sharpness and facility. He died at Brussels, 8 Aug., 1694. The numerous works of Arnould are for the most part polemical. Father Quesnel published his letters in 9 vols.

ARNAULD, HENRI, son of Anthony Arnould, the advocate, and brother of Arnauld d'Andilly, was born at Paris, 1597. Having embraced the ecclesiastical profession, in 1649 he became bishop of Angers. His charity to the poor was unbounded, and his labours were incessant. When it was proposed to him to rest himself one day in the week, he replied, 'I am willing to do so if you can find me a day on which I am not a bishop.' Died 8 June, 1692. His chief work is entitled 'Négociations à la Cour de Rome, et en différentes Cours d'Italie,' 5 vols. 12mo., Paris, 1748. This work contains many curious and interesting particulars.

ARNAULD, JACQUELINE MARIE, known in religion as Marie Angélique de Sainte Magdeleine, was born 8 Sept., 1591, being the second daughter of Antoine Arnould, the advocate. At an early age she became abbess of Port Royal, of the order of Cîteaux, and introduced great reforms into the convent, which she removed from the fields to Paris itself. She was also chosen to reform the abbey of Maubuisson. Died 6 Aug., 1661. Five of her sisters took the veil at Port Royal, where they led exemplary lives. One of them, Mother Agnes, wrote 'L'Image de la Religieuse parfaite, et imparfaite,' 12mo., Paris, 1665. She was born 31 Dec., 1593, and died 19 Feb., 1671.

ARNAULD D'ANDILLY, ROBERT, eldest son of Antoine Arnould, the advocate, was born at Paris, 1589. He held some considerable offices, and discharged his duties in the most honourable manner. At the age of fifty-five he retired to the monastery of Port Royal des Champs, where he spent the remainder of his days in religious studies. He published a translation of Josephus; a 'Memoir of the House of Port Royal;' 'Memoirs of his own life;' and several other works. Died 27 Sept., 1674.

ARNAULT, VINCENT ANTOINE, a French dramatist and miscellaneous writer, born 1 Jan., 1766; died 16 Sept., 1854.

ARNDT, JOHN, a famous Protestant divine of Germany, born at Ballenstädt, in the duchy of Anhalt, 2 Dec., 1555. At first he applied himself to physic, but falling into a dangerous sickness, he made a vow to change that for divinity, if he should be restored to health. He wrote many religious works, the most famous of which is his 'Treatise of Free Christianity,' which has been translated into English. This writer died at Zell, 11 May, 1621.

ARNDT, JOSHUA, was born at Gustrów, in Germany, 9 Sept., 1626, and became professor of logic at Rostock, preacher at the court, and ecclesiastical councillor to the duke of Mecklenberg. He died 5 April, 1687. Among his numerous writings are 'Miscellanea Sacra;' 'Clavis Antiquitatum Judaicarum;' and 'Manuale Legum Mosaicarum.' His son Charles (born 1673; died 1721, became professor of poetry and Hebrew at Melchin. He wrote a life of his father, and several works on bibliography.

ARNE, CECILIA, the wife of Dr. Arne, and one of the most celebrated singers of her time, died 1776.

ARNE, MICHAEL, an English musical composer, was son of Dr. Arne, and inherited much of the musical talent of his father. He set several operas to music. Died 1785.

ARNE, SUSANNAH MARIA. See CIBBER.

ARNE, THOMAS AUGUSTINE, Mus.D., an English musician, was born 1710. His father was an upholsterer in Covent Garden. He received his education at Eton, and was afterwards articled to an attorney; but music had more charms for him than law, and he soon abandoned the desk for the fiddle. In a short time his proficiency was so great that he was engaged as leader of the orchestra at Drury Lane theatre; and in 1773 he composed the music for Addison's opera of 'Rosamond,' which was received with universal applause. In 1738 he gained great credit by setting Milton's 'Comus.' In 1740 he set Mallet's masque of 'Alfred,' in which first appeared the famous song, 'Rule Britannia.' He had great success in setting popular airs to music. In 1759 the university of Oxford created him doctor of music. He died 5 March, 1778. Having been brought up as a Catholic, he had recourse, in his last illness, to the consolations of that religion for support, although, in the progress of his life, he had paid but little respect to any form of worship.

ARNIM, LOUIS ACHIM VON, a distinguished German poet, born at Berlin, 26 Jan., 1781; died 21 Jan., 1831.

ARNISEUS, HENNINGUS, a native of Halberstadt, and professor of physic in the university of Helmstadt, a learned philosopher, and skillful physician, who travelled into France and England, and died Nov., 1636. He wrote some works in favour of the divine right of kings; a curious treatise, 'De Jure Connubiorum;' and some medical pieces.

ARNOBIUS the Elder, a native of Africa, became professor of rhetoric at Sicca, in Numidia, about 297. Being converted to Christianity, he composed a work entitled 'Disputations against the Gentiles.' He has been styled the Varro, as Lactantius, his disciple, is called the Cicero, of ecclesiastical writers.

ARNOBIUS the Younger, was an ecclesiastic in Gaul, and lived about A.D. 460. He wrote a commentary on the Psalms, which has often been attributed to the elder Arnobius.

ARNOLD of Brescia, in Italy, a famous heretic of the twelfth century. He maintained that those bishops and monks who possessed any lands could not be saved, and that the ecclesiastical possessions belonged to princes. This new doctrine drew a large number of libertines to his side, who wanted to seize the property of the clergy. Indeed it was found necessary to repulse his followers by force of arms, and they were condemned in the council of Lateran, 1139. Arnold retired to the mountains of Switzerland, whither he was followed by his disciples. In 1141 he went to Rome, drove out the Pope and the ecclesiastics, and attempted to restore the senate. Eugenius III. found means, after many combats, to return to Rome. Arnold then withdrew to the emperor Frederick I., who delivered him up to Pope Adrian IV., by whose order he was executed, 1155.

ARNOLD.

ARNOLD, BENEDICT, an American military commander, born at Norwich, in Connecticut, 3 Jan., 1740; died in London, 14 June, 1801.

ARNOLD, CHRISTOPHER, a learned German, born at Hersbruck, in Franconia, 12 April, 1627. He studied divinity and philology at Altorf, travelled into various countries, including England, and ultimately became professor at the gymnasium at Nuremberg, where he lectured on history, eloquence, poetry, and Greek. Died 30 June, 1685. He wrote 'Ornatus Linguae Latinae;' 'Valerii Catonis Grammatici Dirae, cum Commentario perpetuo;' 'Testamentum Flavianum, sive Epistolae xxx. de Josephi Testimonio de Christo;' and other works.

ARNOLD, GEORGE DANIEL, born at Strasburg, 18 Feb., 1780, studied law at Göttingen, became professor of the code civil at Coblenz, and afterwards successively professor of history and of Roman law at the same place. Died 18 Feb., 1829. For the use of his pupils he published 'Elementa juris civilis Justiniani, cum Codice Napoleoneo et reliquis, qui in imperio Franco-gallico obtinent legum codicibus, juxta ordinem Institutionum collati,' 8vo., Paris, 1812. He also acquired considerable reputation as a poet.

ARNOLD, GODFREY, a German Protestant divine, born at Annaberg, in Saxony, 4 Sept., 1666; died 30 May, 1714. He wrote a prodigious number of works, of which his 'History of the Church and of Heresies' attracted much notice. He showed a remarkable tendency to mysticism, and was charged by the orthodox Lutherans with having professed heretical doctrines. Arnold despised Latin because it was, in his opinion, the language of Anti-Christ.

ARNOLD, IGNATIUS THEODORE FERDINAND KAJETAN, a German writer, born at Erfurt, 4 April, 1774, became secretary to the university of that town, and died 26 Oct., 1812. He published a treatise on Dr. Joseph Gall's system of phrenology.

ARNOLD, JOHN, an ingenious mechanic, born at Bodmin, Cornwall, 1744; died 25 Aug., 1799. For many years he carried on business as a watchmaker in Cornhill. Mr. Arnold introduced several important improvements in the construction of marine chronometers, for which he received rewards from the Board of Longitude. He published some pamphlets on the subject of his inventions.

ARNOLD, JOSEPH, M.D., an English naturalist, born at Beccles, Suffolk, 1783; died at Padang, 26 July, 1818.

ARNOLD, NICHOLAS, a famous Protestant divine, born at Lesna, in Poland, 17 Dec., 1618. He became professor of divinity at Franeker, and died 15 Oct., 1680. He wrote 'Lux in tenebris, seu vindictio locorum Vet. et Novi Test. quibus sectarii abutuntur ad stabilendos suos errores,' 4to., Leipzig 1698; and other works.

ARNOLD, RICHARD, an English chronicler, was born about the middle of the fifteenth century, and was a London merchant trading to Flanders. He is chiefly known as the author of a work sometimes called 'The Statutes of London,' but more commonly 'Arnold's Chronicle.' The best edition is that by Francis Douce, 4to., London, 1811. Warton very properly describes the work as 'the most heterogeneous and multifarious miscellany that ever existed,' and gives the following summary of its contents:—'The collector sets out with a catalogue of the mayors and sheriffs, the customs and characters of the City of London. Soon afterwards we have receipts to pickle sturgeon, to make vinegar, ink, and gunpowder; how to raise parsley in an hour, the arts of brewing and soapmaking; an estimate of the livings in London; an account of the last visitation of St. Magnus's church, the weight of Essex cheese, and a letter to Cardinal Wolsey. The "Not-browne Mayde" is introduced between an estimate of some subsidies paid into the exchequer, and directions for buying goods in Flanders. In a word, it seems to have been this compiler's plan, by way of making up a volume, to print together all the notices and papers, whether ancient or modern, which he could amass, of every sort and subject.

ARNOLD, SAMUEL, Mus.D., was born in London, 29 Aug., 1740, and educated at the chapel royal, St. James's, under Mr. Bernard Gates and Dr. Nares. Before he had attained his twenty-third year he became composer to Covent Garden theatre, where he distinguished himself by several new productions. His oratorio called 'The Cure of St. Paul' attracted crowded houses. This was succeeded by 'The Prodigal Son,' an oratorio, for which, in 1775, he obtained the degree of doctor of music at Oxford. At this time he was proprietor of Marybone Gardens, a place of fashionable resort. On the death of Dr. Nares, in 1783, he was appointed organist and composer to the chapel royal. In 1786 he commenced a splendid edition of Handel's works. He died 23 Oct., 1802, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, of which church he was organist.

ARNOLD, SAMUEL JAMES, son of the preceding, was born in or about 1775, and bred as an artist; but at an early age he showed a preference for authorship, and produced a novel entitled 'The Corsic, or, Haunted Island,' 3 vols., 1796. In 1794 he brought out a musical entertainment called 'And Robin Gray,' and in 1796 a comic opera, in two acts, called 'The Shipwreck.' As a painter he applied himself to portraits, but was not very successful. He married Miss Matilda Pye, daughter of the poet laureate, and in association with her wrote 'The Prior Claim,' a comedy, 1805. Mr. Arnold afterwards became manager successively of the Lyceum and Drury Lane theatres. He died at Walton-upon-Thames, 16 Aug., 1852.

ARNOLD, THOMAS, M.D., was born at Leicester, 1722, received his education at Edinburgh, and became a fellow of the College of Physicians of London. He afterwards became proprietor and conductor of an extensive lunatic asylum in his native town. Died 2 Sept., 1816. He is author of 'Observations on the Nature, Kinds, Causes, and Prevention of Insanity, Lunacy, or Madness,' 2 vols.

ARNOLD, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Cowes, in the Isle of Wight, 13 June, 1795, and educated at Winchester School and Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. 1814). In 1815 he was elected a fellow of Oriel College, and afterwards took orders. He vacated his fellowship 1820, by his marriage with Mary, youngest daughter of the Rev. John Pearce, and established himself at Laleham, near Staines, where he resided for some years, being chiefly employed in private tuition. In Dec., 1827, he was elected to the head mastership of Rugby school, where he remained to the end of his life. As head master of Rugby school he was enabled to exercise his natural faculty for tuition, and to carry into practice on a large scale his leading idea of introducing Christianity into daily life in a sphere which had been hitherto considered almost exempt from its influence. In Aug., 1841, he was appointed professor of modern history at Oxford. Died 12 June, 1842. Dr. Arnold published an edition of Thucydides, and wrote 'History of Rome,' 1838-42; articles in the Encyclopædia Metropolitana, on the lives of Sulla, Cæsar, Augustus, and Trajan; and 'Introductory Lectures on Modern History,' 1842. His life has been written by Dean Stanley.

ARNOLD, THOMAS KERCHEVER, an educational writer, eldest son of Thomas George Arnold, M.D., of Stamford, was born in or about 1800. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1821; M.A. 1824), of which he was elected a fellow, and in 1830 was presented to the rectory of Lyndon, in Rutland, where he died, 9 March, 1853. Mr. Arnold acquired a very widespread reputation as the author and editor of a whole library of books adapted for educational purposes. His attention was first directed to the Greek language, but was afterwards extended to other languages, both ancient and modern. For two years he was editor of 'The Theological Critic.'

ARNOLDI, JOHN VON, a German diplomatist and statesman, born at Herborn, in the duchy of Nassau, 30 Dec., 1751; died 2 Dec., 1827. He published a number of historical works in German.

ARNOLDT, DANIEL HENRY, a German author, born at Königsberg, 7 Dec., 1706, became professor of theology in the university of that city, 1735, and died 30 July, 1775. His principal works are a 'History of the University of Königsberg,' and an 'Ecclesiastical History of the Kingdom of Prussia.'

ARNOLFO DI LAPO, or DI COLLE, a very celebrated Italian architect, born 1232; died about 1300. His chief works are at Florence.

ARNOT, HUGO, a Scotch writer, born at Leith, 8 Dec., 1749. His original name was Pollock, which he changed to Arnot, on succeeding, through his mother, to the estate of Balcomrie, in Fifeshire. He became a member of the Faculty of Advocates, 1772, and died 20 Nov., 1786. His works are, 'The xlv. chapter of the prophecies of Thomas the Rhymer, in verse; with notes and illustrations. Dedicated to Dr. Silverspoon, [Witnespoo] preacher of sedition in America' (anon), 4to., Edinburgh, 1776; 'An Essay on Nothing; a discourse delivered in a society' (anon), 3rd edition, 8vo., London, 1777; 'A Letter to the Lord Advocate of Scotland. [Henry Dundas] By Eugene,' 4to., [Edinburgh, 1777]; 'The History of Edinburgh,' 4to., Edinburgh, 1779; and 'A collection and abridgment of celebrated criminal trials in Scotland, from A.D. 1536 to 1784, with historical and critical remarks,' 4to., Edinburgh, 1785.

ARNOTT, ARCHIBALD, M.D., an English army surgeon, died at Kirkconnell Hall, Dumfriesshire, 6 July, 1855, aged 83. He was the medical attendant of Napoleon I. at the island of St. Helena, and was present at the death of that great warrior.

ARNTZENIUS.

Dumont. His 'Traité de Prudence,' Besançon, 1753, is a collection of French, Italian, and Spanish proverbs. The largest work by him is entitled 'Le Précepteur.'

ARNTZENIUS, JOHN, a German scholar, born at Wesel, on the Lower Rhine, 1702; became professor of eloquence, history, and poetry at Franeker, 1742; and died 1759. He published valuable editions of several Latin authors.

ARNTZENIUS, JOHN HENRY, son of the preceding, became professor of jurisprudence, first at Groningen, and afterwards at Utrecht. He died in the latter city, 7 April, 1797. His works are, 'Institutiones Juris Belgici,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Miscellanea;' an edition of Cælius Sedulius's 'Carmen Paschale;' and an edition of all the Latin panegyrics, under the title of 'Panegyrici Veteres.'

ARTZENIUS, OTTO, a brother of John Artzenius, was born 1703, and died 1763. He published some orations, and an edition of Dionysius Cato's 'Disticha de Moribus.'

ARNU, NICHOLAS, a learned Dominican, born near Verdun, in Lorraine, 1629; died 1692, at Padua, where he was professor of metaphysics. He wrote several works on the philosophy and theology of St. Thomas Aquinas.

ARNULF, St., bishop of Metz, 614. After holding some important offices under the Austrian government, he quitted the court and his bishopric to lead a solitary life in the deserts of Vosges, where he died, 647.

ARNULF, son of Carloman, king of Bavaria, was elected emperor of Germany at Tribur, 887. He repulsed the Slavonians, drove the Normans out of Lorraine, took Bergamot, and afterwards Rome, where he was crowned by Pope Formosus. Died 24 Nov., 890.

ARNULF, was born at Beauvais about 1040, and became a monk of the order of St. Benedict. Removing to England, he was appointed prior of Canterbury, then abbot of Burgh, and, in 1114, bishop of Rochester. Died 15 March, 1124. His chief work is a collection of documents, entitled 'Textus Roffensis,' relating to the church and see of Rochester. This was published by Thomas Hearne in 1720.

ARNULF, bishop of Lisieux in the twelfth century, joined the second crusade, accompanying Louis VII. of France to the Holy Land, 1147. He was sent to England by Pope Alexander III. as apostolic legate, 1160, and died 31 Aug., 1182, at the abbey of St. Victor at Paris. There are letters of his remaining, written with great genius and elegance; they contain many remarkable particulars respecting the history of his time. Turnebus published an edition of them at Paris in 1585, and they are also in the library of the fathers. His letters to Henry II., king of England, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and others, were published at Oxford, in 8vo., 1844, under the editorship of J. A. Giles, LL.D.

ARNWAY, JOHN, D.D., an English royalist divine, was born in Shropshire, 1601, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford (B.A. 1621; M.A. 1624). He held the rectories of Hodnet and Ightfield, in his native county, but was deprived of them in the Rebellion. He also suffered the loss of his temporal estate. In 1640 he attended the king at Oxford, and while there was created D.D., and appointed to the archdeaconry of Coventry. Subsequently he went to Virginia, where he died

ARRAN, JAMES HAMILTON, third Earl of, and second Duke of Chateleherault, a title conferred upon his father by Francis I., was, in the earlier part of his life, the most amiable and accomplished gentleman of his family. In 1555 he went to the court of France, then the gayest and most polished in Europe, where he was highly in favour with Henry II., who made him captain of his Scottish life-guards. Here he was first dazzled with the charms of Mary; but he regarded her with that admiration with which a subject beholds his sovereign. As his father had been regent of Scotland, and was, upon failure of issue from that princess, declared by the three estates of the kingdom heir to the crown, his views were aspiring, and he was once in hopes of gaining Queen Elizabeth in marriage. When Mary returned to her native country he conceived the strongest passion for her — a passion in which ambition seems to have had little or no part; but being treated with coldness and neglect, he abandoned himself to solitude, and indulged his melancholy, which brought on an almost total deprivation of his reason, and cut short the expectations of his friends and admirers. Died 1609.

ARREBOE, ANDERS, a celebrated Danish poet, was born at Ærrøe's Kiøbing, in the island of Ærrøe, 1587, and educated at Copenhagen. In 1618 he was elected bishop of Drøntheim, but was deprived of his see, 1621, on account of his misconduct. Subsequently he was appointed to the pastorate of Vordingborg, which he occupied till his death, in 1637. The name of Arreboe is the most distinguished in the early history of the poetry of Denmark.

ARREDONDO, ISIDORE, a Spanish painter, born 1654; died at Madrid, 1702.

ARRIAGA, ROBERIC D', a Spanish Jesuit, born at Logroño, 17 Jan., 1592; died 7 June, 1667, at Prague, where he was professor of divinity. He wrote a 'Course of Philosophy,' in folio, and a 'Course of Theology,' in 8 vols. fol. Arriaga is one of the most subtle and obscure of the scholastic divines.

ARRIAN, FLAVIUS, a Greek historian and philosopher, was a native of Nicomedia, in Bithynia, and flourished in the second century, under the Emperor Hadrian and the Antonines. He was a Stoic and a disciple of Epictetus. On account of his merit he was presented with citizenship both at Athens and Rome, and at the latter place was advanced to senatorial and consular honours. The Emperor Hadrian conferred on him the government of the province of Cappadocia. Besides a philosophical 'Manual,' collected from the discourses of his master, Epictetus, Arrian wrote an account of the 'Expedition of Alexander,' in seven books, and a work on the 'Affairs of India,' which continues the history of Alexander. His other historical pieces have perished; but a philosophical work by him, commonly called the 'Discussions of Epictetus,' has been preserved. Some other works are ascribed, on doubtful authority, to his pen.

ARRIVABENE, HIPPOLYTE, a physician at Rome, died 1739. He published poems, and an academic discourse entitled 'The true idea of medicine.'

ARRIVABENE.

ARRIVABENE, JOHN FRANCIS, a poet of Mantua, lived in the sixteenth century. He composed 'Maritime Eclogues,' 'Discourses,' and 'Letters,' which are included in the 'Rime di diversi,' and other similar collections.

ARRIVABENE, JOHN PETER, bishop of Urbino, died 1504, aged 63. He is author of a Latin poem entitled 'Gonzagidos,' and letters in the same language.

AROMATARI, JOSEPH DEOLI, an Italian physician, born at Assisi, about 1586, practised his profession with reputation for fifty years at Venice, in which city he died, 16 July, 1660. His principal work is a letter on the generation of plants. There is an English translation of it in the Philosophical Transactions, No. cccxi.

ARROWSMITH. ———, an English vocalist, who acquired considerable popularity in London between 1784 and 1787.

ARROWSMITH, AARON, a celebrated constructor of maps, born in Winston, Durham, 14 July, 1750; died 23 April, 1823. He carried on his business in London, first in Leicester Square, and afterwards in Soho Square.

ARROWSMITH, JOHN, a Puritan divine, was born near Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1602. He was admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge, and took his degrees in arts there, but in 1623 he became Fellow of Catharine Hall. He afterwards settled at Lynn, in Norfolk, and in the Great Rebellion was chosen one of the assembly of divines at Westminster. When Dr. Beale was dispossessed of the mastership of St. John's College, Mr. Arrowsmith was put into his place, and, in 1649, took his doctor's degree. About this time he was removed to the mastership of Trinity College. He died in Feb., 1688-9. His works are, 'Tactica Sacra;' 'A Chain of Principles;' 'Sermons on Public Occasions;' and 'Armillæ Catachctica.'

ARROWSMITH, EDMUND, an English Jesuit, born in or about 1586, at a place called Haddock, in the parish of Winwick, Lancashire, and educated in the English college at Douay, where he arrived in Dec., 1605. In 1612 he was ordained a priest, and shortly afterwards was sent upon the English mission. He laboured zealously for about twelve years as a secular priest, and in 1624 joined the Society of Jesus. Being at length apprehended on account of his sacerdotal character, he was tried at Lancaster, 27 Aug., 1628, and being found guilty, was hanged, drawn, and quartered on the following day.

ARFALE, JOSEPH, an Italian poet, born 1628, at Mazzarano, in Sicily; died at Naples, 11 Feb., 1679. He first adopted the profession of arms, and at the siege of Candia displayed such bravery that he was honoured with the title of knight of the order of St. George. He left some poems and dramatic pieces.

ARTAXERXES I., Longimanus, sixth king of Persia, succeeded his father Xerxes about 464 B.C., and died 425 B.C. It was this prince who gave permission to rebuild Jerusalem; and the seventy weeks of Daniel begin from the seventh, or according to others, the twentieth year of his reign.

ARTAXERXES II., Mnemon, the tenth king of Persia, succeeded his brother Darius 405 B.C. Cyrus, his brother, took up arms against him, and was slain in battle, 401 B.C. Artaxerxes died 362 B.C.

ARTAXERXES III., Ochus, eleventh king of Persia, succeeded his father, Artaxerxes II., in 362, and was poisoned by Bagoas, a eunuch, to whom he entrusted all his authority, 339 B.C.

ARTEAGA, STEPHEN, a Spanish Jesuit, born in 1747, went to Italy on the suppression of his order, and for a long time resided at Bologna. He followed the Chevalier Azara to France, and died at his house in Paris, 30 Oct., 1799. He wrote a treatise on ideal beauty, in Spanish; seven dissertations on the rhythm of the ancients; and 'Le Rivoluzioni del teatro musicale Italiano, dalla sua origine, fino al presente,' 2nd edition, 3 vols. 8vo., Venice. A French translation, by the Baron de Rouvron, of this work, which is highly esteemed, was published at London in 1802.

ARTEDI, PETER, a Swedish naturalist, was born at Anund, 23 Feb., 1705, and educated at the university of Upsal, where he applied to the study of medicine. There was so great a friendship between him and Linnæus that they made each other heirs to all their MSS. Artedi devoted himself chiefly to ichthyology. During a visit which he paid to England he met with a kind reception from Sir Hans Sloane. He was drowned at Leyden, 27 Dec., 1735. Linnæus published his 'Ichthyologia, sive Opera omnia de Piscibus,' 1738.

ARTEVELDE, JAMES VAN, a famous brewer of Ghent, artful, enterprising, and a great politician. He engaged almost all Flanders in a revolt, being desirous of surrendering it to the king of England, and was killed by the populace of Ghent, 17 July, 1345.

ARTEVELDE, PHILIP VAN, son of the preceding, was chosen leader of the people of Ghent when they rebelled against Louis III., count of Flanders, in 1382. He was killed at the battle of Roosebeck, 27 Nov., 1382.

ARTHUR, a British prince, was the son of Uther Pendragon, or dictator of the Britons, by the wife of the duke of Cornwall. He succeeded Uther in 516, and was immediately engaged in a war with the Saxons, in which he was completely successful. He next turned his arms against the Scots and Picts, in which he was also victorious. It is, moreover, said that he conquered Ireland and the western isles of Scotland; and that, after a series of warlike exploits, he passed the remainder of his days in peace, governing his kingdom with great wisdom and moderation. He instituted the military order of the Knights of the Round Table, and settled Christianity at York in the room of paganism. These appear to be the real historical facts of this celebrated person, of whom many fabulous circumstances are related. He died A. D. 542.

ARTHUR, duke of Brittany. See BRITANNY.

ARTHUR, prince of Wales, eldest son of Henry VII., was born 1486; married Catharine of Aragon 14 Nov., 1501; and died 2 April, 1502.

ARTHUR, JAMES, an Irish Catholic divine, was born at Limerick, and entered the order of St. Dominic. He was doctor and professor of divinity at Salamanca for many years, and was afterwards sent in the same capacity to the university of Coimbra. In 1642 he retired to the royal convent of St. Dominic, in Lisbon, where, according to some authorities, he died in 1644. Ware, however, states that his death did not take place till about 1670. He wrote two volumes of commentary in Latin on the first part of St. Thomas Aquinas's 'Sum of Theology,' but only the first volume was printed. It appeared in 1665.

ARTHUR, THOMAS, an English Protestant divine, was educated at Cambridge, and became principal of St. Mary's Hostel in that university. He wrote two tragedies, and other works. Died 1532.

ARTIGAS, FERDINAND JOSEPH, born at Monte Video, about 1760, of a family originally from Spain, became a captain in the service of that power at the time when her southern colonies revolted. At first he sided with the royalists, but afterwards joined the party of independence. Having obtained from the republic of Buenos Ayres the command of an army corps, he beat both the Spaniards and Portuguese in several engagements. In 1820, however, he was obliged to retire to Paraguay, where he was hospitably entertained by Dr. Francia, who, however, detained him as a prisoner till his death, which occurred 1826.

ARTIGNY, ANTOINE GACHAT D', a French writer, canon of the metropolitan church of Vienne, in Dauphiné, was born in that city 8 Nov., 1706, and died there 6 May, 1778. He is chiefly remembered by his 'Nouveaux Mémoires d'Histoire, de Critique, et de Littérature,' 7 vols. 12mo., Paris, 1749-56.

ARTOIS, JAMES VAN, a landscape painter, born at Brussels, 1613; died 1667, or thereabouts.

ARUNDEL AND SURREY, ANNE, countess of, was born 1557, being the daughter of Thomas, Lord Dacres of the North. At an early age she became the wife of the unfortunate Philip, earl of Arundel. In 1582 or 1583 she embraced the Catholic religion, to which she was, during the remainder of her life, most devotedly attached. This exposed her to much persecution, and Queen Elizabeth caused her to be imprisoned for a year in the house of Sir Thomas Shirley. After her husband's death she gave herself entirely up to her religious duties, the performance of works of charity, and the education of her children. Died 19 April, 1630. She founded the English college of the Society of Jesus, in Ghent.

ARUNDEL, BLANCHE, lady, fifth daughter of Edward Somerset, earl of Worcester, became the wife of Thomas, second Lord Arundel of Wardour. During the absence of her husband she bravely defended Wardour Castle for nine days with a few men against the parliament forces, under the command of Sir Edward Hungerford and Lieut.-Col. Ludlow. She ultimately delivered up the castle on honourable terms, which were broken. The parliament forces, however, were soon dislodged by the resolution of Lord Arundel, who, on his return, ordered a mine to be sprung under the castle, and thus sacrificed that noble structure to his loyalty. Lady Blanche was born 1583, and died 28 Oct., 1649.

ARUNDEL, EVERARD, tenth Lord Arundel of Wardour, was born in London, 3 Nov., 1785, and died at Rome, 21 June, 1834. His name was, in 1829, associated with that of Sir R. C. Hoare in the title-page of the 'Hundred of Dunworth,' a part of the 'History of Modern Wiltshire.'

ARUNDEL, HENRY, third Lord Arundel of Wardour, was son of Thomas Lord Arundel, by his wife, the heroic Lady Blanche Somerset. In 1678 he was committed to the Tower on the information of the miscreant Titus Oates, and impeached by the Commons of high crimes and misdemeanours. He continued in confinement until 1683, when he was admitted to bail. In 1686 he was constituted lord keeper of the privy seal, and installed a K.B. Retiring to his seat at Breamore, Hampshire, he lived in seclusion till his death, in Dec., 1694. He wrote five meditations in verse, which are printed in 'A Collection of eighty-six loyal Poems,' 1685.

ARUNDEL, MARY, countess of, daughter of Sir John Arundel, of Llanherne, in Cornwall, married first, Robert Ratcliffe, earl of Sussex, and secondly, Henry Fitzalan, earl of Arundel. Died 20 Oct., 1557. Among the royal MSS. are 'Alexandri Severi Sententiæ et Res Gestæ, ex Anglico in Sermonem Latinum versæ per Mariam Arundell et Joannem Radcliffum,' and a collection by her of Latin similes. She also translated from Greek into Latin, 'Selectæ Sententiæ septem Sapientum Græcorum.'

ARUNDEL, PHILIP HOWARD, earl of, son of Thomas Howard, fourth duke of Norfolk, was born at London, 1557. He was educated at home, one of his preceptors being the famous Gregory Martin, and afterwards studied at Cambridge, where he was admitted M.A. 1576. About the eighteenth year of his age he went to court, where he appears to have led a rather dissolute life. At this time he utterly neglected his wife, whom he had married when he was only twelve years old. His object was to obtain the favour of Queen Elizabeth, 'which could not be had (as was observed) by such as he, if they shewed any love for their wives.' He was present at the disputations held by Clarke, Fulke, Whitaker, and others, against Edmund Campian, the Jesuit. From what he heard upon these occasions he was led to adopt the Catholic faith, though he did not openly avow the change in his sentiments till more than a year afterwards, being deterred by the rigorous laws then in force against members of the Church of Rome. In 1583 he entertained Queen Elizabeth at Arundel. Soon after her departure the earl was ordered into close custody in his own house. The next day he was examined before the privy council respecting his religion and his dealings with Cardinal Allen and Mary Queen of Scots. He made no admissions. Two days afterwards Lord Hunsdon was sent to interrogate him on the same subjects, and also respecting Throckmorton's conspiracy, but was equally unsuccessful. After being detained three weeks, the earl was set at liberty. At length, in 1584, he was formally reconciled to the church by Father William Weston, alias Edmonds, of the Society of Jesus. The change which was soon observed in his demeanour and manner of life led his enemies to suspect the truth, and he determined to escape their machinations by quitting the kingdom. Accordingly, he embarked on a ship at Littlehampton, in Sussex, having previously addressed an eloquent letter to the queen in justification of the course he had taken, and disclaiming any intention of being a traitor to her Majesty. His design, however, had already been betrayed to the council, and by their orders one Keloway boarded the earl's ship, took him into custody, and carried him under a strong guard to London. He arrived there 25 April, 1585, and was immediately committed to the Tower, where he remained a close prisoner until his death, on 19 Oct., 1595. From the commencement of his imprisonment his miserable life was spent in devotional and ascetic exercises, which he practised with great rigour. He was buried in the church of St. Peter ad Vincula within the Tower, in the grave where his father's body rested. His interment was conducted with a due regard to economy. The coffin cost the queen ten shillings, and the black cloth which covered it thirty shillings. As he was a Catholic, the chaplain deemed it a profanation to read the established service over his grave, and therefore used some prayers which he thought fitting to the occasion. One of them commenced as follows:—'Oh! Almighty God! who art the Judge of all the world, the Lord of life and death, who alone hast the keys of the grave, who shuttest and no man openeth it, who openest and no man can shut it, we give thee hearty thanks, for that it hath pleased Thee, in thy mercy to us, to take this man out of the world.' The earl of Arundel's works are, 'An Epistle in the Person of Christ to the Faithfull Soule, written first by that learned Lanspergius, and after translated into English by one of no small fame, whose good example of sufferance and living hath and wilbe a memoriall unto his country and posteritie for ever,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1605; and 'Three Treatises of the Excellency and Utility of Virtue.'

ARUNDEL, RICHARD FITZALAN, earl of, one of the most distinguished men in the reign of Edward III. He was in the expedition to Flanders, and in several of the French wars, particularly at the battle of Cressy. He filled many high offices, and executed several important embassies. Died 1376.

ARUNDEL, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, was second son of Richard Fitzalan, earl of Arundel, and was born at Arundel Castle, Sussex, 1353. At the age of 21 he was consecrated bishop of Ely. In 1396 he was raised to the primacy, with which he exercised the office of lord high chancellor. Richard II. banished him for some attempts to establish a regency, on which he went to Rome. When Henry IV. ascended the throne Arundel returned to England. He was a zealous defender of the temporalities of the church, exerted himself with great violence against the Wickliffites, and died 30 Feb., 1413-14.

ARUNDEL, Sir THOMAS, second son of Sir John Arundel, of Llanherne, Cornwall, was a person of high consideration in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and was made K. B. at the coronation of Anne Boleyn. Unfortunately for him, he was the intimate friend of the Lord-protector Somerset, and in Nov., 1551, when that nobleman was sent to the Tower, Sir Thomas was apprehended and committed to close custody. Being found guilty of treason, he was beheaded on Tower-hill with Sir Michael Stanhope, 26 Feb., 1551-2.

ARUNDEL, THOMAS, first Lord Arundel of Wardour, was son of Sir Matthew Arundel, knight, and when a young man, went to Germany, served as a volunteer in the imperial army in Hungary, behaved himself valiantly against the Turks, and in an engagement at Gran, took the standard with his own hands; on which account Rodolph II., emperor of Germany, created him count of the Holy Roman empire, 14 Dec., 1595. He was in high favour with Rodolph II., who made him several great offers, but he chose to return to his native country. King James I., to countenance his merits, created him Baron Arundel of Wardour, by patent dated 4 May, 1605. Died 7 Nov., 1659, aged 79.

ARUNDEL, THOMAS, second Lord Arundel of Wardour, succeeded his father, the first lord, in 1659, and attaching himself to the royal cause, raised at his own expense a regiment of horse for the service of King Charles I. Being in a battle, fighting for the king, he was shot in the thigh, and died of his wounds in his Majesty's garrison at Oxford, 19 May, 1643, æt. 59, and was buried with great pomp at Tisbury. The statement that the wounds of which he died were received at the battle of Lansdown must be erroneous, as that engagement took place on 5 July, 1643.

ARUNDEL, THOMAS HOWARD, earl of, only son of the ill-fated Philip Howard, earl of Arundel, was born 1586, and in 1603 was restored in blood to such honours as he had lost by his father's attainder, as well as to the earldom of Surrey, but the dukedom itself was detained from him. In 1607 he was sworn of the privy council, and soon afterwards travelled into France and Italy, where he imbibed that love for the fine arts by which he was afterwards distinguished. On his return to England, in 1611, he was installed K.G.; and in 1614 he renounced the Catholic religion, in which he had been carefully trained. In 1621 he was restored to the place of Earl Marshal. He was appointed steward of the royal household 1637, and in 1640 was nominated general-in-chief of the country south of the Trent. On 6 June, 1644, he was created earl of Norfolk; but being disappointed at the dukedom being refused him, he abandoned his country and wandered over Italy until his death, which took place at Padua, 4 Oct., 1646. He bequeathed his unrivalled collection of antiquities to his eldest and second surviving sons, Henry Frederick, Lord Maltravers, and William, afterwards Viscount Stafford. Henry, the second son of the former, and sixth duke of Norfolk, about 1668, at the suggestion of Evelyn, presented to the university of Oxford a considerable portion of his moiety, including the Parian Chronicle, which, with the other inscribed stones accompanying it, have been called the 'Arundelian Marbles.' At Oxford also are some of the statues collected by the earl of Arundel. These were given to the university by Lady Pomfret, whose husband had acquired them by purchase. Of the remainder of the Arundel collection some curious relics are at Wilton House; the cameos and intaglios were in the possession of the duke of Marlborough; and there is a fine bronze head of Homer in the British Museum.

ARVIEUX, LAURENT D', a French orientalist, born at Marseilles, 1635. In 1668 he was sent to Tunis to negotiate a treaty with the Dey; and on this occasion he caused 380 French slaves to be set at liberty. In 1672 he took a leading part in negotiating the treaty concluded at Constantinople with Mahomet IV. He was made chevalier of St. Lazare, with a pension of 1000 livres; was sent as consul to Algiers and Aleppo; and refused the bishopric of Babylon, which had been offered to him by Innocent XI. He died in his native city, 3 Oct., 1702. His memoirs were published by Father Labat, 6 vols. 12mo., 1755; and the account of his voyage with the Grand Emir, chief of the wandering Arabs, by Roque, in 1717, together with a treatise by Arvieux on the manners and customs of the Arabs.

the see which he governed, flourished about the year 600. He is said to have written the life of his predecessor, St. Kentigern, which is printed in the Acta Sanctorum (Jan. 13).

ASBURY, FRANCIS, a Methodist bishop, was born 20 Aug., 1745, near the foot of Hempstead bridge, in Staffordshire, a short distance from Birmingham. At the age of seventeen he entered the Methodist ministry, and in 1771 went as a missionary to America. On 27 Dec., 1784, he was ordained a Methodist bishop at Baltimore, and continued to 'preach the word' for more than half a century. He died near Fredericksburg, Virginia, 31 March, 1816. A minute account of his career is to be found in 'The Pioneer Bishop: the Life and Times of Francis Asbury, by W. P. Strickland, with an introduction by Nathan Bangs, D.D. English edition, with an introduction by the Rev. S. Woolcock Christophers,' 8vo., Manchester, 1860.

ASCHAM, ANTHONY, M.B. of Cambridge, a noted astrologer, published a herbal, 1550, and several astrological treatises.

ASCHAM, ANTHONY, an English republican, born at Boston, Lincolnshire, was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. At the beginning of the Rebellion he joined the Presbyterians, and became a member of the Long Parliament. In 1649-50 he was sent as envoy to Madrid, where six exiled royalists assassinated him and his interpreter, in 1650. He was the author of a 'Discourse on the Revolutions and Confusions of Governments,' 8vo., 1648.

ASCHAM, ROGER, a celebrated English scholar, was third son of John Ascham, steward to Lord Scrope, of Wilton, and was born about 1515, at Kirby Wiske, in Richmondshire. He was educated at the charge of Sir Anthony Wingfield, in his house, by a Mr. Bond, who was also tutor to Sir Anthony's sons. About 1530 he was sent to St. John's College, Cambridge, his expenses there being defrayed by the same kind patron. His tutors were Hugh Fitzherbert and John Cheke. He proceeded B.A. 1533-4, and on 26 March, 1534, was elected fellow of his college, having a high reputation for his acquirements. He was occasionally employed by the university in writing letters to great personages, on account of his admirable style of composition, and from the singular beauty of his handwriting and great skill in illumination and adornment. In 1537 he commenced M.A., and read a Greek lecture in St. John's College, and also, as it seems, in the university at large. He was elected public orator of the university, 1546. Henry VIII. granted him a pension of £10, which was continued by Edward VI., whom he had taught to write. On the death of his friend William Grindal, he became tutor to the princess, afterwards Queen, Elizabeth, and he subsequently accompanied Sir Richard Morysin on his embassy to Germany, of which country he afterwards published an account. Though Ascham was known to be a Protestant, Bishop Gardiner proved his firm friend during the whole reign of Queen Mary, and it is pleasing to find that years afterwards, when the bishop was dead, and his name was regarded as a by-word and a reproach, Ascham gratefully refers to his protection, terming him 'my good lord of Winchester.' In 1554 he gave up the office of public orator, and on 7 May, in that year, was appointed Latin secretary to Queen Mary, and he continued in that office under Queen Elizabeth, who entertained a particular regard for him, and granted him the canonry or prebend of Wetwang, in the church of York. He died 30 Dec., 1568. A complete list of his works is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' The principal are, 'Toxophilus, the schole of shootinge conteyned in two bookes,' 4to., London, 1545; 'A Report and Discourse of the Affaires and State of Germany,' 4to., London, 1553; 'The Schole Master; or, plaine and perite way of teachyng children to vnderstand, write, and speake the Latin tong,' 4to., London, 1570. This work has recently been carefully edited by the Rev. J. E. B. Mayor. 'Familiarum Epistolarum libri tres,' 8vo., London, 1576. Hallam says, 'Among the learned men who surrounded Cheke at Cambridge, none was more deserving than Ascham, whose knowledge of ancient languages was not shown in profuse quotation, or enveloped in Latin phrase, but served to enrich his mind with valuable sense, and taught him to transfer the firmness and precision of ancient writers to our own English, in which he is nearly the first that deserves to be named, or that is now read.'

ASCHARI, a famous Mahometan doctor, founder of the Asarian sect, died about 940, at Bagdad. He maintained that God acts always by general laws, and not by particular providence. His followers held absolute and gratuitous predestination.

ASCLEPIADES, a famous philosopher, a native of Phlius, in Peloponnesus, and disciple of Stipo, to whose school he drew Meneclemus, with whom he contracted so close a friendship, that they might be compared to Orestes and Pylades.

ASCLEPIADES, a celebrated physician, born at Prusa, in Bithynia, practised at Rome in the time of Pompey, 96 B.C. Celsus and Galen often mention his works. There were several other celebrated persons of the same name.

ASCOLI, CECCO D'. See CECCO.

ASCOUGH, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was descended from an ancient family in Lincolnshire, and consecrated bishop of Salisbury in 1438. He was inhumanly murdered at the altar by Jack Cade and his followers, 29 June, 1450.

ASELLIO, GASPAR, a learned physician, born at Cremona about 1481, became professor of anatomy and surgery at Pavia, and died at Milan, 14 April, 1626. He was the first who discovered the lacteal vessels, for which his name has ever since been honoured in the history of medicine.

ASFELD, JACQUES VINCENT D', abbat of la Vieuville, and a celebrated doctor of the Sorbonne, died at Paris, 25 May, 1745. His attachment to the cause of the Jansenists drew upon him a lettre de cachet, 1721.

ASGILL, SIR CHARLES, the first baronet of that name, rose by his industry and integrity from the office of out-door collector to a banking-house in Lombard Street to the possession of considerable wealth and the highest civic dignities. In 1757 he was elected lord mayor of London, and in 1761 created a baronet. He died 15 Sept., 1789. His son, Sir Charles Asgill, the second baronet, adopted the military profession, and rose to the rank of general. He died 1823, when the baronetcy became extinct.

ASGILL, JOHN, an English writer, was born about the middle of the seventeenth century. He studied in Lincoln's Inn, and in 1699 went to Ireland, where he acquired a fortune, and was elected a member of parliament; but in 1700 he was ex-

John the House for writing a book, entitled 'An Argument, proving that Man may be translated from hence without passing through Death,' &c. This work was voted a blasphemous libel, and ordered to be burnt. Finding his affairs desperate, he returned to England, where he was chosen member for Bramber, in Sussex, and enjoyed his seat two years. During an interval of privilege he was committed to the Fleet for debt. While he was in confinement the House took into consideration the above book, and having voted it blasphemous, he was expelled from his seat. He continued in the rules of the Fleet and King's Bench thirty years, in which time he published several political tracts, and died in Nov., 1738.

ASH, EDWARD, M.D., a London physician of considerable eminence, died in April, 1829. He made some important discoveries in galvanism.

ASH, JOHN, LL.D., a dissenting minister at Pershore, Worcestershire, where he died, 13 April, 1774, in the 55th year of his age. He was author of an 'English Grammar;' 'The Complete English Dictionary;' 'Sentiments on Education,' 2 vols. 12mo.; and other works which were very popular in their day.

ASH, JOHN, M.D., an English physician, was son of Joseph Ash, gentleman, of Coventry, and received his education at Oxford (B.A. 1743, M.A. 1744, M.B. 1750, M.D. 1754). He practised at Birmingham, and founded the General Hospital in that town. He died at Brompton, Knightsbridge, 18 June, 1796. He was author of several professional works.

ASH, ST. GEORGE, an Irish prelate, born in the county of Roscommon, and educated at the university of Dublin, of which he became provost, 1602. During the troubles in Ireland, under James II., he went abroad, and was engaged in the service of Lord Paget, William III.'s ambassador at Vienna. He was promoted to the bishopric of Cloyne, 1695. In 1697 he was translated to Clogher, and in 1716 to Derry. Died 27 Feb., 1717. He is author of several papers in the 'Transactions of the Royal Society,' and other works.

ASHBURNE, THOMAS DE, D.D., an Augustinian friar, was a native of Ashbourn, in Derbyshire, and studied at Oxford, where he was created D.D. He engaged in the controversy with the Lollards, and wrote a treatise against the 'Trialogus' of Wicliffe.

ASHBURNHAM, GEORGE ASHBURNHAM, third earl of, was born 1769, and died Oct., 1830. He published 'A Narrative by John Ashburnham, of his attendance on King Charles the First, from Oxford to the Scotch Army, and from Hampton Court to the Isle of Wight; never before printed. To which is prefixed a vindication of his character and conduct from the misrepresentations of Lord Cardenon. By his lineal descendant and present representative;' London, 2 vols. 8vo., 1830.

ASHBURNHAM, JOHN, an English politician, was son of Sir John Ashburnham, of Ashburnham, in Sussex. He was a zealous supporter of King Charles I. and Charles II., and had a principal share in the contrivance and execution of the escape of the former sovereign from Hampton Court in 1647, and his surrender to Colonel Hammond, governor of the Isle of Wight. Born about 1604; died 1671.

ASHBURNHAM, WILLIAM, Colonel, was a younger son of Sir John Ashburnham, and an active military commander for King Charles I.

during the civil wars. In 1644, when governor of Weymouth, he defended that town for four months against the parliamentary army. Died 1679.

ASHBURTON, ALEXANDER BARING, Lord, was born 27 Oct., 1774, being a younger son of Sir Francis Baring, a very eminent merchant. He was destined for a mercantile life, and was accordingly placed in his father's counting-house at an early age. During many years of his early life he was constantly and actively engaged in the service of his 'house' in the United States and the Canadas, where he acquired all that special information and general knowledge of business which he afterwards turned to account in the structure and consolidation of his fortune, and ultimately in the political service of his country. In 1810, on the death of his father, he became the head of the great house of London merchants, Baring Brothers and Co. He entered Parliament as member for Taunton, and at subsequent periods represented Callington, Thetford, and North Essex in the House of Commons. In Dec., 1834, he obtained a seat in Sir Robert Peel's cabinet as president of the Board of Trade and master of the Mint, and a few days before the retirement of his friends from office he was raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Ashburton, by patent dated April, 1835. In the House of Peers he continued to support the policy of Sir Robert Peel until the final measure of free trade, to which he was wholly opposed. In 1842 he was nominated a special commissioner to settle the disputes which then threatened to involve this country in a war with America. His mission was eminently successful, and resulted in the treaty of Washington. During a long life devoted to activity, both mercantile and territorial, he found leisure to cultivate the fine arts, and was one of their best patrons. Died 13 May, 1848.

ASHBURTON, JOHN DUNNING, Lord, was born at Ashburton, Devonshire, 1731. His father was an attorney, to whom he served his clerkship; after which he removed to London, studied in the Temple, and was called to the bar. In 1759 he drew up 'A Defence of the English East India Company' against the claims of the Dutch. This brought him into notice, and he afterwards added to his popularity by being counsel for Wilkes. In 1766 he was chosen recorder of Bristol, and the next year he was appointed solicitor-general, which office he resigned in 1770. On the change of administration, in 1782, he was created Baron Ashburton, sworn of the privy council, and appointed chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He died at Exmouth, 18 Aug., 1783. Lord Ashburton is one of the many individuals to whom the authorship of the letters of Junius has been ascribed.

ASHBURTON, WILLIAM BINGHAM BARING, Lord, eldest son of Alexander, Lord Ashburton, was born June, 1799, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford. In Sept., 1841, he was appointed president of the Board of Control, on the accession of Sir Robert Peel to office, and remained at that post till Feb., 1845, when he became paymaster-general of the forces and treasurer of the navy. The duties of these offices he discharged until July, 1846, when Lord John Russell became the head of the government. Died 23 March, 1864.

ASHBURY, JOSEPH, a noted actor and theatrical manager, was born in London, 1638, and died at Dublin, 24 July, 1720. He raised the Irish stage to a degree of respectability which it had never before attained.

ASHBY.

ASHBY, GEORGE, an English writer, who lived in the reign of Henry VI., and was clerk of the signet to Queen Margaret, for the instruction of whose son—Edward Prince of Wales—he wrote a poem in English 'On the active policy of a prince.' Ashby was in his 80th year when he composed this work. Died 1474-5.

ASHBY, GEORGE, B.D., F.S.A., rector of Barrow, Suffolk, wrote an essay on the Roman military, which was found at Thurmaston, near Leicester, in 1771, and other antiquarian treatises. Born 5 Dec., 1724; died 12 June, 1808.

ASHBY, HENRY, a distinguished writing-engraver, born 17 April, 1744, at Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire; died at Exning, Suffolk, 31 Aug., 1818.

ASHBY, SIR JOHN, a distinguished British admiral, died 12 July, 1693.

ASHBY, NATHAN, a native of Barbadoes, was ordained a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, and in 1846 became incumbent of St. Michael's, Kingston, Jamaica. He died at Bath, in England, Aug., 1853. A volume of his 'Parochial Sermons,' edited by his widow, was published at London, 12mo., 1854, with a preface by the Rev. Charles Clayton, M.A.

ASHBY, RICHARD, whose real name was Thimbleby, an English Jesuit, and president of St. Omer's College, where he died 28 Aug., 1672. He wrote 'A Treatise on Purgatory,' and 'Remarks on Stillingfleet.'

ASHDOWNE, WILLIAM, an English Unitarian, resided at Canterbury at the close of the last and beginning of the present century. Between 1780 and 1798 he published five works in defence of Unitarian opinions.

ASHE, ANDREW, a famous performer on the flute, born at Lisburn, in Ireland, 1759; died March, 1838.

ASHE, JOHN, a dissenting minister, was son of Edward Ashe, a grocer and mercer, at Tideswell, Derbyshire. He was born 11 Feb., 1671-2, and received the first part of his education at Chesterfield, under Mr. Foxlow, who was afterwards vicar of Presbury, Cheshire. He then removed to a school kept by Samuel Ogden, at Wirksworth, whence he proceeded, in 1688, to the dissenting academy of the Rev. Mr. Frankland, at Rathmil. At his first entrance in the ministry he became chaplain to Lady Sarah Houghton, of Houghton Tower, in Lancashire, but was afterwards recalled to the Peak, in Derbyshire. He received ordination 1666. Ultimately his ministry was confined chiefly to Ashford, where he died, 1 Oct., 1734. He published 'A short Account of the Life and Character of the Rev. William Bagshaw, with a prefatory Letter by the Rev. William Tong,' 1704, and some single sermons. He had prepared for the press eleven volumes of his sermons, but only one volume was published.

ASHE, ROBERT HOADLY, D.D., born about 1752, was educated at Oxford, and became rector of Crewkerne, Somersetshire. Died 1775. He wrote 'A Letter to the Rev. John Milner, D.D., F.S.A., Author of the "History of Winchester," occasioned by his false and illiberal aspersions on the memory and writings of Dr. Benjamin Hoadly, formerly Bishop of Winchester,' 1799.

ASHE, SIMON, a nonconformist divine, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and afterwards settled in Staffordshire, whence he removed to London, where he exercised the ministry twenty-three years. He was a Presbyterian, and one of the deputies who went to congratulate Charles II. on his restoration at Breda. He died in 1602, about the 18th of August. He composed a 'Treatise on the Power of Godliness,' edited Ball's works, and published several sermons of his own composition.

ASHE, THOMAS, B.D., a monk of Christchurch, Canterbury, composed 'Conciones variae,' one of which was preached at the election of Archbishop Kemp, in 1452. He died 21 Jan., 1473, in the sixty-third year of his profession.

ASHE, THOMAS, of Gray's Inn, wrote a number of books to facilitate the study of the law. He was living in 1618.

ASHE, THOMAS, a miscellaneous writer, commonly known as Captain Ashe, was born at Glasnevin, near Dublin, 15 July, 1770, and died at Bath, 17 Dec., 1835. A few weeks before his decease Mr. Ashe was in Oxford, and received alms from the Anti-Mendicity Society. He wrote 'Travels in America,' 3 vols., 1806; 'The Spirit of the Book, a novel,' 1808; 'The Liberal Critic, or Henry Percy, a novel,' 1812; 'Commercial View of the Brazils and Madeira,' 1812; and 'Memoirs and Confessions of Captain Ashe, written by himself,' 3 vols., 12mo., London, 1815.

ASHFIELD, EDMUND, an English painter of the time of Charles II.

ASHFORD, WILLIAM, an English painter, was a native of Birmingham, and settled in Ireland in 1764, being at that time about eighteen years of age. He was a favoured protegee of Mr. Ward, then at the head of the ordnance department in Dublin, during the viceroyalty of Earl Harcourt, and held a situation in one of the offices of that department. This he relinquished to follow his favourite studies, and to devote himself, with all the energy of his nature, to the witchery of landscape painting. His name is to be found among the early contributors to the exhibitions of the Incorporated Society of Artists of London. He resided in College Green, and was much noticed by all the distinguished lovers and encouragers of the fine arts. Afterwards he sold his house in College Green, and retired to Sandymount, where he pursued his profession with indefatigable industry; painting, both in oil and water-colours, the 'counterfeit presentment' of much of the finest scenery of England, Wales, and Ireland. He was one of the three artists to whom their brethren paid the distinguished compliment of confiding the selection of eleven others to constitute, with themselves, the Royal Hibernian Academy, of which he became the first president. He died at Sandymount, in 1824, at the advanced age of seventy-eight. His early pictures were somewhat in the manner of Claude. There is a beautiful specimen of his early style in the committee-room of the Dublin Society; and in the council-room of the Royal Hibernian Academy is a very fine work of his, 'Orlando under the Oak,' in which the breadth, high finish, and fine pencilling of the foliage are peculiarly to be admired, and afford a very fair specimen of his best and most matured style.

ASHLEY, ANTHONY, an English writer, of whom nothing is known except that he was partly the author and partly the translator of 'The Mariner's Mirror,' fol., London, 1588.

ASHLEY, JOHN, a person well known in musical circles in London, but rather as a trader in music than a musician, in 1795 he undertook the ASHLEY, Lord. See SHAFTESBURY, Earl of.

ASHLEY, ROBERT, born at Damerham, Wiltshire, 1265, was educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar. He died in Oct., 1641. He published 'Urania, sive Musa Cœlestis,' 1589; a translation of the 'Uranie' of Du Bartas; 'The interchangeable Course of Things,' 1594, translated from the French of Le Roy; 'Almansor, the victorious king of Spain, his Life and Death,' 1627, a translation from the Spanish; 'A Relation of the Kingdom of Cochinchina,' 1635, from the Italian of Father Christopher Borri; and 'David Persecuted,' 1637, a translation of Malvezzi's 'Il Davide persecutato.'

ASHMOLE, ELIAS, a famous English antiquary, born at Lichfield, 23 May, 1617, and educated in the grammar school there. He afterwards removed to London, and in 1638 became a solicitor, being subsequently admitted an attorney. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he went to Brasenose College, Oxford, and applied with great vigour to the study of natural philosophy, mathematics, and astronomy. He was for some time in the royal army, but when the king's affairs were ruined he settled in London, and became acquainted with the great astrologers, Sir Jonas Moore, Mr. Lilly, and Mr. Bookler, who received him into their fraternity. In 1647 he went down into Berkshire, where he lived an agreeable and retired life in the village of Englefield. Here he became acquainted with Lady Mainwaring, to whom he was married in 1649.

Soon after his marriage he settled in London, where his house was frequented by all the learned and ingenious men of that day. He now diligently applied himself to the study of our national antiquities, and in 1658 began to collect materials for his history of the Order of the Garter. On the restoration of Charles II. he was graciously received by his Majesty, who, on 18 June, 1660, bestowed upon him the office of Windsor herald, and afterwards gave him other marks of the royal favour. In 1666 he was created M.D. by the university of Oxford. In 1683 he sent his collection of rarities to the museum at Oxford, which has since been called by his name, and this benefaction was considerably augmented by the addition of his MSS. and library at his death, which took place at South Lambeth, 18 May, 1692. His works, printed and in MS., are numerous. In 1650 he published, under the feigned name of James Hasolle, his 'Fœcillus Chemicus, or Chemical Collections, expressing the Ingress, Progress, and Egress of the secret Hermetic Science.' His 'Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum,' published in 1652, contains many pieces by our old hermetic philosophers. This work gained him a considerable reputation, which was very much increased by his laborious and accurate 'History of the Order of the Garter,' fol., 1672. His 'Antiquities of Berkshire' is a less meritorious work.

ASHMORE, JOHN, an English poetical writer, published 'Certain Selected Odes of Horace Englished, and their Arguments annexed. With poems, antient and modern, of divers subjects, translated. Whereunto are added, both in Latin and English, sundry new Epigrammes, Anagrammes, Epitaphes,' 4to., London, 1621. This book is very rare.

ASHTON, SIR ARTHUR. See ASTON.

ASHTON, CHARLES, D.D., a learned divine and classical scholar, was born at Bradway, in the parish of Norton, Derbyshire, 1665, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, of which society he became a fellow. In 1701 he was appointed master of Jesus College and prebendary of Ely. Died March, 1752. He published some valuable works, though without putting his name to them, particularly 'Locus Justini Martyris emendatus in Apol. i. p. 11, edit. Thirib.,' in Wasse's 'Bibliotheca Literaria,' No. 8, 1724; 'Tully and Hirtius reconciled as to the time of Cæsar's going to the African War. With an account of the Reformation of the old Roman year, made by Cæsar,' in the same work. His edition of 'Hieroclis in Aurea Carmina Pythagorea Commentarius' was published, with a preface by Dr. Warren, in 1742. After Dr. Ashton's death, a valuable edition of 'Justin Martyr' was published from his papers by Mr. Keller, fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge.

ASHTON, EDWARD, a zealous royalist, was a colonel in the army. He was brought to trial before the high court of justice, charged with a design to fire the city, assassinate the Protector, and introduce monarchy in the person of Charles Stuart. Being found guilty, he was hanged, drawn, and quartered, a July, 1658.

ASHTON, HUGH. See ASTON.

ASHTON, JOHN, an English gentleman, was executed at Tyburn, 28 Jan., 1690-1, having been convicted of conspiring to effect the restoration of King James II.

ASHTON, or ASSHETON, PETER, translated into English 'A shorte Treatise upon the Turke's Chronicles, compiled by Paulus Jovius, bishop of Nucerne,' 8vo., London, 1546.

ASHTON, ROBERT, a native of Ireland, produced about 1727 a tragedy entitled 'The Battle of Aughrim; or the Fall of Monsieur St. Ruth.' It has been several times printed.

ASHTON, SIR THOMAS, an English alchemist, who was living in 1445-6.

ASHTON, THOMAS, was educated at Cambridge and being appointed master of Shrewsbury School, in 1562, he raised that institution to a very high position. Died 1578.

ASHTON, THOMAS, D.D., son of Dr. Ashton, usher of the grammar school at Lancaster, was born in 1716, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, in 1733. In 1749 he was presented to the rectory of Sturminster Marshall, in Dorsetshire, and in 1763 was elected preacher at Lincoln's Inn. Died 1 March, 1775. A volume of his sermons was published in 1770.

ASHWARDBY, JOHN, D.D., fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, and vicar of St. Mary's, in that city, flourished about 1380. He composed several works in favour of the doctrines of Wicliff.

ASHWELL, GEORGE, an English divine, born in London, 1612; died at Hanwell, Oxfordshire, of which parish he was rector, 8 Feb., 1693-4. He wrote 'Fides Apostolica; or a Discourse asserting the Received Authors, and Authority of the Apostles' Creed;' 'Gestus Eucharisticus; concerning the gesture to be used at the receiving of the Sacrament;' 'De Socino et Socialismo Dissertation,' &c.

ASHWELL, JOHN, a graduate of the university of Cambridge, became prior of Newnham, Bedfordshire, about 1527. He was alive in 1535. He wrote letters sent to the bishop of Lincoln against George Joye, which that person printed at Strasbourg, together with his answers, in 1527.

ASHWELL, THOMAS, a Carmelite of Hitchen, and D.D. of the university of Oxford, wrote 'Sermones de tempore,' and 'Collationes quedam.' The latter work has also been ascribed to Peter Stokys.

ASHWELL, THOMAS, an English musical composer, was a member of the choir of St. Paul's cathedral during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Mary.

ASHWORTH, CALEB, D.D., a dissenting minister, was born in Lancashire, 1722, and bred a carpenter, which calling he abandoned, and became a student under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton. He afterwards had a congregation at Daventry, whither, in 1752, he removed the academy formerly kept by Doddridge. In 1759 he was created D.D. by some Scotch university. Died 18 July, 1775. He published several funeral sermons; 'A Collection of Psalm Tunes, with an Introduction to the Art of Singing, &c.:' 'The Principal Rules of Hebrew Grammar, with complete paradigms of the verbs;' and 'An easy Introduction to Plane Trigonometry.'

ASKER ROBERT, an English gentleman, one of the leaders of the 'Pilgrimage of Grace' in the reign of Henry VIII., was executed, Feb., 1536.

ASKEW, EZEON, born in Lancashire about 1576, was educated at Oxford, and afterwards became minister of Greenwich. He wrote 'An Apology of the use of the Fathers, and Secular Learning,' &c.

ASKEW, ANNE, an accomplished English lady, was the daughter of Sir William Askew, of Kelsay, Lincolnshire, where she was born about 1520. She had a learned education, and when young was married to a Mr. Kyme, much against her inclination. On account of some harsh treatment from her husband she went to the court of Henry VIII. to sue for a separation, where she was greatly taken notice of by those ladies who were attached to the Reformation; in consequence of which she was arrested, and having confessed her religious principles, was committed to Newgate, and afterwards burnt in Smithfield, 16 July, 1546, in company with her tutor, John Lascelles, Nicholas Beleniau, a clergyman of Shropshire, and John Adams, a tailor.

ASKEW, ANTHONY, M.D., a learned physician, was born at Kendal, Westmorland, 1722, and sent first to the school of Sedbergh, and afterwards to that of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. From school he removed to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he continued until he took his degree of M.B., and was elected a fellow in 1745, after which he studied for a year at Leyden. He then travelled for some time, and visited Hungary, Athens, and Constantinople, returning home through Italy. In 1750 he graduated M.D. at Cambridge, and then established himself as a physician in London, where he continued in good practice during the remainder of his life. He occupied the posts of physician to St. Bartholomew's and to Christ's Hospital, and registrar of the College of Physicians. Died at Hampstead, 27 April, 1774. He collected a noble library, which at his death was sold by auction for £4000. His works are, 'Novæ editionis Tragediarum Æschyli Specimen,' 4to., 1746; and a MS. volume of Greek Inscriptions, now preserved among the Burney MSS. in the British Museum.

ASPASIA, a native of Miletus, was celebrated at Athens for her genius and beauty. She was so well skilled in eloquence and politics, that Socrates himself received lessons from her. Pericles was so passionately in love with Aspasia that he left his wife in order to marry her. She is said to have governed the republic by the advice she gave her husband, and to have induced him to undertake the war of Samos and that of Megara, from whence arose the Peloponnesian war. After the death of Pericles, about 428, B.C., Aspasia attached herself to a man of mean birth, and raised him by her intrigues to the first dignities of the republic. She became infamous by entertaining courtesans at her house.

ASPER, JOHN, a Swiss painter, born, 1499, at Zurich, where he died, 21 March, 1571.

ASPINWALL, EDWARD, D.D., was educated at Cambridge, was installed prebendary of Westminster, 1729, and died 3 Aug., 1732. He wrote 'A Preservation against Popery,' and 'An Apology: being a Series of Arguments in proof of the Christian Religion.'

ASPINWALL, WILLIAM, a distinguished American physician, born at Brooklyn, Massachusetts, June, 1743; died 16 April, 1823.

ASPLIN, WILLIAM, an English clergyman, was born in or about 1688, and received his education at Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He is mentioned as being vicar of Banbury, Oxfordshire, in 1717 and 1723. In 1728 he was collated to the rectory of East Leche St. Martin, or Burthorpe, Gloucestershire, on the presentation of King George I., and held that living till his death in 1758. He wrote a curious work, the full title of which is as follows:—'Alkibla: a disquisition upon worshipping towards the East. In two parts. Part I. contains the general antiquity, the rise, and reasonableness of this religious ceremony in the Gentile world; its early adoption into the church of Christ; with a free and impartial examination of the reasons assigned for it by the ancient Fathers. Part II. contains an historical account of this ceremony in the Christian Church from the primitive to the present times; with a serious and impartial examination of the reasons assigned for the practice by our modern divines. By a Master of Arts of the University of Oxford.' 8vo., London, 1728, 1740.

ASSELIN, GILLE THOMAS, a minor French poet, born 1682; died 11 Oct., 1767.

ASSELYN, JOHN, a Dutch landscape painter, was born at Antwerp, 1610, and died at Amsterdam, 1660.

ASSEMANNI, JOSEPH LOUIS, nephew of the archbishop Joseph Simon, mentioned below, and younger brother of Stephen Evodius Assemanni, was born at Tripoli in Syria, about 1710, and educated at Rome, where he made rapid progress in the oriental languages. Died 9 Feb., 1782. He wrote, 'Codex liturgicus Ecclesie universæ, in xv. libros distributus,' 12 vols. 4to., Rome, 1749-63; 'De sacris ritibus Dissertatio,' &c.

ASSEMANNI, JOSEPH SIMON, a Syrian Maronite, born in 1687, became librarian of the Vatican, and archbishop of Tyre. He was well acquainted with the ancient and Asiatic languages. Died 14 Jan., 1708. Among his works are, 'Bibliotheca Orientalis,' 4 vols. folio., Rome, 1719-28, and 'Kalendana Ecclesiae Universae,' 6 vols. 4to.

ASSEMANNI, SIMON, a learned orientalist, born at Tripoli in Syria, 20 Feb., 1752; died at Padua, 7 April, 1821. His works include an 'Essay on the origin, civilization, literature, and manners of the Arabs before Mahomet,' 1787.

ASSEMANNI, STEPHEN EYODIUS, nephew of the preceding, and his successor at the Vatican library, drew up a catalogue of the oriental MSS. preserved in the library at Florence, and other learned works. The date of his death is not given.

ASSER, the principal writer of the Babylonian Talmud, was born at Babylon, 353, and died 426.

ASSER, commonly called ASSERIUS MENEVENSIS, bishop of Sherborne, in the ninth century, was a native of Wales and a monk of St. David's. It is said that King Alfred founded the university of Oxford by his advice. In gratitude to that prince, by whom he had been created a bishop, he wrote his life, which was published by Archbishop Parker in 1574. The genuineness of this work, however, has been doubted, and it is generally thought that the 'Chronicon sive Annales Asserii,' published by Gale, is also spurious. According to the Saxon Chronicle, Asser died in 910.

ASSERETO, JOACHIM, a painter of Genoa, born 1600; died 1649.

ASSHETON. See ASHTON.

ASSHETON, NICHOLAS, born about 1590; died 16 April, 1625. He resided at Downham, Lancashire. His journal for the year 1617, and part of the year following, was published by the Chetham Society in 1848. The editor, the Rev. E. R. Raines, has interspersed notes from the life of Assheton's contemporary, John Bruen.

ASSHETON, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, was born, 1641, at Middleton in Lancashire, of which parish his father was rector. He received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford, and became a fellow of that society. In 1676 he was presented to the rectory of Beckenham in Kent, where he died in Sept., 1711. He was a pious and learned man, and published several pieces in defence of the Established Church; but he is best known as the projector of a scheme for providing a maintenance for the widows of clergymen and others, by means of a jointure payable by the Mercers' Company.

ASSOUCY, CHARLES COYPEAU D'. See DASSOUCI.

AST, GEORGE ANTHONY FREDERICK, a distinguished German scholar, born at Gotha, 1778; died 30 Dec., 1841. His writings are on philological and philosophical subjects. Ast did much to facilitate the understanding of the works of Plato.

ASTA, ANDREW DELL', a Neapolitan painter, born at Bagnoli about 1673; died 1721.

ASTBURY, J., a great improver of the manufacture of pottery in England. Died 1743, aged 65.

ASTELL, MARY, an English polemical writer, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne about 1668. Her father was a merchant, and from her uncle, a clergyman, she learnt Latin, French, mathematics, and philosophy. At the age of twenty she settled near London, where she devoted herself to a studious life, and formed an acquaintance with some of the greatest men of the age, as Atterbury, Hickeys, Norris, and others. She died of a cancer, after submitting to an operation with great patience, 11 May, 1731. Her principal works are, 'Letters concerning the Love of God;' 'An Essay in defence of the female sex, in a Letter to a Lady;' 'A serious Proposal to the Ladies for the Advancement of their true and greatest interest, &c.;' 'A fair Way with the Dissenters and their Patrons;' 'Reflections upon Marriage;' and 'The Christian Religion, as professed by a Daughter of the Church of England.'

ASTERIUS, a rhetorician of Cappadocia, one of the most zealous defenders of Arianism. Having sacrificed to idols under Maximilian Hercules about 304, the Arians never dared to raise him to the ecclesiastical state. He was author of several works against the Catholic Church, none of which are extant.

ASTERIUS, a learned bishop of Amasia, in the fourth century, by whom there are several homilies in the Library of the Fathers, translated into French by Maucroix, 12mo., 1695.

ASTERIUS, or ASTURIUS, a Roman consul, 449. There is a 'Conference of the Old and New Testament,' under his name, in Latin verse. Each strophe contains an historical fact from the Old Testament in the first verse, and in the second an application of the fact to some point of the New.

ASTESANUS, a Franciscan, so called because he was a native of Asti, published a summary of cases of conscience, entitled 'Astisania,' which has been often printed. He died 1330.

ASTLE, THOMAS, an English antiquary, was born at Yoxall, Staffordshire, about 1734, being son of Daniel Astle, keeper of the forest of Needwood. After receiving a good education, he obtained the patronage of the Right Hon. George Grenville, who employed him, about 1763, with Sir Joseph Ayliffe and Dr. Ducarel, in superintending the records at Westminster. In 1766 he was appointed to manage the printing of the ancient records of parliament. He became chief clerk in the record office in the Tower, 1775, and on the decease of Sir John Shelly he succeeded to the office of keeper of the records. Died 1 Dec., 1803. He contributed many papers to the 'Archæologia,' but his chief work is 'The Origin and Progress of Writing, as well Hieroglyphic as Elementary; illustrated by Engravings taken from Marbles, Manuscripts, and Charters, Ancient and Modern; also some Account of the Origin and Progress of Printing;' 4to., London, 1781 and 1803. This is the best work on the subject in the English language.

ASTLEY, JACOB, Baron Astley of Reading, served in the Netherlands, under Prince Maurice and his brother Henry, and afterwards under Christian IV., king of Denmark, and Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden. On account of his signal services he was created Baron Astley of Reading, 4 Nov., 1644, by King Charles I. He was among the first who entered that monarch's service, and his last hope when the royalist cause was on the decline. But this brave and loyal old soldier was totally defeated with the remnant of the royal army near Stow-on-the-Wold, in Gloucestershire, 21 March, 1645-6. Died 1651. Sir Bernard Astley, his son, had the command of a regiment in the civil war, and signalized himself by his courage at the siege of Bristol and the second battle of Newbury.

ASTLEY, JOHN, often called ASHLEY, M.P. for Maidstone in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, wrote a curious treatise on 'The Art of Riding.' He died about July, 1595.

ASTLEY, JOHN, a painter, born at Wemm, Shropshire, died at Duckenfield Lodge, Cheshire, 14 Nov., 1787.

ASTLEY, PHILIP, the founder of the celebrated amphitheatre in Lambeth, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyne, 1742, and came to London with his father, who was a cabinet-maker, in 1753 or 1754. He worked at his father's business till 1759, when he enlisted in the 15th, or Elliott's Own Light Horse. He behaved with great bravery, and was made a sergeant; but after serving seven years he obtained his discharge. While in the service, Astley witnessed the performance of an itinerant equestrian named Johnson, and after being discharged he made that species of riding his profession. He commenced his equestrian performances in an open field, near the Halfpenny Hatch, Lambeth; but in 1780 he was enabled to erect a roofed building with a commodious auditorium. This structure was originally called 'The Amphitheatre Riding-House,' and at subsequent periods the 'Royal Grove,' and the 'Amphitheatre of Arts.' On 16 Aug., 1794, during Mr. Astley's abode on the continent, as a volunteer with the army, the building was burnt to the ground, together with nineteen adjoining houses. Unappalled by the calamity, though his property was scarcely, if at all, insured, he obtained leave of absence, came over to England, rebuilt his theatre, and reopened it on the succeeding Easter Monday, 1795, under the designation of the 'Royal Amphitheatre.' On 2 Sept., 1803, this building, with nearly forty houses, was consumed by fire. The loss in the theatre was estimated at £30,000, of which only £5000 was insured. When this event occurred Mr. Astley was at Paris, where he had a theatre. He returned to England, and, with his accustomed fortitude, perseverance, and celerity, erected a new amphitheatre time enough to open on Easter Monday, 1804. He had previously leased the property to his son John, who continued to be lessee of the new amphitheatre during the remainder of his father's life. Mr. Astley, senior, went to Paris to dispose of the amphitheatre he had built there, but was seized with illness, and dying 20 Oct., 1814, was buried at Père la Chaise. On 19 Oct., 1821, his son, who had gone to Paris for his health, died in the same house, chamber, and bed in which his father had breathed his last.

ASTON, ANTHONY, an English actor and dramatist, died some time after the year 1747. He published 'Pastora; or the Coy Shepherdess,' an opera, 1712; 'The Fools' Opera,' an imitation of the 'Beggars' Opera,' under the name of Matthew Medley, 1731; and 'A Brief Supplement to Colley Cibber, Esq., his Lives of the late famous Actors and Actresses.'

ASTON, Sir ARTHUR, a commander in the service of Charles I., was born at Parson's Green, in the parish of Fulham, Middlesex, being son of Sir Arthur Aston, of that place. While young he went abroad, and served in several armies. On the breaking out of the civil war he offered his services to King Charles I., who, however, declined to avail himself of them on the ground that the cry of Popery already ran so high against him that it would certainly inflame matters if he admitted so many persons of that communion. Afterwards, it is said, Sir Arthur, by way of trial, made a similar offer to Sir Thomas Fairfax, who immediately accepted it. The king, being made acquainted with this circumstance, not only granted a commission to Sir Arthur, but gave a general invitation to the Catholics to come to his assistance. At Edgell, Sir Arthur, as general of the dragoons, proved himself to be an expert commander. His behaviour on this occasion led to his being appointed governor of Reading, a town without any regular fortifications. The garrison consisted of about 3000 foot and 300 horse, and was besieged by the parliament army of 16,000 foot and 300 horse. Sir Arthur happening to be dangerously wounded and disabled, Colonel Fielding commanded in his place, and was obliged to surrender the town after a siege of twelve days. Afterwards Sir Arthur was made governor of Oxford, when he received a wound in the leg, which rendered necessary the amputation of the limb. After the execution of Charles I., and when the royal cause was past recovery in England, Sir Arthur carried over a considerable body of the veteran troops into Ireland, and being appointed governor of Drogheda, made a noble stand against Oliver Cromwell in 1649. The town, however, was eventually taken and sacked, Sir Arthur Aston's brains being dashed out with his wooden leg during the slaughter, about 10 Aug., 1649.

ASTON, or ASHTON, HUGH, one of the gentlemen of the chapel royal in the reign of Henry VII., composed some masses, which are in the musical library bequeathed by Dr. Heyther to the university of Oxford.

ASTON, or ASHTON, JOHN, a master of arts of Merton College, Oxford, was an avowed supporter of the doctrines of Wicliff. He was convicted of heresy in 1382, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, but was set at liberty on recanting his opinions. He wrote 'Contra usurpationes cleri;' 'De recto usu sacramenti;' 'Ratio suae fidei,' &c.

ASTON, Sir THOMAS, was born in Cheshire, of an ancient family, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford. In 1628 he was created a baronet, and in 1635 was high sheriff of Cheshire. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he raised a troop of horse for the king, but was defeated and wounded in 1642, near Nantwich, by Sir William Brereton. He was afterwards taken prisoner and carried to Stafford, where, while endeavouring to escape, he received a blow on the head from a soldier. This caused his death, 24 March, 1645-6. He wrote 'A Remonstrance against Presbytery;' 'Short Survey of Presbyterian Discipline;' and 'A Brief Review of the Institution, Succession, and Jurisdiction of Bishops.'

ASTON, WALTER, Lord Aston of Forfar, was eldest son of Sir Edward Aston, of Tixall, Staffordshire, and was baptized at Chelrecote, 9 July, 1524. The Order of the Bath was conferred upon him at the coronation of James I., and he was created a baronet of England on the first institution of that dignity, 22 May, 1611. He was a statesman of considerable celebrity, and was honourably distinguished for his acuteness and fidelity in various diplomatic services, particularly in Spain, as well as by the princely magnificence with which he supported the dignity of his country during those missions, to the great injury of his private fortune. In 1620 he was sent with the earl of Bristol to Madrid, to manage the proposal of a match betwixt Prince Charles and the Infanta of Spain, and proceeded in that nice and difficult treaty with great prudence and wariness. After expanding the greater part of his large family estates in this embassy, he returned to England just at the accession of King Charles I., and was by that monarch, by letters patent, dated at Whitehall, 26 Nov., 1627, created a peer of Scotland, by the title of Lord Aston, baron of Forfar. His lordship died 13 Aug., 1639, and was buried in St. Mary's Church, Stafford. He patronized Michael Drayton, who was one of his squires at his investiture as Knight of the Bath, and whom he supported for many years, as Drayton gratefully acknowledges in one of his dedications to Sir Walter Aston, to whom he inscribed several of his poems.

ASTON, WILLIAM, a Jesuit, born in London, 1735; died at Liege, 15 March, 1800. He published D'Azais' Comptes Rendus; Letters Ultra-Montanes; and La Cosmopolite.

ASTRUC, JEAN, a French medical writer, was born 1684, at Sauve, in Lower Languedoc, and studied physic at Montpellier, where he became professor. In 1743 he was appointed physician to the king, and professor in the Royal College at Paris. He was also at Warsaw for some time, as first physician to the king of Poland, which post he quitted for his native country and literary pursuits. Died 5 May, 1766. His principal works are, De Morbis Veneris; Memoirs relative to the Natural History of Languedoc; A Treatise on Phthysis; A Treatise on Therapeutics; On the Inoculation of the Small-pox; On Tumours and Ulcers; and On the Diseases of Women. The first and last have been translated into English.

ASTRY, RICHARD, an English antiquary, was a native of Huntingdonshire, and on 14 March, 1647-8, was admitted of Queen's College, Cambridge. He proceeded B.A. at the feast of St. John the Baptist, 1651; and in 1654 obtained from his college a grace for M.A., though it does not appear that he actually took that degree. After leaving the university he was elected an alderman of Huntingdon, and was buried at St. Mary's, in that town, 11 Aug. 1714, aged 83. He is author of a quarto volume of collections, heraldic and topographical, relating to the county of Huntingdon, MS. Lansd., 921. The authorship of this MSS., which is the only systematic attempt towards a history of Huntingdonshire, has hitherto been erroneously ascribed to Sir Robert Cotton. Mr. Thomas Baker, it may be remarked, has made copious extracts from this work in the thirty-sixth volume of his MSS., now deposited in the University Library, Cambridge. Mr. Astry also drew up Alphabetical Catalogues of English Surnames, with the arms belonging to them, and the particular times that the persons recorded lived; forming three small but rather thick oblong folio volumes, now or lately in the possession of the Rev. Henry Freeman, of Norman Cross.

ASTULPHUS. See AISTULPHUS.

ASTY, JOHN, an Independent minister, was born about 1672, probably at Norwich. In 1713 he was appointed minister of the chapel in Rope-maker's Alley, London, which charge he retained till his death, on 20 Jan., 1729-30. He was buried in Bunhill Fields. Mr. Astry published A Funeral Sermon [on Job ix. 12] occasioned by the Death of Mrs. Elizabeth Fleetwood, 8vo., London, 1728; and an edition of Dr. John Owen's works, 1721, with a biographical memoir prefixed.

ASTYAGES, son of Cyaxares, was the last king of Media; reigned from 595 to 560 B.C., according to Herodotus. He was dethroned by his grandson, Cyrus, and Media was then reduced to a Persian province.

ATAHUALPA, or ATABALIPA, the last Inca of Peru, was defeated and taken prisoner by Francisco Pizarro, the Spanish general, and strangled in 1533, contrary to the promise which had been made to him. The Inca offered to fill a room with gold by way of ransom; but after the Spaniards had obtained possession of the treasure, they tried the unhappy monarch on some frivolous charges, and sentenced him to be burnt alive. This sentence, however, was subsequently altered to strangling.

ATA-MELIK, a Persian statesman and historian, was born about 1226, and died at Bagdad, 1282. His work on the history of the Moguls is referred to by many eminent oriental writers as the principal authority on the subject.

ATEY, Sir ARTHUR, was educated at Oxford, where he was appointed principal of St. Alban's Hall. He was secretary to the earl of Leicester, and afterwards became a favourite of the earl of Essex. He was knighted by James I., and died 1604.

ATHANASIA, St., an illustrious widow, native of the island of Ægina, and abbess of Timesa, died 15 Aug., 800.

ATHANASIO, PETER, a Spanish painter, born 1638; died 1688.

ATHANASIUS, St., a doctor of the church, patriarch of Alexandria, and the greatest defender of the faith against the Arians, was a native of Egypt. He followed St. Alexander to the Council of Nice, 325, where, though but yet a deacon, he forcibly disputed against Arius, and, the following year, was promoted to the see of Alexandria. The Arians, finding he refused to receive them to communion, published the blackest calumnies against him, and deposed him at the Council of Tyre, 335. Athanasius had recourse to Constantine; but the Arian deputies having accused him of preventing the corn of Alexandria from being sent to Constantinople, the emperor banished him to Treves without hearing his defence. Constantine, being sick, ordered the holy bishop to be recalled to Alexandria, 337. At his return his enemies began to accuse him afresh, and placed Gregory of Cappadocia in his seat, which obliged St. Athanasius to go to Rome, and appeal to Pope Julius. He was declared innocent in a council, 342, and in that of Sardis, 347; and two years afterwards was restored to his see at the solicitation of Constantine, but after the death of that prince was again banished by the Emperor Constantius, whereupon he retired to the desert. Pope Liberius, ill-used in his exile, for having defended St. Athanasius, at last subscribed to his condemnation. The Arians placed George in his room, who being killed in a popular sedition under Julian, 360, St. Athanasius returned to Alexandria, but was afterwards exiled by Julian, and restored under Jovian. He addressed a letter to this emperor, in which he proposes the Nicene Creed as the rule of orthodox faith, and condemns those who deny the divinity of the Holy Ghost. St. Athanasius suffered again under Valens, who banished him, 367, and recalled him afterwards. His life, which had been so full of troubles and persecutions for the faith, ended happily, 2 May, 373. His works are chiefly in defence of the mysteries of the Trinity, of the Incarnation, of the Divinity of the Word, and of the Holy Ghost.

ATHELSTAN.

He was not the author of the creed which bears his name.

ATHELSTAN, king of England, was the natural son of Edward the Elder, whom he succeeded in 925. He obtained a great victory over the Danes in Northumberland, after which he reigned in tranquillity. He greatly encouraged commerce, by conferring the title of thane on every merchant who had made three voyages. He died at Gloucester, 25 Nov., 941, at the age of 46 or thereabouts.

ATHENÆUS, a celebrated physician and philosopher, a native of Cilicia, and contemporary with Pliny.

ATHENÆUS, a mathematician of Cizycus, was contemporary with Archimedes. He wrote a treatise on machines, in the works of the ancient mathematicians, printed at Paris, 1693.

ATHENÆUS, a Greek grammarian and rhetorician, was a native of Naucratis in Egypt, and lived at the beginning of the third century. His Δειπνοσοφισταί, or 'Banquet of the Learned,' in 15 books, is a treasure of various and useful knowledge. It is a rich source of information on topics of philosophy, history, poetry, and antiquities, and preserves many interesting fragments and monuments. There is no English translation of Athenæus.

ATHENAGORAS, a Christian philosopher of Athens in the second century, wrote an apology for the Christians, addressed to Marcus Aurelius and Commodus, and a work on the resurrection of the dead. Both these pieces were printed at Oxford in 1706.

ATHENODORUS, a Stoic philosopher, was a native of Tarsus in Cilicia, and lived about 50 B.C. He was preceptor to Augustus, who had a high esteem for his virtue and probity.

ATHERTON, JOHN, D.D., an infamous Irish prelate, was born at Bawdrif, near Bridgewater, Somersetshire, 1598, and educated at Gloucester Hall, Oxford. In 1636 he was advanced to the bishopric of Waterford and Lismore, in Ireland. 'In this vineyard he laboured very profitably, and did grind the people of his diocese, the Roman Catholics especially, with too much severity.' After a most disgraceful career, he was convicted of unnatural crime, and executed on Gallows Green at Dublin, 5 Dec., 1640.

ATHIAS, JOSEPH, a Jew, was a celebrated printer at Amsterdam. He brought out two excellent editions of the Hebrew Bible, 1601 and 1667, 2 vols. 8vo.; and died 1700.

ATHLONE, GODERT DE GINKELL, first earl of, and a distinguished general, derived his descent from a very ancient family in the United Provinces, where he was Baron de Reede and Ginkell, Baron of Ameronger, Middachier, Livendael, Elst, Stervelt, Roenbergh, &c. He came to England with William III. in 1688, and served him with great reputation in Ireland, where he acted at first as lieutenant-general. Bally more surrendered to him in June, 1691, and in the next month Athlone, which he carried in an hour. The gallantry of this action is almost unparalleled, as a wide, deep, and rapid river lay between him and the enemy. He had only 3000 troops, his adversaries a large army; in addition to which they were masters of all the forts, and well entrenched. Ginkell and his men were exposed to the innumerable grenades which flew around them. Marching breast-high through the stream, they took the city by storm. The Irish viewed the obtaining this place as a miracle, and they fled with precipitation. The victor did not lose more than fifty of his soldiers. For this exploit he was created earl of Athlone and baron of Aghrim, by patent dated 4 Mar., 1693. Soon after the capture of Athlone he entirely routed the army of James II., which was much superior in numbers to his own, and commanded by St. Ruth, a gallant officer from France, who was killed in the battle, with 9000 men. The king, fully sensible of Ginkell's skill and intrepidity, promoted him to the supreme command of his army in Ireland; after which he reduced the cities of Galway and Limerick, and at length the whole kingdom. The English House of Commons returned him a vote of thanks. The monarch gave a more solid mark of his gratitude, in a grant of forfeited estate of William Dongan, earl of Limerick, consisting of 26,480 acres of land, which the parliament confirmed in 1695; but the Commons revoked the grant in 1699, pronouncing it too extravagant. Disgusted at this ungenerous treatment, he left the British dominions, and retired to Holland, where he was well received, and employed in the armies of that country. He burnt the magazines of the French at Givet, in Flanders, in 1696, containing stores of every kind sufficient to supply an army of 100,000 men for three months. As a reward for his services he was made velt-marshall of the States armies, on the death of Prince Nassau Staarburgh. Ginkell died at Utrecht, 11 Feb., 1702-3.

ATKEY, ANTHONY, a dissenting clergyman, was born in or about 1701, and in 1730 became minister of Shepton Mallet, Somersetshire, and continued to act in that capacity until his death on 27 Dec., 1734. He wrote 'The rectitude of Providence under the severest Dispensations: a Funeral Sermon [on Jer. xii.] on the late Rev. Simon Browne, preach'd December 31, 1732,' 8vo., London, 1733.

ATKINS, JAMES, a Scotch prelate, was born at Kirkwall, in Orkney, and educated first at Edinburgh, and lastly at Oxford, where he took the degree of D.D. In 1677 he was consecrated bishop of Moray, from whence he was translated to Galloway, 1680. He died at Edinburgh, 28 Oct., 1687.

ATKINS, JOHN, an English navy surgeon, probably a native of Plaistow, Essex, entered the service about 1703, and served in various parts of the world. Died Dec., 1757, aged 73. His works are 'A Voyage to Guinea, Brazil, and the West Indies,' 2nd edit., 8vo., London, 1737; 'The Navy Surgeon; or a Practical System of Surgery,' 8vo., London, 1737; and 'A Treatise on Chirurgical Subjects,' 2 vols., London, n. d.

ATKINSON, PAUL, an English Franciscan, who had held several important offices in his order, was apprehended in London in 1698, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. He was accordingly conveyed to Hurst gaol, in Hampshire, where, after thirty years of strict confinement, he died, 15 Oct., 1729, at 74.

ATKINSON, THOMAS, a native of London, was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.D. 1630. He afterwards became rector of South Warnborough, Hampshire, which he exchanged with Dr. Peter Heylyn for the rectory of Islip, near Oxford. He was buried in the chapel of St. John's College, 6 Feb., 1638-9, after he had enjoyed the living of Islip only a few months. He wrote two MS. poems, in Latin

ATKINSON.

Supplic verse, respectively entitled 'Andrei Melvini Anti-Tarni-Cunicategoria,' and 'Melvinus delirans.' One Thomas Atkinson, probably the same, wrote a Latin tragedy entitled 'Homo,' preserved in MS., Harl., 6925.

ATKINSON, THOMAS, of Glasgow, died at sea, on his way to Barbadoes, 10 Oct., 1833. He was possessed of considerable literary abilities, and published, among other things, an annual called 'The Chameleon,' of which three volumes appeared.

ATKINSON, THOMAS WILIAM, an English architect, artist, and traveller, died 13 Aug., 1861.

ATKINSON, WILLIAM, D.D. of Cambridge, canon of Lincoln and Windsor, translated the 'Imitation of Christ,' and died 8 Aug., 1509.

ATKINSON, WILLIAM, a native of York, was the son of a clergyman, and was admitted a sizar of Jesus College, Cambridge, 29 Dec., 1775. He graduated B.A. 1780, M.A. 1783. Subsequently he became lecturer at the parish church of Bradford, Yorkshire, and in 1792 rector of Warham All Saints, Norfolk. He died at Thorpe Arch, Yorkshire, 30 Sept., 1846, aged 89. Mr. Atkinson was author of 'Poetical Essays,' 4to., Leeds, 1786.

ATKINS, JOHN TRACY, an English barrister, compiled 'Reports of Chancery cases, extending from Hilary term, 1736, to Michaelmas term, 1754.'

ATKINS, RICHARD, an English writer on typography, was born in Gloucestershire, 1615, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford. He afterwards removed to Lincoln's Inn, but became unfortunate, and died a prisoner for debt in the Marshalsea prison, 14 Sept., 1677. He wrote 'The Original and Growth of Printing, collected out of History and the Records of this Kingdom,' 4to., London, 1644. Meerman has proved that the error grossly imposed on several persons by means of false title-pages. Atkins also wrote some religious pieces.

ATKINS, SIR ROBERT, an English judge, born in Gloucestershire, 1621. He received his education at Balliol College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn. At the Restoration he was created K.B., and in April, 1672, was appointed a judge of the Common Pleas, but he resigned this office in 1679, and retired to his estate. He assisted Lord Russell with his advice. In 1689 King William III. appointed him chief baron of the Exchequer; and in the same year he was chosen speaker of the House of Lords, which office he continued to hold until the great seal was given to Lord Somers, in 1693. In 1695 he withdrew altogether from public life, and retired to his seat at Sapperton, near Cirencester, where he spent the remainder of his life. Died 1709. His tracts, in two vol. 8vo., are valued as a treasure of constitutional and legal knowledge.

ATKINS, SIR ROBERT, son of the preceding, was born 1646, and educated with great care under the care of his father. He afterwards represented his native county in parliament, and died in his house at Westminster, 29 Oct., 1711. He wrote 'The Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire,' which has been twice printed in folio.

ATRATUS, or BLACK HUON, a cardinal in the thirteenth century, was born at Evesham, Worcestershire, and made such progress in the sciences, particularly philosophy, mathematics, and medicine, as to obtain the appellation of the phoenix of his age. Pope Martin II. made him a cardinal, 1281. He died of the plague, 1287. He wrote

ATTERBURY.

'De Genealogiis Humanis,' and 'Canones Medicales.'

ATSLAW, EDWARD, M.D. of Oxford, was a celebrated London physician in the reign of Elizabeth. He was a zealous Catholic, and a partisan of the Queen of Scots.

ATTYLL, RICHARD, an English artist, was seal-engraver to Henry VIII., for which office he received the annual salary of £20.

ATTALUS I., king of Pergames, succeeded to the throne 241 B.C., and died 197 B.C.

ATTALUS II., PHILADELPHUS, king of Pergames, was son of the preceding, and ascended the throne 159 B.C.; died 138 B.C.

ATTALUS III., PHILOMETER, succeeded to the throne 138 B.C., and died 129 B.C.

ATTERBURY, FRANCIS, an English prelate, was son of Dr. Lewis Atterbury, the rector of Milton-Keynes, Bucks, where he was born, 6 March, 1662. He was educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christchurch, Oxford, in 1681. In 1687 he took his degree of M.A., and the same year vindicated the character of Luther against Obadiah Walker. He had for a pupil the Hon. Charles Boyle, whom he assisted in his controversy with Bentley. In 1691 he came to London, where his eloquence brought him into notice. He became chaplain to William and Mary, lecturer of St. Bride's, and preacher at the Bridewell chapel. One of his sermons, 'On the Power of Charity to cover Sins,' was attacked by Hoadly; and another, entitled 'The Scorners,' was severely animadverted upon by an anonymous disputant. In 1700 he engaged in a dispute with Dr. Wake on the rights of convocations, and was presented with his doctor's degree by the university of Oxford: the same year he was installed archdeacon of Totnes. In 1704 he was promoted to the deanery of Carlisle, and in 1707 Bishop Trelawney appointed him canon-residentary of Exeter. In 1709 he had another dispute with Hoadly on passive obedience. In 1710 he assisted Dr. Sacheverel in drawing up his defence, for which the doctor left him a legacy. The same year he was chosen prolocutor of the lower house of Convocation. In 1712 he was made dean of Christchurch, and the year following promoted to the bishopric of Rochester and the deanery of Westminster. The death of Queen Anne put a stop to further advancement: When the rebellion broke out in Scotland, he and Bishop Smalridge refused to sign the Declaration of the bishops; besides which, Atterbury drew up some violent protests in the House of Lords. In 1712 he was apprehended on suspicion of being engaged in a plot to bring in the Pretender, for which he was committed to the Tower. An act of parliament having passed, though not without much opposition, for 'inflicting pains and penalties on the bishop,' he was banished for life, and left the kingdom in June, 1713. He died at Paris, 15 Feb., 1731-2, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

ATTERBURY, LEWIS, D.D., an English divine, was born at Milton, Northamptonshire, about 1631, and became a student of Christchurch, Oxford, 1647. In 1654 he was presented to the living of Broad Rissington, Gloucestershire; and in 1657 to the rectory of Milton, or Middleton-Keynes, in Buckinghamshire. In 1660 he was created D.D. by the university of Oxford. He was drowned in 1693. He published a few single sermons.

ATTERBURY, LEWIS, LL.D., elder brother of the bishop, was born at Caldecote, in the parish of Newport-Pagnell, Bucks, 2 May, 1656, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he went to Christchurch, Oxford. In 1684, he was preferred to the rectory of Sywell, Northamptonshire. He took his degree of LL.D. 1687, and was chosen preacher of the chapel at Highgate in 1695, about which time he was one of the six preaching chaplains to the Princess Anne of Denmark. In 1707 he was presented to the rectory of Shepperton, in Middlesex, and in 1719 to that of Hornsey, in the same county. He died at Bath, 20 Oct., 1731. There are four volumes of his sermons and tracts in print. He endowed a school for girls at Newport-Pagnell.

ATTERBURY, LUFFMAN, an English glee-writer of some eminence towards the close of the eighteenth century.

ATTERSOL, WILLIAM, a learned Englishman of the seventeenth century, author of a 'Commentarie on the Booke of Numbers,' fol., London, 1618; a 'Commentary upon the Epistle of Paul to Philemon,' 1618, 1633; and other works.

ATTEY, JOHN, an English musician, author of 'The First Booke of Ayres, of four parts, with Tablature for the Lute; so made that all the parts may be plaied together with the Lute, or one Voice with the Lute and Bass Viol,' London, 1622.

ATTICUS, TITUS POMPONIUS, a Roman knight, and one of the most learned men of ancient Rome, who retired to Athens during the civil wars of Marius and Sylla, where he learned to speak Greek as elegantly as his native language. On his return to Rome he contracted a close friendship with Cicero, Hortensius, and other learned men. Agrippa married his daughter Pomponia. Atticus conducted himself so prudently during the civil wars between Pompey and Cæsar, Mark Antony and Brutus, that, without joining any party, he was beloved by all. He steadily declined being promoted to public offices, preferring a private and studious life. He wrote 'Annals,' and several other works in Greek and Latin, and died 32 B.C., aged 77. Cicero addressed many of his letters to Atticus.

ATTICUS, a celebrated patriarch of Constantinople, a native of Sebastia. He was appointed to the see of Constantinople four months after the death of Arsaces, 406, while St. John Chrysostom was living. This election stirred up the enemies of Atticus, among whom was Pope Innocent and several bishops of the east. However, after the death of St. John Chrysostom, Innocent granted him communion. He died about 427.

ATTILA, king of the Huns, one of the most famous conquerors of the fifth century. He was surnamed 'The Scourge of God.' He ravaged the east, imposed a tribute on Theodosius the younger, traversed Pannonia and Germany, and entered Gaul, 450, with an army of 500,000 men. He took several towns, and besieged Orleans, but Ætius and Theodoric compelled him to raise the siege, and soon afterwards engaged him in a great battle at Meri, a small city of Champagne, where he lost above 300,000 men. Attila passed from thence into Italy, 452, where he destroyed Aquileia, and many other towns. St. Leo went to meet him, and stopped him, by his entreaties and the promise of a tribute from Valentinian III., from going to Rome. Attila then, it is said, retired beyond the Danube. He died in 453.

ATWOOD.

ATTIRET, JEAN DENYS, a French painter, was born at Dôle, in Franche-Comté, 31 July, 1702. After completing his artistic education, he became a lay brother of the Society of Jesus, at Avignon, whence, in 1737, he went to China in the capacity of painter attached to the Jesuit mission at Pekin. He became a great favourite of the emperor Kien Loong. He died at Pekin, 8 Dec., 1768.

ATTWOOD, THOMAS, a musical composer, was born 1767, and at the age of nine was admitted a chorister in the Chapel Royal, where he received his first musical instruction under Dr. Nares, and afterwards under Dr. Ayrton. Attwood made rapid progress, and went to Italy at the charge of the prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., and also to Vienna, where he studied under the celebrated Mozart. In 1796 he was elected organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and shortly afterwards succeeded Dr. Dupuis as composer to his Majesty. He died 24 March, 1838. A list of his compositions for the stage, and of his church music, is given in the Biographical Dictionary of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge.

ATWATER, WILLIAM, bishop of Lincoln, died 4 Feb., 1520. He was much employed by Cardinal Wolsey.

ATWELL, GEORGE, a surveyor at Cambridge, wrote 'The Faithful Surveyor,' Cambridge, 1662. Newton mentions him with honour.

ATWELL, HUGH, an English actor, contemporary with Shakspeare, died 25 Sept., 1621.

ATWOOD, GEORGE, M.A., F.R.S., an eminent mathematician, born 1746, and educated at Westminster School, whence, in 1765, he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. (third wrangler) 1769, became a fellow of his college, and took the degree of M.A. in 1772. A course of lectures, given by him at the university on natural philosophy, was, it is said, attended by Mr. Pitt, who, as a testimony of his admiration, appointed Mr. Atwood, in 1784, to the sinecure office of one of the patent searchers of the Customs, and also employed him in financial calculations for the public revenue. Mr. Atwood died in his house at Westminster, July, 1807, and was buried in St. Margaret's Church. His published works are, 'A Treatise on the Rectilinear Motion and Rotation of Bodies, with a Description of original Experiments relative to the subject,' royal 8vo., London, 1784; 'An Analysis of a course of Lectures on the Principles of Natural Philosophy,' 8vo., 1784; and 'A Dissertation on the Construction and Properties of Arches,' with a supplement, 1801-1804. He also contributed several papers to the 'Philosophical Transactions' of the Royal Society, which conferred upon him the Copleian medal in 1796. Mr. Atwood possessed, in addition to his mathematical attainments, no mean skill as a musician.

ATWOOD, PETER, an English Dominican, governed his order in England from 1698 to 1706, and died 18 Aug., 1718.

ATWOOD, THOMAS, formerly chief judge of the island of Dominica, and afterwards of the Bahamas, died in the King's Bench Prison, at an advanced age, and broken down by misfortune, 27 May, 1793. He was author of 'The History of the Island of Dominica,' 8vo., 1791.

ATWOOD, WILLIAM, a political writer, flourished at the end of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth century. He was at one time chief justice of New York. Among his works are.

AUBERTIN.

'Jani Anglorum Facies Nova.' (anon.) 1680; 'The History and Reasons of the Dependency of Ireland upon the Imperial Crown of the Kingdom of England, rectifying Mr. Molinæux's state of the case, of Ireland's being bound by Acts of Parliament in England,' 1606; and 'The Superiority and Direct Dominion of the Imperial Crown of England over the Crown and Kingdom of Scotland, the true Foundation of a complete Union, reasserted,' 8vo., 1705.

AUBERTIN, EDMUND, a Protestant minister of Charenton, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne, 1594; and died at Paris, 1652. He wrote several works on the holy eucharist, which were answered by Anselm in 'La Perpetuité de la Foi.'

AUBERY, ANTOINE, an industrious French writer, born at Paris, 18 May, 1616; died 19 Jan., 1695. Among his numerous works are histories of Cardinal Richelieu and Cardinal Mazarin.

AUBERY, LOUIS, Sieur du Maurier, a French writer, died 1697, having been attached to various embassies. He composed 'Memoirs relative to the history of Holland,' and a history of Hamburg.

AUBESPINE, CLAUDE DE L', Baron de Chateaufort-sur-Cher, and secretary of state, signalled himself by his services under Francis I., Henry II., Francis II., and Charles IX. of France. Queen Catherine de Medicis asked his advice on all affairs of importance. Died 11 Nov., 1569.

AUBESPINE, GABRIEL D', a French prelate, born 26 Jan., 1579. He became a learned doctor of the Sorbonne, chancellor of the royal orders, councillor of state, and succeeded his relation, Jean de l'Aubespine, as bishop of Orleans. He was consecrated at Rome, 1604, by Clement VIII. After being employed in many important negotiations, he died 15 Aug., 1630. He wrote 'De Veteribus Ecclesiæ Ritibus,' 4to., 1622, and other works.

AUBESPINE, MADELEINE DE L', wife of Nicholas de Neuville, Seigneur de Villeroi, a French lady, celebrated for her wit and beauty, author of several works. She died, 1596, at Villeroi.

AUBIGNÉ, THEODORE AGRIPPA D', a French writer, born at St. Maury, near Pons, in Saintonge, 8 Feb., 1550. He became a favourite of Henri IV., who bestowed upon him many high and honourable preferments; but eventually he lost the royal favour on account of his frankness, and retired to Geneva, where he died a Protestant, 29 April, 1630. He composed a history of his own times; a 'Universal History,' satires, and other works.

AUBLET, JEAN BAPTISTE CHRISTOPHE FUSÉE, a French botanist, born at Salon, in Provence, 4 Nov., 1720; died at Paris, 6 May, 1778.

AUBREY, JOHN, an antiquary, born at Easton-piers, Wiltshire, 3 Nov., 1636. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he pursued his studies with great diligence, making the history and antiquities of England his peculiar object. In 1656 he was admitted of the Middle Temple, but the death of his father prevented his pursuing the study of the law. He succeeded to several estates, but they were involved in many law-suits. These suits, together with other misfortunes, by degrees consumed all his estates, and forced him to lead a more active life than he would otherwise have been inclined to. However, he did not break off his acquaintance with the learned at London and Oxford. On the contrary, he maintained a close correspondence with them, and supplied Anthony à Wood with some materials for his two large works. In 1666 he sold his estate in Wiltshire, and was at length obliged to dispose of all he had left, so that in the space of four years he was reduced even to want, though his spirit remained unbroken. His chief benefactress was Lady Long, of Draycot, in Wilts, who gave him an apartment in her house, and supported him until his death, which took place about 1697. He composed several curious treatises, some of which remain unprinted in the Ashmolean Museum. His 'Perambulation of the county of Surrey, begun 1673, ended 1692,' was published by Dr. Rawlinson, 5 vols. 8vo., 1719, with large additions and improvements. His 'Miscellanies,' by which work he is best known, show that he was somewhat credulous and tainted with superstition.

AUBREY, WILLIAM, LL.D., a civilian, born in Brecknockshire, in or about 1529, was educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of All Souls College, professor of civil law, and principal of New Inn Hall. He also held some considerable employments under Queen Elizabeth. Died 23 July, 1595. None of his works are in print, except some of his letters, which are in Strype's 'Life of Grindal.' Dr. Aubrey was grandfather of John Aubrey, the antiquary.

AUBRIET, CLAUDE, a painter of plants, flowers, butterflies, birds, and fishes, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne, 1651, and died at Paris, 1743. He held the office of draughtsman to the king's garden. From his drawings were engraved the plates in the 'Elements de Botanique' of Tournefort, and the 'Botanicum Parisiense,' fol., Leyden, 1727.

AUBRY DE GOUGES, MARIE. See GOUGES.

AUBUSSON, PÉTER D', thirty-ninth grand-master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, whose residence was then in the island of Rhodes. He signalled himself in Hungary, became a favourite of the Emperor Sigismund, and displayed great bravery at the siege of Montereau-Faut-Yonne. Being created grand-master, 1476, he built several forts for the security of the island. It was Aubusson who, in 1480, sustained the famous siege against the Turks, who appeared before Rhodes with a fleet of 160 sail, and were obliged, two months after, to flee with their galleys. Mahomet II., dying the same year, Zisimo, one of his sons, asked an asylum at Rhodes: the grand-master sent for him, and received him magnificently. He applied himself afterwards to solicit a crusade against the Turks, made the wisest regulations for the advantage of the order, and of religion, and died at Rhodes, 3 July, 1505, aged above 80. Popes, princes, and writers have given him the highest eulogiums. Innocent VIII. honoured him with the purple. His life has been written by Bonhours.

AUCHINLECK, Lord. See BOSWELL.

AUCHINLECK, JAMES, a Scotch poet, supposed to have died 1407. A piece by him, entitled 'The Quair of Jealousy,' is printed in the 'Bannatyne Miscellany.'

AUCHINLOSS, J., D.D., a dissenting minister, died 29 May, 1800. He published 'The Cry of Injured Innocence, in a series of Letters to Mr. James Black, Minister, Dundee,' 8vo., Dundee, 1793; and 'The Sophistry of both the First and Second Parts of Mr. Paine's Age of Reason; or, a Rational Vindication of the Holy Scriptures as a Positive Revelation from God. With the Causes of Deism. In four Sermons,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1796.

AUCHMUTY, ROBERT, an English lawyer, who, in 1703, was made judge of the court of admiralty at Boston, in America, but continued in that post only a few months. In 1740 he became a director of the Land Bank scheme. Being sent to England as agent for the colony, he suggested the expedition to Cape Breton, in a pamphlet entitled 'The Importance of Cape Breton to the British Nation, and a Plan for taking the Place.' He afterwards was reappointed to the judgeship of the Boston admiralty court. Died April, 1750.

AUCHMUTY, Sir SAMUEL, a distinguished general, was son of Dr. Samuel Auchmuty, a clergyman of New York, and was born 1756. He served with distinction in India and Egypt, and in 1803 was made K.C.B. He afterwards served in South America, where he won fresh laurels by the capture of Monte Video. In 1810 he was again sent to India as commander-in-chief in the presidency of Fort St. George, and the next year he commanded the troops at the reduction of the island of Java. He returned to England in 1813, and was subsequently appointed commander of the forces in Ireland. He died at Dublin, 11 Aug., 1822.

AUCKLAND, GEORGE EDEN, Earl of, second son of William, first Lord Auckland, was born at Eden Farm, near Beckenham, Kent, 30 Aug., 1784, and received his education at Christchurch, Oxford. He afterwards was called to the bar, and was elected M.P. for Woodstock, which borough had previously been occupied by his brother, who was accidentally drowned, 1810. He succeeded to the peerage as second Baron Auckland, on the death of his father, in 1814. In Nov., 1830, he was appointed president of the Board of Trade and master of the Mint, with a seat in the cabinet of Earl Grey. In July, 1834, Sir James Graham resigned the office of First Lord of the Admiralty, and Lord Auckland presided at that board during the following four months, going out with his party when it was disarranged by the accession of Lord Althorp to the peerage. Upon the speedy return of his friends to office he was appointed governor-general of India, and in Sept., 1835, he left England for that country. He was advanced to the dignity of an earl by patent, dated 21 Dec., 1839. The chief feature of his government in India was the Afghan war. The change of ministry, in Sept., 1841, had the effect of recalling Lord Auckland from India. He died at the Grange, near Alresford, Hampshire, 1 Jan., 1849.

AUCKLAND, WILLIAM EDEN, Lord, was born 1744, being the third son of Sir Robert Eden, Bart., of West Auckland, in the county of Durham, and was brought up to the bar. In 1772 he published his valuable work, entitled 'Principles of Penal Law,' and in that year quitted the legal profession for the post of under-secretary of state. He was returned M.P. for Woodstock in 1774, and in 1776 was appointed one of the lords of trade. As a member of the House of Commons he distinguished himself by his attention to public business, and took a leading part on several important subjects of internal regulation. He was one of the commissioners deputed in 1778 to America, for the purpose of reconciling the colonies with the mother country, and after its failure he engaged as a writer in the dispute. In 1780 he accompanied the Earl of Carlisle to Ireland as his chief secretary, and had a great share in the establishment of a national bank in that country. After his return he was made a privy councillor, and in 1786 was sent as minister plenipotentiary to the court of Versailles, for the purpose of negotiating a commercial treaty. Several other important concerns were also entrusted to his management, in which he acquitted himself with great ability. In 1788 he went as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the court of Madrid; and, on his return in 1789, was raised to the dignity of an Irish peer. Soon after he was nominated ambassador to the Seven United Provinces, and by his negotiations exerted himself to promote the independence of that country and its connection with Great Britain. He returned thither in the same capacity in 1792, and in the following year was raised to the British peerage. He vigorously supported the measures of Mr. Pitt's administration, both by speech and pen; and his various services received the reward of a pension. Died 28 May, 1814.

AUDE, Le Chevalier JEAN, a French dramatic writer, born at Apt, in Vaucluse, 12 Dec., 1755; died at Montmartre, near Paris, Oct., 1841.

AUDEBERT, GERMAIN, a learned lawyer of Orleans, where he was born, 15 March, 1518. He was 'President de l'Election' in his native city, and died there, 24 Dec., 1598. He left various works in Latin verse, 8vo., Hanover, 1603.

AUDEBERT, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French naturalist and engraver of natural history, was born at Rochefort in 1759. He excelled in elegant representations of animals, and his productions are esteemed the most valuable of their kind. His first performance was 'L'Histoire Naturelle des Singes des Makis; et des Galéopitèques,' folio, Paris, 1800. He was engaged upon other works of equal splendour when he died, in 1800.

AUDELAY, JOHN, a canon of the monastery of Haughmond, in Shropshire, about 1426, wrote some curious poems in the Shropshire dialect. These are preserved in MS. at Oxford, and have been printed by the Percy Society, under the editorship of J. O. Halliwell, 8vo., London, 1844.

AUDENARDE, or OUDENARDE, ROBERT VAN, an historical and portrait painter, was born at Ghent, 1663, and died there, 1743.

AUDIFFREDI, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian astronomer and bibliographer, born at Saorgio, near Nice, 1714; died 3 July, 1794. When very young he entered the order of St. Dominic, and became keeper of the library of Cardinal Casanate at the convent of the Minerva at Rome. He constructed a small observatory, in order that he might indulge his taste for astronomy, and published successively, 'Phænomena cælestia observata,' Rome, 1753-6; 'Transitus Veneris ante solem observatæ Romæ, 6 Junii, 1761, Expositio;' 'Investigatio parallaxis solis, exercitatio Dadei Ruffi' [anagram of 'Audiffredi'], 4to., Rome, 1765; 'Dimostrazione della stazione della cometa, 1769;' 'Catalogo storico-criticus Romanorum editionum sæculi xv.,' Rome, 1785; 'Catalogus bibliothecæ Casanatenis librorum typis impressorum,' 4 vols. folio, Rome, 1761-88; and 'Catalogus historico-criticus editionum Italicarum sæculi xv.,' 4to., Rome, 1794.

AUDIFFRET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French geographer, was ambassador at the courts of Mantua, Parma, and Modena. He died at Nancy in 1733, aged 76. He wrote 'Ancient and Modern Geography,' 3 vols. 4to., Paris, 1689.

AUDIGUIER, VITAL D', a French soldier and man of letters, was born about 1570, and killed at Paris, 1624. He was the author of a vast number of translations from the Spanish, and poems.

AUDLEY.

AUDLEY, EDMUND, bishop of Hereford, 1493; of Salisbury, 1503; died 15 Aug., 1524.

AUDLEY, HENRY, Lord, the first of the line of Lord Audley, died between 1241 and 1247. In 1213 he founded and endowed an abbey for Cistercian monks at Hilton, in Staffordshire.

AUDLEY, HUGH, a noted English miser, died Nov., 1662. There is a curious work, entitled 'The way to be rich, according to the practice of the great Audley, who began with two hundred pound, in the year 1605, and dyed worth four hundred thousand pound this instant November, 1662,' 4to., London, 1662.

AUDLEY, SIR JAMES, K.G., son of Sir James Audley, was engaged in the service of Edward the Black Prince, and behaved with great heroism at the battle of Poitiers, 1356. Died 1369. He was one of the original knights of the Order of the Garter.

AUDLEY, JAMES TUCHET, fourth lord, placed himself at the head of the Cornish insurrection against Henry VII. He led the rebels to Blackheath, near Greenwich, where they encamped. They were dispersed 22 June, 1498, by the royal troops under the earls of Oxford, Essex, and Daubeny. Lord Audley was captured, and on 28 June, 1498, was beheaded on Tower-hill.

AUDLEY, JOHN. See AWDELEY and AUDELEY.
AUDLEY, MERVYN, Lord. See CASTLEHAVEN, earl of.

AUDLEY, THOMAS AUDLEY, Lord, was born in Essex, 1488, and educated, it is supposed, at Buckingham College, Cambridge. He afterwards studied law in the Inner Temple. In 1532 he was knighted, and made lord-keeper of the great seal, being advanced to the dignity of lord-chancellor 26 Jan., 1533-4. He was created Lord Audley of Walden 1538, and elected a K.G. 1540. Died 30 April, 1544. He is represented to have had much learning, but he proved himself a subordinate tool of his tyrannical master, and must be regarded as a mean, crafty, sordid, and unprincipled politician. He in part founded and endowed Magdalen College, Cambridge.

AUDOIN, PIERRE, a French engraver, born 1768, at Paris, where he died 1822.

AUDOUIN, JEAN VICTOR, a distinguished entomologist, born at Paris, 27 April, 1797; died 9 Nov., 1841.

AUDRAN, the name of a family of artists in France. Charles Audran, the elder, was born at Paris in 1594. His works are numerous and excellent. They are distinguished by a K. He died in 1673. Claude, a nephew of the preceding, was born at Lyons in 1639, and studied under his uncle. He was employed by Le Brun in painting part of the pictures of Alexander's battles, at Versailles, and became professor of painting in the Royal Academy of Paris, where he died, in 1684. Girard, the brother of the last-mentioned, and the most celebrated of the family, was born at Lyons in 1640, and studied under Le Brun, at Paris. He engraved that artist's pictures of Alexander's battles in a masterly manner, and died at Paris in 1703. Claude, nephew of Girard, was born at Lyons in 1665, and became famous for painting ornaments. He was appointed king's painter, and died in 1734. Jean, brother of the last-mentioned, was born in 1607, and studied engraving under his uncle Girard; he died at Paris in 1756.

AUDUBON, JOHN JAMES, F.R.S., a very eminent ornithologist, was born at Louisiana about 1780, of

AUFRERE.

French parents. After spending his boyhood in Louisiana, he was taken to France, where he received his education, and attained considerable proficiency as a painter, under the mastership of the celebrated David. On arriving at years of maturity, his father gave him a residence on the banks of the Schuykill; but, although surrounded by every luxury, the taste which he had acquired in Paris for ornithology inspired him with an ardent desire to become acquainted with the birds of the western and intertropical forests of America. Accordingly, in 1810, he left home in an open skiff, with his wife and infant son, and floated down the Ohio in search of a locality more romantic, in an ornithological point of view, than that selected by his father. He fixed upon a site in Kentucky, and, having established a new home, pursued his favourite studies in every direction with unflagging zeal, roaming through the forests, sailing on every river, and drawing the hitherto undescribed birds which he shot. The history of his perilous adventures for a period of twenty years, in which he passed through every degree of habitable latitude, constantly exposed to varied alternations of heat and cold, forms a monument of his zeal and ardent love of nature. In 1824 Audubon, at the instance of Lucien Bonaparte, prince of Canino, himself a very eminent naturalist, resolved to publish his valuable labours. For this purpose he visited England, where he landed as a stranger with a portfolio of magnificent drawings, but without the slightest definite plan for their publication. However, the publication of his great work, 'The Birds of America,' was commenced in 1830, and completed at the end of fourteen years. Sir David Brewster, Sir Walter Scott, Lord Jeffrey, and Wilson were warm supporters of this splendid undertaking, which led to its author being elected a F.R.S., and a member of many other learned societies here and on the continent. In 1839 Audubon returned to America, and established himself in a place of peaceful retirement on the banks of the Hudson. There he laboured, conjointly with Dr. Bachman, in preparing 'The Quadrupeds of America,' published in 1846. This was followed by 'Biography of American Quadrupeds,' shortly before his death, which took place at New York, 27 Jan., 1851.

AUFRERE, ANTHONY, an English writer, born about 1756, being the eldest son of Anthony Aufreere, of Hoveton Hall, Norfolk. Early in life he acquired a taste for German literature, and he translated and published the following works:—'A Tribute to the memory of Ulric von Hutten, from Goethe,' 1789; 'Travels through the Kingdom of Naples in 1789, from the German of Salis,' 1795; 'A warning to Britons against French perfidy and cruelty: or, a short account of the treacherous and inhuman conduct of the French officers and soldiers towards the peasants of Suabia, during the invasion of Germany in 1796. Selected and translated from a well-authenticated German publication. With an address to the people of Great Britain, by the translator,' 8vo., London, 1798. In 1791 Mr. Aufreere married Matilda, youngest daughter of General James Lockhart, of Lee and Carnwath, in North Britain, a count of the holy Roman empire, in consequence of which connection he became the editor of the 'Lockhart Letters,' in 2 vols. 4to., containing much curious correspondence between the ancestors of that family and the confidential supporters of the Pretender, previous to and during the rebellions of 1715 and 1745. Mr. Aufrere died at Pisa, 29 Nov., 1833.

AUGENIO, HORACE, an Italian medical writer, was born about 1527, at Monte-Santo, near Ancona, studied either at Bologna or Pisa, and taught medicine at Turin and Padua. He died in the latter city, 1603. His 'Epistolarum et consultationum medicinalium libri xxxiii. in duos tomos distributi, Quibus accessere eiusdem authoris, de hominis partu, libri, ii.' were printed at Frankfort, fol., 1597.

AUGER, ATHANASE, a French translator, born at Paris, 12 Dec., 1734, became professor of rhetoric, first at Rome, and then in his native city. He was appointed vicar-general of Lescar by M. de Noé. Died 7 Feb., 1792. His translations of Demosthenes, Æschines, Isocrates, Lysias, and other Greek orators, are held in esteem on account of their accuracy, though they are weak and colourless. His best work is the 'Constitution des Romains sous les rois et du temps de la république,' on the composition of which he spent thirty years. His writings have been collected in twenty-nine octavo volumes.

AUGER, EDMOND, a French Jesuit, born 1530, at Allemans, near Sezannes, in Brie, and took the habit at Rome, under St. Ignatius, about 1550. On his return into France he applied himself to the conversion of Protestants, and brought back many to the Catholic faith. A Protestant clergyman, touched with the eloquence of Auger, and hoping to gain him to his party, saved him from the gallows, to which he had been sentenced by the Baron Des Adrets; but he did not relax his zeal for the conversion of Protestants. His conduct during the plague at Lyons was admirable. It was Auger who re-established the Catholic religion in that city, 1563. Henri III. afterwards appointed him to be his preacher and confessor. He died at Côme, 1591, leaving some controversial works.

AUGER, LOUIS SIMON, a French miscellaneous writer, born at Paris, 29 Dec., 1772; died 2 Jan., 1829.

AUGEREAU, PIERRE FRANÇOIS CHARLES, duke of Castiglione, a celebrated marshal of France, born at Paris, 21 Oct., 1757; died 12 June, 1815.

AUGURELLO, JOHN AURELIUS, was born at Rimini, about 1441, and was professor of the belles-lettres at Trevisa, where he died, 24 Oct., 1524. He was an inferior chemist and poet. In his poem entitled 'Chrysopeia,' he displays what he knew of the philosopher's stone. The dedication is addressed to Pope Leo X., who presented the author with an empty purse, remarking that those who could make gold only wanted a place to keep it in.

AUGUSTINE, ST., one of the most illustrious doctors of the Church, was born 13 Nov., 354, at Tagasta, a small town of Africa, in the inland part of Numidia. He was son of Patricius and his wife St. Monica. He studied at Tagasta, then at Madaura, and afterwards at Carthage, where, from an illicit attachment, he had a son named Adeodatus, a prodigy of genius, who lived only to the age of 16. Augustine afterwards embraced the doctrines of the Manichæans, and professed rhetoric at Tagasta, Carthage, Rome, and lastly at Milan. In the latter city, going out of curiosity to hear the sermons of St. Ambrose, he was so touched by them that he resolved on a reformation, to which the tears of his mother, St. Monica, contributed. He was baptized by St. Ambrose, at

AUGUSTINE.

Milan, 387, renounced his profession of rhetorician, and returned to his native place. On his arrival there he distributed his possessions among the poor, and lived in a community with some of his friends. Going three years afterwards to Hippo, for the conversion of a man of rank, he was ordained priest by Valerius, the bishop of that place, 391, notwithstanding his reluctance. St. Augustine then established at Hippo a select community of persons, who lived in common, without any private property. In 395 he became coadjutor of Valerius, and in the following year succeeded him in the bishopric of Hippo. He now lived in common with the clergy, and performed all the duties of the episcopal office. He opposed the Donatists, the Manichæans, the Pelagians, and the Semi-Pelagians; instructed the people by constant preaching; relieved the poor; and maintained discipline in several councils. He died at Hippo, 28 Aug., 430, when that city was threatened by the Vandals. St. Augustine's numerous works have been repeatedly printed in a collected form. The most famous are the 'De Civitate Dei,' 'De Gratiâ Christi,' 'De Peccato Originali,' and his 'Confessions.' His writings have always been held in veneration by the Catholic Church.

AUGUSTINE, ST., apostle of the English. He was prior of a monastery at Rome, dedicated to St. Andrew, when Pope Gregory the Great selected him for the purpose of coming to this country to convert the pagans who then inhabited it. This was an object which Gregory had greatly at heart, and, indeed, before his elevation to the chair of St. Peter, he intended to undertake the work himself. Augustine, accompanied by several Roman monks, and some Franchmen who acted as interpreters, numbering altogether about forty persons, landed at the isle of Thanet, on the east side of Kent, A.D. 596. From this place St. Augustine sent to Ethelbert, king of Kent, signifying that he was come from Rome, and had brought him a most happy message with an assured divine promise of a kingdom which would never have an end. The king ordered the missionaries to remain in the island, where he took care that they should be furnished with necessaries, whilst he deliberated on the course he should pursue. After some days the king went in person to the island, and the religious men came to him in procession, 'carrying for their banner a silver cross and the image of our Saviour painted on a board, and singing the Litany as they walked, made humble prayers for themselves and for the souls of those to whom they came.' Being admitted into the presence of the king, they announced to him the word of life. His majesty listened attentively, and answered that their words and promises indeed were fair, but new and uncertain; however, he promised that they should not be molested, nor hindered from preaching to his subjects. He also appointed them necessary subsistence and a dwelling-place in Canterbury, the capital city of his dominions. In a short time the king and many of his subjects were converted and baptized. After this Augustine went back to France and received episcopal consecration at the hands of Virgilius, archbishop of Arles, A.D. 597. On his return to Britain he sent to Rome for more labourers, and among those who came over were Mellitus, the first bishop of London; Justus, the first bishop of Rochester; and Paulinus, the first archbishop of York. With this colony of new missionaries the pope sent all things necessary for divine worship and the service of the church, viz., altar-cloths, ornaments for churches, vestments, and many books. In the year 600 Gregory sent Augustine, the archiepiscopal pallium, with authority to ordain twelve bishops, who should be subject to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury. In the latter part of his life he was engaged in a dispute with the schismatics of Wales, who did not observe Easter at the due time, and differed from the Roman Church in the manner of administering baptism. The massacre of the monks of Bangor, however, which has sometimes been ascribed to his instigation, did not occur till after his death. He died in 604, on the 26th May, on which day he is commemorated by the Catholic Church.

AUGUSTINE, ANTHONY, a Spanish prelate, born at Zaragoza, 1516, was sent to England by the pope, 1554, after which he assisted at the council of Trent. In 1574 he was made archbishop of Tarragona, where he died 1586. Besides works which are chiefly on legal and theological subjects, he wrote dialogues concerning medals.

AUGUSTULUS, or ROMULUS AUGUSTUS, a Roman emperor, was the son of Orestes, who, having deposed Julius Nepos, refused the throne for himself, but conferred it upon his son, 476. Shortly after Odoacer and the barbarians invaded Italy, slew Orestes, and deprived the young emperor of his dignity. He was, however, suffered to lead a private life in Campania, and a liberal pension was allowed him. With him ended the Roman empire in the west.

AUGUSTUS, CAIUS JULIUS CESAR OCTAVIANUS, emperor of Rome, was the son of Caius Octavius, by Atia, the niece of Julius Cæsar. He was born at Velitæ, 23 Sept., 63 B.C. Having received a liberal education, he was adopted by Julius Cæsar. He was at Apollonia in Epirus when his uncle was assassinated. On receiving the news he returned to Rome, where he found two parties, the republicans and the followers of Antony and Lepidus. Octavianus was treated with great respect by the magistrates and principal citizens; but Antony treated him with contempt. When Antony was proscribed Octavianus joined the army that was sent against him, but afterwards he thought it prudent to enter into a treaty with that commander. Octavianus, Antony, and Lepidus then formed the famous triumvirate, by which they agreed to enjoy an equal portion of authority for five years. Soon after this Octavianus gratified the malicious spirit of his associates by sacrificing his friend Cicero, and, in short, the triumvirs deluged Rome with the blood of its best citizens. On the death of Brutus at Philippi, another partition took place, Antony and Octavianus sharing the Roman empire between them, while Lepidus took the African provinces. Octavianus obtained Rome, and gave his sister Octavia in marriage to Antony. At length Lepidus was deposed, and a difference broke out between Antony and Octavianus, which ended in the destruction of the former and the establishment of the latter in the empire. In the 36th year of his age the senate conferred upon him the title of AUGUSTUS. It also complimented him by changing the name of the month Septilis, in which he came to the consulate, to Augustus. After attaining the imperial dignity, he seems to have corrected his eager temper, and to have conducted himself with moderation. He made some good regulations in the government, reducing the number of the senators from 1000 to 600, and raising the degree of wealth which was to qualify them for that dignity. He also set about reforming the public morals. Augustus carried his arms with success into Gaul, Germany, and the East; but in the latter part of his life the Romans suffered some severe losses in Germany. He died at Nola, 19 Aug., A.D. 14. Augustus so greatly improved Rome, that it was said 'he found it brick, and left it marble.' He was a liberal encourager of men of letters, and his reign was called the Augustan age of literature.

AUGUSTUS I., elector of Saxony, was born 31 July, 1526, and died 11 Feb., 1586.

AUGUSTUS II., king of Poland and elector of Saxony, was born 13 May, 1670, and died 1 Feb., 1733.

AUGUSTUS III., king of Poland and elector of Saxony, son of the preceding, was born 1606; obtained the crown of Poland 1734; and died 5 Oct., 1763.

AUGUSTUS FREDERICK, prince of Great Britain and Ireland and duke of Sussex, was sixth son of George III., and was born at Buckingham Palace 27 Jan., 1773. He travelled into Italy, where he contracted a marriage with Lady Augusta Murray, second daughter of the earl of Dunmore. The ceremony was first performed at Rome, in 1793, according to the rites of the English Church, and afterwards repeated at St. George's, Hanover Square, London. This marriage being in contravention of the Royal Marriage Act, was in 1794 declared to be null and void. The duke died at Kensington Palace 21 April, 1843. In politics he was a hearty supporter of the Liberal cause, being an advocate of religious toleration in its widest sense, including the abolition of all civil distinctions founded upon differences of creed.

AULISIO, DOMINIC D', a learned professor of civil law at Naples, where he was born 14 Jan., 1639. Died 29 Jan., 1717. His works relate to a variety of subjects. Panzini describes him as 'the most splendid ornament of the university of Naples; profoundly versed in every branch of science; in medicine, philosophy, the learned and Oriental languages; well skilled in Roman, Greek, and Hebrew learning, and a consummate master of jurisprudence.'

AULUS GELLIVS, a Roman grammarian, was born in the reign of Trajan, and died in that of Marcus Aurelius, about A.D. 180. He resided in Athens a considerable time. His 'Noctes Atticæ,' or Attic Nights, is a curious work. It has gone through a variety of editions, and been translated into English by Beloe.

AUMONT, ANTOINE D', a peer and marshal of France, distinguished himself in various sieges and battles. He commanded the right wing at the battle of Rhetel, 1650, and was made marshal of France, 1651, governor of Paris, 1662, duke and peer, 1665. Died 1669, aged 68.

AUMONT, JEAN D', a French military commander, was made a marshal of France by Henri III., in 1579. He signalled himself at the battle of Ivry, and died 19 Aug., 1595, aged 73.

AUNGERVILLE, RICHARD. See BURY, RICHARD DE.

AUNGIER, FRANCIS AUNGIER, Lord, master of the rolls in Ireland, was born at Cambridge, and died 8 Oct., 1632.

AUNOY.

AUNOY, MARIE CATHERINE, Countess d', daughter of M. le Jumel de Berneville, was born 1650, and became the wife of François de la Mothe, Comte d'Aunoy. She died a widow, Jan., 1705. She wrote 'Les Aventures d'Hippolite, Comte de Duglas'; 'Les Contes des Fées' (Fairy Tales), the work by which she is best known; 'Le Comte de Warwick'; 'Mémoires Historiques'; 'Mémoires de Cour d'Espagne.'

AURELIAN, LUCIUS DOMITIUS, a Roman emperor, and one of the greatest generals of antiquity, was the son of a husbandman, and rose to the empire by his valour 270, shortly after the death of Claudius. He defeated the Goths, Sarmatians, Marcomanni, and Vandals; conquered Zenobia, queen of the Palmyrenians, and Tetricus, general of the Gauls, and made them accompany his triumph, 274. This emperor is said to have killed above 900 men with his own hand in different battles. His punishments were extremely severe, from whence it was said 'that Aurelian was a good physician, but took away rather too much blood.' This prince raised a cruel persecution against the Christians 272, but it was not of long duration. Mnæstheus, one of his freedmen, caused him to be assassinated in Thrace 275, as he was preparing to enter Persia with a great army.

AURELIANUS, AMBROSIOUS. See AMBROSIOUS.

AURELIUS, ABRAHAM, was born about 1575, and became pastor of the French church in London. He was living 1632. His works are 'Theses Logicæ,' 4to., Leyden, 1596; 'In nuptias Frederici V. comitis palatini ad Rhenum et Elizabethæ magni magnæ Britannię regis filiæ epithalamium,' 4to., London, 1613; and 'Jobus; sive de potentia liber poetica metaphrasi explicatus,' 4to., London, 1632.

AURELIUS, JOHN MUTIUS, a Latin poet of Mantua. He endeavoured to imitate Catullus, but there is nothing licentious or contrary to decency in his poems. Leo X. had appointed him governor of Mondolfo, but the inhabitants, finding he oppressed them, killed him, and threw his body into a well, about 1520.

AUKELIUS, MARCUS. See MARCUS.

AURELIUS VICTOR. See VICTOR.

AURIA, VINCENT, an Italian antiquary, was born 5 Aug., 1625, at Palermo, where he died 6 Dec., 1710. He wrote several books in Latin and Italian, particularly a History of the eminent men of Sicily, 1704, and a History of the Viceroy's of Sicily, 1697.

AURISPA, JOHN, one of the most learned men of the fifteenth century, was born at Noto, in Sicily, about 1360, and died 1459. He was secretary to Eugenius IV., and afterwards to Nicholas V., who rewarded him with two rich abbeys. He left a translation of Hierocles and other works, but his services to literature consisted much less in what he wrote than in his zeal and success as a teacher, and as a collector of classical MSS.

AUROGALLUS, MATTHEW, a Bohemian by birth, became professor of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew at Wittenberg, and in 1542 was appointed rector of that university. Died 10 Nov., 1543. He assisted Luther in the German translation of the Bible, and wrote a Hebrew grammar; 'De Hebræis Urbium, &c., Nominibus,' and other works.

AURUNGZEBE, emperor of Hindostan, was born 1618; assumed the sovereignty 1658; and died 21 Feb., 1707.

AUSTIN.

AUSONIUS, DECIMUS MAGNUS, a native of Burdigala (Bordeaux), and probably a Christian, was a grammarian, rhetorician, and poet, of the fourth century. He was preceptor to the emperor Gratian, under whom he afterwards held the office of consul at Rome. A translation of some of his epigrams is to be found in T. Kendall's 'Flowers of Epigrammes out of sundrie the most singular authors,' London, 1577.

AUST, SARAH, an accomplished English lady, was wife of the Hon. William Murray, after whose decease in 1786 she married Mr. George Aust. Died 5 Nov., 1811, aged 67. While Mrs. Murray, she published 'A Compendious and Useful Guide to the Beauties of Scotland; to the Lakes of Westmoreland, Cumberland, and Lancashire; and to the Curiosities in the District of Craven; to which is added a particular Description of Scotland, especially that part of it called the Highlands,' 8vo., London, 1799; and 'A Companion and useful Guide to the Western Highlands of Scotland and the Hebrides; to which is added a Description of Part of the Mainland of Scotland, and of the Isles of Mull, Ulva, Staffa, Icolumbkill, Tiree, Coll, Egg, Skye, Raza, and Scalpa,' 2 vols., 8vo., London, 1802-3.

AUSTEN, JANE, an English novelist, was daughter of the rector of Steventon, Hampshire, where she was born 16 Dec., 1775. Her father removed to Bath when he was upwards of seventy, and she accompanied him to that city. After his decease the family removed to Southampton, and thence, in 1800, to the village of Chawton, Hampshire. She died at Winchester, 18 July, 1817. Her novels, which exhibit extraordinary graphic power and truthfulness, are all of the domestic class, and consist of delineations of every-day life and actual society. Their titles are, 'Sense and Sensibility,' 'Pride and Prejudice,' 'Mansfield Park,' 'Emma,' 'Northanger Abbey,' and 'Persuasion.' The whole were reprinted in Bentley's 'Standard Novels,' 1833. They have been translated into French.

AUSTEN, RALPH, an English writer on gardening, was born in Staffordshire, but resided, during the greater part of his life, at Oxford, where he died 1676. It seems that he had studied in Magdalen College. He published, 'A Treatise of Fruit Trees,' 1653; 'Observations upon some part of Sir Francis Bacon's Natural History, as it concerns Fruit Trees, Fruits, and Flowers,' &c.

AUSTEN, WILLIAM, an English metal-founder of the fifteenth century, was one of the artists employed in the construction of the splendid tomb of Richard earl of Warwick, in St. Mary's church, Warwick.

AUSTIN, JOHN, a native of Walpole, in Norfolk, was born about 1613, and admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge, 31 March, 1631. About the year 1640 he embraced the Catholic religion, and leaving the university, designed to follow the law. Accordingly he entered himself of Lincoln's Inn. Afterwards he was for some time tutor to Walter Fowler, Esq., of St. Thomas, in Staffordshire; and then retiring to private lodgings in London, he died in Bow Street, Covent Garden, 1669. He wrote, under the name of William Birchley, 'The Christian Moderator; or, Persecution for Religion Condemned by the Light of Nature, Law of God, Evidence of our own Principles, but not by the Practice of our Commissioners for Sequestrations,' 4to., London, 1651; 'The Christian Moderator, Third Part; or, the Oath of Abjuration arrig'd by the Common Law and Common Sense, Ancient and Modern Acts of Parliament, Declarations of the Army, Law of God, and Consent of Modern Divines,' 4to., London, 1653. He likewise published 'Reflections on the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance; or, the Christian Moderator, the Fourth Part. By a Catholick Gentleman, an obedient Son of the Church, and loyal Subject of his Majesty,' 1661; 'A Letter from a Cavalier in Yorkshire to a Friend;' 'Devotions in the Old Way,' 2 vols., 8vo., Paris, 1675.

AUSTIN, JOHN, of Glasgow, published, in or about 1800, a System of Stenography on a single engraved sheet. He was also author of an elaborate work, entitled 'A System of Stenographic Music, invented by J. Austin, Glasgow. Dedicated to the Musical World, in English, French, Italian, German, and other Languages,' Glasgow, oblong folio, no date. On the title-page is an engraved portrait of the author, who states in the preface that 'The design of this work is to represent to the musical world a new, easy, concise, and universal method of writing music completely on one line only, and adapted to all kinds of vocal and instrumental music and musical instruments, whereby an expert writer may note it down as he hears it performed, so that to those who make it their amusement or profession it will be equally interesting, together with the pleasure of improving and profiting by the art.'

AUSTIN, JOHN, professor of jurisprudence in the university of London, died at Weybridge, Dec., 1859, aged 70. He wrote 'The Province of Jurisprudence Determined,' 8vo., London, 1832, 1861; and, 'A Plea for the Constitution,' 2nd edition, 8vo., London, 1859.

AUSTIN, or AUSTINE ROBERT, D.D., an English author, wrote 'Allegiance not Impached,' 1644; and 'The Parliament's Rules and Directions concerning Sacramental knowledge,' 1647.

AUSTIN, SAMUEL, born in Cornwall, in or about 1606, proceeded M.A. at Oxford, 1630. He is author of 'Urania,' a poem, published 1629. He left a son, of both his names, who published 'Saps upon Parnassus,' 1658; and 'A Panegyric on Charles II.,' 1661. The son died about 1665.

AUSTIN, WILLIAM, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, died 16 Jan., 1633-4, and was buried in the church of St. Mary Overy. He wrote 'Hæc Homo, or, the Excellency of Women;' and a book of 'Meditations on the Principal Fasts and Festivals of the Church,' folio, 1637. He likewise translated Cicero's 'Cato Major; or, the Book of Old Age,' and edition, London, 1671.

AUSTIN, WILLIAM, a minor English poet, was a member of Gray's Inn, and, it is said, a son of the preceding. He wrote 'Atlas under Olympus; an heroic Poem,' 1664; and 'Ἐπιλοιπὸν ἐπιγῆ; or, the Anatomy of the Pestilence, a Poem,' 1666.

AUTÉLZ, GUILLAUME DES, a gentleman of Burgundy, born about 1529, died in or about 1599. He composed a great number of works in French, both verse and prose, one of which was 'Fanfreusche et Gaudichon,' 16mo., 1574.

AUTEROCHE, CHAPPE D'. See CHAPPE.

AUTOMNE, BERNARD, a French lawyer, born 1597, or 1597; died 1666. He wrote 'Commentaire sur la Coutume de Bordeaux;' 'Conférence du Droit Romain avec le Droit Français,' 2 vols., folio; and 'Censura Gallica in Jus Civile Romanorum.'

AUTON, JEAN D', a French Benedictine, born

AVENTIN.

at Saintogne, was prior of Angie, and died in Jan., 1527. He wrote a life of Louis XII., which has been printed. His poems are preserved in MS. in the Bibliothèque Impériale at Paris.

AUTREAU, JACQUES D', a French poet and dramatist, was born at Paris, and died in the Hospital of the Incurables in that city, 1745, aged 89. His dramatic works were published in 4 vols. 12mo., 1749. He had little merit as a painter.

AUVERGNE, ANTOINE D', a French musical composer, born 4 Oct., 1713; died 12 Feb., 1797.

AUVERGNE, THEOPHILE MALO CORRET DE LA TOUR D'. See LA TOUR.

AUVIGNY, JEAN DU CASTRE D', a French historian. He was both a writer and a soldier, and was killed at the battle of Dettingen, 27 June, 1743. He wrote 'The Memoirs of Madame Barneveldt,' 2 vols.; the Histories of Rome and France, abridged for Young Persons; the History of Paris, 4 vols., 12mo.; and 'Lives of Illustrious Frenchmen.'

AUXENTIUS, a famous Arian of Cappadocia, who usurped the see of Milan, being favoured by the emperor Constantius, 355, and was violent in the highest degree against the Catholics. He died 374. St. Ambrose was his successor. He must be distinguished from Auxentius the Younger, another Arian, who held a disputation with St. Ambrose, 386.

AUZOUT, ADRIEN, of the Academy of Sciences, died 1691 or 1693. He was author of a treatise 'Du Micrometre,' printed 1693.

AVALOS, ALPHONSE D', cousin of Ferdinand Avalos, marquis of Pescara, became lieutenant-general of the armies of the Emperor Charles V. in Italy, and knight of the Golden Fleece. He followed the emperor in his expedition to Tunis, and was afterwards ambassador at Venice about 1540. The next year he procured the assassination of Cæsar Fregose, a Genoese, and of Antonio Rinco, a Spaniard, whom Francis I. had sent to Venice. He forced the Prince d'Enghien to raise the siege of Nice, 1543, but lost the famous battle of Cerisoles, 14 April, 1544. Died 31 March, 1546, aged 42.

AVALOS, FERDINAND FRANÇOIS D', marquis of Pescara, one of the most famous generals of the emperor Charles V., and grand chamberlain of the kingdom of Naples, was descended from an illustrious family, and at an early age married Victoria Colonna, a lady celebrated for beauty, sense, and virtue, whose poems were printed in 1548. The marquis was taken prisoner at the battle of Ravenna, 1512, and during his confinement composed an ingenious dialogue upon 'Love,' which he dedicated to his wife. Being restored to liberty, he took arms against the French, and rendered signal service to the emperor. He contributed much to the success of the battle of Bicoque; to the recovery of the Milanese, and to the victory of Pavia over Francis I. in 1525. He died at Milan 24 Nov., 1525, aged 32.

AVANTIO, JOHN MARIO, a celebrated Italian lawyer, born 23 Aug., 1564; died 4 March, 1622. He was much admired at Ferrara, Rovigo, and Padua. Avantio dedicated a poem to Ferdinand, archduke of Austria, afterwards emperor.

AVAUZ, COMTE D'. See MESMES.

AVED, JACQUES ANDRÉ JOSEPH, a French portrait-painter, born 1702; died 4 March, 1766.

AVENTIN, JOHN, whose original name was Thürmayer, was born 1456, being son of a tavern-keeper at Abensberg. He wrote the 'Annals of

AVERANI.

Bavaria,' the best edition of which work appeared 1710. Died 9 Jan., 1534.

AVERANI, BENEDICT, a learned Italian, born 1645, at Florence, was appointed Greek professor at Pisa, 1676, and died 28 Dec., 1707. His chief Latin works were printed at Florence, 1717; 3 vols. fol. He was a man of such prodigious and universal erudition that he was capable of teaching every science; and had so great a memory, that, without taking notes from the authors he had read, he could quote them as authorities in his discourses.

AVERANI, JOSEPH, brother of the preceding, was born at Florence, 1662, and became professor of law at Pisa, where he died 24 Aug., 1738. He wrote 'Interpretationum Juris, lib. v.' 2 vols. 4to. Lyons, 1751; a work much esteemed by lawyers.

AVERANI, NICHOLAS, brother of the two preceding, died at Florence, 1727. He wrote a treatise, 'De Mensibus Ægyptiorum,' and edited the works of Gassendi.

AVERDY, CLEMENT CHARLES DE L', minister and comptroller-general of the finances under Louis XV., was born at Paris, 1720 or 1723. He was counsellor of parliament, and so high was his reputation that his appointment gave general satisfaction to the people, whose condence, however, he lost by mismanagement. In 1764 he was dismissed at his own request, whereupon he retired to his estate, and employed himself in agricultural pursuits. He was guillotined 24 Nov., 1793. He wrote 'Code Pénal'; 'De la Pleine Souveraineté du Roi sur la Province de Bretagne,' 1765; and 'Suite des Expériences de Gambais sur les Bles noirs et caries,' 1788.

AVERELL, ADAM, was born at Mullan, county Tyrone, 7 May, 1754, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He took orders in the Established Church, but afterwards turned Methodist, and was for nearly thirty years president of the Primitive Wesleyan Methodist Conference. Died 16 Jan., 1847. Alexander Stewart and George Revington published 'Memoirs' of him in 1849.

AVERELL, WILLIAM, an English writer, published three curious black-letter pamphlets between 1583 and 1590. One is entitled, 'A mercurial combat of contrarieties, malignantie struing in the members of man's bodie, allegoricallie representing vnto vs the enuied state of ovr flourishing Commonwealth: wherein dialogue wise by the way, are touched the extreame vices of this present time, &c.'

AVERROES, or BEN ROSCHID, of Cordova, one of the most subtle Arabian philosophers. He flourished in the middle of the twelfth century, and was judge of Morocco, and of Mauritania; but executed all those offices by deputies, rather than leave Cordova. He was accused by his enemies of having no religion, and Manzor obliged him to make his confession at the gate of the mosque, and to have his face spit upon by those who entered; nor was this without cause if what is said of him be true, viz., that he called the Christian religion the impossible religion; that of the Jews the religion of children; and that of the Mahometans the religion of swine. Averroes was the first translator of Aristotle into Arabic; his commentaries on that philosopher, to whom he was much attached, gained him the surname of 'The Commentator.' He also taught physic, but knew more of the theory than the practice. He died at Morocco, probably in 1198. His medical works were printed at Venice, 1490, fol.; and his commentaries on Aristotle's 'Venice,' 1495, fol.

AVESBURY, ROBERT of, an English historian, was keeper of the registry of the court of Canterbury, about 1356. He intended to have written a history of Edward III., but his work, which was published by Hearne in 1720, breaks off at the year 1356.

AVIANUS, FLAVIUS, a Latin writer, probably lived in the second century, in the reign of the Antonines. He wrote forty-two fables in elegiac verse, which are still extant. He is sometimes confounded with Rufus Festus Avienus.

AVICENNA, an Arabian physician, was born 980. At the age of eighteen he began to practise with such success that he was appointed physician to the court of Bagdad. At last he fell under the displeasure of the prince in whose service he was engaged, and was thrown into prison, where he died, 1037. He left a number of works, chiefly on metaphysical and medical subjects. They have been often printed in Arabic and Latin.

AVIENUS, RUFUS FESTUS, a Latin writer, probably flourished about A.D. 400. His principal work was a translation of the astronomical poem of Aratus.

AVILA, D'. See DAVILA.

AVILER, AUGUSTIN CHARLES D', a French architect, was born at Paris, 1653. On his passage to Rome he was taken by the Algerines, and carried to Tunis, where he designed a grand mosque, which is greatly admired. He obtained his liberty in two years, and settled at Montpelier, where he died in 1700. He wrote a Course of Architecture, 2 vols. 4to., 1691; and a dictionary of architectural terms.

AVISON, CHARLES, an English musical composer, was organist of St. Nicholas' church, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he died, 9 May, 1770, in the sixtieth year of his age. As a composer he is known principally by his concertos. He wrote an 'Essay on Musical Expression,' and a memoir of Marcello, prefixed to Garth's edition of that composer's psalms.

AVITUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, emperor of the West, was born in Auvergne, of an illustrious family. His merit raised him to several important stations, and on the death of Maximus, in 455, he was chosen emperor. After his election he abandoned himself to pleasure, which alienated the affections of the Romans from him, and he was obliged to resign his dignity fourteen months after his election; and the Senate intended to put him to death, on which he fled towards the Alps, but died on the road. His daughter married Sidonius Appollinaris, who wrote an eulogy on his father-in-law, which is still extant.

AVITUS, SEXTUS ALCIMIUS ECDICIUS, was born about the middle of the fifth century, and in 490 was made bishop of Vienne, in Dauphiné. Died 5 Feb., 525. His works are to be found in the Library of the Fathers; and his poems are in Maittaire's collection.

AVOGADRO, PETER, a painter of Brescia, flourished in the earlier part of the eighteenth century.

AVRIGNY, CHARLES JOSEPH LÉILLARD D', a French dramatist and poet, born in the island of Martinique about 1760; died 17 Sept., 1823. Only one of his dramatic pieces was printed. His chief published work is a poem entitled, 'Le Départ de la Peyrouse, ou la Navigation moderne,' 1807. He also contributed to Michaud's work on Mysore, an elegant and vigorous sketch of the origin and progress of British power in India.

AVRIGNY, HYACINTHE ROBILLARD D', a French Jesuit, was born at Caen, 1675, and died at Alençon, 24 April, 1719. His reputation as an historian is deservedly high. His works are, 'Mémoires chronologiques et dogmatiques pour servir à l'Histoire ecclésiastique, depuis 1600, jusqu'en 1716, avec des Reflexions et des Remarques critiques' (anon.), 4 vols. 12mo. [Paris, 1720]; and 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire universelle de l'Europe, depuis 1600, jusqu'en 1716,' 4 vols. 12mo., 1725, 1731; 1734. 12mo., 1757.

AWDELEY, JOHN, an English painter and miscellaneous writer in the sixteenth century.

AWSTER, JOHN, M.D., a physician at Brighton, published 'An Essay on the Effects of Opium considered as a Poison, with the most Rational Method of Cure deduced from Experience,' 8vo., London, 1763; and 'Thoughts on Brightelimestone concerning Sea-bathing, and drinking Sea-water,' 4to., London, 1768.

AWTIE, DANIEL, a noted counterfeiter of the coin of the realm, was hanged at York, 1702.

AXTEL, DANIEL, a native of Bedfordshire, joined the Parliament army, and took an active part at the trial of Charles I. He was convicted of high treason and executed at Tyburn, 19 Oct., 1660.

AYALA, BALTHAZAR, a Dutch jurist, born at Antwerp, about 1548; died at Alost, 16 Aug., 1584.

AYALA, PETER LOPEZ DE, a popular Spanish chronicler, born 1333; died 1407. The most complete edition of his 'History of Castile,' is that of Madrid, 2 vols. 4to., 1779.

AYESHAH, the wife of Mahomet, and daughter of Abubeker. Though she bore the impostor no children, yet he loved her better than his other wives. She opposed the succession of Ali, and levied an army against him. After a severe contest she was taken prisoner, but was dismissed by the conqueror with civility. She died 677.

AYLESBURY, Sir THOMAS, a mathematician, was born in London, 1576, and educated at Westminster school, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1602; M.A. 1705). His mathematical knowledge recommended him to the duke of Buckingham, by whose means he was created a baronet, and made master of the Mint. He encouraged men of science, and the famous Thomas Harriot was one of his dependents. He suffered much during the Rebellion, and on the murder of the king retired to Flanders, where he died in 1657. His daughter married the great earl of Clarendon.

AYLESBURY, THOMAS, a divine, was educated at Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.D., being incorporated at Oxford, 1626. He wrote, among other things, 'Treatise of the Confession of Sin, with the Power of the Keys,' 4to., 1657; 'Distribuz de Aeterno Divini beneplaciti circa creaturas intellectuales decreto, ubi patrum consulta, &c.' 4to., Cambridge, 1629.

AYLESBURY, WILLIAM, son of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, born about 1613, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1631). He was sometime tutor to the young duke of Buckingham. He died at Jamaica, 1657. In conjunction with Sir Charles Cotterel, he translated into English D'Avila's work on the Civil Wars of France.

AYLETT, ROBERT, LL.D., an English poet, was born about 1583, and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A., 1604-5; M.A., 1608; LL.D., 1614. He was admitted an advocate 1 Nov., 1617, then became master in the faculties, and was a master in Chancery from 13 to 24 Car. I. He wrote 'Divine and Moral Speculations,' in verse, 1654; 'Susanna, or the Arraignment of the two Elders,' in verse, 1609, London, 1622.

AYLIFFE, JOHN, LL.D., fellow of New College, Oxford, published 'The Ancient and Present State of the University of Oxford,' 1714; 'Parergon juris Canonici Anglicani; or a Supplement to the Canons and Constitutions of the Church of England,' 1726; 'The Law of Pledges or Pawns, as it was in use among the Romans,' 1733; and 'Pandect of the Roman Civil Law,' 1734. Of Ayliffe's personal history no particulars have been discovered.

AYLMER, JOHN, bishop of London, was born in Norfolk, in or about 1521, and educated at Cambridge (B.A., 1540-1, M.A., 1545). Having accepted the office of domestic chaplain to the marquis of Dorset, he removed to Bradgate, in Leicestershire, where he spent some time in educating the marquis's children. In this capacity he imparted to the unfortunate Lady Jane Grey that piety and learning which gained for her so much admiration. In the reign of queen Mary, being unwilling to receive the crown of martyrdom, he fled to Germany, and resided first at Strasburg and afterwards at Zurich. He also visited the principal universities of Italy and Germany. On Elizabeth's accession he returned home, and was one of the eight Protestants appointed to dispute with the like number of Catholic divines at Westminster. After receiving some minor preferments, and taking the degree of D.D. at Oxford, he was, on the translation of Sandys to York, promoted to the bishopric of London, receiving consecration 24 March, 1576-7. Sandys had always been on friendly terms with Aylmer, had been his fellow-exile, and had been instrumental in obtaining his promotion; but, notwithstanding all this, Aylmer was no sooner made bishop than he entered into a very disreputable squabble with his predecessor about the income of the see, and subsequently commenced an action for dilapidations. He died 3 June, 1594. Bishop Aylmer was a good scholar, master of the three learned languages, had read much history, and was skilled in the civil law. His mind, however, was narrow and bigoted, and the rigour with which he exercised the tyrannical powers of the high commission rendered him an object of the most intense hatred to the Puritans. With regard to the Catholics, he preferred having recourse to fines rather than imprisonment, which, he observed, 'by sparing their housekeeping, greatly enricheth them!' Bishop Aylmer was not a very voluminous author. His principal work was published anonymously in 1559, and is entitled 'An Harborowe for faithfull and trewe Subjects, against the late blowne Blast, concerning the Government of Women.' It is a reply to the famous work of John Knox. It is related of Aylmer, that upon one occasion when Queen Elizabeth was suffering from toothache, but was unwilling to bear the pain of having the tooth extracted, he called the dentist, saying, 'Come, though I am an old man, and have but few teeth to spare, draw me this;' which was done accordingly; and her majesty, seeing him treat the affair so lightly, had hers drawn also.

AYLOFFE, JOHN, a lawyer and political character in the reign of Charles II. He early made himself remarkable by an insult to the government. At a time when the ascendancy of the court of Versailles excited general uneasiness, he contrived to put a wooden shoe, the established type of French tyranny, into the chair of the House of Commons. Being convicted of complicity in the Rye-house plot, he was executed before the gate of the Inner Temple, 30 Oct., 1685.

AYLOFFE, Sir JOSEPH, bart., of Framfield, in Sussex, an eminent antiquary, was born about 1708, and educated at Westminster school. In 1724 he was admitted of Lincoln's-inn, and entered of St. John's College, Oxford. In 1731 he was elected fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian societies. He was secretary to the commissioners for building Westminster-bridge, in 1737; and appointed one of the keepers of the state-papers in the Paper Office. He printed, in 1772, Calendars of the ancient Charters, &c., in the Tower of London, 4to. He also edited Leland's Collectanea in 9 vols. 8vo.; Liber Niger Scaccarii, 2 vols. 8vo.; and Hearne's Curious Discourses, 2 vols. 8vo., besides other works. He died 19 April, 1781. There are many curious papers of his in the Archæologia.

AYLWARD, THEODORE, Mus. D., an English musical composer, was, for some years, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and in 1771, became professor of music at Gresham College. Died 1801.

AYMAR, JACQUES, a peasant of St. Veraie, in Dauphiné, who boasted of discovering treasures, metals, the limits of lands, thefts, murders, and adulteries of both sexes, by means of the 'divining rod;' but being summoned from Lyons to Paris, his imposture was detected at the hotel of Condé, 1693, and he lost his credit. He died in his native village, 1708, aged 46. M. de Vallemont has written a treatise 'De la Baguette Divinatoire,' 12mo.

AYMON, JOHN, a Piedmontese, who entered into orders and attended the bishop of Maurienne into France in the capacity of almoner. He afterwards retired to Holland, and there turned Calvinist; but professing a design of returning to the church of Rome, he obtained a passport for France, by the interest of M. Clement, keeper of the king's library. M. the cardinal de Noailles procured him a pension from his majesty, and placed him in the seminary of foreign missionaries. During this time M. Clement permitted him free access to the king's library; but he had the baseness and ingratitude, in return for all the favours he had received, to steal from thence several books; among them the original of the Synod of Jerusalem, held 1672, which he printed in Holland, with the letters of Cyrillus Lucar, and some other pieces, under the title of 'Monuments authentiques de la Religion des Grecs, et de la Fausseté de plusieurs Confessions de la Foi,' Amsterdam, 1718, 4to. This work has been strongly refuted by M. Renaudot, who proves the ignorance and dishonesty of the author. Aymon also published 'Les Synodes Nationaux des Eglises reformées de France,' printed 1710, 2 vols. 4to.; and a bad translation of the Letters and Memoirs of the nuncio Visconti, 1719, 2 vols. 12mo.; 'Tableau de la Cour de Rome,' 1707, 12mo. The date of Aymon's death is not known.

AYRAUT, PIERRE, criminal judge at Angers, where he was born, 1536. He wrote a treatise 'De la Puissance Paternelle,' on the occasion of his son entering the Society of Jesus without his consent; and other works. Died 1601.

AYRAY, JAMES, an English Franciscan, was chaplain to the Spanish ambassador in London. It is probable that he died in 1705. Some of his sermons were published.

AYRE, JOSEPH, a physician at Hull, where he died 15 Jan., 1860, aged 78. He published several works on cholera and 'Researches into the Nature and Treatment of Dropsy in the Brain, Chest, Abdomen, Ovarium, and Skin,' 8vo., London, 1825, 1833, 1846.

AYRES, JOHN, who called himself colonel, was a famous English penman. In early life he was a footman to Sir William Ashurst, but afterwards turned writing-master and teacher of arithmetic, and opened a school in St. Paul's churchyard. At one time, it is said, he gained £800 a-year by the exercise of his profession. Died 27 July, 1709. His works are 'The Accomplished Clerk,' 1683, 1700; 'Tradesman's Pocket Book, or Apprentice's Companion,' 1687; 'Arithmetic made Easy for the Use and Benefit of Tradesmen,' 1694; 'Tutor to Penmanship,' 1695; 'Alamode Secretary, or Practical Penman,' 'Paul's School Roundhand,' 1700; and 'The Penman's Daily Practice.'

AYRES, PHILIP, an English writer in prose and verse, of whom no biographical particulars can be discovered. He appears to have been living in 1689. His 'Emblems of Love in Four Languages' appeared at London in 1683.

AYRTON, EDMUND, Mus. D., a composer of English cathedral music, was born at Ripon, 1734. In 1780 he succeeded Dr. Nares, as 'master of the children of his majesty's chapels,' and in 1784 took his doctor's degree at Cambridge. Died 1808.

AYSCOUGH, EDWARD, an English historian, was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1590), and afterwards resided at Cotham, in Lincolnshire. He was living 1633. He wrote 'A Historie contayning the Warres, Treaties, Marriages, and other occurents betwene England and Scotland,' 4to., London, 1607.

AYSCOUGH, FRANCIS, D.D., was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (M.A. 1723), and obtained a fellowship. He afterwards became dean of Bristol, but the date of his death is unknown. He published several sermons.

AYSCOUGH, GEORGE EDWARD, only son of Francis Ayscough, D.D., dean of Bristol. He became an officer in the army; but after a few years' service, was compelled by the state of his health to relinquish his profession. He then travelled into Italy, but without deriving any permanent benefit. Died 19 Oct., 1779. He published an edition of the works of George Lord Lyttelton; 'Semiramis, a Tragedy,' 1776; and 'Letters from an Officer in the Guards to his Friend in England, containing some accounts of France and Italy,' 8vo., 1778.

AYSCOUGH, JAMES, a London optician, published a work on Spectacles, which went through several editions. It first appeared in 1750.

AYSCOUGH, SAMUEL, an industrious compiler, was born at Nottingham, where he received his education under Mr. Johnson but his father being reduced in his circumstances, the son was taken from school and became servant to a miller. About 1770 a gentleman who had been his school-fellow, hearing of his distress, sent for him to London, where not long after he obtained employment in the British Museum. Here his abilities began to be respected, and his salary increased till he was appointed assistant-librarian. He also entered into orders, and obtained the curacy of St. Giles-in-the-Fields. In 1790 he was appointed to preach the Fairchild lecture on Whit Tuesday, at Shoreditch Church, before the Royal Society, which he continued to do till 1804. He assisted in the regulation of the records in the Tower; and compiled a catalogue of the MSS. in the British Museum, an index to fifty-six volumes of the 'Gentleman's Magazine'; to the 'Monthly Review'; the 'British Critic'; to Shakespeare, and other works. He was also the author of 'Remarks on the Letters of an American Farmer.' Not long before his death the lord chancellor gave him the living of Cudham, in Kent. He died 30 Oct., 1804.

AYSUCUE, Sir GEORGE, an English admiral, a native of Lincolnshire. In the Dutch war before the Restoration he engaged Van Tromp and De Ruyter, and for his services was knighted by Charles I. In 1648, when the fleet revolted to Prince Rupert, he declared for the parliament, and brought the Lion man-of-war, which he then commanded, into the River Thames. He was the next year appointed admiral of the Irish seas, and had a great hand in reducing the whole island to the obedience of the Republic. In 1651 he forced Barbadoes, and several other British settlements in America, to submit to the Commonwealth. In 1652 he attacked a Dutch fleet of forty sail, under the convoy of four men-of-war; of those he burnt some, took others, and drove the rest on shore. Lilly tells us, in his almanack for 1653, that he, the year before, engaged sixty sail of Dutch men-of-war, with fourteen or fifteen ships only, and made them give way. He protested against Blake's retreat in that desperate action of 29 Nov., 1652, thinking it much more honourable to die by the shot of the enemy. This and his great influence over the seamen are supposed to have been the reasons for his being afterwards dismissed from his command. He was a short time admiral in Sweden, under Charles Gustavus; but returned to England soon after the Restoration. In 1666 he commanded on board the Royal Prince, the largest ship in the navy, and generally esteemed the finest in the world. He engaged the Dutch with his usual intrepidity and success in that memorable battle, which continued four days; but on the third day his ship ran on the Galloper Sand, and he was compelled by his own seamen to strike. He was for some months detained a prisoner in Holland; and during that time was carried from one town to another, and exposed to the people by way of triumph. He never afterwards went to sea. The date of his death is unknown.

AYTON, RICHARD, was born in London, 1780, and educated at the Grammar School, Macclesfield. He was intended for the bar, but found the study of the law so irksome that he abandoned it altogether. He died in London, 1823. Mr. Ayton wrote 'A Voyage round Great Britain, undertaken in the Summer of the year 1813, and commencing from the Land's End, Cornwall, AYTON, or AYTOUN, Sir ROBERT, a Scotch poet. He was second son of Andrew Ayton, proprietor of Kinaldie, in Fifeshire, and was born 1570. According to Dempster he was a writer of Greek and French, as well as Latin and English verses. Ben Jonson made it a boast that Sir Robert Ayton loved him dearly. He was a member of the royal household of King James I., and afterwards became secretary to Henrietta, queen of Charles I. His death took place in Whitehall Palace, March, 1637-8. His poems, with a memoir and notes, were edited by Charles Roger, 'from a MS. in his possession, and other authentic sources,' and published at Edinburgh in 1844.

AZARA, FELIX DE, a Spanish naturalist and traveller, born at Barbunales, in Aragon, 18 May, 1746. He entered the army, and rose to the rank of brigadier-general. In 1781 he was appointed a member of the commission sent to South America to settle the boundaries of the possessions of Spain and Portugal in that country. He returned to Europe 1801, and died in his native country 1811. His 'Natural History of Quadrupeds of Paraguay and the River La Plata' was translated from the Spanish by W. Perceval Hunter, F.G.S., and appeared at Edinburgh; 2 vols., 8vo., 1838, accompanied by a memoir of the author, a physical sketch of the country, and numerous notes.

AZARA, JOSEPH NICHOLAS DE, a Spanish diplomatist and translator, brother of the preceding, born at Barbunales, in Aragon, 28 March, 1731; died at Paris, 26 Jan., 1804. He edited the works of Garcilaso de la Vega and of R. Mengs, and translated Middleton's 'Life of Cicero' into Spanish.

AZEVEDO, IGNATIUS, a Portuguese missionary, was born at Oporto, 1527, and entered the Society of Jesus, 1549. He sailed from Lisbon with thirty-nine companions on a mission to Brazil, 1570. On the voyage, when off the island of Palma, the ship was attacked by Jacques Sourie, a Calvinistic sea-captain in the service of the queen of Navarre, and having been captured after some hard fighting, Azevedo and the other Jesuits were put to death and thrown into the sea, 15 July, 1570. His life has been written by Father de Beauvais.

AZORIUS, JOHN, a Spanish theologian, born at Zamora, 1533. After studying with great reputation at Salamanca, he joined the Society of Jesus, and became professor of divinity at the college of Jesus at Rome. Died 1603. He wrote 'Institutio Moralium, in quibus Universe Quaestiones Conscientiarum recte, aut prave Factorum Pertinentes, breviter Tractantur, tomi tres,' folio, Lyons, 1616-25.

AZPILCUETA, MARTIN DE, a Spanish jurist, born 13 Dec., 1493, became professor of canon law at Salamanca, and died 22 June, 1586. His works were printed at Lyons, 1591, 3 vols., folio.

AZUNI, DOMINIC ALBERT, was born at Sassari, in Sardinia, 3 Aug., 1749, studied law at the university of Turin, and held various important judicial offices in different parts of Italy. Died at Cagliari, 23 Jan., 1827. He wrote in Italian, 'Universal System of the Principles of the Maritime

BAAN, JOHN DE, a Dutch painter, who came to England, and was patronized by Charles II. Born 1633; died 1702. His son James also acquired celebrity as a painter, and died 1700, aged 27.

BAARSDORP, CORNELIUS VAN, physician and chamberlain to the Emperor Charles V. Died at Bruges 24 Nov., 1568. He wrote 'Methodus Universæ artis medicæ.'

BABA-ALL, the first independent Dey of Algiers, was chosen the successor of Ibrahim 1710, and died 1718.

BABER, Sir JOHN, M.D., physician in ordinary to Charles II., by whom he was knighted, 19 March, 1660. Died 1703-4, aged 79.

BABER, ZAHIR EDDIN MOHAMMED, great grandson of Tamerlane, was born 14 Feb., 1483, and in 1494 was proclaimed sovereign of the Mogul empire in western Tartary and Khorassan. Died 28 Dec., 1530. He composed a relation of his conquests and a history of his life. These have been translated into English by J. Leyden and William Erskine.

BABEUF, FRANÇOIS NOEL, commonly called Caius Gracchus Babeuf, was a conspicuous actor in the French Revolution and editor of the journal called the 'Tribun du Peuple.' He was born 1764, and perished on the scaffold, 25 May, 1797.

BABIN, FRANÇOIS, a French divine, professor of theology at Angers, his native place, published the 'Conférences of the Diocese of Angers,' in 18 vols., 1amo. Born 1624; died 1734.

BABINGTON, ANTHONY, a gentleman of De-thick, in Derbyshire, being engaged in a conspiracy, with thirteen others, to release Mary queen of Scots, he and six of his accomplices were brought to trial. They pleaded guilty and were executed, 20 Sept., 1586. This conspiracy was commonly called 'Babington's plot,' he being the principal person concerned.

BABINGTON, BRUTE, D.D., an Irish bishop, is said to have been a native of Cheshire. He was matriculated as a pensioner of Christ's College, Cambridge, 17 June, 1572. He went out B.A. 1575-6, and was elected a fellow 1576. He was incorporated B.A. at Oxford 15 July, 1578, and it is observable that Gervase Babington was incorporated M.A. in that university at the same time. Brute Babington commenced M.A. 1579, was appointed one of the preachers of the university of Cambridge, 1582, and proceeded B.D. 1586. On 18 Sept., 1592, he was collated to a prebend in the church of Lichfield. He became divinity lecturer at Lichfield, and was also rector of Thurcaston, Leicestershire, and Tatenhill, Staffordshire; but I have not ascertained when he obtained those benefices. He is termed D.D., and no doubt took that degree at Cambridge, although no record of it is now to be found. The deanery of Lichfield became vacant in January, 1602-3, by the death of Dr. Boleyn. Brute Babington sought to obtain this preferment. There is a letter from Queen Elizabeth to the president and canons of Lichfield, requiring his election as dean. It is probably a draft only. At any rate, the office was not filled up at Elizabeth's death, and Dr. James Montagu was ultimately appointed. On 6 July, 1603, he wrote to the earl of Shrewsbury, making heavy complaints of Dr. Zachary Babington, the chancellor of the diocese, who had dispossessed him of his divinity lectureship, and obstructed his suit for the deanery. Dr. James Montagu was installed dean ten days afterwards. Brute Babington was elected bishop of Derry before 31 May, 1610, when he was empowered by the king to hold in commendam his prebend residentiary in the church of Lichfield and the rectory of Tatenhill. He was consecrated at St. Peter's, Drogheda, apparently in the same year, and died in 1611, probably on 10 Sept.

BABINGTON, GERVASE, an English prelate, born in Nottinghamshire, probably in 1551. On 25 Oct., 1567, he was matriculated as a sizar of Trinity College, Cambridge. He proceeded B.A. 1571-2, was admitted a minor fellow of his college 28 Sept., 1574, and a major fellow 19 March, 1574-5. In 1575 he commenced M.A., being incorporated in that degree at Oxford 15 July, 1578. He entered the ministry, and in 1580 became one of the university preachers. On the recommendation of the heads of colleges, though at what period does not appear, he was appointed domestic chaplain to Henry earl of Pembroke, and became lecturer at Cardiff, passing part of his time, however, at Wilton, the earl's princely seat, which was at that time the resort of men of learning and genius, amongst whom are specified Dr. Thomas Moufet, Gerard, the herbalist, Philip Massinger, the dramatist, Hugh Sanford, Robert Parker, Abraham Conham, and Henry Parry, successively bishop of Gloucester and Worcester. In 1588 he was installed prebendary of Wellington in the church of Hereford. The following year he was created D.D., and in 1589-90 was collated to the office of treasurer of the church of Llandaff. On 7 Aug., 1591, he was promoted to the see of Llandaff. He was translated to Exeter 4 Feb., 1594-5, and to Worcester 30 Aug., 1597. In 1603 he took a part in the celebrated conference at Hampton Court; and in the following year preached the funeral sermon of the primate Whitgift. Dying 17 May, 1610, he was buried in Worcester Cathedral. As a writer on theology he was highly esteemed by his contemporaries, as is abundantly evidenced by the numerous editions of his works, viz., 'A very fruitful Exposition of the Commandments,' 8vo., London, 1581, 1583, 1586; 'A briefe Conference betwixt mans Fraillitie and Faith,' 8vo., London, 1584, 1590, 1596; 'A profitable Exposition of the Lord's Prayer,' 8vo., London, 1588, 1596; 'A Sermon preached at the Court at Greenwich the fovre and twentieth day of May, 1590,' 8vo., London, 1591; 'A Sermon preached at Pauls Crosse the second Sanday in Mychaelmas tearme last, 1590,' 8vo., London, 1591, edited by Richard Wilkinson. It is reprinted at the end of Sir Richard Hill's 'Apology for Brotherly Love,' 1798; 'Certaine plaine, briefe, and comfortable notes vpon curie chapter of Genesis,' 4to., London, 1592, 1596; 'A Funerall Sermon,' probably on Thomas Lewis; 'Notes vpon the bookes of Exodus and Leuiticus,' 1604; 'Notes vpon the Bookes of Numbers and Deuteronomie;' and 'An Exposition of the Catholike Faith.' His collected works were published 4to., London, 1596; folio, 1615, 1622, 1637.

BABINGTON, JOHN, an English writer, born about 1604, was a great improver of the pyrotechnic art, and also a considerable proficient in practical mathematics. His 'Pyrotechnia, or a Discourse of Artificial Fireworks for Pleasure,' was printed in folio, 1635. To it is subjoined a short treatise of geometry, with the extraction of the square and cubic roots.

BABINGTON, WILLIAM, M.D., lecturer on chemistry at Guy's Hospital, London, published several valuable works on mineralogy. He was born at Portglenone, near Coleraine, in Ireland, July, 1756; and died in London, 29 May, 1833. His life has been written by Dr. R. Bright.

BABO, JOSEPH MARIA, a German dramatist, born at Ebrnbreitstein, 1736; died 5 January, 1822. He wrote 'Otho de Wittelsbach,' and several other tragedies, and edited a journal called the 'Anzora.'

BABRIAS or BABRIUS, a Greek writer, of whose history nothing is known. He composed a number of fables in verse, which form the foundation of the numerous collections that pass under the name of Æsop. One hundred-and-twenty-three of his fables were recently discovered in a MS. in a Greek monastery, and these were edited, with a Latin translation, and a critical commentary, by M. Boissonade, 8vo., Paris, 1844. By some critics Babrias is put on a level with La Fontaine, the best fabulist of modern times.

BABYLAS, St., bishop of Antioch, one of the most celebrated martyrs of the primitive church, refused to admit the emperor Philip into the church, though he declared himself a Christian, because of his crimes, and in particular his murdering the emperor Gordian, his pupil. St. Babylas was put to death by order of Decius, about 251.

BACALAR Y SANNA, VINCENT, marquis of St. Philip, was born in Sardinia, of Spanish parents, and distinguished himself as a general and statesman under Charles II., and Philip V., king of Spain. He died at Madrid, 11 June, 1726. He wrote a 'History of the Hebrew Monarchy' and 'Memoirs of the History of Philip V.'

BACCHINI, BENEDICT, one of the most learned men of his age, born 31 August, 1651, at Borgo San Donino, in Italy. He entered among the Benedictines and preached with great success; but being obliged to quit the pulpit on account of ill-health, withdrew to his study, and presented the public with several works in Latin and Italian. The principal are 'A Literary Journal' and 'De sectorum figuris ac differentia.' He died at Bologna, 1 Sept., 1721.

BACCIO DELLA FORTA, better known as Pa Bartolomeo di San-Marco, was born at Savignano, in Tuscany, 1469. He became a Dominican friar and one of the most eminent painters of his time. He was a pupil of Leonardo da Vinci and Raffaele, and the intimate friend of Jerome Savonarola. He particularly excelled in colouring, and his 'St. Sebastian' is much esteemed. Died 8 Oct., 1517.

BACCIUS, ANDREW, of St. Elpidio, an eminent physician, exercised his profession with great reputation at Rome, 1586, and was physician to Sixtus V. The most scarce and valuable of his works are 'De Theriis'; 'De Naturali Vinorum Historia'; 'De Venenis et Antidotis'; 'De Gemmis ac Lapidibus Pretiosis in Sanct. Script. relatis'; and 'Tabula Simplicium Medicamentorum.'

BACH, JOHN SEBASTIAN, one of the greatest musicians of Germany, was born at Eisenach, 21 March, 1685. In 1703 he became musician to the duke of Weimar, and the remainder of his life was spent in the service of various German princes. He died 30 July, 1750. So great was Sebastian Bach as an organist, that he had but one rival, and this was Handel. His compositions of almost every class are very numerous, but few of them are known out of Germany. He left three sons, all eminent as musicians: viz. William Friedmann (died 1784); Charles Philip Emanuel (died 1788); and John Christian, who composed some operas for the London stage. The latter died in London, 1782.

BACHAUMONT, FRANÇOIS LE COIGNEUX DE, a French lawyer, born at Paris, 1624. He was involved in the intrigues of Cardinal de Retz, but soon retired from the hurry of business to give himself up to a voluptuous idleness. None of his works remain, but the account of his celebrated 'Voyage,' which he made with Chapelie. Died 1702.

BACHAUMONT, LOUIS PETIT DE, a French author, born at Paris. He wrote Secret Memoirs towards a 'History of the Republic of Letters in France,' 36 vols. 12mo., and other works. Died 28 April, 1771.

BACHELIER, JEAN JAQUES, a French painter, director of the Royal manufactory at Sèvres, born 1724; died 1805. Among his works is an 'Historical Memoir of the Origin and Progress of the National Manufactory of Porcelain in France.'

BACHELIER, NICHOLAS, a native of Toulouse, was a famous sculptor in the 16th century, and a pupil of Michael Angelo. He was living in 1566.

BACHOVIVS, REINHART, a German lawyer, born at Cologne, 1544; died 7 Feb., 1614.

BACICCIO, JOHN BAPTIST GAULI, an Italian painter, born at Genoa, 1639; died 1709. He excelled in portraits and scriptural subjects.

BACKER, JAMES, an historical painter, born at Antwerp, 1530; died 1566.

BACKER, JAMES, a Dutch painter, born at Harlingen, 1609. His chief residence was at Antwerp, where he was encouraged as a painter of history and portraits. Died 27 Aug., 1641.

BACKHOUSE, WILLIAM, an astrologer, alchemist, and Rosicrucian philosopher, was born in Berkshire about 1593, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, but left the university without a degree, and settled on his estate at Swallowfield, Berks, where he devoted himself to his favourite studies. Died 30 May, 1662. He translated 'The Pleasant Fountain of Knowledge,' translated from the French of John de la Fontaine, 1644; 'The Complaint of Nature'; and 'The Golden Fleece.' He was also the inventor of the 'Way Wiser.' Elias Ashmole was one of his disciples, and used to call him his father.

BACON. See SOUTHWELL, NATHANIEL.

BACON, ANNA, Lady, the second daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke, was born 1528, and became the wife of Sir Nicholas Bacon, the lord-keeper. Her talents and erudition, associated as they were with irreproachable manners, led to her appointment as governess to Edward VI. At an early age she displayed her capacity and application by translating from the Italian of Bernardine Ochine twenty-five sermons on the abstruse doctrines of predestination and election. This translation was published about 1550. Her two sons, Anthony and Francis, were, through her judicious attention: led into those paths of nature and science which

BAAN, JOHN DE, a Dutch painter, who came to England, and was patronized by Charles II. Born 1633; died 1702. His son James also acquired celebrity as a painter, and died 1700, aged 27.

BAARSDORP, CORNELIUS VAN, physician and chamberlain to the Emperor Charles V. Died at Bruges 24 Nov., 1568. He wrote 'Methodus Universæ artis medicæ.'

BABA-ALI, the first independent Dey of Algiers, was chosen the successor of Ibrahim 1710, and died 1718.

BABER, Sir JOHN, M.D., physician in ordinary to Charles II., by whom he was knighted, 19 March, 1660. Died 1703-4, aged 79.

BABER, ZAHIR EDDIN MOHAMMED, great grandson of Tamerlane, was born 14 Feb., 1483, and in 1494 was proclaimed sovereign of the Mogul empire in western Tartary and Khorassan. Died 28 Dec., 1530. He composed a relation of his conquests and a history of his life. These have been translated into English by J. Leyden and William Erskine.

BABEUF, FRANÇOIS NOEL, commonly called Caius Gracchus Babeuf, was a conspicuous actor in the French Revolution and editor of the journal called the 'Tribun du Peuple.' He was born 1764, and perished on the scaffold, 25 May, 1797.

BABIN, FRANÇOIS, a French divine, professor of theology at Angers, his native place, published: 'Conferences of the Diocese of Angers,' in 18 vols. 1amo. Born 1651; died 1734.

BABINGTON, ANTHONY, a gentleman of high rank, in Derbyshire, being engaged in a conspiracy, with thirteen others, to release the queen of Scots, he and six of his accomplices were brought to trial. They pleaded guilty and were executed, 20 Sept., 1586. This conspiracy is commonly called 'Babington's plot,' he being the principal person concerned.

BABINGTON, BRUTE, D.D., an Irish scholar, said to have been a native of Cheshire, was matriculated as a pensioner of Christ Church, Cambridge, 17 June, 1572. He was elected fellow of the same university, 1575-6, and was elected a fellow of the newly incorporated B.A. at Oxford 1581. It is observable that Gervase Babington incorporated M.A. in that university, 1582. Brute Babington commenced B.D. at Cambridge, 1582, and was elected fellow of the church of Lichfield, 1582. He was elected fellow of the church of Lichfield, and was rector of the same church at Lichfield, and was rector of the same church in Leicestershire, and was rector of the same church. He has not ascertained his birth and death. He is supposed to have taken a degree at Cambridge, and was afterwards called to the bar at the Inner Temple, where he came vacant, and was called to the bar at the Inner Temple.  acquired by the exhibition of his statue of Mars induced Dr. Markham, afterwards archbishop of York, to employ him in making a bust of the king for the hall of Christ Church, Oxford. While modelling this bust, the king asked him whether he had ever been out of the kingdom, and on being answered in the negative, 'I am glad of it,' said his majesty; 'you will be the greater honour to it.' His execution of this bust gained him the royal patronage, and he was employed in making another for the university of Göttingen. In 1777 he was engaged to prepare the model of a monument to be erected in Guy's Hospital to the memory of the founder, which occasioned him to be employed in the execution of Lord Chatham's monument in Guildhall. The year following he became a royal academician, and completed a beautiful monument to the memory of Mrs. Drap-per, in Bristol Cathedral. His other works are too numerous to be specified. It must suffice to mention two groups for the top of Somerset House; a statue of Judge Blackstone, for All Souls' College, Oxford; another of Henry VI., for Eton College;
 the monument of the earl of Chatham, in Westminster Abbey; and the monuments of Dr. Johnson and William Howard, in St. Paul's. Died 7 Aug., 1799. He wrote the article 'Sculpture' in Rees's Cyclopædia.

BACON, JOHN, F.S.A., an antiquary, was born in or about 1738, and very early in life was admitted a junior clerk to the deputy remembrancer of the First Fruits Office, where he was also deputy receiver and deputy comptroller. In 1774 he was elected F.S.A. He became senior clerk in the Office of First Fruits, 1778, and in 1782 was appointed receiver. He was also treasurer of the Society of the Sons of the Clergy. His death took place at Friern Barnet, Middlesex, 26 Feb., 1816.
 He republished, with great additions, Mr. Ecton's
 'Thesaurus,' under the title of 'Liber Regis; vel Thesaurus Rerum Ecclesiasticarum. With an Appendix containing proper Directions and Precedents relating to Presentations, Institutions, Inductions, Dispensations, &c.,' 1786.

BACON, MONTAGU, second son of Nicholas
 Bacon, Esq., of Shrubland Hall, Suffolk, was born at Coddendam, in that county, 1688, and having taken orders, obtained the rectory of Newbold Ver-don, Leicestershire. Died 1749. Mr. Bacon wrote
 'A Dissertation on Burlesque Poetry,' 3rd edition,
 8vo., 1752; and 'Notes on Hudibras.'

BACON, SIR NATHANIEL, K.B., an excellent painter, was born in or about 1547, being son of the lord-keeper, and half-brother of the illustrious Francis Bacon. He travelled into Italy, where he studied painting, though his manner and colouring approach nearer to the style of the Flemish school.
 Sir Nathaniel was living in the year 1615.

BACON, SIR NICHOLAS, lord-keeper of the great seal, is said to have been born at Chislehurst, Kent, 1509. His father was sheep-reeve to the abbey of Bury St. Edmund's, and young Nicholas was probably educated in the school attached to the monastery, as he mentions his intimacy with Edmund Rougham, one of the monks who was noted for his wonderful proficiency in the art of memory.
 Subsequently he was admitted of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (B.A. 1526-7), and thence proceeded to Paris. On his return to England he studied the law at Gray's Inn, and was called to the bar 1533. In 1537 he was appointed solicitor subsequently rendered them the ornaments of their age and country. Lady Bacon survived her husband many years, dying at Gorhambury, Hertfordshire, in 1600.

BACON, ANTHONY, fourth son of Nicholas Bacon, the lord-keeper, and brother of the illustrious Francis Bacon, was born 1558, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He suffered from lameness, and throughout life his health was indifferent. From 1579 till Feb. 1591-2, he travelled on the continent. Immediately after his return to England he attached himself to the earl of Essex, who employed him in conducting a very extensive correspondence for the purpose of procuring trustworthy information from all parts. He also sat in parliament, first for Wallingford, and afterwards for the city of Oxford. His death took place in the spring of 1601. Anthony Bacon's correspondence and papers in the Lambeth Library form the basis of Dr. Thomas Birch's 'Memoirs of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth.' Sixteen volumes of transcripts and extracts from Mr. Bacon's papers are in the British Museum.

BACON, FRANCIS, baron of Verulam, viscount St. Albans, and lord chancellor of England, one of the greatest of modern philosophers, was born at York House, in the Strand, London, 22 Jan., 1560-61, being son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seal, by his wife Anne, daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke. From his infancy he gave signs of superior ability, and his wit and talents were on several occasions noticed by Queen Elizabeth, who used to call him her 'young lord-keeper.' He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was entered 10 June, 1573, his tutor being Dr. John Whitgift, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury. It was then the custom in England to send to foreign countries, and particularly to France, young gentlemen who were destined for the public service. Accordingly, at the age of sixteen, Bacon went to Paris in the suite of Sir Amias Pawlett, ambassador to the French king. He was soon sent back to England on business which required secrecy and despatch. Having performed this duty, he returned to France, and travelled through several provinces in order to study the customs and laws of the country. At the age of nineteen he composed a treatise 'On the State of Europe,' which shows the precocious maturity of his intellect. On the death of his father in 1579 he returned to England, and applied himself to the study of the common law in Gray's Inn with such assiduity and success that at the age of twenty-eight he was appointed counsellor extraordinary to queen Elizabeth. He also distinguished himself in the House of Commons, which he entered in 1585 as member for Melcombe. In the parliament of 1586 he sat for Taunton; in that of 1588 for Liverpool; and in 1592-3 he was elected for Middlesex. In consequence of his attachment to the earl of Essex, who was at enmity with Cecil, Bacon unfortunately lost those advantages at court which he had a right to expect. The earl, however, fully appreciated his attachment, and gave him an estate of considerable value. Bacon subsequently took part in the prosecution of his friend and benefactor, for which he has been severely censured by many writers, though his conduct has recently been most ably vindicated by Mr. Hepworth Dixon, in his admirable 'Personal History of Lord Bacon.' On the accession of James I. his prospects began to brighten, and he obtained the honour of knighthood, which was the prelude to more substantial marks of distinction. In 1604 he was appointed one of the king's counsel, with a salary of £40 a year, and a pension of £60 for life. The next year he published the introduction to his great work, under the title of 'The Advancement and Proficiency of Learning.' In 1607 he was constituted solicitor-general. About this time he married Alice, daughter of Benedict Barnham, a rich alderman of London. In 1611 he was appointed judge of the Marshalsea court, and about the same time obtained the place of registrar of the Star Chamber, the reversion of which had been granted to him twenty years before. In 1613 he was made attorney-general, and in 1616 was sworn of the privy council. At this time he contracted a close intimacy with the favourite George Villiers, to whom he addressed an admirable letter of advice, which is extant among his works. In 1616-17 he was raised to the dignity of lord-keeper of the great seal, and on 4 Jan., 1618-19, was constituted lord high chancellor of Great Britain, receiving also a patent of nobility, by the title of baron of Verulam, which he exchanged in the year following for that of viscount St. Albans. In 1620 he published the most elaborate of all his works, the 'Novum Organum Scientiarum,' the design of which is to lay down a more perfect method than any previously known of exercising the faculty of reason. This work he wrote twelve times over, making it a rule to revise and correct it once a year, till he brought it into the state in which it was published in 1620. In the year following he was accused of bribery and corruption in his high office, and, being found guilty, was fined £40,000, and was sentenced to be confined in the Tower during the king's pleasure, and rendered incapable of ever again holding any office in the State. All the circumstances relating to this matter are fully related in the work already referred to of Mr. Hepworth Dixon, who states that, 'After the most rigorous and vindictive scrutiny into his official acts, and into the official acts of his servants, not a single fee or remembrance traced to the chancellor can, by any fair construction, be called a bribe. Not one appears to have been given on a promise; not one appears to have been given in secret; not one is alleged to have corrupted justice.' Bacon was soon restored to liberty, his fine was remitted, and he was summoned to the first parliament of king Charles I. The remainder of his life he devoted to his favourite studies. He died at the earl of Arundel's house, at Highgate, 9 April, 1626, and was buried in St. Michael's church, at St. Albans. In his will he says, 'My name and memory I leave to foreign nations, and to my own countrymen, after some time be passed over.' Lord Bacon left no children. Early in life Bacon was struck with the absurdity of the method then in vogue of teaching philosophy in the public schools, and conceived the bold project of entirely remodelling the system of the sciences. All his studies and thoughts were directed to the attainment of this object. He reviewed all the branches of human knowledge, observing their connection one with another, and began by classifying them according to the faculties of the human mind to which they respectively belonged. Hence arose the division into three classes, viz., of memory, of reason, and of imagination. He has been called the father of experimental philosophy; and he was, indeed, the first who showed that in every branch of positive science there was only one means of getting at the truth and of being assured that it was really the truth; namely, by observing nature, not only in the phenomena which she presents to our view, but also in those which are discoverable by means of experiment. It is not sufficient to have eyes for observing nature; an art is necessary to direct the observations; and another art, more difficult still, to interrogate nature. To attain this double end Bacon invented methods, which he applied to every branch of science. This is the object of the vast plan which he called 'the grand instauration of the sciences'—a plan which was never entirely executed, though a good idea of it is given in the two works entitled, 'De Dignitate et Augmentis Scientiarum' and 'Novum Organum Scientiarum.' Lord Macaulay remarks: 'It is by the Essays that Bacon is best known to the multitude. The "Novum Organum" and the "De Augmentis" are much talked of, but little read. They have produced, indeed, a vast effect on the opinions of mankind; but they have produced it through the operation of intermediate agents. They have moved the intellects which have moved the world. It is in the Essays alone that the mind of Bacon is brought into immediate contact with the minds of ordinary readers. There he opens an exoteric school, and talks to plain men in language which everybody understands, about things in which everybody is interested. He has thus enabled those who must otherwise have taken his merits on trust to judge for themselves; and the great body of readers have, during several generations, acknowledged that the man who has treated with such consummate ability questions with which they are familiar, may well be supposed to deserve all the praise bestowed on him by those who have seen him in his inner school.' An edition of Lord Bacon's works was published by Basil Montagu, 16 vols. 8vo., 1825-34; but this has been superseded by the edition of J. Spedding, R. L. Ellis, and D. D. Heath, the first volume of which appeared in 1857. There is an excellent analysis of all Bacon's writings, by Mr. Craik, in three small volumes.

BACON, JOHN. See BACONTHORPE.

BACON, JOHN, an English sculptor, was born in Southwark, 24 Nov., 1740. In 1755 he was bound apprentice to a manufacturer of china, in Lambeth, where he was employed in painting on porcelain. Here he so greatly improved himself in modelling shepherds, shepherdesses, and such small pieces, that in less than two years he formed all the models for the manufactory. While here he had an opportunity of observing the models of different sculptors, which were sent to the pottery to be burnt, and from the sight of them he conceived a strong inclination for his future profession. He applied himself to this pursuit with unremitting diligence, and his progress was so rapid that he obtained nine premiums from the Society for the Encouragement of the Arts. During his apprenticeship he formed a design, which he afterwards perfected, of making statues in artificial stone. About 1763 he began to work in marble; and having seen that operation performed, he invented an instrument for transferring the form of the model to the marble (technically called getting out the points), which instrument has since been adopted by other sculptors. In 1769 he obtained from the Royal Academy the first gold medal given by that society, and the year following he was chosen an associate. The reputation acquired by the exhibition of his statue of Mars induced Dr. Markham, afterwards archbishop of York, to employ him in making a bust of the king for the hall of Christ Church, Oxford. to the court of Augmentations. About 1540, in conjunction with Thomas Denton and Robert Cary, he drew up a scheme for establishing, out of the revenues of the dissolved monasteries, a seminary for the education of statesmen; but the project proved abortive, as the money which should have been expended upon it was lavished on the king's pleasures and in wars. He received several valuable grants of abbey lands from the king, and, in 1546, the appointment of attorney of the court of Wards and Liveries. On the accession of Mary he quietly conformed to the Catholic religion, and lived in retirement; but when queen Elizabeth came to the throne he emerged from privacy, and on 22 Dec., 1558, received the great seal, with the title of lord-keeper. He was also made a knight, and sworn of the privy council. By letters patent, dated 14 April, 1559, the queen declared that he had the full powers of a chancellor, and expressly ratified all his acts since the great seal had been delivered to him. Her majesty had a great esteem for him, and visited him on several occasions. It is said that she one day remarked, 'My lord, what a little house you have gotten!' To which he replied, 'Madam, my house is well, but it is you that have made me too great for my house.' Towards the close of 1563, however, he fell into disgrace, in consequence of having written a pamphlet strongly in favour of the claim of the house of Suffolk to the crown. He was removed from the privy council, and enjoined to meddle with no business whatever except that of the court of chancery. Owing to the intercession of his friends, he was restored to the royal favour, and readmitted to the privy council. His death occurred at his London residence, York House, near Charing Cross, 20 Feb., 1578-9, and he was buried in St. Paul's cathedral. He was twice married, and had several children, among them the great philosopher, Francis Bacon. A long list of his works, which are for the most part in MS., is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' Lord Campbell remarks: 'As a judge, the lord-keeper gave the highest satisfaction; and it was universally acknowledged that since the time of Sir Thomas More justice had never been so well administered in the court of chancery. Thoroughly imbued with the common law, he soon became familiar with the comparatively simple system of equitable jurisprudence then established. . . . On the bench he was patient and courteous, and it was remarked that the parties against whom he decided, if not convinced by his reasons, never doubted his honesty, and admitted that they had had a fair hearing. More fortunate in this respect than his greater son, he was never once accused or suspected of bribery or corruption, either by his contemporaries or by posterity.'

BACON, PHANUEL, D.D., an English divine, was educated at Magdalene College, Oxford, and became rector of Balden, Oxfordshire, and vicar of Bramber in Sussex. He died to Jan., 1783, ætat. 83. He was author of some trifling dramatic pieces and a poem called 'The Artificial Kite.'

BACON, RICHARD MACKENZIE, an English journalist and writer on music, was born in or about 1775. For some time he was editor of the 'Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review,' and subsequently became proprietor and editor of the 'Norwich Mercury.' In 1813 he and Bryan Donkin obtained a patent for certain improvements in the implements or apparatus employed in printing, whether from types, from blocks, or from plates. In the 'Norwich Mercury' of 30 Nov., 1814, is a prospectus of Mr. Bacon's printing machine, with an account of the progress it had then made. He died at Cossey, near Norwich, 27 Nov., 1844. His works are, 'Independent Remarks on the Queen's Case,' 8vo., Norwich, 1820; 'Reply to Mr. Cobbett,' 8vo., Norwich, 1822; 'Elements of Vocal Science; being a philosophical inquiry into some of the principles of singing,' 8vo., London, 1824; 'A Letter to Edward Lord Suffield, upon the Distress of the Labourers, and its remedy,' 8vo., London and Norwich, 1831; and 'A Memoir of the Life of Edward, third Baron Suffield,' 4to., Norwich, 1838. Mr. Chappel says: 'His memory was so stored with traditional songs, learnt in boyhood, that, having accepted a challenge at the tea-table to sing a song upon any subject a lady would mention, I have heard him sing verse after verse upon teaspoons and other such themes, proposed as the most unlikely for songs to have been written upon.' It was principally owing to his exertions that the Norwich Musical Festival was established.

BACON, ROBERT, a mariner, of Cromer, in Norfolk, discovered Iceland, and is said to have captured, in the reign of Henry IV., the prince of Scotland, James Stuart, sailing to France for education.

BACON, ROBERT, an English Dominican friar, was born about 1168, and became divine lecturer at Oxford. In 1233 he was appointed treasurer of Salisbury. Died 1248. He wrote the Life of St. Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury, and other works.

BACON, ROGER, an English philosopher, was born at Ilchester, Somersetshire, 1214, and educated at Oxford, under the auspices of Robert Grossetete, bishop of Lincoln, who was through life his great patron. Bacon was also encouraged and instructed in learning by Edmund Rich, archbishop of Canterbury, William Shirwood, chancellor of Lincoln, and an excellent mathematician, and Richard Fishacre, an able professor at Oxford and Paris. The last-mentioned university being at that time greatly frequented by students, on account of the learned lectures there delivered, Bacon, after laying in a good store of knowledge at home, went thither, and studied with so much diligence and success as to obtain the degree of D.D. On quitting France he retired to Oxford, and about the same time, A.D. 1240, entered into the order of St. Francis. He now devoted himself principally to chemistry, natural philosophy, and mathematics, and so ardent was he in making experiments as to spend, in the course of twenty years, £2000, entirely on these pursuits, which, considering the time he lived in, was a prodigious sum. The discoveries he made, and the celebrity he obtained, excited the envy and malice of the monks. It was reported and believed that he had recourse to the agency of evil spirits, and that all his knowledge consisted in his profound skill as a magician. In consequence of this he was forbidden to read lectures in the university, and was even confined to his cell without being allowed to see his friends, or to have a proper supply of food. The conduct of the monks seems only to have extended his reputation; for while he was under persecution, he received a letter from the cardinal bishop of Sabina, the pope's legate in England, requesting a copy of his works, which Bacon at first declined to give; but when that prelate was raised to the papal chair by the name of Clement IV. Bacon collected his writings into a volume entitled 'Opus Majus,' or the Greater Work, and sent them to his Holiness, who promised him his protection. This tranquillity, however, did not long continue, for on the death of that pope he was exposed to new and more severe persecutions. His works were prohibited, and he was sentenced to close imprisonment, in which he remained above ten years. On being released he retired to Oxford, where he died, 11 June, 1292. The uncommon attainments of Bacon obtained for him, according to the custom of that age, the appellation of 'the Wonderful Doctor,' and it must be allowed that no man ever deserved it better. Bishop Bale mentions above eighty treatises written by this great man, of which he had himself seen near forty; and Doctor Jebb, the learned editor of his 'Opus Majus,' in 1 vol., folio, 1733, classifies his writings under these heads: grammar, mathematics, physics, optics, geography, astronomy, chronology, chemistry, magic, medicine, logic, metaphysics, ethics, theology, philology, and miscellanies. It must, however, be confessed that one and the same work by him has, in other copies, borne another title. His chemical tracts are in the Thesaurus Chemicus, printed in 8vo., at Frankfurt, 1630. His treatise on the 'Means of Avoiding the Infirmities of Old Age,' was first printed at Oxford, in 1590; and an English translation of it, by Dr. Browne, appeared in 1683. Several pieces by him yet remain in MS., particularly one on chronology, entitled 'Computus Regeri Baconis'; another, called 'Liber Naturalium,' and the 'Compendium of Theology,' are in the King's Library. Bacon was a considerable mathematician, and from some of his pieces in MS., it appears that he had a knowledge of the nature of convex and concave glasses; and some consider him as the inventor of the telescope. He also gives descriptions which correspond with the camera obscura and burning glass. His acquaintance with astronomy and geography was likewise very extensive and accurate. He detected the errors in the calendar, and suggested that reformation of it which was long afterwards adopted by Gregory XIII. In chemistry he appears to have been misled by the delusion which imposed upon other great men in more enlightened times than the one he lived in, that it was possible to transmute metals into gold. Yet this delusion has been the friend of experimental science, and Bacon, in pursuing it, discovered many secrets which modern philosophers have arrogated to themselves. In particular, he gives such a description of a certain composition and its powerful effects, as proves he was not unacquainted with gunpowder.

BACONTHORPE, or BACON, JOHN, an English Carmelite, of the thirteenth century, was born at Baconthorpe, Norfolk. He was called The Resolute Doctor, and wrote Commentaries on the Four Books of Sentences; a Compendium of the Law of Christ, &c. He died in London, 1346.

BADALOCCHIO, or ROSA, SISTO, an Italian painter and engraver, born at Parma, 1581; died at Rome, 1647.

BADCOCK, JOHN, a sporting writer, the rival of Pierce Egan, published several books on stable economy under the name of Hinds; also the following works under the pseudonym of Jon. Bee: 'Dictionary of the Turf, the Ring, the Chase, the

BADIUS.

Pit, the Bon Ton, and the Varieties of Life, forming the completest and most amusing Lexicon Balatronicum hitherto offered to the notice of the Sporting World,' 12mo., London, 1823; 'Sportsman's Slang, a New Dictionary of Terms used in the affairs of the Turf, the Ring, the Chase, and the Cockpit,' 1825; and 'Living Picture of London for 1828, and Stranger's Guide through the Streets of the Metropolis; showing the Frauds, the Arts, Snares, and Wiles of all descriptions of Rogues that everywhere abound,' 12mo., London, 1828.

BADCOCK, SAMUEL, an English divine, born at South Moulton, Devonshire, 23 Feb., 1747. He was educated among the dissenters at St. Mary Ottery in that county, after which he officiated at a congregation at Winbourn, Dorsetshire, from whence he removed to Barnstaple, in 1769, where he cultivated polite literature, and shook off the prejudices of Calvinism. In consequence of a disagreement between him and his congregation, he returned to his native place, where he officiated to the dissenters till 1787, when he was ordained by the bishop of Exeter. After serving a curacy in Devonshire for a little time he went to Bath, and became assistant at the octagon chapel. He died in London, 19 May, 1788. Mr. Badcock is best known by his critiques in the 'Monthly Review,' on Madan's 'Thelyphora,' Dr. Priestley's 'History of the Corruptions of Christianity,' &c. and by the considerable share he had in Dr. White's Bampton Lectures. He also collected some materials for a history of his native county. Mr. Badcock was a man of great 'liveliness, taste, and learning.

BADDELEY, ROBERT, a celebrated actor of low comedy at Drury Lane Theatre, died 30 Nov., 1794. He bequeathed to the theatrical fund his cottage at Hampton, upon trust that they should elect to reside in it such four of the pensioners of the society as might not object to live sociably together.

BADDELEY, SOPHIA, an English actress, was born in or about 1744, being daughter of Mr. Snow, serjeant-trumpeter to King George II. She made her debut at Drury Lane, 1764, in the character of Ophelia, and her performance was pronounced inimitable. Garrick always gave the most ample testimony to her merits. As a singer she was unrivalled wherever pathetic expression was necessary, and in the softer parts of both comedy and tragedy she had few, if any, superiors. She married Robert Baddeley, the subject of the preceding memoir, but soon left her husband, and thenceforward led a life of great depravity. She died at Edinburgh, 1 July, 1786.

BADESSA, or ABBATISSA, PAUL, a native of Messina, published in 1564, a metrical translation of five books of Homer's Iliad.

BADIA, THOMAS, a cardinal, born at Modena about 1483; died at Rome, 6 Dec., 1547. Paul III. sent him to the diet of Worms, of which he gives an account in a letter addressed to Cardinal Contarini.

BADIA-Y-LEBLICH, DOMINIC, a Spanish traveller, better known by the pseudonym of Ali-Bey, was born in Biscay, 1766, and died 30 Aug., 1818. After wandering through several eastern countries, he went to Paris in 1814, and there published an account of his travels.

BADIUS, CONRAD, was born at Paris, about 1510, and like his father, Jodocus Badius, became famous as a printer and publisher. He died at Geneva, about 1568.

BADIUS, JOSSE, or JODOCUS, one of the most celebrated printers of Paris, and professor of Greek at Lyons and Paris. He was surnamed Ascensius, because he was a native of Asche, in the territory of Brussels. Born 1462; died 1535.

BADOARO, FREDERICK, a Venetian nobleman, was twice sent by the republic as ambassador to Charles V. and Philip II. He wrote some historical works and harangues in Latin and Italian. Born 1518; died 1595.

BADOARO, JAMES, a dramatic poet of Venice, lived in the seventeenth century.

BADOARO, LAURO, an Italian poet, was born about 1546. He joined the congregation of the Brethren of the Cross, and ultimately became bishop of Albe.

BADOARO, PETER, a celebrated advocate of Venice, who died 1591, wrote 'Orazioni civili,' published in 1593.

BADOU, JEAN BAPTISTE, a pious priest of the congregation of the Christian Doctrine, was born at Toulouse, and died 13 Sept., 1727. He composed 'Spiritual Exercises.'

BADUEL, CLAUDE, a French author, was rector of the college of Nîmes, his native place, which he quitted for Geneva, where he became a Calvinist minister. Died 1561. He wrote 'De ratione vitæ studiosæ ac litteratæ in matrimonio collocandæ ac degendæ,' 1544.

BARLI, FRANCIS, a poet and miscellaneous writer, born at Milazzo, in Sicily, 15 Dec., 1639; died about 1710. He composed plays, odes, sonnets, and an historical account of Messina.

BAERT, BARON ALEXANDRE BALTHAZAR FRANÇOIS DE PAULE DE, a French writer, born at Dunkirk, about 1750. In early life he visited Russia and England, remaining in the latter country for a considerable time. In 1792, he proceeded to the United States, where he completed his great work on England and her colonies. After his return to France he was nominated a member of the chamber of deputies. He died at Paris, 23 March, 1825. His works are 'Mémoires historiques et géographiques sur les Pays situés entre la mer Noire et la mer Caspienne,' 1799; and 'Tableau de la Grande-Bretagne, de l'Irlande, et des Possessions Anglaises dans les quatre Parties du Monde,' 4 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1800.

BAFFIN, WILLIAM, an adventurous English navigator, was born about 1584, and was killed at the siege of Kismis, a small place near Ormuz, in May, 1622. He accompanied Hudson, Thomas Button, Robert Bylot, and captain Gibbins in the voyages which were undertaken for the purpose of discovering a passage by the north of America into the seas of Tartary and China. His name has been given by geographers to a vast bay on the north-east coast of America, between that continent and Greenland. His journals, printed in Purchas's 'Pilgrims' contain useful remarks respecting the declension of the magnetic needle and other subjects.

BAGARD, CHARLES, a French medical writer, born 2 Jan., 1696, at Nancy, where he died 7 Dec., 1772. He was first physician to Stanislaus, king of Poland, and duke of Lorraine, who decorated him with the order of St. Michael.

BAGE, ROBERT, a novelist, was born 29 Feb., 1728, at Darley, a parish in the hamlet of St. Alkmond's, Derby, where his father was employed in a paper-mill. He made rapid progress at school and continued to cultivate his mind after he became settled in the business of paper-making. He acquired a knowledge of the French and Italian languages, and even of the more abstruse branches of mathematics. A loss sustained in business is said to have first induced him to take up the pen, not as a source of emolument, but to divert his mind from pining reflections. With this view he wrote, and in 1781 published, 'Mount Heneth,' a novel, which became justly popular. This was followed by other productions of the same kind; 'Barham Downs,' the 'Fair Syrian,' and 'James Wallace,' which were all superior to the common run of novels. Mr. Bage died at Tamworth, 1 Sept., 1801.

BAGFORD, JOHN, an antiquarian collector, born at London, Oct., 1675. He was bred a shoemaker, but afterwards became a bookseller, and a great collector of curiosities. He was employed by Moore, bishop of Norwich, and the earl of Oxford, to enrich their libraries with scarce books and MSS. For his services the bishop placed him in the Charterhouse. Died 15 May, 1716. His collections respecting the history of typography are preserved among the Harleian MSS., and there are two volumes by him in the University Library at Cambridge (Dd. x. 56, 57). The title of one of the latter will give a fair idea of the extent of Bagford's orthographical acquirements. It is as follows: 'The Hihstory of Tipography, its Originall and prograse from atthenick records, manuscripts, and printed bookes, collected with grate paynes, by Jo. Bagford.'

BAGGER, JOHN, bishop of Copenhagen, was born at Lunden, 1646, and died 1693. He revised the Danish liturgy and published some discourses in Latin and Danish. In 1684, he was consulted by the government as to whether the interests of the Lutheran religion would suffer if the Calvinists, who had been expelled from France by Louis XIV., were permitted to enter Denmark. His reply was that their presence would expose the Lutherans to eternal damnation. He thus kept out of the country between 30,000 and 40,000 artisans and learned men, who would have enriched it by their industry and their talents.

BAGGERLEY, captain HUMPHREY, was in the service of James, the seventh earl of Derby. He was employed in the embarkation of that nobleman in the Isle of Man, 12 Aug., 1651, and was afterwards present at his execution, of which he wrote an account, printed by Draper, in his 'House of Stanley.' In 1654, captain Baggerley was imprisoned at London for taking part in what was called Gerard's conspiracy. He subsequently acted as steward to William, ninth earl of Derby.

BAGGESEN, JENS, a popular Danish poet, was born at Korsøer, 15 Feb., 1764, and died at Hamburg, 3 Oct., 1826.

BAGGS, CHARLES MICHAEL, an English Catholic prelate, was born in the county of Meath, 21 May, 1806. His father was a Protestant barrister, and destined his son for the legal profession, but a sad reverse of fortune, and his sudden death in 1820, induced Mrs. Baggs to withdraw her child from the Protestant school, and to place him first at Sedgley park, and afterwards at St. Edmund's College, near Ware. In the spring of 1825, his superiors sent him to the English college at Rome, of which he became president in 1840. Pope Gregory XVI. treated Dr. Baggs with marked dis-fiction; he made him his honorary chamberlain, giving him the privilege of introducing to an audience all the British gentry. On the death of Dr. Baines, he was appointed vicar apostolic of the western district of England, being consecrated at Rome 28 Jan., 1844, by the title of bishop of Pella. He died at Prior Park, near Bath, 16 Oct., 1845. The works of Dr. Bagges are, 'A Letter addressed to the Rev. R. Burgess, B.D., the Protestant chaplain at Rome, 1836;' 'A Discourse on the Supremacy of the Roman Pontiffs,' delivered in the church of Gesù Maria, in the Corso, Rome, 7 Feb., 1836; 'The Papal Chapel, described and illustrated from History and Antiquity, 1839;' 'The Ceremonies of Holy Week at the Vatican, and St. John Lateran's; with an account of the Armenian Mass at Rome, on Holy Saturday, and the Ceremonies of the Holy Week at Jerusalem,' Rome, 1839; 'The Pontifical Mass, sung at St. Peter's Church on Easter Sunday, on the Festival of St. Peter and Paul, and Christmas-day; with a dissertation on Ecclesiastical Vestments,' Rome, 1840; 'Funeral Oration, delivered at the Solemn Obsequies of the Lady Guendoline Talbot, Princess Borghese, in St. Charles' Church, in the Corso, 23 Dec., 1841;' 'Dissertazione sul sistema Teologico degli Anglicani detti Puseyisti' in 'Annali delle Scienze Religiose, xv. No. 43;' and 'Dissertazione sullo Stato Odierno della Chiesa Anglicana,' in the same work, xvii. No. 49.

BAGLIONE, JOHN, a painter and writer, born at Rome about 1573, was employed in the pontificate of Sixtus V. in decorating the Vatican library, and was afterwards employed by the same pontiff on several important works. Most of his paintings are in fresco. He composed the 'Lives of the Painters, Sculptors, and Architects, from 1572 to 1642.'

BAGLIVI, GEORGE, an eminent physician, born at Ragusa 1669, became professor of anatomy at Rome, where he died in March, 1707. His works have passed through several editions.

BAGNOLI, JULIUS CÆSAR, of Bagnacavallo, an Italian poet, who attached himself to Michael Peretti, prince of Venafro, by whom he was loaded with riches and honours. He died about 1600. The tragedy of the 'Argonais' and the 'Judgment of Paris,' are his most esteemed works.

BAGOT, LEWIS, an eminent bishop, son of Sir Walter Bagot, bart., and brother to the first Lord Bagot, was born 1 Jan. 1740. He was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. In 1777 he was installed dean of Christ Church. He was promoted to the see of Bristol, 1782, translated to Norwich the year following, and thence to St. Asaph in 1790. Died 4 June, 1802. He was the author of a Letter to Dr. Bell on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; a volume of Sermons on the Prophecies, preached at Bishop Warburton's lecture in Lincoln's Inn Chapel; and some single discourses.

BAGOT, WILLIAM, second Lord BAGOT, died 12 Feb., 1856. He compiled 'Memorials of the Bagot Family,' 4to., Blithfield, 1824.

BAGRATON, PETER, a famous Russian prince and general, termed 'the right hand of Suwarow,' was born 1765; and died at Sima, 24 Sept., 1812.

BAGSHAW, EDWARD, a gentleman of a Derbyshire family, was born in London and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford. Subsequently he was called to the bar and became a member of parliament. Eventually he espoused the cause of the king, which led to his being imprisoned by the parliamentarians. Died 1662. Among his works are 'The Life and Death of Mr. Robert Bolton,' 4to., Lond., 1633; and 'Treatise maintaining the Doctrine, Liturgy, and Discipline of the Church of England.'

BAGSHAW, EDWARD, son of the preceding, a nonconformist divine, was student of Christ Church, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He was for some time assistant to Dr. Busby in Westminster School, and was ordained by Dr. Brownrigg, bishop of Exeter. He was a man of abilities, but of quick passions, and was sent to Newgate for refusing to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. He died at Westminster 28 Dec., 1671. He wrote a number of controversial works against Baxter, L'Estrange, and others.

BAGSHAW, HENRY, D.D., son of Edward Bagshaw, M.P., was born at Broughton, 1632, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1657). He was chaplain to Sir Richard Fanshawe, ambassador in Spain and Portugal, and on his return to England, held in succession several profitable church preferments. He died at Houghton-le-Spring, 30 Dec., 1709. He published 'Diatribæ, or Discourses upon Select Texts, against Papists and Socinians,' 1680, and some single sermons.

BAGSHAW, WILLIAM, an English divine, was born at Litton, in the parish of Tidswell, 17 Jan., 1627-8, and educated in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, after which he obtained the living of Glessop, Derbyshire, which he held till 1662, when he was ejected for nonconformity. He then officiated to a congregation of dissenters, and died 1 April, 1702. He wrote some good books on practical divinity. Among these is a work, partly biographical, entitled 'De Spiritualibus Peccis, or notes concerning the work of God, and some that have been workers together with God, in the High Peak' (of Derbyshire), 1702.

BAGSTER, SAMUEL, a London printer, and author of a Treatise on Bees; died 1835.

BAGWELL, WILLIAM, an English author, born about 1593, wrote 'The Mystery of Astronomy made easy to the meanest Capacity,' 8vo., 1655, and 'Wit's Extraction, conveyed to the Ingenious in Riddles, Observations, and Morals, composed by W. B., Truth's Servant,' 1664. Bagwell was a prisoner for debt in 1637, and wrote a poem upon his sufferings in 1644.

BAHRDT, CHARLES FREDERICK, a Protestant divine, was born at Bischofswerda, 15 Aug., 1741, and died near Halle, 24 April, 1792. His immoralities, and the heterodoxy of his religious opinions, gained for him the hatred of his brother ministers, and led to his imprisonment. He composed a number of works and projected the sect of Illuminati, on the model of freemasonry, and having for its object a political and religious revolution.

BAIER, JOHN JAMES, an eminent physician and naturalist, born at Jena, 14th June, 1677; died at Altorf, 14 July, 1735.

BAIER, JOHN WILLIAM, born at Nuremberg, 1647, became professor of divinity at Halle, where he died 1694. He wrote 'Compendium Theologicum,' &c.

BAIER, JOHN WILLIAM, born 1675, became divinity professor at Altorf, and died 1729. He published some dissertations, in which he gives the result of his researches respecting the monuments which now remain of the great deluge, and other theological questions.

BAIF, JEAN ANTOINE, son of Lazare de Baif, was born 1532, and died 1592, leaving a large collection of works in prose and rhyme. Cardinal Perron remarked that he was a very good man, but a very bad poet.

BAIF, LAZARE DE, a French author, statesman, and ambassador, died 1545. He wrote three treatises, which are much esteemed: 'De re Vestiaria'; 'De re Navali'; and 'De re Vascularia.' He likewise translated into French verse the 'Electra' of Sophocles, and the 'Hecuba' of Euripides.

BAIKIE, WM. BALFOUR, was born at Kirkwall, 1820, and studied medicine at Edinburgh, where he took the degree of M.D. Afterwards he joined the navy as assistant-surgeon, and in 1855 was sent out by the Government to open up the trade of the Niger. The steamer which conveyed him up the river having been lost, Dr. Baikie set himself down among the wild Africans and explored the country in every direction. After a stay of several years' duration he prepared to return to his native country, but was taken ill at Sierra Leone, where he died 12 Dec., 1864.

BAIL, LOUIS, a French divine, born at Abbeville; died at Paris, 1609. He composed several theological works in Latin.

BAILLY, JAMES, a classical scholar, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1814; M.A., 1823), and for many years was head-master of the Perse grammar-school in that town. In 1850, Queen Victoria granted him a pension of £100 per annum. Died in London 13 Feb., 1864. His classical publications were numerous, and he was a contributor to the 'Classical Journal.' He is best known by his edition of the Latin Lexicon of Faccioliati and Forcellini, 2 vols., 4to., London, 1826.

BAILLEY, NATHAN, author of a well-known dictionary of the English language, resided principally at Stepney, and there probably died 27 June, 1742, leaving no memorials of his personal history or character. In religion he is said to have been a Sabbatarian. His English dictionary, printed first in the early part of the 18th century (4th edit., 1728), was long the only one in use, and still continues a favourite with a certain class of readers. Bailey also published a 'Dictionarium Domesticum, or a Household Dictionary,' 1736; and 'The Antiquities of London and Westminster,' 24mo., 1726.

BAILLEY, PETER, an English writer, was the son of a solicitor near Nantwich, and was educated at Rugby School, and Merton College, Oxford. He afterwards studied at the Temple, but soon abandoned the law for the more congenial pursuits of literature. At this period he published a poetical work, entitled 'Sketches from St. George's Fields, by Giorgione di Castel Chiuso.' Other proofs of his poetical power were given in a privately printed volume, entitled 'Idwal.' His last publication was 'A Queen's Appeal' in Spenserian stanzas. Mr. Bailey was for some time editor of a weekly periodical called 'The Museum,' and died suddenly in a coach as he was proceeding to the Italian Opera for the purpose of criticizing the performance, 25 Jan., 1823.

BAILLEY, WALTER. See BAILEY.

BAILLET, ADRIEN, a French writer, was born 13 June, 1649, at Neuville near Beauvais. In 1676 he entered the priesthood and obtained a small living, on which he supported his brother and himself. Died 21 Jan., 1706. His great work is the 'Jugemens des Savans sur les principaux Ouvrages des Auteurs' (Judgments of the Learned on the principal Works of Authors), in 9 vols. He wrote a great number of books on theological and historical subjects; particularly the Life of Des Cartes, and the Lives of Saints.

BAILLEY, SIR CHARLES, secretary to the unfortunate Mary queen of Scots, died 27 Dec., 1625, aged 84, and was buried in the churchyard of Hulpe, near Brussels.

BAILLIE, JOANNA, an English dramatic writer, was born 1762 at Bothwell, in Lanarkshire, being daughter of the Rev. James Baillie, D.D., and sister of Dr. Matthew Baillie, the eminent anatomist. Early in life she and her sister Agnes removed to London, and for many years they lived in retirement, and latterly in strict seclusion, at Hampstead, where Joanna died 23 Feb., 1851. Her first dramatic efforts were published under the title of 'A Series of Plays, in which it is attempted to delineate the stronger passions of the mind, each passion being the subject of a tragedy and a comedy.' A long preface preceded the work, occupied by a dissertation by the authoress on the acted drama in general, in which she displayed sufficient technical ignorance of the stage to make it obvious that her plays could never live in representation. A second volume appeared in 1802, and a third in 1812. During the interval she gave the world a volume of miscellaneous dramas, including the 'Family Legend,' a tragedy founded upon a story of one of the Macleans of Appin, and which, principally through the endeavours of Sir Walter Scott, who was an enthusiastic admirer of Miss Baillie, was performed at Edinburgh in 1809 with great temporary success. In 1812 it was acted in London. The only 'Play of the Passions' ever represented on the stage was 'De Montfort,' brought out by John Kemble, and played for eleven nights. In 1821 it was revived for Edmund Kean, but fruitlessly. In 1836 Joanna published three more volumes of plays, and in 1851 a complete edition of her works was published, including a poem entitled 'Ahalya Bacc,' which had been previously printed for private circulation, and some short poems which had not before seen the light. In their general character the dramas of Miss Baillie are marked by great originality of invention, for the foundations of them are for the most part not historical, nor stories from real life, but combinations wrought out from her own conceptions. Her language is simple and forcible, and her power of portraying character has rarely been exceeded.

BAILLIE, JOHN, an orientalist, born about 1773; died at London, 20 April, 1833. He was a director of the East India Company, and a colonel on the Bengal establishment. He translated into English the code of Mahometan laws called 'Imamea,' and edited the original texts of five esteemed works on Arabic grammar.

BAILLIE, MRS. MARIANNE, an English authoress, died 1831. She published a 'Tour on the Continent,' 8vo.; 'Sketches of the Manners and Customs of Portugal,' 2 vols.; and 'Trifles in Verse,' 12mo., London, 1825.

BAILLIE, MATTHEW, M.D., a celebrated physician and anatomist, was born 27 Oct., 1761, in a small village in Lanarkshire, Scotland, and died 23 Sept., 1823. He was nephew of the celebrated atomists John and William Hunter. After pursuing his studies, first under the direction of his father, and afterwards at the university of Glasgow, he took his degrees at Oxford, and then went to London, where he was employed in making preparations for the Hunterian Museum, and conducting the business of the dissecting room. On the death of John Hunter in 1783, he succeeded to the lectures with Mr. Cruikshank, and was highly popular as a teacher. At a later period he became physician to St. George's hospital, and a fellow of the College of Physicians. It was not, however, until the year 1798 that Baillie commenced to practise medicine with extraordinary success. In 1810 he was made physician to George III., and a baronetcy was offered to him, but he was not ambitious of such a distinction, and respectfully declined it. Besides leaving a fortune of about £80,000 to his family, he bequeathed his library and anatomical preparations to the College of Physicians. His principal works are, 'The Morbid Anatomy of some of the most important parts of the Human Body,' which has been translated into French, Italian, and German; 'Series of Engravings intended to illustrate the Morbid Anatomy,' and 'Lectures and Observations on Medicine.'

BAILLIE, ROBERT, a Scotch divine, born 1599 at Glasgow, where he took his degree of M.A., received episcopal ordination, and became regent of philosophy. He afterwards obtained the living of Kilwinning, but in the civil war he joined the Covenanters, renounced episcopacy, and was sent to London to exhibit charges against Archbishop Laud. While there he was chosen one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, and returned to his own country in 1646. He was one of the commissioners sent by the general assembly of Scotland to Charles II. at the Hague. At the Restoration he was made principal of the university of Glasgow, and might have had a bishopric, if he would have conformed. Died July, 1662. He wrote a number of polemical works. His letters and journal of his transactions in England were published at Edinburgh, 4 vols. 8vo., 1775.

BAILLIE, ROBERT, of Jerviswood, a distinguished Scotch patriot of the reign of Charles II., was found guilty of being concerned in the Rye House plot, and executed at Edinburgh 24 Dec., 1684.

BAILLIE, or BAILZIE, WILLIAM, a Scotch physician, studied medicine in Italy with so much reputation, that he was appointed professor of medicine in the university of Bologna, about 1484. He adopted the Galenic system in preference to the Empiric, and wrote 'Apologia pro Galeni Doctrina contra Empiricos,' Lyons, 1550.

BAILLIE, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born about 1736; died at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

BAILLIF, LE ROCH. See RIVIERE.

BAILLOU, GUILLAUME DE, an eminent physician of Paris, died 1616, aged 78. He left many valuable works, printed at Geneva, 1762, 4 vols. 4to.

BAILLY, DAVID, a painter, born at Leyden, 1588; died about 1630.

BAILLY, JACQUES, a clever engraver and miniature painter of Paris, died 1677.

BAILLY, JEAN SYLVAIN, an eminent French astronomer, born at Paris 15 Sept., 1736. In 1775 appeared the first volume of his great work,

BAINBRIG.

'L'Histoire de l'Astronomie,' which was completed in 1779. He also wrote a 'History of Indian and Oriental Astronomy,' which, like his other works, blends with deep science and extensive reading much fancy and hypothetical reasoning. When the revolution broke out he was lost to science by his becoming deputy and president of the Tiers Etat, which last office he resigned to the duke of Orleans. He was next chosen mayor of Paris, which situation he discharged for two years and a half and then went abroad, but unfortunately returned to France in 1793, and on the 11th Nov. in that year perished by the guillotine.

BAILY, FRANCIS, D.C.L., F.R.S., an eminent astronomer and man of science, was son of a banker at Newbury, Berkshire, where he was born 28 April, 1774. For many years he was engaged in the business of the Stock Exchange, in which he realized an ample fortune. In 1825 he retired from business, and devoted the remainder of his life to the study of science, and more particularly of astronomy. It is impossible in this work to find space for an account of his scientific exertions and works, but a minute description of all his writings is given in a memoir by Sir John Herschel, read to the Astronomical Society in 1844. It may, however, be mentioned that he organized the Astronomical Society, to whose 'Memoirs' he was a frequent contributor. He also revised the catalogue of stars, published the correspondence of Flamsteed, revised the Nautical Almanac at the request of the Admiralty, and composed the best treatise that has yet appeared on life annuities and insurances. He died at London 30 Aug., 1844.

BAILY, THOMAS, D.D., an English Catholic divine, was a native of Yorkshire, and received his education at Cambridge, being appointed master of Clare Hall in that university about Nov., 1557. When Elizabeth succeeded to the crown he refused to comply with the change in religion, and being deprived of his mastership, went to Louvain. There he remained till 1576, when he proceeded to Douay on the invitation of Doctor, afterwards Cardinal Allen, who employed him in the government of the English college both at Douay and Rheims. He had the chief hand in managing the temporalities of the society, and in Dr. Allen's absence was usually appointed regent. Died 7 Oct., 1591.

BAINBRIDGE, JOHN, M.D., was born at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1603; M.A. 1607; M.D. 1614). He then returned to his native county, where he practised physic, and kept a grammar school. He next removed to London, and was admitted a licentiate of the College of Physicians 1618. In the following year he published 'An Astronomical Description of the late Comet, from the 18th November, 1618, to the 16th December following.' This introduced him to the notice of Sir Henry Savile, who appointed him astronomical professor at Oxford. He thereupon became a member of Merton College in that university. Died 3 Nov., 1643.

BAINBRIG, THOMAS, D.D., rector of Orwell, and some time vicemaster of Trinity College, Cambridge, published in 1687 'An Answer to a Book entitled Reason and Authority, or the Motives of a late Protestant's Reconciliation to the Catholic Church, together with a brief Account of Augustine the Monk, and Conversion of the English.* Born at Cambridge 1636; died 16 Aug., 1703.

BAINBRIGG, REGINALD, an English antiquary, born in or about 1546, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A. 1576-7), and about 1581 became head master of the grammar school at Applby. His will is dated 1606. He rendered material assistance to William Camden, and left some topographical MSS., which are now in the British Museum.

BAINÉ, JAMES, M.A., a Scotch divine, was born at Bonhill, Dumbartonshire, 1710, and educated at Glasgow. Having taken orders, he joined the Relief Communion, and was a leading member of that church. He exercised his ministerial functions at Edinburgh, and died 17 Jan., 1790. Many of his sermons have been published. One of them, entitled 'The Theatre Licentious and Perverted,' was preached in 1770 against Foote's play of 'The Minor,' then being acted at Edinburgh.

BAINES, EDWARD, a native of Walton-le-Dale, Lancashire, was born 1774, and having been placed at an early age under the care of his uncle, Mr. Thomas Rigg, of King's Land, Hawkshead, he received his first education in the free grammar school of that town. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to Mr. Walker, a printer of Preston. Before the term of his apprenticeship expired he removed to Leeds for improvement, and entered that town as a poor journeyman printer seeking his fortunes. He soon engaged himself with the publisher of the 'Leeds Mercury,' with whom he served the remainder of his time. In 1801, by the aid of local friends, who knew and prized his great industry and thrift, he was enabled to purchase the paper on which he had worked as a journeyman, and thus, at the age of twenty-seven, the compositor became the proprietor. Owing to this the 'Leeds Mercury,' from being a local journal of small dimensions and feeble powers, suddenly acquired an extensive political influence in the north of England, and from that time to the present it has uniformly maintained the principles of civil and religious liberty with zeal and consistency. On the appointment of Mr. Macaulay to an official post in India in Dec., 1833, Mr. Baines was elected to succeed him as member for Leeds, which he continued to represent in parliament until 1841. Died 3 Aug., 1848. His works are, 'The History of the Wars of the French Revolution,' which was subsequently made to embrace a wider range, and became a 'History of the Reign of George III.' and 'History of the County Palatine of Lancaster,' 4 vols. 4to.

BAINES, PETER AUGUSTINE, an English Catholic prelate, was born at Pear-tree Farm, within Kirkley township, near Liverpool, 25 Jan., 1787, and educated at the English Benedictine monastery of Lambspring, in Westphalia. The establishment was subsequently removed to Ampleforth, near York, where, on 8 June, 1804, he was admitted a professed monk of the order of St. Benedict. In 1817 he was stationed at Bath, and a few years afterwards was appointed coadjutor to Bishop Collingridge, being consecrated 1 May, 1823, with the title of bishop of Siga. On Dr. Collingridge's death in 1829 he became vicar apostolic of the western district, having obtained permission from Pius VIII. to become secularized. He now established an ecclesiastical seminary at Prior Park, where he died 6 July, 1843. His works are, 'Faith, Hope, and Charity. The Substance of a Sermon [on 1 Cor. xiii. 12, 13] preached at the dedication of the Catholic Chapel at Bradford, July 27, 1825,' 8vo., London, 1825, 1826, 1827, 1828, 1836; 'A Letter to C. A. Moysey on the subject of an attack made by him upon the Catholics, in a charge to the clergy of the deanery of Bedminster, June 21, 1821,' 2nd edition, 8vo., Bath [1821]; 'An Inquiry into the nature, object, and obligations of the Religion of Christ; with a comparison of the ancient and modern Christianity of England; in reply to the Archdeacon of Sarum's "Protestant Companion," in a fourth Letter to the Archdeacon of Bath,' 8vo., London, 1824; 'Outlines of Christianity, being the substance of Six Lectures delivered in the Catholic Chapel, Pierpoint Place, Bath, during the Sundays in Lent, 1839,' 8vo., Prior Park, 1839; 'On Divine Worship. A Sermon [on Matt. iv. 10],' 8vo., London, 1841.

BAINES, ROGER. See BYNES.

BAIRD, Sir DAVID, a British general, was born at Newbyth, Aberdeenshire, 6 Dec., 1757. He first served in India, and was taken prisoner at Peramboum by the army of Hyder Ali, who kept him in confinement for three years and a half. The great event in his life, however, was the storming of Seringapatam in 1799, for which he received the thanks of parliament and of the East India Company. Subsequently he was created a baronet, and died 18 Aug., 1829.

BAIRD, Sir JOHN, a Scotch judge, known as Lord Newbyth, died 27 April, 1698, ætat. 78. Some of his legal MSS. are preserved in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh.

BAITHEN, St., was the disciple and immediate successor of St. Colum in the abbey of Hy, where he died 5 June, 598. He wrote the life of St. Colum in Irish metre.

BAIUS, or DE BAY, JAMES, nephew of Michael Baius, was a doctor, of Louvaine, and died 1614, leaving a Treatise on the Eucharist, and a Catechism.

BAIUS, or DE BAY, MICHAEL, a famous doctor and chancellor of the university of Louvaine, born 1513, at Malines; died 16 Sept., 1589. Some of his opinions were condemned as heretical.

BAJAZET I., fifth sultan of the Turks, succeeded his father, Amurath I., 1389, and was surnamed Lightning, from the rapidity of his conquests. Tamerlane took him prisoner in 1402, and shut him up in an iron cage; but the pride of Bajazet was not humbled by his misfortunes. It is said that, being weary of life, he dashed his brains out against the bars of his cage, 1403; but Petit de la Croix maintains that he died of apoplexy, 23 March, 1413.

BAJAZET II., sultan of the Turks after the death of his father, Mahomet II., 1481. He gained several victories over the Venetians, but his armies were defeated in Egypt. Shortly before his death, which occurred 26 May, 1512, he was obliged to resign the crown to his son Selim.

BAKER, CHARLES, known also as DAVID LEWIS, was born in Monmouthshire, 1617, and brought up in the Protestant religion till he was about nineteen years of age, when, being a student of the law, he was reconciled to the Catholic church. Afterwards he went beyond sea, and joined the Society of Jesus, and being sent on the English mission, 1648, officiated in South Wales for one-and-thirty years. At last, however, he was caught, and executed at Uak, Monmouthshire, 27 Aug., 1792.

BAKER, DAVID AUGUSTINE, an English Benedictine monk, was born at Abergavenny, Dec., 1575, and educated in Broadgate Hall, Oxford, where he was miraculously converted from atheism to Christianity. Having been reconciled to the Catholic church, he proceeded in 1605 to the Benedictine convent of St. Justina, at Padua, and commenced his novitiate on the 27th of May in that year. For a considerable time he was resident in England, and during nine years was spiritual director of the English Benedictine nuns at Cambray. He died of the plague at Gray's Inn, London, 10 Aug., 1641, and was buried at St. Andrew's, Holborn. Some persons having contended that the ancient Benedictine congregation in this country was dependent on that of Cluni, in the diocese of Maçon, founded about 910, Father Baker, at the desire of his superiors, devoted his time and labour in exposing and refuting this error. For this purpose he inspected very carefully the monuments and evidences in public and private collections in London and elsewhere. He had the benefit of the opinions of Sir Robert Cotton, John Selden, Sir Henry Spelman, and William Camden; and the result of his laborious and lucid researches is embodied in the learned folio volume entitled 'Apostolatus Benedictinorum in Anglia,' published by order of the general congregation holden in 1625, and printed at Douay in 1626. Baker's friend, Father Jones, reduced the mass of materials into respectable Latinity; and they left Father Clement Reyner, their assistant, an excellent scholar, to edit the work; so that it passes for being finished 'Opera et industria, R. P. Clementis Reyneri.' Father Baker likewise composed several books relating to the 'Exercises of a Spiritual Life.' Out of more than forty of his MS. treatises Serenus Cressy compiled the work entitled 'Sancta Synodus.'

BAKER, DAVID BRISTOW, an English clergyman, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1820, M.A. 1832). He became incumbent of Claygate, Surrey, and died in London 24 July, 1852, aged 49. He was author of 'Discourses and Sacramental Addresses to a Village Congregation;' 1820., London, 1832.

BAKER, DAVID ESKINE, eldest son of Henry Baker, the naturalist, was adopted by an uncle, who was a silk-throwster in Spitalfields; and he succeeded him in the business, but being fond of theatrical entertainments, he squandered his property, and joined some strolling players. He was the author of a 'Companion to the Playhouse,' 2 vols. 12mo., 1764; since considerably improved and enlarged under the title of 'Biographia Dramatica; or, a Companion to the Playhouse: containing historical and critical Memoirs, and original Anecdotes of British and Irish Dramatic Writers, from the Commencement of our Theatrical Exhibitions; among whom are some of the most celebrated Actors; also an Alphabetical Account, and Chronological Lists, of their Works, the Dates when printed, and Observations on their Merits: together with an Introductory View of the rise and progress of the British Stage. Originally compiled, to the year 1764, by David Eskine Baker, continued thence to 1782 by Isaac Reed, F.A.S., and brought down to the end of November, 1811, with very considerable additions and improvements throughout, by Stephen Jones.' 3 vols. London, 1812. Mr. Baker also published a dramatic piece, entitled 'The Muse of Ossian.' He died 16 Feb., 1767.

BAKER, EDWARD, an English mathematician, geographer, genealogist, and antiquary, died at Homerton in 1816. His maps, ancient and modern, are well known.

BAKER, GEORGE, a medical writer, and surgeon to Queen Elizabeth and King James I., was living 1610, for on the 4th of March in that year a grant was made, with survivorship to George and Alexander Baker, of the office of king's surgeon, on the surrender of a former patent which had been granted to George. He was author of 'The Composition or Making of the moste excellent pretious Oil called Oleum Magistrale,' a translation; 8vo., London, 1574; 'Treatise of the Nature and Properties of Quicksilver;' 8vo., London, 1574; 'The Newe Jewell of Health, &c.,' translated from Gesner; 'Gyvdos Questions, newly corrected;' London, 1579; and commendatory verses before Peter Lowe's 'Course of Chirurgie,' 1597.

BAKER, SIR GEORGE, M.D., F.R.S., a distinguished physician, was born in Devonshire, 1722; and from Eton proceeded to King's College, Cambridge, where he was created a doctor 1756. After practising for some time at Stamford he removed to London, where he acquired a high professional reputation, being appointed physician to the king and queen. He was also elected President of the College of Physicians, and raised to the rank of baronet. Died 15 June, 1809. He was author of some valuable works relating to his profession, and also of an admirable Latin poem on the embalmed wife of Martin Van Butchell the empiric.

BAKER, GEORGE, an eminent topographer, was born in or about 1781 at Northampton, of which town he wrote a history at the early age of 13. From that time he was always engaged in enlarging his collections. His proposals for a 'History of Northamptonshire' were issued in 1815, the first part being published in 1822, the second in 1826, and the third, completing the first volume, in 1830. This volume contains the hundreds of Spelthol, Newbottle Grove, Fawsley, Wardon, and Sutton. The fourth part, containing the hundreds of Norton and Cleley, appeared in 1836, and about one-third of a fifth part, containing the hundred of Towcester, in 1841. At this point the work terminated abruptly, in consequence of the failure of the author's health. His MS. collections were purchased by Sir Thomas Phillips, Bart., of Middlehill, Worcestershire. Mr. Baker, who was a magistrate for the borough of Northampton, died there 12 Oct., 1851. His valuable 'History and Antiquities of the County of Northampton' is, as far as it reaches, complete. His plan was to give, first, the etymology of each parish; the extent and boundaries; the produce of the soil; the possessors of it, including its manorial, monastic, and ecclesiastical history; the buildings on it; and the eminent natives or residents. In the elaboration and accuracy of its pedigrees it is unsurpassed.

BAKER, HENRY, an eminent naturalist, was born in London 8 May, 1698, and brought up to the business of a bookseller, which calling he quitted, and undertook to teach deaf and dumb persons to speak, by which he acquired a handsome fortune. He married a daughter of Daniel Defoe, by whom he had two sons. He was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society and of the Society of Antiquaries, and obtained the gold medal from the former in 1740 for his microscopical experiments on saline particles. Died 25 Nov., 1774. He published 'The Microscope made Easy,' 1742; and 'Employment for the Microscope,' 1764. He also wrote 'Original Poems, Serious and Humorous,' 1725. His poem entitled 'The Universe' possesses considerable merit. Several of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions. He bequeathed £100 to the Royal Society, the interest of which was to be applied in paying for an annual oration on natural history or experimental philosophy, now known by the name of the Bakerian Oration.

BAKER, HENRY, son of Henry Baker, the naturalist, followed the profession of a lawyer, and occasionally appeared as a poet and miscellaneous writer. In 1756 he published 'Essays Pastoral and Elegiac,' 2 vols. 8vo., and left ready for the press a work on the law of bankruptcy.

BAKER, JOHN, a distinguished British admiral, died 10 Nov., 1716, aged 56.

BAKER, PACIFICUS, an English Franciscan, appears to have been attached to the Sardinian Chapel, London, in which city he died 16 March, 1774, ætat. 80. He published 'Scripture Antiquity;' 'Meditations on the Lord's Prayer,' from the French; 'The Christian Advent;' 'The Sundays kept Holy;' 'The Devout Christian's Companion for the Holy Days;' 'The Devout Communicant;' 'The Holy Altar and Sacrifice Explained;' and 'The Lenten Monitor.'

BAKER, SIR RICHARD, grandson of Sir John Baker, the chancellor of the exchequer, was born at Sissinghurst, Kent, about 1568. He became a commoner of Hart Hall, Oxford, whence he removed to one of the inns of court, after which he travelled. He was knighted in 1603, and in 1620 was sheriff of Oxfordshire; but an unfortunate marriage reduced him to poverty, and he was thrown into the Fleet prison, where he died 18 Feb., 1644-5. His 'Chronicle of the Kings of England' was formerly very popular, and passed through several editions, though it was always more esteemed by readers of a lower class than by such as had a critical knowledge of history. Sir Richard was also author of many books of divinity, and translated Malvezzi's 'Discourses on Tacitus,' and Balzac's 'Letters.'

BAKER, THOMAS, an eminent mathematician, born at Ilton, Somersetshire, 1625. In 1640 he was entered at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and in 1645 was elected scholar of Wadham College. He graduated B.A. 1647, and shortly afterwards left the university. He subsequently was presented to the vicarage of Bishop's Nympton, Devonshire, where he passed a studious and retired life for many years. He died in May, 1690, and not, as Wood states, on 5 June, 1690. He is author of 'The Geometrical Key; or, the Gate of Equations Unlocked,' 4to., 1684.

BAKER, THOMAS, B.D., a famous antiquary, sometime fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, died 2 July, 1740, ætat. 84. This most excellent person was profoundly learned in English history, and had paid particular attention to whatever related to the university and town of Cambridge. Of his valuable MS. collections twenty-three volumes in folio were given by him in his lifetime to the earl of Oxford, and they are now with the other Harleian MSS. in the British Museum. Eighteen others he left by will to the university library, together with several annotated printed books. He had been ejected from his fellowship in 1716, his conscience not allowing him to swear allegiance to the house of Hanover. He continued, however, to reside in St. John's College till his death. His only published works are 'Reflections on Learning' (anon.) and 'Preface to Bishop Fisher's Funeral Sermon for Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby.'

BAKER, WILLIAM, a learned printer, was born at Reading, Berkshire, 1742, being the son of William Baker, a schoolmaster in that town. He was apprenticed to Mr. Kippax, printer, of Cullum Street, London, and in course of time succeeded to the business, which he carried on until his death, first in Cullum Street, and afterwards in Ingram Court, in partnership with Mr. Galabin. Among his literary acquaintances were Dr. Oliver Goldsmith, Dr. Edmund Barker, and the Rev. James Merrick, translator of 'Tryphiodorus,' and author of many other pieces, Mr. Robert Robertson, and the Rev. Hugh Farmer. An elegant correspondence in the Latin language between him and Mr. Robinson still exists, and is a proof of his great erudition and the opinion entertained of him by some of the first scholars of that day. Died 29 Sept., 1785. Only two small works are known to be his, viz., 'Peregrinations of the Mind through the most general and interesting Subjects which are usually agitated in Life by the Rationalist,' 12mo., London, 1770, in essays, after the manner of the Rambler; and 'Thesæ Græcæ Latinæ Selectæ,' 8vo., London, 1780, a selection from Greek and Latin writers. He also left some MS. remarks, in which he pointed out the frequent abuse of grammatical propriety in the English language in common conversation, among people of the first rank in education, and even by reputable writers.

BAKER, WILLIAM, coroner for Middlesex, and author of 'A Treatise on the Law of Coroners,' died 22 Feb., 1859, aged 76.

BAKEWELL, ROBERT, a celebrated grazier of Dishley, Leicestershire, who greatly improved the breed of cattle and sheep, was born about 1725, and died 1 Oct., 1795. It was wittily remarked that his animals were too dear for any one to purchase, and too fat for any one to eat!

BAKHUYSEN, LUDOLPH, an eminent Dutch painter, born at Emden 1631; died 1709. His favourite subjects were shipping and sea-pieces, in which he excelled all the artists of his time.

BAKKER, GERBRAND, a Dutch physician and medical writer, professor at the university of Groningen, was born at Enkhuisen 1 Nov., 1771, and died 14 June, 1828.

BAKKER, PIETER HUYSSINGA, a Dutch poet, born 1715 at Amsterdam, where he died 22 Oct., 1801.

BALAMIO, FERDINAND, a learned Sicilian physician, was greatly esteemed by Pope Leo X. He translated into Latin several pieces of Galen, which were published in an edition of that author at Venice in 1586.

BALASSI, MARIO, a Florentine painter, born 1604; died 1667.

BALBASTRE, OR BALBASTRE, CLAUDE, a celebrated French organist, born at Dijon 8 Dec., 1720; died at Paris 9 April, 1799.

BALBI, ADRIAN, a distinguished geographer, born at Venice 25 April, 1782; died 14 March, 1848.

BALBI, JOHN, a Dominican of the thirteenth century, illustrious for his learning and piety. He is commonly called Januensis or Janua, from Genoa, his native place. A work of his was printed at Mentz, 1460, folio, entitled 'Summa que vocatur Catholicon,' which is a grammar, dictionary, and art of rhetoric. This edition is very scarce.

BALBINUS, DECIMUS CÆLIUS, a Roman emperor, who was chosen by the senate 38, but murdered by the soldiers, who would never endure any emperor elected by the senate only.

BALBIS, JOHN BAPTIST, a learned physician and botanist, was born at Moretta, in Piedmont, 1765. He became professor of botany at Turin, and afterwards director of the botanic garden at Lyons. Died at Turin, 13 Feb., 1831. He wrote several works on the plants of Italy, and a treatise on 'Materia Medica.'

BALBO, JEROME, bishop of Goritz, died at Venice, 1535. He wrote 'De Rebus Turcicis,' 4to, Rome, 1526, and a number of poems in Latin.

BALBOA, VASCO NUÑEZ DE, a Spanish navigator, was born about 1475 at Jerez de los Caballeros in Spanish Estremadura. Having joined the expedition of Enciso, he was appointed its commander, and discovered Peru, of which country he took possession in the names of Ferdinand and Isabella. He established a colony at Darien, but was superseded in the government of it in 1514 by Pedrarias Davila, at whose instance he was accused of treason, tried, and executed in 1517.

BALBUENA, BERNARDO DE, a Spanish poet, born 1568 at Valdepeñas, a village in the diocese of Toledo. Having taken his doctor's degree at Salamanca, he was sent to America, and became bishop of Porto Rico, 1620. Died 1627. He wrote an epic poem on the 'Victory of Roncesvalles,' and several other pieces, in his native language.

BALCANQUAL, WALTER, D.D., a learned Scotch divine, born at Edinburgh about 1586, who attended James I. to England, and was created D.D. by the university of Oxford. He became chaplain to the king, master of the Savoy, and representative of the church of Scotland at the synod of Dordt. In 1624 he was made dean of Rochester, and in 1639 dean of Durham. He suffered severely in the rebellion, being forced to fly from place to place, and died at Chirk Castle, in Denbighshire, 25 Dec., 1645. He wrote the declaration of King Charles I. concerning the late troubles in Scotland, 1630; Epistles concerning the Synod of Dordt, in John Haies's 'Golden Remains,' and some sermons.

BALCARRES, COLIN LINDSAY, third earl of, a staunch adherent of King James II., succeeded to the title on the death of his brother, 1662. Shortly after James's accession he was appointed (3 Sept., 1660), one of the 'Council of Six,' or commissioners of the treasury, in which the Scotch administration was lodged. He engaged in the plot projected by Sir James Montgomery for the restoration of King James, and upon its discovery in 1660 he deemed it advisable to retire to the continent. Towards the end of 1700 he returned to Scotland by permission of William III.; but, notwithstanding this, his royalist sympathies led him to join the standard of the Pretender in 1715. Having powerful friends at court, however, he was again pardoned. He died 1722 in his seventy-third year. Lord Balcarres was author of 'An Account of the Affairs of Scotland relating to the Revolution of 1688,' first published at London in 1714, and reproduced at Edinburgh in 1754. The best edition is that by Lord Lindsay, published by the Bannatyne Club.

BALCHEN, JOHN, an English admiral, was born 1669, and entered early into the navy, where, passing through several inferior stations, he attained the command of a ship, and distinguished himself by his bravery in the Mediterranean under Sir George Byng. In 1734 he was made an admiral, and in 1743 was appointed governor of Greenwich Hospital. He soon afterwards went with a squadron to relieve Sir Charles Hardy, who with a large fleet of transports was blocked up in the Tagus. Having accomplished this service, Admiral Balchen sailed for England; but a violent storm coming on, his ship, the Victory, was lost on the Caskets, near Jersey, and every soul on board perished, 3 Oct., 1744. A monument commemorative of this melancholy event was erected in Westminster Abbey.

BALD, ROBERT, a civil engineer, who died in 1861, wrote 'A General View of the Coal Trade of Scotland, chiefly that of the River Forth and Mid-Lothian, &c.,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1808. According to Mr. McCulloch, this is the best work on the subject.

BALDE, JAMES, a modern Latin poet, born at Ensisheim, in Alsace, 1603, entered the order of Jesus 1624, and died 9 Aug., 1668. The greater part of his life was spent in Bavaria, where he could watch only too well the unspeakable miseries of the Thirty Years' War, and many pages of his poetry bear witness with what a bleeding heart he beheld the wounds of his native land. This sympathy of his, so true and so profound, with the sufferings of Germany, gives a reality to his verse which modern Latin poetry so often wants. His fellow-countrymen exalt him as the first of modern Latin poets—not as having reached the highest perfection of classical style, but for the grandeur of his thoughts and the originality and boldness of his imagery. Several editions have been published of his poems, which fill four closely-printed volumes.

BALDE DE UBALDIS, a celebrated lawyer, the disciple and rival of Bartoli, was born at Perugia, 1324, became professor at Verona, Padua, and Pavia, and died 28 April, 1400.

BALDERIC, a celebrated bishop of Noyon, who wrote a chronicle of the bishops of Arras and Cambrai from the time of Clovis to the year 1070. He died 1112.

BALDERIC, a native of Orleans, was consecrated bishop of Dol 1114, and died 7 Jan., 1130. He wrote the life of Robert d'Arbrissel, and a history of the first crusade.

BALDI, BERNARDINE, a learned Italian, born at Urbino 6 June, 1553, was made abbat of Guastalla 1586, and died 12 Oct., 1617. He was distinguished by his poetry, his works on mathematics, and his treatises on classical subjects.

BALDI, LAZARUS, an Italian painter, was born at Pistoja 1624, and died at Rome 1703. He was employed by Alexander VII. to paint the gallery at Monte Cavallo, and a beautiful chapel at St. John Lateran.

BALDINGER, ERNEST GODFREY, a distinguished German physician, born near Erfurt, 13 May, 1738; died at Marburg 3 Jan., 1804. He was author of eighty-four works relating to his profession.

BALDINI, BACCIO, a Florentine engraver of the fifteenth century.

BALDINI, BACCIO, principal physician to the Grand Duke Cosmo, and keeper of the Laurentian library at Florence; died about 1585. His chief works are 'Vita di Cosimo I.' and 'Discorso dell'Essenza del Fato.'

BALDINI, JOHN ANTHONY, a learned Italian nobleman, born at Placentia, 1634. He was employed as ambassador at various courts in Europe, and attended the congress at Utrecht. A catalogue of his collection of books and curiosities was printed in the Italian Literary Journal. Died 23 Feb., 1725.

BALDINUCCI, PHILIP, was born at Florence, 1624, and died 1696. He wrote 'General History of Painters,' 6 vols.; 'A Vocabulary of Designs;' and 'An Account of the Progress of Engraving.'

BALDOCK, RALPH DE, bishop of London. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and in 1304 was raised to the episcopate. In 1307 King Edward I. appointed him lord high chancellor. Died 24 July, 1313. He wrote a 'History of British Affairs,' which Leland had seen, though it is now lost.

BALDOVINI, FRANCIS, an Italian poet and ecclesiastic, was born at Florence 27 Feb., 1635, and died 18 Nov., 1716. His principal work is a poem entitled 'Il Lamento de Cecco da Varlungo,' an English translation of which, by Mr. Hunter, appeared in 1800.

BALDREY, JOSHUA KIRBY, an artist who resided for some years at Cambridge, and established his reputation by an accurate engraving of the eastern window of King's College Chapel. He published 'A Dissertation on the Windows of King's College Chapel, Cambridge,' 1818, and died in indigence at Hatfield Wood Side, Hertfordshire, 6 Dec., 1829, aged 74.

BALDUCCI, FRANCIS, an Italian poet, was a native of Palermo. After leading a somewhat irregular life he took orders, and died at Rome 1642. His collected poems were published at Venice 1655 and 1663.

BALDUNG, JOHN, a painter and wood engraver, contemporary with Albert Durer, was born at Gemunden, in Swabia, about 1476, and died about 1540.

BALDWIN I., king of Jerusalem, was the son of Eustace, count of Boulogne, and accompanied Godfrey his brother into Palestine, where he gained the country of Edessa. He succeeded his brother on the throne of Jerusalem 1100, and the year following took Antipatris, Cæsarea, and Azotus. In 1104 he took Acre, after a long siege. He died March, 1118, and was interred on Mount Calvary.

BALDWIN II., king of Jerusalem, the son of Hugh, count of Rethel, was crowned in 1118, after Eustace, brother of Baldwin I., had renounced all claim to the vacant throne. He gained a great victory over the Saracens 1130 but in 1124 he was taken prisoner by them, and ransomed on giving up the city of Tyre. Died 21 Aug., 1131.

BALDWIN III. was the son of Fulk, of Anjou, whom he succeeded in 1143, under the guardianship of his mother. He took Ascalon and other places, and died 23 Feb., 1163.

BALDWIN IV., the son of Amaury, succeeded to the throne of Jerusalem on the death of his father, 1174; but being leprous, Raymond, count of Tripoli, governed the kingdom for him. He afterwards resigned the crown to his nephew Baldwin V., and died 1185. The year following his successor died of poison, supposed to have been administered by his mother, that her husband, Guy de Lusignan, might enjoy the throne.

BALDWIN I., emperor of the East, was the son of Baldwin, count of Flanders, and distinguished himself so greatly in the fourth crusade, that on the conquest of Constantinople by the Latins in 1204 he was chosen emperor; but the Greeks, assisted by the king of Bulgaria, defeated Baldwin, who was made prisoner. He was put to death 14 April, 1205. He was succeeded by his brother Henry.

BALDWIN II. succeeded his brother Robert in the empire of the East 1228, being only eleven years of age. In 1261 Constantinople was taken by Michael Palæologus, and Baldwin escaped by sea to Italy, where he died 1273.

BALDWIN, archbishop of Canterbury, was born in Exeter of obscure parents. He entered the Cistercian order, and became abbat of the monastery of Ford, in Devonshire, whence he was advanced to the see of Worcester in 1180, and translated to Canterbury 1184. He crowned Richard I., whom he followed to the Holy Land, where he died 9 Nov., 1190. Baldwin was a learned prelate, and wrote several tracts, chiefly theological, which were collected and published by Father Tissier, and which may be found in the fifth volume of the 'Bibliotheca Cisterciensis.'

BALDWIN, ABRAHAM, an American statesman, and president of the university of Georgia, died at Washington 1807.

BALDWIN, GEORGE, a mystical writer, born in London in May, 1744, was for some time consul-general in Egypt. He was living in 1818, but I have not met with the date of his death. His works are 'Political Recollections relative to Egypt, containing Observations on its Government under the Mamelukes; its Geographical Positions; its Intrinsic and Extrinsic Resources, &c. : With a Narrative of the Campaign in 1801,' 8vo.; 'Investigation and Principles, &c., in English and Italian,' 4to., London [1801]; 'Studies and Amusements in Pursuit of Knowledge. Knowledge of Things: Knowledge of the Truth in all Things: Knowledge of the Laws of Nature; or Thesusus escaping from the Labyrinth. By George Baldwin, Londinensis, born 6-17 May, 1744,' 12mo., London, 1812; 'La Prima Musa Clio, or the Divine Traveller, exhibiting a Series of Writings obtained in the Extasy of Magnetic Sleep. Translated from the Italian of Valdiere,' 8vo., 1818.

BALDWIN, WILLIAM, was born in the west of England and educated at Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, about 1532. He became a celebrated schoolmaster, and spent most of his life in that employment. He was alive 1564. His works are 'Of Moral Philosophy, or the Lives and Sayings of Philosophers, Emperors, Kings, &c. ;' 'Precepts and Counsels of the Philosophers ;' 'Phrase-like Declaration in English Metre, on the Canticles or Ballads of Solomon,' 4to. London, 1549; 'The Use of Adage ;' 'Similes and Proverbs ;' 'Comedies ;' and 'A Mirror for Magistrates, relating the Lives of unfortunate Englishmen, in English Verse, 1559.' The latter work was published by Baldwin, though the true author was George Ferrers.

BALDWIN, WILLIAM, a native of Cornwall, became a Jesuit, and was appointed the fifth rector of the English college at St. Omer's. He died 28 Sept., 1632, ætat 69. A list of his MS. treatises on devotional subjects is given by Southwell in the 'Bibliotheca Scriptorum Soc. Jesu.'

BALDWINUS. See BAUDOIN.

BALDWYN, EDWARD, was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow. He afterwards resided in Yorkshire, where he was engaged in a literary squabble with certain Gergymen of a methodistical cast, and afterwards at Ludlow, Shropshire. Died 1817. He wrote 'A Critique on the Poetical Essays of the Rev. William Arkinson,' 8vo. 1787; 'Further Remarks on two of the most singular Characters of the Age,' 8vo. 1789; 'Letters to the Author of the Remarks by John Cross, Vicar of Bradford, with a Reply by the former,' 8vo. 1790; 'Remarks on the Oaths, Declarations, and Conduct of Johnson Atkinson Busfield, Esq.,' 8vo. 1791; and 'A Congratulatory Address to the Rev. John Cross, on the Prospect of his Recovery from a Dangerous Disease,' 8vo. 1791.

BALE, JOHN, bishop of Ossory, son of Henry Bale and Margaret his wife, was born at Cove, a small village near Dunwich, in Suffolk, 21 Nov., 1506. At the age of twelve he was sent to the Carmelite monastery at Norwich, and thence to the house of Holme, but it is uncertain whether thereby intended the house of Benedictines at Hume, on the coast of Norfolk, or the house of White Friars at Holn, or Holm Abbey, near Alnwick, in Northumberland. The latter seems the more probable. Subsequently he became a member of Jesus College, Cambridge, when he became acquainted with Cranmer. At the university he renounced the Catholic church, and, to use his own words, 'I made haste to deface the mark of wicked antichrist, and entirely threw off his yoke from me, that I might be partaker of the lot and liberty of the sons of God. And that I might serve more serve so execrable a beast, I took to wife the faithful Dorothy.' He afterwards obtained the living of Thorneden, Suffolk. He was twice summoned for preaching heresy, and in 1540 he deemed it prudent to retire to the Low Countries, where he remained with his wife and children eight years. On the accession of Edward VI. he was recalled to England, and collated to the rectory of Bishopstoke, Hampshire. He was also about or before this time vicar of Swaffham, Norfolk. The king nominated him to the see of Ossory 15 Aug., 1552, and he received consecration at Dublin on 2 Feb. following. He underwent a variety of persecutions in Ireland, which he has recounted at considerable length in his 'Vocacyon.' It is to be observed that his story depends on no other testimony than his own, and he probably made many enemies by his wilful obstinacy and unrepentant temper. When Queen Mary ascended the throne, he fled to Holland. Afterwards he joined several other refugees at Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and, at a later period, retired to Basle, where he remained till Mary's death. He then returned to England, but not to his flock in Ireland, contenting himself with a canonry of the church of Canterbury, to which he was promoted 15 Jan., 1566—a situation less dignified, but more secure, than his Irish bishopric. His death occurred at Canterbury in, or shortly before, November, 1563. A list of his works amounting to ninety in number is given in Cooper's 'Athens Cantabrigienses.' It may be remarked that the full title of the work there numbered 56 is as follows:—'A Christian exhortation vnto custumable swearers.

BALES.

What a ryghte and lawfull othe is; whan, and before whome, it oughte to be. Item, The maner of sayinge grace, or geuyng thanks vnto God.' No place, 8vo. temp. Edward VI.; London (Nic. Hyll), no date; (John Awdeley) 8vo. 1575. The two last editions bear the name of Miles Coverdale on the title. In the edition of 1575 a great part of the preface, which is highly characteristic of Bale, is omitted. Bishop Bale was undoubtedly possessed of considerable abilities, but his impetuous temper led him to attack with unbounded rancour all persons who held views different from his own. Wood calls him foul-mouthed Bale, and by Fuller he is styled Biliosus Balæus. He was the last writer of moral or miracle plays, but in this kind of composition does not display any high talent. It is to be observed that it was he who first applied, or rather misapplied, the terms tragedy and comedy to English dramatic compositions. At the present time he is chiefly known by his work on the writers of England, entitled 'Illustrium majoris Britannicæ scriptorum, hoc est, Angliæ, Cambriæ, ac Scotiæ Summarium,' the best edition of which appeared at Basle 1557-59, fol. This work is especially valuable, as giving the results not only of an extensive personal acquaintance with the writers of his own day, but also of a careful examination of most of the libraries of the English Carmelite and Augustinian houses, just before the dissolution; and it must be admitted that he has been the means of preserving many important particulars relating to our national biography. His natural ill humour is apparent throughout the whole work. He never omits an opportunity of pouring forth scurrilous abuse against the Roman Catholics, and well earns his soubriquet of foul-mouthed Bale. Occasionally, when obliged to praise the virtues or the learning of a Roman Catholic writer, he insinuates that he was secretly attached to the reformed doctrines.

BALE, ROBERT, a native of Norfolk, entered the Carmelite order at Norwich, and studied partly at Oxford and partly at Cambridge. He became prior of the house of Carmelites at Burnham Norton, Norfolk, where he died 11 Nov., 1503. He wrote 'Historia Heliæ Prophetæ;' 'Officium Simonis [Stoc] Angli;' and 'Annales breves ordinis Carmelitarum.'

BALECHOU, JEAN JACQUES NICHOLAS, a French engraver, was born at Arles 1715, and died at Avignon, 18 Aug. 1765. He was expelled from the academy of painters for taking prof impressions of his print of Frederick Augustus, elector of Saxony and king of Poland, contrary to the orders of the dauphines. His engravings are held in high estimation.

BALEN, HENRY VAN, an historical and portrait painter, born at Antwerp, 1560; died there 1632. His son, John Van Balen, distinguished himself as a painter of history and landscapes.

BALEN, MATTHIAS, a Dutch antiquary, born at Dordt, 1611; died 1680. He wrote the Description of his native city, which was published in 1677, and is a work of considerable merit.

BALES, CHRISTOPHER, a Catholic priest, and missionary in England, being condemned to die on account of his character, was executed at the end of Fetter Lane, in Fleet Street, London, 4 March, 1590. Two laymen suffered the same day for relieving and entertaining him.

BALES, PETER, a celebrated calligraphist, born 1547. He resided for some years in Gloucester

BALESTRA.

Hall, Oxford, where it is supposed he taught penmanship. His micrographical performances were so wonderful that Holingshed has taken notice of them, and Evelyn says that 'he wrote, in 1587, the Lord's prayer, creed, decalogue, two short Latin prayers, his own name, motto, day of the month, year of our Lord, and of the queen's reign, to whom he presented it at Hampton Court, all within the circle of a single penny, encased in a ring and border of gold, and covered with crystal, so nicely written as to be plainly legible, to the admiration of all who saw it.' He was much employed by secretary Walsingham in detecting secret correspondence, and imitating handwriting. But though he rendered service to the State, he seems to have been neglected by the government, and was obliged to keep a school in the Old Bailey for his subsistence. In 1595 he had a trial of skill in writing with one Daniel Johnson, the prize being a golden pen of £20 value, which our author gained. Bales was involved in the affair of the earl of Essex, and suffered imprisonment for some time. He died about 1610. His 'Writing Schoolmaster,' 4to., London, 1590, consists of three parts, the first being devoted to the 'Art of Brachygraphy,' or shorthand writing. Like his predecessor, Dr. Timothy Bright, he had no idea of an alphabetic basis for his stenographic system, which consists entirely of arbitrary signs. His method was to classify words in dozens, each dozen headed by a Roman letter, with certain commas, periods, and other marks to be placed about each letter in appropriate situations, so as to distinguish the words from one another. It was reserved for John Willis, B.D., to invent the first alphabetical system of stenography. An admirable memoir of Bales, by William Oldys, is in the 'Biographia Britannica.'

BALESTRA, ANTHONY, an eminent historical painter, born at Verona, 1666; died 2 April, 1740. In 1694, he gained the prize of merit given by the academy of St. Luke.

BALEY, or BAILEY, WALTER, M.D., an English physician, was born at Portsmouth, in Dorsetshire, 1529, and educated at Winchester school and New College, Oxford. He became regius professor of physic in that university, and physician in ordinary to Queen Elizabeth. Died 3 March, 1592-3. He wrote 'A Discourse of Three Kinds of Pepper in Common Use,' 1558; 'A Brief Treatise of the Preservation of the Eyesight;' and 'Directions for Health, Natural and Artificial, with Medicines for all Diseases of the Eye.'

BALESTRA, ALEXANDER, a novelist and miscellaneous writer, was born of poor parents at Monnikie, Forfarshire, 1 March, 1767. At the age of twenty-six he became clerk to a merchant and manufacturer at Arbroath, and ultimately succeeded to the business, which was so profitable that in a few years he was enabled to purchase considerable property. In 1814 he removed to Trarick to undertake the management of a branch of a London house, which was shortly afterwards involved in bankruptcy. In 1818 he removed to Edinburgh, and was employed as a clerk by Mr. Blackwood the publisher; but, in June 1819, being seized with paralysis, he was compelled to resign this employment. From that time until his death, which took place 12 Sept., 1829, he spent his days in a wheel-chair, and devoted himself entirely to literature. In addition to numerous papers in periodical publications, he wrote 'Campbell; or, the Scottish Probationer,' 3 vols., 8vo., Edinburgh, 1818; 'Contemplation, and other Poems,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1820; 'The Farmer's Three Daughters,' a novel, 3 vols., 8vo., London, 1822; 'The Foundling of Glenhorn; or, the Smuggler's Cave: a Romance,' 3 vols., 8vo., London, 1823; 'Characters omitted in Crabbie's Parish Register,' 8vo. Edinburgh, 1825; 'Highland Mary, a Novel,' 4 vols., Edinburgh, 1827. A posthumous volume of his remains was published under the title of 'Weeds and Wild Flowers,' with a memoir by D. M. Moir, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1830.

BALFOUR, SIR JAMES, a Scotch historian and antiquary, was born about 1600, and from an early age devoted his time to the study of heraldry, genealogy, and the history and antiquities of his native country. Repairing to London to prosecute his researches, he there became acquainted with Sir Robert Cotton, Sir William Segar, Sir William Dugdale, Roger Dodsworth, and other noted antiquaries, and obtained from the College of Arms a highly honourable testimonial as to his acquirements. In 1630 he was created Lord Lyon king-at-arms, having just before received the honour of knighthood. In Dec., 1633, he was created a baronet. Being deprived by Cromwell of the office of Lord Lyon, he thenceforward lived in retirement, partly at Falkland palace, and partly at his seat of Kinnaird. Died Feb., 1657. His 'Historical Works' were published by James Haig, from the original manuscripts preserved in the library of the Faculty of Advocates, 4 vols., 8vo., London, 1825.

BALFOUR, SIR JAMES, of Pittendreich, a Scotch statesman, was made a lord of session, 1563. He is said to have been the original deviser of the murder of Darnley, and to have prepared the house in the Kirk of Field for the reception of the intended victim. Shortly afterwards he was appointed governor of Edinburgh Castle, which he surrendered to Murray on very advantageous terms. In 1567 he was made president of the College of Justice, and it is supposed that he died in 1583. He is the reputed author of the well-known collection of decisions entitled 'Balfour's Practices;' but it is certain that, though he may have contributed to that work, he was not its compiler. Robertson stigmatises Sir James Balfour as 'the most corrupt man of his age.'

BALFOUR, JAMES, of Pilrig, in the shire of Edinburgh, was born in or about 1703, and was admitted an advocate of the Scotch bar, 1730. Subsequently he became sheriff substitute of the county of Edinburgh, which office he resigned 1754. On 28 Aug. in the last-named year, he was chosen professor of pneumatics and moral philosophy in the university of Edinburgh, which chair he resigned in May, 1764, for that of the law of nature and nations. He died at Pilrig, 6 March, 1795. Mr. Balfour was among the first who combated the sceptical philosophy of Hume. This he did in two anonymous treatises, the one entitled 'A Delineation of Morality,' and the other 'Philosophical Dissertations.' He also contested the doctrines contained in Lord Kames's Essays on Morality and Natural Religion. The candour and good temper with which he wrote commanded the approbation even of his opponents.

BALFOUR, ROBERT, a distinguished scholar, is supposed to have been born in Scotland about 1550. He studied at the universities of St. Andrews and Paris, being subsequently appointed principal of Guienne College, Bordeaux. When he died is not recorded. Balfour, who was a warm supporter of the doctrines of the Catholic church, wrote 'Versio et Notæ ad Gelasium Cyzicenam de Cutus Consiu Nicæni et versio ad Theodorum Presb. de Incarnatione Domini,' 8vo., Paris, 1599; 'Versio et Comm. ad Cicomedis Meteora,' 4to., Bordeaux, 1705; 'Commentarius in Organum Logicum Aristotelis,' 2 vols. 4to., Bordeaux, 1616; 'Comm. in Organum Aristotelis,' folio, Bordeaux, 1618; 'Commentarius in Ethica Aristotelis,' 4to. Paris, 1620.

BALGUY, JOHN, a learned divine, was born at Sheffield, 12 Aug., 1686. In 1702 he was admitted at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. In the Bangorian controversy Mr. Balguy distinguished himself so highly that Bishop Hoadly gave him a prebend in the church of Salisbury. In 1730 he was presented to the vicarage of Northallerton, in Yorkshire. Died 21 Sept., 1748. In addition to his tracts on the Bangorian dispute, Mr. Balguy wrote, 'On the Beauty and Excellence of Moral Virtue,' 1726; 'The Foundation of Moral Goodness; or, a Farther Inquiry into the Original of our Idea of Virtue,' 1728; 'Divine Rectitude; or, a Brief Inquiry concerning the Moral Perfections of the Deity,' 1730; 'An Essay on Redemption,' 1741; and 'Sermons.'

BALGUY, THOMAS, D.D., son of the preceding, was born at Coxclose, near Ravensworth Castle, in Yorkshire, 27 Sept., 1716. He received his education under his father, and then proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and in 1758 became doctor in divinity. In 1746 he was presented by his father to the rectory of North Stoke, near Grantham, which he vacated in 1771, on being inducted to the vicarage of Alton, in Hampshire. In 1757 he obtained a prebend in Winchester cathedral, and afterwards was made successively archdeacon of Salisbury and Winchester. In 1769 he published a sermon at the consecration of Dr. Shute Barrington, bishop of Llandaff, which was answered, in a very weak manner, by Dr. Priestley. In 1772 he pressed a masterly charge, in which he defended subscription to the Articles. In 1775 he preached the sermon at the consecration of Bishops Hurd and Moore, which discourse, when printed, was also attacked in print by a dissenter. In 1775 Dr. Balguy edited the sermons of Dr. Powell, to which he prefixed a memoir of the author. On the death of Bishop Warburton he was offered the see of Gloucester, which he declined on account of his health and the decay of his sight. In 1782 he published 'Divine Benevolence Asserted and Vindicated,' 8vo., and in 1785 reprinted his father's 'Essay on Redemption.' The same year he published a collection of his own sermons and charges. He died 19 Jan., 1795.

BALL, Sir ALEXANDER, a distinguished British naval officer, who was created a baronet on account of the services he rendered to his country as governor of Malta, died 25 Oct., 1809.

BALL, JOHN, a Puritan divine, born at Cassington, Oxfordshire, 1585. He received his education at Brazenose College, Oxford. On taking his degrees, he became tutor in the family of Lady Calmondeley, after which he obtained orders from an Irish bishop without subscription. In 1610 he had the curacy of Whitmore, Staffordshire, but its value being no more than £20 a year, he also kept a small school. Died 20 Oct., 1640. Though disaffected to the ceremonies of the church, he opposed those who separated on that account. One of his books, on the Grounds of the Christian Religion, was translated into the Turkish language.

BALLANDEN. See BELLENDEN.

BALLANTYNE, JAMES, a celebrated printer of Edinburgh, who brought out many of the works of Sir Walter Scott, died 17 Jan., 1833.

BALLANTYNE, JAMES R., LL.D., an eminent orientalist, sometime principal of the Benares College, India, died 16 Feb., 1804.

BALLANTYNE, JOHN, younger brother of James Ballantyne, was also a printer and publisher at Edinburgh. For his sole benefit Sir Walter Scott commenced the admirable series of the Lives of the Novelists, published with Ballantyne's name. Mr. Ballantyne composed a novel entitled 'The Widow's Lodgings.' Born about 1774; died 16 June, 1821.

BALLARD, GEORGE, a biographer, was born at Campden, in Gloucestershire. His parentage was mean, and being of a feeble constitution he was apprenticed to a stay and habit maker, which business he carried on for some time, devoting his leisure hours to study, particularly the Saxon language. His diligence attracting the notice of Lord Chedworth, and the gentlemen of the neighbourhood, they subscribed £60 a year to enable him to reside at Oxford, where Dr. Jenner, president of Magdalen College, made him one of the clerks of that house, and gave him both chambers and commons. He afterwards obtained the situation of beadle to the university, but died in the prime of life in June, 1755. He published in 1752, by subscription, a quarto volume entitled 'Memoirs of British Ladies who have been celebrated for their Writings, or Skill in the Learned Languages.' This excellent book was reprinted in 8vo. in 1775; but both editions are now scarce. Mr. Ballard left numerous manuscript collections, which are in the Bodleian Library; and an account of Campden Church, written by him, is in the 'Archæologia.'

BALLARD, JOHN, a priest, who, being privy to Babington's conspiracy, was executed at London, 20 Sept., 1586.

BALLARD, SAMUEL JAMES, a brave English admiral, died 9 Oct., 1820.

BALLARD, VOLANT VASHON, a British admiral of some note, born about 1774; died 12 Oct., 1832.

BALLEXSERD, JACQUES, of Geneva, author of two admirable works on the physical education of children, was born 1726, and died 1774.

BALLIN, CLAUDE, a celebrated goldsmith of Paris, who carried his art to a degree of perfection unknown before his time. He understood drawing, and imitated the finest pieces of antiquity, adding to them many graces from his own invention. Cardinal Richelieu, and afterwards M. Colbert, employed Ballin in various works, all of which are uncommonly beautiful, and display great genius and taste. This excellent workman died at Paris 22 Jan., 1678, aged 63.

BALLIOL, Sir JOHN DE, founder of a college called by his name at Oxford, was born at Barnardcastle, in Durham. In 1248 he was made governor of Carlisle; and on the marriage of Margaret, daughter of Henry III., to Alexander III., king of Scotland, the guardianship of the royal pair, as well as of the kingdom, was committed to him and another lord; but in about three years they were charged with abusing their trust, and the king of England marched towards Scotland to punish them. However, by advancing a considerable sum of money, Balliol made his peace. In 1263 he laid the foundation of Balliol College, which was completed by his widow. In the contest between Henry III. and the barons he sided with the king, for which the barons seized his lands. He died in 1269, leaving three sons. There is a portrait of him at Oxford, and another of his wife Devorgilda; but, according to Granger, the latter was drawn from Jenny Reeks, an apothecary's daughter at Oxford, who was esteemed a beauty. Jenny afterwards married Mr. Mugg, rector of Stockton, Warwickshire, and of Inkborough, Worcestershire. Her husband, dying, left her the advowson of Stockton, for the sake of which one Allen, a buccancer, and afterwards a clergyman, courted her, thus obtaining the advowson. No sooner, however, had he got possession of it than he brought from Jamaica a wife and several children.

BALLIOL, JOHN DE, king of Scotland, was son of the above, and being at the head of the English interest in Scotland, on the death of Queen Margaret in her passage from Norway, he laid claim to the vacant throne by virtue of his descent from David, earl of Huntingdon, brother to William, the Lion King of Scotland. His principal competitor for the crown was Robert Bruce. Edward I. being declared arbitrator, he pronounced in favour of Balliol, who did homage to him for the kingdom 12 Nov., 1292. But he did not hold the sceptre long, for remonstrating against the power assumed by Edward over Scotland, he was summoned to his tribunal as a vassal. Balliol, provoked at this, concluded a treaty with France, the consequence of which was a war with England. The battle of Dunbar decided the fate of Balliol, who surrendered his crown into the hands of Edward, who sent him and his son to England, where they were committed to the Tower. At the intercession of the Pope they were released and delivered to his legate in 1299. Balliol then went to France, where he resided upon his own estate, and died there in 1314. His son Edward afterwards set up a claim to the kingdom of Scotland, invaded and recovered it, but held it not long; and dying afterwards without issue, the family became extinct.

BALLOIS, LOUIS JOSEPH PHILIPPE, a French journalist and statistical writer, born at Périgueux 1778; died at Paris 4 Dec., 1805. He edited several newspapers, in which he propounded extreme democratic opinions, and published eight octavo volumes of 'Statistical Annals.'

BALLOW, RICHARD, an English lawyer, born in or about 1707. Having been a legal tutor to some of the Townshend family, he obtained a situation in the Exchequer, which placed him in independent circumstances. He used to frequent Tom's coffee-house, in Devereux court, then the resort of men of learning, and among the rest Dr. Akenside, with whom Mr. Ballow could seldom agree. At length a serious quarrel produced a challenge from the physician, which the lawyer would have declined. He was a little deformed man, and remarkable for wearing a sword of unconscionable length, though he had little inclination to use it. On this occasion matters ended without bloodshed, for Ballow would not fight in the morning, nor Akenside in the afternoon; and this prudent determination enabled their mutual friends to effect a reconciliation. Ballow published a folio volume, without his name, entitled 'The Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity, alphabetically digested. With three Tables.' He was a great Greek scholar, and famous for his knowledge of the old philosophy. Died 26 July, 1782.

BALLYET, EMANUEL, a French antiquary, born at Marnay 1700. He entered the order of discaled Carmelites, and was afterwards made bishop of Babylon (Bagdad). He published a relation of the rise, progress, and present state of the mission to Babylon, 1754, and formed a noble collection of medals. Died 1773.

BALMER, GEORGE, an English painter, was born 1805, being the son of a house-painter in North Shields. It was intended that he should succeed to his father's business, but soon showed himself disqualified for mechanical pursuits. After spending some years in Edinburgh, he returned to his native place, and his first production of an ambitious character was a 'View of the Tyne,' which was exhibited in Newcastle, in 1829, at Mr. Richardson's 'Academy of Arts.' In 1831 he had several pieces in the Newcastle Exhibition of Water Colour Drawings, one of which, 'The Juicy Tree bit,' purchased by Dixon Dixon, Esq., was the gem of the rooms. Soon after, in conjunction with Mr. Carmichael, was produced 'Collingwood at the Battle of Trafalgar,' a splendid work of art, which was secured by the Trinity House of Newcastle. In 1832 or 1833 he set off for the Continent, and made an extensive tour, the fruits of which are found in a vast number of pictures which he painted on his return, and which are held in high estimation by connoisseurs. But his genius was eminently British, and nearly all his best works are representations of the coasts and rivers of his native country; the introduction of a mill, or a stranded ship, or a shingly coast, showing how influenced he was by the reminiscences of his boyhood. In 1836 he was engaged by Messrs. Findon to illustrate 'The Ports and Harbours of Great Britain,' and many beautiful views were executed by him for that work. These were his last productions of much importance. He died at Ravensworth 10 April, 1846.

BALMER, ROBERT, D.D., an eminent Scotch divine of the Secession church, born in Roxburghshire 22 Nov., 1787; died 1 July, 1844.

BALMERINO, ARTHUR ELPHINSTONE, sixth and last lord, was born 1688. He joined the standard of the young Chevalier in 1745, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Culloden. Being convicted of high treason, he was executed on Tower-hill, with the earl of Kilmarnock, 18 Aug., 1746.

BALMEZ, JAIME LUCIANO, a Spanish publicist and philosopher, was born at Vique, in Catalonia, 28 Aug., 1810, and died 9 July, 1848. His best-known work is 'El Protestantismo comparado con el Catolicismo en sus relaciones con la Civilisation Europea,' 3 vols. 8vo., Madrid, 1848. From the French version of this celebrated work an English translation was made by C. J. Hanford and R. Kershaw, and published under the title of 'Protestantism and Catholicity compared in their Effects on the Civilization of Europe,' 8vo., London, 1849. 'The Foundations of Religion explained,' translated from the Spanish of Balmez by the Very Rev. Canon Dalton, appeared at London in 1858. 8vo.

BALMFORD.

BALMFORD, WILLIAM, an English writer, author of 'Navigation Spiritualized,' died 1678.

BALNAVES, HENRY, a Scotch reformer, was born at Kirkcaldy, in the reign of James V., and educated at St. Andrew's, after which he went to France to complete his studies. On his return home he was taken into the family of the earl of Arundel, but having embraced the Protestant faith, he was dismissed. He was taken by the French, who sent him, with the rest of the garrison, to France; but about the year 1559 he returned to Scotland. In 1563 he was made one of the lords of session, and appointed, with other commissioners, to revise the book of discipline. He died at Edinburgh in 1579. He wrote a treatise on Justification, which was published in 1584, 8vo.

BALSHAM, HUGH DE, an English prelate, took his name from Balsham, Cambridgeshire, the place of his birth. Having assumed the Benedictine habit, he became sub-prior of the monastery at Ely. In 1256, he was unanimously elected bishop of Ely by the monks. This gave great offence to the king, who had recommended his chancellor, Henry de Wingham, for the vacant see. The pope, however, decided in favour of Balsham, who received episcopal consecration at Rome, 14 Oct., 1257. He died at Doddington, in the isle of Ely, 25 June, 1286. This prelate founded Peterhouse, now called St. Peter's College, the most ancient educational establishment in the university of Cambridge. The deed of foundation is dated 21 March, 1284, and by it he converted the hospital of St. John the Evangelist, in Cambridge, which had been founded about 1135, into a college, to be governed in all things according to the rule of the scholars at Merton, in Oxford.

BALTIMORE, FREDERICK CALVERT, Lord, eldest son of Charles, the sixth lord, was born 1731, and succeeded his father, 1751. After his return from France he married the youngest daughter of the earl of Bridgewater. In 1768 he was tried for a rape, but acquitted; soon after which he went to Naples, where he died, in 1771, without issue. He published 'A Tour to the East, with Remarks on Constantinople and the Turks,' 8vo., 1767; 'Gandia Poetica, Latina, Anglicana, et Gallica Lægæ composita, 1769,' and 'Cælestes et Inferi,' 4to, Venice, 1771.

BALTIMORE, GEORGE CALVERT, first lord, was born at Kipling, Yorkshire, 1582, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, after which he went abroad, and on his return entered into the service of Secretary Cecil, who became high treasurer. James I. made him one of the clerks of the privy council, and in 1619 he was appointed secretary of state. In 1625 he was created Lord Baltimore, and had a grant of land in Newfoundland; which settlement being abandoned, in consequence of the ravages committed by the French, he obtained another grant in Virginia, where a colony was afterwards formed called Maryland, the capital being named after his title. Died 15 April, 1632. Lord Baltimore, who was a Roman Catholic, wrote 'Carmen funebre in D. Hen. Unionum;' 'The Answer of Tom Tell-Truth;' 'The Practice of Prayers;' and 'The Lamentation of the Kirk.'

BALTUS, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a learned French Jesuit, born at Metz, 8 June, 1667; died 9 March, 1743. He became librarian of the college of Jesuits at Rhims, after having filled various offices in the society. His works are 'Une réponse à l'Histoire des Oracles de Fontenelle,'

BALZAC.

2 vols. 8vo., Strasburg, 1707 and 1708; Défenses de SS. PP. accusés de Platonisme; 'La Religion Chrétienne prouvée par l'Accomplissement des Prophéties;' and 'Défense des Prophéties de la Religion Chrétienne,' 3 vols. 12mo.

BALTZAR, THOMAS, an admirable performer on the violin, was born at Lubeck, in the first half of the seventeenth century. In 1651 he proceeded to London, and shortly afterwards went to Oxford where he resided for two years. At the Restoration he was appointed master of the concerts to King Charles II. His death, which was hastened by habits of intemperance, took place in July, 1663.

BALUË, JEAN LA, a famous cardinal, son of a tailor, or miller, at Angle, in Poitou, where he was born about 1421. By his intrigues and crimes he rose to the highest dignities in France during the reign of Louis XI. He first attached himself to Jean Juvenal des Ursins, bishop of Poitiers, then to Jean de Beauveau, bishop of Angers. He had the place of intendant des finances, was made bishop of Evreux, 1465, and of Angers, 1467. Paul II. created him cardinal, 18 Sept., 1467, for procuring the abolition of the pragmatic sanction. Baluë was so fond of war, that he reviewed the troops in his rochet and hood, which so displeased the count de Dammartin, that he one day took the liberty of saying to Louis XI., 'Permit me, sire, to go to Evreux, in order to examine and ordain the clergy, for the bishop is engaged here in reviewing the soldiers.' Baluë drove out his benefactor Jean de Beauveau, caused the death of Charles de Melun, and betrayed the king, his master. He was then arrested, and detained above eleven years in prison, notwithstanding the Pope's remonstrances. Cardinal Julien de la Rovère, however, procured his liberty, 1485, whereupon he went to Rome, and gained great credit there by his intrigues. Sixtus IV. sent him as legate a latere into France, 1484; and Innocent VIII. made him bishop of Albano, and afterwards of Prenesta. He died at Ancona, 1491.

BALUZE, ÉTIENNE, a learned French writer, was born at Tulle, 24 Dec., 1630. His tastes led him to the study of ecclesiastical history. In 1656 M. de Marca persuaded him to go to Paris, where M. Colbert made him his librarian. He was appointed professor of canon law in the royal college, 1670, the chair having been instituted on purpose for him; and was afterwards inspector at the same college. His 'Genealogical History of the House of Auvergne,' published in 1708, led to his disgrace and exile, but he returned to France some years afterwards, and died at Paris, 28 July, 1718. He published no fewer than forty-three works, some of which extend to several volumes. The principal are 'Regum Francorum capitularia,' 1677; 'Epistolæ Innocentii Papæ III.,' 1682; 'Conciliorum nova collectio,' 1683; and 'Les Vies des Papes d'Avignon,' 1693, 2 vols.

BALZAC, HONORÉ DE, a celebrated French novelist, one of the most laborious and prolific writers of the present century, was born at Tours, 20 May, 1799, and died at Paris 20 Aug., 1850. Having devoted himself to authorship, he published several works anonymously, and obtained great success. When, therefore, his name was openly avowed in 1849, he stepped at once into a high place in fame, not in France alone, but all over Europe. His success was almost as brilliant as that of Sir Walter Scott. What Scott has done for the past, Balzac may be said to have done for the present. In addition to his romances, he wrote some theatrical pieces, and for awhile edited and contributed a good deal to the 'Revue Parisienne.' But he chiefly shines as a romancist. His design was to make all his romances form one great work, under the title of the 'Comedie Humaine,' the whole being a minute dissection of the different classes of French society. Only a little while before his death he stated that in what he had done he had but half accomplished his task.

BALZAC, JEAN LOUIS GUEZ DE, a celebrated French writer, born at Angoulême, 1594. He is regarded as the reformer of the French language, his prose compositions being in an elegant and precise style unknown before his time. His merit was appreciated by Cardinal Richelieu, who granted him a pension of 2,000 livres, and the titles of counsellor of state and royal historiographer. Died 18 Feb., 1655. Of his numerous works the 'Familiar Letters' are the best known to modern readers.

BAMBOCCI, ANTHONY, an Italian sculptor and architect, born at Piperno about 1368; died at Naples about 1435.

BAMBOCCIO. See LAAR, PETER VAN.

BAMBRIDGE, Cardinal. See BAYNBRIGG.

BAMPFIELD, FRANCIS, a divine, was born in Devonshire, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. In 1641 he obtained a prebend in Exeter Cathedral, and the living of Sherborne, in Dorsetshire, but was deprived of both at the Restoration for nonconformity. He was imprisoned in Newgate for holding conventicles, and died there, 16 Feb., 1684. He wrote a book in vindication of the seventh-day sabbath, &c.

BAMPTON, JOHN, founder of the Bampton lectures at Oxford, received his education at Trinity College, in that university, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. Having taken orders he was, in 1718, preferred to a prebend in the church of Salisbury, which dignity he held till his decease in 1751. In pursuance of his will, eight divinity lecture sermons were preached on as many Sunday mornings in term between the commencement of the last month in Lent term, and the third week in Act term, upon one of the following subjects:—To confirm and establish the Christian faith, and to confute all heretics and schismatics; upon the divine authority of the holy Scriptures; upon the authority of the writings of the primitive fathers, as to the faith and practice of the primitive church; upon the divinity of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; upon the divinity of the Holy Ghost; upon the articles of the Christian faith as comprehended in the Apostles' and Nicene creeds. The lecturer, who must be at least a M.A. of Oxford or Cambridge, is chosen annually by the heads of colleges. This bequest did not take effect till 1789, when the first lecturer was chosen.

BANBURY, earl of. See KNOLLYS.

BANCAL, HENRI, a notary of Paris, known as Bancal des Issarts, adopted the principles of the Revolution, and acquired some notoriety as a politician. Born 3 Nov., 1750; died June, 1826.

BANCK, LAURENCE, was born at Nordköping, in Sweden, and in 1647 was constituted extraordinary professor of law at Francker, which office he held till his death on 13 Oct., 1662. He wrote some legal treatises.

BANCK, PETER VAN DER. See VANDERBANK.

BANCROFT.

BANCROFT, JOHN, nephew of the archbishop of Canterbury, became bishop of Oxford, for which see he built an episcopal palace at Cuddesden. Born 1574; died Feb., 1640.

BANCROFT, JOHN, an English surgeon and dramatist, died 1696, and was buried in St. Paul's, Covent Garden. He wrote 'Sertorius,' a tragedy, 1679; and 'Henry II.,' a tragedy, 1693. Coxeter attributes another play to this author, of which he says he made a present, both as regards reputation and profit, to Mountfort, the actor, whom he attended when he was stabbed by Lord Mohun.

BANCROFT, RICHARD, D.D., a learned prelate, born at Farnworth, Lincolnshire, Sept., 1544. After being severely trained in grammatical learning he was sent to Christ's College, Cambridge, at the charge of his great uncle Hugh Curwen, archbishop of Dublin. He became a scholar of the house, and in 1566-7 proceeded B.A. In 1570 he commenced M.A. as a member of Jesus College; and on 2 April, 1585, was created D.D. He was made treasurer of St. Paul's 1585-6, and in 1586 rector of Cottingham, Northamptonshire. About the same time he became one of the commissioners for causes ecclesiastical, and there were few cases of importance brought before that tribunal wherein he did not take a principal part. Towards the Puritans he evinced uniform hostility. He detected the printers and publishers of the Marprelate tracts, and instructed the queen's counsel, when they were brought for punishment before the Star Chamber. It was by his advice, too, that answers to these publications, written in a similar scolding and satirical vein, were set forth. These to a great extent had the effect of causing a temporary reaction of public feeling against the Puritans. About 1592 he became chaplain to Archbishop Whitgift, and soon afterwards took an active part in the proceedings against Barrow, Cartwright, Penry, Udall, and others. On 21 April, 1597, he was elected bishop of London. It is said that the differences which prevailed between the secular priests and the Jesuits at the close of Elizabeth's reign were fomented by Bancroft, who supplied the seculars with arguments against their opponents. In the conference with the Puritans at Hampton Court in Jan., 1603-4, he bore a very prominent part. On 6 Oct., 1604, King James I. nominated him to the archbishopric of Canterbury, which he held till his decease. As metropolitan he displayed great firmness. He died of the stone, after having endured excruciating torment, 2 Nov., 1610, and was buried in Lambeth Church. Among his works are 'A Srray of the pretended Holy Discipline,' 1593; and 'Davngerovs Positions and Proceedings, published and practised within this Iland of Brytaine, under pretence of Reformation, and for the Presbiteriall Discipline,' 1593. The authorized translation of the Bible was commenced under his supervision, and he warmly espoused, if he did not originate, the project of founding a college for controversialists at Chelsea. The learning and ability of Archbishop Bancroft are unquestionable, and he was a writer of no mean power; but his arbitrary principles, intolerance, and cruelty, greatly injured the church which he desired to serve. To him, however, is certainly due the merit of having obtained an act of parliament which put an end to the alienation of episcopal lands, of which so many scandalous instances are recorded.

BANCROFT, THOMAS, a poetical writer, was a native of Swarkeston, Derbyshire, and resided at Brailley, in that county. Philip Kinder says he was 'surnamed the small poet by way of friendly irony; but worthie to be ranked amongst the best classicks and great volumnes; he writ the Glutton's Feast, concerning Dives and Lazarus, the Battle of Letzphen, with other poems.' Bancroft was author of a curious volume, entitled 'Two Bookes of Epigrammes and Epitaphs. Dedicated to two top-branches of Gentry: Sir Charles Shirley, Baronet, and William Davenport, Esquire,' 4to., London, 1639. He was also a contributor to the 'Lachrymæ Musarum.'

BANDARRA, GONZALES, a Portuguese shoemaker, though unable to read or write, composed prophetic couplets on the future fate of his country, which were in everybody's mouth. He was prosecuted by the Inquisition, and died after the year 1556.

BANDELLO, MATTHEW, an Italian writer, was born at Castelnuovo 1480, and assumed the Dominican habit. His country being overrun by the Spaniards after the battle of Pavia in 1526, he repaired to France, and was appointed bishop of Agen, but resigned that dignity shortly afterwards in order that he might devote all his time to the cultivation of literature. He died about 1562. His 'Novelle,' or 'Tales,' written after the manner of Boccaccio, have passed through many editions, the most complete of which appeared at London, 4 vols. 4to., 1740, and again in 9 vols. 8vo., 1791.

BANDINEL, BULKELEY, D.D., keeper of Bodley's library at Oxford, was born in that city 21 Feb., 1781. From Dr. Valpy's school at Reading he proceeded to the foundation at Winchester, and thence, in 1800, as a scholar to New College ('B.A. 1805; M.A. 1807'). He was appointed sub-librarian of the Bodleian 1810, and three years afterwards succeeded to the office of head librarian, which he retained till within about twelve months of his death. In 1823 he obtained the rectory of Haughton-le-Skerne, in the county of Durham, and proceeded B.D. and D.D. Died 6 Feb., 1861. His administration of the Bodleian was characterized by zeal, energy, courtesy, and discretion. For many years he was one of the delegates of the University press, and took a prominent part in editing Dugdale's 'Monasticon,' Carendon's 'History of the Rebellion,' and other works of mark.

BANDINEL, DAVID, a divine, is said to have been an Italian of noble extraction. In 1620 he became dean of Jersey, which preferment he held till his death. He long entertained a deadly animosity against the lieutenant-governor of the island, Sir Philip de Carteret, to gratify which he opposed the parliamentary party, and prosecuted his victim with unchristian and unabated rancour to the brink of the grave. For a period of fourteen months he and his son James were confined in the castle of Mount Orgueil. In endeavouring to make their escape the elder Bandinel fell from a great height, and sustained injuries which resulted in his death the following day, 11 Feb., 1644-5. The son was recaptured, and died in prison 18 March, 1645-6.

BANDINEL, JAMES, brother of the Rev. Bulkeley Bandinel, D.D., the keeper of Bodley's library at Oxford, was born in or about 1783, and for fifty years was a clerk in the Foreign Office. He retired on the full allowance of £1500 per annum two or three years before his death, which took place at London 29 July, 1849. He wrote 'Some Account of the Trade in Slaves from Africa, as connected with Europe and America; from the Introduction of the Trade into Modern Europe down to the Present Time; especially with reference to the Efforts made by the British Government for its Extinction,' 8vo., London, 1842.

BANDINELLI, BACCIO, a painter and celebrated sculptor of Florence. His pictures are defective in the colouring, but the design is correct. He excelled chiefly in sculpture. Born 1487; died 1559.

BANDINI, ANGELO MARIA, an Italian bibliographer and antiquary, was a canon of Florence, and during forty-four years keeper of the Laurentian library in that city. Born 25 Sept., 1726; died 1800.

BANDURI, ANSELM, a Benedictine of Ragusa, who went to France 1702. He was admitted a member of the Academy of Inscriptions, and the duke of Orleans appointed him his librarian 1724. He died at Paris 14 Jan., 1743, leaving 'Imperium Orientale, sive Antiquitates Constantinopolit.' 2 vols. folio, 1711; and 'Numismata Imperatorum Romanorum a Trajano Decio ad Paleologos Augustos,' 2 vols. folio, 1718.

BANGIUS, PETER, a Swedish divine, born at Helsingburg 1633. He was professor of theology at Abo thirty-two years, and in 1682 was made bishop of Wzburg. Died 1696. He wrote an ecclesiastical history of Sweden, &c.

BANGIUS, THOMAS, professor of divinity, philosophy, and Hebrew, at Copenhagen, was author of a Hebrew lexicon and other works. Born 1600; died 27 Oct., 1661.

BANIER, ANTOINE, a French writer and ecclesiastic, born at Dalet, in Auvergne, 2 Nov., 1673; died 19 Nov., 1741. His numerous works relate for the most part to the Greek and Roman mythology and the manners and customs of the nations of antiquity. There is an English translation in 3 vols. 4to. of his 'Mythology; or, Fables explained by History.'

BANISTER, JOHN, an English physician, studied at Oxford, and having obtained from that university a licence to practise medicine, settled about 1573 at Nottingham, where he resided several years, being in great repute both as a physician and surgeon. Subsequently he removed to London, and in 1594 obtained from the College of Physicians a licence to practise in the metropolis on condition, however, that in cases of a serious kind he should call in the aid of some member of the college. When he died is unknown. Banister wrote 'A needful, new, and necessary Treatise of Chirurgerie, briefly comprehending the general and particular cure of Ulcers,' 8vo., London, 1575; 'The History of Man, sucked from the Sap of the most approved Anatomists,' folio, London, 1578; 'Compendious Chirurgery; gathered and transcribed especially out of Wecker, 1amo., London, 1585; and 'Antidotary Chirurgical; containing a variety of all sorts of Medicines, &c.,' 8vo., London, 1589. The above works were collected and printed after the author's death, 4to., London, 1633.

BANISTER, JOHN, an English violinist, and director of the Chapel Royal in the reign of Charles II., was born in the parish of St. Giles, London, about 1630, and died 3 Oct., 1676.

BANISTER, JOHN, son of the preceding, also attained celebrity as a performer on the violin and as a composer for his instrument. Born at London about 1663; died 1725.

BANISTER, JOHN, a botanist, who made a voyage to the East Indies, and afterwards settled in Virginia, of which province he intended to write a natural history. He sent Mr. Ray a catalogue of plants, forming part of his design, but was killed shortly afterwards, in 1689, by a fall from the rocks.

BANISTER, RICHARD, an English physician, resided at Stamford, and died about 1624. He was accounted a great oculist, and wrote a treatise of diseases of the eyes.

BANKERT, JOSEPH VAN TRAPPEN, a brave Dutch admiral, died 1645. His son, Adrian Bankert, likewise distinguished as an admiral, died 1684.

BANKES, HENRY, was born 1757, and educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1778, and M.A. 1781. He entered parliament in 1780 as one of the representatives of the borough of Corfe Castle, and was for many years an active member, generally supporting Mr. Pitt. He continued to represent this family borough till 1826, when he was elected for the county of Dorset. At the general election the same year he was rechosen, but at that of 1830 he was ousted after a severe struggle. He died at Tregothan, Cornwall, 17 Dec., 1834. Mr. Bankes wrote 'The Civil and Constitutional History of Roine, from the Foundation to the Age of Augustus,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1818.

BANKES, Sir JOHN, an English judge, was born in 1589, at Keswick, in Cumberland, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Gray's Inn, and in due course was called to the bar. In 1634 he was made attorney-general, and in 1640 chief justice of the common pleas. He displayed his loyalty and courage at the beginning of the Rebellion; and his lady defended Corfe Castle, in the Isle of Purbeck—the family seat—against the parliament forces till it was relieved by the earl of Carnarvon. Sir John continued with the king at Oxford, and died there, 28 Dec., 1644.

BANKS, JOHN, an English dramatic writer of the eighteenth century, was bred a lawyer, but quitted the practice of the courts for the tragic muse. He produced several pieces which were once popular, particularly 'The Unhappy Favourite; or, Earl of Essex.' When he died is uncertain. His remains were deposited in the church of St. James, Westminster.

BANKS, JOHN, an English writer, was born at Sunning in Berkshire, in 1709. He served his time to a weaver at Reading, after which he came to London, and turned bookseller, but not meeting with success, he had recourse to his pen, and published 'The Weaver's Miscellany,' a collection of poems; 'The Life of Christ,' folio; and 'A Critical Review of the Life of Oliver Cromwell,' 8vo. He was also employed in the 'Old England' and 'Westminster' Journals. He died at Islington, 19 April, 1751.

BANKS, Sir JOSEPH, president of the Royal Society, was son of William Banks, esq., of Revesby Abbey, Lincolnshire, and was born in London, Feb., 1743. He received his education at Harrow and Eton, and afterwards at Christ Church, Oxford, but left the university on the death of his father in 1761. Two years afterwards he made a voyage to Labrador and Newfoundland. In 1768 he and

Dr. Solander went with Lieutenant Cook to Otaheite, in which voyage Mr. Banks narrowly escaped perishing by the frost on the island of Terra del Fuego. After his return he received the degree of doctor of laws at Oxford; and in 1772 undertook a voyage to Iceland and the Hebrides. In 1778 he received the Order of the Bath, and was elected president of the Royal Society. In 1781 he was created a baronet; but about two years afterwards his conduct in the Royal Society gave such offence to the scientific members as had very nearly resulted in a schism. The tempest, however, was dispersed, and the president retained his seat, without any further opposition, during the remainder of his life. Sir Joseph, though afflicted for many years with the gout, continued his exertions for the improvement of agriculture and the extension of natural history until his death, which took place on 19 June, 1820. Sir Joseph published 'A Short Account of the Cause of the Disease in Corn, called by the Farmers the Blight, the Mildew, and the Rust,' 8vo., 1805; and 'Circumstances relating to Merino Sheep, chiefly collected from the Spanish Shepherds,' 4to., London, 1809. He also contributed several papers to the Transactions of the Horticultural and Linnæan Societies, and to the 'Archæologia.'

BANKS, SARAH SOPHIA, sister of Sir Joseph Banks, was, like her brother, strongly animated with a zeal for science and the study of natural history, of which she made a valuable collection. A large portion of her collections and books was presented to the British Museum. She died in Soho Square, London, 27 Sept., 1818, aged 74.

BANKS, THOMAS, an eminent sculptor, was born in 1735 in Gloucestershire, where his father was steward to the duke of Beaufort. The son was brought up under Kent, the architect; but afterwards he evinced a turn for sculpture, and obtained some prizes from the Royal Academy. He was also sent by the same body to study in Italy, where he executed some excellent pieces, particularly a basso relievo representing Caractacus brought prisoner to Rome, and an exquisite figure of Cupid catching a butterfly. From Italy he went to Petersburg, where the Empress Catherine purchased the last-mentioned production, and placed it in a temple constructed for the purpose, in the gardens of Czarscozelo. After residing two years in Russia, Mr. Banks returned to his native country where he soon acquired extensive fame and employment. Among other works executed by him was a colossal statue of Achilles bewailing the loss of Briseis, now in the hall of the British Institution. Various monuments in the Abbey and St. Paul's are testimonies of his genius, particularly that of Sir Eyre Cooté. He died 2 Feb., 1805.

BANKS, THOMAS CHRISTOPHER, a genealogical writer, born in or about 1765; died at Greenwich, 30 Sept., 1854. He kept an establishment in John Street, Pall Mall, which he called the 'Dormant Peerage Office,' and undertook the conduct of several claims to dormant peerages, none of which were successful. Mr. Banks for many years assumed the title of 'Baronet of Nova Scotia.' He published a number of genealogical works, the chief of which are 'Dormant and Extinct Baronage of England, from the Conquest to the Year 1806,' 4 vols. 4to., 1806-1837; 'An Analysis of the Genealogical History of the Family of Howard,' 1812; 'An Historical and Critical Enquiry into the nature of the Kingly Office, the Coronation, and the Office of King's Champion,' 1814; 'History of the Ancient Noble Family of Marryun, their singular office of King's Champion, and the services of London, Oxford, &c., on the Coronation Day,' 1816; 'Stemmata Anglicana; or, a Miscellaneous Collection of Genealogy, shewing the Descent of numerous Eminent and Baronial Families, &c.,' 1825, republished in 1837 with the new title of 'The Dormant and Extinct Baronage of England,' and forming vol. 4 of his earlier work; 'A Genealogical and Historical Account of the ancient Earldom of Salisbury,' 1832; and 'Baronia Anglica Concentra; or, a Concentrated Account of all the Baronies, commonly called Baronies in Fee, deriving their origin from Writ of Summons, and not from any specific limited creation, &c.; whereunto is added the Proofs of Parliamentary Sitting from Edward I. to Queen Anne; also a Glossary of Dormant English, Scotch, and Irish Peerage Titles,' 2 vols. 4to., Ripon, 1844.

BANNATYNE, GEORGE, a Scottish merchant, who made a celebrated collection of the poetry of his native country, was born 22 Feb., 1545, and died before 1608. His MS., now preserved in the Advocates' Library, is a folio of upwards of 800 pages. A club, called after his name, was established in 1823, for the publication of works illustrative of the history and antiquities of Scotland.

BANNATYNE, RICHARD, secretary to John Knox, compiled 'Memoriales of Transactions in Scotland, from 1569 to 1573.' Hardly anything is known of his personal history.

BANNATYNE, SIR WILLIAM MACLEOD, a Scotch judge, born 26 Jan., 1743; died 30 Nov., 1833. He was raised to the judicial bench, 1799, and on his retirement, in 1825, was created a knight. He was a contributor to 'The Mirror' and 'The Lounger.'

BANNES, DOMINIC, an eminent Spanish divine of the Dominican order, born at Mondragon 1527. He was confessor to St. Teresa, and professed dominity at Alcalá, Valladolid, and Salamanca, with reputation: He died at Medina-del-Campo, 1 Nov., 1604. He composed large Commentaries on the 'Summa' of St. Thomas Aquinas.

BANNIER, JOHN VON, a famous Swedish field-marshal, born at Diurnsholm 1596. After the death of Gustavus Adolphus he was appointed general of the Swedish troops in Germany. He twice defeated the Saxons, and beat the Imperialists. On the death of his wife, who had attended him in all his expeditions, he appeared inconsolable; but in following her remains to Erfurt, he fell violently in love with the daughter of the margrave of Baden, and, regardless of his honour, left the army to the care of his lieutenants. At last he married the lady, and died shortly afterwards, in 1641.

BANNISTER, CHARLES, an English actor and vocalist, father of the more celebrated 'Jack' Bannister, was born in Gloucestershire, and died 20 Oct., 1804.

BANNISTER, JOHN, a famous comedian, was son of Charles, above-mentioned, and born at Deptford, 12 May, 1760. His father instructed him in the theatrical art, and Garrick also gave him valuable advice. After his death he was engaged at Drury Lane, and gained the reputation of being an actor of the first rank, both in comedy and tragedy. In 1783 he married Miss Harper, and died 7 Nov., 1836. 'Memoirs' of him were pub-

BANTI, GEORGINE BRIGITTE, a celebrated Italian vocalist, born about 1756; died at Bologna 18 Feb., 1806.

BAPTHORPE, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, was rector of the English college at Rome from 1650 to 1653, being appointed in the latter year to the government of St. Omer's College. Died at Ghent 1656, æt. 60.

BAPTIST, JOHN. See MONNOVER.
BAPTISTIN, JOHN BAPTIST STUCK, a musical composer, born at Florence of German parents; died at Paris, 9 Dec., 1755.

BARADÆUS. See ZANZALUS.
BARANZANO, REDEMPTUS, a divine of the Barnabite order, was born at Vercelli, in Piedmont, 1590. He was highly skilled in philosophy and mathematics, which he professed at Annecy. He afterwards went to Paris, where he was much esteemed by the learned. Lord Bacon corresponded with him, and entertained no mean opinion of his learning. He died at Montargis 23 Dec., 1622. His works are 'Uranoscopia,' folio, 1617; 'De novis opinionibus physicis;' and 'Campus Philosophicus.'

BARATIER, JOHN Philip, a prodigy of his kind, was born at Schwoback, in Anspach, 19 Jan., 1730-1. His father, who was pastor of the Calvinistic church at Schwoback, took upon himself the care of his son's education, and taught him languages without study, and almost without his perceiving that he was learning them, by only introducing words of different languages, as it were casually into conversation with him. By these means, when he was but four years old, he spoke every day French to his mother, Latin to his father, and High Dutch to the maid, without the least perplexity to himself, or the least confusion of one language with another. The other language of which he was master he learnt by a method yet more uncommon, which was by only using the Bible he then proposed to learn, accompanied by a translation. Thus he understood Greek at six, and Hebrew at eight years of years of age. He afterwards applied himself to the study of the Fathers and the Councils, of philosophy, mathematics, and, above all, of astronomy. This boy, as he really was, formed schemes for finding the longitude, which he sent in Jan., 1735, to the Royal Society of London; and though these schemes had been already tried and found insufficient, yet they exhibited such a specimen of his capacity for mathematical learning, that the Royal Society of Berlin admitted him the same year as one of their members. In 1735 he went with his father to Halle, at which university he was offered the degree of doctor in philosophy. Baratier drew up that night fourteen theses in philosophy and the mathematics, and defended them the next day so very ably that all who heard him were delighted and amazed. He was then admitted to his degree. He died at Halle, 5 Oct., 1740, in the twentieth year of his age.

BARBA, ALVAREZ ALONZO, curate of St. Bernard de Potosi in the seventeenth century, wrote a curious treatise on metallurgy, printed at Madrid, 1620.

BARBACENA, FEHSBERTO CALDEIRA BRANT, marquis of, a marshal and senator of Brazil, born at Sabara 1772; died at Rio de Janeiro 10 June, 1842.

a Spanish poet, romancist, and dramatist, born at Madrid about 1580; died 1630.

BARBARA, ST., a celebrated virgin of Nicomedia. Her father, Dioscurus, had the cruelty to behead her himself when he found that neither entreaties nor menaces could prevail on her to abandon the Christian faith. This event is supposed to have occurred about the year 240. Festival Dec. 4.

BARBARELLI. See GIORGONE.

BARBARO, DANIEL, great-grandson of the celebrated Francis, was born at Venice 8 Feb., 1513. In 1548 he was sent ambassador to England, and two years afterwards was appointed coadjutor of the patriarch of Aquileia. He assisted at the Council of Trent, where he acquired great reputation. Died 12 April, 1570. He was a good mathematician, and wrote treatises on perspective, commentaries on Vitruvius, and other works.

BARBARO, FRANCIS, a learned Venetian, born 1398; died 1454. He was governor of several places, but distinguished himself more by literary achievements. He wrote 'De Re Uxorica,' on the choice of a wife and the duties of women, and translated some of Plutarch's 'Lives.'

BARBARO, HERMOULAS, nephew of Francis, above-mentioned, was learned in the Greek language, and translated some of Æsop's fables into Latin at the age of 12. He became successively bishop of Treviso and Verona, dying in the latter city 1471.

BARBARO, HERMOULAS, one of the most learned men of the fifteenth century, was born at Venice 21 May, 1454, being son of Francis Barbaro, who has been already mentioned. He was deputed by the Venetians to the emperor Frederic, and to his son Maximilian, king of the Romans, being also entrusted with other important negotiations. Pope Innocent VIII., to whom he was sent ambassador, appointed him to the patriarchate of Aquileia, of which, however, he could never take possession, having accepted it without the permission of the Venetian senate. Died 14 June, 1493. Barbaro had a good knowledge of Greek. He translated 'Dioscorides,' and the Didactics of Aristotle, but his principal work is entitled 'Castigationes Pliniane,' an illustration of Pliny's Natural History. It first appeared at Rome, in 2 parts, 1498 and 1493, fol.

BARBAROSSA, ARUCH, a pirate, famous for his robberies and valour, took Algiers, and placed himself on the throne. After conquering the king of Tunis, and gaining other victories, he was killed in an ambuscade 1518.

BARBAROSSA, HEYRADIN, succeeded his brother in the kingdom of Algiers, and was general of the sultan Soliman II. He took Tunis 1535, ravaged Sicily, and died 1547, aged 80.

BARBAROUX, CHARLES JEAN MARIE, a French writer, and one of the victims of the Revolution, was born at Marseilles 6 March, 1767, and perished on the scaffold 25 June, 1793. He wrote a treatise on the extinct volcanoes near Toulon, &c.

BARBATELLI, BERNARDINO, an Italian painter, nicknamed Poccelli, born 1542; died at Florence 1612.

BARBAULD, ANNA LÆTITIA, daughter of John Aikin, LL.D., was born at Knibworth-Harcourt, Leicestershire, 20 June, 1743. In 1774 she became the wife of Rochemont Barbauld, a dissenting minister. She first became known as a writer by a collection of poetry entitled 'Miscellaneous

BARBEYRAC.

Pieces,' which ran through four editions. Her husband having settled at Diss, in Norfolk, she opened a school in the neighbouring village of Palgrave, which soon rose to great celebrity. She also rendered great service to the cause of education by publishing elementary books—'Early Lessons for Children.' Besides these she also composed several pamphlets on political and religious questions. In 1804 she removed with her husband to Newington Green, and in the same year published a selection of papers from the 'Spectator,' 'Rambler,' 'Guardian,' and 'Freeholder,' preceded by memoirs of the several writers, and critical remarks on their works. She also published a selection from the correspondence of Samuel Richardson, 6 vols. 8vo., 1804; and supervised an edition of the 'British Novelists' in 50 vols. 12mo. Her last work was a poem entitled 'Eighteen Hundred and Eleven.' Died 9 March, 1825. Her works, with a biographical memoir prefixed, were published shortly after her death by Miss Lucy Aikin.

BARBAZAN, ARNAUD GUILHEM DE, chamberlain to Charles VII. of France, and general of his armies, was styled Le Chevalier sans reproche ('The Spotless Knight'). It was he who defeated the chevalier de l'Escale in the famous single combat at the head of the English and French armies in 1404. Barbazan defended Melun against the English, and died of the wounds he received at the siege of Nancy, 1432.

BARBAZAN, ETIENNE, a French writer, born at St. Fargeau 1696; died 8 Oct., 1770. He is known as the editor of old French books, particularly 'Tales and Fables of the twelfth and thirteenth Centuries'; 'L'Ordene de Chivalerie'; and 'Le Casteoiment; ou, Instructions d'un pere à son fils.'

BARBEAU DE LA BRUYERE, JEAN LOUIS, a French geographer, born at Paris 29 June, 1710; died 20 Nov., 1781.

BARBER, CHARLES, an English painter, was a native of Birmingham, but settled at Liverpool, where he resided above forty years. He died Jan. 1854.

BARBER, JOHN, LL.D., of Oxford, a civilian of some note, died 1549. He was much patronized by Cranmer.

BARBERINI, ANTHONY, a distinguished cardinal and statesman, born 1608; died, near Rome, 3 Aug., 1671. He was successively bishop of Poitiers and archbishop of Rheims.

BARBERINI, FRANCIS, one of the best Italian poets of his age, was born at Barberino 1264, and died at Florence 1348. None of his writings are extant, except his 'Documenti d'Amore' ('Precepts of Love'), a moral poem, calculated to inspire the love of glory and virtue.

BARBERINI, FRANCIS, nephew of Pope Urban VIII., was born 23 Sept., 1597. He was created cardinal 1623, and died 10 Dec., 1679.

BARBEYRAC, CHARLES, an eminent French physician born 1620; died 1699. He wrote only two works, viz., 'Traité de Médecine,' and 'Questions Medicæ duodecim.' Locke, who was intimate with him, compared him to Sydenham.

BARBEYRAC, JEAN, nephew of Charles, above-mentioned, was born at Beziers, in Lower Languedoc, 15 March, 1674; became professor of law and history, first at Lausanne, and afterwards at Groningen, and died 3 March, 1744. He translated into French Puffendorf's 'Law of Nature and Nations,' the treatise on the Duties of Man, by the same author; and Grotius's book of the Rights of War and Peace, with learned notes. He also wrote a treatise on the Morality of the Fathers, another on Gaming, and other works.

BARBIÉ DU BOCAGE, JEAN DENIS, a geographer, born at Paris 28 April, 1760; died 28 Dec., 1852.

BARBIER, MARIE ANNE, a lady of Orleans, who studied the belles lettres and poetry, and went to reside at Paris, where she died, at a very advanced age, 1745. She published several tragedies, and some operas, in which the abbé Pellegrin is supposed to have had a large share.

BARBIER D'AUCOUR, JEAN, a French advocate, born at Langres about 1641; died at Paris 13 Sept., 1694. He wrote 'Sentimens de Cleanthe sur les Etreitens d'Ariste et d'Eugene, par le Pere Barbiers,' and other pieces, against the Jesuits.

BARBIERI, JOHN FRANCIS, a painter, commonly called Guercino, was born at Cuto, in the duchy of Ferrara, 1590, and studied under Cremonini and Benedetto Guarnari. He adopted three different manners; the first in imitation of Caravaggio, which he quitted for the more agreeable style of the Caracci; and latterly he attempted a light and airy method, in which he did not succeed. His pictures of the second description are the best. Died 22 Dec., 1666.

BARBIERI, PAUL ANTHONY, a painter of the Neapolitan school; brother of Guercino; was born 1590, and died 1640.

BARBOSA, ARTUS, a native of Aveiro, in Portugal, was one of the chief restorers of polite literature in Spain. After studying in Italy, under Argilio Politian, he became professor of Greek at Salamanca, where he resided twenty years, and then returned to his native country, on being appointed preceptor to the princes Alphonso and Henry, sons of Emanuel, king of Portugal. Died 1540. He left a volume of Latin epigrams, and other works in verse and prose.

BARBOSA, AUGUSTINE, son of Emanuel, mentioned below, was born at Guimaraens 1590. He studied at Rome, and acquired a knowledge of the civil and canon laws equal to that possessed by his father. Being at Madrid, he was, in 1648, appointed bishop of Ugento, in the province of Oranto. Died 1649. Barbosa was an indefatigable writer; his works extend to sixteen volumes in folio.

BARBOSA, EMANUEL, an eminent Portuguese lawyer, born about 1548; died 1638.

BARBOSA, PETER, a native of Viana, in Portugal, became professor of law at Coimbra, and afterwards chancellor of Portugal. Died 1606. He wrote several legal treatises.

BARBOU, JEAN JOSEPH, a celebrated Parisian printer, died 1752. His brother Joseph (died 1737), and his nephew, Joseph Gerard Barbou (died 1813), were also eminent printers at Paris.

BARBOUR, BARBER, or BARBAR, JOHN, a Scotch divine and poet, was born about 1316, and educated in the abbey of Aberbrothock. David Bruce made him his chaplain, and sent him on several embassies. He wrote in verse the Life and Actions of Robert Bruce, printed at Edinburgh in 1616, 12mo.; at Glasgow in 1665, 8vo.; and edited by Pinkerton, in 3 vols. 12mo. in 1790. Barbour died towards the end of the year 1395.

BARCKHAUSEN, or BARKHAUSEN, JOHN CONRAD, professor of chemistry at Utrecht, wrote 'Ele-menta Chæmiæ,' 'Historia Medicinæ,' and other works. Born 1666; died 1 Oct., 1723.

BARCLAY, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Scotchman, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and afterwards joined either the order of St. Benedict or that of St. Francis. On 7 Feb., 1546, he was instituted to the vicarage of Much Badew, Essex, and on 30 March, in the same year, to the vicarage of St. Matthew, at Wokey, Somersetshire. He was also vicar of All Saints, Lombard-street, London, which benefice he retained till his death. That event took place at Croydon, in Surrey, probably in the year 1552. His works are 'The figure of our Mother Holy Church, oppressed by the French King;' 'The Miseries, or Miserable Lives of Courtiers;' a translation of 'The Ship of Fools,' fol., London, 1509, 1570, the latter edition, containing also Barclay's 'Ecloges;' 'The Castell of Labour,' 1500; 'Chronicle compiled in Latyn by the renowned Sallust,' fol., London, no date; 'The Myroure of Good Maners;' 'The Introductory to Write and to pronounce French,' fol., London, 1521; and a translation from the Latin of 'The Lives of St. Margaret, St. Katharine, St. Etheldreda, St. George, &c.'

BARCLAY, JOHN, the author of 'Argenis,' was son of William Barclay, the eminent civilian, and born at Pont-a-Mousson, in Lorraine, 28 Jan., 1582. Soon after King James I. succeeded to the crown, Mr. Barclay came to England, and was kindly received by his majesty, as well upon his own as upon his father's account. He lived about ten years in England, together with his wife and family; all the while enjoying a place of profit, which the king had bestowed upon him. But at last, either too much complaisance to his Protestant friends, or the zeal which he had shown against the pope's temporal power, in publishing and maintaining his father's writings, made many suspect that there was some danger of his going over to the Church of England. This report, being spread abroad, gave him great uneasiness; so he resolved to quit the kingdom. Accordingly, in 1616, he, with his whole family, set out for Rome, where he made his personal appearance before his holiness; and submitted himself, both in regard of his own, and of his father's writings. To convince the world of his steadiness in the Catholic faith, he published a book against the sectaries of the age, and thereby removed the suspicion which had been entertained respecting him. He died at Rome 12 Aug., 1621. John Barclay wrote a narrative of the gunpowder treason; a treatise in defence of his father's book on the power of the pope, against Bellarmine; 'Parænesis, or Exhortation to the Sectaries;' 'Icon Animarum;' and a romance, entitled 'Argenis,' printed first at Paris 1621, 8vo. The last mentioned work is full of incident and description. It is in Latin, and the style has received the commendations of the greatest scholars. Its popularity was of long duration, and the admiration of Cowper and D'Israeli have made its title familiar to English readers. An English translation appeared in 1628, entitled 'John Barclay, his Argenis, translated out of Latine into English; the prose upon his maiesties command by Sir Robert Le Grys, Knight, and the verses by Thomas May, esq.' Another translation appeared in 1636; and a third in 1772, with the title of 'The Phoenix, or the History of Polyarchus and Argenis.'

BARCLAY, JOHN, a Scotch clergyman, founder of a religious sect called the Bereans, was born 1734, and died 29 July, 1798. His followers voluntarily assumed the name of Bereans, which was derived from the Jews of Berea, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles xvii. 11, as being 'more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so.' An edition of Mr. Barclay's works was published at Edinburgh, in 3 vols.

BARCLAY, JOHN, M.D., a celebrated anatomist, nephew of John Barclay, the Berean, was born at Cairn, Perthshire, 1760, and educated at St. Andrew's and Edinburgh. He died in the latter city, 21 Aug., 1826. Mr. Barclay published several esteemed works on anatomy. His anatomical collection, now known as the Barclayan Museum, was bequeathed to the College of Surgeons at Edinburgh.

BARCLAY, ROBERT, of Urie, the Apologist for the Quakers, was born 23 Dec., 1648, at Gordons-town, in the shire of Moray, in Scotland. His father, Colonel David Barclay, sent him, when young, to Paris, under the care of his uncle, the principal of the Scotch college, who brought him up in the Catholic religion. The colonel, hearing of the conversion, took his son home when he was sixteen, and, turning Quaker himself, prevailed on Robert to do the same. In 1670 he published a tract in defence of the sect to which he had attached himself, entitled 'Truth cleared of Calumnies;' and, in another printed in 1672, he says that, in obedience to the divine command, he had passed through Aberdeen, clad in sack-cloth, and covered with ashes, preaching faith and repentance to the inhabitants. In 1675, appeared his 'Catechism and Confession of Faith,' which was followed by a pamphlet against the Ranters and other libertines. In 1676 he published in Latin, at Amsterdam, his famous 'Apology for the Quakers,' an English translation of which appeared in 1678, with a remarkable dedication to Charles II. Besides these works, he wrote a treatise on Universal Love; a defence of his book against the Ranters; and a tract on the necessity of immediate revelation. Barclay had some public disputations with members of the university of Aberdeen; and he travelled through a great part of England, Holland, and Germany, in company with William Penn, for the purpose of propagating quakerism. He died at Urie 3 Oct., 1690. An account of his life and writings was published in 1802, by Joseph Gurney Bevan, a member of the Society of Friends.

BARCLAY, Captain ROBERT, the pedestrian. See ALLARDICE.

BARCLAY, WILLIAM, an eminent civilian, born in 1540, and educated in the university of Aberdeen. He rose into favour with Mary, queen of Scots; but when that princess was made prisoner, he went to France, where he studied the law at Bourges, and took his doctor's degree in that faculty. Afterwards he obtained a professorship at Pont-a-Mousson, with the title of counsellor of state to the duke of Lorraine. In 1581 he married a lady of good family, who brought him one son, whom the Jesuits endeavoured to lure into their society, which design Barclay opposed, and thereby incurred their resentment to such a degree, that he was obliged to quit Lorraine. He then came to London, where James I. offered him a place and pension, both of which he declined. In 1604 he returned to France, and obtained the professorship of civil law at Angers. His works are 'De Regno et Regalio Potestate adversus Buchananum, Brutum, Boucherium, et reliquos Monarchomachos,' 1600; 'De Potestate Papæ,' 8vo. (in this performance, he disputes the right of the pope over sovereigns); 'A Commentary on the title of the Pandects de Rebus creditis et de jurejurando,' 8vo. He died towards the close of 1605.

BARCLAY, WILLIAM, M.D., was brother of Sir Patrick Barclay, of Tolly, and was born in Scotland about 1570. He studied at Louvaine, under the famous scholar Justus Lipsius, who had the highest opinion of his ability. Having been appointed a professor in the university of Paris, he taught humanity there for several years. Subsequently he returned to Scotland, where he practised medicine for a short time, but was under the necessity of returning to the Continent, on account of his being a member of the Roman church. It is supposed that he died about 1630. His best known work, entitled 'Nepenthes, or the Vertues of Tobacco,' appeared at Edinburgh in 1614, 8vo. It is exceedingly scarce, but has been reprinted in the first volume of the 'Spalding Club Miscellany.' Barclay is a zealous advocate for the use of what he terms 'this happie and holie herbe;' and in some verses subjoined to his dedication it is declared that—

'Tobacco neither athereth health nor hew.
Ten thousand thousands know that this is true!'

His other works are 'Oratio pro Eloquentia,' 8vo. Paris, 1598; 'C. Cornelii Taciti Opera quæ exstant, ad exemplar quod J. Lipsius quantum recensuit. Scorsim excusi commentarii ejusdem Lipsii, meliores plenioreque, cum curis secundis, et auctariolo non ante adjecto. Guil. Barclayus Præmetia quadam ex Vita Agricolaë libavit. Adjecti sunt indices aliquanto ditiores.' 8vo., Paris, 1599. Mennage, Bayle, and other writers have erroneously ascribed these Præmetia to William Barclay the civilian; 'Callirhoe, commonly called the Well of Spa, or the Nymph of Aberdeen, resuscitated by William Barclay, Mr. of Art and Doctor of Physick,' 1615 and 1670; 'Judicium de Certamine G. Eglismii cum G. Buchanano pro Dignitate Paraphraseos Psalmi ciii.' etc., 8vo. Lond. 1620; and Latin poems in the 'Delicia: Poetarum Scotorum,' i. 137.

BARCLAY DE TOLLY, MICHAEL, a Russian general, born 1755; died 25 May, 1818.

BARCOCHAB, or BARCOCHEBAS, a famous impostor in the reign of the emperor Adrian. He gave himself out to be the Messiah, and assumed the name of Barcochab, i.e., Son of the Star, in allusion to Balaam's prophecy. He rebuilt Jerusalem, fortified Bitter (anciently Bethoron), made himself master of several fortresses, and caused a horrible massacre of Christians and Romans. Rufus, governor of Judæa, being unable to appease this sedition, Adrian employed Julius Severus, a famous military commander, who was recalled from Britain for that purpose. This general cut off the Jews' provisions, attacked them separately, and blocked them up in Bitter, which was taken in 134, after a siege of above three years. Barcochab and his followers were slain there, and about 50,000 Jews perished miserably in this rebellion.

BARCOS, MARTIN DE, an ecclesiastic, born at Bayonne 1600; died 22 Aug., 1678. He was the nephew and pupil of the celebrated abbat of St. Cyran, who made him his secretary, and did nothing without consulting him. They wrote in conjunction the book entitled 'Petrus Aurelius.' He succeeded his uncle in the abbacy of St. Cyran 1644. De Barcos engaged warmly in the Jansenist controversy, and, among other works, wrote 'The Greatness of the Roman Church, established upon the Authority of St. Peter and St. Paul;' 'Treatise on the Authority of St. Peter and St. Paul, which is vested in the Pope, the Successor of those two Apostles;' 'Exposition of the Faith of the Roman Church concerning Grace and Predestination.'

BARCROFT, GEORGE, a musician, was matriculated as a sizar of Trinity College, Cambridge, 11 Decr. 1574, and went out B.A. 1577-8. He was appointed a minor canon of Ely and organist of that cathedral in 1579, and it is supposed that he died about 1610. Two anthems composed by him are extant, and to him has been ascribed a service in G. It appears, however, that this service was composed in 1532, probably by Thomas Barcroft, who is said to have been organist of Ely about 1535.

BARDE. See BELLAMONT.

BARDE, JEAN DE LA, marquis of Maroues, upon the Seme, and ambassador from Louis XIV. to the cantons of Switzerland. He wrote in Latin the History of France, from the death of Louis XIII. to the year 1652, and a treatise on the 'Dogma of the Eucharist.' Died 1692, aged 90.

BARDESANES, a heretic of the second century, was a native of Edessa, in Mesopotamia, and the disciple of Valentinus, part of whose opinions he adopted with new errors of his own. He maintained the Divine unity, but with the addition that the world is governed by inferior agents, called Sons, of whom Jesus Christ is the chief. There was another of the same name, who lived in the third century, and wrote a curious book on the Gynnosophists.

BARDET, PIERRE, a French advocate and legal writer, born 1591; died 30 Sept., 1685.

BAR DIN, PIERRE, born at Rouen 1590, was admitted into the French academy, and cultivated philosophy, mathematics, and poetry. He was drowned 1637 in attempting to save M. de Huzeres, who had been his pupil. M. Bardin left 'Le Grand Chambellan de France,' 1623, fol.; 'Pensées Récus sur l'Ecclesiaste,' 8vo., 1629; and 'Le Discours de l'Honnête Homme,' 8vo., 2 vols.

BAR DNEY, RICHARD, a native of Lincolnshire, was educated at Oxford, and became a Benedictine monk. He was living 1504. He wrote a book in verse entitled 'Vita Roberti Grostest quondam Episcopi Lincolnienensis.'

BAR DWELL, THOMAS, an English artist, who wrote a treatise on the 'Practice of Painting and Perspective,' 1756, 4to. He painted a picture of 'Dr. Ward relieving the Sick,' from which a print was engraved. There is also a mezzotinto of Admiral Vernon, from a picture painted by Bardwell in 1744. When he died is unknown.

BAREBONE, or BARBON PRAISE GOD, a leather-seller, was one of the most active members of the parliament assembled by Cromwell, which took its denomination from his name. When Monk came to London, with a view of restoring the king, and was intent upon the re-admission of the excluded members, this man appeared at the head of a numerous rabble of fanatics, which was alarmed even to that intrepid general. A petition was presented by their leader to the parliament for the exclusion of the king and royal family. Monk, who knew the popularity of Barebone, was obliged to make a general muster of his army, and wrote a letter to the parliament, in which he expostulated with them for giving too much countenance to this furious zealot and his adherents. He died Jan., 1679-80, and was buried at St. Andrew's, Holborn.

BARENTS, DIETRICH, a painter of history and portrait, born at Amsterdam 1534; died 1582.

BARÈRE DE VIEUSAC, BENTRAND, one of the most conspicuous actors in the first French revolution, was born at Tarbes 10 Sept., 1755. He was a member of the States-General and of the National Convention, and presided over the latter assembly on the trial of Louis XVI. He belonged to the party of Girondins. During the progress of the revolution he distinguished himself as an author and journalist, and in the latter capacity edited the earliest organ of his party, 'Le Point du Jour.' At the request of Napoleon he translated the poems of Ossian into French, and was author of several works of revolutionary principles. At the restoration of the Bourbons he was exiled as a regicide. After the revolution of 1830 he returned to France, and, retiring to his native place, died there 15 Jan., 1841. His 'Memoires' have been edited by H. Carnot and David.

BARETTI, JOSEPH, an Italian writer, was born at Turin, about 1716. He led an irregular life in his younger years, and, having spent his paternal estate, came to England as a teacher of languages. About the year 1751 he published a defence of Italian poetry, against Voltaire, which procured him the friendship of Dr. Johnson, who introduced him to the family of Mr. Thrale, the brewer, as tutor to his children. In 1780 he returned to Italy, and established a paper at Venice, with the title of 'Frusta Litteraria,' which was soon suppressed. After an absence of six years he visited England again, and resumed his former employment. Having the misfortune to kill a man in an affray, he was tried at the Old Bailey, and acquitted, it being proved that he only acted in self-defence. Mr. Baretti was appointed foreign secretary to the Royal Academy; and he also had a small pension from government. He died 5 May, 1789. His principal works are 'Travels through France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy,' 4 vols. 8vo.; 'An Introduction to the Italian Language,' 8vo.; 'The Italian Library,' 8vo.; 'A Dictionary of the English and Italian Languages,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'A Grammar of the Italian Language,' 8vo.; 'An Account of the Manners and Customs of Italy,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Introduction to European Languages,' 8vo.; 'Tutte l'Opere di Machiavelli,' 3 vols. 4to.; 'Easy Phraseology in learning Italian,' 8vo.; 'Discours sur Shakspeare et sur M. de Voltaire,' 8vo.; 'Scelta di Lettere familiari,' 2 vols. 12mo.; 'Carmen Seculare of Horace,' 4to.; 'Guide through the Royal Academy,' 4to.; 'Dissertation Epistolar accrea unas Obras de la Real Academia Espanola,' 4to.; 'Tolondron, Speeches to John Bowles, about his Edition of Don Quixote,' 8vo.; he gave to the 'European Magazine' several of Dr. Johnson's letters, and intended more for the public, but his executors, with Gothic barbarity, burnt all his papers.

BAREUTH, or BAREITH, FREDERICA SOPHIA WILHELMINA, margravine of Baireith, sister of Frederick II. of Prussia, was born 5 July, 1709, and died 14 Oct., 1758.

BARFORD.

BARFORD, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, was educated at Eton, and elected from thence to King's College, Cambridge (B.A., 1742; M.A., 1746; D.D., 1771). He was public orator of the university from 1761 to 1768, when he stood candidate for the Greek professorship, but without success. He was presented by his college to the rectory of Fordingbridge in Hampshire, which he resigned for Kimpton in Hertfordshire, and held this living with that of Allhallows, Lombard Street, to his death. In 1770 he was installed prebendary of Canterbury, in consequence of his having been speaker to the House of Commons, before whom he preached the sermon on the 30th of January that year. He also published, 'In Pindari primum Pythium Dissertatio,' 4to.; 'A Latin Oration at the Funeral of Dr. George, Provost of King's College,' 1756.; 'Concio ad Clerum,' 1784. Dr. Barford died at Kimpton in November, 1792.

BARGAGLI, SCIPIO, a gentleman of Sienna, one of the most illustrious members of the Academy 'degli Intronati,' died 27 Oct., 1612. He published some academical discourses and funeral orations; 'Il Turamino,' in which he proves that the Italian language is more Siennese than Tuscan; and an Italian translation of Buchanan's tragedy of Jephthas.

BARGRAVE, ISAAC, D.D., dean of Canterbury, was born at Bridge, in Kent, in 1586. He was educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, and in 1611 was incorporated at Oxford. When King James visited the former university, Mr. Bargrave was one of the performers in the celebrated comedy of 'Ignoramus,' exhibited there for the entertainment of his majesty. He became rector of Eythorne in Kent, minister of St. Margaret's, Westminster, and successively prebendary and dean of Canterbury. But at the commencement of the Rebellion he was fined one thousand pounds for being a member of the Convocation. In 1642, Colonel Sandys, whom he had saved from the gallows, made him prisoner, and threw him into the Fleet, where he lay about three weeks; and though he then obtained his liberty, the ill-usage brought on a disorder of which he died, in Jan., 1642-3. Dean Bargrave was chaplain to Sir Henry Wotton, his relation, at Venice, where he contracted an intimacy with Father Paul. He only published three sermons.

BARHAM, HENRY, wrote some papers on Jamaica, and the manufacture of silk, in the 'Philosophical Transactions,' and also 'An Essay upon the Silk Worm,' 8vo., London, 1719. According to Evans's 'Portraits,' he was a F.R.S., and attempted to establish the production of raw silk in this country. He settled his colony of silkworms at Chelsea, and, according to the same authority, died in 1727, aged 50. But for this date I should take him to be the author of 'Hortus Americanus; containing an Account of the Trees, Shrubs, and other Vegetable Productions of South America, and the West India Islands, and particularly of the Island of Jamaica; interspersed with many curious and useful observations respecting their uses in Medicine, Diet, and Mechanics. By the late Dr. Barham. To which are added A Linnæan Index, &c.' 8vo., Kingston, Jamaica, 1794. In the introduction to the above work occurs the following passage:—"It was the wish of the editor to accompany this work with some account of its ingenious and philanthropic author; but his researches and enquiries have not produced any materials wherewith to gratify curiosity. All he can learn is, that he came to this country [Jamaica], early in the present century, and married Elizabeth Foster, the widow of Thomas Foster, esquire, of St. Elizabeth's, in whose right he became possessed of a considerable fortune in that parish; he afterwards purchased of the family of the Stevensons, relations of Mrs. Barham, Mesopotamia estate in Westmorland. In the journals of the assembly we find him a member of that body in the year 1731, and it appears that he returned to England about the year 1740, and settled with his family at Staines, near Egham, where he died, leaving his property in this island to Joseph Foster, the youngest son of Mrs. Barham by her former husband, on condition of his assuming the name and bearing the arms of Barham in addition to those of Foster. This gentleman was the father of the present Joseph Foster Barham, esquire, a member of the British parliament, and lately married to Lady Caroline Tufton, daughter of the earl of Thanet.

BARHAM, RICHARD HARRIS, a comic writer, born at Canterbury, 6 Dec., 1788, and educated first at St. Paul's school, and afterwards at Brasenose College, Oxford. Having taken orders, he became incumbent of Snargate, and curate of Warchorne, Kent. In 1821, however, he removed to London, on being elected a minor canon of St. Paul's. Subsequently, he was appointed a priest of the Chapel Royal, and incumbent of St. Mary and St. Gregory by St. Paul's. Much of his leisure was devoted to literary composition. He wrote a novel, entitled 'Baldwin,' and compiled about one third of the work called 'Gorton's Biographical Dictionary;' but he is now only remembered as the author of the 'Ingoldsby Legends,' a series of comic sketches, chiefly in verse, which appeared originally in 'Bentley's Miscellany,' and being afterwards reprinted in a collected form went through many editions. Mr. Barham died 17 June, 1845.

BARIFFE, WILLIAM, a major in Colonel Hampden's regiment, 1642, published a book of 'Military Discipline,' which passed through several editions.

BARILLON, HENRI DE, a French prelate, born 24 March, 1639; became prior of the abbey of Boulogne; bishop of Luçon, 1672; and died 6 May, 1699, having published several theological treatises.

BARING. See ASHBURTON, Lord.

BARING, SIR FRANCIS, Bart., an eminent London merchant, one of the directors of the East India Company, and sometime M.P. for Taunton, died at Lee in Kent, 11 Sept., 1810. At the time of his decease he was unquestionably the first merchant in Europe, as regards knowledge and ability, as well as character and opulence. He was author of 'The Principle of the Commutation Act, established by Facts,' 8vo., London, 1785; 'Observations on the Establishment of the Bank of England, and on the Paper Circulation of the Country,' 8vo., London, 1797; and 'Observations on the Publication of Walter Boyd, Esq., M.P.,' 8vo., London, 1801.

BARKER, BENJAMIN, a landscape painter of Bath, brother of Thomas, mentioned below, died March, 1838, aged 62.

BARKER, EDMUND, son of John Barker, the dissenting minister, became a physician, and was a member of the club in Ivy Lane, with Dr. Johnson and other literary characters. He professed himself a unitarian, for which Johnson so attacked him, that he withdrew from the society. After practising in London for some time he went to Trowbridge, but returned to the metropolis, and became librarian to the College of Physicians, and the son of Edwards, the ornithologist. He was, however, displaced for some misconduct, and died in obscurity.

BARKER.

BARKER, EDMUND HENRY, an indefatigable classical scholar, was born December, 1788, at Belem village, Yorkshire, of which his father was the incumbent. He was entered of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1807, but left the university without a degree, having a conscientious objection to signing the Thirty-nine Articles. He then resided for some time with Dr. Parr, and afterwards moved to Thetford, Norfolk, which will explain the meaning of the mysterious letters O. T. N. appended to his name on the title-pages of some of his works. He died in London, very poor, in March, 1839. Mr. Barker was a most laborious compiler, but his judgment was far from being equal to his industry. Porson once said to him, 'Sir, you have read a great deal, you have thought very little, and you know nothing.' His works are so numerous as to allow of their titles being given at this place. Suffice it to say that he published some good editions of classical authors, and contributed some sound pieces of criticism to the 'Classical Journal,' the 'Retrospective Review,' and the 'British Critic.' He also had a considerable part in preparing Valpy's edition of Stephen's 'Thesaurus Græcæ Linguae.' Among his miscellaneous publications, are two volumes of anecdotes about Dr. Parr, and a similar collection respecting Professor Porson.

BARKER, GEORGE, F.R.S., a great benefactor to the town of Birmingham, died 6 Dec., 1845, ætat. 70.

BARKER, JOHN, commonly called 'The Sopher of King's,' was elected from Eton to King's College, Cambridge, 1464, and subsequently became a friar minor. The date of his death is unknown. He wrote a work on logic, entitled 'scutum Inexpugnabile.'

BARKER, JOHN, a dissenting minister, first at Hackney, and afterwards at Salter's Hall, London. He was a moderate Calvinist, and very popular as a preacher. Mr. Barker engaged, with some other nonconformist ministers, in the Salter's Hall Lecture against the tenets of the Church of Rome, and published a volume of Practical Discourses, to which, after his death, in 1763, another volume was added.

BARKER, MATTHEW HENRY, an English writer, born 1790; died 29 June, 1846. He was the son of a dissenting minister, and served many years in the navy. From the experience derived in this service he was enabled to depict sea life with great truth and vigour in the novels which he published under the name of the 'Old Sailor.' Among his works were 'Land and Sea Tales,' 'Tough Yarns,' 'The Life of Nelson,' 'Nights at Sea,' and hundreds of communications, in verse as well as prose, to the 'Literary Gazette,' 'Bentley's Miscellany,' 'The Pictorial Times,' and 'The United Service Gazette.'

BARKER, ROBERT, a painter who raised himself from obscurity to notice and affluence by the invention of an exhibition called the Panorama, in which bird-eye views of large and extensive scenery are painted in distemper, with such effect, from a concealed light above, as to produce a brilliant effect. The first picture of this kind was a view of Edinburgh, in 1788, which was followed by one of London. Many other panoramas were subsequently exhibited by Mr. Barker in Leicester Fields, now Leicester Square. He died in April, 1806.

BARKER, SAMUEL, a learned gentleman, of landed estate, at Lyndon in the county of Rutland, who married a daughter of the celebrated Whiston. He was long employed in preparing a Hebrew Grammar, which, however, he left unfinished at his death, about the year 1760. In 1761 was published 'Poesis Vetus Hebraica restituta. Accedunt quædam de Carmine Anacreontis, de Accentibus Græcis, de Scripture Vetere Ionica, de Literis Consonantibus et Vocalibus, et de Pronunciatione Linguae Hebraicæ,' 4to.

BARKER, THOMAS, son of Samuel Barker the Hebraist, was the author of several ingenious pieces, and a fellow of the Royal Society. He was of a delicate constitution from his infancy, but by abstaining from animal food prolonged his life to the age of 88. He died at Lyndon 29 Dec., 1809. His works are, 'The Duty, Circumstance, and Benefits of Baptism,' 'The Messiah; being the Prophecies concerning him methodized, with their accomplishment,' 'The Nature and Circumstances of the Demoniacs in the Gospel,' 'The History of the Parish of Lyndon, for a new edition of Wright's History of Rutland,' 'Account of the Discoveries Respecting Comets.' He also communicated several meteorological journals to the Philosophical Transactions, and some valuable papers on astronomical and other subjects.

BARKER, THOMAS, an English painter, born near Pontypool, Monmouthshire, 1769. At an early age he showed a genius for drawing and designing landscapes; and on the removal of his family to Bath an opportunity was presented for calling his talents into action. Mr. Spackman, an opulent coachbuilder in that city, perceiving in the lad undoubted signs of great ability, took him under protection, liberally provided for him, and gave him every means to follow up the bent of his inclination. At the age of twenty-one he was sent to Rome by Mr. Spackman, who allowed the young artist a carriage and ample funds to maintain his position there as a gentleman. While in the imperial city he painted but little, contenting himself with storing his mind with such knowledge as might be applied usefully afterwards, and becoming an intimate associate of all the artists and literati then in Rome. While Mr. Barker's talents were in full vigour, no artist of his time had a greater hold on popular favour. His pictures of 'The Woodman,' 'Old Tom,' his gipsy groups and rustic figures, have been copied on almost every available material that would admit of decoration. Mr. Barker amassed a considerable fortune by his profession, and died at Bath 11 Dec., 1847.

BARKER, WILLIAM, an English writer, was educated at Cambridge, at the cost of queen Anne Boleyn. He appears to have commenced M.A. 1540, and to have been either of Christ's College or of St. John's College. He afterwards represented Great Yarmouth in parliament, and was secretary to the duke of Norfolk, in whose plots he was implicated. He was author of 'Epitaphia et Inscriptiones Lugubres, cum in Italia animi causa peregrinatur, collecta,' 4to. London, 1554,

BARKER.

1556; 'St. Basil the great, his Exhortation to his kinsmen to the studie of the Scriptures, translated,' 8vo., London, 1577; 'The VIII. bookes of Xenophon, containing the institution, schole, and education of Cyrus, the noble king of Persye: also his civil and principal estate, his expedition into Babilon, Syria, and Egypt, and his exhortation before his death to his children. Translated out of Greek into English,' 8vo., London, 1567; 'The Fearfull Fancies of the Florentine Cooper. Written in Tuscan by John Baptist Gelli,' translation, 8vo., London, 1568, 1599; and Confessions and Statements relative to Thomas duke of Norfolk, John bi-hop of Ross, and others.

BARKER, WILLIAM HIGGS, received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1765. After leaving the university he became master of the grammar school at Carmarthen, a situation which he held with reputation for many years. He subsequently was presented to the vicarage of St. Peter, Carmarthen. Mr. Barker was alive in 1815; but I have not met with the date of his decease. He published 'Grammar of the Hebrew Language,' 8vo. 1774; and 'Hebrew and English Lexicon,' 8vo., 1812.

BARKHAM, or BARCHAM, JOHN, D.D., a divine and antiquary, born at Exeter about 1572. He received his education at Oxford, first in Exeter College, and next in Corpus Christi College, where he took his degrees in arts, and became fellow. In 1603 he took his degree of B.D., and was appointed chaplain to Archbishop Bancroft, as he also was to the successor of that prelate. After obtaining different preferments, he became dean of Bocking, and in 1615 took his doctor's degree. He died 25 March, 1642, and was buried in the church of Bocking. Dr. Barkham wrote the Lives of King John and Henry II., in Speed's History of Great Britain; and he was the sole author of the Display of Heraldry which goes under the name of John Guillim. He likewise edited Crakanthorpe's book against de Dominis, entitled 'Defensio Ecclesiar. Anglicanar,' 4to., 1625. The dean was a great collector of coins and medals, which he gave to Archbishop Laud, by whom they were bestowed upon the university of Oxford.

BARKSDALE, CLEMENT, a divine, and miscellaneous writer, was born at Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, 23 Nov., 1609, and educated at Oxford. He became master of the grammar school at Hereford; but when that city was taken by the rebels, he removed to Hawling in Gloucestershire. At the Restoration he was presented to the living of Naunton, where he died, 6 Jan., 1687-8. He published 'Monumenta Literaria: sive, obitus et elogia doctorum virorum,' 4to.; 'The Cotswold Muse,' 8vo.; 'Life of Hugo Grotius,' 12mo.; 'Memorials of Worthy Persons,' 12mo., 1661; and several sermons and tracts.

BARKWORTH, or LAMBERT, MARK, an English Benedictine monk, received his education at Rheims and Valladolid. On his return to England he was apprehended, and hanged at Tyburn, in the habit of his order, 27 Feb. 1601. With him suffered a Jesuit, named Roger Filcock.

BARLAAM, a Greek monk of St. Basil, afterwards abbat of St. Saviour, at Constantinople, in the fourteenth century. He opposed George Palamas, who maintained that the light which appeared on Mount Tabor was uncreated. He was sent by the Greek emperor, Andronicus the Younger, as ambassador to Philip, king of France, and Robert, king of Sicily, to solicit their assistance against the Turks. He was likewise empowered to propose the reunion of the Greek with the Latin Church; but in this object he failed. His letters on the subject were printed at Ingoldstadt in 1604. On his return to Constantinople he was censured in a council, whereupon he went to Italy, and embraced the Catholic faith. He died bishop of Hieracium (Gerace), in Calabria, about 1348. His treatise against the supremacy of the pope was printed in Greek and Latin at Oxford, 1592, and again at Hainault, 1608, with notes by Salmasius. This piece was directed against the Roman church; but after the change of his principles Barlaam wrote against the Greeks. He also wrote a curious Greek work on mathematics.

BARLEUS, GASPARD, was born at Antwerp 1584, became professor of philosophy at Amsterdam, and died 14 Jan., 1648. He wrote a History of Basle, but his reputation rests mainly on his Latin poems.

BARLEUS, LAMBERT, brother of Gaspard, was born at Bommel, in Guelderland, 1595. He became professor of Greek at Leyden, and died 16 June, 1655. He published the 'Timon' of Lucian, with notes; 'Annotations on Hesiod's Theogony'; and, conjointly with James Revius, translated into Greek the Confession of Faith of the reformed churches of the Low Countries.

BARLAND, ADRIAN, a Dutch classical scholar, professor of rhetoric at Louvaine, was born about 1488, and died 1542.

BARLETTA, GABRIEL, a celebrated preacher, was a native of Barletta, in the kingdom of Naples, and a member of the order of St. Dominic. He was living 1480.

BARLOW, EDWARD, born at Manchester 1585, was educated at Douay, where he assumed the habit of St. Benedict. He returned to the English mission, and was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Lancaster 10 Sept., 1641, on account of his sacerdotal character.

BARLOW, EDWARD, a Catholic divine and ingenious inventor, whose real name was Booth, was born near Warrington, Lancashire, and educated at Lisbon. He afterwards returned to England, where he laboured many years, dying about 1716, aged 80. His works are, 'A Treatise of the Origin of Springs, Wind, and the Flux and Reflux of the Sea. With several explanatory Maps,' 8vo., London, 1714; and 'A Treatise of the Eucharist,' 3 vols. 4to., MS. 'His name and fame,' remarks the Catholic church historian, 'are perpetuated for being the inventor of the pendulum watches; but, according to the usual fate of most projectors, while others were great gainers by his ingenuity, Mr. Barlow had never been considered on that occasion, had not Mr. Tompion (accidentally made acquainted with the inventor's name) made him a present of 200 pounds.'

BARLOW, FRANCIS, an English painter, was born in Lincolnshire about 1620, and was bred up under Sheppard, a portrait painter; but his genius led him to design, after nature, birds, fish, and every species of animals, which he drew with great exactness, and if his pencilling and colouring had proved equal to the correctness of his design, he would have been superior to most of his contemporaries in those subjects: he was also a good landscape painter and an excellent engraver. He died in 1702.

BARLOW, JOEL, an American writer, was born in the state of Connecticut in 1756. He was educated in the college of Newhaven, and became a Presbyterian minister, which profession he afterwards abandoned, and turned deist. Before this apostasy he translated the Psalms into metre, and his version is still used in the churches of New England. He now adopted the law, but quitted that practice for mercantile speculations. At the beginning of the French Revolution Barlow was in London, and went as one of the deputies from the Constitutional Society, to address the National Convention. Having gone through different changes of situation he was, in 1811, appointed minister plenipotentiary to the court of Napoleon, who, being then engaged on his expedition against Russia, was followed by the American ambassador as far as Vienna. This fatiguing journey proved fatal to Barlow, who died 26 Dec., 1812, and was buried in an obscure village in Poland. He wrote 'The Vision of Columbus, a Poem,' which he afterwards enlarged, and published under the title of 'The Columbiad'; 'Advice to Privileged Orders'; 'The Conspiracy of Kings'; 'Letter to the National Convention'; 'Royal Recollections'; 'A Letter to the People of Piedmont.' He also translated Volney's 'Ruins of Empires' into English.

BARLOW, PETER, F.R.S., a scientific writer, born 1776 at Norwich, where he received his education. In 1806 he was appointed one of the mathematical professors at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, from which post he retired in 1847, the government awarding him full pay in consideration of his eminent services. Died 1 March, 1862. He was author of numerous works, among which are his well-known treatises on the 'Theory of Number,' the 'Strength of Materials,' and his 'Essay on Magnetism.' His discovery of the means of correcting the local attraction on the compasses of ships brought him into great notice.

BARLOW, RUDENIS, D.D., an English Benedictine monk, was prior of St. Gregory's, at Douay, 1625, and died in that city 19 Sept., 1656, ætat 72. He was author of several works, none of which have been preserved.

BARLOW, THOMAS, an English prelate, was born 1607 at Langhill, in the parish of Orton, in Westmoreland. He received his education at Appleby school, from whence he removed to Queen's College, Oxford, where he completed his degrees in arts in 1633, at which time he was chosen fellow of his college. In 1635 he was appointed reader of metaphysics, and in 1637 his lectures were printed for the use of the scholars. In the Rebellion he complied with the ruling powers; and in 1652 was elected keeper of the Bodleian library. In 1657 he was chosen provost of his college, and in 1660, being then doctor in divinity, he obtained the Margaret professorship. The year following he was preferred to the archdeaconry of Oxford, and in 1675 advanced to the bishopric of Lincoln. He distinguished himself by his writings against Catholicism, towards the close of the reign of Charles II., but was one of the first to address King James on his accession; and at the Revolution he was equally ready in complying with the change, by taking the new oaths of allegiance. He died at Buckden 8 Oct., 1691, and was buried in the church of that parish. His principal works are, 'The Gunpowder Treason,' with a Discourse of the Manner of its Discovery,'

BARLOW.

Svo.; 'The Rights of the Bishops to judge in Capital Cases,' 8vo. After his death appeared—'Several Miscellaneous and Weighty Cases of Conscience learnedly resolved;' and 'The Genuine Remains of Bishop Barlow;' both in 8vo.

BARLOW, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born in Essex in the fifteenth century, and became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustine. He appears to have studied both at Oxford and Cambridge. He was successively prior of several religious houses. Being incensed at his priory of Bromehill, Norfolk, being suppressed, that its revenues might form part of the endowment of Wolsey's College at Oxford he adopted the Lutheran doctrines, though he subsequently returned to the Catholic Church, and wrote some bitter things against the Protestants. Soon, however, he again changed his opinions, and advocated the doctrines of the Reformation. In Feb., 1535-6, he was consecrated bishop of St. Asaph, and very shortly afterwards was translated to St. David's, his confirmation to that latter see being 21 April, 1536. In that year he was joint ambassador to Scotland with Lord William Howard. He was translated to Bath and Wells by letters patent, 3 Feb., 1548-9, but soon after Queen Mary's accession he was committed to the Tower, and, being married, was forced to resign his bishopric. Subsequently he regained his liberty and repaired to Emden. On the accession of Elizabeth he returned to this country, and was appointed bishop of Chichester Dec., 1559. He died at Chichester, 13 Aug., 1568, and not, as has frequently been asserted, on 10 Dec., 1569. He wrote some controversial pieces, and translated the books of Esther, Judith, Tobit, and Wisdom, for the Bishop's Bible. His was in some respects a remarkable life. After presiding over six religious houses in succession, he held successively three bishoprics, endured imprisonment, became an exile, and then held a fourth see, and all his daughters who attained to woman's estate married persons who ultimately became bishops.

BARLOW, WILLIAM, son of William Barlow, bishop of Chichester, was a native of Pembrokeshire. In 1560 he became a student of Balliol College, Oxford, but on taking his first degree in arts, he went to sea, and acquired a considerable knowledge of navigation. About 1573 he entered into orders, and became successively prebendary of Winchester and Lichfield, treasurer of the last-mentioned church, and archdeacon of Salisbury. Died 1625. He was the first who wrote on the properties of the loadstone, and to him science is indebted for the method of making compasses. He also discovered the difference between iron and steel for magnetic uses, the proper way of touching magnetic needles, and of cementing loadstones. His works are, 'The Navigator's Supply,' 4to., 1597; 'Magnetical Advertisement; or, Observations concerning the Nature and Properties of the Loadstone,' 4to., 1616; 'A Brief Discovery of the Idle Animadversions of Mark Ridley, M.D., upon a Treatise entitled Magnetical Advertisement,' 4to., 1618. In the first of these books he gave a demonstration of Mercator's division of the meridian line, and a description of the Azimuth compass.

BARLOW, WILLIAM, bishop of Rochester and Lincoln, was a native of Lancashire, and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Dr. Whitegift, on his advancement to the archbishopric, made him his chaplain, and gave him the rectory of St. Dunstan-in-the-East. Dr. Barlow also obtained a prebend in the cathedral of St. Paul's, and when the earl of Essex was condemned, he received orders from the council to attend that unfortunate nobleman in the Tower, and at his execution; in consequence of which, on the Sunday following, he preached at Paul's Cross, where he gave an account of all that passed between him and the earl, with the particulars of his lordship's confession. This sermon was afterwards printed, but it is extremely rare, and has escaped the notice of the biographers of Essex. The same year Dr. Barlow was installed prebendary of Westminster, and soon afterwards made dean of Chester and prebendary of Canterbury. Within a few months he was elevated to the see of Rochester, from whence, in 1608, he was translated to Lincoln. He died at Buckden 7 Sept., 1613, and was buried in the parish church adjoining the palace. He was a benefactor to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he founded some fellowships and scholarships. While dean of Chester he was employed by Archbishop Whitgift to draw up an account of the Hampton Court conference, which was printed in 4to., 1604, reprinted in the Phoenix, and again in the 'Churchman's Remembrancer,' 1805.

BARNARD, SIR ANDREW FRANCIS, a British general, born 1773; died 17 Jan., 1855.

BARNARD, LADY ANNE, eldest daughter of the fifth earl of Balcarres, and wife of Mr. Andrew Barnard, whom she accompanied to the Cape of Good Hope, when he went out as colonial secretary under Lord Macartney. She is known as the writer of the admired ballad of 'Auld Robin Gray.' Born 8 Dec., 1750; died 6 May, 1825.

BARNARD, JOHN, D.D., a native of Lincolnshire, was educated first at Queen's College, Cambridge, and next at Oxford, where he was elected a fellow of Lincoln College. At the Restoration he was collated to a prebend in the church of Lincoln, and in 1660 took his degree of D.D. Died 17 Aug., 1683. He wrote the 'Life of Dr. Peter Heylyn,' and some other works.

BARNARD, SIR JOHN, an eminent citizen and merchant of London, was born at Reading, in Berkshire, in 1685, of parents who were Quakers. His father settled in London as a wine merchant, and took his son into the counting-house when he was no more than fifteen years of age, so that his education was very limited. By his diligence and application, however, he made up the deficiency, and in consequence of his inquiry into the grounds of religion, he quitted the sect in which he had been bred, and at the age of nineteen was baptized at Fulham by Bishop Compton. Mr. Barnard was only known as a private character till his thirty-sixth year, when, in consequence of his being chosen to plead the cause of the wine merchants before the House of Lords, he was nominated a candidate for the city of London, and in 1722 was returned to parliament, where he sat for the period of forty years, when he retired from public life full of age and honour. In 1732 he received the honour of knighthood; three years afterwards he served the office of sheriff; and in 1737 that of lord mayor. He died at Clapham 29 Aug., 1764. Many years before his death the citizens of London expressed their sense of his virtues by erecting his statue in the Royal Exchange.

BARNAVE, ANTOINE PIERRE JOSEPH MARIE, born 22 Oct., 1761, became a deputy to the National Assembly of France; but having lost his popularity on account of some expressions in favour of the king, he was guillotined 30 Nov., 1793.

BARNER, JAMES, a German physician and chemist, born 1641; died 1686.

BARNES, BARNABY, an English poet, born about 1569, being son of Richard Barnes, bishop of Durham. In 1586 he became a student of Brasenose College, Oxford, but left the university without a degree. In 1591 he accompanied the earl of Essex in a military capacity into France, where he remained till 1594, and, if we may believe Nash, with little or no credit for courage or honesty, for he is accused not only of running away from the enemy, but of stealing a 'nobleman's steward's chayne at his lord's installing at Windsor.' One Barnaby Barnes, of Coventry, died about 1644, but whether he were the poet is unknown. Barnes's principal works are, 'Parthenophel and Parthenophe. Sonnettes, Madrigals, Elegies, and Odes,' 1593; 'A Divine Century of Spiritual Sonnets,' 4to., London, 1595; 'Four Books of Offices; enabling private Persons for the special Service of all good Princes and Politicks,' folio, London, 1605; 'The Devil's Charter,' a tragedy, 8vo., London, 1607.

BARNES, JOHN, an English Benedictine, was educated at Oxford, and died at Rome Aug., 1661. For nearly twenty years previous to his death he had been an inmate of a lunatic asylum. He published 'Examen Trophæorum Congregationis prætensæ Anglicanæ Ordinis S. Benedicti,' Rheims, 1622; 'Dissertatio contra Equivocationes,' 8vo., Paris, 1625; 'Catholico-Romanus Pacificus,' 4to, Oxford, 1680; 'The Spiritual Combat,' a translation from the Spanish; and a treatise showing the supremacy of councils.

BARNES, JOSHUA, a learned divine and professor of Greek at Cambridge, was born in London 10 Jan., 1654. He received his education in Christ's Hospital, and in 1671 became a servitor in Emanuel College, Cambridge, where, in 1686, he took his degree of B.D., and in 1695 was chosen professor of Greek. In 1700 he married Mrs. Mason, a widow of great fortune at Hemingford, in Huntingdonshire. It is said that the lady was so great an admirer of Mr. Barnes as a preacher that she offered to settle one hundred pounds a year upon him at her decease, which he politely refused unless she made him happy first by her person. She was too obliging to refuse anything to 'Joshua, for whom,' as she observed, 'the sun stood still,' and they were shortly after married. Mr. Barnes died 3 Aug., 1712, and on the monument erected by his widow in Hemingford church, it is said he had read over a pocket Bible one hundred and twenty-one times. He was a most indefatigable writer, and so conversant with Greek as to be able to turn a newspaper into any kind of verse in that language at first reading it. Yet he was the butt of the learned, who said he was ovos προς αυταν; on which he retorted, happily enough, that they who thus abused him wanted the ο νους προς αυταν. Mr. Bentley used to say of him that 'he knew as much Greek as a Greek cobbler.' Barnes had a most retentive memory and great facility in writing, but he was defective in judgment, on which somebody recommended this epitaph for him—

BARNES.

* Joshua Barnes,
Felicis Memoria; Judicium expectans.*

He published 'Sacred Poems,' in five books; 'The Life of Oliver Cromwell, a Poem;' some dramatic pieces in English and Latin; 'Geranius,' or a New Discovery of Pigmies; 12mo.; 'The History of Esther,' a poem in Latin, 8vo.; 'The History of Edward III., with an Account of his Son, Edward the Black Prince,' folio; 'Euripides,' folio, 1694; 'Anacreon,' 1705 and 1721, 8vo.; 'Homer,' 2 vols. 4to., 1711. These are his principal works, but he printed a great number of fugitive pieces besides, and some occasional sermons.

BARNES, JULIANA. See BERNERS.

BARNES, RICHARD, an English prelate, born at Boulton, near Warrington, Lancashire, about 1532. He received his academical education at Brasenose College, Oxford, though he took his B.D. degree at Cambridge. He was made suffragan bishop of Nottingham 9 March, 1566-7; bishop of Carlisle 1570; and bishop of Durham 1577. According to Wood he was a favourer of puritanism. Died 24 Aug., 1587. 'The Injunctions and other Ecclesiastical Proceedings of Richard Barnes, bishop of Durham, from 1575 to 1587,' were published by the Surtees Society in 1850, under the editorship of J. Raine.

BARNES, ROBERT, D.D., an English Augustinian friar, was born in the neighbourhood of King's Lynn, Norfolk, and educated at Cambridge and Louvain. On his return to England he was elected prior of the house of his order at Cambridge, where he proceeded D.D. 1523. He afterwards adopted Lutheran opinions, and being convicted of heresy, was burnt at Smithfield 30 July, 1540. A collection of his English works was published at London 1573, folio.

BARNES, THOMAS, D.D., a learned dissenter, was born at Warrington, Lancashire, 13 Feb., 1747. He was educated in the academy at Warrington, and in 1769 was ordained over a dissenting congregation at Cockey Moor, near Bolton, from whence, in 1780 he removed to Manchester. In 1784 the university of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity, and about the same time he commenced an academical institution at Manchester, which he conducted with reputation till 1798, when he resigned the situation. Dr. Barnes was an active promoter of the Manchester Library Society, in the memoirs of which are some of his papers. He published separately, 'A Discourse on the Commencement of the Academy,' and 'A Funeral Sermon on the Death of the Reverend Thomas Threlkeld, of Kewhaule.' Died 28 June, 1810.

BARNES, THOMAS, an English journalist, born in or about 1786, was educated at Christ's Hospital and Pembroke College, Cambridge (B.A. 1808; M.A. 1811). He succeeded Dr. Stoddart in the editorship of the 'Times,' and by his extraordinary skill, discrimination, and powers of writing, greatly increased the influence of that journal. Died 7 May, 1841.

BARNET, CURTIS, a distinguished commander in the naval service of Great Britain, died 29 April, 1746.

BARNEVELDT, JOHN VAN OLDEN, born about 1547. After serving his country in different employments and embassies he endeavoured to set limits to the authority of Maurice, prince of Orange, the second stadtholder, for which he was accused of a design to betray Holland to the king of Spain. Ridiculous as this accusation was, Barneveldt suffered for it on the scaffold 13 May, 1619.

BARNEY, JOSHUA, a distinguished American seaman, born at Baltimore 6 July, 1759; died 1 Dec., 1818.

BARNSTAPLE, ROBERT, an English writer, was for some time a domestic in the household of Cardinal Allen. In 1588 he was residing at Venice. He published a defence of Mary queen of Scots, entitled 'Maria Stuarta Innocens,' 8vo., Ingoldstadt, 1588.

BARO, or BARON, BONAVENTURE, an Irish ecclesiastic, whose real name was Fitz-Gerald, was descended from a branch of the Fitz-Geralds of Burchlurch, in the county of Kilkenny. By his mother's side he was a nephew of Luke Wadding, the famous Franciscan friar, under whom he received his education at Rome, after which he entered the same order, and became lecturer on divinity in the college of St. Isidore. After having resided at Rome about sixty years he died there, very old, and deprived of sight, 18 March, 1696. His works are 'Orationes Panegyricæ Sacro-Profanæ decem,' 12mo., Rome, 1643; 'Metra Miscellanea, sive Carminum diversorum libri duo; epigrammatum unus; alter Silvulæ; quibus adduntur Elogia illustrium virorum,' 24mo., Rome, 1645; 'Profusiones Philosophicæ,' 12mo., Rome, 1651; 'Harpocrates quinque Ludus; seu Distributio Silentii,' 12mo., Rome, 1651; 'Obsidio et Expugnatio Arcis Duncannon in Hibernia, sub Thomâ Prestono;' 'Boetius Absolutus; sive de Consolatione Theologicæ, lib. iv.,' 12mo., Rome, 1653; 'Controversiæ et Stratagemata,' 8vo., Lyons, 1650; 'Scotus Defensus,' folio, Cologne, 1662; 'Cursus Philosophicus,' folio, Cologne, 1664; 'Epistolæ Familiæ Paræneticæ,' &c. The above are among his 'Opuscula varia,' folio, Würtzburg, 1666; 'Theologia,' 6 vols., Paris, 1676; 'Johannes Duns Scotus, Ordinis Minorum, Doctor Subtilis de Angelis contra adversantes defensio, nunc quoque novitate amplificata,' Florence, 1678; 'Annales Ordinis S.S. Trinitatis Redemptionis Captivorum, Fundatoribus S.S. Johanne de Mathia, et Felice de Valois,' in several folio volumes.

BARO, or BARON, PETER, D.D., was born at Etampes, in the isle of France, about 1534, and studied the civil law at Bourges, where he proceeded bachelor in that faculty 1556. In 1557 he was sworn an advocate in the court of the parliament of Paris. The study of divinity, however, had greater attractions for him than the practice of the law, for in Dec., 1560, he retired to Geneva, where he gave himself up to theological pursuits, was made a minister, and received ordination from the hands of Calvin himself. On his return to his native country he married, and in 1572 or 1573, in consequence of the troubles in France, he came over to this country and was kindly entertained in the family of Lord Burghley. Afterwards he settled at Cambridge, and was chosen Lady Margaret's professor of divinity in that university. Here he was engaged in several controversies, and a sermon which he preached at St. Mary's, with reference to the Lambeth articles, gave such offence to the more rigid Calvinists that he deemed it prudent to resign his professorship, 1596. He then retired to London; and was buried in the church of St. Olave, Hart Street, 17 April, 1599. His works are, 'In Jonam Prophetam Prælectiones 39,' folio, London, 1579; 'De Fide, ejusque ortu, et natura,' 8vo., London, no date; 'A speciall Treatise of God's Providence,' 1590; 'Summa Trium de Prædestinatione Sententiarum,' 1513 [mistake for 1613], translated into English in Nichols's Life and Works of Arminius, i. 91; 'Cur fructus mortis Christi ad omnes Adami posteros non perveniat,' MS. Univ. Lib. Camb.

BAROCCIO, FREDERICK, an Italian painter of great celebrity, who was employed by Pope Pius IV. in decorating the palace of Belvedere. Born 1528 at Urbino, where he died 1612.

BARON, BERNARD, an eminent French engraver, born at Paris about the year 1700. He was instructed in engraving by Nicholas Henry Tardieu, whose style he followed. He engraved several plates for the Crozat collection, and afterwards came to England, where he resided the remainder of his life, and died in London in 1762. His plates are executed in a coarse manner, but are not without considerable merit.

BARON, MICHEL, the Roscius of France, was born at Paris 1653. His real name was Boyron, and his father was celebrated as a player. It is said that the elder Baron lost his life in the following manner. In performing the part of Don Diego in the 'Cid,' his sword fell from his hand, and kicking it from him, he unfortunately received a wound in the toe, which, being neglected, gangrened. He could not, however, be prevailed on to have his leg amputated, saying, 'A theatrical monarch with a wooden leg would be hissed,' but chose rather to wait patiently for death, 1660. The son inherited the genius of his father, and eclipsed him by the celebrity of his talents. At the age of 44 he quitted the stage, from some scruples, but after twenty-four years' absence he resumed his profession with as much credit as when he was in the vigour of his years. Died 22 Dec., 1729. Three volumes of dramatic pieces, with his name, have been published, though the authenticity of some of them has been questioned. This actor was excessively vain, and used to say that 'once in a century we might expect a Cæsar, but that two thousand years were required to produce a Baron.'

BARON, RICHARD, a dissenting minister and political writer, was born at Leeds, and educated at Glasgow. In 1753 he was ordained pastor of the dissenting congregation meeting at Pinner's Hall, London, but left the ministry some years afterwards out of disgust. He died at his house at Blackheath 22 Feb., 1768. Mr. Baron was a zealous republican, and assisted Mr. Thomas Hollis in collecting and publishing works favourable to that cause, particularly those of Milton and Harington. He also edited a collection of small tracts, which he entitled 'The Pillars of Priestcraft and Orthodoxy shaken,' 2 vols. 12mo. After his death two more volumes were added by subscription.

BARON, ROBERT, an English poet and dramatist, was born in or about 1632, and after receiving part of his education at Cambridge, became a member of Gray's Inn. He wrote, among other things, 'The Cyprian Academy,' 8vo., 1648; 'An Apologie for Paris, for rejecting of Juno and Pallas, and presenting of Ate's Golden Ball to Venus, with a discussion of the reasons that might induce him to favour either of the three, occasioned by a private discourse, wherein the Trojans' judgment was carped at by some, and defended by R. B., gent., anno ætatis 18,' 12mo., London, 1649; 'Pocula Castalia,' poems written on several occasions, 1650; and 'Mirza,' a tragedy.

BARON, STEPHEN, a Franciscan of the order of the Observants, studied at Cambridge, and afterwards became confessor to Henry VIII., and provincial of his order in England. He flourished 1520. He wrote two works, both of which were printed at London by Wynkyn de Worde, and also at Paris, viz., 'Sermones xv. declamati coram Academicam Cantab.' and 'De Officio et Caritate Principum.'

BARONIUS, CÆSAR, a learned cardinal, born 30 Oct., 1538, at Sora, in the kingdom of Naples. He completed his studies at Rome, where he placed himself under the direction of St. Philip Neri, whom he succeeded as general of the congregation of the oratory 1593. Clement VIII. took him for his confessor, and created him cardinal 1596. He was afterwards librarian of the Vatican, and died 30 June, 1607. His most celebrated work is the 'Annales Ecclesiastici,' or 'Ecclesiastical Annals,' in 12 folio vols. It contains the history of the church from the birth of Christ to the year 1198. There have been several continuations and abridgments of this great monument of industry and erudition.

BAROZZIO. See VIGNOLA.

BARRABAND, PIERRE PAUL, a distinguished painter of birds, was born at Aubusson, in France, 1767, and died at Lyons 1 Oct., 1800.

BARRAL, PIERRE DE, a French abbé, was born at Grenoble, and became a teacher of youth at Paris, where he died 21 July, 1772. His works are 'Dictionnaire historique, littéraire, et critique des Hommes Celebres,' in conjunction with Father Gaubil and Father Valla, 8vo., 6 vols., 1758; 'Dictionnaire portatif, géographique, et moral de la Bible;' 'Dictionnaire des Antiquités Romaines,' &c.

BARRAS, PAUL FRANÇOIS JEAN NICOLAS, Comte DE, one of the first five directors of the first French revolution, was born 20 June, 1755; and died 29 Jan., 1820.

BARRE, ISAAC, one of the persons to whom the authorship of the Letters of Junius have been ascribed, was born at Dublin in 1726, and after studying in the university of that city was placed in one of the London Inns of Court to study law. He subsequently entered the army, and experienced much hard service in America. Becoming a political associate of Lord Shelburne, he was placed in parliament by the latter, and with extraordinary boldness commenced his legislative career by a fierce attack upon Mr. Pitt. Through the influence of General Wolfe he obtained promotion in the army, rising ultimately to the rank of lieutenant-colonel; while from his political patron he obtained some lucrative offices under government, but was deprived of nearly the whole by the king and the duke of Bedford, in consequence of his vote in favour of Wilkes. He was on terms of friendship with those whom the pen of Junius spared, and opposed to those whom it castigated. He continued to be an intrepid and eloquent debater through the American war, being in fact the chief and most formidable antagonist of Lord North, under whose ministry that contest was so long maintained. Ultimately he retired from political life under the infliction of total blindness.

the consequence of a wound at the battle of Quebec, and died in Stanhope Street, London, 1802. For further particulars respecting this remarkable man the reader is referred to the interesting work by John Britton, F.S.A., entitled 'The Authorship of the Letters of Junius elucidated: including a biographical memoir of Lieutenant-Colonel Isaac Barré, M.P.,' 4to., London, 1848.

BARRE, JOSEPH, a regular canon of St. Genevieve, and chancellor of the university of Paris, who died in that city 23 June, 1764, aged 72. He wrote a history of Germany in 11 vols. 4to., and other works.

BARRE, LOUIS FRANÇOIS JOSEPH DE LA, a French writer, born at Tournay 9 March, 1688; died 24 May, 1738. He published editions of several important works such as the 'Imperium Orientale,' and the 'Narnismat. Imperat. Romanor.' of Bananus; the 'Spicilegium' of d'Achery; and the 'Dictionary' of Moreri.

BARRE, WILLIAM VINCENT, was born in Germany about 1760, of a family of French Protestant refugees. Having served some time in the Russian army, he went to France on the breaking out of the revolution, the cause of which he warmly advocated. He was with the French army in the two Italian campaigns, and rose to the rank of captain. Speaking and writing all the European languages, he was patronised by General Bonaparte, who appointed him his interpreter with a salary of 12,000 francs, but having written some satirical couplets against his powerful master, he was obliged to fly to England, where he revenged himself on Napoleon by publishing in English 'The History of the French Consulate under Bonaparte,' London, 1807; and 'The Origin, Progress, Decline and Fall of Bonaparte in France,' 8vo., London, 1815. He also translated into French the work of Sidney Smith on the expedition to Egypt. Barré committed suicide at Dublin, 1820.

BARRELLIER, JACQUES, a Dominican friar, born at Paris 1606, travelled through France, Spain, and Italy, and made a most valuable collection of plants and shells, of which he was writing a general history, when he was overtaken by death 17 Sept., 1673. From his papers Anthony de Jussieu published 'Plantæ per Galliam, Hispaniam, et Italian iconibus æneis exhibitæ,' folio, Paris, 1714.

BARRERE, PIERRE, a French naturalist, born about 1690, was professor of botany at Perpignan, where he died 1 Nov., 1755. Among his works is a 'Dissertation on the Physical Cause of the Colour of the Negro.'

BARRET, GEORGE, an eminent painter of landscapes, was born at Dublin in 1728, and received his first education in the art in the drawing academy of Mr. West, in that city. Having been introduced by his protector, Mr. Burke, to the patronage of the earl of Powerscourt, he passed great part of his youth in studying and designing the charming scenery around Powerscourt Park, and he soon after gained the premium offered by the Dublin society for the best landscape. Mr. Barret came to England in 1762, and two years afterwards gained the fifty pounds premium given by the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, &c. He had the merit of greatly contributing to the establishment of the Royal Academy, of which he was one of the earliest members. He was a chaste and faithful delineator of English landscape, which he viewed with the eye of an artist, and selected with the feeling of a man of taste. His colouring is excellent, and there is a freshness and dewy brightness in his verdure which is only to be met with in English scenery, and which he has perfectly represented. The landscapes of this estimable artist are to be found in several of the collections of the nobility; but the principal works of Mr. Barret are in the possession of the dukes of Portland and Buccleugh, and the great room at Mr. Lock's, at Norbury Park, a performance which will ever rank among the most celebrated productions of the art. He died at Paddington in March, 1784, aged 54.

BARRET, JOHN, D.D., a Carmelite of Lynn, in Norfolk, his native town, studied at Cambridge (D.D. 1533), and after the dissolution of monasteries held several benefices in Norfolk, and also became a canon of Norwich. Died 12 July, 1593. He wrote several works on theology, including 'Collectanea quedam in communes locos Digesta ex eruditioribus celebrioribusque Germanorum Protestantium Scriptoribus,' 3 vols. MS. in CCC.

BARRET, JOHN, M.D., an English lexicographer, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1554-5; M.A. 1558), of which he was elected a fellow. He travelled in many foreign countries, and appears to have been ultimately engaged in tuition in London. He was created M.D. at Cambridge 1577, and died in, or perhaps shortly before, 1580. He was author of 'An Alvearie or Triple Dictionary, in English, Latin, and French,' folio, London, 1573. After his death a second edition appeared, entitled 'An Alvearie or Quadruple Dictionary, containing four sundrie tongues; namelic, English, Latine, Greeke, and French,' folio, London, 1580.

BARRET, RICHARD, D.D., a Catholic divine, was born in the diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, and educated at Douay. In 1588 he succeeded Cardinal Allen as president of the English college at Rheims, which establishment was removed to Douay in 1593. He governed the college till his death, on 20 May, 1599.

BARRET, STEPHEN, a classical teacher of considerable eminence, was born at Bent, in the parish of Kildwick, in Craven, Yorkshire, 1718. He received his education at the school of Skipton, from whence he removed to University College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in Arts, and entered into orders. He was for many years master of the grammar school at Ashford, in Kent, which he resigned in 1773 on being preferred to the rectory of Hothfield, in the same county, where he died 26 Nov., 1801. Mr. Barret wrote many valuable articles in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' particularly one on a new method of modelling the tenses of verbs. He also translated Pope's Pastorals into Latin, and published Ovid's Epistles in English verse, with a Satire on War.

BARRET, WILLIAM, a divine, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1584-5; M.A. 1588). He subsequently became a fellow of Caius College. In a sermon he preached in 1595 for the degree of B.D. he uttered opinions which gave great offence, and he was compelled to read a form of recantation, but this he did in such a manner as to induce a general belief in his insincerity. Fresh proceedings were taken, but Barret wisely got beyond sea, where he embraced the Catholic religion. Ultimately he returned to England, where he lived as a layman until his death. Some writings of his, relating to the memorable sermon, are extant.

BARRETT, EATON STANNARD, a native of Ireland, went to the bar, but gained more reputation by his literary than by his legal achievements. He wrote 'The Comet,' a burlesque; 'All the Talents,' a satirical poem; 'The Heroine,' a novel; and other works. Died 20 March, 1820, aged 35.

BARRETT, JOHN, D.D., was a native of Ballyroan, Ireland, where his father held a curacy. He received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, becoming ultimately vice-provost of that society, and professor of oriental languages in the university. He died, immensely rich, 15 Nov., 1821. His works are an edition of the gospel of St. Matthew from a MS. in the library of Trinity College, Dublin; 'An Inquiry into the Origin of the Constellations that compose the Zodiac, and the Uses they were intended to promote,' 1800; and an essay on the earlier part of the life of Swift, with several original pieces ascribed to him, 1808. The last work was communicated to Mr. Nichols, and is incorporated in the collected edition of Swift's works.

BARRETT, WILLIAM, a topographer, was an eminent surgeon at Bristol, of which city he published the history in one volume quarto, 1788. Mr. Barrett was the early patron of Chatterton, from whom he received a number of papers alleged to have been written by Rowley. Died 15 Sept., 1789.

BARRINGTON, DAINES, a younger son of the first Viscount Barrington, was born 1727. After studying at Oxford, he became a student of the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar. He was for some time recorder of Bristol, and in 1751 appointed marshal of the Court of Admiralty, which office he resigned two years afterwards on obtaining the secretaryship of Greenwich Hospital. In 1757 he was made a Welsh judge, and soon afterwards second justice of Chester, which post he resigned in 1785. He died 11 March, 1800, and was buried in the Temple Church. Mr. Barrington was a sound lawyer, an intelligent naturalist, and an able antiquary. He proposed the memorable voyage to the North Pole in which Captain Phipps, afterwards Lord Mulgrave, was employed. Besides numerous papers on the Transactions of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, to both which bodies he belonged, he published 'Observations on the Statutes,' 4to.; 'The Naturalist's Calendar,' 8vo.; 'An English Translation of Orosius, ascribed to King Alfred, with notes,' 8vo.; 'Tracts on the Probability of reaching the North Pole,' 4to.; and 'Miscellanies on various Subjects,' 4to.

BARRINGTON, JOHN SHUTE, first Viscount Barrington, a nobleman of considerable learning, was the youngest son of Benjamin Shute, merchant in London, by a daughter of the Reverend Joseph Caryl, the commentator on Job. He was born at Theobalds, in Hertfordshire, in 1678, and was educated at Utrecht. On his return to England he became a student of the Middle Temple. In 1708 he was appointed one of the commissioners of the customs, which place he lost three years afterwards on the change of ministers. About this time Mr. Wildman, of Becket, in the county of Berks, adopted him, though no ways related, and some years afterwards Francis Barrington, esquire, who married his first cousin, left him the whole of his estate in the same county; on which he procured an act of parliament to change his name, pursuant to the deed of settlement. In 1715 he was chosen into parliament for Berwick-upon-Tweed, and in 1717 had the reversionary grant of the office of master of the rolls in Ireland, which he surrendered in 1731. He was created an Irish baron and viscount in 1720, and in 1722 was re-elected for Berwick; but the year following he was expelled the house for being concerned in the Harburg lottery, which arbitrary measure proceeded from the personal resentment of Sir Robert Walpole, whose administration he had opposed. He died at Becket, after a short illness, 4 Dec., 1734, leaving by his lady, Anne, the daughter of Sir William Daines, six sons and three daughters. Lord Barrington was a dissenter, and the author of several works, as 'Miscellanea Sacra,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1725, and again in 3 vols., 1770; 'An Essay on the several Dispensations of God to Mankind,' 8vo.; 'A Dissuasive from Jacobitism,' 8vo.; 'A Letter to a Bishop on the Bill for preventing the Growth of Schism,' 'An Essay upon the Interest of England in respect to Protestants dissenting from that Established Church,' 4to.; 'An Account of the Proceedings of the Dissenting Ministers at Salter's Hall,' 8vo.; 'A Discourse of Natural and Revealed Religion,' 8vo.; and 'Reflections on the Test Act,' 8vo.

BARRINGTON, SAMUEL, fifth son of the first Viscount Barrington, was born in 1729, and, entering the navy, was made post captain in 1747. In 1778 he was created rear-admiral of the white, and sent to the West Indies, where his valour and prudence gained him the highest reputation. He distinguished himself particularly in the taking of St. Lucia. In 1782 he served under Lord Howe, and bore a part in the memorable relief of Gibraltar. Died 16 Aug., 1800.

BARRINGTON, SHUTE, an English prelate, son of John Shute, first Viscount Barrington, was born 26 May, 1734, and educated at Eton and at Merton College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. In 1760 he was appointed one of the king's chaplains, and in 1761 a canon of Christ Church, when he took his degree of D.C.L. 1762. He was nominated canon residentiary of St. Paul's 1768, and the following year was consecrated bishop of Llandaff. He was translated in 1782 to Salisbury, and in 1791 to the rich see of Durham, the revenues of which he held for thirty-five years. He died in London 25 March, 1826. Besides numerous 'Sermons, Charges, and Tracts,' which appeared in a collected form in 1811, he published an edition of his father's 'Miscellanea Sacra,' 1770; 'The Grounds on which the Church of England separated from the Church of Rome Reconsidered in a View of the Romish Doctrine of the Eucharist, with an Explanation of the Antepenultimate Answer of the Church Catechism,' 8vo., 1809; and sketch of the political life of his brother William, Viscount Barrington.

BARRINGTON, WILLIAM WILDMAN, Viscount Barrington, eldest son of the first viscount, was born in 1717. After receiving a private education in England, he was sent to Geneva to complete his studies. In 1740 he was chosen representative for Berwick, when he distinguished himself by his opposition to Sir Robert Walpole. Soon after the Rebellion he accepted a seat at the Board of Admiralty, and in 1754 was appointed master of the wardrobe. The year following he was made secretary at war, in which office he continued till 1781, when he received the appointment of chancellor of the exchequer. This situation, however, he soon afterwards exchanged for that of treasurer of the navy; and in 1765 he returned to his former post at the War Office, where he remained till 1778, when his resignation was assented to with great reluctance by his majesty. In 1782 he was nominated joint postmaster-general, but was removed two months afterwards in a most unhandsome manner by the prime minister, Lord Sackburne. He died 3 Feb., 1793.

BARROS, JOHN DE, the most celebrated of Portuguese historians, was born about 1496 at Viseo, and educated at the court of Emanuel, king of Portugal, with the royal children. The infant John, to whom he attached himself, having succeeded his father 1521, De Barros had an office in the household, and was made governor of St. George del Mina, on the coast of Guinea, 1522. The king recalled him to court three years afterwards, and appointed him treasurer of the Indies. This office gave him an opportunity of writing his great work, 'Asia Portuguesa,' or the history of the discoveries and establishments of the Portuguese in the Indian seas. The best edition is that of 1778, printed at Lisbon, in 9 vols. 8vo. De Barros died 1570.

BARROW, HENRY, a puritan, was son of Thomas Barrow, esq., of Shipdam, Suffolk, and had his academical education at Clare Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1609-70), and became a member of Gray's Inn 1576. About this period he followed the court, and was a very dissipated character. Subsequently he turned his attention to theological matters, and became grievously dissatisfied with the church establishment. Those who participated in his opinions, and they were not a few, were commonly denominated Barrowists, a term long employed to denote the separatists, although they were sometimes (from Robert Browne) called Brownists. On 21 March, 1592-3, he and John Greenwood, clerk, were indicted for feloniously publishing seditious books and pamphlets, and being convicted, were executed at Tyburn 6 April, 1593. He composed several works attacking the church establishment, partly in conjunction with Johnson, Greenwood, Penry, and others.

BARROW, ISAAC, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Spinney Abbey, Cambridgeshire, 1613, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, of which he became fellow, but was ejected by the presbyterians in 1643. He then went to Oxford, and was appointed one of the chaplains of New College, till the surrender of that city to the parliamentarians obliged him to shift from place to place. At the Restoration he was consecrated bishop of Sodor and Man, from whence he was afterwards translated to St. Asaph. He was a great benefactor to both bishoprics. Died 24 June, 1800.

BARROW, ISAAC, D.D., an eminent divine and mathematician, was born in London in Oct., 1630, being son of Thomas Barrow, linendraper to Charles I. He was first placed in the Charterhouse, and afterwards removed to Feclsted school in Essex, from whence he was sent to Peterhouse, Cambridge, under his uncle, who was then fellow of that society. Afterwards he became a scholar of Trinity College, and in 1649 obtained a fellowship. In 1652 he graduated M.A., and the following year was incorporated in the same degree at Oxford. Dr. Dupont, on retiring from the Greek professorship at Cambridge, recommended his pupil, Mr. Barrow, as his successor. Barrow justified the opinion of his tutor by an admirable probationary exercise, but being looked upon as an Arminian, he lost the election. This disappointment induced him to go abroad, though in order to do so he was obliged to sell his books. Accordingly in 1655 he went to Paris, where he found his father, then attending the English court, and whom he relieved out of his small means. From France he went to Italy, and stayed some time at Florence, where, being much reduced, he was generously assisted by an English merchant, to whom he afterwards dedicated his edition of Euclid's Data. Taking ship at Leghorn, he proceeded to Smyrna, and on the voyage the vessel was attacked by an Algerine corsair, who, after a sharp conflict, sheered off. On this occasion Barrow displayed great courage, and by his example stimulated the crew to a stout resistance. From Smyrna he went to Constantinople, where he continued a year, during which time he read over the works of St. Chrysostom, formerly bishop of that see. In 1659 he returned to England, and soon afterwards took orders. In 1660 he was chosen Greek professor at Cambridge without opposition, and in the year following took his degree of B.D. In 1662 he was elected professor of geometry at Gresham College, which office he resigned two years afterwards on being appointed Lucasian professor of mathematics. This last situation he relinquished 1669, being succeeded by his distinguished pupil, Isaac Newton. In 1670 he was created D.D., and in 1672 the king gave him the mastership of Trinity College, Cambridge, saying that he had bestowed it upon the most learned man in England. He served the office of vice-chancellor in 1675, and would, in all probability, have risen high in the church had he not been cut off by a fever when he came to London, 4 May, 1677. His remains were deposited in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory. Dr. Barrow was a universal scholar, and his works are multifarious, being mathematical, theological, poetical, and philosophical. The scientific and poetical are all in Latin, and the theological in English. These last were published in 3 vols. folio, by Dr. Tillotson, and consist of sermons, lectures, and a treatise on the papal supremacy. As a theologian Barrow has always ranked high among the divines of the Church of England. His humility was so great that he constantly refused to sit for his picture, and therefore some of his friends contrived to get his portrait drawn by stealth, while he was engaged in conversation. He was low in stature, thin, cadaverous, and rather slovenly in his appearance. He was an immoderate smoker, which practice he justified by terming tobacco his panpharmacon, or universal remedy.

BARROW, JOHN, an English compiler, published a geographical dictionary, and a 'Chronological Abridgment, or History of the Discoveries made by Europeans in different Parts of the World,' 1756 and 1765.

BARROW, SIR JOHN, was born of poor parents at Drayleybeck, near Ulverstone, Lancashire, 19 June, 1764. After making a voyage to Greenland, and being employed for some time as mathematical teacher in a school at Greenwich, he was appointed on the effective list of Lord Macartney's suite when that nobleman went as ambassador to China, his situation being that of comptroller of the household. He also in 1797 accompanied Lord Macartney on his mission to the Cape of Good Hope, and when his lordship quitted that colony in the following year he left Mr. Barrow in the post of auditor-general of public accounts, civil and military. Barrow returned to England on the evacuation of the colony in 1803, and in the next year was appointed second secretary to the Admiralty, which office he vacated in 1806 on a change of administration. He soon returned to the Admiralty, however, and, to cite his own words, 'From this day, the 8th April, 1807, to the 28th Jan., 1845, I continued without interruption as second secretary of the Admiralty; when I retired, having completed altogether from my first appointment in that capacity forty years under twelve or thirteen several naval administrations, Whig and Tory, including that of the Lord High Admiral, his royal highness the duke of Clarence; having reason to believe that I have given satisfaction to all and every one of those naval administrations; and I am happy in the reflection that I have experienced kindness and attention from all.' He was created a baronet 1835, and died in London 23 Nov., 1848. In addition to numerous articles in the 'Quarterly Review,' and the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' Sir John wrote the 'Life of Lord Macartney,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'Travels in South Africa,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'Travels in China,' 4to.; 'Voyage to Cochinchina,' 4to.; 'Life of Lord Anson,' 8vo.; 'Life of Lord Howe,' 8vo.; 'Life of Peter the Great'; 'Account of the Mutiny of the Bounty'; 'Chronological History of Arctic Voyages,' 8vo.; 'Voyages of Discovery and Research within the Arctic Regions,' 8vo.; and his autobiography.

BARROW, PHILIP, son of John Barrow, of Suffolk, obtained in 1559 a licence from the university of Cambridge to practise chirography, and in 1572 a like licence to practise physic. He wrote a book, once very popular, entitled 'The Method of Phisicke,' 4to., London, 1590, and often reprinted.

BARROW, THOMAS, a learned Jesuit, was born at Eccleston, near Preston, 17 Sept., 1747, and educated at St. Omer's. He was afterwards stationed at Stonyhurst and Liege, and died in the latter city 12 June, 1813. He had a great reputation for learning, but his only published works are a Hebrew ode and a Greek pastoral complimentary to the bishop of Liege, F. C. de Velbruck, 1772, and another Hebrew ode and a Greek pastoral in honour of F. A. de Mean, the last bishop of Liege, 1792.

BARRUEL, AUGUSTIN, a French Jesuit, born 1741. He was editor of the 'Journal Ecclesiastique' from 1787 till Aug., 1792, when he sought refuge in England. He returned to France after the Revolution of the 18th Brumaire, and died 5 Oct., 1820. His principal works are, 'Du Pape et des Droits,' an apology for the concordat of 1801; 'Les Helviennes; ou, Lettres Provinciales Philosophiques,' 4 vols.; and 'Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire du Jacobinisme,' 5 vols.

BARRUEL - BEAUVERT, ANTOINE JOSEPH, count de, a French journalist and writer, born 17 Jan., 1756; died Jan., 1817. His chief works are, 'Vic de J. J. Rousseau,' 1780; 'Caricatures Politiques'; 'Histoire de la Prétendue Princesse de Bourbon-Conti'; and 'Lettres sur quelques particularités de l'Histoire,' during the interregnum of the Bourbons, 3 vols. 8vo.

BARRY, SIR CHARLES, an eminent architect, was born 1795, being the son of Walter Barry, a stationer in Bridge Street, Westminster. At an early age he displayed so decided a taste for the profession of architecture, that it was the path at once chosen by his friends for his future career in life. Accordingly he was articled to an architectural firm in Lambeth, Messrs. Middleton and Bailey, and for a time he studied his art in England, and having here mastered all that could be gained from books and rules, he for a long time travelled on the continent and through Egypt and Greece, where he enlarged his experience and cultivated his taste still further. His first celebrated public work on his return was St. Peter's Church at Brighton, and his design for that building was adopted for their seal by the Church Building Commissioners. His next distinction in a public competition was a successful design for the Manchester Athenæum, a Grecian building. A still greater degree of celebrity attended his design and construction of the grammar school of Edward VI. at Birmingham, in the Gothic style, and he increased his fame by his successful designs for the Travellers' Club, the College of Surgeons, and the Reform Club. The building, however, by which his genius will be most popularly estimated is the Houses of Parliament—his monument, as is St. Paul's that of Wren's. In spite of an inappropriate site and some faults in detail, it is the grandest building of modern times, and will justify the emphatic description of the Emperor Nicholas of Russia, 'C'est un rêve en pierre' (It is a dream in stone). It was on the occasion of the opening of the Victoria Tower, the finest portion of this great work, that Queen Victoria conferred on the architect the honour of knighthood. Sir Charles died at Clapham 12 May, 1860, and was buried on the 22nd in Westminster Abbey.

BARRY, SIR DAVID, an eminent physician and physiologist, was born in the county of Roscommon, Ireland, 12 March, 1780, and died 4 Nov., 1835.

BARRY, SIR EDWARD, professor of medicine in the university of Dublin, and physician-general to his majesty's forces in Ireland, died 29 March, 1776. His principal work is, 'Observations on the Wines of the Ancients,' 4to., London, 1775.

BARRY, EDWARD, M.D. and D.D., a divine, was son of Dr. Barry, a physician at Bristol. He was intended for the medical profession, and after the usual course of study graduated at St. Andrew's; but the bent of his mind being directed to divinity, he took orders in the Established Church. For several years he was curate of Marylebone, and became one of the most popular preachers in the metropolis. Afterwards he became minister of St. Mary's and then of St. Leonard's, Wallingford, where he died 16 Jan., 1822, ætat. 63. He published several sermons: 'A Friendly Call to a New Species of Dissenters'; and 'A Letter on the Practice of Boxing, addressed to the King, Lords, and Commons,' 1780.

BARRY, ELIZABETH, a famous English actress, died 7 Nov., 1713, aged 55, and was buried at Acton, Middlesex. She peonated Queen Elizabeth and Roxana with peculiar propriety. Dryden highly commends her performance of Cassandra, but Cibber prefers her Cleopatra and Monimia.

BARRY.

She was usually called 'the famous Madame Barry.'

BARRY, GEORGE, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, author of the 'History of the Orkney Islands,' was born in Berwickshire 1748, and died 14 May, 1805.

BARRY, GERALD, an Irish gentleman who served many years in the armies of the king of Spain in Germany and the Low Countries, and was a captive in that service, when, in 1634, he published at Brussels 'A Discourse of Military Discipline,' 1646, written for the instruction of his countrymen.

BARRY, GERALD. See GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS.

BARRY, JAMES, Lord Santry. See SANTRY.

BARRY, JAMES, an eminent painter, was born at Cork 11 Oct., 1741. He received his education in his native city, and at the suggestion of some preceptors studied polemical divinity, the result being that he was throughout his life a staunch Roman Catholic. Having early discovered great genius for art, he was patronized by Mr. Burke, and brought to London, where he became a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds. When Mr. Burke came into administration with the marquis of Rockingham, he sent Barry to Italy at his sole expense. After visiting all the celebrated schools of the continent, in which he occupied three years, Mr. Barry returned to London, and in 1775 published 'An Inquiry into the Real and Imaginary Obstructions to the Acquisition of the Arts in England.' About two years after this he was elected a Royal Academician, and in 1786 made professor of painting to the Royal Academy, but in 1799 was removed from that office, having rendered himself obnoxious to the body of academicians in consequence of some alterations and innovations which he had proposed. He seems soon afterwards to have taken disgust at society, from which he retired into a wretched obscurity, living unattended and half starved, till some friends raised about £1000, with which they purchased an annuity for him; but before the first quarter's payment of it became due he died, 22 Feb., 1806, and was interred in St. Paul's Cathedral. His greatest object of art is a series of allegorical pictures which he painted gratuitously for the great room of the Society of Arts in the Adelphi. A collection of his literary works, with his life prefixed, appeared in 3 vols. 4to., 1809.

BARRY, JEANNE VAUBERNIER, comtesse du. See DEBARRY.

BARRY, JOHN MELVEN, M.D., author of 'An Account of the Nature and Effects of the Cow-Pox,' 8vo., Cork, 1800, died at Cork in 1822.

BARRY, LODOVIC, an Irish gentleman, was author of a comedy entitled 'Ram Alley; or, Merry Tracks.' 4to., London, 1611. Wood erroneously styles him Lord Barry.

BARRY, MARTIN, M.D., F.R.S., author of 'Researches in Embrology,' 8vo., London, 1838-40, and other works, died at Beccles, Suffolk, 27 April, 1855, aged 63.

BARRY, PAUL DE, a French Jesuit, author of 'Pensez-y-bien' ('Think Well On't'), and other popular books of devotion. Born 1585; died 26 July, 1661.

BARRY, SPRANGER, an eminent English actor, contemporary with, and a powerful rival of David Garrick, was born in Dublin 20 Nov., 1719, and died in London 10 Jan., 1777. His peculiar advantages were derived from a fine person, melodious voice, and pleasing address; and his performances in amatory characters were perhaps never excelled.

BARRY, THOMAS, a Scotchman, was provost of Bothwell, and wrote a Latin poem on the battle of Otterburne, fought in 1388.

BARTAS, GUILLAUME DE SALUSTE DU, a French poet, born at Montfort, in Armagnac, 1544. He was employed by Henry IV. in England, Scotland, and Denmark, and commanded a company of horse in Gascony, under marshal de Marignon. He was a Calvinist, and died 1590. The best known of his poems is 'La Semaine; ou, la Creation du Monde,' which has been translated into English by Sylvester. It has also been translated into Latin, Spanish, and Italian.

BARTELL, EDMUND, an English topographer and miscellaneous writer, published 'Observations on the Town of Cromer, considered as a Watering Place, and the Picturesque Scenery in its Neighbourhood,' 8vo., London, 1800; and 'Hints for Picturesque Improvements in Ornamented Cottages, and their Scenery; including some Observations on the Labourer and his Cottage; with Sketches,' 8vo., London, 1804. This writer was living in 1820, but I have not succeeded in ascertaining the date of his death.

BARTH, DR. HEINRICH, a distinguished African explorer, born at Hamburg 18 April, 1821. At the university of Berlin his favourite pursuit was ancient geography, which led him to determine on visiting the cradle of classic antiquity, and exploring the entire shores and maritime regions of the Mediterranean. He accordingly started at Marseilles, following the French and Spanish shores to Gibraltar, passing over to Tangier, in Africa, and proceeding along the Algerian coasts, with excursions into the interior to Tunis, Tripoli, and Benghazi. From Cairo he explored Egypt, Sinai, Palestine, Asia Minor, and Greece, until he had made the circuit of the Mediterranean. A part of the results of these travels were published in 1849 under the title of 'Wanderings through the Countries on the Coast of the Mediterranean.' He afterwards accompanied Mr. James Richardson on his political and commercial mission to Central Africa. He left Marseilles on 8 Dec., 1849, for Africa, and safely returned to the same port on 8 Sept., 1855, after nearly six years' absence, having been already believed dead, and having separated from Richardson in the interval. His 'Travels in North and Central Africa,' 1857, is a work invaluable to the student of African geography. Dr. Barth also commenced publishing a 'Collection of the Vocabularies of Central African Languages,' but it was left incomplete at his death, which took place at Berlin 26 Nov., 1865.

BARTH, JEAN, a French naval commander, born at Dunkirk 1651. From the humble station of a fisherman he rose, by his skill in navigation, his courage, and his noble actions, to the rank of commodore. He was tall and robust, but had a clownish and savage air. The chevalier Forbin introduced him at court 1691, where he was very kindly received, but his rough appearance occasioned some wits to say, 'Let us go and see the chevalier de Forbin, who leads the bear.' Barth gained many important victories over the English and Dutch fleets, and died 27 April, 1702.

BARTHE, NICOLAS THOMAS, a French dramatist and poetical writer, born at Marseilles 1734; died 17 June, 1785.

BARTHELEMON, FRANÇOIS HIPPOLYTE, a noted

violinist and musical composer, was born at Bordeaux 1731, and came early in life to England, where he resided for upwards of half a century, dying at his house near the Blackfriars-road, London, 14 July, 1808. Soon after his arrival in this country he married Miss Young, a singer of considerable reputation in her day. At one time he was leader of the band at Vauxhall. He composed operas, concertos, duos, preludes for the violin, and lessons for the piano.

BARTHELEMY, JEAN JACQUES, a learned French writer and ecclesiastic, born at Cassis, in Provence, 20 Jan., 1716. He received his education in the college of the Jesuits at Marseilles, where he made great progress in oriental literature. On visiting Paris in 1744 he was nominated associate in the care of the royal cabinet of medals, and in 1753 was made keeper of that collection. In 1755 he visited Naples. In 1758 the duke de Choiseul gave him a pension; to which in 1765 the same patron added the treasurership of St. Martin de Tours; and in 1768 the place of secretary-general to the Swiss guards. In 1788 the Abbé Barthelemy published his 'Voyage of the Younger Anacharsis in Greece,' upon which he had been employed thirty years. In 1789 he was chosen a member of the French Academy, but the revolution involved him in difficulties, and on 30 Aug., 1793, he was hurried to prison, but was released the same night. Died 30 April, 1795. In the 'Voyage du Jeune Anacharsis,' on which the popularity of Barthelemy mainly rests, the imaginary travels are related of a young Scythian who visited the principal cities of Greece between 363 and 337 B.C. The style is attractive, but it has been objected that fiction has been too much intermingled with historical facts. Barthelemy also wrote 'Les Amours de Carite et de Polydore,' a romance, translated from the Greek; 'Voyage en Italie;' and other works. His 'Œuvres Diverses' were published by M. St. Croix.

BARTHEZ DE MARMORIERES, PAUL JOSEPH, a French medical writer, professor of medicine at Montpellier, was born in that town 11 Dec., 1734, and died 15 Oct., 1806.

BARTHIUS, GASPAR, a learned German critic, born at Custrin 22 June, 1587; died at Leipsic 17 Sept., 1658. He left commentaries on Claudian and Statius, Latin poems, and other works.

BARTHOLDY, JACOB SOLOMON, a Prussian diplomatist and writer, born at Berlin 13 May, 1779; died 26 July, 1826.

BARTHOLINE, ERASMUS, son of Gaspar, was born at Roschild 1625, and died 5 Nov., 1698. He was professor of geometry and medicine at Copenhagen. He published 'De Figurâ Nivis Dissertatio;' 'De Cometis, ann. 1664 et 1665;' 'Experimta Crystalli Islandici Disiectastii;' 'De Naturæ Mirabilibus;' and 'De Aere Hafniensi.'

BARTHOLINE, GASPAR, a Danish physician and divine, author of 'Institutiones Anatomicae,' &c., was born at Malmoe 12 Feb., 1585, and died 13 July, 1630.

BARTHOLINE, THOMAS, son of Gaspar, mentioned above, was born 20 Oct., 1616, and became professor, first, of mathematics, and, afterwards, of anatomy, at Copenhagen, his native city. Died 4 Dec., 1680. He published several works, and made several anatomical discoveries, particularly in the lacteals and lymphatics.

BARTHOLINE, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was eminent in jurisprudence. He became professor of history and civil law, besides which he held the offices of assessor of the consistory and keeper of the royal archives at Copenhagen. He wrote 'Antiquitates Danicae, lib. iii.,' &c. Born 1059; died 5 Nov., 1690. There were several other persons of this name and family, who obtained celebrity by their talents, particularly Margaret, the daughter of the first Thomas Bartholine, a lady who wrote some esteemed poems in the Danish language.

BARTHOLOMEW, a Franciscan friar, whose name was Glanvil, though he is commonly called Anglicus. He came of a good family in Suffolk, and flourished about the middle of the fourteenth century. He wrote, among other works, the popular book of encyclopædic knowledge entitled 'De Proprietatibus Herum.'

BARTHOLOMEW OF THE MARTYRS, a learned and pious Dominican friar, born at Lisbon, 1514. He became preceptor to Don Antonio, nephew of John III., king of Portugal, and in 1559 was consecrated archbishop of Braga. He distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and contracted a strict friendship with St. Charles Borromeo. At length, having obtained a dismissal from his archbishopric under Gregory XIII., he retired to Viana, where he died, 10 July, 1590, leaving an excellent book entitled 'Stimulus Pastorum,' and several other works. He was beatified in 1773, by Clement XIV.

BARTHOLUS, an eminent Italian civilian, born about 1313; died 1356.

BARTLEMAN. See BARTHELEMON.

BARTLEMAN, JAMES, a distinguished English vocalist, was born in the city of Westminster 19 Sept., 1769. At the usual age he had the good fortune to be received into the abbey choir of Westminster, under the mastership of Dr. Cooke, and in such hands his powers soon developed themselves and were fully appreciated. In 1788 his name appeared for the first time among the bass chorus at the Concerts of Ancient Music, but in 1791 he quitted this post to assume that of first solo at the newly established Vocal Concerts, where he at once established his reputation as the first bass singer of the day. In 1795 he returned to the Ancient Concerts and continued to sing there till he was compelled by ill health to resign his situation. He died 15 April 1821, and was buried in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey.

BARTLET, JOHN, a nonconformist divine, was educated at Cambridge, where Dr. Sibbes was his intimate friend. In his younger days he was a great student of anatomy, till observing the strictness of the passage in the throat, he grew so melancholy as to be almost afraid to eat or drink; whereupon, on the advice of his physician, he laid that study aside. He became minister of St. Thomas, near Exeter, and afterwards of St. Mary's in that city, and died at an advanced age, but the date of his death is not given. His works are 'Meditations;' 'An Explication of the Assembly's Catechism;' 'The Duty of Communicants;' 'The Use and Profit of Afflictions;' 'The Practical Christian; or, a Summary View of the chief Heads of Practical Divinity;' and 'Directions for right receiving the Lord's Supper, in Question and Answer, for the benefit of the Young.'

BARTLET, RICHARD, a native of Worcestershire, was educated at All Soul's College, Oxford, and applying himself to the study of medicine, attained great eminence in his profession, and became president of the College of Physicians. He died 1559, ætat. 87.

BARTLET, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, was educated at New Inn Hall, Oxford, and became minister of Bideford, Devonshire. He was a great sufferer for the cause of religion, and died in 1682. Mr. Bartlet wrote, 'A Model of the Primitive Congregational Way,' 4to., London, 1647; and 'Sovereign Balsam for healing such Professors as Satan hath wounded.'

BARTLETT, BENJAMIN, F.S.A., an antiquary, was originally an eminent apothecary at Bradford, Yorkshire, and afterwards carried on the same business in London. He died at Hertford 2 March, 1787, ætat. 73. His knowledge of the ancient coinage of this kingdom was equal to the valuable collections he had formed in its several departments. He published a memoir 'On the Episcopal Coins of Durham, and the Monastic Coins of Reading, minted during the reigns of Edward I., II., and III., appropriated to their respective Owners,' in the 'Archæologia,' v. 335. After his death appeared 'Manducedum Romanorum: being the History and Antiquities of the Parish of Kincetter [including the Hamlets of Hartshill, Osbury, and Atherstone], and also of the adjacent parish of Ansley, in the county of Warwick. By the late Benjamin Bartlett, F.A.S. Enlarged and corrected under the inspection of several gentlemen resident on the spot,' 4to., 1791.

BARTOLI, COSMO, an Italian writer, who flourished about 1570, was a native of Florence. He wrote a life of Frederick Barbarossa, and other works.

BARTOLI, DANIEL, a learned Jesuit, born at Ferrara, 1608; died at Rome 13 Jan., 1685. He published a great number of works, the chief of which is his history of his society, in 6 vols. folio.

BARTOLI, PETER SANTI, a painter, born at Perugia, about 1635; died at Rome 1700.

BARTOLOCCI, JULIUS, a Cistercian monk, and abbot of his order, was born at Celeno, in the kingdom of Naples, 1613, and died 1 Nov., 1687. He published 'Bibliotheca Rabbinnica,' 4 vols. folio, to which a fifth volume was added by his disciple, Imbonati. This work is highly esteemed.

BARTOLOMEO, ANDREW DE, a famous Italian jurist, professor of law at Ferrara and Bologna, was born 1400, and died 30 July, 1479.

BARTOLOMEO, FRA. See BAGGIO.

BARTOLOZZI, FRANCIS, an engraver, was born 1728 at Florence, where his father was a goldsmith, and intended his son for the same profession, till observing his taste for the arts, he placed him under Ignazio Hugford, an historical painter. Here he had for a fellow-pupil Giovanni Battista Cipriani, with whom he formed a friendship which lasted through life. After successfully applying for three years to painting, he was articulated to Joseph Wæner, an engraver, at Venice, by whom he was employed in executing a number of prints, after masters of an inferior order; but while thus engaged he contrived to engrave many after his own drawings. When his term expired he married a young Venetian lady of good family, on which alteration of his condition he removed to Rome, where he engraved his fine prints from the life of St. Nilus, and the heads of painters for a new edition of Vasari. After his return to Venice he worked for the print-sellers, but in 1764 he came to England with Mr. Dalton, who allowed him a salary of £300 a year. On the close of that engagement he worked for himself and the print-sellers, particularly Mr. Boydell. In 1769 he was chosen a member of the Royal Academy. The new mode of stippling, or engraving in the red chalk manner, now becoming fashionable, gave Bartolozzi ample employment, and he executed in that way many hundreds of prints. The finest of all his works, perhaps, are the Marlborough Gems, the Musical Benefit Tickets, and the prints for Boydell's Shakspeare. With all this he might have made a fortune, but the contrary was the case; and in 1802 he went to Lisbon, on an invitation from the prince regent of Portugal, who allowed him a pension, and the produce of his works. It is generally stated that he died at Lisbon in his 88th year, but one biographer makes him die in London in 1819.

BARTON, Miss, actress. See ABINGTON FRANCES.
BARTON, ANDREW, a distinguished Scotch naval commander of the reign of James IV., died of wounds received in an engagement with the English in July, 1511.

BARTON, BENJAMIN SMITH, M.D., an eminent physician of Philadelphia, was born 1766. He was appointed professor of natural history and botany, and afterwards of materia medica, in the university of Pennsylvania, and succeeded Dr. Rush as professor of the theory and practice of medicine. Died Dec., 1815.

BARTON, BERNARD, the Quaker poet, was born near London 1784, and in 1806 settled at Woodbridge, Suffolk. In 1810 he became a clerk in Messrs. Alexanders' bank, where he officiated almost to the day of his death, which took place at Woodbridge 19 Feb., 1849. He was a prolific writer, his poems filling eight or nine volumes. 'Household Verses,' a collection of fugitive pieces published in 1845, contain more of his personal feelings than perhaps any previous production of his pen.

BARTON, Sir EDWARD, the first English ambassador at Constantinople, died in the island of Chalki 14 April, 1597, in the 30th year of his age. The following epitaph is preserved in the convent of the Blessed Virgin at Chalki:—'Edvardo Barton illvstrissimo servantissimo augustissimo Anglor. Regine oratori, viro præstantissimo qui post reditum a bel. Vngarico quo eum in victo Tyræc imperatore p. profectus fverat, diem obiit pietatis ergo, ætatis an. xxx. salvt. vero anno MDXCVII. xviii. kal. Ma.'

BARTON, ELIZABETH, a pretended prophetess, commonly called the 'Holy Maid of Kent,' was a native of Aldington in that county. She was subject occasionally to fits, in the paroxysms of which she often burst into vehement and appalling exclamations, and periodically, about the beginning of December, fell into a trance of a few days' duration, after which she would narrate the wonders she had seen in the world of spirits under the guidance and tuition of an angel. By the neighbours her sufferings and sayings were attributed to some preternatural agency; she herself insensibly partook of the illusion; and Masters, the clergyman of the parish, advised her to quit the village, and to enter the convent of St. Sepulchre, in Canterbury. In her new situation her ecstasies and revelations were multiplied, and Archbishop Warham, at a loss to form a satisfactory judgment, appointed Bocking, a monk of Christ Church, her confessor. Bocking soon professed himself a believer in her inspired character, and both Sir Thomas More and Bishop Fisher appear to have gone over to this opinion. The maid grew less cautious in her predictions, and occasionally rose to higher and more dangerous matters. Whilst the great cause between Henry VIII. and Catharine of Arragon was yet pending in the court of legates she informed Cardinal Wolsey, at the command of her angel, that if he ventured to pronounce a divorce God would visit him with the most dreadful chastisement. And after Wolsey's death she stated to her admirers that God had shown to her an evil root buried in the earth out of which three shoots had sprung; an addition interpreted to mean that the king and Norfolk and Suffolk were now carrying into execution the evil projects devised by the late cardinal. She even admonished Henry in person, at the command of her angel, that if he were to marry Anne Boleyn while Catharine was alive, he would no longer be looked upon as a king by God, but would die the death of a villain within a month, and be succeeded on the throne by his daughter Mary. When Henry had publicly acknowledged his second marriage he deemed it necessary to close her mouth, and prevent the circulation of her predictions by severity of punishment. Barton was accordingly taken from her convent and examined in private, first by Cranmer alone, and then by Cromwell and Cranmer together. In their official report she is said to have confessed that 'her predictions were feigned of her own imagination only to satisfy the minds of them who resorted to her, and to obtain worldly praise.' She and her abettors were attainted of treason, and she suffered at Tyburn 21 April, 1534. At the place of execution she confessed her delusion, but threw the burden of her offence on her companions in punishment. She had been, she said, the dupe of her own credulity, but then she was only a simple woman whose ignorance might be an apology for her conduct, while they were learned clerks who, instead of encouraging, ought to have detected and exposed the illusion.

BARTRAM, JOHN, a distinguished botanist, born in Pennsylvania 1701. He was elected American botanist to George III., and died in Sept., 1777. Linnæus pronounced him to be 'the greatest natural botanist in the world.'

BARTRAM, WILLIAM, an American naturalist, son of John, mentioned above, was born in Pennsylvania 1739, and died 22 July, 1823. He prepared the most complete table of American ornithology which was published before the appearance of Wilson's great work, in the preparation of which he assisted.

BARTSCH, JOHN ADAM DE, an engraver, born 1757 at Vienna, where he died 21 Aug., 1820.

BARUFFALDI, JEROME, an Italian poet, born at Ferrara 17 July, 1675; died 1 April, 1753. Mazzuchelli gives a list of upwards of a hundred works by him.

BARUFFALDI, JEROME, nephew of the preceding, and a learned bibliographer, was a member of the Society of Jesus. Born at Ferrara 16 Jan., 1740; died Feb., 1817.

BARWICK, JOHN, D.D., an English divine, born at Wetherstall, in Westmoreland, 1612, was educated at Sedbergh School in Yorkshire, from whence he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In the civil war he espoused the royal cause, and assisted in conveying the college plate to the king at Nottingham. He also undertook the dangerous office of an agent between London and Oxford, in which service he acted with great prudence, and by his arguments brought over many persons of consequence from the side of the parliament. Notwithstanding the murder of the king he continued the same hazardous employment, till at length he was discovered and sent to the Gate House, and next to the Tower. After a confinement of two years he was released, but he still continued his exertions for the cause which he had so much at heart, and his efforts were of the greatest consequence in bringing about the Restoration. On that event he took his doctor's degree, and the king would have given him the bishopric of Carlisle, which he declined, though he accepted the deanery of Durham, holding with it the living of Houghton-le-Spring. In less than a year he was removed to the deanery of St. Paul's, which cathedral he greatly improved. Died 22 Oct., 1664. Dr. Barwick, from the services in which he was engaged, could not write much, but many of his letters are in different collections, and he was the author of the Life of Thomas Morton, bishop of Durham, whose funeral sermon he also preached and printed in 4to. Besides this he published 'Deceivers Deceived,' a sermon, 1661, 4to. His brother and biographer, Dr. Peter Barwick, is noticed below.

BARWICK, PETER, M.D., was born at Wetherstall, in Westmoreland, 1619, and educated at the grammar school of Sedbergh, Yorkshire, whence, at a fitting age, he was transferred to St. John's College, Cambridge, as a member of which he took his degree of B.A. 1642. In 1644 he became a fellow of his college. He proceeded M.A. 1647, and then applied to the study of physic. He was created M.D. 1655, and afterwards got into good practice at London, being appointed physician to Charles II. at the Restoration. Dr. Barwick deserves honourable mention as one of the few physicians who remained in the metropolis and pursued the practice of their profession during the ravages of the plague in 1665. Died 4 Sept., 1705. He drew up in Latin the life of his brother, the dean of St. Paul's; wrote a very judicious defence of Harvey's 'Doctrine of the Circulation of the Blood;' and added an appendix in defence of the Eikon Basilicæ, against Dr. Walker.

BARZIZA. See GASPARIO.

BASAN, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, an engraver and printseller, born at Paris 23 Oct. 1723; died 12 Jan., 1797.

BASCHI, MATTHEW, a Franciscan, was born in the duchy of Spoleto, about 1500, and died 1552. He was founder of the order of Capuchin friars, which was approved of by Clement VII., 1528.

BASEDON, JOHN BERNARD, a German philosopher and educationist, was born at Hamburg 11 Sept., 1723, and died at Magdeburg 25 July, 1790. He published a number of works on philosophy, in which he propounded opinions so unorthodox that he was excluded from the Lutheran communion. Afterwards he chiefly directed his attention to the improvement of the system of education then in vogue, and composed several works on the subject. He likewise founded at Dessau a model educational establishment, which, however, turned out a complete failure.

BASEILHAC, JEAN. See COSME.

BASEVI, GEORGE, an English architect, born

BASIL.

1795, being son of George Basvi, of Brighton. He was educated at the school of the Rev. Dr. Burney at Greenwich, and received his first professional instruction as pupil in the office of Sir John Soane, after which he studied during three years in Greece and Rome. He soon rose into notice, and executed many public and private works, which were much admired for their general arrangement and exquisite taste. Belgrave Square, erected from his designs, is without a rival in that style of architecture; but his great work is the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, perhaps the finest building of modern times, in the florid Italian style. He accidentally fell through a scaffold in Ely Cathedral, and was killed on the spot, 16 Oct., 1845.

BASIL, ST., the Great, one of the most learned and eloquent doctors of the Church, was born about 330 at Caesarea, in Cappadocia. He went to Athens to finish his studies, and there formed an intimate friendship with St. Gregory of Nazianzen. Afterwards he withdrew into solitude, and was the first who instituted the monastic life in Pontus and Cappadocia. Being elected bishop of Caesarea, 369, the emperor Valens attempted to make him embrace the Arian doctrine, and sent Modestus, prefect of the East, to terrify him into compliance; but in this he utterly failed. Some time afterwards Valens wished to banish St. Basil; but it is said that three pens burst successively between his fingers, upon which, being seized with fear, he left the holy bishop in peace. St. Basil afterwards endeavoured to reunite the Eastern and Western churches, which were at that time divided respecting Meletius and Paulinus, two bishops of Antioch. He founded a bishopric at Zazima, and gave it to his friend St. Gregory of Nazianzen. St. Basil died 1 Jan., 379. His works consist of homilies, commentaries on the Holy Scriptures, and letters on ecclesiastical discipline. Festival, June 14.

BASILIDES, of Alexandria, a famous heresiarch, and disciple of Simon the Magician, died about 130.

BASILIIUS I., called the Macedonian, emperor of the East, was born at Adrianople, of poor parents, and became a common soldier. His conduct recommended him to the Emperor Michael, who made him his equerry and chamberlain. In 867 he murdered that prince, and took possession of the throne. He defeated the Saracens at Caesarea, and was killed by a stag while hunting on 1 March, 886.

BASILIIUS II. succeeded John Zimisces, 976. He was the son of Romanus the younger, and was associated in the government with his brother Constantine. He turned his arms against the Bulgarians, over whom he obtained a great victory, 1014, but treated his prisoners with horrid barbarity. Dividing them into hundreds, and then putting out the eyes of 99, he gave them the hundredth for a leader. In this condition they were sent to their king, who took two days to view them. Died Dec. 1025, aged 70.

BASILOVITCH, IVAN, emperor of Russia, which country he recovered from the dominion of the Tartars, and thus laid the foundation of the Russian empire. He was the first who assumed the title of Czar, and added Astracan to his territories. Born 1520; died 1584.

BASING, or BASINGSTOKE, JOHN DE, a learned divine of the thirteenth century, was born at Basingstoke, Hampshire, and educated at Oxford, from whence he went to Paris, where he remained many years. He also travelled to Athens, and acquired a great knowledge of the Greek language. On his return he was made archdeacon of London and Leicester. Died 1252. He wrote some sermons, and translated a few Greek books into Latin. Matthew Paris says he introduced the knowledge of Greek numerals in this country. The system of notation, however, which is given by Basingstoke, was never used by the Greeks.

BASINIO, of Parma, an Italian poet, some of whose pieces are inserted in 'Trium Poetarum Elegantiarum, Porcellii, Basinii, et Trebanii Opuscula,' Paris, 1549. Died 1457, aged 36.

BASIRE, ISAAC, D.D., an English divine, was born in the island of Jersey, in 1607, but where educated is uncertain. He, however, became chaplain to Morton, bishop of Durham, who gave him the rectory of Stanhope and the vicarage of Eggleston, that diocese. In 1640 the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by mandamus at Cambridge, and soon afterwards he was incorporated at Oxford. About this time he was also made chaplain to Charles I., and in 1643 installed prebendary of Durham. The next year he obtained the archdeaconry of Northumberland, but lost all his preferments in the Rebellion, on which he went into the Morea, where he preached with success to members of the Greek church. He then travelled into Palestine, where he received extraordinary honours from the Greek patriarch and also from the Catholics. At Constantinople he officiated to the Greek Protestants according to the English liturgy, and from thence he went into Transylvania, where he was hospitably entertained during several years by George Ragozi, the prince of the country, who appointed him professor of divinity in his new university of Weissenburg. In 1661 the doctor was recalled by Charles II., who appointed him his chaplain in ordinary. He died at Durham 12 Oct., 1676. His works are, 'Deo et Ecclesiae Sacrum,' a sermon, 4to., 1646; 'Diatriba de Antiqua Ecclesiae Britannicae Libertate;' 'The History of the English and Scotch Presbytery;' 'Oratio privata, boni Theologi partes praeicipuas complectens;' and 'The Dead Man's Real Speech,' a funeral sermon on Bishop Cosin, with his Life. Dr. Basire's correspondence has been published by Darnell.

BASIRE, JAMES, an engraver, born in London 1730. He studied engraving at first under his father, and afterwards under Richard Dalton, with whom he travelled to Rome. Nothing has been recorded of the particulars of his life, except that he was engraver to the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. Died 6 Sept., 1802.

BASKERVILLE, HANNIBAL, an English antiquary, was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and was buried in Sunningwell church, Berkshire, 1668.

BASKERVILLE, JOHN, a celebrated printer, born at Wolverley, Worcestershire, 1706. In 1720 he kept a writing school at Birmingham, but in 1745 he engaged in the japanning business, to which in 1750 he added the profession of type-founding. After expending a considerable sum in this pursuit he succeeded, and the works printed by him obtained celebrity. The first of these was Virgil, in 1756, which answered so well that he reprinted it in 1758. In the latter year he was employed by the university of Oxford on a new-faced Greek type, and soon afterwards he obtained leave from the syndicate of Cambridge to print a Bible and two editions of the Common Prayer. The other productions of his press were, Newton's Milton, 2 vols. 4to.; Dodsley's Fables, 8vo.; Juvenal and Persius, 8vo.; Congreve's Works, 3 vols. 8vo.; Horace, 8vo.; Addison's Works, 4 vols. 4to.; a pocket Dictionary, 12mo.; Jennings on Medals, 8vo. He also printed editions of Terence, Catullus, Lucretius, Sallust, and Florus, in 4to. Mr. Baskerville died at Birmingham 8 Jan., 1775, and his types were sold to a society at Paris, by whom they were used in printing the works of Voltaire.

BASKERVILLE, Sir SIMON, an English physician, was born at Exeter about 1573, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. After taking his degrees and studying closely, he settled in London, where he acquired great eminence in his profession, and was sworn physician, first to James I. and next to Charles I., who conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. He amassed so large a fortune by his profession as to gain the name of Sir Simon Baskerville the rich. Died 5 July, 1641.

BASKERVILLE, THOMAS, of Bayworth, in the parish of Sunningwell, near Abingdon, wrote a Journal of his Travels through a great part of England in the years 1677 and 1678, MS. Many of his MSS. are preserved in the Harleian collection. He died about 1705.

BASNAGE, ANTOINE, eldest son of Benjamin, mentioned below, was born 1610. He became minister of Bayeux, and at the age of 75 was thrown into prison at Havre de Grace. On recovering his liberty he retired into Holland, and died at Zutphen 1691.

BASNAGE, BENJAMIN, a French Protestant minister, born 1580; died 1652. He published some controversial works.

BASNAGE, HENRI, de Franquenay, was son of Benjamin. He became one of the most eminent advocates of the parliament of Rouen, where he died 20 Oct., 1695, aged 80. His complete works were published in 2 vols. folio, 1776.

BASNAGE, HENRI, de Beauval, brother of Jacques, was born 1656, and in 1679 was admitted advocate in the parliament of Rouen. In 1687 he retired to Holland, where he succeeded Bayle in writing the 'History of the Works of the Learned.' He published several other works, and died at the Hague 29 March, 1710.

BASNAGE, JACQUES, a French Protestant divine, son of Henri Basnage de Franquenay, was born at Rouen 1653. He became minister of the reformed church in his native city, but on the revocation of the edict of Nantes he retired to Rotterdam. In 1709 he was chosen one of the pastors of the Walloon church at the Hague, and he was also employed in state affairs. Died 22 Dec., 1723. He composed a large number of works, among which are a 'History of the Religion of the Reformed Churches;' a 'History of the Church;' 'History of the Old and New Testament;' and a 'History of the Jews,' which has been translated into English.

BASNAGE, SAMUEL, de Flottemanville, son of Antoine, was born 1638, and succeeded his father in his congregation at Bayeux, but he was forced to leave France in 1685, and retired to Zutphen, where he died in 1721. He wrote Exercitations on Baronius, which he published under the title of 'Annales Politico-ecclesiastici.'

BASS, GEORGE, surgeon of the 'Reliance,' a

BASSET.

British vessel of war, discovered Bass's Strait, between the continent of New Holland and Van Diemen's Land, 1798. He never received any distinction or reward.

BASSANI, JAMES ANTHONY, a Jesuit, born at Venice 1686; died at Padua 21 May, 1747. He was one of the best preachers of his day. His sermons have been published.

BASSANO, HUGHES BERNARD MARET DUC DE, was born at Dijon 1763. He was an active promoter of the great French Revolution, and was despatched to London to negotiate a treaty of neutrality. In 1793 he was sent ambassador to Naples, but being taken prisoner on his way thither he underwent three years' incarceration in an Austrian fortress. He took a leading part in the revolution of the 18th Brumaire, and was nominated by Bonaparte secretary-general of consuls, a post afterwards designated as the secretaryship of state. He was employed on several important missions by Napoleon, after whose second abdication he retired into private life; but being arrested in Switzerland by the Austrians he was not allowed to return to France till 1820. He was created a peer of France by Louis Philippe, and in 1835 held for a few days the exalted position of first minister and president of the council. Died 13 May, 1839.

BASSANO, FRANCIS, an English herald painter, born 17 Oct., 1675; died 17 April, 1746. He made a large collection of church notes, some of which are now in the College of Arms and some in private hands.

BASSANO, JAMES, an Italian painter, born at Venice 1510; died Feb., 1592. He excelled in landscape. Four of his sons were also eminent artists, viz., Francis (born 1548; died 1591); John Baptist (born 1553; died 1613); Leander (born 1558; died 1623); and Jerome (born 1560; died 1622).

BASSANTIN, JAMES, a Scotch astronomer of the sixteenth century, who was educated first at Glasgow and afterwards at Paris, where he became lecturer on mathematics. In 1562 he returned to his native country, where he died 1568. His works are, 'Astronomia,' folio, Geneva, 1599; 'Paraphrase de l'Astrolabe, avec une amplification de l'Usage de l'Astrolabe,' 1555, Lyons; 8vo., Paris, 1617; 'Super Mathematica Genethliaca,' on the calculation of nativities; 'Arithmetica,' 'Musica secundum Platonem;' and 'De Mathesi in genere.'

BASSE, WILLIAM, a minor poet, was born at Moreton, near Thame, Oxfordshire, and was for some time a retainer of Sir Richard Wenman, knight, afterwards Viscount Wenman in the peerage of Ireland. He was alive in 1651, and probably died soon after that date. He is best known by his verses 'on William Shakespeare, who died in April, 1616.' Among his other productions are 'Three Pastorall Elegies of Anander, Anetor, and Muridella,' London, 1602; 'Sword and Buckler; or, Serving Man's Defence,' 4to., London, 1602; and a collection of MS. poems entitled 'Polyhymnia.'

BASSET, Sir FRANCIS. See DUNSTANVILLE.

BASSET, FULK, an English prelate, was probably born in Devonshire. At all events, he came of a noble family. In 1225 he was made provost of the collegiate church of St. John of Beverley, and in 1230 dean of York. In 1241 he succeeded Roger Niger in the see of London, but was not consecrated till three years afterwards, owing to a vacancy in the archbishopric. He had the firmness to oppose the visitatorial power of Archbishop Boniface and the exactions of the papal legate. The latter called a council at London to enforce the demands of his Holiness, but the bishop rose in the assembly and said, 'Before I will submit to such great servitude, injury, and oppression of the Church, I will lose my head.' This declaration inspired the other prelates to such a degree that the legate, though supported by the king, could not succeed. Basset founded the church of St. Faith and two chantries in St. Paul's cathedral. He died of the plague 1259.

BASSET, PETER, an English author, who was gentleman of the bedchamber to Henry V. He was an eye-witness of the exploits of that monarch both in this country and France, and wrote an account of them in English. He likewise wrote 'De actis armorum et conquestus regni Franciæ, ducatus Normanniæ, ducatus Alenconici, ducatus Ardegarviæ et Cenomanniæ,' MS. in the College of Arms. Basset was living in 1430.

BASSETT, JOSHUA, an English divine of the Roman communion, was born in or about 1641, being the son of John Bassett, a merchant of Lynn Regis, in Norfolk. He was educated at Lynn under the care of Mr. Bell, and on 13 Oct., 1657, was admitted a sizar of Caius College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a junior fellow 1664, and a senior fellow 1673. The dates of his degrees are, B.A. 1661; M.A. 1665; B.D. 1671. In 1660 he was appointed master of Sidney College, by royal mandate from King James II., the taking of the usual oaths being dispensed with. Mr. Bassett professed the Catholic religion, and had mass publicly said in his college. Cole, the antiquary, remarks: 'I have met with several people in Cambridge who remember to have been present during the celebration of it.' During his mastership he got the statutes of the college altered for the accommodation of those of his own communion. When in Dec., 1688, James revoked all the mandamuses, Mr. Bassett left the college, and afterwards lived very poor in London. Being in necessitous circumstances, he desired to have his goods from the college, but was roughly made to understand that if he did not desist he would be informed against as a popish priest. He died about 1720. The following work is attributed to Bassett in the Bodleian and Dublin catalogues, though Dodd ascribes the authorship to John Gother: 'Reason and Authority; or, the Motives of a late Protestant's Reconciliation to the Catholick Church: Together with Remarks upon some late Discourses against Transubstantiation,' 4to., London, 1687. This was answered by Dr. Thomas Banbrigg the same year, and in 1705 by Nathaniel Spoones, M.A., and Edward Stephens. 'An Essay towards a proposal for Catholic Communion,' 8vo., 1704, 1705, 1801, is sometimes attributed to him, and sometimes to T. Dean. Bassett wrote 'Ecclesiæ Theoria Nova Dodwelliana exposita, cui accessit rerum quæ indiligentes lectores fugiant, indiculus,' 8vo., London, 1713. He also contributed verses to the university collections on the death of the duke of Albemarle (1679), the accession of James II. (1684), and the birth of the prince of Wales (1688).

BASSI, LAURA MARIA CATHERINE. See VERATTI. BASSIANUS, LAUDUS, a distinguished physician of Massignan in France, who died in 1562, published

BASTIDE.

'De humanâ Historia,' 8vo., Basle, 1542; and 'Intrologia,' 4to., Basle, 1543.

BASSIUS, HENRY, a celebrated surgeon, professor of anatomy at Halle. Born 1690; died 5 March, 1754.

BASSOL, JOHN, a Scotch physician and divine of the fourteenth century. He studied at Oxford, and went from thence to Paris, where he entered the order of the Minorites. After teaching medicine at Rheims he removed to Mechlin, where he taught theology, and died in 1347. He wrote 'Commentaria seu Lecturæ in quatuor libros Sententiarum,' printed in 1516. This work procured him the title of Doctor Ordinarius.

BASSOMPIERE, FRANÇOIS DE, colonel-general of the Swiss, and marshal of France, born 1579, in Lorraine, of a noble and ancient family. He attached himself to France, and was distinguished for his valour and great actions. The king appointed him marshal of France, 29 Aug., 1622. He continued to signalize himself, but was sent to the Bastille by order of his majesty, 1631, and remained there till after the death of Cardinal Richelieu. He died 12 Oct., 1646. There are 'Memoirs,' composed by M. de Bassompierre, during his confinement, 1723, 4 vols. 12mo.; 'An Account of his Embassies, 1665 and 1668;' and 'Remarks on the History of Louis XIII.,' written by Duplex. Horace Walpole has justly censured him for not knowing even the names of many things which he wrote about. For instance, he calls York-house 'Jorchaux,' and Kensington 'Inimthort.'

BASSUS, CÆSIUS, a Latin poet, in the time of Nero, to whom Persius addresses his sixth Satire. Some fragments of his works are to be found in the 'Corpus Poetarum' of Maittaire.

BASSVILLE, NICOLAS JEAN HUGOU DE, a French politician and journalist, was, at the time of the first French revolution, one of the editors of the 'National Mercury.' In 1792 he was appointed secretary of legation at Naples. Being at Rome on 13 Jan., 1793, he was assailed with stones by the mob, and forced to seek refuge in a house; but the mob still pursued him, and he received a wound which resulted in his death twenty-four hours afterwards. This event was the cause of many recriminations against the papal government on the part of France, at that time governed by the National Convention. Bassville published 'Memoires historiques,' and other works.

BAST, FREDERICK JAMES, a learned Greek scholar, was born about 1772, in the states of the landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt, and died in Paris 13 Nov., 1811.

BASTA, GEORGE, an Italian writer on military tactics, was a native of Rocca, near Taranto, and died 1607.

BASTARD, THOMAS, an English poet, was born at Blandford, Dorsetshire, and educated at Westminster School and New College, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. He became rector of Almer in his native county, but died in Dorchester prison, where he was confined for debt, 19 April, 1618. He wrote some ingenious epigrams, libels, and sermons.

BASTIAT, FREDERIC, a French political economist, born at Bayonne 29 June, 1801; died at Rome 24 Dec., 1850.

BASTIDE, JEAN FRANÇOIS DE, a voluminous author, born at Marseilles 15 March, 1724; died at Milan 4 July, 1798.

BASTIN.

BASTIN, JOHN, an English wood-engraver; died 1851. He executed a great number of illustrations for the 'Art Journal.'

BASTON, PHILIP, an English Carmelite, received his education at Oxford, and was ordained priest by Oliver Sutton, bishop of Lincoln, 22 Sept., 1296. He was living in 1320, and died at Nottingham. He was author of a volume of epistles in Latin.

BASTON, ROBERT, brother of Philip, was a native of Yorkshire. He studied at Oxford, and having entered the Carmelite Order, became prior of Scarborough. He flourished about 1310. Baston was author of 'De Strivelinensi obsidione,' and other poetical works in Latin.

BASTWICK, JOHN, M.D., a physician, was born at Writtle, in Essex, 1593, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, though he took his doctor's degree at Padua. For some libels against the Church of England he lost his ears in the pillory, and was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment in St. Mary's Castle, in Scilly. In 1640 he was released by the parliament, and had a reward of £5000 allowed him out of the archbishop of Canterbury's estates. Died 6 Oct., 1654.

BATE, GEORGE, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent physician, born at Maid's Morton, near Buckingham, 1608. At fourteen years of age he became one of the clerks of New College, Oxford, from whence he was removed to Queen's College, and afterwards to St. Edmund's Hall. When he had taken the degrees of bachelor and master of arts, he entered on the physic line; and having taken a degree in that faculty in 1629, he obtained a license, and for some years practised in and about Oxford; his practice was chiefly amongst the Puritans, who at that time considered him as one of their party. In 1637 he took the degree of doctor in physic, and became very eminent in his profession, so that when King Charles kept his court at Oxford, he was his principal physician. When the king's affairs declined, Dr. Bate removed to London, where he accommodated himself so well to the times, that he became physician to the Charter-house, fellow of the College of Physicians, and afterwards principal physician to Oliver Cromwell. Nevertheless, upon the Restoration he got into favour with the royal party, and was made principal physician to the king. Dr. Bate wrote, in Latin, 'An Account of the late Commotions in England,' and some other pieces. Died 19 April, 1668.

BATE, HENRY. See DUDLEY, SIR BATE.

BATE, JAMES, an English divine, was son of the Rev. Richard Bate, vicar of Chilham, and rector of Warehorne, Kent, who died 1736. This son was born at Bocton Malherb, in that county, in 1703, and educated at the King's School, Canterbury, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took his first degree, 1723, and was elected fellow soon afterwards; but an offer of a fellowship at St. John's being made to him, he accepted the latter. In 1727 he took his master's degree, and became moderator of the university 1730. Soon after this he attended the honourable Horatio Walpole, ambassador to Paris, as his chaplain, and on his return obtained the rectory of St. Paul's, Deptford, on the presentation of the king, 1731. He died there in Sept., 1775. His works are 'An Address to his Parishioners on the Rebellion in 1745;' 'Infidelity Scourged;

BATEMAN.

'Methodism Displayed; or Remarks upon Mr. Whitfield's answer to the Bishop of London's last Pastoral Letter. In a Letter to Mr. Whitfield, or, in his absence, to any of his Abettors,' 8vo., London, no date; 'An Essay towards a Rationale of the Doctrine of Original Sin,' 8vo., 1755. In a second edition of this book, he says it was his hard fate in his younger years to serve one of our ambassadors at a foreign court, from whence it is evident that he had no reason to speak well of his patron.

BATE, JOHN, D.D., an English Carmelite, was a native of Northumberland, and educated at Oxford. He became prior of the house of his order at York, and died 26 Jan., 1429. Dr. Bate wrote a compendium of logic, and other works.

BATE, JULIUS, brother of James, mentioned above, was born about 1711, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1742. He contracted an intimacy with the celebrated John Hutchinson, whose opinions he defended with great zeal, and, in conjunction with Mr. Spearman, published an edition of his works. The duke of Somerset having given Mr. Hutchinson the presentation of the living of Sutton, in Sussex, he bestowed it upon his friend and disciple, Mr. Bate, who died at Arundel 7 April, 1771. His publications were 'The Examiner Examined,' a vindication of Catcott against Bedford, 8vo., 1739; 'An Essay towards explaining the third chapter of Genesis;' 'The Philosophical Principles of Moses, asserted and defended against Jennings;' 'Remarks upon Mr. Warburton's Remarks, &c., tending to show that the Antients knew there was a Future State; and that the Jews were not under an equal Providence. With an Explication of some Passages in Job, which relate to Christianity,' 8vo., London, 1745; 'The Faith of the ancient Jews in the Law of Moses;' 'A Hebrew Grammar;' 'The Use and Intent of Prophecy,' against Middleton; 'The Scripture Meaning of Elohim and Berith;' 'An Enquiry into the original Similitudes in the Old and New Testament;' 'The Integrity of the Hebrew Text vindicated against Kennicott;' 'A Reply to Dr. Sharp's Review of, and Defence of, his Dissertations on the Meaning of Berith;' 'Critica Hebræa, or a Hebrew and English Dictionary without Points.' He published also some other controversial tracts, which evince his learning as a biblical scholar, and after his death appeared his 'Translation of the Pentateuch, and of the Historical Books to the end of the second of Kings, from the Hebrew,' 4to., 1773.

BATECUMBE, WILLIAM, an English mathematician of the fifteenth century. He was a professor at Oxford, and wrote 'De Sphæra concavæ fabrica et usu;' 'De Sphæra solida;' 'De operatione Astrolabii;' and 'Conclusiones Sphæricæ.'

BATEMAN, THOMAS, a distinguished physician, was born at Whitby, Yorkshire, 29 April, 1778, and educated at London and Edinburgh, at which latter place he graduated M.D., 1801. He became physician to the Public Dispensary in London, and to the Fever Institution, and acquired a European reputation by his skill in cutaneous diseases. Died 9 April, 1821. His principal publications were 'A Practical Synopsis of cutaneous Diseases,' 1813, which was translated into French, Italian, and German; and 'Delineations of the Cutaneous Diseases.' He was also the author of all the medical articles, except two, in Rees's Cyclopædia, from the letter C, inclusive.

BATEMAN, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was a native of Norwich, and received his education at Cambridge, where he was created doctor of the civil law. In 1328 he was appointed archdeacon of Norwich, and afterwards proceeded to Rome, where he was appointed auditor of the pope's palace. His holiness also gave him the deanery of Lincoln, and twice sent him as nuncio to England to procure a peace between Edward III. and the French king. In 1343-4 he was constituted bishop of Norwich, receiving episcopal consecration at the hands of the pope himself. Subsequently Edward III. employed him in state affairs of the highest importance. He died at Avignon, whither he had been sent on an embassy to the pope, 6 Jan., 1354-5. Bishop Bateman was the founder of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

BATES, JOAH, a musical composer, was born at Halifax 1740, and educated at Eton, whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge. During his residence in the university he was patronised by Dr. Smith, master of Trinity College, under whose immediate inspection he perfected his knowledge of harmony, and acquired that reputation for musical erudition which distinguished him through life. On leaving Cambridge he became private secretary to Lord Sandwich, then first lord of the Admiralty. It was on the occasion of a music meeting at Leicester that he wrote his ode 'Here shall soft Chaucer repair,' which was set to music by Dr. Boyd, and became extremely popular. Its success inspired Mr. Bates with the idea of rescuing the old masters' compositions from oblivion by having them occasionally performed by a numerous and well-selected band of vocal and instrumental performers. With this object he founded in Tottenham Street the concert of Ancient Music, which attained to great celebrity. George III. expressed his approbation of these performances by procuring for Mr. Bates the appointment of commissioner of the Victualling Office. Soon afterwards he married his distinguished pupil Miss Harrop. In 1784 he planned and conducted the great musical performance, the 'Commemoration of Handel,' which took place in Westminster Abbey, and the Pantheon. He was afterwards promoted to a seat at the Board of Customs. Having projected the Albion Mills, he lost his own and his wife's fortune in that unfortunate speculation. This preyed upon his mind, and produced a complaint of which he died, 8 June, 1799.

BATES, WILLIAM, D.D., a nonconformist divine and biographer, born Nov., 1625. He studied first at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, whence he removed to Queen's College, where he took his B.A. degree, 1647. Having been ordained, according to the presbyterian form, he became vicar of St. Dunstan in the West. At the Restoration, to which he was favourable, he obtained his doctor's degree by royal mandate, and was offered the deanery of Lichfield and Coventry, which he declined. He was one of the commissioners at the Savoy conference for revising the liturgy, and died at Hackney 14 July, 1699. His theological works were collected and published in one volume folio, after his death. He was likewise author of 'Vitæ selectorum aliquot virorum qui Doctrina, Dignitate, aut Pietate inclaruerunt,' 4to., London, 1681.

BATHE.

BATESON, THOMAS, an English musical composer, was elected organist of Chester Cathedral about 1600, and about 1618 was appointed organist and master of the children in Trinity Church, Dublin. It is supposed that he took the degree of Mus. B. in the university of that city. He published a set of 'English Madrigals for three, four, five, and six Voices.'

BATH, JOHN, an Irish Jesuit, was living in Drogheda when the town was stormed by the Cromwellian forces. His house was given up to plunder, and he and his brother, a secular priest, were conducted to the market place and there shot, 16 Aug., 1649.

BATH, WILLIAM PULTENEY, earl of, was born of an ancient family in 1682, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, where he made the congratulatory speech to Queen Anne on her visit to the college. After travelling through Europe, he was elected into Parliament, and became distinguished as a zealous Whig. On the accession of George I. he was appointed a privy councillor, and secretary at war, being then the friend of Sir Robert Walpole; but afterwards a difference arose between them, and Pulteney became the leader of the opposition. He also joined Bolingbroke in conducting a paper called 'The Craftsman,' the object of which was to annoy the minister. This produced a duel between Pulteney and Lord Hervey; and the king was so much displeased with the conduct of the former, that he struck his name out of the list of privy councillors, and also from the commission of the peace. On the resignation of Walpole, in 1741, Pulteney was created earl of Bath; but from that time his popularity ceased. Died 8 June, 1764.

BATHE, HENRY DE, an English judge, was born in Devonshire. After studying the law, he was made by Henry III., in 1238, judge of the common pleas, and also one of the justices itinerant; but in 1251 he fell into disgrace upon many charges of malversation and bribery. However, he was at length restored to favour, and made chief justice of the King's Bench. Died 1261.

BATHE, WILLIAM, was born in Dublin, 1564, and studied at Oxford, but being converted to Catholicism, he retired to the continent, and joined the Society of Jesus at Tournay, 1596. When he had finished his studies at Padua, he was ordered to Spain, and appointed rector of the college of his countrymen at Salamanca. Died at Madrid 17 June, 1614. He wrote 'An Introduction to the Art of Musick, wherein are set down exact and easy Rules, with Arguments and their Solutions, for such as seek to know the Reason of the Truth: which Rules, he means, whereby any, by his own Industry, may shortly, easily, and regularly attain to all such Things as to this Art do belong,' 4to., London, 1584; a second edition of this work, almost entirely rewritten, was published under the title of 'A briefe Introduction to the Skill of Song, concerning the Practise,' 8vo., London, no date. 'Janua Linguarum: seu, Modus maxime accommodatus, quo patefit Aditus ad omnes Linguas intelligendas,' Salamanca, 1611; 'Preparation for the administering the Sacrament of Penance with greater Facility and Fruit of Repentance than hath been already done.' This work was written in English and Latin by the author, but Father Joseph Cresswell published a Spanish translation of it, under the name of Peter

BATHER.

Manrique, entitled 'Aperejos para administrar le Sacramento de la Penitencia con mas facilidad y fruto,' Milan, 1604, or rather 1614; 'A Methodical Institution of the Principal Mysteries of the Christian Faith, with a Method annexed for the right Exercise of General Confession.'

BATHER, LUCY ELIZABETH, daughter of Charles James Blomfield, bishop of London, and wife of Mr. Arthur Bather, died 5 Sept., 1864. She was author of 'Footprints on the Sands of Time,' and some other juvenile works, published under the name of 'Aunt Lucy.'

BATHORY, STEPHEN, king of Poland. He was born of a noble family in Transylvania, of which country he was elected prince, 1571; and his reputation was such that when Henry duke of Anjou quitted the throne of Poland, he was chosen to succeed him. He corrected many abuses, and repulsed the Muscovites. Died 1586.

BATHURST, ALLEN, Earl Bathurst, was son of Sir Benjamin Bathurst, of Pauler's Perry, Northamptonshire, by his wife Frances, daughter of Sir Allen Apsley, and was born in Westminster 16 Nov., 1684. At the age of fifteen he entered Trinity College, Oxford, of which his uncle, Dean Bathurst, was president. In 1705, when just of age, he was chosen member for Cirencester, which borough he represented in two parliaments. During the reign of Queen Anne he joined the Tory party, for which he was made a peer in 1711. He was a zealous opponent of Walpole's administration, and in 1743 became a member of the privy council. In 1757 he was constituted treasurer to the prince of Wales, on whose accession to the throne he obtained a pension of £2000 a year. In 1772 he was advanced to the dignity of Earl Bathurst. Died 16 Sept., 1775. His lordship was the intimate friend of Bolingbroke, Addison, Pope, Swift, Gay, and other wits of that time. Till within a month of his death he rode on horseback two hours every morning, and regularly drank a bottle of wine after dinner. He used jocosely to declare that he could never think of adopting Dr. Cadogan's regimen, as Dr. Cheyne had assured him fifty years before that he would not live seven years longer unless he abridged himself of his wine.

BATHURST, BENJAMIN, an English gentleman, whose mysterious and untimely death entitles him to a place in this work. He was born in London 1784, and at an early age was employed in the diplomatic service. In 1809, when returning from a mission to Vienna, carrying important dispatches, he was assassinated near Hamburgh, and no trace of him was ever discovered except a portion of his clothing on the bank of the Elbe.

BATHURST, HENRY, second Earl Bathurst, son of Allen the first earl, was born 1714. Having studied the law, he was made solicitor-general, and afterwards attorney-general, to the prince of Wales. In 1754 he was constituted one of the justices of the Common Pleas, and in 1771 elevated to the woolsack with the title of Baron Apsley. He resigned the seals 1788, and died 1794. His lordship wrote a pamphlet entitled 'The Case of Miss Swordfeiger;' and a work on the 'Theory of Evidence.'

BATHURST, HENRY, bishop of Norwich, was born at Brackley, Northamptonshire, 16 Oct., 1744, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he was elected to a fellowship at New College, Oxford (B.C.L. 1768; D.C.L. 1776). He obtained the rectory of Witchingham, Norfolk, a canonry of Christ Church, Oxford, a prebendal stall at Durham, and other ecclesiastical preferments, and on 9 March, 1805, was consecrated bishop of Norwich. He died in London 5 April, 1837. Bishop Bathurst was a zealous friend of Catholic Emancipation, and indeed he was regarded for many years as the only liberal prelate in the House of Lords. He published some sermons and charges, and 'A Letter to the late Mr. Wilberforce, on Christianity and Politics, how far they are reconcilable,' 1818.

BATHURST, RALPH, M.D., an eminent Latin poet, physician, and divine, born in 1620, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he at first applied himself to divinity, but afterwards to physic, and was employed as physician to the sick and wounded of the navy. After the Restoration he returned to the study of divinity, and having taken orders, was appointed chaplain to King Charles II., and admitted a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1664 he was elected president of Trinity College, Oxford, and in 1670 was installed dean of Wells. In 1691 he was nominated to the see of Bristol, but refused it, preferring to reside in his college, the chapel of which he afterwards rebuilt in a very elegant manner. Died 14 June, 1704. He was a person of great learning, and particularly celebrated for his poetical genius. His works are 'Newes from the dead, or a true and exact narration of the miraculous deliverance of Anne Green, who being executed at Oxford, Dec. 14, 1650, afterwards revived, and by the care of certain physicians there, is now perfectly recovered; together with the manner of her suffering, and the particular means used for her recovery. Whereunto are prefixed certain poems, casually written upon that subject,' 4to., Oxford, 1651; 'A Poem on the Death of Mr. Seiden,' in Nichols's 'Select Collection;' and several Latin poems, printed in the 'Musarum Anglicanarum Analecta.'

BATHURST, RICHARD, M.D., was born in Jamaica. His father, an eminent planter in that island, sent him to England in order that he might qualify himself for the practice of physic. He was accordingly entered of Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.B. 1745. He afterwards studied in the metropolis, where he became acquainted with the celebrated Dr. Johnson, by whom he was greatly beloved. On 26 Sept., 1754, he was elected physician to the Middlesex Hospital, which post, however, he resigned in November, 1756, and not meeting with that success in his profession to which his great abilities justly entitled him, he embraced the offer of an appointment as physician to the army which was sent on the expedition of the Havannah, where soon after his arrival he was seized with a fever which resulted in his death in 1762. Dr. Bathurst possessed literary talents of no mean order, and in conjunction with Johnson, Hawksworth, and others, wrote the periodical entitled 'The Adventurer.'

BATHURST, THEODORE, sometime fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, published an elegant Latin translation of Spenser's 'Shepherd's Calendar,' under the following title, 'Calendarium Pastoralis: sive, Eclogæ duodecim, totidem Anni Mensibus accommodatæ, Anglice olim scriptæ ab Edmundo Spensero Anglorum Poetarum Principe, nunc autem elegantissimo Latino Carmine donatæ,' 8vo., London, 1653.

BATHYANI.

BATHYANI, LOUIS, Count, an Hungarian statesman, born at Presburg 1809; and executed Oct. 1849.

BATHYLLOS, a famous pantomimist of Alexandria, who went to Rome in the reign of Augustus, and was Mæcenas's freedman.

BATMAN, STEPHEN, D.D., an English translator and compiler, was born at Bruton, Somersetshire, and received his academical education at Cambridge. He became domestic chaplain to Archbishop Parker, who employed him in the collection of the valuable library now at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Subsequently he became rector of Mersham, Surrey, parson of Newington Butts, and chaplain to Lord Hunsdon. Died 1584. Among his publications are, 'Christiall Glass for Christian Reformation,' 1569; 'Joyfull newes out of Hierusalem, from Theophr. Paracelsus, declaring the ruinate fall of the papal dignitie,' 1575; and 'The Doome warning all men to the Judgement: wherein are contained for the most parte, all the strange Prodiges hapned in the Worlde, with divers secrette figures of Revelations tending to the next stated conversion towards God: In matter of a generall Chronicle, gathered out of severall approved authors,' 1581.

BATMANSON, JOHN, a Carthusian monk, prior of the Charterhouse, London, died Nov., 1531. His works are 'Animadversiones in Annotationes Erasmi in Novum Testamentum'; 'Tractatus contra Doctrinam Martini Lutheri'; 'Institutiones for Novices'; 'Of the Contempt of the World;' and other treatises.

BATONI, POMPEO, a distinguished painter, who is regarded as the founder of the modern Roman school, was born at Lucca 1708, and died at Rome Feb. 1787.

BATSCHE, AUGUSTUS JOHN GEORGE CHARLES, a German writer on natural history, born at Jena 28 Oct. 1761; died 29 Sept., 1802.

BATT, ANTHONY, an English Benedictine, died 12 Jan. 1661. He wrote 'Thesaurus absconditus in Agro Dominico inventus, in duas partes: I. Precationes, II. Meditationes,' 12mo., Paris, 1641; and 'A Hive of sacred Honie Combes, containing most sweet and heavenly counsel,' 8vo., Douay, 1651, taken from the works of St. Bernard.

BATTAGLINI, MARK, was born at Rimini 1645, and became bishop, first of Nocera, and afterwards of Coena. Died 19 Sept., 1717. He was author of a Universal History of Councils, &c.

BATTEL, ANDREW, an English seaman of the seventeenth century, whose adventures in Africa and other countries are narrated in the collection of Purchas. He was born in Essex about 1604, and towards the close of his life retired to Leigh, in that county; but the date of his death is not recorded.

BATTEL, RALPH, D.D., an English divine, born 11 April, 1649, was rector of St. Peter's Church, Canterbury, and of Edworth, Bedfordshire; sub-dean of the Chapel Royal, sub-almoner to Queen Anne, and prebendary of Worcester. Died 20 March, 1712. He published 'Sermons' in 1684 and 1694.

BATTELY, JOHN, D.D., a divine and antiquary, was born at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, about 1647, being son of an apothecary in that town. He was educated in the free school at Bury, and on 5 July, 1662, was admitted a sizar of Trinity College, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his doctor's degree. Afterwards he became chaplain to Archbishop Sancroft, who presented him to the rectory of Adisham, in Kent, a prebend in Canterbury Cathedral, and the archdeaconry of the diocese. Died 10 Oct., 1708. His 'Antiquitates Rutupinæ,' in elegant Latin, appeared in 1711, 8vo., and a second edition in 4to., 1745, with the author's 'Antiquitates Sancti Edmondburgi.' In 1774 Mr. Duncombe published a translation of the first work, under the title of 'The Antiquities of Richborough and Reculver, abridged,' 12mo.

BATTELY, NICHOLAS, M.A., brother to Dr. John Battely, through whose interest he was collated on 24 Aug., 1685, by Archbishop Sancroft, to the vicarage of Beaksbourn, near Canterbury, and the rectory of Ivy Church, in Romney Marsh. Died 19 May, 1704, ætat. 55. As he had, in consequence of his brother being a prebend of Canterbury, free access to the archives of that church, he furnished Strype with a great many collections from them, as is gratefully acknowledged by that industrious antiquary. Mr. Battely also published a second edition of Somner's 'Antiquities of the City of Canterbury,' to which he added a distinct work of his own, entitled 'Cantuaria Sacra; or, the Antiquities of the Cathedral and Metropolitane Church,' &c., folio, 1703.

BATTEN, ADRIAN, organist and vicar choral of St. Paul's, London, was a composer of services and anthems, of which several are inserted in Barnard's collection; and the words of many of his anthems are to be found in that of Clifford. He flourished about 1640.

BATTEUX, CHARLES, a French writer, was born at Allend'huy, near Rheims, 7 May, 1713, and died at Paris 14 July, 1780. He became professor of theology in the Royal College, member of the French Academy, and of that of inscriptions and honorary canon of Rheims. Among his numerous works are, 'Cours de Belles Lettres;' a French translation of Horace; 'History of First Causes;' and 'Elementary Course for the Use of the Military School,' 45 vols. 12mo.

BATTIE, WILLIAM, M.D., an English physician, was born at Modbury, in Devonshire, in 1704. He received his education at Eton, from whence he was sent to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained the Craven scholarship. In 1726 he took his bachelor's degree; and in 1730 that of master of arts. In 1729 he published proposals for an edition of Isocrates, which did not appear till the year 1749, in 2 vols. 8vo. He took his doctor's degree in 1737; and after practising some time at Cambridge, settled at Uxbridge. From thence he removed to London; and in 1746 published an Harveian oration; but the part which he took in the dispute between Dr. Schomberg and the College of Physicians exposed him to the ridicule of the wits who were in that gentleman's interest, and by them the doctor was ridiculed in a poem, intitled 'The Battiad.' In 1751 he published his Lumeian lectures delivered at the college. In 1757, being then physician to St. Luke's Hospital, and master of a lunatic asylum at Islington, he published 'A Treatise on Madness,' which was severely attacked by Dr. John Monro. In 1763 he was examined before a committee of the House of Commons on the state of the private madhouses in England, and received an honourable testimony to his abilities and candour on that occasion. He died 13 June, 1776, and was buried at Kingston-upon-Thames. Dr. Battie was very fond of mimicry, which he carried some- times rather too low, in the imitation of Punch; but, notwithstanding this, he was a learned man, and very skillful in his profession.

BATTINE, WILLIAM, LL.D., F.R.S., an eminent civilian, born at East Morden, Sussex, 25 Jan., 1765, and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (LL.B. 1780; LL.D. 1785). He became a member of the College of Doctors of Law in London, and soon acquired an extensive practice in the ecclesiastical courts. Dr. Battine was chancellor of the diocese of Lincoln, advocate-general in the Court of Admiralty, one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to George IV., and the holder of other important preferments. Died 5 Sept., 1836. He composed a poem entitled 'Cain,' to combat and counteract the tenets displayed in Lord Byron's poem bearing the same title.

BATTISHILL, JONATHAN, an English musician, born in London 1738. At the age of nine he was placed in the choir of St. Paul's, and was soon qualified to sing at sight. He was afterwards articulated to Mr. Savage, the master of the musical school; and on the expiration of his term became a composer for Sadler's Wells and a musical performer in the orchestra of Covent Garden. He was also chosen organist of St. Clement, Eastcheap, and Christ Church, Newgate Street. In 1770 he obtained the medal given by the noblemen's catch club for his glee of 'Underneath this Myrtle Shade.' About this time also he published some excellent anthems; and set to music a selection of hymns written by the Rev. Charles Wesley. Mr. Battishill died 10 Dec., 1801.

BATTY, ROBERT, F.R.S., an English artist and writer on military affairs, was son of Robert Batty, M.D., of Hastings, and was born in or about 1789. After entering the army he returned to Cambridge, where he had been already entered as a member of Caius College, and took the degree of M.B. in 1813. Ultimately, however, he forsook the medical for the military profession, and served in the Grenadier Guards during the campaign of the Western Pyrenees, and at Waterloo, where he was wounded. He was aide-de-camp to Sir William Clinton in Portugal, and on the staff of Count Woronzow, who commanded the Russian forces at Maubeuge. Eventually he rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In the course of travels which he made in most of the countries of Europe he made a valuable series of drawings, afterwards published with the following titles: 'French Scenery, from Drawings made in 1819,' imp. 8vo., 1822; 'German Scenery, from Drawings made in 1820,' imp. 8vo., 1823; 'Welsh Scenery,' imp. 8vo., 1823; 'Scenery of the Rhine, Belgium, and Holland,' imp. 8vo., 1826; 'Scenery of India;' and 'Select Views of the principal Cities of Europe,' 1830-33. He also recorded the gallant services of his corps in a volume entitled 'Campaign of the Left Wing of the Allied Army in the Western Pyrenees and South of France in the years 1813-14, under Field-Marshal the Marquess of Wellington,' 4to., 1823; and likewise wrote a 'Sketch of the Campaign of 1815.' Colonel Batty died in London 20 Nov., 1848.

BATY, RICHARD, a divine, was born at Arthuret, in Cumberland, and educated at Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1725. On entering into orders he became curate of Kirk-Andrews-upon-Esk, of which living he was appointed rector in 1732. Here he built a parsonage house, and established a ferry across the river for the use of his parishioners. He also contributed to the building of a school-house, and distinguished himself, among other good works, by his skill in disorders of the eyes, though he never accepted anything for his services. He died in 1758. He published 'A Sermon on the Sacrament, with Prayers,' 8vo.; 'Seasonable Advice to a Careless World,' 12mo.; 'The Young Clergyman's Companion in visiting the Sick,' 12mo.

BAUDELOQUE, JEAN LOUIS, an eminent French accoucheur, born at Heilly, in Picardy, 1746, died 1 May, 1810.

BAUDELOT DE DAIRVAL, CHARLES CÉSAR, a learned advocate of the parliament of Paris, where he was born 1648. He was distinguished for his skill in antiquities. Died 27 June, 1722. He wrote a treatise 'De l'Utilité des Voyages,' and some dissertations upon medals.

BAUDERON, BRICE, a French physician, born at Paray 1540; died at Mâcon 1623. His 'Pharmacopœia' passed through many editions, and was translated into Latin by Dr. Holland, folio, London, 1639.

BAUDET, ÉTIENNE, a French engraver, born at Blois 1643; died at Paris 1716.

BAUDIER, MICHEL, historiographer of France, under Louis XIII., was a native of Languedoc, and died about 1650. The most remarkable of his writings are 'General History of the Religion of the Turks, and of the Lives of Mahomet and the first four Caliphs;' 'History of the Courts of Turkey and China;' and 'History of Cardinal d'Amboise.'

BAUDIN, PIERRE CHARLES LOUIS, a French political writer, born at Sedan 18 Oct., 1748; died 17 Oct., 1799.

BAUDIUS, DOMINIC, a civilian, born at Lisle 1561. He studied at various universities, and in 1585 took the degree of doctor of law at Leyden; soon after which he accompanied the ambassadors from the United States to England, where he became acquainted with Sir Philip Sidney. He was admitted an advocate at the Hague in 1587; but relinquished the bar, and went to France, where he resided ten years. In 1602 he came again to England, with Christopher de Harlai, son of the president of the parliament of Paris, who was sent ambassador hither by Henry IV. The same year he was appointed professor of eloquence at Leyden, where he settled and read lectures on history. The States also conferred on him the honour of being their historiographer, in conjunction with Meursius. Died 22 Aug., 1613. His works are 'Oratio in Plinii Panegyricum;' 'Poemata;' 'Oratio ad Studiosos Leydenses;' 'Monumentum consecratum honori et memorie Britanniarum Principis Henrici Fred.;' 'De Induciis Belli Belgici;' 'Epistolæ;' and 'The History of the Truce.'

BAUDOIN, or BAUDOIN, FRANÇOIS, in Latin, Baldwinus, a French civilian, born at Arras 1 Jan., 1520. He taught law with great reputation at Bourges, Angers, Paris, and other cities. He at one time entertained a friendship for Calvin, but afterwards quarrelled with, and wrote against, that celebrated reformer. Baudoin was sent to the Council of Trent by Anthony, king of Navarre, but on the death of that prince, in 1562, he returned to France, and was made counsellor of state by Henry III. Died 3 Nov., 1573. He composed several works in Latin on law, history, and controversial divinity.

BAUDOIN, or BAUDOIN, JEAN, of the French

Academy, was born at Pradelle, in Vivarais, about 1584, became reader to Queen Margaret, and died at Paris, 1650. He translated Davila, Dion Cassius, Tasso's Jerusalem, &c. into French, and wrote a 'History of Malta,' 'Emblems,' and other works.

BAUDOT DE JULLY, NICHOLAS, born at Paris, 17 April, 1678. Died 29 Aug., 1759; wrote a 'History of the Conquest of England by William, duke of Normandy,' and other works.

BAUDRAND, MICHEL ANTOINE, a writer on geography, born at Paris 28 July, 1633; died 29 April, 1700.

BAUER, FERDINAND, a native of Feldsperg, in Austria, was appointed by the English government natural-history painter to the expedition of Capt. Flinders, R.N., to Australia. The description of that expedition contains some valuable figures of plants from drawings by Bauer. In the latter part of his life he resided at Hietzing, near Vienna, and died 17 March, 1826, aged 56.

BAUHIN, GASPARD, brother of Jean, the physician to the duke of Wurtemberg, was born at Basle 17 Jan., 1550. He studied the sciences at Padua, and was successively professor of Greek, botany, and anatomy. He succeeded his brother as physician to the duke of Wurtemberg, and died 5 Dec., 1624. He composed several works in Latin on botany and anatomy.

BAUHIN, JEAN, was born at Amiens 24 Aug., 1511, and bred to the profession of medicine, which he practised with great reputation in France, England, and the Low Countries. Having embraced the doctrines of Calvin, he retired to Basle, where he practised for forty years. Died 1582.

BAUHIN, JEAN, eldest son of the preceding, was born at Basle 1541, and acquired a profound knowledge of botany. He carried on a correspondence with the illustrious Conrad Gesner, whom he accompanied on several scientific expeditions. In 1566 he was appointed professor of rhetoric in his native city, and in 1570 was constituted physician to the duke of Wurtemberg, whereupon he removed to Montbeliard, where he died 1613. He was author of several works on botany.

BAUHIN, JEAN GASPARD, son of Gaspard, mentioned above, was born at Basle 12 March, 1656, professed botany and medicine in his native city, and died there 18 July, 1685. He published three medical treatises of his own, and the first volume of the 'Theatrum Botanicum,' which had been left in MS. by his father. Of his seven sons, four became doctors of medicine, and the third, Jerome, published a new German edition of the 'Kräuterbuch' of Tabernæmontanus, folio, Basle, 1664.

BAULDRI, PAUL, surnamed D'IBERVILLE, was born at Rouen 1639, of Protestant parents. After studying at Saumur he visited England, and resided a considerable time at Oxford. He then returned to France, but was compelled to quit that country on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, when he repaired to Holland, and was appointed professor of ecclesiastical history at Utrecht, where he died 1706. He published an edition of Lactantius, 'De Mortibus Persecutorum,' a new edition of a work by Furetiere, entitled 'Histoire des Derniers Troubles arrives au Royaume d'Eloquence;' 'Syntagma Calendariarum,' and a great number of dissertations.

BAULOT, or BRAULIOT, JACQUES, a celebrated

French lithotomist, born 1651; died at Besançon 1714. He was called Friar James, on account of his wearing a monastic dress, though he was never a member of any religious order.

BAUME, ANTOINE, an eminent Parisian chemist, was born at Senlis 26 Feb., 1728, and died 15 Oct., 1804.

BAUME, NICOLAS AUGUSTE DE LA, marquis of Montreuil, a brave marshal of France, under Louis XIV., was born 1636, and died 11 Oct., 1716.

BAUME DES DOSSAT, JACQUES FRANÇOIS DE LA, canon of Avignon, was born at Carpentras 1705, and died 30 Aug., 1756. He published a poem in prose, entitled 'The Christiade, or Paradise Regained,' which was condemned by the parliament of Paris. Besides this ridiculous work, he was the author of 'Saturnales Françaises,' and other pieces.

BAUMER, JOHN WILLIAM, a physician, born at Rehweiler, in Franconia, 1719. He was at first a minister, but abandoned theology, and became medical professor, first at Erfurt and then at Giessen, where he died 4 Aug., 1788. Among his numerous works are a 'Natural History of the Mineral Kingdom,' and a 'Natural History of Precious Stones.'

BAUMGARTEN, ALEXANDER THEOPHILUS, a Prussian writer, was born at Berlin in 1714. He studied at Halle, and became professor of philosophy there, and afterwards at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, where he died 26 May, 1762. He wrote 'Metaphysica;' 'Ethica-Philosophica;' 'Æsthetica;' 'Initia Philosophiæ Practicæ Primæ.'

BAUMGARTEN, JAMES SIGISMUND, a learned Lutheran divine, brother of the preceding, was born at Wollmirstädt, near Magdeburg, 14 March, 1706, and became professor of divinity at Halle, where he died 4 July, 1757. He published several works, original and translated.

BAUNE, JACQUES DE LA, a Jesuit, born 15 April, 1649, at Paris, where he died, after a very active life spent in teaching and other honourable employments, 21 Oct., 1726. He edited the 'Opera varia' of Father Sirmond, and 'Panegyrici veteres ad usum Delphini.' Besides these performances he composed several funeral discourses and Latin poems.

BAUR, FREDERICK WILLIAM VON, a Hessian soldier in the pay of Britain, made a general and ennobled by Frederick II. of Prussia, and afterwards an able engineer in the service of Russia. Born 1731; died 4 Feb., 1783.

BAUR, JOHN WILLIAM, a painter and engraver, born at Strasburg 1610; died at Vienna 1640. He etched the Metamorphoses of Ovid from his own designs.

BAUSCH, JOHN LAURENCE, a German physician and medical writer, born 30 Sept., 1605; died 1665.

BAUTRU, GUILLAUME, a celebrated wit, and one of the first members of the French Academy, was born at Paris 1588, and died there 1665. Once, when he was in Spain, having been to see the famous library of the Escorial, where he found a very ignorant librarian, the king of Spain inquired what he had remarked. To whom Bautru replied that the library was a very fine one, 'but your majesty,' added he, 'should make your librarian treasurer of your finances.' 'Why so?' 'Because,' answered Bautru, 'he never touches what he is intrusted with.'

BAVANT.

BAVANT, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic divine, was educated at Oxford, where he graduated M.A. 1552. He was one of the original fellows of St. John's College and the first Greek reader there. During his residence in Oxford he was tutor to the two noted writers, Edmund Campian and Gregory Martin. On the change of religion he left the country, and pursued his theological studies at Rheims and Rome, and was created D.D. In 1581 he ventured to return to England, and laboured at his function for a considerable time, but was at last apprehended and kept a prisoner in Wisbech Castle, where it is supposed he died.

BAVAY, PAUL IGNATIUS DE, was born 25 Feb., 1704, at Brussels, where he died 20 Feb., 1768. He became principal physician to the military hospitals in his native city, and published some works on medicine.

BAWDWEN, WILLIAM, vicar of Hooton Pagnell, near Doncaster, and curate of Frickley-cum-Clayton, Yorkshire, died 14 Sept., 1816. He proposed to print a translation of Domesday Book, in ten volumes, but only two volumes were published. He also contributed to the fourth volume of the new edition of Hutchins's 'History of Dorsetshire,' a translation of the portion of Domesday which relates to that county.

BAXTER, ANDREW, an ingenious writer, was born in 1686, or 1687, at Old Aberdeen, of which city his father was a merchant. He received his education in the King's College, and afterwards became private tutor to young gentlemen. In 1741 he travelled with Mr. Hay, and settled for some time at Utrecht, where he had Lord Blantyre under his care. On his return to Scotland in 1747 he settled at Wittingham, in East Lothian, and died there 23 April, 1756. His works are, 'An Enquiry into the Nature of the Human Soul,' printed first in 4to., and afterwards in 3 vols. 8vo.; 'Matho, sive Cosmotheoria puerilis, Dialogus;' this piece he translated and enlarged into 2 vols. 8vo. He left many valuable manuscripts, from which the late Dr. John Duncan published a work entitled, 'The Evidence of Reason, in proof of the Immortality of the Soul,' 8vo.

BAXTER, RICHARD, an eminent nonconformist divine, was born 12 Nov., 1615, at Rowton, Shropshire. Though his education was much neglected, owing to the insufficiency of his schoolmasters, he made up for it by his diligence, and when very young became master of the free school at Wroxeter. In 1633, he was recommended to Sir Henry Herbert, master of the revels, who received him very kindly; but disliking the court, he returned to the country, and was appointed master of the free school of Dudley. In 1638, he was ordained by the bishop of Winchester, though he never had been at a university. About this time he contracted an acquaintance with some nonconformists, whose sentiments he imbibed, though with moderation. In 1640, he was invited to be minister at Kidderminster, which situation he accepted; but, on the breaking out of the war, he became chaplain in the parliament army and was present at several sieges. He afterwards returned to Kidderminster, where he was highly esteemed, and preached with great success. He opposed the usurpation of Cromwell, and had the courage to defend monarchy in his presence. At the Restoration he was appointed one of the King's chaplains, assisted at the conference held in the Savoy for the reform of the liturgy, and was offered the bishopric of Hereford, which he declined. But his request to continue at Kidderminster was refused, on which he settled in London, where he suffered much for his nonconformity. In 1685, he was tried before Chief Justice Jeffreys for some passages contained in his paraphrase on the New Testament, and being found guilty, was sentenced to be imprisoned for two years; but after a short confinement, by the mediation of Lord Powis, he obtained his liberty, and preached without molestation. He died 8 Dec., 1691, and was buried in Christ Church, Newgate Street. He wrote one hundred and forty-five distinct treatises, the principal of which have been published in four volumes, folio. The most popular of his works are the 'Saints' Everlasting Rest,' and 'The Call to the Unconverted,' which have gone through numerous editions. Dr. Barrow and Dr. Johnson were both great admirers of his practical writings. In his theological opinions Mr. Baxter steered between Calvinism and Arminianism, in which he was followed by many eminent divines, who were called Baxterians.

BAXTER, ROGER, a Jesuit, born at Walton-le-Dale, near Preston, Lancashire, and educated at Stonyhurst, served the Maryland and Pennsylvania mission with great credit, and died at Philadelphia 24 May, 1827, ætat. 34. He wrote 'Remarks on Le Mesurier's Sermon on Invocation of Saints,' 8vo., London, 1816; and 'The most important Tenets of Roman Catholics Fairly Explained,' 12mo., Washington, 1819.

BAXTER, WILLIAM, a grammarian and critic, was the nephew of Richard Baxter, and born in 1650 at Lanlunan in Shropshire. It is said that his education had been so much neglected that at the age of eighteen he could not read. He must, however, have laboured with uncommon diligence, for he became a man of great and various learning, as appeared in 1679, when he published his Latin grammar entitled, 'De Analogia, sive, arte Linguæ Latinæ Commentariolus, &c.' In 1695 appeared his edition of Anacreon, which was reprinted in 1710. In 1701 he published his celebrated edition of Horace, which some critics have pronounced to be the best, while by others it has been strongly censured. It has been several times reprinted, and lastly in 1797, 8vo. In 1719, Mr. Baxter published his dictionary of British antiquities, with the title of 'Glossarium Antiquitatum Britannicarum,' 8vo. To this book is prefixed a fine head of the author, engraved by Vertue. A great part of Mr. Baxter's life was spent at Tottenham High Cross, where he taught youth in the classics, till he was appointed master of the Mercers' School in London. He died 31 May, 1723, and was buried at Islington. Moses Williams published in 1726 'Reliquiæ Baxterianæ; sive, W. Baxteri Opera Posthuma,' 8vo. Our author assisted in the translation of Plutarch's Morals; and some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions.

BAYARD, JAMES A., a native of Delaware, U.S., was a representative, and afterwards a senator in congress from that State. In 1813 he was appointed one of the ministers who negotiated the treaty of peace with Great Britain at Ghent; and subsequently he was sent as minister to the court of St. Petersburg. Died 1815.

a celebrated captain, was born at the castle of Bayard, in the valley of Grainsvaudan, six leagues from Grenoble, in the year 1476. At the age of thirteen he became page to the duke of Savoy, by whom he was presented to Charles VIII. of France, who sent him to the Count de Ligny, that he might be brought up in his family. When only seventeen, he carried away the honours of a tournament given at Lyons, and shortly afterwards accompanied Charles VIII. on his expedition into Italy, where, for his gallantry, the monarch rewarded him with five hundred crowns, and gave him also the title of 'Chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.' Francis I., however, treated him in a still more flattering manner, by receiving the order of knighthood from his hand, on which occasion Bayard kissed his sword, and laid it up as a sacred relic. After achieving great glory in numerous battles and sieges, as well as in single combats, Bayard received a mortal wound near Rebec, in April, 1524. On being struck, he ordered the soldiers to lay him under a tree, with his face to the enemy; for, said he, 'having never yet turned my back upon the foe, I will not begin to do so the last days of my life.' In this posture he was visited by the Constable Charles de Bourbon, against whom he had been engaged, and who saying that he pitied him, 'Sir,' replied he, 'I thank you; but there is no reason why you should pity me, who die like an honest man in the service of my king, though there is great reason to pity you, who are carrying arms against your prince, your country, and your oath.' Soon after this he expired, on 30 April, 1524, and his remains were interred in the cathedral of Grenoble.

BAYEN, PIERRE, a French chemist, born at Châlons-sur-Marne 1725; died at Paris 1798. He was employed as chief chemist to the army during the Seven Years' War, and afterwards settled in Paris, where he pursued his chemical experiments with great reputation.

BAYER, JOHN, was born at Rain, in Bavaria, 1572, and followed the profession of an advocate at Augsburg, where he died 1625. He was a diligent student of astronomy, and has immortalized his name by publishing, in 1603, a work entitled 'Uranometria,' being a celestial atlas of all the constellations, with a nomenclature. In this work, for the first time, the stars were denoted by Greek letters, according to the order of their magnitude in each constellation. This practice has since become universal.

BAYER, THEOPHILUS SIGFRED, grandson of John Bayer, was born 1604, and educated at Konigsberg. He acquired a great knowledge of the oriental languages, particularly the Chinese. In 1717 he was appointed librarian at Konigsberg, and in 1726 was invited to St. Petersburg, where he was made professor of Greek and Roman antiquities. Died 21 Feb., 1738. His principal works are, 'Museum Siniticum, in quo Siniticæ Linguae et Literaturæ ratio explicatur; item Grammatica, Lexicon, et Diatribæ Siniticæ reperiuntur,' 4 vols. 8vo., 1730; 'Historia regni Græcorum Bactriani;' 'Historia Osroena et Edessena ex nummis illustrata.'

BAYF. See BAIF.

BAYFIELD, RICHARD, a monk of Bury St. Edmund's, studied at Cambridge. He was burnt for heresy Nov., 1531.

BAYFIELD, ROBERT, an English physician, who appears to have been born about 1629, wrote

'Tractatus de Tumoribus præter Naturam; or, a Treatise of Preternatural Tumours,' 8vo., London, 1662; and 'Exercitationes Anatomicæ in variis Regionibus humani Corporis,' 2nd edition, 12mo., London, 1668.

BAYLE, FRANÇOIS, a learned French physician and medical writer, was royal professor of philosophy at Toulouse, where he died 24 Sept., 1709, æt. 87.

BAYLE, MOÏSE, a somewhat conspicuous actor in the first French Revolution, became president of the National Convention 22 Oct., 1793. He was an ardent supporter of Robespierre. His death took place about 1815.

BAYLE, PIERRE, a celebrated French critic, was born at Carlat 18 Nov., 1647, being the son of John Bayle, a Protestant minister. He discovered an extreme attachment to the sciences and belles lettres from his youth, and was converted to the Catholic religion at the age of twenty-two, but turned Protestant again seventeen months after. The philosophical chair at Sedan being vacant, 1575, Bayle stood candidate for it with success, but was deprived of the office 1681, which obliged him to take refuge in Holland, where he was elected professor of philosophy and history at Rotterdam. This professorship he also lost by the contrivance of the minister Jurieu, who presented to the consistory, 1696, the reprehensible parts of his dictionary to revenge himself for an intrigue which Bayle is said to have had with his wife. He died 28 Dec., 1696. The work by which Bayle is best, and, indeed, almost exclusively known, is his famous 'Historical and Critical Dictionary,' the first volume of which appeared in 1695. Mr. Chalmers remarks that Bayle has been hailed as one of those who have conducted an opposition to the truths of revealed religion by the means of sarcasm and impertinence instead of fair argument; and, except the French Encyclopædia, there is not perhaps any book so likely to unsettle the minds of young readers as his celebrated dictionary. Nor is this the only objection that may be urged against it. Bayle has been praised for his morality in private life; but what are we to think of the morals of a man who not only takes every opportunity that may lie in his way to introduce obscene discussions, quotations, and allusions, but even perpetually travels out of his way in search of them—who delights in accumulating the anecdotes and imagery of vice, and presenting them to his readers in every shape? Considered in a critical light, this dictionary may be allowed to form a vast mass of information, but the plan is radically bad. It has been said that he wrote it merely for the sake of the notes, which had accumulated in his commonplace book: hence the text bears a very small proportion to the notes suspended from it, and the reader's attention is perpetually diverted from the narrative to attend, not always to what may throw light on the subject of the text, but to Mr. Bayle's tattle and gossip collected from various quarters, and from his own prolific and purient imagination. It is much to be regretted that his reputation was such as to render this mode of writing biography a fashion, and particularly that it was followed in our 'Biographia Britannica,' in many parts of which Bayle's garrulity has been exactly followed.

BAYLEY, ANSELM, LL.D., an English divine, was of Christ's Church College, Oxford, where he took the degree of doctor of laws in 1764. He became minor canon of St. Paul's and of Westminster Abbey, and also subdean of the Chapel Royal. He died in 1794. His works are, 'The Antiquity, Evidence, and Certainty of Christianity Controversed,' 8vo.; 'A Practical Treatise on Singing and Playing,' 8vo.; 'A Plain and Complete Grammar of the English Language,' 8vo.; 'A Grammar of the Hebrew Language,' 8vo.; 'The Old Testament, English and Hebrew, with Remarks,' 4 vols. 8vo.; 'The Commandments of God in the Jewish and Christian Churches; Two Sermons,' 8vo.; 'The Alliance between Music and Poetry,' 8vo.

BAYLEY, CORNELIUS, D.D., an English divine, founder and minister of St. James's Church, Manchester, died 1812. He was author of 'An Entrance into the Sacred Language; containing the necessary rules of Hebrew Grammar, in English,' 12mo., 1782; 'The Swedenborgian Doctrine of a Trinity Considered; or, Strictures on a late Publication entitled, The Scripture Doctrine of a Trinity vindicated according to the Principles of the Illuminated Emanuel Swedenborg,' 12mo., 1786; and some published sermons.

BAYLEY, JOHN, a divine, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1809), and having been elected fellow and tutor of Emanuel College, he took the degree of M.A. as a member of that society 1812. Died 1838, aged 52. Mr. Bayley was author of an algebraical work published in 1830, and of two printed sermons.

BAYLEY, SIR JOHN, an English judge, was made a justice of the king's bench 1808; a baron of the exchequer 1830; a baronet 1834; and died 10 Oct., 1841, aged 78. He published a 'Summary of the Law of Bills of Exchange,' 1789, several times reprinted; and the 3rd edition of Raymond's Reports.

BAYLEY, RICHARD, an American anatomist, born 1745; died 1801.

BAYLIS, WILLIAM, a Scotch physician. After taking his degree at Edinburgh he settled at Bath, where, however, he became engaged in such disputes with his medical brethren, as to be excluded from consultations. He then left England and settled at Berlin, where Frederic the Great appointed him as his physician, saying at the same time, 'That to have acquired so much experience, the doctor must have killed a great many people.' The physician, without any hesitation, replied, 'Not so many as your majesty.' He died at Berlin in 1787. Dr. Baylis wrote 'An Essay on the Bath Waters,' 8vo.; 'A Narrative of Facts,' demonstrating the cause of a physical confederacy against him, 8vo.; 'An Historical Account of the General Hospital at Bath,' 8vo.

BAYLY, BENJAMIN, rector of St. James's, Bristol, wrote an 'Essay on Perspiration,' 8vo., London, 1708; and 'Sermons on Various Subjects,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1721. Died 1720.

BAYLY, JOHN, son of the bishop of Bangor, was born in Herefordshire 1595, and in 1611 was entered of Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. Having taken orders he was appointed one of the king's chaplains and guardian of Christ's hospital in Ruthyn. He published 'The Angel Guardian,' a collection of sermons, 1630, and other works.

BAYLY, LEWIS, an English prelate, was born at Carmarthen, about 1565, and educated at Oxford. After leaving the university, he became minister at Evesham, Worcestershire, chaplain to Henry prince of Wales, and rector of St. Matthew's, Friday Street, London. Having acquired popularity as a preacher, he was appointed one of the chaplains to James I., who nominated him to the bishopric of Bangor, 1616. In 1621 he was committed to the Fleet, but was soon afterwards discharged. It is not certain what was the cause of the commitment. He died 26 Oct., 1631. His fame rests chiefly on his work entitled 'The Practice of Piety,' which has gone through a great number of editions.

BAYLY, THOMAS, D.D., son of Lewis Bayly, bishop of Bangor, was educated at Cambridge, and became subdean of Wells, 1638. He afterwards turned Catholic, and published some books in vindication of his new religion, for which he was imprisoned in Newgate, but having effected his escape he went abroad, where he died about 1657. His works are 'Certamen Religiosum, or a Conference between King Charles I. and Henry, Marquis of Worcester,' 8vo., London, 1649; 'The Royal Charter granted unto Kings by God himself,' 1649; 'Herba Parietis, or the Wall-flower,' folio, 1650; 'The End of Controversies between 'he Catholic and Protestant Religions,' 4to., Douay, 1654; 'The Life and Death of the renowned John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester,' 8vo., London, 1655, originally composed by Richard Hall, D.D.; and 'Dr. Bayly's Challenge.'

BAYLY, THOMAS HAYNES, an English lyrical poet, died at Cheltenham 22 April, 1839, ætat. 42. He was author of 'Oh, no, we never mention her,' 'I'd be a Butterfly,' and other beautiful songs; two or three novels; and thirty or forty pieces for the stage. A privately printed 12mo. volume containing 'Fifty Lyrical Ballads' by him, appeared at Bath, 1829. Archdeacon Wrangham printed for private circulation 'Psychæ; or, Songs of Butterflies, by T. H. Bayly, esq. Attempted in Latin Rhymes (to the same Airs); with a few additional Trifles,' 8vo., Malton, 1828.

BAYLY, WILLIAM, was in 1773 appointed astronomer to Captain Cook's expedition round the world, and his observations were subsequently published at London. He was also astronomer to the expedition of the 'Resolution' and 'Discovery,' to the Northern Pacific Ocean, and on his return was appointed master of the Royal Academy at Portsmouth. Died 1810.

BAYNARD, ANNE, an ingenious lady, was the daughter of Dr. Edward Baynard, an eminent physician, and born at Preston, in Lancashire, in 1672. Her father gave her a very liberal education, and under his instructions she acquired an extensive knowledge of philosophy, astronomy, and mathematics, as well as of the Latin and Greek languages; the former of which she wrote with great elegance. She died 13 June, 1697, and was buried at Barnes, in Surrey.

BAYNBRIGG, CHRISTOPHER, an English cardinal, was born of a good family at Hilton, near Appleby, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, of which he occurs as provost, 5 May, 1495. He was the intimate friend of Morton, ultimately archbishop of Canterbury, and shared in that prelate's sufferings during the usurpation of Richard III. He graduated LL.D. at Bologna, and was incorporated in that degree at Cambridge. On 13 Nov., 1504, he was made master of the rolls, and in the following year dean of Windsor. He was almoner to Henry VII., by whom he was employed in several embassies; and was consecrated bishop of Durham 1507, being in the next year translated to the archbishopric of York. In 1509 he was constituted ambassador to Rome, and in March, 1511, was created a cardinal by the title of St. Praxedæ. He was poisoned at Rome 14 July, 1514, by Rinaldo de Modena, a priest. Silvester de Giglis, bishop of Worcester, then resident as envoy at Rome, was implicated in the murder. Cardinal Baynbrigge was a munificent benefactor to Queen's College, Oxford.

BAYNE. See BAINE.

BAYNE, ALEXANDER, a Scotch legal writer, died in June, 1837.

BAYNES, JOHN, an English lawyer, was born in April, 1758, at Middleham, in Yorkshire. He was educated first at Richmond School, and afterwards at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship. From thence he removed to Gray's Inn, and was called to the bar. He was a zealous whig, and wrote numerous pieces in the newspapers. The archæological epistle to Dean Milles, on the poems of Kebley, has been ascribed to his pen; and several of his verses are to be found in the magazines. He intended to have published a correct edition of Lord Coke's tracts, but was prevented by his death, which took place on 4 Aug., 1789.

BAYNES, PAUL, a divine, was born in London, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. In early life he was very wild, but afterwards became serious, and on entering into orders succeeded the celebrated Perkins as lecturer of St. Andrew's Church. He died at Cambridge in 1617. His works are 'A Commentary on Ephesians, relative to Predestination,' 4to. and folio. 'The Diocesan's Trial, 1621;' 'Help to Happiness,' 12mo.; 'Letters of Consolation, &c.,' 12mo.

BAYNES, RALPH, an English prelate, a native of Knechtshorp, Yorkshire, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. He graduated B.A., 1517-18; M.A., 1521; D.D., 1555. Having taken orders, he was appointed a university preacher. He opposed Latimer at Cambridge, and in 1550 disputed at Westminster on the Catholic side. Afterwards he went to Paris and was professor of Hebrew in that university. He continued abroad till the accession of Mary, when he returned to England, and on 18 Nov., 1554, was made bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. On the accession of Elizabeth he was deprived of his bishopric and cast into prison. He died at Mington 18 Nov., 1559. Bishop Baynes was one of the chief restorers of Hebrew learning in this country. His works are 'Prima Rudimenta in Ebraicam Hebraicam,' 4to., Paris, 1550; 'Compendium Michol, hoc est, absolutissimæ grammaticæ Davidis Chimhi,' 4to., Paris, 1554; and 'In Proverbia Salamonis,' folio, Paris, 1555.

BAYNES, ROOSA, an English writer, was born 1546. Being attached to the Catholic faith, he left this country in or about 1579, and retired to Rome, where he became secretary to Cardinal Allen, after whose decease he gave himself up to religious exercises. He died 9 Oct., 1623, and was buried in the English College at Rome. His works are 'The Praise of Solitariness, set down in the forme of a Dialogue, wherein is conteyned a Discourse Philosophical, of the life Actiue and Contemplatiue,' 4to., London, 1577; and 'The Baynes of Aquigrade. The first part and first volume, intituled Variety, Contayning Three

BAYNES, SIR THOMAS, M.D., a physician, was born about 1622, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, under Dr. Henry More. On taking his degrees in arts, he studied physic in conjunction with Mr., afterwards Sir John, Finch, whom he accompanied to Padua, where both were admitted to the degree of doctor in that faculty. At the Restoration they returned, when Dr. Baynes was chosen music professor in Gresham College, and about the same time elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1664 he went with Sir John Finch to Florence, where that gentleman was appointed the English resident. In 1670, these two friends came back to England, but in 1672 Sir John Finch, being appointed ambassador to the Grand Signior, Dr. Baynes, on whom the king conferred the honour of knighthood, again accompanied him. Here he died 6 Sept., 1681, and the year following Sir John departed this life. Their remains were brought to England and interred in the chapel of Christ's College, to which foundation they had jointly bequeathed four thousand pounds for two fellowships and two scholarships.

BAYNTON, THOMAS, a surgeon, of Bristol, who died 31 Aug., 1820, published accounts of new methods, introduced by himself, of treating ulcers of the legs and diseases of the spine.

BAYNTUN, SIR WILLIAM HENRY, a gallant British admiral, was born in or about 1760, and died at Bath 16 Dec., 1840.

BAYRO, PETER DE, an eminent Italian physician and medical writer born at Turin about 1478; died 1 April, 1558.

BAZHENOV, BASIL IVANOVITCH, a celebrated architect, was born at Moscow 1 March, 1737, and died at St. Petersburg 2 Aug., (N. S.) 1799.

BAZIN, GILLE AUGUSTIN, a native of Paris, settled as a physician at Strasburg, and died in March, 1754. His most remarkable works are 'Natural History of Bees,' and an abridgment of Réaumur's History of Insects.

BE, WILLIAM LE, a noted engraver and type-founder of Paris, was born at Troyes, 1525, and died 1598. His sons and grandsons were distinguished printers.

BEACH, JOHN, the last abbat of Colchester, opposed the measures of King Henry VIII. with great courage and resolution, and refusing to subscribe to the king's supremacy, was condemned to die on that account. He suffered at Colchester in Dec., 1539.

BEACH, THOMAS, a wine merchant at Wrexham, in Denbighshire, published in 1737 'Eugenio, or Virtuous and Happy Life,' a poem, inscribed to Pope, and by no means destitute of merit. Mr. Beach committed suicide 17 May, 1737.

BEACON. See BECON.

BEALE, FRANCIS, received his education at St. John's and Magdalen Colleges, Cambridge. He wrote 'The Royal Game of Chess-Playe, Sometimes the Recreation of the late King, with many of the Nobility. Illustrated with almost an hundred gambets. Being the study of Biochino, the famous Italian,' 12mo., London, 1656.

BEALE.

BEALE, Mrs. MARY, a painter, was daughter of Mr. Cradock, minister of Walton-upon-Thames, but was born in Suffolk, 1632. She painted in oil, water colours, and crayons, and was assiduous in copying the works of Sir Peter Lely and Vandyke. She took the portraits of many of the most eminent clergy of that day. Mrs. Beale also had a taste for poetry, and made metrical translations of some of the psalms. Died 28 Dec., 1697. She had two sons who both exercised the art of painting for some little time. One of them afterwards studied physic under Dr. Sydenham, and practised at Coventry, where he and his father died.

BEALE, ROBERT, an English statesman, was born, it is supposed, about 1540, and probably educated at Cambridge. He entered the service of the state in 1564, and held several important offices under Queen Elizabeth, being frequently employed in foreign missions. During the absence of Sir Francis Walsingham from England, he acted as principal secretary of state. Mr. Beale died at Barnes, Surrey, 25 May, 1601. A list of his works which are all in MS. is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.'

BEAMES, THOMAS, an English divine, received his education at Lincoln College, Oxford, and for seventeen years was preacher and assistant at St. James's, Piccadilly. He died at Shepherd's Bush 6 Aug., 1864, aged 49. Mr. Beames was author of 'The Rookeries of London,' 12mo., London, 1850; 'A Plea for Educational Reform,' 1856; and sermons. He was likewise a contributor to 'Meliora.'

BEAN, RICHARD, an English engraver. Born 1702; died 24 June, 1817.

BEARCROFT, EDWARD, a distinguished barrister was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A., 1756). He afterwards became a king's counsel, chief justice of Chester, and M.P. for Saltash. Died 20 Nov., 1796.

BEARCROFT, PHILIP, D.D., master of the Charterhouse, was born 1 May, 1697, and educated at the Charterhouse and Magdalen College, Oxford. He afterwards obtained a fellowship at Merton College. He was appointed preacher to the Charterhouse 1724; one of the king's chaplains 1738; secretary to the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts 1739; rector of Stormouth, Kent, 1743; and master of the Charterhouse 18 Dec., 1753. Died 17 Nov., 1761. He published an 'Historical Account of Thomas Sutton, esq., and of his Foundation in the Charterhouse,' 8vo., London, 1737.

BEARD, JOHN, an English actor, was born in 1717. He appeared first on the stage in the character of Sir John Loverule, in the 'Devil to Pay,' 1737, and soon gained considerable applause, both as a performer and singer, but chiefly in the latter capacity. In 1739 he married Lady Henrietta Herbert, daughter of the earl of Waldegrave, and widow of Lord Edward Herbert, in consequence of which he quitted the stage for a few years, but afterwards returned to it till 1758, when he became manager of Covent Garden, having taken for his second wife a daughter of Mr. Rich. of that house. In 1768 he retired wholly from the theatre, after having been long a public favourite. He died 1791.

BEARD, THOMAS, D.D., a puritan divine, of considerable eminence, received his education at Cambridge, and on 21 Jan., 1597, was collated to the rectory of Hengrave, Suffolk, but only held that benefice for a very short time. Afterwards he became a famous schoolmaster at Huntingdon, and in 1620 was appointed a justice of the peace for Huntingdonshire, being esteemed a person of great celebrity. He was schoolmaster to Oliver Cromwell, who, being a youth of aspiring and obstinate temper, often received his sharp discipline. It is related that when Oliver was a boy at school 'he averred that when lying on his bed he saw a gigantic figure which came and opened the curtains of his bed and told him that he should hereafter be the greatest person in the kingdom, but did not mention the word king; and though he was told of the folly as well as the wickedness of such an assertion, he still persisted in it; for which, at the request of his father, he was flogged by Dr. Beard.' Cromwell, it is added, often mentioned this circumstance when he had arrived at the height of his glory. Dr. Beard wrote the 'Theatre of God's Judgements,' 4to., London, 1597, in conjunction with Dr. Thomas Taylor; and 'Pedantius, Comœdia, olim Cantabrig. acta in Coll. Trin. nunquam antehac typis evulgata,' 12mo., 1631. In the Royal collection (17 D. xvii.) is a MS. entitled 'Tho. Beard's Evangelical Tragœdie; or, A Harmonic of the Passion of Christ, according to the four Evangelists.'

BEATNIFFE, RICHARD, an eminent bookseller of Norwich, author of 'The Norfolk Tour,' a work which went through six editions in his life-time, died in 1818, ætâ 82.

BEATON, DAVID, a Scotch cardinal, was nephew of James Beaton, the archbishop of St. Andrews. He was born in 1494, and received his education in the university of St. Andrews, and afterwards at Paris, where he studied divinity. In 1519 he was appointed resident at the court of France; about which time his uncle gave him the rectory of Campsav, to which was added, in 1523, the abbacy of Arbroath. After filling the office of lord privy seal, and being employed in several public concerns, he was made a cardinal in 1538, and on the death of his uncle succeeded him in the archbishopric of St. Andrews. Being zealously devoted to the papal authority, he laboured with great earnestness to root out heresy; and many persons of consequence were prosecuted with the greatest rigour. On the death of the king, the archbishop made considerable exertion to be acknowledged one of the regency; instead of which he was thrown into Blackness Castle. After a short confinement he obtained his release by the earl of Arran, then the sole regent, who conferred upon him the post of chancellor, and obtained him the appointment of legate à latere from the pope. His power being thus restored and increased, he made use of it with redoubled ardour in suppressing the new religion; and among others who were condemned to the flames by him, was the celebrated George Wishart, whose execution took place under the window and before the eyes of the cardinal. A story is told that Wishart, at the stake, denounced the divine judgment against his persecutor; but it rests upon no credible foundation. Soon afterward, however, a conspiracy was entered into by some enemies of the prelate, headed by Norman Lesley, eldest son of the earl of Rothes, and his uncle John, who broke into the castle and murdered the cardinal, on the 29th of May, 1546. He left three natural sons, who were all legitimated in the lifetime of their father.

BEATON.

It is said that the cardinal wrote memoirs of his emesses, but nothing is known of the manuscript.

BEATON, OF BETHUNE JAMES, a Scotch prelate and statesman, was born of a good family, and from infancy was destined for the church. In 1504 he was made abbat of Dunfermline, and the next year, upon the death of his brother Sir David Beaton, was appointed high treasurer of Scotland. In 1508 he was promoted to the bishopric of Galloway, and in less than a year was translated to the archiepiscopal see of Glasgow, on which he resigned the treasurer's staff, in order that he might have more leisure to govern his diocese. He discharged his functions in a highly creditable manner, and repaired and enriched his cathedral. After the battle of Flodden Field he was appointed high chancellor, and in 1523 he became archbishop of St. Andrew's, when he founded the New College, which he did not live to finish. Died 1530.

BEATON, JAMES, nephew of the cardinal, was born about 1517, and educated chiefly at Paris. He was early employed in political affairs, and in 1552 was consecrated archbishop of Glasgow. No sooner had he been advanced to this dignity than he began to be regarded as one of the ablest and most influential persons in the kingdom. When the reformers became powerful enough to make a successful stand against the court, he retired to France, carrying with him the treasures and records of his see, and carefully deposited them in the Scotch college at Paris. He obtained several ecclesiastical preferments in France, where he also acted as ambassador from Queen Mary and her son James VI. Died 24 April, 1603. This prelate was universally esteemed for his learning, loyalty, and patriotism. He wrote a commentary on the Book of Kings; 'A Lamentation for the kingdom of Scotland;' and other works, none of which have been printed.

BEATSON, ALEXANDER, a military engineer and writer on agriculture, was born at Dundee 24 Oct., 1759, and entered into the service of the East India Company. He was employed in many highly important undertakings in India, being ultimately advanced to the rank of major-general. In 1807 he was appointed governor of St. Helena. On his return to England he took a farm in Sussex, and devoted his attention to agriculture. Died at Henly 15 Oct., 1830. His works are, 'A View of the Origin and Conduct of the War with Tippoo Sultaun, comprising a Narrative of the Operations of the Army under the command of Lieutenant-General George Harris, and of the Siege of Seringapatam,' 4to., London, 1800; 'On the Importance of Introducing Agriculture into the Island of St. Helena,' 8vo., St. Helena, 1812; 'Tracts relative to the Island of St. Helena, written during a Residence of Five Years,' 4to., London, 1810; 'Letter to the Chairman and Directors for the Affairs of the United East India Company, containing Remarks upon a Paper entitled Observations relative to the Island of St. Helena' [by Colonel Paton], 8vo., St. Helena (1812); 'A New System of Cultivation, without Lime or Dung, or Summer Fallows, as practised at Knowle Farm, in Sussex,' 8vo., London, 1820, with a supplement, 1821.

BEATSON, ROBERT, LL.D., a laborious compiler, was born in 1742 at Dysart, in the county of Fife. At the age of fourteen he entered into the army, but rising no higher than to the rank of lieutenant, he turned his attention to literature, as a profession, and in 1786 published a useful work entitled, 'A Political Index to the Histories of Great Britain and Ireland,' of which there have been three editions. In 1790 appeared his 'Naval and Military Memoirs of Great Britain,' in 3 vols. 8vo.; and in 1807 he published 'A Chronological Register of both Houses of Parliament, from the Union.' He obtained the degree of doctor of laws from the university of Edinburgh, and was a member of the Royal Society of Scotland. He died 24 Jan., 1818. Besides the above works, he was the author of an 'Essay on Vertical and Horizontal Windmills.'

BEATTIE, JAMES, LL.D., an eminent philosopher, critic, and poet, was born at Laurencekirk, in the county of Kincardine, 13 Oct., 1735. He lost his father, who was a farmer, at the age of seven years; but his education was not neglected on that account, and after going through the school of his native place with reputation, he went to Marischal College, Aberdeen, in 1749. Here he obtained a bursary or exhibition, and had for a tutor Dr. Thomas Blackwell, who was so pleased with his diligence as to bestow upon him a premium for the best Greek analysis of the fourth book of the Odyssey. In 1753 he took his degree of M.A., and soon after became the schoolmaster to the parish of Fordoun. Here he amused himself with poetical composition, and some of his pieces were published in the 'Scots Magazine.' His views being directed to the ministry he returned to college, and while there was elected one of the masters of the city grammar school. In 1760 he was appointed by royal patent professor of moral philosophy in Marischal College, and in the year following he published a volume of poems, which met with a very favourable reception, though the author afterwards bought up and destroyed every copy that he could procure. In 1765 appeared 'The Judgment of Paris,' and the next year a more correct edition of his poems and translations. But the work destined to establish his fame was the 'Essay on Truth,' which was first printed in 1770, and in four years ran through five editions. It was also translated into several foreign languages, and procured the author high marks of distinction and an extensive acquaintance. The university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of law, as King's College, Aberdeen, had done some time before. He also received a pension from his majesty, who honoured him with a conference at Kensington. Very advantageous offers were made to him to enter into the ministry of the church of England, which he declined, lest the enemies of religion, who were irritated by his 'Essay on Truth,' might allege that he wrote the book from interested motives. A few months after the appearance of that work he published the first book of the 'Minstrel;' in 1774 the second book, and in 1777 the whole together, with a collection of his poems. To a new and splendid edition of his Essay, printed about this time by subscription, he added some miscellaneous ones on poetry and music; 'Laughter and Ludicrous Composition;' and on the 'Utility of Classical Learning.' In 1783 he printed 'Dissertations, Moral and Critical, on Memory and Imagination; on Dreaming; the Theory of Language; on Truth and Romance; on the Attachments of Kindred; and Illustrations on Sublimity.'

4to. In 1786 appeared his 'Evidences of the Christian Religion,' 2 vols. 12mo.; and in 1790 the first volume of 'Elements of Moral Science,' as the second did in 1793. In this last appeared a dissertation against the slave trade; and in the second volume of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh he inserted 'Remarks on some Passages of the 6th Book of the Æneid.' The last publication of his was one of a most affecting description, being 'An Account of the Life and Character of his eldest Son, James Hay Beattie, with some of his Essays and Fragments.' This excellent young man, after having been appointed assistant professor to his father, and given the promise of proving a successor worthy of the name, died at the age of 23 in 1790. His death was followed, in 1796, by that of the youngest son, Montagu Beattie, in his eighteenth year; which losses, added to a separation from the mother, who was in a lunatic asylum, completely destroyed the constitution of the father, and after two paralytic strokes he died at Aberdeen 18 Aug., 1803. The philosophical style of Dr. Beattie in some degree partakes of the poetical, and this, perhaps, has contributed in no small degree to the celebrity of his essays and dissertations. Among his friends were the first persons of the age, as Dr. Johnson, Bishops Porteus and Hurd, Mr. Gray, Mr. Burke, and Mrs. Montagu.

BEATTY, SIR WILLIAM, M.D., physician to the fleet and to Greenwich Hospital, was surgeon in the 'Victory' at the battle of Trafalgar, and published an 'Authentic Narrative of the Death of Lord Nelson; with the circumstances preceding, attending, and subsequent to that event; the professional report of his lordship's wound; and several interesting anecdotes,' 8vo., London, 1807. He was knighted 1831, and died in London 25 March, 1842.

BEAU, CHARLES LE, first professor of rhetoric in the college of the Grassins, and afterwards professor in the college royal, secretary to the duke of Orleans, perpetual secretary and pensionary to the Academy of Inscriptions, was born at Paris 19 Oct., 1701, and died there 13 March, 1778. His 'History of the Lower Empire,' in 22 vols. 12mo., forming a continuation of Crevier's 'History of the Emperors,' is much esteemed.

BEAU, JEAN BAPTISTE LE, a French antiquary, was born in 1602, in the comté Venaisin, and entered among the Jesuits in 1619. He taught rhetoric at Toulouse, and afterwards became rector of the college of Rhodéz, but died in that of Montpellier 26 July, 1670. His works are 'Diatribæ duæ, prima de partibus templi Auguralis; altera de mensæ et die Victoriæ Pharsalicæ,' 8vo. Another edition of this appeared at Wurtemberg, in 8vo., 1705. 'Breviculum Expeditionis Hispaniæ Ludov. XIII.,' 4to. 'Otia Regia Ludov. XIV., sive Polyænus Gallicis de veterum et recentium Gallorum stratagematibus,' 8vo. 'La Vie de M. François d'Estaing, Evêque de Rhodéz,' 4to. 'Historia de vita Bartholomæi de Martyribus,' 4to. 'Speculum veri Anstistitis in vita Alphonso Torribii Archiepiscopi Liminsis,' 4to.

BEAU, JEAN LOUIS LE, younger brother of the above, professor of rhetoric in the college of the Grassins, and member of the Academy of Inscriptions, was born at Paris 8 March, 1721, and died 12 March, 1766. He published editions of Homer, and of Cicero's 'Orations,' and composed a discourse, in which, after having shown the pernicious effects of poverty to men of letters, and what dangers they have to dread from riches, he concludes that the state of a happy mediocrity is the best for them.

BEUCAIRE DE PEGUILON, FRANÇOIS, a French prelate, born 15 April, 1514. He became preceptor to the cardinal de Lorraine, who in 1555 procured for him the bishopric of Metz. He accompanied the cardinal to the council of Trent, where Beaucaire pronounced an oration which was much applauded. In 1568 he resigned his bishopric, and retired to his castle of La Chreite, in Bourbonnois. Died 14 Feb., 1591. He was author of a history entitled 'Rerum Gallicarum Commentaria, ab A. 1462 usque ad A. 1566,' fol., Lyons, 1625, and some other works.

BEAUCHAMP, earls of Warwick. See WARWICK.

BEAUCHAMP, JOSEPH, a French astronomer, born at Vesoul, 29 June, 1752. In 1767 he entered the Bernardine order, and having been appointed vicar-general to his uncle Miroudat, bishop of Babylon, he left France, 1781, to exercise his new functions in the Levant, and at the same time to make astronomical observations. On the eve of the revolution he returned to France, after having contributed very essentially to the promotion of astronomical and geographical science. In 1795 he was appointed consul at Mascate, in Arabia, and afterwards he visited Constantinople, and sailed along the Black Sea, making very important observations. When Bonaparte was appointed commander of the expedition to Egypt he added Beauchamp to the number of scientific men attached to the army, and in 1799 sent him on a secret mission to Constantinople, but on his way thither Beauchamp was captured by the English, and delivered up to the Grand Turk as a spy. He was imprisoned till 1801, when he obtained his release; but he died at Nice on the 19th of November in the same year.

BEAUCHAMP, RICHARD, an English prelate, was promoted from the archdeaconry of Suffolk to the bishopric of Salisbury 1448, whence in 1450 he was translated to Salisbury, which see he filled till his death on 16 Oct., 1481. He was much employed in state affairs. This bishop built the great hall of his palace at Salisbury, and erected a handsome chantry in the cathedral.

BEAUCHAMPS, PIERRE FRANÇOIS GODARD DE, a miscellaneous writer, born 1689 at Paris, where he died 12 March, 1761. Among his works are 'The Loves of Ismène and Ismînias,' a free translation of a Greek romance by Eustathius, or, rather, Eumathius; 'The Loves of Rhodantes and Docicles,' a romance translated from the Greek of Theodorus Prodromus; and 'Recherches sur les Théâtres de France,' 4to., and 3 vols. 8vo., 1735.

BEAUCHATEAU, FRANÇOIS MARIE CHASTELET DE, a child of precocious talents, born at Paris 8 May, 1645. At the age of seven he could speak several languages, and compose verses with ease. When he was 12 years old he published 'Lyre du jeune Apollon' with, on the Muse Naissante du Petit de Beauchateau.' He received a pension from cardinal Mazarin and the chancellor Séguier. In 1669 he went to England, and in 1661 was in Persia. Of his subsequent career no particulars are recorded.

BEAUCHATEAU, HIPPOLYTE CHASTELET DE, brother of the preceding, entered the congregation of the Fathers of the Christian Doctrine, which, however, his restlessness and vanity induced him to quit in 1671. He then came to England, where in 1675 he renounced the Catholic religion. The degree of M.A. was conferred upon him by the university of Oxford. To him is attributed an abridgement of the 'Life of Marshal Schomberg,' published at Amsterdam, 1690, under the name of Laucery.

BEAUCLERK, TOPHAM, a celebrated wit, and friend of Dr. Johnson, was only son of lord Sidney Beaucherk, third son of Charles, the first duke of St. Albans. He was born in Dec., 1739, and in 1757 was entered at Trinity College, Oxford. On his first entrance into society the elegance and fascination of his manners, his inexhaustible fund of agreeable information, his delightful conversational powers, his love of literature, and his constant flow of animal spirits, rendered him a universal favourite. Even the great moralist Dr. Johnson half forgave the principles of the young man of pleasure, so fascinated was he by the charm of his manner and the brilliancy of his wit. 'Everything,' remarked Johnson, 'comes from Beauclerk so easily that it appears to me that I labour when I say a good thing.' Mr. Beauclerk died in London 11 March, 1780.

BEAUFILS, GUILLAUME, a French Jesuit and a distinguished preacher, born at St. Flour 3 Feb., 1674; died at Toulouse 30 Dec., 1757. He published lives of Madame de Lestonac and of Madame de Chantal; 'Letters on the Government of Religious Houses'; and several funeral orations.

BEAUFORT, earl and duke of Somerset. See SOMERSET.

BEAUFORT, SIR FRANCIS, K.C.B., F.R.S., an English admiral, was sometime hydrographer to the Admiralty, and died at Hove, near Brighton, 26 Dec., 1857, aged 84. He wrote 'Karamania; or, a brief description of the South Coast of Asia Minor, and of the Remains of Antiquity.'

BEAUFORT, HENRY, bishop of Winchester, and cardinal priest of the church of Rome, was the son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, by his third wife, Catherine Swinford. He studied at Cambridge and Oxford, to which last university he was a considerable benefactor. In 1397 he was made bishop of Lincoln, and in 1399 chancellor of Oxford and dean of Wells. In 1404 he became lord chancellor, and the year following bishop of Winchester. His nephew Henry V. sent him ambassador to France, and in 1417 he went into the Holy Land. He was one of the godfathers and guardians to Henry VI., in whose reign he again discharged the office of chancellor, but was deprived of the seal, owing to the fierce contentions between him and Humphrey, duke of Gloucester. In 1426 he received a cardinal's hat, with the dignity of papal legate, which latter office, however, he was prohibited from exercising by royal mandate. The new cardinal raised men for a crusade against the Hussites of Bohemia, from whence he was recalled by the pope; and in 1430 he was crowned Henry VI. at Paris. After a very active life he died at Winchester 14 June, 1447, and his remains were interred in that cathedral. The character drawn of him by Shakspeare is unjust to his memory; for though ambitious and turbulent, he was generous; and the hospital of St. Cross, with other charities, show that he had a very magnificent disposition.

BEAUFORT, HENRY SOMERSET, duke of, K.G., son of Edward marquis of Worcester, was, in his father's lifetime, created earl of Glamorgan by

BEAUHARNAIS.

Charles I. In 1673 Charles II. constituted him lord president of the council of the principality of Wales. The same year he was sworn of the privy council, and installed a knight of the garter. Having been eminently servicable to the king since his restoration, he was by patent dated 3 Dec., 1682, advanced to the title of duke of Beaufort. In 1685 he was made colonel of the 11th regiment of Foot, then first raised, the command of which he resigned the same year to his eldest surviving son, Charles marquis of Worcester. He exerted himself against the duke of Monmouth; and in 1688 endeavoured to secure Bristol against the adherents of the prince of Orange, upon whose elevation to the throne, the duke, being unable to take the oaths, lived in retirement till his death on 21 Jan., 1698-9, æt. 70. He was buried in Beaufort chapel, at Windsor.

BEAUFORT, LOUIS DE, a French writer, died at Maestricht 1795. He was a fellow of the Royal Society of London. His works are 'Dissertation sur l'Incertitude des cinq premiers Siècles de l'Histoire Romaine'; 'Histoire de Germanicus'; and 'Histoire de la République Romaine; ou, Plan générale de l'ancien Gouvernement de Rome,' 3 vols. 4to.

BEAUFORT, MARGARET, countess of Richmond and Derby, was the only daughter and heiress of John Beaufort, duke of Somerset. She was born at Bletchoe, in Bedfordshire, in 1441. At the age of sixteen she married Edmund, earl of Richmond, by whom she had only one child, who became Henry VII. On the death of her first husband she married Sir Henry Stafford, son of the duke of Buckingham, by whom she had no issue. Becoming a widow again she married Thomas, Lord Stanley, who was created earl of Derby in 1485, and who also died before her in 1504. Lady Margaret was an accomplished woman, and published 'The Mirroure of Golde for the sinfull Soule;' she also translated from the French the fourth book of Gerson's or Kempis's 'Imitation of Christ,' and a letter to her son is printed in Howard's Correspondence. She also made the orders for great estates of ladies and noble women; but she has perpetuated her name principally by her foundations of Christ's and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge, with a divinity professorship, richly endowed. Her other charities were equally liberal. She died 29 June, 1509, and was buried in the chapel of Henry VII. at Westminster. An elaborate memoir, which still remains in MS., of this distinguished lady was written by the late Charles Henry Cooper, F.S.A.

BEAUFORT, STEPHEN, an English periodical writer, who contributed many articles to the 'Town and Country Magazine,' died 10 May, 1786.

BEAUHARNAIS, EUGENE DE, was born at Paris 3 Sept., 1781, being son of Alexandre Viscount Beauharnais and Josephine Tascher de la Pagerie. In 1796 his mother became the wife of Napoleon Bonaparte, who treated her children, Eugene and Hortense, as if they had been his own. Eugene was appointed aide-de-camp to his father-in-law, whom he accompanied to Egypt and in all his subsequent expeditions. When Napoleon became emperor he made Eugene a general of brigade, prince of the empire, grand admiral, grand officer of the legion of honour, and finally in 1805 viceroxy of Italy. After the battle of Austerlitz he received the general command of the army of Italy and the government of the Venetian States. He was very zealous in improving the internal organization of Italy. In Jan., 1806, he married Augusta Amelie, daughter of the king of Bavaria, and immediately afterwards was adopted by the emperor, under the name of Eugene-Napoleon, as hereditary prince of France. In the Russian campaign he distinguished himself at Smolensk and Borodino. In the disastrous retreat of the French army he displayed much coolness, activity, and courage. After Napoleon and Murat had left the army he took the command of it, and with great difficulty effected a junction with the new army which Napoleon had got together. He afterwards returned to Italy, and during the month of Jan., 1814, maintained his position on the Adige, but Murat's breach with Napoleon, the occupation of Rome and the blockade of Ancona, compelled him to retire to the Mincio, where he beat the enemy in several engagements. At this period the news arrived of the entry of the allies into Paris and the abdication of Napoleon; and on 16 April an armistice was concluded until the Powers should have decided on the fate of Italy. Shortly afterwards Eugene fled out of the country, and spent the remainder of his life at Munich, at the court of his father-in-law, who conferred upon him the title of prince of Leuchtenberg. Died 26 Feb., 1824.

BEAUHARNAIS, HORTENSE. See HORTENSE.

BEAULIEU, SEBASTIEN DE PONTAULT, SICUR DE, a celebrated engineer and maréchal de camp in the French army, died 17 Aug., 1674. He may be regarded as the father of military topography, and his 'Collection of plans and views of the sieges and battles of Louis the Great' is deservedly held in high esteem.

BEAULIOT, JACQUES. See BAULOT.

BEAUMANOIR, JEAN DE, a celebrated marshal of France, better known as marshal de Lavardin, died at Paris 1614. In 1612 he was sent to England as ambassador extraordinary. He had been educated in the Protestant religion, but turned Catholic after the death of his father, who was one of the most zealous partizans of Calvinism.

BEAUMANOIR, PHILIPPE, a French writer, who died 1296, was author of 'Les Costumes des Beauvoisis,' of which Thaumassiere published a good edition, folio, Bourges, 1690.

BEAUMARCHAIS, PIERRE AUGUSTIN CARON DE, was the son of a clockmaker at Paris, where he was born 24 Jan., 1732. He applied with diligence to his father's business, and invented a new escapement, the honour of which was contested by another person, but determined in favour of Beaumarchais by the Academy of Sciences. He also distinguished himself by his musical skill, particularly by his taste in playing on the harp. This recommended him to the daughters of Louis XV., who admitted him to their concerts. He was likewise engaged on three public causes in which he exercised his literary skill to such advantage as to obtain a considerable appointment under government. Died 19 May, 1799. His works are, 'Mémoires contre les Sieurs de Goetzman,' &c.; 'Mémoire en réponse à celui de G. Kornmann,' 'Eugénie,' a drama; 'Mes deux Amis,' 'Le Barbier de Seville,' 'Le mariage de Figaro,' 'Tarare,' an opera; 'La Mère coupable,' 'Mémoire en réponse au Manifeste du roi d'Angleterre,' 'Mémoires à Lécointre de Versailles.'

BEAUMÉ, ANTOINE, an apothecary of Paris, author of several chemical works, was born 1726 and died 1805.

BEAUMELLE, LAURENT ANGLIEVIL DE LA, a French writer, was born at Vallerangue, in Languedoc, 28 Jan., 1727, and died at Paris 27 Nov., 1773. He was for some time professor of belles lettres in Denmark. He was twice imprisoned in the Bastille for some libels and satires, but in 1772 was appointed librarian to the king. He wrote a 'Defence of the Spirit of Laws,' 'Letters to Voltaire,' 'Thoughts of Seneca,' 'A Commentary upon the Henriad,' 'A life of Madame de Maintenon,' &c.

BEAUMONT, ELIE DE. See ELIE.

BEAUMONT, FRANCIS, eldest son of John Beaumont, sometime Master of the Rolls, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and subsequently studied law in the Inner Temple. He was called to the degree of serjeant-at-law 1589, and on 25 Jan., 1592-3, was constituted one of the justices of the Common Pleas. He died at his residence, Gracedieu, Leicestershire, 22 April, 1598. He was father of Francis Beaumont, the dramatist. The statement, often repeated, that he was a knight, is incorrect.

BEAUMONT, FRANCIS, a distinguished dramatist, third son of Francis Beaumont, the judge, was born at Gracedieu, Leicestershire, in or about 1586; and educated with his two brothers Henry and John, at Broadgate Hall, now Pembroke College, Oxford. It is observable that there were four Francis Beaumonts of this family, all living in 1615, of whom three were poets, the master of the Charter House, the dramatic writer, and a Jesuit. The subject of this article became a student in the Inner Temple, and his 'Mask of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn,' was acted and published in 1612. At what time his intimacy with Fletcher began is uncertain, but the date of their first play is 1607. Aubrey says, 'There was a wonderful consimilitude of fancy between Mr. Francis Beaumont and Mr. John Fletcher, which caused that dearness of friendship between them. They lived together on the Bank-side, not far from the playhouse, both bachelors, had one wench in the house between them, which they did so admire; and the same clothes, &c.' Mr. Beaumont married Ursula, daughter and co-heir of Henry Isley, of Sundridge, in Kent, by whom he had two daughters. He died 6 March, 1615-16, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. His dramatic works are so interwoven with those of Fletcher, as not to be distinguished. The best edition of the works of Beaumont and Fletcher is that by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, 11 vols. 8vo. London, 1843-46.

BEAUMONT, SIR GEORGE HOWLAND, a landscape painter and amateur of the fine arts, was son of Sir George Beaumont, baronet, and was born at Dunmow, Essex, 6 Nov., 1753. In 1762 he succeeded to the title. Having received a preliminary education at Eton, he was entered of New College, Oxford, 1772. In 1782 he visited France, Switzerland, and Italy, and in 1790 was returned to Parliament for Bicester, but he sat in the House of Commons only during one Parliament, to the dissolution of 1796. It was not in the arena of politics that Sir George distinguished himself; but as a patron of art and amateur practitioner of painting he attained considerable celebrity, and many specimens of his skill were exhibited at the Royal Academy: A congenial taste introduced him to the friendship of Sir Joshua Reynolds, who bequeathed him his 'Return of the Ark,' by Sebastian Bourbon. This is one of the sixteen pictures which Sir George presented to the National Gallery a year or two before his death, which took place at his seat, Coleorton, Leicestershire, 7 Feb., 1827. His landscapes are finely imagined, but he was deficient in practical skill.

BEAUMONT, JEAN LOUIS MOREAU DE, a French politician, wrote 'Mémoires concernant les Impôts en Europe.' Born 1715; died 23 May, 1785.

BEAUMONT, Sir JOHN, son of Francis Beaumont, the judge, was born at Gracedieu, in Leicestershire, in 1582, and educated at Oxford, from whence he removed to one of the inns of court. In 1626 he was created a baronet by King Charles I., and died in 1628. He wrote 'The Crown of Thorns,' a poem; 'Bosworth Field,' a poem, and other pieces, which were collected and published after his death by his son.

BEAUMONT, JOHN, younger son of Sapcote, Viscount Beaumont, entered the army and rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1685 he was returned to Parliament by the borough of Nottingham. When King James II. wished to augment the army with Catholics, and great numbers of soldiers were accordingly brought over from Ireland, this gave rise to great dissatisfaction, and Lieutenant-colonel Beaumont, Captain Paston, and four other captains of the duke of Berwick's regiment refused to admit Irishmen into their companies. For this they were cashiered by a council of war held at Windsor, 10 Sept., 1688. They retired soon afterwards to Portsmouth, where they unanimously declared for the prince of Orange. All their portraits were engraved by R. White, on one large half sheet in six ovals, joined by as many hands, expressive of their union. This print is called 'The Portsmouth Captains,' and is extremely scarce. In 1690 Colonel Beaumont was elected M.P. for Hastings. Afterwards he was appointed governor of Dover Castle, and served the king abroad many years, dying 3 July, 1701.

BEAUMONT, JOHN THOMAS BARBER, an English author, was born in London 21 Dec., 1774. His name was originally Barber. He became managing director of the County Fire Office and Provident Life Office, and a magistrate for Middlesex. Died in London 15 May, 1841. He was author of 'A Tour throughout South Wales and Monmouthshire,' 8vo., London, 1803, published under the name of Barber; 'Essay on provident, or parish banks,' 1816, in the 'Pamphleteer,' vii. 475; 'Letters on Public-house licensing, showing the errors of the present system; together with a proposal for their cure,' in the 'Pamphleteer,' vii. 107, ix. 143; 'An essay on criminal jurisprudence, with the draft of a new penal code,' in the same publication, xviii. 67, 402, 433; and 'Substance of a speech on the best means of counteracting the existing monopoly in the supplying of beer,' 8vo., London, 1818.

BEAUMONT, JOSEPH, D.D., an English divine, born at Hadleigh, Suffolk, 1615. At the age of sixteen he went to Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took his degrees, and obtained a fellowship, of which he was deprived for his loyalty in the civil war. He then retired to his native place, and afterwards to Tattingstone, with his wife, who was step-daughter of his patron, Dr. Wren, bishop of Ely. At the Restoration he recovered his preferments, was made chaplain in ordinary to the king, and obtained the degree of D.D. by mandamus. In 1662 he succeeded Dr. Pearson in the mastership of Jesus College, and within two years afterwards was appointed master of Peterhouse. He was likewise regius professor of divinity. Died 23 Nov., 1699. Dr. Beaumont was author of 'Psyche, or Love's Mystery,' in twenty-four Cantos, displaying the intercourse between Christ and the Soul,' a poem which was formerly much admired; and 'Observations upon the Apology of Dr. Henry More,' 4to., Cambridge, 1685. A considerable number of his poems, &c. were published in 4to., 1749, with the life of the author prefixed. In his epitaph in the antechapel at Peterhouse, he is styled 'Poeta, Orator, Theologus præstantissimus; quovis nomine Hæreticorum Malleus, et Veritatis Vindex.'

BEAUMONT, ROBERT D.D., of a good Leicestershire family, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A. 1543-4; M.A. 1550; B.D. 1560; D.D. 1564). He tells us that he lived for three or four years in Cambridge, and never spent above fourpence a week. During the reign of Queen Mary he resided abroad, but returned to England on the accession of Elizabeth, and in 1559 was appointed Lady Margaret professor of divinity. On 25 Aug., 1561, he was admitted to the mastership of Trinity College, which important office he held till his death, 6 June, 1567. Dr. Beaumont was twice elected vice-chancellor, and took an active part in the affairs of the university.

BEAUMONT, ROBERT, an English writer, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, proceeding B.A. 1634-5. He was author of 'Love-Letters and Essays upon Several Subjects,' 8vo., London, 1630; reprinted 1660 and 1669, under the title of 'Love's Missives to Virtue, with other Essays.'

BEAUMONT, THOMAS WENTWORTH, eldest son of Thomas Richard Beaumont, esq., by his wife Diana, daughter of Sir Thomas Wentworth Blackett, bart., was born 5 Nov., 1792. From Eton he proceeded to Cambridge, where he was admitted as a fellow-commoner of St. John's College 10 June, 1809, and graduated B.A. 1813. He was elected M.P. for Northumberland 1818, and was rechosen in 1820, but was defeated at the general election of 1826. During the latter election he fought a duel with Mr. Lambton, afterwards earl of Durham. In 1827 he was returned for Stafford, but in 1830 he again became member for Northumberland, which county he continued to represent till his retirement from public life in 1837. He died at Bournemouth, Hampshire, 20 Dec., 1848, aged 56. In early life Mr. Beaumont was a Tory and a member of the Pitt Club; but from the year 1820 he was generally considered an advanced Liberal. He was one of the chief originators of the 'Westminster Review,' to which, it was understood, he contributed some articles. There are some Latin verses by him in the 'Musæ Etonenses,' edit. Okes.

BEAUMONT DE PEREFIXE. See PEREFIXE.

BEAUNE, FLORENTIN DE, a French mathematician, who discovered the method of determining the nature of curves by the properties of their triangles. Born at Blois 1601; died 1652.

BEAUNE.

BEAUNE, RENAUD DE, a French prelate, was born at Tours 1527; appointed archbishop of Bourges 1581; translated to Sens 1596; and died 1606. He contributed greatly to the conversion of Henry IV., and gave him absolution in the church of St. Denis. This prelate translated the Psalter into French, and composed a number of funeral discourses.

BEAURAIN, JEAN DE, a French geographer, born 17 Jan., 1696; died 12 Feb., 1771. His best-known works are a 'Perpetual Calendar;' and 'Military History of the Marshal de Luxembourg's campaign in Flanders.' His son was also a celebrated military draughtsman, and published 'Cartes' of Condé's campaign in Flanders, Paris, 1774, and of the last four campaigns of Turcotte, Paris, 1782.

BEAURIU, GASPARD GUILLARD DE, a French writer, born at St. Pol, in Artois, 9 July, 1728; died in a hospital at Paris 5 Oct., 1795. He was extremely fond of children, and was constantly employed in their education. Among his works are, 'L'Heureux Citoyen;' 'Cours d'Histoire Sacrée et Profane;' and 'L'Elève de la Nature.' The last work was originally published under the name of Jean Jacques Rousseau.

BEAUSOBRE, ISAAC DE, a French Protestant divine, was born at Niort 8 March, 1659. On leaving his own country he went to Holland, and from thence to Berlin, where he was made chaplain to the king of Prussia. Died 5 June, 1738. His works are, 'Défense de la Doctrine des Reformés;' a translation of the New Testament, with notes, in conjunction with L'Enfant; 'Dissertation sur les Adamites de Bohême;' and 'Histoire critique de Manichéisme et du Manichéisme,' 2 vols., which has been praised by Gibbon.

BEAUSOBRE, LOUIS DE, son of Isaac, mentioned above, was born at Berlin 1730, and was adopted by the prince royal, afterwards Frederick the Great, who defrayed the cost of his education at Frankfurt and Paris. On his return to Berlin he was appointed a privy councillor to the king of Prussia, and elected a member of the Academy. Died 3 Dec., 1783. He wrote 'Philosophical Dissertations on the nature of Fire;' 'The Dreams of Epicurus;' 'General introduction to the study of politics, finance, and commerce;' and other works on philosophical, statistical, and literary subjects.

BEAUVAIS, GUILLAUME, a French antiquary, born at Dunkirk 1698; died at Orleans 29 Sept., 1773. He wrote an 'Abridged History of the Roman and Greek Emperors by medals,' 3 vols. 12mo., Paris, 1767.

BEAUVAIS, JEAN BAPTISTE CHARLES MARIE DE, was born at Chêrbourg 17 Oct., 1731, and at an early age devoted himself to the service of the church. His ability as a preacher gained for him so great a reputation that he was summoned to court and was afterwards consecrated bishop of Senecy, which see he vacated 1783. Died 4 April, 1790. A collection of his sermons and funeral discourses was published by the Abbé Gaillard, 4 vols. 12mo., Paris, 1807.

BEAUVAIS, NICOLAS DAUPHIN, an engraver, born at Paris 1687; died 1763.

BEAUVAIS, PHILIPPE, son of Nicolas Dauphin Beauvais, acquired great celebrity as a sculptor. Born 1739; died 1781.

BEAUVILLIERS, duke of St. Aignan. See ST. AIGNAN.

BEAVER, JOHN. See CASTORIUS.

BEAUXALMIS, THOMAS, a learned Carmelite, 172 and doctor of the Sorbonne, was born at Melun 1524, and died at Paris 1 May, 1589. He wrote 'Commentaires sur l'Harmonie Evangelique,' 3 vols. folio, and other works.

BEAUZEE, NICOLAS, a learned and industrious member of the French Academy, born at Verdun 9 May, 1717; died at Paris 25 Jan., 1789. At first he devoted himself to the exact sciences; but after a short time he gave up that line of study, and applied himself to the acquisition of the ancient and modern languages. After the death of Dumarsais he prepared the grammatical articles in the 'Encyclopédie.' He published besides, 'Grammaire générale; ou, Exposition raisonnée des Elements nécessaires du langage,' 2 vols.; new and augmented editions of the 'Synonymes de l'Abbé Gerad,' and of Father Livoy's 'Dictionnaire des Synonymes;' 'Exposition abrégée des preuves historique de la religion;' and translations of Salust, Quintus Curtius, and the Imitation of Christ.

BEAVER, PHILIP, a distinguished captain in the British navy, was born 1766, and died at the Cape while in command of the 'Nisus,' 5 April, 1813. His attempt to colonize the island of Bulama, near Sierra Leone, is narrated in his interesting 'African Memoranda;' and a detailed account of the important services rendered by him to his country will be found in Captain W. H. Smyth's 'Life and Services of Captain Philip Beaver, late of H.M.S. 'Nisus.'

BEAZLEY, SAMUEL, an architect and dramatist, was born at Westminster 1786. In early life he served as a volunteer in the Peninsula, where his adventures were of a very singular character. As an architect he obtained considerable practice in connection with the stage. Among the theatres built by him are the St. James's, the Lyceum, the City of London, the Birmingham, and two in Dublin. The interior of Drury Lane Theatre, the external colonnade there, and the Strand front of the Adelphi Theatre are also by him. He likewise wrote or arranged more than a hundred dramatic pieces, two novels—'The Oxonians' and 'The Roué,'—and a large number of detached articles. Died at Tonbridge Castle, Kent, 24 Oct., 1851.

BEBELE, BALTHAZAR, a Lutheran divine, born 1632, at Strasburg, where he became professor of divinity and ecclesiastical history. Afterwards he was appointed professor of divinity, pastor, and superintendent-general at Wittenberg, where he died 2 Oct., 1686. His works, which are all theological, include, 'Dissertatio de aris et mensis Eucharisticis veterum;' 'Antiquitates Ecclesiæ,' 3 vols.; and 'Memorabilia Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ recentioris,' 1731.

BEBELE, or BEBELIUS, HENRY, a native of Justingen, in Swabia, was appointed professor of belles-lettres at Tübingen 1497, and in 1501 received the poetical crown from the Emperor Maximilian. Died 1514. He was one of the first who introduced into the schools of Germany a taste for good literature and pure Latinity. He wrote 'Opuscula Bebeliana,' 1512, a collection of historical, philosophical, and literary dissertations, and poems. A posthumous work of his, 'De necessitate linguæ Latinæ,' was published at Augsburg in 1801, with his life in German, by Zapf.

BECAN, MARTIN, a native of Flanders, became an eminent member of the Society of Jesus. He resided for the most part in Germany, especially at Mayence and Vienna, in which latter city he died, 23 April, 1624, aged 63. Among his works are 'De Republica Ecclesiastica, contra M. Ant. de Dominis,' 1618; 'Controversia Anglicana de Potestate Regis et Pontificis, contra Lancelotum Andream,' 1612; 'Refutatio Apologiae et Monitricae Praefationis Jacobi Regis Angliae,' 1610; 'Refutatio Torturae Torti, contra Sacellanum Regis Angliae,' 1610; 'Duellum cum Gulielmo Tookero, de Primatu Regis Angliae,' 1612. His works were reprinted by several eminent English controversialists.

BECCADELLI, ANTONIO, commonly called Panemata, or Anthony of Palermo, from his native place, Palermo, where he was born 1394. He placed himself first in the service of Philip Maria, duke of Milan, whom he taught history, and went afterwards into that of Alphonso of Arragon, king of Naples, who employed him in state affairs. Died 6 Jan., 1471. His works are a history of Alphonso, king of Arragon; and a collection of speeches, epigrams, and satires against Laurentius Valia. But he is known chiefly as the author of a rare book entitled 'Hermaphroditus.'

BECCADELLI, LEWIS, an Italian prelate and biographer, born at Bologna, 1502. He attached himself to Cardinal Pole, whom he followed in the legation to Spain, and was soon appointed himself to those of Venice and Augsburg, after having assisted at the Council of Trent. The archbishopric of Ragusa was the reward of his labours; but he afterwards resigned it, and accepted the provostship of the Cathedral of Prato, where he ended his days, 17 Oct., 1572. He wrote, in Italian, lives of Cardinal Pole and of Petrarch. An English translation, by Benjamin Pye, of his Life of Pole appeared in 1766.

BECCAFUMI, DOMINIC, an Italian painter, called Mecherino, was born near Sienna 1484, and died 15 May, 1549.

BECCARI, AUGUSTINE, an Italian poet, born at Ferrara about 1510; died 2 August, 1590. His poems are wholly pastoral.

BECCARI, JAMES BATHOLOMEW, a physician of Bologna, born 1682; died 30 Jan., 1766. He was professor of chemistry for many years in his native city, and published a 'Dissertation on the Impurity of the Air, and Maladies which raged at Bologna in 1729 and 1730;' a 'Treatise on the Motion of Fluids,' and other works.

BECCARIA, CAESAR BONESANA, marquis of, an Italian writer, born 1735, at Milan, where he died 25 Nov., 1794. His great work is a treatise 'On Crimes and Punishments,' which tended to introduce a humane and wise system of criminal law. He also wrote 'Elements of Political Economy,' and a very clever essay on style in composition.

BECCARIA, JOHN BAPTIST, a monk of the 'Ecoles Pies,' or Pious Schools, was born at Mondovè 1716, and died at Turin 22 May, 1781. He was professor of mathematics and philosophy, first at Palermo, then at Rome, and by his experiments, discoveries, and writings, threw great light on natural science generally, and especially on electricity. Father Beccaria was no less respectable for his virtues than his learning.

BECCUTI, FRANCIS, an Italian poet, surnamed il Copetta, was born at Perugia 1509, and died 1653. He was professor of law, but is best known by his burlesque poetry in the manner of Berni.

BECCERRA, GASPARD, a clever Spanish sculptor, born at Beza about 1520; died at Madrid 1570.

BECHER, JOHN JOACHIM, an eminent chemist, born 1645, at Spire, became professor of medicine at Mayence, and afterwards physician to the electors of Mentz and Bavaria. Died in London 1685. He published some chemical works, and a treatise on a universal language.

BECHER, JOHN THOMAS, was born in or about 1770, and in 1784 was admitted on the foundation of Westminster School, from whence he was elected, in 1788, to a scholarship at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1795). He became vicar of Rampton, Nottinghamshire, 1801; vicar of Midsommer Norton, 1802; prebendary of Southwell, 1818, and vicar-general of that collegiate church; rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire, 1830. He held also the perpetual curacies of Thurgarton and Hoveringham, Nottinghamshire, to which he was presented 1799. For thirty years he was chairman of the quarter sessions of the northern division of Nottinghamshire. Died 3 Jan., 1848. Mr. Becher was author of 'Observations upon the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Laws respecting Friendly Societies; exemplifying and vindicating the Principles of Life Assurance adopted in calculating the Southwell Tables,' &c., 8vo., Newark, 1826.

BECHSTEIN, JOHN MATTHEW, a German naturalist, born at Waltershausen 11 July, 1757; died 1811. He published twenty-five works on natural history, the chase, and forests.

BECK, CAVE, a native of London, son of John Beck, baker, of the parish of St. John, Clerkenwell, was educated in a private school kept in London by Mr. Brathwayte, and on 13 June, 1638, was admitted a pensioner of St. John's College, Cambridge, being then fifteen years of age. He took the degree of B.A. 1641, and subsequently that of M.A., being incorporated in the latter at Oxford, 17 Oct., 1643. In 1662 he was presented by the king to the rectory of St. Helen's, Ipswich. I regret that I have been unable to ascertain the date of the decease of this ingenious scholar, who wrote an extremely curious and interesting work entitled 'The Universal Character by which all Nations in the World may understand one another's Conceptions, Reading out of one Common Writing their own Mother Tongues. An Invention of General Use, the Practise whereof may be Attained in two Hours' space, Observing the Grammatical Directions. Which Character is so contrived, that it may be Spoken as well as Written,' 8vo., London, 1657. The work was also published the same year in the French language. It is dedicated to Nathanael and Francis Bacon, esquires, 'patronis suis colendissimis.'

BECK, or BEEK, DAVID, a Dutch portrait painter, born at Arnheim 1621; died 20 Dec., 1656. He was a disciple of Vandyke, and in favour with Charles I., whose sons, the prince, and the dukes of York and Gloucester, he taught to draw. His rapidity of execution was so great that the king said he could paint riding post. He afterwards passed successively into the service of the kings of France and Denmark, and was at last appointed painter to Christina, queen of Sweden, for whom he painted most of the illustrious persons in Europe.

BECKE, EDMUND, an English writer of the sixteenth century, was tutor to the children of Lord Stafford. He published 'The Byble, that is to say all the Holy Scripture: In which are contained the Olde and New Testaments, truly and purely translated into English, and nowe lately with greate BECKER, CHARLES FERDINAND, a distinguished German grammarian, born 1775; died at Offenbach, 5 Sept., 1849.

BECKER, DANIEL, a physician, born at Dantzig 1594; died 1655, at Königsberg, where he was professor. Among his works is one entitled 'De Cultivovoro Prussiaco,' in which he gives an account of a Prussian shoemaker who swallowed a knife, which afterwards came out at his side. His son Daniel became physician to the elector of Brandenburg, and died 1670.

BECKER, FERDINAND WILLIAM, was born 24 April, 1805, at Hörter on the Weser, and educated at Göttingen. In 1820 he came to Scotland, and was appointed assistant librarian in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. Early in 1825 he returned to Germany, and after visiting several of the universities and the principal medical institutions there, he proceeded to Berlin, where he took his degree of doctor in medicine. In the autumn of the same year he returned to Edinburgh at the invitation of his kind friend, Dr. John Thomson, the distinguished professor of pathology, who wished to avail himself of Becker's assistance in several literary undertakings, and especially in preparing an edition of Cullen's works. Towards the end of 1829 Becker returned to Germany, and established himself as physician at Berlin, and in the following year as private lecturer on medicine in the university of that capital. In 1833 the Prussian ministry for medical affairs intrusted him with the superintendence of the extensive inquiry concerning the efficacy of vaccination, and he was devoting himself with the utmost zeal to this difficult and important duty, when he died, after a short illness, on the 22 June, 1834. His only works published separately are his inaugural dissertation, 'De Glandulis Thoracis atque de Thyro,' Berlin, 1826, 4to.; and an essay, 'De Historiâ Medicinæ Explicatione,' Berlin, 1830, 8vo.; and also a pamphlet on 'Cholera,' published in London.—Penny Cyclopædia.

BECKER, WILLIAM GOTTLIEB, a very eminent German archæologist, was born at Oberkallenberg, in Saxony, 4 Nov., 1753; and died at Dresden July 1813.

BECKET, ISAAC, an English engraver, was bred a calico printer, and learned the art of mezzotinto from Vansomer. He had the honour of instructing the famous John Smith, who, in 1689, engraved a portrait of him.

BECKET, THOMAS À (ST.), who is also called St. Thomas of Canterbury, was born at London 21 Dec., 1117, being the son of Gilbert, a merchant. In his childhood he was placed under the care of the canons of Merton Abbey, in Surrey, and he afterwards continued his studies in the schools of the metropolis, of Oxford, and of Paris. When his father died, he was admitted into the family of Theobald, archbishop of Canterbury; and, with the permission of his patron, left England to improve himself in the knowledge of the civil and canon law. He attended the lectures of Gratian, at Bologna, and of another celebrated professor at Auxerre. As soon as he returned, his acquirements were appreciated, and he obtained rapid preferment in the church. The recommendation of Theobald introduced him to the notice, and his own merit entitled him to the protection, of King Henry II. He was appointed chancellor, the adopted father and preceptor of the young prince, and the depositary of the royal favour. Henry lived with Becket on terms of the most easy familiarity, and seemed to have resigned into his hands the government of his dominions, both in England and on the continent. In 1161 Becket, at that time in France, was appointed archbishop of Canterbury, having been induced, against his own judgment—for he saw dangers approaching—to acquiesce, when the see was offered to him by Henry. He sailed to England, and was consecrated with great ceremony. The ostentatious parade and worldly pursuits of his former life were instantly renounced by the archbishop, who resigned his office of chancellor in order that he might pursue the daily course of secret mortification which he now determined upon. Thenceforward his conduct was marked by the strictest attention to the proprieties of his station. His diet was abstemious; his charities were abundant; his time was divided into certain portions, allotted to prayer and study, and the episcopal functions. For more than twelve months the primate appeared to enjoy his wonted ascendancy in the royal favour, but during his absence the warmth of Henry's affection insensibly evaporated, and at length a controversy respecting the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, brought the king and the prelate into immediate collision. Becket and several other bishops firmly resisted the attempt of Henry to render clergymen amenable to the civil tribunals; and after a protracted struggle between the crown and the church, a council was summoned to meet at Clarendon to arrange the matters in dispute. There, in order to prevent the threatened massacre of all the assembled prelates, he reluctantly consented to the 'Constitutions of Clarendon,' which deprived the church of many of its ancient rights. His tardy assent, however, did not allay the indignation which his opposition had kindled in the mind of the king, who summoned Becket to a council at Nottingham to answer a series of charges which had been brought against him. The primate, however, refused to acknowledge the jurisdiction of the council, and having appealed to the pope, left England for France. His first care was to visit the king of France, who received him with veneration, and a promise of protection; his next to consult Pope Alexander, who then resided at Sens, and who, after hearing the opponents of the archbishop, gave a decision in his favour. Becket then retired to Pontigny, and afterwards to Sens, where he led the solitary and mortified life of a recluse. At length an apparent reconciliation took place between Henry and the primate, who accordingly returned to England in 1170, and was joyfully received at Canterbury by the clergy and people. Three prelates, however, against whom he had brought over letters of excommunication, were so indignant that they endeavoured, as much as possible, to rekindle discord between him and the king. On Christmas-day he preached in his cathedral, and at the conclusion of the sermon, remarked that those who thirsted for his blood would soon be satisfied, but that he would first avenge the wrongs of his church by excommunicating Ranulph and Robert de Broc, who for seven years had not ceased to inflict every injury in their power on him, his clergy, and his monks. On the following Tuesday four knights, Reginald Fitzurse, William Tracy, Hugh de Moreville, and Richard Brito, arrived secretly in the neighbourhood. They had been present in Normandy when the king, irritated by the representations of the three bishops, had exclaimed, 'Of the cowards who eat my bread, is there not one who will free me from this turbulent priest?' and mistaking this passionate expression for the royal license, had bound themselves by oath to carry off or murder the primate. On the evening of the 29th of December, 1170, the four knights, with their twelve companions, attacked him in the cathedral of Canterbury. It was growing dark, and one of them exclaimed, 'Where is the traitor?' No answer was returned, but to the question, 'Where is the archbishop?' Becket replied, 'Here I am, the archbishop, but no traitor. What is your will?' They turned to him, and insisted that he should immediately absolve all whom he had placed under ecclesiastical censures; to which he replied that, until they had promised satisfaction, he could not. 'Then die,' exclaimed a voice. 'I am ready,' returned the prelate, 'to die for the cause of God and his church. But I forbid you, in the name of the Almighty God, to touch any one of my household, clerk or layman.' An attempt was made by some of the murderers to drag him from the cathedral, but he resisted it with success, through the aid of a clergyman named Edward Grim, who threw his arms round the archbishop's waist. Fitzurse aimed a blow at the primate's head. Grim interposed his arm, which was broken and severed in two; still the sword passed through Becket's cap, and wounded him on the crown. As he felt the blood trickling down his cheek, he wiped it away with his sleeve, and, having joined his hands and bent his head in the attitude of prayer, said, 'Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit.' In this posture, with his face to his murderers, and without shaking or speaking, he awaited a second stroke, which threw him on his knees and elbows. The third stroke was given by Richard Brito, with such violence that he cut off the upper part of the archbishop's head, and broke his own sword on the pavement. The murderers were retiring, when one of them turning back, set his foot on the neck of the corpse, and drawing the brain out of the skull with the point of his sword, scattered it around. 'Fear not,' he said, 'the man will never rise again.' Thus at the age of fifty-three, perished this extraordinary man, a martyr to what he deemed to be his duty—the preservation of the immunities of the church. His assassins were punished by all; but being eventually admitted to penance by Pope Alexander III., they went to Jerusalem, where, according to the sovereign pontiff's order, they spent their lives in penitential exercises. Becket was canonized two years after his martyrdom, and the following year Henry went to Canterbury, where he voluntarily did penance as an expiation of his offence. He walked barefoot, in the habit of a pilgrim, till he came to Becket's tomb, when he prostrated himself and prayed for a considerable time, after which he submitted to be scourged by the monks, and passed all that day and night without any refreshment, and kneeling on the bare stone. Becket's Letters

BECKET, WILLIAM, F.R.S., a surgeon, was born at Abingdon, Berkshire, 1684, became surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, Southwark, 25 Nov., 1738. He published 'Practical Surgery,' and a number of other works relating to his profession.

BECKFORD, PETER, an English writer on sporting subjects, died in Feb. 1811, aged 70. His works are 'Thoughts on Hunting, in a series of Letters,' 4to., 1781, 8vo., 1796; and 'Essays on Hunting; containing a Philosophical Inquiry into the Nature and Properties of Scent; on different kinds of Hounds, Hares, &c.; with an Introduction describing the Method of Hare-hunting among the Greeks,' 8vo., London, 1781.

BECKFORD, WILLIAM, a celebrated alderman of London, who was twice elected lord mayor, and represented the city in parliament during the stormy times of Wilkes and Chatham. He is famous for having bearded King George III. on his throne by replying extemporaneously to his Majesty's answer to an address. Shortly after this memorable exploit Mr. Beckford died, on 21 June, 1770, and the city voted a statue to his memory at Guildhall, and ordered that the speech which he had delivered to the king should be engraved on the pedestal.

BECKFORD, WILLIAM, a miscellaneous writer, resided for some years at Jamaica, and afterwards coming to England, settled at Somerley Hall, Suffolk. Died in London 5 Feb., 1729. His works are 'Remarks on the Situation of the Negroes in Jamaica, impartially made, from a local experience of nearly thirteen years in that Island,' 8vo., 1788; 'A Descriptive Account of the Island of Jamaica; with Remarks upon the Cultivation of the Sugar Cane, throughout the different Seasons of the Year, and chiefly considered in a picturesque point of view,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1790; and a 'History of France, from the most early records to the death of Lewis XVI.,' 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1794. The early part of this work was written by Mr. Beckford, and the modern portion by an English gentleman who had been sometime resident in Paris.

BECKFORD, WILLIAM, the author of 'Vathek,' was the son of Alderman Beckford, mentioned above, and was born in 1760. From his father he inherited the estate of Fonthill, Wiltshire, and a large property in the West Indies, the revenues of which are said to have amounted to no less than £100,000 per annum. At the age of eighteen he composed 'Biographical Memoirs of Extraordinary Painters,' a work satirizing some English artists under feigned names. In 1780 he made a tour to the Continent, which formed the subject of a series of letters, picturesque and poetical, published long afterwards under the title of 'Italy, with Sketches of Spain and Portugal.' At the general election of 1784 he was returned to parliament for Wells, and in 1790 for Hindon; but in 1794 he accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. In 1784 first appeared his celebrated romance of 'Vathek, an Arabian Tale;' but it was a translation not made by himself, and surreptitiously obtained. The original was first printed at Lausanne in 1787. It was written in French, and so admirable was it for style and idiom, that it was regarded by many as the work of a Frenchman. The English version was made by Dr. S. Henley, rector of Rendlesham. Byron praised 'Vathek' for its correctness of costume, beauty of description, and power of imagination. 'As an eastern tale,' he said, 'even Rasselas must bow before it: his Happy Valley will not bear a comparison with the Hall of Eblis.' Mr. Beckford afterwards went to Portugal, and purchased an estate at Cintra. He has left a literary memorial of his residence in that country in his 'Recollections of an Excursion to the Monasteries of Alcobaca and Batalha,' published in 1835. After leaving Cintra, he took up his abode on his paternal estate in England, and for many years employed himself in rearing the magnificent but unsubstantial Gothic structure known as Fonthill Abbey, and in embellishing the surrounding grounds. The latter were laid out in the most exquisite style of landscape gardening, aided by the natural inequality and beauty of the ground, and enriched by a lake of fine sylvan scenery. The buildings were commenced 1795. At first it was intended that the structure should have the appearance of a convent in partial ruins, and for many years no idea was entertained of its being converted into a permanent residence. Timber and cement were, therefore, the principal articles in its composition, and every expedient was used to complete the building within a given time. One immediate consequence of this injudicious haste was the destruction of the great tower, 300 feet high, which was levelled to the ground by a gust of wind. The new tower by which it was replaced met with the like fate. It is stated that the total expenditure on the place during sixteen years was £273,000. Having sustained some pecuniary losses in the West Indies, Mr. Beckford was under the necessity of relinquishing the Fonthill estate, which was purchased by Mr. Parquhar for £330,000. He afterwards resided at Bath, where he died 2 May, 1844. It may be questioned whether any individual ever united greater knowledge and taste in all the sister arts than Mr. Beckford. Born with mental powers above the average, those powers were developed by the fostering care of the first professors in the kingdom. Mozart was his music-master; he played the piano and sung with taste. Sir W. Chambers instructed him in architecture, and an eminent painter of the day taught him the rudiments of drawing. His early sketches of nature, from Italian scenery, would not, in point of correctness and delicacy, have been unworthy of a professional artist. He designed almost every building and piece of furniture he possessed. His general taste in all branches of art was correct, and his judgment in pictures was that of a dealer rather than a connoisseur. His own collection, which he was perpetually changing, had embraced specimens of almost every painter of eminence of all ages and nations; but he was not insensible to the genius of many of our modern artists, of whom his treatment was most liberal.

BECKINGHAM, CHARLES, a dramatic writer, born in 1699, was the son of a linen-draper in Fleet Street, London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, under the Rev. Dr. Smith, where he made very great proficiency in all his studies, and gave proofs of extraordinary talents. To dramatic poetry he appears to have been very early attached, two pieces of his, 'Scipio Africanus,' and 'Henry IV. of France,' both tragedies, being represented on the stage before he had completed his twentieth year. He wrote several other poems; but his genius was limited to a short career. He died 19 Feb., 1730-1, in the thirty-second year of his age.

BECON.

BECKINGTON, BEKYNGTON, or DE BECKINGTON, THOMAS, bishop of Bath and Wells in the fifteenth century. He was a great benefactor to New College, Oxford, in which he had been educated; and wrote a Latin book on the claim of the kings of England to France. He died at Wells, 14 January, 1464-5, and was buried in the cathedral of that city. His book, just mentioned, is in the Cottonian Library. His life has been written by Sir N. Harris Nicolas.

BECKINSALL, or BECKINSAU, JOHN, a native of Broadchalk, Wiltshire, was educated at Winchester School, whence he proceeded to New College Oxford, of which he was admitted a fellow 1520. He distinguished himself in all parts of academical learning, especially in the Greek tongue. He was carried away with the stream in the opposition to the see of Rome, in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., but recovered himself under Queen Mary. He read the Greek lesson for a while in the university of Paris. The latter portion of his life was spent at Sherborn, Hampshire, where he was buried 20 Dec., 1559. The only work that appears with his name is 'De supremo et absoluto Regis Imperio,' 8vo., London, 1546; folio, Frankfurt, 1621.

BECKMAN, Sir MARTIN, a painter, who was knighted 20 March, 1685-6. He painted sea-pieces and shipping. He was engineer to Charles II. of England, and planned Tilbury Fort and the works at Sheerness.

BECKMANN, JOHN, a German author, born at Hoya, in Saxony, 1739. In 1762 he was professor of medicine and natural history at the Lutheran Academy at St. Petersburg. He also visited Sweden, where he remained some time in order to avail himself of the instructions of Linnæus. In 1766 he was summoned to the university of Göttingen, where he taught for nearly fifty years. He delivered lectures on rural economy, commercial science, and technology. Died 3 Feb., 1811. He was author of a great number of works, among which his 'History of Inventions' is the best known in this country. There have been several editions of it published in English.

BECKMANN, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, an historian and geographer, was born at Zerbst, 1641; died 6 March, 1717, at Frankfurt, where he was professor of history, Greek, and divinity. He wrote 'Historia orbis terrarum geographia et civilis,' 1673; and other works.

BECKWITH, Sir GEORGE, a British general, born 1753; died 20 March, 1823.

BECKWITH, JOSIAH, an English antiquary, was born at Rothwell, near Leeds, 24 Aug., 1734, and practised as a solicitor at Rotherham, Yorkshire. In 1784 he published an enlarged edition of Blount's 'Jocular Tenures.'

BECKWITH, THOMAS, F.S.A., an artist and genealogist, brother of Josiah, mentioned above, was a native of Yorkshire, and died 17 Feb., 1786. He compiled 'A Walk in and about the City of York;' but it does not appear that it was ever published.

BECLARD, PIERRE AUGUSTIN, an eminent French anatomist, born at Angers 15 Oct., 1785; died 17 March, 1825.

BECON, RICHARD, a native of Suffolk, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1571; M.A. 1575), and in 1586 was appointed her Majesty's attorney for the province of Munster. He was author of 'Solon his Follie, or a Politique Discourse, touching the Reformation of common-weales, conquered, declined, or corrupted,' 4to., Oxford, 1594.

BECON, THOMAS, D.D., an English Protestant writer, born at Norwich about 1511, and educated at Cambridge, probably at St. John's College (B.A. 1530-1). He received holy orders and became a zealous promoter of the reformed doctrines, which, however, he twice publicly abjured. For some years he wandered about the midland counties, and published a number of books, which acquired considerable popularity. On 24 March, 1547-8, he was instituted to the rectory of St. Stephen, Walbrook, London, and about the same time was appointed chaplain to Archbishop Cramer, and one of the six preachers of Canterbury Cathedral. He was also chaplain to the Lord Protector Somerset, with whom he resided for some time at Sheen. He appears to have commenced D.D. at Oxford. During the reign of Queen Mary he retired abroad; but after her death he was reinstated in his benefice. He afterwards held in succession several livings in the metropolis, and gained much popularity as a preacher. Died before 2 July, 1607. A collection of his works, forty-one in number, was published at London, 1563, 1564, 3 vols. fol. A selection from them was published by the Parker Society, under the editorial care of the Rev. John Ayre, 3 vols. 8vo., Cambridge, 1843, 1844.

BECCQUET, ANTOINE, a Celestine monk, who wrote a history of the congregation of his order in France, was born at Paris, 1654, and died 20 Jan., 1720.

BECTOZ, CLAUDE DE, a learned French lady, abbess of St. Honorat, in Provence, died 1547. She wrote some Latin and French works, none of which are extant.

BEDA, or BEDE, called the Venerable, an ancient English writer, was born about 672, at Wearmouth, in the bishopric of Durham, educated in the monastery of St. Peter, and ordained by John of Beverley, bishop of Hexham: His fame for learning was so great that Pope Sergius wrote to the abbat of Jarrow to send him to Rome, but Bede declined the honour. He devoted the whole of his life to the composition of his ecclesiastical history and other works, and in instructing the young monks. His last illness was long and painful, notwithstanding which he laboured for the edification of others to the very last, and dictated to an amanuensis a translation of the Gospel of St. John into the Saxon language. The young man who wrote for him said, 'There is now, master, but one sentence wanting.' Upon which he bid him write quick, and when the scribe said, 'It is now done,' the venerable sage replied, 'It is now done,' and soon afterwards expired in the act of prayer, on the floor of his cell, 26 May, 735. The first general collection of his works was made at Paris in 3 vols. folio, 1544. His 'Ecclesiastical History' has been translated into English by Thomas Stapleton, D.D., and by the Rev. William Hurst.

BEDA, NOEL, a native of Picardy, was a famous doctor of the Sorbonne, principal of the College of Montaign, syndic of the faculty at Paris, and author of 'Annotations' against Erasmus and Le Perre d'Estaples. It was Beda who hindered the conclusion of the faculty of theology, which passed by a plurality of votes, in favour of the divorce of Henry VIII., king of England. In 1536

he was compelled to apologize for having spoken against the king, and was afterwards confined in the abbey of Mount St. Michael, where he died 8 Feb., 1537. He wrote 'De unica Magdalena,' and other works in Latin and French.

BEDDOES, THOMAS, M.D., an English physician, was the son of a farmer at Shifnal, in Shropshire, and was born there 15 April, 1760. He received his education at the school of Brewood, in Staffordshire, next at that of Bridgnorth, afterwards under a private tutor, and lastly at Pembroke College, Oxford, where, in 1783, he took the degree of M.A., and the following year went to study physic at Edinburgh. In 1786 he took his doctor's degree, and, the year following, was appointed professor of chemistry at Oxford; but in 1792 he quitted the university on account of the violence of his politics. He then settled at Clifton, near Bristol, where he obtained considerable practice, but died in the prime of life of a dropsy in the chest, which he mistook for a hepatic disease, 24 Dec., 1808. Dr. Beddoes was a man of genius, but of too ardent and versatile a temper, which led him to adopt many paradoxes as unquestionable truths. He translated several chemical works, and wrote some ingenious pieces on medicine, mineralogy, physiology, philosophy, and politics. The last, however, are coarse and intemperate in the extreme. A copious memoir of him has been published by Dr. Stock, with an elaborate account of his writings, the list of which is too long for insertion in this place.

BEDDOES, THOMAS LOVELL, a poetical writer, eldest son of Dr. Thomas Beddoes, mentioned above, was born at Clifton, 20 July, 1803. After a preparatory training at the Charterhouse School, he was entered of Pembroke College, Oxford (B.A. 1825; M.A. 1828), and during his residence at the university published a volume of poems under the title of 'The Improvisatore,' 12mo., 1821, which was followed the year after by 'The Bride's Tragedy.' Having determined to adopt medicine as his profession, he repaired to Gottingen, where he pursued his studies for four years. In 1829 and the two following years he was residing at Wurmsburg, when he obtained the degree, without, however, then or subsequently assuming the title of doctor in medicine. He afterwards resided at Strasburg, Zurich, Berlin, and Frankfort, paying occasional visits to his native country, which he quitted for the last time in 1847. His death took place at Basle 26 January, 1849. 'The poems, posthumous and collected, of Thomas Lovell Beddoes,' appeared at London, 2 vols. 12mo., 1851, under the editorship of T. F. Kelsall, who has prefixed a memoir of the author. These volumes contain 'The Second Brother,' an unfinished drama; 'Torrismond,' an unfinished drama; 'Dramatic Scenes and Fragments,' 'Miscellaneous Poems,' 'Death's Jest Book, or the Fool's Tragedy,' and 'The Bride's Tragedy,' first published in 1822.

BEDELL, WILLIAM, an Irish prelate, was born in 1570 at Black Notley, in Essex, and educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where, in 1593, he obtained a fellowship. In 1599 he settled at Bury, in Suffolk, but in 1604 he went to Venice as chaplain to Sir Henry Wotton, during his residence in that city. Mr. Bedell contracted a friendship with father Paul Sarpi, who intrusted to his care the manuscript of his 'History of the Council of Trent,' and other works, which were afterwards printed in London. The celebrated Antonio de Dominis, archbishop of Spalato, also formed an acquaintance with Mr. Bedell, imparted to him the secret of his conversion, and gave him the manuscript of his treatise 'De Republica Ecclesiastica.' In 1612 he returned to his flock at Bury, and three years after was presented to the living of Honingsheath, from whence, in 1627, he was called to preside over Trinity College, Dublin. In 1629 he was promoted to the united bishoprics of Kilmore and Ardagh, but he afterwards resigned the last see as incompatible with his ideas of episcopal duty. The bishop procured the common prayer and Bible to be translated into Irish. This last was several years afterwards printed at the expense of Mr. Boyle. When the rebellion broke out the bishop was at first unmolested, but at length he was seized with his family, and thrown into the castle of Cloughbouter, where they remained three weeks, and then were removed to the house of Dennis Sheridan, an Irish minister, who was suffered to live quietly by the rebels out of respect to his family. Here the bishop breathed his last on the 7th Feb., 1641-2. He wrote a large treatise on these two questions: 'Where was our religion before Luther? And what became of our ancestors who died in Popery?'

BEDERICUS, HENRY, or Henry de Bury, was born in Suffolk, and became an Augustinian in the monastery of Clare, and eventually provincial of his order. He flourished about 1380. His works are, 'Super Libros Sententiarum lecturæ;' 'Questiones Theologiæ;' and 'Sermones de B. M. V.'

BEDFORD, ARTHUR, an English divine, was born at Tidenham, Gloucestershire, in September, 1668. At the age of sixteen he became a commoner of Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree 1691. The year following he was presented to the vicarage of Temple Church, Bristol, from whence some years afterwards he removed to Newton St. Loe, Somersetshire; but in 1724 he was chosen chaplain to Haberdashers' Hospital, London, where he died 15 Sept., 1745. His works are, 'Serious Reflections on the Abuse of the Stage,' 8vo., and some other tracts on the same subject; 'The Temple of Music,' 8vo.; 'Essay on singing David's Psalms,' 8vo.; 'Animadversions on Sir Isaac Newton's Chronology,' 8vo., 1728; 'A Sermon at St. Botolph's, Aldgate, against Stage-plays,' 1730, 8vo.; 'Observations on a Sermon preached by the Rev. A. S. Calcott, before the Corporation of Bristol,' 8vo., 1736; 'An Examination of Mr. Hutchinson's Remarks, and Mr. Calcott's Answer to the Observations,' &c., 8vo., 1738; 'Scripture Chronology,' folio, 1741; 'Eight Sermons on the Doctrine of the Trinity at Lady Moyer's Lecture,' 8vo., 1740; 'The Doctrine of Justification by Faith stated,' 8vo., 1741; 'Horæ Mathematicæ vacuæ, or a Treatise on the Golden and Ecliptic Numbers,' 8vo., 1743.

BEDFORD, FRANCIS RUSSELL, earl of, K.G., only son of Sir John Russell, afterwards earl of Bedford, was born in 1528, and received part of his education at King's Hall, Cambridge. At the coronation of Edward VI. he was created K.B., and in 1547 was returned to parliament for Buckinghamshire. It is said that this is the earliest instance of the son and heir apparent of a peer sitting in the House of Commons. In 1549 he had a command in the forces with which his father suppressed the insurrection in the west of England. From 14 Jan., 1549-50, which his father was created earl of Bedford, he was commonly called Lord Russell; and on 1 March, 1552-3 he took his seat in the upper house, having been summoned thereto in his father's barony. On the death of his father, which occurred 14 March, 1554-5, he succeeded to the earldom of Bedford and a noble inheritance. Subsequently he travelled abroad and visited Zurich, where he became acquainted with Peter Martyr, Henry Bullinger, and other leading reformers. He distinguished himself at the battle and siege of St. Quentin, and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth was sent on several diplomatic missions. In Feb., 1563-4, he was constituted governor of Berwick. Died 28 July, 1585. He was a great patron of learning and learned men.

BEDFORD, GROSVENOR CHARLES, an English miscellaneous writer, the friend and correspondent of Southey, was for some time auditor of the exchequer, and died 14 June, 1839. He translated 'Musæus. The Loves of Hero and Leander,' 4to., London, 1797, and edited 'Letters and Miscellaneous Papers, by [his cousin] Barré Charles Roberts, Student of Christ Church, Oxford; with a memoir of his life,' 4to., London, 1814.

BEDFORD, HILKIAH, an English divine, was born in London 23 July, 1663, being son of Hilkiah Bedford, a mathematical instrument maker. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, on the foundation of William Plat, his maternal grandfather. He afterwards obtained a fellowship, and graduated in arts. On taking orders he was presented to a living in Lincolnshire, of which he was deprived at the Revolution for refusing the oaths of allegiance. He then kept a boarding-house for the Westminster scholars, but in 1714 he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment and a heavy fine for publishing the 'Hereditary Right of the Crown of England asserted,' the real author of which was George Harbin. Mr. Bedford translated an answer to 'Fontenelle's History of Oracles,' and 'Dr. Barwick's Life' into English. He died 25 Nov., 1744.

BEDFORD, JOHN, duke of, the third son of Henry IV., king of England. In 1422 he commanded the English army in France, and the same year was named regent of that kingdom for Henry VI., whom he caused to be proclaimed at Paris. He defeated the French fleet near Southampton, made himself master of Cotoi, entered Paris with his troops, and beat the duke of Alençon, thus making himself master of France. He died 14 Sept., 1435, at Rouen, where a handsome monument was erected to his memory, which one of the courtiers of Charles VIII. advised him to destroy. 'Let him rest in peace,' answered he, 'who, when living, made all the French tremble.'

BEDFORD, JOHN RUSSELL, earl of, K.G., was in 1543 appointed lord admiral of England and Ireland, and the next year lord privy seal. He attended Henry VIII. at the sieges of Terouenne and Boulogne, at the former of which he, at the head of 250 reformados, recovered a piece of ordnance from 10,000 French, under the count de St. Paul. At the coronation of Edward VI. he was appointed lord high steward of England for that day, and in the same year he had a grant of the monastery of Woburn, Bedfordshire. He was created earl of Bedford 19 Jan., 1549-50, and died 1555.

BEDFORD.

BEDFORD, JOHN RUSSELL, sixth duke of, K.G., was born 1766; succeeded his brother 1802; and died 30 Oct., 1839. During the Whig administration of 1806-7 he was lord-lieutenant of Ireland, but that was the only period of his sustaining public office. He devoted much attention to the improvement of agriculture; and in 1830 rebuilt Covent Garden Market in a very handsome and permanent manner, at a cost of £40,000. This nobleman was a great patron of British painters and other artists.

BEDFORD, LUCY, countess of, sister and coheir of John the second Lord Harrington, and wife of Edward earl of Bedford, was a woman of uncommon taste and spirit, but vain, generous, and bountiful to excess. She was a great patroness of poets, particularly of Donne, Jonson, Drayton, and Daniel, who frequently experienced her munificence. Died 3 May, 1697.

BEDFORD, THOMAS, an English divine, received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. He afterwards proceeded B.D. His works are, 'The Sinne unto Death, or an ample Discovery of that fearful Sinne, the Sinne against the Holy Ghost,' 4to., London, 1621; 'An Examination of the chief Points of Antinomianism, collected out of some Lectures lately preached in the Chapel of Antholme's Parish, London. To which is annexed An Examination of a Pamphlet intituled The Compassionate Samaritan,' 4to., London, 1647; and 'Vindiciæ Gratia Sacramentalis,' 8vo., London, 1650.

BEDFORD, THOMAS, son of Hilkiah Bedford, was educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, but never took any degree on account of his attachment to the nonjurors, among whom he exercised the ministry at Compton, in Derbyshire, where he died in February, 1773. He published, in 1732, 'Symeonis monachi Dunelmensis ecclesiae,' 8vo. He also wrote an historical catechism, 8vo., 1742.

BEDFORD, WILLIAM RUSSELL, first duke of, eldest son of Francis the fourth earl of Bedford, was born 1614, and educated at Magdalene College, Oxford. At the coronation of Charles I. he was created K.B. In the beginning of the civil war he acted against the king, and commanded the reserve of horse at the battle of Edgehill; but in 1645 he joined the royal standard, and fought with great bravery at the battle of Newbury. His estate in consequence was put under sequestration, but on his submission to the parliament it was restored. He heartily concurred in the restoration of Charles II., as he did afterwards in the Revolution. He was created duke of Bedford 11 Mar., 1694, and died 7 Sept., 1700.

BEDFORD, WILLIAM, M.D., a distinguished physician, was eldest son of Hilkiah Bedford, M.A., and received his education in St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1721; M.A. 1725; M.D. per lit. reg. 1737). He afterwards held several offices in the college of physicians, and in 1746 was appointed physician to Christ's Hospital. Died 10 July, 1747. He was the intimate friend of Hearne the antiquary, who bequeathed him his MSS.

BEDFORD, WILLIAM, a British admiral, died in Oct., 1827.

BEDINGFIELD, THOMAS, an English gentleman, who received a pension from Queen Elizabeth, translated into English Cardan's 'Consolatorium,' 1576; Claudio Corte's 'Art of Riding,'

BEDWELL.

1584; and Macchiavelli's 'Florentine History,' 1595. Died 1613.

BEDLOE, WILLIAM, who assumed the title of captain, was an infamous adventurer of low birth, who had travelled over a great part of Europe under different names and disguises, and had passed himself off with several ignorant persons as a man of rank and fortune. Encouraged by the success of Titus Oates, he turned king's evidence, gave an account of the murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and added many circumstances to the narrative of the former. A reward of £500 was voted to Bedloe by the House of Commons. Died 20 Aug., 1680. Giles Jacob states that he wrote a play entitled 'The excommunicated Prince; or, the false Relick,' 1679; but Wood ascribes its authorship to Thomas Walter, M.A.

BEDOS DE CELLES, a French Benedictine, author of treatises on dialling, book-binding, and organ-building; born 1706; died 25 Nov., 1779.

BEDRASCHI, the Rabbi Jedaia, called likewise Happenin Aubonet-Abram, a Jew who flourished in Spain towards the close of the thirteenth century. He left several Hebrew works, the principal of which, written at Barcelona in 1298, is entitled 'Bechinat-Olem,' or an examination or appreciation of the world. It has been several times printed, and translated into Latin, French, and German.

BEDWELL, THOMAS, a mathematician, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1566-7; M.A., 1570). Taking holy orders, he became a minister in London, but ultimately held the office of keeper of the ordnance stores in the Tower. It was he who started the project of bringing the waters of the Lea from Ware to London. In 1588 he was engaged, in conjunction with Frederico Genibelli, the famous military engineer, in strengthening the works at Tilbury and Gravesend. He was buried in the church of the Tower of London 30 April, 1595. His works are, 'Trigonum architectonicum: the carpenter's rule explained, reformed, and enlarged,' 1612; 'De Numeris Geometricis. Of the nature and properties of geometrical numbers, first written by Lazarus Schonerus, and now englished,' 1614; and 'Mesolabivm Architectonicum: that is, A most rare and singular Instrument, for the easie, speedy, and most certaine measuring of Plaines and Solids by the foote,' 1631, 1639. He was the uncle of William Bedwell, the great Arabic scholar.

BEDWELL, WILLIAM, a divine, mathematician, and topographer, was born in Essex, in or about 1562, and educated at Cambridge. His name is inserted in the register of that university as a scholar of Trinity College, 17 March, 1578-9. He obtained the living of St. Ethelburg, London, 1601, and in 1607 was presented to the vicarage of Tottenham, Middlesex, where he died 5 May, 1632. His epitaph states that 'he was one of King James's translators of the Bible, and, for the eastern tongues, as learned a man as most who lived in these modern times.' In confirmation of this statement, it may be mentioned that he taught Arabic to the celebrated Erpenius. His works are, 'Kalendarium Viatorium Generale. The Traveller's Kalender, serving generally for all parts of the world,' 8vo., 1614; 'Brief Description of the Town of Tottenham High Crosse, in Middlesex,' 4to., 1631, reprinted in Robinson's 'History of Tottenham;' and 'Via Regia ad Geometriam. The way to Geometry, by Peter Ramus, translated and much improved by the learned Mr. William Bedwell, 4to. London, 1036. This last work was edited by John Clerke, who dedicated it to John Greaves, professor of geometry in Gresham College.

BEE, JON. See BADCOCK, JOHN.

BEECHAM, JOHN, D.D., a Wesleyan minister, much respected by his own sect, was born in Lincolnshire 1788, and died in London 22 April, 1856. He published an 'Essay on the Constitution of Wesleyan Methodism'; 'Ashantee and the Gold Coast'; and a Memoir of Thomas J. Beecham, his only son, a youth of promise, who died in 1846.

BEECHER, LYMAN, D.D., an American clergyman and theological writer, born 12 Oct., 1775; died 10 Jan., 1863. His autobiography and correspondence were published by his son Charles Beecher, 8vo., 2 vols., London, 1863-65.

BEECHEY, FREDERICK WILLIAM, an English admiral and Arctic explorer, was son of Sir William Beechey, the painter, and was born 1796. He entered the navy in his tenth year. In 1818 he was appointed to the 'Trent,' under Lieutenant and Commander Franklin, and departed on the first of the four arctic voyages in which he took part. Of this expedition he published an interesting account in 1843. In 1819 he was appointed to the 'Hecla,' under the command of Lieutenant, afterwards Sir Edward Parry, and rendered useful service during that memorable expedition. In 1821 he was appointed to the 'Adventure,' under Captain W. H. Smyth, then engaged in the survey of the northern coast of Africa. While on this service Beechey was detached, along with his brother, to explore the classic region of the old Greek Pentapolis, and especially to examine and report on the antiquities of the Cyrenaica. His narrative of the expedition, and description of the country and its antiquities, were published in 1828. In 1825 he was appointed to the 'Blossom,' in which ship he performed the voyages with which his name will be chiefly signalized in the annals of British enterprise and navigation. The 'Narrative' of the expedition was published in 1831 by authority of the Admiralty. Beechey returned to England in 1828, after a voyage of upwards of 70,000 miles, and an absence of three years, passed both in arctic and tropical climates, during which period he rendered important services to science and to navigation. In 1847 Captain Beechey was empowered by the government to constitute and superintend the Marine Department of the Board of Trade, a service in which he was actively employed until his death. He was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral 1854, and in the following year was elected to the office of president of the Royal Geographical Society. Died 29 Nov., 1856.

BEECHEY, SIR WILLIAM, an English painter, born 1753. He was originally destined for the legal profession, and was accordingly articled to a solicitor; but having formed an acquaintance with several students of the Royal Academy, he became so enamoured of the fine arts that he prevailed on his master to receive a young man whom he had procured as a substitute, and in 1772 was admitted a student at Somerset House. The Ruspini family was, it is believed, the first picture that he sent to the exhibition of the Royal Academy. From London Mr. Beechey went to Norwich, where he began with painting small conversation pieces, in the manner practised first by Hogarth. On his return to the metropolis, after an absence of four or five years, his talents became known, and he was gratified by general celebrity. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy 1793, and in the same year painted a whole-length portrait of George III., with the prince of Wales and the duke of York, reviewing the Third and Tenth Dragoons. This is considered to be his chef d'œuvre. The same year he was elected a member of the Royal Academy, and had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. He was elected a Royal Academician, 1797, and died at Hampstead 28 Jan., 1839. Sir William painted the greater portion of the people of rank and fashion in his day, and his pictures were much admired for the accuracy of the likenesses, and their general management, tone, and colouring.

BEEK, DAVID. See BECK.

BEEKE, HENRY, D.D., an English divine, was born at Kingsteignton, Devonshire, 6 Jan. 1751, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, (B.A. 1773). In 1775 he was elected to a fellowship at Oriel College, and took his other degrees as a fellow of that society (M.A. 1776; B.D. 1785; D.D. 1800). He became vicar of St. Mary's Oxford, 1782; professor of modern history in that university, 1801; dean of Bristol, 1814; vicar of Wear, Somersetshire, 1819; and died at Torquay, 9 March, 1837, aged 86. Dr. Beeke was peculiarly well acquainted with most subjects connected with political economy, and it is said that Mr. Pitt was indebted to him for the original suggestion of the income tax. His publications were, 'A Letter on the means of securing a safe and honourable Peace,' 1798; 'Observations on the Produce of the Income Tax, and its proportion to the whole Income of Great Britain,' 1799 and 1800; and 'Some Observations on the Roman Roads in Great Britain.'

BEER, GEORGE JOSEPH, an eminent oculist, born at Vienna 23 Dec., 1763; died 1821.

BEER, MICHAEL, a dramatic poet, brother of Meyerbeer the composer, was born at Berlin, 1800, and died at Munich 22 March, 1833.

BEES, ST. See BEGA.

BEESELEY, GEORGE, an English priest, born at Goosnargh, Lancashire, and educated at Douay, was executed in Fleet Street, London, 2 July, 1591, on account of his sacerdotal character.

BEESTON, SIR WILLIAM, an English naval commander, was baptized 2 Dec., 1636, at Titchfield, Hampshire. He was knighted 1692, was governor of Jamaica from 1693 to 1700, and returned to England 1702. I have not met with the date of his decease. His autograph journal is preserved in the British Museum, MS. Add., 12,424.

BEETH, WILLIAM, a Dominican friar, educated at Oxford. He was a person of remarkable learning and piety, and became provincial of his order. He was alive in 1501. His works are, 'Comment. Super iv. libros sententiarum'; 'Tractatus de unitate Formarum'; and 'Lecturæ Scholasticæ.'

BEETHOVEN, LOUIS VON, an eminent musical composer, was born at Bonn 17 Dec., 1770, being the son of a tenor singer in the chapel of the elector of Cologne. His great talent for music was early cultivated, and in his eighth year he astonished all who heard him by his execution on the violin, on which he was in the habit of performing with great diligence in a little garret. In his eleventh year he played Bach's 'Wohl Temperirtes clavier,' and in his thirteenth composed some sonatas. These promising appearances of great talent induced the elector of Cologne to send him to Vienna, where he studied counterpoint under Albrechtsberger. In 1809 he was invited to the new court of the king of Westphalia, at which several men of distinction persuaded him to remain by a promise of a yearly salary. He composed his principal works after 1801. A few years before his death a cold which he had caught while composing in the open air produced a deafness, which became by degrees very great. After this he lived very much retired in the village of Modingen, near Vienna, and died 26 March, 1827. Instrumental music received from his compositions a new character. He united the humour of Haydn with the melancholy of Mozart, and his music resembles Cherubini's. Besides the great symphonies and overtures of Beethoven, the quintets, quartets, and trios for stringed instruments, his numerous sonatas, variations, and other pieces for the pianoforte, in all of which he shows the great richness of his imagination, he composed vocal music also with scarcely less success. To this department belong his opera 'Leonora' (in an altered state called 'Fidelio'), some masses, an oratorio 'The Mount of Olives', and songs for the pianoforte. Beethoven's 'Studies in Thorough-Bass, Counterpoint, and the Theory of Composition,' were published by the Chevalier von Seyfried, after the death of the author. An admirable statue of Beethoven was erected at Bonn, 1845, and unveiled in the presence of Victoria, queen of England.

BEGA, or BEES, ST., a holy Irish virgin, who flourished about the middle of the seventh century, led an ascetical life, and afterwards founded a nunnery in Copeland, near Carlisle. Her shrine was kept there after her death, and became famous for pilgrims. Festival 6 Sept.

BEGA, or BEGYN, CORNELIUS, a Dutch painter, was born at Haerlem in 1630, and died of the plague 27 Aug., 1664. He excelled in landscape, cattle, and conversations, and his pictures are held in great esteem.

BEGARELLI, ANTHONY, a sculptor, born at Modena about 1498; died 1565.

BEGER, or BOEGER, LAURENCE, a German writer, was born at Heidelberg 19 April, 1653, and died at Berlin 21 April, 1705. He wrote 'Thesaurus Thesauri Palatino selectus, seu Gemmarum,' 1700; 'Spicilegium Antiquitatis,' folio; 'Thesaurus, seu Gemmarum, Numismata,' &c., 3 vols. folio, and several other works, one of which is in defence of polygamy.

BEGON, MICHEL, was born at Blois 1638, and was bred to the law, but having subsequently entered the marine service he successively filled the offices of intendant of the French West India Islands, of the galleys of Havre and Canada, and those of Rochefort and La Rochelle. Died 14 March, 1710. He formed a rich cabinet of medals, antiquities, prints, shells, and other curiosities; and caused to be engraved the portraits of several celebrated persons of the seventeenth century. His books were generally marked 'Michaelis Begon et amicum.' His librarian having once represented to him that if he lent them so freely some of them would doubtless be lost, he very liberally replied, 'I had much rather lose my books than seem to distrust an honest man.'

BEGUILLET, EDMUND, a French writer, born at Auxonne about 1720, became an advocate and afterwards a notary at Dijon, and died May, 1786.

BEHN.

In addition to several works on domestic economics and agriculture, he wrote 'Histoire des guerres des deux Bourgognes,' 3 vols. 12mo.; 'Precis de l'Histoire de Bourgogne,' 8vo.; 'Description générale du duché de Bourgogne,' 6 vols. 8vo. In conjunction with Poncelin, he published a 'History of Paris,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1780.

BEHAM, JOHN SEBALD, a painter and engraver of Nuremberg, born 1500; died 1550. He copied the manner of Aldegrever and Durer, engraving both on wood and copper. He also etched a few plates, but these are the most indifferent of his works. His pictures were held in considerable estimation by his contemporaries, and poems were published in their praise. His brother Bartholomew Beham, who lived at Rome, was also a good engraver, and a disciple of Marc Antonio, whose manner he copied.

BEHEM, MARTIN, otherwise BEHAM, BOEHM, or BEHENIRA, an eminent geographer and navigator, was born at Nuremberg about 1430. He was employed by John I., king of Portugal, on a voyage of discovery, and the next year established a colony of Flemings on the island of Fayal. In 1484 Behem is said to have discovered Brazil, and the Straits of Magellan, whence it has been inferred that Columbus obtained information respecting the existence of a western continent from Behem himself, or some of his companions, when he visited Madeira. The fact of Behem's previous discovery, however, seems to be put beyond doubt by his letters in the archives of Nuremberg, the public records of that city, and the Latin chronicle of Hartman Schedl. King John conferred on him the honour of knighthood, made him governor of Fayal, and distinguished him by other marks of royal favour. He died at Lisbon 29 July, 1506. A terrestrial globe of his construction is still preserved in the public library of Nuremberg.

BEHLEN, STEPHEN, a German author, who published a number of works relating to the chase and the management of forests. Born 5 Aug., 1784; died 7 Feb., 1847.

BEHMEN, JACOB. See BOEHME.

BEHN, APHARA, an English authoress, born in the reign of Charles I., was daughter of Mr. Johnson, who was appointed governor of Surinam, but who died on his passage to that settlement. The family, however, proceeded thither, and Aphara became acquainted with the adventures of Oroonoko, whose story she afterwards gave to the public. On her return to England she married a London merchant named Behn. In Aug., 1666, she undertook a secret and semi-official journey to Antwerp, in order, by her intimacy with William Scott, son of Thomas Scott, the regicide, and other of the English fugitives resident in Holland, to obtain information about their movements and those of their sympathizers; and also about those of the Dutch themselves. She returned to England in Dec., 1666. In her letters, which are preserved in the State Paper Office, no trace has been found to verify the statement of her biographers, that through her agency the design of the Dutch against the ships in the Medway was first communicated to the English government. It seems probable that during the remainder of her life she was mainly indebted to her pen for support. Her plays, which are numerous, abound in obscenity, and her novels are little better. Sir Richard Steele tells us that she 'understood the practice part of love better than the speculative.' Died 16 April, 1689.

BEHNES, HENRY, an English sculptor, brother of William Behnes, mentioned below, died of the cholera at Rome 1837. In order that he might be distinguished from his brother, he assumed the name of Burlow.

BEHNES, WILLIAM, an eminent sculptor, was the eldest son of William Behnes, a pianoforte maker, and was born in London 1794. The family afterwards removed to Dublin, where he began to show a great natural taste for art. On returning to London the family settled in a house which was rented by a French emigrant named Chenu, by profession a sculptor. The result was that young Behnes obtained some knowledge of modelling in clay, and this formed the turning point of his life. In after days he frequently referred to this as an accident much to be deplored, and indeed it is probable that as a portrait painter he would have taken even a higher position than he did as a sculptor. He first established himself as a sculptor in Newman Street, and then removed to Dean Street, where he commenced building, and contracted debts which involved him in ever increasing difficulties during the remainder of his life. Afterwards he removed to 10, Osnaburg Street. At this time with common prudence he might have realized a fortune, as he had a succession of illustrious sitters, among whom were the Princess (afterwards Queen) Victoria, several members of the royal family, and many persons of distinction. Soon after the accession of Queen Victoria he was appointed sculptor in ordinary, but from his nomination to his death he was never called upon, in virtue of that office, to execute a single piece of sculpture. Having got into the clutches of a money-lender he was compelled to break up his establishment in Osnaburg Street about 1861, and he then took a miserable lodging in the lower part of Charlotte Street, Fitzroy Square, where he obtained a few small commissions; but his spirit was broken, his health began to give way, and he shrank from making known his condition to friends who would have assisted him. He died in the Middlesex Hospital 3 Jan., 1864. Among the best of his works are the statues of Dr. Babington (St. Paul's), Sir William Pollett (Westminster Abbey), and Sir Robert Peel (London and Leeds). The statue of General Havelock, in Trafalgar Square, was his latest and worst production. He will probably be best known to posterity by his busts of Clarkson, Lord Lyndhurst, Mr. Grote, Mr. Disraeli, the Chevalier Bunsen, the king of Hanover, Mr. Macready, and other persons of distinction.

BEHNES, CONRAD BERTOLD, a noted German physician and medical writer, born 26 Aug., 1660; died 4 Oct., 1730.

BEHRING, VITUS, a native of Denmark, entered the Russian navy, and in 1735 was appointed commander of an expedition despatched to the north-east quarter of Asia, for the purpose of settling, if possible, the then doubtful question as to the junction of Asia and America. In 1733 he took the command of another expedition of a similar kind, and after having made some important geographical discoveries, died on the island which now bears his name 8 Dec., 1741. It was he who discovered the strait connecting the Pacific with the Arctic ocean—now called Behring's Strait.

BELASYSE.

BEIDHAVI, a Mahometan writer, author of a commentary on the Koran, died 1289 or 1291.

BEIER, ADRIAN, an eminent jurist, born at Jena 1634; died 1712.

BEINASCHI, JOHN BAPTIST, an historical painter, was a native of Piedmont, and studied at Rome, under Lanfranc. He obtained the honour of knighthood, and died in 1638, aged 54.

BEININ, St. See BENIGNUS.

BEISCH, or BEICH, JOACHIM FRANCIS, a painter and engraver, born at Ravensburg, in Swabia, 1665; died 16 Oct., 1748.

BETHAR, or EBN BETHAR, an African botanist, who died in the 646th year of the hejira. He compiled a general History of Plants in Arabic, another work on the medicinal use of herbs, and a defence of his opinions.

BEK, BEC, or BEAK, ANTHONY, an English prelate, who was advanced from the archdeaconry to the bishopric of Durham 1283. He is said to have been the richest bishop who had ever held that see, for besides the revenues of the bishopric he had a temporal estate of 5000 marks. He assisted Edward I. in his war against Balliol, and was sent by that monarch on an embassy to the emperor of Germany. In 1305 the pope conferred on him the title of Patriarch of Jerusalem, and about the same time the king gave him the principality of the Isle of Man. This bishop built a number of castles, founded a priory in Lincolnshire, and a collegiate church at Chester-le-Street. He died at his castle of Eltham, Kent, 3 March, 1310.

BEKA, or BEC, JOHN DE, in Latin Becanus, a canon of the church of Utrecht in the fourteenth century, who wrote a chronicle of his cathedral down to 1346. Of this work there are several editions.

BEKINSAU. See BECKINSAU.

BEKKER, BALTHAZAR, a Dutch divine, born 1634; died 11 June, 1698. In his book entitled 'The World Bewitched,' he maintained that the devils have no power over mankind. This work exposed him to much persecution, and he was degraded from the ministerial office, but his salary was reserved to him by the magistrates of Amsterdam.

BEKKER, ELIZABETH. See WOLFF.

BEL, CHARLES ANDREW, son of Matthias, mentioned below, was born at FRESHBURG 1717, and died 5 April, 1782. He became librarian of the university of Leipsic and councillor of state to the elector of Saxony. He wrote a treatise 'On the true origin and epoch of the Huns;' translated into German Watterville's 'History of Switzerland;' and continued the 'Acta Eruditorum' from 1744 to 1780.

BEL, JEAN JACQUES, councillor in the parliament of Bordeaux, was born 21 March, 1693, and died at Paris 15 Aug., 1738. He published a criticism on Voltaire's 'Marianne;' 'Dictionnaire Neologique,' &c.

BEL, or BELIUS, MATTHIAS, an Hungarian divine and historian, born at Orsova 1684; died 1749. He left some works in Latin on the history of his native country; translated the Bible into Bohemian; and composed several devotional treatises.

BELASYSE. See FAUCONBERG, Viscount.

BELASYSE, JOHN, Lord, second son of Thomas Viscount Fauconberg, raised six regiments for Charles I., who, in consideration of his conduct and courage in many gallant actions in the time of the Rebellion, created him Baron Belaysse of Worlaby, Lincolnshire, 27 Jan., 1644-5. In the reign of Charles II. he was constituted captain-general of the king's forces in Africa, and held other important posts; but being a member of the Roman church he resigned all his preferments on the passing of the Test Act, 1673. Died 10 Sept., 1684.

BELCAMP, JOHN VAN, a Dutch painter, was in England in the reign of Charles I., and was employed under Abraham Vanderdort in copying pictures in the royal collection. His copies are thought to be well executed. Died 1653.

BELCHER, DABRIGECOURT, a dramatist, son of William Belcher, of Guilsborough, Northamptonshire, was born about 1580, and died in the Low Countries 1621.

BELCHER, HENRY, a solicitor of Whitby, Yorkshire, author of 'Description of the Scenery of the Whitby and Pickering Railway,' died at Warwick 17 Feb., 1854. In the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' vol. 100, pt. 2, p. 113, is an interesting letter from him respecting the fall of the tower of Whitby Abbey.

BELCHER, JONATHAN, governor of Massachusetts and New Jersey, was born 1681, and died 1757. His son, of the same name, became chief justice of Nova Scotia, and died in March, 1776.

BELCHIAM, THOMAS, an English Franciscan in the time of Henry VIII. He declaimed with much zeal and freedom against the vices of that monarch's court, and especially against the divorce and the irreligious dispositions of the men in power. For this he and about thirty others of his order were cast into prison, where they all perished through want and hardship. He composed a book concerning the abuses of the times, which, being communicated to Henry VIII., he could not read it without tears. Also a book entitled 'Liber ad Fratres.'

BELCHIER, JOHN, F.R.S., a surgeon, born at Kingston, Surrey, 1706. He was educated at Eton, and served his apprenticeship to Cheselden, under whom he made great proficiency. In 1736 he became surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and fellow of the Royal Society, in whose 'Transactions' are several of his communications. Died 1785.

BELFRAGE, HENRY, D.D., an eminent Scotch clergyman of the Secession, was born at Falkirk 24 March, 1774; died 16 Sept., 1835. He published a large number of religious works.

BELGRADO, JAMES, an Italian Jesuit, born at Udina 16 Nov., 1704; died 17 April, 1789. He was an eminent mathematician and antiquary, and published numerous works in Latin and Italian. They are chiefly on scientific subjects, but the principal one is a geometrical demonstration of the existence of a Deity.

BELGRAVE, RICHARD, a writer of the fourteenth century, was born at Belgrave, near Leicester, and educated at Cambridge, where he was created D.D. He entered the Carmelite order, and distinguished himself by his great skill in the Aristotelian philosophy and school divinity. He flourished in 1320. He was author of 'Theological Determinations,' and 'Ordinary Questions.'

BELHAVEN, JOHN HAMILTON, second Lord, eldest son of Lord Presmannan, was born 5 July, 1626, and married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Hamilton, of Silvertown-hill, bart., and granddaughter of John, the first Lord Belhaven, who resigned his honours to Charles II. in 1675, when they were settled on him for life, to descend to John Hamilton, the husband of his granddaughter, who accordingly became second Lord Belhaven, on the death of the first lord in 1679. His lordship was an ardent supporter of King William and Queen Mary, who constituted him one of their privy council and a commissioner for executing the office of lord-registrar. He commanded a troop of horse at the battle of Killcrankie 1689. On the accession of Queen Anne he was continued a privy councillor, but when the Pretender attempted to invade Scotland in 1708, Lord Belhaven was apprehended on suspicion of favouring the invasion, and sent prisoner to London. His high spirit burst at the disgrace, and he died of an inflammation of the brain 21 June, 1708, immediately on his release from prison. His works are, 'An Advice to the Farmers of East Lothian to cultivate and improve their Grounds;' 'Speech in the Scots Parliament concerning the Union,' published 1706; and 'Memorable Speeches in the last Parliament of Scotland,' 1706 and 1733.

BELHOMME, HUBERT, a French Benedictine, born at Bar-le-Duc 23 Dec., 1653, taught philosophy and divinity in several houses of his order, and died abbat of Moyon-Moutier 12 Dec., 1727. He wrote in Latin the history of his abbey.

BELIDOR, BERNARD FOREST DE, a French military engineer and mathematician, was born in Catalonia 1697 or 1698, and died at Paris 8 Sept., 1761.

BELING, RICHARD, an Irish writer, son of Sir Henry Belling, knight, was born at Bellingstown, in the county of Dublin, 1613. He was educated in his younger years at a grammar school at Dullin, and was afterwards put under the tuition of some Catholic priests, who taught him to write in a fluent and elegant Latin style. Thus grounded in the polite parts of literature, his father removed him to Lincoln's Inn, and after studying law there for some years he returned home a very accomplished gentleman, but it does not appear that he ever made the law a profession. His natural disposition inclining him to arms, he early engaged in the rebellion of 1641, and became an officer of considerable rank. He afterwards became a leading member in the supreme council of the confederated Catholics at Kilkenny, to which he was principal secretary, and was sent ambassador to the pope in 1643, to crave aid for the support of their cause. He afterwards submitted to the king's authority, and was intrusted by the marquis of Ormond with many negotiations. When the royal army was subdued Belling retired to France, but he returned home at the Restoration, and was repossessed of his estate through the interest of the duke of Ormond. He died at Dublin in Sept., 1677. He published a sixth book added to Sir Philip Sidney's 'Arcadia,' which was printed with that romance, folio, London, 1633, with Belling's initials appended; 'Vindiciæ Catholicorum Hiberniæ,' under the pseudonym of Philopater Irenæus; 'Annotationes in Johannis Poncii librum, cui titulus, Vindiciæ Eversæ: accesserunt Belingi Vindiciæ,' 8vo., Paris, 1654; 'Innocentiæ suæ impetiæ per Reverendissimum Fernensem Vindiciæ,' 12mo., Paris, 1652, a vindication of himself against Nicholas French, Catholic bishop of Ferns; and a poem entitled 'The Eighth Day.'

BELISARIUS, general of the emperor Justinian's armies, and one of the greatest generals in that age. He marched against Cabades, king of Persia, 529, and compelled him to conclude a treaty of peace 532. The following year he commanded the fleet destined to the conquest of Africa, consisting of 500 ships, took Carthage, and in 534 subdued Gilymer, who had usurped the crown of the Vandals. Gilymer was taken prisoner, and carried to Constantinople, and Belisarius passed through the city on foot to receive the honours of the triumph. Thus Africa was reunited to the empire. Justinian then resolving to deliver Italy from the tyranny of the Goths, Belisarius entered Sicily 535, took Catania, Syracuse, and Palermo, besieged Naples, and returned to Rome 536. The Goths having murdered Theodatus, their king, Vitiges placed himself upon the throne, and went to besiege Rome, but was taken two years afterwards in Ravenna. Belisarius conducted him to Constantinople, and refused the crown, which was offered him by the Goths. Some time after Totila, being elected king of that people, ravaged Italy, took Rome, plundered it, and threw down the walls, 546; Belisarius returned thither, and rebuilt them. He was afterwards recalled into the East against the Persians, and repulsed the Huns, who had made an incursion into the empire, 558. It is said by some writers that this great man was accused, 561, of having conspired against Justinian, who commanded his eyes to be put out, but others relate that he was restored to his dignities, and died peaceably at Constantinople 13 March, 565.

BELKNAP, JEREMY, D.D., an American divine, born 4 June, 1744; died 28 June, 1798. He was minister at Dover, New Hampshire, and afterwards at Boston. In addition to some sermons and tracts, he wrote a 'History of New Hampshire,' and 'American Biography.' A corrected and amplified edition of the latter work was published by F. M. Hubbard, 3 vols. 12mo., New York, 1846. Dr. Belknap was one of the founders of the Massachusetts Historical Society.

BELL, ANDREW, D.D., a clergyman of the English Church, well known for his philanthropic efforts in the cause of education, and more particularly for his success in extending the monitorial system of instruction in schools. He was the projector and founder of what are called national schools; and the author of 'An Experiment in Education at the Male Asylum, Madras;' and of 'Instructions for conducting Schools on the Madras System,' &c. Dr. Bell was born at St. Andrew's in 1753, and received his education in the university there. Some of his early years were spent in America, and he was afterwards chaplain to Fort St. George, and minister of St. Mary's at Madras. During his residence in the East Indies he acquired considerable property, which, together with some lucrative preferments in England, enabled him to bequeath no less than £120,000 in support of national institutions and public charities. This benevolent man died at Cheltenham 27 Jan., 1832, and his remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. — Encycl. Brit.

BELL, ARTHUR, or FRANCIS, an English Catholic divine, was born at Temple Broughton, in the parish of Hanbury, near Worcester, 13 Aug., 1590, and at the age of 24 was sent to the English college at St. Omer's. After studying there a year he proceeded to the English college at Valladolid, where he was ordained priest, and took the habit of St. Francis, in the convent of Segobia, 9 Aug., 1618. He afterwards studied for two years in the newly-established Franciscan house at Douay, and was then made confessor, first of the poor Clares at Graveline, and afterwards of the nuns of the third order of St. Francis at Brussels. In Dec., 1630, he was chosen guardian of the English Franciscan convent at Douay, and was likewise lector or professor of Hebrew. He was next sent upon the English mission, and arrived in this country 8 Sept., 1634. For nine years he laboured in making proselytes to the Catholic faith, but being at length apprehended was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn 11 Dec., 1643. He wrote 'A brief Instruction how we ought to hear Mass,' a translation from the Spanish of Andrea Soto, Brussels, 1624; 'The Rule of the Third Order of St. Francis,' 1624; and 'The History, Life, and Miracles of Joane of the Cross,' 8vo., St. Omer's, 1625.

BELL, BEAUFRE, an antiquary, was born in or about 1704, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1725; M.A. 1729). On his father's death he succeeded to the family estate, near Outwell, Norfolk, worth about £1500 a-year. He was especially conversant on the subject of ancient coins, and published proposals for a work to be entitled 'Tabulæ Augustæ,' &c., and to consist of a chronological account of the Roman emperors, drawn from historical coins and monuments. Mr. Bell had made considerable progress with this work, when he was overtaken by death in Aug., 1745. His collections of church notes were, with his other MSS. and printed books, bequeathed to Trinity College, Cambridge. Mr. Bell's corrected copy of 'Dugdale's Warwickshire' was used by Mr. Charles Cole in preparing the new edition of that work; and many of his letters are printed in Nichols's 'Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica.'

BELL, BENJAMIN, an eminent surgeon, born at Dumfries 1749, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1770 he visited Paris and London, remaining in each capital several months, in order to improve himself in surgery. In 1772 he returned to Edinburgh, where he established a very extensive practice. Died 4 April, 1806. He published several works relating to his profession, the best known of them being 'A System of Surgery,' which went through seven editions. He likewise wrote 'Essays on agriculture, with a plan for the speedy and general improvement of Land in Great Britain,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1802.

BELL, Sir CHARLES, a celebrated anatomist, brother of John, mentioned below, was born at Edinburgh 1774, and educated in the High School there. He afterwards studied under his brother, and became a very skilful anatomist. In 1804 he removed to London, and in 1811 became connected with the Hunterian school in Windmill Street. He was appointed in 1814 surgeon to the Middlesex Hospital, an institution which he subsequently raised to the highest repute, and which he justly boasts, in 1836, of leaving 'with full wards, and £120,000 in the Funds.' In 1824 the London College of Surgeons appointed him to their senior chair of anatomy and surgery, and his lectures were received with great applause. On the accession of William IV. he received the honour of knighthood. In 1836 he removed to Edinburgh, where he fulfilled all the anticipations formed respecting the conduct of his class. He ded at Hallow, Worcestershire, 27 May, 1842. He was author of a well-known treatise on the 'Nervous System'; 'Animal Mechanics'; the Bridge-water Treatise on 'The Hand'; 'Illustrations of Paley's Natural Theology'; and 'Anatomy of Expression.' Bell was the first who discovered that the nerves were naturally distinguished among themselves, and clearly classified; and that the senses of sense (whether peculiar or general) and those of motion were totally distinct in their character and origin. He indeed laid bare, for the first time, the great fact of a distinction existing in the nature and quality of the nervous energy, which before his discourses had been all huddled together under one interpretation.—*Nat. BELL, GEORGE JOSEPH, an eminent Scotch legal writer, was born 26 March, 1770, at Fountainbridge, near Edinburgh, in which city he received his education. Having resolved to adopt the legal profession he was admitted an advocate 1791, and in 1822 was chosen professor of Scots law in the university of Edinburgh. He was appointed one of the principal clerks of session 1831, and died 23 Sept., 1843. His works are 'A Treatise on the Laws of Bankruptcy in Scotland,' 2 vols.; 'Examination of the Objections stated against the Bill for better regulating the Forms of Process in the Courts of Scotland,' 1825; 'Principles of the Law of Scotland'; 'Illustrations, from adjudged cases, of the Principles of the Law of Scotland,' 3 vols.; and 'Commentaries on the recent Statutes relative to Diligence or Execution against the moveable Estate, Imprisonment, Causa Bonorum, and Sequestration in Mercantile Bankruptcy.'

BELL, HENRY, an ingenious mechanic, well known for his successful application of steam-power to the propulsion of ships, was born at Tophichen, in Linlithgowshire, 7 April, 1767. Having received the ordinary education of a parish school he was apprenticed to his uncle, a millwright; and after qualifying himself as a ship-modeller at Borrowstounness, went to London, where he found employment under Rennie, the celebrated engineer. It was not until Jan., 1812, that he gave a practical solution of the difficulties which had beset all previous experimenters in producing a steamboat called the 'Comet,' of about twenty-five tons, propelled by an engine of three-horse power, at a speed of seven miles an hour. Although the honour of priority, by about four years, is admitted to belong to Robert Fulton, an American engineer, it appears to admit of no doubt that Fulton had received very material assistance in the construction of his vessel from Bell and others in this country. The latter days of this ingenious man were rendered comfortable by a handsome sum subscribed for him among the citizens of Glasgow, and he also received from the trustees of the river Clyde a pension of £200 a-year. He died at Helensburgh 14 Nov., 1830.—Encycl. Brit.

BELL, JAMES, a native of Warrington, Lancashire, was brought up at Oxford, and made priest to Queen Mary's days. He afterwards conformed to Protestantism, and officiated for many years as a minister of the establishment. In 1581, however, he returned to the Catholic church, and increased his priestly functions, for which he was executed at Lancaster 20 April, 1584, being then 65 years of age.

1801. He published a work on a case of 'Retraction of the Uterus, terminating in Abortion and Death.'

BELL, JAMES, a geographical writer, son of the Rev. Thomas Bell, mentioned below, was born at Jedburgh 1769, and died at Lukeston, near Campsie, 3 May, 1833. He published 'Critical Researches in Geography'; an elegant edition of Rollin's Ancient History; 'A System of Popular and Scientific Geography,' 6 vols.; and a Gazetteer of England and Wales. The last-mentioned work was in course of publication at the time of the author's decease.

BELL, JOHN, an English prelate, was a native of Worcestershire and received his education at Balliol College, Oxford, and at Cambridge, where he proceeded LL.B. 1504. Henry VIII. employed him in the matter of the divorce, on which business he went abroad and took the degree of LL.D. in some foreign university. In 1539 he was raised to the bishopric of Worcester, which he resigned 1543, and retiring into private life took up his abode at Clerkenwell, where he died 11 Aug., 1556.

BELL, JOHN, of Antermony, celebrated Scotch traveller, was born at Campsie, Stirlingshire, 1691, and became a physician in his 23rd year. In 1714 he went to St. Petersburg, and was appointed medical attendant upon Valensky, the person chosen to go to the Persian court as Russian ambassador. The expedition left the Russian capital 15 July, 1715, and returned thither 30 Dec., 1718. Bell also accompanied the embassy sent by Peter the Great to China in 1719; and in 1722 he accompanied the Czar and his empress with the army to Derbent, a celebrated pass between the foot of the Caucasus and the Caspian sea. In 1737 he undertook a mission to Constantinople, whence he returned to St. Petersburg in the following year. After this he appears to have settled for some years as a merchant at Constantinople. About 1746 he married a Russian lady named Mary Peters, and in 1747 returned to his native country. The remainder of his life was spent on his estate of Antermony, where he died 1 July, 1780. His 'Travels from St. Petersburg, in Russia, to various parts of Asia,' 4to., 3 vols., Glasgow, 1763, was a very popular work, and passed through several editions. It was also translated into French.

BELL, JOHN, a lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, was born at Carlisle 1 March, 1747, and died at Queensborough 1 June, 1798. Among his inventions are the 'gun proof,' and a gyn, known as 'Bell's gyn.'

BELL, JOHN, an eminent surgeon of Edinburgh, published several valuable works, the principal of which are 'The Anatomy of the Human Body,' 3 vols. 8vo.; 'Engravings of the Bones, Muscles, and Joints'; 'Engravings of the Arteries'; 'Discourses on the Nature and Cure of Wounds'; 'Principles of Surgery,' 3 vols. 4to.; and 'Letters on Professional Character and Manners.' Born 1762; died at Rome 15 April, 1820.

BELL, JOHN, an eminent bookseller and publisher, who for many years carried on business in the Strand, London, was born 1746, and died at Fulham 26 Feb., 1831. By his industry and good taste he contributed greatly to the improvement of the typographic art—witness his beautiful editions of the 'British Poets,' and 'Shakspeare.' He was one of the original proprietors of the 'Morning Post' and the projector of 'Bell's

BELL, JOHN, an eminent equity lawyer, was a native of Cumberland, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was made a Q.C. in 1816, and died 6 Feb., 1836.

BELL, JOHN, a diligent antiquary and one of the founders of the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, was born in that town in 1782, and died there 30 Oct., 1864. Some of his MSS. are in the British Museum.

BELL, JONATHAN A., architect, died at Edinburgh 28 Feb., 1865.

BELL, LADY MARIA, an amateur artist, wife of Sir Thomas Bell, sheriff of London, and sister of J. Hamilton, R.A., died in 1825.

BELL, SIR ROBERT, an English judge, studied at Cambridge, and then proceeding to the Middle Temple, was called to the bar. He greatly distinguished himself in his profession, received the honour of knighthood, and on 24 Jan., 1576-7, was appointed chief baron of the exchequer. In July, 1577, being judge of assize for the county of Oxford, he presided at the trial of Rowland Jenkes for having uttered scandal about Queen Elizabeth. A fearful and fatal malady arose from the stench of the prisoners, and the chief baron was amongst the numerous victims who lost their lives at what was commonly called the 'Black Assize.'

BELL, SIR THOMAS, M.D., a celebrated physician of Dublin, died in that city 2 Dec., 1780.

BELL, THOMAS, a Scotch divine, was born at Moffat 24 Dec., 1733, and after studying in the university was licensed as a preacher by the presbytery of Relief. In 1767 he became the minister of the Relief congregation at Jedburgh, and ten years afterwards obtained the pastoral charge of a congregation in the Relief Communion in Glasgow, where he died 15 Oct., 1802. He published the 'Standard of the Spirit lifted up against the Enemy coming in like a Flood,' 1780; 'A Proof of the true and eternal Godhead of the Lord Jesus Christ,' 1785, a translation from the Dutch; 'On the Controversies agitated in Great Britain under the unhappy names of Antinomians and Neonomians,' a translation from the Latin. The latter work was published after Mr. Bell's death, together with his 'Sermons,' and 'A View of the Covenants of Works and Grace.'

BELL, THOMAS, of Barnwell, in Northamptonshire, died 30 Jan., 1862. He was author of 'The Ruins of Liveden; with historical notes of the family of Tresham, and its connection with the Gunpowder Plot, &c. To which is added a Legendary Poem,' 4to., London, 1847; and 'The Rural Album, containing Descriptive and Miscellaneous Poems, with Historical Notices of Barnwell and Fotheringhay Castles,' 8vo., London, 1853.

BELL, WILLIAM, D.D., a divine, was born in London 4 Feb., 1625, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, from which, however, he was ejected in 1648. At the Restoration he became chaplain in the Tower of London, and in 1667 was appointed archdeacon of St. Alban's. Died 19 July, 1683. He published some occasional sermons.

which society he became fellow, and proceeded there to the degree of D.D. after having obtained several academical prizes, particularly one in 1756 for a dissertation on the causes which principally contribute to render a nation populous. This was published the same year, and gained for the author considerable applause. Dr. Bell was domestic chaplain and secretary to the princess Amelia, daughter of George II., and in virtue of that connection obtained a prebendal stall in Westminster abbey, which he held to his death, 29 Sept., 1816, aged 85. Before his demise he transferred £15,200, in the three per cents., to the university of Cambridge, in trust for eight scholarships for the orphan sons of poor clergymen. His other charities were also considerable. Besides the tract already mentioned, he was the author of 'An Inquiry into the divine Missions of John Baptist and Jesus Christ,' 8vo., 1760, 1795; 'A Sermon at the consecration of Dr. Thomas, bishop of Rochester,' 1774; 'An Attempt to ascertain and illustrate the Authority, Nature, and Design of the Lord's Supper,' 8vo. Of this volume, which was answered by bishop Bagot, he published an abridgment. The doctrine maintained in both is that of Hoadly. Dr. Bell published the last sentiments of Father Courayer; and his own sermons were edited by the Rev. Mr. Allen.

BELLA, STEPHEN DE LA, an Italian engraver, born at Florence 1610; died 12 July, 1664.

BELLAMONT, HENRY BARD, VISCOUNT, son of George Bard, vicar of Staines, Middlesex, was educated at Eton School, whence in 1631 he proceeded to King's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. He then travelled over a great part of Europe, and through Turkey, Palestine, Arabia, and Egypt, sending over a full account of his travels to Dr. Charles Mason, his intimate friend and contemporary in the university. On his return to England he was well received at the court. He attached himself to the royalist cause, and exhibited much bravery during the civil war. The queen procured for him a colonel's commission, and he was afterwards appointed governor of Campden House in Gloucestershire, which he reduced to ashes when it became no longer tenable. He was likewise for some time governor of Worcester. On 22 Nov., 1643, he received the honour of knighthood, and soon afterwards was created a baronet. Finally, on 8 July, 1645, he was made Baron Bromley and Viscount Bellamont in the kingdom of Ireland. After this he was taken prisoner, but obtained permission to retire into Flanders. After the execution of Charles I. he was employed by Charles II., then in exile, in an embassy to the king of Persia, who it was hoped would advance some money to Charles on account of the obligations he was under to England in consequence of our merchant vessels having rendered material assistance at Ormuz. But this embassy came to nothing, Lord Bellamont being lost in a hurricane of sand on his journey through the deserts of Arabia. He had been for several years a member of the Catholic church. After the Restoration Lord Bellamont's widow was obliged to seek for relief at King's College, Cambridge, where her husband had been fellow.

BELLAMONT, RICHARD COOTE, EARL OF, was returned to parliament for Droitwich 1688, and represented that town in several succeeding parliaments, being then Lord Coloony. In 1689 he was appointed in the parliament held at Dublin by James II. He was a firm adherent of King William, who advanced him to the dignity of earl of Bellmont in the kingdom of Ireland. At the beginning of 1695 he was appointed governor of New York, in which capacity he rendered signal service to the colonists. He was very zealous in his efforts to put down piracy, but unfortunate in his selection of the notorious Captain Kidd for the undertaking. The earl died at New York 5 March, 1700, and as soon as his death was known at Boston, where the general assembly was then sitting, a proclamation was published by the deputy-governor and council, at the unanimous request of the assembly, for a general fast to be observed throughout the province to bewail the loss of such a governor as a public calamity, so widely were his virtues known and esteemed.

BELLAMY, GEORGE ANNE, an English actress, was born 23 April, 1733, and died at Edinburgh 15 Feb., 1788. An 'Apology for her Life,' ostensibly written by herself, was published in 1785 by the real author, who is said to have been Alexander Bicknell.

BELLAMY, JAMES, a celebrated Dutch writer, born at Flushing 1757; died 11 March, 1786. His 'Vaderlandsche gedichten' (patriotic songs) were received by his countrymen with universal approbation.

BELLAMY, JOSEPH, D.D., an American divine, author of 'True Religion delineated,' was born 1710, and died 6 March, 1790.

BELLAMY, THOMAS, an English miscellaneous writer, was born in 1745 at Kingston, in Surrey, and educated for trade. After serving an apprenticeship to a hosier in Newgate Street, London, he established a considerable business for himself, which he carried on successfully, until he began to pay rather too much attention to literary pursuits. After keeping shop for twenty years, he was obliged finally to relinquish his trade. He became afterwards the projector of the 'Monthly Mirror,' a periodical publication principally devoted to the business of the stage, and which was carried on by him for some years with spirit and success. He published also 'Sadaski; or, the wandering penitent,' 2 vols. 12mo., a novel in Dr. Hawkesworth's manner, and possessing considerable merit. For the stage he wrote 'The Friends; or, the benevolent Planters,' 1789, a sensual interlude; and for young people 'Lessons from Life; or, Home Scenes.' On the death of his mother he became possessed of some property, and was in the quiet pursuit of his literary schemes when a short but severe illness carried him off, 29 Aug., 1800.

BELLARMIN, ROBERT, a learned cardinal, one of the greatest polemical divines of the Church of Rome, was born at Monte Pulciano, in Tuscany, 4 Oct., 1542. In 1560 he entered the Order of Jesus, and after having preached and taught in the Low Countries he returned to Rome 1576, and was employed by Gregory XIII. to teach controversy against the Protestants in the new college which the pope had founded. Bellarmine acquitted himself with so much success, that when Sixtus V. sent a legate into France, 1590, he was appointed theologian to the legation, and on his return to Rome held several offices in his order, and at the pope's court. At length Clement VIII. made him cardinal, 1599, and gave him the archbishopric of Capua 1601, which he afterwards resigned, because Paul V. wished him to remain at Rome, where he died 17 Sept., 1621. His controversial works fill three large folio volumes. No Jesuit was ever more reputed in his order than cardinal Bellarmine, and no author ever defended more ably the cause of the Catholic Church and the pope. Of this the Protestant writers were so sensible that for a century or more there was no divine of any reputation among them who did not select Bellarmine's books for the subjects of his controversies. Indeed he has been attacked and defended by so many writers, that a catalogue has been drawn up of both parties.

BELLATI, ANTHONY FRANCIS, an Italian Jesuit, born at Ferrara 1665; died 1742. A complete collection of his works, which are all on religious and moral subjects, was published at Ferrara, in 4 vols., 1744-48.

BELLAY, GUILLAUME DU, a French general, whom Francis I. sent into Piedmont in the quality of viceroy. He wrote 'Memoirs; a 'Treatise on the Military Art; 'Epitome of the History of the Gauls;' and other works. Born 1491; died 9 Jan., 1543.

BELLAY, JEAN DU, a cardinal, brother of Guillaume du Bellay, mentioned above, was born 1492. He was intrusted with many very important employments and negotiations by Francis I. Budæus was his intimate friend, and they jointly prevailed on Francis I. to found the Royal College. Du Bellay being appointed archbishop of Paris, 1532, and the affair of Henry VIII., king of England, the following year, giving reason to apprehend a schism, he was sent to England, and persuaded the king to an accommodation. He went directly to Rome to acquaint the pope with this circumstance, obtained from him a delay, and sent a courier to Henry VIII. for the procurations which that prince had promised; but the messenger being hindered from returning on the day appointed, Clement VII., solicited by the agents of Charles V., excommunicated Henry, and laid his kingdom under an interdict, notwithstanding the protestations of du Bellay, who affirmed that the courier would shortly arrive, which he did two days afterwards, with the procurations. It was of course too late then to prevent the schism after such public proceedings. Du Bellay was made a cardinal, 1535; bishop of Limoges, 1541; archbishop of Bourdeaux, 1544; and bishop of Mans, 1546; but being deprived of his rank and credit after the death of Francis I., 1547, he retired to Rome, and there died, 16 Feb., 1560, aged 68. Some poems of his remain, and other works in Latin.

BELLAY, JOACHIM DU, a nephew of the cardinal, became canon of Paris, and died 1 Jan., 1560, aged 35. He wrote poems in Latin and French which were at one time highly esteemed.

BELLAY, MARTIN DU, brother of the cardinal, died 1559, after having signalized himself in the army and in embassies. He wrote some 'Memoires,' which are printed with those of his brother William.

BELLE, ALEXIS SIMON, a French portrait painter, born 1674; died 1734.

BELLE, CLEMENT LOUIS MARIE ANNE, an historical painter, son of the preceding, was born at Paris 16 Nov., 1722, and died 29 Sept., 1806.

BELLEAU, REMI, a French poet, born at Nogent-le-Rotrou, 1528; died at Paris 6 March, 1577. His most curious production is a macaronic poem entitled 'Dictamen metricum de Bello Huguenotico.'

BELLECOUR, GILLES DE, a French comic actor, whose real name was Colson, was born 1725, and died 19 Nov., 1778.

BELLEFONT, BERNARDIN GIGAULT, marquis de, a marshal of France, commanded the army sent to Holland, 1673, and that sent to Catalonia, 1684. He had previously been ambassador at Madrid and London. Died 1699.

BELLEFOREST, FRANÇOIS DE, a French historian, was born at Sarzani, in Guienne, of poor parentage, in November, 1530. The queen of Navarre, sister to Francis I., contributed to his education at Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Paris, where he studied the law. He chiefly lived, however, by writing, or rather compiling, books. The chief of these are, a History of the nine Charleses of France; a Universal History; a Cosmography; and the Annals of France. He died at Paris 1 Jan., 1583.

BELLEGARDE, GABRIEL DU PAC DE, a French writer and ecclesiastic, born 17 Oct., 1717; died at Utrecht 13 Dec., 1789. For two years he held a canonry in the cathedral of Lyons, but his attachment to the Port Royalists rendering improbable his further promotion in the church, he retired to the seminary of Rhynswik, near Utrecht. Here he collected 'Memoirs relating to the History of the Bull Unigenitus in the Low Countries,' 4 vols. 12mo., 1755. He also composed a 'History of the Church of Utrecht,' and superintended an edition of the works of Arnauld, in 45 volumes.

BELLEGARDE, JEAN BAPTISTE MORVAN DE, who is known by a multitude of translations and other works, was born in the diocese of Nantes 1648, and is said to have quitted the Jesuits on account of his attachment to Cartesianism. He died in the community of St. Francis de Sales 26 April, 1734. His 'Reflections on Ridicule,' and 'Models of Conversation,' have been translated into English.

BELLE-ISLE, CHARLES LOUIS AUGUSTE FOUQUET, comte de, a marshal of France, born at Villefranche, in Rouergue, 22 Sept., 1684. Cardinal de Fleury made him governor of Metz, 1733, and in the following year gave him the command of the forces in Germany. In 1741 he was appointed marshal of France, and procured the duke of Bavaria to be elected emperor, to support which election he commanded an army in Germany, whose rapid progress was followed by great misfortunes. Shut up in Prague by Prince Lobkowitz, the count de Belle-isle found that he must either perish through want or escape from a force much superior to his own. Accordingly, on the night between the 16th and 17th Dec., 1742, he deceived Prince Lobkowitz, gained 24 hours' march upon him with 11,000 foot and 2500 horse, and arrived at Eger, 92 miles from Prague, on Dec. 26, without having been attacked, or suffering any further loss than that of 800 soldiers who perished on the road through cold. The garrison of Prague capitulated the same day. The count then compelled the king of Sardinia, who had penetrated into Provence, to repass the Var. As a reward for these services he was created a peer of France, 1748. He had been duke of Gisors since 1742, and his interest kept increasing till he became prime minister in 1757. The troubles of France lessened by degrees under his administration. Died 26 Jan., 1761.

BELLE-ISLE, NICOLAS FOUQUET, marquis de, a

BELLENGER.

French statesman, born 1615. In 1633 he was constituted superintendent of the finances. Being charged with misappropriating the public money he was brought to trial, and sentenced to perpetual banishment. The king, however, changed the punishment, and he was confined, 1664, in the castle of Figuerol, where he died 23 March, 1680.

BELLENDEN, or BALLANDEN, JOHN, D.D., a Scotch poet and translator of the sixteenth century, was born, it is conjectured, in Haddingtonshire, or Berwickshire. His studies were commenced at St. Andrew's, and completed at Paris, where he took holy orders, and was created a doctor of the Sorbonne. On returning to his native country he became a great favourite with James V., himself a poet. He was appointed clerk of the accounts, and obtained the archdeaconry of Moray and the canonry of Ross. Being zealous in defence of the old religion, and finding all efforts ineffectual to check the progress of the Reformation, he retired to Rome, where he died 1550. His translation of Hector Boethius appeared first at Edinburgh in 1536 with this title—'The History and Chronicles of Scotland compilat and newly correctit and amendit be the reverend and noble clerk Mr. Hector Boeis, chanon of Aberdene, translated lately be Mr. John Belleden, archdene of Murray, and chanon of Rosse, at command of James the Fyfte, king of Scottis, imprintat at Edinbugh be Thomas Davidson, dwelling forens the Fryere-Wynde,' folio. Another edition came out at Edinburgh in 1541, and a reprint, under the supervision of Mr. Maitland, appeared at Edinburgh, 3 vols. 4to., 1821. Introduced into the work are two poems by Dr. Belleden—'The Proheme of the Cosmographie,' and 'The Proheme of the History.' Belleden's translation of the first five books of Livy was printed in 1822 under the editorship of Mr. Maitland.

BELLENDEN, SIR JOHN, of Auchinold, a Scotch lawyer, was appointed a lord of session 1547, and died before April, 1577. He has often been confounded with John Belleden, D.D.

BELLENDEN, or BELLENDENUS, WILLIAM, a native of Scotland, was born in the sixteenth century, and educated at Paris, where he obtained a professorship in 1602. It is said that he was master of requests to James VI., who certainly had a great esteem for him, which Belleden returned by dedicating, first to Henry, prince of Wales, and afterwards to Prince Charles, his two works, 'Ciceronis princeps,' and 'Ciceronis consul;' both exhibiting, in passages selected from Cicero the duties of a prince and the rules of government. But what rendered these works most valuable were two pieces, one entitled 'Tractatus de processu et scriptoribus rei politicæ;' the other, 'Liber de statu prisici Orbis.' These appeared first in 1608, and again in 1612, and 1616. Dr. Samuel Parr republished them in 1787, with a very remarkable preface.

BELLENDEN, WILLIAM, a Scotch Catholic divine, was appointed prefect of the Scotch mission 1652-3, and dying 2 Sept., 1661, was buried in the cathedral of Elgin.

BELLENGER, FRANÇOIS, doctor of the Sorbonne, died at Paris 12 April, 1749, aged 61. He published French translations of Dionysius of Halicarnassus, of Rowe's continuation of Plutarch; an edition of the Psalms with an excellent preface and notes, and a critical essay on the works of Redin, &c. He also left in MS. a French version of Herodotus.

BELLET, CHARLES, a French priest, author of several religious works, was born at Quercy 1702, and died at Paris 20 Nov., 1771.

BELLEVOIS, a painter of sea pieces, died 1684.
BELLEW, RICHARD, an Irishman, and a native, is believed, of the county of Louth, studied the common law in Lincoln's Inn, and published 'Les Ans du Roy Richard le second collect ensemble hors de les Abridgments de Statham, Fitz-Herbert et Brook,' Iamo., Lond., 1585; and a book commonly known as 'Brook's New Cases,' under the following title:—'Astuns Novell Cases de les Ans et Temps le Roy Henry VIII., Edward VI., et la Reyne Marie, escrie ex la grand Abridgment compose per Sir Robert Brook, Chevalier, &c., la disperse en les Titules, mes icy Collecte sub Ans,' Lond., 1587.

BELLI, PAUL, a Jesuit, born 1588, at Messina, where he died 15 Jan., 1658. He composed, in Latin, a history of the Passion, and left a collection of one thousand eulogies of the Blessed Virgin.

BELLIARD, AUGUSTIN DANIEL, a distinguished French general and diplomatist, was born at Fontaine-Comte, in Poitou, 25 May, 1769, and died 30 Jan., 1832, at Brussels, where he was ambassador. His 'Memoires' were collected and edited by M. Vinet, one of his aides-de-camp.

BELLIEVRE, POMPONE DE, chancellor of France, was born at Lyons, 1629, and studied at Toulouse and Padua. He was appointed counsellor to the senate of Chambery, then superintendent of the finances, and president of the parliament of Paris, 1770. He rendered important services to the state in his embassies, and the various offices he was employed in under Charles IX., Henry III., and Henry IV. The last-named monarch sent him as ambassador to England, and in 1599 constituted him chancellor of France. Died 7 Sept., 1607.

BELLIN, JACQUES NICOLAS, a writer on marine geography, born at Paris 1703; died 21 Nov., 1772.

BELLINGER, FRANCIS, an English medical writer, was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and was admitted a licentiate of the College of Physicians 1708. For a time he practised at Stamford, but eventually removed to London, and died Sept., 1721. He was author of 'A Discourse concerning the Nutrition of the Fœtus in the Womb,' 8vo., London, 1717.

BELLINGHAM, RICHARD, governor of Massachusetts, was born in England about 1592, and died 7 Dec., 1672.

BELLINI, JACOPO, a Venetian painter, died 1470.

BELLINI, GENTILE, a Venetian painter, born 1421, died 1501. The sultan Mahomet II., having seen some of Gentile's paintings, was so charmed with them, that he wrote to the republic of Venice, entreating that the artist might be sent to him. Bellini went to Constantinople, and painted several beautiful pictures for the sultan, among them a decollation of St. John the Baptist. Mahomet admired the disposition and colouring of this work, but thought the neck was too long and too thick; and to prove that this was a real fault, sent for a slave, and ordered him to be beheaded in the presence of the artist, whom he desired to remark that the neck shrank very much when separated from the head. The painter was seized with the utmost terror at the sight of this horrid object, and had not a moment's rest until he obtained permission to return to his native country.

BELLOT.

BELLINI, JOHN, a Venetian painter, brother of Gentile, whom he surpassed in every branch of the art, died 1512, aged 90.

BELLINI, LAURENCE, an Italian physician and medical writer, was born at Florence, 1643, became professor at Pisa, and died 8 Jan., 1703.

BELLINI, VINCENT, a celebrated musical composer, born at Catania, in Sicily, 1802; died at Puteaux, near Paris, 23 Sept., 1835. His father and grandfather were both musical men; the former was a chapel-master. Bellini studied in the conservatory at Naples, and was a pupil of Zingarelli. His talent developed itself at a very early period, and before he had attained his twentieth year he had written the successful opera of 'Bianca e Fernando,' which was produced at the San Carlos, and at once created his reputation. Within the following year he brought out 'Il Pirata,' at the Scala at Milan, and from this period established a style peculiarly his own, and became the idol of the Milanese. This opera was succeeded by the 'Straniera,' at the same theatre. The opera of 'Zaira' followed next, and was first represented at Parma. His succeeding works were 'La Sonnambula,' for Naples; 'I Capuletti e Montecchi,' for Venice; 'Norma,' for Milan; 'Beatrice Tenda,' for Venice; and 'I Puritani,' for the Italian Opera at Paris.

BELLMAN, CHARLES MICHAEL, a Swedish poet, born 1741, died 1796.

BELLOCQ, PIERRE, a satirical poet, born at Paris, 1645; died 4 Oct., 1704. He was the friend of Molière and Racine.

BELLONI, JEROME, a celebrated banker of Rome, author of a 'Dissertation on Commerce,' died 1761.

BELLORI, JOHN PETER, an antiquarian writer, born at Rome, 1615. Queen Christina of Sweden appointed him her librarian and keeper of her museum, and Clement X. conferred upon him the title of Roman Antiquary. Died 1696.

BELLOSTE, AUGUSTIN, a French army surgeon, author of 'Le Chirurgien d'hôpital,' was born at Paris, 1654, and died 15 July, 1730.

BELLOT, HUGH, D.D., an English prelate, son of Thomas Bellot, Esq., of Great Moreton, Cheshire, was born in or about 1542, and educated at Cambridge. In 1585 he was made bishop of Bangor, and in 1595 was translated to Chester. Died 13 June, 1596. Dr. Bellot assisted Dr. William Morgan in translating the Bible into Welsh. He was a great persecutor of the Catholics.

BELLOTT, JOSEPH RÉNÉ, was born at Paris 18 March, 1826, and at the age of fifteen was admitted to the Naval School, which he left with a high reputation in 1843. He then entered upon active service, and passed several years upon the African and South American coasts, being on 1 Nov., 1847, promoted to the rank of enseigne de vaisseau, a grade answering to that of lieutenant in the army. In May, 1851, he obtained from the minister of marine permission to join the expedition then preparing to set out in search of Sir John Franklin, and he accordingly sailed in the 'Prince Albert,' sent out by Lady Franklin, and commanded by Mr. Kennedy. During that voyage he made various discoveries, which are shown in a map published by Mr. Arrowsmith. At a time when the commander and other officers were on shore at Port Leopold, the ship was drifted away, and M. Bellot took the command. After having been carried a considerable way to the southward, he steered to Batty Bay, on the west side of North Somerset, and proceeding on foot, regained his companions very far to the north, and brought them back to the ship, which passed the winter safely in Batty Bay. He afterwards accompanied his gallant commander in an excursion on foot. He was of small stature, but he dragged his own sledge, and accomplished a very difficult and arduous journey of at least 1100 miles over the ice, making in his way a great geographical discovery, to which his name was given, and which will remain for ever on the map of the world. 'Bellot's Strait' is attached to the narrow arm of the sea which separates the land of Somerset from Boothia Felix, the whole of that land having been previously supposed to form one continent. In 1852 M. Bellot was advanced to the rank of lieutenant. When Lady Franklin again fitted out a vessel under the same commander, Mr. Kennedy, young Bellot volunteered to accompany him a second time. Mr. Kennedy felt so much the superiority of Lieutenant Bellot that he would have been content to serve under him. Just at this period, however, the expedition of Captain Inglefield was resolved upon by the Admiralty, and Lieut. Bellot obtained permission to accompany it as a volunteer, hoping that he might thereby achieve something so decisive that when he returned to France he would be able to impress upon the French government the great advantage of sending out an expedition much further to the north than any that had yet been attempted. In point of assiduity Lieut. Bellot was an example to all on board the 'Phoenix.' Late and early he was at his duty. The dip of the needle occupied his attention by day: the night was devoted to scientific observations. At the time of his death Captain Inglefield had left the ship to endeavour to open a communication with Sir Edward Belcher, by a journey across the ice. Captain Pullen, returning in Captain Inglefield's absence, was desirous to make a further communication to him. Lieut. Bellot volunteered for this service, and left the ship with four British sailors, a sledge, and an India-rubber canoe. Very shortly after his quitting the ship a fatal storm arose, which destroyed the 'Breadalbane,' the consort of the 'Phoenix.' The same gale severed from the shore the ice upon which Lieut. Bellot was then travelling. He immediately sent two of the four men in the canoe to the land, but he was drifted rapidly away with the remaining two. When he observed the full extent of the danger, and hope was almost extinguished, he expressed his joy that the other two sailors were safe, and that he was with the two who were exposed to such imminent peril. The snow descending rapidly, he taught them the way to shelter themselves by accumulating it somewhat in the shape of a hut. Whilst they were thus protected he went twice to ascertain in what direction the floe was drifting. A third time he went forth, and returned no more. A violent gust of wind had carried him into a deep crack in the ice, and thus he perished by drowning, 18 Aug., 1853. The news of his untimely fate was received with the strongest expressions of regret and admiration both in France and England, and an obelisk to his memory was erected by public subscription in front of Greenwich Hospital, where he had embarked on board the 'Phoenix,' and bade his friends his last farewell. M. Lemer published Bellot's 'Journal d'un voyage aux mers

BELLOTTI, PETER, an Italian painter, born 1625; died 1700.

BELLOY, PIERRE LAURENT BUIRETTE DE, a French dramatist, born at St. Flour, 17 Nov., 1727; died 5 March, 1775. His tragedies were brought out in the following order, 'Titus,' 1758; 'Zelmire,' 1760; 'Le Siège de Calais,' 1765; 'Gaston et Bayard;' 'Gabrielle de Vergy;' and 'Pierre le Cruel.'

BELLUCCI, ANTHONY, an Italian painter. Born 1654; died 1726.

BELMEIS, JOHN, commonly called Joannes Eboracensis, an English divine of the twelfth century. After studying in various universities, he was made canon and treasurer of York, which church he quitted and went to Rome, where he obtained the bishopric of Poitou in 1159. After filling that see above twenty years, he was preferred to the archbishopric of Lyons, which he held eleven years. He lived to be 90.

BELMEIS, or BEAUMES, RICHARD DE, bishop of London, in the reign of Henry I., which see he owed to the patronage of Roger Montgomery, earl of Shropshire. On his consecration in 1108, he was appointed warden of the marches between England and Wales, and lieutenant of the county of Salop. He expended the entire revenues of his bishopric on St. Paul's Cathedral, and in founding a convent of regular canons near Colchester. He died in 1127. This bishop is said to have written a poetical address to Henry I.

BELMEIS, RICHARD DE, nephew of the preceding, became also bishop of London, in the reign of Stephen. He was famous for his eloquence, and died in 1162. Some writers ascribe to him the black book of the exchequer.

BELOE, WILLIAM, an English divine, was the son of a tradesman at Norwich, where he was born, 1756. He was educated under the Rev. Mr. Raine, of Hartforth, near Richmond, Yorkshire, and afterwards removed to Dr. Parr's school at Stanmore, where he did not continue long, being matriculated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, about 1775. He did not, however, take his first degree till 1779, at which time he was senior member of his college. Soon afterwards he returned to Norwich, where he became assistant to Dr. Parr, then head master of the grammar school of that city. Here Mr. Beloe continued three years, married, and having taken orders, obtained first the curacy, and afterwards the vicarage of Earlsham. Being, however, desirous of moving in a wider sphere, he removed to London. On the establishment of the 'British Critic,' he was appointed one of the editors, which brought him into public notice, and Lord Chancellor Rosslyn gave him the living of Allhallows, London Wall, to which the bishop of Lincoln added a prebend in his cathedral. His next preferment was that of assistant librarian to the British Museum, which situation he lost by having too credulously intrusted an unworthy person with some valuable prints in that depository. Dr. Porteus, bishop of London, gave him the prebend of St. Pancras, in the cathedral of St. Paul, which he held with his other church appointments until his death, on 11 April, 1817. Mr. Beloe was an elegant scholar, an accomplished poet, and a respectable divine. His works are, 'An Ode to his answers; 'The Rape of Helen,' from the Greek; 'Poems and Translations'; 'A Translation of Herodotus,' 4 vols. 8vo.; 'A Translation of Aulus Gellius,' 4 vols.; 'Miscellanies,' 3 vols. 12mo.; 'Translations of the Arabian Nights,' from the French, 4 vols.; 'Joseph,' translated from the French of Bitaulte, 2 vols. 12mo.; 'Anecdotes of Literature,' 6 vols. 8vo.; 'Brief Memoirs of the Leaders of the French Revolution'; 'The Sexagenarian, or Memoirs of a Literary Life,' 2 vols. The last-mentioned work is a curious piece of autobiography, in which Mr. Beloe gives an account of himself and his connections; it was published after his death with additions by an amateur friend.

BELON, PIERRE, a French physician and naturalist, born at Souletiere, a hamlet in the parish of Oise, in the Maine, about 1518. He acquired the friendship of cardinal de Tournon, and the esteem of Henry II. and Charles IX., but was killed near Paris by one of his enemies, in April, 1564. Belon left a volume of Observations, made during his travels in Judæa, Egypt, Arabia, and Greece, folio, 1555; 'A History of Birds'; 'A History of Fishes'; and other curious works on natural history.

BELOT, OCTAVIE, whose maiden name was Gachard, married first a gentleman named Belot, and secondly, the president Durey de Meynières. She composed several works in French, into which language she translated Johnson's 'Rasselas,' and Rameau's 'History of England.'

BELSHAM, THOMAS, a Unitarian divine, born at Bedford 15 April, 1750. He was educated at the Presbyterian academy at Daventry, of which he subsequently became principal tutor and director. From this appointment he retired, 1789, embracing the opinions then strenuously advocated by Dr. Priestley. He next became tutor to an academy at Hackney, and at his suggestion the Unitarian Society for promoting Christian Knowledge and the Practice of Virtue, was founded in 1791. In 1794 he succeeded Dr. Priestley as minister of a congregation at Hackney; and in 1805 became pastor of the congregation in Essex Street, Strand. He died at Hampstead 11 Nov., 1820. There is hardly any branch of theology, or of the scriptures or evidences of revelation, on which Mr. Belsham did not publish his thoughts. Among his numerous publications are two volumes of Discourses Doctrinal and Practical; Discourses on the Evidence of the Christian Religion; Elements of Logic and Mental Philosophy; A Calm Enquiry into the Scripture Doctrine concerning the Person of Christ; and a New Translation and Exposition of the Epistles of St. Paul. He also had a principal share in the preparation of a new version of the New Testament, published 1808 by the Unitarian Society.

BELSHAM, WILLIAM, a political writer and historian, younger brother of the above, was born 1753, and died at Hammersmith, 17 Nov., 1827. He wrote several historical works, all of which were incorporated in his History of Great Britain to the conclusion of the Peace of Amiens in 1802, in 12 vols.

BELSON, JOHN, a Roman Catholic gentleman, was much esteemed on account of his knowledge of history and controversial matters, wherein he communicated his labours to Mr. White, Mr. Austin, Mr. Thomas Blount, Mr. Sergeant, and several other learned writers of his time. He was living 1688. Among other works he left a controversial book concerning tradition, entitled 'Tradidi vobis.'

BELSON, THOMAS, an English gentleman of fortune, who, refusing to acknowledge the spiritual supremacy of Queen Elizabeth, was hanged, drawn, and quartered 5 July, 1589.

BELSUNCE DE CASTEL MORON, HENRI FRANÇOIS XAVIER DE, a French prelate, was born in Guienne, of a noble family, 4 Dec., 1671, and made bishop of Marsilles 1709. He has gained immortality by his conduct to his flock, in 1720, when Marsilles was visited by the plague, in which calamity he was magistrate, almoner, physician, and priest to his people. For this exemplary conduct, Louis XV. offered him, in 1723, the valuable bishopric of Laon, which he declined, saying that he would not leave a church for which he had devoted his life. Died 4 June, 1755. He wrote, 'L'Histoire des Evêques de Marsilles'; 'Des Instructions pastorales'; and 'La Vie de Mademoiselle des Foix Candale.' He founded a college at Marsilles.

BELZONI, JOHN BAPTIST, a distinguished traveller, was born at Padua about 1778. For a long time he wandered through different countries of Europe, leading the life of a mere adventurer, and in 1803 arrived in England. Subsequently he visited Egypt, where he entered into an engagement with the English consul to transport to Alexandria the colossal bust, erroneously called the Young Memnon, which is now deposited in the British Museum, but which, at that time, was half buried in the sand on the bank of the Nile near Thebes. The success of this enterprise opened to Belzoni a new career, in which his great physical strength, his persevering character, and his marvellous sagacity, gave him extraordinary advantages. He next disinterred the superb temple of Aousambal or Ipsambul, of which only the summit was visible above the sand which had accumulated around it in the course of ages. He next undertook an excursion into the valley of Beban-el-Molouk, or valley of the Tombs of the Kings, situated at the back of the hills in the neighbourhood of Thebes. Here he discovered, in a rock which seemed to have never been opened by the hand of man, a long subterranean passage, the walls of which were covered with sculptures and paintings. This passage led to a hall containing an alabaster sarcophagus. Dr. Young conjectured that it was the tomb of King Sammuthis, but this is doubted by other eminent Egyptologists. Of this interesting monument of antiquity, Mr. Belzoni constructed a perfect model, which was afterwards exhibited in London. On his return to Cairo he undertook another important enterprise. A fellow-countryman of his had examined a subterranean passage under the great pyramid, and Belzoni conceived the possibility of penetrating into the second pyramid, that of Chephren. This undertaking likewise was crowned with success. There is not space in this work for an enumeration of all the expeditions, excavations, and researches by which his sojourn in Egypt was signalled. In 1819 he quitted this scene of his honourable labours, and after a flying visit to his native city, proceeded to London, where he published a 'Narrative of the Operations and recent Discoveries within the Pyramids, Temples, Tombs, and Excavations in Egypt and Nubia,' 8vo., 1820. Being still animated with a passion for travelling, he planned an expedition into the interior of Africa, and at the beginning of the year 1823 arrived at Fez, where he made several unsuccessful attempts to obtain from the emperor of Morocco permission to accompany a caravan which was about to start for Timbuctoo. He was then reduced to the necessity of starting from the coast of Guinea, but being soon afterwards seized with dysentery he returned to Gato, in the kingdom of Benin, where he died 3 Dec., 1823.

BEMBO, PETER, a cardinal, and one of the most celebrated Italian writers, was born at Venice 20 May, 1470. Love inspired him with poetical enthusiasm, and he had three sons and a daughter by a woman who was at once his mistress and his muse. She died 1535. Bembo was chosen by Leo X. for his secretary, and he was created cardinal in 1538 by Paul III., who afterwards gave him the bishopric of Bergamo. Reclaimed from the errors of his youth, he fulfilled with exemplary assiduity every duty of the episcopal office. Died 18 Jan., 1547. His works in Latin and Italian, which are all marked by extreme elegance of style, were printed at Venice 1729, 4 vols. folio. The principal are, 'Rerum Venetarum histor. lib. XII.,' 'Le Prose divise in tre libri, nelle quali si ragiona della volgar lingua,' 'Gli Asolani,' 'Lettere volgari,' 'Epistolæ,' 'Carmina,' 'Le Rime.'

BEMMEL, CHARLES SEBASTIAN, a painter, born at Bamberg 1745; died at Nuremberg 1796. His favourite subjects were landscapes, sea pieces, tempests, fires, and representations of scenery at sunrise and sunset.

BEMMEL, WILLIAM VAN, a landscape painter, born at Utrecht 10 June, 1630; died at Nuremberg 10 Nov., 1708. His son John George (born 1669; died 1723), painted battle pieces.

BENAVIDIUS, MARK, a celebrated lawyer of Padua, was born in that city 25 Nov., 1489, and died 2 April, 1582. He wrote several legal works in Latin. He was known by the name of Mantova, or Marco Mantuano.

BENBOW, JOHN, an English admiral, born at Shrewsbury 1650. He was bred to the sea, and at the age of thirty became master and part owner of the 'Benbow' frigate. When attacked by a Salcee rover, he defended himself bravely with a crew very inferior in number to his assailants, and after the Moors had boarded his vessel, they were driven out of it again with the loss of thirteen men. On his return to England James II. gave him the command of a ship in the royal navy. After the Revolution he rose by pure merit to the first rank in his profession, and in 1702 had the command of the West India squadron, when he fell in with the French fleet under the command of Du Casse. Several of his officers had taken some disgust, and permitted him to sustain, almost alone, the whole fire of the enemy. For four days did this intrepid seaman, assisted by only one ship, pursue and engage the French fleet, while his cowardly officers remained mere spectators of his activity and bravery. In the engagement his leg was shattered by a cannon ball, and he died of his wounds at Jamaica 4 Nov., 1702. Two of his officers, Kirby and Wade, were tried by a court-martial and shot.

BENBOW, JOHN, son of the admiral, was shipwrecked on the coast of Madagascar the same year that his father died. A long residence among the natives so altered his manners that when he returned to his own country his friends found no longer the liveliness and ease which they had previously admired in him, but a melancholy and habitual taciturnity. He died several years afterwards in privacy. He did not write, as was generally supposed, an account of his stay at Madagascar, but the barren journal which he kept was accidentally burnt at his brother's lodgings in 1714.

BENCE, JEAN, a pious and learned doctor of the house and society of the Sorbonne, was born at Rouen. He attached himself to cardinal de Berulle, and was among the first founders of the congregation of the oratory in France. He died at Lyons 24 April, 1642, aged 74. He left a manual, 'Sur les Evangiles,' and 'Sur les Epitres de St. Paul et Canoniques.'

BENCI, or BENCIO, FRANCIS, a learned Italian Jesuit, was born at Acquapendente 1542, and died at Rome 6 May, 1594. An edition of his works was printed at Lyons in 1603.

BENCIUS, or DE BENCIIIS, HUGO, called Hugh of Sienna, from his native place, was professor of medicine at Parma, and afterwards, it is said, at Ferrara. He died at Rome 1438. He wrote commentaries on Hippocrates, Galen, and Avicenna.

BENCIVENNI, JOSEPH, keeper of the gallery at Florence, of which he wrote a description, died in that city 31 July, 1808, aged 77. He also published a Life of Dante; Dialogues of the Dead, &c.

BENDISH, BRIDGET, daughter of General Ireton, and granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell, whom she resembled in behaviour and personal arrogance. After managing her salt works at Southtown, in Suffolk, with all the fatigue of a menial servant, she sometimes spent the evening at the public assembly at Yarmouth, where her princely behaviour and dignified manners gained for her the respect of her neighbours. This remarkable woman, who in public life might have acquired some celebrity by the strong powers of her mind, died in retirement 1727, revering the memory of her grandfather as a hero and a saint.

BENDLOWES, or BENLOWES, EDWARD, an English poet, was born 1613, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He squandered away a handsome fortune in a very indiscreet manner, and died poor at Oxford 18 Dec., 1686. He was treated by the needy poets as the Mecænas of the age, and many books were dedicated to him with the most fulsome compliments. His own publications are numerous, but now forgotten; the principal is entitled 'Theophila; or, Love Sacrifice, a divine poem,' with the author's portrait prefixed, folio, 1624.

BENDLOWES, WILLIAM, an English lawyer, was born in Essex, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. Afterwards he was called to the bar, and represented several Cornish boroughs in parliament. In 1555 he was made a serjeant-at-law. During the latter part of Queen Mary's reign and the earlier part of that of Elizabeth he was the only practising serjeant. It is said that throughout his life he steadily adhered to the Roman Catholic faith. Dying 19 Nov., 1584, he was buried at Great Bardfield, Essex. His 'Reports' were published in 1689. Some Reports by him had been published at the end of Ashe's Tables to the Year Books, &c., and were reprinted with Keilway's 'Reports,' 1688. Other reports of his appeared with certain cases in the times of James I. and Charles I., folio, London, 1661. This latter work is cited as 'New Bendlowes.'

BENEDICT, St., one of the first institutors of the monastic life in the west, was born in the territory of Nursia, in the duchy of Spoleto, 480. He retired into the desert of Subiaco, where he founded twelve monasteries in a short time, and in 529 went to Monte Cassino, destroyed a temple there dedicated to Apollo, and laid the foundation of a celebrated monastery. It was there that St. Benedict composed his rule, which, in the opinion of St. Gregory, is the best written and most complete of all the monastic rules. The Benedictine order soon spread through Europe, and gave many saints and learned men to the church. St. Benedict died at Monte Cassino about 543. His works are in the library of the fathers. St. Gregory has written his life. Festival March 21.

BENEDICT, St., abbat of Aniane, in Languedoc, was born 751, and died 11 Feb., 821. He left a work entitled 'Concordia Regularum,' published in 1638.

BENEDICT I., a Roman, called also Bonus, succeeded Pope John III. 574, and died 25 July, 578. He displayed great zeal and charity when Rome was afflicted by famine and the Lombards.

BENEDICT II., a Roman, succeeded Pope Leo II. 26 June, 684, and died 8 May, 685. He was a pious and learned pontiff, and a diligent student of the Holy Scriptures. Constantine Porphyrogenitus had so high a respect for his virtue that he permitted the clergy to elect the popes without the intervention of the exarchate or the emperor.

BENEDICT III., a Roman, elected Pope, 1 Sept., 855, and consecrated, notwithstanding his resistance, 29 Sept. following. He was mild, humble, pious, and bore with admirable patience the magnitudes offered by the anti-pope, Anastasius, who was driven away by his own partisans. Died 10 March, 858.

BENEDICT IV., a Roman, elected Pope, 900. He was particularly attentive to the poor, and governed with great wisdom. Died 20 Oct., 903.

BENEDICT V., having been elected Pope during the schism of the anti-pope, Leo VIII., was carried to Hamburg by the Emperor Otho, who took Rome, 964. He died at Hamburg, 5 July, 965.

BENEDICT VI., a Roman, elected Pope, 22 Sept., 973. Cardinal Boniface caused him to be strangled in prison, 974, and afterwards placed himself in the papal chair.

BENEDICT VII., bishop of Sutri, succeeded Pope Benedict VI., 975, governed the church wisely, and died 6 July, 984.

BENEDICT VIII., bishop of Porto, was elected Pope, 7 June, 1012. He called in the assistance of the emperor, Henry II., against the anti-pope, Gregory; defeated the Saracens in Italy, and made war with the Greeks in Apulia. When Henry went to be crowned, Benedict changed the form, demanding of him, on the steps of St. Peter's church, 'Wilt thou be faithful in all things to me, and the popes my successors?' It was the opinion of those times that the title of emperor could be conferred by the Pope only. This pontiff died 10 July, 1024, after having held a council at Pavia.

BENEDICT XIII.

BENEDICT IX., named Theophylactus, son of Alberic, earl of Tusculum, succeeded his uncle John XIX., 1033. His youth and ignorance drew him into scandalous vices, which occasioned his being driven from the papal chair, 1044, and raised schisms; but he was reinstated through the interest of the earls of Tusculum, and died 1054. Some writers do not rank him among the Popes.

BENEDICT X., bishop of Velletri, was elected Pope, and opposed Nicholas II., 1058; but he submitted, and died 18 Jan., 1059. Peter Damien and some other writers do not reckon him among the number of the Popes.

BENEDICT XI., St., Nicholas Boccasini, was son of a shepherd, or, according to some, of a scrivener, of Treviso, and was born 1240. He was elected general of the Dominicans 1296, and created cardinal two years afterwards by Boniface VIII., who entrusted him with affairs of importance. At last he was elected Pope, 22 Oct., 1303, and shortly afterwards annulled the bulls of Boniface VIII. against Philip the Fair, and revoked the condemnation of the Colonnas. This pontiff's mother going to his palace in a rich dress, he refused to see or own her, but when she had resumed her old tattered clothes, he acknowledged his parent, and received her with great joy in presence of all the Roman court. Benedict XI. governed the church with great wisdom, and died by poison, at Perugia, 6 July, 1304, leaving Commentaries on part of the Holy Scripture and other works. Festival, July 7.

BENEDICT XII., Jacques de Nouveau, surnamed Fourier, a learned and pious Pope, was born at Saverdun in France, being the son of a miller, or a butcher. He entered the Cistercian order, became doctor of the Sorbonne, abbat of Fond-Froide, bishop of Pamiers, then of Mirepoix, and cardinal 1327. He was then called the White Cardinal, in allusion to his monk's habit. At last he was elected Pope at Avignon, 20 Dec., 1334. He confirmed the censures passed upon Louis of Bavaria, and condemned the Fratricelli. This pontiff was admired for his conduct in the disposal of benefices, always giving the preference to the learned and virtuous. He reformed the religious orders, and published a Constitution upon the State of Departed Souls, 22 Feb., 1336, in which he says, that the souls of the blessed are in paradise after death, before their reunion with the body and the general judgment, and that they see God face to face. He died at Avignon in great reputation for sanctity, 25 April, 1342. Some of his works remain.

BENEDICT XIII., Vincent Mary Orsini, a Pope, illustrious for his birth and piety, born 2 Feb., 1649, being son of Ferdinand Orsini. He took the Dominican habit at Venice 1667, and having finished his studies was made cardinal 1672, archbishop of Manfredonia 1675, of Cesena 1680, of Benevento 1685, and elected Pope 29 May, 1724. This pontiff was mild, humble, charitable, and animated by a spirit of true piety. He discharged all his episcopal duties as a holy bishop, and held frequent synods and councils in the dioceses under his government. His assiduity in prayer, his fasts, abstinence, mortifications, his zeal for sound doctrine and pure morality, with his strict attention to promote the observance of ecclesiastical discipline, edified the whole church. He confirmed the bull 'Unigenitus' in a council held at Rome 1725, and afterwards approved the doctrine of the Thomists on grace and predestination. Died 21 Feb., 1730. His sermons were printed at Florence 1708, folio.

BENEDICT XIV., Prosper Lambertini, was born at Bologna 13 March, 1675. He was appointed canon of St. Peter's, and then successively archbishop of Theodosia and bishop of Ancona. He received the cardinal's hat 1728, was deputy of the congregation of the holy office the same year, became archbishop of Bologna 1731, and succeeded Pope Clement XII. 17 Aug., 1740, when he took the name of Benedict XIV. He zealously endeavoured to calm the dissensions which had arisen in the church, patronised arts and sciences, founded several academies at Rome, and declared openly in favour of the Thomists. This pope did justice to the memory of the celebrated Cardinal Noris, published the bull 'Omnium Sollicitudinum' against the Chinese ceremonies, and addressed a brief to Cardinal Saldanha for the reformation of the Jesuits, which was the foundation of their destruction. He also established a congregation to compose a body of doctrine, by which the troubles of the church might be calmed. This pontiff was a very able canonist, and well acquainted with ecclesiastical history and antiquities. Though he governed with great wisdom, and was very zealous for religion, he was lively in his conversation and fond of saying bons mots. Died 5 May, 1758. His works were published before his death in sixteen folio volumes. The last four contain his briefs, bulls, &c. The first five are 'A Treatise on the Beatification and Canonization of Saints,' 1764, in which the subject is exhausted. The sixth contains the actions of the saints whom he canonized. The next two consist of supplements and remarks on the preceding ones. The ninth treats of the Sacrifice of the Mass, and the tenth on the Festivals instituted in honour of Jesus Christ and the Blessed Virgin. The eleventh is entitled 'Ecclesiastical Institutions,' an excellent work, containing his instructions, mandates, letters, &c., while he held the sees of Ancona and Bologna. The twelfth is a very good 'Treatise on Diocesan Synods.' All the above works are in Latin.

BENEDICT BISCOP, or EPISCOPUS, a famous abbat, born of a noble family in Northumberland, about 629. In his twenty-fifth year he went to Rome and embraced the monastic profession, which at his return he established in Britain. In 665 he obtained the government of the monastery of Canterbury which he resigned two years afterwards and went again to Rome, from whence he brought a large collection of books. Then he visited the court of Egfrid, king of Northumberland, who gave him a tract of land on the east side of the river Wear, where he built a monastery called Wearmouth. In 678 he took a fourth journey to Rome, and returned laden with books, relics, and pictures. In 682 he founded the monastery of Jarrow, near Newcastle, soon after which he visited Rome again, and returned with another supply of books and pictures. He died 12 Jan., 690, and was buried in the monastery of Wearmouth. He wrote rules for the monastic life and some other pieces.

BENEDICT, abbat of Peterborough, was educated at Oxford, and became a monk of Christ Church, Canterbury, of which society he was afterwards elected prior. He wrote the life of St. Thomas of Canterbury with such candour that Henry II. made him abbat of Peterborough. In

BENEVOLI.

1101 he was appointed keeper of the great seal, but did not long enjoy that dignity, dying on Michaelmas day 1193. He wrote the History of Henry II. and Richard I., of which Hearne published an edition in 8vo. 2 vols., Oxford, 1735.

BENEDICT, a Spanish anti-pope, called Peter de Luna, was created cardinal 1375, and elected Pope on the death of Clement VII. 28 Sept., 1394. He took the name of Benedict XIII., and being solicited by the Christian princes, cardinals, and bishops to resign, obstinately refused to do so. Although he was declared a schismatic at the councils of Pisa and Constance, he persisted in his obstinacy. Died 23 May, 1423.

BENEDICT, FATHER, a celebrated Maronite, born at Gusta, in Phœnicia, 1663, of a noble family. When only nine years old he was sent to the Maronite College at Rome, where he made great progress in the oriental languages. On his return to the east he applied himself to preaching the gospel. The Maronites of Antioch sent him back to Rome as a deputy from their church. Cosmo III., grand duke of Tuscany, invited Benedict to his court, hoped many honours and favours upon him, and made him professor of Hebrew at Pisa. He entered among the Jesuits at the age of forty: his amiable temper, integrity, and profound skill in the oriental languages procured him the esteem of all the learned. He died 22 Sept., 1442, at Rome, aged eighty. He published the first volumes of that excellent edition of St. Ephraim which was continued and finished by Assemani.

BENEFIELD, SEBASTIAN, D.D., a divine, born at Presbury, Gloucestershire, 12 Aug., 1559, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1608 he was appointed Margaret professor of divinity, which office he held fourteen years, and then retired to his rectory of Meysay-Hampton, Gloucestershire, where he died 24 Aug., 1630. He published 'Doctrinæ Christianæ sex Capita totidem prælectionibus in schola theologica Oxoniensi pro forma habitis discussa et disceptata,' 1610; 'Prælectiones de perseverantia Sanctorum,' and other theological works.

BENESE, or BENYSE, RICHARD DE, an Augustinian canon of the priory of Merton in Surrey, was installed precentor of Hereford 11 Nov., 1538. After the dissolution of monasteries, he was presented to the rectory of Allhallows, Honey Lane, London, 11 Oct., 1540. In April, 1542, he was admitted to the prebend of Farnendon-cum-Balderton in the church of Lincoln; and at one period he appears to have been parson of Long Ditton, Surrey. Died 1546. He was author of the following work, which was edited by Thomas Paynell, who was also a canon of Merton, and who succeeded Benese in the rectory of Allhallows. 'The Boke of measurynge of Lande, as well of woodlarck as plowland, and pasture in the felde: and to compt the true nombre of Acres of the same. Newly invented and cempyled by Syr Richarde de Benese,' 16mo., London (Tho. Colwell), licensed 1562. There is another edition, the title of which begins, 'This Boke Newly Imprinted sheweth the maner of measurynge of all maner of Lande,' &c., Southwark (J. Nicholson), 16mo.

BENEVOLI, ANTHONY, a surgeon, and medical writer of Florence, celebrated for his skill in treating ruptures and disorders of the eyes. Born 1685; died 7 May, 1750.

BENEVOLI, HORACE, a composer of church music, was born at Rome 1602, and died 17 June, 1672.

BENEZET, ST., an architect, who is supposed to have built the famous bridge at Avignon, died 1184. Festival, April 14.

BENEZET, ANTHONY, a philanthropist, was born at St. Quentin in Picardy, of a Protestant family, 31 Jan., 1713. His parents removed to London in 1715, and thence in 1731 to Philadelphia, where Anthony adopted Quaker principles, and devoted himself to the cause of negro emancipation, on which subject he wrote several works. Died 8 May, 1784.

BENGEL, JOHN ALBERT, a Lutheran theological critic, of the Pietist school, was born at Winnenden in Württemberg, June, 1687, and died 2 Dec., 1752.

BENGER, ELIZABETH OGILVY, an English authoress, born at Wells 1778. After the death of her father, who was a purser in the navy, she and her mother resided in Wiltshire, on the slender provision left by him. At the early age of fifteen she published a poem, which certainly gave promise of future excellence; and early in her literary career she was induced to look towards the stage for both emolument and fame, but was soon disgusted with the delays and disappointments she experienced in that quarter. She now published a poem on the Abolition of the Slave Trade, and two novels, but these latter did not bear her name. Her success, however, was not decided until she embarked in biography, and produced in succession her Memoirs of Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton, Memoirs of John Tobin, and notices of Klopstock and his Friends, prefixed to a translation of their Letters from the German; and finally, rising to the department of history, her Life of Anne Boleyn, and Memoirs of Mary, Queen of Scots, and of the Queen of Bohemia. Died 9 Jan., 1827.

BENI, PAUL, a native of Candia, was born 1552, and became professor of polite literature at Padua, where he died 12 Feb., 1625. He wrote several works in Latin and Italian.

BENIERE, THOMAS, a sculptor, born in England, of French parents, 1603; died in London, 1693.

BENIGNUS, ST., the apostle of Burgundy, is said to have been a disciple of St. Polycarp. He went to France in the reign of Marcus Aurelius, and suffered martyrdom at Dijon.

BENIGNUS, or BEINEN, ST., was a disciple of St. Patrick, by whom he was appointed to the see of Armagh, after that apostle had resigned it. He gave up his bishopric three years before his death, which occurred 9 Nov., 468.

BENINI, VINCENT, a physician and medical writer of Padua, was born 1713, and died 1764.

BENITE, or BENIZZI, ST. PHILIP. See PHILIP.

BENIVIENI, JEROME, an Italian poet, born at Florence about 1453; died 1542. His 'Canzone del Amore celeste e divino' are much esteemed.

BENJAMIN of Tudela, a celebrated Rabbi, was born at Tudela in Navarre, and died 1173. He possessed almost all the synagogues in the world, to gain a thorough knowledge of the manner and customs of the Jews, of which he has given an abridged account, printed at Constantinople, 1543. See. An English translation, by the Rev. B. Gerdes, was published in 1783.

BENN, WILLIAM, a Puritan divine, born at or near Egremont, Cumberland, in Nov. 1600, and educated at St. Bees, whence he removed to Queen's College, Oxford, though he left the university without a degree. In 1629 he was presented to the rectory of All Saints, Dorchester, but was ejected from it in 1602. Died 22 March, 1680. His works are an 'Answer to Mr. Francis Bampfield's Letter, in vindication of the Christian Sabbath against the Jewish;' and a volume of sermons on 'Soul prosperity.'

BENNET, BENJAMIN, a dissenting minister, was born 1674, at Temple Hall, in the hamlet of Whelshburgh, Leicestershire. After going through his academical exercises he settled as a preacher at the place of his nativity, from whence he removed to Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he died 1 Sept., 1726. His works are 'A Memorial of the Reformation,' 8vo., 1721, a work full of prejudice against the national establishment; 'A Defence of the Memorial;' 'Discourses on Popery;' 'Irenicum; or a Review of some late Controversies about the Trinity, private judgment, church authority, &c.;' 'Sermons on the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures;' and 'Christian Oratory.' This last work went through many editions, and was exceedingly popular. Mr. Bennet's funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Worthington.

BENNET, CHRISTOPHER, M.D., was born at Raynton, Somersetshire, 1617, and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford. He was a distinguished member of the College of Physicians, and in very considerable practice in the metropolis. He died 30 April, 1655. Bennet wrote 'Theatri Tabidorum Vëstibulum,' 8vo., 1654; 'Exercitationes Diagnosticæ,' 1655; and corrected and enlarged Dr. Moullet's 'Health's Improvement.'

BENNET, HENRY, Earl of Arlington. See ARLINGTON.

BENNET, HENRY, a native of Carlisle, translated from Latin into English Melancthon's Life of Luther, 12mo., London, 1561, and the Lives of Ecolompadius and Zuuinglius.

BENNET, JOHN, an English musical composer, published 'Madrigals for four Voices,' 1599.

BENNET, SIR JOHN, LL.D., an eminent civilian and diplomatist, in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., died in London, 1627. He was grandfather of Henry Bennet, earl of Arlington.

BENNET, JOHN, was born at Westminster, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1680; M.A., 1683). Died 6 Oct., 1766. He was author of 'Constatius the Apostate,' in answer to Dr. Samuel Johnson's celebrated work entitled 'Julian the Apostate.'

BENNET, ROBERT, an English prelate, was son of Leonard Bennet, of Baldock, Hertfordshire, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which society he was admitted a minor fellow 8 Sept., 1567, and a major fellow 7 April, 1570. Afterwards he became chaplain to Lord Burghley; master of the hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester, 1583; dean of Windsor, 1595; and registrar of the order of the Garter 1596. He was consecrated bishop of Hereford 20 Feb., 1602-3, and died 20 Oct., 1617. He was author of a Latin preface, before William Whitaker's translation of Bishop Jewell's Defense against Father Harding, folio, Geneva, 1585.

BENNET, ROBERT, B.D., a nonconformist divine, was educated at Oxford, and was presented by Lord Wharton to the rectory of Waddeston, in the county of Buckingham, where he continued till he was ejected for nonconformity in 1662. He afterwards settled at Aylesbury, where he preached privately to a small congregation, and from thence removed to Abingdon, where he died 6 April, 1687. He was author of 'A theological Concordance of the synonymous words in Scripture,' 8vo., 1697.

BENNET, Sir THOMAS, LL.D., a distinguished English civilian, one of the masters in ordinary of the court of Chancery, died 27 June, 1670, æt. 78, and was buried in the parish church of Wroughton, Wiltshire.

BENNET, THOMAS, a grammarian, born at Windsor, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1666; M.A. 1669). He afterwards became vicar of Steventon, and minister of Hungerford, Berkshire, where he died in Aug., 1681. He published in 1673, 'A short introduction of grammar for the Latine Tongue,' which was called 'Dr. Fell's,' or 'the Oxford' grammar.—Al. West.

BENNET, THOMAS, D.D., an English divine, was born at Salisbury 7 May, 1673, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts and obtained a fellowship. In 1700 he was presented to the rectory of St. James, Colchester, and on 20 Feb., 1716, became lecturer of St. Olave's, Southwark. He afterwards was collated to the rectory of St. Giles, Cripplegate. Died 9 Oct., 1728. Dr. Bennet was a man of learning and an acute controversialist. His books are chiefly polemical. The principal are 'A Confutation of Popery;' 'A Discourse of Schism;' 'Devotions;' 'A Confutation of Quakerism;' 'A brief History of the joint use of precomposed set Forms of Prayer;' 'A paraphrase with annotations upon the book of Common Prayer;' 'The Rights of the Clergy;' 'Essay on the thirty-nine articles,' against Anthony Collins; 'A Discourse of the ever-blessed Trinity in Unity;' and a Hebrew Grammar.

BENNET, WILLIAM, bishop of Cloyne, was born near London, 1745, and educated at Harrow School and Emanuel College, Cambridge. After having taken the degrees of B.A. and M.A., he obtained a fellowship, and became tutor of his college. Among his pupils was the earl of Westmoreland, who, on being nominated lord-lieutenant of Ireland, took him to Dublin, in the capacity of chaplain; and, in 1790, promoted him to the united bishoprics of Cork and Ross; from which, having previously taken the degrees of B.D. and D.D., he was translated, in 1794, to the see of Cloyne. He married a daughter of the Rev. N. Mapletoft, of Northamptonshire, but died without issue 16 July, 1820. Although a profound scholar, and a man of great abilities, his literary labours appear to have consisted chiefly of communications to the Society of Antiquaries, of which he was a fellow, and of hints to Nichols and Polwhele, for their respective histories of Leicester-shire and Cornwall.

BENNETT, JAMES, D.D., an Independent minister, born in London 22 May, 1774. In 1790 he became pastor of a congregation at Romsey, Hampshire, where he remained till 1823, when he was appointed principal, and theological tutor of Rotherham College, and minister of Masborough chapel. He obtained from Yale College the diploma of D.D. Subsequently he removed to the metropolis, and in 1840 he was chosen chairman of the Congregational Union. Died 4 Dec., 1862. Dr. Bennet was a voluminous author. Besides several single sermons, preached on special occasions, he published the life of the Rev. Risdon Darracott of Taunton; 'Lectures on the Evidences of Revelation;' 'Lectures on the History and Preaching of Christ,' 8vo., 4 vols.; 'Lectures on the Acts of the Apostles;' the Congregational Lecture for 1841, on the Theology of the Early Christian Church; and (jointly with Dr. Bogue) the 'History of Dissenters,' second edition, 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1833.

BENNING, JOHN BODECHER, professor of philosophy at Leyden, was born about 1666, and died 1642. His 'Opuscula,' containing Latin poems and dissertations, were published at Leyden 1631.

BENNO, was created a cardinal by the antipope Guibert, who assumed the name of Clement III. He composed, among other pieces, a bitterly satirical 'Life of Gregory VII.' Benno died about the close of the eleventh century.

BENNOIT. See BENEDICT.

BENNOIT, ELIE, a French Protestant divine, author of a History of the Edict of Nantes, &c., was born at Paris, 20 Jan., 1640, and died at Delft, 15 Nov., 1728. He was not happy in his domestic life, and draws a very disadvantageous portrait of his wife—'Avara, procaax, jurgosa, inconstans et varia, indefessa contradicendi libidines, per annos 47, miserum conjugem omnibus diris affectis.'

BENNOIT, GUILLAUME PHILIPPE, an engraver, born in France, 1725, settled, during the latter part of his life, in London, where he died 1780.

BENNOIT, RENÉ, a French theologian, born at Savenières, near Anger, 1521. He became doctor of the Sorbonne, curate of St. Eustache at Paris, confessor to Mary, queen of Scots, and professor of divinity in the college of Navarre. He contributed greatly to the conversion of Henry IV., and was his confessor. That prince nominated him to the bishopric of Troyes, but the court of Rome refusing to grant the bulls, Benoit enjoyed only the temporalities of the see. He died dean of the faculty of divinity at Paris, 7 March, 1608. He published a French version of the Bible, differing very little from that of Geneva. This was condemned by Gregory XIII., 1575. All his other works, which are very numerous, are Catholic.

BÉNOUVILLE, FRANÇOIS LÉON, a French painter, born at Paris 1821; died 1859.

BENSERADE, ISAAC DE, a French wit and poet, born at Lyons-la-Forêt in Normandy 1622. From his childhood he was distinguished by his wit and repartees. He had a pension from Cardinal Richelieu, on whose death, however, he wrote this satirical epitaph:—

'Cy gist, oui gist, par la mort bleu,
Le cardinal de Richelieu,
Et ce qui cause mon ennui,
Ma pension avec lui.'

Subsequently he received marks of esteem from Cardinal Mazarin and the queen mother, and in 1674 he was admitted a member of the French Academy. For some time previous to his death, which took place 19 Oct., 1691, he devoted himself entirely to religious exercises. His poems were collected in two volumes 12mo., 1698. He was author of several tragedies.

BENSLEY, THOMAS, an eminent printer of London, died at Clapham Rise 11 Sept., 1835. He was the son of a printer in the neighbourhood of the Strand, where he himself first established a business, but he afterwards removed to Bolt Court, Fleet Street, where he succeeded Mr. Edward Allen, the 'dear friend' of Dr. Johnson. Among many beautiful specimens of typography which issued from Mr. Bensley's press were Macklin's Bible; Thomson's 'Seasons,' 1797; Hume's 'History of England,' 10 vols. folio; and Astle's 'Origin of Writing,' 1803.

BENSON.

BENSON, GEORGE, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Great Salkeld, Cumberland, Sept., 1699, and educated first at Whitehaven, and lastly at Glasgow. About 1721 he was chosen pastor of a congregation at Abingdon, Berkshire, from whence he removed to Southwark 1729, and in 1740 succeeded Dr. Harris, at Crutched Friars. About this time he received the degree of D.D. from a Scotch university. Died 6 April, 1762. His writings are, 'On the Reasonableness of Prayer;' 'An Illustration of some of St. Paul's Epistles;' 'History of the Raising of Christianity,' 3 vols.; 'Tracts on Persecution; The Life of Christ; and Sermons. His posthumous works were published in 1764, 4to. Dr. Benson was a man of learning, but an Arian; and, like some other scholars, affected to introduce a alteration in the orthography of the English language.

BENSON, JOSEPH, a dissenting minister, born at Kirk Oswald in Cumberland 25 Jan., 1748. In 1766 he received from John Wesley the appointment of classical master at Kingswood Academy, of which he became principal in 1771. He afterwards became a Wesleyan minister, and preached extensively at London, Newcastle, Edinburgh, and Worcester. Died 16 Feb., 1821. Among his works are 'Remarks on Dr. Priestley's System of Necessitism;' 'An Essay on the Separate Existence of the Soul;' 'A Vindication of the Methodists, in Answer to the Bishop of Lincoln;' the life of his brother the Rev. J. W. Fletcher; 'A Commentary on the Historical Books of the Old and New Testament;' 'An Answer to the Defence of Kilham;' and a volume of Sermons. He also edited the 'Methodists' Magazine, from August, 1802, up to the period of his death.

BENSON, MARTIN, an English prelate, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxon. On entering into orders he accompanied the Emperor in his travels, and on his return was appointed chaplain in ordinary to George II. He obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and the archdeaconry of Berks, with the rectory of Bletchley, Buckinghamshire. His next promotion was a prebend in the church of Durham, and in 1734 he was consecrated bishop of Durham. He died 30 Aug., 1752. The bishop was a man of unaffected piety, great charity, and industry accomplished. His only published work is a sermon preached before the House of Lords on 26 Jan., 1731.

BENSON, WILLIAM, the last abbat, and first earl of Westminster, died Sept., 1549.

BENSON, WILLIAM, an English critic, son of Sir William Benson, was born in London, 1682. Inheriting a good fortune, he was appointed high sheriff of Wiltshire 1710, at which time he attracted notice by a printed letter to Sir Jacob Banks, in which he asserted that the national liberty was in danger. For this he was brought to the bar of the House of Commons, but no further proceedings took place. In the first parliament of George I. he sat for Shaftesbury, and in 1718 was made surveyor-general, in the room of Sir Christopher Wren; but he was soon displaced for his ignorance, in reporting that the House of Lords was in danger of falling, when it was found to be in a perfectly safe condition. He was, however, in some measure consoled by the assignment of a considerable debt due to the Crown in Ireland, and by the reversion of one of the two offices of auditor of the imprests, which he enjoyed after the decease of Mr. Edward Harley. His death took place at Wimbleton in Feb., 1754. Mr. Bentham published 'Virgil's Husbandry, with notes critical and rustic,' 1724; 'Letters concerning poetical translations, and Virgil's and Milton's arts of verse,' 1739; an edition of Arthur Johnston's 'Psalms,' with a 'Prelatory discourse.' To this discourse he afterwards published a conclusion, and also a supplement, in which is contained a comparison between Johnston and Buchanan. But he has obtained more honour by having liberally patronised men of letters, and by erecting a monument in Westminster Abbey to the memory of Milton.

BENT, JOHN VANDER, a Dutch landscape painter, born 1650; died 1690.

BENTHAM, EDWARD, D.D., an English divine, was born at Ely 23 July, 1707. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, from whence in 1723 he removed to Corpus Christi, and in 1731 was chosen fellow of Oriel College. The year following he took his degree of M.A. In 1743 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Hereford, of which church he was afterwards treasurer. In 1749 he proceeded to his doctor's degree, and in 1754 was promoted to the fifth stall in his cathedral. On the death of Dr. Fanshaw he was nominated regius professor of divinity in the university of Oxford, and in 1763 was removed to the eighth stall in the church of Hereford. He died 1 Aug., 1776. Besides some single sermons, Dr. Bentham published 'An Introduction to Moral Philosophy,' 8vo.; 'A Letter to a young Gentleman on Study; with a Letter to a Fellow of a College,' 8vo.; 'Advice to a young man of rank, upon coming to the University;' 'Reflections on Logic, with a vindication of the same,' 8vo.; 'Funeral Eulogies upon military men, from the Greek,' 8vo.; 'De Studiis Theologicis Prælectio;' 'Reflections upon the Study of Divinity, with heads of a Course of Lectures,' 8vo.; 'De Vita et Moribus Johannis Burton, S. T. P.,' 'An Introduction to Logic,' 8vo.; 'De Tumultibus Americanis deque eorum concitoribus similis meditatio.' Cole remarks in his MSS., 'In good truth, it is well that he is not in the Biographia, which is, or ought to be, a Temple of Fame for eminent persons of England and Ireland, but by no means for every little professor or writer. I personally knew and was acquainted with Dr. Bentham, who, I verily believe, was a very honest, virtuous, good man: a good husband, and father, and an excellent brother, but as poor a creature both in conversation, manner, and behaviour as I have generally met with—a plodding, industrious man, bred under his cousin John Burton of Eton, who pushed him forward, and rather got the start of him, both on the merit of being Whigs at Oxford in Sir Robert Walpole's time, when they were scarcer than at present, though not so abundant as with us [i.e., at Cambridge]. I know they have a collection for a life of him, drawn up by Alderman Bentham, who was to have brought it to me, but his sudden death prevented it. The professor had designed a monument and epitaph for his father and mother in Ely Cathedral, which I have seen, but suppose it will now be neglected, for James is as poor as a rat, being long helped out by his brother, and when Bishop Keene gave him, more for his own convenience than to accommodate Mr. Bentham, a stall at Ely, he took his living from him, to give it to Ward, his chaplain."

BENTHAM, JAMES, F.S.A., brother of Edward, mentioned above, was born at Ely about 1709. He studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in 1733 was presented to the vicarage of Stapleford, in the same county, which he resigned three years afterwards on being appointed minor canon of Ely. In 1767 he was presented to the vicarage of Wymondham, Norfolk, but resigned it the next year for the rectory of Feltwell St. Nicholas, which he exchanged in 1774 for the rectory of Northwold, and this again for a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Ely, to which was added in 1783 the rectory of Bow-Brickhill, Bucks. Died 17 Nov., 1794. He was author of 'The History and Antiquities of the conventual and cathedral church of Ely,' 4to., 1771, and again 1813; and 'Considerations and Reflections upon the present state of the Fens near Ely,' 1778.

BENTHAM, JEREMY, a celebrated writer on legislation, and political and domestic economy, was the son of an attorney in Red Lion Street, Houndsditch, London, where he was born 15 Feb., 1747-8. He was a very precocious child. At the age of five he had read Rapin's History of England, had acquired a knowledge of musical notes, and could play on the violin. Such, too, was the contemplative turn of his mind, and the clearness and accuracy with which he observed everything that came under his notice, that he had, at this time, acquired the name of 'the philosopher' among the members of his family. He had read Télémaque in French at the age of seven; and at eight was placed at Westminster School, where he soon became distinguished. He was admitted in his fourteenth year of Queen's College, Oxford, where he proceeded B.A. at the age of sixteen, and M.A. at the age of twenty. Being destined for the legal profession, he attended the celebrated Vinerian lectures of Sir William Blackstone, having previously become a student of Lincoln's Inn. 'By the command of my father,' he says, in his Indications respecting Lord Eldon, 'I entered into the profession; and in the year 1772, or thereabouts, was called to the bar.' He then practised, for a while, in the courts of equity, and acquired some reputation by the ability he there displayed. Some abuses, however, with which he became acquainted in the office of the masters in chancery soon disgusted him with his profession, and he obtained his father's permission to abandon it. 'I found it,' he remarks, 'more to my taste to endeavour to put an end to these abuses, than to profit by them.' His first printed work appeared in 1776 under the title of 'A Fragment on Government,' professing to be an examination of Blackstone's Commentaries on that head. In 1778 he published his View of the Hand Labour Bill; and in 1780 appeared his Principles of Morals and Legislation. In 1785 he went to Paris, for the third time; and afterwards, by way of Italy, Greece, and Turkey, on a visit to his brother at Crecholl in Russia, where he is said to have written his treatise on the Usury Laws. In 1787 was published his Defence of Usury, showing the impolicy of restraints laid on pecuniary bargains; in 1789 appeared his Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation; and in the following year, having conceived the idea of making convicts useful, he made that design public in the Panopticon, or Inspection House, in 2 vols. 8vo., in which he developed the plan that has since been partially adopted in the Penitentiary at Millbank. The death of his father, in 1792, put Mr. Bentham in possession of a fortune, which enabled him to bestow exclusive attention to his favourite subjects; and in that year, he printed his Truth versus Ashurst, &c.; and in 1795, Supply without Burthen, or Escheat vice Taxation; to which he prefixed his Protest against Law Taxes. The great work, however, by which his name became celebrated throughout Europe was fated to appear in a foreign language. It was published in French, at Paris, in 3 vols. 8vo., 1802, under the title of 'Traité de Legislation Civile.' This work was translated into French, and edited by Etienne Dumont. Bentham's next works were, A Plea for the Constitution; Scots Reform considered, with respect to the Regulations of the Courts of Justice. In 1812 another of his works, in 2 vols. 8vo., was translated into French, and published at Paris, by M. Dumont, under the title of 'Theorie des Peines et des Récompenses.' This was followed by a tract On the Law of Evidence; and Swear not at all; Table of Springs of Action; and Chrestomathia: Part I., explanatory of a proposed school for the New System of Instruction to the higher Branches of Learning, 1816; Part II., being an Essay on Nomenclature and Classification, including a critical examination of the Encyclopaedical Table of Lord Bacon, 1817. In the year last mentioned, he published his Plan of Parliamentary Reform, in which he heartily advocated universal suffrage. He next published, in succession, Papers relative to Codification, and his Church of Englandism, which latter brought down upon him no small share of odium, from the free manner in which the subject was handled. From 1819 to 1827 several productions of his pen continued to appear at intervals, and in the latter year Mr. Mill published, from the MSS. of Mr. Bentham, 'The Rationale of Judicial Evidence, specially applied to English Practice,' 5 vols. 8vo. He died in Queen Square Place, Westminster, where he had resided nearly half a century, 6 June, 1832. Besides the works already named, he was author of numerous productions both in French and English, and of contributions to the Westminster Review and Young's Annals of Agriculture. To the writings of Bentham, though their operation has been in a great measure unseen, may be attributed that extensive change in the character of reforming opinions, which has led to the enlightened views now taken of constitutional questions and to the consequent practical effects.

BENTHAM, SIR SAMUEL, brother of Jeremy Bentham, was born in England 1757, and became a brigadier-general in the Russian service, and a knight of the order of St. George of Russia. On returning to his native country he was appointed inspector-general of naval works, and afterwards civil architect and engineer of the navy. Died in London 30 April, 1831. He was author of several works on the administration of the navy. His Life has been written by Mrs. Maria Sophia Bentham, 8vo., London, 1862.

BENTHAM, THOMAS, an English prelate, was born at Sherburn, Yorkshire, about 1513, and admitted fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, 1546. In Queen Mary's reign he was deprived of his fellowship, whereupon he went abroad, but returned privately and superintended a Protestant congregation in London till the accession of Elizabeth, when he was made bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. Died 21 Feb., 1578-9. He wrote an Exposition of the Acts of the Apostles, and translated into English some parts of the Old Testament.

BENTINCK: earls and dukes of Portland. See PORTLAND.

BENTINCK, Lord WILLIAM GEORGE FREDERICK CAVENDISH, commonly called Lord George Bentinck, second son of the fourth duke of Portland, was born 27 Feb., 1802, and received his education at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. Having served for several years in the Guards, he became private secretary to his uncle, Mr. Canning, then prime minister, and in this capacity gave proofs of great ability for the conduct of public business. In 1828 he succeeded his uncle, Lord William Bentinck, as M.P. for Lynn Regis, which constituency he continued to represent during the remainder of his life. Till within three years of his death he was little known out of the sporting world. When, however, in 1846 Sir Robert Peel openly declared in favour of free trade, the advocates of the corn laws, left without a leader, after making several ineffectual attempts at organization, discovered that Lord George Bentinck was the only man around whom the several sections of the opposition could be brought to rally. His sudden elevation to so prominent a position took the public by surprise; but he soon gave convincing evidence of powers so formidable that the position of the Protectionist party at once assumed an imposing aspect. Towards Sir Robert Peel, in particular, his hostility was marked and uncompromising. On entering on his new position he at once broke off his connection with the Turf, and sold his magnificent stud. Having held no high office under government, his qualifications as a statesman never found any scope beyond the negative achievements of a leader of opposition; but it may be safely affirmed that nothing but his untimely death could have prevented his acquiring a high position among British statesmen. This sudden event, caused by the rupture of a vessel in the heart, took place 21 Sept., 1848, as he was walking near Welbeck Abbey, Nottinghamshire. His life has been written by Mr. Benjamin Disraeli.

BENTINCK, Lord WILLIAM HENRY CAVENDISH, commonly called Lord William Bentinck, was born 14 Sept., 1774, being the second son of the third duke of Portland. He served for many years in the army, and in 1803 was appointed governor of Madras, where he displayed a wise and liberal policy, as well as great skill in the command of the army. He returned to England in Jan., 1808. After being sent on an important mission to the Supreme Junta in Spain, he was appointed minister at the court of Sicily, and commander-in-chief of the English forces in that island. He quitted Sicily 1814, and in the following year attained the full rank of general. In 1827 he went out to India as governor general, and held that post till 1837. His death took place at Paris 17 June, 1839.

BENTIVOGLIO, CORNELIUS, a cardinal, born at Ferrara 1668; died at Rome 30 Dec., 1732. His principal works are a translation of Statius, and Sonnets.

BENTIVOGLIO, GUY, a cardinal, born at Ferrara 1579, of an ancient family which has produced many great men. After having been nuncio in Flanders and France, he was raised to the purple 1621. Urban VIII. found in him a faithful and disinterested friend; all good people loved and esteemed him; and had he lived longer he would in all probability have been elected Pope. Died 7 Sept., 1644. He left a History of the Civil Wars of Flanders; an Account of Flanders; Letters; and Memoirs.

BENTIVOGLIO, HERCULES, an Italian poet, born at Bologna 1506; died 6 Nov., 1573. His 'Opere Poetiche' were printed at Paris in 1719.

BENTLEY, Sir JOHN, a gallant British admiral, died 14 Dec., 1772.

BENTLEY, JOHN, an English writer, author of 'The Divine Loges,' 1803, and other theological and controversial works, died at Highbury Grange, near London, 4 Sept., 1835, aged 83.

BENTLEY, JOSEPH CLAYTON, a painter and engraver, born at Bradford, Yorkshire, 1809. He was brought up as a landscape painter. In 1832 went to London, principally for the purpose of learning the art of engraving, and placed himself under Mr. R. Brandard. His progress was extraordinarily rapid, and his name, in a short time, appeared in many illustrated serial publications. He still, however, found time to follow up his favourite pursuit of painting, and his pictures appeared in various exhibitions both in London and the provinces. For a considerable time before his death he was engaged in copying many of the paintings to be engraved for the 'Gems of European Art.' Some of these were engraved by him. He also executed engravings of some of the pictures in the Vernon Gallery, for the 'Art Union Monthly Journal.' Died 9 Oct., 1851.

BENTLEY, NATHANIEL, an eccentric character, known as 'Dirty Dick,' who at one period kept a celebrated emporium for wares of all sorts in Leadenhall Street, London. In his early days, Bentley was called the beau of Leadenhall Street, and might be seen in all places of public resort, dressed as a man of fashion. He not only spoke French and Italian fluently, but his demeanour was that of a polished gentleman. As the story goes, our young tradesman made proposals to the daughter of a wealthy citizen, but by some untoward event the match was broken off. Time passed on, and the once fashionable beau became known as 'Dirty Dick,' the inveterate enemy of soap and towels. It was in February, 1804, that Bentley finally quitted his warehouse in Leadenhall Street, in which for forty years he had conducted business among cobwebs and dust. He then took a house in Jewry Street, Aldgate, where he resided three years; but his landlord refusing to renew the lease, he removed to Leonard Street, Shoreditch, taking with him a stock of spoiled goods of the value of £10,000. Here he was robbed of a considerable sum by a woman with whom he was imprudent enough to form a connection in his old age. To divert his mind from the contemplation of his misfortune, he travelled from one place to another until he reached Haddington, in Scotland, where he died almost penniless, about the close of the year 1809.—Notes and Queries.

BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., an eminent critic and divine, was the son of a mechanic at Wakefield, Yorkshire, where he was born 27 Jan., 1661-2. He was educated at the grammar school of his native town, and at St. John's College, Cambridge. The first specimen of his literary acquirements was his

Boyle's Lectures, in which he displayed great powers of mind, supported by the profound philosophy of Newton, and the clear reasoning of Locke; on the being and power of a God. For this he was made librarian at St. James's, and while holding this situation became involved in a quarrel, which gave rise to a celebrated controversy. The Hon. Mr. Boyle had obtained the use of a MS. from the library to complete the edition of the 'Epistles of Phalaris,' which he was about to publish, and when Bentley demanded the book sooner than was expected, the request was regarded as an affront, and a war of words arose, which drew forth on both sides the most brilliant and spirited exhibition of wit, criticism, and erudition. In 1700 Bentley was made master of Trinity College, Cambridge, to which were added the archdeaconry of Ely, a benefice in the isle, and the office of chaplain to the king. In the government of his college, Bentley was arbitrary, and the fellows complained to the visitor, the bishop of Ely, and charged him with embezzling the money of the college, an accusation which created the most violent contentions, and which, at last, after twenty years' continuance, established the innocence of the master. As divinity professor he also exposed himself to the obloquy of the university; he refused to admit, without the fee of four guineas, several persons to the degree of doctor, for which measure he was suspended and degraded by the university. An appeal was made to the king, and the matter was referred to the judges of the King's Bench, who reversed the proceedings, and directed his honourable restoration. During these struggles Bentley preserved his unshaken firmness of mind, and his time was devoted to laborious criticism. His editions of Terence, Homer, Phædrus, Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' &c., evince the great powers of his mind, and the most extensive acquaintance with classical literature. After nearly ten years of gradual decay, this great scholar died in his college 14 July, 1742. In his private character Dr. Bentley was hospitable, warm in his friendship, and respected and beloved as the master of a family. Dr. Bentley also published a Latin epistle to Dr. Mill, with critical observations on Malala's chronology, 1691; and an answer to Collins's 'Discourse on Free Thinking.' A succinct chronological account of the interminable disputes between Dr. Bentley and the fellows of his college is given in Cooper's 'Annals of Cambridge,' iv. 217, 218.

BENTLEY, RICHARD, son of Dr. Bentley, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, under his father, on whose death he married and went to France, where by his imprudent conduct he fell into great embarrassments. He was afterwards relieved by Horace Walpole, with whom he resided for some time. Subsequently he obtained a small situation under government. Died 23 Oct., 1782. He designed many of the embellishments at Strawberry Hill; and also those for the edition of Gray's poems, printed at that place. He published 'Patriotism,' a satirical poem against Wilkes; 'The Wishes,' a drama; 'A Practical Epistle to Lord Melcombe'; 'Philodamus,' a tragedy; and 'The Prophet.'

BENTLEY, THOMAS, a noted manufacturer of porcelain, partner of the celebrated Josias Wedgwood. He was born at Scampton, Derbyshire, 1 Jan., 1730, and died 26 Nov., 1780. His epitaph in Chiswick Church concludes thus:—'He thought with the freedom of a philosopher, he acted with the integrity of a virtuous citizen. Friend and partner of Josias Wedgwood, he contributed largely to the embellishment and perfection of the manufacture of which this monument is composed.' It has been frequently, but erroneously, stated that Wedgwood's partner was Thomas Bentley, the son of Dr. Richard Bentley, the distinguished critic.

BENTLEY, THOMAS, nephew of Dr. Richard Bentley, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He published editions of Horace, Cicero 'De Finibus,' and the same writer's 'Paradoxa,' and of Callimachus.

BENVENUTI, CHARLES, a Jesuit, born at Leghorn 1716; died at Warsaw, 8 Sept., 1789. He wrote 'Reflections on Jesuitism,' and some treatises on mathematics and natural philosophy.

BENVENUTO, CELLINI. See CELLINI.

BENWELL, WILLIAM, an able divine and elegant scholar, born at Caversham, Oxfordshire, 1705. From Reading School, where his abilities were directed by the classic taste of his brother-in-law, Dr. Valpy, he entered Trinity College, Oxford, 1783. In the university the same ardent application continued to mark his progress; and his Latin poem obtained in 1785 the chancellor's prize. The subject was the plundering of Rome by Alaric, and it was treated with all the energy of description, and the majestic dignity of the Mantuan bard. Two years afterwards he obtained another prize for an English essay on the arts in which the moderns have excelled the ancients. The same year he entered into orders, and in 1790 was elected fellow of his college, where he gained the respect of the society, as an active tutor. In 1794 he obtained the living of Hale Magna, which he soon resigned for Chilton in Suffolk. In June, 1796, he married the eldest daughter of Mr. J. Loveday of Caversham, and eleven weeks afterwards was borne to the grave. He resided at Milton, Wiltshire, and during a fever in the village he exerted himself in affording consolation to the poor sufferers, and unhappily caught the infection, which after ten days proved fatal, 6 Sept., 1796. He was buried at Caversham. At his death Mr. Bonwell was engaged in publishing Xenophon's 'Memorabilia,' the first half of which was already in print.

BENYOWSKI, COUNT MAURICE AUGUSTUS DE, an adventurer, born in Hungary, 1741. He served in the imperial army, which he quitted, and entered into that of the Poles, who had formed a confederacy against Russia. Being taken prisoner, he was sent to Kamtschatka, where the governor committed to his care the education of his son and three daughters. The youngest daughter fell in love with him, and her parents consented to the match. Benyowski, however, had other objects in view, and formed a conspiracy against the governor, who fell in defending the fort. The count and his companions then quitted Kamtschatka in a small vessel, and after traversing the Pacific Ocean arrived at Macao. Here he entered into the service of the French East India Company, but afterwards formed a settlement on the island of Madagascar, where he assumed the sovereignty; and was slain in an action with the French, 23 May, 1786. His 'Memoirs' were published in 1799, 2 vols. 4to.

BENZELIUS, ERIC, archbishop of Upsala in Sweden, wrote an abridgment of Ecclesiastical History, and superintended the Swedish translation of the Bible, published in 1703. Born 1642; died 17 Feb., 1700.

BENZELIUS, ERIC, son of the preceding, was born 1675, and became bishop of Gottenburg, and ultimately archbishop of Upsala. Died 1743. He wrote several works in Latin, on the ecclesiastical and literary history of Sweden, and a treatise on the literature of the Jews.

BENZONI, JEROME, was born at Milan about 1610. In 1541 he went to South America, where he collected a number of observations, which he published at Venice in 1565, under the title of 'Storia del Mondo-Nuovo.'

BIOLCO, or BIOLCO, ANGELO, an Italian poet, surnamed Il Ruzzante, was a native of Padua, and died 17 March, 1542, aged 40. He composed five comedies in the Paduan dialect, all of which acquired great popularity.

BERALDUS, AURELIUS. See BÉRAULD.

BERANGER, JEAN PIERRE, the great French writer, was the son of a poor tailor at Paris, where he was born 17 Aug., 1780. He was little cared for by his father, who allowed him to wander about the streets with any associates that chance might throw in his way. At the age of 9 he was sent to live as tavern boy with his maternal aunt, who kept a small inn in the suburbs of Peronne. When 14 years old he was apprenticed to a printer at Peronne, having acquired what little he knew at the 'Institut Patriotique,' a branch of the school founded by M. Ballu de Bellanzese upon the system of J. J. Rousseau, for the dissemination of liberal principles. While at Peronne, he published, without exciting any attention, a small volume of songs, entitled 'The Garland of Roses.' At the age of 17 he returned to Paris, and tried his hand in several styles of versification; but he neither valued himself nor those about him that he was born a poet. He also wrote a comedy, but being unable to get it accepted at any of the theatres, he threw it into the fire. For more than a year he followed no settled occupation, and during that period, it is said, he composed his best songs. He was resolved to collect all his poems, and to send them to Prince Lucien Bonaparte, the brother of the First Consul. The prince appreciated Beranger's merit, and took the young poet under his patronage, but unfortunately became an exile before he had the opportunity of carrying out his benevolent intentions. On his arrival at Rome, however, he transmitted to Beranger an order to receive and pay the salary coming to him as a member of the Institute. The aid thus afforded was most seasonable, and Beranger was soon able to find employment for his pen. His genius began to attract notice in high places. In 1813 he was elected a member of the Society of the Caveau, the resort of the most distinguished literary men of the time; and, encouraged by the cordial reception his songs met from its frequenters, he resolved to devote himself exclusively to that class of composition. Towards the latter part of the year 1815, when the first collected edition of his songs made its appearance, he had begun to be widely known to the French public. His second series of songs, published in 1821, cost him his place and three months' imprisonment in the prison of St. Pelagie; while a third (1828) subjected him to nine months' imprisonment in La Force and a fine of 10,000 francs. The fine, however, was paid by the poet's admirers, and the prison in which he was incarcerated became the rendezvous of the most celebrated men of the day. From behind his prison bars Beranger kept up so deadly a fire on the government that he contributed more effectually to destroy it than all the blows of the heroes of the Three Days. But after having rendered such important assistance in winning the battle, he refused to accept any share of the spoil. He retired first to Passy, next to Fontainebleau, and finally to Tours, where he completed what he called his 'Memoires Chantants,' by the publication of his fourth volume of songs. At the revolution of February he was elected to the constituent assembly, but resigned that post very shortly afterwards. He then took up his residence at Passy, but subsequently removed, for the sake of medical advice, to Paris, where he expired 16 July, 1857.—Ann. Reg.

BERARDIER DE BATAUT, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a doctor of the Sorbonne and grand master of the college of Louis-le-Grand, was born 1720, at Paris, where he died 1794. He wrote an Abridgment of Universal History and other works.

BERAUD, LAURENT, a French Jesuit, highly distinguished for his attainments in mathematics and astronomy, was born at Lyons, 5 March, 1703, and died 26 June, 1777. Montucia, Lalande, and Bossu were his pupils.

BÉRAULD, NICHOLAS, or BERALDUS, AURELIUS, a French scholar, was born at Orleans, 1475, and died 1550. He was preceptor to Cardinal Coligni, to his brother the admiral, and to Châtillon. Erasmus kindly acknowledges the kind hospitality of Berauld when, in 1500, the great scholar of Rotterdam was travelling via Orleans to Italy, and highly praises the elegance of his style. Berauld's principal works are 'Oratio de pace restituta et de fudere sanctio apud Cameracum,' 1528; 'Metaphrasis in Œconomicon Aristotelis,' and 'Enarratio in psalmos lxxi. et cxxx.' He also edited Pliny's Natural History; the works of William, bishop of Paris; and a Greek and Latin Lexicon.

BERAULT-BERCASTEL, ANTOINE HENRI, a French ecclesiastic, who died about 1794, published a poem on the Promised Land; and an 'Ecclesiastical History' in 24 vols. 12mo.

BERCHAN, ST., an Irish prophet, is said to have written 'The Acts, or a Panegyric on St. Columb,' and to have flourished about 570.

BERCHEM. See BERGHEM.

BERCHET, PETER, an artist, born in France, 1659. In 1681 he came to England, where he worked under Roubour, a French painter of architecture; and afterwards he was engaged in different works for several of the English nobility. The ceiling in the chapel of Trinity College, Oxford, was painted by this master, who also painted the staircase at the duke of Schomberg's in London, and the summer house at Ranelagh. Died in London 1720.

BERCHORIUS, PETER, called also Bercheure, Berchoire, Bercorius, and Bercherius, was born in the beginning of the fourteenth century at St. Pierre-du-Chemin, near Maillezais, in Poitou. He entered the Benedictine order, became prior of St. Elol, near Paris, and died 1362. He translated Livy into French, and was also author of 'Reductorium Repertorium, et Dictionarium morale utriusque Testamenti,' which was several times printed. Walton also ascribes to him the 'Gesta Romanorum.'

BERCHTOLD.

BERCHTOLD, Count LEOPOLD DE, a distinguished German philanthropist, born 1738; died 26 July, 1809. For more than fifteen years he travelled over Europe, Asia, and Africa, everywhere distributing gratuitously little works tending to popularise his ideas on matters of benevolence and public utility. He was one of the most active and influential supporters of the Royal Humane Society of London. He fell a victim to his zeal in attending the sick and wounded Austrian soldiers after the disastrous battle of Wagram.

BERCKRINGER, DANIEL, professor, first of philosophy, and afterwards of eloquence, at Utrecht, died 24 July, 1667. His principal works are 'Exercitationes ethicæ, æconomicae, politicae;' and 'Dissertatio de Cometis.'

BERE, RICHARD, a Benedictine monk, who having taken degrees in divinity in the university of Oxford, in 1503, was afterwards chosen abbat of Glastonbury. Died 20 Jan., 1524. His learning and extensive charity to the poor are acknowledged by many learned and good men of that age, and among others Erasmus takes notice of his extraordinary qualifications. He rebuilt several apartments of his monastery and founded an almshouse for ten poor women.

BEREGANI, NICHOLAS, Count, an Italian poet, dramatist, historian, and translator, born at Vincenza, 21 Feb., 1627; died at Venice, 17 Dec., 1713. His Italian translation of Claudian is highly esteemed.

BERENGARIA, daughter of Sanchez, king of Navarre, was married, 12 May, 1191, in the island of Cyprus, to Richard I., king of England, who was then going on a crusade to the Holy Land. She accompanied the king to Palestine, and when he was returning she was sent before him, with her sister Joan, to Sicily, and from thence she sailed to England. Richard had no children by her. She died about 1230.

BERENGARIUS, or BERENGER, was born at Tours about 1000. He became rector of St. Martin de Tours, and in 1030 archdeacon of Tours. He dared to deny transubstantiation, maintaining that the sacrament of the Eucharist did not contain the body and blood of Jesus Christ, but was merely a figure of it. He was condemned in the councils of Tours, Verceil, and Paris. At that of Tours he retracted, and promised upon oath to profess the faith of the church in future, but beginning to dogmatize again some time afterwards, he was compelled to make a confession of faith at the council of Rome, 1059. Berenger retracted again at the council of Rouen 1063; of Poitiers 1075; of Rome 1078; and lastly at that of Bordeaux 1080. He afterwards retired to the island of St. Côme, near Tours, where he died 6 Jan., 1088. As late as the year 1770, Lessing published his treatise 'De corpore et sanguine Jesu Christi.'

BERENGARIUS, or BERENGER, JAMES, an anatomist of Carpi, in Modena, whence some have called him Carpus or Carpensis. He taught at Bologna and Pavia, and died at Ferrara 1550. He made some important discoveries and wrote some Latin treatises on anatomy.

BERENGER I., king of Italy, assumed the sovereignty 888, on the death of Charles I.; was crowned emperor 915; and after being defeated by Rodolph king of Burgundy, was assassinated in March 924.

BERENGER II. was the son of Albert, marquis of Yvre, by a daughter of the preceding. By means of Otho, emperor of Germany, he was crowned king of Italy 950; but his conduct was so arbitrary that the same emperor deposed him, and sent him prisoner into Germany, where he died 966.

BERENGER, JEAN PIERRE, a miscellaneous writer, author of a History of Geneva, &c., was born at Geneva 1740, and died at Lausanne 1770, having been banished from his native city in consequence of his having attempted to excite an insurrection there.

BERENGER, LAURENT PIERRE, a French miscellaneous writer, born 1749; died 1822. Among his works are 'Nouveau Règne,' a poem; 'Le Portefeuille d'un Troubadour;' 'Voyage en Provence;' and 'Les Scieries Provençales.'

BERENGER, RICHARD, many years gentleman of the horse to his majesty, a man of considerable literary talents, and for his personal accomplishments called, by Dr. Johnson, 'the standard of true elegance,' published in 1771, 'The History and Art of Horsemanship,' 2 vols. 4to., illustrated with plates. The history, which occupies the first volume, displays much research and acquaintance with the classics and with other writers of remote antiquity. Previously to this, Mr. Berenger contributed three excellent papers, No. 79, 156, and 202, to the 'World,' and in Dodsley's collection are a few of his poems, written with ease and elegance. He died in his 62nd year, 9 Sept., 1782.

BERENGER DE LA TOUR, a French poet, who died, it is supposed, about 1559.

BERENICIUS, a curious character, who appeared in Holland, 1670, and maintained himself by grinding knives and sweeping chimneys. He could repeat by heart Horace, Virgil, Homer, Aristophanes, Cicero, Pliny, &c., and he was well versed in all modern languages, and could translate passages extempore from gazettes into Greek and Latin verse. He was at last suffocated in a bog, into which he had fallen while in a state of intoxication.

BERESFORD, JAMES, was born at Upham, Hampshire, 28 May, 1764, and educated at Charterhouse School and Merton College, Oxford, of which he was elected a fellow. In 1812 he was presented by his college to the rectory of Kibworth Beauchamp, Leicestershire, where he died 29 Sept., 1840. He wrote a large number of works, but that which brought him most literary celebrity was 'The Miseries of Human Life; or the Last Groans of Timothy Testy and Samuel Sensitive, with a few Supplementary Sighs from Mrs. Testy. With which are interspersed Varieties incidental to the principal matter, in prose and verse;' 2 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1806-7. Among the other productions of his pen are a translation of the Æneid into English blank verse; the Song of the Sun, imitated from the ancient Icelandic collection, called the Edda; The Cross and the Crescent, an heroic metrical romance; Tour of Sentiment; Imitations of Modern History, Writing, Novel-writing, and Biography; and a number of contributions to a periodical called the 'Looker-on.'

BERESFORD, WILLIAM CARR, Viscount Beresford, was an illegitimate son of the first marquis of Waterford, and was born 2 Oct., 1768. He entered the army, and greatly distinguished himself in numerous engagements. When in Portugal he succeeded, by enforcing strict discipline, in making the army of that country highly efficient. Indeed, in the art of quickly turning swarms of peasants into legions of clever soldiers he had no rival. For his services at Busaco he was elected a K.B., 18 Oct., 1810. His greatest achievement, however, was the victory he gained over the French under the command of Soult at Albuera, 16 May, 1811. For this he received the thanks of Parliament. He was created Baron Beresford, 17 May, 1814; Viscount Beresford, 22 April, 1823; promoted to the rank of general in the army, 1825; and died without issue at Bedgebury Park, Kent, 8 Jan., 1854.

BERG, JOHN PETER, a German divine and writer, born at Bremen, 3 Sept., 1737; died at Duisburg, 3 March, 1800.

BERG, MATTHIAS VANDEN, a painter, born at Ypres 1615; died 1647.

BERGALLI, CHARLES, a Minorite friar, was a native of Palermo, where he died 17 Nov., 1679. He wrote a work entitled 'De objecto philosophiæ.'

BERGALLI, LOUISA, a poet and dramatist, born at Venice, 1703; died about 1760. She married Count Gaspard Gozzi, by whom she had five children.

BERGAMO, JAMES PHILIP of, whose family name was Forciti, was born 1434, near Bergamo, at Salsia, an estate belonging to his family, which was noble and ancient. He entered among the Augustinians, acquired reputation by his merit and learning, and died at Bergamo, in a monastery of his order, 15 June, 1520. He wrote a Chronicle; a treatise on Illustrious Women; and a tractate entitled 'Confessionale,' or 'Interrogatorium.'

BERGELLANUS, JOHN ARNOLD, the author of a Latin poem in praise of printing, which first appeared in 1540 or 1541.

BERGEN, CHARLES AUGUSTUS DE, a German naturalist, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, 11 Aug., 1704, studied under Boerhaaven, was admitted a physician in his native town 1731, professed anatomy and botany there with distinction, and died 7 Oct., 1760. He composed several anatomical and botanical treatises in Latin.

BERGEN, DIRK, OF THEODORE VAN DEN, a Dutch painter of landscape and animals; born about 1645; died 1689. He resided in England many years.

BERGERAC, SAVINIEN CYRANO DE, born about 1620 in the castle of Bergerac in Perigord, was at first very indifferently educated by a poor country priest. He afterwards went to Paris and gave himself up to every kind of dissipation. He then entered as a cadet in a regiment of guards, and endeavoured to acquire a reputation on the score of bravery, by acting as second in many duels, besides those in which he was a principal, and scarcely a day passed on which he had not some affair of this kind on his hands. Whoever observed his nose, which was a very remarkable one, with any attention, was sure to be involved in a quarrel with him. The courage which he showed on those occasions and some desperate actions in which he distinguished himself when in the army, procured him the name of the Intrepid. After being severely wounded in battle he quitted the army, and devoted his whole time to literary pursuits. Among his works are a tragedy on the death of Agrippina, widow of Germanicus; 'The Pedant,' a comedy; 'Comic History of the States and Empires of the Moon;' and 'Comic History of the States and Empires of the Sun.' From the two latter works Swift, in his 'Gulliver's Travels,'

BERINGTON.

Fontenelle, in his 'Plurality of Worlds,' and Voltaire, in his 'Micromegas,' have borrowed many ideas. In a collected form Bergerac's works passed through many editions. He died 1655.

BERGHEM, or BERCHEM, NICHOLAS, a Dutch painter and engraver, born at Haarlem, 1624; died 18 Feb., 1683.

BERGIER, NICOLAS, was born at Rheims, 1 March, 1567, became professor in the university there, afterwards an eminent advocate, and died 15 Sept., 1623. His most esteemed works are 'History of the Great Roads of the Roman Empire;' and 'Dessein de l'Histoire de Reims.'

BERGIER, NICOLAS SYLVESTRE, a French priest, born at Darnay in Lorraine, 31 Dec., 1718, became theological professor and then principal of the college of Besançon, canon of Paris, and confessor to the king. Died 9 April, 1790. Bergier was one of the most formidable opponents of modern philosophical theories. His works are 'Elements primitifs des Langues, découverts par la comparaison des racines de l'hebreu avec celles du grec, du latin, et du français;' 'L'Origine des Dieux du Paganisme;' a French translation of Hesiod; 'Certitude des Preuves du Christianisme;' 'Désisme réfuté par lui-même;' 'Apologie de la Religion Chrétienne;' 'Examen du Matérialisme;' 'Traité dogmatique de la vraie religion;' and the 'Theological Dictionary' in the 'Encyclopédie.'

BERGLER, JOSEPH, an historical painter, was born at Salzburg, 1 May, 1753, became director of the Academy of Arts at Prague, and died 25 June, 1829.

BERGLER, STEPHEN, a man of learning in the eighteenth century, who led an unsettled life at Leipsic, Amsterdam, and Hamburg, and was almost always in the booksellers' pay. He translated the 'Treatise on Offices' of Manrocordato, despot of Moldavia, which procured him that prince's favour, and he repaired to his court; but, finding him dead, went into Turkey, where he apostatized, and died miserably. His notes on Aristophanes are inserted in the edition of Burmann, 1760, 2 vols. 4to.

BERGMANN, FORBERN OLOFF, a celebrated chemist, born at Catherineberg in Sweden, 20 March, 1735; died 8 July, 1784. He was professor at Upsala, and made many important discoveries on the nature of fixed air and the causes of volcanoes.

BERIGARD, CLAUDE GUILLERMET, sieigneur DE, was born at Moulins 15 Aug., 1578, and became professor of philosophy first at Pisa, and afterwards at Padua, where he died 1663. His works are 'Circulus Pisanus, de veteri et peripatetica Philosophia;' and 'Dubitationes in Dialogum Galilæi pro terræ immobilitate.'

BERING, VITUS, a Danish poet, born 1617; died 1675. He became historiographer to the king of Denmark, and a member of the council of finances. His works are 'Florus Danicus,' 1608, fol.; and various poems in the 'Deliciæ quorundam Danorum.'

BERING, VITUS. See BEHRING.

BERINGTON, CHARLES, D.D., an English Catholic prelate, was consecrated bishop of Hierocæsaria 1 Aug., 1786, and appointed vicar apostolic of the midland district. He died 8 June, 1798, in an apoplectic fit, as he was returning from a visit at Sedgley Park to his house at Long Birch, Staffordshire. The 'Gentleman's Magazine' describes Bishop Berington as 'a prelate whose amiable virtues gave an impressive charm to the truths of religion; a scholar of great classical tastes; a man whose judgment was profound, whose manners were peculiarly conciliating, and whose hilarity of conversation rendered him the delight of society.'

BERINGTON, JOSEPH, an English divine of the Roman communion, was born in Shropshire, of Catholic parents, about 1743, and being destined for the priesthood, was sent at an early age to the college of St. Omer. During twenty years he exercised the functions of the clerical office in France. He then returned to his native country, and was stationed at Buckland, Berkshire, where he died 1 Dec., 1827. Mr. Berington was a learned and able writer, but many of his opinions were regarded as doubtful at least, if not heterodox, by the great majority of his co-religionists. His works are 'Letter on Materialism, and Hartley's Theory of the Human Mind,' 8vo., 1776; 'Immaterialism delineated, or a View of the first principles of things,' 8vo., 1779; 'A letter to Dr. Fordyce, in answer to his sermon on the delusive and persecuting spirit of Popery,' 1779; 'The state and behaviour of English Catholics, from the Reformation till 1780, with a view of their present wealth, number, character, &c.,' 'Address to the Protestant Dissenters who have lately petitioned for a repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts,' 8vo., 1786; 'History of the Lives of Abelard and Heloise, comprising a period of eighty-four years, from 1079 to 1163, with their genuine letters, from the collection of Amboise,' 1787; 'Reflections, with an Exposition of Roman Catholic principles, in reference to God and the Country,' 8vo., 1787; 'Account of the present state of Roman Catholics in Great Britain,' 8vo., 1787; 'On the Depravity of the Nation; with a view to the promotion of Sunday Schools,' 8vo., 1788; 'The Rights of Dissenters from the Established Church, in relation principally to English Catholics,' 8vo., 1789; 'History of the reigns of Henry II. and of Richard and John, his sons; with the events of this period, from 1154 to 1216; in which the character of Thomas à Becket is vindicated from the attacks of George Lord Lyttelton,' 4to., Birmingham, 1790; 'Memoirs of Gregorio Panzani; giving an account of his agency in England, in the years 1634, 5, and 6; translated from the Italian original, and now first published. To which are added, an Introduction and a Supplement, exhibiting the state of the English Catholic Church, and the conduct of the parties before and after that period, to the present times,' 8vo., 1793, which led to the publication of 'Remarks,' by the Rev. Charles Plowden, who expressed doubts as to the authenticity of the MS.; 'An Examination of Events termed miraculous, as reported in Letters from Italy,' 1796, in which work he evinced unequivocally the difference of his sentiments from those of the majority of Catholics respecting modern miracles; 'A History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Catholic Religion in England,' 8vo., London, 1813, which is the same, excepting the title-page, as the 'Memoirs of Panzani'; 'The Faith of Catholics confirmed by Scripture, and attested by the Fathers of the first five centuries of the Church' (in conjunction with Dr. John Kirk), 8vo., London, 1813, second edition, 1830, third edition, revised and enlarged by the Rev. J. Waterworth, 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1846; and 'A Literary History of the Middle Ages; comprehending an account of the state of learning, from the close of the reign of Augustus to its revival in the fifteenth century,' 4to., London, 1814, 8vo., London, 1840.

BERKELEY.

BERKELEY, GEORGE, earl of Berkeley, was born in or about 1628, being son of George, thirteenth Lord Berkeley, to whose title he succeeded in 1658. King Charles II. created him Viscount Dursley, and in 1679 advanced him to the rank of earl of Berkeley. In the reign of James II. he was a member of the Privy Council, but on the flight of that unfortunate monarch he signed the declaration in favour of the prince of Orange, afterwards William III. Died 14 Oct., 1698. He bestowed upon Sion College a very valuable library, which was collected by Sir Robert Coke, and composed a work entitled 'Historical Applications, and occasional Meditations upon several Subjects, written by a Person of Honour,' 12mo., 1670.

BERKELEY, GEORGE, an Irish prelate, was born at Kilerin, near Thomastown, in the county of Kilkenny, 12 March, 1684. He was educated first at Kilkenny School, and next at Trinity College, Dublin, of which society he was elected a fellow in 1707. Though falsely styled a Jacobite, he was introduced to Queen Caroline, and his opinions and conversation were courted by men of all parties. By the recommendation of Swift, he went as chaplain to Lord Peterborough, ambassador to the king of Sicily, and afterwards he spent four years on the continent as tutor to the son of Dr. Ashe, bishop of Clogher. During his travels in Apulia, he communicated some ingenious observations on the tarantula to Dr. Freind, and also made some valuable collections for a natural history of Sicily, which were unfortunately lost on his passage to Naples. He was afterwards chaplain to the duke of Grafton, viceroy of Ireland, where his fortune was increased by a legacy of about £4,000 from the celebrated Vanessa, who repaid the coldness and cruelty of Swift by bestowing her property on his more deserving friends. In 1724 he was made dean of Derry, but in the midst of an easy fortune, he formed the wild scheme of erecting a college in the Bermuda islands, for the conversion of the savage Americans; and though he was supported by the patronage of the king, the pretended piety of the minister, and the promise of a grant of £10,000, he proved the abortion of his hopes, after residing nearly two years at Newport in America, and he returned to England in disgust. He was raised to the see of Cloyne 1735, and twelve years later refused a proffered translation to Clogher. In 1752 he went to reside at Oxford, in quest of literary retirement, as well as to superintend the education of his son, and died there suddenly 14 Jan., 1753. His private character was truly great and exemplary, so that Pope's panegyric is far from misapplied when attributing 'to Berkeley every virtue under heaven.' As a scholar and philosopher he ranks high. His 'Theory of Vision,' 1709; his 'Principles of Human Knowledge,' 1710; and his 'Dialogues between Hylas and Philonous,' 1713, in opposition to sceptics and atheists, display great vigour of thought, strength of reasoning, and subtle argumentation. He also wrote 'Sermons'; 'The Minute Philosopher'; some mathematical disquisitions; and 'Siris'; a chain of philosophical reflections and inquiries concerning the virtues of Tar Water, a medicine which had been useful to himself in a case of nervous colic.

BERKELEY, GEORGE, LL.D., son of the preceding, was born in London 28 September, 1733. He received his education under his father, and became student of Christ Church, Oxford. On taking orders he obtained the vicarage of East Gosson, in Berkshire, next the vicarage of Bray, and afterwards the rectory of St. Clement's Danes, in the Strand. He was also presented to the chancellorship of Brecon, and a prebendal stall at Canterbury. He died 6 Jan., 1795. Several of his sermons have been printed. Dr. Berkeley married Elizabeth, the daughter of the Rev. Henry Fincham, by whom he had four children. His widow died at Kensington 4 Nov., 1800. She was a very extraordinary woman, and contributed many curious papers, written in a strange manner, to the 'Gentleman's Magazine.' Her son, George Monk Berkeley, published, in 1789, a volume, entitled 'Literary Relics.'

BERKELEY, Sir ROBERT, an English judge, second son of Rowland Berkeley, Esq., of Spetchley, Worcestershire, was constituted a justice of the court of King's Bench 11 Oct., 1632. In the reign of Charles I. he, with eleven of his brethren, gave his opinion in favour of ship-money. For this he was afterwards impeached of high treason, deprived of his judicial office, fined £20,000, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the Tower during the pleasure of the House of Lords. Having made some satisfaction for his fine to the parliament he was, by their authority, discharged from the remainder of it, and set at liberty after he had been shut up in the Tower for more than seven months. He afterwards suffered greatly by the plunderings and exactions of the rebels, and a little before the battle of Worcester the Presbyterians, though engaged in the king's service, displayed their animosity against him, and burnt his house at Spetchley to the ground. Died 5 Aug., 1656, æt. 72.

BERKELEY, Sir WILLIAM, an English admiral, was son of Sir Charles Berkeley, and brother of Charles, earl of Falmouth. He was vice-admiral of the white squadron, and led the van in the desperate engagement with the Dutch, which began 1 June, 1666, and continued four days. Prompted by his usual courage, he steered into the midst of the enemy's fleet, where he was soon overpowered by numbers. He was found dead in his cabin, 1 June, 1666.

BERKELEY, Sir WILLIAM, the son of Sir Maurice Berkeley, and brother of John, Lord Berkeley of Stratton, was born in London, and educated at Merton College, Oxford. In 1646 he went to Virginia, whither he invited many royalists, to settle there as a refuge from the rebels, but who deprived him of the government, to which he was restored in 1660. He died at Twickenham, 13 July, 1677. His works are 'The Lost Lady,' a tragic-comedy; 'Cornelia,' a play, not printed; A Description of Virginia, folio. In Francis Moryson's custom of 'The Laws of Virginia,' 1662, the preface informs us that Sir William was the author of the best of them.

BEKKENHOUT, JOHN, a miscellaneous writer, was born at Leeds, about 1730, and intended for the mercantile profession, which he quitted, and entered first into the military service of Prussia, and next into that of England. In 1760 he went to Edinburgh, and studied physic, but took his doctor's degree at Leyden in 1765. While at Edinburgh he published his 'Clavis Anglica Linguae Botanicae,' a book of considerable merit. In 1778 he attended the British commissioners to America, and on his return obtained a pension. Died 3 April, 1791. Some of his works possess considerable merit; among these are his 'Biographia Literaria, or a Biographical History of Literature;' 'Pharmacopœia Medici;' 'Outlines of a Natural History of Great Britain and Ireland,' 3 vols. 12mo.; 'Symptomatology;' and 'Letters to his Son.'

BERKHEY, JOHN LEFRANÇOIS VAN, a Dutch naturalist and poet, born 3 Jan., 1729; died 13 March, 1812.

BERKHEYDEN, JOB and GERARD, two Dutch painters, born at Hadriem. The eldest excelled in landscapes, and was drowned in one of the canals of Holland, June, 1698, aged 70; the other was happy in his views of towns, palaces, &c. He died 23 Nov., 1693.

BERKLEY. See BERKELEY.

BERMINGHAM, MICHEL, a medical writer, was born in London, and became a member of the academy of surgery at Paris. He published 'Maniere de bien nourrir et soigner les enfans nouveaux,' 4to., 1750; and a translation of the statutes of the doctors regent of the Faculty of Paris.

BERNABEL, JOSEPH HERCULES, a musical composer, born at Caprarola, in the States of the Church; died at Munich, 1690. His son, Joseph Anthony (died 1732), was also an eminent composer.

BERNACCHI, ANTONIO, an Italian singer, engaged by Handel in 1716, for the opera in London. He finally returned to Italy, 1720. After quitting the stage he established a school for singing at Bologna.

BERNADOTTE, JEAN BAPTISTE JULES. See CHARLES XIV. of Sweden.

BERNAERT, NICASUS, a Dutch painter, who died 1603, aged 70.

BERNAERTS, JOHN, in Latin Bernartius, a learned advocate of Mechlin, was born in that city 1568, and died 16 Dec., 1601. He published a commentary on Statius; and 'The Life and Martyrdom of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland.' The latter work is in Flemish.

BERNARD. See BARNARD.

BERNARD, ST., of Menthon, was born in Savoy 923, and died at Novara in the Milanese 28 May, 1008. He laboured strenuously to convert the uncivilized inhabitants of his country to Christianity, and to forward his humane purposes, founded two monasteries in the passes of the Alps, for the relief of pilgrims and travellers; and they still subsist, a monument of his benevolence, and a happy asylum to the weary.

BERNARD, ST., the last of the holy fathers, was born 1091, of noble and pious parents, at Fontaine in Burgundy. At the age of twenty-three, he took the religious habit at Cîteaux, from whence he was sent to the abbey of Clairvaux, which was founded in 1115, to be its first abbat. He had 700 novices in a short time, and saw a pope, six cardinals, above thirty bishops, and a considerable number of excellent men, make profession in his monastery. So great was St. Bernard's reputation for abilities, prudence, and holiness, that the pope, bishops, kings, and princes, were happy to choose him for the arbiter of their disputes, and he was consulted on all affairs of importance. It was by his advice that Innocent II. was acknowledged sovereign pontiff, and he put an end to the schism, by engaging the anti-pope, Victor, to a voluntary abdication. St. Bernard wrote against Abailard, refuted the errors of Peter de Bruys, opposed the monk Raoul, who preached that all the Jews ought to be destroyed; prosecuted the followers of Arnauld of Brescia; stood up against Gilbert de la Force, and Eon de l'Etoile; drew up rules for the Templars, and preached, under Louis 'the younger,' in favour of the Crusade, which was not attended with all the success that had been hoped for. He died 20 Aug., 1153, aged 63. He founded one hundred and sixty monasteries, and is said to have wrought miracles. The best edition of St. Bernard's works is that published by Mabillon, 1690, 2 vols. folio, which is preferred to the edition of 1719.

BERNARD, ANDREAS. See ANDREAS.

BERNARD, of Brussels, a painter, died 1540. He was famed for his hunting pieces, in which he introduced his patron, Charles V.

BERNARD, of Thuringia, a fanatical hermit, who in the tenth century announced the immediate end of the world, and with such effect that a solar eclipse at that time was interpreted as a completion of the prophecy, and all, in consternation, fled to caves and mountains.

BERNARD, CATHERINE, was born at Rouen, 1662, and died at Paris, 6 Sept., 1712. She wrote poetry with ease and elegance, and thrice obtained the prize at the French Academy. Her tragedies, Brutus and Laodamia, written in conjunction with Fontenelle, were received with applause, and she was rewarded with a pension of 200 crowns by Louis XIV.

BERNARD, CHARLES, a French writer, author of a History of Louis XIII. and other works, was born at Paris, 1571, and died 1640.

BERNARD, CLAUDE, called Father Bernard, or The Poor Priest, was born at Dijon, 16 Dec., 1588, and died 23 March, 1641. In his younger years he led rather a dissipated life, but afterwards repented, and distinguished himself by his zeal on behalf of the poor, and in preparing criminals for death. He founded the seminary of the Thirty-three at Paris.

BERNARD, EDWARD, a learned critic and astronomer, was born at Paulerspury, near Towcester, Northamptonshire, 2 May, 1638. He received his education at Northampton, and next at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Oxford. He studied not only philosophy and mathematics, but Hebrew, Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic. In 1668 he visited Leyden, to consult some oriental manuscripts presented to that university by Scaliger, and in 1673 he was appointed successor to Sir Christopher Wren, as Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford. A plan being projected of publishing all the ancient mathematicians, he compared whatever was most curious in the Bodleian and other libraries, and presented the public with a specimen of the work, which, however, was never completed. He was sent, in 1676, to Paris, by King Charles II., to superintend the education of his two natural children by the duchess of Cleveland, but the reserved manners of the professor were not in unison with the dissipation of a court, and at the expiration of a year he retired from a situation which suited neither his taste nor his inclination. As he had been obliged to give up his preferences on his election to the professorship, he began now to be tired with an office which confined his attachments and pursuits; and he resigned it in 1691 to take the living of Brightwell, Berkshire. Died at Oxford, 12 Jan., 1696-7. Besides some papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he published A Treatise of the ancient Weights and Measures, printed first in English and afterwards in Latin; Private Devotions, with an Explication of the Commandments; 'Orbis eruditi Literatura à caractere Samantico deducta, à folio copperplate sheet; 'Etymologicum Britannicum,' at the end of Dr. Hickes's 'Grammatica Anglo-Saxonica; an edition of Guise's 'Misnæ pars prima; Chronologia Samaritanæ Synopsis; Annotations in Epistolam S. Barnabæ; Short Notes upon Cotelerius's edition of the Fathers; Veterum Testimonia de Versione LXXII. Interpretum.

BERNARD, FRANCIS, M.D., physician to James II., died 9 Feb., 1697-8. He was a man of learning, and well versed in literary history. His valuable collection of scarce and curious books was sold by auction in 1698, and fetched no less than £1600, clear of all expenses—a large amount in those days.

BERNARD, Sir FRANCIS, was born at Brightwell, Berkshire, about 1717, and educated at Westminster School, from whence, in 1729, he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1736). He next became a student of the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar. In 1758 he was appointed governor of New Jersey, and in the following year was transferred to the government of Massachusetts Bay, which he administered for ten years. He was created a baronet 1769, and at the commencement of the rebellion returned to England. Died 16 June, 1779. He published the Latin Odes of Anthony Altop, 1752; a Letter, with an Appendix, to Lord Hillsborough, on the subject of the province of Massachusetts Bay; and 'Select Letters,' 1774, explaining his conduct during the American Revolution.

BERNARD, GIFFARD, translated into English, in 1779, Bemetzrieder's 'Treatise on Singing.' He also composed some vocal music.

BERNARD, HERMAN HEDWIG, for many years Hebrew teacher in the university of Cambridge, died 15 Nov., 1857, aged 72. He was author of 'Selections from Maimonides, with Notes;' 'A Grammar of the Hebrew Language;' 'The Guide of the Hebrew Student, containing an Epitome of Sacred History, with easy passages in Hebrew;' and 'The Book of Job, as expounded to his Cambridge pupils.'

BERNARD, JAMES, was born at Nions, in Dauphine, 1 Sept., 1658, and educated at Geneva. On the persecution of the Protestants he fled to Switzerland, and next to Holland, becoming minister of Ganda and professor at the Hague. William III., who hated his republican principles, refused to confirm his appointment to a church at Leyden, and it was not till 1705, after the king's death, that he appeared as public preacher there. He was also professor in the university. Died 27 April, 1718. He wrote 'Histoire Abrégée de l'Europe;' a Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, &c.

BERNARD, JOHN, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1543-4; M.A. 1547), and took priest's orders. In Queen Mary's reign he composed a Latin treatise, which was published by his brother Thomas in 1568, after the death of the author. An English translation, by Anthony Marten, appeared in 1570, under the title of 'The Tranquillitie of the mind: an excellent Oration directing every man and woman to the true tranquillity and quietness of the minde.'

BERNARD, or BARNARD, JOHN, son of John Barnard, D.D., the biographer, who has been already mentioned under Barnard, was educated at Oxford, and took orders in the established church, but turned Catholic in the reign of James II., who, by a mandamus dated 28 March, 1687, caused his election as reader of moral philosophy at Oxford. He resigned this appointment in 1688, and followed King James to Ireland, but subsequently returned to his own country, and, as report went, to his former belief. He was afterwards employed in continuing, correcting, and enlarging the great Geographical Dictionary of Edmund Bohun, printed at London, folio, 1693, to which he prefixed Retrospectus on Moreri's Historical Dictionary.

BERNARD, JOHN, an English actor, author of 'Retrospections of the Stage,' a work published after his death, which took place in London, 1828.

BERNARD, JOHN FREDERIC, a learned publisher and editor of Amsterdam, died 1752. Among the works edited by him are 'Recueil de voyages au Nord,' 10 vols.; Picart's 'Religious Ceremonies,' 9 vols.; 'Superstitions anciennes et modernes,' 2 vols.

BERNARD, JOHN STEPHEN, a learned physician and medical writer of Leyden, was born at Berlin 1718, and died Aug., 1793.

BERNARD, NICHOLAS, D.D., a learned divine, was admitted a pensioner of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 24 May, 1617, and graduated B.A., 1620, M.A. 1624. He was afterwards incorporated D.D. in the same university, having taken that degree at Dublin. Archbishop Usher, to whom he was chaplain, appointed him dean of Ardagh. In 1642 he returned to England, and obtained the rectory of Whitchurch, Shropshire. Having complied with the ruling powers, he was made chaplain to Cromwell, one of his almoners, and preacher to the Society of Gray's Inn. His death took place in the winter of 1661. His works are 'The penitent Death of a woful Sinner, or the penitent Death of John Atherton, bishop of Waterford,' 1641 and 1642; 'Proceedings of the Siege of Drogheda;' 'A Dialogue between Paul and Agrippa;' 'A Farewell Sermon preached at Drogheda;' 'The Life and Death of Archbishop Usher;' 'The Judgment of the late Archbishop of Armagh, on the extent of Christ's Death; secondly of the Sabbath, &c.:' a defence of this last work against Dr. Heylyn; 'Defections of the Ancient Church;' and 'Clavi Traces, or nails fastened by some great masters of assemblies, confirming the king's supremacy, the subject's duty, and church government by bishops: being a collection of some pieces written on these subjects by Archbishop Usher, Mr. Hooker, Bishop Andrews, and Dr. Hadrian Saravia; with a preface by the bishop of Lincoln,' 4to., London, 1651.

BERNARD, PIERRE JOSEPH, the son of a sculptor at Grenoble, was born 1710, and educated by the Jesuits of Lyons. Though he possessed wit and a lively genius, his compositions failed to procure him bread; so that for two years he was engaged as clerk to a public notary. He then came under the notice of marshal de Coigny, whose death, in 1756, left him without a patron. He afterwards gained friends at Paris till, in 1771, the sudden loss of his memory cut short the happiness of his life. Died 1 Nov., 1775. He wrote some operas and light pieces, which, on account of their ease and elegance, have procured for him the name of le gentil Bernard.

BERNARD, RICHARD, an English divine, was born 1566, and died in March, 1641. For twenty years he was rector of Batcombe, Somersetshire.

BERNARDI.

He was author of 'Thesaurus Biblicus,' a laborious work, formerly much used by way of concordance. He also drew up an 'Abstract and Epitome of the Bible,' and, in 1627, published 'A Guide to Grand Jurymen with respect to Witches.' Besides the above he was the author of an allegorical work which, it has been supposed, furnished the idea of the Pilgrim's Progress. It is entitled, 'Isle of Man, or Legal Proceedings in Manshire against Sin,' 1635.

BERNARD, SALOMON, an engraver, called Le Petit Bernard, was born at Lyons about 1512. He was alive in 1580.

BERNARD, SAMUEL, an historical painter, who died at Paris 1687, aged 72. His son Samuel, was, on account of his wealth, called the Lucullus of his age. He was in the court of Louis XIV., and died 1739, aged 88.

BERNARD, SIMON, a French general and military engineer, born, 1779; died 5 Nov., 1839.

BERNARD, or BERNARDI, THEODORE, a painter, was born in Amsterdam, and studied under various masters, particularly Titian. Vertue was of opinion that this artist painted the pictures of the kings and bishops in Chichester Cathedral.

BERNARD, SIR THOMAS, D.C.L., son of Sir Francis Bernard, mentioned above, was born at Lincoln, 27 April, 1750. He received his education at Harvard College, in New England, and on his return to his native country, became a student of Lincoln's Inn. In 1780 he was called to the bar, but did not practise in the courts, contenting himself with the conveyancing business. In 1795 he was appointed treasurer of the Foundling Hospital, the estates belonging to which were vastly improved by his management. The year following, in conjunction with some friends, he instituted the 'Society for Bettering the Condition of the Poor,' the reports of which evince his philanthropic spirit. He also promoted various other societies and charities, particularly the Royal Institution, the British Gallery, the Free Chapel in St. Giles's, and other establishments. In 1809 he succeeded to the title of baronet, on the death of his brother in the West Indies. About this time he was created doctor of civil law at Oxford, and he was also chancellor of the diocese of Durham. He died at Leamington Spa, in Warwickshire, 1 July, 1818. His writings are 'Observations on the proceedings of the Friends of the Liberty of the Press,' 8vo.; 'A Letter to the bishop of Durham on the Measures under consideration for promoting the Relief of the Poor,' 8vo.; 'The New School,' 8vo.; 'The Barrington School, being an account of the Supply of Fish for the poor,' 8vo.; 'Spurina, or the Comforts of Old Age,' 8vo.; 'Case of the Salt duties,' 8vo.; 'The Cottagers' Meditations,' 12mo.; 'Dialogue between Monsieur Francois and John English,' 8vo.

BERNARD A SANCTO FRANCISCO, D.D., an English Franciscan, whose family name was Eyston, was, for a considerable time, professor of theology at Douay, and died 17 May, 1709. He was author of 'The Christian's Duty,' and a treatise on 'The Creed, Decalogue, and the Sacraments,' 4to., Aire, 1664.

BERNARDEZ, DIEGO, an elegiac poet, called the Portuguese Theocritus, the friend of Camoens, was born about 1540, and died 1596.

BERNARDI, FRANCESCO, commonly called SENESINO, an excellent soprano singer, born at Sienna, about 1680. Handel engaged him at a large salary for his opera in London, where he made his début in 1721. Died about 1750.

BERNARDI, JOHN, an engraver of gems, born at Castel-Bolognese, about 1495; died at Faenza 1555.

BERNARDI, JOHN, an adventurer, commonly called Major Bernardi, was born at Evesham, Worcestershire, 1657, being descended from an honourable family at Lucca in Italy. His father settled in England, and the son became a soldier in the service of the prince of Orange, who gave him a captain's commission. The English regiments being recalled by King James II. proved the ruin of Bernardi, who in 1696 was sent to Newgate, on the charge of being concerned in a plot to assassinate King William. Though he was never brought to trial, nor any evidence adduced against him, he was kept in confinement above forty years. He died in Newgate, 4 Sept., 1736, leaving a widow and numerous family wholly destitute of subsistence.

BERNARDI, STEPHEN, an eminent composer of masses and madrigals, flourished from 1611 to about 1634; and in 1623 was chapel-master of the Ducmo at Verona. He published a didactic work entitled 'Porta Musicale.'

BERNARDIN OF SIENNA, ST., a celebrated Franciscan, vicar-general of the strict observance of St. Francis in Italy, was born 1383, at Massa-Carrera, of a noble and ancient family. The greater part of his life was spent at Sienna, which was his father's native place, from whence he was called St. Bernardin of Sienna. His humility, patience, preachings, zeal in assisting those who had the plague, and the miracles ascribed to him, have acquired him immortal glory. He introduced a reformation in the strict observance of St. Francis, founded near three hundred monasteries, and refused the bishoprics of Sienna, Ferrara, and Urbino. He died 30 May, 1444, at Aquila, aged 61, and was canonized by Nicholas V. six years after. This example, among many others, proves the ignorance of those who imagine that saints are never canonized till they have been dead 100 years. The best edition of St. Bernardin's works is that published by P. John de la Haye, 1636, 2 vols. folio. They are almost all religious tracts.

BERNARDIN DE SAINT-PIERRE, JACQUES HENRI, a French writer, was born at Havre de Grace 1737. His education was liberal; but a great part of his youth was spent in rambling from one country to another. At length he entered into the corps of military engineers; but quitted it and went to Russia, where he obtained a commission as lieutenant. At the expiration of eighteen months he joined the Poles, and was taken prisoner; but was soon released, and returned to Paris. He now sailed for the isle of France; but being dissatisfied with the situation, he revisited his native country, and in 1773 published a relation of his voyage. In 1784 appeared his 'Studies of Nature,' which became a popular work, and the author was made intendant of the Botanical garden, with a liberal salary. In 1789 came out his beautiful tale of 'Paul and Virginia;' and about the same time his 'Indian Cottage.' He died in 1814, leaving a work entitled 'The Harmonies of Nature,' which has been translated into English; as also have all his other writings.

BERNARDONI, PETER ANTHONY, an Italian poet, born at Vignola in the duchy of Modena,

BERNIER.

30 June, 1672, became imperial poet at the court of Vienna, and died at Bologna, 19 Jan., 1714.

BERNEGGER, MATTHIAS, a learned critic and classical scholar, author of numerous works in Latin, was born at Hallstadt in Austria, 8 Feb., 1582, and became rector of the college and professor of history at Strasburg, where he died 3 Feb., 1640.

BERNERS, JOHN BOURCHIER, Lord, son of Humphrey Bouchier, eldest son of Sir John Bouchier, knight, Lord Berners of Hertfordshire, was born about 1474, and after an academical education at Balliol College, Oxford, was sent to travel. King Henry VII. employed him to quell the rebellion in Cornwall and Devon, headed by Michael Joseph, a blacksmith, about 1495. In the sixth year of Henry VIII. he was constituted chancellor of the exchequer for life. Afterwards he was appointed lieutenant of Calais, where he died 16 March, 1532-3. He wrote 'Of the duties of the Inhabitants of Calais;' 'Itē in vineam meam,' a comedy, which, according to a custom of those times, was acted in the great church at Calais after vespers; 'The history of the moost noble and valyaunt knight, Arthur of lytell brytayne, translated out of frensshe in to englysshe by noble Johan bourgheher knight, lorde Berners;,' 'The famous Exploits of Hugh of Burdeaux,' 3rd edit., 4to., 1601; 'The Castle of Love,' a romance, translated from the Spanish; a translation of 'The Golden Boke of Marcus Aurelius, Emperour, and eloquent oratour,' frequently printed; and a noted translation of Froissart's 'Chronicles.'

BERNERS, or BARNES, JULIANA, an early female writer, was a native of Essex, daughter of Sir James Berners, and sister to Richard Lord Berners, so that she must have been born about 1388. She had a liberal education and became prioress of Sopewell nunnery, a cell belonging to the abbey of St. Alban's. She was a beautiful woman, and very fond of masculine exercises, such as hawking and hunting, upon which she wrote a celebrated work, which is said to have been first printed at St. Alban's in 1481. There were several other editions, some of which include a treatise on the blazon of coat armour, though in all probability this was not compiled by Juliana Berners.

BERNI, or BERNIA, FRANCIS, born about 1490, at Lamporecchio in Tuscany, became a canon of Florence, and died 26 May, 1536. He distinguished himself so much as a satirical poet, that a species of burlesque was called, among the Italians, Berniasque. His 'Orlando Inamorato Rifatto' is much esteemed.

BERNI, COUNT FRANCIS, an orator and poet, born at Ferrara 1610; died 13 Oct., 1673.

BERNIER, FRANÇOIS, a native of Angers, was born about 1620, studied at Montpellier, and travelled to the Holy Land, Cairo, and Suez, and the Mogul empire, where he resided twelve years, eight of which were spent in the capacity of physician to the Emperor Aurungzebe. He wrote an account of his travels on his return to Paris, where he died 22 Sept., 1688.

BERNIER, JEAN, a physician, was born at Blois about 1622, and practised his profession at Paris, where he died 18 May, 1698. His works are 'Histoire de la ville de Blois;' 'Histoire chronologique de la médecine;' 'Anti-Menagiana;' 'Jugement sur Rabelais;' and 'Recueil de réflexions, pensées, et bons mots,' published under the pseudonym of J. de Popincourt.

BERNIER.

BERNIER, NICOLA, a French musician, was born at Mantes, 28 June, 1664, and became master of the chapel royal at Paris, where he died 5 Sept., 1734. His 'Motets,' his 'Miserere,' and his cantatas are highly esteemed.

BERNINI, JOHN LACRENCE, born at Naples 1598, became celebrated for his skill in painting, architecture, sculpture, and mechanics. No fewer than fifteen of his pieces adorn St. Peter's at Rome, the most admired of which are the altar and tabernacle and St. Peter's chair. He died at Rome, 28 Nov., 1680. It is said that on viewing the picture of Charles I. by Vandyke, from which he executed three busts, he exclaimed that he had never seen so unfortunate-looking a face before.

BERNIS, FRANÇOIS JOACHIM DE PIERRES DE, a French cardinal and archbishop of Albi, was born at St. Marcel de l'Ardeche, 21 May, 1715, and died at Rome 3 Nov., 1794. He acquired some distinction as a poet.

BERNO, founder and first abbat of the abbey of Cluny, died 1 Jan., 927, in great reputation for sanctity.

BERNO, abbat of Richenau, was a native of France, and died 7 Jan., 1045. He was distinguished as a poet, orator, musician, philosopher, and divine. His treatise on the Mass, and his life of Udoric, bishop of Augsburg, have been printed.

BERNOUILLI, DANIEL, son of John, mentioned below, was born at Groningen, 9 Feb., 1700, and died 17 March, 1782. He was intended for a mercantile profession, but following the pursuits of his father, he visited Italy and Russia, and was appointed to a professorial chair at Basle. His learning was extensive, and he gained or divided nine prizes with the most illustrious literati of Europe, an honour attained by no other except Euler, his pupil and friend.

BERNOUILLI, JAMES, a celebrated mathematician, born at Basle 1654. He studied in his native town, and pursued the bent of his genius in mathematical learning. He travelled to Geneva, France, Flanders, and England, where his reputation had preceded him, in consequence of his learned treatise on the comet of 1680. He was invited to fill the professorial chair at Heidelberg 1664, but declined the offer. Three years afterwards, however, he succeeded to a vacant chair in his native city. Died 16 Aug., 1705. His discoveries in mathematics, especially the properties of the curve, have immortalised his name.

BERNOUILLI, JAMES, son of John, the astronomer royal, was born at Basle, 17 Oct., 1759, became professor first of natural philosophy in his native city, then professor of mathematics at St. Petersburg. He was drowned in the Neva, 3 July, 1789.

BERNOUILLI, JOHN, was born at Basle, 4 Nov., 1744, and died at Berlin, where he was astronomer royal, 13 July, 1807. He published a large number of works on astronomy and other subjects.

BERNOUILLI, JOHN, brother to James, was professor of mathematics at Groningen in 1695, and afterwards succeeded his brother at Basle, where he was born in 1667, and where he died 1 Jan., 1748. He visited France, and gained the friendship of Malebranche, La Pierre, Cassini, Leibnitz, and Newton. His works were published at Geneva, 1742, in 7 vols. 4to.

BERNSTORF, JOHN HARTWIG ERNEST, Count, a celebrated statesman, born of a noble family at Hanover, 13 May, 1712. After visiting several European courts he settled in Denmark, at the desire of Frederic V., who made him prime minister, in which situation he distinguished himself by forming excellent institutions, encouraging commerce, patronising men of letters, and improving agriculture. During the seven years' war he preserved a perfect neutrality, and by his skillful management succeeded in adding Holstein to the Danish dominions. Died 18 Feb., 1772. His nephew, Count Andrew Peter Bernstorff, who was born 1735, succeeded his uncle as minister for foreign affairs, and died 21 Jan., 1797.

BEROALDE, MATTHIEU, a French Protestant, author of 'Chronicon, sacræ Scripturæ auctoritate constitutum'; died 1576.

BEROALDE DE VERVILLE, FRANÇOIS, son of the preceding, was born at Paris, 28 April, 1558. After his father's death he returned to the church of Rome, and taking orders became canon of St. Gatien at Tours. Died about 1612. He was a good mathematician and mechanic, but excessively vain, and a pretender to alchemy. Among his works are 'Apprehensions Spirituelles'; 'Histoire véritable, ou le Voyage des Princes fortunés'; 'Le Cabinet de Minerve'; and 'Moyen de parvenir.'

BEROALDO, PHILIP, the elder, one of the most eminent scholars of the fifteenth century, was born 7 Dec., 1453, at Bologna, where he became professor of belles lettres. His chief merit was the publication of good editions of the ancient Roman authors, with learned commentaries. Died 7 July, 1505.

BEROALDO, PHILIP, the younger, nephew of the preceding, was born at Bologna, 1 Oct., 1472, and became professor of polite literature there 1496. He afterwards went to Rome, and was appointed librarian of the Vatican. Died 1518. He published 'Taciti Annalium libri quinque priores,' and 'Odarum libri tres, et epigrammatum liber unus.' Of the latter work there are no fewer than six French translations.

BEROSUS, priest of the temple of Belus at Babylon, in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, wrote a history of Chaldæa, fragments of which are preserved in the writings of several ancient authors, particularly Josephus and Eusebius. The five books of antiquities printed under the name of Berossus, by Annii Viterbo in 1545 are forgeries.

BERQUIN, ARNAUD, a French writer, born at Bordeaux about 1749; died 21 Dec., 1791. He wrote 'Idyls' and some romances, but afterwards applied himself to the composition of books for children. His 'Ami des Enfants' was translated into English.

BERQUIN, LOUIS DE, a gentleman of Artois, who was executed at Paris for heresy, 17 April, 1539. He wrote some polemical works.

BERRETINI, NICHOLAS, an Italian painter, born 1617; died 1682. He was a disciple of Carlo Maratti.

BERRETINI, PETER. See CORTONA.

BERRI, JEAN DUC DE, third son of John king of France, was born 30 Nov., 1340, and died 15 June, 1416.

BERRIDGE, JOHN, a divine, was born at Kingston, Nottinghamshire, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1738; M.A. 1742). Having taken orders he became conspicuous by advocating extreme 'evangelical' doctrines. The late William Cole remarks in his MS. collections:— 'This man I was acquainted with when I was at Clare Hall, and a scholar of Mr. Freeman's foundation; at which time he was looked upon as rather of an odd and melancholy turn. He was educated among the dissenters, and while fellow resident much frequented their company. He has now the honour to be head of a sect called 'Berridges' in the neighbourhood of Cambridge, and at Waterbeche used frequently to preach in a barn, where he to this day contributes to the support of many labourers, gardeners, collar-makers, tailors, &c., as preachers, who go from thence on Sundays to neighbouring villages to preach.' In 1749 he accepted the curacy of Stapleford, near Cambridge, and in 1755 was presented by Clare Hall to the vicarage of Everton, Bedfordshire, where he continued to reside until his death on 22 Jan., 1793. Mr. Berridge was an intimate friend of Wesley, Whitefield, and other divines of that class. He published a hymn-book in 1760, chiefly a collection from various authors; but he subsequently destroyed all the copies of this work that he could meet with. He was author of 'The Christian World unmasked: Pray Come & Peep;' and 'Sion's Songs; or, Hymns composed for the use of them that love and follow the Lord Jesus Christ in Sincerity,' 1785. An edition of his works, with a memoir of his life, numerous letters, anecdotes, outlines of sermons, and observations on passages of Scripture, was published by the Rev. Richard Whittingham, vicar of Potton, Bedfordshire, 8vo., London, 1838.

BERRIMAN, JOHN, was born 1689, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. After taking orders he was for many years curate of St. Swithin, and lecturer of St. Mary, Aldermanbury. In 1744 he was presented to the rectory of St. Alban's, which he retained until his death, 8 Dec., 1768, being then the oldest incumbent in London. He published in 1741 'Eight Sermons at Lady Moyer's lecture,' entirely of the critical kind, and giving an account of above one hundred Greek MSS. of St. Paul's Epistles, many of them not before collated.

BERRIMAN, WILLIAM, D.D., son of a London apothecary, was born 24 Sept., 1688, and at seventeen years of age became a member of Oriel College, Oxford. Afterwards he was appointed curate and lecturer of Ailhallows, Thames Street, London, and lecturer of St. Michael's, Queenhithe. In 1720 he became domestic chaplain to Dr. Robinson, bishop of London, who collated him to the living of St. Andrew Undershaft. He was elected a fellow of Eton College 1727, and died 5 Feb., 1749-50. His writings are, 'A seasonable Review of Mr. Whiston's Account of primitive Doxologies,' 1719; 'An historical account of the Trinitarian Controversy, in eight Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture,' 1725; 'A Defence of some Passages in the Historical Account,' 1731; 'Brief Remarks on Mr. Chandler's Introduction to the History of the Inquisition,' 1733; 'A Review of the Remarks;' 'Sermons at Boyle's Lectures,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1733; and 'Christian Doctrines and Duties explained and recommended,' 2 vols. 8vo. The last work was published after the author's decease by his brother, John Berriman, M.A.

BERRÖW, CAPEL, an English divine, was probably the son of Capel Berröw, who for forty years was curate of Northill, Bedfordshire, and who died 28 Oct., 1751. The son was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford (B.A. 1738). He afterwards, however, became a member of Christ's College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree 1758. Having taken orders he became rector of Rossington, Northamptonshire; lecturer of St. Benet's and St. Peter's, Paul's Wharf, London; and chaplain to the judges and sergeants of Sergeants' Inn. He died at his apartments, Jermyn Street, St. James's, 5 Oct., 1782. He was author of 'A pre-existent Lapse of human souls, demonstrated from reason,' 8vo., London, 1762; 'A Lapse of Human Souls in a state of Pre-existence the only original sin, and the ground work of the Gospel dispensation,' 8vo., London, 1766; and 'Theological Disquisitions,' 4to., London, 1772.

BERRUGUETE, ALONZO, a Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, died at Madrid 1545.

BERRUYER, JOSEPH ISAAC, a French Jesuit, born at Rouen 7 Nov., 1681; died at Paris 18 Feb., 1758. His 'History of the People of God' was condemned by the Pope.

BERRY, SIR EDWARD, Bart., a British admiral, died at Bath 13 July, 1831, aged 63.

BERRY, SIR JOHN, a naval commander, born at Knowston, Devonshire, 1635. He distinguished himself at the battle of Southwold Bay, for which he was knighted. In 1682 he commanded the 'Gloucester' frigate, in which he was conveying the duke of York to Scotland, when by the carelessness of the pilot the ship was lost off the Humber. Sir John, however, saved the duke, for which he was promoted to a flag, and commanded as vice-admiral under Lord Dartmouth at the demolition of Tangier. On his return he was made a commissioner of the navy, which office he held with his other appointments after the Revolution. He was accidentally poisoned on board his ship at Portsmouth 14 Feb., 1691.

BERRY, WILLIAM, an ingenious Scotch artist, was born about 1730, and served his time to Mr. Proctor, a seal engraver in Edinburgh. For a long time he was employed in cutting heraldic seals. During the course of his life, however, he executed ten or twelve heads after the antique, in which he attained great excellence. Among these were the heads of Thomson the poet, Mary queen of Scots, Oliver Cromwell, Julius Caesar, a young Hercules, and Mr. Hamilton of Bangour, the poet. Died 3 June, 1783.

BERRYAT, JEAN, a French physician, chiefly known as the projector of the 'Collection Académique,' containing extracts from the most important articles in the memoirs of various learned societies. Died 1754.

BERSMANN, GREGORY, a German writer, born at Annaberg, in Misnia, 11 March, 1538; died 5 Oct., 1611. He put into verse the Psalms of David, and published editions of Virgil, Ovid, Æsop, Horace, Lucan, Cicero, and other authors of antiquity.

BERTAUT, JEAN, a French poet and prelate, was born at Caen 1552, and became first chaplain to Queen Catherine de Medicis, secretary of the cabinet and reader to Henry III., counsellor of state, abbat of Aulnai, and lastly bishop of Sées. He composed poems, sacred and profane, canticles, songs, sonnets, and psalms. Died 8 June, 1611.

BERTELSE, JOHN, a Benedictine monk, was born at Louvaine, and died at Echternach 19 June, 1607. He wrote in Latin a catalogue of the abbats of Echternach, and a History of Luxemburg.

BERTHAULD, PIERRE, a French historian, was born at Sens 1600, became a priest of the Gratory and dean of Chartres; and died 19 Oct., 1681. His

BERTHEAU.

'Floris Gallicus' and 'Floris Belgicus' were regarded as the best abridgements of French history; but the work from which he derived most reputation was his learned dissertation, 'De An.'

BERTHEAU, CHARLES, a French Protestant minister, born at Montpellier 1660. In 1685 he came to England, and the following year was chosen one of the ministers of the Walloon church in Threadneedle Street, London, where he discharged the duties of the pastoral office for about forty-four years. Died 25 Dec., 1732. He published two volumes of French sermons, one of which is on the singular subject of inquiring after æternitas in a Christian manner.

BERTHET, JEAN, a French ecclesiastic, was a member first of the society of Jesus, and next of the order of St. Benedict. He wrote a treatise on the Real Presence, and many other learned works. Born 24 Feb., 1622; died 1692.

BERTHIER, GUILLAUME FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit of eminent piety and extensive erudition, born 7 April, 1704; died 15 Dec., 1782. He continued Father Brumoy's 'History of the Gallican Church,' and for seventeen years conducted the 'Journal de Trevoux' to the satisfaction of the learned and the public in general, though he incurred the wrath of Voltaire, whom he had criticised with the severity of justice. He also published 'Commentaire sur les Pseaumes et sur Job,' 'Oeuvres Spirituelles,' and 'Refutation du Contrat Social.'

BERTHIER, LOUIS ALEXANDRE, a marshal of France, prince of Neuchâtel and of Wagram, was born at Versailles 20 Nov., 1753; died 1 June, 1815.

BERTHOLET-FLEMAEL, a painter, born at Lege 1614. He improved himself at Rome by copying the works of the best masters, and in 1647 returned to his native place, but afterwards went to Paris, where he became a professor in the academy of painting. Died 1675. His pictures are enriched with architectural representations in a fine style.

BERTHOLET, CLAUDE LOUIS, a distinguished chemical philosopher, was born at Talloire, near Arancy, in Savoy, 9 Dec., 1748. After studying at Chambéry and Turin, he went to Paris, where he continued chiefly to reside during the remainder of his life. He obtained the appointment of physician to the duke of Orleans, and shortly afterwards published his 'Essays' on various chemical subjects. In 1781 he was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, and a few years afterwards was appointed government commissary and superintendent of dyeing processes. When the French Revolution broke out he visited almost every part of France for the purpose of pointing out the means of extracting and purifying saltpetre, then much needed for the manufacture of gunpowder. In 1796 he proceeded, in company with Monge, to Italy, in order to select works of science and art to be sent to the French capital. On this occasion he became acquainted with Bonaparte, which led to his joining the expedition to Egypt, and the subsequent formation of the Institute of Cairo. Under the emperor he was created count, and after the restoration of the Bourbons he was made a peer of France. Died 6 Nov., 1822. Berthollet wrote more than eighty memoirs, which were mostly inserted in the 'Annales de Chimie,' the 'Journal de Physique,' or the 'Memoirs d'Arcueil.' He aided Pourcroix and Guyton de Morveau to found a new chemical nomenclature, which was of great advantage to later writers on chemistry. In a paper on Soaps, he showed that they are chemical compounds, and not mere mixtures of the ingredients. In his 'Essai de Statique Chimique,' he combated Bergmann's views concerning chemical affinity: but his own views have not met with much support from later chemists. He discovered the ammonium of silver (fulminating silver). His papers contain a multitude of interesting facts which his experiments had brought out; but the subsequent discoveries of Davy in some cases overturned the hypotheses which Berthollet formed for the explanation of his facts.—Penny Cycl.

BERTHOLON DE ST. LAZARE, NICHOLAS, a French philosopher and Lazarist father, a native of Lyons, who died in 1799, was first distinguished at Montpellier, as professor of natural philosophy, and afterwards as professor of history in his native city. He was the friend of Dr. Franklin, and according to his plan, was employed to erect a great number of conductors, to preserve buildings from lightning, at Paris and Lyons. He published a number of works on electricity and physical science.

BERTHOUD, FERDINAND, an eminent French marine clock-maker, a member of the Institute, of the Royal Society of London, and of the legion of honour, was born at Plancemont in Neuchâtel, 19 March, 1727; and died 20 June, 1807. He published a number of works on horology.

BERTI, ALEXANDER POMPEY, an Italian ecclesiastic of the congregation of the Mother of God, was born at Lucca, 23 Dec., 1686; and died at Rome, 23 March, 1752. He was one of the most distinguished members of the society of Arcadians at Rome, and of many other societies. Mazzuchelli gives a list of twenty-four works published by him, and of twenty-one that remained in MS.

BERTI, JOHN LAURENCE, a famous Augustinian, born at Serravezza in Tuscany, 28 May, 1605; died at Pisa, 26 May, 1766. His grand work 'De disciplinis theologis' appeared at Rome in 8 vols. 4to. This work being attacked as favourable to the Jansenists, the author, at the suggestion of Pope Benedict XIV., wrote a vindication of himself in 2 vols. 4to. He also wrote an ecclesiastical history in Latin, dissertations, dialogues, panegyrics, academical discourses, and some Italian poems.

BERTIE, ROBERT, earl of Lindsey. See LINDSEY.

BERTIE, WILLOUGHBY, earl of Abingdon. See ABINGDON.

BERTIER, JOSEPH ÉTIENNE, a priest of the oratory, was born at Aix in Provence, 1710; and died 15 Nov., 1783. He wrote two works, which once attracted the attention of naturalists, viz., 'Physique des corps animés,' 1755; and 'Physique des comètes,' 1760.

BERTIN, ANTOINE, a French amatory poet, born in the isle of Bourbon, 10 Oct., 1752; died at St. Domingo, June, 1790. He entered the military service of France, and became a captain of horse and a chevalier of St. Louis. His collected works first appeared at Paris in 1785, 2 vols. 18mo.

BERTIN, EUPHÈRE JOSEPH, a French anatomist, born at Tremblay, in Brittany, 21 Sept., 1712; died 25 Feb., 1781. He published a 'Treatise on Osteology,' and other anatomical works.

BERTIN, NICHOLAS, a painter, born 1664, at Paris, where he died 1736.

BERTIN, THEODORE PIERRE, a French writer and translator, born at Donemarie near Provins, 1751; died at Paris, 1819. The best known of his works is 'Système universel et complet de Sténographie,' 8vo., Paris, 1792, an adaptation to the French language of Taylor's system of short-hand.

BERTINI, ANTHONY FRANCIS, an Italian physician and medical writer, of Florence, was born at Castel Fiorentino, 28 Dec., 1658, and died 10 Dec., 1726.

BERTINI, JOSEPH MARIA XAVIER, son of the preceding, excelled his father as a medical practitioner, and died 1756. He published a celebrated discourse on the medicinal use of mercury.

BERTINI, SALVATORE, a musical composer, born 1721, at Palermo, where he died, 1794.

BERTIUS, PETER, an eminent geographical writer, was born at Beveren in Flanders, 14 Nov., 1565, and received his education in the suburbs of London, under Christian Rychius, and his learned daughter-in-law, Petronia Lansberg. In 1606 he was appointed regent of the college of Leyden, but was deprived of this preferment on account of his having taken part with the disciples of Arminius. About 1620 he went to France, and embraced the Catholic religion. He had previously been honoured with the title of cosmographer to Louis XIII., and he was now appointed professor of rhetoric in the college of Boncourt, then historiographer to the king, and lastly assistant to the regius professor of mathematics. Died 3 Oct., 1629. Bertius wrote many works, theological and geographical, but the former are now forgotten. Of the latter the most esteemed are 'Theatrum Geographiæ veterum,' 2 vols. folio; 'Commentariorum rerum Germanicarum libri tres;' 'Notitia chorographica episcopatum Galliæ;' and 'Brevarium orbis terrarum.'

BERTOLI, JOHN DOMINIC, an Italian antiquary and ecclesiastic, was born at Mereto in Friuli, and died some time after 1750. His principal work is 'The Profane and Sacred Antiquities of Aquileia.'

BERTON, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, who flourished about 1381. He was chancellor of the university of Oxford, and in that capacity caused the opinions of Wicliff to be declared heretical. He wrote several treatises against Wicliff's doctrines.

BERTOUX, GUILLAUME, a French Jesuit, born 14 Nov., 1723. On the suppression of the society he was appointed canon of Senlis, where he died. His works are 'Histoire poétique tirée des poètes Français;' 'Anecdotes Françaises depuis l'établissement de la monarchie jusqu'au règne de Louis XV.;' and 'Anecdotes Espagnoles et Portugaises,' 2 vols. 8vo.

BERTRAM. See RATRANMUS.

BERTRAM, CORNELLE BONAVENTURE, a Protestant minister, born at Thouars, in Poitou, 1531, became professor of Hebrew successively at Geneva, Frankenthal, and Lausanne, at which latter city he died, 1594. He published 'A dissertation on the Republic of the Hebrews;' 'A revision of the French Bible of Geneva, according to the Hebrew text;' an edition of Pagnini's 'Thesaurus linguæ sanctæ;' 'A parallel of the Hebrew Tongue with the Arabic;' and 'Lucubrations Frankendalenses.'

BERTRAM, PHILIP BNEST, professor of law at Halle, was born at Zerbst, 1726, and died 13 Oct., 1777. He wrote in German 'An Essay on the History of Learning;' 'History of the house and principality of Anhalt;' and a continuation of Ferrera's 'History of Spain.'

BERZELIUS.

BERTRAND, ELIAS, an ingenious Swiss writer, long known by his labours in various branches of philosophy and literature, and especially in natural history, and political and rural economy, was born at Orbe, in Switzerland, 1712, and was living in 1782. The date of his decease is not recorded.

BERTRAND, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French physician and medical writer, born 12 July, 1670; died 10 Sept., 1752.

BERTRANDI, JOHN AMBROSE MARIA, an eminent surgeon and anatomist, born at Turin, 18 Oct., 1723; died 6 Dec., 1765. His principal publication was 'Trattato delle operazioni di Chirurgia,' 2 vols. 8vo.

BERULLE, PIERRE DE, a cardinal, born 14 Feb., 1575, of a noble family in Champagne. He distinguished himself by his learning and virtue, and was the friend of St. Francis of Sales, and the Blessed Cæsar de Bus. He first established the Spanish order of Carmelite nuns, and the congregation of the Oratory in France. Urban VIII. created him a cardinal, 1627. He accompanied Queen Henrietta Maria into England, where he was treated with great distinction, and received abundant marks of esteem. He died in the act of celebrating mass, 2 Oct., 1629. Several of his works have been printed. It was at the instance of Cardinal de Berulle that Des Cartes resolved to publish his philosophy.

BERVIC, JEAN GUILLAUME BALVAY, an engraver, born at Paris, 25 May, 1756; died 25 March, 1822.

BERWICK, JAMES FITZJAMES, Duke of, natural son of James II., by Arabella Churchill, sister to the duke of Marlborough. He was born at Moulins, in 1671, and entered early into the French service. At the age of fifteen he was wounded at the siege of Buda. In 1688 he was sent to Ireland, where he distinguished himself at the siege of Londonderry and the battle of the Boyne. He was afterwards employed on various services, for which he was rewarded with the rank of marshal of France. He gained the victory of Almanza over the English and their allies, which fixed Philip V. on the throne of Spain. He was killed by a cannon-ball at the siege of Philipsburgh, 12 June, 1734.

BERYLLUS, bishop of Bostra, in Arabia, flourished about 230. He asserted that Christ before his incarnation had no proper existence, nor any divinity but that of the Father residing in him. Origen had a conference with him on this subject, and Beryllus, convinced by his arguments, renounced his heresy.

BERZELIUS, JAMES, Baron, a distinguished chemist, professor of chemistry in the university of Upsala, was born in the village of Vafversunda, in Ostgothland, 29 Aug., 1779. He studied at the university of Upsala, and in 1799 became assistant to Dr. Hedin, superintendent physician of the mineral waters of Medevi. His first published essay was a dissertation, written in conjunction with Ekeberg, upon these waters. He graduated at Upsala 1804, and afterwards became assistant to Andrew Spaurmann, professor of medicine, botany, and chemical pharmacy, at Stockholm. On the death of Spaurmann, Berzelius succeeded to the chair, 1806. In 1810 he was made president of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Stockholm, and in the same year received the appointment of assessor of the medical college, and was made a member of the royal sanitary board. At this time, though only about thirty years of age, he had acquired great reputation as a chemist. He had published a work on zonal chemistry containing many original investigations respecting the fluids of the animal body, and which was subsequently translated—as indeed were his other works—into almost every European language. In 1812 he visited England, where he was most cordially received. In 1815 he was made a knight, and in 1821 a knight-companion of the order of Vasa. He received the grand cross in 1820, and was created a baron in 1835. Died at Stockholm 7 Aug., 1848. He published several most valuable works on chemical science, besides contributing a vast number of communications to the 'Transactions' of various learned societies. In a century which has produced a greater number of distinguished chemists than, perhaps, of any other class of men of science, Bessel stands out as a star of the first magnitude, his patient labours having done more to lay the foundations of organic chemistry than those of any other chemist.

BESLER, BASIL, an apothecary and botanist of Nuremberg, born 1561; died 1639. He published a magnificent work entitled 'Hortus Eystettensis,' Nurem., 1613.

BESLER, MICHAEL ROBERT, a physician at Nuremberg, son of the preceding, was born 1601, and died 8 Feb., 1661. He published several works on botany and natural science.

BESLY, JEAN, king's advocate at Fontenay-le-Comte, and an able French antiquary, was born at Combolles-les-Royaux, in Poitou, 1572, and died 15 May, 1644. His principal works are a History of the Earls of Poitou and the Dukes of Guéneuc; and a collection of documents respecting the bishops of Poitiers.

BESOIGNE, JEROME, a doctor of the Sorbonne, born at Paris, 1686; died 25 Jan., 1763. He wrote a History of the Abbey of Port Royal, and other works.

BESOLD, CHRISTOPHER, an eminent legal and historical writer, born at Tubingen 1577, became professor of law at Ingolstadt, where he died 15 Sept., 1658.

BESPLAS, JOSEPH MARIE ANNE GROS DE, a French divine, highly distinguished for pulpit eloquence, was born 13 Oct., 1734, and died 26 Aug., 1783. He published a treatise 'Of the Uses of public happiness;' and an 'Essay on the eloquence of the pulpit.'

BESSARION, JOHN, one of the revivers of literature in the fifteenth century, was born at Trebizonde, 1379, or 1395. He entered the order of St. Basil, and passed twenty-one years in a monastery of Peloponnesus, employed in the study of divinity and polite literature. In 1438, when the emperor, John Paleologus, formed the design of going to the council of Ferrara, to reunite the Latin and Greek churches, Bessarion was one of the ecclesiastics whom he selected to accompany him into Italy. In the end, Bessarion gave in his adhesion to the Latin church, and to reward his zeal, Pope Eugenius IV. created him a cardinal-priest, 1439. He obtained the confidence and friendship of several popes. Nicholas V. appointed him archbishop of Siponto, and cardinal-bishop; and Pius II. conferred on him the title of patriarch of Constantinople 1463. He was employed on four important embassies, the last being to Louis XI. of France, who, it is said, offered him such gross personal indignities, that he died of chagrin. However this may be, his death occurred at Ravenna, as he was journeying back to Rome, 19 Nov., 1472. His body was conveyed to Rome, and the Pope attended his funeral, an honour never bestowed before on any cardinal. His most celebrated works were his Latin translations of Xenophon's 'Memorabilia,' and Aristotle's 'Metaphysics;' and his treatise 'Contra calumniatorem Platonis,' against George of Trebizonde.

BESSEL, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a Prussian astronomer, born 1784; died 17 March, 1846.

BESSEL, GONFRAY DE, abbat of the Benedictine monastery of Gottwich in Austria, was born 5 Sept., 1672, and died 20 Jan., 1749. The 'Chronicon Gottwicense' has been attributed to him, though there is reason for believing that the real author was Francis Joseph de Hahn, afterwards bishop of Bamberg. Bessel published the letters of St. Augustine to Optatus, 'On the punishment of infants who die unbaptized.'

BESSIERES, JEAN BAPTISTE, duke of Istria, a marshal of France, born 6 Aug., 1768; died 1 May, 1813.

BEST, SAMUEL, known as the Prophet, died a Bridport 4 March, 1825, aged 87. During the last thirty years of his life he entertained the idea that he should be the leader of the children of Israel to rebuild the city of Jerusalem.

BESTE, HENRY DIGBY, an English novelist and miscellaneous writer, was born 21 Oct., 1768, being the son of a prebendary of Lincoln. He became a commoner of University College, Oxford, and afterwards a demy of Magdalen College, where he proceeded M.A. 1791. He was afterwards elected to a fellowship, which he vacated on the family estate coming to him on the death of his mother. Thereupon he retired to Lincoln, where he resided for some time. He had taken deacon's orders, and was very active as a preacher, but doubts sprang up in his mind concerning the character of the Established Church, and the result was that in 1798 he was reconciled to the Church of Rome. Subsequently he travelled abroad, and died 23 May, 1836. His works are 'The Christian Religion briefly defended against the Philosophers and Republicans of France,' 8vo., London, 1793; 'Four Years in France, or a Narrative of an English Family's residence there during that period, preceded by some account of the conversion of the author to the Catholic Faith' (anon.), 8vo., London, 1826; 'Personal and Literary Memorials' (anon.), 8vo., London, 1829; and 'Poverty and the Baronet's Family, a Catholic Story,' 12mo., London, 1846.

BESTON, or BESODUNUS, JOHN, D.D., prior of the Carmelite monastery at Lynn, Norfolk, died 1428. He composed, in Latin, several works on theology and the scholastic philosophy.

BETHAM, EDWARD, B.D., was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. Having taken orders, he was elected a fellow of Eton, and presented to the living of Greenford, Middlesex. Died 1783. He gave £2000 for the maintenance of the botanical garden at Cambridge, and founded and endowed a charity school in his parish.

BETHAM, JOHN, D.D., an English divine, born in Warwickshire, and educated in the English college at Douay, where he completed his studies, and was ordained priest. Afterwards he went to Paris, and was there created D.D. He was appointed chaplain and preacher to James II., and followed his royal master to St. Germain's, being afterwards preceptor to the Chevalier St. George. Died 1709. He wrote 'A Sermon before King

BETHAM.

James II., 25 March, 1686,' 4to., London; and 'Observations upon the Bulla Plantata, at the request of the Pope's nuncio,' MS. He established St. Gregory's seminary at Paris.

BETHAM, PETER, an early English translator, published 'The Precepts of Warre, set forth by James Erle of Purtilia, and translated into English by Peter Betham,' 8vo., London, 1544, with a dedication to Lord Chancellor Audley.

BETHAM, Sir WILLIAM, F.S.A., was son of the Rev. William Betham, some time of Stonham Aspel, Suffolk. He was born at Stradbroke in the county about 1780, and was originally bred to the business of a printer in London, but having a natural taste for genealogy and antiquities, he engaged in the revision of the third and fourth volumes of the second impression of Gough's edition of Camden's 'Britannia.' About 1805 he went to Dublin, as clerk to Sir Chichester Fortescue (then Ulster king-at-arms) and Athlone pursuivant. In or before 1809 he was appointed deputy Ulster; and on the death of Sir Chichester in 1820, he became Ulster king. In 1812 he was appointed genealogist attendant on the order of St. Patrick, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood from the lord lieutenant. Soon after his arrival in Ireland he was also appointed deputy keeper of the records of the Birmingham Tower at Dublin Castle. These official appointments were less desirable from their actual emoluments than from the facilities which they afforded for pursuing the researches connected with his professional engagements as a herald. Sir William was an ardent investigator into the ancient remains of Ireland, and was also much devoted to the study of the Celtic languages and the philology of the Irish tongue. He was a sub-commissioner on the Irish Record Commission, a member of, and secretary to, the Royal Irish Academy, and a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London. He died at his residence, Rochfort House, Blackrock, near Dublin, 26 Oct., 1853. His works are 'Irish Antiquarian Researches, or Illustrations of Irish History,' 1827-8; 'Dignities, Feudal and Parliamentary, and the Constitutional Legislature of the United Kingdom,' 1830; 'The Origin and History of the Constitution of England, and of the Early Parliaments of Ireland,' 1834; 'The Gael and Cymbri; or, an Inquiry into the Origin and History of the Irish, Scots, Britons, and Gauls; and of the Caledonians, Picts, Welsh, Cornish, and Bretons,' 1834; 'Etruria Celtaica, Etruscan Literature and Antiquities investigated; or the Language of that people compared and identified with the Hermo-Celtic, and both shown to be Phœnician,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1842. His greatest MS. work was his Index to the names of all persons mentioned in the wills at the Prerogative Office in Dublin. It consists of forty large folio volumes.

BETHEL, SLINGSBY, an Independent and a republican, was one of the most active of that party who were for excluding the duke of York from the crown. He was one of the sheriffs of London and Middlesex, 1680. He wrote 'The Interest of the Princes and States of Europe,' 8vo., London, 1694, at the end of which is a narrative of the proceedings of the parliament which sat in the protectorate of Richard Cromwell; 'Observations on a Letter written by the D. of B.,' and 'The World's Mistake in Oliver Cromwell.'

BETHENCOURT, JEAN DE, baron of St. Martin-le-Gaillard in the comté of Eu, in France, and chamberlain to Charles VI., succeeded in taking possession, in the name of France, of the Canary Islands. Died 1425.

BETHUNE, ALEXANDER, a literary peasant, born at Upper Rankellor in the parish of Monimail, Fifeshire, about the end of July, 1804. He was brought up as a common labourer, and only earned a shilling a day. His leisure hours were diligently devoted to literary pursuits, and besides contributing several tales and other pieces to the periodicals of the day, he completed a series of 'Tales and Sketches of the Scottish Peasantry,' a work which, on its publication in 1838, was justly admired for its truthfulness and vigorous delineation of rustic character, as well as the author's general knowledge of human nature. Afterwards, in conjunction with his brother John, he wrote a series of 'Lectures on Practical Economy,' 1839; but it did not meet with the success which had been anticipated. In 1842 he visited Edinburgh, and entered into arrangements for the publication of 'The Scottish Peasant's Fireside,' which appeared in the following year. He died at Newburgh, 13 June, 1843. His Life, with selections from his correspondence, and Literary Remains, was published in 1845 by William M'Combie.—Anderson.

BETHUNE, Sir HENRY LINDSAY, baronet, of Kilconquhar in Scotland, was born 12 April, 1787, and in early life entered the military service of the East India Company, in which he attained the rank of major. Afterwards he went to Persia for the purpose of instructing the celebrated Abbas Mirza, crown prince, in the organization of his artillery, and succeeded in gaining his entire respect and confidence. After a period of about sixteen years spent in the service of Persia, he returned to his native country, where he resided till 1834. The throne of Persia had then devolved on Mahomed Mirza, son of the gallant Abbas Mirza, who had died in his father's life-time. Mahomed's succession, however, was opposed by Zulli Sultan, the younger son of Abbas, and uncle of Mahomed. This being the state of affairs, Lord Palmerston despatched Bethune to Persia as the accredited agent of the British government. He warmly espoused the cause of Mahomed, attacked the rebel force, and took Zulli Sultan prisoner. For this service he was made master-general of artillery to the shah. He returned to his native country in 1835, and in the following year was created a baronet. In 1850 he again visited Persia, and died at Tabreez, 19 Feb., 1851.—Anderson.

BETHUNE, JOHN, younger brother of Alexander, mentioned above, was born in the parish of Monimail, Fifeshire, 1812. Like his talented brother, he was a day-labourer nearly all his life. He contributed five pieces to his brother's 'Tales and Sketches of the Scottish Peasantry,' and in conjunction with his brother wrote 'Lectures on Practical Economy.' He likewise contributed a number of poems to the 'Scottish Christian Herald,' and wrote some pieces for the 'Christian Instructor.' Died 1 Sept., 1839. A collection of his poems, preceded by a memoir, was published shortly after his death by his brother Alexander.—Anderson.

BETHUNE, JOHN DRINKWATER, a lieutenant-colonel in the British army, was born at Latchford, Cheshire, 9 June, 1762; and died at Thorncroft, near Leatherhead, Surrey, 16 Jan., 1844. He wrote a valuable 'History of the Siege of Gibraltar,' which went through four editions; and a 'Narrative of the Battle of St. Vincent.'

BETHUNE.

BETHUNE, JOHN ELLIOT DRINKWATER, a German scholar and miscellaneous writer, elder son of Lieutenant-colonel Bethune, mentioned above, was born about 1801, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1823). He went to the bar, and in 1848 was appointed fourth ordinary (or legislative) member of the Supreme Council of India. This office he retained till his death, which took place at Calcutta 12 Aug., 1851. His greatest achievement in India was the establishment of a school in European bands for native females of the higher classes. He was author of 'The Maid of Orleans, translated from Schiller,' 8vo., London, 1835 (privately printed); 'Grant's Farm Journal, for keeping on an improved plan accounts of the daily work, income, and outgoings on a farm; with convenient arrangements for ledgering them,' folio, Edinburgh, 1843; and 'Specimens of Swedish and German Poetry translated. Part I. Poems of Esaias Tegner. Part II. Schiller's Maid of Orleans,' 8vo., London, 1848. He also contributed memoirs of Galileo and Kepler to the 'Lives of Eminent Persons,' published by the Useful Knowledge Society about 1833.

BETHUNE, MAXIMILIEN DE, duke of Sully. See SULLY.

BETHUNE, PHILIPPE DE, earl of Sully and Chamberlain, a French diplomatist, died 1649, aged 88.

BETTERTON, THOMAS, a famous actor, was son of an under-cook to Charles I., and was born in Tothill Street, Westminster, 1635, and served his apprenticeship to a bookseller. In 1656 he made his first appearance in Sir William Davenant's company. At the Restoration he belonged to the king's company in Drury Lane, and was sent by Charles II. to Paris to observe the French stage. He excelled in Shakspeare's principal characters, such as Hamlet, Othello, Brutus, and Hotspur. In 1695 he opened a new playhouse in Lincoln's Inn Fields, but the speculation was unsuccessful. He died 28 April, 1710, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. He was author of 'The woman made a justice,' comedy; 'The Unjust Judge, or Appius and Virginia,' a tragedy, altered from the original of John Webster; and 'The amorous widow, or the wanton wife,' a play written on the plan of Molière's 'George Dandin.'

BETTI, ZACHARY, a poet, born 16 July, 1732, at Verona, where he died 1788. The work on which his reputation chiefly rests is his poem on the unknown.

BETTINELLI, XAVIER, an eminent Jesuit, born at Mantua 18 July, 1718; died 13 Sept., 1808. His works were collected in 24 vols. 12mo., Venice, 1801. The principal are, 'Ragionamenti filosofici;' 'Dell' entusiasmo delle belle arti;' 'Dialoghi d'amore;' 'Risorgimento negli studi, nelle arti e nei costumi dopo il mille;' 'Delle lettere e delle arti Mantovane; lettere ed arti Modenesi;' 'Lettere dieci di Virgilio agli Arcadi;' 'Letters on the fine arts from a lady to her friend;' 'Poetical Pieces;' 'Tragedies;' 'Lettere a Leticia Cidonia sopra gli epigrammi;' and 'Essay on Eloquence.' As a poet, critic, metaphysician, and historian, Bettinelli's merit is esteemed by his countrymen as of the highest order.

BETTINI, DOMINIC, a painter, born at Florence 1644; died at Bologna 1705.

BETTINI, MARIO, an Italian Jesuit, professor at Parma, was born 6 Feb., 1582, at Bologna, where he died 7 Nov., 1637. His works consist of Latin poetry and mathematical treatises.

BETTS, JOHN, M.D., a native of Winchester, was educated at Oxford, and afterwards practised medicine in London with great success, being especially patronised by his co-religionists the Roman Catholics. He was physician in ordinary to Charles II. His works are, 'De Ortu et Natura Sanguinis,' 8vo., London, 1669; 'Medicinæ cum Philosophia naturalis Consensus,' 8vo., London, 1692; and 'Anatomia Thomæ Parri, annum centesimum quinquagesimum secundum et novem Menses agentis, cum clariss. Viri Gulielmi Harveyæ aliorumque adstantium Medicorum Regiorum Observationibus.' His son, Edward Betts, also became a M.D.; acquired a high reputation as a physician; and died 12 April, 1687.

BETULEIUS, SIXTUS, was born at Memmingen, in Swabia, 2 Feb., 1500, and became principal of the college of Augsburg, where he died 19 June, 1554. He published Notes on Lactantius; Commentary on Cicero, 'De Natura Deorum;' three dramatic pieces, Susannah, Judith, and Joseph; 'Novi Testamenti Concordantia Græca;' and 'Oracula Sybillina Gr. cum castigationibus.'

BETUSSI, JOSEPH, an Italian poet, translator, and miscellaneous writer, was a native of Bassano, and died after 1565. In his studies and morals he unfortunately took for his guide the infamous Peter Aretin.

BEUF, JEAN LE. See LEBEUF.

BEUGHEM, CORNELIUS DE, a bookseller of Emmerick, who published seven Latin works on bibliography between 1680 and 1688.

BEULANIUS, a divine and historian of the seventh century, was a Briton by birth, and teacher of the celebrated Nennius, who was afterwards abbot of Bangor. He is said to have written a work, 'De Genealogis Gentium.'

BEULANIUS, SAMUEL, son of the preceding, was born in Northumberland, and educated in the Isle of Wight, of which he wrote a description. He also composed in Latin 'Annotations upon Nennius;' 'History of the actions of King Arthur in Scotland;' and an 'Historical Itinerary.' Flourished A.D. 650.

BEUMLER, MARK, a Protestant minister, author of many theological, philological, and philosophical works, was born at Volketswyl, in the canton of Zurich, 1555, and died 1611.

BEURS, WILLIAM, a Dutch painter, born at Dort 1656; died about 1690.

BEUTHER, MICHAEL, a German writer, born at Carlostadt 18 Oct., 1522; died 27 Oct., 1587. He was professor of history at Strasburg, and published many learned works.

BEVAN, JOSEPH GURNEY, a Quaker author, was born in London 18 Feb., 1753, and became partner with his father, who carried on the business of a chemist and druggist in Plough Court, Lombard Street. In 1796 he removed to Stoke Newington, and gave his attention almost exclusively to matters connected with the Society of Friends. He died at Stoke Newington 12 Sept., 1814. His works are, 'A Refutation of some of the more modern misrepresentations of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, with a Life of J. Nayler; also a summary of the history, doctrine, and discipline of Friends,' 8vo., London, 1800; 'An Examination of the first part of a pamphlet called An Appeal to the Society of Friends,' 8vo., 1802; 'A short Account of the Life and Writings of Robert Barclay,' 18mo., 1802; 'Thoughts on Reason and Revelation, particularly the Revelation of the Scriptures,' 8vo., London, 1805, 1853; 'The Life of the Apostle Paul, as related in Scripture, but in which his Epistles are inserted in that part of the History to which they are supposed respectively to belong; with select notes, critical, explanatory, and relating to persons and places,' 8vo., 1807, 1811; 'Memoirs of the Life of Isaac Pennington, to which is added a Review of his Writings,' 8vo., 1807; 'Memoirs of the Life and Travels in the service of the Gospel of Sarah Stephenson,' 8vo., 1807; 'A Reply to so much of a Sermon by P. Dodd as relates to the scruples of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, against all Swearing,' 8vo., London, 1808; 'Piety Promoted, in brief memorials and dying expressions of some of the Society of Friends. The tenth part. To which is added an Historical Account of the preceding parts,' 2nd edition, 12mo., London, 1811; 'Selections from a work entitled Piety Promoted, containing brief memorials and dying expressions of some of the Society of Friends,' 12mo., London, 1855, 1856. In 1821 there appeared at London a thin 8vo. volume, containing 'Extracts from the Letters and other Writings of the late Joseph Gurney Bevan, preceded by a short memoir.'

BEVER. See CASTORIUS.

BEVER, THOMAS, LL.D., a learned civilian, born at Mortimer, Berkshire, 1725, and educated at All Souls' College, Oxford, where he proceeded to his doctor's degree and obtained a fellowship. In 1758 he was admitted of Doctors' Commons, and was afterwards appointed judge of the cinque ports and chancellor of Lincoln and Bangor. Died 8 Nov., 1791. His works are, 'A Discourse on the Study of Jurisprudence and the Civil Law,' and 'The History of the Legal Polity of the Roman State, and the Rise, Progress, and Extent of the Roman Laws.'

BEVERIDGE, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born in 1636-7 at Barrow, Leicestershire, of which parish his grandfather, father, and brother were successively vicars. In 1653 he was admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1656; M.A. 1660; D.D. 1679). At the university he applied himself so closely to his studies, particularly to oriental learning, that at the age of eighteen he wrote a Latin treatise on the excellence and use of the oriental tongues, which he published in 1658. Soon after his ordination by Bishop Sanderson he was presented to the vicarage of Ealing, Middlesex, which he resigned 1672, on being chosen rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill. He acquired great popularity as a preacher, and was successively prebendary of St. Paul's, archdeacon of Colchester, and prebendary of Canterbury. In 1691 he refused an offer of the see of Bath and Wells, then vacant by the deprivation of Dr. Kenn, but he afterwards accepted the bishopric of St. Asaph, and was accordingly consecrated 16 July, 1704. He died 5 March, 1707-8, and was buried in St. Paul's. He left the greater part of his estate to the societies for propagating the Gospel and promoting Christian knowledge. Besides the treatise already mentioned, he wrote 'Institutionum Chronologicarum libri duo,' Συνοδικον, sive Pandectæ Canonum SS. Apostolorum, &c.; 'Codex Canonum Ecclesiæ Primitivæ vindicatus et illustratus'; 'The Church Catechism explained'; 'Private Thoughts upon Religion'; 'The great necessity and advantage of Public Prayer and frequent Communion'; 'One hundred and fifty Sermons and Discourses on several subjects'; 'Thesaurus Theologicus; or a complete system of Divinity'; a defence of Sternhold and Hopkins's version of the Psalms; and 'Exposition of the XXXIX. Articles.'

BEVERINI, BARTHOLOMEW, a celebrated preacher, born at Lucca 5 May, 1629; died 24 Oct., 1686. He published poems in Latin and Italian; discourses; a translation of the Æneid in ottava rima; and many other works.

BEVERLAND, ADRIAN, born at Middleburgh in Zealand 1653, was a man of genius, but prostituted his talents by employing them in the composition of loose and obscene pieces. He became an advocate, but his passion for literature diverted him from legal pursuits. In 1672 he was at the university of Oxford. His Treatise on Original Sin, published in 1673, was so offensive that he was committed to prison at the Hague, and his book condemned to be burnt. He was, however, set at liberty on paying a fine, and he subsequently visited Utrecht and Leyden; but his behaviour gave such offence that he deemed it prudent to come to England, where Isaac Vossius procured him a pension. His income was inconsiderable, yet he spent the greater part of it in purchasing scarce books, obscene designs, pictures, medals, and strange shells. Afterwards he seems to have repented of his irregular life, and as an atonement is said to have composed his treatise 'De Fornicatione cavenda admonitio, sive adhortatio ad pudicitiam et castitatem,' 8vo., Lond., 1668. His sincerity, however, has been suspected. After the death of Vossius, he fell into the most extreme poverty, and incurred universal hatred on account of the numerous personal satires which he had written. He died insane about 1712. Beverland was master of a good Latin style; indeed, what was said of Petronius has been applied to him—that he was 'scriptor purissimæ impuritatis.'

BEVERLEY, ST. JOHN OF. See JOHN.

BEVERNINCK, JEROME VAN, a Dutch statesman, born 1614. He was sent ambassador to Cromwell, 1654, and brought about a peace between England and Holland. Died 30 Oct., 1690.

BEVERWICK, JOHN VAN, a physician of Dort, born 17 Sept., 1594; died 19 Jan., 1647. His works were printed in Flemish, at Amsterdam, 1656, 4to.

BEVILL, ROBERT, a barrister-at-law of the Inner Temple, author of 'A Treatise on the Law of Homicide and of Larceny at Common Law,' 8vo., Lond., 1799, died 1824.

BEVIN, ELWAY, an eminent musician in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was for some time one of the gentlemen of the Royal Chapel, but was expelled in 1636 or 1637, on account of his having turned Roman Catholic. He composed some church services and anthems, and published 'A briefe and short Instruction of the art of Musicke,' 4to., 1631.

BEVIS, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., a learned physician and astronomer, born near Old Sarum, Wiltshire, 1695. He received his education at Christ Church, Oxford, and having taken his degrees went abroad, after which he commenced practice in London. In 1738 he had collected a number of astronomical instruments, and built an observatory at Stoke Newington. In 1745 he undertook to publish by subscription a work, entitled 'Uranographia Britannica,' similar to that of Bayer; but though he was at a great expense in having the plates engraved, he lost them by the failure of the persons whom he employed, and the work was never completed. Dr. Bevis published Halley's astronomical tables; several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; two pamphlets, one entitled 'The Satellite Sliding-rule,' and the other 'An experimental Inquiry into the Virtues of the Mineral waters of Bagnigge Wells.' His name is also on the title-page of a small pocket dictionary of the English language, though he only wrote the preface. Died 1771. He left in MS. a translation of Lalande's Astronomy.

BEWICK, JOHN, an engraver on wood, brother of Thomas, mentioned below, was born 1760, and died 5 Dec., 1795.

BEWICK, ROBERT ELLIOTT, son of Thomas Bewick, the celebrated wood-engraver. He carried on his father's business after the death of the latter, and possessed many of the excellences of his parent. Died at Gateshead, 27 July, 1849.

BEWICK, THOMAS, the restorer of the art of engraving on wood, was born, 12 Aug., 1753, at Cherry-burn in the parish of Ovingham, Northumberland. His early propensity to observe natural objects, and particularly the manners and habits of animals, and to endeavour to express them by drawing, in which, without tuition, he manifested great skill at an early age, determined his friends as to the choice of a profession for him. At the age of fourteen he was bound apprentice to Mr. Ralph Beilby, a copper-plate engraver of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. On the expiration of his apprenticeship he paid short visits to London and Scotland, and then entered into partnership with his late master. About this time he engraved the woodcuts for an edition of Gay's 'Fables,' 1779. Subsequently there appeared a 'General History of Quadrupeds,' 1790, the woodcuts in which were executed by Bewick, and were acknowledged to be superior to anything of the kind that had previously appeared. In preparing this work he had the assistance of his brother John, who also co-operated with him in bringing out illustrated editions of Goldsmith's 'Traveller,' Barbed's 'Hermit,' and Somerville's 'Chace,' which was the last work on which John Bewick (who died 1795) was engaged. Thomas's best work, which exhibits him as a naturalist as well as an artist, was his 'History of British Birds,' commenced in 1797, and completed in 1804. He died at his residence near the Windmill Hills, Gateshead, 8 Nov., 1828.

BEWLEY, WILLIAM, of Masingham, Norfolk, died 5 Sept., 1783, at the house of Dr. Burney, in St. Martin's Street, Leicester Square, London. The 'Gentleman's Magazine,' in recording his death, remarks, 'He will be much lamented by all men of science, as his great abilities, particularly in electricity, chemistry, and anatomy, had penetrated through the obscurity of his abode and the natural modesty and diffidence of his disposition.'

BEXLEY, NICHOLAS VANSITTART Lord, son of Henry Vansittart, sometime governor of Bengal, was born 29 April, 1766, and received his education at Mr. Gilpin's school at Cheam in Surrey, whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1791). He was subsequently called to the bar, and distinguished himself by the production of various political and financial pamphlets, which attracted general attention. He was first returned to parliament for Hastings in 1796. In 1801 he was sent to Denmark in the character of minister plenipotentiary, with the view of detaching that country from the Northern Alliance, but the negotiation failed. In the same year he was appointed joint secretary to the Treasury, and after filling other offices under the crown, he succeeded Mr. Perceval as chancellor of the exchequer 1812. This important office he occupied till Jan., 1823, and on his retirement he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Bexley. He had a great reputation for skill in financial matters. Died at Footscray Place, Kent, 8 Feb., 1851.

BEXON, GABRIEL LEOPOLD CHARLES AMÉ, a French ecclesiastic and miscellaneous writer, born at Remiremont, March, 1748; died at Paris 15 Feb., 1784.

BEXON, SCIPIO JEROME, a French jurist, brother of Gabriel, mentioned above, was born 1753, and died 17 Nov., 1825.

BEYER, or BEIER, AUGUSTUS, a German Protestant minister, author of some bibliographical works, was born 21 May, 1707, and died 1741.

BEYER, GEORGE, a lawyer, born at Leipsic 1665; died 1714. He wrote 'Notitiæ auctorum juridicorum;' and 'Declinatio juris divini naturalis et positivi universalis.'

BEYERLINCK, LAURENCE, a Dutch ecclesiastic, and a voluminous author, was born at Antwerp, April, 1578; and died there 7 June, 1627. His principal works are 'Apophthegmata Christianorum;' 'Promptuarium morale;' and 'Magnum Theatrum vitæ humanæ,' 8 vols. folio. 'This last work is a mass of theology, history, politics, philosophy, &c., in alphabetical order, containing all the knowledge of that time upon the various subjects.'

BEYLE, MARIE HENRI, a French politician and author, born 1783; died 23 March, 1842.

BEYMA, JULIUS, an eminent jurist, born at Dockum, in Holland 1539 or 1546; died 1598.

BEYS, CHARLES, a French poet, the friend of Scarron, was born 1610, and died 26 Sept., 1659.

BEYS, GILES, a printer, who was the first, after those who printed the works of Ramus, that made a distinction in his printing between the consonants j and v, and the vowels i and u. Ramus was the inventor of this distinction, and employed it in his Latin grammar of 1557; but we do not find it in any of his works printed after that time. Beys adopted it first in Claude Mignaut's Latin Commentary on Horace. He died at Paris, 19 April, 1593.

BEYSSER, JEAN MICHEL, a French general, born 1754, who was executed by order of the revolutionary tribunal, as an accomplice of Danton, 13 April, 1794.

BEZA, THEODORE, one of the chief promoters of the Reformation, was born at Vezelai, a small town of Nivernais, in France, 24 June, 1519, and educated for the bar at Orleans. Here he imbibed the principles of the reformed religion, on which he retired to Geneva, and shortly afterwards he was chosen to the Greek professorship at Lausanne. After reading there about ten years he became assistant to Calvin in the church and university of Geneva. Some time afterwards he went to Navarre, by desire of the king, to assist at a conference held with the Catholic divines. In the civil war, which broke out not long afterwards, he accompanied the prince of Condé, and was present at the battle of Dreux. In 1563 he returned to Geneva, and in 1570 went to France to assist at the synod of Rochelle, where he was chosen moderator. Died 13 Oct., 1695. His polemical pieces are forgotten, but his Latin poems, printed in 1548, are still read. A Greek MS. of the New Testament, which once belonged to Beza, is now in the public library at Cambridge. It was published by Dr. Kipling.

BEZOUT, ÉTIENNE, a French mathematician, born at Nemours, 31 March, 1730; died at Paris 27 Sept., 1783. He wrote a 'Course of Mathematics'; 'General Theory of Algebraic Equations,' and other works.

BIACCA, FRANCIS, an Italian scholar and ecclesiastic, author of a defence of Josephus's history, and other works, was born at Parma 12 March, 1673, and died 15 Sept., 1735.

BIANCANI, JOSEPH, a Jesuit, born at Bologna 1566; died at Parma 7 June, 1624. He was author of 'Cosmography Demonstrated'; 'Chronology of eminent Mathematicians,' and other works.

BIANCHI, ANTHONY, a Venetian gondolier, author of several Italian poems of considerable merit, flourished in 1753.

BIANCHI, FRANCIS, a musical composer, was born at Cremona, or Venice, 1752; died at Bologna 24 Sept., 1811. He composed fifty-seven entire operas, besides a considerable quantity of church and other music. He resided in England for some time.

BIANCHI, FRANCIS FERRARI, a painter and sculptor of Modena, said to have been the instructor of Correggio; died 1510.

BIANCHI, JOHN, an Italian physician, and writer on natural history, commonly called Janus Plancus, was born 3 Jan., 1693, at Rimini, where he died 3 Dec., 1775.

BIANCHI, JOHN ANTHONY, an Italian religious of the Minorite order, author of some tragedies, a voluminous work in vindication of the pope's temporal power, and other pieces. Born 2 Oct., 1686; died 18 Jan., 1758.

BIANCHI, JOHN BAPTIST, a celebrated anatomist, born at Turin 12 Sept., 1681; died 20 Jan., 1761.

BIANCHI, MARK ANTHONY, professor of law at Padua, his native place, author of some professional works, was born 1498, and died 8 Oct., 1548.

BIANCHI, PETER, a Roman painter, born 1694; died 1730.

BIANCHI, VENDRAMINO, a nobleman of Padua, and secretary of the senate of Venice at the commencement of the eighteenth century, was employed in several diplomatic services, and for about twenty months was Venetian ambassador in London. He wrote an account of his negotiations, which resulted in a treaty of alliance with Switzerland.

BIANCHINI, FRANCIS, was born at Verona 13 Dec., 1662. He established the Alcotofili Society in his native town, for the investigation of physical and mathematical subjects. He was patronised by Pope Alexander VIII. and his successors, and died 2 March, 1729. His works were in Italian and Latin, chiefly on mathematics and antiquities. His 'Universal History' is highly valued.

BIANCHINI, JOHN FORTUNATUS, professor of physic at Padua, and author of numerous treatises on subjects connected with his profession, was born 1720, and died 2 Sept., 1779.

BIANCHINI, JOSEPH, nephew of Francis, above mentioned, was born at Verona 9 Sept., 1704, and became a priest of the oratory. The date of his death is not stated. He published some valuable works relating to history and ecclesiastical antiquities, but is perhaps best known by his 'Parere sopra la cagione della morte della sig. contessa Cornelia Zangari, esposto in una lettera,' 8vo., Verona, 1731; Rome, 1743. This curious dissertation relates to a lady of rank, who was found in her room reduced to ashes, except her head, legs, and one of her fingers. As this could not be ascribed to external fire, the room being in no wise injured, it excited much attention, and gave rise to a variety of opinions. Bianchini maintains in this tract that it was the effect of internal and spontaneous fire, occasioned by the excessive use of camphorated brandy, to which the lady had been much addicted. The case of the Lady Cornelia has been since reproduced in the London morning papers every few years as an event of recent occurrence, and probably the majority of Englishmen believe that there really is such a thing as 'spontaneous combustion.'

BIANCHINI, JOSEPH MARIA, an Italian scholar and ecclesiastic, born at Prato, in Tuscany, 18 Nov., 1685; died 17 Feb., 1749. His principal works are an account of the grand duchy of Tuscany and the royal house of Medici; and a treatise on Italian satire.

BIANCOLINI, JOHN BAPTIST JOSEPH, author of several works relating to the history of his native city, Verona, was born 10 March, 1697, and died 1780.

BIANCONI, JOHN LOUIS, an Italian physician, born at Bologna 30 Sept., 1717; died at Perugia 1 Jan., 1781. He resided first with the landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt, and afterwards with Augustus III., king of Poland, who employed him in state affairs of great importance, and appointed him his minister at the court of Rome. Besides several elegant elegies and miscellaneous papers, he wrote letters on the history of Cornelius Celsus, and a work on the circus of Caracalla.

BIAS, one of the seven wise men of Greece, was born about B.C. 570.

BIBIANA, ST., a holy virgin and martyr, was a native of Rome. Both her parents were zealous Christians, and laid down their lives for the faith. Apronianus, governor of Rome, ordered Bibiana to be tied to a pillar, and whipped with scourges loaded with leaden plummets. The saint underwent this punishment cheerfully, and died in the hands of the executioner, 363. Festival, Dec. 2.

BIBIENA, BERNARD OF. See DOVISI.

BIBIENA, FERDINAND GALLI, a painter and architect of Bologna, born 1657; died 1743. The magnificent buildings erected from his designs show the superiority of his abilities. He was author of two books on architecture.

BIBLIANDER, THEODORE, a Protestant divine, born 1500, or 1504, at Bischoffzell, near St. Gall. In 1532 he succeeded Zuinglius in the divinity chair at Zurich, but was subsequently removed on account of his opinions respecting predestination. Died 24 Sept., 1564. He was a man of great reputation for learning, especially in the oriental languages. He published a version of the Koran, with a refutation of it; and several theological treatises in Latin.

BICHAT, MARIE FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a French physician and medical writer, born 11 Nov., 1771; died 22 July, 1802.

BICHENO, JAMES, a Baptist minister and schoolmaster of Newbury, Berkshire, where he died

BICHENO.

9 April, 1831. He was author of the following publications: 'A Friendly Address to the Jews,' 8vo., 1797; 'The Signs of the Times; or the Overthrow of the Papal Tyranny in France, the prelude of destruction to Popery and Despotism,' 2 parts, 1792-4; 'A Word in Season; or a call to the Inhabitants of Great Britain to stand prepared for the consequences of the present War,' 1795; 'The probable progress and issue of the Commotions which have agitated Europe since the French Revolution,' 1797; 'A glance at the history of Christianity and of English Nonconformity,' 1798; 'The Restoration of the Jews the crisis of all Nations,' 1800; 'The Destiny of the German Empire and the general prospects of Europe,' 2 parts, 1801-6; 'An estimate of the Peace, a thanksgiving Sermon,' 1802; 'A Supplement to the Signs of the Times, with an answer to Mr. Faber,' 1807; 'The consequences of unjust War, a Fast-day Sermon,' 1810.

BICHENO, JAMES EBENEZER, F.R.S., son of the preceding, was born at Newbury, Berkshire, about 1755. When approaching his fortieth year he entered at the Middle Temple, and in 1822 was called to the bar. Science, however, had more attractions for him than law, and he especially devoted himself to the study of botany and zoology. In 1824 he became secretary of the Linnæan Society, in which capacity he superintended the publication of many learned papers on his favourite pursuits, and was the author of one 'On systems and methods in Natural History.' He was appointed secretary of the commission formed under Lord Melbourne's administration to inquire into the expediency of introducing the poor law into Ireland. Several important reports on this subject proceeded from his pen. In Sept., 1842, he was selected by Lord Stanley for the office of colonial secretary in Van Diemen's Land; and he died at Hobart Town 25 Feb., 1851. His works are, 'An Inquiry into the nature of Benevolence; chiefly with a view to elucidate the principles of the Poor Laws, and to show their immoral tendency,' 8vo., London, 1817; 'Observations on the Philosophy of Criminal Jurisprudence. With remarks on Penitentiary Prisons,' 8vo., London, 1819; 'An Inquiry into the Poor Laws, chiefly with a view to examine them as a scheme of National Benevolence, and to elucidate their political economy,' 2nd edition, 8vo., London, 1824; 'Ireland and its Economy, being the result of observations made in a Tour through the Country in the autumn of 1820,' 8vo., London, 1830.

BICKERSTAFF, ISAAC, a dramatist, was born in Ireland about 1735, and is stated to have been living in 1812. Among his dramatic pieces are 'Love in a Village,' 'The Maid of the Mill,' 'The Plain Dealer,' 'The Hypocrite,' 'Lionel and Clarissa,' 'The Padlock,' 'The Sultan,' and 'The spoiled Child.'

BICKERSTAFF, WILLIAM, an antiquary, was born at Leicester, 17 June, 1728, appointed master of the Lower Free Grammar School in that town Jan. 1749-50, and took orders in 1770, from which period he was occasionally a curate at most of the churches at Leicester, and also at Great Wigston and Ayleston, two villages at no great distance. Died 26 Jan., 1789. He was author of several communications made use of by Mr. Nichols in his History of Leicester, and of a considerable number of contributions to the 'Gentleman's Magazine.'

BIDDLE.

BICKERSTETH, EDWARD, brother of Henry Bickersteth, Lord Langdale, was born at Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmoreland, 19 March, 1786, and after serving for some time in the General Post Office, entered the office of a London attorney, to whom he was subsequently articled. At the expiration of his articles he went to Norwich, where he became partner with Mr. Bignold, whose sister he married. His inclinations, however, were rather towards theology than law, and about 1815 he entered the ministry of the Established Church. He was a zealous partisan of the 'Evangelicals,' and visited Africa with a view to place the missions there in order. On his return he was constituted secretary to the Missionary Society, and in 1830 was collated to the rectory of Watton, Hertfordshire, where he spent the remainder of his life in great comfort. Died 28 Feb., 1850. He edited the Christian Family Library, the Christian Psalmody, a Practical Guide to the Prophecies, Family Prayers, and other works of a like character. A Memoir of him, by the Rev. T. R. Birks, M.A., was published in 1851, 2 vols. 8vo.

BICKERSTETH, HENRY, Lord Langdale. See LANGDALE.

BICKERTON, SIR RICHARD HUSSEY, a British admiral, born 11 Oct., 1759; died 9 Feb., 1832.

BICKLEY, THOMAS, an English prelate, was born in Buckinghamshire 1519. He was elected warden of Merton College 1569, and in 1585 was consecrated bishop of Chichester, where he died 30 April, 1596.

BICKNELL, ELHANAN, a great patron of art, died at his residence on Herne Hill, Camberwell, 27 Nov., 1861. He was engaged in commercial pursuits, and the personal property left at his decease was sworn at Doctors' Commons as under £350,000. The wealth which he acquired was liberally, judiciously, and unostentatiously spent not upon himself alone—for even the beautiful specimens of art which enriched his mansion were freely open to others besides his personal friends—but in doing good to those who stood in need of help. As an art patron, he was one who purchased for the enjoyment which pictures of the best order afford to an appreciating mind, and not for the mere love of possession or desire of display.

BICKNOR, ALEXANDER DE, consecrated archbishop of Dublin, 1317; died 14 July, 1349. He was conspicuous for talents and learning.

BIDAL. See ASFELD.

BIDDLE, JOHN, was born at Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire, and baptized 14 Jan., 1615. He was educated at the grammar school there, and at Magdalen College, Oxford. He was elected master of the free school of St. Mary de Crypt, in Gloucester, but his refusal to acknowledge the divinity of the Holy Ghost drew upon him accusations of heresy. Though liberated from prison, he was still unwilling to yield to the arguments which Archbishop Usher, in his way through Gloucester, kindly used to remove his doubts and effect a reconciliation. He was summoned before the parliament at Westminster, but the twelve arguments which he published as a criterion of his faith exposed him to greater persecution, and an ordinance was passed by the Commons to punish with death such as denied the doctrine of the Trinity. To the horrors of a prison were now added those of poverty, but Biddle was a man of learning, and earned a subsistence by correcting the Septuagint Bible published by Roger Daniel, a London printer. By the General Oblivion Act of 1654 he recovered his liberty, but a fresh publication again exposed him to the rigour of Cromwell's parliament, and at last the Protector, incited by Griffin, an Anabaptist, who had experienced the superior powers of his antagonist in theological disputes, gave orders for his banishment to St. Mary's Castle, in the isles of Scilly, in 1655. On the Restoration, when the liberty of dissenters was abridged, Biddle, who expounded his doctrines in private as well as in public, was dragged before a magistrate. He was fined £100, and his hearers £20 each; but from his inability to pay, he was detained, and after fifteen weeks of confinement, a sudden decease put an end to his sufferings 22 Sept., 1662.

BIDDULPH, THOMAS TREGENNA, a Church of England divine, was born 5 July, 1763, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. He became incumbent of St. James's, Bristol, where he died 19 May, 1838. He was a strong evangelical, and published some works, now utterly forgotten, on polemical and doctrinal subjects.

BIDERMANN, JOHN GOTTLIEB, a voluminous German author, born at Nuremberg 5 April, 1705, became rector of the school of Friedburg, where he died 1772.

BIDLAKE, JOHN, a divine and poet, was born at Plymouth in 1755. He was educated at the school of his native place, and after taking his first degree in arts at Christ Church, Oxford, became master of the same seminary, which he conducted with reputation. He proceeded to his doctor's degree, and in 1811 was appointed to preach the Bampton lecture; but in the act of delivering the third discourse he was suddenly seized with an epileptic fit, which produced total blindness. He died in 1814. Besides some single sermons on different occasions, he published two volumes of Discourses; the Bampton Lectures, in one vol.; 'Introduction to the Study of Geography,' 12mo.; 'The Country Parson,' a poem, 8vo.; 'Eugenio, or the Precepts of Prudentius,' a tale, 12mo.; 'The Summer Eve,' a poem, 8vo.; 'Virginia,' a tragedy; 'Youth,' a poem, 8vo.; and 'The Year,' a poem, 1813.

BIDLOO, GODFREY, a famous anatomical writer, born at Amsterdam 12 March, 1649; died at Leyden, April, 1713. His chief work was his 'Anatomia humani corporis,' in 105 plates drawn by Lairese, fol., Amsterdam, 1685. This publication involved him in a dispute with William Cowper, F.R.S., a surgeon of London, who had purloined his plates, and passed them off as his own.

BIDWILL, JOHN CARNE, a native of Exeter, visited New Zealand and Australia, and carefully investigated the botany of those colonies. Born in or about 1816; died 1853.

BIE, ADRIAN DE, a Dutch painter, born 1594, settled at Rome, where he died about 1640. His son Cornelius wrote the Lives of the Painters, in Flemish verse.

BIE, JACOB OF JAMES DE, an eminent engraver of antiquities, was born at Antwerp 1581. He was living 1636.

BIEL, GABRIEL, an eminent writer on scholastic divinity, was a native of Spire, became professor of divinity in the university of Tubingen, and died 1495.

BIEL, JOHN CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran divine, born at Brunswick 1687; died 1745. He wrote 'Novus Thesaurus Philologicus, sive Lexicon in LXX,' et alios interpretes et scriptores apocryphos Veteris Testamenti,' 3 vols. 8vo., Haguc, 1779-80.

BIELFELD, JAMES FREDERICK, BARON DE, was born at Hamburg 31 March, 1717. He was appointed, by the king of Prussia, tutor to his brother Ferdinand; in 1747 curator of the universities; and the year following created a baron and privy councillor. He died 5 April, 1770. His works are, 'Political Institutions,' 3 vols. 8vo.; 'Progress of the Germans in the Belles Lettres,' 8vo.; 'Elements of Universal Erudition,' 3 vols. 8vo.

BIENAISE, JEAN, a French surgeon, celebrated for his skill as an operator, was born 1601, and died 25 Dec., 1681.

BIENNE, JEAN, in Latin, Benenatus, a celebrated printer of Paris, died 15 Feb., 1588.

BIERKANDER, CLAUDE, a Swedish naturalist, born 1735; died 1795.

BIEZELINGEN, CHRISTIAN JANS VAN, a Dutch painter, born 1558; died 1600.

BIFFIN, SARAH, died at Liverpool 2 Oct., 1850, aged 66. Though born without hands or arms, she attained considerable eminence as a miniature painter.

BIFIELD. See BYFIELD.

BIGG, WILLIAM REDMORE, an English painter, and royal academian, died 6 Feb., 1828.

BIGLAND, JOHN, was born at Skirlaugh, in Holderness, about 1750, and spent far the greater portion of his life in the humble occupation of a village schoolmaster. He moved his residence more than once, but his school was for the longest period at Rossington, near Doncaster. When upwards of fifty years of age he became an author, and published 'Reflections on the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ,' 1803. This was followed by 'Letters on the Study and Use of Ancient and Modern History,' and 'Letters on the Modern History and Political Aspect of Europe.' As these were well received, he from that time became an author by profession. His subsequent publications were 'Essays on various subjects,' 2 vols., 1805; 'Letters on Natural History,' 1806; 'System of Geography and History,' 5 vols., 1809; 'History of Spain,' 2 vols., 1810; 'History of Europe from the Peace of 1763 to the present time,' 2 vols., 1811 (in a later edition continued to 1814); 'The Philosophic Wanderers, or the History of the Tribune and the Priestess of Minerva,' 1811; 'Yorkshire,' being the sixteenth volume of the 'Beauties of England and Wales,' 1812; 'History of England,' 'System of Geography for the use of Schools,' 1816; 'An Historical Display of the Effects of Physical and Moral Causes on the Character and Circumstances of Nations,' 1817; 'Letters on French History,' 1818; 'Letters on English History,' 'History of the Jews.' He died at Finningley, near Doncaster, 22 Feb., 1832, aged 82.

BIGLAND, RALPH, Garter king-at-arms, was born in 1711, the son of Richard Bigland, of Kendall, in Westmoreland, the descendant of a family originally seated at Bigland, Lancashire. The subject of this brief notice, after going through all the offices in the College of Arms, and executing also the office of registrar, to which he was appointed in 1763, became the head of it in 1780, but enjoyed his elevation a very short time, dying in James Street, Bedford Row, 27 March, 1784. He was buried with his parents at Stepney. He was deservedly esteemed and regretted, as a man of much skill in heraldry and other branches of antiquities. The great collections he had made for a history of Gloucestershire were intended to have been arranged and given by him to the public, and have since been partly published by his son, Richard Bigland, of Procester, esq., under the title of 'Historical, monumental, and genealogical collections, relative to the county of Gloucester,' &c., folio, 1792.

BIGNE, or VIGNE, GACÉ DE LA, a Frenchman, author of a poem entitled 'Le Roman des Ouseaux,' was born about 1428, and died about 1475.

BIGNE, MARGUERIN DE LA, doctor of the Sorbonne and dean of Mans, was born in Normandy about 1546, and died in Paris about 1600. He published the first 'Bibliotheca Patrum,' folio, 9 vols., 1575-79.

BIGNICOURT, SIMON DE, a French poet, born 15 May, 1709; died 1775.

BIGNON, JEAN PAUL, grandson of Jerome, was born Sept., 1662, became librarian to the French king, and died 14 May, 1743. He wrote 'Vic de François Levesque;' and 'Les Aventures d'Abdalla, fils d'Hanif.'

BIGNON, JEROME, was born at Paris 1590. His abilities were so prematurely displayed, that at the age of ten he published a Description of the Holy Land, and at fourteen a Treatise on the Election of the Popes. He was noticed by Henry IV., and obtained a place at court; and after the death of that monarch he travelled into Italy, where he was noticed by Paul V. On his return he devoted himself to the bar, and was nominated counselor of state and advocate-general in the parliament of Paris. He was consulted by Queen Anne of Austria during her regency; he assisted at the completion of the treaty with Holland 1649, regulated the succession of Mantua, and concluded the alliance with the Hanse towns 1654. Died 7 April, 1666.

BIGNON, LOUIS PIERRE EDOUARD, a French statesman, diplomatist, and author, born 3 Jan., 1771; died 5 Jan., 1841.

BIGOD, or BIGOT, SIR FRANCIS, received an academical education—at Oxford, according to Wood—and was master of a great deal of wit and learning, which he employed upon the subject of impropriations, representing the custom of annexing benefices to monasteries to be a great abuse. When, however, the government of Henry VIII. determined to suppress the monasteries, he took up arms, and was very active in the commotions in Yorkshire, called the 'Pilgrimage of Grace.' It was his fate to be taken prisoner and condemned to die. He suffered at Tyburn in June, 1537. His works are, 'A Treatise of the Impropriation of Benefices,' 4to., London, 1547, and several translations from the Latin.

BIGOT, EMEY, a learned Frenchman, born at Rouen 1626; died 18 Oct., 1689. He travelled into Holland, England, Germany, and Italy, and maintained a correspondence with most of the learned of Europe. He published an edition of Palladius's Life of St. Chrysostom, the MS. of which he had discovered at Florence.

BILDERDIJK, WILLIAM, a Dutch poet and historian, born 1756; died 18 Dec., 1831.

BILFINGER, GEORGE BERNARD, a German writer on philosophy and divinity, born 1693; died 18 Feb., 1750.

BILGUER, JOHN ULRIC DE, a surgeon, was born in Switzerland 1720; served in the Prussian army; and died 6 April, 1796. He rendered himself famous by an inaugural thesis on the inutility of amputation in gunshot wounds.

BILL, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, born at Ashwell, Hertfordshire, and educated at Cambridge, where he became master of St. John's College, March, 1546-7, and in 1551 master of Trinity College. He was installed dean of Westminster 30 June, 1560, but died on the 15th of the following month.

BILLAUD-VARENNE, JACQUES NICOLAS, a conspicuous actor in the first French Revolution, was born 1762, and died 3 June, 1819.

BILLAULT, ADAM, known as Master Adam, was born, 1602, at Nevers, where he carried on the trade of a joiner. Though an uneducated man, but being endowed with some poetical genius, he took to writing verses. He was patronised by Cardinal Richelieu, and Prince Conde, and panegyrised by Corneille. Died 19 June, 1662.

BILLBERG, JOHN, a celebrated Swedish astronomer and mathematician, became bishop of Strengues, and died 1717.

BILLI, JACQUES DE, a French ecclesiastic, born at Guise, in Picardy, 1535; died at Paris 25 Dec., 1581. He translated several of the Greek Fathers into Latin, and wrote Observations on the Holy Scriptures.

BILLI, JACQUES DE, a French Jesuit, author of 'Opus Astronomicum' and other mathematical works, was born 1602, and died 1679.

BILLINGSLEY, SIR HENRY, son of Roger Billingsley, of Canterbury, was admitted a scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, 1551, but did not graduate. It is said that he also studied for a time at Oxford. Ultimately he applied himself to trade in London, being a member of the company of haberdashers. In 1596 he was elected lord mayor, and received the honour of knighthood in the course of his year of office. He also represented the city of London in the first of King James's parliaments. Died 23 Nov., 1606. He was an excellent mathematician and a member of the old Society of Antiquaries. His only published work is a translation of 'The Elements of Geometrie of the most ancient Philosopher Euclide of Megara,' folio, London, 1570, with a preface by John Dee.

BILLINGSLEY, JOHN, a divine, was born in Kent, and studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, but afterwards removing to Oxford, obtained a fellowship at Corpus Christi College in that university. He took presbyterian orders, and became minister of Chesterfield, in Derbyshire. 'After his majesty's restoration,' says Wood, 'our author Billingsley was outed for nonconformity, preached in conventicles, was oftentimes disturbed and molested, and no doubt but imprisoned.' He published 'Strong Comforts for weak Christians,' a collection of sermons, 1656; 'The grand Quaker prov'd a gross Liar; or, a short Reply to a little Pamphlet entitled, A Dispute between James Nayler and the Parish Teacher of Chesterfield, by a Challenge against him,' &c., printed with the preceding work; 'The Believer's daily Exercise; or, the Scripture Precept of being in the Fear of the Lord, examined and urged in four Sermons,' 1690.

BILLINGSLEY, MARTIN, a writing-master, was born in or about 1591, and carried on his business or profession in Bush Lane, near London Stone. He published 'The Pen's Excellency, or Secretary's Delight,' 1618, 1623; and 'The Writing School-Master, or the Anatomic of Fair Writing.'

BILLINGTON.

BILLINGTON, Mrs. ELIZABETH, née Weichell, a celebrated vocalist, was born in London 1709. Her parents were German, and were in the musical profession. Miss Weichell, while yet a child, displayed a decided propensity to the profession which had obtained bread and celebrity for her parents. When only seven years old she performed a concerto at the little theatre in the Haymarket, and immediately after reaching the age of eleven she evinced both original talents and a double degree of merit by means of a composition of her own production adapted to her favourite instrument, the pianoforte. In direct opposition to the will of her parents, she became the wife of John Billington, one of the band belonging to Drury Lane. The union proved by no means a happy one. Scarcely waiting for the completion of the honeymoon, the newly-married pair, urged equally by love and poverty, determined to leave England. They accordingly repaired to Dublin, where Mrs. Billington first exerted her vocal powers as an actress. Her début was propitious in no common degree, and indeed such acknowledged merits entitled the fair possessor to every mark of attention. So great, indeed, was her success that fame soon wafted back to England the tidings of her brilliant reception, and she was accordingly offered an engagement at Covent Garden Theatre. On her arrival in 1785 the play of 'Love in a Village,' so well calculated for the display of musical powers, was commanded by their Majesties; and the new performer, in the character of Rosina, realised the fondest hopes of her numerous friends and admirers. From this time she occupied the very first rank as a vocalist and actress. In the course of the following summer she visited Paris, and completed her studies under Sacchini. On her return she was received with increased rapture by crowded audiences, and contributed not a little, by her various attractions, to fill the coffers of Covent Garden Theatre. But while her theatrical fame was on the increase, scandal began to whisper about her private character, and the result was that she left England for Italy. The cognoscenti at Milan, Venice, Leghorn, Padua, Genoa, Florence, and Trieste were enraptured by her vocal talents; but the chief scene of her triumphs was Naples, where she was patronised by the noted Lady Hamilton, who introduced her at court. During their stay at Naples her husband died suddenly (1796). She did not, however, long remain a widow, but bestowed her hand on a French adventurer named M. de Fellesent. In 1801 she returned to London, where both the leading theatres vied for her support. She accordingly played at Drury Lane and Covent Garden alternately, and was also commonly engaged at all the fashionable concerts. Having accumulated a large fortune she retired from the stage, and lived at a charming residence in the vicinity of Hammersmith. In 1817 M. de Fellesent, who had resided apart from his wife since 1801, suddenly made his appearance in England, and the pair removed shortly afterwards to Italy, where this charming singer died 25 Aug., 1818.

BILNEY, THOMAS, a native, it is said, of East Bilney, in Norfolk, was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards entered into holy orders. He adopted the reformed doctrines, and was very zealous in making converts. Being at length convicted of heresy, he was delivered over to the secular authorities, and burnt at Norwich 19 Aug., 1531.

BINGHAM.

BILSON, THOMAS, a learned prelate, was born at Winchester in 1536, and educated at the school there, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his doctor's degree in 1580. His first preferment was the mastership of Winchester School, after which he was made prebendary of the cathedral, and warden of the college. In 1585 he published a treatise on 'Christian Subjection and Unchristian Rebellion'; and in 1593 another 'On the perpetual Government of Christ's Church.' In 1596 he was advanced to the bishopric of Worcester, from whence, the year following, he was removed to Winchester. In 1599 he published 'Sermons on the Redemption of Mankind'; and in 1604 a treatise entitled 'The Survey of Christ's Sufferings for Man's Redemption, and of his descent to Hades or Hell for our deliverance.' He also preached the sermon at the coronation of James I., and was a principal speaker at the Hampton Court conference. The care of revising the new translation of the Bible was likewise entrusted to him and Bishop Smith. He died 18 June, 1616.

BINCKES, WILLIAM, D.D., son of Richard Binckes, of Cheapside, London, was born in the metropolis about 1653, and educated at Westminster School. On 1 April, 1671, he was admitted a pensioner of St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1674). He afterwards removed to Peterhouse, where he graduated M.A. 1678; D.D. 1699. He became a prebendary of Lincoln 1681; vicar of Leamington, Warwickshire, 1683; a prebendary of Lichfield 1697; and dean of Lichfield 1703. Died 19 June, 1712. Dr. Binckes took a prominent part in the stormy discussions of convocation, to which he was sent as proctor for the diocese of Lichfield; and in 1705 he was elected prolocutor of the Lower House. He published 'A Letter to a Convocation Man, concerning the Rights, Powers, and Privileges of that Body,' 1697; an Examination of Bishop Burnet's Exposition of the XXXIX. Articles; and some single sermons.

BINGHAM, GEORGE, B.D., was born at Melcomb Bingham, Dorsetshire, 1715. He received his education at Westminster School, and was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, from whence he removed to a fellowship in All Souls' College, where he contracted an intimacy with Sir William Blackstone. He quitted his fellowship on being presented to the rectory of Pimperm, Dorsetshire, to which was afterwards added that of More Critchell, in the same county. He died at Pimperm 11 Oct., 1800. Mr. Bingham wrote 'A Vindication of the Doctrine and Liturgy of the Church of England,' 8vo., 1774; 'An Essay on the Millennium,' 8vo.; 'Disseriations Apocalypticæ,' &c.; all of which were collected, with some sermons, into 2 vols. 8vo., 1804, with a memoir of the author. He rendered great assistance to Mr. Hutchins in the History of Dorsetshire.

BINGHAM, JOSEPH, was born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, Sept., 1668, and educated at the grammar school there, and at University College, Oxford. Hearing the Blessed Trinity attacked in the university pulpit, he took occasion, when he preached before that learned body, 1695, to explain in an elaborate manner the three witnesses mentioned by St. John. The discourse drew upon him the severest censures, and he was obliged to give up his fellowship at University College, and to retire to Headbourne-worthy, a living in Hampshire which Dr. Radcliffe conferred upon him.

BINGHAM.

He continued his subject in two discourses before the clergy of Winchester with general approbation, and he vindicated his conduct by printing the offensive sermons with a copious preface. His most learned and valuable work in ten vols. 8vo. and two vols. folio is called 'Origines ecclesiasticæ.' His diligence was at last rewarded by Trelawney, bishop of Winchester, who gave him the living of Havant, near Portsmouth, but his improving fortune was overclouded by the South Sea bubble. He died 17 Aug., 1723.

BINGHAM, JOSEPH, second son of the preceding, was educated at the Charter House and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he prematurely died at the age of twenty-two, in consequence of excessive application. He promised all the learning and virtues of his father, and he had finished, except the preface, a valuable edition of the Theban story, published after his death.

BINGHAM, PEREGRINE, a legal and miscellaneous writer, was born about 1788, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he was sent to Magdalen College, Oxford (B.A. 1810). He was afterwards called to the bar, and became one of the police magistrates at Great Marlborough Street, London. Died 8 Nov., 1864, aged 76. He published 'The Law and Practice of Executions,' 1815; 'A Treatise on Infancy and Coverture,' 1816; 'A Digest of the Law of Landlord and Tenant,' 1820; 'A System of Short Hand on the Principle of the Association of Ideas,' 8vo., London, 1821; and 'Reports in the Common Pleas from Easter Term, 1819, to Michaelmas Term, 1820, 19 vols. 8vo., London, 1821-40.

BINGLEY, an actor, born at Rotterdam 1755; died at the Hague 1818.

BINGLEY, WILLIAM, a native of Yorkshire, was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1799; M.A. 1803). Whilst he was an undergraduate in this college he made two tours in Wales, which furnished the subject of his first publication, 'A Tour through North Wales during the Summer of 1798,' 2 vols. 8vo. He afterwards took orders. He died at his house in Charlotte Street, Bloomsbury, London, 11 March, 1823. In addition to the work mentioned above, he published 'Animal Biography, or Anecdotes of the Lives, Manners, and Economy of the Animal Creation,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1802; an edition of the 'Correspondence between the Countesses of Pomfret and Hertford'; 'The Economy of a Christian Life,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1808; 'Memoirs of British Quadrupeds'; and 'Biographical Dictionary of the Musical Composers of the three last centuries,' 2 vols., 1813. For many years he was engaged on a History of Hampshire, which, however, he did not live to publish.

BINCK, JAMES or JACOB, an engraver, born at Nuremberg 1504; died at Rome 1560. He studied under Albert Durer.

BINNING, HUGH, a Scotch divine, was born in Ayrshire 1627, and educated in the university of Glasgow, where he took his degrees, and in his nineteenth year was appointed regent and professor of moral philosophy. As a preacher he was extremely popular; and after he had preached some time as a probationer, he was elected minister of Govan, near Glasgow, where he died 1664. His tracts, sermons, and commentaries on the Epistle to the Romans, were published separately, but were afterwards collected into one 4to. volume, and printed at Edinburgh 1735.

BIRAGUE.

BINNING, THOMAS, a Scotch sea-captain, wrote a book of gunnery, 4to., London, 1670.

BJOERNSTAHL, JAMES JONAS, a Swedish traveller, born 1731; died 12 July, 1779. His Letters, containing an account of his travels, were published at Stockholm 1778.

BIOLCO. See BOLCOLO.

BION, A, a Greek philosopher, who flourished 300 B.C.

BION, A, a celebrated bucolic poet, born at Smyrna. Some 'Idyls' written by him with exquisite taste have been preserved. He lived about 288 B.C., and was poisoned, according to the account given by his disciple Moschus.

BION, JEAN, was born at Dijon 1668, and having taken orders, obtained the situation of almoner to the 'Superb' galley, which served as a prison for Protestants. He was so touched with the patience and resignation of the unhappy captives that he determined to adopt their faith, and accordingly he withdrew, about 1704, to Geneva, where he embraced Calvinism. Subsequently he visited England, where he was a schoolmaster for some time, and then was appointed chaplain to an English congregation in Holland. He was living 1731, but the date of his death is not stated. He published 'A Relation of the Torments suffered by the Protestants condemned to the Gallies in France; Essays on Providence, and the possibility of the Resurrection; and several translations.

BION, NICOLAS, a manufacturer of globes and mathematical instruments, died at Paris 1733, aged upwards of 80 years. His 'Practical Treatise on the Construction of Mathematical Instruments' has been translated into English.

BIONDI. See BLONDUS, FLAVIUS.

BIONDI, Sir JOHN FRANCIS, was born at Lesina, an island of Dalmatia, in the Gulf of Venice, 1572. He became acquainted with Sir Henry Wotton, the ambassador there, who introduced him to King James I. of England, from whom he received the honour of knighthood, and the post of gentleman of the bedchamber. He was also sent with secret commissions to the duke of Savoy. Sir John married a daughter of Sir Theodore Mayerne, and died in Switzerland 1644. His elegant 'History of the Civil Wars betwixt the Houses of York and Lancaster,' written originally in Italian, and translated into English by Henry Cary, gained him great reputation.

BIRAGO, FRANCIS, an Italian author, was born 1562, and was living 1637. He wrote several works on 'Scienza cavalleresca,' which embraces all questions relative to nobility, the profession of arms, the ancient customs of chivalry, and the laws of honour.

BIRAGUE, CLEMENT, an engraver on precious stones, was born at Milan, but exercised his art principally in Spain, about the middle of the sixteenth century. He was the discoverer of a method of engraving on the diamond.

BIRAGUE, RENÉ DE, was born at Milan 3 Feb., 1507. Going into France, he was made counsellor to the parliament of Paris by Francis I., and superintendent of justice. Charles IX. gave him the seals 1570, and appointed him chancellor 1573. He was one of those who advised the massacre of St. Bartholomew, with the Gondis, the Guises, and Catherine de Medicis, all of them foreigners, who have stamped that blot upon the French nation. Gregory XIII. gave him a cardinal's hat at the request of Henry III., who deprived him of the seals.

BIRCH.

He had been married before he turned ecclesiastic. Birague often called himself a cardinal without a title, a priest without a benefice, and a chancellor without the seals. Died 24 Nov., 1583.

BIRCH, JOHN, was first an army surgeon, and afterwards became surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, London. He was one of the most strenuous opposers of vaccination. Died Feb., 1816, aged 70. He wrote several tracts: 'On the Efficacy of Electricity in removing Female Obstructions,' 8vo., 1779; 'Letters to George Adams on Medical Electricity,' 8vo., 1792; 'An Essay on the Medical Application of Electricity,' 8vo., 1803; 'Reasons for objecting to the Practice of Vaccination,' 8vo., 1806; 'Copy of an answer to the Queries of the London College of Physicians respecting the Cow-pox Protection,' 12mo., 1808 (anonymous); 'A Report of the true State of the Experiment of Cow-pox,' 1810.

BIRCH, JOHN, a painter, born at Norton, Derbyshire, 18 April, 1807. As a boy he gave early indication of his love of art, his leisure hours being absorbed in sketching the beautiful scenery of the neighbourhood, notwithstanding that he had never seen a print or drawing of any description. For some time he assisted his father as a file-cutter, a business which he relinquished for a situation at Mr. George Eadon's, carver and gilder, Sheffield, with whom he remained seven years. He then determined to commence the arduous profession of a portrait painter. To perfect himself in the art he went to London, and studied under H. P. Briggs, R.A. Several of his landscapes consist of views of the magnificent scenery in Derbyshire. Mr. Birch was the intimate friend of Ebenezer Elliott, the corn-law rhymist, of whom he painted many portraits. The chief portion of Mr. Birch's life was spent at Sheffield, but he died at South Hackney, near London, 29 May, 1857.

BIRCH, PETER, D.D., son of Thomas Birch, was born in Lancashire, and in all probability entered the university of Cambridge, although no entry of his matriculation can be discovered. On the 6th of May, 1673, however, a letter was sent by the chancellor of Cambridge to the chancellor of Oxford on behalf of Birch, who became a member of Christ Church in the latter university, where he graduated B.A. 1673-4; M.A. 1674. He was subsequently created D.D. After holding some ecclesiastical preferments in Oxford, he was appointed minister of St. James's, Westminster, 1688; chaplain to the House of Commons 1689; and also, in the latter year, prebendary of Westminster. Died 1710. He published several sermons, one of which, preached before the House of Commons, elicited a famous answer, entitled, 'A birchen rod for Dr. Birch: or, some Animadversions upon his Sermon preached before the Hon. House of Commons, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, 30 Jan., 1693.'

BIRCH, THOMAS, D.D., an historical and biographical writer, born in the parish of St. John, Clerkenwell, London, 23 Nov., 1705. His parents, who were Quakers, intended him for trade, but the love of learning prevailed, and he was permitted to pursue his inclination on condition that he should provide for himself. He accordingly became usher in three schools kept by Quakers, which sect, however, he quitted, and in 1728 married the daughter of Mr. Cox, a clergyman, but lost his wife the year following. In 1730 he was ordained, and soon afterwards obtained the rectory of Siddington St. Mary, and the vicarage of Siddington St. Peter, in Gloucestershire. Being introduced to the family of Lord Hardwicke, he procured the living of Ulting, in Essex. In 1734 he was admitted into the Royal Society, and the year following elected a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1743 he obtained the rectory of Landewy Welfrey, in the county of Pembroke, and the same year the rectories of St. Michael, Wood Street, and St. Mary, Staining. His next preferment was the united rectory of St. Margaret Pattens, and St. Gabriel Fenchurch. In 1752 he became one of the secretaries of the Royal Society, soon after which the degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the archbishop of Canterbury. His last preferment was the rectory of Depden, in Essex. He was killed by a fall from his horse in the Hampstead Road, 9 Jan., 1766. Dr. Birch left a considerable part of his fortune, and a large collection of MSS. and books, to the British Museum, of which he was one of the first trustees. Besides his share in the General Historical Dictionary, 10 vols. fol., he published Thuroloe's State Papers, 7 vols. fol.; 'The Life of Mr. Boyle,' 8vo.; 'The Life of Archbishop Tillotson,' 8vo.; 'The Life and Works of John Greaves,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'The Lives,' accompanying, 'the Heads of illustrious persons of Great Britain,' fol., engraved by Houbraken and Vertue; 'An Inquiry into the share which Charles I. had in the Transactions of the Earl of Glamorgan,' 8vo.; 'An Historical View of the Negotiations between the Courts of England, France, and Brussels, extracted from the State Papers of Sir Thomas Edmondson, knt.,' 8vo.; 'The Life and Miscellaneous Works of Sir Walter Raleigh,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Memoirs of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'The History of the Royal Society,' 4 vols. 4to.; 'The Life of Henry Prince of Wales,' 8vo.; Letters, Speeches, &c., of Francis Bacon, 8vo.; The Intellectual System of Dr. Cudworth, 2 vols. 4to.; 'Spenser's Faery Queen,' 3 vols. 4to.; Letters between Colonel Robert Hammond and General Fairfax, &c., 8vo.; 'The Life of Dr. John Ward, professor of rhetoric at Gresham College,' 8vo. He was also the author of many detached pieces in various publications.

BIRCHINGTON, or BRICKINGTON, STEPHEN, so called from Birchington, in the Isle of Thanet, where he was born, was a Benedictine monk, belonging to the church of Canterbury, into which order he entered about the year 1382. He wrote a history of the archbishops of Canterbury to the year 1368, which forms the first article in the first volume of Wharton's Anglia Sacra, who copied it from the MS. in the Lambeth library. Other historical MSS. in the same library are attributed to him, but remain unpublished. He is supposed to have died in 1407.

BIRCHLEY, Wm. See AUSTEN, JOHN.

BIRCKBECK, GEORGE, M.D., son of a merchant and banker at Settle, in Yorkshire, where he was born 10 Jan., 1776. He was bred to the medical profession, and at an early age was appointed professor of natural philosophy in the Andersonian Institution at Glasgow, in which city he established a Mechanics' Institute. Subsequently, when in active practice in London as a physician, he founded in 1823 a similar association on a larger scale. This was the 'London Mechanics' Institution,' in Chancery Lane. Dr. Birckbeck died in London, 1 Dec., 1841.

BIRCKBEK, SIMON, a divine, born at Hornbie in Westmoreland in or about 1584. He was a fellow-of Queen's College, Oxford, and afterwards vicar of Gilling, Yorkshire, and of the chapel of Forcet, near Richmond, in the same county. He was buried at Forcet, 14 Sept., 1656. His principal work is 'The Protestant's Evidence, showing that for fifteen hundred years next after Christ, divers Guides of God's Church have in Sundry Points of Religion taught as the Church of England now doth,' 1634, 1657.

BIRD, EDWARD, a painter and member of the Royal Academy, born at Wolverhampton, 12 April, 1772. He served an apprenticeship to a tea-tray maker, whose works it was his business to embellish. From tea-trays he ventured to canvas, and his first successful work was 'Good News,' a scene he had witnessed in an ale-house. The 'Blacksmith's Shop' was touched with the like social spirit, and the 'Country Auction,' which succeeded, was reckoned one of his ablest works. His masterpiece, however, was his field of 'Chevy Chase after the Battle.' Died 2 Nov., 1819.—Pilkington.

BIRD, GOLDING, M.D., F.R.S., a distinguished physician, was born about 1815, and educated in London for the medical profession. He took his degree of M.D. at St. Andrew's. Dr. Bird first lectured in connection with the Guy's Hospital medical school on natural philosophy, and afterwards on materia medica and botany in the same school. He was also appointed one of the physicians of Guy's Hospital, having previously held a similar appointment in the Finsbury and Islington dispensaries. He died at Tunbridge Wells, 27 Oct., 1824. Dr. Bird was author of 'Elements of Natural Philosophy;' and 'Urinary Deposits, their Diagnosis and Treatment,' 1844. He was also a constant contributor to the medical periodicals.—Imperial Dictionary of Biography.

BIRD, JOHN, D.D., a native of Coventry, joined the Carmelite order, and studied at both universities. He twice held the office of provincial of his order; but when the papal power began to decline in this country, he became a strenuous supporter of the king's supremacy. In 1537 he was consecrated suffragan to the bishop of Llandaff, taking the title of Bishop of Penrith. In 1539, he was appointed bishop of Bangor, and in 1541 first bishop of Chester, but was deprived of the latter see for being married, 16 March, 1553-4. He, however, recanted all heretical opinions, and put away his wife. Soon afterwards he was appointed suffragan to Bishop Bonner and vicar of Great Dunmow, Essex. Died 1558. He composed several theological works in Latin.

BIRD, JOHN, a mathematical instrument maker of London, was born 1709; and died 31 March, 1770. He published 'The Method of dividing Astronomical Instruments.'

BIRD, JOHN, a native of the neighbourhood of Whithy, Yorkshire, was intimately acquainted with the geology of that district. His papers on the subject were made use of by Dr. Young, the historian of Whithy, who remarks that Mr. Bird 'ably assisted me in exploring a region, of which his pencil has often delineated the beauties and copied the antiquities.' Died 5 Feb., 1829, aged 61.

BIRD, SAMUEL, a native of Essex, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1569-70; M.A. 1573). Afterwards he was elected a fellow of Corpus Christi College. In 1598 he was residing at Ipswich, and in 1605 he was incorporated at Oxford. His works are 'A friendly Communication or Dialogue betwene Paule and Demas: wherein is disputed how we are to vse the pleasures of this life,' 1580; 'The principles of the true Christian Religion briefly selected out of many good books,' 1590; and 'Lectures.'

BIRD, WILLIAM, an English musician, born about 1543, was son of Thomas Bird, one of the gentlemen of the Chapel Royal in the reign of Edward VI. He received the principal part of his musical education under the celebrated Thomas Tallis, and was elected organist of Lincoln Cathedral 1563. Six years afterwards he was appointed a gentleman of the Chapel Royal. He was considered the finest player on the virginal of his time, and his compositions were numerous and of great variety. The well-known canon, 'Non nobis, Domine,' was of his composition. Died 21 July, 1623.

BIRDSALL, JOHN (in religion AUGUSTINE), a Catholic divine, born at Liverpool, 27 June, 1775, was educated first amongst the Dominicans, but took the Benedictine habit 1795, at Lamspring in Westphalia, and in due time was admitted to holy orders. He was subsequently stationed as priest at Bath, Cheltenham, and Broadway successively. In 1826 he was appointed president of his order in this country. Died 2 Aug., 1837. He translated from the French 'Christian Reflections for every Day in the Month,' 12mo., Tewkesbury, n. d.; and wrote an account of Lamspring, MS.

BIREN, JOHN ERNEST, duke of Courland, a Russian statesman, the favourite of the Empress Anne, was born 1687, and died 28 Oct., 1772.

BIRINGUCCIO, VANUCCI, a native of Sienna, flourished about the middle of the sixteenth century. He was the first of his nation who wrote upon the arts of fusing and casting metal for cannon, and improving the quality of gunpowder.

BIRINUS, ST., the first bishop of Dorchester. He was a priest of Rome, and being ordained by Pope Honorius, was sent to preach the gospel to the idolaters of Britain. He fixed his see at Dercis, now Dorchester, where he died about 650. Festival, Dec. 3.

BIRKENHEAD, SIR JOHN, born at Northwich, Cheshire, about 1615, was servitor at Oriel College, and became secretary to Laud, and fellow of All Souls. When Charles I. came to Oxford, Birkenhead supported the royal cause by his writings, and when expelled from the professorship of moral philosophy, he hurried from an obscure retreat in London all the shafts of his satire against the republicans. After the Restoration he was created doctor of laws, elected member for Wilton, knighted, and appointed master of requests. His popularity as a courtier drew upon him the censures of jealousy, though Dryden, Langbaine, and Winstanley, speak of him in the highest terms. He died 4 Dec., 1679, aged 64. His writings were chiefly political and satirical poems.

BIRKENSHAW, JOHN, a musician, was a native of Ireland, and lived for some time in the house of the earl of Kildare in Dublin, but after the rebellion of 1641 he repaired to London, where he gained his living by teaching music. He was music-master to Pepys, who mentions him several times in his diary. Birkenshaw published an English translation of Alsted's 'Elementale Musicum,' under the title of 'Templum Musicum,' 1664; and wrote the preface to Salmon's 'Essay on the advancement of Music,' 1672.

BIRKET, or BIRKENHEAD, GEORGE, an English divine, was a native of the bishopric of Durham, and in 1575 entered the English College at Douay, where he was ordained priest 1577. He was among the first of those who were sent from Rheims to Rome to people the college erected there by Pope Gregory XIII. and Dr. Lewis. In 1580 he came to England, where he laboured zealously as a missionary. In 1608 he was chosen archpriest in the place of George Blackwell, deposed, and retained that dignity until his death in 1614.

BIRKHEAD, HENRY, in Latin Birtheadus, a poet, was born in the parish of St. Gregory, near St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, but turning Catholic, went over to St. Omer. Archbishop Laud, however, converted him again to the Church of England, and gave him some preferment, which he lost in the rebellion. He died at the close of the seventeenth century. His works are 'Poemata in Elegiacis, Iambica, Polymetra, Antitechnicata et Metaphrasas membranatum quadripartita,' 8vo., Oxford, 1656; 'Otium Literarium. Sive Miscellanea quadam Poemata, &c.,' 8vo., 1656, printed with the 'Miscellanea,' of Henry Stubbe. He also published, with a preface, some of the philological works of Henry Jacob.

BIRON, ARMAND DE GONTAUT BARON DE, a marshal of France, born about 1524, distinguished himself by his valour in various battles and sieges. He was appointed grand master of the artillery 1569, and no one dared to attack him at the massacre of St. Bartholomew. He was the first who declared for Henry IV., and he forced part of Normandy to submit to that monarch, whom he dissuaded from retiring to England or Rochelle. He was killed by a cannon ball at the siege of Epernay, 26 July, 1592.

BIRON, CHARLES DE GONTAUT DUC DE, a marshal of France, was born 1562, being son of Marshal Armand de Biron, and became famous by his valour and services. In 1601 he was sent ambassador to Queen Elizabeth, and was so imprudent as not only to mention the earl of Essex, whom she had lately beheaded, but to lament the fate of that nobleman. He afterwards intrigued with Spain and Savoy against Henry IV. This led to his death on the scaffold, 31 July, 1602.

BISBY, NATHANIEL, D.D., a Church of England divine, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1657; M.A. 1660); became rector of Long Melford, Suffolk; and died 16 Sept., 1695. His only publications were some occasional sermons.

BISCAINO, BARTHOLOMEW, a Genoese painter and engraver, born 1632; died 1627.

BISCHOP, CORNELIUS, a Flemish painter, born 1630; died 1674.

BISCHOP, JOHN VAN, a painter, was born at the Hague 1646, and died 1686.

BISCIONI, ANTHONY MARIA, an Italian scholar and ecclesiastic, born at Florence, 14 Aug., 1674; died 4 May, 1756. His writings consist principally of the notes, commentaries, prefaces, letters, and dissertations, with which he enriched the works of others.

BISCOE, JOHN, a Puritan divine, was born at High Wycombe, Bucks, in or about 1646, and educated at New Inn Hall, Oxford. Having joined the Puritan party he was appointed minister of St. Thomas and St. George's, Southwark, but on the Restoration was ejected for nonconformity.

BISHOP.

He published 'The glorious Mystery of God's Mercy; or, a precious Cordial for fainting Souls;' 'The grand Tryal of true Conversion, or sanctifying grace, appearing and acting first and chiefly in the Thoughts; wherein is opened the Mystery of Iniquity in Man's Thoughts;' and the 'Mystery of free grace in the Gospel, and Mystery of the Gospel in the Law.' Died at High Wycombe, where he was buried 6 June, 1679.

BISCOE, RICHARD, probably the son or grandson of the preceding, was educated at a dissenting academy kept by Dr. Benison at Shrewsbury, and was ordained a dissenting minister, 19 Dec., 1716. In 1726 he conformed, and received orders in the Church of England, and in 1727 was presented to the living of St. Martin Outwich, in the city of London, which he retained until his death, July, 1748. He held also a prebend of St. Paul's, and was one of the king's chaplains in ordinary. He is now chiefly known for a learned and elaborate work, entitled 'The History of the Acts of the Holy Apostles confirmed from other authors; and considered as full evidence of the truth of Christianity, with preparatory discourse upon the nature of that evidence,' being the substance of his sermons preached at Boyle's lecture, in 1736, 1737, 1738, and published in 2 vols., 1742, 8vo.

BISHOP, GEORGE, F.R.S., an English astronomer, died in London, 14 June, 1861, aged 76.

BISHOP, SIR HENRY ROWLEY, MUS.D., an eminent musical composer, born 1786 in London, where he died 30 April, 1855. His early instructor was Signor F. Bianchi. In 1806 he composed the music for a ballet, performed at Covent Garden, and in 1808 that for 'Caractacus,' a pantomime ballet, at Drury Lane. In 1809 he began regularly to compose for the stage, and from that time till 1826 his engagements were incessant in operas, burlettas, melodramas, incidental music to Shakspeare's plays, patchings and adaptations to foreign operas; and besides, he composed glees, ballads, canzonets, and cantatas. From 1810 to 1824 he held the post of director of the music at Covent Garden, and subsequently became a director of the Concerts of Ancient Music. In 1841 he accepted the chair of music in the university of Edinburgh, but resigned it in 1843. On the death of Dr. Crotch in 1848, he was elected to the music chair at Oxford, an honorary appointment, which he held till his death. He received the honour of knighthood in 1842, but it was a barren honour, and in spite of a knighthood and professorship, added to the more solid rewards of successful authorship, the last days of Sir Henry Bishop were spent in comparative poverty. No English musician has composed so much, few so well, as Sir Henry Bishop, and probably none has produced so many things which are likely to endure.

BISHOP, JOHN, a native of Battle, in Sussex, took the degree of M.B. as a member of Caius College, Cambridge, 1576, and afterwards lived principally in London, but occasionally at his native place. He was a Catholic, and died about 1597. He is the author of 'Beautiful Blossomes gathered by John Byshop from the best trees of all kyndes, Divine, Philosophicall, Astronomicall, Cosmographicall, Historical, and Humane,' 1577, and reprinted the following year under the title of 'A Garden of Recreation.' In this work (p. 61) occurs the remarkable story upon which Horace Walpole founded his 'Mysterious Mother.' Bishop is published 'A Courteous Conference with the English Catholikes Remane, about the Six Articles ministred unto the seminarie priestes,' 1598.

BISHOP, SAMUEL, M.A., an English poet, born in London, 21 Sept., 1731, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford. He afterwards became head master of Merchant Taylors' School, and obtained the livings of St. Martin Outwich, London, and Ditton, Surrey. Died 17 November, 1795. His poems, on light subjects, and in a pleasing and elegant style, were published in 2 vols. 4to.

BISHOP, WILLIAM, D.D., the first Catholic prelate appointed in England by the Pope after the Reformation, was born at Brayley, Warwickshire, 1553. Wood states that he studied at Oxford; but it is more probable that he was the William Esbop who was matriculated at Cambridge, as a member of Trinity College, 2 Dec., 1572, and who took the degree of B.A. in that university, 1585. Having been converted to the Catholic religion, he left England and proceeded to Rheims and Rome. After he had been ordained priest he was sent on the English mission; but being arrested at Dorer, he was sent a prisoner to London, where he remained in confinement until the end of the year 1584. When released, he went to Paris, took his degree of licentiate there, and came again to England in 1591. Two years afterwards he returned to Paris, took his degree of D.D., and soon after his arrival in England, a dispute arising among the Catholic clergy here, he was sent to Rome, with another missionary, to appeal to the Pope. In 1612 we find him again in England, and in confinement on account of his refusal to take the oath of allegiance. On his release he again repaired to Paris, and wrote some tracts against the Protestant divines, Perkins and Abbot. Since the death of Watson, bishop of Lincoln, the loss of the Catholic prelates who outlived the Reformation, it had often been intended to re-establish the episcopal government in England; and the marriage of Prince Charles, afterwards Charles I., with the Infanta of Spain seemed to present a fair opportunity for carrying this scheme into execution, the hopes of the Catholics being considerably raised by that match. Accordingly Dr. Esbop was consecrated at Paris, 4 June, 1623, with the title of bishop of Chalcedon, in partibus infidelium, and being sent to England, he formed a chapter, appointing grand vicars, archdeacons, rural deans, &c. He did not long enjoy his promotion, dying 13 April, 1624. In the latter part of his life, it may be remarked, he was of the order of St. Benedict. His works are 'Reformation of a Catholick deformed by Will. Perkins,' 4to. Part I., 1604; Part II., 1607; 'A reproof of Dr. Robert Abbot's Defence of the Catholick Deformed by W. Perkins,' 4to., 1608; and 'Defence of the King's honour and of his title to the Kingdom of England.' He also published Pits's valuable biographical work, 'De illustribus Angliæ Scripulis,' 1623, to which he wrote a very learned preface.

BISHOP, SIR WILLIAM, a surgeon of Maidstone, became mayor of that town, was knighted 4 Nov., 1778, and died 12 January, 1817, aged 83. He was author of 'An account of the good effects of a decoction of peach leaves in some affections of the urinary passages,' in Med. Facts, viii., 122.

BISSET, PETER, professor of canon law in the university of Bologna, in Italy, in the sixteenth century, was descended from the earls of Fife, in Scotland, and born in that county in the reign of James V. He was educated at St. Andrew's, from whence he removed to Paris; and, having spent some time in that university, proceeded to Bologna, where he commenced doctor of laws, and was afterwards appointed professor of canon law. He continued in that office several years with great reputation, and died in 1608. He is said to have been not only a learned civilian, but an excellent poet, orator, and philosopher. He wrote, 'P. Bissarti opera omnia: viz., poemata, orationes, lectiones feriales, &c.' 4to., Venice, 1605.

BISSE, PHILIP, an English prelate, was a native of Oldbury, Gloucestershire, and received his education at Winchester School and New College, Oxford. This worthy divine was now indebted to his fine person than his fine preaching for preference. The duchess dowager of Northumberland gave him her hand, it is said, because she had, by mistake, received the pressure of his lips in the dark, in a kiss intended for her waiting-gentlewoman. He was appointed bishop of St. David's, 1710, and translated thence to Hereford, 1712. Died 6 Sept., 1725, aged 55.

BISSE, THOMAS, D.D., an English divine, who proceeded to his doctor's degree at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1712. His brother, Dr. Philip Bisse, bishop of Hereford, presented him to the chancellorship of that diocese in 1716, at which time he was preacher at the Rolls. He died, 22 April, 1731. His works are, 'The Beauty of Holiness in the Common Prayer,' four sermons, 'Decency and Order in public Worship; three sermons;' 'A course of Sermons on the Lord's Prayer;' Latin Poems.

BISSET, CHARLES, M.D., a physician, born at Glenalbert, Perthshire, 1717. After studying at Edinburgh, he went as surgeon to the military hospital in Jamaica, but returned in 1745, and soon afterwards purchased an ensigncy in a marching regiment, with which he went on the Continent, and was at the siege of Bergen-op-Zoom, where he distinguished himself as an engineer, and obtained the rank of lieutenant. In 1751, after visiting France, he published his work 'On the Theory and Construction of Fortifications.' He afterwards resumed the medical profession, and settled at Skelton in Cleveland, Yorkshire. He died at Knayton, near Thirsk, in May, 1791. His other works are a 'Treatise on the Scurvy, with remarks on the cure of scorbutic ulcers;' 'Essay on the Medical Constitution of Great Britain;' and 'Medical Essays and Observations,' containing various papers on the climate and diseases of the West Indies.

BISSET, JAMES, was born in Perth, about 1742, and settled at Leamington, where he established a news-room, picture-gallery, and shop for the sale of curiosities. Died 17 Aug., 1832. Among his works are 'A Poetic Survey round Birmingham;' 'Songs on the Peace;' 'The Converts, a moral tale;' and 'A Guide to Leamington.'

BISSET, ROBERT, LL.D., the son of a clergyman in Scotland, was bred at Edinburgh, and intended for the same profession, but declined it, and after taking his degree of doctor of laws, he settled at Chelsea as a schoolmaster. He failed, however, in that business, and became an author by profession till his death, 14 May, 1805, aged 46. His principal works are an edition of the 'Spectator,' with the Lives of the Authors, 6 vols.; 'A Sketch of Democracy,' 8vo.; 'The Life of Edmund Burke,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'History of the Reign of George III.,' 6 vols. 8vo.

BISSET, WILLIAM, a native of Middlesex, was educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected, in 1687, to Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1690). He became rector of Whiston, Northamptonshire; an elder brother of the collegiate church of St. Katharine's; chaplain to Queen Caroline; and died 7 Nov., 1747. Besides several single sermons he published 'The Modern Fanatick, with a large and true Account of the Life, Actions, Endowments, &c., of the famous Dr. Sacheverell,' 1710. This went through eleven editions, and elicited a 'Vindication of Dr. Sacheverell,' from Dr. William King. Cole says Bisset was almost a madman.

BISSET, WILLIAM, of a Scotch family in Aberdeenshire, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1782). In 1822 he was appointed bishop of Ross, in Ireland, and held that see till his death, which took place at Lissendrum, Aberdeenshire, 5 Sept., 1834, in his 77th year.—Al. West.

BITAUBÉ, PAUL JÉRÉMIE, a French poet, translator, and miscellaneous writer, born 24 Nov., 1732; died 22 Nov., 1808. His works were collected and printed at Paris in 1804, 9 vols. 8vo.

BIX, ANGELUS, an English Franciscan, died 1595. His sermon on Good Friday, 13 April, 1688, as delivered at Somerset House, was published by command of Queen Mary d'Este, consort of James II.

BIZARRI, PETER, an historian, born about 1530 at Sassoferrato, in Umbria, or, according to some, at Perugia, in Tuscany, whence he is sometimes called Perusinus. When young he went to Venice, but having adopted the reformed faith, left that city for England. Here he was patronized by the earl of Bedford, and in 1549 was admitted a fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1567 Bishop Jewel gave him a prebend in the church of Sarum, but failing in his expectations of preferment, he obtained leave in 1570 to go abroad, partly for the purpose of printing his own works and partly to collect news of foreign affairs for the English government. From this time he appears to have led a somewhat rambling life on the Continent. The time and place of his death are unknown. As a Latin poet he does not rank high, but his histories are not deficient in interest. They are, 'Historia della guerra fatta in Ungheria dall' inuttissimo Imperatore de Christiani, contra quello de Turchi: Con la Narratione di tutte quelle cose che sono auenute in Europa, dall' anno 1564, insino all' anno 1568;' 'Cyprum Bellum inter Venetos et Selymum, Turcarum imperatorem, gestum,' 1573; 'Senatus Populi. Genueusis Rerum domi, forisq; gestarum, Historiæ atque Annales,' 1579; and 'Rerum Persicarum historia,' 1583.

BIZOT, PIERRE, canon of St. Sauveur d'Herisson in the diocese of Bourges, died 1690, aged 60. He wrote 'Histoire Medallique de la republique de Hollande.'

BLACK, JOHN, an eminent journalist, was born 1783, near Dunse, Berwickshire, being the son of a labouring cottier who resided four miles from that town. He was educated at the parochial school of Dunse, and at the age of fourteen was engaged as an errand boy in a factor's office there; but finding that sphere too limited for his energies and ambition he went to Edinburgh, where he found employment first at a stationer's and afterwards as a lawyer's clerk. He made good use of his time, and became an excellent Latin, and still better Greek scholar. He likewise applied himself to the study of the modern languages. At the age of twenty-seven he walked to London, and on his arrival in the great metropolis he had but three halfpence in his pocket. However, he brought a letter to his fellow-countryman Perry, the proprietor of the 'Morning Chronicle,' who at once gave him an engagement as a parliamentary reporter. He was appointed principal editor of the 'Chronicle' about two years before Perry's death, which occurred in 1821; and he held the office without interruption from that period until 1844, nearly one-third of a century. Mr. Black was most sincere and successful in his advocacy of liberal principles, and his position necessarily brought him into social and political intercourse with some of the principal men of the day. After 1844 he lived in retirement at Birling, in Kent, where he died 15 June, 1855. During his early struggles in London he published the following translations:—'Political Essay on the Kingdom of New Spain,' &c., from the French of A. de Humboldt, 4 vols. 8vo., 1811-12; 'Travels through Norway and Lapland,' from the German of Læppold, 1813; 'Memoirs of Goldoni,' from the French, 2 vols. 8vo., 1813; and a 'Course of Lectures on the Dramatic Arts and Literature,' from the German of Schlegel, 2 vols. 8vo., 1815. Mr. Black was among the first to discover and encourage the extraordinary gifts of Charles Dickens when that eminent novelist was an obscure reporter on the 'Morning Chronicle.'—Gent. Mag.

BLACK, JOSEPH, M.D., an eminent philosopher, was born at Bourdeaux, in France, of British parents, in 1728. He received his education first at Belfast, and afterwards at Glasgow, where he studied physic, but particularly chemistry, under Dr. Cullen. In 1750 he went to Edinburgh, and in 1752 published his inaugural Dissertation on Magnesia, in which he made known his discovery on the cause of causticity in lime. In 1756 he was appointed professor of anatomy and chemistry at Glasgow; but the former chair he soon after exchanged for that of medicine. During his residence at Glasgow he pursued his chemical experiments with indefatigable attention, the result of which was the discovery of the doctrine of latent heat. In 1766 he succeeded Dr. Cullen in the chemical chair at Edinburgh. Dr. Black died suddenly 26 Nov., 1799. Besides the dissertation already mentioned, he published 'Experiments on Magnesia and Quick Lime;' 'Observations on the Ready Freezing of Boiled Water;' these are in the Philosophical Transactions; 'An Analysis of some Boiling Springs in Iceland,' in the memoirs of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. His Lectures on Chemistry were published in 2 vols. 4to, 1803, by Professor Robison, who prefixed to them a memoir of the author.

BLACK, WILLIAM, M.D., an English physician, died at Hammersmith Dec. 1829, æt. 80. Among his works are 'An historical Sketch of Medicine and Surgery, from their origin to the present time,' 8vo., London, 1782. This has been translated into French.

BLACKADDER, JOHN, an eminent minister of the church of Scotland and a zealous opponent of episcopacy, was born 1616, and died in prison Dec. 1686. A Life of him by Dr. Andrew Crichton was published in 1825.

BLACKADDER, ROBERT, a Scotchman, son of St. Patrick Blackadder, adopted the ecclesiastical profession, and in 1480, being then at Rome, was consecrated bishop of Aberdeen by Pope Sixtus IV. In 1484 he was translated to the bishopric of Glasgow. He had so much influence at Rome that he obtained from the pope the erection of the see of Glasgow into an archbishopric. He was much employed in public affairs, and died 1508 while on a journey to the Holy Land.

BLACKBOURNE, JOHN, a nonjuring divine, born 1685, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. He took orders, but his refusal to subscribe the oaths of course excluded him from church preferment. To gain a livelihood he became corrector of the press to Bowyer. The edition of Lord Bacon's works in 1740 was superintended by him; and he was editor of the castrations of Holinshed's Chronicle, and of Bale's 'Chronycle concernynge the Johan Oldcastell.' For some years before his death he was a nonjuring bishop, but lived retired in Little Britain among his books. Died 17 Nov., 1741.

BLACKBURN, WILLIAM, an architect, was born in Southwark 20 Dec., 1750. After serving an apprenticeship to a surveyor, he was admitted a member of the Royal Academy, and in 1773 obtained a prize medal for a drawing of St. Stephen's church, Walsbrook. In 1782 he gained the premium for the best plan of penitentiary houses, which occasioned him to be employed in various parts of the kingdom to erect prisons. Died 25 Oct., 1790.

BLACKBURNE, FRANCIS, was born at Richmond, Yorkshire, 9 June, 1705. In 1722 he was entered of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A., and in 1739 was ordained; soon after which he was inducted into the rectory of Richmond. In 1750 he was collated to the archbishopric to the archdeaconry of Cleveland, and a prebend in the cathedral of York. Notwithstanding his acceptance of these good things in the church, he assisted the anonymous author of 'Free and candid Disquisitions,' and published a defence of that work, though without his name. He also attacked Bishop Butler's 'Sermons,' published in 1751, and published several other pieces in detraction of the Established Church. But his most celebrated performance in this way was the 'Confessional,' which came out in 1760, ran through several editions, and raised a considerable ferment. The tendency of the work, and the principles of the author, may be inferred from the fact that the congregation in the Old Jersey, on the death of Dr. Chandler, invited the author to be their minister. He died 7 Aug., 1792. He also wrote 'An Historical View of the Controversy concerning the intermediate State;' and all his works have been printed, in 6 vols. 8vo., with his life prefixed.

BLACKBURNE, JOHN, a gentleman of Orford, near Warrington, Lancashire, died 1786, aged 96. He had a celebrated garden, which was one of the chief objects of botanical curiosity in the north of England. A catalogue of the plants was printed by his gardener, Mr. Neal, in 1779. His daughter Anne, who died 1794, formed an extensive museum of natural history at her seat at Fairfield, near Warrington, and corresponded with many celebrated botanists, including Linnæus, who, in honour of her, named a plant 'Blackburniana.'

BLACKBURN, LANCELOT, was a native of London, and received his education at Westminster School, from whence, in 1676, he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford. He became subdean of Exeter 1694; dean of Exeter 1705; bishop of Exeter 1717; archbishop of York and lord high almoner 1724; and died 23 March, 1742-3. This prelate was the subject of much calumny; and a report was, during his lifetime, industriously circulated and widely believed, that he had once been a buccaneer. He was a learned man, but his only published works are some single sermons.

BLACKET, JOSEPH, an English poet, born at Tunstall, Yorkshire, 1786. His father was a common labourer, and Joseph was the youngest of a family of twelve. At the age of twelve he went to reside at London with his brother, a shoemaker. He learned the trade, and devoted his leisure to reading. In 1807, after a tedious illness, his wife died, and he sold all he possessed in order to pay off the debts which he had been obliged to contract. He continued to work at his trade, and in his leisure moments committed his thoughts to paper. Died at Seaham, in the county of Durham, 23 August, 1810. 'Specimens of Poetry,' by him, with an account of his life, and some introductory observations by Mr. Pratt, appeared at London 1809, 8vo.; and in 1811 were published 'The Remains of Joseph Blacket, consisting of poems, dramatic sketches, the times, an ode, and a memoir of his Life, by Mr. Pratt,' 2 vols. 8vo.

BLACKETT, THOMAS O., a surveyor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, author of a 'Treatise on the Spirit Level,' and other scientific works, died 19 Dec., 1847.

BLACKHALL, GEORGE, a native of France, became an alderman of Dublin, and lord mayor of that city in 1604. He was author of 'Rules for assizing of Bread,' 4to., Dublin, 1699. Died 1701.

BLACKHALL, OFFSPRING, an English prelate, was born in London in 1654, and educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge. In 1690 he was presented to the living of South Okendon, Essex, and four years afterwards to the rectory of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, London. He was also appointed chaplain to King William. In 1699, he preached a sermon before the House of Commons, on the 30th January, which occasioned a controversy between him and Toland respecting the claim of King Charles I. to the 'Icon Basilike.' The year following he preached the sermons at Boyle's lecture, and in 1707 was consecrated bishop of Exeter. Soon after this he had a controversy with Hoadly, on the doctrine of obedience. Bishop Blackhall died at Exeter, 29 Nov., 1716. Archbishop Dawes published his works, 2 vols. folio, 1723.

BLACKLOCK, THOMAS, D.D., the son of a poor tradesman at Annan, in the shire of Dumfries, where he was born in 1721. He lost his sight by the smallpox in his infancy, and in 1740 was deprived of his father, who had been particularly attentive to his education. Dr. Stevenson, a physician of Edinburgh, then placed him in the university, where he studied till 1745, when he retired to Dumfries, and published the year following, at Glasgow, a collection of his poems, a second edition of which appeared at Edinburgh in 1754.

BLACKLOCK.

Mr. Spence now introduced him to public patronage by a memoir of him prefixed to a quarto edition of his poems, the profits of which enabled him to complete his studies at the university. In 1750 he was licensed to preach by the presbytery, and in 1702 was ordained minister of Kirkcudbright, which situation he afterwards resigned. About this time he married the daughter of a respectable surgeon at Dumfries, and in 1764 settled at Edinburgh. In 1707 the Marischal College of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of D.D., and the same year he published 'Paraclesius; or, Consolations deduced from natural and revealed Religion,' 8vo.; which was followed by 'Two Discourses on the Spirit and Evidences of Christianity, translated from the French, 8vo.; 'The Graham,' an heroic ballad, 4to.; 'Remarks on Civil Liberty,' 8vo.; and some other pieces. He died 7 July, 1791.

BLACKLOCK, W. J., an English painter, died at Brampton, Cumberland, March, 1828, aged 42.

BLACKLOE, THOMAS, an English clergyman of the Roman communion, who flourished during the earlier half of the seventeenth century. He was first professor of theology in the English college at Douay, and then a canon of the chapter established in England by William Bishop, the bishop of Chalcodon. He was a learned man, but of a restless and turbulent character. He formed in the chapter a party against Richard Smith, the successor of Bishop, and having obtained the assistance of the English government, succeeded in bringing about the expulsion of that prelate. After Smith's death, in 1657, he intrigued against his successor, Gage, and obliged him to resign his dignity of vicar apostolic. In the course of these quarrels Blackloe published several works, which were condemned by the Roman inquisition, such as 'Sonus Buccinæ;' 'Appendicula ad Sonum Buccinæ;' 'Tabulæ Suffragales;' and 'Monumethes excantatus' against Robert Pugh. He dedicated, in 1600, his 'Institutiones Ethicæ' to the bishops of the Low Countries. The Jesuits procured the condemnation of this work by the faculty of theology at Douay. His treatise 'De medio animarum statu' contains many heterodox opinions respecting the incarnation, the state of souls in hell and purgatory, and the pope's infallibility; and his treatise 'De obedientiæ et gubernationis fundamentis,' in favour of Cromwell, was condemned by the parliament of 1661.

BLACKMORE, JOHN, a mezzotint engraver, said to have born in London about 1740. He was living 1771.

BLACKMORE, SIR RICHARD, M.D., a poet and medical writer, was born in Wiltshire, about 1650, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Edmund Hall, Oxford. After leaving the university he went abroad, and took the degree of M.D. at Padua. On his return he was chosen fellow of the College of Physicians, and entered into practice in London. King William appointed him physician in ordinary, and conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He was also physician to Queen Anne, and died 8 Oct., 1729. Sir Richard was severely used by Dryden, Pope, and other wits of that age. Mr. Addison, however, Mr. Locke, and above all, Dr. Johnson, have rescued his character from the obloquy which these writers have wantonly thrown upon it. He wrote 'Prince Arthur,' an heroic poem, folio; 'A Paraphrase on the book of Job,' folio; 'A Satire upon Wit;' 'The Lay Monastery,' a periodical paper; 'Essays upon several Subjects,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'A Collection of Poems,' 8vo.; 'Creation,' a poem, 8vo. This is the best of all his works. 'A poetical Version of the Psalms,' 12mo.; 'Eliza,' a poem, folio; 'The Redeemer,' a poem, 8vo.; 'King Alfred,' a poem, 8vo.; 'History of the Conspiracy against King William,' 8vo.; 'A Discourse on the Plague,' 8vo.; 'A Treatise on the Small Pox,' 8vo.; 'A Treatise on Consumption,' 8vo.; 'A Treatise on the Spleen and Vapours,' 8vo.; 'A critical Dissertation upon the Spleen,' 8vo.; 'Discourses on the Gout, Rheumatism, and King's Evil,' 8vo.; 'Dissertations on Dropsy, Tympany, &c.;' 'Christian Antiquities,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Just Prejudices against the Arian Hypothesis;' 'Modern Ariens unmasked,' 8vo.; 'Natural Theology, or moral duties considered,' 8vo.; 'The accomplished Preacher,' 8vo. This last was posthumous. It would seem that his wife acted as his amanuensis, for one of the plates in Colonel John Ayres's 'Tutor to Penmanship,' 1697-8, is dedicated 'To Madam Blackmore, the excellent amanuensis of that incomparable Poem, Prince Arthur.'

BLACKKIE, ALEXANDER, an apothecary, a native of Scotland, published in 1766 a disquisition on medicines that dissolve the stone. In this work, which was reprinted in 1771, he discloses Dr. Chittick's secret.

BLACKSTONE, JOHN, a London apothecary, who died 1753, wrote 'Fasciculus Plantarum circa Harefield sponte nascentium,' 1737; and 'Specimen Botanicum quo Plantarum plurimum rariorum Angliæ indigenarum loci natales illustrantur.'

BLACKSTONE, SIR WILLIAM, LL.D., son of a silk-merchant, was born in Cheapside, London, 10 July, 1723, the youngest of four children. He received his education at the Charter House and Pembroke College, Oxford. At the age of twenty he wrote a treatise, called 'Elements of Architecture,' which, though not made public, received the applause of the learned. He soon quitted the muses, after obtaining Mr. Benson's prize medal for the best verses on Milton, as he has beautifully expressed it in his little poem, 'The Lawyer's Farewell to his Muse,' and entered at the Middle Temple, where he was to become a luminary of the first magnitude. He was fellow of All Souls, where he improved their estates, and promoted the completion of the Codrington library. At the bar he did not possess in a high degree the graces or the powers of oratory, but his writings displayed deep penetration, and the lectures which he delivered as Vinerian professor on the laws of England received the most unbounded applause. In 1761 he was elected member for Hindon, and soon after, on refusing the chief justiceship of the Irish Common Pleas, he received a patent, with the rank of king's counsel. In 1768 he was member for Westbury, and in 1770 he was appointed puisne judge of the King's Bench, and soon after of the Common Pleas. His intense application proved destructive to his health; he was afflicted with a shortness of breath, which was succeeded with a stupor and insensibility that proved fatal 14 Feb., 1780. In Oxford, where he was respected and beloved, he became principal of New Inn Hall, an office which he resigned with the Vinerian lectureship in 1766. The first volume of his valuable Commentaries was published in 1764, and the three following in the four succeeding years. He published also 'Reflections on the Opinions of Hall, &c.;' 'The Great Charter, or Charter of the Forest; a Treatise on the Law of Descents and Feoffment,' &c.

BLACKWALL, ANTHONY, was born in Derbyshire 1674, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1694; M.A. 1698). He was appointed master of the free school at Derby and lecturer of All Hallows in that town; and in 1722 he was appointed master of the free school at Market Bosworth, Leicestershire. In 1726 he was presented to the rectory of Clapham, Surrey, but he resigned it in 1729, and retiring to Market Bosworth, died there 8 April, 1730. He published an edition of Theognis; a Latin Grammar; 'An Introduction to the Classics,' and in 1725 his celebrated work 'The Sacred Classics defended and illustrated,' in one vol. 4to., which was followed by another six years afterwards.

BLACKWELL, ALEXANDER, M.D., a native of Aberdeen, studied physic under Boerhaave, at Leiden, and acquired a proficiency in modern languages. Upon his return home he married, and soon afterwards went to London, and practised there some time as a physician; but not meeting with success he became corrector of the press for Mr. Wilkins, a printer, and afterwards he started as a printer himself. In 1734 he became a bankrupt, and was thrown into prison. These misfortunes, instead of casting Mrs. Blackwell into despair, had quite a contrary effect, for she instantly used her utmost endeavours, by her labour and industry, to extricate herself and her husband out of these difficulties. She had by nature a fine genius for drawing and painting, and being informed that a herbal was much wanted she made some drawings of plants. Having submitted her first drawings to Sir Hans Sloane, Dr. Mead, and Dr. Nichols, they encouraged her to proceed with the work. She also received the kindest countenance from Mr. Philip Miller, then well known as a writer on horticulture; and she was patronized by Mr. Rand of the botanical garden at Chelsea, because she took lodgings in the neighbourhood of this garden, for more ready access to those flowers and plants which she required for her work. She proceeded to make drawings of them, afterwards engraving them on copper, and engraving the work herself. Her husband added the Latin names of the different plants and a brief description of each, chiefly taken, by permission, from Miller's 'Botanicum Officinale.' The first volume of her Herbal, containing 252 plates, appeared in 1737; and the second, with 248 plates, in 1739. It was published in a complete form under the title of 'A Curious Herbal, containing Five Hundred Cuts of the most useful Plants, which are now used in the Practice of Physic, engraved in folio copper plates, after drawings taken from the life, by Elizabeth Blackwell. To which is added a short Description of the Plants, and their common uses in Physic.' This work raised Mrs. Blackwell very high in public estimation, and by its means she was enabled to free her husband from prison. Being induced by an advantageous offer to go to Sweden, he was there appointed physician to the king. His career in that country, however, soon came to a fatal close, for being arrested on suspicion of being concerned with Count Tessin to overturn the government and alter the law of succession, he was first put to the torture and afterwards beheaded 9 Aug., 1747.

BLACKWOOD.

BLACKWELL, MRS. ELIZABETH. See BLACKWELL, ALEXANDER.

BLACKWELL, GEORGE, an English divine of the Roman church, was born in Middlesex, in or about 1545, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was elected a fellow 1593. His mind being more inclined to the Catholic than to the reformed religion, he vacated his fellowship, and retired for a time to Gloucester Hall, several members of which house were much suspected of secretly favouring the old religion. Eventually he went over to the English college at Douay, where he was admitted in 1574. Being already far advanced in learning he was ordained priest in 1575, took the degree of B.D. the same year, and returned into England upon the mission in 1576. In 1598 he was constituted superior of the English clergy, with the power and name of 'archpriest of England.' He held that office till 1608, when he was deprived of it on account of his having taken the new oath of allegiance. He died in London 12 Jan., 1612-13. Blackwell wrote some pieces in defence of the oath of allegiance, and on other subjects connected with his mission.

BLACKWELL, JOHN, a Welsh poet and writer, born at Mold, Flintshire, 1797; died 19 May, 1840. His Poems and Essays, with a very interesting memoir of his life, have been very ably edited by the Rev. Griffith Edwards in a volume entitled 'Ceinion Alun,' 8vo., Ruthin, 1851.—Williams.

BLACKWELL, THOMAS, LL.D., brother of Dr. Alexander Blackwell, mentioned above, was born at Aberdeen 4 Aug., 1701, and after studying in the Marischal College, became Greek professor 1723. In 1737 he published anonymously an 'Enquiry into the Life and Writings of Homer,' which he afterwards accompanied with 'Proofs,' or translations of all the notes in the work. In 1748 he was appointed principal of the college, and was the first layman raised to that dignity since the patronage devolved on the Crown by the forfeiture of the Marischal family in 1716. He died at Edinburgh 8 March, 1757. His other publications were 'Letters concerning Mythology,' and 'Memoirs of the Court of Augustus,' 3 vols. 4to. All these works are written in a most affected and pedantic style. It is said that being at Cambridge soon after the publication of his 'Enquiry,' he asked Dr. Bentley his opinion of it. The doctor replied that when he had gone through half of it he had forgotten the beginning, and that when he had finished the reading of it he had forgotten the whole.

BLACKWOOD, ADAM, professor of civil law at Poitiers, was born at Dunfermline, in Scotland, 1539, and died 1623. He warmly defended Mary queen of Scots in his 'Martyre de Maria Stuart Reyne d'Escoce,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1588. He also wrote 'De Vinculo, seu Conjunctione Religionis et Imperii, et de Conjuratatione Insidis Religionis fuco adumbrata,' 1575; 'Apologia pro Regibus, contra Buchananum Dialogum de Jure Regni apud Scotos,' 8vo., Poitiers, 1581; and 'Varii generis poemata,' 1609. These and some other pieces by him were collected and published, with a life by Gabriel Naude, in 1644.

BLACKWOOD, HENRY, brother of Adam, above mentioned, was born probably about 1526 at Dunfermline, and educated at St. Andrew's. He was also sent by his uncle, Robert Reid, Bishop of Orkney, to Paris, where, in 1551, he taught philosophy. He afterwards adopted the medical profession, and became dean of the faculty at Paris. His humane conduct when that capital was visited by the plague reflects the highest honour on him. Died 1613 or 1614. He published 'Hippocratis quædam cum MSS. collata,' Paris, 1623, and 'Questio Medica, an visceribus nutritis æstuanti-vis aquarum metallicarum potus salubris?' His son Henry was also an eminent physician.

BLACKWOOD, SIR HENRY, bart., K.C.B., a British admiral, born 1770; died 17 Dec., 1832.

BLACKWOOD, WILLIAM, an eminent bookseller and publisher of Edinburgh, was born in that city 20 Nov., 1776; and died 16 Sept., 1834. He was the projector of 'Blackwood's Magazine,' the first number of which appeared in April, 1817.

BLADEN, MARTIN, a native of Essex, was educated first at a private academy, where he laid the foundation of his connection with the duke of Marlborough, and afterwards at Westminster School (1695-97). Having entered the army, he rose to the grade of a lieutenant-colonel under his old schoolfellow. He became comptroller of the mint 1714; one of the commissioners of trade and plantations 1717; member of parliament for Stockbridge 1714, 1722, and 1727, for Maldon, Essex, 1734, and for Portsmouth 1741. He was also one of the privy council of Ireland, and was sent to the conferences at Antwerp, 1732, to treat with the emperor and the States-General as commissary and plenipotentiary. He was a steady adherent of Sir Robert Walpole, and a constant speaker in parliament, particularly on matters connected with trade and the army. Died 15 Feb., 1746, aged 66. He was author of 'Solon, or Philosophy no Defence against Love,' a tragic-comedy; 'Orpheus and Eurydice,' a masque; and 'Julius Cæsar's Commentaries,' made English from the Latin; as also a Commentary of the Alexandrian, African, and Spanish Wars, by Aulus Hirtius, or Oppius, &c., with the Author's Life; adorned with Sculptures from the Designs of the famous Palladio, 1719, 1750.—Al. West.

BLAEU, WILLIAM, an eminent printer and publisher of geographical maps and charts, was born 1571 at Amsterdam, where he died 21 Oct., 1638. His chief work is the 'Grand Atlas Geographique,' or 'Theatrum Mundi,' fol. 14 vols., 1603-1607. His sons John and Cornelius were also eminent printers. John, who died 1680, printed a great many classics, which yield in beauty only to the Elzevirs; and composed some geographical works.

BLAGDEN, SIR CHARLES, an English chemist and physician, born 17 April, 1748. For fifty years he was the intimate friend of Sir Joseph Banks. As a physician in the army he acquired a considerable fortune, which was increased by a legacy of £16,000, bequeathed to him by his friend Cavendish. In the latter part of his life he spent one half of every year in France, and contributed much to the formation of relations of esteem and friendship between the two countries. He contributed a number of papers to the Philosophical Transactions. Died at Arcueil, near Paris, 26 March, 1820.

BLAGRAVE, JOHN, a mathematician, born at Reading about 1550, acquired the rudiments of his education in his native town, whence he removed to St. John's College, Oxford. He soon quitted the university and retired to Southcote near Reading, where he devoted himself to study and contemplation. Died 9 Aug., 1611. His works are 'A mathematical jewel, shewing the making and most excellent use of an instrument so called; the use of which jewel is so abundant, that it leadeth the direct path-way through the whole art of astronomy, cosmography, geography, &c.' 1581, fol. 'Of the making and use of the familiar staff, so called; for that it may be made useful and familiarly to walk with, as for that it performeth the geometrical mensuration of all altitudes,' 1590, 4to. 'Astrolabium uranicum generale; a necessary and pleasant solace and recreation for navigators in their long journeying; containing the use of an instrument, or Astrolabe, &c.,' 1596, 4to. 'The art of dialling, in two parts,' 1609, 4to. Being desirous of leaving some monument of his beneficent disposition which might have reference to the three parishes of Reading, he bequeathed a legacy of which Ashmole gives the following account: 'You are to note, that he doth devise that each churchwarden should send on Good Friday one virtuous maid that has lived five years with her master. All three maids appear at the town-hall before the mayor and aldermen, and cast dice. She that throws most has ten pounds put in a purse, and she is to be attended with the other two that lost the throw. The next year come again the two maids, and one more added to them. He orders in his will that each maid should have three throws before she loses it; and if she has no luck in the three years, he orders that still new faces may come and be presented. On the same Good Friday he gives eighty widows money to attend, and orders ten shillings for a good sermon, and so he wishes well to all his countrymen. It is lucky money, for I never heard but the maid that had the ten pounds suddenly had a good husband.'

BLAGRAVE, JOSEPH, a student of physic and astrology, was born at Reading in 1610. He wrote an 'Introduction to Astrology,' 8vo., 1682; a large supplement to Culpeper's Herbal; 'A new Tract of Chirurgery,' and 'The Astrological Practice of Physic, discovering the true method of curing all kinds of diseases, &c., by such herbs and plants as grow in our Nation.' Died 1679.

BLAGUE, THOMAS, D.D., a learned divine, was matriculated as a pensioner of Queen's College, Cambridge, 20 May, 1568, and afterwards removed to Oxford. Having taken orders he held successively several benefices, was one of Queen Elizabeth's chaplains in ordinary, and chaplain to Archbishop Whitgift. On 1 Feb., 1591-2, he was installed dean of Rochester, and in 1604 was presented to the rectory of Bangor Monachorum, Flintshire. Died Oct., 1611. His works are, 'A schole of wise conceytes translated out of divers Greek and Latin wryters,' 8vo., London, 1569; and 'A sermon preached at the Charterhouse before the kings majesty on Tuesday the tenth of May, 1603,' 12mo., London, 1603. It seems that he assisted Archbishop Parker in his 'Antiquitates Britannicæ.'

BLAINVILLE, HENRI MARI DUCROTAY DE, a celebrated French naturalist, born at Dieppe 12 Sept., 1777; died at Paris 1 May, 1850.

BLAIR, HUGH, D.D., a celebrated divine, was the son of a respectable merchant of Edinburgh, where he was born 7 April, 1718. He was sent from the High School to the college of Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.A. 1739, and was years afterwards was licensed to preach. His first living was Collesie, Fifeshire, and in 1743 he became minister of the Canongate church, Edinburgh, where he continued eleven years. He was then removed to Lady Yester's, one of the city churches. In 1758 he was raised to the High church of Edinburgh, where he continued until his decease. In 1759, at which time he had obtained the degree of D.D. from St. Andrew's, he projected a course of lectures on composition, which he read in the university of Edinburgh with such reputation, that in 1762 a professorship of rhetoric and belles lettres was founded for him by the king, with a salary of £70 a year. About this time he distinguished himself as the zealous advocate of the poems of Ossian, in a 'Dissertation prefixed to those pretended fragments of Gaelic antiquity.' In 1776 he was prevailed upon to publish a volume of sermons which had obtained the sanction of Dr. Johnson, to whose judgment they had been submitted. The sale was so rapid that the author was induced to bring out three more volumes, and a fifth was prepared by him for the press a little before his death. For the service thus rendered to religion, the author was rewarded with a pension of £200 a year. In 1783 he resumed his professorship, and the same year published his 'Lectures,' which passed through several editions and were greatly admired. Dr. Blair died at Edinburgh 27 Dec., 1800.

BLAIR, JAMES, M.A., a native of Scotland, was trained and benefited in the episcopal church here, and about 1685 went as a missionary to Virginia, where he conducted himself with such discretion that Compton, bishop of London, appointed him as his commissary in that settlement. By his interest a college was founded at Williamsburg, in Virginia, of which he was president nearly fifty years. Died 1743. He was author of 'Trévise's divine Sermon on the Mount explained, and the practice of it recommended in devout sermons and discourses,' 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1742.

BLAIR, JOHN (ARNOLD), was born in Fifeshire, in the reign of Alexander III., and educated with the celebrated Sir William Wallace at Dundee. He then went to France, where he joined the order of St. Benedict, and took the name of Arnold. When Wallace became governor or viceroy of Scotland, 1294, Blair was appointed his chaplain, and being by this means an eye-witness of most of his actions, he composed the history of him in Latin verse. The only remaining fragment of this work was published by Sir Robert Scott in 1752. A translation will be found in Hume's 'History of the Douglases.'

BLAIR, JOHN, LL.D., a writer on chronology and divinity, was a near relation of Dr. Hugh Blair, and received his education at Edinburgh. He went to London with his countryman, Andrew Henderson, who became an usher in a school and afterwards a bookseller in Westminster Hall. Blair succeeded him in his school, and in 1754 had obtained orders, for in that year appeared his principal work, 'The Chronology and History of the World,' on the title-page of which he is styled the key. John Blair, LL.D. Such was the reputation of the work that it procured for the author admission into the Royal Society, and the appointment of chaplain to the princess dowager of Wales and that of mathematical tutor to Edward duke of York. In consequence he was rewarded with a prebend in the church of Westminster, the vicarage of Hinckley, Leicestershire, and the rectory of Burton Coggles, Lincolnshire. In 1763 he accompanied his royal pupil on his travels, and in 1768 published a new edition of his Chronological Tables. In 1771 he was presented to the vicarage of St. Bride's, Fleet Street, which he exchanged in 1776 for the rectory of St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, with which he was permitted to hold that of Horton, Buckinghamshire. Died 24 June, 1782. Besides the above work he wrote a 'History of Geography' and 'Lectures on the Canon of the Old Testament.'

BLAIR, PATRICK, M.D., F.R.S., a botanist, was originally a surgeon at Dundee, where he had an opportunity of dissecting an elephant which died near that place 1766. This led him to publish a work on the anatomy of the elephant. On 1 Dec., 1712, he was elected F.R.S. Being attached to the Stuart family he was imprisoned in 1715, but was soon released. He then went to London, and afterwards settled at Boston, Lincolnshire, as a physician. The date of his death is unascertained. Besides several papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he wrote 'Miscellaneous Observations on the Practice of Physic, Anatomy, Surgery, and Botanic,' 'Botanic Essays,' in which he strengthened the arguments in proof of the sexes of plants; and 'Pharmaco-botanologia, or an alphabetical and classical dissertation on all the British indigenous and garden plants of the New Dispensatory,' 1723-28. The last work extends only to the letter H.

BLAIR, ROBERT, a Scotch divine, born at Irvine, Ayrshire, 1593, and died 27 Aug., 1696. He wrote a Commentary on the Book of Proverbs, and some political pieces, none of which have been preserved.

BLAIR, ROBERT, a Scotch divine and poet, was eldest son of David Blair, one of the ministers of Edinburgh and chaplain to the king. He was born 1699, and became minister of Athelstanford, in East Lothian, where he died 4 Feb., 1747. He wrote the well-known poem entitled 'The Grave,' which was first printed at London 1743.

BLAIR, WILLIAM, a surgeon and miscellaneous writer, born at Lavenham, Suffolk, 28 Jan., 1700, was originally intended for the clerical profession; but showing a preference for the study of medicine he went to London, and qualified himself for surgical practice. He resided in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, and for many years was surgeon to the Lock Hospital. Died 6 Dec., 1822. Among his works are, 'The Soldier's Friend, or the means of preserving the health of Military Men,' 1798; 'Anthropology, or the Natural History of Man,' 1805; 'The Vaccine Contest,' 1806; 'Hints for the consideration of Parliament on the supposed failures of Vaccination,' 1808; 'Prostitutes reclaimed and Penitents protected, being an answer to some objections against the Female Penitentiary,' 1809; 'Strictures on Mr. Hale's Reply to the pamphlets lately published in defence of the London Penitentiary,' 1809; 'The Pastor and Deacon examined, or Remarks on the Rev. John Thomas's Appeal in Vindication of Mr. Hale's character, and in opposition to Female Penitentiaries,' 1810. Mr. Blair was very zealous in the cause of Methodism, and in 1814 published 'The Correspondence on the function, objects, and plan of the Roman Catholic Bible Society,' which engaged him in a controversy with the learned Mr. Charles Butler. He was also very much interested in the art of decyphering, and wrote the elaborate article 'Cipher' in Rees's Cyclopaedia. This forms the most exhaustive treatise which has ever appeared on the subject. The secret of the model cypher proposed therein by Mr. Blair was discovered by Michael Gage, who disclosed it in a pamphlet now rarely to be met with.

BLAKE, CHARLES, D.D., a divine and poet, was born at Reading, Berkshire, 31 Oct., 1664, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford. At the university he became acquainted with the learned languages, and the writings of the ancient fathers, while he also became very proficient in poetry. He was appointed domestic chaplain to Sir William Dawes, successively bishop of Chester and archbishop of York, and became the constant companion of that prelate. Among his church preferments were the rectory of St. Sepulchre, London, the subdeanery of York, and the rectory of St. Mary, Hull. Died 22 Nov., 1730. He published 'Tres Nugae Poeticae' at the end of a translation which he made from the Greek into Latin of 'Lusus Amatorius: sive Musaei Poema de Herone et Leandro,' 4to., London, 1694. Watt ascribes to the same author, 'Hibernia Florans, carmine pastorali,' 1689, mense Julii, 1610, London, 1694; and 'Part of the Fifth Book of Milton's Paradise Lost in Latin Verse,' London, 1694.

BLAKE, SIR FRANCIS, baronet, was born in or about 1738, and took the degree of LL.B. at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, 1763. His death occurred at Twizle Castle, in the county of Durham, 2 June, 1818. He wrote 'The Efficacy of a Sinking Fund of One Million per annum considered,' 8vo., 1782; 'The Propriety of an actual payment of the Public Debt considered,' 8vo., 1786; 'The True Policy of Great Britain considered,' 8vo., 1787. These pieces were republished collectively under the title of 'Political Tracts,' 8vo., 1799, 1795.

BLAKE, JAMES, an English Jesuit, made his profession 15 Aug., 1685, and on 3 April, 1701, was declared provincial of his brethren, which office he held for nearly four years. Died 29 Jan., 1728. His 'Sermon on the Blessed Sacrament,' delivered in the chapel of the Spanish ambassador on Corpus Christi day, 3 June, 1686, was reprinted in 1741.

BLAKE, JOHN BRADLEY, was born in London 4 Nov., 1745, and educated at Westminster School. In 1766 he was employed as a supercargo of the India company at Canton, where he began to collect those seeds and vegetables which are applied in China to useful purposes, of which he sent home a great variety. Died 16 Nov., 1773.

BLAKE, ROBERT, one of the greatest of British naval heroes, was born at Bridgewater, Somersetshire, about the end of August, 1599. His father, Humphrey Blake, was a landed proprietor, and also an adventurous merchant, who traded with Spain. After receiving a sound preliminary education in the grammar school of his native town he was sent to Oxford, where he was matriculated in 1615 as a member of St. Alban's Hall, though he subsequently migrated to Wadham College, where he remained nearly nine years. He then took up his residence at Bridgewater, and on his father's death, which took place about this time, he found himself possessed of an estate encumbered with debts. For several years after his return from college his time and talents were chiefly occupied by the care of his aged mother, who outlived her husband thirteen years. Early in life he had imbibed Puritan sentiments, and throughout his career was an earnest supporter of the Puritan party. In 1640 he was chosen member of parliament, and at the commencement of the civil war he took up arms on the republican side. In the sharp encounter at Bodmin he distinguished himself in no slight degree, and soon afterwards gained the confidence of Sir William Waller by his conduct on the fiercely contested field of Landsdown. At the siege of Bristol in 1643 he served under Colonel Fiennes, who entrusted him with Prior's Hill, a small fort which he defended after the surrender. For this Prince Rupert threatened to hang him, but was dissuaded by his friends from taking so extreme a course. Blake now received new employments from the parliament. He was named one of the Somerset committee for ways and means, and appointed, as a reward for his exploits at Bristol, lieutenant-colonel to Popham's regiment, the finest militia in the county. After having successfully defended Lyme against Prince Maurice he assisted in taking Taunton, which place he defended against Goring with such bravery that he was publicly thanked by parliament. An opening for a new and glorious career at sea soon presented itself, and the appointment of the hero of Taunton, conjointly with colonels Deane and Popham to the chief naval command in 1645, was one of the most important events in that age, and marked the commencement of a new and most brilliant era in the history of the British navy. He now sailed in quest of Prince Rupert, whom he blockaded at Kinsale. Rupert, however, managed to slip away with seven ships, but Blake pursued him as far as the Tagus, and eventually attacked him in the harbour of Malaga, when nearly the whole of the prince's fleet was destroyed. He then returned to England with several prizes, and was appointed warden of the Cinque Ports. Soon after this he reduced the Scilly isles and the islands of Guernsey and Jersey. On the prospect of a Dutch war in 1652 he was appointed sole admiral, and on 19 May was attacked in the Downs by Van Tromp, who had 45 sail, while Blake had only 23. However, he fought so bravely that the Dutch admiral was forced to retreat. After taking a number of merchantmen, and engaging the Dutch fleet on their own coast, the English admiral returned to the Downs, where, on the 29th Nov., he was again attacked by Van Tromp, whose force was now increased to eighty sail. The victory was dearly earned by the Dutch, but Van Tromp was so elated with it that he passed through the channel with a broom at his maintop, signifying that he had swept the sea of the English ships. In Feb. following Blake put to sea with sixty men-of-war, and soon after met with the Dutch admiral, who had seventy sail, and 300 merchantmen under convoy. A most bloody engagement ensued that lasted three days, in which the Dutch lost eleven men-of-war and thirty merchant vessels. The loss of the English was only one ship. On the 3rd June the fleets of the two republics fought again off the Foreland; and if the Dutch had not saved themselves on Calais sands, all their ships would have been taken. In 1654 Blake sailed into the Mediterranean, where he demolished the castle of Tunis, because the dey refused to deliver up the English captives. A squadron of his ships also intercepted a Spanish Plate fleet, and took the admiral, vice-admiral, and two galleons. Blake having received information that another fleet lay at Santa Cruz, in Teneriffe, sailed thither, and notwithstanding the strength of the place he went on, burnt the ships, and came out without loss. Finding his health declining he resolved to return to England, but died as he was entering Plymouth Sound, 17 Aug., 1657. His body was interred in Henry VII.'s Chapel, from whence it was disgracefully removed at the Restoration and buried in St. Margaret's churchyard. A graphic and exhaustive biography of the subject of this brief notice was published by Mr. Hepworth Dixon in 1822 under the title of 'Robert Blake, Admiral and General at Sea. Based on Family and State Papers.'

BLAKE, WILLIAM, artist and poet, was born in London 28 Nov., 1757. His father was a hosier, and apprenticed him to James Bazire, the engraver, by whom he was sent to Westminster Abbey and various old churches to make sketches for antiquarian works. He married in 1782 Catherine Sophia Boucher, of Battersea, and in the following year published 'Poetical Sketches,' being having commenced writing poetry when ten years of age. He afterwards published 'Songs of Innocence,' 'The Book of Thel,' 'The Marriage of Heaven and Hell,' and 'The French Revolution,' all poems of an allegorical and mystical nature, the illustrations and letter-press being both engraved by himself. He lived several years at Fepham, being employed to illustrate Hailey's works, but returned to London in 1804, and remained there till his death, 12 Aug., 1827. He illustrated Burger's 'Lenore,' Young's 'Night Thoughts,' Blair's 'Grave,' the 'Book of Job,' and 'Dante,' and published, besides the poems before mentioned, 'The Gates of Paradise,' 'Visions of the Daughters of Albion,' 'America,' 'Songs of Experience,' 'Europe,' 'The Book of Urizen,' 'Jerusalem,' and 'Milton.' He had visions from childhood, and believed that he could summon deceased celebrities to sit for their portraits and converse with him. Some of the heads thus drawn are very spirited and characteristic. He was republican in politics, and held many of the tenets of the Gnostics. He was buried in Bunhill Fields.

BLAKENEY, WILLIAM, Lord Blakeney, a celebrated British general, born at Mount Blakeney, in Ireland, 1672. He entered the army in the reign of Queen Anne, and assisted at the siege of Venlo. At a subsequent period he fought bravely at the assault of Bocca-Chica, being then brigadier-general, and he greatly distinguished himself in defending Stirling Castle against the rebels, 1745. He was governor of Minorca in 1756, when the French fleet, under La Galissoniere, attacked the island. He defended the garrison against the French with so much bravery and talent, that on being compelled to capitulate, he was allowed to march out with all the honours of war, and obtained a conveyance to Gibraltar. Throughout the siege, which lasted seventy days, Blakeney, though eighty-two years of age, never undressed himself, nor went into a bed. On his return to England he was created K.B. and raised to the Irish peerage by the title of Baron Blakeney. In 1759 the citizens of Dublin set up a statue of him, executed by Van Nost, in the centre of the Mall. He died 20 Sept., 1761, and was buried with great pomp in Westminster Abbey.

BLAKEWAY, JOHN BRICKDALE, F.S.A., a topographer and miscellaneous writer, was born at Shrewsbury 24 June, 1765, and educated at the free school there, then at Westminster, and finally at Oriol College, Oxford. He left the university in 1786, and after practising some time at the bar, took holy orders in 1793. The following year he was presented to the living of St. Mary's, Shrewsbury, by an arrangement with his uncle, whom he succeeded in the rectory of Neen Savage, Shropshire, and in 1795 he was presented by a relation to a third living, Felton, in Somersetshire. These three benefices brought him in an income which enabled him to live very comfortably—an income which was augmented in 1800 by his obtaining the living of Kinlet, Shropshire. He died at Shrewsbury 10 March, 1826. His great work is the 'History of Shrewsbury,' but he also published some sermons, and in 1813 'An Attempt to ascertain the author of Junius,' in which he endeavours to identify the Great Unknown with Horne Tooke.

BLAMIRE, SUSANNA, the Muse of Cumberland, daughter of William Blamire, Esq., of the Oaks, was born at Carden Hall, near Carlisle, 12 Jan., 1747, and died at Carlisle 5 April, 1794. Her poetical pieces, some of which are ballads in the Cumberland dialect, were published under the title of 'The Poetical Works of Miss Susanna Blamire, "the Muse of Cumberland."' Now for the first time collected by Henry Lonsdale, M.D. With a preface, memoir, and notes, by Patrick Maxwell, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1842.

BLAMIRE, WILLIAM, was born at the Oaks, near Dalston, Cumberland, 13 April, 1790, and for many years was M.P. for the eastern division of that county, in conjunction with Sir James Graham. He relinquished his seat in parliament on being appointed head of the Tithe Commission. He was also a member of the Copyhold and Inclosure Commissions, and retired from the public service in 1860. Died 12 Jan., 1862. A 'Biographical Sketch' of him, by Henry Lonsdale, M.D., was published at London, 8vo., 1862.

BLAMPIN, THOMAS, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, born at Noyon 1640; died 13 Feb., 1710. He continued the splendid edition of St. Augustine commenced by Delfau.

BLANCARD, or BLANCKAERT, NICHOLAS, a classical editor, professor successively at Steinturth, Middleburg, and Franeker, was born at Leyden, 11 Dec., 1625, and died 15 May, 1703.

BLANCARD, STEPHEN, son of Nicholas, mentioned above, became an eminent physician at Franeker, and published a number of compilations on subjects connected with his profession. When he died is unknown.

BLANCHARD, FRANCOIS, or JEAN PIERRE, a celebrated French acrobat, born 1738; died at Paris, 7 March, 1809. His wife, Marie Madeleine Sophie Armand, accompanied him in his aerial voyages, and made several ascents after his decease. Her death was caused by the bursting of her balloon 1819.

BLANCHARD, GUILLAUME, a French lawyer and advocate in the parliament of Paris. He published a Chronological Table of the Ordinances of the French Kings of the third Race, 2 vols. folio, 1717. He was preparing a supplement, when he died 24 September, 1724.

BLANCHARD.

BLANCHARD, JACQUES, an eminent painter, called the French Titian, was born at Paris 1600, and died 1638.

BLANCHARD, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Jesuit, wrote 'The Temple of the Muses, a collection of Fables;' and 'The School of Manners, consisting of moral reflections and historical facts.' Born 1731; died 15 June, 1797.

BLANCHARD, SIDNEY LAMAN, was born at Great Yarmouth, 15 May, 1803, and educated at St. Olave's School, Southwark. He began his career in the humble capacity of reader in a printing office, and subsequently obtained the place of secretary to the Zoological Society. From the age of twelve or fourteen he had been an enthusiastic student of poetry, and in 1828 he published a small volume of poems, entitled 'Lyric Offerings.' In 1831 he gave up the secretaryship to the Zoological Society for the more congenial employment of acting editor of the 'Monthly Magazine.' From this time he devoted himself exclusively to literary pursuits. On the establishment of the 'True Sun' newspaper he became its editor; and subsequently he edited successively the 'Constitutional,' the 'Courier,' and the 'Court Journal.' With the commencement of the year 1841 he became connected with the 'Examiner,' and continued to write for that journal until his death. Concurrently with these various engagements he was a constant contributor to the lighter periodicals of the day. There was never a writer with a readier pen. A poem, an essay, a sketch, a witty paragraph, seemed to spring spontaneously from his brain; but never, to his honour, was his facile pen dipped in gall, the writer and the man being alike the impersonation of kindness. His death took place under very melancholy circumstances. A year previously his wife had become insane, and this so acted upon the mind of Mr. Blanchard that he was subject to nervous paroxysms, during one of which he put an end to his existence, 15 Feb., 1845. A collection of his Essays and Sketches, with a memoir of him by Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton appeared in 1849.

BLANCHARD, WILLIAM, an eminent comedian, born at York about 1770; died at Chelsea, 9 May, 1835. He made his first bow to a London audience 1 Oct., 1800. Mr. Blanchard's correct delineation of the numerous characters which he successively assumed in play, farce, and opera, made him a universal favourite. His Fluellen, Menenius, Polonius, Pistol, Sir Andrew Aguecheek, Sir Hugh Evans, and many others, were evidences of the soundness of his judgment and the versatility of his talents.

BLANCHARD, WILLIAM J., a stenographer of London, who published 'A Complete system of Short-hand, being an improvement upon all the authors whose systems have yet been made public,' 8vo., London, 1779; and the 'Complete Instructor of Short-hand, upon Principles applicable to the European languages, also to the technical terms used by anatomists, and more comprehensive and easy to write and read than any other system hitherto published,' 4to., London, 1786. The system of stenography explained in this last work was never practised to any extent, and it certainly does not deserve the extravagant praise bestowed upon it by the author of the 'Historical Account of Short-hand,' which passes under the name of James Henry Lewis.

BLANCHE DE BOURBON married Peter, king of Castile, 1352. She was cruelly treated by her husband, who had fixed his affections on another woman; and she was at last poisoned 1361, aged 23.

BLANCHE OF CASTILE, queen of France, was born 1197, being daughter of Alphonso IX., king of Castile. In 1200 she married Louis VIII. of France, by whom she had nine sons and two daughters, whom she educated in the principles of virtue and piety. On the death of her husband, 1226, she became regent, her son Louis being only twelve years old. In this station she behaved with firmness and prudence, and kept down the aspiring spirits of the great lords. She paid particular attention to the education of the young king, and married him early to the daughter of the earl of Provence. During his expedition to the Holy Land she governed the kingdom with great discretion; but the news of his defeat and imprisonment so affected her spirits that she died 1 Dec., 1252.

BLANCHET, FRANÇOIS, a French abbé, born 26 Jan., 1707, and died 29 Jan., 1784. Among his works are 'Varietes morales et amusantes;' and 'Apologues et contes orientaux.'

BLANCHET, THOMAS, an eminent painter of Paris, died at Lyons, 1689, aged 71.

BLAND, ELIZABETH, a lady eminent for her knowledge of the Hebrew language, was born in London about 1660. Her maiden name was Fisher, and in 1681 she married Mr. Nathaniel Bland, of Beeston, in Yorkshire. Among the curiosities of the Royal Society is a phylactery of her writing. She was living in 1712.

BLAND, JOHN, an English writing-master, who, according to Massey, deservedly stands in the first rank of our calligraphic worthies. He was born in London, 17 Aug., 1702, and educated at Westminster School. After holding a situation in the Custom House for nine years, he became writing-master at Mr. Watt's academy in Little Tower Street, and he eventually started an academy of his own in Bishopsgate Street. Died 21 Jan., 1749-50. He published an 'Essay on Writing, exemplified in Forms of Business;' and wrote some pieces for George Bickham's 'Penman's Companion,' and 'Universal Penman.'

BLAND, JOHN, an actor, uncle of the celebrated Mrs. Jordan, was descended from an ancient Irish family. He was once a cornet of horse, and was also admitted a barrister in London; but an unconquerable partiality for the stage led him to give up those pursuits. He was for some time a lessee, and many years treasurer of the theatre at Edinburgh, in which city he died, 20 July, 1808, at 87.

BLAND, ROBERT, the son of an eminent London physician, was born in or about 1779, and educated at Harrow School and at Pembroke College, Cambridge (B. A. 1802). He became assistant master at Harrow, then minister to the English church at Amsterdam, curate of Prittlewell, Essex, and curate of Kenilworth, 1816. He died at Leamington, 12 March, 1825. Mr. Bland possessed high classical and literary attainments, and was greatly accomplished in music. His published works are, 'Edwy and Elgiva;' 'Translations, chiefly from the Greek Anthology, with tales and miscellaneous poems,' 8vo., London, 1806; 'The Four slaves of Cythera, a poetical romance;' 'Collections from the Greek Anthology, and from the pastoral, elegiac, and dramatic poets of Greece,' 8vo., 1813; a translation (in conjunction with Miss Plumtree) of the Memoirs of Grimm and Diderot, 2 vols. 8vo.; and 'Elements of Latin Hexameters and Pentameters.'

BLAND, TOBIAS, a Protestant divine, educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1580-1), whence he migrated to Corpus Christi College. In 1582, or thereabouts, he published a blasphemous libel against the master of his college, from which he was expelled after having been obliged to sit in the stocks. In 1584 he commenced M.A., but not without great opposition being made to his taking that degree. Afterwards he became chaplain to Lord St. John, of Bletsoe, sub-almoner to Queen Elizabeth, and a canon of Peterborough. Died 1604. He wrote 'A necessary Catechisme to be read every Sunday morninge;' the disgraceful libel alluded to above; and 'A Baite for Momvs,' 1589.

BLANDIE, WILLIAM, a native of Newbury, Berks, and some time a member of New College, Oxford, from whence he was ejected 1563, on account, it is believed, of his attachment to the Catholic faith. He afterwards studied the law in the Middle Temple, and published an English translation of Osorius's 'Discourse of Civil and Christian Nobility,' 4to., London, 1576.

BLANDRADA, GEORGE, an Italian physician, who renewed the tenets of Arius with respect to the Blessed Trinity. He fled from the inquisition to Geneva and afterwards to Poland, where the King, Stephen Bator, made him a privy counsellor. He attempted to convert the king to his opinions, but failed. He was killed by his nephew about 1590.

BLANE, Sir GILBERT, M.D., was born at Blancefield, Ayrshire, 29 Aug., 1749, and educated at the University of Edinburgh, where he proceeded M.D. He then repaired to London, and was appointed physician to the earl of Holderness. Subsequently he was nominated private physician to Sir George, afterwards Lord Rodney, and in that capacity accompanied him when, in 1780, he assumed the command of the squadron in the West Indies. In one engagement Dr. Blane was severely wounded, and as a reward for his services he was appointed physician to the fleet, a situation which he held till the conclusion of the war in 1783, when he received a pension. On settling in London as a physician he was appointed physician extraordinary to the prince of Wales. Soon afterwards he was nominated physician to the royal household, and in 1785 he was elected physician to St. Thomas's Hospital. On the appointment of Earl Spencer as first lord of the admiralty, Dr. Blane was nominated one of the commissioners of sick and wounded sailors, and was discharged the duties of that important office till the peace of Amiens. In 1788 he was selected to read the Croomian lecture on muscular motion before the Royal Society, which lecture was published in 1790. In 1795 he was placed at the head of the Navy Medical Board, and with the assistance of Earl Spencer he effected the introduction into every ship of the use of lemon-juice as a preventive and cure of scurvy. In 1812 he was created a baronet, and in 1829, with the sanction of the lords of the admiralty, he founded a prize medal for the best journal kept by the surgeons of the royal navy. The medal is awarded every second year. On the accession of William IV. he was appointed first physician to his majesty. He died in London 27 June, 1834. His works are, 'A short account of the most effectual means of preserving the health of seamen;' 'Observations on the Diseases incident to Seamen;' 'Lecture on Muscular Motion;' 'Elements of Medical Logic, illustrated by practical proofs and examples;' 'Select Dissertations on several subjects of Medical Science;' and 'Warning to the British Public against the alarming approach of the Indian Cholera.'—Auderson; Gent. Mag.; Thomson.

BLANE, WILLIAM NEWNHAM, eldest son of William Blane, esq., of Folicja Park, in the parish of Winkfield, Berkshire, after being educated at Eton, entered Trinity College, Cambridge, being matriculated 13 Nov., 1818. He left the university without a degree, and subsequently became a lieutenant in the Scotch Greys. He died at Latakia, in Syria, 10 Oct., 1825, æt. 26. Lieutenant Blane was author of 'An Excursion through the United States and Canada during the years 1822-3, by an English Gentleman,' 8vo., 1824.

BLANKENBURG, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK DE, a German writer, born at Colberg, in Pomerania, 24 Jan., 1744; died 4 May, 1796. He wrote an essay on romance and other original works, and translated into German Johnson's 'Lives of the Poets,' &c.

BLANKOP, JOHN TEUNISZ, a Flemish painter, born 1628; died 1670.

BLANQUI, JEROME ADOLPHE, a French political economist, born 21 Nov., 1798; died 1854. Among his works are, 'Histoire de l'économie politique en Europe, depuis les anciens jusqu'à nos jours,' 5 vols. 8vo., 1837-42; 'Voyage en Angleterre,' 1824; and 'Rapport sur l'exposition universelle de Londres,' 1850.

BLASE, St., bishop of Sebaste, in Armenia, suffered martyrdom in the persecution of Licinius, 316. His festival occurs on the 3rd Feb. in the Roman, and on the 11th in the Greek calendar. The wool-combers chose him the titular patron of their trade, on which account his festival is still kept by them with a solemn guild at Norwich.

BLASTARES, MATTHEW, a Greek monk of the order of St. Basil, in the fourteenth century, author of a 'Collection of Ecclesiastical Constitutions, Greek and Latin,' folio, Oxford, 1672; 'Quæstiones Matrimoniales,' in the Jus Græco-Romanum of Leunclivius.

BLAURER, AMBROSE, a native of Constance, one of the followers of Luther, whose doctrines he spread in France and Germany. Born 1492; died 1567.

BLAYNEY, ANDREW THOMAS, eleventh Baron Blayney, of Monaghan, and a lieutenant-general in the British army, was born 30 Nov., 1770, and died in Dublin 8 April, 1834.

BLAYNEY, BENJAMIN; D.D., an English divine, was educated at Worcester College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1753, and afterwards became fellow of Hertford College. In 1787 he took his degree of doctor in divinity, and became professor of Hebrew. He was also canon of Christ Church, and rector of Polshot, in Wiltshire, where he died 20 Sept., 1801. Dr. Blayney was an excellent biblical critic, and published 'A Dissertation on Daniel's Seventy Weeks,' 4to.; 'Jeremiah and Lamentations,' a new translation, 8vo.; 'The Sign given to Ahaz,' a sermon, 4to.; 'Zechariah,' a new translation, 4to. He edited the Oxford Bible in 1769, which, for the marginal references, is one of the most correct in our language. His manuscripts were deposited in the library at Lam-

BLEEK, PETER VAN, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born about 1700, and died in London 20 July, 1764.

BLEGBOROUGH, RALPH, a physician and medical writer, born at Richmond, Yorkshire, 5 April, 1769; died Jan., 1827.

BLEGNY, NICHOLAS, a French surgeon, or physician, who obtained a considerable reputation as a quack doctor, was born 1052, and died 1722.

BLENCOWE, SIR JOHN, an English judge, received the coat 1689, and in the following year was returned to parliament as one of the members for Brackley, Northamptonshire. William III. made him a baron of the Exchequer 1696. In 1702 he was removed to the King's Bench, and in 1714 to the Common Pleas. He resigned his office 1722, and died 6 May, 1726.

BLENCOWE, WILLIAM, the first salaried decipherer to the British government, was son of Sir John Blencowe, justice of the Common Pleas. He was born in Jan., 1682, and educated at All Souls' College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. He committed suicide 25 Aug., 1712. His epitaph, in the church of Merston St. Laurence, Northamptonshire, states that he was 'a man studious of many kinds of learning, particularly of the common law, which he professed and practised with reputation; and of the art of deciphering letters, wherein he excelled, and served the publick for ten years.'

BLANNERHASSET, HERMAN, an adventurer who was associated with Aaron Burr in the enterprise against the Spanish possessions bordering on the United States, was born in Hampshire, England, 1767, and died in Guernsey 1831.

BLANNERHASSET, THOMAS, an English poet, studied at Cambridge, afterwards entered the military service, and died about 1626. He was author of 'The Seconde Part of the Mirrour for Magistrates, containing the fallies of the unfortunate Princes of this land. From the Conquest of Cæsar unto the comingy of Duke William the Conqueror,' London, 1578. As a poet he is not inferior to the authors of the other parts of the above work. I take it that he is the same Thomas Blennerhasset, who went as a captain into Ireland in the reign of Elizabeth, who died there about the beginning of the reign of Charles I., and who wrote 'Directions for the Plantation in Ulster,' London, 1610.

BLESS, HENRI, a French painter of history and landscape, born 1480; died 1550.

BLESSINGTON, MARGARET, countess of, an English authoress, born 1 Sept., 1789. She was the daughter of Mr. Edmund Power, of Curragheen, Co. Waterford, and sister to Ellen, Viscountess Canterbury, second wife of Viscount Canterbury, formerly Speaker of the House of Commons. When a mere child, being some months under fifteen, she was married to a Captain Palmer, who died 1817. In the following year she became the wife of the earl of Blessington. The greater part of their married life was spent on the Continent, during which period the charms of her ladyship's person and her intellectual gifts rendered her distinguished in fashionable and literary circles. The countess again became a widow in 1829. Lord Byron on many occasions paid tribute to Lady Blessington's intellectual and personal gifts, and his collected poems contain more than one gay effusion addressed to her. Lady Blessington's house at Kensington Gore was for fourteen years the resort of the most distinguished men of wit and genius of every country and opinion, where all classes of intellect and art were represented, and where everything was welcome but exclusive and illiberal prejudices. She died at Paris 4 June, 1849. Among her numerous works are, 'The Magic Lantern, or Scenes in the Metropolis;' 'The Idler in France;' 'The Idler in Italy;' 'A Tour in the Netherlands;' 'The Confessions of an Elderly Lady;' 'The Confessions of an Elderly Gentleman;' 'The Governess,' a novel; 'Grace Cassidy, or the Repealers,' a novel; 'The Two Friends;' 'The Victims of Society;' 'Mercedith;' 'The Lottery of Life;' 'The Memoirs of a Femme de Chambre;' 'The Belle of a Season;' 'Strathern,' and other novels, sketches, and fragments, besides innumerable magazine articles. She was also editor of the 'Keepsake,' the 'Book of Beauty,' and other illustrated works on a large and expensive scale.

BLETHYN, WILLIAM, a native of Wales, studied at Oxford, and after holding some minor church preferences, was consecrated bishop of Llandaff, 17 April, 1575. Died Oct., 1590.

BLETTERIE, JEAN PHILIPPE RENÉ DE LA, a French writer, born at Rennes, 25 Feb., 1696. He became a member of the Congregation of the Oratory, but left it and obtained the professorship of eloquence in the Royal College at Paris. Died 1 June, 1772. His works are 'The Life of the Emperor Julian; History of the Emperor Jovian; a translation of part of Tacitus; and Letters on Quietism. He also edited Masclef's Hebrew Grammar.

BLEWITT, JONAS, an organist of London, who died in 1805, published a 'Treatise on the Organ, with explanatory Voluntaries;' 'Ten Voluntaries, or pieces for the Organ;' and 'Twelve easy and familiar movements.'

BLICKE, SIR CHARLES, knight, surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, died 30 Dec., 1815. He published 'An Essay on the Yellow Fever of Jamaica, collected from the manuscript of a late Surgeon,' 8vo., London, 1772.

BLIGH, RICHARD, an eminent chancery barrister and equity draughtsman, was born in or about 1780, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. Died about 1838. He published 'Reports of Cases heard in the House of Lords, on Appeals and Writs of Errors, from 1819 to 1836,' 10 vols.

BLIGH, WILLIAM, an English navigator, born in 1754 at Plymouth. His name is chiefly remembered in connection with the celebrated mutiny of the 'Bounty,' 1789, of which he afterwards published an account. In 1806 he was appointed governor of New South Wales; but soon gave such offence to the colonists that he was ignominiously sent back to England 1808. He died in London, 7 Sept., 1817.

BLIZARD, THOMAS, nephew of Sir William Blizard, was born in or about 1772, and became surgeon to the London Hospital. He was very skilful in surgical operations, and invented a knife used in lithotomy, which bears his name. Died 7 May, 1838.

BLIZARD, SIR WILLIAM, F.R.S., an eminent surgeon, was the son of an auctioneer at Barnes, in Surrey, where he was born 1743. He was apprenticed to a surgeon and apothecary at Mort-

In conjunction with Dr. Maclaurin he founded, in 1785, a school at the London Hospital, which was the first regular medical school connected with a great hospital. He was also partly the founder, and for many years the chairman, of the Anatomical Society, and the first president of the Hunterian Society. In 1787 he was appointed professor of anatomy of the Company (afterwards the Royal College) of Surgeons. The principal sphere of his action, however, was the London Hospital, the benefits of which institution he greatly extended. He received the honour of knighthood, 1803, and died 28 Aug., 1835. In addition to some political pamphlets and papers in the medical Journals, he published 'A Lecture on the Situation of the large Blood-vessels of the Extremities, &c.,' 'Dissertations on Poles, with an Essay on the Means of preventing Crimes and amending Criminals,' 'Experiments and Observations on the danger of Copper and Red-metal in pharmaceutical and chemical preparations,' 'Suggestions for the improvement of Hospitals and other Charitable Institutions,' 'The Hunterian Oration for 1815, 1823, and 1828,' and 'An Address to the Chairman and Members of the House Committee of the London Hospital on the subject of Cholera.

BLOCH, GEORGE CASTANEUS, bishop of Ripen, in Denmark, author of a Latin work containing many curious remarks on the palm or date tree of Palestine and Idumea. Born 1717; died 1773.

BLOCH, JOHN ERASMUS, a Danish gardener, author of 'Horticultura Danica,' 1647.

BLOCH, MARK ELIEZER, a Jewish naturalist and physician, was born at Anspach, 1723, and settled at Berlin, where he died, 6 Aug., 1790. His principal work is a Natural History of Fishes.

BLOCK, JOANNA KOERTES, a female artist, was born at Amsterdam, 17 Nov., 1650. She first evinced her genius by modelling pieces in wax, beautifully coloured. She next engraved with a diamond on crystal and glass, and copied paintings in coloured silks; but afterwards she employed herself wholly in cutting paper, in which she so far excelled that whatever others produced by the cutter she executed with a pair of scissors. The little pieces, which she refused. The empress of Germany gave her orders for a trophy, with the value of four thousand florins, which she cut out herself. Died 23 Dec., 1715.

BLOCKLAND, ANTHONY DE MONTFORT, an historical and portrait painter, was born in 1532, and died in 1587. He had two brothers, Peter and Herbert. He painted battles and markets, and the other portraits and conversations.

BLOEMART, ABRAHAM, a painter of landscape and history, was born at Gorcum, in 1564, and died in 1647. He had four sons, who were all of his principal work is a landscape. He was born in 1623 at Utrecht, and died in 1690. He was one of the finest engravers of his time.

BLOEMER, FRANCIS VAN, a landscape painter, was born in 1656; died at Rome, 1730.

BLOEMER, VAN, a painter, brother of Francis van Bloemer.

the preceding, died at Antwerp 1699. His brother Herbert van Bloemen (born 1672) also acquired a considerable reputation as a painter.

BLOIS, PETER DE. See PETER.

BLOME, RICHARD, a publisher and literary adventurer of some celebrity, who, by the aid of subscriptions adroitly levied, issued many splendid works. Originally he was a ruler of paper, and afterwards a kind of arms painter. Wood says he practised for divers years prologuing tricks, in employing necessitous persons to write in several arts, and to get contributions of noblemen to promote the work. Wood likewise remarks, 'This person, Blome, is esteemed by the chiefest heralds a most impudent person; and the late industrious Garter (Sir W. D.) hath told me that he gets a livelihood by bold practices.' Blome brought out the 4th and 5th editions of Guillim's 'Display of Heraldry,' 1606, 1679; 'An Essay to Heraldry,' 1684; and 'The Art of Heraldry,' 1685. But the best known of his publications is his 'Britannia; or, a Geographical Description of the Kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with the Isles and Territories thereto belonging; and there is added an alphabetical Table of the Names, Titles, and Seats of the Nobility and Gentry; illustrated with a map of each county of England, &c.' folio, London, 1673.

BLOMEFIELD, FRANCIS, a topographer, born at Fersfield, Norfolk, 23 July, 1705, was educated first at Diss, then at Thetford, and finally at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1727). On 20 July, 1726, he was instituted to the rectory of Hargham, Norfolk, and on 13 Sept., in the same year, to the rectory of Fersfield. He held both these livings till the beginning of 1730, when he resigned Hargham. Died 15 Jan., 1751. His taste for the study of antiquities was shown at an early age; for, during his residence at the university, he collected the materials for a work—now very scarce—entitled 'Collectanea Cantabrigiensiæ; or collections relating to Cambridge, university, town, and county; containing the monumental inscriptions in all the chapels and parish churches in the town and in several others in the county; with a list of the mayors; the most ancient charters, &c., &c.,' 4to., Norwich, 1750 (privately printed). His chief production, however, is 'An Essay towards a Topographical History of the County of Norfolk,' [continued from p. 678 of the 3rd volume by C. Parkin], 5 vols. folio, Fersfield, Norwich, and Lynn, 1739-75. A new edition of this valuable work appeared at London, 11 vols. 8vo., 1805-10; and an 'Index Nominum' contained in it was published at Lynn by J. N. Chadwick, in 1802. Mr. S. Wilton Kix has published 'Cursory notices of the Rev. Francis Blomefield, extracted from his Parish Register-Book, and from his Correspondence, 1733-79,' 8vo., Ipswich, 1848.

BLOMEFIELD, MILES, an alchemical writer, was born at Bury St. Edmund's 5 April, 1525, and in 1552 had a license from the university of Cambridge to practise physic, which he did in his native place. It is supposed he was living in 1574. He is author of 'Bloomfield's Blossoms, or the Campe of Philosophy,' printed in Ashmole's 'Theatrum Chemicum' and of an alchemical MS. preserved at Cambridge.

BLOMFIELD, CHARLES JAMES, an English prelate, and classical scholar, was the son of a schoolmaster at Bury St. Edmund's, where he was born 29 May, 1786. He was sent to the grammar school of his native town, but was afterwards placed with the Rev. Michael Thomas Becher, under whose able tuition he remained ten years, and laid the foundation of that able scholarship which gained for him early academical distinction and a lasting reputation. At Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow, he carried off several prizes, and graduated B.A. in 1808, as third wrangler, and first chancellor's medallist. Having taken orders, he was presented, in 1810, to the livings of Quarrington and Dunton, Lincolnshire. In that year he published his 'Prometheus' of Æschylus, and in the year following the 'Persæ' and 'Sept. Cont. Thebas,' works which at once marked their editor as a scholar of the first rank. Though Dr. Blomfield early quitted the classic regions of Cambridge life he kept up a literary and classical party in his university by editing Porson's 'Adversaria' and a magazine entitled the 'Museum Criticum,' which was subsequently reprinted in two volumes. His editions of 'Callimachus' and of five out of the seven plays of Æschylus, with copious glossaries, which he brought out at intervals snatched from his ecclesiastical pursuits, gained for him upon the Continent a high reputation as a Greek scholar. After five years' service in his Lincolnshire parishes, he was preferred to the living of Chesterford, in the diocese of London, and in 1815 was appointed by Dr. Howley, who then filled the see of London, one of his domestic chaplains. Subsequently Blomfield was collated to the rich rectory of Bishopsgate and to the archdeaconry of Colchester. On 30 June, 1824, he was consecrated bishop of Chester, and in 1828 he succeeded Dr. Howley in the see of London, which he filled for nearly thirty years. During that time he displayed the full maturity of those talents which made him the most conspicuous of the Anglican prelates. He particularly directed his attention to raising the standard of education among the clergy of his populous diocese; and to him must be attributed the establishment of the Colonial Bishops' Fund. In 1856 his health prevented him from discharging his duties, and an Act of Parliament was passed enabling him to resign his see on an allowance of £5,000 a year, together with the use of the palace at Fulham for life. Died 5 Aug., 1857.

BLOMFIELD, EDWARD VALENTINE, a classical scholar of great promise was born at Bury St. Edmund's, 14 Feb., 1788, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, but afterwards migrated to Emmanuel College, of which he was elected a fellow. Died 9 Oct., 1816. Some of his prize poems were published, and he was a contributor to the 'Museum Criticum.' At the time of his death he had just completed an English translation of Matthiæ's Greek grammar, which was afterwards published by his brother Charles James Blomfield, bishop of London. He was also engaged in the compilation of a Greek and English Lexicon.

BLOMFIELD, EZEKIEL, a dissenting minister, born at North Walsham, in Norfolk, 28 Oct., 1778, was placed under the tuition of the Rev. S. Newton of Norwich, and made rapid progress in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. He next studied at the dissenting academy at Homerton, and became pastor of a congregation at Wymondham in his native county. In 1809 he removed to Wortwell, where he continued to labour until his death, on 14 July, 1818. He wrote 'A general View of the

BLOND, LE. See LE BLOND.

BLONDEL, a rhymor or minstrel to Richard I. king of England, about the year 1100. Whilst his master, being a prisoner of the duke of Austria, was pining in a tower in Germany, Blondel traversed the Holy Land and all parts of Germany, in search of the king, whom he at length discovered to be confined in the castle of Lowenstein, by singing near the walls of the castle a song which the king and himself jointly composed. This anecdote furnished the subject of Gretry's beautiful opera.

BLONDEL, DAVID, a French Protestant divine, was born at Chalons 1591, and succeeded Vossius as professor of history at Amsterdam, where he died 6 April, 1655. Amongst his numerous works are Explications on the Eucharist, and on the Supremacy of the Church.

BLONDEL, FRANÇOIS, a French engineer and mathematical writer, born 1617; died 1 Feb., 1686. His son Jean François (born 1705; died 1774) wrote several works on architecture.

BLONDEL, JAMES AUGUSTUS, M.D., a native of Paris, took his degree of M.D. at Leyden 1692, and was admitted a licentiate of the London College of Physicians 26 March, 1710-11. He was author of 'The Strength of Imagination in Pregnant Women examined, and the opinion that marks and deformities in children arise from thence, demonstrated to be a vulgar error,' 12mo., 1727. This being answered by Dr. Turner, Blondel replied in a work entitled 'The Power of the Mother's Imagination over the Fœtus examined, in answer to Dr. Daniel Turner's book entitled "A Defence of the Twelfth Chapter of his Traité de Morbis Cutaneis,"' 1729. Turner replied the year following, and here the controversy ended. Died 5 Oct., 1734.

BLONDIN, PIERRE, a French botanist, born 18 Dec., 1682; died 15 April, 1713.

BLONDUS. See BLOUNT.

BLONDUS, FLAVIUS, an Italian historian, born at Forli, 1388. He became secretary to Pope Eugenius IV. and three of his successors, and died at Rome 4 June, 1403. The best known of his works are 'Roma Instaurata;' 'Italia illustrata;' 'De origine et gestis Venetorum;' and 'Histor. Roman. decades tres,' from A.D. 400 to A.D. 1440.

BLOOD, THOMAS, a daring adventurer, commonly styled Colonel Blood, was born in Ireland about 1628. On 6 Dec., 1670, he had the audacity to seize the duke of Ormond in his coach, in St. James's Street, London, with the design, it was believed, of carrying him to Tyburn and there hanging him. The duke, however, was rescued, and Blood was fortunate enough to make his escape. On 9 May in the following year he made an attempt to steal the royal crown, globe, and sceptre from the Tower, but was apprehended. On being taken before King Charles II. for examination, he craftily said that he had once undertaken to kill his majesty, and with that intention had gone to a place near the river where he bathed, but was struck with so profound an awe at the sight of his majesty's person that his resolution failed him, and he entirely laid aside his design. The king was so touched by this story that he pardoned Blood, and granted him a handsome pension. For some time he was actually a favourite at court, but he eventually fell into disgrace, and died in obscurity 24 Aug., 1680.

BLOOMFIELD, ROBERT, the author of several pastoral poems of great beauty, was born of very humble parents at the village of Honington, in Suffolk, 1766. Without any education but what a village school afforded, and losing his father at the age of eleven, he was apprenticed to a farmer, and could only improve his taste by perusing such books as he could borrow. Among these Thomson seems to have been his favourite author, and 'The Seasons' inspired him with the ambition of being a poet. He came to London, and composed 'The Farmer's Boy' in a garret in Bell Alley. The MS. fell into the hands of the late Capel Loft, who encouraged him to print it; and it succeeded so well that above 26,000 copies of it were sold. His reputation was increased by the appearance of his Rural Tales, Songs and Ballads, News from the Farm, Wild Flowers, and The Banks of the Wye. These are of unequal merit; but all breathe a spirit of purity and enthusiasm for the beauties of nature that place the name of Bloomfield among the most natural and amiable of our pastoral poets. The extensive sale of the 'Farmer's Boy' and Wild Flowers seem to have done little for the benefit of the poet. His broken health and pecuniary difficulties carried him off at Shetford, in Bedfordshire, 19 Aug., 1823, in his 57th year.—Engl. Brit.

BLOOR, ROBERT, a celebrated porcelain manufacturer of Derby, died 1845. He was assisted in his works by his brother Joseph, who died 1846.

BLOOT, PETER, a Flemish painter, died 1667.

BLOSIUS, or DE BLOIS, FRANÇOIS LOTIS, a Flemish Benedictine, author of the 'Speculum Religiosorum,' and other works on the spiritual life, was born 1506, and died in 1563, or on the 7th Jan., 1566.

BLOUNT. See MOUNTJOY, Lord.

BLOUNT, CHARLES, earl of Devon. See DEVON.

BLOUNT, CHARLES, younger son of Sir Henry Blount, and brother of Sir Thomas Pope Blount, mentioned below, was born at Upper Holloway, Middlesex, 27 April, 1654. He also was educated by his father, from whom he seems to have derived his sceptical principles. At the age of eighteen he married one of the daughters of Sir Timothy Tyrrel, of Shotover, in the county of Oxford, and soon after published a defence of Orden's 'Conquest of Grenada.' In 1678 he printed his 'Anima Mundi,' in which he is said to have been assisted by his father. He afterwards wrote some tracts on the popish plot, and in 1680 'The Life of Apollonius Tyanæus,' which was soon suppressed. The same year came out his 'Diæta of the Ephesians,' a direct attack upon revelation. In 1684 he published 'Janus Scientiarum, or an Introduction to all sorts of Learning,' 8vo. He concurred in the Revolution, but defended it in a strange manner in a pamphlet, attempting to prove that William and Mary reigned by right of conquest. On the death of his wife he made love to her sister, but not succeeding he shot himself through the head in Aug., 1693. After his death appeared his work, entitled 'The Oracles of Reason,' which, with all his miscellaneous tracts, were printed together in one volume 12mo., 1695.

BLOUNT, Sir CHRISTOPHER, was educated abroad in the English college at Rheims under the direction of Doctor, afterwards Cardinal Allen. On his return to England he appeared very much at court, and, though a Catholic, served the queen in her wars. He was very intimate with the earl of Essex, under whom he served in Spain and Ireland. His intimacy with this nobleman proved his ruin, for the earl being called out of Ireland, to justify his conduct in that kingdom, Sir Christopher came over with him, and was one of the party when he marched through the streets of London in a tumultuous manner in order to surprise the queen's council. Being afterwards tried and condemned to die, he lost his head on Tower Hill 18 March, 1600, together with Sir Charles Danvers, who had been engaged in the same cause.

BLOUNT, Sir HENRY, son of Sir Thomas Pope Blount, was born at Tittenhanger, in Hertfordshire, 15 Dec., 1602. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Gray's Inn, and in 1634 went on his travels, of which he printed an account that ran through several editions, under the title of 'A Voyage to the Levant.' In 1639 he received the honour of knighthood, and on the breaking out of the civil war attached himself to the royal cause, but afterwards complied with the usurping powers. He died 9 Oct., 1682. His other works, which show a sceptical mind, are Six Comedies; a satire entitled 'The Exchange Walk,' and An Epistle in praise of Tobacco and Coffee.

BLOUNT, JOHN, in Latin Blondus, an eminent divine of the thirteenth century, was educated at Oxford and Paris. At the former university he became an eminent lecturer. He obtained several ecclesiastical preferments, and in particular the chancellorship of the church of York. In 1232 he was elected archbishop of Canterbury, but did not enjoy the dignity, owing to the papal rejection of his claim. He then retired to Oxford, where he died 1248. He wrote 'Summarium Sacre Facultatis;' 'Disceptationes aliquot;' and several commentaries on the Scriptures.

BLOUNT, RICHARD, an English Jesuit, was educated at Oxford, but quitted that university for Rome, where he was ordained priest. In 1590 he accompanied Father Persons to Seville, and shortly after sailed for England, together with eleven other priests. He was not a Jesuit until some years later. Being appointed superior of his brethren in England, the members of the order multiplied under his government to nearly two hundred, including forty professed fathers. In 1623 England was erected into a province of the society, Father Blount being declared its first provincial. He died in London 13 May, 1638.

BLOUNT, THOMAS, a native of Bordsley, Worcestershire, studied the law in the Inner Temple, but being a Catholic was debarred from following his profession. He resided chiefly on his estate at Orleton, where he died 26 Dec., 1679, aged 61. Among his numerous works are, 'The academy of eloquence;' 'Glossographia; or a dictionary of hard words;' 'Boscobel; or the history of his majesty's escape after the battle of Worcester,' 1660, and the second part 1681; 'The Catholic almanack for 1661, 1662, 1663,' &c.; 'A Law Dictionary,' 1671; 'Animadversions on Sir Richard Baker's Chronicle,' 1672; 'A world of errors, discovered in Mr. Edmund Philips's world of words,' 1673; 'Fragmenta antiquitatis. of land, and jocular customs of some manners,' 8vo., London, 1679; and 'A history of Herefordshire,' 2 vols. folio, MS.

BLOUNT, SIR THOMAS POPE, eldest son of Sir Henry Blount, mentioned above, and grandson of Sir Thomas Pope Blount, of Tittenhanger, Hertfordshire, was born at Upper Holloway, Middlesex, 12 Sept., 1649. He received a domestic education under his father, and in 1679 was created a baronet. He sat in several parliaments for St. Alban's, and at the Revolution was appointed one of the commissioners of public accounts. Sir Thomas died at Tittenhanger 30 June, 1697. His works are, Censura Celeberrimum Auctorum, folio, 1690; Essays, 12mo., 1697; Natural History, 12mo., 1693; Remarks on Poetry, 12mo., 1694.

BLOW, JOHN, Mus.D., was born at North Collingham, Nottinghamshire, 1648. In 1673 he became one of the gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, and the year following was appointed master of the children. He obtained the degree of doctor of music by special grace from Archbishop Sancroft, and in 1695 was elected organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster. In 1699 he was appointed composer of the Chapel Royal. Died 10 Oct., 1708. His church music has never been collected, but his secular compositions were published in 1700 under the title of 'Amphion Anglicus.'

BLOWER, SAMUEL, a nonconformist divine, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He was minister of Woodstock, Oxfordshire, and after being ejected from that living for nonconformity became pastor of an Independent congregation at Castle Hill, Northampton. Subsequently he removed to Abingdon, Berkshire, where he died 1701. His only published work is a funeral sermon for Mrs. Elizabeth Tub born in Psalm xviii. 46.

BLOXHAM, JOHN DE, abbot of divinity at Oxford, and a Carmelite friar of the abbey of Chester, became vicar-general of his order in Ireland about 1325, and while holding that office convened a provincial chapter in the monastery of Athride, in the county of Louth. On his return to England he was made the thirteenth provincial of his order 1333, and is said to have died at Oxford 1334. He wrote 'In 4 libros magistri sententiarum'; 'In Apocalypsim'; 'Epistole 180 ad diversos'; 'Capituli Athridensis Statuta'; 'Sermones'; and 'Questiones disputate.'

BLUCHER, LEBRECHT VON, a celebrated Prussian field-marshal, was born at Rostock 16 Dec., 1742. He began his military career at the age of fourteen in the Swedish service, but being taken prisoner he entered into that of Prussia. After the Seven Years' War he resigned his commission in disgust, and devoted himself to agriculture, but was recalled to his old regiment as major by William II., and fought at the head of it till the battle of Leytstadt, 18 Sept., 1794, when he was made major-general. In 1802 he took possession of Erfurt and Mühlhausen, and after the battle of Jena he made an extraordinary retreat through Lubeck, by which he drew the French across the Oder. On the taking of Lubeck he was obliged to capitulate, and was exchanged for Marshal Victor. He was now employed in the war department till the renewal of hostilities against France in 1813, when he displayed the utmost activity and courage for the deliverance of Europe. At Lutzen the order of St. George was given to him by the Emperor Alexander, and on the 26th Aug. he defeated

Macdonald at Kattybach. The victory of Leipsic was also in a great degree owing to his exertions; and he pursued the flying enemy across the Rhine with such celerity as to be called by the Russians 'Marshal Forward.' After the battle of Montmartre, on the 31st March, he would have severely retaliated the wrongs of Berlin on Paris had he not been restrained by his sovereign, whom he accompanied to England, and was received with enthusiasm. His military glory attained its height at the immortal victory of Waterloo, after which he was created prince of Wahlstadt. He died at Kriblowitz 12 Sept., 1810.

BLUM, JOACHIM CHRISTIAN, a German poet and miscellaneous writer, born at Rathenau 1739; died 28 Aug., 1790.

BLUM, ROBERT, a German writer and political character, born 10 Nov., 1807, was one of the principal leaders of the revolution in Saxony in 1848. He was shot at Vienna 9 Nov., 1848.

BLUMAUER, ALOYS, a Jesuit, born at Steier, in Austria, 21 Dec., 1755; died at Vienna 1708. He wrote several poetical works, the best known being a Travesty of the Æneid.

BLUMENBACH, JOHN FREDERICK, a celebrated German physiologist and naturalist, born at Gotha 11 May, 1752; died at Göttingen 22 Jan., 1840.

BLUNDELL, HENRY, a gentleman of Ince Blundell, Lancashire, formed very fine collections of painting and sculpture. An account of the latter, with engravings, he printed for private circulation. Died 1810, æt. 80.

BLUNDEVILLE, THOMAS, an English writer, was eldest son of Edward Blundeville, esq., of Newton Flotman, Norfolk, and received his education, it is supposed, at the university of Cambridge. As early as 1560 he had acquired reputation as a man of letters. In 1568 he inherited his father's estate in his native village. The date of his death is unknown. His works are, 'Three Treatises, no lesse pleasant than necessary for all men to reade: wherof the one is called the Learned Prince, the other the Fruites of Foes, the thyrde the Porte of Rest,' 4to., London, 1561; 'A very briefe and profitable Treatise declaring howe many Counsels, and what manner of Counselers a Prince that will gouerne well ought to haue,' 8vo., London, 1570; 'A rich Storehouse or Treasure for nobilitie and gentlemen, from the Latin of Sturmius, 1570; 'The true order and Methode of wryting and reading Histories, according to the Precepts of Francisco Patriitio and Accotio Tridentino,' 1574; 'A newe booke containing the arte of ryding and breakinge greate Horses,' before 1580. This work contains fifty woodcuts of the halter and various sorts of bits; 'The foure chiefest Offices belonging to Horsemanship,' 1580; 'A Briefe Description of vnuersal Mappes and Cardes,' 1589; 'M. Blundeville his Exercises, containing sixe Treatises,' 1594; 'The Art of Logike,' 1599; and 'The theoricues of the planets,' 1602.

BLUNT, HENRY, an evangelical clergyman, who for some years was incumbent of Trinity Church, Sloane Street, Upper Chelsea, which living he resigned in 1835 on being collated to the rectory of Streatham, Surrey. He published 'Lectures upon the History of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ,' 'An Exposition of the Pentateuch,' and other religious works much prized by his coreligionists. Born 1794; died 20 July, 1843.

BLUNT, JOHN JAMES, B.D., an English divine, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyme, Staffordshire, BLUTEAU.*BOARDMAN.

1794, and privately educated by his father, the Rev. John Blunt, M.A. At St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of B.A. in 1816, he obtained a high reputation as a classical scholar. Being appointed one of the Travelling Bachelors, he visited Italy and Sicily, and on his return became curate to Reginald Heber, at Hodnet, Shropshire, where he remained after Heber's departure to India. In 1831 and 1832 he preached at Cambridge the Hulsean lectures, which were afterwards published. In 1834 he was presented by his college to the rectory of Great Oakley, in Essex, which he held till his election, in 1839, to the Lady Margaret's Professorship of Divinity. His unceasing labours in this high office, which he held for sixteen years, extended the influence of Professor Blunt throughout the whole of the Established Church. He died 17 June, 1855. Besides many able articles in the 'Quarterly Review,' Professor Blunt wrote 'Vestiges of Ancient Manners and Customs discoverable in modern Italy and Sicily,' 1823; 'Sketch of the Reformation of the Church of England;' 'The Veracity of the Gospels and Acts,' the first of a series of volumes afterwards collected into one volume and published under the title of 'Undesigned Coincidences in the Writings both of the Old and New Testament, an argument of their veracity; with an appendix containing Undesigned Coincidences between the Gospels and Acts and Josephus;' 'Principles for the proper understanding of the Messianic Writings;' 'A Sketch of the Church of the two first centuries after Christ, drawn from the writings of the Fathers down to Clemens Alexandrinus;' 'History of the Christian Church during the first Three Centuries;' 'On the Right Use of the Early Fathers. Two series of Lectures;' and Sermons. An interesting account of Professor Blunt and his works was published in the 'Quarterly Review,' vol. 104.

BLUTEAU, RAPHAEL, an ecclesiastic of the Theatine order, was born in London, of French parents, 4 Dec., 1738, and became celebrated for his learning. Having gone to Portugal he learned the language in six months, and preached several times before the king and queen. He died at Lisbon 13 Feb., 1784, and on the 28th of that month his eulogy was pronounced in the academy, when two learned doctors gravely discussed the question 'whether England was most honoured in his birth, or Portugal in his death?' His works are 'A Vocabulary or Dictionary, Portuguese and Latin,' 10 vols. folio, Coimbra, 1712-28; 'Primitias Evangelicas,' &c.

BLYKE, RICHARD, auditor of the Imprests, died 1775. He formed large topographical collections for Herefordshire, which were purchased after his death by Charles duke of Norfolk, and contributed towards the History of the County, by the Rev. John Duncumb.

BLYTHE, GEOFFREY, an English prelate, was born at Norton, Derbyshire, and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. In 1602 he was sent on a special embassy to Hungary, and on his return was elevated to the see of Lichfield and Coventry 1503. In 1612 he was appointed lord president of Wales, and continued in that office till 1624. Died between 23 April, 1630, and 1 March, 1630-1. Another Geoffrey Blythe, LL.D., master of King's Hall, Cambridge, and one of those who preached against Latimer, died March, 1541-2.

BOADEN, JAMES, a dramatic and miscellaneous writer, was born at Whitehaven, Cumberland, 23 May, 1762, and died at London 16 Feb., 1850. At an early age he became attached to literature and the drama, being first connected with a newspaper called the 'Oracle.' About this time he entered himself of the Middle Temple, but it does not appear that he was ever called to the bar. His first production for the stage was 'Fontainville Forest,' brought out at Covent Garden with great success 1794. This was followed by the 'Secret Tribunal,' a tragedy; 'The Italian Monk;' 'Cambro-Britons;' 'The Voice of Nature;' and 'The Maid of Bristol,' all of which were acted with great success at the Haymarket. His only other dramatic piece was 'Aurelio and Miranda,' performed at Drury Lane in 1798. When Ireland's Shakspeare forgeries were first exhibited to the world, Mr. Boaden was taken in by them, and persuaded himself that they were genuine; but on examining more carefully all the facts he came to the opposite conclusion, and published a very able and convincing 'Letter to George Steevens, esq.,' in which he stated explicitly the grounds of his disbelief, and clearly demonstrated the forgery. Mr. Boaden was also author of Memoirs of Mr. Kemble, Mrs. Siddons, Mrs. Jordan, and Mrs. Inchbald; two novels, 'The Man of Two Lives' and 'The Doom of Giallo;' 'An Inquiry into the Authenticity of the various Pictures and Prints of Shakspeare;' and an able 'Tract on the Sonnets of Shakspeare,' in which he contends that the person to whom they were addressed was William Herbert, subsequently earl of Pembroke.

BOADICEA, a British heroine, was the wife of Prasutagus, king of the Iceni, who, for the security of his family, made the Roman emperor coheir with his daughters. The Roman officers on this took possession of his palace, exposed the princesses to the brutality of the soldiers, and scourged the queen in public. Boadicea, roused to revenge by this abominable usage, assembled her countrymen, and scourged Camalodunum (now Colchester), the garrison of which were put to the sword. Suetonius Paulinus defeated the Britons, and Boadicea fell among the slain or poisoned herself A.D. 62.

BOAG, JOHN, an Independent minister, was born in Ayrshire, and entered the university of Glasgow 1797. Having joined the Independent body he became a minister, and performed the functions of his office at Linlithgow for fifty years. Towards the end of his life he retired to Uphall, N.B. Died Sept., 1863, aged 89. Mr. Boag was author of 'A popular and complete English Dictionary, exhibiting the pronunciation, etymology, and explanation of every word usually employed in science, literature, and art,' 2 vols. 8vo., Glasgow, 1848. This was reprinted, with the addition of illustrations of scientific and technical terms, under the title of 'The Imperial Lexicon of the English Language,' 2 vols. 8vo., Edinburgh [1862-3].

BOARDMAN, ANDREW, D.D., a native of Lancashire, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1571-2; M.A. 1575; B.D. 1582; D.D. 1594), and in 1582 was appointed minister of St. Mary's, at Bury St. Edmund's. He was subsequently benched near Warwick, and was a preacher in that town. His sermons in defence of the church of England occasioned some controversy between him and the famous Thomas Cartwright. He published 'The Fan of the Faithful to trie the truth in controversie, collected by

A. B., and some commendatory verses in Greek and English.

BOAST, or BOST, JOHN, was born of a good family at Penrith, Cumberland, and educated in one of our universities, where he took the degree of M.A., but being converted to the Catholic faith he went over to Rheims, was there ordained a priest, and in 1581 was sent upon the English mission. Being eventually apprehended and convicted of being a priest, he was executed at Durham 19 or 24 July, 1594. The statement that he was educated at Cambridge is erroneous.

BOATE, or BOOT, ARNOLD, a Dutch physician, who, under the patronage of Archbishop Usher, settled in Dublin, where he practised some years. At length, owing to the troubles in Ireland, he went to Paris, where he had a sharp controversy with Cappell on the integrity of the Hebrew text, which Boate zealously defended. He was also hostile to the English Polyglott, but he was, notwithstanding, a man of considerable learning. Many of his letters are in Parr's Life of Usher.

BOATE, GERARD, M.D., brother of the preceding, was born at Gorcum 1604. Coming to England, he was appointed physician to Charles I., on whose death he repaired to Dublin, where he died 1650. He wrote 'Ireland's Natural History,' first printed in 1652.

BOBART, JACOB, a German horticulturist, was appointed first superintendent of the physic-garden at Oxford, founded in 1632 by Henry earl of Danby. He drew up in Latin, and published in 1648, a Catalogue of the Plants in the garden; and died 4 Feb., 1679-80, aged 81.

BOBART, JACOB, son of the preceding, was born in or about 1641, became botanical professor at Oxford on the death of Morison 1683, and died 1719. He published the second volume of Morison's 'Oxford history of Plants.'

BOBROF, SIMON SERGEJEVITSCH, a Russian poet, died 1810.

BOCCACCINO, BOCCACCIO, an Italian painter, died 1518.

BOCCACCINO, CAMILLO, son of the preceding, was a far better artist than his father. Born 1511; died 1546.

BOCCACCIO, JOHN, a celebrated Italian writer, was born at Paris 1313, though his father was a merchant of Florence and belonged to a family which originally came from Certaldo, about twenty miles from that city. After spending six years with a merchant at Florence and Paris, and turning his thoughts to the canon law, he abandoned those pursuits and devoted himself to literature. He studied under his friend Petrarch, at whose suggestion he retired from the tumults of Florence and visited Naples, where he was received with kindness by King Robert, of whose natural daughter he became enamoured. Afterwards the ruler of Florence sent him on two embassies to Pope Urban V. In 1374 he retired to his paternal house at Certaldo, where he died 21 Dec., 1375. His works are partly in Latin and partly in Italian. He possessed uncommon learning, and may be reckoned as one of those whose great exertions contributed to the revival of learning in Europe. His best known composition is the 'Decameron,' a hundred tales, which, though occasionally licentious, abound in wit, satire, and elegance of diction. His life of Dante, his Genealogy of the Gods, and his Theses, are also admired. Though his poetry does not possess the sweetness of Petrarch's lines, his prose is unequalled for graceful simplicity and varied elegance.

BOCCAGE, MARIE ANNE DU, a French writer, was born at Rouen 22 Oct., 1710, and died 8 Aug., 1802. Her maiden name was Lepage, and she became the wife of a rich financier named Fiquet du Boccage. At an early age she studied the English language with such success as to be able to translate Pope's 'Temple of Fame,' and part of Milton's 'Paradise Lost,' into French. Her principal work, however, is an epic poem, entitled 'The Columbiad.' In 1750 she travelled through England, Holland, and Italy, and afterwards published the results of her observations in a series of letters which have been translated into English.

BOCCALINI, TRAJAN, a satirical writer, was born at Loretto 1556, and died at Venice 16 Nov., 1613. His 'Ragguali di Parnasso' was translated into English under the title of 'News from Parnassus.'

BOCCHERINI, LOUIS, a musical composer, born at Lucca 14 Jan., 1740; died at Madrid 1866.

BOCCHI, ACHILLES, an Italian classical scholar, born 1488, at Bologna, where he died 1562. His history of his native city is still preserved in MS.

BOCCHI, FRANCIS, an Italian writer, author of 'Elogia Virorum Florentinorum,' was born at Florence 1548, and died 1618.

BOCCONE, PAUL SYLVIVS, an Italian writer on natural history, born at Palermo 1633, died 22 Dec., 1704.

BOCH, or BOCHIUS, JOHN, a modern Latin poet, called the Virgil of the Low Countries, was born at Brussels 27 July, 1555; became secretary to the duke of Parma at Antwerp; and died 13 Jan., 1609. His collected poems were printed at Cologne, 1615.

BOCHART, SAMUEL, a French Protestant divine and oriental scholar, was born at Reuen 1599, and died at Caen 6 May, 1667. After receiving a liberal education in his own country he came to England, and was a student for some time at Oxford, where he applied himself to oriental learning. He next went to Leyden and studied Arabic under Erpenius. On his return to France he was chosen minister at Caen, and while there became tutor to Wentworth Dillon, earl of Roscommon. He wrote many learned works, the principal being 'Phaleg et Canaan; seu Geographia Sacra;' and 'Hierozoicon, seu Historia Animalium S. Scripturae.'

BOCHART DE SARON, JEAN BAPTISTE GASPARD, president of the parliament of Paris, was born 16 Jan., 1730, and was guillotined during the French Revolution, 20 April, 1794. He distinguished himself by his mathematical acquirements, and was one of the first who discovered that Herschel's new star was a planet and not a comet.

BOCHEL, or BOUCHEL, LAURENT, a learned French lawyer, advocate to the parliament of Paris, died 20 April, 1629. He published the Decrees of the Gallican Church in Latin, and some legal works of great merit.

BOCK, FREDERICK SAMUEL, professor of Greek and divinity at Konigsberg, wrote a History of Socinianism and some useful works on natural history. Born 20 May 1716; died 1786.

BOCK, or LE BOUCK, JEROME, a German botanist, born at Heidesbach 1498; died at Hornbach 1554.

BOCKHORST, JOHN VON, a painter of history and portraits of the Flemish school, was born at Munster about 1610, and died about 1680.

BOCKHORST.

BOCKHORST, JOHN VON, a painter, born at Deutchem, in the Netherlands, 1661. He came when young to London, and was employed by Sir Godfrey Kneller on his portraits. The earl of Pembroke also employed him to paint portraits, history, and battle-pieces. He afterwards practised portrait-painting in various parts of Germany, principally at the court of Brandenburg and in Cöpen. Died 1724.

BOCKING, EDWARD, D.D., a Benedictine monk, graduated at Oxford (B.D. 1513; D.D. 1518), and became warden of Canterbury College in that university. Being called home to his monastery in Canterbury he became known to the world by the correspondence he held with Elizabeth Barton, the 'Holy Maid of Kent,' whose confessor he was. He afterwards owned that he had encouraged her in her pretended visions and prophecies, for which being attainted in parliament, and declared accessory to her treasonable speeches, he was condemned to death, and accordingly was executed at Tyburn 20 April, 1534.

BOCQUILLOT, LAZARE ANDRÉ, a French ecclesiastic, published Homilies; a Treatise on the Mass; and a history of the Chevalier Bayard. Born 1 April, 1649; died 22 Sept., 1728.

BODE, CHRISTOPHER AUGUSTUS, a German orientalist, was born at Wernigerode 1722, became professor of philosophy at Helmstadt, and died 7 March, 1790. He published the Ethiopic and Aramaic versions of the gospel of St. Matthew, and other important works on biblical subjects.

BODE, JOHN ELBERT, a celebrated German astronomer, born at Hamburg 19 Jan., 1747; died at Berlin 23 Nov., 1826.

BODE, JOHN JOACHIM CHRISTOPHER, a book-writer of Hamburg, wrote much against the freemasons, and translated into German Fielding's 'Tom Jones,' Sterne's works, and Goldsmith's 'Vicar of Wakefield.' Born 16 Jan., 1730; died 13 Dec., 1793.

BODEKKER, JOHN FRANCIS, a Dutch portrait painter, born 1760; died 1727.

BODENSTEIN, ADAM, son of Andrew, mentioned below, was born at Wittenberg 1528. He became eminent as a physician, and was strongly attached to the doctrine of Paracelsus, whose works he translated. Died at Basle Feb., 1577.

BODENSTEIN, ANDREW, commonly called Cervinus, from the place of his birth, was born about 1490, and became canon, archdeacon, and divinity professor at Wittenberg. He was the instructor and friend of Luther, and the first German ecclesiastic who was publicly married. He afterwards quarrelled with Luther, was driven out of Germany as a seditious person, and died miserably at Basle 25 Dec., 1541. He wrote numerous books of controversy which are now forgotten.

BODIN, JEAN, a French lawyer and political writer, born at Angers about 1530; died 1596. His principal work, 'Livres de la République,' was translated into Latin and English. It is an extraordinary collection of facts and reflections on political government.

BODLEY, SIR JOSIAS, the youngest brother of Sir Thomas, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, after which he embraced the military profession, and distinguished himself so greatly as to be made a knight. He was director-general of the fortifications of Ireland in 1613, but the time of his death is not mentioned. He wrote 'Observations concerning the fortresses of Ireland, and the British colonies of Ulster,' and 'A Jocular Description of a Journey taken by him to Lecale, in Ulster, in 1602,' but neither of these works has been printed.

BODLEY, LAURENCE, brother of Sir Thomas, was born at Exeter, 1546, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. He became canon residentiary and rector of Shobrooke, near that city. He wrote an elegy on Bishop Jewel. Died 19 April, 1615.

BODLEY, SIR THOMAS, was born of an ancient family at Exeter 2 March, 1544. He received his early education at Geneva, to which city his father removed. In the reign of Elizabeth he returned to England, and was sent to Magdalen College, Oxford, where, in 1563, he took his bachelor's degree, and the same year was chosen probationer of Merton College, of which society he soon after became fellow. In 1565 he read a Greek lecture in the hall of his college, for which the society allowed him a stipend; and the next year, on taking his master's degree, he read a lecture on natural philosophy in the public schools. In 1569 he was elected one of the proctors, and after that was chosen university orator. In 1570 he went on his travels; and in 1583 was made gentleman usher to the queen. Two years afterwards he married a widow lady of Bristol, with a considerable fortune. He was now employed in several embassies, particularly to France and the Hague. In 1597 he returned to England, and the same year began his noble work at Oxford, by the restoration of the public library, for which he received the thanks of the university. After repairing the old structure, and enlarging its stock of books and manuscripts, he undertook to make an addition to the building, in consequence of which the foundation-stone was laid July 10, 1610; and though he did not live to see it completed, he left ample means for the purpose, as well as for the future support of the library. On the accession of King James, he received the honour of knighthood, and from that time lived mostly in London, in the parish of St. Bartholomew-the-Less, where he died 28 January, 1612-3. His remains were interred with great solemnity in the chapel of Merton College, where a monument was also erected to his memory. Several of his letters are to be found in Usher's Correspondence, Birch's Memoirs of Queen Elizabeth, and other collections.

BODMER, JOHN JAMES, a voluminous writer, and one of the revivers of literature in Germany, was born at Zurich 19 July, 1698; and died 2 Jan., 1783. He was author of the 'Noachide,' an epic poem on Noah; and translated Homer and Milton into German.

BODONI, JOHN BAPTIST, a celebrated Italian printer and typefounder, born 16 Feb., 1740; died 20 Nov., 1813.

BOECK, HECTOR. See BOETIUS.

BOECLER, JOHN HENRY, an eminent German historian and counsellor to the emperor and to the elector of Mentz, was born 1611, and died 1692.

BOEHM, ANTHONY WILLIAM, a German divine, was the son of Anthony Boehm, minister at Oestorf, in the county of Fyrmont, and born there 1 June, 1673. He received his education at Halle, after which he entered into orders, and came to England, where for some time he was a schoolmaster. In 1705 he was appointed chaplain to Prince George of Denmark, whose funeral sermon he preached and published. He continued in favour with Queen Anne, and also with George I., who confirmed him in his situation at the German chapel in St. James's. He died 27 May, 1722. His works are 'Enchiridion Precum; a volume of Sermons;' 'The Duty of Reformation;' 'Pietas Hallensis; or, An Account of the Orphan Schools at Halle;' 'Account of the Protestant Mission at Tranquebar;' Arndt's True Christianity, translated from the German, 3 vols. 8vo.

BOEHME, or BOMH, frequently miswritten BEHMEN, JACOB, a noted mystic, was born near Görlitz, in Upper Lusatia, in 1575. He was a shoemaker by trade, and being of a serious turn, employed his leisure hours in reading religious books, besides which he studied alchemy. In 1612 he published a treatise entitled 'Aurora; or, The rising of the Sun,' which gave such offence to George Richter, dean of Görlitz, that he complained of it to the magistrates, who commanded Jacob to leave off writing, and stick to his last. He obeyed, and was silent for seven years, when his reputation as a practical chemist gave him encouragement to renew his theological revelations, and during the remaining five years of his life he wrote about twenty books, the best of which was 'A Table of his principles; or, A Key to his Works.' This was in 1624, and Nov. 18th of the same year he died. The first Quakers took much of their system from him, and the celebrated William Law became so zealous a Behmenist in his latter days, as to prepare a new edition of all Jacob's works, which were published in 3 vols. 4to.

BOEHMER, GEORGE RALPH, an eminent professor of botany and anatomy at the university of Wittenberg, was born 1723, and died 1803.

BOEHMER, JUSTIN HENNING, a celebrated German lawyer and legal writer, born 1674; died 11 Aug., 1749.

BOEHMER, PHILIP ADOLPHUS, son of the preceding, attained eminence as a physician and writer on anatomy. Born 1717; died 1 Nov., 1780.

BOEL, PETER, a painter, born at Antwerp 1625; died 1680.

BOERHAAVE, ABRAHAM KAAH, nephew of Hermann Boerhaave, was born at the Hague 1715, became professor of medicine at St. Petersburg, and died 1753. He wrote two medical works in Latin.

BOERHAAVE, HERMANN, a celebrated physician, born at Voorhout, two miles from Leyden, 31 Dec., 1668. His father intended him for the ministry, and accordingly placed him at the university of Leyden. Young Boerhaave, however, did not confine his studies to divinity, but acquired a perfect knowledge of the classics, and became thoroughly acquainted with mathematics, algebra, and the different branches of natural philosophy. After extending his researches to botany and chemistry, he went to Harderwick, where he took the degree of M.D. 1693, and soon afterwards he abandoned all thoughts of entering the ministry. Being now devoted exclusively to the study and practice of physic, he became celebrated throughout Europe. He was appointed professor of physic and botany, and his lectures were attended by a large number of students, by whom he was respected and beloved. In 1714 he was constituted rector of the university. He resigned his professorship 1729, and died 23 Sept., 1738. His valuable works are in Latin, and all of them relate to medical, botanical, and chemical subjects.

BOERNE, LOUIS, a German political writer, born at Frankfurt 22 May, 1786; died at Paris 12 Feb., 1837.

BOEKNER, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, was born at Dresden 6 Nov., 1683, and became theological professor at Leipzig, where he died 19 Nov., 1753. He was a man of vast erudition, and published numerous works on philosophy and theology, including editions of Luther's works, and Leclong's 'Bibliotheca Sacra.'

BOETHIUS, ANICIUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS SEVERINUS, was born at Rome or Milan 470. His education was finished at Athens, and he became highly celebrated for his learning and integrity. He was raised to the highest honours and offices of the empire, by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, but finally he lost the favour of that monarch, who imprisoned him in the castle of Pavia, where he was beheaded 526. Of his numerous theological and philosophical works, that which has gained him the greatest celebrity is the one 'On the Consolation of Philosophy;' in 5 books, composed while he was in prison.

BOETIE, ETIENNE DE LA, a French poet and translator, the intimate friend of Montaigne, was born 1 Nov., 1530, and died 18 Aug., 1563.

BOETIUS, or BOECE, HECTOR, a Scotch historian, was born at Dundee about 1466. After studying in his own country he went to Paris, where he obtained a professorship, and contracted an intimacy with Erasmus. Elphinston, bishop of Aberdeen, having founded King's College in that city, appointed Boetius his first principal, who out of gratitude wrote the life of his patron, and the memoirs of his predecessors. This work is entitled 'Vitæ Episcoporum Murthlacensium et Aberdonensium.' He next undertook the history of Scotland, the first edition of which was printed at Paris in 1526; but the second, in 1574, was much enlarged. The work was afterwards continued by Ferrerius, and translated by Bellenden. Boetius died in 1536.

BOETTICHER, JOHN FREDERICK, an alchemist and inventor of the Dresden china, was born in Saxony 1681, and died 14 March, 1719.

BOFFRAND, GERMAIN, a French architect, born 7 May, 1667; died 18 March, 1754. He wrote a book on the principles of architecture.

BOGAN, ZACHARY, an English writer, was born at Little Hempston, Devonshire, in 1025. He took his master's degree at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which society he was chosen fellow; but died in consequence of excessive study 1 September, 1059. His works are Additions to Francis Rous's Archæologiæ Atticæ; 'A view of the Threats and Punishments recorded in Scripture;' 'Meditations on the Christian Life;' 'Help to Prayer;' 'Homeri Εἰσαγωγῶν; sive comparatio Homerici cum Scriptoribus Sacris quoad Normam loquendi;' to which is added 'Hesiodus Οἰμολογῶν;' 1658.

BOGATZKY, CHARLES HENRY VON, a Protestant ascetical writer and religious poet, born at Jankowa, in Silesia, 1690; died at Halle, 15 June, 1774. Of his numerous writings the work called 'Bogatzky's Golden Treasury' is the best known in this country.

BOGDANI, JAMES, a painter, was born of a good family in Hungary, his father being a deputy from the states of that country to the emperor. He resided in this country between forty and fifty years. He excelled in painting birds, fruit, and flowers.

BOGDANOVITCH, HIPPOLYTUS FEODOROVITCH, a Russian writer, born 23 Dec., 1743; died 6 Jan., 1803.

BOGLE, JOHN, a miniature painter of Glasgow, who flourished about the middle of the eighteenth century.

BOGUE, DAVID, D.D., a dissenting minister, was born in Berwickshire, 18 Feb., 1750, and educated at the university of Edinburgh. In 1777 he was invited to take the direction of the Independent church at Gosport, and in 1780, besides his clerical charge, he undertook the duties of tutor to an institution in that town for the education of young men destined for the ministry in connection with the Independent communion. He also became one of the editors of the 'Evangelical Magazine,' started in 1793, and a letter which he wrote in it led to the formation in 1795 of the London Missionary Society. In 1815 he was created D.D. of Yale College, in America. Died 25 Oct., 1845. Besides some smaller pieces, Dr. Bogue wrote an 'Essay on the Divine Authority of the New Testament,' and a 'History of Dissenters, from the Revolution in 1688 to 1808' (conjointly with James Bennett), 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1808-12. His 'Theological Lectures, edited by J. S. C. F. Frey,' appeared at New York 1849, 8vo.

BOHADIN, an Arabian historian, who wrote the life of Saladin, with whom he was a great favourite. Born 1145; died 29 Oct., 1235.

BOHEMOND, the first prince of Antioch, accompanied his father, Robert Guiscard, duke of Apulia, in his attempt on the eastern empire in 1081. On the return of Robert to Italy he left the command to his son, who defeated the Emperor Alexius in two battles. After his father's death he became prince of Tarentum, and distinguished himself in the first crusade. In 1098 he took Antioch, of which he became prince. He afterwards took Laodicea, but was himself made prisoner. On gaining his liberty, he married the daughter of Philip, king of France. He then returned to Greece with a large army, but met with little success. Died 1111. Six princes of his name succeeded him in the sovereignty of Antioch.

BOHN, JOHN, professor of medicine at Leipsic, was born 1640, and died 1718. His principal work is entitled 'De Officio Medici duplici.'

BOHUN, EDMUND, was born at Ringsfield, near Beccles, Suffolk, 12 March, 1644-5, and on 13 July, 1663, was admitted a fellow-commoner of Queen's College, Cambridge, where he remained about three years, though he took no degree. Afterwards he resided for fourteen years on his estate at Westhall. In 1684 the hope of some public employment and other circumstances induced him to remove to London, where, devoting himself to literature as a profession, he continued to reside during the reign of James II. Mr. Bohun entertained ultra Tory opinions, and was equally averse from Dissenters and Catholics. 'As for Popery,' he remarks, 'I have so great an aversion for it, that I never willingly conversed with one of that religion; and if God permits me to choose my company I never will.' However, he acquiesced in the Revolution, and in 1690 was appointed licenser of the press. This position was a difficult and a painful one. His known opinions and pub- lished writings laid him open to a strong suspicion of Jacobitism, on the one hand, while his avowed allegiance to William and Mary exposed him, on the other hand, to a charge of gross inconsistency. Bohun held the office only five months, his dismissal taking place under these circumstances.—Several writers, Bishop Burnet among the rest, had urged that one ground upon which the scruples of the nonjurors might be removed was that William of Orange, while he had no hereditary right to the throne of England, and could not succeed to it even though it were vacated, yet had possessed himself of the monarchy by right of conquest; and it had been held by the most loyal writers that conquest was a foundation of right. Bohun, with the best intention, gave his imprimatur to a pamphlet which adopted this line of argument. The doctrine, however, was peculiarly offensive to both parties, for William had expressly abjured the design of conquering this country; and, besides, all men felt that to have been conquered were a deep dishonour. In 1698 Mr. Bohun was appointed chief justice of South Carolina, where he died 5 Oct., 1699. Among his publications were, 'A Defence of Sir Robert Filmer against Algernon Sidney's paper delivered to the sheriffs upon the scaffold,' 1684; Filmer's 'Patriarcha,' the second edition, corrected, with a preface and postscript, 1685; a translation of Jewell's Apology; 'The Method and Order of Reading Histories,' translated and enlarged from the Latin of Digory Wheale, 1685; 'An Apology for the Church of England, against the clamours of the men of no conscience, or the Duke of Buckingham's seconds,' 1685; 'The Universal Historical Bibliotheca: a translation of Le Clerc, for January, February, and March, 1686-7'; 'A Geographical Dictionary,' 1688; 'The General History of the Reformation,' 1689; a translation from Sleidan, with a continuation to the end of the Council of Trent; 'The History of the Desertion of James II.,' 1689; 'The Doctrine of non-resistance or passive obedience no way concerned in the controversies between Williamites and Jacobites,' 1689; 'The present state of Germany,' 1690, translated from Puffendorf; 'The Character of Queen Elizabeth and of her principal ministers of state,' 1693; Historical and geographical collections inserted in 'The Great Historical, Geographical, and Poetical Dictionary,' 1694; and Heylyn's Cosmography, with an historical continuation. 'The Diary and Autobiography of Edmund Bohun, Esq., etc.,' with an introductory memoir, notes, and illustrations by S. Wilton Rix,' was privately printed at Beccles, 4to., 1853.

BOIARDO, MATTHEW MARIA, count of Scandiano, an Italian poet, born near Reggio, in Lombardy, 1434; died 20 Dec., 1494. His chief work is the 'Orlando Innamorato,' an unfinished poem, in imitation of the Iliad. It is founded on the loves of Rolland and Angelica, with the siege of Paris to represent that of Troy.

BOICHOT, WILLIAM, a French sculptor, born 1738; died 9 Dec., 1814.

BOIELDIEU, ADRIEN, a French musical composer, born at Rouen 15 Dec., 1775; died 8 Oct., 1834.

BOIGNE, BENOÎT LEBORGNE, comte de, a French general and military adventurer, who served in India under several of the native princes, and accumulated an immense fortune, was born 8 March, 1741, and died 21 June, 1830.

BOILEAU, CHARLES, abbé of Beaujeu, a cele- brated preacher, died in Paris 1704. His sermons were published shortly after his death.

BOILEAU, DANIEL, author of many useful elementary works in the French and German languages, died in London 26 Feb., 1836, aged 73.

BOILEAU, GILLES, elder brother of Nicolas, the celebrated poet, was born at Paris 1631, and died 1669. His posthumous works were printed in 1670.

BOILEAU, JACQUES, doctor of the Sorbonne, was elder brother of Nicolas Boileau, the poet. Among his works are 'Historia Confessionis Auricularis,' and 'Historia Flagellantium.' Born 16 March, 1635; died 1 Aug., 1716.

BOILEAU, JEAN JACQUES, a French divine, canon of St. Honoré at Paris, wrote 'Lettres sur différents sujets de piété,' and Lives of Madame de Liancourt and Madame de Combe. Born 1649; died 10 March, 1735.

BOILEAU-DESPREAUX, NICOLAS, a celebrated French poet, born 1 Nov., 1636. Studying the law, he was admitted advocate in 1656; but he did not possess the patience requisite for the bar, and exchanging his pursuits for divinity, he at last discovered that a degree at the Sorbonne was not calculated to promote the bent of his genius. In literature he now acquired eminence and fame. The publication of his first Satires, in 1666, distinguished him above his predecessors, and he became the favourite of France. His 'Art of Poetry' added to his reputation. It is a monument of his genius and judgment, and he far surpasses the 'Ars Poetica' of Horace in the happy arrangement of his ideas, the harmony of his numbers, and the purity of his language. His 'Lutrin' was written in 1674, at the request of Lamoignon, and the insignificant quarrels of the treasurer and ecclesiastics of a chapel are magnified by the art of the poet into matters of importance, and every line conveys, with the most delicate pleasantry, animated description and refined ideas. Boileau became a favourite at the court of Louis XIV.; a pension was settled on him, and the king declared he wished his subjects to partake the same intellectual gratification which he himself enjoyed. As a prose writer, Boileau possessed superior merit, as is fully evinced by his elegant translation of Longinus. After enjoying the favours of his sovereign, and the honours due to his merits, Boileau retired from public life, and spent the remainder of his days in literary privacy in the society of a few select friends. Died 11 March, 1711. He wrote, besides the works already mentioned, odes, sonnets, fifty-six epigrams, critical reflections, and some Latin pieces. As a poet Boileau has deservedly obtained universal applause.

BOILLY, LOUIS LEOPOLD, a French painter, born 1761; died about 1830.

BOINDIN, NICOLAS, a comic dramatist, born at Paris 29 May, 1676; died 30 Nov., 1751.

BOIS, JOHN. See BOYS.

BOIS, DU. See DUBOIS.

BOISMONT, NICOLAS THYREL DE, a distinguished French preacher, born 1715; died at Paris 20 Dec., 1786.

BOISROBERT, FRANCOIS METEL DE, a celebrated French wit, who was patronized by Cardinal Richelieu. He wrote Poems, Letters, Plays, and Tales. Born about 1592; died 30 March, 1662.

BOISSARD, JEAN JACQUES, an antiquary and Latin poet, born at Besançon 1528; died at Metz 30 Oct., 1602. His principal works are 'De Romanæ Urbis Topographia et Antiquitate;' 'Icones Virorum Illustrum cum eorum Vitis,' and 'Poemata.'

BOISSIER, GEORGE RICHARD, was educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge (B.A. 1828), became incumbent of Oakfield, Penshurst, Kent, and died 23 June, 1858, aged 67. While an undergraduate he published anonymously a very interesting volume of 'Notes on the Cambridgeshire Churches,' 8vo., London, 1827.

BOISSIEU, JEAN JACQUES DE, a French painter and engraver, born 1736; died 1 May, 1810.

BOISSY, LOUIS DE, a French dramatic writer and journalist, born 26 Nov., 1694; died 19 April, 1758. In the course of about thirty years he produced nearly forty comedies, the best of which are, 'L'Homme du jour, ou les Dehors trompeurs;' 'Le Français à Londres;' 'Le Babillard;' 'Le Sage étourdi;' and 'L'Époux par supercherie.'

BOISSY-D'ANGLAS, FRANÇOIS ANTOINE, comte de, a distinguished French politician and author, born 8 Dec., 1756; died 20 Oct., 1820.

BOISTE, PIERRE CLAUDE VICTOR, a French writer, born 1765; died 24 April, 1824. His best work is 'Dictionnaire de la langue Française.'

BOIVIN, FRANÇOIS, baron du Villars, and secretary to marshal de Brissac, died, at an advanced age, 1618. He wrote the History of the Wars in Piedmont.

BOIVIN DE VILLENEUVE, JEAN, professor of Greek in the Royal College of Paris, was born 28 March, 1663; and died 29 Oct., 1726. He was a member of the French Academy and keeper of the king's library. His works are 'Apology for Homer and the Shield of Achilles,' an edition of the 'Mathematici Veteres;' 'Lives of Pithou and le Pelletier;' and French translations of the 'Batrachomyomachia' of Homer, the 'Oedipus' of Sophocles, and the 'Birds' of Aristophanes.

BOIVIN, LOUIS, brother of the preceding, was born 20 March, 1649, and died 22 April, 1724. He was author of some papers on chronology printed in the Memoires of the Academy of Inscriptions.

BOIZOT, LOUIS SIMON, a French sculptor, born 1748; died 10 March, 1809.

BOKENAM, OSBERN, D.D., an early English poet, was a native of Suffolk, and became an Augustinian friar in the monastery of Stoke Clare. He travelled in Italy and Spain, and was living in 1445. He translated into English verse the lives of St. Margaret, St. Anne, St. Cristina, the history of the 11,000 virgins, the lives of St. Faith, St. Agnes, St. Dorothy, St. Mary Magdalene, St. Catherine, St. Cecilia, St. Agatha, St. Lucy, and St. Elizabeth. All these were printed by the Roxburgh Club under the title of 'The Lyvys of Seyntys;' Translated into English by a Doctor of Dyuynite clepyd Osbern Bokenam, Frere Austyn of the Convent of Stokclare, 4to., London, 1835. Dr. Bokenam was also author of 'This dialogue betwixt a Secular asking, and a Frere answering at the grave of Dame Johan of Acres sheweth the lynal descent of the Lordis of the honoure of Clare, fro the tyme of the fundation of the Freeris in the same Honoure, the yeere of our Lorde MCC.xlvij. unto the first day of May, the yere MCCC.lvj.' printed in Dugdale's Monasticon, edit. Cayley, Ellis, and Bandinel, vol. 6, pt. 3, p. 1600, although the name of the author is not there mentioned.

BOL, or BOLL, CORNELIUS, a Dutch painter, who was resident in this country in the reign of Charles II., and painted some views of the fire of London. He also etched some views of seaports. Probably he was the son of Ferdinand Bol, mentioned below.

BOL, or BOLL, FERDINAND, a painter of history and portraits, born at Dort 1611; died at Amsterdam 1681 or 1686.

BOL, or BOLL, JOHN, a Dutch painter, born at Mechlin 16 Dec., 1534; died at Amsterdam 29 Nov., 1583.

BOLANGER, JOHN, principal painter to the duke of Modena, was born 1666, and died 1666.

BOLD, JOHN, was born at Leicester 1679. He took his degree of B.A. at St. John's College, Cambridge, 1698, after which he accepted a small school at Hinckley, though the salary was no more than £10 a-year. On entering into orders he became curate of Stoney Stanton, near Hinckley, in 1702, at £30 a-year. This was the only situation in the church he ever held, and yet with his small income he managed to give a portion in charity, and to save a sum which by accumulation enabled him to leave several bequests, and £40 to be paid out at interest for the benefit of his poor parishioners. His daily fare consisted of water-gruel for his breakfast; a plate from the table of the farmer with whom he boarded, supplied his dinner; after dinner, one half pint of ale, of his own brewing, was his only luxury; he took no tea; and his supper was upon milk-pottage. He wrote three practical tracts—"The sin and danger of neglecting the Public Service of the Church," "Religion the most delightful employment;" and "The duty of worthily communicating." Died 29 Oct., 1751.

BOLD, SAMUEL, a clergyman, is supposed to have been a native of Chester, and was educated under Mr. Cooke, an ejected minister of that city. He does not appear to have had a university education, yet he was ordained in the Established Church, and was presented to the rectory of Steeple-cum-Tyneham, Dorsetshire, which he held fifty-six years. Died 1737. He wrote "Christ's Impertunity to Sinners to accept of him," 1687; "Man's great duty," 1693; "A plea for Moderation towards Dissenters;" "A short Discourse of the true knowledge of Christ Jesus," 1697. This was a defence of Locke's "Reasonableness of Christianity" against Edwards, and was followed by some other pieces of our author to the same effect. He also wrote "Some considerations on the objections to Mr. Locke's Essay on Human Understanding," which produced a friendship with that great man. Mr. Bold's last publication was "An Help to Devotion," 1736.

BOLESLAUS I., king of Poland, succeeded his father Micislaus, 999. The Emperor Otho III. gave him the title of king, Poland having previously been only a dukedom. Boleslaus conquered Moravia, and made that country tributary. Died 1025.

BOLESLAUS II., surnamed The Bold and The Cruel, was born 1043, and elected king of Poland on the death of his father Casimir I., in 1059. He was a warlike prince, and restored Bela to the throne of Hungary, and afterwards invaded Russia. Being afterwards excommunicated, he was abandoned by his subjects. On this he fled to Hungary, where he died about 1080.

BOLEYN, ANNE, queen of Henry VIII. of England, and mother of Queen Elizabeth, was born 1507, being the daughter of Sir Thomas Boleyn. Her early years were spent at the French court, where she attended the wife of Louis XII., on whose death she returned to England, and became maid of honour to Queen Katharine. She thus was often in the company of Henry, who became enamoured of her charms; but not being able to succeed on other than what she considered honourable terms, he resolved to procure a divorce from his first wife. This base design he carried into execution, and married Anne privately; but when she proved with child, he publicly acknowledged her as queen, and she so continued till the tyrant conceived a passion for Jane Seymour. He then caused Anne to be tried for high treason, in having been unchaste with her brother and four other persons. She was beheaded in the Tower 19 May, 1536.

BOLEYN, GEORGE, Viscount Rochford. See ROCHFORD.

BOLGENI, JOHN VINCENT, an Italian Jesuit, born 1733; died 1816. In his writings he heartily supported the theological views of the Transalpine school.

BOLINGBROKE, HENRY ST. JOHN, Viscount, son of Sir Henry St. John, bart., afterwards Viscount St. John, was born at Battersea, in Surrey, 1 Oct., 1678. He was educated at Eton School, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford. In 1701 he became member of parliament for Wotton Bassett, when he joined the Tory party, of which Harley, the Speaker, was the head. In 1704 he was appointed secretary at war; but when his friend Harley resigned office in 1707, Mr. St. John followed his example. In 1710 he became secretary of state for foreign affairs on the return of the Tory party to power. He sustained almost the whole weight of the difficulties in negotiating the peace of Utrecht; and in 1712 was created Baron St. John Viscount Bolingbroke, and at the same time appointed lord-lieutenant of Essex; but these honours not answering his expectations, he formed the ambitious design of taking the lead in public affairs from his old friend Harley, then earl of Oxford, which in the issue proved unfortunate for both. In 1714 the seals were taken from him, and all the papers in his office secured; whereupon he retired privately to France. The Pretender would have engaged him in his service, but he refused the first invitation, and retired into Dauphiné; but upon receiving a message from his friends, he accepted the second invitation, and took the seals of the secretary's office at Commorey, setting out immediately for the French court, to procure the necessary succours for his new master's projected invasion of England. He had already been impeached of high treason in the English parliament, and his engagements with the Pretender had the same issue, for before the end of the year 1715, the seals and papers of his office were taken from him, and several articles of accusation brought against him, in which he was impeached of treachery, incapacity, and neglect. Thus discarded, he resolved to make his peace at home, if possible. He set himself earnestly about the work, through the mediation of the earl of Stair, then British ambassador at the French court, and obtained a pardon on certain conditions, though he did not succeed in obtaining leave to return to his own country till 1723. Subsequently, his private property was restored to him by parliament; but the complete reversal of his attainder, which still excluded him from the House of Lords, was steadily refused. While in France, his first wife being dead, he married secondly, a niece of the celebrated Madame de Maintenon. He corresponded and conversed with Pope, Swift, and other learned friends. Being stimulated to resentment against Walpole for standing in the way of a full pardon, and inflamed with the idea of 'a taint in his blood,' he gave his enmity against the minister full scope, and wrote papers in the 'Craftsman,' and several pamphlets, decrying his administration. After a ten years' spirited siege in this manner, he laid down his pen and returned to France, with the resolution never again to engage in public business. He settled at Fontainebleau, where he wrote his 'Letters on the Study and Use of History.' Upon the death of his father, in 1742, he came again to his native country, and settled at Battersea, where he died 12 Dec., 1751. He bequeathed his manuscripts to David Mallet, who published them in a pompous manner. Being adverse to the Christian religion, they were attacked by several writers, and are now sunk in oblivion.

BOLIVAR, SIMON, the Liberator of South America, was born in the city of Caracas, 24 July, 1783, and received a liberal education in Europe. On returning to his native country he acquired great reputation both in war and politics, being noted for his opposition to the Spanish rule. Through his endeavours, the provinces of Venezuela and New Granada were formed into one state, which he named Colombia. In 1821 he was elected president of the republic established there. In the disturbances in Peru he took a very active part; and a portion of that country was formed into a province and called after him, Bolivia. He failed, however, in his grand design to form all South America into one immense republic. Died 17 Dec., 1830.

BOLLAND, Sir WILLIAM, knight, was born about 1773, educated at Reading School and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1794; M.A. 1797); constituted a baron of the Exchequer, 1829; and died 14 May, 1840. He was an ardent admirer of the literature of the olden times, and the Roxburghe Club was suggested at a dinner party which took place at his house in 1812. Sir William is the Hortensius of Dr. Dibdin's 'Bibliomania.'

BOLLANDUS, JOHN, a celebrated Jesuit, born 13 Aug., 1596, at Tirmont, in the Low Countries. He was chosen to execute the great plan, formed by Father Rosweide, of collecting all the proper materials for writing the Lives of the Saints. Bollandus undertook the work, and published five volumes of it, in folio, under the title of 'Acta Sanctorum.' He was engaged on the fifth volume, when he was overtaken by death, 12 Sept., 1665. The 'Acta Sanctorum' is still (1867) in course of publication. Those who have continued this stupendous undertaking are called Bollandists.

BOLOGNESE. See GRIMALDI.

BOLSEC, JÉRÔME HERMÈS, a physician of Lyons, who followed Calvin to Geneva, but returned to the Catholic Church. He wrote the Lives of Calvin and Beza, which were considered as satires by the Protestants, who thought to avenge the reformers by speaking very ill of Bolsec. Died 1585.

BOLSOVER, THOMAS, the discoverer of the art of silver-plating, died 13 Sept., 1788.

BOLTON.

BOLSWERT, BOETIUS ADAM, a Flemish engraver, flourished about 1620.

BOLSWERT, SCHELDT, an engraver, brother of the preceding, was born in Friesland about 1586, and settled at Antwerp.

BOLTON, or BOULTON, EDMUND, a critic and antiquary, was born in 1574 or 1575, and studied for several years at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. He then resided for some time in the Inner Temple, studying law and history. At this period of his life he travelled over many parts of England and Ireland in search of antiquities. Being a Roman Catholic, and consequently deprived of all opportunities of achieving success in the ordinary walks of life, he conformed to the bent of an early inclination, and devoted his life to literature with so much assiduity and success, that there was probably no person of his time, except Camden, Spelman, and Selden, who went beyond him. He was a kinsman to Villiers, marquis (and afterwards duke) of Buckingham, and it was probably through the interest of that nobleman that he obtained an introduction to the court of King James I. In 1617, Bolton proposed to the king a design for a Royal Academy or College, and Senate of Honour, on the most magnificent scale. The scheme was afterwards spoken of in favourable terms by the marquis of Buckingham in the House of Peers, and in 1624 the details were finally settled. The Academy Royal of King James was to have been a corporation with a royal charter, and to have a mortmain of £200 a-year, and a common seal. It was to consist of three classes of persons, who were to be called Tutelaries, Auxiliaries, and Essentials. The Tutelaries were to be knights of the garter, with the lord chancellor, and the chancellors of the two universities; the Auxiliaries were to be lords and others selected out of the flower of the nobility, and councils of war and of the new plantations; and the Essentials, upon whom the weight of the work was to lie, were to be 'persons called from out of the most able and most famous lay gentlemen of England, masters of families, or being men of themselves, and either living in the light of things or without any title of profession, or art of life for lucre, such persons being already of other bodies.' The members of the Academy were to have extraordinary privileges, and among others, were to have the superintendence of the review, or the review itself of all English translations of secular learning, to authorize all books which did not handle theological arguments, and to give to the vulgar people indexes expurgatory and expunctory upon all books of secular learning printed in English. Eventually, however, the whole scheme was abandoned by the politicians of the day. If Bolton had been successful, he would have had the rare distinction of having introduced a new element into English society—an order of men of literature whose distinction was obtained by intellectual exertion, as poets, scholars, philosophers, antiquaries, and artists. Mr. Bolton was alive in August, 1633, but the date of his decease is not known. His works are, 'The Life of Henry II.,' 'The Elements of Armories,' 4to., London, 1610; 'Carmen Gratulatorium de traditione corporis Mariæ Reginæ Scotorum à Petriburgo ad Westmonasterium,' MS. Cotton. Tit. A. 13; an English translation of Florus's Roman History; 'Nero Caesar, or Monarchie depraved. An historical worke, dedicated with leave to the Duke of Euckingham, Lord Admiral,' folio, London, 1624. In the last work he brings coins, medals, and inscriptions in aid of the information left by the Roman historians. Bolton's other works are 'The Proposition made in Parliament concerning an Academ Royal, or College and Senate of Honor, by the Lord Marquis of Buckingham, and there approved; as it was occasioned and founded upon the reasons severally presented to his Sacred Majesty, and to his Lordship before Christmas last, A.D. 1620, in the Name of the Honour of the Kingdom and of the Antiquities thereof,' MS. Harl. 1643; 'Vindiciae Britannicae, or London righted by rescues and recoveries of antiquities of Britain in general, and of London in particular, against unwarrantable prejudices, and historical antiquations amongst the learned; for the more honour, and perpetual just uses of the noble island and the city,' MS.; 'Hypercritica, or a Rule of Judgment for writing or reading our histories,' a work which, remarks Mr. Hunter, is never mentioned but with some token of approbation. It was published by Dr. Anthony Hall at the end of Nicholas Trivet's Annals, 1722. 'Agon Heroicus, concerning arms and armories,' an abstract of which is in MS. Cotton. Faust. E. i. 7 folio 63.

BOLTON.

BOLTON, SIR GEORGE, an English writer, was preceptor to the royal princesses in writing, geography, &c. He was knighted 3 April, 1799, and died about 1807. He published 'Remarks on the present defective State of Fire-arms, with an Examination of a newly-invented Patent Gun-lock,' 8vo., London, 1795.

BOLTON, SIR RICHARD, a native of Staffordshire, became chief baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and afterwards chancellor of that kingdom. He published 'The Statutes of Ireland,' 1621; 'A Justice of Peace for Ireland,' 1638, 1678, 1683; 'Rules for a Grand Juror,' 1681; and 'A Declaration, setting forth how, and by what Means, the Laws and Statutes of England, from Time to Time, came to be of force in Ireland,' which was answered by Sir Samuel Mayart. Died about 1690.

BOLTON, ROBERT, B.D., a divine of Puritan principles, born at Blackburn, Lancashire, 1572. He took his degrees at Brasenose College, Oxford, but did not enter into orders till he was thirty-five years of age, when he obtained the living of Broughton, Northamptonshire, which he retained till his death on 17 Dec., 1631. He was one of the greatest scholars of his time, and very eminent for his poetry. His practical writings are numerous; but his 'Discourse on Happiness,' first published in 1611, was his most celebrated performance. A posthumous work of his 'On the four Last Things' appeared in 1633, with his life prefixed.

BOLTON, ROBERT, LL.D., a divine, was born in London, April, 1697, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. About 1724 he became chaplain to Sir Joseph Jekyll, master of the Rolls, who introduced him to Lord Hardwicke, by whose patronage he obtained the deanery of Carlisle, 1735. In 1738 he was presented to the vicarage of St. Mary's, Reading. Dr. Bolton wrote some pieces on the prevailing follies of the day; three essays on 'The Employment of Time;' and 'Letters and Tracts on the Choice of Company, and other subjects.' Died 26 Nov., 1763.

BOLTON, SAMUEL, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, was born in or about 1606, and received his education in the university of Cambridge. In 1643 he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and during the Rebellion he was preacher to the congregation of St. Saviour's, Southwark. In 1646 he was elected master of Christ's College, Cambridge, and in 1651 served the office of vice-chancellor of the university. He died 15 Oct., 1654. Dr. Bolton was author of 'A tossed Ship making to safe Harbour; or, a Word in Season to a sinking Kingdom,' 8vo., London, 1644; 'The Bounds of Christian Freedom: wherein the Rights of the Law are vindicated, the Liberties of Grace maintained,' &c., 12mo., London, 1645; 'The Arrangement of Errors in Divinity,' 8vo., London, 1646; 'The dead Saint speaking to Saints and Sinners living: in Treatises on the Sinfulness of Sin, Love of Christ to his Spouse, Nature and Royalties of Faith,' &c., folio, London, 1657.

BOLTS, WILLIAM, was born in Holland about 1740, and at the age of fifteen came to England, whence he sailed for Lisbon, and was in the latter city during the terrible earthquake of 1755. Afterwards he went to Bengal, where he was employed by the East India Company. He next took to commercial pursuits, and settled in Calcutta, of which city he was elected an alderman. Unluckily, however, he had a dispute with the company, and the result was that he was sent prisoner to London, where he wasted seven years, and the whole of his fortune, in unsuccessful endeavours to obtain redress. During this time he published his 'Considerations of Indian Affairs,' 2 vols. 4to. Bolts then entered the service of Maria Theresa, and was appointed colonel, with authority to superintend the projected establishments in the East Indies. He had formed six of these on the coasts of Malabar and Coromandel, when the death of the empress compelled him to abandon the undertaking. He then proceeded to France, where he entered into a speculation which turned out unsuccessfully on account of war being declared against England. He died poor at Paris, 28 April, 1808. His 'Civil, Political, and Commercial State of Bengal,' was translated into French.

BOLZANIO, URBANO VALERIANO, an Italian Franciscan, who settled at Venice, where he taught Greek. He was the first who composed a grammar of that language in Latin, printed 1497. Born 1440; died 1524.

BONAPARTE, LUCIEN, prince of Canino, younger brother of the Emperor Napoleon, was born 1775, and died 29 June, 1840. He wrote his 'Memoirs,' some romances, and poems; and was the first patron of the celebrated song-writer Beranger.

BONAPARTE, MARIE PAULINE, Princess Borghese. See BORGHESE.

BONARELLI, GUY UBALDO, an Italian poet, born at Urbino, 25 Dec., 1563; died 8 Jan., 1608. He is best known by his pastoral poem, entitled 'Filli di Sciro.'

BONASONE, JULIUS, a painter and engraver, called the Bolognese, from the city of his nativity. Born about 1498; died after 1571. In 1793 'Some Anecdotes' of his life, with a catalogue of his engravings, were published by George Cumberland.

BONAVENTURE, ST., a celebrated doctor of the church, and cardinal, originally called John Fidauza, was born at Bagnaria in Tuscany, 1221. He entered the Franciscan order, and was elected general of it 1256. Gregory X. made him cardinal and bishop of Alba 1272, and ordered him to assist at the second general council of Lyons, where he died, 14 July, 1274. His works have gained him the name of the Seraphic Doctor. They consist of commentaries on the Master of the Sentences, and works of piety.

BONAVENTURE, of Padua, a cardinal, born 22 June, 1332; died between 1385 and 1398. He was an intimate friend of Petrarch, and author of commentaries on Scripture, lives of saints, and sermons.

BONCIARIUS, MARK ANTHONY, a distinguished Latin scholar and poet, was born at Perugia 1555, and died 9 Jan., 1616.

BOND, HUGH, a collector and editor of psalms, hymns, and anthems in London, previous to the year 1795.

BOND, JOHN, a classical scholar, was born in Somersetshire, 1550, and educated at Winchester School, and at New College, Oxford. He was master of the grammar school at Taunton for many years, and afterwards practised as a physician. Died 3 Aug., 1612. He published 'Annotations in poemata Quinti Horatii,' 8vo., 1606; but the best edition is that of Amsterdam, 12mo., 1686. His edition of Persius was not printed till 1614, 8vo.

BOND, JOHN, LL.D., a divine, was born at Dorchester, and educated at St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship (B.A. 1631; M.A. 1635; LL.D. 1646). Having taken orders, he was in 1645 made master of the Savoy Hospital, and in the same year was elected to the mastership of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1649 he was chosen professor of law in Gresham College, and in 1654 was appointed an assistant commissioner of Middlesex and Westminster, for the ejection of scandalous and ignorant ministers and schoolmasters. He was always a zealous adherent of the parliamentarians. The latter part of his life was spent in his native county, and he died at Sandwich, in the isle of Purbeck, a few miles from Steeple, and was buried at Steeple 30 July, 1676. Dr. Bond published seven sermons, four of which were preached before the House of Commons.

BOND, OLIVER, was born in Dublin in 1720, and took an active part in the Irish rebellion of 1797-8. He was condemned to death, but died in prison 1798, shortly before the time fixed for his execution.

BOND, WILLIAM, an English writer, translated Buchanan's 'History,' and was jointly concerned with Aaron Hill in writing 'The Plain Dealer.' He also produced a play, written by a gentleman deceased, but revised and altered by himself, called 'The Tuscan Treaty; or, Tarquin's Overthrow.' 8vo., 1733. Died 1735.

BONDI, CLEMENT, an Italian Jesuit and poetical writer, born 1742; died 21 June, 1821.

BONE, HENRY, an artist, and Royal Academician, was born at Truro, in Cornwall, 1755, and died in London 17 Dec., 1834. He brought the art of painting on enamel to a degree of excellence previously unknown in this country.

BONEFACIO, or BONIFAZIO, called also Veneziano, an eminent painter of Venice, died 1553, aged 62.

BONET, THEOPHILUS. See BONNET.

BONFADIO, JAMES, an Italian writer, historiographer to the republic of Genoa, was executed 19 July, 1550. He wrote the Annals of Genoa from 1528 to 1550.

BONFINI, ANTHONY, an historian, born at Ascoli, in Italy, Dec., 1427. After occupying the chair of ancient literature at Recanati, he went to Hungary, where he was patronized by Matthew Corvini, the king of that country. He wrote 'Recum Hungaricarum decades tres,' a history of the capture of Belgrade by the Turks; and other works. Died 1502.

BONFRERE, JACQUES, a learned Jesuit and commentator on the Holy Scriptures, was born at Dinant, in Belgium, 1573; and died at Tournay 9 May, 1643.

BONGARS, JACQUES, a French statesman and ambassador in the service of Henry IV., whom he represented at several of the German courts. He published, besides some elegant letters, a valuable edition of Justin, and 'Gesta Dei per Francos,' containing a history of the crusades. Born 1546; died 29 July, 1612.

BONHOTE, ELIZABETH, an English authoress, was the wife of Daniel Bonhote, a solicitor of Bungay, Suffolk, where she died 11 June, 1818, aged 74. She wrote many popular novels and other works, including 'Olivia,' 3 vols., 1787; 'The Parental Monitor,' 4 vols. 2mo., 1788-1797; 'Darnley Vale,' 3 vols., 1789; 'Ellen Woodley,' 3 vols., 1790; 'Bungay Castle,' 2 vols., 1797; and 'Rambles of Frankly,' 4 vols.

BONIFACE, ST., the apostle of Germany, was born at Crediton, Devonshire, about 680, his name being originally Wilfrid. He was educated in the monastery at Exeter, and on entering into orders became a famous preacher, and a zealous missionary. With the view of converting the pagans, he went to Rome and received a commission from Pope Gregory II., 719. He then proceeded into Bavaria and Thuringia, where he laboured with great success, and on his return to Rome was consecrated bishop of the new German churches, by the name of Boniface. He afterwards resumed his mission, and in 732 received the title of archbishop, under the authority of which he founded several new churches, fixing his own see at Mentz. In 746 he laid the foundation of the great abbey of Fulda, which long continued to be the most renowned seminary of religion and learning in that part of the world. His fervour in the cause of conversion continued as warm as ever; and he went into Friesland, where he was slain, with all his retinue, by the enraged pagans, 5 June, 755. His works were published in 1665.

BONIFACE I. (St.), a Roman, who succeeded Pope Zosimus 418, and died 4 Sept., 422.

BONIFACE II., a Roman, elected Pope 28 Sept., 530; died 8 Nov., 532.

BONIFACE III., a Roman, succeeded Pope Simplicianus 19 Jan., 607, and died on 20 Oct. following.

BONIFACE IV. (St.), son of a physician of Valera, was elected Pope after Boniface III. 23 Aug., 608, and died 7 May, 615. The works ascribed to him appear to be spurious.

BONIFACE V., a Neapolitan, succeeded Pope Deas-leidit 24 Dec., 618, and died 25 Oct., 624.

BONIFACE VI., a Roman, elected Pope 11 April, 869, and driven from his seat fifteen days afterwards, his election not having been canonical, according to Baronius. He had been degraded from the priesthood before he received the tiara.

BONIFACE VII., an anti-pope, surnamed Franco, who strangled Benedict VI. in prison 974; and after the election of Benedict VIII., carried off the treasures of the church to Constantinople. He returned afterwards and killed John XIV., Benedict's successor. Died 985.

BONIFACE VIII., Benedict Cajetan, was born at Anagni about 1228. He was educated with great care, and was well skilled in the civil and canon law. He was consistorial advocate, apostolic protonotary, and canon of Lyons. Martin II. created him cardinal 1281. Celestine V. having, at his solicitation, abdicated the pontificate, Cardinal Cajetan was elected Pope, taking the name of Boniface VIII. He imprisoned Celestine in a castle, where that holy man died some time afterwards. The quarrels which Boniface had with the Colonna and the emperor are well known; and still more notorious was his dispute with Philip the Fair, respecting the crusade projected by this Pope, the foundation of the bishopric of Pamiers, and the collation to benefices. Several sharp letters passed between them, the Pope raising the spiritual power above the temporal, and the king defending the latter against the pretensions of the pontiff. Boniface was arrested at Anagni by Sciarra Colonna and Nogaret, and set at liberty by the people four days afterwards; but the affront gave him so much vexation that he fell sick and died 12 Oct., 1303. This Pope canonized St. Louis 1297; instituted the jubilee from century to century, 1300; and caused the sixth book of the decretals to be collected 1298.

BONIFACE IX., Peter Tomacelli, a Neapolitan, was elected Pope, 2 Nov., 1369, during the schism, and instituted the firstfruits of benefices. Died 1 Oct., 1404.

BONIFACIO, BALTHASAR, archdeacon of Treviso, and afterwards archbishop of Capo d'Istria, published Latin poems; 'Historia Trevigiana'; and 'Historia Ludicra.' Born about 1584; died 1659.

BONIFACIO, JOHN, an Italian lawyer and miscellaneous writer, born 6 Sept., 1547; died 23 June, 1635. Among his works is one on the art of instructing the deaf and dumb.

BONIFAZIO. See BONEFACCIO.

BONINGTON, RICHARD PARKES, a young English artist of great promise, was born at the village of Arnold, near Nottingham, 25 Oct., 1801, and died in London 23 Sept., 1828.

BONJOUR, GUILLAUME, an Augustinian monk, born at Toulouse 1670, was sent as a missionary to China, where he died in Feb., 1714. He was well versed in oriental literature, and wrote some dissertations, &c.

BONNAR, WILLIAM, an historical and portrait painter, was born June, 1800, at Edinburgh, where he died Feb., 1853.

BONNECORSE, BALTHAZAR DE, a French poet, born about 1630; died 1706. He was sometime French consul in Egypt.

BONNEFOI, ENNEMOND, a French lawyer, born at Chabeuil 20 Oct., 1536, became professor first at Valence, and afterwards at Geneva, where he died 8 Feb., 1574. He published 'Juns Orientalis libri iii.'

BONNEFONS, AMABLE, a Jesuit of Riom, in France, author of 'L'Annee Chretienne,' and other religious books, died at Paris 19 March, 1653.

BONNEFONS, or BONEFONIUS, JEAN, a Latin poet, born at Clermont in Auvergne, 1554; died 1614. His son, of the same name, was likewise a composer of Latin poems.

BONNELL, JAMES, a man of eminent piety, was born at Genoa, 1653, being son of an English merchant who resided in that city. He was brought to England 1665. The fortune of the family having suffered considerably by their attachment to the royal cause, the elder Mr. Bonnell, at the Restoration, received the patent office of accountant-general of Ireland, in which grant his son's life was included with his own. James Bonnell was educated first in Ireland and next in a private school in Oxfordshire, from whence he removed to Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1676. After this he became a travelling tutor, and on his father's death succeeded him as accountant-general, the duties of which office he discharged with scrupulous integrity. He was a man of amiable manners, devout without enthusiasm, and learned without ostentation. He died at Dublin 28 April, 1699. Some of his meditations are in his Life, written by Archdeacon Hamilton, besides which he improved a 'Harmony of the Gospels.'

BONNER, EDMUND, bishop of London, was the son of a peasant at Hanley, Worcestershire, and received his education at Broadgate Hall, Oxford, where he was created doctor of the canon law 1525. In consequence of his readiness in business he was employed by Cardinal Wolsey, who gave him several preferments. On the death of his patron, Bonner got into favour with Henry VIII., who made him one of his chaplains, and sent him twice to Rome to further the divorce from Queen Katharine. In 1538, being then ambassador at Paris, he was nominated bishop of Hereford; but before his consecration he was translated to the see of London, 1540. At the time of the king's death Bonner was ambassador to the Emperor Charles V. He returned the same year, and refusing to take the oath of supremacy, was sent to prison; but on making his submission he obtained his release. For his negligence, however, in the discharge of his episcopal duties he was imprisoned a second time, and deprived of his bishopric. On the accession of Mary he was restored to his see, and through the whole of her reign showed a most sanguinary spirit by bringing numbers of Protestants to the stake; for which, when Elizabeth came to the throne, he was sent to the Marshalsea prison, where he died 5 Sept., 1569. He was author of some pieces which are now forgotten.

BONNET, CHARLES, an eminent naturalist, was born 13 March, 1720, at Geneva, where he died 20 May, 1793. He published 'Insectology;' a valuable treatise on the leaves of plants; 'Essay on Psychology;' 'Analysis of the Mental Faculties;' 'Considerations on organised bodies;' 'Contemplations on Nature;' and 'Palingenesia; or, Thoughts on the past and future state of Animal Beings.'

BONNET, THEOPHILUS, a physician and medical writer of Geneva, born 5 March, 1620; died 29 March, 1689.

BONNEVAL, CLAUDE ALEXANDRE, COMTE DE called in the latter part of his life Achmet Pasha, was descended from a noble family in France, and born 14 July, 1675. He quitted the French service and followed the fortunes of Prince Eugene. His interest at the court of Vienna was ruined by the intrigues of De Prie, and he offered his services to Russia and afterwards to Turkey, where he was honourably received, made a pasha of three tails, and appointed to a government with the command of 30,000 men. As the vassal of the Turkish emperor he quelled a dangerous insurrection in Arabia Petraea, and defeated a large Austrian army on the Danube. His successes hastened his disgrace. He was banished to the isle of Chio, though he was afterwards recalled and restored to places of honour and emolument. Died 23 March, 1747. The Memoirs which pass under his name, and which have been translated into English, were not written by him.

BONNEVILLE, NICOLAS DE, a French writer and journalist, born at Etroux 13 March, 1700; died 9 Nov., 1828.

BONNEY, HENRY KAYE, D.D., was appointed archdeacon of Bedford 1822; archdeacon of Lincoln 1844; and died 24 Dec., 1862, aged 82. He was author of a 'Life of Bishop Jeremy Taylor;' 'The Life and Remains, with Correspondence, of Bishop Middleton;' 'Illustrated History of Fotheringhay;' and some charges and sermons.

BONNIVARD, FRANCIS DE, prior of St. Victor at Geneva, whose misfortunes have been celebrated by Byron in his poem entitled 'The Prisoner of Chillon.' He published many works, and left in MS. a Chronicle of Geneva. Born 1496; died (it is said) 1570.

BONNYCASTLE, JOHN, was a native of Whitechurch, Buckinghamshire. He received an ordinary education, which was so much improved by his own exertions, that he acquired a deep knowledge not only of the mathematics, but also of the ancient and modern languages. At an early age he settled in London, and became a private teacher. His reputation in that capacity procured him the appointment of tutor to the earl of Pomfret. After this he was chosen one of the mathematical masters at Woolwich, which situation he held above forty years, dying there at an advanced age, 15 May, 1821. His works are 'The Scholar's Guide to Arithmetic, 1780; Introduction to Mensuration and Practical Geometry, 1782; Introduction to Algebra, 1786; Introduction to Astronomy, 1786; Euclid's Elements, 1789; General History of the Mathematics, from the French of Bossut, 1803; Treatise on Trigonometry, 1806; the first volume of a Course of Mathematics, on Arithmetic, 1810; and a Treatise on Algebra, 2 vols., 1815.

BONOMI, JOSEPH, an artist, and an Associate of the Royal Academy of London, died 16 March, 1806, æt. 60. He was particularly distinguished for his architectural knowledge and genius. He was a native of Italy, but long resided in England.

BONONCINI, JOHN, a musical composer, born at Modena about 1672. When the Royal Italian Opera was founded in London, Bononcini was summoned to England, where a great rivalry sprang up between him and Handel, which gave rise to Byrom's celebrated epigram:—

'Whist some maintain that Bononcini,
Compared with Handel, is a ninny,
Others maintain that to him Handel
Is hardly fit to hold a candle.
Strange such a difference should be
'Twixt Tweedledum and Tweedledee!'

In order to settle the dispute it was proposed that an opera in three acts should be produced, and that one act should be set by Handel, one by Bononcini, and one by Ariosti, another of Handel's rivals. The drama selected was 'Muzio Scevola,' and Handel's portion was declared the best. Although thus vanquished, Bononcini continued to find many patrons, chief among whom was the duke of Marlborough; and after that nobleman's death Bononcini found a home in the mansion of Lady Godolphin, who allowed him a pension of £500. In 1748 he went to Vienna. He appears to have been living in 1752. His works consist of operas, 'Cantate e ductti,' 'Divertimenti di Camera,' &c.

BONONE, CARLO, a painter, born at Ferrara 1569; died 1632.

BONOSUS, bishop of Naissus, in Dacia, or, according to others, of Sardica, in Illyricum. In 391 he was condemned at the council of Capua for heresy, in maintaining that the blessed Virgin Mary had other children besides Jesus Christ. Died 410.

BONTEMPI, JOHN ANDREW, surnamed Angelini, a composer and writer of didactic works upon music, was born at Perugia about 1630, and was alive in 1697. His chief performance is a 'History of Music,' published in 1672.

BONTEMPS, Madame MARIE JEANNE DE, née Chatillon, was born at Paris 14 Jan., 1718, and died 18 Aug., 1788. She published anonymously a French prose translation of 'Thomson's Seasons,' 1759, 1788.

BONTIUS, GERARD, professor of medicine at Leyden, was born at Kyswick about 1536, and died 15 Sept., 1599. He was a man of considerable learning, particularly in Greek, but is chiefly known as the inventor of pills, which bear his name.

BONTIUS, JAMES, son of the preceding, went to the East Indies, and practised physic for some years at Batavia. On his return to Europe he published 'De conservanda valetudine, ac dietæ sanis in India observandis,' and 'Methodus medicandi, quæ oportet in India Orientali uti,' and other works. Died 1631.

BONTIUS, REYNER, brother of the preceding, was for many years professor of medicine at Leyden, and rector of the university. Died 1623.

BONVICINO, ALEXANDER, an Italian painter, called Il Moretto, born 1514; died 1564.

BONWICKE, AMBROSE, an English divine, was born 1621, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of B.D. In 1686 he was appointed master of Merchant Taylors' School, but was dismissed in 1691 for refusing the oath of allegiance. He afterwards kept a school at Headley, near Leatherhead, Surrey, and brought up many excellent scholars. He had twelve children, one of whom furnished the subject of a volume entitled 'A Pattern for Young Students in the University, set forth in the Life of Mr. Ambrose Bonwicke, sometime scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge,' 12mo., 1729.

BOODT, ANSELM BOETIUS DE, a native of Bruges, became physician to the Emperor Rodolph II., and died 1634. He wrote 'Gemmarum et Lapidum Historia,' 1629; and edited 'Florum, Herbarum, et Fructuum selectæ icones,' 1609.

BOOKER, JOHN, an astrologer, born at Manchester 1601, was bred a haberdasher in London, but quitted that employment, and set up as a writing-master at Hadley, in Middlesex. In the course of a few years he was appointed licenser of mathematical books, including those relating to the celestial sciences. Lilly once regarded him as the greatest astronomer in the world, but it appears that he afterwards sunk in his esteem. We are told by the same author that Booker 'had a curious fancy in judging of thefts, and as successful in resolving love questions,' which was a capital branch of his trade. George Wharton, who was formerly one of his astrological friends, had a great quarrel with him, and thereupon published 'Mercurio-cælicæ Mastix; or an Anti-Caveat to all such as have heretofore had the misfortune to be cheated and deluded by that great and traitorous impostor, John Booker; in an answer to his frivolous Pamphlet, entitled, Mercurius Cælicus, or a Caveat to all the People of England,' 4to., Oxford, 1624. Booker, who died in April, 1667, was author of several astrological pieces, but the only one deserving of notice is his 'Bloody Irish Almanack,' which contains some particulars relative to the war in Ireland.

BOOKER, LUKE, LL.D., was born at Notting-ham 20 Oct., 1762, and having taken orders, became vicar of Dudley. He died 1 Oct., 1835. Among his numerous publications are 'Poems,' 1785, enlarged 1788; 'The Highlanders,' 1787; 'Miscellaneous Poems,' 1790; 'Malvern, a Poem,' 1798; 'The Hop Garden, a Poem,' 1800; 'Tobias, a Poem,' 1805; 'Calista, or the Picture of Modern Life,' 1806; 'Euthanasia, the State of Man after Death;' 'Lectures on the Lord's Prayer,' 1824; 'Discourses and Dissertations,' 2 vols.; 'Account of Dudley Castle;' 'The Springs of Plynlimmon, a Poem;' 'The Mitre Oak;' 'Mandane, a Drama;' 'Illustrations of the Litany;' 'Tributes to the Dead;' 'Epitaphs for persons of all ages and circumstances,' 1830; and some single sermons.

BOOLE, GEORGE, LL.D., an English mathematician, was born at Lincoln 1815, and died at Blackrock, near Cork, 9 Dec., 1864. For many years he held the mathematical professorship in the Queen's College at Cork. His principal productions are 'An Investigation of the Laws of 'Thought,' and a work on 'Differential Equations.'

BOONE, DANIEL, a Dutch painter of drunken revels and waggish subjects, spent some time in this country, and died in 1700.

BOONE, DANIEL, one of the earliest settlers in Kentucky, was born 1735, and died 26 Sept., 1820. An account of his daring exploits and adventures is given in Filson's Supplement to Imlay's Description of the Western Territory. He has been immortalised by the novelist Cooper.

BOONE, JAMES SHERGOLD, was born about 1785, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1820; M.A. 1823). He was an usher at the Charterhouse for many years, and afterwards incumbent of St. John's, Paddington. He died in London 24 March, 1859, aged 75. He was the author of a periodical called 'The Oxford Spy,' four numbers of which appeared in 1818, and the fifth and last in 1819. Mr. Boone also wrote 'The Welcome of Isis,' a poem occasioned by an expected visit of the duke of Wellington to Oxford in 1820, in which year the poem was written, though it was not published till 1834, on the occasion of the duke's memorable visit to Oxford.

BOONEN, ARNOLD, an eminent portrait painter, born at Dort 16 Dec., 1669; died 2 Oct., 1729.

BOOTH, ABRAHAM, a Baptist minister, born at Blackwell, Derbyshire, 20 May, 1734. His parents being poor, could give him no education, and he was placed with a stocking weaver at an early age. Being of a serious turn, he studied diligently, and became so well versed in the Scriptures as to be considered qualified to preach, which he did among the Baptists, and at the same time opened a school at Sutton Ashfield. In 1769 he was ordained pastor of the congregation meeting in Prescot Street, Goodman's Fields, where he exercised the ministerial charge till his death, on 27 Jan., 1806. He wrote an Elegy on Mr. James Hervey; 'The Reign of Grace;' 'The Death of Legal Hope, the Life of Evangelical Obedience;' 'The Deity of Jesus Christ essential to the Christian Religion,' translated from the French of Abbadic; 'Pædobaptism examined,' 2 vols.; and some other works.

BOOTH, BARTON, a celebrated actor, was born of a good family in Lancashire in 1681. He received his education at Westminster School, where his talent for the stage was developed by his performance in the Latin plays. At the age of seventeen he joined a strolling company and went to Ireland, but in 1701 returned to London, and was admitted into Betterton's company, when he met with a most flattering reception. In 1712 he performed the character of Cato when that tragedy first came out, on which occasion, while the play was acting, a purse of fifty guineas was collected in the boxes and presented to Booth, 'for his honest opposition to a perpetual dictator, and his dying so bravely in the cause of liberty.' The year following his name was added to those of Cibber, Wilkes, and Dogget, in the new license for the theatre. His greatest performance was Othello, and he enjoyed his deserved reputation as a tragic actor till his death, which happened 10 May, 1733. His widow erected a monument in 1772 to his memory, in Westminster Abbey.

BOOTH, GEORGE, B.D., a classical scholar, after receiving his education at Eton School and Magdalen College, Oxford, became vicar of Findon, Sussex, where he died 21 June, 1859, aged 67. He was author of 'Nugæ Canoræ, quas in Amicorum Gratiam imprimi fecit Etonensis, G. Booth,' 4to., Oxford, 1826.

BOOTH, SIR FELIX, a promoter of arctic discovery, was born 1775. He was the owner of a distillery far exceeding in extent of business any other in the United Kingdom, and was distinguished by his mercantile knowledge and enterprise. In 1828 he was elected one of the sheriffs of London and Middlesex, and it was during his year of office that his attention was specially directed to the scheme of Captain Ross's second voyage to the North Pole. He munificently provided the sum of £17,000 in order to fit out the expedition, the distinguished commander of which has immortalised his benefactor by giving to the northern termination of the American continent the name of Boothia Felix. Mr. Booth's noble munificence was rewarded by a baronetcy. He died at Brighton 24 Jan., 1850.

BOOTH, GEORGE, Lord Delamer. See DELAMER.

BOOTH, JOHN WILKES, son of Junius Brutus Booth, was born on the farm of the family, near Baltimore, 1838. His father named him after John Wilkes, the celebrated English politician. He adopted the stage for his profession, and made his début at Richmond in 1855, in the character of Richard III. His reception was favourable, and he gave signs of future excellence. He afterwards appeared on the New York stage, and 'starred it' in various parts of America with great success. As an actor he was no common genius. He possessed the natural advantages of a good figure, a musical, full, and rich voice, of rare compass and modulation, a face which always took with the audience, and an eye which expressed tenderness and love, malice and hatred, pleasure and sorrow, as perfectly as the language he uttered or the tone in which it was conveyed. By posterity, however, his name will be remembered in connection, not with the stage, but with one of the greatest political crimes of the nineteenth century. On the breaking out of the civil war he had warmly espoused the Southern cause, and his zeal led him to assassinate Abraham Lincoln, the president of the Northern States, in the theatre at Washington, 14 April, 1865. Booth and his companions effected their escape from the capital, but on the 26th of April their retreat was discovered. This was in a barn near Port Royal, in Maryland, where Booth was seen supporting himself on crutches, he having broken his leg in his flight. He refused to surrender, and, as he was well armed, the barn was fired. Whilst the unhappy man was endeavouring to extinguish the flames he was shot dead by a cavalry sergeant. His body, it is said, was cut to pieces and sunk in the Potomac.

BOOTH, JUNIUS BRUTUS, an English tragedian, born in London 1 May, 1706; died on the passage from New Orleans to Cincinnati Dec., 1852. After fulfilling engagements at Deptford, near London, and other places, and even performing at Brussels, in 1814, he made his début at Covent Garden Theatre as Richard III. His personal resemblance to the crookbacked tyrant conformed exactly to the traditions of the stage, and his personification of the character was in other respects so striking that he competed successfully with Edmund Kean, then just rising into fame. The managers of Drury Lane induced him to act there in the same plays with Kean; but when, after a few nights, he was again announced at Covent Garden, his appearance was the signal for a serious theatrical riot, which resulted in driving him for a time from the London stage. In 1821 he made his first appearance in the United States, at Petersburg, Virginia, and in New York, at the Park Theatre, in the succeeding year, on both of which occasions he assumed his favourite character of Richard III. From that time until the close of his life he acted repeatedly in every theatre in the United States, and, in spite of certain irregular habits, which sometimes interfered with the performance of his engagements, enjoyed a popularity which a less gifted actor would have forfeited. During the latter part of his life he resided with his family at Baltimore, making occasional professional excursions to other cities. He had just returned from a lucrative tour to California, when he died. The range of characters which Booth assumed was limited, and was confined almost exclusively to those which he had studied in the beginning of his career. He is most closely identified with that of Richard, in which, after the death of Edmund Kean, he had no rival. Among his other most familiar personations were Iago, Shylock, Hamlet, Sir Giles Overreach, and Sir Edmund Mortimer. In his peculiar sphere—the sudden and nervous expression of concentrated passion, as also in the more quiet and subtle passages of his delineations—he exercised a wonderful sway over his audience, and his appearance upon the stage has been known to awe a crowded and tumultuous house into instant silence. His presence and action, notwithstanding his short stature, were imposing, and his face, originally moulded after the antique type, was capable of wonderful expression under the influence of excitement.

BOOTH, THOMAS, of Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1597-8; M.A. 1601; B.D., 1609), was constituted one of the university preachers 1611. He published (with his initials only) 'Concio ad Clerum jamdudum Cantabrigiæ habita in Luc. cap. 5, ver. 10,' 4to., London, 1611.

BOOTHBY, SIR BROOKE, a minor poet, who belonged to a literary circle at Lichfield, of which Miss Seward, Dr. Darwin, and Miss Edgeworth were distinguished members. He was born about 1745, and succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his father 1789. By his wife Susannah, daughter of Robert Bristow, Esq., of Hampshire, he had an only child, Penelope, who died in 1791, aged four years, upon which occasion her father wrote twenty-four sonnets and two elegies, afterwards published under the title of 'Sorrows: sacred to the memory of Penelope,' folio, 1796. Sir Brooke died at Boulogne 23 Jan., 1824. Besides the work already mentioned, he published 'A Letter to the Right Hon. Edmund Burke,' on his Reflections on the French Revolution, 8vo., London, 1791; and 'Britannicus; a tragedy translated from the French of Racine, with a critical preface by Sir Brooke Boothby,' 8vo., 1803.

BOOTHBY, MISS HILL, sister of Sir Brooke Boothby, was born 1708, and died 16 Jan., 1756. For the last three years of her life she maintained a pious and somewhat mystical correspondence with Dr. Johnson, which was published in 1805 by Mr. Wright of Lichfield.

BOOTHROYD, BENJAMIN, D.D., an Independent minister, born at Warley, in the parish of Halifax, 1768. He officiated first at Pontefract, whence he removed to Huddersfield 1818, and on the death of Mr. Moorhouse was chosen pastor of Highfield chapel. Died 8 Sept., 1836. Dr. Boothroyd published an edition of the Old Testament in Hebrew; a History of Pontefract; and some works on religious subjects.

BOOTT, FRANCIS, M.D., a physician of London, died at his residence in Gower Street, 25 Dec., 1863, aged 71. He was author of a 'Memoir of the Life and Medical Opinions of John Armstrong, M.D. To which is added an Enquiry into the facts connected with those forms of fever attributed to malaria or marsh effluvia,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1833-4; and 'Illustrations of the Genus Carex,' fcho, London, 1858-60.

BORBONIUS. See BOURBON.

BORDA, JEAN CHARLES, a French mathematician, born at Dax 4 May, 1733. He served as engineer and lieutenant in the navy, and in 1771 was sent with Verdun and Pingré to America, to make observations on various islands, and in 1774 he continued the same researches. During the American war he served under D'Estaing as rear-admiral. He introduced more uniformity in the building of ships of war, and by his experiments contributed much to the improvement of all resses. He published, besides his discoveries in America, &c., in 2 vols. 4to., the description and the use of the circle of reflection, in which he recommended the specular circles of Tobias Mayer, 1780, and other treatises inserted in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences. The small rod for the mensuration of angles was of his invention, and he also introduced a new method to observe the length of the pendulum, &c. He died at Paris 30 Feb., 1799.

BORDE, ANDREW, M.D., an English physician and witty writer in prose and verse, who sometimes calls himself in Latin Perforatus, was born at Boods Hill, in Holmesdale, Sussex, and not, as is usually stated, in the island of Pevensey. He received an academical education at Oxford, and afterwards became a Carthusian monk. When his order was persecuted by Henry VIII. he succeeded in escaping abroad, and visited most parts of Europe and some parts of Africa. At last he settled at Montpellier, where he applied himself to the study of physic, and was created doctor in that faculty. On his return to his native country he was incorporated at Oxford. He attained considerable eminence in London as a medical practitioner; but though following a secular calling, he continued to practise the essential duties of his original profession. On three days in the week he drank nothing but water: he wore a hair shirt; and every night his shroud was hung up at the foot of his bed to put him in mind of death and a future state. He not only strictly observed his vow of chastity, but wrote sharply against those priests and monks who had prevaricated in those days of liberty. This created him many enemies. At last, either on account of his religion, or for some other cause, he was confined in the Fleet Prison, where he died in April, 1549. He was esteemed a noted poet, a witty and ingenious person, and an excellent physician. His works are 'The Principles of Astronomy'; 'A Book of the Introduction of Knowledge, the which doth teach a man to speak part of all manner of languages, & to know the usage & fashion of all manner of all countries, & for to know the most part of all manner of Coins of Money,' 4to., London, 1542; 'The Breviary of Health,' 1547; 'The Dietary of Health'; 'The merry Tales of the mad Men of Gotham'; and 'A right pleasant and merry History of the Mylner of Abington, with his Wife and his fair Daughter, and of two poor scholars of Cambridge.' His 'Peregrination' was published by Tom Hearne.

BORDE, JEAN BENJAMIN DE LA, a French writer and musical composer, born at Paris 5 Sept., 1724; fell by the guillotine 22 July, 1794. He wrote several works on music; a Chronological History of more than eighty ancient peoples; Description of France; Memoirs of Raoul de Coucy; Letters on Switzerland; Interesting Pieces towards a History of the reigns of Louis XIII. and Louis XIV.; History of the South Sea, &c.

BORDENAVE, TOUSSAINT, professor and director of the Academy of Surgery at Paris, published a French translation of Haller's 'Elements of Physiology'; 'Dissertations sur les Antiseptiques'; and 'Memoires sur le danger des caustiques pour la cure radicale des Hernies.' Born 10 April, 1728; died 12 March, 1782.

BORDEU, ANTOINE, a French physician, born at Iseste, in Béarn, 1696. He became physician to the military hospital at Barèges, of the waters of which place he published an analysis.

BORDEU, FRANÇOIS, son of the preceding, was born 1734 at Pau, and became inspector of the waters there. He published 'Précis d'observations sur les Eaux de Barèges,' and some medical dissertations.

BORDEU, THÉOPHILE, brother of the preceding, was born at Iseste, in the province of Béarn, 22 Feb., 1722, and studied medicine at Montpellier. He afterwards gained great reputation at Paris as a physician. He published nine treatises on anatomical and medical subjects. Died 24 Nov., 1776.

BORDLEY, JOHN BEALE, an American writer on agriculture, who died at Philadelphia, 1804.

BORDONE, PARIS, an Italian painter, born about 1513; died 1570.

BORDWINE, JOSEPH, a native of America, served for some time as major under General Whitlock, but was deprived of his commission in consequence of a pamphlet which he wrote reflecting on the general's conduct. He was afterwards appointed professor of fortification at Addiscombe College, Surrey, and died at Croydon, 21 Feb., 1835. Besides the work just referred to he published a new System of Fortification.

BOREL, PIERRE, a learned French physician, born at Castres, in Languedoc, about 1620. He practised with great reputation in his native city and at Paris, and died 1689. He left a great number of works, the principal of which are 'Les Antiquités de la Ville de Castres'; 'Historiarum et observationum Medico-Physicarum centuria quinque'; 'Bibliotheca Chymica'; 'De vero Telescopii inventore'; and 'Trésor des Recherches et des Antiquités Gauloises et Françaises.'

BORELLI, JOHN ALPHONSUS, was born at Naples 28 Jan., 1608, and became distinguished as a philosopher and mathematician at Florence and Pisa. As he was concerned in the revolt of Messina he fled to Rome, where Christina queen of Sweden alleviated his distress. He there taught mathematics, and died 31 Dec., 1679. He wrote thirteen treatises in Italian and Latin. Borelli was a great admirer of Mr. Boyle, and corresponded with several of our English mathematicians.

BOREMAN, ROBERT, D.D., a learned divine, brother of Sir William Boreman, clerk of the green cloth to Charles II. He was educated at Westminster School, being elected in 1627 to a scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow 1633. In 1662 he became rector of Blisworth, Northamptonshire, and in the following year rector of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, Westminster. In 1667 he was promoted to a prebendal stall in Westminster Abbey, which, according to Widmore, was vacant by his death in 1674. Wood, however, says he died at Greenwich during the winter of 1675. Dr. Boreman was a pious and learned divine, and the author of several works. In 1653, 'when the being of universities lay at stake,' he stood forward in their defence, and published 'Παδεία Φριαβος,' or, 'The Triumphs of Learning over Ignorance,' &c. He printed the sermon which he had preached at the funeral of Dr. Comber, the ejected master of Trinity; wrote against Baxter; and was author of some occasional sermons and tracts.—Wood; A. N'est.

BORGARUCCI, JULIO, an Italian, graduated in arts at Padua, was created M.D. there, and was, in 1567, incorporated in the latter degree at Cambridge, he having come over to this country after adopting the Protestant religion. He was in much repute in Elizabeth's reign as a medical practitioner, and held the office of physician to the royal household. He was also physician to the earl of Leicester, who, it is said, made no little use, for unlawful purposes, of the doctor's knowledge of poisons. He probably died about 1681.

BORGHESE, CAMILLE PHILIPPE LOUIS PRINCE, was born at Rome, of a noble family, 19 July, 1775. He repaired to Paris 1803, and followed the fortunes of Bonaparte, whose sister, Marie Pauline, he married. After the campaigns of 1806 in Prussia and Poland, Napoleon appointed him governor of the imperial provinces beyond the Alps. He fixed his court at Milan. After the fall of the emperor he took up his residence at Florence, where he died 10 April, 1832.

BORGHESE, MARIE PAULINE BONAPARTE PRINCESS, wife of the preceding, and sister of Napoleon, was born at Ajaccio 20 Oct., 1780, and was celebrated for her beauty. She married first General Leclerc, and secondly the Prince Borghese. Died at Florence, 9 June, 1825.

BORGHESI, PAUL GUIDOTTO, a painter, sculptor, architect, and poet, born at Lucca 1569; died at Rome 1626. He attempted to rival Tasso by a despicable poem called 'Jerusalem Ruined.'

BORGHINI, RAPHAEL, a poet and dramatist of Florence, died 1584. His best known work is 'Il Riposto in cui si tratta della pittura e della scultura de' più illustri professori antichi e moderni.'

BORGHINI, VINCENT, a Benedictine of Florence, was born 29 Oct., 1515, and died 15 Aug., 1580. He was author of valuable 'Discourses on the History of Florence.'

BORGIA, ALEXANDER, archbishop of Fermo, was born at Velletri 1682, and died 14 Feb., 1764. He published a Life of Pope Benedict XIII., and a great number of Homilies.

BORGIA, ST. FRANCIS. See FRANCIS.

BORGIA, CÆSAR, a natural son of Alexander VI. He no sooner heard of his father's exaltation than he left Pisa, where he was fixed for his education; but the prospects which he had formed were obscured by the coolness with which Alexander received him. He complained to his mother Vanozza, who for a while quieted his impatience, but he was dissatisfied to see the dukedom of Gandia conferred upon his elder brother, whilst the primacy of Valenza was reserved for himself. Afterwards, by the influence of his mother, whose greatest favourite he was, the dignity of cardinal was conferred upon him, and he became the confidant of his father's counsels. The elevation of his brother to secular power excited his jealousy, so that, to gratify his revenge, he caused him to be murdered by assassins, and thrown into the Tiber. The pope bitterly lamented his fate; but all inquiries after the murderer were silenced by Vanozza, who, justly suspected, terrified the astonished father by declaring that if he did not desist, the same dagger was ready to stab him to the heart. Cæsar succeeded to his brother's honours, and resigned the dignity of cardinal, with greater latitude to gratify his avarice, ambition, and cruelty. Assassins were kept around him, who sacrificed both friends and foes; but his murderous schemes proved nearly fatal. United with his father in the attempt to poison nine newly-created cardinals, that they might seize their possessions, the wine was by mistake brought to them, so that Cæsar escaped with difficulty by the power of antidote and strength of constitution, but the pope died of it. His crimes were now too public to be unnoticed. Though raised to the dukedom of Valentinois by Louis XII., he was sent a prisoner to Spain; but he escaped to the court of his brother-in-law, John, king of Navarre, and engaged in the civil war by which that kingdom was distracted, and was killed by the stroke of a spear under the walls of Viana 12 March, 1507.

BORGIA, STEPHEN, nephew of Alexander Borgia, the archbishop of Fermo, was born at Velletri 3 Dec., 1731. He became secretary of the Propaganda, and was created a cardinal by Pius VII., whom he accompanied to France. He died at Lyons 23 Nov., 1804. He published 'Monumento di Giovanni XVI. summo Pontifice illustrato;' 'Istoria della città di Tadino nell' Umbria;' 'Della città di Benevento;' and other works. It was through his exertions that the royal bounty of England was extended to the Cardinal York.

BORIACE, EDMUND, M.D., a physician, was son of Sir John Borlace, one of the lords justices of Ireland. He received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, and then went to Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree 1650. He was afterwards incorporated in that degree at Oxford. He settled at Chester, where he died 1682. His works are 'Latham Spaw in Lancashire;' 'The Reduction of Ireland to the Crown of England;' 'History of the execrable Irish Rebellion;' and 'Brief Reflections on the Earl of Castilehaven's Memoirs.'

BORLASE, HENRY, the founder of the Plymouth Brethren, was a native of Helstone, Cornwall, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1828). After his ordination in the Church of England, he held, for a short time, the curacy of the parish of St. Keyne, in Cornwall. He withdrew from the ministry of the Church of England, and from that time was associated with a Christian congregation at Plymouth, to whom first the name of 'Plymouth Brethren' was given. They did not, however, then hold the peculiarities of theology, nor did they carry out the same course of action which characterise those who now in many places are known as 'Plymouth Brethren.' After many months of illness, Mr. Borlase died in Oct., 1835. In the following year a small volume was published under the title of 'Papers by the late Henry Borlase, connected with the present state of the Church.'

BORLASE, WILLIAM, D.C.L., F.R.S., a divine and antiquary, born at Pendenn, in the parish of St. Just, Cornwall, 2 Feb., 1695-6. He was educated partly at Penzance and partly at Plymouth School, after which he was entered of Exeter College, Oxford, where he proceeded M.A. 1719, and the same year received holy orders. In 1722 he was instituted to the rectory of Ludgvan, Cornwall, and in 1732 to the vicarage of St. Just. He was admitted a F.R.S. 1750, having some time before communicated to that learned body an Essay on Cornish Crystals. In 1754 appeared his 'Antiquities of Cornwall,' of which a second edition was published in 1769. His next publication was 'Observations on the Islands of Scilly.' In 1758 he published his 'Natural History of Cornwall,' and in 1790 the university of Oxford created him D.C.L. He died at Ludgvan 31 Aug., 1772.

BORN, IGNATIUS, Baron, a celebrated mineralogist, conchologist, historian, and traveller, was born at Carlsburg, in Transylvania, 1742, and died 28 Aug., 1791.

BOROWLASKI, Count, a Polish gentleman, of great accomplishments and elegant manners, was born Nov., 1739. He came to England, where he became well known on account of his dwarfish stature. His growth was, at one year of age, 14 inches; at six, 17 inches; at twenty, 33 inches; and at thirty, 39. He had a sister, named Anastasia, seven years younger than himself, and so much shorter that she could stand under his arm. He visited many of the courts of Europe, and died in England at the great age of 93, in Sept., 1837.

BOKRI, JOSEPH FRANCIS, in Latin Burghus, an enthusiast, chemist, heretic, and prophet, born at Milan 4 May, 1627. He was driven from Rome, Milan, Strasburg, and Amsterdam, upon the discovery of his intrigues to obtain money. Going to Hamburg, he succeeded in getting money from Queen Christina and the king of Denmark, by pretending that he possessed the secret of the philosopher's stone. He then took refuge in Hungary, but the pope's nuncio demanded him, and sent him to Rome, where he died a prisoner in the castle of St. Angelo 10 Aug., 1695. His pretended secrets are embodied in a book written by him, entitled 'La Chiave del Gabinetto.' The Abbé Villars's 'Le Comte de Gabalis' was founded on this work.

BORRICHIOUS, OLAVS, a Danish physician and writer on chemistry, born at Borchsen 1626; died 5 Oct., 1690.

BORROMEO, CHARLES (St.), cardinal, archbishop of Milan, one of the greatest men of the sixteenth century, was born 2 Oct., 1538, in the castle of Arona, of an illustrious family. He was created a cardinal by Pius IV., his mother's brother, 1560, afterwards archbishop of Milan, grand penitentiary, legate of Romania and the marquisate of Ancona. He distinguished himself in all these high offices, and acquired universal esteem and veneration. During his uncle's pontificate he assisted him in governing the church, protected and advanced men of merit, and brought the council of Trent to a happy conclusion. He died

BOSCAWEN.

11 Nov., 1584, and was canonized 1610. St. Charles was author of several theological works.

BORROMEO, FREDERICK, cousin-german to St. Charles Borromeo, and, like him, a cardinal and archbishop of Milan, was born 1564, and died 23 Dec., 1631. He was eminent for learning and piety, composed several valuable works, held the seventh council of Milan, and founded the famous Ambrosian library.

BORROMINI, FRANCIS, an Italian architect, born 1599; died 1667.

BORRONI, PAUL MICHAEL BENEDICT, an Italian painter, born 1749; died 23 Aug., 1819.

BORTHWICK, DAVID, of Lochhill, a learned lawyer and judge, who was lord advocate of Scotland in the reign of James VI.; died Jan., 1581.

BORY DE ST. VINCENT, JEAN BAPTISTE GEORGE MARIE, a celebrated French naturalist, born at Agen 1780; died 23 Dec., 1846.

BORZONI, LUCIAN, a painter of history and portraits, born at Genoa 1590; died 1645. He had three sons, who were eminent painters, viz., John Baptist (died 1654); Charles; and Francis Maria (born 1625; died 1679).

BOS, JEROME, a painter and engraver, born at Bois-le-Duc about 1450; died 1500.

BOS, LAMBERT, born at Worcum, in Friesland, 1670, became Greek professor at Franeker, where he died 6 Jan., 1717. He published the Septuagint; the Antiquities of Greece; 'Mysterii Ellipsis Græcæ expositi Specimen'; and other learned works.

BOS, LOUIS JANSEN, a Flemish painter, died 1507.

BOSANQUET, CHARLES, governor of the South Sea Company, died at Rock, Northumberland, 20 June, 1850. He was author of 'A Letter to W. Manning, Esq., M.P., on the depreciation of West India property,' 8vo., 1807; 'Thoughts on the value to Great Britain of Commerce in general, and of the Colonial Trade in particular,' 8vo., 1807; and 'Remarks on the Report of the Bullion Committee,' 8vo., 1810.

BOSC, CLAUDE DU, a French engraver, long resident in England, flourished about 1714.

BOSC, LOUIS AUGUSTE GUILLAUME, a naturalist and writer on agriculture, born 29 Jan., 1759, at Paris, where he died, 10 July, 1828.

BOSC, PIERRE DU, a French Protestant minister, born at Bayeux 1623. On the revocation of the Edict of Nantes he retired to Holland, and was appointed minister of the church at Rotterdam, where he officiated till his death on 2 Jan., 1692. He published some Sermons, and after his death M. le Gendre printed his 'Life, with his Letters, Poems, &c.'

BOSCAN ALMOGAVER, JOHN, a Spanish poet, was born at Barcelona about 1500, and died before 1543. He introduced into Spanish poetry a harmony which was unknown before his time.

BOSCAWEN, EDWARD, an English admiral, second son of Hugh, Viscount Falmouth, was born in Cornwall 1711. Having entered the navy, he was in 1740 made captain of the 'Shoreham,' of twenty guns. He particularly distinguished himself at the taking of Porto Bello, and the siege of Carthage. On his return to England he married the daughter of William Glanville, Esq., and was chosen member of parliament for Truro. In 1744 he was made captain of the 'Dreadnought,' of sixty guns, and in 1747 signalized himself under Admiral Anson in an engagement with the French fleet off Cape Finisterre. The same year he was made rear-admiral of the blue, and commander of the land and sea forces employed in an expedition to the East Indies, where he laid siege to Pondicherry, but was obliged to quit it on account of the monsoon. After taking Madras he returned to England, and was appointed one of the lords commissioners of the admiralty. In 1755 he sailed with a strong fleet to intercept a French squadron bound to North America, of which he captured two ships, one being commanded by M. Hoquart, who had fallen into his hands twice before. In 1758 he reduced Cape Breton and Louisburg. The year following he commanded in the Mediterranean, and while he lay at Gibraltar to refit M. de la Clue passed the Straits with the Toulon fleet; on which Boscawen got under weigh, and came up with the enemy off Lagos Bay, and after a sharp engagement: took three ships and burnt two. In 1760 he was appointed general of the marines, and the same year commanded in the Bay of Biscay till relieved by Admiral Hawke. Died 10 Jan., 1761.

BOSCAWEN, WILLIAM, nephew of the preceding, was the younger son of General George Boscawen, third son of Lord Falmouth. He was born 28 August, 1752, and sent to Eton School before he was seven years old, and from thence, at a proper age, to Exeter College, Oxford, which he left without taking any degree, and then studied the law in the Middle Temple under his countryman Mr. Francis Buller. On being called to the bar he went the Western Circuit; was made a commissioner of bankrupts, and also of the victualling board. Died 6 May, 1811. Mr. Boscawen was the author of 'A Treatise of Convictions on Penal Statutes;' 'A new Translation of Horace, 2 vols. 8vo. & 'The Progress of Satire, an essay, containing remarks on the Pursuits of Literature.' He was also an occasional writer in the British Critic.

BOSCH, BALTHASAR VAN DEN, a painter, born at Antwerp 1675; died 1715. His conversation pieces and portraits possess great merit.

BOSCH, JACOB VAN DEN, a painter of still life, was born at Amsterdam 1636, and died 1676.

BOSCOLI, ANDREW, a painter, born at Florence 1553; died 1626.

BOSCovich, ROGER JOSEPH, an eminent mathematician, was born at Ragusa 18 May, 1711, and became a member of the Society of Jesus. Afterwards he was appointed professor of mathematics at Rome, Pavia, and Milan. On the suppression of his order he went to France, and eventually retired to Milan, where he died 12 Feb., 1787. His works are on mathematical subjects. He travelled over the greater part of Europe, and greatly improved the theory of achromatic glasses. His Latin poem 'De Solis et Lunæ Defectibus' is admired.

BOSIO, ANTHONY, nephew of James, mentioned below, wrote 'Roma Sotterranea,' published in 1652, and translated into Latin by Arrighi. Died at Rome 1629.

BOSIO, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, BARON, an eminent sculptor, born at Monaco 19 March, 1709; died at Paris 29 July, 1845.

BOSIO, JAMES, secretary to the order of St. John of Jerusalem, and its agent at Rome, published an interesting account of the order in Italian, Rome, 3 vols. folio, 1594-1602.

BOSQUET, FRANÇOIS DE, an illustrious French

BOSSUET.

prelate, was born at Narbonne 28 May, 1605; became bishop of Montpellier 1657; and died 24 June, 1676. His principal works are 'Pontificum Romanorum, qui e Galliâ oriundi in cã sederunt, Historia, ab anno 1305 ad annum 1394;' and a History of the Gallican Church.

BOSSANGE, MARTIN, a celebrated bookseller of Paris, died 3 Nov., 1805, aged 100 years all but one month.

BOSSCHAERT, THOMAS WILLEBRORD, a Flemish painter, born at Bergen-op-Zoom 1613; died 23 Jan., 1666.

BOSSÉ, ABRAHAM, of Tours, in France, is known as an engraver and an architect. He published some useful treatises on the art of engraving and perspective; Representations of the Human Figure, from the Antiques at Rome, &c. Born 1611; died 1678.

BOSSI, the Chevalier JOSEPH, an Italian painter, and writer on art, director of the academy at Milan, was born 18 Aug., 1777, and died 15 Dec., 1835.

BOSSI, JOSEPH CHARLES AURELE, BARON DE, was born at Turin 15 Nov., 1758. After being employed in several diplomatic missions, he was mainly instrumental in bringing about the union of Piedmont with France. In 1805 he was nominated prefect of the department of the Ain, which he administered till 1810, when he was created a baron of the French empire, and appointed prefect of La Manche. He died at Paris 20 Jan., 1823. His works, consisting of Italian poetry and dramatic compositions, were published at London in 1816, 3 vols. 12mo.

BOSSO, MATTHEW, was born at Verona, 1427. He became a regular canon of St. John de Lateran, and eventually abbat of Fiesole. His death took place at Padua 1502. He was author of 'Epistolæ;' 'De veris et salutaribus animi gaudiis dialogus;' 'De institutu sapientiã animo;' and 'Recuperationes Fesulanæ.'

BOSSU, RENÉ LE, was born at Paris, 1631, and became canon regular of St. Genevieve, where he taught polite literature. Died 14 March, 1680. His treatise on epic poetry was long regarded as a standard work, even in this country, and was translated into English in 2 vols. 8vo., 1719.

BOSSUET, JACQUES BENIGNE, one of the greatest ornaments of the Catholic church in France, was descended from an ancient and noble family in Burgundy, and was born 27 Sept., 1627. He was placed by his uncle at the college of the Jesuits at Dijon, where his laborious application to his tasks was the wonder of his schoolfellows, and procured for him, in allusion to the surname of his family, the nickname of Bos Suetus Arator. While he was a mere boy he read the Old Testament with avidity, and in his old age frequently mentioned the pleasure he had derived from its perusal. This attachment to the sacred Scriptures increased with years. In time they became so familiar to him that the verse, the line, the word which he wished to remember, was ever present to his memory, and it was generally supposed by his friends that he knew the whole contents of the sacred volumes by heart. From Dijon he was removed to the college of Navarre, and in 1652 he received the order of priesthood. His first preferment was a canonicate in the cathedral church of Metz, and he was successively raised to the rank of archdeacon and dean in that church. The affairs of the cathedral rendering it necessary that he should go to Paris, he frequently preached in that capital. His sermons were universally applauded, and he was appointed to preach the sermons of the Lent of 1693 before Louis XIV. in the chapel of the Louvre. The king was greatly pleased with him, and in 1699 nominated him to the bishopric of Condom. He was consecrated 21 Sept., 1699, but only held the see twelve months, finding the duties of a distant diocese quite incompatible with those of tutor to the dauphin, which he became immediately after his consecration. To this appointment we owe Bossuet's immortal 'Introduction to Universal History.' Soon after the education of the dauphin was completed Louis XIV. nominated Bossuet to the bishopric of Meaux, 1681. He was appointed successively almoner to the dauphines, superior of the college of Navarre, warden of the university of Sorbonne, councillor of state, and first almoner of the duchess of Burgundy. Died 12 April, 1704. It will suffice merely to mention that Bossuet had a correspondence with Leibnitz on the reunion of the Lutherans and the Catholic church; but the circumstances under which his name became associated with the assertion of the liberties of the Gallican church cannot be so summarily dismissed. Louis XIV. had a dispute with the Pope concerning the regale, or the right claimed by the kings of France to the revenues of every vacant see within their dominions, and to collate to the simple benefices within its jurisdiction. This was always viewed with jealousy, not only by the Pope and foreign princes, but by the general body of the church of France, and its warmest advocates treated it rather as tolerated than an acknowledged claim. Innocent XII. took great offence at the extension of the regale to the provinces bordering on the Alps and the Pyrenees, which had not previously been subject to it; and a letter, composed by Bossuet, was sent to his Holiness by the archbishop of Rheims, in the name of himself and the other French prelates; but before any reply was received from Rome a general assembly of the clergy of France was convened, and met on the 9th of Nov., 1681. The proceedings were opened with a solemn high mass, the sermon being preached with great elegance by Bossuet, who vindicated what he termed the rights of the Gallican church. The assembly afterwards drew up their famous Declaration, which was penned by Bossuet. It consists of four articles. The first declares that the power which Jesus Christ has given to St. Peter and his successors, vicars of Christ, relates only to spiritual things and those which concern salvation, and not to things civil and temporal; so that in temporal things kings and princes are not subject to the ecclesiastical power, and cannot directly or indirectly be deposed by the power of the keys, or their subjects discharged by it from the obedience which they owe to their sovereigns, or from their oath of allegiance. The second article declares that the plenitude of the power which resides in the Holy See and the successors of St. Peter, in respect to spiritual concerns, does not derogate from what the Council of Constance has defined in its fourth and fifth sessions on the superiority of general councils. The third article declares that the exercise of the apostolical power of the Holy See should be governed by the canons, which have been enacted by the Spirit of God, and are respected by all the Christian world; and that the rules, customs, and usages received by the kingdom and churches of France, and approved by the Holy See, should be inviolably preserved. The fourth article declares that in questions of faith the Pope is the principal authority, and that his decisions extend over the universal church, and each church in particular; but that unless they have the consent of the church they are not irreformable. Bossuet afterwards composed a celebrated Defence of this Declaration; but it was not published till after his death. As an author Bossuet stands in the foremost rank. His 'Sermons' abound with beautiful, affecting, and sublime passages, and his 'Funeral Orations' are unrivalled. His brief but masterly treatise entitled 'An Exposition of the Controverted Doctrines of the Catholic Church' is highly esteemed by Catholics, and has been translated into the language of every country where the Church of Rome is either dominant or tolerated. While yet in MS. it was placed in the hands of the celebrated Turenne, who was convinced by its arguments, and led to embrace the Catholic religion. Bossuet's other principal productions are the 'Introduction to Universal History' already referred to, and the 'History of the Variations of the Protestant Churches.'

BOSSUET, JACQUES BÉNIGNE, nephew of the preceding, obtained the bishopric of Troyes 1710, resigned it 1742, and died at Paris 12 July, 1743, aged 82. He was editor of several of his uncle's works, and author of 'Pastoral Letters,' &c.

BOSSUT, CHARLES, a celebrated French mathematician, born 11 Aug., 1730; died 14 Jan., 1814. His 'General History of the Mathematics' was translated into English by Bonnycastle.

BOSTOCK, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Liverpool 1774, and having graduated at Edinburgh, settled in his native town, where he established an extensive practice. In 1817 he removed to London, and eventually renounced the practice of physic, in order that he might devote himself exclusively to literary and scientific pursuits. Among his works are many important articles in Brewster's 'Encyclopædia'; 'Elementary System of Physiology'; and a 'History of Medicine,' forming part of the 'Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine.' Died Aug., 1846.

BOSTON, JOHN, a monk of Bury St. Edmund's, in the fourteenth century, who is thought to have died in 1410, was one of the first collectors of the lives of English writers, and the precursor of Leland, Bale, and Pits. He searched indefatigably all the libraries of the kingdom, and wrote a catalogue of the authors, with short opinions of them. Archbishop Usher had the most curious MS. copy of this book, which became afterwards the property of Thomas Gale. Wood mentions another smaller catalogue of Boston's writing. He wrote also 'Speculum Cœnobitarum,' in which he gives the origin and progress of monachism; and a history of his own monastery; 'De rebus cœnobii sui,' which last is lost, but the former was printed at Oxford, 1722, by Hall, at the end of Trivet's Annals.

BOSTON, THOMAS, a Scotch divine, was born at Dunse, 17 March, 1676. After going through his grammatical studies he went to Edinburgh, and in 1696 taught school at Glencairn; but he soon quitted that employment, and became private tutor in a gentleman's family till 1699, when he was licensed to preach, and the same year ordained as pastor of Simprin. In 1707 he removed to Ettrick, where he remained till his death, BOSTON.

20 May, 1732. He wrote 'Human Nature in its Fourfold State,' a very popular book, which went through many editions. Mr. Boston left a very curious MS. behind him, written in Latin, on the Hebrew accents, which was printed at Amsterdam in 1738, under the title of 'Thomæ Boston eccliesiæ Atricensis apud Scotos pastoris, Tractatus Stigmologicus Hebræo-Biblicus.' He also wrote Memoirs of his Life and Writings. His works on practical divinity were collected in a large 10 volume in 1768, and afterwards others, particularly his 'Body of Divinity,' 3 vols., 1773, were published from his MSS.

BOSTON, THOMAS, son of the preceding, became one of the founders of the Relief Church. Born 3 April, 1713; died 1767.

BOSWELL, SIR ALEXANDER, an antiquary, eldest son of James Boswell, the biographer, was born 9 Oct., 1775, and educated at Westminster School and at Oxford. Having succeeded his father in the family estate of Auchinleck, in Ayrshire, he there established a printing-press, from which he sent forth various pieces in prose and verse. In 1821 he was created a baronet of Great Britain, as a reward for his patriotism and loyalty. He was killed by James Stuart, jun., of Duncarn, in a duel arising out of a political dispute, 27 March, 1822. In addition to some fugitive political pieces, he wrote 'Songs, chiefly in the Scottish dialect;' 'Edinburgh, or the Ancient Royalty, a Sketch of former Manners, by Simon Gray;' 'Clan-Alpin's Vow, a poetical fragment;' and 'Skeldon Haughs, or the Sow is flitted, a poetical tale in the Scottish language.'—Anderson.

BOSWELL, JAMES, the biographer of Dr. Samuel Johnson, was the son of Alexander Boswell, Lord Auchinleck, one of the justices of the Court of Session in Scotland. He was born at Edinburgh 29 Oct., 1740, and received his education at the school of his native city, after which he studied the civil law at the universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow. In 1760 he visited London, and ever afterwards entertained a strong partiality for that metropolis. At this period he was desirous of a commission in the Guards, from which he was withheld by parental authority, in obedience to which he returned to Scotland to prosecute his legal studies. In 1763 he went to Utrecht, and thence proceeded through Switzerland to Italy. At Corsica he contracted an intimacy with Paoli. He returned to Scotland 1766, and being admitted an advocate, was employed in the celebrated Douglas case, the particulars of which he published in a pamphlet. In 1768 he printed an account of Corsica, of which his friend Dr. Johnson spoke in handsome terms, as being well calculated to excite and gratify curiosity. The year following he married Miss Mary Montgomery, who at her death in 1790 left him two sons and three daughters. In 1782 he lost his father, whereupon he removed to London, with a view to professional practice at the English bar, but never succeeded, and the only appointment he obtained was the recordership of Carlisle. In 1785 he published 'A Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides,' which met with a very favourable reception, as likewise did his more important work, 'The Life of Samuel Johnson, LL.D.,' which appeared in 1790, in 2 vols. 4to. In these two works the character of our great moral philosopher is delineated with exquisite fidelity. Mr. Boswell was also the author of 'Two

BOTH.

Letters to the People of Scotland,' printed in 1783; the 'Hypochondriac,' a series of papers in the 'London Magazine;' and several miscellaneous pieces in prose and verse, scattered often in various periodical publications. He died in London 19 June, 1795.

BOSWELL, JAMES, second son of the biographer of Johnson, was born 1778, and after being educated a Westminster School and Brasenose College, Oxford, was called to the English bar. Mr. Malone selected him as his literary executor, and entrusted to his care the publication of an enlarged and amended edition of Shakespeare's plays. This elaborate work was completed in 1821 in twenty-one octavo volumes. Mr. Boswell likewise contributed a few notes to his father's Life of Johnson. Died 24 Feb., 1822.—Anderson.

BOSWELL, SIR WILLIAM, a native of Suffolk, received his education at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow 1666, going out M.A. in the following year. He was afterwards secretary to Sir Dudley Carleton, while that statesman was ordinary ambassador to the states of the United Provinces, and was afterwards resident as leiger ambassador there himself. In 1633 he was made a knight. Died 1647. He was a learned man, a great encourager of learning, zealous for the Church of England, faithful in the execution of his embassy, and highly valued by eminent persons. The Addit. MSS. 6394 and 6395 contain many of Sir William's papers and correspondence, chiefly relating to the condition of the English church in the Netherlands in the reigns of James I. and Charles I.

BOTALLI, LEONARD, physician to Henry III. of France, recommended frequent bleeding in fevers, which practice was severely condemned by other medical men. He flourished about 1550, and a collected edition of his works appeared in 1666.

BOTERO, JOHN, an Italian writer, was born at Bene, in Piedmont, 1540. He became a Jesuit, but quitted the order in 1581, and acted as secretary to St. Charles Borromeo until the death of that illustrious prelate. He was then sent to France as minister for Piedmont, and was afterwards commissioned by the Propaganda to travel through various countries, and collect information respecting the state of the Christian religion in them. In 1599 he was summoned to the court of Charles Emanuel, to superintend the education of his children. He was much honoured by his sovereign, who consulted him respecting the administration of his kingdom. Botero died at Turin 1617. His most esteemed work is 'Della Ragione di Stato, libri X.' He also wrote 'Relazioni Universali;' 'La Primavera,' a poem in ottava rima; 'Otium Honoratum,' a Latin poem; and 'Detti memorabili de' personaggi illustri.'

BOTFIELD, BERIAH, a noted English bibliographer, M.P. for Ludlow, was born 1807, and died in London 7 Aug., 1863. He published 'Notes on Cathedral Libraries in England,' 1849; and collected and edited the 'Prefaces to the first Editions of the Greek and Roman Classics, and of the Sacred Scriptures,' 1861.

BOTH, JOHN AND ANDREW, two Flemish painters, so fond of each other that their pictures were generally executed in common. John imitated Claude Lorraine, and his brother copied the manner of Bamboccio. John was born at Utrecht 1610, and was drowned in the canal of Venice 1650; and the other died at Utrecht 1656.

BOTHWELL.

BOTHWELL, FRANCIS STEWART EARL OF, a descendant of the Hepburns, was created earl of Bothwell by King James VI. of Scotland 1576. He rendered himself remarkable by his restless disposition, and his several daring attempts to obtain possession of the person of the king. Eventually he was compelled to leave the country, and he died in great misery at Naples 1624.

BOTHWELL, JAMES HEPBURN EARL OF, son of Patrick, third earl of Bothwell of the Hepburn family, succeeded to the title and estates on the death of his father in 1556. He afterwards became remarkable in the history of Scotland on account of his connection with Queen Mary, and his supposed share in the murder of Henry Darnley, her husband. When that unfortunate prince was blown up in the house where he slept, suspicion fell strongly both on Bothwell and the queen. Bothwell was tried, but nothing could be fixed upon him, and he was acquitted. After this he seized Mary near Edinburgh, and carried her prisoner to Dunbar Castle, where he first endeavoured by soothing speeches and protestations of love to prevail on her to marry him. That she at last did so is certain; but it is alleged, and apparently with justice, that she was forced to do it by the worst of advantages being taken of her. During these iniquitous proceedings Bothwell procured a divorce from his wife. Mary soon afterwards created him duke of Orkney. But a confederacy among the lords being formed against him, he retired to the Orkney islands, and from thence to Denmark, where he died in prison 14 April, 1578, confessing his own guilt, and Mary's innocence, of the murder of Darnley.

BOTLEY, SAMUEL, an English stenographer, born about 1642. He was author of 'Maximum in Minimo, or Mr. Jeremiah Rich's Pen's Dexterity completed,' 1674, and other works on shorthand writing.

BOTNER, WILLIAM, or WILLIAM WORCESTER, was born at Bristol about 1415. He studied at Hart Hall, Oxford, and afterwards served under Sir John Fastolf in the wars above forty years, with such fidelity as to be left one of his executors. He translated from the French, 'Cicero on Old Age,' 1475, and wrote besides, Antiquities of England; Abbreviations of the Learned; Medicinal Collections; Treatises on Astronomy and Astrology; the Acts of Sir John Fastolf, and of John Duke of Bedford; also the Polyandrium Oxoniensium, or Memoirs of Oxford Students. He died about 1490.

BOTT, JEAN DE, an architect, born in France 1760. He entered the military service of William III., and afterwards that of the king of Prussia, and that of the king of Poland. The arsenal of Berlin, the fortifications of Wesel, and several public edifices at Dresden, are monuments of his genius. He died at Dresden 1745.

BOTT, THOMAS, was born at Derby 1688. He was educated among the dissenters, but afterwards conformed, and obtained the rectory of Winburg, in Norfolk. His next preferment was the living of Remerston, which was followed by that of Spixworth; and lastly, the rectory of Edgefield, all in the same county. He died 23 Sept., 1754. He wrote a tract against Wollaston's Religion of Nature delineated, 1725; Remarks on Butler's Analogy, 1730; an answer to Warburton's Divine Legation; and some sermons.

BOTT, WILLIAM, author of 'A Description of

BOUCHER.

Buxton, and the adjacent country,' 12mo., Manchester, 1795; 8th edit., 12mo., Sheffield [1804?], was born at Chelmsorton, Derbyshire, 11 May, 1735, and died 24 March, 1804.

BOTTA, CHARLES JOSEPH WILLIAM, an Italian physician, historian, and poet, born 6 Nov., 1766; died 10 Aug., 1837.

BOTTARI, JOHN GAETANO, a Roman dignitary, born 15 Jan., 1689. He was appointed by the Academy Della Crusca to superintend a new edition of their dictionary, his assistants being Andrea Alamaorni and Rosso Martini. After this, the direction of the printing office was committed to him, till Pope Clement XII. made him librarian of the Vatican. Benedict XIV. gave him the canonry of St. Martin Transteverini, and appointed him his private almoner. Died 3 June, 1775. His principal works are, 'Vita di F. Sacchetti,' 'L'Ercolano, dialogo di Benedetto Varchi;' 'Lezione tre sopra il tremuoto;' 'Sculture, e Pitture sacre estratte dai cimeteri di Roma,' 3 vols. folio; 'Vocabularia Della Crusca,' 6 vols.; Preface to the Vatican copy of Virgil, published by Marmæus, folio, 1741; 'De Museo Capitolino,' 3 vols. folio; 'Racolta di lettere sulla Pittura, Scultura, ed Architettura,' 3 vols. 4to.; 'Dialoghi sopra tre arti dell Disegno.'

BOTTICELLI, ALEXANDER, a painter and engraver of Florence, born 1437; died 1515.

BOTTONI, ALBERTINO, a physician and medical writer, professor at Padua, his native city, died 1596.

BOUCHARDON, EDMÉ, a native of Chaumont, in France, who devoted himself to sculpture, and adorned Paris with various monuments of his genius. He was honoured by the king and by the academy. Born 1698; died 27 July, 1762.

BOUCHAUD, MATHIEU ANTOINE, a native of Paris, professor of the law of nature in the college of France. Besides various articles in the Encyclopédie, he wrote a Commentary on the Law of the Twelve Tables, with notes; 'Poetical Antiquities,' &c. Born 16 April, 1719; died 1 Feb., 1804.

BOUCHE, HONORÉ, a French ecclesiastic, author of a valuable History of Provence, was born 1598, and died at Aix 25 March, 1671.

BOUCHER, FRANÇOIS, painter to Louis XV. of France, from his excellence in the light and agreeable, was called the painter of the graces, and the Anacreon of painting. His Infant Jesus Sleeping is much admired. Born at Paris 1704; died 7 May, 1770.

BOUCHER, JEAN, a seditious doctor of the Sorbonne, who severely inveighed in his sermons and writings against Henry III., and afterwards against Henry IV. When Paris submitted to the conqueror, he retired into the Netherlands, where he died 1644, aged 94.

BOUCHER, JOHN, an English divine, was educated at Oxford. He was originally a member of St. John's College in that university, but shortly after graduating B.A. he was elected to a fellowship at Magdalen. In 1800 he took orders, and soon afterwards became rector of Shaftesbury and vicar of Kirknewton. Died 12 Nov., 1818. After his death, a selection from his sermons was printed in an 8vo. volume, 2nd edition, London, 1821.

BOUCHER, JONATHAN, was born 12 March, 1738, at Blencow, in Cumberland. He received his education at the school of Wigton, after which he went to America, where, on taking orders, he obtained first the living of Hanover, in Virginia, and afterwards Queen Anne's parish, in Prince George's county. In 1775 he was obliged to relinquish his charge and seek refuge in England, where he obtained first the curacy, and next the vicarage, of Epsom, Surrey. Died 27 April, 1804. Mr. Boucher published, 'A letter to Bishop Watson, in answer to his letter to the archbishop of Canterbury,' 4to., 1783; 'A view of the causes and consequences of the American Revolution, in thirteen discourses,' 1797; two assize sermons, preached in 1798. He was also the author of a tract, entitled 'A Cumberland Man,' and several biographical articles in Hutchinson's history of that county. Before his death he engaged in a glossary of provincial and archæological words, which he left incomplete; but a portion of it, containing the first letter of the alphabet, was printed.

BOUCHER D'ARGIS, ANTOINE GASPARD, a French advocate, born at Lyons 1703; died at Paris 1780. Among his works are 'Traité des gains nuptiaux,' 'Principes sur la nullité du mariage pour cause d'impuissance,' and 'Regles pour former un avocat.'

BOUCHERAT, LOUIS, a native of Paris, raised by his talents and integrity to be chancellor of France. Born 20 Aug., 1616; died 2 Sept., 1699.

BOUCHET, GUILLAUME, sieur de Brocourt, was born at Poitiers 1526, created judge consul there 1584, and died about 1607. He published three volumes of 'Serees,' or imaginary conversations, abounding with jests and pleasantries.

BOUCHET, JEAN, a learned attorney at Poitiers, his native place, born 1476; died about 1550. He acquired great reputation by his writings, among which are 'Annals of Aquitaine,' and several poetical pieces.

BOUCHET, JEAN DU, maître d'hôtel to the king of France, died 1684, aged 85. He published genealogies of illustrious families.

BOUCICAUT, JEAN LE MAINGRE, marshal of France, was born at Tours 1364. He went against Bajazet, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Nicopolis. He was governor of Genoa for Charles VI.; but while he seized Milan all the French were massacred at Genoa, and he himself was defeated and escaped with difficulty. He afterwards distinguished himself against the Turks and Venetians. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, and died in England 1421. He was fond of music, and some of his ballads have been preserved.

BOUDEWYNS, ANTHONY MICHAEL, a landscape painter, born at Brussels about 1788.

BOUDON, HENRI MARIE, grand archdeacon of Evreux, and author of several religious works in French, was born at La Fere (Aisne) 14 Jan., 1624, and died at Evreux 31 Aug., 1702.

BOUDOT, JEAN, an intelligent bookseller and printer of Paris, compiler of a Latin-French dictionary, abridged from a MS. written by Pierre Nicolas Blondeau. Died 1706. He left two sons—Jean (born 1688; died 1754), and Pierre Jean (born 1689; died 1771), who were both distinguished booksellers and printers at Paris.

BOUETTE DE BLEMUR, JACQUELINE, a French lady, born 8 Jan., 1618. She was brought up with an aunt in the abbey of the Holy Trinity at Caen, and there assumed the Benedictine habit at the age of eleven. Four years afterwards she was appointed mistress of the novices, and before she had attained her twentieth year, was chosen prioress. When the duchess of Mecklenburg formed a new establishment at Chatillon of female Benedictines, Madame Bouette condescended to lay aside her situation as prioress in order to become a member of it. She died there, in great reputation for sanctity, 24 March, 1696. This good lady wrote 'L'Année Benedictine, ou les Vies des Saints de l'ordre de St. Benoît,' 7 vols.; 'Eloges de plusieurs personnes illustres en pieté de l'ordre de St. Benoît,' 2 vols.; 'La Vie du Pere Fournier de Martincourt,' 'Les Exercices de la Mort,' 'Vie de la mere St. Jean de Montmartre,' 'Vies de tous les Saints,' 2 vols.; and 'Monologue historique de la Mere de Dieu.'

BOUFLERS, LOUIS FRANÇOIS DUC DE, was born in France 10 Jan., 1644, and early distinguished himself by a strong military genius. His defence of Lisle in 1708, for nearly four months against Eugene, gained him universal praise. 'I am vain,' said Eugene, when master of the place, to Bouflers, 'to have conquered Lisle; but I had rather enjoy the glory of defending it like you.' He served under Villars; and at the battle of Malplaquet, 1709, displayed such vigilance that neither cannon nor prisoners fell into the hands of the conquerors. He was generous and disinterested, humane and virtuous, and so superior a general that William III., detaining him prisoner at Namur, declared that he was worth more than 10,000 men. He died at Fontainebleau 22 Aug., 1711.

BOUFLERS, STANISLAS MARQUIS DE, a member of the French Academy, was born 1737. He was intended for the church, but preferring a military life, entered the army, and became a colonel of hussars. He was afterwards governor of Senegal. In the revolution he emigrated to Berlin, where he was chosen a member of the Academy. In 1800 he returned to Paris, where he died 18 Jan., 1815. He wrote Fables in verse, Letters, Dissertations, &c.

BOUGAINVILLE, JEAN PIERRE DE, a French writer, was born at Paris 1 Dec., 1722, and died 22 June, 1763. He wrote a translation of cardinal de Polignac's 'Anti-Lucretius;' a Parallel between the expedition of Kouli Khan in the Indies, and that of Alexander; and a metrical translation of the Hymn of Cleanthes, which appears to have suggested to Pope his Universal Prayer.

BOUGAINVILLE, LOUIS ANTOINE COMPTE DE, brother of the preceding, was born at Paris 11 Nov., 1729, and died 31 Aug., 1811. His discoveries in his voyage round the world procured as much glory for his nation as Cook had before acquired for the English. His 'Voyage' was translated into English by J. R. Forster, 4to., London, 1772.

BOUGEANT, GUILLAUME HYACINTHS, a Jesuit, born at Quimper, in Brittany, 4 Nov., 1690, and became professor of humanities at Caen, Nevers, and Paris. He fell into disgrace for a time in consequence of his 'Amusement Philosophique sur le langage des bêtes,' in which he supposes that brutes are animated by demons. His historical works are valuable, especially his History of the Wars and Negotiations during Richelieu and Mazarin's administration; and the History of the Treaty of Westphalia. Died 7 Jan., 1743.

BOUGEREL, JOSEPH, a French priest of the Oratory, born at Aix 1680; died 19 March, 1753. He published 'Memoires pour servir à l'histoire de plusieurs hommes illustres de Provence;' a Life of

BOUGHEN.

Gusendi; and other works. He also left in MS. 'Bibliothèque des écrivains de l'Oratoire.'

BOUGHEN, EDWARD, D.D., was born in Buckinghamshire about 1488, and educated at Westminster school and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1509; M.A. 1512). He became chaplain to Dr. Hewson, bishop of Oxford; rector of Woodchurch, Kent, 1533; vicar of Bray, Berkshire; and died probably in 1601. He was a very learned man, a staunch defender of the Established Church, and author of several sermons, some tracts against the Presbyterians, and other religious treatises.—Al. 27a.

BOUGUER, PIERRE, a native of Croisic, in Brittany, distinguished by his knowledge of mathematics. He was employed with Godin and La Coudamine in Peru to ascertain the figure of the earth; but his quarrel with his associates lessened his fame. His publications are useful, especially 'La Construction du Navire'; 'La Figure de la Terre'; 'Traité d'Optique'; 'La Manœuvre des Vaisseaux.' Born 10 Feb., 1698; died 15 Aug., 1758.

BOUCHIER, JEAN, of Dijon, was eminent as a lawyer and a scholar. He composed poetry and dissertations, and translated some parts of Virgil and Ovid, the Tusculana of Cicero, &c. Born 10 March, 1673; died 17 March, 1746.

BOUCHOURS, DOMINIQUE, a French Jesuit, born at Paris 1628. He first gave lectures at Clermont, and then became preceptor to the sons of the duke of Loqueville. He afterwards attended at Dunstons the Catholic refugees from England, and became known by his 'Entretiens d'Ariste et d'Eugène,' an elegant work, which was read with admiration in every part of Europe. This performance so pleased Colbert that he made him tutor to his son, the marquis of Seignelay. His 'Doubts on the French Language' are worth attention. He wrote besides, 'Dialogues on the art of thinking well,' 'Lives of St. Ignatius and St. Francis Xavier; Ingenious Thoughts of the Ancients and Moderns, &c.' Bouchours closed his useful life, which never ceased to be afflicted by the headache, 27 May, 1702.

BOUILLARD, JACQUES, a painter and engraver, born at Versailles 1744; died at Paris 1806.

BOUILLART, JACQUES, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, author of a History of the Royal Abbey of St. Germain-des-Prés, was born 1609, and died 11 Dec., 1726.

BOULLAUD, ISMAEL. See BOULLIAU.

BOUILLE, FRANÇOIS CLAUDE AMOUR MARQUIS, a French general, born 19 Nov., 1739. During the American war he served in the West Indies, and for his services was made lieutenant-general and knight of the Holy Ghost. He opposed the revolution, and particularly the plans of Necker, and, as the friend of the king, repressed the insurrection of the garrison of Metz, of which he was governor, in Aug., 1790; but, though applauded by the Assembly, he was accused by the Jacobins as a shedder of blood, and the odium was further increased upon the flight of the king to Varennes. Bouille, who failed in his attempts to liberate his master, boldly defended the measures, and was in consequence pronounced an enemy to his country. An exile from France, he entered the Swedish army 1791, but soon afterwards enlisted under Condé, and shared the dangers of the heroic but unfortunate emigrants. His Memoirs of the Re- volution appeared in 1797, and excited great interest. He died in London 14 Nov., 1800.

BOUILLET, JEAN, a French physician and medical writer, born 1690; died 13 Aug., 1777.

BOUILLON, EMMANUEL THÉODOSE DE LA TOUR CARDINAL DE, a French ecclesiastic, who served Louis XIV. as his ambassador at Rome, and was exiled under the pretence that he had not supported his master's interest with sufficient energy. Born 24 Aug., 1644; died 2 March, 1715.

BOUILLON, GODFREY OF. See GODFREY.

BOULAINVILLIERS, HENRI DE, comte de St. Saire, a French historian, born 11 Oct., 1658; died 23 Jan., 1722. His works on the history of France were collected and printed at London, 3 vols. folio, 1727-8.

BOULANGER. See BOULLANGER and BOULLENGER.

BOULANGER, JEAN, an engraver, was born at Amiens 1607, and died 1660.

BOULANGER, NICOLAS ANTOINE, a deistical writer, born at Paris 1722. His works were all published after his death, which took place 16 Sept., 1759.

BOULARD, ANTOINE MARIE HENRI, a Frenchman, distinguished by his love for books and literature, was born at Paris 5 Sept., 1754. For a long time he followed the profession of a notary, but abandoned it in 1809, in order to give his whole time to his favourite pursuits. He spent large sums in forming one of the most extensive libraries ever possessed by a private individual, in printing books which he had translated into French, and in reprinting useful works originally composed in that language. Died 6 May, 1825.

BOULAY, CESAR EGASSE DU, professor at the college of Navarre, and subsequently rector of the university of Paris, obtained deserved reputation by his History of the University of Paris, written in Latin, in 6 vols. folio. Born about 1605; died 10 Oct., 1678.

BOULAY DE LA MEURTHE, ANTOINE JACQUES CLAUDE JOSEPH, a French politician and author, born 19 Feb., 1701; died at Paris 4 Feb., 1840.

BOULAYE, FRANÇOIS LE GOUZ DE LA. See GOUZ.

BOULLANGER, ANDRE, a famous French preacher, better known as 'little Father Andrew,' was one of the reformed Augustinians, and drew together crowds of auditors by the singularity of his sermons, and the lively sallies of wit which he introduced into them. He died at Paris 21 Sept., 1657, aged 79.

BOULLENGER DE RIVERY, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS FELIX, a French writer, and member of the Academy, was born 12 July, 1725, and died 24 Dec., 1758. He wrote 'Traité des Phénomènes de l'électricité'; 'Apologie de l'Esprit des Loix'; 'Recherches sur les Mimes et Pantomimes'; 'Momus Philosophe,' a comedy; 'Fables et Contes.'

BOULLENOIS, LOUIS, a French jurist, born at Paris 14 Sept., 1680; died 23 Dec., 1762.

BOULLIAU, ISMAEL, in Latin Bullialdus, a learned astronomer and scholar, born at Loudun, in France, 28 Sept., 1605. His parents were Protestants, but he embraced the Catholic religion, and became a priest. He died in the abbey of St. Victor at Paris, 25 Nov., 1664. Boulliau wrote some books on ecclesiastical rights, and edited the Byzantine History of Ducas, in Greek and Latin.

BOULLIER.

His other works are a treatise on the Nature of Light; 'Philolaus, sive de vera Systema Mundi'; 'Tabulæ Philolaicæ'; 'De Lineis Spiraliibus'; and 'Opus Novum ad Arithmetica Inhibitum.'

BOULLIER, DAVID RENAUD, a Protestant divine, born at Utrecht 24 March, 1699, became minister first at Amsterdam, and afterwards in London, where he died 24 Sept., 1759. He published 'Essai sur l'Amc des Bêtes'; some Sermons; and several works against the Church of Rome.

BOULLONGNE, LOUIS DE, a French painter, born 1609; died at Paris June, 1674. He excelled in painting what the Italians call pasticci, that is, imitations of the ancient masters. He left two sons, who were better artists than their father—Bon (born 1649; died 16 May, 1717), and Louis (born 1654; died 21 Nov., 1733).

BOULTER, HUGH, primate of all Ireland, was born in or near London 4 Jan., 1671-2, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School. He afterwards became a commoner of Christ Church, Oxford, but left that college on being elected to a demyship at Magdalen. He graduated M.A. 1693; B.D. 1705; D.D. 1708. About the year 1700 he was invited to London by Sir Charles Hedges, secretary of state, became his chaplain, and was afterwards chaplain to Archbishop Tenison. This led to his introduction to Lord Sunderland, also secretary of state, to whose patronage he owed his nomination to his first benefice, the rectory of St. Olave, Southwark, which he held from 1708 to 1722. He was also archdeacon of Surrey 1715-19. When George I. visited Hanover in 1719 Dr. Boulter accompanied him as chaplain, and was appointed tutor to Prince Frederick, for whose improvement in the English language he drew up a 'Set of Instructions.' This so recommended him to the king that, during his stay in Hanover, the see of Bristol, and the deanery of Christ Church, Oxford, falling vacant, his majesty gave both those preferments to Dr. Boulter, who was consecrated bishop of Bristol 15 Nov., 1719. In 1724 he was advanced to the archbishopric of Armagh and the primacy of all Ireland. He was ten times one of the lords justices of that kingdom, which he quitted 2 June, 1742, and died 27 Sept., 1742, after an illness of only two days, in his house in St. James's Place, London. He was conspicuous for his charity towards the poor population of Ireland, and especially of Dublin, during the famines of 1728 and 1740. One who knew him well has compared his munificence on these occasions to that of no less bright an example than the illustrious St. Charles Borromeo, archbishop of Milan. Dr. Boulter printed several charges to his clergy, and after his death his letters to some of the ministers of state in England, giving an account of the events in Ireland from 1724 to 1738, were published in two volumes at Oxford. It is said that he also assisted Ambrose Phillips in the paper called the 'Free Thinker.'—Chalmers; Alumni West.

BOULTON, MATTHEW, F.R.S., was born at Birmingham 3 Sept., 1728, and educated at a private school in the same town, after which he learnt drawing under Worlidge, and mathematics from one Cooper. Being brought up to business, he, as early as 1745, had made several important inventions in the manufacture of steel. In 1762 he removed his works to Soho, in the county of Stafford, about two miles from Birmingham, and at that time a barren heath. This spot he by degrees made a complete school of mechanical genius, from whence proceeded various ornaments, which have found their way over the whole globe. In 1767 Mr. Boulton had recourse to the steam engine for the furtherance of his designs; and two years afterwards he entered into partnership with Mr. James Watt, of Glasgow, who had made great improvements in that instrument of power. By this co-operation the steam engine was carried to an astonishing height of perfection, particularly in coining; and the pieces struck at Soho possessed great beauty and exactness. About 1773 the art of copying pictures in oil colours by a mechanical process was invented at this manufactory. Mr. Boulton was a fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, and a member of several foreign institutions. He died at Soho 17 Aug., 1809, and was succeeded by his only son.

BOUQUET, MARTIN, a Benedictine of St. Maur, was born at Amiens 6 June, 1685, and died at Paris 6 April, 1754. He assisted Montfaucon in his compilations, and edited eight volumes of the well-known collection of the historians of France entitled 'Rerum Gallicarum et Francicarum Scriptores.' This work has since been extended to 16 vols.

BOUQUETT, PHILIP, D.D., was educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected, 1689, to a scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1692; M.A. 1696; B.D. 1706; D.D. 1711). He held the professorship of Hebrew for a short period in 1705, and was elected to fill that office permanently 24 Aug., 1712. Dr. Bouquett was the senior fellow of Trinity when he died, on 12 Feb., 1748, aged 79. He contributed verses to the university collections on the death of George I. and the accession of George II. Cole describes him as 'born in France, an old miserly refugee, died rich in college, and left his money among the French refugees. He was a meagre, thin man, went partly double, and for his oddities and way of living was much ridiculed.'—Al. West.

BOURBON, CHARLES DUKE OF, constable of France, was the son of Gilbert, count of Montpensier, and born 27 Feb., 1489. He distinguished himself at the famous battle of Marignano, but soon afterwards fell into disgrace through the enmity of the mother of Francis I., whose offer of marriage he had rejected. On this he associated with Charles V. and the king of England against his sovereign. The plot, however, was discovered, but he escaped into Italy, where he became lieutenant-general to the emperor, and afterwards commander-in-chief. He was killed in an assault upon Rome 6 May, 1527.

BOURBON-CONDÉ, LOUIS DUC DE, a French general, who gained reputation at the battles of Steenkerke and Neerwinden, and died suddenly at Paris 4 March, 1710, et. 42. His son Louis Henri, duke d'Enghien et de Bourbon-Condé, was employed during the minority of Louis XV., and died at Chantilly 27 Jan., 1740, et. 48.

BOURBON, or BORBONIUS, NICOLAS, a modern Latin poet, born at Vandœuvre, near Langres, 1503. He was preceptor to Jeanne d'Albret de Navarre, mother of Henry IV., and afterwards had a benefice at Condé after 1550. He left eight books of epigrams, a didactic poem on the forge, entitled 'Ferrarie'; and 'De puerorum moribus.' He often visited England, and was intimate with Sir Thomas More, Crammer, and other great men.

prof. He was born at Vandœuvre 1574, became professor of rhetoric at the royal college, canon of Laon, and a member of the Academy, and died 7 Aug., 1644. His Latin poems were printed at Paris, 1651.

BOURCHENU, JEAN PIERRE MORET DE, Marquis de Valbonnais, was born at Grenoble 23 June, 1651, and died 2 March, 1730. There is a good 'History of Dauphine,' 2 vols. folio, Geneva, 1722, which was composed by him when he was blind, from books that were read to him.

BOURCHIER, SIR JOHN. See BERNERS, Lord.

BOURCHIER, THOMAS, cardinal, archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of William Bourchier, Earl of Ewe, in Normandy. He was educated in Newde's Inn, at Oxford, of which university he became chancellor. In 1433 he was made bishop of Worcester, where he had not sat a year when he was elected to the see of Ely, from which he was translated to Canterbury in 1454. Ten years afterwards he was made cardinal, and, in 1465, had high chancellor of England, which office he held but a short time. What renders this prelate's memory most deserving of respect is the circumstance of his having introduced the art of printing into England in the year 1464, when presses were set up in the monasteries of Westminster, St. Alban's, Worcester, and Tavistock. He died at Knowle 30 March, 1486.

BOURCHIER, THOMAS, D.D., of a noble family, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and in 1528 took the habit of St. Francis in the restored convent at Greenwich. On being expelled with the community by Queen Elizabeth he proceeded to Paris, where he was created D.D. Thence he travelled to Rome, and became an inmate of the great monastery of Ara Cueli. He also exercised the office of penitentiary in the church of St. John Lateran. Died about 1586. He wrote 'Historia Ecclesiastica de Martyrio Fratrum Ordinis D. Francisci, qui partim in Anglia sub Henrico VIII., partim in Belgio, partim et in Hybernia, Tempore Elizabethæ regnantis Regiæ passi sunt, 1558-62,' 8vo., Paris, 1582, 1585, 1586; 12mo., Ingolstadt, 1583.

BOURDALOUE, LOUIS, a Jesuit, born at Bourges 20 Aug., 1631. After preaching in the country he went to Paris 1669, where he became in a short time so distinguished that Louis XIV. desired to hear him. He preached at court in Advent, 1670, and in Lent, 1672, and was heard with fresh admiration at those seasons in many subsequent years. All the pulpits in Paris resounded with his sermons. The king sent him into Languedoc, 1686, to inspire the new converts with a love for the Catholic religion. Father Bourdaloue preached at Montpellier and had extraordinary success. To the fatiguing employment of the pulpit he joined a most assiduous attendance at the tribunal of confession. He also attended the sick, visited prisons and hospitals, and was frequently at charitable meetings, where he procured copious contributions by his pathetic discourses. He died at Paris 13 May, 1704. His Sermons were published by Father Bretonneau, a Jesuit. Bourdaloue possessed a great and elevated genius, a lively and penetrating wit, and an extensive knowledge of theology. He was never excelled by any preacher in majesty, strength, and grandeur of style.

BOURDELON, LAURENT, a French priest, born at Bourges 1653; died at Paris 6 April, 1730. He wrote a number of works, all of which are forgotten except 'Les Imaginations extravagantes de M. Ouffle;' 'Tours de maître Gonin;' 'Dialogues des Vivants.'

BOURDELOT, JEAN, a learned advocate of the parliament of Paris, was appointed in 1627 master of the requests to Queen Mary de Medicis, and died 1638. He was an acute classical scholar, and edited Lucian, Heliodorus, and Petronius.

BOURDELOT, PIERRE MICHON, abbe, nephew of the preceding, was born at Sens 1610, and took the name of Bourdelot by his uncle's desire. He became physician to the king, and died 9 Feb., 1685. His works are 'Recherches sur la Vipère;' 'Reponse à une lettre de Boccône sur l'embrassement du Mont Etna;' and 'Conversations Academiques.' From his MSS. his nephew Bonnet compiled the 'History of Music.'

BOURDIN, MAURICE, archbishop of Braga in Portugal, and anti-pope under the name of Gregory VIII. Being excommunicated in a council, he withdrew to Sutri, and was delivered up by the inhabitants to the army of Pope Calixtus II. He was imprisoned at Fumone, near Alatri, where he died 1122.

BOURDOISE, ADRIEN, a worthy French priest, and friend of St. Vincent of Paul, born at Perche 1 July, 1584. He founded the seminary of St. Nicholas du Chardonnet at Paris, and rendered essential service to religion by his catechisms, missions, and conferences. He likewise displayed an ardent zeal for the establishment of seminaries, and for the improvement of the clergy. Died 19 July, 1655. A life of him has been published.

BOURDON, AIMÉ, a physician of Cambray, published 'New Anatomical Tables,' and a 'New Anatomical Description of all the parts of the Human Body.' Born 1638; died 21 Dec., 1706.

BOURDON, SÉNASTIEN, a French painter, born at Montpellier 1616. He was for some time in the army, which he quitted at the age of eighteen, and went to Italy, where he became acquainted with Claude Lorraine, whose manner he imitated. After residing there three years he returned to France, and at the age of twenty-seven painted his famous picture of the crucifixion of St. Peter for the cathedral of Notre Dame at Paris. The civil wars interrupting the arts, he went to Sweden, and became first painter to Queen Christina. On his return to France he increased his reputation by executing many fine pictures. He was also a good engraver, and his etchings are in a bold, masterly style. Died March, 1671.

BOURGELAT, CLAUDE, the founder of veterinary schools in France, and author of several esteemed works on veterinary science, was born at Lyons 27 March, 1712, and died 3 Jan., 1779.

BOURGEOIS, SIR FRANCIS, a painter, was born in London of Swiss parents, 1756. He was originally designed for the army, under the patronage of the renowned General Elliot, his father's friend; but his own inclination being to the fine arts, he was placed with Loucherbourg, by whose instructions he profited so well as to gain considerable reputation for his landscapes and sea pieces. In 1776 he travelled for improvement; and on his return obtained admission into the Royal Academy. In 1791 he was appointed painter to the king of Poland, who gave him the order of merit, which was confirmed by George III., who in 1794 named him his landscape painter. Some time before his death the late Noel Desenfans, a celebrated picture dealer, bequeathed to him his property and a fine collection, which last Sir Francis left to Dulwich College, with £10,000. for the purpose of keeping the gallery in order. Died 8 Jan., 1811.

BOURGET, JEAN, a French Benedictine monk, author of a valuable History of the Abbey of Bec, in Normandy, which was published in English by Dr. Ducarel. Born 1724: died at Caen, 1 Jan., 1776.

BOURGOIN, THÉRÈSE ÉTIENNETTE, a French actress, born 6 July, 1751; died 11 Aug., 1833.

BOURGOING, FRANÇOIS, third general of the congregation of the Oratory in France, was born at Paris 18 March, 1685, and died 26 Oct., 1662, leaving a number of works on religious subjects.

BOURGOING, JEAN FRANÇOIS, BARON DE, a French author and diplomatist, born 20 Nov., 1748; died 20 July, 1811. Besides several translations, he published 'Tableau de l'Espagne,' and 'Memoires Historiques et Philosophiques sur Pie VI. et sur son pontificat.'

BOURGUET, LOUIS, a naturalist, was born at Nîmes 23 April, 1678; became professor of philosophy and mathematics at Neufchatel, and died 31 Dec., 1742. His works are 'On the Formation of Salts and Crystals;' 'La Bibliothèque Italique,' 10 vols.; 'Traite des Petrifications.'

BOURGUEVILLE, CHARLES DE, lieutenant-general of the bailiwick of Caen, was born there 6 March, 1504, and died 1593. His memory has been kept alive by his 'Recherches et Antiquités de la Neustrie, et plus spécialement du diocèse de Caen,' 1588, which has been recently reprinted by the Society of Antiquaries of Normandy.

BOURGUIGNON, LE. See COURTOIS.

BOURIGNON, ANTOINETTE, a celebrated devotee, who pretended to be guided by particular inspiration, was born at Lisle 1616, and died at Franeker 30 Oct., 1680. In the course of her wanderings she paid a visit to Scotland. Her works were printed at Amsterdam in 21 volumes 8vo., 1680.

BOURKE, EDMUND, Comte de, the confidential adviser of the king of Denmark, and his ambassador at the court of the Tuileries, was born at Sainte Croix, one of the Antillas, of Irish parents, 2 Nov., 1701, and died 12 Aug., 1821.

BOURMONT, LOUIS AUGUSTE VICTOR, Comte DE GHAINSE DE, a marshal of France, born 2 Dec., 1773; died 27 Oct., 1846.

BOURN, SAMUEL, a dissenting divine, was born at Birmingham, and educated at Glasgow. In 1742 he became pastor of a congregation at Rivington, in Lancashire, from whence he removed to Norwich, as assistant to Dr. John Taylor, and died there 25 Sept., 1796, aged 83. He published two volumes of sermons, and a Latin treatise on the duration of future punishments.

BOURN, THOMAS, the compiler of a 'Gazetteer of the most remarkable Places in the World,' 8vo., London, 1807; died in 1832, aged 61.

BOURNE, GILBERT, an English prelate, born in Worcestershire, and educated at Oxford. In the reign of Queen Mary he was employed to preach against the reformed doctrines, and this he did with such zeal and energy that on one occasion it is said a dagger was thrown at him while he was in the pulpit. In 1554 he was consecrated bishop of Bath and Wells, and not long afterwards lord president of Wales. On the accession of Elizabeth he was deprived of all his preferments. Died 10 Sept., 1599.

BOURNE, HUGH, founder of the sect called 'Primitive Methodists,' was born near Stoke-upon-Trent 1772, and died at Bemmersley, Staffordshire, 18 Oct., 1852, aged 81. The body originated in 1810, Mr. Bourne and some others having seceded from the 'Wesleyans' on account of their not being permitted to hold what are known as 'camp meetings.' They wished to restore Methodism to its primitive simplicity, and were accordingly designated 'Primitive Methodists.'

BOURNE, IMMANUEL, a divine, born in Northamptonshire 27 Dec., 1590, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, was preferred, in 1622, to the living of Ashover, Derbyshire. During the Rebellion he sided with the parliament party, and removed to London, where he became preacher of St. Sepulchre's. In 1656 he was collated to the rectory of Waltham, Leicestershire, and having conformed at the Restoration, obtained the rectory of Ailston, in the same county. Died 27 Dec., 1672. He published 'A Light from Christ, &c., or a preparatory to the Sacrament;' 'Defence of Scriptures;' 'Defence and Justification of Ministers' maintenance by Tithes, &c.,' against the Anabaptists and Quakers; 'A Gold Chain of directions, with twenty Gold Links of Love to preserve firm love between Husband and Wife;' and Sermons.

BOURNE, REUBEN, of the Middle Temple, published in 1692 a comedy called 'The Contented Cuckold.'

BOURNE, ROBERT, M.D., author of several works on medicine and chemistry, was born 1769, and educated at Oxford, where he became successively Aldrichian professor of medicine and clinical professor of medicine. Died 23 Dec., 1830.

BOURNE, VINCENT, an elegant Latin poet, was born at Westminster in or about 1696, and in 1710 was admitted a scholar of Westminster School, from whence he was elected, in 1714, to a scholarship at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1717; fellow 1720; M.A. 1721). In Nov., 1734, he was appointed housekeeper and deputy serjeant-at-arms to the House of Commons. He was also for several years an usher in Westminster School. It appears that he married, and had a son, a lieutenant of marines, who was sent to India by the government. To this son he bequeathed, after his mother's death, a farm, near Bungay, in Suffolk; it is also mentioned that he died possessed of a house, which he had built, in Westminster. He died 2 Dec., 1747, leaving behind him poems which still afford delight to the lovers of classical poetry. Such are the slender materials for the history of a poet who has been celebrated by Cowper and Beattie, and the author of the Essays of Elia, in terms of no ordinary praise. 'I love (writes Cowper) the memory of Vinny Bourne. I think him a better Latin poet than Tibullus, Propertius, Ausonius, or any of the writers in his way, except Ovid, and not at all inferior to him. I love him, too, with a love of partiality, because he was usher of the fifth form at Westminster when I passed through it. * * *

It is not common to meet with an author who can make you smile, and yet at nobody's expense; who is always entertaining, and yet always harmless; and who, though always elegant, and classical to a degree not always found even in the classics themselves, charms more by the simplicity and playfulness of his ideas than by the neatness and purity of his verse: yet such was poor Vinny. I remember seeing the duke of Richmond set fire to his greasy locks, and box his ears to put it out again." Again, Cowper says:—"I shall have great pleasure in taking now and then a peep at my old friend Vincent Bourne; the neatest of all men in his versification, though, when I was under his ushership at Westminster, the most slovenly in his person. He was so inattentive to his boys, and so indifferent whether they brought him good or bad exercises, or none at all, that he seemed determined, as he was the best, so he would be the best, Latin poet of the Westminster line: a plot which, I believe, he executed very successfully; for I have not heard of any one who has at all deserved to be compared with him." But lest this should be deemed to be too partial testimony, hear Dr. Beattie, who remarks:—"Those foreigners must entertain a high opinion of our pastoral poetry who have seen the Latin translations of Vincent Bourne, particularly those of the ballads of "Tweedside," "William and Margaret," and Rowe's "Despairing beside a clear Stream," of which it is no compliment to say that in sweetness of numbers and elegant expressions they are equal to the originals, and scarcely inferior to anything in Ovid or Tibullus." Bourne commenced his publications as early as 1721, when he published 'Carmina Comitalia Cantabrigiensiâ.' In 1726 another collection of poems appeared; then, in 1724, his 'Poemata Latine partim reddita, partim scripta.' A second edition of this was published in 1735; a third in 1743; a fourth in 1750; a fifth in 1764; a sixth in 1772, but in this last were inserted many poems which were not Bourne's. There was also a seventh edition in 1808, an eighth in 1845. It was on the appearance of this, which followed the text of the edition of 1772, that Archdeacon Nares, on the authority of Dr. Lloyd and Dean Vincent, singled out many of the poems which had been erroneously ascribed to Vincent Bourne. Mr. Pickering's edition appeared in 1840.—Al. West.; Chambers.

BOURNE, WILLIAM STURGES, an English member of parliament, whose name is remembered on account of its being associated with a well-known act of parliament for regulating vestries, &c., and which is usually termed 'Sturges Bourne's Act.' Died 1 Feb., 1845, aged 76.

BOURRIENNE, LOUIS ANTOINE FAUVELET DE, a French diplomatist, sometime private secretary to Napoleon, was born at Sens 7 July, 1769, and died at Caen 7 Feb., 1834. He wrote 'L'Inconnu,' a drama, and 'Mémoires sur Napoléon.'

BOUSSAULT, EDMÉ, a French dramatist, novelist, and miscellaneous writer, was born in Burgundy, Oct., 1638, and died 15 Sept., 1701.

BOURSIER, LAURENT FRANÇOIS, a priest and doctor of divinity, born at Ecouen, in the diocese of Paris, 1679, was obliged to quit the Sorbonne 1721, for having appealed from the constitution Unigenitus. Died 17 Feb., 1749. He was author of the treatise 'De l'Action de Dieu sur les Créatures, or de la Promotion physique,' and drew up the Memorial of the Sorbonne, presented to the Czar Peter, on the reunion of the Latin and Greek churches.

BOUSSEAU, JACQUES, a sculptor, born in France 1681; died at Madrid 1740.

BOUTERWEK, FREDERICK, a German metaphysician, chiefly esteemed for his 'History of Modern Literature,' was born 1766. At an early age he published several poems and a novel; but he subsequently devoted himself to metaphysics, as a disciple of the then reigning masters, Kant and Jacobi. He was in consequence appointed to the chair of moral philosophy at Gottingen 1797. Died 8 Aug., 1828. His literary reputation rests upon his 'Geschichte der Neuern Poesie und Beredsamkeit,' 12 vols. 8vo., 1801.—Nat. Cyl.

BOUVART, MICHEL PHILIPPE, a distinguished physician of Paris, born 14 Jan., 1717; died 19 Jan., 1789.

BOVERICK, an English clock-maker in the seventeenth century, known for his ingenuity in mechanics.

BOVERIUS, ZACHARY, a Capuchin friar, author of a Latin history of his order, was born at Saluzzo, in Piedmont, 1568, and died at Genoa 31 May, 1638.

BOVEY, CATHARINE, married, at the age of fifteen, William Bovey, a gentleman of opulence in Gloucestershire. To great personal charms she united the most benevolent character, so that she is deservedly extolled by Sir Richard Steele in his dedication of the two volumes of the Ladies' Library. She was left a widow early, and died at Haxley, Gloucestershire, 1726, aged 57. Her maiden name was Riches.

BOVILLUS. See BULLOCK, HENRY.

BOWDICH, THOMAS EDWARD, was born at Bristol 1790, and received his education partly in his native city and partly at Corsham, Wiltshire, after which he was taken into the counting-house of his father, who was a wholesale dealer at Bristol. In 1814, however, he went to Cape Coast Castle, on the western shore of Africa, the governor of which place was his uncle. The year following he was appointed second in an embassy to the king of Ashantee, which trust he discharged so satisfactorily as to be placed at the head of the mission. In 1816 he returned to England, and three years afterwards published an account of the Ashantees, and a detail of the mission in one quarto volume, embellished with curious plates. After the publication of this interesting work, Mr. Bowdich went to France, where he translated a 'Treatise on Taxidermy,' and Mollin's 'Travels to the Sources of the Senegal and Gambia.' He also wrote or compiled 'An Essay on the Geography of North-west Africa,' accompanied by a map of his own drawing. To this performance succeeded 'An Essay on the Superstitions, Customs, and Arts, common to the ancient Egyptians, Abyssinians, and Ashantees.' He also published a piece entitled 'The Contradictions in Park's last Journal explained,' which was followed by 'A Mathematical Investigation, with original formulæ for ascertaining the Longitude at Sea by Eclipses of the Moon.' In August, 1822, Mr. Bowdich, accompanied by his wife, sailed for Lisbon, where he collected some information respecting the Portuguese discoveries in Angola and Mozambique, the result of which has been since published. On his arrival in the river Gambia, he undertook a survey of its course, in the execution of which he caught a fever, and died 10 Jan., 1824. After his death Mrs. Bowdich prepared for the press 'A Description of the Island of Madeira, with a Narrative of her husband's last Voyage, Remarks on the Cape de Verd Islands, and a Description of the English Settlements on the Gambia.'

BOWDITCH, NATHANIEL, LL.D., F.R.S., president of the American Academy, was born at Salem, U.S., 26 March, 1773, and died at Boston 16 March, 1838. He published 'The Practical Navigator,' 1802; a translation of La Place's 'Mecanique Celeste,' with a commentary, 4 vols. 4to.; and various communications in the Memoirs of the American Academy.

BOWDLER, HANNAH, sister of Thomas Bowdler, the editor of the 'Family Shakespeare,' died at Bath 25 Feb., 1830, aged 76. She was author of 'Poems and Essays,' 2 vols. 12mo., Bath, 1786; and 'Sermons on the Doctrines and Duties of Christianity,' of which it is related that Bishop Porteus was so pleased with them, that, under the idea of their having been written by a clergyman, he offered, through the publisher, to confer a living upon the author. Mrs. Bowdler also edited in 1810, and through several editions, 'Fragments in Prose and Verse,' by the late Miss Elizabeth Smith.—Genl. Mag.

BOWDLER, Miss JANE, sister of John and Thomas Bowdler, mentioned below, was born 14 Feb., 1743, and died 1784. She was author of a work published after her death, under the title of 'Poems and Essays by a Lady lately deceased,' sixth edition, 2 vols. 8vo., 1788.

BOWDLER, JOHN, a pious English gentleman, was the son of a banker in London, and born 18 March, 1746. At eight years old he was placed under the tuition of Mr. Graves of Claverton, near Bath, the well-known author of the 'Spiritual Quixote' and other works. From thence he removed to a school at Brompton, and next became a pupil of the Rev. Mr. Brett, at Spring Grove, with whom he continued till his entrance at the Temple in 1765; but being of a delicate constitution, and possessing an adequate competency, he never followed the law as a profession. In 1778 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Hanbury, vice-consul of the English factory at Hamburg, by whom he had ten children, four of whom died in infancy. On the death of his father in 1785 he removed to Sevenoaks in Kent, next to Hayes, and afterwards to Eltham, where he led a retired, though not an inactive life, for he exerted himself in promoting the education of the poor, and other good works. He also published a piece entitled 'Reform or Ruin, take your choice;' a tract on 'Religious Education,' and some other useful works. Died 29 June, 1823.

BOWDLER, JOHN, jun., a writer on religious subjects, was born in London 2 Feb., 1783, and educated at Winchester School. He subsequently applied himself to the study of the law, and in 1807 was called to the bar. Died 1 Feb., 1815. Shortly after his death appeared 'Select Pieces in Prose and Verse,' by him, with an extremely meagre and unsatisfactory memoir, 8vo., London, 1810, 1817, 1818. This work was reprinted under the title of 'The Religion of the Heart, as exemplified in the Life and Writings of John Bowdler, late of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-law. Edited by his surviving brother, Charles Bowdler,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1857.

BOWDLER, THOMAS, brother of Jane and John Bowdler mentioned above, was born at Ashley, near Bath, 11 July, 1754, and being intended for the medical profession, received a suitable education at St. Andrews and Edinburgh. He then made a tour through a considerable part of Europe, and on his return renounced his profession, and fixed his residence in London, where he became a Fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. Subsequently he removed to St. Boniface, in the Isle of Wight, and finally to the Rhyddings, near Swansea, where he died 24 Feb., 1825. Mr. Bowdler published 'The Family Shakespeare,' in which edition the offensive passages have been removed with great judgment; and he performed the same work of expurgation to Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.' He was also author of 'Letters written in Holland in September and October, 1787;' a Memoir of Lieutenant-General Villettes; and some other works.

BOWDOIN, JAMES, an American patriot, whose efforts contributed in no small degree to securing the independence of his country, was born at Boston 1722, and died 1790. He was appointed to the governorship of Massachusetts in the year 1785, and was a member of the academy of Philadelphia. His writings are distinguished by masculine eloquence and correctness of style.

BOWEN, JOHN, was appointed Anglican bishop of Sierra Leone 1857, and died 3 June, 1859.

BOWEN, THOMAS, an eminent English engraver of charts, was son of Emanuel Bowen, engraver to King George II. He engraved the maps and charts of the West Indies, &c., published under the auspices of the government, from the surveys of Captain James Speer, and many other elaborate productions. Mr. Bowen died in Clerkenwell workhouse 1790.

BOWER, ARCHIBALD, an author of talents and industry, but of equivocal religious character, was born in or near Dundee 17 Jan., 1686, and received his education at the Scotch college at Douay, after which he went to Rome, and entered the society of Jesus. In 1726 he left Macerata, where he enjoyed a place of some trust, and came to England, where he subsequently professed himself a convert to the Established Church. He was now employed as a private tutor in some respectable families, and also conducted the Historia Literaria, a kind of monthly review. When the Universal History was projected, the part relating to Rome was entrusted to him, but he extended it to an unwarrantable length. In 1748 he published, by subscription, the first volumes of the Lives of the Popes, and was in the same year made keeper of Queen Caroline's library. In 1754 an attack was made upon the last-mentioned work by the Rev. Alban Butler; and soon afterwards Mr. Douglas, subsequently bishop of Salisbury, exposed Bower's moral character by laying open his plagiarisms from Tillamont, and his secret connections with certain members of the society of Jesus. Notwithstanding his spirited and confident defences, and his denial upon oath of the authenticity of letters fully proved to be his, he lost his character both as an author and a man, and was generally believed to be destitute of moral and religious principle. Lord Lyttelton, however, continued his patronage of him to the last. Bower died in London 3 Sept., 1766, and the same year his widow published a statement asserting the sincerity of his principles as a Protestant. His Lives of the Popes were published in 9 vols. 4to.

and an abridgment of them was printed in 2 vols. 12mo.

BOWER, WALTER, a Scotch monk, born at Haddington 1385. After having completed his studies at Paris, he was elected in 1418 abbat of St. Colm, in his native country. He made additions to Fordun's 'Scotichronicon,' and wrote a continuation of that work down to the death of James I.

BOWES, JAMES STUART, an English journalist, for forty years editor of 'Galignani's Messenger.' He opened his literary career in connection with the press on the 'Morning Herald,' and, under the pseudonym of Alfred Dubois, contributed a number of successful pieces to the London stage. Died at Paris 24 May, 1864.

BOWES, MARMA DUKE, an English gentleman of Angton Grange, near Appleton, in Cleveland, was executed at York 26 Nov., 1585, for having entertained Hugh Taylor, a priest of the Roman communion.

BOWES, MARY ELEANOR, Countess of Strathmore. See STRATHMORE.

BOWES, ROBERT, a statesman, was matriculated as a pensioner of Queen's College, Cambridge, 1547, but did not graduate. He was much employed in affairs of state during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and was thrice sent to Edinburgh as resident ambassador. He died at Berwick-upon-Tweed 15 Nov., 1597. His Correspondence between 1577 and 1583 has been published by the Serres Society, 8vo., Durham [1842]. He is often erroneously styled Sir Robert Bowes.

BOWES, SIR WILLIAM, an English politician, eldest son of Sir George Bowes, knight-marshal, was born in the county of Durham, and was admitted a pensioner of St. John's College, Cambridge, 2 Oct., 1564, being matriculated 26 Feb. following. Leaving the university without a degree, he embraced a military life, and served under his father during the northern rebellion, and in subsequent expeditions into Scotland. He was knighted 1585. Subsequently he became one of the council in the north, and held several important public situations. More than once he was sent as ambassador to Scotland. Died 30 Oct., 1611. Several of his letters relating to Scottish and Border affairs are in print.

BOWLE, JOHN, an ingenious scholar, was born 1725. He received his education at Oriel College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1752, and having entered into orders, obtained the vicarage of Idmiston, in Wiltshire. He had the honour to precede Dr. Douglas in detecting Lauder's forgeries; and in 1765 published 'Miscellaneous pieces of ancient English Poesie.' In 1777 he printed a 'Letter to Dr. Percy concerning a new edition of Don Quixote in the original, with annotations,' 4to. This work accordingly appeared in six quarto volumes in 1781, but its reception being unfavourable, the editor published, in 1785, 'Remarks on the extraordinary conduct of the Knight of the Ten Stars and his Italian Squire.' The latter was Joseph Baretti, who returned severely enough in a piece entitled 'Tolendron Speeches to John Bowle about his edition of Don Quixote.' Mr. Bowle contributed to Granger's History, to Steeven's edition of Shakspeare, Warton's History of Poetry, and to the Archaeologia. Died 26 Oct., 1788.

BOWLES, CAROLINE, afterwards Mrs. Southey. See SOUTHEY.

BOWLES.

BOWLES, JOHN, an English prelate, was a native of Lancashire, and received his education at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1603; D.D. 1613). He was appointed dean of Salisbury 1620; bishop of Rochester 1629; and died at Westminster 9 Oct., 1637. He published nothing except a 'Concio ad Clerum.'

BOWLES, WILLIAM, an eminent naturalist, was a native of Ireland, but settled in Spain, where he died 1780. He was author of 'Introduccion a la Historia natural y a la Geografia fisica de España,' which has been translated into French and Italian; a memoir concerning the mines of Spain and Germany, communicated to the Royal Society of London; 'History of the Locusts of Spain;' and 'Tratado sobre el Ganado Merino, y las lanas finas de España, or a Treatise on the Merino Sheep, and the fine wools of Spain. Rendered into English by E. D. Edited by T. R.,' 8vo., London, 1811.

BOWLES, WILLIAM L. SLE, a divine, poet, and antiquary, was born at King's Sutton, Northamptonshire, 1762, and educated at Winchester School and Trinity College, Oxford (M.A. 1792). He took orders, and in 1804 obtained the vicarage of Bremhill, Wiltshire. In 1828 he was elected canon residentiary of Salisbury, where he died 7 April, 1850. His poetical works are 'Fourteen Sonnets,' 1789; 'Verses to John Howard,' 1790; 'The Grave of Howard,' 1790; 'Verses on the Institution of the Philanthropic Society,' 1790; 'Monody written at Matlock,' 1791; 'Elegiac Stanzas written during sickness at Bath,' 1796; 'Hope, an allegorical Sketch, on recovering slowly from Sickness,' 'Combe Ellen,' 1798; 'St. Michael's Mount,' 1799; 'The Battle of the Nile,' 1801; 'The Sorrows of Switzerland,' 1801; 'The Picture, Verses suggested by a magnificent Landscape of Rubens,' 1803; 'The Spirit of Discovery, or Conquest of Ocean,' 1805; 'Bowden Hill, the Banks of the Wye, Cadland, Southampton River,' 1806; 'The Missionary of the Andes,' 1814; 'The Grave of the Last Saxon,' 1822; 'Ellen Gray, or the Dead Maiden's Curse,' 1823 (under the pseudonym of Dr. Archibald Macleod); 'Days Departed, or Banwell Hill, a Lay of the Severn Sea,' 1828; 'St. John in Patmos, or the Last Apostle,' 1832; 'Scenes and Shadows of Days Departed, a Narrative; accompanied with Poems of Youth, and some other Poems of Melancholy and Fancy, in the journey of Life from Youth to Age,' 1837. He also printed several editions of a pleasing little volume of simple poetry, entitled 'The Village Verse Book.' The late Professor Wilson, speaking of Mr. Bowles, remarked, 'His human sensibilities are so fine as to be of themselves poetical; and his poetical aspirations so delicate as to be always human. Hence his Sonnets have been dear to poets—having in them "more than meets the ear"—spiritual breathings that they hang around the words like light around fair flowers; and hence, too, have they been beloved by all natural hearts, who, having not "the faculty divine," have yet the "vision"—that is, the power of seeing and of hearing the sights and the sounds which genius alone can awaken, bringing them from afar out of the dust and dimness of their evanishment.' In 1807 Mr. Bowles edited Pope's 'Works,' in 10 vols. 8vo. This led to a controversy, in which Campbell, Lord Byron, and Roscoe took part, and which did not terminate till 1826. As an antiquary Mr. Bowles will be remembered on account of his 'Parochial History of Bremhill;' his 'Life of Thomas Ken, D.D., deprived Bishop of Bath and Wells; and his 'Annals and Antiquities of Lacock Abbey, in the county of Wilts.' He likewise published a number of works on controversial and miscellaneous subjects.

BOWTELL, JOHN, bookbinder, of Cambridge, compiled a MS. history of that town, which he bequeathed to Downing College, together with other manuscripts and a collection of fossils and curiosities. Died 1 Dec., 1813, æt. 60.

BOWYER, ROBERT, portrait painter in water colours to King William IV., was the publisher of a splendid illustrated History of England and other popular works. He died 4 June, 1834, aged 76.

BOWYER, WILLIAM, a learned printer, was born in Whitefriars, London, 19 Dec., 1699. His father was also an eminent printer, and his maternal grandfather, Thomas Dawks, had been employed upon Walton's Polyglott. William Bowyer was educated under Mr. Ambrose Bonwicke, a nonjuring clergyman, after which he was admitted a sizar in St. John's College, Cambridge, but left the university without a degree to become an assistant to his father, who died in 1737. Previous to this event he married, and had two children, but lost his wife in 1731. By the friendship of Speaker Onslow he was appointed printer of the votes of the House of Commons; and in 1736 he was chosen a member of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1742 he published a translation of Trapp's Lectures on Poetry, and two years afterwards another of Bletierie's Life of Julian. In 1750 he favoured the world with an edition of Kuster 'de vero usu verborum mediourum,' illustrated with notes. He also edited other valuable works in a similar manner, as Bladen's translation of Caesar, and Montesquieu on the Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire. In 1751 he translated Rousseau's prize essay on the effects of the Arts and Sciences; and in 1753 he published a tract in vindication of the Jew Bill. On the death of Richardson, in 1761, he was appointed printer to the Royal Society; and in 1763 he printed an excellent edition of the Greek Testament, in 2 vols. 12mo., with conjectural emendations. Enlarged editions of these conjectures, without the text, have been repeatedly published. In 1766 Mr. Bowyer took his late apprentice, Mr. John Nichols, into partnership with him, which connection enabled him to withdraw from the laborious part of his business. The year following he was appointed printer of the Lords' journals, and the rolls of parliament, on which he removed his office from Whitefriars to Red Lion Passage, Fleet Street. In 1771 he lost his second wife, by whom he had no issue; and the same year he printed an answer to Mr. Raper, on the value of the Greek and Roman money. In 1774 he published his 'Essays on the origin of Printing,' of which a second and improved edition appeared two years afterwards. In 1777 he favoured the world with a new edition of Dr. Bentley's 'Dissertation on the Epistles of Phalaris,' with remarks. The same year he died, on the 18th of Nov., and was buried in the church of Low Layton, Essex. The miscellaneous tracts of Mr. Bowyer were collected and published in one volume quarto, by his worthy successor, Mr. Nichols, who also compiled his Memoirs.

BOYD.

BOXALL, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic divine, was a native of Bramshott, Hampshire, and received his education at Winchester School and the university of Oxford. In the reign of Queen Mary he was made a prebendary of Winchester, archdeacon of Ely, warden of Winchester College, and secretary of state. He was one of the divines appointed to preach at St. Paul's Cross with a view to revive the Catholic religion, and it is said that on one occasion a dagger was thrown at him while he was preaching. The same story, however, is related of Dr. Bourne and Dr. Pendleton. In 1557 he was appointed dean of Peterborough, and at the close of that year dean of Norwich. His next preferment was the deanery of Windsor, and the office of registrar of the Order of the Garter. In the beginning of Elizabeth's reign he was deprived of all his dignities, and confined in Lambeth palace with Thirleby, bishop of Ely, and Tunstal, bishop of Durham. He was, however, afterwards allowed to go at large. Died 1570. Dr. Boxall had an excellent character from all parties, both Catholics and reformers. His only published work is a Latin sermon, 8vo., London, 1555. A Latin oration by him, in praise of the king of Spain, is in MS. Reg. 12 A. xlix.

BOXHORN, MARK ZVERIUS, a native of Bergenop-Zoom, professor of eloquence, politics, and history, at Leyden, was born 25 Sept., 1612, and died 3 Oct., 1653. His principal works are 'Historia Universalis;' 'Vitorum Illustrium Monumenta et Elogia;' 'Chronologia Sacra;' 'Pocmata;' 'Theatrum, Sive Comitatus Hollandiæ nova Descriptio;' 'Scriptores Latini minores historiæ Augustæ;' 'Poetæ satirici minores;' 'Originum Gallicarum liber;' 'De typographiæ artis inventione;' and a History of the Low Countries, in Dutch.

BOYCE, SAMUEL, an English poet, was originally an engraver, and afterwards had a place in the South Sea House. He was author of 'The Rover, or Happiness at last,' a drama, 1752; 'An Ode to the Right Hon. the marquis of Hartington, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland,' 1755; 'Paris, or the force of Beauty,' a poem in two cantos, 1755; 'Poems on several Occasions,' 1757. Died 21 March, 1775.

BOYCE, THOMAS, a dramatist, born in or about 1732, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1754; M.A. 1767); became rector of Worlingham, Suffolk; and died 4 Feb., 1793. He was author of 'Harold, a Tragedy,' in five acts, and in verse, 4to., 1786.

BOYCE, WILLIAM, a musician, born in London 7 Feb., 1710, and bred up in St. Paul's cathedral, under Dr. Greene, who, at his death, bequeathed him his manuscripts. In 1736 he was appointed organist and composer to the chapel royal. In 1749 he was honoured with the degree of doctor in music, by the university of Cambridge, at the installation of the duke of Newcastle as chancellor of that university. His fame was now increased by his compositions for the stage and places of public amusement; but his reputation rests chiefly upon his ecclesiastical music. He died 7 Feb., 1779, and was interred in St. Paul's cathedral.

BOYD, HENRY, M.A., a native of Ireland, became vicar of Rathfriland, and chaplain to the earl of Charleville. He died at Ballintemple, near Newry, 18 Sept., 1832. Mr. Boyd acquired considerable celebrity as the first translator of Dante into English verse. His first publication was the

BOYD.

Inferno, with a specimen of the Orlando Furioso of Ariosto, in 2 vols. 8vo., 1785. In 1796 he published 'Poems chiefly dramatic and lyric,' 8vo.; in 1803, 'The Divina Comedia of Dante, translated into English verse,' in 3 vols. 8vo.; in 1805, 'The Penance of Hugo, a Vision, from the Italian of Vincenzo Monti, with two additional cantos;' and 'The Woodman's Tale, after the manner of Spenser;' and in 1807, 'The Triumphs of Petrarch, translated into English verse.'

BOYD, HUGH, a writer, whose real name was McCaulay, which he changed to Boyd in compliance with the will of his maternal grandfather, a gentleman of Ballycastle, in Ireland. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and intended for the bar; but having dissipated his own and his wife's fortune, he went to Madras, and died there in 1791. An attempt has been made to prove that he was the author of the Letters of Junius; but the perusal of his political tracts, which, though collected in two vols. 8vo., are now forgotten, will sufficiently refute his claim to those celebrated productions.

BOYD, HUGH STUART, a Greek scholar, was born at Edgeware, Middlesex, in or about 1782, and admitted a pensioner of Pembroke College, Cambridge, 24 July, 1799, being matriculated 17 Dec., 1800. He left the university without a degree. He afterwards resided at Bath, and then removed to Hampstead. During the last twenty years of his life he was quite blind, and this affliction is the theme of a sonnet by Mrs. Elizabeth Barrett Erskine, who studied Greek under Mr. Boyd's tuition, with what effect her spirited translation of the 'Prometheus Bound' will testify. Mr. Boyd died at Kentish Town 10 May, 1848. His works, most of which were directed against the tenets of the Catholic church, are—'Lucrèce, a Tragedy,' 8vo., 1806; 'Select Passages of the Writings of St. Chrysostom, St. Gregory Nazianzen, and St. Basil, translated from the Greek,' 8vo., 1810; 'Select Poems of Synesius and Gregory Nazianzen, translated from the Greek. To which are added some Original Poems by the translator,' 8vo., 1814; 'The Agamemnon of Æschylus translated,' 8vo., 1823; 'The Catholic Faith: a Sermon by St. Basil, translated from the Greek. To which is added a Brief Refutation of Popery from the Writings of the Fathers,' 8vo., 1825; 'Thoughts on an Illustrious Exile, occasioned by the Prosecution of the Protestants in 1815. With other poems,' 8vo., 1825; 'The Fathers not Papists, or Six Discourses by the most eloquent Fathers of the Church, with numerous extracts from their Writings; translated from the Greek,' 8vo., 1834; 'An Essay on the Greek Article, to which is added An Essay on the Atonement,' 4to., 1835. Mr. Boyd married a lady of Jewish extraction, and had a daughter, who became the wife of Mr. Henry Hayes, and who, strange to say, forsook the religion which her father had so zealously defended, and joined the Catholic church.

BOYD, JOHN P., brigadier-general in the army of the United States, died at Boston 4 Oct., 1830, aged 62. He published documents and facts relative to military events during the late war 1816.

BOYD, MARK ALEXANDER, a Scotch writer, born at Finkill, Ayrshire, 13 Jan., 1662. He was educated under the observation of his uncle, the Archbishop of Glasgow, and afterwards went to France, where he led for some time a very irregular life; but having lost all his money by gaming, he resumed his studies with considerable advantage. In 1587 he entered into the French service, and was wounded in a skirmish; after which he settled at Toulouse, and applied to the civil law, in which he profited so well as to write some tracts on the subject. On the taking of that city by the faction of the league, Boyd, who had been in the royal army, was thrown into prison, and narrowly escaped with his life. The interest of powerful friends procured him his liberty, and after travelling through several provinces, he returned to his own country, where he died in April, 1601. His 'Epistolæ Heroicæ' and 'Hymns' are inserted in the 'Delicæ Poetarum Scotorum,' 1607. Besides these Latin poems, which some of his countrymen have extravagantly praised, he left some MSS. on legal and political subjects.

BOYD, ROBERT, Lord Boyd of Kilmarnock, a Scotchman, was son of Sir Thomas Boyd. He became the favourite of the court and of the people, and was raised to the peerage. On the death of James II., he was made justiciary of the kingdom, and one of the regents during the king's minority. Ambitious, however, of having no rival, he carried off the young king from Linlithgow to Edinburgh, and declared himself sole regent. Not only were the favours of the crown now distributed to his family and adherents, but the king's sister was married to his son, afterwards lord Arran. At length the monarch, extricated from the power of his guardian, ventured to call a parliament in 1469 to inquire into lord Boyd's conduct. Afraid of his enemies, Boyd fled to England, and died at Alnwick 1470; and his son, divorced from his wife, was forced to leave the kingdom for Antwerp, where he died 1474.

BOYD, ROBERT, a Scotch divine, descended from Robert Boyd, earl of Arran, was born 1578, and educated at Edinburgh. Going to France, he was there ordained a minister of the reformed church, and became professor of philosophy in the university of Montauban. In 1608 he was removed to a professorship at Saumur, which he filled till 1614. In 1615, at the invitation of his sovereign king James, he went to Glasgow, where he occupied the chair of divinity. His situation afterwards becoming embarrassed in consequence of the disputes which arose respecting King James's scheme to assimilate the churches of England and Scotland, he retired from public life to his estate at Carrick, where he died 5 Jan., 1627. He wrote, in very elegant Latin, a commentary on the Epistle to the Ephesians, published under the title of 'Roberti Bodii Scoti Prælectiones in Epistolam ad Ephesios,' folio, London, 1652.

BOYD, ROBERT, LL.D., author of 'The Judicial Proceedings before the High Court of Admiralty, and Supreme Consistorial or Commissary Court of Scotland, &c., and of the Office, Powers, and Jurisdictions of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace and Commissioners of Supply,' died at Edinburgh, 20 April, 1793.

BOYD, WALTER, a famous English financier, born in or about 1754. He was well known as the contractor for the government loans during the war, to the extent of from thirty to forty millions. He was the intimate friend of William Pitt, and was M.P. for Shaftesbury in the Parliament of 1796-1802. His death occurred at his seat, Plaistow Lodge, Kent, 16 Sept., 1837. Mr. Boyd was author of 'A Letter to the Right Hon.

BOYD, WILLIAM, earl of Kilmarnock. See KILMARNOCK.

BOYD, ZACHARY, a Scotch divine and rhymester, born before 1590. After studying at Glasgow he went to France, and became a student in the university of Saumur. He spent 16 years in France, during four of which he was a preacher of the gospel. In 1621 he returned to Scotland, and two years afterwards was appointed minister of the Barony parish, Glasgow, where he resided till his death, which took place in 1653 or the beginning of 1654. He contrived to amass a considerable sum of money, which he divided between his widow and the college of Glasgow. The college also got his library and MS. compositions, eighty-three in number. During his life he published nineteen books, chiefly of a religious cast. Among his works are 'The Last Battell of the Soule in Death,' 2 vols. 8vo., Edinburgh, 1629; 8vo., Glasgow (edited by Neil), 1831; 'The Holie Songs of the Old and New Testament;' and 'Zion's Flowers, or Christian Poems for Spiritual Edification.' This last work, which remains in MS., has received the designation of 'Boyd's Bible.' It consists of a collection of poems on select subjects in Scripture history, such as Josiah, Jephtha, David, and Goliath, rendered into the dramatic form. The vulgar and ludicrous stanza in Jonah's soliloquy within the whale's belly deserves to be cited:—

'What house is this, where's neither coal nor candle,
Where I nothing but guts of fishes handle?'

Numerous excerpts from this quaint work are given in Neil's edition of the 'Last Battell of the Soule in Death.'—Anderson.

BOYDELL, Mrs. JANE, an English novelist and miscellaneous writer, died at Sunbury, Middlesex, 23 May, 1830.

BOYDELL, JOHN, lord mayor of London, was born at Stanton, Shropshire, 19 Jan. 1719. His father was a land surveyor, and intended him for the same profession, but by accidentally meeting with the print of an old castle, the youth conceived a strong desire to become an artist. Accordingly he articulated himself to Toms, the engraver, for seven years, during which period he attended the academy in St. Martin's Lane to study drawing. In 1745 he published six small landscapes, which brought him some money. He afterwards designed and engraved many other views of places in and about London, the whole of which he subsequently collected, and published at the price of five guineas. At this time we had no good engravers, which induced Mr. Boydell to commence dealer, and in Woollet he found an artist deserving of encouragement. His discernment in this instance was rewarded by public approbation, and thus the art of engraving rose in this country to a pitch of unexampled perfection. In 1782 Mr. Boydell was chosen alderman of the ward of Cheap; in 1785 he served the office of sheriff; and in 1790 that of lord mayor. At this time his trade was very flourishing, and his capital in prints and paintings greater than that of any similar establishment in Europe. He was engaged in a splendid illustration of Shakspeare, and thereby gave employment to the first artists in the kingdom. The French revolution, however, blighted his designs, and he was obliged to apply to parliament for an act to dispose of his Shakspeare gallery, paintings, and plates, by a lottery. This was in 1804, and on the 11th Dec., the same year, the alderman died at his house in Cheapside, leaving his business to his nephew, Mr. Josiah Boydell, who succeeded also to his civic gown, but resigned it some time before his death, which happened in 1818. There are in Guildhall some fine paintings, which were presented to the corporation by the elder Mrs. Boydell.

BOYER, ABEL, a lexicographer and grammarian, was born at Castres, in France, 13 June, 1667, but left that country on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. After finishing his studies at Geneva and Franeker, he came to this country, where he gained a subsistence by teaching the French language. He died at a house he had built in the Five Fields, Chelsea, and was buried in the churchyard there 16 Nov., 1729. His French and English Dictionary and his French Grammar have gone through numerous editions. He also compiled 'The Political State of Great Britain,' somewhat after the manner of the Annual Registers; 'The History of King William,' 3 vols. 8vo.; 'Annals of the reign of Queen Anne,' 11 vols.; and other works.

BOYER, Baron ALEXIS, a distinguished French surgeon, born 30 March, 1757; died 25 Nov., 1833.

BOYER, JEAN BAPTISTE NICOLAS, a French physician and medical writer, distinguished for his zeal and humanity during the dreadful plague at Marseilles in 1720. Born 5 Aug., 1693; died 4 April, 1768.

BOYLE, CHARLES, earl of Orrery. See ORRERY.

BOYLE, DAVID, a Scotch judge, was born at Irvine 26 July, 1772; appointed solicitor-general for Scotland 1807; constituted lord of session and justice 1811; lord justice clerk the same year; lord justice general of Scotland and lord president of the court of session 1841; and died 4 Feb., 1853.

BOYLE, HAMILTON, earl of Cork and Orrery. See CORK and ORRERY.

BOYLE, HENRY, Lord Carleton. See CARLETON.

BOYLE, HENRY, earl of Shannon. See SHANNON.

BOYLE, JOHN, earl of Cork and Orrery. See CORK.

BOYLE, MICHAEL, D.D., son of Richard Boyle, archbishop of Tuam, became bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, 1666; archbishop of Dublin 1663; archbishop of Armagh 1698; and died 1702.

BOYLE, RICHARD, third earl of Burlington, and fourth earl of Cork. See BURLINGTON.

BOYLE, RICHARD, earl of Cork. See CORK.

BOYLE, ROBERT, a celebrated philosopher, seventh son of the great earl of Cork, was born at Lismore, in the province of Munster, 25 Jan., 1626-7. In 1635 he was sent to Eton, where he remained about four years, and was then taken to his father's seat at Stalbridge, Dorsetshire, and placed under the instruction of Mr. Douch, rector of that parish. His next removal was to Geneva, in company with his brother Francis, and under the care of Mr. Marcombes. From hence, at the expiration of twenty-one months, they proceeded through Switzerland into Italy, where Robert Boyle made himself a complete master of the language, and studied the works of Galileo. After visiting Rome the two brothers passed through the county of Nice and came to Marseilles, where they received intelligence of the Rebellion, and were much distressed for the want of remittances. With much difficulty, however, they raised money to defray their expenses to England, where, on their arrival in 1644, they were apprised of the death of their father, who left to his son Robert the manor of Stalbridge. Here our philosopher now settled, making excursions to London and Oxford, particularly the latter place, to enjoy the company of the learned men who had associated themselves into a society for the cultivation of natural knowledge. In 1652 Mr. Boyle went to Ireland to settle his estates, in which he would have been much embarrassed had it not been for the friendship of Sir William Petty. On his return in 1654 he settled at Oxford, and continued there till 1668, when he removed to the house of his sister, Lady Ranelagh, in Pall Mall. During his residence at Oxford he made a great number of philosophical experiments, and among the rest invented that admirable instrument the air-pump, which was perfected for him by Dr. Hook, in 1678. But he did not confine his studies to philosophical pursuits, for he applied with as much diligence to the learned languages and theology as though he had intended to make divinity his profession. When the Royal Society was incorporated by charter in 1662, Mr. Boyle was appointed one of the council, but nothing could induce him to accept the office of president. The same year he published his 'Considerations on the Usefulness of Experimental Philosophy,' his 'Experiments upon Colours,' and his 'Considerations on the Style of the Scriptures.' In 1664 he was elected into the Company of the Royal Mines, and the year following published his 'Occasional Reflections upon several Subjects,' which Swift, to his disgrace, ridiculed in his 'Meditation upon a Broomstick.' His character was so highly esteemed at this time that the king, unasked, nominated him to the provostship of Eton College, which, however, he declined. In 1669 appeared his 'Origin of Forms and Qualities according to the Corpuscular Philosophy,' which work was followed by a great number of tracts or practical philosophy, besides his papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society. Mr. Boyle had been for many years a director of the East India Company, to whom he rendered great assistance in procuring their charter, for which he only required that they should endeavour to propagate Christianity in their settlements. Finding his health declining, he resigned his post of governor of the Corporation for Propagating the Gospel in New England; and he even published an advertisement desiring to be excused from receiving a multiplicity of visitors. A board was likewise placed over his door, with an inscription signifying when he might be seen and conversed with. By this means he found time to complete the following works: 'Medicina Hydrostatica;' 'The Christian Virtuoso;' 'Experimenta et Observations Physicæ.' On the 23rd of December, 1691, he lost his beloved sister, Lady Ranelagh, and that day week himself departed this life. Mr. Boyle, in addition to the benefactions already noticed, gave seven hundred pounds for printing an edition of the Irish Bible, a liberal sum towards the Welsh Bible, three hundred pounds to advance the propagation of the Gospel in America, one hundred pounds for the like purpose in the East Indies; and lastly he founded a lecture for the defence of natural and revealed religion. Several of his manuscripts were published after his death, and the whole of his works have been printed in 5 vols. folio and 6 vols. 4to.

BOYLE, ROGER, earl of Orrery. See ORRERY.

BOYLSTON, ZABDIEL, an American physician and medical writer, born 1680; died 1766.

BOYS, EDWARD, a divine, nephew of the dean of Canterbury, mentioned below, was educated at Eton school and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship and proceeded to the degree of B.D. In 1640 he was presented to the rectory of Mautboy, Norfolk. He was a much-admired preacher, a favourite of Hall, bishop of Norwich, and one of Charles the First's chaplains. Died 10 March, 1665 or 1667. A volume of 'Sermons' by him was published 1672, under the editorship of Roger Plynt.

BOYS, JOHN, D.D., dean of Canterbury, was born in Kent 1571, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. In 1597 he was presented to the rectory of Bettishanger, in his native county, to which was afterwards added the neighbouring vicarage of Tilmantstone. Having now acquired a considerable reputation as a preacher, he took his doctor's degree, and was appointed by James I. one of the fellows of Chelsea College. In 1618 he was presented to the rectory of Great Mongeham, Kent, and the year following advanced to the deanery of Canterbury. Died 26 Sept., 1625. His 'Postils' in defence of the Book of Common Prayer, and other works, were published in folio, 1629. With regard to his character as a theologian, it may be mentioned that he gained great applause by turning the Lord's Prayer into the following execration, when he preached at St. Paul's Cross, on the 5th of Nov.: 'Our Pope, which art in Rome, cursed be thy name; perish may thy kingdom; hindered may thy will be as it is in heaven so in earth. Give us this day our cup in the Lord's supper; and remit our moneys which we have given for thy indulgences, as we send them back unto thee; and lead us not into heresy, but free us from misery: for thine is the infernal pitch and sulphur, for ever and ever. Amen.'

BOYS, or BOIS, JOHN, a divine, was born at Nettlestead, Suffolk, 3 Jan., 1560, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was a Greek lecturer many years, and obtained a fellowship. On the death of his father he succeeded him in the rectory of West Stowe in Suffolk, to which, in 1596, was added that of Boxworth in Cambridgeshire. He was one of the translators of the authorized version of the Bible, and assisted Sir Henry Saville in his edition of St. Chrysostom. In 1615 Bishop Andrews gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Ely. Died 14 Jan., 1643.

BOYS, WILLIAM, F.S.A., was the son of Commodore Boys, lieutenant-governor of Greenwich Hospital, and born at Deal, 7 Sept., 1735. He practised as a surgeon at Sandwich, of which town, with the rest of the Cinque Ports and Reculver, he published a history, 4to., 1792. He also printed an affecting narrative written by his father, entitled 'An Account of the Loss of the Luxborough Galley, by Fire, on her Voyage from Jamaica to

BOYSE.

London.' Besides these publications he favoured the world with a tract entitled 'A Collection of the minute and rare Shells discovered in the Sand of the Sea Shore near Sandwich.' To the Society of Antiquaries, he communicated, 'Observations on Kits-Coity house in Kent;' and he assisted Mr. Pennant and Dr. Latham in their researches into natural history. Being appointed surgeon to the sick and wounded seamen, he relinquished his practice at Sandwich, and went to reside at Walmer, till 1799, when he resigned his situation to his son, Dr. Edward Boys. Died 15 March, 1803.

BOYSE, JOSEPH, a dissenting minister, was born at Leeds, Jan., 1659-60, and educated first at Kendal, in Westmoreland, and next at an academy in Stepney. In 1683 he became joint pastor with Dr. Daniel Williams of a congregation at Dublin, where Mr. Boyse afterwards had Mr. Thomas Emlyn for a coadjutor, till a difference arose between them upon the doctrine of the Trinity. The conduct of Mr. Boyse on that occasion subjected him to much severe censure. He died in straitened circumstances in 1728. His works were published the same year in 2 vols. folio.

BOYSE, SAMUEL, only son of the preceding, was born at Dublin in 1708. After receiving the rudiments of education at a private school he was sent to Glasgow, with a view to the ministry; but while there he married imprudently, and thus destroyed the expectations of his father, on whose death he went to Edinburgh. Here he published a small collection of poems, and a translation of the Tablature of Cebes, dedicated to Lady Eglinton, who remunerated him handsomely. He also gained the favour of Lord Stormont, by an elegy on his lady, and through this interest became known to the duchess of Gordon, who procured him a place in a public office which he lost by neglect. After spending what he had acquired by the generosity of his patrons, he came to London with letters of recommendation to the Lord Chancellor King Mr. Pope, and Mr. Murray, afterwards Lord Mansfield; but his manners were such that he soon lost these connections, on which he became an author by profession, and was employed by Cave in writing for the 'Gentleman's Magazine.' In 1740 he published his poem, entitled 'The Deity,' which was praised by Hervey and Fielding. In 1745 he lived at Reading, where he was employed in compiling 'An Historical Review of the Transactions of Europe,' in 2 vols. 8vo., for which he was allowed no more than half a guinea a week. Some hopes were now entertained that his manner of life would be changed; but on his return to London he sank again into his old course of drinking, and died in the utmost wretchedness in Shoe Lane, in May, 1749.

BOZE, CLAUDE GROS DE, a French antiquary, born 28 Jan., 1680; died 10 Sept., 1753. Among his works are the 'Medallic History of Louis XIV.,' 'The History of the Emperor Petrus; and Disquisitions on Medals.

BRABAZON, SIR WILLIAM, lord treasurer and lord chief justice of Ireland, and the ancestor of the earls of Meath, died 1552. An account of him will be found in Hercules Sharp's 'Genealogical History of the Family of Brabazon,' 4to., Paris, 1825.

BRACCIOLINI, POGGIO, was born at Terranuova, in the Florentine territory, 1380. He studied under John of Ravenna, and Manuel Chrysoloras; after which he went to Rome, where Boniface IX. appointed him writer of the apostolic letters. Being at the council of Constance in 1414, he witnessed the trial of Jerome of Prague. Poggio devoted much of his time to the search after MSS., and to him the world is indebted for Quintilian, the Orations of Cicero, Lucretius, part of Plautus, and other remains of antiquity. He resided some time in England with cardinal Beaufort, but when Martin V. ascended the papal throne he was appointed secretary to that pontiff. The troubles which disturbed the ecclesiastical states in 1433 obliged him to retire to Florence, where he was made chancellor of the republic, and one of the presidents of the trading companies, which offices he held till his death, on 30 Oct., 1459. His works, the principal of which is 'The History of Florence,' were printed together at Basle in 1538.

BRACCIOLINI DELL' API, FRANCIS, an Italian poet, secretary to cardinal Barberini, afterwards Urban VIII., was born 1566, at Pistoia, where he died 31 Aug., 1645.

BRACEGIRDLE, JOHN, a poetical writer, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1591-2; M.A. 1595; and B.D. 1602. He is author of a curious MS. preserved in the British Museum, and entitled 'Psychopharmacicon, the Mindes Medicine; or the Phisicke of Philosophie, contained in five bookes, called the Consolation of Philosophie, compiled by Anicius Manlius Torquatus Severinus Boethius, translated into English blank verse (except the metres which are in many different kinds of rhyme). Dedicated to Thomas Sackville, earl of Dorset.'

BRACCELLI, JAMES, an Italian historian and biographer, author of 'De bello inter Hispanos et Genueses;' 'De claris Genuensibus,' etc.; died 1460.

BRACKENBURY, JOSEPH, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (B.A. 1811; M.A. 1819); was chaplain in the Madras establishment 1812-20; chaplain and secretary to the Magdalen hospital, Blackfriars Road, London, 1820; and rector of Quendon, Essex, where he died 31 March, 1864, aged 76. He was author of 'Natale Solum, and other poetical pieces,' 8vo., 1810.

BRACKENRIDGE. See BRACKENRIDGE.

BRACKLEY, THOMAS EGERTON, viscount, lord chancellor of England in the reign of James I. He was the natural son of Sir Richard Egerton, of Ridley, in Cheshire, and was born about 1540. He received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn. In 1581 he was made solicitor-general, and in 1592 attorney-general, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1594 he was appointed master of the rolls, and two years afterwards lord keeper. In 1603 he was made Baron Ellesmere and lord chancellor. He was created viscount Brackley 1616, and died in London 15 March, 1616-17. He was author of 'Speech in the Exchequer Chamber' touching the Postnati, 4to., London, 1609; and 'Certain Observations concerning the Office of Lord Chancellor.'

BRACTON, HENRY DE, an English lawyer, was a native of Devonshire, and bred at Oxford, where he was created doctor of civil law. Applying himself afterwards to the study of the laws of England, he rose to great eminence at the bar, and in 1244 was by King Henry III. made one of the judges itinerant. At present he is chiefly known by his learned work 'De legibus et consuetudinibus

BRADBERRY.

Anglia,' first printed 1569, and reprinted 1640. It is a finished and systematic performance, giving a complete view of the law as it stood at the time the work was composed. Bracton was deservedly looked up to as the first source of legal knowledge, even as late as the days of Sir Edward Coke, who took this author as his guide in all his inquiries into the foundation of our law.

BRADBERRY, DAVID, a dissenting minister, born at Keeth, Yorkshire, 12 Nov., 1735. He commenced his ministerial career at Alnwick, in Northumberland, and then afterwards officiated as minister at Ramsgate, Manchester, and the Assembly Rooms at Kennington. Died 13 Jan., 1803. He wrote 'Tetelestai, or the Final Close. A Poem, etc.' 8vo., Manchester, 1794, and a few hymns.

BRADBURY, THOMAS, a factious dissenting preacher, born at Wakefield 1677. He was educated first under Mr. Peter Naylor, and next at Mr. Jollie's academy at Attercliffe. At the age of eighteen he became a preacher, and in 1707 came to London, where he officiated first at Stepney, then to a congregation in Fetter Lane, and lastly at Daniel Burgess's meeting in New Court, Carey Street. He succeeded Burgess as a wit as well as a divine, and his biographer gravely informs us that 'this pulpit a second time presented a phenomenon as rare as it is beneficial, viz. consecrated to the service of sermons and eternal truth.' After entertaining the public by this species of comic preaching for thirty-two years, he died at Warwick Court, Gray's Inn, 4 Sept., 1759. His works consist of 'Fifty-four sermons,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1762, all of which, except seven, had been printed separately. They are principally of the political kind, and it has been justly remarked of them that 'from the great number of sacred texts applied to the occasion, one would imagine the Bible was only written to confirm, by divine authority, the benefits accruing to this country from the succession of King William III.'

BRADDOCK, EDWARD, after receiving a liberal education at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, entered the army, and rose to the rank of major-general. He was commander of the British forces in the expedition against the French on the river Ohio in 1755, and arrived in Virginia in February of that year. In the spring he marched against Fort Du Quesne, now Pittsburg. He reached the Monongahela on the 8th of July at the head of 1200 men, the baggage having been left behind under the care of Dunbar, to advance the slower marches. On the next day he moved forward to invest the fort, and by disregarding the caution of his provincial officers, who warned him of the danger of surprise in an Indian war, fell into an ambuscade, the result being that he lost nearly one half of his troops, and himself received a mortal wound. All his officers on horseback, except Colonel, afterwards general, Washington, being killed, the army retreated precipitately nearly forty miles, to Dunbar's camp, where general Braddock, who was conveyed thither in a tumbril, expired 13 July, 1755.

BRADDON, LAURENCE, a barrister, who was engaged in industriously collecting evidence to prove that Arthur Capel, earl of Essex, had been murdered in the Tower of London on 13 July, 1683. The tragical end of the earl is an occurrence which has never been satisfactorily cleared up, and is one of those mysterious events which have divided the opinions of historians. The evidence produced by Braddon will be found in a pamphlet entitled 'The Trial of Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke at the King's Bench on Feb. 7, 1684, for a Misdemeanor in suborning witnesses to prove the Earl of Essex was murdered by his keepers,' 1684, reprinted in the 9th volume of Cobbett's 'State Trials.' Braddon was fined £2000, and Speke £1000. Besides the above work, Braddon was author of 'An Enquiry into, and Detection of the barbarous Murder of the late Earl of Essex,' 4to., 1684; 'Essex's Innocency and Honour Vindicated,' 4to., 1690; and 'Bishop Burnet's late History charg'd with great Partiality and Misrepresentations, to make the present and future ages believe that Arthur Earl of Essex, in 1683, murdered himself,' 8vo., London, 1725, reprinted in Cobbett's 'State Trials.' Braddon died 29 Nov., 1724.

BRADFORD, JOHN, an English reformer, was born in or about 1510, in the parish of Manchester, and educated in the grammar school of that town. He entered the service of Sir John Harrington, of Exton, Rutlandshire, who employed him in various confidential matters. During this period of his life he defrauded the crown of a considerable sum of money, which, however, he restored after he adopted strict religious opinions. In 1547 he entered the Inner Temple, intending to study the law, but he soon turned his thoughts to divinity, and became exceedingly devout. In 1548 he became a member of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he prosecuted his studies so successfully that in the following year the university conferred on him the degree of M.A. by special grace. An oft-repeated statement that he was of Queen's College appears to be erroneous. Soon after graduating M.A. he was elected a fellow of Pembroke Hall. He took orders, and was appointed one of the king's six chaplains in ordinary, in which capacity he went about the country preaching at various places. In the reign of Queen Mary he was charged with heresy, and after being imprisoned nearly two years, during which time he steadily refused to recant, was burnt at Smithfield 1 July, 1555. The Parker Society published a collection of all Bradford's works, edited by the Rev. Aubrey Townsend, 2 vols. 8vo., Cambridge, 1848—53.

BRADFORD, JOHN, a Welsh poet, who died 1780. He wrote several moral pieces of great merit, some of which are printed in the 'Eurgrawn,' a Welsh magazine.

BRADFORD, JOHN, was born 1750, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. In the early part of his life he was curate of Frelsham, Berkshire, but he afterwards joined the sect founded by the countess of Huntingdon, who purchased the theatre at Birmingham, and sent him to preach there. He subsequently left the countess's connection, and went to a chapel in Bartholomew Street, Birmingham. In 1797 he removed to Grub Street chapel, London, where he remained till his death, 16 July, 1805. He was author of 'An Address to the Inhabitants of New Brunswick, occasioned by the mission of two ministers, J. James and C. W. Milton, sent out by the Countess of Huntingdon,' 1788; 'The Law of Faith opposed to the Law of Works. In a letter to a friend occasioned by a circular letter published by the elders of several Baptist churches at Aulchester,' 1791; 'A Collection of Hymns, 12mo., London, 1792; an edition of Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress,' with notes, 8vo., 1792; and several single sermons.

BRADFORD, SAMUEL, an English prelate, was born in London 20 Dec., 1652, and educated at St. Paul's School, the Charterhouse, and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He left the university without graduating, and for a time applied himself to the study of medicine, but subsequently turned his attention to divinity and received priest's orders in 1690. The following year he was appointed minister of the church attached to St. Thomas's Hospital, Southwark, and was shortly afterwards chosen lecturer of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, and appointed tutor to the grandsons of archbishop Tillotson. In 1693 he was made rector of St. Mary-le-Bow; and in 1698 appointed chaplain to William III., being continued in that capacity by Queen Anne. When the queen went to Cambridge, 1705, Bradford was created D.D., and in 1716 he was nominated master of Corpus Christi College, a dignity which he retained till his translation to the see of Rochester. In 1710 Dr. Bradford refused the bishopric of St. David's, offered to him on the condition of his vacating his other benefices. He was eventually raised to the see of Carlisle, without that condition, and was consecrated on Whit Sunday, 1718. In June, 1723, he succeeded bishop Atterbury in the see of Rochester and the deanery of Westminster. Died 17 May, 1731. Bishop Bradford had considerable reputation as a preacher, and was a man of learning and amiable manners and temper. He was author of a vindication of himself, bishop Smalridge, and dean Aldrich, from the aspersions of Oldmixon, 1730, and of several charges and single sermons. His Boyle lectures were printed in 1700, and he had a considerable share in the publication of archbishop Tillotson's posthumous sermons.—Alumni Westmon.

BRADFORD, WILLIAM, an eminent American lawyer, one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and afterwards secretary of state, was born 14 Sept., 1755, and died 23 Aug., 1795. He published an Inquiry how far the Punishment of death is necessary in Pennsylvania, 1793.

BRADICK, WALTER, an English merchant, who after having lost everything he possessed in the great earthquake at Lisbon, was received as a pensioner in the Charterhouse of that city, where he died 31 Dec., 1794. He composed a poem entitled 'The Preacher.'

BRADLEY, GEORGE, a journalist, was born at Whitby, Yorkshire, about 1816. After being for a considerable period a reporter on the 'York Herald' he was appointed editor of the 'Sunderland and Durham County Herald,' and about 1848 he became editor and one of the proprietors of the 'Newcastle Guardian.' He resided at Newcastle during the remainder of his life, being greatly respected, and for a considerable period an influential member of the town council. Died 14 Oct., 1803. Mr. Bradley published 'A concise and practical System of Short-hand Writing, with a brief History of the Progress of the Art. Illustrated by sixteen engraved lessons and exercises,' 12mo. London, 1843. The system is a variation of Mavor's.

BRADLEY, JAMES, D.D., an astronomer, was born at Sherborne, Gloucestershire, 1692, and educated at Northleach in the same county, from whence he was admitted a commoner of Balliol

BRADSHAW.

College, Oxford, in 1710. He took his master's degree in 1716; three years afterwards he entered into orders, and was instituted to the vicarage of Bridstow, in Herefordshire, which, with a small sinecure in the diocese of St. David's, was all the church preferment he ever received. In 1721 he became Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford, on which he resigned his livings as incompatible with his academical situation. His observations were constant, and in the course of them he discovered and settled the laws of the aberration of the fixed stars from the progressive motion of light combined with the earth's annual motion, and the mutation of its axis. The first of these effects is called the aberration of the fixed stars, the theory of which he published in 1727, and the latter theory, or that of the mutation of the axis, in 1737. In 1730 he was appointed lecturer of experimental philosophy, which he resigned about two years afterwards. In 1741 he succeeded Dr. Halley as astronomer royal, and at the same time the university of Oxford presented him with the degree of D.D. In 1747 he addressed a letter to the earl of Macclesfield, on the apparent motion of the fixed stars, for which he received the gold medal of the Royal Society. The year following the king granted him £1000 to purchase instruments for the observatory, and he was also offered the living of Greenwich, but refused it, on which he obtained a pension of £250. Died 13 July, 1762. His observations at Greenwich from 1750 to 1762 were published at Oxford, in 1 vol. folio, in 1798; and the remainder are in the possession of the Savilian professor. There are eight of his papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

BRADLEY, RICHARD, F.R.S., a writer on gardening and agriculture, who was chosen professor of botany at Cambridge, 1724; but he led such a dissipated life that measures were being taken to deprive him of the situation when he died 5 Nov., 1732. His principal works are 'A New Improvement of Planting and Gardening,' 1717; 'Philosophical Account of the Works of Nature,' 1721; 'The Gentleman's and Gardener's Kalendar;' 'A General Treatise of Husbandry and Gardening,' 2 vols.; 'Practical Discourses concerning the four elements, as they relate to the growth of Plants;' 'Dictionarium Botanicum,' 1728; 'Historia Plantarum Succulentarum.' His name was also prefixed to a translation of Xenophon's Æconomics.

BRADLEY, THOMAS, M.D., an English physician, born at Worcester in or about 1751. For some years he kept a mathematical school in his native city. He was then a Quaker, and having an inclination to medical studies, he was enabled to follow that pursuit. After taking his doctor's degree at Edinburgh, he settled in Westminster, but being of retired habits, and quitting the society of his friends, his practice became limited, till at length he sunk into obscurity, and died in distress towards the close of 1813. Dr. Bradley was for many years editor of 'The Medical and Physical Journal.'

BRADLEY, WILLIAM, a painter, born at Manchester 16 Jan., 1801; died there 4 July, 1857.

BRADSHAW, GEORGE, the projector of the well-known 'Railway Guides,' died 6 Sept., 1853.

BRADSHAW, HENRY, an English poet, was a native of Chester, and became a Benedictine monk in St. Werberg's monastery in that city. Thence, at riper years, he was sent to Gloucester College, Oxford, where, after he had passed his course in theology among the novices of his order, he returned to his cell at Chester, where he died in 1513. In his elder years he wrote 'De antiquitate et magnificentia Urbis Cestriae;' 'Chronicon;' 'The Life of the glorious Virgin S. Werberg. Also many Miracles that God hath shewed for her,' 4to., London, 1521; and 'The life of Saynt Rade-gunde' (anon.), 4to., London (K. Pinson), n. d.

BRADSHAW, JOHN, the regicide, was born in Derbyshire, 1586. He studied at Gray's Inn, and had so extensive a practice among the Parliamentarians in the Civil War that in 1646 he was appointed one of the commissioners of the Great Seal, and called to the degree of serjeant. But what has given him a name in history is the circumstance of his presiding at the trial of Charles I. Died 11 Oct., 1659. At the Restoration his corpse was hung up at Tyburn, and then buried under the g. flows.

BRADSHAW, WILLIAM, a Puritan divine, was born 1571, at Market-Bosworth, Leicestershire, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. He was appointed tutor to the children of Sir Thomas Lighton, and afterwards obtained a fellowship at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. He then took orders, and preached first as a lecturer at Abington and at Steeple Morden, Cambridge-shire. In 1601 he settled at Chatham, in Kent, but was soon suspended for refusing to subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles. He therefore was obliged to remove, but was afterwards licensed by Overton, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, to preach anywhere in his diocese, and at last, coming to London, was chosen lecturer of Christ Church, Newgate Street. Here, however, he published a treatise against the Ceremonies, which obliged him to quit the city and to retire to Newhall, in his native county. Died 1618. He was author of 'Several Treatises of Worship and Ceremonies;' 'English Puritanism, containing the main opinions of the rigidest sort of those that went by that name in the realm of England;' 'Dissertatio de justificatione;' 'A plaine and pithy Exposition of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians.'

BRADSHAW, WILLIAM, a hack author, translator of 'The Turkish Spy,' flourished about 1704. There is a curious account of him in Dunton's 'Life and Errors.'

BRADSHAW, WILLIAM, an English prelate, born at Abergavenny 10 April, 1671, became fellow of New College, Oxford; prebendary of Canterbury, 1716; dean of Christ Church, 1724; bishop of Bristol, 1724; died 16 Dec., 1732. He was author of two printed sermons.

BRADSTREET, DUDLEY, an adventurer, who styled himself captain, and who was employed as a spy during the rebellion of 1745. He wrote a most amusing volume, entitled, 'The Life and uncommon Adventures of Captain Dudley Bradstreet; being the most genuine and extraordinary, perhaps, ever published,' 8vo., Dublin, 1755.

BRADSTREET, ROBERT, a poet, son of Robert Bradstreet, Esq., was born at Higham, Suffolk, in 1705, or 1706, and educated under the care of the Rev. T. Foster, rector of Halesworth, Suffolk. On 4 June, 1782, he was admitted a pensioner of St. John's College, Cambridge, and became a fellow-commoner of that society, 23 Jan., 1786. The date of his degrees are B.A. 1780; M.A. 1789. He afterwards resided at Bentley Grove, Suffolk, and died at Southampton, 13 May, 1836. Mr. Bradstreet was author of 'The Sabine Farm; into which is interwoven a series of translations, chiefly descriptive of the villa of Horace. A poem, 8vo., London, 1810.

BRADSTREET, Sir SAMUEL, justice of the King's Bench in Ireland, died 5 May, 1701.

BRADWARDINE, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Horthfield in Cheshire, and educated at Merton College, Oxford. He became confessor to Edward III., whom he attended in his expedition to France, and while there was chosen archbishop by the monks of Canterbury; but the king refused then to part with him. Another vacancy occurring soon after, the fraternity again elected him, and Edward complied with their wishes; but he died a few weeks after his consecration, 26 Aug., 1349, and was buried in his cathedral. On account of the depth of his knowledge in divinity, he was called the Profound Doctor; and unquestionably his elaborate work 'De Causa Dei,' written against the Pelagians, justifies his claim to the title. It was edited in 1618 by Sir Henry Saville, in 1 vol., folio. Bradwardine was also a skilful mathematician, and some of his works in that science have been published, as Geometria Speculativa, cum Arithmetici Speculativa, folio, 1495; De Proportionibus, folio; De quadratura circuli, folio. Archbishop Bradwardine appears to be the first among the moderns who composed a work on the local or topical memory. His curious treatise entitled 'Ars Memorativa' is preserved in the Sloane collection in the British Museum, No. 3744. It consists of three pages and a half of small duodecimo size, and treats of places and of images or symbols to be arranged in the places, being evidently an attempt, though a feeble one, to form a system of topical memory according to the plan of the ancients.

BRADY, HUGH, LL.D., a native of Ireland, studied the civil and canon law at Louvaine, and became president of the college of St. Anne in that university. In 1645 he was appointed professor of canon law, and on 23 Oct. in the following year he was created doctor 'utriusque juris.' He was likewise a canon of St. Peter's, at Louvaine. There is a print of him, having underneath it the following distich, which seems to intimate that he published a book of canon law:—

O quantum juris thesaurum, lector, haberes,
Si secret pictor jus dare cuique suum.

BRADY, NICHOLAS, D.D., a divine and poet, was born at Bandon, in the county of Cork, 28 Oct., 1659. From Westminster School he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, but after continuing there four years, he went to Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his degrees in arts, and afterwards was complimented with that of doctor in divinity. Bishop Wettenhal, of Cork, to whom he was chaplain, gave him a prebend in his cathedral; and after the Revolution he became minister of St. Catherine Cree, and lecturer of St. Michael, Wood Street, London. Subsequently he obtained the rectory of Clapham, in Surrey, and the living of Richmond. He was also chaplain to King William. Died 20 May, 1726. He translated the Æneid into English verse, 4 vols. 8vo.; wrote a tragedy called the Innocent Impostor; and published three volumes of Sermons; but is best known by his share in the New Version of Psalms, in conjunction with Tate.

BRADY, PHILIP, an Irish clergyman of the county of Cavan, was a good scholar, and particularly well versed in the language of his country. Many of his epigrams and witty sayings, and some short poems of his composition, are recited by the common people in the counties of Meath and Cavan. He translated into Irish some of the sermons which were published by Richardson in 1711.

BRADY, ROBERT, M.D., a physician and historian, was born in Norfolk, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he was created doctor of physic by royal mandate in 1660, being elected master the same year in pursuance of the same authority. About ten years afterwards he was appointed keeper of the Tower records, and regius professor of physic at Cambridge. In 1679 he wrote a letter to Dr. Sydenham, on the influence of the air, but his most important work was 'An Introduction to the Old English History,' in which he asserted that the constitution of the House of Commons is no older than the 49th of Henry III.; that William the Norman made an absolute conquest of the kingdom; and that the succession to the English throne is hereditary. This performance was followed by a general History of England, the whole making three volumes in folio. Tytrel wrote his history in opposition to Brady, and Hume is said to have been chiefly indebted to the latter for the facts and principles of his celebrated work. In 1681 Dr. Brady was chosen one of the members for Cambridge, and again in the parliament of 1685. He was also physician to James II. Died 19 Aug., 1700. His other works are—an answer to Mr. Petyt on Parliaments, 8vo.; and an historical Treatise of Cities and Boroughs, folio.

BRAHAM, JOHN, a celebrated vocalist, whose real name was Abraham, was born in London, of Jewish parents, 1774. An orphan from his birth, he was entrusted to the care of Leoni, a clever Italian singer, and at the age of ten, made his debut at His Majesty's theatre. His voice had so extensive a range that he was able to execute airs written for Madame Mara. In 1794 he appeared at Bath, in the concerts conducted by Rauzzini, who gave him lessons during three years. In 1796 he sang at Drury Lane, in the opera of 'Mahmoud,' and the next year made his appearance at the Italian Opera. He now determined to visit Italy, with a view to attain perfection in his art. On his way there he remained eight months at Paris, where he gave concerts; and after visiting Florence, Milan, Genoa, Leghorn, Venice, and Trieste, returned to London, where he appeared in 1801 at Covent Garden. From this time till his death, 17 Feb., 1856, he was universally regarded as the greatest of English singers. He wrote the popular air 'The Death of Nelson,' and some operas, among which may be mentioned 'The Cabinet,' 'The English Fleet,' 'Thirty Thousand,' 'The Devil's Bridge,' and 'Zuma.'

BRAHE, TYCHO, was born at Knudsthorp, in Denmark, 14 Dec., 1546, and distinguished himself as an astronomer. He studied at Copenhagen, and so great was his admiration of the skill of astronomers in calculating eclipses to a moment, that he employed all his money in purchasing books on astronomical science, and devoted all his time to mastering their contents. He gained the patronage of the Danish king, at whose request he read some popular lectures on the theory of comets. His knowledge was improved by visiting Switzerland, Italy, and Germany, and he would have moved to Basle, if the king of Denmark had not retained him, by settling on him for life the island of Hven, in the Sound, and building a commodious observatory, which he called Uraniberg, and to which he annexed a pension of 2000 crowns, besides preferment. Thus flattered by his sovereign, and honoured by the visits of the great, especially of James VI. of Scotland, Brahe might be said to live happy. Malice, however, attacked him in his retreat, and he was abandoned by the king. He found, however, an asylum at Prague, under the protection of the emperor, and with a pension of 3000 crowns. Died 24 Oct., 1601. Great as an astronomer and chemist, Brahe was too much given to credulity and astrological presages. The Rhodolphine Tables and the 'Historia Cœlestis' are his best works.

BRAIDWOOD, THOMAS, one of the earliest teachers of the deaf and dumb in Great Britain. He began his useful career at Edinburgh, 1760, and eventually removed his establishment to Hackney, near London, where he continued to instruct the deaf and dumb, and to relieve impediments in the speech, till his death, in 1806.—Nat. Cycl.

BRAILSFORD, JOHN, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1712; M.A. 1717), and after acting as curate at Bloston, Leicestershire, became rector of Kirby, Nottinghamshire. He wrote 'Derby Silk-Mill, Attempted in Miltonic Verse,' folio, Nottingham, 1739.

BRAILSFORD, JOHN, after completing his education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1744; M.A. 1766), was appointed in 1766 to the head mastership of the Free School at Birmingham, which situation he held till his death. He was also vicar of North Wheatley, Nottinghamshire, and chaplain to Lord Middleton. Died 25 Nov., 1775. 'Thirteen Sermons on various Subjects' by him were published in an 8vo. volume at Birmingham the year after his death.

BRAINERD, DAVID, a celebrated missionary among the American Indians, was born in Connecticut April, 1718, and died 9 Oct., 1747. He published an account of his missionary labours.

BRAITHWAITE, JOHN, the constructor of a diving-bell, by means of which, in 1783, he descended into the Royal George, sunk at Spithead, and brought up the sheet anchor and many of the guns. In 1806 he recovered from the Abergavenny East Indiaman, lost off Portland, £75,000 in dollars, the whole of the tin, and other valuables, worth £30,000. Died 1818.

BRAKELONDE, JOCELIN DE. See JOCELIN.

BRAKENRIDGE, WILLIAM, D.D., a divine, who took his doctor's degree at the university of Aberdeen. The degree of M.A. was conferred upon him at Oxford by decree of Convocation 20 March, 1740, and in 1753 he was incorporated B.D. and D.D. as a member of Queen's College. Dr. Brakenridge was a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and librarian of Sion College. On 24 April, 1742, he was collated to the rectory of St. Michael, Bassishaw, London, which living he held till his death, in 1762. He was author of 'Exercitatio Geometrica de Descriptione Linearum Curvarum,' 4to., London, 1733; 'On the Method of constructing a Table on the Probabilities of Life in London,' in Phil. Trans., 1755; 'On the number of people in England,' in Phil. Trans.; 'On the present increase of the People of Great Britain and Ireland,' in Phil. Trans. One of these papers on population elicited from George Bur-nington, governor of North Carolina, 'An Answer to Dr. William Brakenridge's Letter concerning the number of Inhabitants within the London Bills of Mortality. Wherein the Doctor's Letter is inserted, his arguments proved inconclusive, and the number of Inhabitants increasing,' 8vo., London, 1757. Dr. Brakenridge was also author of a paper in the Philosophical Transactions for 1759, 'On the Sections of a Solid, hitherto not considered by Geometers;' and of a volume of pulpit discourses, published under the alliterative title of 'Seventeen Sermons on Several Subjects,' 8vo., London, 1764.

BRAMAH, JOSEPH, an ingenious mechanic, was born at Stanborough, in Yorkshire, 2 April (O.S.), 1749. He received a very common education, and was employed early in life in agricultural occupations, till an incurable lameness in one of his legs compelled him to relinquish that line, and he was bound apprentice to a carpenter. Previous to this he had evinced his mechanical powers and musical turn by making for himself two violoncellos and a violin, which last he formed out of a solid block of wood. Having served out his time in the country, he visited London, and was employed by a cabinet-maker; but in a little time he was enabled to set up for himself, and the invention, or rather improvement of water-closets, proved the foundation of his fortune. After this he undertook the manufacture of pumps and pipes on new principles; but he gained most notice by the fabrication of locks, for the improvement of which he obtained a patent. He next directed his attention to hydraulic machines, and by varying the form of the piston and cylinder, produced a rotative motion, for which also he procured a patent. His next object was the application of the hydrostatic paradox, or the uniform pressure of fluids in every direction as a mechanical agent. For this discovery he took out a patent in 1796; and as one instance of the importance of this new power, there were three hundred trees in Holt forest torn up by it without any other means. In 1807 Mr. Bramah was employed by the Bank of England to construct a machine for more expeditiously printing the numbers and date lines on their notes. This he accomplished in a month, and his practice has ever since been acted upon. For some time prior to his death he was employed in the erection of large machinery on his premises by the side of the Thames, for sawing stones and deals, upon the principle of his hydro-mechanical invention; he had also other plans of equal magnitude, when he was taken off by a severe cold, occasioned by over-exertion, 9 Dec., 1814. He published a Dissertation on the Construction of Locks, 8vo.; and a Letter on the subject of the Cause of Boulton and Watt against Hornblower and Maberley, for an infringement of a patent, 8vo.

BRAMANTE D'URBINO, LAZARUS, an Italian architect, painter, musician, and poet, born 1444; died 1514.

BRAMER, LEONARD, a Dutch painter, born at Delft, 1506.

BRAMHALL, JOHN, an eminent prelate, born at Pontefract, Yorkshire, about 1593. He studied at Sidney College, Cambridge, and after taking his degrees in arts, became chaplain to archbishop Mathews, of York. His first preferments were two prebends, one of York and the other of Ripon. In 1630 he took his doctor's degree, and soon after went to Ireland, where he was employed by lord Wentworth in reforming ecclesiastical abuses, for which he was made bishop of Londonderry in 1634. In 1641 articles of treason were exhibited against him by the puritanical party; but the king, at the request of archbishop Usher, directed all proceedings to cease. During the civil war he resided chiefly abroad; but in 1648 he returned to Ireland, where he narrowly escaped being taken, in consequence of which, finding his life endangered, he effected his escape almost by a miracle, and got back to the continent. At the Restoration he was made archbishop of Armagh, where he died in June, 1663. His works were published in one volume, folio, 1677.

BRAMIS, JOHN, a monk of Thetford, Norfolk, in the fifteenth century, was author of 'Historia Waldei quondam Norfolchiæ et Sudolchiæ regis eximii de Gallis et Anglis verbis in Latinum translata,' MS., CCCC. 329. Some account of this curious work may be found in Wright's 'Essays on Literature, &c.,' i. 96, 99.

BRAMSTON, JAMES, an English poet, was born in or about 1694, being son of Francis Bramston, fourth son of Sir Moundeford Bramston, master in chancery, who was a younger son of Sir John Bramston, chief justice of England. In 1708 he was admitted at Westminster School, whence, in 1713, he was elected to a studentship at Christ Church, Oxford, proceeding B.A. 1717; M.A. 1720. In 1723 he was presented by the university to the rectory of Lugsale, Sussex, and in 1725 he became vicar of Harting, in the same county. Died 16 March, 1743-4. He wrote 'The Art of Politics;' 'The Man of Taste,' reprinted in Dodsley and in Campbell's 'Specimens;' and 'The Crooked Sixpence.' He also has poems in 'Carmina Quadragesimalia,' and in the university collection on the death of Dr. Kadcliffe. Dallaway and Cartwright, in their account of Lugsale, written nearly a century after Mr. Bramston's death, say 'He was a man of original humour, the fame and proofs of whose colloquial wit are still remembered in this part of Sussex.'

BRAMSTON, JAMES YORKE, an English prelate of the Roman church, was appointed vicar-apostolic of the London district 1823, being consecrated on 29 July in that year by the title of bishop of Usula. Died 11 July, 1836.

BRAMSTON, SIR JOHN, an English judge, was born at Maldon 18 May, 1577, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge. He embraced the legal profession, in which he attained great distinction, being made a knight in 1632. He was afterwards advanced to the chief justiceship of the King's Bench, which he held till 1642, when he retired from public life. Died 22 Sept., 1654.

BRAMSTON, SIR JOHN, son of the preceding, was born at Whitechapel Sept., 1611, and, after completing his education at Wadham College, Oxford, embraced the study of the law. He continued to practise at the bar 'as long as the temper of the times would allow, and till the drums and trumpets blew hisgown over his ears.' He then retired to Skreens, in the hundred of Chelmsford. At the coronation of Charles II. he was created a Knight of the Bath. Afterwards he was member of parliament, first for Essex, and afterwards for Maldon. He died at Skreens 4 Feb., 1699-1700. Sir John Bramston's 'Autobiography' was printed by the Camden Society in 1845.

BRANCH.

abbé d'Aulnay, a French writer, author of 'Letters on Cosmography,' &c., died 11 April, 1758.

BRANCH, THOMAS, an English writer, who was living in 1769. He wrote 'Thoughts on Dreaming. Wherein the notion of the sensory, and the opinion that it is shut up from the inspection of the soul in sleep, are examined. Occasioned by an Essay on the phenomenon of Dreaming, in a book [by A. Baxter] entitled an Enquiry into the Nature of the Human Soul, &c.,' 8vo., London, 1738. Also a valuable legal work entitled 'Principia Legis et Æquitatis; being an Alphabetical Collection of above 2000 maxims, principles, or rules, definitions and remarkable sayings in Law and Equity, by T. B.,' 12mo., 1753; second edition, enlarged, 12mo., 1810; fourth edition, with additions, and the Latin maxims and rules translated by J. Richardson, 12mo., London, 1822.

BRAND, JOHN, a divine and antiquary, was born of low parentage at Newcastle-upon-Tyne about 1743. He served his time to a shoemaker, but afterwards obtained learning enough to enter himself of Lincoln College, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree, and having been ordained, was presented by Matthew Ridley, esq., to the curacy of Cramlington, in Newcastle. While at the university he published a poem on 'Illicit Love, written among the ruins of Godstow Nunnery,' 4to., 1775. In 1777 he printed a very curious book, Observations on Popular Antiquities, including Bourne's Antiquitates Vulgares, with copious addenda. This work he continued to enlarge and improve till his death, when a new edition was published in 2 vols. 4to. In 1784 Mr. Brand was presented by the duke of Northumberland to the rectory of St. Mary Hill, London, and the same year he was appointed secretary to the Society of Antiquaries. In 1789 he published 'The History and Antiquities of the Town and County of Newcastle,' 2 vols. 4to. He died suddenly at his apartments in Somerset House 10 Sept., 1806.

BRAND, JOHN, an English divine and political writer, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1769. While there he wrote an essay entitled 'Conscience,' for the Scatonian prize, but did not gain it; however, he published the poem in 1772. In 1797 he was presented to the rectory of St. George, Southwark, with which he held the vicarage of Wickham Skeith, Suffolk, till his death, 23 Dec., 1808. Besides the above piece, he published Observations on the National Debt, &c., 1776; the alteration of the Constitution of the House of Commons, and the inequality of the Land Tax considered, 8vo.; A Defence of the Pamphlet ascribed to John Reeves, esq., entitled 'Thoughts on Government,' 8vo.; An Historical Essay on the Principles of Political Associations, 8vo.; A Determination of the average Depression of the price of Wheat in War, below that of the preceding Peace, 8vo.; A Letter on Bonaparte's Proposals for Peace, 8vo.; A Refutation of the charge brought against the Marquis Wellesley, on account of his conduct to the Nabob of Oude, 8vo.; A Pamphlet vindicating his Rights as Rector of St. George's, which he considered to be infringed by the erection of a chapel for the Philanthropic Institution, 8vo.

BRANDARD, ROBERT, an English engraver, died 7 Jan., 1862, æt. 57.

BRANDON.

BRANDE, AUGUSTUS EYEHARD, M.D., an English medical writer, who died near London 27 Jan., 1834, aged 88. He was author of 'Experiments and Observations on the Angustura Bark,' 8vo., London, 1791; and of 'Observations on a poisonous species of Agamur,' in Med. and Phys. Jour., iii. 41.

BRANDEL, PETER, an historical and portrait painter, born at Prague 1660; died 1739.

BRANDER, GUSTAVUS, a merchant and antiquary, was descended of a Swedish family, and born in London about 1720. He filled the office of director of the Bank, was a trustee of the British Museum, and an active member of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. To the latter he contributed many valuable papers and curiosities. Died 21 Jan., 1787. To the British Museum he gave a capital collection of fossils found in the cliffs near Christ Church, Hampshire, where he had a fine estate. Of these discoveries an account was published by him, entitled 'Fossilia Hantoniensia collecta, et in Museo Britannico deposita a Gustavo Brander,' 1706, 4to. He also communicated to the Royal Society an account of the effect of lightning on the Danish church in Wellesole Square. It should be added, that he was one of the first supporters of the Society of Arts.

BRATHWAYTE or BRAITHWAYTE, RICHARD, an English poet, was born at Warcop, near Appleby, in Westmoreland, in 1588. At the age of sixteen he became a commoner of Oriol College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Cambridge. On leaving this university he became captain of a company, deputy-lieutenant for Westmoreland, and a justice of peace, but died at Appleton, near Richmond, in Yorkshire, 4 May, 1673. He wrote 'The Golden Fleece, with other poems;' 'The Poet's Willow, or the passionate Shepherd;' 'The Prodigal's Tears;' 'Essays upon the five Senses;' 'Nature's Embassy, or the Wild Man's Measures;' 'Tune's curtain drawn: divers poems;' 'The English Gentleman;' 'The English Gentlewoman,' 4to.; 'Discourse of Detraction,' 12mo.; 'The Arcadian Princess,' 8vo.; 'Survey of History, or a Nursery for Gentry,' 4to.; 'A Curtain Lecture,' 12mo.; 'Spiritual Spicery, or tracts of Devotion,' 12mo.; 'Mercurius Britannicus, or the English Intelligencer, a tragi-comedy,' 4to.; 'Itinerarium Barnabii, or Drunken Barnaby's Journal;' 'Time's Treasury,' 4to.; 'Poem to Charles II. on his Restoration,' 4to.; 'Regicidium, a tragi-comedy,' 8vo.; &c.

BRANDI, GIACINTO, an Italian painter, who executed several fine pictures for the churches at Rome, died 1691, aged 58.

BRANDMULLER, GREGORY, an historical painter, born at Basle 1661; died 7 June, 1691.

BRANDMULLER, JAMES, son of John, mentioned below, was author of 'Analysis Typica librorum veteris et novi Testamenti.' Born 1565; died 1 Nov., 1629.

BRANDMULLER, JAMES, son of the preceding, was professor of law at Basle, where he died 1677. He wrote some books on law and Latin poems.

BRANDMULLER, JOHN, a Protestant divine, Hebrew professor at Basle, and author of some theological works, was born 1533, and died 1596.

BRANDOLINI, AURELIO, an Italian poet and divine, born at Florence about 1440; died at Rome 1497.

BRANDON, CHARLES, duke of Suffolk. See SUFFOLK.

BRANDON.

BRANDON, Sir THOMAS, K.G., an English diplomat, died 1509.

BRANDRETH, JOSEPH, M.D., was born at Ormskirk, Lancashire, and educated at Edinburgh. He settled at Liverpool, where he died 1815, æt. 69. He wrote 'Disputatio Med. Inaug. de Febribus Intermittentibus,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1770; 'On the advantages arising from the topical application of Cold Water and Vinegar in Typhus, and on the use of large doses of Opium in certain cases of Insanity,' in Med. Com. xvi. p. 382.

BRANDT, GERARD, an Arminian divine of Amsterdam, was born in that city 1626, and died 11 Oct., 1685. His chief work is 'A History of the Reformation in the Low Countries,' which has been translated into English.

BRANDT, or BRANTZ, JOHN, a learned philologist of Antwerp, born 30 Sept., 1559; died 28 Aug., 1630. He wrote a Life of Philip Rubens, the brother of the painter; valuable Notes on Cæsar's Commentaries, &c.

BRANDT, SEBASTIAN, surnamed Titio, an eminent writer, born at Strasburg, 1454. He studied at Bâle, where he obtained a professorship, but went afterwards in his native place, was made court physician and chancellor of the city. Died 1520. Of his works the most celebrated is that entitled 'The Ship of Fools,' written originally in German, and translated into Latin by Locher, about 1497. An English metrical translation by Alexander Barclay was published in 1509.

BRANDT, SEBASTIAN, or NICHOLAS, a German chemist, who died about 1692. In prosecuting experiments to discover the grand arcana of taking gold, he discovered phosphorus.

BRANCKER, or BRANCKER, THOMAS, a mathematician, was born in Devonshire in 1636, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship which he quitted at the Restoration, and retired to Chester. Some time afterwards he entered into orders, became rector of Tilston, in Cheshire, and master of the free school at Macclesfield. Died 20 Nov., 1676. His works are 'The Doctrine of the Sphere,' published in Latin at Oxford in 1661, 4to.; and an Introduction to Algebra, translated from the Latin of Rhonius, 1668.

BRANTHWAITTE, WILLIAM, D.D., a divine, was first a student of Clare Hall, Cambridge; afterwards one of the fellows of the first appointment of Emmanuel College then newly erected; and afterwards master of Caius College, and vice-chancellor of the university, in which office he died, 15 Feb., 1618-19. He was a person of great reputation as a scholar, and one of the learned men appointed by King James I. to make the new translation of the Bible into English. By his will he bequeathed to Emmanuel College two scholarships of £5 per annum; to Caius he gave estates at Wigganhall St. Peter's, in Norfolk, sufficient for the stipends of five scholars; and to the university library he left many hundreds of books.

BRANTOME, PIERRE DE BOURDEILLES, Seigneur &c. was born in Perigord about 1527. He was descended from a noble and ancient family, and became distinguished at various courts of Europe by his wit and genius. He spent great part of his life in travelling; was baron of Richemont, gentleman of the bedchamber to Charles IX. and Henry III. of France, and chamberlain to the duke of Alençon. Died 5 July, 1614. His Memoirs contain many curious particulars. The most complete edition of them was printed at the Hague, in 15 vols., 12mo., 1740-1.

BRANWHITE, PEREGRINE, a minor poet, was born at Lavenham, Suffolk, 1745, and was brought up to the bombazine trade, which he carried on for some time at Norwich. He was not very successful, however, as he seems to have paid more attention to books than to the shop. He afterwards established a branch of the St. Anne's School (London) at Lavenham, and conducted it personally for some years. A year or two before his death he removed to Hackney, and died in or about 1795, at 32, Primrose Street, Bishopsgate Street, London. He wrote 'An Elegy on the lamented death of Mrs. Hickman, wife of the Rev. Thomas Hickman, of Bildeston, Suffolk, who died Sept. 7, 1789, when but just turned of 19,' 4to., Bury St. Edmunds, 1790; 'Thoughts on the death of Mr. Woodnason's children, destroyed by fire, January 18, 1782' (Anon.); 'Astronomy; or, a description of the Solar System,' Sudbury, 1791; and 'The Lottery; or, the effects of sudden affluence,' MS.

BRASAVOLA, ANTHONY MUSA, an Italian physician and medical writer, professor at Ferrara, his native town, was born 1500, and died 1555.

BRASBRIDGE, THOMAS, a medical writer, was born in Northamptonshire about 1538, and educated at Oxford, being elected to a fellowship at Magdalen College. He resigned his fellowship 1585, having a spiritual cure, or school, or both, conferred on him at or near Banbury, in Oxfordshire, where, as it seems, he practised physic. His works are 'The Poor Man's Jewell, viz., a Treatise of the Pestilence,' 1578 and 1591; and 'Quæstiones in Officia M. T. Ciceronis,' 1615. He was living 1586.

BRAWER, or BROWER, ADRIAN, a Dutch painter, born 1608; died 1640.

BRAY, EDWARD ATKYNS, B.D., F.S.A., a divine, poet and miscellaneous writer, was the son of an attorney, and was born at Tavistock, Devonshire, 18 Dec., 1778. His education was intrusted to the care of a most worthy clergyman who resided at Moreton, in Devonshire, and afterwards at Alplington, near Exeter. He was, from an early age, very fond of poetry, and formed a neat little volume of his juvenile attempts in verse. This was followed by another similar volume, entitled 'Arcadian Idylls.' In 1801 he entered the Middle Temple, and five years afterwards was called to the bar. But the law was not congenial to his tastes, and having resolved to enter the ministry, he was ordained by the bishop of Norwich. Shortly afterwards he obtained the vicarage of Tavistock, which he retained till his death, and in 1822 proceeded B.D. at Cambridge as a ten-year man. Died 17 July, 1857. In addition to the works above referred to, Mr. Bray published 'Discourses from Tracts and Treatises of eminent Divines;' 'Sermons selected from works of the most eminent divines of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries; abridged and rendered in a modern and appropriate style;' 'Select Sermons by the Right Rev. Dr. Thomas Wilson, D.D., Bishop of Sodor and Man, abridged and rendered in a familiar but less colloquial style;' 'Lyric Hymns,' 1820; and 'Discourses on Protestantism, as a fundamental and pervading principle in Church and State.' His 'Poetical Remains, social, sacred, and miscellaneous, selected and edited, with a memoir of the author, by Mrs. Bray,' his widow, were published at London in 1859, 2 vols. 12mo., and a selection from his Sermons appeared in the following year in one 8vo. volume.

BRAY, FRANCIS, a surgeon, born at the New House, in the parish of St. Margaret, in Shropshire, 30 Sept., 1727; died 8 Sept., 1804.

BRAY, SIR REGINALD, K.G., a statesman, was son of Sir Richard Bray, Knight, and took a most active part in the measures which resulted in the overthrow of Richard III. and the accession of Henry VII., whom he accompanied to Bosworth Field, where he was made a knight banneret. At Henry's coronation he was created Knight of the Bath, and was subsequently elected K.G., constituted constable of Oakham Castle, joint chief-justice of all the forests south of Trent, chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, and lord high treasurer. He was high steward of the university of Oxford, and also, it is believed, of the university of Cambridge. In 1497 he was Speaker of the House of Commons. He died 5 Aug., 1503, possessed of great wealth, and was buried in a chantry chapel which he had erected in St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Sir Reginald was a man of singular wisdom, a fervent lover of justice, and a devoted son of the church. He took great delight in architecture, completed St. George's Chapel at Windsor, and is said to have designed Henry the Seventh's Chapel at Westminster.

BRAY, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, born at Marton, Shropshire, in 1656. From the school of Oswestry he removed to Hart Hall, Oxford, where he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then entered into orders. Being recommended to the patronage of Lord Digby, he obtained, in 1690, the rectory of Sheldon, in Warwickshire, on which he took his degree of Master of Arts. Here he composed his Catechetical Lectures, the publication of which induced Bishop Compton to choose him to superintend the church of Maryland, as his commissary. This appointment he accepted; but before his departure he was careful to employ useful missionaries, for whom he procured parochial libraries, as one method of rendering their labours more effectual. This judicious plan was afterwards extended to England and Wales under the authority of an Act of Parliament. Previous to this he took his doctor's degree; and it was by his exertions that the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was founded. Having thus prepared the way for making the office which he held serviceable to the great end in view, he sailed from England in 1699, and remained in America above two years to settle the churches. In 1706 he accepted the rectory of St. Botolph, Aldgate, from which time to his death, on 15 February, 1730, he laboured incessantly in works of piety, particularly in establishing and enlarging his favourite plan of parochial libraries, the association for which is still in a flourishing state. Besides his lectures, he published 'A Martyrology,' in folio; 'Bibliotheca Parochialis,' 2 vols., 8vo.; and other works.

BRAY, THOMAS, D.D., Roman Catholic archbishop of Cashel in Ireland, was author of the following privately-printed work: 'Statuta Synodalia pro unitis Diocesisibus Cassel. et Imelac. lecta, approbata, edita, et promulgata in Synodo Diocesana; cui interluit clemens utriusque Dioceseos, habita prima hebdomada mensis Septembris, anno M.DCCC.X.' 12mo. Dublin, 1813. This rare work contains many interesting documents, and short memoirs of the archbishops of Cashel and the bishops of Emly. The second volume bears the following title: 'Regulations, Instructions, Exhortations, and Prayers, etc., etc., in English and Irish: with the manner of absolving heretics, in Latin and English: for the united dioceses of Cashel and Emly.'

BRAY, WILLIAM, F.S.A., an antiquary, was a solicitor at Shere, in Surrey, where he was born 1736, and died 21 Dec., 1832. He completed and published Manning's History of Surrey, and was the editor of the Memoirs of Evelyn, first printed in 1817.

BRAYBROOKE, RICHARD CORNWALLIS NEVILLE, Lord, was born 17 March, 1820, and died at Audley End, 22 Feb., 1861. He published the 'History of Audley End,' and was the ostensible editor of the 'Diary and Correspondence of Samuel Pepys.' With regard to the latter work, it may be mentioned that Lord Braybrooke was always most anxious to suppress the fact that the chief merit in reference to its publication belonged to the Rev. John Smith, rector of Baldock, Hertfordshire, who, with great care and patience, performed the difficult and tedious task of deciphering the short-hand in which the Diary was written by Pepys. Indeed, in the third edition, published in 1848, Lord Braybrooke makes no allusion whatever to Mr. Smith, or to the circumstances connected with the deciphering of the Diary, but contents himself with saying, 'The history of Pepys's short-hand Diary being well known, the preface has not been reprinted.' This endeavour of his lordship to rob Mr. Smith of the merit which fairly belonged to him cannot be too strongly reprobated.

BRAYLEY, EDWARD WEDLAKE, an antiquary and topographer, was born at Lambeth 1773, and originally apprenticed to an enameller; but subsequently he turned his attention to literary pursuits, and produced in succession a number of useful works, many of which were written in conjunction with John Britton. It will be sufficient to enumerate the following:—'The Beauties of England and Wales,' 25 vols.; 'The History of Surrey,' 5 vols.; 'The History and Antiquities of the Abbey Church of St. Peter, Westminster,' 2 vols.; 'Londiniana, or Reminiscences of the British Metropolis,' 4 vols.; 'A History of the Tower of London; a history and description of enamelling and enamel, in Rees's Cyclopædia; and 'The Graphic Illustrator,' 1832-34. Mr. Brayley, who was for twenty-eight years secretary and librarian to the Russell Institution, died 23 Sept., 1854.

BREA, LODOVICO, of Nizza, a painter, who founded the Ligurian School, died 1513.

BREAKSPERE, NICHOLAS. See ADRIAN IV.

BREARCLIFFE, JOHN, an apothecary of Halifax, died 4 Dec., 1682, aged 63. He made MS. collections relating to the history of Halifax.

BREBEUF, GUILLAUME DE, a French writer, born 1618; died Dec., 1661. He translated Lucan's 'Pharsalia' into French verse, and wrote a Treatise in Defence of the Roman Church.

BREBEUF, JEAN DE, a Jesuit, uncle of the preceding, was born at Bayeux 1593. He was sent as a missionary to Canada 1625, and was put to death by the Iroquois Indians 1649.

BREBIETTE, PIERRE DE, a French painter and engraver, born about 1506; died after 1640.

BRECKBERG. See BERKHEYDEN.

BRECCOURT, GUILLAUME MARCOUREAU DE, a

BREDA.

Dutchman, who went to France and became distinguished there as an actor and dramatic poet. Died 1685.

BREDA, JOHN VAN, a painter of Antwerp, born 1683; died 1750.

BREDA, PETER VAN, an eminent landscape and cattle painter of Antwerp, born 1630; died 1681.

BREDOW, GABRIEL GODFRED, a German historical writer, born at Berlin 1773; died Sept., 1814.

BRENNBERG, BARTHOLOMEW, a painter, born at Utrecht 1620; died 1660.

BREGUET, ABRAHAM LOUIS, an eminent watchmaker of Paris, was born in Switzerland 10 Jan., 1747, and died 17 Sept., 1823.

BREGY, CHARLOTTE SAUMAISE DE CHAZAN, countess DE, an ingenious lady, who was niece of Salmasius, and maid of honour to queen Anne of Austria. She died at Paris 3 April, 1693, aged 74. Her Letters and Poems have been published.

BREISLAK, SCIPIO, a geologist and naturalist, born at Rome 1748; died at Milan 15 Feb., 1826.

BREILINGER, JOHN JAMES, a Swiss divine, born at Zurich 1757; died 1645. He translated the New Testament into German.

BREITINGER, JOHN JAMES, a Swiss writer, was born 1701 at Zurich, where he died 15 Dec., 1776. He was professor of Hebrew, and afterwards of rhetoric and logic, in his native city. He published an edition of the Septuagint, and other works.

BREITKOPF, JOHN GOTTLIEB IMMANUEL, an eminent German printer, born at Leipsic 23 Nov., 1719; died 28 Jan., 1794.

BREMER, FRÉDÉRIQUE, a celebrated Swedish novelist, was born in Abo, in Finland, 1802. After spending several years in Norway and Stockholm as a teacher, she devoted herself entirely to literary pursuits. Her first novels, 'The President's Daughters' and 'The Neighbours,' had a great success, and were translated in most of the European languages. Miss Bremer travelled a good deal, and visited Germany, France, England, America, Italy, and the East. The 'Times' of the 10th Jan., 1866, announced that her death had recently occurred, but did not specify the precise date.

BREMER, SIR JAMES JOHN GORDON, a British admiral, born 1786; died 1850.

BREMOND, FRANÇOIS DE, a member of the Academy of Sciences, was born at Paris 14 Sept., 1713, and died 21 March, 1742. He is chiefly known by his translation of the 'Philosophical Transactions' of the Royal Society of London.

BRENDAN, ST., abbat of Clonfert, died 16 May, 578, æt. 94. He wrote a monastic rule which was long famous in Ireland. His Life, extant in MS. in the Cottonian Library, is filled with apocryphal relations of miracles, and with stories about the saint's seven years navigation to the Fortunate Islands. Another Brendan was abbat of Birr, in the King's County, and died 29 Nov., 572. He wrote some pieces in praise of St. Columba.

BRENNER, HENRY, a learned Swedish orientalist, keeper of the library at Stockholm, was born 1669, and died 1732.

BRENNUS, general of the Gauls, passed at the head of a prodigious army into the East, penetrated into Macedonia, slew Sosthenes, general of that country, ravaged Thessaly and Greece, and advanced towards the temple of Delphos with an intention to plunder it, but he was repulsed and his army routed, on which he put an end to himself about 280 B.C.

BRENNUS, another general of the Gauls, who, after ravaging Lombardy and Tuscany, marched to Rome, which he gave up to be pillaged and burnt. The tribune Sulpitius offered him a thousand pounds weight of gold to spare the capital and to quit the territories of the republic. Brennus threw into the scale which held the weights his sword and helmet, and when the Romans complained of the trick, he haughtily exclaimed 'Woe to the vanquished!' Camillus, irritated at the insolence of the barbarian, put an end to the treaty, gave battle to the Gauls, and constrained them to fly about 388 B.C.

BRENT, SIR NATHANIEL, an English civilian, was born at Little Woolford, in Warwickshire, in 1573, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. About 1615 he married the niece of Archbishop Abbot, who sent him to Venice to procure a copy of Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent, which he published at his return in English and Latin. In 1621 he was elected warden of Merton College, and the archbishop also made him his vicar-general. In 1629 he was knighted, and on the breaking out of the civil wars took part with the Puritans to preserve his estate. Died 6 Nov., 1652.

BRENTIUS, or BRENTZEN, JOHN, a celebrated Lutheran minister, born at Weil, in Swabia, 24 June, 1499. He was canon of Würtemberg, and took priest's orders; but by reading Luther's works, and conversing with him, he was led to adopt the new opinions, though he did not follow Luther in everything. He was afterwards professor of divinity at Tübingen, married, and was appointed counsellor in ordinary to the duke of Würtemberg. Brentius was concerned in all the important transactions of his time, for which religion was either the motive or the pretence, and was head of the Lutheran party after the death of Luther. His wife dying about 1550, he married another, who was young and very handsome, by whom he had twelve children. Died 10 Sept., 1570. A great number of his works remain, printed in eight folio volumes. Brentius added many opinions to those of Luther, and was the first who maintained that since the ascension of Jesus Christ, his natural body is everywhere present. Those who hold this opinion are called Ubiquitarians or Ubiquarians.

BRENTON, EDWARD PELHAM, a captain in the British navy, brother of Sir Jahleel Brenton, was born 18 July, 1774, and died 6 April, 1839. He wrote 'A Naval History of Great Britain from 1783 to 1822,' in 5 vols.; 'A Refutation of the Statements of Admiral Sir George Montague,' 1823; and a biography of Admiral Earl St. Vincent.—Rose.

BRENTON, SIR JAHLEEL, baronet, a gallant British admiral, born 22 Aug., 1770; died 21 April, 1844.

BRÉQUIGNY, LOUIS GEORGE OUDARD FEUDRIX DE, a member of the French Academy, and of the Academy of Inscriptions, was born at Granville, in France, 1716, and died at Paris 3 July, 1795. He published several works of great value relating to the history of his country.

BRERELEY, JOHN. See ANDERTON, JAMES.
BRERELEY, JANE, the daughter of Mr. Thomas Hughes, of Bryn Griffith, in Flintshire, was born 1685. In 1711 she married Mr. Thomas Brereton, only son of Major Brereton, of Cheshire, who soon dissipated his and her fortune, in consequence of which a separation took place. She died at Wrexham, Denbighshire, 7 Aug., 1740. Mrs. Brereton wrote several poems in the Gentleman's Magazine, and after her death a volume of her pieces, in prose and verse, was printed in 8vo. 1744.

BRERETON.

BRERETON, JOHN, was matriculated as a sizar of Caius College, Cambridge, 23 June, 1587, and proceeded B.A. 1592-3. On 25 March, 1602, he embarked for Virginia, with thirty-one others, from Falmouth, in a small bark of Dartmouth called the 'Concord,' under the command of Captain Bartholomew Gosnold. They reached that country on the 14th of May. All the party were left there except twelve (including Captain Gosnold, Mr. Brereton, and Captain Gabriel Archer), who weighed anchor for England on the 18th of June, and arrived before Exmouth 23 July. He was author of 'A Brief and True Relation of the Discovery of the North Part of Virginia; Being a most pleasant, fruitful, and Commodious soil; made this present year 1602, by captain Bartholomew Gosnold, captain Bartholomew Gilbert, and divers other Gentlemen, their associates, by the permission of the honourable knight, Sir Walter Raleigh.' To a second impression, which appeared the same year, was annexed 'A Treatise of M. Edward Hayes, containing important inducements for the planting in those parts, and finding a passage that way to the South Sea and China; with divers instructions of special moment.' This second impression is reprinted in the Collect. of the Massachusetts Hist. Soc., 3d. ser. viii. 83 seq. Purchas, who gives notes from the above work, erroneously ascribes it to James Rosier.

BRERETON, OWEN SALUABURY, the son of Thomas Brereton, Esq., of Cheshire, was born in 1715. He was educated at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge, after which he became a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and was recorder of Liverpool fifty-two years. He was a member of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and also vice-president of the Society of Arts. Died 8 Sept., 1795. He wrote Observations on the Round Towers in Ireland, a Tour through South Wales, an Account of a painted Window in Brereton Church, Cheshire; and some other papers in the Archaeologia.

BRERETON, Lieutenant-General Sir WILLIAM, K.C.B., K.H., died in London 27 July, 1864, aged 76. He wrote several works on the improvement of artillery.

BREREWOOD, EDWARD, an antiquary and mathematician, was born at Chester about 1505, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated in arts (M.A. 1500). Being, however, disappointed at not obtaining a fellowship, he subsequently migrated to St. Mary Hall. In March, 1596, he was chosen the first professor of astronomy in Gresham College, and held that preferment till his death 4 Nov., 1613. His works are 'De ponderibus et pretiis veterum nummorum, eorumque cum recentioribus collatione;' 'Enquiries touching the diversities of languages and religions through the chief parts of the world,' 4to., London, 1614, 1622, 1635; 8vo. 1647, a work which was translated into French and Latin; 'Elementa Logicae;' 'Tractatus quidam logici;' 'Tractatus duo: quorum primus est de meteoris, secundus de oculo;' 'Treatise of the Sabbath,' which, being answered by Nicholas Byfield, led to the publication of a

BRETT.

'Reply' by Brerewood; 'A second treatise of the Sabbath;' 'Commentarii in Ethica Aristotelis;' and 'A declaration of the patriarchal government of the ancient church.'

BREREWOOD, Sir ROBERT, nephew of Edward, mentioned above, received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford, was constituted a justice of the Common Pleas 31 Jan., 1643, and died 8 Sept., 1654, aged 67.

BRETTON, or BRITTON, JOHN, bishop of Hereford, died 1275. He made a large collection of the laws of England from various authors, digested into one volume.

BRETTON, NICHOLAS, a native of Staffordshire, who distinguished himself in the reign of Queen Elizabeth by writing pastorals, sonnets, and madrigals. The late Bishop Percy, who has preserved a song by him, entitled 'The ballad of Phillida and Corydon,' mentions an interlude of his called 'An old Man's Lesson and a young Man's Love,' 4to. Died 22 June, 1624.

BRETTON, RAIMOND, a French Dominican friar, who passed the greater part of his life as a missionary in the West Indies. Born 3 Sept., 1609; died 8 Jan., 1679. He wrote a Grammar and Dictionary of the Caribbean language.

BRETTONNEAU, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French Jesuit preacher, born at Tours 31 Dec., 1660; died 29 May, 1741. His Sermons fill 7 vols. 12mo.

BRETTONNIER, BARTHÉLEMI JOSEPH, advocate of the Parliament of Paris and a lawyer of eminence, was born 1656, and died 21 April, 1722. He wrote an esteemed work entitled 'Recueil des principales questions de droit qui se jugent dans les différents tribunaux du royaume.'

BRETSCHNEIDER, HENRY GODFREY DE, a German traveller and miscellaneous writer, born at Gera 6 May, 1739; died 1 Nov., 1810.

BRETT, ARTHUR, a poetical writer, was educated at Westminster School, whence he removed in 1653 to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1656; M.A. 1659). He afterwards became vicar of Market Lavington, Wiltshire, and died in London in a state of extreme poverty about 1677. He published a poem on the Restoration; a lamentation on the death of the duke of Gloucester, 1665; Patientia Victrix, or the Book of Job, in lyric verse, 1661; and an essay on poetry.

BRETT, JOHN, a naval officer who commanded the 'Grampus' sloop, from which he was promoted, with the rank of captain, to the 'Roebuck' in 1741. The next year he had the 'Anglesea,' and in 1744 the 'Sunderland,' of sixty guns, with which he captured a French frigate laden with specie. After much service he commanded the 'St. George,' of ninety guns; but being passed over in a promotion of flag-officers, he quitted the service in disgust, and died in London in 1785. He translated from the Spanish Frejoo's Discourses and Essays, in 3 vols. 8vo.

BRETT, JOHN WATKINS, the projector of submarine telegraphs, died 3 Dec., 1863.

BRETT, Sir PIERCY, Admiral of the blue, was born in 1709. He served as lieutenant in the 'Gloucester,' one of the squadron ordered into the South Seas with Commodore Anson, who appointed him to his own ship, the 'Centurion,' and confided to him the attack on Paia, which service he performed with equal promptitude and skill. On the capture of the 'Manilla' galleon, Mr. Brett was appointed to command the 'Centurion' under Anson, who thought himself authorized to make that nomination. The Lords of the Admiralty, however, refused to confirm it, till the spirited commander declared that he would quit the service if Mr. Brett's rank was not allowed, on which their lordships yielded. After several important actions he received the honour of Knighthood from George II.; and in 1761 he had the good fortune to share as a flag-officer in the capture of the rich Spanish register ship, the 'Hermione.' In 1766 he was appointed one of the lords of the Admiralty, which office he held till 1770. He died at Beckenham, in Kent, 13 Oct., 1781.

BRETT.

BRETT, RICHARD, a divine, born in London 1661, and educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, where he took one degree in arts, and was then chosen fellow of Lincoln College. In 1695, being then B.D., he became rector of Quainton, in Berkshire, and in 1694 was appointed one of the translators of the Bible. He was also nominated a fellow of Chelsea College. He died at Quainton 15 April, 1637. His works are: 'Vitæ sanctorum Evangelist. Johannis et Lucæ, a Simeone Metaphraste concinnatæ;' 'Agatharchidis et Memnonis Historicorum quæ supersant omnia;' 'Iconum Sacrarum decas in quæ subjectis Typis compluscula sanæ doctrinæ capita cruantur.'

BRETT, THOMAS, LL.D., an eminent divine, was born at Bettishanger, in Kent, 3 Sept., 1667. After going through his grammatical studies, he went to Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took his first degree, and then removed to Corpus Christi College in 1689, and the same year proceeded bachelor of civil law. In 1690 he was ordained, and the next year obtained the lectureship of Kingston; but in 1696 he went to reside with his mother at Spring Grove, the family seat, where he took upon him the cure of Great Chart. Here he married the same year, and soon after took his doctor's degree in civil law. In 1703 he was presented to the rectory of Bettishanger, and about two years afterwards Archbishop Tenison gave him also the living of Rucking. At length Dr. Brett, who had hitherto complied with the oaths, began to have his scruples, and in 1715 he joined in communion with the Nonjurors, on which occasion he resigned his livings. He then retired to his house at Spring Grove, where he employed himself in writing controversial tracts till his death 5 March, 1743-4. He published several pieces on high church principles with great ability; also a chronological Essay on the sacred History; an Essay on the various English translations of the Bible; the Life of Mr. John Johnson; and other works.

BRETtingham, MATTHEW, an English architect, who was employed in the erection of the palatial mansion at Holkham, Norfolk, by Thomas Coke, the first earl of Leicester of that name, died at Norwich 19 Aug., 1769, aged 70.

BRETtingham, MATTHEW, son of the preceding, attained some distinction as an artist. He died 18 March, 1803, aged 78.

BREUGHEL, JOHN, called, from his favourite dress, Felvet Breughel, was the son of Peter Breughel the elder, and was born at Brussels about 1565. He at first painted flowers with admirable skill, but afterwards proceeded to landscapes and views of seaports, in which he introduced small figures most correctly delineated. Died about 1642.

BREUGHEL, PETER, called The Old, to distinguish him from his son, was born at Breughel, a village near Breda, 1510. He studied under Peter

BREWER.

Cock, whose daughter he married. Died at Brussels 1570. He excelled in landscapes, humorous subjects, the marches of armies, sports, and drunken scenes.

BREUGHEL, PETER, the younger, called Hellish Breughel from the peculiarity of his taste. He was son of the preceding, and was born at Brussels 1567. He delighted in painting supernatural scenes of the most horrible nature. Died 1625.

BREULIUS, or DU BREUIL, JACQUES, a French antiquary, was a member of the Benedictine order. He published a valuable book on the Antiquities of Paris, and edited the works of several ecclesiastical writers. Born 17 Sept., 1528; died 7 July, 1614.

BREVAL, JOHN DURANT DE, an English writer, was the son of Dr. Breval, prebendary of Westminster. He received his education at Westminster school, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, 1697, being chosen a fellow of that society 1702. He was expelled from his fellowship under circumstances which reflect great discredit on the master, Dr. Bentley. Being now thrown entirely upon his own resources, he served at first as a volunteer with the army in Flanders, and was afterwards employed by the duke of Marlborough in negotiations with several German princes. He was peculiarly fitted for such a task, on account of his great abilities and learning. When the war was ended he travelled over almost the whole of Europe with Lord Malpas, and on his return established his fame in London as a literary character by the production of many works. Died at Paris Jan., 1738-9. He published Travels, 4 vols. folio; 'History of the House of Nassau;' 'The Hoop Petticoat,' a poem; 'The Art of Dress,' a poem; 'M'Dermot, or the Irish fortune-hunter;' 'Calpe, or Gibraltar,' a poem. He was also the author of some dramatic pieces, particularly a farce called 'The Confederates,' for which Pope gave him a place in his Dunciad.—Al. West.

BREVINT, DANIEL, D.D., a divine, was born in the Isle of Jersey in 1616, and educated at Saumur, in France, where he took his degree of master of arts in 1634. Four years afterwards he was incorporated in the same at Oxford, and at the same time nominated to a Jersey fellowship in Jesus College. In the Rebellion he was rejected by the parliamentary visitors, on which he fled to Normandy, and became minister of a Protestant congregation. He was also chaplain to the lady of Marshal Turenne, and one of the divines employed to bring about a reunion of the two churches, though the design never took effect. At the Restoration he was preferred to a prebend of Durham, on which he took his doctor's degree at Oxford. In 1681 he was advanced to the deanery of Lincoln, where he died 5 May, 1695, and was buried in the cathedral. Dean Brevint published 'Missale Romanum, or the depth and mystery of the Roman Mass;' 'The Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice;' 'Saul and Samuel at Endor, or new Ways of Salvation;' 'Ecclesiæ Primitivæ Sacramentum et Sacrificium;' and other works, mostly against the Catholic religion.

BREWER, ANTHONY, a dramatic writer of the reign of King James I., appears to have been held in high estimation by the wits of that time; but there are many disputes as to his works, and no information concerning his life. The various dramatic annalists assign him from one to six plays.

BREWER.

The controversy seems of little consequence, unless that it gave rise to a story of Oliver Cromwell's having acted a part in one of his supposed plays, entitled 'Lingua'—the part of one ambitious for a crown—and that his ambition was first excited by personating this character. The story, however, seems as doubtful as the author of the play.

BREWER, JEHODA, a dissenting minister, born in Monmouthshire 1751 or 1752. He commenced preaching when in his twenty-second year, and settled in 1795 at the Independent Chapel in Livery Street, Birmingham. A large chapel was in course of erection for him when he died 24 Aug., 1817. He was author of the admired hymn beginning 'Hail, Sov'reign Love, that first began!'

BREWER, JOHN, D.D., an English Benedictine, was appointed priest at Bath 1776, where he built a new church, which was to have been opened 11 June, 1780. On the 9th of that month, however, a detachment of the 'No Popery' rioters from London utterly demolished it, and Dr. Brewer did not elude their search without considerable difficulty. In 1781 he left Bath for Lancashire, and from that time resided chiefly at Woolton near Liverpool. Died 18 April, 1822. He published the second edition of Hooke's 'Religionis Naturalis et Revelatæ Principia,' 3 vols., 1774.

BREWER, SAMUEL, a botanist, was a native of Trowbridge, in Wiltshire, where he had an estate, and was engaged in the woollen manufacture. He accompanied Dillenius in his botanical excursions in 1726, after which he remained some time in Wales to collect the Cryptogamia. In 1728 he settled at Bradford, in Yorkshire, where he employed himself on a work to be entitled 'The Botanical Guide;' but it was never printed. He was living in 1742.

BREYDEL, CHARLES, a painter, surnamed The Chevalier, was born at Antwerp 1677, and died 4 Nov., 1744.

BREYDEL, FRANCIS, brother of the preceding, was born at Antwerp 8 Sept., 1699. He painted portraits, conversations, assemblies, and carnivals, in a very fine style. After living in great reputation for some years at the court of Hesse-Cassel, he came to London, where he met with equal encouragement. He died at Antwerp 24 Nov., 1750.

BRIAN BOROIMHE, a celebrated Irish monarch, born 926; died 23 April, 1014.

BRIANT. See BRYAN.

BRIANT, ALEXANDER, an English jesuit, was a native of Dorsetshire, and studied for a while in Hart Hall, Oxford, but not liking the religion of the times, he left both the university and the kingdom, and went over to the English College at Douay 1576. Here and at Rheims he prosecuted his studies, and being ordained priest, was sent back upon the English mission 1579. He was apprehended in 1581; and, after being cruelly tortured, was hanged, disembowelled, and quartered at Tyburn, on the 1st of Dec. in that year, together with the famous jesuit Father Campian, and Ralph Sherwine, a seminary priest.

BRICONNET, GUILLAUME, a French cardinal, born 1445; died 14 Nov., 1514. He was in favour with Charles VIII. and Louis XII., and distinguished himself in the ministry. It was chiefly by his persuasion that Charles undertook the conquest of the kingdom of Naples. Briconnet signalled himself also at the council of Pisa, against Julius II. He married before taking orders, and had two sons:

BRIDGES.

Guillaume, who became bishop of Meaux, and died 24 Jan., 1534; and Denis, who obtained the see of St. Malo, and died 1536.

BRIDAINE, JACQUES, a French itinerant preacher of great celebrity, born 21 March, 1701; died 22 Dec., 1767. His 'Cantiques Spirituels' had been printed no fewer than 46 times.

BRIDGE, BEWICK, B.D., F.R.S., a native of Linton, Cambridgeshire, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, of which society he became a fellow. After holding for some years the mathematical professorship at Haileybury College, near Hertford, he was, in 1816, presented to the vicarage of Cherrinton, in his native county, where he died 15 May, 1833, aged 66. He published 'Mathematical Lectures,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1810-11; 'An Introduction to the Study of the Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1813; 'A Treatise on Mechanics, intended as an introduction to the study of Natural Philosophy,' 8vo., London, 1814.

BRIDGE, WILLIAM, a puritan divine, born 1600. He was a fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree, and afterwards settled as a minister at Norwich, till he was silenced for nonconformity in 1637. Thereupon he retired to Rotterdam, where he was elected pastor of a congregational church. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion he returned to England, and was chosen a member of the Assembly of Divines. He had also the living of Great Yarmouth, from which, however, he was ejected after the Restoration. Died 12 March, 1670. He was author of twenty-one treatises, printed in 2 vols. 4to., 1657; Sermons before the Parliament, &c.

BRIDGEMAN, HENRY, third son of the bishop of Chester, was born in Northamptonshire about 1613, and received his academical education at Oxford. At the Restoration he was made dean of Chester, and in 1671 was advanced to the bishopric, which he held, together with his deanery, until his death on 15 May, 1682.

BRIDGEMAN, JOHN, a native of Exeter, was educated at Cambridge, where he was master of Magdalen College. He was chaplain to James I., who gave him the rectory of Wigan, Lancashire, and made him bishop of Chester 1618. He was stripped of his honours in the civil wars, and died at Morton, in Cheshire, 1652.

BRIDGEMAN, SIR ORLANDO, son of the bishop of Chester, received his education at Cambridge. He took his B.A. degree as a member of Queen's College, but migrated to Magdalen before taking his degree of M.A. Afterwards he went to the bar, but made no figure till the Restoration, when he was advanced to the post of chief baron of the exchequer, in which capacity he presided at the trials of the regicides. He was next made chief justice of the common pleas, and in 1607 succeeded Lord Clarendon, with the title only of keeper of the great seal. In 1672 he was deprived of his office, and spent the remainder of his life in obscurity. As a legal writer he is known by 'Conveyances;' being select precedents of deeds and instruments concerning the most considerable estates in England. Died 25 June, 1674.

BRIDGES, JOHN, F.R.S., an English antiquary, born at Binfield, Berks, about 1600, was bred to the law, and ultimately became a bencher of Lincoln's Inn. In 1695 he was appointed solicitor of the customs; in 1711 commissioner of the same; and in 1715 cashier of excise. He chiefly resided on his estate of Barton Seagrave, Northamptonshire. Died 30 July, 1724. He made very extensive MS. collections for a history of Northamptonshire. These form the basis of the 'History of Northamptonshire,' published by Peter Whalley, 2 vols. folio, 1793-1791.

BRIDGES, NOAH, LL.B., of Balliol College, Oxford, was clerk of the parliament which assembled in that city in 1643 and 1644, being esteemed a most faithful subject of Charles I. He was author of 'Vulgar Arithmetique, explaining the secrets of the Art after a more exact and easier way than ever, to which are added variety of choyce, and usefull Questions with their Answers,' 12mo., London [1653]; 'Stenographic and Cryptographic; or the Arts of Short and Secret Writing,' 12mo., 1694; and 'Lux Mercatoria: Arithmetical natural and decimal, digested into a more easie and exact Method for Resolving the most practical and usefull Questions that have been yet published,' 8vo., London, 1691.

BRIDGET, or BRIDE, ST., a holy Irish virgin, was born at Fochard, in Ulster, and received the religious veil in her youth from the hands of St. Mel, nephew and disciple of St. Patrick. She built herself a cell under a large oak, called Kill-dara, or 'cell of the oak'; living, as her name implies, the bright shining light of the country by her virtues. She rejoined soon after by several of her own sex, they formed themselves into a religious community, which branched out into several other nunneries throughout Ireland, all of which acknowledged her for their mother and foundress, as in effect she was of all in the kingdom. She flourished in the beginning of the sixth century, and is commemorated on Feb. 1.

BRIDGEWATER, FRANCIS EGERTON, third duke of, was born 1736, being fifth son of the first duke. He succeeded his brother 1748, and distinguished himself by the plans, which he carried into effect, for the improvement of his estates in Lancashire and Cheshire. After immense expense and much opposition, he had the satisfaction of opening his first great canal in 1760; and in four years more he extended the navigation to the Mersey. Died 1803.

BRIDGEWATER, FRANCIS HENRY EGERTON, eighth earl of, was the younger of the two sons of John, bishop of Durham, and was born 11 Nov., 1750. He was educated at Eton School and All Souls College, Oxford; and having taken orders, became a prebendary of Durham, and rector of the parishes of Middle and Whitechurch, Shropshire. On the death of his brother, in 1823, he succeeded to the title. For many years previous to his death he resided at Paris, where his singularities were a general topic for conversation. He bid, at the time of his death, his house nearly filled with dogs and cats, which he had picked up at different places. Of the fifteen dogs which he kept, two were admitted to the honours of his table, and the whole of them were frequently dressed up in clothes like human beings. Sometimes a fine carriage, containing half-a-dozen of them, was seen in the streets, drawn by four horses, and accompanied by two footmen. The earl died at Paris in April, 1829. He published an edition of the Hippolytus of Euripides, 1796; 'A Fragment of an Ode of Sappho from Longinus; also an Ode of Sappho, from Dionysius Halicarnassus; a Life of Lord Chancellor Egerton; and 'A Letter to the Parisians and the French Nation upon Inland Navigation; consisting of a defence of the public character of His Grace Francis Egerton, late Duke of Bridgewater, including notices and anecdotes concerning Mr. James Brindley,' 1819-20. His lordship is chiefly remembered in connection with the 'Bridgewater Treatises.' By his will he left £8,000 to be given to eight persons, appointed by the president of the Royal Society, each of whom should write an essay on the power, wisdom, and goodness of God as manifested in the creation. The treatises were written by Sir Charles Bell, Drs. T. Chalmers, John Kidd, William Buckland, William Prout, J. M. Roget, and the Revs. William Whewell and William Kirby, and were published in 1834-37.

BRIDGEWATER, JOHN EGERTON, third earl of, was created a K.B. at the coronation of Charles II., and represented Buckinghamshire in James II.'s parliament. In 1686 he succeeded to the title on the death of his father, and assisted in placing on the throne King William and Queen Mary, who made him of their privy council, lord-lieutenant of Buckinghamshire, and first commissioner of trade. After Queen Mary's death he was constituted first commissioner for executing the office of lord high admiral of England, and one of the lords justices during the king's absence from the realm. He died 19 March, 1700-1, in his fifty-fifth year.

BRIDGEWATER, JOHN, or, as he calls himself in his published works, Aquepontanus, was a native of Yorkshire, being descended from a family of good account in Somersetshire. He became a student in Hart Hall, Oxford, and from thence removed to Brasenose College, where he graduated M.A. 1556, and about the same time received the order of priesthood. In 1562 he was collated to the rectory of Wotton-Courtney, Somersetshire, and in 1563 chosen rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1570 he was admitted master of the hospital of St. Catharine, near Bedminster, and in 1572 collated to a prebend in the church of Wells. Being secretly inclined to the Catholic religion, he resigned the rectorship of Lincoln College 1574; and, taking with him certain young scholars, left all his preferments, acquaintances, and relations, and went to Rheims, where it is said he joined the society of Jesus. Afterwards he travelled to Rome, and thence to Germany. He was living at Treves in 1594, but when and where he died is unknown. His works are 'Concertatio Ecclesie Catholicae in Anglia adversus Calvino-Papistas et Puritanos, sub Elizabetha Regina,' 4to., Treves, 1594. This valuable historical work, which gives an elaborate and accurate account of the persecution of the Catholics under Queen Elizabeth, was originally published 1583, by John Gibbons, S.J., and John Fenn. Bridgewater made many additions to it. He also published 'Confutatio virulentae disputationis Theologicae, in qua Georgius Sohn, professor Academicus Heidelbergensis conatus est docere, Pontificem Romanum esse Antichristum & Prophetis et Apostolis praedictum,' 4to., Treves, 1589.

BRIDLINGTON, ST. JOHN DE, a native of Yorkshire, after studying at Oxford, became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustine, in the monastery of Bridlington, in his native county, being eventually advanced to the office of prior. Died 10 Oct., 1370, aet. 60. He wrote 'Carmina Vaticinalia,' 'Homeliae,' and 'Super Psalterium cum Cantica, Symbolo Athanasii, et Oratione Dominica.'

BRIDPORT.

BRIDPORT, ALEXANDER HOOD, viscount, was, like his brother, Samuel Viscount Hood, a brave and successful admiral. He had a considerable share in the great naval engagement of Lord Howe, 1 June, 1794, and in the following year signally defeated the French fleet off L'Orient. He was appointed to the command of the Channel fleet 1796; created Viscount Bridport 1801; and died at Bath 3 May, 1814, æt. 87.

BRIE, GERMAIN DE, or Brixius, a French ecclesiastic, was born at Auxerre. In 1512 he was secretary to the queen, and made archdeacon of Albi, but afterwards he obtained a canonry of Paris, where he also was almoner to the king. Died 1538. De Brie was the friend of Rabelais, and the antagonist of Sir Thomas Moore, whom he annoyed by a poem called 'Antimorus.' He also published an edition of Longolius, 'Perduellionis rei defensionis duæ,' and other works.

BRIE, THEODORE DE, an engraver, was a native of Liege, but spent most of his life at Frankfurt. His capital work is 'Descriptio Indiæ Orientalis et Occidentalis,' in nineteen parts, usually bound in five folio volumes. Died 1598. His sons, Theodore and Israel, were also engravers.

BRIENNE, JOHN DE, was made king of Jerusalem 1210, but resigned in favour of his son-in-law, the Emperor Frederick II. He afterwards niled the throne of Constantinople, where he repelled the Greeks and Bulgarians. Died 23 March, 1237.

BRIENNE, WALTER DE, a native of Champagne, distinguished at the siege of Acre against the Saracens. He was afterwards king of Sicily and duke of Apulia, and was killed in 1205, in defending the rights of his wife, Maria Alberic, by whom he obtained his dukedom. His son and successor, surnamed The Great, distinguished himself also against the Saracens, by whom he was taken prisoner, and cruelly put to death 1251.

BRIERLY, ROGER, an English divine, founder of a sect known as 'Brierlists' and 'Grindletonians,' was born at Marland, near Rochdale, and in all probability educated in the grammar-school there. He became minister of the gospel at Grindleton in Craven, and on account of his opinions was summoned before the High Commission at York, where he was imprisoned for a time, though he was ultimately discharged, leave being given him to exercise his ministry as formerly. He was incumbent of Burnley, Lancashire, for a few years, and died there 1637. His sermons and poems were published by J. C., under the whimsical title of 'A Bundle of Soul-convincing, Directing, and Comforting Truths: clearly deduced from diverse select Texts of holy Scripture, and practically improven both for Conviction and Consolation: Being a brief summary of several Sermons preached at large by that faithful and pious Servant of Jesus Christ, Mr. Rodger Brierley, Minister of the Gospel at Grindleton in Craven,' 12mo., 1677.

BRIET, PHILIPPE, a French jesuit, born 1601; died 9 Dec., 1668. He wrote 'Paralella Geographiæ Veteris et Novæ' and other learned works.

BRIGGS, HENRY, a distinguished mathematician, was born at Warleywood, in the parish of Halifax, Yorkshire, in or about 1556, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1581; M.A. 1585; fellow 1588). He devoted himself chiefly to the study of the mathematics, and in 1596 was chosen the first professor of Geometry at Gresham College, then recently founded. This post he resigned in 1620, on being appointed Savilian professor at Oxford. Died 26 Jan., 1630-31. He was the first improver of logarithms after Napier, the original inventor, and whom he visited in Scotland; and in 1624 he published a work of stupendous labour entitled 'Arithmetica Logarithmica,' containing logarithms of 30,000 natural numbers. He also wrote some other valuable books on mathematical subjects.

BRIGGS, HENRY PERRONET, R.A., an English historical and portrait painter, died in London 18 Jan., 1844, aged 51.

BRIGGS, JOHN, a poet, journalist, and miscellaneous writer, born near the village of Cartmel, North Lancashire, 25 Dec., 1788; died 21 Nov., 1824. He edited the 'Westmorland Gazette' and the 'Lonsdale Magazine,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1822; and published 'Poems,' Ulverston, 1818; and a 'Life of Dr. Garnet.' His 'Remains' were published in 1825 for the benefit of his widow and children.

BRIGGS, JOHN, an English prelate of the Roman communion, was consecrated bishop of Trachi, and made vicar apostolic of the Yorkshire district 20 June, 1833. On the establishment of the Catholic hierarchy by Pope Pius IX., in 1850, Dr. Briggs was appointed the first bishop of Beverley. He resigned his see 7 Nov., 1860, and died 2 Jan., 1861.

BRIGGS, SIR JOHN THOMAS, was born in London, 1781, and became commissioner of the victualling board, and afterwards accountant-general of the navy. He received the honour of knighthood 1851, and died at Brighton 3 Feb., 1865. Sir John wrote several pamphlets on naval administration.

BRIGGS, WILLIAM, M.D., a celebrated oculist, was born at Norwich about 1650, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow 1668. After studying anatomy under Viuessens, at Montpellier, he returned to England, and in 1676 published his 'Ophthalmographia.' The year following he took his doctor's degree, and was soon afterwards admitted a fellow of the college of physicians. In 1683 he was appointed physician to St. Thomas's Hospital. He was also physician in ordinary to the king; and died at Town Malling, in Kent, 4 Sept., 1704. He published 'A Theory of Vision' in Latin and English; some papers in the Philosophical Transactions; and left in MS. two treatises, one 'De usu partium oculi,' and the other 'De ejusdem Affectibus.'

BRIGHAM, NICHOLAS, a native of Oxfordshire, was educated in the university of Oxford. 'When he continued in the university, and afterwards in one of the inns of court, he exercised his muse much in poetry, and took great delight in the works of Geoffrey Chaucer, for whose memory he had so great a respect that he removed his bones into the south cross isle or transept of St. Peter's Church, in Westminster, in the year 1566.' Brigham died in Dec., 1559, having written 'De venationibus rerum memorabilium,' which was made use of by Bishop Bale; 'Memoirs by way of Diary, in 12 Books;' and 'Miscellaneous Poems.' None of these works are extant.

BRIGHT, TIMOTHY, M.D., an English writer, and the inventor of the earliest modern system of stenography. He received his education at Cambridge, and his name occurs as sub-sizar of Trinity College in the list presented to Queen Elizabeth ca berysit to the university in Aug. 1564; but a careful search for his matriculation has not been successful. He graduated B.A. 1567-8; M.B. 1574; M.L. 1575; and M.D. 1579. He seems to have afterwards exchanged the practice of medicine for that of divinity, being collated, in 1591, to the rectory of Methley, Yorkshire. Died 1615. Dr. Erecht wrote 'A Treatise of Melancholy,' 12mo., 1580, which probably suggested to Burton the plan of his famous 'Anatomy of Melancholy'; 'De Dyscrasia Corporis Humani'; 'Hygiene, seu de Sanitate tuenda, Medicinæ pars prima'; 'Therapeutica, hoc est de Sanitate restituenda, Medicinæ pars altera'; and an abridgment of Fox's Acts and Monuments. But his claim to remembrance by posterity is mainly founded upon a work of extreme rarity, entitled 'Characterie; An Art of Short, Swift, and Secret Writing, by Character,' 12mo., London, 1588. This is the first treatise ever published on the art of short-hand writing. Dr. Bright imitated and improved upon the 'Notæ Tironianæ' of the ancients, and produced a stenographic system consisting of a number of arbitrary signs, each representing a word. The merit of inventing the first system of short-hand having an alphabet for its basis belongs to John Willis, B.D., who, like Bright, was a Cambridge man.

BRIGHTLEY, CHARLES, a printer, at Bungay, Suffolk, where he carried on a considerable business, died at Stamford 6 April, 1821, aged 59. He wrote 'An Account of the method of founding Stereotype, as it is successfully practised by Mr. Charles Brightley, of Bungay, Suffolk,' London, 1805.

BRIGHTMAN, THOMAS, an English divine, was born at Nottingham, in or about 1562, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow 1584. He graduated B.A. 1591; M.A. 1584; and B.D. 1591. In Queen's College he had frequent discussions concerning church ceremonies with George Meriton, a fellow of that society, and ultimately dean of York. Sir John Osborne conferred upon him, in or about 1602, on the recommendation of Dr. Whitaker, the rectory of Hawnes, in Bedfordshire, giving him also the profits of the benefice for the two preceding years. On 24 Aug., 1607, as he was riding in a coach with Sir John, he fainted, and being taken out of the carriage, immediately expired. Mr. Brightman acquired celebrity as a preacher, though his disaffection to the church establishment was notorious. It is said, indeed, that he subscribed the book of discipline. He constantly carried with him a Greek Testament, which he read through every fortnight. He wrote in Latin commentaries on the Apocalypse, and the Song of Songs, and an Exposition on Daniel. An English translation of these works was published at London, 4to., 1644.

BRILL, MATTHEW and PAUL, two brothers of Antwerp, eminent painters, who went to Rome, and were employed in adorning the Vatican. Matthew died 1584, aged 34; and Paul 1626, aged 72.

BRILLAT-SAVARIN, ANTHELME, a French writer, chiefly known by his 'Physiologie du Goût,' was born 1 April, 1755, and died 2 Feb., 1826.

BRINDLEY, JAMES, an eminent civil engineer, was born at Wormhill, in Derbyshire, in 1716. He served his apprenticeship to a millwright; and after executing several mills and engines, was employed by the late duke of Bridgewater on his canal from Worsley to Manchester, which he extended to the Mersey. It is ninety-three miles in length, and has five tunnels, the most remarkable of which is the subterraneous passage of Harecastle Hill. Brindley was next engaged to construct a canal from the Grand Trunk, near Haywood, in Staffordshire, to the river Severn, near Bewdley, which increased his reputation to such a degree that he was consulted upon all great works of a similar description throughout the kingdom. He also gave the corporation of Liverpool a plan for clearing their docks from mud, and invented a method of building walls as a fence against the sea, without mortar. His last invention was an improved engine for raising water. Mr. Brindley was a man of ordinary education, with little or no reading; and when he had any difficult work in hand, he used to lie in bed for two or three days to meditate upon it; and so much was his mind set upon the value of inland navigation, that when asked by a member of the House of Commons of what use rivers were, he replied, 'to feed navigable canals.' He died at Turnhurst, Staffordshire, 30 Sept., 1772.

BRINKLEY, JOHN, a native of Suffolk, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of D.D., and in 1792 was appointed Andrews professor of astronomy at Trinity College, Dublin. While holding this office he published an elementary treatise on astronomy. His discovery of the parallax of the fixed stars, in 1814, gave him a European reputation, which he supported by some valuable communications to the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy. He was consecrated bishop of Cloyne 1820, and died 14 Sept., 1835.

BRINKNELL, THOMAS, D.D., an English divine of the sixteenth century, was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, and was afterwards master of the noted school adjoining Magdalene College. In 1507 he proceeded in divinity, and afterwards read the divinity lecture founded by cardinal Walsey, who had a high opinion of his learning, and employed him to write against Luther. In 1510 he was collated to a prebend in the church of Lincoln, and appointed to the hospital of St. John Baptist, Banbury. Died 1539. He wrote 'Tractatus contra doctrinam Martini Lutheri.'

BRINVILLIERS, MARIE MARGUERITE, marchioness of, a French lady, known for her intrigues and crimes. She was the daughter of Dreux d'Aubrai, lieutenant-croix, and married, in 1651, the marquis de Brinvilliers. The introduction of a young officer, called De St. Croix, into her house by her husband, proved the beginning of her misfortunes and her crimes. She loved this stranger with such ardour that she sacrificed her honour to her passion; but her father, sensible of her conduct, confined her lover in the Bastille, whilst his daughter, as if penitent, devoted herself to religious duties. After a year's confinement, De St. Croix, who had in the prison learned the art of mixing poison from an Italian of the name of Exili, visited his guilty favourite. He communicated the fatal secret of poison, and she with alacrity received it, and unsuspected, by slow degrees cut off her father, her two brothers, and her sister, in 1670; and if she spared her husband, it was because he looked with indifference on her lewdness. An accident brought her crimes to light. St. Croix, in working some subtle poison, was suddenly overpowered by its effluvia, and dropped down dead.

BRISBANE.

As no relation appeared to claim his property, it was sealed; but the marchioness insisted with such importunity upon obtaining possession of a particular box, that its contents were examined, and it was discovered to contain papers with directions, full of slow poison. The guilty marchioness escaped to England, and thence to Holland; but she was seized at Liege, and brought to Paris, where she was condemned to have her head cut off, and then to be burned. She underwent the dreadful sentence of the law 16 July, 1676, with great firmness, and with the appearance of contrition.

BRISBANE, SIR CHARLES, K.C.B., a distinguished British admiral, who died in Nov., 1829.

BRISBANE, JOHN, M.D., a Scotchman, who took his doctor's degree at Edinburgh 1750, and was elected, in 1758, physician to the Middlesex hospital. He died in or about 1776. His works are 'Select Cases in the Practice of Medicine,' 8vo., London, 1762; and 'Anatomy of Painting, or a short and easy introduction to Anatomy; being a new edition, on a smaller scale, of six Tables of Albinus, &c. To which are added the Anatomy of Celsus, with notes, and the Physiology of Cicero,' folio, London, 1769.

BRINSON, BAKNABÉ, a French lawyer and diplomatist, who was murdered by the faction of the League 15 Nov., 1591. He published some treatises on legal and classical subjects.

BRINSON, MATHURIN JACQUES, a French naturalist and chemist, born 30 April, 1723; died 23 June, 1806. He published 'Système du Règne Animal'; 'Ornithologie'; a translation of Priestley's 'History of Electricity,' &c.

BRISSOT, PIERRE, a French physician and medical writer, born 1478; died 1522.

BRISSET DE WARVILLE, JEAN PIERRE, the son of an inn-keeper near Chartres, in France, was born 14 Jan., 1754. Being dissatisfied with the political servitude of his country, he for some time engaged in the publication of the 'Courier de l'Europe,' and then turned his thoughts towards criminal jurisprudence. His Theory of Criminal Laws appeared in 1780, and procured much applause for its author. It was followed by two discourses, which gained the prize at Châlons sur Marne. After the publication of his 'Philosophical Library,' he visited England. On his return to Paris, in 1784, he was committed to the Bastille. He was soon liberated, however, by the influence of Orleans, to whose children his wife had been governess. He then established at Paris a society to promote the abolition of negro slavery; and to carry his plans into execution, he passed over to America to examine the constitution of the new republic, but his scheme of instituting a colony of Frenchmen under republican laws proved a total failure. On the breaking out of the revolution he returned to his native country, where he displayed all the ability of a statesman, a demagogue, and a factious partisan. For a while he acquired popularity as the leader of the Girondists, but eventually he was denounced as the agent of England by Robespierre, and, after a mock trial, was guillotined 31 Oct., 1793. He published Thoughts on the means of attaining Truth; Letters on the History of England; and many other works.

BRISTOL, GEORGE DIGBY, second earl of, son of John, the first earl, was born at Madrid 1612. He was educated at Oxford, and at the beginning of the long parliament opposed the court, but afterwards became an adherent of King Charles II., and through the rebellion and usurpation acted uniformly on the principles of loyalty, for which conduct he was, at the Restoration, installed a K.G. Died 20 March, 1679-7. He wrote a series of letters to Sir Kenelm Digby, with a view to reclaim him from what he then considered the errors of popery, but instead of attaining this object, he was himself induced, by Sir Kenelm's replies, to embrace the Catholic religion. This curious correspondence is in print. He also translated the first three books of the French romance of 'Cassandra,' and wrote a lively play called 'Elvira, or the Worst not always True, a Comedy, written by a Person of Quality.'

BRISTOL, JOHN DIGBY, earl of, was born at Coleshill, Warwickshire, 1580. He was a student of Magdalene College, Oxford, after which he travelled, and on his return became gentleman of the privy chamber to James I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and sent him ambassador to Spain: In 1618 he was created baron Digby of Sherbourn. In 1621 he went ambassador to the emperor. In 1622 he was created earl of Bristol, and was sent again to Spain concerning the marriage then projected between prince Charles and the Infanta. On his return home he was charged by the duke of Buckingham with improper conduct, and was sent to the Tower, but was soon released. After the accession of Charles I., the contention ran high between Buckingham and Digby, and they preferred accusations of high treason against each other. Upon the breaking out of the civil war, he sided with the parliament, and had the command of two troops in their service, but when he saw that monarchy itself was in danger, he sided with the king. In consequence of his defence of the royal cause he lost his estate, and died in exile at Paris 6 Jan., 1652-3. He wrote several poems and tracts, and translated Du Moulin's defence of the Catholic faith.

BRISTOW, RICHARD, D.D., an English divine, was born at Worcester in or about 1538, and educated at Oxford (B.A. 1559; M.A. 1562). He now applied himself to the study of divinity, and being recommended to Sir William Petre, was by him promoted to one of his scholarships or fellowships in Exeter College in July, 1567. But Bristow's opinions concerning religion undergoing a change, he left Oxford, and went first to Louvaine, and thence to Douay 1569, on the invitation of Dr. Allen, whose right hand he afterwards was upon all occasions. He was prefect of studies, read a lecture on the Scriptures for an hour every day, and sometimes was regent of the college in the president's absence. He was created D.D. 3 Aug., 1579. Dr. Bristow's constitution, which was never a strong one, broke down under the weight of his onerous duties, and his physicians advised him to visit the Spa, which he did, though to very little effect. Then it was thought that his native air might contribute towards his recovery, and accordingly he returned to England 1581, and was entertained by Mr. Bellamy, a gentleman who had a seat at Harrow-on-the-Hill. Here he died a few weeks afterwards, on 18 Oct., 1581. His death was a general loss to the Catholic cause, as well as to the English college at Douay, for, according to the character given of him in the records of that society, he might rival Allen in prudence, Stapleton in acuteness, Campian in eloquence, Wright in theology, and Martin in languages. His works are 'A brief Treatise of divers plain and sure ways to find out the Truth in this doubtful and dangerous time of heresy, containing sundry motives unto the Catholic faith; or Considerations to move a man to believe the Catholics, and not the Heretics,' Svo., Antwerp, 1574, 1590; 'Reply to Will. Fulke, in Defence of Dr. Allen's Scroul of Articles, and Book of Purgatory,' 4to., Louvaine, 1592; 'Demands to be proposed by Catholics to the Heretics,' 4to., London, 1592; 'A Defence of the Bull of Pope Pius V.; Veritates Aureæ S.R. Ecclesiæ, Authenticitas veterum Patrum, &c., 1600 posthumum,' 1616. He also collected, and for the most part wrote, the notes upon the Rheims translation of the New Testament.

BRITANNICUS, son of the Emperor Claudius and Messalina, was born A.D. 42. He was excluded from the empire by the artifices of Agrippina, second wife of Claudius and mother of Nero, who caused him to be poisoned A.D. 55.

BRITANNICUS, JOHN, an Italian critic and grammarian, born about 1460 at Brescia, where he died after 1518. Among other things he wrote valuable commentaries on Juvenal, Persius, Statius, Horace, and Terence.

BRITON, BERNARD DE, a Cistercian monk, born at Almeida, in Portugal, 20 Aug., 1569; died 27 Feb., 1617. He composed a valuable history of his native country, under the title of 'La Monarchie Lusitanie.'

BRITTANY, ARTHUR, earl of, was born at Nantes, 1187. His uncle, John Lackland, took Brittany from him, and put him to death 1202.

BRITTANY, ARTHUR, duke of, born 1293, succeeded his father, John, 1305, and died 1312.

BRITTANY, ARTHUR, duke of, called The Just, reigned 1393, and died 1458. He gained several victories over the English.

BRITTON, JOHN. See BRETON.

BRITTON, JOHN, a topographer and miscellaneous writer, was born at Kington, Wiltshire, 7 July, 1771, and died 1 Jan., 1857. His works are so numerous that it would be impossible to give the mere titles in any reasonable compass. The most important of them are the 'Architectural Antiquities of Great Britain,' and the 'Cathedral Antiquities of England.' Many of his works were written in conjunction with Mr. Brayley.

BRITTON, RICHARD, an English Franciscan friar, published a book of controversy concerning the general motives of the Catholic faith, entitled 'Manuduction to the Palace of Truth,' Mechlin, 1616.

BRITTON, THOMAS, the musical small-coal man, was born at or near Higham Ferrers, Northamptonshire, and was apprenticed to a London dealer in small-coal. When his time had expired he accepted a sum of money not to follow his trade in the metropolis; but after passing a short time in the country, Britton returned to town, and rented a stable near the gate of the Priory of St. John of Jerusalem, Clerkenwell, and converted it into a drawing-house. Here honest Tom employed himself in learning chemistry and music, and became an adept in the Rosicrucian science. Excellent in all his arts and crafts, and deeply read in black-letter lore, he soon gained considerable fame, but never neglected his business. He was seen early in the morning, with his sack and measure, crying stall-coal; and in the evening he was employed at a concert in his rooms, which were almost too low to allow of his male guests and well-dressed ladies standing upright in them: for men of fashion, and ladies of the highest rank, were often seen climbing up the ladder leading to his loft. This self-taught genius did not scruple in the least to appear in his check shirt when he met a weekly society of black-letter literati, though there were noble lords present. Leaving his sack and measure at the threshold, he was shown into the apartment, where he, in common with the other members, produced the books he had collected from the book-stalls. His death occurred 14 Sept., 1714, when he was upwards of sixty. One Justice Robe, who was fond of mischievous tricks, introduced into his company a ventriloquist, who, in a voice seemingly coming from a distance, announced to poor Britton his approaching end, and bade him prepare for it by repeating the Lord's Prayer on his knees. The poor man did so; but the affair dwelt so much on his imagination that he died in a few days, leaving Justice Robe to enjoy the fruits of his mirth.

BRIXIUS. See BRIE, GERMAIN DE.

BRIZARD, or BRITARD, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French actor, born 7 April, 1721; died 30 Jan., 1791.

BRIZIO, FRANCIS, a Bolognese painter, born 1574; died 1623.

BROCARDUS, JAMES, a visionary, was a native of Venice. On turning Protestant he went to Holland, and died at Nuremberg about 1600. He wrote some works against the Roman Church.

BROCAS, THOMAS, the owner of a china and glass shop at Shrewsbury, was for thirty years a Wesleyan Methodist and an occasional preacher in that society. He had a long controversy with the Rev. Messrs. Walker, Scott, Roberts, and others, on the doctrines of Calvin. The titles of his publications are, 'The Origin and Evils of Calvinism,' being an answer to the Rev. T. Scott's remarks on Bishop Tomline's 'Refutation of Calvinism'; 'God no respecter of Persons,' in reply to the Rev. John Walker, of Trinity College, Dublin; 'Universal Goodness,' a confutation of the Rev. John Roberts's Six Letters; 'Calvinism Unmasked,' in answer to a Pamphlet by Mr. Tucker; 'A Scourge for Scandal,' in reply to the Rev. Wm. McDonald's remarks. Mr. Brocas died at Shrewsbury 29 Aug., 1818, aged 62. He is to be distinguished from his son of the same names, who published 'Anti-Calvinism, or the Key which unlocks Scriptural Election, in nine Letters to a Friend,' Svo., Shrewsbury, 1848.

BROCCHI, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian mineralogist, who entered into the service of the viceroy of Egypt, was born at Bassano 18 Feb., 1772; and died at Khartoom, in Nubia, 23 Sept., 1826. His published works are upwards of fifty in number.

BROCK, DANIEL DE LISLE, chief magistrate of Guernsey, was born 1762, and died Sept., 1842. He was remarkable for the large share which he took in various important measures for promoting the prosperity of his native island.

BROCKES, BARTHOLOMEW HENRY, a German lawyer and poet, born 1680; died 1747.

BROCKETT, JOHN TROTTER, an attorney of Carlisle, who attained celebrity as a numismatist and antiquarian writer, was born 1788, and died Dec., 1842.

BROCKLESBY, RICHARD, M.D., was born at Minehead, Staffordshire, 11 Aug., 1722. He was educated at Ballymore school, in Ireland, under Shackleton, the preceptor of Burke, after which he went to Edinburgh, whence he removed to Leyden, where he took his doctor's degree 1745. He then settled in London, and in 1754 obtained an honorary degree from the university of Dublin, which, being confirmed at Cambridge, enabled him to become a fellow of the College of Physicians 1756. Two years afterwards he was appointed physician to the army in Germany, where he contracted a friendship with the duke of Richmond, Lord Pembroke, and other distinguished officers. In 1760 he was nominated physician to the hospitals, and returned to England before the peace of 1763. He now settled in Norfolk Street, in the Strand, and rose high in his profession. He was also esteemed for his liberality, and numbered among his principal friends Dr. Johnson and Mr. Burke. To the former he offered £100 a year during life, which the doctor gratefully declined; and to Mr. Burke he presented £1000 on finding that he stood in need of it. Died 11 Dec., 1797. Besides several papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he wrote 'Dissertatio de saliva sana et morbosa;' 'Essay concerning the Mortality of Horned Cattle;' 'Eulogium Medicum, sive oratio anniversaria Harveiana, 1760;' 'Economical and Medical Observations, tending to the improvement of Medical Hospitals,' 2 vols.; and 'Dissertation on the Music of the Ancients.'

BRODEAU, JEAN, Brodeus, a French classical scholar and critic, canon of St. Martin at Tours, was born 1500, and died 1563.

BRODERIP, WILLIAM JOHN, son of a medical practitioner at Bristol, was educated in his native city, and then entered Oriel College, Oxford. He was afterwards called to the bar, and was appointed a police magistrate by Sir Robert Peel. Died 27 Feb., 1859. Mr. Broderip was a diligent student of natural history, and contributed many papers to the Transactions of the Geological and Zoological Societies, and to the Penny Cyclopaedia. His separate publications are 'The Reading of R. Callis on the Statute of Sewers,' 4th edition, with additions and corrections, 8vo., 1824; 'Zoological Recreations,' 12mo., London, 1847; and 'Leaves from the Note-Book of a Naturalist,' 8vo., London, 1852.

BRODIE, ALEXANDER, a Scotch lord of session, who died 1679, at. 62, wrote a 'Diary,' which was published at Edinburgh in 1740.

BRODIE, ALEXANDER, a sculptor of Aberdeen, born about 1831; died 30 May, 1867.

BRODIE, SIR BENJAMIN COLLINS, an eminent surgeon and philosopher, was a younger son of the Rev. P. B. Brodie, rector of Winterslow, near Salisbury, where he was born 9 June, 1783. When about eighteen years of age he was sent to study anatomy at the Hunterian School in Great Windmill Street, London; and he next became a pupil of Sir Everard Home, at St. George's Hospital. In 1805 he was elected a member of the College of Surgeons, and immediately afterwards was appointed to assist Mr. Wilson as demonstrator of anatomy. Four years afterwards he became a lecturer of the School. When only twenty-five years old he was appointed assistant-surgeon to St. George's, and in 1810 was elected Croonian lecturer to the Royal Society, the subject of his discourse being 'The Influence of the Brain on the Action of the Heart and Generation of Heat.' He prosecuted his inquiries into this subject with such success that he afterwards laid before the Society an elaborate paper setting forth the results at which he had arrived; another, which obtained great attention, 'On the effects of certain vegetable poisons;' and some others, all showing such remarkable powers of investigation and judgment that he was elected a fellow, and in the following year received the Copley medal. In 1822 he was elected full surgeon to St. George's, and gave the lectures on surgery, continuing to deliver the regular course to a large class till 1830, when his increasing practice compelled him to relinquish all but clinical lectures. In 1819 he was appointed to the distinguished office of professor of anatomy and surgery to the Royal College of Surgeons, which honour he retained till 1823. In 1832, on the death of Sir Everard Home, he was appointed sergeant-surgeon to William IV., and was created a baronet by patent dated 21 Aug., 1834. Queen Victoria, on her accession, continued him in his appointment. In 1835 he became a member of the court of examiners of the College of Surgeons, and in 1844 was elected president, being thus placed in honours, as he unquestionably was in reputation, at the head of his profession. In 1858 he was elected president of the Royal Society, being the first surgeon on whom that dignity was ever conferred. He died at Broome Park, Betchworth, Surrey, 21 Oct., 1862, having been afflicted with blindness for some years previously. Sir Benjamin Brodie was far more than a mere operative surgeon; he was in a very wide sense a philosopher, a comparative anatomist, and a physiologist. His writings may be divided into three classes, corresponding with the three periods of his life. The first when, as a young hospital surgeon and teacher of anatomy, he employed his leisure in scientific observation and experiment; the second when, in the full tide of practice, he restricted authorship to the subjects which formed the daily business of his life—the surgical diseases of the human body; the third when, in the evening of his days, and gradually relinquishing the toils of practice, he gave to the world the results of his mature reflection on some of the great problems which are bound up in the complex nature of man.—Ann. Reg.

BRODUM, WILLIAM, M.D., an English quack doctor, author of 'The Guide to Old Age,' 2 vols., died 15 Oct., 1824, aged 69.

BROEKHUIZEN, JOHN VAN, in Latin Brœckhusius, a distinguished scholar, born at Amsterdam 20 Nov., 1649; died 15 Dec., 1707. His Latin poems were first printed at Utrecht 1684. He published editions of Sannazarius, Propertius, Tibullus, and Aonius Palearius.

BROGLIE, VICTOR MAURICE, Count De, marshal of France, was born at Quercy, and distinguished himself in the service of Louis XIV. He died 4 Aug., 1727, aged 80. His son, François Marie, was also marshal of France, and deserved the highest honours on account of his conduct in Italy and in the campaigns of 1733 and 1734. He died 22 May, 1745. His son, also a marshal, was the conqueror of Bergen, and distinguished himself during the Seven Years' War. He quitted France 1794, and retired to Russia, where he was received with distinction, and raised to the same rank. His son, Claude Victor, prince of Broglie, joined the republican party at the beginning of the Revolution, and was flattered with the title of marshal. His refusal to receive as law, while commander of the Rhine, the decree which suspended the king's authority, proved fatal to him. He was called to, Paris, condemned to death, and guillotined 27 Jan. 1794, aged 37.

BROGNI, JOHN ALLARMET, who is known as the Cardinal of Viviers, or of Ostia, which sees he successively held, was born at Brogni near Anney, 1342; and died at Rome 16 Feb., 1426. He founded the hospital at Anney, and the great college of St. Nicholas at Avignon. His life, by the Abbé Giraud Saulavie, was published in 1774, though it is said that only twelve copies were struck off.

BROKE, Sir PHILIP BOWES VERE, Bart., a brave British admiral, born 9 Sept., 1776; died 2 Jan., 1841. When captain of the 'Shannon,' he captured the American frigate 'Chesapeake' 1 June, 1813, after a severe action of eleven minutes.

BROKE, or BROOKE, Sir ROBERT, a native of Shropshire, was, it is said, educated at Oxford, and afterwards studied the law in the Middle Temple. In 1553 Queen Mary made him chief justice of the common pleas. He was also recorder of London, and Speaker of the House of Commons. Died 5 Sept., 1558. Some of his reports have been published; but his reputation mainly rests upon his 'Abridgment, containing an abstract of the Year-books till the time of Queen Mary,' folio, London, 1558, and often reprinted.

BROKESBY, FRANCIS, an English divine, was born at Stoke-Golding, in Leicestershire, 29 Sept., 1717, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. On entering into orders he became rector of Boleby, in Yorkshire, but was deprived of that living for refusing the oaths at the Revolution. He then went to live with Mr. Francis Cherry, the patron of the Nonjurors, and there he formed an intimacy with the learned Henry Dodwell, whose life he published. He died in October, 1714. Besides the book just noticed, he wrote 'The Life of Jesus Christ'; 'A History of the Government of the Primitive Church'; and assisted Mr. Nelson in his book on the Feasts and Fasts.

BROM, ADAM DE, an English priest, who was chamberlain to Edward II., and had the honour of being the joint founder of Oriol College, Oxford, with that monarch. He was the first provost of the house; besides which he was chancellor of Durham, and archdeacon of Stow. Died 16 June, 1532.

BROME, ALEXANDER, an English poet, born 1622. He was an attorney in London in the reign of Charles I., and composed songs, madrigals, epigrams, and other little pieces of poetry. His songs were much sung by the Cavaliers. He also wrote a comedy called 'The Cunning Lovers'; but his most considerable performance was a translation of Horace. Died 29 June, 1666.

BROME, RICHARD, a comic dramatist of the seventeenth century. It is said that he was put apprentice to Ben Jonson, to learn the art of poetry. His best performances are superior to the worst of his master's. He wrote fifteen plays, and died, it is supposed, in 1652.

BROMFIELD, Sir WILLIAM, an eminent surgeon, was born in London in 1712. He was a pupil of Ranby and in 1741 began to give lectures on anatomy. Some years after he joined Mr. Muter Madan in establishing the Lock Hospital, in which he was the first surgeon. To further this object he altered an old comedy, called 'The City Match,' which was acted at Drury Lane for the benefit of the hospital. He was also chosen surgeon of St. George's Hospital, and in 1761 was appointed one of the suite to bring over the Queen to England, for which he was placed upon the medical list of her majesty's household. He died 24 Nov., 1792. He communicated some papers to the Philosophical Transactions; besides which he published 'An Account of the English Night-shades;' 'Narrative of a Physical Transaction with Mr. Aylet, Surgeon, of Windsor;' 'Thoughts concerning the present Method of inoculating for the Small-pox;' 'Chirurgical Cases and Observations,' 2 vols.

BROMLEY, HENRY. See WILSON, ANTHONY. BROMLEY, JOHN, native of Shropshire, received an academical education, and having taken orders, enjoyed several benefices successively. In the beginning of the reign of James II. he was curate of St. Giles in the Fields, London. Soon afterwards he became a member of the Catholic church, and was employed as a corrector of the press in the King's printing-house, which afforded him a comfortable subsistence. Being obliged to part with that employment at the time of the Revolution of 1688, he started a boarding-school. He was afterwards tutor to some young gentlemen, with whom he travelled on the Continent. Retiring at last to his native county, he died at Mideley 10 Jan., 1717. Mr. Bromley was well skilled in the classics, and it is said that Pope was one of his pupils. He published a translation of the Catechism of the Council of Trent, 8vo., London, 1687.

BROMLEY, WILLIAM, eldest son of Sir William Bromley, of Bagginton, Warwickshire, was born 1664, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. In 1689 he was chosen a knight of the Shire for Warwick, and in 1710, being then one of the members for the university of Oxford, he was elected Speaker of the House of Commons. After presiding over the deliberations of the House with great dignity for three years, he was appointed Secretary of State. Died 1732. Mr. Bromley published 'Remarks on the Grand Tour of France and Italy, lately performed by a Person of quality,' 8vo., London, 1692.

BROMLEY, WILLIAM, a celebrated English line engraver, was born 1760, and died 1842. He had two sons who became eminent as mezzotint engravers: James, who died 12 Dec., 1838, æt. 38, and John Charles, who died 3 April, 1839, æt. 44.

BROMPTON, JOHN, a Cistercian monk, abbot of Jorevall, or Jerevall, in Richmondshire. He wrote a Chronicle from 588 to 1198. It was printed in 1652.

BROMPTON, RICHARD, an English portrait painter, who died at St. Petersburg about 1790.

BRONCHORST, EVERARD, son of John, the professor at Rostock, was born at Deventer 1554, and professed jurisprudence at Wittemberg, at Erfurt and at Leyden, where he died 27 May, 1627. Besides several legal treatises he published a Latin translation of the Greek proverbs, collected by Joseph Scaliger.

BRONCHORST, JOHN, a learned critic, was born at Nimeguen about 1494, and became professor of mathematics at Rostock, and afterwards of philosophy at Cologne, where he died 1570. He published, among other things, the treatise of Bede 'De sex mundi ætatibus;' and a Greek translation of Ptolemy's Geography.

BRONCKHORST, JOHN VAN, a painter, born at Utrecht 1603. The date of his death is unrecorded. Another painter of the same name was born at Leyden 1648.

BRONCKHORST.

BRONCKHORST, PETER VAN, an historical painter, born at Delft 16 May, 1588; died 22 June, 1651.

BRONSTED, PETER OLAF, a learned and industrious Danish traveller and archaeologist, was born 17 Nov., 1780, and died 17 June, 1842.

BRONTE, ANNE, sister of Charlotte, and author of 'Agnes Grey,' died 19 Dec., 1848. She wrote under the assumed name of Acton Bell.

BRONTE, CHARLOTTE, a novelist, was daughter of the Rev. Patrick Brontë, minister of Haworth, Yorkshire, where she was born 1824. In June 1854 she married her father's curate, the Rev. Arthur Bell Nicholls, and died shortly afterwards, on 31 March, 1855. She published, under the nom de plume of Currer Bell, several novels which display great power in the delineation of character. The principal of these are 'Jane Eyre,' 'Shirley,' and 'Villette.' An interesting memoir of this amiable and accomplished woman has been published by Mrs. E. C. Gaskell.

BRONTE, EMILY JANE, sister of the preceding, and author of 'Wuthering Heights,' published under the fictitious name of Ellis Bell, died 25 May, 1849.

BRONZERIO, JOHN JEROME, an Italian physician and medical writer, born 1577; died 1630.

BRONZINO. See ALORNI.

BRONZINO, ANGELO, a painter, was born 1503 at Florence, where he died 1570.

BROOK, ABRAHAM, a bookseller at Norwich, was author of 'Miscellaneous Experiments and Remarks on Electricity, the Air-Pump, and Barometer: with the description of an Electrometer of a new construction; illustrated with copper plates and notes.' 4to., Norwich, 1789.

BROOK, BENJAMIN, author of the 'Lives of the Puritans,' was born in the village of Nether Thong, near Huddersfield, Yorkshire, 3 March, 1755, and brought up to the staple business of the vicinity, its manufacture of woollen cloth. He became in early life a member of the Independent church at Holmfirth, under the pastoral care of Robert Galland, by whom he was recommended in 1797 to the college at Rotherham, then under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Williams and the Rev. Maurice Phillips. He was ordained in 1801, and afterwards was chosen pastor of a congregation at Tuthury, Staffordshire, where he laboured for nearly thirty years. Died 5 Jan., 1848. His works are, 'The Moral Law a Rule of Life to Believers;' 'An Appeal to Facts: or, Reasons for Dissent, in Letters to a Friend,' 1806; 3rd edition, 1815; 'Lives of the Puritans, containing a biographical account of those Divines who distinguished themselves in the cause of Religious Liberty from the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth, to the Act of Uniformity in 1664,' 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1813; 'The History of Religious Liberty from the first propagation of Christianity in Britain to the death of George III.,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1820; 'Memoir of the Life and Writings of Thomas Cartwright, B.D., the distinguished Puritan Reformer, including the principal ecclesiastical movements in the reign of Queen Elizabeth,' 8vo., London, 1845.

BROOKE. See BROKE.

BROOKE, SIR BASIL, one of the leading Roman Catholics of the reign of Charles I., made an English translation of N. Caussin's 'Entertainments for Lent,' printed in 1672, and again in 1755. Sir Basil was living 1646.

BROOKE.

BROOKE, MISS CHARLOTTE, a poet, was the daughter of Henry Brooke, the novelist and dramatist. Her life, a very uneventful one, was passed in Ireland, where she died 29 March, 1793. She was attracted to the study of the Irish language, in which she attained great proficiency. Her literary fame rests upon her well-known 'Reliques of Irish Poetry: consisting of Heroic Poems, Odes, Elegies, and Songs, translated into English verse: with notes explanatory and historical: and the originals in the Irish character. To which is subjoined an Irish Tale.' This work first appeared at Dublin in a 4to. volume, 1789, and a second edition, in 2 vols. 8vo., appeared in 1816, with a memoir of Miss Brooke, by Aaron Crossley Seymour. Miss Brooke also wrote 'The School for Christians,' in dialogues for the use of children; and brought out an edition of her father's works, with a memoir of him.

BROOKE, MRS. FRANCES, whose maiden name was Moore, was the daughter of a clergyman, and the wife of the Rev. John Brooke, rector of Colney, in Norfolk, of St. Augustine, in Norwich, and chaplain to the garrison of Quebec. Her first literary work was the 'Old Maid,' a periodical paper, begun in 1755, and collected in one volume 12mo. The next year she published Virginia, a tragedy, with some poetical pieces. In 1763 came out 'Julia Mandeville,' a novel, which was well received. The same year appeared 'Letters from Juliet, Lady Catesby, to Lady Campley,' translated from the French. Soon after this she went with her husband to Canada, the scenery of which country she well described in her next novel, 'The History of Emily Montague,' 4 vols. 12mo. This was followed in 1770 by 'Memoirs of the Marquis of St. Forlaix,' 4 vols. 12mo. About this time she returned to England, and contracted an intimacy with Mrs. Yates, with whom she had some share in the opera-house. She also wrote a play, which Garrick rejected, and thereby incurred the resentment of the authoress, who revenged herself upon the manager in a novel entitled 'The Excursion,' 2 vols. She also translated Millot's Elements of the History of England; and in 1781 produced, at Covent Garden, the 'Siege of Sinope,' a tragedy, but with no success. But her next dramatic performance, 'Rosina,' a musical entertainment, had a great run. This was followed by 'Marian,' acted at the same theatre, but with little success. Mrs. Brooke died 26 Jan., 1799, five days after her husband.

BROOKE, FULKE GREVILLE, lord, was the son of Sir Fulke Greville, of Beauchamp Court, in Warwickshire, and born there in 1554. He was educated at Cambridge and Oxford, after which he travelled, and on his return obtained a place at the court of Elizabeth, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He was the friend of Sir Philip Sidney, who bequeathed to him a moiety of his library. At the coronation of James I. he was made Knight of the Bath, and obtained the grant of Warwick castle. In 1615 he was appointed chancellor of the exchequer; in 1620 created Lord Brooke; and the year following made a lord of the bedchamber. At the beginning of the next reign he founded a lecture on history at Cambridge. On 30 Sept., 1628, he was murdered by his servant, who then stabbed himself with the same weapon. There have been printed of his 'The Life of Sir Philip Sidney,' 1652, 12mo.; Certain learned and elegant Works by the Right Hon. Fulke lord

BROOKE, GEORGE, fourth and youngest son of William Brooke, lord Cobham, was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. in 1586. He afterwards obtained a prebend in the church of York. Queen Elizabeth had promised him the mastership of St. Cross, near Winchester, but she died before a vacancy occurred, and James I. refused to recognise the claim of Mr. Brooke, who was thereupon induced to join the conspiracies known as the Main and the Bye plots. This led to his being convicted of treason, for which he suffered on a scaffold erected in the castle yard at Winchester 5 Dec., 1603.

BROOKE, HENRY, the son of a clergyman, was born at Rantaven, in Ireland, 1706. He was educated under Dr. Sheridan, and next at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he went to London, studied the law, and was admitted to the bar, but never regularly followed that profession. While in the English capital he formed an acquaintance with Swift and Pope. On his return to Ireland he was left guardian to a female cousin, then about twelve years old; and when she was no more than fourteen he married her. In 1732 he published at London his poem, entitled 'Universal Beauty,' in which he is supposed to have been assisted by Pope. About this time he became one of the political adherents of Frederic, prince of Wales, who honoured him with many marks of esteem. In 1736 he published a translation of the first three books of Tasso; and the same year wrote his tragedy of 'Gustavus Vasa,' which, on account of its political turn against the minister, was prohibited. When published, however, it produced to the author £1000. Soon after this he went back to Ireland, where he was appointed barrack-master by Lord Chesterfield; but his pen was not idle, and he wrote several poetical pieces, as well as some for the stage. He also contributed four fables to the collection published by Moore, under the title of 'Fables for the Female Sex.' In 1749 his tragedy of 'The Earl of Essex' was performed at Dublin. He also distinguished himself as a political writer, particularly in his Farmer's Letters, intended to rouse a spirit of patriotism among the Irish; and in 1762 he published 'The Trial of the Roman Catholics,' urging a repeal of the penal laws. His next work was the novel of 'The Fool of Quality,' of which it is difficult to say whether its merits or defects preponderate. The same remark applies to his other novel of 'Juliet Grenville.' In 1772 he published 'Redemption,' a poem. Died 10 Oct., 1783.

BROOKE, JAMES, an English divine, was presented to the rectory of Hill Crome, Worcester-shire, 1705, and to the vicarage of Hanley Castle, in the same county, 10 Feb., 1725. He published 'The Blessed Memory of the Just. A sermon preached the day after the funeral of Sir F. Russell, Bart.,' 8vo., Oxford, 1766; and 'The duty and advantage of singing to the Lord. A sermon preach'd in the cathedral church of Worcester, at the anniversary meeting of the choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford,' 8vo., London [1728].

BROOKE, JOHN, an English translator, was appointed a scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, by the charter of foundation, 1546, but did not take his B.A. degree till 1553-4. In 1577 he was residing at Ash, near Sandwich. His translations, all of them from the French, are 'The Staffe of Christain Faith,' 1577; 'John Gardener, his confession of the Christian Faith,' 1578, 1582; 'A Christian discourse upon certain points of religion, presented to the Prince of Conde,' 1578; 'The Christian disputations by Master Peter Viret,' 1579; 'Of two Wonderful Popish Monsters,' 1579; and 'A Faithful and familiar exposition upon the prayer of our Lorde Jesus Christ,' by Viret, 1582.

BROOKE, JOHN CHARLES, F.S.A., an accomplished antiquary, was born 1748. He was the son of a medical practitioner, and was apprenticed to a chemist, but his tastes having led him to the study of genealogy and antiquities, he obtained, in 1773, the place of Rouge Croix pursuivant in the college of arms. In 1777 he was advanced to the dignity of Somerset herald. He was accidentally crushed to death while endeavouring to get into the pit of the Haymarket theatre 3 Feb., 1794. His MS. collections, which for the most part relate to the county of York, are deposited in the College of Arms.

BROOKE, RALPH, York herald, was born in or about 1551. He was bred a painter stainer, but afterwards succeeded in obtaining a place in the College of Arms. Being a most accomplished genealogist, he discovered many errors, in relation to pedigrees, in Camden's 'Britannia,' and kindly offered to communicate them to the author, but the offer was rejected, and he himself superciliously treated. Upon this, urged by personal resentment, he sedulously applied himself to a thorough examination of the 'Britannia,' and published a 'Discovery of Errors' in the fourth edition of that celebrated work. Camden was treated with very little ceremony in the 'Discovery,' but in preparing the fifth edition of the 'Britannia,' published in 1600, he wisely corrected many of the errors which Brooke had so relentlessly pointed out. Brooke's 'Second Discovery of Errors' remained in MS. till 1723, when it was published. Our author also drew up 'A Catalogue and Succession of Kings, Princes, Dukes, Marquises, Earls, and Viscounts of this Realm,' 1622, folio. Died 15 Oct., 1625.

BROOKE, SIR ROBERT. See BROKE.

BROOKE, ROBERT GREVILLE, second lord, became a zealous puritan, and was killed in an attack on Lichfield 1643. It is observable that while South spoke of him as a monument of divine vengeance, Baxter placed him in heaven, together with White, Pym, and Hampden.

BROOKES, JOSHUA, F.R.S., a distinguished anatomist, born 24 Nov., 1761; died in London 10 Jan., 1833.

BROOKS, FERDINAND. See GREEN, HUGH.

BROOKS, GABRIEL, a writing-master, kept a day school in Burr Street, Wapping, and died 1741, aged about 37. He wrote nine of the pieces in G. Bickham's 'Universal Penman.'

BROOKS, JAMES, D.D., an English prelate, was a native of Hampshire, and received his academical education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1547 he was appointed master of Balliol College, and Queen Mary raised him to the bishopric of Gloucester, on the deprivation of John Hooper, 1554. In the year following he was one of the pope's delegates at the trial of Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley. Died Feb. 1559-60. 'He was,' says Wood, 'a person very learned in the time he lived, an eloquent preacher, and a zealous maintainer of the Roman Catholic religion.' His published works are a Sermon at St. Paul's Cross, 1553; and orations respecting Cranmer.

BROOKS, THOMAS, a Puritan divine, was probably born 1608, but of his birthplace and parentage no particulars have been recovered. On 7 July, 1625, he was matriculated of the university of Cambridge as a pensioner of Emmanuel College. In consequence of defective records, we are unable to state whether he took any degree, and at what period he left the university. It would seem, however, that he was ordained in or before 1640, and served as chaplain to the forces both by land and sea. In 1640 he occurs as incumbent of St. Thomas the Apostle, London, whence he was transferred, in or about 1652, to the living of St. Margaret's, Fish Street Hill. On the title pages of several of his publications he styles himself 'a willing Servant unto God, and the faith of his people, in the glorious Gospel of Christ at Margaret's, Fish Street Hill.' He was ejected from his living 1602, and thenceforward preached in a chapel called the 'Pavement,' Moorfields, near his old church in Fish Street. Died 27 Sept., 1680. He married firstly Martha, daughter of John Burgess (she died 20 June, 1676); and secondly, about 1677, Patience Cartwright, who survived him. Brooks's 'Complete Works,' edited by the Rev. Alexander Balloch Grosart, appeared at Edinburgh 1866, 8vo., forming a portion of Nichol's Series of Standard Divines. They consist principally of sermons with quaint titles, such as 'Apples of Gold,' 'String of Pearls,' 'Ark for all God's Noahs in a gloomy stormy day,' 'Privy Key of Heaven,' 'Cases, &c., or Pills to Purge Malignants.' John Reeve preached his funeral sermon, in the course of which, alluding to Mr. Brooks's charity, he remarked, 'He had large bowels and a large heart; a great dexterity in opening the bowels of others, as well as his own, to works of mercy.'

BROOKS, WILLIAM, a writing-master of London, was born 1696, and died at Much Baddow, Essex, 1749. He published a copy-book, entitled 'A Delightful Recreation for the Industrious,' 1717.
