GILCHRIST, JOHN BORTHWICK, LL.D., an orientalist, born at Edinburgh 1759. At an early age he went to Calcutta as assistant-surgeon in the East India Company's service, and applied himself with ardour to the study of Hindostance, Sanscrit, Persian, and other languages. In 1787 he published, at Calcutta, an English and Hindostance Dictionary, which became a standard work. This was followed by various other introductory works on the languages of Hindostan and Persia. In 1800 he was appointed professor of the Hindostance and Persian languages in the college of Fort William, in Bengal. This situation he was obliged to resign, three years later, in consequence of failing health. Returning to Scotland in 1804, he took up his residence at Edinburgh, where, at one period, he endeavoured to establish a bank. About 1816 he settled in London, where he taught the oriental languages, at first in private, and afterwards at the Oriental Institution, Leicester Square. The latter years of his life were passed in retirement, and he died at Paris Jan., 1841.

GILCHRIST, OCTAVIUS, P.S.A., was born at Twickenham 1779, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. He left the university to assist a friend engaged in trade at Stamford, and afterwards carried on the business for his own benefit. Mr. Gilchrist was a writer in the Quarterly Review, and contributed some notes to Gifford's edition of Ben Jonson. He likewise published 'Examination of the charges of Ben Jonson's enmity towards Shakspeare;' Bishop Corbet's Poems; and 'Letters to William Gilford on the late edition of Ford's Works.' He projected a Collection of Old Plays, but never carried out the idea. Died at Stamford 30 June, 1823.

GILDAN, surnamed The Wise, was a native of Wales, and born in 511, or, according to others, in 493. He appears to have been a monk; and, after residing in one of the small isles called the Holmes, in the Bristol Channel, retired to the Abbey of Glastonbury, where he died. This account is controverted by Dupin, who places him in a monastery in Venetia in Britain. The only book attributed to him, with certainty, is entitled 'Epistola de excidio Britanniarum, et castigatione ordinis ecclesiastici,' printed at London in 1525, and, several times since, at other places. An English translation of it was published 1652.

GILDON, CHARLES, was born at Gillingham, Dorsetshire, 1665, educated at Douay. Having wasted his paternal estate, he turned dramatic writer, but without success. He was the friend of Charles Blount, whose works he published, and justified both his conduct and his sceptical principles. But at the close of life he altered his opinions, and printed a book called 'The Deist's Manual.' His other works are 'The Art of English Poetry,' of which his own productions proved miserable examples; An English Grammar; The Life of Betterton. Died 12 Jan., 1723-4.

GILES, of Fuero, an Italian cardinal and biblical commentator, died 12 Nov., 1532.

GILFILLAN, ROBERT, a minor Scotch poet, born in Dunfermline 7 July, 1798; died 4 Dec., 1850, at Leith, where he had been collector of the police rates since 1837. The fourth edition of his Songs was published shortly after his death.

GILL, ALEXANDER, was born in Lincolnshire 27 Feb., 1564. He received his education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (M.A. 1590). In 1608 he became master of St. Paul's School; and died 17 Nov., 1635. His works are—'Treatise concerning the Trinity;' 'Logonomia Anglica;' 'Sacred Philosophy of Holy Scripture, or a Commentary on the Creed.'

GILL, ALEXANDER, D.D., son and successor to the preceding, was born in London 1597. He entered Trinity College, Oxford, and, on taking his master's degree, was appointed usher in St. Paul's School, of which he became master in 1635, when he proceeded doctor in divinity. He was, however, dismissed five years afterwards, and then set up a private school in Aldersgate Street, where he died 1642. His Latin poems were printed with the title of 'Poetici Conatus,' 1632. He had the honour to instruct Milton, who respected him very much.

GILL, JOHN, D.D., a Baptist minister, born at Kettering, in Northamptonshire, 23 Nov., 1697. His education was limited, owing to the contracted circumstances of his parents; but, by application, he became a good classical and oriental scholar. In 1718 he officiated at a congregation at Higham Ferrers, from whence he removed to a congregation at Horsleydown, in Southwark. In 1728 he published his 'Exposition of the Song of Solomon.' In 1735 appeared his 'Cause of God and Truth,' 4 vols., in which he defended Calvinism upon Supralapsarian principles. But his great work was a Commentary on the Scriptures, in 9 vols. folio, for which he was complimented with the degree of D.D. by the university of Aberdeen. A new edition of this exposition subsequently appeared, in 10 vols. 4to. In 1797 Dr. Gill printed 'A Dissertation on the Antiquities of the Hebrew Language.' His last work was a body of doctrinal and practical divinity, 3 vols. 4to. Died 14 Oct., 1771.

GILLES, PIERRE, a French traveller and naturalist, born at Albi 1490; died at Rome 1555.

GILLESPIE, GEORGE, a Scotch divine, who was one of the commissioners from the Church of Scotland in the assembly at Westminster 1643. He wrote 'Aaron's Rod Blossoming;' 'Miscellaneous Questions,' &c.; and died 17 Dec., 1648.

GILLIES, JOHN, LL.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., was born at Brechin 18 Jan., 1747, and educated at Glasgow, after which he repaired to London. For some time he travelled on the Continent with the sons of Lord Hope, and on his return to England, about 1784, devoted himself to literary pursuits. On the death of Dr. Robertson he was appointed royal historiographer for Scotland. He died at Clapham 15 Feb., 1836. Dr. Gillies published a translation of the Orations of Isocrates and Lysias; History of Ancient Greece; View of the reign of Frederick II. of Prussia, with a parallel between that Prince and Philip II. of Macedon; a translation of Aristotle's Ethics and Politics; History of the World from Alexander to Augustus; and a translation of Aristotle's Rhetoric.

GILLIES, ROBERT PEARSE, a nephew of Lord Gillies and of Dr. John Gillies, mentioned above, received his education at Edinburgh, and was called to the Scotch bar 1812. Throughout his life this gifted individual was afflicted with a tendency to mental depression and morbid sensibility. He died at Kensington 28 Nov., 1858. Mr. Gillies was a contributor to Blackwood's Magazine, and published an autobiographical work entitled 'Memoirs of a Literary Veteran,' 1851.

GILLIS, JAMES, D.D., a Catholic prelate, born 7 April, 1802, at Montreal, in Lower Canada, of Scottish parents, who returned home with him in 1816. He was ordained priest 1827; nominated coadjutor to Bishop Carruthers, vicar-apostolic of the eastern district of Scotland, 28 July, 1837; consecrated bishop of Limyra, in Lycia, 22 July, 1838; succeeded as third vicar-apostolic of the eastern district of Scotland 1852; and died near Edinburgh 24 Feb., 1864. Bishop Gillis published A Discourse on the Mission and Influence of the Popes, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1820; Facts and Correspondence relating to the admission into the Catholic Church of Viscount and Viscountess Feilding, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1850; The Cholera, its premonitory symptoms and means of prevention, being principally extracts from the second report by the Metropolitan Sanitary Commission in 1848, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1853; A Letter to D. McLaren, Lord Provost of Edinburgh, on the proposed 'Voluntary' Amendment of the Lord Advocate's Educational Bill for Scotland, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1854; A Lecture on Education, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1850; A paper on the subject of Burns' pistols, 8vo., Edinburgh, 1859.

GILLOT, CLAUDE, a celebrated French engraver and painter, born 1673; died 1722.

GILLRAY, JAMES, an engraver and caricaturist, was born at Chelsea 1757, being the son of a Chelsea pensioner. He became a student in the Royal Academy, and about 1794 attracted notice as a skilful engraver. Between 1779 and 1811 he published twelve hundred caricatures, many of which were etched at once upon the copper, without the assistance of drawings. The royal family, the cabinet ministers, and the prominent politicians of the day were ridiculed by him without mercy. He died at London, of delirium tremens, 1 June, 1815. His works appeared singly, but a collection of them was published 1830. A new edition was subsequently issued by Bohn.

GILLY, WILLIAM STEPHEN, D.D., was educated at Christ's Hospital, and at St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge. He was collated to the rectory of North Farnbridge, Essex, 1817; obtained a canonry of Durham, and the living of St. Margaret's in that city 1825; was presented in 1851 to the vicarage of Northam, Northumberland; and died 10 Sept., 1855, aged 66. His works are—'The Spirit of the Gospel; or the Four Evangelists elucidated by explanatory observations, historical references, and miscellaneous illustrations;' 'Narrative of an Excursion to the Mountains of Piedmont in the year 1823, and Researches among the Vaudois or Waldenses, Protestant inhabitants of the Cottian Alps;' 'Horæ Catecheticæ;' 'Waldensian Researches;' a 'Second Visit to the Vaudois,' 1831; Memoir of Felix Neff; 'Our Protestant Forefathers;' 'Vigilantius and his Times;' 'The Roman Version of the Gospel according to St. John.'

GILPIN, BERNARD, styled 'The Apostle of the North,' was born at Kentmere, Westmorland, 1517. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Christ Church, on the foundation of that house by Cardinal Wolsey. His first preferment was the vicarage of Norton, in the diocese of Durham, which he resigned on going to Paris, where he printed a book on the Eucharist, written by his relative, Bishop Tonstal, who gave him the manuscript for that purpose. After travelling three years he returned home, and was made archdeacon of Durham, to which was annexed the rectory of Easington, from whence he removed to Houghton-le-Spring. He was a warm partisan of the reformed doctrines, and in the reign of Elizabeth was offered the bishopric of Carlisle and the provostship of Queen's College, but refused both, contenting himself with Houghton, where he founded a school. Died 4 March, 1583. His brother, George Gilpin, translated from the Dutch that keen satire of Alegambe, The Beehive of the Roman Church.

GILPIN, RICHARD, a native of Cumberland, who took his degree of M.D. at Queen's College, Oxford; after which he was ordained, and had the living of Greystock, in his native county. Being silenced by the Act of Conformity, he resumed the practice of physic at Newcastle, where he died 1697. He wrote 'Demonologia Sacra, or a Treatise on Satan's Temptations,' 1677, and other works.

GILPIN, SAWREY, brother of the Rev. William Gilpin, was born at Carlisle 1733. He was placed with a ship-painter, and his first works which attracted notice were some market groups, which he sketched from his window. He next applied to drawing of animals, particularly the horse, in which he excelled. He also etched the plates in his brother's works, and became a member of the Royal Academy. He died at Brompton 8 March, 1807.

GIOTTO.

GILPIN, WILLIAM, was a native of Carlisle, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his degree of master of arts in 1748. He kept, for many years, a school at Cheam, in Surrey, and afterwards became vicar of Boldre, in Hampshire, and prebendary of Salisbury. He died 5 April, 1804, aged 80. He published—The Life of Bernard Gilpin; Lives of Latimer, Wickliffe, Huss, and Cranmer; Lectures on the Catechism; Exposition of the New Testament; Observations on Picturesque Beauty; Tour to the Lakes; Remarks on Forest Scenery; Essay on Prints; Observations on the River Wye, &c.; Remarks on the Western Parts of England; Sermons; Moral Contrasts. He left the profits of his publications for the endowment of a school at Boldre.

GIN, PIERRE LOUIS CLAUDE, a voluminous French writer and translator, born 1720 at Paris, where he died 19 Nov., 1807.

GINGUENE, PIERRE LOUIS, an active agent in the French Revolution, a poet, and a writer on criticism, was born at Rennes 25 April, 1748, and died at Paris 16 Nov., 1815. His great work is 'The Literary History of Italy.'

GINKELL. See ATHLONE, EARL OF.

GINNANI FRANCIS, Count, an Italian naturalist, born at Ravenna 13 Dec., 1716, died 1765.

GIOBERTI, VINCENZO, an Italian statesman and political writer, born at Turin 5 April, 1801; died at Paris 26 Oct., 1852.

GIOCONDO, FRA GIOVANNI, an architect and antiquary of Verona, died about 1521.

GIOIA, FLAVIO, a Neapolitan, to whom has been erroneously ascribed the invention of the mariner's compass, was born about 1300 at Pastano, near Amalfi.

GIOJA, MELCHIOR, an Italian ecclesiastic and writer on political economy, born at Placenza 27 Sept., 1707; died at Milan 2 Jan., 1820.

GIORDANI, VITALE, a celebrated mathematician, born at Bitonto, in the kingdom of Naples, 13 Dec., 1633; died at Rome 3 Nov., 1711.

GIORDANO, LUCA, a painter, born at Naples 1620. He was the disciple of Spagnoletto, and afterwards of Pietro da Cortona; on leaving whose school he went to Lombardy, to study the works of Correggio, and then repaired to Venice for further improvement in colouring and composition. He imitated Titian so very closely, that his pictures are not easily distinguished from that master. He lived several years in Spain, where he was in high favour with King Philip, whom he accompanied to Naples, and died there in 1704 or 1705.

GIORGI, AUGUSTINE ANTHONY, an ecclesiastical antiquary and oriental scholar, professor of divinity in the college of La Sapienza at Rome, was born 1711, and died 4 May, 1797.

GIORGIONE, a painter, whose name was Giorgio Barbarelli, was born at Castel Franco, in Friuli, 1477. He became the scholar of Giovanni Bellini, but far surpassed him in design and execution. His style is supposed by some to resemble that of Leonardo da Vinci, but others think it approaches nearer to that of Correggio. Died 1511.

GIOTTO, an artist, born at Vespignano, near Florence, 1276. When a boy, he kept sheep, and his genius being discovered in that situation by Cimabue, he took him under his instruction. He acquired such a reputation that Benedict IX. sent for him to Rome, where, besides painting many pictures, he made a ship of mosaic, which is over the portico at the entrance of St. Peter's church, and still known by the name of Giotto's vessel. In 1334 he undertook the famous tower of Santa Maria del Fiore at Florence, for which he was made a citizen, and rewarded with a pension. Died 18 Jan., 1336. Petrarch and Dante were his particular friends.

GIOVIO, PAOLO, in Latin, Paulus Jovius, was born at Como 19 April, 1483. He studied physic, and took his doctor's degree in that faculty; but soon quitted the profession for literary pursuits. Leo X. gave him a pension, and conferred on him the order of knighthood. Adrian VI. presented him to a canonry in the cathedral of Como, and Clement VII. made him bishop of Nocera. Died 11 Dec., 1552. The historical works of Jovius have been printed in two vols. folio, Strasburg, 1556. His other books are 'De Piseibus Romanis,' Latin Poems; Lives of the twelve Visconti lords and dukes of Milan; 'Musæi Joviani Imagines,' Collection of Portraits with Inscriptions; Description of Great Britain, of Muscovy, and of the Lake of Como; and Eulogies of Warriors. His brother, Benedict (born 1471), wrote a history of Como; a Treatise on the Manners of the Swiss, &c.

GIRALDI CINTIO, JOHN BAPTIST, a poet and physician, born at Ferrara 1504; died 30 Dec., 1573. His principal work is 'Hecatommithi,' or a hundred novels in the manner of Boccaccio.

GIRALDI, LILIO GREGORIO, an eminent scholar and Latin poet, born at Ferrara 14 June, 1479; died Feb., 1552.

GIRALDUS DE BARRI, called from his native country Cambrensis, and by his enemies Sylvester, or the Savage, was born at the castle of Manorbeer, in Pembrokeshire, 1147. He was educated first under his uncle, the bishop of St. David's, and next at the university of Paris. On his return he entered into orders, and obtained several preferments. After his uncle's death the chapter of St. David's chose him bishop of that see, but he declined the appointment, knowing that the king would not confirm the election. He then revisited Paris to study the civil and canon law, in which he made a great proficiency. In 1180 he returned to his own country, which was in great confusion, the inhabitants and clergy having joined in expelling the bishop for arbitrary conduct. Girald was then chosen to superintend the diocese, which he governed for three years with great credit, and acquired popularity, though he introduced considerable innovations. The abdicated bishop, however, was restored, and Girald, having resigned his charge, accepted the invitation of Henry II. to be his chaplain. That monarch sent him to Ireland with his son John in 1185; and while there he collected materials for the history and topography of Ireland. In 1187 he returned to Wales, and the year following accompanied Archbishop Baldwin in a journey through the Principality, in order to preach up the crusade to the Holy Land. This was the occasion of his writing the 'Itinerarium Cambriæ.' In 1198 he was again chosen bishop of St. David's, but though he took three journeys to Rome, he could not procure the papal confirmation. Soon after this he retired from the world, and died about 1220. His printed works are — 'Topographia Hiberniæ,' 1602; 'Historia Vercinialis, de expugnatione Hiberniæ,' 1602—these two works are in Hollingshed and Camden; 'Itinerarium Cambriæ,' 1585—this has been translated by Sir Richard Colt Hoare, in 2 vols. 4to., 1809; 'De Laudibus Cambrorum,' 8vo., 1585; 'Gemma Ecclesiastica;' 'Liber secundus de descriptione Walliæ,' published by Wharton in his Anglia Sacra. His works were edited by Mr. J. S. Brewer under the direction of the master of the Rolls, 3 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1861-3. In this edition the highly curious and interesting 'Gemma Ecclesiastica,' was printed for the first time.

GIRARD, GABRIEL, a French ecclesiastic, famous on account of his 'Synonymes Françaises,' and other works on the French language, was born about 1677, and died 4 Feb., 1748.

GIRARDIN, CÉCILE STANISLAS XAVIER, comte de, a French publicist, born at Lunéville 19 Jan., 1762; died 27 Feb., 1847.

GIRARDIN, MADAME DELPHINE DE, née Gay, a popular French romancist and miscellaneous writer, the wife of M. Émile de Girardin, was born 1805; and died 29 June, 1855.

GIRARDON, FRANÇOIS, a French sculptor, born 1628; died 1 Sept., 1715.

GIRAUD, Count JOHN, an Italian dramatist, born at Rome 1776; died 1 Oct., 1834.

GIRODET-TRIOSON, ANNE LOUIS, a French painter, born 5 Jan., 1767; died 9 Dec., 1824.

GIROUST, JACQUES, a French Jesuit, highly distinguished as a preacher, was born 1624; died 29 July, 1689.

GIRTIN, THOMAS, an artist, born in London 18 Feb., 1773; died 9 Nov., 1802.

GIRY, LOUIS, advocate to the parliament of Paris and to the council, and member of the French Academy, was born 1596 at Paris, where he died 1665. He published several translations. His son, François Giry (b. 1638; died 1688), became provincial of the Minims, and wrote a number of religious works, of which the chief is 'Les Vies des Saints.'

GISBERT, BLAISE, a French Jesuit, born at Cahors 21 Feb., 1657; died at Montpellier 27 Feb., 1731. He wrote on the education of a Prince, and on Christian Eloquence.

GISBERT, JEAN, a French Jesuit and theological writer, born at Cahors 1639; died 5 Aug., 1711.

GISBORNE, THOMAS, was born at Derby 31 Oct., 1758, and educated at Harrow School and St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1780; M.A. 1783). In the autumn of 1785 he was presented to the perpetual curacy of Burton-under-Needwood, Staffordshire, and the same year he removed to Yoxall Lodge, near Barton, where he resided till his death. He was appointed a prebendary of Durham 1826; and died 24 March, 1846. Mr. Gisborne wrote 'The Principles of Moral Philosophy investigated, and briefly applied to the constitution of civil society; together with remarks on the principle assumed by Mr. Paley as the basis of all moral conclusions; and on other positions of the same author;' 'Remarks on the late decision of the House of Commons respecting the abolition of the Slave Trade;' 1792; 'An Enquiry into the duties of men in the higher rank and middle classes of society in Great Britain, resulting from their respective stations, professions, and employments;' 'Walks in a Forest;' or poems descriptive of scenery and incidents characteristic of a forest at different seasons of the year;' 'An Enquiry into the duties of the Female Sex;' 'A familiar Survey of the Christian Religion and History, as connected with the introduction of Christianity, and with its progress to the present time; 'Poems Sacred and Moral;' 'Ode to the memory of William Cowper;' 'Sermons;' 'Observations on the plan for training the people to the use of arms, with reference to the subject of Sunday drilling;' 'The Testimony of Natural Theology to Christianity;' 'An Enquiry respecting Love as one of the Divine Attributes.'

GIULIO ROMANO, whose family name was Pippi, an eminent painter, born at Rome 1492. He was the favourite disciple of Raffaele, some of whose works he completed, and who made him his heir. His style is bold and fierce, which led him to prefer warlike subjects. He painted chiefly in fresco, and most of his pictures have suffered by modern pencils. He died at Mantua 1546.

GIUSTINIANI, AGOSTINO, was born at Genoa in 1470. He became a Dominican, and was made bishop of Nebò, in the island of Corsica, by Leo X.; but the revenue being small, he went to France, where he was appointed almoner to the king, and professor of Hebrew at Paris. He was drowned in a voyage from Genoa to Corsica 1536. His principal works are—Palterium Heb. Græc. Arabic. et Chald. cum tribus Latinis interpretationibus et glossis; and Annales de Republica Genoensis.

GIUSTINIANI, BERNARDO, a Venetian statesman, born 1408; died 1489. He wrote a History of Venice, and the Life of his uncle, St. Laurence Justiniani.

GIUSTINIANI, FARIO, a Genoese, born 1568, became bishop of Ajaccio, in Corsica, where he died 3 Jan., 1627. He wrote 'Index universalis matericum Bibli.' and 'Tobias explanatus.'

GIUSTINIANI, ST. LAURENCE. See LAURENCE.

GLABER, RODOLPH, a Benedictine of Cluny, who wrote a chronicle of France down to the year 1046.

GLANDORP, JOHN, a learned German writer, was professor of history at Marburg, where he died 1564.

GLANDORP, MATTHIAS LOUIS, a German physician, born at Cologne 1595; died at Bremen about 1660.

GLANVIL, BARTHOLOMEW, an English Minorite friar of the family of the earls of Suffolk, in the fourteenth century. He wrote a work entitled 'De propnetatibus rerum,' and also sermons printed by Wynkyn de Worde.

GLANVIL, SIR JOHN, was the son of John Glanvil of Tavistock, Devonshire, a judge of the Common Pleas, who died in 1600. He was educated at Oxford, after which he studied at Lincoln's Inn; and, in 1639, was made a serjeant. The year following he was elected speaker of the House of Commons, and in 1641 appointed one of the king's serjeants, and knighted. The ruling party, upon this, deprived him of his seat in parliament, and sent him to prison, where he remained till 1648. At the Restoration he was again made king's serjeant, and would have obtained higher promotion had he not been taken off by death 2 Oct., 1661. His works consist of speeches, arguments, and reports of cases of controverted elections.

GLANVIL, JOHN, grandson of the above, was born at Broad Hinton, Wiltshire, 1664. He received his education at Trinity College, Oxford; from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the bar. He translated Fontenelle's Plurality of Worlds; and wrote some poems, the best of which may be seen in Nichols's Collection. Died 1735.

GLANVIL, JOSEPH, F.R.S., a divine, born 1636, at Plymouth. He took his first degree at Exeter College, and that of master at Lincoln College, Oxford, when he entered into orders. He became a zealous advocate of the Royal Society, of which he was chosen a member; and this connection procured him the rectory of the abbey church at Bath in 1666. To this preferment was afterwards added a prebend of Worcester, and the rectory of Street, in Somersetshire. He was also chaplain to Charles the Second; and would probably have obtained higher advancement, had he not been cut off by a fever 4 Nov., 1680. Besides several pieces in defence of the Royal Society, he published some on witchcraft and apparitions; an essay on preaching; sermons; and a treatise against infidelity. Several of his miscellaneous discourses were printed after his death by Dr. Horneck.

GLANVIL, RANULPH DE, chief justiciary of all England, was a grandson of a judge of the same name, who came over with the Conqueror. The second, Ranulph de Glanvil, after presiding in the court of Henry II., resigned his office, and, at the accession of Richard I. was sent to prison, for the purpose of extorting money from him. The fine paid by the judge is said to have amounted to fifteen thousand pounds, which is scarcely credible. He went afterwards with Richard to the Holy Land, and died there at a very advanced age in 1190. There is a work which goes under his name, entitled 'Tractatus de Legibus Consuetudinibus Regni Angliæ.' To him is attributed the famous writ of assize, or de novel disseisin.

GLAREANUS, HENRY LORIT, was born in the canton of Glaris 1488, and died at Friburg 28 May, 1563. He wrote discourses on classical subjects, and left notes on almost all the ancient poets and historians.

GLAS, JOHN, the founder of a sect, was born at Dundee 21 Sept., 1698. He was educated at St. Andrew's, after which he became minister of a country parish; but in 1727 he published a book, to prove that the civil establishment of religion is inconsistent with the Gospel, for which he was deposed by the general assembly. He now gathered followers, who were called by his name in Scotland; but in England they were denominated Sandemanians, from another leader. Glas died at Dundee in 1773. His works were published at Edinburgh in 4 vols. 8vo.

GLAS, JOHN, called also GEORGE, was born at Dundee 1725. He was brought up a surgeon, but afterwards became master of a merchant vessel, in which he traded to the West Indies. In a voyage from the Brazils to London, he was murdered with his wife and daughter, by his crew, who were executed for the same, at Dublin, in 1795. He printed 'A Description of the Island of Teneriffe.'

GLASSE, GEORGE HENRY, son of Samuel Glasse, D.D., was educated at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1782), and in 1785 was collated to the rectory of Hanwell, Middlesex. He was domestic chaplain to the duke of Cambridge, and also to the earl of Sefton. Died 30 Oct., 1809, aged about 50. He published Greek metrical translations of Mason's 'Caractacus' and Milton's 'Samson Agonistes;' 'Contemplations on the Sacred History, altered from the Works of Bishop Hall,' 4 vols. 12mo., 1792; and a number of single discourses.

GLASSIUS.

GLASSIUS, SOLOMON, a Lutheran divine, was professor of theology at Jena, and afterwards inspector-general of the churches and schools in Save Gotha. He left several works in Latin, the principal being his 'Sacred Philosophy.' Born 1593; died 27 July, 1656.

GLAUBER, JOHN, called Polydore, a landscape painter, born at Utrecht 1646; died at Amsterdam 1726.

GLAUBER, JOHN GOTTLIEB, brother of the above, was also celebrated for his landscapes. He was born at Utrecht 1656, and died at Breslaer 1703.

GLAUBER, JOHN RODOLPH, a chemist of Amsterdam, who, in the vain search for the philosopher's stone, made some important discoveries respecting the composition and analysis of metals, inflammable substances and salts. There is a salt still called after him. Born 1604; died 1668.

GLEDITSCH, JOHN GOTTLIEB, a writer on natural history, was born at Leipsic 5 Feb., 1714; became professor of botany, physiology, and medicine, at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder; died 5 Oct., 1786.

GLEICHEN, FREDERICK WILLIAM VON, a German naturalist and chemist, born at Bayreuth 1714; died 16 June, 1783.

GLEIG, GEORGE, LL.D., bishop of Brechin (1808), and primate of the Scotch Episcopal Church (1816), died at Stirling 9 March, 1840, aged 87. He wrote Papers on Morals and Metaphysics; Life and Opinions of Archibald, Earl of Kellie; Life of William Robertson, D.D.; Supplement to the 3rd edit. of the Encyclopaedia Britannica; Directions for the Study of Theology, &c.

GLEIM, JOHN WILLIAM LOUIS, a German poet, born at Ermsleben 2 April, 1719; died 18 Feb., 1805. His martial songs, in which he celebrates the triumphs of the Prussian arms, are highly esteemed by his countrymen.

GLEN, JOHN, a printer and wood engraver, was a native of Liège. He published 'The Wonders of the City of Rome,' 1631; and a work on ancient and modern Dresses, 1601, with 103 plates.

GLENBERVIE, SYLVESTER DOUGLAS, LORD, was born of a noble family in the county of Aberdeen 24 May, 1743. After receiving a liberal education near the place of his nativity, he entered one of the English inns of court, was called to the bar, and received a silk gown. His first situation under government was that of secretary to the earl of Westmorland, when lord lieutenant of Ireland. In 1800 he was appointed governor of the Cape of Good Hope, but soon relinquished that situation, and in the same year was created Baron Glenbervie of Kincardine. In 1801 he was appointed joint paymaster-general of the forces; and in 1803 surveyor-general of the king's woods and forests. Died 2 May, 1833. He wrote 'An Account of the Wines of Hungary,' in Phil. Trans., 1773; 'History of the Cases of Controverted Elections,' 4 vols.; 'Reports of Cases determined in the court of King's Bench,' 2 vols.; 'Ricciardetto,' a humorous poem, translated from the Italian of Fortiguerra, with an introduction, 1822. He also edited Mr. Mercer's 'Lyric Poems.'

GLENDOWER, OWEN, a Welsh chieftain, who opposed Henry IV. for fourteen years, declaring him to be a usurper of the English throne. Born about 1359; died 20 Sept., 1415.

wich. He served in America during the war, and while acting as lieutenant of the artillery, communicated papers to the Royal Society, for which he was elected a member without fees. He was one of the most active opponents of Sir Joseph Banks in 1784. The next year he encountered the duke of Richmond's plan of fortifications, and thus not only was stopped in his career of promotion, but lost the situation which he had hitherto held. He then went to America, and was employed some time on the works of Halifax; but here also he became involved in disputes, and was obliged to return to Europe. After this he was appointed preceptor in the military academy of the East India Company; which place he also lost by his indiscretion, and died in poor circumstances 23 Nov., 1817. Besides papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he published 'A History of Gunnery,' 8vo.; 'The Doctrine of Universal Comparison and General Proportion,' 4to.; 'The Antecedental Calculus,' 4to.; 'Observations on Construction,' 8vo.; &c.

GLISSON, FRANCIS, M.D., a physician, born at Rampisham, Dorsetshire, in 1596, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he took his doctor's degree 1634. He was appointed regius professor of physic, which office he held forty years. On the breaking out of the civil war he settled at Colchester, from whence he removed to London, and became president of the College of Physicians. Died 1677. His works are—De Rachitidis; De Lymphædectis; De Anatomia prolegomena et Anatomia Hepatis; De naturâ substantiâ energetica; a Treatise of the Stomach and Intestines.

GLOUCESTER, ROBERT OF. See ROBERT.

GLOUCESTER, PRINCE WILLIAM FREDERICK OF BRUNSWICK-LUNENBURG, second DUKE OF, was born at Rome 15 Jan., 1776, being the only son of William Henry duke of Gloucester, third son of Frederick prince of Wales. On leaving the university of Cambridge he entered the army, in which, of course, he gained rapid promotion. He succeeded to the title on his father's death 1805; was elected chancellor of the university of Cambridge 1811; married the Princess Mary, fourth daughter of George III., 23 July, 1816; and died at Bagshot Park 30 Nov., 1834.

GLOVER, JOHN, an English painter, died 9 Dec., 1849, aged 82.

GLOVER, RICHARD, was born in London in 1712. He had his education at Cheam School, and, in his sixteenth year, wrote a poem in honour of Sir Isaac Newton, prefixed to Pemberton's view of that great man's philosophy. In 1737 he published his epic of 'Leonidas,' in nine books, which, afterwards, he extended to twelve. This performance procured him many friends among the great, particularly Frederick prince of Wales. He now distinguished himself as a politician, and was employed by the merchants of London to conduct their application to parliament on the subject of the neglect of trade. In 1744 the duchess of Marlborough bequeathed £500 to Mr. Glover, and a like sum to Mallet, on condition of their writing the life of her husband. Glover renounced his share in the concern and the legacy, but Mallet took the money, and never wrote a line for it. In 1751 our author having sustained losses as a merchant, stood candidate for the chamberlainship, but without success. Two years after this he wrote his tragedy of 'Boadicea,' which was performed only nine nights. His next attempt at dramatic composition was a tragedy called 'Medea,' which met with no better reception. Mr. Glover now obtained a seat in parliament, where he made a considerable figure on commercial subjects, for which the West Indian merchants presented him a valuable piece of plate. Died 25 Nov., 1785. After his death were published another epic of his called 'Athenaid,' being a supplement to 'Leonidas;' and his diary, entitled 'Memoirs of a distinguished literary and political Character.' This was followed by an attempt to show that Glover was the author of Junius's letters.

GLOVER, THOMAS, an heraldic writer, was born in 1543, at Ashford, in Kent. He was made portcullis pursuivant at arms, and afterwards Somerset herald, in which capacity he attended Lord Willoughby with the Order of the Garter to Frederick II. of Denmark, as he also did the earl of Derby on a similar occasion to France. Died 10 or 14 April, 1588. Glover assisted Camden in his pedigrees, and left two treatises, one 'De Nobilitate politica, vel civili,' the other 'A Catalogue of Honour,' published by his nephew, Thomas Miller, the first in 1668, and the second in 1610, folio. Other works of his remain in manuscript. His Ordinary of Arms was augmented and improved by Edmondson, who published it in his Body of Heraldry.

GLUCK, CHRISTOPHER WILLIBALD VON, a musician, born in Bohemia 1716. After visiting Italy he came to England in 1745, and composed here three operas, with little success. He then returned to the Continent, and in 1764 produced his 'Orfeo,' which had a great run. This was followed by other pieces of equal popularity: and on going to Paris, Gluck had the honour of introducing a new style of music in that capital. He died at Vienna 25 Nov., 1787. Besides his operas he wrote letters on music.

GLYCAS, MICHAEL, a Byzantine historian, whose 'Annals' terminate with the reign of Alexis Comnenus, who died 1118.

GLYNN, ROBERT, M.D., a physician and poet, born at Cambridge in 1718, and educated at Eton and King's College, where he took his degree of doctor in medicine in 1752. He continued to reside in his college universally respected for his wit and learning, and died 8 Feb., 1800. Dr. Glynn wrote a poem on the Day of Judgment, which obtained the Scatonian prize in 1757.

GMLIN, JOHN FREDERICK, a physician and chemist, born at Tubingen 8 Aug., 1748, became professor of chemistry and natural history at Göttingen. He published several works on chemistry, mineralogy, and natural history. One of the most celebrated is his edition of the 'Systema Naturæ' of Linnæus. He was also the author of 'A History of Chemistry;' and the world is indebted to him for the discovery of several excellent dyes. Died 1 Nov., 1804.

GMLIN, JOHN GEORGE, a physician and botanist, was a native of Tubingen, became professor at St. Petersburg, and was sent to explore the boundaries of Siberia. He published 'Flora Siberia,' and Travels through Siberia. Born 1709; died 20 May, 1755.

GMLIN, SAMUEL GOTTLIEB, nephew of the preceding, was born at Tubingen 23 June, 1745, became professor at St. Petersburg, and died in prison in Tartary 21 June, 1774. His works are 'Historia Fucorum;' Travels in Russia; A Journey from Astracan to Czarizyn.

GODDEN.

GOAD, JOHN, B.D., was born in London 15 Feb., 1615, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he was elected to St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He also became vicar of St. Giles's, Oxford, and afterwards of Yarnton. In 1661 he was made master of Merchant Taylors' School, but was deprived of that place on turning Catholic 1681. He then kept a private seminary, and died 28 Oct., 1689. He published 'Genealogicon Latinum,' a small dictionary for the use of Merchant Taylors' School; 'Astro-Meteorologica, or Aphorisms and Discourses of the Bodies celestial, their natures and influences,' 1686. The latter work gained him great reputation. The subject of it is a kind of astrology, founded, for the most part, on reason and experiment. After his death was published 'Astro-Meteorologica sana,' 1690.

GOADBY, ROBERT, a printer of Sherborne, Dorsetshire, born 1721; died 12 Aug., 1778. He compiled an Illustration of the Scriptures, 3 vols.; The Universe Displayed; Life of Bamfylde Moore Carew, king of the beggars; and other works.

GOAR, JACQUES, a French Dominican, sometime prior of a convent in the Isle of Chios, was a correspondent of Archbishop Usher, and published several works on the doctrine and ritual of the Eastern Church. Born 1601; died 23 Sept., 1653.

GOBBO, ANDREA, an Italian painter, died 1527.

GOBBO, PIETRO PAOLO CORTONESE, a native of Cortona, eminent as a painter of fruit and landscape, died 1640, aged 60.

GOELENUS, CONRAD, was born in Westphalia 1485, and became professor at Bois le Duc, where he died 25 Jan., 1539. He wrote notes on Cicero's Offices; and published an edition of Lucan, and a Latin translation of Lucian's 'Hermotimus.'

GODDARD, JONATHAN, M.D., was born at Greenwich about 1617. He became a commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, but took his degrees at Cambridge, after which he was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians, where he was appointed lecturer in anatomy. Cromwell, to whom he was attached, made him warden of Merton College, Oxford, from which place he was removed at the Restoration, when he settled at Gresham College, where he had been previously elected professor of physic. He was one of the founders of the Royal Society, and died in London, 24 March, 1674. It is said that he was the first Englishman who made a telescope. He wrote 'A Discourse setting forth the Unhappy Condition of the Practice of Physic in London,' 1669.

GODDEN, THOMAS, D.D., whose real name was Filden, received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded B.A., but being converted to the Catholic religion, he went to Lisbon. There he was created D.D., and chosen president of the English college 1656, which dignity he possessed for several years. Returning to England about the time of the Restoration, he was made chaplain and preacher to Queen Catherine. At the time of Oates's plot he retired to Paris, where he remained about three years. In the reign of James II. he was settled in Somerset House, where he acted as almoner to the queen dowager, and chaplain, as formerly. He continued in that post during the remainder of his days, and died Dec., 1688. He wrote 'Catholics no Idolaters. Or a full refutation of Dr. Stillingfleet's unjust charge of idolatry against the Church of Rome,' 1672; 'A just discharge of Dr. Stilling-fleet's unjust charge of Idolatry; with a discovery of the vanity of his late defence, in a pretended answer to a book, intitled: Catholicks no Idolaters: in a dialogue between Eunuomius, a conformist, and Catharinus, a nonconformist, 8vo., Paris, 1677; Sermon at Somerset House, 20 June, 1686; Treatise concerning the Oath of Supremacy, Ms.

GODEAU, ANTOINE, bishop successively of Grasse and Vence, died 21 April, 1672, aged 67, leaving a great number of works, one of the principal being an Ecclesiastical History. His 'Christian Morals' was translated into English by Basil Kennet.

GODEFROY, DENIS, a jurist, born at Paris 1549. He was a counsellor in the parliament, but becoming a Protestant, he went to Strasburg, where he died 7 Sept., 1622. His works are numerous and valuable. His eldest son, Theodore, turned Catholic, and became counsellor of state in France. He died at Munster 5 Oct., 1649. He wrote several genealogical works. Jacques Godefroy, another son of Denis, adhered to the religion of his father, and became professor of law at Geneva, and a member of the council. He died 24 June, 1652. He wrote some learned treatises on law and general literature. Denis Godefroy, son of Theodore, wrote 'Memoires et Instructions pour servir dans les Negotiations et les Affaires concernant les Droits du Roi.' He died 9 June, 1681. Jean Godefroy, son of the last-mentioned, died Feb., 1732. He edited Philip de Comines's Memoirs; also the Journal de Henri III.; and wrote the Memoirs of Queen Margaret.

GODFREY OF BOUILLON, an illustrious chieftain during the crusades, was born about 1058. After the fall of Jerusalem he was elected king of that city, but from motives of humility he declined the lofty title, being satisfied with the appellation of duke of the Holy Sepulchre. He defeated the Egyptian sultan, and made himself master of all the Holy Land. He made an excellent code of laws for his subjects, and died 18 July, 1100, after enjoying his dignity little more than a year. He is one of the heroes of Tasso's poem.

GODFREY OF VITERBO, chaplain and secretary to Conrad III. and the emperors Frederick and Henry VI., compiled a chronicle from the creation of the world to the year 1186. It was first printed at Basle 1559.

GODFREY, SIR EDMUND BURY, a London magistrate, who had exerted himself in the business of the Popish Plot, was found pierced with his own sword, and several marks of violence on his body, 17 Oct., 1678. His death, which was imputed to the Catholics, who were then supposed to be the authors of all mischief, was generally deemed a much stronger proof of the reality of the plot than anything which the miscreant Oates either did, or could, swear.

GODFREY, THOMAS, a native of Philadelphia, who suggested an improvement in the quadrant, for which he obtained a present of £200 from the Royal Society of London. Died 1749.

GODOLPHIN, JOHN, D.C.L., was born 20 Nov., 1617, at Godolphin, in the Scilly Isles, and educated at Gloucester Hall, Oxford. He became judge of the admiralty in the time of the usurpation, and afterwards judge-advocate. Died 4 April, 1678. His works are—The Holy Limbeck: The Holy Harbour, or a Body of Divinity; A View of the Admiral's Jurisdiction; The Orphan's Legacy, &c., treating of last Wills and Testaments; Reperitorium Canonium.

GODOLPHIN, SIDNEY, a poet, born in Cornwall 1610, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. In the rebellion he joined the king's army, and fell in an engagement at Chagford, Devonshire, in 1643. Besides several poems, he translated The Passion of Dido for Æneas, from Virgil, printed in 1658. Hobbes gives him a high character in his Leviathan.

GODOLPHIN, SIDNEY, earl of Godolphin, and lord high treasurer of England, was born in Cornwall, and educated at Oxford. He was employed in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., though he had voted for the exclusion of the latter in 1680. In the debate concerning the vacancy of the throne, in the convention parliament, he voted for a regency, notwithstanding which he was made first commissioner of the treasury, and on the accession of Queen Anne was placed at the head of that office, which situation he discharged to the public satisfaction. In 1704 he was honoured with the Order of the Garter, and two years after was raised to an earldom, but in 1710 he was removed from his post. Died 15 Sept., 1712.

GODWIN, FRANCIS, son of Thomas, bishop of Bath and Wells, was born at Havington, Northamptonshire, 1561. He became a student of Christ Church, Oxford, and on entering into orders, obtained preferment at Salisbury and Exeter, which enabled him to pursue his favourite subject of ecclesiastical antiquities. In 1601 he published 'A Catalogue of the Bishops of England,' which he dedicated to Lord Buckhurst, by whose interest he procured the bishopric of Landaff, from whence he was translated to Hereford in 1617. Died April, 1633. He published an enlarged edition of his Catalogue in Latin, and in 1743 it was reprinted, with additions and a continuation by Dr. Richardson. His other works are—The Man in the Moon, or a Discourse of a Voyage thither, by Domingo Gonzales; Nunciatus Inanimatus, or the Inanimate Messenger; Rerum Anglicarum Henrico VIII., Edwardo VI., et Maria regnantibus, Annales; A Computation of the Value of the Roman Sesterce and Attic Talent. Dr. Morgan Godwin, archdeacon of Shropshire, the bishop's son, was deprived for his loyalty in the civil wars, and died 1645.

GODWIN, MARY, better known by her maiden name of Woolstonecraft, was born near London 27 April, 1759. After keeping a boarding school she went to Lisbon as companion to a lady. On her return she had recourse to her pen, and produced some translations from the French, and also an essay on female education. Her principal performance, however, was a 'Vindication of the Rights of Women,' a strange book, in which all sight of what is most amiable in the sex is lost. She now fell in love with Fuseli, the painter, though a married man, and not meeting with any return to her passion she went to France, where she formed a connection with one Imlay, an American, who afterwards abandoned her. She next became attached to William Godwin, whom she afterwards married. She died 10 Sept., 1797.

GODWIN, THOMAS, a bishop, born at Oakingham, Berkshire, 1217. After being fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, and master of Brackley School, he practised physic till the accession of Queen Elizabeth, when he entered into orders, was made successively dean of Christ Church, next of Canterbury, and lastly bishop of Bath and Wells. Soon after this last preferment he fell into disgrace for marrying a second wife, which the queen could not forgive. He died at Oakingham 19 Nov., 1590. None of his works have been printed.

GODWIN, THOMAS, D.D., was born in Somersetshire 1587, and educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. In 1609 he became master of the school at Abingdon, Berkshire, for the use of which he published 'Romanae Historiae Anthologia,' or an Exposition of Roman Antiquities; and in 1616 appeared his 'Synopsis Antiquitatum Hebraicarum.' At this time he resigned his school, and obtained the rectory of Brightwell, where he died 1642-3. Besides the above works he wrote Moses and Aaron, or the Kites of the Ancient Hebrews.

GODWIN, WILLIAM, a novelist and miscellaneous writer, born at Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, 3 March, 1756. His father was a dissenting clergyman, and he was bred to the same profession. For a time he officiated to a congregation in the vicinity of London, but soon quitted the pulpit for the more congenial pursuit of literature and politics, with regard to which he held very extreme opinions. His 'Political Justice' (1793) created a sensation; and in the following year his reputation as a writer of fiction was firmly established by his novel 'Caleb Williams.' In 1797 he married Mary Woolstonecraft, with whom he had previously cohabited. [See GODWIN, MARY.] She died, however, the same year, and Godwin soon afterwards published her biography. He remarried in 1801, and afterwards carried on business as a bookseller in Skinner Street, though his pen continued to be wielded as actively and vigorously as ever. After Lord Grey's accession to office, Godwin was appointed yeoman usher of the exchequer, and he died 7 April, 1836. In addition to the works already mentioned, he wrote 'The Enquirer,' a series of essays, 2 vols.; 'St. Leon: a Tale of the sixteenth century'; 'St. Godwin, a Tale'; 'Life of Chaucer'; 'Fleetwood; or the new Man of Feeling'; 'Essay on Sepulchres'; 'Lives of Edward and John Philips, nephews and pupils of Milton'; 'Mandeville: a Tale of the 17th century'; 'Of Population, in answer to Malthus'; 'Cloudesley, a tale'; 'Thoughts on Man'; 'Deloraine, a novel'; 'Lives of the Necromancers'; and some school books published under the name of Edward Baldwin.

GODWIN, WILLIAM, son of the preceding, adopted the profession of journalism, became a reporter on the parliamentary staff of the 'Morning Chronicle,' and contributed some clever papers to the periodicals. Died 1832.

GOEKINGK, LEOPOLD FREDERICK GUNTHER VON, a German poet, born at Gröningen 1745; died 18 Feb., 1828.

GOEKKE, WILLIAM, a bookseller of Amsterdam, author of a History of the Jewish Church, &c., was born 1635, and died 3 May, 1711.

GORERTZ, GEORGE HENRY DE, baron de Schlitz, a Swedish nobleman of great talents and ambition, was a native of Holstein. He became the favourite and minister of Charles XII., to gratify whose passion for war he had recourse to the most oppressive measures. On the death of that monarch he was beheaded, 2 March, 1719.

GOES, DAMIAN DE, a Portuguese historian and traveller, born 1501; died Dec., 1560.

GOES, HUGO VANDER, a celebrated Flemish painter, flourished about 1470.

GOETHE.

GOES, WILLIAM VANDER, Goetius, a jurist and philologist of Leyden, whose notes on Petronius are much admired. Born 1611; died 13 Oct., 1686.

GOETHE, JOHANN WOLFGANG VON, the greatest of German writers, was born at Frankfurt-on-the-Maine 28 Aug., 1749. His father was in respectable circumstances, and had a taste for literature and art. Religion, music, drawing, languages, and poetry occupied his thoughts at a very early age, and produced in him some interesting individual manifestations. Being sent to the university of Leipsic, instead of studying jurisprudence, he gave all his attention to poetry. A little piece called 'The Lover's Humour,' and a comedy entitled 'The Accomplices' next appeared. Having made some attempts at etching, the acid exhalations injured his health, and in order to recover it he was sent to the residence of a lady named Klettenberg, the 'fair saint,' whose confessions are recorded in 'Wilhelm Meister.' Under her influence Goethe became a mystic, and had actually some thoughts of founding a new religion on the basis of the Alexandrian philosophy. He was thus led to the study of natural science, and when he went to Strasburg in 1768, to finish his legal studies, he really attended only to anatomy and chemistry. In 1773, having returned home, he published his play of 'Götz Von Berlichingen,' and in the following year the novel of 'Werther,' and became at once famous. The prince of Weimar invited him to his court in 1775, made him a privy councillor in 1779, took him with him to Switzerland, and ultimately included him in his ministry. In 1786 Goethe went to Italy, and stayed there two years. He declined honourable marks of distinction from different sovereigns, and died 22 March, 1832, after a long life devoted almost entirely to literature, science, and art. Goethe's chief works may be thus briefly noticed. 'Werther' was occasioned by the suicide of a young gentleman, and the English translation gives but little notion of its immense power and energy. 'Götz von Berlichingen' has for its subject the times of the Emperor Maximilian, and introduces the Fehmgericht, or secret tribunal of the Middle Ages. The drama of 'Egmont' is immortalised by an exquisite female character, 'Clara.' Goethe also wrote 'Clavigo,' a domestic tragedy, and 'Stella,' a sentimental comedy. 'Iphigenia auf Tauris' belongs to a class of works that he wrote later in life on classic models, and is a masterpiece of its kind. 'Torquato Tasso' belongs to the same division. 'Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship' is a novel of a remarkable and indescribable kind, containing much admirable criticism, and the character of 'Mignon,' the original of Scott's 'Fenella' and Victor Hugo's 'Esmeralda.' 'Hermann and Dorothea' is a charming story of humble life told in hexameter verse. 'Faust,' the most memorable of all Goethe's works, represents the agony of a student toiling after inaccessible knowledge, and then, in despair, plunging into sensuality. Goethe is the author of numerous other works, as well as a great number of small poems, critical papers, &c. In natural science he was equally distinguished. His correspondence with Schiller, Zelter, and Bettine Brentano (a child), forms another interesting class of illustrations of his wonderfully rich, universal, and profound mind. He may be almost considered as the creator of German literature, and his life as its history to the year 1832. English translations of his principal works have been published in Bohn's 'Standard Library.'—Nat. Cycl.

GOETZE, GEORGE HENRY, a Protestant divine, born at Leipzig 1668; died at Lubec 1728 or 1729. He published several collections of literary anecdotes, and other works.

GOETZE, JOHN AUGUSTUS EPHRAIM, a naturalist, who distinguished himself by his microscopical discoveries, was born at Ascherleben 28 May, 1731, and became a minister at Quedlinburg, where he died 27 June, 1793.

GOFFE, THOMAS, a divine and poet, was born in Essex about 1592, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he went to Christchurch, Oxford, where he took his degree of B.D., and was presented to the living of East Clandon, in Surrey, where he died 26 July, 1629. He published sermons, and two Latin orations, one at the funeral of Sir Henry Savile, and the other at that of Dr. Godwin, canon of Christchurch. Five of his tragedies were printed after his death.

GOGUET, ANTOINE YVES, a councillor to the parliament of Paris, was born in that city 18 Jan., 1716, and died 2 May, 1758, just after the publication of his 'Origines des Loix, des Arts, des Sciences, et de leurs Progrès chez les Anciens Peuples.' This ingenious work was translated into English by Dr. Thompson, 3 vols., 1761.

GOLDAST, VON HEMINGSFELD MELCHIOR, a Swiss author, who published a number of historical collections. He was born near Bischofszell 6 Jan., 1576, and died at Bremen 11 Aug., 1635.

GOLDING, ARTHUR, a poet and translator, was son of John Golding, esq., of Essex, and was born in London in or about 1536. It is probable that he received his education in Queen's College, Cambridge. In 1563 he was receiver for his nephew, Edward de Vere, earl of Oxford, and no doubt resided with that nobleman at Cecil House, in the Strand. He died after 1605. Golding was, perhaps, the most voluminous translator of his age, and his metrical versions are so excellent that it is to be regretted he did not turn his attention to original composition. His principal work is 'The XV. Bookes of P. Ovidius Naso, entytuled Metamorphosis, translated out of Latin into Englishe meter,' 1565.—Athen. Cantab.

GOLDMAN, NICHOLAS, a mathematician, born at Breslau 1623; died at Leyden 1669.

GOLDONI, CHARLES, a celebrated comic poet, was born at Venice in 1707. His father intended him for his own profession, which was that of a physician, but the youth being averse from that study, was placed with a lawyer, whom he soon quitted. On becoming possessed of a good fortune, he devoted himself wholly to theatrical pursuits, and produced a number of comedies, which were extremely well received. He reformed the Italian stage, after which he went to Paris, where he had the grant of a pension, and wrote some comedies in the French language. He was also appointed Italian teacher to the Princesses Elizabeth and Clotilde. Died 8 Jan., 1793. An edition of his works was printed at Leghorn in 1791, in 31 vols. 8vo. An interesting biography of this writer, by Edward Copping, was published at London in 1866.

GOLDSBOROUGH, GODFREY, a native of Cambridge, was educated at Trinity College under Archbishop Whitgift. He was appointed bishop of Gloucester 1598, and died 24 May, 1604.

GOMAR.

GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, the second son of a clergyman of the established church in Ireland, was born at Fermoy, co. Longford, 29 Nov., 1728. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his bachelor's degree 1749, after which he went to Edinburgh, and next to Leyden, from whence he travelled into Italy. Where he obtained his degree of bachelor of medicine is not known; but in 1756 he arrived in London, and became usher in a school; afterwards an assistant to a chemist; and lastly an author by profession. One of his first performances was an 'Essay on the present State of polite Literature,' 1759. After this he published a great number of works, the principal of which were, 'A History of England in a series of Letters;' 'The Traveller, a Poem;' the novel of 'The Vicar of Wakefield;' and the 'Deserted Village,' a poem. He now turned his attention to the drama, and brought out his comedy of 'The Good-natured Man,' which was followed by 'She Stoops to Conquer,' both performed with applause. One of his last publications was 'The History of the Earth and Animated Nature,' an elegantly written, but incorrect, performance. Besides these works, original and compiled, he was the author of a Life of Parnell; another of Bolingbroke; and one of Beau Nash; an ingenious paper called the Citizen of the World; and the Histories of Rome and Greece. Goldsmith was the friend of Johnson, Reynolds, and Burke, and a member of the Literary Club established by the former. He died at his chambers, in the Temple, 4 April, 1774, and was buried in the church-yard of the Temple, but a monument was afterwards erected to his memory in Westminster Abbey.

GOLIUS, JAMES, an illustrious scholar, born at the Hague 1596. He was educated at Leyden, and in 1622 went as interpreter to the Dutch embassy in Morocco. On his return home he was appointed professor of Arabic at Leyden, which university gave him permission to travel four years in the Levant. In consideration of his extraordinary merit he was also nominated professor of mathematics, and interpreter of the oriental languages to the United States. Died 28 Sept., 1667. His works are—An Arabic Lexicon, with a new edition of Erpenius's Grammar; an Arabic Version of the Protestant Confession of Faith, &c.; A Persian Dictionary; History of the Saracens, translated from Elmacin; Life of Tamerlane; Alragan's Astronomy, with a commentary.

GOLIUS, PETER, brother of the preceding, embraced the Catholic religion, and became a Carmelite. He went into Syria, where he founded a monastery on Mount Libanus, but afterwards returned to Rome, and assisted in printing the Arabic Bible. He then went to India as a missionary, and died at Surat about 1673. He translated the 'Imitation of Christ' into Arabic.

GOLTZIUS, HUBERT, a German painter and numismatist, born at Venloo 30 Oct., 1526; died at Bruges 24 March, 1583.

GOMAR, FRANCIS, a Calvinistic divine, born at Bruges 30 Jan., 1563, and after studying at Strasbourg, Heidelberg, Oxford, and Cambridge, was appointed theological professor at Leyden 1594. He had a great contest with his colleague, James Arminius, concerning predestination and grace; and, being unable to hinder Vorstius from being substituted in the place of Arminius, quitted Leyden, and retired, in 1611, to Middleburg, where he was minister and professor. Gomar taught afterwards at Saumur and Groningen, where he died 11 Jan., 1641. He married three times, but had children only by his second wife. He had a great share in the decisions of the synod of Dort; and his followers, who were numerous, were called 'Gomarists,' 'Rigid Calvinists,' and 'Counter Remonstrants.' His works were printed at Amsterdam, folio, 1664.

GOMBAULD, JEAN OGIER DE, a French poet, one of the first members of the French Academy, was born at St. Just-de-Lussac, in Saintonge, about 1576, and died at Paris 1666.

GOMBERVILLE, MARIN LE ROI DE, a French writer of poetry, history, and romances, was born at Paris 1600, and died 14 June, 1674. He was one of the original members of the Academy.

GOMERSAL, ROBERT, a divine and poet, born in London 1600. He became a student of Christchurch, Oxford, where he proceeded B.D. 1627; after which he was presented to the vicarage of Thorncombe, Devon. Died 1646. His works are 'Sermons,' 1634; a tragedy called 'Lodowick Sforza, duke of Milan,' 1632; and 'The Levite's Revenge,' a poem.

GOMEZ, MADELAINE ANGLIQUE POISSON DE, a French romanticist, born at Paris 22 Nov., 1684; died at St. Germain-en-Laye 28 Dec., 1770. The best known of her works are 'Les Journées Amusantes;' 'Anecdotes Persanes;' 'Les cent Nouvelles nouvelles;' 'La Belle Assemblée.'

GOMEZ, SEBASTIAN, a painter, was born at Seville about 1616, being the son of a negro slave of the celebrated Murillo, who, noticing his talents, granted him his liberty, and allowed him to become one of his pupils. He survived his master, and died about 1685.

GOMEZ DE CASTRO, ALVAREZ, a Spanish writer, was born near Toledo 1515; died 30 Nov., 1580. He was patronised by Philip II., at whose command he prepared an edition of the works of St. Isidore; but his principal performance is the Life of Cardinal Ximenes.

GOMEZ DE CIUDAD REAL, ALVAREZ, a Spanish poet, born at Guadalajara 1488; died 24 July, 1538. The best of his works, which are in Latin, is a poem on the Order of the Golden Fleece.

GOMPERTZ, BENJAMIN, F.R.S., an English mathematician, for many years actuary of the Alliance Life Office, died in London 14 July, 1865, aged 67. Several papers by him are printed in the Philosophical Transactions.

GONÇALVES, JOAQUIM AFFONSO, a Portuguese missionary to China, born 1780; died at Macao 3 Oct., 1841. He composed a valuable grammar and dictionary of the Chinese language.

GONDI. See RETZ.

GONET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a learned Dominican of Bezers, in France, died 24 Jan., 1621, aged 65. His chief work is a system of divinity, entitled 'Clypeus Theologiæ Thomisticæ.'

GONÇORA Y ARGOTE, LOUIS, a celebrated Spanish poet, born 1561, at Cordova, where he died 24 May, 1627. He took orders late in life, and became a prebendary in the cathedral of his native city. His poetry is characterised by affectation in the use of figures, a false sublime, and an obscure and embarrassed diction.

GONTHIER, JOHN, a German physician, born

at Andernach 1487; died at Strasburg 4 Oct., 1574.

GONZAGA, LUCRETIA, a learned lady, who, at the age of fourteen, married John Paul Manfroni, one of the conspirators against the duke of Ferrara, for which he was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Lucretia made uncommon exertions to procure his pardon, but in vain, and he died in prison, in 1552. An edition of her letters was printed at Venice in 1552, from which it appears that she understood the learned languages. She died at Mantua 1576.

GONZALES, THYRSIS, a Spanish Jesuit, general of his order, died at Rome 24 Oct., 1705. He wrote a treatise on Probabilities, &c.

GONZALO HERNANDEZ DE CORDOVA, sur-named the Great Captain, was descended from one of the noblest families in Spain, and born 1453. The resources of his genius were immense. After important services rendered to Ferdinand V. of Arragon, both in Spain and Italy, that prince, who was envious and ungrateful, listened to his enemies, and Gonzalo died in retirement in Grenada 2 Dec., 1515.

GOOCH, Sir THOMAS, a bishop and baronet, was a native of Great Yarmouth, and received his education at Caius College, Cambridge, where he obtained a Fellowship. Becoming chaplain to Compton, bishop of London, that prelate collated him to the rectory of the united parishes of St. Clement, Eastcheap, and St. Martin Organs, London. About 1713 he was nominated chaplain in ordinary to Queen Anne, and the next year installed archdeacon of Essex. In 1716 he was elected master of Caius College, and he served the office of vice-chancellor of the university for three years in succession—1717, 1718, 1719. Subsequently he was appointed canon residentiary of Chichester, and in 1720 prebendary of Canterbury. He was consecrated bishop of Bristol 1737, and translated to Norwich the following year, on which occasion he resigned all his other preferments except the mastership of Caius College. He was translated to the see of Ely, Mar. 6, 1747-8, and died 14 Feb., 1754. He only published two detached sermons.—Cole's MSS.

GOOD, JOHN MASON, M.D., was the son of a dissenting minister, and was born at Epping, Essex, 25 May, 1764. Bred to the medical profession, he started as a general practitioner at Sudbury, in Suffolk, but in 1793 removed to Guildford Street, London, where he gradually acquired a high reputation both as a physician and man of letters. He received the degree of M.D. from Marischal College, Aberdeen, and died at Shepperton, Middlesex, 2 Jan., 1827. So persevering and industrious was he, that he not only amassed a fortune by the practice of his profession, but also published a large number of works of great merit, besides contributing constantly to magazines and newspapers. Among his works are 'The Book of Nature,' 3 vols., 1820; a translation of Lucretius; 'Song of Songs; or Sacred Idyls; translated from the original Hebrew, with notes critical and explanatory;' 'Memoirs of Dr. Geddes;' 'The Book of Job, literally translated from the original Hebrew, and restored to its natural arrangement.' The best of his professional publications are 'The Study of Medicine,' 4 vols.; and his 'Physiological System of Nosology.' In conjunction with Dr. O. Gregory (who afterwards became his biographer) and Mr. N. Bosworth, he edited 'Pantalogia, or Universal Dictionary of Arts, Sciences, and Words,' 12 vols.

GOOD, WILLIAM, a Jesuit, was a native of Glastonbury, Somersetshire. Soon after the accession of Elizabeth he renounced his ecclesiastical preferments, and going to Tournay, joined the Society of Jesus 1562. He afterwards laboured in Ireland, Belgium, and Rome, being appointed confessor to the English college in the latter city. Died at Naples 5 July, 1586. He published 'Ecclesie Anglicane Trophæa,' Rome, 1584; and left in MS. An Abstract of the Lives of the British Saints.—Obit.

GOODAL, WALTER, a Scotch antiquary, born in Bantshire about 1706. After studying at Aberdeen, he was appointed sub-librarian in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh. He edited Crawford's 'Memoirs,' Fordun's 'Scotichronicon,' and other works, but his chief publication is 'An Examination of the Letters said to be written by Mary Queen of Scots to James Earl of Bothwell.' Died 28 July, 1766.

GOODALL, EDWARD, an eminent engraver, born at Leeds Sept., 1795; died in London 27 Dec., 1868.

GOODE, FRANCIS, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow (B.A. 1820; M.A. 1823). Taking orders, he was appointed evening lecturer at Clapham, and in 1834 elected preacher at the Female Orphan Asylum. Died 19 Nov., 1842, aged 45. Besides some detached sermons, he published 'Sermons on Christian Doctrines, Practice, and Experience;' and 'The Better Covenant practically considered, from Hebrews, vii. 6, 10—12, with a Supplement on Phil. ii. 12, 13.'

GOODE, WILLIAM, D.D., dean of Ripon, held a distinguished place in the State Church of England, both as a writer and preacher. The son of the Rev. William Goode, rector of St. Andrew's and St. Ann's, Blackfriars, he was born 1800, and educated at St. Paul's School, and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1822). He took orders in 1825, and held in succession three livings in the city of London, the last being St. Margaret's, Lothbury. For many years he was editor of the Christian Observer, being a strenuous advocate of evangelical principles. He was promoted by Lord Palmerston to the deanery of Ripon 1860; and died 13 Aug., 1868.

GOODEN, JAMES, an English mathematician, entered the Society of Jesus 1680, and was professed 1707. For several years he taught philosophy and mathematics at Liege, and he was rector of St. Omer's from 1722 till 1728, when he was declared superior of the House of Probation at Ghent. Died 11 Oct., 1730, aged 60. He published 'Trigonometria plana et spherica,' 12mo., Liege, 1704.—Obit.

GOODEN, PETER, a Catholic divine, was born near Manchester, and educated in the English college at Lisbon. Being ordained priest, he was sent to England on the mission, and resided for the most part at Audcliff, near Lancaster. In the reign of James II. he was appointed chaplain to the duke of Berwick's regiment, and held frequent conferences with several learned divines of the Anglican communion, especially Dr. Stillingfleet and Dr. Clegg. The resolution of 1688 obliged Mr. Gooden to retire to his old place of abode in Lancashire, where he died 29 Dec., 1692. He wrote Controversial Letters against Mr. Birch, parson of Preston; and An Account of a Conference with Dr. Stillingfleet.

GOODMAN, CHRISTOPHER, a Puritan, born at Chester about 1520. He was educated at Oxford, but, on the accession of Mary, he went abroad, and was one of the exiles at Geneva who joined Knox in opposing the use of the English liturgy. When Elizabeth came to the throne he went to Scotland, where he was appointed minister of St. Andrew's till 1615, when he returned to England, and soon came into trouble for publishing a book exciting subjects to rebellion against ungodly princes. After recanting his errors he went to Chester, where he died in 1601 or 1602. He also wrote a 'Commentary on Amos.'

GOODMAN, GODFREY, an English prelate, born at Ruthin, Denbighshire, 1583. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected from thence to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1620 he was made dean of Rochester, and, in 1625, bishop of Gloucester; but, being suspected of Catholicism, he was suspended by Archbishop Laud. After the rebellion he avowed himself a Catholic, and died in that communion 19 Jan., 1655. He wrote 'Arguments against Hakewil's Apology for Providence;' a 'Discourse on the Trinity;' an Account of his Sufferings; and Sermons.

GOODRICH, THOMAS, an English bishop, was born in Lincolnshire, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He was chosen bishop of Ely in March, 1533-4, and proved a zealous promoter of the Reformation. He was made lord chancellor 1551, and, though the seals were taken from him by Mary, he was suffered to retain his bishopric. Died 10 May, 1554.—Athen. Cantab.

GOODWIN, IGNATIUS, an English Jesuit, who died in London 26 Nov., 1667, aged 65, was author of 'Lapis Lydius Controversiarum,' 24mo., Liege, 1656; and 'Pia Exercitatio Divini Amoris,' 1656.—Obit.

GOODWIN, JOHN, was born in 1593, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. In 1635 he became vicar of St. Stephen, Coleman Street, London, from which he was ejected in 1645 for refusing to administer baptism and the Lord's Supper promiscuously. Though a zealous Arminian, he justified the murder of Charles I., for which, at the Restoration, he was exempted from pardon, but no measures were taken against him. Died 1665. His principal works are 'Redemption Redeemed,' and 'The Divine Authority of the Scriptures.'

GOODWIN, THOMAS, a nonconformist of the Independent persuasion, was brother of the preceding, and born at Rolesby, Norfolk, 1600. He was of Christ's College, Cambridge, and afterwards of Catherine Hall, where he obtained a fellowship; but, in 1634, he went to Holland, and became master of the Independent congregation at Arnheim. When parliament put down the church, he returned, was made a member of the Westminster Assembly and president of Magdalen College, Oxford. He was a great favourite with Cromwell, whom he attended in his last moments. At the Restoration he was deprived of his place at Oxford, on which he removed to London, and died 23 Feb., 1678-9. His works, which are rigidly Calvinistic, were printed in 5 vols. folio.

GOOGE, BARNABY, son of Robert Googe, rector of Lincoln, was born in or about 1540, at Alvingham, Lincolnshire. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and New College, Oxford. Afterwards he travelled through France and Spain, returning to England about 1562, and becoming a retainer of Sir William Cecil, to whom he was related. He was one of the queen's gentlemen-pensioners in 1563. In that year much controversy was occasioned by his attempt to marry Mary, the daughter of Thomas Darrell, esq., without her parents' consent, and it being alleged that she was under a previous contract to marry Sampson Lennard. In consequence of Sir William Cecil's interposition with Archbishop Parker, that prelate decided the case summarily, and, it seems, in Googe's favour, as he eventually married the lady. Googe resided at Staple Inn in 1570. In 1573 Lord Burghley sent him over to Ireland as his 'intelligencer,' or letter-writer, to keep him informed of the doings of the earl of Essex. In 1582 he was provost-marshal of the Presidency Court of Connaught. He appears to have been living in 1588, but the date of his decease has not been ascertained. He published the 'Zodiake of Life,' translated from Marcellus Palingenius; 'Eglogs, Epytaphes, and Sonnetes'; 'The Popish Kingdome, or reign of Antichrist. Written in Latine Verse by Naoegeorgus [i.e. Kirchmaier], and englyshed by Barnabe Googe,' 1570; 'The Spiritual Husbandrie of Thomas Naoegeorgus'; 'Foure Bookes of Husbandrie,' from the Latin; and some minor works.—Athen. Cantab.

GOOL, JOHN VAN, a painter, born at the Hague 1685; died 1757.

GORDIAN I., born A.D. 157, was proclaimed emperor of Rome 238, together with his son, Gordian II.; but they both died the same year, and were succeeded by Gordian III., who reigned till his death in 244.

GORDON, SIR ADAM, a baronet and divine, born in Scotland 1745. He was educated at Westminster School, and next at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took the degree of master of arts in 1777. On entering into orders he served the curacy of St. Mary-le-Bone; after which he obtained the rectory of Hinckworth, in Hertfordshire, and that of West Tilbury, in Essex, to which was added a prebend at Bristol. Late in life he succeeded to the title of baronet. He died in 1817. Sir Adam published 'The Contrast, or an Antidote to Lord Chesterfield's Letters,' 2 vols.; 'Plain Sermons on Practical Subjects,' 2 vols.; 'Sermons on the Fasts and Festivals,' 8vo.; 'Homilies of the Church of England modernized,' 2 vols.; 'Miscellaneous Sermons and Tracts.'

GORDON, ALEXANDER, a Scotch antiquary, who lived many years in Italy, and, in 1736, was appointed secretary to the Society for the Encouragement of Learning. In 1741 he went to Carolina, where he held several offices, and had some grants of land. Died about 1750. His works are Itinerarium Septentrionale, or a Journey through Scotland; The Lives of Pope Alexander VI. and his son Cæsar Borgia; A History of Amphitheatres; Essay explaining the Hieroglyphical Figures on the Coffin of an Ancient Mummy; Twenty-five plates of Egyptian Antiquities.

GORDON, ANDREW, professor of philosophy in the Scotch monastery of Benedictines at Erfurt, was born 1712, near Aberdeen, and died 1751. His works are 'Phænomena Electricitatis Exposita'; 'Philosophia utilis et jucunda,' 3 vols.; Impartial Account of the Origin of the War in Great Britain in 1745; 'Physicæ experimentalis Elementa.' He was the first who used a cylinder instead of a globe in the electrical apparatus.

GORDON, GEORGE, commonly called Lord George Gordon, was the son of Cosmo George, duke of Gordon, and born in Dec., 1750. He entered the navy when young, but quitted it on account of some dispute with Lord Sandwich. He afterwards sat in parliament for Ludgershall, and distinguished himself by some strange speeches against the ministers. But what chiefly brought him into notice was his opposition to the bill for granting further toleration to Catholics. His intemperance on this occasion proved the cause of the riots in 1780, for which he was tried and acquitted. In 1786 he was excommunicated for not appearing as a witness in a cause. In 1788 he was found guilty of publishing a libel against the queen of France, on which he fled to Holland. A little after this he returned to England, and was taken in the disguise of a Jew, which profession he had adopted, and was committed to Newgate, where he died 1 Nov., 1793. His last moments were embittered by the knowledge that he could not be buried among the Jews, although he had zealously performed the rites and duties of their religion.

GORDON, JAMES, D.D., a Scotch Jesuit, born 1541, being the fifth son of George fourth earl of Huntly. Leaving Scotland, he repaired to Rome, and there joined the Society of Jesus 1563. After filling the highest offices in various colleges of the society in France, he was appointed nuncius apostolicus for Ireland, and prefect of the Scotch mission. His death occurred 16 April, 1620, at Paris. Father Gordon wrote 'Controversiarum Christianæ Fidei adversus hujus temporis Hæreticos Epitome.'—Oliver; Anderson; Dodd.

GORDON, JAMES, another Scotch Jesuit, admitted into the Society, at Paris, 1573. After teaching theology with distinguished reputation, he was appointed rector of Toulouse and then of Bordeaux College; and in his old age he was summoned to court to be confessor to Louis XIII. Died at Paris 17 Nov., 1641, æt. 88. He wrote 'Opus Chronologicum, Annorum seriem, Regnorum mutationes, et Rerum toto orbe gestarum memorabilium Seriem Annuque a Mundi exordio ad nostra usque tempora complectens,' 2 vols. folio, 1613 and 1614; 'De Catholica veritate,' 1623; 'Biblia Sacra, cum Commentariis,' 3 vols. folio, Paris, 1632; 'Opuscula tria, Chronologicum, Historicum, Geographicum,' 1636.—Ibid.

GORDON, JAMES, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born at the Enzie, Banffshire, 1664. He was nominated coadjutor to Bishop Nicholson, vicar-apostolic of Scotland, 1705; consecrated bishop of Nicopolis, in Armenia Minor, 11 April, 1706, at Montefascone, in Italy, by Cardinal Francesco Barberini, bishop of Palestrina; and succeeded as sole vicar-apostolic of Scotland Oct., 1718. On the subdivision of the kingdom into two distinct vicariates, in Feb., 1731, Bishop Gordon became the first vicar-apostolic of the Lowland district of Scotland. He died at Drummond Castle, Perthshire, 18 Feb. (N.S. 1 March), 1746.

GORDON, JOHN, D.D., son of Alexander Gordon, bishop of Galloway, was born in Scotland 1544, and educated at St. Andrews, Oxford, Paris, and Orleans. He resided for many years in France, where he obtained notoriety on account of his zeal for the reformed religion. James I., soon after his accession to the English crown, made him dean of Salisbury, with episcopal jurisdiction over eighty parishes. Died 3 Sept., 1619. He wrote several polemical works.

GORDON, JOHN, D.D., of the family of Coldwells, Aberdeenshire, was royal chaplain at New York, when, on a vacancy in the see of Galloway, a congé d'être was issued 3 Dec., 1687. Gordon was accordingly elected bishop 4 Feb., 1687-8, and consecrated at Glasgow by Archbishop Paterson. At the Revolution the new bishop followed King James II. to Ireland and France, and while residing at St. Germain's he read the liturgy of the Church of England to such British Protestants as resorted to his lodgings. Subsequently, however, he was introduced to the illustrious Bossuet, who converted him to the Catholic religion. It appears that he was privately received into the Roman Church during his sojourn in France, though at a later period he made a public abjuration of Protestantism before Sacripanti, the cardinal protector of the Scotch nation. At his conditional baptism the quondam bishop took the additional name of the reigning pontiff, for he ever afterwards signed himself John Clement Gordon. The Pope, wishing to confer some benefice pension on the new convert, caused the Congregation of the Holy Office to institute an inquiry into the validity of Gordon's Protestant orders. A long investigation took place in consequence, the result being that his orders were declared null from the beginning. This decree of the Holy Office was issued 17 April, 1704. After this Gordon received the sacrament of confirmation, and Clement XI. conferred on him the tonsure, giving him the benefice of the abbey of St. Clement, by reason of which Gordon commonly went by the name of the Abate Clemente. It is observable that he never received other than minor orders. Died at Rome 1726, aged 82. He was author of a controversial piece entitled 'Pax Vobis, or Gospel Liberty.'

GORDON, SIR JOHN WATSON, a Scottish painter, was born at Edinburgh 1790, being eldest son of Captain James Watson, R.N. He studied in the Trustees' Academy, and devoted himself to portrait-painting, in which he attained a high degree of excellence. In 1850 he was elected president of the Royal Scottish Academy, receiving at the same time the honour of knighthood. He died at Edinburgh 1 June, 1864.

GORDON, LUCY LADY DUFF, daughter of Mrs. Austin, and formerly known by her maiden name of Lucy Austin, became the wife of Sir Alexander Duff Gordon, Bart. Inheriting, on the maternal side, much of the literary ability of the Taylors of Norwich, she for many years followed in the footsteps of her mother as a careful translator, and introduced some valuable works to English readers. Among these were Niebuhr's 'Greek Legends,' 'The Amber Witch,' 'The French in Algiers,' 'an abridgment of Feuerbach's 'Criminal Trials,' Ranke's 'History of Prussia,' 'Stella and Vanessa,' a novel from the French of Léon de Wailly; 'Ferdinand and Maximilian,' by Ranke; 'The Village Doctor,' by the countess d'Arbouville; and Moltke's 'Russian Campaigns of 1828-9 on the Danube.' Lady Gordon's original works are 'Letters from the Cape,' published in 'Vacation Tourists,' 1864; and 'Letters from Egypt,' 1865. She died at Cairo 14 July, 1869.

GORDON, SIR ROBERT, Bart., of Gordonstoun, a Scotch antiquary, born 14 May, 1580; died 1656. His 'Genealogical History of the Family of Sutherland' was printed in 1813.

GORHAM.

GORDON, ROBERT, of Straloch, in Scotland, a geographical and antiquarian writer, was born 14 Sept., 1580, and died August, 1661. He undertook the supervision and correction of an atlas of Scotland, published under the title of 'Theatrum Scotiae.' Some of his antiquarian pieces have been printed by the Spalding Club.

GORDON, THOMAS, a political writer, born at Kirkcudbright, Scotland. He became a teacher of languages in London, and afterwards amanuensis to Trenchard, with whom he published a work called 'Cato's Letters,' and also another periodical work entitled 'The Independent Whig'—two publications tending to bring religion into contempt. After Trenchard's death, Gordon married his widow, and got possession of her estate. He was also made commissioner of wine licences, and received many favours from Walpole, whose measures he defended. Died 28 July, 1750. Besides the above works, he published a translation of Tacitus, and another of Sallust. Two collections of his tracts have been also printed, with the titles of 'The Cordial for Low Spirits,' and 'The Pillars of Priestcraft and Orthodoxy shaken.'

GORDON, WILLIAM, an Independent minister, born at Hitchin, Hertfordshire, 1729. After presiding over a congregation at Ipswich he went to New England in 1772, and during the revolutionary struggle took a very active part against his native country. Died 19 Oct., 1807. He wrote 'The History of the Rise, Progress, and Establishment of the Independence of the United States of America,' 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1788.

GORDONIO, BERNARDUS DE, a French physician, who flourished at Montpellier about 1305.

GORE, Mrs. CATHARINE GRACE FRANCES, a distinguished English novelist and dramatist, was born 1799, and became the wife of Capt. C. A. Gore, of the 1st Life Guards, who died in 1846. She died at Linwood, Lyndhurst, 29 Jan., 1861. Mrs. Gore published between sixty and seventy separate works, extending to nearly two hundred volumes. The best of these are novels of fashionable life.

GORE, THOMAS, a writer on heraldry, born at Alderton, Wilts, 1631, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn. He died at Alderton 31 March, 1684. His works are, A Table, showing how to blazon a coat ten several ways; Series Alphabetica, Latino-Anglica, Nomina Gentilitiorum, sive cognominum plurimarum familiarum quae multos per annos in Anglia flourere; Catalogus in certa capita, seu classes, alphabetico ordine conninctas plerumque omnium aethorum (tam antiquorum quam recentiorum), qui de re Heraldica Latine, Gallice, Ital., Hisp. &c.; Nomenclator Geographicus.

GORGASII, of Leontine, in Sicily, a celebrated orator and sophist, died about 380 B.C.

GORHAM, GEORGE CORNELIUS, an English divine and topographer, received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge, and became fellow and tutor of that society. He graduated B.A. 1809; was elected fellow 12 Jan., 1810; and proceeded M.A. 1812; B.D. 1821. In 1846 the lord chancellor presented him to the vicarage of St. Just, Cornwall, and he was admitted to the benefice as a matter of course by the bishop of Exeter. But in the following year, when Mr. Gorham was presented by the lord chancellor to the vicarage of Bramford Speke, Devonshire, the bishop declined to admit him, on the ground that he held heterodox opinions respecting the sacrament of baptism. This led to protracted litigation, and the cause of 'Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter' is one of the most celebrated in the recent history of the Church of England 'as by law established.' Originally commenced in the Arches Court (1848), it was carried before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—the final authority concerning the doctrines of the Established Church. This august tribunal solemnly decided in 1850, that to hold that spiritual regeneration is not given in the holy sacrament of baptism is not contrary or repugnant to the declared doctrine of the church of England. Mr. Gorham accordingly triumphed, and was admitted to the living, but another result of the judgment was the secession to the Roman Church of many conscientious Anglican clergymen. Mr. Gorham died in June, 1857. He published several treatises on theology and polemics. Among them are 'An Essay on Public Worship,' 8vo., Camb., 1808; and a 'Statement submitted to the Members of the British and Foreign Bible Society, on the unlawfulness of circulating the Apocryphal Books indiscriminately mingled with the Inspired Writings,' 1825. He will, however, be chiefly remembered hereafter as an antiquarian writer. His principal work in this department is the 'History and Antiquities of Eynesbury and St. Neot's, in Huntingdonshire, and of St. Neot's in Cornwall; with critical remarks respecting the two Saxon Saints from whom these places derived their names,' 2 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1824. He also published 'Memoirs of J. Martyn, F.R.S., and of T. Martyn, B.D., Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge,' 8vo., Lond., 1830; and contributed several interesting papers to the 'Bibl. Topog. et Geneal.'

GORI, ANTHONY FRANCIS, a Florentine antiquary, born 9 Dec., 1691; died 20 Jan., 1757.

GÖRLÆUS, ABRAHAM, an eminent antiquary, born at Antwerp 1549; died at Delft 1609.

GORRIS, JEAN DE, Gorræus, a physician, born at Paris 1505; died 1577.

GORTER, JOHN VAN, a Dutch physician and medical writer, born 19 Feb., 1688; died 11 Sept., 1762.

GORTON, WILLIAM, editor of a Topographical Dictionary of Great Britain and Ireland; a Dictionary of Biography, &c.; died 1835.

GORTSCHAKOFF, PRINCE MICHAEL, a famous Russian general, who commanded the imperial troops during the Crimean war in 1855-6. He was born 1795, and died at Warsaw 30 May, 1861.

GOSELLINI, JULIAN, an Italian writer in prose and verse, born 1525; died 1587.

GOSSEE, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a musical composer, born at Vergeries, in Hainault, 17 Jan., 1733; died at Passy 16 Feb., 1829.

GOSSELIN, PASCAL FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a French geographer, born at Lille 6 Dec., 1751; died 8 Feb., 1830.

GOSSON, STEPHEN, was born in Kent 1554, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, which he left without any degree, and became tutor in a private family. Afterwards he entered into orders, and had the living of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, where he died 13 Feb., 1623. He wrote three dramatic pieces; notwithstanding which he published 'Play confuted in five several Actions,' 1580; and 'The School of Abuse,' against poets and actors.

GÖTHER. See GOETHE.

GÖTHER, JOHN, a Catholic writer of great eminence, was a native of Southampton, and brought up in the Anglican communion, but being converted to the Roman Church, he was sent over to the English College at Lisbon. After receiving priest's orders he returned to England on the mission. He resided chiefly in London, and appeared at the head of the controversial writers, on the Catholic side, in the reign of James II. Some affairs of the clergy requiring his presence at Lisbon, he was prevailed upon to undertake the voyage, but died on the passage 2 Oct., 1704. The list of his writings is extremely long; but his principal works are:—'Reason and Authority. Or the motives of a late Protestant's reconciliation to the Catholic Church,' 1687; 'A Papist misrepresented, and represented; or, a two-fold character of Popery,' 1685; 'Nubes Testium; or a collection of the primitive Fathers, giving testimony of the faith once delivered to the saints,' 1686; 'Pius IV.'s profession of faith vindicated from novelty in additional articles,' 1687; 'Transubstantiation defended,' 1687; 'The Sincere Christian's Guide in the choice of Religion,' 1734; 'Instructions on the Epistles and Gospels of the whole year'; 'Instructions for the whole year, being practical thoughts on all the Feasts'; 'Instructions and Devotions for hearing Mass'; 'A Practical Catechism.' Most of Mr. Gother's controversial pieces elicited replies from eminent divines of the church of England.

GOTTESCHALCUS, or FULGENTIUS, a German ecclesiastic of the ninth century. He left the monastery of Fulda about 846, and went into Dalmatia, where he propagated the doctrines of absolute election and grace; for which he was censured in a synod at Mentz, and persecuted by Hincmar, archbishop of Rheims, who degraded him from the priesthood, and sentenced him to perpetual imprisonment. He was also severely scourged in the presence of the Emperor Charles and several bishops. He died 867.

GOTTI, VINCENT LOUIS, a cardinal, and writer on divinity, born at Bologna 1604; died at Rome 18 Sept., 1742.

GOTTIGNIES, GILLES FRANÇOIS, a Jesuit, born at Brussels 1630, taught mathematics at Rome, where he died 6 April, 1689. He published some mathematical works.

GOTTLEBER, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, a learned German critic, born at Chemnitz 1733; died at Meissen 1 May, 1785.

GOTTSCHEV, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, was born at Königsberg 1700. He became professor of philosophy, logic, and metaphysics at Leipsic, where he died 12 Sept., 1766. His principal works are:—'Essay towards a History of Poetry'; 'The Death of Cato, a tragedy'; 'A Critical History of the German Language'; 'Introduction to Dramatic Poetry'; 'The German Poets'; 'Principles of Philosophy.' His wife, Louisa Maria, published a translation of Pope's Rape of the Lock, and a collection of her letters was published after her death, which occurred 26 June, 1762.

GOUDELIN, or GOUDOUILLI, PIERRE, the first of the poets of Languedoc, was born at Toulouse 1579, and died there 1649.

GOUDIMEL, CLAUDE, a French musician, born about 1510, was put to death at Lyons during the excitement produced by the massacre of St. Bartholomew, 1572.

GOUFFIER, MARIE GABRIEL AUGUSTE LAURENT, comte de Choiseul, was born 1752. At the age of twenty-two he travelled into the Levant, the result of which he published in a work, entitled 'Voyage en Grèce,' folio, 1782. This performance procured him admission into the Academy of Belles Lettres, and also into the French Academy. In 1784 he was appointed ambassador to the Porte, where he established a printing-office in his palace, and took several men of letters and artists into his service, for the purpose of illustrating the antiquities of Asia and Greece. The French Revolution having disarranged his plans, he went to Russia, where he was made a privy councillor, director of the Academy of Arts, and superintendent of the Imperial Libraries. In 1802, his name being erased from the list of emigrants, he returned to France; and the year following was chosen a member of the National Institute. He now published a continuation of his work upon Greece, but became involved in disputes with Le Chevalier and Cassis, who had, as he conceived, injured him by sending to the press their works on the same subject, after having been employed in his service. On the return of Louis XVIII. our author was made a peer of France. He died at Aix 22 June, 1817.

GOUGE, THOMAS, son of William, mentioned below, was born at Bow 12 Sept., 1005. He was educated at Eton, and afterwards at King's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1038 he obtained the living of St. Sepulchre's, London, but at the Restoration he was ejected for non-conformity, on which he exerted himself in promoting Christian knowledge in Wales. He died 29 Oct., 1681, and his funeral-sermon was preached by Dr. (afterwards Archbishop) Tillotson. His practical tracts were collected into one volume, 1706.

GOUGE, WILLIAM, was born at Bow, Middlesex, 1 Nov., 1575. He was educated at Eton, and became fellow of King's College, Cambridge. In 1608 he obtained the living of St. Anne, Blackfriars, where he was very popular. In 1643 he was nominated one of the assembly of divines at Westminster; but he protested against the violent proceedings of the parliament, and endeavoured to prevent the trial of the king. Died 12 Dec., 1653. His works were collected into one folio volume. He was also concerned in the 'Assembly's Annotations on the Bible.'

GOUGES, MARIE OLYMPE DE, a French woman of letters, who attained to considerable celebrity at the time of the first revolution, was born at Montauban 1755, and died on the scaffold at Paris 4 Nov., 1793.

GOUGH, RICHARD, the illustrious antiquary, was the son of Henry Gough, esq., an East India director, and was born in London 21 Oct., 1735. He received a private education, and at the age of eleven years translated from the French a History of the Birole, of which twenty-five copies were printed at the expense of his mother, who made presents of them to her friends. This was followed by a translation of Fleury's treatise on 'the Customs of the Israelites,' which was also printed for gratuitous distribution, when he was only fifteen. Besides these proofs of early application, he drew up a work of great labour, entitled 'Atlas Renovatus, or Geography modernised,' a manuscript, in folio. In 1752, Mr. Gough became a student of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he laid the plan of his British Topography; but he left the university without taking a degree, and devoted the rest of his life to antiquarian researches.

GOURVILLE.

He died at Enfield, 20 Feb., 1800. Besides many papers in the Archaeologia, the Bibliotheca Topographica, and the Gentleman's Magazine, he published:—Anecdotes of British Topography, 2 vols.; The Sepulchral Monuments of Great Britain, 2 vols. folio; a new edition of Camden's Britannia, 3 vols. folio; an Account of the Missal presented to Henry VI. by the duchess of Bedford; The History of Pleshy in Essex; Plates of the Coins of the Seleucidae. He bequeathed his books on Saxon and northern literature, together with all his manuscripts and works relative to British topography, to the university of Oxford.

GOUJET, CLAUDE PIERRE, canon of St. Jacques de l'Hôpital, one of the most industrious antiquaries of the eighteenth century, was born 19 Oct., 1607, at Paris, where he died 1 Feb., 1767. The most remarkable of his many works are—'Les Vies des Saints,' 7 vols.; 'Bibliothèque des auteurs ecclésiastiques du XVIII. Siècle,' supplement to Moreri's Dictionary; 'Bibliothèque Française,' 21 vols.; 'De l'Etat des Sciences en France,' an edition of Richlet's Dictionary, 3 vols. folio; 'L'Histoire du Collège Royal de France;' 'Hist. du Pontificat de Paul V.'

GOUJON, or GOUGEON, JEAN, a French sculptor and architect in the reign of Francis I. He was also a good medallist, and his works in this branch of art are scarce and valuable. Being a Protestant, he was shot in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, 1572.

GOULART, SIMON, a native of Senlis, studied divinity at Geneva, and succeeded Calvin in the ministry. He gained great reputation among the Protestants by his works, among which are a History of the League; and 'Recueil d'Histoires mémorables de notre temps.' Born 1543; died 3 Feb., 1628.

GOULD, ROBERT, an English poet, died 1700. His works were collected the same year, and published in 2 vols. 8vo.

GOULIN, JEAN, a French writer on the history of medical science, was born at Rheims 10 Feb., 1728, and died 30 April, 1799.

GOULSTON, or GULSTON, THEODORE, M.D., was born in Northamptonshire, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree 1610, after which he became fellow and censor of the College of Physicians. He practised in London with great reputation, and founded a lecture to be delivered yearly in the college. Died 4 May, 1632. His works are Versio Latina et paraphrasia in Aristotelis rhetoricam; Aristotelis de Poetice liber Latine conversus et analyticâ methodo illustratus; Versio, variæ Lectiones, et Annotationes criticae in opuscula varia Galeni.

GOULU, JEAN, Galenus, a French ecclesiastic, who translated many Greek works into his native tongue, but is chiefly known by his controversy with Balzac. Born 25 Aug., 1570; died 5 Jan., 1620.

GOURNAY, MARIE LE JARS DE, was born at Paris, of a noble family, in 1565. She adopted Montagne as her father, and edited his works. She died unmarried at Paris 13 July, 1645. Her works, in prose and verse, were published 1636.

GOURVILLE, JEAN HÉRAULD, Sieur DE, a French historian, born at Rochefoucault 11 July, 1625. He was in the service of the celebrated duke of his native place as valet de chambre, but afterwards became his confidential friend, as he also was of the great Conde and the Superintendent

GOUSSET.

Fouquet. He died 1705, leaving 'Memoirs of his Life.'

GOUSSET, JACQUES, a French Protestant divine and orientalist, was born at Blois 1635, and died at Groningen, where he was professor of Greek and divinity, 4 Nov., 1704.

GOUSSIER, LOUIS JACQUES, physician and mathematician, of Paris, born 1722; died Oct., 1799.

GOUTHIERES, JACQUES, Gutherius, a French jurist, died 1638, aged 70.

GOUVEA, ANTHONY, Goveanus, a Portuguese Jesuit, born at Beja 1505. He became professor of law at Toulouse, and afterwards at Turin, where he died 1565. His works on law were published in one volume folio, 1562. He also wrote a discourse against Calvin, who had accused him of atheism; and he published likewise editions of Virgil and Terence with notes. He had two brothers, who were men of learning: Martial Gouvea was a Latin poet, and published a grammar at Paris. Andrew Gouvea became principal of the College of St. Barbe, at Paris, afterwards of that at Bordeaux, and lastly head of the university of Coimbra, where he died 1548. He was the friend of Buchanan.

GOUVION SAINT CYR, LAURENT, marquis DE, a celebrated marshal of France, born 1764; died 17 March, 1830.

GOUYE, THOMAS, a French Jesuit and astronomer, born at Dicppe 18 Sept., 1650; died at Paris 24 March, 1725.

GOUYE DE LONGUEMARE, a French advocate and historian, born 1715; died 11 Aug., 1763.

GOUZ DE LA BOULAYE, FRANÇOIS LE, a celebrated French traveller, son of a gentleman of Baugé, in Anjou, was born about 1610. He visited most parts of the world, and published an account of his travels 1653. When he returned from his first voyage, he was so altered that his mother would not own him, and he was obliged to commence a suit against her to recover the right of eldership. Being sent ambassador to the Turks and the Great Mogul in 1668, he died in Persia during his journey.

GOVEANUS. See GOUVEA.

GOWER, JOHN, an English poet, was probably a native of Yorkshire, though Caxton says he was born in Wales, where, at this day, is a tract of land called by his name. He studied the law, and was a member of the Middle Temple, where he contracted an intimacy with Chaucer. The first work of Gower was entitled 'Speculum Meditantis,' of which there are two copies in the Bodleian Library. His next was the 'Vox Clamantis,' in Latin, of which also there are many copies extant; but the work on which his fame rests is the 'Confessio Amantis,' first printed by Caxton in 1493. This is an English poem, of a moral nature, and very severe on the vices of the times. Gower died 1402, and was buried in the church of St. Saviour's, Southwark.

GOZZI, CHARLES, count, an Italian poet and dramatist, born 1702; died 1806.

GOZZI, GASPAR, count, a nobleman of Venice, and brother of the preceding, was born 1713, and died 26 Dec., 1786. He published a periodical work, called 'L'Osservatore,' similar to the Spectator, and several poems of considerable merit.

GOZZOLI, BENEZZO, a painter, born at Florence in 1400; died at Pisa 1478.

GRAAF, REGNIER DE, a Dutch physician and medical writer, born 1641; died 17 Aug., 1673.

GRAFTON.

GRAAT, or GRAET, BARENT, a painter of Amsterdam, died 4 Nov., 1700, aged 81.

GRAAW, HENRY, a Dutch painter, died 1682, aged 55.

GRABE, JOHN ERNEST, D.D., was born 1666, at Königsberg in Prussia, where his father was professor of divinity and history. After taking his degree of master of arts in that university, he studied the writings of the Fathers, which made him dissatisfied with Lutheranism, on account of the want of an episcopal succession in that communion. His first idea was to join the Church of Rome; but at the persuasion of some friends he altered his mind, and came to England, where King William settled a pension upon him, which was continued by Queen Anne, who employed him in editing the Septuagint from the Alexandrian manuscript in the royal library. In 1706 the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity; and in 1711 he published an answer to Whiston, on the subject of two Arabic manuscripts in the British Museum. Though Dr. Grabe took orders in the Church of England, he joined the nonjurors, as drawing nearer the primitive ages in some points. Died 3 Nov., 1711. Besides his edition of the Septuagint, he published Spicilegium SS. Patrum; Justin Martyr's Apology; the Works of Irenæus; the Latin works of Bishop Bull. After his death appeared Liturgia Græca; De forma consecrationis Eucharistiæ; Some instances of the defects and omissions in Mr. Whiston's collection of Testimonies, &c.

GRACIAN, BALTASAR, a Spanish Jesuit, rector of the college of Tarragona, was the author of several works, two of which, 'The Courtier,' and 'The Art of Prudence,' have been translated into English. Born 1584; died 6 Dec., 1658.

GRADWELL, ROBERT, an English Catholic prelate. In 1818 he was appointed rector of the English College at Rome; and in 1828 appointed coadjutor to Dr. Bramston, vicar apostolic of the London district, being consecrated bishop of Lydda in partibus on the 24 June in that year. Died 15 March, 1833.

GRAEME, JOHN, a minor Scotch poet, born 1748; died 26 July, 1772.

GRÆVIUS, JOHN GEORGE, was born at Naumburg, in Saxony, 29 Jan., 1632. He succeeded Gronovius in the professorship of history at Deventer, from whence he was invited to Utrecht, where he died 11 Jan., 1703. He published several editions of the classics; but his greatest works are his Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanorum, 12 vols. folio, and Thes. Antiquit. Italiæ, 6 vols. folio.

GRAFFIGNY, FRANÇOISE D'ISSEMBOURG D'APPOUCOURT, dame DE, a French lady, author of the 'Peruvian Letters,' &c., was born 1694, and died 12 Dec., 1758.

GRAFTON, AUGUSTUS HENRY FITZROY, DUKE OF K.G., was born 28 Sept., 1736. He was educated under Dr. Newcombe at Hackney, and next at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He succeeded his grandfather in the family honours in 1757; and in 1765 was appointed secretary of state; but the year following he relinquished that station, and soon after became first lord of the Treasury, which post he held till 1770. During his administration he was virulently attacked by Junius, who seems to have been actuated by personal enmity. In 1771, the duke was nominated Lord Privy Seal, which office he resigned in 1775, and acted in opposition to the court till 1782, when he was again in place for a short time. After this, he was uniformly an opponent of ministers, till his death, 14 March, 1811. Though his grace was an avowed Socinian, and regularly attended the meeting-house in Essex Street, Strand, he was chancellor of the university of Cambridge, to which dignity he was elected in 1768. He was the author of—'Hints submitted to the serious attention of the clergy, nobility, and gentry newly associated,' 1789; and 'Apeleutherus, a volume of essays on theological subjects.' He was at the expense of reprinting an edition of Griesbach's Greek Testament.

GRAFTON, RICHARD, a printer, who carried on an extensive business in London in the sixteenth century. He compiled the greater part of Hall's chronicle, and wrote besides 'The Union of the families of Lancaster and York.' In 1562 he published 'An Abridgement of the Chronicles of England,' of which he afterwards wrote a compendium against Stowe. His large Chronicle appeared in 1609. He was a great promoter of the Reformation, by printing Bibles. He was living in 1572.

GRAHAM, Mrs. CATHARINE. See MACAULAY.

GRAHAM, GEORGE, F.R.S., an ingenious mechanic, born at Horsgills in the parish of Kirklington, Cumberland, 1675; died in Fleet Street, London, 20 Nov., 1751. He lived with Tompion, the watchmaker, and succeeded him in his business, but excelled him in scientific knowledge. He constructed many astronomical instruments, particularly the great mural arch in the Observatory at Greenwich. Some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions.

GRAHAM, JAMES, marquis of Montrose. See MONTROSE.

GRAHAM, Sir JAMES GEORGE ROBERT, Bart., an English statesman, born at Naworth 1 June, 1792, being the eldest son of Sir James Graham, the first baronet. From Westminster School he proceeded to Queen's College, Cambridge, and travelling afterwards abroad he became private secretary to Lord Montgomerie, the British minister in Sicily, during the most critical period of the war. Lord Montgomerie soon afterwards fell ill, and the entire management of the mission devolved upon his secretary, who worked indefatigably, and performed several important services in this capacity. On the termination of the war he returned home, and in 1818 was chosen M.P. for Hull, after a sharp contest, he having declared himself in favour of parliamentary reform, the abolition of unnecessary places and pensions, and the suppression of the slave trade. In 1820 he lost his seat for Hull, but he subsequently became member for Carlisle, and took a high position in politics, on the strength of his pamphlet on 'Corn and Currency,' in which he pronounced in favour of 'the free importation of corn with a moderate protective duty.' In 1824 he succeeded to the baronetcy on his father's death, and two years later he was returned for Carlisle on Whig principles. In 1830 he was elected for Cumberland, and he was one of the most strenuous and zealous advocates of the Reform Bill, as he had previously been of the Test Act and Catholic Emancipation. On the formation of Earl Grey's administration, he was created first lord of the Admiralty. After the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, he was elected for the eastern division of Cumberland, which he represented till 1837. In 1834 dissensions in Earl Grey's cabinet arose on the Irish Church question, which led to the retirement of Sir James Graham, together with Lord Stanley (now earl of Derby), the late duke of Richmond, and the late earl of Ripon. The Whig party who thus voluntarily displaced themselves formed a small party intermediate between the Grey and Russell Whigs and the Conservatives led by Peel, and were known to joke as the 'Derby Dilly.' Finally, Lord Stanley, Sir James Graham, and most of their friends joined the Conservative party. At the general election of 1837 he had the mortification of being rejected by his former constituents, and he remained out of the House of Commons till the following session, when he was elected for Pembroke. In 1841 he was returned for Dorchester. That year, when Sir Robert Peel was called upon to form a ministry, Sir James Graham took office under him as secretary of state for the Home Department, a post which he held till the dissolution of the government in 1846. Steady, industrious, a ready and full debater, he became Peel's right-hand man, and his rule at the Home Office was a model of administrative ability. Yet with all his great talents, he was almost as much a weakness as a strength to his party, for he never had the faculty of making himself popular. From 1847 to 1852 he was representative for the borough of Ripon, and in the latter year he was elected for Carlisle, which city he represented till his decease. On the earl of Aberdeen coming into power in 1852, he was appointed first lord of the Admiralty. He remained with the earl's ministry till the vote on Mr. Roebuck's motion, 'that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into those departments of the Government whose duty it has been to minister to the wants of that army,' when Sir James Graham, Sir Sidney Herbert, and the duke of Newcastle, considering themselves as put on their defence, resigned their offices. Soon afterwards Sir James retired from public life. He died at Netherby 25 Oct., 1891.

GRAHAM, JOHN, Viscount Dundee. See DUNDEE.

GRAHAM, JOHN, an English prelate, was born in the city of Durham 23 Feb., 1704, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow and tutor, and eventually master. He was also prebendary of Lincoln, and chaplain to Prince Albert. He was consecrated bishop of Chester 1848; appointed clerk of the closet to the Queen 1849; and died 15 June, 1865. His only published work is a small volume of 'Sermons on the Commandments,' 1826.

GRAHAM, Mrs. MARIA. See CALLCOTT.

GRAHAME, JAMES, a poet, born at Glasgow 22 April, 1765. After practising some years as a writer to the signet and an advocate, he forsook the law, and took orders according to the form of the church of England, after which he accepted the curacy of Sedgfield, Durham, where he died 14 Sept., 1811. His principal pieces are 'The Sabbath,' 'The Birds of Scotland,' and 'British Georgics.'

GRAINDORGE, ANDRÉ, an ingenious Frenchman, born at Caen in the sixteenth century. He discovered the art of weaving diaper cloth, commonly called damask.

GRAINDORGE, ANDRÉ, a French physician and naturalist, born at Caen 1616; died 13 Jan., 1676.

GRAINGER, JAMES, M.D., a poet and physician, born at Dunse, Berwickshire, 1724. After serving his time as a surgeon at Edinburgh, he served in that capacity in the army, but on the restoration of peace in 1748, he took his doctor's degree, and settled as a physician in London; where, however, he principally supported himself by writing for the booksellers. In 1758 he published a translation of Tibullus, which involved him in a dispute with Smollett, who, for some private reasons, defamed him and his work in the Critical Review. Soon after this, Dr. Grainger went to the island of St. Christopher in the West Indies, and while there married a lady of fortune. On his return to England, in 1764, he published his poem entitled 'The Sugar Cane,' which was well received. The same year he printed 'An Essay on West India Diseases.' After a short residence in England, he returned to St. Christopher's, where he resumed practice. He died at Basseterre 24 Dec., 1767. Besides the works already noticed, he wrote an 'Ode to Solitude;' the ballad of Bryan and Perence; a Latin treatise entitled 'Historia Febris Anomalæ Batavæ,' &c.

GRAINGER, RICHARD, an architect and builder of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to whom that town almost owes its reconstruction, was born 1798, and died 4 July, 1861.

GRAINGER, RICHARD DUGARD, F.R.S., lecturer at St. Thomas's Hospital, London, wrote several works on anatomy; died 1 Feb., 1865, aged 63.

GRAMAYE, JOHN BAPTIST, a Flemish historian, antiquary, and poet, president of the college of Louvain, was born at Antwerp about 1580, and died 1645.

GRAMM, JOHN, a Danish antiquary, born 1685; died 1748.

GRAMMONT, GABRIEL DE BARTHELEMI, seigneur de Gramondus, a French historian, died 1654. In one of his works he apologises for the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

GRAMONT, ANTOINE, DUKE DE, a marshal of France in the reign of Louis XIV., died 12 July, 1678, aged 74. His Memoirs have been published.

GRAMONT, PHILIBERT, count of, son of Anthony, duke of Gramont, was born 1621. After serving in the army under Condé and Turenne, he came to England in the early part of the reign of Charles II., with whom he became a great favourite, as he also was with the whole court, particularly the ladies. He married the daughter of Sir George Hamilton, fourth son of the earl of Abercorn, and died 10 Jan., 1707. His memoirs were written by his brother-in-law, Anthony, commonly called Count Hamilton, who adhered to James II., and died in the French service in 1730. The memoirs of Gramont exhibit a curious but disgusting picture of the intrigues and amusements of the fashionable world.

GRANBY, JOHN MANNERS, MARQUIS OF, son of John duke of Rutland, was born 1721. He raised a regiment of foot in the Rebellion, and in 1758, being then lieutenant-general, was sent to Germany, where he served under Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick with great renown as general of the British forces at the battles of Minden, Warburg, Kirk-Denkern, &c. He died at Scarborough 19 Oct., 1770.

GRANCOLAS, JEAN, doctor of the Sorbonne, and an ecclesiastical antiquary, died at Paris 1 Aug., 1732.

GRAND. See LEGRAND.

GRANDET, JOSEPH, a French biographer, curate of St. Croix at Angers, died 1 Dec., 1724, aged 78.

GRANDI, GUIDO, an Italian monk, celebrated for his acquirements in mathematics. He corresponded with Newton, Leibnitz, and Bernoulli, and published several works, the chief of which is a treatise 'De Infinitis Innitiorum.' Born 1671; died 4 July, 1742.

GRANDIER, URBAIN, a priest whose tragical end disgraced France in the seventeenth century. He was born at Bouvere, near Sablé, and on obtaining the living of Loudun became so very popular as a preacher that the envy of the monks was excited against him. He was accused of incontinency, and acquitted. After this, his enemies instigated some nuns to play the part of persons possessed, and in their convulsions to charge Grandier with being the cause of their visitation. For this he was tried, and, on no other evidence, burnt alive, 18 April, 1634.

GRANDIN, MARTIN, professor of divinity at the Sorbonne, Paris, died 16 Nov., 1691, aged 87, leaving a 'System of Divinity.'

GRANET, FRANÇOIS, a French critic, translator, and miscellaneous writer, born 1692; died 2 April, 1741.

GRANET, FRANÇOIS MARIE, a French painter, born 1775; died 21 Nov., 1849.

GRANGER, JAMES, a biographer, was a native of Berkshire. He studied some time at Christ Church, Oxford, but without taking a degree; and on entering into orders was presented to the vicarage of Shiplake in Oxfordshire, where he discharged the parochial duties with great fidelity, and died of an apoplectic fit, while administering 'the sacrament,' on Sunday, 14 April, 1776. His death was similar to that of the cardinal de Beraluc. Mr. Granger printed two sermons, but is best known by his 'Biographical History of England,' published in 4 small vols. in 4to., and afterwards in 8vo. It is a catalogue of portraits, enlivened with biographical sketches.

GRANT, MRS. ANNE, of Laggan, whose maiden name was M'Vicar, was born in Glasgow 1755. Her father was an officer in the British army, who, shortly after her birth, went with his regiment to America, with the intention of settling there. His wife and infant daughter soon after followed him thither. Owing to bad health, Mr. Grant was obliged to leave America, with his wife and child, in 1768, and a few years afterwards he was appointed barrack-master of Fort Augustus. Here Miss M'Vicar formed the acquaintance of the Rev. James Grant, afterwards minister of Laggan, Inverness-shire, whose wife she became in 1779. She lost her husband 1801, and subsequently removed to Stirling, where she endeavoured to provide for her young family. She had always found delight in the pursuits of literature, and had been accustomed to compose verses, a collection of which was published by subscription 1803, and met with extraordinary success. In 1806 appeared her 'Letters from the Mountains;' and in 1810 she removed to Edinburgh, where she resided during the remainder of her life. She received from government a pension of £100 from the year 1825 till her death, which occurred 7 Nov., 1838. In addition to the works already mentioned, she was author of 'Memoirs of an American Lady,' 1808; 'Essays on the Superstitions of the Highlanders of Scotland,' 1811; 'Eighteen Hundred and Thirteen,' a poem, 1814; 'Popular Models and Impressive Warnings for the Sons and Daughters of Industry,' 1815.—Anderson.

GRANT, CHARLES, a philanthropist and statesman, born in Scotland 1740. Going to India, he was, in 1773, promoted to the rank of factor at Calcutta, and shortly afterwards appointed secretary to the Board of Trade. In 1781 he was stationed as commercial resident in charge of the Company's silk factory at Malda; in 1784 he obtained the rank of senior merchant; and in 1787 he was recalled to Calcutta to occupy the seat of the fourth member of the Board of Trade. About three years later he quitted India, where he had been noted for his zeal in promoting the Protestant form of Christianity. In 1794 he was elected one of the directors of the East India Company, of which body he ultimately became the chairman. He sat for several years in the House of Commons, where his opinions on Indian affairs were received with great attention. The plan of Haileybury College is said to have originated with him. Died 31 Oct., 1833. He wrote 'Observations on the State of Society among the Asiatic Subjects of Great Britain,' 1702.

GRANT, or GRAUNT, EDWARD, a schoolmaster, was born in London, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford. He became master of the school in which he had been brought up, and in 1577 was made prebendary of Westminster. In 1591 he resigned his mastership, and died 4 Aug., 1601. He published the Letters of Ascham, with a Latin oration of his own upon that elegant scholar. There are also several Latin poems of his extant.

GRANT, SIR FRANCIS, Lord Cullen, a Scotch judge, born about 1660. He studied at Leyden under Voet, and on his return home was admitted an advocate. He distinguished himself by his publications in favour of the Revolution, for which he was well rewarded. In 1705 he was made a baronet, and soon after appointed one of the judges or senators in the College of Justice, when he took the title of Lord Cullen. Died 16 March, 1726.

GRANT, JAMES, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born in the Enzie, Banffshire, 1710; nominated coadjutor to Bishop Smith, vicar-apostolic of the Lowland district of Scotland, 21 Feb., 1755; consecrated bishop of Sinita, in Armenia, 13 Nov., 1755, at Edinburgh; succeeded as third vicar-apostolic of the Lowland district 1766; died at Aberdeen 2 Dec., 1778.

GRANT, JAMES, a Scotch advocate, born 1743; died 1835. He was distinguished for his liberal principles, and was author of 'Essays on the Origin of Society, Language, Property, Government, Jurisdiction, Contracts, and Marriage; interspersed with Illustrations from the Greek and Gaelic languages,' 1785.

GRANT, PATRICK, a Scotch judge, by the title of Lord Preston-Grange, was born at Edinburgh, and studied at Glasgow, Paris, and Leyden. He was in 1746 lord-advocate, and in 1754 advanced to the bench. He wrote some ingenious pieces against the rebellion of 1745, and died at Edinburgh 1762, aged 64.

GRANT, SIR WILLIAM, was born at Elchies, co. Moray, 1754. After completing his studies at King's College, Aberdeen, he entered Lincoln's Inn, but before being called to the bar was appointed attorney-general of Canada. Returning at the end of some years to England, he was called to the bar, and in 1790 was elected M.P. for Shaftesbury, and in the House of Commons soon distinguished himself as a powerful coadjutor of Mr. Pitt. Subsequently he sat as representative for Windsor and Banffshire. He was appointed chief justice of Chester 1798; solicitor-general 1799; master of the Rolls 1801. The latter office he held about sixteen years; and died 25 May, 1832.—Anderson.

GRANVILLE, ANTOINE PERRENOT, CARDINAL DE, born 20 Aug., 1517, at Ornans in Burgundy, was preferred at an early age to the bishopric of Arras, in which capacity he spoke very forcibly at the council of Trent. He next served the Emperor Charles V. in several embassies to France, England, and elsewhere. On Charles's abdication, he entered the service of his successor, Philip II., who consulted him on all his affairs, private as well as public. Granville was subsequently appointed archbishop of Mechlin, was created a cardinal 1561, and eventually became chief councillor to Margaret of Parma, governess of the Netherlands. Philip II. called him a second time to court, and entrusted him with all the affairs of the Spanish monarchy. The cardinal died at Madrid, in the height of glory, 21 Sept., 1586, after having been nominated archbishop of Besançon.

GRANVILLE, GEORGE, LORD LANSDOWNE. See LANSDOWNE.

GRANVILLE, GRANVILLE LEVESON GOWER, EARL, third son of the first marquis of Stafford, was born 12 Oct., 1773. He was returned to parliament for Lichfield 1795, but in 1799 he resigned that seat in order to stand for the county of Stafford, which he continued to represent until his elevation to the peerage. Mr. Pitt became his political patron, and in 1800 created him a lord of the Treasury, which office he held till 1802. After acting as ambassador at St. Petersburg, the Hague, and Paris, he was rewarded with a viscounty in 1815, and an earldom in 1833. Died 8 Jan., 1846.

GRANVILLE, JOHN CARTERET, EARL, was born 22 April, 1690. He was the eldest son of George, Lord Carteret, whom he succeeded at the age of five years. He received his education at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford, after which he took his seat in the House of Lords, and distinguished himself so much by his earnestness for the Protestant succession, that George I. gave him several places. In 1719 he went ambassador to Sweden, and mediated the treaty between that power and Denmark. In 1721 he became secretary of state; and in 1724 viceroy of Ireland, where his administration was generally applauded. He was again nominated to that high office, after the accession of George II., and remained there till 1730. He opposed Sir Robert Walpole, and on his removal became secretary of state. He succeeded to the titles of Viscount Carteret and Earl Granville 1744. Died 2 Jan., 1763. He was a patron of literature, and among others who were indebted to him for assistance and support were Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius's Ethimologicon, and Dr. Taylor, the publisher of Demesthicon. Dean Swift and Dr. Bentley were among his particular friends.

GRASWINKEL, THEODORE, a civilian, born at Delft in 1600; died at Mechlin 12 Oct., 1666.

GRATAROLUS.

GRATAROLUS, WILLIAM, a physician, born at Bergamo. He practised physic with great success at Padua, till he was converted to the Protestant religion, when he retired to Basle, and died there 16 April, 1568, aged 52. He was a voluminous writer. Among his works is a curious treatise on topical memory.

GRATIAN, a Roman emperor, son of Valentinian I., was born 359; succeeded to the throne 367; died 383.

GRATIAN, a Benedictine in the twelfth century, was a native of Chiusi in Tuscany. He employed twenty-four years in compiling an abridgment of the canon law, commonly called Gratian's Decretal, which he published at Rome about the middle of the twelfth century, and which has been several times printed.

GRATIUS FALISCUS, a Roman poet of the first century. His 'Cynegeticon, or a Poem of Hunting with Dogs,' was translated into English by C. Wase 1654.

GRATIUS, or GRAES, ORTUINUS, a learned German divine and writer, whose attachment to the Catholic religion drew upon him the ill-will of the Reuchlin, Hutten, and others, who to ridicule the style of the Catholic divines and some religious ceremonies, published 'Epistolæ Obscurorum Virorum ad Dominum Magistrum Ortuinum Gratium,' 1516-17. Gratius taught ethics and philosophy at Cologne, and became principal of a college in that city, where he died 22 May, 1542.

GRATTAN, HENRY, a statesman, was born about 1750 in Dublin, of which city his father was recorder. He studied at Trinity College, and next in one of the inns of court, where he was called to the bar, but relinquished that profession for the senate. He was elected into the Irish parliament in 1775; and by his powerful remonstrances obtained for his country a participation in the commerce of Britain, for which he was rewarded with a vote of fifty thousand pounds. In 1790 he was returned for the city of Dublin, and from that time was the active leader of the opposition till the Union, which measure he resisted with all his eloquence; but when it was effected he accepted a seat in the imperial parliament for Malton. During the war he supported government with great ability; but his principal exertions were called forth in advocating the Catholic claims, to which cause he fell a martyr by leaving Ireland in an exhausted state to carry the petition with which he was entrusted to England. He died soon after his arrival 14 May, 1820; and his remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

GRATTAN, THOMAS COLLEY, was born in the county of Kildare 1796, and was educated with a view to his entering the army, but in the end he devoted himself to literature. He resided during a great part of his life on the continent, and was very intimate with Leopold I., king of the Belgians, who obtained for him the British consularship at Boston, U.S. In 1845 or 1846 he returned to England, and from thenceforward resided principally in London, where he died 4 July, 1864. He will be chiefly remembered by his work entitled 'Highways and Byways.' The other productions of his pen are 'Philibert,' a poetical romance; 'History of the Netherlands,' published in Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopaedia; 'Traits of Travel; 'The Heiress of Bruzes,' 'Jacqueline of Holland; 'Legends of the Rhine; 'Aguës of Mansfeldt;'

GRAVESANDE.

'Civilized America; 'Beaten Paths, and those who tread them,' a collection of personal reminiscences; and a tragedy entitled 'Ben Nazir, the Saracen.' Mr. Grattan also contributed extensively to the periodicals of the day.

GRAUNT, EDWARD. See GRANT.

GRAUNT, JOHN, F.R.S., was born in London 24 April, 1620. He was bred a haberdasher, which business he carried on with reputation. In 1661 he published 'Observations on the Bills of Mortality;' a work of extraordinary value, for which he was admitted a fellow of the Royal Society. After this he relinquished trade; and in 1666 became one of the trustees of the New River Company. In this office, it has been reported by Burnet that he was guilty of a most diabolical crime, by stopping all the cocks which conveyed water from Islington to London, the night before the Great Fire which consumed the city. The accusation, however, is false, as he was not admitted among the trustees until twenty-three days after the conflagration happened; and the malevolent report arose only after his death, and probably owed its origin to his change of religious principles, as about 1667 he reconciled himself to the tenets of the church of Rome. Died 18 April, 1674.

GRAVELOT, HUBERT FRANÇOIS BOURGUIGNON, a French engraver, who resided in England for many years, was born 1699 at Paris, where he died 20 April, 1773.

GRAVEROL, FRANÇOIS, a French advocate and antiquary, born at Nîmes 11 Jan., 1644; died 10 Sept., 1694. His works are very numerous.

GRAVEROL, JEAN, brother of the preceding, was born at Nîmes 11 Sept., 1636. He became a minister of the reformed religion at Lyons, but left the place on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and went to Amsterdam and afterwards to London, where he died 1718. Like his brother, he was a voluminous author. His principal work is 'Moses Vindicatus,' 1694, written in defence of the Mosaic account of the creation against Dr. Thos. Burnet.

GRAVES, RICHARD, was born at Mickleton, Gloucestershire, 1715. He became a student of Pembroke College, Oxford, and afterwards obtained a fellowship at All Souls. In 1750 he was presented to the rectory of Claverton, near Bath; to which Mr. Allen, of Prior Park, added, in 1763, that of Kilmersdon. Died 23 Nov., 1804. His works are—'The Festoon, or Epigrams; Lucubrations in prose and rhyme; 'The Spiritual Quixote, a novel; Columella, or the distressed Anchorite; Euphrosyne, a collection of poems; Eugenius, or the Golden Vale; Recollections of particulars in the life of Shenstone; Plexippus, or the aspiring Plebeian; The Reveries of Solitude; The Coalition, a comedy; Sermons; The Farmer's Son, a moral tale; The Invalid, with the means of enjoying long Life; Senilities. Besides these publications, he translated Marcus Antoninus' Meditations and other books from the Greek.

GRAVES, RICHARD, D.D., dean of Ardagh, and divinity professor at Dublin, was born 1763, and died 1829. His principal works are 'Lectures on the four last Books of the Pentateuch, designed to show the divine Origin of the Jewish Religion;' and 'An Essay on the Character of the Apostles and Evangelists, designed to prove that they were not Enthusiasts.'

GRAVESANDE, WILLIAM JAMES S', a Dutch mathematician, professor at Leyden, where he introduced the Newtonian system, was born 1688, and died 28 Feb., 1742.

GRAVINA, JOHN VINCENT, an eminent lawyer, was born at Roggiano, in Italy, 18 Feb., 1664. He was professor of canon law in the college of Sapienza at Rome, where he died 6 Jan., 1718. A complete edition of all his writings was published at Naples 1756. Metastasio was his favourite pupil.

GRAVINA, PETER, a Latin poet, was a native of Palermo. He became canon of Naples; and died at Rome 1528.

GRAY, ALEXIA, an English lady, was a religious in the Benedictine nunnery at Ghent. Her translation of the Rule of St. Benedict was printed in that city 1632.

GRAY, DAVID, a Scotch poet, was born at Kirkintilloch, near Glasgow, 29 Jan., 1838, and brought up to the trade of a hand-loom weaver. Fired with ambition, he came to London, in the hope of being able to support himself by his pen, but being disappointed, returned to his native village, where he died 3 Dec., 1861. Shortly afterwards 'The Luggie, and other Poems,' by him, was published, with an introduction by Mr. Milnes, and a short memoir.

GRAY, THOMAS, was born 20 Dec., 1716, in Cornhill, London, where his father was a money scrivener. He received his education at Eton, from whence he removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge, 1734. In 1740 he accompanied Horace Walpole on his travels through France and Italy; but at Reggio they parted, and Gray returned to England the year following, soon after which his father died, and left him a small fortune. He now took his degree of LL.B., and amused himself with writing poetry, particularly the 'Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College,' which was published 1747. In 1749 he finished his 'Elegy in a Country Churchyard,' which, however, was only circulated among his friends, till it was added to the Strawberry Hill impression of his poems, illustrated with the designs of Bentley. In 1756 he became a member of Pembroke Hall, and in 1768 was appointed professor of modern history at Cambridge, by the duke of Grafton, for whose installation as chancellor of the university he wrote the ode performed on that occasion. He died 30 July, 1771, and was buried in the churchyard of Stoke Poges, Bucks. After his death Mr. Mason published his life and works; and subsequently a more elegant edition was given by Mr. Mathias.

GRAZZINI, ANTHONY FRANCIS, an Italian poet, born at Florence 1503; died Feb., 1583.

GREATOREX, THOMAS, an eminent musical performer and composer, born at North Winfield, Derbyshire, 1758; died 18 July, 1831.

GREATRAKES, VALENTINE, an empiric, born at Affane, co. Waterford, 1628. He received his education in Devonshire, after which he returned to Ireland, was made a justice of the peace, and clerk for the co. Cork. At the Restoration he pretended to the power of healing desperate diseases, by stroking the affected parts with his hands. Some cures were performed, and even the great Boyle himself was deceived by them. He died about 1682.

GREAVES, Sir EDWARD, M.D., younger brother of John, hereafter mentioned, was born in Surrey, and educated at Oxford. He attained distinction as a physician, was created a baronet by Charles II., and died in London 11 Nov., 1680. He wrote 'Morbus Epidemicus ann. 1643; or the New Disease, with signs, causes, remedies, &c.'

GREAVES, JOHN, a mathematician, born at Colmore, Hants, 1602. After taking his bachelor's degree at Balliol College, Oxford, he obtained a fellowship in Merton College. In 1630 he was elected professor of geometry at Gresham College. He next went to Leyden, where he studied the Arabic language under Golius, after which he travelled into the Levant to purchase manuscripts for Archbishop Laud. He also visited Egypt, and made a survey of the Pyramids, and in 1640 returned to England, when he was deprived of his Gresham professorship; but the king gave him that of astronomy at Oxford, which he also lost on the ruin of the royal cause. Died 8 Oct., 1652. His miscellaneous works were collected and published in two vols. 1737. The principal is his 'Pyramidographia,' or a Description of the Pyramids in Egypt, printed first in 1646.

GREAVES, THOMAS, D.D., brother of John, above mentioned, became fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, deputy-reader of Arabic in that university, prebendary of Peterborough, and rector of Benefield, Norfolk. He published 'De Linguæ Arabicæ utilitate;' 'Observationes in Persicam Pentateuchi versionem;' 'Annotationes in Persicam interpretationem Evangeliorum.' Died 23 May, 1676, aged 64.

GRÉCOURT, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH VILLART DE, a French poet, born at Tours 1684; died 2 April, 1743.

GREEN, GEORGE SMITH, an eccentric watchmaker of Oxford, brought out a prose version of Milton's 'Paradise Lost.' It was entitled 'The State of Innocence,' and was first published in 1745. Green was also author of two unacted plays, 'Oliver Cromwell,' 8vo., 1752, and 'The Nice Lady,' 8vo., 1762; also of a poem entitled 'The Parson's Parlour,' 8vo., 1756.

GREEN, HUGH, who was also known by the name of Ferdinand Brooks, was born in London about 1584, and after an academical education at Cambridge became a convert to the Catholic faith, and went to the English college at Douay. He was ordained priest 1612, and afterwards laboured for many years on the English mission, his residence being at Chidoick, Dorsetshire, the seat of Lady Arundel. At length he was apprehended and executed at Dorchester 19 Aug., 1642, under peculiarly revolting circumstances.

GREEN, JOHN, an English prelate, born about 1706, at Beverley, Yorkshire, and admitted a sizar of St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1744 he was appointed chaplain to the duke of Somerset, who gave him the living of Borough Green, near Newmarket. In 1748 he was elected regius professor of divinity, and two years later master of Corpus Christi College. In 1756 he became dean of Lincoln, and afterwards bishop of that see. In 1771 he obtained the deanery of St. Paul's. Died 25 April, 1779. He was one of the writers of the Athenian Letters; besides which he published some sermons, and a tract on Enthusiasm.

GREEN, JOHN RICHARD. See GIFFORD.

GREEN, JOSEPH HENRY, F.R.S., an English surgeon, author of 'Vital Dynamics,' and 'Mental Dynamics,' was born 1791, and died 13 Dec., 1863.

GREEN.

GREEN, MATTHEW, a poet, of whom nothing more is known than that he was brought up among the dissenters, was a native of London, and had a situation in the Custom House. He died 1737, aged 41. His poem, entitled 'The Splicen,' is a very ingenious performance.

GREEN, VALENTINE, an engraver, born in Warwickshire 1739; died 1813.

GREEN, WILLIAM, an English divine, was fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge, and rector of Hardingham, in Norfolk. He died 1794. His works are The song of Deborah, reduced to metre; with a Translation and Commentary; a Translation of the prayer of Habakkuk, the prayer of Moses, and the 139th psalm with a Commentary; a new translation of the Psalms, with notes; a new Translation of Isaiah, from the seventh to the fifty-third chapter, with notes; Poetical parts of the Old Testament, translated from the Hebrew, with notes.

GREENE, EDWARD BURNABY, author of some poetical works, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He translated Anacreon, Apollonius Rhodius, and part of Pindar, and paraphrased Persius. Died 1788.

GREENE, MARTIN, a Jesuit, was born in Kent 1616, studied at St. Omer, and died at Watten 2 Oct., 1667. He wrote 'An Accounte of the Jesuites Life and Doctrine,' 1661; An Answer to the Provincial Letters, translated from the French; 'Vox Veritatis, seu Via Regia duccens ad veram Pacem.' He was also engaged on a Church History, which, however, was left unfinished at the time of his death.—Olicer.

GREENE, MAURICE, MUS. D., was the son of the Rev. Thomas Greene, vicar of St. Olave, Old Jewry. He was born 1696, and brought up in the choir of St. Paul's, of which cathedral he became organist, and also of St. Andrew, Holborn. In 1726 he was appointed to the same situation in the Chapel Royal, and in 1730 obtained the degree of doctor in music, at Cambridge, where he was chosen professor in that faculty. Died 1 Sept., 1755.

GREENE, ROBERT, a poet, was born at Norwich about 1560, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1578-9). Having migrated to Clare Hall, he took his M.A. degree as a member of that house 1583. The interval between these dates he spent on the Continent, where he probably acquired those dissolute habits which afterwards rendered him so notorious. Adopting literature as a profession, he settled in London; and here his life was one unbroken round of dissipation and vice, Marlow, Peckle, Nash, and Lodge being his principal associates. When his purse was empty, he replenished it with the proceeds of a pamphlet or a play. He speedily became the most popular writer of his day, and his fame even extended to Holland. At last he was reduced to a state of degradation and poverty. Died 3 Sept., 1592. His dramatic works, with a selection from his poems, were printed at London in 2 vols. 8vo., 1831, and the titles of all his literary productions are enumerated in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.'

GREENE, THOMAS, an English prelate, born at Norwich 1658. He became fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and chaplain to Archbishop Tenison, who gave him the living of Minster, in the Isle of Thanet, and conferred on him his doctor's degree. In 1698 he was elected master of Corpus Christi College. In 1721 he was made bishop of Norwich, and in 1723 was translated to Ely. Died 18 May, 1738. Bishop Greenec published 'Four Discourses on the four last Things,' and some tracts and sermons.

GREENFIELD. See GROENVELT.

GREENFIELD, WILLIAM, superintendent of the editorial department of the British and Foreign Bible Society, died at Islington 5 Nov., 1831, aged 32. He published 'The Comprehensive Bible,' 1827; 'The Book of Genesis in English Hebrew, accompanied by an interlinear translation,' 1828; 'A Defence of the Serampore Mahratra Version of the New Testament, in reply to the animadversions of an anonymous writer in the Asiatic Journal for Sept., 1820,' 8vo., 1830; 'A Defence of the Surinam Negro-English Version of the New Testament, in reply to the animadversions of an anonymous writer in the Edinburgh Christian Instructor,' 1830.

GREENHILL, JOHN, a painter, was born at Salisbury, and became a disciple of Lely, to whom he was afterwards a powerful rival. He led a very irregular life, and died 19 May, 1676.

GREENOUGH, HORATIO, an American sculptor, born at Boston 6 Sept., 1805; died at Somerville, near Boston, 18 Dec., 1852.

GREENVILLE, Sir BEVIL, grandson of Sir Richard, was born 1596. He received his education at Exeter College, Oxford, after which he became a member of parliament. At the commencement of the civil war he raised a troop of horse at his own expense, and was killed at the battle of Lansdowne 5 July, 1643. Lord Clarendon gives him a most exalted character.

GREENVILLE, DENIS, D.D., son of Sir Bevil Greenville, and brother to the first earl of Bath, was born in Cornwall, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford (M.A. 1660; D.D. 1679). He married a daughter of Bishop Cosin, of Durham, who gave him a prebend in that church, with the rectories of Easington and Sedgefield. In 1684 he was installed dean of Durham; but lost that and his other preferments at the Revolution, for not taking the oaths. He then went to France, and died there 7 April, 1703 n.s. He published some tracts and sermons.

GREENVILLE, Sir RICHARD, was born at Exton in the parish of Kilkhampton, in Cornwall, about 1540. He entered early into the military life; and after serving as a volunteer against the Turks went to Ireland. He next joined Sir Walter Raleigh in his expedition to America; and in 1591 became vice-admiral under Sir Thomas Howard, who was sent out to the Azores to intercept the Plate fleet. The Spaniards, however, being apprised of the design, despatched a powerful squadron, which succeeded in cutting off Greenville's ship from the rest; and he died of his wounds, after an obstinate contest.

GREENWOOD, JOHN, was matriculated as a pensioner of St. John's College, Cambridge, 1558; removed to Catherine Hall; and proceeded B.A. 1561-2; M.A. 1565. He became master of the grammar-school at Brentwood, Essex, where he appears to have died at an advanced age, in 1600. His only work is 'Syntaxis et Prosodia, versiculis compositæ,' 8vo., Camb., 1590.—MS. additions to Athen. Cantab.

GREGORIO, ROSARIO, an ecclesiastic of Palermo, eminent as an historian and antiquary, was born 1753, and died 1809.

GREGORY I.

GREGORY I., St., The Great, was born at Rome about 544; was elected to the chair of St. Peter 3 Sept., 590; died 12 March, 604. It was this Pontiff who sent St. Augustine, the monk, in 596, to preach the Gospel to the English people.

GREGORY II., St., a Roman, who succeeded Pope Constantine 715; and died 12 Feb., 731.

GREGORY III., St., a Syrian, elected Pope 731; died 28 Nov., 741.

GREGORY IV., a Roman, succeeded Pope Valentine 828, and died 25 Jan., 844.

GREGORY V., Bruno, succeeded John XV. 996, and died 18 Feb., 999.

GREGORY VI., John Gratian, became Pope 1044, but abdicated two years afterwards.

GREGORY VII., Hildebrand, succeeded Alexander II. in the pontificate 1073, and died 24 May, 1085.

GREGORY VIII., Albert di Mora, was elected Pope 20 Oct., 1187, and died 17 Dec. following.

GREGORY IX., Ugolino de' Conti di Segni, elected Pope 1227; died 21 Aug., 1241.

GREGORY X., Theobald Visconti, elected Pope 1271; died 10 Jan., 1276.

GREGORY XI., Peter Roger de Montroux, elected Pope 1370; died 28 March, 1378.

GREGORY XII., Angeli Corario, elected Pope 1406; died 18 Oct., 1417.

GREGORY XIII., Hugh Buoncompagno, succeeded Pius V. 1572, and died 10 April, 1585, aged 83.

GREGORY XIV., Nicholas Sfondrati, was elected Pope 1590, and died 15 Oct., 1591.

GREGORY XV., Alexander Ludovisio, succeeded Paul V. 1621, and died 8 July, 1623.

GREGORY XVI., Mauro Capellari, born at Belluno 18 Sept., 1765; elected to the pontifical chair 2 Feb., 1831; died 1 June, 1846.

GREGORY NAZIANZEN, St., an illustrious doctor of the Greek Church, was born near Nazianzus, in Cappadocia, about 328, being son of St. Gregory, bishop of that city. He finished his studies at Athens with St. Basil, who was his dearest friend. Repairing afterwards to Constantinople, he placed himself at the head of the Catholics, and was consecrated bishop of that city 379, but the people would not acknowledge him. He resigned his see 382; and died 9 May, 391. His works, consisting of fifty-five Discourses or Sermons, several poetical pieces, and numerous letters, have been printed in Greek and Latin.

GREGORY OF NYSSA, St., a doctor of the Church, brother of St. Basil the Great, St. Peter, bishop of Sebastia, and St. Macrina. Born in Cappadocia about 331; he was elected bishop of Nyssa 372, and died 9 March, 396. There are several editions of his works.

GREGORY OF RIMINI, a scholastic divine, styled the Authentic Doctor, was general of the Augustinians 1357; and died 1358.

GREGORY OF ST. VINCENT. See St. VINCENT.

GREGORY THAUMATURGUS, St., so called from the miracles which he wrought, was a disciple of Origen. About 240 he was elected bishop of Neocæsarea, his native place; and died 17 Nov., 265, leaving several works, which have been printed in Greek and Latin.

GREGORY OF TOURS, St., born in Auvergne 544, was chosen bishop of Tours 573; and died 27 Nov., 595. He was author of a History of the Franks, &c.

GREGORY, DAVID, elder brother of James

GREGORY.

Gregory, F.R.S., was born 1627 or 1628. He was bred to trade, which he abandoned and went to reside upon his estate of Kinardie, where he practised medicine gratuitously, and constructed a barometer, which brought upon him the charge of being a conjuror. After living there some years, he settled in Aberdeen, with a family of thirty-two children. At the age of eighty he contrived a model to make the shot of great guns more destructive, which, however, was never carried into effect. He died about 1720.

GREGORY, DAVID, M.D., son of the preceding, was born at Aberdeen 24 June, 1661. He completed his education at Edinburgh, and in 1684 obtained the professorship of mathematics in that university. In 1691 he was chosen fellow of the Royal Society, and elected Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford. In 1695 he published his 'Catoptrica et Dioptrica Spherica Elementa;' and in 1702 his 'Astronomia Physica et Geometrica Elementa,' folio, which was afterwards translated into English, in 2 vols. 8vo. In 1703 he published Euclid's works, in folio. He died while engaged in superintending an edition of Apollonius's Conics 10 Oct., 1708. After his death appeared a treatise on Logarithms, and another on Practical Geometry. His son, David Gregory, D.D., became dean of Christ Church, and died in 1767. James, the brother of the Savilian professor, succeeded him in the chair at Edinburgh, which he held thirty-three years. His other brother, Charles, was professor of mathematics at St. Andrews thirty-two years, and was succeeded by his son, David, who published a system of arithmetic and algebra in Latin. He died in 1763.

GREGORY, DUNCAN FARQUHARSON, youngest son of James Gregory, M.D., of Edinburgh, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, proceeding B.A. (fifth wrangler) 1837, and being subsequently fellow of the college and M.A. He died at Edinburgh 23 Feb., 1844, aged 30. He was the chief projector of the Cambridge Mathematical Journal. His mathematical writings, edited by William Walton, M.A., with a biographical memoir by the late Robert Leslie Ellis, M.A., were published in 1865.

GREGORY, EDMUND, author of the 'Historical Anatomy of Christian Melancholy;' and of a 'Meditation on Job;' was of Trinity College, Oxford, and died 1650.

GREGORY, GEORGE, D.D., was the son of a clergyman in Ireland, and born 14 April, 1754. He was educated at Liverpool for the counting-house, in which he spent some years; but at length applied for and obtained orders in the Established Church. In 1782 he settled in London, where he became evening preacher at the Foundling, and lastly vicar of Westham, in Essex, for which preferment he was indebted to Mr. Addington, who employed him to defend his administration. Died 12 March, 1808. Dr. Gregory, for he had obtained a degree from Scotland, published Essays, historical and moral; a Translation of Lowth's Lectures; Church History; The Life of Chatterton; The Economy of Nature; Sermons. He left for the press 'Letters on Philosophy,' 2 vols.; and 'Letters to his Son,' 2 vols.

GREGORY, JAMES, F.R.S., a mathematician, born at Aberdeen Nov., 1638. He received his education in the Marischal College of his native place, where he published (1663) his Treatise on Optics, in which he imparted his invention of the

GREY.

Until Pitt's death Mr. Grey continued one of that statesman's most strenuous opponents. In Jan., 1806, Pitt died, and Fox was called to the administration of public affairs. Mr. Grey, who, by the elevation of his father to the peerage, had become Lord Howick, was appointed first lord of the Admiralty, with a seat in the cabinet. In October following, when the country was deprived of the services of Mr. Fox, Lord Howick became leader of the House of Commons, and secretary of state for foreign affairs. The sovereign soon took alarm at the attempt of the ministers to remove some of the disabilities on the Catholics, and they were dismissed. Parliament was dissolved, and Lord Howick was returned to the new parliament by the borough of Appleby. The death of his father, in 1807, removed him to the Upper House. He held no office till the sudden termination of the Wellington administration, in 1830, brought him forth from his comparative retirement to assume the reins of government. During the four years he continued in office he carried parliamentary reform and the abolition of slavery. He retired from public life 1834; and died 17 July, 1845.

GREY, LADY JANE, was the daughter of Henry Grey, marquis of Dorset, by Lady Frances Brandon, daughter of the duke of Suffolk; so that she was royally descended on both sides. She was born in 1537, at Bradgate, her father's seat in Leicestershire; and early in life gave proofs of an uncommon genius. She worked admirably with her needle; wrote an incomparable hand; played well on different instruments; and acquired a knowledge of the Greek and Latin, as well as of the French and Italian languages. In 1551 her father was created duke of Suffolk; and at this time Lady Jane Grey was much at court, where the ambitious duke of Northumberland projected a marriage between her and his son, Lord Guilford Dudley, which took place at the end of May, 1553. Soon after this Edward VI. died, having been prevailed upon in his last illness to settle the crown upon the Lady Jane, who, sorely against her will, was proclaimed with great pomp. This gleam of royalty, however, was of short duration. The kingdom was dissatisfied and the nobility indignant at the presumption of Northumberland; so that Mary soon overcame her enemies, and she was not backward in taking ample revenge. Lady Jane and her husband, after being confined in the Tower some months, were arraigned and condemned to death 3 Nov., 1553. This sentence, however, was not carried into execution till the 12th of Feb., 1553-4, when Lord Guilford suffered first, and his lady immediately afterwards on the same scaffold. Her 'Literary Remains,' with a memoir by Sir N. H. Nicolas, were published in 1825, and again in 1832.

GREY, or GRAY, NICHOLAS, was born in London 1590. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1614 he was appointed master of the Charterhouse School, which he relinquished on marrying; and in 1624 was chosen master of Merchant Taylors' School. In 1631 he resigned that situation also, and was elected head master of Eton, from which place he was ejected in the Rebellion, and then went to Tunbridge, where he remained till the Restoration, when he was restored; but died in Oct., 1660. He published—A Dictionary in Latin and English; Luculentia e Sacra Scriptura testimonia, ad

GRIERSON.

Hugonis Grotii baptizatorum puerorum institutionem; Parabolæ Evangelicæ, Lat. redditæ carmine paraphrastico varii generis in usum Scholæ Tunbrigensis.

GREY, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 1094. He became a member of Lincoln College, Oxford (M.A. 1718-9), after which he was appointed chaplain and secretary to Crew, bishop of Durham, who gave him the rectory of Hinton, Northamptonshire; to which was afterwards added that of Kimcote, Leicestershire. He was also prebendary of St. Paul's and commissary of the archdeaconry of Leicester. In 1731 he published 'A System of Ecclesiastical Law,' abridged from Gibson's Codex, for which the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. Died 28 Feb., 1771. His other works are—Memoria Technica, or a new Method of Artificinal Memory; The miserable and distracted State of Religion in England; A new and easy Method of learning Hebrew without Points; Historia Josephi: et Paradigmata verborum; Liber Jobi; An Answer to Warburton; several sermons and tracts.

GREY, ZACHARY, LL.D., was born in Yorkshire 1687. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of doctor of laws 1720. He became rector of Houghton Conquest, Bedfordshire, and vicar of St. Peter's and St. Giles's parishes in Cambridge. He died at Ampt-hill 25 Nov., 1766. Besides several tracts against the Dissenters, he published—A Defence of our ancient and modern Historians, in two parts, in answer to Oldmixon, 1725; The Spirit of Inidelity detected, with a Defence of Dr. Waterland; An impartial Examination of Neal's History of the Puritans, 3 vols.; An Examination of Sir Isaac Newton's Observations upon Daniel; An Attempt towards the character of Charles I.; Hudibras, with large annotations, 2 vols.; Remarks upon a late edition of Shakspeare; Critical and Historical Notes on Shakspeare, 2 vols.; Chronological Account of Earthquakes. Dr. Grey originated the method of illustrating old poets by contemporary writers; and his edition of Hudibras is invaluable.

GRIBALDUS, MATTHEW, surnamed Mofa, left Italy in 1557, to profess the Protestant religion at Tubingen, where he was appointed to the chair of civil law, till he was compelled to leave the university on account of his having embraced the Arian heresy. He died in prison at Berne Sept., 1504. His writings are all on legal subjects.

GRIENER, MICHAEL HENRY, professor of law at Leipsic, his native place, was born 1682, and died 1734.

GRIBOJEDOV, ALEXANDER, a Russian statesman and poet, born 1795; died 12 Feb., 1829.

GRIERSON, CONSTANTIA, was born in the county of Kilkenny, and became the wife of Mr. George Grierson, printer, in Dublin. She understood Latin and Greek well, as appeared in her editions of Tacitus and Terence. Mrs. Pilkington says that she was brought up to the profession of midwifery, and that her parents were in very humble circumstances. When Lord Carteret was viceroy he obtained a patent for Mr. Grierson to be the king's printer, and as a special favour, her name was included in the patent. She wrote elegantly both in prose and verse; but died at the age of twenty-seven, in 1733. Her son, who was also the king's printer, and an excellent scholar, died in Germany at the same age.

GRIESBACH, JOHN JACOB, learned critic and divine, was born 4 Jan., 1745, at Buzbach, in Hesse Darmstadt, where his father was a minister. The son was educated at Frankfurt, afterwards at Tübingen, next at Halle, and lastly at Leipsic. In 1773 he was appointed professor extraordinary of divinity at Halle, where, in 1775, he published his edition of the Greek Testament, with various readings. This inestimable edition passed through several impressions; one of which was taken off at the expense of the duke of Grafton. Professor Griesbach was called to the divinity chair at Jena; where also he became rector of the university, and privy counsellor for ecclesiastical affairs to the duke of Saxe Weimar. His critical notes upon the Scriptures are very valuable; but his publications are too numerous to admit of a list in this place. He died at Jena 24 March, 1812.

GRIFFET, HENRI, a French Jesuit, author of numerous esteemed historical works, was born at Moulins 1698. On the suppression of the society he retired to Brussels, where he died 22 Feb., 1771.

GRIFFIER, JOHN, a landscape painter, born at Amsterdam 1645. He settled in England, and drew many views in this country in a very finished style. He died 1718. His son, Robert, called the young Griffier, painted in the same manner as his father. His views on the Rhine are much admired. He died about 1720.

GRIFFIN, GERALD, a novelist and poet, was born in the city of Limerick 12 Dec., 1803. After adopting literature as a profession, he spent several years in London, but ultimately joined the order of the Christian Brothers at Cork, where he died 12 June, 1840. 'The Collegians' is his best novel. He also composed some short poems which possess great merit.

GRIFFITH, ELIZABETH, was of Welsh descent. Early in life she married Richard Griffith, a gentleman of small fortune in Ireland; and in conjunction with him published some novels which were once popular, as 'The Letters of Henry and Frances,' in 4 vols.; 'Delicate Distress,' 2 vols.; and the 'Gordian-Knot,' 12mo. Mrs. Griffith also wrote some plays; and a book of more merit, entitled 'The Morality of Shakspeare's Drama illustrated,' 8vo. She died 3 Jan., 1793.

GRIFFITH, WILLIAM, an English naturalist who was employed in several scientific missions in India, died at Malacca 9 Feb., 1845, aged 35.

GRIFFITHS, DAVID, a Welsh Independent minister, who laboured for some years as a missionary in the island of Madagascar, was born in Carmarthenshire 20 Dec., 1792, and died at Macynlleth 21 March, 1863. He wrote a History of Madagascar in Welsh, and translated the Bible and some religious tracts into the Malagasy language.

GRIFFITHS, MICHAEL, a nom de plume of Michael Alford, the Jesuit—q. v.

GRIFFITHS, RALPH, LL.D., the original institutor of the 'Monthly Review,' which, with unremitting perseverance, he conducted for fifty-four years, died at Turnham Green, Middlesex, 28 Sept., 1803, æt. 83.

GRIFFITHS, THOMAS, an English Catholic prelate, was consecrated bishop of Olena 28 Oct., 1833, being appointed vicar-apostolic of the London district. He died 12 Aug., 1847.

GRIMM.

GRIGNION, CHARLES, an engraver, studied at Paris under Le Bas, after which he settled in England, where he was most extensively employed for above half a century, till his old-fashioned manner was superseded by the more imposing style. This revolution in the art threw him into obscurity; and, in his latter years, a subscription was formed for his support. He died at Kentish Town, aged 94, in 1810.

GRIGNON, CHARLES, an English painter, born in London 1754; died at Leghorn 29 Oct., 1804.

GRIJALVA, JUAN DE, a Spanish navigator, who discovered Mexico in 1518.

GRIMALDE, NICHOLAS, a poet, was born in Huntingdonshire 1510, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge; after which he removed to Oxford, where he became fellow of Merton College, and lastly reader of rhetoric at Christ Church. Ultimately he became one of Bishop Ridley's chaplains, and he was imprisoned for heresy in the reign of Queer Mary, but it is said that he secretly recanted, and was employed as a spy on his fellow-prisoners. He died in or about 1563. He wrote blank verse, and some lyrical pieces, of great merit, in rhyme. He was also the author of a Latin tragedy, entitled 'Archiphrota, sive Joannes Baptista,' printed at Cologne in 1548, 8vo. His translation of Tully's Offices was printed at London 1553.—Athen. Cantab.

GRIMALDI, JOHN FRANCIS, a celebrated painter and engraver, surnamed Bolognese, was born 1606 at Bologna. He was a relation and pupil of Carraccio, and esteemed by Pope Innocent X., Alexander VII., and Clement IX. Cardinal Mazzarin invited him to France, and employed him in embellishing his palace and the Louvre. This artist especially excelled in landscapes. He died at Rome 1680.

GRIMALDI, JOSEPH, the celebrated clown, was born 18 Dec., 1779, in London, where he died 31 May, 1837.

GRIMALDI, STACEY, F.S.A., a solicitor of London, eminent as a genealogist and antiquary, died 28 March, 1863, aged 72. He wrote 'Origines Genealogicæ,' 1828, and several smaller works.

GRIMANI, DOMINIC, an Italian cardinal and patron of men of letters, was born at Venice 1460, and died 1523.

GRIMAUD, JEAN CHARLES MAGUERITE GUILLAUME DE, a French physician, professor at Montpellier, born 1750; died 5 Aug., 1789.

GRIMM, FREDERIC MELCHIOR, BARON DE, was born 26 Dec., 1723, at Ratisbon, of humble parents, who, however, took care to give him a good education. At an early age he produced a tragedy, 'Banise,' which turned out a complete failure. The count de Schomberg having entrusted him with the education of his two sons, he proceeded with them to Paris. He afterwards became reader to the duke of Saxe Gotha, and next secretary to the count de Fries. By Rousseau he was introduced to all the leading philosophers and litterateurs of the day, and when a dispute arose as to the relative merits of French and Italian music, he became noted as one of the most zealous and able defenders of the Italians. Afterwards he entered into a literary correspondence with several German princes, particularly the duke of Saxe-Gotha, who in 1776 appointed Grimm his minister plenipotentiary at the court of France. He also received marks of esteem from Frederick II., Gustavus III., and Catharine II., who in 1795 appointed reflecting telescope. About 1665 he went to Padua, where he printed his book on the Quadrature of the Circle and Hyperbola; to which he afterwards added, in a new edition, a piece on the Transmutation of Curves. These works were all in Latin. On his return from his travels he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; and about the same time had a controversy with Huygens on the subject of the quadrature. His merit now procured him the mathematical chair at St. Andrew's. In 1672 he had a friendly dispute with Newton respecting the construction of the telescope. In 1674 he removed to Edinburgh, on being appointed to the mathematical professorship; but while showing the satellites of Jupiter to some pupils, in Oct., 1675, he was suddenly struck blind, and died a few days after.

GREGORY, JOHN, was born 10 Nov., 1607, at Agmondesham, in Bucks. He became a servitor at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1631). Taking orders, he was appointed chaplain of his college by Dr. Duppa, who on his advancement to the see of Chichester gave him a prebend in that cathedral, as he afterwards did in that of Salisbury. In the Rebellion he lost all his preferments; and died 13 March, 1646. He published 'Notes and Observations on the Scripture,' 4to., which, with some other tracts, were reprinted after his death. He was also the author of a treatise entitled 'Alkibla,' on worshipping towards the East.

GREGORY, JOHN, M.D., was born 1724, at Aberdeen, where his father, Dr. James Gregory, was professor of medicine in King's College. After studying at his native place he removed to Edinburgh, and from thence to Leyden. In 1746 he obtained the degree of doctor of physic, and became professor of philosophy at Aberdeen, which chair he exchanged, in 1756, for that of physic. In 1766 he removed to Edinburgh, where he was elected professor of physic. Died 10 Feb., 1773. His works are—Comparative View of the State and Faculties of Man, with those of the Animal World; Observations on the Duties and Offices of a Physician; Elements of the Practice of Physic. After his death appeared a little piece of his, entitled, 'A Father's Legacy to his Daughters;' and in 1788 the whole of his works were collected in 4 vols. 8vo.

GREGORY, OLINTHUS GILBERT, LL.D., was born at Yaxley, Huntingdonshire, 20 Jan., 1774. In 1802 he was appointed mathematical master in the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and ultimately became professor in that institution. He received the degrees of M.A. and LL.D. from the university of Aberdeen. He died 2 Feb., 1841, having resigned his professorship three years previously. Dr. Gregory's principal works are—Lessons, Astronomical and Philosophical, for the Amusement and Instruction of British Youth; Elements of Plane and Spherical Trigonometry, 1816; Mathematics for Practical Men, 1825; Hutton's Mathematical Tables; with seven additional Tables, 1830; a new edition of Hutton's Course of Mathematics, 2 vols., 1836-7; Letters to a Friend on the Evidences, Doctrines, and Duties of the Christian Religion, 2 vols., 1815; Memoirs of Dr. John Mison Good, 1828.

GREGORY, PIERRE, a learned lawyer of Toulouse, died at Pont-à-Mousson 1507.

GRENADE, LOUIS DE, a Spanish Dominican, one of the greatest masters of the spiritual life, died 31 Dec., 1588, aged 84.

GRENVILLE.

GRENFELL, PASCOE, D.C.L., was born at Marazion, Cornwall, 1762, and represented Marlow and Penrhyn in the House of Commons from 1806 to 1826. He distinguished himself by his zeal for the abolition of slavery, and his mastery of financial questions. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the university of Oxford. Died 23 Jan., 1838.

GRENIER, JACQUES RAIMOND, vicomte DE, a French naval officer and hydrographer, born 1736; died Jan., 1803.

GRENVILLE, GEORGE, born 1712, is known in parliamentary history for his two bills for the more regular payment of the navy, passed in 1757, and for the trial of contested elections, passed in 1770. In 1754 he was made treasurer of the navy, and he became first lord of the Treasury in 1763, but resigned two years afterwards to Lord Rockingham. Died 13 Nov., 1770.

GRENVILLE, GEORGE NUGENT, LORD NUGENT. See NUGENT.

GRENVILLE, THOMAS, a statesman and book-collector, was born 31 Dec., 1755. Entering parliament, he became a supporter of Mr. Fox, but subsequently transferred his political allegiance to the Tory party. In 1795 he was accredited as minister extraordinary to Berlin, with a view of engaging the king of Prussia to unite with England and her allies in resistance to the aggressions of the French Republic. This mission, however, proved a failure. In 1800 the government rewarded Mr. Grenville's services by giving him the valuable sinecure office of Chief Justice in Eyre South of Trent. After the dissolution of Mr. Pitt's administration he ceased to support the Tory party; and in 1806 he was appointed first lord of the Admiralty, in the coalition ministry, but only held this post—the most exalted he ever attained—for the space of seven months. The remainder of his life he spent in intellectual luxury and personal ease. As a politician he has long passed out of remembrance, but his name will always be associated with the famous Grenville Library, consisting of 20,000 volumes, which he bequeathed to the British Museum. Died 17 Dec., 1846.

GRENVILLE, WILLIAM WYNDHAM, Lord Grenville, was born 25 Oct., 1759, being the third son of the right hon. George Grenville, prime minister of England. From Eton he went to Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1782 he entered parliament for Buckingham. Soon afterwards he succeeded Mr. Burke as paymaster of the army. In 1784 he was chosen one of the members for Bucks, and he was re-elected in 1790, but before the close of that year he was removed to the House of Lords. In 1789 he was elected speaker of the House of Commons, and a few months later became home secretary. Being removed to the House of Lords, by a patent of peerage, dated 25 Nov., 1790, he thenceforward became the representative and echo of Mr. Pitt in the Upper House. In 1791 he exchanged the seals of home secretary for those of the foreign office. He took an active part with Mr. Pitt in promoting the union with Ireland, and shared with him in giving the intimations on which the Catholics of that country founded their claims to emancipation. When it was ascertained that the king was unwilling to forward those views, the ministry felt themselves obliged to resign their offices. Mr. Pitt, however, again took his seat as first lord of the Treasury, in May, 1804, without having stipulated for Catholic emancipation. Lord Grenville, with Mr. Windham, refused to join him, and from that time till the death of Pitt, in 1800, his lordship took a prominent place in the ranks of the opposition. On Pitt's decease he became premier, but his administration, which was called 'All the Talents,' only lasted thirteen months. During that time Lord Grenville suffered not a little in his popularity by obtaining an act of parliament enabling him to hold with the premierships the profitable but nearly sinecure office of auditor of the exchequer, which had been conferred upon him in 1795, and which he retained till his death on 12 Jan., 1834.

GREPPI, CHARLES, an Italian dramatist, born at Bologna 1751; died Jan., 1811.

GRESHAM, SIR THOMAS, was the younger son of Sir Richard Gresham, lord mayor of London, who died in 1548. Sir John Gresham, the brother of Sir Richard, was also an opulent merchant, and served the first offices of the city of London. He founded a grammar-school at Holt, in Norfolk; and died in 1556. Sir Thomas was born in London 1519, and received his education at Gonville Hall, now Caius College, Cambridge. On leaving the university he entered into trade, and became a member of the Mercers' Company. In 1551 he settled at Antwerp, as the king's commercial agent. Queen Elizabeth conferred on him the honour of knighthood; and in 1570, when Sir Thomas had completed his building, called the Bourse, she attended the opening of it in person, with a great train, and gave it the name of the Royal Exchange. Her majesty also visited Sir Thomas at Osterley Park, near Brentford, and was entertained there with all her court two days in a most splendid manner. He died of an apoplexy, at his house in Bishopsgate Street, 21 Nov., 1579. By his will he gave one moiety of the Exchange to the corporation of London; and the other he devised to the Mercers' Company, in trust for the payment of the salaries of seven lecturers in divinity, law, physic, astronomy, geometry, music, and rhetoric. He also left his house for the residence of these professors; but it has since been pulled down, and the lectures are now delivered in a room over the Royal Exchange. This munificent patron of letters, who obtained in his life-time the appellation of 'The Royal Merchant,' founded several almshouses, and left considerable sums for yearly distribution to various charitable objects.

GRESSET, JEAN BAPTISTE LOUIS, was born 1709, at Amiens. He was educated under the Jesuits, and became a member of that society; but quitted it in 1736, about which time he published his admirable poem of 'Vert Vert.' He was admitted into the French Academy in 1748, after which he devoted himself to religious works. Died 16 June, 1777. His other pieces are, 'Le Lutrin vivant,' 'Les Ombres,' Epistles; a tragedy, entitled 'Edward III.,' and two comedies, 'Sidney,' and 'Le Méchant.'

GRESTER, JAMES, a German Jesuit, was born at Maredorf 1661. He became a professor at Ingolstadt, where he died 20 Jan., 1625. This learned man spent his whole life in writing against the Protestant religion; and his works make no fewer than 17 vols. folio.

GRESWELL, EDWARD, D.D., was born at Manchester 1707, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow and vice-president of Corpus Christi College. He published 'Harmonia Evangelica;' 'Prolegomena' to the same; 'Dissertations on the Gospels;' 'Fasti Temporis Catholici,' a valuable treatise on sacred chronology; 'Origines Kalendarie,' or the history of the primitive calendar among the Greeks, before and after the time of Solon; 'Origines Kalendarie Italice,' showing the early calendars of Romulus, of Numa Pompilius, and of the Decemvirs. He also translated into Greek verse the 'Comus' and 'Samson Agonistes' of Milton. Dr. Grewell died at Oxford 29 June, 1809.

GRÉTRY, ANDRÉ ERNEST MODESTE, a celebrated musical composer, was born at Liège 11 Feb., 1741, and after studying at Rome settled in Paris, where between 1769 and 1800 he brought out at the Opera Comique and the Grand Opéra no fewer than forty-four pieces, which procured for him a wide-spread reputation. This great musician, who was a member of the Institute and of the Legion of Honour, died at Montmorency 24 Sept., 1813.

GREUZE, JEAN BAPTISTE, one of the most distinguished painters of the French school, was born at Tournus 1726, and died 21 March, 1805.

GREVILLE, ALGERNON FREDERICK, the well-known private secretary to the duke of Wellington and Bath king-at-arms, was born 1798, and died 15 Dec., 1864.

GREVILLE, FULKE, LORD BROOKE. See BROOKE.

GREVIN, JACQUES, a French poet and physician, who was in the service of Marguerite of France, duchess of Savoy. Born about 1540; died 5 Nov., 1570.

GREW, NEHEMIAH, M.D., F.R.S., son of Obadiah, was born at Coventry 1628. He studied physic in a foreign university, and in 1672 settled in London, where he became a fellow of the Royal Society; which learned body, in 1677, appointed him their secretary. Died 25 March, 1711. His principal works are—The Anatomy of Plants; A Catalogue of Rarities belonging to the Royal Society; Cosmologia Sacra, or a Discourse of the Universe.

GREW, OBADIAH, D.D., was born Nov., 1607, at Atherston in the parish of Manceter, Warwickshire, and educated at Oxford. In the civil war he joined the Presbyterians, and was chosen minister of St. Michael's, Coventry. In 1654 he was appointed one of the committee for ejecting those called scandalous ministers. He lost his living at the Restoration; and died at Coventry 22 Oct., 1689. He published several sermons.

GREY, CHARLES, second Earl Grey, K.G., was born at Falldon, near Alnwick, 15 March, 1764, being the eldest son of Sir Charles (afterwards Earl) Grey. From Eton he passed to King's College, Cambridge, and in 1786 he was returned to parliament for Northumberland. He at once joined the Whig party under Mr. Fox, and in his very first session secured a foremost position in the House. Subsequently he identified himself with the cause of parliamentary reform, and in 1797 brought forward a scheme embodying his views on this subject. He proposed to give the county of York four new members, and to divide each county into two districts, each returning a member. The right of voting was to be granted to copyholders and leaseholders as well as freeholders. In cities and boroughs the elective franchise was to be extended to all householders paying taxes. Lastly, parliaments were to be triennial. His motion was negatived by one hundred and forty-nine votes.

him 'ner minister at Hamburg—a post which he occupied until ill-health compelled him to resign it. He died at Gotha 19 Dec., 1807. There have been several editions of his 'Literary Correspondence.'

GRIMM, JACOB LUDWIG CARL, a renowned philologist, born at Hainau, in Hesse Cassel, 4 Jan., 1785. He studied at Marburg with his brother William, and the two were through life associated in their studies and labours. From youth to old age they had all things in common, books, money, and dwelling. They studied together, and wrote together in the same works, so that their respective shares could hardly be distinguished in the great result of the united task, and the 'Brothers Grimm' became a recognized duality in literature. In 1806 Jacob was a clerk in the bureau of the Hessian secretary of war, and when Hesse was incorporated in the new kingdom of Westphalia he became keeper of the private library of the new monarch. In 1813, when the kingdom of Westphalia was swept away and the elector restored, Grimm was sent to Paris as secretary of legation, charged with the special mission of reclaiming the volumes; and the library was returned as part of the restitution on which the allies insisted in 1814. Subsequently both Jacob and William were retained in charge of it; but in 1829 they removed to Göttingen, where Jacob was appointed professor, and William sub-librarian of the university. In 1827 they were dismissed from their posts, and they resided at Cassel till 1841, when the king of Prussia invited them to Berlin. There they were both appointed professors, and continued to reside for the remainder of their lives. Jacob died 29 Sept., 1863. His greatest work is his German Grammar. The archaeological works of Grimm are of unrivalled importance in the whole department of German literature and antiquities. The constant aim of his researches has been to trace the spiritual life of the Germanic nations as revealed in their language, laws, customs, faiths, and poetry, and his works are mines of curious erudition.

GRIMOARD, PHILIPPE HENRI, Comte DE, a French general officer, the author of a large number of works on military science and history, was born 1750, and died 1815.

GRIMSTON, Sir HARBOTTLE, was born at Bradfield Hall, near Manningtree, Essex, about 1594. He studied in Lincoln's Inn, and in 1638 became recorder of Colchester, for which place he was also returned to Parliament in 1640. He acted for some time in opposition to the king, but at length became more moderate; and when that monarch was murdered he went abroad. In 1660 he was chosen speaker of what was called 'The Healing Parliament,' and he was also one of the commissioners who waited on Charles II. at Breda. On the restoration of that king he was made master of the Rolls, which office he discharged with great reputation, and died 31 Dec., 1683. He published the Reports of Sir George Croke, whose daughter he married.

GRINDAL, EDMUND, archbishop of Canterbury, was born in 1519 at Hensingham, in the parish of St. Bees, Cumberland. He received his education first in Magdalen College, Cambridge, but removed from thence to Christ's College, and next to Pembroke Hall, of which house he was chosen fellow in 1538. In 1549 he became president or vicemaster of his college, and soon after was chosen Lady Margaret's public preacher at Cambridge, Bishop Ridley appointed him his chaplain, and made him precentor of St. Paul's. In 1552 he became prebendary of Westminster; but on the death of King Edward he went to Germany, and resided at Strasburg till the accession of Queen Elizabeth, who nominated him to the see of London (1559), and employed him much in the settlement of the church, though he incurred some censure for his indulgences to the Puritans. In 1570 he was translated to the archbishopric of York, from whence, on the death of Parker, in 1575, he was elevated to the see of Canterbury. Soon after this he fell under the queen's displeasure for the favour shown by him to what were called prophesyings, that is, the assemblies of the clergy for the discussion of Scriptural subjects; but which were considered as tending to faction. The archbishop, however, having refused to suppress these exercises, was himself suspended, and confined to his house for some time. At length his sequestration was taken off, and he continued in his office till the latter end of 1582, when he made a voluntary resignation of it on account of his blindness and other infirmities. He died at Croydon 6 July, 1583. The archbishop assisted Fox in his Acts and Monuments, in which is a dialogue of his writing upon Custom and Truth. He first brought the tamarisk into England. This archbishop founded the celebrated school of St. Bee's in Cumberland. —Athen. Cantab.

GRINFIELD, EDWARD WILLIAM, a biblical scholar, born in or about 1780, was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. After studying in the Temple he became minister of Laura Chapel, Bath; but he subsequently removed to London, preaching occasionally at Kensington, and writing articles for magazines and reviews. His death occurred at Brighton 9 July, 1864. He published several theological works, the principal being the 'Novum Testamentum Græcum. Editio Hellenistica,' published with the design of showing the close connection between the LXX. and the New Testament. Mr. Grinfield founded and endowed a lecture at Oxford on the LXX. in 1850.

GRINGORE, PIERRE, a French poet, who died 1547 or 1548.

GRISAR, ALBERT, a musical composer, born at Antwerp 1808; died at Paris June, 1869.

GRISAUNT, WILLIAM, an English physician in the fourteenth century, was a member of Merton College, Oxford, where he became suspected of magical practices, on which account he went to France, where he died about 1350. His son arrived at the pontificate, by the name of Urban V.

GRISCOM, JOHN, LL.D., an American educationist, born in New Jersey 27 Sept., 1774; died 26 Fev., 1852.

GROCYN, WILLIAM, an eminent grammarian, was born at Bristol 1442, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he was elected to New College, Oxford, by which society he was presented to the rectory of Newton Longville, Bucks. He also became divinity reader at Magdalen College, and in 1485 prebendary of Lincoln. In 1488 he went to Italy to perfect himself in the Greek language, which, on his return, he taught at Oxford, where he entertained Erasmus, who acknowledges the obligations he was under to Grocyn for his hospitality and instructions. About 1509 he was made master of the college at Maidstone, and died there in 1519. The only thing of his in print is a Latin epistle to Aldus Minutius, prefixed to Linacre's translation of Procius 'de Sphæra.'

GROENVELT, John, a Dutch physician, who practised in London under the name of Greenfield, published some Latin works on lithotomy and the use of cantharides. He flourished about 1688.

GROHMANN, JOHN GODFREY, an industrious translator and compiler, was born at Gusswitz, in Upper Lusatia, 13 July, 1703, and taught philosophy at Leipzig from 1794 till his death, 12 March, 1803.

GROLLIER, JEAN, a patron of learned men, born at Lyons 1479. He was grand treasurer to Francis I., who sent him on an embassy to Rome, where he employed the Alduses to print for him an edition of Terence, 1521, and another of Budæus's treatise, 'De Assè,' 1522. He made a large collection of valuable books, and settled pensions on many eminent scholars. Died 22 Oct., 1565.

GRONOVIVS, JOHN FREDERICK, was born at Hamburg 10 Sept., 1611. He travelled into France and Italy, after which he was chosen professor of the belles lettres at Deventer, from whence he was invited to Leyden on the death of Daniel Heinsius, and died there 28 Dec., 1671. His works, which are very numerous, consist chiefly of illustrations of the classics, epistles, and observations on ancient coins. His son, James Gronovius, was born at Deventer 20 Oct., 1645. He was educated entirely under his father, whom he soon surpassed in learning, though he fell short of him in modesty and liberality. After studying the civil law he visited England, where he resided some months in both universities, and on his return to Leyden published an edition of Macrobius, and another of Polybius. In 1672 he went to France, and from thence to Italy, where he received many marks of favour, particularly from the grand duke of Tuscany, who gave him a pension and a professorship at Pisa, which he held two years, and then quitted it to return to Leyden. In 1679 he obtained the chair of history in that university, to which was afterwards added that of geography. He died there of grief, occasioned by the loss of a favourite daughter, 21 Oct., 1716. He left two sons, the eldest of whom was a physician, and the youngest professor of history at Utrecht. The works of James Gronovius exhibit a stupendous monument of learning and industry, and his editions of Greek and Latin authors, except that of Herodotus, are held in high estimation. He was, however, too dogmatical, and inexcusably severe upon those who differed from him in opinion. His greatest undertaking was the 'Thesaurus Græcarum Antiquitatum,' 13 vols. folio.

GRONOVIVS, JOHN FREDERICK, a physician and naturalist, of Leyden, born 1690; died 1762. His son, Laurence Theodore Gronovius (b. 1730; d. 1777), was a distinguished botanist and zoologist.

GRONOW, REES HOWELL, was born 1794, and educated at Eton. He entered the army, and was promoted to the rank of captain 1815. In 1822 he retired from the service, after having served in the Peninsula and at Waterloo. For a short time he represented Stafford in Parliament. Died at Paris 22 Nov., 1865. Captain Gronow wrote several volumes of very amusing anecdotes.

GROS. See LEGROS.

GROS, ANTOINE JEAN, Baron, a celebrated historical painter, born at Paris 16 March, 1771; died 26 June, 1835.

GROSE, FRANCIS, was born 1731, at Richmond, Surrey. His father was a jeweller, and left him a good fortune, which he dissipated by his extravagance. After enjoying for some time a place in the College of Arms, he resigned it, and became adjutant and paymaster in the Surrey militia. His imprudence, however, involved him in great difficulties, to clear himself from which he published his 'Views of Antiquities in England and Wales,' 8 vols. 4to. The success of this elegant work induced him to make a tour of Scotland with the same object; and before he had completed this publication he went to Ireland with the design of surveying and sketching the antiquities of that kingdom; but while thus employed he died of an apoplexy, in Dublin, 6 May, 1791. He was a man of innate humour, and, both in wit and person, might have been compared to Falstaff. His other works are—A Treatise on ancient Armour and Weapons; Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, 8vo., a very indecent performance; Military Antiquities, 2 vols. 4to.; The History of Dover Castle; A Provincial Glossary; Rules for drawing Caricatures; A Guide to Health, Beauty, &c.; The Olio, a Collection of Essays. His Antiquities of Ireland were published by Mr. Ledwich in 2 vols.

GROSE, SIR NASH, justice of the court of King's Bench, died 31 May, 1814, at 74.

GROSLEY, PIERRE JEAN, a French advocate and litterateur, born 1718; died 4 Nov., 1785. His entertaining book on London was translated into English by Dr. Nugent.

GROSSETESTE, ROBERT, an English prelate, born at Stradbroke, Suffolk, about 1175. He studied at Oxford, where he acquired a great knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek languages, after which he went to Paris. On his return he taught divinity in the Franciscan school at Oxford, till 1235, when he was elected to the bishopric of Lincoln, where he acted with vigilance in reforming ecclesiastical abuses, and in repelling the papal claims. Complaints were, of course, alleged against him to the court of Rome; and in his old age he was obliged to meet the Pope at Lyons, where he defended himself stoutly, but without effect. His fortitude, however, continued unshaken, and he went on in the same course, for which sentence of excommunication was pronounced against him. But even this could not daunt him, and he persevered in his episcopal functions as if nothing had happened. He died at Buckden 9 Oct., 1253. He wrote a great number of books, which remain in manuscript except one, 'De Sphæra,' and another, 'De Cessatione Legalium,' which have been printed.

GROSSMANN, GUSTAV FREDERICK WILLIAM, a German actor and dramatist, born at Berlin 30 Nov., 1746; died 20 May, 1796.

GROSVENOR, BENJAMIN, a dissenting minister of London, who, besides some sermons, published two popular books, one entitled 'An Essay on Health;' and the other, 'The Mourner.' Born 1 Jan., 1675; died 27 Aug., 1758.

GROTEFEND, GEORG FREDERICK, a German philologist and archæologist, born at Münden 9 June, 1775. He studied at Göttingen, officiated for some time as rector of the gymnasium of Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and founded in 1817 the Gelehrten-Verein für deutsche Sprache. Afterwards he was director of the lyceum of Hanover 1821-49. He was a contributor to Ersch and Gruber's Cyclopaedia, wrote on German philology and poetry, and extensively on the ancient languages and the geography of Italy, prepared several Latin grammars for the use of schools, and was the first to question the genuineness of Wagenfeld's alleged discovery of Sanchoniathon's original history of the Phœnicians. He gained a high reputation at home and abroad, chiefly by his successful attempts in deciphering the Pehivic inscriptions of the Sassanides, at Naksh-i-Rustam, near Persepolis, which were published in Heeren's works in 1815, and in English in 1833. Died 15 Dec., 1853.

GROTESTE, CLAUDE, sieur de la Mothe, a Protestant minister, born at Paris 1647. Coming to London, he was appointed minister of the Savoy Chapel 1694, and held that situation till his death 30 Sept., 1713. He published 'Traité de l'Inspiration des Livres Sacrés,' and several sermons.

GROTIUS, or DE GROOT, HUGO, was the son of a burgo-master of Delft, whose wife was a lady of fine accomplishments and noble origin, by whom he had three sons and a daughter. Hugo was born at Delft 10 April, 1583; and after studying under Utenbogard, was sent to Leyden, where he had Francis Junius for his tutor. At the age of fifteen he went in the suite of the Dutch embassy to Paris; and being introduced to Henry IV. was presented by that monarch with his picture and a gold chain. On his return, in 1599, he published an edition of 'Martianus Capella.' Having taken his doctor's degree in civil law, he commenced advocate, and pleaded his first cause, at Delft, with great applause. But while thus employed he did not neglect his other studies; the fruits of which appeared in a translation of Stevin's Treatise on Navigation, and an edition of the 'Phænomena of Aratus.' He also wrote Latin poems, and three tragedies in the same language. In 1603 he was appointed by the States to write the history of the war with Spain; and he was also made advocate-general for Holland and Zealand. In 1608 he married, on which occasion his father wrote an epithalamium; as likewise did Heinsius. He was at this time engaged upon his 'Mare liberum,' or the Freedom of the Sea, which was printed in 1609; and answered by Selden, in his 'Mare Clausum.' The next year Grotius published his treatise 'De Antiquitate Reipublicæ Bataviæ,' for which he received the thanks of the government. In 1613 he was chosen pensionary of Rotterdam, which gave him a seat in the assembly of the States of Holland, and afterwards in that of the States-general. A dispute having arisen between the English and Dutch governments respecting the whale fishery, Grotius was sent as one of the commissioners to settle the dispute in London, where he met with a flattering reception. Hitherto his life had been marked by splendour, but now it began to be clouded by the part which he took in the Arminian controversy. This religious contention had nearly involved Holland in a civil war, till the activity of Maurice and the assembly at Dort decided the matter in favour of Calvinism. But this triumph was the ruin of Grotius and his friend Barneveldt, the latter of whom fell upon the scaffold, and the former was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment in the castle of Louvestein. After a confinement of nearly two years, during which he wrote his treatise on the Christian religion, and other works, he eluded the vigilance of his keepers, by the management of his wife, and was carried out of the castle in a chest that had been used for the conveyance of books and linen. Being now at liberty he went to Antwerp, and from thence to Paris, where the king granted him a pension. In 1622 he printed his apology, which was proscribed by the States General as a libel upon their government; and an edict was issued, ordering that Grotius should be seized wherever he could be found. While in France, he wrote his great work 'On the Rights of War and Peace,' the publication of which added to his glory, and increased the shame of his persecutors. Yet Grotius still longed for his native country, and endeavoured to promote her good, while he was banished from her bosom on account of his religious opinions; but no solicitations of himself or his friends could procure his recall. He, however, went thither privately; but was soon obliged to withdraw to Hamburg, and from thence to Frankfort-on-the-Main, where he met Oxenstiern, the chancellor of Sweden, by whose interest he was appointed ambassador of that kingdom to the court of France, in 1636, and continued there till 1644. On his journey to Sweden he passed through Holland, and was entertained at Amsterdam in a magnificent manner. His reception at Stockholm was equally gratifying; but the air of that country not agreeing with him, he obtained leave to go to Lübeck. The voyage, however, was boisterous, so that the vessel in which he had embarked was obliged to take shelter on the coast of Pomerania, from whence Grotius set out by land; but fell ill at Rostock, and died there 28 Aug., 1645. Besides the works already mentioned, and some others of less note, he wrote, 'Historia Gothorum,' a Commentary on the Old and New Testament, 3 vols. folio; illustrations of the classics and epistles. His celebrated book on the Truth of the Christian Religion has been translated into Arabic; and his treatise on War and Peace, into most of the European languages. His brother, William, was a lawyer, and a man of erudition. The two sons of Grotius, Cornelius and Dietrich, followed the military profession; but Peter was bred to the law, and became pensionary of Amsterdam.

GROTTO, LOUIS, surnamed The Blind, an Italian poet, born 1541; died 13 Dec., 1585.

GROU, JEAN NICOLAS, a French priest, born 24 Nov., 1731. On the breaking out of the Revolution he found an asylum at Lullworth Castle, Dorsetshire, where he died 13 Dec., 1803. He was author of several literary and spiritual works, some of which have been translated into English.

GROUCHY, EMANUEL, a French general, born at Paris, 23 Oct., 1766; died 29 May, 1847.

GROUCHY, NICHOLAS, Gruchius, an eminent French philologist, died at Rochelle, 1572, leaving a treatise 'De Comitibus Romanorum,' and many other works of merit.

GROVE, HENRY, a dissenting minister, born at Taunton, Somersetshire, 4 Jan., 1683. He received his education at the academy of his native place, kept by Mr. Warren, a nonconformist; after which he completed his theological studies under the Rev. Mr. Rowe, in London, where he formed an intimacy with Dr. Isaac Watts. At the age of twenty-two he entered into the ministry, and soon afterwards succeeded his tutor in the direction of the academy at Taunton. He also officiated to a congregation in the neighbourhood of that town, and next to another at Fulwood. Died 27 Feb., 1737-8. His works are—The Regulation of Diversions; four papers in the Spectator; An Essay towards a Demonstration of the Soul's Immortality; Essay on the Terms of Christian Communion; The Evidence of our Saviour's Resurrection; Some Thoughts concerning the Proof of a Future State from Reason; A Discourse on the Lord's Supper; Wisdom the first Spring of Action in the Deity; A Discourse on Saving Faith; single sermons; Miscellanies in Prose and Verse. After his death came out his 'Posthumous Works,' 4 vols.

GROVE, JOSEPH, author of a Life of Cardinal Wolsey, and of the Lives of the Earls and Dukes of Devonshire, died 1764.

GRUBER, JOHANN GOTTFRIED, a German author and cyclopædist, professor of philosophy at Halle, was born at Naumburg 29 Nov., 1774, and died at Halle 7 Aug., 1851. He wrote nearly thirty works on different subjects, historical, critical, and imaginative, and was joint editor, with Ersch, of the 'Universal Cyclopædia of Sciences and Arts.' His 'Life of Wieland' is much esteemed.

GRUCHIUS. See GROUCHY.

GRUDIUS, NICHOLAS EVERARD, treasurer of Brabant, died 1571. He wrote sacred and profane poetry in Latin.

GRUNER, JOHN FREDERICK, was born at Coburg 1723, and became in 1764 divinity professor at Halle, where he died 29 March, 1778. He published an Introduction to Roman Antiquities; Miscellanea Sacra; Critical Remarks on the Classics; besides editions of Cælius Sædulus, Eutropius, Paterculus, &c.

GRUTER, JANUS, or JOHN, was born 3 Dec., 1560, at Antwerp, where his father was burgo-master; but for signing the petition against the duchess of Parma, was banished; on which he came to England and settled at Norwich. Young Gruter was educated under his mother, who was a very learned woman, and afterwards he became a student at Cambridge, till his parents removed to Middleburg, when he entered the university of Leyden, and took there his doctor's degree in law. He now went to Antwerp, but was soon obliged to quit that city when it was besieged by the duke of Parma, in 1684. After this he became professor at Rostock, and next at Wittemberg; from whence he removed to Heidelberg, where he lost a noble library, when that place was taken by count de Tilly. He died near that city 20 Sept., 1627. His works are—Notes upon the Roman Historians; an edition of Cicero; Florilegium Magnum, seu Polyanthæa; Chronicon Chronicorum; Thesaurus Criticus, 6 vols. 8vo., since enlarged to 7 vols.; Deliciæ Poetarum Gallorum, Italorum, Belgarum, 9 vols.; Inscriptiones Romanæ, 2 vols. folio afterwards enlarged to 4 vols.

GRYPHIUS, ANDREW, called the Cornelle of Germany, was born at Glogaw 1616. He is highly extolled by the Germans as a tragic writer, and he showed his talent for satire in a critique on the ancient comedies of his countrymen. Died 1664. His son, Christian Gryphius (born 1649; died 1706), was professor at Breslau, principal of Magdalen College, and librarian of the university. He was the author of German poems; a treatise on the German language; a dissertation on the historical writers of the 17th century, &c.

GRYPHIUS, SEBASTIAN, a celebrated printer of Lyons, was born in Swabia 1493, and died 7 Sept., 1556. The books printed by him are much admired, especially his Hebrew, Greek, and Latin editions, and above all his Latin Bible in 2 vols., folio, 1550.

GUA DE MALVES, JEAN PAUL DE, a French priest, who conceived the idea of the great Encyclopædia, which was so successfully executed by d'Alembert and others. He published 'Usage de l'Analyse de Descartes,' &c.; and composed a poem consisting wholly of monosyllables. Born 1712; died 1786.

GUADAGNOLO, PHILIP, an Italian ecclesiastic and orientalist, born at Magliano about 1506. He studied Greek, Hebrew, Chaldean, Syriac, Persian, and particularly Arabic, which he taught for many years at Rome. He translated the Holy Scriptures into Arabic, and published several works against Mahomedanism. Died 27 March, 1666.

doneo in Galicia. Guevara wrote 'The Dial of Princes;' or the Life of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus,' a kind of moral romance. His Epistles have been both praised and censured beyond what they deserve. Died 10 April, 1544.

GUEVARA, LOUIS VELEZ DE LAS DUENAS Y, a Spanish dramatist, born at Ecija Jan., 1574; died at Madrid Jan., 1646. His principal piece, entitled 'El Diabolo Cojuelo,' was translated by Le Sage, and is well known in English under the name of 'The Devil on Two Sticks.'

GUGLIELMINI, DOMINIC, a mathematician, who was professor at Bologna, his native city, and afterwards at Padua. Born 1655; died 21 July, 1710.

GUIBERT, a famous anti-pope, was a native of Parma. He was a chancellor to the Emperor Henry IV., who caused him to be elected archbishop of Ravenna, and afterwards Pope in 1050. Guibert took the name of Clement III., and died miserably 1099.

GUIBERT, a French Benedictine, born 1053, became abbat of Nogent-sous-Couci, where he died 1124. He wrote 'Trois Livres de sa Vic.' in imitation of St. Augustine's Confessions; a History of the Crusades, &c.

GUIBERT, JACQUES ANTOINE HIPPOLYTE, comte DE, was born at Montauban 12 Nov., 1743. He served in the German wars, and became a colonel in Corsica. On his return to France he published his 'Essai de Tactique Générale,' a work of reputation. He was also the author of some tragedies and panegyrics; 'Histoire de la Milice Française;' a Tour in Germany, &c. He was a member of the Academy; and died 6 May, 1790.

GUICCIARDINI, FRANCESCO, a celebrated historian, born at Florence, 1482. After receiving a liberal education, he practised the law, and held some offices of importance, and then devoted himself to the public affairs of his native city. From Florence he went to Rome, and was highly honoured by Leo X. and his two successors, who employed him in a high civil and military capacity, and trusted much to his integrity. Died 27 May, 1540. His History of Italy, in Italian, is a performance about which his countrymen deservedly pride themselves.

GUICCIARDINI, LUDOVICO, nephew of the above, was a writer of great fidelity. He was born at Florence 19 Aug., 1521, and died at Antwerp 1589. Of his valuable works the most esteemed is his description of the Low Countries.

GUICHARD, CLAUDE, historiographer to the duke of Savoy, was the author of a curious work on the modes of conducting funerals among the ancients. He died at Turin 15 May, 1607.

GUICHENON, SAMUEL, a French advocate and historian, born at Mâcon 1607; died 8 Sept., 1664. His 'Genealogical History of the Royal House of Savoy' is highly praised by Bayle and others.

GUIDI, CHARLES ALEXANDER, an Italian lyric poet, born at Pavia 1650; died at Frascati 12 June, 1712. His poems were published in a collected form at Parma 1681.

GUIDICIONI, GIOVANNI, was born at Lucca 1480. He became governor of Rome, bishop of Fossombroni, and, in 1535, was sent as nuncio to the Emperor Charles V., after which he was made governor of the Marche. Died Aug., 1541. His letters and poems have been printed in 2 vols. 4to.

GUIDO RENI, a painter, born at Bologna about

GUIDOTTO BORGHESI.

1574. He was the pupil of Denis Calvert, and afterwards studied in the school of the Carracci, where he excited the jealousy of his masters by his astonishing proficiency. He struck out a style peculiar to himself, full of grace and sweetness, particularly in the representation of females. His early performances, however, are superior to those of his latter years, owing to his incurable habit of gaming, which made him indifferent to everything else. Died 18 Aug., 1642.

GUIDOTTO BORGHESI. See BORGHESI.

GUIGNES, JOSEPH DE, was born at Pontolse 10 Oct., 1721. He studied the oriental languages under Stephen Fourmont, and was appointed king's interpreter in 1741. He became a member of the Academy of Belles Lettres in 1753; but after a life devoted to literature he was reduced to poverty in his old age by the sanguinary Revolution. He died at Paris 10 March, 1800. His works comprise a Life of Stephen Fourmont; A History of the Huns, Turks, Mogols, and other oriental Tartars; a Memoir to prove that the Chinese were an Egyptian colony; and essays on typography. His son, Christophe Louis Joseph, also a distinguished orientalist, was born 1759, and died 9 March, 1845.

GUILANDINUS, MELCHIOR, a physician and botanist of Königsberg, died 24 Dec., 1689.

GUILBERT DE PIXÈRE-COURT. See PIXÈRE-COURT.

GUILD, WILLIAM, D.D., was born at Aberdeen 1586. On entering into orders he obtained a living in the country, from whence he removed to Aberdeen, where he had the degree of doctor of divinity conferred upon him, and became principal of King's College. He endowed a hospital in 1633, and bestowed many other benefactions on his native city, where he died in Aug., 1657. He wrote some expository books on the Scriptures, and a treatise entitled 'Moses unveiled.'

GUILFORD, FRANCIS NORTH, LORD, was the second son of Dudley Lord North, and born about 1640. He received his education at Bury St. Edmund's School, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar. In 1671 he was knighted and made solicitor-general; in 1673, attorney-general; and the year following, chief-justice of the Common Pleas. In 1683 he was appointed lord-keeper of the great seal, with the title of Baron Guilford. Died 5 Sept., 1685. He wrote An Alphabetical Index of Verbs Neuter; A Philosophical Essay on Music; and several papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society.

GUILFORD, FREDERICK NORTH, SECOND EARL OF, K.G., eldest son of Francis, the first earl, was born 1732. He was educated at Eton, and next at Trinity College, Oxford, after which he went to Leipsic. On his return home he was elected into parliament, and in 1759 became a commissioner of the Treasury. In 1763 he succeeded Lord Bute as the head of the board, but resigned his seat in 1765, and the year following he became joint receiver and paymaster-general of the forces. In 1767 he was appointed chancellor of the Exchequer, and in 1770 first lord of the Treasury, both which offices he held during the American war till 1782. Not long after this the same statesmen who had repeatedly threatened his lordship with an impeachment formed a coalition with him; but this motley administration lasted only a few months. In 1790 Lord North succeeded his father in the earldom, and died 5 April, 1792, having been blind for some years previous.

GUILLEMIN, SIMON, a sculptor of Paris, born 1581; died 1658.

GUILLEMEAU, JACQUES, a surgeon, was a native of Orleans, and a pupil of Ambrose Paré. He became the professional attendant of Charles IX. and Henry IV., who both placed implicit confidence in his skill. He died at Paris, 13 March, 1613, leaving several works on professional subjects.

GUILLET DE ST. GEORGE, GEORGE, the first historiographer to the Academy of Painting and Sculpture in Paris, was born in Auvergne about 1625, and died in Paris 16 April, 1705. He wrote, among other things, Ancient and Modern Athens; Ancient and Modern Lacedæmon; History of Mahomet II.; History of the Grand Vizier Caproglu. The latter work was translated into English by Evelyn.

GUILIM, JOHN, was born in Herefordshire about 1565. He became a student of Brasenose College, Oxford; after which he settled in London as a member of the College of Arms, where he obtained the office of rouze croix pursuivant in ordinary. Died 7 May, 1621. The 'Display of Heraldry,' first printed in 1610, and lastly in 1724, gives him a place here; though in reality the work was the production of Dean Barkham, who made Guillim a present of the manuscript. See BARKHAM.

GUILLOTIN, JOSEPH IGNACE, a physician, born at Saintes 1738. At the Revolution he was deputy in the national assembly from Paris. In making a report on the penal code he recommended an instrument of death which might be more expeditious, and inflict on the sufferers less pain, than either the halter or the wheel; and this new machine, so fatally used during the civil dissensions of the State, has immortalised the name of its author. Though it has been reported that he perished under his guillotine, it is certain that he died a natural death, 26 May, 1814. He was the founder of the Academy of Medicine.

GUINThER. See GONThIER.

GUIRAN, GAILLARD, a lawyer and antiquary of Nîmes, born 1600; died 16 Dec., 1680.

GUISCHARDT, CHARLES GOTTLIEB, a military writer, born at Magdeburg 1724. He entered into the service of Holland, from which he removed into that of Prussia, where Frederick the Great honoured him with the appellation of Quintus Icilus. Died 15 May, 1775. His works are 'Memoires Militaires sur les Grecs et les Romains;' 'Memoires critiques et historiques sur plusieurs points d'Antiquites militaires.'

GUISE, CHARLES, DUKE OF, eldest son of Henry, was arrested on his father's murder, and confined at Tours, from whence he escaped 1592. His partisans received him with open arms; but he afterwards had the good sense to be reconciled to the king, and might have lived in security had not Richelieu's jealousy driven him from the kingdom. He fled to Italy, and died at Cuna 1640, aged 69.

GUISE, CLAUDE DE LORRAINE, DUKE OF, fifth son of Duke René II. of Lorraine, settled in France. At the battle of Marignan he displayed such valour that he received more than twenty wounds. He died 1550.

GUISE, FRANCIS, DUKE OF, son of the preceding, was a man of talents and extensive influence in France. In him began the factions of Condé and GUISE.

Guise. He was at the head of the Catholic party, and died by a pistol-shot from the hand of Poltrot de Mére, a Protestant gentleman, 1563, aged 44.

GUISE, HENRY, DUKE OF, eldest son of Francis, was born in 1550. Brave as a soldier, he was turbulent, imperious, and violent as a subject, and at the head of the party called the League, and formed by the intrigues of his brother the cardinal under the pretence of supporting the Catholic religion and the State, he long overawed the king, Henry III., and prevented his appearance at Paris. After massacring the Huguenots, and filling the streets of Paris with blood, on the famous day called the Day of Barricades, Guise considered his success secure; but Henry, escaping his guards, fled to Blois, where he called an assembly of the States. Guise appeared there; but a forced reconciliation with the king was followed by the assassination of the demagogue, 23 Dec., 1588, and on the morrow the cardinal shared the fate of his brother.

GUISE, HENRY (II.) OF LORRAINE, DUKE OF, grandson of Henry I., was remarkable for his intrigues with Bouillon and the court of Soissons, which obliged him to fly from France to Rome. During his exile the revolt of the Neapolitans from the Spanish power called him into the field; but while, flushed with victory, he regarded the crown of Naples as already within his reach, he was taken prisoner at Abruzzo and carried to Spain. After four years' imprisonment he was liberated. He died 1664, aged 50, leaving memoirs of his Neapolitan enterprise.

GUISE, LOUIS DE LORRAINE, cardinal of, son of Henry, was illustrious as well in arms as in the arts of peace. He was with Louis XIII. in Poitou, where he signalized himself, and died at Saintes 1621.

GUISE, WILLIAM, a divine, born near Gloucester 1653, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, from whence he removed to a fellowship in All Souls, where he took his master's degree in 1677. Died 3 Sept., 1684. He published, with a commentary, Dr. Bernard's work, entitled 'Misæ pars ordinis primi Zeræim Tituli Septem,' and a tract 'De Victimis Humanis.' His son John was the celebrated General Guise, who left his collection of paintings to Christ Church, Oxford. He died 1766.

GUITTONI D'AREZZO, founder of a monastery at Florence, died there 1293. His letters and poems are curious.

GUIZOT, ELIZABETH CHARLOTTE PAULINE DE MEULAN, a French lady, known by her writings for the instruction of youth, was born at Paris 2 Nov., 1773. She was married in 1812 to M. Guizot, who has since risen to such eminence as a statesman, and died 1 Aug., 1827, while her husband was reading to her a sermon by Bossuet on the Immortality of the Soul. Her principal works are 'Les Enfants, contes à l'usage de la jeunesse;' 'L'Écolier, ou Raoul et Victor;' 'Nouveaux Contes;' and 'Education Domestique.'

GULDENSTAEDT, JOHN ANTHONY, a naturalist, was born at Riga 1745; became professor at St. Petersburg; and died 23 March, 1781.

GULONIUS. See GOULU.

GUNDLING, NICHOLAS JEROME, was born near Nuremberg 25 Feb., 1671, and became professor of eloquence, civil law, and philosophy at Halle, on which subjects he wrote some valuable works. His reputation for sagacity and knowledge was such that he was often consulted at Berlin by the court. His 'Course of Philosophy,' 'Course of Literary History,' and 'History of Moral Philosophy,' are esteemed. He died rector of the university of Halle, 16 Dec., 1720.

GUNNER, JOHN ERNEST, a Norwegian botanist, was bishop of Drontheim, where he founded a society for the encouragement of Natural History Born 1718; died 23 Sept., 1773.

GUNNING, HENRY, was born 13 Feb., 1768, at Newton, near Cambridge, of which parish his father was vicar. He received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1788; M.A. 1791), and in 1789 was elected one of the esquire bedells of the university, an office which he worthily filled till his death on 4 Jan., 1854. Mr. Gunning's works are 'The Ceremonies observed in the Senate House of the University of Cambridge: with the forms of proceeding to all degrees, the manner of electing officers, tables of fees, and other articles relating to the university. By Adam Wall, M.A. A new edition by Henry Gunning,' 8vo., Camb., 1828; 'Thoughts on Compositions for Degrees' (1850); 'Reminiscences of the University, Town, and County of Cambridge, from the year 1780,' 2 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1854.

GUNNING, PETER, D.D., was born at Hoo, Kent, 1613, and educated at the King's School, Canterbury, and Clare Hall, Cambridge. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he distinguished himself by his zeal for the Established Church and the king. In 1660 he was elected master of Corpus Christi College, and afterwards of St. John's College, Cambridge. He was made bishop of Chichester 1669, translated to Ely 1674, and died 6 July, 1684. His published writings are: 'A contention for truth, in two public disputations upon infant baptism, between him and Mr. Henry Denne, in the church of St. Clement Danes;' 'Schism unmasked, or a late conference between him and Mr. John Peirson, minister, of the one part, and two disputants of the Romish Persuasion, on the other, in May, 1657;' 'A View and Correction of the Common Prayer;' and 'The Paschal, or Lent Fast, Apostolical and Perpetual.'

GUNTER, EDMUND, a mathematician, born in Herefordshire 1581. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected from thence to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders. In 1615 he proceeded to his degree of B.D., and in 1619 was chosen professor of astronomy at Gresham College, where he died 10 Dec., 1626. He invented a portable quadrant for astronomical purposes, and the rule of proportions, or line of numbers, called from him 'Gunter's Scale.' He also discovered a new variation in the magnetic needle of the mariner's compass. His works were published by Leybourn, 1674.

GURNEY, HUDSON, poet and antiquary, born at Norwich 1775, successively represented in parliament Shaftesbury and Newtown, in the Isle of Wight. He retired from public life on the disfranchisement of the latter borough in 1831, and thenceforward diligently pursued the study of antiquities and literature. Besides many papers in the 'Archæologia,' he wrote 'Cupid and Psyche: a Mythological Tale, from the "Golden Ass" of Apuleius,' and a translation of the Orlando Furioso. Died 9 Nov., 1864.

GURNEY, JOSEPH JOHN, a banker of Norwich, who distinguished himself as a minister among the Quakers, and as an ardent supporter of various philanthropic schemes. He accompanied his sister, Mrs. Fry, on several of her journeys undertaken for the purpose of investigating the state of the prisons in this country, the continent of Europe, and the United States. He was born 2 Aug., 1788, at Earlhram, near Norwich, where he died 4 Jan., 1847. Among his numerous works are 'Observations on the Distinguishing Views and Practices of the Society of Friends;' 'Essays on the Evidences, Doctrines, and Practical Operation of Christianity;' 'Biblical Notes and Dissertations;' 'Hints on the Portable Evidences of Christianity;' 'The Accordance of Geology with Natural and Revealed Religion.'

GURNEY, THOMAS, an eminent stenographer, born 1705. He practised the art of shorthand writing in London, and for many years wrote the 'Sessions Paper,' containing accounts of the trials at the Old Bailey. In 1753 he published his 'Brachygraphy,' or system of shorthand, which became very popular, and ran through many editions. The method, however, was not original, being merely a modification of that published by Mason in 1707. This system of stenography (a little work on which was published a few years ago by the present writer) is still much used by professional shorthand writers, and is justly admired for its simplicity and legibility. Mr. Gurney died 22 June, 1770.

GURTLE, NICHOLAS, a Protestant divine, born at Basle, 8 Dec., 1644, occupied in succession the divinity chairs at Hanau, Bremen, and Franeker; and died 28 Sept., 1711. He published a Latin, German, Greek, and French Dictionary; Historia Templariorum; Systema Theologiæ Propheticae, &c.

GURWOOD, COLONEL JOHN, C.B., deputy-lieutenant of the Tower of London, the editor of the Duke of Wellington's Despatches, committed suicide at Brighton 25 Dec., 1845.

GUSTAVUS I., Fasa, king of Sweden, was born 1490; ascended the throne 1523; died 29 Sept. 1560.

GUSTAVUS II., Adolphus, was born 1594; ascended the throne of Sweden 1611; died 16 Nov., 1632.

GUSTAVUS III., was born 1746; commenced his reign 1771; died 29 March, 1792.

GUSTAVUS IV., son of the preceding, was born 1778; succeeded his father 1792; died March, 1837.

GUTCH, JOHN, F.S.A., a worthy clergyman of Oxford, some time registrar of that university, and for sixty-two years chaplain of All Souls' College. He edited several of the works of Anthony à Wood, and published 'Collectanea Curiosa; or miscellaneous tracts relating to the history and antiquities of England and Ireland, the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and a variety of other subjects,' 2 vols., 1781. Born 1745; died 1 July, 1831.

GUTENBERG, JOHN, was born near Mentz, 1397. He was bred a merchant, which profession he followed at Strasburg, and also at Mentz, alternately. He is believed to have discovered the art of printing with movable types, about 1439; and it is certain that he entered into partnership with Fust, for the prosecution of the art, before 1455, in which year the celebrated Bible was executed by them. Gutenberg died 24 Feb., 1468.

GUTHERIUS. See GOUTHIERES.

GUTHRIE, WILLIAM, a Scotch divine, born at Pitforthly, in the shire of Angus, in 1020, and educated at St. Andrew's, where he studied under Samuel Rutherford. In 1644 he was presented to the church of Finwick, where he continued till 1664, when he was ejected for being a presbyterian. Died 10 Oct., 1665. His treatise, entitled 'The Christian's great Interest,' is a standard work in Scotland.

GUTHRIE, WILLIAM, was born at Brichen, co. Angus, 1701 or 1708, and educated at King's College, Aberdeen. From thence he removed to London, where he was employed in compiling parliamentary debates; and, among other works, published a History of the Peerage; a General History of the World, 13 vols.; a History of England, 3 vols., folio; and the popular 'Geographical Grammar,' though this last is said to have been written by Knox, the bookseller. Besides these he translated Quintilian; Cicero's Offices; and Cicero's Epistles to Atticus. His other works are, 'The Friends, a novel; and Remarks on English Tragedy. He had a pension from government, and died 5 March, 1770.

GUTHRY, HENRY, a native of Cupar-Angus, in Forfarshire, was appointed bishop of Dunkeld 1665, and died 1676, leaving behind him a MS. History of His Own Time, which was published in 1748.

GUTZLAFF, CHARLES, D.D., a Pomeranian by birth, was sent to the East by the Netherlands Missionary Society in 1827, and, after spending four years in Batavia, Singapore, and Siam, he went in 1831 to China, where he spent the remainder of his life in missionary labour. At the time of his death, which occurred at Victoria, Hong Kong, 6 Aug., 1851, he was secretary to the British Plenipotentiary and Superintendent of Trade. Dr. Gutzlaff published a number of works on the history and topography of China.

GUY, JOSEPH, an English writer of school books, died at Kentish Town 16 Jan., 1867, æt. 83.

GUY, THOMAS, the founder of the hospital which bears his name, was the son of a lighterman in Southwark, and born 1644. He was bound apprentice to a bookseller, and when his time was expired, he set up for himself, in the angle formed by Cornhill and Lombard Street. He dealt largely in the importation of Bibles from Holland, and afterwards contracted with Oxford for those printed at the press of that university. His principal gains, however, arose from the purchase of seamen's prize-tickets, in Queen Anne's war, and by South Sea stock, in 1720. His habits also were most penurious, and thus he realised near half a million sterling, of which he expended above two hundred thousand pounds in the building and endowing his hospital in Southwark. He also erected an almshouse at Tamworth, and left large sums to various charities. Died 17 Dec., 1724.

GUYARD DE BERVILLE, a French author, born at Paris 1697; died 1770. He wrote the histories of Bayard and Duguesclin.

GUYET, FRANÇOIS, a French philologist, and Latin poet, born at Angus 1575; died at Paris 12 April, 1655.

GUYON, CLAUDE MARIE, a French historian, born at Lons-le-Saunier 13 Dec., 1699; died 1771.

GUYON, JEANNE BOUVIER DE LA MOTTE, a

GUYS.

French lady, born at Montargis, 1648. She wished to take the veil, but her friends made her marry, and she became, at twenty-eight, a widow. Abandoning the care of her family, she devoted herself to the mysteries of quietism, which Molinos, a Spanish Jesuit at Rome, had imposed upon the world. Wavering in her opinions, and inconstant in her temper, she, however, endured persecution for her tenets, and when she declared herself the pregnant woman mentioned in the Apocalypse, and threatened the peace of the kingdom by the number of her followers, she was imprisoned in the Bastille. Fenelon undertook her defence, but Bossuet procured the condemnation of her works on the subject. After her death, which occurred at Blois 9 June, 1717, her verses were published, as were likewise some of her mystical reveries.

GUYS, PIERRE AUGUSTIN, a merchant of Marseilles, author of 'Voyage Littéraire en Grèce,' and other works of merit, was born 1722, and died 1801.

GUYSÉ JOHN, D.D., a Dissenting minister, born at Hertford 1686. After officiating some years at his native place he removed to London, where he became pastor of the congregation in New Broad Street, and lecturer at Pinner's Hall. He also obtained the degree of doctor in divinity from a Scotch university, and died, after having lost his sight, 22 Nov., 1791. He was a Calvinist in sentiment. His works are Sermons on the Divinity of Christ and the Holy Ghost; Sermons to Young Persons; Paraphrase on the New Testament.

GUYTON DE MORVEAU, LOUIS BERNARD, a distinguished French chemist, born at Dijon 4 Jan., 1737; died 2 Jan., 1816.

GWILT, CHARLES PERKINS, eldest son of Joseph Gwilt, mentioned below, was born 4 Jan., 1809. From Westminster School he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1831), and next entered the Middle Temple; but his promising career was terminated by death 22 Dec., 1835. He wrote 'Notices relating to Thomas Smith of Campden, and to Henry Smith, sometime Alderman of London,' privately printed, 8vo., Lond., 1836, under the editorship of his father.

GWILT, GEORGE, an English architect, died 9 Dec., 1807. He was surveyor for the county of Surrey, and among his professional works are Horsemonger Lane Gaol and Newington Sessions House.

GWILT, GEORGE, F.S.A., an English architect, son of the preceding, died in London 26 June, 1856, aged 82. His chief work is the restoration of the choir and tower of St. Mary Overy's Church.

GWILT, JOSEPH, F.R.S., F.S.A., an architect, and Anglo-Saxon scholar, brother of the preceding, was born in London 11 Jan., 1784; died 14 Sept., 1863. The principal building erected from his designs is Markree Castle, near Sligo. He published 'Notitia Architectonica Italiana; or Concise Notices of the Buildings and Architects of Italy,' an edition of Sir W. Chambers' 'Treatise on the Decorative Part of Civil Architecture;' a translation of Vitruvius; 'Treatise on the Rudiments of Architecture;' 'Encyclopædia of Architecture;' 'Rudiments of a Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Tongue;' and a treatise on Music in the 'Encyclopædia Metropolitana.'

GWILYM, DAVID AP, a Welsh bard, who died about 1400.

HABERT.

GWIN, ROBERT, a Welshman, was educated at Oxford, but on determining to profess the Catholic religion, he passed over to Douay, and after being ordained priest there was sent back on the mission 1576. He thenceforward resided chiefly in Wales, where he was much esteemed for his talent in preaching. He published a Welsh translation of Father Persons's 'Christian Directory;' and some other treatises in the same language.

GWINNE, MATTHEW, M.D., was born in London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he went to St. John's College, Oxford, of which he became fellow. After taking his degrees he commenced practice in the university; but on the settlement of Gresham College, he was chosen professor of physic there, and in 1605 appointed physician to the Tower. When James I. visited Oxford, Dr. Gwinne distinguished himself by an oration against tobacco, in compliment to his majesty, who mortally hated that weed. He also wrote a comedy called 'Vertumnus,' which was performed before the king at St. John's College. Died 1627. His other works are—Orations; Epicedium in obit. Henrici Comitiss Derbeiensis; Nero, tragedia nova; 'Aurum non aurum,' against Dr. Anthony's quack medicine; Verses in English, French, and Italian; A book of Travels; Letters on Chemical and Magical Secrets.

GWYNN, ELEANOR, one of the mistresses of Charles II., was born in London 2 Feb., 1650; and died Nov., 1687. She bore him two sons, from one of whom the present duke of St. Albans is descended; the other died in infancy.

GYLLENBORG, CHARLES, COUNT, a Swedish nobleman, who, at the beginning of the reign of George I., came to England as ambassador from his court; but being detected in a plot to set the Pretender on the throne of Great Britain, he was sent out of the kingdom in 1717. After this he was made chancellor of Sweden, and received other marks of distinction. He died 14 Dec., 1746, leaving to the university of Upsal, of which he had been chancellor, his cabinet of natural history. He translated Sherlock on Death into Swedish.

H.

HAAK, THEODORE, was born 1605, at Newhausen, in the Palatinate. He studied at Oxford, after which he was ordained deacon, but relinquished the ministry, and in the rebellion adhered to the Parliament. He was one of the institutors of the Royal Society, and died in London 9 May, 1690. He translated the Dutch Annotations of the Bible, in 2 vols., 1657. He also translated into Dutch several English books of practical divinity, and one half of Milton's 'Paradise Lost.'

HAAS, WILLIAM, a Swiss type-founder and printer, born 1741; died June, 1800.

HABERKORN, PETER, a Lutheran divine, was born at Butzbach, in Germany, 9 May, 1604, and died professor of divinity at Giessen, April, 1676. His works are valued by the members of his communion.

HABERT, FRANÇOIS, a French poet, born at Issoudun about 1520; died after 1561.

HABERT.

HABERT, GERMAIN, a French poet, and abbat of Notre Dame de Cerisy, was one of the first members of the Academy. His principal poem is 'La Metamorphose des Yeux d'Iris changes en Astres.' Born 1610; died 1655.

HABERT, ISAAC, bishop of Vabres, in France, died 15 Sept., 1608. He wrote against Jansenius, and left a translation of the pontical of the Greek Church, 1643, some Latin poems, and other works. His aunt, Suzanne Habert, was a learned woman, and understood several modern, as well as the learned languages. She died in 1633. Louis Habert, a doctor of the Sorbonne, was born at Blois in 1630, and died 7 April, 1718. His works are—'A Complete System of Divinity,' and 'La Pratique de la Penitence.'

HABINGTON, THOMAS, an historian, was born at Thorpe, Surrey, 1500; studied at Oxford, and afterwards visited Rheims and Paris. He held the manor of Hindlip, in Worcestershire; but on engaging in a plot to release Mary, queen of Scots, he was imprisoned six years, which he devoted to study. He afterwards fell into trouble for concealing some of the agents in the gunpowder treason, and was sentenced to death, but obtained a pardon through the intercession of his relation, Lord Morley, who discovered the plot by the letter which Mrs. Habington is supposed to have written. He was restrained, however, from ever going out of Worcestershire; on which he employed the rest of his life in collecting those materials which have since formed the foundation of Dr. Nash's History of that county. Died 1647.

HABINGTON, WILLIAM, a poet, son of the preceding, was born at Hindlip 5 Nov., 1605, and educated first at St. Omer's, and next at Paris, among the Jesuits. On his return he married the daughter of the first Lord Powis, and in 1635 published a volume of poems under the title of 'Castara'; a better edition of which appeared in 1646. It was republished with a preface essay and notes by Sir C. A. Elton, 12mo., Bristol, 1812. His other works are—'The Queen of Arragon,' a tragedy-comedy; 'Observations upon History,' 8vo.; 'A History of Edward IV.,' folio, 1640, which Lord Lytton says is 'one of the most elegant compositions in the language, though incorrect as a history.' Mr. Hallam remarks: 'The poetry of Habington is that of a pure and amiable mind, turned to versification by the custom of the age, during a real passion for a lady of birth and virtue, the Castara, whom he afterwards married; but it displays no great original power, nor is it by any means exempt from the ordinary blemishes of hyperbolic compliment and far-fetched imagery.'

HACHETTE, JEAN NICOLAS PIERRE, a French mathematician, born 6 May, 1769; died 16 Jan., 1834.

HACHETTE, LOUIS, an eminent Paris publisher, born 5 May, 1800; died 31 July, 1864.

HACKART, JOHN, a painter, born at Amsterdam about 1635.

HACKERT, PETER, a Prussian landscape painter, born 1737; died 1807.

HACKET, JOHN, an English prelate, born in London 1 Sept., 1592. He was educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and wrote a Latin play called 'Lovola,' which was acted before James I. On taking orders he became chaplain to the Lord Keeper Williams, bishop of Lincoln.

HADLEY.

In 1623 he was appointed chaplain to the king, and prebendary of Lincoln. The next year he was presented to the rectory of St. Andrew, Holborn, with which he held that of Cheam, in Surrey. He took his D.D. degree 1628, and in 1631 was made archdeacon of Bedford. In 1641 he made a speech before the House of Lords, against taking away deans and chapters, for which the king nominated him to a residency of St. Paul's. He was, however, deprived of this, and also of the living of St. Andrew's, in the Rebellion. After the Restoration he was made bishop of Lichfield; which cathedral he nearly rebuilt, partly at his own expense, and partly by subscription. He also gave several benefactions to the university of Cambridge. Died 21 Oct., 1670. His works are—'A Century of Sermons,' and 'The Life of Archbishop Williams.'

HACKSPAN, THEODORE, a Lutheran divine and eminent Oriental scholar, was born at Weimar 1607; became divinity professor at Altdorf 1654; died 19 Jan., 1659.

HACQUET, BALTHAZAR, a French naturalist, born in Brittany 1740. He spent most of his life in Austria, and died in the capital of that country 10 Jan., 1815.

HADDOCK, RICHARD, D.D., an English Catholic divine, was educated at Douay, Rheims, and Rome, and sent upon the mission 1580. The latter part of his life was spent at Rome, where he died 1605. He translated Bellarmine's Large Catechism, 8vo., Douay, 1604. His brother, George, also took holy orders in the Church of Rome, and was executed at Tyburn on account of his priestly character 12 Feb., 1583-4.

HADDOCK, SIR RICHARD, an English admiral, who distinguished himself in many actions in the reigns of Charles II. and James II. Died 1714.

HADDON, WALTER, LL.D., a civilian, was born in Buckinghamshire 1516. From Eton he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, where he took his doctor's degree in civil law, and read lectures in that faculty. He was also professor of rhetoric, and orator of the university, and master of Trinity Hall till 1552, when he was chosen president of Magdalen College, Oxford, of which situation he was deprived in the reign of Queen Mary. In that of Elizabeth he was made master of the Court of Requests, and employed on some foreign missions. He also represented several boroughs in Parliament. He died in London 21 Jan., 1571-2. He had a share in drawing up the 'Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum,' 4to.; and he also published a defence of Queen Elizabeth against Osorius. His other prose works were collected and published in 1597, with the title of 'Lucubrations.' His 'Poemata' were printed with his life, 1576.—Athen. Cantab.

HADLEY, JOHN, F.R.S., the reputed inventor of the sextant which bears his name, died 15 Feb., 1744. He was upon intimate terms with Newton, from whom it is supposed he borrowed, without acknowledgment, the idea of the sextant. It is now generally believed that Newton and Godfrey were the original and independent inventors of that instrument. Hadley gave an account of it in the 'Philosophical Transactions' for 1731; but Newton, previous to his death in 1727, had given a description of the instrument to Dr. Halley, by whom it was, for some unknown reason, suppressed, though it was communicated to the Royal Society in 1742, after Halley's death, by his executor. Mr. Jones.—Nat. Cycl.

HAEN.

HAEN, ANTHONY, a physician and medical writer, born at Leyden 1704, obtained a professorship at Vienna, and died 5 Sept., 1776.

HAERLEM, THEODORE VAN, a painter, born in the town of the same name about 1410; died 1470.

HAFIZ, MOHAMMED SHEMS EDDIN, a celebrated Persian poet, was a native of Shiraz, and died about 1380.

HAGEDORN, CHRISTIAN LOUIS VON, was born at Hamburg 1713, and died at Dresden 24 Jan., 1780. He was counsellor of legation, and director of the Academy of Arts, in Saxony. He wrote a work entitled 'Meditations on Painting,' and some other pieces on the same subject.

HAGEDORN, FREDERICK, brother of the preceding, was born at Hamburg 25 April, 1708. He was educated in the college of his native city, where, in 1728, he published a collection of poems. Soon after this he came to London in the suite of the Danish ambassador, and in 1733 was appointed secretary to the English factory at Hamburg. He died there 28 Oct., 1724. His other works are 'Fables;' 'The Philosopher,' a satire; a poem 'On Happiness;' and 'Odes and Songs,' in German; all marked by originality and imagination. His moral poems, however, are the most esteemed.

HAGER, JOSEPH, a Chinese scholar, was born at Milan, of German parents, 1750, and died 1819 at Pavia, where he was professor of the Oriental tongues.

HAGGARD, JOHN, LL.D., fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, a distinguished advocate and author of Reports of Cases in the Ecclesiastical Courts, died 1856.

HAGUE, CHARLES, MUS.D., an eminent composer, born at Tadcaster, Yorkshire, 1769; elected professor of music at Yorkridge 1799; died 18 June, 1821.

HAGUENOT, HENRI, a physician and medical writer, of Montpellier, born 26 Jan., 1687; died 11 Dec., 1775.

HAHN, CHARLES AUGUSTUS, a German philologist, born at Heidelberg 14 July, 1807; died at Vienna 20 Feb., 1857.

HAHN, SIMON FREDERICK, an historian, born at Bergen, in Hanover, 1692; died 18 Feb., 1729.

HAHNEMANN, SAMUEL CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, the founder of the homœopathic system of medicine, was born 10 April, 1755, at Meissen, in Saxony, being the son of a painter employed in the porcelain manufactory in that town. From the High School at Meissen he proceeded to the university of Leipzig, where he maintained himself by giving lessons in German and French, and translating books from the English. For two years he studied medicine there, and then went to Vienna, where he gained the friendship of Baron Quarin, through whose instrumentality he procured the situation of family medical attendant and librarian to Baron von Brückenthal, governor of Siebenbürgen, then residing at Hermannstadt. He soon acquired a considerable practice in this populous town, but not being yet doctor of medicine he retired to Germany at the expiration of two years, and in 1779 graduated at the university of Erlangen. He next went to Dessau, where he married, but left that place on his appointment as district physician at Gornern, near Magdeburg. In 1789 he established himself at Leipzig, where he translated Cullen's 'Materia Medica.' Dissatisfied with the explanation given by that author of the anti-pyretic action of Peruvian bark, Hahnemann endeavoured to find out by experience in what the special property of that valuable drug consists. Taking a considerable dose of it, he discovered that in a healthy frame it produced shiverings analogous to those experienced in intermittent fevers. This led him to regard the treatment of diseases from a new point of view; and from this period dates his new curative method, to which he gave the name of Homœopathic Medicine. Duke Ernest having established at Georgenstadt a hospital for insane persons, Hahnemann was appointed physician in the new establishment, where he put his new system into practice with considerable success. The numerous cures which he subsequently wrought at Brunswick and Königstutter drew upon him the persecution of the physicians and also of the druggists, whose interests were especially affected by the new system, which only admitted simple medicines in almost infinitesimal doses. The complaints of these persons induced the authorities to prohibit Hahnemann from administering medicines himself. He was thus forced to quit the country; and he was by the same means subsequently driven from Hamburg and Eilenburg. Settling next at Torgau, he there published the complete development of his system in a work entitled 'The Organon of the Healing Art,' which gave rise to a controversy of more than twelve years' duration. In 1835 Hahnemann re-married, and went to Paris, where he resided till his death, on 3 July, 1843. He published a large number of works.

HAILES, LORD. Sir David Dalrymple, better known by his titular designation of Lord Hailes, was a brother of Sir Alexander Dalrymple, who has been noticed in a former part of this work. He was born at Edinburgh 28 Oct., 1726, and educated at Eton School, whence he went to Utrecht, where he remained till 1746. Two years afterwards he was called to the Scotch bar, and in 1766 appointed one of the judges of the Court of Session, when he took the title of Lord Hailes. In 1776 he became a commissioner of justiciary on the resignation of Lord Coakston, his wife's father. Died 29 Nov., 1792. He published several works, the chief of which are: Sacred Poems by various Authors; A Sermon on Shipwrecks; Memorials and Letters relating to the History of Britain in the Reigns of James I. and Charles I., 2 vols. 4to.; Historical Memorials concerning the Councils of the Scottish Clergy; Annals of Scotland, 2 vols. 4to.; Account of the Martyrs of Smyrna and Lyons; Remains of Christian Antiquity, 3 vols.; Disquisitions concerning the Antiquities of the Christian Church; The Lives of John Barclay, John Hamilton, Sir James Ramsay, George Leslie, and Mark Alexander Boyd; An Inquiry into the Secondary Causes of the Progress of Christianity.

HAILLAN, BERNARD DE GIRARD Seigneur DU, a French historian, born at Bordeaux 1535; died at Paris 23 Nov., 1610. He was historiographer royal to Charles IX. and Henry III.

HAILSTONE, SAMUEL, a solicitor of Bradford, Yorkshire, who was distinguished by his attainments in botany, geology, and the study of antiquities. To Whittaker's History of Craven he contributed a list of rare plants growing in the district, and he also formed a large collection of MSS. relating to Bradford, which were made use of by Mr. James in compiling his history of that borough. Mr. Hailstone was born at Hoxton, near London, 1768; and died at Horton Hall 26 Dec., 1851.

HAINES, JOSEPH, nicknamed 'Count Haines,' a comedian, who received a liberal education, and was for some time Latin secretary to Sir Joseph Williamson, secretary of state. Died 1701.

HAKEWILL, GEORGE, D.D., was born at Exeter 1579. He studied at Alban Hall, Oxford, after which he became fellow of Exeter College. In 1616 he was made chaplain to Prince Charles, and archdeacon of Surrey, but never rose higher in the church, owing to his writing a tract against the proposed marriage of his patron with the infanta of Spain. For this he was sent to prison, but soon obtained his release. He was, however, elected rector of Exeter College, with which he held the living of Heanton, Devonshire, where he died in 1649. His greatest work is entitled 'An Apology or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World.' His brother, William Hakewell, was a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and the author of The Old Manner of holding Parliaments in England; The Manner how Statutes are enacted in Parliament; and The Liberty of the Subject against the pretended Power of Impositions.

HAKEWILL, HENRY JAMES, an English sculptor, died 13 March, 1834.

HAKEWILL, JAMES, an English architect, died in London 28 May, 1843. He published some esteemed works on architectural antiquities and the fine arts. The best-known of these are 'The History of Windsor and its Neighbourhood,' 1813; 'A Picturesque Tour of Italy, from Drawings made in 1810-17, by J. Hakewill and J. M. W. Turner,' 1820; 'A Picturesque Tour in the Island of Jamaica.' In early life Mr. Hakewill published 'Cerebis Suided,' a novel.

HAKLUYT, RICHARD, a naval historian, born at Exton, Herefordshire, about 1553. He received his education at Westminster School; from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, where he made cosmography his favourite study, and read lectures on it. In 1582 he published, in folio, a collection of voyages, to which he subsequently added two more volumes. About 1584 he went to Paris, as chaplain to the English ambassador, and, during his absence, was made prebendary of Bristol. On his return to England he published several works, particularly a translation from the Spanish of 'Leo's Geographical History of Africa,' and Peter Martyr's 'History of the West Indies.' In 1605 he was promoted to a prebend of Westminster, and the rectory of Wetheringset, in Suffolk. He died 23 Nov., 1616, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. His manuscripts were made use of by Purchas in his Pilgrimage, 5 vols. folio.

HALDANE, JAMES ALEXANDER, was born at Dundee 14 July, 1768, and after receiving a liberal education in the university of Edinburgh he went to sea, and for several years commanded a ship belonging to the East India Company. In 1794 he retired from this employment, and devoted the remainder of his life to the promotion of religion in his native country by field-preaching and the composition of devotional books. Died 8 Feb., 1851. His brother, Robert (b. 1764; d. 12 Dec., 1842), was also a noted itinerant preacher and writer on religious subjects.

HALDE. See DUBALDE.

HALE, SIR MATTHEW, was born at Alderley, 643

HALES.

Gloucestershire, 1 Nov., 1600. His father was a barrister, but quitted the profession from scruples of conscience, and died at his seat 1614. The son was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford; from whence, in 1629, he removed to Lincoln's Inn, where he studied with such diligence as procured him the friendship of Noy and Selden, the last of whom made him his executor. A little before the civil wars he was called to the bar, and soon rose to considerable eminence, being chosen counsel for the earl of Stratford, Archbishop Laud, and even for the king. He was also employed to defend the duke of Hamilton, and other unfortunate loyalists; notwithstanding which he took the covenant and engagement, and sometimes appeared as a lay member of the assembly of divines. In 1654 he was made serjeant-at-law, and acted as a judge under Cromwell; but being dissatisfied with his commission, he gave it up. At the Restoration he was chosen knight of the shire for the county of Gloucester, and soon after was made chief baron of the Exchequer, from which court he was called, in 1671, to preside in that of the King's Bench. He died 25 Dec., 1676. The works of this excellent judge are on various subjects; but it is remarkable that he published himself only one in the line of his profession, viz., 'London Liberty, or an Argument of Law and Reason.' His other publications are An Essay on the Gravitation or Non-gravitation of Fluid Bodies; Difficiles Nuzæ, or Observations touching the Torricellian Experiment; Observations on the principles of Natural Motion, &c.; Contemplations, Moral and Divine; The Primitive Origination of Mankind. After his death appeared his Judgment of the Nature of true Religion; and several Religious Tracts and Letters, which have since been collected in 2 vols. 8vo. His legal works are The Pleas of the Crown; Treatise on Conveyance of Lands; Tractatus de Successionibus apud Anglos; A Treatise on the original Institution of Parliaments; Analysis of the Law; History of the Common Law of England; Historia Placitorum Coronæ, or History of the Pleas of the Crown.

HALES, ALEXANDER, a scholastic divine of the thirteenth century, was born in Gloucestershire, or, according to other accounts, in Norfolk. He had his education at Oxford, and next at Paris, where he obtained the titles of the 'Irrefragable Doctor,' and the 'Fountain of Life.' He entered into the order of Friars Minims, and died at Paris 27 Aug., 1245. Hales wrote a Commentary on the four books of sentences, printed at Nuremberg in 1482. Other works are also ascribed to him, but their authenticity is doubtful.

HALES, or HAYLES, JOHN, was a native of Halden, Kent. In the reign of Henry VIII. he was clerk of the hanaper, and a commissioner to inquire into the state of inclosures, for Oxford, Berkshire, and other counties. Being a zealous Protestant, he was obliged to go into Germany during the reign of Mary, but returned at the accession of Elizabeth, to whom he addressed an oration in manuscript. Afterwards he fell into disgrace for writing a book on the hereditary right of the house of Suffolk to the succession, and was sent to the Tower. Died 28 Jan., 1572. He published 'Introductiones ad Grammaticam,' for the use of the school at Coventry, which he founded; 'The Highway to Nobility;' and Plutarch's Precepts of Health.

HALES, JOHN, called the 'Ever memorable,' was born at Bath 19 April, 1584. At the age of fifteen he entered Corpus Christi College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Merton, and, in 1606, was elected to a fellowship. In 1609 he proceeded master of arts, and in 1613 pronounced the oration at the interment of Sir Thomas Bodley. The same year he quitted Merton College for a fellowship of Eton; and in 1618 he accompanied Sir Dudley Carleton to the synod of Dort, of the proceedings of which assembly he wrote an account in his correspondence. Here he changed his opinions from Calvinism to Arminianism, which has induced some writers to charge him, though unjustly, with having embraced the Socinian tenets. In 1639 he was installed canon of Windsor, but lost that situation and his fellowship in the Rebellion. Died 19 May, 1686. In 1659 a collection of his works was published, with the title of 'Golden Remains of the ever-memorable Mr. John Hales;' and in 1677 another collection was printed, consisting of several tracts, among which is one on schism and schismatics. In 1705 Lord Hales published an edition of his works.

HALES.

HALES, STEPHEN, D.D., F.R.S., was born at Beckesbourn, Kent, 17 Sept., 1677. He studied at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship. In 1711 he took his degree of bachelor in divinity; but that of doctor was conferred on him by the university of Oxford in 1733. During his residence at Cambridge he applied himself diligently to botany, anatomy, and natural philosophy, having Dr. Stukely for his friend and companion in these pursuits. He was successively presented to the livings of Teddington, Middlesex; Portlock, Somersetshire; and Faringdon, Hampshire. He resided at the first of those places till his death, which happened 4 Jan., 1761. Dr. Hales was a man of great science, humility, and piety. He rebuilt the tower of Teddington Church at his own expense, and refused a canonry of Windsor. The princess dowager of Wales made him clerk of her closet, and erected a monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey, though he lies interred at the entrance of his parish church. As a fellow of the Royal Society, he communicated several papers to their Transactions. He also published 'Vegetable Statics,' and 'Vegetable Essays,' in 2 vols. 8vo.; and a 'Friendly Admonition to the Drinkers of Gin and other Spirituous Liquors.' In 1741 he communicated to the world a method of ventilating ships and granaries where corn is kept. On the death of Sir Hans Sloane he was chosen a foreign member of the Academy of Sciences. His experiments in vegetable physiology prepared the way for those of Du Hamel, Bonnet, and other naturalists.

HALEVY, JACQUES ELIE FROMENTAL, an eminent musical composer, born at Paris 27 May, 1799; died 19 March, 1802.

HALFORD, SIR HENRY, M.D., was born 2 Oct., 1766, being the second son of John Vaughan, M.D., of Leicester, by Hester, second daughter of John Smalley, alderman of that town, by Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Richard Halford, bart. From Rugby School he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford, after which he studied at Edinburgh; and in 1794, on being elected a fellow of the College of Physicians, he settled in London, where he rose by degrees to the highest eminence in his profession. Appointed physician to George III. when that monarch was insane, he gave such satisfaction that the prince of Wales named him one of his physicians in ordinary. This confidence was continued when the prince became George IV., and thence descended to William IV., and to Queen Victoria. Dr. Vaughan was created a baronet 1809, and assumed the name of Halford by Act of Parliament 1815. He was first chosen president of the College of Physicians 1820, and from that time was annually re-elected until his death, which occurred 9 March, 1844. Sir Henry was proud of his literary productions, which are 'Oratio Harveiana habita 18 Oct., 1800;' 'An Account of what appeared on opening the coffin of King Charles the First, in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, in the presence of the Prince Regent,' 1813; 'Essays and Orations read at the Royal College of Physicians,' 1831, and again 1842; 'The Deaths of some Eminent Persons of Modern Times,' 1835; 'Nugæ Metricæ,' 1842.

HALHED, NATHANIEL BRASSEY, an orientalist, born 1751. He started in life as a civil servant of the East India Company, at Bengal, and published the following works relating to the East:—'A Code of Gentoo Laws, or Ordinations of the Pundits from a Persian translation;' 'A Grammar of the Bengal Language;' and 'Narrative of the Events which have happened in Bombay and Bengal relative to the Mahratta Empire since July, 1777,' 8vo., 1779. On his return to England he was returned to the House of Commons for Lymington, and he represented that borough till the dissolution of 1796, when he retired from public life. He died in London 18 Feb., 1830. Besides the above-mentioned works he published 'Imitations of the Epigrams of Martial,' and a number of pieces in support of the pretended mission of Brothers, 'the Prophet,' he being the avowed champion of that miserable fanatic. Mr. Halhed collected in India a number of oriental MSS., which are now in the British Museum.

HALIBURTON, THOMAS CHANDLER, was born at Windsor, Nova Scotia, 1796, and going to the bar he became chief justice of the Common Pleas, and chief justice of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. His earliest literary work—'The Lucubrations of Sam Slick, the Clockmaker,' attracted much attention. In 1842 he came to this country, and his observations on the aspects of British society were published soon afterwards under the title of 'The Attache; or, Sam Slick in England.' He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford 1838, and in the following year was elected M.P. for Launceston, on Conservative principles. His death took place at Isleworth 27 Aug., 1865. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote—'Historical and Statistical Account of Nova Scotia;' 'Letters to Lord Durham;' 'Bubbles of Canada;' 'The Letter-Bag of the Great Western;' 'The Old Judge, or Life in a Colony;' 'Rule and Misrule of the English in America;' 'Nature and Human Nature;' 'Wise Saws.'

HALIFAX, CHARLES MONTAGUE, EARL OF, K.G., was born at Horton, Northamptonshire, 1661. He was grandson of the earl of Manchester, and received his education at Westminster School; from whence he removed from Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1687 he and Prior wrote 'The City Mouse and Country Mouse,' as a burlesque of Dryden's Hind and Panther. In 1691 Mr. Montague was appointed a commissioner of the Treasury; and in 1694 chancellor of the Exchequer, in which office he rendered such service, by raising the credit of the Bank, as procured him a parliamentary vote of approbation. In 1698 he was placed at the head of the Treasury; and the year following was created Lord Halifax. However, he could not escape envy in such times, and he was twice impeached, but the articles were dismissed on both occasions by the Lords. At the accession of George I. he was created an earl, and made knight of the Garter. Died 19 May, 1715. His poems, speeches, and life were printed together the same year.

HALIFAX, GEORGE SAVILE, MARQUIS OF, a statesman, born in Yorkshire about 1630. He was created a peer for his loyalty at the Restoration; and in 1682 raised to the dignity of a marquis, soon after which he was made lord privy seal. At the beginning of the reign of James II. he was appointed president of the council; but, on refusing his consent to the repeal of the test acts, was dismissed. In the convention parliament he sat as speaker of the House of Lords, and concurred in all the measures of the revolution; but afterwards he joined the opposition. He died in April, 1695. The marquis wrote several pieces, which were printed together after his death, in one vol., 8vo.; and in 1750 another collection was published. He also left memoirs of his life, which Lady Burlington destroyed by the advice of Pope. The marquis had a son, named William, who succeeded him, and died in 1699.

HALKET, LADY ANNE, the daughter of Mr. Robert Murray, of the Tullibardin family, was born in London 4 Jan., 1622. Her father was preceptor to Charles I., and afterwards provost of Eton College; and her mother was sub-governess to the duke of Gloucester and the Princess Elizabeth. Anne received a liberal education; but theology and physic were her favourite studies. She had great skill in surgery, and performed many cures, so that persons came from Holland for her advice. She married Sir James Halket, by whom she had four children; and survived him twenty-eight years. Died 22 April, 1699. A volume of her 'Meditations' was printed at Edinburgh, 1701.

HALL, ANTHONY, D.D., was born at Kirkbridge, Cumberland, 1679. From the school at Carlisle, he went to Queen's College, Oxford, of which he was chosen a fellow. He married the widow of Dr. Hudson; and, in 1720, was presented to the rectory of Hampton-Poyle, Oxfordshire. Died April, 1723. Dr. Hall published an edition of Leland 'De Scripturis,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1709; also N. Triveti Annales, with the continuation, 1718-1722. He was likewise the author of the description of Berkshire in the Magna Britannia.

HALL, BASIL, CAPT., R.N., second son of Sir James Hall, mentioned below, was born at Edinburgh 1788. He entered the navy 1802, and in 1813 accompanied Admiral Sir Samuel Hood in a journey over the greater part of the island of Java. Having been appointed to the command of the gun-brig Lyra, he accompanied the expedition which took out Lord Amherst as ambassador to China 1816. On this occasion he visited the places of greatest interest in the adjacent seas, and on his return to England published 'A Voyage of Discovery to the Western Coast of Corea, and the great Loo-Choo Island, and the Japan Sea.' He was next employed on the South American station, in command of the Conway. The Spanish colonies of South America were then in the midst of their struggle for independence; and on his return to England in 1823 he published extracts from his journal written while on that station. Subsequently he visited America, and published an account of his travels. A visit to the Countess Purgstall at her castle near Gratz led to the publication by him of 'Schloss Heinfeld, or a Winter in Lower Styria,' 1836. His last work, entitled 'Patchwork,' appeared in 1841. Being seized in the following year with mental aberration, he was placed in the Royal Hospital, Haslar, Portsmouth, where he died 11 Sept., 1844.—Anderson.

HALL, EDWARD, a lawyer and historian, born in London, and educated at Eton; from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship (B.A. 1517-18). He afterwards studied in Gray's Inn, was called to the bar, made a serjeant-at-law, and judge in the sheriff's court. He was also a member of the House of Commons, and voted for the establishment of the six articles. He complied with the times, and was a fulsome flatterer of Henry VIII. Died 1547. His chronicle, entitled 'The Union of the two noble and illustrious families of Yorke and Lancaster,' was printed at London in 1542, folio. It was continued by Grafton in 1550, and reprinted at London in 1800.—Athen. Cantab.

HALL, SIR JAMES, bart., of Duglass, in East Lothian, was eminent for his attainments in geological and chemical science, and author of a popular 'Essay on the Origin, Principles, and History of Gothic Architecture.' He was born 17 Jan., 1761; succeeded to the baronetcy on his father's death 1776; died 23 June, 1812.

HALL, or HALLE, JOHN, an English surgeon and poet, was born 1529 or 1530, and practised his profession at Maidstone, in Kent. He published 'Certayne Chapters taken out of the Proverbs of Solomon, with other Chapters of the Holy Scripture, and certayne Psalmes of David, translated into English Metre,' 1550; 'The Court of Virtue, containing many Holy or Spetual Songs, Sonnettes, Psalmes, Ballets, and Shorte Sentences, as well as of Holy Scripture as others, with Music Notes,' 16mo., Lond., 1565; and 'A very frutefull and necessary briefe worke of Anatomie,' 1565, appended to his translation of Lanfranc's 'Chirurgia Parva.' To the latter work is also appended a curious treatise by Hall, which has been reprinted in the 11th vol. of the Publications of the Percy Society, under the editorship of T. J. Pettigrew. It is entitled 'An Historiall Expostulation: against the beastlye Abusers, bothe of Chyrurgerie, and Physyke, in oure tyme: with a goodlye Doctrine and Instruction, necessary to be marked and folowed, of all true Chirurrgiens.'

HALL, JOHN, a poet, was born at Durham August, 1627. He studied about a year at St. John's College, Cambridge, and then removed to Gray's Inn, where he was called to the bar, but died of intemperance, in the prime of life, at Durham 1 Aug., 1656. His works are—'Horæ Vacivæ, or Essayes,' 1646; Poems, 1646; a translation of Longinus, 1652; Hierocles on the Golden Verses of Pythagoras, 1657.

HALL, JOSEPH, a prelate, born 1 July, 1574, at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, of which town his father held the government, under Henry, earl of Huntingdon, president of the north. At the age of fifteen he was sent to Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship 1595. The year following he took his master's degree, and, in 1597, published his Virgideiarnum (or a gathering of rods), in six books; first three of toothless satyrs, poetical, academical, and moral. In 1598 he printed 'The three last books of byting Satyres;' and both parts were reprinted together in 1599. On entering into orders he was appointed master of Blunell's School at Tiverton; but, being at the same time offered the rectory of Halsted, in Suffolk, he accepted the living, and declined the school. He afterwards resigned Halsted, and was presented to Waltham Holy Cross, Essex. He was also made chaplain to Prince Henry, and prebendary of the collegiate church of Wolverhampton. In 1612 he took his D.D. degree; and in 1616 was made dean of Worcester. In 1618 he was sent to the synod of Dort; before which assembly he preached a Latin sermon, and, at his departure, was presented with a golden medal, which is represented hanging at his breast in some of his portraits. In 1624 he refused the bishopric of Gloucester, but, three years afterwards, accepted that of Exeter; from which see he was removed in 1641 to that of Norwich. But a few weeks after his translation he was sent to the Tower, with twelve other prelates, for protesting against any laws passed in Parliament during their forced absence from the House. In June 1642 he obtained his release; but the next year he suffered much persecution from the Puritans, who plundered his house, and despoiled the cathedral. His estate also was sequestered; and thus in his old age he was reduced to poverty, which he endured with fortitude, and continued still to preach occasionally. He died at Higham, near Norwich, 8 Sept., 1656. His works, which for depth of thought and elegance of language, have procured the author the title of the Christian Seneca, were published in 3 vols. folio; and have been since reprinted in 10 vols. 8vo. He had a large family, and one of his sons, George Hall, became bishop of Chester at the Restoration, but was killed by a knife which happened to be open in his pocket, when he fell in his garden at Wigan, in 1668.

HALL, MARSHALL, M.D., was born at Basford, Nottinghamshire, 1709, and educated at Edinburgh, where he took his doctor's degree 1812. After officiating for two years as house physician at the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, he visited the medical schools of Paris, Berlin, and Göttingen, and settled in Nottingham 1815. He soon obtained a large and lucrative practice, and was appointed physician to the General Hospital in that town. At the same time he became a valuable contributor to the literature of his profession. His 'Treatise on Diagnosis' made its appearance in 1817, and was followed ten years later by his 'Commentaries on various Diseases peculiar to Women,' which still retains its place as a standard book of reference. In 1826 he removed to London, in order that he might prosecute his studies with greater facility. After establishing the important physiological rule that the capillary vessels are distinct in structure and function from the smallest arteries or veins, he proceeded to the discoveries which are the chief glory of his professional career. In the words of a writer in the Lancet—'The establishment of the reflex functions of the spinal cord, in short, the whole of the excito-motor physiology of the nervous system, is the sole work of Dr. Marshall Hall. And not only this, but he has shown that there are in reality three great classes into which the various parts of the nervous system resolve themselves: the cerebral or sentient-voluntary; the true spinal or excito-motor; and the ganglionic. This was the real unravelling of the perplexed and tangled web which none had before been able to accomplish. The true idea of a nervous centre could never be said to have existed before the time of Marshall Hall.' Though the Royal Society deemed his memoirs 'On the true Spinal Marrow, and the Excito-Motor System of Nerves' unworthy of publication, the principal scientific bodies of Europe fully appreciated his services to science, and besides being chosen a foreign associate of the Royal Academy of Medicine at Paris, he had the rare honour of an election by an almost unanimous vote into the Institute of France. Among his most important and practical discoveries must be mentioned the method now known by his name for treating asphyxia, the superiority of which over that formerly in use has been tested by innumerable cases in many parts of the world. He visited the United States of America and Cuba, in 1853-4; and died at Brighton 11 Aug., 1857. In addition to the above-mentioned works he published 'The Twofold Slavery of the United States;' 'Principles of the Theory and Practice of Medicine;' 'Observations and Suggestions in Medicine;' and several treatises on the nervous system.

HALL, RICHARD, D.D., a native of Lincolnshire or Yorkshire, was matriculated as a member of Clare Hall, Cambridge, 1552. Migrating to Christ's College, he proceeded B.A. 1555-6. In 1556 he was elected a fellow of Pembroke Hall, and in 1559 commenced M.A. Being attached to the Catholic religion, he left England and arrived at Douay 1572. Thence he proceeded to Italy, where he resumed his studies, and was created D.D. Afterwards he returned to the university of Douay, and for a short time acted as professor and regent of Marchienne College, but vacated that office on being appointed, in conjunction with Dr. Richard Bristow, to read a lesson of Scripture in the English College. At the same period he was made a canon of St. Gery's in Cambrai. On the invitation of the bishop of St. Omer, who had heard of his learning and zeal, he was made a canon of St. Omer, and official of the diocese. Died 26 Feb., 1603-4. He was the author of several learned works, the chief of which is an interesting Life of Bishop Fisher, and printed under the name of Thomas Baily, D.D., who introduced into it many unwarrantable alterations of his own. Various MS. copies of Hall's original work are, however, fortunately in existence.—Athen. Cantab.

HALL, ROBERT, a dissenting preacher and author, born at Arnsby, Leicestershire, 2 May, 1764, being the son of a Baptist minister. He received his academical education at Aberdeen, where he enjoyed the teachings of Beattie and Campbell, and became the friend of Mackintosh. In 1783, while still pursuing his studies at Aberdeen, he became assistant-pastor of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol. In 1790 he removed to Cambridge, where he became successor to the Rev. Mr. Robinson in the Baptist meeting-house; and here by his elaborate and brilliant discourses he rose at once to the highest rank among British preachers. Ill health compelled him to resign his charge at Cambridge in 1804. On his recovery he officiated to a congregation at Leicester, and thence removed (1809) to Bristol, where he died 21 Feb., 1831. His works, edited, with a memoir, by Olinthus Gregory, appeared at London, 6 vols. 8vo., 1831-3. 'Whoever,' remarks Dugald Stewart, 'wishes to see the English language in its perfection must read the writings of the great divine, Robert Hall. He combines the beauties of Johnson, Addison, and Burke, without their imperfections.'

HALL, WILLIAM, a Londoner, was educated in the English college at Lisbon, where he was ordained priest. He was appointed one of King James II.'s chaplains, but left England at the Revolution, and joined the Carthusian order at Nicuport, where he died about 1718. He was the author of Sermons, one of which was preached before the queen dowager 9 May, 1686; and he left in MS. Collections of Historical Matters. His brother, Thomas Hall, D.D., was also in holy orders of the Church of Rome, and died at Paris about 1719, leaving several works in MS.

HALLAM, ARTHUR HENRY, son of Henry Hallam, the historian, was born in London 1 Feb., 1811, and after passing through Eton School and Trinity College, Cambridge, entered the office of a conveyancer in London. When on a tour with his father in Germany he was suddenly attacked with illness, and died 15 Sept., 1833, leaving a number of pieces in prose and verse, which were printed by his father for private circulation in 1834, and reprinted for publication in 1893.

HALLAM, HENRY, an historical writer, born at Windsor 1777. His father was dean of Bristol. From Eton he proceeded to the university of Oxford, where he graduated 1799. He pursued the study of the law, but never engaged to any extent in its practice. Mr. Hallam was the personal and political friend of the distinguished liberal statesmen of his time, and was among the early contributors to the 'Edinburgh Review.' His articles in that trimestral publication gave him a recognized place among the liberal and impartial thinkers and writers in this country in the first and second decades of the present century. At length, in 1818, being now forty years of age, after mature preparation and laborious study, he gave to the world his first elaborate historical work, the 'View of the State of Europe during the Middle Ages,' 2 vols. 4to. After an interval of nine years Mr. Hallam published his second great work, 'The Constitutional History of England from the accession of Henry VII. to the death of George II.' 2 vols. 4to., 1827. His third and last great work, the 'Introduction to the Literature of Europe in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Centuries,' appeared in 4 vols. 8vo., 1837-9. Mr. Hallam received the degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford 1848; and died at Penshurst, Kent, 21 Jan., 1859.

HALLE, CLAUDE GUI, a painter of Paris, born 1652; died 1736. His son, Noel (b. 1711; d. 1781), was also a good painter.

HALLE, PIERRE, a poet and jurist, born at Bayeux 8 Sept., 1611; died at Paris 27 Dec., 1689.

HALLECK, FITZ-GREENE, an American poet, died at Guilford, Connecticut, 19 Nov., 1867, æt. 73.

HALLER, ALBERT VON, was born at Berne 16 Oct., 1708. He was the son of Nicholas von Haller, an eminent advocate, who died when Albert was only thirteen years of age. He received his education partly at home and partly at the public school of Berne; but in his sixteenth year he began the study of medicine at Tubingen, from whence he removed to Leyden. In 1727 he visited England, after which he went to Paris, but was obliged to leave that place for having dissected some dead bodies. On his return home he was appointed keeper of a public library at Berne, but soon after removed to Göttingen, where he was nominated to a professorship by George II., who procured for him letters of nobility from the emperor. On the death of Dillenius the university of Oxford offered Haller the botanical professorship; and at the same time the States of Holland invited him to the chair of anatomy, while the king of Prussia was desirous of having him as the successor of Maupertuis. All these offers he declined, and many other marks of distinction, equally flattering, from Russia and the principal sovereigns of Europe. After raising the medical school of Göttingen to a high reputation, and founding the Academy of Sciences, he resigned his professorship, and went to Berne, where he established the Economical Society and Orphan Hospital. Died 12 Dec., 1777. Baron Haller was not only a profound philosopher, physician, and botanist, but a man of general knowledge and an admirable poet. The principal of his scientific works are Enumeratio methodica Stirpium Helvætiæ indigenarum; Icones anatomicae; Præmiæ Linææ Physiologia in usum Prælectioinum academicarum; Opuscula Botanica; Disputationes Chirurgicæ selectæ; Elementa Physiologiae Corporis Humani; Opera anatomica minora; Bibliotheca Botanica; Bibliotheca Chirurgica; Bibliotheca Anatomica; Bibliotheca Medicinæ Practicæ. His miscellaneous works are, A poem on the Alps; Ethic Epistles; Satires, Pastorals, and Elegies; Letters to his Daughter on the Truth of the Christian Religion, which have been translated into English; Letters against the Free-Thinkers. He was three times married, and left eight children, four sons and four daughters. His eldest son, Gottlieb Emanuel von Haller, became a member of the council of Berne, and died 9 April, 1786. He was the author of several works on the history of Switzerland, particularly one entitled 'The Swiss Library,' and another on Swiss Coins and Medals.

HALLER, JOHN, a sculptor, born at Innsbruck 1792; died 1826.

HALLET, JOSEPH, a dissenting divine, born 1692 at Exeter, where his father was pastor of a respectable congregation. Joseph was educated under the learned Mr. James Pierce, his father's colleague, and, in 1713, was ordained as associate in the same congregational charge. He succeeded his father 1722, and died 1744. Besides some tracts, he published three volumes of notes on difficult passages of Scripture.

HALLEY, EDMUND, LL.D., F.R.S., was born in London 29 Oct., 1686. He received his education in St. Paul's School, and next at Queen's College, Oxford, where he made so great a proficiency in his mathematical studies, that in 1676 he published observations on a spot in the sun, by which the motion of that body on its axis was determined. The same year he went to St. Helena, where he determined the position of 350 stars, which procured him the name of the Southern Tycho. On his return to England he was created master of arts, and chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; which learned body deputed him to go to Dantzic, to adjust a dispute between Hooke and Hevelius, respecting the proper glasses for astronomical purposes. In 1686 he made the tour of Europe with Mr. Noison; and on the passage to Calais was the first to observe the great comet. After his return to England he turned his attention to the theory of the planetary motions, which brought him acquainted with Isaac Newton, who entrusted to him the publication of his Principia. To ascertain exactly the cause of the variation of the compass, he was made commander of a ship in 1698, and sent to the Western Ocean; but his crew being mutinous he was obliged to return. The year following he sailed again, and proceeded as far south as the ice would permit; the result of which observations he published in a general chart. Soon after this he was employed to observe the course of the tides in the Channel; and to make a correct chart of the same. Having accomplished this object, he went to make a survey of the coast of Dalmatia, for the Emperor. In 1703 he was appointed Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford, and honoured with the degree of doctor of laws. In 1710 he published an edition of the works of Apollonius of Perga; and in 1719 was appointed astronomer royal. He was also chosen a foreign member of the French Academy of Sciences. Dr. Halley died at Greenwich 14 Jan., 1741-2. His astronomical tables were published 1749.

HALLIDAY, SIR ANDREW, an eminent physician, born in Dumfriesshire 1783; died at Dumfries 7 Sept., 1839. In addition to some professional works, he published 'Memoir of the Campaign of 1815'; 'History of the House of Guelph'; 'Annals of the House of Hanover'; and 'The West Indies: the Natural and Physical History of the Windward and Leeward Islands.'

HALLIDAY, MICHAEL FREDERIC, an English painter, died 1 June, 1869. His principal works are—'Measuring for the Wedding King,' and 'The Blind Basket Maker's First Child.'

HALLIER, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French theologian, was born 1595; became bishop of Cavailhon 1626; and died 1659. Most of his writings are directed against the five propositions of Jansenius.

HALLIFAX, SAMUEL, an English prelate, born at Mansfield, Derbyshire, 18 Jan., 1733. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he obtained the chancellor's medal for classical learning. On taking his degrees in arts, he removed to a fellowship in Trinity Hall, and there completed his degrees in civil law 1761. In 1768 he was elected professor of Arabic; which chair he resigned 1770, on being made regius professor of civil law. In 1775 he was created D.D. by mandate, and soon after became master of the faculties in Doctors' Commons. In 1781 he was made bishop of Gloucester, from whence he was removed to St. Asaph 1789. He died 4 March, 1790. Besides several single sermons, he published—'An Analysis of the Roman Civil Law; Twelve Sermons on the Prophecies; An Analysis of Bishop Butler's Analogy.' He was also the editor of Ogden's sermons.

HALLOIX, PIERRE, a Jesuit, born at Liege 1572; died 1656. His principal works are 'Anthologia Poetica, Gr. Lat.,' and 'Illustrium Ecclesie Orientalis Scriptorum Vitæ et Documenta.'

HALS, FRANCIS, a portrait painter of great celebrity, born at Mechlin 1584; died 1666. His brother, Dirk Hals, painted animals, merry-makings, and subjects of drollery. He died 1656, aged 67.

HALYBURTON, THOMAS, a divine, was born at Duplin in the parish of Aberdalgy, near Perth, 25 Dec., 1674. He was first educated in Holland, and, on his return to Scotland, became a student at St. Andrew's, where he obtained the professorship of divinity 1710, but did not long enjoy it, dying there 23 Sept., 1712. His works are—'The great Concern of Salvation; Ten Sermons on the Lord's Supper; 'Natural Religion insufficient; and Revealed necessary to Man's Happiness.'

HAMBERGER, GEORGE ALBERT, a mathematician, born in Franconia 1662; died at Jena, where he was professor 13 Feb., 1716. He wrote on optics, &c. His son and successor, George Edward Hamberger, born 1697, quitted the professorship of mathematics for that of physic, which he held till his death 22 July, 1755. He wrote several medical works in Latin.

HAMBERGER, GEORGE CHRISTOPHER, a voluminous German writer, who is best known as the editor of the works of Orpheus. He was a member of the university of Göttingen; and died 8 Feb., 1773, aged 47.

HAMEL. See DUHAMEL.

HAMEL, DR. JAMES, a Russian, distinguished by his acquirements in science, was born 1788, and died in London 22 Sept., 1862. In 1820 he made a well-known ascent of Mont Blanc, when he lost several of his guides. It was through his exertions that the Lancasterian system of education was introduced into Russia, and also that the first industrial exhibition took place at Moscow. For his services he was appointed a member of the Imperial Academy. He wrote histories of the steam-engine and electric telegraph.

HAMILTON. See BELHAVEN, LORD.

HAMILTON, ANTHONY, COUNT, was of an ancient Scotch family, but born, in 1646, in Ireland; from whence he was taken to France, when a child, by his parents, who were attached to Charles the Second. At the Restoration he returned to England, but was again obliged to remove when James the Second abdicated the throne in 1688. The count died at St. Germain's 21 April, 1720. His works have been published in 6 vols. 12mo. and 3 vols. 8vo. The principal are his 'Fairy Tales;' and above all the rest 'The Memoirs of Grammont;' which exhibit an admirable portraiture of the court of Charles II.

HAMILTON, DAVID, a Scotch architect, born 11 May, 1768, at Glasgow, where he died 5 Dec., 1843.

HAMILTON, ELIZABETH, was born at Belfast 25 July, 1758. On losing her parents in her infancy, she was taken by an uncle and aunt near Stirling, at whose death she came into the possession of a small estate. In 1792 she met with a great misfortune in the death of her brother, Charles Hamilton, who had risen to eminence in the service of the East India Company, and was employed by the court of directors in editing the Hedaya. Miss Hamilton remained single through life, which ended in a most exemplary manner, at Harrogate, 23 July, 1816. Her works are—'The Letters of a Hindoo Rajah; Memoirs of Modern Philosophers; Letters on the Elementary Principles of Education; Life of Agrippina, wife of Germanicus; Letters on the Formation of the Religious and Moral Principle; The Cottagers of Glenberrie; Rules of the Annuity Fund for the benefit of Governesses; Exercises on Religious Knowledge; Popular Essays; Hints addressed to the Patrons of Public Schools. After her death appeared her Memoirs, with a Selection from her Correspondence, and other writings, edited by Miss Bengier.

HAMILTON, FRANCIS, M.D. See BUCHANAN.

HAMILTON, GAVIN, an historical painter, born at Lanark, Scotland; died at Rome, where he chiefly resided, in 1797. At the close of life Hamilton employed himself chiefly in the discovery of antiquities. He was the author of 'Schola Italica Pictura.'

HAMILTON, GEORGE, EARL OF ORKNEY. See ORKNEY.

HAMILTON, HUGH, a learned prelate, born in the county of Dublin 26 March, 1729. He received his education in Trinity College, Dublin, where, in 1751, he obtained a fellowship. In 1758 appeared his treatise 'De Sectioibus Conicis'; and the next year he was elected Erasmus Smith's professor of natural philosophy. In 1764 he accepted a college living, and thereby vacated his fellowship. After this he obtained the rectory of St. Anne's, Dublin; but relinquished it on being promoted to the deanery of Armagh. In 1796 he was consecrated bishop of Clontarf; from whence, in 1799, he was translated to Ossory, where he died 1 Dec., 1805. His works and life were published in 1809, in 2 vols. 8vo.

HAMILTON, JAMES, duke of Châtelherault and earl of Arran, succeeded his father, James, the first earl of Arran, 1529. In the reign of Mary queen of Scots, he is frequently mentioned as being the next heir to the Scotch throne, and his title had been frequently recognized by Parliament. His title arose from his descent from a daughter of James II., king of Scotland, by James Hamilton. He was appointed regent during the minority of Mary. His title of Châtelherault he received from Henry II., king of France, in 1548, and with it a pension of 12,000 livres per annum. Died 22 Jan., 1574-5.

HAMILTON, JAMES, DUKE OF, was the eldest son of James, marquis of Hamilton, by Lady Anne Cunningham, daughter of James, earl of Glencairn, and born in Scotland 19 June, 1606. He studied at Exeter College, Oxford, and at the age of eighteen succeeded to his father's title. He now rose in high favour at court, but gained little credit by an expedition into Germany, to assist Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, 1630. When the troubles broke out in Scotland, the marquis had the command of the fleet, and in 1643 was created a duke; but soon afterwards his loyalty became suspected, and he was sent prisoner to Pendennis Castle, and next to that of St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall. There he remained till 1646, when he regained his liberty and went to Scotland, where he was accused of having betrayed the king, and received a share of the money. To wipe off this disgrace, he raised some forces, and entered England, but was defeated at Preston, in Lancashire, 17 Aug., 1648, and sent to Windsor Castle. After a summary trial before Bradshaw, he was sentenced to be beheaded, which was put in execution 9 March, 1648-9. His brother, William, who succeeded him in the title, died of wounds received at the battle of Worcester, 12 Sept., 1651.

HAMILTON, PATRICK, the first Scotch Reformer, nephew to James, earl of Arran, was born about 1505. He was educated at St. Andrews; after which he went abroad, where he imbibed the opinions of Luther. On his return home he was made abbat of Ferne, in the shire of Ross, where he promulgated the new doctrines with so much zeal as to excite the wrath of the clergy, who caused him to be apprehended and sent to Beaton, archbishop of St. Andrew's. After a long examination he was declared contumacious, and burnt at a stake opposite St. Salvador's College 1 March, 1527. A treatise of his, entitled 'Patrick's Places,' was printed in English, by John Frith, and is inserted in Fox's Acts and Monuments.

HAMILTON, ROBERT, M.D., was born at Edinburgh 6 Dec., 1721. After studying medicine at Edinburgh, he settled at Lynn, Norfolk, where he died 9 Nov., 1793. His works are—'A Treatise on the Scrofula,' 'Observations on the marsh remittent Fever,' and some papers in the transactions of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh.

HAMILTON, THOMAS, brother of Sir William Hamilton, the metaphysician, was for some time a captain in the army. He wrote 'The Youth and Manhood of Cyril Thornton,' a novel, 1827; 'Men and Manners in America,' 1833; 'Annals of the Peninsular Campaigns,' &c. Born 1789; died 7 Dec., 1842.

HAMILTON, WALTER KERR, an English prelate, was born in London Nov., 1808; received his education at Eton and Oxford; was appointed bishop of Salisbury 1854; and died 1 Aug., 1869. Dr. Hamilton, who belonged to the extreme High Church, or 'Catholic' section of the Anglican Church, published a volume or two of Family Prayers; some periodical Charges and occasional sermons; and a Letter on Cathedral Reform.

HAMILTON, WILLIAM, a Scotch poet, was born at Bangour, Ayrshire, 1704. He joined the Pretender 1745, and narrowly escaped being taken after the battle of Culloden. However, he received a pardon, and died in France 25 March, 1754. Some of his poems were published at Glasgow in 1748; but the best edition is that of 1760.

HAMILTON, WILLIAM, R.A., an English historical painter, born 1750; died 2 Dec., 1801.

HAMILTON, SIR WILLIAM, K.B., was born in Scotland 13 Dec., 1730. His mother was nurse to King George III., who, when prince of Wales, made the subject of this article his equerry; and in 1764 appointed him ambassador to the court of Naples, where he continued with great reputation till the year 1800, when he returned to England, and died 6 April, 1803. Sir William made numerous observations on Mount Vesuvius, Ætna, and other volcanoes in the Mediterranean, the particulars of which were inserted in the Philosophical Transactions, and in a work entitled 'Campi Phlegraei,' 3 vols. folio. He also furnished D'Hancarville with the materials of his magnificent publication, the 'Antiquities Etrusques, Grecques, et Romaines.' Besides these proofs of his taste and industry, he wrote a memoir on the discoveries made in Pompeii, inserted in the Archaeologia; and made some valuable presents of books, manuscripts, and mineralogical curiosities to the British Museum. His unrivalled collection of vases was purchased for that national institution by parliament. In 1791 he took for his second wife Emma Lyons, alias Harte, originally a servant in a low tavern, afterwards the goddess Hygeia of the eccentric empiric Dr. Graham, and better known as the fascinating and licentious Lady Hamilton, celebrated for her connection with Lord Nelson. She died 15 Jan., 1815.

HAMILTON.

HAMILTON, Sir WILLIAM, Bart., the most learned of Scotch metaphysicians, was born at Glasgow March, 1788, and at the age of twelve entered the university in that city. Having obtained one of the Snell exhibitions, he went in 1809 to Balliol College, Oxford, where he took first-class honours. In 1812 he went to Edinburgh, and having devoted himself to the study of the law, passed advocate at the Scotch bar 1813. In 1816 he made good his claim to a baronetcy, and in 1821 he was elected to the chair of universal history at Edinburgh. He first distinguished himself by a remarkable series of contributions to the Edinburgh Review, extending from 1826 to 1839; from 1826 to 1828 he wrote elaborate papers against phrenology, and George Combe, and Dr. Spurzheim; and in preparing for them dissected several hundred different brains. In 1829 he wrote his famous article on Cousin and the Philosophy of the Unconditioned; in 1830 his article on Perception, and on Reid and Brown, and in 1833 that on Whately and Logic. These and others were published in a collected form in 1852, under the title of 'Discussions in Philosophy and Literature, Education, and University Reform.' These essays are in an especial degree distinguished by vigour and originality of thought, not less than for vast and varied learning. In 1836 Sir William was appointed professor of logic at Edinburgh, and under him the class, which had long been a mere appendage to the theological course, assumed a new importance, and Scotland as a school of metaphysics regained the renown it had enjoyed in the days of Dugald Stewart. Having begun to prelect on Dr. Thomas Reid in his class, he was led to prepare an edition of Reid's works, which, however, was never completed, though a part of it appeared in 1846. Sir William held the office of her majesty's solicitor of tinds for Scotland, and was a member of various learned societies. Previous to his death he was engaged in editing the works of Dugald Stewart. His own lectures, edited by Professors Mansel and Veitch, were published after his death, which occurred at Edinburgh 6 May, 1856.—Anderson.

HAMILTON, WILLIAM GERARD, a politician, was born 28 Jan., 1728-9, in Lincoln's Inn, where his father was a barrister. He was educated at Winchester School, and next at Oriel College, Oxford; after which he became a student of Lincoln's Inn, but was never called to the bar. In 1754 he was elected into parliament for Petersfield, and the year following delivered a speech, which, for its impressive eloquence, procured him the name of 'Single Speech Hamilton.' However, he made another after this, and with such effect, as to be appointed one of the lords of trade. In 1761 he went to Ireland as secretary to Lord Halifax, and in the parliament of that kingdom he confirmed the reputation which he had gained in England by his oratory. He was above twenty years chancellor of the exchequer in Ireland, but retired from public life in 1784. He died in London 16 July, 1796. His works, consisting of 'Parliamentary Logic,' Two Speeches, &c., were printed in 1808, with the life of the author prefixed. Among the many to whom the Letters of Junius were once ascribed, Mr. Hamilton was one, but upon no grounds whatever.

HAMILTON, Sir WILLIAM ROWAN, a noted Irish mathematician, born 1805; died at Dublin 2 Sept., 1865. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and at the early age of twenty-two was appointed Andrew's professor of astronomy and superintendent of the observatory near Dublin. He subsequently became astronomer royal for Ireland, and received the honour of knighthood. He wrote 'Lectures on Quaternions,' and other mathematical works.

HAMMOND, ANTHONY, was born at Somersham Place, Huntingdonshire, 1668. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and became a member of parliament, where his eloquence procured him the name of 'Silver Tongue.' He was also a commissioner of the navy, but died a prisoner in the Fleet 1738. Mr. Hammond published 'A Miscellany of Original Poems,' and wrote the Life of Mr. Moyle, prefixed to his works.

HAMMOND, HENRY, D.D., was born at Chertsey, Surrey, 18 Aug., 1605. He was the youngest son of Dr. John Hammond, physician to Henry, prince of Wales, who was his godfather, and gave him his own name. He was educated at Eton, and next at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1633 he was presented to the rectory of Penshurst, Kent, on which he quitted college, and went to reside on his living. In 1643 he was made archdeacon of Chichester, and was nominated one of the assembly of divines, which he refused to attend. His loyalty having rendered him obnoxious to the parliament, he was obliged to retire to Oxford, where he published his 'Practical Catechism.' Dr. Hammond was greatly esteemed by Charles I., by whose desire he assisted at the treaty of Uxbridge, where he disputed with Richard Vines, the Presbyterian. A few days after this the king gave him a canonry of Christ Church, Oxford, and the university elected him their public orator. He attended the king in his several confinements, till the end of 1647, when all the royal servants being dismissed, the doctor returned to Oxford, where he was chosen subdean of Christ Church, of which office he was deprived in 1648 by the parliamentary visitors. He was also put under arrest, but in 1649 regained his liberty. He then went to reside with Sir John Pakington, in Worcestershire, where he finished his Paraphrase and Annotations on the New Testament; after which he began a similar work on the Old Testament, but completed only the book of Psalms, which was printed in folio. At the Restoration he was designed for the bishopric of Worcester, but died before consecration 25 April, 1660. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote several books of controversy, and sermons, which were published together in four folio volumes.

HAMMOND, JAMES, son of Anthony, mentioned above, was born about 1710, and educated at Westminster School. He became equerry to Frederick, prince of Wales, and in 1741 was chosen into parliament for Truro; but died 2 June, 1742. His 'Love Elegies,' edited by Lord Chesterfield, were once very popular.

HAMON, JEAN, a French physician, born at Cherbourg about 1618. He wrote several books on religious subjects; and died 22 Feb., 1687.

HAMPDEN, JOHN, the illustrious patriot, was born in London, of a Buckinghamshire family, 1594. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, from whence he removed to one of the inns of court, to study the law. He obtained a seat in the second parliament of Charles I., but made no figure till the year 1636, when his resistance to the tax called ship-money drew upon him the eyes of all men, and he became the leading patriot of the disaffected. He was one of the first who took up arms against the king; and it is not a little remarkable that he fell in the very same field where he mustered the militia, near Brill, in Buckinghamshire, 18 June, 1643.

HAMPDEN, RENN DICKSON, an English prelate, born in the island of Barbadoes 1793. He was brought to England when six years of age, and after a preliminary training under Dr. Rowlandson, vicar of Warminster, Wilts, entered Oriel College, Oxford, where he gained a fellowship, which, however, he afterwards vacated by marriage. For some time he officiated as curate of Faringdon, Berks, but returning to Oxford in 1829, he acted between that date and 1833 as tutor of his college. In 1832 he was selected to preach the Bampton Lectures, when he chose for his subject 'The Scholastic Philosophy considered in its relation to Christian Theology.' These lectures gave great offence to the High Church party, who declared them to be heretical and Arian in their tendency. Throughout his career indeed Dr. Hampden was constantly in hot water on account of his theological opinions. He was nominated principal of St. Mary's Hall 1833; professor of moral philosophy 1834; regius professor of divinity 1836; bishop of Hereford 1847; and died 23 April, 1868. Besides the Bampton Lectures, he wrote the article on St. Thomas Aquinas in the 'Encyclopædia Metropolitana'; the articles on Aristotle, Socrates, and Plato in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica'; 'The Philosophical Evidence of Christianity'; 'Lectures introductory to the Study of Moral Philosophy'; and Sermons.

HAMPER, WILLIAM, F.S.A., was born at Birmingham 12 Dec., 1776, and died at Highgate, near that town, 3 May, 1831. Though engaged in commercial pursuits, he found time to study antiquarian subjects, and to contribute a number of papers to the 'Archæologia,' besides publishing 'The Life, Diary, and Correspondence of Sir William Dugdale,' 4to., 1827.

HANCKIUS, MARTIN, a learned philologist of Breslau, born 1633; died 24 April, 1709.

HANDEL, GEORGE FREDERICK, was born at Halle, in the duchy of Magdeburg, 24 Feb., 1684. His father was a physician at that place, and Handel, who was the issue of a second marriage, was intended for the profession of the law. But, while a child, the propensity to music appeared so strong that all instruments were interdicted the house. He contrived, however, to secure a little clavicorn, with which he amused himself in the garret when the rest of the family were asleep. At the age of seven his father took him to the duke of Saxe-Weissenfels, where it being impossible to keep the boy from musical instruments, he indulged his inclination to the utmost. One morning, the duke going into the church, was surprised at hearing some person playing on the organ; and more so at finding that it was a child of seven years old, the brother of his own valet. Upon this he reasoned in strong terms with the father, who agreed to place his son under Zuckau, the organist of the cathedral at Halle, a man equally capable, and disposed, to do justice to so promising a pupil. At the age of nine Handel composed the church service, for voices and instruments; and when he was fourteen he went to Berlin, where the sovereign made him liberal presents. From thence he proceeded to Hamburg, and obtained there a place in the orchestra; but the favour shown him excited the envy of one of the masters, who, one evening, made a thrust at him with his sword, which was prevented from piercing the heart by a musical book, or, as Dr. Burney says, by a metal button. Here Handel composed 'Almeria,' which was his first opera. After residing at Hamburg about four years, he went to Italy, and remained there about six years. In 1710 he came to England, and met with a very flattering reception from Queen Anne, who would have detained him by a pension, which he could not accept, being under a previous engagement to the elector of Hanover. In 1712 he returned, with the consent of his highness, on condition that his stay should be limited; but Handel forgot his promise; in consequence of which, when the prince came to the throne, the musician was afraid to go to court. By the contrivance of a noble friend, however, Handel obtained his pardon, and an additional pension, which was afterwards doubled. A scheme was now set on foot for erecting an academy in the Haymarket, to secure a constant supply of operas, to be composed by Handel. This society was called 'The Royal Academy,' which lasted about ten years; when the popularity of this great artist declined, and the Italian music prevailed. In 1741 he went to Dublin, where he was well received, and began to repair his fortune. On his return he commenced his oratorios at Covent Garden, and continued them with glory till his death, which happened suddenly 13 April, 1759. He was buried in Westminster Abbey.

HANMER, JONATHAN, a nonconformist divine, born at Barnstaple, Devonshire, about 1605, and educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge. He obtained the living of Bishop's Tawton, and the lectureship of Barnstaple, from which he was ejected 1662. Died 1687. He wrote a Discourse on Confirmation, and a View of Ecclesiastical Antiquity.

HANMER, MEREDITH, D.D., was born at Porington, Shropshire, 1543. He became chaplain of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and on taking orders was presented to the vicarage of St. Leonard, Shoreditch. He afterwards obtained the living of Islington, and lastly, went to Dublin, where he was appointed treasurer of the church of Holy Trinity. Died 1604. His works are—'A Chronography,' a translation of the Ecclesiastical Historians; 'The Chronicle of Ireland; and a Sermon on the Baptism of a Turk.

HANMER, SIR THOMAS, Bart., was born about 1676, and educated at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was chosen speaker of the House of Commons 1713, and died 5 April, 1746. Sir Thomas published an edition of Shakspeare with notes, 6 vols. 4to., 1744.

HANNECKEN, MEMNON, a Lutheran divine, professor of the oriental languages at Marburg, was born 1595; and died 17 Feb., 1671. He wrote a Hebrew grammar, &c. His son, Philip Louis, died professor of Hebrew at Wittenberg 1706.

HANNEMAN, ADRIAN, a painter of history and portraits, born at the Hague 1611; died about 1680. He spent several years in this country in the reign of Charles I

HANNIBAL.

HANNIBAL, the celebrated Carthaginian general, died B.C. 183, aged 64.

HANNO, a Carthaginian navigator, who flourished about 570 B.C.

HANSARD, LUKE, the well-known printer to the House of Commons, was born at Norwich 5 July, 1752, and died 29 Oct., 1828.

HANVILL, JOHN, a Benedictine monk of St. Albans, in the twelfth century. He wrote 'Architrenius,' a Latin poem, printed at Paris 1517.

HANWAY, JONAS, a philanthropist, born at Portsmouth 1712. Being bred a merchant, he formed a connection with a commercial house at St. Petersburg, in consequence of which he travelled into Persia, and published an account of that country. On settling in London he devoted much of his time to the advancement of benevolent projects, and was the principal institutor of the Marine Society, and of the Magdalen Hospital. For these exertions he was made a commissioner of the navy; and when he resigned his seat at the board his salary was continued. Died 5 Sept., 1786. He wrote several religious books, the most popular of which is entitled 'Domestic Happiness Promoted.'

HARCOURT, HARRIET EUSEBIA, was the daughter of a gentleman of large estate at Richmond, Yorkshire, where she was born 1705. She received a learned education from her father, whom she accompanied in his travels over Europe, and at his death she inherited his estates. In 1733 she returned to England, having lost her father at Constantinople. Having brought with her several ladies from abroad, she formed with them a kind of convent on her estate in Yorkshire, and another in one of the western isles of Scotland, but without any vows or austerity. Died 1745. Her romantic institutions ceased after her death.

HARCOURT, THOMAS, whose real name was Whitbread, was born in Essex 1618. He entered the Society of Jesus as a novice at the age of 17; was numbered among the professed fathers 1652; and became provincial of his order 1678. In the first year of his superiority he was seized in the house of Count Egmont, the Spanish ambassador in London, thrown into Newgate, and fell one of the innocent victims of Oates's perjuries 30 June, n.s., 1679. His two short poems—'To Death,' and 'To his Soul,' are preserved in the 'Remembrance of Piety and Innocence,' 1683.—Oliver.

HARDER, JOHN JAMES, count, professor of medicine, anatomy, and botany at Basle, was born there 1656, and died 28 April, 1711.

HARDIME, PETER, a flower-painter of Antwerp, born 1673; died 1748. His brother, Simon, was also a good flower-painter, and died in London 1737.

HARDING, GEORGE PERFECT, an English portrait painter, died in London 23 Dec., 1853.

HARDING, JAMES DUFFIELD, an artist, born at Deptford 1798; died at Barnes, Surrey, 4 Dec., 1863. Although a facile and popular painter, he was best known in connection with his elementary publications on art, which contain many admirable lithographic prints of familiar objects in nature, from sketches made by himself. His 'Lessons on Art;' 'Lessons on Trees;' 'Principles and Practice of Art,' and other treatises for beginners obtained a wide popularity.

HARDING, or HARDYNG, JOHN, an English historian, born 1378. He served Henry Percy, commonly called Harry Hotspur, and was with him in all his battles. After the death of his patron, Harding enlisted under Sir Robert Umfraville, and was appointed by him constable of Warkworth Castle. In 1415 he attended the king to Harfleur; and was with the duke of Bedford in his sea-fight of the Seine. In 1424 he went to Rome; but soon after he was employed in collecting documents to ascertain the fealty due from the Scottish kings, for which he obtained various grants from the crown. He was living in 1405. His Chronicle of England, to the reign of Edward IV., is in verse, and was first printed by Grafton in 1543; and reprinted in 1812, with a biographical preface.

HARDING, THOMAS, D.D., a Catholic divine, born at Combe Martin, Devonshire, 1512. He was educated at Barnstaple, next at Winchester, and lastly at New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1542 he was chosen Hebrew professor, and conformed to the established religion during that reign and the next. He was also tutor to Lady Jane Grey, whom he instructed in the Protestant faith. But on the accession of Mary he joined the church of Rome. In 1554 he took his doctor's degree, and was made prebendary of Winchester and treasurer of Salisbury. When Elizabeth came to the crown, Harding went to Louvain, where he carried on a warm controversy with his schoolfellow, Bishop Jewel. He died there 16 Sept., 1572.

HARDINGE, GEORGE, son of Nicholas, mentioned below, was born 1744, and after receiving his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, was called to the bar. He was made senior justice of the counties of Brecon, Glamorgan, and Radnor 1787; solicitor-general to the queen 1789; and died 26 April, 1816. His Miscellaneous Works, in prose and verse, were published in 3 vols., 1818.

HARDINGE, HENRY, VISCOUNT HARDINGE, an English field marshal, was born at Wrotham, Kent, 30 March, 1785. He entered the army at an early age, and served under the duke of Wellington throughout the peninsular war, being part of the time on the staff of the commander-in-chief. On the retreat to Corunna, he attracted the attention of Marshal Beresford, who gave him a brigade in the Portuguese service, which was afterwards commuted for British rank. From 1809 to 1813 he was deputy quartermaster-general of the Portuguese army; and he was present at all the great engagements in the peninsula. On the renewal of hostilities in 1815, he was again on the staff of Wellington. At the battle of Ligny, where he acted as brigadier-general with the Prussian army, he lost his left arm, and was thus prevented from being present at Waterloo. On his return to England he received the usual pension for his wounds, and was made a K.C.B. At this time he was looked upon as one of the best of Wellington's tried officers. His next prominent appearance was in civil life, as M.P. for Durham, to which position he was elected 1820, and re-elected 1826. In 1823 he officiated as clerk of the ordnance, and in 1828, when Wellington came into power, he was made secretary of war, which office he exchanged for the chief secretaryship of Ireland two years later. When Wellington went out, Hardinge resigned, but he was reinstated in office by Sir Robert Peel during his two terms of power in 1834-5 and 1841-4. In April, 1844, he was appointed to succeed Lord Ellenborough as governor-general of India, and in July following he entered into office at Calcutta. During the four years that he administered the government of India he was ceaseless in his endeavours to reform its abuses, and to develop the legitimate resources of the country. He originated the policy which ended in the annexation of Oude, under his successor Lord Dalhousie. But in the midst of seeming prosperity, the Sikhs were preparing an invasion of British territory from Lahore. The governor-general having received timely information of their plans collected a force of 32,000 men and 68 guns, and marched with it in person towards the threatened portion of the territory. On 13 Dec., 1845, learning that a large Sikh army had crossed the Sutlej, he issued a proclamation, and followed it up by attacking the invaders. The battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Sobraon, and Aliwal closed this short but hard-fought campaign of about six weeks, during which Hardinge, unwilling to snatch the honours of the field from his seniors in military rank, served as a volunteer under Sir Hugh Gough. For his services in this war he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, and a pension of 3,000*l.* a-year, and was raised to the peerage by the title of Viscount Hardinge of Lahore. The East India Company also voted him a pension of 5,000*l.* a-year. In Jan., 1848, he was superseded in the Indian government by Lord Dalhousie. In Feb., 1852, he was appointed master of the ordnance by Lord Derby, and on the death of the duke of Wellington in September of the same year he became commander-in-chief of the forces. He was advanced to the rank of field-marshal 1855; and died at Southport, near Tunbridge Wells, 24 Sept., 1856.

HARDINGE, NICHOLAS, a poet, was fellow of King's College, Cambridge, M.P. for Eye, in Suffolk, and secretary to the treasury. Some of his Latin poems are in the 'Musa Anglicanae,' and his English ones in other collections. Born 1700; died 9 April, 1758.

HARDION, JACQUES, a French writer, was a native of Tours, and a member of the Academy of Inscriptions. He wrote a Treatise on Poetry and Rhetoric; and a Universal History, in 18 vols. Born 1686; died 18 Sept., 1766.

HARDT, HERMANN VON DER, a German philologist, born in Westphalia 1660; died 28 Feb., 1746.

HARDWICKE, PHILIP YORKE, EARL OF, was the son of an attorney at Dover, and born there 1 Dec., 1690. He received a private education; after which he studied in the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar in 1714. In 1720 he was appointed solicitor-general; and in 1724 attorney-general. In 1733 he was made chief justice of the king's Bench, and created a peer, by the title of Baron Hardwicke. In 1737 he became lord chancellor; and in 1754 was created an earl. He resigned the great seal in 1756; and died 6 March, 1764. Lord Hardwicke wrote a paper in the Spectator; and a piece entitled 'The Legal Jurisdiction in Chancery stated.'

HARDWICKE, PHILIP YORKE, EARL OF, eldest son of the preceding, was born 20 Dec., 1720. He was educated under Dr. Newcome, of Hackney, and next at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. In 1738 he was appointed one of the tellers of the exchequer; and in 1764 succeeded his father in the earldom. Died 10 May, 1790. Lord Hardwicke wrote a poem on the death of Queen Caroline; and with his brother, the Honourable Charles Yorke, projected the 'Athenian Letters, or the Epistolatory Correspondence of an Agent of the King of Persia, residing at Athens during the Peloponnesian War.' A few copies of this work only were printed in 1741; and another impression in the same private manner was executed in 1782; but in 1798 an elegant edition was given to the public in 2 vols. 4to. Lord Hardwicke also printed 'The Correspondence of Sir Dudley Carleton, in the reign of James I.,' and 'Miscellaneous State Papers from 1501 to 1726.'

HARDOUIN, JEAN, a famous Jesuit, born at Quimper, in Brittany 1647. He published in 1684 'Nummi antiqui populorum et urbium illustrati;' and the same year, in conjunction with Petavius, edited 'Themistius,' with notes. In 1685 Father Hardouin printed, for the use of the dauphin 'Plinii Historiæ Naturalis,' 5 vols. 4to.; afterwards reprinted in 3 vols. folio. In 1693 came out his 'Chronologiæ ex nummis antiquis restitutæ prolusio, de Nummis Herodiadum,' 2 vols. 4to.; in which he unfolded his hypothesis, that the greater part of the writings ascribed to Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Plutarch, &c., are forgeries of monks in the thirteenth century. He excepts only the works of Cicero, Pliny's Natural History, Virgil's Georgics, and Horace's Satires and Epistles. In the same stretch of the imagination, he makes the Æneas in Virgil to be Jesus Christ, and the Lalage of Horace, the Christian religion. This work was suppressed by authority; as also were some other books, in which he supported the same notions. In 1700 there was published at Amsterdam a folio volume, entitled 'Joannis Hardouini opera selecta;' containing most of those treatises for which he was obliged to make an apology and retraction. He was afterwards employed in preparing a new edition of 'The Councils,' which appeared in 12 vols. folio, 1705. Father Hardouin died at Paris 3 Sept., 1729; and after his death a folio volume of his 'Opuscula,' was printed.

HARDY, ALEXANDRE, a French dramatist, who died 1631 or 1632.

HARDY, SIR THOMAS MASTERMAN, a British admiral, born near Dorchester 1769; died at Greenwich Hospital, of which he was governor, Sept., 1839.

HARE, AUGUSTUS WILLIAM, fellow of New College, Oxford, was collated to the rectory of Alton Barnes, Wilts, 1829; and died at Rome 18 Feb., 1834. He wrote, conjointly with his brother, Guesse at Truth; and after his death appeared 'Sermons to a Country Congregation,' 2 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1837.

HARE, FRANCIS, a prelate of the church of England, was a native of London. He was educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. From being dean of Worcester, and of St. Paul's, he was raised in 1727 to the bishopric of St. Asaph, and in 1731 was translated to the see of Chichester, which he held, with the deanery of St. Paul's, till his death, 26 April, 1740. He wrote some tracts against Bishop Hoadly, and published an edition of Terence. He also reduced the book of Psalms to a metrical order, which system was completely refuted by Dr. Lowth.

HARE.

HARE, HENRY, LORD COLERAINE. See COLERAINE.

HARE, JULIUS CHARLES, a divine, brother of Augustus William, above-mentioned, was born at Hurstmonceaux, Sussex, 13 Sept., 1795, being a grandson of Bishop Hare. After passing much of his time on the continent, he studied at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow and assistant-tutor. He was appointed rector of Hurstmonceaux 1832; archdeacon of Lewes 1840; chaplain to the queen 1853; died 23 Jan., 1855. Mr. Hare, who was regarded as the leader of the 'broad' section of the Anglican Church, wrote a great number of pieces on the controversies of his day. He also published 'Guesses at Truth,' conjointly with his brother; a translation, undertaken in collaboration with Thirlwall, of the first two volumes of the second edition of Niebuhr's 'History of Rome;' and an edition of the 'Essays and Tales of John Stirling, with a Memoir,' which gave so little satisfaction to Mr. Carlyle that he wrote a rival Life of Stirling.

HARE, ROBERT, second son of Sir Nicholas Hare, speaker of the House of Commons, and afterwards master of the Rolls, was educated at Gouville, and Caius College, Cambridge, and on leaving the university was appointed clerk of the Pells. He 'was an esquire of good worship and wealth, a great lover and preserver (properties never perverted) of antiquities. He carefully collected the precious monuments of both universities, caused them to be fairly transcribed, and freely bestowed a duplicate or double copy on each of them; a gift worthy the giver and the receiver, as of no less cost and pains to the one, than credit and profit to the other.' The compilations above referred to are of the highest value, and prove Mr. Hare to have been an antiquary of the first rank. He was a Catholic, and left to colleges at Cambridge many valuable MSS., which had formerly belonged to religious houses, on the condition that they should be returned to the original owners when England was brought back to the old faith. He died 2 Nov. 1611.—Athen. Cantab. iii. 47.

HARGRAVE, FRANCIS, a learned king's counsel and recorder of Liverpool, died 16 Aug., 1821, aged 80. He published several excellent legal works including 'Collection of State Trials,' 11 vols. folio, 1781; and 'Collection of Tracts relative to the Laws of England, from MSS.,' 1787. In 1813 Parliament purchased his law library for 8,000*l.*, and it is now deposited in Lincoln's Inn.

HARINGTON, SIR JOHN, was born at Kelston, or Kelweston, near Bath, 1561. Queen Elizabeth was his godmother, and he received his education at Eton, whence he removed to Christ's College, Cambridge. He next became a student of Lincoln's Inn, though he confesses he 'studied Lyttelton but to the title of discontinuance.' The queen's court was the arena in which he was destined to distinguish himself. There his wit and accomplishments gained him general esteem. In 1597 he published his translation of Ariosto's 'Orlando Furioso,' by which he acquired a high literary reputation. On the appointment of the earl of Essex to the lord lieutenancy of Ireland, 1599, Harington was made a commander of horse in his service, and the earl subsequently knighted him in the field. The statement that he was created a knight of the Bath in the reign of James I. is without foundation. He died at

HARMAR.

Kelston 20 November, 1612. Besides the work already mentioned Sir John wrote 'The Englishman's Doctor; or the Schoole of Salerne,' in ten line stanzas; 'A Briefe View of the State of the Church of England;' 'Epigrams,' and some minor pieces printed in the 'Nugæ Antiquæ,' edited by Henry Harington, M.A. He is to be distinguished from Sir John Harington, K.B., afterwards second Lord Harington of Exton, who was the companion and correspondent of Henry, prince of Wales, the son of James I., and who died 27 Feb., 1613-4, at the early age of 22.—Athen. Cantab. iii.

HARLAND, JOHN, F.S.A., was born at Hull 1806, and apprenticed to a letter-press printer. He acquired a knowledge of shorthand, and soon became one of the most trustworthy reporters on the provincial press. In 1830 he removed to Manchester, and took a position on the 'Guardian' there. He was a close observer of the political and social events which occurred in the first part of his Manchester life, and was able to add greatly to the value of the journal with which he was connected at a time when the city where it was published was rapidly increasing in size and in political importance. He continued his labours upon the paper until 1860, when he was forced to retire by illness. Besides work which proves sufficiently exhaustive for most men, Mr. Harland acquired and disseminated considerable information respecting the antiquities of Lancashire. He edited several volumes for the Chetham Society, besides independent volumes of old Lancashire ballads and Lancashire lyrics; and amongst his latest labours was the production, in conjunction with Mr. Alderman Wilkinson, of Burley, of an interesting volume of Lancashire folk-lore. At the time of his death, which occurred in April, 1868, he was engaged upon a new edition of Baines's 'Lancashire.'

HARLES, THEOPHILUS CHRISTOPHER, a German editor, born at Culmbach, in Swabia, 1758; died 2 Nov., 1815. His edition of Fabricius's 'Bibliotheca Græca,' 12 vols., Hamburg, 1790-1812, is highly esteemed by scholars.

HARLEY, EARLS OF OXFORD. See OXFORD.

HARLEY, LADY BRILLIANA, second daughter of Sir Edward Conway, afterwards Baron Conway and Viscount Killutagh, was born about 1600, and in 1623 became the wife of Sir Robert Harley. She died Oct., 1643. She wrote a valuable series of letters, which were edited for the Camden Society 1854, by the Rev. Thomas Taylor Lewis.

HARLOW, GEORGE HENRY, a painter, was born in the parish of Westminster in 1787. He was a posthumous child, but his mother took great care of his education, and allowed him to follow the bent of his inclination for the arts, which he studied, first under Drummond, and next under Sir Thomas Lawrence, after which he went to Italy. Previous, however, to his going abroad he painted some historical pictures of great merit, particularly one of Henry VIII., Queen Catharine, and Cardinal Wolsey. During his residence at Rome, in 1818, he made a copy of Raphael's Transfiguration, and executed a composition of his own, which was exhibited by Canova, and afterwards at the academy of St. Luke's. This promising artist died soon after his return to England 28 Jan., 1819.

HARMAR, JOHN, a learned divine, was the son of Dr. John Harmar, warden of Winchester, who died in 1613. The son was born about 1594, at Churchdowne, Gloucestershire, and educated at Winchester School, and Magdalen College, Oxford. He afterwards became master of the school at St. Alban's, and in 1650 was made Greek professor at Oxford. In 1669 he was presented to the rectory of Ewhurst, Hampshire, but was deprived of that and his professorship at the Restoration. Died 1 Nov., 1670. He wrote Latin and Greek panegyrics on Oliver Cromwell, Richard, his son, and Charles II. He also translated part of Butler's Hudibras into Latin. His chief publications are—'Praxis Grammatica,' 'Janua Linguarum,' Lexicon Etymologicum Græcum.

HARMER, THOMAS, a dissenting minister, was born at Norwich 1715, and after receiving a suitable education, settled as pastor of a congregation at Wattlefield, Suffolk. He published 'Observations on Divers Passages of Scripture, illustrated by the Accounts of Travellers in the East,' 4 vols.; 'Outlines of a new Commentary on Solomon's Song,' &c. Died Nov., 1788.

HAROLD I., king of England, died 1039, in the fifth year of his reign.

HAROLD II., was slain at the battle of Hastings 1066.

HAROUN AL RASCHID, the fifth caliph of the race of Abassides, was born 765, and ascended the throne 780. He is celebrated as much for his bravery, his love of the arts, and his magnanimity, as for the cruelty and perfidy he displayed on several occasions. It was he who caused the destruction of the unfortunate family of the Barmecides. Haroun subjugated a great part of Asia, Europe, and Africa. Died 802.

HARPALUS, an astronomer of Greece, who flourished about 480 B.C.

HARPE. See LA HARPE.

HARPOCRATION, VALERIUS, a rhetorician of Alexandria, flourished A.D. 300.

HARPSFELD, JOHN, D.D., dean of Norwich, was born in London, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he was admitted to a fellowship in 1534. He became chaplain to Bonner, who made him archdeacon of London, and gave him the living of St. Martin, Ludgate, which he resigned for that of Layndon, in Essex. A few months before the death of Queen Mary he was made dean of Norwich, which preferment he lost in the next reign, and was sent to the Fleet Prison, but recovered his liberty, and died in London 1578. He wrote Homilies; and a Chronology, from the Deluge to 1559.

HARPSFELD, NICHOLAS, LL.D., brother of the preceding, was professor of Greek at Oxford, fellow of New College, archdeacon of Canterbury, and prebendary of St. Paul's. But on the accession of Queen Elizabeth he lost his preferments, and was kept in confinement at Lambeth for some years. Died 1583. His works are—Dialogi sex contra summi pontificatus, monasticæ vitæ, sanctorum sacrorum imaginum, oppugnatores et pseudo-martyres, 4to.; Historia Anglicana Ecclesiastica, folio; Historia hæresis Wickliffianæ.

HARRINGTON, HENRY, M.D., a descendant of Sir John Harrington, was born at Kelston, Somersetshire, 29 Sept., 1729. He had a private education, after which he went to Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered upon the study of physic. He proceeded to his doctor's degree in that faculty in 1762, and about the same time settled at Wells; from whence he removed to Bath, where he continued to practise with reputation till his death, 15 Jan., 1816. Dr. Harrington was an excellent classical scholar, a good poet, and devotedly attached to music. He composed several admirable catches, and other pieces of a higher description in his favourite science. His other publications are—An Ode to Harmony; An Ode to Discord; The Witch of Wokey, a ballad in the old English style; The Geometrical Analogy of the Doctrine of the Trinity. He was the father of the corporation of Bath, in which city he founded a musical club, called the Harmonic Society.

HARRINGTON, JAMES, a political writer, born at Upton, Northamptonshire, Jan., 1611. He became a pupil of Chillingworth at Trinity College, Oxford, and on leaving the university went abroad. While in the Netherlands he entered into the military service, and was afterwards attached to the queen of Bohemia, and her son, the prince elector. On his return to England he took the side of the parliament against the king; but afterwards he became a domestic to his majesty, whom he attended on the scaffold. Notwithstanding this he was a determined republican, as appears in his political romance, 'Oceana,' printed in 1656, and dedicated to Oliver Cromwell. Harrington formed a society, in order to carry his scheme of a republic into effect, which association was called the Rota Club. In 1661 our author was sent to the Tower, and removed from thence to St. Nicholas's Island, near Plymouth; but being in a state of insanity, his friends obtained his discharge, on giving security for his behaviour. Died 11 Sept., 1677. His works were published by Toland, in one volume folio, 1700; and again by Birch, 1737.

HARRINGTON, SIR JOHN. See HARRINGTON.

HARRIOT, THOMAS, a mathematician, was born at Oxford, or, as Anthony à Wood expresses it, 'tumbled out of his mother's womb in the lap of the Oxonian Muses,' in 1560. He became a commoner of St. Mary Hall (B.A. 1579), after which he was taken into the family of Sir Walter Raleigh, and assisted him in the study of the mathematics. In 1585 Sir Walter sent him to Virginia, of which settlement he published an account. On his return to England he was patronised by the earl of Northumberland, who settled a pension on him of 120*l.* a-year. Harriot died 2 July, 1621. His 'Artis Analyticæ Præx'is' was printed after his death; and it is put beyond all doubt that Des Cartes stole from it, without acknowledgment, those improvements in algebra which he published as his own.

HARRIS, GEORGE, D.C.L., a civilian, was the son of Dr. John Harris, bishop of Llandaff, who died in 1738. The son became a member of Oriel College, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree 1750, at which time he was admitted into the college of advocates. Died 19 April, 1796. His works are—Observations on the English Language; Justiniani Institutiones, with an English translation, and notes.

HARRIS, GEORGE, Lord Harris, a British general, born 18 March, 1746, at Beasted, Kent. After serving with distinction in America, he was appointed governor and commander-in-chief of Madras. In 1798 his military talents pointed him out to the discriminating eye of the Marquis Wellesley as the fittest person to command the army against the formidable power of Tippon Sultan. The forces under his command exceeded 50,000 men, and the object of the expedition was accomplished by the capture of Seringapatam, the death of Tippon, and the annexation of his dominions to the British empire. The conqueror was raised to the rank of general 1812; and in 1815 created a peer by the title of Lord Harris, of Seringapatam and Mysore, and of Belmont, in Kent. Died May, 1829.

HARRIS, JAMES, was born at Salisbury 20 July, 1709, his mother being sister to the celebrated author of the Characteristics. He was educated at the grammar-school of his native city, and from thence went to Wadham College, Oxford, after which he entered himself a student of Lincoln's Inn. In 1744 he published 'Three Treatises. The first concerning Art; the second concerning Music, Painting, and Poetry; the third concerning Happiness.' The year after this Mr. Harris married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Clarke, esq., of Sandford, in Somersetshire. By this union he had five children, of whom two daughters and a son, afterwards Lord Malmesbury, survived him. In 1751 he published another work, entitled 'Hermes, or a philosophical Enquiry concerning universal Grammar.' In 1761 he was returned to Parliament for the borough of Christ Church, which he continued to represent to his death. The next year he was appointed one of the lords of the Admiralty, from which board he removed in 1763 to that of the Treasury, where he remained till the change of ministry in 1765, when he went out of office. In 1774 he became secretary and comptroller to the queen, who delighted much in his conversation. Mr. Harris published in 1775 his 'Philosophical Arrangements,' which volume was followed by his 'Philological Inquiries,' printed in 1780, but not published till after his death, an event that happened 22 Dec., 1780. All his works were published by his son, in 2 vols. 4to., with a memoir prefixed.

HARRIS, JAMES, EARL OF MALMESBURY. See MALMESBURY.

HARRIS, JOHN, D.D., was born about 1667, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was first instituted to the rectory of Barming, in Kent, which he resigned for St. Mildred, Bread Street, London. He had also the perpetual curacy of Stroud, in Kent, and a prebend in Rochester Cathedral; notwithstanding which preferences, he died very poor 7 Sept., 1719. His works are—Sermons preached at the Boyle's Lecture; A Collection of Voyages and Travels, 2 vols. folio, 1704—this was afterwards improved by Dr. Campbell; Treatise on the Theory of the Earth; Treatise on Algebra; Translation of Pardie on Geometry; Astronomical Dialogues; Lexicon Technicum, or a Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences, 2 vols. folio, 1708, afterwards enlarged to 3 vols.—this was the foundation of all our Cyclopaedias; A History of Kent. Dr. Harris was secretary and vice-president of the Royal Society.

HARRIS, ROBERT, D.D., was born at Broad Campden, Gloucestershire, 1578. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, after which he had the living of Hanwell, in Oxfordshire; but in the Rebellion he joined the ruling powers, and became one of the reformers of the university, where he was admitted D.D., and president of Trinity College. Died 11 Dec., 1658. His works were published in one volume folio, 1654.

HARRIS, WALTER, M.D., was born at Gloucester about 1647, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, as being of the founder's kin. On embracing the Catholic religion, he resigned his fellowship and went to France, and there took his doctor's degree. He then returned to London, and, about the time of Oates's plot, renounced Catholicism, in a pamphlet published in 1679. At the Revolution he was appointed physician to the king. He was also fellow of the college, and died about 1730. His works are—Dissertationes Medicæ et Chirurgicæ, habitæ in amphitheatro regali; Pharmacologia anti-empirica; De morbis acutis infantium, &c. This was translated into English by Dr. Cockburn.

HARRIS, WILLIAM, an Independent divine, for upwards of forty years pastor of a congregation in Crutched Friars, London. He was the author of a volume of sermons on the principal Representations of the Messiah in the Old Testament; of another called Funerial Discourses, and of other religious pieces. Died 1740; aged 65.

HARRIS, WILLIAM, D.D., a biographical compiler, born at Salisbury 1720. He was educated for the ministry among the dissenters at Taunton, after which he was ordained at Wells in 1741, and from thence removed to Honiton, where he published 'A Life of Hugh Peters;' the History of James I.; another of Charles I.; and one of Charles II.; and the Life of Oliver Cromwell; all tending to recommend republicanism, for which his patron, Mr. Hollis, procured him the degree of D.D. from the university of Glasgow. Died Feb., 1770.

HARRISON, JOHN, one of the regicides who sat at the trial of Charles I. He was the son of a butcher, and rose to the rank of colonel in the Parliament army. He was executed at the Restoration 1660.

HARRISON, JOHN, was born at Feulby, near Pontefract, Yorkshire, 1693. He was brought up to the business of a carpenter under his father, who also measured land, and repaired clocks and watches. In 1726 young Harrison had constructed two clocks of wood, in which he applied an escapement and compound pendulum of his own invention. In 1728 he made further improvements, and visited London with the drawings of a machine for determining the longitude at sea, which, being shown to Mr. George Graham, he advised Harrison to make his machine before he applied to the board. This he accordingly did, and, in 1735, came to London again with his first machine, with which he was sent on a voyage to Lisbon, to make a trial of it. After this, he completed a second machine, more simple than the first; and then a third, which erred only two or three seconds in a week. He now made a time-keeper in the form of a watch, with which two trials were made in voyages to the West Indies, and being found to answer, the discoverer received the sum of twenty-four thousand pounds. Died 24 March, 1776.

HARRISON, THOMAS, D.D., minister of St. Dunstan's in the East, was author of the popular work 'Topica Sacra: Spiritual Logick,' 1658; also of 'Lemmata Meditationum, or the Contents of a few Religious Meditations: given as Directive and Incentive to that valuable Duty. By Philo-Jesus Philo-Carolus." Dublin, 1672.

HARRISON, WILLIAM, an historical writer, was born in London, and educated at Westminster School, after which he went to both of the universities. He obtained the living of Radwinter, Essex, where he died 1592 or 1593. He wrote the description of Britain prefixed to Holinshed's Chronicle; also a Chronology; and a translation of Boece's Description of Scotland.

HARRISON, WILLIAM, an English Catholic divine, was appointed 'archpriest' over his brethren in this country 1615, on the decease of Mr. Birket; and died 1621.

HARRISON, WILLIAM, was educated at Winchester, after which he became a student and fellow of New College, Oxford. While a private tutor he gained the friendship of Dean Swift, by whose interest he was appointed secretary to Lord Raby, the English ambassador at the Hague. Some of his letters are in Swift's correspondence, and his poems in Doddsley's and other collections. The best is 'Woodstock Park.' He was also the editor of the Tatler, in which are some of his essays. Died 14 Feb., 1712—13.

HARRISON, WILLIAM, a vocalist and theatrical manager, born 15 June, 1813, in London, where he died 9 Nov., 1868. He will be chiefly remembered in consequence of his endeavours to form a permanent home for English opera in the metropolis. His first season of the management of Covent Garden Theatre, in conjunction with Miss Louisa P., commenced 21 Sept., 1857. At first they met with genuine and unhopd-for success; but the undertaking gradually languished, and on 18 March, 1865, they retired from the speculation. Mr. Harrison, however, resolved to make another effort, and in the following year, having taken Her Majesty's Theatre as sole lessee, he opened it with a stronger company than he had ever before engaged, but the attempt proved an utter failure.

HARRISON, WILLIAM HENRY, ninth president of the United States, was born 9 Feb., 1773, and joining the military service of his country, attained the rank of general. He was inaugurated president 1841, but died within a month afterwards, on 4 April, 1841.

HARRY, BLIND. See HENRY THE MINSTREL.

HARSNET, SAMUEL, an English prelate, born at Colchester 1561. He was educated at King's College, Cambridge; from whence he removed to Pembroke Hall, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1597 he was made chaplain to Bishop Bancroft, who gave him the living of St. Margaret, Fish Street, which he resigned for that of Chigwell, Essex, where he founded a free school. In 1598 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of St. Paul's, and, in 1602, the archdeaconry of Essex. He was also presented to the rectory of Shenfield, in the same county, and, on the death of Bishop Andrews, was chosen master of Pembroke Hall. In 1609 he was consecrated bishop of Chichester; in 1610 translated to Norwich; and in 1628 to York. Died 25 May, 1631. He published an Exposure of the Practices of the Puritans in pretending to Exorcisms.

HART, JOHN, a Jesuit, was a native of Oxfordshire, and received his education at the university of Oxford. Admitted into the English college at Douay 1571, he was ordained priest 1578, and in 1580 returned to this country upon the mission.

HARTSHORNE.

Being apprehended towards the end of the latter year, he was tried and condemned to die upon account of his sacerdotal character. On the day designed for his execution, he was put upon the sledge, but being reprieved, was re-committed to the Tower, where he remained three years. While in confinement he became widely known by the conference he had with Dr. John Reynolds, about 1583. The particulars of this conference were published by Dr. Reynolds in a volume entitled 'Sum of a Conference between John Reynolds and John Hart,' 4to., London, 1588, 1589. In 1584 Hart was banished from his native land, whereupon he retired to Verdun and joined the Society of Jesus. He was next summoned to Rome, and afterwards sent to Jarislau, in Poland, where he died 19 July, 1594.

HART, WILLIAM, a native of Somersetshire, and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, which he left on determining to join the priesthood of the Roman Church. Being condemned to death on account of his sacerdotal character, he suffered at York 15 March, 1583-4. Several of his letters are in print.

HARTE, WALTER, was born at Kentbury, Bucks, about 1697, and educated at Oxford, where he became principal of St. Mary Hall. He also obtained a canonry of Windsor, and at the time of his death, which happened in March, 1774, he was vicar of St. Austell and St. Blazey, Cornwall. He published an Essay on Satire; another on Reason; History of Gustavus Adolphus; the 'Amaranth,' a collection of poems; and Essays on Husbandry.

HARTLEY, DAVID, M. D., a physician, was born in Yorkshire 30 Aug., 1705, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship. He died at Bath 28 Aug., 1757. He wrote a metaphysical work entitled 'Observations on Man, his Frame, his Duty, and his Expectations,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1749. His son, David, was for some time M.P. for Hull, and distinguished himself by several scientific inventions. He died 1813, aged 84.

HARTLIB, SAMUEL, was the son of a Pole who settled in trade at Elbing, in Prussia. Samuel Hartlib came to London, and entered into a commercial concern about 1630. He appears to have carried on an extensive business, particularly in the agency line. Warton says he came hither about 1640; but this is a mistake, for he lived on terms of intimacy with Archbishop Usher and Joseph Mede, long before that year. He took an active part in Dury's scheme for a union among the Protestant churches; and he had also a concern in establishing that which was afterwards called the Royal Society. Agriculture occupied much of his attention, and he published several pieces on that subject, particularly one, entitled his 'Legacy, or an Enlargement of the Discourse of Husbandry used in Brabant and Flanders.' Milton addressed to him his 'Tractate on Education,' and Sir William Petty corresponded with him on the same subject. Yet, with all his schemes, he became so poor as to be obliged to apply to Parliament for relief, with what effect is unknown; neither is the time of his death ascertained.

HARTMAN, JOHN ADOLPHUS, a German Protestant divine, professor at Marburg, wrote 'Historia Hassiaca'; 'Vita Pontificum Romanorum,' &c. Born 1680; died 1744.

HARTSHORNE, CHARLES HENRY, a divine and antiquary, born at Broseley 1802; died at Hul-denby, Northamptonshire, 11 March, 1865. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and St. John's College, Cambridge. Taking orders, he became minister successively of Cogenhoe and Holdenby, both in Northamptonshire. Among his numerous works may be mentioned, 'The Book Rarities of the University of Cambridge,' 'Salopia Antiqua,' 'Historical Memorials of Northampton,' and 'Memoirs illustrative of the history and antiquities of Northumberland.'

HARTSOEKER, NICHOLAS, a natural philosopher, born at Gouda, in Holland, 1656. He became professor of philosophy at Heidelberg, and mathematician to the elector palatine; and died at Utrecht 10 Dec., 1725.

HARTZHEIM, JOSEPH, a Jesuit, professor of philosophy and divinity at Cologne, his native city, wrote a Summary of Universal History; Lives of the Writers of Cologne, &c. Born 1694; died 1763.

HARVARD, JOHN, a nonconformist divine, who died 1688, at Charleston, in New England. He founded the college which bears his name, at Cambridge, in North America.

HARVEY, DANIEL WHITTLE, a politician, born in Essex 1786. He was brought up as a solicitor and practised for many years at Feering, in his native county. His first endeavour to enter Parliament was his memorable contest at Colchester, with Mr. Hart Davis and Mr. Robert Thornton, chairman of the East India Company, when the struggle of six days' duration is said to have cost 40,000*l.*, and when Mr. Harvey was defeated. He was, however, elected in 1818 for Colchester, which borough he continued to represent till 1834; and from 1835 to 1840 he was M.P. for Southwark. Mr. Harvey was a most eloquent speaker in Parliament, and advocated the broadest liberal principles. In 1839 he was appointed Commissioner of the London City Police Force. This post was hardly suited to his tastes and pursuits, but he nevertheless fulfilled its duties with great ability and marked efficiency. Died 24 Feb., 1863.

HARVEY, GABRIEL, D.C.L., a civilian and poet, born in London about 1545. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and afterwards obtained a fellowship at Trinity Hall, but took his doctor's degree at Oxford, and then became an advocate in the Prærogative Court. He wrote the poem signed 'Hobbinol,' prefixed to Spenser's Faery Queen; but he disgraced himself by a scurrilous controversy with Nash and Greene. He died in 1630-31. His works are: Three proper Letters touching the Earthquake; Two Letters touching artificial versifying; Four Letters and Sonnets touching Robert Greene and others; Pierce's Supererogation, or a new Praise of the old Ass; Rhetor, sive duorum dierum oratio de Natura; Ciceronianus, vel oratio post gradum habita Cantabrigiæ ad suos auditores; Gratulatio Valdenensium; Smithus, vel musæum lachrymæ pro obitu honorat. viri Thom. Smith.

HARVEY, GIDEON, M.D., was born in Surrey, and educated at Oxford and Leyden. At the Revolution he was made physician to the Tower, which place he is said to have held for fifty years. His principal work is 'The Conclave of Physicians, detecting their intrigues, frauds, and plots, against their patients,' 1683-6.

HARVEY, WILLIAM, M.D., was born at Folkestone, Kent, 2 April, 1569. He was educated at the King's School, Canterbury, and next at Caius

HASLEWOOD.

College, Cambridge; on leaving which he travelled to Padua, where he was created doctor of physic in 1602. On his return to England he settled in London, and, in 1604, was admitted a member of the College of Physicians. Three years afterwards he became fellow of the college, and physician to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. In 1615 he was appointed lecturer of anatomy and surgery in the college, and, while discharging the duties of this office, he made the discovery of the circulation of the blood, but did not publish it till 1628, when he printed his 'Exercitatio anatomica de motu cordis et sanguinis.' In 1632 he was made physician to King Charles, whom he attended at the battle of Edgehill, as he afterwards did at Oxford, where he was incorporated doctor of physic, and elected warden of Merton College. When that city was taken, he returned to London, and published, in 1651, his 'Exercitationes de generatione animalium.' The following year he presented to the college a convocation room, and museum filled with books and instruments. After this he gave up his paternal estate to their use, on condition that a yearly oration should be delivered in the college, and provision made for the keeper of the library and museum. He died 3 June, 1657, and was buried in the chapel of Hampstead, belonging to the church of Great Stamford, in Essex. His works were published in Latin, 4to., 1766. An English translation of them by Dr. Willis was published by the Sydenham Society, 1847.

HARWIN, WILLIAM, master of the Unitarian Free School at Norwich, and the author of an 'Easy System of Short Hand' (1809), died 1811, aged 62.

HARWOOD, SIR BUSICK, M.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., an anatomist of some celebrity. On becoming a surgeon he obtained an appointment in India, and on his return entered Christ's College, Cambridge, which he subsequently quitted for Emmanuel College. In 1785 he was chosen professor of anatomy in the university, and in 1800 professor of domestic medicine in Downing College, of which society he was also vice-master. He received the honour of knighthood 1806; and died 10 Nov., 1814.

HARWOOD, EDWARD, D.D., a dissenting minister, b. 1729, in Lancashire. He was pastor of a Presbyterian congregation at Bristol, from whence he was obliged to remove on account of his Anianism. Eventually he settled in London, where he gained a subsistence by teaching the classics, and correcting the press. Died 14 Jan., 1794. He published a number of books and pamphlets. Among them are 'A New Introduction to the Study and Knowledge of the New Testament;' 'A View of the various Editions of the Greek and Roman Classics;' and a 'Translation of the New Testament' into modern English.

HASE, THEODORE VON, professor of Hebrew and divinity at Bremen, was the author of some dissertations, which show his learning to advantage. He died 25 April, 1731, aged 49. His brother, James, who died 1728, wrote some classical tracts.

HASENMULLER, DANIEL, a learned critic, born in Holstein 1651, became professor of Greek and of the oriental languages at Kiel. Died 29 May, 1691.

HASLEWOOD, JOSEPH, a celebrated bibliographer and literary antiquary, one of the founders of the Roxburgh Club, was born 5 Nov., 1760, in London, where he died 21 Sept., 1833. He reprinted a great many rare and interesting works.

HASSE, JOHN ADOLPHUS, a distinguished musical composer, born at Bergedorf, near Hamburg, 1609; died at Venice 22 Dec., 1783.

HASSELQUIST, FREDERICK, a botanist, was born 3 Jan., 1722, at Törnålla, in East Gothland, and educated at Upsal, where he attended the botanical lectures of Linnæus, after which he went to the Holy Land, and collected a number of natural curiosities. He died at Smyrna 9 Feb., 1752. His 'Iter Palæstinum, or a Journey to the Holy Land,' was published by Linnæus '757; and translated into English 1766.

HASTED, EDWARD, was born at Hawley, the seat of his family, in Kent, 1732. He devoted the greater part of his life to the labour of compiling a History of his Native County, which was published in 4 vols. folio, 1778-1799. Having reduced himself to narrow circumstances, he was presented by Lord Radnor to the mastership of the hospital at Corsham, in Wiltshire, where he died 14 Jan., 1812.

HASTINGS, LADY ELIZABETH, daughter of Theophilus, earl of Huntingdon, was born in Yorkshire 1682. She remained single through life, and distinguished herself by works of piety and benevolence. She erected schools, built churches, and supported many indigent families; besides which she founded five scholarships in Queen's College, Oxford. Died 22 Dec., 1739.

HASTINGS, FRANCIS RAWDON, Marquis of Hastings, eldest son of the earl of Moira, was born 1754, and educated at Oxford. Entering the military service, he achieved great distinction in America, and in 1781, being then adjutant-general to the army, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, he defeated the American general Green, at Hobkirk Hill. On his return to England he was created Lord Rawdon 1783. He formed an intimate friendship with the prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., and zealously advocated his cause in the discussions in the House of Lords respecting the regency. In 1790 he assumed the name of Hastings, and in 1793 succeeded his father as earl of Moira. The next year he was despatched to Flanders with a force of 10,000 men, in order to assist the duke of York; and it was owing to his strategical skill that the French commander, Pichegru, was out-generaled. When the Whigs came into office in 1806 he was appointed master-general of the Ordnance, and in 1812 he was made governor-general of India, which exalted and responsible post he held for nine years. In 1816 he was created Viscount Loudoun, earl of Rawdon, and marquis of Hastings. He was nominated governor and commander-in-chief of Malta 1824; and died 28 Nov., 1826.

HASTINGS, WARREN, was born 1733, at or near Daylesford, Worcestershire, the minor of which had been in his family for many generations, though at the time of his birth it had gone into other hands. His father was a clergyman in low circumstances. However, the son obtained a good education at Westminster School, from whence he was sent to India, as a writer in the company's service in 1750. On his arrival in the East, he applied with diligence to the duties of his station, and at his leisure studied the oriental languages. After fourteen years' residence in Bengal he returned to England; but in 1769 he went out as second in council at Madras, where he remained about two years, and then removed to the presidency of Calcutta. This was a critical period, and the state of Hindostan soon became perilous from the increasing power of Hyder Ali, the sovereign of Mysore, and the intrigues of the French, who were taking advantage of the rupture between Great Britain and her colonies. In this exigency the governor-general had to depend solely upon his own exertions; and he succeeded, beyond all expectation, in saving British India from a combination of enemies. Notwithstanding this, party spirit at home turned the merit of Mr. Hastings into a crime, and charges were brought against him in Parliament. He returned in 1786, and an impeachment followed, which, in all its stages, lasted nine years, and ended in his acquittal. After this he led a retired life on the wreck of his fortune, and an annuity from the company. He lived, however, to see his plans for the security of India publicly applauded; but he received no other compensation for the injury he had sustained than that of being sworn a member of the privy-council. He died 22 Aug., 1818. Mr. Hastings was a man of mild and unassuming manners, an elegant scholar, and a good poet. He wrote—A Narrative of the Insurrection at Benares; Memoirs relative to the State of India; Treatise on the Means of guarding Houses against Fire; Fugitive Poetry.

HATFIELD, THOMAS, bishop of Durham, of whom few particulars are known, except that he was the favourite of Edward III., at whose desire he was elected to the bishopric in 1345. He distinguished himself, soon after his consecration, by repelling the Scots, who had invaded the principality, and were defeated by Lord Percy and the bishop in person, at the head of their respective forces. On this occasion the king of Scotland fell into the hands of the victors, and was afterwards ransomed. Bishop Hatfield was the founder of Trinity College, Oxford, which was at first called Durham College. He also built a palace for himself and his successors in the Strand, called Durham House; and he was likewise the founder of a Carmelite friary at Northallerton, Yorkshire. Died 8 May, 1381.

HATSELL, JOHN, clerk of the House of Commons, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, after which he became a member and senior bencher of the Middle Temple. He entered early as an assistant-clerk of the House of Commons, under Mr. Dyson, and in 1768 became chief clerk. He retired from that situation with the thanks of the House in 1797, and died at Marden Park, in Surrey, 15 Oct., 1820. Mr. Hatsett published the 'Precedents of the House of Commons.'

HATTON, SIR CHRISTOPHER, lord chancellor of England, was born at Holdenby, Northamptonshire, and educated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford, from whence he proceeded to the Inner Temple. Instead, however, of following the law, he became a courtier, and attracted the queen's notice by his graceful dancing in a masque. From this time he rose to several degrees of favour, and, in 1587, was made both chancellor and knight of the Garter. He died in 1591 of a broken heart, as some historians affirm, occasioned by the queen's demanding a debt, which he had it not in his power to pay. He wrote the fourth act in the tragedy of Tancred and Sigismund; and to him is ascribed 'A treatise concerning Statutes or Acts of Parliament.'

HATTON, CHRISTOPHER, a learned Dominican, who, under the borrowed name of Constantius Archæophilus, compiled 'Memoirs of the Reformation in England, in two parts; the whole collected from Acts of Parliament and Protestant Historians,' 8vo., Lond., 1826. He died at Myddleton Lodge, Yorkshire, 23 Oct., 1783, æt. 79.

HAUBOLD, CHRISTIAN THEOPHILUS, a German jurist, born at Dresden 4 Nov., 1766; died 24 March, 1824.

HAUGHTON, SIR GRAVES CHAMNEY, K.H., M.A., F.R.S., an orientalist, born in Dublin, died at St. Cloud, near Paris, 28 Aug., 1849. He was the editor of the 'Institutes of Menu,' in the original Sanscrit, and the author of a Bengali Grammar; a Bengali-Sanscrit-and-English Dictionary; Podromus, or an Inquiry into the First Principles of Reasoning; a Letter on the Encroachments of the Court of Laws, &c.

HAUKSBEE, FRANCIS, F.R.S., an English electrician, who flourished about 1731.

HAUTEFEUILLE, JEAN DE, a mechanician of Orleans, who made several discoveries and improvements in clockmaking. Born 1647; died 1724.

HAUTEROUCHE, NOEL LE BRETON DE, a French dramatic poet and actor, who died at Paris 1707, aged 90.

HAUY, RENÉ JUST, a French abbé and man of science, born 28 Feb., 1743; died at Paris 3 June, 1822. He wrote numerous memoirs upon mineralogy and electricity.

HAVELOCK, SIR HENRY, Bart., K.C.B., a brave military commander, born 5 April, 1795, in the parish of Bishopwearmouth, Durham. He received his education at Charterhouse School, and in 1813 entered the Middle Temple, with a view to the legal profession, but two years later he abandoned the forensic arena for a military career. After serving for eight years in England, Scotland, and Ireland, he embarked for India in 1823. Though he proved himself to be during peace a valuable regimental officer, and in war a skilful leader, it was not till 1838, after having been a subaltern twenty-three years, that he attained the rank of captain. His share in the Afghan war, the Gwalior campaign, the first campaign against the Sikhs, and the Persian expedition, had procured him professional reputation; and his noble conduct in the defence of Jellalabad had made his name temporarily famous in England; but he may be said to have been an obscure man until his extraordinary efforts for the relief of the garrison of Lucknow filled Europe with his fame, and for a brief space made him the prominent object in the minds of his countrymen. When the Indian mutiny of 1857 was at its height he was despatched from Calcutta to Allahabad to take command of a column destined for the relief of Cawnpore, which was then besieged by the Nena Sahib. He left Allahabad 4 July, with about 1200 men, and having been joined by a reinforcement which raised his strength to nearly 2000, encountered and routed 3500 rebels at Futtehpore; and on the 16th defeated the Nena before Cawnpore. The next day he entered the city, to find that it had fallen on June 27, and that the surviving Europeans had been massacred with aggravated atrocities only the day before his arrival. From Cawnpore, Havelock followed the Nena to Bittoor, defeated him, and reduced the place to ashes. He then pushed on towards Lucknow, where the garrison under Brigadier Inglis was closely beset by the rebels. Having crossed the Ganges on the 25th, he was opposed at Onao by a large and strongly-posted body of the enemy, over whom he gained a victory (July 29), which deserves to rank as one of his most brilliant achievements. On the same day he defeated the mutineers again at Buserut-Gunge; but two days afterwards, finding his whole force reduced to about 1300 men, and being encumbered with the sick and wounded, he had to retreat to Mungulwar to wait for reinforcements. The enemy immediately re-occupied Buserut-Gunge, and Havelock returned twice and drove them out. After the third attack upon that town (Aug. 12), he recrossed the Ganges to Cawnpore, having now only 1000 men, while between him and Lucknow there were at least three strongholds, defended by 30,000 rebels, with 50 guns. Joining General Neill at Cawnpore, he marched against the Nena, who had re-entered Bittoor, and routed him Aug. 16. On Sept. 15 Major-general Outram reached Cawnpore with 1700 men. His rank was higher than Havelock's, but he generously relinquished to the latter the chief command, and on the 19th Havelock, raised from the rank of brigadier to that of major-general, again set out for Lucknow, Outram accompanying the force as a volunteer. After a series of battles, he reached that city on the 25th, and fought his way, with a loss of over 500 men, into the Residency, where Inglis was shut up. General Outram now resumed the command. Under him, gallantly seconded throughout by Havelock, the garrison and their relievers had to withstand a siege until the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell, who released the British, and enabled them to retire to Cawnpore. The Residency was evacuated Nov. 22; but Havelock, whose strength had been broken by sickness and exposure, died of dysentery three days after (Nov. 25, 1857), at the Dilkoocha Palace, on the south of the city.

HAVERCAMP, SIGEBERT, a philologist and numismatist, born at Utrecht 1683. He became professor of Greek and history at Leyden, where he died 25 April, 1742. He published some valuable editions of Greek and Latin authors.

HAWARDEN, EDWARD, an English Catholic priest, died in London 23 April, 1735, leaving a number of works which were formerly preserved in MS. at the English college, Douay.

HAWEIS, THOMAS, an English divine, was born at Truro, Cornwall, about 1736. He served his time to an apothecary, but afterwards went to Cambridge, where he took the degree of LL.B. On taking orders he became assistant to Mr. Madan, at the Lock Chapel, on whose recommendation he accepted the presentation to the rectory of All Saints, Aldwinkle, Northamptonshire, upon an implied promise of resignation; but when the time expired, he refused to give up the living, which brought much censure on the Calvinistic Methodists. At last the countess of Huntingdon compromised the affair, and her chaplain held the living to his death. That lady also entrusted him with the management of her chapels and the seminary which she had founded for the education of young students in divinity. When the missionary society was formed he also took the lead in its direction, and obtained a doctor's degree from Scotland. He died in 1820. His principal works are 'A Commentary on the Bible,' 2 vols.; 'History of the Church,' 3 vols.; 'Life of the Rev. William Romayne'; 'State of Evangelical Religion throughout the World.'

HAWES, STEPHEN, a poet of the fifteenth century, was a native of Suffolk, and educated at Oxford. He afterwards held a situation in the household of Henry VII., who took great pleasure in his conversation. His works are Pastime of Pleasure, 1517; The Temple of Glass, in imitation of Chaucer's Temple of Fame; The Conversyon of Swerrea.

HAWES, WILLIAM, M.D., was born at Islington 28 Nov., 1736. He was brought up to the profession of an apothecary, which business he carried on in the Strand till 1780, when, having taken his degree, he commenced practice as a physician. Long before this he had acquired deserved popularity by his zealous exertions in establishing the Royal Humane Society, to which institution he may be said to have devoted his whole life. He died at Islington 5 Dec., 1808. Dr. Hawes published 'An Account of Dr. Goldsmith's last illness,' which he attributed to an improper use of James's powder; An Address on Premature Death and Premature Interment; An Examination of the Rev. John Wesley's Primitive Physic; Address to the Legislature on the Humane Society; Address to the King and Parliament, with Observations on the general Bills of Mortality; Transactions of the Royal Humane Society.

HAWKE, EDWARD, Lord Hawke, a gallant admiral, was the son of Edward Hawke, Esq., barrister-at-law. He was born in 1713, and at the age of twelve went to sea as a midshipman in the fleet under Sir Charles Wager. In 1734 he was appointed to the command of the Wolf, and in 1744 he distinguished himself by breaking the French line in the action of Mathews and Lestock, off Toulon. As this, however, was done without orders, he was broke, but had his commission restored by the king. In 1747 he was made admiral of the white, and the same year captured seven French men of war out of a squadron of nine, for which he received the honour of the Bath. The next year he was raised to the blue, and, in 1755, appointed vice-admiral of the white. November 20, 1759, he gained a great victory over the French fleet, commanded by M. Conflans, in Quiberon Bay, though it was a lee-shore and the sea ran high, in the midst of a storm. The service, therefore, was particularly hazardous; and when the pilot represented it to the admiral, Sir Edward said, 'You have done your duty, and now you are to comply with my order in laying me alongside the Soleil Royal,' the ship of Conflans. In 1765 Sir Edward was appointed first lord of the Admiralty, and in 1776 raised to the peerage. Died 14 Oct., 1781.

HAWKER, PETER, lieutenant-colonel of the North Hampshire militia, died in London 7 Aug., 1853, aged 67. After serving with distinction in the Peninsular war, he published a 'Journal of a Regimental Officer during the recent Campaigns in Portugal and Spain,' 1810. Afterwards he became a well-known character in the sporting world, and published 'Instructions to Young Sportsmen in all that relates to Guns and Shooting.'

HAWKER, ROBERT, D.D., a popular preacher of the 'Evangelical' school, was born at Exeter 1753, and died 6 April, 1827. He wrote some religious biographies and works on divinity.

HAWKESWORTH, JOHN, LL.D., was born in 1715 or 1719, and brought up to the business of a watchmaker. Sir John Hawkins, however, says that he was a clerk to an attorney. He began to write for the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' in which he succeeded Johnson as the compiler of the parliamentary debates. In 1752 he was principally concerned in the 'Adventurer,' a periodical paper, which brought him, through Mr. Duncombe, to the notice of Archbishop Herring, who conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. Elated with this honour, he endeavoured to gain admission into the College of Advocates, but was rejected as not legally qualified. In 1761 he published a popular romance called 'Almorán and Hamet'; and in 1765 he appeared before the public as editor of Swift's Works. In 1768 he published a translation of Telemachus; and, in 1772, had entrusted to him the charge of preparing Captain Cook's first voyage for the press, in which, though he miserably disappointed the public, he enriched himself, and gained £6000 by the work. After this he became a director of the East India Company. Died 17 Nov., 1773. He also wrote some plays and poems.

HAWKINS, HENRY, an English Jesuit, who died at Ghent 18 Aug., 1646, æt. 71. He published an English translation of Floyd's 'Synopsis de Apostasia Marci Antomi de Dominis,' 1617; 'Certaine Selected Epistles of St. Hierome,' 1630; 'Parthenia Sacra, with Verses and Emblems,' 1632; 'Life of St. Aldegunda, from the French of F. Binetti,' 1632; 'Life of St. Elizabeth,' 1632; 'The Lives of Seventeen Holy Confessors, translated from the Italian of F. Peter Mallaus,' 1636.—Oliver.

HAWKINS, SIR JOHN, a naval commander, born at Plymouth about 1520. In 1562 he undertook a voyage to Africa, where he began the slave trade, and for which he received a coat of arms, as the benefactor of his country. In 1573 he was made treasurer of the navy; and in 1588 he was appointed rear-admiral in the Victory, to act against the Spanish Armada, for his conduct on which occasion he was knighted. He died 21 Nov., 1595. His son, Sir Richard Hawkins, distinguished himself also as a naval officer in several voyages to the coast of America; but in 1593 he was taken by the Spaniards on the coast of Peru, and kept in confinement about two years. He died 1622. After his death appeared his 'Observations in a Voyage to the South Sea.'

HAWKINS, SIR JOHN, was born in London 30 March, 1719. He was brought up as a surveyor and builder, but quitted that occupation for the law, which he practised with reputation till 1759. In 1761 he was put into the commission of the peace for Middlesex, and soon after distinguished himself so successfully in resisting a project of the corporation of London, as procured him the honour of being elected chairman of the quarter-sessions. He also gained credit by his conduct in suppressing some riots in 1769, for which he received the honour of knighthood. Sir John was the early friend of Dr. Johnson, and one of the first members of his literary club. He also drew up his will, and was gratefully remembered by that excellent man, whose life he wrote for an edition of his works. Besides this he compiled

HAWKSMOOR.

'The History of Music,' in 5 vols. 4to., and edited 'Walton's Angler,' enriched with curious notes. He was an excellent judge of music, and also fond of the sport so admirably described in the last-mentioned work. Died 21 May, 1789.

HAWKSMOOR, NICHOLAS, an architect, born 1666. He was a pupil of Sir Christopher Wren, after which he became deputy-surveyor of the building of Chelsea College, clerk of the works at Greenwich, and surveyor of the new churches. Some of his structures are egregiously absurd, particularly the steeple of St. George, Bloomsbury. Upon the tower, on the four sides, rises a range of unattached Corinthian pillars and pediments; above is a series of steps with lions and unicorns at the corners guarding the royal arms, and which supports at the apex, on a short column, a statue, in Roman costume, of George I. This steeple provoked the following epigram:—

The people of England made him head of the Church;
But George's good subjects, the Bloomsbury people,
Instead of the Church, made him head of the steeple.'

Hawkmoor died in March, 1736.

HAWKWOOD, SIR JOHN, the first real general, according to Hallam, of modern times, was born about 1324 at Sible Hedingham, Essex, his father being a tanner. Apprenticed to a tailor in London, he volunteered or was impressed for the French war, and from a common archer speedily became captain, being knighted for his prowess at Poitiers. The peace of Bretigny (1360) led him to join the 'late comers,' who ravaged Champagne and Burgundy, and were threatening Avignon, when Pope Innocent VI. induced the marquis of Montferrat to lead them into Italy. Hawkwood served under Pisa, Florence, Milan, and other states, plundering and levying blackmail when unable to find an employer. For his services to the Holy See, which were sullied by the sacking of Faenza, and a cold-blooded massacre at Cesarea, he received some fiefs near Ravenna, on which he settled for a few years, marrying a natural daughter of Barnabo Visconti. From about 1380 he may be regarded as the Florentine commander-in-chief. In 1391 he headed an expedition against Milan, designed to punish the perfidy and curb the ambition of Gian Galeazzo Visconti, Barnabo's nephew, and had arrived within twenty miles of that city, when the unpunctuality of the count of Armagnac, and the bad faith of other auxiliaries whom Florence had engaged, left him apparently, with three rivers in his rear, at the mercy of a superior force, whose general, Verme, sent him a fox in a cage as a type of his position. Hawkwood, however, commenced a retreat, and though the enemy, by piercing the embankments, inundated the route, he succeeded, after great difficulties and privations, in reaching Castelbaldo. This exploit, and Hawkwood's mingled boldness and caution, impetuosity and strategy, are extolled by all contemporary chroniclers, his name being distorted into 'Acuto,' and many other forms. He died 16 March, 1394, and was buried in the cathedral at Florence, where there is still a fresco equestrian portrait of him, painted by Uccelli, but his remains were probably removed to Sible Hedingham. His son, also Sir John, settled in England; but his widow and three daughters remained in the peninsula.

HAWLES, SIR JOHN, a lawyer, born at Salisbury 1645. He received his education at Winchester School, whence he removed to New College, Oxford, and next to Lincoln's Inn. In 1691 he was appointed solicitor-general, which office he held till 1702. He was one of the managers at the trial of Dr. Sacheverel, and died 2 Aug., 1716. He wrote Remarks on the Trials of Fitzharris, Stephen Colledge, &c.; The Magistracy and Government of England vindicated.

HAWTHORNE, NATHANIEL, an American novelist, was born at Salem, Massachusetts, 1804, and died at Plymouth, New Hampshire, 19 May, 1864. His principal works are 'Mosses from an Old Manse'; 'The Scarlet Letter'; 'The House with Seven Gables'; 'The Blithedale Romance'; 'Marble Faun'; 'Transformation'; and 'Our Old Home.'

HAWTREY, EDWARD CRAVEN, D.D., was born at Burnham, Bucks, 7 May, 1789. He was educated at King's College, Cambridge; became headmaster of Eton 1834; provost of Eton 1853; died 27 Jan., 1862.

HAY, EDMUND, a Scotch Jesuit, was rector of Clermont College, in Paris; first rector of the college at Pont-à-Mousson, in Lorraine, and assistant to Claude Aquaviva, the fifth general of the Jesuits. Died 4 Nov., 1591. He was author of 'Contrarietates Calvini.'

HAY, GEORGE, a Catholic prelate, was born at Edinburgh in August, 1729, of Protestant parents. After receiving an excellent general education he chose surgery as his profession, and was pursuing his studies when the Highland army arrived in Edinburgh, in Sept., 1745, just before the victory of Preston. The professor under whom he studied consented to act as principal surgeon to the rebel army, and young Hay accordingly accompanied the Highlanders to England and back as far as Stirling, but after the battle of Falkirk returned to Edinburgh in consequence of bad health. After the battle of Culloden he was confined for three months in the castle of Edinburgh, whence he was conveyed to London, and there committed, along with some others, to the charge of a constable. At this time he was led to consider the subject of the Catholic religion, and after his liberation and consequent return to Edinburgh was admitted into the bosom of the church on the feast of St. Thomas of Canterbury, 1749. He now resolved to enter the Spanish service, in which he might practise freely the religion which in his own country was assailed by penal laws. In the meantime, however, he engaged to serve on board a vessel fitted out for the Mediterranean trade. At Cadiz he became acquainted with an Irish Augustinian friar, to serve whose Mass he went on shore daily; and so moved was he by the friar's devout conversation that he resolved to renounce the world, and consecrate himself to God. Bishop Smith, Vicar Apostolic of the Lowland District of Scotland, on learning this, wrote earnestly, conjuring him to proceed to the Scotch College at Rome, there to prepare himself for the duties of a missionary, instead of burying himself in retirement. Accordingly he went to Rome, and in due course was ordained priest. In 1759 he returned to his native country, and was sent to Preshome, in the Enzie, to relieve Bishop Grant then very infirm. Here he remained eight years, zealously discharging his manifold duties. Bishop Grant named him his coadjutor, and he was accordingly consecrated at Scalán, Banffshire, on Trinity Sunday, 1769, by the title of Bishop of Daulia. In 1779 the mob of Edinburgh attacked the Catholic chapel and the houses of the Catholic inhabitants, who were obliged to fly for their lives. In the midst of these proceedings Bishop Hay arrived from London, and heard among the rioters the most violent threats against himself; but, happily, they were ignorant of his person. He made a timely retreat to London, where, through the good offices of Mr. Burke and other friends in parliament, he obtained some compensation for the sufferers. The death of Bishop Grant, which happened on 3 Dec., 1778, raised Bishop Hay to the apostolic vicariate of the Lowland District. After spending six months in Rome he took up his residence at Scalán, to superintend the cultivation of the farm attached to the seminary, and to teach the young students the elements of literature. He also composed for them small treatises, and made an abridgment of Reid's Inquiry into the Human Mind. After the French Revolution he established a new seminary at Aquhorthies, in Aberdeenshire, 1799. A few years before his death he resigned his bishopric, and died at Aquhorthies 15 Oct., 1811. His extraordinary merit acquired for him during his life-time the respect even of the enemies of his religion; and he has justly been ranked with the most illustrious prelates of the age in which he lived. His principal works are 'Letters on Usury and Interest'; 'The Scripture Doctrine of Miracles Displayed,' 2 vols. 12mo., 1789; 'The Sincere Christian,' 2 vols., 1781 and 1793; 'The Devout Christian,' 2 vols., 1783, a sequel to the preceding; 'The Pious Christian,' being the third part of the two preceding, and in one volume. The last-mentioned work was published at Edinburgh in 1795, with a charming vignette of a pelican feeding her young, subscribed with the motto, 'Impendere et superimpendi.' There is also published under the name of Bishop Hay 'An Inquiry whether Salvation can be had without true faith, and out of the communion of that one only Church established by Christ; with remarks on communicating in religion with those who are separated from the Church of Christ; and a brief Description of Hell,' 18mo., London and Derby, 1856; but this is merely a reprint of the appendix to the second volume of 'The Sincere Christian.' Bishop Hay was, I conjecture, the author of 'An Explication of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass; by G. H. With proper Devotions for assisting at the Same. Taken from Mr. Gother's Second Method,' 12mo., London, 1779. The MS. collections of Bishop Hay form the basis of the 'History of the Catholic Church in Scotland. Edited by the Rev. J. F. S. Gordon, D.D.,' 1869. This work embraces the lives and times of every Vicar Apostolic in Scotland since the extinction of the hierarchy in 1603 down to the date of publication.

HAY, JOHN, a learned Scotchman, entered the society of Jesus at Rome 1566, and died at Pont-à-Mousson 21 May, 1609. He wrote 'Certain Demandes concerning the Christian Religion and Discipline proposed to the Ministers of the new Pretended Kirk of Scotlande,' 1580; 'A Dispute with an anonymous Minister,' 1584; 'A Reply to Beza,' 1588. Short Notes on the Holy Bible. He also translated into Latin the letters of his missionary brethren in Japan and Peru, 8vo., Antwerp, 1605.—Obit.

HAY, WILLIAM, was born at Glenburne, Sussex, 21 Aug., 1695. In 1712 he went to Oxford, but left the university without a degree, and became a student in the Temple. In 1734 he was chosen into Parliament for Seaford, which borough he represented all his life. He defended Walpole's administration, for which he was made a commissioner of the victualling-office, and keeper of the records in the Tower. Died 22 June, 1755. Mr. Hay published—An Essay on Civil Government; Mount Caburn, a poem; Remarks on the Poor Laws; Religio Philosophi; An Essay on Deformity, in which he sports with his own personal defects; a translation of some of Martial's Epigrams.

HAYDN, FRANCIS JOSEPH, a musical composer, was born of low parentage, at Rhorau, in Austria, 1733. At an early age he was received into the choir of the cathedral at Vienna, where he was not only taught to sing, but to play on the harpsichord and violin. On the breaking of his voice he was dismissed from the cathedral, after which he subsisted by teaching music and composition. In 1761 he entered into the service of the Prince Esterhazy, as the director of his music. In 1791 he came to England, and while here was created doctor in music at Oxford, and published several of his works. In 1796 he returned to Germany, after which he composed his sublime oratorio of the 'Creation,' and the 'Seasons.' Died 31 May, 1809. His works are very numerous, and highly valued.

HAYDN, JOSEPH, an industrious literary compiler, died in London (very poor, of course) 17 Jan., 1856. His works are—'The Dictionary of Dates,' originally published in 1841; and 'The Book of Dignities,' 1851.

HAYDON, BENJAMIN ROBERT, an historical painter, born at Plymouth 25 Jan., 1786. He studied at the Royal Academy, where Wilkie and Jackson were his fellow-pupils. His reputation was established by his picture of 'Dentatus,' but the circumstance of its being badly placed in the exhibition led to a quarrel between him and the hanging committee, and from this time forward he was constantly engaged in disputes with his brother artists. Though he produced at short intervals works of very considerable merit, he was always in pecuniary difficulties, nor did the lectures which he delivered on art have the desired effect of replenishing his purse. Several times he was imprisoned for debt, and his disappointment at finding there was no likelihood of his ambitious expectations being fulfilled led him to destroy his life 22 June, 1846. His principal paintings are 'The Mock Election;' 'Pharaoh and Moses;' 'Judgment of Solomon;' 'Christ's Entry into Jerusalem;' 'Christ Rejected;' 'Christ's Agony in the Garden.' He was the author of 'Lectures on Painting and Design,' and the article 'Painting' in the Encyclopædia Britannica.

HAYE, JEAN DE LA, a friar of the order of St Francis, was born in 1593 at Paris, and died there in 1661. His works are—Biblia Magna, 5 vols. folio; Biblia Maxima, 19 vols. folio. He is to be distinguished from Jean de la Hays, a Jesuit, who died in 1614. He was the author of an Evangelical Harmony.

collect friar, who displayed his zeal and learning by his able works on the Immortality of the Soul, and the Existence of God. Born 1708; died 16 July, 1780.

HAYES, CHARLES, a mathematician, born 1678. He was a member of Gray's Inn, and for many years had the chief direction of the African company. Died 18 Dec., 1760. His works are—A Treatise on Fluxions, 1704; A new and easy Method to find out the Longitude; The Moon, a philosophical dialogue; Vindication of the History of the Septuagint; Critical examination of the Holy Gospels, according to St. Matthew and St. Luke, with regard to the birth and infancy of Jesus Christ; Dissertation on the Chronology of the Septuagint; Chronographiæ Asiaticæ et Egyptiæ Specimen.

HAYES, WILLIAM, Mus.D., was born 1708. He was originally organist of St. Mary's, Shrewsbury, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in music, and was elected professor in that faculty. He published a collection of English ballads; but is best known by his church compositions and catches. He defended Handel against Avison, in a pamphlet written with some asperity. Dr. Hayes died 27 July, 1777. His son, Dr. Philip Hayes, took his degree of doctor in music the same year that his father died, whom he succeeded in the professorship. He died suddenly 19 March, 1797.

HAYLEY, WILLIAM, a poet and miscellaneous writer, born 9 Nov., 1745, at Chichester, of which cathedral his grandfather was dean. He received his education, first at the school of Kingston-upon-Thames, and next at Eton, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge. On leaving the university, he retired to his estate of Earham, Sussex, where he resided till the loss of his son, about 1800, so afflicted him that he removed to Felpham. Died 12 Nov., 1820. His principal poems are—'An Essay on Painting;' 'An Essay on History;' 'An Essay on Epic Poetry;' 'The Triumphs of Temper.' An edition of these, with other poems and plays, was printed in 6 vols. 8vo. His principal prose works are 'An Essay on Old Maids,' 3 vols., and the Lives of Milton, Cowper, and Romney the painter.

HAYM, NICHOLAS FRANCIS, a musical professor, of Rome, who came to England at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and attempted to establish an Italian opera, but with indifferent success. He also tried other schemes, among which was the publication of 'Il Tesoro Britannico,' 2 vols. 4to., or a description of coins, gems, &c., in English cabinets. His best work is entitled 'Notizia de libri rari nella Lingua Italiana,' 2 vols. He was likewise the author of two tragedies, 'La Merope,' and 'La Demodice.' Died March, 1730.

HAYMAN, FRANCIS, a painter, born at Exeter 1708. He visited London early in life, and was employed in painting scenes for Drury Lane Theatre. Afterwards he executed some pictures from Shakspeare for Vauxhall Gardens; and he also furnished drawings for the illustration of several works, as Milton, Don Quixote, Pope's works, &c. He became a member and librarian of the Royal Academy, and died 2 Feb., 1776.

HAYNE, THOMAS, was born at Thrusington in Leicestershire in 1581. He took his degrees in arts at Lincoln College, Oxford, after which he became one of the ushers at Christ's Hospital, where he died 27 July, 1645. He endowed a school at Thrusington, and founded two scholarships in Lincoln College. His works are—Grammatices Latinæ compeadium; Linguarum cognatio, seu de linguis in genere; Pax in terra; The equal Ways of God in rectifying the unequal Ways of Man; General View of the Holy Scriptures; Life of Martin Luther.

HAYNES, HOPTON, assay-master of the Mint, and tally-writer of the Exchequer was born 1672, and died 19 Nov., 1749. He published 'A brief Enquiry relating to the Right of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, and the Privileges of his Servants within the Tower.' After his death appeared a Socinian work, entitled 'The Scripture Account of the Attributes and Worship of God, and of the Character and Offices of Jesus Christ.' His son, Samuel Haynes, was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of D.D. 1748. He became tutor to the earl of Salisbury, who gave him the living of Hatfield in Hertfordshire, and the rectory of Clotthel. He also obtained a canonry of Windsor, and died 6 June, 1752. He published 'A Collection of State Papers,' transcribed from the Cecil MSS.

HAYWARD, SIR JOHN, LL.D., an historical writer, was educated at Cambridge. In 1599 he published 'The first Part of the Life and Reign of Henry IV.,' for which he was thrown into prison, on account of some positions in the work about the succession to the crown. James I. appointed him one of the historians of Chelsea College, and, in 1619, conferred on him the honour of knighthood. Died 27 June, 1627. His other works are—'The Lives of the three Norman Kings of England; On Supremacie in Affairs of Religion; The Life and Reign of Edward VI., with the beginning of the Reign of Elizabeth; The Sanctuarie of a troubled Soul; David's Tears, or an Exposition of the Penitential Psalms; Christ's Prayer on the Cross.

HAYWOOD, ELIZABETH, the ingenious author of the Female Spectator, and other works of a similar kind, was born in London 1693, and died 1756.

HAZLITT, WILLIAM, was born at Maidstone 10 April, 1778, being the son of a Unitarian minister. He was himself educated for the ministry at Hackney, but leaving the college he determined to become a painter. This pursuit he also abandoned after a short time, and then took to literature as a profession. He first became known in 1805, by his essay on 'The Principles of Human Action.' He afterwards wrote much for newspapers and magazines, besides composing books and delivering popular lectures. Died in London 18 Sept., 1830. His chief works are—'Characters of Shakspeare's Plays;' 'A View of the English Stage;' 'Lectures on the English Poets;' 'Lectures on the English Comic Writers;' 'Table Talk,' 2 vols.; 'Lectures on the Literature of the Elizabethan Age;' 'Life of Napoleon Bonaparte,' 4 vols. His 'Literary Remains' appeared in 1836.

HEAD, SIR EDMUND WALKER, son of the Rev. Sir John Head, bart., was born near Maidstone, Kent, 1805. After having been at Winchester School, he proceeded to Oriel College, Oxford, where in 1827 he was first class in classics. He was subsequently elected a fellow of Merton College, and took his degree of M.A. in 1830. In 1838, on the death of his father, he succeeded to the baronetcy. About this time he became an assistant poor law commissioner, and in 1841 he was appointed one of the three poor law commissioners. That office he resigned 1847, when he was appointed lieutenant-governor of the British colony of New Brunswick. He was made governor-general of Canada 1854, with a salary of 7,000*l.* He resigned that important post 1861; and died in London 28 Jan., 1868. Sir Edmund made for himself a respectable position in literature. The article 'Painting' in the Penny Cyclopaedia was from his pen, and he afterwards wrote a 'Handbook of the Spanish and French Schools of Painting,' intended as a sequel to Kugler's 'Handbook of the Italian, German, and Dutch Schools of Painting.' He also edited a book on painting, partly translated from the German of Kugler. In 1856 he published a little work, entitled 'Shall and Will,' in which some questions bearing upon English grammar were discussed.

HEAD, Sir George, deputy knight-marshal to her majesty, died in London 2 May, 1855, aged 73. He was for a great number of years connected with the commissariat department of the army, and in that capacity rendered such good service to the state that he was honoured with knighthood in 1831. He wrote 'Forest Scenery and Incidents in the Wilds of North America'; 'A Home Tour'; 'Rome, a Tour of many days'; articles in the Quarterly Review; and translations of 'Historical Memoirs of Cardinal Pacca,' and of the 'Metamorphoses of Apuleius.'

HEAD, RICHARD, an Irishman, who was for some time a member of the university of Oxford, but afterwards a bookseller in London. He was drowned in crossing to the Isle of Wight 1678. He wrote 'Proteus Redivivus; or, the Art of Wheedling or Insinuation'; 'The English Rogue'; 'Hic et Ubique; or, the Humours of Dublin, a comedy'; and other pieces of a similar kind.

HEADLEY, HENRY, a poet and critic, born at Instead, Norfolk, 1766. He was educated at Oxford, and died of a decline at Norwich in Nov., 1788. He published a volume of Poems; and 'Select Beauties of ancient English Poetry.' He also wrote papers in the Olla Podrida; and 'Lucubrations of Abel Slug.'

HEAPHY, THOMAS, an English water-colour painter, born 1775; died 23 Oct., 1835.

HEARNE, SAMUEL, a traveller, born in London 1745. After serving in the navy as a midshipman, he engaged in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company, who sent him on an expedition for the discovery of a north-west passage. The particulars of this expedition were given to the public in 'A Journey from the Prince of Wales's Fort in Hudson's Bay to the Northern Ocean, from 1769 to 1772,' 4to., 1797. Died Nov., 1792.

HEARNE, THOMAS, an eminent antiquary, born 1678, at White Waltham, Berks, of which parish his father was clerk and schoolmaster. Young Hearne's diligence attracting the notice of Mr. Cherry, of Shottesbrooke, that gentleman became his instructor, and sent him to Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of master of arts, and devoted himself to ancient MSS. In 1701 he was appointed assistant to Dr. Hudson, the Bodleian librarian, and he improved and enlarged Dr. Hyde's catalogue of that noble collection. In 1715 he was elected archiepigraphus, and esquire beadle of civil law; but these places he soon afterwards resigned, on account of his scruples in regard to the oaths of allegiance. He continued, however, to reside in Edmund Hall till his death, which happened 10 June, 1735. His principal works are—Ductor Historicus, 2 vols.; an edition of Justin; another of Eutropius; Livy, 8 vols.; Spelman's Life of Alfred; The Itinerary of Leland, 9 vols.; Lelandi de rebus Britannicis collectanea, 6 vols.; Acta Apostolorum Græco-Latina; Aluredi Beverlaccensis annales; Gul. Camdeni Annales, 3 vols.; A collection of curious Discourses, written by eminent Antiquaries; Textus Roffensis; The History and Antiquities of Glastonbury; Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, 2 vols.; Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, 2 vols.; Liber Niger Scaccarii, 2 vols.

HEARNE, THOMAS, F.S.A., a painter in water-colours, born at Binkworth, Wilts, 1744; died 1817. He executed the drawings for 'The Antiquities of Great Britain,' 2 vols. oblong fono, Lond., 1786-1807.

HEATH, BENJAMIN, a lawyer, was born at Exeter, and educated at the grammar-school there; after which he was articled to an attorney, and subsequently became town-clerk of his native city. He acquired great popularity by his exertions against the cyder-tax in 1763, for which the gentlemen of the county voted him a piece of plate. Previous to this he was created doctor of laws by the university of Oxford. He died 13 Sept., 1766. His works are—An Essay towards a demonstrative Proof of the Divine Existence, Unity, and Attributes; The Case of the County of Devon, with respect to the Consequences of the Excise duty on Cyder and Perry; Notæ, sive Lectiones ad Tragœorum Græcorum Veterum Æschyli, &c.; A revival of Shakspeare's Text. His brother, Thomas Heath, was alderman of Exeter, and published 'An Essay towards a new Version of the Book of Job,' 1755. He was father of John Heath, esq., a justice of the court of Common Pleas, who died in 1815; and of the Rev. Dr. Heath, master of Eton School.

HEATH, HENRY, was born at Peterborough 1600, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. Turning Catholic, he went to Flanders and entered among the English Franciscans at Douay. In religion he took the name of Paulus de Sancta Magdalena. Coming on the English mission, he was condemned to death on account of his priestly character, and executed at Tyburn 27 April, 1643. He was author of 'Soliloquies and Documents of Christian Perfection,' 12mo., Douay, 1674.

HEATH, JAMES, an historian, was born in London 1629, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, from whence he was ejected for his loyalty 1648. He then turned author for a subsistence, and published among other things a 'Chronicle of the late intestine War.' Died Aug., 1664.

HEATH, JAMES, an English engraver, born about 1766; died in London 15 Nov., 1834. His son, Charles Heath, who died 18 Nov., 1848, aged 63, was eminent as a line engraver and well known by the 'Books of Beauty' which bear his name, and the costly annuals which he conducted.

HEATHCOTE, RALPH, D.D., was born in Leicestershire 16 Dec., 1721, and educated at Cambridge. He became rector of Sawtry-All-Saints, Huntingdonshire, and vicar-general of the collegiate church of Southwell. Died 28 May, 1795. He wrote a treatise against the Hutchinsonians; 'A Sketch of Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophy'; 'Sylva, or the Wood,' a collection of anecdotes; and other works.

HEATHFIELD.

HEATHFIELD, GEORGE AUGUSTUS ELIOTT, LORD, a distinguished British general, born at Stobbs, Roxburghshire, Scotland, 1718. He studied at Edinburgh, and afterwards at Leyden. His knowledge of tactics was acquired in the celebrated school at La Pere. Having entered the army, he attained the rank of lieutenant-colonel, accompanied George II. to Germany in 1743 as aide-de-camp, and was wounded in the battle of Dettingen. In the Seven Years' War, he distinguished himself in 1757 under the duke of Cumberland and Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick. In 1775, being then a lieutenant-general, he was appointed to the government of Gibraltar. His memorable defence of that important fortress against the combined efforts of France and Spain was the last exploit of his life. After the peace he was created a peer, by the title of Lord Heathfield. His lordship died at Kalkofen, near Aix-la-Chapelle, whither he had gone for the benefit of the waters, 6 July, 1790. His portrait, one of Reynolds's best, is in the National Gallery.

HEBBEL, FREDERICK, a German poet, born 18 March, 1813; died Dec., 1863.

HEBENSTREIT, JOHN ERNEST, a learned physician of Leipzig, where he died 5 Dec., 1757, aged 54. His brother, John Christian Hebenstreit (b. 1686; d. 1750), was professor of divinity and Hebrew at Leipzig.

HEBER, REGINALD, a prelate of the Anglican communion, was born 21 April, 1783, at Malpas, Cheshire, of which parish his father, the Rev. Reginald Heber, was for many years co-rector. After pursuing his studies with brilliant success at the university of Oxford, he travelled in Germany, the Crimea, and Russia. He was appointed in 1823 bishop of Calcutta; and died at Trichinopoly 3 April, 1826. His principal works are: Poems and Translations, 1812; 'The Personality and Office of the Christian Comforter asserted and explained,' being the Bampton Lectures for 1815; Life of Jeremy Taylor, 2 vols., 1824; Hymns written and adapted to the Weekly Church Service of the Year, 1827; Narrative of a Journey through the Upper Provinces of India, from Calcutta to Bombay, 2 vols., 1828; 'Sermons preached in India,' 1829; 'Sermons preached in England,' 1829; 'Parish Sermons,' 3 vols., 1837. His 'Life and Unpublished Works' were published by his widow, in 2 vols., 1830.

HEBER, RICHARD, half-brother to the bishop of Calcutta, was born in London 1773, and educated at Oxford. His taste for collecting rare and curious books manifested itself at an early age, and as he came into a large fortune on his father's decease, he was enabled to gratify it to the fullest extent. He sat in the House of Commons for a short time; but soon abandoned politics in order to devote his undivided attention to his favourite pursuit. In addition to the enormous number of books which he amassed in this country, he formed immense collections at the Hague, Antwerp, Louvain, Brussels, Paris, and other continental cities. He died 4 Oct., 1833, at his house in Piccadilly, which, like his country residence at Hodnet, Shropshire, and another house in York Street, Westminster, was filled with books from top to bottom. His English collections, exclusive of the library at Hodnet, were disposed of in seven successive sales, which altogether lasted 144 days.

HEBERDEN, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., a physician, born in London 1710. He received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship. In 1739 he proceeded to his degrees in physic, and practised with reputation in the university about ten years, during which time he read a course of lectures in his college. In 1746 he became a fellow of the College of Physicians, and, in 1749, a fellow of the Royal Society. He now settled in London; and, in 1766, recommended to the college the plan of the 'Medical Transactions,' to which he was a contributor, as he also was to the Philosophical Transactions. In 1778 the Royal Society of Medicine at Paris chose him an associate. He died 17 May, 1801. He published 'Antithenaca; an Essay on Mithridatium et Theriaca;' and after his death appeared 'Gulielmi Heberdeni Commentarii de Morborum Historia et Curatione.' He was one of the writers of the Athenian Letters, and communicated notes to Gray's Hudibras.

HECHT, CHRISTIAN, a learned divine of Essau, in East Priesland, who died 1748, aged 52. He is to be distinguished from Goffrey Hecht, rector of the college of Lucca, and author of 'Germania Sacra et Literaria,' &c. The latter died 1721.

HECQUET, PHILIPPE, a French physician, who was a great advocate for the use of warm water and bleeding, and who in consequence was ridiculed by Le Sage in his novel of Gil Blas, under the name of Dr. Sangrado. He was, however, a man of skill and piety. He wrote several medical books. Born 1661; died 11 April, 1737.

HEDELIN, FRANÇOIS, a French ecclesiastic, and abbe of Aubignac and Meimac, was born at Paris 1604, and died 27 July, 1676. He wrote a tragedy called Zenobie, and some romances.

HEDERICUS, or HEDERICH, BENJAMIN, a lexicographer and classical editor, born at Hain, in Misnia, 1675; died 18 July, 1748.

HEDLINGER, JOHN CHARLES, a Swiss engraver of medals, born 1691; died at Stockholm 14 March, 1771.

HEDWIG, JOHN, was born at Cronstadt, in Transylvania, 1730, and became professor of physic and botany at Leipzig, where he died 17 Feb., 1799. His greatest work is the Cryptogamia, 4 vols. folio, 1707.

HEEMSKERCK. See HEMSKERCK.

HEERBRAND, JAMES, a Protestant divine, born at Nuremberg 1521, became professor of theology at Tübingen, where he died 1600, leaving a 'Compendium of Theology' in Latin, and other works.

HEERE, LUCAS VAN, a painter of Ghent, born 1534; died 29 April, 1584. He resided for a time in this country, where he painted the portraits of several persons of distinction, particularly Lady Jane Grey, and Henry Darnley, the husband of Mary, queen of Scots.

HEEREN, ARNOLD HERMANN LUDWIG, an historian, born at Arberg, near Bremen, 25 Oct., 1760; died at Göttingen 7 March, 1842. His taste for philological and historical studies was acquired in the society of Heyne, whose daughter he married. The first work he gave to the world was a learned edition of Menander 'De Encomiis,' which was followed by another of the 'Eclogæ' of Stobæus. From the year 1789 he gave lectures at Göttingen as professor extraordinary, and in 1799 he was nominated professor of history in that university. He received from the king of Hanover the title of aulic counsellor, and was elected an associate of the Institute of France. His principal works are—'Ideas on the Policy and Commerce of the most distinguished Nations of Antiquity'; 'Historical Manual of the Political System of the States of Europe'; 'Manual of Ancient History'; 'History of the Study of Classical Literature since the Renaissance'; 'Essay on the Influence of the Crusades.' All his works which have been translated into English were published in a collected form at London, in seven octavo volumes.

HEERKENS, GERARD NICHOLAS, a physician and Latin poet, born at Groningen 1728; died 1801.

HEGEL, GEORGE WILLIAM FREDERICK, one of the celebrated philosophers of the German school, was born at Stuttgart 27 Aug., 1770, and died at Berlin 14 Nov., 1831. In 1805 he was appointed professor-extraordinary at Jena, and he afterwards became professor successively at the universities of Heidelberg and Berlin. Hegel pushed to their extreme consequences the philosophical doctrines inaugurated by Kant, and he was certainly the boldest and most brilliant champion of the doctrines of modern rationalism. We must, however, be excused from giving a succinct account of his system, as Hegel himself declared that to be an impossibility. His works form a collection of seventeen octavo volumes. The best known are—'Difference between the Systems of Fichte and Schelling'; 'Phenomenology of the Mind'; 'History of Philosophy'; 'Philosophy of History'; 'Philosophy of Religion.'

HEGESIPPUS, an ecclesiastical historian, who died at Rome A.D. 190.

HEIBERG, PETER ANDREW, a Danish poet and political writer, born at Vordingborg 1758; died at Paris 30 April, 1841.

HEIDANUS, ABRAHAM, professor of theology at Leyden, and author of 'A System of Divinity,' &c., was born 1597; and died 15 Oct., 1678. He was the intimate friend of Des Cartes.

HEIDEGGER, JOHN HENRY, a Protestant divine, born near Zurich 1 July, 1633. He taught Hebrew and philosophy at Heidelberg, afterwards theology and ecclesiastical history at Steinfurt, and lastly, morality and theology at Zurich, where he died 18 Jan., 1698, leaving several works.

HEIDEGGER, JOHN JAMES, a native of Zurich, who came to England in 1708. By his address and ingenuity he became the 'arbiter elegantiarum' to the court, and manager of the Opera House, by which means he contrived to gain 5,000*l.* a-year. He was a man of good humour and liberality. Died 4 Sept., 1749, aged 90.

HEIGHAM, JOHN, an English gentleman of a liberal education, who for the most part lived abroad, and employed much of his time in translating books of piety from the Spanish. He also composed some original works, among which are—'Meditations upon the Mysteries of our Holy Faith,' St. Omer, 1619; and 'An Exposition of the Mass, with all the Rites and Ceremonies,' 8vo., St. Omer, 1622.

HEINE, HENRY, an author, distinguished both in German and French literature, was born at Düsseldorf, of Israelite parents 12 Dec., 1797, and died at Paris 17 Feb., 1856. He abjured the Jewish religion for Lutheranism, and after residing at Hamburg, Berlin, and Munich, settled in the French capital 1830. His first literary attempt was a volume of lyric poetry, and he next brought out in Germany two tragedies—'Almanzor,' and 'Radcliff'—with but slight success. In 1826 he published his 'Reisebilder' (Sketches of Travel), which commenced his reputation, and in 1827 his 'Lieder,' or 'Songs,' which were received with enthusiasm by the youth of Germany. In 1830 and the following years, he contributed to the 'Revue des Deux Mondes' a series of interesting articles on the fine arts, and also published in the French language several works—viz., 'Atta-Troll,' 'Lazarc,' 'Lutece'—so admirably composed that no one would suspect them to be from a foreigner's pen. Though tormented with a painful spinal complaint for eight years preceding his death, he continued to maintain the vivacity of his mind. An original, Heine united the enthusiasm of the lyric poet to the irony of the humourist. He presents a singular mixture of sadness and gaiety, of delicacy and cynicism, of passion and insensibility. What he was deficient in was faith in any idea, religious or philosophical. He jeered at all creeds, and even made a display of atheism. Michel Lévy published Heine's Complete Works (1856-57).

HEINECCIUS, JOHN GOTTLIEB, a learned jurist born at Eisenberg 1681. He became professor of philosophy at Halle 1710, and, in 1721, exchanged that for the chair of law, with the title of counsellor. In 1724 he removed to Frankfort-upon-the-Oder, but returned to Halle in 1733, and died there 31 Aug., 1741. His works on law, morals, and antiquities, were published at Geneva in 1744, in 8 vols. 4to. His brother, John Michael Heineccius, died in 1722, at Goslar, of which church he was deacon. He wrote the History and Antiquities of Goslar, and a View of the Greek Church.

HEINECKEN, CHRISTIAN HENRY, a wonderful child, born 6 Feb., 1721, at Lubeck, where he died 27 June, 1725. He is said to have been acquainted with the history of the Bible at the age of fourteen months. At the time of his death he was versed in ecclesiastical history, and several of the Latin classics, the history of modern Europe, and spoke German, Latin, French, and Dutch.

HEINSE, JOHN JAMES WILLIAM, a German poet, romancist, and miscellaneous writer, born at Langewiesen in the principality of Schwartzburg-Sondershausen 16 Feb., 1749; died at Mentz 22 July, 1803.

HEINSIUS, ANTHONY, a Dutch statesman, born about 1641; died at the Hague 13 Aug., 1729. He was in the service of William of Orange, and was a negotiator in France, against which power he afterwards directed all the energies of his country. During the forty years that he was grand pensionary of Holland he displayed great vigour of mind, but in carrying out his views of humbling Louis XIV. he brought immense debts upon Holland, so that the people witnessed with joy his retirement from power.

HEINSIUS, DANIEL, was born at Ghent 1580. Being sent to Leyden, he had Joseph Scaliger for his tutor, and at eighteen years of age he was made Greek professor. In 1600 he published his edition of Silius Italicus, with learned notes, to which he gave the title of 'Crepundia Siliana.' He afterwards became librarian to the university, and professor of politics and history. Died 25 Feb., 1655. Heinsius published several editions of classic authors; also two treatises—'De Satira Horatiana'; poems, and prose works, some of which were satirical, as the 'Laus Asini,' 'Laus Pediculi,' &c. He received many marks of respect from foreign princes, and was created a knight of St. Mark by the republic of Venice.

HEINSIUS, NICHOLAS, son of the preceding, was born at Leyden July, 1620. Though employed in state affairs, he devoted much of his time to the muses, and edited several classic authors, Virgil, Ovid, Valerius Flaccus, Claudian, &c. He died at the Hague 7 Oct., 1681.

HEISTER, LAURENCE, a native of Frankfort-on-the-Maine, became professor of anatomy and surgery at Al'orf, from whence he removed to Helmstadt, where he died 18 April, 1758, aged 75. He was author of 'Compendium Anatomicum;' 'Institutions of Surgery;' and some botanical works, in which he severely attacked the system of Linnaeus.

HELE, THOMAS, a native of Gloucestershire, who entered the army, and served in Jamaica till the peace of 1763. After this he travelled through Italy, and in 1770 settled at Paris. He wrote some plays in French which were received with great applause in the Paris theatres. His comedies are full of plot, lively, and interesting, and the dialogue is expressed with neatness and elegance. He died at Paris Dec., 1780, aged about 40.

HELENA (ST.), wife of the Emperor Valerius Constantius, and mother of Constantine the Great, was divorced in 291 by her husband, who married Theodora, daughter-in-law of Maximilian Hercules. When Constantine succeeded to the empire, Helena had great influence, but she employed it only for the good of the church, and the relief of the poor. She visited the Holy Land about 326, and the real cross was found, which, with the instruments of the passion, had been buried on Mount Calvary. The virtuous Helena died 18 Aug., 327, aged 80.

HELIODORUS, bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, in the fourth century, wrote in his youth a romance called 'Ethiopia, or the amours of Theagenes and Chariclea,' which has been translated into English and most other European languages.

HELOGABALUS was chosen emperor of Rome 218, when only fourteen years old. He associated to himself in the government his grandmother Moesa, and his mother Sæmia, and chose a senate of women, over whom the latter presided. He afterwards fell into every kind of cruelty and debauchery, raising his horse to the consular dignity, and causing divine honours to be paid to himself. He was assassinated in 222.

HELL, MAXIMILIAN, a Jesuit, born 15 May, 1720, at Schemnitz, in Hungary. He applied himself to the mathematics with great diligence, and became assistant in the observatory belonging to his order at Vienna; but, in 1746, he taught Greek and Latin in the school of Leutschau. In 1750 he published 'Adjumentum memoriae manuale Chronologico-genealogico-historicum,' which has been translated into various languages. In 1752 he was ordained priest, and became professor of mathematics at Clausenburg, where he published his 'Elementa Arithmetica;' soon after which he was recalled to Vienna, to be astronomer and director of the new observatory. At the desire of the king of Denmark, he went to observe the transit of Venus in 1760, on an island in the Frozen Ocean; after which he became a member of the Academy of Sciences at Copenhagen. He was next employed to superintend the building of an observatory at Erlau, founded by Bishop Esterhazy. This able astronomer died 14 April, 1792.

HELLANICUS, of Mitylene, a Greek historian, born B.C. 490.

HELLOT, JEAN, a French chemist, born at Paris 20 Nov., 1085; died 15 Feb., 1766.

HELMBREKER, THEODORE, a painter of history and landscape, born at Haarlem 1624; died at Rome 1694.

HELMERS, JOHN FREDERICK, a Dutch poet, born at Amsterdam 1707; died 26 Feb., 1813.

HELMONT, JOHN BAPTIST VAN, a nobleman of Brabant, born at Brussels 1577. He studied at Louvain, where he ran through various sciences, according to his own account, and at last pitched upon medicine and chemistry, in which last he made some important discoveries, particularly of the gases. He was much attached to Paracelsus, and a great enthusiast. He died 30 Dec., 1644. His works were published 1652, at Amsterdam. His son, Francis Mercurius van Helmont, born 1618, was as great a visionary as his father. He lived many years in England, where he turned Quaker, and resided with Lady Conway, who also had embraced the tenets of that sect. After her death he went to Germany, and died at Cologne 1699. His works are wholly mystical.

HELOISE. See ABAILARD.

HELISHAM, RICHARD, M.D., professor of medicine and natural philosophy in Trinity College, Dublin, where he died 1 Aug., 1738. He was the intimate friend and correspondent of Swift. After his death appeared his Lectures on Natural Philosophy, under the editorship of Dr. Bryan Robinson.

HELST, BARTHOLOMEW VANDER, a painter, born at Haarlem 1613; died 1670.

HELVETIUS, ADRIAN, a Dutch physician, born about 1661, being the son of John Frederick Helvetius, mentioned below. He was by accident at Paris when a violent dysentery prevailed there, and his remedies proved so successful that Louis XIV. presented him with 1000 louis d'or for the discovery of his potent medicine, which he declared to be ipecacuanha. Settling in Paris, he became physician to the duke of Orleans, and inspector-general of the military hospitals. Died 20 Feb., 1727.

HELVETIUS, CLAUDE ADRIEN, son of Jean Claude Adrien Helvetius, was born at Paris Jan., 1715. He studied in the college of Louis the Great, and discovered early proofs of genius; though he did not publish anything till 1758, when his celebrated book, entitled 'De l'Esprit,' came out, in one volume quarto. This work made a great noise, and was condemned by the parliament of Paris; but the biographers of Helvetius have passed over in silence his remarkable retractation of the principles contained in it. Notwithstanding this confession, he persisted in the publication, and, to avoid the consequences, came to England in 1764. From hence he went to Prussia, where he was well received by Frederick, whose court was always open to men of this description. Helvetius, on his return to France, led a retired life in the country, though he was appointed maître d'hôtel to the queen, and for some time discharged the office of farmer-general. Died 20 Dec., 1771. His other works are 'Le Bonheur,' or Happiness, a poem, published after his death; 'De l'Homme,' 2 vols. His hypothesis is materialism in the worst sense.

HELVETIUS, JEAN CLAUDE ADRIEN, son of

HELVETIUS.

Adrian Helvetius, was born at Paris 18 July, 1685, and died 17 July, 1755, leaving several medical works. He was physician to Louis XIV. and Louis XV.

HELVETIUS, JOHN FREDERICK, a physician and alchemist, who practised with great reputation at the Hague, where he was physician to the prince of Orange. His works are full of visionary conceits. Born about 1625; died 29 Aug., 1709.

HELVICUS, CHRISTOPHER, a German philologist and Latin poet, born near Frankfurt 26 Dec., 1581. He taught Greek and Hebrew at Giessen, and died 10 Sept., 1617.

HELYOT, PIERRE, Father Hippolyte, a friar of the third order of St. Francis, was born at Paris 1660, and died at Picpus, near that capital, 5 Jan., 1716. Besides 'The Dying Christian,' and other works of piety, Helyot wrote an admirable 'History of the Monastic, Religious, and Military Orders.'

HEMANS, FELICIA DOROTHEA, a poetess, born at Liverpool 25 Sept., 1794; died near Dublin 12 May, 1835. Her father, a merchant, named Browne, was a native of Ireland; but on her mother's side she was of Venetian descent. In 1812 she became the wife of Captain Hemans, by whom she had five sons; but in 1818 she and her husband separated. She now retired to Wales, and devoted herself to literary pursuits. Her chief works are 'Tales and Historic Scenes,' 'Modern Greece,' 'Dartmoor,' a poem; 'The Sceptic,' 'Siege of Valencia'; 'Songs of the Cid'; 'Lays of Many Lands'; 'Dramatic Scenes'; 'Forest Sanctuary'; 'Records of Women'; 'Songs of the Affections'; 'The Vespers of Palermo,' a play. There have been several collected editions of her Poems.

HEMELAR, JOHN, a learned canon of Antwerp, was born at the Hague, and died 1640, leaving Latin poems and orations, and commentaries upon the medals of the Roman emperors, from Julius Cæsar to Justinian.

HEMLING, or MEMLING, HANS, a celebrated painter, born in or near Bruges, in West Flanders, between 1425 and 1435; died, probably in Spain, shortly subsequent to 1500. According to Kugler, he was the scholar of Roger of Bruges, and one of the best artists of the school of Van Eyck. He is supposed to have visited Italy and Germany in middle life, and is said to have served Charles the Bold, of Burgundy, in the twofold capacity of painter and soldier. After the battles of Granson and Morat (1476), in which he followed the fortunes of his patron, he gained admittance into the Hospital of St. John at Bruges, penniless and disabled by wounds, and out of gratitude for the care bestowed upon him painted for the institution some of his finest works. Two of these, altarpieces with wings, are inscribed with his name and the date of the year, 1479. In the hospital is also preserved the celebrated reliquary of St. Ursula, a shrine about four feet in length, on the larger sides of which, in six compartments, is painted the history of the saint. These pictures are among the most interesting productions of the Flemish school.

HEMMINGFORD, WALTER DE, an English chronicler, whose work extends from 1066 to 1308. He was an ecclesiastic in Guisborough Abbey, Yorkshire, and died 1347.

HEMSKERCK, EGBERT, The Old, a Dutch painter, born about 1610; died about 1680. Egbert Hemskerck the younger was born at Haarlem 1645, and died in London 1704. They both painted fanciful subjects, such as enchantments, the interiors of alehouses, monkeys in grotesque actions, and revellers.

HEMSKERCK, JAMES VAN, a Dutch admiral, was a native of Amsterdam. In 1596 he sailed with Barentien to discover a north-east passage to Asia, in which voyage the commander died, but Hemskerck brought back the ships safe to Holland. In 1607 he was made vice-admiral, and sent against the Spaniards in the Mediterranean, where he defeated a superior force, and took the Spanish admiral, Don Juan Alvarez Davila; but Hemskerck was slain in the action 25 April, 1607.

HEMSKERCK, MARTIN VAN, a Dutch painter, born 1498; died at Haarlem 1574.

HEMSTERHUY, TIBERIUS, was born at Groningen 1 Feb., 1685, and at the age of nineteen was appointed professor of mathematics and philosophy at Amsterdam. In 1717 he became professor of Greek at Franeker, to which was added the professorship of history. He afterwards filled the same offices at Leyden, where he died 7 April, 1766. He published the last three books of Julius Pollux's Onomasticon; the Works of Lucian; the Plutus of Aristophanes; and other esteemed works.

HENAO, GABRIEL DE, a Spanish Jesuit, rector of the university of Salamanca, wrote 'Biscaya Illustrata,' and a number of works on scholastic theology, comprised in 11 folio volumes. Born 1611; died Feb., 1704.

HÉNAULT, CHARLES JEAN FRANÇOIS, an historian, born at Paris 8 Feb., 1685; died 24 Nov., 1770. He was president of the parliament of Paris, superintendent of the finances of the queen's household, and a member of the French Academy. He wrote some dramatic pieces; but it is the 'Chronological Abridgment of the History of France' which constitutes his title to celebrity. This useful work was translated into English by T. Nugent, 2 vols. 8vo., 1702.

HÉNAULT, JEAN, a French poet, who died at Paris 1682.

HENCKEL, JOHN FREDERICK, a chemist and mineralogist, born at Friburg, in Misnia, 1679; died 26 Jan., 1744. His 'Pyritologia, or History of the Pyrites,' has been translated into English.

HENDERSON, ALEXANDER, a Scotch Presbyterian divine, born 1583, was at the head of his party on account of his learning and eloquence. He was sent to England as a penitentiary, and when Charles I. was at Newcastle, in 1646, he engaged in a dispute with him about episcopacy. He died soon after his return to Edinburgh, 19 Aug., 1646.

HENDERSON, EBENEZER, D.D., was born at Dunfermline 17 Nov., 1784, and entered the Independent ministry. After acting for many years as agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Denmark, Iceland, and Russia, he became tutor at the college at Hoxton (1826-30), and afterwards at Highbury College (1830-50). His death occurred at Mortlake 16 May, 1858. He published Travels in Iceland; Biblical Researches; and commentaries on several of the books of the Old Testament.

HENDERSON, JOHN, an actor of eminence, born in London 1747. He at first learnt painting, but quitted it to work in the shop of a silversmith, and afterwards appeared on the stage at Bath 1772, in the character of Hamlet, under the assumed name of Courtney. He was greeted by the applause of crowded houses, and he next presented himself before a London audience at the Haymarket, under Coleman, in Shylock. He soon became the popular representative of Falstaff, Richard III., and other difficult characters, at Drury Lane. Died 25 Nov., 1785.

HENDERSON, JOHN, an eccentric genius, was born at Ballygarane, near Limerick, 27 March, 1757. His father was a preacher in Wesley's connection, and afterwards a schoolmaster near Bristol. Young Henderson received his education among the Methodists, and made so rapid a progress that at eight years of age he was employed in teaching Latin in Kingswood School, and Greek in Lady Huntingdon's College, at Trevecca, in South Wales, when he was no more than twelve. Dr. Tucker, dean of Gloucester, sent him to Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. His habits and studies were alike singular. He wore no neckcloth. His shoe-buckles were as small as those worn at the knees. He generally went to rest about daybreak and rose in the afternoon. He used to strip himself naked to the waist, and going to the pump, would completely sluice himself, after which he would pump over his shirt, and in that condition go to bed. His learning was multifarious, but he delighted chiefly in alchemy, physiognomy, and the occult arts. He died at Oxford 2 Nov., 1788.

HENDERSON, THOMAS, an astronomer, whose name is connected with the discovery of the parallax of the fixed stars, was born at Dundee 28 Dec., 1798; died 23 Nov., 1844.

HENDREN, JOSEPH WILLIAM, D.D., an English Catholic prelate, born at Birmingham 19 Oct., 1791. In 1806 he received the Franciscan habit, and made his profession 19 Nov., 1807. He was ordained priest 28 Sept., 1815, and was for some years employed in teaching philosophy and divinity to his brethren. In 1826 he was appointed to serve the mission of Abergavenny, where he remained till February, 1830, when he was appointed confessor to the Franciscan nuns at Taunton. In this office he remained eight years, much beloved and esteemed by the community; when, in July, 1848, he was named vicar apostolic of the western district, and consecrated bishop of Uranopolis. On the restoration of the hierarchy in England he was appointed bishop of Clifton 29 Sept., 1850, but on 22 June, 1851, he was translated to Nottingham. He did not, however, retain that see long. His natural inclination and previous habits made him shrink from the cares of office, and after many earnest entreaties he at length obtained leave to resign. On 2 Feb., 1853, he accepted the see of Martyropolis 'in partibus infidelium.' After a short residence at the oratory at Birmingham, he returned to the convent at Taunton, where the rest of his days were spent in prayer and study. Died 14 Nov., 1866.

HENGIST, a Saxon chief, who went to England to assist in repelling the Picts, and received the kingdom of Kent as a reward for his services. Died 488.

HENICHIUS, JOHN, a German Lutheran divine and theological writer, born Jan., 1616. He was professor at Kinteln, where he died 27 June, 1671.

HENKE, HENRY PHILIP CONRAD, a Protestant divine, professor of theology at Helmstadt, was born at Hehlen 3 July, 1752, and died at Brunswick 2 May, 1800. His chief performance is a General History of the Christian Church.

HENRION.

HENLEY, ANTHONY, was the son of Sir Robert Henley, of the Grange, Hampshire, and educated at Oxford. In 1698 he was returned to parliament for Andover, and afterwards for Weymouth, in which capacity he voted with the Whigs. He wrote several poems for music, and assisted the writers of the 'Tatler' and the 'Medley.' Died August, 1711. His second son, Robert, became Lord Chancellor, and, in 1764, earl of Northington. See NORTHINGTON.

HENLEY, JOHN, commonly called Orator Henley, was born at Melton Mowbray, Leicestershire, 5 Aug., 1692. He was educated at Oakham School, in Rutland, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders. After serving a curacy in the country, and conducting the school of his native place for some time, he removed to London, and was much followed as a preacher. At last, however, he set up what he called an oratory, in Newport Market, where he lectured on Sundays on theology, and on Wednesdays upon miscellaneous topics, but in a strain of such vulgarity and abuse, as moved the grand jury of Westminster to present him at the sessions as a disturber of the public peace. He had medals struck, which he dispensed as tickets to his subscribers, each of whom paid one shilling for admittance. Died 14 Oct., 1756. Henley published a translation of Pliny's Epistles; and some other works.

HENLEY, SAMUEL, D.D., a learned orientalist, was some time professor of moral philosophy at the college of Williamsburg, Virginia, subsequently assistant at Harrow School, rector of Rendlesham, Suffolk, and principal of the East India College, Hertford. Died 29 Dec., 1815. He published—Three Sermons preached in America; Dissertation concerning the controverted Passages in St. Peter and St. Jude, on the Angels that sinned; Observations on the Fourth Eclogue, the Allegory in the Third Georgic, and the Design of the Æneid of Virgil; Essay toward a new Edition of the Elegies of Tibullus, with a Translation, and Notes. He has also some papers in the Archæologia; and was the editor of 'The History of the Caliph Vathek.'

HENNINGES, JEROME, a German genealogist, the disciple of Melancthon, was a native of Lunenburg, and died 28 Feb., 1597.

HENNUYER, JEAN LE, bishop of Lisieux, is celebrated for his humanity at the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Born 1497; died 12 March, 1578.

HENRIET, PROTASIS, a French Recollect friar, author of a Harmony of the Evangelists, &c., died 1688.

HENRIETTA ANNA OF ENGLAND, duchess of Orleans, the daughter of Charles I. king of England and Henrietta Maria of France, was born at Exeter 1644, and died at St. Cloud 30 June, 1670.

She was charged with several secret missions from Louis XIV. to her brother Charles II.

HENRIETTA MARIA OF FRANCE, daughter of Henry IV. and Mary de Medicis, was born at Paris 25 Nov., 1609; became the wife of Charles I., king of England, 1625; and died at Colombe, near Paris, 10 Sept., 1669. She fled from England in 1644, and took refuge in France, where she founded the convent of the Visitation at Chaillot.

HENRION, DENIS, a French mathematician, engineer to the prince of Orange, died about 1640. He was one of the earliest translators of Euclid, and introduced into France the theory of logarithms, invented by Napier.

HENRION.

HENRION, NICOLAS, a French numismatist, born at Troyes (Champagne) 6 Dec., 1663; died 24 June, 1720.

HENRY I., The Fowler, Emperor of Germany, was born 876, being the son of Otho. He succeeded Conrad I. 919; and died 936.

HENRY II., great-grandson of the preceding, was born 972; became king of Bavaria 995; succeeded Otho III. as emperor of Germany 1002; died 1024.

HENRY III., The Black, brother and successor of Conrad II. (1039), was crowned emperor 1046; and died 1056.

HENRY IV., Emperor of Germany, born 1050; succeeded his father, Henry III., 1056; died 1106.

HENRY V., The Young, son of the preceding, was born 1081; succeeded to the imperial throne 1111; died 1125.

HENRY VI., The Cruel, born 1165; succeeded his father, Frederick Barbarossa, 1190; died 1197.

HENRY VII., Duke of Luxemburg, was elected emperor of Germany 1308, and died 1313.

HENRY I., King of France, was born 1005; succeeded his father Robert 1031; died 1060.

HENRY II., son of Francis I., was born 1518; succeeded to the French throne 1547; died 1559.

HENRY III., third son of the preceding, was born 1552. He was chosen king of Poland 1573, but quitted that throne to succeed his brother as king of France 1574. He was assassinated 2 Aug., 1590.

HENRY IV., The Great, king of France, was born at Pau 1533; ascended the throne 1589; and was assassinated 14 May, 1610.

HENRY I., Beauclerc, King of England and duke of Normandy, was the third son of William the Conqueror. He was born 1068; ascended the throne 1100; died 2 Dec., 1135.

HENRY II. succeeded to the throne of England 1154, and died 6 July, 1189.

HENRY III., born 1206, succeeded John as king of England 1216, and died 1272.

HENRY IV., eldest son of John of Gaunt, third son of Edward III., was born about 1360. By usurping the throne (1399), he gave rise to the long wars between the houses of York and Lancaster. Died 20 March, 1413.

HENRY V., son of the preceding, was born 1388, succeeded to the crown 1413; died 31 Aug., 1422.

HENRY VI., son of the preceding, was born 1421; succeeded to the throne on his father's decease; and was murdered in the Tower 21 May, 1471.

HENRY VII. opposed and defeated Richard III., and was crowned king of England, on the field, after the battle of Bosworth 1485. By his marriage the rival claims of the houses of York and Lancaster were united and settled. He died 21 April, 1509.

HENRY VIII., son and successor of the preceding, ascended the throne 1509, at the age of 18. Although for a short time popular, he soon, by his arbitrary and capricious conduct, proved himself a tyrant. He obtained from the Holy See the title of 'Defender of the Faith,' in consequence of his having written a work against the errors of Luther; but he afterwards quarrelled with the Pope, who refused to divorce him from his wife. Henry in revenge declared himself to be the Head of the Church, and thus introduced the 'Reformation' into England. He was six times married; two of his wives perished on the scaffold, and two others were divorced. This monarch, who must always be detested for his tyranny and oppression, died 28 Jan., 1546-7.

HENRY, Prince of Wales, eldest son of James I., died 6 Nov., 1612, aged 18, much lamented by the nation.

HENRY OF GHENT, The Solemn Doctor, was archdeacon of Tournay, where he died 29 June, 1205, aged 76. He wrote some excellent works on theology.

HENRY OF HUNTINGDON, an English historian, was canon of Lincoln and archdeacon of Huntingdon in the twelfth century. He wrote a History of England to the year 1164, published in 1579 by Savile. There is an English translation in Bohn's Antiquarian Library. He was also author of a Latin piece on the Contempt of the World.

HENRY OF ST. IGNATIUS, Henricus à Sancto Ignatio, a learned theologian of the Carmelite order, was a native of Ath, in Flanders, and died at Cavée, in the diocese of Liege, about 1720. His chief work is a complete system of moral theology, entitled 'Ethica Amoris.'

HENRY THE MINSTREL, or Blind Harry, a Scotoman, who commemorated in vernacular poetry the achievements of Wallace, flourished in the fifteenth century. The best edition of his poem was printed at Perth 1790.

HENRY OF SUSA, Henricus de Segusio, the most eminent civilian and canonist of the thirteenth century, who acquired so high a reputation as to be called 'The Source and Splendour of the Law.' He was appointed archbishop of Embrun about 1258, and cardinal bishop of Ostia 1262, from whence he had the name of Ostiensis. Died 1271. He wrote 'The Golden Sum on the Book of Decretals.'

HENRY, DAVID, a printer, born near Aberdeen 1710. He came to London early in life, and was taken into the employ of Cave, whose sister he married; after which he began business at Reading, where he set up a newspaper, and another at Winchester. In 1754 he became a partner with his brother-in-law, at St. John's Gate, where he continued the Gentleman's Magazine many years. He died at Lewisham 5 June, 1792. Mr. Henry published 'Twenty Discourses abridged from Archbishop Tillotson; The Complete Farmer, or a Practical System of Husbandry; and An Historical Account of Voyages round the World, 6 vols.'

HENRY, MATTHEW, son of Philip Henry, was born at Broad Oak, near Whitchurch, Shropshire, 1662. He was educated by his father, after which he studied the law in Gray's Inn, but relinquished that pursuit for the ministry, and was ordained over a congregation at Chester, where he resided about twenty-five years, and then accepted an invitation to settle at Hackney. He died of apoplexy, while on a journey, at Nantwich, 22 June, 1714. His works are A Discourse on Schism; The Life of Mr. Philip Henry; A Scripture Catechism; Family Hymns; The Communicant's Companion; Discourses on Vice and Immorality; A Method for Prayer; Directions for Daily Communion with God; Exposition of the Bible, 5 vols. folio. The last volume of this work was completed by several divines after his death.

HENRY, PATRICK, a native of Virginia, distinguished for his commanding eloquence, was the first man who proposed to the colonies hostile measures against Great Britain. He was the first governor of Virginia after the Declaration of Independence, and a member of the old congress. He declined the appointments of secretary of state under President Washington, and of minister to France under his successor. Born 29 May, 1736; died 6 June, 1799.

HENRY, PHILIP, an eminent divine, born 1631 at the palace of Whitehall, where his father was page to James duke of York. He was educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, and obtained a studentship 1648. He was ordained to the ministry according to the Presbyterian forms 1657, soon after which he married a lady of fortune, and became possessed of the estate of Broadoak, near Whitechurch, in Shropshire, where he used to preach in a barn. Died 24 June, 1696.

HENRY, ROBERT, D.D., an historian and divine, was born in the parish of St. Ninian's, in Scotland, 18 Feb., 1718. From the grammar-school of Stirling he went to the university of Edinburgh, after which he became master of the school at Annan. In 1746 he was licensed to preach, and in 1748 was ordained at Carlisle, where he remained twelve years, and then removed to a congregation at Berwick. In 1768 he settled at Edinburgh, as minister of the new Grey Friar's church; but in 1776 he became colleague minister in the Old Church. The degree of doctor in divinity was conferred upon him by the university of Edinburgh in 1770, and in 1774 he was moderator of the general assembly. He died in Nov., 1790. Dr. Henry translated Goguet's Origin of Laws, Arts, and Sciences; but his great work is a History of England, on an original plan, 6 vols. 4to. This excellent work only comes down to the reign of Henry VIII.

HENRY, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., a distinguished chemist of Manchester, was born in that town 12 Dec., 1774, and died 2 Sept., 1836.

HENRYSON, ROBERT, a Scotch poet in the fifteenth century, was schoolmaster at Dunfermline, and a monk of the Benedictine order. His 'Fablis' were printed at Edinburgh in 1621; and his 'Testament of Faure Cresende' is to be found in some editions of Chaucer's works. He died before 1508.

HENSLOW, JOHN STEPHENS, was born at Rochester 6 Feb., 1796, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (M.A. 1821). He became professor of mineralogy in the university 1822; professor of botany 1827; and in 1837 rector of Hitcham, Suffolk, where he died 10 May, 1861. He published 'The Principles of Descriptive and Physiological Botany;' and 'A Dictionary of Botanical Terms.'

HENTENIUS, JOHN, a Dominican, born in France 1499. He received his education in Portugal, and became a Dominican at Louvain, where he died 13 Oct., 1566. He is best known by a beautiful edition of the Vulgate, printed by Plantin 1565, 5 vols. 12mo.; and the Louvain Bible, printed 1547.

HEPBURN, JAMES, earl of Bothwell. See BOTHWELL.

HEPBURN, JAMES BONAVENTURA, a learned writer, was born at Oldhamstocks, East Lothian, 14 July, 1573. He was bred in the Protestant religion by his father, who was a Presbyterian minister; but, after studying at St. Andrew's, he turned Catholic, and went to Italy. He next travelled into various parts of the east, and on his return entered the order of Minims in the vicinity of Avignon. Pope Paul V. appointed him librarian of the oriental books and MSS. in the Vatican. He died at Venice in or about 1620. He published 'A Hebrew and Chaldaic Dictionary,' and an Arabic Grammar, 1591. He also published translations from Hebrew MSS. and other works.

HERBERT.

HEPBURN, ROBERT, was born in Scotland about 1690. At the age of twenty-one he published, in thirty numbers, a series of essays, entitled 'The Tatler, by Donald Macstaff, of the North.' He studied the civil law in Holland, and became a member of the faculty of advocates at Edinburgh, where he died in or about 1712. After his death two treatises by him were published, viz., 'Demonstratio quod Deus sit,' 1714; and 'Dissertatio de Scriptis Pitcaernianis,' 1715.

HERACLITUS, the founder of a philosophic sect, was a native of Ephesus. He incorporated the mysteries of the Pythagorean system into his own, which was exceedingly severe and obscure. Being of a misanthropic turn, whence he is said to have wept at the follies of mankind, he retired to a mountainous region, where he lived upon vegetables. He died at the age of sixty, b.c. 504.

HERACLIUS, emperor of the East, was son of Heraclius, governor of Africa. He dethroned Phocas 610, and died 641.

HERAULT, DIDIER, Desiderius Heraldus, a counsellor of the parliament of Paris, born about 1579; died June, 1649. He was distinguished both as a lawyer and a classical scholar. His son became a clergyman of the Church of England, and had a prebend in the cathedral of Canterbury. He wrote a piece against the rogicides, and some other works.

HERBERT, JOHN FREDERICK, a German philosopher, professor at Konigsberg and Göttingen, was born at Oldenburg 4 May, 1776, and died 14 Aug., 1841. An avowed adversary of Kant's system and of all psychological systems in general, he constructed, by means of what he termed the 'theory of relations,' an original system, the exposition of which is very often obscure through the absence of sufficient explanation. His works were published at Leipsic in 12 vols., 1850-52.

HERBELOT. See D'HERBELOT.

HERBERT, EDWARD, Lord Herbert of Cheshire, was born in Montgomeryshire 1581. He was educated at University College, Oxford, and at the accession of James I. was created knight of the Bath. After this he distinguished himself at the siege of Juliers; and in 1610 was sent ambassador to Louis XIII., but was recalled on account of a dispute between him and the constable de Luynes. In 1625 he was created a baron of the kingdom of Ireland, and in 1631 advanced to the English peerage. Died 20 Aug., 1648. In his work, entitled 'De Veritate,' he laid down the principles of deism, and yet professed to have had a revelation to publish it. His best performance is the 'History of Henry VIII.' In 1603 appeared his book 'De Religione Gentilium,' of which a translation was printed in 1705. Lord Herbert also wrote 'Expeditio Buckinghami ducis in Ream insulam;' and his Own Life, which last was printed in 1764, and several times since. The edition of 1824 has a prelatory notice said to be by Sir Walter Scott.

HERBERT, GEORGE, younger brother of Edward Lord Herbert of Cheshire, was born at Montgomery Castle 3 April, 1593. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected from thence to

HERBERT.

Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his degrees in arts. In 1619 he was chosen university orator, in which capacity he gave great satisfaction to James I. This made him entertain hopes of rising at court; but the death of the king disappointing his expectations, he entered into orders, and was presented to the prebend of Leighton Bromswold, in the diocese of Lincoln, the church of which parish he rebuilt. In 1630 he was inducted into the living of Bemerton, near Salisbury, where he died in February, 1632. The works of this exemplary divine are Oratio qua auspicio serenissimo principis Caroli reditum ex Hispaniis, 1623; a translation of Cornaro on Temperance; Herbert's Remains, containing his 'Priest to the Temple, or the Country Parson's character and rule of Holy Life,' an admirable treatise on parochial duty; 'The Temple. Sacred Poems and Private Ejaculations.' Several editions of his Poetical Works have appeared during the present century.

HERBERT, HENRY JOHN GEORGE, earl of Carnarvon. See CARNARVON.

HERBERT, MARY. See SIDNEY.

HERBERT, SIDNEY, Lord Herbert of Lea, was born at Richmond, Surrey, 16 Sept., 1810, being the second son of the eleventh earl of Pembroke. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1831). In 1832 he entered parliament as Conservative member for South Wilts, which he continued to represent until he was raised to the peerage. He took office under Peel's second administration in 1841, as secretary of the admiralty, and in 1845 he was advanced to the post of secretary of war. He kept aloof from the party of Lord Derby when they came into power early in 1852, but resumed his post at the War Office, with a seat in Lord Aberdeen's Coalition Ministry in the following December, and held it till the commencement of the war with Russia, when he withdrew for a while from the public service in consequence of the resolutions of the Sebastopol committee. In June, 1859, he returned to the War Department, and finally retired from office in July, 1861, having been raised to the peerage in the preceding January. His death happened at Wilton 2 Aug., 1861.

HERBERT, Sir THOMAS, was born at York about 1610, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge; after which he went to live with his relation, the earl of Pembroke, who sent him on his travels. He spent four years in Asia and Africa, and published, at his return, an account of his observations. On the breaking-out of the rebellion, he joined the parliament, but afterwards became attached to the king, whom he attended to the last with great affection. At the Restoration he was made a baronet. He died at York 1 March, 1681-2. Besides his travels he was the author of Threnodia Carolina, or an Account of the two last Years of the Life of King Charles I. Sir Thomas also wrote an account of the last days of the king, inserted in Wood's Athenae; and he assisted Dugdale in the third volume of the Monasticon.

which he went as purser's clerk to the East Indies, where he remained some time, and acquired a considerable knowledge of the rivers, harbours, and coasts; for his plans of which he received three hundred pounds from the company on his return. He now set up business as an engraver of charts, and print-seller, in which he met with so much encouragement as enabled him to retire with a competency, to an estate of his purchasing at Cheshunt, where he died 18 March, 1795. Mr. Herbert published a new edition of Atkyns's History of Gloucestershire, and an improved edition of 'Ames's Typographical Antiquities,' 3 vols. 4to., 1785-90.

HERBIN, AUGUSTE FRANÇOIS JULIEN, an oriental scholar, born at Paris 13 March, 1783; died 30 Dec., 1806.

HERBINIUS, JOHN, a native of Pitschen, in Silesia, who wrote on Cataracts and Waterfalls; also 'De Statu Ecclesiarum Augustanæ Confectionis in Polonia.' Born 1633; died 14 Feb., 1676.

HERBST, JOHN ANDREW, a writer on music, born at Nuremberg 1588. In 1628 he became chapel-master at Frankfort on the Maine, and died there about 1660.

HERDER, JOHN GOTTFRIED VON, was born at Morungen, in East Prussia, 1744. He was educated for the church, and in 1774 became first preacher to the court of Saxe Weimar, ecclesiastical counsellor, and vice-president of the consistory. Died 18 December, 1803. His works relate to a great variety of subjects, and fill about 60 volumes. The following have been translated into English: 'Outlines of a Philosophy of the History of Man;' 'Oriental Dialogues;' 'A brief Commentary on the Revelation of St. John;' 'Spirit of Hebrew Poetry.'

HERICOURT, LOUIS D', a learned French jurist, born at Soissons 1687; died 18 Oct., 1752.

HERISSANT, LOUIS ANTOINE PROSPER, a physician and naturalist, born 1745 at Paris, where he died 10 Aug., 1769.

HERITIER DE BRUTELLE, CHARLES LOUIS L', a botanist, born at Paris 1746. He was murdered 16 Aug., 1800.

HERITIER DE VILLANDON, NICOLAS L', historiographer of France, died Aug., 1680, aged 60. He wrote two tragedies and a few poems. His daughter, Marie Jeanne l'Heritier, was born at Paris 1664, and died 24 Feb., 1734. She published a translation of Ovid's Epistles, and some novels.

HERMANN, JAMES, a mathematician of Basle, born 1678; died 11 July, 1733. He wrote 'Phoronomia, or two Books on the Forces and Motions of Solid and Fluid Bodies.'

HERMANN, JOHN, a physician and naturalist, professor at Strasburg, was born at Barr, near that city, 1738, and died 8 Oct., 1800. He devoted all his property to the formation of a cabinet of natural history, and wrote several dissertations in German and French.

HERMANN, JOHN GOTTFRIED JAMES, a celebrated philologist, born at Leipzig 28 Nov., 1772; died there 31 Dec., 1848. He became professor-extraordinary of philosophy in the university of his native town 1799; professor of eloquence 1803, and of poetry 1809; and in 1819 founded the Greek Society. He published editions of the 'Orphica,' of the 'Hymns and Epigrams' of Homer, and of several of the tragedies of Euripides; some excellent treatises on Greek grammar and primitive mythology; 'De Metris Poetarum Græcorum et Romanorum,' 1796; 'Handbuch der Metrik,' 1798; 'De emendanda Ratione Græcæ Grammaticæ,' 1801; an annotated edition of Vigier 'De præcipuis Græcæ Dictionis Idiōtismis,' and 'Elementa Doctrinæ Metricæ,' 1816.

HERMANN, PAUL, a botanist, born at Halle, in Saxony, 1646. After practising as a physician in Ceylon, he was chosen (1679) professor of botany at Leyden. He wrote numerous works, and formed a system of botany founded on the fructification. Died 29 Jan., 1695.

HERMANT, GODEFROI, doctor of the Sorbonne and rector of the university of Paris, was born at Beauvais 6 Feb., 1617, and died 11 July, 1690, having been excluded from several of his benefices for refusing to sign the 'Formulary.' He composed lives of several of the Fathers; some pieces against the Jesuits, &c.

HERMAS, an ecclesiastical writer, supposed to be the same person whom St. Paul salutes at the end of his Epistle to the Romans. He appears to have belonged to the church at Rome, when Clement was the bishop, about the year 80. His book, called 'The Shepherd,' is considered canonical by some of the Fathers. The Greek text is lost, but the Latin translation has been several times printed.

HERMELIN, SAMUEL GUSTAVUS, Baron, a Swedish mineralogist, born at Stockholm 4 April, 1744; died 4 March, 1820.

HERMES, GEORGE, a Catholic theologian, professor at Munster, and afterwards at Bonn, was born at Dreyerwalde, in Westphalia, 22 April, 1775, and died 26 May, 1831. His 'Philosophical Introduction of Catholic Christian Theology,' 1819, incurred the censure of the Court of Rome, because the author endeavoured to substitute reason for faith in the interpretation of the Scriptures; and his disciples, termed 'Hermesians,' were prohibited from teaching in Catholic universities. Besides the above work, Hermes wrote 'Researches on the interior truth of Christianity,' and 'Catholic Christian Dogma.'

HERMES TRISMEGISTUS, an Egyptian priest and philosopher, supposed to have flourished B.C. 1930.

HERMILLY, VAQUETTE D', a French writer, born at Amiens 1707; died at Paris 29 Jan., 1778. He wrote a History of Majorca and Minorca; and translated several works from the Spanish and Portuguese.

HERMOGENES, a famous heresiarch of the second century, who applied Stoicism to Christianity, saying that matter was co-eternal with God, and that He had formed all creatures out of it.

HERMOGENES, of Tarsus, a Greek rhetorician, who flourished about 161. Such portions of his works as are extant were printed at Geneva 1614.

HERNANDEZ, FRANCIS, a physician and naturalist, who was sent to Mexico by Philip II. to make observations on the productions of that country. The result of his inquiries was published at Rome 1651.

HERODES, TIBERIUS CLAUDIUS ATTICUS, a native of Marathon, was a distinguished sophist in the age of the Antonines. He was appointed consul at Rome A.D. 141, and died A.D. 185. We have from him only a single discourse and some fragments.

HERODIAN, a Greek historian, died at Rome about 240. He wrote the history of his own times, which was translated into English by J. Hart 1749.

HERRING.

HERODOTUS, called the father of history, was born at Halicarnassus, in Caria, about 484 B.C. His native place being under the tyranny of Lygdamis, induced him to travel into Egypt, Greece, and Italy, by which means he acquired an extensive knowledge of the history of many nations. On his return to his own country, he assisted in expelling Lygdamis; and then went, according to Pliny, to live at Thurium, in Magna Græcia. He is said to have recited his history at the Olympic games with such applause, that the people, in expressing their admiration of him, paid little attention to those who had gained prizes. The work is divided into nine books, which are called by the names of the muses, and comprehend the history of the most remarkable events, from the reign of Cyrus, the first king of Persia, to that of Xerxes. There is also ascribed to Herodotus 'A Life of Homer;' but it is evidently fictitious. The best editions of this valuable author are that of Aldus, 1502, folio; that of Wesseling, at Amsterdam, in 1763; and that of Schweighæuser, at Strasburg, 1816. There have been several English translations of Herodotus, by Beloe, Littlebury, Laurent, and others.

HERRARA Y TORDESILLAS, ANTONIO DE, a Spanish historian, born 1559; died at Madrid 29 March, 1625. He became grand historiographer for the Indies to Philip II., who also made him secretary of state. Among his many works we may particularize his History of the West Indies, which was translated into English by Stevens; and his History of Scotland during the time of Mary Stuart.

HERRARA, FERDINANDO DE, a Spanish poet, born at Seville 1515; died about 1595. He wrote a great number of poems, and a Life of Sir Thomas More.

HERRARA, FRANCIS DE, The Old, a Spanish painter, born 1576; died 1650.

HERRARA, FRANCIS DE, The Young, a painter and architect, son of the preceding, was born 1622, and died at Madrid 1685.

HERRICK, ROBERT, a poet, was born in London Aug., 1591. He received his education at Cambridge, after which he obtained (1629) the vicarage of Dean Prior, Devonshire. He was deprived of this living at the Rebellion, but recovered it at the Restoration, and died 1674. His poetical works were printed 1648, under the title of 'Hesperides.' Of the subsequent editions the best are those of Maitland (1823) and Singer (1846).

HERRING, JOHN FREDERICK, a celebrated painter of animals, especially horses, was born in Surrey 1795; and died at Meopham Park, Tunbridge, Kent, 23 Sept., 1865.

HERRING, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, was born 1691, at Walsoken, Norfolk, and educated at Cambridge. On taking orders, he obtained successively the livings of Great Shelford, Stow cum Quy, and the Holy Trinity in Cambridge. In 1722 Bishop Fleetwood made him his chaplain, and gave him the rectory of Rettenden, Essex, and that of Barclay, Herts. After this he was chosen preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, and appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king, on which he took his degree of D.D. In 1731 he was presented to the rectory of Blechningley, Surrey, and the same year advanced to the deanery of Rochester. In 1737 he was made bishop of Bangor, and in 1743 translated to York, where he exerted himself so much in rousing the county against the rebels, that in 1747 he was translated to Canterbury. Died 13 March, 1757. In 1793 a volume of his sermons was published, which was followed in 1777 by a collection of his letters.

HERSCHEL, Sir WILLIAM, LL.D., F.R.S., the famous astronomer, was born at Hanover 15 Nov., 1738. His father, being a musician, brought up his four sons, of whom William was the second, to the same profession, and placed him, at the age of fourteen, in the band of the Hanoverian Foot-guards. In 1757 he came to this country, and obtained employment as a musician. In 1766 he was chosen organist at Halifax, which situation he resigned for a similar one at Bath, where, by the direction of the public concerts and his private teaching, he gained a considerable income. But, though fond to enthusiasm of his profession, his ardent thirst for knowledge had begun, for some time past, to open a nobler field for his exertions. While at Halifax he had commenced a course of mathematical reading; and when he read of the noble astronomical discoveries made by the assistance of the telescope, he was seized with an irresistible desire to see with his own eyes the wonders he had read of. Fortunately for the interests of science, the price of an instrument capable of satisfying his curiosity was beyond his means, and he resolved to attempt the construction of one for himself. In this arduous task he succeeded; and in 1774 first saw Saturn in a 5-feet reflecting telescope made by his own hands. Encouraged by this success he now attempted larger telescopes, and soon completed a 7, a 10, and a 20 feet reflector. About the latter end of 1779 he commenced a regular view of the heavens, star by star, with a 7 feet reflector, and after having continued this for upwards of eighteen months he was at length rewarded, on 13 March, 1781, with the discovery of a new primary planet, to which he afterwards gave the name of 'Georgium Sidus,' but which is now more generally distinguished by that of 'Uranus.' In consequence of this discovery the attention of the scientific world became fixed upon him; and George III. immediately appointed him his private astronomer, with a yearly salary of £400, thus enabling him to devote the remainder of his life exclusively to astronomy. Herschel now took up his residence at Datchet, near Windsor, where he entered upon a career of discovery unexampled, perhaps, in the history of science. Having removed to Slough, he commenced the erection of a telescope of yet larger dimensions than any before attempted, which he completed in 1787, and, aided by this stupendous instrument, and by others of hardly inferior power, extended his researches to every part of the heavens. In these observations, and the laborious calculations into which they led, he was assisted throughout by his sister, Miss Carolina Lucretia Herschel (who died at Hanover 9 Jan., 1848, aged 97). His discoveries were communicated as they arose to the Royal Society, and form an important part of the 'Transactions' of that learned body from 1782 to 1818. His two discoveries of Saturn's 6th and 7th satellites would of themselves be sufficient to render his monster telescope ever memorable. In 1820 he laid before the Royal Society a catalogue of 5,000 new nebulae, nebulous stars, planetary nebulae, and clusters of stars, which he had discovered. This eminent man was honoured with the Guelphic order of knighthood 1816, and died at Slough, near Windsor, 25 Aug., 1822.

HERSENT, CHARLES, a turbulent French Oratorian, who, after quitting his order, brought himself into trouble by a book entitled 'Optatus Gallus' (1649), in which he charged Cardinal Richelieu with holding views inimical to the Gallican Church. Retiring to Rome, he was excommunicated for advancing some peculiar notions on grace. He then went back to France, where he died after 1660.

HERTIUS, JOHN NICHOLAS, a learned civilian of Giessen, born 1652; died 19 Sept., 1710.

HERTZBERG, EWALD FREDERICK VON, a Prussian statesman, born at Lottin, in Pomerania, 2 Sept., 1725. He obtained employment in the office of foreign affairs at Berlin, where by his talents he rose to the rank of nobility and prime minister. Died 27 May, 1795. In 1752 his Essay on the Population of Brandenburg gained the prize given by the Academy of Sciences at Berlin. His state papers and memorials are remarkable for their precision and elegance.

HERVET, GENTIAN, was born at Olivet, near Orleans, 1499. He became tutor to Claudius de l'Aubespine, afterwards secretary of state; and, while at Paris, became acquainted with Edward Lupset, whom he assisted in an edition of Galen. He came to England with Lupset, and was employed in the education of Arthur Pole, which procured him the patronage of the celebrated cardinal, by whose interest he became canon of Rheims. Died 12 Sept., 1584. Hervet was at the Council of Trent, where he delivered two orations, which have been printed, with other works. He translated into English Xenophon's Treatise of Household, and a discourse by Erasmus.

HERVEY, JAMES, a divine of the Church of England, was born at Hardingstone, Northamptonshire, 26 Feb., 1713-14. His father, who was minister of Collingtree, sent him to the free grammar school at Northampton, and next to Lincoln College, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree, and had a small exhibition. In 1736 he became curate to his father, and next at Dummer, Hampshire; from whence he went to Bideford, Devonshire, where he continued about five years, and was much beloved by the parishioners. At this place he wrote his celebrated 'Meditations among the Tombs,' and 'Reflections in a Flower-Garden.' In 1743 he returned to Northamptonshire, and officiated as curate to his father, who was now rector of Weston Favel, and whom he succeeded in that living and Collingtree 1752, on which occasion he took his master's degree at Cambridge. His principles were Calvinistic, but his piety was of the most cheerful and useful description. He died on Christmas Day, 1758. Besides his Meditations, in 2 vols., he published 'Theron and Aspasio; or, a Series of Dialogues and Letters,' 3 vols.; Remarks on Lord Bolingbroke; and some sermons. After his death appeared his Life and Letters, 2 vols.; Eleven Letters to Wesley; Letters to Lady Shirley; and Miscellaneous Letters.

HERVEY, JOHN, Lord Hervey of Ickworth, was the eldest son of the first earl of Bristol, and born 15 Oct., 1666. He was educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1715, at which time he was gentleman of the bed-chamber to the prince of Wales. In 1730 he was made vice-chamberlain to the king, and a privy councillor. In 1733 he was created Lord Hervey of Ickworth, and in 1740 made lord privy seal, but was dismissed the next year. Died 5 Aug., 1743. His lordship was a man of letters, and a friend to men of learning; but he was grossly treated by Pope, who drew his character as Sporus, in language which no provocation could have excused, and it was rendered more scandalous by the fact that the poet was the aggressor. Lord Hervey, however, retaliated in some severe lines, in an epistle from a nobleman to a doctor of divinity. He was also the author of some political pieces. One of his sons, Augustus John (b. 19 May, 1721), became an admiral and earl of Bristol. He married Elizabeth Chudleigh, who was tried for bigamy in espousing the duke of Kingston while her first husband was living. He died in 1779. Another son of Lord Hervey, Frederic (b. Aug., 1730), became bishop of Derry, and succeeded his brother in the title of earl of Bristol. He died at Albano, near Rome, 8 July, 1803.

HERWART DE HOHEMBURG, JOHN GEORGE, chancellor of Bavaria, was born 1554, and died 15 Jan., 1622. His works treat of mathematics and chronology.

HERY, THIERRY DE, a surgeon of Paris, died 12 May, 1599. He wrote 'Methode curative de la maladie venereeine.'

HESHUSIUS, TILLEMANNUS, a Protestant divine, was born at Wesel, in the duchy of Cleves, 1526; died 1588. He wrote most furiously against the Calvinists.

HESIOD, a Greek poet, lived probably B.C. 950, but, according to some, before Homer. He was born at Cuma, in Ætolia, and was called the Ascraean, because educated at Ascræ, in Bœotia. He was the first who wrote on agriculture, and his performance is entitled the 'Works and Days.' His 'Theogony' is valuable as affording the best account of the ancient mythology. 'The Shield of Hercules,' attributed to Hesiod, is probably a fragment from a later author. His poems have been translated into English by Chapman (1618), Cooke (1728), and Elton (1812).

HESKINS, THOMAS, D.D., after studying for twelve years at Oxford, proceeded to Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. 1540, being then a fellow of Clare Hall, and in orders. He occurs as rector of Hildersham, Cambridgeshire, from 1551 to 1556; and in 1558 he was collated to the chancellorship of the church of Sarum, in which capacity he presented himself the same year to the vicarage of Brixworth, Northamptonshire. On Elizabeth's accession he went to Flanders, entered the Dominican order, and became confessor to a house of English Dominican nuns at Bergen op Zoom. It is not known when or where he died. He wrote 'The Parliament of Chryste avouching and declaring the enacted and received truth of the presence of his Bodie and Bloode in the Blessed Sacrament, and of other articles concerning the same, impugned in a wicked Sermon by M. Juell,' folio, Antwerp, 1565, 1566.—Athen. Cantab.

HESNAULT. See HENAULT.

HESSE, WILLIAM, Landgrave of, called the Wise, was born about 1533, and died 1592. He was a skilful astronomer, and built an observatory at Cassel, which he furnished with good instruments. His observations were published at Leyden in 1618 by Willcbrod Snell.

HESSELS, or HESSELIUS, JOHN, a divine of

HEY.

Louvain, one of Philip II.'s deputies at the Council of Trent, was born 1522, and died 1563 or 1566. His works are chiefly polemical against the Protestants.

HESYCHIUS, a grammarian, lived at Alexandria, as is generally supposed, towards the close of the 4th cent. His Greek 'Lexicon' was first printed at Venice 1514.

HEUGH, HUGH, D.D., a divine of the United Presbyterian Church, born at Stirling 12 Aug., 1782. After officiating as minister in his native town for fifteen years, he removed to Glasgow (1821), and remained there till his death 10 June, 1846. He published some pieces against religious establishments; Notices of the state of Religion in Geneva and Belgium, 1844; and 'Irenicum,' 1846.

HEURNIUS, JOHN, a physician, born at Utrecht 1543, became professor of anatomy at Leyden, where he died 11 Aug., 1601. All his works were printed together at Leyden 1658.

HEUSINGER, JOHN MICHAEL, a German divine, born at Sunderhausen, in Thuringia 24 Aug., 1690, became director of the Gymnasium at Eisenach, where he died 24 Feb., 1751. He published editions of several classical authors. His nephew, James Frederick Heusinger (b. 1718; d. 1778), became master of the school at Wolffenbuttel, and published Observations on the Ajax and Elcetra of Sophocles; Plutarch on Education, &c.

HEVELIUS, JOHN, an astronomer, born at Dantzic 28 Jan., 1611; died 28 Jan., 1687. He built an observatory at Dantzic for the purpose of making accurate observations, the result of which he published under the title of 'Selenographia, or a Description of the Moon,' 1647. This was followed by other works, the most distinguished of which was his 'Cometographia,' 1668. Having sent a copy of this work to Dr. Robert Hooke, it occasioned a controversy between them on this point: 'Whether distances and altitudes could be taken with plain sights nearer than to a minute,' which Hooke denied and Hevelius maintained. Besides the above work, Hevelius wrote 'Uranographia,' 'De Naturâ Saturni,' &c.

HÉVIN, PRUDENT, an eminent surgeon of Paris, born 1715; died 5 Dec., 1789.

HEWSON, WILLIAM, F.R.S., was born at Hexham, Northumberland, 14 Nov., 1739. He served his time under his father, who was a surgeon and apothecary, after which he visited London, and became a pupil of Dr. Hunter, whom he also assisted in his lectures. In 1771 he obtained the Copley medal from the Royal Society, for his discoveries of the lymphatic system in birds and fishes. He also published 'Experimental Inquiries into the Properties of the Blood;' and, in 1774, his treatise on the Lymphatic System. Died 1 May, 1774.

HEXHAM, JOHN OF. See JOHN.

HEY, JOHN, D.D., was born 1734, and educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, from whence he removed in 1758 to a fellowship in Sidney College, where he proceeded through all the degrees to that of doctor in divinity in 1780, when he became the first professor of divinity on the Norrisian foundation, which chair he resigned in 1795. He was for many years rector of Passenham, Northamptonshire, and of Calverton, Bucks, but resigned both in 1814 to settle in London, where he died 1815. His works are 'Redemption, a Sea-

HEYDEN, JOHN VAN DER, a landscape-painter, born at Gorcum 1637; died 1712.

HEYLYN, or HEYLYN, PETER, DD., was born at Burford, Oxfordshire, 29 Nov., 1600. He became a student of Hart Hall, Oxford, but afterwards obtained a fellowship in Magdalen College, which he resigned, in 1629, on being appointed chaplain to Charles I. In 1631 he published his 'History of St. George,' for which the king gave him the rectory of Hemmingford, Huntingdonshire, and a prebend of Westminster, to which was added the living of Houghton, in the bishopric of Durham. In 1633 he was created D.D.; in 1637 he became treasurer of Westminster; and, soon after, rector of Islip, Oxfordshire, which he exchanged for the living of South Warmborough, Hampshire. On the breaking out of the civil wars, the parliament ordered his estate to be sequestered, in consequence of which he went to Oxford, where he wrote a weekly paper, called 'Mercurius Aucibus;' but when the king's affairs became desperate, he retired to Abingdon. At the Restoration he recovered his preferments, and died 8 May, 1662. His miscellaneous works were collected into one volume, folio, 1682. His other publications are: Cosmography; A Help to English History, a new edition of which was published by Dr. Wright in 1773; Theologia veterum; Short View of the Life of Charles I.; Examen Historicum; History of the Reformation of the Church of England; Life of Archbishop Laud; History of the Presbyterians.

HEYNE, CHRISTIAN GOTTLÖB, one of the most illustrious critics of Germany, was born at Chemnitz, in Saxony, 25 Sept., 1729. His father, a poor weaver, was unable to pay for his education, but young Heyne's application and zeal enabled him to acquire a vast stock of learning. During the Seven Years' War he was obliged to fly from one town to another; but in 1763 he succeeded Gesner in the professorship of eloquence and poetry at Leipzig, where he died 14 July, 1812. He published editions of Homer, Virgil, Pindar, Diodorus Siculus, Tibullus, Epictetus, &c., with valuable notes; 'Opuscula Academica,' 6 vols.; and Antiquarische Aufsätze, essays on the history of art, 2 vols.

HEYRICK, ELIZABETH, daughter of John Colman, of Leicester, and wife of Lieut. Heyrick, was a member of the Society of Friends, and wrote many pamphlets on philanthropic subjects. Born 1769; died 18 Oct., 1831.

HEYWOOD, ELIZA, a voluminous writer, born in London 1693; died 25 Feb., 1756. Her latter and best writings are, 'The Female Spectator,' 4 vols.; 'Epistles for the Ladies,' 2 vols.; 'Fortunate Foundling;' 'Adventures of Nature;' 'History of Betsy Thoughtless;' 'Jenny and Jemmy Jessamy;' 'Invisible Spy;' and 'A Present for a Servant Maid.'

HEYWOOD, JOHN, a poet, born at North Mims, near St. Alban's, Hertfordshire, and educated at Oxford; after which he became, through Sir Thomas More, a great favourite with Henry VIII. He also continued in the court of Edward VI., and was much in the confidence of queen Mary, on whose death, being a Catholic, he went abroad and died at Mechlin, 1565. He wrote 'The Parable of the Spider and Fly,' a voluminous poem, 1556.

HICKES.

His other works are a Dialogue of Proverbs, and several plays. He left two sons (1.) Ellis Heywood, born in London, and educated at All Souls' College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship; after which he went to Louvain, and became a Jesuit. (2.) Jasper Heywood, born in London 1535, became fellow of Merton College, Oxford; but in 1562 he entered among the Jesuits at Rome. He died at Naples 9 Jan., 1598. He translated three of Seneca's tragedies into English, and wrote various poems in the 'Paradise of Dainty Devices,' 1573.

HEYWOOD, OLIVER, a nonconformist, born at Bolton, Lancashire, March, 1629. He had his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was then ordained in the Presbyterian way, as minister of Coley chapel, Yorkshire, from which he was ejected at the Restoration. Died 4 March, 1702. His works are: Heart Treasure; Closet Prayer; Sure Mercies of David; Life of Mr. Angier, &c. His brother, Nathaniel Heywood, also an ejected minister, died 16 Dec., 1677. A volume of his sermons, entitled 'Christ Displayed,' was printed in 1679.

HEYWOOD, THOMAS, an English actor and dramatist, who flourished in the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I. Twenty-four of his plays, the best of which is 'A Woman killed with Kindness,' have been printed; and he was likewise the author of numerous other works.

HICKERINGILL, EDMUND, a clergyman of eccentric character, born in Essex, 1630. He had his education at Cambridge; after which he became a lieutenant in the army, and went to Jamaica, of which Island he published a description. On entering into orders, he obtained the vicarage of Boxted, in Essex, and afterwards the rectory of All-Saints, in Colchester, where he died after leading an irregular and turbulent life, 30 Nov., 1708. His tracts were collected by himself 1707, and republished 1716.

HICKES, GEORGE, D.D., was born at Newsham, Yorkshire, 30 June, 1642. He had his grammatical education at the school of North Allerton, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Oxford; but afterwards he went to Magdalen College, next to Magdalen-Hall, and in 1664 to Lincoln College, where he obtained a fellowship. After this he travelled, and at Paris contracted an intimacy with Henry Justel, who intrusted to his care his father's manuscript of the 'Codex canonum ecclesie universalis,' to be presented to the university of Oxford. In 1677 he accompanied his patron, the Duke of Lauderdale, to Scotland, where he was complimented with the degree of doctor of laws at St. Andrews, but he afterwards took the same in regular course at Oxford. In 1680 he was promoted to a prebend of Worcester, and presented the same year to the vicarage of All-Hallows, Barking. In 1683 he became dean of Worcester; but at the Revolution he lost that and his other preferments for not taking the oaths. In 1693 he was consecrated bishop of Thetford by the nonjuring prelates, who were desirous of keeping up their separation from the established church. Died 15 Dec. 1715. Dr. Hickes was particularly skilled in northern literature. His chief works are: 'Institutiones Grammaticæ Anglo-Saxonicæ et Mæso-Gothicæ;' 'Antiquæ Literaturæ Septentrionalis Thesaurus,' 3 vols.; Sermons, 3 vols.; Jovian, or an Answer to Julian the Apostate; some Discourses on Dr. Burnet and Dr. Tillotson; conroversial pieces against Catholicism; various tracts in defence of the Nonjurors. His brother, John Hikes, became a Presbyterian and was deprived of the living of Stoke, Devonshire, for non-conformity, 1602. In 1685 he joined the Duke of Monmouth's army, for which he was executed.

HICKMAN, HENRY, B.D., a native of Worcester, was educated first at Cambridge and afterwards at Oxford, where he became fellow of Magdalen College. At the Restoration he lost his fellowship; on which he went to Leyden, where he died 1692. His works are for the most part polemical.

HICKS, FRANCIS, was born 1566, at Tredington, Worcestershire. He was educated at Oxford; after which he retired to his estate. Died 9 Jan., 1630. His translation of Lucian was published by his son, Thomas Hicks, M.A., chaplain of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1634.

HIDALGO, DON JOSEPH GARCIA, a Spanish painter and writer on his art, was born about 1656, and died about 1720.

HIERO I., King of Syracuse, succeeded his brother Gelon 478 B.C.; died 416 B.C.

HIERO II., elected King of Syracuse, 269 B.C.; died 215.

HIERON, SAMUEL, was born at Epping, Essex, 1572. He was educated at Cambridge; after which he became rector of Modbury, in Devonshire, where he died 1617. His works are wholly practical, and were printed together 1614, and again 1620.

HIEROCLES, governor of Alexandria, and a bitter persecutor of the Church in the 4th cent. He had been a teacher of rhetoric in Bithynia; and he wrote two treatises against the Gospels in which he sought to prove that Apollonius Tyanæus performed greater wonders than Jesus Christ.

HIEROCLES, a Platonic philosopher of Alexandria, about A.D. 450. He wrote a treatise on Providence; another on Fate; and a Commentary on the Golden Verses of Pythagoras.

HIFERNAN, PAUL, was born in the county of Dublin 1719, and educated for the priesthood of the Roman church; instead of which he went abroad, and applied himself to physic, but never attained any eminence. He lived in London by writing for the stage and the booksellers, though none of his productions are now read. He died in obscurity June 1777.

HIGDEN, RALPH, a chronicler, was a Benedictine in the monastery of St. Werburg, at Chester, where he died at an advanced age about 1360. His 'Polychronicon' was translated by John de Trevisa, and printed by Caxton 1482.

HIGGINS, JOHN, an old writer, was born in Somersetshire, and educated at Oxford. He was in orders, and compiled—The Flosculi of Terence; Holcot's Dictionaire, 1572; The Nomenclator of Adrian Junius, translated into English, 1585; An Answer to Perkins, concerning Christ's Descent into Hell; part of the Mirror for Magistrates, 1575.

HIGGINS, MATTHEW JAMES, an English journalist, who for many years was a contributor to the Times, Edinburgh Review, Cornhill Magazine, and Pall Mall Gazette. He was best known to the public by his favourite signatures of 'Jacob Omnium' and 'Paterfamilias,' which are identified with many important social and educational reforms. He died at Abingdon 14 August, 1868, having been admitted a few days previously into membership with the Church of Rome.

HILDERSHAM.

HIGGONS, BEVIL, son of Sir Thomas, mentioned below, was born 1670. He was educated first at St. John's College, Oxford; from whence he removed to Cambridge, and next to the Middle Temple. He adhered strenuously to king James II., and died in France in March, 1735. His works are—The Generous Conqueror, a Tragedy; A Poem on the Peace of Utrecht; Historical and Critical Remarks on Burnet's History of his own Times; A Short View of English History.

HIGGONS, SIR THOMAS, was born at Westburgn, Shropshire, 1624. He was educated at Oxford, and married the widow of Robert earl of Essex, and delivered a Latin oration at her funeral 1650. His second wife was the daughter of Sir Bevil Greenville. He was knighted at the Restoration, and sent envoy, first to the duke of Saxony, and next to Vienna. Died 24 Nov., 1691. His works are—'A Panegyric to the King'; 'The History of Isuf Bassa'; 'The Venetian Triumph.'

HIGGS, GRIFFIN or GRIFFITH, was born near Henley, Oxfordshire, 1580. After being educated at Oxford he went (1627) to the Hague, as chaplain to the queen of Bohemia. In 1630 he took his doctor's degree at Leyden; and on his return home was made dean of Lichfield, but lost that preferment in the Rebellion. Died 16 Dec., 1650. His works are—'Problemata Theologica,' 'Miscellanæ Theses Theologicae.'

HIGHMORE, JOSEPH, a painter, born in London, 1692; died at Canterbury 3 March, 1780. He painted numerous portraits of eminent persons, and a set of pictures from Pamela; Hagar and Ishmael, in the Foundling Hospital; and several historical pieces of merit. He was also an author, and published—'A critical Examination of the two Paintings by Rubens in the Banqueting House at Whitehall'; 'The Practice of Perspective'; 'Observations on a pamphlet entitled, Christianity not founded on Argument; Essays, 2 vols.

HIGHMORE, NATHANIEL, M.D., a medical writer, born at Fordingbridge, Hants, 6 Feb., 1613; died at Sherborne, Dorsetshire, 21 March, 1684.

HILARION, the founder of the monastic life in Palestine, was born about 291, and died in the isle of Cyprus about 371.

HILARY (St.), bishop of Poitiers, a Father of the Church, died 367 or 368. The best edition of his works is that of Paris, fol., 1697.

HILARY (St.), bishop of Arles, died 5 May, 449. He wrote Homilies; the Life of St. Honoratus, &c.

HILARY (St.), succeeded St. Leo as Pope 401; died 21 Feb., 468.

HILDA (St.), abbess of Streaneshalch (now Whitby), Yorkshire, died 680, aged 63. Festival Nov. 18.

HILDEGARDE (St.), abbess of Mount St. Rupert, near Bingen, on the Rhine; died 1180. She composed three books of Revelations, &c.

HILDERSHAM, ARTHUR, a puritan divine, whose father was nearly related to cardinal Pole, and consequently to the royal family of England. He was born at Stetchworth, Cambridgeshire, 6 Oct., 1563, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge; after which he obtained a fellowship at Trinity Hall. In 1593 he was presented to the living of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in Leicestershire, where he continued till his death, 4 March, 1631. His works are—Lectures on John; Lectures on Psalm 51; A Treatise on the Lord's Supper. His son, Samuel, was ejected at the Restoration from the living of West Felton, in Shropshire. He died 1674.

HILDESLEY, MARK, an English prelate, born 9 Dec. 1608, at Murston, Kent, and educated at Trinity College Cambridge. In 1755 he was appointed to the bishopric of Sodor and Man, with which he held the mastership of Sherbourne Hospital, and a prebend in Lincoln cathedral. Died 7 Dec. 1772. It was owing to his exertions that the Bible was translated into the Manx language.

HILL, AARON, a poet, was born in Westminster 10 Feb, 1685. He was educated at Westminster School, which he left before he was 15, and went to visit his relation, Lord Paget, then ambassador to the Porte. After going through several parts of the Levant, and some of the courts of Europe, he returned with his noble relation in 1703. He next became a travelling tutor, and in 1709 commenced author, by publishing a 'History of the Ottoman Empire.' His next performance was a poem in praise of Lord Peterborough, who made him his secretary. On bringing out an opera called 'Rinaldo,' which was the first piece of music composed by Handel, he became manager of the king's theatre, for which he was well qualified, as appears in his poem on the 'Art of Acting,' and his periodical Essays, entitled 'The Prompter.' He also turned his attention to a variety of schemes, one of which was the extraction of oil from beech-nuts; another, the settlement of Georgia, in America; and, lastly, the cutting of timber for the navy in the Highlands. None of these, however, were successful, and he devoted his time, at the close of life, to study and to the education of his children. He brought out several plays, mostly translations from the French: besides which he wrote a poem on Gideon, and other pieces, all of which were collected in 4 vols. 8vo. Died 8 Feb., 1750. Mr. Hill was once on good terms with Pope, but afterwards they quarrelled, and Hill was enrolled in the Dunciad.

HILL, ABRAHAM, F.R.S., was born in London 1633; became a lord of trade and comptroller of the archbishop of Canterbury; and died 5 Feb., 1721. His 'Familiar Letters' were published 1767.

HILL, GEORGE, D.D., a clergyman of the church of Scotland, was born at St. Andrew's June, 1750. He was educated at the university of his native place, where he first obtained the Greek professorship in the college of St. Salvador, and afterwards that of divinity. He next became principal of St. Mary's College, chaplain to the king for Scotland, and fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Died 19 Dec., 1819. He published a volume of sermons; 'Theological Institutes;' 'Lectures upon portions of the Old Testament;' 'Lectures on Divinity,' 3 vols.

HILL, Sir JOHN, M.D. was born about 1716, and bred to the business of an apothecary, which he carried on for some years in St. Martin's Lane. His first publication was a translation of Theophrastus, 'On Gems,' which procured him reputation, and induced him to undertake a General Natural History, in 3 vols. folio. He now became a general writer on a variety of subjects. He published a supplement to Chambers's Cyclopædia, conducted the 'British Magazine,' and edited a daily paper called 'The Inspector.' At this time he obtained the degree of M.D. from Scotland, and set up as an empiric by inventing some popular remedies. Under the patronage of the earl of Bute he commenced a voluminous work—'A System of Botany,' which he sent to the king of Sweden, who invested him with an order of knighthood. Besides the above works he wrote many others, as, Mrs. Glasses' Cookery; A Review of the works of the Royal Society; some novels; and a few farces. Died 22 Nov., 1775.

HILL, JOSEPH, a puritan divine, was born at Bromley, Yorkshire, Oct., 1625, and obtained a fellowship at Magdalen College, Cambridge, which he was compelled to resign on account of his nonconformity 1662. Leaving this country he officiated as minister to the English congregation at Middleburg, and afterwards to that at Rotterdam, where he died 5 Nov., 1707. He published an enlarged edition of Schrevelius's Greek Lexicon, and Dissertations on the Antiquity of Temples and Churches.

HILL, Sir RICHARD, bart., brother of the Rev. Rowland Hill, was born at Hawkstone, Shropshire, 1733, and educated at Oxford. He became zealously attached to the Calvinistic Methodists, and engaged in several sharp controversies on their behalf. On the death of his father he succeeded him as M.P. for Shropshire; and died 1809. He published several works in vindication of the Calvinistic doctrines.

HILL, ROBERT, a self-taught genius, born at Miswell, near Tring, Herts, 11 Jan., 1699; died at Buckingham, July, 1777. He was bred a tailor and staymaker, but by indefatigable application he acquired a sufficient knowledge of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages to be able to teach them. His works are—Remarks on Berkeley's Essay on Spirit; The Character of a Jew; Criticisms on Job.

HILL, ROWLAND, son of Sir Rowland Hill, bart., was born at Hawkstone, near Shrewsbury, 1744, and educated at Cambridge. He took deacon's orders in the Established Church, but soon afterwards became a devoted disciple of Whitefield, and prosecuted his favourite plan of itinerant preaching wherever he could find an audience. He fixed his head-quarters at Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire, where he erected a Tabernacle. In 1783 he opened Surrey Chapel in the Blackfriars Road, London, where he regularly preached during six months of every year, until his death on 12 April, 1833. Mr. Hill published several sermons and polemical treatises, but is best known by his 'Village Dialogues,' originally published in the Evangelical Magazine 1801.

HILL, ROWLAND, Viscount Hill, a gallant British general, born in Shropshire 1772, being a nephew of Sir Richard Hill mentioned above. Entering the military service at an early age, he rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel of the 90th regiment, which he commanded during the campaign in Egypt. After the return of the troops from that country, he was appointed brigadier-general on the Irish staff, and, in 1808, he embarked with his brigade to join the army in the Peninsula. During the whole of Sir John Moore's advance and retreat, Hill continued indefatigable in his exertions, and was established with a corps of reserve to protect the embarkation of the army at Corunna. Subsequently he commanded the troops ordered from Ireland for the second expedition to the Peninsula, whence in 1811 he was compelled to come to England in consequence of ill-health. He soon returned, however, and, at the battle of Talavera, and of Arroyo de Molinos (1812) so highly distinguished himself that he received the thanks of Parliament, was created K.B., and appointed governor of Blackness Castle. In 1814 he was made a baron. The following victories are enumerated on Lord Hill's monumental column near Shrewsbury:—Roliça, Vimiera, Corunna, Douro, Talavera, Busaco, Arroyo de Molinas, Almazre, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, Hillette, Orthez, Aire, Tarbes, Toulouse, and Waterloo. After the restoration of the Bourbon family to the throne of France he was appointed second in command of the army of occupation. In 1828 he was appointed the general commanding-in-chief of the army, and resigned that high office in 1842, when he was raised to the dignity of viscount. He died very shortly afterwards, on 10 Dec., 1842.—Rosé.

HILL, THOMAS, D.D., a minister of the Church of England, who became a Catholic towards the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, and made his motives public in a work entitled, 'A Quatron of Reasons,' 1604.

HILL, THOMAS FORD, F.S.A., an English antiquary and philologist, died at Ariano, in Apulia, 10 July, 1795.

HILL, WILLIAM, D.D., a classical scholar, born at Cudworth, Warwickshire, 1619. He was a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and afterwards master of St. Patrick's School, Dublin, from which situation he was ejected at the Restoration. Died Nov., 1667. He prepared an edition of Dionysius Periegetes, first published 1658.

HILLIARD, NICHOLAS, a painter, born at Exeter 1547; died 1619. He was goldsmith, carver, and painter, to Queen Elizabeth.

HILTON, JOHN, Mus. B., of the university of Cambridge, was organist to the church of St. Margaret, Westminster, and also clerk of that parish. He died about 1655. Some of his catches and other compositions possess great merit.

HILTON, WALTER, D.D., a Carthusian monk of the monastery of Shene, Surrey, lived in the reign of Henry VI. His 'Ladder of Perfection,' an ascetic work, was first printed 1494.

HILTON, WILLIAM, an English painter, and royal academican, born at Lincoln 3 June, 1786; died 30 Dec., 1839. He succeeded Fuseli as keeper of the academy. One of his best works is 'Una and the Lion entering the Cave of Corceca.'

HIMMEL, FREDERICK HENRY, a Prussian musical composer, born 1765; died at Berlin 1814.

HINCHLIFFE, JOHN, an English prelate, born in Westminster 1731, and educated at Cambridge. In 1768 he was made master of Trinity College, in that university, through the interest of the duke of Grafton, who, when prime minister, advanced him to the bishopric of Peterborough, with which he held the deanery of Durham till his death 11 Jan., 1794. He published three sermons; and a posthumous volume of his Discourses was printed 1796.

HINCKLEY, JOHN, D.D., was born in Warwickshire 1617. He studied at St. Alban Hall, Oxford, and obtained the rectory of Northfield, in Worcestershire. Died 13 April, 1695. Dr. Hinckley printed some sermons and controversial pieces against Baxter, in a collection entitled 'Fasciculus Literarum.'

HINCKS, EDWARD, D.D., was son of Dr. Thomas Dix Hincks, professor of Hebrew, and head master of the classical school in the Belfast Academical Institution. He was born in the county of Cork 1791, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin. (B.A. 1812; fellow 1813; M.A.

1817; B.D. 1823; D.D. 1829). In 1826 he was presented to the rectory of Killyleagh, co. Down, and held it till his death at the close of 1866. Dr. Hincks was an eminent oriental scholar, and contributed numerous valuable papers, especially on Egyptian hieroglyphics and Assyrian cuneiform inscriptions, to the Royal Irish Academy, the Royal Society of Literature, the Asiatic Society, and the British Association.

HINCMAR, one of the most learned men of the ninth century, was originally a monk of St. Denys, in France. He was consecrated archbishop of Rheims 845, and died 21 Dec., 882. The best edition of his works is by Father Simond, 2 vols. folio, 1645.

HIPPARCHUS, an astronomer, was born at Nice, in Bithynia, about 160 B.C. He first reduced astronomy to a science, and prosecuted the study systematically. His Commentary upon the Phenomena of Aratus is extant, and was printed at Florence 1567.

HIPPOCRATES, the father of physic, was born in the island of Cos, about 460 B.C. He studied at first under Herodicus, who invented the gymnastic medicine, and next under Gorgias, a celebrated sophist; after which he spent some years in travelling, and then fixed his principal residence at Larissa, in Thessaly. Such, however, was his fame, that he received invitations from several cities in Greece; and many stories are told of him which rest upon no good authority, particularly that of his being sent for by the people of Abdera, to cure Democritus of his supposed madness; and that he went to Athens in a time of pestilence, where, for his services, he was rewarded with a crown of gold. He died at Larissa, at the age of one hundred and upwards. His works were printed first by Aldus, at Venice, 1526. Subsequent editions, in Greek and Latin, are exceedingly numerous; but the best is that of Kühn, at Leipzig, 3 vols. 8vo., 1827.

HIPPOLYTUS (ST.), a bishop, who laid down his life for the truth of Christianity, in the persecution of Alexander Severus about A.D. 230. His works in Greek and Latin were printed by Fabricius, 2 vols. folio, 1716-18.

HIPPONAX, a satiric poet, of Ephesus, who lived about 540 years B.C.

HIRE. See LA HIRE.

HITTORF, JACQUES IGNACE, a distinguished architect of Paris, was born at Cologne 20 Aug., 1793, and died 24 March, 1867. M. Hittorf was member of the Institute and of the Legion of Honour, knight of the Black Eagle of Prussia, and member and royal gold medalist of the Royal Institute of British Architects. He was architect of the Cirques de l'Empereur and de l'Impératrice, of the great church, or rather Basilica, of St. Vincent de Paul, of the fountains and pavilions in the Champs Elysées, and of various Mairies and other important buildings. His profound knowledge of classic antiquity, and his various important publications, especially that on the art of polychromy as applied to monumental art, place him in the first rank among the writers on his art. His last work was the noble station of the Chemin de Fer du Nord.

HOADLY, BENJAMIN, a celebrated prelate, born at Westerham, Kent, 14 Nov., 1676, and educated under his father, who was master of the grammar school at Norwich; after which he went to Catherine Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. On taking orders he was chosen lecturer of St. Mildred, in the Poultry, and, in 1704, was presented to the rectory of St. Peter-le-Poort, Broad Street. He now became distinguished by his skill in controversy, and his turn for politics. He had a dispute with Calamy about the reasonableness of conformity, and next with Atterbury on several occasions, particularly in regard to non-resistance. For this he was presented to the living of Streatham, and, on the accession of George I., he was advanced to the bishopric of Bangor, which diocese he never visited. A sermon of his at court on the kingdom of Christ, in which he maintained that the clergy could claim no civil powers, occasioned the Bangorian controversy, in which he had to encounter Sherlock, Hare, Law, and other eminent writers. From Bangor he was removed successively to Hereford, Salisbury, and Winchester, where he died, 17 April, 1761. The bishop's works were published in 3 vols. folio.

HOADLY, BENJAMIN, M.D., F.R.S., son of the preceding, was born in London 10 Feb., 1705-6, and educated at Cambridge. He became physician to George II., and Frederick prince of Wales. He died at Chelsea 10 Aug., 1757, having published some medical and philosophical pieces; but he is best known as the author of 'The Suspicious Husband,' a comedy.

HOADLY, JOHN, born at Tottenham 1678, was youngest son of the Rev. Samuel Hoadly, and brother to Benjamin Hoadly, bishop of Winchester. In 1727 he was advanced to the sees of Leighlin and Ferns, and was translated to Dublin 1729-30. In 1742 he succeeded to the primatial see of Armagh. Died 19 July, 1746, aged 68. He published a volume in defence of Bishop Burnet's Exposition of the thirty-nine articles.

HOADLY, JOHN, LL.D., the youngest son of the bishop of Winchester, was born in London 8 Oct., 1711. He studied the law, and took his degrees in that faculty at Cambridge; after which he entered into orders, and obtained some valuable preferments in the church and diocese of Winchester. He wrote poems, two or three comedies, and an oratorio. Died 16 March, 1776.

HOARD, SAMUEL, B.D., born in London about 1590, and educated at Oxford. He obtained the rectory of Moreton, Essex, where he died 15 Feb., 1657-8. After having been a rigid Calvinist, he altered his sentiments, and published a book in favour of universal redemption, entitled 'God's Love to Mankind,' which was answered by Bishop Davenant and Dr. Twisse.

HOARE, PRINCE, F.S.A., an artist and author, born at Bath 1755, being the son of William Hoare, who is mentioned below. He studied painting at the Royal Academy, and afterwards at Rome, but eventually he abandoned that pursuit in consequence of ill-health. He now wrote for the stage, and in 1799 was appointed foreign secretary to the Royal Academy. His death took place at Brighton 22 Dec., 1834. He published 'Extracts from a Correspondence with the Academies of Vienna and St. Petersburg, on the Cultivation of the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture in the Austrian and Russian Dominions,' 1802; 'Academic Annals,' 1805-9; 'An Inquiry into the requisite Cultivation and present State of the Art of Design in England,' 1806; 'The Artist,' 2 vols. 1809-10; 'Memoirs of Granville Sharp, esq.,' 2 vols. 1828; 'Epochs of the Arts,' 1813. He likewise wrote about twenty dramatic pieces, including

'No Song, No Supper,' a comic opera; 'Lock and Key'; 'Indiscretion,' a comedy; and 'My Grandmother.'

HOARE, SIR RICHARD COLT, Bart., an English antiquary, born 9 Dec., 1728; died 19 May, 1838. His chief works are 'A Classical Tour through Italy and Sicily,' 1819; 'Ancient History of North and South Wiltshire,' 2 vols. royal folio, 1810-19; and 'History of Modern Wiltshire,' 11 parts, forming 6 vols. folio., 1822-52.

HOARE, WILLIAM, an English artist, born at Eye, Suffolk, about 1707; died at Bath 1792. He painted some good altar-pieces and portraits, which last were chiefly in crayons.

HOBBS, THOMAS, was born 15 April, 1688, at Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, where his father was minister. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford; after which he became tutor to Lord William Cavendish, with whom he made the tour of France and Italy. He was also entrusted with the education of the young earl of Devonshire, whom he accompanied in his travels. At the commencement of the troubles in 1640, he withdrew to Paris, where he contracted an acquaintance with Des Cartes and Gassendi. In 1642 he printed his book 'De Cive,' the dangerous principles of which raised him many enemies. A new edition, however, appeared in 1647; and, in the same year, the author was appointed mathematical tutor to the prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II., who, at his accession, settled upon him a pension of one hundred pounds a-year. In 1650 came out his 'Treatise on Human Nature'; and another 'De Corpore Politico, or Elements of the Law.' But his greatest work was the 'Leviathan,' published in folio, in 1651, in which he asserted doctrines tending to overturn all government and religion. In 1654 appeared his 'Letter on Liberty and Necessity,' which was attacked by Bishop Bramhall. Soon after this Hobbes had a controversy with Dr. Wallis, in which he only betrayed his ignorance of mathematics; although he set up for a reformer of geometry. In 1666 his 'Leviathan,' and treatise 'De Cive,' were censured by parliament, which put him in so great a fright, that he thought measures were about to be taken to punish him for atheism. In 1668 he printed a collection of his pieces, and, in 1672, his own life, in Latin verse. These works were followed by a translation of Homer, and that by several miscellaneous works; among which was one entitled 'Behemoth, or a History of the Civil Wars.' The latter years of his life was spent at Chatsworth, the seat of the earl of Devonshire, where he died 4 Dec., 1679. Hobbes was remarkably timid, and particularly fearful of ghosts. Besides the works already noticed, he published—'A Translation of Thucydides; De Mirabilibus Pecci, a Latin poem; Elementa Philosophiæ; Six Lessons to the Professors of Mathematics; Decameron Physiologicum; and several miscellaneous pieces. A collected edition of his works was published by Sir W. Molesworth, 16 vols. 8vo., London 1839-45.

HOBBS, MINDERHOUT, a landscape painter, born at Antwerp about 1611.

HOBHOUSE, SIR BENJAMIN, bart., an English statesman, born 1757; died 14 Aug., 1831. In 1797 he was elected to the House of Commons, where he became distinguished as one of Pitt's most redoubtable adversaries, and a steady advocate of peace with France. He retired from public life 1818.

HOBLYN.

HOBLYN, ROBERT, a member of parliament, celebrated as a book-collector, died 17 Nov., 1756, aged 46.

HOBSON, RICHARD, M.D., was a native of Cumberland, and received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge (M.B. 1825; M.D. 1830). He practised as a physician with great success at Leeds, where he died 30 Nov., 1868, aged 73. Dr. Hobson published a volume of Reminiscences of his friend Charles Waterton, the eminent naturalist.

HOBSON, THOMAS, the celebrated carrier of Cambridge, died 1 Jan., 1630-1, æt. 86. It is said that he was the first person in this kingdom who let horses for hire, and the scrupulous pertinacity with which he refused to allow any horse to be taken from his stables except in its proper turn, gave rise to the well-known proverb of 'Hobson's Choice.' He is immortalised in two humorous epitaphs written by Milton. Hobson was a liberal benefactor to the town of Cambridge.

HOCCEVE, or OCCLEVE, THOMAS, an English poet, born about 1370. He was bred to the law, and became a writer to the privy seal. He had also a pension from the crown; and was intimate with Chaucer. He died about 1454. His principal piece is called 'The Story of Jonathan.'

HOCHE, LAZARE, a native of Versailles, who distinguished himself as a brave and intrepid general in the French army during the revolution. Born 25 June, 1768; died 18 Sept., 1797.

HOCHSTETTER, ANDREW ADAM, a protestant divine, of Tubingen, born 1688; died 27 April, 1717.

HODGES, NATHANIEL, M.D., was educated at Oxford, and subsequently practised as a physician in London, where he continued during the plague. He wrote An Apology for the Profession and Professors of Physic; and An Historical Account of the Plague of London in 1665. Died 1684.

HODGES, WILLIAM, a landscape painter, born in London 1744. He studied under Wilson, after which he accompanied Captain Cook on his second voyage, as draftsman. He next visited the East Indies, where he made some fine drawings, of which engravings were published, with descriptions. Died 6 March, 1797.

HODGSON, FRANCIS, B.D., provost of Eton College, and rector of Cottesford, Oxfordshire, died 29 Dec., 1822, aged 71. He published a translation of Juvenal, 1808; 'Lady Jane Grey, with Miscellaneous Poems in English and Latin,' 1809; 'Sir Edgar, a tale in two cantos,' 1810, &c.

HODGSON, JOHN, a native of Westmorland, became vicar of Hartburn, Northumberland, 1833, and died 12 June, 1845, aged 66. His 'History of Northumberland' is a valuable contribution to topographical literature.

HODGSON, JOSEPH, F.R.S., an eminent surgeon, who died in London 7 Feb., 1869, aged 80.

HODGSON, ROBERT, D.D., F.R.S., dean of Carlisle and rector of St. George's, Hanover Square, London; died 10 Oct., 1844. He wrote the Life of Bishop Porteus, 1811, and published an edition of that prelate's works, 6 vols. 8vo.

HODY, HUMPHREY, was born 1 Jan., 1659, at Odcombe, Somersetshire. He was educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, having previously distinguished himself by a 'Dissertation against Aristæus's History of the Seventy-two Interpreters.' He was also made chaplain to Bishop Stillingfleet, and afterwards to the archbishops Tillotson and Tenison, the latter of whom gave him the rectory of Chart, Kent, which he exchanged for the united livings of St. Michael Royal, and St. Martin Vintry, London. In 1698 he was appointed regius professor of Greek, and in 1701 he engaged in a controversy about the powers of the convocation. In 1704 he was made archdeacon of Oxford. He died 20 Jan., 1706, and by his will founded ten scholarships in his college. His other works are: 'Prologomena to Malcæ's Chronicle'; 'The Unreasonableness of a Separation from the New Bishops,' against the nonjurors; 'A Dissertation on the Resurrection of the same Body'; 'A History of English Councils and Convocations.' After his death was published 'De Græcis Illustribus, lingua Græca: literarumque humaniorum instauratoribus eorum vitis, scriptis et elogiis.'

HOECK, JOHN VAN, a painter of Antwerp, born 1600; died 1650.

HOECK, ROBERT VAN, also a painter of Antwerp, born 1609; died 1668.

HOELTZLINUS, JEREMIAH, a classical editor, born at Nuremberg; died at Leyden 1641.

HOESCHELIUS, DAVID, a learned critic of Augsburg, born 1556; died 30 Oct., 1617.

HOET, GERARD, a Dutch painter, born 1648; died 1733.

HOFER, ANDREW, the chief of the Tyrolese insurgents in 1809, was born in the valley of Passy 1767. Although only an innkeeper, he incited the Tyrolese to insurrection after the invasion of the French army 1808; put himself at their head, and obtained several successes. Being arrested after the treaty of Vienna, he was taken to Mantua and shot 20 Feb., 1810, by order of the French government. The emperor of Austria ennobled his family 1829.

HOFFMAN, FRANÇOIS BENOÎT, a French dramatist and critic, born at Nancy 11 July, 1700; died at Paris 25 April, 1828.

HOFFMAN, JOHN JAMES, professor of Greek at Basle, where he was born in 1635, and died 10 May, 1706. His greatest work is the 'Lexicon Universale Historico, Geographico, Poetico, Philosophico, Politico, Philologicum,' which was published in 2 vols. folio, 1677; and in 1698, in 4 vols.

HOFFMANN, CHRISTIAN GODFREY, a German jurist, born 8 Nov., 1692, at Lauban, in Lusatia; died 1 Sept., 1735. He wrote a great number of juridical works.

HOFFMANN, ERNEST THEODORE WILLIAM, a German romancist, musical composer, and artist, born at Königsberg 24 Jan., 1776; died at Berlin 25 June, 1822.

HOFFMANN, FREDERICK, a celebrated physician, born at Halle, in Saxony, 1660. He was chosen professor of physic at Halle 1693, which situation he retained till his death, 12 Nov., 1742. His works were printed at Geneva, 6 vols. folio, 1740; to which 3 vols. more were added in 1749.

HOFFMANN, MAURICE, a physician, professor at Altdorf, was born 1621, and died 20 April, 1698. To him is attributed the discovery of the pancreatic duct. He left thirteen works on anatomy, medicine, and botany; also a son, John Maurice Hoffmann (born at Altdorf 1653; died at Anspach 31 Oct., 1727), who followed in the footsteps of his father, and attained distinction as a physician and writer on subjects connected with his profession.

HOFLAND, THOMAS CHRISTOPHER, a landscape painter, born at Worksopp, Notts, on Christmas

HOGAN.

Day, 1777; died at Leamington 3 Jan., 1843. His wife, Mrs. Barbara Hogan, acquired great popularity, both in this country and the United States, by her poems and her story-books for the young—'The Daughter-in-Law,' 'Emily,' 'The Son of a Genius,' 'Clergyman's Widow,' &c. She died at Richmond 9 Nov., 1844, aged 74.

HOGAN, JOHN, a celebrated Irish sculptor, born at Tallow, co. Waterford, 1800; died 27 March, 1858.

HOGARTH, WILLIAM, was born in the parish of St. Martin, Ludgate, 1697 or 1698. He was bound apprentice to an engraver of arms on plate; but before his time expired he discovered his genius for painting; and the first piece which he executed was one of the Wanstead Assembly. It seems he carried on both professions at the same time, painting portraits, and engraving plates for the booksellers. He excelled, however, in conversation pieces, and was rising in reputation, when he married secretly the daughter of Sir James Thornhill. Soon after this he went to reside at Lambeth, where he painted some of the comic pieces for Vauxhall. He was the first artist who conceived and executed the idea of representing a series of adventures on canvas, in which the fortune of one character was conducted from the cradle to the grave. His excellence in this line is universally acknowledged; and his pictures have all the interest of a novel. But the works of Hogarth are moral as well as entertaining, particularly the 'Idle and Industrious Apprentices;' the 'Harlot and Rake's Progress;' and 'Marriage à-la-Mode.' Soon after the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, the painter went over to France, and was kept in custody some time at Calais, while taking a sketch of the gate, which circumstance he recorded in his print of 'Oh! the roast Beef of Old England.' In 1753 he published his 'Analysis of Beauty,' in which work he shows that a curve is the most natural and pleasing line. Hogarth was excessively vain, and uncommonly absent of mind. When he set up his carriage, having occasion to visit the lord mayor, on coming out he walked home, wet to the skin; and when asked where he left the chariot, said that he had forgotten it. About 1757 he succeeded his brother-in-law, Thornhill, as king's serjeant painter. Though now feeling the infirmities of age, his propensity to satire occasionally burst forth; and when Wilkes made a great noise with his patriotism, Hogarth caricatured him; which brought upon the painter the lash of Churchill, who, in his turn, was represented in the character of a drunken bear clerically dressed, holding a pot of porter. He died soon after this, 25 Oct., 1764.

HOGARTH, WILLIAM, D.D., a Catholic prelate, born at Doddin Green, near Kendal, Westmoreland, 25 March, 1786, and educated at Ushaw. After officiating for many years as priest at Cliffe, Yorkshire, he was removed to Darlington 1827, and in 1848 raised to the episcopate, being on 24 Aug. in that year consecrated bishop of Samosata and appointed vicar-apostolic of the northern district. He was translated to the see of Hexham (now Hexham and Newcastle) 29 Sept., 1850; and died at Darlington 29 Jan., 1866.

HOGG, JAMES, 'the Ettrick Shepherd,' a self-taught poet and miscellaneous writer, was born on the banks of the Ettrick, Selkirkshire, 25 Jan., 1772, according to his own account, though the parish register gives 9 Dec., 1770, as the date of his baptism. The son of a poor shepherd, he received scarcely any education; indeed he never had much more than half a year's schooling. At seven years of age he was sent to herd cows, and was afterwards employed in tending sheep upon the hills. While engaged in these lowly occupations he eagerly read all the books which came in his way, and, turning his attention to versification, composed some ballads, which became very popular. Mr. (afterwards Sir Walter) Scott's attention having been directed to Hogg's poetical talent, he advised him to bring out a volume of poems, which was published 1807, under the title of the 'Mountain Bard.' With the profits of this work, and a premium which he gained from the Highland Society for an 'Essay on Sheep,' he was tempted to embark in an agricultural speculation, which, unfortunately, proved a failure. Hogg then settled in Edinburgh, and commenced an active career as an author. In 1810 appeared 'The Forest Minstrel,' which was followed by 'The Queen's Wake, a legendary poem' (1813), undoubtedly his best work, and a number of other pieces. In 1814 the duke of Buccleuch granted him a lease, at a nominal rent, of a farm at Altrive Lake, in the wilds of Yarrow, and he subsequently attempted farming on a large scale, but with a ruinous result to himself. In 1832 he visited London, and during his brief stay here became the 'lion' of the day, he having by this time become widely known, not only by his own writings, but from the circumstance of his being so conspicuous a character in the famous 'Noctes Ambrosianae' in Blackwood's Magazine. He died at Altrive Lake 21 Nov., 1835. An edition of his Poetical Works, with a life of the author by Prof. Wilson, appeared in 6 vols. 12mo., 1838.

HOGGARD, or HUGGARD, MILES, an ingenious hosier of London, who, in the latter part of Henry VIII.'s reign, wrote a poem in defence of the Blessed Sacrament. It was considered so good a performance that several of the reformers took the pains to attack it, viz., William Keth, Robert Crowley, and John Plough. A collection of his songs and religious poems will be found in MS. Addit. 15,233.

HOHENLOHE-WALDENBERG-SCHILLINGS-FURST, ALEXANDER LEOPOLD FRANCIS EMMERICH Prince of, a Hungarian Catholic bishop, who is said by his prayers to have wrought many miraculous cures. He was born near Waldenburg 17 Aug., 1793; became bishop of Sardica in partibus 1844; and died 14 Nov., 1849.

HOLBACH, PAUL HENRI THIRY BARON DE, an eighteenth century philosopher, born at Heidesheim, in the palatinate, 1723; died at Paris 21 Jan., 1789. He went to the French capital in his youth, and his house became the resort of all the free-thinkers of the period,—Diderot, Grimm, Naigeon, &c. He openly professed atheism, and published 'Le Christianisme dévoilé;' 'Théologie portative;' 'Le Système de la Nature.' Nearly all his works of this class were published under assumed names. Baron de Holbach also translated several English and German works on philosophical and scientific subjects.

HOLBEIN, HANS, or JOHN, a painter, born at Grünstadt 1497. He learned the elements of his art from his father, whom he soon excelled, and gave proofs of his promising eminence in his Dance of the Peasants, and Death's Dance, painted for the fish market at Basle, which procured him the friendship of Erasmus, for whose 'Praise of Polly' he drew several whimsical designs. At the recommendation of Erasmus he came to England, and was employed first by Sir Thomas More, who introduced him to Henry VIII. He now rose to the zenith of his fortune in that monarch's court, and painted a vast number of admirable portraits. He died of the plague in 1543, and not in 1554, as is commonly stated.

HOLBERG, LOUIS BARON DE, a Danish writer, the Plautus of his country, was born at Bergen, Norway, 6 Nov., 1684; and died at Copenhagen 28 Jan., 1754. He was appointed professor of rhetoric at Copenhagen 1720, and composed a number of pieces, which entitle him to be regarded as the founder of the dramatic art in Denmark. He also wrote a History of Denmark; an Introduction to Universal History, which has been translated into English; epistles; fables; and epigrams.

HOLBOURNE, SIR ROBERT, an English lawyer and legal writer, died 1647.

HOLBROKE, JOHN, master of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and chancellor of that university in 1428 and 1429; died 1437. He wrote some astronomical and astrological treatises.

HOLCROFT, THOMAS, was born in Orange Court, Leicester Fields, 22 Dec., 1744. His father was a shoemaker in low circumstances, and the son, early in life, was employed in the stables of the Honourable Mr. Vernon. He also worked at his father's business, but left it, and tried his fortune on the stage, without success. He then turned dramatic writer, in which he had better luck; and some of his plays were very popular at the time. Besides these productions he wrote several novels, and translated a number of books from the French and German languages. At the commencement of the Revolution he espoused the cause of the republicans, and was committed for high treason; but when Hardy, Tooke, and Thelwall were acquitted he was discharged without trial. His last speculation was a publication of his travels in Germany and France, in 2 vols. Died 23 March, 1809. His daughter, Fanny Holcroft (d. 15 Oct., 1844), was the author of several esteemed works of fiction.

HOLDEN, GEORGE, an English clergyman and writer on theology, born 1783; died at Maghull, Lancashire, of which parish he had been incumbent for fifty-four years, 19 March, 1865.

HOLDEN, HENRY, D.D., a Catholic divine, born in Lancashire 1596. He studied at Douay, and afterwards at Paris, where he became penitentiary of the church of St. Nicholas du Chardonnet. He died about 1665. His works are—'Analysis Fidei'; 'Marginal Notes on the New Testament,' 2 vols.; 'A Letter concerning Mr. White's Treatise de Medio Animarum Statu.'

HOLDER, WILLIAM, D.D., F.R.S., was born in Nottinghamshire 1614, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. In 1642 he became rector of Blechingdon, in Oxfordshire; and in 1660 he took his degree of doctor in divinity; after which he was made canon of Ely and St. Paul's, sub-dean of the chapel royal, and sub-almoner to the king. He was also a fellow of the Royal Society, and obtained great celebrity by teaching a young gentleman, who was born deaf and dumb, to speak. On this subject he published a book entitled 'The Elements of Speech.' His claims to this great discovery having been controverted by Wallis, obliged him to defend himself in some papers in the Philosophical Transactions. Dr. Holder was also a good musician, and composed some anthems. He was likewise the author of 'A Discourse concerning Time;' and 'A Treatise on Harmony.' Died 24 Jan., 1696-7.

HOLDSWORTH, EDWARD, was born 6 Aug., 1688, at North Stoneham, Hampshire. He received his education at Winchester School and Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1711; and might have obtained a fellowship, but declined it on account of his scruples in regard to the oaths of allegiance and abjuration. He spent the rest of his life as a travelling tutor; and died at the seat of Lord Digby, at Coleshill, Warwickshire, 30 Dec., 1746. He was the author of 'Muscipula,' a Latin poem, written with classical purity; also of a dissertation entitled 'Pharsalia and Philippi, or the two Philippi in Virgil's Georgics explained,' &c. After his death were published his 'Remarks and Dissertations on Virgil.'

HOLDSWORTH, or OLDISWORTH, RICHARD, D.D., was born, 1590, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. About 1625 he became rector of St. Peter the Poor, London; and in 1629 was elected Gresham professor of divinity. After this he was made prebendary of Lincoln, and archdeacon of Huntingdon. In 1637 he was chosen master of Emanuel College; but when the civil wars commenced he lost that and his other preferments, and was thrown into prison. In 1647 he attended the king at Hampton Court; and afterwards suffered another confinement for his loyalty. Died 29 Aug., 1649. Some of his sermons have been published with the title of 'The Valley of Vision;' and his 'Prælectiones Theologicae' were printed, with his life, 1661.

HOLE, RICHARD, a poet, born at Exeter about 1750, and educated at the grammar school of that city, from whence he removed to the college of the same name at Oxford (B.C.L. 1771). In 1798 he was presented to the rectory of Farringdon, and the vicarage of Inwardleigh, Devonshire. Died 28 May, 1803. Mr. Hole published a translation of Oasian's Fingal, in verse; another of Homer's Hymn to Ceres; the Romance of Arthur; Remarks on the Arabian Nights Entertainments, with a view to an illustration of Homer's Odyssey; Odes in the collection of Devonshire and Cornish Poems, 2 vols.; and some ingenious papers in Essays, by a society at Exeter. He is to be distinguished from Dr. William Hole, archdeacon of Barnstaple, who wrote 'Observations upon Ordinaments in Churches.'

HOLING, EDMUND, M.D., was born in Yorkshire in or about 1554, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. Afterwards going abroad, he was for some time entertained in the English College at Rome. From thence removing to Ingoldstadt, in Bavaria, he devoted himself to the study of physic, and being created doctor in that faculty was appointed public professor. Died 26 March, 1612. He wrote several medical works, Latin poems, &c.

HOLINSHEAD, RAPHAEL, was probably born at Cophurst, in the township of Sutton Downes, Cheshire, and it is commonly supposed that he was educated at Cambridge, though this is very doubtful. He afterwards became steward to Thomas Burdet, esq., of Bromcote, Warwickshire, and died, it is said, in 1580. He published 'The Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland,' 2 vols. folio,

HOLLAND.

London, 1577. This curious and important national work is in a great measure founded on collections made by Reginald Wolf, the queen's printer; and Holinshed also used the MSS. of Leland. After Holinshed's death another edition of his Chronicles appeared (3 vols. folio, 1586-7), with continuations and additions by Thynne, Hooker, Harrison, Fleming, and Stow. Certain passages were, however, suppressed, as being distasteful to Queen Elizabeth and her ministers. The suppressions were reprinted separately in 1723; and there is a reprint of the Chronicles, 6 vols. 4to., London, 1807-8.—Athen. Cantab.

HOLLAND, CHARLES, an English actor, was son of a baker at Chiswick. He was born 12 March, 1733, and was bound apprentice to a turpentine merchant; but on the expiration of his indentures, having a strong inclination to the stage, he made his first appearance at Drury Lane, in the character of Oroonoko, 1754. He met with much applause, and continued to rise in reputation as he advanced in years. He distinguished himself principally in the characters of Richard III., Hamlet, Pierre, Timur in Zingis, and Manley, in the 'Plain Dealer.' Dying 7 Dec., 1769, he was buried at Chiswick, in the church of which parish is a highly eulogistic epitaph to his memory, composed by his friend, David Garrick.

HOLLAND, GEORGE CALVERT, M.D., an English physician, author of many valuable works on subjects relating to his profession, born at Pitsmoor, Sheffield, 1801; died at Sheffield 7 March, 1805.

HOLLAND, GUY, a native of Lincolnshire, was educated at Cambridge, but joined the Jesuits 1615, and was professed 1628. After labouring for forty-five years on the English mission, he died 26 Nov., 1660, æt. 73. He wrote 'The Prerogative of Human Nature, or, On the Immortality of the Soul.'

HOLLAND, HENRY, was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge (B.A. 1579-80; M.A. 1583), and in 1580 was instituted to the vicarage of Orwell, Cambs. In Feb. 1593-4 he became vicar of St. Bride's, London. That benefice was vacant by his death before 13 Feb., 1603-4. He edited the works of Richard Greenham, and was author of 'A Treatise against Witchcraft,' 1590; 'Spiritual Preservatives against the Pestilence,' 1593; 'Aphorisms of Christian Religion,' 1596, abridged from Calvin's Institutes; 'Christian exercise of Fasting,' 1596.—Athen. Cantab. iii. 8.

HOLLAND, HENRY, a native of Daventry, Northamptonshire, was educated at Eton, and at St. John's College, Oxford; but being displeased with the religion of his country, he went abroad, and in 1573 was admitted into the English college at Douay, where he was ordained priest, and became B.D. When Douay college was removed to Rheims, 1578, Mr. Holland was a sharer in those troubles. He pursued his studies, and upon account of his skill in the languages was employed, with others, to translate the Bible into English. Afterwards he was sent to England, upon the mission, where he remained some years. Returning to Douay, he resumed his academical exercises, and was made licentiate of divinity. He was then invited to a monastery near Douay, where he was professor of divinity and of the Scriptures till his death, which happened 28 Sept., 1625. He wrote 'Expositio in Sacro-sanctam Missam: sive Urna Aurea,' 8vo., Douay, 1612.

HOLLAND.

HOLLAND, HENRY, architect, died at Chelsea 17 June, 1806, aged about 60.

HOLLAND, HENRY FOX, LORD, youngest son of Sir Stephen Fox, was born 1705, and educated at Eton. He became a member of parliament 1735, soon after which he was made surveyor-general of the Board of Works, and in 1743 a commissioner of the Treasury. In 1746 he was appointed secretary at war, and a privy councillor; but in 1756 he resigned the former situation in favour of Mr. Pitt. The year following he was made paymaster of the forces, in which office his conduct brought upon him much obloquy, and he was commonly called 'the defaulter of unaccounted millions.' In 1762 his lady was created Baroness Holland, and the next year he was raised to the peerage. Died 1 July, 1774.

HOLLAND, HENRY RICHARD VASSALL FOX, LORD, a statesman and author, born at Winterslow House, Wilts, 21 Nov., 1773, being son of Stephen Fox, second Lord Holland, to whose title he succeeded when little more than a twelvemonth old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford. In 1798 he delivered his first speech in the House of Peers, and from that time was a frequent participator in the debates, being, to the close of his life, a steady and consistent Whig. He filled the office of lord privy seal in 1806-7, and, with the exception of two or three brief intervals, was chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster from 1830 until his death. That event took place 22 Oct., 1840, at Holland House, Kensington, which, for nearly fifty years, had been the resort of eminent personages, and the scene of elegant hospitality. As an author he is favourably known by 'Some Account of the Life and Writings of Lope Felix de Vega Carpio;' and 'Three Comedies from the Spanish.' He also edited his uncle, Charles James Fox's fragment, entitled 'A History of the early part of the Reign of James II.' After his lordship's death appeared his 'Foreign Reminiscences,' and his 'Memoirs of the Whig Party during my Time.'

HOLLAND, HUGH, a poet, was a native of Denbigh. After passing through Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, he travelled into Italy and the Holy Land. He died at Westminster 1633, having always been, according to Wood, in animo Catholicus. He wrote 'Pancharis—the first Book,' 12mo., London, 1603, of which the copy in the Bodleian is believed to be the only one extant; 'A Cyprus Garland for the Sacred Forehead of our late Soueraigne King James,' a poem, 1625; verses prefixed to the first folio edition of Shakspeare's plays.

HOLLAND, SIR NATHANIEL, was born in London 1734, being the son of George Dance, the city architect and surveyor. He was brought up to the profession of painting, in which he attained considerable distinction. On marrying Mrs. Dummer, of Yorkshire, a rich heiress, he altered his name, and ultimately obtained both a seat in parliament and the title of baronet. After his advancement he conceived the foolish vanity of purchasing all the pictures he had painted, in order to destroy them. The mortification of not being able to procure the whole-length of Garrick in the character of Richard III., for which he offered Sir Watkin Wynne 1,000 guineas, is said to have deeply affected his mind through life. He died at Winchester 15 Oct., 1811.

lator, born at Chelmsford, Essex, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which society he was elected fellow, but left it on taking his master's degree. He was then appointed head master of Coventry School, where also he practised physics, to qualify himself for which he took his doctor's degree at Cambridge. He died at the age of eighty-six, on 9 Feb., 1636. Dr. Holland published translations of Livy; Pliny's Natural History; Plutarch's Morals; Suetonius; Xenophon's Cyropædia; and Camden's Britannia; to which last he made additions. His son, Henry Holland, became a bookseller in London, and was the editor of 'Herologia Anglicana,' a collection of English portraits, with memoirs. He also published 'Monumenta Sepulchralia Eccles. S. Pauli;' and a 'Book of Kings.'

HOLLAND, THOMAS. See ECCLESTON.

HOLLAR, WENZEL, or WENCESLAUS, a most admired engraver of views and portraits, born at Prague, in Bohemia, 1607; died in London 28 March, 1677.

HOLLES, DENZIL, Lord Holles, second son of John first earl of Clare, was born at Haughton, Notts, 1597. He was one of the five members whom Charles I. went to the House of Commons personally to accuse. This conduct on the part of the king greatly increased Mr. Holles's popularity; but he was not successful in his opposition to the Independents and to Cromwell. Though he favoured the cause of the Presbyterians, he was deemed worthy of notice by Charles II., who raised him to the peerage 1661. He died 1680.

HOLLES, THOMAS PELHAM, duke of Newcastle. See NEWCASTLE.

HOLLIS, THOMAS, an English gentleman, born in London 14 April, 1720. After a private education among the dissenters, he went to Amsterdam to learn the French and Dutch languages, and on his return completed his studies under Dr. Ward, the Gresham professor. He then went on his travels, and having a handsome fortune, employed it in collecting curiosities and books. He died suddenly in his field, at Corscombe, Dorsetshire, on New Year's Day, 1774. Mr. Hollis was a zealous republican, and expended considerable sums in reprinting works of that tendency. He also contributed largely to Harvard College, in America, the public library at Berne, and other foreign institutions, but nothing to English universities or seminaries of learning. He left his property to Thomas Brand, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A., who took the name of Hollis, and was imprisoned for scandalous practices in his election for Hindon. He died at Ingatestone, Essex, 2 Sept., 1804.

HOLLOWAY, THOMAS, an engraver, born at London 1748; died at Coltishall, near Norwich, Feb., 1827. He very cleverly illustrated the English translation of Lavater's 'Physiognomy.'

HOLLYWOOD, CHRISTOPHER, Chr. à Sacro Bosco, an Irish Jesuit, born in Dublin 1562; died 4 Sept., 1616. He published 'Defensio Concilii Tridentini et Sententiæ Bellarmini de auctoritate Vulgatæ Editionis;' and 'Libellus de investiganda vera et visibili Christi Ecclesia,' 4to., Antwerp, 1604.

HOLMAN, JAMES, the 'blind traveller,' was born about 1787, and died in London 26 July, 1857. Entering the navy, he became a lieutenant; but in 1812 he lost his sight, whereupon he was appointed a Naval Knight of Windsor. Subsequently he visited various parts of the world, and published accounts of his travels, which were very favourably received.

HOLMAN, JOSEPH GEORGE, an actor and dramatist, born 1764, studied at Oxford, but soon quitted the university to tread the boards of the playhouse. After appearing at London, Dublin, and Edinburgh, he crossed the Atlantic, and became manager of the theatre at Charleston, South Carolina, where he died 24 Aug., 1817. His dramatic productions are 'Abroad and at Home,' a comic opera; 'Red Cross Knights;' 'The Volunteer of Wealth;' a comedy; 'What a Blunder,' a comic opera; 'Love gives the Alarm,' a comedy; 'The Gazette Extraordinary,' a comedy.

HOLMES, GEORGE, an antiquary, born 1662, at Skipton in Craven, Yorkshire. He became a clerk in the record office of the Tower, where he was employed to digest and methodize the records. He also held the office of barrackmaster, and died there 16 Feb., 1748-9. He republished the first seventeen volumes of Rymer's Fœdera; and his manuscripts were purchased after his death by Government.

HOLMES, NATHANIEL, D.D., a Puritan, born in Wilts about 1600, and educated at Oxford. He was intruded into the rectory of St. Mary Staining, London, 1642 or 1643, but was ejected therefrom 1662. Died June, 1678. He published 'Usury is Injury,' 1640; 'Dæmonology and Theology,' 1650; 'The Resurrection Revealed,' 1654; and other works.

HOLMES, ROBERT, D.D., was born in Hampshire 1749, and educated at Oxford. In 1790 he was elected professor of poetry, and in 1804 appointed dean of Winchester, having previously been made rector of Stanton, Oxfordshire, and canon of Salisbury and Christ Church. Died 12 Nov., 1805. Dr. Holmes published a volume of sermons, preached at the Bampton Lecture; four tracts on the Divinity of Christ; and some single sermons; but he is best known by his collation and edition of the Septuagint version, in the manner of Kennicott's Hebrew Bible.

HOLROYD, JOHN BAKER, Lord Sheffield. See SHEFFIELD.

HOLSTENIUS, LUCAS, or LUKE HOLSTEIN, a learned writer, born at Hamburg 1596. He was brought up a Protestant, but turned Catholic, and obtained several valuable preferments at Rome, where he died 1661. He published 'A Dissertation on the Life and Writings of Porphyry;' several other erudite disquisitions on classical subjects; and notes upon ancient authors.

HOLT, FRANCIS LUDLOW, an English barrister, became a queen's counsel, and vice-chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster. He died at Kensington 29 Sept., 1844. Mr. Holt was for many years editor of 'Bell's Weekly Messenger;' and author of several legal works and some dramatic pieces.

HOLT, SIR JOHN, was the son of Sir Thomas Holt, serjeant-at-law, and born at Thame, Oxfordshire, 1642. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Gray's Inn, where he was called to the bar. In the reign of James II. he was chosen recorder of London; but was deprived of the place for refusing to comply with the measures of the court. In 1686 he was made serjeant; and at the Revolution bore an active part as a member of the convention parliament, for which he was made chief justice of the King's Bench and a privy councillor. He was a sound constitutional lawyer, and stedfastly defended the liberties of the subject. He died in March, 1709. His reports were published 1708.

HOLT, JOHN, a miscellaneous writer, born at Mottram, Cheshire, 1742; died at Liverpool 21 March, 1801. He published 'Characters of the Kings and Queens of England,' and some works on agriculture. At the time of his death he was engaged in writing a history of Liverpool.

HOLT, WILLIAM, a native of Lancashire, received his education at Oxford, but being converted to Catholicism, he passed over to Douay about 1574, and was ordained priest there. Subsequently he joined the Jesuits, and was elected rector of their college at Rome 1586. At a later date he resided at Brussels, where he was a kind of agent for the king of Spain and a manager of the charity which his Catholic Majesty was pleased to bestow on the distressed English exiles. Father Holt died in Spain 1599.

HOLTE, JOHN, a grammarian, was a native of Sussex, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship 1491, and was appointed master of the college school. Wood thinks he died about 1511; but it is possible he may be the John Holte who became surtragan bishop of Lydda, and who died at Bury St. Edmund's in July, 1540. Holte published the first Latin grammar in England, with this title, 'Lac Puerorum, M. Holtn. Mylke for Chyldren,' printed by Wynkyn de Worde 1497.

HOLWELL, JOHN ZEPHANIAH, was born at Dublin 1711. Being intended for commerce, he was sent to Holland, where he learnt the French and Dutch languages; but this situation being disagreeable to him, he returned to England, and was apprenticed to a surgeon. In 1732 he went to India, and, in 1736, became a member of the court of Calcutta. He was also appointed perpetual Zemindar in the council, where he introduced a system of reform. In June, 1756, Calcutta was taken by the nabob Surajah Dowla, who threw Mr. Holwell and his companions, the governor having previously abandoned the place, into the Black Hole, a place not eighteen feet square; where, out of one hundred and forty-six persons, only twenty-three survived till the next morning. On his release Mr. Holwell returned to Europe; but in 1758 he went out again, and the next year succeeded Colonel Clive as governor. At the close of the following year he returned to England, where he died 5 Nov., 1798. He published—India Tracts; A Narrative of the Sufferings which he endured in the Black Hole of Calcutta; Interesting Historical Events relative to Bengal and Indostan; An Account of the manner of the inoculating for the Small Pox in India; A New Experiment for the Prevention of Crimes; Dissertations on the Origin, Nature, and Pursuits of Intelligent Beings, and on Divine Providence, Religion, and Religious Worship.

HOLWELL, WILLIAM, B.D., F.R.S., vicar of Thornbury, in Gloucestershire, prebendary of Exeter, and chaplain to the king, died 1798. He edited extracts from Dionysius Halicarnassus 1766; and extracts from Pope's Homer 1776. His son, William Holwell Carr, has been already noticed.

HOLYDAY, BARTEN, D.D., was born at Oxford about 1593. He was educated at Christ Church, and, in 1615, took orders. In 1618 he went to Spain as chaplain to Sir Francis Stewart, and, on his return, was promoted to the archdeaconry of HOME.

Oxford. In 1642 he was created doctor of divinity, and, though he lost his archdeaconry in the war, he got the living of Chilton, Berks. Died 2 Oct., 1661. His works are—Technogamia, or the Marriage of Arts, a comedy, acted before James I., at Christ Church, 1617; Philosophiæ Politicæ-barbaræ specimen, in quo de anima et ejus habitibus intellectualibus quæstiones aliquot libris duobus illustrantur; Survey of the World, in ten books, a poem; A Translation of Juvenal and Persius, with notes; Comes jucundus in Via.

HOLYOAKE, FRANCIS, a lexicographer, born at Nether Whitacre, Warwickshire, about 1567. He studied at Oxford, and became rector of Southam, in Warwickshire, where he died 13 Nov., 1653. He compiled an 'Etymological Dictionary of Latin words,' 1606. His son, Thomas Holyoake, born 1616, became chaplain of Queen's College, Oxford, and, in the civil wars, took up arms for the king, by whose command the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon him. On the decline of the royal cause he practised physic, till the restoration; when he was presented to the rectory of Whitnash, near Warwick, and made prebendary of Wolverhampton. After this he obtained the donative of Breamour, Hampshire. He died 10 June, 1675. He also published a dictionary, Latin and English, in folio. His son, Henry Holyoake, was for forty years master of Rugby School, and died 1731.

HOLYWOOD, or SACROBOSCO, JOHN, was born, as is generally supposed, at Halifax, Yorkshire, while others make him an Irishman, and some a Scotchman. He became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustin, in the monastery of Holywood, in Nithsdale; after which he went to Paris, where he became professor of mathematics, and died 1256. His works are 'Desphæra mundi;' 'De anni ratione, seu de computo Ecclesiastico;' 'De Algorismo.'

HOMBERG, WILLIAM, a native of Batavia, in Java, who came to Europe and settled in Paris, where he became a distinguished chemist, and physician to the duke of Orleans. Born 1652; died 24 Sept., 1715.

HOME, DAVID, a Scotch Protestant divine, was educated in France, where he resided during the greater part of his life. He was employed by James VI. of Scotland to reconcile the differences between Tilenus and Dumoulin on the subject of justification; and if possible to induce the Protestants throughout Europe to agree to one single form of doctrine. His chief work is 'Apologia Basilica; seu Machiavellii Ingenium Examinatum,' 1626. Some of his poems will be found in the 'Deliciæ Poetarum Scotorum.'

HOME, SIR EVERARD, an eminent surgeon and medical writer, born in Berwickshire 1756. He practised with great success in London for upwards of forty years; was raised to the dignity of a baronet 1813; and died 31 Aug., 1832.

HOME, HENRY, a Scotch judge, known by the title of Lord Kames, was born at Kames, Berwickshire, 1696. He was admitted an advocate 1724; appointed a judge of the court of session 1752, when he took the title of Lord Kames; constituted one of the lords of justiciary 1763; died 27 Dec., 1782. Besides numerous legal works of great merit he published 'Essays upon several subjects concerning British Antiquities,' 1747; 'Essays on the Principles of Morality and Natural Religion,' 1751; 'Introduction to the Art of Thinking,' 1701.

HOMER, JOHN, was born at Ancrum, Roxburghshire, 22 Sept., 1722. He was educated at Edinburgh for the church; but, in the rebellion of 1745, he entered into the royal army, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Falkirk. He contrived, however, to make his escape, and, in 1746, was ordained as minister of Athelstanford, in East Lothian. His tragedy of 'Douglas' was performed at Edinburgh in 1756, which gave such offence to the presbytery, that the author, to avoid ecclesiastical censure, resigned his living. In 1763 he was appointed a commissioner for sick and wounded seamen and the exchange of prisoners. He was also named a conservator of the Scotch privileges at Campvere, in Zealand. In 1778 he obtained a captain's commission in the duke of Buccleuch's fencibles. Died 4 Sept., 1808. Besides the play of Douglas he wrote four others, which are sunk in oblivion; as also is his 'History of the Rebellion.'

HOMER, the father of poetry, has left an immortal name, but no vestiges of his own history. He lived about 1000 B.C., or perhaps later. The place of his birth is uncertain; it was probably Chios (Scio) or Smyrna. Most of the circumstances related of his life are derived from two biographies, which have been ascribed, on insufficient grounds, to Herodotus and Plutarch. The story of his blindness seems to have been a mere tradition. Respecting the manner of his life, all the accounts, whether genuine or spurious, generally agree in representing him as a rhapsodist, wandering on the Asiatic coast and through the islands of Greece, and earning fame and a maintenance by the recitation of his verses. His two epic poems, the 'Iliad' ('Ἰλιάς') and 'Odyssey' ('Ὀδυσσειά'), originally consisted of various rhapsodies, which were first reduced to their present form under the direction of Pisistratus and his son Hipparchus. On being committed to writing, which could hardly have been done by Homer himself, it is not improbable that they received some additions and interpolations. Both of them are a series of songs, probably from several authors, Homer and the Homeridæ, composed at different times and successively enlarged. The subject of the Iliad is the 'wrath of Achilles,' his separation from the Grecian army in consequence of it, and the events of the Trojan war during his absence and immediately after his return. The theme of the Odyssey is the wandering of Ulysses, the dangers and sufferings of his return from Troy to Ithaca, and the events following his arrival. Besides these two heroic poems, there is ascribed to Homer a comic piece, the 'Battle of the Frogs and Mice' (Βατραχομυομαχία), a mock-heroic poem, belonging unquestionably to a later period. There are also ascribed to him thirty-three 'Hymns,' besides various small pieces and epigrams. The principal English versions of Homer are those of Chapman, Pope, and Cowper. A blank verse translation of the Iliad by the earl of Derby was published in 1865.

HOMER, HENRY, was born at Birdingbury, Warwickshire, 1752. He received his education at Emanuel College, Cambridge (B.D. 1783). He was elected fellow of his college, but refused to take priest's orders. Died 4 May, 1791. Mr. Homer assisted Dr. Parr in his Bellendenus; and he also published some editions of the classics, as Ovid's Epistles, Sallust, Pliny, Cæsar, Persius, and Tacitus. He had a concern in the Variorum Horace, but left it to be completed by his colleague, Dr. Charles Combe.

HOMMEL, CHARLES FERDINAND, a flower of Leipsic, born 1722; died 16 May, 1781.

HONDEKOETER, GILES, a landscape and civilian painter, of Utrecht, born 1583; died about 1626.

HONDEKOETER, GYSBRECHT, son of the above, was also a celebrated painter. Born 1613; died 1653.

HONDEKOETER, MELCHIOR, son of the preceding, painted birds with uncommon elegance and accuracy. His landscapes also, in the backgrounds, are very beautiful. Born at Utrecht 1636; died 3 April, 1695.

HONDIUS, ABRAHAM, an eminent painter, born at Rotterdam 1638; died in London 1695.

HONDIUS, JODOCUS, or JESSE, was born at Wackerne, in Flanders, 1563, and died 1611. He attained great excellence as an engraver and letter-founder and published a geographical work entitled 'Descriptio Geographica Orbis Terrarum,' 1607.

HONE, NATHANIEL, a painter in enamel, one of the first members of the Royal Academy, was a native of Dublin, and died 14 Aug., 1784.

HONE, WILLIAM, was born at Bath 1779, and at an early age was placed as clerk to a London attorney; but abandoning that wretched calling, he turned bookseller, and subsequently engaged in other industrial pursuits. Owing to the want of business habits he was unsuccessful, and became several times bankrupt. In order to provide for himself and his numerous family, he now commenced writing for the press. He contributed articles to the 'Critical Review' and the 'British Lady's Magazine,' published a paper called 'The Traveller,' and started in 1816 a weekly journal entitled 'The Reformatist's Register,' in which he combated with much ability the doctrines promulgated by Mr. Owen. Soon after this Mr. Hone, who entertained strong liberal opinions, brought out a series of political satires, one of which, the 'Political House that Jack Built,' went through more than fifty editions. Another of his cleverest productions was 'A Slap at Slop,' a burlesque on the newspaper called the 'New Times.' A third satire on the government of the day he wrote in the form of a parody on the Book of Common Prayer. He was consequently prosecuted by the Attorney-General on three separate charges, on all of which he was acquitted. The sympathy now displayed for him by the public resulted in a subscription being raised which enabled him to take a large house on Ludgate Hill, where he gradually withdrew from his political line of publication, and attempted, but without success, to establish himself as a book auctioneer. In 1826 he commenced the publication, in weekly numbers, of the 'Every Day Book,' but although the sale was extensive the profits did not enable him to maintain his large family. He was cast into a debtor's prison, where he finished the 'Every Day Book,' and then successively carried on its sequels, the 'Table Book' (1827-8), and the 'Year Book' (1829). It is in connection with these interesting collections of literary miscellanies that his name is now chiefly remembered. Mr. Hone eventually became an Independent preacher; and died at Tottenham, Herts, 6 Nov., 1842. Among his other works are 'Ancient Mysteries Described,' 'The Apocryphal New Testament;' and an edition of 'Strutt's Sports and Pastimes.'

HONORIUS, FLAVIUS, son of Theodosius the Great, and Emperor of the West (395), died at Ravenna 423.

HONORIUS I., POPE, succeeded Boniface V. 630; died 638.

HONORIUS II., Lambert, succeeded Calixtus II. as Pope 1124; died 1130.

HONORIUS III., Cencio Savelli, a Roman, succeeded Innocent III. 1216; died 1227.

HONORIUS IV., James Savelli, succeeded Martin IV. 1285; died 1287.

HONTHEIM, JOHN NICHOLAS DE, suffragan to the bishop of Treves, is chiefly deserving of notice on account of his treatise, 'De statu presentis Ecclesiae,' 1763, in which he attacked the temporal power of the Pope: he afterwards, however, retracted his opinions on this subject. Born 1701; died 2 Sept., 1790.

HONTHORST, GERARD, a Flemish painter, known in Italy by the name of Gherardo della Notte, was born at Utrecht 1592, and died 1600. His brother, William Honthorst, who died at Berlin 1683, was a good portrait painter.

HOOD, ROBIN, a celebrated English outlaw, the hero of many popular ballads, is supposed to have lived in the reign of Richard I.

HOOD, SAMUEL, Viscount Hood, was the eldest son of the Rev. Samuel Hood, vicar of Butley, Somersetshire, and afterwards of Thorncombe, Devonshire; at which last place he was born 1724. He went to sea at the age of sixteen, and after serving six years was made a lieutenant. In 1754 he became a master and commander and for his gallantry in taking a fifty-gun ship, was made post-captain 1759. In 1778 he was appointed commissioner of Portsmouth dockyard, which place he resigned 1780, and was made rear-admiral. With this rank he sailed to the West Indies, where he defeated the attempt made upon St. Christopher's by Count de Grasse. He also had an active part in the victory obtained over that commander 13 April, 1782; for which he was created Baron Hood, of Catherington, in the kingdom of Ireland. In 1784 he was elected into Parliament for Westminster; but in 1788 he vacated his seat on being named one of the lords of the admiralty. In 1793 he was appointed to command in the Mediterranean, where he distinguished himself by taking possession of Toulon, and when it was no longer tenable, destroying the arsenal, dockyard, and shipping. After this he made himself master of Corsica, and then returned to England, where he was made a viscount, and governor of Greenwich Hospital. He died at Bath 27 Jan., 1816. His brother, Alexander, was raised to the peerage as Viscount Bridport, q. v.

HOOD, THOMAS, a poet and humourist, born in London 23 May, 1798, being the son of a bookseller. He was first placed with a merchant, and afterwards with an engraver; but the bent of his mind being towards literature, he accepted in 1821 the sub-editorship of the London Magazine. He now became acquainted with the principal wits of the day, and entered upon an active career as an author. His first book, 'Odes and Addresses to Great People,' was written in conjunction with J. H. Reynolds, his brother-in-law. This was followed by 'Whims and Oddities, in Prose and Verse;' 'National Tales;' 'The Plea of the Midsummer Faires,' a volume full of rich imaginative poetry; the 'Comic Annual' (from 1830 to 1830, 10 vols.; and an eleventh vol. in 1842); 'Hood's Own,' consisting of extracts from the preceding work; 'Tynley Hall,' a novel; 'Up the Rhine;' and 'Whimsicalities.' Among his minor poems, the ballad of 'Eugene Aram' and the 'Song of the Shirt' deserve particular mention. After a wasting illness of many years' slow progress, this genial humourist died in London 3 May, 1845. Several editions of his poetical works have appeared both in this country and the United States.

HOOF, PETER CORNELIUS VAN, a Dutch historian, poet, and dramatist, born at Amsterdam 1581; died 21 May, 1647.

HOOGVEEN, HENRY, a learned Hellenist, born at Leyden Jan., 1712; died at Delft 1791. He is justly renowned for his edition of Vigerus 'De Idiōtismis Linguae Graecae;' and his 'Doctrina Particularum Linguae Graecae.'

HOOGHE, ROMAIN DE, a Dutch engraver and draughtsman, born at the Hague about 1638; died about 1725.

HOOGSTRAATEN, DAVID VAN, born at Rotterdam 1658; became professor of the belles lettres at Amsterdam, where he died 13 Nov., 1724. His works consist of poems in Latin and Flemish; a Flemish and Latin Dictionary; and some editions of classical authors.

HOOGSTRAATEN, JAMES VAN, a Dominican friar, born at Breda, became professor of divinity at Louvain 1485, and died at Cologne 21 Jan., 1527. He wrote many theological works, and was one of the earliest opponents of the opinions of Luther.

HOOGSTRAATEN, THEODORE VAN, a landscape painter of Antwerp, who died 1640, aged 44. His son, Samuel, became very excellent not only as a landscape, but as a portrait painter. He died 1678, aged 51.

HOOGVLIET, ARNOLD, a Dutch poet, born near Rotterdam 3 July, 1687; died 17 Oct., 1763. His principal work, an epic poem entitled 'Abraham the Patriarch,' appeared in 1727.

HOOK, JAMES, a musical composer, born at Norwich 1746. Going to London he was engaged as organist to Mary-le-bone Gardens, and he subsequently accepted a similar engagement at Vaux-hall, which he held between forty and fifty years. He produced more than 140 complete works, which consist chiefly of musical entertainments for the theatres, concertos, sonatas, and duets for the pianoforte; an excellent instruction book for that instrument, entitled 'Guida di Musica;' an oratorio entitled 'The Ascension,' written in 1776; and more than 2000 songs. He was living in 1829.

HOOK, JAMES, D.C.L., son of the preceding, was born 1771, received his education at Oxford, became dean of Worcester 1825, and died 5 Feb., 1828. He published 'Anguis in Herba, a true sketch of the Church of England and her Clergy;' 1802; some single sermons; a charge delivered to the clergy when he held the archdeaconry of Huntingdon; some political tracts; and two novels, 'Pen Owen,' and 'Percy Mallory.'

HOOK, THEODORE EDWARD, F.S.A., a celebrated writer and wit, was born in London 22 Sept., 1788. His father, James Hook, the musical composer, and his brother, the dean of Worcester, are the subjects of separate notices in this work. Theodore received his education at Harrow School, and at the early age of 17 commenced his career as a playwright by producing 'The Soldier's Return,' for which he received 50*l*. Thinking now that he had exhausted treasures before him, he plunged wildly into the pleasures and dissipations of London life; and being handsome, witty, a good musician and improvisator, and possessed of a fund of original wit and humour, he soon gained admittance into the best society. Meantime he was ever busy with his pen. In 1806 he wrote 'Catch him who can,' a farce; the 'Invisible Girl,' a monologue intended to bring out the peculiar talent of his friend Jack Banister; and 'Tekeli,' a melodrama which caused a great sensation. These were followed in rapid succession by a number of other pieces, the most remarkable of which, 'Killing no Murder,' was acted in 1809. In that year he also brought out, under the profane title of 'The Man of Sorrow,' a novel which proved an utter failure. In 1813, by the interest of the prince-regent, he was appointed accountant-general and treasurer of the Mauritius. There he remained till 1818, when he was sent home a prisoner, upon a charge of embezzling a large sum of money; but in Oct. the same year he was released, the law-officers of the crown declaring that there was no legal ground for detaining him, although it seems clear that he had been guilty of gross carelessness, to say the least. He now resumed writing for the stage; and in 1820 accepted the editorship of the 'John Bull' newspaper, the object of which was to support the king and vilify the friends of Queen Caroline. Throughout his life, it may be remarked, Hook was an uncompromising supporter of the Tory party, and a bitter enemy of all political progress. His future fame will probably rest on his brilliant and successful novels and tales. The best are 'Saying and Doings,' 3 series, 1824-8; 'Maxwell,' 1830; 'Love and Pride,' 1833, republished under the title of 'Widow and Marquis'; 'The Parson's Daughter,' 1835; 'Gilbert Gurney,' 1835; 'Jack Brag,' 1837; 'All in the Wrong; or Births, Deaths, and Marriages,' 1839; and 'Gurney Married,' 1839. Mr. Hooke was a frequent contributor to 'Bentley's Miscellany,' and for some years edited the 'Monthly Magazine.' At length, worn out with a career of 'pleasure' and dissipation, and, to use his own words, 'done up in purse, in mind, and in body,' he died at his house near Fulham 24 Aug., 1841.

HOOKE, NATHANIEL, an historian, of whom few particulars are known. He was a Roman Catholic, and a great admirer of Fénelon, whose life he translated from the French. He attended Pope on his death-bed, and brought him a priest, for which he incurred the abuse of Bolingbroke. Mr. Hooke was the correspondent of Harley, earl of Oxford; and the duchess of Marlborough gave him 500*l*. for writing the book entitled 'An Account of her conduct.' He died 19 July, 1763. Of his Roman History two volumes were printed in his lifetime, and the other two after his death. He also wrote 'Observations on the Roman Senate,' and a translation of Ramsay's 'Travels of Cyrus.' He left two sons; one became a clergyman of the Church of England, and the other a doctor of the Sorbonne, where he was professor of astronomy.

HOOKE, ROBERT, M.D., F.R.S., was born 18 July, 1635, at Freshwater, in the Isle of Wight, of which place his father was rector. He discovered a mechanical genius when a boy, and had also a turn for drawing; in consequence of which he was placed under Lely, whom he soon quitted to become a pupil of Busby. About 1653 he went to Christ Church, Oxford, where he was employed to assist Dr. Willis in his chemical operations. In 1662 he became curator of experiments to the Royal Society, of which body, when established by charter, he was one of the first members. In 1663 the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of master of arts; and the year following he read the astronomical lecture at Gresham College, for Dr. Pope. The same year he was made professor of mechanics to the Royal Society; and he was also elected Gresham professor of geometry. In 1665 appeared his 'Micrographia,' and in 1666 he produced a plan for rebuilding London, which, though approved, was not adopted. Hooke, however, was appointed one of the city surveyors, by which he realised a handsome fortune. In 1668 he had a violent dispute with Hevelius, upon the preference of the telescopic to plain sights. He had afterwards a contention with Oldenburg, on the invention of pendulum watches; and he endeavoured also to set up a claim to Newton's theory of gravitation. In 1677 he was chosen secretary of the Royal Society; and, in 1691, created doctor of physic by the archbishop of Canterbury. Died 3 March, 1702. Dr. Hooke was a man of extraordinary talents, but of a jealous temper, excessively penurious, and much deformed in person. His papers were published under the title of 'Post-humous Works,' 1705, folio.

HOOKER, or VOWELL, JOHN, was born at Exeter about 1524. He studied at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; and afterwards at Cologne and Strasburg. On his return he became chamberlain of his native city. Having been sent to Ireland by Sir Peter Carew to negotiate his affairs there he was elected M.P. for Athenry in the parliament of 1568; and in 1571 he represented Exeter in the English House of Commons. Died Nov., 1601. His principal works are—'The Order and Usage of Keeping of Parliaments in Ireland; 'An Addition to the Chronicles of Ireland from 1546 to 1568,' in the 2nd volume of Holinshed; 'A Catalog of the Bishops of Exeter,' 1584; 'The Antique Description and Account of the City of Exeter,' 1765; 'Life of Sir Peter Carew,' edited with an introduction and notes by John Maclean, F.S.A., 1857. The last-named work is also printed in the 'Calendar of the Carew MSS.,' 1807.

HOOKER, RICHARD, D.D., the nephew of the preceding, was born at Heavitree, near Exeter, March, 1554. Under the patronage of Bishop Jewel he was made one of the clerks of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and became tutor to Edwin Sandys, son of the archbishop of York, and George Cranmer, grand-nephew of the archbishop of that name. In 1581 he entered into orders; but soon after contracted an unhappy marriage, by which he lost his fellowship. In 1584 he was presented to the rectory of Drayton Beauchamp, in Buckinghamshire; but the year following he was made master of the Temple; where he had not been long before he was involved in a dispute with Walter Travers, the afternoon lecturer of that church, who was a violent Presbyterian. Hooker, being of a mild temper, petitioned the archbishop for a removal 'to some quiet parsonage, where he might see God's blessings spring out of his mother earth, and eat his bread in peace and privacy.' He was accordingly presented to the rectory of Boscomb,

In Wiltshire, with a prebend in the church of Salisbury; and here he finished four books of his 'Ecclesiastical Polity,' printed 1594. The year following he was presented to the rectory of Bishop's Bourne, Kent, where he finished the remaining books of his famous treatise, though it is doubtful whether we have them in their perfect state. This judicious writer died 2 Nov., 1600. His works were published in 1602, folio. There have been several editions since. One of the best is that by Kettle, 4 vols., London, 8vo., 1836.

HOOKER, Sir WILLIAM JACKSON, F.R.S., was born at Norwich 1785; became regius professor of botany at Glasgow; curator of Kew Gardens 1832; was knighted 1835; and died at Kew 12 Aug., 1865. He published 'The British Flora,' and other botanical works.

HOOLE, CHARLES, was born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1610. He was related to Bishop Sanderson, by whose advice he went to Lincoln College, Oxford, after which he entered into orders, and became master of the school at Rotherham; but at the beginning of the civil war he removed to London, and kept a private seminary till the Restoration, when he obtained a prebend in the church of Lincoln, and the living of Stock, Essex, where he died 7 March, 1669-7. He published several school-books of established reputation.

HOOLE, JOHN, the son of a watchmaker, in London, was born in Moorfields in Dec., 1727. At the age of 17 he became a clerk in the India House; and by assiduous application he improved himself in the Latin and Italian languages. In 1703 he published a translation of Tasso's 'Jerusalem,' with a dedication to the queen, written by Dr. Johnson. Mr. Hoole had, before this, produced some pieces of poetry; and in 1707 he published two volumes of the dramas of Metastasio. His own plays were—'Cyrus,' 'Timanthes,' and 'Cleonice;' but none of them met with any success. In 1773 he brought out the first volume of his 'Orlando Furioso,' which, however was not completed till ten years afterwards, when the translation made five volumes. At this time he resigned his place in the India House, and retired to the parsonage of his son, the Rev. Samuel Hoole, of Abinger, near Dorking. In 1791 he published a new edition of his 'Orlando,' in 2 vols.; and the year following, a version of Tasso's poem of 'Rinaldo.' His last production was a collection of Metastasio's poems and plays, 3 vols. He died at Dorking 2 Aug., 1803.

HOOPER, GEORGE, a learned prelate, born at Grimley, Worcestershire, 18 Nov., 1640. He was educated first at St. Paul's, and next at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford. In 1674 he became chaplain to Dr. Morley, bishop of Winchester, who gave him the rectory of Havant, which he resigned for that of East Woodhay, in Hampshire. In 1675 Archbishop Sheldon, to whom he was chaplain, gave him the rectory of Lambeth, and the precentorship of Exeter. In 1677 he took his doctor's degree; and the same year went to Holland as almoner to the princess of Orange. He returned, however, from that country before the Revolution, and was made chaplain to James II. In 1691 he was made dean of Canterbury, and in 1703 bishop of St. Asaph; from whence he was removed, soon after, to Bath and Wells. Died 6 Sept., 1727. An edition of his works was printed at Oxford in 1757, folio; and another appeared at the same place, 2 vols. 8vo., 1858.

HOOPER, JOHN, a bishop, born in Somersetshire 1495. He studied at Oxford, and afterwards became a Cistercian monk; but, on embracing the reformed doctrines, he went to Zurich, where he contracted a friendship with Bullinger, and married a Burgundian lady. On the accession of Edward VI. he returned to England, and was made bishop of Gloucester, with which he was allowed to hold in commendam that of Worcester. When Mary came to the throne, he was burnt at Gloucester 9 Feb. 1554-5. He wrote some controversial pieces and sermons.

HOORNE, JOHN VAN, a physician and anatomist, born at Amsterdam 1621. He became professor in his native town, and afterwards at Leyden, where he died 13 Jan., 1670.

HOPE, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., a botanist and physician, born 10 May, 1725, and educated at Edinburgh; after which he went to Paris, and studied botany under Jussieu. On his return to Scotland he obtained the degree of doctor of physic from the university of Glasgow, and was admitted a member of the College of Physicians at Edinburgh. In 1761 he was appointed king's botanist, superintendent of the royal garden, and professor of botany and the materia medica. He was also president of the College of Physicians, and a member of numerous scientific academies. Linnaeus gave the name of Hopea to a beautiful shrub. Died 10 Nov., 1786. Some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions, besides which he compiled a few useful books on botany. His son, Thomas Charles Hope, born at Edinburgh 21 July, 1706, was appointed, in 1787, professor of chemistry at Glasgow; and in 1799 succeeded Dr. Black in the chair of chemistry at Edinburgh, where he died 13 June, 1844. His principal discovery was the presence of a new earth, named by him stromtites, in a mineral found in the stromtian lead mines in Argyleshire.

HOPE, Sir THOMAS, a Scotch lawyer, was a native of Edinburgh. He became king's advocate 1627, and was created a baronet by Charles I., though he was secretly attached to the Covenanters. Died 1646. His works are—'Minor Practicks,' and 'Decisions.' He also wrote Latin poems, and an account of the earls of Mar.

HOPE, THOMAS, F.R.A., an English writer and patron of art, born about 1770, being a member of the rich mercantile family of the Hopes of Amsterdam. Early in life he travelled over various parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and having with a refined taste acquired a facility of drawing, he brought home a large collection of sketches, principally of architecture and sculpture. Soon after his settlement in London he published 'A Letter addressed to F. Annesley, Esq., on a series of Designs for Downing College, Cambridge,' in which he criticised with great severity the designs of Mr. Wyatt. Having purchased a large house in Duchess Street, he devoted much time and study to the furnishing and fitting-up of the interior, from his own drawings, in imitation of the best specimens, both ancient and modern, in Italy. His country mansion at Deepdene, near Dorking, was also furnished in a most sumptuous manner, and enriched with a noble collection of pictures, sculptures, books and antiquities. In 1807 Mr. Hope published the drawings he had made for his furniture in a volume entitled 'Household Furniture and Internal Decorations,' which brought about a complete revolution in the upholstery and interior decoration of dwelling-houses. In 1809 he published 'The Costume of the Ancients,' which was followed three years later by 'Designs of Modern Costumes.' In 1819 he started the world by his novel, entitled 'Anastasis; or Memoirs of a Modern Greek,' which, being published anonymously, was at first attributed to the pen of Lord Byron. Mr. Hope was a most liberal patron of art, and generously assisted Chantrey, and Thorwaldsen the Danish sculptor, in their early struggles. After his death, which happened 3 Feb., 1831, there appeared two posthumous works from his pen, viz., an 'Essay on the Origin and Prospects of Man,' 3 vols., 1831; and an 'Historical Essay on Architecture,' 2 vols., 1837.

HOPKINS, CHARLES, son of Dr. Ezekiel Hopkins, was born at Exeter, 1664, and educated at Dublin and Cambridge. He was the author of some plays, and the 'History of Love,' a selection of poetical fables from Ovid. Died 1700.

HOPKINS, EZEKIEL, D.D., was born at Sandford, Devonshire, 1633. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford; on leaving which he held the living of St. Mary Woolnoth; but in the plague he removed to Exeter, where Lord Robartes was so pleased with him that he gave him his daughter in marriage, and took him to Ireland. Here he obtained, first the deanery, and next the bishopric of Raphoe; from whence he was translated to Derry 1681. When that place was besieged in 1688 he returned to England, and became minister of Aldermanbury. Died 22 June, 1690. A complete edition of his works was published at London in 2 octavo vols., 1855.

HOPKINS, JOHN, a younger son of Dr. Ezekiel Hopkins, was born 1 Jan. 1675. His principal performance is 'Anasia, or the works of the Muses, a collection of Poems,' 3 vols., 1700. The date of his death is not recorded.

HOPKINS, RICHARD, an English gentleman, was educated at Oxford, and afterwards studied law at one of the inns of court; but being converted to the Catholic religion he went abroad, and died at Paris about 1590. He published, 'Memorial of a Christian Life;' 'Meditations;' and other translations from the Spanish.

HOPKINS, SAMUEL, D.D., an American clergyman, from whom the sect of 'Hopkinsians' derive their name, was born at Waterbury, Connecticut; 1721; died at Newport, Rhode Island, 20 December, 1803. He published a 'System of Theology,' and numerous sermons, addresses, and pamphlets.

HOPKINS, WILLIAM, D.D., was born at Evesham, Worcestershire, Aug., 1647, and educated at Oxford. In 1671 he went with the English embassy to Sweden. In 1675 he was promoted to a prebend in the cathedral of Worcester, with which he held the vicarage of Lindridge, and the mastership of St. Oswald's Hospital. He died at Worcester 18 May, 1700. His works are—'Bertram or Ratram, on the Body and Blood of the Lord;' 'Animadversions on Johnson's Answer to Jovian,' &c. He also assisted Bishop Gibson in his edition of the 'Saxon Chronicle,' and translated the article 'Worcestershire' in Camden's Britannia.

HOPKINS, WILLIAM, an Arian writer, though belonging to the Church of England, was born at Monmouth 1706. After studying at Oxford he was presented, in 1731, to the vicarage of Bolney, Sussex, which he held till his death in 1780. He published 'An Appeal to the Common Sense of all Christian People' 1753; 'Exodus, a corrected translation, with notes, critical and explanatory,' 1784; and some pamphlets.

HOPKINSON, FRANCIS, an American statesman, born at Philadelphia 1737. He was one of the signers of the declaration of independence and an active member of Congress; and afterwards a judge of the district court of the United States for Pennsylvania. He was distinguished also as a popular writer and as a poet. Died 9 May, 1791.

HOPPNER, JOHN, an English portrait painter, born 1759; died 1810. He also had a taste for poetry, and published in 1805 a volume of 'Oriental Tales,' in verse.

HOPTON, ARTHUR, a mathematician, born in Somersetshire, and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, after which he became a student of the Temple, where he lived on terms of intimacy with Selden. He died 1614, aged about 26. He wrote a treatise on the Geodetical Staff; The Topographical Glass, containing the uses of that instrument, &c.; A Concordance of Years; Prognostications.

HOPTON, SUSANNA, was the relict of Richard Hopton, Esq., a Welsh judge. His seat was at Kington, in Herefordshire, where she lived many years after his death, exercising herself in works of charity. She died 20 July, 1709. Among her benefactions was one of £700 to the clergy who were deprived for not taking the oaths after the Revolution. She wrote 'Devotions and Meditations,' and other works.

HORACE, QUINTUS HORATIUS FLACCUS, a Roman poet, born at Venusium, in Apulia, B.C. 65. His father, who was the son of a freedman, gave him an excellent education, and sent him, at the age of eighteen, to Athens, where he joined Brutus, and was at the battle of Philippi, but threw away his shield, and fled. Though he saved his life, he forfeited his estate, and was reduced to great want till Virgil introduced him to Mæcenas, by whose interest he recovered his patrimony. Augustus now became his friend, and offered to make him his secretary, which Horace declined. When Mæcenas was sent to Brundisium to conclude a treaty between Augustus and Anthony, he took with him Horace, Virgil, and other literary friends. Of this journey our poet has given a lively description in his Fifth Satire. Among other persons of distinction who esteemed him and honoured him with their friendship, was Pollio; yet Horace chose to live in retirement, spending only the spring at Rome, the summer in the country, and the winter at Tarentum. His death, which happened eight years B.C., is supposed to have been hastened by his concern for the loss of Mæcenas. He was short and corpulent, with weak eyes, and was grey at forty. The best editions of his works are those of Bentley, Baxter, Savadon, Combe, and Doring.

HORBERRY, MATTHEW, D.D., was born at Haxay, Lincolnshire, 1707, and educated at Oxford. He became rector of Standlake, Oxfordshire, where he died 22 Jan., 1773. Dr. Horberry's principal work is a treatise on the Eternity of Hell Torments, 1744.

HORMAN, WILLIAM, a native of Salisbury, was, according to Bale, educated at King's College, Cambridge; and there is reason to believe that Wood is altogether mistaken in stating him to have been a fellow of New College, Oxford. He became master of Eton School, and held the rectory of East Wrotham, Norfolk, 1494—1503. He subsequently became a fellow and vice-provost of Eton, and died 12 April, 1535. Among his numerous works may be mentioned 'Vulgaria Puerorum,' &c., 1519; 'Antibossicon ad Gul. Lilium,' 1521; 'Apologeticon contra Rob. Whittingtoni Protovasis Angliæ incivilem indoctamque Criminationem,' 1521; 'Compendium Hist. Gul. Malmisburiensis.'—Athen. Cantab.

HORMISDAS, Pope, succeeded Symmachus 514; died 6 Aug., 523.

HORN, CHARLES EDWARD, a musical composer, born in London 1786; died at Boston, U.S., 21 Oct., 1839.

HORN, PHILIP DE MONTMORENCI-NIVELLE, comte DE, a wealthy nobleman of Flanders, born 1522, who became chamberlain and captain of the Flemish guard to Philip II., king of Spain. He distinguished himself at the battles of St. Quentin and Gravelines, and was beheaded, together with Count Egmont, at Brussels, 4 June, 1568.

HORNE, GEORGE, a bishop, born 1 Nov., 1730, at Otham, Kent. He was educated at the school of Maidstone, from whence he removed to University College, Oxford; but in 1749 he was elected fellow of Magdalen College. In 1752 he took his master's degree, and the same year entered into orders. He was now distinguished for his biblical knowledge, and attachment to the opinions of John Hutchinson, which he defended, first in a pamphlet entitled 'The Theology and Philosophy in Cicero's Somnium Scipionis explained,' 1751; and again more fully in 'A fair and candid State of the Case between Sir Isaac Newton and Mr. Hutchinson,' 1753. After this he had a dispute with Kennicott, respecting his proposal for a collation of Hebrew manuscripts; but subsequently these learned and amiable men became intimate friends. In 1768 Mr. Horne was elected to the headship of his college, on which he took his doctor's degree, and was appointed chaplain to the king. About this time he married the daughter of Philip Burton, Esq., by whom he had three daughters. In 1776 he was elected vice-chancellor, and the same year published his 'Commentary on the Psalms,' 2 vols. 4to. In 1781 he was advanced to the deanery of Canterbury, and in 1789 was raised to the bishopric of Norwich. Died 17 Jan., 1792. His principal works, besides those already mentioned, are An Apology for certain Gentlemen in the University of Oxford; Considerations on the Life and Death of St. John the Baptist, 1760; Considerations on the projected Reformation of the Church of England; Letter to Dr. Adam Smith, on the Life, Death and Philosophy, of David Hume; Discourses on several Subjects and Occasions, 5 vols.; Letters on Infidelity; Letter to Dr. Priestley by an Undergraduate; Observations on the Case of the Protestant Dissenters; Charge intended to have been delivered to the Clergy of Norwich, at the primary Visitation; Considerations on the Life and Death of Abel, Enoch, and Noah; Thoughts and Essays on various Subjects.

HORNE, THOMAS HARTWELL, D.D., was born 20 Oct., 1780. His father, a barrister's clerk, sent him to Christ's Hospital, after which he gained a livelihood as a clerk, devoting his leisure hours to the compilation of a number of books, all of which are now forgotten. From 1809 to 1823 he was sub-librarian at the Surrey Institution, and from 1824 to 1860, senior assistant-librarian in the department of printed books in the British Museum. His 'Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures,' the work by which he is best known, first appeared in 1813, in 3 vols. 8vo., and has since passed through many editions, and been considerably enlarged. Dr. Howley, bishop of London, was so pleased with this work that he ordained its author 1819, and in 1833 presented him to the living of St. Edmund the King with St. Nicholas-Acons Lombard Street. Mr. Horne took his degree of B.D., as a 'ten-year man,' at St. John's College, Cambridge, 1829; and subsequently received a diploma of D.D. from the university of Pennsylvania. Died 27 Jan., 1862.

HORNEBY, HENRY, D.D., master of Peterhouse, Cambridge, died 12 Feb., 1517-8. He was dean of the chapel, secretary, and chancellor to Margaret countess of Richmond, and one of the executors and supervisors of her will; and his indomitable energy was mainly instrumental in overcoming the formidable obstacles to the foundation of St. John's College, Cambridge. Dr. Horneby wrote 'Historia Nominis Jesu,' and 'Historia Visitationis B.M.V.'—Athen. Cantab.

HORNECK, ANTHONY, D.D., was born at Bacharach, in the Lower Palatinate, 1641, and educated at Heidelberg, under Spanheim. At the age of nineteen he came to England, and entered Queen's College, Oxford. In 1665 he became chaplain to the duke of Albermarle, who gave him the rectory of Doulton, Devonshire, and procured for him a prebend of Exeter. He was chosen preacher at the Savoy 1671, and created D.D. at Cambridge 1681. In 1693 he was promoted to a stall at Westminster, whereupon he resigned that of Exeter; but in 1694 he had another in the church of Wells, given to him by Bishop Kidder. Died Jan., 1696. He wrote many works, mostly on religious subjects.

HORNEMANN, FREDERICK CONRAD, a traveller, born at Hildesheim, 1772. Under the auspices of the African Association of London he travelled into Africa, and was last heard of on 6 April, 1800. His 'Journal of Travels, from Cairo to Mourzook, the capital of the kingdom of Fezzan, in Africa, in 1797-8,' was published at London, 1802.

HORNER, FRANCIS, was born at Edinburgh in 1778, and educated first at the High School, and next at the university of his native city, where he contracted an intimacy with Lord Henry Petty, afterwards marquis of Lansdowne. After studying the law, and becoming an advocate, Mr. Horner repaired to London, and in 1806 was returned to parliament, though he did not distinguish himself as a senator till 1810, when he became chairman of the 'Bullion Committee,' to which subject he paid uncommon attention, and illustrated in a very luminous report. His application to business, however, proved too much for his constitution, and he was obliged to seek the climate of Italy, where he died, at Pisa, 8 Feb., 1817. He was one of the first writers in the 'Edinburgh Review.'

HORNER, LEONARD, F.R.S., brother of the preceding, was appointed warden of the London University 1827 and in 1833 an Inspector under the Factory Act. He died 5 March, 1864, aged 79. Mr. Horner edited his brother's works, and wrote a number of papers on scientific and philanthropic subjects.

HORNIUS, GEORGE, professor of history at Leyden, died there 1670. His works include an Eccle-classical History; 'The History of England during the years 1645 and 1646'; and 'Noah's Ark,' or a history of monarchies.

HORNOLD, JOHN, an English prelate of the Roman communion, was consecrated 1753 by the title of bishop of Philomelia in partibus, and appointed vicar-apostolic of the Midland district. He died 26 Sept., 1779.

HORREBOW, PETER, a Danish astronomer, born in Jutland 1679, became professor of mathematics at Copenhagen, and died 15 April, 1764. Besides his mathematical works, collected in 4 vols. 4to., he wrote 'The Natural History of Iceland,' of which an English translation appeared at London 1758.

HORROCKS, JEREMIAH, an astronomer, born at Taxteth, Lancashire, about 1619. He was educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge; after which he led a retired life, devoting himself to mathematical studies, particularly astronomy, in which he was assisted by Mr. William Crabtree, of Broughton. Mr. Horrocks was cut off by a sudden death 3 Jan., 1640-1. He was the first who observed the passage of Venus over the sun's disk, of which he wrote an account, entitled 'Venus in Sole visa,' which was printed by Hevelius at Dantzick, in 1662. Dr. Wallis published the posthumous works of Horrocks 1673.

HORSLEY, JOHN, a learned antiquary, was a native of Northumberland. He was educated first at Newcastle, and next in Scotland, where he took his degree of M.A., after which he became a dissenting minister at Morpeth. Died 12 Jan., 1731-2. Such is the scanty account of a man whose 'Britannia Romana,' folio, 1732, is a standard work on the remains of the Romans in this island. There is a copy of this inestimable book in the British Museum, with additions by Dr. John Ward.

HORSLEY, SAMUEL, a learned prelate, was the son of the Rev. John Horsley, rector of St. Mary, Newington, and Thorley, Herts. He was born in the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields 1733, and educated under his father, after which he went to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he took his degree of bachelor of civil law in 1758. He then entered into orders, and became curate to his father. In 1767 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and the same year published a tract, entitled 'The Power of God deduced from the computable instantaneous Productions of it in the Solar System.' In 1768 he went to Oxford as tutor to Lord Guernsey, son of the earl of Aylesbury, and while there took his degree of doctor of laws. He also published, at the Clarendon Press, 'Apollonii Pergæi inclinationum lib. duo.' In 1773 he was chosen secretary to the Royal Society, and soon after was presented to the rectory of Aldbury in Surrey, with which he held that of Newington on the resignation of his father. In 1776 he issued proposals for his edition of Newton's works, which came out at different times in 5 vols. 4to. In 1777 Bishop Lowth made him his chaplain, and gave him a prebend in St. Paul's Cathedral. He resigned Aldbury in 1779, and the next year was presented to Thorley, but left it on being appointed archdeacon of St. Alban's. In 1782 he obtained the rectory of South Weald, in Essex. In 1784 he engaged in the disputes which agitated the Royal Society, with regard to the conduct of Sir Joseph Banks to Dr. Hutton. But his greatest controversy was with Dr. Priestley, occasioned by his 'History of the Corruptions of Christianity,' to which the archdeacon of St. Alban's directed the attention of his clergy in a charge printed at their request. This was replied to by Priestley, who received an answer in a series of letters. The doctor rejoined in letters to the archdeacon, on which the latter published remarks. The reputation which he acquired in this dispute procured for him first a prebend in the church of Gloucester, next the bishopric of St. David's; from whence, in 1793, he was removed to Rochester, with the deanery of Westminster; and in 1802 to the see of St. Asaph. He died at Brighton 4 Oct., 1806, and was buried at Newington. Besides the works already mentioned, the bishop printed Critical Disquisitions on the 18th Chapter of Isaiah; Hosea, a new translation, with notes; Elementary Treatises of practical Mathematics; On the Prosodies of the Greek and Latin Languages; An Essay on Virgil's Season of Honey; also several sermons, tracts, and papers in the Philosophical Transactions. After his death were published his sermons, 4 vols.; speeches in Parliament; charges; a translation of the Psalms, 2 vols.; and Biblical criticisms, 4 vols.

HORSTIUS, JAMES, a physician and medical writer, born at Torgau 1537, became professor at Helmstadt, and died 1600. His nephew, Gregory Horstius, born at Torgau 1578, was professor of physic at several places, but lastly at Ulm, where he died 9 Aug., 1636. His works were published at Nuremberg, 3 vols., 1600.

HORTE, JOSIAH, archbishop of Tuam, was born at Marshfield, Gloucestershire. He officiated some time as a dissenting teacher at Newbury; but was afterwards ordained in the church of England. On going to Ireland with one of the lords-lieutenant, he was made bishop of Kilmore, and next archbishop of Tuam. Died 14 Dec., 1751. He published a volume of sermons, and a charge to his clergy.

HORTENSE (Eugénie de Beauharnais), queen of Holland, was the daughter of Josephine, afterwards empress of the French, and of the Viscount Alexander de Beauharnais. She was born at Paris 1783; married (1802) Louis Bonaparte, brother of the First Consul; became queen of Holland (1806); and on the abdication of her husband (1810) became once more merely an imperial princess. She retired to Augsburg (1816); and afterwards fixed her residence at Arenenberg, in Switzerland, where she died 5 Oct., 1837.

HORTENSIUS, LAMBERT, a philologist, poet, and historian, born at Montfort (Utrecht) 1501. He studied at Louvain, and was for several years rector of the school at Naarden, where he died 1574 or 1577.

HORTENSIUS, MARTIN, a Dutch astronomer, born at Delft 1605; died 1639.

HORTENSIUS, QUINTUS, a Roman orator, the rival of Cicero, died B.C. 49, aged 64.

HORTIBONUS. See CASAUON.

HORTON, THOMAS, D.D., was born in London. He studied at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1638 he became master of Queen's College, in 1641 professor of divinity at Gresham College, and in 1647 preacher to the society of Gray's Inn. He complied with the ruling powers in the Rebellion, for which, at the Restoration, he was deprived of the headship of Queen's College; but he held the vicarage of Great St. Helen, in Bishopsgate Street, till his death March, 1673. His works are Forty-six sermons on the 8th of Romans; Exposition upon some Psalms; One hundred select sermons, with his life, by Dr. Wallis.

HOSIUS, STANISLAUS, born at Cracow 1504, became successively secretary to the king of Poland, canon of Cracow, bishop of Culm and of Warmia. Having succeeded in persuading the Emperor Ferdinand to continue the council of Trent, he was rewarded by Pope Pius IV. with a cardinal's hat. Died 5 Aug., 1579. His works were published in 2 vols. folio, 1584.

HOSKINS, ANTHONY, a native of Herefordshire, who joined the society of Jesus in Spain, and died at Valladolid 10 Sept., 1615, æt. 47. He published a treatise on the Oath of Allegiance 1611; a translation of the 'Imitatio Christi;' &c.

HOSKINS, JOHN, a lawyer, was born in 1566, at Mownton in the parish of Lanwarne, Herefordshire. He was educated at Westminster School, and next at Winchester, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship; but was expelled for some libels. After this he kept school at Ilchester some time, and then studied the law in the Temple, where he was called to the bar. In 1614 he had a seat in Parliament; but for some intemperate speeches was sent to prison. He became, however, sergeant-at-law, a Welsh judge, and one of the council of the Marches. Died 27 Aug., 1638. He compiled a Greek Lexicon, which was never published, and wrote several poems; the 'Art of Memory;' and some law treatises. His grandson, Sir John Hoskins, bart., was master in chancery, and president of the Royal Society, 1682.

HOSKINS, JOHN, an English portrait painter, died 1664.

HOSPINIAN, RODOLPH, a Protestant divine of Zurich, born 1547; died 11 March, 1626. His principal works are De Templis; De Monachis; De festis Judæorum et Ethnicorum; Festa Christianorum; Historia Sacramentaria; Historia Jæsticia.

HOSPITAL, L'. See L'HOSPITAL.

HOSSCHIUS, SIDRONIUS, a Flemish Jesuit, born 1596; died 4 Sept., 1653. He was famous for his Latin poetry, collected and published at Antwerp 1656.

HOSTE. See L'HOSTE.

HOTHUM, or ODONE, WILLIAM DE, born in England, educated at Paris (D.D. 1280), entered the order of St. Dominic, and in 1297 became archbishop of Dublin. Died 28 Aug., 1298. He wrote some works on Divinity, and a French oration on the king's right to Scotland.

HOTMAN, FRANCIS, in Latin Hotomanus, a civilian, born at Paris 1524. Having adopted the Lutheran doctrines, he withdrew to Lyons, and next to Geneva, from whence he removed to Lausanne, where he was chosen professor of polite literature. After having occupied the chair of law at Strasburg, he was employed by the king of Navarre in several important missions. The massacre of St. Bartholomew induced him to quit France; and he died at Basle 15 Feb., 1590. He wrote on legal subjects; on the government of France; on Roman antiquities; and a treatise 'De Consolatione.'

HOTTINGER, JOHN HENRY, was born at Zurich 10 March, 1630. He studied at Geneva, Groningen, and Leyden, where he applied himself to the oriental languages under Golius. After visiting England he returned to Zurich, and became professor of ecclesiastical history. In 1655

he went to Heidelberg, where he held the professorships of divinity and the oriental tongues, and was principal of the Collegium Sapientia; and rector of the university. In 1661 he returned to Zurich and was placed at the head of the commission for revising the German version of the Bible. He was also sent to Holland on some state affairs, and while there was offered the divinity professorship at Leyden, which, with the consent of the magistrates of Zurich, he accepted; but in preparing for the journey he was drowned by the upsetting of a boat 5 June, 1667. His principal works are Exercitationes Anti-Moriniana, de pentateucho Samaritano; Thesaurus Philologicus; Historia Orientalis; Promptuarium, sive Bibliotheca Orientalis; Etymologicum Orientale sive Lexicon Harmonicum Heptaglotum. His son, John James Hottinger, became professor of divinity at Zurich, and died there in 1735. He wrote 'Theological Dissertations.'

HOUARD, DAVID, a French advocate, and legal antiquary, born at Dieppe 20 Feb., 1725; died 15 Dec., 1802.

HOUBIGANT, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, was born at Paris 1686. He became a priest of the congregation of the Oratory; but being afflicted with deafness he was obliged to devote himself to study; the fruits of which appeared in an excellent edition of the Hebrew Bible, with a Latin version and notes, published at Paris in 1753, in 4 vols. folio; a Latin translation of the Psalms from the Hebrew; another of the Old Testament, 8 vols. 8vo.; 'Racines Hebraïques,' against the Hebrew Points, 8vo., &c. Died 31 Oct., 1783.

HOUBRAKEN, ARKOLD, a painter and engraver, born at Dordt 1660. He is chiefly known as the author of 'The great Theatre of the Dutch and Flemish Painters,' 3 vols. folio. He came to England to make drawings of the pictures of Vandyke, and died at Amsterdam 1719. His son, Jacob, was born 1698, and died at Amsterdam 1780. His portraits are admirably executed, particularly those which he engraved for the illustration of English history, published by the Knaptons, in folio. Some of these, however, are not genuine likenesses of the persons whose names they bear. Houbraken also engraved some historical subjects.

HOUGHARD, JEAN NICOLAS, a French general, born at Forbach (Moselle) 1740. After serving under Custines, he accused that general of losing Mayence by his misconduct. Custines was consequently disgraced; and Houghard, placed at the head of the army, displayed his abilities in the victory of Hondschoote, which resulted in the English raising the siege of Dunkirk. Accused of treason for not having sufficiently followed up this victory, he was condemned by the revolutionary tribunal, and suffered death on the scaffold 17 Nov., 1793.

HOUDON, JEAN ANTOINE, a French sculptor, born at Versailles 20 March, 1741; died 15 July, 1828.

HOUGH, JOHN, was born in Middlesex 12 April, 1651. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1678 he became chaplain to the duke of Ormond; and in 1685 was made a prebendary of Worcester. In 1687 the presidentship of Magdalen College becoming vacant, the king sent mandatory letters to the fellows, requiring them to elect one Anthony Farmer, who did not belong to that society, and was said to be a man of bad character. The fellows upon this, seeing their privileges attacked, applied by petition for leave to proceed to a free election, according to their statutes. No answer being returned, they chose Mr. Hough, who was confirmed by the visitor, the bishop of Winchester; and the new president having taken his doctor's degree, was installed. The king, instead of letting the matter rest, now thought proper to send another mandate, ordering the society to elect Dr. Parker, bishop of Oxford, for their president; which they refused, and were turned out, except two. Thus the business stood till September, 1688, when the king, finding that his affairs grew desperate, began to be alarmed, and commissioned the bishop of Winchester to settle the society of Magdalen College regularly and statutely. Dr. Hough and the fellows were accordingly restored; and in 1690 the president was made bishop of Oxford, from whence he removed to Lichfield, and next to Worcester, where he died 8 March, 1743.

HOUGHTON, MAJOR, an English traveller who set out in 1789 to ascertain the course of the Niger. He penetrated into the interior of Africa, and died at Jarra 1791. Several communications from him are printed in the Proceedings of the African Association.

HOUSEMAN, or HUYSMAN, CORNELIUS, a landscape painter, was born 1638 at Antwerp, but resided chiefly at Mechlin, where he died 1727.

HOUSEMAN, or HUYSMAN, JAMES, an eminent portrait and historical painter, born at Antwerp 1656; died in London 1696.

HOUSTON, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., a botanist, born about 1695. He was a surgeon, on which capacity he went to the West Indies, and on his return took the degree of doctor of physic, at Leyden, in 1729. While there he made some experiments on brutes, an account of which was inserted in the Philosophical Transactions, under the title of Experimenta de perforatione Thoracis ejusque in respiracione affectibus. In 1732 he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; but died in the West Indies 14 July, 1733. He was the first who sent to Europe the description of the Dorstenia Contryerva, which was published in the Philosophical Transactions. He also transmitted to Miller, the gardener, the seeds of many exotic plants. The late Sir Joseph Banks published his manuscript catalogue of plants, with the title of 'Reliquiæ Houstonianæ.'

HOUSTOUNE, ELEANORA, LADY, daughter of Charles, eighth Lord Cathcart, was born at Edinburgh 3 March, 1720. She became the wife of Sir John Houstoune, bart., 1744, and died 3 Nov., 1760. Lady Houstoune wrote two comedies, neither of which was printed, viz., 'The Coquette; or the Gallant in the Closet,' and 'In Foro.'

HOUTEVILLE, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a French priest, author of an esteemed work on 'The Truth of the Christian Religion, was born 1688; and died 8 Nov., 1742.

HOVEDEN, ROGER DE, an historian, was a native of Yorkshire, and flourished about 1204. He held some place in the court of Henry II., and was both a lawyer and a professor of theology at Oxford. His Annals, beginning at the year 731 and ending at 1202, were printed by Sir Henry Swile, among the 'Historici Anglici,' folio, 1595; and again 1601. An English translation, by H. T. Riley, appeared a few years ago.

HOWARD.

HOW, WILLIAM, a botanist, born in London 1619. He had his education at Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1645; after which he practised physic in London, where he died in Sept., 1656. He published 'Phytologia Britannica, natales exhibens indigenarum, stirpium sponte emergentium,' 1650.

HOWARD. See ARUNDEL, CARLISLE, NORFOLK, NORTHAMPTON, NOTTINGHAM, and SURREY.

HOWARD, CATHARINE. See CATHARINE.

HOWARD, EDWARD, an English writer of fiction, died 30 Dec., 1841. He was a naval man, and attained his chief popularity by his novel entitled 'Ratlin the Keeler,' 1838. This was followed by 'Outward Bound;' 'Jack Ashore;' 'Sir Henry Morgan, the Buccaneer;' and a Life of Sir Sidney Smith.

HOWARD, HENRY, an English prelate of the Roman communion, succeeded Dr. Giffard as vicar apostolic of the London district, being consecrated bishop of Utica 23 Sept., 1702. He died 22 Nov., 1720.

HOWARD, HENRY, F.S.A., was born a July 1757, at Corby-castle, Cumberland, where he died 1 March, 1842. He was educated at the convent of the English Benedictines at Douay, and afterwards spent some time in the university of Paris. It was his intention to enter the army, but the penal laws prevented his doing so. In 1832 he was appointed high-sheriff of Cumberland, being the first Catholic who filled that office after the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts. Mr. Howard's principal works are 'Erroneous Opinions commonly entertained respecting the Catholic Religion,' 1826; and Memorials of the Howard Family, 1834.

HOWARD, HENRY, R.A., secretary and professor of painting to the Royal Academy, was born 31 Jan., 1769, and died at Oxford 5 Oct., 1847. For 53 years, from 1794 to 1847, he never missed sending to the Royal Academy exhibition.

HOWARD, JOHN, the philanthropist, was born at Hackney 1726. He was bound apprentice to a grocer in London; but disliking the business, and having an independent fortune, he purchased his indentures, and made the tour of France and Italy. On his return he married a widow lady, much older than himself, who died about three years afterwards. In 1756 he undertook a voyage to Lisbon, to see the place after the earthquake; but on the voyage the ship was taken by a French privateer and carried to France. On being released, Mr. Howard retired to a villa in the New Forest; and in 1758 married a second time, but lost his wife 1765. About this time he settled at Cardington, near Bedford, where his time was much occupied in benevolent objects, and in the education of his son. In 1773 he served the office of high-sheriff, which led him to make inquires into the state of the prisons. With this view he travelled over England, through France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Turkey. He published, in 1777, a work entitled 'The State of the Prisons in England and Wales,' dedicated to the House of Commons. In 1780 came out an appendix with an account of the author's travels in Italy. He also printed a description of the Bastille; a translation of the duke of Tuscany's new code of civil law; and in 1789 'An account of the principal Lazarettos in Europe.' The plague was now the object of his researches, and with a design of ascertaining the nature of this disorder, and the means of curing it, he set out for the east; but died of a malignant epidemic, at Cherson, 20 Jan., 1790.

HOWARD, LUKE, F.R.S., a writer on meteorology, died at Tottenham, Herts, 21 March, 1864.

HOWARD, PHILIP THOMAS, an English cardinal, born in London 21 Sept., 1630, being the third son of Henry Frederick, lord Mowbray, by his wife Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of the duke of Lennox. He was admitted a fellow-commoner of St. John's College, Cambridge, 4 July, 1640. Travelling on the continent with his grandfather, Thomas Howard, earl of Arundel and Surrey, he privately took the Dominican habit at Cremona 1645, and made his solemn profession at Rome 19 Oct., 1646. He was then sent to Naples for his studies, and at the end of four years returned to the Eternal City. He established the English monastery at Bornhem 1658, and was elected its first prior, in which capacity he continued till 1675. He also established the house of English Dominicanesses, first situate at Vilvorden, and afterwards removed to Brussels. On the marriage of Catharine of Braganza to king Charles II., Father Howard was called to the English court and received the appointment of grand almoner to her majesty. He was created a cardinal 1675 by Clement X., and being appointed Protector of Great Britain, he endeavoured to promote the interests of his Catholic fellow-countrymen by every means in his power. He died at Rome 18 July, 1694.

HOWARD, SIR ROBERT, was born Jan., 1626, being a younger son of Thomas, earl of Berkshire. He was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, and during the Rebellion suffered much for his loyalty. At the Restoration he was knighted, and made auditor of the exchequer. He lived to the Revolution, which he strongly advocated, and was bitter enemy to the nonjurors, though he had been a servile tool of Charles II. Died 3 Sept., 1698. Sir Robert published 'Poems and Plays'; 'The History of Edward II. and Richard II.'; 'The History of Religion'; the fourth book of Virgil translated; Statius's Achilleis translated.

HOWARD, SAMUEL, a composer of music, was brought up in the chapel royal, and in 1768 took his degree of doctor at Cambridge. He was distinguished by his ballads, which were once very popular. Died about 1783.

HOWE, CHARLES, a pious writer, was born in Gloucestershire 1661, and died 1745. His 'Devout Meditations' have been often printed.

HOWE, ELIAS, the inventor of the sewing machine, was born at Spencer, Massachusetts, 1819. It was at Boston, in the shop of Ari Davis, that he first thought of the sewing machine. Poverty for some time prevented the development of his ideas, but in 1844 he succeeded in convincing a friend of the feasibility of his conception. In April, 1845, he sewed seam with his machine, and by May of the same year he had completed his work. He died at Bridgeport, Connecticut, 3 Sept., 1867.

HOWE, JOHN, a nonconformist divine, born at Loughborough, Leicestershire, 17 May, 1630. He received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge; but after taking his bachelor's degree, removed to Brasenose College, Oxford, where he became Bible clerk. Afterwards he was made a demy and fellow of Magdalen College; and in 1652 took his degree of M.A. When ordained, he was settled as minister of Great Torrington, Devonshire, till Cromwell appointed him his domestic chaplain. On the death of Oliver he returned to Torrington, from which living he was ejected at the Restoration. After this he lived some time in the family of Lord Massarene, in Ireland; and in 1675 became pastor of a congregation in London. In 1685 he went abroad, and officiated in the English church at Utrecht; but when James II. published his declaration for liberty of conscience, he returned to London, where he died 2 April, 1705. His works, the principal of which is a treatise, entitled 'The Living Temple,' have been published in 2 vols. folio.

HOWE, JOHN, was a native of Nottinghamshire. In the convention parliament he served for Cirencester, and constantly sat in parliament for that or some other place during the reigns of William and Anne. Under the latter he was sworn of the privy council, and made vice-admiral for the county of Gloucester. In 1702 he was constituted paymaster-general of the guards and garrisons. Died 1721. Mr. Howe wrote 'A Panegyric on King William'; and several songs and poems.

HOWE, JOHN, Lord Chedworth. See CHEDWORTH.

HOWE, JOSIAH, a divine and poet, was born at Crendon, Bucks, 1632, and died fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, 28 Aug., 1701. A copy of his verses is prefixed to Beaumont and Fletcher's works; another to Randolph's poems; and another to Cartwright's works.

HOWE, RICHARD, Viscount Howe, K.G., the third son of Sir Emanuel Scrope, second Viscount Howe, by Mary Sophia, eldest daughter of the Baron Kilmansegge. He was born in 1725, and educated at Eton, from whence, at the age of fourteen, he went on board the 'Severn,' part of the squadron destined for the South Seas under Anson. In 1745 he was with Admiral Vernon, and soon after was made commander of the 'Baltimore' sloop, in which, with another armed vessel, he beat off two French ships, conveying troops and ammunition to the Pretender; for which he was made a post-captain. On the breaking out of the war with France he commanded the 'Dunkirk'; with which he took the 'Alcide,' a French sixty-four, off Newfoundland. In 1757 he served under Sir Edward Hawke; and his ship, the Magnanime, battered the fort on the isle of Aix till it surrendered. After this he was appointed commodore of a squadron, with which he took the town of Cherbourg, and destroyed the basin. In the unfortunate affair of St. Cas, he displayed equal courage and humanity, and by his exertions brought off several hundreds of men who would otherwise have perished. He succeeded to the Irish title of viscount in 1758, on the death of his brother, who was killed in America. The next year he bore a distinguished part in the defeat of the fleet under Conflans. In 1760 he was appointed colonel of the marines; and in 1763 had a seat at the admiralty board. In 1765 he was made treasurer of the navy; and in 1770 promoted to be rear-admiral of the blue; in 1775 rear-admiral of the white, and afterwards vice-admiral of the blue. France having now entered into a war with England, Lord Howe was sent to America, where he defended the coast from the attempts of D'Estaing, after which he returned to England. In 1782 he was made an English viscount, and appointed to the command of the fleet sent to the relief of Gibraltar, which object he accomplished.

HOWEL.

The next year he was made first lord of the admiralty; but soon resigned that station to Lord Keppel. In 1788 he was created an earl of Great Britain. On the breaking out of hostilities with France, in 1793, he was appointed to command the channel fleet; and on the 1st of June, the following year, he gained a complete victory over the French, who lost seven ships of the line. For this he received the thanks of Parliament; the king visited him on board his ship, presented him with a valuable sword, and made him knight of the garter. The last service rendered by his lordship to his country was in reducing the mutinous seamen to their duty, at Portsmouth, in 1797. Died 5 Aug., 1799.

HOWEL, LAURENCE, an unfortunate divine, who received his education at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1688. He was for some time master of the school at Epping; but was ordained among the nonjurors by Bishop Hickey. In 1716 he printed a pamphlet entitled 'The Case of Schism in the Church of England,' for which he was tried at the Old Bailey, degraded, sentenced to be fined 500*l.*, and to be twice whipped. Such was the toleration of those times in those who set up pretences to liberty. The disgraceful part of the sentence was remitted; but the object of persecution died in Newgate 19 July, 1720. The works of Mr. Howel show his learning; they are Synopsis Canonum S.S. Apostolorum, &c., 2 vols.; The View of the Pontificate; History of the Bible, with Sturt's cuts, 3 vols.; The Orthodox Communicant.

HOWELL, JAMES, was born about 1594, at Abernart, Caermarthenshire. He was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1613 he was employed by Sir Robert Mansel in his glass-house; a new speculation just then established. As it was necessary to procure good workmen from Venice, Howell was sent thither for that purpose. In 1621 he returned to London, and the next year went to Spain on some commercial business. After going through various employments, he fell into trouble, and was confined in the Fleet several years, where he supported himself by writing and translating books. At length, by application to Cromwell, he obtained his liberty. At the Restoration he was made royal historiographer. Died Nov., 1666. The principal of his works are Dodona's Grove, or the Vocal Forest; Instructions for Foreign Travel; Mercurius Hibernicus, or a Discourse of the Irish Massacre; Pre-eminence and Pedigree of Parliaments; Epistolæ Ho-Eliañæ, or Familiar Letters, domestic and foreign—this is the book by which Howell will be longest remembered; it has gone through numerous editions; Survey of the Signory of Venice; Parthenopæia, or the History of Naples; Londinopolis. Howell had two brothers, one of whom, Thomas, became bishop of Bristol; and the other recorder of London.

HOWELL, WILLIAM, D.C.L., a civilian of Oxford, who became chancellor of Lincoln, and died in 1683. He compiled two works of considerable merit, Medulla Historiæ Anglicanæ, or an abridged History of England, and A History of the World, from the earliest Times to the Ruin of the Roman Empire, 3 vols. folio. He also published Elementa Historiæ Civilis, 1660.

HOWISON, WILLIAM, A.R.S.A., a Scotch engraver, born at Edinburgh 1798; died 20 Dec., 1850.

HUBER.

HOWLET, JOHN, an English Jesuit, was a native of the county of Rutland, and died at Wilna, in Russia, 17 Sept., 1589. Father Persons prefixed his name to a book entitled 'A Brief Discourse, containing the Reasons, why Catholics refuse to go to Church,' 1580. This was answered by Fulke.

HOWLEY, WILLIAM, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Kopley, near Ailresford, Hampshire, 12 Feb., 1765, being the only son of William Howley, D.D., vicar of Bishop's Sutton and Kopley. From Winchester School he went to Oxford and gained a fellowship, first at New College, and afterwards (1794) at Winchester College, Oxford. He became a canon of Christ Church 1804; regius professor of divinity 1809; bishop of London 1813; archbishop of Canterbury 1828; died 11 Feb., 1848. He published some sermons and charges; also an Inquiry into the Authority of the Coronation Oath.

HOWSON, JOHN, an English prelate, was born in London, 1556, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. On entering into orders he was made vicar of Bampton, rector of Brightwell, fellow of Chelsea College, and canon of Hereford. King James I., with whom he was a favourite, gave him the bishopric of Oxford; from which, in 1628, he removed to Durham. Died 6 Feb., 1631. His polemical discourses show him to have been an able controversialist.

HOZIER, PIERRE D'. See D'HOZIER.

HUARTE, JOHN, a Spanish author in the seventeenth century, who gained celebrity by a work entitled 'Examen de ingenios para las Ciencias,' &c., or an Examination of such geniuses as are fit for acquiring the sciences. This book has been translated into various languages; and the English version has the title of 'The Trial of Wits.'

HUBALD, a monk of St. Amand in Flanders, who wrote a treatise on Music, in which is a kind of gamut. He also wrote a Latin poem, addressed to the emperor Charles the Bald, in praise of baldness. In this curious piece every word begins with the letter C. Died 930, aged 90.

HUBER, FRANÇOIS, a naturalist, born at Geneva 2 July, 1750; died at Lausanne 22 Dec., 1831.

HUBER, JOHN JAMES, an anatomical writer, born at Basle 1707. He became physician at the court of Baden Dourlach, 1735, but in 1738 removed to Groningen, where he was appointed professor of anatomy, and court physician. Died 6 July, 1778.

HUBER, JOHN RODOLPH, a painter, born at Basle 1668; died 1748.

HUBER, MARIE, was born at Geneva 1695, and died at Lyons 13 June, 1753. She published several works of a deistical tendency; and an abridgment, in French, of the 'Spectator.'

HUBER, MICHEL, a French author, who became professor of his native language at Leipsic, where he died 15 April, 1804, aged 70. His works are mainly translations from the German. His son, Louis Ferdinand Huber (b. at Paris 15 Sept., 1764; d. at Ulm 24 Dec., 1804), translated into German many English and French works, being greatly assisted in his literary labours by his wife, Maria Theresa (b. 1764; d. 1829), who was a daughter of the celebrated philosopher Christian Theophilus Heyne. She was also the author of many novels.

HUBER, ULRICH, a jurist, born at Dokkum (Friesland) 1616, became professor at Francker, where he died 8 Nov., 1694. The 'Institutiones Historiæ' Civilis' is his chief work. His son, Zacharias (b. 1699; d. 1732), succeeded his father in his professorship, and published some legal works.

HUBER, VICTOR AIME, born at Stuttgart 1800, held for a time the professorship of literature at Berlin, which he resigned in order to pursue social science in general and co-operation in particular. He published many works on co-operation, of which he was one of the acknowledged leaders in Germany. His book on the English universities, translated into English by F. W. Newman (2 vols. 8vo., Lond., 1843), is among the best works of its kind. Professor Huber died at Wermigerode 19 July, 1869.

HUBERT, SIR FRANCIS, knight of Grav's Inn, one of the six clerks in Chancery, was author of 'The deplorable Life and Death of Edward II., a Poem,' Lond., 8vo., 1628, 1629, 1721; and 'Egypt's Favourite, the Historie of Joseph, a poem,' 8vo., Lond., 1631. He was buried at St. Andrew's, Holborn, 13 Dec., 1629.

HUBERT, MATHIEU, a French Oratorian, celebrated for pulpit eloquence, was born 1640, and died 22 March, 1717.

HUBNEK, JOHN, a writer on geography and history, born at Torgau (Saxony) 1608; died at Hamburg 21 April, 1731. He published 'Questions on Ancient and Modern Geography;' 'Questions on Political History;' 'Genealogical Tables,' &c.

HUCHTENBURG, JOHN VAN, a battle painter, born at Haarlem 1646; died at Amsterdam 1733.

HUDE, JOHN, burgomaster of Amsterdam, distinguished as a mathematician and statesman, was born 1640, and died 1704.

HUDDLESTON, JOHN, nephew of Father Richard Huddleston mentioned below, was a native of Lancashire, and ordained priest at Donay. After being instrumental in preserving the person of his sovereign, Charles II., in 1651, after the battle of Worcester, he was employed to prepare his soul for eternity on 5 Feb., 1685, and has left a circumstantial account of that last scene. He died at Somerset House 22 Sept., 1698, at. 90.

HUDDLESTON, RICHARD, youngest son of Andrew Huddleston, esq., of Farrington Hall, Lancashire, was born 1583, and, after studying at Donay and Rome, joined the order of St. Benedict at the famous monastery of Monte Cassino. He returned to this country on the mission, and died here 26 Nov., 1655. He wrote 'A Short and Plain Way to the Faith and Church,' first published 1683, and reprinted 1844.

HUDSON, HENRY, an English navigator, of whose origin no particulars are recorded. He made a voyage in 1607 to discover a north-east passage to India, and, after various hardships and adventures in the Arctic regions, returned to England Sept. 15 of that year. In 1608 he made another voyage, without success. The next year he sailed in the Dutch service from Amsterdam, doubled the North Cape in April, and, after coasting along the shore of Lapland, stretched towards America, and arrived at Dartmouth, in Devonshire, on the 7th of November. In 1610 he made another attempt, and discovered the mouth of the straits and bay which bear his name. After sailing round the latter, he determined to winter there, by which means he completely exhausted his ship's provisions; a mutiny was the consequence, and his crew turned him adrift, with his son, and a few sick men, in a small boat, which is supposed to have been lost. The mutineers arrived at Plymouth Sept., 1611.

HUDSON, JOHN, D.D., was born at Widehope, near Cockermouth, Cumberland, 1602, and educated at Oxford, where he became keeper of the Bodleian library (1701), and principal of St. Mary Hall (1712). Died 27 Nov., 1719. His publications are Introductio ad Chronographiam; Velleius Paterculus; Thucydidis; Geographiæ Veteres Scriptores Græci Minores, 4 vols.; Dionysii Halicarnassensis opera, 2 vols.; Dionysius Longinus; Moeris Atticista, de viciibus Atticis et Hellenicis; Fabulæ Æsopiæ; Flavi Josephi Opera, 2 vols.

HUDSON, THOMAS, a portrait painter, born at Exeter 1701. He was the pupil and son-in-law of Richardson, and practised with considerable eminence in London, where he had Reynolds for a scholar, who eclipsed him, and put an end to his credit. Died 26 Jan., 1779.

HUDSON, WILLIAM, F.R.S., a botanist, born in Westmoreland about 1730. He served his apprenticeship to an apothecary, but devoted a considerable portion of his time to natural history, and, in 1762, published the 'Flora Anglica,' of which a new edition appeared in 2 vols. 1778. He became botanical demonstrator to the Apothecaries' Company, in their garden at Chelsea, and died 23 May, 1793.

HUERTA, VINCENT GARCIA DE LA, a Spanish poet and prose writer, born at Zaira (Badajos) 1720; died Aug., 1797.

HUET, PIERRE DANIEL, was born at Caen, in Normandy, 8 Feb., 1630. Though his guardians neglected his education, his own application made up for the deficiency, and the advice of Father Mambrun, a Jesuit, proved of advantage to him in his studies. He went through the mathematics, upon which science he maintained public theses at Caen, a thing never before known in that university. He was now proceeding to a knowledge of the law, when the principles of Des Cartes, and the Sacred Geography of Bochart, diverted his intentions. In 1652 he accompanied Bochart to Sweden, where he met with a manuscript commentary of Origen on the Gospel of St. Matthew, which he transcribed. Many others were made to him by Christina to settle at Stockholm; but he refused them all, and returned to France, where he published, in 1661, a book entitled 'De Interpretatione,' or rules for translation, in the form of dialogue. In 1664 he printed a collection of poems, Latin and Greek, at Utrecht, and this was followed by his 'Demonstratio Evangelica,' a work of immense and curious learning. He also published the Commentary of Origen, with a Latin version, in 2 vols. folio; and his reputation for learning being now fully established, he was employed on the Classics for the use of the Dauphin (ad usum Delphini). He was also chosen a member of the French Academy, and in 1678 presented to the abbey of Anunay, in Normandy. In 1685 he was nominated to the bishopric of Soissons, which he soon after exchanged for that of Avranches, but resigned this also in 1699 to enjoy literary ease in the abbey of Fontenay, near Caen. Some lawsuits, however, arising, he removed to Paris, where he lodged in the College of Jesuits, and died 26 Jan., 1721. Besides the works already noticed, he published De l'origine des Romains; De la situation du Paradis Terrestre; Nouveaux Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire du Cartésianisme; De Navigationibus Solomonis; Origines de Caen; Dissertations sur

Perault sur la parallele des anciens et des modernes; Examen du sentiment de Longin sur ce passage de la Genese 'Et Dieu dit,' &c.; his own Life, in Latin. After his death were printed 'Traite Philosophique de la foiblesse de l'esprit humain;' and 'Huetiana.'

HUFELAND, CHRISTOPHER WILLIAM, a German physician, born at Langenszalza, in Thuringia, 12 Aug., 1762. He was professor of medicine at Jena, and afterwards at Berlin, where he died 25 Aug., 1836. It was Hufeland who introduced mortuary houses (for the prevention of burying alive), the first of which was erected at Weimar, under his superintendance. He wrote 'On the Art of Prolonging Life;' 'Advice to Mothers on the Physical Training of Infants,' &c.

HUFNAGEL, GEORGE, a painter and poet, of Antwerp, born 1545; died 1600.

HUGGARD, MILES. See HOGGARD.

HUGH (ST.), bishop of Lincoln, was born in Burgundy 1140, and became general procurator of the Chartreuse, near Grenoble. Invited to England by Henry II., he was appointed prior of the Carthusian monastery at Witham, Somersetshire. He was consecrated bishop of Lincoln 1186, and died 17 Nov., 1200. An ancient 'Metrical Life' of this saintly prelate was printed at Lincoln 1864, by J. Dimock, who has also edited the 'Magna Vita S. Huginis,' which forms part of the series of historical works published under the direction of the master of the rolls.

HUGH OF LINCOLN (ST.), a Christian child, eleven years old, who was crucified by some Jews at Lincoln 27 Aug., 1255.

HUGH OF AMIENS, also called Hugh of Rouen, was born at Amiens, and came to England, where he was made abbot of Roding. Afterwards he became bishop of Rouen, where he died 1164. He wrote three works for the instruction of his clergy, which have been printed by D'Achery.

HUGH CAPET, the chief of the third race of French monarchs, was count of Paris and Orleans. On account of his courage and other qualities he was proclaimed king of France 987. Died 996, aged 57.

HUGH DE ST. CHER, a cardinal, so called from the place of his birth at the gates of Vienna, where there is a church dedicated to St. Cher. He became D.D. at Paris, provincial of the Dominican order, and lastly (1244), cardinal. Died 19 March, 1263. Among his works is a Concordance of the Bible, said to be the earliest specimen of that kind of compilation. It was printed at Cologne 1684.

HUGH DE CLUNI (ST.), was born at Semur, in France, 1024; died 29 April, 1100. He embraced the monastic life at Cluni, where he became prior and at last abbot of his order, which he greatly reformed and extended.

HUGH DE FLAVIGNY, a monk of Verdun, and afterwards abbot of Flavigny, in the twelfth century. He wrote the Chronicle of Verdun, which is printed in Labbe's 'Bibliotheca Manuscriptorum Nova.'

HUGH DE FLEURY, a French monk and chronicler, died about 1120.

HUGH OF SIENNA. See BENCIVUS.

HUGH DE ST. VICTOR, a Flemish divine, became prior of St. Victor at Paris, and died 1142, aged 44. His works were printed at Rouen, 3 vols. 1648.

cated at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow. He published an edition of St. Chrysostom on the Priesthood, and died at Deptford 18 Nov., 1710.

HUGHES, JOHN, a poet, born at Marlborough, Wilts, July 29, 1677. He was educated in the academy of Mr. Thomas Kowe, on leaving whose seminary he obtained a place in the Ordnance Office; and he was also secretary to the commissioners for purchasing lands to secure the royal dockyards. In 1717 the Lord Chancellor Cowper made him secretary to the commissioners of peace. His last and best performance was the tragedy of 'The Siege of Damascus;' but he died 17 Feb., 1719-20, the very day when it was represented. His poems were published in 2 vols., 1735. He was also the author of some prose works, as 'The Advices from Parnassus;' A Preface to Kennett's Complete History of England; some papers in the Tatler, Spectator, and Guardian; and the Lay Monastery. He likewise edited the works of Spenser, in 6 vols. 12mo., to which he prefixed a life of the Poet, an Essay on Allegorical Poetry, Remarks on the Faery Queen, and a Glossary. Jabez Hughes, his younger brother, was born 1675, and died 17 Jan., 1731. He translated 'The Rape of Proserpine,' from Claudian; and 'The Story of Sextus and Erictho,' from Lucan. He also published a translation of Suetonius; and some other works.

HUGHES, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic prelate, born in Ireland 1798. He emigrated to the United States 1817, and was placed with a florist, but being of a studious disposition, he determined to enter the ranks of the priesthood. After his ordination (1825) he was stationed at Philadelphia. In 1830 he accepted a challenge from the Rev. John Breckinridge, a distinguished Presbyterian clergyman, to discuss the question, 'Is the Protestant religion the religion of Christ?' The controversy was carried on in the newspapers for several months, and attracted so much attention that the articles were subsequently collected in a volume which had a wide circulation. In 1834 Mr. Breckinridge renewed the encounter by proposing an oral discussion on the question, 'Is the Roman Catholic religion, in any or in all its principles and doctrines, inimical to civil or religious liberty?' Mr. Hughes at once came forward as the champion of his creed; and the debate, when published in a book form (1836), was regarded with great interest by the adherents of both parties. In 1837 Mr. Hughes was appointed coadjutor to Bishop Dubois, of New York, on whose death, in 1842, he succeeded to the bishopric, which was raised in 1850 to the dignity of an archiepiscopal see. In 1847 Bishop Hughes, at the request of both Houses of Congress, delivered a lecture in the Hall of Representatives at Washington, on 'Christianity the only Source of Moral, Social, and Political Regeneration.' Died 3 Jan., 1864. The archbishop published numerous lectures and pamphlets.

HUGHES, THOMAS SMART, B.D., was educated at Cambridge, where he gained several prizes for poetry in the vernacular and classical languages. In 1822 he was elected Christian Advocate on the foundation of Mr. Hulse, and held that office till 1829. He also became perpetual curate at Edgware, Middlesex, and a canon of Peterborough. Died 11 Aug., 1847. Besides several works on divinity he published 'Travels in Sicily, Greece, and Albania,' 1820; and a continuation of the History of England, in sequence to Hume and Smollett, embracing the period from 1760 to 1835.

HUGO, CHARLES LOUIS, a French divine, born 1607, was canon of the Premonstratensian order, abbat of Etival and bishop of Ptolemais in partibus. Died 2 Aug., 1739. He wrote 'Annals of the Premonstratensian Order,' and other learned works on ecclesiastical antiquities.

HUGO, HERMAN, a Jesuit, born at Brussels 1588; died at Rhinberg 1639. His works are 'De prima scribendi origine, et universæ rei literariæ antiquitate;' 'Obsidio Bredana, sub Ambrosio Spinola;' 'Militia equestris, antiqua et nova;' 'Pia Desideria,' in elegiac verse.

HULDRICH, JOHN JAMES, professor of the law of nature at Zurich, published the 'Sepher Tosepho, or the History of Jesus Christ, written by a Jew, full of atrocious calumnies, which Huldrich refuted in his notes; a commentary on Puffendorf's treatise of the Duties of Men and Citizens;' 'Miscellanea Tigrina;' and sermons. Born 1683; died 25 May, 1731.

HULL, THOMAS, an actor and author, born in London 1728; died 22 April, 1808. For the stage he altered, or wrote entirely, nineteen pieces. He was also author of the History of Sir William Harrington, a novel; Genuine letters from a Gentleman to a Young Lady; Richard Plantagenet, a Legendary Tale; Select Letters between the Duchess of Somerset, Lady Luxborough, Mr. Shenstone, and others, 2 vols.; Moral Tales in verse.

HULME, NATHANIEL, M.D., F.R.S., P.S.A., a physician and medical writer, born at Holme Thorp, Yorkshire, 17 June, 1734. After graduating at Edinburgh, he settled in London, and about 1774 was appointed physician to the Charterhouse, where he died 27 March, 1807.

HULSE, Rev. JOHN, died 14 Dec., 1790, aged 82. He bequeathed his estates to the university of Cambridge, for the following purposes—the maintenance of two scholars at St. John's College; to recompense the exertions of the Hulsean prizemen; to found and support the office of Christian Advocate, and that of the Hulsean Lecturer or Christian Preacher.

HUMBERT, JEAN JOSEPH AMABLE, a French general, born at Rouvray (Lorraine) 25 Nov., 1755; died at New Orleans 27 Feb., 1823. He was charged with a command in La Vendée 1795, and commanded the French expedition to Ireland 1798, but was afterwards exiled by the First Consul. He thereupon went to America, and subsequently took up the cause of the peoples who had risen in insurrection against the Spanish government.

HUMBOLDT, CHARLES WILLIAM, BARON DE, a Prussian statesman, brother of the illustrious naturalist, was born at Potsdam 1767. After an active career in the diplomatic service, he retired to his estate at Tegel, where he died 8 April, 1835. He published a translation into German verse of Pindar's 'Odes;' another of the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus; 'Researches concerning the Basque Language;' and 'Grammatical Disquisitions.'

HUMBOLDT, FREDERICK HENRY ALEXANDER VON, the most distinguished savant of modern times, was born at Berlin 14 Sept., 1769, being brother of the preceding. He received private lessons from the most eminent professors of the university of Berlin. From 1786 to 1788 he studied at Frankfurt, and towards the close of the latter year proceeded to Göttingen. George Forster, who had accompanied Capt. Cook in his second voyage round the world, became at this time the friend of the future naturalist, who in his latest work, the 'Cosmos,' tells us of the deep impression made upon his young mind by the sketches and descriptions of this enterprising English traveller. With Forster, Humboldt made geological excursions, and the result of these exploring expeditions was the publication (1790) of his first work, 'Über die Basalte aus Rhein, &c.' For the purpose of rendering himself familiar with foreign languages Humboldt went from Göttingen to Hamburg, where he spent some time. He next proceeded to Freiberg, where he profited from the instruction of Werner, and completed those studies which subsequently fitted him to hold office in the administration of mines in the principalities of Beyreuth and Anspach. While holding this office, he collected the materials for his works on the Fossil Flora; and he also published during 1797 and 1799 a treatise which excited considerable attention both in this country and in France on the nervous and muscular irritation of animal organisms. Having associated himself with Leopold von Buch, he devoted his time entirely to the study of meteorological phenomena; after which he proceeded to Paris to collect the best meteorological instruments, and to improve still further his powers of observation and his experimental capabilities. In company with Aime Bonpland, he set out for Madrid, where, by the favour of the ministers of state, arrangements were made enabling them to visit all the Spanish possessions in America, and to carry out all such astronomical and geodesical observations as they might judge desirable. Their observations were most extensive, embracing astronomical determinations, terrestrial surveys, researches on the botany, mineralogy, and geology of the states through which they passed; and in addition their notices of the manners and customs of the natives were marked by shrewd philosophy and acute powers of observation. Humboldt returned to Europe 1804, and hastening to Paris arranged his notes for publication. He remained in the French capital till the end of 1827, when the great work of Alexander Humboldt and Aime Bonpland, 'The Voyage to the Equinoctial Regions of the New Continent,' made its appearance. Previously to this date, Humboldt had commenced his 'Cosmos,' and it may be said that he died full of the contemplation of the physical phenomena of the universe, which form the subject of that famous work. In 1829, at the invitation of the Czar Nicholas, he organized an expedition to the Russian possessions in Asia. Having associated himself with MM. Rose, Ehrenberg, and Menschenin, he commenced his second great journey of scientific exploration, charging himself with all the astronomical, magnetic, geognostic and physical observations. The details of this celebrated expedition will be found in M. Rose's work, 'Mineralogische, Geognostische Reise nach dem Ural, dem Altai, und dem Kaspischen Meer' (Berlin, 1837-42), and Humboldt's 'Asie Centrale; Recherches sur les Chaînes de Montagnes, et la Climatologie comparee' (Paris, 1843). From 1830 to 1847 he resided alternately in Berlin and Paris, and his superior judgment was so highly appreciated by Frederick William III. that he was charged by that king with several very important political missions. In 1847 he quitted France, and from that time lived in close intimacy with the king of Prussia. Died 6 May, 1859.

HUME, DAVID, was born at Edinburgh 26 April, 1711. He was destined for the law, but he took an aversion to it, and in 1734 went to Bristol, with a view to the mercantile profession, which he also soon relinquished; and resolving to make literature his pursuit, he passed over to France, where he composed his 'Treatise on Human Nature.' This work he published in London 1738, but its reception not answering his expectation, he printed a small analysis of it in a sixpenny pamphlet, to make it sell. In 1742 he brought out with better success the first part of his 'Essays;' and soon afterwards became secretary to General Sinclair, whom he accompanied in his military embassy to the courts of Vienna and Turin. While at the latter city, he republished his first work, under a new title of 'An Enquiry concerning Human Understanding;' and in 1752 appeared at Edinburgh his 'Political Discourses;' which were followed the same year by his 'Inquiry concerning the Principles of Morals.' In 1754 he published the first volume of his 'History of England,' which he did not complete till 1761. While this work was in progress, he printed a piece with the extraordinary title of 'The Natural History of Religion;' which was attacked with just severity by Warburton, in an anonymous tract, ascribed at the time to Dr. Hurd. In 1763 Mr. Hume accepted an invitation from the earl of Hertford to attend him on his embassy to Paris, where he of course experienced a cordial welcome from those called philosophers. While in France he formed an intimacy with Madame de Boufflers, and a correspondence was carried on between them, which lasted till within a few days of Hume's death. In 1767 he became under-secretary of state; but two years afterwards he retired to Edinburgh, where he died 25 Aug., 1776.

HUME, JOSEPH, an eminent politician and financial reformer, was born at Montrose, Scotland, Jan., 1777, and while still very young was apprenticed to a physician. Having served his time with him he went through the regular course of physical and anatomical study in the university of Edinburgh. He then made several voyages to India in the Company's service, and on being appointed (1789) assistant-surgeon to the Indian army, he joined the forces commanded by Lord Lake. Amid the arduous duties of his profession he found time to master the Persian language, and this led to his fortune and his fame. Colonel Achmuty, at that time the military interpreter, died, and the only person qualified to fill his place was Mr. Hume, who gave such satisfaction that the commander-in-chief of the district bestowed upon him other offices of importance and profit. In eight years Hume became a rich man, and he returned to England 1811. His long parliamentary career began by his entering the House of Commons (1812) as member for Melcombe Regis. He subsequently represented Middlesex, Kilkenny, and Montrose. Mr. Hume rendered essential service to the country by watching over the national expenditure, and in pointing out the most effectual means of reducing taxation. Indeed his struggles and success in this great and self-imposed task form part of the history of the country. He died at his seat, Burnley Hall, Norfolk, 20 Feb., 1855. He published a translation into English blank verse of Dante's 'Inferno,' 8vo., 1812.

HUMMEL, JOHN NEPOMUCK, a German pianist, and musical composer, born at Presburg 14 Nov., 1778; died at Weimar 17 Oct., 1837.

HUMPHREY, LAURENCE, D.D., was born at Newport Pagnell, Bucks, about 1527. He studied first at Christ's College, Cambridge, and next at Oxford, where he became fellow of Magdalen College, and Greek reader. In 1554 he went to Zurich; but on the death of Queen Mary returned to his fellowship, and in 1560 was appointed regius professor of divinity. He was also elected president of his college, and in 1570 made dean of Gloucester, from whence he was removed to Winchester. He might have been a bishop, had not his puritanical principles hindered his advancement. Died 1 Feb., 1589-90. His principal writings are 'Epistola de Gracis literis, et Homeri lectione et imitatione;' 'De Religionis conservatione et reformatione;' 'De ratione interpretandi auctores;' 'Optimates, sive de nobilitate, ejusque antiqua origine;' 'Joannis Juelli Angii Episcopi Sarisb. vita et mors,' 1573. — Athen. Cantab.

HUMPHREY, OZIAS, a painter, born at Honiton, Devonshire, 1743; died 1810.

HUMPHREYS, JAMES, an eminent conveyancer, was a native of Montgomeryshire, and died 29 Nov., 1830. He published 'Observations on the English Laws of Real Property,' 1820, and compiled the article 'Devise,' in the Supplement to Viner's Abridgment.

HUMPHREYS, WILLIAM, a line engraver, born in Dublin about 1794; died at Genoa 21 Jan., 1865.

HUNAULD, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, a French physician and anatomist, born at Chateaubriant (Brittany) 24 Feb., 1701; died 15 Oct., 1742. He excelled in osteology, and has many papers in the Memoirs of the Academy.

HUNIADES, JOHN CORVINUS, vaivode of Transylvania, and general of the armies of Ladislas, king of Hungary. He defeated the Turks in several battles, so that his name became proverbial. In 1456 he compelled Mahomet II. to raise the siege of Belgrade, and died 10 Sept., the same year.

HUNNERIC, king of the Vandals in Africa, succeeded his father Genserich 477; died 484.

HUNNIUS, GILES, a Lutheran divine, born in the duchy of Wirtemberg 21 Dec., 1550. He became professor of theology at Marburg; but in 1592 he removed to the same chair at Wirtemberg, where also he was made a member of the ecclesiastical consistory. He wrote with great assiduity against Calvin. Died 4 April, 1603.

HUNSDON, HENRY CAREY, LORD, K.G., was born about 1526, and entering the House of Commons 1546, gained considerable distinction as a politician. Immediately after her accession Queen Elizabeth, who was his first cousin, made him a knight, and in Jan., 1558-9 raised him to the peerage by the title of Baron Hunsdon. He was employed in quelling the northern rebellion of 1569-70, and was afterwards engaged for several years in active military service on the Scottish border. At the time of the Spanish Armada he was placed at the head of 30,000 men who formed HUNT, HENRY, a political agitator and mob orator, born in Wiltshire 6 Nov., 1773. The quiet pursuit of farming he quitted in order to embark on the troubled sea of politics; and his hearty advocacy of extreme Radical doctrines soon rendered him the darling of the mob. A meeting over which he presided at Manchester (1819) was dispersed by the authorities; and Mr. Hunt, being prosecuted, was sentenced to two years and a half imprisonment, to pay a fine of £1000, and to give surety for his future good conduct. On his liberation, he made a kind of triumphal entry into London. After several unsuccessful attempts to enter parliament, he was at last elected for Preston; but, to the astonishment of his admirers, his eloquence, so effective out of doors, produced little or no effect in the House of Commons. Died 13 Feb., 1835.

HUNT, JAMES HENRY LEIGH, a poet and essayist, born at Southgate, Middlesex, 19 Oct., 1784, and educated at Christ's Hospital. Shortly after he left school he published a volume of juvenile verses, which gave little promise of his matured powers. In 1805 his brother John set up a paper called the 'News,' to which Leigh Hunt became theatrical critic, and startled the town by his independent scholarly criticism. In 1808 the two brothers started the 'Examiner,' its object being 'to assist in producing reform in parliament, liberality of opinion in general (especially freedom from superstition), and a fusion of literary taste into all subjects whatsoever.' An article on the prince regent which appeared in May, 1812, brought the full tide of the attorney-general's wrath upon the two brothers, who were sentenced to two years' imprisonment in separate prisons, and each to pay a fine of £500. Leigh Hunt was confined in Horse-monger Lane Gaol. He was released in Feb., 1815, in which year he became acquainted with Byron and Wordsworth. The year following his longest and most ambitious poem, 'The Story of Rimini,' made its appearance. It contains many passages of great beauty, and some—especially the tale of Francesca's fall—impassioned. After publishing some miscellaneous poems and translations in a volume entitled 'Foliage,' he started the 'Indicator,' a periodical on the plan of Addison and Steele's delightful serials. In 1821 he visited Italy with the intention of joining Shelley and Byron in a periodical called the 'Liberal.' It was actually started; but the union came to a sad and bitter ending through the death of Shelley and a quarrel with Lord Byron. Leigh Hunt incurred much odium some time after by publishing a volume (1828) in which Byron's life in Italy was frankly criticized. On his return to England he went to live at Highgate, where he wrote the greater part of the 'Companion,' a sequel to the 'Indicator.' Soon afterwards he became connected with the 'True Sun,' an evening paper, and next, removing to Chelsea, he started the 'London Journal.' Subsequently he resided at Kensington, and lastly at Hammersmith. He received a government pension of £200 a year in 1847, and died at Putney 28 Aug., 1859. His principal works, in addition to those already named, are 'The Legend of Florence,' a play; 'Lovers' Amazements,' a play; 'Captain Sword and Captain Pen,' a poem of considerable power, showing the horrors of war; 'Wit and Humour,' selected from the English Poets, with an illustrative essay and critical comments; 'Imagination and Fancy, or Selections from the English Poets, illustrative of these first requisites of their art;' 'A Book for a Corner;' 'The Town, its Character and Events;' 'Religion of the Heart; a Manual of Faith and Duty;' 'The Old Court Suburb,' a pleasant history of Kensington; 'One Hundred Romances of Real Life;' 'Autobiography and Reminiscences,' 3 vols., 1850.

HUNT, JEREMIAH, D.D., was born in London 1678. After studying at Edinburgh he went to Leyden, and, while in Holland, preached to a congregation of English dissenters. On his return he settled in London as pastor of the congregation at Pinners' Hall. Died 1744. Dr. Hunt published some sermons, and 'An Essay towards explaining the History and Revelations of Scripture in their several periods; with a Dissertation on the Fall of Man,' 8vo. After his death were printed four volumes of his discourses.

HUNT, THOMAS, D.D., was born 1666, and educated at Hart Hall, Oxford. In 1738 he was elected Laudian professor of Arabic; and the year following he delivered a Latin oration, 'De antiquitate, elegantia, utilitate, Lingua: Arabicæ,' which was printed, together with another, 'De usu Dialectorum Orientalium.' In 1747 he was appointed regius professor of Hebrew, and canon of Christ Church. He died 31 Oct., 1774, and the same year Dr. Kennicott published his 'Observations on several Passages in the Book of Proverbs, with two sermons,' 4to. Several of his letters have been also printed.

HUNT, WILLIAM HENRY, a celebrated painter in water-colours, was born 1700, and died in London 10 Feb., 1804. He exhibited in the gallery of the Society of Painters in Water-colours from 1824 to the time of his decease.

HUNTER, ALEXANDER, M.D., a physician, was descended from a respectable family in Scotland, and educated at Edinburgh. He settled at York, where he died 1809, aged 80. Dr. Hunter published an elaborate edition of Evelyn's Sylva; 'Georgical Essays,' &c.

HUNTER, ANNE, the widow of the eminent anatomist, John Hunter, died in London 7 Jan., 1821, aged 79. She was the intimate friend of the learned Mrs. Elizabeth Carter, and wrote several beautiful poems, chiefly of the lyric kind, some of which were set to music by Haydn. A volume of her productions was printed in 1802.

HUNTER, CHRISTOPHER, a physician and antiquary, born at Medomsley, Durham, 1675. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, after which he settled in practice at Durham. He published 'The Ancient Rites and Monuments of the Church of Durham,' 1733; and 'An Illustration of Daniel Neale's History of the Puritans in the article of Peter Smart, with Remarks,' 1736. Died 13 July, 1757.

HUNTER, HENRY, D.D., was born at Culross, Perthshire, 1741, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1771 he removed to London, and became minister of the Presbyterian church at London Wall. Died 27 Oct., 1802. His publications are Sacred Biography, 7 vols.; a translation of Lavater's Physiognomy, with splendid plates; Sermons; Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity, supplementary to those of Mr. John Fell. He also translated several works from the French.

shire, 14 July, 1728. At the age of twenty he came to London, and the next year attended Cheselden at Chelsea Hospital, where he profited so well that the following winter he was able to instruct his brother's pupils in dissection. In 1751 he became a pupil of St. Bartholomew's, and about the same time entered himself as a commoner of St. Mary Hill, Oxford. In 1756 he was appointed house surgeon at St. George's Hospital, which situation he quitted for one on the medical staff of the army; and he continued in that service till the peace of 1763. On his return to London he pursued his inquiries into comparative anatomy, and erected a menagerie for that purpose at Brompton. In 1767 he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, and the next year he was elected one of the surgeons of St. George's Hospital. In 1771 he married Miss Home, the daughter of an eminent surgeon, by whom he had two sons and two daughters. In 1776 he was appointed surgeon-extraordinary to the king; in 1781 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Gottenburg, and in 1783 of that of Medicine at Paris. In 1786 he was made deputy surgeon-general to the army, and in 1790 inspector-general of the hospitals, and surgeon-general. He died suddenly, of a spasmodic affection of the heart, in St. George's Hospital, 16 Oct., 1793. Besides several communications to the Royal Society, he wrote A Treatise on the Natural History of the Human Teeth; A Treatise on the Venereal Disease; Observations on certain parts of the Animal Economy; A Treatise on the Blood, Inflammation and Gun-shot Wounds. His collection of curiosities was purchased for the public by government, at the price of £15,000, and deposited in the College of Surgeons, where a lecture in honour of John Hunter is annually delivered.

HUNTER, JOHN, LL.D., was born 1747, and educated at Edinburgh. He occupied the chair of humanity at St. Andrews from 1775 till 1827, when he was appointed principal of the united college of St. Salvador and St. Leonard. Died 18 Jan., 1837. He published editions of Horace, Virgil, and Livy; and an essay 'On the Nature, Import, and Effect of certain Conjunctions,' in the Edinburgh Philosophical Transactions, 1788. An account of his grammatical speculations will be found in the article 'Grammar,' in the seventh edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.—Anderson.

HUNTER, JOSEPH, F.S.A., was born at Sheffield 6 Feb., 1783, and trained in a college at York for the presbyterian ministry. In 1809 he became minister of a congregation of presbyterian dissenters at Bath, where he resided for twenty-four years, during which time, in addition to his professional duties, he devoted great attention to topography and antiquarian studies generally. In 1833 he removed to London on being appointed a sub-commissioner of the Public Records; and when the Record Service was reconstructed in 1838 he was appointed an assistant-keeper of the first class. This latter office he held till his death, which occurred in London 9 May, 1861. The subjoined list of his principal works will give but a very imperfect idea of the extent of his antiquarian labours:—'Who wrote Cavendish's Life of Wolsey?' 1814, reprinted in Singer's edition of Cavendish; 'Hallamshire. The History and Topography of the Parish of Sheffield in the county of York, with historical and descriptive notices of the Parishes of Ecclesfield, Hansworth, Treeton, and Whiston, and of the Chapelry of Bradfield,' folio, 1819; 'On the Connection of Bath with the Literature and Science of England,' 1827, and again 1853; 'South-Yorkshire. The History and Topography of the Deanery of Doncaster,' 2 vols. folio, 1828-31; 'Life of Sir Thomas More by his great-grandson Cresacre More, with a biographical preface, &c.,' 1828; Catalogues of the Red Book of the Exchequer, the Dodsworth MSS. and the MSS. in Lincoln's Inn, 1828; 'The Hallamshire Glossary,' 1829; 'On English Monastic Libraries,' 1831; 'Introduction to the Valor Ecclesiasticus of Henry VIII.,' 1834; 'Three Catalogues describing the Contents of the Red Book of the Exchequer,' 1838; 'Disquisition on the Scene, Origin, &c. of Shakespeare's Tempest,' 1839; 'New Illustrations of the Life, Studies, and Writings of Shakespeare,' 2 vols., 1845; 'Gens Sylvestrina: Memorials of some of my good and religious ancestors, or Eleven Generations of a Puritan Family,' 1846; 'The Rise of the Old Dissent, exemplified in the Life of Oliver Heywood, 1630-1702,' 8vo., 1842; 'Collections concerning the Early History of the Founders of New Plymouth, the first colonists of New England,' 1850; 'A Sheaf of Gleanings after Biographers of Milton,' 1850; 'The great Hero of the ancient Minstrelsy of England, Robin Hood, his period and character investigated,' 1852. Mr. Hunter also edited several of the volumes issued by the Camden and Shakespeare Societies; and left a number of valuable MSS. which are now in the British Museum.

HUNTER, ROBERT, an English officer, who was appointed lieutenant-governor of Virginia in 1708, but, while on the voyage, he was taken by the French. In 1710 he went out governor of New York. He was then a major-general, and expended large sums in the settlement of that province, from whence he removed to the government of Jamaica, where he died 31 March, 1734. He wrote a celebrated 'Letter on Enthusiasm,' and was the correspondent of Swift.

HUNTER, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., a physician and anatomist, was born 23 May, 1718, at Long Calderwood, Lanarkshire. At the age of fourteen he was sent to the college of Glasgow, being intended for the church; but this profession he relinquished for that of physic, and, in 1737, he went to reside with Dr. Cullen. In 1741 he visited London, where he became assistant to Dr. James Douglas in his dissections, and also tutor to his son. Though the loss of the doctor, the year following, was severely felt by him, he still continued in the family, and attended St. George's Hospital as pupil, under Dr. Frank Nichols. In 1746 he began to read lectures in surgery and anatomy, and the next year he was admitted a member of the corporation of surgeons. At first he practised surgery and midwifery, but at length confined himself to the latter profession, in which he soon excelled Dr. Smellie, and was appointed accoucheur to the British Lying-in Hospital. In 1750 he obtained his doctor's degree from Glasgow. He was afterwards appointed physician extraordinary to the queen, with whom, as well as the king, he was a great favourite. In 1767 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, to whose transactions he communicated several valuable papers. He was also a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and, on the foundation of the Royal Academy, the king appointed him professor of anatomy. In 1770 Dr. Hunter completed his house in Great Windmill Street, to which were attached a theatre, apartments for lectures and dissections, and a magnificent room as a museum. The furnishing of this room with preparations, natural curiosities, books, and medals, constituted the great pleasure of his life. Of part of his medallic collection Dr. Combe published an elegant catalogue 1783. The contents of this museum are now deposited, pursuant to the owner's will, in the university of Glasgow. In 1775 the doctor published his 'Anatomy of the Gravid Uterus,' which splendid work he dedicated to the king. In 1780 he was elected an associate of the Royal Medical Society of Paris, and, in 1782, he received the same honour from the Academy of Sciences. He died 30 March, 1783, and was buried in St. James's Church, Westminster.

HUNTER, WILLIAM, a surgeon and naturalist, was a native of Montrose. He resided for thirty-eight years in India, where he died 1815. His works are, an 'Account of the Kingdom of Pegu,' 1785; and 'An Essay on the Diseases incident to Indian Scamen, or Lascars, on Long Voyages,' 1804.

HUNTINGDON, HENRY OF. See HENRY.

HUNTINGDON, SELINA, COUNTESS OF, a patron of the Calvinistic Methodists, was born 24 Aug., 1707, being the second daughter of Washington Shirley, second Earl Ferrers. She was married in 1728 to Theophilus, Earl of Huntingdon, by whom she had four sons and three daughters. His sudden death (1746), and the loss of four of her children in youth, caused her to become deeply religious. During the religious revival which the efforts of Wesley and Whitefield were then effecting, she attached herself to the opinions of the latter, and by her zeal and wealth exerted so much influence over the Calvinistic Methodists that a branch of them became known as 'the Countess of Huntingdon's connexion.' She built chapels, supported ministers, and founded a college at Trevecca, which has since been removed to Cheshunt, Herts. According to the census of 1851, there were one hundred and nine chapels belonging to her 'connexion.' Her ladyship died 17 June, 1791.

HUNTINGFORD, GEORGE ISAAC, was born at Winchester 1748, and educated at Oxford. He became warden of Winchester College in that university 1789; bishop of Gloucester 1809; bishop of Hereford 1815; died 29 April, 1832. Among his publications are 'Metrica quaedam monostrophica,' 1781, and again 1782 and 1783; 'An Introduction to the Writing of Greek,' 1782; an edition of Pindar; Discourses on Different Subjects, 2 vols., 1795-7; 'Thoughts on the Trinity,' 1832.

HUNTINGTON, ROBERT, D.D., was born at Deerhurst, Gloucestershire, 1636. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1670 he went to Aleppo as chaplain to the factory; and, during eleven years' residence in the east, travelled through Syria, visited Palmyra and Cyprus, and made a voyage to Egypt. In 1682 he returned to his fellowship; after which he became provost of Trinity College, Dublin, but resigned that place 1691. In 1702 he was made bishop of Raphoe, in Ireland, but died on 2 Sept., the same year. Some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions, and Ray's Collection of Travels; and thirty-nine of his letters have been published, with his life, by Dr. Thomas Smith.

thodists, was born in Kent 1744, and died in London Aug., 1813. He gave the following explanation of the letters which he appended to his name: 'As I cannot get a D.D. for the want of cash, neither can I get a M.A. for the want of learning; therefore I am compelled to fly for refuge to S.S., by which I mean sinner saved.' His writings were published in 20 vols. 8vo., London, 1820.

HURD, RICHARD, a bishop, was born at Congreve, in the parish of Penkrich, Staffordshire, 13 Jan., 1720. He was educated at the school of Brewood, and next at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship in 1742. In 1749 he published his Commentary on Horace's Art of Poetry, in which he paid a compliment to Warburton. This laid the foundation of a friendship between them, which lasted through life. In 1750 he published 'A Commentary on the Epistle to Augustus;' and, in 1755, a satire against Dr. Jortin, entitled 'The Delicacy of Friendship.' In 1757 he was presented to the living of Thurcaston, Leicestershire; and, in 1759, published his 'Dialogues on Sincerity, Retirement, the Age of Elizabeth, and the Constitution of the English Government;' which was followed by 'Letters on Chivalry and Romance;' and 'Dialogues on Foreign Travel.' The whole were republished together, 3 vols., 1765, and the same year the author printed his 'Letter to Dr. Thomas Leland, in which his Dissertation on the Principles of Human Eloquence is criticised.' At this time he was chosen preacher of Lincoln's Inn, and, in 1767, he was preferred to the archdeaconry of Gloucester. In 1768 he took his doctor's degree, and the same year began the course of lectures on the Prophecies, founded in Lincoln's Inn by Bishop Warburton. In 1775 he was made bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and shortly after was appointed preceptor to the prince of Wales and Prince Frederick, afterwards duke of York. On the translation of Dr. North to Winchester, in 1781, the king offered the see of Worcester, with the clerkship of the closet, to Bishop Hurd, which he accepted; but, when his majesty tendered him the chair of Canterbury in 1783, he declined it. Bishop Hurd now published a complete edition of the works of his early friend Warburton, to which, in 1795, he added a biographical discourse, by way of preface. Died 28 May, 1808. Besides the works already mentioned, and some single tracts and sermons, he published two volumes of sermons, preached at the Warburtonian Lecture; two volumes of Selections from Cowley; and three volumes of sermons preached at Lincoln's Inn. He also left for publication an edition of Addison's Works, with notes; and a volume of Warburton's Correspondence. He repaired his episcopal palace, and left thereto his valuable library and pictures.

HURDIS, JAMES, D.D., was born at Bishopstone, Sussex, 1703, and educated at Oxford. In 1791 he was presented to the living of Bishopstone; and in 1793 elected professor of poetry at Oxford. Died 23 Dec., 1801. He published 'The Village Curate, a poem; Adriano, or the First of June; a Disquisition on Gen. i. 21, and Select Remarks on the first ten Chapters of Genesis; Sir Thomas More, a tragedy; Cursory Remarks on the Arrangement of the Plays of Shakspeare; A Vindication of the University of Oxford, and Magdalen College in particular, from the aspersions of Gibbon; The Favourite Village, a poem; Twelve Dissertations on the Nature and Occasion of Psalm and Prophecy.

HURÉ.

After his death his poems were published by subscription, in 3 vols., at the university press, with his life prefixed by his sister.

HURÉ, CHARLES, a French divine, author of a Dictionary of the Bible, &c., was born 1639, and died 12 Nov., 1717.

HURLSTONE, FREDERICK YEATES, an English painter, for many years president of the Society of British Artists, was born in London 1801, and died June, 1869. Among his principal works are 'The Prisoner of Chillon'; 'Haidee'; and 'Columbus at the Convent Gate'; besides a large number of portraits and Spanish and Italian fancy subjects.

HUSKISSON, WILLIAM, a statesman, born at Birch Moreton, Worcestershire, 11 March, 1770. His youth was spent in Paris, where he adopted extreme revolutionary opinions, which, however, his good sense eventually led him to modify. Returning to England he entered the House of Commons, and in 1795 and 1807 was appointed under-secretary of state, under Mr. Pitt and Mr. Perceval respectively. In 1823 he became president of the Board of Control, and in 1827 secretary of state for War and the Colonies. He retired from office 1828, under the administration of the duke of Wellington. To liberal opinions Mr. Huskisson joined an extensive knowledge of commercial matters and economical questions connected with them. He is regarded as the great pioneer in the free trade movement, although he was far from advocating the doctrines of the modern free-traders in their fulness. Mr. Huskisson was accidentally killed by a locomotive engine on the occasion of the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester railway 15 Sept., 1825. His speeches have been published in 3 vols., 8vo.

HUSS, JOHN, was born at Hussinetz, in Bohemia, about 1370. He took his degrees in the university of Prague, of which he became rector, and afterwards pastor of the church of Bethlehem, where he distinguished himself by his preaching. Huss revived the opinions of the Waldenses and of Wickliffe, to which he added several others; and gained many disciples, particularly after he had joined himself to Jerome of Prague. The Emperor Sigismund, brother and presumptive heir to Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia, fearing the fatal consequences of this new doctrine, compelled Huss to go to defend his opinions at the council of Constance, which was then assembled, and gave him a passport. Huss arriving there Nov. 1414, his doctrine was carefully examined during seven months, and he had leave to speak and defend himself; but as he refused to abjure his errors, he was condemned to be burnt alive with his books, which sentence was executed 16 July, 1415. The history and works of Huss and of Jerome of Prague were printed at Nuremberg 1558, in two vols. folio; and reprinted 1715.

HUSSEY, GILES, an artist, born at Marnhull, Dorsetshire, 10 Feb., 1710. He was educated at Douay, and next at St. Omer; after which he was placed under Richardson, the painter, and next with one Damini, a Venetian, whom he accompanied to Italy. In 1737 he returned to England, and retired into the west of England, where he led a recluse life till June, 1788, when he expired suddenly in his garden. His pencil drawings are much admired, and he had a fine taste for historical composition.

HUSSON, JEAN HONORÉ ARISTIDE, a French sculptor, born at Paris 2 July, 1803; died 4 Aug., 1864.

HUTCHESON, FRANCIS, LL.D., a metaphysical writer, was the son of a dissenting minister in Ireland, and born 8 Aug., 1694. He studied at Glasgow, and, on his return to Ireland, officiated in a dissenting congregation, for some time, in the northern part of that kingdom; but, in 1729, he was elected professor of moral philosophy at Glasgow, where he took his doctor's degree. Died 1747. His works are, An Inquiry into the Ideas of Beauty and Virtue, 8vo.; A Treatise on the Passions. These were published by himself; and in 1755 his son, Dr. Francis Hutcheson, a physician of Glasgow, printed from his father's papers, 'A System of Moral Philosophy,' 2 vols. Dr. Hutcheson was an ingenious man, but strongly attached to the Shaftesburian hypothesis on morals.

HUTCHINS, JOHN, was born at Bradford Peverel, Dorsetshire, 21 Sept., 1698. He went to Hart Hall, Oxford; from whence he removed to Balliol College (B.A. 1721). In 1729 he obtained the rectory of Swyre, and afterwards that of Melcombe Horsey, in his native county, on which he took his M.A. degree at Cambridge. In 1744 he was presented to the living of Wareham, where, besides attending to his parochial duties, he laboured in collecting materials for the history of Dorsetshire, which work he did not live to see published, dying 21 June, 1773. The history came out the year following, in 2 vols. folio; and a second edition, in 4 vols. folio, 1796-1815.

HUTCHINS, THOMAS, an American geographer, born in New Jersey about 1730; died at Pittsburg 1789.

HUTCHINSON, JOHN, a Puritan colonel in the Parliamentary army, was born in Nottinghamshire 1617. Soon after the commencement of the civil war he declared for the Parliament, and was appointed governor of Nottingham Castle, which he held till the close of the war. He afterwards represented Nottingham in the House of Commons, and as a member of the high court of judicatory, concurred in the sentence pronounced on King Charles I. The subsequent career of Cromwell, however, met with his disapproval. After the Restoration, Hutchinson was arrested on suspicion of treasonable conspiracy, and confined in Sandown Castle, Kent, where he died 11 Sept., 1664. His life was written by his wife, Lucy, who survived him many years.

HUTCHINSON, JOHN, was born at Spennithora, Yorkshire, 1674. He received a private education; after which he became steward to Mr. Bathurst, next to Lord Scarborough, and lastly to the duke of Somerset. In this situation he turned his attention to mineralogy, and made a large collection of fossils, which he gave to Woodward, on condition that he should publish his observations upon them. Woodward, however, neglected the obligation, and bequeathed the collection to the university of Cambridge. The duke of Somerset was so well satisfied with his steward, that on his retirement he made him his riding purveyor, his grace being then master of the horse. He also gave him the next presentation to the living of Sutton, in Sussex, which Hutchinson bestowed on Mr. Julius Bate. In 1724 he published the first part of his 'Moses's Principia,' in which he endeavoured to set aside the Newtonian doctrine of gravitation. The second part appeared in 1727; and from this time to his death, which occurred 28 Aug., 1737, he went on printing a number of works, written in a very uncouth style, but discovering a profound intimacy with the Hebrew Scriptures. The object of these publications was to show that the Old Testament contains a complete system of natural history, theology, and religion.

HUTCHINSON, JOHN HELY, an Irish statesman and lawyer, born 1715. By great firmness and activity, he gained the places of prime serjeant-at-law, principal secretary of state, and provost of Trinity College, Dublin. He also accumulated a number of other lucrative employments; and so great was his ambition, that Lord North said, 'If England and Ireland were given to this man, he would solicit the Isle of Man for a potato garden.' Died 1794.

HUTCHINSON, WILLIAM, F.S.A., a topographer, died at Barnard Castle, co. Durham, 7 April, 1814, aged 82. His works are, A View of Northumberland, 2 vols., 1776, 1778; History and Antiquities of the County Palatine of Durham, 3 vols., 1785-94; History of the County of Cumberland, 2 vols., 1794.

HUTTEN, JACOB, a native of Silesia, who in the sixteenth century, founded a sect called the Boehmian or Moravian brethren.

HUTTEN, ULRIC VON, a zealous Protestant, was born at Steckenburg, in Franconia, 1488. After completing his studies at Frankfurt on the Oder, he entered into the imperial army, and was at the siege of Padua 1509. He soon quitted this service, and applied himself to polite literature with such success that, in 1516, the emperor bestowed on him the poetical crown. He was one of the first to espouse Luther's cause, and in 1520 published the papal bull against that reformer, with a severe commentary. This so provoked the pope that he demanded Hutten of the elector of Mentz; but that prince paid no respect to the mandate. Our author now went on publishing numerous pieces in favour of the reformation; but his zeal was extremely furious, and he made no scruple of drawing his sword upon those who differed with him in sentiments. He was at first a warm friend to Erasmus, but afterwards as inveterate an enemy; and the dispute between them was carried on with great asperity. Hutten closed his turbulent life on an island in the Lake of Zurich 29 Aug., 1523. A collection of his Latin poems was published at Frankfurt 1538. His Latin Dialogues have been praised by Thuanus. Hutten was the principal writer of the work called 'Epistolæ virorum obcurorum.'

HUTTER, ELIAS, a Protestant divine and biblical scholar, born at Ulm 1553; died at Nuremberg about 1603. His brother Leonard, born at Ulm 1563, became divinity professor at Wirtemberg, and died 1616. He published several theological works.

HUTTON, CHARLES, LL.D. was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 14 Aug., 1737. At an early age he undertook the profession of a teacher, though almost self-taught himself. This was at a village called Jesmond, from whence he removed to his native place, where he conducted a respectable seminary from 1760 to 1773. In 1771 the bridge of Newcastle being nearly destroyed by a flood, Mr. Hutton made some suggestions for the future security of the fabric, which were adopted. In 1773 he obtained a professorship at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. Soon after this he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, whose Transactions he enriched with so many valuable papers that he was fixed upon, in 1775, to conduct the observations on the 'Mean Density of the Earth.' He was also appointed foreign secretary to the society, which office he held till the accession to the presidency of Sir Joseph Banks, who contrived an expedient to get rid of Dr. Hutton under the miserable plea that the situation ought to be filled by a resident of the metropolis. Upon this the doctor resigned, and a fierce dissension arose between the scientific members and these amateurs who supported the president. In 1785 Dr. Hutton published his 'Mathematical Tables,' and the year following 'Tracts on Mathematical and Philosophical Subjects,' 3 vols. In 1787 appeared the 'Compendious Measurer,' which was followed by his 'Elements of Conic Sections.' In 1795 came out his 'Mathematical and Philosophical Dictionary,' 2 vols. 4to. In 1803 he undertook, with Drs. Pearson and Shaw, an abridgment of the 'Philosophical Transactions.' While this great undertaking was in progress he produced a translation of Montucla's 'Recreations in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy,' and a 'Course of Mathematics.' In 1806 he resigned the mastership of the academy at Woolwich upon a pension of £500 a year. Died 27 Jan., 1823.

HUTTON, JAMES, M.D., a mineralogist, born at Edinburgh 3 June, 1726. He studied mathematics under Maclaurin, and afterwards applied to chemistry; but that pursuit was interrupted by his being placed with a writer to the signet. He soon, however, quitted the desk, and went to Leyden, where he obtained the degree of doctor of physic in 1749. After his return he followed the farming business some time in England; but about 1768 he settled in Edinburgh, where he published, in 1777, 'Considerations on the Nature of Coal and Culm.' This was followed by two papers in the Edinburgh Transactions, one of which, 'A Theory of Rain,' occasioned a dispute between him and De Luc. In 1792 Dr. Hutton published 'Dissertations on different Subjects in Natural Philosophy,' and next a work entitled 'An Investigation of the Principles of Knowledge,' 3 vols. In 1794 appeared his 'Dissertations upon the Philosophy of Light, Heat, and Fire,' and in 1796 his Theory of the Earth, 2 vols. Died 26 March, 1797.

HUTTON, MATTHEW, an English prelate, born at Warton, Lancashire, 1520, and sent to Cambridge 1546. He became fellow of Trinity College, and Margaret professor of divinity in that university (1561), and, after becoming master of Pembroke Hall (1562), obtained the same year a prebend in the cathedral of St. Paul. In 1567 he was preferred to the deanery of York, from which he was removed (1589) to the bishopric of Durham, and thence to the archbishopric of York (1595). Died 16 Jan., 1605-6.—Athen. Cantab. Another Matthew Hutton, D.D., was bishop of Bangor 1743-7, archbishop of York 1747-57, and archbishop of Canterbury from the latter date till his death on 19 March, 1758.

HUTTON, WILLIAM, was born at Derby 1723. From the age of seven to fourteen he worked at the silk-mill, on leaving which he was apprenticed to a stocking-weaver. On the expiration of his time he laboured as a journeyman, and employed his leisure hours in book-binding, by which he earned a little money. In 1750 he opened a shop for the sale of old books, to which he added a circulating library at Birmingham, where he succeeded so well as to embark in the paper business. Thus, by frugality and industry he arrived at opulence; but in 1701 his house at Birmingham, and seat near the town, were destroyed by the rioters, for which he obtained an inadequate compensation from the county. Died 20 Sept., 1816. His works are, The History of Birmingham; Journey to London; History of the Court of Requests, and of the Hundred Court at Birmingham; History of Blackpool; History of the Battle of Bosworth Field; History of Derby; Description of the Roman Wall; Remarks upon North Wales; Tour to Scarborough; Poems; Trip to Coatham.

HUXHAM, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., a physician of Plymouth, died 10 Aug., 1708. His chief work is a Treatise on Fevers.

HUYGHENS, CHRISTIAN, a mathematician, born at the Hague 14 April, 1629, being the son of Constantine Huyghens, lord of Zulichem, a nobleman of great scientific abilities, who died 1687. Christian was educated at home, under his father; after which he went to Leyden to study the law, in which faculty he took his doctor's degree at Angers 1655. Before this he had published a work entitled 'Theoremata de quadratura Hyperbolis, Ellipsi, et Circuli;' and in 1658 his 'Horologium oscillatorium.' This book was written to defend his claim to the invention of a pendulum, of which some envious persons had endeavoured to deprive him. In 1659 he printed his 'Systema Saturninum,' in which he first gave an account of the satellites and ring of that planet. The next year he visited France and England, and while here was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. At this time he made improvements in the air-pump, and discovered the laws of the collision of elastic bodies. Such was the reputation which he had now acquired, that Colbert the French minister invited him to Paris, where he resided fifteen years, and was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. In 1681 he returned to Holland, and died there 8 June, 1695, while his 'Cosmotheoros,' or a Treatise on the Plurality of Worlds, was printing. In 1700 were published his 'Opera Varia,' 4 vols., to which, in 1703, another volume of posthumous tracts was added.

HUYGHENS, GOMARUS, a Catholic divine, born 1631, at Lier, in Brabant. He became professor of philosophy at Louvain, and president of the college founded by Adrian VI., where he died 27 Oct., 1702.

HUYSMAN. See HOUSEMAN.

HUYSUM, JUSTUS VAN, a painter of Amsterdam, born 1659; died 1716. Three of his sons were good artists, viz., John (b. 1682; d. 1749), whose flower-pieces are exquisitely beautiful, as are likewise his landscapes and animals; Justus, who died in his 32nd year, 1706; and Jacob, who died in London 1740.

HYDE. See CLARENDON, EARL OF.

HYDE, HENRY, LORD HYDE AND CORNBURY, eldest son of Henry, earl of Clarendon, was the author of 'The Mistakes, or the Happy Resentment,' a comedy; 'A Letter to the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford;' 'A Letter to David Mallet, on his publication of Bolingbroke's Works, &c. Died 2 May, 1753.

HYDE, JOHN, a native of Newbury, Berks, was educated at New College, Oxford, of which he became fellow. Taking orders, he obtained a prebend in Winchester Cathedral, and in 1552 the head-mastership of Winchester School. On the accession of Elizabeth he went abroad for conscience sake, and spent the remainder of his life at Louvain and Douay, dying at the latter place 9 May, 1597. He published, 'A Consolatory Epistle to the afflicted Catholics, being a Dissuasive against frequenting Protestant churches, and Exhortation to suffer with Patience,' 8vo., Louvain, 1579, 1580.

HYDE, LAURENCE, Earl of Rochester. See ROCHESTER.

HYDE, THOMAS, D.D., was born 29 June, 1636, at Billingsley, Shropshire. He was admitted of King's College, Cambridge, in 1652; but about a year afterwards, though not seventeen, he was taken to be assistant to Dr. Walton, in his Polyglott. In 1658 he went to Oxford, where he was admitted of Queen's College, and made Hebrew reader. The year following he was appointed under-keeper of the Bodleian library; in which office he gave such satisfaction as to be elected head-keeper. In 1665 he published a Latin translation of Ulugh Beig's 'Observations on the Longitude and Latitude of the Fixed Stars.' The next year he was collated to a prebend in the church of Salisbury; and in 1678 made archdeacon of Gloucester. In 1691 he was chosen Arabic professor; and in 1697 appointed to the Hebrew chair, with a canonry of Christ Church. In 1700 he published his great work, entitled 'Historia Religionis veterum Persarum, eorumque Magorum.' The year following he resigned his place in the Bodleian library, and died 18 Feb., 1703. His other works are, Quatuor Evangelia et Acta Apostolorum Lingua Malacca; Epistola de mensuris et ponderibus Serum sive Sinenisum; De Ludis orientalibus; In Historiam Plantarum Oxoniensium annotationes. Dr. Gregory Sharpe published some of Hyde's manuscripts, under the title of 'Syntagma Dissertationum et Opuscula,' 2 vols., 1767.

HYDER ALI, an Indian chieftain, born at Dinavelli, in Mysore, 1728. His father was a general, under whom he served, and on whose death (1751) he joined his brother, who had allied himself with the French. He succeeded his brother as generalissimo of the king of Mysore's armies, and distinguished himself in a number of daring exploits, for which he was raised to the princely rank of Suba of Servia. He carried on a successful war against the Mahrattas for many years, and even threatened the annihilation of the English settlements in India. A treaty was concluded (1760), which was broken (1780), whereupon the war was vigorously renewed; but the skill of Sir Eyre Coote proved superior to that of Hyder, who left the military operations to his son Tippoo Saib. Died 7 Dec., 1782.

HYGINUS (Str.), governed the Church after the death of Pope St. Telsphorus, about 139, and died about 142.

HYGINUS, CAIUS JULIUS, a Roman writer in the time of Augustus. The only work of his extant is entitled 'Poeticon Astronomicum.'

HYPATIA, the daughter of Theon, president of the Platonic school at Alexandria, succeeded her father in the academy, and excelled him in every branch of science, particularly astronomy. She was murdered A.D. 415. None of her works are extant.

HYPERIDES, an Athenian orator, who died B.C. 322.

HYPERIUS, GERARD ANDREW, a Lutheran divine, born at Ypres, in Flanders, 16 May, 1511.

HYSICLES.

He studied at Paris and Louvain; after which he visited Germany and England with Lord Montjoy, who settled a pension upon him. In 1541 he went to Marburg, where he obtained a professorship, and died 1 Feb., 1564. He wrote on theology and mathematics.

HYSICLES, of Alexandria, a mathematician of the second century.

I.

IBARRA, JOACHIM, a celebrated Spanish printer, born at Saragossa 1726; died at Madrid 23 Nov. 1795.

IBBETSON, JULIUS CÆSAR, a celebrated landscape painter, termed 'the Berghem of England,' was born at Scarborough, and died 1817.

IBBOT, BENJAMIN, D.D., was born at Beachamwell, Norfolk, 1680, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, from whence, in 1700, he removed to Corpus Christi College, where he obtained a fellowship in 1706; but resigned it the following year, on becoming librarian and chaplain to Archbishop Tenison, who appointed him treasurer of the cathedral of Wells, and gave him the united livings of St. Vedast, Foster Lane, and St. Michael le Querne. George I. made him one of his chaplains; and when that monarch visited Cambridge, Mr. Ibbot was created D.D. by manulamus. In 1713 and 1714 he preached the Boyle's lecture. In 1724 he was installed prebendary of Westminster, but died on 5th April the year following. His sermons at Boyle's lecture were published in 1727; and his posthumous discourses, by Dr. Clarke, for the benefit of his widow, in 2 vols.; of which an enlarged edition appeared 1775. Dr. Ibbot published a translation of Puffendorf's, 'De habitu religionis Christianæ ad vitam civilem;' and there are some of his poems in Dodsley's collection.

IBRAHIM EFFENDI, a native of Poland, who was raised by his courage and talents to the first dignities in the Ottoman empire. He established the first printing-press in Turkey in 1728. The count de Bonneval furnished him with the characters. The first work which he produced was on the military art; he afterwards published the Account of an Expedition against the Afghans; a Turkish Grammar; and a History of Turkey.

IBRAHIM PASHA, viceroy of Egypt, died at Cairo 10 Nov., 1848, aged 59.

IBYCUS, a Greek lyric poet, flourished about 540 B.C.

IFFLAND, AUGUST WILLIAM, a German actor and dramatist, born at Hanover 19 April, 1759; died at Berlin 20 Sept., 1814.

IGNARRA, NICHOLAS, a learned ecclesiastic and antiquary of Naples; born 21 Sept., 1728; died 6 August, 1808.

IGNATIUS (St.), a martyr, bishop of Antioch, surnamed Theophorus, who succeeded Evodius about A.D. 68, was St. John's disciple, and maintained the faith in presence of the Emperor Trajan, during the third persecution. He suffered martyrdom at Rome 10 Dec., 107. There are extant seven Epistles written by him while he was going in chains to Rome. They have been translated into English by Dr. Wake. The other letters ascribed to this martyr are spurious.

IGNATIUS (St.), patriarch of Constantinople, son of the Emperor Michael Curopalates, and of Procopia, daughter of the Emperor Nicephorus. He succeeded Methodius 846, and having been banished in 857, by the intrigues of Bardas, whose sins he had reproved, the celebrated Photius was put in his place. St. Ignatius was afterwards deposed, in a bye council held at Constantinople 858, from which he appealed to the Pope, who declared both this deposition, and the ordination of Photius, null and void. He was not, however, restored to his see till the reign of Basilus the Macedonian, who, being left sole emperor 867, confined Photius in the monastery of Scopsis. This restoration of St. Ignatius occasioned the fourth general council of Constantinople to be held. After St. Ignatius's death, which occurred 23 Oct., 877, aged 78, Photius again took possession of the see of Constantinople.

IGNATIUS OF LOYOLA (St.), founder of the Society of Jesus, was born in the province of Guipuscoa, in Spain, 1491, of a noble family. He entered into the army when young, and in 1521 had his leg broken at the siege of Pampeluna. During his confinement he made a vow to go on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem; and accordingly, on his recovery, he hung up his arms in the church of Montserrat, and dedicated himself to the Blessed Virgin. Having first paid his respects to the Pope, and obtained his benediction, he embarked at Venice (1523), and proceeded to Jerusalem, where he continued some months. On his return to Spain he applied himself to the study of Latin, and in 1526 entered himself a student of the university of Alcalá. He began also to preach and gather disciples, for which he was thrown into prison, but obtained his release on promising to refrain from those practices. This condition, however, he soon violated, and was again placed under confinement at Salamanca, but recovered his liberty, on making a similar promise. He now went to Paris, where he made some proselytes, who bound themselves by a vow to observe the rule of their leader. After visiting England, Ignatius returned to Spain, and his preaching drew crowds of hearers. From thence he proceeded to Venice, with several followers, who assumed the name of 'The Society of Jesus.' After encountering some opposition, Ignatius procured, in 1540, the papal sanction to his order, of which he was created the first general; and in 1550 Pope Julius III. confirmed the society by a new and enlarged decree. The founder died at Rome 31 July, 1556; and in 1622 he was canonized. The Society of Jesus was suppressed by Clement IV. 1773, and solemnly re-established by Pius VII. 1814.

IHRE, JOHN, a learned antiquary of Upsal, in Sweden, born at Lund 1707; died 26 Nov. 178c. The 'Glossarium Succo-Gothicum' is his best work.

ILDEFONSUS (St.), a disciple of St. Isidore of Seville, afterwards abbat of Angeli, and archbishop of Toledo 658. He died 23 Feb. 607, aged 62, leaving a treatise 'On the spotless and perpetual Virginity of the Holy and Glorious Mary, Mother of God;' and other works printed in the Library of the Fathers.

ILIVE, JACOB, a printer and letter-founder, who, in 1751, published 'The Book of Jasher.' He was also the author of a discourse, in which he maintained that this earth is hell, and that the souls of men are apostate spirits in a state of punishment. He set up a meeting for the promulgation of deism; but at last was taken up and confined in Clerkenwell prison. Died 1703.

ILLESCAS, GONSALVO, a Spanish ecclesiastic, died 1580. He wrote the lives of the Popes, 2 vols., 1570.

IMBERT, BARTHÉLEMI, a French poet, born at Nîmes 1747; died at Paris 2 Aug. 1790. His poem on 'The Judgment of Paris' is much admired.

IMBERT, JOSEPH GABRIEL, a French Carthusian monk, celebrated as a painter, was born at Marseilles 1654; died 1740.

IMHOFF, JAMES WILLIAM, a lawyer and genealogist, born 1651 at Nuremberg, where he died 20 Dec. 1728.

IMISON, JOHN, an ingenious English mechanic, author of a celebrated work entitled 'The School of Arts,' died 16 Aug., 1788.

IMOLA, INNOCENT DA. See FRANCUCCI.

IMPERIALI, JOHN BAPTIST, a physician, born at Vincenza 1668; became professor of philosophy and physic at Padua; and died 26 May, 1623. He wrote Latin poems; 'Exotericarum Exercitationum, lib. ii.,' and a Defence of Alexander Masaria. His son, John Imperiali, born 1602, was also a physician, and died at Padua about 1670, leaving 'Musæum Historicum et Physicum,' and other works.

IMPERIALI, JOSEPH RÉNÉ, a cardinal, who in 1730 lost the election to the pontificate by only one vote. He was born at Genoa 1651, and died 15 Jan., 1737, leaving his library for public use.

INCHBALD, Mrs. ELIZABETH, was born at Stanningfield, Suffolk, 15 Oct., 1753, being the daughter of a farmer named Simpson. At the age of sixteen she came to London, and soon afterwards made her debut on the stage at Edinburgh. Young, beautiful, and inexperienced, she had the good fortune to find a protector in Mr. Inchbald, an actor, who by marrying her delivered her from the dangers to which she was exposed. She subsequently appeared on the boards at Dublin and London; but some successful attempts at dramatic composition ultimately led her to abandon the stage, on which she did not figure after 1789. From that period she devoted herself entirely to literary pursuits, and died at Kensington 1 Aug., 1821. Mrs. Inchbald wrote 'Such Things Are;' 'Lovers' Vows;' 'To Marry or Not to Marry,' and other comedies, all of which met with considerable applause. She also published two admirable novels, 'A Simple Story' (1791), and 'Nature and Art' (1796), and a collection of plays in 42 vols. Her Memoirs and Familiar Correspondence were published by James Boaden, in 2 vols., 1833.

INCHOFER, MELCHIOR, a Jesuit, born at Vienna 1584, became professor of philosophy, mathematics, and divinity at Messina, and died at Milan 28 Sept., 1648. He published 'The B. V. Mary's Letter to the People of Messina proved to be genuine,' 1629; 'Ecclesiastical Annals of the Kingdom of Hungary,' &c. A satire against the Jesuits, entitled 'Monarchia Solipsorum,' has been ascribed to him, but was probably written by Julius Clement Scotti, an ex-Jesuit.

INCLEDON, BENJAMIN CHARLES, a popular vocalist, born at Keverne, Cornwall, about 1764. At eight years of age he was placed in the choir of Exeter Cathedral, under the celebrated Jackson; but at fifteen he ran away and served in the navy as a common sailor for about five years. On his return he obtained a considerable reputation as a singer in the provinces. He was engaged at Covent Garden, 1790, from which time he was a great favourite with the public. Died at Worcester 11 Feb., 1820.

INGE, HUGH, D.D., an Englishman; bishop of Meath 1512; archbishop of Dublin 1521; died 3 Aug., 1528.

INGELO, NATHANIEL, D.D., was at first a fellow of Emmanuel College, and afterwards of Queen's College, Cambridge. He also had a fellowship at Eton, and died there in Aug., 1683. He wrote a religious romance, called 'Bentivoglio and Urania.' His correspondence with Dr. Hammond was published 1730.

INGENHOUSZ, JOHN, F.R.S., an eminent physician and chemist, born at Breda 1730. He learned in England the Suttoman method of inoculation, and then went to Vienna, where he inoculated some of the imperial family. Eventually he returned to this country, and died near London 7 Sept., 1799. Besides some valuable communications in the Transactions of the Royal Society he published 'Experiments on Vegetables,' and a Latin translation of Hume's Treatise on the Gout.

INGHIRAMI, FRANCESCO, an Italian antiquary, born at Volterra 1772; died 17 May, 1840. His principal work is entitled 'Monumenti Etruschi,' 10 vols., 1820-27.

INGHIRAMI, TOMASO PEDRA, a Latin poet and orator, born at Volterra, in Tuscany, 1470. Going to Rome he was overwhelmed with honours by several of the Popes; and Julius II. appointed him keeper of the Vatican library, and of the secret archives in the Castle of St. Angelo. Doubtless he would have been promoted still further had he not been prematurely cut off by death 6 Sept., 1516. Erasmus and Sadolet speak of him in terms of great laudation. He wrote a Defence of Cicero; a commentary on the Arts Poetica of Horace; a History of Rome; and Remarks on Plautus; with additions to that author's Aulularia.

INGLIS, HENRY DAVID, a writer of travels and works of fiction, was born at Edinburgh 1795, and died in London 20 March, 1835. His principal works, some of which were published under the pseudonym of Derwent Conway, are 'Tales of Ardenness;' 'Solitary Walks through many Lands;' 'Travels in Norway and Sweden;' 'Switzerland and the Pyrenees;' 'Spain in 1830;' 'Travels in the Tyrol;' 'Ireland in 1834;' 'The Channel Islands;' and 'The New Gil Blas.'

INGLIS, HESTER, a lady eminent for her penmanship in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. One of her performances, in the possession of the Harcourt family, is entitled 'Historia memorabilis Genesis per Esterum Inglis Galliam, ann. 1600.' From this it appears that she was a native of France, and that she resided at Edinburgh. She married Bartholomew Kello, a Scotchman, by whom she had a son, who became a clergyman, and was minister of Speckshall, in Suffolk. Mrs. Inglis was very intimate with Bishop Hall of Norwich; and her grandson was sword-bearer of that city. She died July, 1625. There are several specimens of her exquisite penmanship in the British Museum. (MSS. Addit. 987; 27,927, &c.)

INGLIS, JAMES, abbat of Culross, in Scotland, was murdered 1 March, 1530. He was much esteemed as a poet and scholar, and is supposed to be the author of 'The Complaynt of Scotland,' first published at St. Andrew's, 1548.

INGLIS, JOHN, D.D., a Scotch divine, was a native of Perthshire. He was appointed one of the ministers of the Greyfriars church, Edinburgh, 1796; moderator of the general assembly 1804; and died 2 Jan., 1834, aged 71, leaving a work on the evidences of Christianity and a treatise in defence of Ecclesiastical Establishments.

INGRAM, ROBERT, an English divine, born at Beverley, Yorkshire, 9 March, 1726-7. He was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his degrees in arts. His first preferment was the perpetual curacy of Bridhurst, in Kent; next the living of Orston, in Nottinghamshire; and afterwards the vicarages of Wormington and Boxted, in Essex. He died 3 Aug., 1804. Mr. Ingram wrote 'A View of the Great Events of the Seventh Plague, or Period when the mystery of God shall be finished;' 'Accounts of the Ten Tribes of Israel being in America, originally published by Manasseh Ben Israel;' 'A Complete and Uniform Explanation of the Prophecy of the Seven Vials of Wrath.'

INGRASSIAS, JOHN PHILIP, a physician and anatomist of Palermo, born 1510 died 6 Nov., 1580.

INGUIMBERTI, DOMINIC JOSEPH MARIA D', bishop of Carpentras, was born in that city 24 Aug., 1683, and died 6 Sept., 1757. To this worthy prelate, who published some religious pieces, the city of Carpentras owes its public library, museum, and hospital.

INGULPHUS, abbat of Croyland, of which abbey he wrote the history, was born in London about 1030. His father belonged to the court of Edward the Confessor, whose queen took great pleasure in the conversation of Ingulphus. He was educated at Westminster and Oxford; after which he became secretary to William the Conqueror, duke of Normandy, when that prince visited England. He next went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and on his return turned monk in Normandy; but after the conquest he was made abbat of Croyland, where he died 17 Dec., 1109. His work was printed by Sir Henry Savile 1596; and by Gale in his 'Scriptores.' There was also another edition at Oxford in 1684. An English translation by H. T. Riley forms one of the volumes of 'Bohn's Antiquarian Library.'

INMAN, JAMES, D.D., some time fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and for many years professor of mathematics at the Royal Naval College, and the School of Naval Architecture, Portsmouth, died 7 Feb., 1859, aged 83. He was regarded with high esteem in naval circles for his application of science to navigation and ship-building. His translation of 'Chapman,' with his valuable annotations, is the text-book on which all subsequent writers on naval architecture have proceeded.

INNES, LOUIS, a Catholic divine, who was principal of the Scotch college at Paris when James II. sought an asylum in France. He was appointed almoner to the queen, and secretary of state to the expatriated monarch. To him is ascribed the compilation of 'The Memoirs of James II.,' an abstract of which was published by Dr. Clarke 1806. He was succeeded as principal of the Scotch college by his brother, Thomas Innes, who died 9 Feb., 1744. The latter was an accomplished antiquary, and published 'A Critical Essay on the Ancient Inhabitants of the Northern Parts of Britain,' 2 vols., 1729.—Anderson.

INNOCENT I., Pope, succeeded Anastasius 401; died 14 Feb., 417.

IRELAND.

INNOCENT II., a Roman, was elected Pope after Honorius II., 1130, by part of the cardinals; the rest elected cardinal Peter de Leo and named him Anacletus II., which caused a schism in the Church. Anacletus dying 1138, the schismatics elected in his place Gregory, who took the name of Victor IV., but who abdicated soon afterwards, when peace was restored, and Innocent II. acknowledged as legitimate Pope by the whole Church. Innocent died 24 Sept., 1143.

INNOCENT III., Lothario Conti, succeeded Celestine III. 1198, at the age of 37; and died 20 July, 1216.

INNOCENT IV., Sinibaldo de Fieschi, was elected Pope 1234; and died 13 Dec., 1254.

INNOCENT V., Peter de Tarantaise, born 1245, was elected Pope 21 Jan., 1268; and died 22 June the same year.

INNOCENT VI., Stephen Albert, succeeded Clement VI. 1352; died 12 Sept., 1362.

INNOCENT VII., Cosmo de' Migliorati, was elected Pope 1404; died 6 Nov., 1406.

INNOCENT VIII., John Baptist Cibo, succeeded Sixtus IV. 1484; died 25 July, 1492.

INNOCENT IX., John Anthony Facchinetti, was elected Pope 30 Oct., 1591, and died two months later, Dec. 31.

INNOCENT X., John Baptist Panfilii, succeeded Urban VIII. 1644; died 7 Jan., 1655, aged 81.

INNOCENT XI., Benedict Odescalchi, succeeded Clement X. 1676; died 12 Aug., 1680.

INNOCENT XII., Antonio Pignatelli, was elected Pope 1691, and died 27 Sept., 1700.

INNOCENT XIII., Michael Angelo Conti, elected Pope 1721; died 7 March, 1724.

INTERIAN DE AYALA, JOHN, a Spanish monk, who died at Madrid 20 Oct., 1730, aged 74. He published a work on the errors of painters in representing religious subjects, entitled 'Pictor Christianus eruditus,' 1720; and some poems.

INVEGES, AUGUSTINE, a Jesuit, born at Siacca, in Sicily, 1595; died at Palermo April, 1677. He wrote 'The History of Palermo; Historia Paradisi terrestris; La Cartagine Siciliana; History of Cacamio in Sicily.'

IOLLO GOCH, a Welsh bard who died about 1402.

IRELAND, JOHN, was born near Wem, Shropshire, and brought up to the business of watch-making, which he carried on for some years in Maiden Lane, Covent Garden. He also dealt in pictures and prints, for which he had a good taste. He died near Birmingham Nov., 1808. He published the 'Memoirs of John Henderson,' and 'Illustrations of Hogarth,' 3 vols.

IRELAND, JOHN, D.D., was born at Ashburton, Devonshire, 8 Sept., 1761, and educated at Oxford. He became vicar of Croydon (1793-1816); prebendary of Westminster (1802); sub-dean (1806); dean (1816-42); rector of Islip, Oxfordshire (1810-35); died 1 Sept., 1842. Dean Ireland was very intimate with Mr. Giffard, whom he assisted in the editorship of the 'Quarterly Review.' Among his separate publications are 'Five Discourses, containing certain arguments for and against the reception of Christianity by the ancient Jews and Greeks;' 'Vindiciae Regiæ; a defence of the Kingly Office;' 'Paganism and Christianity compared.' By his will he left 10,000*l.* to the university of Oxford for the endowment of a Professorship of the Exegesis of the Holy Scripture.

who, having some turn for the arts, emerged from his obscurity to become a dealer in scarce books and pictures. He also published several works, which for their embellishments were at one time in request. These were, 'A Picturesque Tour through Holland, Brabant, and France,' 2 vols.; 'Picturesque Views on the Thames,' 2 vols.; 'Picturesque Views on the Medway.' In 1794 he published 'Graphic Illustrations of Hogarth;' and two years afterwards he made himself notorious by a pretended discovery of manuscripts in the handwriting of Shakespeare; a fac-simile copy of which was printed by subscription, at the moderate price of four guineas. The imposture, however, was soon detected. The other productions of Mr. Ireland were, 'Picturesque Views of the Severn and Warwickshire Avon;' and a 'History of the Inns of Court.' Died July, 1800.

IRELAND, SAMUEL WILLIAM HENRY, son of the preceding, was born in London 1777. He was educated in France, and at the age of 16 was apprenticed to a conveyancer in his native city. Having accompanied his father to Stratford-upon-Avon, and noticing his enthusiasm for Shakspearean relics, he forged a deed containing a pretended autograph of the poet, which he stated he had found among some old law papers. The eagerness with which his father believed this tale induced him to manufacture other documents of the same description; and he finally produced a play called 'Vortigern' purporting to be by Shakspeare. It at first deceived many men of letters, and Sheridan purchased it for Drury Lane Theatre, where it was produced with John Kemble in the leading part; but the total failure of the play, joined with the attacks of Malone and others, soon led to a general conviction of young Ireland's dishonesty. 'Vortigern' and 'Henry II.,' a similar production, were printed in 1789, and the former was republished in 1832 with a fac-simile of the original forgery. Being required to show the source from which he had derived the MSS., he at last confessed his deception, left his father's house, and abandoned his profession. He passed the rest of his life in literary pursuits, publishing several novels which never had much popularity, 'Neglected Genius,' a poem (1812), &c. His 'Confessions' (1805) contains a full account of his literary forgeries.

IRENÆUS (Sr.), bishop of Lyons, was a native of Greece, and the disciple of Polycarp, by whom it is supposed he was sent into Gaul. He was at first a priest in the church of Lyons, and on the martyrdom of Pothinus, in 174, succeeded him in that bishopric. He had a disputation with Valentinus at Rome, and held a council at Lyons in which the Gnostic heresy was condemned. Irenæus was a great lover of peace, and laboured to allay the controversy respecting the time of celebrating Easter. He was beheaded at Lyons in the persecution under Severus, about A.D. 202. His works were edited by Grabe, at Oxford, 1702, and by Massuet, at Paris, 1710.

IRETON, HENRY, son of German Ireton, Esq., of Atenton, Notts, was born there 1610. He became a commoner of Trinity College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple; but when the Rebellion broke out, he joined the Parliament, and was at the battle of Naseby. Having married a daughter of Oliver Cromwell, he soon rose to preferments, and became commissary-general. He sat in judgment upon the king, and the next year went as commander of the army in Ireland, where he died 26 Nov., 1651. His body was brought to England, and buried in Westminster Abbey, till the Restoration, when it was taken up, suspended at the gallows, and there thrown into a pit with those of Cromwell and Bradshaw.

IRNERIUS, or WERNERIUS, a civilian of Bologna, who is supposed to have died between 1126 and 1138.

IRVING, EDWARD, a popular preacher, was born at Annan, Scotland, 15 Aug., 1792, and educated at Edinburgh, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. After becoming a licentiate of the Church of Scotland, he acted as assistant to Dr. Chalmers at Glasgow; but in 1822 he removed to the Presbyterian meeting-house at the Caledonian Asylum, Cross Street, Hatton Garden, London, where the novelty of his style, and the force and eloquence of his discourses, soon rendered him the most popular preacher of his time, and the singularity of his appearance and gesticulations attracted very large congregations. He also published several religious works, which had an extensive sale. In 1829 he removed to a larger chapel in Regent Square. Previously to this, however, he had departed from the doctrinal standards of the Church of Scotland, and had developed his new opinions in his 'Sermons, Lectures, and Occasional Discourses' (1828). He was charged with holding Christ subject to original and actual sin, and with denying the doctrines of atonement, satisfaction, imputation, and substitution. The exhibition of the 'unknown tongues' uttered by some designing or deluded persons of his congregation, and pronounced by Mr. Irving to be 'manifestations of the Holy Ghost,' next occupied public attention; the result of all being that he was deprived of his charge in Regent Square (1832), and deposed from the ministry of the Church of Scotland (1833). Mr. Irving afterwards preached in a chapel in Newman Street, and became the founder of a sect, calling themselves the 'Catholic and Apostolic Church,' but generally known as 'Irvingites.' Died at Glasgow 6 Dec., 1834. All his writings are on religious subjects.—Anderson.

IRVING, GEORGE VENE, a topographer, fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, was born at Newton, Lanarkshire, 1815, being the only son of Alexander Irving, Esq. (Lord Newton). Mr. Irving was a very frequent contributor to 'Notes and Queries,' and the author in collaboration with Mr. Alexander Murray of a large work on the Upper Ward of Lanarkshire, published in 1864. He died in London 29 Oct., 1869.

IRVING, WASHINGTON, the son of a merchant of New York, was born there 3 April, 1783. He was intended for the legal profession, and studied for the bar, but before he was 21 he commenced his career as a writer, and in 1809 published the amusing 'History of New York,' by Diedrich Knickerbocker.' Abandoning the idea of following the legal profession, he went (1810) into mercantile business with his brother, but the house failed in 1817. Mr. Irving was at that time resident at Liverpool, manager of the European branch of the firm, and the event threw him upon his own resources. He resolved to devote his life to literature, and as a result of this determination the 'Sketch Book' appeared in 1819. It was recognised as the product of taste and genius; and even English criticism, until then always scornful of American books, paid homage to its merits. Other well-known works followed, viz., 'Bracebridge Hall,' 1822; 'Tales of a Traveller,' 1824; 'Life of Columbus,' 1828; 'Conquest of Granada,' 1829; and 'The Alhambra,' 1831. Meantime Mr. Irving, in 1829, 1830, and 1831, had been appointed secretary to the American embassy in London; and during his residence abroad he had spent much time in Spain and in various other parts of Europe, acquiring the friendship and esteem of the most distinguished men of the day. In 1832 he returned to his native country, where he continued his literary labours. The result of a visit to the Indian tribes was the publication of the elegant 'Tour on the Prairies.' Then followed 'Abbotsford and Newstead Abbey;' 'Legends of the Conquest of Spain,' 1836; 'Astoria,' 1836; and 'The Adventures of Captain Bonneville,' 1837. In 1842 he was honoured with the appointment of Minister to Spain, and at the end of his official term in 1846 he returned to the United States. In 1848-50 he superintended a revised edition of his works; in 1849 published 'Oliver Goldsmith,' in 1850 'Mahomet and his Successors;' then 'Wolfert's Roost;' and the 'Life of Washington,' 5 vols., 1855-59. He died at his residence, Sunnyside, near Tarrytown, New York, 28 Nov., 1859.

IRWIN, EYLES, was born at Calcutta, of Irish parents, 1748. He received his education under Dr. Rose at Chiswick; and in 1767 returned to the east in a civil capacity; but was suspended (1777) for his attachment to Lord Pigot; on which he came to Europe overland to seek redress; which he obtained, and he was restored to his former station at Madras, whither he repaired again by the same route. In 1785 he returned again to England; but in 1792 he went to China to superintend the company's affairs; after which he revisited England, where he died 14 Oct., 1817. His works are—St. Thomas's Mount, a poem; Bodakah, an Indian pastoral; Adventures during a Voyage up the Red Sea, and a Journey across the Desert; Eastern Eclogues; Epistle to Mr. Hayley; Ode on the Death of Hyder Ally; Triumph of Innocence, an ode on the acquittal of Mr. Hastings; Inquiry into the feasibility of Buonaparte's Expedition to the East; Buonaparte in Egypt; Nilus, an Elegy on the Victory of Admiral Nelson; the Failure of the French Crusade; The Bedouins; Ode to Iberia; Elegy on the fall of sarragosa; Napoleon, or the Vanity of Human Wishes.

ISAAC I., Comnenus, Emperor of the East, was crowned 1057, after the defeat of Michael Straticonus. He resigned the throne to Constantine Ducas 1059, and died 1061.

ISAAC II., Angelus, Emperor of the East, obtained the crown after putting to death Andronicus Comnenus 1185; and died 1204.

ISAACSON, HENRY, a chronologer, born in London, Sept., 1581. He became amanuensis to Bishop Andrews, and died about 7 Dec., 1654. He published 'Saturni Ephemerides; or a Chronological Series of the Four Monarchies, with the annual memorable Passages in them,' folio, 1633.

ISABELLA OF CASTILE, queen of Spain, was born 1451, being the daughter of John II. She married Ferdinand V. of Arragon, and died 26 Nov., 1504. The conquest of Grenada, and the discovery of America by Columbus, distinguished their reign.

about 418 B.C. He was the disciple of Lysias, and preceptor to Demosthenes, at Athens, where he kept a famous school of eloquence. We have only ten of his orations remaining. There was another Greek orator of this name, who went to Rome about A.D. 97.

ISELIN, ISAAC, a German philosopher, born at Basle 1728; died 15 June, 1782. He wrote an Essay on the History of Mankind.

ISELIN, JAMES CHRISTOPHER, a divine and philologist of Basle, born 1681; died April, 1737. Among his works are, 'De Gallis Rhenum transcuntibus, carmen heroicum;' 'De Historicis Latinis melioris ævi Dissertatio;' and Researches on the Origin of Printing.

ISIDORE OF ALEXANDRIA, St., was born in Egypt about 318. He passed many years in solitude, but was ordained by Athanasius, and placed over a monastery; whence he was called Isidore the Hospitalier. He defended that father against the Arius, for which he was banished by the Patriarch Theophilus. He then went to Constantinople, where he died 403.

ISIDORE, of Charax, a Greek historian and geographer, flourished about 300 B.C.

ISIDORE, St., surnamed Pelusiota, or Damiatta, from his retiring to a solitude near the town which bears both these names. He was the disciple of St. Chrysostom, and died 4 Feb., 440. He wrote 2012 letters on theological questions and ecclesiastical discipline, in an elegant style. The best edition of his works is that of Paris, 1638.

ISIDORE, St., of Seville, was born at Carthagenia, of which city his father was governor. Isidore succeeded his brother in the bishopric of Seville 601, and died 4 April, 636. His works are numerous, and among them is a chronicle, ending at the year 626. The editions of his Missal and Breviary are very scarce. In his treatise on Divine Offices are some curious observations on music.

ISLA, JOSEPH FRANCIS DE, a Spanish Jesuit, born at Segovia April, 1714; died at Bologna Dec., 1783. He wrote the 'History of the famous Preacher Friar Gerund de Campazas,' with a view to correct the abuses of the Spanish pulpit. An English translation by Nugent appeared at London 1772.

ISOCRATES, a Greek orator, born at Athens about B.C. 436; died B.C. 338. There are extant twenty-one orations ascribed to him. The best edition is that of W. Lange, 8vo., Halle, 1804.

ISRAÏLH, AUGUSTIN SIMON, a French ecclesiastic, born at Puy 16 June, 1719; died 1794. His curious and well-written book, entitled 'Querelles Littéraires,' has been sometimes attributed to Raynal, and even to Voltaire.

ITTIGIUS, THOMAS, a Lutheran divine, of Leipsic, born 31 Oct., 1643; died 7 April, 1710. His works are exceedingly numerous.

IVAN V., Czar of Russia, was born 1661, and succeeded to the throne 1682. Being of weak intellect he was placed in a monastery, and the sceptre given to his brother Peter. The Princess Sophia, hoping to reign in the room of Ivan, excited a sedition, which resulted in Ivan and Peter being appointed joint sovereigns, and Sophia co-regent. This government lasted six years, when Sophia having projected the death of Peter that she might reign alone, the conspiracy was discovered and the princess confined in a convent. From that time Peter reigned sole monarch. Ivan died 29 January, 1696.

IVAN VI.

IVAN VI., of Brunswick Bevern, was declared Czar after the death of his aunt Anne Ivanova, 1740. He was dethroned 1741, and put to death by order of Catherine 1764.

IVANOF, FEODOR FEODORWITCH, a Russian dramatist, born 1777; died at Moscow, 31 Aug., 1816.

IVES, or YVES, Sr., bishop of Chartres, died 23 Dec., 1115, leaving a collection of Ecclesiastical Decrees, numerous Epistles, and other valuable works.

IVES, JOHN, an antiquary, born at Great Yarmouth 1751. He became Suffolk herald extraordinary, and fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. He published three numbers of select papers on subjects of English antiquities; also remarks on the 'Garianonum of the Romans, the Scite and Remains, fixed and described,' 12mo. Died 9 June, 1776.

IVETAUX. See YVETAUX.

IVIE, EDWARD, a Latin poet, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1702); became vicar of Flower, Northamptonshire, 1717; and died 11 June, 1745, aged 67. His 'Epicteti Enchiridion, Latinis versibus adumbratum,' 1715, procured him a considerable reputation. It is reprinted with Simpson's Epictetus, 8vo., Oxford, 1804.

IVORY, Sir JAMES, LL.D., F.R.S., mathematician, born at Dundee 1765, and educated at the universities of St. Andrew's and Edinburgh. At the termination of his academical career, instead of entering the Church, for which he had been originally destined, he took an engagement as teacher in an academy at Dundee, and subsequently, from 1789 to 1804, he was managing partner of a factory for spinning flax at Douglas-town, Forfarshire. He next obtained the professorship of mathematics in the Military College at Great Marlow, Bucks (afterwards removed to Sandhurst), which he held till 1819. In 1831 he was invested with the Guelphic order of Knighthood, and received a pension of £300 a year. Died 21 Sept., 1842. To the Transactions of the Royal Society of London he contributed fifteen papers, most of them relating to physical astronomy, and all of them containing mathematical investigations of the most refined nature. Some valuable papers by him will also be found in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; in Masere's 'Scriptores Logarithmici'; in Leybourne's 'Mathematical Repository'; and in the supplement to the 6th edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica.—Anderson.

IZAACK, RICHARD, a topographer, born at Exeter 1624, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. Afterwards he became chamberlain and town-clerk of his native city, where he died about 1700. He compiled the Antiquities, or Memorials of the City of Exeter, 1677; and reprinted, with additions by the author's son, 1724.

Slavonic Poetry; &c. Born 1711; died 1 March, 1777.

JABLONSKI, DANIEL ERNEST, a Polish divine of the Protestant persuasion, born at Dantzic 20 Nov., 1660. After studying in various universities, and lastly at Oxford, he went to Prussia, where he became ecclesiastical counsellor, and president of the academy of Berlin. He laboured, without success, to promote a union between the Lutherans and Calvinists. Died 26 May, 1742. He translated into Latin Dr. Bentley's sermons at Boyle's lecture, and wrote several works on theological subjects. His son, Paul Ernest Jablonski, born at Berlin 1693, became professor of divinity at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, where he died 13 Sept., 1757, leaving 'Panthæon Egyptiorum,' and a great many other works. He is not to be confounded with Charles Gustavus Jablonski, member of the scientific society at Halle, and author of a Natural History of Insects. He died 1787, aged 31.

JABLONSKI, JOHN THEODORE, brother to Daniel, was born at Dantzic 1654. He was a councillor of the court of Prussia, and secretary of the Royal Society at Berlin. Died 1731. His works are—a French and German Dictionary; a Course of Morality; and a Dictionary of Arts and Sciences.

JACKSON, ANDREW, an American general and statesman, born in South Carolina 15 March, 1767. He served in the war of independence, and afterwards practised the law with such success that he was appointed judge of the Supreme Court in the state of Tennessee, having been a short time previously constituted major-general of the state forces. He resigned his judicial office, however, and lived in retirement till the breaking out of the war with England (1812), when he greatly distinguished himself in the military service. In 1814 he was appointed a major-general in the service of the United States, and on the 7th of November in that year he succeeded in taking Pensacola. He raised himself to the highest point of glory among his countrymen by the famous repulse of the British forces in their attack on New Orleans 8 Jan., 1815. In 1828 he was elected president of the United States, and again in 1832, so that he was at the head of the government of his native country from 1829 to 1837. Died 8 June, 1845.—Nat. Cycl.

JACKSON, ARTHUR, a nonconformist divine, born at Little Waddingfield, Suffolk, 1593; and educated at Cambridge. He became lecturer of St. Michael's, Wood Street; after which he obtained the living of St. Faith under St. Paul's, from whence he was ejected 1662. He was inimical to Cromwell, and suffered imprisonment in the time of Love's plot, for refusing to give evidence on that occasion. His Annotations on the Bible were printed in 4 vols. Died 5 Aug., 1666.

JACKSON, CYRIL, D.D., was the son of a physician at Halifax. He received his academical education at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1768; M.A. 1771; B.D. 1777; D.D. 1781). He held the post of sub-preceptor to the prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., and eventually became dean of Christ Church, which office he filled for twenty-six years. At the end of that period he retired to his favourite village of Felpham, Sussex, where he died 31 Aug., 1819, aged 76. Dr. Jackson published nothing, though he had a high reputation for scholarship. His brother, William Jackson, D.D., became Greek professor at Oxford 1783; bishop of Oxford 1811; and died 2 Dec., 1815, aged 64.

JACKSON.

JACKSON, JOHN, was born 4 April, 1686, at Lensey, Yorkshire. He took his bachelor's degree at Cambridge, but could not obtain that of master on account of his Arian principles. Notwithstanding this he took possession of the rectory of Rossington, and was presented to the mastership of Wigston's Hospital in Leicester, where he died with the character of a learned but troublesome man, 12 May, 1763. He wrote some tracts on the Trinity; a Defence of Human Liberty; four tracts in Defence of Human Reason; a Treatise on the Existence and Unity of God; an Address to the Deists; and Chronological Antiquities, 3 vols.

JACKSON, JOHN, a celebrated portrait painter, born at Lasingham, Yorkshire, 1778; died in London 1 June, 1831. He was a royal academician; and in 1819 accompanied his friend Chantry to Rome, where he was elected a member of the academy of St. Luke. His best works are the portraits of Flaxman, Lady Dover, Canova, and himself.

JACKSON, JOSEPH, a letter-founder of London, who cast the types for Domesday Book, the Alexandrian New Testament, and Macklin's Bible. Born 4 Sept., 1733; died 14 Jan., 1792.

JACKSON, ROBERT, M.D., a physician who practised for a time at Stockton, co. Durham, and was employed for many years in the army service on the Continent and in the West Indies. He wrote, 'On the Fevers of Jamaica;' 'An Exposition of the Practice of Affusing Cold Water on the Body as a Cure of Fever.' Born 1751; died 6 April, 1827.

JACKSON, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Willowing, in the bishopric of Durham, 1579, and educated at Oxford. He then was presented to the vicarage of Newcastle, but in 1630, on being elected president of Corpus Christi College, he resigned that living. In 1635 he was made prebendary of Winchester, and three years afterwards dean of Peterborough. Died 1640. His works, the principal of which is a Commentary on the Creed, were printed in 3 vols. folio, 1672.

JACKSON, THOMAS JEFFERSON, commonly called 'Stonewall' Jackson, a general in the service of the Confederate States of America, was born in Western Virginia Jan., 1824, and educated in the military academy at West Point. He saw much active service in the Mexican war, and on quitting the army received the appointment of professor of chemistry in the military academy of the state of Virginia at Lexington. On the outbreak of the civil war he offered his services to the State of Virginia, and soon became one of the principal Confederate generals. He died of wounds received in battle 9 May, 1863.

JACKSON, WILLIAM, a musical composer and ingenious writer, born at Exeter 1730. He studied under Travers, an eminent musician in London; after which he returned to his native city, where, in 1777, he became organist of the cathedral. He died there 12 July, 1803. As a composer of plaintive melodies, he stands pre-eminent. He had also a fine taste for the arts, and his literary productions are very respectable. The titles of these are—'Thirty Letters on various Subjects;' 'On the Present State of Music;' 'The Four Ages.'

JACOB BEN HAIM, a rabbi of the sixteenth century, who published a collection of the Masora at Venice in 4 vols., 1525, with the text of the Bible. This work is much esteemed among the Jews.

JACOMBE.

JACOB, GILES, a dramatic and law writer, born at Romsey, Hampshire, 1686. He was bred an attorney; after which he became steward to a gentleman of fortune. Died 8 May, 1744. As a dramatist he wrote two comedies, called 'Love in a Wood;' and 'The Soldier's Last Stake.' But though he had no merit in this line, he gained some credit by his 'Poetical Register, or Lives and Characters of the English Dramatic Poets,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1723. His law publications are very voluminous. 'The New Law Dictionary' is the best known of them.

JACOB, HENRY, a sectary, was a native of Kent, and educated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford. After being precceptor of Corpus Christi College, he obtained the living of Cheriton in his native county; but on publishing, in 1604, 'Reasons proving the necessity of Retorning our Churches in England,' he found it expedient to withdraw into Holland. After his return he established a separate congregation on Independent principles; but in 1624 he went to Virginia, where he died shortly afterwards. His works, though numerous, are scarce, and wholly controversial.

JACOB, HENRY, son of the preceding, was born 1606 or 1607. He was educated at Leyden under Erpenius, and made great progress in oriental literature. In 1629 he was incorporated B.A. at Oxford, and became probationer fellow of 'erton College, where he was also made reader of philology. He was likewise amanuensis to Sclden, who has paid him a handsome compliment in one of his works. In 1636 he was created M.A.; and in 1641 elected superior beadle of divinity. Soon after this he was admitted to the degree of bachelor of physic, but was expelled by the parliamentary visitors; on which he retired to London, and next to Canterbury, where he died very poor 5 Nov., 1652. His printed works are few; but he left a number of manuscripts on curious subjects, as the origin of letters and eastern antiquities. Wood says that he was the author of the 'Delphi Phœnicizantes,' published by Dr. Dickinson.—See DICKINSON.

JACOB DE SAINT CHARLES, LOUIS, a Carmelite, born at Châlons-sur-Saône 1608; died at Paris 10 May, 1670. His principal works are—'Bibliotheca Pontificia;' 'Traité des plus belles Bibliothèques du Monde;' 'Bibliographia Parisina;' 'De claris Scriptoribus Cablonensibus.'

JACOBÆUS, OLIGER, a physician and Latin poet, born at Arhusen, in Jutland, 1651. He became (1679) professor of philosophy and physic at Copenhagen, where he died 1701. One of his most curious works is a Dissertation on Frogs and Lizards.

JACOBI, FREDERICK HENRY, a German philosopher, born at Dusseldorf 25 Jan., 1743; died at Munich 10 March, 1819. His complete works were published in 6 vols., Leipsic, 1812-24.

JACOBI, JOHN GEORGE, a German poet, born at Dusseldorf 1740; died canon of Halberstadt 4 Jan., 1814.

JACOBS, JURIEN, a Swiss painter, died 1664, aged 54. He was the disciple of Snyders, and excelled in huntings and animals.

JACOBS, LUCAS. See LUCAS VAN LEYDEN.

JACOMBE, THOMAS, D.D., a nonconformist divine, born at Burton Lazars, Leicestershire, 1622, and educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, from whence he removed to Cambridge, where he became fellow of Trinity College. In the Rebellion he obtained the living of St. Martin, Ludgate; but being ejected from it in 1662, he was taken into the family of the countess of Exeter, where he died 27 March, 1687. Dr. Jacombe wrote a Commentary on the 8th of the Romans; a Treatise of Holy Dedication; and sermons. He had also a share in the Continuation of Pool's Annotations.

JACOPONE, or JACOPO DA TODI, an Italian poet, whose real name was Jacopo de Bonedetti, was born at Todi, of a noble family. On being left a widower he distributed his property among the poor, and entered into the order of Minorites as a servitor. He was the friend of Dante, and died 25 Dec., 1306. His works were printed at Venice in 1617, under the title of 'Poesie Spirituale.'

JACOTOT, JEAN JOSEPH, a French writer, born at Dijon 4 March, 1770. In 1815 he was appointed lecturer on the French language in the university of Louvain, where he devised his system of 'universal education,' or more properly, 'self-education,' which was introduced under his superintendence into the military school there. He returned to his native country 1838, and died at Valenciennes 30 July, 1840. He published several works showing the application of his method to the acquirement of 'The Mother Tongue' (1822); 'Foreign Languages;' 'Mathematics;' 'Music, Drawing, and Painting.'

JACQUARD, JOSEPH MARIE, a French mechanician, the inventor of the Jacquard loom, was born at Lyons 7 July, 1752, and died at Oullins, near that city, 7 Aug., 1834.

JACQUELOT, ISAAC, a Protestant divine, born 16 Dec., 1647, at Vassy. On the revocation of the Edict of Nantes he went to Heidelberg, next to the Hague, and lastly to Berlin, where he obtained a pension, and died 20 Oct., 1708. He wrote many theological works in French.

JACQUET, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, born at Lyons 6 March, 1732; died 1794. He wrote 'Parallèle des Tragiques Grecs et Français.'

JACQUIER, FRANÇOIS, a learned Jesuit and mathematician, was born at Vitry 1711; died at Rome 3 July, 1788. His works are, Newtoni principia mathematica, 4 vols.; Institutiones philosophicæ, 5 vols.; Riflessioni sovra alcune difficoltà spettanti i danni della coppola di S. Pietro; Descrizione d'un istromento per far conogni facilità orologi solari; Trattato di Algebra.

JACQUIN, NICHOLAS JOSEPH, a botanist, born at Leyden 16 Feb., 1727. The Emperor Francis I. sent him to America to collect rare plants to ornament the imperial gardens of Vienna and Schönbrunn. On his return he published a catalogue of the plants he had discovered, and was appointed professor of botany and chemistry at Vienna. He was also created a baron and a knight of the order of St. Stephen, and nominated a counsellor of mines and coinage. He died 24 Oct., 1817, leaving a number of valuable works in Latin on botanical science.

JADELOT, NICOLAS, a French physician and medical writer, born at Pont-à-Mousson 1738; died 27 June, 1793, at Nancy, where he was professor of anatomy and physiology.

JAEGER, JOHN WOLFGANG, a Lutheran divine of Stuttgart, author of 'Ecclesiastical History compared with Profane;' 'Observations on Puffendorf and Grotius;' Spinoza's Life and Doctrines examined, &c. Born 1647; died 1720.

JAMES V.

JAGO, RICHARD, a poet, born 1 Oct., 1715, at Beaudesert, Warwickshire, of which place his father was rector. He was educated at the school of Solihull, after which he became a servitor in University College, Oxford (M.A. 1738). He was presented to the living of Harbury in 1746, to which was added that of Chesterton, and next the vicarage of Snittersfield, Warwickshire. In 1771 he obtained the rectory of Kimcote, Leicestershire; but died at Snittersfield 8 May, 1781. His principal poem is entitled 'Edge Hill;' and an entire edition of his works was printed 1784.

JAHN, JOHN, a German orientalist, was canon of the metropolitan church of Vienna, and professor of biblical archaeology, dogmatic theology, and the oriental languages in the university there. His works on sacred philology are highly esteemed by scholars. Born 1750; died 16 Aug., 1817.

JAHN, OTTO, was born at Kiel (Holstein), 16 June, 1813; finished his studies at Berlin; made a long stay in France and Italy; and on his return to Kiel opened a course of lectures on philology and archaeology. In 1847 he occupied a chair of philology at Leipzig, but having taken part in the national movements of 1848-9, he was deprived of his appointments and retired into private life. He published numerous philological and archaeological works, and a very valuable biography of Mozart. Died Sept., 1860.

JAILLÔT, HUBERT ALEXIS, a French geographer, born about 1640; died 1712. His grandson, Jean Baptiste Michel Renou de Chauvigné, better known by the name of Jaillot, was born 1710 at Paris, where he died April, 1780. He published 'Critical, Historical, and Typographical Researches concerning Paris,' 5 vols., 1775.

JAMBlichus, a native of Chalcis in Cælo-Syria, flourished at the beginning of the fourth century. He was the disciple of Anatolius and Porphyry, from whom he learnt the mysteries of the Plotinian system of philosophy, which he taught with reputation, though he clothed it in obscure terms. Died about 333. He wrote, 'The Life of Pythagoras;' An Exhortation to the Study of Philosophy; Three Books on Mathematical Learning; Commentary on Nicomachus' Institutes of Arithmetic; A Treatise on the Mysteries of the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Assyrians; the best editions of which are those of Aldus, folio, 1497; Gale, in Greek and Latin, folio, 1678, Oxon and Kuster, Amsterdam, 1707, 4to.

JAMES I., King of Arragon, surnamed 7th Conqueror, was born 1206; succeeded his father Peter II., 1213; died 1276.

JAMES II., King of Arragon, son of Peter III., and grandson of the preceding, was born 1261; succeeded to the throne 1285; died 1327.

JAMES I., King of Scotland, was born 1304, being the son of Robert III., whom he succeeded 1406. He was murdered 20 Feb., 1437.

JAMES II., King of Scotland, son of the preceding, was born 1430; succeeded to the throne at the age of 7 years; and was slain at the siege of Roxburgh 3 Aug., 1460.

JAMES III., son and successor of the above, was born 1453; and was slain in battle 11 July, 1488.

JAMES IV. succeeded his father, the last-mentioned, at the age of 16. He was slain at the battle of Flodden Field 9 Sept., 1513.

JAMES V., son of the above, was only a year old at the time of his father's death. At the age of 17 he assumed the reins of government; and died

JAMES VI.

14 Dec., 1543, leaving his crown to his daughter, the ill-fated Mary Stuart.

JAMES VI. of Scotland and I. of England was the son of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, by Mary, daughter of James V. He was born 1566, and the year following proclaimed king on the forced resignation of his mother. He succeeded Queen Elizabeth on the English throne 1603; and died 27 March, 1625.

JAMES II., King of England, was the second son of Charles I., and born in London 1633, in which year he was created duke of York. He succeeded his brother, Charles II., Feb., 1684-5, but his zeal for the Catholic religion leading him into measures subversive of the constitution, the prince of Orange, who had married his daughter Mary, was invited by several of the English nobility to accept the throne. James, on finding himself abandoned by his friends, withdrew to France 1688, and died at St. Germain 16 Sept., 1701. A notice of his son, James Francis Edward, called the chevalier of St. George, is given under STUART.

JAMES DE VITRI, a cardinal in the thirteenth century, born at Vitry, near Paris. He attended the crusades, and was made bishop of Ptolemais; after which Gregory IX. raised him to the purple, and employed him as legate. He died at Rome 1244. He wrote an 'Eastern and Western History,' published by Canisius.

JAMES DE VORAGINE, a Dominican, so called from the place of his birth in the state of Genoa. He was born about 1230; became archbishop of Genoa 1292; and died 14 July, 1298. The most famous of his works is a collection of legends of the saints, known as 'The Golden Legend,' first printed at Cologne 1470.

JAMES, GEORGE PAYNE RAYNSFORD, a novelist, was the son of a physician in London, where he was born 1801. Having received a liberal education he travelled for some time on the Continent, and was resident in France and Italy during his early youth and manhood. His first so-called 'historical' novel, 'Richelieu,' was written in 1825, though not published till 1828. It is a very able work, and was followed by another of equal merit, 'Darnley.' Their favourable reception determined Mr. James's career, and from that time he issued novel after novel with inexhaustible facility, and, strange to say, with almost invariable success, until their number was upwards of a hundred. He also wrote some works of strict history; they are not of much value, but this employment of his pen was held to qualify him for the court appointment of historiographer royal, which was bestowed upon him by William IV. In 1850 he accepted the appointment of British consul in the State of Massachusetts, and in 1856 that of consul-general for the Austrian ports in the Adriatic. His death occurred at Venice 9 May, 1860.

JAMES, JOHN, D.D., canon of Peterborough, and author of several religious works, died 15 Dec., 1808, aged 85.

JAMES, JOHN ANGELL, an Independent minister, was born at Blandford 6 June, 1785. He received an ordinary education, calculated to fit him for the duties of commercial life; but having a strong inclination for the ministry, became a pupil in the college at Gosport. An accidental preaching at the Carr's Lane Chapel in Birmingham, in 1804, attracted the attention of the congregation, and he became their permanent minister and loved pastor for fifty-five years. Died 1 Oct., 1859. He published some religious works, which were widely circulated among the 'evangelical' Protestant sects in England and the United States.

JAMES, RICHARD, B.D., nephew of Dr. Thomas James, mentioned below, was born at Newport, Isle of Wight, 1592. He obtained a fellowship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and, after taking orders, visited Russia. He was well skilled in the northern languages, and had so general a knowledge of books, that Sir Robert Cotton committed to him the care of his library. He died very poor Dec., 1638. Besides Latin and English sermons, he wrote a poem on the death of Sir Robert Cotton; Observations made in Russia; and several pieces on subjects of antiquity.

JAMES, ROBERT, M.D., was born at Kinverston, Staffordshire, 1703, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford; after which he practised as a physician at Sheffield, Lichfield, and Birmingham. He next removed to London, and became a licentiate of the College of Physicians; but his chief dependence was on the booksellers for some years. He published an excellent Commentary on the Pentateuch, in folio; and, in 1743, a Medical Dictionary, 3 vols. folio. His other works were a translation of 'Ramazzani de morbis Artificum;' the Practice of Physic, 2 vols. 8vo.; a Treatise on Canine Madness; and a Dispensatory. In 1755 he was honoured with the degree of doctor of physic at Cambridge, by mandamus. He now distinguished himself by his famous fever remedy (James's powder), which, though at first attacked by the faculty, kept its ground, and made the fortune of the inventor and his family. Dr. James died 23 March, 1776. Dr. Johnson was the early friend of this ingenious man, and has paid him a fine compliment in his Lives of the Poets.

JAMES, THOMAS, D.D., was born about 1571, at Newport, Isle of Wight. He was educated at Winchester School, and New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1590 he published the 'Philobiblion' of Richard of Durham, for which he was made keeper of the Bodleian library. In 1614 he took his doctor's degree, was promoted to the sub-deanery of Wells, and the rectory of Mongeham, Kent. Dr. James next undertook to collate the manuscripts of the fathers and ecclesiastical writers; but the design failed for want of encouragement. He died at Oxford 6 Oct., 1629. His principal publications are—Catalogus Librorum in Bibl. Bodliciana; Concordantiæ S. S. Patrum; Apology for John Wickliffe; A Treatise on the Corruption of the Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers; The Jesuits' Downfall; Index librorum prohibitorum à pontificis, &c.

JAMES, THOMAS, D.D., was born at St. Neot's, Huntingdonshire, and educated at Eton; from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1776 he became master of Rugby School, which he resigned in 1793, and was presented to the rectory of Harrington, and a prebend in Worcester Cathedral. Dr. James published a Compendium of Geography, and an Algebraic Explanation of the fifth Book of Euclid. Died 24 Sept., 1804. His son, John Thomas James, D.D., became bishop of Calcutta on the death of Bishop Heber 1827; and died 22 Aug., 1828.

Sandbach, Cheshire. He became master of University College, Oxford, 1572; archdeacon of Coventry 1577; dean of Christ Church 1584; dean of Durham 1590; bishop of Durham 1606. Died 12 May, 1617. Two single sermons of his are in print.

JAMES, WILLIAM, author of the 'Naval History of Great Britain,' died in London 28 May, 1827.

JAMESON, Mrs. ANNA, a miscellaneous writer and art-critic, born in Dublin 1790, being the daughter of Mr. Murphy, painter in ordinary to the Princess Charlotte. She was married in 1823 to Mr. Robert Jameson, subsequently vice-chancellor of Canada, but the union was not a happy one, and was practically, though not legally, dissolved soon after its celebration. Mrs. Jameson died at Ealing 17 March, 1860. Subjoined is a list of her writings: 'Visits and Sketches at home and abroad;' 'Tales and Miscellanies;' 'Loves of the Poets;' 'Lives of celebrated Female Sovereigns;' 'Characteristics of Women,' being criticisms on Shakspeare's female characters; 'Beauties of the Court of Charles II.;' 'Winter Studies and Summer Rambles in Canada;' 'Pictures of the Social Life of Germany, as represented in the Dramas of the Princess Amelia of Saxony;' 'Handbook to the Public Galleries of Art in and near London;' 'Companion to the Private Galleries of Art in London;' 'Memoirs of the early Italian Painters;' 'Memoirs and Essays on Art, Literature, and Social Morals;' 'Sacred and Legendary Art;' 'Legends of the Monastic Orders;' 'Legends of the Madonna;' 'Commonplace Book of Thoughts, Memories, and Fancies;' 'Sisters of Charity;' 'The Communion of Labour,' a lecture on the social employment of women.

JAMESON, ROBERT, a naturalist, born at Leith, in Scotland, 11 July, 1774, and educated at Edinburgh. For a time he acted as assistant to a surgeon in his native town, but soon abandoned the medical profession in order to devote his undivided attention to the study of natural history, especially geology. After making several geological tours in his native country, he visited Germany (1800), and for two years studied mineralogy and geology at Freyberg under the celebrated Werner. On his return he was appointed to the chair of natural history at Edinburgh (1804), and held it till his death on 19 April, 1854. Professor Jameson, who was a member of various learned societies, published: 'Outline of the Mineralogy of the Shetland Islands, and of the Isle of Arran,' 1798; 'Mineralogy of the Scottish Isles, with mineralogical observations made in a Tour through the Hebrides, Orkney, Shetland, and different parts of the Mainland of Scotland, with Dissertations upon Peat and Kelp,' 2 vols., 1800; 'System of Mineralogy,' 3 vols., 1804-8, 3rd edit., 1820; 'Mineralogical Description of the County of Dumfriess,' 1805; 'Treatise on the External Character of Minerals,' 1805; 'Elements of Geognosy,' 1809; 'Manual of Minerals and Mountain Rocks,' 1831; 'Mineralogy according to the Natural History Method,' 1837. He also contributed largely to scientific periodicals, and was editor of the Edinburgh Philosophical Journal.

JAMESONE, GEORGE, a painter, born at Aberdeen 1580; died at Edinburgh 1644. He studied under Rubens, and, in 1625, returned to his native country, where he practised in history and landscape, though he excelled in portraits. Charles I. sat to him for his picture, gave him a diamond ring, and allowed him to appear covered in his presence, on account of a weakness in his eyes.

JAMET, PIERRE CHARLES, a Frenchman, author of 'Metaphysical Essays' and other works, published anonymously, was born at Louviers 1701, and died about 1770.

JAMIESON, JOHN, D.D., an antiquary and philologist, was born at Glasgow 5 March, 1750, and brought up in the university there. Entering the ministry, he officiated to the Secession congregation at Fortar for sixteen years, at the expiration of which time he was nominated pastor of the Antiburgher congregation in Nicholson Street, Edinburgh, where he died 12 July, 1838. His great work, 'The Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language,' appeared in 2 vols. 4to., 1809-10, and two supplementary vols. came out in 1825.

JAMYN, AMADIS, a French poet, born about 1538; died about 1585.

JANE I., Queen of Naples, daughter of Charles king of Sicily, was born 1327; assumed the government 1343; and was put to death 1382.

JANE II., Queen of Naples, born 1370; succeeded her brother Ladislaus 1414; died 1435.

JANE D'ALBRET. See DALBRET.

JANE FRANCES OF CHANTAL, St., was born at Dijon, in France, 13 Jan., 1572, and became the wife of Christopher de Rabutin, baron of Chantal, to whom she bore six children. After his death Madame de Chantal put herself under the direction of St. Francis de Sales, who at that time preached at Dijon. She was zealous and exemplary in the practice of every Christian virtue, and took the nun's habit 1610 at Annecy, where she founded the Order of the Visitation. She governed this Order with the utmost wisdom and prudence, and died, in great reputation for sanctity, at Moulins 13 Dec., 1641. She was canonized by Clement XIII.

JANEWAY, JAMES, a divine, born 1636, in Hertfordshire, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a studentship; but being deprived of it in 1662, he set up a dissenting congregation at Rotherhithe. Died 16 March, 1674. He published, 'The Life of his Brother, John Janeway, a pious non-conformist; A Token for Children' Legacy to his Friends.

JANICON, FRANÇOIS MICHEL, a political writer and journalist, born at Paris 24 Dec., 1674; died at the Hague 19 Aug., 1730.

JANOZKI, or JANISCH, JOHN DANIEL, a Polish ecclesiastic and writer on the literary history of his country, was born 1720, and died 1780.

JANSENIUS, CORNELIUS, a learned prelate, born at Hulst, in Flanders, 1513. Philip II. of Spain sent him to the Council of Trent, and on his return he was made the first bishop of Ghent, where he died 10 April, 1576, leaving a Harmony of the Gospels, and other works.

JANSENIUS, or JANSSEN, CORNELIUS, was born 1485, near Leerdam, in Holland. He studied at Louvain, from whence he removed to Paris, and next to Bayonne, where he became master of the college. After residing there some years he returned to Louvain, and was chosen principal of the college of St. Pulcheria. In 1624 he was sent on a mission to the king of Spain, who employed him to write a book against France, for which Jansenius was rewarded, in 1635, with the bishopric of Ypres; but he did not long enjoy that dignity, being carried off by the plague 6 May, 1638. He wrote a considerable number of books, the principal of which, entitled 'Augustinus,' he left complete for the press, and submitted it, by his last will, to the judgment of the apostolic see. Its publication in 1640 raised great commotions in the university of Louvain; to appease which Urban VIII. prohibited the book in 1642, as receiving propositions which had been condemned by his predecessors. The same troubles arising in France, Pope Innocent X. condemned, in 1653, the five famous propositions extracted from the book of Jansenius, viz. :—1. That there are divine precepts which even good men cannot obey without the assistance of God. 2. That no man can resist the influence of divine grace on his mind. 3. That to render human actions meritorious, it is not necessary for them to be free from necessity but constraint. 4. That the doctrine of free will is a gross error. 5. That Jesus Christ died not for all men, but only for the elect. Pope Alexander VII. declared in his bull, dated 16th Oct., 1656, 'that these five propositions are taken from the book of Jansenius, and have been condemned in the sense of that author.' This decision he confirmed by another bull, prescribing a new 'Formulary,' which all were required to sign on their admission into orders, or to benefices. The Jesuits were the uncompromising opponents of the Jansenist doctrines. As late as 1713 Clement XI. issued the celebrated bull 'Unigenitus,' in which he condemned 101 propositions of a book by Father Quesnel, for its revival of the heresy of Jansenius.

JANSSENS, ABRAHAM, a painter of Antwerp, born 1560; died 1631.

JANSSENS, or JOHNSON, CORNELIUS, a portrait painter, was a native of Amsterdam. He came to England in the reign of James I.; but, on the breaking out of the civil wars, he returned to Amsterdam, where he died 1665.

JANSSENS, HONORIUS VICTOR, a painter, born at Brussels 1664; died 1739.

JANUARIUS (ST.), bishop of Benevento, was beheaded at Puzzuoli, in the persecution under Diocletian. His body was removed to Naples, where there is a beautiful chapel erected to his memory in the cathedral. What renders his name remarkable is the miracle of the liquefaction of his blood exhibited on three occasions in every year.

JANUENSIS, JOANNES.—See BALBI.

JARCHI, SOLOMON BEN ISAAC, a celebrated rabbi, was born at Troyes, in France, in 1104, and died there 1180. He wrote Commentaries on the Bible, Mischna, Gemara, and Pirke Avoth, 4 vols., which are highly esteemed.

JARDINE, GEORGE, M.A., was born at Wandal, Lanarkshire, 1742; held the professorship of logic at Glasgow from 1787 till 1824; and died 27 January, 1827. He published 'Outlines of Philosophical Education.'

JARDYN, KAREL DU, a painter of landscapes and animals, born at Amsterdam 1640; died at Venice 20 Nov., 1678.

JARLATH (ST.), succeeded St. Benignus in the see of Armagh 465; died 482. Another St. Jarlath was the founder and first bishop of the church of Tuam. He flourished at the beginning of the 6th century.

JARKY, LAURENT JUILHARD DU, a French divine and poet, born about 1628, became prior of Notre Dame du Jarry, near Saintes, where he died 1730.

JARRY, NICHOLAS, a celebrated calligrapher, born at Paris about 1620; died before 1674.

JARS, GABRIEL, a French mineralogist, born at Lyons 20 Jan., 1732; died at Clermont 20 Aug., 1769. His 'Voyages Métallurgiques' were published in 3 vols., 1774-81.

JARVIS, JOHN, a painter on glass, born in Dublin about 1749; died 1804.

JAUCOURT, LOUIS DE, was born at Paris 26 Sept., 1704, and studied at Geneva, Cambridge, and Leyden. He had a concern in the French Encyclopædia; and also conducted the Bibliothèque Raisonnée. In conjunction with Gaubius, Muschenbroek, and Massuet, he published the 'Musæum Sebæanum,' which is a work of great price. He died at Compiègne 3 Feb., 1779.

JAULT, AUGUSTIN FRANÇOIS, a French orientalist, born at Orgelet (Franche-Comte), 1 Oct., 1700; died at Paris 25 May, 1757.

JAUREGUI Y AGUILAR, JOHN DE, a Spanish poet and painter, born at Toledo 1560; died at Madrid 1650.

JAY, LE.—See LE JAY.

JAY, JOHN, chief justice of the United States, died 17 May, 1829, aged 84.

JAY, WILLIAM, a dissenting minister of considerable note, was born at Tisbury, Wilts, 8 May, 1769; officiated to the congregation of Argyle chapel, Bath, from 1791 till 1853; and died 27 December, 1853. His literary productions consist of sermons, an Essay on Marriage, Memoirs of the Rev. Cornelius Winter and the Rev. John Clark, Lectures on Female Scriptural Characters, &c.

JEACOCKE, CALSB, author of the Vindication of the Moral Character of the Apostle Paul, against the charges of hypocrisy, and insincerity, brought by Lord Bolingbroke, Dr. Middleton, and others, 8vo., 1765; was a baker in High Street, St. Giles's, London, who by his great merit became director of the Hand-in-Hand fire office. He was a frequent attendant at the Robin Hood debating society, Butcher Row, Temple Bar, where, it is said, his oratory proved often more powerful and convincing than that of Edmund Burke and others, who afterwards acquired celebrity in the House of Commons. Died 1786.

JEANES, HENRY, was born at Allensay, Somersetshire, 1611. He was educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, where he took his degree of B.D., and then obtained preferment in his native county, where he turned Presbyterian in the civil wars, and had the living of Chedzoy, where he died Aug., 1662. Among other works he defended Charles I. in a treatise called 'The Image unbroken. A Perspective of the Impudence, Falschood, and Prophaneness published in a libel entitled, Iconoclastes,' 1651. This was an answer to Milton, whom he treats with keen severity.

JEANNIN, PIERRE, a French statesman, born at Autun 1540. He became president of the parliament of Dijon, where he opposed the execution of the orders for the massacre of Saint Bartholomew. Henry IV. called him to his council, and did nothing without his advice. Died 31 Oct., 1622. He was the author of a collection of negotiations and memoirs.

JEUKAT, EDMÉ FRANÇOIS, a French astronomer, born at Paris 1724; died March, 1803.

JEBB, JOHN, M.D., was the son of Dr. John Jebb, dean of Cashel, and born in London 1720. He was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took his degrees, obtained a fellowship, and entered into orders; but after serving the parish of St. Andrew's, in that town, some time, he relinquished the church, turned Socinian, and having procured a doctor's degree from the university of St. Andrew's, practised physic. He was likewise a great political zealot, and died March, 1786. His works were printed in 3 vols. 8vo., 1787.

JEBB, JOHN, an Irish prelate, born at Drogheda 27 Sept., 1775, and educated at Dublin. He was made bishop of Limerick 1823, and died 9 Dec., 1833. He wrote an Essay on Sacred Literature; Practical Theology; and Sermons.

JEBB, SIR RICHARD, son of Samuel Jebb, M.D., was born 1729, at Stratford, Essex. He was educated at Cambridge, but took his doctor's degree at Leyden. In 1768 he was elected a fellow of the College of Physicians, London. As a practitioner he possessed high and merited celebrity. When the duke of Gloucester was ill in Italy Dr. Jebb was sent out to attend him twice, which gave such satisfaction that he was created a baronet, and made physician to the king and prince of Wales. He died while attending two of the princesses 4 July, 1787.

JEBB, SAMUEL, M.D., uncle of John Jebb, M.D., mentioned above, was born at Nottingham. He also was of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and a nonjuror. On leaving the university he married a relation of Mr. Dillingham, the apothecary, from whom he derived some instruction in medicine; and then, on taking his doctor's degree, he practised at Stratford, Essex. He died in Derbyshire 9 March, 1772. Dr. Jebb published 'S. Justinii Martyris cum Tryphone Dialogus; Bibliotheca Literaria; De Vita et Rebus gestis Mariæ Scotorum Reginae; and the same work in English; an edition of Aristides, 2 vols.; Joan. Caii Britannici de Canibus Britannicis; an edition of Bacon's Opus Majus; Hump. Hodii de Græcis illustribus Linguae Græcæ Literarumque humaniorum instauratoribus.

JEFFERSON, THOMAS, president of the United States, died 4 July, 1826, aged 83. He held the office from 1801 till 1809.

JEFFERY, JOHN, was born at Ipswich 20 Dec., 1647. He was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, and, on entering into orders, obtained the curacy of Dennington, in Suffolk. In 1678 he was elected minister of St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich. In 1694 he was made archdeacon of Norwich; besides which he held the livings of Kirton and Falkenham, Suffolk. Died 1720. Dr. Jeffery published Sir Thomas Brown's 'Christian Morals; Aphorisms, selected from the papers of Dr. Whichcote; and three volumes of sermons by the same author. His own discourses were printed after his death, in 2 vols.

JEFFERY, THOMAS, a dissenting minister, born about 1700 at Exeter. He received his education under Mr. Hallet, to whom he became assistant; and in 1726 he was called to a congregation at Little Baddon, in Essex. In 1728 he returned to his native city, where he died in July, 1729. His works are, 'Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, in answer to Collins; Christianity proved from Holy Scripture; A Review of the Controversy between the Author of a Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion, and his Adversaries; Christianity the Perfection of Religion.'

JEFFREY, FRANCIS, a celebrated critic, politician, and judge, was born at Edinburgh 23 Oct., 1773, and educated in the universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Oxford. On returning to his native city he became a member of the Speculative Society, the most famous of the literary associations in connection with the university; and in 1794 he was admitted an advocate, though his known attachment to liberal principles impeded for some time his success at the bar. The year 1802 was rendered remarkable by the appearance of the 'Edinburgh Review,' which originated with Jeffrey, Brougham, Horner, Sidney Smith, and a few others. Sidney Smith edited it during the first year of its existence; but in 1803 Jeffrey became the editor, and during more than a quarter of a century that he conducted it, he acquired a literary reputation unique of its kind, besides exercising an extraordinary influence on contemporary literature and on public opinion that was productive of results never dreamed of at the beginning of the century. He came, in fact, to be acknowledged as the great master of criticism of his time, and the arbiter of the destinies of all the young authors of the day. To the pages of the Review he was always a large contributor, and among the articles furnished by him are profound and original disquisitions on many of the most difficult subjects, including metaphysics, poetry, politics, biography, morals, travels, political economy, physical science, and history. His writings are remarkable for their variety, acute analysis, and sparkling style. On the introduction of juries for the trial of facts in civil causes in Scotland (1816), Jeffrey's legal practice increased to an enormous extent. In 1820 he was chosen rector of the university of Glasgow, being re-elected in the following year. On being appointed dean of the faculty of advocates, in 1820, he relinquished the editorship of the Review. In Dec., 1830, on the Whig party coming into power, Jeffrey was appointed lord-advocate, and he subsequently represented the Forfarshire Burghs, Milton, and his native city in the House of Commons. He was nominated a lord of session May, 1834, when he took the title of Lord Jeffrey. His death occurred at Edinburgh 26 Jan., 1850. A selection from his Essays in the Edinburgh Review appeared in 4 vols. 8vo., 1843; and his Life, by Lord Cockburn, with a selection from his correspondence, was published in 2 vols. 8vo., 1852—Anderson.

JEFFREYS, GEORGE, a poet, born 1678, at Weldon, Northamptonshire, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. After this he studied the law, and was called to the bar, but never followed that profession. He died 1755. Mr. Jeffreys published a volume of miscellanies, containing, among other pieces, two tragedies entitled 'Edwin,' and 'Melrope.'

JEFFRIES, GEORGE, Lord Jeffries, was born at Acton, Denbighshire, about 1640, and educated at Shrewsbury School, from whence he was removed to Westminster, and next to the Inner Temple. He was not regularly called to the bar, but being at Kingston assizes in the plague year, 1666, when there were scarcely any counsellors present, he was induced to plead, and from that time continued to do so, without having his title questioned. Not long after this he was chosen Recorder of London, next a Welsh judge, and, in 1680, chief-justice of Chester. The year following he was created a baronet, and in 1683 made chief-justice of the King's Bench. At the accession of James II. he was created Baron Jeffries of Wem, in the county of Salop; and, on the suppression of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion, he was sent to try the prisoners in the west, where he committed shocking cruelties under the pretence of law, for which, at his return, he was constituted Lord Chancellor of England. When the Prince of Orange arrived, Jeffries, knowing how unpopular he was, endeavoured to escape in the disguise of a seaman, but was detected in Wapping, carried before the council, and committed to the Tower, where he died 18 April, 1689.

JEEBHOY, Sir JAMSEY, Bart., a wealthy Parsee merchant of Bombay, and benefactor to that city, was born 15 July, 1783, and died 15 April, 1859.

JEKYLL, Sir JOSEPH, a lawyer, was the son of a clergyman in Northamptonshire, and born 1663. He rose to eminence in his profession, and was one of the managers at Sacheverel's trial. At the accession of George I. he was knighted, and made master of the rolls. Died 1738. Sir Joseph had a contest about the jurisdiction of his court with Chancellor King, on which dispute he wrote a pamphlet. His brother, Dr. Thomas Jekyll, died minister of St. Margaret's Chapel, Westminster. He published some sermons.

JENISON, ROBERT, a Jesuit, was born in the county of Durham, in or about 1565; joined the Society 1590; and died in England 10 Oct., 1656. He wrote 'The Overthrow of Protestant Pulpit Babels, being a Confutation of Mr. W. Crashaw's Sermon, 8vo., 1612; 'Purgatory's Triumph over Hell; against Sir Edward Holby's Counter-Snarle,' 4to., 1613; 'A Paire of Spectacles for Sir Humphrey Linde, to see his way withall; or an Answer to his book called "Via Tuta," a safe way, wherein the booke is shewed to be a Labyrinth of Error, and the Author a blind Guide. By J. R.,' 8vo., Koen, 1631.

JENKES, HENRY, M.A., F.R.S., descended from a Prussian family, was born in England, and educated at Aberdeen and Caius College, Cambridge, where he gained a fellowship. He was professor of rhetoric in Gresham College, London, 1670-76, and died at Cambridge, Aug., 1697. He published 'The Christian Tutor, or a free and rational discourse of the sovereign good and happiness of man,' 1683; 'Stephani Curcellæi Synopsis Ethicæ,' to which Jenkes contributed 'Præfatio de natura et constitutione ethicæ, præsertim Christianæ, ejusque usu et studio;' 'The Christian Dial.'

JENKIN, ROBERT, a divine, born at Minster, in the Isle of Thanet, Jan., 1656, and educated at the King's School, Canterbury; from whence he removed, as sizar, to St. John's College, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow 1680, and master 1711. He was also Lady Margaret's professor of divinity, and, for some time, precentor of Chichester, which preferment he resigned at the Revolution. Died 7 April, 1727. His chief works are: Examination of the Authority of General Councils; Defensio S. Augustini; The Reasonableness of the Christian Religion, 2 vols.

JENKIN, WILLIAM, a nonconformist divine, born at Sudbury, 1612. After taking his degrees in arts at Cambridge, he was ordained, and in 1641 became minister of Christ Church, Newgate Street, and lecturer at Blackfriars, but was suspended and imprisoned for a supposed share in Love's plot. At the Restoration he was silenced, and, in 1684, committed to Newgate for holding a conventicle.

JENKS.

He died in prison 19 Jan., 1685. He wrote an Exposition of the Epistle of Jude.

JENKINS, DAVID, a loyal judge, born at Hensel, Glamorganshire, about 1560. After studying at Oxford, he was called to the bar, and made a Welsh judge. When the Rebellion broke out he was taken up and sent to the Tower, from whence he was removed to Newgate, impeached of treason, and brought to the bar of the House of Commons, where he refused to kneel, and called the place "a den of thieves." The assembly, in a fit of rage, were about to sentence him to be hanged, upon which he said that he would suffer with Magna Charta under one arm, and the Bible under the other. At last he was sent back to prison, where he remained till 1666. He died at Cowbridge, Glamorganshire, 6 Dec., 1667. His works were printed in a small volume in 1648; besides which he wrote 'Reports adjudged in the Exchequer Chamber,' 1661; and again 1777.

JENKINS, Sir LEOLINE, LL.D., a statesman, born at Llantrissant, Glamorganshire, about 1623. He was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, till the Rebellion forced him from thence, on which he became a travelling tutor. At the Restoration he returned to college, was created doctor of laws, and elected principal. He then removed to Doctors' Commons, was admitted an advocate, and in 1665 appointed judge of the court of Admiralty. In 1672 he was sent as ambassador to treat of a peace with the Dutch, but without success. He was afterwards at the treaty of Nimeguen, in conjunction with Sir William Temple, whom he succeeded as ambassador at the Hague. After his return to England he was sworn a privy-councillor, and made secretary of state, which office he resigned in 1684, and died 1 Sept., 1685. His letters and papers were published in 2 vols. fol., 1724.

JENKINS, PETER, a Jesuit, born at Sutton, near Guildford, 21 Sept., 1735. During his long missionary life he was stationed successively at Waterperry, Holt, Imham, Coldham, Bury St. Edmunds, and Saxis. He died at Bury St. Edmunds 14 July, 1818, leaving to posterity the following treatises: 'Sunday Evening Entertainments,' 1779; 'The Doctrine of Auricular Confession,' 1783; 'A Commentary on the 41st and 42nd Psalms,' 1799; 'Cursory Observations on the Divine Authority of the Catholic Church, and the assumed authority of Secretaries in interpreting the Bible, addressed to a country congregation,' 1804.—Oliver.

JENKINSON, Earls of Liverpool. See LIVERPOOL.

JENKS, BENJAMIN, was born in Shropshire, 1646. He became rector of Harley, in his native county, where he resided fifty-six years, and died 10 May, 1724. He published—Prayers and Offices of Devotion for Families; Meditations on various important Subjects, 2 vols.

JENKS, SYLVESTER, a native of Shropshire, was educated in the English College at Douay, where he took the name of Metcalf. He was ordained priest 1684, and stationed at Harvington, Worcestershire. James II. called him up to London, and made him one of his preachers. His death occurred in London, 1715. Mr. Jenks was author of Sermons, 1688; A Letter or Treatise concerning the Council of Trent; The blind obedience of an humble penitent the best cure for scruples, 1699; The security of an humble penitent, in a letter to H. S., 1700; 'A Contrite and Humble Heart;

JENNENS, CHARLES, a literary gentleman of fortune at Gopsal, in Leicestershire, and a non-juror. On account of the splendour of his house and equipage, he was called 'Solyman the Magnificent.' He selected the words for Handel's oratorios, and particularly those of the Messiah; but he rendered himself ridiculous by publishing an edition of some of Shakspeare's plays on a new plan. Died 20 Nov., 1773.

JENNER, CHARLES, a miscellaneous writer, born in Gloucestershire, 1737, and educated at Cambridge. He became rector of Cramford St. John, Northamptonshire, and vicar of Claybrook, Leicestershire, where he died 11 May, 1774. He wrote several plays and poems, but none of any reputation.

JENNER, EDWARD, M.D., was the son of the Rev. Stephen Jenner, vicar of Berkeley, Gloucestershire, and born there 17 May, 1749. Being a younger son, he was bred to the medical profession, and bound apprentice to Mr. Ludlow, a surgeon at Cirencester, on leaving whom he became a pupil of John Hunter, at St. George's Hospital, and while there received two offers; one to go out with Captain Cook; in his first voyage, and the other to accompany Warren Hastings to Bengal. These flattering proposals were declined, and Mr. Jenner chose to settle at Berkeley, where at his leisure hours he studied natural history, with what success appeared in a paper on the habits of the cuckoo, which, being communicated to the Royal Society, was inserted in their Transactions for 1788. Long prior to this he had begun to investigate the nature of the cow-pox, from first observing that among the milkers and dairy people the constitutions of many resisted variolous inoculation. On further inquiry he found that the cause of this insusceptibility lay in the patients having been infected with another cutaneous disease contracted from the cattle. Mr. Jenner did not, however, hastily form a conclusion on this important hint, or prematurely make his observations public, but went on in a course of experiment, to ascertain whether the transmitted matter of the cow-pock to the human subject, and again from one inoculated person to another, would prove a preventive of the small-pox. The result was favourable to his hopes, and in 1798, having previously taken his doctor's degree at Edinburgh, he published 'An Inquiry into the Causes and Effects of the Cow-pox,' which was followed the next year by 'Further Observations on the Variolæ Vaccinæ, or Cow-pox.' The subject now became one of general interest, and though much opposition was made to the new discovery, it triumphed over sceptical bigotry, both at home and abroad. Honours and rewards were conferred on the author; the university of Oxford presented him with his medical degree by diploma; he was chosen a fellow of the Royal and other societies; his natal day was observed in several places; and he received a grant of £20,000 from Parliament. Died 25 Jan., 1823. Besides the two pieces already noticed, Dr. Jenner published some others on the cow-pox.

came pastor of a congregation in Old Gravel Lane 1718, and officiated there forty-four years: besides which he was one of the trustees for the management of Coward's charities, and a tutor in the academy founded by that gentleman. In 1740 he obtained the degree of D.D. from St. Andrew's, and died Sept., 1762. His works are, The Beauty and Benefit of early Piety; Introduction to the Use of the Globes; Appeal to Reason for the Holy Scriptures; A Treatise on Original Sin; Lectures on Jewish Antiquities, 2 vols.; An Essay on Medals.

JENSON, or JANSONIUS, NICHOLAS, a printer of Venice, was a native of France in the fifteenth century. He cast the letters, and first fixed the proportion of the present Roman character. His two first books were 'Decor Puellarum,' and 'Gloria Mulierum;' both printed 1471. He died a few years afterwards.

JENYNS, SOAME, was born in London, on New Year's-day, 1704. After a private education he went to St. John's College, Cambridge, which he left without a degree, and married; but his marriage was unhappy, and his wife eloped from him. In 1730 he published a poem on the 'Art of Dancing,' which was followed by other pieces in Dodsley's collection. In 1742 he was elected into Parliament for the county of Cambridge; but in 1754 he was returned for Dunwich. The next year he was made one of the commissioners of the board of trade, where he sat till its dissolution. In 1757 he published his 'Inquiry into the Origin of Evil,' which was successfully refuted by Johnson; but in 1761 he reprinted it with his poems. In 1767 he published a pamphlet on the high price of provisions; and in 1776 appeared his 'View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion,' which some considered as an insidious attack upon that system while others regarded it as an elegant apology for established faith. In 1782 came out some paradoxes, under the title of 'Disquisitions on several Subjects;' which produced also some replies, especially on the subject of government. The author died 18 Dec., 1787, leaving a widow, to whom he had been married thirty-four years after the death of his first wife. His works were collected into 4 vols., 1790.

JEPHSON, ROBERT, a dramatic writer, born in Ireland 1736. He was a captain in the army, and master of the horse to the lord-lieutenant, during twelve administrations. Died 31 May, 1803. Mr. Jephson wrote—Braganza; The Count of Narbonne; The Law of Lombardy; Julia; The Conspiracy, tragedies; and some minor pieces. But he acquired more credit by his 'Roman Portraits,' a volume of poems. He also published a satire on the French Revolution, under the title of 'The Confessions of J. B. Couteau.'

JERDAN, WILLIAM, F.S.A., was born at Kelsc, Roxburghshire, 1782. Being intended for the legal profession, he was placed for some time in the office of a writer to the signet. His inclination for literary pursuits, however, led him to abandon the law, and in 1806 he settled in London. After accepting an engagement as a reporter on the 'Aurora,' a short-lived morning paper, he afterwards joined the 'Pilot,' evening newspaper, established in January, 1807. He was on the staff of the 'Morning Post,' reported during three sessions for the 'British Press,' and was a contributor to the 'Satirist,' or 'Monthly Meteor,' the copyright of which he purchased. He was instrumental in seizing Bellingham, the murderer of Spencer Perceval, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the lobby of the House of Commons, and has given a detailed account of that event in his Autobiography. In 1813 he became editor of the 'Sun,' then a Tory organ; in 1816 sold his share in that newspaper, and in 1817 became editor and part proprietor of the 'Literary Gazette,' with which his name was associated for thirty-four years. In 1821 he assisted in founding the Royal Society of Literature, and he took a prominent part for some time in the administration of the Literary Fund. In 1852 a pension of 100*l.* per annum was conferred upon him. He died at Bushey Heath, Herts, 11 July, 1869. Mr. Jerdan wrote four volumes of the Memoirs for 'Fisher's National Portrait Gallery of Eminent Personages of the Nineteenth Century'; 'The Paris Spectator,' 1814; 'Voyage to the Isle of Elba'; edited the 'Rutland Papers' and the 'Perth Correspondence' for the Camden Society; and contributed to many periodical publications. His 'Autobiography,' a record of his literary, political, and social reminiscences and correspondence to 1830, was published in 4 vols., 1852-53; and his reminiscences of distinguished characters, under the title of 'Men I have known,' in 1866.

JEREMIAH, patriarch of Constantinople in 1572. He introduced the reformed calendar of Gregory XIII., for which, and his correspondence with the Pope, he was banished; but recovered his seat after being two years in exile. The Lutherans endeavoured to gain his sanction to the Augsburg confession; and his letters on that subject were printed in Greek and Latin, in 1584, folio.

JERNINGHAM, EDWARD, a poet, dramatist, and essayist, born in Norfolk 1727; died 17 Nov., 1812.

JEROME, or HIERONYMUS (St.), the most learned of the Latin Fathers of the Church, was born about 340 at Strido, a city of Pannonia. He studied at Rome under the celebrated grammarian Donatus, and after being baptized, visited Gaul, Thrace, Pontus, Bithynia, Gallatia, and Cappadocia. About 372 he retired to the desert of Syria, and subsequently he studied Hebrew at Rome in order that he might acquire a more perfect knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. At this period also he was ordained priest. In 381 he went to Constantinople to hear St. Gregory of Nazianzen, and returning to Rome the year following, he was appointed secretary to Pope Damasus. Ultimately he took up his abode in a monastery at Bethlehem, where it is believed he died 30 Sept., 420. The best edition of his works is that by Martianay 5 vols. folio, Paris, 1693-1706. They consist of a Latin version of the Holy Scriptures, which (with the exception of the book of Psalms) has been adopted by the church, and is known as the Vulgate; commentaries on several books of the Old and New Testament; polemical treatises; letters; and a catalogue of ecclesiastical authors.

JEROME OF PRAGUE, so called from the place of his birth, which took place about 1378. He was among the disciples of John Huss, whose doctrines he zealously taught, for which he was imprisoned at the Council of Constance, where he abjured his errors (1415), but afterwards fled, and continued to teach them. Being retaken, and carried to Constance, he was burnt as a person relapsed, 30 May, 1416.

JESSE.

JERROLD, DOUGLAS, wit, dramatist, and novelist, was born in London 3 Jan., 1803, but his early home was Sheerness, where his father was manager of the theatre. He became a midshipman in the royal navy, but when the peace came he had to choose another calling, and accordingly he was apprenticed to a printer in London. While working as a compositor on a newspaper he thought he could write something as good as the criticisms which there appeared. He therefore dropped into the editor's box an anonymous essay on the opera of 'Der Freischutz,' the performance of which he had witnessed with wonder and delight. His own 'copy' was handed over to him to put in type, while an earnest editorial notice soliciting other contributions from the unknown correspondent, determined the vocation of the youthful writer. Before he was twenty he had written numerous pieces for the theatre. 'Black-eyed Susan,' the most successful of his naval plays, was written when he was scarcely twenty years of age—a piece which made the fortune of the Surrey Theatre, restored Elliston from a long course of disastrous management, and gave honour and independence to T. P. Cooke. Jerrold, however, only netted about 70*l.* out of the many thousands which the play realised for the management. The best part of many years of his life was given up to dramatic composition, the best of his productions in this line being 'The Rent Day'; 'The Prisoner of War'; 'Bubbles of a Day'; 'Time Works Wonders'; 'The Catspaw'; 'St. Cupid'; and 'The Heart of Gold.' He also wrote the following brilliant novels, all of which, with a single exception, originally appeared in the columns of periodical publications:—'A Man Made of Money'; 'Men of Character'; 'Chronicles of Clavernook'; 'St. Giles and St. James'; 'The Story of a Feather'; 'Punch's Letters to his Son'; 'The Cauld Lectures.' During the latter years of his life he was the editor of Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper. Died 8 June, 1857.

JERVAS, CHARLES, a painter, who studied under Kneller. He was a native of Ireland, and acquired a reputation which he did not merit, through his intimacy with Pope, who flattered him egregiously. He published a translation of Don Quixote, to which Warburton contributed an Essay on the Origin of Romance and Chivalry. Born about 1675; died 2 Nov., 1739.

JERVIS, JOHN, earl of St. Vincent. See ST. VINCENT.

JESSE, EDWARD, a naturalist, was born 14 Feb., 1780, at Hutton Cranswick, Yorkshire, of which parish his father was incumbent. In 1798 he was appointed to a clerkship in the San Domingo office, and he afterwards became secretary to Lord Dartmouth during that nobleman's tenure of the presidency of the Board of Control. Having held for some time a commission as lieutenant-colonel of the Birmingham volunteers, and subsequently that of captain in the Leicestershire militia, he was appointed Deputy Surveyor of the Royal Parks and Palaces. Under George III. and George IV. he held the honorary post of Gentleman of the Bury at Windsor Castle, and Lord Liverpool during his premiership bestowed upon him a Commissionership of Hackney Coaches. This he retained until the abolition of the office, when he retired on a pension. Mr. Jesse spent the greater part of his life in the neighbourhood of Windsor, Hampton Court, and Richmond, but in 1862 he removed to Brighton, where he died 28 March, 1868. Mr. Jesse by observation and experiment added considerably to our knowledge of the animal creation. His works are—'Gleanings in Natural History,' 3 vols., 1832-5; 'An Angler's Rambles,' 1836; 'A Summer's Day at Hampton Court,' 1839; 'Handbook to Hampton Court,' 1841; 'A Summer's Day at Windsor, and a Visit to Eton,' 1841; 'Scenes and Tales of Country Life,' 1844; 'Anecdotes of Dogs,' 1846; 'Favourite Haunts and Rural Studies, including visits to spots of interest in the vicinity of Windsor and Eton,' 1847; 'Windsor Castle and its Environs,' 1848. He also published editions of Hoffland's 'British Angler's Manual'; Walton's Angler; and White's Selborne.

JESSEY, HENRY, a nonconformist divine, born at West Rowton, Yorkshire, 1627, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He attached himself early to the Independents, for which he was imprisoned 1641, but was released by the parliament. In the Rebellion he officiated at St. George's, Southwark, but was ejected at the Restoration, and twice sent to prison. Died 4 September, 1663. His works are—The Glory and Salvation of Judah and Israel; a Description of Jerusalem; A Narrative of Mrs. Sarah Wright; A Looking-glass for Children; 'Miscellanea Sacra'; 'An English-Greek Lexicon, containing the Derivations and various Significations of all the Words in the New Testament.'

JEUNE, FRANCIS, an English prelate, was a native of Jersey, and received his early education in France. Afterwards he became a scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford, and in 1834 was appointed head master of Birmingham School, where he remained until he was appointed dean of Jersey. In 1843 he returned to Oxford, having been elected master of his college; in 1864 he was appointed dean of Lincoln; and a few months afterwards bishop of Peterborough. He died 21 August, 1868. Dr. Jeune possessed an extraordinary aptitude for business. Wherever he went he left his mark as an efficient business man behind him. At Birmingham he successfully introduced many important changes; in Jersey, Victoria College stands a monument of his energy; at Oxford he was conspicuous as a most active reformer, and, indeed, probably owed his seat in the House of Lords to the zeal and energy he displayed as a member of the University Commission; while at Gloucester, of which cathedral he was at one time a canon, his management of the chapter property was so skilful that sufficient funds were procured to restore the cathedral, and to increase the salaries of those connected with it. As a divine, Dr. Jeune was not remarkable; nor was he particularly successful as a head of a college.

JEWEL, JOHN, a learned prelate, born at Buden, in the parish of Berry Narber, Devonshire, 24 May, 1522. He was educated at Barnstaple, from whence he removed to Merton College, Oxford; but afterwards he became a scholar of Corpus Christi, where he took his degrees, and was chosen lecturer in rhetoric. In the reign of Edward VI. he made a public profession of the reformed religion, and contracted a friendship with Peter Martyr. In 1551 he took his degree of B.D., and obtained the rectory of Sunningwell, Berks; but at the accession of Mary he was obliged to secrete himself till he could get out of the kingdom.

He arrived at Frankfort 1554, and soon afterwards went to Strasburg, where Peter Martyr had formed a kind of college, of which Jewel was chosen vicemaster. After remaining four years in exile, he returned home at the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth, who made him bishop of Salisbury in 1559. He now distinguished himself by preaching a sermon at Paul's Cross; in which he challenged all the Catholics in the world to produce one clear witness, within six hundred years after Christ, who maintained the doctrines of the Roman Church. This produced a controversy, and our author's 'Apology for the Church of England,' which was translated into several languages. Bishop Jewel died at Monkton Farley, Wilts, 21 Sept., 1571. His works were printed by the Parker Society, under the editorship of the Rev. John Ayre, 4 vols. 8vo., 1845-50.

JOACHIM, GEORGE, surnamed Rheticus, an astronomer and mathematician, born at Feldkirch (Tyrol) 16 Feb., 1514. He studied at Wittenberg, and became professor of philosophy there (1537), but quitted that situation to profit by the instructions of Copernicus, whose work, 'De Revolutionibus,' he published, in 1543, at Nuremberg, where also he began his elaborate canon of Sines, Tangents, and Secants. He died at Cassovia, in Hungary, 4 Dec., 1576.

JOAN, POPE, a fictitious personage of the female sex, who was stated by some writers to have succeeded Leo IV. in the papal chair 855, and to have occupied it over two years. Modern research and criticism have shown that the story is a ridiculous fabrication.

JOAN OF ARC, surnamed the Maid of Orleans, was born at Domremy, in Lorraine, 1410. Her parents were peasants and she herself tended sheep till she was eighteen years of age. Being moved with pity at the sight of the misfortunes of her country, she believed herself called upon by heaven to deliver France from the English. Accordingly she sought an interview with Charles VII., and with great difficulty obtained from him the command of some soldiers, with whom she shut herself in Orleans, which was besieged by the English army. She obliged the English to raise the siege of that city, vanquished Talbot at Patay, and conducted the king to Rheims, where she caused him to be crowned. She now considered that her mission was at an end, and wished to withdraw into retirement, but being compelled to continue the war against the English, she was taken prisoner at Compiègne 1430. She was ultimately conducted to Rouen, where, after a most unfair and disgraceful trial, she was condemned to death as a sorceress, and burnt alive 31 May, 1431.

JOBERT, AMBROISE CLAUDE GABRIEL, a native of France, who resided for several years at Manchester, published several works on the French language, a 'System of Philosophy,' and 'The Philosophy of Geology' (the latter both in English and French). He died at St. Foy in the south of France 1855, aged 57.

JOBERT, LOUIS, a Jesuit, author of 'La Science des Médailles,' and some religious works, was born 27 April, 1647, at Paris, where he died 30 Oct., 1719.

JOCELIN DE BRAKELONDE was born at Bury St. Edmunds, in Suffolk, and in 1173 assumed the Benedictine habit in the celebrated monastery of his native town. According to Bale he studied at Cambridge. He became chaplain to the abbat of his monastery, and for some time filled the office of guest-master. Besides a treatise on the miracles of St. Robert, the boy martyred by the Jews at Bury St. Edmunds, he wrote a Chronicle, comprising the annals of his monastery from 1173 to 1202. The merit of this Chronicle lies chiefly in the variety of ordinary incidents detailed, from which, often, something is to be learnt touching our language, manners and customs, or our system civil and religious, particularly the monastic polity. It was published by the Camden Society under the editorship of John Gage Roke-wode, with the following title: 'Chronica Jocelini de Brakelonda, de Rebus Gestis Samsonis Abbatis Monasterii Sancti Edmundi. Nunc primum typis mandata curante Johanne Gage Roke-wode,' 4to., Lond., 1840. Mr. Thomas Carlyle has made the general public familiar with the work of this honest old Benedictine chronicler.

JOE, PETER DE, an engraver of Antwerp, born 1570; died 1634. His son, Peter (born at Antwerp 1602); and his grandson Arnold (born about 1636), also acquired fame as engravers.

JOELLE, ETIENNE, sieur du Lymodin, a French dramatist and poet, born at Paris 1532; died July, 1573. He was the first to compose French tragedies in imitation of those of the Greeks, that is to say, with prologues and choruses.

JOEGER, CHRISTIAN THEOPHILUS, a biographer, born at Leipsic 1694. He first studied medicine, but afterwards applied himself to divinity; gave private lectures on rhetoric 1715-30; directed the publication of the 'Acta Eruditorum,' 1721-39; obtained in 1730 the chair of philosophy, and in 1732 that of history at Leipsic; and became in 1742 librarian of that town. His principal work is the 'Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon,' or 'Universal Dictionary of Learned Men,' containing about 76,000 articles. This useful work has been continued, and supplemented by Adelung and Kotermund. Its author died 10 May, 1758.

JOHANNOT, CHARLES HENRY ALFRED, an engraver, designer, and painter, was born of French parents at Offenbach, in the grand duchy of Hesse, 1800; and died in Paris 7 Dec., 1837.

JOHANNOT, TONY, an artist, brother of the preceding, was born at Offenbach 1803, and died at Paris 4 Aug., 1852. He was a less successful painter than his brother, but in making designs for vignettes he displayed much facility and liveliness of invention.

JOHN I., a Tuscan, was elected Pope 523, and died 18 May, 526.

JOHN II., a native of Rome, surnamed Mercu-rius, was elected Pope 533, and died 27 May, 535.

JOHN III., a Roman, succeeded Pope Pelagius I. 560, and died 13 July, 573.

JOHN IV., a native of Salona, in Dalmatia, was elected Pope 640, and died 11 Oct., 642.

JOHN V., originally of Antioch, was elected Pope 685, and died 1 Aug., 686.

JOHN VI., a Greek, succeeded Pope Sergius 701; died 11 Jan., 705.

JOHN VII., a Greek, was elected Pope 705, and died 17 Oct., 707.

JOHN VIII., a Roman, elected Pope 872, died 15 Dec., 882.

JOHN I.

JOHN IX., a native of Tivoli, succeeded Pope Theodore II. 898; and died 26 March, 900.

JOHN X., was elected Pope 914, and died 928.

JOHN XI., son of Alberic, duke of Spoleto, was placed in the pontifical chair at the age of 25, in the year 931. Died 936.

JOHN XII., Octavian, a Roman, became Pope 956, and died 964, after having scandalized the church by his crimes.

JOHN XIII., a Roman, made Pope after the death of Benedict V. 955; died 6 Sept., 972.

JOHN XIV., succeeded Benedict VII. 984, and died June, 985.

JOHN XV., son of Robert, was elected Pope on the death of John XIV., but either because he died before his consecration, or for other reasons, he is only reckoned among the popes to make up the number. He died before July, 975.

JOHN XVI., a Roman, elected Pope 985; died 30 April, 996.

JOHN XVII., before called Philagathus, was elected Pope by the intrigues of Crescentius, in opposition to Gregory V.; but the emperor Otho III. having taken Crescentius in his fort, ordered this anti-pope's hands and ears to be cut off, and his eyes pulled out, 998.

JOHN XVIII. (or XVIII.), was elected Pope on the death of Sylvester II. 6 June, 1003, and died 31 Oct. the same year.

JOHN XVIII. or XIX. according to his own diplomas, a Roman, who succeeded Pope John XVII. 1004; and died 1009.

JOHN XIX. (or XX.), brother of Pope Benedict VIII., whom he succeeded 1024. Died 6 Nov., 1033.

JOHN XXI., a Portuguese cardinal and bishop of Tusculum, succeeded Pope Adrian V. 1276; died 16 May, 1277.

JOHN XXII., Jacques d'Esse, a native of Cahors, succeeded Clement V. 1316; died 5 Dec. 1334, aged above 90.

JOHN XXIII., Balthasar Cossa, a Neapolitan, elected Pope 1410 died 22 Nov., 1419.

JOHN I., surnamed Zimiscei, seized the throne of Constantinople, by assassinating Nicephorus Phocas 969. He displayed great valour against the Saracens; and was poisoned 10 Jan., 976.

JOHN II., Comnenus, succeeded to the throne of Constantinople 1118. He closed a glorious reign 1143.

JOHN III., Ducas, was emperor of Nice, while the Latins were masters of Constantinople. He died 1255.

JOHN IV., Lascaris, succeeded to the throne of Constantinople 1259. His sceptre was seized by Michael Palaeologus, who put him in prison, where he died 1284.

JOHN V. See CANTACUZENUS.

JOHN VI., Palaeologus, succeeded to the throne of Constantinople 1341. This weak and unfortunate monarch died 1391.

JOHN VII., Palaeologus, succeeded his father as emperor 1425; died 1448.

JOHN, king of England, was born 1166, being the son of Henry IV.; crowned 1199; died 19 Oct., 1216. This monarch, being compelled by the barons, signed Magna Charta, the basis of British freedom.

JOHN, king of France, surnamed the Good, succeeded to the throne 1350; died 1364.

JOHN I., king of Portugal, was raised to the throne 1384, and died 1433. During his reign the Portuguese began their famous discoveries.

JOHN II.

JOHN II., king of Portugal, surnamed the Great, succeeded to the throne 1481, and died 1495.

JOHN III., king of Portugal, ascended the throne 1521, and died 1557.

JOHN IV., surnamed the Fortunate, was son of the duke of Braganza. With the assistance of his brave countrymen he shook off the Spanish yoke, and was proclaimed king 1640; died 1656.

JOHN V., succeeded to the throne of Portugal 1707, and died 1750.

JOHN VI., king of Portugal, succeeded to the throne 1816, and died 1826.

JOHN, son of the Emperor Henry VII., was elected to the kingdom of Bohemia 1309, and, after conquering Silesia, declared himself king of Poland. He was mortally wounded in the battle of Crecy 1346.

JOHN III., king of Sweden, son of Gustavus Vasa, ascended the throne 1568, and died 1592. He attempted, but without success, to restore the Catholic religion.

JOHN OF AUSTRIA, DON, was the natural son of the Emperor Charles V., and a celebrated warrior. Born 1545; died 1 Oct., 1578.

JOHN OF BEVERLEY (St.) was a native of Harpham, in Northumbria. An earnest desire to qualify himself for the service of God led him into Kent, where he made great progress in learning and piety. Afterwards he resided in the monastery at Whitby, Yorkshire, till, in the beginning of the reign of king Alfred, he was made bishop of Hagulstad, the modern Hexham. When St. Wilfrid returned from banishment St. John yielded up to him the see of Hexham, but some time afterwards he was placed in the archiepiscopal chair of York. Venerable Bede, who received holy orders at his hands, gives ample testimony as to his sanctity, and describes several miracles performed by him. St. John delighted in frequent retirement, and chose for his retreat a monastery which he had built at Beverley. In 717, being much broken with age and fatigues, he resigned his see to his chaplain, St. Wilfrid the younger, and retired to Beverley, where he spent the four remaining years of his life in the performance of monastic duties. He died there 7 May, 721.

JOHN DE BRIDLINGTON (St.). See BRIDLINGTON.

JOHN CHRYSOSTOM (St.), the most eloquent Father of the Church, and bishop of Constantinople; born at Antioch about 347. He maintained church discipline with great rigour, and was deposed in a most arbitrary manner by Theophilus, bishop of Alexandria, in 403, and banished to Bithynia; which occasioned such a commotion in Constantinople that he was recalled. He was once more sent into exile, and died at Comanis, in Armenia, 14 Sept., 407. The best editions of his works are by Sir Henry Savile, 8 vols. folio, Eton, 1613; and by Montfaucon, 13 vols., 1718, Paris.

JOHN COLOMBINI (St.), was descended from a noble family at Sienna. In conjunction with Francis Dimino Vincenti, he founded the order of 'Apostolical Clerks,' called afterwards the 'Jesuati of St. Jerome,' because Colombini ordered that they should have the name of Jesus always in their mouths, and a particular devotion to St. Jerome. His order was approved by Urban V., 1367, and he died the same year at Sienna July 31. The order was suppressed 1668.

JOHNES.

JOHN OF THE CROSS (St.), was born at Ontiveros, in Old Castile, 1542. Having taken the monastic habit in the convent of Medina-del-Campo, he formed a strict friendship with St. Teresa, and assisted in reforming the Carmelite order. He established several houses of Discalced, or Barefooted, Carmelites; and died 14 Dec., 1591, leaving several devotional works in Spanish. He was canonized by Benedict XIII. 1726.

JOHN DAMASCENUS (St.), a learned monk, born at Damascus about 676. He succeeded his father as councillor of state to the caliph, but at the close of life he entered the monastery of St. Sabas, near Jerusalem, where he died about 760. He left an excellent treatise 'On the Orthodox Faith,' and several other works, published in Greek and Latin at Paris, 4 vols. folio, 1712.

JOHN OF GAUNT, or GHENT, duke of Lancaster, and son of Edward III., was a prince of distinguished valour and prudence, and a patron of the poet Chaucer. Born 1340; died 1399.

JOHN OF GOD (St.), was born of obscure parents at Montemor-O-Novo, in Portugal, 8 March, 1495. Part of his youth was spent in keeping a rich man's flocks in Spain, and he then went into the army, after which he got his living by selling images and little books. At length he quitted the world in order to devote himself entirely to God in the care of the sick. With this pious design, he retired to the hospital at Grenada, there founded the Order of Charity, and died there 8 March, 1550. Pius V. approved his Order 1472. The religious of this Order are called by the Italians 'Fate Ben Fratelli,' because their founder was continually saying 'Do good, my brethren.' St. John was beatified by Urban VIII. 1630, and canonized by Alexander VIII. 1690.

JOHN OF HEXHAM, an Augustinian canon, prior of the house of his order at Hexham, flourished about 1160. His continuation of Simeon of Durham's History from 1130 to 1144 is printed in Twysden's 'Decem Scriptores.'

JOHN OF LEYDEN, a fanatic tailor, whose real name was John Boccold. In company with John Matthias, a baker of Haerlem, at the head of his followers, he seized Munster, assumed the offices of king and prophet, and began to reform the laws and remodel the government. At last he was taken and put to death, in the 28th year of his age, 13 Feb., 1536.

JOHN OF PARIS, a famous Dominican, doctor and professor of divinity at Paris, died 1304. He wrote a treatise 'De Regia Potestate et Papali,' &c.

JOHN OF SALISBURY, a learned Englishman, born 1110, was chosen bishop of Chartres in France 1177, and died 25 Oct., 1180. He wrote the Life of St. Thomas of Canterbury and other works, all of which were published at Oxford, 5 vols. 8vo., 1848.

JOHN OF UDINO, an Italian painter, one of Raffaele's pupils, died at Rome 1564.

JOHNES, THOMAS, was born at Ludlow, Shropshire, 1748, and educated at Oxford (M.A. 1783). He was elected M.P. for the borough of Cardigan; and appointed auditor for the principality of Wales, and colonel of the Caermarthenshire militia. In 1795 he was returned to parliament for Radnorshire. He built an elegant mansion at Hafod, Cardiganshire, which was destroyed by fire 1807. Mr. Johnes died 24 April, 1816. His publications are—A Cardiganshire Landlord's Advice to his Tenants; Palaye's Memoirs of Froissart, translated from the French; The Chronicles of Sir John Froissart; translation of De Joinville's Memoirs of St. Louis; Travels of Bertrand de la Brocquiere in Palestine; The Chronicles of Monstrelet, with notes.

JOHNSON, CHARLES, an English dramatist, born 1679; died 11 March, 1748.

JOHNSON, JOHN, a nonjuring divine, born at Frindsbury, Kent, 30 Dec., 1662. He went from King's School, Canterbury, to Magdalen College, Cambridge; but afterwards removed to a scholarship in Corpus Christi College (M.A. 1685). In 1687 he was collated to the vicarage of Boughton, in his native county, with which he held that of Herra Hill by sequestration. In 1697 he obtained the living of St. John, in the Isle of Thanet, to which the town of Margate belongs, and soon afterwards was presented to that of Appledore. In 1707 he was inducted to the vicarage of Cranbrook, where he died 15 Dec., 1725. His works are—Holy David and his old English Translations cleared, in a Paraphrase on the Psalter; The Clergyman's Vade Mecum, 2 vols.; The Propitiatory Oblation in the Eucharist; The Unbloody Sacrifice, 2 vols.; A collection of Ecclesiastical Laws, 2 vols.; Miscellaneous discourses and sermons, 2 vols.

JOHNSON, JOHN, LL.D., was educated at Caius College, Cambridge (LL.B. 1704; LL.D., 1803). He was presented in 1800 to the rectory of Yaxham, with Welborne, Norfolk, which he held till his death, 29 Sept., 1833. Dr. Johnson was a kinsman of the poet Cowper, the second edition of whose 'Homer' he published in 1802. He likewise published the 'Private Correspondence of William Cowper, with several of his most intimate friends,' a vols. 8vo., 1824.

JOHNSON, MAURICE, F.S.A., an antiquary, born at Spalding, Lincolnshire, and bred to the law in the Inner Temple; after which he settled at his native place, where he formed, in 1717, a literary society, whose object was to cultivate the knowledge of English antiquities. Died 6 Feb., 1755. He collected large memoirs for a History of Carausius; and some of his communications are in the collection of the Antiquarian Society.

JOHNSON, RICHARD, a classical critic, probably received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was head master of the grammar-school at Nottingham from 1707 till Oct., 1721, when he drowned himself in the meadows near that town. His works are—A Treatise of the Genders of Latin Nouns, 1703; Grammatical Commentaries, being an Apparatus to a new national Grammar, 1706; Defence of the preceding work, 1707; Cursus Equestris Nottinghamensis, Carmen, 1709; Additions and Emendations to the Grammatical Commentaries, 1718; Noctes Nottinghamicæ, or Cursory Objections against the Syntax of the common Grammar, 1718; Aristarchus Anti-Bentleianus. Quadragesima sex Bentleii Errores super Horatii Odarum, Lib. i. ostendens, 1719.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, a divine, was born in Warwickshire 1649. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and next at Trinity College, Cambridge, which he left without a degree. The only ecclesiastical preferment he ever obtained was the small rectory of Corringham, in Essex, where he did not reside, but settled in London, as a place more suited to his disposition for politics, which brought him acquainted with Lord William Russell, who made him his chaplain. In 1682 he printed a book, entitled 'Julian, the Apostate,' for which he was prosecuted in the King's Bench, and fined five hundred marks. After this he went on printing tracts against 'popery' and arbitrary power; especially in the reign of James II., for one of which, 'An Address to the Army,' he was degraded, condemned to the pillory, to pay a fine, and to be publicly whipped. After the Revolution his sentence was reversed by Parliament, and he was offered the deanery of Durham, which he refused, as an unequal reward for his services. He wanted a bishopric, for which he was ill-qualified; and therefore a pension was granted him instead of it, and another for his son. Died May, 1703. His works were published in 1710, folio.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, an actor and dramatist, was born in Cheshire about 1705; died 1773. His best known piece is 'Hurlotrumbo, or the Supernatural, a Comedy.'

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, LL.D., an illustrious writer, born 18 Sept., 1709, at Lichfield, where his father, Michael Johnson, was a bookseller. He received his education at the grammar-school of his native city, and next at Stourbridge, from whence he was sent to Pembroke College, Oxford, which he left (1731) without a degree. After being an usher in the school at Market Bosworth, he removed to Birmingham, where he translated 'Lobo's Voyage to Abyssinia;' but soon returned to Lichfield, and married a widow lady named Porter. He now opened a school at Edial, but dropped it for want of encouragement; and in 1737 visited London, where he formed an acquaintance with Cave, the publisher of the Gentleman's Magazine. In 1738 appeared his poem of 'London,' which, though published without the name of the author, had a rapid sale, and gained the approbation of Pope. In 1740 he began the parliamentary debates in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' and continued them for two or three years. The next important publication of Johnson's was the 'Life of Richard Savage,' with whom he had lived on terms of intimacy. In 1745 came out 'Observations on Macbeth;' at the close of which he announced a new edition of Shakspeare. From this design he was for the present called off to the greater undertaking of an English Dictionary, which he began in 1747 and ended in 1755. While this work was in progress, he published his 'Rambler,' which alone would have eternized his name. In 1751 he was imposed upon by the fraud of Lauder; but when the cheat was discovered, Johnson was one of the first to expose it. The year following he was deeply affected by the loss of his wife, to whose memory he paid a feeling tribute of respect, in a discourse which he composed on her death. Previous to the publication of his Dictionary, the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of master of arts by diploma. In 1758 he wrote 'The Idler,' in a newspaper called 'The Universal Chronicle;' and the next year his 'Rasselas,' which he published to defray the funeral and debts of his mother. Soon after the accession of George III., a pension was bestowed upon our author of three hundred a-year; and in 1765 the university of Dublin sent him the honorary degree of doctor of laws. The same year he published his edition of Shakspeare. In 1767 Dr. Johnson had an interesting conversation with his royal patron at the queen's palace, when the king was pleased to pay him a very handsome compliment on the excellence of his works. In 1770 he printed a pamphlet called 'False Alarm,' occasioned by the affair of Wilkes; but he gained greater credit by his political tract, entitled 'Thoughts on the late Transactions respecting Falkland's Islands.' In 1773 he made a tour into the Western Isles of Scotland, of which he published a beautiful narrative, though some were indignant at his observations on Ossian. This was followed by his 'Taxation no Tyranny,' written against the American insurgents. Shortly after this last publication, the author was honoured with his doctor's degree by the university of Oxford. He next undertook to write biographical prefaces for an edition of the poets; and in 1781 these lives were collected, and printed in a separate form. This was his last publication, and it was the setting of the sun in full splendour. The great author died 13 Dec., 1784, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. A statue was erected to his memory, by the subscription of his friends, in St. Paul's cathedral. His works have been several times published in a collected form.

JOHNSON, THOMAS, M.D., a botanical writer, was born at Selby in Yorkshire. He was bred an apothecary in London; but in the Rebellion he took up arms for the king; and when at Oxford was created doctor of medicine. In the army he held the rank of colonel, and was killed in a skirmish Sept., 1644. His works are: Iter in Agram Cantianum; Ericetum Hamsteadianum; an enlarged edition of Gerard's Herbal; Mercurius Botanicus; De Thermis Bathonicis.

JOHNSON, THOMAS, a classical scholar, born at Stadhampton, Oxfordshire, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge; but afterwards he obtained a fellowship in Magdalene College. He also became fellow of Eton, and died about 1750. His publications are: Sophocles, 3 vols.; Gratius de Venatione cum notis; Cebetis Tabula; Novum Græcorum Epigrammatum selectus; Questiones Philosophicæ; An Essay on Moral Obligation. He was also one of the editors of 'Stephens's Thesaurus Linguae Latinae.'

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, an English Catholic priest, who had a controversy with the celebrated Richard Baxter upon certain points of religion. He published it in a book entitled 'Novelty repress'd' in a reply to Mr. Baxter's answer to William Johnson, 8vo., Paris, 1661. A rejoinder to this was published by Sherman, 1664.

JOHNSON, ARTHUR, M.D., was born 1587, at Caskieben, Aberdeenshire, and educated at Aberdeen and Padua. After an absence of twenty-four years, he returned to Aberdeen, of which university he became principal, till archbishop Laud invited him to London. He died at Oxford, 1641. Dr. Johnson was an excellent Latin poet, as appears from his 'Epigrams;' version of the Psalms; and the 'Deliciæ Poëtarum Scotticorum,' of which he was the editor.

JOHNSON, CHARLES, a novelist, was born in Ireland, and bred to the bar; but being excessively deaf he was compelled to relinquish that profession. In 1760 he published 'Chrysal, or the adventures of a Guinea;' a political romance, in which all the characters and scenes were drawn from real life. This was followed by some others of a similar description, as 'The Reverie, or a Flight to the Paradise of Fools;' 'The History of Arbaces, Prince of Bctis;' the Pilgrim, or a Picture of Life; and the 'History of John Juniper,

JOHNSTONE.

Esq., alias Juniper Jack.' In 1782 the author went to India, and died there about 1800.

JOHNSTONE, JAMES FINLAY WEIR, a native of Paisley, studied in the university of Glasgow, and in 1825 opened a school at Durham. Five years later he married a lady of fortune, and being thus possessed of a competent income, he resolved to gratify his taste for chemistry. For this purpose he chose Berzelius as his preceptor, and visited Sweden to study under that celebrated man. On the foundation of the university of Durham (1833), the readership in chemistry and mineralogy was bestowed on Mr. Johnstone, who held it till his death on 18 Sept., 1855, aged 58. His writings relate for the most part to the chemistry of agriculture, but the most attractive of his compositions is 'The Chemistry of Common Life,' 2 vols., 1854-5.

JOHNSTONE, JOHN, M.D., a naturalist, born at Sambter, in Poland, 1603. He came to England in 1622, and next went to Scotland, where he studied at St. Andrew's. From thence he removed to Leyden, and while there took his doctor's degree, which honour was also conferred on him by the university of Cambridge. Died June, 1675. His works are: Thaumatographia naturalis in classes decem divisa; Hist. de Piscibus et Cetis; Hist. Naturalis de Quadrupedibus; Hist. Nat. de Insectibus; Hist. Nat. de Avibus; Syn-tagma Dendrologicum; Dendrographia.

JOHNSTONE, JOHN, M.D., a surgeon and naturalist of Berwick-on-Tweed, died 30 July, 1855, aged 57. Besides numerous papers in the transactions of learned societies, he wrote A History of British Zoophytes (1838); A History of British Sponges and Lithophytes, 1842; An Introduction to Conchology, 1850; and The Botany of the Eastern Borders.

JOHNSTONE, WILLIAM, a Scotch Jesuit, born in or about 1572. He entered the Society 1588, became an eminent professor of philosophy and divinity, and died 19 Sept., 1609. He was author of 'Historia Sleidani ab Heresi extersa;' and a commentary on Isaiah. MS.

JOHNSTONE, BRYCE, D.D., a Scotch divine and theological writer, born at Annan, 1747, and died 1805.

JOHNSTONE, the CHEVALIER DE, an adherent of the Stuart family, was born at Edinburgh 1720. He took an active part in the Rebellion of 1745, and afterwards retired to France, where he died about 1800. His 'History of the Rebellion in 1745 and 1746, translated from a French MS., originally deposited in the Scots College at Paris,' was published at London 1820.

JOHNSTONE, GEORGE, one of the commissioners sent with Lord Carlisle and Mr. Eden to treat with the Americans during the war, was the son of a Scotch baronet. He was brought up to the sea service, and in 1763, appointed governor of West Florida. He, after his return to England, sat in Parliament for Cockermonth and Appleby, and fought a duel with Lord George Germaine, in consequence of some reflections made in Parliament on his conduct. He also distinguished himself by his zeal in the affairs of the East India Company, and for his attacks on Lord Clive. He was author of 'Thoughts on our Acquisitions in the East Indies, particularly in Bengal.' Died 24 May, 1787.

JOHNSTONE, JAMES, M.D., was born at Annan in 1730. He studied at Edinburgh and Paris, after

Which he settled at Kidderminster, where he became known by his treatment of a malignant fever that raged there some years, and of which he published an account. In this he first made known the power of mineral acid vapour to destroy febrile contagion. From Kidderminster he removed to Worcester, where he died 28 April, 1802. Dr. Johnstone, in some papers communicated to the Royal Society, stated a peculiar doctrine concerning the ganglions of the nerves.

JOHNSTONE, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., was the fourth son of the preceding, and received his education at Merton College, Oxford. For upwards of forty years he practised as a physician at Birmingham, where he died 28 Dec., 1836, aged 68. He published some treatises on subjects connected with his profession, but his principal literary undertaking is 'The Works of Samuel Parr, LL.D., with Memoirs of his Life and Writings, and a selection from his Correspondence,' 8 vols. 8vo., 1828.

JOHNSTONE, JOHN HENRY, a comic actor and vocalist, born in Tipperary 1750. After acquiring a reputation in Ireland he came in 1783 to London, where he represented Irish characters with great success. Died 26 Dec., 1828.

JOINVILLE, JEAN, Sieur DE, a French statesman, senechal of Champagne, and one of the lords of the court of Louis IX., died about 1318, aged 90. His 'History of St. Louis' has been translated into English by Johnes.

JOLY, CLAUDE, was born at Paris 2 Feb., 1607. He was canon and precentor of the cathedral of his native city, and died there 15 Jan., 1700. He wrote 'A Collection of Maxims for the Education of a Prince,' which gave great offence, and was burnt by the hangman. The author, however, republished it with an addition, called 'Codicil D'Or, or the Golden Codicil.' He is not to be confounded with his nephew, Guy Joly, king's councillor at the Chatelet, and secretary to Cardinal de Retz. He left memoirs from 1648 to 1665, and other works.

JOMARD, EDMÉ FRANÇOIS, a French geographer, archæologist, and orientalist, born at Versailles 20 Nov., 1777; died 28 Sept., 1862.

JOMELLI, NICHOLAS, an Italian musical composer, who was for some time in the service of the duke of Wurtemberg. He was born at Avellino, near Naples, 1714, and died 28 Aug., 1774.

JONÆ, ANGRIM, a native of Iceland, eminent as an astronomer and antiquary, was born at Widesal 1568; and died 1648.

JONAS, JUSTUS, one of the reformers, was born at Northausen, in Thuringia, 5 June, 1493, and after promoting the cause of the reformation at Wuttemberg and Halle, died pastor of Eisleid 9 Oct., 1555. Jonas was very intimate with Luther, who expired in his arms. He wrote against clerical celibacy, private niasses, &c.

JONES, EDWARD, an eminent Welsh harpist, born in Merionethshire 1752; died in London 18 April, 1824. He was author of 'Musical and Poetical Relics of the Welsh Bards,' 1784, and again 1794; 'Bardic Museum of Primitive British Literature,' 1802.

JONES, ERNEST, an English politician, poet, and journalist, was born 25 Jan., 1819, at Berlin, being the son of Major Charles Jones, enquiry to the Duke of Cumberland, who became King of Hanover, under the title of Ernest I. Major Jones bought an estate in Holstein, and remained there with his family till 1838. His son Ernest, when very young, composed a number of poems, which were afterwards published at Hamburg. At eleven years of age he disappeared from home, and was found with a bundle under his arm trudging across Lauenberg, to 'help the Poles,' who were then in insurrection. Later he achieved some distinction at the College of St. Michael, Luneberg. In 1838 Major Jones removed to England, and in 1841 young Ernest was presented to the Queen by the Duke of Beaufort. In this year appeared the first of his larger works, a romance, entitled 'The Wood Spirit,' published anonymously. Some songs and poems followed; and he was also a contributor to the 'Metropolitan,' and other magazines. In 1844 he was called to the bar at the Middle Temple, and commenced what promised to be a successful professional career on the Northern Circuit, but in an evil hour for his position and prospects as a barrister, he joined the Chartists (1845), and rapidly became their leader. To advocate their cause, he not only gave up what promised to be a good and increasing practice at the bar, but refused to accept any emolument for his services, and spent large sums in supporting what he believed to be the interests of the people. He even voluntarily surrendered a fortune of nearly £2,000 a year, which was left to him on condition that he would abandon the Chartist cause. Both on the platform and in the press he was indefatigable in urging the claims of the political section to which he belonged. From time to time he issued the 'Labourer,' 'Notes of the People,' and other periodicals; and he established also the 'People's Paper,' which remained the organ of the Chartists for eight years. In 1847 he unsuccessfully contested Halifax, and in the following year the alarm produced by his seditious harangues at Manchester led to his apprehension. He was convicted, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. For nineteen months he was deprived of the use of pens, ink, and paper; still, though his sufferings were very severe, he refused to petition for a commutation of the sentence. His own published account of the needless severity of his treatment provoked a good deal of indignation. While in prison he composed an epic, published after his release in 1851, entitled 'The Revolt of Hindostan,' written with his blood on the leaves of the prison prayer-books. In 1853 Mr. Jones unsuccessfully contested Nottingham, and in 1857 again tried his fortunes in that borough, but without avail. Meanwhile his name had come before the public as the author of several poems, and amongst these were 'The Battle Day,' 'The Painter of Florence,' 'The Emperor's Vigil,' 'Beldagon Church,' and 'Corayda.' After the extinction of Chartism he returned to his practice on the Northern Circuit. At the general election of 1868 he stood as the third Liberal candidate for Manchester, but, although he received 10,746 votes, he was not elected. On the 22nd and 23rd Jan., 1869, in the novel experiment of the test ballot in that city, Mr. Jones received 7,282 votes, against 4,133 recorded for Mr. Milner Gibson, as the candidate for the Liberal party, should Mr. Birley, the Conservative member, be unseated on petition. Only three days later, however, Mr. Jones died at his residence in Wellington Street, Higher Broughton, Manchester, 26 Jan., 1869.

JONES, GEORGE, an English painter, born 1786, being the son of John Jones, a mezzotint engraver of repute. Admitted a student of the Royal Academy 1801, he continued to devote himself to painting till the Peninsular war broke out, when he obtained a commission in a militia regiment, and having attained the rank of captain, volunteered with his company to join the troops then in Spain. He served under Wellington, and formed part of the army of occupation in Paris, 1815. On the termination of the war Mr. Jones resumed practice as a painter; was elected an associate of the Academy 1822, and became R.A. 1824. William IV. appointed him librarian to the Academy, a post which he held from 1834 till 1840, resigning it to accept the office of keeper, which he relinquished in 1850. At the commencement of his career as an artist his pictures consisted chiefly of views of English and continental towns, but afterwards he chose battle-scenes, and later in life representations of Old Testament narrative. The last are principally drawings done in sepia. Among his best pictures are 'The Battle of Waterloo,' which he painted several times; 'The Battle of Vittoria'; 'The Battle of Borodino'; 'The Passing of the Catholic Relief Bill'; 'The Opening of New London Bridge.' Mr. Jones was also the author of a Life of Chantry. He died in London 19 Sept., 1860.

JONES, GRIFFITH, rector of Llandowror, in Wales, and the first projector of the Welsh Circulating Schools, was born at Cŷrhedin, Caermarthen-shire 1683, and died 8 April, 1761, leaving several religious works in English and Welsh.

JONES, HENRY, was born at Drogheda, in Ireland, about 1720, and bred a bricklayer. Having a turn for poetry, he wrote some pieces, which procured him the patronage of the Earl of Chesterfield, when that nobleman was Lord-Lieutenant, 1745. Jones, thus supported, came to England, and published a volume of poems, which was encouraged by a large list of subscribers. He also had interest enough to bring out his tragedy of the 'Earl of Essex,' but want of prudence kept him poor, and he died in a garret April, 1770. His last publication was entitled 'Vectis, or the Isle of Wight,' a poem. He also left an unfinished tragedy called 'The Cave of Idra,' which Hibernian published as his own, under another title.

JONES, INIGO, a celebrated architect, born in London about 1572. He served his time to a joiner, but having a genius for painting, he was sent to Italy by a nobleman, and while there became known to the king of Denmark, who took him to Copenhagen. When that monarch visited his sister Anne, wife of James I., he brought Jones with him; and thus he obtained the situation of surveyor of the Board of Works, and that of a commissioner for repairing St. Paul's Cathedral. In the following reign he was much employed in preparing masques for the entertainment of the court, and in building the banqueting-house at Whitehall. But while thus engaged he fell under the displeasure of Ben Jonson, who exposed him on the stage, and wrote some bitter satires against him. Jones, however, acquired a good fortune, which was considerably lessened in the civil wars. He built the front of Wilton House, and several other structures, which do honour to his taste and genius. Died 21 July, 1652. At the command of James I. he made a survey of Stonehenge, which he pronounced to be a Roman temple, dedicated to Cælus. This discourse was printed in 1655, fol. Several of his designs have been published by Kent, Ware, and Leoni. A facsimile of his sketch book has also been published, and a Life of him by Peter Cunningham, with remarks by Mr. Planché on some of his sketches for masques and dramas, will be found in the 39th volume of the Shakespeare Society publications.

JONES, JEREMIAH, a nonconformist divine, born 1693. He received his education under his uncle, Mr. Samuel Jones, a dissenting minister at Tewkesbury, and the tutor of Bishops Butler, Horne, and Secker. Mr. Jeremiah Jones became minister of a congregation at Avening, in Gloucestershire, but his residence was at Nailsworth, where also he kept an academy. Though a deep scholar he was of facetious manners, and regularly attended a bowling party in his neighbourhood. He died in 1724. His works are: A Vindication of the former Part of St. Matthew's Gospel against Whiston; A new and full Method of settling the Canonical Authority of the New Testament, 3 vols. These have been reprinted at the Clarendon Press.

JONES, JOHN, M.D., a Welshman, is said to have studied at both our universities, and to have taken his doctor's degree at Cambridge. He was residing at Asple Hall, near Nottingham, 1572, and in Jan., 1572-3, at Kingmead, near Derby. He also appears to have repaired, for the purposes of practice, to Bath and Buxton, during the seasons at those places. He published the 'Diall of Agues,' 1566; 'The Bathes of Bathes Ayde,' 1572; 'The benefit of the ancient Bathes of Buckstones,' 1572; 'Galen's Bookes of Elementes,' 1574; 'Discourse of the naturall beginning of all growing and living things,' &c., 1574; 'The Arte and Science of preserving Bodie and Soule in Healtie. Wisedome, and Catholike Religion,' 1579.—Athen. Cantab.

JONES, JOHN, a Franciscan friar, who was executed in London, 1598. He was a native of Clenock, Carmarvonshire, and was also known by the names of Buckley, and of Godfrey Maurice.

JONES, JOHN, D.D., a Benedictine monk, born in London, 1575, and educated at Merchant Taylor's School, from whence he was elected to St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. On being converted to the Catholic religion, he went to Spain, and joined the order of St. Benedict, taking in religion the name of Leander à Sancto Martino. He was also created D.D. Subsequently he was appointed professor of Hebrew and divinity at Douay, where also he was chosen prior of the monastery, and president of the English congregation. Died 17 Dec., 1636. His publications are:—'Sacra Ars Memoriae, ad Scripturas Divinas in promptu habendas, memoriterque descendens accommodata,' 8vo., Douay, 1623; 'Conciliatio Locorum Communium totius Scripturæ,' Douay, 1623; 'Biblia Sacra cum Glossa Interlineari,' 6 vols. folio; 'Opera Ludovici Blossii; Arnobius contra Gentes, cum notis,' Douay, 1634. In collaboration with Dr. Clement Reyner he compiled the valuable work entitled 'Apostolatus Benedictinorum,' 1626.

JONES, JOHN, was born at Caermarthen 1700. He took his degrees in arts at Worcester College, Oxford, after which he was successively vicar of Alconbury, rector of Boulne-Hurst, in Bedfordshire, and vicar of Hitchin, with which last he held the curacy of Welwyn under Dr. Young. He was killed by a fall from his horse about 1770. His work entitled 'Free and Candid Disquisitions on the Church of England,' written on the side of Arianism, occasioned a sharp controversy in 1750.

JONES.

JONES, JOHN, LL.D., a Unitarian minister, born at Llandovery, Caermarthenshire, 1768. From the grammar school at Brecon he removed to the New College, Hackney, where he remained six years, being a favourite pupil of Gilbert Wakefield. Here also he gained the friendship and patronage of Dr. Abraham Rees, whose daughter he afterwards married. In 1793 he was appointed classical and mathematical tutor in the Welsh academy at Swansea, where he remained three years. He next officiated to Unitarian congregations at Plymouth and Halifax, but finally settled in London, where he applied himself to literary pursuits and private tuition. Died 10 Jan., 1827. Of his theological works, the most remarkable are 'Ecclesiastical Researches, or Philo and Josephus proved to be historians and apologists of Christ, and followers of His Gospel,' and 'A Series of Important Facts demonstrating the Truth of the Christian Religion, drawn from the writings of its friends and enemies in the first and second centuries.' He likewise published some useful works intended to facilitate the study of the classical languages. The principal of these is 'A Greek and English Lexicon,' 1823; 2nd edit., 1825.

JONES, JOHN EDWARD, a sculptor of London, died in Dublin 25 July, 1862, aged 56.

JONES, JOHN PAUL, a commodore in the United States navy, was born at Arbigland, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, 6 July, 1747. After being engaged in the English merchant service he settled in America, where he obtained a commission from Congress 1775, being made a captain of marines the next year. Well acquainted with the coasts of Ireland and Scotland, he came to Europe to insist the trade of this country, and made a descent at Whitehaven, where he destroyed the shipping of the harbour, and afterwards on the estates of the earl of Selkirk, whose plate and furniture he carried away in triumph. After taking the Drake, sloop of war, off Carrickfergus, he retired to Brest, and with a fresh reinforcement again scoured the Irish Sea, and advancing round the island, took the Serapis frigate, and the Countess of Scarborough, armed ship, after a gallant action off Flamborough Head. These exploits made him a favourite, not only in America, but in France, where the king presented him with a handsome gold-hilted sword. After the peace he was for a time in the service of Russia. He died at Paris 18 July, 1792.

JONES, OWEN, a Welsh antiquary, born in Denbighshire 1741. In early life he was sent to London, where he was taken into the employment of a firm of furriers in Thames Street, to whose business he eventually succeeded, and he continued to carry it on with credit until his death, on 26 Sept., 1814. An ardent lover of the language and literature of his own native country, he published the 'Myvriam Archæology of Wales,' 3 vols., 1801-7, which contains all the most distinguished productions of Welsh writers, from the 5th to the close of the 13th century. He also procured transcripts of ancient Welsh poetry, subsequent to the 13th century, making in all fifty 4to. vols., which are now in the British Museum. Mr. Jones also commenced a miscellany, the 'Greal,' of which one vol. was completed 1805; published the poems of Davydd ab Gwilym; and founded the Gwyneddigion Society of London.—Williams.

JONES, PAUL. See JONES, JOHN PAUL.

JONES.

JONES, RICE, of Blaenau, co. Merioneth, a Welsh poet, born 1713; died 14 Feb., 1801.

JONES, RICHARD, was born in Denbighshire 1603, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1655 he published, in his native language, a work containing with admirable brevity all the books and chapters of the Bible. It is entitled 'Gemma Cambriam, seu Mnemonica Bibliorum; Peri y Cymro, neu Gviadur y Beibl.' The author died in Ireland, but when is not known.

JONES, THOMAS, a native of Lancashire; educated at Cambridge; became archbishop of Dublin 1605; and died 1619.

JONES, THOMAS, an eminent divine, was born at Beriew, Montgomeryshire, 23 June, 1756. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, from which he removed to Trinity College, where he obtained a fellowship, and became a distinguished tutor, especially in mathematics. Died 18 July, 1807. The only things he published were, 'A Sermon on Duelling'; and 'An Address to the Volunteers of Montgomeryshire.'

JONES, WILLIAM, a mathematician, born 1680, in the island of Anglesey. He became early in life a schoolmaster in a ship of war; after which he settled in London, where he published 'A Treatise on Navigation;' and another entitled 'Synopsis Palmariorum Matheseos, or a new introduction to the Mathematics,' 1706. These works procured him the friendship of several men of science, particularly Newton and Halley. He was also chosen mathematical tutor to Lord Macclesfield, who procured for him a sinecure place; and Lord Hardwicke made him secretary of the peace. Died July, 1749. Besides the above works he has some papers in the Philosophical Transactions; and he published, from Newton's manuscripts, 'Analysis per quantum Series, Fluxiones, ac Differentias.' He was father of Sir William Jones.

JONES, WILLIAM, a divine, born at Lowick, Northumberland, 30 July, 1726. He was educated at the Charterhouse, from whence he removed to University College, Oxford, where he contracted that friendship with Mr. Horne, afterwards bishop of Norwich, which lasted through life. On leaving the university he became curate of Finedon, Northamptonshire, and next of Wadenhoe, in the same county, where he wrote his 'Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity,' which has gone through numerous editions. In 1762 he published 'An Essay on the First Principles of Natural Philosophy,' which so pleased Lord Bute, that he authorised him to purchase in his name any instruments that he might want. In 1764 the archbishop of Canterbury gave him the vicarage of Betersden, Kent, to which was afterwards added the rectory of Puckley. He next obtained the perpetual curacy of Nayland, in Suffolk; soon after which he exchanged Puckley for Paston, in Northamptonshire. When the French revolution gave birth to seditious movements in this country, Mr. Jones printed 'A Letter from Thomas Bull to his brother John,' which had an admirable effect. He was also concerned in establishing the British Critic; and he published a collection of excellent tracts, under the title of 'The Scholar armed against the Errors of the Times.' On the death of his friend, Bishop Horne, to whom he had been chaplain, he paid an affectionate tribute to his memor in an account of his life. In 1798 Archbishop Cornwallis presented him to the sinecure rectory of Hollingbourn, in Kent, which he did not long enjoy; for the loss of his wife was followed by a paralytic stroke, and he died 6 Feb., 1800. His works have been collected and published, in 12 vols. 8vo.

JONES, Sir WILLIAM, son of William Jones, the mathematician, mentioned above, was born 23 Sept., 1746. He was educated at Harrow School, from whence, at the age of eighteen, he went to University College, Oxford, where he had only been a few months when he was invited to be private tutor to Lord Althorp, afterwards Earl Spencer, with whom he made a tour on the Continent. In 1766 he obtained a fellowship, and about this time began his Commentaries on Asiatic Poetry, in imitation of Bishop Lowth's lectures. While thus engaged he was called to translate the life of Nadir Shah, from an eastern manuscript brought to England by the king of Denmark. This he executed in French; but when published he received no remuneration for his extraordinary labour, which no other man in the kingdom could have accomplished. In 1770 he was admitted of the Middle Temple; and in 1773 he took his master's degree at Oxford. In 1776 he was appointed a commissioner of bankrupts by Lord Bathurst; but his ambition was to obtain a judicial seat in Bengal, in which object he at last succeeded in 1783, when he received the honour of knighthood. Before he left England he married Miss Shipley, daughter of the bishop of St. Asaph; and one of his first objects after his arrival at Calcutta was to institute a society for the cultivation of oriental literature and science in general. This association took place in 1784, and Sir William Jones was chosen the first president. The early volumes of the 'Asiatic Researches' exhibit abundant testimonies of his diligence in this capacity, and of his varied attainments. Unfortunately, however, for the world of letters, his career was comparatively but short, for being attacked with an inflammation of the liver, of which he had no suspicion, it carried him off rather suddenly 27 April, 1794. His works were published uniformly in 6 vols. 4to., 1799; and subsequently an edition in 13 vols., with the life of the author, by Lord Teignmouth, was printed (1807). A monument was erected to his memory in St. Paul's, and also a statue at Bengal, both by order of the company. In University College, likewise, a monument, executed by Flaxman, was placed at the expense of Lady Jones. The learning of this great scholar was not confined to the ancient and modern languages, of which he understood at least thirteen; but he had a thorough knowledge of the law, he was a good mathematician, conversant with natural history, and an elegant poet.

JONG, LUDOLPH VON, a Dutch painter, born 1626; died 1697.

JONIN, GILBERT, a French Jesuit, and Latin poet, born in Auvergne 1596; died at Tournon 9 March, 1638.

JONSIUS, or JONSENIUS, JOHN, was born 1624, at Flensburg, in the duchy of Schleswig. After teaching at Königsberg and Flensburg he went to Frankfort, as sub-rector of the university, where he died 1659. His principal work is 'De Scriptoribus Historiæ Philosophicæ.'

JONSON, BENJAMIN, was born in Westminster

11 June, 1574, about a month after the death of his father, who was a clergyman. Ben, as he was familiarly called, had his education at Westminster School, but was taken from thence to work at the business of his father-in-law, who was a bricklayer. This occupation, however, was so disagreeable to him, that he ran away, and served in the English army in Flanders. On his return he resumed his studies, and went to Cambridge; but, from the poverty of his circumstances, he was obliged to leave the university and take to the stage. At first he was not very successful, either as an actor or an author; and in the former capacity, having the misfortune to kill another player in a duel, he narrowly escaped the gallows. While in confinement he was converted to the Catholic religion, in which he continued some years. On his release he married, and recommenced writing for the stage, to which he was encouraged by Shakspeare, who performed in one of his pieces. In 1598 came out his comedy of 'Every Man in his Humour,' which was followed by a new play every year, till the reign of James the First, when he was employed in the masques and entertainments at court. But, regardless of prudence, Ben joined Chapman and Marston in writing the comedy of 'Eastward Hoe,' which reflected so strongly on the Scotch nation that the authors were sent to prison. Jonson, on his release, made atonement for his indiscretion, by flattering the monarch; who in return honoured him with marks of his favour. In 1613 he went to Paris, where he told Cardinal Perron that his translation of Virgil was good for nothing. About this time, also, began his quarrel with Inigo Jones, towards whom he behaved with savage scurrility, and made him the object of ridicule in the comedy of 'Bartholomew Fair.' He was now at the height of popularity, and the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of master of arts; and, in 1616, he obtained a pension of one hundred marks, which was made one hundred pounds by King Charles; who also granted him a tierce of Canary wine yearly out of his majesty's cellars. Want of economy, however, kept him constantly poor; although, in addition to the royal bounty, he had a pension from the city. He died 16 Aug., 1637, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Besides his comedies, the best of which are the 'Alchymist,' 'Epicene,' and 'Every Man in his Humour,' he wrote some indifferent tragedies; poems; an 'English Grammar;' and 'Discoveries.' The best edition of his works is that of William Gifford, 9 vols. 8vo., 1816.

JORDAENS, JACOB, an historical and portrait-painter, born at Antwerp 1594; died 16 Oct., 1678. His works are very numerous.

JORDAN, CAMILLE, a French political orator, member of the Council of Five Hundred, of the Chamber of Deputies, and of the Council of State, was born at Lyons 11 Jan., 1771, and died 19 May, 1821. During the Hundred Days he figured among the most remarkable orators in the Chamber of Representatives.

JORDAN, CHARLES STEPHEN, a native of Berlin, was honoured with the friendship of the prince of Prussia, afterwards Frederick the Great, who bestowed on him several lucrative appointments. He wrote 'L'Histoire d'un Voyage Littéraire' in France, England, and Holland; 'Un Recueil de Littérature, de Philosophie, et d'Histoire;' 'Vie de M. Lacroze. His correspondence with Frederick the Great is printed in the 10th vol. of that monarch's posthumous works. Born 27 Aug., 1700; died 24 May, 1745.

JORDAN, Mrs. DOROTHEA, an actress, whose real name was Bland, was born at Waterford about 1762. She made her début at the Dublin stage, and then joined the Yorkshire company of Tate Wilkinson at Leeds. Here she soon acquired such popularity that she was engaged at Drury Lane, with a salary of £4 a week. Her inimitable acting of 'Peggy' in 'The Country Girl' drew crowded houses, and her salary was doubled, then trebled, while she was allowed two benets during the season. She continued to act at the principal metropolitan and provincial theatres till 1790, about which time she formed a connection with the duke of Clarence, afterwards William IV., by whom she had ten children. This connection was suddenly broken off in 1811. Mrs. Jordan afterwards returned to the stage, and died in great poverty and distress at St. Cloud 5 July, 1816.

JORDANO. See GIORDANO.

JORDEN, EDWARD, M.D., was a native of High Halden, Kent. He took his degree at Padua, and, on his return, practised first in London, and afterwards at Bath, where he died in Jan., 1632-3, aged 63. He wrote A Discourse on the Bath Waters, and some chemical works.

JORTIN, JOHN, D.D., was born in the parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, London, 23 Oct., 1698, and educated at the Charterhouse, from whence he removed to Jesus College, Cambridge. While an undergraduate he was employed in making extracts from Eustathius for Pope, who never made any inquiry after him. He took his bachelor's degree in 1719, and soon after was elected to a fellowship. In 1722 he took his master's degree, and, the same year, published some Latin poems, under the title of 'Lusus Poeticus.' In 1727 he was presented to the college living of Swavesey, which he resigned the year following, and settled in London, where he officiated in different chapels till 1751, when Archbishop Herring presented him to the rectory of St. Dunstan-in-the-East. The same prelate conferred on him the degree of D.D., 1755. Previous to this he had published three volumes of 'Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.' The remaining volumes were printed after his death. In 1755 he published 'Six Dissertations upon different Subjects.' For the last of these, 'On the State of the Dead, as described by Homer and Virgil,' the author was violently attacked by Dr. Hurd, in what he called 'A seventh Dissertation on the Delicacy of Friendship,' but Jortin scorned to make any reply. In 1758 appeared the first volume of his 'Life of Erasmus,' and the second two years afterwards. In 1762 Bishop Osbaldeston, of London, made him his domestic chaplain, gave him a prebend of St. Paul's, and the living of Kensington, where he died Sept. 5, 1770. Besides the works already mentioned, he published—'Miscellaneous Observations upon Authors, Ancient and Modern;' Discourses concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion; Remarks upon Spenser's Poems. After his death were printed seven volumes of his sermons, and two of 'Critical Remarks and Observations.' All his works have been collected in a uniform edition.

JOSEPH I., fifteenth emperor of the House of Austria, was born 1678; crowned king of Hungary 1687; elected king of the Romans 1690; succeeded to the empire of Germany 1705; died 17 April, 1711.

JOUBERT.

JOSEPH II., born 1741, was elected king of the Romans 1764, and crowned emperor of Germany the following year. He died 20 Feb., 1790.

JOSEPH EMANUEL, king of Portugal, was born 1714; succeeded John V., his brother, 1750; died 23 Feb., 1777.

JOSEPH, a Capuchin friar, commonly called Father Joseph, was born at Paris 4 Nov., 1577, and died 18 Dec., 1638. He founded the order of Benedictine Nuns of Calvary.

JOSEPH OF EXETER, or Josephus Iscanus, a writer of the twelfth century, so called from the place of his birth. He was an ecclesiastic, and accompanied Archbishop Baldwin to the Holy Land, where he was in great favour with Richard I. He afterwards became archbishop of Bordeaux, where he died, and was buried in the cathedral. He wrote two poems in Latin heroics, the one on the Trojan War, and the other entitled 'Antiochensis,' or the Crusade.

JOSEPHINE (MARIE JOSEPH ROSE TASCHER DE LA PAGÉRIE), empress of the French, was born at Trois Ilets (Martinique), 24 June, 1763. She was daughter of Count Tascher de la Pagerie, a captain in the royal navy, and married first the Count de Beauharnais, who perished on the scaffold. In 1796 she became the wife of General Bonaparte, and in 1804 she was crowned empress. She bore no heir to the emperor, who in consequence caused a divorce to take place in 1809. Josephine thereupon retired to Malmaison, where she died 29 May, 1814, leaving a son, the Prince Eugene Beauharnais, by her first marriage. See BEAUHARNAIS.

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS, the Jewish historian, was born at Jerusalem of the Amsonen family, about A.D. 37. He made so quick a progress in learning that the chief priests paid deference to his judgment when he was no more than sixteen. After studying under Banun, a celebrated hermit, he joined the sect of the Pharisees. He took up arms in the defence of his country, and distinguished himself at the siege of Joppa, where he was taken prisoner by Vespasian, who would have put him to death, had it not been for the intercession of Titus. He now visited Alexandria, and studied philosophy; after which he accompanied his patron, Titus, to Rome, of which city he was made free, and died there in the reign of Domitian. The 'History of the Jewish War and Destruction of Jerusalem' was written at the command of Vespasian; and independently of its interest as a faithful and pathetic narrative of events, which the author witnessed in person, it is a noble testimony to the truth of the Christian religion. His 'Jewish Antiquities' is also a valuable work; besides which he wrote his own Memoirs, and two books against Apion, a great adversary of the Jews. The best edition of this author is that of Hudson, Oxon, 2 vols. fol. Josephus has been translated into English by L'Estrange and Whiston.

JOUBERT, BARTHÉLEMI CATHERINE, a French general, born 1769. He was second in command under Bonaparte in the conquest of Italy, and was slain at the battle of Novi 15 Aug., 1799.

JOUBERT, FRANÇOIS, a French Jansenist divine, born at Montpellier 12 Oct., 1689; died 29 Dec., 1763.

JOUBERT, LAURENT, a French medical writer, professor at Montpellier, and chancellor of the university there, was born at Valence (Dauphiné) 1529; died 21 Oct., 1583.

JOUFFROY D'ABBANS.

JOUFFROY D'ABBANS, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS DOROTHÉE, Marquis DE, was born in Franche Comté about 1751, and prior to the Revolution was a captain of infantry. Being at Paris 1775, he saw the famous steam-engine called the 'pompe à feu de Chaillot,' and at once conceived the idea of applying steam to navigation. He made his first experiment on the river Doubs, 1776, and renewed it with success 1783, on the Saône at Lyons; but being without fortune or influence, he was unable to follow up his invention, which shortly afterwards raised Fulton to fortune and fame. Nevertheless, Jouffroy refused to carry his discovery to a foreign country. A company formed at Paris (1816) at last furnished him with the means of carrying out his plans, and the steamboat 'Charles Philippe' was launched on the Seine (30 March, 1816), but a concurrence of unfortunate circumstances prevented the success of the enterprise. In contradiction to the opinion of the English and Americans, who attribute to Fulton the invention of the steamboat, the Academy of Sciences solemnly declared in 1840 that the steamboats then in use were but imitations of the vessel launched on the Saône by Jouffroy in 1783. Jouffroy died at the Invalides 1832.

JOUFFROY, JOHN DE, Joffredus, a French cardinal, grand almoner to Louis XI., was born at Luxeuil about 1412; died 24 Nov., 1473. It was at his solicitation that Louis XI. abolished the Pragmatic Sanction.

JOUFFROY, THÉODORE SIMON, a French philosopher, the greatest moralist of the eclectic school, was born at Les Pontets (Franche Comté) 6 July, 1796, and died at Paris 4 Feb., 1842. His numerous publications include French translations of Dugald Stewart's Sketches of Moral Philosophy, and of the works of Thomas Reid, both accompanied by remarkable prefaces; Course of Natural Law; and Philosophical Miscellanies.

JOUKDAIN, AMABLE BRECHILLET, an oriental scholar, was born 1788. He was placed with a notary, but being related to Anquetil Duperron, he quitted the law to study the eastern languages, in which he made such progress, that Langles obtained for him the place of assistant-secretary in that department. Died 19 Feb., 1818. He enriched the Moniteur with curious dissertations, assisted Michaud in the 'History of the Crusades,' and obtained a prize from the Academy of Belles Lettres for a dissertation on those works of Aristotle, and the other Greek philosophers, for which we are indebted to the Arabs. At the time of his death he was engaged on a history of the rise and fall of the Barmecides.

JOUKDAN, JEAN BAPTISTE, Marshal of France, was born at Limoges 29 April, 1762. He served in America from the age of sixteen; was appointed (1791) commander of a battalion of volunteers; distinguished himself under Dumouriez, in Belgium; and became a general of division 1793. He acquired fresh fame at the battle of Hondchoote (8 Sept., 1793), but was dismissed from his command in consequence of his having displeased some of the members of the committee of public safety. However they shortly afterwards gave him the command of the army of the Moselle, and afterwards that of the army of the Sambre and Meuse. He captured Dinant and Charleroi, gained the celebrated battle of Fleurus (26 June, 1794), and succeeded in passing the Rhine Sept., 1795; but he then experienced some reverses, and in 1796 demanded his recall. In 1799 he passed the Rhine a second time at the head of the army of the Danube, but being defeated by Prince Charles, he was replaced by Massena. Nominated a member of the Council of Five Hundred (1797), he caused the law on the conscription to be passed. A sincere republican, he opposed the coup d'état of the 18 Brumaire, and was excluded from the Legislative body. Nevertheless he was charged with the administration of Piedmont 1800, and was president of the consulta of that country. Napoleon appointed him senator, and then marshal of the empire (1804), but left him without any important command. In 1814 he declared his adhesion to the forfeiture of the emperor, and was made a peer. After 1830 he was made governor of the Invalides, and this post he retained till his death 24 Nov., 1833.

JOUSSE, DANIEL, a French jurist, born at Orleans 10 Feb., 1704; died at Aug., 1781. He wrote many legal works.

JOUVANCY, or JOUVENCY, JOSEPH DE, a Jesuit, born at Paris 14 Sept., 1643; died at Rome 29 May, 1710. His works are—The History of his Order; Orations; De Ratione discendi et docendi; notes on the Latin Classics.

JOUVENET, JEAN, a French historical painter, born at Rouen 21 Aug., 1647; died at Paris 5 April, 1717.

JOVELLANOS, DON GASPAR MELCHIOR DE, a Spanish statesman, legist, dramatist, and miscellaneous writer, was born at Gijon, in the Asturias, 1749, and died 27 Nov., 1811.

JOVIANUS, FLAVIUS CLAUDIUS, born in Pannonia, of a noble family, 331; was elected emperor of Rome, after the death of Julian, 363; and died 17 Feb., 364.

JOVINIAN, a Milanese monk, and famous heresiarch of the 4th century, who maintained that fasting and other penitential works had no merit; that the virgin state was not superior to that of marriage; that Christ's body was only a phantasm; and that his mother did not remain a virgin after he was born. St. Augustine and St. Jerome wrote forcibly against him. He was condemned by Pope Symicus, and by a council which St. Ambrose held at Milan 390; and being at length banished by the Emperor Theodosius, and afterwards by the Emperor Honoratus, died miserably about 412.

JOVIUS, PAUL. See GIOVIO.

JOWETT, WILLIAM, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship (B.A. 1810; M.A. 1813). He was the first clergyman of the Church of England who volunteered (1813) for the foreign service of the Church Missionary Society. His field of labour was in the countries of the Mediterranean, and the fruits of his observation were published in his 'Christian Researches.' He was clerical secretary of the above-named society (1832-40), and for many years held the Sunday evening lectureship of St. Mary's, Aldermanbury. In 1821 he became minister of St. John's, Clapham, where he died 30 Feb., 1855, aged 68.

JOYCE, JEREMIAH, a Unitarian minister, died at Highgate 30 June, 1816, aged 52. He wrote several popular works on science, as 'Scientific Dialogues'; 'Dialogues in Chemistry'; 'Familiar Introduction to the Arts and Sciences.' He also superintended the 'Dictionary of Arts and Sciences' to which the name of Dr. Gregory was preixed.

JOYE, GEORGE, was born in Bedfordshire, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship (1517), which he was obliged to resign (1527), on account of his having embraced the principles of the Reformation. He then retired into Germany, where he was concerned in Tyndal's translation of the Bible. Died 1553. A list of his works is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.'

JOYNER, or LYDE, WILLIAM, a Catholic writer, born at Oxford April, 1622. He became a fellow of Magdalen College, but quitted it in 1644, and changed his religion. After an absence of forty-three years he was restored to his fellowship by James II., but did not enjoy it many months, when he was expelled. He was great uncle to Thomas Phillips, who wrote the Life of Cardinal Pole. Joyner died at Ickford, Bucks, 14 Sept., 1706. His works are—'The Roman Empress,' a comedy, 1670; 'Observations on the Life of Cardinal Pole,' 1686; and various Latin and English poems scattered in several books.

JUAN Y SANTACILIA, DON GEORGE, a Spanish mathematician and knight of Malta, was born at Orhuela 1712. In 1735 he was sent with Ulloa to Peru to measure a degree of the meridian, and determine the figure of the earth. On his return to Europe he was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. He died at Cadiz 21 June, 1774, leaving several Spanish treatises on naval affairs.

JUDA, LEO, one of the Reformers, was born in Alsatia 1482, and died in Switzerland 19 July, 1542. He appeared with Zwinglius at the Council of Zurich. His Latin Version of the Bible is joined to Vatable's 'Notes;' and he left other works.

JUDEX, MATTHEW, a Protestant divine, born at Dippoldiswalde, near Dresden, 21 Sept., 1528. He became professor of divinity at Jena, but being suspended by order of the duke of Saxony, he retired to Magdeburg, next to Weimar, and finally to Rostock, where he died 15 May, 1564. He had a share in the 'Centuries of Magdeburg;' and wrote a curious work 'De Typographiæ inventione,' 1566.

JUDSON, ADONIRAM, D.D., an American missionary to Burmah, was born 1788, and died 12 April, 1850. He embarked for the East in 1812, and was engaged for upwards of thirty-eight years in missionary work, chiefly in connection with the Baptist denomination. He translated the whole Bible into the language of Burmah, of which he also compiled a dictionary. A Life of him by Dr. F. Wayland was published 1853.

JUENIN, GASPARD, a French ecclesiastic, was born in 1650, at Varambon, in the diocese of Lyons. He taught divinity in several houses of the congregation of the Oratory, and died at Paris in 1713. His principal works are—A Treatise on the Sacraments, 2 vols.; Theological Institutions, 7 vols.

JUKES, JOSEPH BEETE, M.A., F.R.S., was born to Oct., 1811, and educated at the Free Grammar School at Wolverhampton, and at King Edward VI.'s School, Birmingham, whence he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1830). In 1830 he was appointed Geological Surveyor of the colony of Newfoundland, and returned to England in 1840. In 1842 he was appointed by the Admiralty naturalist to her Majesty's ship 'Fly,' then about to proceed on a surveying and exploring voyage to the shores of Australia and New Guinea, under the command of Captain F. P. Blackwood, R.N. In 1846 he was appointed to a post on the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, under Sir H. D. De La Beche, the Director-General. In 1850 he was transferred to Ireland as local director of that branch of the survey, and on the establishment of scientific lectureships in the Museum of Irish Industry under Sir Robert Kane, M.D., in 1854, he was also appointed lecturer on geology to that institution. He published many useful geological works, among which may be mentioned 'Sketch of the Physical Structure of Australia;' 'Popular Physical Geology;' 'Student's Manual of Geology;' 'Geology of the South Staffordshire Coal-field,' as well as numerous papers on geological subjects in the journals of the geological societies and in periodicals. He died at Dublin 20 July, 1869.

JULIAN, called the Apostate, a Roman emperor, was the younger son of Constantius, brother of Constantine the Great. He was born 331, and educated in the Christian religion; but was perverted to paganism at Athens by Maximus, a philosopher of that place. During the life-time of his cousin, Constantius, he made a profession of the orthodox faith; but, on succeeding to the throne 361, he threw off all disguise, reopened the heathen temples, and laboured both by his pen and authority to destroy Christianity. He shut up the schools, prohibited the followers of that religion from teaching, and ordered by an edict that the name of Christians should be abolished. His malice was further evinced by an extraordinary indulgence to the Jews, and an attempt to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, that the prophecy of Christ might be falsified. This design, however, was miraculously frustrated, and the truth of the gospel was confirmed by the means taken to disprove it. Julian did not long survive this disappointment, being slain 27 June, 363, in his expedition against the Persians. His works were published in Greek and Latin, by Spanheim, in 1696, 2 vols. folio.

JULIAN (ST.), archbishop of Toledo, died 8 March, 690. He wrote a treatise against the Jews entitled 'Testamentum xii. Prophetarum;' and other works.

JULIAN CESARINI. See CESARINI.

JULIANA, an anchoress of Norwich, was in 1393 leading the life of a recluse in the east part of the churchyard of St. Julian in that city. She had two servants to attend her in her old age, 1443. She wrote a work entitled 'XVI. Revelations of Divine Love,' published by Father Serenus Cressy in 1670, and reprinted in 1843.

JULIEN, PIERRE, a French sculptor, was born at St. Pauline 1731. After gaining a prize at the academy of Lyons, he settled in Paris, where he studied under William Coustou, and obtained another prize for a bas relief, representing Sabinus offering his chariot to the vestals. In 1768 he went to Rome, where he executed several fine works. On his return to France he became assistant to Coustou, and, in 1779, gained a place in the academy by his 'Dying Gladiator.' Died 17 Dec., 1804.

JULIEN, SIMON, a painter, born 1736, at Toulon. He was a pupil of Carlo Vanloo; after which he studied at Rome, where he quitted the French style for that of the great Italian masters, which procured him the name of Julian the Apostate. Among the works exhibited by him on his admission into the academy, that of the 'Triumph of Aurelian' was much admired. Died 23 Feb., 1800.

JULIUS I. (ST.), a Roman, succeeded Pope St. Mark 337, and died 12 April, 352.

JULIUS II., Julian della Rovere, was elected Pope 1503, in succession to Pius III., and died 20 Feb., 1513.

JULIUS III., Giovanni Maria del Monte, succeeded Pope Paul III. 1550. He revived and continued the Council of Trent; and died 23 March, 1555.

JULLIEN, CAMILLE, a French musician, born 1811. For many years he resided in London, where he gave several series of popular concerts and other musical entertainments, from which, however, he derived no pecuniary benefit. Successive failures ended in his mental aberration, and he ended his days in a lunatic asylum in Paris 14 March, 1860.

JUNCKER, CHRISTIAN, - classical scholar and historian, born at Dresden 16 Oct., 1668; died at Altenburg 19 June, 1714. He published 'Schediasma de diariis eruditorum'; 'Centuria seminarum eruditione et scriptis illustrium'; 'Theatrum Latinitatis universæ Reghero-Junkerianum'; 'Lineæ eruditionis universæ et historię Philosophicæ'; 'Vita Lutheri ex nummis, &c.'

JUNCKER, GOTTLÖB JOHN, a physician, born at Londorf, in Hesse, 1680. He took his doctor's degree at Halle, where he obtained a professorship, and died 25 Oct., 1759. He published several chemical and physiological works, in which he explained the doctrines of Stahl with great ability.

JUNCTIN, or GIUNTINO, FRANCIS, an astronomer, born at Florence 1523; died at Lyons 1590. He published Commentaries on the Sphere of Sacrobosco; 'Speculum Astrologiæ, &c.'

JUNGERMANN, GODFREY, a German writer, was a native of Leipzig. He published an old Greek translation of Caesar's Commentaries, and a Latin version of the 'Pastorals of Longus.' He died at Hanau 16 Aug., 1610.

JUNGERMANN, LOUIS, brother of the preceding, was born at Leipzig 1572, became professor of botany at Altdorf, and died 7 June, 1633. He published a Catalogue of Plants found near Altdorf; 'Hortus Eystettensis,' &c.

JUNGIUS, JOACHIM, a physician, born at Lubeck 1587. He studied and took his doctor's degree at Giessen, where he professed mathematics; but in 1623 he was called to the chair of medicine at Helmstadt, from whence, four years afterwards, he removed to Hamburg, to superintend the school of that city, where he died 23 Sept., 1657. He was an excellent botanist, and introduced a variety of terms corresponding with those of Linnæus. He also formed a scientific institution, similar to our Roy. Society. His works are Doxoscopie Physicæ Minores; Logica Hamburgensis; Geometria Empirica; Disputationes de naturali Dei cognitione, &c.

JUNG MANN, JOSEPH JACOB, a Bohemian scholar, born 13 July, 1773, became a professor in the university of Prague, where he died 14 Nov., 1847. He translated Milton's 'Paradise Lost' into Bohemian, and composed a 'History of the Bohemian Language and Literature.'

JURIEU.

JUNIUS, ADRIAN, was born at Hocht, in Holland, about 1512. He studied medicine at Paris, and next at Bologna, where he took his doctor's degree; after which he visited England, and became physician to the Duke of Norfolk. While here he published a Greek and Latin Lexicon which the court of Rome condemned, because it was dedicated to Edward VI. On leaving England he went to Copenhagen, as physician to the king of Denmark; but soon quitted that place and settled at Haerlem, where he was made principal of the college. When that city was taken by the Spaniards he escaped to Middleburg, and died 16 June, 1575. His works are numerous.

JUNIUS, FRANCIS, professor of divinity at Leyden, was born at Bourges 1545. He became minister of the Walloon church at Antwerp, after which he officiated as chaplain in the army of the prince of Orange; and on leaving that service, obtained a professorship at Heidelberg, from whence he removed to Leyden, where he died 13 Oct., 1602. He wrote Commentaries on the Scriptures, but is best known by his Latin version of the Bible, jointly with Tremellius.

JUNIUS, FRANCIS, son of the preceding, was born at Heidelberg 1589. After studying at Leyden he went into the army, which he left in order to travel in France and England. He came to this country 1620, and found a patron in the earl of Arundel, with whom he resided thirty years, devoted to literary pursuits, particularly researches into the northern languages. He died in the house of his nephew, Isaac Vossius, at Windsor, 19 Nov., 1677. His principal works are, Glossarium Gothicum in quatuor Evangelia Gothica; 'Depictura veterum,' which has been translated into English; 'Observationes in Willeram Francicam paraphrasin Cantici Canticorum; Letters in the correspondence of Vossius. His manuscripts were bequeathed to the university of Oxford, and one of them was published in 1743, by Edward Lye, with this title, 'Etymologicum Anglicanum.'

JUNOT, ANDOCHÉ, duke of Abrantès, a French general, born at Bussy-les-Forges (Côte-d'Or) 25 Oct., 1771. He accompanied Bonaparte, with whom he was a great favourite, in the expedition to Egypt, and after his return to France was made governor of Paris. In 1807 he was sent ambassador to Portugal, where he remained two years. The battle of Vimiera (1808), in which he was opposed to Sir A. Wellesley, led to his capitulating upon terms, and he and his army were transported to France in English vessels. After the retreat from Moscow he was appointed governor of the Illyrian provinces. Died 28 July, 1813. His wife, née Laure Permon, duchess of Abrantès, rendered herself remarkable by her extravagance and love of political intrigue. After the duke's decease she published her 'Memoirs' and several romances; and died at Chaillot 7 June, 1838.

JURIEU, PIERRE, a French divine, born 24 Dec., 1637. He studied in England under his maternal uncle, Peter du Moulin, and while here was episcopally ordained, but afterwards, to please his Presbyterian friends, he submitted to reordination. He filled the chair of divinity at Sedan with reputation; but when that university was taken from the Protestants he retired to Holland, and settled at Rotterdam, where he wrote several books, and engaged in some fierce contentions, particularly with Bayle. He also distinguished himself by his opinions on the fulfilment of the prophecies, which he lived to see falsified by the event. Being much chagrined by the decisions of some synods against his doctrines, he fell into a state of imbecility, and died at Rotterdam 11 Jan., 1713. His principal works are:—'Preservative against popery;' 'La Justification de la Morale; La Politique du Clergé;' 'L'Accomplissement des Prophetes;' 'Histoire de Calvinisme et du Papisme;' 'Lettres Pastorales;' 'Traité de l'unité de l'Eglise;' 'Traité de la Nature et la Grace;' 'Histoire des Dogmes et des Cultes.'

JURIN, JAMES, a physician, was born in 1684. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and afterwards settled in London, as physician to Guy's Hospital. He was also a fellow of the Royal Society, to whose Transactions he was a frequent contributor on mathematical and philosophical subjects. He published besides 'Physico-Mathematical Dissertations;' an Essay upon distinct and indistinct Vision; and a Translation of Varenius's Geography. He was a warm defender of the practice of inoculation, and as zealous an advocate for the Newtonian system. He died president of the College of Physicians, 1740.

JUSSIEU, ANTOINE DE, a physician and botanist, born at Lyons 22 April, 1686. He was admitted into the Academy of Sciences in 1712, and died 1758. He published an appendix to Tournefort's Plants, and various works on natural history. His brother, Bernard de Jussieu, was born at Lyons 1690. He practised physic, and became curator of the plants in the royal garden at Paris, and superintendent of that at Trianon. He died 6 Nov., 1777. His publications are, an edition of Tournefort on the plants near Paris, 2 vols. 12mo.; and 'L'Ami de l'Humanité.' There was another brother of these ingenious men, Joseph de Jussieu, born at Lyons 1704, went to Peru with the academicians sent thither to measure a degree of the meridian in 1726. He died 11 April, 1779. Some account of his travels and discoveries is in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences. Antoine Laurent de Jussieu, nephew of the preceding, was born at Lyons 12 April, 1748. In 1770 he succeeded Lémonnier as demonstrator of botany in the Jardin des Plantes at Paris. He was named principal keeper of the royal garden 1777; professor of botany in the university of Paris 1804; died 17 Sept., 1836. He published a famous work on the 'Genera Plantarum;' 'Tableau synoptique de la méthode botanique;' 'Tableau de l'école de botanique du Jardin des Plantes,' &c. His son, Adrien de Jussieu, was the last of that series of botanists who, during a century and a half, were the honour of France. He was born at Paris 23 Dec., 1797, in the residence occupied by his father in the Museum of Natural History, and there he passed his whole life. He succeeded his father in the botanical chair at the museum 1826, and was admitted in 1831 a member of the Academy of Sciences. Died 29 June, 1853. His works on botany are numerous and highly esteemed.

JUSTEL, CHRISTOPH, counsellor and secretary to the king of France, was born at Paris 1580, and died there 1649. His works are—Code of Canons of the Church Universal; and the Councils of Africa, with notes; Genealogical History of the House of Auvergne, fol. His collections of Greek and Latin Canons were inserted in the 'Bibliotheca Juris Canonici veteris.'

JUSTEL, HENRY, son of the above, was born at Paris in 1620. He succeeded his father as secretary and counsellor to the king. In 1675 he sent his father's Greek manuscripts to the university of Oxford, for which that learned body created him doctor of laws. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes, he came to England, and was appointed keeper of the king's library. He died 24 Sept., 1693.

JUSTIN, a Latin historian, supposed to have lived in the reign of Antoninus Pius. His work is an abridgment of Trogus Pompeius, who wrote a universal history, which is lost. The best edition of Justin is by Gronovius, 8vo., Leyden, 1719.

JUSTIN, ST., a celebrated martyr and Platonic philosopher, was a native of Neapolis, in Palestine. He was converted to Christianity about A.D. 132, by the sufferings which he saw the Christians endure, but neither quitted his philosophical profession nor habit. A persecution arising under Antoninus, Adrian's successor, Justin wrote an 'Apology' for the Christians, and presented another afterwards to the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, in which he maintained the innocence and holiness of Christianity, against Crescentius, a cynic philosopher, and other calumniators. He suffered martyrdom at Rome about A.D. 167. The best edition of his works is by Dom Prudent Maran, O.S.B. His 'Apologies' have been translated into English.

JUSTIN I. was elected Emperor of the East 518, and died 527.

JUSTIN II. Emperor of the East, succeeded his uncle Justinian 565, and died 578.

JUSTINIAN I., a Roman emperor, who succeeded his uncle Justin A.D. 527. He was a zealous Christian, and enacted some severe laws against heretics. After settling the affairs of the empire, and defeating the Goths, he collected the Roman laws into one body, called 'The Code,' to which he gave his own name. The emperor next caused the judicial decisions and opinions in difficult cases to be reduced, and arranged in order; which labour was chiefly entrusted to Tribonian, an eminent lawyer, and at the expiration of ten years was completed. These collections were called 'The Digests, or Pandects;' after which Justinian ordered a summary of the whole to be drawn up, in four books, termed 'The Institutes;' and lastly, the modern laws were brought into one volume, to which the name of 'Novellæ;' or 'New Code,' was given. In the time of this emperor the consular dignity was abolished. He also built a number of churches, particularly that of Sancta Sophia, at Constantinople. He died 14 Nov., 565, aged 83.

JUSTINIAN II. succeeded his father, Constantine Pogonatus, 685; died 711.

JUSTINIANI. See GIUSTINIANI.

JUVENAL, DECIUS JUNIUS, a Latin poet, was born at Aquinum, in Campania, about the beginning of the reign of Claudius. He studied rhetoric under Fronto, the grammarian, and afterwards had, as is generally supposed, Quintilian for his master. He became an eminent pleader at the bar, and thereby acquired a large estate. His first poetical attempt was in a satire upon Paris, a player, who was the minion of Domitian, and for which he was sent into an honourable kind of exile, by being made commander of a cohort at Pentapolis, on the borders of Egypt. On Domitian's death he returned to Rome, where he died in his eightieth year, and in the eleventh of the reign of Adrian. He may be said to have been the last of the Roman poets, and many prefer his pieces to the morals of Aristotle. His satires are excessively severe, but the principles are good, and the language nervous. Juvenal has been admirably translated into English by Gifford.

JUVENCUS, CAIUS VECTIUS AQUILINUS, a Latin poet, was born in Spain, and lived in the reign of Constantine. He turned the four gospels into Latin verse, but in a bad style.

JUXON, WILLIAM, an English prelate, born at Chichester 1582, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he was elected to St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He studied the law, and entered Gray's Inn, but altered his mind, took orders, and was presented to the vicarage of St. Giles, Oxford, with which he held the rectory of Somerton. In 1621 he was chosen president of his college, after which he rose rapidly, through the interest of Archbishop Laud, being successively made dean of Worcester, clerk of the closet, bishop of Hereford, dean of the chapel royal, and, in 1633, bishop of London. In 1635 he was advanced to the post of lord high treasurer, which no churchman had held since the reign of Henry VII. This office he resigned in 1641, when it was admitted by all parties that he had conducted himself without reproach. After attending his royal master at the treaty in the Isle of Wight, and on the scaffold, he went into retirement; but at the Restoration he was made archbishop of Canterbury, and had the satisfaction of placing the crown on the head of Charles II. Died 4 June, 1663.

K.

KAEMPPER, ENGELBERT, was born 16 Sept., 1651, at Lemgo, in Germany. In 1683 he accompanied the Swedish embassy to Persia, in which country he made large collections of natural curiosities, accounts of which were published at Lemgo in 1712. From Persia Kaempfer proceeded to Batavia, and in 1690 to Japan, as physician to the Dutch embassy. After spending two years there he returned to Java, and in 1693 arrived at Amsterdam. The year following he took his doctor's degree in physic at Leyden, and then settled at his native place, where he died 2 Nov., 1716. He published 'Decas Observationum exoticarum,' 'Amenitates Exoticae,' 'The History of Japan,' which has been translated into English, 2 vols. fol., 1727. Some of his botanical drawings were engraved at the expense of Sir Joseph Banks.

KAESTNER, ABRAHAM GOTTHELF, a learned mathematician, astronomer, and poet, was born at Leipzig 27 Sept., 1719, and died 20 June, 1800. He was a professor in the university of Göttingen for upwards of forty years. His principal work is a 'History of Mathematics.'

KALB, JOHN BARON DE, was born near Nuremberg about 1732, and rose to the rank of brigadier-general in the French army. At the commencement of the American revolution he volunteered his services in the cause of freedom, was promoted to the rank of major-general, and was for a time commander of the Southern army. He was killed at the battle of Camden 17 Aug., 1780, and a monument was ordered by Congress to be erected to his memory.

KARAMZIN.

KALDI, GEORGE, an Hungarian Jesuit, born about 1572; died 1634. He translated the Bible into his native tongue.

KALF, WILLIAM, a painter of still life, born at Amsterdam 1630; died 30 June, 1693.

KALKBRENNER, CHRISTIAN, a musical composer, born at Minden (Hanover) 22 Sept., 1755; died at Paris 10 Aug., 1806.

KALM, PETER, a naturalist, born in Finland 1715. He became professor of botany at Abo, and in 1747 went to North America, for the purpose of exploring that country; where he remained two or three years, and then returned to Abo. He afterwards made an extensive tour in Russia, with the same object, and died in Sweden 16 Nov., 1779. His travels in America were translated into English by Forster 1771.

KAMES, LORD. See HOME, HENRY.

KAMPEN, NICHOLAS GODFREY VAN, a Dutch historian, born at Haarlem 15 May, 1776; died 14 March, 1839.

KANE, ELISHA KENT, M.D., an Arctic explorer, born at Philadelphia 3 Feb., 1820. After studying medicine at Pennsylvania he was attached as physician to the embassy to China, and likewise visited the Philippine Islands, Ceylon, and the East Indies. He also made explorations into Africa, traversed Egypt up to the frontiers of Nubia, and then visited Goree and South Africa, including the kingdom of Dahomey. Subsequently he served as a volunteer in the Mexican war. Mr. Grinnell having undertaken to defray the cost of a polar expedition to search for Sir John Franklin, Lieutenant De Haven was placed at the head of it, Dr. Kane being appointed surgeon to the expedition, which set out in 1850. In the course of the voyage he made some valuable scientific observations, of which an account is given in his 'United States Grinnell Expedition in Search of Sir John Franklin.' Of a second expedition, also fitted out at the expense of Mr. Grinnell, Dr. Kane had the command. Beyond 80° 20' he discovered a vast open basin, which geographers have since called 'Kane's Polar Sea.' This was the extreme point reached by the expedition, an account of which was published at Philadelphia, in 1856, under the title of 'Arctic Explorations in the years 1853, 1854, 1855.' Dr. Kane died at Havannah 16 Feb., 1857.

KANT, IMMANUEL, a German philosopher. His father, who spelt his name Cant, was descended from a Scotch family, and carried on the business of a saddler, first at Memel, and next at Königsberg, where this son was born 22 April, 1724. He studied at the college of Fredericianum; after which he became a private tutor. In 1755 he took his degree of master of arts, and became a popular lecturer in metaphysics. In 1770 he obtained a professorship at Königsberg, of which university he was made rector in 1786, and, two years afterwards, senior of the faculty of philosophy. Died 12 Feb., 1804. Kant published several works on mathematics and natural philosophy; but he is only known by the subtlety of his metaphysical system, which made a great noise in Germany.

KARAMZIN, NICHOLAS MICHAELOVITCH, a Russian historian, born in Orenburg 1 Dec., 1765; died at St. Petersburg 22 May, 1826. In 1803 he was appointed historiographer of Russia. His 'History of the Russian Empire' to the year 1611 has been translated into English, French, Italian, German, and Chinese.

KATER.

KATER, Captain HENRY, F.R.S., was born at Bristol 16 April, 1777. He first studied the law, but on his father's death (1794) obtained a commission in the 12th regiment of foot, then stationed in India. During the following year he was engaged in the trigonometrical survey of India, and contributed greatly to the success of that stupendous undertaking. About the same time he constructed a peculiarly sensitive hygrometer, and published a description of it in the Asiatic Researches. Unremitting study during seven years in a hot climate greatly injured his constitution, and was the cause of the ill state of health under which he suffered to the close of his life. After his return to England he qualified himself to serve on the general staff. In 1814, however, he went on half-pay, and from that period his life was wholly devoted to science. His trigonometrical operations, his experiments for determining the length of a pendulum beating seconds, and his labours for constructing standards of weights and measures are well known. Most of the learned societies in Great Britain and on the Continent testified their sense of the value of Captain Kater's services by enrolling him among their members. The emperor of Russia employed him to construct standards for the weights and measures of his dominions, and was so pleased with the execution of them, that he presented him with the order of St. Anne and a diamond snuff-box. Capt. Kater died in London 26 April, 1856.

KATTERFELTO, GUSTAVUS, a Prussian who, coming to London, soon gained a wide-spread notoriety, partly by means of advertisements headed 'Wonders! Wonders! Wonders!' which he persistently inserted in the newspapers. He is described as being a compound of conjuror and quack doctor. In both these capacities he worked upon the easy credulity of Cockneydom, during the influenza visitation of the year 1782, adding to his nostrums the fascinations of hocus-pocus. Amongst other philosophical apparatus, he employed the services of some extraordinary black cats, with which he astonished the ignorant and confounded the vulgar. Subsequently he made a tour in the provinces, where, however, his success was not so uniform as it had been in the metropolis. At Shrewsbury, indeed, he was committed to prison as a vagrant and impostor. Peter Pindar mentions this singular individual more than once, and Cowper, in the 'Task,' speaks of—

'Katterfelto with his hair on end,
At his own wonders, wondering for his bread.'

He died at Bedale, Yorkshire, 25 Nov., 1790. An account of him, by the compiler of these pages, was printed in the 'Whitby Times' of 11 Dec., 1863.

KAUFFMANN, MARIA ANNA ANGELICA, a female artist, was born 30 Oct., 1740, at Chur, in Switzerland. She was instructed in painting by her father, who next took her for further improvement to Rome; from whence she removed to Venice, where she found a friend in Lady Wentworth, and accompanied her to England. In this country she experienced the most liberal patronage, and became a member of the Royal Academy. She married Sir A. Zucchi, a Venetian artist, with whom she returned to Italy, and died at Rome 5 Nov., 1807. Bartolozzi engraved a number of prints from her designs.

KAUNITZ, PRINCE OF. Wenceslaus Anthony, count of Rietberg and prince of Kaunitz, an eminent statesman, who died at Vienna 24 June, 1794, aged 84 years, during forty of which he was chancellor and prime minister of Austria. He commenced his political career by an embassy to France, and obtained successively the confidence of Maria Teresa, Joseph II., and Leopold II. Under his prudent administration the cabinet of Vienna obtained a great influence in the other courts of Europe.

KAYE. See CAIUS.

KAYE, JOHN, an English prelate, was a native of Hammersmith, where his father carried on the business of a linendraper. After being instructed by the celebrated Dr. Burney, at Hammersmith, he entered Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1804, on which occasion he was placed at the head of both the mathematical and classical honour lists. The only other person, it may be remarked, who ever gained this double distinction was the late Baron Alderson. In 1814 Mr. Kaye was elected master of Christ's College, and the next year was created D.D. by royal mandate. In 1816 he was appointed regius professor of divinity. He was made bishop of Bristol 1820; translated to Lincoln 1827; and died 19 Feb., 1853, aged 70. He published a number of theological works, the principal of which is his 'Account of the Writings and Opinions of Clement of Alexandria.' Some of his controversial pieces were published anonymously, such as his 'Remarks on Dr. Wiseman's Lectures,' and 'Reply to the Travels of an Irish Gentleman.'

KAZINCZY, FRANCIS, a celebrated Hungarian writer, born at Erhemlyen 27 Oct., 1759; died 22 Aug., 1831.

KEACH, BENJAMIN, a Baptist minister, born 29 Feb., 1640, at Stokehaman, Bucks. In 1664 he was sentenced to stand in the pillory for a book called 'The Child's Instructor.' After this he was chosen pastor of a congregation in Goat Yard Passage, Horsleydown, Southwark, where he died 18 July, 1704. His 'Travels of True Godliness,' and 'Travels of Ungodliness,' written in the manner of Bunyan, were once very popular books; but he is best known by his 'Tropologia, or Key to open Scripture Metaphors.' He also wrote 'An Exposition of the Parables.'

KEAN, CHARLES, a distinguished tragedian, born 18 January, 1811. By his father, the celebrated Edmund Kean, he was sent to Eton as an 'oppidan' in 1824. Circumstances, not choice, caused him to adopt the stage as a profession, and, in the autumn of 1827, he made his first appearance at Drury Lane Theatre, as Young Norval. Other juvenile parts followed this performance; but though his early success was promising, he left London in the spring of 1828 with the intention of acquiring experience in the provinces. Mr. Edmund Kean's moral aberrations and neglect of his family had for some time estranged him from his son, but a meeting at Glasgow, in the course of the young tragedian's first provincial tour, led to a reconciliation, and in Oct., 1828, they appeared together as Brutus and Titus in Howard Payne's tragedy of 'Brutus,' Edmund playing for the benefit of Charles. In 1830 Mr. Charles Kean visited America, where he was warmly received; but his success when, in 1833, he appeared as Sir Edward Mortimer, at Covent Garden, was not sufficient to induce him to remain long in London. It was, however, during this engagement that he acted together with his father for the first and last time in the British capital, being the Iago to Edmund's Othello. In less than a month after this performance Edmund Kean was no more. Another provincial tour was followed by the appearance of Mr. Charles Kean at Drury Lane, as Hamlet, on 8 Jan., 1838. Practically, this may be regarded as his début; for it was, in 1838, that by his Hamlet, his Sir Giles Overreach, and his Richard, he fairly took his position as a tragedian of the highest rank. In 1842 he married Miss Ellen Tree. In 1850 he undertook, in conjunction with Mr. Keeley, the management of the Princess's Theatre, but was it not till after the dissolution of partnership that Mr. Kean commenced that gorgeous series of Shaksperian 'revivals' which make an epoch in the history of the stage, and which for several years rendered the theatre in Oxford Street, previously obscure, as fashionable as an Italian Opera House. He retired from the management of the Princess's in 1859. Subsequently he appeared several times in London, and played with great success in the provinces. But his most remarkable achievement was a professional voyage, which commenced with a visit to Australia, and comprised a series of performances through the United States. He died soon after his return to England 23 Jan., 1868.

KEAN, EDMUND, a famous actor, born in London 4 Nov., 1787. His father, a poor tailor, procured a situation for him as a figurant in the pantomimes at Drury Lane Theatre when he was only two years old, but here by the unnatural forced positions which he had to practise in order to make his limbs more pliable he became deformed. Some of the actors procured him surgical assistance, his limbs were supported, and he finally outgrew his bodily defects. At seven years his mother sent him to a little school, but order and obedience were not in his character, and he engaged himself as cabin boy in a vessel going to Madeira. This situation, however, equally displeased him, and to deliver himself in Madeira he feigned deafness, and played his part so well that the captain sent him home. In London he could not find out his mother, but a woman who had had him under her care recommended him to Miss Tidswell, an actress at Drury Lane Theatre, who gave him much assistance. At one period after his return to London he acted as a droll in a booth. After this he was placed in one of the minor theatres, and was much applauded for his recitations. From this period he commenced reading dramatic productions. His protectress recommended him to a company of players in Yorkshire, where he appeared under the name of Carey. Although not more than thirteen years old, he performed the parts of 'Hamlet,' 'Lord Hastings,' and Addison's 'Cato,' well enough to please a provincial audience. At Windsor he obtained the applause of the royal family by his recitation of Satan's 'Address to the Sun,' from 'Paradise Lost,' and of the first soliloquy in Shakspeare's 'Richard III.' It has frequently been asserted that about this time he was fortunate enough to attract the attention of Dr. Drury, who sent him to Eton, where he remained three years, and is said to have made much progress in classical studies. This statement is, however, wholly unfounded. Playing Hamlet in the island of Guernsey, a local journal abused him, and when he afterwards performed Richard he was received with exclamations of displeasure. Kean for a while patiently submitted, but very significantly addressed a passage from his part to the pit—'Unmannered dog, stand thou, when I command!' Upon this the disorder increased, and instead of apologizing, he addressed his audience to the following effect—'You have shown some symptoms of understanding in applying the words to yourselves.' He had to pay dear for this imprudence. He was obliged to leave the town, and remained in great distress till some of his friends interceded for him with the governor of the island. Kean afterwards went to Dorchester. In the meantime, Dr. Drury, his old patron, had recommended him to the directing committee of Drury Lane, as fitted to revive the fortunes of this declining theatre. He was in consequence engaged for three years at 'Old Drury.' Kean appeared for the first time on the London boards (26 Jan., 1814) in the character of 'Shylock.' His first evening was decisive, but his 'Richard III.' made him the idol of the London play-going public. In 'Othello' also, and 'Sir Giles Overreach,' he was unequalled by any contemporary; and when he performed Massinger's Jew for the first time, the actors and others of his admirers presented him with a gold cup as a token of their esteem (25 June, 1814). In 1820 he visited the United States and performed in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Boston, on the whole with great success. After his return to England the extravagance and dissoluteness which had always disgraced his character involved him in great embarrassments; and a second visit to America in 1825 was attended with little credit or advantage. He came back to England and died at Richmond, Surrey, 15 May, 1833. Mr. Procter (Barry Cornwall), in his biography of Kean (2 vols. 8vo., 1835), sums up his histrionic qualities as follows:—'As a tragedian he was decidedly of the very first order. He possessed vigour, pathos, sarcasm, and the power of communicating terror in the highest degree; and his intensity in expressing all the passions has never been approached within our recollection.' The best biography of Kean is that by F. W. Hawkins, 2 vols., 1869.

KEATE.

KEANE, JOHN, Lord Keane, a British general, born at Belmont, co. Waterford, 1781; died 24 Aug., 1844. His chief military exploit was the capture in 1839 of the fortress of Ghuznee, in Cabool, which till then had been deemed impregnable. For this he received a peerage and a pension of £2000 from the East India Company.

KEARNEY, BARNABY, an Irish Jesuit, born at Cashel 1595; died 20 Aug., 1640. He published 'Heliotropion,' 8vo., Lyons, 1622, containing sermons in Latin, for the Sundays and feasts of the whole year. A second volume of his sermons, on the Passion of Christ, was published at Paris 1633.

KEATE, GEORGE, F.R.S., F.S.A. was born about 1729. He was educated at Kingston School, after which he went to Geneva, and, while there, contracted an acquaintance with Voltaire. On his return to England he was called to the bar; but did not follow that profession. His first literary work was 'Ancient and Modern Rome,' a poem, 1760. This was followed by 'A short Account of the Republic of Geneva,' dedicated to Voltaire. In 1762 came out 'An Epistle from Lady Jane Gray to Lord Guildford Dudley; and in 1763, 'The Alps,' a poem. The next year he produced 'Netley Abbey;' and in 1765, 'The Temple Student.' In 1769 he married, and about the same time published 'Ferneby,' an epistle to Voltaire; in which he introduced an eulogium on Shakspeare, for which the corporation of Stratford presented him with a standish made out of the bard's favourite mulberry-tree. In 1773 Mr. Keate published 'The Monument in Arcadia,' a dramatic poem; and in 1779 'Sketches from Nature, taken in a Journey to Margate,' 2 vols. This is an imitation of Sterne. His last publication was 'An Account of the Pelew Islands; composed from the Journals of Captain Henry Wilson and his officers, who were shipwrecked there in 1783.' Died 27 June, 1797.

KEATING, GEOFFREY, D.D., a pious and learned Irish clergyman of the Roman communion, author of many works both in prose and verse in his native language, was born at Tubrid, co. Tipperary, about 1570; died about 1644. His chief production is a History of Ireland from the earliest times to the Anglo-Norman invasion, its title in the original being 'Forus feasa air Eirinn.' A very incorrect English translation by Dermot O'Connor was published at London 1723. Another version appeared at Dublin in 2 vols., 1809; and a correct translation by William Halliday of the first portion of the History was printed at Dublin 1811, with the original Irish on the opposite pages. Another translation by John O'Mahony was published at New York 1857. Among Dr. Keating's other works are A Treatise on the Mass; A Moral Treatise on Death; and Poems. All of these are in Irish.

KEATS, JOHN, a poet, born in London 29 Oct., 1795, and educated in a private school at Enfield. In 1810 he was placed with a surgeon at Edmonton, and at the expiration of his apprenticeship he removed to London in order to 'walk the hospitals.' Here he became acquainted with several well-known literary men, incited by whose praise he published a volume of poems, which attracted but little attention. Being compelled by ill-health to abandon all idea of following his profession, he went on a visit into the country, where he commenced his 'Endymion,' published in 1817. The sharp criticisms on it which appeared in the Quarterly Review and Blackwood's Magazine produced an injurious effect on the health of the sensitive author, who, however, brought out another volume containing his beautiful odes on 'The Nightingale,' and the 'Grecian Urn,' the poems of 'Lamia,' and the 'The Eve of St. Agnes' and the magnificent fragment of 'Hyperion.' His illness becoming worse, he left England in 1820 to seek a warmer climate, and died at Rome 27 Feb., 1821. There have been numerous editions of his works.

KEBLE, JOHN, an Anglican divine and poet, was born 25 April, 1792, at Fairford, Gloucestershire, of which parish his father was the incumbent. He received his academical education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1810. He was then elected a fellow of Oriel College, where he took the degree of M.A. 1813, in which year he gained the chancellor's prizes for an English essay on 'Translations from the Dead Languages,' and for a Latin essay 'A comparison of Xenophon and Julius Cæsar.' He took orders and obtained a fellowship at Oriel, but about 1823 he retired to his father's living at Fairford, where he had a few pupils, and whence he made frequent visits to Oxford. He was one of the four eminent clergymen who initiated the High Church or Oxford movement in 1832, by starting the celebrated 'Tracts for the Times,' of which Nos. 4, 13, 40, 52, and 89 were from Mr. Keble's pen. From 1831 to 1842 he was professor of poetry at Oxford; and in 1831 he was presented to the vicarage of Hursley, Hants, which he retained till his death on 29 March, 1866. His greatest work is a volume of poems, entitled 'The Christian Year,' which has passed through nearly a hundred editions. He was also author of the 'Lyra Innocentium,' 1846; and (with Newman, Froude, and others) of the 'Lyra Apostolica,' his poems in the latter work being distinguished by the Greek letter  $\gamma$ . To perpetuate his memory, his friends and admirers raised a large fund shortly after his decease, and founded Keble College in the university of Oxford.

KEBLE, JOSEPH, a barrister of Gray's Inn, born in London 1632; died Aug., 1710. Besides 'Reports,' and other legal works, he published two essays, one 'On Human Nature;' the other 'On Human Actions.'

KECKERMAN, BARTHOLOMEW, a native of Dantzic, became director of the academy there, and published a large number of works, once extensively used in the education of youth. Born 1571; died 1609.

KEELEY, ROBERT, an eminent comedian and theatrical manager, was born in London 1793, and died at Brompton 3 Feb., 1869.

KEENE, EDMUND, a prelate, born at Lynn, Norfolk, 1713, and educated at Caius College and Peterhouse, Cambridge, being elected a fellow of the latter society 1739. In 1740 he was collated to the valuable rectory of Stanhope, co. Durham, and he was master of Peterhouse from 1748 to 1754. He was made bishop of Chester 1752; translated to Ely 1770; and died 6 July, 1781. His only publications are five occasional sermons.

KEEPE, HENRY, a Londoner born, received his education at Oxford, and next studied law in the Inner Temple. He joined the communion of the Catholic Church, in which he died May, 1688. His works are 'Monumenta Westmonasteriensia' or an Historical Account of the Abbey Church of Westminster, 1682; 'The Genealogies of the high-born Prince and Princess George and Anne of Denmark,' 1684; and 'A True and Perfect Narrative of the strange and unexpected finding the Crucifix and Gold Chain of that pious Prince St. Edward, the King and Confessor; which was found after six hundred and twenty years' interment,' 4to., 1688, published under the name of Charles Taylour.

KEILL, JAMES, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Scotland 27 March, 1673, and educated at Edinburgh and Leyden, though he obtained his doctor's degree from the university of Cambridge. In 1700 he settled at Northampton, where he died 10 July, 1719. Besides several papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he wrote 'Anatomy of the Human Body abridged;' a translation of Lemery's Course of Chemistry; and 'An Account of Animal Secretion.' The latter work was afterwards enlarged, with the title of 'Essays on several parts of the Animal Economy.' He had a controversy with Dr. Jurin, on the force of the heart.

KEILL, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., a mathematician, brother of the preceding, was born at Edinburgh 1 Dec., 1671. After taking the degree of master of arts at the university of his native city, he removed to Balliol College, Oxford, where he read lectures on Newton's Principia. In 1699 he attacked Dr. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, and, in the following year, delivered lectures on natural philosophy in the public schools. In 1701 appeared his 'Introductio ad veram Physicam,' which he considerably enlarged in the edition of 1705. He was now elected a fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1709 appointed treasurer to the Palatines, whom he accompanied to New England. On his return he was chosen Savilian professor of astronomy, and about the same time entered the lists against Leibnitz, on the invention of fluxions. He next defended Newton's doctrine against the Cartesians, and in 1711 was made decypherer to the queen. In 1713 he received the degree of doctor in physic; and two years afterwards published an edition of Commandine's Euclid. His last work was the 'Introductio ad veram Astronomiam,' which, at the desire of the duchess of Chandos, he translated into English. Dr. Keill died 1 Sept., 1721.

KEISER, REINHARD, one of the most renowned musical composers of the German school, was born near Leipsic 1673; and died at Hamburg 12 Sept., 1739.

KEITH, GEORGE, a native of Aberdeen, who was a fellow-student there with Bishop Burnet, and took his degree as master of arts, after which he turned Quaker, and went to Pennsylvania; but becoming dissatisfied with the sect, he formed a new one of his own. At length he entered into the church of England, took orders, and obtained some preferment. He died about 1715. He wrote several books for the Quakers, and some against Penn, with 'Reasons for renouncing that Sect,' 1700.

KEITH, GEORGE KEITH ELPHINSTONE, VISCOUNT, a naval commander, fourth son of Charles, tenth Lord Elphinstone, was born 1747. In 1795, being then vice-admiral, he commanded the fleet destined for the capture of the Cape of Good Hope; in the object of which expedition he not only succeeded, but compelled the Dutch, who advanced to the relief of the colony, to surrender at discretion without firing a gun. For this he was rewarded with an Irish barony 1797; and his gallant exertions in the Foudroyant, on the coast of Egypt, during the campaign of 1801, caused his elevation to the peerage of the United Kingdom (1803) by the title of Baron Keith. He was promoted to a viscountcy 1814; and died 10 March, 1823.

KEITH, JAMES FRANCIS EDWARD, field-marshal in the Prussian service, was born in Scotland 1696. His father was William Keith, earl marshal of Scotland; and his schoolmaster was the celebrated Ruddiman. He afterwards went to the university of Aberdeen. In 1715 he joined the Pretender, and was wounded at the battle of Sheriffmuir, but made his escape to France, where he studied mathematics, and became a member of the Academy of Sciences. From Paris he went to Madrid, and obtained a commission in the Irish brigade; but on accompanying the Spanish embassy to Russia, he entered the service of that state, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general, and invested with the order of the black eagle. By his skill Oczakow was taken; and in the war with Sweden he materially contributed to the victory of Willmanstrand, and the taking of the isles of Aland. He had afterwards a share in raising the Empress Elizabeth to the throne; but not being rewarded according to his services, he left St. Petersburg for Prussia, where the king made him governor of Berlin and field-marshal. He was killed at the battle of Hochkirch 14 Oct., 1758.

KEITH, ROBERT, a prelate of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Scotland, was born in Kincardineshire 7 Feb., 1681, and educated at Aberdeen. In 1727 he was chosen coadjutor to Bish-opp Millar, of Edinburgh, being entrusted soon afterwards with the superintendance of Caithness, Orkney, and the Isles. In 1733 the clergy of Fife elected him to be their diocesan, and ten years later he was chosen Primus. Died 20 Jan., 1757. Bishop Keith wrote 'The History of the Affairs of the Church and State of Scotland, from the beginning of the Reformation in the reign of King James V., to the retreat of Queen Mary into England, anno 1568,' folio, 1734; 'Catalogue of the Bishops of the Several Sees within the Kingdom of Scotland down to the year 1688,' 4to., 1755. A new edition of the latter work, with a continuation to the date of publication by the Rev. M. Russell, LL.D., was published at Edinburgh 1824.—Anderson.

KEITH, THOMAS, was born at Brandsburton, near Beverley, Yorkshire, 1751, and settled in London as a teacher of mathematics. He was appointed secretary to the master of the king's household 1804; 'professor of geography and the sciences' to the princess of Wales 1810; and accountant in the British Museum 1814. He died in London 29 June, 1824. His works consist of elementary treatises on arithmetic, geography, trigonometry, geometry, and the use of the globes.

KELGREN, JOHN HENRY, a Swedish philosopher, poet, and miscellaneous writer, born 1 Dec., 1751; died 12 April, 1795.

KELLER, JAMES, Cellarinus, a Jesuit, born at Seckingen 1568; died at Munich 23 Feb., 1631. He was confessor to Albert of Bavaria, and the confidential friend of the Emperor Maximilian. He published several religious and political works, the latter for the most part under assumed names. His book against France, 'Mysteria Politica,' was burnt by order of the government.

KELLERMANN, FRANÇOIS CHRISTOPHE, duc de Valmy, marshal of France, was born at Strassburg 30 May, 1735. He attained the rank of field-marshal 1788, after having served in the Seven Years' War, and distinguished himself at Bergheim, at Friedberg, and against the Russians (1772). Appointed commander-in-chief of the army of the Moselle 1792, he defeated the Prussians at Valmy, and forced them to evacuate the French territory. He was imprisoned as a suspected person 1793, but gained his liberty on the 9th Thermidor; and in 1795 was entrusted with the command of the army of the Alps and Italy. He was made by Napoleon a marshal of the empire 1804; and at the Restoration was created a peer of France. Died 12 Sept., 1820.

KELLISON, MATTHEW, D.D., a Catholic divine, born in Northamptonshire about 1560. He took his doctor's degree at Rhems, where he was rector of the university; from whence he removed to Douay, and became president of the English college. He died 21 Jan., 1640-1. His works are, Survey of the new Religion; Reply to

KELLY.

Sutcliffe; Oratio coram Henrico IV. rege Christianissimo; The Gagg of the reformed Gospel; Examen Reformationis; The Right and Jurisdiction of the Prince and Prelate; A treatise on the Hierarchy of the Church; A brief and necessary Instruction for the Catholics of England; Comment. in tertiam partem Summæ Sæceti Thomæ.

KELLY, or TALBOT, EDWARD, an alchemist, born at Worcester 1555, and educated at Gloucester Hall, Oxford. He was obliged to leave the university, and after rambling about the kingdom was sentenced to lose his ears at Lancaster. He next became an associate of Dr. Dee, and accompanied him to Prague, where Kelly was knighted by the Emperor Rodolphus; but his tricks being discovered, he was thrown into prison, and in attempting to escape he fell, and bruised himself to such a degree that he died soon after, in 1595. He wrote a poem on chemistry, and another on the philosopher's stone; besides which he was the author of 'A true and faithful Relation of what passed for many years between Dr. John Dee and some spirits.'

KELLY, HUGH, a miscellaneous writer, was born near the lake of Killarney 1739. He was apprenticed to a staymaker in Dublin, and on the expiration of his time repaired to London, where he procured a situation in the office of an attorney. He next became a writer for the booksellers, and published several political pamphlets. In 1767 appeared the 'Babler,' in 2 vols., which was followed by 'Louisa Mildmay,' a novel. About this time also he published a poem, entitled 'Thespis,' in imitation of Churchill's Rosciad; and in 1768 his comedy of 'False Delicacy' was performed with success. His next dramatic piece, 'A Word to the Wise,' met with a different reception, in consequence of which he published it by subscription. His next attempt was a tragedy, called 'Clementina;' which was succeeded by the comedy of 'The School for Wives.' While thus employed he applied himself to the law, and was called to the bar, but was cut off prematurely by an abscess in the side 3 Feb., 1777. His other works were 'The Romance of an Hour,' and 'The Man of Reason,' comedies.

KELLY, JOHN, LL.D., was born at Douglas, in the Isle of Man, 1 Nov., 1750. Bishop Hildesley employed him in the translation of the Bible into the Manx tongue; after which he was ordained as minister of the episcopal congregation of Ayr, Scotland, where he was engaged by the duke of Gordon to superintend the studies of the marquis of Huntly. Through this patronage he obtained the vicarage of Ardleigh, and next the rectory of Copford, Essex; on which he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded to the degree of LL.D. 1799. In 1803 he published a Grammar of the Manx Language; and he also had nearly completed a Dictionary of the Manx and English Languages, when the sheets were destroyed in the fire of Mr. Nichols, the printer. It has since been printed by the Manx Society (8vo., Douglas, 1866), under the editorial care of W. Gill. Dr. Kelly died 12 Nov., 1809.

KELLY, MICHAEL, a vocalist, born in Dublin 1752. After studying under Rauzzini in Dublin, and Fineroli at Naples, he performed with success at most of the Italian theatres; and, going to Germany, he was one of the original singers in the 'Nozze di Figaro' of Mozart, with whom he contracted a close intimacy during his stay at Vienna, where he had accepted an engagement in the service of the Emperor Joseph, by whom he was much caressed. He afterwards settled in London, where he made his first appearance at Drury Lane Theatre 1787. He retained his situation as first singer at that theatre, the musical performances of which he also directed until his final retirement from the stage. He composed the music for Colman's 'Bluebeard,' and for a great number of other popular pieces. He died at Margate 9 Oct., 1826. His 'Reminiscences' (2 vols., 1820; 2nd edit., 1826) is a very amusing work, and is by far the best addition to our theatrical history since Colley Cibber's 'Apology.'

KELLY, OLIVER, Catholic archbishop of Tuam, died at Albano, near Rome, 18 April, 1834.

KELLY, THOMAS, Catholic archbishop of Armagh, died 14 Jan., 1835, aged 39.

KELWAY, THOMAS, a celebrated composer of English church music, succeeded John Reading as organist of Chichester Cathedral 1726, and held that situation till his death 21 May, 1749.

KEMBLE, CHARLES, an eminent tragedian, brother of John Philip Kemble and Mrs. Siddons, was born 25 Nov., 1775, at Brecknock, where his father, Roger Kemble, was then manager of the theatre. He received an excellent education in the English Catholic College at Douay, and returned to England 1792. A situation which was obtained for him in the Post-office he threw up in disgust, and made his appearance on the boards of the Sheffield theatre, as 'Orlando,' in 'As You Like It.' Subsequently he played at Newcastle, but was decidedly unsuccessful. He was, however, engaged at Drury Lane in the season of 1794; and in 1797 he appeared at the Haymarket, by which time there was some improvement in his style of acting. Determined to achieve success, he gradually rose to the highest eminence in his profession. For a short time he was manager of Covent Garden, but was very unsuccessful. He retired from the stage 1840, on being appointed examiner of plays, though he subsequently appeared in public from time to time as a reader of Shakspeare. Mr. Kemble tried his hand at dramatic composition, but while his adaptations from the foreign stage were elegant and successful, his original pieces were failures. Died 5 Nov., 1854.

KEMBLE, JOHN MITCHELL, a profound Anglo-Saxon scholar, eldest son of Charles Kemble, the tragedian, was born in London 1807, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1830; M.A. 1833). After quitting the university, he spent much of his time in Germany, being engaged in the unremitting study of the Anglo-Saxon language and literature. His death took place at Dublin 26 March, 1857. Mr. Kemble's principal works are 'Ueber die Stammfabel Westsachsen,' 1836; 'Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici,' 6 vols. 8vo., 1839-48; 'Saxons in England,' 2 vols., 1849; 'A few Notes respecting the Bishops of East Anglia,' 1851; 'State Papers and Correspondence illustrative of the Social and Political State of Europe from the Revolution (1688) to the accession of the House of Hanover, 1857.' His 'Hære Færales, or, Studies in the Archaeology of Northern Nations,' was published 1863, under the editorship of R. G. Latham and A. W. Franks.

KEMBLE, JOHN PHILIP. This ornament of the stage was the eldest son of Mr. Roger Kemble, the manager of a company of comedians in the north of England. He was born at Prescott, Lancashire, 1 Feb., 1757, and received his early education at the Catholic seminary of Sedgley Park, Staffordshire, from whence he proceeded to Douay, with a view to the clerical profession; but preferring the stage to other pursuits, he made his début at Liverpool. After performing with great reputation in many parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland, he appeared on the boards of Drury Lane 30 Sept., 1783, in the character of Hamlet. His success was complete, and from that time he was regarded as the first tragedian of the age. On the secession of Mr. King, he became manager of Drury Lane Theatre. In 1802 he took advantage of the peace to visit the continent, in order to study the French and Spanish histrionic establishments, with a view to the improvement of those at home. On his return he became manager of Covent Garden Theatre, where he continued till 1809, when that building was destroyed by fire. On the restoration of the edifice, Mr. Kemble became the object of popular resentment by raising the prices, which occasioned a series of riots. After a long and honourable career, he took leave of the stage (23 June, 1817), and for the recovery of his health, or at least for the alleviation of his spasmodic sufferings, he went to Montpellier, and from thence to Lausanne, where he died 26 Feb., 1823. In private life Mr. Kemble combined the scholar with the gentleman. He wrote 'Belisarius,' a tragedy; 'The Female Officer,' a farce; and 'Lodoiska,' an opera; besides which he altered and modernised a number of the old dramas. He was also the author of a pamphlet on the character of Macbeth.

KEMP, GEORGE MEIKLE, a Scotch architect, who died 6 March, 1844. The monument to Sir Walter Scott at Edinburgh is his masterpiece.

KEMP, JOSEPH, Mus. Doc., a musical composer, born at Exeter 1778. After studying under the celebrated William Jackson, he was appointed organist of Bristol Cathedral (1802), from whence he removed to London (1807). In 1808 he took the degree of bachelor of music at Cambridge, and the year following that of doctor, on which occasion his exercise entitled, 'The Crucifixion,' was performed. He now became a lecturer on music at several institutions, and invented a new mode of teaching the science. In 1818 he visited the continent, and on his return went to reside in his native city. In April, 1824, he came back to London, where he died on the 22nd of the following month. His works are—A new System of Musical Education, being a Self-Instructor; Twenty Psalmical Melodies; The Jubilee, a Patriotic Entertainment; The Siege of Ica, an opera; The Vocal Magazine; Songs, Glees, Duets, &c.

KEMPELEN, WOLFFGANG, BARON DE, a mechanician, the inventor of the automaton chess-player and other ingenious contrivances. He was also the author of some poetical pieces. Born at Presburg, Hungary, 23 Jan., 1734; died 26 March, 1804.

KEMPIS, THOMAS À, was born at the village of Kempen, in the diocese of Cologne, about 1380. He studied at Deventer, and in 1399 entered the monastery of regular canons of Mount St. Agnes, near Zwol, of which his brother was prior. Here he led a most exemplary life, and died, with the greatest reputation for sanctity, 25 July, 1471. His works were printed at Antwerp in 1615, 3 vols.

KENNEDY.

The principal performance in this collection is the treatise 'De Imitatione Christi,' which is universally known; yet it is much doubted whether Thomas à Kempis was the real author of it, many strong reasons being assigned for the claim of John Gersen, a Benedictine abbot.

KEN, THOMAS, was born at Berkhamstead, Hertfordshire, July, 1637. He was educated at Winchester School, and next at New College, Oxford. In 1666 he became fellow of Winchester College, soon after which he was presented to the rectory of Brixton, in the Isle of Wight, and a prebendal stall in the church of Westminster. In 1679 he completed his degrees in divinity, and about this time went to Holland, as chaplain to the princess of Orange. On his return he was appointed chaplain to Lord Dartmouth, whom he accompanied to Tangier. He next became chaplain to Charles II., and attended him in his dying moments, for which he was made bishop of Bath and Wells. He was one of the seven prelates who joined in a petition to James II. against reading the declaration for liberty of conscience, for which they were sent to the Tower, tried, and acquitted. Notwithstanding this, the good bishop could not, upon principle, transfer his allegiance to the new sovereign, and, in consequence, was deprived of his preterment at the Revolution. Queen Anne settled a pension upon him of two hundred a year, and he was universally esteemed for the excellence of his character. He died 19 March, 1710-11. His works, consisting of sermons, tracts, and poems, were printed in 4 vols. 8vo., 1721, with his life prefixed. The best life of him is that by 'a Layman' (i.e., J. L. Anderson), 8vo., Lond., 1853.

KENDALL, GEORGE, D.D., a Calvinistic divine, born at Coton, in the parish of Dawlish, Devonshire, and educated at Oxford. He obtained a prebend of Exeter and the rectory of Blissland, Cornwall; but was ejected at the Restoration for nonconformity. Died 19 Aug., 1663. He published 'Vindication of the Doctrine commonly received in churches concerning God's intentions of special grace and favour to his elect in the death of Christ'; 'Sancti Sancti; or the common Doctrine of the perseverance of the Saints, &c., vindicated' against John Goodwin.

KENNINGHAM. See CUNINGHAM.

KENNEDY, CHARLES RANN, a poet and translator, born about 1807, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he greatly distinguished himself, and was elected to a fellowship. He then entered Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the bar 1835. While practising in London he was engaged in many important cases—taking, for example, a prominent share in the arguments of the famous case of 'Stockdale v. Hansard,' in reference to which he afterwards published a tract of some note in its day on 'The Privilege of Parliament.' Ill-health interrupting his professional labours, he was for some time engaged on the press, chiefly on the 'Globe' and 'John Bull.' Ultimately he returned to practice, joined the Midland Circuit, and settled at Birmingham. Died Dec., 1867, æt. 60. As a scholar he was widely known by his translations of Demosthenes' Orations, and of Virgil. He was also the author of poems, translations, and magazine articles, and at the time of his death he was engaged in the composition of a poem on 'Hannibal in Italy.'

KENNEDY, JAMES, bishop of St. Andrew's, was born about 1405. He was the son of James Kennedey, by the countess of Angus, and, in 1437, was made bishop of Dunkeld, with which he held the abbey of Scoon, and, in 1440, was raised to the see of St. Andrew's. In 1444 he was constituted lord chancellor, which dignity he soon resigned. He founded the college of St. Salvador, and the church within its precincts, also the abbey of the Observantines. In the minority of James III. he was appointed one of the lords of the regency. Died 10 May, 1466.

KENNEDY, JOHN, M.D., was a native of Scotland. He resided some years in Smyrna, and was a great collector of antiquities, particularly coins, which were sold by auction after his death, which occurred 26 Jan., 1760. He wrote a 'Dissertation on the Coins of Carausius; which was answered by Dr. Stukeley.

KENNEDY, JOHN, rector of Bradley, Derbyshire, published 'Scripture Chronology,' 1751, for which work Dr. Johnson wrote a dedication; An Examination of Jackson's Chronological Antiquities; The Doctrine of Commensurability. He attempted to prove the perfect chronology of the Hebrew Bible, and was answered by Ferguson; but much more ably in a series of letters by the Rev. Thomas Bowen, of Bristol, in the Christian Magazine. The date of his death is not recorded, but he was living in 1774.

KENNETH I., king of Scotland, ascended the throne 558, and died 604.

KENNETH II., son of Alpin, succeeded to the throne of Scotland 823, and died 854.

KENNETH III., son of Malcolm, began to reign 969, and was assassinated 994.

KENNETT, BASIL, D.D., brother of the bishop of Peterborough, was born at Postling, Kent, 1674. He was sent to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was elected to a fellowship. In 1706 he went as chaplain to the English factory at Leghorn. He returned 1714, and died Jan., 1714-5. His principal works, besides translations of ancient and modern authors, are—Romæ Antiquæ Notitia, or the Antiquities of Rome; Lives of the Grecian Poets; Exposition of the Apostles' Creed; Sermons.

KENNETT, WHITE, was the son of the Rev. Basil Kennett, rector of Dunchurch, and vicar of Postling, in Kent. He was born at Dover 10 Aug., 1600, and received his education at Westminster School. Thence he proceeded to St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his master's degree in 1684, and the same year was presented to the vicarage of Ambrosden, Oxfordshire. In 1689, as he was shooting, the gun burst, and wounded him in the forehead, so that he was ever after obliged to wear a patch of black velvet. After this he became vice-principal of St. Edmund Hall, and, in 1693, rector of Shottesbrooke, Berks. In 1699 he took his doctor's degree, and the next year obtained the living of St. Botolph, Aldgate. He now became popular among the low church party, and had a controversy with Atterbury respecting the rights of convocation. In 1706 he was employed by the booksellers to superintend a collection of English historians, and to continue the work, of which a second edition appeared in 1719, in 3 vols. folio. He made himself conspicuous by a funeral sermon preached for the first duke of Devonshire (1707), which gave great offence, as an apology for the sins of the great. The same year he was made dean of Peterborough, but so obnoxious had he now made himself by his party zeal, that Welton, the rector of Whitechapel, caused his portrait to be exhibited in the character of Judas, in the altar-piece of that church. This act of indecency was properly resented, and the painting removed. In 1718 he was made bishop of Peterborough. He died 19 Dec., 1728. The bishop was an able antiquary, and particularly conversant in the northern languages. His principal works are 'Parochial Antiquities attempted in the History of Ambrosden, Burcester, and other adjacent parts in the counties of Oxford and Bucks, with a Glossary of obsolete terms,' 4to., 1695; new edition by Dr. Bandinel, 2 vols., 1818; Ecclesiastical Synods and Parliamentary Convocations in the Church of England; The History of the Convocation; The Case of Impropriations and of the augmentation of Vicarages; Account of the Society for propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts; A Register and Chronicle. This prelate's biographical MSS. form part of the Lansdowne collection in the British Museum.

KENNEY, JAMES, a dramatist, was a native of Ireland, and died at Brompton 25 July, 1849.

KENNICOTT, BENJAMIN, D.D., was born 4 April, 1718, at Totnes, Devonshire, of which place his father was parish clerk. He received his education at the grammar school of his native town, after which he became the master of the charity school there till 1744, when, by the aid of some friends, he was enabled to go to Wadham College, Oxford. In 1747 he published 'Two Dissertations; the first on the Tree of Life in Paradise, and the second on the Oblations of Cain and Abel;' which procured him so much reputation that he was elected fellow of Exeter College; and the university, as a mark of favour, conferred on him his bachelor's degree without fees. In 1750 he took his degree of M.A., and soon after formed the design of collating the Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible. Preparatory to this great undertaking, he published in 1753 'The State of the printed Hebrew Text of the Old Testament considered;' but it was not till 1758 that the design began to take effect, under the auspices of the university, and aided by a most liberal subscription. In the meantime Mr. Kennicott was appointed one of the preachers at Whitehall, and vicar of Culham, Oxfordshire. In 1761 he took his doctor's degree, and the same year the king gave him a pension of two hundred a year. In 1767 he was made Radcliffe librarian, and in 1769 he had concluded the Herculean task, in which he had been engaged for more than ten years. In 1770 he was promoted to a prebend of Westminster, which he exchanged for a canonry of Christ Church, where he died 18 Aug., 1783. Dr. Kennicott published 'Annual Accounts of his Collations;' several tracts and sermons; and his edition of the Hebrew Bible with Prolegomena, 2 vols. folio, 1776 and 1780. After his death were printed 'Remarks on select Passages in the Old Testament, and sermons.'

KENRICK, WILLIAM, LL.D., was born at Watford, Herts. He was brought up to the business of a rule maker, which he quitted for literature, and might have attained respectability, had he conducted himself with propriety. Having procured a doctor's degree at Leyden, he began his career with poetry, and next turned critic, in the 'Monthly Review.' In 1765 he attacked Dr. Johnson's Shakespeare; but that great man only said 'He did not think himself bound by Kenrick's rules.' The next year he produced the play of 'Falstaff's Wedding,' an imitation of Shakspeare, and not devoid of merit. This was followed by the comedy of the 'Widowed Wife,' which had no success. After this he pretended to have discovered the perpetual motion, and, in 1772, was involved in a lawsuit with Garrick, against whom he had published a scandalous libel. In 1774 he delivered lectures on Shakspeare, and the next year commenced the 'London Review,' which he continued to his death, on 10 June, 1779.

KENT, EDWARD AUGUSTUS, DUKE OF, father of Queen Victoria, was the fourth son of George III., and born 2 Nov., 1767. His education in England was conducted by Dr. Fisher, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, and next at Göttingen, from whence he removed to Geneva, where he remained till 1790, when he proceeded in a military capacity to Gibraltar. The year following he went to Canada, and in 1793 passed through the United States to the West Indies, where he joined Sir Charles (afterwards Earl) Grey, and was present at the siege of St. Lucia. In 1794 he returned to North America, and served at Halifax as a major-general till 1796, when he became a lieutenant-general, and soon afterwards quitted that station for England. In 1799 he was created duke of Kent, Strathern, and Dublin, at which time he obtained a parliamentary grant suited to his dignity. The same year he revisited America, but returned again in 1800, and in 1802 was made governor of Gibraltar, where his discipline occasioned such a dangerous mutiny that he was recalled the year following. In 1818 he married the youngest daughter of the duke of Saxe-Coburg, and widow of the prince of Leinengen. Persevering in the economical plan which he had laid down prior to this change in his situation, the duke led a retired life, first in Germany, and next in England, especially after the birth of a daughter (afterwards Queen Victoria), at Kensington, 24 May, 1819. He then went to Sidmouth, Devonshire, for the benefit of the climate, but while there was attacked by a pulmonary complaint, which carried him off very suddenly, 23 Jan., 1820.

KENT, JAMES, an eminent composer of sacred music, was born at Winchester 1700. He was appointed organist at Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards (1737) at the college chapel, Winchester, where he died 1776.

KENT, JAMES, an eminent jurist of New York, author of 'Commentaries on American Law,' &c., was born 1763, and died 12 Dec., 1847.

KENT, MARIA LOUISA VICTORIA, DUCHESS OF, daughter of Francis, duke of Saxe-Saalfeld Coburg, was born 17 Aug., 1786. She married first the prince of Leiningen, and secondly (1818) the duke of Kent, by whom she had a daughter, who afterwards ascended the English throne as Queen Victoria. The duchess died at Frogmore 16 March, 1861.

KENT, WILLIAM, an artist, born in Yorkshire 1685. He was originally a coach-painter, but left that branch to study the principles of design, for which purpose he went to Rome, where he found a patron in Lord Burlington, who brought him to England, and lodged him in his own house in 1719. His paintings, however, are but indifferent, and his portraits not at all like the persons they were said to represent. In architecture he succeeded better; and he had also a good taste in ornamental gardening. By the interest of his patron he became master-carpenter, architect, keeper of the pictures, and principal painter to the crown. Died 12 April, 1748.

KENYON, LOVD, Lord Kenyon, was son of Lloyd Kenyon, Esq., of Gredington, Flintshire, and born there 1733. After receiving his education at the school of Ruthin, Denbighshire, he was articled to Mr. Tomlinson, an attorney of Nantwich, in Cheshire. At the expiration of his time he entered Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the bar 1761. His progress was slow at first, but, on forming an acquaintance with Thurlow, his practice in the Court of Chancery increased. In 1780 he acquired celebrity by managing the defence of Lord George Gordon, and, in 1782, was appointed attorney-general, soon after which he was made chief justice of Chester. In 1784 he became master of the rolls, and was created a baronet. On the resignation of Lord Mansfield (1788), he was constituted chief justice of the King's Bench, and elevated to the peerage. He died at Bath 2 April, 1802.

KEPLER, JOHN, an astronomer, born at Wied, in the duchy of Wurtemberg, 27 Dec., 1571. He was educated at Tübingen under Mæstlinus, and, in 1591, was appointed professor of astronomy at Gratz, soon after which he published his 'Mysterium Cosmographicum.' In 1598 he was banished the university for professing the reformed religion, but was afterwards recalled, and restored to his office. In 1600 he quitted that place of his own accord, to become mathematician to the Emperor Rodolphus, at Prague, where he experienced difficulties which compelled him to remove to Linz, on a pension. He died at Ratisbon 15 Nov., 1630. To Kepler we are indebted for the discovery of the laws which govern the planetary motions, or that these bodies describe areas proportional to their times, that they move in elliptic orbits; and that the squares of their periodic times are as the cubes of their mean distances. His principal works are—The Rudolphine Tables; Optical Astronomy; Account of a New Star in Sagittarius; New Astronomy, or Celestial Physics; The Harmony of the World; Somnium Astro-nomicum.

KEPPEL, AUGUSTUS, Viscount Keppel, an English admiral, was the second son of William, earl of Albemarle, and born 2 April, 1725. He went with Anson round the world, and afterwards passed through all the gradations of the service, till he attained the full rank of admiral. In 1778 he commanded the channel fleet, and had a partial action with the French off Ushant, on 12 July; but nothing decisive being effected, the nation was dissatisfied. Counter-charges were brought against each other by Admiral Keppel and his second in command, Sir Hugh Palliser; when the former was acquitted, and the latter censured. As party spirit, however, was high on this occasion, it was believed by the best judges that justice was unequally administered. In 1782 Keppel was made a peer, and afterwards appointed first lord of the Admiralty. Died 3 Oct., 1786.

KER, JOHN, duke of Roxburgh. See ROXBURGH.

KERCKHERDERE, JOHN GERARD, historiographer to the Emperor Joseph I., born near Maestricht, about 1678, and died 1738. He was author of many works on general history and theology.

KERVILLARS, JEAN MARIN DE, a French Jesuit, born 1668 at Vannes; died 1745 at Paris. He translated Ovid's Fasti and Elegies.

KESSEL, JOHN VAN, an artist, was born at Antwerp 1626; died about 1690. He painted portraits in the manner of Vandyck, but excelled in the representation of flowers, fruits, and insects. His son, Ferdinand, was patronized by John Sobieski.

KETEL, CORNELIUS, a Dutch artist, born at Gouda 1548. He came to England in the reign of Elizabeth, whose portrait he painted. On his return to Holland he laid aside the use of pencils, and painted with the tops of his fingers; and afterwards he tried to execute historical pictures with his toes. Died about 1610.

KETT, HENRY, B.D., was born at Norwich 1761, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1790 he was appointed Bampton lecturer. After holding his fellowship for many years he married and obtained the living of Charlton, Gloucestershire. He was found drowned at Stanwell 30 June, 1825. He published 'History, the Interpreter of Prophecy'; 'Elements of General Knowledge,' 2 vols.; 'Emily,' a novel.

KETT, WILLIAM, a tanner of Norfolk, who in the reign of Edward VI. excited a revolt in that county against the government. The insurgents, to the number of nearly 20,000 men, marched to Norwich, which they captured, and Kett formed a tribunal under a large oak, which was called the tree of reformation. They at first protested only against inclosures and the exactions of the nobility and gentry, but they afterwards invighed against innovations in religion, and demanded the restoration of the Catholic faith. After defeating the marquis of Northampton, they were routed by the earl of Warwick, Kett, with several others, being hanged on the tree of reformation 1549.

KETTLEWELL, JOHN, a divine, born at Northallerton, Yorkshire, 10 March, 1653. From the free school of his native town he went to St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, and in 1675 obtained a fellowship in Lincoln College. In 1682 he was presented to the vicarage of Coleshill, Warwickshire, which he lost at the Revolution for refusing the oaths to the new government. Died 12 April, 1695. His works were printed in 2 vols. folio, 1718.

KEULEN, JANNSSEN VAN, a portrait painter, was born in London of Dutch parents, and died 1665. He was in great favour with Charles I. before Vandyck came to England.

His work, entitled 'The Burthen of a loaden Conscience,' first published 1608, formerly enjoyed a high popularity.

KILBYE, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Ratcliffe, Leicestershire. He studied at Lincoln College, Oxford, of which society he became fellow, and, in 1590, rector. He was also professor of Hebrew in the university, and one of the translators of the Bible. He died 17 Nov., 1620, aged about sixty. Dr. Kilbye was the early friend and patron of Bishop Sanderson.

KILHAM, ALEXANDER, a Wesleyan preacher, whose pamphlet, entitled 'The Progress of Liberty,' led to his expulsion by the Methodist conference. He thereupon established what is called the 'Methodist New Connexion'; and died 20 Dec., 1798.

KILIAN, CORNELIUS, a native of Brabant, who was corrector of the press to Plantin for nearly half a century. He published an Apology for Correctors of the Press, against Authors; 'Etymologicum Linguae Teutonicae'; and Latin poems. Died 1607.

KILLIGREW, ANNE, daughter of Henry Killigrew, D.D., was born in London. She evinced great genius at an early age, particularly in poetry and painting; but died of the small-pox, at the age of twenty-five, in June, 1685. Her poems were printed 1686, with an elegiac ode by Dryden. As an artist she drew several historic pieces; and also portraits of James II., when duke of York, and his duchess.

KILLIGREW, CATHARINE, daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke, was born at Giddy Hall, Essex, about 1530. She married Sir Henry Killigrew, of Cornwall; and was distinguished as well for her knowledge of the learned languages, as for her genius in poetry. She died about 1600.

KILLIGREW, HENRY, D.D., brother of Thomas and William Killigrew, was born 1612. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he proceeded doctor in divinity in 1642, in which year he was made prebendary of Westminster. He suffered much for his loyalty; but at the Restoration recovered his prebend, was appointed master of the Savoy, and rector of Wheatthamstead, Herts. He wrote the Conspiracy, a tragedy, 1638; Pallantus and Eudora, a tragedy, 1652, folio; and sermons on several occasions. Died about 1690.

KILLIGREW, THOMAS, brother of William, mentioned below, was born 1611. He was page to Charles I., and groom of the bedchamber to Charles II. He wrote nine plays, which were collected into a folio volume in 1664. He died 1682. This is the Killigrew who is commonly called King Charles's jester.

KILLIGREW, WILLIAM, a dramatist, the son of Sir Robert Killigrew, was born at Hanworth, Middlesex, 1605. He received his education at St. John's College, Oxford, after which he went on his travels. On his return he was made governor of Falmouth and Pendennis Castle, and, for his faithful services to Charles I., suffered considerably in his estate. At the Restoration he was knighted, and made vice-chamberlain to the king. He died in 1663. His plays are—The Siege of Urban; Selindra; Ormasdes; and Love and Friendship. He also wrote Midnight and Daily Thoughts, in prose and verse; and the Artless Midnight Thoughts of a Gentleman at Court.

KILMARNOCK.

KILMARNOCK, WILLIAM BOYD, fourth EARL OF, a Scottish nobleman, born 1704. Having joined the Pretender's standard in 1745, he displayed considerable courage till the fatal battle of Culloden, when, finding it impossible to escape, he surrendered himself prisoner to the king's troops. He was found guilty of high treason, and beheaded on Tower Hill 18 Aug., 1746.

KILWARDEN, ARTHUR WOLFE, VISCOUNT, chief justice of the King's Bench in Ireland, was killed by a mob in the streets of Dublin 23 July, 1803.

KIMBER, ISAAC, a dissenting minister, born at Wantage, Berks, 1 Dec., 1692. He studied under Mr. Eames and Professor Ward; after which he officiated to a congregation at Nantwich, in Cheshire; from whence he came to London, and became morning preacher at a meeting in Old Artillery Lane. But his principal support was derived from correcting the press, and compiling books of some popularity. The chief of these were a Life of Cromwell; and a History of England, in 4 vols. He died in 1758, about which time a volume of his sermons was printed. His son, Edward Kimber, was also a literary compiler, and died in 1769. His publications were the Peerages of Scotland and Ireland; the Baronetage of England; a History of England, 10 vols. 8vo.; and a novel, entitled 'The Adventures of Joe Thompson,' 2 vols.

KINASTON, SIR FRANCIS, an English poet, born at Otley, Shropshire, in or about 1588. He studied at Oriel College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Cambridge, and there took his master's degree. Charles I. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and made him one of the esquires of the body. In 1636 Sir Francis became regent of a literary institution, called the 'Musæum Minervæ;' but it died with the founder, about 1642. He translated Chaucer's 'Troilus and Cressida' into Latin; but is best known by his 'Leoline and Sydanis;' with 'Cinthiades,' 1641.

KING, EDWARD, an ingenious youth, who was fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, but was unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester to Ireland 10 Aug., 1637. This melancholy event gave occasion to Milton to write his Lycidas. He wrote some elegant poems, which are in Nichols's collection.

KING, EDWARD, F.R.S., F.S.A., was born in Norfolk 1735. He was educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, was called to the bar, and became recorder of Lynn. In 1767 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and, in 1770, a member of that of Antiquaries, of which last he became president, on the death of Dean Milles in 1784; but being set aside at the next election, he withdrew from the society. Died 16 April, 1807. Mr. King published—An Essay on the English Constitution; Hymns to the Supreme Being; Proposals for a Marine School; Morsels of Criticism; Considerations on the National Debt; Remarks concerning Stones said to have fallen from the Clouds; Vestiges of Oxford Castle; Munimenta Antiqua, 3 vols. folio; Remarks on the Signs of the Times. The last-mentioned work was answered by Bishop Horsley.

KING, GREGORY, an heraldic and commercial

writer, born at Lichfield 15 Dec., 1648. After receiving a grammatical education at the free school of his native city, he became secretary to Sir William Dugdale, who employed him in painting arms, sketching views, and drawing pedigrees. He next worked under Ogilvy, and engraved a number of plates for that voluminous compiler's works. In 1677 he was created Rouge-dragon in the herald's office, where he was employed on every important occasion. He also became secretary to the commissioners of public accounts, and to the comptrollers of the army. Died 29 Aug., 1712. He published—The order of Installation of Prince George of Denmark, Charles Duke of Somerset, and George Duke of Northumberland; The Installation of Henry Duke of Norfolk, Henry Earl of Peterborough, and Laurence Earl of Rochester; 'Natural and Political Observations and Conclusions upon the State and Condition of England,' 12mo., 1696, 'reprinted in the 3rd edition of George Chalmers's Estimate 1802, and again, separately, 1810.

KING, HENRY, son of the bishop of London, was born at Wornall, Bucks, Jan., 1591. He had his education at Westminster, and Christ Church, Oxford. After taking his degrees in arts, he entered into orders, and became chaplain to James I. He was also made archdeacon of Colchester, residentiary of St. Paul's, and canon of Christ Church. In 1625 he took his doctor's degree; and in 1638 was made dean of Rochester. In 1641 he was advanced to the bishopric of Chichester, of which he was soon afterwards deprived by the ruling powers; but he recovered it at the Restoration, and died 1 Oct., 1669. His works are—Sermons; Exposition of the Lord's Prayer; A Poetical Version of the Psalms; Poems, Elegies, Paradoxes, and Sonnets; Latin and Greek Poems. His brother, John King, D.D., became a student of Christ Church, public orator of the university, canon of Windsor, and rector of Remenham in Berkshire. He died 2 Jan., 1638-9.

KING, JOHN, an English bishop, born at Wornall, Bucks, about 1559, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford. He became chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, and archdeacon of Nottingham. In 1601 he took his doctor's degree; in 1605 was made dean of Christ Church; and in 1611 bishop of London. He died 30 March, 1621, and soon afterwards a report was circulated, that he had been reconciled to the church of Rome, which was contradicted by his son in a sermon preached at Paul's Cross. The bishop published Lectures upon Jonah, 1594.

KING, JOHN, D.D., was born at St. Columb, Cornwall, 1 May, 1652. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, but took the degree of D.D. at Catharine Hall, Cambridge. He became successively curate of Bray, Berks, rector of Pertenhall Bedfordshire, rector of Chelsea, and prebendary of York. Died 30 May, 1732. His publications are—Animadversions on a Letter of Advice to the Nonconformists; The Case of Bishop Atherton; Toland-Pseudologo-Mastix, or a Currycomb for a lying Coxcomb. Some of his manuscripts are in the British Museum. His son, John King, born 5 Aug., 1696, was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. He afterwards settled as a physician at Stamford, and died there 12 Oct., 1728. He published a Latin letter to Dr. Freind on Epidemics; and an edition of 'Euripidis Hecuba, Orestes, et Phœnissæ,' 1726.

KING, JOHN GLEN, D.D., was born in Norfolk 1731, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. In 1764 he became chaplain to the British factory at St. Petersburg, where the Empress Catharine appointed him her medallist. Soon after his return from Russia he purchased the chapel in Broad Court, Drury Lane, where he officiated till his death 2 Nov., 1787. He published 'The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church in Russia;' and 'Observations on the Barberini Vase in the 'Archæologia.'

KING, PETER, Lord KING, Chancellor of England, was the son of a grocer at Exeter, where he was born 1669. His mother was sister to Mr. Locke, who assisted him in his studies, and advised him to study the law, in consequence of which he became a member of the Inner Temple. While following this pursuit, he published 'An Inquiry into the Constitution of the Primitive Church.' This produced a friendly controversy between the author and his countryman, Mr. Edmund Elys; and their letters were printed 1694. In 1699 he obtained a seat in the House of Commons; but neither this nor his legal occupations could draw his mind altogether from theological studies, the fruits of which appeared in 'The History of the Apostles' Creed,' a work of great value, and a necessary supplement to Pearson. In 1708 the author was chosen recorder of London, and the same year received the honour of knighthood. In 1709 he was one of the managers on the trial of Dr. Sacheverel; and on the accession of George I. he was appointed chief justice of the Common Pleas. In 1725 he was made lord chancellor, and created a baron. He resigned the seals in 1733, and died July 22, in the following year. His private diary, written in Rich's system of short-hand, has been deciphered by Thomas Rees, and printed under the title of 'Notes of Domestic and Foreign Affairs during the last years of the reign of George I. and the early part of the reign of George II.'

KING, PETER, seventh Lord King, was born 31 Aug., 1775, and it is said received his education in the university of Cambridge. He succeeded to the title 1793; and died in London 4 June, 1833. His principal work is 'The Life of John Locke, with extracts from his Correspondence, Journals, and Common-place Books,' 4to., London, 1829; 2 vols. 8vo., 1830; 1 vol. 8vo., 1858. His lordship's 'Select Speeches and Writings' were published in 1844, with a memoir of his life by Earl Fortescue.

KING, RICHARD, was born at Bristol 1749, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his master's degree in 1774. He became rector of Worthen, Shropshire, and vicar of Steeple Morden, Cambridgeshire, where he died 1810. He wrote—'On the Inspiration of the Scriptures;' 'The Alliance between Church and State; Letters from Abraham Plymley to his brother Peter, on the Catholic Question. His wife, Mrs. Frances Elizabeth King, who was the sister of Sir Thomas Bernard, wrote 'The Benefits of the Christian Temper;' and 'Female Scripture Biography.' She died 1821.

KING, RUFUS, an American statesman, born 1755; died 29 April, 1827.

KING, WILLIAM, D.C.L., was born in London 1603. He received his education, first at Westminster School, and next at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1688). He then applied himself to the study of the civil law, in which he took both degrees in 1692, and was admitted an advocate in Doctors' Commons. In 1694 he answered Lord Molesworth's account of Denmark; for which the Princess Anne made him her secretary. In 1697 he had a share in the controversy with Bentley, respecting the epistles of Phalaris, for which he was roughly handled by that powerful critic. In 1698 came out 'A Journey to London,' an admirable piece of irony, which was followed by a similar piece, called the 'Transactioner,' against the Royal Society. About 1703 he went to Ireland, where he was made judge of the Admiralty, commissioner of prizes, and keeper of the records; but for want of prudence he made no advantage of these appointments, and returned to London in 1708. In 1710 he was concerned in the Examiner; and he was also one of the defenders of Sacheverel. The next year he published 'An Historical Account of the Heathen Gods and Heroes;' and at this time was appointed gazetteer; but resigned the place soon after, and died on Christmas Day, 1712. His works were printed in 1778, in 3 vols. 8vo., with his life prefixed.

KING, WILLIAM, an Irish prelate, was born at Antrim 1 May, 1650. He was educated, first at the school of Dungannon, and next at Trinity College, Dublin. Having taken orders, he was made prebendary and precentor of Tuam; and in 1679 chancellor of St. Patrick's, and minister of St. Werburgh's, Dublin. In 1686 he engaged in a controversy with Peter Manby, dean of Derry, who had embraced the Catholic religion. Indeed, during the reign of James II., Mr. King evinced such hostility towards Catholicism that at the revolution his zeal was rewarded with the deanery of St. Patrick's. In 1689 he took his doctor's degree, and in Jan., 1690-1, was promoted to the see of Derry, from whence he was translated to Dublin March, 1702-3. He died 8 May, 1729, and was buried in the churchyard of Donnybrook, near Dublin. His principal works are—'The State of the Protestants in Ireland under the late King James;' 'Discourse concerning the Inventions of Men in the worship of God;' and 'De Origine Mali,' a translation of which by Edmund Law appeared in 1739.

KING, WILLIAM, D.C.L., was born at Stepney 1685. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his degree of doctor of laws 1715; after which he became secretary to the duke of Ormond and the earl of Arran, when chancellors of the University, by virtue of which connection he was made principal of St. Mary Hall, and public orator; in which last situation he distinguished himself by his eloquence, though he suffered much abuse on account of his Tory principles. Died 30 Dec., 1763. He edited South's posthumous sermons, and published—Miltoni Epistola ad Polliionem; Sermo Pedestris; Scamnum, ecloga; Templum Libertatis; Tres Oratiunculæ; Epistola Objurgatoria; Antonietti Ducis Corscorum Epist. ad Corscos de rege eligendo; Eulogium Jacci Etonensis, i. e. John Burton, of Eton, commonly called Dr. Jack; Aviti Epist. ad Perillam, virginem Scotam; Oratiuncula habita in domo Convocationis Oxon, 1757. His 'Political and Literary Anecdotes of his Own Time (1715-60)' were published in 1818.

KINGSBOROUGH, EDWARD KING VISCOENT,

KINGSMILL.

only son of George third earl of Kingston, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He represented the county of Cork from 1820-6; and died at Dublin 27 Feb., 1837, aged 42. His lordship was fond of antiquarian studies, and brought out a magnificent work on 'The Antiquities of Mexico,' 6 vols., 1831.

KINGSMILL, ANDREW, a divine born at Sidmanton, Hampshire, 1538, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; but removed from thence to a fellowship at All Souls. He became an admired preacher; but on turning Puritan, went to Lausanne in Switzerland, where he died Sept., 1569. His works are—'A View of Man's Estate, 1574; A Godly Advice touching Marriage, 1580; Treatise for such as are troubled in Mind, or afflicted in Body; Godly Exhortation to bear patiently all Afflictions for the Gospel; Conference between a learned Christian and an afflicted Conscience.

KIPLING, THOMAS, D.D., a native of Yorkshire, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded D.D., 1784, at which time he was appointed deputy professor of divinity under Bishop Watson. He preached the Boyle's Lectures 1792, but never printed the course. In 1793 Dr. Kipling rendered himself obnoxious to a certain party by leading the prosecution of William Frend, of Jesus College, for professing Unitarianism while he held a fellowship; in consequence of which that gentleman was deprived and expelled. As the doctor was selected to superintend the publication of the Codex of Beza Dr. Edwards attacked the work with great acrimony, amounting to personal hostility. He obtained the deanery of Peterborough, with which he held the living of Holme on Spalding Moor, Yorkshire, where he died 1822. His publications are—'The Elementary Parts of Dr. Smith's Complete System of Optics,' 1778; 'Codex Theodori Bezae Cantabrigiensis, Evangelia et Apostolorum Acta compiectens, Quadratis Literis Græco-Latinis,' 2 vols. folio, 1793; 'The Articles of the Church of England proved not to be Calvinistic,' 1802; 'Certain Accusations brought lately by the Irish Papists, against British and Irish Protestants, examined,' 1809.

KIPPIS, ANDREW, D.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., was born at Nottingham 28 March, 1725. He was educated under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton; and in 1746 became minister of an Independent congregation at Boston, Lincolnshire, from whence he removed, in 1750, to Dorking, Surrey; and in 1753 to the meeting in Prince's Street, Westminster. In 1763 he was chosen one of the tutors of Coward's Academy; and in 1767 the university of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity. In 1778 he was chosen a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries; and in 1779 a fellow of the Royal Society. Dr. Kippis was one of the tutors of the new academy or college, as it was called, at Hackney, in 1786; but in a few years he resigned that situation, and died 8 Oct., 1795. He undertook a new edition of the Biographia Britannica, of which five volumes were printed. He also projected the 'New Annual Register;' and published a number of pieces, the principal of which were—'The Life of Captain Cook;' 'A Vindication of the Dissenters;' a volume of sermons; and 'Observations on the late Contests in the Royal Society.' He was of the Socinian persuasion.

dition of a house painter raised himself by his talents and industry to a respectable rank among the artists of his day, and was elected a fellow of both the Royal and Antiquarian Societies. He was born 1716, and first attracted public notice by a series of drawings which he published, taken from the monumental and other antiquities of the county in which he lived. 'A Treatise on Perspective,' which he edited in 1774, increased his reputation, and introduced him to the knowledge of the earl of Bute, through whose interest he was appointed drawing-master to Queen Charlotte, and clerk of the works at Kew Palace. His other writings are 'The Perspective of Architecture,' 2 vols. folio, 1761, printed at the expense of King George III.; 'A Map of Suffolk,' 1766, originally drawn by his father. He is also known as the father of Mrs. Trimmer. Mr. Kirby died 21 June, 1774, and was buried in Kew churchyard.

KIRBY, WILLIAM, F.R.S., an eminent entomologist, born at Winesham, Suffolk, 1759, and educated at the grammar school at Ipswich, whence he removed to Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1781; M.A. 1816). He was inducted to the rectory of Barham, in his native county, 1796, and held that benefice until his death, 4 July, 1850. In addition to many learned papers in the Entomological and Zoological Journals, the Linnean Society's Transactions, &c., he wrote 'Monographia Apum Angliæ; or, an Attempt to divide into their natural Genera and Families such Species of the Linnean Genus Apis as have been discovered in England,' 2 vols., 1802; 'An Introduction to Entomology; or, Elements of the Natural History of Insects,' 4 vols., 1826, in collaboration with William Spence; 'History, Habits, and Instinct of Animals' (Bridgewater Treatise), 1835; the description of the insects of the 'Fauna Boreali America' of Sir John Richardson, M.D., forming the 4th vol. of that work, 1837; 'Sermons on our Lord's Temptation.' Mr. Kirby's 'Life and Letters,' by the Rev. John Freeman, appeared in 1852.

KIRCH, MARY MARGARET, was born at Panitzsch, in Upper Lusatia, 1670, being the daughter of Matthias Winkelmann, a Lutheran minister. She married (1692) Godfrey Kirch, who, when appointed royal astronomer at Berlin (1700), found in his wife an intelligent assistant and an able calculator. In 1702 she discovered a comet, on which she and her husband published some observations; and in 1707 she observed a remarkable Aurora Borealis. The husband died 25 July, 1710, aged 70, and the following year his widow published a discourse on the approaching conjunctions of Saturn, Jupiter, &c. She died at Berlin 29 Dec., 1720. Her son, Christian Frederick Kirch, acquired some celebrity by his astronomical writings, and died 9 March, 1740, aged 46.

KIRCHER, ATHANASIUS, a Jesuit, was born at Geysen, near Fulda, in Germany, 2 May, 1602. He studied at Wurtzburg, and next at Avignon, after which he was called to teach mathematics in the college belonging to his order at Rome, where also he was professor of Hebrew; and died 28 Nov., 1680. His principal works are—'Oedipus Ægyptiacus; id est, universalis Hieroglyphicæ veterum doctrinæ temporum injuria abolitæ, instauratio,' 4 vols. folio; Prælusiones Magneticæ; Primitiæ Gnomonicæ Catopticæ; Ars magna lucis et umbræ; Musurgia Universalis, 2 vols.; Obeliscus Pamphilii; Itinerarium extaticum; Obeliscus

KIRCHER, CONRAD, a Protestant divine of Augsburg, who published in 1607 'Concordantia Veteris Testamenti Græcæ, Ebræis vocibus respondentis, &c.,' 2 vols. Died after 1622.

KIRCHMANN, JOHN, a German antiquary, born at Lübeck 18 Jan., 1575, became rector of the college there, and died 20 March, 1643. He wrote on the Funerals of the Romans; on Kings, &c.

KIRK, JOHN, D.D., an English divine of the Roman communion, was born at Acton Burnell, near Shrewsbury, 13 April, 1760, and at ten years of age was sent to Sedgley Park School. His early inclination to the ecclesiastical state, united with his talents and proficiency in every branch of elementary knowledge, soon recommended him to his superiors as a fit subject to be sent to the English college at Rome, where, during a residence of ten years, he finished his humanity studies with great applause, and prosecuted those of philosophy and divinity. He returned to England 1785, and afterwards became president at Sedgley Park. In 1795 he was appointed chaplain and private secretary to Dr. Charles Berington, vicar-apostolic of the midland district. Subsequently he settled in Lichfield, where he erected a new Catholic chapel in 1803. He was created D.D. by Pope Gregory XVI. in 1841. At Lichfield he spent the remainder of his long and laborious life, dying there 21 Dec., 1851. During his residence in Rome, and for upwards of forty years of his after life, he was preparing materials for a continuation of Dodd's 'Church History of England.' His collections formed upwards of 50 volumes in folio and quarto. These were afterwards handed over to the Rev. M. A. Tierney. Dr. Kirk also copied and prepared for publication the papers of Sir Ralph Sadler, which appeared in 1809 in 3 large quarto volumes, with a biographical sketch by Sir Walter Scott. In conjunction with the Rev. Joseph Berington he composed a well-known controversial work, entitled 'The Faith of Catholics confirmed by Scripture and attested by the Fathers of the Five First Centuries.' In 1815 he published 'Roman Catholic Principles in reference to God and the King; first published in the year 1680; to which is prefixed an Inquiry respecting the Editions and the Author of that valuable Tract.' He ascribes its authorship, with great probability, to James Corker the Benedictine.

KIKKES, WILLIAM SENHOUSE, M.D., one of the physicians to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, wrote 'A Handbook of Physiology.' Died 8 Dec., 1864.

KIRKLAND, THOMAS, M.D., a physician and writer on subjects connected with his profession, died at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, 17 Jan., 1798, aged 77.

KIRKPATRICK, WILLIAM, an English major-general, was born 1760, and died 22 March, 1812, in Bengal, where he had spent the greater part of his life in the service of the East India Company. He was reputed an accomplished orientalist, and published Biographies of Persian Poets in the 'New Asiatic Miscellany,' Calcutta, 1789; 'An Account of the Kingdom of Nepal,' 4to., Lond., 1811; and a Selection of the Letters of the Sultan Tipoo-Saib, 4to., 1811.

KITCHENER.

KIRNBERGER, JOHN PHILIP, a musical composer, born at Saalfeld, in Thuringia, 1721; died 27 July, 1783.

KIRSTENIUS, GEORGE, professor of medicine at Stettin, in Pomerania, was born there 20 Jan., 1613, and died 4 March, 1660.

KIRSTENIUS, PETER, a physician, born at Breslau, in Silesia, on Christmas day, 1577. After studying at Leipzig and Jena, he applied himself to the Arabic language; and having taken his doctor's degree at Basle, went on his travels, which he extended as far as Asia. On the invitation of the Chancellor Oxenstiern, he settled at Upsal, where he became professor of physic, and died 8 April, 1640. He published—Grammatica Arabica; Trias specimena characterum Arabicorum; Decas Sacra Canticorum et Carminum Arabicorum, &c.; Vitæ quatuor Evangelistarum ex codice MS. Arabice; Liber Secundus canonis Avicennæ; Liber de vero usu et abusu Medicinæ; Notæ in Evangelium S. Matthæi ex collatione textuum Arabicorum, Syriacorum, Ægyptiacorum, Græcorum, et Latinorum.

KIRWAN, RICHARD, LL.D., was born near Galway 1734. He was originally intended for a profession, and was accordingly sent to St. Omer to be educated, but on the death of his elder brother he succeeded to the family estates, and thenceforth abandoning all professional ideas, he applied himself to those philosophical pursuits for which he was so singularly gifted. He died at Dublin 1 June, 1812. Dr. Kirwan published the following learned works: 'Elements of Mineralogy,' Lond., 2 vols. 8vo., 1784; 'Geological Essays,' Lond., 8vo., 1799; 'Essay on the Analysis of Mineral Waters,' Lond., 8vo., 1799; 'Logic, or an Essay on the Elements, Principles, and different Modes of Reasoning,' Lond., 2 vols. 8vo., 1807; 'Metaphysical Essays, containing the principles and fundamental objects of that science,' Lond., 8vo., 1809; 'An Essay on Phlogiston and the Constitution of Acids,' 8vo.; 'An Essay on the temperature of different Latitudes,' 8vo.; and numerous papers in the transactions of the various learned societies of which he was a member.

KIRWAN, WALTER BLAKE, an Irish divine, was born at Galway about 1754. He was educated in the English college at St. Omer, and next at Louvain, where he entered into priest's orders, and became professor of philosophy. In 1778 he was appointed chaplain to the Neapolitan embassy at London, but in 1787 he conformed to the state church in Dublin, where his popularity as a preacher was uncommonly great. In 1788 he was presented to a prebend in the cathedral of Dublin, and the living of St. Nicholas, but resigned the former in 1800, on being promoted to the deanery of Killala. Died 27 Oct., 1805. A volume of his sermons, published at London 1814, for the benefit of his family, does not appear to have added much to his fame.

KITCHIN, ANTHONY, originally a Benedictine monk, was consecrated bishop of Llandaff 1545. He was the only prelate who was in office at the death of Mary who took the oath of allegiance to Queen Elizabeth. He was in the commission for the consecration of Parker as archbishop of Canterbury, but refused to attend. Died 31 Oct., 1565, aged about 60.—Athen. Cantab.

KITCHENER, WILLIAM, M.D., a miscellaneous writer, born in London about 1775; died 20 Feb., 1827. Among his publications are 'The Cook's Oracle;' 'Observations on Telescopes;' 'Art of prolonging Life;' 'Traveller's Oracle;' 'Health without Physic;' and 'Rural Rambles.'

KITTO, JOHN, D.D., author of many popular works connected with biblical literature, was born at Plymouth 4 Dec., 1804, being the son of a jobbing mason. His school education was very slight, but between his eighth and eleventh years he was placed for short and interrupted periods at four different schools, where he was taught nothing more than reading, writing, and the imperfect use of figures. As early as his twelfth year he began to attend upon his father at his work, and while thus occupied in 1817 he fell from the roof of a house, receiving considerable bodily injury, and being wholly deprived of the sense of hearing. The love of reading, which he had already acquired, now became the solace of his loneliness and the foundation of his attainments. A highly-interesting account of his studies is given in a book entitled 'The Lost Senses.' In 1819, his parents being unable to maintain or to find suitable employment for him, placed him in the workhouse, whence he was removed in 1821, to become an apprentice to a shoemaker, who proved such a tyrant that the poor boy made an appeal to the magistrates, his written statement being characterised by striking propriety of sentiment and diction. The indentures were cancelled, and he was sent back to the workhouse. In 1823, his talents and capabilities being better understood, he was enabled, by the kindness of two gentlemen of the neighbourhood, to publish a small volume of 'Letters and Essays,' and was placed in a position less unfavourable to self-improvement. The next ten years of his life appear to have been spent abroad. In attendance on Sir John M'Neil he journeyed over a large part of Europe and Asia, and acquired that familiarity with the scenery and customs of the East which he afterwards turned to such account in his literary productions. Returning to this country in 1833, he attracted attention by a series of papers in the Penny Magazine, under the title of 'The Deaf Traveller;' and having married, he commenced a career of literary activity, which was continued without interruption till within a few months of his death. That event occurred at Cannstatt, near Stuttgart, 25 Nov., 1854. His best-known works are 'The Pictorial Bible;' 'The Bible History of the Holy Land;' 'Physical Geography and Natural History;' 'Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature;' 'Ancient Jerusalem;' 'Modern Jerusalem;' 'Physical Geography of the Holy Land;' 'The Court of Persia viewed in connection with Scriptural Usages;' 'Daily Bible Illustrations;' 'History of Palestine;' and 'Scripture Lands.' In 1848 he commenced a periodical work entitled 'The Journal of Sacred Literature,' and in 1853 another called 'Sunday Reading for Christian Families.'

KLAPROTH, MARTIN HENRY VON, professor of chemistry at Berlin, died there 1 Jan., 1817, at a very advanced age, having been a distinguished writer on that science above forty years. He was the discoverer of uranium, the zirconia, and mellic acid. He also made interesting experiments on copal, and completed the discovery of tellurium and titanium. His son, Henry Julius von Klaproth, a distinguished traveller and orientalist, was born at Berlin 11 Oct., 1783, and died at Paris 20 Aug., 1835, leaving 'Travels in the Caucasus and Georgia;' 'Asia Polyglotta;' and other learned works.

KLEBER, JEAN BAPTISTE, a famous general, was born at Strasburg about 1754. He was originally an architect, but left that business for the Austrian service, in which he rose to the rank of lieutenant. On leaving the army he became superintendent of the public works in Upper Alsace; but when the French Revolution broke out he entered into it with ardour, and was engaged in several battles. He accompanied Bonaparte to Egypt, and was left by him to command there on his departure, after which Kleber took Cairo, and formed an alliance with Murat Bey, but was assassinated by an Arab 14 June, 1800.

KLEIN, JAMES THEODORE, a Prussian naturalist, born at Königsberg 1085; died at Danzig 27 Feb., 1759. His principal works are 'Naturalis Dispositio Echinodermatum;' and 'Historia Piscium.'

KLEIST, EWALD CHRISTIAN VON, a German poet, was born at Zerblin, in Pomerania, 3 March, 1715. After studying at Königsberg he entered into the Danish service, and next into that of Prussia, where he rose to the rank of major, but was unfortunately killed at the battle of Kunnersdorf 12 Aug., 1759. His principal poem, entitled 'Spring,' which was published first in 1749, has been compared to the Seasons of Thomson. Kleist also wrote idylls, moral treatises, and a military romance called 'Cissides.'

KLEIST, HENRY VON, a German dramatic poet, born at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder 1776; died by his own hand at Potsdam 21 Nov., 1811.

KLENZE, LEO VON, an architect of Munich, born 1784; died 26 Jan., 1864.

KLOCKER, DAVID, an historical painter, born 1620 at Hamburg; died 1698 at Stockholm, where he was liberally patronised by the king.

KLOPSTOCK, FREDERIC THEOPHILUS, was born at Quedlinburg 2 July, 1724. After a liberal education at his native place, he was sent to study theology at Jena, where he wrote a great part of his 'Messiah,' which he published in 1747, at Leipsic. Though this poem was censured by some, it was admired by more; and Bodmer, with the Swiss in general, were loud in its praises. Klopstock was invited into that country, from whence he was called to Copenhagen by the most flattering promises, which were amply fulfilled. In 1771 he went to reside at Hamburg, as Danish legate, and counsellor of the margrave of Baden, who allowed him a pension. He died there 14 March, 1803. The character of Klopstock as a writer is that of a poet of fervid imagination; but though rich in imagery, and lofty in sentiment, he is frequently obscure, perplexed, and turgid. His wife was an amiable and very ingenious woman. She corresponded in English with Richardson, the novelist.

KLOSE, F. J., a musician and composer, was a native of London, where he died 8 March, 1830.

KLOTZ, CHRISTIAN ADOLPHUS, a German numismatist, philologist, poet, and miscellaneous writer, born at Bischofsverda, Saxony, 13 Nov., 1738. He was appointed professor of philosophy at Göttingen, but resigned that post on accepting a similar situation at Halle, with the rank of aulic counsellor. Died 31 Dec., 1771.

KLUIT, ADRIAN, a Dutch historian and publicist, born at Dort 9 Feb., 1735; died at Leyden 12 Jan., 1807.

KNAPTON.

KNAPTON, GEORGE, an English portrait painter in crayons, was the scholar of Richardson, and surveyor and keeper of the king's pictures. He died at Kensington 1778, aged 80.

KNELLER, SIR GODFREY, was born at Lübeck about 1648. He was intended for the army, but his genius for painting being discovered, he was placed under Bol, at Amsterdam, after which he received instructions from Rembrandt. In 1672 he went to Italy, and while at Venice painted the portraits of some families of distinction. From thence he came to England by the way of Hamburg, and was employed to paint a portrait of Charles II., at the same time with Lely, who candidly bestowed praise upon his performance. This success fixed Kneller at the English court, where he painted seven sovereigns, besides three foreign ones. His principal patron was William III., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and engaged him to paint the Hampton Court beauties. His pencil was also employed on several of the pictures of the admirals in that palace, and the Kit-Kat Club. George I. created him a baronet. He was a man of wit, but excessively vain, as appeared in his gift of five hundred pounds to Pope to write an extravagant epitaph for his monument in Westminster Abbey. He died very rich 27 Oct., 1723.

KNIGHT, EDWARD, a comic actor, born at Birmingham 1774. After achieving success at York, he came to the metropolis, where he quickly became a favourite with the public. Died in London 21 Feb., 1826.

KNIGHT, GAWIN, M.D., F.R.S., was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1739, and that of bachelor of physic in 1742. He practised in London, and was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. Falling into great distress, he made his case known to Dr. Fothergill, who went into his closet, and then returned with a cheque upon his banker for a thousand guineas, which he put into his friend's hand, and told him to go home and set his heart at rest. Dr. Knight published 'An Attempt to demonstrate that all the Phenomena in Nature may be explained by Attraction and Repulsion,' 1748. Died 1772.

KNIGHT, HENRY GALLY, an English gentleman, born in Yorkshire 2 Dec., 1786. He travelled much in early life; was afterwards for many years a member of parliament; and died in London 9 Feb., 1846. He published an account of his travels, and some poems, which have fallen into oblivion; but his memory will be kept alive by his admirable works on architectural history. These are: 'Saracenic and Norman Remains in Sicily,' 1830; 'Ecclesiastical Architecture of Italy, from the time of Constantine to the XV. century,' 2 vols., 1833-4; 'Architectural Tour in Normandy, with Remarks on Norman Architecture in England,' 1836, and again 1841. A sequel to the latter work was published 1838, under the title of 'Normans in Sicily.'

KNIGHT, RICHARD PAYNE, was born in Shropshire 1750. In his youth he was of so delicate a frame that his father would not suffer him to go to any public school, nor allow him to study the classics. On the death of this eccentric parent, which event happened when the son was in his fourteenth year, he went to school and made rapid progress in the Latin language. To the Greek he paid little attention till he was eighteen, and then he studied it assiduously. He spent several years in Italy, where he made a large collection of bronzes, medals, pictures, and drawings. On his return to England he was elected M.P. for Ludlow, but he did not distinguish himself as a senator. He was, however, placed on the committee for superintending the execution of the public monuments. Mr. Knight had a fine taste for the arts, but some of his works met with severe censure on account of the prurience displayed in them, particularly in his 'Account of the Remains of the Worship of Priapus, lately existing in the Kingdom of Naples; to which is added a Discourse on the Worship of Priapus, and its connection with the Mystic Theology of the Ancients,' 1786. This work was printed only for private circulation. In 1791 the author published 'An Analytical Essay on the Greek Alphabet,' in 1794; 'The Landscape, a didactic poem;' and in the year following 'A Review of the Landscape;' also 'An Essay on the Picturesque, with Practical Remarks on Rural Ornament.' His next performance was 'The Progress of Civil Society,' a poem (1796), which was castigated in the reviews with great asperity. In 1805 appeared his 'Analytical Inquiry into the Principles of Taste;' and in 1806 'A Monody on the Right Hon. Charles James Fox.' After this he published his 'Prologomena to Homer, with a Defence of the use of the Digamma,' and lastly, a poem called 'Alfred.' Died 28 April, 1824. He bequeathed his large collection of coins, medals, gems, bronzes, and drawings, with 50,000*l.* to the British Museum.

KNIGHT, SAMUEL, D.D., was a native of London. He received his education at St. Paul's School, whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1707 he obtained the vicarage of Chippenham, and the rectory of Borough Green, Cambridgeshire; after which he was collated to a prebend in the cathedral of Ely. In 1717 he was presented to the rectory of Bluntesham, Huntingdonshire; and in 1735 made archdeacon of Berks. Died 10 Dec., 1746, aged 71. Dr. Knight published the lives of Brasnus and Dean Colet.

KNIGHT, THOMAS ANDREW, F.R.S., a gentleman well known by his researches into vegetable physiology, was born near Hereford 10 Oct., 1758, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford. It was about 1795 that he began to be publicly known as a vegetable physiologist. In that year he laid before the Royal Society his celebrated paper upon the inheritance of disease among fruit trees, and the propagation of debility by grafting. This was followed by accounts of experimental researches into vegetable fecundation, the ascent and descent of sap in trees, the phenomena of germination, the influence of light upon leaves, and a great variety of similar subjects. Mr. Knight succeeded Sir Joseph Banks as president of the Horticultural Society of London; and died 11 May, 1838. His separate publications are 'A Treatise on the Culture of the Pear and Apple, and on the Manufacture of Cider and Perry,' 1797, fourth edition, 1814; 'Pomona Herefordiensis, or Natural History of the old Cider and Perry Fruits of the County of Hereford,' 1811. His 'Physiological and Horticultural Papers' were published in 1841 with his Life prefixed.

KNIGHT, WILLIAM, a native of Arlington, Sussex, received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1582-3; M.A. 1586). He was instituted to the rectory of Barley, Herts, 1598, but before the close of that year exchanged it for the rectory of Little Gransden, Cambs. He was author of 'A Concordance Axiomatical containing a survey of theological propositions with the reasons and uses in holy scripture,' folio, London, 1610.—Athen. Cantab. iii. 16.

KNIGHTBRIDGE, JOHN, D.D., founder of a professorship of casuistical divinity at Cambridge, died about 1681.

KNIGHTON, HENRY, an English historian, was a canon regular of Leicester Abbey, in the reign of Richard II., of whose deposition he wrote an account; also a chronicle from the Conquest to 1395.

KNIGHTON, SIR WILLIAM, M.D., an English baronet and physician, died in London 11 Oct., 1836, aged 59.

KNOLLES, RICHARD, an English writer, was born in Northamptonshire, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Lincoln College. After this he was appointed master of the Free School at Sandwich, in Kent, and died there 1610. His principal work is 'The General History of the Turks,' folio, 1610; and continued afterwards by several hands. Dr. Johnson has bestowed high praise upon this history. Knolles also translated Bodin's 'Treatise of a Commonwealth; and wrote 'The Lives and Conquests of the Ottoman Emperors.'

KNOLLIS, or KNOWLES, SIR FRANCIS, a statesman, was born at Grays, in Oxfordshire. He became a zealous advocate of the Reformation in the reign of Edward VI., on whose death he went to Germany. On the accession of Elizabeth he returned to England, and was made vice-chamberlain of the royal household. Afterwards he was appointed treasurer, and knight of the Garter. He died in the summer of 1596. Sir Francis wrote 'A Treatise against the Papal Usurpation;' and a 'General Survey of the Isle of Wight.'

KNOLLYS, WILLIAM, a British general, and governor of Limerick, died at Paris 20 March, 1834. At one time he was styled Earl of Banbury, and in 1808 prosecuted the family claim to the title, which, however, was decided against him in the House of Lords.

KNORR VON ROSENROTH, CHRISTIAN, a learned German baron, born 1616. He became chancellor to the count palatine of Sulzbach; and distinguished himself by a curious work, entitled 'Kabbala denudata, seu doctrina Hebræorum transcendentalis, et Metaphysica atque Theologica.' Died 4 May, 1689.

KNOTT, EDWARD, a Jesuit, whose real name was Matthias Wilson, and who also at times assumed that of Nicholas Smith, was born at Peggsworth, near Morpeth, in Northumberland, 1580. He taught divinity in the English College at Rome, after which he was appointed provincial of his order in England; where he died 4 Jan., 1655-6, and was buried at St. Pancras. He had a controversy with Dr. Potter, provost of Queen's College, Oxford, and lastly with Chillingworth, against whom he wrote forcibly in his 'Infidelity unmasked,' printed at Ghent 1652. He was also the author of 'Monta utilissima pro Patribus Missionariis Anglicanis.'

KNOWLES, JAMES SHERIDAN, was born at Cork 1784. When only twelve years old his mind began to display its inherent inclination for the drama, and he composed a play for a company of juvenile performers of which he was the leader. At fourteen he wrote the pleasing ballad of 'The Welsh Harper.' When he attained the age of seventeen, a commission was procured for him, but he soon quitted the army, and appeared on the stage at Dublin, Waterford, Swansea, and other places. He next started a school in Belfast, and it was during his residence there that his first dramatic efforts were submitted to the public. Nothing could exceed the enthusiastic approbation with which they were received. The titles of his plays are subjoined:—'Brian Boromhe;' 'Caius Gracchus;' 'Virginus;' 'William Tell;' 'The Beggar of Bethnal Green;' 'The Hunchback;' 'The Wife;' 'The Daughter;' 'The Love Chase;' 'Woman's Wit;' 'The Maid of Mariendorpt;' 'Love;' 'Old Maids;' 'John of Procida;' 'The Rose of Arragon;' and 'The Secretary.' Under the ministry of Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Knowles was allowed a pension of 200*l.* a-year. He resided for a considerable time in Scotland. During the latter years of his life he gave up writing for the stage and turned his attention to theology and preaching. He entertained a great fear and horror of the Catholic Church, and published 'The Rock of Rome;' and 'The Idol Demolished by its own Priest,' the latter being in reply to a book by H. E. Cardinal Wiseman, archbishop of Westminster. Mr. Knowles died at Torquay 30 Nov., 1862.

KNOWLES, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Ely 1723. He took his degrees at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow. He was also lecturer of St. Mary's, Bury St. Edmunds, prebendary of Ely, rector of Ickworth and Chedburgh, and vicar of Winston, in the county of Suffolk. Died 6 Oct., 1802. His principal works are Twelve Sermons on the Divine Existence and Attributes; Observations on the Tithe Bill; Primitive Christianity in favour of the Trinity; Observations on the Divine Mission of Moses; Advice to a Young Clergyman; Lectures on Passion Week.

KNOWLTON, THOMAS, an English botanist, who was gardener to Dr. Sherard, and afterwards to the earl of Burlington, at Lanesborough, Yorkshire; died 1782, aged 90. He discovered that singular production, the globe 'conferva,' or moor balls (Conferva Egagropilula, Linn.), which he first found in Wallenglen Mere. Extracts from some of his letters are printed in the Philosophical Transactions.

KNOX, JOHN, was born 1505, at Gifford, in the county of East Lothian. He received his education at the school of Haddington, and next at St. Andrew's, where he entered into the priesthood; but on embracing the principles of the Reformation he renounced the idea of rising in the church, and became tutor to some young gentlemen, whom he carefully brought up in Protestant principles, for which his life was sought by Cardinal Beton, and his successor, Archbishop Hamilton. Notwithstanding this, Knox went on propagating the new doctrines, and in 1547 appeared publicly as a preacher; but St. Andrew's being taken the same year by the French, he was carried off with the garrison. In 1549 he recovered his liberty, and landed in England, where he was appointed chaplain to Edward VI. On the accession of Queen Mary, he went to Geneva, and next to Frankfort, where he took part with the English exiles who opposed the use of the liturgy; but the other side prevailing, Knox returned to Geneva, and soon after went to Scotland. While engaged in the ministry, he received an invitation to return to Geneva, with which he complied; and in his absence the bishops passed sentence of death upon him for heresy; against which he published 'An Appellation.' In 1558 he printed 'The first Blast of the Trumpet against the monstrous Regimen of Women,' intended as an attack upon Mary, queen of England, and his own sovereign; but it had afterwards the effect of provoking Queen Elizabeth and her ministers against the author. The year following he returned to his native country, where his presence animated the populace to acts of dreadful outrage; and they overturned the altars, defaced the pictures, broke in pieces the images, and even razed the finest works of architecture to the ground. Knox enjoyed this storm, and he insulted the queen to her face, solely on account of her religion. In 1567 he preached the sermon at the coronation of her son, and another at the opening of the parliament; but these labours broke his constitution, and he died 24 Nov., 1572. Besides what we have noticed, he wrote several religious pieces, and 'The History of the Reformation in Scotland.'

KNOX, JOHN, a bookseller of London, who wrote a Systematic View of Scotland, and planned a herring-fishery and settlement on the north-east coast of that country. Born 1720; died 1 Aug., 1791.

KNOX, ROBERT, an English seaman in the East India service, born about 1641. He went to sea with his father, who commanded a ship trading to the East; but in 1660 she was wrecked on the coast of Ceylon, where our author remained in captivity nearly twenty years, and then escaped to the Dutch settlement; from whence he obtained a passage to Batavia, and next to England. In 1681 he published 'An Historical Relation of the Island of Ceylon.' He was cousin to the historian John Strype.

KNOX, VICESIMUS, D.D., was born 8 Dec., 1752. His father, the Rev. Vicesimus Knox, or, as he spelt the name 'Knock,' was master of the school at Tunbridge, but the son was brought up at that of Merchant Taylors', from whence he removed to St. John's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of M.A. On the death of his father he succeeded him in the mastership of the school at Tunbridge, which he conducted with reputation thirty-three years, and then resigned it to his son. He accepted a doctor's degree from some obscure college in America. His church preferments were the united rectories of Rumwell and Ramsden, Essex, and the chapelry of Shipbourne, Kent. After his retirement from the school he fixed his residence in London, where he died 6 Sept., 1821. Dr. Knox was an impassioned and flowery preacher, which caused him to be much sought after, for the purpose of recommending charitable institutions from the pulpit. His works, original and compiled, are numerous. The former are 'Essays, Moral and Literary,' 3 vols.; 'Liberal Education,' 2 vols.; 'Winter Evenings,' 3 vols.; 'Personal Nobility, or Letters to a young Nobleman on his Studies,' 'Sermons on Faith, Hope, and Charity,' 'Christian Philosophy,' 2 vols.; 'Considerations on the Nature and Efficacy of the Lord's Supper,' and a pamphlet 'On Classical Education.' His compilations, under the titles of 'Elegant Extracts,' and 'Domestic Divinity,' are well known.

KNUPFER, NICHOLAS, a painter of Leipsic, born 1603; died 1660.

KNUTZEN, MARTIN, professor of philosophy, was born at Königsberg 14 Dec., 1713, and died there 29 Jan., 1751. His principal works are

KÖNIG.

Systema Causarum efficientium; Elementa Philosophiæ Rationalis, Methodo Mathematico demonstrata; Theoremata de Parabolis infinitis.

KNUTZEN, MATTHIAS, an atheist of Holstein, who first broached his impious tenets at Königsberg 1673. His followers were called conscientiaries, because they would allow of no other divinity than what existed in a man's own mind. They denied a future state, and maintained that civil government was useless.

KOCH, CHRISTOPHE GUILLAUME DE, a French publicist, born at Bouxviller (Bas-Rhin) 9 May, 1737. He studied jurisprudence under Schoepflin, whom he succeeded (1771) as chief of the political school founded by that learned professor at Strasbourg. In 1789 he was sent to Paris by the Protestants of Alsace to defend their civil and religious rights. Afterwards he was elected a deputy in the Legislative Assembly, and his opposition to the Jacobin party led to his being committed to prison, but he was liberated on the fall of Robespierre. Eventually he was made rector of the university of Strasbourg; and died 25 Oct., 1813. His chief works are—A View of the Revolutions of Europe; Genealogical View of the Sovereign Houses of Europe; History of Treaties of Peace; and 'Sanctio Pragmatica Germanorum illustrata.'

KOEHLER, JOHN DAVID, an industrious German writer, born near Leipsic 18 Jan., 1684; died 10 March, 1755. He was for many years professor of history at Göttingen, and wrote 104 works, chiefly on antiquarian subjects.

KOENIG, EMMANUEL, a Swiss physician, born at Basle 1628; died 1731.

KOENIG, GEORGE MATTHIAS, a learned professor at Altdorf, author of a biographical dictionary entitled 'Bibliotheca Vetus et Nova,' was born 1616; and died 29 Dec., 1669.

KOENIG, HEINRICH, a German poet and novelist, was born at Fulda 19 March, 1700, and, thanks to the discernment of his schoolmaster, was saved from apprenticeship to a tailor, and sent to the Jesuits' Lyceum. For many years he contributed to the 'Cologne Gazette,' his best productions being personal reminiscences, tales in which his friends often recognized real personages, and historical or biographical romances, among which were William Shakspeare, the Noble Bride, the Waldenses, the Clubbists of Mentz, and King Jerome's Carnival. He died 23 Sept., 1806, at Wiesbaden.

KOENIG, JOHN GEHARD, a botanist and physician, born in Courland 1728. He studied under Linnæus, after which he travelled to Iceland, and next to India, where he died 31 July, 1785. His letters to Linnæus have been printed; and his botanical manuscripts were purchased by Sir Joseph Banks.

KOENIG, SAMUEL, a mathematician, born at Budingens, in Germany, 1712. He became professor of philosophy and the law of nature at Francker, from whence he removed to the Hague, where he was appointed librarian to the prince and princess of Orange. Died 21 Aug., 1757. He was a member of the academy of Berlin; but was expelled for an attack upon the character of Maupertuis, the president. His brother, Daniel Koenig, was murdered at the age of 22 by the populace of Francker, who, hearing him speak French, concluded that he was a spy, and fell upon him with such savage fury, that he died of his wounds some time after. He translated Arbutnot's Tables of Ancient Coins into Latin.

KOERTEN BLOCK.*KOERTEN BLOCK. See BLOCK.*KOETS, ROELOF, a portrait painter, born 16 Jan., 1685, at Zwoll, where he died 25 June, 1725.KOLBEN, PETER, a traveller, born at Dorflas, in the principality of Bayreuth, 1674; died 31 Dec., 1726. His 'Present State of the Cape of Good Hope' was translated into English by Medley, and printed at London, 2 vols., 1731.KOLLAR, JOHN, a Hungarian poet, born at Moschowze 29 July, 1703; died 29 Jan., 1852, at Vienna, where he was professor of archaeology.KOLLMAN, AUGUSTUS FREDERIC CHARLES, a musical composer, born near Hanover 1756. He came to London 1782, on being appointed organist and schoolmaster at the Royal German Chapel at St. James's Palace. Died Nov., 1824.KÖNIG. See KÖNIG.*KOORNHERK, THEODORE, a Dutch heretic, was a native of Amsterdam, but settled as an engraver at Haarlem, of which city he eventually became secretary. He pretended that all the various Christian communions wanted reformation; and that it was not necessary to be a member of any visible Church to be a true Christian. His works occupy three folio volumes. Born 1722; died 29 Oct., 1890.KORTHOLT, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran divine, born at Burg, in the island of Femeeren, 15 Jan., 1633. He was appointed Greek professor at Rostock 1662; and in 1665 was invited to the theological chair at Kiel, of which university he was afterwards vice-chancellor. Died 31 March, 1694. His works in Latin and German are numerous and esteemed by the learned. They include a treatise on the Persecutions of the Primitive Church; and another on the three great impostors, Edward Herbert, Thomas Hobbes, and Benedict de Spinoza.KORTHOLT, CHRISTIAN, grandson of the preceding, professor of divinity at Göttingen, where he died 1751, aged 42. He published a short account in Latin of the Society of Antiquaries of London; and some theological works.KOSCIUSKO, THADDEUS, a Polish general, was born of a respectable family 28 Oct., 1746, and educated at the military school of Warsaw; after which he went to France, and next to America, where he served as aide-de-camp to Washington. On his return home he was made major-general, and distinguished himself greatly in the war of 1792, but without effect. Two years afterwards the Poles again took up arms, and were headed by Kosciusko; but all his exertions were fruitless, and he was made prisoner by the Russians, who treated him with great respect; and the Emperor Paul, gave him an estate. Kosciusko now visited America the second time; and in 1798 returned to Europe, and settled in France, where Bonaparte endeavoured in vain to tempt him into his service. He died at Soleure, in Switzerland, 15 Oct., 1817.KOSTER. See COSTER.*KOTTER, CHRISTOPHER, a Protestant fanatic and pseudo-prophet of Sprottau, in Silesia, was born 1585, and died 1647. His predictions were published by Comenius, in a book entitled 'Lux e Tenebris.'KOTZEBUE, AUGUSTUS FREDERICK FERDINAND von, was born at Weimar 30 May, 1761. At the age of 16 he was sent to the college of Jena, and from thence to Duisburg, where he organized a company of juvenile performers. In 1779 he returned to Jena, to study the law, instead of which mostKRUMMACHER.

of his time was devoted to the playhouse. In 1781 he became secretary to General Bauer, whom he accompanied to St. Petersburg, where he produced a tragedy, called 'Demetrius, Czar of Muscovy.' Here he married a Russian lady, and was appointed president of the civil government at Revel. After this he wrote a number of dramas; some of which obtained great popularity on the Continent and in England. In 1789 he lost his wife, on which he went to Paris, and next to Vienna, where he became superintendent of the imperial theatre; but resigned that place, and returned to Russia. He had scarcely entered that country before he was arrested by the orders of Paul, and sent to Siberia, but did not remain long in exile; and, on his arrival at St. Petersburg, was taken into the emperor's favour. In 1813 he was appointed consul-general at Königsberg; but the climate disagreeing with him, he resigned the situation, and went to Mannheim, where he was assassinated 23 March, 1819, by a fanatical student of Jena, named Sand, who then stabbed himself, but recovered from his wound, and was beheaded. The works of Kotzebue are too numerous to be specified.

KRABTREE. See CRABTREE.*KRANTZ, ALBERT, was born at Hamburg about 1450. He became professor at Rostock, and rector of the university there; but was afterwards appointed dean of the cathedral of his native city, where he died 7 Dec., 1517. He wrote an Ecclesiastical History of Saxony; a History of the Saxons; another of the Vandals; a Chronicle of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; and a treatise on the May.KROMAYER, JOHN, a German divine and ecclesiastical historian, born at Cobelen (Misia) 1576; died at Weimar 1643. His nephew, Jerome Kromayer, born at Zeitz 1610, became professor at Leipsic, and died 1670, leaving numerous theological works in Latin.KRÜDENER, JULIE DE WIETINGHOFF, Baroness von, an enthusiast, born at Riga, 21 Nov., 1764, being the daughter of count de Wietinghoff, governor of that place. At an early age she became the wife of baron von Krüdener, who was appointed ambassador from the empress of Russia at the court of Berlin, and afterwards at Venice, where the secretary of legation fell in love with her and committed suicide; on which subject she wrote a romance, called by her Christian name, 'Valerie.' At the commencement of the revolution she resided in the south of France, but afterwards returned to Germany; and in 1806 she appeared in the character of a prophetess, avowing that she had a mission to establish the reign of Christ upon earth. When Napoleon fell she followed the Emperor Alexander to Paris, and declared that he was the appointed regenerator of the world. Her predictions made a great noise; and when the allied sovereigns left Paris she went to Switzerland, where she preached the advent of the millennium, and thousands came from the mountains to attend on her mission. At length the states interfered, the multitude was dispersed, and Madame Krüdener, after making a convert of Benjamin Constant, went to the Crimea, where she died at Karasubassar 25 Dec., 1824.KRUMMACHER, FREDERICK ADOLPHUS, a German poet and divine, born at Westphalia 13 July, 1768, died at Bremen 14 April, 1845. He is principally known by his 'Parables in Verse.' His son,

KRUMMACHER.

Dr. Frederic William Krummacher, died at Potsdam 10 Dec., 1808. He was the most distinguished clerical member of the religious party called 'Pietists,' and became court preacher in the reign of the late King of Prussia, being warmly supported by his Majesty in his schemes for extending Protestant principles. He wrote a great number of religious books, many of which have been translated into English, such as 'Elijah the Tishbite;' 'Elisha;' and 'Blind Bartimeus.'

KRUMMACHER, GODFREY DANIEL, a German divine, brother of Frederick Adolphus Krummacher, was born 11 April, 1774, and died at Ellersfeld 30 January, 1837. He was a prominent man among the 'Pietist' sect, and published several volumes of sermons.

KUGLER, FRANCIS THEODORE, a German writer on art, born at Stettin 19 Jan., 1808; died 18 March, 1858.

KUHLMANN, QUIRINUS, a famous visionary and prophet, born at Breslau 1651; was burnt at Moscow 3 Oct., 1689.

KUHN, JOACHIM, a German critic, born at Gripswalde (Pomerania) 1647; died 11 Dec., 1697. He held for many years the professorship of Greek and Hebrew at Strasburg; and published editions of Pausanias, Diogenes Laertius, and other classical authors.

KUNCKEL, JOHN, a chemist, born in the duchy of Schleswig 1030; died at Stockholm March, 1703. He discovered the phosphorus which is called after him; and made many other improvements in chemistry.

KUSTER, LUDOLPH, a learned critic, born Feb., 1670, at Blumberg, in Westphalia. He came to England 1699, and during his residence at Cambridge finished his edition of Suidas, which was published in 1705, at the press of that university, where he received the degree of doctor of laws. He then returned to Prussia, to take upon him a professorship in the college of Joachim; but he afterwards resigned it, and went to Amsterdam, where he published his 'Aristophanes,' 1710. The same year came out his edition of Mill's Greek Testament, with emendations. From Holland he removed to Antwerp, and there abjured the Protestant religion; after which he obtained a pension from the king of France. Died 13 Oct., 1716. His other works are—Historia Critica Homerii; Bibliotheca Librorum collecta à L. Neocoro; Jamblichus de Vita Pythagoræ, Græcè et Latine, cum nova versione, &c.; Diatriba Anti-Gronovianæ; De Museo Alexandrino Diatriba; Picturæ Antiquæ Sepulcra Nasomiorum; De vero usu Verborum Medicorum apud Græcos, &c.

LAAR, PETER VAN, an eminent Dutch painter, though properly of the Italian school, was born at Laeren, near Narden, 1613. While in Italy he obtained the nickname of Bamboccio, on account of his personal deformity, though some think it arose from the branch of painting in which he excelled, consisting chiefly of the sports of the populace, and scenes of vulgar life, commonly termed by the Italians 'Bambocciate.' He left Italy 1630, and resided some years at Amsterdam and Haarlem, where his pictures were held in great esteem. He drowned himself in a fit of melancholy 1673 or 1675. His elder brother, Reinland van Laar, who died at Genoa 1640, aged 29, painted in the same manner, and with little inferiority.

LABADIE, JEAN, a French enthusiast, born at Bourg, in Guienne, 13 Feb., 1610; died at Alitona 13 Feb., 1674. He was originally a Jesuit, but quitted the order and set up a religion of his own, making many converts in Holland, particularly among the women. His numerous works have justly been allowed to fall into oblivion.

LABAT, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Dominican friar, born at Paris 1663; died there 6 Jan., 1738. He was for a long time employed as a missionary in South America, and on his return published accounts of his travels, besides editing the works of several other travellers.

LABBE, PHILIPPE, a celebrated Jesuit, born at Bourges 10 July, 1607. He taught ethics, philosophy, and moral theology with reputation in his native city, and then at Paris, where he died 25 March, 1667. He published numerous bulky historical compilations, the best known of which is his new 'Collection of the Councils,' 17 vols. folio, 1672.

LABE, LOUISE, a poetess, called 'the beautiful rope-maker,' because she married a rich rope-maker, who left her his property. She was born at Lyons 1420, and died March, 1566. The best edition of her poems is that published at Lyons 1824.

LABERIUS, DECIMUS, a Roman knight and poet, died B.C. 46.

LABLACHE, LOUIS, a famous vocalist, the greatest basso who has ever adorned the Italian opera, was born 6 Dec., 1794, at Naples, where he died 23 Jan., 1828. He made his first appearance on the London stage 1834, and from that time was a great favourite with the English public.

He was for many years conservator of the museum of antiquities in the Louvre, and in 1856 was appointed director-general of the archives of the empire. Died March, 1869. His works are—'Voyage de l'Arabie Pétrée;' 'Voyage en Orient;' 'Histoire de la Gravure en manière noire, et de son application à l'imprimerie;' 'Recherches sur la découverte de l'imprimerie;' 'Le Procès de Guttenberg à Strasbourg;' 'Commentaire Géographique sur l'Exode et les Nombres;' 'Lettres sur les Bibliothèques;' 'Catalogue Raisonné des Émaux;' 'Catalogue des Artistes des Pays Bas;' 'Les Ducs de Bourgogne;' and 'La Renaissance des Arts à la Cour de France.'

LA BOURDONNAIS, BERTRAND FRANÇOIS MAHÉ DE, a French statesman and naval commander, born at St. Malo 1099. Being constituted director-general (1735) of the Isles of France and Bourbon, he made the former the most flourishing of all the French colonies. In 1746 he took Madras from the English, and forced them to raise the siege of Pondicherry. But differences which arose between him and Duplex obliged him to return to Europe, and on his arrival in France he was arrested and thrown into the Bastille. On his liberation three years afterwards he was a ruined man. Died 9 Sept., 1753.

LABOUREUR, JEAN LE, a French historical writer, born at Montmorency 1623. He followed the court as gentleman-in-waiting, and attended the maréchal de Guebriant on his embassy to Poland (1644), of which journey he published an account. Afterwards taking orders, he became prior of Juigné, king's almoner, and commander of the order of St. Michael. Died June, 1675. He published several important works, including a History of the Maréchal de Guebriant; Memoirs of Michael de Castelnau; a translation of a history of Charles VI.; and a Treatise on Heraldry. His brother, Louis le Laboureur (born about 1613; died 1679), was author of several paltry pieces in French verse.

LABROUSSE, CLOTILDE SUZANNE COURCELLES DE, a French visionary, born at Vauxain (Périgord) 8 May, 1747; died at Paris 1821. Her 'Prophecies' concerning the French revolution were published 1790.

LA BRUYÈRE, JEAN DE LA. See BRUYÈRE.

LACARRE, GILLE, a French Jesuit and historian, born in the diocese of Castres 1605; died at Clermont-Ferrand 25 July, 1684.

LACEPEDE, BERNARD GERMAIN ÉTIENNE DE LA VILLE, Comte DE, a French naturalist, born at Agen 26 Dec., 1756. Prior to the Revolution he was a colonel in the Austrian service. Subsequently he was elected a deputy in the legislative assembly (1792); became senator and grand chancellor of the legion of honour 1803; and a peer of France under the Restoration. He was the disciple and friend of Buffon, who selected him to continue his 'Natural History.' His chief works are an 'Essay on Electricity;' 'A Poetical History of Music;' and 'Natural History of oviparous Quadrupeds—of Reptiles—of Fishes—and of Cetacea.' Died 6 Oct., 1825.

LACORDAIRE.

LA CHAPELLE, JEAN DE, a French writer, born at Bourges 1655. He was secretary to the prince of Conti, and a member of the French Academy. He wrote several plays, the Life of the Prince of Conti, and other works. Died 29 May, 1723.

LACHMANN, CHARLES, a celebrated German philologist, born at Brunswick 4 March, 1793; died 13 March, 1851, at Berlin, where he was professor and a member of the academy.

LACKINGTON, JAMES, born at Wellington, Somersetshire, 31 Aug., 1746, established himself in business as a bookseller in Finsbury Square, London; and died 22 Nov., 1815. He published Memoirs of the first forty-five years of his Life, 1791; and 'Confessions,' 1802, to which he added two letters on the bad consequences of having daughters educated at boarding-schools.

LACLOS, PIERRE AMBROISE FRANÇOIS CHODERLOS DE, a French general and litterateur, born at Amiens 1741; died 5 Nov., 1803. His principal work is a licentious novel, entitled, 'Les Liaisons Dangereuses.'

LACOMBE, FRANÇOIS, called Lacombe d'Arignon, was born 1733, and at the time of his decease, in 1795, was commissary of police at Montpellier. He published the Select Letters of Christina of Sweden; an apocryphal collection of the Secret Letters of the same sovereign; a Dictionary of Old French—Observations on London and its Environs; and several translations from the English.

LACOMBE, JACQUES, a French compiler of works on history and chronology, born at Paris 1724; died 16 July, 1811. His brother, Honoré Lacombe de Pressat, born 1715, published 'Dictionnaire du Citoyen;' 'Dictionnaire de Jurisprudence;' and other compilations of a similar kind.

LACORDAIRE, JEAN BAPTISTE HENRI, a famous French preacher, born 12 March, 1802, at Reccey-sur-Ouche (Côte-d'Or), being the son of a physician. He was brought up to the legal profession, and actually practised for a short time at the Paris bar, but at the age of twenty-two, having determined to embrace the ecclesiastical state, he entered the seminary of St. Sulpice, and was ordained priest 1827. Soon afterwards he associated himself with the Abbé Lamennais, and cooperated with him in the editorship of the 'Avenir,' a religious and political journal, which was condemned by the Holy See. In 1835 he commenced in the cathedral of Notre Dame, at Paris, a series of 'Conferences,' in quite a new style, which attracted immense congregations, and led to some extraordinary conversions. He next conceived the idea of restoring in France the order of Dominican Friars, or Friars Preachers, and with that object in view went in 1839 to Rome, where he assumed, in the convent of the Minerva, the religious habit and the name of St. Dominic. In 1841 he again made his appearance in the pulpit of Notre Dame, where he resumed his 'Conferences' with even greater success than before, and he also preached to admiring audiences in several of the great towns of France. In 1848 he was elected a representative in the National Assembly, but soon quitted that scene of tumult. He was appointed provincial of his order in France in 1850, but declined to be re-elected on the expiration of his period of office in 1854, when he took the direction of the college of Sorceze. He was admitted into the French Academy 1860; and died at Sorèze 22 Nov., 1861. Father Lacordaire was undoubtedly one of the most brilliant orators of his time. His discourses, suited to the tastes of his hearers and the exigencies of the age, produced an astonishing effect, but they were more remarkable for imagination, fervour, and oratorical action than for close reasoning and the connection of ideas. In religion his desire was to reconcile Catholicism with what is termed modern progress and civilisation. Besides his 'Conferences,' which have been presented to the public in an English dress, he composed some remarkable funeral orations, and a Life of St. Dominic. His 'Complete Works' were published at Paris in 6 vols. 8vo.

LACRETELLE, PIERRE LOUIS, a French jurist and author, born at Metz 1751; died at Paris 5 Sept., 1824.

LACROIX, LOUIS ANTOINE NICOLLE DE, a French abbe, author of a popular book on Modern Geography, was born 1704 at Paris, where he died 14 Sept., 1760.

LA CROZE, MATHURIE VEYSSIERE, a French Benedictine monk, born 1661. He renounced his order and his faith, and became a Protestant 1696. The king of Prussia made him his librarian, and professor of philosophy at Berlin, where he died 21 May, 1739. He compiled an Armenian Dictionary, and several other learned works.

LACRUZ Y CANO, RAMON DE, a Spanish dramatist, born at Madrid 12 May, 1728; died 4 Nov., 1795.

LACTANTIUS, LUCIUS CÆLIUS FIRMIANUS, an ecclesiastical author at the beginning of the fourth century, was probably a native of Africa. He studied rhetoric under Arnobius, and professed that science in Africa and at Nicomedia with such reputation that the Emperor Constantine appointed him preceptor to his son Crispus. He left several works written in very good Latin. The principal is entitled 'Divine Institutions,' in which he undertakes to prove the truth of Christianity. His complete works were published at Paris by Langlet, 2 vols., 1748.

LACY, JOHN, a dramatic writer, was born near Doncaster, and bred a dancing-master; which employment he quitted for the army, and lastly he took to the stage; in which line he acquired such celebrity as a comic performer, that Charles II. had his portrait painted in three different characters. He wrote these comedies—'The Dumb Lady;' 'Sir Hercules Bullock;' 'Old Troop;' 'Sawney the Scot.' Died 17 Sept., 1681. He was of the same family as William Lacy the Jesuit.

LACY, WILLIAM, a native of Scarborough, received his education at Oxford, but afterwards studied at the English college in Rome, and in 1011 was admitted a professed member of the Society of Jesus at Nancy. After being for a time one of the professors at St. Omer, he was sent upon the English mission, and settling at Oxford, died there 17 July, 1673, aged 89. He was author of 'The Judgment of an University man concerning Mr. William Chillingworth, his late Pamphlet in answer to Charity Maintained,' 4to., 1639.

LADVOCAT, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French abbe, born at Vaucouleurs (Meuse), 3 Jan., 1700. He took his doctor's degree in divinity 1738, after which he was made royal professor of theology, but resigned that office on being appointed librarian to the Sorbonne. He was also professor of Hebrew, and it was by his advice that the duke of Orleans revived the seminary of the Holy Family for students of divinity. He died at Paris 29 Dec., 1795. The work by which he is most widely known is his biographical dictionary, entitled 'Dictionnaire historique portatif des grands hommes,' 2 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1752; 3 vols. 8vo., 1777; and again (with additions) 5 vols. 8vo., 1821-24. This useful work, which is to a great extent an abridgement of Moreri, has been translated into Italian, German, and English. (See COLLIGNON.) Ladvocat's other publications are a Hebrew Grammar; Tractatus de Consiliis; Lettres sur l'Autorité des Textes originaux de l'Écriture Sainte; Jugemens sur quelques nouvelles Traductions de l'Écriture Sainte, d'après le Texte Hébreu. He was the correspondent of Dr. Kennicott, whose great work he zealously promoted, and collated many MSS. for him in the Royal Library. He also assisted in the 'Dictionnaire Géographique' of the abbe de Vosgiens.

LADVOCAT, LOTIS FRANÇOIS, a philosophical writer, and dean of the Chamber of accounts at Paris, where he died 8 Feb., 1735, aged 61. He wrote 'Entretien sur un nouveau système de morale et de physique;' and 'Nouveau système de philosophie.'

LAENNEC, RENÉ THÉODORE HYACINTHE, a French physician, the discoverer of mediæ auscultation, and the inventor of the stethoscope, was born 17 Feb., 1781, at Quimper (Brittany), where he died 13 August, 1826.

LAET, JOHN DE, an historical and geographical writer, was a native of Antwerp, and died there 1649.

LAFAYETTE. See FAYETTE.

LAFAYETTE, MARIE JEAN PAUL ROCH YVES GILBERT MOTIER, Marquis DE, a French general and statesman, born at the castle of Chavagnac, in Auvergne, 6 Sept., 1757. At sixteen years of age he married Madame de Noailles, and four years later embarked on board a frigate fitted out at his own expense to assist the Americans in their revolt against Great Britain. After taking part in the engagements at Brandywine and Monmouth, he returned to France (1779) for reinforcements. The next year he was placed in command of Washington's army, and in 1781 entrusted with the defence of Virginia against Lord Cornwallis. In conjunction with Washington and Rochambeau he contributed to the operations which resulted in the capitulation of the English general at York Town. He then returned to France, intending to take back fresh reinforcements to America, but the peace of 1783 rendered it unnecessary for him to do so. In 1787 he was elected a member of the Assembly of Notables, and in 1789 returned as a deputy to the National Assembly, where he warmly advocated revolutionary principles, being the first to propose that a declaration should be made of the 'rights of man.' On 15 July, 1789, he was appointed commander of the National Guard, and in that capacity protected the royal family on the 5th and 6th of October in that year, and on 17 July, 1791, he forcibly dispersed the people assembled in the Champ de Mars. In 1793 he commanded with success one of the armies destined to repel foreign invasion; but he soon lost his popularity, and was outlawed by the Jacobin party. He now endeavoured to seek refuge in a neutral country, but in his flight was arrested by the Austrians, and confined in the fortress of Olmütz, where he remained a prisoner till 1797, when he was set at liberty by virtue of a special clause in the treaty of Campo-Formio. Under the Consulate and the Empire he took no part in public affairs, and under the Restoration he zealously opposed the elder branch of the Bourbons. In 1825 he paid a visit to the United States, where he met with an enthusiastic reception. After the revolution of 1830, he was again constituted chief of the National Guard, and during his continuance in that office he contributed very largely to the maintenance of order and the establishment of the new dynasty. When Casimir Perier came into power (1831) Lafayette again joined the ranks of the opposition, and continued to vote with them till his death, which occurred at Paris 19 May, 1834. His 'Memoirs' were published in 8 vols. 8vo., 1837-40.

LAFFITE, JACQUES, a French politician and financier, born at Bayonne 1767. He was appointed governor of the bank of France 1816, but three years afterwards was deprived of that situation. He played a leading part in the revolution of 1830, from which date he was president of the chamber of deputies, minister of finances, and president of the council. Died 27 May, 1844. He wrote a number of works on financial subjects.

LAFITAU, JOSEPH FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit, was a native of Bordeaux, where he died 1755, after having been engaged for several years as a missionary among the Iroquois Indians. His book on the 'Customs of the American Savages, compared with those of the early ages,' displays great ingenuity and knowledge of antiquity. He also published a History of the Discoveries of the Portuguese in the New World.

LAFITAU, PIERRE FRANÇOIS, brother of the above, was born at Bordeaux 1685, and entered the Society of Jesus, which he quitted on being consecrated (1719) bishop of Sisteron, where he died 3 April, 1764. He wrote some treatises on the bull 'Unigenitus;' History of Clement XI., &c.

LAFONT, JOSEPH DE, a French dramatist, born at Paris 1686; died at Passy 1725.

LAFONTAINE, JEAN DE, a French poet, born at Chateau Thierry 8 July, 1621. He was educated in the congregation of the Oratory, which society he quitted to become an assistant in the office of his father, who was superintendent of the watercourses and forests. But having no turn for business, he applied himself to the study of the poets. At the desire of his parents he married, but on going to Paris, where he procured a pension, he forgot his wife, and never went into the country, except when he stood in need of money. Madame de la Sabliere, a lady of fortune, took him into her house, where he resided till her death. He was extremely simple in his manners, and so unmindful of everything as to appear almost idiotic. He died 13 April, 1695. His tales and fables are very popular, but the former are too licentious. The best edition of his complete works is that of Paris, 6 vols. 8vo., 1826.

LAFONTAINE, HENRY JULIUS AUGUSTUS, a German novelist, born at Brunswick 6 Feb., 1756, or 1750; died 20 April, 1831.

LA FORCE, JACQUES NOMPAR DE CAUMONT, DUC DE, marshal of France, was born 1558. He was a child, in bed with his father and elder brother, when they were murdered in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, but being unperceived by the assassins, he escaped. He signalled himself greatly under Henry IV., and afterwards joined the Protestants against Louis XIII. However, he soon made his submission to the king, and was appointed marshal of France, lieutenant-general of the army, and created a duke. He took Pignerol, and defeated the Spaniards at Carignano 1030. Died 10 May, 1652.

LA FOSSE, ANTOINE DE, nephew of Charles, was born at Paris 1658. He became lord of Aubigny, and was successively secretary to the marquis de Crequi and the duc d'Aumont. When the former nobleman was killed at the battle of Luzara, La Fosse was employed to carry his heart to Paris, on which affecting occasion he wrote some verses. His tragedies of 'Polixene,' 'Manlius,' and 'Theseus,' maintained their position on the French stage till the Revolution; and all his dramas abound with passages which would not disgrace the finest tragic writers of France. Died 2 Nov., 1768.

LA FOSSE, CHARLES DE, a painter, born at Paris 1640; died 1716. He resided for a time in London, where he decorated Montagu House.

LAGALLA, JULIUS CÆSAR, a learned physician and writer, born at Padulla (Naples) 1570; died at Rome 15 March, 1624.

LAGARAYE, CLAUDE TOUSSAINT MAROT DE, a French philanthropist and writer, born at Rennes 1675; died 2 July, 1755.

LAGERLOEF, PETER, a learned Swede, who was professor of eloquence at Upsal, and wrote the Ancient and Modern History of the Northern Parts of Europe. Born 1648; died 7 Jan., 1699.

LAGNY, THOMAS FANTET DE, a French mathematician, one of the keepers of the royal library at Paris, was born at Lyons 1660, and died 12 April, 1734.

LAGOMARSINI, JEROME, a Jesuit and classical scholar, born at Genoa 1698; died at Rome 18 May, 1773.

LAGRANGE, JOSEPH DE CHANCEL DE, a poet, was born in 1676 in Perigord. He wrote a comedy at nine years old, and a tragedy at sixteen; but the work which made him known was a satire, entitled 'Philippe,' against Philip duke of Orleans. For this he was seized, and ordered to be imprisoned in the Isle of St. Margaret, from whence he made his escape, and got to Sardinia, and afterwards to Holland. He died 26 Dec., 1758. His works make 5 vols. 12mo.

LAGRANGE, JOSEPH LOUIS, a mathematician, was born at Turin 25 Jan., 1736. At the age of sixteen he became a teacher in the royal school of artillery, where he formed an association, which afterwards rose to the rank of an academy of sciences. Here he made many important discoveries, particularly in calculating the motion of fluids, and the theory of vibrations. He communicated to the society a number of papers, and some to the academy of Paris, of which he was chosen a foreign member. In 1766 he removed to Berlin, where he was appointed director of the academy, the transactions of which body contain a number of his memoirs. In 1787 he settled at Paris, and became successively professor of the Normal School and Polytechnic School. Died 10 April, 1813. His separate works are 'Mecanique Analytique;' 'Fonctions Analytiques;' Leçons sur le calcul; Traité de resolution numerique des Equations.

LAGRIVE, JEAN, a French ecclesiastic and topographer, born 1689; died 18 April, 1757.

LAGUERRE.

LAGUERRE, Louis, a French painter, born 1003. In 1683 he came to England, and was much employed in painting ceilings, halls, and staircases in the houses of the nobility and gentry. He died in Drury Lane Theatre 1721.

LAGUNA, Andrew, a Spanish physician and writer, born at Segovia 1499; died 1560.

LA HARPE, JOHN FRANÇOIS DE, a French writer, born at Paris 20 Nov., 1730. His father was an officer in the army, but died in poor circumstances; in consequence of which the son was taken into the college of Harcourt by the president, M. Asselin. Unfortunately, however, he lost the favour of his patron by a satire, of which he was suspected to be the author. After a confinement of some time he was set at liberty, but the disgrace made a strong impression on his mind. In 1763 he wrote his tragedy of 'Warwick,' which met with great success. This was followed by 'Timoleon,' and 'Pharamond,' which had less popularity. But his 'Eloges,' particularly that on Henry IV., were much admired. In 1766 he produced the tragedy of 'Gustavus Vasa;' but neither this nor his subsequent pieces equalled his Warwick, except his 'Philoctetes,' a translation from Sophocles. He was much in favour with Voltaire, and wrote his eloge. In 1779 he undertook an abridgment of Prevost's History of Voyages; and the same year he published his poem entitled 'Tangu et Felime.' But his greatest work is the 'Lycum, or Course of Literature,' 12 vols. M. de la Harpe took an active part in the Revolution, and, in 1793, was thrown into prison, where he was brought to a belief of Christianity by the bishop of St. Brieux, who happened to be his fellow-prisoner. On recovering his liberty, he devoted his pen to loyalty and religion. Died 11 Feb., 1803. Besides the above works, he published Melanges Littéraires; a translation of Suetonius; a translation of the Lusiad of Camoëns; Correspondance adressée à Paul I. empereur de Russie, 4 vols.; Commentaire des tragédies de Racine, 7 vols.; Refutation de l'Esprit de Helvetius; and a translation of the Psalms.

LA HIRE, PHILIPPE DE, was the son of Laurent de La Hire, a celebrated painter, who died in 1686. Philippe was born at Paris 1640, and became so distinguished by his knowledge of mathematics, that Colbert employed him and Picard in making the observations for constructing a new map of France. He was also engaged by the Academy of Sciences, of which society he was a member, in taking the levels for the aqueducts proposed to be made by Louis XIV. Died 21 April, 1718. His works are Nouvelle methode en Geometrie, pour les sections des superficies coniques et cylindriques; De la Cycloïde; Nouveaux Elemens des sections Coniques; La Gnomonique; Sections Conicæ; Tabulæ Astronomicæ; Veterum mathematicorum opera Græcæ et Latine. His son, Philippe, was bred a physician, but applied himself chiefly to landscape painting. He died at the age of 42, in 1719.

LAINÉZ, ALEXANDRE, a French poet, born at Chimai about 1650; died at Paris 18 April, 1710.

LAINÉZ—JAMES. See LAYNEZ.

LAING, MAJOR ALEXANDER GORDON, an African traveller, born at Edinburgh 27 Dec., 1793, was assassinated near Timbuctoo, while on an expedition to explore the course of the Niger, Sept., 1826. He published an account of his Travels in the Timmanee, Kooranko, and Soolima Countries, in Western Africa, 1825.

LALANDE.

LAING, MALCOLM, an historian, born 1762, at Strynzia, in Orkney, and educated at Kirkwall; whence he removed to Edinburgh; after which he studied the law, and was called to the bar, but had little practice. On the death of Dr. Henry he was employed to complete an unfinished volume of that writer's History of England; in which he gave little satisfaction to the public. After this he published 'A History of Scotland,' 4 vols., remarkable only for its partiality and attack upon the character of the unfortunate Mary. During the Foxite administration, to which he was attached, he was elected into parliament for the county of Orkney. His last literary undertaking was an edition of Ossian's, or Macpherson's poems, the authority of which he endeavoured to demolish by a preliminary dissertation. Died 1818.

LAIRE, FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a French Minim friar and bibliographer, was born in Franche-Comté 10 Nov., 1738, and died 27 March, 1801. He was librarian first to cardinal de Brienne and afterwards to the town of Auxerre. His works include a catalogue of the books printed by the Alduses; and an Index of Books from the invention of printing to the year 1500.

LAIKESSE, GERARD DE, an historical and portrait painter, born at Liege 1640; died at Amsterdam 28 July, 1711. An English translation by W. M. Craig of his 'Treatise on the Art of Painting in all its Branches' was published at London in 2 vols. 4to., 1817.

LAITHWAITE, or SCOTT, THOMAS, a distinguished English Jesuit, was a native of Lancashire, and died 10 June, 1655, aged 76.

LAKE, ARTHUR, an English prelate, was born at Southampton about 1550, and educated at Winchester School; whence he was sent to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. On taking orders he became fellow of Winchester College; in 1603 he was made master of the hospital of St. Cross; in 1605 archdeacon of Surrey; in 1608 dean of Worcester; and in 1616 bishop of Bath and Wells. He died 4 May, 1626; and after his death were published several volumes of his sermons and meditations.

LALANDE, JACQUES DE, an eminent lawyer of Orleans, born 2 Dec., 1622; died 5 Feb., 1703.

LALANDE, JOSEPH JEROME LEFRANÇOIS DE, a celebrated French astronomer, born at Bourg-en-Bresse 11 July, 1732. He was intended for the law, but relinquished that pursuit to study mathematics; and so great was his progress that, at the age of eighteen, he was deputed by the Academy of Sciences to go to Berlin, to make observations for determining the parallax of the moon, and its distance from the earth. In 1759 he published an edition of Halley's Tables; and the year following he began the 'Connaissance des Temps.' In 1764 appeared his 'Traité Astronomique;' and his reputation being now established, he was employed on the Encyclopedie. He was also appointed professor of astronomy in the college of France; and it is only to be lamented that with so much science he should have taken a decided part in the sanguinary revolution, and more so that he should have avowed atheistical sentiments. He died 4 April, 1807. Besides the works already mentioned, he published 'Voyage d'Italie;' Traité des Canaux; Bibliographie Astronomique; Abregé de Navigation; and an edition of Montucla's History of Mathematics.

LALANDE, MICHEL RICHARD DE, a musician and composer, born at Paris 15 Dec., 1657; died 18 Jan., 1726.

LALLI, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian poet and jurist, born 1572, at Norcia, in Umbria, where he died 3 Feb., 1037.

LALLY, THOMAS ARTHUR, Count de, baron of Tolledally, or Tolendal, in Ireland, was descended from an Irish family, and born at Romans, in Dauphine, 1702. He entered the military service of France, and distinguished himself gallantly at the battle of Fontenoy, as to be appointed brigadier-general. In 1756 he was made governor of Pondicherry, where he suffered some severe defeats, and was compelled to surrender that capital of the French settlements in India; for which public clamour ran so high against him, that he was beheaded by an iniquitous sentence 9 May, 1766. His son, M. Lally de Tolledal, obtained, in 1783, the restoration of the estates of his father, and a reversal of all the proceedings.

LAMANON, ROBERT DE PAUL, Chevalier de, a French naturalist, born at Salon, in Provence, 1752, was murdered in one of the islands of the Southern Archipelago 10 Dec., 1787. Many of his papers are in the memoirs of the Academy of Sciences; besides which he wrote 'A Theory of the Earth.'

LAMARCK, JEAN BAPTISTE PIERRE ANTOINE DE MONET, Chevalier de, a celebrated French botanist and zoologist, born at Bazantin (Somme) 1 April, 1744; died 8 Dec., 1826.

LAMB, CHARLES, an essayist and poet, born in London 10 Feb., 1775. In his eighteenth year he was sent to Christ's Hospital, where he acquired a taste for general literature, and a fitness for the pursuits of commercial life. He continued there till 1789, about which time he obtained a situation as clerk in the India House, where he continued till 1825, and then retired on a handsome annuity on the superannuated list. He died at Edmonton, Middlesex, 27 Dec., 1834. His first literary venture was a small volume of poems (1797), written conjointly with Coleridge and Lloyd. This was followed by 'John Woodvil, a tragedy,' 1802; but Lamb's fame rests mainly on his prose works, especially his charming 'Essays of Elia.' There have been several editions of his works, which, however, do not include his 'Specimens of English Dramatic Poets who lived about the time of Shakespeare.' In collaboration with his sister he wrote 'Tales from Shakespeare,' and some other works.

LAMB, EDWARD BUCKTON, an English architect, who died in London 30 Aug., 1869, aged 63.

LAMB, SIR JAMES BLAND, was born at Gibraltar 1752, being the son of George Burges, comptroller-general of the customs in Scotland. He was educated at Edinburgh and at Westminster School, whence he removed to University College, Oxford. In 1777 he was called to the bar, and in 1787 was returned to Parliament for Helston, in Cornwall, being in 1789 appointed an under-secretary of state. Soon after the commencement of the French revolution he established 'The Sun,' an evening newspaper, to which he contributed, under the signature of 'Alfred,' several letters, which in 1792 were collected into a volume. In 1795 he was created a baronet, and appointed for life knight-marshal of the king's household. He assumed the name of Lamb by royal sign-manual 1821; and died 1824. His works are 'Heroic Epistles from Serjeant Bradshaw in the Shades to

John Dunning, Esq.:' 'Considerations on the Law of Insolvency;' 'Address to the Country Gentlemen of England and Wales on County Courts;' 'The Birth and Triumph of Love,' a poem; 'Richard the First,' an heroic poem; 'The Exodiad,' written in collaboration with Cumberland; 'Riches, or the Wife and Brother,' a comedy, altered from Massinger; and 'Reasons for a new Translation of the Bible.'

LAMBARDE, WILLIAM, a lawyer and antiquary, born in London 18 Oct., 1536. He was a member of Lincoln's Inn, and became possessed of the manor of Greenwich, where he founded a hospital for the poor. He was appointed a justice of the peace for the county of Kent, and in 1592 a master in Chancery. In 1597 he was made keeper of the rolls, and, in 1600, keeper of the records in the Tower. Died 19 Aug., 1601. He wrote Archæologia, sive de prisca Anglorum legibus, 4to.; 'A Perambulation of Kent,' the earliest of our county histories, first published 1576; Eirenarcha, or the Office of the Justices of Peace; 'The Duties of Constables; Archeion, a Discourse upon the High Courts of Justice in England. This was posthumous; as also was the 'Dictionary Angliæ Topographicum et Historicum.'

LAMBECIUS, PETER, was born at Hamburg 1628. In 1652 he was appointed professor of history in his native city, and in 1660 rector of the college there. The ill-temper of his wife, who was old, and whom he had only married for her money, induced him to run away from Hamburg; and going to Rome he openly embraced the Catholic religion. He was afterwards librarian, counsellor, and historiographer to the emperor; and died at Vienna 1686. His principal works are 'Lucubrationes Gelianarum Podromus;' 'Origines Hamburgenses;' 'Animadversiones ad Colini Origines Constantinopolitanas;' a Catalogue of the MSS. in the Emperor's Library; and 'Podromus Historiæ Litterariæ.'

LAMBERT (Str.), bishop of Maestricht, was born in that city about 640; and was murdered at Liege on 17 Sept., about the year 708.

LAMBERT OF ASCHAFFENBURG, in Franconia, a Benedictine monk, who in 1058 made a journey to Jerusalem, and on his return to Europe composed a chronicle from Adam in 1077; the greater part of it, however, is a history of Germany. It was printed at Basle 1660.

LAMBERT, ANNE THERÈSE DE MARGENAT DE COURCELLES, marchioness de, a French authoress, born 1647, at Paris, where she died 12 July, 1733. She is principally known by her 'Advice of a Mother to her Son and Daughter.'

LAMBERT, AYLMER BOURKE, F.R.S., F.S.A., an English botanist, born 2 Feb., 1761; died at Kew 10 Jan., 1842.

LAMBERT, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a French literary compiler, was a native of Dôle; and died 14 April, 1795.

LAMBERT, FRANÇOIS, a Franciscan friar, born at Avignon 1487. He was one of the first Frenchmen who left the cloister to embrace the Lutheran religion. Retiring to Wittemberg, he married. He was much esteemed by Luther, and was one of the principal divines employed by the landgrave of Hesse to introduce Lutheranism into his dominions. Lambert preached in Switzerland and Germany as Luther's disciple; was appointed professor of divinity at Marburg 1527; and died 18 April, 1550. He wrote Commentaries on the Bible, and several polemical treatises.

LAMBERT, GEORGE, a landscape painter and engraver, born in Kent 1710; died in London 1 Feb., 1765.

LAMBERT, JOHN, major-general in the Parliament army, in the reign of Charles I. He distinguished himself at the battles of Naseby and Fife, and assisted Cromwell in his advancement to the Protectorate, but opposed his taking the title of king. For this Cromwell deprived him of his commission, but from prudential motives granted him a pension of 2000*l.* a-year. Being now divested of all employment, he withdrew to Wimbledon House in a situation of mind but ill calculated to enjoy the tranquillity of domestic retirement. On the death of the Protector he joined Fleetwood, Desborough, and others, in restoring the members of the Long Parliament, who had been dismissed, for which he was appointed one of the council of state, and colonel of a regiment of horse. The parliament, however, growing jealous of his influence in the army, directed him to resign his commission; but this he absolutely refused, and marching up to London, dislodged the members by force in October, 1659. He was then appointed major-general of the army, and sent to command the forces in the north; but General Monk having defeated him, and restored the parliament, he was deserted by his army, submitted, and was committed prisoner to the Tower. At the Restoration he was tried and condemned, but received a pardon, and died in exile at Guernsey March, 1694.

LAMBERT, JOHN HENRY, a mathematician and man of universal learning, was born at Mühlhausen, in Alsace, 29 Aug., 1728. He was brought up a tailor, but attained such a knowledge of the sciences as qualified him to become tutor to the sons of Baron Salis, president of the Swiss confederacy. He went with his pupils to Göttingen, next to Utrecht, and afterwards to Paris; in all which places he made friends. In 1759 he published his treatise on Perspective, and the next year his 'Photometry,' which procured him admission into the Bavarian academy; besides which he was a member of that at Berlin, where he died 25 Sept., 1777. Besides a prodigious number of memoirs and dissertations on all kinds of subjects, Lambert wrote many separate works. The most important of these are 'Photometria, sive de gradibus luminis, colorum, et umbræ;' 'Novum Organon, or New Key to the Sciences;' and 'Pyrometria.'

LAMBERT, MARK. See BARKWORTH.

LAMBIN, DENIS, a critic, born at Montreuil-sur-Mer about 1510. He became professor of eloquence and Greek literature in the college of France, and published editions of several classical authors. Died Sept., 1572.

LAMBINET, PIERRE, a French ecclesiastic and bibliographer, born at Tournai, near Mezieres, 1742; died at Paris 10 Dec., 1813. His principal work is 'Recherches concerning the Origin of Printing, and more particularly the earliest printing establishments in Belgium.'

LAMBORN, PETER SPENDELOW, an engraver. He resided at Cambridge, where he died 6 Nov., 1774.

LAMBTON, earl of Durham. See DURHAM.

LAMBTON, Lieutenant-Colonel WILLIAM, an English officer, who was engaged for upwards of twenty years in conducting the grand trigonometrical survey of India. Died 20 Jan., 1823.

LAMENNAIS, FELICITE ROBERT DE, a French abbe, born at St Malo 1782; died 27 Jan., 1854. After being ordained priest (1810) he rendered himself conspicuous by his opposition to Gallican principles, and between 1817 and 1823 he brought out in 4 vols. his 'Essay on Indifference in Matters of Religion,' an eloquent but paradoxical work, which, while it created a profound sensation in France, was received in some quarters with very harsh criticisms, to which Lamennais replied in a 'Defence' of his essay. In his 'Religion considered in the Political and Civil Order,' he violently assailed the celebrated declaration made by the French bishops in 1682; and he continued his attacks in his treatise 'Of the progress of the Revolution and the War against the Church,' which was censured by the archbishop of Paris. In 1830, however, he became a convert to the democratic cause, and started a Journal called the 'Avenir,' with the professed object of regenerating the church by rendering Catholicism subservient to the enfranchisement of the people. He also advocated the complete separation of the spiritual from the temporal power of the pope. These exaggerated doctrines were condemned by the Holy Father himself in an encyclical (1832). This proceeding deeply wounded the self-love of Lamennais, who, repudiating all his former beliefs and opinions, published 'The Words of a Believer,' 'Modern Slavery,' and a number of other works, in which he attacked religion and monarchy with the utmost virulence. Died 27 Jan., 1854.

LAMENNAIS, JEAN MARIE ROBERT DE, brother of the above, was born 1778, and entering the priesthood, led a most exemplary and holy life. He founded at Plœrmel the congregation of the Brothers of St. Joseph, and wrote several works, the most important of which were undertaken in conjunction with his brother before his apostasy. Died 1860.

LAMI, BERNARD, a priest of the oratory, born at Mans 1640. He became a teacher of philosophy at Saumur and Angers, till he was deprived for being a Cartesian, and banished to Grenoble; where Cardinal le Camus appointed him professor of divinity. He died at Rouen 29 Jan., 1715. His works are 'Les Elemens de Geometrie, et de Mathematiques;' 'Traité de Perspective,' which has been translated into English; 'Entretiens sur les Sciences;' 'Apparatus Biblicus,' of which we have also a translation; 'De Tabernaculo fœderis, de sancta Civitate Jerusalem, et de Templo ejus;' 'Demonstration, ou preuves evidentes de la Verite et de la Saintete de la Morale Chretienne;' 'Harmonia sive Concordia Evangelii;' 'A System of Rhetoric;' 'Reflexions sur l'Art Pœtrique, &c.'

LAMI, FRANCIS, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Montreuil, near Chartres, 1630; and died 4 April, 1711. He wrote a book on Self-knowledge; some esteemed works in defence of Christianity against Spinoza, &c.

LAMI, JOHN BAPTIST, professor of ecclesiastical history at Florence, and librarian of that city, wrote, among other esteemed works, 'De recta Patrum Nicenorum fide Dissertatio' (1730), in which he contended, in opposition to Leclerc and others, that the Nicene Creed concerning the Trinity was identical with the belief of the primifive Christians. He also edited the works of Meursius. Born 1697; died 6 Feb., 1770.

LA MOTHE LE VAYER, FRANÇOIS DE, a sceptical philosopher, born at Paris 1588. He relinquished the law for literary pursuits, and in 1639 was admitted a member of the French academy. In 1647 he was appointed preceptor to the duke of Anjou; and he also obtained the titles of historiographer of France and counsellor of state. He died 1672. His works have been published in 2 vols. fol., and 14 vols. 8vo.

LAMOTTE, ANTOINE HOUDART DE, a French poet, born at Paris 1672. He was bred to the law, which he abandoned for dramatic composition. In 1710 he obtained admission into the academy, at which time he was nearly blind, and before his death he lost his sight entirely. He produced several tragedies and comedies, some of which were very successful, particularly that entitled 'Inez de Castro.' In 1714 he published a translation of the Iliad, and had a controversy respecting Homer with Madame Dacier. In 1719 appeared his 'Fables,' besides which he wrote a number of odes, eclogues, and other pieces. Died 20 Dec., 1731. An edition of his works was printed in 1754, in 11 vols. 8vo.

LAMOTTE, GUILLAUME, a French surgeon and accoucheur, flourished about 1730.

LAMOTTE FOUQUÉ, CAROLINE, baroness DE, a German writer, was a native of Saxony, and died 27 July, 1831. She composed a great many romances, tales, and letters on the education of women.

LAMOTTE FOUQUE, FREDERICK HENRY CHARLES, baron DE, a German author, husband of the preceding, was born at Brandenburg 1777, and died 23 Jan., 1843. Of his numerous works the most popular are the tales of 'Peter Schlemihl,' and 'Undine.'

LAMOUROUX, JEAN VINCENT FÉLIX, a French naturalist, born at Aagen 3 May, 1779, was professor of natural history at Caen from 1809 till his death, which occurred 26 March, 1825, leaving several esteemed works.

LAMPE, FREDERICK ADOLPHUS, a Protestant divine, born at Dethmold, Westphalia, 19 Feb., 1683. He became rector of the university of Bremen, where he died 3 Dec., 1729. His principal works are: De Cymbalis Veterum; Synopsis of Sacred and Ecclesiastical History; and a Commentary on St. John's Gospel.

LAMPE, JOHN FREDERICK, a musical composer, was a native of Saxony. He came to England about 1726, and set to music many operas and dramatic pieces, including 'Amelia,' 'The Dragon of Wantley,' and 'Pyramus and Thisbe.' He likewise published 'A Plain and Compendious Method of teaching Thorough-bass,' 1737, a work of great merit; and 'The Art of Music,' 1740. In 1748 he settled in Dublin, but in 1750 removed to Edinburgh, where he died 25 July, 1751.

LAMPILLAS, FRANCIS XAVIER, a Spanish Jesuit, born at Jaen 1739, became professor of polite literature at Seville, but on the suppression of his order retired to Genoa, where he died 1798. In his 'Saggio Storico' he triumphantly vindicated the literature of Spain against Bettinelli and Tiraboschi, who had spoken of it in unfavourable terms.

LAMPLUGH, THOMAS, an English prelate, born in Yorkshire 1615, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, of which he became fellow in 1642. He compiled with the Presbyterians in the time of the civil war, but conformed at the Restoration, and became D.D., principal of St. Alban Hall, and vicar of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, London. In 1672 he was made dean of Rochester, and in 1676 bishop of Exeter. When the prince of Orange landed the bishop made a speech to the clergy and gentry, encouraging them to be loyal to King James, who bestowed upon him the archbishopric of York 1688. Notwithstanding this, he took the oaths to William and Mary. Died 5 May, 1691.

LAMPRIIDUS, BENEDICT, a Latin poet, was a native of Cremona, and died at Mantua 1540.

LANA TERZI, FRANCIS, an Italian Jesuit and mathematician, born 13 Dec., 1631, at Brescia, where he died 26 Feb., 1687. He published a work entitled 'Magisterium Naturæ et Artis,' 1684, which is said by the detractors of Montgolier to contain the earliest hint of the principles of aerostatic machines, to be conducted by gas.

LANCASTER, SIR JAMES, an English navigator. He sailed to the coast of America 1591, and afterwards doubled the Cape of Good Hope on a voyage to the East Indies, where he touched at Ceylon and Pulo Penang; but a mutinous spirit breaking out among his crew, he returned to England 1594. The same year he went out again from Dartmouth, and after taking several prizes, made himself master of the town of Pernambuco, on the coast of Brazil, where he gained considerable plunder. In 1600 Lancaster commanded an armament fitted out for the East Indies, where he settled a treaty of commerce with the sovereign of Achen, and opened a friendly intercourse with the king of Bantam. He returned to England in 1603. Lancaster, who received the honour of Knighthood in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, died about 1620.

LANCASTER, JOSEPH, is known by the method of mutual instruction which bears his name, although he was not the inventor of it. He was born in London 1771, and was for some time a member of the Society of Friends, which he quitted in order to devote himself exclusively to the education of children. Having become acquainted with the method of teaching which had been introduced into this country from India by Dr. Bell, he promoted it with great zeal, and his schools for a time met with signal success, though they were afterwards comparatively deserted, in consequence of the exertions of Dr. Bell, who was backed by the powerful influence of the Anglican clergy. After being several times imprisoned for debt, Lancaster left the country, and died in indigence at New York 24 Oct., 1835. His treatise on 'Improvements in Education' was published at London 1805.

LANCASTER, NATHANIEL, D.D., a native of Cheshire, was educated at Cambridge, and became rector of Stamford Rivers, Essex, where he died 20 June, 1775. He wrote an 'Essay on D.licacy,' 1748; and a poem entitled 'The Old Serpent, or Methusalem Triumphant.'

LANCE, GEORGE, a celebrated flower and fruit painter, was born at Little Easton, Essex, 1802, and died at New Brighton, Cheshire, 18 June, 1864.

LANCELOT, CLAUDE, was born at Paris 1616. He taught the belles lettres in the school of Port Royal, and had a share in the education of the Prince of Conti; but being removed from that employment he took the habit of St. Benedict, in the abbey of St. Cyran. Afterwards he was banished to Lower Brittany, where he died 15 April, 1695. He wrote 'Nouvelle Méthode pour apprendre la langue Latine'; 'Nouvelle Méthode pour apprendre le Grec.' These are called the Port Royal grammars, and have been translated into English. His other works are 'The Garden of Greek Roots, or Primitives of the Greek Tongue'; 'An Italian Grammar; A Spanish Grammar; Dissertations, Remarks, and Sacred Chronology; The General and Rational Grammar; Delectus Epigrammatum; La Vie de M. de St. Cyran; Relation du voyage d'Alet.

LANCISI, JOHN MARIA, a Roman physician and medical writer, born 1654; died 21 Jan., 1720.

LANCRET, NICOLAS, a French painter, born 1690 at Paris, where he died 14 Sept., 1743.

LANCRINCK, PROSPER HENRY, a landscape painter, born at Antwerp about 1628. He spent the greater part of his life in England, and died Aug., 1692.

LANDELLS, EBENEZER, a wood-engraver, was a native of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he was a pupil of the celebrated Bewick. He came to London about 1830, and became connected with the leading illustrated periodicals of the day. In 1841 he was one of the originators of 'Punch.' The next year he was commissioned by the proprietors of the 'Illustrated London News' to sketch and engrave the scenes and incidents of the Queen's visit to Scotland, and his success on this occasion led to his being subsequently engaged to illustrate for that journal several royal visits to various parts of the United Kingdom and the Continent. He was also the originator of the 'Illuminated Magazine,' and one of the proprietors of the 'Ladies' News-paper.' He died at Brompton 1 Sept., 1860, aged 51.

LANDEN, JOHN, F.R.S., a mathematician, born at Peakirk, Northamptonshire, Jan., 1719. He became an early contributor to the 'Lady's Diary' and, in 1754, communicated to the Philosophical Transactions 'An Investigation of Theorems which suggest several peculiar properties of the Circle.' In 1755 he published a volume of 'Mathematical Lucubrations.' After this he was appointed agent to Earl Fitzwilliam. In 1764 appeared his 'Residual Analysis,' but he never completed the work. In 1766 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, whose volumes he enriched with many valuable papers. Died 15 Jan., 1790. Besides the works already noticed, he published 'Mathematical Memoirs; and three tracts on the 'Summation of Converging Series.'

LANDER, RICHARD, an English traveller, born at Truro, Cornwall, 8 Feb., 1804. He commenced life as a servant, in which capacity he accompanied some of his masters to the West Indies, and to several countries on the continent of Europe. Inspired with a desire to explore the interior of Africa, he volunteered to accompany Capt. Clapperton on his second expedition, and he remained with that gentleman till his death, which occurred at Socatos in April, 1827. Lander then made his way back to England, where he published 'Records of Captain Clapperton's Last Expedition to Africa,' 2 vols., 1830. He then undertook, under the auspices of the government, another expedition to Africa, in company with his brother John. They arrived at Cape Castle 22 Feb., 1830, reached Boossá, on the west bank of the Niger, June 17, and thence ascended the river a distance of about a hundred miles to Yaooria, the extreme point of the expedition, where they arrived June 27. Returning to Boossá on Aug. 2, they there embarked in canoes on the Niger to descend the stream, in perfect uncertainty as to where it might take them. After undergoing great hardships, and being taken prisoners at Eboe, they eventually found their way back to England, and arrived at Portsmouth 9 June, 1831. An account of their adventures was published under the title of 'Journal of an Expedition to explore the Course and Termination of the Niger, by Richard and John Lander,' 1832. Several merchants of Liverpool having formed themselves into a company, projected an expedition, to be placed under the direction of Richard Lander, for the purpose of ascending the Niger and establishing a trade with the natives of Central Africa. The expedition, consisting of two steamers and a sailing brig, sailed 25 July, 1832, and reached Cape Coast Castle on Oct. 7. After tracing the winding of the Niger for a considerable part of its course, Lander was wounded in the thigh by a musket-shot, in a conflict with the savages on the banks of the Brass river, in consequence of which he died at Fernando Po 7 Feb., 1834. An account of his last expedition was published in 2 vols., 1835, under the title of 'Narrative of an Expedition into the interior of Africa by the River Niger, in the steam-vessels Quorra and Alburkah, in 1832, 1833, and 1834, by MacGregor Laird and R. A. K. Oldfield, surviving officers of the Expedition.'

LANDINO, CHRISTOPHER, one of the leading members of the Platonic academy at Florence, was a native of that city. He was tutor to Lorenzo and Julian de Medici, and wrote commentaries on Virgil, Horace, and Dante; an Italian translation of Pliny's Natural History; Latin poems, &c. Born 1424; died 1504.

LANDO was elected pope 5 Dec., 914, and died 26 April, 915.

LANDON, LETITIA ELIZABETH, a poet and romancist, born in London 1802, being the daughter of an army-agent. At an early age she evinced a talent for poetry, and contributed to the periodicals of the day, and in particular to the 'Annals,' numerous pieces signed with her initials 'L. E. L.' Her principal poems are the 'Improvisatrice'; 'The Troubadour'; 'the Golden Violet'; 'the Venetian Bracelet'; 'The Zenana'; and the 'Vow of the Peacock.' She also wrote in prose several novels, 'Ethel Churchill'; 'Francesca Carrara'; 'Lady Anne Granard'; 'Romance and Reality'; and 'Duty and Inclination,' which met with a flattering reception. On 7 June, 1838, she was married to Mr. George Maclean, and proceeded shortly afterwards to Cape Coast Castle, South Africa, of which settlement her husband was governor. She had not been long, however, in her new residence when she died 15 Oct., 1838, in consequence of taking an overdose of prussic acid, which she had been in the habit of using as a remedy for spasmodic affections to which she had been subject.

LANDOR, ROBERT EYRES, younger brother of Walter Savage Landor, received his education at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A. 1801; M.A. 1802); and after taking orders, held for some time the appointment of chaplain-in-ordinary to the prince regent. He was subsequently collated to the rectory of Birlingham, Worcestershire, where he died 26 Jan., 1869, aged 87. He wrote 'The Count Arezzi,' a tragedy, 1824; 'The Impious Feast,' a poem, 1828; 'The Earl of Brecon, a tragedy; Faith's Fraud, a tragedy, and The Ferryman, a drama, 1841; and 'The Fountain of Arethusa,' 2 vols., 1848.

LANDOR, WALTER SAVAGE, was born 30 Jan., 1775, at Ipsley Court, in the county of Warwick, where his father, Mr. Walter Landor, possessed a considerable estate. He was sent first to Rugby School, and afterwards to Trinity College, Oxford; but his conduct at both places was insubordinate, and he never took a degree. From his earliest years, indeed, he had exhibited a strange intractableness of temper; and he now refused to enter the army, to study the law, or to take any step which his friends urged upon him. He showed, however, that he possessed great abilities, and in his twentieth year published 'A Collection of Poems,' 1795, which was followed by 'Gebir,' 1798, and 'Poems from the Arabic and Persian,' 1800. His principles, both in religion and politics, being founded on an almost exclusive study of classical models, had scant regard for creeds or kings. They were widely different from those of his family; and his relations with his family became thereby so unpleasant that he quitted England and travelled on the Continent for some years. When the Spaniards rose in arms, in 1808, Mr. Landor, who had by that time inherited the family estate, embraced their cause with ardour, and received a colonel's commission, though he never distinguished himself in the field. In 1814, on the restoration of Ferdinand VII., he quitted the Peninsula, and passed the remainder of his protracted life in literary pursuits. In 1811 he married a lady of German parentage, by whom he had a family, but the union was not a happy one. His ideas of domestic life appear to have been formed rather on the classic model; and at length a separation ensued, whereupon Mr. Landor returned to England after an absence of several years. He was an intimate friend of Southey, though he retained and even exaggerated all the wild notions that the latter had abandoned—a circumstance which was not overlooked by Lord Byron, who reproached the laureate for his intimacy with an avowed republican and but half-concealed pagan. Thenceforth Landor was at daggers drawn with Byron, as indeed he was with many people, his temper being fierce and irritable, and never kept under any sort of control. In 1824-8 was published the first series of his 'Imaginary Conversations of Literary Men and Statesmen,' of which a Second Series appeared in 1829. These supposed dialogues, on which Landor's fame as a writer must rest, admirably illustrate the peculiarities of the different interlocutors and the periods in which they lived, and abound also in paradoxical and original opinions. His principal other works are, 'Simoniaca, a poem,' 1806; 'Commentary on Memoirs of Mr. Fox,' 1812 (suppressed); 'Idyllia Heroica decem,' 1820; 'Gebir, Count Julian, and other Poems,' 1835; 'Pericles and Aspasia,' 1836; 'A Satire on Saturnists, and Admonition to Detractors,' 1836; 'Pentameron and Pentalogia,' 1837; 'Andrea of Hungary and Giordana of Naples,' two dramas, 1839; 'Poemata et Inscriptiones,' 1847; 'Hellenics,' 1847; 'Popery, British and Foreign,' 1853; 'Citation and Examination of Shakspeare,' 1853; 'The Last Fruit of an Old Tree,' 1853; 'Letters of an American,' 1854; and 'Dry Sticks Fagoted,' 1857. The last-named work contained some gross and filthy attacks upon a lady residing at Bath, where Landor had been living for some time. The lady sought reparation in a court of law, and obtained a verdict of £1000 against Landor, who, to avoid payment, fled to Florence, and there died 17 Sept., 1864. It only remains to add that Landor was a frequent contributor to the 'Examiner' newspaper; that his works appeared in a collected form in 1846, and again in 1853; and that a biography of him by John Forster was published in 1869.

LANDSEER, JOHN, F.S.A., an engraver and antiquary, born at Lincoln, 1761. He became a pupil of William Byrne, the celebrated landscape engraver. His earliest productions of importance were the vignettes, after the designs of Louthembourg, for Macklin's Bible and Bower's History of England, working in conjunction with the eminent artists Bromley, Heath, and Skelton. In 1806 he appeared as a lecturer on the art of engraving before the Royal Institution, where he maintained that engraving was 'a species of sculpture, performed by incision,' and this doctrine he supported with learning, spirit, and ingenuity. In the same year he was elected an associate engraver of the Royal Academy; and he also held, for some time, the appointment of engraver to King George III. In 1809 he had a correspondence with the Academy on the question of admitting engravers to the rank and title of Royal Academicians; but his proposals were rejected. This failure increased the ill-feeling which the engravers entertained on the subject; but a still more lamentable result was the distaste acquired by Landseer for his profession, and the perversion of a mind eminently qualified for success in art into less congenial channels. He now commenced artistic critic in a short-lived periodical, entitled 'The Review of the Fine Arts,' and another publication called 'The Probe,' in which the artists were treated to more caustic criticism than was agreeable to their sensitive temperament. The titles of the more important of his other publications are, 'Sabaean Researches, in a Series of Essays,' including the substance of Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, on the engraved Hieroglyphics of Chaldaea, Egypt, and Canaan,' 1823; 'Descriptive Catalogue of Fifty of the Earliest Pictures in the National Gallery,' 1834; and 'Antiquities of Dacca,' twenty plates, from drawings by Sir C. D'Oyly. Mr. Landseer died 29 Feb., 1852.

LANDUS, BASSIANUS, an Italian physician and medical writer, born at Piacenza, where he was assassinated 1562.

LANE, SIR RICHARD, LL.D., an English judge, was a native of Northamptonshire. He studied in the Middle Temple, was called to the bar, and in 1640 was counsel for the earl of Strafford. In 1643 he was made chief baron of the Exchequer by Charles I., who also conferred on him the honour of knighthood. About the same time he was created LL.D. by the university of Oxford. He was one of the commissioners at the treaty of Uxbridge, and had the great seal delivered to him on the death of Edward Lord Littleton. He died in Jersey 1650 or 1651. His reports in the Exchequer were printed in 1657.

LANFRANC, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Pavia 1005. He became a professor of law at Avranches, and next took the vows in the Abbey of Bec, of which house he was chosen prior 1044. Here he established a seminary, which rose to such eminence as excited the envy of Berengarius, of Tours, who attacked Lanfranc on the subject of the Eucharist. In 1062 he was made abbot of St. Stephen's at Caen, and when the duke of Normandy obtained the English crown, he procured Lanfranc to be elected archbishop of Canterbury, the claims of which see he asserted against the archbishop of York. He died 28 May, 1089. He rebuilt the cathedral of Canterbury, and founded the hospitals of Harbledown and St. John, at Canterbury. His works were published in 1648, folio.

LANFRANC, an eminent surgeon, was a native of Milan, and died in France, about 1300. His 'Chirurgia Magna et Parva' was first printed 1490.

LANFRANCO, GIOVANNI, a painter, born at Parma 1581. He entered the service of Count Schotte, who, perceiving his genius for drawing, placed him under Agostino Caracci, on whose death he went to Rome, where he was employed by Annibale in the church of St. Jago. His principal excellence lay in fresco-painting on a large scale. In conjunction with Badalocchi he etched the prints from Raphael's pictures of the History of the Bible. Died 1647.

LANG, JOHN MICHAEL, a Protestant divine, born 9 March, 1664, at Ezelwangen, in the duchy of Salzburg. He was some time theological professor at Altorf, and died at Prentzlow 20 June, 1731. He wrote 'Philologia Barbaro-Græca,' 'Dissertationes Botanico-Theologicæ,' and several treatises on the Mahomedan religion.

LANGALLERIE, PHILIPPE DE GENTILS DE LA JONCHAT, Marquis DE, first baron of Saintonge, was born 1656. He distinguished himself in thirty-two campaigns in the French service, and attained the rank of lieutenant-general in 1704. On some disgust he went to Vienna, and was made a general of cavalry; but soon quitted the Imperial service for that of Poland, which he also left, and retired to Frankfort; from whence he removed to Berlin, and next to the Hague, where he entered into a negotiation with the Turkish ambassador, of which the emperor being apprised he caused him to be arrested at Stade in 1716, and conducted to Vienna, where he died 20 June, 1717. In 1753 appeared his 'Memoirs,' said to be written by him in prison; but it is a mere romance.

LANGBAINÉ, GERARD, D.D., was born at Bartonkirke, Westmoreland, about 1608. He became a servitor in Queen's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of D.D. in 1646. He was at this time keeper of the archives, and provost of his college, which places he held till his death 10 Feb., 1657-8. He endowed a free school at his native place, and published an edition of Longinus; Brief Discourse relating to the Times of Edward VI.; Episcopal Inheritance; A Review of the Covenant; The Foundation of the University of Oxford; The Foundation of the University of Cambridge, &c.

LANGBAINÉ, GERARD, son of the preceding, was born at Oxford 15 July, 1656, and educated at University College. He was appointed esquire beadle of law, and died 23 June, 1692. He wrote 'An Account of the English Dramatic Poets,' 8vo., Oxford, 1691. The copy of this work in the British Museum, with Oldys's MS. notes, is well known to every student of dramatic history.

LANGDALE, CHARLES, an English Catholic

gentleman, third son of the sixteenth Lord Stourton, was born 1787. After the passing of the Relief Act he represented Beverley in the House of Commons for a short time, and sat for Knarborough 1837-41. Throughout his life he took a leading part in matters relating to the interests of Roman Catholics; and he exerted himself in an especial manner to promote the education of poor children belonging to that community. He died in London 1 Dec., 1868. Mr. Langdale published 'Memoirs of Mrs. Fitzherbert; with an Account of her Marriage with H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV.,' 1856.

LANGDALE, HENRY BICKERSTETH, LORD, the brother of the Rev. Edward Bickersteth, who has been already noticed in this work, was born at Kirkby Lonsdale, Westmoreland, 18 June, 1763. He served an apprenticeship to his father, who was a surgeon and apothecary, after which he travelled on the continent as medical attendant to the earl of Oxford, whose daughter he subsequently married. He graduated at Caius College, Cambridge, 1808, was called to the bar 1811, distinguished himself by his assiduous attention to professional duties, and rose to eminence in the equity courts, to which he confined his practice. In 1836 he was appointed master of the rolls, in succession to Lord Cottenham, and at the same time was created Lord Langdale, and sworn of the privy council. He held his judicial office until a short time before his death, which occurred at Tunbridge Wells 18 April, 1851.

LANGEBECK, JAMES, a learned Dane, who became keeper of the national archives and a councillor of state. His most important works are, a History of the Mines of Norway; and 'Scriptores Rerum Danicarum Medii Ævi.' Born 1710; died 16 Aug., 1774.

LANGHAM, SIMON DE, Cardinal, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Langham, co. Rutland. He became a monk, and afterwards abbot of St. Peter's, Westminster. In 1360 Edward III. made him lord high treasurer; next year he was chosen bishop of London; but the see of Ely being offered him at the same time, he preferred the latter. In 1364 he was appointed chancellor, and in 1366 promoted to the see of Canterbury; in which station he distinguished himself by his zeal against Wickliffe. In 1368 he was made a cardinal, which gave so much offence to the king, that he seized the temporalities of his see. Langham, upon this, went to the papal court at Avignon, where he was amply remunerated, and much employed in diplomatic affairs. He died abroad 22 July, 1376, and his body being brought to England, was interred in Westminster Abbey, to which he had been a munificent benefactor.

LANGHANS, CHARLES GOTHARD, a Prussian architect, born at Landhuter, in Silesia, 1733; died 1 Oct., 1808. He was appointed director of the royal buildings at Berlin, which city he adorned with several handsome structures.

LANGHORNE, DANIEL, B.D., was born in London, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree 1657. In 1663 he obtained a fellowship in Corpus Christi College, and in 1664 took his degree of B.D. In 1670 he was presented to the living of Lavston, in Hertfordshire, where he died 1681. His works are, 'Elenchus Antiquitatum Albionensium;' and 'Chronicon Regum Anglorum.'

LANGHORNE, JOHN, D.D., an English divine, was born at Kirkby Steven, Westmoreland, in March, 1735. He was educated at Appley School, after which he became a tutor in a private family. His next occupation was that of usher in the school of Wakefield, and while there he was admitted into orders. In 1759 he went to reside with Mr. Cracroft, of Hackthorn, Lincolnshire, as tutor to his sons; and the year following he entered at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He now published several pieces, particularly 'Letters on Religious Retirement,' a novel, called 'Solyman and Almena,' and another, more popular, entitled 'Letters between Theodosius and Constantia.' In 1764 he obtained the curacy of St. John's, Clerkenwell, and soon after was appointed assistant-preacher at Lincoln's Inn. Having published a poem entitled 'Genius and Valour,' in which he defended Scotland from the scurrility thrown out by Churchill in his 'Prophecy of Famine,' he was complimented with the degree of D.D. by the university of Edinburgh. In 1767 he married Miss Cracroft, and at the same time was presented to the rectory of Blagdon, Somersetshire; but the next year he lost his wife in childbed; and it is not a little remarkable that his second lady died in the same manner. In 1770 Dr. Langhorne and his brother published their translation of Plutarch. In 1771 appeared our author's 'Fables of Flora.' In 1777 he was presented to a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Wells; and the same year printed his poem of 'The Country Justice.' Died 1 April, 1779. Dr. Langhorne printed two volumes of sermons, and in 1804 his son published his father's poems, in two volumes, with a biographical memoir. William Langhorne, the doctor's brother, born 1721, was presented (1754) to the rectory of Hakinge, and the perpetual curacy of Folkstone, where he died 17 Feb., 1772. He wrote 'Job,' a poem; a paraphrase of part of Isaiah, and had a principal share in the translation of Plutarch.

LANGIUS or LANGE, JOHN, a physician and medical writer, born at Löwenberg, in Silesia, 1485; died June, 1565, at Heidelberg, where he was principal physician to the elector palatine.

LANGIUS, JOSEPH, a classical editor and mathematician, who was professor at Friburg about 1610.

LANGIUS, RODOLPH, a learned man of the fifteenth century, who was provost of the cathedral of Munster. He contributed much to the restoration of classical purity in the teaching of the schools, particularly at Munster. He died 1519, aged 80. His Latin poems were printed 1486.

LANGLAND. See LONGLAND.

LANGLES, LOUIS MATHIEU, a French orientalist, born at Peronne 23 Aug., 1763. Appointed professor of Persian and Malay, and keeper of the oriental MSS. in Paris, he devoted his laborious career to popularising the study of the Eastern languages, and employed his vast philological erudition in solving many knotty problems concerning the history, geography, and statistics of the different countries of Asia. A long list of his publications may be seen in Querard's 'France Litteraire.' Died 28 July, 1824.

LANGLEY, BATTY, an English architect, who published many useful, practical books, such as the Builder's Jewel, the Builder's Price-Book; also 'Gothic Architecture Improved,' 1742; 'Pomona, or the Fruit Garden Illustrated,' &c. Died 1751.

LANGUET DE GERGY.

LANGRISH, BROWNE, M.D., an English physician, who was a fellow of the Royal Society, and distinguished himself as an able physiologist. He died in London 29 Nov., 1759. His works are, A new Essay on Muscular Motion, 1733; Modern Theory of Physic, 1738; Physical Experiments on Brutes, 1745; Croonian Lectures on Muscular Motion, 1747; A treatise on the Small Pox, 1758.

LANGTOFT, PETER, an English historian, was so named from Langtoft, in Yorkshire. He was a canon of the order of St. Augustine, at Bridlington, and died at the beginning of the reign of Edward II. He translated from the Latin into French verse Boscam's Life of Thomas à Becket, and compiled in the same language a metrical Chronicle of England; printed by Heame in 1725, 2 vols.

LANGTON, STEPHEN, Cardinal, archbishop of Canterbury, is said by Prince to have been a native of Devonshire, though it is more probable that he was born in Lincolnshire. He was educated at Paris, of which university he became chancellor. On going to Rome 1207, he was made a cardinal by Pope Innocent III., who also compelled the monks of Canterbury to elect him to the vacant archbishopric. This so greatly incensed King John that he took possession of the cathedral, banished the monks, and threatened the pope; who, in return, laid the kingdom under an interdict. John at last submitted, and in 1213 Langton took possession of his see, which he filled in a different manner from what the Pope expected, by joining the barons, and assisting them in procuring the Great Charter. He acted with the same firmness in the reign of Henry III., and died 9 July, 1228, leaving many works, several of which have been printed.

LANGUET, HUBERT, a statesman, born at Viteaux 1518. He studied the law, and took his doctor's degree in that faculty at Padua; after which he went to Wittenberg, where he embraced the Protestant religion. He then entered into the service of the elector of Saxony, who made him minister of state. He was at Paris at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, on which occasion he saved the life of Wechelius the printer. Being suspected of Zuinglianism, he retired from the elector's service, and went into that of the prince of Orange. He died at Antwerp 20 Sept., 1581. He wrote, a History of the Siege of Gotha, in Latin; Latin Letters to Sir Philip Sydney, translated into English by Pears 1845; Epist. ad principem suum Augustum Saxonicae ducem; Epist. ad Joachim Camerarium, &c.; Hist. descriptio susceptæ à Cæsarea majestæ executionis Augusto Saxonicae duce contra S. Romani imp. rebelles; Vindictæ contra Tyrannos.

LANGUET DE GERGY, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, a pious ecclesiastic, born at Dijon 1675. He became a doctor of the Sorbonne, and in 1714 vicar of St. Sulpice, which church he rebuilt on a large and magnificent scale, by subscriptions. He also founded the asylum of the Infant Jesus, consisting of two divisions; the first composed of thirty-five reduced ladies, and the next of four hundred poor women and children, who were all employed in various works for the general support. This institution was afterwards enlarged. Languet's other charities were also very extensive. Died 11 Oct., 1750.

LANGUET DE GERGY, JEAN JOSEPH, brother of the preceding, was born at Dijon 1677; became bishop of Soissons (1715) and afterwards of Sens

(1730); and died 11 May, 1753. He distinguished himself by his writings in defence of the bull 'Unigenitus.'

LANIERE, NICHOLAS, an Italian painter and musician, who came to England in the reign of James I. He drew portraits, and also employed himself in etching; but his principal excellence lay in musical composition; and his cantata of 'Hero and Leander' was much celebrated. Died Nov., 1646, aged 78.

LANINI, BERNARDINO, a painter, of Vercelli, died about 1578.

LA NOUE, and LANOVUS. See NOUS.

LANSBERG, PHILIP, a Protestant minister and writer on mathematics, astronomy, and sacred chronology, was born in Zealand 1561, and died at Middleburg 1632.

LANSDOWNE, GEORGE GRANVILLE LORD, was the grandson of Sir Bevil Greenville, and born 1667. He was educated at Westminster, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was created master of arts at the age of thirteen. He lived a retired life till the accession of Queen Anne, when he was elected into parliament. In 1710 he was appointed secretary at war and on 1 Jan., 1711-12, advanced to the peerage. In 1712 he was sworn of the privy council, and soon after made treasurer to the queen; from which office he was removed in the next reign, and sent to the Tower, as being attached to the house of Stuart; but was soon released. Died 30 Jan., 1734-5. His poetical and prose works were published in 2 vols. 4to., 1732.

LANSDOWNE, HENRY PETTY FITZMAURICE, MARQUIS OF, son of the first marquis, was born in London 2 July, 1780, and educated at Westminster School, at Edinburgh, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. At the age of 22 he was returned to parliament for the borough of Calne, but it was not till 1806 that Lord Henry Petty fully discovered to the House of Commons those talents which made him the worthy opponent of Mr. Pitt. This was in the debate concerning the conduct of Lord Melville as treasurer of the navy. Mr. Pitt on this occasion interposed his shield before his colleague, in spite of which Lord Henry Petty prosecuted his attack with energy until he had fixed upon the treasurer the charge of peculation and corruption. In the ministry familiarly known as 'All the Talents' he became the chancellor of the Exchequer, and at the same time was returned to parliament for the university of Cambridge in the place of Mr. Pitt. The ministry, after being in office little more than a year, were totally defeated on the Catholic Relief Bill. Lord Henry Petty lost with office what he valued far more—his seat for Cambridge University. He sat for a few months as member for Camelford, but in Nov., 1809, he was transferred to the House of Peers, the marquisate of Lansdowne devolving upon him by the death of his half-brother. In 1826, when Mr. Canning took office on moderate liberal principles, Lord Lansdowne responded to his call and became home secretary. Under Mr. Canning's successor, Lord Goderich, he held the seals of the foreign department; but the short duration of the ministry did not give him time to develop his capacity in the wide range of foreign politics. After remaining in opposition to the duke of Wellington from 1829 to 1831, Lord Lansdowne took office under Earl Grey as lord president of the council, in which position his judgment and experience were of great service to his party, and he aided in carrying the Reform Bill through each of its successive stages. On the accession of Sir Robert Peel he became the recognised leader of the opposition in the House of Lords, a position in which his manly courtesy, his dignity, and his generous disposition conciliated the respect and esteem of his opponents. During Lord John Russell's tenure of office he held the presidency of the council, and went into opposition with him on the advent of Lord Derby; yet he refused the reins of government, and suffered them to pass into the hands of Lord Aberdeen in December, 1852, though requested by the queen herself to undertake the premiership. He consented, however, to hold a seat in the cabinet without office. In the latter part of his life the influence of Lord Lansdowne upon his party was conservative in its bearing. For fifty years the advocate of liberal measures, he was satisfied with the progress that had been made, and he had no wish to endanger the cause of good government by countenancing crude and ill-considered projects and sweeping changes. Died 31 Jan., 1863.

LANSDOWNE, WILLIAM PETTY, first MARQUIS OF, was born 1737. He succeeded his father as earl of Shelburne 1761, and, in 1766, married the daughter of Earl Granville, by whom he became possessed of Lansdowne Hill, near Bath. By this lady, who died 1771, he had a son, who succeeded him, but died without issue. He married, secondly, Lady Louisa Fitzpatrick, by whom he had Lord Henry Petty, the subsequent possessor of the title. In 1763 Lord Shelburne was placed at the head of the board of trade, which he soon quitted to join Lord Chatham, with whom he came into power, in 1766; but on the change of ministry, in 1768, he became a zealous oppositionist, and so continued till 1782, when he was appointed secretary of state for the foreign department. When the marquis of Rockingham died, his lordship became the head of the ministry, but was forced to yield to the coalition of Lord North and Mr. Fox; after which he was created marquis of Lansdowne. Died 7 May, 1805. His collection of manuscripts is in the British Museum.

LANTIER, ÉTIENNE FRANÇOIS DE, a French dramatist and miscellaneous writer, born 1 Oct., 1734, at Marseilles, where he died 31 Jan., 1826.

LANZI, LOUIS, an Italian antiquary, born in 1732, near Macerata. He became a member of the order of Jesus, and, on the suppression of the society, was appointed sub-director of the gallery at Florence. He published a guide to that gallery in 1782; which was followed by an 'Essay on the Tuscan Language,' 3 vols.; but his greatest work is 'A History of Painting in Italy,' which has been translated into English by Thomas Roscoe, 6 vols., 1828. His other publications are, 'Dissertations on the Etruscan Vases;' and a translation of 'Hesiod.' He died at Florence 31 March, 1810.

LANZONI, JOSEPH, a physician, born at Ferrara 26 Oct., 1663. He became professor of philosophy and medicine in the college of his native city, where he died Feb., 1730. His works were published at Lausanne, 3 vols., 1738.

LAPARELLI, FRANCIS, an Italian architect, born at Cortona 1521; died 1570.

LAPIDE, CORNELIUS A., the Latinized name of Cornelius Van den Steen, called by the French Cornelle de la Pierre, one of the most renowned of all the commentators on Scripture. He was born in the diocese of Liege 1566, and having entered the Society of Jesus, soon distinguished himself by his progress in the study of the languages, of the belles lettres, and, above all, of the Sacred Scripture. Having made himself master of the Hebrew and Greek languages and the other helps to the study of the Bible, he devoted all his energies to that study for a period of forty years. He has left as the fruit of his meditations in ten folio volumes, in which he has explained the entire scripture of the Old and New Testament except the Psalms and Job. He was employed for a long time in teaching the Scripture, first at Louvain and afterwards at Rome, where he died 12 March, 1657. The best edition of his Commentary is that of Antwerp, printed in 1681. The exposition of the Pentateuch and that on the Epistles of St. Paul are the most esteemed parts of the work; but the entire work was received with the highest approval by Catholics, who still regard the author as one of their greatest scriptural scholars.—Dixon.

LAPLACE, PIERRE SIMON, a French mathematician of the highest celebrity, was born 22 March, 1749, at Beaumont-en-Ange, being the son of a farmer. After teaching mathematics in his native town, he removed in 1768 to Paris, where, through the influence of D'Alembert, he obtained a chair of mathematics at the military school. He first attracted the attention of the scientific world by a paper communicated in 1772 to the Memoirs of the Academy of Turin, on the integration of equations of finite differences, and from this period his reputation increased until he was placed by universal assent in the foremost rank among mathematicians. In politics he was less successful. Appointed by Bonaparte to the post of minister of the interior in 1799, he proved so incapable that he was removed at the end of six weeks to the presidency of the Senat Conservateur. He was also created a count by the emperor, but notwithstanding this he voted for his deposition in 1814. He was advanced to the dignity of a marquis immediately after the restoration of Louis XVIII.; and died 5 March, 1827. His principal works are, 'Theorie du Mouvement et de la Figure Elliptique des Planetes'; 'Theorie des Attractions des Spheres et de la Figure des Planetes'; 'Exposition du Systeme du Monde'; 'Traite de Mecanique Celeste'; 'Theorie Analytique des Probabilites'; and 'Essai Philosophique sur les Probabilites.'

LAPO, ARNOLFO DI, a famous architect, born 1232; died at Florence 1300. He built the cathedral at Florence and other great works.

LARCHER, PIERRE HENRI, a learned Hellenist, born at Dijon 12 Oct., 1726. He studied in the college of Laon, at Paris; and, in 1750, published his translation of the Electra of Euripides, which met with indifferent success. In 1758 appeared his translation of 'Chereas and Callirhoe,' from the Greek; after which he had a violent quarrel with Voltaire, who was, however, the aggressor. Larcher now undertook a translation of Herodotus, which did not come out till 1786. The best edition is in nine volumes octavo. His other works are 'Memoire sur Venus;' and a translation of Xenophon. Died 22 Dec., 1812.

LARDNER, DIONYSIUS, LL.D., a popular writer on scientific subjects, was the son of a Dublin solicitor. After receiving such education as was to be had in Irish schools at the beginning of the present century, he was placed in his father's office. Evincing, however, a very decided distaste for the profession, he was entered at Trinity College, Dublin, and devoted himself to scientific studies. He soon showed that he had now chosen the right path in life, and he rapidly gained an extraordinary number of prizes. In 1817 he obtained the degree of B.A., and for ten years remained at the university, publishing at first various treatises on mathematics, including the differential and integral calculus, and subsequently on the steam-engine. For this he obtained a gold medal from the Royal Dublin Society, and his reputation being now in a great measure established, he began to contribute to the Edinburgh Encyclopaedia and the Encyclopaedia Metropolitana, writing elaborate articles on pure mathematics as well as on the applied sciences. In 1827, on the establishment of the London University, Dr. Lardner accepted the chair of natural philosophy, and removing to London he set on foot a scheme for a 'Cabinet Encyclopaedia,' which he gradually perfected, obtaining the co-operation of many eminent men. In 1840 he went to the United States and delivered, with much success, a series of lectures, which he afterwards published. After devoting much time to 'Railway Economy,' and writing a good deal on this and other subjects, Dr. Lardner started his last important work, the 'Museum of Science and Art,' which contains many of the best popular treatises on science which have ever been written. He died at Paris 29 April, 1850, aged 66.

LARDNER, NATHANIEL, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Hawkhurst, Kent, 6 June, 1684. He studied at Utrecht and Leyden, after which he resided with Lady Treby, as her chaplain, and tutor to her son, whom he accompanied on his travels. In 1723 he was engaged with other ministers in a lecture at the Old Jewry; and, in 1727, he published the first part of 'The Credibility of the Gospel History.' In 1729 he became minister of a congregation in Crutched Friars. Though his income was small, he continued his great work at his own expense; and he also published 'A Vindication of the Miracles against Woolston'; a 'Letter on the Logos'; and several sermons. The university of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity; but his literary labours were not sufficiently appreciated in his life-time, as he sold the copyright of his 'Credibility' for one hundred and fifty pounds. He died at Hawkhurst 24 July, 1768. His works were collected into eleven volumes 8vo., 1788, with a life of the author by Dr. Kippis.

LARGILLIERE, NICOLAS, a portrait painter, born 1656, at Paris, where he died 20 March, 1746. He resided several years in England, and was much employed by Charles II. and James II.

LARIVE, JEAN MAUDUIT DE, a French tragedian, born at La Rochelle 6 Dec. 1744; died 30 April, 1827.

LARIVEY, PIERRE DE, a French dramatist, was a native of Troyes, and died about 1612.

LARREY, DOMINIQUE JEAN BARON, a celebrated French army surgeon, born at Beaudean, near Bagneres de Bigorre, 1766; died at Paris 25 July, 1841. He was the inventor of a system of 'ambulances volantes,' which enabled the surgeons to follow all the movements of their respective corps and to tend the wounded the moment they fell. Napoleon, who used to call him 'the virtuous Larrey,' bestowed many honours upon him, and remembered him in his will.

LARREY.

LARREY, ISAAC DE, an historian, born at Montivilliers, in France, 7 Sept., 1638, of Protestant parents. He was bred to the law; but on the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to Holland, where he was made historiographer to the states-general; afterwards he removed to Berlin, and obtained a pension. He died 17 March, 1719. His works are, The History of Augustus; History of Eleanor, wife of Henry II.; History of England, 4 vols.; History of the Seven Sages of Greece; History of France under Louis XIV.

LARROQUE, DANIEL DE, son of Mathieu de Larroque (hereafter noticed), was born at Vitre about 1660, and educated for the Protestant ministry. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes, however, he fled to this country, and afterwards visited Copenhagen and Amsterdam. In 1690 he returned to France, where he was reconciled to the Catholic religion. A satire which he wrote on Louis XIV., on account of the famine of 1693, led to his imprisonment for five years; but on his release he obtained a situation under government. Died at Paris 5 Sept., 1731. His most important works are, The True Motives of the Conversion of De Rancy, abbat of La Trappe; Life of Mezeray, a satirical romance; Life of Mahomet, translated from the English of Prideaux; and a translation of Echart's Roman History.

LARROQUE, MATHIEU DE, a Protestant minister, born at Leirac (Guienne), 1619. After officiating as pastor of Vitre, in Brittany, for twenty-seven years, he removed to Rouen, where he died 31 Jan., 1684. He was a man of profound erudition, and left numerous controversial works, among which we may mention, A History of the Eucharist; and a Reply to Bossuet's book on Communion under both kinds.

LASALLE, ANTOINE CHARLES LOUIS COLLINET DE, one of Napoleon's generals, was born at Metz 10 May, 1775, and fell at the battle of Wagram 6 July, 1809.

LASCARIS, ANDREW JOHN, a learned Greek, was a descendant of the imperial family at Constantinople. On the fall of that city he settled at Padua. Lorenzo de' Medici sent him to Greece to procure manuscripts, in which employment he was very successful. In 1494 he went to France, where he was patronized by Louis XII., who appointed him his ambassador to Venice. In 1513 he went to Rome, and persuaded Leo X. to found the Greek college, of which Lascaris became the principal, and also the superintendent of the Greek press. In 1518 he returned to France, and was employed by Francis I. in forming the royal library. He died at Rome in 1535. Lascaris published the Greek Anthologia, fol., 1494; four of the tragedies of Euripides; the Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius; and Scholia on Homer and Sophocles. He also translated Polybius into Latin; and wrote epigrams in Greek and Latin, printed at Paris, in 1527, 4to.

LASCARIS, CONSTANTINE, of the same family as the preceding, was born at Constantinople; but when that city was taken by the Turks (1454) he went to Milan, where he instructed the daughter of the grand duke in the Greek language. From thence he removed to Rome, and next to Naples, in which city he opened a school for Greek and rhetoric. Lastly, he settled at Messina, where he died about 1500. His Greek grammar was printed at Milan, 1476; and again by Aldus, 1495.

LATHAM.

LAS CASAS, BARTHOLOMEW DE. See CASAS.

LAS CASAS, EMMANUEL AUGUSTIN DIEUDONNE MARIN JOSEPH, Marquis DE, a French historian, one of the companions of the Emperor Napoleon at St. Helena, was born at the castle of Las Casas (Languedoc) 1766. After having gone into exile he returned to France after the 18th Brumaire; was made imperial chamberlain, and held several important administrative offices. In 1814 he refused to declare the forfeiture of the emperor, whom he accompanied to St. Helena, where his conversations with the illustrious prisoner led to his afterwards publishing the 'Memorial de Sainte-Hélène,' 1822-3. In 1816 he was compelled to quit St. Helena, and for eight months he was kept a prisoner by the English at the Cape of Good Hope. After 1830 he sat several times in the chamber of deputies, always voting with the extreme left. Died 15 May, 1842. Las Casas published under the assumed name of Le Sage 21 'Historical and Geographical Atlas,' which met with much success.

LASCY, PIERRE DE, a field marshal in the service of Russia, was born in the county of Limerick, Ireland, 1678. After serving in France, Austria, and Poland, he entered the service of Peter the Great, who made him governor-general of Livonia. Died 1751. His son, Joseph François Maurice, count De Lascy (born at St. Petersburg 1725; died at Vienna 30 Nov., 1801), became a general in the Austrian service, and distinguished himself in the Seven Years' War.

LASENA, PETER, an Italian jurist and critic, born at Naples 1590; died at Rome 3 Sept., 1636.

LASSALA, MANUEL, a Spanish Jesuit, born 1720, at Valencia; died 1798, at Bologna. He wrote some esteemed works, both in verse and prose, in Spanish, Italian, Latin, and Hebrew. His principal pieces in his native tongue are an Essay on General History; and an Account of the Castilian Poets.

LASSELS, RICHARD, an English priest and traveller, born at Brokenborough, Yorkshire, in or about 1603. He was admitted a student of the English college at Douay 1623, and ordained priest 1632. Afterwards being engaged as tutor to several persons of distinction he made with them, at different times, three journeys into Flanders, six into France, five into Italy, and one through Holland and Germany. He died at Montpellier Sept., 1668. His work entitled 'The Voyage of Italy' was published after his death by S. Wilson, 8vo., Paris, 1670, and reprinted 1698 in a wretchedly debased and altered form. Mr. Lascel also wrote 'A Method to hear Mass,' originally published 1686, and reprinted by Dr. Thomas Doyle, 2d edition, 1864; A Treatise of the Invocation of Saints; and an Apology for Catholics. There is an unpublished MS. by him in the British Museum (Addit. 4217), entitled 'An Account of the Journey of Lady Catherine Whetenhall from Brussels to Italy in 1650.'

LASSO, ORLANDO DI, a famous musical composer, born at Mons 1520; died at Munich 14 June, 1594.

LASSONE, JOSEPH MARIE FRANÇOIS DE, a French physician and chemist, born at Carpentras 1717; died at Paris 8 Oct., 1788.

LATHAM, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., an ornithologist, was the son of a surgeon and apothecary at Eltham, Kent, where he was born 27 June, 1740. He was for many years a country practitioner, first at Dartford, in his native county, and afterwards at Romsey, Hampshire. He obtained his doctor's degree from a foreign university, and died at Winchester 11 Feb., 1837. Dr. Latham was the author of 'A General Synopsis of Birds,' 6 vols. 4to., 1781-5, with a Supplement in two vols., 1787-1801; 'Index Ornithologicus,' 2 vols., 1790; and 'Supplementum Indicis Ornithologici' (called the Second Supplement), 1802. A new edition of the whole, enlarged and rearranged, with a general index, appeared at Winchester, 1821-8, 4to., 11 vols. in 10, with coloured plates.

LATHAM, JOHN, M.D., was born at Gansworth, Cheshire, 20 Dec., 1761, and educated at Manchester School, whence he removed to Brasenose College, Oxford (B.A. 1782; M.A. 1784; M.B. 1789; M.D. 1788). He was originally intended for holy orders, but ultimately determined to devote himself to the study of medicine. In Manchester, and afterwards in London, he obtained a high reputation and extensive practice, and filled the office of president of the College of Physicians. He was likewise physician extraordinary to the prince of Wales, afterwards George IV. He retired from practice 1829, and spent the remainder of his days at Bradwall, in his native county, where he died 20 April, 1843. His works are, 'A Plan for a charitable Institution to be established on the Sea Coast,' 1791; 'On Rheumatism and Gout,' 1796; 'Facts and Opinions concerning Diabetes,' 1811; several papers on practical subjects in 'Medical Transactions.'

LATHBURY, THOMAS, born 1798, and educated at Oxford, became incumbent of the parish of St. Simon and Jude, Bristol, 1848. He was author of 'History of Convocation;' 'History of the English Episcopacy from 1640 to 1662;' 'History of the Nonjurors;' 'Memoirs of Ernest the Pious;' 'History of the Book of Common Prayer and other Books of Authority;' and many other works in the theology and general literature. Died 11 Feb., 1865.

LATIMER, HUGH, was the son of a yeoman at Thurcaston, Leicestershire, where he was born 1490 or 1491. At the age of fourteen he was sent to the university of Cambridge, being elected a fellow of Clare Hall in Feb., 1509-10, and graduating B.A. 1510-11; M.A. 1514. Having taken orders, he was in 1523 appointed one of the university preachers, and in 1524 he proceeded B.D., on which occasion he delivered an oration against Melancthon and his opinions. At this period he was a fervent and zealous son of the Church, and wholly opposed to the Lutheran doctrines, but shortly afterwards his religious opinions underwent a complete change, in consequence of his attendance on the divinity lectures of George Stallord, and his conversations with Thomas Bilney. He now became noted as a popular preacher, and by his coarse abuse of the Church and her doctrines, not unnaturally made many enemies. However, he ingratiated himself with King Henry VIII. by giving an opinion in favour of the divorce, and that monarch conferred upon him the rectory of West Kington, Wiltshire. Subsequently, by the influence of Anne Boleyn and Thomas Cromwell, he was elevated to the see of Worcester (1535). While holding this dignity he was ordered to preach the sermon at the execution of Friar Forest, who had been condemned to death for denying the royal supremacy, and there is extant a letter from Latimer to Cromwell in which he refers in terms of unpardonable flippancy to the odious task imposed upon him. After the passing of the act of the Six Articles he resigned his see and retired into the country, but coming to London for medical advice in 1546, he was committed to the Tower for having been in communication with Dr. Crome. On the death of King Henry he was released, and he then went to reside with Archbishop Cranmer at Lambeth. He assisted that prelate in the revision of the homilies, and became a frequent preacher at court, and in the city and provinces, but declined to be reinstated in the see of Worcester, or to accept any other bishopric. He was, however, in the commission for reforming the ecclesiastical laws and suppressing heresies, and, to his disgrace, he took part in the scandalous proceedings against Joan Bocher, who was burnt for holding that our Saviour was not incarnate of the Blessed Virgin. Shortly after the accession of Queen Mary the tables were turned, and Latimer was consigned to the fate which he had been so eager to bring upon others. Being committed to the Tower in Sept., 1553, he remained in confinement there till the following March, when he and his fellow-prisoners, Archbishop Cranmer and Bishop Ridley, were removed to Oxford. After being convicted of heresy, he was handed over to the secular power and burnt, together with Ridley, 10 Oct., 1555, at a place then called Canditch, situate near the front of Balliol College, and not far from Bocardo, the common goal of the city of Oxford. He met his fate with great fortitude, saving to his fellow-sufferer, 'Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man: we shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out.' Latimer was a man of little learning, and endeavoured to make up for his deficiency in this respect by coarseness and scurrility. His complete works were edited by the Rev. George Elwes Corrie, for the Parker Society, 2 vols. 8vo., 1844-45.—Athen. Cantab.

LATIMER, WILLIAM, a classical scholar of eminence, was educated at Oxford, where, in 1489, he became fellow of All Souls. He went to Padua for instruction in Greek, and on his return was appointed tutor to Reginald Pole, by whose interest he obtained some ecclesiastical preferments. He also taught Erasmus the Greek language, and assisted him in his edition of the New Testament. He died about Sept., 1545, and was buried in his parish church of Saintbury, Gloucestershire. There are only some of his letters extant.

LATINI, BRUNETTO, was born at Florence, which country he left when his party of the Guelphs were defeated by the Ghibellins. He then went to France, but after residing there some years returned to Italy, and died in his native city 1294. He compiled a body of science, under the title of 'Tresor,' and another called 'Tesoretto,' somewhat similar to our Cyclopaedias. He was the tutor of Dante.

LATINUS, LATINUS, a learned priest, born at Viterbo about 1513; died at Rome 21 Jan., 1593, leaving 'Epistolæ;' 'Bibliotheca Sacra et Profana,' &c.

LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE, THÉOPHILE MALO CORRET DE, a celebrated soldier and philologist, called 'the first grenadier of France,' was born at Carhaix 1743. Entering the army early in life, he served in the war with Spain, and having attained the rank of captain, made the campaign of 1792 with the army of the Alps. His corps of grenadiers, called the 'Infernal Column,' was for a long time the terror of the enemy. As modest as he was courageous, he refused to accept the rank of general. After the peace he retired to Carhaix, and busied himself with literary researches; but he generously left his books to join the army again as a substitute for the son of one of his friends who had been drawn in the conscription; and was killed at Neuburg 27 June, 1800. He wrote 'Origines Galoises,' and other philological works.

LATREILLE, PIERRE ANDRÉ, a French naturalist, born at Brives 29 Nov., 1762; died at Paris 6 Feb., 1833. He was a member of the Academy of Sciences, and professor at the Museum of Natural History. His works are very numerous.

LAUD, WILLIAM, was the son of a clothier at Reading, and was born there 7 Oct., 1573. From the free school of his native place he went to St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1604 he took his degree of B.D., but gave offence to the Calvinists by his open avowal of the Arminian tenets. His first preferment was the vicarage of Stanford, Northamptonshire, soon after which he was presented to the living of North Kilworth, Leicestershire, but exchanged it for West Tilbury, Essex. He now took his doctor's degree, and became chaplain to Bishop Neile, of Rochester, who gave him the rectory of Cuckstone, which he resigned for that of Norton. In 1611 he was chosen president of his college; and in 1614 made prebend of Lincoln, to which was added the archdeaconry of Huntingdon. In 1616 he was advanced to the deanery of Gloucester, and soon after he accompanied the king to Scotland. In 1621 he was installed prebendary of Westminster, and the same year consecrated bishop of St. David's, on which he resigned his headship, though he might have held it according to the statutes. In 1622 he had a conference with Fisher, the Jesuit, in the presence of the marquis of Buckingham and his mother. The particulars of this disputation were published by both parties. In 1626 he was translated to Bath and Wells, and in 1628 to London. In 1630 he was chosen chancellor of Oxford, and no man ever filled that situation more advantageously to the university or the general interests of learning, of which his buildings and endowments there are lasting memorials. In 1633 he was raised to the archbishopric of Canterbury, and the same year chosen chancellor of the university of Dublin. The zeal which he displayed for conformity to the Church, and his endeavours to introduce the Liturgy into Scotland, created him numerous enemies. At the commencement of the Long Parliament, therefore, he was impeached by the Commons, and sent to the Tower. After lying there three years, he was brought to his trial before the Lords, by whom he was acquitted, which so provoked the faction in the Lower House, that they carried an ordinance declaring him guilty of treason, which they compelled the Peers to pass, and the archbishop was accordingly beheaded on Tower Hill, 10 Jan., 1644-c. His 'Theological Works' were published at Oxford, 6 vols. 8vo., 1847-9.

LAUDER, JAMES ECKFORD, a painter, born at Silvermills, near Edinburgh, 1812; died at Edinburgh 29 March, 1869. He was a member of the Royal Scottish Academy.

LAUDERDALE.

LAUDER, ROBERT SCOTT, brother of the preceding, and, like him, a member of the Royal Scottish Academy, attained great distinction as a painter. He was born at Silvermills 1803, and died 21 April, 1869.

LAUDER, SIR THOMAS DICK, son of Sir Andrew Lauder, Bart., of Fountainhall, Haddingtonshire, was born 1784, and succeeded to the title 1820. In 1839 he was appointed secretary to the Board of Scottish Manufactures, which was soon afterwards amalgamated with the Fishery Board; and he became, in addition, secretary to the Board of British White Herring Fishery. He ably discharged the duties of his secretaryship till within a short time of his death, which took place 29 May, 1842. Sir Thomas was a respectable writer, and contributed a good deal to 'Blackwood' and other magazines. Of his separate publications the most important are 'Lochander, a romance,' 1825; 'The Wolf of Badenoch, a historical romance of the fourteenth century,' 1827; 'Account of the Great Moray Floods of 1820;' 'Highland Rambles and Legends,' 1837; 'Legends and Tales of the Highlands,' 1841; 'Tour round the Coast of Scotland,' 1842; and editions of Gilpin's Forest Scenery and Price's Essays on the Picturesque.

LAUDER, WILLIAM, a native of Scotland, who was educated at Edinburgh, where he taught the Latin class with reputation in 1734; but failing in his expectations of a professorship, he removed to London, after publishing an edition of 'Johnston's Psalms.' In 1747 he began an attack upon the literary character of Milton, in the 'Gentleman's Magazine;' and in 1751 published a pamphlet entitled 'An Essay on Milton's Use and Imitation of the Moderns in his Paradise Lost.' Lauder's forgeries, after imposing upon Dr. Johnson, were exposed by Dr. Douglas, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, which drew from the fabricator an acknowledgment of his guilt. Yet after this he returned to the charge in a tract with this title, 'The Grand Impostor detected, or Milton convicted of Forgery against Charles I.' Lauder died at Barbadoes about 1771.

LAUDERDALE, JAMES MAITLAND, eighth EARL OF, was born at Hatton, in Mid Lothian, 26 Jan., 1759, and studied at Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Paris. In 1780 he was elected M.P. for Newport, in Cornwall, and in 1784 for Malmesbury, being, during the time he sat in the Lower House, a steady supporter of the principles of Mr. Fox. He succeeded his father 1789, and, at the general election in the ensuing year, was chosen a representative peer for Scotland. In the House of Lords he was a frequent speaker, and distinguished himself by his extreme opinions, and his active opposition to the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act, the Sedition Bill, and other measures of the administration. On the formation of the Grenville administration, in Feb., 1806, he was created a baron of the United Kingdom, and sworn of the Privy Council. In July the same year he was appointed keeper of the great seal of Scotland, and shortly afterwards sent to France, with full powers to conclude peace. An account of the negotiations will be found in the 'London Gazette' of 21 Oct., 1806. His lordship only held office till the change of administration in March, 1807; and the last ten years of his life he spent in retirement, engaged in agricultural pursuits. Died 13 Sept., 1830. His lordship was the author of 'An Inquiry into the Nature and Origin of Public Wealth, and into the Means and Causes of its Increase,' 1804, which was translated into French; and of other works on financial subjects.—Anderson.

LAUDERDALE, JOHN MAITLAND, DUKE OF, was born at Lethington, in Scotland, 24 May, 1610, being eldest son of the first earl of Lauderdale, to whose title he succeeded 1645. In early life he was an earnest adherent of the Covenanters, who employed him on several occasions to treat with Charles I.; but he eventually changed sides, and became an enthusiastic supporter of the royalist cause. He formed one of Charles II.'s court at the Hague, and was with that monarch at the battle of Worcester, when he was taken prisoner. Set at liberty at the Restoration, he was appointed principal secretary of state in Scotland, and was afterwards also made one of the extraordinary lords of Session, president of the Council, first commissioner of the Treasury, one of the lords of the king's bedchamber, and governor of Edinburgh Castle. Having undertaken to force episcopacy on the Scotch nation, and to make the king's authority absolute and arbitrary, he stretched the power of the crown to every kind of excess, and assumed to himself a sort of lawless administration. He went so far, indeed, as to name the privy councillors, to place and remove the lords of the Session and Exchequer, to grant gifts and pensions, to levy and disband forces, to appoint general officers, and to transact all matters belonging to the prerogative. He was, besides, one of the five lords who had the management of affairs in England, and were called the 'Cabal.' In 1672 he was created marquis of March, duke of Lauderdale, and K.G.; but these honours did not protect him from the indignation of the House of Commons, by whom, the next year, he was voted a 'grievance, and not fit to be trusted or employed in any office or place of trust.' And though his Majesty thought proper to create him baron of Petersham and earl of Guilford in the English peerage (1674), the House of Commons, the next year, presented an address to the king to remove him from all his employments and from his Majesty's presence and counsels for ever. This was followed by other addresses of the same kind, the result being that he was deprived of all his offices except that of extraordinary lord of Session, which had been granted to him for life. He died at Tunbridge Wells, 24 Aug., 1682, leaving a character which no historian has been hardy enough to vindicate.

LAUDERDALE, RICHARD MAITLAND, fourth earl of, went to France at the Revolution, and joined the court of James II. at St. Germain; but, although a Catholic, he disapproved the violent measures of the abdicated king, and was consequently not admitted to any share in his confidence. He died at Paris 1695. His translation of Virgil was printed in 2 vols., 1737. Dryden, who saw the MS., adopted many of the lines into his own translation.

LAUDOHN, GIDEON ERNEST, a celebrated Austrian general, born at Tootzen 1710; died 14 July, 1790.

LAUNAY, FRANÇOIS DE, a French jurist, professor of law in the university of Paris, was born at Angers, 12 Aug., 1612, and died 9 July, 1693.

LAUNAY, PIERRE DE, a French Protestant writer, born at Blois 1573; died 27 June, 1601.

LAUNOY, JEAN DE, a celebrated doctor of the Sorbonne, was born 21 Dec., 1603, at Valdéric, in the diocese of Coutances, and died at Paris 10 March, 1678, leaving a great number of theological works, which were published in a collected form by Granet, 10 vols. folio, 1721-33.

LAURAGUAIS, LOUIS LEON FÉLICITÉ BRANÇAS, duc DE, was born 3 July, 1733, at Paris, where he died 9 Oct., 1824. He was remarkable for his extensive scientific attainments, and especially for his knowledge of chemistry. He made some important discoveries respecting the nature and qualities of the diamond, and suggested several improvements in the manufacture of porcelain.

LAURENCE GIUSTINIANI (ST.), the first patriarch of Venice, was born there 1 July, 1381, and died 8 Jan., 1455, leaving several works on religious subjects.

LAURENCE O'TOOLE (ST.) Born of a noble Irish family, he devoted himself to the priesthood, and, in the twenty-fifth year of his age, was appointed abbot of Glendalough. He was consecrated archbishop of Dublin, and died 14 Nov., 1180. In 1218 he was canonized by Pope Honorius III. His life, published by Surius, is said to have been written by Ralph of Bristol, bishop of Kildare about the commencement of the thirteenth century.

LAURENCE, FRENCH, D.C.L. See LAWRENCE.

LAURENCE, RICHARD, the last Protestant archbishop of Cashel, was the brother of Dr. French Lawrence. He was born at Bath 1706, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, though he subsequently removed to University College. He was appointed regius professor of Hebrew, and a canon of Christ Church, 1814; was promoted to the archiepiscopal see of Cashel 1822; and died 28 Dec., 1838. As a theologian he was greatly esteemed by the members of his communion. His principal publications are, 'An Attempt to illustrate these Articles of the Church of England which the Calvinists improperly consider Calvinistical, in eight Sermons, at Bampton's Lecture,' 1805; 'Dissertation on the Logos of St. John,' 1808; 'Critical Reflections upon some important Misrepresentations in the Unitarian version of the New Testament,' 1811; 'Remarks upon the systematical Classification of MSS. adopted by Griesbach in his edition of the Greek Testament,' 1814; 'The Doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration contrasted with the Tenets of Calvin,' 1815; 'The Doctrine of the Church of England upon the Efficacy of Baptism, vindicated from Misrepresentation,' 1818; 'Tracts, theological and critical,' 1819; 'Authentic Documents relative to the Predestinarian Controversy in the Time of Queen Mary, published from a MS. in the Bodleian Library,' 1819; 'Ascensio Isaie Vatis, Opusculum pseudographum, multis abhinc seculis, ut videtur, perditum, nunc autem apud Æthiops compertum, et cum Versione Latina Anglicanaque publici juris factum,' 1819; 'Remarks on the Critical Principles adopted by Writers who have recommended a new Translation of the Bible,' 1820; Reply to Prof. Samuel Lee's Strictures on the preceding work, 1821; 'The Book of Enoch the Prophet; an apocryphal production, supposed to have been lost for ages, but discovered at the close of the last century in Abyssinia, now first published from an Ethiopic MS. in the Bodleian Library,' 1821, again 1838.

LAURENS, HENRY, an American merchant and statesman, born at Charleston, South Carolina, 1724; died there 8 Dec., 1792.

LAURENSEN, JOHN, a Jesuit, born at Chippen

LAURENT.

Hill, near Witham, Essex, 6 Jan., 1760; died at Bury St. Edmunds, 19 Sept., 1834. He translated from French into English Huby's 'Considerations on the Law of God'; the Pere d'Orleans' 'Life of St. Stanislaus Kostka'; and Grou's 'Christian sanctified by the Lord's Prayer.'

LAURENT, PETER JOSEPH, an engineer and mechanic, born in Flanders in 1715. He is said to have constructed some hydraulic machines when he was not more than ten years of age; and at twenty-one he was made superintendent of several public works, among which was the direction of the canals in the Netherlands. He also projected the junction of the Somme and the Scheldt, for which he was honoured with the order of St. Michael. Died 1773.

LAURI, FILIPPO, a painter, born 1623, at Rome, where he died 1694.

LAURIERE, EUSÈBE JACOB DE, a French advocate and legal writer, born at Paris 31 July, 1659; died 9 Jan., 1728.

LAURISTON, JACQUES ALEXANDRE BERNARD LAW, marquis DE, a marshal of France and diplomatist, born at Pondicherry, in the East Indies, 1 Feb., 1708; died at Paris 11 June, 1828. He was the grand-nephew of John Law, the celebrated projector.

LA VALETTE, ANTOINE MARIE CHAMANS, comte DE, a French officer, born at Paris 1769. At the breaking-out of the Revolution he became an officer of the National Guard, in which capacity he was one of the last defenders of the king, on 10 Aug., 1792. Entering the Republican army, he distinguished himself on the Rhine and in La Vendée, and gained the confidence of Napoleon, who appointed him his adjutant and private secretary. He accompanied Napoleon to Egypt, and became more nearly allied to him by marrying a niece of Josephine. After the 18th Brumaire he was made postmaster-general and advanced to the dignity of a count. In 1814 he lost his office, but regained it after the return of Napoleon from Elba. After the restoration of Louis XVIII. he was arrested for having aided the emperor, and condemned to death. He escaped by the aid of his wife and daughter and three English gentlemen, and went to Munich, where he was kindly received by the king. Madame La Valette, after the escape was discovered, was kept for some time imprisoned, and became insane; but she survived till June, 1855. In 1822 La Valette was pardoned, and returned to France, where he lived in obscurity. He died at Paris, 15 Feb., 1830. His 'Memoires et Souvenirs,' containing an interesting account of his escape, was published the following year. Napoleon I. bequeathed 300,000 francs to La Valette, of which 60,000 were paid to him. In 1855 Napoleon III. caused the remainder to be paid to his heirs.

LAVATER, JOHN CASPAR, a Swiss divine and writer on physiognomy, born at Zurich 15 Nov., 1741. He became pastor of the Orphan's Church at Zurich, and afterwards of St. Peter's, the principal church in that city. His death occurred 2 Jan., 1801, in consequence of a wound he received in 1799, when the French troops, under Massena, took Zurich by storm. Lavater was a man of brilliant talents, which were, however, mingled with much mystic enthusiasm. Of his best-known work, the 'Essays on Physiognomy,' there are several English translations. He also wrote Poems; Secret Journal of a Self-Observer; Fraternal Letters; Letters supposed to have been written by St. Paul before his Conversion; and Aphorisms on Man.

LAVATER, LOUIS, a Protestant divine, born 11 March, 1527, at Kiburg, in the canton of Zurich. He became canon and pastor of Zurich, where he died 15 July, 1586, leaving a Sacramentarian History; a Life of Bullinger; a treatise 'Of Ghosts and Spirits,' translated into English 1572; and other works. His exposition of the Book of Ruth was translated by Ephraim Pagett, a Child of eleven Yeares of Age, and published at London 1580.

LAVINGTON, GEORGE, an English prelate, born 1683, at Mildenhall, in Wilts. He was educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to a fellowship at New College, Oxford, where he took his degree of bachelor of civil law 1713. In 1717 he was presented to the living of Hayford Warren, Oxfordshire, after which he was made prebendary of Worcester; and in 1732 canon residentiary of St. Paul's. In this year he took his doctor's degree, and obtained successively the rectories of St. Mary Aldermary and St. Michael Bassishaw. In 1747 he was advanced to the bishopric of Exeter, where he died 13 Sept., 1762. Besides some sermons, he published a work entitled 'The Enthusiasm of the Methodists and Papists compared,' which involved him in a controversy with Whitefield and Wesley.

LAVOISIER, ANTOINE LAURENT, an eminent chemist, born at Paris 16 Aug., 1743. As early as 1764, when the French government proposed a prize question respecting the best mode of lighting the streets, he wrote a dissertation on the subject, which obtained a gold medal from the king; and two years afterwards he was chosen a member of the Academy of Sciences, the Memoirs of which society he continued to enrich with numerous papers. In 1774 he published 'Experiments on the gaseous fluids,' after which he turned his attention to the calcination of metals, and printed the result of his observations. In 1789 appeared his 'Traité Elementaire de Chimie;' and he was employed in the application of his scientific acquirements, to the most important purposes, when the Revolution put a stop, not only to his pursuits, but to his life, for he suffered on the scaffold 8 May, 1794.

LAW, EDMUND, a learned bishop, born at Cartmel, Lancashire, 1703. He was educated at Kendal, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1723, and soon after was elected fellow of Christ's College. In 1727 he proceeded to the degree of master of arts, and in 1732 published a translation of Archbishop King's 'Origin of Evil,' with notes. He also, while at college, conducted a new edition of Stephens's Latin Thesaurus through the press. In 1737 he was presented to the rectory of Graystock, Cumberland. In 1743 he was promoted to the archdeaconry of Carlisle, which he resigned in 1756, on being chosen master of Peterhouse. About 1760 he was made librarian of the university, and some years afterwards was promoted to the archdeaconry of Stafford, and to a prebend in Lincoln Cathedral. In 1768 he was advanced to the bishopric of Carlisle, where he died 14 Aug., 1787. He was the author of Considerations on the Theory of Religion; An Inquiry into the Ideas of Space, Time, &c. He also published an edition of Locke's works. Two of his sons came to be bishops, and one a judge.

LAW, EDWARD, Lord Ellenborough. See ELLENBOROUGH.

LAW, JOHN, of Lauriston, a famous financial projector, was born at Edinburgh April, 1671. On the death of his father, who was a goldsmith, he came into possession of an estate called Lauriston; and in 1694 visited London, where he fought a duel, and killed his antagonist, for which he was sent to prison, but effected his escape, and returned to Scotland. He next went to Holland, and from thence to Paris, where, in 1716, he opened a bank, which being dissolved by an arrêt, and a new one erected called the Royal Bank, Law was named the director. After this he erected a company, to which was granted a tract of land on the Mississippi, whence the scheme obtained that name. An immense number of notes was issued, for which people were eager to dispose of their real property; and thousands were thereby brought to ruin. At the same period a similar scheme was set on foot in England by the directors of the South Sea Bubble, which resulted in the ruin of hundreds of speculators. In 1720 Law was made comptroller of the finances; but the same year the bubble burst, and he escaped to Brussels, next to England, and lastly to Venice, where he died 21 March, 1729.

LAW, WILLIAM, a mystic divine, born at King's Cliffe, Northamptonshire, 1686. He was of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his master's degree, in 1712; but on refusing the oaths at the accession of George I., he was obliged to leave the university. After officiating as a curate in London, he became tutor to Mr. Gibbon, of Putney, father of the historian; and such was the regard in which he was held, that Mrs. Hester Gibbon, his pupil's sister, and Mrs. Hutcheson, a widow lady, formed a united establishment at King's Cliffe, of which Mr. Law was the spiritual director. At this place he founded an almshouse and a school. He died 9 April, 1761. His principal works are, A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life; Three letters to the bishop of Bangor; Treatise on Christian Perfection; Remarks on the Fable of the Bees; The Unlawfulness of Stage Entertainments; The Case of Reason; Answer to Dr. Trappe, on being righteous overmuch; On Regeneration; Answer to Hoadly on the Sacrament; The Spirit of Prayer; The Spirit of Love. Latterly he fell into the notions of Behmen, whose works he published.

LAWES, HENRY, a musician, was born about 1600, at Salisbury, of which cathedral his father was vicar-choral. In 1625 he became a gentleman of the chapel royal; and was much employed in composing airs and songs for masques, particularly that of Comus, by Milton. He died 21 Oct., 1662. His brother, William, was also a composer, and a gentleman of the chapel royal. He was killed at the siege of Chester 1645.

LAWLESS, MATTHEW JAMES, an English artist, died in London 6 Aug., 1864, aged 27. He painted in oil cabinet pictures full of character and marked by extraordinary correctness of costume. He also contributed numerous sketches to 'Once a Week,' 'London Society,' and other periodicals.

LAWLESS, VALENTINE BROWNE, Lord Cloncurry. See CLONCURRY.

LAWRENCE, ANDREW, an able English engraver, born in Westminster 1708; died in Paris 8 July, 1747.

LAWRENCE, FRENCH, D.C.L., a civilian, was a native of Bristol, and received his education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He became a member of the college of advocates, and rose to eminence as a civilian. In 1797 he was appointed regius professor of civil law at Oxford; and having for many years enjoyed the friendship of Burke, he obtained, through his means, the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam, and thereby a seat in the House of Commons. Died 27 Feb., 1809. He was one of the executors of Mr. Burke, and the joint editor of his works. His own productions are some of the 'Probationary Odes,' written in conjunction with Richardson; some of the Annual Registers; and 'Critical Remarks on detached passages of the New Testament, particularly the Revelation of St. John,' 8vo., Oxford, 1810. His Correspondence with Burke was published at London 1827. He was brother of the archbishop of Cashel. See LAURENCE.

LAWRENCE, SIR HENRY MONTGOMERY, was born at Mattura, in Ceylon, 28 June, 1806, being a younger son of Lieut.-Col. Alexander Lawrence, who fought with honour in India against Tippeo Saib. He studied at the military college at Addiscombe, obtained a cadetship in the Bengal artillery (1821), served in the Afghan campaign in 1843, and the same year, having then attained the rank of major, was appointed British resident at Catterpoo. He distinguished himself in the Sutlej campaigns, was made a military companion of the Bath, and from 1846 to 1849 was agent for the governor-general on the north-west frontier, and resident at Lahore, where his services won for him the civil decoration of K.C.B. He was next appointed chief of the board of administration in the Punjab, and received the commission of colonel and the honorary appointment of aide-de-camp to the queen. From 1852 to 1857, he was agent of the governor-general in Kajoootana. Although ill-health demanded his return to England, he consented, at the request of the Indian government, to assume the chief commissionership of Oude, and arrived at Lucknow in March, just before the commencement of the mutiny. When the first disturbances occurred he demanded and obtained full powers as chief military commander in Oude, receiving at the same time a commission as brigadier-general; and the memorable defence of the residency was made under his direction up to the time of his death. He was mortally wounded by a shell 2 July, 1857, and died on the 4th of that month. Sir Henry was the author of 'Adventures of an Officer in Runjeet Singh's Service,' and of various military and political essays, published in a collected form 1859.

LAWRENCE, STRINGER, an English general in the service of the East India Company, born 1697; died 10 Jan., 1775. His services were acknowledged by the Company, who erected a monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey.

LAWRENCE, THOMAS, M.D., was born in Westminster 25 May, 1711. He took his degree of doctor at Trinity College, Oxford, 1740; and the same year was chosen anatomical reader to the university. In 1744 he was elected fellow of the College of Physicians, for whose edition of the works of Harvey he wrote the biographical memoir, and received a compliment of one hundred guineas. In 1767 he became president of the college, and was re-elected for the seven following years. Died 6 June, 1783. Besides the Life of Harvey, he wrote 'De Hydrope;' and 'De Natura Musculorum

LAWRENCE.

Prælectiones tres. One of his sons was Sir Soulden Lawrence, judge of the King's Bench.

LAWRENCE, Sir THOMAS, the eminent portrait painter, was born 13 April, 1769, at Bristol. His father kept an inn in that city, but shortly after the birth of the future artist he removed to Devizes. At a very early age young Lawrence showed that he possessed extraordinary abilities, which are thus alluded to in Mr. Barrington's 'Miscellanies,' published in 1781:—'This boy is now [Feb., 1780] nearly ten years and a half old, but at the age of nine, without the most distant instruction from any one, he was capable of copying historical pictures in a masterly style, and also succeeded amazingly in compositions of his own, particularly that of Peter denying Christ. In about seven minutes he scarcely ever failed of drawing a strong likeness of any person present, which had generally much freedom and grace if the subject permitted. He is likewise an excellent reader of blank verse, and will immediately convince any one that he both understands and feels the striking passages of Milton and Shakspeare.' Failing in business at Devizes, his father removed to Bath, where the precocious son was placed as a pupil with William Hoare, the father of the well-known Prince Hoare. Under so accomplished an instructor he made rapid progress, and the family were at this period maintained by the sale of his drawings. Before he attained his seventeenth year the family removed to London. His first appearance as an exhibitor at Somerset House was in 1787, and he rapidly became the fashionable portrait painter of the day, a pre-eminence which he maintained for upwards of forty years. In 1791 he was chosen a 'supplemental associate' of the Royal Academy, his age not permitting him to become a candidate for associate membership. This, it may be observed, is the only instance in which such an exceptional honour has been conferred. In 1792 he was appointed by George III. to succeed Sir Joshua Reynolds as his principal painter in ordinary. The peace of 1814 was an auspicious era for Lawrence, who received a magnificent commission from the king to paint the portraits of the allied sovereigns, their ministers, and the exalted personages of Europe, including Pope Pius VII., Metternich, Blucher, Platon, and Cardinal Gonsdvi. For this purpose he visited Paris, Vienna, Rome, and the other principal cities of the continent, and painted a series of portraits which is now deposited in the Waterloo Hall at Windsor. He was knighted in 1815, and in 1820 was elected president of the Royal Academy on the death of Benjamin West. In 1826 he paid a second visit to Paris to paint the portrait of Charles X., who rewarded him with the cross of the legion of honour. He died at his house in Russell Square, London, 7 Jan., 1830. The characteristics of his style are brilliancy of colour and a delicate mode of conveying a faithful resemblance with a beautiful sense of grace and effect. He charged high for his portraits, but, notwithstanding his immense receipts, died comparatively poor in consequence of his profuse expenditure and extravagant style of living. His Life and Correspondence by D. E. Williams was published in 1831, and a collection of engravings from fifty of his choicest works, with biographical and critical notices, in 1845.

LAWSON, Sir JOHN, a brave English admiral, was a native of Hull, and rose from the lowest station to the command of a ship. He served the parliament with great fidelity, but co-operated with Monk in effecting the Restoration, for which he received the thanks of both Houses. He afterwards served under James duke of York as rear-admiral, and was killed in the engagement with the Dutch fleet 1665.

LAX, WILLIAM, Lowndean professor of astronomy and geometry at Cambridge, died at St. Ibbis near Hitchin, Herts, of which parish he was vicar, 29 Oct., 1836, aged 75.

LAYNEZ, JAMES, the second general of the Jesuits, was born at Almacario, in the diocese of Sigüenza, in Spain, 1512. He was one of the earliest companions of St. Ignatius of Loyola, after whose death he succeeded to the generalship of the Society 1558. He appeared with great distinction at the Council of Trent and the Colloquy of Poissy; was much esteemed for his prudence, learning, and piety; refused a cardinal's hat; and died at Rome 19 Jan., 1565, leaving several theological works in Latin. Father Theophilus Renaud attributes to him also the 'Declarations on the Constitutions of the Jesuits'; while others assert that Laynez drew up the 'Constitutions' themselves, but this is an error which can be refuted by the most incontestable dates and facts. What some writers say concerning the changes introduced by Laynez into the institute of the Jesuits is equally fabulous.

LAZIUS, WOLFGANG, a physician and historian, born 1514, at Vienna, where he died 19 June, 1565.

LEACH, HUMPHREY, a native of Allerton, Shropshire, received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford, and taking orders, obtained preferment in the Established Church; but having determined to profess the Catholic religion, he repaired to Rome, and was admitted into the Society of Jesus. In due time he was sent back on the mission and stationed in Cheshire, till his death, which occurred 8 June, 1629, at the age of 56. He published 'The Triumph of Truth,' 8vo., Douay, 1609, with an appendix, concerning his conversion to the Catholic faith. There also goes under his name 'Dutifull Considerations addressed to King James concerning his premonitory Epistle to Christian Princes,' 4to., St. Omer, 1609, but Father Persons had the chief hand in its composition.

LEAKE, JOHN, M.D., was a native of Ainstable, Cumberland. He became a surgeon in London, and afterwards a licentiate of the college of physicians; but devoted himself to obstetric practice. He purchased the ground for the Westminster Lying-in Hospital, and then gave it to the governors. His principal work, 'Medical Instructions towards the prevention and cure of various Diseases incident to Women,' was translated into French and German. Died 8 Aug., 1792.

LEAKE, Sir JOHN, son of Richard Leake, mentioned below, was born at Rotherhithe 1756. He served with his father, and at the Revolution obtained the command of a ship of seventy guns. In 1692 he was at the battle off La Hogue; and in 1701 was made first captain of the 'Britannia,' under the earl of Pembroke, lord high admiral of England. The year following he expelled the French from Newfoundland, and on his return was made rear-admiral of the blue in 1703. In 1704 he assisted Admiral Rooke in taking Gibraltar, for which he received the honour of knighthood; and in 1705 he saved that fortress from the combined attacks of France and Spain. The same year he was engaged in the reduction of Barcelona, and in 1706 he so seasonably relieved that place that King Philip was obliged to raise the siege. This was followed by the reduction of Carthagena, Alicaut, and Majorca. On the death of Sir Cloudesley Shovel, he was appointed admiral of the white, and commander-in-chief of the fleet. In 1708 he conveyed the queen of Spain to her consort King Charles, after which he reduced the islands of Sardinia and Minorca. Having thus terminated the campaign he returned to England, and was chosen M.P. for Rochester. On the death of Queen Anne he lost his place, after which he led a retired life. Died 1 Aug., 1720.

LEAKE, RICHARD, a naval officer, born at Harwich 1020. He displayed uncommon courage in the Dutch war after the Restoration, and subsequently was appointed master-gunner of England, and storekeeper of the ordnance. He contrived the method of firing a mortar by the blast of a piece. Died 1686.

LEAKE, STEPHEN MARTIN, F.S.A., was born 1702, being the son of Captain Martin, who married a sister of Admiral Leake, which gallant officer bequeathed his property to the captain, and the son, out of gratitude, assumed the name of Leake. On the revival of the order of the Bath he was made one of the esquires of the deputy earl marshal; in 1727 Lancaster herald; in 1729 Norroy; in 1741 Clarenceux; and in 1754 Garter king at arms. Died 24 March, 1773. His works are Reasons for granting Commissions to the Provincial Kings at Arms to visit their Provinces; Nummi Brit. Historia, or a Historical Account of English Money; The Life of Admiral Sir John Leake; The Statutes of the Order of the Garter.

LEAKE, WILLIAM MARTIN, F.R.S., served for some years in the Royal Artillery, and retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel 1823. Having been employed during the early part of his career on special service in the east, he travelled over the whole of Greece and Asia Minor, and gave to the public the results of his labours in the following works: Researches in Greece, containing Remarks on the languages spoken in Greece at the present day, 1814; The Topography of Athens, 1821; second edition, enlarged, 2 vols., 1841; Journal of a Tour in Asia Minor, 1824; Historical Outline of the Greek Revolution, 1826; Travels in the Morea, 3 vols., 1830; Travels in Northern Greece, 1835-41; Peloponnesiaca: a Supplement to Travels in the Morea, 1846; Numismata Hellenica, 1854, with appendix, 1859. In the compilation of the last-named valuable work he was assisted by his wife, formerly Mrs. W. Marsden, née Wilkins. Col. Leake, who was an earnest advocate of the freedom and independence of Greece, died at Brighton 10 Jan., 1860.

LEAKEY, JAMES, painter, died at Exeter 16 Feb., 1865, aged 90.

LEANDER A. S. MARTINO. See JONES, JOHN. LEAPOR, MARY, was born 1722, at Marston St. Lawrence, Northamptonshire, where her father was gardener to Judge Blencowe. She died at Brackley 12 Nov., 1746. After her death, two volumes of her poems were published by subscription.

LE BAS, Rev. CHARLES WEBB, died at Brighton 26 Jan., 1861, æt. 82. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated as fourth wrangler in 1800, having previously obtained a

LEBRUN.

Craven scholarship. He studied originally for the bar, but finding that his deafness would prove an insuperable obstacle to his success in the legal profession, he took orders. He was prebendary of Lincoln, and held the professorship of mathematics at the East India College, Haileybury, of which establishment he was subsequently elected principal. He wrote the lives of Bishop Middleton, Wickliffe, Cranmer, Jewel, and Laud, besides numerous sermons, and articles in the 'British Critic.'

LE BAS, JEAN PHILIPPE, a French engraver, born at Paris 1707; died 14 April, 1783.

LEBEUF, JEAN, born 1687, at Auxerre, associate of the Academy of Belles Lettres and Inscriptions, honorary canon of the cathedral of Auxerre, died 10 April, 1760. He was author of 'L'Histoire d'Auxerre,' 2 vols. 4to.; 'Traité du Chant ecclésiastique,' 8vo., 1741; 'Recueil de Dissertations sur l'Histoire de France,' 3 vols. 12mo.; and 'L'Histoire du Diocèse de Paris,' 15 vols. 12mo. These works are written in a heavy style; but they contain much information.

LE BLANC, JEAN BERNARD, was born at Dijon 3 Dec., 1707. He became an abbe, and was distinguished as a man of letters. He died 1781. His principal work is entitled 'Letters on the English Nation,' of which there is a translation. He also wrote a tragedy called 'Abensside.'

LEBLANC, MARCEL, one of the fourteen Jesuits sent by Louis XIV. to Siam. He laboured for the conversion of the Talapoins, and embarked for China; but the vessel was taken by the English, and he continued a prisoner till 1690. He died at Mozambique 1693, aged 40. We have from him a History of the Revolution of Siam.

LE BLANC, Sir SIMON, was born in or about 1749, and in 1760 was admitted of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in which society he enjoyed a fellowship for twenty years. He was made a sergeant-at-law 1787, and in June, 1799, a justice of the King's Bench, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. Died 15 April, 1816.

LE BLOND, CHRISTOPHER, a miniature painter, born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine 1670. He lived some time in England, where he invented a method of engraving in colours, after which he went to Paris, and died in an hospital 1740. He wrote a treatise on ideal beauty.

LEBRUN, CHARLES, an eminent painter, of Scotch extraction, was born in France 1619, and died 12 Feb., 1690. He published a book on Physiognomy, and another on the Character of the Passions; but his greatest works are his paintings of Alexander's battles.

LEBRUN, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, duke of Placentia, a French statesman and writer, born at St. Sauveur, near Coutances, 19 March, 1739. In 1768 he became inspector-general of the property of the crown, and secretary to chancellor Maupeou, whose most celebrated reports and decrees he drew up. He shared, under Louis XVI., the disgrace of his protector; was elected (1789) deputy in the Constituent Assembly, where he voted with 'the right;' went into retirement under the Legislative Assembly and the Convention; became a member of the Council of Five Hundred, 1795; and took part (1799) in the revolution of the 18th Brumaire, when he was appointed third consul. The reorganization of the finances, and the creation of the Cour des Comptes were owing, in a great degree, to his exertions. Napoleon, on becoming emperor, made him his principal treasurer, and entrusted him (1806) with the government of Liguria, and the organization of that republic in French departments (1810) and also with the government of Holland. He was created a peer of France 1814; held for a time the office of grand master of the university of Paris; and died 16 June, 1824. He published free translations of the Jerusalem Delivered, the Iliad, and the Odyssey.

LEBRUN, LAURENT, a French Jesuit, who published 'Virgilius Christianus,' and 'Ovidius Christianus,' which show more piety than taste. He was born at Nantes in 1607, and died at Paris 1 Sept., 1663. Besides the above works, he was the author of 'Eloquentia Poetica,' which is a useful treatise on poetical composition.

LE BRUN, PIERRE, a learned priest of the Oratory, born at Brignolles 11 June, 1661; died at Paris 6 Jan., 1720. His chief works are a Critical History of Superstitious Practices; Explanation of the Ceremonies of the Mass; a treatise against dramatic performances; and another against the Divining Rod.

LEBRUN, PONCE DENIS ÉCOUCHARD, a French lyric poet, born 1729, at Paris, where he died 2 Sept., 1807.

LECCHI, JOHN ANTHONY, a mathematician, born at Milan 17 Nov., 1702. He entered the society of Jesus, and was appointed professor of rhetoric at Brera; afterwards of mathematics at Pavia, and next at Milan. In 1750 he settled at Vienna, as mathematician to the imperial court; and he displayed great ability in measuring the bed of the river Reno, on which he was employed several years. His works are Theoria Lucis; Arithmetica Universalis Is. Newtoni, illustrata et aucta; Elementa Geometriae; Elementa Trigonometriae; De Sectionibus Conicis; Idrostatica examinata; Relazione della visita alle terre danneggiate delle acque di Bologna, Ferrere e Ravenna; Memoire idrostatico-storiche dell' operazioni esequite nella inalvezazione del Reno; Trattato de' Canali Navigabili. Died 24 Aug., 1776.

LE CENE, CHARLES, a Protestant divine, born at Caen, 1646. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he came to England, where he died May, 1703. In 1696 he published the prospectus of a new French translation of the Scriptures. This was translated into English, without any acknowledgment, by Henry Ross, and two editions of it met with a favourable reception. Le Cene's version was printed by his son, at Amsterdam, and greatly disappointed those who had formed expectations of it from the Essay.

LE CLERC, DANIEL, a physician, born at Genoa 1652. After studying at Paris and Montpellier he took his doctor's degree at Valencia, and then settled in his own country, where he practised with success till 1704, when he retired from the profession on becoming a member of the council of state. Died 8 June, 1728. His works are 'Bibliotheca Anatomica,' 2 vols. folio; a 'History of Medicine,' which has been translated into English; and 'Historia Latorum Lumbricorum.'

LE CLERC, JEAN, an eminent writer, brother of the preceding, was born at Geneva 1657. After going through a proper course of study he was ordained at Geneva; but on embracing the Arminian doctrines he left his native country, and went to Saumur, from whence he proceeded to London, where he officiated for some time in two French churches. The climate of England not agreeing with his constitution, he went to Amsterdam, and became professor of philosophy, Hebrew, and belles lettres, in the Remonstrant College. Le Clerc survived his mental faculties, and died 8 Jan., 1730. It would occupy too much room to give a catalogue of his works. In 1686 he commenced a literary journal, entitled 'Bibliothèque Universelle et Historique,' continued to 1693, in 25 vols. 12mo. From 1703 to 1713 he conducted another, entitled 'Bibliothèque Choisie,' 28 vols. 12mo., which was followed by his 'Bibliothèque Ancienne et Moderne,' from 1714 to 1729, 29 vols. 12mo. He also published Systems of Logic, Ontology, and Pneumatology; but one of his best performances is his Arts Critica. Besides these he published several miscellaneous pieces; editions of ancient and modern authors; a translation of the Bible into French; Commentaries on the Scriptures, &c.

LECLERC, NICOLAS GABRIEL, a French physician and historian, born at Baume-les-Dames (Franche-Comté) 1726; died at Versailles 30 Dec., 1798. He visited Russia several times, and, by order of Louis XV., collected materials for a history of that country, which was published at Paris, in 6 vols. 4to., 1783-94. He wrote other works on the healing art, the education of youth, &c.

LE CLERC, SÉBASTIEN, a designer and engraver, born at Metz 1637; died 23 Oct., 1714. Pope Clement XI. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and Louis XIV. appointed him his engraver in ordinary. He executed above three thousand pieces; besides which he published A Treatise of Theoretic and Practical Geometry; A Treatise on Architecture; and A Discourse on Perspective. He had a son of both his names, who became an historical painter, and many engravings have been made from his pictures. He was a member of the Academy of Painting at Paris, and died, aged 86, in 1703. Another son of Sébastien was Laurent Jose Le Clerc, an ecclesiastic, who published three volumes of remarks on Moreri's Dictionary. He died 7 May, 1736.

LECLERC, VICTOR EMMANUEL, a French general, born at Pontoise 17 March, 1772. He served in the armies of the Alps and of Italy, and became a general of brigade 1797, in which year he married Pauline, the sister of Napoleon. He distinguished himself under Moreau, in Germany (1799), took part in the revolution of the 18th Brumaire, and was nominated commander of the expedition to St. Domingo. He sailed from Brest in Dec., 1801, and achieved some successes; but being seized with yellow fever, he died 2 Dec., 1802.

L'ÉCLUSE, CHARLES DE, Cluvis, a botanist, born at Arras 1520. He was educated at Ghent and Louvain, where he took his doctor's degree in physic; after which he travelled in various countries, and three times visited England. The Emperor Maximilian II. conferred on him the rank of nobility; and in 1593 he was chosen professor of botany at Leyden, where he died 4 April, 1609. His works are very valuable.

LECOMTE, FÉLIX, a sculptor, of Paris, born 16 Jan., 1737; died 11 Feb., 1817. The statues of Rollin and Fénelon are regarded as his masterpieces.

LECOMTE, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, born about 1650, at Bordeaux, where he died 1720. He was sent to China as a missionary and mathematician (1685), and on his return published 'Memoirs' relating to that country, which were censured by the faculty of divinity at Paris, and condemned by the parliament to be burnt.

LECOQ, PIERRE, a French ecclesiastic, born at Iffs, near Caen, 1708; died 1777. He wrote on the Usury of Commercial Loans; Letters on Ecclesiastical Discipline; a treatise on different kinds of Property; another on Funds, &c.

LECOUVRIER, ADRIENNE, a celebrated French actress, who played the principal tragic and comic parts at Paris, from 1717 till her death, 20 March, 1730, aged 41.

LEDERLIN, JOHN HENRY, professor of Hebrew and Greek at Strasburg, was an accomplished critic, and published editions of several classical authors. Born 1672; died 1737.

LEDIARD, THOMAS, author of a 'Naval History of England,' and a Life of the Duke of Marlborough, died June, 1743.

LEDRAN, HENRI FRANCOIS, a famous surgeon and lithotomist, author of Surgery, 2 vols., and other professional works, was born 1685, at Paris, where he died 17 Oct., 1770.

LEDWICH, EDWARD, LL.D., an antiquary, was a native of Ireland, and received his education in Trinity College, Dublin, where he was elected to a fellowship. He was also presented to the college living of Aghadoe in the Queen's county, and became secretary to the Royal Irish Academy. Died 8 Aug., 1823, aged 83. His works consist of 'Antiquities of Ireland,' 1793; 'Statistical Account of the Parish of Aghadoe,' 1796; papers in the 'Archæologia,' and in the Memoirs of the Royal Irish Academy.

LEDYARD, JOHN, a traveller born in Connecticut 1751. After going round the world with Captain Cook, he formed the design of traversing the whole of the north of Europe on foot, which he accomplished, even to Behring's Straits and Hudson's Bay. This romantic enterprise he executed, alone and unarmed. He next undertook to traverse the regions of Africa; but died at Cairo 1788.

LEE, CHARLES, was born at Dernhall, Cheshire, 1731. After serving in the English army, under Generals Abercrombie and Burgoyne, he went to Virginia (1773), and at the commencement of the revolutionary war was appointed a major-general in the American army, and afterwards to the command of the troops in the Southern States. He rendered important services to the United States; but being censured and suspended for disobedience of orders, he retired into private life. Died at Philadelphia 2 Oct., 1782. Anecdotes of General Lee, with his Political and Military Essays, were published at London 1792.

LEE, EDWARD, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Great Lee, Kent, and sent to Magdalen College, Oxford, about 1498, but took his M.A. degree at Cambridge 1504. He was appointed chaplain and almoner to Henry VIII., who employed him on several embassies. In Feb., 1528-9, he was made chancellor of the church of Sarum, and in 1530 promoted to the archbishopric of York. Died 13 Sept., 1544. A list of his writings is given in Cooper's 'Athens Cantabrigienses.'

LEE, FRANCIS, M.D., was born at Cobham, Surrey, 1660, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, which he lost at the Revolution, for refusing the oaths. He then went to Italy, where he took his doctor's degree, and in 1708 was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians in London. He was the intimate friend of the pious Nelson, and assisted him in his book on the Fasts and Feasts, as he also did

Dr. Grabe in his edition of the LXX. He died in France, 1719. His own works are 'The Life of John Kettlewell;' 'The History of Montanism;' 'Dissertation on Esdras;' two volumes of theological and mathematical miscellanies, published, with his life, for the benefit of his daughter, 1752.

LEE, HARRIET. See LEE, SOPHIA.

LEE, HENRY, for many years the proprietor and manager of theatres in the west of England, died in London, 30 March, 1836, aged 71. He wrote various poems and dramatic pieces, including 'Caleb Quotem and his Wife, an Opera,' 8vo., 1810.

LEE, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., M.D., a learned Scotch divine and theological writer, born in the parish of Stow, Mid Lothian, 1780. He was appointed principal of the university of Edinburgh, 1840, and continued in that office till his death on 2 May, 1859.

LEE, NATHANIEL, a dramatic poet, born at Hatfield, Herts, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1668). After an unsuccessful attempt to gain a living as an actor, he turned dramatic author, and wrote several tragedies, which were received with applause. The best are 'The Rival Queens,' and 'Theodosius.' Died 1692.

LEE, SAMUEL, a Puritan divine, born in London 1625. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and next at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he obtained the degree of M.A., and was chosen fellow of Wadham College. He became a popular preacher in London, but, being silenced at the Restoration, went to New England. After the Revolution he embarked for his own country, but was taken on the passage, and carried to France, where he died Nov., 1691. His works are 'Chronicon Castrense,' added to King's Vale Royal of Cheshire; Orbis Miraculum, or the Temple of Solomon pourtrayed; Contemplations on Mortality; and other works. He also had a considerable hand in Hevicius's 'Theatrum Historicum,' edit. 1662.

LEE, SAMUEL, D.D., an accomplished linguist, born at Longnor, Shropshire, 14 May, 1783, of humble parentage. He was educated in the charity-school of his native village, and at the age of twelve was apprenticed to a carpenter. While labouring at his craft he mastered the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldaic, and Syriac languages. Subsequently he acquired a knowledge of Arabic, Persian, French, German, and Italian, with the assistance of Archdeacon Corbett, who procured his appointment (1810) to the mastership of a foundation school at Shrewsbury. He entered Queen's College, Cambridge, 1813, graduated B.A. 1818, took orders, and became professor of Arabic in that university 1819, and in 1831 regius professor of Hebrew. In 1833, being then a member of Trinity College, he proceeded to his D.D. degree at Cambridge; but the same honour had been conferred upon him more than ten years previously by the university of Halle. He died at Barley, Herts, 16 Dec., 1852. His principal works are, 'A Grammar of the Hebrew Language,' 1827; sixth edition 1844; 'On the Study of the Holy Scriptures,' 1830; 'The Travels of Ibn Batuta, translated from the Arabic 1833; a translation of Job, 1837; 'Hebrew, Chaldean, and English Lexicon,' 1844.

a competency she died at Clifton 13 March, 1824. Her works are 'The Chapter of Accidents,' a comedy; 'Assignment,' a comedy; 'The Recess,' said to be the first English romance in which history is blended with fiction; 'The Hermit's Tale,' a ballad; 'Almeyda, Queen of Grenada,' a tragedy; 'The Life of a Lover,' a novel; and two of the stories in her sister's 'Canterbury Tales.' Harriet Lee survived her sister many years, dying at Clifton 1 Aug., 1851, aged 94. Her works are 'The Error of Innocence,' a novel, 1786; 'The New Peagee, or Our Eyes may deceive us,' a comedy; 'The Canterbury Tales,' 5 vols., 1797-1805; 'Kruitzner,' a tale which suggested to Byron his tragedy of Werner; 'Clara Lennox,' a novel; and a play called 'The Mysterious Marriage, or the Heirship of Kosevka.'

LEE, WILLIAM, an ingenious inventor, was a native of Woodborough, Notts, and was matriculated as a sizar of Christ's College, Cambridge, May, 1579. He subsequently removed to St. John's College, and as a member of that society proceeded B.A. 1582-3. It is believed that he commenced M.A. 1586. In 1580, at which time, it is stated, he was curate of Calverton, near Nottingham, he invented the stocking frame. The tradition is that he was deeply in love with a young woman at or near Calverton; but she, whenever he went to visit her, seemed more mindful of her knitting than of his addresses. This creating an aversion on his part to knitting by hand, he determined to contrive a machine which should turn out work enough to render the common knitting an unprofitable employment. He taught his brother James and others to work under him, and for some years practised his new art at Calverton. Either he or his brother exhibited the machine at work to Queen Elizabeth; but his invention was slighted and discouraged by his countrymen. Henry IV. invited him to settle in France, promising him great rewards, privileges, and honours. Accordingly, he and nine workmen established themselves, with as many frames, at Rouen, where they carried on the manufacture of stockings with success and approbation under the king's protection. The assassination of Henry IV., and the troubles which ensued in France, disappointed Lee's hopes of obtaining the promised privileges; and he died of grief at Paris in or soon after 1610. Upon his decease seven of his workmen returned to England, and they, with one Aston, of Calverton, who had been his apprentice, laid the foundation of the manufacture in this country.—Athen. Cantab. iii. 37.

LEECH, JOHN, a caricaturist, was born 29 Aug., 1817, being son of Mr. John Leech, who kept the London Coffee House, Ludgate Hill. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and afterwards placed with a medical practitioner at Hoxton. Here he diversified his medical studies by pen-and-ink sketches of his master and fellow-students; and some of these falling in the way of Mr. Barham, the author of the 'Ingoldsby Legends,' the young man was by him introduced to Bentley the publisher. An engagement to illustrate the 'Legends' followed, and the medical profession was at once abandoned. Soon after 'Punch' was started Leech joined its staff, and he continued so employed, among other occupations, for the rest of his life, his first sketch, entitled 'Foreign Affairs,' appearing in Aug., 1841, and his last on the day of his funeral. Three volumes of his pictorial contributions to 'Punch,' were published in a collected form under the title of 'Pictures of Life and Character.' He also illustrated several of Albert Smith's novels, the 'Comic History of England,' and other works. His death happened at Kensington, 29 Oct., 1864.

LEECHMAN, William, D.D., was born at Dolphington, Lanarkshire, 1706, and educated at Edinburgh. He became professor of theology at Glasgow 1743; principal of that university 1761; and died 3 Dec., 1785. He wrote 'Sermons,' published in a collected form, 1780; and a life of Dr. Hutcheson, prefixed to the latter's 'Moral Philosophy,' 1755.

LEEDS, THOMAS OSBORNE, DUKE OF, was the son and heir of Sir Edward Osborne, Bart. In 1673 he was created Viscount Latimer, and in the following year earl of Danby. He succeeded Lord Clifford in the office of lord high treasurer which the latter had resigned on the passing of the Test Act (1673). When he entered upon this employment the Treasury was totally exhausted, and the very title of lord treasurer had become odious; so that it required the utmost stretch of his abilities to restore in some degree the public credit, and bring the revenue into tolerable order. This he, by skillful management and great industry, effected; but he was thought to be too much in the interest of the court to act with integrity in his high office. The earl of Shaftesbury, his capital enemy, caused him to be impeached in parliament 1678, and he was imprisoned till 1684. He was created marquis of Carmarthen 1689; duke of Leeds 1694; and died 1712.

LEEDS, JOHN ANTHONY VAN DER, a painter of Bruges, died 1720, aged 56.

LEFEBVRE, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, duke of Danzig, a marshal of France, born at Kutach (Haut-Rhin) 1755, died at Paris 14 Sept., 1820. His principal exploit was the capture of Danzig (24 May, 1807) for which he was rewarded with the title of duke.

LEFEBVRE, CLAUDE, a French portrait painter born at Fontainebleau 1631; died in London 1075.

LEFEBVRE DE LA BODERIE, GUI, was born in Lower Normandy 1541. He acquired a great knowledge of the Oriental languages, and had a concern in the Polyglot Bible which bears the name of Montanus. He was secretary to the duke d'Alençon, and died 1598. His brother, Nicolas, was also a very learned man, and died in 1605. Antoine Lefebvre, another brother, was distinguished by his skill in diplomacy, and died 1615. His negotiations were printed 1740.

LEFEBVRE D'ÉTAPLES, JACQUES, was born at Étapes, in Picardy, about 1440. He contributed to the revival of letters in the university of Paris; but, being suspected of Lutheranism, was obliged to retire to Meaux, where for some time the bishop protected him, till the violence of Lefebvre's enemies compelled him to remove to Blois, and from thence to Guienne. Died 1537. He was the friend of Erasmus, and, like him, was too timid to separate entirely from the church of Rome. In 1512 he published a translation of St. Paul's Epistles; and in 1530 a French version of the Bible.

LEFFVRE, JACQUES, doctor of the Sorbonne, and grand vicar of Bourges, was a native of Coustante. He gained great celebrity by his 'Motifs invincibles pour convaincre ceux de la Religion prétendue Réformée.' He wrote several other controversial pieces. Died 1 July, 1716.

LEFORT, FRANCIS, a general and admiral in the Russian service, the esteemed friend and adviser of Peter the Great, was born at Geneva 1656, and died at Moscow 12 March, 1699.

LEFROY, THOMAS LANGLOIS, LL.D., an Irish judge, born 8 Jan., 1776. He was chief justice of the Queen's Bench in Ireland from 1852 till his death, which occurred 4 May, 1869. He published a volume of legal 'Reports.'

LEGALLOIS, JULIEN JEAN CÉSAR, a French physician and physiologist, born 1770; died Feb., 1814.

LEGENDE, ADRIEN MARIE, one of the greatest of French mathematicians, was born at Toulouse 1752; died 10 Jan., 1833. His beautiful theorem on the spherical excess of a small spherical triangle, his discoveries relative to the theory of numbers, and his famous method of least squares, are sufficient to immortalise his name. Of his works, the best known is the 'Elements of Geometry,' which has been translated into English by Sir David Brewster.

LEGENDE, GILBERT CHARLES, marquis of St. Aubin-sur-Loire, wrote A Treatise on Opinion, Antiquities of the Royal House of France, &c. Born 1688 at Paris; died there 8 May, 1746.

LEGENDE, LOUIS, a French priest, author of several esteemed historical and biographical works, was born at Rouen 1659, and died at Paris 1 Feb., 1733.

LEGENDE, LOUIS, a deputy in the national convention, who, after being a sailor and then a butcher, became a fitting instrument of the atrocities of Marat and Robespierre. Born at Paris 1756; died 13 Dec., 1797.

LEGER, ANTHONY, a Protestant divine, born at Ville Seiche, in Piedmont, 1594, became professor of divinity at Geneva, and died 1661. He published an edition of the Greek Testament, accompanied by the Roman version of Maximus Caluopolitanus; and 'Authentic Monuments of the Religion of the Greeks.' His son of the same name, born at Geneva 1652, became professor of divinity there, and died 1719, leaving a number of sermons and Latin dissertations. John Leger, nephew of Anthony the elder, was born at Ville Seiche 1615, and died pastor of the Walloon church at Leyden, about 1680. He wrote in French a history of the Piedmontese Protestants.

tion, frequently printed in England. Besides this work he wrote some in Latin and French on metaphysical subjects; but his best performance is an ecclesiastical history, entitled 'Historia Sacra a mundo condito ad Constantinum Magnum.'

LEGRAND, JACQUES GUILLAUME, a French architect, born at Paris 9 May, 1743; died at St. Denis 9 Nov., 1807.

LEGRAND, JOACHIM, was born 6 Feb., 1653, at St. Lo, in Normandy. He entered into the congregation of the Oratory, but quitted it to become a tutor at Paris; after which he went to Portugal, as secretary to the embassy, and Spain. He held a controversy with Bishop Burnet, respecting the divorce of Henry VIII. and Catharine of Arragon, on which subject he published three volumes. He died at Paris 30 April, 1733. His other works are a translation of Lobo's History of Abyssinia, and 'De la Succession à la Couronne de France.'

LEGRAND D'AUSSY, PIERRE JEAN BAPTISTE, was born at Amiens 1737. He was educated at Amiens in the college of the Jesuits, of which order he became a member, and was appointed professor of rhetoric at Caen. On the suppression of the society he was made secretary of the military school, and in 1796 conservator of the French manuscripts in the national library. Died 5 Dec., 1800. He is known by his 'Fables,' or tales of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, 5 vols.; 'Contes devots, Fables, et Romans anciens, pour servir de suite aux Fables,' 'Histoire de la vie privé des Français,' 'A Tour to Auvergne; 'Vic d'Apollonius de Tyanes.' At the time of his death, he was engaged on a History of French Poetry, which he left unfinished.

LEGROS, NICOLAS, canon of Rheims, was born in that city 1675. For his zeal against the bull Unigenitus he was excommunicated, on which he went to Holland; but when Louis XIV. died, the ecclesiastical censure was taken off, and he returned to Rheims in 1716. In 1721 he was banished on the same account; and after visiting Italy he settled in Holland, and died there 4 Dec., 1751. His principal works are 'La Sainte Bible, traduite sur les textes originaux, avec les différences de la Vulgate,' 6 vols.; 'Méditations sur la concorde des Évangiles; 'Sur l'Épître aux Romains; 'Sur les Épîtres canoniques.' Besides these he published several books on the bull Unigenitus, and other controversial subjects.

LEGUANO, STEFANO MARIA, an historical painter, born at Bologna 1660; died 1715.

LEIBNITZ, GODFREY WILLIAM, was born at Leipzig 3 July, 1646. His father was professor of philosophy, and secretary of the university, but died when his son was about six years old. At the age of fifteen he entered the college of his native place after which he went to Jena with a view to the study of the law, in which he took his doctor's degree. He next visited the university of Nuremberg, where he applied himself to chemistry, but removed from thence to the court of Mentz, and was appointed a counsellor. In 1672 he went to Paris, and, while there, studied the mathematics. The year following he visited England, and became acquainted with Oldenburg, from whom he received an account of Newton's invention of fluxions, which afterwards he claimed as his own. In 1679 he obtained the patronage of the electoral prince of Hanover, who employed him to write the history of the house of Brunswick for which purpose he travelled into Italy, to collect materials. In 1700 he was chosen a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris; and the same year he was appointed perpetual president of the new academy, at Berlin. About this time he was occupied in the project of a universal character, which he did not live to accomplish. In 1711 he was made Aulic councillor to the emperor; and the czar of Muscovy appointed him privy councillor of justice, with a pension. He was, after this, engaged in a controversy with Dr. Clarke, on the subject of free-will, as he had been before with Newton on the invention of fluxions. He died, 14 Nov., 1716. His works were printed together at Geneva, 6 vols. 4to. 1768.

LEICESTER, ROBERT DUDLEY, EARL OF, fifth son of Sir John Dudley, afterwards duke of Northumberland, was born in or about 1532. He also was condemned with his father, but received a pardon, and was restored in blood by Queen Mary. In the next reign he was made master of the horse, knight of the Garter, and a member of the privy council. In 1600 his lady died, not without suspicion of violence, it being generally believed that Dudley aspired to the hand of his sovereign. Elizabeth, however, proposed him to Mary Queen of Scots for a husband, but that unfortunate princess treated the overture indignantly. In 1604 he was created Baron Denbigh and earl of Leicester; soon after which he was elected chancellor of Oxford. About 1572 he privately married Lady Douglas Sheffield, by whom he had two children, but as he never would acknowledge the mother for his wife, the offspring were considered illegitimate. In 1575 the earl entertained the queen at his castle of Kenilworth, in Warwickshire, but offended her very much the year following by marrying the countess dowager of Essex. In 1585 he was appointed governor of the Protestant Low Countries, but returned the same year by the queen's command. He went thither again in 1587, but owing to the public complaints, he was recalled from thence within a few months. In 1588 he was appointed to command the forces assembled at Tilbury on the prospect of a Spanish invasion; but he died Sept. 4, the same year, at Cornbury, in Oxfordshire, and was buried at Warwick.—Athen. Cantab.

LEICESTER OF HOLKHAM, THOMAS WILLIAM COKE, EARL OF, was born 4 May, 1752, being the son of Mr. Wenman Roberts, who assumed the name of Coke, on succeeding to the Leicester estates, the title having become extinct by the death of the earl 1759. After representing Norfolk in the House of Commons for many years, in the Whig interest, he was raised to the peerage 1837, and died at Longford Hall, Derbyshire, 30 June, 1842. He was celebrated for the agricultural improvements which he carried out on his estates.

LEIGH, CHARLES, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Grange, Lancashire, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford; from whence, after taking one degree, he removed to Cambridge, and next to London, where he commenced practice. He was admitted a fellow of the Royal Society 1685; but when he died is not stated. His works are—The Natural History of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire, folio, 1700; Phthisiologia Lancastriensis; Exercitationes de aquis mineralibus, &c.; History of Virginia.

LEIGH, EDWARD, was born at Shawell, Leicestershire, 24 March, 1602-3. He became a commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and then removed to the Temple. In the Long Parliament he sat for Stafford, and was afterwards appointed a lay member of the assembly of divines. He also took up arms in the service of parliament, but in 1648 he opposed the violent measures then pursuing, for which he was expelled. He died 3 June, 1671. His works are—Observations on the first twelve Cæsars; Treatise of Divine Promises; 'Critica Sacra', a very valuable Lexicon to the Old and New Testaments; A Treatise of Divinity; Annotations on the New Testament; A System of Divinity; Annotations on the Poetical Books of the Old Testament; Observations on the Kings of England; 'Treatise of Religion and Learning'.

LEIGH, SIR JAMES. See LEV.

LEIGHTON, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Scotch divine and physician, born at Edinburgh 1568. He became professor of moral philosophy in that university, but afterwards went to Leyden, and took his doctor's degree. He then visited London, where he had a lectureship till he was prosecuted in the Star Chamber, for publishing two libels: one entitled 'Zion's Plea', and the other 'The Looking-glass of the Holy War.' He was sentenced to stand in the pillory, to have his ears cut off, his nose slit, branded on the cheek, publicly whipped, and imprisoned in the Fleet, where he remained eleven years. He died insane 1644.

LEIGHTON, ROBERT, son of the preceding, was born in London 1613. He received his education at Edinburgh, and in 1643 settled as minister of Newbottle, near that city. He was at first a presbyterian, but afterwards joined the episcopalian, and became principal of the university of Edinburgh, bishop of Dunblane, and lastly, in 1670, archbishop of Glasgow. He was a man of moderate sentiments, of exemplary piety, and an excellent preacher. He died in London, 1 Feb., 1684. His works were printed in 6 vols. 8vo., 1808.

LEISMAN, JOHN ANTHONY, a landscape painter, born at Salzburg 1604; died at Venice 1698.

LE JAY, GUI MICHEL, an advocate in the parliament of Paris, who rendered himself remarkable by printing, at his own expense, a Polyglott Bible 10 vols. folio, 1628-45. He became an ecclesiastic, dean of Vezelii, and counsellor of state. Born 1588; died 10 July, 1674.

LE JEUNE, JEAN, a French priest of the Oratory, highly esteemed as a preacher, died 10 Aug., 1672, aged 80. His Sermons have been published.

LEKAIN, HENRY LOUIS, a French comedian, born at Paris 14 April, 1728; died 8 Feb., 1778.

LE KEUX, HENRY, an English engraver, born 1787; died 11 Oct., 1868.

LE KEUX, JOHN, an eminent architectural engraver, was born in London 4 June, 1783, and studied under the celebrated James Basire. He executed the plates for nearly all the best publications which appeared in his time illustrative of Gothic architecture. Among them we may mention Britton's Architectural Antiquities, Cathedrals, &c.; Pugin's Antiquities of Normandy, Gothic Specimens, and Gothic Examples; Neale's Westminster Abbey; Memorials of Oxford; and Memorials of Cambridge, of which a greatly enlarged edition, with additional illustrations, was published recently by C. H. Cooper, F.S.A. Mr. Le Keux died 2 April, 1846.

LELAND, JOHN, was born in London in or about 1506, and educated under the famous William Lill at St. Paul's School, whence he removed to Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1521-2), after which he studied at Oxford and Paris. On taking orders he was appointed chaplain and librarian to Henry VIII., who also appointed him his antiquary, with a commission to examine all the libraries of the cathedrals, abbeys, and colleges in the kingdom. For the space of six years together he was employed in travelling over England, making notes as to the castles, towns, religious houses, and mansions of the nobility and gentry; and also lists of books, extracts from the same, and a great variety of historical, biographical, and genealogical memoranda. At the end of this period he retired to his own house in the parish of St. Michael-le-Quern, London, and spent other six years in reducing or attempting to reduce in order the vast mass of papers which he had accumulated. In the meanwhile he was presented (1542) to the rich rectory of Haseley, Oxfordshire, and appointed (1543) a canon of King's College, Oxford. He fell into a profound melancholy which resulted in the entire loss of his reason about 1550, and he continued in this sad state till his death, which took place at London 18 April, 1552. His principal works are 'Commentarii de Scriptoribus Britannicis,' edited by Anthony Hall, 2 vols., 1709; 'Itinerary,' edited by Hearne, 9 vols., 1710, &c.; and 'Collectanea de Rebus Britannicis,' also edited by Hearne, 6 vols., 1715. Many of his smaller works are printed with the Itinerary and Collectanea. A few remain in MS., and some are irretrievably lost. Leland was an antiquary of the first rank, and was also esteemed as an orator and poet.—Athen. Cantab.

LELAND, JOHN, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Wigan, in Lancashire, 18 Oct., 1691. He was educated at Dublin, where he was ordained assistant-minister to a congregation of Presbyterians 1716. In 1730 he published an answer to Tindal's 'Christianity as old as the Creation;' and in 1737 another work against Morgan's 'Moral Philosopher,' for which the university of Aberdeen sent him the degree of doctor of divinity. After this he wrote a reply to Dodwell's 'Christianity not founded on Argument;' and 'Remarks on Bolingbroke's Letters on History;' but his principal work is 'A View of the principal Deistical Writers in England,' 3 vols. Dr. Leland's next performance was entitled 'The Advantage and Necessity of the Christian Revelation,' 2 vols. He died 16 Jan., 1766. After his death were printed four volumes of his sermons, with his life prefixed.

LELAND, THOMAS, D.D., a learned divine, was born at Dublin 1722, and educated at Trinity College, where he obtained a fellowship. His first publication was an edition of Demosthenes, which was followed by an English translation. In 1758 appeared the 'History of Philip, King of Macedon;' and in 1762 came out, without his name, 'Longsword, earl of Salisbury.' The year following he was appointed professor of oratory, and in 1764 he published a pamphlet entitled 'A Dissertation on the Principles of Human Eloquence, with regard to the Style and Composition of the New Testament,' which was answered by Dr. Hurd. In 1768 Dr. Leland obtained a prebend in the Cathedral of St. Patrick, with the vicarage of Bray. In 1772 he published anonymously a very ingenious 'Examination of the Arguments contained in a late Lt. James Macpherson's Introduction to the History of the Ancient Irish and Scots;' and the next year he published 'The History of Ireland,' 3 vols., which, however, is not equal to his other works. He died 1785; and three years afterwards his sermons were printed, in three vols., with his life prefixed.

LELLI, HERCULES, a painter, architect, sculptor, and anatomist, born at Bologna about 1700; died 1766.

LE LONG, JACQUES, a bibliographer, born at Paris 1605. He became a priest of the congregation of the Oratory, and was appointed librarian of their house in the Rue St. Honoré, Paris. Died 13 Aug., 1721. He published 'Methode Hébraïque;' 'Bibliotheca Sacra,' 2 vols. folio; 'Discours Historiques sur les principales Editions des Bibles Polyglottes;' 'Bibliothèque Historique de la France,' 5 vols.

LELY, Sir PETER, a portrait painter, was born at Soest, in Westphalia, 1617. His family name was Vander Vaas, which his father changed to Du Lys, or Lely. He was brought up under Peter Gresham, at Haarlem, and in 1641 came to England. After the Restoration he was appointed painter to Charles II., and knighted. He died of an apoplexy, while painting the portrait of the duchess of Somerset, 1680. He painted the portraits of the beauties of the court of Charles II., which are preserved at Hampton Court.

LEMAIRE, JAMES, a navigator, who sailed from Holland (1615) for the purpose of making a voyage to Java, in the course of which he discovered the straits which bear his name at the extremity of South America. He died on his passage to Europe 31 Dec., 1616.

LEMAIRE, JEAN, a French poet, born at Bavais, in Hainault, 1473; died 1524.

LE MAISTRE, ANTOINE, a French writer, born at Paris 1608. He was brought up to the bar, which profession he quitted, and entered the Society of Port Royal in the Fields, where he died 4 Nov., 1658. He published a translation of St. Chrysostom on the Priesthood; the Life of St. Bernard; and some other works.

LE MAISTRE, LOUIS ISAAC, better known by the name of Sacy, was brother of the preceding, and born at Paris 29 March, 1613. He was ordained priest 1649; but being a zealous Jansenist, he was sent (1666) to the Bastille, where he continued two years and a half, and wrote some of his works, particularly one entitled 'The Figures of the Bible.' He also began there his translation of the Scriptures. Towards the close of his life he retired to the castle of Pomponne, where he died 4 Jan., 1684. Besides his translation of the Bible he wrote Letters of Piety; an attack on the Jesuits, &c.

LEMENS, BALTHASAR VAN, an historical painter, born at Antwerp 1637. He settled in London, and died 1704.

LE MERCIER, JEAN, a native of Uzez, in Languedoc, who succeeded Vatable in the Hebrew professorship at the Royal College in Paris. He died at his native place 1572, leaving commentaries on several books of the Old Testament a Chaldee Grammar, &c. His son, Josiah Le Mercier (d. 5 Dec., 1626), published an edition of Nonnius Marcellus, and other works.

LEMERY, NICOLAS, a distinguished chemist, author of 'Cours de Chymie,' and other esteemed works, was born at Rouen 17 Nov., 1645, and died at Paris 19 June, 1715. His son Louis (b. 25 Jan., 1677; d. 9 June, 1743) acquired fame as a physlcian, and published several treatises on medical and chemical subjects.

LEMNIUS, LÆVINUS, a physician, born in Zealand 1504. On the decease of his wife he took orders, and obtained a canonry. Died 1 July, 1568. He wrote an account of the plants mentioned in Scripture; a book on astrology; 'De occultis Naturæ Miraculis'; and other works, several of which have been translated into English.

LEMOINE, ABRAHAM, a Frenchman, who, on account of his religion, came to London, where he officiated to a congregation of French Protestants; and died 1760. He translated into French Bishop Gibson's Pastoral Letters, and other works on divinity.

LEMOINE, ETIENNE, a Protestant divine, was born at Caen, in 1624, and died 3 April, 1689, at Leyden, where he was professor of theology. His dissertations on critical subjects were collected into 2 vols. 4to., under the title of 'Varia Sacra.'

LEMOINE, FRANÇOIS, a painter, born at Paris 1688. He was employed for four years on the Apotheosis of Hercules, in the saloon at Versailles; for which he had a pension. He destroyed himself in a fit of lunacy, 4 June, 1737.

LEMOINE, PIERRE, a French poet, born at Chaumont, in Bassigny, 1602. He became a Jesuit; and his greatest work is an epic on the history of St. Louis. Died 22 Aug., 1671.

LEMON, GEORGE WILLIAM, an English clergyman, master of Norwich School, died 1797, aged 71. He was author of 'English Etymology, or a derivative Dictionary of the English Language,' 4to. London, 1783.

LEMON, ROBERT, F.S.A., deputy-keeper of his majesty's state papers, died in London 29 July, 1835, aged 56. In the duties of his office he evinced the greatest zeal and enthusiasm, and nearly every historical work published in his time bears a testimony to his exertions.

LEMONNIER, PIERRE, professor of philosophy in the college of Harcourt, in Paris, died 27 Nov., 1757, aged 82. He wrote 'Cursus Philosophicus,' 6 vols.

LEMONNIER, PIERRE CHARLES, an astronomer, son of the preceding, was a member of the Academy of Sciences and of the National Institute. He was born at Paris 23 Nov., 1715. At the age of twenty-one he became assistant to Maupeirtuis in the measurement of a degree at the Polar Circle. After this he determined the positions of the zodiacal stars, and traced at St. Sulpice a new meridian line. He also traced the inequalities produced in the motion of Saturn by the action of Jupiter. He died 2 April, 1799, leaving some able works on astronomy. His brother, Louis Guillaume Lemonnier (b. 1717; d. 7 Sept., 1799), was also a member of the Academy of Sciences, of the National Institute, and a fellow of the Royal Society of London. He was a very able physician and experimental philosopher, and contributed to the 'Encyclopédie' several articles on electricity.

LEMPKIERE, JOHN, D.D., was born in the island of Jersey 1765, and educated at Reading School, under Dr. Valpy, whence he removed to Pembroke College, Oxford (M.A. 1792; B.D. 1801; D.D. 1803). About 1793 he became master of Abingdon School, which he conducted with reputation for some years, and then was elected to the grammar school of Exeter. Here, however, he did not continue long, owing to his pertinacity in obtruding books on the school, contrary to the established regulations.

LE NEVE.

After many disputes he was compelled to resign the situation, whereupon he petitioned parliament for redress, without effect. In 1811 he obtained the rectory of Meath, Devonshire. He died suddenly in London 1 Feb., 1824. His works are 'Bibliotheca Classica; or a Classical Dictionary,' taken chiefly from Sabatier's 'Siecles Payens;' a translation of Herodotus, of which only one volume was published; Universal Biography.

LENCLOS, ANNE, or more familiarly NIXON DE, a celebrated beauty, born 15 May, 1616, at Paris, of a respectable family. Her mother wished to devote her to the seclusion of a convent, but her father, who was a man of gallantry, prevented it; and the daughter, loving both her parents at the age of fifteen, soon devoted herself to the pleasures of the world. Courted for her understanding and her wit, but more for her beauty, she rejected the honourable offers of matrimony; and as she possessed opulence she determined to enjoy her liberty, and therefore yielded her person to those who, for greatness of talents, of birth, or of rank, were most pleasing to her licentious imagination. Yet she affected to preserve the manners of a woman of virtue; and so dignified was her personal deportment that ladies of character became her friends and associates. Sensible of the charms of virtue, and well skilled in the works of Montaigne and Charon, she talked as a philosopher; but while she reasoned like Socrates, she acted the part of Lais. Long flattered by the gay and the opulent, she preserved her beauty almost to the last, and died 17 Oct., 1706, aged 90. One of her sons, ignorant of her relationship, became enamoured of her; and when she declared herself to be his mother the unfortunate youth, in despair, stabbed himself in her presence. There are a few genuine letters by her in the works of St. Evremont; but those under her name addressed to the Marquis de Sevigne are fictitious.

LE NEVE, JOHN, an antiquary, was born in London 27 Dec., 1679, and educated at Eton, whence he proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, but left the university without a degree. After publishing the works enumerated below, without deriving from them any pecuniary benefit, he took orders in his forty-fourth year, and in Jan., 1721-2, was instituted to the rectory of Thornton-le-Moor, Lincolnshire; but this addition to his means, though evidently intended to afford him some relief from his troubles, had a directly contrary effect, for as soon as the circumstance became known to his creditors, they arrested him and threw him into Lincoln gaol. In all probability he died at his rectory in 1741. His principal work is 'Fasti Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ,' folio, 1716, a most useful compilation, chiefly from Bishop Kennett's MSS., containing a list of the principal dignitaries in every cathedral, collegiate church or chapel, in England and Wales. A greatly improved edition, with a continuation by Mr. T. Duffus Hardy, from 1715 to the date of publication, appeared at Oxford, 3 vols. 8vo., 1854. Le Neve's other productions are a Life of Dr. Field, Dean of Gloucester, 1716; 'Monumenta Anglicana: being Inscriptions on the Monuments of several eminent Persons deceased' (from 1600 to 1718), 5 vols. 8vo., 1717-19; a collection of monumental inscriptions (from A.D. 1400 to A.D. 1716) in Harl. MSS. 3605-3616; Lives of the Protestant Bishops, 2 parts, 1720 (all published), containing the Archbishops of Canterbury and York.

LE NEVE.

LE NEVE, PETER, F.R.S., F.S.A., was born 31 Jan., 1661-2, and entering the College of Arms, became Rouge-Croix pursuant 17 Jan., 1688-9; next Richmond herald; and finally Norroy, King-at-arms. He likewise held the office of deputy-chamberlain of the Exchequer, and had the honour of being chosen the first president of the Society of Antiquaries on its revival in 1717. Died 24 Sept., 1729. He left numerous MSS. on genealogy and topography, some of which came into the possession of Honest Tom Martin, of Palgrave, in Suffolk, who married his widow.

LE NEVE, Sir WILLIAM, LL.D., was born at Aslacton, Norfolk, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. Entering the College of Arms, he was appointed Mowbray herald extraordinary 24 June, 1624; York herald, 25 Nov., 1625; Norroy king-at-arms 3 Jan., 1633-4, about which time he received the honour of knighthood; and Clarenceux king-at-arms 22 June, 1635. During the civil war he several times, in his tabard, preceded by a trumpeter, summoned garrisons, and upon their refusing to surrender, declared them traitors, at the imminent risk of his life. Being at Oxford with the king in 1642, that university honoured him with the degree of LL.D. In 1646 the Parliament not only deprived him of his office of Clarenceux, but seized his estate, sequestrating it till they had obtained £524—a very large sum in those days. Grief for his own and his sovereign's misfortunes led to the loss of his reason. He died 1661, being buried on the 15th of Aug., in the church of St. Bennet, Paul's Wharf.

LENFANT, JACQUES, a French Protestant divine, born at Bazoches (La Beauce) 1661; went in 1688 to Berlin, where he was appointed preacher to the queen of Prussia, member of the Academy of Sciences, and counsellor of the Superior Consistory. Died 7 Aug., 1728. He wrote a vast number of works on ecclesiastical history, including a history of Pope Joan, and published, in collaboration with Beausobre, a French translation of the New Testament.

LENG, JOHN, was born at Norwich 1665, and educated at St. Paul's School, from whence he removed to Catharine Hall, Cambridge. In 1708 he was presented to the rectory of Beddington, Surrey, and in 1723 made bishop of Norwich. Died 26 Oct., 1727. He published two of the comedies of Aristophanes; a Course of Sermons at Boyle's Lecture; an edition of Terence; and a volume of Sermons.

LENGLET DU FRESNOY, NICOLAS, a French writer, born at Beauvais 5 Oct., 1674. He was an ecclesiastic, but so much given to satire and political intrigues that he was frequently sent to the Bastille. He also acted the part of a spy, and committed many acts of treachery to gain intelligence and gratify his employers. His death was occasioned by falling into the fire 15 Jan., 1755. His principal works are Méthode pour étudier l'Histoire, avec un Catalogue des principaux Historiens, 12 vols.; Méthode pour étudier la Géographie; Histoire de la Philosophie Hermetique; Tablettes Chronologiques de l'Histoire Universelle, 2 vols. His Method of studying History, and Chronological Tables, have been translated into English.

LENNARD, SAMSON, an English translator, was a native of Kent. In early life he followed the profession of arms, and was attached to Sir Philip Sidney, with whom he fought at the battle of Zutphen. Afterwards he became distinguished as a man of letters and as a member of the College of Arms. He was appointed Rouge Rose pursuant-extraordinary Feb., 1615; was very shortly afterwards advanced to the post of Bluenantie pursuant-in-ordinary; and dying in Aug., 1633, was buried on the 17th of that month, at St. Bennet's, Paul's Wharf. He published various translations from the Latin and French, particularly Perrin's 'History of the Waldenses'; Du Plessis Mornay's 'History of Papacie'; and Charron 'On Wisdom.'

LENNEP, JOHN DANIEL VAN, a learned Hellenist, born at Leeuwarden (Holland) 1724; died at Aix-la-Chapelle 6 Feb., 1771. He was professor of Greek and Latin at Groningen (1753-68), and afterwards at Franeker. His principal work is 'Etymologicum Lingue Græcæ.'

LENNOX, CHARLOTTE, an ingenious lady, of whose history nothing more is known than that she was born 1720; that her father, Colonel Ramsay, was lieutenant-governor of New York, by whom she was sent to England, where she married early, and was left a widow with one child. In 1747 she published a volume of poems; and in 1751 her novel of 'Harriet Stuart,' which was followed the next year by 'The Female Quixote.' After this appeared, in quick succession, several works translated from the French, and 'Henrietta,' a novel of considerable merit. She also wrote some dramatic pieces. Her last publication was 'Euphemia,' a novel. Mrs. Lennox enjoyed the friendship of several persons of eminence, particularly Dr. Johnson. Died 4 Jan., 1804.

LENS, BERNARD, a miniature painter, and enameller to George II., died 30 Dec., 1740, aged 58. He published some drawing-books, and several views.

LENTHALL, WILLIAM, an English lawyer, and speaker of the Long Parliament, was born at Henley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire, June, 1591. He was educated at St. Alban Hall, Oxford, and going afterwards to Lincoln's Inn was called to the bar, and became eminent as a counsellor. In 1639 he was elected M.P. for Woodstock, and in 1640 chosen speaker of the House of Commons, in which capacity he amassed a considerable fortune by siding with the ruling party. He was also master of the rolls, a commissioner of the great seal, and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. He was turned out by Cromwell 1653; but the year following he became speaker of the parliament called by the usurper, as he did also of the Rump. At the Restoration he was exempted from the Act of Indemnity, but obtained a general pardon from the king. Died 3 Sept., 1662. Several of his speeches and letters are in print.

LEO (St.), The Great, a doctor of the Church, and one of the most eminent men who have occupied the Holy See, was a native of Rome, and was elected Pope 440. He distinguished himself by his zeal against the Manichæans, Pelagians, and Priscillianists. When Attila marched against Rome Leo met him, and prevailed upon him to return home. This pope also saved the city from being destroyed by Genseric. Died 3 Nov., 461. The best edition of his works is by Father Quesnel, folio, Lyons, 1700.

LEO II. (St.), a Sicilian, succeeded Pope Agatho 17 Aug., 682; died 3 July, 683.

LEO III., a Roman, elected Pope 795; died 11 June, 816.

LEO IV., a Roman, elected Pope 847; died 17 July, 855.

LEO V.

LEO V., a native of Ardea, succeeded Benedict IV. 904, but was deposed by Christopher about a month afterwards, and sent to prison, where he died of grief.

LEO VI., a Roman, succeeded John X. 6 July, 928; died 20 Jan., 929.

LEO VII., a Roman, elected pope 936; died 23 April, 939.

LEO VIII. was elected pope by the emperor Otto's authority 963. Fleury mentions him as a legitimate pontiff; but Baronius and Pagi treat him as an intruder and an anti-pope. Died April, 965. Benedict V. disputed the papal chair with him.

LEO IX. (St.), Bruno, was elected pope 1048; died 19 April, 1054.

LEO X. was born at Florence 1475, being the second son of Lorenzo de' Medici, and baptized by the name of John. At the age of thirteen he was made a cardinal. He succeeded Pope Julius II. 1513, and assumed the name of Leo. He was a patron of literature, and encouraged the study of the Greek language. After opposing the king of France he made peace with him, and in 1515 concluded a concordat on the abolition of the Pragmatic Sanction. But the most remarkable circumstance in this pontificate was the rise of the Reformation under Luther, occasioned by the indulgences which Leo issued, to enable him to complete the church of St. Peter. Died 1 Dec., 1521.

LEO XI., Alexander de' Medici, was elected Pope 1 April, 1605, and died on the 17th of the same month.

LEO XII., Annibal della Genga, born 1760; was elected successor to Pius VII. 28 Sept., 1823; and died 10 Feb., 1829.

LEO I., The Elder, emperor of the East, ascended the throne 457, and died 474.

LEO II., The Younger, was the son of Zeno and of Ariadne, daughter of Leo I. He succeeded his uncle, 474, under the guardianship of his father, who soon afterwards caused himself to be proclaimed emperor. Leo died the same year.

LEO III., The Isaurian, was associated in the empire with Anastasius II. 717, and died 741.

LEO IV., son of Constantine Copronymus, succeeded his father 775, at the age of twenty-five; and died 780.

LEO V., The Armenian, was elected emperor, 813, and was assassinated 820.

LEO VI., surnamed The Wise, or The Philosopher, succeeded his father, Basil the Macedonian, 886. He expelled the patriarch Photius, and defeated the Hungarians and Bulgarians. Died 911. His works are, A System of Tactics; Novellæ Constitutiones; and Opus Basilicon.

LEO, of Modena, a Jewish writer, whose real name was Rabbi Jehudah Arie, was born at Modena about 1574, and died at Venice 1654. He wrote in Italian a valuable work on the ceremonies of the Jews; a Hebrew and Italian dictionary, &c.

LEO, JOHN, a geographer, was born of Moorish parents, at Grenada; but when that city was taken in 1492, he went to Africa, whence he obtained the name of Africanus. He renounced the Mohammedan religion, and died about 1526. Leo wrote a description of Africa in Arabic, and translated it himself into Italian. John Pory published an English translation of it 1600. Leo was also the author of the 'Lives of Arabian Philosophers,' printed by Hottinger, in Latin, 1664.

LEOWITZ.

LEO ALLATIUS. See ALLATIUS.

LEONARDO, LEO, a musical composer of Naples, born 1689; died about 1742.

LEONICENUS, NICHOLAS, an Italian physician, was professor at Ferrara for sixty years. He was the first who translated Galen into Latin. He also wrote poems; an Examination of the Errors of Pliny's Natural History, &c. Born 1428; died 1524.

LEONIDAS, king of Sparta, was slain while gloriously defending the pass of Thermopylae against the Persians, B.C. 480.

LEOPOLD I., Emperor of Germany, was the second son of Ferdinand III. He was born 1640; became king of Hungary 1655; king of Bohemia 1656; emperor 1658; died 6 May, 1705.

LEOPOLD II., son of the Emperor Francis I. and of Maria Theresa of Austria, was born at Vienna 1747; succeeded his father as grand-duke of Tuscany 1765; became emperor on the decease of Joseph II., 1790; died 1 March, 1792.

LEOPOLD, duke of Lorraine, son of Charles the fifth duke and of Eleonora of Austria, was restored (1697) to his estates which had been taken from his father by the French; and died 27 March, 1729, aged 50.

LEOPOLD I., king of the Belgians, born 1790. In early life he was known as Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg-Saalfeld. Among his elder brothers and sisters were, Prince Ernest of Saxe-Coburg, the father of Prince Albert, consort of Queen Victoria; Prince Ferdinand, grandfather of the present (1870) king of Portugal; and the Princess Victoria, afterwards duchess of Kent, and mother of Queen Victoria. After experiencing many vicissitudes of fortune, he married in 1816 the Princess Charlotte, and received the title of duke of Kendal in the English peerage. The princess died in Nov., 1817, but the prince had so identified himself with the nation, and had so won their confidence, that even after the bond which attached him personally to England had been broken, he continued to be regarded by the nation as one of themselves. He resided in the closest retirement at Claremont until 1830, when he was offered the kingdom of Greece, which however he declined. In June, 1831, the Belgian people elected him their king, and in the following month he solemnly swore to observe the constitution, and to preserve the independence and integrity of the country. He had first, however, to fight for his crown, for the Dutch had not yet consented to the severance of Belgium. He was beaten at Louvain, but an army of 60,000 men having been sent from France to his relief, the king of the Netherlands withdrew his troops. The remainder of his life was chiefly occupied in developing the internal resources of his kingdom. Leopold's position, however, sank into insignificance when compared with the part he played in the state affairs of Europe. With singular unanimity he was chosen the umpire in international disputes; the grievances of hostile governments were submitted to him; and the secrets of most royal houses were in his keeping. M. de Lagueronniere, indeed, did not scruple to call him 'le Juge de Paix de l'Europe.' He died 10 Dec., 1865, and was succeeded by his eldest son (Leopold II.), by his second wife, the Princess Louise, eldest daughter of Louis Philippe.

LEOWITZ, CYPRIAN, Leovittus, a Bohemian astronomer and astrologer, who frightened many people nearly out of their wits by predicting that the world would come to an end in 1584. Born 1504; died 1574.

LEPAUTE, JEAN ANDRÉ, a French clock and watch-maker, who made several improvements in his art, and published a useful Treatise on Horology. Born 1709; died 11 April, 1789.

LE PRINCE, JEAN, a French painter, born at Metz 1733; died 30 Sept., 1781.

LE PRINCE DE BEAUMONT, MARIE, sister of the preceding, was born at Rouen 26 April, 1711, and died 1780. She contracted a marriage with M. Beaumont, which, however, was declared null and void. Her first romance 'Le Triomphe de la verité,' was presented by the authoress herself to the king of Poland. She afterwards resided for some time in England, where she published a number of works, chiefly moral tales. Altogether she published no fewer than 69 volumes.

LEARNOUT, JOHN, Jacus Lernutius, a modern Latin poet; born at Bruges 1545; died there 29 Sept., 1619.

LEROY, JULIEN, a celebrated horologist, born at Tours 1686; died at Paris 1759.

LEROY, JULIEN DAVID, an architect, son of the preceding, was born at Paris 1728. His work on 'Les Ruines des plus beaux Monuments de la Grèce,' procured him admission into the academy of inscription, and tended to banish the bad taste which had been introduced into French architecture. He wrote other able works; and died 28 Jan., 1803.

LE SAGE. See LAS CASAS.

LE SAGE, ALAIN RENÉ, one of the most popular of French authors, was born 8 May, 1668, at Sarzeau, in the department of Morbihan. He received a superior education in the Jesuits' College at Vannes, and it is conjectured that he was subsequently engaged for several years in the collection of taxes in Brittany. In 1692 he went to Paris and determined to give his whole time and energies to literary pursuits. While struggling for fame he found a kind and generous friend in the abbé de Lyonne, who not only granted him an annual pension of 600 livres, but also taught him the Spanish language, and pointed out to him the beauties of Castilian literature. Three comedies, 'Le Traître puni,' 'Don Félix de Mendocce,' and 'Le Point d'honneur,' were the first pieces which Le Sage translated, or rather imitated, from the Spanish. The last of them was the only one put on the stage, and its reception was by no means flattering. Nor was Le Sage more successful in his next attempt, 'Les Nouvelles Aventures de Don Quichotte' (1704-6), a version of Avellaneda's spiritless continuation of Cervantes' masterpiece. In 1707, however, Le Sage achieved a double triumph, by his comedy of 'Don César Ursin,' imitated from Calderon, and an original farce called 'Crispin rival de son Maître.' Ever busy with his pen, he brought out soon afterwards 'Le Diable Boiteux,' which in the English translation bears the title of 'The Devil on Two Sticks.' The idea and the title of the work were derived from 'El Diabolo Cojuelo,' of Louis Velez de Guevara. 'Turcaret,' a five-act play, which constitutes one of Le Sage's chief titles to fame, was levelled against the vampires who managed the revenues and farmed the taxes of France, and who tried hard, but without success, to prevent its being represented on the stage. It was played at the Théâtre Français 14 Feb., 1709, and had a great run. The famous novel 'Gil Blas de Santillane,' which appeared 1715 in 2 vols., augmented by a third vol. 1724, and by a fourth 1735, raised Le Sage's popularity to the utmost height. Yet, in order to gain a livelihood, the writer of this admirable romance, which has been translated into the language of every civilised nation, did not disdain to compose for twenty-six consecutive years little pieces for the theatrical exhibitions at the fairs of St. Germain and St. Laurent. His other productions were a free translation of Bojardo's 'Orlando Innamorato' (1717-21); 'Les Aventures de Guzman d'Alfarache' (1732); 'Aventures de Robert, dit le Chevalier de Beauchesne' (1732); 'Histoire d'Estevanille Gonzales, surnommé le Garçon de bonne humeur' (1734); 'Une Journée des Parques' (1735); 'Les Amants Jaloux,' a comedy; 'Le Bachelier de Salamanque' (1738); 'La Valise trouvée' (1740); and 'Melange amusant de saillies d'esprit et de traits historiques des plus frappants' (1743). In 1743 he retired to Boulogne with his wife and daughter, in order to be near his favourite son, who was a canon of the cathedral in that city. Le Sage died there 17 Nov., 1747. The best edition of his works is by Renouard 12 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1821-22. Most of his novels have been translated into English.

LESCAILLE, JAMES, a printer, born at Geneva 1610. He settled at Amsterdam, where his press was famous for its beautiful productions. Lescaille was also a good poet; and died 1677. His daughter Catherine, who died 8 June, 1711, obtained the name of the Dutch Sappho. Her poems were printed 1728.

LE SEUR, THOMAS, a mathematician and ecclesiastic, born at Rethel, in Champagne, 1703. He entered into the order of Mimms, and became a celebrated professor of mathematics, philosophy, and theology, in the college of Sapienza, at Rome; where he died 1770. He joined with father Jacquier in a commentary upon Newton's Principia; and also in a profound work on the 'Integral Calculus.' Le Seur published besides, 'The Principles of Natural Philosophy,' 4 vols.; 'Institutiones Philosophicæ,' 5 vols.

LESLEY, ALEXANDER, a Scotch Jesuit, born in Aberdeen 7 Nov., 1693; died in Rome about 1760. He edited the Mozarabic Missal, 1755; assisted Father Azvedo in compiling several of his works; and left in MS. a valuable treatise on the Legions of Rome.

LESLEY, JOHN, a prelate of Scotland, born 29 Sept., 1526, and educated at Aberdeen and Paris. He accompanied Queen Mary to Scotland 1561, and in 1562 was made abbat of Lindores. He was afterwards elevated to the bishopric of Ross, and distinguished himself by procuring the Scotch laws to be printed in black letter. When Mary fled to England Bishop Lesley appeared at the court of Elizabeth, as the ambassador of his unfortunate sovereign, whose cause he pleaded with great energy, but unsuccessfully. He also endeavoured to effect her escape, and, among other schemes, projected a marriage between Mary and the duke of Norfolk, which proved the ruin of both. Lesley, upon this, was put under arrest, and in 1573 sent out of the kingdom. In 1579 he was made vicar-general to the archbishop of Rouen, where he narrowly escaped being delivered up again to Queen Elizabeth. In 1590 he was thrown into prison, and obliged to pay a large sum to obtain his liberty. In 1593 he was appointed bishop of Coutances, in Normandy; but he never got peaceable possession of the see, and at length he retired to the monastery of Guirtenburg, near Brussels, where he died 31 May, 1506. He laid the foundation of three colleges for his countrymen; one at Paris, one at Rome, and the other at Douay. His principal works are a Defence of Mary Queen of Scotland, and her title to the Crown of England, 1571; 'Adlicti Animi Consolationes, et Tranquilli Animæ Conversatio;' 'De Origine, Moribus, et Rebus Gestis Scotorum,' to which are appended 'Parænesis ad Nobilitatem, Populumque Scotorum,' and 'Regionum et Insularum Scotiæ Descriptio;' 'De Titulo et Jure Mariæ Scot. Reg.;' 'De illustrium Fœminarum in Republica administranda, Autoritate;' 'History of Scotland,' from 1436 to 1561, edited by Thomas Thomson for the Bannatyne Club, 1830.

LESLEY.

LESLEY, WILLIAM ALOYSIUS, D.D., a Jesuit, born in Aberdeenshire 1641. For nine years he was superior of the Scotch College at Rome, and from 1674 to 1683 a missionary in Scotland, where he died 1704. He wrote, in Italian, The Life of St. Margaret of Scotland, 12mo., Rome, 1675.

LESLIE, CHARLES, second son of the bishop of Clogher, was born in Ireland 1656. He received his education at Dublin, after which he became a student in the Temple, but relinquished the law, and took orders. In 1687 he was made chancellor of Connor, where he rendered himself notorious by his persecution of the Catholics. Notwithstanding this zeal for the established religion and the laws, Leslie could not transfer his allegiance to a new government by taking the oaths to William. He therefore quitted Ireland and settled in London, where his pen was employed on political and theological subjects. In the reign of Queen Anne he wrote a weekly paper, called 'The Rehearsal, or a View of the Times' in which, besides combating the sceptics, he attacked Locke and Hoadly on the doctrine of government. To promote the interests of the exiled family, he made frequent excursions to the court of St. Germans, and he even accompanied the son of James II. to Italy; but being convinced that the cause was hopeless, he returned home, and died at Glaslough, co. Monaghan, 13 April, 1722. His theological works, of which the most considerable are his treatises against the Deists and Socinians, were printed in 2 vols. folio. His 'Rehearsals' have been collected into 4 vols. 8vo., and also into 6 vols. 12mo. His other political pieces are too many to be enumerated.

LESLIE, CHARLES ROBERT, an eminent painter, born in London, of American parents, 1794. A few years after his birth his parents left this country, and went to Philadelphia, where the future painter received an ordinary education. After a short apprenticeship to his brother, who was a bookseller, he returned to England in order to study art under his celebrated countrymen Benjamin West and Washington Allston. He first tried historical painting on a large scale, but subsequently commenced a class of subjects particularly adapted to display his powers, and in which, for many years, he had no superior among English artists. The great humorous writers of England became the chief sources of his inspiration, and many familiar scenes from Shakspeare, Addison, Sterne, Pope, Goldsmith, Fielding, and Smollett were illustrated by his pencil. 'Don Quixote,' 'Gil Blas,' and Moliere's plays also suggested to him some of his happiest efforts. His 'Anne Page and Slender,' 'Sir Roger de Coverley going to Church,' 'May Day in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth,' and other pictures of the kind, exhibited between 1820 and 1825, established his reputation. In 1821 he was elected an associate of the Academy and in 1826 full R.A. The American government appointed him, in 1833, professor of drawing in the United States Academy at West Point; but he soon got heartily tired of this situation, and, at the end of five months, threw it up and returned to this country. In 1847 he became professor of painting at the Royal Academy; and the lectures which he delivered during his four years' tenure of that office were published in 1855, under the title of 'A Hand Book for Young Painters.' Leslie died in London 5 May, 1859. He wrote a Life of his friend John Constable, the landscape painter (1843), and left an unfinished work on the 'Life and Times of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' which was completed and published in 2 vols., 1865, by Mr. Tom Taylor, who also edited Leslie's 'Autobiographical Recollections,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1860.

LESLIE, JOHN, D.D., a prelate, born at Balquhain, Aberdeenshire. He received his education at Aberdeen and Oxford, after which he went abroad, and was present at the siege of Rochelle, and in the expedition to the Isle of Rhé. On his return home he was made bishop of the Isles (1628), from whence he was translated (1633) to Raphoe, in Ireland, where he built a palace, which he defended against Cromwell. In 1661 he was appointed bishop of Clogher. He died 1671, at the age of one hundred years, during fifty of which he had been a bishop.

LESLIE, SIR JOHN, was born at Largo, Fifeshire, 16 April, 1766, and educated at the universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh. After visiting America and various continental countries, and working in London for the booksellers, he was elected in 1805 professor of mathematics at Edinburgh, in succession to Dr. Playfair, whom he also succeeded in 1819 in the chair of natural philosophy. He died at his residence, Coates, Fifeshire, 3 Nov., 1832, having, only a few months previously, been created a knight of the Guelphic order. Sir John was the inventor of the differential thermometer, by which he was greatly aided in his researches concerning the nature of heat; and of the hygrometer, which led to his discovering the process of artificial freezing. His chief works are, a translation of Buffon's History of Birds, 9 vols.; an 'Essay on the Nature and Propagation of Heat;' 'Elements of Geometry;' 'Account of Experiments and Instruments depending on the Relation of Air to Heat and Moisture;' and 'Philosophy of Arithmetic;' besides numerous papers in scientific periodicals.

LESSING, GOTTHOLD EPHRAIM, a German writer, born at Kamenitz, Pomerania, 22 Jan., 1729. He was educated at Meissen, from whence he removed to Leipzig, and next to Berlin, where he wrote, in conjunction with Mylius, 'A Sketch of the History and Progress of the Drama.' From Berlin he went to Wittenberg, and, having taken his master's degree, returned to the former city, and became secretary to General Tauentzin, with whom he went to reside at Breslau. After this, Prince Leopold, of Brunswick Wolfenbutter, made him his librarian, in which situation he published a periodical work, called 'Contributions to Literary History,' till the licentiousness of it occasioned its suppression. His latter performances were 'Nathan the Wise,' and a 'Dissertation on Education.' He died at Hamburg 15 Feb., 1781.

LESSIUS, LEONARD, a Jesuit, born near Antwerp 1 Oct., 1554. He became professor of philosophy at Douay, from whence he removed to the divinity chair at Louvain. Lessius was accused of Semipelagianism; and the faculty of theology at Louvain condemned thirty-four of his propositions; but the universities of Mayence, Treves, and Ingoldstadt declared in his favour. Died 15 Jan., 1623. His principal works are De Justitia et Jure; De potestate summi Pontificis; Hygiasticon, seu vera ratio valetudinis bonæ vitæ; and various treatises, collected in 2 vols. folio.

L'ESTRANGE, SIR ROGER, was born 17 Dec., 1616, at Hunstanton Hall, Norfolk, the seat of his father, Sir Hamond L'Estrange, author of a history of Charles I., and a commentary on the Liturgy, entitled 'The Alliance of Divine Offices.' The son was educated at Lynn, and in 1639 accompanied King Charles on his expedition to Scotland; but in 1644 he was made prisoner by the parliamentary forces, and sent to London, where he was condemned to be hanged as a spy. With great difficulty, however, he obtained a reprieve, but remained in Newgate four years, and then effected his escape to the Continent. In 1653 he returned, and was discharged by order of Cromwell. After the Restoration he was made licenser of the press, which place he enjoyed till the Revolution. In 1663 he set up a newspaper called 'The Public Intelligencer,' which he dropped in 1665, when the 'London Gazette' was established. In 1679 he instituted another paper, called the 'Observer.' In the reign of James II. he was knighted; but, as he did not concur with all the measures of that monarch, his paper was suppressed. Died 11 Sept., 1704. Sir Roger was an indefatigable writer, but particularly distinguished himself in translations; of which Josephus, Cicero's Offices, Seneca's Morals, and Erasmus's Colloquies, are the best.

LESUEUR, EUSTACHE, a painter, born at Paris 1617. He was the disciple of Simon Vouet, but far surpassed him, though he never went out of France. He painted a set of pictures on the history of St. Bruno, for the Chartreux. Died 1655.

LESUEUR, JEAN, a Protestant divine, pastor of the church of Feste-sous-Jouarre en Brie, was the author of some valuable works, the principal of which are 'Traité de la Divinité de l'Ecriture Sainte'; 'Histoire de l'Eglise et de l'Empire,' 8 vols., 1730. This last was continued by Pictet. Died 1681.

LESUEUR, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French musical composer, born at Drucat-Plessiel, near Abbeville, 15 Feb., 1760; died at Chailloit 6 Oct., 1837.

LE SUEUR. See LE SEUR.

LETHIULLIER, SMART, F.S.A., an antiquary and virtuoso, born in Essex, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. He made a noble collection of antiquities, fossils, and other curiosities, and died 27 Aug., 1760, aged 59.

LETI, GREGORIO, was born at Milan 29 May, 1630. He turned Protestant at Lausanne, and there married the daughter of a physician; after which he settled at Geneva, where he resided twenty years, and then came to England. Charles II., seeing him at his levee one day, said, 'Leti, I hear you are writing the history of my court.' To this Leti answered, 'Sir, I am collecting materials for such a work.' 'Take care,' said the king, 'that your history does not give offence.' 'Sir,' replied Leti, 'I will do what I can; but if a man were as wise as Solomon he would hardly be able to avoid giving some offence.' 'Why, then,' retorted Charles, 'be as wise as Solomon; write proverbs, and let history alone.' Leti, however, did not take this advice. The history appeared, under the title of 'Teatro Britannico'; and the author was ordered to quit the kingdom. He then went to Amsterdam, where he died 9 June, 1701. His principal works are The Life of Sixtus V.; Life of Charles V.; Life of Queen Elizabeth; History of Oliver Cromwell; History of Geneva; History of the Cardinals. These histories are nothing more than amusing romances. John Le Clerc married the daughter of Leti.

LETTICE, JOHN, D.D., was born at Rushden, Northamptonshire, 27 Dec., 1737, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship (B.A. 1761; M.A. 1764; B.D. 1771; D.D. 1797). In 1768 he was nominated chaplain and secretary to the British embassy at Copenhagen, where he witnessed the revolution of 1772. On returning to his native country he was engaged for several years in the dreary work of private tuition; but in 1785 he was presented to the living of Peasemars, Sussex. He was then forty-seven years of age, and in all probability never dreamed that he should live another forty-seven years in the possession of his benefice. He died at Peasemars 18 Oct., 1832. His works are, 'On the Conversion of St. Paul,' a poem, which gained for him the Seatonian prize 1764; a translation into English blank verse of his friend Hawkins Browne's Latin poem 'De Animi Immortalitate'; 'The Antiquities of Herculaneum,' conjointly with Professor Martyn; 'Letters on a Tour through various parts of Scotland'; 'Fables for the Fireside'; 'Strictures on Eloquence'; Miscellaneous Pieces on Sacred Subjects, in prose and verse; Sermons and Tracts; and a translation from the Danish of Baron Holberg's Parallel Lives of Famous Ladies.

LETTSON, JOHN COARLEY, M.D., a physician, born on a small island, called Little Vandyke, near Tortola, 1744. His father was a planter, and his mother was descended from a respectable Irish family. They were of the society of Quakers; and young Lettson, being sent to England, was placed under the care of Samuel Fothergill, a celebrated preacher of that sect, who sent him to an academy at Warrington. On arriving at a proper age he was bound apprentice to an apothecary at Settle, Yorkshire, after which he became a pupil of St. Thomas's Hospital. The death of his elder brother induced him to visit his native island to look after his property; but finding that it chiefly consisted of slaves, he emancipated them all, and settled at Tortola. His stay there was not long, and on his return to Europe he took his doctor's degree at Leyden. He then fixed his residence in London, where, by the friendship of Dr. Fothergill, and his connection with the Quakers, he attained a most extensive practice. Dr. Lettson, however, quitted the society some years before his death, which happened 1 Nov., 1815. He was a zealous philanthropist, and a member of most of the literary and scientific societies in Europe and America. His works are numerous.

LEUCIPPUS, a philosopher of Elea, who lived in the fifth century before the Christian era. He was the disciple of Zeno, and the master of Democritus. The atomic system originated with him.

LEUNCLAVIUS.

LEUNCLAVIUS, JOHN, a German historian, born at Amelbrun, in Westphalia, about 1533; died at Vienna in 1593.

LEUSDEN, JOHN, a learned divine, born at Utrecht 26 April, 1624, was appointed Hebrew professor there 1650, and died 30 Sept., 1699. As a critical editor he is entitled to high commendation for skill and accuracy.

LEUWENHOEK, ANTHONY VAN, a Dutch naturalist, born at Delft 1632; died 26 Aug., 1723. He is celebrated for his microscopical improvements and discoveries. His works have been translated into English.

LEVER, SIR ASHTON, virtuoso, was the son of Sir D'Arcy Lever, of Alkington, near Manchester. He completed his education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, after which he resided at his seat in the country, where he formed the finest aviary in the kingdom. He also spared no expense in collecting rare animals and curiosities from all parts of the world, which, in 1785, he disposed of by a lottery. The winner, Mr. Parkinson, removed the museum from Leicester Fields to Blackfriars Road, but after exhibiting it some years, sold the whole by auction in 1800. Sir Ashton died at Manchester 1788.

LEVER, D'ARCY, son of the Rev. John Lever, grandson of Sir D'Arcy Lever, and nephew of Sir Ashton Lever, led a somewhat eventful life. When young he went to India, and on the voyage out asked one of the sailors something about the rigging of the vessel, when the reply was, 'Find it out, as I have done.' This put him on his mettle, and during the outward and homeward passages he made himself so completely master of the subject that he afterwards wrote a book of Seamanship, which was for some time a standard work in the navy. He died at Edinburgh 22 Jan., 1837.

LEVERIDGE, RICHARD, an English actor and vocalist, born 1070; died 1758.

LEVESQUE DE POUILLY, LOUIS JEAN, lieutenant-general of Rheims, greatly ornamented and improved that city, where he also established schools for mathematics and design. His 'Theory of Agreeable Sensations' has been translated into English. Born 1691; died 1750.

LEVESQUE, PIERRE CHARLES, a French writer and translator, born 26 March, 1737, at Paris, where he died 12 May, 1812.

LEVI, DAVID, a Jew, born in London 1740. He was originally a shoemaker and afterwards a hatter, but published some works which evinced much study and ability. In 1783 came out a volume on the Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews, which was followed by his 'Lingua Sacra, or a Hebrew and English Dictionary,' 3 vols. In 1787 he printed 'Letters to Dr. Priestley,' in reply to that polemic's Letters to the Jews; and in 1789 appeared a second series of Letters to the doctor and others. He also published 'The Pentateuch in Hebrew and English,' a translation of the Hebrew Liturgy, in 6 vols.; 'Dissertations on the Prophecies;' and some other works. Died July, 1799.

LEVIZAC, JEAN PONS VICTOR LEFOUTZ DE, a French priest, who, being forced to quit his country at the Revolution, came to England, where he taught the French language with much success. He died in London 1813. He published several works intended to facilitate the acquisition of the French language.

LEVRET, ANDRÉ, a French surgeon and accoucheur, who published some esteemed professional works, and improved some of the instruments used in obstetric cases of difficulty. Born 1703; died 22 Jan., 1780.

LEWGAR, JOHN, a Catholic writer, born in London in or about 1602, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of B.D. He obtained a benefice in Essex; but, following the example of his friend Chillingworth, he resigned all his worldly advantages, and was reconciled to the Church of Rome. He accompanied Cecil Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to Maryland, where Mr. Lewgar lived several years; but his wife dying, he returned to England some years before the Restoration. He still, however, continued in Lord Baltimore's family in London, where he died 1665. He published anonymously several pamphlets in support of the royalist cause, and a work entitled 'Erastus Senior and Erastus Junior,' in which he sought to prove the invalidity of the Protestant consecrations from an essential defect in the form.

LEWIS, DAVID. See BAKER, CHARLES.

LEWIS, SIR GEORGE CORNEWALL, a distinguished statesman and man of letters, was born 1806, being the eldest son of Sir Thomas Frankland Lewis, Bart., of Harpton Court, Radnorshire. He was early sent to Eton, and from thence to Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated 1828, taking high honours. Three years later he was called to the bar at the Middle Temple; but his entry there was merely nominal, as he was destined to other pursuits than those of the law. In 1835 he was appointed one of the commissioners to inquire into the affairs of Malta; and he was a poor-law commissioner from 1839 to 1847, when he was first elected M.P. for Herefordshire, which county he continued to represent till 1852; but from March, 1852, till his decease he sat for the Radnor district of boroughs. He filled several important offices in the government. He was secretary to the Board of Control from Nov., 1847, to May, 1848; under-secretary for the Home Department from May, 1848, to July, 1850; and financial secretary to the Treasury from July, 1850, to Feb., 1852. He succeeded to the baronetcy on his father's death in 1855. Up to this time Sir George had not made much of a figure in the House of Commons, and had he at this period declined to re-enter parliament his name would have been added to the long list of men who, eminent in letters and philosophy, have proved failures in political life. But in 1855 he was returned for the Radnor boroughs, and Lord Palmerston selected him to fill the office of chancellor of the Exchequer, in the place of Mr. Gladstone; and on the first occasion when it fell to his lot to defend the measures of the government, he exerted himself in a manner wholly unexpected, and at once established his reputation as one who was thenceforward to take a leading part in the deliberations of the House. Sir George held the chancellorship of the Exchequer till Feb., 1858, and on the return of the Liberals to power, in June of the following year, he accepted the Home Secretaryship, which he retained till July, 1861, when he was appointed by Lord Palmerston to succeed Lord Herbert of Lea in the post of secretary of state for war. Year by year his position was growing on the House, his wide information more acknowledged, and his judgment more confided in, when his career was suddenly cut short by the hand of death, 13 April, 1863. Sir George Lewis's literary labours were multifarious and varied, as were his political undertakings. For some years he was editor of the 'Edinburgh Review,' which he enriched with many valuable contributions; and to him scholars owe the recovery of 'Fables of Babrius,' together with many other brochures in classical literature. In philosophy his essay 'On the Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion,' holds a foremost place, while his bias to the science of politics appears in several of his publications, as, for instance, 'On the Use and Abuse of Political Terms,' 'On the Method of Observation and Reasoning in Politics,' and 'A Dialogue on the best form of Government.' His other principal works are 'An Essay on the Origin and Formation of the Romance Languages;' 'An Inquiry into the Credibility of the Early Roman History;' 'Essay on the Government of Dependencies;' a valuable treatise 'On the Astronomy of the Ancients;' a translation of Boeckh's 'Public Economy of Athens;' and 'A Glossary of Provincial Words used in Herefordshire. Sir George married (1844) Maria Theresa, sister of the earl of Clarendon and widow of Mr. Thomas Henry Lister, of Armitage Park, Yorkshire.' Lady Lewis, who died at Oxford 9 Nov., 1865, aged 61, had a taste for literature, her principal publications being 'The Lives of Lord Clarendon's Friends and Contemporaries,' and 'Extracts from the Journals and Correspondence of Miss Berry,' 3 vols., 1865.

LEWIS, JOHN, was born at Bristol 29 Aug., 1675. Having lost his father when young, he removed to Poole, in Dorsetshire, where he received part of his education, which he completed at Exeter College, Oxford. In 1697 he was ordained, and two years afterwards obtained the rectory of Acryse, in Kent, to which Archbishop Tenison added the living of Hawkinge, in the same county. In 1705 he became minister of Margate, and in 1708, vicar of Mynstre. He took his master's degree at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in 1712, and, in 1717, was made master of Eastbridge Hospital. Died 16 Jan., 1746. His principal works are, The Church Catechism explained; The History of John Wycliffe; The History and Antiquities of the Isle of Thanet; Specimen of Errors in Collier's Ecclesiastical History; History and Antiquities of the abbey of Feversham; The New Testament translated by John Wycliffe, to which is prefixed a history of the several translations of the Bible, which was also printed separately; Life of Caxton; Dissertation on the Use of Seals in England; the Life of Reynold Peacock, bishop of St. Asaph, and Chichester.

LEWIS, MATTHEW GREGORY, a licentious writer, born in London 9 July, 1775. His father was deputy secretary at war, and possessed of large estates in the West Indies. The son received his education at Westminster School, after which he went abroad, and on his return obtained a seat in parliament, but made no figure in the house. On the death of his father he went to Jamaica, and died on the passage home 14 May, 1818. His principal works are, The Monk, an infamous novel; The Castle Spectre, a drama; Adelmorn, a tragedy; Tales of Winter; Feudal Tyrants, a romance; Tales of Terror; Romantic Tales; Venoni, a drama; Poems.

LEY, or LEIGH, SIR JAMES, a judge, born in Wiltshire about 1552. He studied at Brasenose College, Oxford, and next in Lincoln's Inn. In

LEYBURN.

1605 he was made serjeant, and, the year following, chief justice of the King's Bench in Ireland. In 1620 he was created a baronet, and the next year made chief justice of the Court of King's Bench in England. In 1625 he was raised to the office of lord high treasurer; and soon after created earl of Marlborough, and president of the council. Died 14 March, 1628. His works are, Reports of Cases in the Reigns of James and Charles I.; Treatise of Wards; and some Discourses on antiquarian subjects, published by Hearne.

LEYBOURN, WILLIAM, a mathematical writer, was originally a printer in London. He became a schoolmaster, and published a number of practical works, which were once popular and of great utility, particularly 'A Treatise on Surveying,' folio; 'A Course of Mathematics;' and the 'Ready Reckoner, or Trader's Sure Guide.' He died about 1700.

LEYBURN, GEORGE, D.D., an English divine of the Roman communion, born in Westmorland 1593. He was admitted a student in the English college at Douay 1617, and ordained priest 1625. Afterwards he went to Paris and took up his residence in Arras College, a small community, where several English divines lived together in order to take their degrees in that university, but chiefly to employ their time in composing books of controversy. On leaving Paris, he returned to England upon the mission 1630, and was taken prisoner at Dover, but soon obtained his release through the intercession of the Queen Henrietta Maria, who made him one of her chaplains, and consulted him upon most affairs appertaining to the Catholics. Again going to Douay, he taught philosophy and divinity there; but graduated D.D. at Rheims. He then returned to this country, and in 1644 was a prisoner in the Tower, where he became acquainted with General Monk, whose future greatness he predicted. On regaining his liberty he repaired to France, where he was very useful to the royalist party. About 1647 he was sent to Ireland with credentials and instructions from the court in banishment in order to bring the two Catholic armies and the duke of Ormond to a better understanding. An account of this negotiation, which was attended with little success, was written by Dr. Leyburn, and published in 1722 by Dodd, the ecclesiastical historian. In 1648 Richard Smith, bishop of Chalcodon, at that time residing at Paris, appointed Dr. Leyburn his vicar-general in England, in conjunction with Mark Harrington, B.D. He was afterwards chosen president of the English college at Douay 1652, and governed that society about eighteen years, resigning his office to his nephew, John Leyburn, in 1670. He died at Châlons-sur-Marne 29 Dec., 1677. His works are, 'An Epistle Declaratory or Manifest to his Brethren residing in England,' London, 1657; An encyclical answer to an encyclical epistle, subscribed by the dean and chapter, 4to., Douay, 1661; 'Holy Characters,' 8vo., Douay, 1662; 'Vindiciæ Censuræ Duacensæ' under the name of Jonas Thamon (1661), which piece has been also ascribed to John Warner; 'Memoirs, being a Journal of his Agency for Prince Charles in Ireland in 1647,' 8vo., London, 1722.

LEYBURN, JOHN, nephew of the above, was born in or about 1620, and admitted into the English college at Douay 1633. After receiving holy orders he spent some time in teaching the classics, and in 1670 he succeeded his uncle in the government of the college. He resigned the post, however, in 1675, when he went to Rome, where he was constituted secretary and auditor to Cardinal Howard. On 9th Sept., 1685, he was consecrated bishop of Adrumetum, in partibus, having been appointed vicar-apostolic of the London district. Proceeding to the English capital, he had an apartment prepared for him in St. James's Palace, with an allowance of 1,000*l.* per annum. He was the first Catholic bishop resident in this country since the reign of Charles I. In the Revolution of 1688 he was committed prisoner to the Tower, but was released in consequence of his peaceful and inoffensive behaviour. He was afterwards frequently alarmed and summoned when any disturbance happened in relation to the government, but the ministry being fully satisfied with his conduct took no further notice of him. They only desired to know his place of abode, which he failed not to acquaint them with whenever he had occasion to change his lodgings. In this manner he spent the remainder of his days, dying 9 June, 1702. He wrote an elegant Latin style, and left a MS. volume of letters in that language. His publications are a translation of Kenelm Digby's Treatise of Bodies and of the Immortality of the Soul, folio, Paris, 1651; and a Pastoral Letter to the Catholics of England 1688.

LEYDECKER, MELCHIOR, a Protestant divine and ecclesiastical historian, born at Middleburg 25 Jan., 1652, was appointed professor at Utrecht 1678; and died there 6 Jan., 1721.

LEYDEN, JOHN, M.D., a physician and poet, born 8 Sept., 1775, at Denholm, Roxburghshire, where his father was a shepherd. He received his education at the parish school of Kirktown, and next under a minister of the Secession Church; after which he went to Edinburgh, where he wrote several poems. He was also employed as a private tutor, and, on going to St. Andrew's, obtained a licence to preach; but he relinquished the pulpit for the surgery, and, having taken his doctor's degree, he went to India. In 1806 he was appointed professor of Hindustani at the college of Calcutta, and he also for some time officiated as a judge. In 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto in the expedition against Java, where he died on 28 August, the same year. His poetical works and memoirs were printed 1819. There is a highly interesting account of his life in Sir Walter Scott's Miscellaneous Prose Works.

L'HOPITAL, GUILLAUME FRANÇOIS ANTOINE, marquis DE, a mathematician, born 1661. He entered into the army, and while a soldier devoted all his spare time to the study of his favourite science. At last he quitted the service on account of the weakness of his sight. In 1693 he became an honorary member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, and the same year published a work on Newton's Fluxions, entitled 'L'Analyse des infiniments petits.' This was followed by 'Les Sections Coniques, les Lieux Geometriques, la Construction des Equations;' and 'Une Theorie des Courbes Mechaniques.' Died 2 Feb., 1704.

L'HOPITAL, MICHEL, born 1505 at Aignepere, in Auvergne. He rose to places of high trust and honour; being successively auditor of the Rota at Rome, and counsellor of the parliament of Paris. He was next appointed ambassador to the council of Trent; but by his own desire was soon recalled. In 1554 he was made superintendent of the finances; in 1559 a member of the council of state, and soon after chancellor of the kingdom. Such was his moderation, that the rigid Catholics accused him of being a concealed Protestant, and he was at last deprived of the seals. Died 15 March, 1573. There are extant by him, Latin poems, the best edition of which is that of Amsterdam, 1732; Speeches in the States of Orleans; Memoirs.

L'HOSTE, JEAN, a French mathematician, was a native of Nancy; and died 1631.

L'HOSTE, PAUL, a French Jesuit and mathematician, born at Pont de Vesle 1652; died 23 Feb., 1700, at Toulon, where he was professor.

LHUYD, EDWARD, a Celtic scholar, born about 1670, at Lhanvordre, in South Wales. He took his degrees in arts at Jesus College, Oxford, in which university he succeeded Dr. Plot as keeper of the Ashmolean Museum. He was also elected superior beadle of divinity 1709, but died in July the same year. Many of his communications were inserted in Bishop Gibson's edition of Camden; and he published himself, 'Archæologia Britannica;' and Lithophylacii Britannici Iconographia. He left in manuscript an 'Irish-English Dictionary;' and other curious papers on antiquarian subjects.

LHUYD, or LHUYD, HUMPHREY, an antiquary, was born at Denbigh, and educated at Oxford, where he became a member of Brasenose College, took his degrees in arts, and studied physic, which he never practised. He died about 1590, and was buried at Whitechurch, near Denbigh. His principal works are, 'Commentarioli Britannicæ descriptionis fragmentum,' 1572, and again 1731; 'De Mona Druidum Insula;' 'De Armamentario Romano;' 'Chronicon Walliæ;' The History of Cambria, printed by Dr. Powel, 1584.

LIBANIUS, a famous Greek sophist, born 314 at Antioch, where he died after 390. He resided chiefly at Constantinople. Like the Emperor Julian, who was one of his pupils, he was a bitter foe of the Christian religion. The best edition of his 'Declamations' is by Reiske, 4 vols., 1791-97.

LIBAVIUS, ANDREW, a physician and chemist, born at Halle, in Saxony; died at Coburg 1616.

LIBERI, PETER, a painter, born at Padua 1605; died 1687.

LIBERIUS, a Roman, was elected Pope 352, in succession to Julius I.; and died 24 Sept., 366.

LICETUS, FORTUNIUS, an Italian physician, for many years professor at Padua, was born 1577, and died 16 May, 1657. He wrote a work on Monsters; and another on the supposed inextinguishable lamps of the ancients.

LICHTENBERG, GEORGE CHRISTOPHER, a physician and satirist, born near Darmstadt 1 July, 1742. In 1770 he obtained a professorship at Göttingen, and seven years later succeeded to the chair of experimental philosophy in that university. He twice visited this country, and was well acquainted with the English language and literature. He wrote some treatises on physical science, and an explanation, in German, of Hogarth's pictures, but is best known by his satirical works, such as his 'Physiognomy of Tails,' in ridicule of Lavater; 'The Madhouse for Opinions and Inventions;' and 'A Sentimental Journey to Laputa.' Died 24 Feb., 1799.

LICHTENSTEIN.

LICHTENSTEIN, JOSEPH WENCESLAUS, an Austrian field-marshal, born 10 Aug., 1696, at Vienna, where he died 9 Feb., 1773. He commanded the army of Italy in 1746, and on 20 June in that year gained a victory at Placentia. Afterwards he served his sovereign in a diplomatic capacity, and held for some time the post of director-general of the artillery at Vienna.

LIDDEL, DUNCAN, M.D., a mathematician and physician, born at Aberdeen 1561. After studying at his native place he went to Frankfort, where he taught mathematics and philosophy till obliged to leave that city on account of the plague. He then removed to Rostock, and in 1591 was elected professor of mathematics at Helmstadt, where he took his doctor's degree. In 1607 he returned to Scotland, and founded a mathematical professorship at Aberdeen, where he died 17 Dec., 1613. He wrote several works on medical subjects, some of which were reprinted at Helmstadt 1720, under the title of 'Universæ Medicinæ Compendium.'

LIEUTAUD, JOSEPH, a French medical writer, principal physician to Louis XVI., was born at Aix (Provence) 1704; and died 6 Dec., 1780.

LIEVENS, JOHN, *Livineus, was born at Termonde, in Belgium, about 1546, and became a canon of Antwerp, where he died 13 Jan., 1599. He translated into Latin some of the works of St. Gregory of Nyssa, St. Chrysostom, and other fathers. He also edited the 'Pancryrici Veteres' (1599), and caused Plantin's Greek Bible to be printed.

LIEVENS, JOHN, a painter, born at Leyden 1607. He resided some time at the court of Charles I., and afterwards settled at Antwerp, but the time of his decease is not specified.

LIGHTFOOT, JOHN, D.D., was born at Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, 19 or 20 March, 1602. He became a student of Christ's College, Cambridge, which he left, on taking the degree of bachelor of arts, to be an assistant in the school at Repton, in Derbyshire. On entering into orders he obtained the curacy of Norton, Shropshire, where he contracted an intimacy with Sir Rowland Cotton, who taught him Hebrew. In 1628 he was appointed minister of Stone, Staffordshire, which place he soon left to reside near London, where he printed, in 1629, his first work, 'Erubim, or Miscellanies, Christian and Judaical,' dedicated to Sir Rowland Cotton, who in 1631 presented him to the rectory of Ashley, Staffordshire. Here he resided till his appointment as a member of the assembly of divines rendered it necessary for him to settle in London, where he was chosen minister of St. Bartholomew behind the Exchange. In 1643 he was made master of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, with which he held the living of Much Munden, Herts. He distinguished himself as a zealous promoter of the Polyglott Bible, and at the Restoration was appointed one of the assistants at the Savoy conference. Died 6 Dec., 1675. His works were printed 1684, 2 vols. folio; again, with additions, at Amsterdam, 1686; and by Leusden at Utrecht, 3 vols., 1699. Strype published his 'Remains,' 1700.

LIGHTFOOT, JOHN, F.R.S., a botanist, born at Newent, Gloucestershire, 9 Dec., 1735. He was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford (M.A. 1766). On taking orders he became curate of Colnbrook, and afterwards of Uxbridge. Lord Chancellor Northington gave him the rectory of Shelden, Hampshire, which he resigned on taking possession of Gotham, in Notts, with which he held the living of Sutton, in the same county. He was patronized by the duchess of Portland, and drew up the catalogue of her museum. He was also a fellow of the Royal and Linnæan Societies. He died at Uxbridge 18 Feb., 1788. Mr. Lightfoot published the 'Flora Scotica,' 2 vols. 8vo.; and his Herbarium was purchased by George III.

LIGNE, CHARLES JOSEPH, a general in the Austrian service, distinguished by his wit as well as his military talents. He was born at Brussels 1735; served with honour during the Seven Years' War; became lieutenant-general 1771; enjoyed the favour of Maria Theresa and Joseph II., and also of Catharine II., whom he served against the Turks, 1789; was created field-marshal 1808; died 13 Dec., 1814. He left a great number of works in French (30 vols. 12mo., 1807), all sparkling with wit and originality.

LIGONIER, JOHN, Earl Ligonier, field-marshal in the British army, who served in all the wars of Queen Anne, under the great duke of Marlborough, with distinguished glory, and was employed in every succeeding war. Died 1770, aged 92.

LIGUORI, St. ALFONSO MARIA DE' bishop of St. Agatha of the Goths, and founder of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, came of a noble Neapolitan family, and was born at Marianella, near Naples, 27 Sept., 1696. At the age of ten he joined the association of young nobles among the Oratorians at Naples, and was remarkable for his candour, his innocence, and his horror of sin. He completed his education under his paternal roof, being instructed by able masters. At this early age he was of a very pious turn of mind. He communicated once a week, and visited the Blessed Sacrament daily. At seventeen years old he was created LL.D., and adopted the profession of advocate; but although he had a brilliant career before him, he soon resolved to quit the law for the ecclesiastical state. Ordained priest in 1726, he devoted himself especially to the preaching of missions. After having edited Naples by his discourses, he passed through the dioceses of Amalfi and Scala, where he gained the title of the Apostle of the Poor and Ignorant. His success encouraged him to found the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer, on the model of the Congregation of St. Vincent of Paul. The association bound themselves in 1742 by simple vows, and appointed St. Alfonso superior-general of the order, which was approved by Benedict XIV. 1749. Clement XIII. compelled him in 1762 to accept the bishopric of St. Agatha of the Goths, the suffragan see of Benevento. After an episcopate of thirty years, he asked to be relieved of his bishopric, and he did not reserve any pension to himself. Retiring to a house of his order at Nocera, he there composed a great number of theological and devotional works, which are highly prized by Catholics in every part of the world. Translated into English we have 'The Christian Virtues and the Means for obtaining them'; 'Conformity with the Will of God'; 'The Glories of Mary'; 'The Clock of the Passion'; 'Instructions and Considerations on the Religious State'; 'The History of Heresies and their Refutation'; 'Hymns and Verses on Spiritual Subjects'; 'The Eternal Truths. Preparation for Death, or Considerations on the Eternal Maxims'; 'The Holy Eucharist'; 'The Incarnation'; 'The Redemption'; 'Reflections on Spiritual Subjects and on the Passion of Jesus Christ'; 'Sermons for all the Sundays of the Year'; 'A Short Treatise on Prayer, the great means of obtaining from God eternal salvation; 'Visits to the Blessed Sacrament and to the Blessed Virgin for every day in the month;' 'The True Spouse of Jesus Christ, or the Nun sanctified by the virtues of her state;' 'The Way of Salvation. Meditations for every day in the year.' This pious servant of God died 1 Aug., 1787. He was beatified by Pius VII. 1816; declared a saint by Pius VIII. 1830; and solemnly canonized by Gregory XVI. 1839. Festival Aug. 2.

LILBURN, JOHN, was born in the county of Durham 1618. He served his time to a clothier in London; but in 1636 Dr. Bastwick persuaded him to go to Holland, to superintend the printing of some libels against the government. With this cargo he returned, and soon after was taken up, and sentenced to be first whipped, then to stand in the pillory, and afterwards confined in the Fleet. The Long Parliament, however, remunerated him for what he had endured by profuse grants of sequestrated estates. He fought at the battle of Edgehill as a captain of foot; but at Brentford he was made prisoner and carried to Oxford, where he would have been hanged had not the Parliament threatened retaliation. He then obtained his liberty, and was made first a major and afterwards a colonel of dragoons. Being of a quarrelsome temper, he libelled the earl of Manchester, for which he was sent to the Tower, where he remained till 1648. He had not been long out of confinement before he renewed his old practice of abusing his superiors, for which he was banished the kingdom. After residing some time in Holland he returned in 1657, and was tried at the Old Bailey, but acquitted. He now settled at Eltham, where he turned Quaker, and died the same year, 29 Aug., 1657. His publications were numerous, but not worth notice.

LILLO, GEORGE, a dramatist, born in London 4 Feb., 1603. He was a jeweller by trade, which occupation he carried on some years with reputation. His tragedies, which are deeply pathetic and strictly moral, are 'George Barnwell;' 'Fatal Curiosity;' 'Arden of Feversham;' 'Elmerick.' Died 3 Sept., 1739. His Dramatic Works were published at London, in 2 vols., 1770, with a biographical memoir by Thomas Davies.

LILLY, JOHN, a dramatic writer, was born in Kent about 1553. He took his master's degree at Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1575; after which he went to court, but died in distressed circumstances Nov., 1606. He wrote a number of plays; a book called 'Euphues,' remarkable for its bombastic style; and a pamphlet against Martin Marprelate, entitled 'Pap with a Hatchet, alias a fig for my godson.' A collection of his Dramatic Works was published in 2 vols., 1858, with a life of the author by F. W. Fairholt.

LILLY, WILLIAM, M.D., an astrologer, born at Diseworth, Leicestershire, 1602. He became book-keeper to a tradesman in London, whose widow he married, and on her death took another wife, who by her conduct made him poor and miserable. He, however, married a third time, and gained a considerable estate by his pretended skill in casting nativities. In the civil wars he was much employed by both parties, and after the Restoration the archbishop of Canterbury conferred upon him the degree of doctor of medicine. He died at Hersham, Surrey, 9 June, 1681. Lilly wrote some curious works, the chief of which are, Observations on the Life and Death of Charles I.; Chris- tian Astrology; and 'Annus Tenebrosus,' which brought on a controversy between him and Galtaker, respecting the verity of astrological principles. He was also author of an extremely curious 'History of his Life and Times,' printed at London 1715.

LILY, or LILYE, WILLIAM, a grammarian, born at Odiham, Hampshire, about 1468. He studied at Magdalen College, Oxford, after which he went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and continued five years in the Isle of Rhodes to perfect himself in the Greek language. On his return in 1509, he settled in London, and the year following was appointed head master of St. Paul's School. He died of the plague 25 Feb., 1522-3. His grammar, which long held its place in the schools, and was the basis of most subsequent treatises on the Latin rudiments, was partly written by Dean Colet, and the preface by Wolsey. Lily's son, George, became prebendary of Canterbury, and died in 1559. He published a Map of Britain; also 'Anglorum Regum Chronices Epitome;' and 'Elogia Virorum illustrium.'

LIMBORCH, PHILIP VAN, an Arminian divine, born at Amsterdam 19 June, 1633. He studied at Utrecht, and became a preacher among the Remonstrants 1654. After this he settled at Gouda, where he remained till called to officiate at Amsterdam. In 1668 he was appointed professor of divinity, and in 1686 he published a complete system of Arminian Theology, in Latin. The same year he held a conference with Orobio, the Jew, the particulars of which Limborch published, with this title, 'Collatio Amica de Veritate Religionis Christianæ cum erudito Judæo.' Besides the above treatises, he published 'Epistolæ Prestantium et eruditorum virorum,' 8vo.; Commentaries on some parts of the New Testament; and other works. Died 30 April, 1712.

LINACRE, THOMAS, M.D., was born about 1460, probably at Canterbury, though Derby also claims the honour of his nativity. It is believed that he studied at Cambridge, before going to Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship in All Souls College 1484. Afterwards he went to Italy, where he translated several of Galen's pieces into Latin. He took his doctor's degree at Padua. On his return to Oxford he read lectures on physic, and taught Greek, till he was called to superintend the education of Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII. He was successively physician to four sovereigns, and by his interest with Henry VIII. procured letters patent for the foundation of the Royal College of Physicians, in London. He also settled two medical lectureships at Oxford, and one at Cambridge. At the close of life he entered into orders, and obtained the precentorship of York, and a prebend of Westminster. Died 20 Oct., 1524. Besides his translation of Galen, and another of Proclus on the Sphere, he wrote a treatise 'De emendata structura Latini Sermonis.'—Athen. Cantab.

LINCOLN, ABRAHAM, president of the United States, was born at Hardin county, Kentucky, 1809, being the son of Thomas Lincoln, a labouring farmer. While he was still a boy his father removed to the wilds of Illinois, and here he began life as a labourer in the bush, building rail fences—a circumstance which gained for him in after years the designation of the 'rail-splitter'—and working as a common sailor on the flat boats which navigated the Mississippi. While thus employed he picked up some little learning, and gave all his spare time to reading what books came in his way. He served as captain of militia during the Indian troubles of the North-West, and in 1834 was elected to the Illinois legislature. Three years later he was admitted to the bar, and met with much success as an advocate. In 1847 he was returned to Congress, where he supported the Whig party, and became conspicuous as an uncompromising opponent of slavery. The Whig party was broken up soon after the presidential election of 1852, and two years afterwards he appeared as a leader of the newly-organised Republican party. He made several unsuccessful attempts to obtain a seat in the senate. In 1860, however, he was raised to the highest office in the republic. The National Republican Convention met at Chicago in June in that year, and up to the eleventh hour it was supposed that Mr. Chase, of Ohio, and Mr. Bates, of Missouri, would divide the votes of the western delegates; but they were suddenly abandoned, and Mr. Lincoln was brought forward in their stead. The local pressure from without was so great that he was nominated over Mr. Seward, and elected president in Nov., 1860. The results of that election were most disastrous. Almost all the Southern States seceded from the Union before the new president was inaugurated. Then came the attack on Fort Sumter, and the terrible civil war which for four years devastated the Central States of the Union. At the expiration of his term of office he was re-elected to the presidency, and he lived to see the substantial success of the Federal arms, and the surrender of Richmond and of the army of General Lee. While on a visit to Ford's Theatre, at Washington, on 14 April, 1865, he was shot through the head by an actor named John Wilkes Booth, and died on the following morning. His death caused unparalleled outbursts of sorrow throughout the Northern States.

LINCOLN, EDWARD FIENNES, otherwise CLINTON, EARL OF, K.G., only son of Thomas Lord Clinton, was born 1514, and at three years of age succeeded to his father's barony. He distinguished himself as a naval commander during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, holding the office of lord high admiral under the three last-named sovereigns. He was created earl of Lincoln 1572, and died 6 Jan., 1584-5.—Athen. Cantab.

LINCOLN, RICHARD, D.D., was appointed Catholic archbishop of Dublin 1757; died 1762.

LIND, JAMES, M.D., some time physician to the royal hospital at Haslar, died at Gosport 18 July, 1794. He was deservedly celebrated as a medical writer, his principal works being a Treatise on the Scurvy; Essay on the means of preserving the Health of Seamen (which, like the preceding work, was translated into French); and an Essay on the Diseases incidental to Europeans in Hot Climates.

LIND, JAMES, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Scotland 17 May, 1736. When a young man he went out as surgeon in an Indian man, and visited China. In 1768 he took his doctor's degree at Edinburgh, his inaugural dissertation being entitled 'De Febre Remittente Patria Paludum quæ grassatur in Bengalia,' of which he afterwards published a translation, under the title of 'Treatise on the Fever of 1762 at Bengal.' In 1770 he was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians at Edinburgh, and two years later he accompanied Mr., afterwards Sir Joseph Banks, on his voyage to Iceland. About 1777 he settled at Windsor, where he died 17 Oct., 1812. Dr. Lind printed at his private press 'The Genealogy of the Families of Lind, and the Montgomeries of Smithson, written by Sir Robert Douglas, Bart., author of the History of Scotland' 1795.

LINDANUS, WILLIAM, a native of Dort, became bishop of Roermond 1562; bishop of Ghent 1588; died 11 Nov., 1588. He wrote some theological works in Latin.

LINDE, SAMUEL BOGUMIL, a learned Pole, the compiler of a valuable dictionary of his native language, was born at Thorn 1771, and died at Warsaw 8 Aug., 1847.

LINDEWOOD, WILLIAM, a learned civilian, who was a member of the university of Oxford, and sent by Henry V. as ambassador to Spain and Portugal in 1422. On his return to England he was made bishop of St. David's in 1434, and died 28 Oct., 1446. He compiled a collection of canons and constitutions of the archbishops of Canterbury, printed at Paris in 1505; at London in 1557; and at Oxford in 1663; and again in 1679.

LINDLEY, JOHN, Ph.D., F.R.S., a botanist, born at Catton, near Norwich, 5 Feb., 1799. His father was proprietor of a large nursery garden, a circumstance which doubtless gave birth to the taste for botany so early manifested in the son. After leaving the grammar school at Norwich, he devoted his attention to botanical studies, his first publication being a translation of Richard's 'Analyse du Fruit,' 1819, which was followed the next year by a work entitled, 'Monographia Rosarum,' containing descriptions of several new species of roses. At this period, also, he contributed some remarkable papers to the Transactions of the Linnæan Society. Coming to London, he received the appointment of assistant-secretary to the Horticultural Society, and was engaged by Mr. Loudon to write the descriptive portion of his 'Encyclopædia of Plants,' the merit of which as a botanical work was entirely due to him. In his 'Introduction to the Natural System of Botany,' he lucidly set forth the advantages of a natural classification of plants over the artificial system of Linnæus. His principal other works are an 'Introduction to Systematic and Physiological Botany,' 1832; and 'The Vegetable Kingdom,' 1846. He also edited the 'Gardener's Chronicle,' and was a frequent contributor to the periodical press on his favourite subject. The degree of Ph.D. was conferred on him by the university of Munich. Died 1 Nov., 1865.

LINDSAY. See BALCARRES, EARL OF.

LINDSAY, or LYNDASAY, SIR DAVID, of the Mount, a Scotch poet, born at Garmlayton, in Haddingtonshire, 1490. He was page of honour to James V.; and in 1530 was inaugurated Lord Lyon king-at-arms. He was much employed as a herald, and is supposed to have died in 1567. His poems were published by George Chalmers in 1806, in 3 vols.

LINDSAY, JOHN, an English divine, who was educated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford; after which he officiated many years to a congregation of non-jurors, in Aldersgate Street. He was also corrector of the press to Mr. Bowyer, and died at the age of eighty-two 21 June, 1768. He published a translation of Mason's Vindication of the Church of England, 1728; A short History of the Regal Succession; Remarks on Whiston's Scripture Politics.

LINDSAY, JOHN, Earl of Crawford. See CRAWFORD.

LINDSEY, ROBERT BERTIE, EARL OF, K.G., lord high chamberlain of England in the reign of Charles I., was the eldest son of Peregrine, Lord Willoughby of Eresby, by Mary, daughter of John Vere, earl of Oxford, and grandson of Richard Bertie, Esq., by Catharine, duchess of Suffolk. He was born 1582, and in 1601, upon the death of his father, succeeded to his title and estate. In the first year of the reign of James I. he made his claim to the earldom of Oxford, and to the titles of Lord Bulbech, Sandford, and Badlesmere, and to the office of lord high chamberlain of England, as son and heir of Mary, the sole heir female of that great family. After considerable dispute judgment was given in his favour for the office of lord high chamberlain, and the same year he took his seat in the House of Lords above all the barons. He graduated M.A. at Cambridge as a member of Corpus Christi College 4 March, 1612. On 22 Nov., 1626, he was advanced to the dignity of earl of Lindsey, and four years afterwards was made a knight of the Garter. In 1635 he was constituted lord high admiral of England, and a fleet of forty ships of war was sent out under his command. In 1639, upon the Scotch taking arms, he was appointed governor of Berwick. The year following he was appointed lord high constable of England at the trial of the earl of Strafford. In 1642 he was constituted general of the king's forces, and on the 23rd of Oct. in the same year received his death wound at the battle of Edgehill.

LINDSEY, THEOPHILUS, was born at Middlewich, Cheshire, 20 June, 1723. He took his degrees in arts at St. John's College, Cambridge, and on entering into orders obtained successively the livings of Kirby Wiske, Yorkshire; Piddletown, Dorset; and Catterick, in the former county, which last he resigned 1773, having embraced the Socinian tenets. He then settled in London, where he opened a chapel in Essex Street, which he served till 1793, when he retired from the ministry. Died 3 Nov., 1808. Mr. Lindsey published 'An Apology for his Resignation of the Vicarage of Catterick;' and some other pieces in defence of his peculiar sentiments.

LINE, or HALL, FRANCIS, a Jesuit, born in London 1595, joined the Society 1623, and was professed 1640. He was deservedly in repute as a professor of Hebrew and mathematics. During the time he was serving the English mission he constructed in the garden of Whitehall Palace a very curious dial, of which a description was published by him at Liege. He also wrote 'Refutation of the Attempt to Square the Circle,' 8vo., Lond., 1660, against Father Goswin Nickel; 'A Treatise on the Barometer;' and 'De corporum insparabilitate.' It is said that he had a controversy with Newton on his theory of light.—Olivier.

LINEGAR, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic divine, appointed archbishop of Dublin 1734; died 1756.

LINGARD, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., the Catholic historian of England, was born at Winchester 5 Feb., 1771, of parents who occupied a humble position in society. At an early age he was recommended to the notice of Bishop Challoner, and by the successor of that prelate, Bishop James Talbot, he was sent in 1782 to the English college at Douay. After a course of humanities, in which the brilliancy of his genius was equalled only by the modesty of his disposition, he entered the school of theology in Oct., 1792. In the following year, during the troubles of the French revolution, the establishment at Douay was broken up and its members dispersed. Some of them, including young Lingard, effected their escape to this country, and on 15 Oct., 1794, eight individuals, the sad but honoured representatives of the famous college of Douay, took possession of Crook Hall, near Durham, and resumed their collegiate exercises, Lingard receiving the appointment of vice-president. He was ordained priest 1795; became about the same time prefect of the studies, and for many years filled the chair both of natural and moral philosophy. In 1808 the community removed to Ushaw, where Lingard, whose attention had been directed in an especial manner to the study of our early ecclesiastical history, read to his friends a series of papers on Anglo-Saxon antiquities. These were subsequently published under the title of 'The Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church,' 2 vols., Newcastle, 1806; and edit., 1810; 3rd edit., greatly enlarged, and almost entirely rewritten, 2 vols., 1845; 4th edit., 1858. In Sept., 1811, Mr. Lingard retired from Ushaw, and withdrew to the secluded mission of Hornby, Lancashire, where he spent the remainder of his days engaged in literary pursuits, the principal events of his subsequent life being two visits to Rome. The first three volumes of his celebrated 'History of England' were published at London in 1819, and the eighth and concluding volume, bringing the history down to the revolution of 1688, appeared in 1830. Both at home and on the Continent the work was hailed with admiration by scholars of every creed and every shade of opinion; and it is now all but universally admitted to be the most accurate and impartial history of our country that has yet been written. It has been translated into French, Italian, and German, and been several times reprinted both in England and the United States. A special decree of the university of Paris ordered the work to be placed in the library of every college in France; and it has for a long time been used as a text book in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. In 1821 Pope Pius VII. conferred on its author the degrees of doctor in divinity and doctor of canon and civil law, and Leo XII. sent him the gold medal usually bestowed only on cardinals and princes. It has also been stated that Dr. Lingard was actually created a cardinal in petto, but this assertion appears not to be correct. Besides his history he wrote a number of other works, for the most part in defence of the doctrines of the Catholic Church. The principal are,

Documents to ascertain the Sentiments of British Catholics in former ages in regard to the power of the Pope, 1812; 'A Review of certain Anticatholic Publications,' 1813; 'Strictures on Dr. Marsh's Comparative View of the Churches of England and Rome,' 1815; 'A Collection of Tracts on several subjects connected with the civil and religious principles of the Catholics,' 1826; 'A New Version of the Four Gospels, by a Catholic,' 1836; and 'Catechetical Instructions on the Doctrines and Worship of the Catholic Church,' 1840. In 1823, at the request of Bishop Milner, he compiled the lessons for the English saints, which were afterwards approved and inserted in the Breviary. Dr. Lingard died 17 July, 1851, and was buried in the cloister of the cemetery at St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw.

LINGLEBACH, JOHN, a painter, born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine 1635; died 1687.

LINGUET, SIMON NICOLAS HENRI, a French advocate and political writer, was born at Rheims 1736, and fell under the guillotine 27 June, 1794.

LINLEY, GEORGE, an English poet and composer, was the son of a Leeds tradesman, and in a great measure self-taught. He set to music some of our best modern ballads, and wrote several satirical works, one of which, 'The Modern Hudibras,' had an extensive sale. Died at Kensington 10 Sept., 1865, aged 66.

LINLEY, THOMAS, a musical composer, born at Bath about 1725. He commenced his musical studies under Chilcott, the organist of the abbey church at Bath, and completed them under Paradis, a celebrated Venetian composer, after which he became conductor of the oratorios and concerts then regularly performed at Bath. His connection with Richard Brinsley Sheridan, who married his daughter, induced him to embark in theatrical speculations, and in 1776, in conjunction with his son-in-law and a Mr. Ford, he purchased Garrick's share in Drury Lane Theatre for £35,000. Previous to this he had become favourably known to the public as the joint composer, with his son, of the songs in Sheridan's 'Duenna.' His career at Drury Lane commenced with the successful production of a musical piece called 'Zelima and Azore,' in which the song, 'No Flower that blows,' was rapturously applauded. In 1777 he produced his accompaniments to the original airs in the 'Beggars' Opera,' which have been justly eulogised both by foreign and native composers. His subsequent compositions were the music to 'The Camp,' 'The Spanish Rivals,' 'The Strangers at Home,' and part of the music to Sheridan's monody on the death of Garrick. He also published several ballads full of pathos, spirit, and originality, particularly that commencing, 'Sing of the days that are gone.' Mr. Linley's family afflictions were unusually severe, and after having lost two sons and a daughter under very distressing circumstances, he was seldom, if ever, seen to smile. He died in London 19 Nov., 1795. As a musician he is distinguished by taste and feeling. He did not seek to astonish by sublime effects, but his compositions always soothe and charm by delicacy, simplicity, and tenderness. He has also the merit of having restored the music of Handel and the performance of it to the notice of the public.

LINLEY, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was born at Bath 1756, and acquired a well-merited reputation as a musical composer. He met his death under very melancholy circumstances 7 Aug., 1778. Being on a visit with his sisters at Grimsthorpe, Lincolnshire, the seat of the duke of Ancaster, he, in conjunction with three other young men, embarked on board a sailing-boat in the duke's canal. The boat, however, was upset, and Linley's companions clung to the keel whilst he swam off for assistance, but just as he was on the point of reaching the bank he sank to rise no more. An edition of his posthumous works was published by Preston, in which is to be found the greater part of his miscellaneous music, consisting of songs, elegies, and cantatas.

LINLEY, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, was born about 1767. For many years he was in the service of the East India Company, and after amassing a fortune, he returned to this country, and lived a London life, for the most part in musical society. He composed numerous glees, canzonets, &c., and compiled the 'Dramatic Songs of Shakespeare,' in which are several of his own compositions. He also wrote two comic operas, and several novels. Died 16 May, 1835.

LINNÆUS, or VON LINNÉ, CHARLES, was the son of a clergyman at Rashult, in Sweden, and born there 13 May, 1707. He was educated at Lund, from whence he removed to Upsal, where he was appointed to read lectures on botany in 1730; and the year following he received a commission from the Academy of Sciences to travel in Lapland and Norway. In this journey he paid attention to the art of assaying metals, on which he afterwards delivered a course of lectures. In 1735 he went to Harderwyck, in Holland, where he took his doctor's degree, and while in that country he became, through the introduction of Boerhaave, superintendent of Mr. Clifford's garden at Hartecamp, of which he drew up a catalogue. While in this situation he published also his 'Flora Lapponica;' after which he visited England. On his return to Holland he continued his 'Genera Plantarum,' and was chosen a member of the Imperial Academy 'Naturæ Curiosorum.' In 1737 he printed the 'Hortus Cliffortianus,' and his 'Critica Botanica.' He returned to Sweden 1738, and was chosen a member of the academy at Upsal; and soon afterwards he laid the foundation of that at Stockholm. In 1740 he was chosen professor of medicine at the former place, where he undertook the reform of the botanical garden, to which he gave many valuable exotics. In 1745 he published his 'Flora Suecica;' which was followed by the 'Fauna Suecica.' At this time his merits were so well appreciated that a medal was struck to his honour, and he was appointed architor to the king. In 1749 appeared his 'Materia Medica;' and in 1751 he published the 'Philosophia Botanica.' His most splendid publication came out in 1754, with this title, 'Museum Regis Adolphi Frederici,' comprising a description of the natural curiosities in the royal museum. While conducting this work through the press, Linnæus was honoured with the order of the Polar Star, and in 1756 he was ennobled. In the meantime he prepared for publication his 'Species Plantarum,' which was followed by the 'Systema Naturæ.' This illustrious naturalist died at Upsal 10 Jan., 1778, and his remains were interred with great solemnity in the cathedral of that city, where his pupils erected a monument to his memory. His son, Charles Linnæus, born in 1741, became demonstrator in the botanic garden, and published some valuable works. He was ill used by his mother, which is supposed to have hastened his death 1 Nov. 1783. His sister, Elizabeth Christina, discovered a luminous property in the flowers of the nasturtium.

LINT, PETER VAN, an historical painter, born at Antwerp 1609; died there 1668.

LIOTARD, JEAN ETIENNE, a painter, called from his eastern dress, The Turk, was born at Geneva 1702. He worked in enamel, crayons, and miniature. Travelling to Constantinople, he there fell in with Sir Everard Fawkener, who brought him to England, where he was much employed for portraits. In the Dresden Gallery there are four of his works in pastel, one being the celebrated 'Vienna Chocolate Girl.' Died 1779.

LIPPI, FRA FILIPPO, an historical painter, born at Florence 1412. He was the disciple of Massaccio, whose manner he imitated. He was originally a Carmelite, but quitted the order to follow the arts. On a voyage in the Levant, he fell into the hands of the Moors, and was carried to Barbary; but by drawing the portrait of his master, he recovered his liberty, and returned to Florence, where he was employed by the grand duke. He was poisoned (1469) by the relations of a female whom he had seduced, and by whom he had a son, Filippino Lippi (b. 1460; died 1505), who was also a celebrated painter.

LIPPI, LORENZO, a painter of Florence, who was also a musician and poet. He wrote a popular work, entitled, 'Il Malmantile Racquistato.' Born 1600; died 1664.

LIPSIUS, JUSTUS, a famous classical scholar, was born at Isch, a village between Brussels and Louvain, 18 October, 1547, and studied successively at Brussels, Ath, Cologne, and Louvain. At the age of eighteen he published his 'Variae Lectiones,' with a dedication to Cardinal Granvelle, and on visiting Rome, 1567, he was made secretary to that distinguished ecclesiastic. In 1569 he returned to Louvain, and next went to Vienna, but in 1572 he settled at Jena, where he occupied the chair of eloquence and history for two years. In 1574 he retired to solitude and study at Isch, but the tumults of war drove him away again, and between 1579 and 1591 he held the professorship of history at Leyden. The remainder of his life was spent at Louvain, where he died 23 March, 1606. Lipsius, Scaliger, and Casaubon, were called the triumvirs of the literary republic. In his religious opinions, or rather professions, Lipsius was culpably inconsistent. He was brought up a Catholic, but became a Lutheran at Jena, again a Catholic on his return to Brabant, a Calvinist at Leyden, and once more a Catholic at Louvain. His works were published at Antwerp, 6 vols. folio, 1637; and at Wesel, 4 vols. 8vo., 1575. The most esteemed are, Commentaries on Tacitus; 'Electa'; 'Saturnalia'; Orations on the Concord, and on the Death of the Duke of Saxony; a treatise on the Roman Militia; and Lectures.

LISLE. See DELISLE.

LISLE, SIR GEORGE, was the son of a bookseller in London. He had his military education in the Netherlands, but on the breaking out of the civil wars he entered the royal army, where he behaved so well that he was appointed to a command. At the battle of Newbury, when it grew so dark that his men could not distinguish him, he put his shirt over his clothes, in order that he might be more conspicuous. The king, who was an eye-witness of his bravery, knighted him on the field of battle. He held Colchester a long time against the parliament forces, and surrendered as a prisoner of war, but was basely put to death by the victors 28 August, 1648.

LIST, FREDERICK, a German political economist, born at Reutlingen, in Württemberg, 6 Aug., 1789; died by his own hand 30 Nov., 1846. He first originated (1819) the idea of the 'Zollverein,' or Customs Association, which was ultimately adopted by all the German States. His complete works were published at Stuttgart, 3 vols., 1850-51.

LISTER, MARTIN, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Radcliffe, Bucks, about 1638. He was brought up by his great uncle, Sir Matthew Lister, physician to Charles I., who sent him to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship; but he took his doctor's degree at Oxford. He then settled as a physician at York, where he applied himself very much to natural history. In 1689 he accompanied the earl of Portland on his embassy to France, of which journey he published an account. In 1709 he was appointed physician in ordinary to Queen Anne. Died 4 Feb., 1711-12. His works are, 'Historia, sive synopsis Conchyliorum,' 2 vols.; 'Hist. Animalium Angliæ'; 'De Fontibus Medicabilibus Angliæ'; 'Exercitatio Anatomica'; 'Cochlearum ex Limacum exercitatio anatomica'; 'Conchyliorum Bivalvium utriusque aquæ exercitatio'; 'Exercitationes Medicinales.'

LISTER, SIR MATTHEW, M.D., physician to Anne of Denmark, the consort of James I., and physician-in-ordinary to Charles I., was born at Thornton, Yorkshire, about 1565, and died Dec., 1656.

LISTER, THOMAS HENRY, registrar-general of births, marriages, and deaths, was born 1801, and died at Kent House, Knightsbridge, the residence of his relative, the earl of Morley, 5 June, 1842. He was author of two novels, 'Granby' (1826), and 'Herbert Lacy'; 'Epicharis; an Historical Tragedy,' 1829; 'The Life and Administration of Edward, first Earl of Clarendon,' 3 vols., 1835; and 'An Answer to the misrepresentations contained in an article on the Life of Clarendon in No. 124 of the Quarterly Review,' 1839.

LISTON, JOHN, a celebrated comic actor, born in London 1776, being the son of a watchmaker. He started in life as teacher in a day school in Castle Street, Leicester Square, but, while holding this situation, formed an acquaintance with Charles Mathews, and like him became 'stage-struck.' After figuring on the boards of a private theatre, they both resolved to make the stage their profession, and accordingly joined a country company. Liston, who at this period believed that his forte lay in the representation of tragic characters, eventually obtained an engagement at Dublin, and next at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he discovered that he had mistaken his powers, and essaying a comic cast of characters he succeeded so fully that he thenceforward devoted himself exclusively to the performance of low comedy. In 1805 he made his first bow to a London audience at the Haymarket in the character of 'Zekiel Homespun.' His efforts were crowned with the highest success, and a long list of subsequent performances ratified and increased his popularity. In the same year he removed to Covent Garden, where he remained till 1823, when he accepted an engagement at Drury Lane. His famous character of 'Paul Pry,' first performed in 1825, created at the time an extraordinary sensation. In 1831 Madame Vestris engaged him at the enormous salary of £100 a week for the Olympic Theatre, where he remained six seasons, and then retired from the stage, with a considerable fortune. He died in London 22 March, 1846.

LISTON, ROBERT, F.R.S., an eminent surgeon, born at Ecclesmachan, co. Linlithgow, 28 Oct., 1794. After completing his professional studies, he established himself as a surgeon in Edinburgh (1817), and delivered lectures, first on anatomy, and afterwards on surgery, from 1822 to 1834. He speedily rose to eminence both as a lecturer and as an operator, having in the latter capacity few rivals and no superior. In 1834 he was appointed surgeon to the North London Hospital; and subsequently professor of clinical surgery in University College. His London practice was extensive, his name had become familiar in every medical school of Europe and America, when his career was suddenly terminated by death 7 Dec., 1847. His work on the 'Elements of Surgery' went through several editions.

LITHGOW, WILLIAM, a Scotch pedestrian traveller, born in the parish of Lanark between 1580 and 1590. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, he was thrown into the inquisition in Spain, and so cruelly tortured, as to be deprived of the use of his limbs. On regaining his liberty and coming to England, he published an account of his adventures, which he presented to James I. He also wrote a narrative of the siege of Breda, and died about 1645. His 'Poetical Remains' were first collected and edited by James Maidment, 4to., Edinb., 1863.

LITTLETON, ADAM, D.D., was born at Hales Owen, Shropshire, 8 Nov., 1627. He was educated at Westminster School; from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, but was expelled by the parliamentary visitors 1648. After this he became usher of Westminster School; and in 1670, on being made chaplain to the king, he accumulated his degrees in divinity. In 1674 he was presented to the rectory of Chelsea; and he also obtained a prebendal stall at Westminster, of which church he became sub-dean. Dr. Littleton published a Latin Dictionary, and some grammatical treatises, sermons, and other works. Died 30 June, 1694.

LITTLETON, EDWARD, Lord Littleton of Mounslow, lord-keeper of the great seal, was descended from the celebrated judge, and born at Henley, Shropshire, 1589. He became a commoner of Christ Church, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple. He succeeded his father as a Welsh judge; after which he became recorder of London. In 1634 he was appointed solicitor-general; in 1639 made chief-justice of the Common Pleas, and the next year he received the great seal, with the title of Lord Littleton of Mounslow. He died at Oxford 27 Aug., 1645. His Reports were printed 1683.

LITTLETON, EDWARD, LL.D., was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge (LL.D. 1728). He became assistant at Eton School, afterwards fellow of the college, and vicar of Maple-burham, in Oxfordshire, where he died 1734. A volume of his discourses was printed for the benefit of his widow and daughters. He also wrote some poems, which are in Dodsley's Collection.

LITTLETON, or LYTTLETON, Sir THOMAS, a great lawyer, was the son of Thomas Westcote, of the county of Devon, by Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Littleton, of Frankley, in Worcester-shire; in compliance with whose wish this son took the maternal name and arms. He studied in the Temple, and was appointed by Henry VI. judge of the Marshalsea; in 1455 made king's sergeant and a judge of the assize; in 1466 nominated one of the justices of the Common Pleas; and, in 1475, created knight of the Bath. Died 23 Aug., 1487. He wrote in Norman French a celebrated treatise on Tenures for the use of his son Richard, who was also a distinguished lawyer. The first edition of it is supposed to have been printed a little after the author's death, in folio, at Rouen. Sir Edward Coke's commentary on this famous work is well known. A new edition of the 'Tenures,' in English, was published by H. Roscoe, 1825.

LIVERPOOL, CHARLES JENKINSON, EARL OF, was the eldest son of Colonel Jenkinson, the younger brother of Sir Robert Jenkinson, baronet. He was born 16 May, 1727, and had his education at the Charterhouse; from whence he removed to University College, Oxford (M.A. 1752). In 1761 he obtained a seat in parliament, and was appointed under-secretary of State. In 1766 he was nominated a lord of the Admiralty; from which board he removed to the Treasury. In 1772 he was made joint vice-treasurer of Ireland, which he exchanged for the clerkship of the peels. In 1778 he became secretary at war, and in 1784 president of the Board of Trade. In 1786 he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Hawkesbury, and in 1796 to the earldom of Liverpool. Died 17 Dec., 1808. His lordship published, A Discourse on the Establishment of a National and Constitutional Force in England; A Discourse on the Conduct of Great Britain in respect to Neutral Nations during War; A Collection of Treaties, 3 vols.; A Treatise on the Coins of the Realm, 1805.

LIVERPOOL, ROBERT BANKS JENKINSON, EARL OF, son of the preceding, was born 7 June, 1770, and was sent from the Charterhouse to Christ Church, Oxford, where he formed a lasting friendship with Canning. Making the 'grand tour,' he witnessed the capture of the Bastille, and while yet a minor obtained a seat in parliament as member for Appleby. His maiden speech (1791) was in defence of the armaments with which Pitt threatened resistance to Russian aggressions in Turkey, and was a decided success. In the following session he advocated immediate war with France, and deprecated any negotiations with a 'band of sanguinary ruffians.' He also showed his hereditary conservatism by opposing Earl Grey's motion for parliamentary reform. In 1793 he was appointed one of the commissioners of the India Board. He assumed the title of Lord Hawkesbury, the second title of his father, who had just been created earl of Liverpool. Subsequently he became master of the Mint, and when George III.'s repugnance to Catholic Emancipation caused Pitt's resignation, he adhered to Addington, and was entrusted with the seals of the Foreign Office (1801). He directed the diplomacy which resulted in the peace of Amiens. In 1803 he was transferred to the Upper House as Lord Hawkesbury, and on Pitt's return to power he became its leader, though shifted to the Home Office. On the death of Pitt (1806) he declined the premiership, but was appointed by the king, as a mark of esteem, lord warden of the Cinque Ports. On the formation of the duke of Portland's administration (1807) he returned to the Home Office, but was transferred to the war department on Perceval's succession to the premiership. He succeeded his father in the earldom (1808), and immediately after the assassination of Mr Perceval (1812) he became prime minister. His administration lasted, with no considerable changes, until a short time before his decease. Their foreign policy was crowned with success, and resulted in the treaty of Paris (1815), but their domestic policy is open to grave censure, especially in respect to the postponement of the claims of the Catholics. On 27 Feb., 1827, his lordship was seized with a fit of paralysis and apoplexy, and after lingering several months in a state of mental imbecility, he died 4 Dec., 1828. An account of his Life and Administration, by Charles Duke Yonge, was published in 3 vols., 1808.

LIVINGSTON, JAMES, earl of Calendar. See CALENDAR.

LIVINGSTON, JOHN, a Scotch presbyterian divine, born in Stirlingshire 21 Jan., 1603, and educated at Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.A. He was banished from Scotland 1603, for refusing to take the oath of allegiance, on which he went to Rotterdam, where he died 9 Aug., 1672. His 'Remarkable Observations upon the Lives of the most Eminent Ministers and Professors in the Church of Scotland' were printed, with his Memoirs, 1754.

LIVIUS, TITUS, a Roman historian, was born of an illustrious family at Patavium, now Padua, B.C. 59. He lived at Rome in the reign of Augustus, to whom he dedicated some dialogues upon philosophy, which are lost. After collecting his materials for the History of Rome he retired to Naples, that he might have more leisure to compose the work than he could enjoy in a distracted capital. It is said, however, that he read portions of the history to Mæcenas and Augustus. On the death of the latter he returned to his native place, where he died A.D. 17, at the age of seventy-six. The history of Livy originally consisted of one hundred and forty-two books, of which only thirty-five are extant. The first edition is that of Rome, printed by Sweyngham and Pannartz in 1469, and the best that of Gronovius, in 3 vols. 8vo., 1679. The best English translation is by George Baker, 6 vols. 8vo., 1797.

LLORENTE, JUAN ANTONIO, a Spanish ecclesiastic, born near Calahorra 30 March, 1756. He was secretary-general of the Inquisition, and attached himself to Joseph Bonaparte 1808, on whose fall he went to France, 1814. Died 5 Feb., 1823. He wrote a History of the Spanish Inquisition; Memoirs concerning the Revolution in Spain; and other works.

LLOYD, CHARLES, D.D., a prelate of the Church of England, born 26 Sept., 1784. From Eton he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, of which society he became, in due time, tutor and censor. He succeeded Dr. Hodgson as regius professor of divinity 1822; was promoted to the see of Oxford 1827; and died 31 May, 1829. Dr. Lloyd, to his credit be it recorded, was a warm supporter of the Catholic Relief Bill. He brought out an edition of the Greek Testament, and edited a work, published long after his death, and entitled 'Formularies of Faith put forth by authority during the Reign of Henry VIII., viz. Articles about Religion, 1536. The Institution of a Christian Man, 1537. A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for a Christian Man,' 8vo., Oxford, 1826. A copy of Hephæstion's Enchiridion, with copious MS. notes by him, is in the British Museum.

LLOYD, CHARLES, an English poet, the friend of Wordsworth, Lamb, and Southey, was the son of

LLOYD.

Charles Lloyd, a banker, of Birmingham. He was born in that town 1775, and after being privately educated under a Mr. Gilpin, was admitted a fellow-commoner of Caius College, Cambridge; but he quitted the university without taking a degree. He died at Chaillot, near Paris, 16 Jan., 1839. His works are 'Poems on Various Subjects,' 1795; 'Blank Verse, by Charles Lloyd and Charles Lamb,' 1798; 'Poetical Essays on the Character of Pope, as a poet and moralist; and on the language and objects most fit for poetry,' 1821; 'Desultory Thoughts in London; Titus and Gisippus; with other Poems,' 2 vols., 1821; 'The Duke d'Ormond, a tragedy, and Beritola, a tale,' 1822; 'Poems,' 1823.

LLOYD, DAVID, a biographer, was born at Part Mawr, in the parish of Trarwsvynnyd, Merionethshire, 28 Sept., 1625. He took his degrees at Oriel College, Oxford; after which he was presented to the rectory of Ibston, but resigned it to settle in London, where he became reader of the Charterhouse. Afterwards he obtained a prebend of St. Asaph, and the vicarage of Abergeley, which last he exchanged for that of Northpe, in Flintshire, where also he kept school. Died 16 Feb., 1691. His principal works are, 'The Statesmen and Favourites of England since the Reformation; Memoirs of the Lives of Persons who suffered for their Loyalty; Life of General Monk; Portraiture of Charles II.; The Countess of Bridgewater's Ghost; 'History of Plots and Conspiracies,' published with the name of Foulis; 'Wonders no Miracles, or Mr. Valentine Greatrakes's Gift of Healing examined. His 'Memoirs of Statesmen' were reprinted by Charles Whitworth, 2 vols. 8vo., 1760, with an account of the author.

LLOYD, HENRY, a writer on military tactics, born in Wales 1729. Appointed aide-de-camp to the Austrian General Lascy, he served during the Seven Years' War, rose to the rank of lieutenant-general, and in 1760 was placed at the head of a large detachment in order to observe the movements of the Prussian army. Disappointed, however, in his expectations of advancement, he joined the Prussian army, and became general aide-de-camp to the prince of Brunswick. After the peace he went to St. Petersburg, and obtained from the Empress Catharine the grade of major-general and a command in the army sent against the Turks. He greatly distinguished himself as a tactician, and was about to be placed at the head of 30,000 men in Finland, when the peace concluded with Sweden rendered it unnecessary to form an army. On quitting the Russian service he travelled in various countries on the Continent, and paid a furtive visit to England, which he was soon obliged to leave, though not before he had, by clandestine explorations, acquired a profound knowledge of our coasts and the points most open to attack. Retiring to Huy, in Belgium, he died there 19 June, 1783. His principal work is 'The History of the late War in Germany, between the King of Prussia and the Empress of Germany and her Allies 1757-59,' 3 vols. 4to., London, 1760-90. This is one of the best accounts of any campaign ever printed.

LLOYD, NICHOLAS, an historical writer, born at Holton, Flintshire, 1634, and educated at Winchester School; after which he went to Wadham College, Oxford, of which he became fellow. The bishop of Worcester, to whom he was chaplain, presented him to the rectory of St. Mary, Newington, in Surrey, where he died 27 Nov., 1680. He published an Historical Dictionary in Latin, folio, 1670; reprinted 1686.

LLOYD, ROBERT, a poet, born in Westminster 1733. His father, Dr. Pierson Lloyd, was for nearly fifty years usher of Westminster School, where also this son was educated, after which he went to Trinity College, Cambridge. Having completed his degrees in arts, he became an assistant in the school where he had been bred, but lost the situation, and died in the Fleet 15 Dec., 1764. He was the companion of Wilkes and Churchill, to which association he was indebted for his misfortunes. His poems are now forgotten.

LLOYD, WILLIAM, a learned prelate, born at Tilehurst, Berks, 1627. He became a student of Oriel College, Oxford, but afterwards removed to Jesus College, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1667 he was collated to a prebend in the church of Sarum, on which he completed his degrees in divinity. The year following he was presented to the vicarage of St. Mary's, Reading, and about the same time made archdeacon of Merioneth. In 1672 he was promoted to the deanery of Bangor, and, in 1674, to a canonry of Salisbury. In 1676 he obtained the vicarage of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, and in 1680 was elevated the see of St. Asaph. He was one of the seven bishops prosecuted by James II.; but in the next reign he was translated to Worcester. Died 30 Aug., 1717. He wrote several pieces against the Catholic religion; a Dissertation on Daniel's Prophecy of the seventy Weeks; a Discourse of God's Way of disposing Kingdoms; and an Historical Account of Church Government; a Chronological Account of Pythagoras; a Harmony of the Gospels; and several other works.

LOBAU, GEORGE MOUTON Comte DE, a marshal of France, born at Phalsbourg 1770. He became a general of division 1807, and greatly distinguished himself at Eckmühl and Wagram. After the battle of Leipsic he was sent into Hungary by the Austrians, in spite of the capitulation of Dresden. He returned, however, to France in the following year; fought at Waterloo; and was exiled under the Restoration. He was elected to the chamber of deputies 1828. At the revolution of 1830 he was transferred to the chamber of peers, created a marshal, and appointed to succeed La Fayette in the command of the national guard. Died 20 Nov., 1838. 'Lobau,' said Napoleon, 'was the best colonel that ever commanded a French regiment.'

LOBB, THEOPHILUS, a physician, was the son of Stephen Lobb, a dissenting minister, who was much in the confidence of James II. The son was born in London 17 Aug., 1678, and educated for the ministry, which profession he quitted to study physic. He died 19 May, 1763, leaving several works on medical and religious subjects.

LOBEIRA, VASCO, the original author of the famous romance of 'Amadis of Gaul,' was born in Portugal about 1270, and died 1325.

LOBEL, MATTHIAS DE, a botanist, born at Lisle 1538. He studied physic at Montpellier, and afterwards settled in London, where he had the superintendance of the garden of Lord Zouch, at Hackney. He died 3 March, 1616. Lobel published, 'Stirpium Adversaria nova,' 1570; 'Plantarum seu Stirpium Historia,' Antwerp, 1576; and 'Icones Stirpium,' 1581 and 1591, with an Index in seven languages. Plumier dedicated to him the genus 'Lobelia.'

LOBINEAU, GUI ALEXIS, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born in 1606 at Rennes, and died at the abbey of St. Jagut, near St. Malo, 3 June, 1727. He published, 'A History of Brittany; A History of the Saints of Brittany; A History of the Conquest of Spain by the Moors; and A History of Paris.'

LOBO, JEROME, a Jesuit, born at Lisbon 1593. He went as a missionary to Abyssinia, and, on his return to Europe, became rector of the college of Coimbra, where he died 29 Jan., 1678. He wrote 'An Account of Abyssinia;' of which Dr. Johnson published an abridged translation 1735.

LOCK, MATTHEW, a musician, was born at Exeter, where he became a chorister in the cathedral. He published some musical pieces in 1657, and, after the Restoration, he was employed as a composer of operas. He was also appointed composer to the chapel royal. He died in communion with the Catholic Church 1077. His vocal music is much admired.

LOCKE, JOHN, was born at Wrington, in Somersetshire, where his father was a lawyer and steward, 29 Aug., 1632. He received his education at Westminster School, from whence he was elected in 1652 to Christ Church, Oxford, where he had a studentship, and took his degree of M.A. 1658. He then applied himself to the study of physic, in which he graduated 1674. Though he did not enter upon regular practice, his advice was often solicited in difficult cases, particularly by the earl of Shaftesbury, with whom he formed a close connexion, and became tutor to his son. In 1675 he went to France, and, while at Montpellier, paid particular attention to the culture of the vine, and the rearing of silkworms. When Lord Shaftesbury withdrew to Holland, Mr. Locke followed him, for which he was deprived of his student's place by an order from the king. During his residence abroad he wrote in Latin his 'Letter on Toleration,' printed at Gouva 1689. He there finished also his 'Essay on the Human Understanding,' an abridgment of which was inserted by Le Clerc in the 'Bibliothèque Universelle.' Locke returned to England in the same fleet with the prince of Orange, and soon afterwards published his 'Essay,' which was followed by 'Considerations on the Consequences of lowering the Interest and raising the Value of Money.' He now went to reside at Oates, in Essex, the seat of Sir Francis Masham, whose lady, the daughter of Dr. Cudworth, entertained for him the greatest respect. In 1693 he published his 'Thoughts on Education;' and in 1695 his treatise on 'The Reasonableness of Christianity;' which was attacked by Dr. Edwards, of Cambridge, and defended by Mr. Samuel Bold. But the most powerful assailant of this work was Bishop Stillingfleet, in reply to whom our author wrote several letters. About this time he was appointed one of the commissioners of trade and plantations; which place, however, he resigned 1700. He died at Oates 28 Oct., 1704. Besides the works already noticed, he wrote, 'Two Treatises concerning Civil Government; Observations on the Value of Money; and A Paraphrase on the Epistles.' His works have been several times published in a collected form, and his Life has been written by Lord King, 4to., 1820; 2 vols. 8vo., 1830; 1 vol. 8vo., 1828.

LOCKE, JOSEPH, F.R.S., a civil engineer, was born at Attencliffe, near Sheffield, 1805, and educated at Bursley Grammar School, after which he was placed with George Stephenson at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, under whom he was employed in the construction of the Manchester and Liverpool railway. In conjunction with the Stephenson he was instrumental in determining the superior capabilities of the locomotive. Subsequently he constructed the railways between Warrington and Birmingham, Lancaster and Preston, Sheffield and Manchester, London and Southampton; besides several lines on the Continent, all his works being carried out with great economy. Mr. Locke, who received the decoration of the legion of honour 1845, was president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and M.P. for Honiton from 1847 till his death, which occurred at Moffat, in Annandale, 18 Sept., 1860.

LOCKER, JOHN, F.S.A., was born of a good family in Middlesex, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he removed to Merton College, Oxford, and was afterwards called to the bar at Gray's Inn. He translated the first two books of Voltaire's Life of Charles XII., and wrote the preface. He also made collections for a life of Lord Bacon, which he communicated to Dr. Birch and Mr. Mallet. Died May, 1760.

LOCKHART, JOHN GIBSON, LL.D., a critic, novelist, and biographer, was born in Glasgow 1793, and being sent to the university there he was elected to one of the Snell exhibitions, or bursaries, at Balliol College, Oxford. He was admitted a Scotch advocate 1816, but very soon abandoned the law in order to devote himself exclusively to literary pursuits. In 1817 Blackwood's Magazine was established, and he shortly afterwards became a regular contributor to its pages. The next year he formed an acquaintance with Mr. (afterwards Sir Walter) Scott, whose daughter Sophia he subsequently married (1820). The result of this first interview was that he succeeded Scott as the writer of the historical portion of the 'Edinburgh Annual Register.' In 1819 he published what he himself calls 'a sort of mock tour in Scotland,' entitled 'Peter's Letters to his Kinstolk,' which gave rise to much angry feeling at the time. The literary portraits contained in this work are remarkable for their substantial truth and their never-failing force and vivacity. Besides, month after month, contributing some of its most biting and brilliant papers to 'Blackwood,' Mr. Lockhart published four admirable fictions, viz.: 'Valerius, a Roman Story,' 1221; 'Adam Blair, a tale,' 1822, considered the most impressive production of the author's versatile pen; 'Reginald Dalton,' a graceful and vigorous tale, 1823; and the deeply interesting chapters of 'Matthew Wald,' 1824. His translations of 'Ancient Spanish Ballads' appeared in 1823. To 'Constable's Miscellany' he contributed the 'Life of Burns,' 1828, and to 'Murray's Family Library,' the 'History of Napoleon Bonaparte,' 2 vols., 1830. While on a visit to London in 1821, having been made the subject of some severe remarks in the 'London Magazine,' a hostile correspondence ensued between him and Mr. John Scott, the editor, which ended in Mr. Lockhart's posting him. Statements on the subject were published by both parties. After Lockhart's return to Scotland, Mr. Christie, his friend, fought a duel with Mr. Scott, who was mortally wounded. In 1825 Mr. Lockhart accompanied his illustrious father-in-law in his excursion to Ireland. Up to the close of that year he resided at Edinburgh, having his summer residence at Chiefswood, in the neighbourhood of Abbotsford; but being, on the death of Mr. Gifford, appointed editor of the 'Quarterly Review,' he came to reside in Regent's Park, London. That great literary journal he continued to edit for twenty-eight years. On the death of Sir Walter Scott (1832), he became his sole literary executor, and in 1837-8, published a Life of his father-in-law, in 7 vols., which is one of the most interesting biographies in the language. His health having begun to decline, he quitted the charge of the 'Quarterly' in the summer of 1853, and spent the subsequent winter in Italy. Shortly before his death he retired from London to the quiet seclusion of Abbotsford, where he died 25 Aug., 1854.—Anderson.

LOCKMAN, JOHN, a miscellaneous writer, born 1698. He became secretary to the British herring fishery, and died in London 2 Feb., 1771. Mr. Lockman had a share in compiling the General Historical Dictionary; and he also published some dramatic pieces and poems.

LOCKWOOD, JOHN, an English Catholic priest, who, being condemned to death on account of his sacerdotal character, was hanged at York 13 April, 1642, being then 87 years of age.

LODER, EDWARD J., an English musical composer, died 5 April, 1865.

LODGE, EDMUND, K.H., F.S.A., a biographer, was born in London 13 June, 1756, and served in the army for a short time, but having a distaste for the military profession, he entered the College of Arms 1782, as Bluenant pursuivant. He was appointed Lancaster herald 1793; Norroy king-at-arms 1822; Clarenceux king-at-arms 1838; and died 16 Jan., 1839. His works are 'Illustrations of British History, Biography, and Manners, in the Reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, Elizabeth, and James I.,' 3 vols., 1791, and again 1838; the biographical notices in Chamberlaine's 'Portraits of Illustrious Persons of the Court of Henry VIII.,' 1792-1800; 'Life of Sir Julius Cesar,' 1810 and 1827; 'Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain, with biographical and historical memoirs of their lives and actions,' a magnificent work, originally published in 4 vols. folio, 1821-34, at the price of 86l. 15s.; second edition, 12 vols. 8vo., 1835; fourth edition, 10 vols. 8vo., 1840-50. From motives of benevolence, Mr. Lodge lent his name to an annual 'Peerage,' but that work was not compiled by him.

LODGE, THOMAS, M.D., a dramatic poet, was born about 1556, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford; from whence, being a Catholic, he went to Avignon, where he took his degree of doctor of physic, and then settled in London. He died 1625. He wrote some plays, in conjunction with Robert Green, and the following works, Alarm again Usurers; History of Tribonius and Priscaria; Euphues' Golden Legacy; Treatise of the Plague; Countess of Lincoln's Nursery; Treatise in Defence of Plays. He also translated Josephus and Seneca into English. A full list of his numerous writings will be found in Bohn's edition of Lowndes.

LODGE, WILLIAM, an engraver, born 4 July, 1640, at Leeds, where he died Aug., 1689. He was educated at Cambridge.

LOFFT, CAPEL, was born in London 14 Nov., 1751. His father was a barrister, and his mother the sister of Edward Cape, the commentator on Shakspere. In 1759 he was sent to Eton, where he continued ten years, and then removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge, which he left in a short time, and was admitted a student of Lincoln's Inn. In 1775 he was called to the bar, but never distinguished himself in the legal profession, though he published 'Cases in the King's Bench,' 'Elements of Universal Law,' and Baron Gilbert's 'Law of Evidence,' with additions. He was a voluminous writer, and upon a great variety of subjects, political, poetical, theological, and critical. On the death of his uncle he succeeded to the estate of Troston, Suffolk, which he made his residence till the year 1816, when he went abroad, principally with a view to the education of his daughters, which he thought would be conducted better on the Continent than in England. Accordingly he went first to Brussels, next to the neighbourhood of Nanci, and in 1820 to Switzerland. In 1822 he removed to Turin, where he resided till the spring of 1824, when he went to Montcaler, at which place he died on 26 May of that year. His attainments were considerable, but he was pedantic and opinionative. In politics he was a zealous Whig, and in his religious sentiments a Socinian. To him the public were indebted for the appearance of 'The Farmer's Boy,' by Robert Bloomfield, which work he printed at his own expense, with a biographical preface.

LOFTUS, ADAM, D.D., a native of Yorkshire, became archbishop of Armagh 1622, whence he was translated to Dublin 8 Aug., 1667. Died 6 April, 1695, aged 72.

LOFTUS, DUDLEY, an orientalist, born 1618, at Rathfarnham, near Dublin. He was the second son of Sir Adam Loftus, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he went to Oxford, where he studied the law. On his return to Ireland he was made a master in chancery, vicar-general, and judge of the Prerogative Court. He died in June, 1695. He translated the Æthiopic New Testament into Latin for Walton's Polyglott; and published, 'The Psalms of David, translated from the Armenian into Latin; A History of the Eastern and Western Churches; An Explication of the History of our Saviour taken from the Greek, Syriac, and other oriental authors, 1695.

LOGAN, JOHN, a divine and poet, born in 1748, at Fala, in Mid Lothian. He was educated at Edinburgh, and in 1773 became minister of Scotch Leith. In 1779 he delivered a course of lectures at Edinburgh, on the philosophy of history, of which he published an outline in 1781, and the same year a volume of poems. He next printed the tragedy of 'Runnabede.' In 1786 he came to London, and was engaged as a writer in the 'English Review.' He also published, without his name, 'A Review of the Charges against Mr. Hastings,' for which the bookseller was prosecuted and acquitted. Died 28 Dec., 1788. His sermons were printed in 4 vols., 1790; 5th edition 1807.

LOGAU, FREDERICK, BARON VON, a German poet, born in Silesia 1004; died at Lignitz 1665.

LOGGAN, DAVID, an engraver, born at Dantzic about 1635. He came to this country before the Restoration, and died in London 1693 or 1700. His 'Oxonia Illustrata,' 1675, and 'Cantabrigia Illustrata,' will perpetuate his name.

LOK, MICHAEL, was born 1532, being the son of Sir William Lok, alderman of London. He received his education in Flanders and France, and travelled during thirty-two years through almost all the countries of Christendom, having been captain of a ship of 1,000 tons in divers voyages to the Levant. Lok was intimately connected with Frobisher in his three celebrated voyages. He advanced £6,250 for Frobisher's voyages, and expected great things of the ore which Frobisher brought home. However, it turned out in the end that in two cwt. of the ore only two particles of silver were found, which were not nearly as big as a pin's head. Lok is last heard of as a petitioner from the Fleet Prison in 1581.

LOKMAN, an Eastern fabulist, of whose history absolutely nothing is known. His 'Fables,' written in Arabic, were first printed by Erpenius 1615, and have since gone through innumerable editions.

LOLLARD, WALTER, founder of the sect of the Lollards, was, according to some, an Englishman. His opinions were first disseminated in Germany 1315, and afterwards in Piedmont and in England. He was burnt as a heretic at Cologne 1322. The followers of Lollard believed that the Sacrifice of the Mass, Baptism, and Extreme Unction, were superfluous. They renounced obedience to all magistrates, and endeavoured to persuade themselves that God would not punish faults committed on the earth.

LOMAZZO, JOHN PAUL, an Italian painter and poet, born at Milan 26 April, 1538; died after 1591. His 'Treatise on Painting' is an admirable work.

LOMBARD, JEAN LOUIS, a French military engineer and writer on gunnery, born at Strasburg 1723; died 1 April, 1794.

LOMBARD, PETER, an eminent divine, called also 'The Master of the Sentences,' was born at Novara, in Lombardy. He distinguished himself so much by his learning in the university of Paris, as to be appointed canon of Chartres, and afterwards bishop of Paris about 1159. Died 1164. His excellent work of 'The Sentences,' first printed at Venice 1477, contains an illustration of the doctrines of the church, in a collection of sentences or passages taken from the Fathers. It may, indeed, be regarded as the source and origin of scholastic divinity in the Latin Church. Commentaries upon it have been written by many celebrated men, including William of Auxerre, Albert the Great, St. Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, Okam, and Estius.

LOMBARD, PETER, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, was the son of a merchant in the city of Waterford. He studied for a short time in Westminster School under the famous William Camden, and then proceeded to the university of Louvain, where he took the degree of D.D., and delivered theological lectures with great success. He was preferred to the dignity of provost of Cambrai, and in 1598 succeeded Edmund MacGauran as archbishop of Armagh; but owing to the troubled condition of Ireland at that period, he never visited his province, which he governed by the agency of a vicar-general. Removing to Rome, he was nominated domestic prelate to Clement VIII., and was finally entrusted with the presidency of the congregation 'De Auxiliis,' by Paul IV. He died at Rome about 1625. His works are 'Casus circa Decretum Clementis Papæ VIII., de Sacramentali Confessione et Absolutione non faciendâ in absentia,' 12mo., Antwerp, 1624; 'De Regno LOMBARDI, ALFONSO, an Italian sculptor, born at Ferrara 1487; died 1536.

LOMBART, LAMBERT, a painter, born at Liege 1509, died 1560.

LOMBART, PETER, an engraver, resided many years in London, and died after the Restoration. He executed a number of portraits, after Vandyck.

LOMÈNE, HENRI LOUIS DE, count de Brienne, was born 1635. He was secretary of state, which place he resigned on the death of his wife, and entered into the society of the Oratory. In 1672 he went to the court of the duke of Mecklenburg, where he fell in love with the princess, and had the boldness to avow his passion, for which he was driven out of the principality; and on his return to France shut up in an abbey, where he died 17 April, 1698. He wrote an Account of his Travels, in Latin; Recueil de Poésies, 3 vols.; Remarques sur les Règles de la Poésie Française.

LOMÈNE DE BRIENNE, ÉTIENNE CHARLES, a cardinal, born at Paris 1727. He became bishop of Condom 1769, and archbishop of Toulouse 1763. In 1787 he was appointed comptroller-general of the finances, and shortly afterwards prime minister; but his conduct while holding these exalted situations was characterized by lamentable rashness, weakness, inconsistency, and blundering. The king dismissed him 1788, but gave him the archbishopric of Sens, and procured for him a cardinal's hat. At the Revolution he shamelessly declared for the new order of things, and sent his hat back to the Pope. In spite of this, however, he fell a victim to the revolution, for the soldiers sent to arrest him on 16 Feb., 1794, treated him in such a way that he was found dead in his bed the following morning.

LOMONOZOF, MICHAEL VASILEVITCH, a celebrated Russian poet and historian, born 1711; died 4 April, 1765.

LONDONDERRY, CHARLES WILLIAM STEWART VANE, third MARQUIS OF, brother of Lord Castlereagh, was born in Dublin 18 May, 1778. At the age of fifteen, as ensign of an infantry regiment, he accompanied the earl of Moira to the Netherlands, and took part in the campaign of 1794. Subsequently, while attached to the British mission at Vienna, he was severely wounded at the battle of Donauwerth. During the Irish rebellion of 1798 he commanded a regiment of dragoons, as he also did in the expedition to Egypt, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, in the course of which he was again dangerously wounded. He next commanded a hussar brigade under Sir John Moore in Spain, and covered the retreat of the British army at Corunna with great skill and valour. After a few months' absence, he returned to the Peninsula, and until May 1813, held the post of adjutant-general under Sir Arthur Wellesley, signaling himself at Busaco, Talavera, Fuentes d'Onoro, Badajoz, and elsewhere. During the campaign of 1814, in which he was made a lieutenant-general, he performed the duties of military commissioner of the armies of the allied sovereigns; and in the same year was appointed ambassador to Austria, having previously exercised similar functions at the court of Berlin. His participation in the congress of Vienna (1815) as one of the five British plenipotentiaries was the last act of importance of his life. In 1814 he was raised to the peerage as Lord Stewart; in 1822, on the death of his brother, he succeeded to the marquissate of Londonderry; and in 1823 he was created Earl Vane, he having in 1819 contracted a second marriage with the only daughter of Sir Harry Vane Tempest, and assumed the name of Vane. In 1837 he attained the rank of general. With the view of developing the agricultural and mineral resources of his large estates in the county of Durham, he constructed the harbour of Seaham, one of the most costly and most useful works ever undertaken by private enterprise. In politics he was an uncompromising Tory. As an author he is known by his 'Story of the Peninsular War,' and an edition of the Correspondence of his brother, Lord Castlereagh, 1848.

LONDONDERRY, ROBERT STEWART, second MARQUIS OF, was born in Ireland 18 June, 1769, being the second son of the first marquis. He was educated at Armagh, after which he became a fellow-commoner of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1791 he was chosen into the Irish parliament for the county of Down. At first he joined the opposition, and distinguished himself as an advocate for parliamentary reform; but on obtaining a seat in the British House of Commons he took his seat in the ministerial phalanx. In 1797, being then Lord Castlereagh, he returned to the Irish parliament, and the same year became keeper of the privy seal for that kingdom, being soon afterwards appointed one of the lords of the Treasury. The next year he was nominated secretary to the viceroy; and when the union between Great Britain and Ireland was projected he supported the measure with great eloquence. In the Imperial Parliament he sat as member for the county of Down, and in 1802 was made president of the Board of Control. In 1805 he became secretary for the departments of War and the Colonies; but on vacating his seat he lost his election for the county of Down, and in consequence came in for Boroughbridge. After the death of Pitt he went out of office, but returned to the administration in 1807 as minister of War, which situation he retained until the ill-fated expedition to Walcheren, and a duel with Mr. Canning, drove him from office. In 1812 he succeeded the marquis of Wellesley as foreign secretary, which office he held during the rest of his life. The year following, when the counter-revolution broke out in Holland, Lord Castlereagh went to the Continent to assist the allied powers in negotiating a general peace. The conferences, however, terminated in the resignation of Bonaparte, and the British minister returned to London. For his services on this occasion he received the thanks of parliament, and the order of the Garter from his sovereign. On the death of his father (1821) he succeeded him as marquis of Londonderry; but as this was an Irish peerage he retained his seat in the House of Commons. After a stormy session, in which he laboured hard, his mind was observed to be very much shattered, and his physician was apprised of the circumstance by the duke of Wellington. His lordship, however, was suffered to leave London for his seat at North Cray, in Kent, where, on 12 Aug., 1824, he put an end to his life by severing the carotid artery with a penknife. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey.

LONG, EDWARD, was the son of Samuel Long,

LONG.

Esq., of the island of Jamaica, and born at Rositan, in the parish of St. Blaize, Cornwall, 23 Aug., 1734. He was brought up to the law, and on the death of his father went to the West Indies, where he became a judge of the vice-admiralty court, but returned to England 1769, and died 13 March, 1813. He wrote a 'History of Jamaica,' and some other works.

LONG, GEORGE, an English barrister, for several years one of the police magistrates for the Marylebone district, died in London 26 June, 1868. He was author of several works on questions of morals and religion.

LONG, JOHN ST. JOHN, an empiric, born in Ireland 1798. He was originally a portrait painter, but failing in that profession he settled in London as a medical practitioner, pretending that he alone possessed the secret of curing consumption. In 1830 he was charged with causing the death of one of his patients, found guilty of manslaughter, and fined £250. Died 4 July, 1834.

LONG, ROGER, D.D., a divine and astronomer, was born about 1686, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. In 1733 he was elected master of his college, and in 1749 Lowndes's professor of astronomy. He constructed an immense sphere in Pembroke Hall, eighteen feet diameter, and worked by machinery. Died 16 Dec., 1770. Dr. Long published 'A Treatise on Astronomy,' 2 vols.; an Answer to Dr. Gally, on the Greek accents; and some other pieces.

LONG, THOMAS, B.D., a nonjuring divine, born at Exeter 1621, and educated at Oxford. On leaving the university he obtained the vicarage of St. Lawrence Clist, near Exeter, and he subsequently obtained a prebend of Exeter, but was ejected therefrom at the Revolution. His principal works are, Calvinus Redivivus; History of the Donatists; Vindication of the Primitive Christians in Point of Obedience; History of Popish and fanatical Plots; A Vindication of King Charles's Claim to the Eikon Basilike.

LONGHI, GIUSEPPE, an Italian engraver, born at Monza, near Milan, 13 Oct., 1766; died in the latter city 2 Jan., 1831.

LONGINUS, DIONYSIUS CASSIUS, a Greek writer, who, according to some, was a native of Athens, while others say he was a Syrian. In his younger years he was a great traveller, after which he fixed his residence at Athens, where he published his admirable Treatise on the Sublime. The reputation he acquired by this work induced Zenobia, queen of the East, to appoint him tutor to her two sons; but when that princess became involved in a war with Aurelian, Longinus was taken prisoner with her and put to death A.D. 273. The best editions of his work are those of Pearce, 1724; Toup, 1778; and Weiske, 1809. Dr. Smith has translated it faithfully into English.

LONGLAND, JOHN, an English prelate, was born 1473, at Henley, Oxfordshire. He received his education at Magdalen College, Oxford, of which society he became fellow. In 1514 he was made dean of Salisbury, and he was also appointed confessor to Henry VIII., who gave him the bishopric of Lincoln in 1521. He was a liberal benefactor to the university of Oxford, of which he was chancellor; and though he evinced zeal against heresy, he advocated the divorce of the king. He died 7 May, 1547. Some of his sermons are in print.

LONGLAND, or LANGLAND, ROBERT, an old English poet, was a native of Mortimer's Cleobury,

LONSDALE.

Shropshire. He was a fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, and a secular priest, but espoused the doctrines of Wycliffe. His 'Visions of Piers Plowman' is full of severe reflections on the clergy, and exhibits a curious picture of the times. It was completed in 1369, and has been frequently printed.

LONGLEY, CHARLES THOMAS, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Boley Hill, Rochester, 28 July, 1794, and educated at Westminster School, whence he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, of which society he became tutor and censor. In 1827 he left the university on being inducted to the rectory of West Tytherly, Hants. He was head master of Harrow School from 1829 to 1836, when he was appointed the first bishop of the newly-created see of Kipon. He succeeded Dr. Maltby as bishop of Durham 1856; was translated to York 1860; and in 1862 was promoted to the primatial see of Canterbury, which he held till his death on 27 Oct., 1868. He published nothing but some visitation charges and sermons.

LONGOLIUS. See LONGUEIL.

LONGOMONTANUS, CHRISTIAN, an astronomer, was born at Longomontum, in Denmark, whence he had his name, 1562. He was the son of a ploughman, and was obliged to earn his bread by labour when very young, notwithstanding which he studied hard and, with the assistance of the minister of the parish, acquired a good knowledge of the mathematics. At last he became a servitor in the college of Wibur, the professors of which university recommended him to Tycho Brahe, with whom he lived eleven years. In 1605 he was made mathematical professor at Copenhagen where he died 8 Oct., 1647. He was the author of several works, of which the principal is his 'Astronomia Danica.'

LONGUEIL, CHRISTOPHER DE, Longolius, a learned writer, born at Meclhin 1490. On visiting Rome he was made secretary to Leo X. who employed him to write against Luther. He afterwards settled at Padua, where he resided with Cardinal Pole, to whom he bequeathed his library, and who wrote his life. Died 11 Sept., 1522. Some of his orations and letters, written in Ciceronian Latin, are in print, but his commentary on Pliny the Elder is lost.

LONGUERUE, LOUIS D'FOUR, Abbé DE, a French ecclesiastic, born at Charleville 1652. He discovered uncommon powers of genius at the age of four years, and acquired afterwards great knowledge of the oriental languages. He obtained two abbey, and died at Paris 22 Nov., 1733. Among his works are, A Discourse on Tatian; Description Historique de la France; Annales Arsacidarum; Treatise on Transubstantiation; Longuerana.

LONGUEVAL, JACQUES, a French Jesuit, author of a 'History of the Gallican Church,' was born at Santeur, in Picardy, 1680; and died at Paris 11 Jan., 1735.

LONGUS, a Greek sophist of the fourth or fifth century, of whose works nothing remains but four books of pastorals on the loves of Daphnis and Cloe. These have been translated into English.

LONSDALE, JOHN, an English prelate, was the eldest son of John Lonsdale, vicar of Darfield, near Barnsley, Yorkshire, and was born 17 Jan. 1788. He was educated at the grammar school of Heath, near Halifax, whence he proceeded to Eton. In due course he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1821 he was elected Christian advocate, and in the same year was appointed assistant-preacher at the Temple Church. His discourses preached before the university of Cambridge, while holding the former office, were 'Some Popular Objections against Christianity Considered, and the General Character of Unbelief Represented;' and 'The Testimonies of Nature, Reason, and Revelation respecting Future Judgments.' In 1822 he was selected by Dr. Manners Sutton, archbishop of Canterbury, to be one of his grace's domestic chaplains, and for a time held a similar office under his successor, Archbishop Howley. He resigned the chaplaincy on being collated by the archbishop to the rectory of Mersham, near Ashford, Kent. In 1828 Lord Lyndhurst, then lord chancellor, presented him to the metropolitan rectory of St. George's, Bloomsbury, which he held until 1835, when he was elected preacher of Lincoln's Inn. Meanwhile he had become precentor and canon residentiary of Lichfield Cathedral, and principal of King's College, London, a post which he held (during part of the time with the archdeaconry of Middlesex) until 1833, when he was consecrated bishop of Lichfield. Died 19 Oct., 1867.

LORRAIN, ROBERT LE, a French sculptor, born at Paris 1666; died 1 July, 1743.

LORRAINE, CHARLES DE, a celebrated cardinal, son of Claude de Lorraine, first duke of Guise, was born at Joinville 17 Feb., 1545. He distinguished himself by his learning and eloquence, was archbishop of Rheims and Narbonne, and minister of state. Cardinal de Lorraine declared with great zeal against the Calvinists, assisted in a distinguished manner at the colloquy of Poissy and the council of Trent, and held a provincial council at Rheims on his return 1564. He was much concerned in the government of France, established several foundations, and died at Avignon 20 Dec., 1574. Many of his works remain.

LORRAINE, CLAUDE, or Claude Gelée, an eminent painter, born at Lorraine in 1600. He served his apprenticeship to a pastrycook, and had no other instruction in drawing than what he obtained from Agostino Tassi, who taught him some of the rules of perspective, and how to prepare his colours. Nature was his guide, and he studied in the open fields from sunrise till the evening, which enabled him to mark the various appearances of the same object as viewed in different lights. Most of the figures in his pictures are by Courtois and Laura. It was a custom with Claude to sketch in a book the outline of every picture of his painting, which collection, called 'Libro di Verità,' has been engraved by Earlom. Claude etched some landscapes, and all his pictures fetch very high prices. Died 21 Nov., 1682.

LORRIS, GUILLAUME DE, a French poet of the thirteenth century, who wrote the 'Romant de la Rose,' which was translated into English by Chaucer. It was left incomplete by Lorris, and perfected by John de Meun.

LORRY, ANNE CHARLES, a French physician and medical writer, born at Crosne 10 Sept., 1726; died 18 Sept., 1783.

LORT, MICHAEL, D.D., was born in the county of Pembroke 1725. He became a member of Trinity College, Cambridge; where he obtained a fellowship, took his degrees in divinity, and was chosen professor of Greek; which chair he resigned 1771, on being preferred to the rectory of St. Matthew, Friday Street. Dr. Lort, who had been in early life librarian to Dr. Mead, was, in 1785, appointed to the same office at Lambeth, and in 1789 he obtained the rectory of Fulham. He published a short Comment on the Lord's Prayer, some poems, and sermons. Died 5 Nov., 1790.

LOTHAIRE I., emperor of Germany, son of Louis le Debonnaire, was associated with him in the empire 817, and named king of Lombardy 820. He afterwards dethroned his father, but eventually his brothers Louis and Charles joined their forces against him, and obtained a great victory at Fontenai (841). Two years later a treaty was concluded between them at Verdun, by which Lothaire obtained the empire, Italy, and some of the provinces between the Rhine and the Rhone. Died 28 Sept., 855.

LOTHAIRE II., emperor of the West and duke of Saxony, was elected king of Germany 1125; crowned at Rome 1133; died 4 Dec., 1137.

LOTHAIRE, king of France, succeeded his father Louis IV., 954; died 986.

LOTHAIRE, king of Lorraine, was the son of the Emperor Lothaire I. He died 809.

LOTICH, PETER, surnamed Secunius, was born at Schlüchtern (Hanau) 2 Nov., 1528, and studied at Wittenberg, where he contracted an intimacy with Melancthon. He became professor of medicine at Heidelberg; and died 7 Nov., 1560. His Latin poems have been often printed: the best edition is by Burmann, 2 vols., Amsterdam, 1754. His uncle, Peter Lotich, abbat of Schlüchtern, at 1 a zealous reformer, died 23 June, 1507, leaving some polemical works, now forgotten.

LOUBERE, SIMON DE LA, a French writer, born 1642 at Toulouse, where he died 26 March, 1729. He wrote poems; a treatise on equations; and an account of a voyage he made to Siam in 1687. The latter has been translated into English.

LOUDON, JOHN CLAUDIUS, an esteemed writer on horticulture and agriculture, was born at Carnbuslang, Lanarkshire, 8 April, 1783, and after receiving his education at the university of Edinburgh, was brought up by his father as a landscape gardener. In 1803 he came to London, and obtained ample employment. He also took a farm near the metropolis, with a view of showing the superiority of the Scotch over the English system of agriculture. In 1809 he settled at Tew Park, Oxfordshire, as tenant of a farm on the estate of General Stratton, and here he established with success, and pecuniary advantage to himself, a kind of agricultural college, in which young men were instructed in the principles of farming. He afterwards travelled through various countries on the Continent, carefully inspected the public gardens in the cities he visited; and the knowledge he thus gathered was turned to excellent account in his 'Encyclopaedia of Gardening,' 1822. This work had an extensive sale, and its success induced

LOUGHBOROUGH.

Mr. Loudon to engage in another one on the same plan, called 'The Encyclopædia of Agriculture,' 1825. His subsequent publications were numerous, and all of a most useful and practical description. We have only room to mention a few—'The Encyclopædia of Plants,' 1829; 'Encyclopædia of Cottage, Farm, and Villa Architecture,' 1832; 'Arboretum et Fruticetum Britannicum,' 1838. Although racked by pain and disease during a great part of his life, Mr. Loudon never paused in his literary labours, and, independently of his separate publications, he at one period conducted four periodicals at once, viz., 'The Gardener's Magazine,' 'The Magazine of Natural History,' 'The Architectural Magazine,' and 'The Suburban Gardener.' Died 14 Dec., 1843. He received valuable assistance in his literary undertakings from his wife, Mrs. Jane Loudon, who was born 1800, being the daughter of Mr. Thomas Webbe, of Kitwell House, near Birmingham. A novel published by her in 1827, entitled 'The Mummy,' excited considerable attention at the time, and particularly attracted the notice of Mr. Loudon. This circumstance led to an acquaintance between them, and he soon afterwards led her to the altar (1830). After her marriage she studied botany and other kindred subjects, and published a large number of popular works, such as 'Botany for Ladies,' 'Domestic Pets, their habits and management,' and 'Tales about Plants.' She died 13 July, 1858.—Anderson.

LOUGHBOROUGH, Le. See ROSSLYN, EARL OF.

LOUIS I., surnamed le Debonnaire, or the Feeble, son of Charlemagne, was proclaimed king of France and emperor of the West 814. He was in a perpetual quarrel either with his brothers or sons until his death, which happened 840.

LOUIS II., the Young, eldest son of Lothaire I., was made king of Italy 844; succeeded to the imperial throne 855; died 875.

LOUIS III., surnamed the Blind, became emperor of the West 890, but was soon afterwards taken by his rival Berenger, who put out his eyes. Died 934.

LOUIS IV., called the Child, succeeded his father, the Emperor Arnold, 900, when he was only seven years old. His reign was a scene of civil war and desolation. Died 912.

LOUIS V. was elected emperor of Germany 1314; and after much civil discord was killed by a fall from his horse 1347.

LOUIS I., King of France. See LOUIS I., le Debonnaire.

LOUIS II., the Stammerer, was the son of Charles the Bald, whom he succeeded as king of France 877. He died 879.

LOUIS III., son of the preceding, shared the kingdom with his brother Carloman, with whom he lived in perfect union. Louis died 882, whereupon Carloman became sole king of France.

LOUIS IV., surnamed Transmarine, because he resided thirteen years in England, succeeded to the throne of France 936; and died 954.

LOUIS V., surnamed the Lazy, succeeded his father Lothaire 986. He was vigorously preparing to march against the Saracens, when he was poisoned by his queen, Blanche, 987. He was succeeded by Hugh Capet.

LOUIS VI., called the Big, succeeded to the throne 1108. He was disturbed by external quarrels and internal factions; but he was a wise and popular monarch, benevolent as a man, impartial as a judge. Died 1137.

LOUIS VII., the Young, son and successor of the preceding, was early engaged in a quarrel with the Sovereign Pontiff, and was excommunicated by him. He made a crusade to Palestine with an army of 80,000 men, but was defeated by the Saracens. Died 1180.

LOUIS VIII., surnamed the Lion, succeeded his father, Philip Augustus, 1223. He waged successful war against the English, and took large possessions from them. Died 1226.

LOUIS IX. (St.), son and successor of the preceding. He made two crusades, during the last of which he died at Tunis 1270. He was canonized by Boniface VIII.

LOUIS X., called Hutin, succeeded his father, Philip the Fair, 1314; died 1316.

LOUIS XI., born 1423, ascended the throne 1461. He rebelled against his father, and afterwards poisoned his brother. During his reign, rebellion and carnage were common occurrences; and he has been deservedly called the Tiberius of France. Died 1483.

LOUIS XII., surnamed the Just, ascended the throne 1498. He engaged in war with nearly all the neighbouring states, but was an amiable monarch, and greatly beloved by his subjects. Died 1515.

LOUIS XIII., surnamed the Just, ascended the throne 1610. He was guided in his conduct by the celebrated Cardinal Richelieu, who from motives of ambition kept him at war during most of his reign. Died 1643.

LOUIS XIV., surnamed the Great, was born 1638. His reign is celebrated as an era of magnificence, learning, and licentiousness in France. He died 1 Sept., 1715, leaving behind him monuments of unprecedented splendour and expense, in palaces, gardens, &c.

LOUIS XV., born 1710, ascended the throne 1715. During his reign France was almost constantly at war. The contest with England concerning the possession of Canada ended with great loss of territory to France. Died 10 May, 1774.

LOUIS XVI., born 1754, ascended the throne 1774, having married the celebrated Marie Antoinette of Austria (1770). He was a benevolent, virtuous, and amiable man, much attached to religion, and anxious to make his subjects happy. He was, however, treated by them in the vilest manner, called a tyrant and traitor, and finally beheaded by a perjured tribunal 21 Jan., 1793.

LOUIS XVII., son of the preceding, was born 1785. After the 10 Aug., 1792, he was imprisoned with his family in the Temple, where he died 8 June, 1795.

LOUIS XVIII., brother of Louis XVI., was born 1755. During the reign of Terror, and that of Bonaparte, being obliged to leave his country, he wandered from place to place, as his safety required. Finally he came to England, where he remained till 1814, when the allied powers placed him on the throne of France. On the approach of Napoleon from his retirement, Louis was obliged again to fly, but was again placed on his throne by the allies. He was a mild and amiable prince, consulting the wishes and happiness of his people. Died 16 Sept., 1824.

LOUIS PHILIPPE was born at Paris 1773, the son of Philippe Egalite, duke of Orleans. He was king of the French from 1830 to 1848; and died in exile at Claremont, near London, 26 Aug., 1850.

LOUIS I., called the Pious, king of Germany, died 876.

LOUIS II., son and successor of the preceding, defeated his uncle, Charles the Bald; and died 882.

LOUIS III., king of Germany. See LOUIS III., emperor.

LOUIS I., of Anjou, king of Hungary and Poland, succeeded Charles II. 1342, and died 1382.

LOUIS II., became king of Hungary after the death of his father, Ladislaus, 1516; and died 29 Aug., 1526.

LOUNDRES, HENRY DE, an English ecclesiastic, was appointed archdeacon of Stafford, and in 1213 consecrated archbishop of Dublin. He was a man of great capacity, employed in most important matters, both of church and state, and respected by the Pope as well as by the king. Died 1228.

LOUTHERBOURGH, PHILIP JAMES, R.A., a painter, was born at Strasburg in Nov., 1740. He was pupil of Casanova, and very early distinguished himself as a painter of battles, huntings, and landscapes. He was admitted into the Academy of Painting, at Paris, about 1763, soon after which he came to England, and Garrick, whose judgment was equal to his liberality, immediately engaged him as principal painter for his theatre, at a salary of £500, a much larger sum than had been given to any of his predecessors. He was the prince of scene painters, and contributed largely to the improvement of the stage. He died at Hammersmith 11 March, 1812.

LOUVET DE COUVRAY, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French politician and author, born at Paris 11 June 1760; died 25 Aug., 1797. During the Revolution he was an active member of the Convention, and, although proscribed, escaped the scaffold. His chief work is a licentious novel, entitled, 'The Adventures of the Chevalier de Faublas.'

LOVAT, SIMON FRASER, LORD, a Highland chieftain, born in Rossire 1667, and educated at King's College, Aberdeen. The principal events in his adventurous, turbulent life are connected with the rebellions of 1715 and 1745. Prior to the former he was in the confidence of the exiled court at St. Germain's, but he did not hesitate to serve his own interests by divulging their secrets to the British government, and he was rewarded by a grant of the title of Lord Lovat. On the breaking out of the rebellion of 1745, he sent his son with a portion of the clan to join the Pretender's army, while he himself remained quietly at home. His cunning, however, availed him nothing in this instance, for his complicity in the rebellion becoming known to the government, he was put on his trial before the House of Lords, found guilty of high treason, and beheaded on Tower Hill 9 April, 1747.

LOVE, CHRISTOPHER, a Presbyterian divine, born at Cardiff 1618. He studied at Oxford, and took orders; after which he became a bitter enemy to the church of England, and was ordained again by the hands of presbyters 1644. He was one of the commissioners for the parliament at the treaty of Uxbridge, where he behaved with such insolence as to offend his own party. He was also one of the assembly of divines, and chosen minister of St. Lawrence, Jewry; yet he signed the declaration against the murder of the king. After this he was concerned in a plot against Cromwell and the Independents, for which he was tried and beheaded 22 Aug., 1651. His works were published in 2 vols., 1805.

LOVE, JAMES, an English actor and dramatist, died 1774. His real name was Dance.

LOVE, RICHARD, D.D., a native of Cambridge, became master of Corpus Christi College in that university, and dean of Ely. He died Jan., 1600-61. There are poems by him in most or all of the collections of academical verses published during his residence in the university.

LOVELACE, RICHARD, a poet, was the son of Sir William Lovelace, of Woolwich, in Kent, and born there about 1618. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and next at Gloucester Hall, Oxford, where he was created M.A. in 1636. He was deputed by the county of Kent to deliver a petition to the House of Commons, for which he was sent to the Gate House. He expended the greater part of his estate in the royal cause, and in 1646 entered into the service of France; but, being wounded at the siege of Dunkirk, he returned to London, and was again sent to prison, where he remained till the king's death. Died 1628. His poems were published under the title of 'Lucasta,' in 2 vols. 8vo. He also wrote two plays: 'The Scholar,' a comedy, and 'The Soldier,' a tragedy. An edition of his Poems by Mr. William Carew Hazlitt was published 1864.

LOVER, SAMUEL, a novelist and poet, was born in Dublin 1797. He was the son of a member of the Stock Exchange in that city, and first won his way to fame as an artist. His early success in painting was sufficiently marked to secure his election in 1828 as an academician of the Royal Hibernian Society of Arts, of which he became secretary. Starting as a miniature painter in Dublin, he attracted to his studio the chief members of the Irish aristocracy. His roving taste, however, led him to abandon art for literature. Even whilst engaged as a painter he found leisure to contribute to a periodical a series of 'Legends and Tales illustrative of Irish Character.' Removing to London about 1837, he completed his 'Irish Sketches,' which were published in two vols., and commenced a series of contributions to magazine literature, the best known being 'Handy Andy,' a novel which appeared in Bentley's Miscellany in 1838. About this time he composed several Irish songs, and amongst them 'Molly Carew,' 'Rory O'More,' 'Molly Bawn,' 'The Four-leaved Shamrock,' 'The May Dew,' &c., afterwards published in a collective shape; and his prose tales. Mr. Lover composed several pieces founded on his own works, 'Rory O'More,' 'The Happy Man,' and 'The White Horse of the Peppers,' being amongst the best known. He also published a volume of ballad poetry, and finding that his strength was beginning to suffer through his literary exertions, prepared an entertainment entitled 'Irish Evenings,' containing graphic sketches of Irish humour, and in which he embodied songs and music of his own composition. This entertainment became very popular, and the reputation which he acquired in consequence induced him to pay a visit to the United States, whence he returned to England in 1848, and proceeded to illustrate his Transatlantic experiences in a second entertainment, which was as favourably received as the first. His other works were, 'Treasure Trove,' 1844, and 'Lyrics of Ireland,' 1858. Mr. Lover was in receipt of a literary pension from government for some years previous to his death, which occurred at St. Lawrence Valley, Jersey, 6 July, 1868.

LOWIBOND, EDWARD, a poet, was the son of a gentleman who was director of the India Company, and died in 1737. The son inherited a considerable estate at Hampton, in Middlesex, and died there 27 Sept., 1775. He wrote five papers in the 'World'; and his poems have been printed in one volume, octavo.

LOW, GEORGE, a naturalist, born at Edzel, Forfarshire, 1740. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrew's; after which he became minister of Birsay and Haray, in Orkney, where he died 1795. His 'Fauna Orcadensis' was published in 1813; and he left also a translation of Torlaeus's History of Orkney, which remains in manuscript.

LOWE, SIR HUDSON, a lieutenant-general in the British army, was born at Galway, Ireland, 28 July, 1769, and died 10 Jan., 1844. He is chiefly remembered as having been governor of St. Helena during the time Napoleon was imprisoned on that island, and the French writers speak in very severe terms of his conduct towards the illustrious captive. A 'History of the Captivity of Napoleon at St. Helena,' extracted from Sir Hudson Lowe's letters and journals, was published in 3 vols., 1853.

LOWE, PETER, a Scotchman, founder of the faculty of physicians and surgeons of Glasgow, was born about the middle of the sixteenth century. He served as surgeon-major in the Spanish regiment at Paris, and was in several engagements; but afterwards he returned to his native country, where he died 1612. His principal work, 'The Whole Course of Chirurgery,' first printed 1606, ran through many editions, and was translated into several foreign languages.

LOWER, RICHARD, M.D., was born about 1631, in Cornwall, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he became assistant to Dr. Willis in his dissections. While at Oxford he performed the experiment of transfusing the blood from one living animal to another; but though much was expected from the discovery, it was soon exploded. In 1667 he was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians, at which time he settled in London, and obtained great practice. Died 17 Jan., 1690-1. His works are, 'A Defence of Dr. Willis on Fevers'; 'Tractatus de Corde, 1669. His relation, Sir William Lower, who died 1662, published 'A Journal of the Voyage and Residence of Charles II. in Holland,' and six plays.

LOWER, RICHARD, a writer of poems in the Sussex dialect, was born at Allfriston in that county 19 Sept., 1782; and died at Tunbridge 20 Sept., 1865.

LOWMAN, MOSES, a dissenting minister, born 1680, became pastor of a congregation at Clapham 1714, and died there 3 May, 1752. He published a Paraphrase on the Apocalypse; 'Dissertation on the Civil Government of the Hebrews,' and other theological works.

LOWNDES, THOMAS, founder of an astronomical and geometrical professorship at Cambridge, died 12 May, 1748.

LOWTH.

LOWNDES, WILLIAM THOMAS, the compiler of 'The Bibliographer's Manual of English Literature,' died in London 31 July, 1843.

LOWRY, WILSON, F.R.S., was born at Whitehaven, Cumberland, 1701. His father was an itinerant portrait painter, and in the course of his peregrinations visited Worcester, where his son, then very young, was placed under an engraver named Koss. At the age of sixteen he left his master, and, making his way to the metropolis, obtained a subordinate situation in St. Thomas's Hospital. After this he became known to Alderman Boydell, for whom he executed some plates, the subjects of which were landscapes. About the same time he formed a connection with Mr. Blizard, the surgeon, by which means he enlarged his knowledge of anatomy; but he profited most from his intimacy with Mr. Malton, author of a work on Perspective, whose conversation led him to study practical mathematics. About 1791 he invented his ruling machine, which proved of inestimable benefit to engravers. This was followed (1798) by another discovery in the application of diamond points for etching. The next year he improved his ruling machine, and constructed a new one capable of drawing lines to a point, as well as parallel ones. In 1801 he invented an instrument for describing parts of circles, of which the radius is so large as to preclude the use of beam compasses. In 1812 he was elected F.R.S., and he was a member of the Geological Society from its commencement. He died in London 23 June, 1824.

LOWTH, ROBERT, D.D., an English bishop, second son of William Lowth, B.D., hereafter noticed, was born at Burton, Hants, 27 Nov., 1710. He was educated at Winchester School, where he wrote two poems, one entitled 'The Genealogy of Christ,' and the other, 'Catharine Hill.' He was elected to New College, Oxford, 1730, and took his master's degree 1737. Being appointed professor of poetry 1741, he struck out a new path by his admirable lectures on Hebrew poetry, printed with this title, 'De Sacra Poesi Hebraeorum Prælectiones,' 1753. His first church preferment was the rectory of Ovington, Hampshire. In 1748 he accompanied Mr. Legge on his embassy to Berlin, and the following year he went to Italy, as travelling companion to Lord George and Lord Frederic Cavendish. In 1750 he obtained the archdeaconry of Winchester, and in 1753 the rectory of East Woodhay. In 1754 he received the degree of D.D. from the university of Oxford, by diploma; and in 1755 he went to Ireland as chaplain to the marquis of Hartington, who nominated him to the bishopric of Limerick, which he exchanged for a prebend of Durham and the rectory of Sedgfield. In 1768 he published the 'Life of William of Wykeham,' which was followed, in 1762, by 'A Short Introduction to English Grammar.' Dr. Lowth, having been grossly treated by Warburton, in an appendix to the last volume of his 'Divine Legation,' published a letter to the bishop in 1765, which, in force of argument and wit, is unrivalled. The year following he was advanced to the bishopric of St. David's, from whence, in four months, he was translated to Oxford, and in 1777 to London. In 1778 he published his Translation of Isaiah; and the next year a sermon preached before the king on Ash-Wednesday. In a note to this discourse the bishop animadverted on the conduct of Dr. Price, for which he was rudely attacked by some republican writers. On the death of Archbishop Cornwallis the primacy was offered to Bishop Lowth, which he declined on account of his infirmities and the losses he had sustained in his family. In 1768 his eldest daughter, Mary, died; and in 1783 his second daughter, Frances, expired while presiding at the tea-table. His lordship's eldest son was also cut off suddenly in the prime of life. The bishop died at Fulham 3 Nov., 1787. Besides the works already mentioned, he printed some sermons and a few poems, particularly 'An Ode to the People of Great Britain,' and 'The Judgment of Hercules.' There is no complete edition of his works.

LOWTH, SIMON, D.D., a nonjuring divine, received his academical education at Clare Hall, Cambridge, and proceeded to his doctor's degree 1689, having the year before been nominated by James II. to the deanery of Rochester, though he was never installed, in consequence of the Revolution occurring almost immediately afterwards. At the time of his death, which took place in the beginning of July, 1720, when he was upwards of eighty years old, he held the vicarage of Cosmeston, in the diocese of Canterbury. He wrote 'Catechetical Questions,' 1674; 'Of the Subject of Church Power, in whom it resides, its Force, Extent, and Execution, that it opposes not Civil Government in any one Instance of it,' 8vo., London, 1685, against Dr. Tillotson; 'Letter to Dr. Stillingfleet,' 4to., London, 1687.

LOWTH, WILLIAM, a divine, born in London 11 Sept., 1661. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and elected from thence to St. John's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to the degree of B.D. In 1696, he obtained a prebend in the church of Winchester, and in 1699 the rectory of Buriton, with the chapelry of Petersheld, in Hampshire. Died 17 May, 1732. His works are A Vindication of the Divine Authority of the Old and New Testament; Directions for the profitable reading of the Holy Scriptures; A Commentary on the Prophetical Books of the Old Testament; and several sermons and tracts.

LOYOLA. See IGNATIUS.

LUBBOCK, Sir JOHN WILLIAM, Bart., F.R.S., an astronomer and physicist, was born in London 26 March, 1803, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1825; M.A. 1833). Though the head of a London banking firm, he devoted much attention to scientific pursuits. He was treasurer of the Royal Society for many years, and also vice-chancellor of the university of London. In 1834 the Royal Society awarded him one of their royal medals for his papers on the Tides. In 1836 he delivered the Bakerian Lecture 'On the Tides at the Port of London,' and the Astronomical Society, in 1848, gave him a testimonial for his researches on the theory of perturbations. His separate publications are 'Account of the Traité sur le flux et reflux de la Mer of Daniel Bernouilli;' and a 'Treatise on the Attraction of Ellipsoids,' 1830; 'On the Theory of the Moon and on the Perturbations of the Planets,' 1833, &c.; 'Mathematical Tracts,' 1834; 'A Treatise on Probability,' in collaboration with J. E. Drinkwater Bethune, 1835; 'On the Determination of the Distance of a Comet from the Earth, and the Elements of its Orbit,' 1835; 'Treatise on the Computation of Eclipses and Occultations,' 1835; 'Remarks on the Classification of the different branches of Human Knowledge,' 1838; 'Treatise on the Tides,' 1839; 'On the Heat of Vapours, and on Astronomical Refractions,' 1840; 'On the Clearing of the London Bankers,' 1860; 'The Stars, in six Maps, on the Gnomonic Projection,' 1860. Died 20 June, 1865.

LUBIENIECKI, STANISLAUS, Lubicnicus, a Silesian minister, born at Cracow, in Poland, 1623. On the banishment of his sect he went to Derrmark, where it is said he was poisoned 1675. His principal work is 'Theatrum Cometicum,' 1667.

LUBIN, AUGUSTIN, an Augustinian friar, born 1624, at Paris, where he died 1695. He wrote several geographical and theological works.

LUBIN, EILHARD, a Protestant divine, born at Westersted, in the county of Oldenburg, 1550. He became professor of poetry, and afterwards of divinity, at Rostock, where he died 1 June, 1621. His principal works are 'Antiquarius, sive priscorum et minus usitatorum vocabulorum brevis et dilucida interpretatio;' 'Clavis Græcæ linguæ;' Phosphorus, or the first Cause of Sin. The latter created a great controversy.

LUCA, FERDINANDI, an eminent mathematician and geographer, died at Naples 12 Aug., 1809.

LUCANUS, MARCUS ANNÆUS, a Latin poet, was born at Cordova, in Spain, A.D. 38. He was the nephew of Seneca. After studying at Athens he was made quaestor, and admitted into the college of augurs; but having offended Nero by presuming to contend with him in poetical composition, he was interdicted from exhibiting any more verses in public. In consequence of this he entered into the conspiracy of Piso, for which he was condemned to die, and all the favour shown him was to choose the manner of his death. He followed the example of his uncle, and when fainting with loss of blood repeated some of his own lines. This happened A.D. 65. Of his works the 'Pharsalia' only remains, the best edition of which is that of C. F. Weber, 3 vols., Leipzig, 1821-31. It has been translated into English by Rowe.

LUCAS, FRANCIS, surnamed Brugensis, from his being a native of Bruges. He was a doctor at Louvain, and dean of the church of St. Omer. His works are, Critical Commentaries on the Old Testament; Notes on the New Testament; Concordances of the Bible. Died 1619, aged 67.

LUCAS, FREDERICK, a Catholic politician and journalist, was born 30 March, 1812, being the son Samuel Hayhurst Lucas, a corn-merchant in the city of London. His parents belonged to the Society of Friends, and he received his early education in a Quaker school at Darlington. In his seventeenth year he entered the university of London, and in 1835 he was called to the bar. The turning-point in his career was his reception into the Catholic Church, 1839, of which he was ever afterwards a most strenuous supporter. To advocate its interests he established the 'Tablet,' a weekly newspaper, the first number of which appeared in London 16 May, 1840. In 1840, however, the place of publication was changed to Dublin, the editor having zealously taken up the cause of the 'Young Ireland' party. Mr. Lucas was returned to the House of Commons for the county of Meath 1852, and died at Staines, Middlesex, 22 Oct., 1855. He was author of Two Lectures on Education delivered at the Literary and Scientific Institution at Staines; Reasons for becoming a Roman Catholic, addressed to the Society of Friends; and numerous articles in the 'Tablet' and 'Dublin Review.' Amongst other plans he once entertained the scheme of a Catholic Encyclopaedia, which was to correct the Protestant errors and prejudices which, in his opinion, were contained in existing works of that nature.

LUCAS, PAUL, a traveller, born at Rouen 31 Aug., 1664. He made several voyages in the Levant, and died at Madrid 12 May, 1737. Accounts of his travels were published from his notes.

LUCAS, RICHARD, D.D., was born in Radnorshire 1648. He received his education at Oxford; after which he became master of the free school at Abergavenny, from whence he removed to London, where he was chosen vicar of St. Stephen, Coleman Street, lecturer of St. Olave, Southwark, and in 1696 prebendary of Westminster. His works are Practical Christianity; An Enquiry after Happiness; The Morality of the Gospel; Christian Thoughts for every Day in the Week; Sermons; and a Latin translation of the 'Whole Duty of Man.'

LUCAS, SAMUEL, born at Bristol 1818, was educated at Queen's College, Oxford (M.A. 1846), after which he went to the bar, though he soon abandoned law for the more congenial pursuits of literature. He founded, and conducted for a year and a half, the 'Press,' a Conservative weekly paper; edited 'Once a Week,' from 1859 to 1865; and was for some time connected with the 'Times' as literary reviewer. Died 27 Nov., 1868. He published several volumes of articles originally contributed to the 'Times;' Secularia, or Surveys on the Mainstream of History, &c.

LUCAS VAN LEYDEN, a painter and engraver, whose real name was Lucas Jacobs. He was born at Leyden 1494, and died 1533.

LUCCHESINI, GIROLAMO, Marquis DI, a statesman and diplomatist in the service of Prussia, was born at Lucca 1752; died at Florence 19 Oct., 1825.

LUCCHESINI, JOHN VINCENT, an Italian nobleman and ecclesiastic, born at Lucca 1606. He became secretary to the pope, and canon of St. Peter's, at Rome, where he died 1744. He translated Demosthenes into Latin, and wrote a valuable History of his own Time, in the same language.

LUCIAN, a Greek writer, born at Samosata, in the reign of Trajan; died about 200. He was placed under a sculptor, but left that business to study the law, which also he abandoned for the profession of philosophy and rhetoric. Marcus Aurelius made him register of Alexandria, in Egypt; but at this time he was very old. The prominent feature of his dialogues is ridicule; but with all his causticity and indelicacy he discovers a deep knowledge of human nature. The best edition of Lucian is that of Hemsterhuis, at Amsterdam, 4 vols., 1743. Lucian has been translated into English by Carr, Franklin, and Tooke.

LUCILIUS, CAIUS, a Roman poet, of the equestrian order, who served under Scipio Africanus. He wrote thirty books of satires, in a style of great severity, and died at Naples about 103 B.C. Only a few fragments of his works are extant.

LUCIUS I. succeeded Pope St. Cornelius 252; died 254.

LUCIUS II. succeeded Pope Celestine II. 1144; died 1145.

LUCIUS III. succeeded Pope Alexander III. 1181; died 1184.

and Phædrus, from whom he derived the principles of Epicurus and Empedocles, which he has elucidated in his celebrated work 'De Rerum Natura.' As a poet he is entitled to great praise; but his work has an atheistical tendency. It is said to have been written while the author was in a state of frenzy, produced by a philtre, which his wife or mistress administered to him out of jealousy. The best editions are those of Havercamp and Wakefield.

LUDLOW, EDMUND, a republican general, was born at Maiden Bradley, Wilts, about 1620. After taking the degree of bachelor of arts at Trinity College, Oxford, he went to the Temple, which he left on the breaking out of the civil war, and became a captain of horse in the parliamentary service. He was present at the battle of Edge Hill, and in 1644 was made prisoner at Wardour Castle, but was soon exchanged. In 1645 he succeeded his father as representative in parliament for the county of Wilts. He also sat as one of the judges at the trial of the king, and signed the death warrant; after which he concurred in voting down the House of Lords. When Cromwell became captain general of the army, he got rid of Ludlow, by sending him to Ireland, where he was lieutenant-general of the horse. He zealously opposed the usurper, on whose death he was returned to the new parliament, and he also sat in that which was called the Rump. In 1659 he resumed the command in Ireland, but his stay there was short; and finding that the king's judges were excepted out of the act of indemnity, he withdrew to Switzerland. After the Revolution he returned to appear in London, which gave such offence, that an address was presented to King William, by the House of Commons, praying his majesty to issue a proclamation for apprehending him. On this Ludlow went back to Vevey, in Switzerland, where he died 1693. His memoirs were first printed at Vevey, in 3 vols. 8vo., 1698-9. In 1691 were printed 'Three Letters from Major-General Ludlow,' which Mr. Baron Maseres republished 1813, though they are not genuine.

LUDOLPH, HENRY WILLIAM, a native of Erfurt, was born 1655. He was nephew of Job Ludolph, the orientalist, by whom he was partly educated. He became secretary to Prince George of Denmark; and while in his service visited Russia, where he attained so complete a knowledge of the language as to write a grammar of it, which was printed at Oxford 1696. He afterwards travelled into the Levant, and crossed the desert from Jerusalem to Cairo. Being much affected by the state of the Christians in the East, he undertook an edition of the New Testament in the vulgar Greek, and had it printed in London for distribution. He died in London 25 Jan., 1710. His works were published 1712, with his funeral sermon, by Mr. Boehm.

LUDOLPH, Job, was born at Erfurt 15 June, 1624. He studied the oriental languages at Leyden; after which he became a traveling tutor. In 1649 he went to Rome on a literary commission, and while there became acquainted with some Abyssinians, from whom he acquired a perfect knowledge of the Ethiopic language. In 1652 he was made aulic counsellor to the duke of Saxe-Gotha, and governor to the young princes. He died at Frankfort-on-the-Maine 8 April, 1704. His principal works are, Historia Ethioptica; Epistolæ Samaritanæ Sicheimitarum; Grammatica Amharicæ linguæ; Lexicon Amharico-Lati-

LUDWIG, CHRISTIAN THEOPHILUS, a botanist, born at Brieg, in Silesia, 30 April, 1709; became professor of medicine at Leipsic 1747; and died 7 May, 1773.

LUINI, or LOVINI, BERNARDINO, an Italian painter, was a native of Luino, on the Lago Maggiore, and is supposed to have been a pupil of Leonardo da Vinci, from the closeness with which he imitated his style. The 'Christ Disputing with the Doctors,' in the National Gallery, formerly attributed to da Vinci, is now supposed to be the work of Luini, who died after 1530.

LUTPRAND, a king of the Lombards from 712 till his death in 744.

LUKIN, LIONEL, the inventor of the life-boat, was born at Dunmow, Essex, 18 May, 1742, and died at Hythe, Kent, 16 Feb., 1834.

LULLI, JOHN BAPTIST, a musician, born at Florence 1634. At ten years of age he was taken to Paris, and made page to madame de Montpensier. Having learnt to play on the violin, he procured admission into the king's band, and soon became such a favourite with the monarch as to be appointed superintendent of the music in the royal chamber. In 1686 the king fell dangerously ill, and on his recovery, Lulli was required to compose a 'Te Deum.' The performance of this piece proved fatal to the musician, who, in beating the time, struck his foot, and the blow terminating in a gangrene, he died 22 March, 1687.

LULLY, RAYMOND, a famous writer on the occult sciences, called 'Doctor Illuminatus,' or the 'Enlightened Doctor,' was born in the island of Majorca about 1235, and adopted the ecclesiastical profession. He applied himself with indefatigable diligence to the study of Arabian philosophy, chemistry, physic, and divinity, and acquired a great reputation by his writings; but going afterwards to preach the gospel in Africa, he was stoned to death in Mauritania 29 March, 1315. A collection of his works was printed at Mayence in ten folio vols., 1721.

LUMSDEN, MATTHEW, LL.D., an English orientalist, occupied with distinction for several years the professorship of Persian and Arabic in the college of Fort William at Calcutta. He resigned it 1820, and returned to this country, where he passed the remainder of his days in retirement. He died at Tooting Common, Surrey, 31 March, 1835, aged 57. Dr. Lumsden published a Persian Grammar 1805, and again 1810, 2 vols.; and an Arabic Grammar 1813.

LUPTON, DONALD, a writer, who is known only by his works, which are, The History of Modern Protestant Divines, 1637; The Glory of their Times, or the Lives of the Fathers, 1640; London and the Country carbonadoed, 1632; Objectorum reductio, or Employment for the Soul, 1634; Emblems of Rarities; England's Command of the Seas, 1623.

LUPTON, WILLIAM, D.D., was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He became successively vicar of Richmond, Yorkshire; lecturer of St. Dunstan-in-the-West; preacher at Lincoln's Inn; and prebendary of Durham. Died 1726. He published a sermon against Archbishop Tillotson, on hell torments; and after his death a volume of his discourses was printed.

LUSHINGTON, STEPHEN RUMBOLD, D.C.L., was educated at Rugby. He was returned to the House of Commons 1807, as member for Rye, and sat for that borough, and afterwards for Canterbury, till 1837. He was for nearly fourteen years chairman of ways and means in the House of Commons, and from 1814 to 1827 was joint-secretary to the treasury. He was governor of Madras 1827-32; and was created an honorary D.C.L. by the university of Oxford 1839. Died Aug., 1868, aged 94. Dr. Lushington published the 'Life and Services of General Lord Harris,' the conqueror of Seringapatam, whose daughter he married.

LUSSAN, MARGUERITE DE, a French novelist and miscellaneous writer, born at Paris 1682; died 31 May, 1758.

LUTHER, MARTIN, the most celebrated ecclesiastical reformer since Arius, was born 10 Nov., 1483, at Eisleben, in Saxony, where his father, Hans Luther, worked in the mines. He completed his philosophical studies at Erfurt, where he took the degree of master of arts 1503. As he was walking one day in the vicinity of that city, one of his companions was killed at his side by lightning, which induced Luther to take the religious habit among the Augustinian friars at Erfurt, being at that time 22 years of age. He was ordained priest at the age of 24, and made himself very celebrated some time after by teaching philosophy in the university of Wittenberg, where he became doctor and professor of divinity. But the works of John Huss changed his sentiments, as he says himself, and inspired him with an aversion to the practices of the Catholic Church, and the scholastic divines, whose opinions he attacked by public theses from 1516. Luther began, the same year, to study Greek and Hebrew, and so highly did he esteem the latter language that he declared, in his commentary on Psalm 45, 'that he valued the knowledge of Hebrew beyond all imaginable treasures,' though he was not then very well skilled in that tongue. His change of religion did not proceed from the pretended wrong done by Leo X. to the Augustinians, in employing the Dominicans to preach in favour of indulgences, for the Augustinians had never been employed to the exclusion of other preachers. The truth is, that this Pope, having ordered indulgences to be published in Germany (1517) for building St. Peter's church at Rome, the preachers and mendicants made a most scandalous use of their authority; and Luther seized that opportunity to disseminate his opinions. He first attacked the abuse of indulgences, then the indulgences themselves, and afterwards the power of him who granted them. From the subject of indulgences he passed to that of justification, and the efficacy of the sacraments. Leo X. sent Cardinal Cajetan to oblige Luther to retract, or to seize him; but he succeeded in neither object. Luther, who enjoyed the protection of the elector of Saxony, appealed from the Pope to an œcumenical council, and was emboldened to write against purgatory, free-will, indulgences, auricular confession, the papal primacy, monastic vows, communion under one kind, and other received doctrines. Indeed, he did not hesitate to separate himself from the Roman communion, and to maintain that the Pope was the Man of Sin, or Antichrist, whose appearance is foretold in the New Testament.

LUTI.

Leo X. excommunicated him, 1520, and he was condemned by the faculties of divinity at Louvain, Cologne, and Paris; but all this only exasperated him the more. He burnt the Pope's bull, abused him grossly, exhorted all princes to cast off the papal yoke, and acknowledged no sacraments but baptism, penitence, and bread, the latter being the name he gave to the Eucharist, for he changed the term 'transubstantiation' into 'consubstantiation,' and pretended that the body and blood of Jesus Christ mingles with the bread and wine without destroying them, like the fire in a hot iron. Luther suppressed the low masses in consequence, as he said, of a conversation with the devil. Being summoned to a diet assembled at Worms (1521) by the Emperor Charles V., he was ordered to be seized, but he contrived to get away, and he afterwards composed a number of works which produced a wonderful effect in Saxony. Hundreds of monks and nuns quitted their convents, renounced their vows, and married. The Augustinian friars of Wittemberg abolished the Mass, and Carlstadt, one of Luther's followers, proposed to banish from that university all books except the Bible. Several of the German princes, about this time, declared themselves in favour of the new creed. At length Luther got over the last step, for the sake of which he had done all, and, throwing off the monastic habit (1524), publicly married, on 11 June, 1525, a nun, named Catharine Bora, or de Bohren, by whom he had three sons. In 1529 Charles V. assembled a diet at Spire, in which the Lutherans received the name of Protestants, because they protested against the decree there made, ordering them to follow the faith of the Roman Church. The following year, Luther, being under the ban of the empire, could not attend the diet held at Augsburg, but he repaired to Coburg, from which place he directed all the operations of his party. The Protestants presented at Augsburg their famous confession of faith, which was condemned by a majority of the diet, and the Lutheran princes consequently entered into the offensive or defensive league of Smalcald, with the hearty consent of Luther, who had, however, previously maintained that it was unlawful to take up arms in defence of the gospel. The decision given by Luther (1530), with Melancthon, and his principal disciples, in the case of Philip, landgrave of Hesse, by which he permitted that prince to marry a second wife, while his first was living, caused great scandal. During the first sittings of the Council of Trent, against which he declaimed with great bitterness, death put an end to the career of this celebrated man, who expired suddenly in his native town 18 Feb., 1546. He wrote upwards of four hundred works. The best known are his German translation of the Bible, his Catechism, his 'Table Talk,' his familiar letters, and his sermons. A complete edition of his works, in Latin and German, was published by C. F. Boerner, at Leipsic, 23 vols. fol., 1728-40.

LUTI, BENEDETTO, a painter, born at Florence 1666; died at Rome 1724.

LUTTRELL, NARCISSE, was born in London in or about 1657, and educated under Mr. Aldrich at Sheen, in Surrey. He was admitted a fellow-commoner of St. John's College, Cambridge, 17 Feb., 1673-4, and created M.A. by royal mandate 1675. A great portion of his subsequent life was spent at Chelsea, where he employed his time in forming a remarkable collection of tracts and broadsides, and in inditing the well-known diary which first became generally known to historical students by the frequent references made to it in Macaulay's 'History of England.' It was then preserved in MS. in the library of All Souls College, Oxford, but was soon afterwards given to the world under the title of 'A Brief Historical Relation of State Affairs, from Sept., 1678 to April, 1714,' 6 vols. 8vo., Oxford, 1857. Luttrell died at Chelsea 3 Sept., 1740.

LYCOPHRON, a Greek writer, was a native of Chalcis, in Eubœa, and flourished about 284 B.C. He wrote a poem called Cassandra, on the subject of the war of Troy, but it is extremely obscure. The best edition is that of Charles G. Müller, 3 vols., Leipsic, 1812.

LYCURGUS, the legislator of Sparta, flourished about 808 years B.C. On the death of his brother, Polydectes, Lucurgus resolved to hold the sovereignty in trust, in case the widow should be delivered of a son; which proving to be the fact, the faithful guardian carefully administered the government till his nephew came of age. After this he travelled to study the laws of other countries, and, on his return, he established that system which distinguished Sparta from every state in the world. Having bound the people to observe this institution, he left Lacedæmon, and is supposed to have died in Crete.

LYCURGUS, an Athenian orator, who was the contemporary of Demosthenes, and died about 323 B.C.

LYDGATE, JOHN, an English poet, was born about 1375; died about 1401. He was a monk of the Benedictine abbey of Bury, in Suffolk. Of his works, which are numerous, that on 'The History of Troy' was the most popular. It was printed in 1513, and again in 1555.

LYDIAT, THOMAS, was born at Okerton, or Alkington, near Banbury, Oxfordshire, 1572, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1609 he accompanied Archbishop Usher to Ireland, and, on his return, was presented to the rectory of Okerton. He suffered much for his loyalty, and died poor 3 April, 1646. His principal works are—Tractatus de variis annorum formis; Prælectio astronomica de natura cæli et conditionibus elementorum; De origine fontium; Examen canonum chronologica isagogicorum; Emendatio temporum; Solis et lunæ periodus sex annus magnus; De anni solaris mensura; Canones chronologica.

LYE, EDWARD, F.S.A., was born at Totnes, Devonshire, 1704. He took his degree of M.A. 1722, at Hart Hall, Oxford, after which he obtained the living of Houghton-Parva, in Northamptonshire, but exchanged it, in 1750, for the vicarage of Yardley Hastings, in the same county, where he died in 1767. He published an edition of the 'Etymologicon Anglicanum,' by Junius, with many additions, and an Anglo-Saxon Grammar prefixed; 'The Gothic Gospels,' with a Grammar of that language. After his death came out his 'Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Dictionary,' 2 vols. folio, 1772.

LYELL, CHARLES, an eminent botanist, born in Forfarshire 1707, received a liberal education at St. Andrew's and Cambridge, after which he retired to his estate at Kirriemuir. He discovered many British plants previously unknown, and LYNCH, DOMINIC, an Irish Catholic divine, lived for many years with great reputation in Spain. He was appointed synodical judge in Seville, was gradually promoted to all the honours of that university, became first lecturer in arts and philosophy, master of the students, secondary professor of divinity, and finally was elected principal regent of the college of St. Thomas, which he governed with universal approbation until his death in 1697. His great work, entitled 'Summa Philosophiæ,' was printed at Paris, 4 vols. 4to., 1666, 1686.

LYNCH, JOHN, an Irish Catholic prelate and historian, was a native of the town of Galway. He received his education in France, and after being ordained priest, returned to his native country, where he was appointed successively archdeacon of Tuam and bishop of Killala. He was well versed in the history and antiquities of his native country, and composed the following works, all of which are extremely rare: 'Cambrensis Eversus; seu potius historica Fides in Rebus Hibernicis Giraldo Cambrensi abrogata,' &c., published under the name of Gratianus Lucius, fol., 1662, reprinted for the Celtic Society, with a translation and notes by the Rev. M. Kelly, 3 vols., Dublin, 1848-52; 'Alithinologia, sive Veridica Responso ad insectivam, mendaciam, fallaciam, calumniam, et imposturam factam, in plurimos Antistes, Proceres, et omnis ordinis Hibernos, a R. P. R. F. C. Congregationi de Propaganda Fide A.D. 1669 exhibitam,' 4to., 1664; 'Supplementum Alithinologiae, quod partes insectivæ in Hibernos Casus in Alithinologia non oppugnata everit,' 4to., 1667. The two last-mentioned treatises, published under the pseudonym of Eudoxius Alithinologus, were directed against Richard Ferral, an Irish Capuchin friar, who had presented a disloyal piece in MS. to the congregation De Propaganda Fide, as a direction to them in the government of the Church in Ireland, and tending to renew the divisions between the ancient Irish and the Anglo-Irish settled in the country since the reign of Henry II. Lynch also wrote a biography of Francis Kirwan, bishop of Killala, under the title of 'Pii Antistitis Icon: sive de Vita et Morte Rev. D. Francisci Kerovani Allandensis Episcopi,' 12mo., Maclovii, 1669. A translation of this book, by the Rev. C. P. Meehan, was published at Dublin a few years ago.

LYNCH, RICHARD, D.D., an Irishman, who joined the Society of Jesus at Compostella 1630, and was for more than a quarter of a century the admiration of the universities of Valladolid and Salamanca. He died in or about 1676. His writings are 'Cursus Philosophicus,' 3 vols. fol., Lyons, 1654; Sermons in Spanish, 1670; 'De Deo Ultima Fide,' 2 vols., Salamanca, 1671.—Olivier.

LYNDE, SIR HUMPHREY, was born in London about 1580, and educated at Oxford. He sat in parliament for many years, and died 8 June, 1636. Sir Humphrey was a zealous Puritan, and wrote several works against the Catholic religion.

LYNDHURST, JOHN SINGLETON COPLEY, LORD, was born at Boston, in New England, 21 May, 1772, being the son of John Singleton Copley, the painter, who brought him to England about a year before the outbreak of the American revolution. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship; and being appointed a 'Travelling Bachelor,' he was enabled, for the first and only time in his life, to revisit his native country. In 1804 he was called to the bar, and for many years subsequently he went the Midland Circuit, rising by very slow degrees to professional eminence. In 1817, having then obtained the leadership of his circuit, he first brought himself prominently into public notice by the able manner in which he aided Sir Charles Wetherell in conducting the prosecution of Watson and Thistlewood, indicted for high treason. Though previously a liberal in politics, he so favourably impressed the Tory leaders by his talents on this occasion, that he was soon employed by them on behalf of the government in several important state trials; and in 1818 was appointed chief justice of the county palatine of Chester. Thenceforth he remained for the most part an adherent of the party from which he had received his earliest promotion. Having entered parliament in 1818, he was appointed solicitor-general in the Liverpool administration in the following year, and in 1820 he took a leading part in the proceedings against Queen Caroline, avoiding, by the moderation and skill which he displayed, the censure so freely bestowed upon most of the parties to the trial. In 1824 he succeeded to the attorney-generalship. At the general election of 1820 he was returned by the university of Cambridge, in conjunction with Lord Palmerston, and a few months later he accepted the mastership of the rolls. During the early debates on Catholic Emancipation in 1827, he strenuously opposed the measure, but, to the surprise of the public, he entered the Liberal cabinet of Canning as Lord chancellor, and was raised to the peerage, with the title of Baron Lyndhurst, 27 April, 1827. After the death of Canning, in the following August, he retained the great seal during the short-lived administration of Viscount Goderich, and in that of the duke of Wellington, retiring with his colleagues on the triumph of the Whigs in 1830. Previously to this he had given his full support to Catholic Emancipation, declaring that he felt no apprehension for the safety of the Anglican Establishment. Shortly after retiring from the chancellorship he was appointed chief baron of the exchequer, the duties of which office he discharged till 1834. Though prevented by official duties from participating largely in parliamentary proceedings, he was one of the most strenuous opponents of the Reform Bill, and upon the resignation of Earl Grey (1832) he endeavoured unsuccessfully to form a new Conservative ministry in conjunction with the duke of Wellington. He held the great seal again during the brief administration of Sir Robert Peel (1834), and after retiring from office, devoted himself for several years chiefly to the interests of his party, becoming one of the most effective leaders of the Tory opposition in the upper house. In 1841 Sir Robert Peel formed his second ministry, and Lord Lyndhurst for the third time accepted the great seal, which he retained till 1846, when he declared himself to be 'at the close of his public, almost of his natural life.' He, however, occasionally took a prominent part in the proceedings of the House of Lords, supported the Derby ministry of 1852, advocated the war with Russia, and denounced the policy adopted by Lord Clarendon in concluding the peace of 1856, as a practical capitulation on the part of England. Until the infirmities of age overcame him, his speeches, remarkable for their elegant and severely simple style, and delivered with a voice of singular sweetness and power, were listened to with unabated interest, and to the day of his death he continued to exert great influence over the Conservative party. He died in London 12 Oct., 1803.

LYNEDOCH, THOMAS GRAHAM, LORD, a distinguished general, was born as Balgowan, Perthshire, 1750, and until the mature age of forty-two he remained a private country gentleman. In 1793 he lost his wife, to whom he was tenderly attached, and to alleviate his grief travelled abroad. At Gibraltar he fell into military society, and he there first conceived the possibility of obtaining some respite from his sorrows by devoting himself to the profession of arms. As a volunteer he accompanied Lord Hood to the south of France, where he displayed great bravery. On returning to Scotland he raised the first battalion of the 90th regiment, of which he was appointed colonel-commandant 1794. Shortly afterwards he was elected M.P. for Perthshire, and he continued to represent that county till 1807. For a time he served in the Austrian army (1796), taking advantage of his position to inform the English government of what was going on in that country. In 1798 he rejoined his regiment at Gibraltar, from whence he proceeded to Minorca with Sir C. Stuart. Not long after this the colonel, with the local rank of brigadier, besieged the island of Malta, having under his command the 30th and 80th regiments, and some corps embodied under his immediate direction. Aware of the prodigious strength of the place, he resorted to a blockade; but the French held out till Sept., 1800, when, after a resistance of two years' duration, they surrendered the place. Subsequently he served under Sir John Moore in Sweden and Spain; and on his return to England was made major-general (1810). In 1811 he took the command of an expedition to attack the rear of the French army that was blockading Cadiz—an operation which led to the memorable battle of Barossa. For his conduct on this occasion he received the thanks of parliament. He afterwards served under Wellington in the Peninsula, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Vittoria, the siege of San Sebastian, and the passage of the Bidassoa. In 1814 he was appointed commander of the forces in Holland, and on 3 May in the same year again received the thanks of parliament, and was raised to the peerage with a pension of 2000*l.* He attained the rank of general 1821; was made governor of Dumbarton Castle 1829; and died 18 Dec., 1843.

LYON, GEORGE FRANCIS, a traveller, born at Chichester 1795. Entering the naval service 1809, he was present at the attack on Algiers by Lord Exmouth, 1816, and in 1818 was commissioned to accompany Mr. Joseph Ritchie on his tour of exploration into Central Africa. Ritchie died at Moorook, in Fezzan, where the travellers were detained through the want of funds, and the treacherous conduct of the bey of the province; but Lyon returned to England, after encountering many dangers and privations, and published his 'Narrative of Travels in Northern Africa,' 1821. In command of the 'Hecla,' he accompanied Capt. Parry on his third arctic expedition (1821), publishing, on his return, 'The Private Journal of Capt. G. F. Lyon,' 1824. In 1823 he made an unsuccessful attempt in the 'Griper' to enter Repulse Bay, in the arctic regions, through Sir Thomas Rowe's Welcome. Of this expedition he also published a narrative. Subsequently he passed several years in Mexico, and died on the passage to England 8 Oct., 1832. His remaining works are 'The Sketch Book of Capt. F. G. Lyon, during eighteen months' residence in Mexico,' 1827, and 'Journal of a Residence and Tour in the Republic of Mexico in 1828,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1828.

LYONNET, PETER, a Dutch naturalist and engraver, born at Maestricht 21 July, 1707; died at the Hague 10 Jan., 1789.

LYONS, EDMUND, Lord Lyons, of Christ Church, a British admiral, born at Burton, near Christ Church, Hants, 21 Nov., 1790. When only in his eighth year he accompanied Sir Richard Bickerton on a cruise to sea, and in 1801 he was placed as a volunteer on board the 'Royal Charlotte' yacht. Two years later he obtained his midshipman's warrant. He accompanied Sir John Duckworth's expedition to the Dardanelles 1804, and went to the East Indies 1807. In 1809, as lieutenant of the 'Barraouta,' he achieved his first success. He was one of the foremost in the escalade of the castle of Belgica, accomplished during a terrific storm. In this exploit Mr. Lyons displayed that skill and boldness which stamped him as a true British sailor. The noise of this little victory was received gladly in England, and scarcely had Lyons reached his twentieth year, when Admiral Drury appointed him his flag-lieutenant on board the 'Minden.' Within a twelvemonth after this he sailed by the coast of Java to await the arrival of the expedition then fitting out in India for the reduction of that island. Whilst lying off Java he received some prisoners, including an intelligent person, from whom he learnt that the Dutch expected no attack during the monsoon. Lyons immediately saw the opportunity, and with a boldness which excited astonishment and admiration put off two boats at midnight with their crews, consisting of thirty-five officers and men, to attack Fort Marrack of fifty-four guns. As the boats approached, the moon peeped out from behind a cloud and revealed the sentinels ready to challenge. All hope of surprise was gone, but it was not a moment for deliberation, and he boldly pushed on in the face of the enemy. In the midst of a heavy surf he landed his little force beneath the embrasures, and carried the lower battery, but, on reaching the hill, he found no fewer than 400 soldiers facing him. In spite of the odds against him, however, he charged the enemy, captured the fort, and succeeded in holding it. Lyons was appointed commander of the 'Rinaldo' 1812, in which vessel he escorted Louis XVIII. to France, and the allied sovereigns to England, besides affording a passage to Mr. Planta, the bearer of the treaty of Paris. In 1814 he received post-rank. The peace which ensued compelled Captain Lyons to remain for some years inactive, but at the first sound of war he was ready and eager again. In 1828 he commanded the 'Blonde,' and after blockading the port of Navarino, he co-operated with the French in the siege of the Morea Castle. His gallantry mainly contributed to the surrender of that place. In reward he received the insignia of the order of St. Louis of France, and of a knight-commander of the Greek order of the Redeemer. Lyons entered the

LYONS.

Black Sea with the 'Blonde,' which was the first British man-of-war ever seen there. In May, 1832, whilst in command of the 'Madagascar,' he witnessed Ibrahim Pacha's bombardment of Acre, and in 1833 he escorted King Otho from Trieste to Greece. In 1835 he was knighted and made a K.C.H.; and in the same year appointed minister plenipotentiary at Athens. He afterwards filled the same high diplomatic position at Bern and Stockholm. He was created a baronet 1840, and made a civil G.C.B. 1844. His nomination as second in command of the Mediterranean fleet in Nov., 1853, brought him from his embassy at Stockholm to commence that brilliant termination of his career which gives him a conspicuous place in our naval history. In 1855 he took the chief command of the Mediterranean fleet, and his aid during the whole campaign, from the time he so admirably escorted the allied armies to the Crimea down to their final success, was most valuable and effective. His vessel, the 'Agamemnon,' was to be seen here, there, and everywhere, but always in the right place, and it was chiefly to the determination of Admiral Lyons to possess himself of Balaclava that the lives of thousands were saved. A series of victories followed the admiral everywhere. Kinburn fell, the fortress of Kertch was taken, and the attack of the fleet against the fortifications of Sebastopol was well carried out. Admiral Lyons's part in all these operations will be ever remembered. He was raised to the peerage 1856; and died at Arundel Castle, Sussex, 23 Nov., 1858.

LYONS, ISRAEL, a Polish Jew, who was a silversmith and a teacher of the Hebrew language at Cambridge, wrote 'The Scholar's Instructor, or Hebrew Grammar,' and 'Observations and Enquiries relating to various parts of Scripture History.' Died 19 Aug., 1770.

LYONS, ISRAEL, son of the preceding, born at Cambridge 1730, died about 1775. In early life he displayed great inclination to learning, particularly the mathematics. In 1755 he began to study botany, in which he became well versed. He had large materials for a 'Flora Cantabrigiensis.' In 1758 he published a Treatise on Fluxions, and in 1763 appeared his 'Fasciculus Plantarum circa Cantabrigiam nascentium quæ post Raium observatæ fuere.' In 1764 he read a course of lectures on botany at Oxford, at the instance of Mr. (afterwards Sir Joseph) Banks, whom he first instructed in that science. In 1773 he was appointed by the Board of Longitude to proceed to the North Pole with Capt. Phipps, afterwards Lord Mulgrave. He had 100*l.* per annum for calculating the Nautical Almanac, and frequently received presents from the Board of Longitude for his inventions. His 'Calculations in Spherical Trigonometry abridged' are in the Philosophical Transactions, and, after his death, his name appeared on the title-page of 'A Geographical Dictionary,' the astronomical portion of which was taken from his papers.

LYRA, NICHOLAS DE, a Franciscan of the fourteenth century, was born of Jewish parents, at Lyre, in Normandy, about 1270. On embracing Christianity, he became an eminent teacher at Paris. Died 23 Oct., 1340. His Commentaries on the Bible were printed at Rome in 5 vols. folio; and at Antwerp, in 6 vols.

LYSANDER, a famous Spartan general, who defeated the Athenian fleet, and ended the Twenty-seven Years' war. He fell in battle a.c. 395.

LYSERUS, POLYCARP, a Protestant divine, born at Winenden, in Germany, 1552. He became minister of the church at Dresden, and died in 1601. His works consist chiefly of Commentaries on the Old Testament; and a Harmony of the Gospels. He is to be distinguished from Johannes Lyserus, a divine, who wrote in favour of polygamy, and who died in 1684.

LYSIAS, an Athenian orator, who died a.c. 375, aged 80. Thirty-five of his orations are extant. The best editions of Lysias are by Taylor (1739), Förtsch (1829), and Franz (1831).

LYSIMACHUS, one of Alexander's generals, who became king of Thrace and Macedonia, was killed in battle 281 a.c.

LYSIPPUS, a celebrated Greek sculptor, who flourished in the time of Alexander the Great.

LYSONS, DANIEL, D.C.L., M.D., a physician, born in Gloucestershire, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, from whence he removed to a fellowship in All Souls, where he took the degree of doctor of laws in 1759; but afterwards he studied physic, and graduated in that faculty 1764. He settled in practice at Bath, and died there 1800. He published, Essay on Camphor and Calomel in Fever; Practical Essays on Intermittents, &c.; Further Considerations on the Effects of Calomel and Camphor.

LYSONS, DANIEL, F.S.A., a topographer, born 1760, was son of the Rev. Samuel Lysons, rector of Rodmarton, Gloucestershire. He received his academical education at St. Mary Hall, Oxford (M.A. 1785). Taking orders, he served for some time the curacy of Putney, where he commenced his survey of the 'The Environs of London.' In this undertaking he was encouraged by Horace Walpole, who made him his chaplain. The work appeared in 4 vols. 4to., 1792-6, comprising the parishes within a circuit of twelve miles round the metropolis. In 1800 he published a separate volume containing an account of those parishes in Middlesex which were not included in the 'Environs.' He afterwards engaged with his brother in that great undertaking the 'Magna Britannia.' On the death of his uncle, Daniel Lysons, M.D. (mentioned above), he succeeded to the family estates in Gloucestershire, and in 1804 obtained the living of Rodmarton. Died 3 Jan., 1834. His MS. collections are in the British Museum.

LYSONS, SAMUEL, brother of the preceding, was born at Rodmarton 1763. He was educated at Bath, and afterwards entered as a student of the Middle Temple, where he was called to the bar. On the death of Mr. Astle he was appointed keeper of the records in the Tower. Died 10 April, 1819. His works are The Antiquities of Gloucestershire, folio; The Roman Remains discovered by him at Woodchester; Collection of Roman Remains; 'Magna Britannia,' in conjunction with his brother.

LYTE, HENRY, a botanist, born in Somersetshire 1520. He was educated at Oxford, after which he travelled into foreign countries, and on his return formed one of the finest gardens in England on his paternal estate. He published a translation of 'Dodoens' Herbar,' 1578, and died 1607.

College, Oxford, and next to the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar, which he quitted for the church, and in 1745 was created doctor of laws. In 1748 he was made dean of Exeter, and in 1762 consecrated bishop of Carlisle. He became president of the Society of Antiquaries in 1765, and died 23 Dec., 1768. He wrote several papers in the Archæologia, and a Memoir on the authenticity of a Copy of Magna Charta.

LYTTELTON, GEORGE, first Lord Lyttelton, was the eldest son of Sir Thomas Lyttelton, of Hagley, Worcestershire, and born there 1709. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford, after which he became a member of the House of Commons, where he distinguished himself by his opposition to Sir Robert Walpole, on whose resignation he was appointed one of the lords of the Treasury. In 1747 he printed his tract 'On the Conversion of St. Paul,' for which the university of Oxford offered him the degree of doctor of laws, but he declined it. In 1751 he succeeded his father in the baronetcy; in 1754 he was made a privy councillor, and in 1755 chancellor of the Exchequer. About this time he published his 'Dialogues of the Dead.' In 1757 he was advanced to the peerage, having resigned his place some time before. In 1764 came out his principal work, the 'History of Henry II.,' 3 vols. 4to., on which he had been engaged twenty years. He died 22 Aug., 1773. The miscellaneous works of this noble author were published in 2 vols 1774. His son Thomas, the second Lord Lyttelton, was a young man of genius, but the reverse of his father in moral conduct. He died suddenly, under very mysterious circumstances, 27 Nov., 1779. The Letters and Poems published under his name are spurious.

M.

MABILLON, JEAN, one of the most learned men that have appeared in the world, was born 23 Nov., 1632, at St. Pierre-Mont, a village two leagues from Mousson, in the diocese of Rheims. He entered the order of Benedictines 1654, after which he became assistant to Father D'Acheri, who was compiling his 'Spicilegium.' He was next employed on an edition of St. Bernard, which gave so much satisfaction, that the congregation appointed him to compile 'The Acts of the Saints' of their order, which extended to nine volumes folio. His principal work, however, is entitled 'De re diplomatica,' folio, 1681, which induced Colbert to employ him in examining some titles relating to the royal family. For this purpose he travelled into Germany, of which journey he published an account. He next went to Italy, and brought back an immense collection of rare manuscripts, of which he printed a description, entitled 'Museum Italicum,' 2 vols. fol. His next work was a Latin Letter on the Worship of Unknown Saints, referring to the bodies taken from the catacombs. He died in his abbey of St. Germain-des-Prés 27 Dec., 1707.

MABLY, GABRIEL BONNOT, abbé DE, a political and historical writer, born at Grenoble 14 March, 1709; died at Paris 23 April, 1785. His 'Observations on the Romans,' and several of his other works, have been translated into English.

MABUSE, JOHN DE, a painter, was born at Mau-beuge, in Hainault, 1470 or 1499. He resided some time at the court of Henry VII. of England, and painted the portraits of the royal family, as well as of the nobility; but his best works are an altar-piece of a Descent from the Cross, at Middleburg, and another of the Madonna and Child. Died 1562.

MACADAM, JOHN LOUDON, the inventor of the improved system of road-making which bears his name, was born in Ayr 21 Sept., 1756, and died at Moffat 26 Nov., 1836. He was a magistrate for Ayrshire when his attention was first directed to the consideration of the best and most scientific principles for the construction of roads, to the improvement of which he devoted the remainder of his life. For his services the government granted him 10,000*l.*, and offered to make him a knight, but he declined the honour, which was, however, conferred upon his son.

MAC ARDELL, JAMES, an English mezzotint engraver, born about 1710; died 1795.

MACARIUS, St., an anchorite, was born at Alexandria about 301, and died about 391. He was a disciple of St. Anthony, and spent sixty years in retirement. His Homilies were printed at Paris in 1526, fol., and at Leipsic in 1698. He is to be distinguished from Macarius the younger, a monk of Alexandria, who was persecuted by the Arians, and banished to an island, all the inhabitants of which he converted to Christianity. He died about 404.

MACARTNEY, GEORGE, Earl Macartney, was the only son of George Macartney, Esq., in Auchinleck, in Scotland, and born in Ireland of 1737. In the early part of his life he travelled with the two sons of Lord Holland, and in 1764 was appointed envoy extraordinary to the empress of Russia. On his return he became secretary to Lord Townsend, viceroy of Ireland. In 1772 he was constituted a knight of the Bath, and in 1775 went out governor of Grenada and Tobago. He continued there till 1779, when, on the capture of those islands, he was sent to France. In 1776 he was created a peer of Ireland, and in 1780 appointed governor of Madras, where his conduct gave such satisfaction that, in 1785, he was appointed governor-general of Bengal; but this office he declined, and returned to England. In 1792 he was sent on an embassy to China, and after his return was created an earl of Great Britain. Died 31 March, 1806.

MACAULAY, or GRAHAM, CATHARINE, was born 1733, at Ollantigh, Kent, the seat of her father, John Sawbridge, Esq. In 1760 she married Dr. Macaulay, a physician in London, but soon became a widow. In 1763 she acquired some popularity by the first volume of a History of England, from the accession of James I. to that of the House of Brunswick. The work proceeded till it made eight volumes; but its credit failed as it advanced, and it is now no longer in request. Among her admirers was Dr. Wilson, rector of St. Stephen, Walbrook, in which church he placed her bust in her lifetime; but on her second marriage with one Graham, the doctor removed this monument of folly. In 1788 she went to America, purposely to see General Washington. She died at Binfield, Berks, 22 June, 1791. Besides her History, she wrote 'A Treatise on Moral Truth;' 'Letters on Education;' and some political pamphlets.

MACAULAY, THOMAS BABINGTON, Lord Ma-

caulay, the distinguished historian, poet, orator, and politician, was born at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, 25 Oct., 1800, being son of Zachary Macaulay, an African merchant, well known as a staunch advocate for the abolition of slavery. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained the Craven scholarship, and some of the highest academical honours. For several years he enjoyed a fellowship at Trinity College, which he obtained at the October competition of 1822. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn, and was eventually (1849) made a bencher of that society. He also became a commissioner of bankrupts; but literature and politics, rather than law, were destined to be the chief sources of Macaulay's advancement and fame. He began to write early in life, his first contribution to the 'Edinburgh Review' being the brilliant article on Milton, an essay which at once fixed public attention, and showed that its author possessed abilities of a very high order. His subsequent contributions to the great Whig 'Review,' which have since been frequently printed in a collected form, under the title of 'Critical and Historical Essays,' increased his reputation as a writer. Mr. Macaulay entered parliament in 1830 as member for Calne, and soon distinguished himself on the Whig side of the House as an able and eloquent debater. Under Lord Grey's government he held the secretaryship to the Board of Control. His conduct with reference to the Negro Emancipation question was equally honourable to himself and to Lord Grey. Being unable to vote with the government, he tendered his resignation, which Lord Grey refused to accept, and at his lordship's urgent request Mr. Macaulay remained in office. In 1832 he was returned to parliament for Leeds, but on being nominated fifth member of the Supreme Council of India, and legal adviser to that body, he resigned both his seat and his office at home 1834. The tedium of the outward voyage to the East was beguiled by the composition of his remarkable essay on Lord Bacon. While in India he drew up a code of laws for the Indian empire, but it proved an utter failure. He returned to England 1838, in which year his father died. In 1839 he was appointed secretary at war, and in 1840 elected M.P. for Edinburgh, which seat he lost in 1847, in consequence of his refusal to vote for the abolition of the grant to Maynooth College. His literary fame had by this time greatly increased. His splendid essays on Clive and Hastings were the theme of general admiration, and in 1842 he published his soul-stirring 'Lays of Ancient Rome.' Mr. Macaulay was secretary at war from 1839 to 1841, and paymaster of the forces from 1846 to 1848. On his retirement from the latter office, and after being in 1848 elected lord-rector of Glasgow university, he devoted his time mainly to advancing the composition of his 'History of England from the Accession of James the Second,' the first two volumes of which appeared at the close of 1848. Their success was wholly unprecedented. They were universally read; and whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the author's impartiality and accuracy, there can be none as to the magnificence and lucidity of his style, and the interest of his narrative. The third and fourth volumes of the 'History,' published in 1855, maintained its popularity, and brought the narrative down to the peace of Ryswick (1697). Some of Mr. Macaulay's statements, however, met with earnest contradiction, and none more than his attack on William Penn. Nevertheless, this History of England will make its author rank by the side of Rapin, Hume, Lingard, and our other leading historians. Mr. Macaulay, who had been appointed professor of ancient history in the Royal Academy 1850, was raised to the peerage 10 Sept., 1857, by the title of Lord Macaulay of Rothley; but his career was then drawing to its close. His constitution had been shattered by repeated attacks of disease of the heart, and he died at his suburban house, Holly Lodge, Kensington, 28 Dec., 1859. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. A fifth volume of his 'History,' compiled from his posthumous papers, and completing the work to the death of William III., appeared in 1861, under the editorial supervision of Lady Trevelyan. The best edition of the entire work is that of 1858, in seven volumes. There have been numerous editions of his 'Essays' and 'Speeches'; and a collection of his 'Miscellaneous Writings' appeared in 2 vols., 1860, comprising his contributions to 'Knight's Quarterly Magazine'; articles in the 'Edinburgh Review,' not included in his 'Critical and Historical Essays'; biographies, written for the 'Encyclopædia Britannica'; miscellaneous poems and inscriptions.

M'BRIDE, DAVID, M.D., a distinguished physician and medical writer, was born in Antrim, Ireland, 1726, and died at Dublin 30 Dec., 1778.

MACBRIDE, JOHN DAVID, D.C.L., F.S.A., principal of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and Lord Almoner's professor of Arabic in that university, died 24 Jan., 1868, æt. 90. He published a 'Diatesseron,' or 'Harmony of the Gospels,' which was at one time largely used as a text-book in the university, and also a work on Mahomedanism.

MAC CAGHWELL, HUGH, Hugo Carcellus, an Irish Catholic prelate and writer, was born in the county Down in or about 1572. He studied at Salamanca, became a Franciscan friar of the strict observance, and afterwards governed for many years the Irish college of St. Antony of Padua at Louvain, in the founding of which he had been instrumental. He was professor of divinity in the last-mentioned college, and in the convent of Ara Cœli, at Rome; also definitor-general of his order. The pope ultimately selected him as successor to Peter Lombard in the archiepiscopal see of Armagh, but he died at Rome 22 Sept., 1626, while making preparations for his journey to Ireland, and was buried in the chapel of the Irish college of St. Isidore. This learned prelate published in his native language a treatise on the sacrament of penance, entitled 'Scathan Shacra Mumtenaháithridhe, ar na chuma don bhráthair bhoichd dord San Froinsias Aodh mhac Aingil, leaghtóir diadhachta a coláistí na mbráthair Neirionnach a lobbáin,' 12mo., Louvain, 1618. He was likewise author of the following works in Latin:—'Scoti Commentaria in quatuor libros Sententiarum, cum Annotationibus Marginalibus,' to which he prefixed the life of Scotus, folio, Antwerp, 1620; 'Apologia pro Johanne Duns-Scoto adv. Abr. Bzovium'; 'Apologia Apologia pro Johanne Duns-Scoto, scripta adv. Nich. Jansenium,' 8vo., Paris, 1623, under the pseudonym of Hugh Magnusius; 'Questiones in Metaphysicam,' Venice, 1625.

ceived his academical education at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the bar 1691. He became recorder of Derby, which borough returned him as one of its representatives to the parliament of 1702, and to the two following parliaments. Being attached to the Whig party, he was appointed one of the managers of the impeachment of Dr. Sacheverell 1710. For his exertions on this occasion he was made chief justice of the Queen's Bench, and in 1716 he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Parker, of Macclefield. The great seal was presented to him 12 May, 1718, with the title of lord chancellor, and in 1721 he was created Viscount Parker and earl of Macclefield. He resigned the chancellorship 4 Jan., 1725. Almost immediately afterwards he was charged with selling offices contrary to law, and with taking extortionate sums from the persons appointed, with the knowledge that the payment was to be defrayed out of the suitors' money. The trial lasted thirteen days, and the lords unanimously found him guilty, and fined him £30,000. Died 28 April, 1732.—Foss.

MCCORMICK, CHARLES, LL.B., a miscellaneous writer, was a native of Ireland. After having completed his classical studies, he came to London, and entered the Middle Temple, but devoted his attention more to literature than to law. His principal publications are: 'The Secret History of King Charles the Second;' 'Reign of George III.,' down to 1783; 'Continuation of Rapin's History of England;' 'British Cicero;' 'Light Reading for Leisure Hours;' 'Memoirs of the Right Hon. Edmund Burke,' 1797. He also projected a History of Ireland, but did not live to carry out the plan,—a fact not at all to be regretted, as he was wholly unqualified for such a task. Died 29 July, 1807, aged 55.

M'CRIE, THOMAS, D.D., a biographer, born at Dunse, Berwickshire, Nov., 1772. He received his education at Edinburgh, and was called to the ministry, but in 1806 he separated from the General Associate Synod, and joined with Mr. Bruce and others in founding the Constitutional Associate Presbytery. His death took place at Edinburgh 5 Aug., 1835. He published 'The Life of John Knox,' 2 vols., 1812; 'The Life of Andrew Melville,' 2 vols., 1819; and some other pieces, all of which were brought out in a collected form by his son, 4 vols. 8vo., Edinb., 1855-7.

M'CULLOCH, HORATIO, R.S.A., a distinguished Scotch landscape painter, died at his residence, St. Colm Villa, Edinburgh, 24 June, 1867, æt. 62.

MACCULLOCH, JOHN, M.D., was born in Guernsey 6 Oct., 1773, and after concluding his professional studies at Edinburgh, practised as a physician at Blackheath. In 1811, however, he gave up his practice on being employed by the government to undertake various scientific surveys in Scotland. He died at Penzance, Cornwall, 21 Aug., 1835. His works are: 'Remarks on the Art of Making Wine,' 1817; 'A Description of the Western Islands of Scotland, including the Isle of Man,' 1819, a work of merit, which, however, was violently attacked by Dr. James Brown; 'A Geological Classification of Rocks;' 'The Highlands and Western Isles of Scotland,' 1824; 'System of Geology and Theory of the Earth,' 1831; 'Proofs and Illustrations of the Attributes of God,' 1837.

M'CULLOCH, JOHN RAMBAY, political econo-

mist, was born in 1789 at Wlithorn, Wigtonshire. On leaving school he was placed in the office of a writer to the Signet, but did not pursue the legal profession. He settled in Edinburgh, and attended the university classes, though he never graduated. In 1817 he became editor of the 'Scotsman,' and the following year commenced a series of articles in the 'Edinburgh Review,' and gave lectures on political economy. He left Edinburgh in 1828, on being appointed professor of political economy in University College, London; but the chair being unendowed, and the number of students attending his lectures insufficient for his remuneration, he relinquished that position. In 1838 the Whig government made him comptroller of the London Stationery Office, and he continued at the head of this department until his death 11 Nov., 1864. His works on political economy, the result of forty years of study and experience, are highly esteemed. The principal are: 'Statistical Account of the British Empire,' first published in 1837, and much enlarged in subsequent editions; 'Dictionary of Commerce and Commercial Navigation,' a standard work, annually reprinted and revised; 'Geographical Dictionary,' first published in 1840, an edition of Smith's 'Wealth of Nations,' 1828, &c.; 'Treatises and Essays on Economical Policy,' 1853; 'Principles of Political Economy,' 1853; and 'Principles and Practical Influence of Taxation and the Funding System,' 1855. A writer in the 'Times' remarks: 'The genius of Mr. McCulloch was not inventive. He sifted and recast the labours of others. Statistics, rather than the principles of political economy, were his forte; but his works were generally lucid and sound.'

MACDIARMID, JOHN, was born 1779, at Weem, Perthshire, of which parish his father was minister. He was educated for the church, but relinquished that pursuit, and on coming to London became editor of the 'St. James's Chronicle.' In 1803 he published 'An Enquiry into the System of Military Defence,' 2 vols.; which was followed by 'An Enquiry into the Nature of Civil and Military Subordination.' His last work was entitled 'Lives of British Statesmen.' Died 7 April, 1868.

MAC DONALD, ALEXANDER, a Scotch Catholic prelate, was born at Bornish, in the island of Uist, 1740; nominated vicar apostolic of the Highland district 1779; consecrated bishop of Polemonium 1780; died at Salamanca 9 Sept., 1791.

MACDONALD, ARCHIBALD, a Benedictine monk, was for many years settled at Liverpool, where he published 'Moral Essays,' 2 vols.; a portion of 'Ossian's Poems,' in rhyme; and 'Companion to the Altar.' Died 29 July, 1814.

MACDONALD, ÉTIENNE JACQUES JOSEPH ALEXANDER, duke of Tarentum, marshal of France, was born at Sancerre (Berry) 17 Nov., 1705. He became general of brigade 1795, in which year he crossed the Waal on the ice, and at the head of his infantry made himself master of the Dutch fleet. As a reward for this daring exploit he received the rank of general of division. Sent into Italy (1798) as governor of the Roman States, he conquered, at Otricoli, 80,000 Neapolitans, who went to attack him. Shortly afterwards he succeeded Championnet in the command of Naples, and reduced Calabria. In 1799 he obstinately disputed with Suwarrow the passage of the Trebia, with a very inferior force. The year following Moreau, commander-in-chief of the army of the Rhine, intrusted Macdonald with the command of his left wing; and he succeeded, by an admirable march across the Alps, in making himself master of Spülgen. Disgraced in 1804 for having defended Moreau, he retired from the service till 1809. He fought, however, at Wagram, and distinguished himself so highly, that Napoleon gave him the marshal's bâton, with the title of duke of Tarentum. In 1812 he commanded the tenth corps in Russia; he fought at Lutzen, Bautzen, and Leipsic (1813); and during the campaign of 1814 he commanded the left wing of the army, and struggled incessantly against forces far superior to his own. After Napoleon's abdication, Macdonald was nominated a member of the chamber of peers, and charged with the disbanding of the army of the Loire. He became grand chancellor of the Legion of Honour 1816, and retained that dignity till 1831. Died 24 Sept., 1840.

MACDONALD, FLORA, a native of South Uist, in Scotland, who is memorable for her noble disinterestedness in helping Prince Charles, the Young Pretender, to escape after the battle of Culloden. Having directed the prince to assume female attire, she stated that he was her maid-servant, and thus succeeded in conveying him to the isle of Skye, from whence he made good his escape to France. After parting from the prince, she was arrested and imprisoned in London, but was liberated in July, 1747, when she returned to Skye. She married one of the Macdonalds of Kingsburgh, and emigrated to America, but after his decease came back to her native land, where she died 4 March, 1790. Her 'Autobiography, edited by her Granddaughter,' 2 vols., 1870, is a worthless fabrication.

MACDONALD, HUGH, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born at Morah, Inverness-shire, 1701, was nominated the first vicar apostolic of the newly created Highland district 12 Feb., 1731; consecrated bishop of Diana Oct., 1731; died at Glengarry, Inverness-shire, 2 March, 1773.

MAC DONALD, JOHN, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born in Argyleshire 1727. He was nominated coadjutor to Bishop Hugh Mac Donald, his maternal uncle, in Jan., 1761; consecrated bishop of Tiberiopolis 27 Sept., 1761; succeeded his uncle as vicar apostolic of the Highland district 1773; and died 9 May, 1779.

MACDONALD, JOHN, F.R.S., only son of the famous Flora Macdonald, was born at Kingsburgh, in Scotland, 1759. He engaged in the service of the East India Company, and rose to the rank of captain in the corps of engineers on the Bengal establishment. In scientific circles he became widely known by his experiments respecting the variation of the magnetic needle in India, at Bencoolen, in Sumatra, and at St. Helena. On his return to England, about 1800, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Royal Clan-Alpine regiment, and commandant of the Royal Edinburgh artillery. He was subsequently appointed chief engineer at Fort Marlborough, and employed for some time in Ireland. His death occurred at Exeter 16 Aug., 1831. He published some works on military tactics; a 'Treatise on Telegraphic Communication,' 1808, in which he proposed a new system of telegraphy; and a 'Telegraphic Dictionary,' 1816.

MAC DONALD, RONALD, a Scotch prelate of the Roman Church, was born at Edinburgh 1756; nominated vicar apostolic of the Highland district 1810; consecrated bishop of Arindela 1820; became the first vicar apostolic of the new western district of Scotland 1828; and died at Fort William, Inverness-shire, 20 Sept., 1832.

MAC DOUGALL, PATRICK CAMPBELL, was the son of the Rev. Hugh MacDougall, parish minister of Killin, where he was born 1800. He received his education at the High School, Edinburgh, and at the university in that city. Afterwards he went through the regular course of studies for the church, but never took licence. At this time he contributed largely to various periodicals, and later he published a collection of Essays. About 1834 he was offered the classical mastership in the Edinburgh Academy, then under the directorship of Archdeacon Williams, and in this position he continued till 1844, when, on the institution of the chair of moral philosophy in the New, or Free Church college, he was appointed the first professor. He succeeded John Wilson in the chair of moral philosophy in the university of Edinburgh 1852; and died 30 Dec., 1867.

MAC DOWALL, WILLIAM, a learned Scotchman, born in 1590, and educated at the university of St. Andrews. He took his degree of LL.D. at Groningen, and entered into the service of the count of Nassau, who sent him ambassador to England. Charles I. appointed him one of the council for Scotland, and Charles II. sent him ambassador to the Netherlands. He died in London, but when is not known.

MACE, THOMAS, a musician, born at Cambridge in or about 1613. He was one of the clerks of Trinity College, Cambridge, and an excellent performer on the lute. Mr. Mace invented an instrument called the dyphone, or double lute; but his fame principally rests upon his book, entitled 'Musick's Monument; or a Remembrancer of the best Practical Musick, both divine and civil, that has ever been known to have been in the world,' 4to., London, 1676. This work is known to all who are curious in the history of music, and, from its quaint language and gossiping character, is not without interest to the general reader. Mace was alive in 1690, but the date of his decease is unrecorded.—Cooper's Annals.

MACEDO, JOSEPH AUGUSTINE DE, a Portuguese poet, died at Lisbon 1831.

MACFARLANE, ROBERT, a miscellaneous writer, born in Scotland 1734. He received his education at Edinburgh, after which he kept a school at Walthamstow. He died of bruises received at Brentford election 8 Aug., 1804. His works are 'A History of the Reign of George III.,' 'Essay on the Authenticity of Ossian,' 'An Address to the People of the British Empire,' a translation of Buchanan's Dialogue on the Rights of the Crown of Scotland, with two Dissertations on the Getæ and Scythians, and the Goths and Scots, &c.

MACGAURAN, EDWARD, a Catholic prelate, who succeeded Richard Creagh in the archiepiscopal see of Armagh. He arrived in Ireland 1594. Being discovered by the officers of justice, he was mortally wounded while engaged in hearing the confession of a dying man. This melancholy event occurred in 1598.

M'GEE, THOMAS D'ARCY, a politician and writer, born at Carlingford, in Ireland, 13 April, 1825. In 1843 he emigrated to the United States, and obtained a position on the Boston press. At the commencement of the 'Young Ireland' movement, in 1848, he returned to his native country, and, as one of the editorial staff of the 'Nation,' was very active in promoting the agitation. When the émée was quelled he made good his escape to America, where he established 'The American Celt,' a newspaper in which he advocated the claims of Ireland to an independent nationality. During the 'Know-Nothing' movement of 1854-6, however, his views underwent a change, and he became an ardent royalist. He thereupon removed to Canada, where he received a hearty welcome; and in 1857 the citizens of Montreal elected him to the Canadian parliament. In 1864 he was nominated to the presidency of the executive council, and he retained that office till 1867, when he was re-elected to the parliament of the new Dominion of Canada, and appointed minister of agriculture in the new cabinet. He rendered himself very obnoxious to the Fenian Secret Society, by a member of which body, named Whelan, he was assassinated at Ottawa, 7 April, 1868. His works are, 'Historical Sketches of O'Connell and his Friends,' third edition, 1845; 'The Irish Writers of the Seventeenth Century,' 1846; 'Memoir of the Life and Conquests of Art Mac Murrough, King of Leinster,' 1847; 'History of the Irish Settlers in North America,' second edition, 1852; 'Life of Edward Maginn, Coadjutor Bishop of Derry,' 1857; 'Canadian Ballads,' 1858; 'A Popular History of Ireland, from the earliest period to the emancipation of the Catholics,' 2 vols., 1863; 'Speeches and Addresses, chiefly on the subject of British American Union,' 1865.

MACGEOGHEGAN, the abbé JAMES, an Irish historian, born 1702; died 30 March, 1764, at Paris, where he was attached as priest to the church of St. Mary. His 'Histoire de l'Irlande ancienne et moderne,' appeared at Paris in 3 vols. 4to., 1758-63. It has been translated into English by P. O'Kelly.

MAGGILLIVRAY, WILLIAM, LL.D., a naturalist, was appointed, in 1841, professor of natural history and lecturer on botany in Marischal College and University, Aberdeen; and died 4 Sept., 1852. His principal work is the 'History of British Birds, Indigenous and Migratory,' 5 vols., 1848-52.

MACHIAVELLI, Niccolò, was born at Florence 1469. He commenced his literary career as a comic poet, and next engaged in politics, which brought him into trouble. Afterwards he was raised to some posts of importance, and, among the rest, that of secretary to the republic. He was likewise employed in embassies, notwithstanding which he died poor 22 June, 1527. His principal works are A History of Florence; The Life of Castruccio Castracani; 'Del Principe,' or The Prince. This last treatise has been considered by some as an apology for tyranny, while others have thought it was intended to expose arbitrary power. This last opinion is more ingenious than probable. All Machiavelli's works have been translated into English by Ellis Farnsworth.

MACHIN, JOHN, an English astronomer, was secretary of the Royal Society, and on 16 May, 1713, was chosen professor of astronomy at Gresham College, in succession to Dr. Torriano. He is the author of a method for determining the quadrature of the circle; and by means of Dr. Halley's method he computed the ratio of the circumference of the circle to its diameter as far as one hundred places of decimals. He contributed some papers to the Philosophical Transactions, and composed a treatise on the Laws of the Moon's Motion according to Gravity, which is printed in Motte's translation of Newton's 'Principia.' Died 9 June, 1751.

MACHYN, HENRY, a citizen and merchant taylor of London, who, from 1500 to 1503, kept a 'Diary,' from which Strype the historian culled some important facts. This Diary was printed by the Camden Society 1848, under the editorship of Mr. John Gough Nichols, F.S.A.

MACK DE LEIBERICH, CHARLES, Baron von, an Austrian general, born at Neusslingen in Franconia, 25 Aug., 1752. He was named generalissimo of the Neapolitan troops 1798; but being beaten by Macdonald and Championnet, he was sent as a prisoner on parole to Paris, from whence he made his escape. In 1805 he was entrusted with a new command in Bavaria; but having been surrounded at Ulm by Napoleon, who compelled him to surrender at discretion with 30,000 men, he was condemned to death, though the sentence was commuted to two years' imprisonment. Died 22 Oct., 1828.

M'KENNA, THEOBALD, a political writer, died at Dublin 13 Dec., 1808.

MACKENZIE, CHARLES FRAZER, an Anglican missionary, born in Peeblesshire 10 April, 1825, and educated at Cambridge. Fired with missionary zeal, he went out to Natal (1854) as archdeacon of Pieter-Maritzburg, under Bishop Colenso. There he remained till 1859, when he returned to England; but he soon went out again (1860) on a mission to Central Africa, being consecrated a bishop 1 Jan., 1861, by the metropolitan of Capetown, with the title of 'bishop of the mission to the tribes dwelling in the neighbourhood of the Lake Nyassa and River Shire.' His labours were brought to a close by his untimely death on the island of Malo, at the confluence of the Ruo and Shire, 31 Jan., 1862.

MACKENZIE, SIR GEORGE, was born at Dundee 1636. He studied at Aberdeen and St. Andrews, after which he went to Bourges, in France, and on his return was admitted to the bar. In 1674 he was made king's advocate, and knighted. At the Revolution he settled in England, and died in London 2 May, 1691. His works upon the laws and antiquities of Scotland are numerous and valuable. He also wrote 'Moral Essays;' and his Latin compositions are elegant, particularly the tract entitled 'Idea eloquentiæ forensis,' and his 'Characteres quorundam apud Scotos advocatorum.'

MACKENZIE, GEORGE, M.D., a Scotch biographer, practised as a physician in Edinburgh, at the commencement of the eighteenth century. He was born 10 Dec, 1699; but the date of his death is unknown. His 'Lives and Characters of the most eminent Writers of the Scots Nation' appeared in 3 vols. folio, 1708-22.

MACKENZIE, GEORGE, Viscount Tarbat, and earl of Cromarty, was born of a noble family, nearly related to that of Sir George Mackenzie. He distinguished himself by his loyalty, for which, after the Restoration, he was made a senator of the college of justice, clerk of the privy council, and justice-general. James II. raised him to the peerage, and Queen Anne made him secretary of state, and earl of Cromarty. He died at the age of 88, in 1714. He wrote 'A Vindication of Robert III., king of Scotland;' 'Synopsis Apocalypticæ;' 'An Account of the Conspiracies of the Earls of Gowrie and Robert Logan against James VI.'

MACKENZIE.

MACKENZIE, HENRY, an essayist and novelist, was the son of a physician at Edinburgh, where he was born Aug., 1745. After receiving a liberal education, he devoted himself to the law, and in 1766 became an attorney in the Court of Exchequer at Edinburgh. Ultimately his practice in that court produced him about £200 a year. He became comptroller of taxes for Scotland, with a salary of £600 a year; and altogether his annual income was upwards of £2,000. In the midst of his professional avocations he found time to cultivate polite literature. His first novel, 'The Man of Feeling,' published anonymously in 1771, excited the warmest enthusiasm in its favour. It was followed by 'The Man of the World,' 1773; and 'Julia de Roubigne,' 1777, which achieved an equally flattering success. Mr. Mackenzie also wrote several plays; but their uniform failure proved that dramatic composition was not his forte. He was a leading member of the Mirror Club, and of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and was the editor of, and chief contributor to the series of essays printed under the titles of the 'Mirror' and the 'Lounger.' Late in life he acquired a knowledge of German, and published, in 1791, a small volume containing translations from that language of some dramatic pieces, including Lessing's 'Set of Horses.' His collected Works were published in 8 vols. 1808. Died 14 Jan., 1831.

MACKENZIE, WILLIAM, M.D., a famous oculist of Glasgow, died Aug., 1868, aged 74. He was the author of several works, among which his treatises on the physiology of vision and diseases of the eye are best known.

MACKINNON, DANIEL, colonel of the Coldstream Guards, was born 1791, entered the army when very young, gained marked distinction by his bravery in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, and died 22 June, 1836. By command of King William IV. he wrote a valuable history of 'The Origin and Services of the Coldstream Guards,' 1833.

MACKINTOSH, SIR JAMES, a distinguished author and statesman, born at Aldowie, near Inverness, 24 Oct., 1765. After having studied at Aberdeen and Edinburgh he graduated in medicine 1787, but subsequently chose the law as his profession. Previous to his call to the bar he visited the Continent, and on his return published his 'Vindiciæ Gallicæ,' 1791, in defence of the French Revolution and its English admirers against the accusations of Mr. Burke. This work produced a great sensation, and had the effect of materially checking the tide of popular opinion, which then ran in favour of Mr. Burke's sentiments. In 1799 Mackintosh delivered, in the hall of Lincoln's Inn, a course of lectures on the Law of Nature and Nations, in allusion to which Pitt said that 'he had never met with anything so able or so elegant on the subject in any language.' In 1803 Mackintosh appeared as advocate on behalf of M. Peltier, who had been indicted for a libel on the First Consul of France, and defended his client in a speech which was pronounced by Lord Ellenborough to be 'the most eloquent oration he had ever heard in Westminster Hall.' On 21 Dec., 1803, he received the honour of knighthood, and was appointed recorder, or criminal judge, of Bombay, where he resided for several years, distinguished by his temperate and impartial administration of justice, and his active zeal in behalf of literature and science. In 1813 he was elected M.P. for Nairn, in Scotland, and he continued to sit in the House of

MACLAURIN.

Commons till his death. Whilst in parliament he supported all liberal measures; but his efforts were chiefly directed towards the amelioration of the criminal code, the rigour of which he was one of the most active in opposing. In 1822 he was elected lord-rector of the university of Glasgow, and in the following year was re-elected to the same dignity. In Dec., 1830, on the formation of Earl Grey's administration, he was appointed one of the commissioners for the affairs of India. Died 30 May, 1832. His principal works are 'Vindiciæ Gallicæ,' already noticed; 'Discourse on the Study of the Law of Nature and Nations;' 'Dissertation on Ethical Philosophy;' 'History of England, n.c. 55 to A.D. 1572,' 3 vols. in Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia; 'Life of Sir Thomas More;' 'History of the Revolution in England in 1688.' His Miscellaneous Works were published in 3 vols. 8vo., 1846.

MACKLIN, CHARLES, a dramatic author and actor, born in Ireland 1 May, 1690. His family name was Maclaughlin, which, on his arrival in London, he changed to Macklin. He was originally in a menial situation in Trinity College, Dublin; and in 1716 he appeared as a performer at the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields. It was not, however, till 1741 that he established his reputation in the character of Shylock, in which he stood unrivalled. He continued on the stage till 1789, when the infirmities of old age compelled him to retire, in such poor circumstances as induced his friends to open a subscription for his support. Died 11 July, 1797. Macklin wrote two comedies, entitled 'The Man of the World,' and 'Love Alamoed.'

MACKNIGHT, JAMES, D.D., was born at Irvine, in Argyleshire, 1721, and educated at Glasgow, after which he went to Leyden. In 1753 he was ordained minister of Maybole, where he continued sixteen years, and produced his 'Harmony of the Gospels,' and 'A new Translation of the Epistles.' In 1793 he published 'The Truth of the Gospel History,' for which the university of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity. In 1799 he removed to the living of Jedburgh, and, three years afterwards, he became one of the ministers of Edinburgh, where he died in Jan., 1800.

MACLAINE, ARCHIBALD, was born at Monaghan, in Ireland, 1722, and educated at Glasgow. He endeavoured to get admission into the ministry of the Church of England; but being prevented by some informality, he accepted an invitation from the English congregation at the Hague, where he succeeded his uncle, Dr. Milling, in 1745, and continued there till 1794, when the invasion of Holland by the French obliged him to leave the country. He then settled at Bath, where he died 25 Nov., 1804. Dr. MacLaine is best known by his translation of Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, 6 vols., and an 'Answer to Soame Jayn's View of Christianity.'

MACLAURIN, COLIN, F.R.S., was born at Kilmodan, near Inverary, Feb., 1698. He was educated at Glasgow, where, in his fifteenth year, he obtained the degree of master of arts, on which occasion he defended a thesis relative to the 'power of gravity.' In 1717 he was chosen professor of mathematics in the Marischal College of Aberdeen, and two years afterwards was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1722 he travelled with the son of Lord Polwarth, and while abroad wrote his treatise on 'The Percussion of Bodies,' which gained the prize of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris. On the death of his pupil he returned home, and in 1725 was elected professor of mathematics at Edinburgh. In 1734 he entered the lists against Berkeley, on the nature of fluxions, which produced his treatise on that branch of science. In the rebellion of 1745 he took so active a part in fortifying Edinburgh, that when the Pretender approached with his forces Mr. Maclaurin deemed it prudent to retire to York, where he was entertained by Archbishop Herring, in whose palace he died 14 June, 1746. Besides the works already noticed, he wrote several papers in the Philosophical Transactions; a treatise, entitled 'Geometria Organica;' another on 'Algebra;' and 'An Account of Sir Isaac Newton's Philosophical Discoveries.'

MACLAURIN, JOHN, son of the preceding, was born at Edinburgh Dec., 1734. In 1756 he was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates, and in 1787 was raised to the bench by the title of Lord Dreghorn. Died 1796. His works are, An Essay on Literary Property; A Collection of Criminal Cases; Essay on Patronage. These, with some other pieces, were collected in 2 vols., 1799.

MACLEAY, WILLIAM SHARP, an English zoologist, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1814; M.A. 1818). His writings produced quite a revolution in the opinions of zoologists as to the relations of natural objects, and their systematic classification. For several years he was engaged in Cuba in connection with the suppression of the slave trade; but he passed the latter part of his life in Australia, dying at his residence near Sydney 25 Jan., 1865. He wrote 'Horæ Entomologicae,' and various memoirs in the Transactions of the Linnean Society and Zoological Journal.

M'NALLY, CHARLES, D.D., consecrated Catholic bishop of Clogher 1844, died 21 Nov., 1864.

M'NALLY, LEONARD, an Irish barrister and dramatist, born 1752, at Dublin, where he died 15 Feb., 1830.

MACNISH, ROBERT, LL.D., a Scotch physician, born 15 Feb., 1802, at Glasgow, where he died 16 Jan., 1837. Besides contributing a number of articles to 'Blackwood's Magazine,' under the signature of 'The Modern Pythagorean,' he published the following works, which gained widespread popularity: 'The Anatomy of Drunkenness;' 'Philosophy of Sleep;' 'The Book of Aphorisms;' and 'Introduction to Phrenology.'

MACPHERSON, JAMES, was born at Kingussie, in Inverness, 1738. After studying at Aberdeen he became schoolmaster of Ruthven, where he published a poem entitled 'The Highlander.' In 1760 he produced his 'Fragments of Ancient Poetry,' translated from the Gaelic or Erse Language, which were so well received that a subscription was formed to enable the author to collect more treasures of the like description. The result of this mission was 'Fingal, an Ancient Epic Poem in six books,' together with several other poems, composed by Ossian, the son of Fingal, 'translated from the Gaelic language,' 1762. The next year appeared another epic, called 'Temora,' which was not so successful as the former. In 1764 Macpherson went to Pensacola, as secretary to Governor Johnstone; and on his return published 'An Introduction to the History of Great Britain and Ireland.' His next performance was a translation of the 'Iliad,' in 2 vols.; which met with a very mortifying reception. Soon after this Macpherson rendered himself ridiculous by his correspondence with Johnson, who treated him as an impostor. In 1775 he published 'The History of Great Britain, from the Restoration to the Accession of the House of Hanover,' to which he afterwards added two more volumes of original papers. He was next employed to defend government in regard to the American war; and he was also appointed agent to the nabob of Arcot, in which capacity he published some works against the India Company. He died 17 Feb., 1790, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

MACQUIN, ANGE DENIS, a French abbé, of Scotch descent, was born at Meaux-en-Brie 1756, and educated in the college of that city, where his extraordinary proficiency in classical learning obtained for him, at an early age, the professorship of rhetoric and belles-lettres, which he held for several years, together with an ecclesiastical benefice in the neighbourhood. Shortly after the outbreak of the French Revolution he made his escape to this country (1792), where he became attached to the College of Arms, as heraldic draughtsman, in which capacity he gained an ample subsistence. It is worthy of mention that he designed the car which bore the remains of Nelson to their last resting-place. The abbé edited several works in English, and composed also some original pieces, including the 'Tabella Cibaria,' or the 'Bill of Fare,' a Latin poem, which displays considerable ingenuity and classical learning. He died in South-wark 17 July, 1823.

MACROBIUS, AMBROSIVS AURELIUS THEODOSIUS, a Latin writer of the fourth century, who is supposed to have been a native of Greece. It is certain that he was not a Roman, and it is not clear to what religious persuasion he belonged. He held the consular dignity, and was chamberlain to Theodosius. His works are 'A Commentary on the Somnium Scipionis;' 'Saturnalia;' De Differentiis et Societatibus Græci Latineque verbi. The best editions are the Variorum, that of Gronovius, and that of Leipsic, 1777.

MADAN, MARTIN, D.D., was born in 1726. He was bred to the bar, which he quitted for the church, and became a celebrated preacher at the Lock Chapel, till, by publishing an apology for polygamy, in a work entitled 'Thelyphthora,' he lost his popularity, and retired from the pulpit. Died May, 1790. Besides the above work, he published a Comment on the Thirty-nine Articles; and a translation of Juvenal and Persius, with notes. He was a Calvinist in doctrinal sentiments. His brother, Dr. Spencer Madan, became successively bishop of Bristol and Peterborough, and died 8 Oct., 1813.

MADDEN, SAMUEL, D.D., was born in Ireland 1687. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he introduced the scheme for promoting learning by premiums at the quarterly examinations. In 1732 he printed 'Memoirs of the Twentieth Century,' or original Letters of State under George the Sixth; but only one volume of this extraordinary work appeared. He founded a society at Dublin for the improvement of the arts, in 1740, similar to that which was afterwards established in London. In 1744 he published a poem, called 'Boulter's Monument;' and he was also the author of a play, entitled 'Themistocles.' He had a deanery in Ireland, and the living of Drummully. Died 30 Dec., 1765.

MADERNO.

MADERNO, CHARLES, an Italian architect, born at Bissonna, in the diocese of Como, 1556; died at Rome 1629. The Malici palace is his masterpiece.

MADISON, JAMES, fourth president of the United States, was born in Virginia 16 March, 1751, and from an early age took an active part in public affairs. He was elected in 1809 president of the United States, and re-elected in 1813. He energetically prosecuted the war against Great Britain (1812-14). He retired into private life March, 1817, and died 28 June, 1836.

MADDOX, ISAAC, an English prelate, born in London 27 July, 1697. Being left an orphan, he was taken under the care of an aunt, who placed him on trial with a pastrycook; but he soon left that situation, and went to Scotland, with a view to the ministry among the Presbyterians. On his return to England he entered Queen's College, Cambridge, and was episcopally ordained, after which he rose rapidly, and in 1733 was made dean of Wells. In 1736 he was consecrated bishop of St. Asaph; from whence, in 1743, he was translated to Worcester, where he died 27 Sept., 1759. Bishop Maddox published 'A Vindication of the Church of England,' in answer to Neal; and fourteen occasional sermons. He was a zealous promoter of hospitals, and a great encourager of trade.

MADDOX, THOMAS, a legal antiquary and historiographer, who published, in 1702, 'A Collection of Charters taken from the Originals,' with the title of 'Formulare Anglicanum.' In 1711 appeared 'The History and Antiquities of the Exchequer,' folio, which was followed by his 'Firma Burgi, or Historical Essay concerning the Cities, Towns, and Boroughs of England.' The large collection of manuscripts formed by Mr. Maddox is in the British Museum. Died 13 Jan., 1720-7.

MÆCENAS, CAIUS CILNIUS, the friend of Augustus, and an illustrious patron of letters, was descended from the kings of Hetruria, though his parents were only of the equestrian order. Of his early life no particulars are recorded, nor is any mention made of him till, on the death of Julius Cæsar, we find him acting as the counsellor of Octavius. He also distinguished himself at the battles of Modena and Philippi, soon after which he became the patron of Horace, who was indebted to him for the restoration of his estate. He was employed on several public occasions, inasmuch that he was called Cæsar's right hand. But his greatest merit lay in the favour which he showed men of learning, of whom Virgil was the principal; and it was under the particular encouragement of Mæcenas that the poet published his Georgics and Æneid. He died in the year of Rome 745.

MÆSTLINUS, MICHAEL, an astronomer, was born in the duchy of Würtemberg about 1542. He went to Italy, where he became intimate with Galileo; and on his return to Germany he was chosen professor of mathematics at Tubingen, where he had Kepler for a pupil. He published several works. Died 1590.

MAFFEI, or MAFFÆUS, BERNARDINE, a learned cardinal, who died at Rome 16 July, 1553. He wrote a Commentary on Cæsar's Epistles, and a Treatise on Inscriptions and Medals.

MAFFEI, FRANCIS SCIPIO, an Italian marquis, born at Verona 1075. He served as a volunteer at the battle of Donawert; but he soon quitted the military life for literature. One of his first performances was a tractate against Duelling, and his next the tragedy of 'Merope,' which met with uncommon success. After this he produced a comedy called 'La Ceremonie,' which was also well received. One of his best pieces is an antiquarian work entitled 'Verona Illustrata.' He died 11 Feb., 1755; and his works have been published in 18 vols. 8vo.

MAFFEI, or MAFFÆUS, JOHN PETER, was born at Bergano 1536. He became professor of eloquence at Genoa; but in 1595 he entered the Society of Jesus. The Portuguese government employed him in writing a History of their Conquests in the Indies. After this he obtained a place in the Vatican, for the purpose of continuing the annals of Gregory XIII. He died at Tivoli 20 Oct., 1603. The best edition of his 'Historia Indicarum' is in 2 vols. 4to., 1747. He also wrote a Life of St. Ignatius of Loyola.

MAGALHAENS, or MAGELLAN, FERNANDO, a Portuguese navigator, who served under Albuquerque, in 1510, after which he was entrusted with the command of a fleet, and sent to the Indies. In the course of this voyage he discovered the straits at the extremity of South America called by his name, and soon after took possession of the Ladrone and Philippine Islands, where he was killed by the natives 1521.

MAGALHAENS, JOHN HYACINTH DE, a descendant of the above, was born at Lisbon in 1723. He was a monk of the order of St. Augustine; but on secretly embracing the Protestant religion he came to England, where he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. He died at Islington 7 Feb., 1790. He published a work on mineralogy, and several pieces in natural philosophy and mathematics.

MAGEE, WILLIAM, an Irish prelate, entered Dublin university as a sizar, and in due course obtained a fellowship, having previously taken orders. In 1801 he published 'Discourses on the Scriptural Doctrines of Atonement and Sacrifice.' This work, though more illustrative of its author's erudition than of his genius, led to his promotion in the church. In 1813 he was made dean of Cork, from which dignity he was advanced in 1819 to the see of Raphoe; and in 1822 he was translated to the archiepiscopal see of Dublin. Died 2 Aug., 1831. He rendered himself peculiarly obnoxious to his Catholic fellow-countrymen, and never lost an opportunity of insulting the faith they professed.

MAGENDIE, FRANÇOIS, a physician and physiologist, born at Bordeaux 15 Oct., 1783. He studied medicine at Paris, where, at the age of 21, he was appointed demonstrator of anatomy. After graduating as doctor he abandoned surgery, and thenceforward chiefly devoted his attention to the study of medicine and physiology. He became a member of the Academy of Medicine on its formation in 1819, and two years later he was admitted into the Institute. In 1831 he was appointed professor of medicine in the College of France. He was also president of the Academy of Sciences, physician at the Hôtel Dieu, and President of the Committee of Public Health. Died 8 Oct., 1855. Magendie, as the acknowledged chief of the experimental school, exercised great influence over physiological studies. He made some important discoveries and published many able works, the principal being—'Éléments de Physiologie'; 'Mémoire sur plusieurs nouveaux organes propres aux oiseaux et aux reptiles';

MAGINN.

'Journal de Physiologie,' 'Leçons sur le système nerveux,' 'Recherches Physiologiques et Cliniques sur le liquide céphalo-rachidien, ou cérébro-spinal.' Magendie carried on vivisection to such an extent that the government had to interfere in order to check the cruel practice.

MAGINN, WILLIAM, LL.D., was born at Cork 11 Nov., 1794, being the son of a teacher of the classics. His father trained him so well, that at the early age of 10 he was qualified to enter Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of LL.D. 1816. He was one of the earliest contributors to the 'Literary Gazette,' and, removing afterwards to Edinburgh, he contributed a large number of articles, overflowing with wit, humour, and classical allusion, to 'Blackwood' (1818-20). In 1823 he came to London, where he found constant employment for his fertile pen. He produced a romance entitled 'Whitehall,' contributed largely to most of the leading periodicals; and, in 1828, joined the staff of the 'Standard,' a Tory evening paper, with which he was more or less intimately connected until his death. He also wrote largely in 'Fraser's Magazine,' his contributions to which would of themselves suffice to establish his claim as an able critic and accomplished scholar. His irregular course of life involved him in pecuniary embarrassments, and he died, in reduced circumstances, at Walton-on-Thames 21 August, 1842.

MAGLIABECCHI, ANTONIO, an extraordinary character, born at Florence 28 Oct., 1633. He was placed, when a boy, as servant to a dealer in fruit, in which situation he discovered such a propensity to letters, that a bookseller took him into his employment, where his talents and memory made him so much talked of, that the grand duke appointed him his librarian. He lived in the midst of his books and spiders; nor could he be persuaded to leave his old apartment for one more commodious which the duke had provided for him. A threadbare cloak served him for a gown in the day, and a coverlet at night; and the only luxury in which he indulged was smoking. Died July 14, 1714.

MAGNOL, PIERRE, a French physician and botanist, born at Montpellier 1038; died 21 May, 1715.

MAGNUS, JOHN, archbishop of Upsal, in Sweden, was born 1488. He opposed the introduction of the Protestant religion, for which he was obliged to retire to Rome, where he died 1544. He wrote — 'A History of Sweden,' and 'A History of the Archbishops of Upsal.' His brother, Olaus Magnus, succeeded him in the archbishopric; but being persecuted for his attachment to the Catholic faith, he went to Italy, and was present at the council of Trent. He died 1568. He wrote 'A History of the Manners, Customs, and Wars of the People of the North.'

MAHOMET, or MOHAMMED, was born at Mecca, in Arabia, 10 Nov. A.D. 570, or 21 April, 571. He was of the noble tribe of Koreish; but being left a destitute orphan at the age of two years, the care of him devolved upon his uncle, Abu Taleh, a merchant. In his twenty-fifth year he entered the service of a rich widow, named Cadiga, who, three years afterwards, made him her husband. From the observations which he made in his trading journeys, he concluded that it would be easy to make himself master of the country if he could but institute a new religion. Animated with this notion, he began to put on the appearance of sanctity, by retiring every morning to a cave called Hira, where he continued in meditation all the day. After spending four years in this course, he ventured to promulgate the doctrines which he pretended to have received from above; but his converts, among whom was Cadica, were at first very few. Mahomet, however, persevered in his assumed character of a prophet; and though his enemies were powerful he was protected from them by the influence of his uncle. In the mean time the impostor produced his chapters of the 'Koran,' which he said were brought to him by the angel Gabriel. This work, however, was the composition of Abdia Ebn Sion, a Persian Jew, and Sergius, a Nestorian monk. On the death of Abu Taleh, the situation of Mahomet became so critical, that he removed to Tayif, where another of his uncles resided; but after some time he returned, and, on the death of Cadiga, he took three other wives: Ayesha the daughter of Abubecker, Lewda the daughter of Zama, and Hapsha the daughter of Omar, all persons of weight at Mecca. In the twelfth year of his mission he ventured to bring forward his narrative of a pretended journey to heaven in one night; the extravagance of which story staggered his followers, and increased the number of his enemies to such a degree, that he was obliged to quit the city and take refuge at Medina, then called Yathreb, where he gave his daughter, Fatima, to Ali, and built a mosque. This removal to Medina is considered as the commencement of the Mohammedan establishment, and is therefore the era, thence called the Hegira or flight, from whence the Mussulmans compute their time. It corresponds with the 16th of July, A.D. 622. The prophet having now a town under his authority, told his followers that the religion which he came to settle must be propagated by the sword, and not by the word; and that all who would not receive it should be exterminated. Two things made this proposition acceptable; one the prospect of plunder, and the other the certainty of a voluptuous paradise. Accordingly the remainder of Mahomet's history is taken up with his wars on the hostile tribes of the Jewish persuasion. In 628 he took their city of Caibar, where a young woman, in preparing a shoulder of mutton for his supper, poisoned it, and though Mahomet on tasting it spit out again what he had taken into his mouth, he never recovered, and at the end of three years died of its effects. Before his death, however, he made himself master of Mecca, and thereby fully established Islamism in Arabia. He expired 8 June, 632, and was buried in the chamber where he died; over which a small chapel was afterwards erected.

MAHONY, CONSTANTINE, an Irish Jesuit, often called Cornelius à S. Patrick, was a native of Muskerry, co. Cork. Under the pseudonym of 'Constantinus Marullus' he published 'Disputatio Apologetica et Manifestiva de Jure Regni Hiberniæ pro Catholicis Hibernis adversus Hæreticos Anglos,' 4to., Frankfurt, 1645. He was living at Lisbon 1650, being then very old.

MAHONY, FRANCIS, a journalist and littérateur, born at Cork 1805. After obtaining a thorough knowledge of Greek and Latin in a school in his native city he left Ireland, entered a Jesuit college at Paris, and subsequently prosecuted his studies at Rome. After some years he took holy orders, but his taste for literature led him to abandon his sacred calling; and, settling in London, he accepted an appointment on the staff of 'Fraser's Magazine.' His popular essays in that journal, under the nom de plume of 'Father Prout,' were published in a collected form in 1836, and again in 1860. Mr. Mahony also wrote some of the earliest and best papers in 'Bentley's Miscellany.' In 1846 he was appointed correspondent of the 'Daily News' in Rome, and, in 1849, he republished his letters, which were full of zeal for the revolutionary cause, under the title of 'Facts and Figures from Italy.' He was afterwards, for many years, the Paris correspondent of the 'Globe.' In 1864 he retired to a monastery in Paris, where he died 19 May, 1866.

MAL, ANGELO, a cardinal, and one of the ablest scholars of the nineteenth century, was born at Schipario, near Bergamo, 7 May, 1782. At an early age he entered the novitiate in the Society of Jesus, though he eventually took orders as a secular priest. He first rose to distinction in the republic of letters in 1812, when he was appointed keeper of the Ambrosian library at Milan. In 1819 he was removed to the Vatican library at Rome, of which he became principal librarian on the decease of Cardinal Lambruschini. He was raised to the purple 1838; and died at Albano 9 Sept., 1854. Both at Milan and Rome, Mal made important discoveries of classical works in 'palm-pest' manuscripts, that is, manuscripts from which the original writing had been erased or washed out, and which had then been written on again. Of the works thus recovered by him the most important is Cicero's treatise 'De Republica,' which he discovered at the Vatican in a MS. which had been re-written with St. Augustine's commentary on the Psalms. He also recovered in a similar manner fragments of Cornelius Fronto, Plautus, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Eusebius, and Homer, which he published and illustrated with learned notes and commentaries. The whole of his labours were reprinted in two collections, viz., 'Classici Auctores e Vaticanis Codicibus editi,' 10 vols. 8vo., 1828-38; and 'Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio, e Vaticanis Codicibus edita,' 10 vols. 4to., 1825-38. His Eminence also prepared an edition of the famous 'Codex Vaticanus,' but died before the completion of the work, which was published by Father Verceellone 1857. Cardinal Mal's magnificent library has been added to that of the Vatican.

MAIANO, BENEDETTO DA, an Italian sculptor and architect, born at Florence 1444; died 1498.

MAIANO, GIULIANO DI NARDO DA, uncle of the preceding, was also a celebrated architect, and executed some admirable works at Florence, Naples, and Rome. He died after 1471.

MAIGNAN, EMMANUEL, a Minim friar of Toulouse, celebrated as a mathematician, was born 1601, and died 1676. His chief works are 'Perspectiva Horaria' and 'Cursus Philosophicus.'

MAILLEBOIS, JEAN BAPTISTE FRANÇOIS DESMARETS, Marquis DE, a French general, born at Paris 1682, being the son of Nicolas Desmarets, comptroller-general of the finances. He reduced Corsica to the dominion of France, for which he received a marshal's baton. Afterwards he served with reputation in Germany, but in 1746 was defeated at the battle of Placentia by Count Brown. Died 7 Feb., 1702.

MAILLEBOIS, YVES MARIE DESMARETS, Comte DE, a French general, son of the above, was born 1715. He commanded with success in Germany, and in 1734 was sent to Holland, to support the party there which was opposed to Prussia. At the commencement of the Revolution he left France; and died at Liege 14 Dec., 1791.

MAILLET, BENOIT DE, a French writer, born at St. Mihiel 1656. He was for sixteen years consul-general in Egypt, and afterwards filled the same situation at Leghorn. Died 1738. He wrote a whimsical work on the origin of the earth, published under the anagrammatic pseudonym of Telliamed; and a Description of Egypt.

MAIMBOURG, LOUIS, a Jesuit, was born at Nancy, in Lorraine, 1610. By a decree of Pope Innocent XI. he was expelled the society for asserting the liberties of the Gallican Church against the authority of the court of Rome; but Louis XIV. made him ample amends by giving him a pension. He died at Paris 13 Aug., 1686. His works, several of which have been translated into English, are: A History of Arianism; History of the Iconoclasts; History of the Crusades; History of the League; History of Lutheranism; History of Calvinism; History of the English Schism.

MAIMONIDES, MOSES, or MOSES, BEN MAIMON, a rabbi, whom the Jews call the 'eagle of the doctors,' was born at Cordova about 1131. He was a physician in Egypt, where he attended the Sultan, and had a number of disciples. Died 1204. His works are the 'Mishna Terah,' the 'More Nevochim,' and the 'Peruschim.' The first is a code of the Jewish law; the second, which was originally written in Arabic, is an explanation of obscure places in Scripture; and the last consists of commentaries on the Mishna.

MAINTENON, FRANÇOISE D'AUBIGNÉ, Marchioness DE, was born 27 Nov., 1635, in the prison of Niort, where her father, Constans D'Aubigné, was confined. On his release he went with his family to Martinique, and died there in 1646, leaving his widow so poor, that she returned to Europe without this child, who was sent after her to France, and there taken under the protection of her aunt, Madame Villette, who was a Protestant. Another relation, however, who was a Catholic, forcibly removed her, and compelled her to profess the ancient religion, though not without much severe treatment; to escape from which she married the noted Scarron. On his death, in 1656, she obtained the continuance of his pension through the interest of Madame de Montespan, who also appointed her governess of the children which she had by Louis XIV. This connection brought her merits under the observation of the monarch, who increased her pension; and in 1679 changed her name to Maintenon, by giving her an estate with that title. In 1685 she was secretly married to the king; but never assumed the royal dignity. About this time she founded the religious society of St. Cyr, in the park of Versailles. The only amusement at this place was of the dramatic kind, and even that consisted of piecemeal from the Scripture; the principal of them being written by Racine. Died 15 April, 1719. Her letters have been printed in 9 vols.; and the Memoirs of her Life, in 3 vols.

MAISTRE, JOSEPH, comte DE, a political and religious writer, born at Chambéry, of French parents, 1 April, 1753. At a comparatively early age he became a member of the senate of Savoy, and published some political treatises, in which he predicted the French revolution, pointing out the causes which would bring about that deplorable catastrophe. His 'Considerations sur la France,' 1796, obtained a European reputation. When King Charles Emanuel was compelled to quit Piedmont, and take refuge in the island of Sardinia, De Maistre accompanied him, and was appointed his grand chancellor (1799). In 1803 he was sent ambassador to St. Petersburg, and he exercised considerable influence over the Russian court during the fourteen years he remained there. On his return his sovereign conferred upon him several exalted dignities. Died 25 Feb., 1821. Both as politician and author he was constantly occupied in opposing the principles of modern philosophy and upholding those of the Church of Rome. Of his works, which are written in a vigorous style, the best known is the treatise 'Du Pape' (1819), in which he earnestly advocates the infallibility of the Pope, against the opinions of the 'Gallican' school. By way of sequel to this work he published another 'De l'Eglise Gallicane dans ses rapports avec le Souverain Pontife.' His 'Soirées de St. Petersbourg, ou entretiens sur le gouvernement temporel de la Providence,' were published in 1821, shortly after the author's decease; and his 'Examen de la Philosophie de Bacon' did not appear till 1836.

MAISTRE, XAVIER, comte DE, brother of the preceding, was born at Chambéry 1764. He entered the service of the king of Sardinia, but when Savoy was conquered by the French he went to Russia. He distinguished himself in the war against Persia, and attained the rank of major-general, after which he devoted himself to literary and scientific pursuits. His first work, a philosophical trifle entitled 'Voyage autour de ma Chambre,' 1794, became so popular, that he published a sequel to it, under the title of 'Expedition nocturne autour de ma Chambre.' In 1811 came out his 'Lépreux de la cité d'Aoste,' a pathetic tale founded on fact; which was followed by 'Le Prisonnier du Caucase,' and 'Prascovie, ou la jeune Sibérienne,' two novels containing truthful pictures of scenery and manners in the eastern and southern provinces of the Russian empire. He died at St. Petersburg 12 June, 1852.

MATTLAND, SIR FREDERICK LEWIS, a British admiral, born in Fifeshire 1770. He entered the navy at an early age, and greatly distinguished himself as captain, successively, of the Loire and the Emerald. When Napoleon, after the battle of Waterloo, fled to Rochefort, and there formed numerous plans for his escape by sea, they were entirely frustrated by the watchfulness of Capt. Maitland, then in command of the Bellerophon, to whom the great warrior surrendered unconditionally 15 July, 1815. Capt. Maitland became in due course a rear-admiral and commander-in-chief in the East Indies. He died at sea, near Bombay, 30 Dec., 1830.

MATTLAND, JOHN, lord of Thirlestone, was the second son of Sir Richard Maitland, and born about 1537. He succeeded his father as privy seal, of which place he was afterwards deprived for his attachment to Queen Mary. In 1581 he was made senator of the College of Justice; and in 1585 chancellor of Scotland. In 1590 he was created Lord Maitland of Thirlestone. Died 4 Oct., 1595. His works are 'Epigrammata Latina'; 'A Satire against Slander'; 'An Admonition to the Regent Mar.'

MATTLAND, SIR RICHARD, a Scotch poet, born 1496. He became one of the lords of session, and held that office when deprived of sight. The title assumed by him as a judge was that of Lord Lethington; and in 1503 he was appointed privy seal, which place he resigned in 1507, as he afterwards did his judicial seat. Died 30 March, 1586. His Poems were printed at Glasgow 1830, under the editorship of J. Bain.

MATTLAND, SAMUEL ROFFEY, D.D., born about 1702, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1816. Afterwards he was called to the bar; but, abandoning the legal profession, he took orders in 1821. Archbishop Howley gave him the appointment of librarian and keeper of the MSS. in Lambeth Palace, and in 1848 conferred upon him the degree of D.D., in recognition of his services. Dr. Maitland was a F.R.S. and F.S.A. He was a voluminous writer, and among his works may be mentioned, 'Two Inquiries into the grounds on which the prophetic period of Daniel and St. John has been supposed to consist of 1200 years'; 'Attempts to elucidate the Prophecies concerning Antichrist'; 'Strictures on Milner's Church History'; 'Letters in reference to the "Tracts for the Times"'; 'A Series of Essays intended to illustrate the State of Religion and Literature in the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th centuries'; 'Essays connected with the Reformation in England'; 'Essays on subjects connected with the Nature, History, and Destiny of Man'; 'An Index to such printed books, printed before the year 1600, as are in the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth'; and 'An Essay on Chatterton.' Dr. Maitland died 19 Jan., 1860.

MATTLAND, WILLIAM, F.R.S., F.S.A., a topographer, born at Brechin about 1693. His original business was that of a travelling dealer in hair; but afterwards he settled in London, where he became a member of the Royal Society and that of Antiquaries. He died at Montrose 16 July, 1757. His works are 'A History of London, compiled from Stow, folio'; 'A History of Edinburgh, folio'; 'The History and Antiquities of Scotland, 2 vols. folio.'

MATTAIRE, MICHAEL, was born in London 1608. He received his education at Westminster School, from whence he removed to a studentship in Christ Church, Oxford. He took his master's degree in 1696, at which time he was second master of Westminster School, but resigned that place 1699 to devote himself to private teaching and literary pursuits. Died 7 Aug., 1747. His principal works are Græcæ Linguæ Dialecticæ, 8vo.;

MAIUS, or MAY, JOHN HENRY, a Lutheran divine, born at Pfortzheim, in Baden Durlach, 1653; died at Giessen 3 Sept., 1719. Among his works are a History of the Animals mentioned in Scripture; a Life of John Reuchlin; a History of the Reformation; Philological and Exegetical Dissertations.

MAJOR, or MAIR, JOHN, D.D., an historian and logician, born at Cieghorn, in the parish of North Berwick, in Scotland, 1469. He studied for a year in Christ's College, Cambridge, and in 1493 went to Paris, where he was created a doctor of the Sorbonne 1505. Returning to Scotland, he taught theology, for a time, at Glasgow; but, on account of the troubled state of the country, he soon went back to France. About 1520 he again crossed the sea, and was appointed professor of divinity, and provost of the college of t. Salvador, in the university of St. Andrews. He died soon after the year 1547. Major is now chiefly known by his work, 'De Gestis Scotorum, seu Historia Majoris Britannicæ,' published first in 1521, and reprinted in 1740. Of his other works, most of which are on logic, a collected edition was published at Lyons, 1514.—Athen. Cantab.

MAJOR, JOHN DANIEL, a physician, born at Breslau 1634; became professor at Kiel, where he founded a botanic garden; died at Stockholm 13 Aug., 1693. He wrote many works on medical and antiquarian subjects.

MAJORIANUS, JULIUS VALERIUS, was elected Emperor of the West 457. He successfully waged war against the Vandals, and was universally respected for his virtues. He was murdered 7 Aug., 461.

MALAGRIDA, GABRIEL, an Italian Jesuit, who was sent by his superiors to Lisbon, where he was regarded as a saint, till he involved himself in the conspiracy of the duke d'Aveiro, when he was sent to the prison of the Inquisition, where he pretended to visions and prophecy, for which he was burnt alive 21 Sept., 1701, at the age of 75. He published some works, which savoured strongly of madness.

MALAKOFF, Marshal PELLISSIER, DUC DE, a French military commander, born 1794; died 22 May, 1804. In 1845 his name acquired a most unenviable notoriety in consequence of a fearful act of military atrocity committed by him in Algeria. One of the hostile Arab tribes, finding themselves hotly pressed by the French under Pellissier, retreated, with their families, cattle, and stores, to some immense caverns. These caverns were surrounded, and an attempt was made to smoke the tribe, 500 in number, out of their retreat by placing lighted straw at the entrances. The Arabs refusing to surrender, it was decided to destroy these poor wretches by suffocating them. This was accordingly done, and the whole tribe perished. The event excited much indignation, throughout all Europe. In 1855 Pellissier was sent to the East, to take part in the Crimean war, and he soon succeeded Marshal Canrobert in the chief command. Subsequently he was created duke of Malakoff, was sent ambassador to London, and appointed governor of Algeria.

MALCOLM, JAMES PELLER, F.S.A., an artist and antiquary, was a native of America, from whence he came to London when young, in order to study painting at the Royal Academy, but failing in that line, he had recourse to engraving, and executed a number of topographical plates, chiefly for the works of Mr. Gough and Mr. Nichols. He also published 'Londinum Redivivum; or an account and modern Description of London,' 4 vols.; 'Letters between the Rev. James Granger and many eminent Men;' 'First Impressions, or Sketches from Art and Nature;' 'Anecdotes of the Manners and Customs of London;' 'Miscellaneous Anecdotes;' and 'An Historical Sketch of the Art of Caricaturing.' Died 5 April, 1815.

MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, was born 2 May, 1769, near Langholm, in Dumfries-shire, and in 1782 went out as a cadet to the East Indies. He was present at the taking of Seringapatam, and of the Cape of Good Hope; and subsequently was sent upon a diplomatic mission to the court of Persia. On his return to Calcutta he was made private secretary to the governor-general; and in June, 1805, was appointed chief agent of the governor-general, which office he held till March, 1806, having in the course of that period concluded several important treaties with the native princes. He was also employed in several important missions under Lord Minto, and on the occasion of a third visit to Persia, in 1810, the Shah made him a khan, and sepaldar of the empire. On his return to England (1812) he received the honour of knighthood, and was thanked and rewarded by the directors of the East India Company. He returned to India 1816, and remained there till 1822, having in the meantime greatly distinguished himself both by his political and military services, particularly by his conduct at the battle of Mehedpoor, for which he received the thanks of the House of Commons, and a grant of £1000 per annum from the East India Company. In 1827 he went out as governor of Bombay, where he remained till 1831. In the latter year he was returned to parliament for Launceston; but he did not succeed in procuring a seat in the House after the dissolution of 1832. He died in London 30 April, 1833. As an author, he is chiefly known by his 'History of Persia,' 2 vols., 1815. He also wrote a 'Sketch of the Sikhs;' 'Memoir of Central India;' 'Political History of India, from 1784 to 1823;' 'The Government of India;' and a Life of Lord Clive.

MALDONAT, JOHN, a Spanish Jesuit and biblical commentator, born 1534; died at Rome 5 Jan., 1583.

MALEBRANCHE, NICOLAS, a French philosopher, born at Paris 6 Aug., 1638. After studying in the Sorbonne, he became a member of the congregation of the Oratory, and devoted himself to metaphysics and the Cartesian philosophy. Died 13 Oct., 1715. His works are 'De la Recherche de la Vérité,' 1674; 'Conversations Chrétiennes;' 'Traité de la Nature et de la Grâce;' 'Entretien sur le Métaphysique et la Religion;' 'Traité de l'Amour de Dieu;' 'Entretiens d'un Philosophe Chrétien, et d'un Philosophe Chinois sur l'existence et la nature de Dieu.'

MALESHERBES, CHRÉTIEN GUILLAUME DE LA MOIGNON DE, was born at Paris 6 Dec., 1721. He succeeded his father as president of the Court of Aids; besides which he had the superintendence of the press, in which office he acted with great lenity. In 1771, on the abolition of the legal constitution, Malherbes was banished to his country seat; but he was recalled three years afterwards, and made minister of state, which post he soon resigned, and then went to Switzerland. In 1786 he was again consulted on the state of the nation; but, considering it as irretrievable, he retired to his country house, where he employed himself in agricultural pursuits. From thence, however, he hastened, of his own accord, to plead the cause of his sovereign, in 1792; and he was one of the last who took leave of him before his execution. The fate of this loyal subject was now determined; but he awaited it with fortitude, and suffered on the scaffold, with his daughter and her child, 22 April, 1794. He wrote 'An Essay on Rural Economy,' and some Memoirs on the state of France.

MALHERBE, FRANÇOIS DE, a French poet, born at Caen about 1555. He was introduced at court by Cardinal du Perron, and enrolled among the pensioners of Henry IV. and of Mary de Medicis. His works are still in estimation. Died 16 Oct., 1628.

MALIBRAN, MARIA FELICITA, a highly-accomplished vocalist, was born at Paris 24 March, 1808, being the daughter of Signor Garcia, a tenor at the Italian Opera, who compelled her from infancy to practise singing. In 1825 she made her debut in London in the character of 'Rosina' in 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' and she next played the part of 'Felicia' in 'Le Crociato in Egitto.' Towards the close of the same year she sang at the York Musical Festival, but with little success; and in 1826 she accompanied her father to New York, where she became the wife of F. E. Malibran, a French merchant and banker of great reputed wealth, who, however, became bankrupt within a year of their marriage. A separation ensued, and Madame Malibran arrived at Paris in 1827 without any means of subsistence. On 12 Jan., 1828, she made her first bow to a French audience at the Grand Opera, as 'Scimiramide' in Rossini's opera of that name. It would be impossible to describe the enthusiasm she evoked; she was at once engaged as prima donna at the Théâtre Italien; and from that moment her professional career was a continued series of ever-increasing successes and triumphs. She appeared successively at Rome, Milan, Venice, and Naples; and in 1835 returned to London, where her performances at Drury Lane were hailed with the most unbounded applause. The next year she again visited Paris, where, her first marriage having been declared void, she married M. de Beriot, a celebrated Belgian violinist. This highly-gifted artiste was seized with illness at the musical festival at Manchester, on 14 Sept., 1836, and died on the 23rd of that month. On her arrival in London in the preceding April she had fallen from her horse, and this accident may have contributed to hasten her death. Such was the premature end of the most remarkable singer mentioned in the annals of music. She was interred with great pomp at Manchester, but her remains were eventually conveyed to Belgium, and deposited in the cemetery at Laken.

MALINGRE, CLAUDE, a French historian, born at Sens about 1540; died about 1633.

MALLET, or MALLOCH, DAVID, was born at

MALMESBURY.

Crief, Perthshire, about 1700. He became a tutor in the family of the duke of Montrose; and, having made the tour of Europe, settled in London, where he altered his name to Mallet. His first publication was the ballad of 'William and Margaret'; which was followed by 'The Excursion,' a poem; and in 1731 he produced the tragedy of 'Eurydice.' Soon after this he formed an acquaintance with Pope, who introduced him to Bolingbroke; and about the same time he was appointed under-secretary to the prince of Wales. In 1739 his play of 'Mustapha' was performed with success; and the next year he wrote, in conjunction with Thomson, the masque of 'Alfred.' On the death of Pope, Mallet was employed by Bolingbroke to vilify his memory, for which that nobleman rewarded the time-server by the bequest of his own works. This man also received a legacy of 500*l.* from the duchess of Marlborough, to write the life of her husband; but he never fulfilled the engagement; and, if anything could add to his infamy, it was that of publishing libels against Byng, while that unfortunate admiral was on his trial; for which the calumniator was rewarded with a pension and a place. He was a determined infidel, and died 21 April, 1765. Besides his plays and poems, he wrote a Life of Lord Bacon.

MALLET, PAUL HENRY, an historian, born at Geneva 1730, and, after being professor of the belles-lettres at Copenhagen, was elected to the chair of history in his native city, where he died 8 Feb., 1807. His 'Introduction to the History of Denmark' was translated by Bishop Percy, who published it under the title of 'Northern Antiquities,' 2 vols., 1770; 1 vol., 1847. Mallet also wrote histories of Denmark, of Hesse, of the House of Brunswick, of Switzerland, and of the Hanseatic League.

MALMESBURY, JAMES HARRIS, EARL OF, was the son of the author of 'Hermes,' and born at Salisbury 9 April, 1746. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he was created doctor of civil law 1793. He began his diplomatic career at the court of Spain, and in 1772 went as envoy to Berlin. In 1775 he was appointed minister at St. Petersburg, and in 1779 received the order of the Bath. In 1784 he was sworn a member of the privy council, and the same year went as ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Hague. In 1788 he was created Baron Malmesbury, and in 1795 he concluded the marriage of the prince of Wales and the princess of Brunswick, whom he accompanied to England. The year following he was appointed to negotiate with the ministers of the French republic at Lisie, but without effect. He was raised to the earldom in 1800, and in 1807 was made lord lieutenant of Hampshire, and governor of the Isle of Wight. He died 21 Nov., 1820. His lordship published 'Introduction to the History of the Dutch Republic,' 'The works of James Harris, esq., with Memoirs of his Life, 2 vols. His Diaries and Correspondence were published 1844.

MALMESBURY, WILLIAM OF, an English historian, was born in Somersetshire about 1095, and educated at Oxford; after which he entered the abbey of Malmesbury. He wrote a work entitled 'Gesta Regum Anglorum,' from 449 to 1143, published with a church history of England, in Savile's Collection, 1590; and again by Sir T. D. Hardy, 2 vols., 1840. He was likewise the author of the 'Antiquities of Glastonbury,' printed by Gale; and of the 'Life of St. Aldhelm,' published by Wharton. Died about 1143.

MALONE, EDMUND, the son of an Irish judge, was born at Dublin 4 Oct., 1741. He was educated at the university of his native city, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple, and in 1767 was called to the bar; but being possessed of an independent fortune, he retired from the profession, and devoted himself to literature. In 1780 he published two supplementary volumes to Stevens's Shakspeare, and a detection of Chatterton's forgeries. In 1790 appeared his edition of Shakspeare, and in 1795 he exposed the imposture of the Irelands. In 1797 he published the life of Sir Joshua Reynolds; in 1800 that of Dryden, prefixed to an edition of his prose works; and in 1808 he printed the Life and Tracts of William Gerard Hamilton; and in 1811 a Biographical Sketch of the Right. Hon. William Windham. Died 25 May, 1812.

MALONE, WILLIAM, a Jesuit, was a native of Dublin, and died at Seville Aug., 1656, æt. 70. He wrote 'A Reply to Mr. James Usher his Answer,' 1627.

MALOUIN, PAUL JACQUES, a French physician and chemist, born at Caen 1701; died 1778.

MALPIGHI, MARCELLUS, a physician, born at Crevalcuore, near Bologna, 10 March, 1628, was professor of medicine successively at Bologna, Pisa, and Messina; but in 1691, on being appointed physician to Pope Innocent XII., he removed to Rome, where he died 29 Nov., 1694. All his works, physiological, anatomical, and botanical, were printed at London, 2 vols., 1686; and again at Amsterdam, 1687; and another edition, more complete, at Venice, 1733.

MALTBY, EDWARD, D.D., an English prelate, was born at Norwich 1770, and studied under Dr. Parr in the grammar school of his native city, where he laid the foundation of those accomplishments which made him one of the best scholars of his day. He was next sent to Winchester School, and from thence to Pembroke College, Cambridge, where his academical career was most brilliant. Soon after taking orders he was appointed chaplain to Bishop Pretymann, of Lincoln, and from 1824 to 1833 he was preacher at Lincoln's Inn. He was made bishop of Chichester 1831; translated to Durham 1836; resigned the latter see and retired into private life on a pension of 4000*l.* a year 1856; and died 3 July, 1859. Bishop Maltby published 'Illustrations of the Truth of the Christian Religion,' 1802; an edition of Morell's 'Thesaurus,' or, as he termed it, 'Lexicon Græco-Prosoodiacum,' 1815; 'A New and Complete Greek Gradus,' 1830; and some volumes of Sermons.

MALTE-BRUN, CONRAD, a French geographer, was born 12 Aug., 1775, at Thisted, in Jutland, and died 14 Dec., 1826, at Paris, where he had spent the last thirty years of his life, being highly distinguished for his geographical learning and literary abilities. Having given offence by his political writings, he was banished from his native country (1799), whence he repaired to Sweden, and subsequently to France. He published, 'Géographie Mathématique, Physique, et Politique,' in collaboration with Mentelle, 16 vols., 1803-5; 'Tableau de la Pologne ancienne et moderne;' 'Précis de la Géographie Universelle,' 7 vols., 1820-27, which has been translated into English; besides various political works and poems. He was also a contributor to the 'Biographie Universelle.'

MANBY.

MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, a political economist, born at Albury, Surrey, 1766. He graduated with distinction at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship and took holy orders. In 1798 he published anonymously his 'Treatise on Population,' but put his name to a fourth edition of the work, which appeared in 1803. In 1804 he was appointed professor of history and political economy at Haileybury College, and held that situation till his death, which took place at Bath 29 Dec., 1834. In addition to the above-mentioned work, Mr. Malthus was the author of various pieces relating to political economy, but his Treatise on Population is that by which he will be chiefly remembered. The title of the 6th and last revision is 'An Essay on the Principle of Population, or a View of its past and present Effects on Human Happiness, with an Inquiry into our Prospects respecting the future Removal or Mitigation of the Evils which it occasions,' 1826. The doctrine which he there lays down, of refusing assistance to poverty, for the purpose of preventing over-population, which he insists upon as the cause of all the evil and misery that is apparent, has not been without advocates; but it has met with a greater number of opponents, and among them some of the ablest writers on the subject.

MALUS, ÉTIENNE LOUIS, a mathematician, born at Paris 23 June, 1775. He became a professor in the military school at Metz after which he served as an engineer in the army, and went to Egypt, where he discovered a new branch of the Nile. He also drew a map of the country, on which he wrote a memoir, inserted in the 'Decade Egyptienne.' After distinguishing himself in several actions, he returned to Europe, and in 1811 obtained the Copleyan medal from the Royal Society, for his discoveries and experiments on double refraction. He was director of the Polytechnic school, a major of engineers, and superintendent of the fortifications. Died 23 Feb., 1812.

MALVEZZI, VIRGILIO, an Italian marquis and scholar, who was sent to London as ambassador from Philip IV. of Spain. He wrote 'Discourses upon Tacitus,' and several other works, which have been translated into English. Born at Bologna 1599; died 11 Aug., 1654.

MAMBRUN, PIERRE, a French Jesuit and Latin poet, born 1581; died 31 Oct., 1661.

MAN, CORNELIUS DE, a Dutch painter, born at Delft 1621; died 1706.

MANARA, PROSPERO, Marquis DI, an Italian poet and statesman, born at Taro, in the duchy of Parma, 14 April, 1714; died at Parma 2 Feb., 1800.

MANBY, Captain GEORGE WILLIAM, F.R.S., the inventor of several kinds of apparatus for saving the lives of shipwrecked mariners, was born at Hilgay, Norfolk, 28 Nov., 1765, and died at Southtown, near Great Yarmouth, 18 Nov., 1854. For his humane inventions he received from government sums amounting in the aggregate to about 7,000*l.* Captain Manby must also be numbered among our topographical writers, he having published in 1801 'The History and Antiquities of the Parish of St. David, South Wales.' His other publications are, 'Sketches of the History and Natural Beauties of Clifton,' 1802; 'Guide from Clifton, through the counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, and Brecknock,' 1802; 'On the Preservation of Shipwrecked Persons,' 1812; and 'Journal of a Voyage to Greenland in 1821, 4to., 1822, and again 1823.

MANBY, PETER, dean of Derry, in Ireland, turned Catholic in the reign of James II., and published several pieces in detence of his adopted faith. Died 1697.

MANCINELLI, ANTONIO, an Italian grammarian and poet, born at Veletri 1452; died at Rome about 1506. The story of his having had his hands cut off and his tongue plucked out by order of Pope Alexander VI. is a fiction.

MANCINI, LAURA BEATRICE, a Neapolitan lady, the wife of Pasquale Stanislao Mancini, died 1869. A volume of her poems was published in 1861, and she was also the author of 'Ines de Castro,' a tragedy.

MANDEVILE, Sir JOHN, an English traveller, born at St. Alban's about 1300. He left his native country 1322, and did not return till 1356, to the surprise of his friends, who thought he had been long dead. He went abroad again soon afterwards, and died at Liege 17 Nov., 1371. His travels in Tartary, the Holy Land, and India, were published in 1568, 4to., and again in 1727, 8vo. The narrative is entertaining, but full of romantic stories.

MANDEVILLE, BERNARD DE, M.D., was born in Holland about 1670. He came to England at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and obtained notice by some works which indicated considerable ingenuity, mixed with much extravagance. They are: 'The Virgin unmasked,' 1709; 'A Treatise on the Hypochondriac and Hysteric Passions'; 'The Grumbling Hive, or Knaves turned honest,' afterwards entitled, 'The Fable of the Bees,' 1723; 'Free Thoughts on Religion; An Inquiry into the Origin of Honour, and usefulness of Christianity in War.' His 'Fable of the Bees' was attacked by several writers, particularly Bishop Berkeley, in his 'Alciphron,' to whom Mandeville replied. Died 21 Jan., 1733.

MANES, the founder of a sect about the year 267. He obtained the tenets which made his name famous from the books of Scythianus, an Arabian, who maintained two co-eternal principles, one good and the other evil. Upon this stock Manes set up as an heresiarch, blending with the philosophy of Scythianus, or rather of Empedocles, some notions partly Christian and partly heathen. He also pretended to the gift of healing; but failing to cure the son of the king of Persia, he was flayed alive, after which his body was given to the dogs, A.D. 278.

MANETHO, an Egyptian historian, who was high priest of Heliopolis, in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus. He wrote the history of his country in Greek, and pretended to have taken it from the sacred inscriptions on the pillars of Hermes Trismegistus.

MANFRED, or MAINFROI, prince of Tarentum, and king of the Two Sicilies by usurpation, was born about 1231, being an illegitimate son of the Emperor Frederick II. On the death of his brother Conrad (1254) he was charged with the administration of the kingdom during the minority of Conradin, and he availed himself of this position to assume the sovereignty. Excommunicated by Urban IV., who preached a crusade against him, he fell at the battle of Grandella, near Benevento, 26 Feb., 1266, where his army was vanquished by Charles, count of Anjou, who succeeded him.

MANFREDI, EUSTACHIO, an astronomer, born at Bologna 20 Sept., 1674; died there 15 Feb., 1739.

MANNING.

MANGEY, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, was born at Leeds 1684, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1707; M.A. 1711; LL.D. 1719; D.D. 1725). He was successively rector of St. Nicholas, Guildford, and St. Mildred, Bread Street, London, preacher at Lincoln's Inn, prebendary of Durlham, and vicar of Ealing, Middlesex. Died 6 March, 1755. His principal works are, Discourses on the Lord's Prayer; Remarks on Toland's Nazarenus; and an edition of Philo Judæus, 2 vols. fol.

MANILIUS, MARCUS, a Latin poet, whose age is uncertain, some placing him in the time of Augustus, and others, with more probability, in the reign of Theodosius the Great. His poem, entitled 'Astronomicum,' was first published at Bologna in 1474.

MANIN, DANIELE, an Italian politician and revolutionary leader, born at Venice 1804. He became an advocate, and was highly popular among the opponents of the Austrian domination. At the time of the outbreak of the French revolution he was in prison at Venice, having been arbitrarily arrested by the Austrian police; but the people rose and set him at liberty, whereupon he, with Tomaseo, put himself at the head of the national movement, proclaimed the republic of Venice, and drove out the Austrians, who subsequently besieged the city, which gallantly held out against them from Aug., 1848, to Aug., 1849. On the termination of this memorable siege, Manin withdrew to Paris, where he gained a livelihood by teaching Italian. He died at Paris 22 Sept., 1857.

MANLEY, Mrs. MARY, was born at Guernsey, of which island her father, Sir Roger Manley, was governor. He wrote 'Commentarii de Rebellione Anglicana,' 1686; and a History of the War of Denmark. The daughter was left by her parents in the care of a cousin, who seduced, and then abandoned her. She now had recourse to her pen for a support, and in 1696 produced a tragedy, called 'The Royal Mischief,' which brought her into notice. After this she published a work, entitled 'The New Atlantis,' in which she satirised many persons of rank, and was in consequence brought before the privy-council, but escaped punishment. She next assisted Swift in writing the 'Examiner,' and in 1717 brought out another tragedy, called 'Lucius.' In the latter part of her life she became the mistress of Alderman Barber, and died 11 July, 1724.

MANNERS, JOHN, an English Jesuit, born in London 1609; died after 1670. He wrote 'The Unwearing Searcher,' a controversial work, 8vo., Lond., 1670.

MANNERS, JOHN, Marquis of Granby. See GRANBY.

MANNERT, CONRAD, a German historical and geographical writer, born 17 April, 1756, at Altdorf; died 27 Sept., 1834, at Munich, where he was professor of history. One of the best-known of his numerous works is an excellent 'Geography of the Greeks and Romans,' written in collaboration with Ueckert.

MANNI, DOMENICO MARIA, a celebrated printer, grammarian, and antiquary, born 8 April, 1690, at Florence, where he died 30 Nov., 1788.

MANNING, OWEN, was born at Orillingbury, Northamptonshire, 11 Aug., 1721. He received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow. He took the degree of B.D. in 1753, and in 1760 obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Lincoln. In 1763 he was presented to the vicarage of Godalming, Surrey, and, in 1769, to the rectory of Pepperharrow, in the same county. Died 9 Sept., 1801. Mr. Manning published the Saxon Dictionary, begun by Mr. Edward Lye; also Illustrations of the Will of Alfred; and two sermons. After his death appeared his History and Antiquities of the County of Surrey, completed by Mr. Bray, in 3 vols. fol.

MANNING, ROBERT, a Catholic divine, received his education in the English college at Douay, where he was some time professor of humanity and philosophy. Afterwards he returned to this country on the mission, and died in Essex 4 March, 1730-1. He wrote 'Modern Controversy; or, a plain and rational account of the Catholic Faith,' 1720; 'England's Conversion and Reformation compared,' 1725; 'A Single Combat; or, a personal dispute between Mr. Trapp and his anonymous Antagonist.'

MANNOCK, JOHN, an English Benedictine, called in religion Father Anselm, resided for many years at Foxcote, in Warwickshire, where he was chaplain to the Canning family. He died 30 Nov., 1764. His 'Poor Man's Catechism' appeared first in 1752, and has since passed through numerous editions in England, Ireland, and America. He likewise wrote 'The Poor Man's Controversy.' Several of his MS. volumes are preserved at the college of Downside, near Bath.

MANNYNG, or DE BRUNNE, ROBERT, the first English poet who occurs in the fourteenth century, was probably born before 1270, as he was received into the order of Black Canons at Brunne about 1288. His first work was a metrical paraphrase of the 'Manuel Pecche,' by Grossete, Bishop of Lincoln; but his most important performance is a metrical chronicle of England, the second part of which was published by Tom Hearne.

MANSART, FRANÇOIS, a French architect, born 1598; died Sept., 1666. His nephew, Jules Hardouin Mansart (b. 1645; d. 1708), was also an excellent architect, and the superintendent of the royal buildings.

MANSFELD, PETER ERNEST, COUNT DE, a German statesman and soldier, born 1517. He was made prisoner in 1552 at Ivoy, which place he governed. He afterwards became governor of Luxembourg, where he maintained tranquillity, while the rest of the Low Countries was in a state of civil war. He had afterwards the entire command of Brabant. Died 22 May, 1604. His natural son, Ernest de Mansfeld, was born at Mechlin 1585, and served with such distinction in the army, that the Emperor Rodolph II. declared him legitimate. Being disappointed of his father's places and possessions, he joined the Protestant party, and ravaged several of the provinces belonging to the house of Austria. He died 20 Nov., 1626.

MANSFIELD, WILLIAM MURRAY, EARL OF, was the fourth son of David, earl of Stormont, and born 2 March, 1705, at Perth. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected from thence to Christ Church, Oxford. He next entered as a student in Lincoln's Inn, and in due course was called to the bar. In 1742 he was made solicitor-general; but in 1753 the charge of Jacobitism was brought against him, which he repelled with indignation. In 1754 he became attorney-general; and two years afterwards was appointed chief justice of the King's Bench, when he was created baron of Mansfield. During the unsettled state of the ministry in 1757 his lordship accepted the office of chancellor of the exchequer, in which situation he effected a coalition of parties. At the commencement of the reign of George III., he was assailed with the utmost virulence by the self-called patriots of the day, particularly in the affair of Wilkes; and Junius poured upon him a torrent of sarcasm. In 1776 he was created an earl of Great Britain, with remainder to the issue of Louisa, Viscountess Stormont. The disgraceful 'No Popery' riots of 1780 proved a great calamity to his lordship, and more so to posterity, in the destruction of his town house, with its library and manuscript collections. On this occasion, also, he showed his disinterestedness by refusing all compensation for his loss. He retired from office 1788, and died 20 March, 1793.

MANSI, JOHN DOMINIC, archbishop of Lucca, was born there 16 Feb., 1692, and died 27 Sept., 1769. He edited Baronius's Annals, 30 vols.; a Collection of Councils, 30 vols.; and Fabricius's 'Bibliotheca Latina mediæ et infimæ ætatis,' 6 vols.

MANT, RICHARD, D.D., an Anglican prelate, was born 12 Feb., 1776, at Southampton, where his father, Dr. Richard Mant, was rector of the church of All Saints. He received a sound education at Winchester School, and afterwards became a commoner of Trinity College, Oxford, from which he was elected a fellow of Oriel 1798 (M.A. 1800; D.D. 1815). In 1810 he was presented to the vicarage of Great Coggeshall, Essex; in 1813 he became chaplain to Dr. Manners-Sutton, archbishop of Canterbury; in 1815 rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate; and in 1818 rector of East Horsley, Surrey. He was consecrated bishop of Killaloe and Kilsnora 1820, and translated to the see of Down and Connor 1823. The care of the diocese of Dromore also devolved upon him in 1824, under the provisions of the Church Temporalities Act, on the death of the last bishop, Dr. Saurin. Dr. Mant owed his advancement in the Church to his professional authorship, and particularly to his sermons preached at the Bampton lecture (1812), on which occasion he made a masterly vindication of the established clergy from the accusations of those who professed a greater purity of principles. This introduced him to the patronage of Archbishop Manners-Sutton, under whose auspices he was engaged, in conjunction with the Rev. George D'Oly, D.D., to prepare an edition of the Bible, with a selection of notes from the best commentators and preachers of the Church of England. This was performed in 1817, at the expense of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, by whom 'D'Oly and Mant's Bible' has been frequently reprinted. Dr. Mant published many other works, a list of which is given in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' N.S., xxxi, 9. We have only room to mention 'Miscellaneous Poems,' 1806; 'The Book of Common Prayer, with notes, explanatory, practical, and historical, from approved writers of the Church of England,' 1820; 'History of the Church of Ireland; and some tracts against the Church of Rome. Dr. Mant died at the rectory house, Ballymoney, co. Antrim, 2 Nov., 1848.

MANT, WALTER BISHOP, eldest son of the above was born at Buryton, Hants, 25 June, 1807, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1827; M.A. 1830). In 1834 he was appointed archdeacon of Down, and rector of Hillsborough, where he died 6 April, 1869. He published Memoirs of his father, the Bishop, 1857; 'Christophoros and other poems,' 1861; and some sermons.

MANTEGNA, ANDREA, a painter and engraver, born at Padua 1431; died 1505. His chief residence was at Mantua.

MANTELL, GIDEON ALGERNON, LL.D., F.R.S., an eminent geologist and palæontologist, was born 1790 at Lewes, Sussex, and bred to the medical profession, which, after being admitted a surgeon, he practised in his native town. At an early period his attention was directed to the study of geology, and during nine years he devoted every moment he could spare from his professional duties to an examination of the chalk formation of the county of Sussex, and laid the foundation of his valuable collection, now in the British Museum. In 1835 he removed to Brighton, and in 1839 to London, where he spent the remainder of his industrious life. He received his doctor's degree of LL.D. from an American university, and the government granted him a pension shortly before his death, which occurred to Nov., 1852. Dr. Mantell must be placed in the first rank of geologists, he having in the course of his researches discovered four out of five of the genera of the extinct dinosaurian reptiles, viz., the iguanodon, the hylæosaurus, the pelorosaurus, and the regnosaurus. His greatest work, 'The Fossils of the South Downs, or Illustrations of the Geology of Sussex,' made its appearance in 1822. Among his other publications we may mention 'The Wonders of Geology,' 2 vols., 1838; and 'The Medals of Creation; or First Lessons in the Study of Organic Remains,' 2 vols., 1844.

MANTELL, JOSHUA, a writer on horticulture, was brother of the preceding. He adopted the medical profession, but his brain becoming affected, he was sent to a lunatic asylum at Ticehurst, Sussex, where he died in 1865, after nearly thirty years' confinement. He wrote 'Mantell's Floriculture,' and was principal editor of 'Baxter's Library of Agriculture and Floriculture,' and the 'Farmer's Annual.'

MANTON, THOMAS, D.D., a nonconformist divine, was born at Lawrence Lydiard, Somersetshire, 1620, and educated at Oxford. About 1643 he obtained the living of Stoke Newington, which he quitted for that of St. Paul, Covent Garden. At the Restoration he was made chaplain to the king. He was also offered the deanery of Rochester, but declined it, and was deprived of his rectory by the act of conformity. Died 18 Oct., 1677. His works are in 5 vols. folio.

MANTUAN, BAPTIST, a Latin poet, born at Mantua 1448; died 20 March, 1516. His real name was Spagnoli.

MANTUANO, MARCO. See BEHAVIDIUS.

MANUEL I., Comnenus, emperor of the East, was born about 1120; became emperor 1143; and died 24 Sept., 1180.

MANUEL II., Palæologus, emperor of the East, was born 1348; succeeded his father, John Palæologus, 1391; died 1425.

MANUEL, JACQUES ANTOINE, an eloquent French senator, distinguished for his opposition to the ministry after the restoration of the Bourbons. Though forbidden to practise his profession of an advocate, he was elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and became so formidable an opponent of the government, that he was once arrested by an armed force in the chamber. Born 19 Dec., 1775; died 27 Aug., 1827.

MANUTIUS, ALDUS, a celebrated printer, born 1499, at Bassiano, in the duchy of Sermonetta. He received a liberal education, and on the completion of his studies became preceptor to the prince of Carpi, nephew of Picus of Mirandola. In 1488 he set up a printing office at Venice, and the first book that issued from his press was the Greek poem of Musæus, with a Latin version in 4to. This was followed by a number of valuable works, and the house of Aldus was the resort of learned men from all parts of Europe, among whom was Erasmus, who resided there a considerable time, while publishing his 'Adagia.' Aldus died 3 Feb., 1515. He was the author of a Latin grammar; a treatise, 'De Metris Horatianis'; and a Greek dictionary.

MANUTIUS, PAUL, son of the preceding, was born at Venice 1511. Owing to some law-suits in his family, he did not succeed to his father's business till 1540, when he carried it on with spirit. Paul likewise engaged in education, and brought up some able scholars. He was offered a professorship at Venice, and also at Padua, but declined both, on account of his avocations. He took an active part in founding an academy at Venice, and had the care of the printing-office attached to it; but in 1562 this institution was abolished by the government. About this time Paul accepted an invitation to settle at Rome, where he was employed in printing the Scriptures, and the works of the Fathers. He died there 6 April, 1574. The most esteemed of his writings are his Letters, Commentaries on Cicero, and a treatise, 'De Curia Romana.' His son, Aldus Manutius, was born 1547. At the age of eleven he published 'A Collection of Latin and Tuscan Phrases'; and he soon became an able assistant to his father, whom he succeeded 1574. Three years afterwards he was appointed professor of the belles lettres in the school of the Venetian chancery, and, in 1584, he accepted the chair of rhetoric at Bologna, where he printed the 'Life of Cosmo de Medici.' Soon after this he became professor of polite literature at Pisa. In 1588 he obtained a professorship at Rome, and died there 28 Oct., 1597. With him ended the Aldine press. He wrote Commentaries on Cicero, 10 vols.; and Letters, published 1592.

MAPES, or MAP, WALTER, a Latin poet, one of the ornaments of the court of Henry II., who esteemed him for his extensive learning and for his courtly manners. He was a native of the borders of Wales, probably of Gloucestershire or Herefordshire, and pursued his studies in the university of Paris. Soon after 1160 he appears to have been at the court and in the favour of the king of England. He was also familiar in the household of Thomas à Becket, before that great man was raised to the see of Canterbury. Mapes was sent on a mission to the court of Louis le Jeune, king of France; and attended the council called by Pope Alexander III. at Rome. He obtained various ecclesiastical dignities, being canon of the churches of Salisbury and London, preceptor of Lincoln, incumbent of Westbury, Gloucestershire, with many other benefices, and, finally, archdeacon of Oxford 1197. His death is supposed to have occurred about 1210. Among the many poems ascribed to Mapeſ is the famous drinking ſong,

'Mihi ſit propoſitum in tabernâ mori,' but the common notion that he was a 'jovial toper' muſt be placed in the long liſt of vulgar errors. All the information which can be gathered reſpecting him ſhows him to have been a wit, and a man endowed with a marked taſte for light and elegant literature. He is well known to the lovers of middle age romance as the compoſer of an important portion of the cycle of King Arthur's knights; but he was above all things remarkable for his bitter enmity to the Ciſtercian order of monks. 'The Latin Poems commonly attributed to Walter Mapeſ' were published by the Camden Society in 1841, under the editorſhip of Mr. Thomas Wright. The only proſe writings now known which go under Mapeſ's name are a treatiſe 'De Nugis Curialium,' alſo edited by Mr. Wright for the Camden Society, 1850; and a tract entitled 'Valerius ad Rufinum de non ducenda Uxore.' The treatiſe 'De Nugis Curialium' is the book in which this remarkable man put down his own ſentiments on the paſſing events of the day, along with the popular goſſip of the courtiers with whom he mixed. It is one maſs of contemporary anecdote, romance, and popular legend, intereſting equally by its curioſity and by its novelty.

MAPHÆUS, VEGIUS, a modern Latin poet, born at Lodi 1406. He became profeſſor of law and poetry at Pavia, but afterwards went to Rome, where he was appointed ſecretary of the Apoſtolic briefs. He died there 1458. Among his writings are a valuable treatiſe on the Education of Children; a poem on the death of Aſtyanax; and a ſupplemental book to the Æneid. This laſt has been tranſlated into Engliſh by Moſes Mendez, and burleſqued by John Ellis.

MAPLETOFT, JOHN, M.D., D.D., was born at Margaret-Inge, Huntingdonſhire, June, 1631. He was educated at Weſtmiſter School, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowſhip. After travelling with the ſon of the earl of Northumberland, he took his degree of M.D. at Cambridge, and then ſettled in London. In 1675 he was choſen profeſſor of phyſic in Greſham College, which place he reſigned in 1679, and entered into orders. In 1685 he was preſented to the vicarage of St. Lawrence Jewry, and, in 1689, took the degree of D.D. at Cambridge. Died 10 Nov., 1721. Dr. Mapletoft tranſlated Sydenham's Medical Obſervations into Latin; and publiſhed 'The Principles and Duties of the Chriſtian Religion.' He is to be diſtinguiſhed from Dr. Robert Mapletoft, dean of Ely, and maſter of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, who was a native of Lincolnſhire, and died 20 Aug., 1677.

MAR, ROBERT COCHRANE, EARL OF, an architect in Scotland, who was employed by James III. in building ſeveral great ſtructures. That monarch created him earl of Mar, and diſtinguiſhed him by ſo many marks of his favour, that the other nobles roſe, ſeized the favourite in the royal preſence, and hanged him on the bridge of Lauder in 1484.

MAKA, GERTRUDE ELIZABETH, a vocaliſt, was born in Caſſel 1740, being the daughter of a German named Schmälting. She appeared in London as a player on the violin in her tenth year, and afterwards became a celebrated ſinger on the Continent. In 1774 ſhe married a violoncello-player named Mara; and, in 1784, ſhe returned to this country, where ſhe was received with the greateſt enthuſiaſm. She was particularly famous as a ſinger of Handel's muſic; but could execute with equal facility the ſprightly and ſerious, and knew how to give the proper expreſſion to both. She died at Revel 20 January, 1833.

MARACCI, LOUIS, an Italian orientaliſt, born at Lucca 1612; died 5 Feb., 1700. He was profeſſor of Arabic at Rome, and acquired diſtinction by his edition of the Koran.

MARALDI, JACQUES PHILIPPE, an aſtronomer, born at Perinaldo (Nice) 21 Aug., 1665; died 1 Dec., 1729.

MARANA, JOHN PAUL, was born near Genoa about 1642. After ſuffering imprifonment, for being concerned in a conſpiracy to give up Genoa to the duke of Savoy, he went to Monaco, where he wrote an account of that plot. He next viſited Paris, and there publiſhed 'The Turkiſh Spy,' which became very popular. He returned to Italy, and died there in Dec., 1693.

MARAT, JEAN PAUL, a ſanguinary demagogue during the progreſs of the French revolution, was born at Baudry, in Neuchâtel, Switzerland, 1744, and in the early part of his life practiſed medicine at Paris. Renouncing, at length, his profeſſional purſuits for politics, he found a vent for his ſentiments in a work conducted by him, entitled 'L'Ami du Peuple,' in which he uſed the moſt inflammatory language againſt the nobility, the king, and the government. Having ſtirred up the people to a pitch of fury, he encouraged and culgiſed their moſt ferocious acts, particularly in the riots of the 10th Auguſt, 1792, and the maſſacre in the priſons, which followed in the beginning of September. After having acted as preſident of the terrible committee of the Commune, and eſcaped the conſequences of two decrees of accuſation, he was appointed deputy from Paris to the National Convention, where his conduct and behaviour correſponded with his previous character, exhibiting a ſtrange mixture of abſurdity, violence, and cruelty. On 21 March, 1793, he denounced all the generals as traitors, and all the French armies as incapable of reſiſting the enemy; when one of the deputies demanded that Marat ſhould be declared to be in a ſtate of inſanity. Accuſed by the party of the Girondists, he was tried and acquitted, when he triumphantly reſumed his place in the Convention. His career was brief; on the 13th of July, 1793, he was ſtabbed by Charlotte Corday, and inſtantly expired; enthuſiaſm of diſpoſition, excited by a deep ſenſe of the miſeries of her country, having prompted a young female thus to deliver the world from one of the moſt ſanguinary monſters that ever perſecuted the human race.

MARATTI, CARLO, an eminent painter, born 1625, at Camerino, in the march of Ancona. He ſtudied under Andrea Sacchi, and chiefly excelled in painting female ſaints and Madonnas. Pope Clement XI. gave him a penſion and the honour of knighthood. Died 1713.

MARCELLUS I., Pope, succeeded St. Marcellinus 304, and died 10 Jan., 310.

MARCELLUS II., succeeded Pope Julius III. 9 April, 1555, and died 24 days after his election.

MARCEL, ALEXANDER, M.D., was born at Geneva 1770, and after graduating in the university of Edinburgh, practised as a physician in London, where he died 19 Oct., 1822. He was a man of considerable scientific attainments and the author of several books, the principal being 'An Essay on the Chemical History and Medical Treatment of Calculous Disorders,' 1819.

MARCEY, JANE, widow of the above, died in London 28 June, 1858, at the great age of 89. She published 'Conversations on Chemistry,' 'Conversations on Political Economy,' and a number of other popular works tending to render the study of science attractive to youthful minds; also 'Stories for very Little Children,' 'Mary's Grammar,' &c.

MARCHAND, PROSPER, a French writer, born at Guise, in Picardy, about 1675; died at the Hague 14 June, 1756. He edited several valuable works, and was himself author of a History of Printing, and of an Historical Dictionary.

MARCHETTI, ALEXANDER, was born at Pontorno, in Tuscany, 17 March, 1633; became professor of mathematics at Pisa; and died 6 Sept., 1714. His works consist of poems; philosophical and mathematical treatises; and Italian translations of Anacreon and Lucretius.

MARCIANUS, a Thracian, who obtained the imperial throne on the death of Theodosius II. 450. He died 457, aged 69.

MARCION, a heretic of the second century, was born at Sinope, in Paphlagonia, where his father was bishop. His life was far from being regular, and his own father excommunicated him for seducing a young lady. Upon this he became a disciple of Cerdo, to whose opinions he added others, and particularly that of two principles, one of good, and the other of evil. He was living at Rome in 140.

MARCO POLO. See POLO.

MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS, a Roman emperor, surnamed the Philosopher, was born at Rome 26 April, 121. He was adopted and associated in the empire with Lucius Verus, his brother, by Antoninus Pius. On the death of that prince, the senate decreed the empire to Marcus Aurelius alone 7 March, 161, without mentioning Lucius Verus, but he associated him in the empire the same year. This is the earliest instance of two Roman emperors reigning together. The two brothers governed in perfect harmony, for Marcus Aurelius possessed every great quality requisite to make a nation happy, while Lucius Verus, an effeminate man, who had little merit, submitted to his brother's judgment and direction in everything. The two emperors having gained a triumph for their success in the Parthian war in 160, afterwards turned their arms against the Germans. On the death of Verus (169) Marcus Aurelius possessed the sole authority, which he exercised with great glory. He continued to prosecute the German war with vigour. In 174 an extraordinary event took place which has given rise to much controversy. The army of Marcus Aurelius being blocked up in a narrow pass by the Quadi, was in danger of perishing for the want of water, when suddenly the sky became overcast, and there fell a vast quantity of rain.

MARGARET OF VALOIS.

While the soldiers were refreshing themselves, the enemy attacked them with such fury, that they must have been defeated, had it not been for a shower of hail, with thunder and lightning, which dispirited the barbarians, and turned the victory in favour of the Romans. The truth of this story is attested by Pagan and Christian writers, but the former ascribe the deliverance to magic, or to the interposition of Jupiter Tonans; while the latter affirm that the miracle was an answer to the prayers of the twelfth legion, which consisted entirely of Christians, and which was afterwards styled the 'Thundering Legion.' In 175 Avidius Cassius, governor of Syria, revolted against the emperor, but the insurrection was soon suppressed. Marcus Aurelius associated his son in the empire 176, and died at Vienna while engaged in a war against the Marcomanni 17 March, 180. He was generally a mild and excellent prince, but through a blind devotion to Paganism he allowed the persecution of Christians during his reign. His twelve books of 'Meditations' consist of instructive philosophical maxims and observations, relating to morals and the conduct of life, and exhibiting the practical principles of the Stoics. There are several English translations of this work, but none of them are worthy of the original.

MARGARET, St., Queen of Scotland, was born about 1047, being the daughter of Edmund Ironside and sister of Edgar Atheling. She married Malcolm III., and was crowned Queen of Scotland 1070. Died 16 Nov., 1093.

MARGARET OF ANJOU, daughter of René d'Anjou, king of Naples, and wife of Henry VI. of England, was born at Pont-à-Mousson, in Lorraine, 23 March, 1420. Intrepid in the field, she signalled herself by heading her troops in several battles against the house of York; and if she had not been the instrument of her husband's misfortunes by putting to death the duke of Gloucester, his uncle, her name would have been immortalized for the fortitude, activity, and policy with which she supported the rights of her husband and son, till the fatal defeat at Tewkesbury (4 May, 1471), which put an end to all her enterprises; the king being taken prisoner, and her only son, Prince Edward, basely murdered by Richard duke of York. Margaret was ransomed by Louis XI. for 50,000 crowns in 1475; and died at the château of Dampierre 25 Aug., 1481.

MARGARITONE D'AREZZO, an Italian painter, sculptor, and architect; born about 1215, at Arezzo, where he died at the age of 77.

MARGETSON, JAMES, D.D., was born 1600, and educated at Cambridge. He was advanced to the archbishopric of Dublin 1660-1; translated to Armagh 1663; died Aug., 1678.

MARGGRAF, ANDREW SIGISMUND, a chemist, born at Berlin 1709. After studying under his father, who was an apothecary, and assessor of the College of Medicine, he attended the lectures of Neumann, and next became a pupil of Haller. In 1738 he was chosen a member of the Berlin Academy, and in 1760 was appointed director of the class of experimental philosophy, besides which he had the care of the laboratory. He made several important discoveries, particularly in the phosphoric acid. Died 7 Aug., 1782.

MARIA LOUISA, eldest daughter of the Emperor Francis I., was born at Vienna 1791. In 1810 she became the second wife of Napoleon I., to whom she bore a son in the following year; but after his abdication she retired to her native country, and contracted a morganatic marriage with her chamberlain, Count Albert Adam, of Neipperg, by whom she had several children. Died 18 Dec., 1847.

MARIA THERESA, archduchess of Austria, queen of Hungary and Bohemia, and empress of Germany, was born at Vienna 13 May, 1717, being the eldest daughter of the Emperor Charles VI. She married (1736) Francis Stephen of Lorraine, afterwards grand duke of Tuscany, and eventually emperor, under the name of Francis I. (1745). Her reign began with a war, in which all the neighbouring nations were engaged, and Maria was near losing her throne. After the war had continued eight years, a peace was concluded at Aix-la-Chapelle, and Maria immediately devoted herself to repairing the ravages which her subjects had suffered during the commotion. She built hospitals, encouraged commerce and science, and did everything which humanity and munificence could devise to render her infirm soldiers comfortable. The king of Prussia again declared war against her; but in the terrible struggle which ensued the empress maintained her position, and peace was established. After a long reign, during which she displayed heroism, virtue, and charity to a degree which endeared her to her subjects, she died at Vienna 29 Nov., 1780.

MARIANA, JOHN, a Spanish historian, born at Talavera, in Castille, 1537. He entered the order of Jesuits, and became a professor in several colleges of that society; after which he retired to Toledo, where he published his treatise 'De rege et regis institutione,' in which he attempted to justify the assassination of Henry III. The work, however, which does credit to his memory, is the 'History of Spain,' written originally in Latin, and translated by himself into his native language. It was first printed at Toledo 1592. The author afterwards continued it to the year 1621. Mariana also wrote some commentaries on the Scriptures, and died at Toledo 17 Feb., 1624.

Christ to 1083. It was continued by another hand to 1200.

MARIE AMÉLIE DE BOURBON, queen of the French. She was the daughter of Ferdinand the Fourth of Naples, Third of Sicily, and First of the United Kingdom of the Two Sicilies. Her mother was Marie Caroline, archduchess of Austria, the imperious daughter of Maria Theresa, and sister of Marie Antoinette and of the emperors Joseph and Leopold. Marie Amélie was one of five sisters, who were most carefully educated under the care of Madame d'Ambrosio. She early displayed the germs of those amiable qualities which distinguished her in after life. 'We three sisters,' said, on one occasion, the widow of Charles Felix, king of Sardinia, to M. Donnet, archbishop of Bordeaux,—'we three sisters were called respectively La Bella, La Dotta, and La Santa. La Santa was Marie Amélie.' On 25 Nov., 1809, she was married, at Palermo to Louis Philippe, duke of Orleans, afterwards king of the French. Their marriage was purely one of affection. Amid all the political misfortunes which afterwards overtook them, their domestic happiness was never for a moment disturbed, and their household virtues became proverbial in Europe. When the king fled from Paris, she accompanied him as far as Evreux, where she separated from him for safety. She afterwards rejoined him at Honfleur, and shared the difficulties of his passage to England. In the quiet seclusion of Claremont she devoted herself to the task of soothing the regrets of the king. He died in 1850; but she survived him sixteen years, dying 24 March, 1866, æt. 83. Her remains were interred on the 3rd of April, in the Catholic chapel at Weybridge.

MARIE ANTOINETTE DE LORRAINE, JOSEPHÉ-JEANNE, archduchess of Austria, and queen of France, born at Vienna 3 Nov., 1755, was daughter of the Emperor Francis I. and Maria Theresa. In 1770 she was married at Versailles to the dauphin of France, afterwards Louis XVI. It was subsequently remarked that immediately after the ceremony a fearful thunder-storm threw Versailles and all the surrounding country into the greatest terror. Anxious minds indulged in yet more fearful forebodings, when, at the festivity which the city of Paris prepared for the celebration of the marriage, a great number of people were pressed or trodden to death in the crowd, fifty-three persons being found dead, and about three hundred seriously injured. When Marie Antoinette, after the death of Louis XV., became queen, she imitated the example of Louis XII. An officer of the life-guards, who had formerly displeased her, and now was about to resign, she ordered to remain at his post, and forget the past. 'Heaven forbid that the queen should avenge the injuries of the dauphiness!' Thus she gained the affections of the people by mildness and generosity; in particular she took the most energetic measures to relieve the sufferers in the dreadful winter of 1788. But about this time she drew upon herself the hatred of the court party, who used every means to make her odious to the nation. She was accused, in pamphlets, of continually contriving plots; and though none of the accusations could be proved, and many of them were wholly improbable, yet it must be confessed that the young and inexperienced queen gave cause for them. Her lively imagination often gave her the appearance of levity, and sometimes of dissimulation. A natural restlessness led her to change, to new fashions, to a continual varying of her diversions. Great sums of money were by this means taken from more important objects. It was still more to her disadvantage that she injured her dignity by neglecting the strict formality of court manners; besides, she expressed herself with pettishness, in reply to the censures that were passed upon her. Her enemies now spread abroad a report that she was still an Austrian at heart, and a natural enemy to the French, to whose happiness she could no longer contribute. An extraordinary occurrence added fuel to the flame of calumny, while it subjected the name of the queen to a disgraceful law-suit. Two jewellers demanded the payment of an immense price for a necklace, which had been purchased in the name of the queen. In the examination which she demanded it was proved that she had never ordered the purchase. A lady of her size and complexion had impudently passed herself off for the queen, and at midnight had a meeting with a cardinal in the park of Versailles. Notwithstanding this, the enemies of the queen succeeded in throwing a dark shade over her conduct. When Calonne reported a very great deficiency in the finances, the cause was blindly charged to the queen's extravagance. At length, when the embarrassed circumstances of the government rendered it necessary to summon a meeting of the States-General, the queen was present at the opening of their first session; but from that moment her tranquillity was gone. Events soon followed which put her courage to the test. She appeared, with her husband, at the banquet which the body-guards gave at Versailles, 1st Oct., to the officers of the troops of the line, where, soon after the departure of the court, the national cockade was trampled on. This excited the Parisians still more against the queen. They regarded her as the soul of the party which at that time was collecting an army against Paris and against the National Assembly. On the 5th the Parisians rushed violently to Versailles. Early on the 6th they broke into the castle, murdered several of the body-guards, and uttered against the queen the most furious threats. In the middle of the night a clergyman wrote to her, 'Take measures for your preservation. Early in the morning, at six o'clock, you are to be murdered.' She remained tranquil, and concealed the letter. The infuriated mob rushed into her chamber; she fled to the king. To put a stop to the scene of outrage, the king and queen showed themselves, with both their children, in the balcony. 'This spectacle made a momentary impression on the enraged people; but soon the cry resounded from every mouth, 'No children! The queen, the queen alone!' She instantly put her son and daughter into the arms of the king, and returned to the balcony. This unexpected courage disarmed the mob; their threats were followed by shouts of approbation. The same day she was obliged to view a most fearful spectacle for six hours, on her way to Paris. Before her carriage were borne on spikes the heads of two guards. Overheated patriots surrounded her with the most horrid imprecations. When she was asked about the scene that had just ended by the officers of justice, who desired to punish the guilty, she replied, 'Never will I accuse one of the king's subjects;' and when the question was repeated, 'I have seen all, I have heard all, I have forgotten all,' was her answer. The first month after her arrival in Paris, she expended 300,000 livres in redeeming clothes pledged by the poor to the pawnbrokers; but all her benefits were insufficient to appease their exasperated minds. In 1791, when Louis XVI. determined on flight, she followed her husband. From Varennes, she was brought back to the Tuileries, and when the committee of the Constituent Assembly demanded an explanation, she answered, 'As the king wished to depart with his children, nothing in the world could hinder me from accompanying him. I have given sufficient proof, for these two years, that I would never desert him. What made me more decided on that point was the firm conviction that the king would never leave France. If he had wished to do so I should have employed every effort to restrain him.' This tempest was followed by a momentary calm. In the meantime came on the 20th June, and the 10th August, 1792. Prepared for whatever might happen on the latter of these days, the queen exerted all her power to excite her husband to meet death sword in hand. Led to the Legislative Assembly, she heard his deposition announced, together with the appointment of his judges, and then went with him to the Temple. None of her female attendants were suffered to accompany her. Here she occupied the only comfortable chamber, with her daughter and the Princess Elizabeth. Close bars of iron secured the window, admitting only a glimmering light. She now exhibited the full strength of her character; invariably calm in the circle of her friends, she urged them to disregard sickness and suffering. When the king informed her of his condemnation she congratulated him on the approaching termination of an existence so painful, and the unperishing reward that was to crown it. On 4 July, 1793, she was separated from her son. She felt that this separation was for ever, yet her firmness was unchanged. On the 5th of August, at midnight, she was removed to the keeper's house. A dark and damp dungeon here was her last abode. On the 3rd of Oct. the Convention ordered her to be brought before the revolutionary tribunal. She was charged with having dissipated the finances, exhausted the public treasury, given large sums out of it to the emperor; with having corresponded with foreign enemies, and favoured domestic tumults. But, notwithstanding the multitude of witnesses examined, no evidence could be brought against her. Bailly, then mayor of Paris, who was summoned as a witness, had the courage to take the queen into his protection without hesitation, and to censure, with the greatest severity, her bloodthirsty accuser, Fouquier-Tinville, for his testimony. The queen herself replied to all inquiries with firmness and decision. When Herbert accused her of corrupting the morals of her own son, she answered, with the deepest indignation, 'I appeal to every mother here whether such a crime be possible!' She heard her sentence of death with calmness, and was carried back to her prison. The next day, at eleven o'clock, she ascended the cart which conveyed her to the scaffold. A deep silence reigned. Grief had distorted her features, and, in the damp, unhealthy prison, she had almost lost one of her eyes. Her look seemed to fill the people with awe. At twelve o'clock the cart arrived at the palace of Louis XV. She cast back a long look at the Tuileries, and then ascended the scaffold. When she came to the top, she threw

MARIUS, CAIUS, a celebrated Roman, who was seven times consul. He was born at Arpinum about 157 B.C., and entering the army, served as lieutenant under Scipio and Metellus. He first obtained the consulship B.C. 107, and the next year ended the war with Jugurtha, whom he conducted in triumph to Rome. After this he served against the Cimbri and other barbarous nations who had invaded Italy. With a very inferior force he completely routed them, for which a pyramid was erected to his honour; but he tarnished the glory of his victories by the basest cruelties to the vanquished. In his sixth consulate he had for his rival Sylla, who marched to Rome with his army, and obliged Marius to quit the city. After wandering for some time he was recalled to Rome by Cinna, with whom he was again chosen consul B.C. 86, in which year he died.

MARIVAUX, PIERRE CARLET DE CHAMBLAIN DE, a French writer, born at Paris 1688. He came of a good family, and inherited a considerable fortune, which he employed in benevolent purposes. He died 12 Feb., 1763. His works are—Pièces de Theatre, 5 vols.; Homère travestie; Le Spectateur François, 2 vols.; Le Philosophe Indigent; Vie de Marianne, 4 vols.; Le Paysan Parvenu; Pharsamon.

MARK, ST., a Roman, succeeded Pope Sylvester I. Jan., 330, and died on 6 Oct. following.

MARKHAM, GERVASE, a hack author, was a native of Gotham, Notts. He served as a captain in the royal army during the civil wars, at which time he must have been in the decline of life, as some of his works were printed in the reign of Elizabeth. The time of his death is unknown. His principal works are on husbandry, horsemanship, fowling, and the diseases of cattle. He also composed some poems, and (conjointly with William Sampson) a tragedy, entitled 'Herod and Antipater.'

MARKHAM, WILLIAM, archbishop of York, was born at Kinsale, in Ireland, 1720, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to a scholarship at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1745; D.C.L. 1752). In 1765 he obtained the deanery of Rochester, which he vacated in 1767 for that of Christ Church. In 1771 he was nominated bishop of Chester, and the same year was appointed tutor to the prince of Wales, which situation he held till 1776. He was translated to York Dec., 1776, and died 3 Nov., 1807. Specimens of his Latin poetry are in the 'Carmina Quadragesimalia' and the 'Musæ Anglicanæ.' He also published a few detached sermons.

prebendary of Winchester 1679; master of the Hospital of St. Cross 1694; died about 1730. He wrote a poem on the birth and restoration of Charles II.; another, entitled 'Ptery-plegia, or the Art of Shooting Flying;' and 2 vols. of Sermons, 1729.

MARKLAND, JAMES HEYWOOD, D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., born at Manchester 1788; died at Bath 28 Dec., 1864. He was called to the bar, and practised his profession till 1830, though his leisure moments were devoted to literary and antiquarian pursuits. Among his works may be mentioned 'Remarks on English Churches;' 'Prayers and Life of Bishop Ken;' 'The Oleratory;' and 'Chester Mysteries.'

MARKLAND, JEREMIAH, M.A., a celebrated critic, was born 29 Oct., 1693, at Childwall, in Lancashire. He was brought up at Christ's Hospital, whence he removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in 1717, and held it till his death on 7 July, 1776. He never took orders, but led a retired life, partly at college as a tutor, and lastly at Dorking, Surrey. He published a few poems; a Latin Epistle to Bishop Hare, on some passages of Horace; an edition of the Sylvæ of Statius; Remarks on the Epistles of Cicero to Brutus; a Dissertation on four Orations ascribed to Cicero; a tract entitled 'De Græcorum quintâ declinatione imparisyllabica, et inde formatâ Latinarum tertia, quæstio Grammatica;' an edition of Euripides's 'Supplices Mulieres'; and another of the 'Two Iphigeniæ' of the same writer. Many of his notes on the New Testament are in Bowyer's Conjectures.

MARLBOROUGH, JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF, prince of the holy Roman empire, was born at Ashe, in Devonshire, 1650, being the eldest son of Sir Winston Churchill, who has been already noticed in this work. He was educated at St. Paul's School, where he is said to have read Vegetius de Re Militari. At the age of twelve years, however, his father took him to court, where he became page to the duke of York, and in 1666 obtained a pair of colours in the Guards. His first service was at the siege of Tangier; and in 1672 he was captain of grenadiers under the duke of Monmouth, with whom he served in the Low Countries, and distinguished himself so gallantly at the siege of Nimeguen as to attract the notice of the great Turanne, who called him the handsome Englishman. For his conduct at the siege of Maestricht, he received the thanks of the French king at the head of the line. On his return to England he was made lieutenant-colonel, also gentleman of the bed-chamber, and master of the robes to the duke of York, whom he attended to the Netherlands in 1679, as he afterwards did to Scotland. In 1681 he married Miss Sarah Jennings, who waited on the Princess Anne, by which match he greatly strengthened his interest at court. In 1682 he was shipwrecked with the duke of York, in their passage to Scotland, on which occasion his royal highness expressed the utmost anxiety to save the colonel, who in the same year was made baron of Eymouth. He still continued to be a favourite after the accession of James, who sent him ambassador, on that occasion, to France. In 1685 he was created Lord Churchill of Sandridge, and the same year he suppressed Monmouth's rebellion. He continued to serve King James with great fidelity, till the arrival of the prince of Orange, and then left him, or which he has been severely stigmatised by several writers. After the revolution he was created earl of Marlborough, and appointed commander-in-chief of the English army in the Low Countries. He next served in Ireland, where he reduced Cork, with other strong places. Notwithstanding these services, in 1702 he was suddenly dismissed from his employments, and committed to the Tower on a charge of treason, but soon obtained his release. After the death of Queen Mary he was restored to favour, and appointed governor to the young duke of Gloucester. In 1700 he was made commander-in-chief of the English forces in Holland, where also he held the charge of ambassador. At the beginning of the next reign he received the order of the Garter, and was declared captain-general of all the forces in England and abroad. The states-general also gave him the supreme command of the Dutch troops; and in the campaign of 1702 he took a number of strong towns, particularly Liege, for which he received the thanks of both houses, and was created duke of Marlborough. In 1704 he joined Prince Eugene, with whom he gained the battle of Hochstet, taking Marshal Tallard prisoner. Just before this he had been created a prince of the empire. In the winter he returned to England, and again received the thanks of parliament, with the grant of the manor of Woodstock and the hundred of Wotton. On the 12 May, 1706, he fought the battle of Ramillies, which victory accelerated the fall of Louvain, Brussels, and other important places. He arrived in England in Nov., and received fresh honours and grants from the queen and parliament. A bill was passed to settle his honours upon the male and female issue of his daughters; and Blenheim House was ordered to be built, to perpetuate his exploits, besides all which he had a pension of 5,000*l.* a-year out of the post-office. The following campaign was inactive; but the ensuing one was pushed with such vigour, that the French king was glad to enter into a negotiation for peace, which had no effect. In 1709 he defeated Marshal Villars at Malplaquet, for which victory a general thanksgiving was solemnised. In the winter of 1710 he returned to England, and soon after was dismissed from his employments, and even a prosecution was commenced against him for applying the public money to his private purposes. Stung by this ingratitude, he went abroad till 1714, when he returned and landed at Dover, amidst the acclamations of the people. Queen Anne was just dead, and her successor restored the duke to his military appointments; but his infirmities increasing, he retired from public employments, and died at Windsor Lodge, having survived his intellectual faculties, June 16, 1722, and his remains were interred with great solemnity in Westminster Abbey. The duke had four daughters, who married into the first families of the kingdom. His duchess died Oct. 18, 1744. She was a woman of boundless ambition and avarice, having amassed more money than many sovereign princes. In 1742 she gave 5,000*l.* to Mr. Hooke, to write a book entitled 'An Account of the conduct of the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough.' A selection of curious papers was published in 1788, by Lord Hailes, with this title, 'The Opinions of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough.'

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, a dramatist, was the son of a shoemaker at Canterbury, where he was born about Feb., 1593-4. After a preliminary training at the king's school in his native city, he was sent to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (B.A. 1583; M.A. 1587). Having commenced dramatic author, he came to London, and at one period, like his great contemporary, Shakspeare, appeared upon the stage as an actor. Recklessly squandering the proceeds of his pen, and when all was spent, labouring in a garret to complete a new play—such appears to have been the life of Marlowe, who is represented as outdoing all his companions in blasphemy and obscenity. His death took place in a drunken brawl at Deptford 1 June, 1593. Of his plays the 'Jew of Malta' is reckoned the best, and he is the reputed author of 'Tamburlaine the Great,' believed to be the earliest English play composed in blank verse. Marlowe also wrote the exquisite song 'Come live with me, and be my love;' and several poems. The best edition of his works is that by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, 3 vols. 12mo., Lond., 1850; 1 vol. 8vo., 1858.—Athen. Cantab.

MARMION, SHAKELLEY, was born at Aynhoe, Northamptonshire, Jan., 1602. He took his master's degree at Wadham College, Oxford, 1624, after which he squandered away his estate, and then entered the army. Died 1639. He wrote four comedies, called Holland's Leaguer; A fine Companion; The Antiquary; The Crafty Merchant. He was also the author of 'Cupid and Psyche,' a poem.

MARMONT, AUGUSTE FRÉDÉRIC LOUIS VIÉSSE DE, duke of Ragusa, a marshal of the French empire, born at Châtillon-sur-Seine 20 July, 1774; died at Venice 2 March, 1852. He obtained his title for his successful defence of Ragusa against a greatly superior force of Russians and Montenegrius 30 Sept., 1806.

MARMONTEL, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French writer, was born 11 July, 1723, at Bort, in the Limousin. He studied in the Jesuits' College at Mauriac, after which he went to Toulouse, and next to Paris, where his tragedy of 'Dionysius' procured him the situation of secretary to the royal buildings. Soon afterwards he became connected with D'Alembert and Diderot, in the Encyclopedie. He also had a share in the 'Mercurie François,' in which his Tales first appeared; but having written a satire on the Duc D'Aumont, he was sent to the Bastille. His confinement, however, was short; and in 1763 he obtained a place in the Academy, of which he afterwards became perpetual secretary. Died 31 Dec., 1799. Besides his 'Tales,' he wrote 'Epître aux poëtes;' the romance of 'Belisarius;' and the 'History of the Incas.' The best edition of his works is that of Paris, 18 vols., 1810.

MARNIX, PHILIP VAN, seigneur du Mont, Sainte Aldegonde, was born at Brussels 1538. He was a zealous Calvinist, and, being appointed consul at Antwerp, defended that city bravely against the duke of Parma 1584. Died 15 Dec., 1598. Among other works, he wrote one called 'The Bee-Hive of the Romish Church,' which was translated into English by Gilpin 1578.

MAROCHETTI, PIETRO CARLO GIOVANNI BATTISTA, BARON, an eminent sculptor, born at Turin 1805. He received his education in Paris, at the Lycee Napoleon, after leaving which he was placed with Bosio, a Parisian sculptor of some eminence. While studying in his atelier he obtained honourable mention from the Ecole des Beaux Arts, but was not awarded any other distinction, and his journey to Italy to complete his studies was undertaken at his own expense. In 1827 he returned to France, and in the same year exhibited a group, 'A Girl playing with a Dog,' for which a medal was awarded him. This group he presented to the king of Sardinia. In 1831 he exhibited his 'Fallen Angel,' and somewhat later he executed for the Academy of Arts of Turin a statue of Monsignor Mossi. He presented to the capital of Sardinia an equestrian statue of Emanuel Philibert, which is by many esteemed his chef-d'œuvre, and which was his sole contribution to the French Exposition of 1855. Many of his works are well known in Paris, and among them are one of the bas-reliefs on the Arc de l'Étoile; the tomb of Bellini at Père la Chaise; a maitre d'autel in the church of the Madeleine; three equestrian statues of the duke of Orleans; a St. Michel; and a statue of the emperor. Shortly after the revolution of Feb. 1848, Marochetti came to England, where he soon became known in art circles. In 1851 he contributed the model of a colossal equestrian statue of Richard Cœur de Lion to the Great Exhibition, but being dissatisfied with the position allotted to it inside the building, he set it up at some distance from the western entrance to the great glass palace. The position of the figure and its spirited attitude attracted no small share of public attention; and this model was the means of bringing the sculptor into very general notice. The statue was afterwards executed in bronze, and placed close to the palace at Westminster, the cost being defrayed by a national subscription. The people of Glasgow commissioned him to execute for them an equestrian statue of Queen Victoria, which was inaugurated in 1854. In that year he exhibited at the Royal Academy 'Love Playing with a Hare.' In 1856 he executed the granite monument to the memory of the English soldiers slain in the Crimea; and a year later the mausoleum of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of Charles I. He also executed a statue of the duke of Wellington, which surmounts a huge monolith erected to his memory at Strathfieldsaye. One of his latest works was a monument to Lord Clyde, which stands in Waterloo Place. Marochetti was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honour 1839; and died at Paris 28 Dec., 1867.

MAROT, JEAN, a poet, born near Caen, in Normandy, 1463; died in 1523. Princess Anne, of Bretagne, gave him a pension, and called him her poet. His son, Clément Marot, born at Cahors 1495, far exceeded his father in poetical talent. He was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Pavia. On his release he went to Piedmont, where he professed the Protestant faith. He died at Turin 1544. He gave a new grace to French poetry, and obtained great credit by his translation of the Psalms. Paul Lacroix published a good edition of his works, 3 vols., 1824.

MARKPURG, FREDERICK WILLIAM, author of fourteen valuable treatises in German on the theory of music, was born at Sechausen, in Prussia, 1718, and died 22 May, 1795.

MARRYAT, FREDERICK, captain R.N., an English novelist, born in London 10 July, 1792. Entering the navy at an early age, he saw much service under Lord Cochrane, and gained a high reputation among his comrades for his bravery. He was promoted to be lieutenant 1812, and commander 1815. For his services in the Burmese war he received the decoration of C.B. Capt. Marryat published in 1837 a 'Code of Signals for the use of Vessels employed in the Merchant Service;' and he afterwards had the satisfaction of seeing his admirable invention adopted in the royal and mercantile services, not only of this country, but of foreign nations. He twice received the public thanks of the Shipowners' Society for it, and upon his treatise being translated into French (1840) he was complimented by Louis Philippe with the cross of the legion of honour. Captain Marryat's chief claim to remembrance, however, is founded on the productions of his facile pen. He was one of the most pleasing of our romance writers, and especially excelled in naval stories. He was editor of the 'Metropolitan Magazine' from 1832 to 1836, during which period some of his most popular novels were first published in its pages. His death took place at Langham, Norfolk, 2 Aug., 1848. Subjoined is a list of his works—'Frank Millday,' 1829; 'King's Own,' 1830; 'Newton Forster,' 1832; 'Peter Simple,' 1833; 'Jacob Faithful,' 1835; 'Pacha of Many Tales,' 1835; 'Japhet in Search of a Father,' 1836; 'Midshipman Easy,' 1836; 'Pirate and Three Cutters,' 1836; 'Snarley Yow, or the Dog-Fiend,' 1837; 'Phantom Ship,' 1839; 'Diary in America,' 1839, a work which gave great offence to our thin-skinned Transatlantic brethren; 'Olla Podrida,' 1840; 'Poor Jack,' 1840; 'Joseph Rushbrook,' 1841; 'Masterman Ready,' 1841; 'Percival Keene,' 1842; 'Travels and Adventures of Monsieur Violet,' 1843; 'Privateer's Man,' 1844; 'Settlers in Canada,' 1844; 'Mission, or Scenes in Africa,' 1845; 'Children of the New Forest,' 1847; 'Little Savage,' 1847; 'Valerie,' 1849.

MARS, ANNE FRANÇOISE HIPPOLYTE BOUTET, a French comic actress, born at Paris 9 Feb., 1778; died 20 March, 1847.

MARSDEN, WILLIAM, D.C.L., F.R.S., an orientalist, born at Dublin 16 Nov., 1754. He early entered the civil service of the East India Company, and was stationed for some years at Bencoolen, in Sumatra, where he assiduously studied the native languages and antiquities. After his return to England in 1779 he continued his philological researches, was elected a member of several learned societies, and honoured with the degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford 1786. He was appointed under-secretary to the Admiralty 1795, and afterwards chief secretary; but in 1807 he retired from public life. He died at Aldenham, Hertfordshire, 6 Oct., 1836. Dr. Marsden presented his valuable collection of coins and medals to the British Museum, and his extensive library to King's College, London. His works are—'The History of Sumatra,' 1783; 'Catalogue of Dictionaries, Vocabularys, Grammar and Alphabets,' 1796; 'A Dictionary of the Malayan language; to which is prefixed a Grammar, with an Introduction and Praxis,' 1812; a translation of the 'Travels of Marco Polo,' 1817; 'Numismata Orientalia Illustrata,' 2 vols., 1823-5; 'Miscellaneous Works,' 1834; and an autobiographical memoir, 1838.

MARSH, FRANCIS, born in Gloucestershire 1627, and educated at Cambridge, became bishop of Limerick, Ardferd, and Aghadoe 1667, bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh 1672, archbishop of Dublin 1682, and died 16 Nov., 1693.

MARSH, HERBERT, D.D., an Anglican prelate, born 10 Dec., 1757, at Faversham, Kent, of which parish his father was vicar. After graduating at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, he resided for several years at Göttingen, and acquired a perfect knowledge of German, a language with which few of his countrymen were at that period acquainted. He also transmitted important political information to Mr. Pitt, who subsequently rewarded him with a pension. Resuming his academical pursuits, he took his degrees in divinity, and after being appointed Margaret professor in that faculty delivered several series of lectures, which being in English instead of in Latin—the language employed by all his predecessors—attracted large audiences. He was promoted to the bishopric of Llandaff 1816, and translated to Peterborough 1819. His attempts to repress Calvinism in the latter diocese rendered him obnoxious to the evangelical portion of the clergy, and several publications appeared on the subject, which was ultimately brought before the House of Lords, but without any material result. Dr. Marsh was the author of numerous works, he having been mixed up in various controversies which have now fallen into oblivion. His earliest and most important literary production was a translation (4 vols., 1792-1801) of the 'Introduction to the New Testament,' by J. D. Michaelis, whose daughter he subsequently married. Among his other works we may specify—'An Essay on the Usefulness and Necessity of Theological Learning to those who are designed for Holy Orders,' 1792; 'A Course of Lectures, containing a description and systematic arrangement of the various branches of Divinity,' 1810; 'Horæ Pelagicæ,' 1813; and 'A Comparative View of the Churches of England and Rome,' 1814. Died 1 May, 1839.

MARSH, NARCISSEUS, an Anglican prelate, born at Hannington, Wiltshire, 1638. He became fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree. In 1673 he was appointed principal of St. Alban Hall; but in 1678 he went to Ireland, and was made provost of Trinity College, Dublin, to which he presented a valuable library. In 1682 he was promoted to the bishopric of Leighlin and Ferns; in 1690 translated to the archiepiscopal see of Cashel; removed to that of Dublin 1694; and to the primate's see of Armagh 1702-3. Died 2 Nov., 1713. His works are—'Manuductio ad Logicam'; 'Institutiones Logicæ'; 'Essay on the Doctrine of Sounds'; 'A Charge to the Clergy of Dublin.' His MS. diary of his life, beginning 20 Dec., 1690, remains in his library at Dublin.

MARSH, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, was born in July, 1775, and educated at St. Edmund's Hall, Oxford. He held, in succession, several benefices, among them St. Mary's, Leamington, and the rectory of Beddington, Surrey. He was also an hon. canon of Worcester. Died 24 Aug., 1864. Among his publications were 'Plain Letters on Prophecy,' and 'Sermons on Justification by Faith.'

MARSHAL, ANDREW, M.D., an anatomist and physician, born in Fifehire 1742; died in London 2 April, 1813. His chief work is on 'The Morbid Anatomy of the Brain in Mania and Hydrophobia.'

MARSHALL, or MARTIAL, JOHN, D.D., a native of Darlynsford, Worcestershire, received his education at Winchester School, and New College, Oxford, of which he was admitted a fellow 1551.

MARSHMAN.

About five years later he proceeded B.C.L., and soon afterwards became second master of Winchester School; but, on Queen Elizabeth's accession, he forsook all his preferments, and, retiring to Louvain, applied himself to divinity, and became doctor in that faculty. In 1568 he was invited to Douay by William Allen (afterwards cardinal), and was one of the first six engaged in establishing the English college in that university. Dr. Marshall was subsequently appointed a canon of Lisle; and died 3 April, 1597. He wrote 'A Treatise of the Crosse gathered out of the Scriptures, Councils, and auncient Fathers of the Primitive Church,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1564; and 'A Replie to Mr. Calhill's blasphemous Answer, made against the Treatise of the Crosse,' 4to., Louvain, 1566.

MARSHALL, JOHN, an American jurist, born in Fauquier County, Virginia, 24 Sept., 1755; died at Philadelphia 6 July, 1835. He had some classical instruction, but was never at a college. A soldier in the war, he reached the rank of captain, and fought in various battles. As a lawyer he soon rose to distinction. In 1800 he was appointed secretary of war, and afterwards secretary of state; and, in the following year, made chief justice of the United States, which exalted office he held with increasing reputation and unsullied dignity till his death. He wrote a Life of Washington.

MARSHALL, NATHANIEL, D.D., was educated at Cambridge, became rector of St. Vedast and St. Michael-le-Querne, London, and prebendary of Windsor; and died about 1720, leaving a translation of St. Cyprian's works; 'A Defence of the English Constitution; and 'A Treatise on the Discipline of the Primitive Church.

MARSHALL, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Barkby, Leicestershire, about 1621, and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, of which he became rector 1672. He obtained the deanery of Gloucester 1681; and died 1685. He published 'Observations in Evangeliorum versiones perantiquas duas, Gothicas sc. et Anglo-Saxonicas;' and an explanation of the Catechism. He also completed Parr's Life of Usher.

MARSHAM, Sir JOHN, was born in London 23 Aug., 1602. He went from Westminster School to St. John's College, Oxford, and afterwards entered the Middle Temple. In 1638 he became one of the six clerks in Chancery, which place he lost in the Rebellion, besides having his estate plundered for his loyalty. At the Restoration he recovered his situation in the Chancery, and was made a baronet. Died 25 May, 1685. He published—'Diatriba Chronologica'; 'Canon Chronicus, Ægyptiacus, Ebraicus, Græcus, et Disquisitiones,' 1672, printed at Leipsic 1676. Sir John also wrote the preface to Dugdale's Monasticon; and left some learned dissertations in MS.

MARSHMAN, JOSHUA, D.D., a missionary and orientalist, born at Westbury Leigh about 1767. He was one of the missionaries dispatched to India by the Baptists to preach the gospel to the Hindoos. He arrived in India 1799, and settled at Serampore, where he died 5 Dec., 1837, having survived all his companions. Dr. Marshman applied himself diligently to the study of Bengalee, Sanscrit, and Chinese, and translated into the latter tongue various portions of the Holy Scriptures. He published, besides, 'A Dissertation on the Characters and Sounds of the Chinese Language,' 1809; 'The Works of Confucius,' containing the Original Text, with a translation,' 1809; 'Clavis Sinica, or Elements of Chinese Grammar,' 1814; and 'A Defence of the Deity and Atonement of Jesus Christ,' 1822.

MARSIGLI, LUIGI FERDINANDO, an Italian count, famous in letters and in arms, was born 10 July, 1658, at Bologna, where he died 1 Nov., 1730. He was the founder of the academy of arts and sciences, called the Institute, in his native city, and author of 'Danubius Pannonico-Mysicus,' 'The Military State of Turkey,' &c.

MARSOLLIER, JACQUES, a French historian and biographer, was born at Paris 1647, and became archdeacon of Uzès, where he died 1724.

MARKSTON, JOHN, a dramatic poet, born about 1570; died about 1634. He was a student of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and afterwards a member of the Middle Temple; to which society he was appointed lecturer 1593. He was an associate of Ben Jonson, who afterwards quarrelled with him and Decker. In 1633 he collected six of his plays into one volume; besides which he wrote three books of satires, entitled 'The Scourge of Villainy,' published first 1599, and reprinted 1764. A collection of his 'Works, Dramatic and Satirical,' was published in 3 vols., 1856, under the editorship of Mr. Halliwell.

MARKSY, FRANÇOIS MARIE DE, a poet and miscellaneous writer, born at Paris 1714; died 1763. His best works are two Latin poems, one on painting, the other on tragedy.

MARTEL, CHARLES. See CHARLES.

MARTELLI, PETER JAMES, an Italian poet, born at Bologna 1605; died 10 May, 1727.

MARTENE, EDMOND, a French Benedictine, author of numerous works of great historical value, was born 22 Dec., 1654; and died 20 June, 1739.

MARTENS, GEORGE FREDERICK VON, a German diplomatist and publicist, born at Hamburg 22 Feb., 1756. After holding the professorship of jurisprudence at Göttingen, he was appointed a member of the council of state of the kingdom of Westphalia (1809), and, not long afterwards appointed president of the finance department. In 1810 he was sent to the German diet as minister of the king of Hanover, and he acted in that capacity till his death, which took place at Frankfurt-on-the-Main 21 Feb., 1821. His works are absolutely indispensable to all who make diplomacy a study. The most important are 'Précis du Droit des Gens de l'Europe Moderne;' and his 'Recueil de Traités;' the latter of which, with the continuations by the other writers, includes treaties concluded between 1701 and 1854.

MARTIAL, JOHN. See MARSHALL.

MARTIALIS, MARCUS VALERIUS, the epigrammatist, was a native of Spain, but resided long at Rome, where he paid particular court to Domitian, who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. After the death of that emperor he returned to his native country, and married a woman of fortune. Died about A.D. 104. His works were printed first at Venice 1470.

MARTIN, ST., was born about 316, at Sabaria, in Pannonia; consecrated bishop of Tours, in France, about 374; died 8 Nov., 397, or, according to some writers, 11 Nov., 400. He is regarded as the Apostle of Gaul.

MARTIN I., Pope, succeeded Theodore 649; died 16 Sept., 655.

MARTIN II., or MARINUS I., succeeded Pope John VIII. 882; died Feb., 884.

MARTIN.

MARTIN III., or MARINUS II., succeeded Pope Stephen VIII. 943; died 4 Aug., 946.

MARTIN IV., a Frenchman, elected Pope 1281; died 28 March, 1285.

MARTIN V., a Roman, succeeded Pope Gregory XII. 1417; died 20 Feb., 1431, aged 93.

MARTIN, BENJAMIN, a mathematician, born at Worpleston, Surrey, 1704. He worked as a common labourer in the early part of his life, but, by diligence, attained so much knowledge, as qualified him to be a schoolmaster at Chichester. After this he travelled the kingdom as a lecturer in experimental philosophy. By this means he was enabled to commence the business of an optician, in Fleet Street, where he lived in good reputation many years; but at last, owing to the misconduct of his son, he fell into decay, and was made a bankrupt, which had such an effect upon his spirits that he attempted to destroy himself; and though the wound did not prove immediately mortal, it hastened his death, 9 Feb., 1782. His works are numerous, and many of them valuable, particularly his Philosophical Grammar; and Treatises on Decimal Arithmetic, Optics, and Trigonometry. He for some time conducted a scientific magazine, part of which consisted of 'Lives of Philosophers and Mathematicians.'

MARTIN, CLAUDE, was born at Lyons 1732. He went to India as a common soldier; but being ill-used in the French service, he entered into that of the English company, and rose to the rank of Colonel. He became a great favourite of the nabob of Oude, and by that means realised an immense property, the greater part of which devolved to his relations in France. He built a magnificent palace at Lucknow, furnished with a museum, a botanical garden, and an observatory. Died 13 Sept., 1800.

MARTIN, DAVID, a French Protestant minister and theological writer, born at Revel, in Languedoc, 1639; died at Utrecht 9 Sept., 1721.

MARTIN, FREDERICK, a Church of England divine, educated at Cambridge, wrote 'Notes on the Gospels and Acts,' Lond., 1838 (anon.); and 'Genealogies illustrative of Sacred History.' Died 6 Dec., 1864.

MARTIN, GREGORY, a Catholic divine, was born at Maxfield, Sussex, and educated at St. John's College, Oxford (M.A. 1684). He was for some time tutor in the family of the duke of Norfolk; but in 1670 he went to Douay, and in 1673 was ordained priest. Eventually he settled at Rheims, where he died 28 Oct., 1682. Gregory Martin will be ever remembered as the author of the 'Rheims' and 'Douay' version of the Holy Scriptures, which is still in use among all English-speaking Catholics. The New Testament was printed at Rheims, 4to., 1582, and the Old Testament at Douay, 2 vols. 4to., 1609-10. In translating the Bible from the Vulgate, he was assisted by Drs. Allen, Bristow, Reynolds, and others, but the work may be entirely ascribed to Mr. Martin, the others being only revisors. His other works are: A Treatise of Schism, showing that all Catholics ought to abstain altogether from Heretical Conventicles, viz., Prayers, Sermons, &c., 1578; A Discovery of the manifest Corruptions of the Holy Scriptures, 1582; Letters to certain of his Friends, 1583; Treatise of the Love of the Soul; A Treatise of Peregination and Relicks, 1585; and some translations from the Latin and Italian.

MARTIN, JACQUES, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, celebrated as an historian and antiquary, was born at Faniaux, Languedoc, 11 May, 1684; died at Paris 5 Sept., 1751.

MARTIN, JOHN, a painter, born near Hexham, Northumberland, 19 July, 1789. He early evinced an inclination for artistic pursuits, and was accordingly apprenticed, at the age of 14, to a coachbuilder at Newcastle; but at the end of a year he quarrelled with his master, and got his indentures cancelled. He next studied under an Italian artist of great merit and some reputation in Newcastle, named Boniface Musso, the father of the celebrated enamel painter, Charles Musso, or Muss, by whom Mr. Martin was, after his removal to London (1806), employed to paint on china and glass. From this source, and the proceeds he derived from teaching, and the sale of water-colour drawings, he was enabled to support himself without assistance from his parents, who were in humble circumstances. At the age of 19 he married, and thenceforward made increased efforts to secure fame and fortune. In 1812 he painted his first picture, 'Sadak in search of the Waters of Oblivion,' which, to his intense delight, fetched fifty guineas. It was followed by the pictures of 'Paradise,' 'The Expulsion,' 'Clytie,' and 'Joshua,' after which he produced (1819-28) a series of works conceived in a novel and sensational style, which was extremely popular. The principal of these were, 'The Fall of Babylon,' 'Macbeth,' 'Belshazzar's Feast,' 'Destruction of Herculaneum,' 'The Seventh Plague,' 'The Paphian Bower,' 'The Creation,' 'The Deluge,' and 'The Fall of Nineveh.' Subsequently he abandoned the easel, and was engaged for several years in executing a series of illustrations of Milton, for which he received 2,000 guineas, and in devising schemes for the improvement of the metropolis. About 1838, however, he again took up his brush, and worked assiduously till a few weeks before his death, which occurred at Douglas, in the Isle of Man, 9 Feb., 1854. His last productions, which he considered his masterpieces, were three large and showy pictures of 'The Last Judgment,' 'The Day of Wrath,' and 'The Plains of Heaven.

MARTIN, LOUIS AIMÉ, a French writer and critic, born at Lyons 1781; died at Paris 22 June, 1847.

MARTIN, SARAH, a philanthropist, who directed her labours to the amelioration of the condition of the inmates of our prisons, was born at Caistor, near Great Yarmouth, 1791, and died in the latter town 15 Oct., 1843.

MARTIN, THOMAS, D.C.L., a native of Cerne, Dorsetshire, was educated at Winchester School, and New College, Oxford, of which he was admitted a fellow 1539, though he took his doctor's degree at Bourges. Being nominated chancellor of the diocese of Winchester, he was joined in the commission with Dr. Story when Cramer was brought to his trial at Oxford. This drew great odium upon him, and he retired to Ilfeld, Sussex, where he died 1584. He was author of 'A Treatise proving that the Marriage of Priests and Professed Persons, is no Marriage, but altogether unlawful,' 1554; 'A Confutation of Dr. John Poynt's Book, intitled, 'A Defence of the Marriage of Priests,' 1555; 'Vita Gulielmi Wicami Wintoniensis Episcopi,' 1597, and again 1600.

MARTIN, THOMAS, an antiquary, was born at Thetford, Suffolk, 8 March, 1697. He became clerk to his brother, who was an attorney at Thetford; but about 1723 he settled at Palgrave, where he died 7 March, 1771. He was familiarly called 'Honest Tom Martin of Palgrave;' and is known by a 'History of the Town of Thetford,' published 1779. He collected a mass of materials in illustration of the history and topography of Suffolk.

MARTIN, WILLIAM, a naturalist, born at Marsfield, Notts, 1767; died 31 May, 1810. In early life he trod the stage, which, however, he soon quitted, and established himself as a drawing-master, first at Burton-upon-Trent, next at Buxton, and finally at Macclesfield. He published 'Outlines of an Attempt to establish a Knowledge of Extraneous Fossils on Scientific Principles,' 1809; 'Petriticata Derbiensis, or Figures and Descriptions of Petrifications collected in Derbyshire,' 1809; and some papers in the Transactions of various learned societies. His son, William Charles Linneus Martin, who died at Lee, Kent, 15 Feb., 1864, aged 66, was for some years scientific officer to the Zoological Society of London. He published some esteemed works on natural history.

MARTIN, WILLIAM, an English writer of books for youth under the nom de plume of Peter Parley, died at his residence, Holly Lodge, Woodbridge, Suffolk, 22 Oct., 1867. He edited 'Peter Parley's Annual' for twenty-eight years.

MARTINE, GEORGE, M.D., a writer on anatomy, born in Scotland 1702; died in America 1743.

MARTINI, JOHN-BAPTIST, commonly called Padre Martini, was born at Bologna 1706. He belonged to the order of Friars Minor, and wrote a History of Music in Italian; 'Esemplare o Sia Saggio di Contrapunto;' and 'Compendio della Theoria de numeri per uso del Musico.' Died 4 Aug., 1784.

MARTINI, MARTIN, a Jesuit missionary, who wrote several Latin works illustrating the geography and history of China. He was born at Trent 1614, and died at Hang-Tcheou 6 June, 1661.

MARTINIÈRE, ANTOINE AUGUSTIN BRUZEN DE LA, an industrious French compiler, born at Dieppe 1684; died at the Hague 19 June, 1749. His chief work, the 'Dictionnaire Geographique, Historique, et Critique,' was first published at the Hague, 10 vols., 1726-30, and has been often reprinted.

MARTIUS, KARL FRIEDRICH PHILIP VON, a naturalist, was born 1794 at Erlangen, in Bavaria, and educated in the university there, being subsequently attached to the scientific expedition sent to Brazil by the Austrian and Bavarian governments (1817-20). On his return he was appointed professor of botany, and director of the botanical garden at Munich. In 1842 he became secretary of the mathematical and physical section of the Academy of Sciences of Munich, and president of the Botanical Society of Ratisbon. He died at Munich 13 Dec., 1868. Von Martius wrote a large number of works on natural history, the greater part of which had reference to his Brazilian voyage; but the most important of his publications is his monograph on Palms, entitled 'Genera et Species Palmarum,' 3 vols., 1823-45.

MARTOS, IVAN PETROVITCH, a Russian sculptor, born at Ichnia about 1755; died at St. Petersburg 17 April, 1835.

MARTYN, FRANCIS, an English divine of the Roman communion, was born in the county of Norfolk Feb., 1782, and educated first at Sedgley Park School, and next at St. Mary's College, Oscott. He was ordained priest 1805, and was stationed successively at Louth, Lincolnshire, at Bloxwich, near Walsall, and finally at Walsall. Died 18 July, 1838. Mr. Martyn published 'Homilies on the Book of Tobias, being a detailed History and familiar Explication of the Virtues of that Holy Servant of God,' 8vo., York, 1817; 'A Series of Lectures on the Sacrament and Sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist,' 12mo., Lond. [1827?]; 'A Sermon preached at the opening of the Chapel of the Holy Family at Houghton Hall, Yorkshire,' 8vo., Walsall, 1829.

MARTYN, HENRY, a missionary, born at Truro, Cornwall, 18 Feb., 1781. His father was a labourer in the mines, till by indefatigable application he acquired knowledge enough to qualify himself for a clerkship in the counting-house of an eminent merchant at Truro. The son was bred in the grammar-school of that town, and in 1797 went to St. John's College, Cambridge, of which society he was chosen fellow 1802. The year following he took orders, obtained the degree of B.D., and in 1805 went to India as a chaplain to the company. In the East he soon displayed his rare talent for the acquisition of languages by becoming master of the Sanscrit. He translated the Common Prayer into Hindustani, and he performed all the service publicly in that tongue. From India he went to Shiraz, in Persia, where he resided ten months, and translated the Psalms and New Testament into that language. He also held conferences with learned Mahomedans, and converted some to Christianity. Died 16 Oct., 1812.

MARTYN, JOHN, F.R.S., a botanist, born in London 12 Sept., 1699. He was intended for the mercantile profession; but quitted the counting-house to follow his inclination for the study of natural history and physic. In 1720 he published a translation of Tournefort's History of Plants growing about Paris, which work brought him acquainted with Dillenius, in conjunction with whom he formed a botanical society, of which he became secretary. In 1724 he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; and about this time he commenced lecturer in his favourite science. In 1730 he entered at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he was elected professor of botany in 1733, which place he resigned in 1761 in favour of his son. He died at Chelsea 29 Jan., 1768. Besides the work already mentioned, he published: 'Tabulæ Synopticæ; Methodus Plantarum circa Cantabrigiam nascentium; Historia Plantarum rariorum; The Grub-Street Journal, 2 vols.; an edition of Virgil's Georgics, with a translation and notes. He was also engaged in an abridgment of the Philosophical Transactions, and translated some scientific works from the French. After his death appeared his 'Dissertations and Remarks on the Æneid of Virgil.'

MARTYN, THOMAS, F.R.S., son of the preceding, was born at Chelsea 1735, and educated at Cambridge, where in 1761 he succeeded his father in the botanical chair. In 1771 he was presented to the living of Ludgershall, Bucks, and in 1776 to that of Little Marlow, in the same county; but the former preference he resigned on becoming rector of Pertonhall, Beds, where he died 3 June, 1825. His principal works are: 'Plantæ Cantabrigienses;' 'Catalogus Horti Cantabrigienses;' 'Elements of Natural History;' a translation of Rousseau's Letters on Botany, with large additions; Sketch of a Tour through France, Switzerland, and Italy; another Tour in Italy, with catalogues of curiosities in the principal cities of that country; Flora Rustica, 2 vols.; Language of Botany; and a new and enlarged edition of Miller's Gardener's and Botanist's Dictionary, 4 vols. folio.

MARTYR, PETER, was born 8 Sept., 1500, at Florence, his family name being Fermigli. He took the habit of a canon regular of St. Augustine, at the monastery of Fiesole, became head of his community, and was so eloquent in the pulpit as to be esteemed one of the best Italian preachers. A perusal of the works of Zwingle and Bucer led him to adopt the opinions of those reformers, to which he converted Tremellius, Zanchias, and others. He afterwards went to Zurich, then to Basle, and afterwards to Strasburg, where he taught publicly, and married a young nun named Catharine Merande. His increasing reputation occasioned him to be invited to this country, where he arrived with his wife 1549, and was professor at Oxford till 1553, when he returned to Strasburg. He taught afterwards at Zurich, where he died 12 Nov., 1562. Peter Martyr had attended the conference of Poissy in the preceding year, and left a daughter, whom the senate of Zurich maintained out of respect to her father's memory. He wrote Commentaries on the Bible, and a great many other works in support of his theological tenets.

MARVELL, ANDREW, was born 1620 at Kingston-upon-Hull, of which place his father was minister. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; on leaving which he spent some years in travelling. In 1657 he became assistant to Milton, as Latin secretary. At the Restoration he was elected into parliament for his native place, with a salary from his constituents. In 1672 he attacked Dr. Samuel Parker, in a piece entitled 'The Rehearsal transposed;' which was followed by some others full of wit and argument. A few years after this, under the name of Andreas Rivetus, he encountered Dr. Turner, master of St. John's College, Cambridge, who had answered Bishop Croft's 'Naked Truth, or the true State of the Primitive Church.' Marvell next published 'An Account of the Growth of Popery, and arbitrary Government in England;' on which a reward was offered for a discovery of the writer and printer. But though Marvell was obnoxious to the ministry, he was somewhat of a favourite with the king, who took great delight in his conversation. One day, Lord Danby was sent to find out his lodgings, which were up two pair of stairs in a court in the Strand, and when his lordship opened the door, the patriot, in a surprise, told him, 'he believed he had mistaken his way.' Danby replied, 'not now I have found Mr. Marvell;' telling him, that he came from the king to know what his majesty could do to serve him? To which Marvell answered, that 'it was not in his majesty's power to serve him.' Lord Danby finding that no argument could prevail upon him to accept a place, concluded by saying, that the king had ordered him a thousand pounds, which he hoped he would receive. This he also refused; though, when the courtier was gone, he was obliged to borrow a guinea of a friend. He died 29 July, 1678, and was buried in the church of St. Giles-in-the-Fields. An edition of his poems was published

MARY I.

In 1726, in 2 vols. 12mo.; and a complete one of all his works in 1776, in 3 vols. 4to.

MARY I., Queen of England, eldest daughter of Henry VIII., by Catharine of Arragon, was born at Greenwich 18 Feb., 1517; succeeded to the throne 1553; married Philip of Spain, eldest son of Charles V., 1554; died 7 Nov., 1558.

MARY II., Queen of England, was born 30 April, 1662, being the daughter of the duke of York, afterwards James II., by Anne Hyde, daughter of the earl of Clarendon. At the age of fifteen she was married to William, Prince of Orange, whom she followed to England in 1689. The same year parliament having declared the crown vacant by the abdication of James, conferred it upon William and Mary. She died 28 Dec., 1694.

MARY STUART, Queen of Scotland, was born in the palace of Linlithgow 7 Dec., 1542. She was the daughter and heiress of James V., by Mary of Lorraine, and was only eight days old at the death of her father, on which a great contest took place among the nobility about the guardianship, which at last was entrusted to the earl of Arran. At the age of six years she was taken to France, where, in 1558, she was married to the dauphin Francis, who left her a widow two years afterwards, without issue, on which she returned to Scotland. In 1565 she espoused Henry Darnley, who had been previously created earl of Ross and duke of Rothsay. By him Mary had one son, who was afterwards James VI. of Scotland, and the first of England. In February, 1567, Henry Darnley was murdered; and in May following, Mary was married forcibly to John Hepburn, earl of Bothwell, a man of infamous character, and the actual perpetrator of that horrible deed. Bothwell, however, was soon afterwards obliged to leave the kingdom; and the queen was sent prisoner to the castle of Lochleven, from whence, after a confinement of eleven months, she escaped to Hamilton Castle. An open war now ensued between her and the regent, Murray; but Mary's forces, being undisciplined, were soon defeated, and she threw herself on the protection of Queen Elizabeth, who, after keeping her in custody eighteen years, caused her to be tried for conspiracy; and she was executed in the castle of Fotheringay 8 Feb., 1586-7. Her remains were interred in the cathedral of Peterborough; but James I., at his accession, caused the body of his unhappy parent to be removed to Westminster Abbey. She wrote poems in the Latin, French, Italian, and Scotch languages; and was a complete mistress of music. Several of her letters have been printed, and a greater number remain in manuscript. She was a firm believer in the Roman Catholic faith, and to that circumstance her death must be ascribed.

MASACCIO, or TOMASO DA SAN GIOVANNI, an Italian painter, born at San Giovanni, in Val d'Arno, 1401; died 1443.

MASCAGNI, PAUL, a celebrated Italian anatomist, born at Castelto, near Sienna, 1752. He was professor at Sienna, Pisa, and Florence, where he died 19 Oct., 1815. The principal work of Mascagni, who made some important anatomical discoveries, is entitled 'Vasorum Lymphaticorum Corporis Humani Historia et Iconographia,' 1787.

MASCARON, JULES, an eloquent French preacher, was born at Marseilles 1634; entered the congregation of the Oratory 1650; became bishop of Tulle 1671; was translated to Agen 1679, and died 16 Nov., 1703. Five of his Funeral Orations are in print.

MASCHERONI, LAURENCE, a mathematician, the well-known author of 'The Geometry of the Compass,' was born at Castagneta, near Bergamo, 14 May, 1750. He became professor of mathematics at Pavia, and was employed by the Academy of Bologna in their experiments to ascertain the figure of the earth by the descent of bodies. He assisted Fontana in drawing up the constitution of the Cisalpine Republic; and died at Paris 14 July, 1800.

MASCLÉF, FRANÇOIS, a Hebraist, born at Amiens 1663, became a canon of the cathedral there, and died 14 Nov., 1728. He devised a method of reading Hebrew without vowel points, and explained it in his 'Grammatica Hebraica, à Punctis aliisque Inventis Massorethica libera,' 1716.

MASDEU, JOHN FRANCIS, a Spanish Jesuit, celebrated as the author of a general History of Spain, published at Madrid in 20 vols. 4to., 1783-1800, under the title of 'Historia Critica de España, y de la Cultura Española en todo gener.' He was born at Barcelona 1740, and died at Valencia 11 April, 1817.

MASENIUS, JAMES, a Jesuit, born at Dalen, in the duchy of Juliers, 1606; died at Cologne 27 Sept., 1681. His principal work is a Latin poem, called 'Sarcothea, or the fall of Man,' which Lauder brought into notice by pretending that Milton was indebted to it for part of his Paradise Lost.

MASERES, FRANCIS, F.R.S., a mathematician and judge, born in London 15 Dec., 1731, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. After being called to the bar he was appointed attorney-general of Quebec, and in 1773 cursoritor-baron of the Exchequer. He was also for some years deputy-recorder of London, and senior judge of the sheriff's court. Died 19 May, 1824. His scientific attainments were considerable, and he made himself favourably known by the publication of 'A Dissertation on the Negative Sign in Algebra;' 'The Elements of Plane Trigonometry;' 'The Canadian Frecholder;' 'Principles of the Doctrine of Life Annuities;' 'Scriptores Logarithmici,' 6 vols.; 'Occasional Essays on Various Subjects;' besides several scarce old works, illustrative of English history. He was also at the expense of printing Donna Agnesi's Analytical Institutions, and her other mathematical treatises.

MASHAM, DAMARIS, LADY, daughter of Dr. Ralph Cudworth, master of Christ's College, Cambridge, was born at Cambridge 1658. She was educated under the care of her father, and was early distinguished for her uncommon learning and piety. She became the second wife of Sir Francis Masham of Oates, in the county of Essex, bart., in whose house Mr. Locke resided for many years, and where he died. Lady Masham published in 1696, 'A Discourse concerning the Love of God,' and in 1705, 'Thoughts in reference to a Virtuous or Christian Life.' She also wrote the account of Mr. Locke in the Great Historical Dictionary. Died 20 April, 1708.

MASKELYNE, NEVIL, D.D., F.R.S., was born in London in 1732, and educated at Westminster School, whence he removed to Catharine Hall, and next to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship (B.A. 1754; M.A. 1757; B.D. 1768; D.D. 1777). In 1761 he was appointed by the Royal Society to go to St. Helena to observe the transit of Venus; in which voyage he determined the method of finding the longitude at sea by lunar observations. In 1763 he undertook another voyage to Barbadoes, to ascertain the longitude of that island, as well as to prove the accuracy of Harrison's time-keeper, with other objects of practical science. On his return he succeeded Mr. Bliss as royal astronomer; and in 1767 he published that useful work, 'The Nautical Almanack;' with the auxiliary volume, known by the name of 'The Requisite Tables.' In 1774 he printed the first volume of his 'Astronomical Observations;' and the same year he went to ascertain the lateral attraction of the hill of Shehallien in Perthshire; for his paper on which subject he received the Copley medal. Died 9 Feb., 1811. Besides the works already noticed, and his papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he published 'The British Mariner's Guide,' 1793.

MASON, FRANCIS, B.D., was born in the county of Durham 1566. He became fellow of Merton College, Oxford; chaplain to James I.; rector of Orford, Suffolk; and archdeacon of Norfolk. Died Dec., 1621. He wrote, 'A Vindication of the Church of England, concerning the consecration and ordination of the Bishops, &c., as also of the ordination of Priests and Deacons,' 1613, which was ably answered by Dr. Anthony Champney.

MASON, GEORGE, an English writer, born about 1735; died 4 Nov., 1806. He published 'An Essay on Design in Gardening,' 1795; 'Life of Richard, Earl Howe,' 1803, &c.

MASON, HENRY JOSEPH MONCK, LL.D., an Irish barrister, died at the Dargle, co. Wicklow, 17 April, 1858, aged 79. He wrote an Essay on the antiquity and constitution of Parliaments in Ireland, 1820; Primitive Christianity in Ireland, 1836; Grammar of the Irish Language, 1839; Life of Bishop Bedell, 1843.

MASON, JOHN, a dissenting minister, was the grandson of John Mason, rector of Water Stratford in Buckinghamshire, who, in 1693, collected a number of followers under the persuasion that the Millennium was about to commence. One of the sons of this fanatic became a dissenting minister at Dunmow, where the subject of this article was born in 1706. He was ordained, in 1730, pastor of a congregation at Dorking, in Surrey, from whence he removed to Cheshunt, where he died in 1763. His works are a 'Plea for Christianity,' which procured him the degree of M.A. from Edinburgh; a valuable Treatise on Self-Knowledge; The Lord's Day Evening Entertainment, a set of Sermons for families, 2 vols.; Fifteen Discourses; Christian Morals, 2 vols.; The Student and Pastor; Essays on the Power of Numbers, and the Principles of Harmony; and another on Elocution.

MASON JOHN MONCK, a privy councillor of Ireland, and a commissioner of revenue for that kingdom, died at Dublin 1809. He published the Dramatic Works of John Massinger, with notes critical and explanatory, 4 vols., 1779-94; Comments on Reed's edition of Shakspeare 1785; Comments on the Plays of Beaumont and Fletcher, with an appendix containing some further Observations on Shakspeare, extended to the late edition of Malone, by Stevens, 1788; and an Oration commemorative of the late Major-Gen. Hamilton, 1804.

MASSANIELLO.

MASON, RICHARD. See ANGELUS à SANCTO FRANCISCO.

MASON, WILLIAM, a famous stenographer, of whose personal history little is known. He taught shorthand in London, and devoted his life to the improvement of his art, which he carried to a higher degree of perfection than any of his predecessors. His earliest publication, 'A Pen Picket from an Eagle's Wing,' 1072, contains a modification of Jeremiah Rich's method. He further developed the system in his 'Arts Advancement,' 1682; 3rd edition, 1699. At the latter date Mason was residing at 'the Writing School, The Hand and Pen, in Scalding Alley, over against the Stocks Market, London.' Still striving after perfection he brought out, in 1707, his best work, 'La Plume Volante.' This describes a method of shorthand writing, which was afterwards appropriated, without acknowledgment, by Thomas Gurney, and is now known as Gurney's system. See GURNEY.

MASON, WILLIAM, a divine and poet, born 1725, at Trinity Hall, Yorkshire; of which parish his father was vicar. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and afterwards obtained a fellowship in Pembroke Hall. In 1748 he wrote 'Isis,' a poem against the university of Oxford; which was replied to by Thomas Warton in his 'Triumph of Isis.' In 1752 Mason produced his 'Elfrida,' a dramatic poem, which was well received, though the attempt to establish it on the stage proved abortive. On entering into orders he was presented to the living of Aston, and appointed one of the king's chaplains. In 1759 he published the drama of 'Caractacus,' written, like the former, on the Greek model. In 1762 he obtained the precentorship of York, with a canonry annexed. In 1767 he lost his wife, who died of a consumption at Bristol, where she lies buried in the cathedral, with a monument to her memory, and an exquisite epitaph written by her husband. On the commencement of the American war, Mr. Mason took so decided a part in politics, that he was deprived of his chaplainship; but some years before his death the ardour of his zeal for liberty abated. Died 7 April, 1797. His other works are: Miscellaneous Poems, 1764; The English Garden, a poem in four books; Ode to the Naval Officers of Great Britain; Memoirs of Gray, prefixed to his works; Life of William Whitehead; Translation of Du Fresnoy's poem on Painting, with Sir Joshua Reynolds's Notes; Ode to Mr. Pitt; Ode in Commemoration of the Revolution of 1788; Essay on Church Music. He was likewise the author of the 'Heroic Epistle to Sir William Chambers,' and the other pieces published under the name of M'Gregor.

MASSANIELLO, the name commonly given to Tomas Aniello, a fisherman in Naples, who was born 1623, when that kingdom was subject to the house of Austria, and governed by a viceroy. The people had borne the foreign yoke with great patience till 1646, in which year a new and oppressive tax upon all kinds of fruit being imposed much discontent arose. Though the archbishop interested himself on behalf of the distressed populace, nothing was done for their relief, as the farmers of the taxes had art enough to persuade the governor that the clamour only proceeded from the rabble. At this time Massaniello, who was in his 24th year, earned his livelihood by fishing, and observing the murmurings which prevailed, he began to entertain some idea of redressing the grievance. Having imparted his design to the banditto Perone and his companions, they laughed at him; but when he assured them that he was in earnest, they readily promised him their assistance. Shortly after this, the fish of Massaniello being seized for the tax, he went among the fruiterers, and advised them not to make any more purchases of the country dealers till the impost had been taken off, which they promised. In the meantime he collected a number of idle boys, to each of whom he gave a small cane, and taught them certain cries suited to the object which he had in view. The shopkeepers, agreeable to the instructions they had received, refused to trade with the country people, and a riot ensuing, the regent sent an officer, named Anaclero, to quell the tumult. The multitude, however, grew more incensed at his appearance, and he was glad to save his life by a precipitate retreat. The populace now gathered in great numbers, and Massaniello, by his harangues, incited them to acts of more daring violence. After burning the toll-houses, they marched to the viceroy's palace, which they entered and rifled. The governor himself escaped with difficulty, and the prince of Bisignano, to whom the people were much attached, quitted the city. Thus left without a head, the multitude chose Massaniello for their leader, and the banditto Perone as his assistant. A stage was erected in the market-place, where this new ruler sat to give audience and to minister justice, which he did with equal gravity and impartiality. One hundred and fifty thousand men obeyed his orders, and an incredible number of women, armed like Amazons, were enrolled in the same cause. In this state of things the viceroy applied to the archbishop, whose mild persuasions had nearly succeeded in restoring order, when an attempt being made to assassinate Massaniello, the negotiation was broken off and the rage of the people burst forth with redoubled fury. In this exigency the viceroy had recourse once more to the archbishop, who prevailed upon Massaniello to renew the treaty and to visit the palace, which he did with uncommon pomp, on horseback, dressed in cloth of silver, a plume of feathers in his hat, and a drawn sword in his hand, attended by fifty thousand armed followers. On the Sunday following the terms were ratified at the cathedral church, and everything had an auspicious appearance, when, unfortunately for Massaniello, ambition induced him to violate his engagement, and to hold a power which he did not know how to direct. His conduct became capricious, and so tyrannical, that four persons took an opportunity of despatching him. The last words he uttered were, 'Ungrateful traitors!' His head was thrown into one ditch, and his body into another.

MASSARI, LUCIO, an historical painter, born at Bologna 1569; died 1633.

MASSENA, ANDRÉ, prince of Essling, duke of Rivoli, and a marshal of France, was born at Nice 6 May, 1758. After serving three years at sea he entered the French army (1775), and became successively colonel and general of brigade. In the revolutionary war he greatly distinguished himself, particularly in Italy, where he acquired the name of 'the favoured Child of Victory.' In 1799 he conducted as general-in-chief the memorable campaign of Switzerland, which was distinguished by the battle of Zurich. Seventy thousand prisoners were the fruits of this campaign, where he had to contend with the Archduke Charles and Marshal Suwarrow. In 1805 he commanded again in Italy and penetrated into the German States. He was afterwards charged with the conquest of Naples, and subsequently went to Poland, whence he returned after the treaty of Tilsit. In 1809 the war recalled him to Germany, where, after severe combats, he received the title of Prince for saving the French army on the plains of Essling. He afterwards distinguished himself no less at the battle of Wagram. His military career closed in Spain and Portugal, where he had to contend with the superior genius of Wellington. Died at Paris 4 April, 1817.

MASSEY, JOHN, a native of Wiltshire, received his education at Oxford. He embraced the Catholic religion in the reign of James II., and in 1680 was installed dean of Christ Church, where he fitted up a chapel for the celebration of Mass. On the landing of William of Orange he retired to France, took holy orders, and became confessor to the Conception nuns at Paris, where he died 11 Aug., 1715.

MASSEY, WILLIAM, a schoolmaster, born Jan., 1691. He was for many years master of a boarding-school at Wandsworth, Surrey; and died about 1764. He published 'The Origin and Progress of Letters,' 1763, containing biographical notices of English writing-masters; 'Corruptæ Latinitatis Index, or a Collection of Barbarous Words and Phrases,' 1755; and 'Remarks upon Milton's Paradise Lost,' 1791. He also left a number of translations and other pieces in MS.

MASSILLON, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French divine, was born 24 June, 1663, at Hieres, in Provence. He entered the congregation of the Oratory, and became so celebrated for his eloquence, that the general of his order called him to Paris, where he drew crowds of hearers. Louis XIV. paid him this compliment: 'When I hear other preachers I go away much pleased with them; but when I hear you I go away displeased with myself.' In 1717 he was made bishop of Clermont. Died 18 Sept., 1742. His discourses have been published in 14 vols. 8vo.

MASSINGER, PHILIP, a dramatic poet, born at Salisbury 1584. He became a commoner of Alban Hall, Oxford; but left the university without a degree, owing, as is supposed, to his turning Catholic. After this he resided near the theatre, in Southwark, where he died 17 March, 1650-40. Of his works, which rank him next to Shakspere, the best edition is that by Gilford, 4 vols., 1813.

MASSON, FRANCIS, a gardener and botanist, born at Aberdeen 1741. He was sent in 1771 to the Cape of Good Hope, to collect plants for the royal gardens; after which he went to the Canary Islands and the West Indies with the same object. He next visited Portugal and Madeira, and returned to the Cape in 1786, where he remained till 1795; and on his return made a voyage to North America. He died at Montreal about Christmas, 1805. He published a splendid volume on the genus 'Staphelia' 1796.

MASSON, JOHN, a French Protestant minister, who settled in England, and was employed as tutor in Bishop Burnet's family. He died in Holland about 1720. His best work is 'Vitæ Horatii, Ovidii, et Plinii junioris.'

MASSUET, KENK, a French Benedictine, editor of Irenæus, was born 1665, and died 1716.

MASTER, THOMAS, a poet, born at Cote, Gloucestershire, and educated at Winchester

School, from whence he was elected to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He died in the winter of 1643-4. His works are, 'Mensa Lubrica,' a poem, describing the game of shovel-board; a Greek Pindaric on the Crucifixion, which has been translated by Cowley; Latin poems. He assisted Lord Herbert in his Life of Henry VIII.

MASTERS, ROBERT, was born in London 1713. He received his education at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship and took his degree of B.D. In 1756 he was presented to the college living of Landbeach, Cambridgeshire; to which was afterwards added that of Linton; but this he exchanged for Waterbeach. Died 5 July, 1798. His works are, History of Corpus Christi College; Memoirs of Thomas Baker; Catalogue of the Pictures in the University of Cambridge; Account of the Parish of Waterbeach; papers in the Archæologia.

MASUDI, ABUL HASSAN ALI, a distinguished Arabian writer, died at Cairo 966.

MATHER, COTTON, D.D., F.R.S., son of Increase Mather, was born at Boston 12 Feb., 1663. He received his education at Harvard College; and in 1684 was appointed minister at Boston, where he was consulted on all public affairs. It is to be regretted, however, that a man of so much worth should have been concerned in the prosecution of a number of persons on the charge of witchcraft. Notwithstanding this the university of Glasgow sent him his degree of doctor of divinity; and the Royal Society of London elected him a member. Died 13 Feb., 1728. His principal works are, An Ecclesiastical History of New England; The Christian Philosopher; Psalterium Americanum; The Wonders of the Invisible World, or the Trials of Witches.

MATHER, INCREASE, brother of Samuel Mather, was born in New England 1635. He studied at Harvard College, and next at Dublin, where he took his master's degree in 1658. Soon after this he became minister of Torrington, Devonshire; from whence he removed to Guernsey; but at the Restoration he returned to New England, and was chosen minister of the New Church at Boston. When James II. published his Declaration of Liberty of Conscience, Mr. Mather came to England with an address of thanks to the king; but before his return the Revolution occurred, and he obtained from William a new charter for the colony of Massachusetts. He died president of Harvard College 23 Aug., 1723. He wrote, 'A History of the War with the Indians'; an Essay on remarkable Providences; a Discourse on Comets; a Discourse on Earthquakes.

MATHER, SAMUEL, a Puritan divine, born in Lancashire 1626. He went with his father, Richard Mather, a minister, to New England, where he was educated at Harvard College. In 1650 he returned to his native country, and became chaplain to Henry Cromwell, whom he accompanied to Ireland, where he was made fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. He was silenced at the Restoration; and died 26 Oct., 1671. His principal work is entitled 'The Figures and Types of the Old Testament explained.'

MATHEW, THEOBALD, D.D., an Irish clergyman, better known as 'Father Mathew,' the Apostle of Temperance, was born at Thomastown, co. Tipperary, 10 Oct., 1790. At the age of thirteen he was sent to the lay academy of Kilkenny, from whence, being destined for the priesthood, he was transferred in his twentieth year to the college of Maynooth. He was ordained priest 1814, and associating himself soon afterwards with the Capuchin friars at Cork, he devoted all his time to the temporal and spiritual wants of the poor. It was at the suggestion of a Quaker that Father Mathew first directed his attention to the suppression of the vice of intoxication, to which the Irish people were at that period so generally addicted. He acted upon the suggestion with all the energy of his character, preached a crusade against the ruinous vice, and ere long succeeded in enrolling some of the most obdurate drunkards in Cork in his Total Abstinence Association. This encouraged him to extend his mission, and he visited most of the towns in Ireland, being everywhere received with the wildest enthusiasm. It is said that at Nenagh 20,000 persons took the pledge in one day; 100,000 at Galway in two days; in Loughrea 80,000 in two days; between that and Portumna from 180,000 to 300,000; and in Dublin about 70,000 during five days. He afterwards carried on his operations in Liverpool, Manchester, London, and other English towns, and even made a temperance tour through the United States. In furthering the object he had so much at heart Father Mathew, who notwithstanding his vows had obtained from the Holy See a dispensation enabling him to hold property, dissipated the whole of his private fortune; but the Government granted him a pension of £300 as an acknowledgment of the important services he had rendered to the nation. This benevolent priest died at Queenstown 8 December, 1856. A statue of him has since been erected in the city of Cork; and a Life of him by Mr. John Francis Maguire, M.P., was published in 1863.

MATHEW, TONIE, an English prelate, born at Bristol 1546. He became a student of Christ Church, Oxford; and in 1569 was chosen university orator. In 1570 he obtained a canonry of Christ Church, and the archdeaconry of Bath. In 1572 he was elected president of St. John's College; in 1583 made dean of Durham, and in 1595 was consecrated bishop of that diocese, from whence he was translated to York in 1606. Died 29 March, 1628. There is nothing of his in print, except one Latin sermon against Campian the Jesuit.

MATHEW, SIR TONIE, son of the above, was born at Oxford 1578, and became a student of Christ Church; but after taking his degrees in arts he went abroad, changed his religion, and entered the Society of Jesus. Notwithstanding this he received (1623) the honour of knighthood from James I. He died at Ghent 13 Oct., 1655. His published works are, the Life of St. Teresa; a translation of St. Augustine's Confessions; Life of Troilo Savelli; Letters; and a translation into Italian of Bacon's Essays.

MATHEWS, CHARLES, a celebrated comedian, was born in London 28 June, 1776, and after receiving a sound education at Merchant Taylor's School, was apprenticed to his father, who kept a bookseller's shop in the Strand. To the horror of his family, who were rigid Methodists, he showed a decided inclination for the stage, and after appearing as an amateur at several provincial theatres obtained an engagement at the Theatre Royal, Dublin. His histrionic reputation, however, was built up some years later on the York circuit, he having joined the company of the well-known Tate Wilkinson. On 16 May, 1803, he made his first appearance on the London boards at the Haymarket Theatre, as 'Jubal' in 'The Jew,' and he continued to act there during several seasons with considerable success. In 1804 he was engaged at Drury Lane, and in 1812 at Covent Garden, having risen to the highest rank among the professors of the mimic art. Among the characters in which he mostly excelled were, 'Mawworm,' 'Sir Fretful Plagiary,' 'Morbieu,' 'Monsieur Mallet,' 'Dick Cypher,' and 'Multiple' in the 'Actor of All Work.' In 1818 he abandoned the regular drama and commenced a species of entertainment in the form of a monologue, which, under the name of 'Mathews at Home,' proved highly successful, and drew large audiences not only in the metropolis, but in almost every theatre in the kingdom, and also in the United States which he twice visited. The result of his first voyage across the Atlantic suggested the materials for a new entertainment called 'A Trip to America.' Mr. Mathews died at Plymouth 28 June, 1835.

MATHIAS, MARIA DI, born in Italy about 1804, founded the order of the Sisters of the Most Precious Blood. She died 20 Aug., 1866, having seen the establishment of upwards of fifty convents of her order in Italy. It is said that the first time it became necessary for her to communicate with the ecclesiastical authorities of her diocese, being unable to write, she knelt down, pen in hand, before the crucifix, and was miraculously enabled to form the letters, and find the fitting expressions for conveying her meaning to the bishop. A branch of the Sisterhood of the Most Precious Blood is established in London.

MATHIAS, THOMAS JAMES, F.R.S., F.S.A., was born about 1750, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship. He devoted his life to the profession of literature, and in 1794 published anonymously the first dialogue of his best known work, 'The Pursuits of Literature,' a satirical poem. Three other dialogues subsequently appeared (1796-7), and the entire work reached its 16th edition in 1812. It attracted universal attention, chiefly on account of the notes, which abound in deep and discriminating criticism on public men and opinions. In 1814 with finances very limited, Mr. Mathias quitted his native country for Naples, where he resided till his death in 1835. Among his other works are 'Runic Odes, imitated in the Norse Tongue in the Manner of Mr. Gray,' 1781; 'Essay on the Evidence relating to the Poems attributed to Kowley,' 1783; 'Odes, English and Latin,' 1798; an edition of Gray's Works, 2 vols., 1815; to say nothing of various publications in Italian, of which language he was a complete master.

MATSYS, QUINTIN, a painter, born at Antwerp 1460. He was originally a blacksmith, which business he quitted on falling in love with the daughter of a painter, and by diligent application became such an excellent artist, that Sir Joshua Reynolds says some of his heads are not inferior to those of Raphael. One of his principal pictures is that of the 'Two Misers,' at Windsor. Died 1520.

MATTEI, PAOLO DA, a Neapolitan painter, died 1728, aged 67.

MATTHESON, JOHN, a German composer and writer on music, born 28 Sept., 1681, at Hamburg, where he died 17 April, 1704.

MATY.

MATTHEW OF WESTMINSTER, an English historian in the fourteenth century. He was a Benedictine of the Abbey of Westminster, and compiled a work entitled 'Flores Historiarum ab exordio mundi, ad ann. 1307,' published at London in 1507, and at Frankfort in 1601. An English translation by C. D. Yonge was published at London, in 2 vols., 1853.

MATTHEWS, EUGENE or OWEN, a Catholic divine, appointed bishop of Clogher 1609, and archbishop of Dublin 1611. He died in the Netherlands 1623.

MATTHEWS, THOMAS, an English admiral, was a native of Glamorganshire. He commanded in the Mediterranean 1744, and fought an obstinate but indecisive battle off Toulon with the combined fleets. Owing to his not being supported by Lestock, his second in command, Admiral Matthews failed in gaining a complete victory; and yet for this he was dismissed the service, and Lestock acquitted. Died 1751.

MATTHIEU, AUGUSTUS HENRY, a German Hellenist, born at Göttingen 25 Dec., 1769; died at Altenburg 6 Jan., 1835. Blomfield's translation of his Greek Grammar has gone through several editions; and his 'Manual of the History of Greek and Roman literature' has also been rendered into English.

MATTHIAS CORVINUS, king of Hungary and Bohemia, was born 1443; and elected to the throne of Hungary 1458. He engaged in a successful war against the Bohemian heretics, the Turks, and the Emperor Frederick IV., from whom he took Vienna and Neustadt, with a great part of Austria. Died 6 April, 1490.

MATTHIAS, son of Maximilian II., was elected emperor of Germany 1612, in succession to Rudolphus II. He made peace with the Turks 1615; and died at Vienna 20 March, 1619, aged 63.

MATTHIEU, PIERRE, a French historian, born 1583; died 12 Oct., 1621.

MATTHIOLUS, PETER ANDREW, a physician and naturalist, born at Sienna 23 March, 1500; died at Trent 1577. His Commentary on Dioscorides, published both in Italian and Latin, is an immense repository of all the botanico-medical erudition of that epoch.

MATTHISSON, FREDERICK VON, a German lyric poet, born near Magdeburg 23 Jan., 1761; died at Wörlitz, near Dessau, 12 March, 1831.

MATTI, EMANUEL, a Spanish poet, born 1663; died 1737.

MATTOCKS, ISABELLA, an English actress, born 1746; died 26 June, 1826. She played tragedy and comedy with equal success, and was the chief favourite at Covent Garden for nearly twenty years. Her maiden name was Hallan.

MATURIN, CHARLES ROBERT, an Irish clergyman of the Established Church, born at Dublin 1782, and educated at Trinity College. On taking orders he obtained the curacy of St. Peter's Church, in his native city, but though much followed and admired as a preacher he never gained any higher preferment, owing probably to the eccentricity of his manners, which were little suited to his profession. Died 30 Oct., 1824. Mr. Maturin published some novels of no ordinary merit; a volume of impassioned sermons; and a tragedy called 'Betrain, or the Castle of St. Aldobrand,' which was performed at Drury Lane with considerable success.

MATY, MATTHEW, M.D., was born in Holland 1718. After taking his degree at Leyden, he came to England, and in 1750 commenced the 'Journal Britannique,' which procured him many friends. In 1753 he was appointed one of the keepers of the British Museum, and in 1773 he became principal librarian of that institution. He was also secretary to the Royal Society, and died 2 Aug., 1776. Dr. Maty wrote the life of Lord Chesterfield, prefixed to his Miscellaneous Works, in 2 vols., 1777-8.

MATY, PAUL HENRY, son of the preceding, was born in 1745. He was elected from Westminster School to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a travelling fellowship. After entering into orders he seceded from the church, and devoted himself to literature. He became assistant librarian at the Museum, and one of the secretaries of the Royal Society, which last situation he resigned, on a quarrel with Sir Joseph Banks. In 1782 he began a review, which continued four years, and was then dropped. Died 16 Jan., 1787. He translated Ricsbeck's Travels into English, and into French the accounts of the gems in the 'Gemmæ Marlburienæ.' After his death appeared a volume of his sermons; in which collection were inserted by mistake two or three of Archbishop Secker's.

MAUCROIX, FRANÇOIS DE, a French translator and biographer, born at Noyon 7 Jan., 1619; died at Rheims 9 Aug., 1708.

MAUDUIT, ISRAEL, the son of Isaac Mauduit, a dissenting minister of Exeter, was born at Bermondsey 1708. He was a merchant, and distinguished himself by some very able pamphlets, particularly one entitled 'Considerations on the German War in 1760.' He was afterwards customer of Southampton, and agent for the province of Massachusetts. Died 14 May, 1787.

MAUNDER, SAMUEL, a literary compiler, born about 1790; died at his house in Gibson Street, Islington, 30 April, 1849. He was brother-in-law to William Pinnock, whose name is on the title-pages of the well-known 'Catechisms,' although Maunder had the chief hand in their compilation. Of Mr. Maunder's numerous publications we may mention the 'Treasury of Useful Knowledge;' 'Treasury of History;' 'Scientific and Literary Treasury;' 'Treasury of Natural History;' and 'Biographical Treasury.'

MAUPERTUIS, PIERRE LOUIS MOREAU DE, a mathematician, was born at St. Malo 17 July, 1698. He studied in the college of La Marche, at Paris; and in 1723 was admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences, the memoirs of which institution abound with his communications. In 1736 he was sent on an expedition to the polar circle, to ascertain the figure of the earth. In 1740 he was invited to Berlin by the king of Prussia, whom he followed to the field, and was present at the battle of Molwitz, where he was made prisoner and carried to Vienna. On regaining his liberty, he married a lady of fortune at Berlin, and was appointed president of the Royal Academy of Sciences. In this situation he became involved in a quarrel with Voltaire, who for his conduct was ordered to quit the Court. Maupertuis died of a consumption at Basle 27 July, 1759. His mathematical and philosophical works were printed in 4 vols. 8vo. at Lyons 1756.

MAUR, St., a celebrated disciple of St. Benedict, died 5 Jan., 584. There was established in France a congregation of Benedictines which bore his name, and which was a reform of the order, approved by Pope Gregory XV. 1621. This congregation has produced many learned men.

MAUREPAS, JEAN FRÉDÉRIC PHELIPEAUX, comte DE, a French statesman, born 1701. In 1738 he was appointed minister of state; but was exiled in 1749, at the instigation of a lady at the court. In 1774 he was recalled to the ministry; and it was by his advice that France took part in the disputes between England and America. Died 21 Nov., 1781. His memoirs have been published.

MAURICE, count of Nassau, and prince of Orange, was born 14 Nov., 1567, being the second surviving son of William I., prince of Orange, surnamed the Silent, whom he succeeded in the government of the Low Countries. He added to his dominions by conquest, and was considered the ablest general of his time. His death took place at the Hague 23 April, 1674.

MAURICE, CHARLES, a Parisian journalist, died Sept., 1869, aged 87. He was at one time editor of the 'Courrier des Théâtres;' and published 'Histoire Anecdote de Théâtre et de la Littérature.'

MAURICE, GODFREY. See JONES, JOHN.

MAURICE, THOMAS, was born at Hertford 23 Sept., 1754, and having completed his studies at Oxford was ordained to the curacy of Woodford, Essex, where he resided till 1785, when he removed to Epping. In 1804 he was presented to the vicarage of Cudham, Kent. He also obtained the pension which had been bestowed on the poet Cowper, and was appointed one of the librarians in the British Museum. Died 30 March, 1824. In addition to some poems and sermons Mr. Maurice published 'Indian Antiquities,' 7 vols., 1793-1800; 'History of Hindostan,' 2 vols., 1795-98; 'Modern History of Hindostan,' 2 vols., 1802-10; and 'Memoirs,' 1819.

MAURICEAU, FRANÇOIS, a French surgeon and writer on midwifery, died at Paris 17 Oct., 1799.

MAURITIUS, TIBERIUS, emperor of the East, was born in Cappadocia 539; and reigned from 582 to 602, when he was put to death by Phocas.

MAUROLICO, FRANCIS, a mathematician and astrologer, born at Messina 16 Sept., 1494; became abbat of St. Maria del Porto in Sicily; and died 21 July, 1575.

MAURY, JEAN SIFFREIN, a French cardinal, born 1746. On entering into orders he became a celebrated preacher at Paris, where he was elected a member of the academy and obtained an abbey. When the revolution broke out he became one of the representatives of the clergy in the States-General, where he distinguished himself by his eloquence in behalf of his order, as he afterwards did in defence of royalty. On the dissolution of the constituent assembly he went to Italy, where he was nominated bishop of Nicaea, and a cardinal. In 1807 he made his submission to Bonaparte, who in 1810 appointed him archbishop of Paris; but when the usurper fell the cardinal was obliged to leave France. He died at Rome 11 May, 1817. He published several works, the best of which is 'An Essay on Eloquence.'

MAVOR, WILLIAM FORDYCE, LL.D., a compiler of educational works, was born in the parish of New Deer, Aberdeenshire, 1 Aug., 1728. At an early age he quitted his native country, and when only seventeen officiated in a school at Burford, Oxfordshire. Subsequently he started a school at Woodstock. Having contrived to get a title for holy orders, he was presented to the vicarage of Hurley, Berks. He was also rector of Stonesheld, Oxfordshire, and of Bladen-with-Woodstock, at which latter place he died 29 Dec., 1837. Many of his educational manuals—particularly his 'Spelling Book'—formerly enjoyed a high reputation, though they have been superseded by works more adapted to the requirements of the age. We can only afford space to mention his 'Universal Stenography,' 1779, a faulty system of short-hand, now little used; 'Dictionary of Natural History'; 'Poems,' 1793; 'Historical Account of Voyages and Travels'; 'The British Nepos, or Lives of Illustrious Britons'; 'Elements of Natural History'; 'The English Spelling Book,' 1801; 'Universal History,' 25 vols.; Histories of Greece, Rome, and England; and 'The Mother's Catechism, or First Principles of Knowledge.'

MAWE, JOHN, a mineralogist, born in Derbyshire 1764. He went early in life to Rio de la Plata and Brazil, and was charged by Don Pedro to make a scientific tour through the latter country. The result of his observations was given to the public under the title of 'Travels in the interior of Brazil, particularly in the gold and diamond districts of that country, by authority of the Prince Regent of Portugal; including a Voyage to the Rio de la Plata, and an Historical Sketch of the Revolution of Buenos Ayres,' 1812; a work which received so large a share of the public favour that it passed through several editions, both here and in America. Settling in London, Mr. Mawe opened a shop for the sale of minerals in the Strand, where he died 26 Oct. 1829. His 'Minerology of Derbyshire'; 'Treatise on Diamonds'; 'Introduction to the Study of Conchology'; and other works on cognate subjects, possess great merit.

MAWE, JOHN SAINT, an English writer, was educated at St. Paul's School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He died July, 1820, and in the following year a volume of Selections from his Papers was printed for private circulation.

MAWE, LEONARD, an English prelate, received his education at Peterhouse, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. Subsequently he was appointed master of Trinity College in that university; chaplain to Prince Charles, whom he attended when he went to Spain, to pay his addresses to the Infanta; and at length, in 1628, bishop of Bath and Wells. He enjoyed the latter dignity but a short time, dying at Chiswick, Middlesex, 2 Sept., 1629.

MAWSON, MATTHIAS, an English prelate, was son of a brewer at Chiswick, and after a preliminary education at St. Paul's School, removed to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, of which he was elected master 1724. He became bishop of Llandaff 1738; was translated to Chichester about two years afterwards; and in 1754 succeeded Dr. Gooch in the see of Ely. Died Nov., 1770, aged 87.

MAXENTIUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VALERIUS, son of Maximianus Hercules, declared himself emperor of Rome 306. He was defeated by Constantine, and drowned in the Tiber 312.

MAXIMIANUS, GALERIUS VALERIUS, originally a shepherd, was raised to the Roman throne by Diocletian, who gave him his daughter in marriage. Died 311.

MAXIMIANUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VALERIUS HERCULES, a Roman emperor, who rose to that dignity from the rank of a common soldier. He was put to death by order of Constantine, his son-in-law, 310.

Mayer.

MAXIMILIAN I., archduke of Austria, son of Frederick III., was born 1459. He was elected king of the Romans, and afterwards emperor. He was unsteady in his attachments, and little to be depended upon in political affairs. Died 12 Jan., 1519.

MAXIMILIAN II., son of Ferdinand I., was born 1527. He was elected king of the Romans 1552, and two years later succeeded his father as king of Hungary and Bohemia, and emperor of Germany. Died 1576.

MAXIMILIAN JOSEPH, nephew of Charles Theodor, duke of Bavaria, was born 1756, and succeeded his uncle 1790. He was at first an ally of Napoleon's, and gave his daughter in marriage to Eugene Beaubarnis 1806, in which year his duchy was transformed into a kingdom. In 1813, however, he entered into the league formed against France. Died 1825.

MAXIMINUS, CAIUS JULIUS VERUS, son of a peasant, rose by his valour to be emperor of Rome 235. He was a tyrant, and fell by assassination 238.

MAXIMUS, TYRRIUS, a philosopher of the second century of the Christian era. He resided chiefly in Greece, and left forty-one dissertations upon different subjects, which were first published by Stephens in 1557.

MAXWELL, WILLIAM HAMILTON, a novelist and miscellaneous writer, was born at Newry, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. In 1820 he was collated to the prebend and rectory of Bullagh, in Connaught, but as there was not a single Protestant in the parish he devoted his whole time to literature and field sports. Among his works may be cited, 'Stories of Waterloo'; 'Wild Sports of the West'; 'The Dark Lady of Doona'; 'Hector O'Halloran'; and other dashing novels; a Life of Wellington, in 3 vols.; 'Rambling Recollections of a Soldier of Fortune'; 'Wanderings in the Highlands'; 'Peninsular Sketches'; and 'History of the Rebellion in Ireland in 1798, with Memoirs of the Union, and of Emmett's Insurrection in 1805.' Died 29 Dec., 1850, aged 56.

MAY, THOMAS, was born at Mayfield, Sussex, 1594. He became a commoner of Sidney College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to Gray's Inn, but did not make the law his profession. He was a favourite with Charles I., and during his residence at court produced five plays, besides a translation of Lucan's 'Pharsalia,' to which poem he added a supplement. He also wrote, by the royal command, two poems on the reigns of Henry II. and Edward III. Notwithstanding this, May turned against the king in the civil war, and was appointed secretary and historiographer to the parliament. He died 13 Nov., 1650, and was buried in Westminster Abbey; but at the Restoration his body was taken up, and interred in St. Margaret's churchyard. Besides the above works, he wrote 'The History of the Parliament of England, which began in 1649,' folio. May also published an abstract of this history.

MAYER, JOHN FREDERICK, a Lutheran minister and writer on theology, born at Leipzig 1650; died 1712.

MAYER, or MAYR, JOHN SIMON, a German musical composer, born at Mendorf, in Bavaria, 14 June, 1763; died at Bergamo 2 Dec. 1845.

MAYER, TOBIAS, an astronomer, was born at Maspach (Württemberg) 17 Feb., 1723. Though he was self-taught, the university of Göttingen elected him to the mathematical professorship. Died 20 Feb., 1762. His widow received £5000 from the English parliament for his Theory of the Moon, and Astronomical Tables and Precepts. The other works of Mayer are 'A new and general Method of resolving Geometrical problems,' A Mathematical Atlas; Account of a Lunar Globe.

MAYERNE, SIR THEODORE, a physician, born at Geneva 1573. Going to Paris, he became physician to Henry IV.; but on the death of that monarch he came to England, and was appointed physician to James I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He continued in the same favour with Charles I., to whom he adhered in the Rebellion. He died at Chelsea 15 March, 1655. His works were published 1701.

MAYHEW, EDWARD, an English monk of the Benedictine order, died at Cambray 14 Sept., 1625, leaving Notes upon the Sarum Manual; A Treatise of the Grounds of the Old and New Religion; An Answer to Mr. Field's Exceptions; A Paradise of Prayers, from several authors; 'Congregationis Anglicanæ Ordinis S. Benedicti Trophæa,' Rheims, 1619.

MAYNARD, FRANÇOIS, a French poet, born at Toulouse, 1582; died 1646.

MAYNARD, SIR JOHN, serjeant-at-law, was born at Tavistock, Devonshire, about 1602. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, on leaving which he became a student of the Middle Temple. In the Long Parliament he distinguished himself as one of the prosecutors of Straford and Laud; but afterwards he opposed the violent proceedings of the army, and the usurpation of Cromwell, for which he was twice sent to the Tower. After the Restoration he was knighted, but refused the honour of being a judge. At the Revolution he displayed great talents in the conference between the Lords and Commons, on the question of the abdication of the throne by James II. When William III. paid him a compliment on his age by saying that he must have outlived all the men of the law in his time, Sir John answered that he should have outlived the law too, if his highness had not come over. In 1689 Serjeant Maynard was one of the commissioners of the great seal. Died 9 Oct. 1690.

MAYNE, JASPER, D.D., was born at Hatherleigh, Devonshire, 1604. He was elected from Westminster School to Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a studentship and proceeded to his doctor's degree. He suffered considerably for his loyalty in the civil wars, but lived to be restored to his place in the college, and to receive a canony of Christ Church, with the archdeaconry of Chichester. Died 6 Dec., 1672. The doctor published a translation of part of Lucian, two comedies and some sermons.

MAYNWARING, ARTHUR, was born at Ightfield, Shropshire, 1668. He was educated at Shrewsbury School and Christ Church Oxford, after which he entered one of the inns of court, but never followed the law. In the reign of William he was made one of the commissioners of the customs, and in that of Anne, auditor of the imposts. Died 13 Nov., 1712. He wrote several pieces in prose and verse; and in 1715 a volume was published, entitled 'The Life and Posthumous Works of Arthur Maynwarig, Esq.'

Hospital. He subsequently, however, forsook the legitimate path of his profession, and became a mesmerist and a hydropath, on both of which subjects he wrote extensively. He died at Bad-Weilback, near Mayence, 15 Aug. 1852. His 'Outlines of Human Physiology' is an able work.

MAYOW, JOHN, D.C.L., a chemist, born in Cornwall 1645. He was at first a scholar of Wadham College, and next probationer fellow of All Souls, where he took his degrees in law, though he afterwards applied to the study of physic. He died in London Sept., 1679. He wrote 'Tractatus quinque medico-physici;' 1. De sale nitro, et spiritu nitro-ærio; 2. De Respiratione; 3. De Respiratione fœtus in utero et ovo; 4. De motu musculari et spiritibus animalibus; 5. De Rachitide, published at Oxford, in 1 vol. 1674. It appears from these tracts that the chemical discoveries claimed by Priestley and Scheele were known to Mayow.

MAZARIN, JULIUS, a cardinal and statesman, born at Piscina in Italy 14 July, 1602. He studied at Alcalá, in Spain, after which he went to Rome and became attached to the service of Cardinal Sacchetti, whom he accompanied on his mission into Lombardy. While in that country Mazarin effected a peace between the French and Spaniards, which procured him the esteem of the cardinals Richelieu and Barberini, by the latter of whom he was recommended to the pope, who sent him as nuncio-extraordinary to the court of France. In 1641 he was made a cardinal, and on the death of Richelieu, succeeded him as prime minister. At first he was rather popular, but in a short time cabals were formed against him with such effect that he was dismissed from the royal presence, and compelled to leave the kingdom. But though a price was set upon his head, Mazarin contrived to dispel the storm, and he even returned to court with increased power. After this he continued in the administration of affairs till his death, 9 March, 1661. His letters have been printed in 2 vols.

MAZZINGHI, JOSEPH, Count, a musical composer, was born in England 25 Dec., 1765, his father being an Italian, who cultivated his son's musical talent to such purpose that at the age of nineteen he was qualified to hold the important post of director at the Opera House. When the building was burnt down (1789) and all the music of Paesicello's opera of 'La Locanda' lost, Mazzinghi wrote down from memory all the orchestral parts. Among the operas which he composed for Covent Garden and Drury Lane were 'The Blind Girl,' 'The Exile,' 'Chains of the Heart,' 'Ramah Droog,' 'Free Knights,' 'Paul and Virginia,' and 'The Turnpike Gate.' Many of his songs obtained an extraordinary popularity. His death occurred at the Catholic College at Downside, near Bath, 15 Jan., 1844, and he was buried in the Catholic chapel at Chelsea on the 25th of that month. In recording the fact the 'Gentleman's Magazine' mentions that 'his remains had been attended in solemn procession, on the previous evening, from his residence in Cadogan Place, with all the imposing ceremonies of the Church of Rome (torches lighted, priest in his pontifical robes, &c.)—a sight, it is believed, rarely witnessed in this country, in the public thoroughfares, since the epoch of the Reformation.'

MAZZOCCHI, ALEXIS SYMMACHUS, an Italian antiquary, was born near Capua 1684, and became professor of Greek and Hebrew at Naples, where he died 1771.

MAZZUCHELLI.

MAZZUCHELLI, JOHN MARY, Count DE, a biographer, born at Brescia 28 Oct., 1707; died 19 Nov., 1765. His great work on the Writers of Italy ('Gli Scrittori d'Italia') was published in 6 folio vols., 1753-63.

MAZZUOLI. See PAMMEGIANO.

MEAD, JOHN. See ALMEIDA.

MEAD, MATTHEW, a nonconformist divine, born in Buckinghamshire 1629. He became minister of Shadwell, from which place he was ejected at the Restoration; and then went to Holland, but returned in 1674 and erected a large meeting-house at Stepney, where he died 16 Oct., 1699. He published some religious works, the principal of which are, 'The almost Christian tried and cast,' and sermons on 'Ezekiel's Wheels.' Among the MSS. in the British Museum (Addit. 10,600, 10,601) are seventeen sermons preached at Stepney by Matthew Mead, transcribed from short-hand notes written after him by James Andrews, in 1703 and 1710.

MEAD, RICHARD, M.D., F.R.S., son of the preceding, was born at Stepney 11 Aug., 1673. He studied at Utrecht and Leyden, and from thence went to Padua, where he took his doctor's degree, in which he was incorporated at Oxford on his return to England; and appointed physician to St. Thomas's Hospital. He was also admitted a fellow of the Royal Society, and of the College of Physicians. In 1719 he was consulted by government on the means of preventing contagion; and the advice which he gave respecting quarantine laws was adopted. He also contributed to the introduction of the practice of inoculation for the small-pox, and a new method of treating that disorder. He became principal physician to George II., and had his two sons-in-law, Drs. Wilmot and Nichols, for his associates. In the midst of his professional engagements he cultivated polite literature, and encouraged the arts. His library and museum were open to all men of science; many of whom were assisted in their labours by his liberality. Dr. Mead died full of honours 16 Feb., 1754. His works have been published in one volume, 4to., 1762.

MEADOWCOURT, RICHARD, was born in Staffordshire 1697, and educated at Oxford. In 1732 he was promoted to a canonry of Worcester, and died there 1760. He wrote 'A Critical Dissertation, with Notes, upon Milton's Paradise Regained.'

MEADOWS, DRINKWATER, an English comedian, died at Barnes, Surrey, June, 1809.

MÉCHAIN, PIERRE FRANÇOIS ANDRÉ, a French astronomer, born at Laon 16 Aug., 1744; died in Spain 20 Sept., 1805.

MECHERINO. See BECCAFUMI.

MEDE, JOSEPH, B.D., was born 1586, at Berden, Essex. He became a commoner of Christ's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He was also chosen reader of the Greek lecture. Died 1 Oct., 1638. His works, of which the best known is his 'Clavis Apocalyptica,' were published in folio, 1672.

MEDICI, COSMO DE', a citizen of Florence, called the 'Father of his Country,' was born in 1389. He was the son of John de' Medici, who died in 1428; at which time Cosmo had acquired distinction as a merchant and statesman. In 1433 the party of Rinaldo d'Albizi banished him from the republic, on which he went to Venice; but in about a year he returned, and Rinaldo was obliged to quit Florence. Cosmo now became the first man in the state; and employed his wealth in promoting literature, particularly the study of the Greek language, and the Platonic philosophy; for which purpose he founded an academy, and collected from the east an immense number of manuscripts. Died 1 Aug., 1464.

MEDICI, LORENZO DE', grandson of the preceding, was born 1448, and succeeded his father, Peter as the head of the republic in 1469. While engaged in the advancement of literature, a conspiracy was formed against the house of Medici, by the family of the Pazzi; but after assassinating the brother of Lorenzo, they were defeated and banished. Lorenzo, on terminating a contest with the Pope, devoted himself to the cultivation of learning and the arts. He restored the academy of Pisa; founded another at Florence; and formed a noble gallery and library. On the surrender of Constantinople to the Turks, he employed the fugitive Greek scholars in collecting manuscripts, and thus proved the reviver of learning in Europe. Well, therefore, did he merit the title of 'Lorenzo the Magnificent,' which posterity, as well as his contemporaries, have unanimously concurred in giving him. He wrote several pieces of Italian poetry; and died 8 April, 1492. His life by William Roscoe is a highly interesting work.

MEDINA, SIR JOHN, a portrait painter, born at Brussels 1659. He came to England in 1686; and after painting a great number of pictures, went to Scotland, where he was knighted by the duke of Queensberry, lord high commissioner. He died there 1711. His grandson, John Medina, who died at Edinburgh 1796, was also a painter.

MEDWIN, THOMAS, cousin and biographer of the poet Shelley, died at Horsham, Sussex, 2 Aug., 1869, aged 80.

MEEN, HENRY, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. (B.D. 1776). He afterwards became minor canon and lecturer of St. Paul's Cathedral, the chapter of which presented him to the rectory of Cole Abbey and the prebend of Twyford. Died 3 Jan., 1817, aged 72. Mr. Meen completed Fawkes's translation of the Argonautics of Apollonius Rhodius; and published 'Remarks on the Cassandra of Lycophron.' He was also the author of 'Successiva Opera; or Selections from ancient Authors, sacred and profane;' and a poetical piece entitled 'Happiness.'

MEERMAN, GERARD, a Dutch civilian and writer on topographical antiquities, was born at Leyden 1722; became pensionary of Rotterdam; and died 15 Dec., 1771.

MEERMAN, JOHN, son of the preceding, wrote some able historical and legal works, and greatly augmented his father's library, which he generously bequeathed to the town of the Hague. While Louis Bonaparte was king of Holland Meerman was director of the Fine Arts and of Public Instruction; and after the country was united to France he became a count of the empire and a senator. Born 1753; died 19 Aug., 1815.

MEHEGAN, GUILLAUME ALEXANDRE, a French writer, was born of an Irish family at Salle, in the diocese of Alais, 1721; died at Paris 1766. His chief work, 'A View of Universal Modern History,' was translated into English by Henry Fox, 3 vols., 1779.

MEHEMET ALI, Pasha of Egypt, one of the most remarkable men of his age, was born at

MEHEMET ALI.

Kavala, in Roumelia, about 1766, and commenced life as a tobacconist there, but subsequently volunteered into the army. In his new career he soon obtained high favour with the governor of Kavala by his efficient assistance in quelling a rebellion and dispersing a band of pirates; and on the death of his commanding officer he was appointed to succeed him. Afterwards in various engagements with the French he distinguished himself by his skill and valour. He rapidly rose in rank and gained a strong ascendancy over the minds of his soldiers. After the expulsion of the French a civil war broke out between the Turks and the Mamelukes, in which Mehemet Ali took an active part. In 1803 the Albanians in the service of the pasha revolted because they could not get their pay, and, after several conflicts in Cairo, they became masters of the city under the direction of Mehemet Ali. A long and confused struggle now ensued between various factions, the result being that in 1805 Mehemet Ali was invested with the supreme authority by the principal inhabitants of Cairo as the only man capable of restoring order. The sultan confirmed his elevation, and, in 1806, he was installed in the pashalic of Egypt on condition that he should send to the sultan a tribute of about £240,000 sterling. The pashalic of Egypt was then commonly called the pashalic of Cairo, and extended only to Middle Egypt and the Delta, but a few months after the installation of Mehemet Ali the Porte consented to give him also the pashalic of Alexandria as a reward for the services he had rendered to the Ottoman empire on the occasion of the evacuation of Lower Egypt and the city of Alexandria by the English. In 1808 Mehemet Ali received orders from the Porte to attack the Wahabees, a fanatical sect of the Mohammedan religion who had pillaged the holy cities of Mecca and Medina. Before engaging in this war the viceroy determined upon putting an end to the power of his old allies the Mamelukes. Accordingly, on 1 March, 1811, the Mamelukes were invited in a body to the citadel at Cairo to attend at the investiture of the viceroy's son Toussoun, as chief of the expedition against the Wahabees. When the ceremony was over the Mamelukes mounted their horses, but on reaching the citadel gates, found them closed, and a sudden discharge of musketry from soldiers posted on the walls completely annihilated them. A great many Mamelukes were put to death at the same time in the provinces. It is computed that 470, with their chief, Ibrahim Bey, perished in the citadel; and in the city and throughout the country no fewer than 1200 were killed. Thus ended the power of these formidable chiefs, who had kept Egypt in a state of anarchy and warfare ever since the year 1382. Mehemet Ali now made himself master of Upper Egypt; and the Wahabees were vanquished after a protracted struggle, which was brought to a close by his son Ibrahim Pasha. He assisted the sultan in quelling the Greek insurrection against the Porte (1824); and on 16 July his fleet, consisting of 163 vessels, sailed for the Morea under the command of Ibrahim Pasha, who for three years kept the country in subjection, though he was obliged to retire after the battle of Navarino (20 Oct., 1827). In 1830 the Porte conferred upon Mehemet Ali the administration of the island of Candia. The following year he sent into Syria a powerful army under the command of Ibrahim Pasha, who in a few months reduced the whole of the country to submission. Mehemet Ali was thereupon declared a rebel by the sultan, who sent an army to regain possession of the country, but his forces were uniformly worsted. The European powers, however, intervened, and peace was concluded in 1833, Syria and the district of Adana being ceded to Mehemet Ali, in conjunction with the pashalic of Egypt, on his acknowledging himself a vassal of the sultan, and engaging to remit to the Porte the same tribute as the former pashas of Syria. In 1839 Sultan Mahmoud made an attempt to drive the Egyptians from the country, but the Turkish armies had to retreat. England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia then, in conjunction with the Porte, signed a treaty (15 July, 1840), and afterwards finding that the viceroy would not evacuate Syria by fair means, determined upon driving him out by force. The first engagement took place 10 Oct., 1840, near Beyrout, when the Egyptian army was completely routed, and the town taken. Caïffa and Saïda were bombarded in the same month; Tripoli and Tarsous soon followed; and, on 3 Nov., the bombardment and capture of Acre, in the short space of four hours, convinced Mehemet Ali that further resistance would be useless. The town of Alexandria was blockaded by an English squadron, and Mehemet Ali, finding that he could no longer temporise, acceded to the terms proposed, the hereditary pashalic of Egypt in his own family being secured to him. The Porte also granted to him, without hereditary succession, the provinces of Nubia, Darfour, Sennaar, and Cordofan. From this period Mehemet Ali devoted himself, with much success, to developing the resources of Egypt and promoting agriculture, commerce, and learning. Advanced age having produced mental incapacity, his son Ibrahim Pasha was appointed viceroy (1847), but on his death very shortly afterwards the sovereignty was assumed by the next eldest heir male, Abbas Pasha, son of Mehemet's second son Toussoun. Died 2 Aug., 1849.

MÉHUL, ÉTIENNE HENRI, a French musical composer, born at Givet 1703; died at Paris 18 Oct., 1817.

MEIBOMIUS, JOHN HENRY, a physician, born at Helmstadt 1590; died at Lubeck 1655. He wrote some medical works, and a Life of Mæcenas. His son, Henry Meibomius, born at Lubeck 1638, became professor of medicine, history, and poetry, at Helmstadt, where he died 26 March, 1700. He published 'Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum,' 3 vols., 1688. Mark Meibomius, a learned critic of the same family, was born at Tonningen (Schleswig) about 1630, and died at Utrecht 1711, leaving an edition of the Greek Mythologists; Correcticus for an edition of the Bible in Hebrew, &c.

MEINERS, CHRISTOPHER, a German historian and philosopher, was born at Warstede (Hanover) 1747; became professor of philosophy and professor at Göttingen; and died 1 May, 1810. His 'History of the Female Sex' has been translated into English.

MELA, POMPONIUS, a Latin writer on geography, born in Spain in the first century of the Christian era. His 'Cosmographia,' or 'De Situ Orbis,' has gone through several editions: the best is by Tzschucke, 3 vols., Leipzig, 1807.

MELANTHON, PHILIP, was born at Brethcim, in the palatinate of the Rhine, 16 Feb., 1497. His family name was Schwarzerdt, or 'Black Earth,' which he exchanged for the Greek term of Melanc-thron. After a domestic education he went to Pfortsheim, where Reuchlin assisted him in his studies. He next removed to Heidelberg; and in 1512 to Tubingen, where he read lectures on the classics and the sciences. In 1513 he received the degree of doctor in philosophy; and in 1518 the elector of Saxony appointed him professor of Greek at Wittenberg. Here he became acquainted with Luther, whom he accompanied to Leipsic, and joined in the dispute with Eckius. In 1527 Melancthon was empowered to visit the churches in Saxony; after which he was appointed, in conjunction with Luther, to draw up a code of ecclesiastical laws for the reformed states. He was also employed in framing the confession of Augsburg. The moderation of Melancthon exhibited a striking contrast to the violence of Luther, while his learning contributed much to the progress of the reformation. He was invited to France and England by the monarchs of those kingdoms, but never went out of Germany. He died at Wittenberg 19 April, 1560. Melancthon left two daughters; one of whom became the wife of George Sabinus, and the other of Gaspar Peucer. His works were published in 4 vols. folio, 1601.

MELBOURNE, WILLIAM LAMB, VISCOUNT, an English statesman, was born in London 15 March, 1779, being the second son of the first Lord Melbourne. In 1805 the borough of Leominster returned him to the House of Commons, and he sat in that assembly as representative of various constituencies, until his father's death in 1828 transferred him to the Upper House. He entered parliament as a Whig, but afterwards adhered to the Tory party. Under Canning's administration he was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland (1827), but he did not acquire much distinction in the House of Commons, though in the hereditary chamber he ascended to the rank of a political chieftain. On Earl Grey's coming into power after the resignation of the duke of Wellington (1830), Lord Melbourne accepted the seals of the Home Office, but he was not equal to the undertaking, and fortunately for the department his administration of its affairs did not continue much beyond three years. When the Grey government resigned, after the secession of the Conservative Whigs, Viscount Melbourne was commanded by the king to form an administration (July, 1834). This he did; but in the following Nov. the death of Earl Spencer having called from the House of Commons Lord Althorpe, who was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the principal strength of the ministry, the king abruptly dismissed Lord Melbourne from office, and even requested him to be the bearer of the letter to his successor, Sir Robert Peel, who by the advice of the duke of Wellington was at once summoned home from Italy, formed an administration, and made a determined stand against any further encroachments on our institutions; but parliament decided against the Conservative administration, and in April, 1835, Lord Melbourne resumed his position as prime minister, which he retained until the second accession of Sir Robert Peel to power in Sept., 1841. Died 24 Nov., 1848.

MELCOMBE, GEORGE BURR DODDINGTON, LORD, was born 1691, being the son of an apothecary in Dorsetshire. He was educated at New College, Oxford, and on the death of his maternal uncle succeeded to his name and estate. At this time he was connected with Sir Robert Walpole, who appointed him a lord of the treasury, and gave him the place of clerk of the polls in Ireland. Some time afterwards he joined the opponents of that minister, for which he lost his seat at the treasury board; but when his new friends came into office he was made treasurer of the navy, which post he resigned, and attached himself to the interests of Frederick, prince of Wales. He was made a peer on the accession of George III., and died 28 July, 1762. He wrote some poems and political tracts, but is best known by his 'Diary,' which contains much information respecting his life and times.

MELDOLA, DR. RAPHAEL, a Jewish theologian and philosopher, born at Leghorn 1754. He was appointed in 1805 high rabbi of the ancient and chief synagogue in England, and died in London 1 June, 1828. Dr. Meldola published 'Korban Minhâ,' a literary comment on, and explanation of, the service of high priest, which is read at every synagogue throughout the world on the feast-day of Kippoor; a rabbinical work of great importance, entitled 'Hupat Hatanim;' and some sermons in English.

MELEAGER, a Greek poet, born in the territory of Gadara, in Syria, B.C. 90. His epigrams are printed in the Greek Anthologia.

MELETIUS, bishop of Lycopolis, in Thebais, was the founder of a sect called by his name. Having apostatised in the Dioclesian persecution, he was degraded from the episcopal function by Peter, archbishop of Alexandria, on which he formed a schism about the year 501. His followers united with the Arians, and justified apostasy on the ground of self-preservation. They were condemned by the first council of Nice.

MELISSUS, a Greek philosopher of the Eleatic sect, lived about 440 B.C. He held the eternity of matter, and that the changes it undergoes are merely illusory.

MELITO (ST.), bishop of Sardis, presented in 171 a petition to Marcus Antoninus, in behalf of the persecuted Christians, part of which only is extant. He died before A.D. 197.

MELLAN, CLAUDE, a French designer and engraver, born at Abbeville 1001; died at Paris 9 Sept., 1688.

MELLON, ALFRED, an English musical composer, and manager of popular concerts in London, died at Chelsea 27 March, 1867, aged 46.

MELLON, HARRIET. See ST. ALBANS.

MELMOTH, WILLIAM, a barrister, born 1666. He became a bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and, in conjunction with Peere Williams, published Vernon's Reports. But the work which does most honour to his name is the 'Great Importance of a Religious Life,' one of the best known practical books of piety in our language. An edition of it by Mr. Charles Purton Cooper, comprising a life of the author, and four valuable appendices, was printed at London 1849. Melmoth died 6 April, 1743.

MELMOTH, WILLIAM, son of the above, was born 1710. He also was bred to the law, and in 1756 was made a commissioner of bankrupts. He died at Bath 15 March, 1799. His works are—Letters, under the name of Fitzosborne; a translation of Pliny's Epistles, 2 vols.; The Letters of Cicero, with remarks, 3 vols.; translations of Cicero 'De Senectute,' and 'De Amicitia;' Memoirs of his Father; and some poems in Dodsley's collection.

MELVILLE, HENRY DUNDAS, VISCOUNT, son of

MELVILLE.

Robert Dundas, Lord Arniston, was born 1740, and educated at Edinburgh. In 1763 he was admitted a member of the faculty of advocates; in 1773 appointed solicitor-general; in 1775 lord advocate; and in 1777 joint keeper of the signet for Scotland. In 1782 he was sworn of the privy council, and made treasurer of the navy; but when the coalition administration came into power he lost his places. This, however, was but for a short time, and when that party fell he resumed his station at the navy board, on which he relinquished that of lord advocate. The board of control for East India Affairs being established, Mr. Dundas was appointed its first president, and in 1791 he became secretary of state for the home department, which he exchanged for the war office 1794. He continued in active employment till 1801, when he resigned his places, and was created Viscount Melville. On the return of Mr. Pitt to power, his lordship was made first lord of the Admiralty, and continued so till he was impeached in 1805 of high crimes and misdemeanors in his former office of treasurer of the navy. Of all the charges brought against him, however, he was acquitted, and afterwards resumed his seat in the privy council, though he never returned to public business. Died 29 May, 1811.

MELVILLE, Sir JAMES, was born at Hallhill, Fifeshire, 1530. He was page to Queen Mary, who permitted him to enter the service of the duke of Montmorenci; after which he was employed by the elector Palatine, and on several embassies. In 1561 he returned to Scotland, and was made gentleman of the queen's bed-chamber. James VI. appointed him a privy councillor, and gave him a situation about his person. Died 1606. His 'Memoirs' were printed in 1683. The best edition of this excellent historical work is that printed by the Bannatyne Club 1827, and reprinted by the Maitland Club 1833.

MELVILLE, KONERT, a British general, born 12 Oct., 1723, at Monimail, Fifeshire. In 1744 he entered the army, and served in Flanders till the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle (1748). In 1756 he was made major of the 38th regiment, then in Antigua, and soon afterwards he was employed in active service, particularly in the invasion of Guadaloupe, for which he was raised to the rank of lieutenant-colonel; and in 1760 appointed governor of the island. Not long after he proceeded, as second in command, with Lord Rollo to the capture of Dominica. In 1762 Martinico was taken, chiefly through his exertions, and the fall of that important colony was followed by the surrender of other French islands. He was now made brigadier-general, and governor-in-chief of all the captured possessions in the West Indies. These settlements, particularly Tobago, he greatly improved without enriching himself. After the general peace he travelled over Europe, and made numerous observations to ascertain the passage of Hannibal over the Alps. In his researches into antiquities he was peculiarly sagacious, and among other discoveries solved the long-contested question as to the manner of placing the oars and rowers in the galleys. He also traced the sites of many Roman camps in Britain, and he applied his knowledge of antiquity to the improvement of the modern art of war in several inventions. He was a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and had the degree of LL.D. conferred upon him by the university of Edinburgh. He was appointed a full general 1798, and died 29 Aug., 1809.

MENMLING, HANS. See HEMLING.

MENAGE, GILLES, a French writer, born at Angers 15 Aug., 1613. He was bred to the law, but became disgusted with that profession, and entered the church. Though he obtained some ecclesiastical preferments, particularly the deanery of St. Peter, at Angers, he devoted himself solely to literary pursuits, and published several works, the chief of which are, 'Origines de la langue Françoise;' 'Miscellanea,' in Greek, Latin, and French; an edition of Diogenes Laertius; 'Poemata;' 'Origine della Lingua Italiana;' 'Juris Civilis amonitates;' 'Observations sur la Langue Françoise;' 'Historia Mulierum Philosopharum.' Menage died 23 July, 1692.

MENANDER, a Greek poet, born at Athens about 342 B.C. He began to write comedies at the age of twenty; but though he produced eighty, only a few fragments exist. Terence is supposed to have translated most of his plays from Menander, who was drowned accidentally about B.C. 293.

MENANDRINO, MARSILIO, a celebrated jurist, commonly called Marsilius of Padua, died 1328.

MENASSEH-BEN-ISRAEL, a celebrated Jewish rabbi, born in Spain or Portugal about 1604, and educated in Holland. At the age of 18 he succeeded his tutor, Rabbi Isaac Usiel, as preacher and expounder of the Talmud in the synagogue at Amsterdam, and soon afterwards he commenced the work entitled 'Conciliator,' on which his reputation, as one of the most learned and accurate of Jewish theologians, chiefly rests. He came over to England in the time of the Commonwealth, and negotiated with the Protector for the settlement of the Jews in England. Several writers assert that, in order to gain his end, he offered Cromwell £200,000, but on condition that the Jews should have St. Paul's Cathedral appropriated to their use. Cromwell thought that the cause of the Jews was the cause of God, and that their establishment here would be the means of their conversion, because Christianity in its purity was to be found in England, particularly among the Independents. The proposal, however, met with the strongest opposition from the clergy and the people generally. Being unsuccessful in his mission, Menasseh-Ben-Israel withdrew to the Continent, and died at Amsterdam about 1659. His principal works are, 'Conciliator vel Pectateucho,' in which he reconciles those passages of Scripture which apparently contradict one another; 'De Resurrectione Mortuorum;' 'De Creatione Problemata XXX.' 'De Termino Vitæ;' 'Spes Israelis;' 'A Defence of the Jews in England;' and an edition of the Hebrew Bible. A life of him, by Pocock, is prefixed to the English translation of his treatise, 'De Termino Vitæ,' 12mo., London, 1699.

MENCKE, OTTO, was born at Oldenburg, in Westphalia, 22 March, 1644, and became professor of morals at Leipzig, where he died 29 Jan., 1707. He published several learned works, and projected the 'Acta Eruditorum' of Leipzig, of which 30 vols. were completed at the date of his decease. His son, John Burcard Mencke (b. 1674; d. 1 April, 1732), became professor of history at Leipzig, and published a collection of the works of German historians, and 33 vols. of the 'Acta Eruditorum.'

MENDELSSOHN, MOSES, a Jewish writer, born

at Dessau, in Anhalt, 1799. Being very poor he went to Berlin, at the age of fourteen, and was employed by a rabbi as a transcriber of manuscripts. In this situation he acquired a considerable knowledge of the languages and sciences, which he cultivated by an acquaintance with some other literary Jews, and afterwards with Lessing, whom he defended from the charge of atheism. Died 4 Jan., 1786. His principal works are, 'Jerusalem,' a treatise in which he asserts that Judaism is only a civil institution; 'Phaëdon, a Dialogue on the Immortality of the Soul,' which procured him the name of the 'Jewish Socrates;' 'Commentary on Part of the Old Testament;' 'Letters on the Sensation of the Beautiful.'

MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, FELIX, a German musical composer of great celebrity, was born at Berlin 3 Feb., 1809, being the great-grandson of Moses Mendelssohn, mentioned above. His musical talents manifested themselves at an early age, and, thanks to the wealth of his parents, they were cultivated to such purpose that, at the age of eight, he played the piano in a masterly style. At the age of nine he played for the first time in public in his native town. The year following he went to Paris with his family; and at this period he had in his portfolio a great number of original compositions, some of which were published in 1824. The success they met with decided the elder Mendelssohn to allow his precocious son to follow the bent of his inclination, and to adopt the musical profession. In 1827 his opera, 'Die Hochzeit des Gamacho,' was brought out at Berlin, but with indifferent success. Subsequently he visited England, France, and Italy; and it was during this tour that he brought out at Paris his overture to Shakspeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' which he had composed at the age of 17, and which became very popular. On returning to his own country, he gave a series of concerts, the profits of which were devoted to the relief of the poor; and he endeavoured, though unsuccessfully, to found a theatre at Düsseldorf. He afterwards paid several professional visits to this country, where his oratorios of 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah,' usually considered his masterpiece, were performed amidst rapturous applause. In 1835 he was appointed director of the concerts at Leipzig, where he spent most of the remainder of his life. Frederick William IV., king of Prussia, appointed him his chapel-master (1841) and lavished on him the most flattering encouragement. He died at Leipzig 4 Nov., 1847. This composer, who is classed by his countrymen immediately after Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, had thoroughly studied the works of Sebastian Bach and Handel, but was deficient in enthusiasm and perhaps in imagination. Indeed it has been said he would have been the greatest musician who ever lived, if music were merely a science.

MENDEZ, MOSES, an English poet, born in London of Jewish parentage. He received a liberal education, and was created M.A. at Oxford, 1750. He wrote some very popular musical entertainments, and several poems, which were published in one volume. He was the intimate friend of Thomson, and died worth £100,000 in 1758.

MENDEZ-PINTO, FERDINAND, a traveller, born in Portugal about 1509. He departed for the Indies 1537, and on the voyage the ship was taken by the Moors, who carried her to Mocha, where Ferdinand was sold for a slave; but after some adventures he arrived at Ormus, from whence he pursued his original object, and in 1558 returned to his native country, where he published a romantic relation of his voyages, which has been translated into English. Died 8 July, 1583.

MENDOZA, DIEGO HURTADO, a Spanish statesman, general, and writer, born at Granada 1503; died at Valladolid 1575. His History of the War against the Moors, first published in 1610, is the best specimen of the historical style in the Spanish language.

MENDOZA, GONZALES PETER DE, a Spanish cardinal, born 1428. He became an eminent statesman and archbishop of Toledo, and died 11 Jan., 1495.

MENDOZA, JOHN GONZALES, a Spanish friar, born about 1540, was sent ambassador to the emperor of China 1584; and on his return became successively bishop of Lipari, in Italy; of Chiapi, in New Spain; and of Propagan, in the West Indies. He wrote 'A History of China,' of which an English translation was published 1588, and reprinted by the Hakluyt Society, 2 vols., 1853-4.

MENEDEMUS, a Greek philosopher, was a native of the island of Eubœa. He became a disciple of Plato and Xenocrates, but afterwards joined the Cyrenaic sect. Died B.C. 284, aged 83. There was a Cynic philosopher of the same name, who flourished in the reign of Antigonus, king of Macedonia, and who brought his sect into disrepute by the extravagance of his conduct.

MENESTRIER, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit, historian, and writer on heraldry, born at Lyons 1631; died 21 Jan., 1705.

MENESTRIER, JEAN BAPTISTE LE, a French numismatist, born at Dijon 1564; died 1634.

MENGES, ANTHONY RAPHAEL, a painter, born at Aussig, in Bohemia, 1726. He studied under his father, who was painter to Augustus III., king of Poland, after which he went to Rome, where he was patronized by Charles III., king of Spain, for whom he executed a number of pictures. He died at Rome 29 June, 1779. The best of his pieces in England is an altar-piece at All Souls College, Oxford. Menges wrote some works on his art, which have been translated into English.

MENINSKI, FRANÇOIS, De Meisnien, an orientalist, born in Lorraine 1623; died at Vienna 1698. His valuable 'Thesaurus Linguarum Orientalium' was published at Vienna, in 5 vols. folio, 1680-7.

MENNES, SIR JOHN, a seaman and poet, was born at Sandwich, Kent, 1 March, 1598, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In the reign of Charles I. he was made comptroller of the Navy Office, and knighted. About this time he had the command of a ship of war, but was deprived of it by the republicans. At the Restoration he was made governor of Dover Castle, comptroller of the navy, and an admiral. He wrote some poems in a collection called 'Musarum Delicæ, or the Muses' Recreation,' 1656. Died 18 Feb., 1670-1.

MENNO, SIMON, the founder of a sect called by his name, was born in Friesland 1505, and received orders in the church of Rome; but being of a profligate character he apostatized, and formed a new society of Anabaptists in the duchy of Holstein, where he died 1561.

MENOCHIUS, JAMES, a famous civilian, born at Pavia 1532; died at Milan 10 Aug., 1607. His son, John Stephen Menochius, born 1576, became a Jesuit, and died at Rome 4 Feb., 1626, leaving some esteemed theological works in Latin.

MENTSCHIKOFF.

MENTSCHIKOFF, ALEXANDER DANILOVITCH, a Russian prince, born at Moscow 1074. He was originally a pastrycook, in which situation he was noticed by the Czar Peter, who took him into his service, and raised him to the rank of major-general in the army and a prince of the empire. On the death of the emperor Mentschikoff secured the succession to Catharine, who caused Peter II. to marry his daughter. But these honours ruined the favourite; for becoming equally offensive, by his haughty deportment, to the emperor and the nobility, he was at last disgraced and sent into Siberia, where he died 2 Nov. 1729.

MENTSCHIKOFF, Prince ALEXANDER SERGEEWITSCH, a Russian general and diplomatist, born 1780. His fame as a soldier mainly rests on the stubborn defence he made during the war with Turkey, France, and England, when he was invested with the chief civil and military command in the Crimea. In the battle of the Alma (20 Sept., 1854) he met with a disastrous defeat; but he exhibited great resolution and readiness of resource in preventing, at that critical moment, the fall of Sebastopol. He was recalled immediately after the death of the Emperor Nicholas, when the command was given to Prince Gortschakoff. Died 1869.

MENTZEL, CHRISTIAN, a German physician and botanist, born at Fürstenwalde (Brandenburg) 1622; died at Berlin 17 Jan., 1701.

MENZINI, BENEDICT, an Italian poet, born at Florence 1646. He became canon of St. Angelo, in Piscina, at Rome, and a member of the society of Arcadi, as also of the Academy Della Crusca. Died 1704. His works were published in 4 vols. 8vo. His 'Art of Poetry' has been translated into English.

MERCATI, MICHAEL, a naturalist, born at San Miniato, in Tuscany, 1541; became superintendent of the botanic garden at Rome, and physician to the Pope; and died 1593. He is principally known by his description of the objects of natural history, particularly of mineralogy, contained in the museum of the Vatican.

MERCATOR, GERARD, a mathematician, born 1512 at Roermond, in the Netherlands. He made a number of maps, globes, and mathematical instruments; besides which he published a Chronology, and some works in philosophy and theology. Died 1594. He is to be distinguished from Nicholas Mercator, who was born in Holstein 1640, and died in Feb., 1687. He was a fellow of the Royal Society, and laid claim to a method of sailing which had been published many years before he was born by our countryman Edward Wright. Mercator was, however, an able mathematician, and the author of some valuable works on astronomy and geography.

MERCIER. See LE MERCIER.

MERCIER, BARTHELEMI, a French bibliographer, born at Lyons 4 April, 1734; became abbat of St. Leger, at Soissons; and died 1799.

MERCIER, LOUIS SEBASTIEN, a French writer, remarkable for the singularity of his literary fancies, was born at Paris 6 June, 1740. He commenced his literary career by the publication of some heroic verses, but afterwards became the avowed enemy of poetry, and the persevering detractor of some of the greatest poets of his country. In 1771 he produced 'L'An 2440,' a declamatory work which was prohibited by authority, and ten years later commenced his 'Tableau de Paris,' in which he sharply criticised the social and political condition of France. After the outbreak of the Revolution he published, in concert with Curra, the 'Annales Patriotiques,' and the 'Chronique du Mois,' journals characterized by courage and moderation of sentiment. Afterwards he was appointed professor of history in the Ecole Centrale, and a member of the Institute. Died 25 April, 1814.

MERCURIALE, JEROME, an Italian physician and medical writer, born at Forli 30 Sept., 1550; died at Pisa 13 Nov., 1600.

MEREDITH, EDWARD, son of Edward Meredith, rector of Landulph, Cornwall, was born in that county in or about 1049, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. Afterwards going with Sir William Godephelin, 23 secretary of the embassy to Spain, both he and his master were converted to the Catholic faith. Mr. Meredith returned to this country, but finally quitted it soon after the revolution of 1688, and died, it is said, in Italy. He published 'Some Remarques upon a popular piece of nonsense by Sam. Johnson called Julian the Apostate &c. together with a vindication of the Duke of York,' 1682; 'Account of a Conference between Dr. Stillingfleet, and Peter Goodin, a Catholic clergyman,' 1687; 'Remarks on a Conference between Dr. Tenison and Andrew Pulton, Jesuit,' 1687; 'Further Remarks on Dr. Tenison's Account of the Conference with Andrew Pulton,' 1687.

MERIAN, JOHN BERNARD, perpetual secretary of the Academy of Sciences at Berlin, was born at Leichthal, near Basle, 27 Sept., 1723. In 1750 he was invited to Berlin, on the recommendation of Maupertuis, and died there 12 Feb., 1807. The best known of his works are French translations of Claudian and of Hume's ESSAYS.

MERIAN, MATTHEW, a Swiss designer and engraver, born at Basle 1593; died at Schwalbach 1651.

MERIAN, MATTHEW, an historical and portrait painter, son of the preceding, was born at Basle 1621, and died at Frankfort-on-the-Ma. in 1687.

MERIAN, MARIA SIBYLLA, daughter of the preceding, was born at Frankfort 1647, studied painting under Abraham Mignon, and married John Andriez Graff, an architect and painter of Nuremberg. After this she made a voyage to Surinam, and took drawings of the natural productions of the country. She died at Amsterdam 13 Jan., 1717. She wrote a work on the origin of Caterpillars, and another on the insects found in Surinam, both of which were translated into French, and published together under the title of 'Hist. des Insectes de l'Europe et de l'Amerique.' Many of this lady's drawings are in the British Museum.

MERIVALE, JOHN HERMAN, F.S.A., was born at Exeter 5 Aug., 1799, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, after which he practised at the Chancery bar. In 1825 and 1826 he was employed on the Chancery Commission, of which memorable essay in legal reform he had been a warm advocate. Lord Eldon afterwards appointed him a commissioner of bankruptcy, and he continued to hold the post till his death 25 April, 1844. His chief works are, 'Orlando in Rencesvalles, a Poem,' 1814; 'Reports of Cases in Chancery 1815-17'; 'The Minstrel, book III.,' in continuation of Dr. Beattie's poem; 'Poems, Original and Translated,' in 3 vols. (1836-44), the last of which, containing a translation of Schiller's poems, is very scarce.

MERRET.

MERRET, CHRISTOPHER, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, Feb., 1614. He took his doctor's degree at Oriel College, Oxford, and then practised as a physician in London. Died 10 Aug., 1695. His publications are, Collection of Acts, Charters, &c. concerning the College of Physicians; A View of the Frauds, and Abuses committed by Apothecaries; Pinax rerum naturalium Britannicarum.

MERRICK, JAMES, a divine and poet, born at Reading 8 Jan., 1720, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He died at Reading 5 Jan., 1769. His principal works are, 'Messiah, a divine Essay;' Dissertation on the ninth chapter of Proverbs; 'Poems on Sacred Subjects;' Letter on the Composition of Greek Indexes; Annotations on the Gospel of St. John; a metrical Version of the Psalms; Annotations on the Psalms; a translation of Tryphiodorus. Some of his poems are in Dodsley's Collection.

MERRY, ROBERT, a dramatist, born in London April, 1755. He received his education at Harrow, and next at Christ's College, Cambridge, after which he entered at Lincoln's Inn; but instead of being called to the bar, he bought a commission in the Guards, which service he also quitted, and went abroad. While at Florence he became a member of the Academy Della Crusca, which name he affixed as a signature to a number of poems that appeared in the newspapers. In 1791 he married Miss Brunton, an actress, with whom he went to America, where he died 24 Dec., 1798. His plays are, 'Ambitious Vengeance;' 'Lorenzo;' 'The Magician no Conjuror;' and 'Fencelon,' none of which had any great success.

MERSENNE, MARIN, a French philosopher, born at Oizé, in the province of Maine, 1588. Having assumed the monastic habit in the society of Minims, he became an eminent teacher of philosophy and theology in the convent of Nevers. He died at Paris 1 Sept., 1648. Father Mersenne was warmly attached to Des Cartes, and corresponded with most of the scientific characters of his time. He invented the cycloid, and published Quæstiones celeberrimæ in Genesim; Harmonicorum Libri; De Sonorum natura, causis et effectibus; Cogitata Physico-Mathematica; La vérité des Sciences; Les Questions Monies.

MERTON, WALTER DE, founder of the college which bears his name at Oxford, was born at Merton, in Surrey, and educated at the convent of that place. He was an ecclesiastic, and, after obtaining several preferments, became lord chancellor in 1258, but was deprived of the seal the same year by the barons, restored to it in 1261, and in 1274 consecrated bishop of Rochester. He died 27 Oct., 1277. He began his college in 1264, and completed it in 1274.

MEKY, JOSEPH, a French poet, novelist, and journalist, born at Marseilles in or about 1799. His first essay in literature was a satire in verse, published in 1820, on a priest against whom he had some private grievance. It brought him into notice less from the talent it evinced, than from the consequences to the writer, for he was prosecuted for libel, and sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment. When the term of his punishment had expired he turned journalist, in conjunction with Alphonse Rabbe, a barrister at Aix, an ardent liberal, and author of some historical works which had a certain vogue in their day. Removing to Paris, he became associated with Victor Hugo, Armand Carrel, the poet Barthélémy, and other noted writers. After an active career as a journalist Méry paid a visit to Italy, and on his return to Paris published a dozen romances or novels in the course of seven years. In 1840 he came to this country and recorded his impressions de voyage in a work entitled 'Les Nuits de Londres.' He subsequently produced a large number of romances, and next tried his hand at dramatic composition, producing a great many pieces, some of which were represented with success. He died in penury at Paris 18 June, 1866.

MESMER, FRIEDRICH ANTON, a German physician, the originator of the doctrine of animal magnetism, was born at Meersburg (Baden) 1734. After publishing a treatise on the subject he commenced his operations at Vienna; but meeting with no success, he removed to Paris, where he succeeded in making some converts, but failed in attracting the notice he desired until he paid a visit to Spa, when a subscription was set on foot in the French metropolis to induce him to return and reveal the principles of his professed discovery. He consequently went there, gained a number of proselytes, among whom was La Fayette, and pocketed 340,000 livres. Government at length appointed a committee of physicians and members of the Academy of Sciences to investigate the pretensions of Mesmer, and the result of their inquiries appeared in an admirable memoir, drawn up by M. Bailly, which completely exposed the futility of animal magnetism, and the quackery of its author. He afterwards resided for some time in England under a feigned name; but eventually he returned to Germany, and died at Meersburg 5 March, 1815.

MESMES, CLAUDE DE, count d'Avaux, an eminent French statesman, born 1595; died at Paris 9 Nov., 1656. His 'Memoirs' have been published.

MESSIER, CHARLES, an astronomer, born at Badonvillers, in Lorraine, in 1730. At an early age he became a pupil of Delisle, who employed him to watch the return of the comet predicted by Halley; but when Messier discovered it his preceptor took the credit to himself. Messier, however, was not discouraged; and almost all the succeeding comets being first discovered by him, procured him admission into several societies. In 1770 he was chosen member of the French Academy; but in the Revolution he lost all his property. He was afterwards elected a member of the National Institute, and had a seat at the Board of Longitude. He became blind before his death, which happened in 1817. He communicated numerous papers on astronomical subjects to the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences.

MESTON, WILLIAM, a burlesque poet, born at Midmar, Aberdeenshire, about 1688. He was educated at Aberdeen, after which he became a schoolmaster in that city, and next professor of philosophy in Marischal College, which situation he lost in 1715 by joining the Pretender. Died 1745. Meston wrote poems, called 'Mother Grim's Tales,' and some Latin pieces of no great merit.

METASTASIO, PIETRO, an Italian poet, whose real name was Trapassi, was born at Rome 6 Jan., 1698. At the age of ten years his extemporaneous verses procured him the patronage of Gravina, who undertook his education with a view to his own profession of the law. At fourteen Metastasio produced his tragedy of 'Giustino,' which so pleased Gravina, that he took him to Naples to contend with the most celebrated improvisatori of Italy. However, he still continued to study the law, and he also assumed the minor order of priesthood. In 1718 he lost his patron, who left him all his property; after which he principally applied himself to dramatic composition. In 1750 he went to reside at Vienna, where he became imperial laureate, and died there, full of honours, 12 April, 1782. He wrote a number of operas, oratorios, and musical pieces, besides miscellaneous poetry and an analysis of Aristotle's Art of Poetry.

METCALFE, CHARLES THEOPHILUS, baron Metcalfe, was born at Calcutta 30 Jan., 1785, being the second son of Major Thomas Metcalfe of the Bengal army, who was made a baronet 1802. He received a classical education at Eton, and in 1800 obtained an appointment as a writer in the service of the East India Company. Having displayed great diplomatic talent, he was intrusted, in 1808, with a mission to the court of Lahore, with the object of securing the Sikh states between the Sutlej and Jumna rivers from the grasp of Runjeet Singh. In this difficult undertaking he met with complete success. After filling various important offices, he received, in 1819, the appointment of secretary in the secret and political department, along with that of private secretary to the governor-general. In 1820 he was appointed resident at the court of the Nizam; and in 1822 he succeeded to the baronetcy. He received the appointment of resident and civil commissioner in the Delhi territories 1825; became a member of the supreme council 1827; president of the board of revenue 1828; vice-president and deputy-governor of Fort William 1830; and was intrusted with the presidency of Agra 1834. On the resignation of Lord William Bentinck, in Feb., 1835, Sir Charles Metcalfe was provisionally appointed governor-general, which office he held till 28 March, 1836, being the interval between the departure of Lord W. Bentinck and the arrival of Lord Auckland. During this period he originated or adopted several valuable measures, one of the most important being the liberation of the press from all restrictions. This, however, gave umbrage to the court of directors, and was the eventual cause of his resignation and return to Europe 1838. The following year he was selected by the ministry to be governor of Jamaica, where he succeeded in soothing the irritation, and reconciling the differences caused by the Negro Emancipation Act, then recently passed, and gave satisfaction both to the colonists and the Home Government. Ill-health compelled him to resign in 1842; but early in the following year he was induced to accept the governorship of Canada. He held this responsible position till 1845, when he returned to England, after having been raised to the dignity of the peerage. He died at Malshanger, near Basingstoke, 12 Sept., 1846.

METIUS, JAMES, a native and schoolmaster of Alkmaar, in Holland, who is said to have invented the refracting telescope, about 1609. His brother, Adrian Metius, was born 9 Dec., 1571, at Alkmaar, and died 26 Sept., 1635, at Francker, where he was professor of mathematics. He published several mathematical works.

METKERKE, SIR ANOLPHUS, was born at Bruges 1528. He was sent by the revolted states of the Low Countries on an embassy to Queen Elizabeth, and died in London 4 Nov., 1591. He published an edition of Bion and Moschus, 1565; a Latin translation of the Epigrams of Theocritus; 'De veteri et recta Pronunciatione Linguae Graecae Commentarius'; 'Collection of the Proceedings at the Peace of Cologne in 1579.'

METON, a chronologer of Athens, who lived 432 B.C. He invented the cycle of nineteen years, to adjust the course of the sun and moon, so as to make the solar and lunar years begin at the same time. This is now called the Golden Number.

METTERNICH, CLEMENS WENZEL NEPOMUK LOTHAR, PRINCE, an Austrian statesman, born at Coblenz 15 May, 1773. He studied history at Strasburg, under the celebrated Koch, adopted the profession of diplomacy, and in 1795 married the granddaughter and heiress of the diplomatist Kaunitz, whose large domains he inherited. He represented the Westphalian nobility at the congress of Rastadt (1797-99), after which he accompanied Count Stadion to St. Petersburg, and subsequently officiated as ambassador at Dresden, Berlin, and Paris (1806). He managed affairs at the French court with so much ability that, when the war broke out in 1809, and he had to return to the Austrian court, which was seeking refuge in the fortress of Comorn, he was appointed to the ministry of foreign affairs as successor to Count Stadion. It was during this tenure of office that he struck out the idea of a marriage with Napoleon and an Austrian archduchess as a means of purchasing a respite for the empire. He conducted the negotiations with Champagny. Napoleon was divorced from Josephine; and Metternich escorted Marie Louise to Paris. This settlement was not a permanent one, and in 1813, after the great French catastrophe in Russia, war was again declared by Austria against France. In the autumn of that year the grand alliance was signed at Toplitz; and on the field of Leipsic Metternich was raised to the dignity of a prince of the empire. In the subsequent conferences and treaties the newly-created prince took a very prominent part, and he signed the treaty of Paris on behalf of Austria. He afterwards paid a visit to this country, and received the honour of a doctor's hood from the university of Oxford. When the congress of Vienna was opened Prince Metternich was unanimously chosen to preside over its deliberations; and from that time till the revolution of 1848 he wielded great influence over the affairs of Europe. The continental statesmen, terrified at the fearful consequences of the French Revolution, formed themselves into a coalition to prevent the occurrence of any similar calamity. They set themselves vigorously to repress all popular institutions, to crush freedom of speech and act, and to establish a despotism in every country that would submit to it. Such were the objects of that Holy Alliance, which has been the subject of merited obloquy, and which had Metternich for its presiding genius. In the revolution of 1848 he was driven from Vienna, and came to England; but in 1851 he ventured to return to Austria. He was afterwards consulted often on state affairs, but never held his office, nor regained the immense influence he once possessed. His death took place at Vienna 11 June, 1859.

METTRIE, JULIEN OFFRAY DE LA, a French writer, born at St. Malo 25 Dec., 1700. He was a surgeon in the French Guards, and in that situation wrote an infamous book, called, 'The Natural History of the Soul,' for which he narrowly escaped prosecution. His next work was a satire against the faculty, under the title of 'Penelope, or the Machiavel in Medicine,' for which he was obliged to remove to Holland, where he created new enemies by a book, called 'L'Homme Machine.' He then went to Berlin, where he died 11 Nov., 1751.

METZU, GABRIEL, a Dutch painter, born at Leyden 1615; died after 1661.

MEULEN, ANTHONY FRANCOIS VAN DER, a painter, born at Brussels 1634. He excelled in battle-pieces, and was employed by Louis XIV. in painting the scenes of his military campaigns and huntings. He died at Paris 1690.

MEUN, JOHN DE, also called Clopinel, a French poet, born about 1250; died about 1318. He continued the Romance of the Rose, and wrote some other pieces.

MEURSIUS, JOHN, a learned critic, was born at Loudun, in Holland, in 1579. He studied at Leyden, where, at sixteen, he wrote a Commentary on Lycophron. On leaving the university he was employed by Barneveldt, as tutor to his children, whom he also attended on their travels. In 1610 he became professor of history at Leyden, and the year following was appointed historiographer to the United States. In 1625 he removed to the professorship of history and politics at Sora, in Denmark, where also he was appointed historiographer royal. Died 20 Sept., 1639. His works were published together in 1743, at Florence, in 12 vols. folio. The scandalous book printed under the name of Meursius, entitled 'De Elegantiis Latinæ Linguæ,' was the production of Nicholas Chorier.

MEYER, or MEYERS, JEREMIAH, a miniature painter, was born at Tubingen 1735; came to England 1749; was appointed painter in enamel to King George III. 1764; and died at Kew 20 Jan., 1789.

MEYERBEER, GIACOMO, a celebrated composer, was the son of James Beer, a wealthy Jewish banker, and was born at Berlin 5 Sept., 1794. He studied in the famous musical school of the Abbé Vogler, at Darmstadt; but two years after the commencement of Meyerbeer's residence Vogler closed his establishment, and the two travelled together in Germany for about a twelvemonth. At Munich, under Vogel's auspices, he produced his first work, 'Jephtha's Daughter.' Afterwards he wrote his 'Two Caliphs,' at the request of the court of Vienna; but in consequence of its not being in the Italian style, which was then in high favour, it failed of success. During a subsequent visit to Italy his style became modified, and he was charmed with the Italian style, in which he wrote his first great opera, the 'Crociano in Egitto,' which established his fame. From this period he produced a series of works which achieved the highest success. His 'Robert le Diable,' the 'Huguenots,' the 'Prophète,' the 'Étoile du Nord,' 'Dmorah,' and 'L'Africaine' (which was brought out in London in 1865, after the author's death), are known all over Europe. Besides his operas, he wrote a 'Stabat Mater,' a 'Miserere,' a 'Te Deum,' twelve psalms, several cantatas, an oratorio, and a great number of melodies to Italian, French, and German airs. In 1842 he received the appointment of chapel-master to the king of Prussia. He was also a member of the Academy of Fine Arts at Berlin, an associate of the French Institute, and an officer of the Legion of Honour. He resided chiefly in Paris, where he died 1 May, 1864.

MEZZOFANTI.

MEYRICK, SIR SAMUEL RUSH, LL.D., F.S.A., was educated at Oxford, and afterwards practised for many years as an advocate in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty courts; but his real study and pursuit was that of antiquities and archaeology; and in his residence, Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, he gradually accumulated a very large collection of armour, which is now deposited in the South Kensington Museum. His two great works, which are standard authorities on the subject they treat of, are, 'A Critical Inquiry into Ancient Armour, as it existed in Europe, but particularly in England from the Norman Conquest to the reign of Charles II.; with a Glossary of Military Terms of the Middle Ages,' 3 vols. 4to., 1824, and again 1844; and the letter-press portion of Joseph Skelton's 'Engraved Illustrations of Ancient Arms and Armour' in his collection, 2 vols. 4to, 1830, and again 1854. Sir Samuel also published 'The History and Antiquities of the County of Cardigan,' and edited Lewis Dunn's 'Heraldic Visitations of Wales.' Died 5 April, 1848, aged 65.

MEZERAU, FRANÇOIS EUDES DE, a French historian, born near Argentau, in Normandy, 1610. He was educated at Caen, and, at the age of twenty-six, commenced 'The History of France;' the first volume of which appeared in 1643, and the last in 1668. For this work he obtained a pension. In 1668 he published an abridgment of the History, in 3 vols. 4to.; and reprinted it in 1672, in 6 vols. 12mo. In this last edition, however, he made so free with the administration, that he was deprived of his pension. In 1675 he was chosen perpetual secretary of the French Academy. Died 10 July, 1683. His other works are, 'A History of the Turks;' 'L'Origine des François;' 'Les Vanités de La Cour;' a translation of 'Grotius de Veritate.'

MEZZOFANTI, GIUSEPPE GASPARDO, a cardinal, and the most remarkable linguist ever known, was born at Bologna 17 Sept., 1774. He was ordained priest 1797, and appointed, the same year, professor of Arabic in his native city. He was removed from that post in consequence of his refusal to take the oath of allegiance to the Cisalpine republic, but after the conclusion of the concordat between Pius VII. and Napoleon he was restored to the university and appointed to the chair of oriental languages. In 1812 he was made assistant-librarian, and, in 1815, head-librarian of the university of Bologna. Pope Gregory XVI., hearing of Mezzofanti's marvellous linguistic attainments, invited him to Rome, and gave him a prebend in the church of St. John Lateran, and a canonry of St. Peter's. In 1833 he succeeded the famous Angelo Mai as chief keeper of the Vatican library, which office he held till 1838, when he was created a cardinal. At the time of his death, which took place 18 March, 1849, this remarkable man is said to have been acquainted with no fewer than one hundred and fourteen languages and dialects, most of which he spoke with astonishing accuracy and fluency. At the Propaganda, which entertains and trains missionaries from and for all parts of the world, he used to converse with each man in his own idiom, passing from one to another with a readiness almost incredible. Lord Byron has placed on record the following sketch of the cardinal:—"I don't remember a man among them [i.e., literary men] whom I ever wished to see twice, except, perhaps, Mezzofanti, who is a monster of languages, the Briaucus of parts of speech, a walking polyglot, and more;—who ought to have existed at the time of the Tower of Babel, as universal interpreter. He is indeed a marvel—unassuming also. I tried him in all the tongues in which I knew a single oath or adjuration to the gods, against post-boys, savages, Tartars, boatmen, sailors, pilots, gondoliers, muleteers, camel-drivers, vetturini, postmasters, post-horses, post-everything; and, egad! he astounded me—even to my English." Mezzofanti's only published work is a panegyric memoir of Father Emanuel da Ponte. His Life, by Dr. Charles William Russell, president of Maynooth College, was published in 1858, and reprinted 1863.

MICHAEL ANGELO BUONARROTTI, an illustrious artist, born of a noble family at Caprese, in Tuscany, 1474. Having discovered an early turn for painting, he was placed in the school of Ghirlandajo, and while with him had an opportunity of studying sculpture in the garden of Lorenzo de' Medici, who, observing a specimen of his genius in that line, became his patron, and made him one of his family. Here he formed an acquaintance with Politiano, by whose advice he executed a basso-relievo on the subject of the Centaurs. From Florence he removed to Bologna, where he executed some fine statues; and on his return to the former city finished a group of David and Goliath for Soderini, the chief magistrate. While thus engaged in sculpture he did not neglect painting, but was employed in representing a battle-scene for the ducal palace. On the accession of Julius II. to the papacy, he went to Rome, where he received orders to construct a mausoleum for his Holiness, who directed him to fix upon a spot in St. Peter's for the reception of it. The difficulty attending this, as the church was very old, induced the Pope to form the resolution of building a new cathedral on a magnificent scale, under the direction of Michael Angelo. The work was begun, but it had not proceeded far, before some umbrage was taken by the architect, who suddenly left Rome and set off for Florence. After some time a reconciliation was effected, and Michael Angelo returned to the Pope, who now employed him in painting the Sistine Chapel. In 1513 Julius died, and was succeeded by Leo X., who employed our artist in various works which ill suited his inclination, particularly in the construction of a road from the marble quarries to the sea. Under succeeding pontiffs his merits were equally neglected, though he was constantly engaged in works of architecture, and at one time upon fortification. After completing the lesser monument for Julius II., in executing which he met with many interruptions, he commenced his great painting of the Last Judgment, which was finished in 1541, and the Sistine Chapel opened on Christmas Day, with great pomp, by Pope Paul III., who gave him a pension of six hundred a year. His next engagement was in painting two pictures of the Martyrdom of St. Peter, and the Conversion of St. Paul, for the Vatican. In 1546 he was appointed architect of St. Peter's on the death of San Gallo, and on this work he was occupied during the rest of his life. He died 17 Feb., 1564, having almost completed his eighty-ninth year. He was buried first in the church of St. Apostoli at Rome, but afterwards the body was removed to Florence, and interred in the church of Santa Croce.

MICKLE.

MICHAELIS, JOHN BENJAMIN, a German poet, born at Zittau 31 Dec., 1746; died 30 Sept., 1772.

MICHAELIS, JOHN DAVID, nephew of John Henry Michaelis, was born at Halle 27 Feb., 1717. After going through his studies at his native place he visited England, where he contracted an intimacy with Dr. Lowth, and became preacher at the German chapel, in St. James's Palace. On his return to his native country, he accepted the professorship of theology and oriental languages at Göttingen; where he also became librarian, and lastly director of the Royal Society. In 1775 the king of Sweden conferred on him the order of the Polar Star, and in 1786 he was made a privy councillor of Hanover. Died 22 Aug., 1791. His principal works, which are numerous, are Spicilegium Geographiæ Hebræorum extera, 2 vols.; Grammatica Chaldaica; Supplementa ad Lexicon Hebr., 6 vols.; Grammatica Syriaca; an edition of Bishop Lowth's Praelectiones; Introduction to the New Testament, 2 vols.; Translation of the Old Testament, 13 vols.; Interpretation of the Laws of Moses, 6 vols.; Oriental and Exegetical Library; Introduction to the Old Testament; Translation of the New Testament, 2 vols. Two of these have been translated into English, viz. The Introduction to the New Testament, by Bishop Marsh, 6 vols. 8vo.; and The Commentaries on the Laws of Moses, by Dr. Alexander Smith, in 4 vols.

MICHAELIS, JOHN HENRY, was born at Kettenberg, in Hohenstein, 1668. He was educated at Leipsic, and next at Halle, where he taught Greek and Hebrew. In 1699 he succeeded Francke in the Greek professorship, and, in 1707, was made librarian of the university. He afterwards became professor of divinity and the oriental languages. Died 18 March, 1738. He published a Hebrew Bible, with various readings; 'Conamina brevioris manu scriptio ad doctrinam de accentibus Hebræorum Prosaica'; 'Epicrisis Philologica.'

MICHAUD, JOSEPH FRANÇOIS, a French writer, was born 19 June, 1767, at a village in La Bresse, and educated at Bourg, proceeding afterwards to Paris, where he edited several royalist journals. After the fall of the throne he co-operated in founding 'La Quotidienne,' a newspaper which continued for a long period to oppose the revolutionary party. At the Restoration he was appointed censor-general of the journals and reader to the king. Later he was elected to the chamber of deputies, and became a member of the Academy. His 'History of the Crusades' constitutes his chief title to literary fame. Died 30 Sept., 1839.

MICHELI, PETER ANTHONY, a botanist, born 1679, at Florence, where he died 2 Jan., 1737.

MICHELI DU CRÉT, JACQUES BARTHELEMY, a mathematician, born at Geneva 1690; died at Zohingen 1766. He constructed a number of charts, and invented a new thermometer.

MICKIEWICZ, ADAM, a celebrated Polish poet, born at Nowogrodek, in Lithuania, 1798; died at Constantinople 26 Nov., 1855.

MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS, was born at Langholm, in Dumfriesshire, 20 Sept., 1734. He was educated at Edinburgh, after which he engaged in a brewery; but the business failed, and he came to London. In 1765 he obtained the situation of corrector of the university press at Oxford, where he printed a poem, in Spenser's manner, under the title of 'The Concubine,' which he afterwards altered to that of 'Sir Martyn.' In 1772 he was employed as editor of the collection of poems which goes by the name of the publisher, Pearch. But the work on which the reputation of Mickle rests is the translation of the 'Lusiad' of Camões, published by subscription 1775, and reprinted 1778. Soon after the appearance of this last edition he went to Lisbon, as secretary to Commodore Johnson, and, while there, he received many marks of respect from the Portuguese literati. Having realised a tolerable competency, he retired to Forest Hill, in Oxfordshire, where he died 28 Oct., 1788. His poetical works were printed in 3 vols., 1806.

MIDDLETON, CONYERS, D.D., was born at York 2 Aug., 1683. He received his education under his father, who was a clergyman, and next at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and distinguished himself by his enmity to the master, Dr. Bentley; with whom he had afterwards a lawsuit about fees, on taking his degree of D.D. He likewise printed Strictures on Bentley's Proposals for a new edition of the Greek Testament, and thereby prevented its publication, to the great injury of biblical learning. In 1724 Middleton went to Italy, and on his return attacked the faculty in a Latin tract, tending to prove that the medical profession was looked upon with contempt by the ancient Romans. He was answered by Dr. Ward, professor of rhetoric at Gresham College. In 1729 Dr. Middleton published his Letter from Rome, showing the uniformity between Catholicism and Paganism. This was ably answered by Bishop Challoner. In 1731 he printed, but without his name, a Letter to Dr. Waterland, on his 'Scripture Vindicated,' which produced a controversy between Middleton and Pearce. While this dispute was going on, our author was appointed Woodwardian professor of mineralogy, which situation he resigned in 1734, on being elected librarian of the university. The year following he published 'A Dissertation on the Origin of Printing in England;' but his greatest work is the 'Life of Cicero' which came out by subscription in 1741. In 1747 he raised a sharp controversy, by an attempt to overthrow the credibility of the miracles said to have been wrought in the primitive ages of the church. About this time, also, he made an attack on Bishop Sherlock's Discourses concerning Prophecy; particularly in regard to the Mosaic account of the fall of man, which, according to Middleton, is nothing more than an allegory. He died 28 July, 1750, without having had any other preferment than the living of Hascomb, in Surrey. His miscellaneous works were published after his death, in 2 vols. 4to.

MIDDLETON, ERASMUS, received his education at Oxford, but was expelled from that university, together with five other youths, under circumstances which gave rise to Macgowan's satire of 'The Shaver.' He was presented to the rectory of Turvey, Beds, 1764, and died 25 April, 1805. He was a sympathiser with the Methodists, and is known as an author by his 'Biographia Evangelica: or an historical account of the lives and deaths of the most eminent Evangelical Authors or Preachers, both British and Foreign, in the several denominations of Protestants,' 4 vols. 8vo., 1770-86.

MIDDLETON, SIR HUGH, was a native of Denbigh. He became a goldsmith in London, and in 1006 undertook to supply the city with water from two springs, one in the parish of Amwell, and the other near Ware, in Hertfordshire. After many difficulties he effected this object, and brought the water to the cistern at Islington in 1613. He then received letters patent, by virtue of which a company was created, called the governor and company of the New River. The projector was created a baronet 1622, and died 1631.

MIDDLETON, THOMAS, a dramatic poet, was born about 1570, most likely in London, and studied law at Gray's Inn. Scarcely anything is known of his subsequent career, which ended in 1627, as appears from the parish register of Newington Butts, Surrey, which records his burial on the 4th of July in that year. His works have been carefully edited by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, 5 vols. 8vo., 1840.

MIDDLETON, THOMAS FANSHAW, D.D., an Anglican prelate, was born at Kedleston, Derbyshire, 26 Jan., 1769, and educated at Christ's Hospital, and at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He took orders 1792, as curate of Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, where he wrote 'The Country Spectator,' a periodical paper, of which thirty-three numbers were published. His reputation as a divine and scholar procured him the patronage of Dr. Pretymann, archdeacon of Lincoln, who entrusted to his care the education of his two sons. He now removed to Norwich, and in 1795 was presented by the doctor to the rectory of Tansor, Northamptonshire. In 1802 he was presented by his patron to the consolidated rectory of Great and Castle Bytham, which he held together with Tansor, where he fixed his residence. In 1808 appeared his erudite work on 'The Doctrine of the Greek Article, applied to the Criticism and the Illustration of the New Testament.' The following year he was collated to a stall in the cathedral of Lincoln; and in 1811 he was presented to the vicarage of St. Pancras, Middlesex, and the rectory of Puttenham, Herts. In 1812 the bishop of Lincoln collated him to the archdeaconry of Huntingdon. On Calcutta being erected into an episcopal see, the government selected Dr. Middleton to be its first bishop. He was accordingly consecrated at Lambeth 8 May, 1814, and on the 28th of November arrived at Calcutta, where he died 8 July, 1822. Some of his sermons, charges, and tracts were published in 1824 by Dr. H. K. Bonney; and his life has been written by the Rev. C. W. Le Bas, 2 vols., 1831.

MIEL, JAN, a Flemish painter, born 1599; died 1664.

MIERVELD, MICHAEL JANSON, a Dutch painter, born 1608, at Delft, where he died 27 Aug., 1641.

MIERIS, FRANCIS, called the Old, was born at Leyden 1635. He was a disciple of Gerard Dow, whose style he imitated with great success. His pictures are very scarce and valuable. He died 12 March, 1681. His son William, called the Young Mieris, was born at Leyden 1662, and died 24 Jan., 1747. He painted historical subjects, animals, and landscapes. His son, Francis, was also an artist, but not equal to his father or grandfather. He was born at Leyden 24 Dec., 1689, and died there 22 Oct., 1763.

MIGLIARA, GIOVANNI, an Italian painter, born at Alessandria, in Piedmont, 15 Oct., 1785; died at Milan, 18 April, 1837.

MIGNARD, PIERRE, an historical and portrait painter, born at Troyes, in Champagne, 1610. He studied at Rome with Du Fresnoy, and during his residence there of twenty-two years enjoyed great favour from the popes. At length Louis XIV. sent for him home, and appointed him his prin-

MIGNON, ABRAHAM, a painter, of Frankfurt, born 1639; died 1679. He excelled in the representation of flowers, insects, and still life.

MIGNOT, ETIENNE, a doctor of the Sorbonne, born at Paris 17 March, 1698; died 23 July, 1771. Among his numerous works is a History of the Quarrels between Henry II. and St. Thomas of Canterbury.

MIGNOT, VINCENT, a French historian, nephew of Voltaire, was born at Paris about 1725, and died Sept., 1791. His best work is a History of the Ottoman Empire.

MILBOURNE, LUKE, was a native of Wroxhall, Warwickshire. He was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, after which he became rector of St. Ethelburga, in London, and lecturer of Shore-ditch. Died 15 April, 1720. He wrote a metrical Version of the Psalms; Animadversions on Dryden's Virgil; and some sermons.

MILDMAY, SIR WALTER, a statesman, was born at Chelmsford, in or about 1522, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. He received the honour of knighthood 22 Feb., 1546-7. He was employed in the management of the royal revenues; and in 1566 he was appointed chancellor of the Exchequer. Died 31 May, 1589. Sir Walter was the founder of Emanuel College, Cambridge. Some of his Latin poems were printed after his death; but they seem to be now unknown.—Athen. Cantab.

MILL, JAMES, historian and philosopher, was born at Logie Pert, Forfarshire, 6 April, 1773, and after studying at Edinburgh was licensed as a preacher in the Scotch church. Coming to London, however, as a tutor in the family of Sir John Stuart, he permanently fixed his residence in the English metropolis, and devoting himself to literary pursuits, he became editor of the 'Literary Journal,' and an occasional contributor to the 'Edinburgh Review.' The great merit of his 'History of British India' (3 vols. 4to., 1818; 5th edit., 3 vols. 8vo., 1858) led to his being appointed by the East India Company to conduct the department in the India Office of correspondence with India in the revenue branch of administration, and he eventually rose to be head of the department. His principal other works are 'The Elements of Political Economy,' 1821; 'Analysis of the Phenomena of the Human Mind,' 1829; and articles in the Supplement to the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' on Government, Jurisprudence, Liberty of the Press, Prisons and Prison Discipline, Colonies, Law of Nations, and Education.

MILL, JOHN, D.D., was born at Shap, Westmoreland, about 1645. He became a servitor of Queen's College, Oxford, of which society he was chosen fellow and tutor. In 1676 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Exeter, and, in 1681, the rectory of Blechingdon, in Oxfordshire. The same year he took his doctor's degree, and in 1685 was elected principal of St. Edmund Hall. In 1704 he was collated to a prebend in the church of Canterbury. His edition of the Greek Testament was completed at the press only fourteen days before his death, which occurred 23 June, 1707.

MILL, WILLIAM HODGE, D.D., regius professor of Hebrew at Cambridge, canon of Ely, and rector of Hasted, died 25 Dec., 1853, aged 61. He published the Life of Christ in Sanscrit, with which language he was well acquainted; an Arabic translation of Bridge's Algebra; and some works on theology.

MILLAR, JOHN, was born at Shotts, in Lanarkshire, 1735. He was educated at Glasgow, where, by the interest of Lord Kames, in whose family he had been a tutor, he obtained, in 1761, the professorship of law. Died 30 May, 1801. His publications are 'On the Origin of the Distinction of Ranks in Society;' and 'An Historical View of the English Government.' After his death two volumes of his dissertations were published.

MILLER, EDWARD, MUS.D., was the son of a pavior at Norwich, and bred to the same business; but having a dislike to it he absconded, and became a pupil of Dr. Burney, then resident at Lynn. In 1756 he became organist of the church of Doncaster, where he continued the rest of his life. In 1786 he obtained his degree of doctor of music at Cambridge, and died at Doncaster 12 Sept., 1807. Dr. Miller published 'Institutes of Music;' 'The Elements of Thorough-Bass and Composition;' 'The Psalms of David' set to music and arranged for every Sunday in the year; 'The History and Antiquities of Doncaster.'

MILLER, HUGH, an eminent geologist, born at Cromarty, in Scotland, 10 Oct., 1802. In early life he worked as a labourer in the sandstone quarries of his native district, and afterwards as a stonemason in different parts of Scotland. In a work published in 1854, 'My Schools and Schoolmasters, or the Story of my Education,' he gives a most interesting account of his early history, and of the training and self-culture by which he rose to honourable rank in literature and science. After being engaged in manual labour for about fifteen years, he was for some time manager of a bank in his native town. While in this position a pamphlet he published on the ecclesiastical controversies which then distracted Scotland, attracted the attention of the leaders of the party who afterwards formed the Free Church, and they invited him to become editor of the 'Witness' newspaper, then about to be established for the advocacy of their principles. Mr. Miller had already published a volume of 'Legendary Tales of Cromarty,' which showed that he was master of a pure and nervous English style. The ability displayed by him as editor of the 'Witness,' and the influence exerted by him on ecclesiastical and educational events in Scotland were very marked. He did not, however, confine his newspaper to topics of local or passing interest, but published in its columns his geological observations and researches. Indeed most of his works first appeared in the form of articles in that journal. It was in 1840, the year in which the autobiographical memoir closes, that the name of Hugh Miller became widely known beyond his own country. At the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, held that year at Glasgow, Mr. (afterwards Sir Roderick) Murchison gave an account of the striking discoveries recently made in the Old Red Sandstone of Scotland; and M. Agassiz, after pointing out the peculiarities and importance of those discoveries, proposed to associate the name of Mr. Miller with them by means of the wonderful fossil, the Pterichthys Milleri, specimen of which were then under the notice of the section. Dr. Buckland, following M. Agassiz, said, 'I have never been so much astonished in my life by the powers of any man as I have been by the geological descriptions of Mr. Miller. He described these objects with a felicity which made me ashamed of the comparative meagreness and poverty of my own descriptions in the "Bridgewater Treatise," which had cost me hours and days of labour. I would give my left hand to possess such powers of description as this man; and if it pleases Providence to spare his useful life, he, if any, will certainly render the science attractive and popular, and do equal service to theology and geology.' The publication of the volume on the 'Old Red Sandstone,' with the details of the author's discoveries and researches, more than justified all the anticipations which had been formed. It was received with the highest approbation, not by men of science alone for the interest of its facts, but by men of letters for the beauty of its style. In 1847 appeared 'First Impressions of England and its People,' the result of a tour made during the previous year. Some parts of this book, especially the account of the pilgrimages to Stratford-on-Avon and the Leasowes, and Olney, and other places memorable for their literary associations, are as fine pieces of descriptive writing as the English language possesses. This magic of style characterises all his works, whether of a more popular kind or his scientific treatises, such as 'The Old Red Sandstone' and the 'Footprints of the Creator,' a volume suggested by the 'Vestiges of Creation,' and subversive of the fallacies of that superficial and plausible book. Mr. Miller shot himself with a pistol during a fit of insanity 24 Dec., 1856. At the time of his death he had just completed his 'Testimony of the Rocks,' in which he discusses the biblical bearings of geology. This was published shortly afterwards, as was likewise 'The Cruise of the Betsy,' containing narratives of his scientific wanderings in the Hebrides and other parts of Scotland. Many of his 'Leading Articles' were published in a collected form in 1870.

MILLER, JAMES, was born in Dorsetshire 1703, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. While at the university he wrote a satiric piece, called 'The Humours of Oxford,' which created him many enemies, and hindered his preferment. He, however, took orders, and at length obtained the living of Uperne, in Dorsetshire. He published several political pamphlets against Sir Robert Walpole, and also some plays, the principal of which is the tragedy of 'Mahomet.' He was likewise concerned in a translation of Moliere. Died 23 April, 1744.

MILLER, JAMES, professor of surgery at Edinburgh, died at Pinkhill, near that city, 17 June, 1864. He wrote 'The Principles and Practice of Surgery,' 'The Surgical Experiences of Chloroform,' the article 'Surgery' in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' &c.

MILLER, JOE, an English actor, born 1684; died in London 13 Aug., 1738. The celebrated jests which pass under his name were in reality collected by John Motley, who is hereinafter noticed. The first edition of Joe Miller's Jest's appeared in 1739. It has recently been reproduced in facsimile by Mr. John Camden Hotten.

MILLER, PHILIP, F.R.S., was born 1691. He succeeded his father as gardener to the Company of Apothecaries at Chelsea; and soon distinguished himself by his knowledge of plants. He communicated some papers to the Royal Society, and in 1730 published 'A Catalogue of Trees, Shrubs, Plants, and Flowers, in the Gardens near London, folio. This was followed by his 'Gardener's Dictionary.' In 1755 appeared 'Figures of Plants,' adapted to the dictionary, in 2 vols. folio. His other works are 'The Gardener's Kalender,' and 'The Gardener's and Florist's Dictionary.' Mr. Miller died at Chelsea 18 Dec., 1771.

MILLES, JEREMIAH, D.D., nephew of the bishop of Waterford, was born 1714. He was educated at Eton, and next at Queen's College, Oxford. He married a daughter of Archbishop Potter, by whose interest he obtained the rectory of St. Edmund the King, London, which he held with the livings of Merstham, Surrey, and West Tarring, Sussex. In 1762 he became dean of Exeter, and in 1765 was elected president of the Society of Antiquaries. He was also a fellow of the Royal Society, and died 13 Feb., 1784. Dean Milles has some papers in the Archæologia; and he incurred much ridicule by an edition of the pretended poems of Rowley, 1782.

MILLES, THOMAS, was the son of Isaac Milles, rector of High Clear, in Hampshire, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.D. in 1704. In 1700 he was appointed Greek professor; but the year following he went to Ireland with the earl of Pembroke, and was promoted to the bishopric of Waterford, where he died 13 May, 1740. He published a few controversial tracts, but is best known by his valuable edition of the works of St. Cyril, folio, Oxford, 1703.

MILLEVOYE, CHARLES HUBERT, a French poet, born at Abbeville 24 Dec., 1782; died at Paris 26 August, 1816. Among his poems we may notice 'L'Indépendance de l'Homme de Lettres;' 'Le Voyageur;' 'La Mort de Rotrou;' 'Belzunce;' 'Le Poète Mourant;' 'La Chute des Feuilles;' and 'Priez pour moi.'

MILLHOUSE, ROBERT, a weaver of Nottingham, author of some poems which possess considerable merit, was born 17 Oct., 1788, and died 13 April, 1830.

MILLIN, AUBIN LOUIS, a French antiquary and naturalist, born at Paris 9 July, 1759. He was one of the founders of the Linnean Society, and in 1794 succeeded Barthelemy as keeper of the cabinet of medals. His principal works are 'Antiquités Nationales;' 'Monuments Antiques, Inédits;' 'Voyage dans le midi de la France;' 'Minéralogie Homérique;' 'Galerie Mythologique;' and 'Histoire Métallique de la Révolution Française.' His 'Medallic History of Napoleon,' left incomplete, was published in English by J. Millinger 1819. M. Millin edited the 'Magasin Encyclopédique' from 1792 to 1816.

MILLINGEN, JAMES, F.S.A., a classical archaeologist, was born in London 1774, and educated at Westminster School. He passed most of his life on the Continent, and died at Florence 1 Oct., 1845. His works are, 'Recueil de quelques Médailles Grecques Inédites, 1812;' 'Peintures Antiques et Inédites de Vases Grecs, tirées de diverses Collections,' 1813; 'Peintures Antiques des Vases Grecs, de la Collection de Sir John Coghill,' 1817; 'The Medallic History of Napoleon,' with supplement, 1816-21; 'Ancient Unedited Monuments, comprising Painted Greek Vases, Statues, Busts, Bas-Reliefs, and other Remains of Grecian Art,' 1822; 'Ancient Unedited Coins of Greek Cities and Kings,' 1837; 'Considerations sur la Numismatique de l'ancienne Italie, principalement sous MILLINGTON, WILLIAM, D.D., one of the most learned men of his day, was a native of Pocklington, Yorkshire, and was ordained priest 8 March, 1420. He took his doctor's degree at Cambridge, and is said to have been a member of Clare Hall, in that university; but, however that may be, certain it is that in 1443 he was appointed the first provost of King's College. This important situation, however, he voluntarily resigned in 1446, on a point of conscience. The oft-repeated statement that he was deprived of the provostship for unduly favouring natives of Yorkshire is without foundation. It is said that on leaving King's he retired to Clare Hall, and dying in May, 1466, was buried in St. Edward's Church, Cambridge. An interesting memoir of Dr. Millington, by George Williams, B.D., was communicated to the Cambridge Antiquarian Society in 1858.

MILLOT, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a French ecclesiastic and historian, born at Ornaves (Franch-Comté) 1726; died 21 March, 1785.

MILLS, CHARLES, an historical writer, born at Greenwich 1788; died at Southampton 9 Oct., 1826. He was articled to an attorney, but abandoned law for literature. His works are a 'History of Muhammedanism;' 'History of the Crusades;' a work of fiction, entitled 'The Travels of Theodor Ducas in various countries of Europe, on the revival of letters and arts;' and a 'History of Chivalry.'

MILMAN, SIR FRANCIS, B.D., M.D., F.R.S., a physician, born in Devonshire 1746, and educated at Oxford. He became physician to the king, and to the royal household, which procured his elevation to the baronetage. Died 24 June, 1821. He published 'Animadversiones de Natura Hydropsicæ ejusque Curatione,' 1779; 'A Treatise on the Source of the Scurvy and Putrid Fever,' 1782.

MILMAN, HENRY HART, D.D., was born 10 Feb., 1791, being the youngest son of Sir Francis Milman, physician to George III. He was educated at Dr. Burney's school at Greenwich, and then proceeded to Eton, where he passed through the usual course, and entered at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1813, being first class in classics. Prior to taking his degree he gained, in 1812, the Newdigate prize for an English poem, 'Apollo Belvedere,' and in 1813 the chancellor's prize for his Latin poem, 'Alexander tumulum Achillis invisens.' In 1816 he was ordained deacon by Dr. Howley, bishop of London, and in 1817 priest, by Dr. Legge, bishop of Oxford. In the following year he was presented by Lord Chancellor Eldon to the vicarage of St. Mary's, Reading. He had already published the tragedy of 'Fazio,' which was acted with some success at Covent Garden Theatre, where Miss O'Neill sustained the character of the heroine. In the early part of 1818 appeared his 'Samor,' an heroic poem, in 12 books. In 1820 he published another poem, the 'Fall of Jerusalem,' founded on the narrative of Josephus. In 1821 he was elected to the professorship of poetry in the university of Oxford, and he held it the full term of ten years, when he was succeeded by John Keble, the author of the 'Christian Year.' In 1827 he was Bampton lecturer. In 1835 he was nominated by the crown, on the recommendation of Viscount Melbourne, then prime minister, to a canonry residentiary in Westminster Abbey, with the rectory of St. Margaret's annexed; and these he held until 1849, when, on the death of Bishop Coplestone, he was nominated by the crown to the deanery of St. Paul's. Died 24 Sept., 1868. In addition to the works above enumerated, Dr. Milman wrote, in prose, a 'History of Latin Christianity;' a 'History of the Jews;' Notes and Illustrations to Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall;' the 'Martyr of Antioch;' 'Anne Bolyn;' 'Belshazzar;' and other works. His 'History of St. Paul's' appeared soon after his death.

MILNE, COLIN, LL.D., was born at Aberdeen, and educated at the Marischal College there, under his uncle, Dr. Campbell. From thence he removed to Edinburgh, after which, on becoming tutor to Lord Algeron Percy, he took orders in the church of England, and was presented to the rectory of North Chapel, in Essex. He was also chosen lecturer of Deptford. Died 1815. He published 'A Botanical Dictionary;' Linnæi Institutiones Botanice; Indigenous Botany, or the Habits of English Plants; and a volume of sermons.

MILNE, JOSHUA, actuary of the Sun Life Assurance Company, and author of a well-known 'Treatise on Annuities and Assurances,' died at Upper Clapton 4 Jan., 1851, aged 75.

MILNER, ISAAC, D.D., younger brother of Joseph Milner, was born 1751, and brought up to the weaving business; but even while at the loom his mind was intent upon study, and all the time he could obtain from labour was devoted to the classics and mathematics. Such was his progress that his brother took him for an assistant in the grammar-school, and afterwards sent him to Queen's College, Cambridge, where, in 1774, he was senior wrangler, and gained the first mathematical prize. He also became a tutor in that science, and, among other pupils, had Mr. Wilberforce and Mr. Pitt, with whom he made a tour on the Continent. In 1783 Mr. Milner was appointed professor of natural philosophy, and in 1788 elected master of his college. The same year he was made dean of Carlisle; in 1792 he served the office of vice-chancellor; and in 1798 he succeeded Waring as Lucasian professor of mathematics. Died 1 April, 1820. His publications are Animadversions on Hawker's Church History; a continuation of his brother's Ecclesiastical History; Strictures on the publications of Dr. Marsh, respecting the Bible Society; Life of Joseph Milner, prefixed to his sermons.

MILNER, JOHN, was born at Skircoat, near Halifax, Yorkshire, Feb., 1627-28. He was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, after which he took orders, but was obliged to live retired till the Restoration, when he obtained the curacy of Beeston, and in 1673 was elected vicar of Leeds. In 1681 he was chosen prebendary of Ripon; but on refusing the oaths at the Revolution, he quitted his preferments, and went to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he died 16 Feb., 1702. His works are Conjectanea in Isaiam ix. 1, 2; The Church History of Palestine; Dissertation on the four last Kings of Judah; De Nethinim sive Nethinæis; Defence of Archbishop Usher against Dr. Cary and Is. Vossius; Discourse of Conscience; View of the Dissertation of Dr. Bentley on the Epistles of Phalaris, &c.; Account of Mr. Locke's Religion; Animadversions on Le Clerc's Reflections upon our Saviour and his Apostles, &c.

MILNER, JOHN, D.D., F.S.A., an English prelate of the Roman communion, was born in London

MILNER.

14 Oct., 1752. From a school at Edgbaston, near Birmingham, he was sent to Sedgley Park, and next to the English college at Douay. In 1777 he was ordained priest, and returning at once to his native land, he laboured in London till 1779, when he was stationed at Winchester. The circumstance which first called forth the zeal and energies of this remarkable man was the spirit of resistance to ecclesiastical authority which followed the first relaxation of the penal code against the Catholics. In 1782 five persons were appointed to be 'a committee for five years, to promote and attend to the affairs of the Roman Catholic body in England;' and the time for its existence being expired, in 1787 another committee was nominated. Of these committees Mr. Charles Butler, the eminent conveyancer, was secretary. One of their measures was the proposal of a new oath, which gave rise to a strong contention, in which Dr. Milner took a very prominent part. The oath was condemned by the Vicars-Apostolic, who issued an encyclical letter declaring that it could not be lawfully taken. This so incensed the committee that they went so far as to protest against the present and all future decisions of the bishops, 'as encroaching on their natural, civil, and religious rights.' The prelates subsequently issued a second encyclical, condemning the appellation of 'Protesting Catholic Dissenters,' assumed by the committee; and the final result of the struggle was that the cause so ardently advocated by Milner obtained a complete victory. In 1803, on the death of Dr. Stapleton, he was appointed Vicar-Apostolic of the Midland District, being consecrated on the 1st of March, in that year, Bishop of Castabala, in partibus. He now took up his residence at Wolverhampton, and devoted himself heart and soul to the duties of his new and exalted position. An uncompromising champion of the Church of Rome, his pen and tongue were incessantly urging her claims. In particular he waged war à outrance against the proposed government veto on the appointment of Catholic bishops. He died 19 April, 1826. Bishop Milner's abilities, both as a theologian and an antiquary, are strikingly exemplified in his numerous works, of which we can only find room to specify a few, viz., 'An Historical and Critical Inquiry into the Existence and Character of St. George;' 'The History, Civil and Ecclesiastical, and Survey of the Antiquities of Winchester, 1799; 2nd edit. 1809, a performance which will always keep its place among the standard works on English topography;' 'Letters to a Prebendary; being an answer to Reflections on Popery by the Rev. J. Sturges, LL.D., 1800;' 'Inquiry into certain Vulgar Opinions concerning the Catholic Inhabitants and Antiquities of Ireland,' 1808; 'A Serious Expostulation with the Rev. Joseph Berington on his theological errors concerning Miracles,' 1808; 'Treatise on the Ecclesiastical Architecture of England,' 1811; 'Supplementary Memoirs of English Catholics, addressed to Charles Butler;' 'The End of Religious Controversy; or a Friendly Correspondence between a religious Society of Protestants and a Roman Catholic divine,' 1818; and papers in the 'Archæologia.' A Life of Bishop Milner, by Dr. Hussenbeth, was published at Dublin, 1862.

MILNER, JOSEPH, a pious divine, was the son of a poor weaver at Leeds, and born there a Jan., 1744. He was educated at the free grammar-school of his native place, and next at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree in 1766, and obtained one of the chancellor's medals. On entering into orders he became master of the grammar-school at Hull, where he was also chosen afternoon lecturer. He was afterwards presented to the vicarage of North Ferriby, and latterly to that of the Holy Trinity Church in Hull. Died 15 Nov., 1797. His works are 'The Life of William Howard; Answer to Gibbon's Attack on Christianity; Essays on the Influence of the Holy Spirit; History of the Church of Christ, 4 vols.; and two volumes of sermons.

MILTON, JOHN, was born in Bread Street, Cheapside, 9 Dec., 1668. His father, who was a scrivener, instructed him in the rudiments of learning, and afterwards sent him to St. Paul's School, from whence, in 1625, he was removed to Christ's College, Cambridge, where he took both his degrees in arts, and then retired to Horton, Bucks, at which place his father was then settled. Here he wrote his 'Comus' and 'Lycidas.' The former of these pieces was acted before the earl of Bridgewater at Ludlow Castle; and the latter was composed on the death of Edward King, fellow of Christ's College. It is also probable that the two poems of 'L'Allegro,' and 'Il Penseroso,' were written at Horton. In 1638 Milton went through France to Italy, and was about to extend his travels into Greece; but on hearing of the disturbed state of his native country, he resolved to return home, where he arrived after an absence of fifteen months. He now became a schoolmaster, first in St. Bride's Churchyard, and next in Aldersgate Street; but while thus employed he engaged in the contentions of the times, and wrote some furious tracts against the hierarchy. In 1643 he married the daughter of Mr. Powell, a justice of peace in Oxfordshire; but the lady, from some disgust, left her husband about a month after the nuptials, and refused to return. On this Milton determined to repudiate her without any legal proceeding; as a preparative to which strange act, he published some treatises on 'The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce,' in which he attempted to show that a man may put away his wife for bad temper and other impediments to happiness, besides adultery. This position was so offensive to the assembly of divines at Westminster, that they presented a complaint to the lords on the subject, but nothing was done against the author, who became as bitter an enemy to the Presbyterian clergy as he had before been to the Episcopalians. Having now convinced himself that his principle of divorce was warranted, he resolved to carry it into practice, and accordingly paid his addresses to another woman, which gave such alarm to the friends of his wife, that they set about effecting a reconciliation, and succeeded. Milton was now in great favour with the ruling party, to whom he recommended himself by vindicating the murder of Charles I. in a piece called 'The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.' For this publication he was made Latin secretary to the commonwealth; and he had scarcely entered upon the office before he was called upon to reply to the 'Icon Basilicæ, or the Portraiture of his sacred Majesty in his Solitudes and Sufferings.' The treatise of Milton was called 'Iconoclastes,' or the Image Breaker, in which he calumniated the king for having made use of a prayer taken from Sidney's Arcadia. He was next employed to answer the treatise of Salmasius, entitled 'Defensio Regiæ,' or a Defence of the late King. The reply of Milton had for its title 'Defensio pro populo Anglicano,' and it was observed by Hobbes, in regard to the two disputants, that he did not know whose style was best, or whose arguments were worst. In one respect Milton had the advantage, for while Salmasius obtained only one hundred pounds as a remuneration for his labour, his more powerful antagonist received one thousand. Milton's sight, which had long been in a state of decay, now left him entirely; yet he continued in his office, having for an assistant Andrew Marvell. In 1652 he lost his wife, who left him three children; and soon after he married a second time, but became a widower again within a few months. At the Restoration he absconded, and caused reports to be circulated of his death, to corroborate which a sham funeral was also celebrated. When the danger was over he made his appearance again, and married a third wife. He now employed himself in writing his 'Paradise Lost,' which was first published in ten books in 1667. For this immortal poem he received five pounds, with a contingent agreement that he should be paid double that sum more on the sale of two thousand copies. His widow subsequently sold the whole of the copyright for eight pounds. In 1671 he published 'Paradise Regained,' which he wrote on a hint given him by Elwood, the Quaker, who observed, 'Thou hast said much upon Paradise Lost; but what hast thou to say to Paradise Found?' Though this poem is not to be compared in any degree to the former, it was preferred to the Paradise Lost by the author. About the same time came out his 'Samson Agonistes,' a dramatic poem, constructed upon the Grecian model; and in 1672 he published a collection of his miscellaneous poems, to which was subjoined 'A Letter on Education.' He died 8 Nov., 1674, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, where Mr. Whitbread placed a bust in his memory. A monument in honour of Milton was erected by William Benson, in Westminster Abbey, 1737. In 1750 the masque of 'Comus' was performed for the benefit of one of his grand-daughters, named Foster. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote 'The History of England,' to the Conquest, and several tracts, which have been collected in 3 vols. folio, and 7 vols. 8vo. The best edition of his poetical works is that of Mr. Todd, in 6 vols. 8vo., with the life of Milton in one volume. His Latin 'Treatise on Christian Doctrine' was first edited in 1825, by Bishop Sumner, of Winchester, from a MS. discovered in the State Paper Office. Bishop Sumner also published an English translation of it.

MIMNERMUS, a Greek elegiac poet, who flourished about 600 B.C.

MINA, FRANCISCO ESPOZ Y, a Spanish general, born in Navarre 1784. He became a guerilla chief at the time of the French invasion (1809), and, after obtaining several victories over the French generals, was promoted to the rank of field-marshal. When Ferdinand violated the constitution (1814) Mina quitted Spain, to which country he returned on the proclamation of the Cortes (1820). Appointed captain-general of Galicia he made himself master of Catalonia, and for a long time offered a gallant resistance at Moncey, but being eventually vanquished by force of numbers he signed a capitulation (1823) and retired to England. In 1834 he again returned to Spain to oppose Don Carlos, and died 24 Dec., 1836, of the wounds he received at Barcelona.

MIRANDOLA.

MINOT, LAURENCE, an English poet in the fourteenth century, whose works lay in obscurity, as well as his name, till accident discovered them to Mr. Tyrwhitt, while he was preparing his edition of Chaucer. A complete edition of them was published by Ritson in 1794.

MINUCIUS FELIX, MARCUS, a Christian writer of the third century, who is said to have been a native of Africa, and a lawyer by profession. He lived at Rome, where he wrote a dialogue in defence of Christianity, entitled 'Octavius,' which was long ascribed to Arnobius till Baudouin discovered the real author in 1560. It has been translated into English by Reeves, and also by Lord Hailes.

MIRABAUD, JEAN BAPTISTE DE, a French writer who is chiefly known by his translations of Tasso's Jerusalem and of Ariosto's Orlando. Born 1077; died 24 June, 1760.

MIRABEAU, HONORÉ GABRIEL RIQUETTI COMTE DE, a French nobleman, born 1749. His father, Victor Riquetti, marquis of Mirabeau, published 'L'Ami des Hommes,' and several other works on political economy; but many of his principles are very dangerous. He died 13 July, 1789. His son, the subject of the present article, led a dissipated life in his youth, and was oftentimes imprisoned. He went to Berlin towards the close of the reign of Frederic, and was there when the French revolution commenced, on which he returned home, and was elected a member of the states-general; and, in January, 1791, he became president of the national assembly; but died of a fever, on the second of April following. The best edition of his works is that by Merihou, 9 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1825-27.

MIRANDA, FRANCISCO, a Spanish American patriot and French general, born at Caracas, in Venezuela, about 1750. He quitted his native country after having organized a conspiracy against the viceroy, and, in 1791, went to Paris, where he formed an intimacy with Dumouriez, and entered the French army. After the defection of that general he was tried by the revolutionary tribunal and acquitted, but being afterwards accused of complicity with the Girondins he was exiled, and fled to England. In 1803 he returned to France, but Bonaparte ordered him to leave that country, whereupon he went back to South America. In 1811 he established a republican government at Caracas, which, with the assistance of England and the United States, he maintained during the year 1812, but being afterwards captured by the Spaniards he was cast into prison at Cadiz, where he died 1816.

MIRANDOLA, GIOVANNI PICO DELLA, count, and prince of Concordia, an Italian scholar, born at Mirandola (Modena) 24 Feb., 1463, being the youngest son of John Francis Pico, prince of Mirandola. He lost his father at an early age, but his mother took care of his education, in which he made such progress as to be sent at fourteen to study canon law in the university of Bologna. After this he visited most of the colleges in Italy and France. In 1482, he built a villa called Fratta on his estate, in praise of which he wrote a poem. He now applied himself to the Greek language at Florence, where he wrote a panegyric on the poems of Lorenzo de' Medici. On leaving Florence he studied the oriental languages, particularly Hebrew and Arabic. In 1486 he was at Rome, where he published a challenge, offering to dispute on nine hundred propositions in different subjects. Instead, however, of being answered, as he expected, a charge of heresy was brought against him, for which he was indebted to his own vanity, in setting himself up as superior to all the learned of his day. He was in consequence obliged to leave Rome, and return to Florence, where he wrote an apology for his conduct and opinions. In 1488 he settled on an estate near Florence, given to him by Lorenzo de' Medici, and there he wrote several works, particularly his treatise 'De Ente et Uno.' On the death of his friend Lorenzo, he removed to Ferrara, previous to which he sold his estate of Mirandola to his nephew. He now devoted himself wholly to theological studies, and wrote several disquisitions, the chief of which was the 'Hexaplus; or Explanation of the Six Days' Work of Creation.' He died at Florence 17 Nov., 1494, and his works were printed together at Bologna in 1496; but the best edition is that of 1601.

MIRANDOLA, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO PICO DELLA, nephew of the preceding, was born about 1469. He wrote several theological works in Latin; also the life of Jerome Savonarola; and poems. He was assassinated in his castle, together with his son, by his nephew Galeotti Pico, 1533.

MIRBEL, CHARLES FRANÇOIS BRISSEAU DE, a French naturalist, born at Paris 27 March, 1776; died 12 Sept., 1854.

MIREVELT. See MIEREVELT.

MISSON, FRANÇOIS MAXIMILIEN, a French lawyer, who retired to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He became a travelling tutor; in which capacity he published 'A new Voyage to Italy,' of which Addison speaks favourably. Misson afterwards fell into the reveries of the French prophets; and died at London 16 Jan., 1721.

MITCHELL, SIR ANDREW, K.B., a British admiral, born in Scotland about 1757; died at Bermuda 26 Feb., 1806.

MITCHELL, JOHN MITCHELL, born 1789, and educated at Edinburgh. For nearly fifty years he was in business as a merchant of Leith, and for a great part of that time acted as Belgian consul-general. His leisure, however, was devoted to literature and archæology. He published a treatise on the Runic literature of Scandinavia, and an elaborate work on 'The Herring: its natural history and national importance.' Shortly before his death, which occurred 24 April, 1865, the king of the Belgians sent him the gold medal of the Order of Leopold.

MITCHELL, JOSEPH, a dramatic poet, born in Scotland about 1684; died 6 Feb., 1738.

MITCHELL, THOMAS, was born in London 30 May, 1783, and educated at Christ's Hospital, and next at Pembroke College, Cambridge (B.A. 1806; M.A. 1809), but he afterwards migrated to Sidney College, where he obtained a fellowship which he eventually resigned in consequence of his unwillingness to take orders, and thenceforward devoted himself to private tuition and literary work. He translated Aristophanes into English verse, 2 vols., 1820-22; superintended the publication of the Greek works which issued from time to time from the Clarendon press; edited five of the plays of Aristophanes, and three of those of Sophocles; and published useful indices to the Greek orators and Plato. Mr. Mitchell died at Steeple Aston, near Woodstock, 4 May, 1845.

MITFORD.

MITCHELL, SIR THOMAS LIVINGSTONE, a geographical discoverer and miscellaneous writer, was born in Scotland 1792, and at an early age entered the army. For some years he was aide-de-camp to the duke of Wellington, and was on the quartermaster-general's staff till the end of the Peninsular war, when he was sent back on a special mission to Spain and Portugal, under Sir Henry Torrens, to make a survey of the fields of battle and the positions of the English and French armies. Subsequently he was appointed surveyor-general of New South Wales, and it was owing to his exertions that the overland route to Victoria and South Australia was first regularly surveyed, and Mount Byng discovered. He was knighted 1839, and died at his residence, Park Hall, Victoria, New South Wales, 5 Oct., 1855. He published a beautiful trigonometrical survey of Port Jackson; a translation of the Lusiad of Camoens; 'Travels in Australia'; and some elementary works on military science.

MITFORD, JOHN, author of 'Johnny Newcome in the Navy,' and other poetical effusions, was originally a lieutenant in the navy, but was dismissed in consequence of some disgraceful forgery of letters, connected with Queen Caroline. He then turned author, and edited the 'Scourge' and 'Bon Ton Magazine,' but his principal work is the one first mentioned, which he is said to have composed in the fields at Bayswater, sleeping out every night in a gravel pit, until he had finished his task, which he completed in forty-three days. He was so dissipated and low in his habits that his relatives refused to notice him, and he died in St. Giles's Workhouse, London, in Dec., 1831.

MITFORD, JOHN, was born at Richmond, Surrey, 13 Aug., 1781, and educated at Tunbridge School, and Oriel College, Oxford. He obtained the living of Benhall, Suffolk, 1810. In 1815 he was appointed domestic chaplain to his relative Lord Redesdale, and presented to the rectory of Weston St. Peter's; and in 1817 to that of Stratford St. Andrew, both in Suffolk. He died at Benhall 27 April, 1856. This accomplished scholar was for many years editor of the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' and the principal writer in it from 1834-50. He also wrote some poetical works, and edited Grey, Spenser, Milton, Dryden, Butler, Prior, Swift, Young, Parnell, Goldsmith, Falconer, and Vincent Bourne.

MITFORD, JOHN FREEMAN, LORD REDESDALE. See REDESDALE.

MITFORD, MARY RUSSELL, was born at Alresford, Hampshire, 16 Dec., 1787. Her father, a physician practising at Reading, was a thoroughly selfish man, reckless and extravagant beyond belief, and to the end of his days a dead weight, dragging his wife and daughter to the ground. With his wife, Mary Russell, he received £25,000 in money besides houses and property in land, but in eight or nine years he had gambled, squandered, or otherwise fooled away all this fortune, except £3,500 in the funds, which was settled on his wife. He had to sell his furniture and library, and removed from one place to another, till in 1795 or 1796 his art of sinking brought him to the bottom of the sea of troubles, and we find him living with his wife and child on the Surrey side of Blackfriars Bridge, and taking refuge from his creditors within the rules of the King's Bench. A prize of £20,000 which he drew in the lottery, gave him an opportunity of starting again on the road to ruin. This he speedily did, for he took a house at Reading, and divided his time between field sports and the London card clubs. When the £20,000 was run through, there came another favourable turn of Fortune's wheel. His daughter, who had received an excellent education at a school in Chelsea, began to earn money by her pen, at first in small sums, afterwards in larger. The hard-earned guineas were received by her father with as little conscience as if they had been his rents, and for thirty years Miss Mitford maintained him in his idleness and dissipation, breaking her health and spirits in the labour; and all this time there never dawned upon her the suspicion that he was other than the best of men. As early as 1806 Miss Mitford produced three volumes of verse, one of which was severely castigated by the 'Quarterly Review.' Her passion as an authoress was dramatic composition, and her principal works which made their way to the public stage were 'Julian' 1823, 'Foscari' 1826, 'Kienzi' 1828, and 'Charles the First.' To the magazines, annuals, and other periodicals, her contributions were numerous. At length in the sketches of 'Our Village,' originally published in the 'Ladies' Magazine,' about 1819, she hit upon the vein most profitable in its direct advantages, and most favourable for her literary reputation. The general verdict of the public approved 'Our Village'—which in reality was Three Mile Cross near Reading—as presenting truthful sketches of rural life; and the work will always retain its charm as a piece of unaffected, natural, and simple writing. Four other volumes of sketches were added, the fifth and last in 1832. For her work entitled 'Belford Regis; or Sketches of a County Town,' the neighbouring borough of Reading supplied the materials. Numerous other tales followed, all of which met with a flattering reception. In 1852 Miss Mitford published her 'Recollections of a Literary Life; or Books, Places, and People;' her last work being 'Atherton and other Tales' 1854. She died at her residence, Swallowfield Cottage, near Reading, 10 Jan., 1855. A Life of Miss Mitford, with copious extracts from her correspondence, appeared at London in 3 vols., 1869, under the editorship of the Rev. A. G. L'Estrange.

MITTFORD, WILLIAM, an historian, brother of Lord Redesdale, was born in London 10 Feb., 1744, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. He afterwards entered the Middle Temple, but never practised the law. He was colonel of the South Hampshire militia; and a member of Parliament from 1785 to 1818. He likewise held for some years the professorship of ancient history at the Royal Academy. His principal work, 'The History of Greece,' originally appeared in 5 vols. 4to., 1784-1818. Mr. Mitford also wrote 'An Essay upon Harmony in Language, intended principally to illustrate that of the English Language;' and 'Observations on the History and Doctrine of Christianity.' Died 18 Feb., 1827.

MOCQUARD, CONSTANTINE, a French politician and man of letters, was born at Bordeaux 1791, and died at Paris 9 Dec., 1864. He was for many years Napoleon III.'s private secretary.

MOELLENDORF, RICHARD JOACHIM HENRY, a Prussian field-marshal, born 1724; died 28 Jan., 1816.

MOIR, DAVID MACRETH, a poet and littérateur, was born at Musselburgh, co. Edinburgh, 5 Jan.,

MOLESWORTH.

1798, at which place, after passing through the medical classes of the university of Edinburgh, he practised as a surgeon with great success. At an early period of life he distinguished himself by his contributions to Blackwood's Magazine under the signature of 'Delta.' Two volumes of poems which first appeared in the pages of that miscellany, viz., 'The Legend of Genevieve' and 'Domestic Verses' were afterwards published separately, as was also his humorous novel entitled 'The Life of Mansie Waugh.' His chief contribution to professional literature was his 'Outlines of the Ancient History of Medicine.' He died 6 July 1851, and in the following year a selection of his 'Poetical Works' was published by T. Aird.

MOITTE, JEAN GUILLAUME, a French sculptor, born 1747, at Paris, where he died 2 May, 1810.

MOLA, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian landscape painter, died 1661.

MOLA, PETER FRANCIS, an historical and landscape painter born at Lugano, in the Milanese territory, 1609; died 1665.

MOLAI, JACQUES DE, the last grand-master of the order of Templars. The prodigious wealth of the knights having excited the envy and hatred of the great, particularly of Philip the Fair, king of France, it was resolved to suppress the order. Accordingly a violent persecution broke out against the knights on charges the most absurd and abominable. Molai was tried, condemned, and burnt alive near Paris 11 March, 1314. He endured his sufferings with the greatest fortitude, and vindicated the innocence of his order to the last.

MOLÉ, JOHN, a self-taught mathematician, celebrated for his skill and knowledge in the science of algebra, was born at Old Newton, Suffolk, 10 March, 1743, and died at Nacton, in the same county, 27 Sept., 1827. He published 'Elements of Algebra,' 1788; and 'A Treatise on Algebra, for Schools,' 1809.

MOLESWORTH, ROBERT, Viscount Molesworth, was born at Dublin 1656, and educated in Trinity College. When James II. landed in Ireland, he caused his estate to be sequestered; but on the settlement of the new government he was made a privy councillor, and sent ambassador to Copenhagen, where he had a dispute with the king, which induced him to return home abruptly. He then published 'An Account of Denmark' which was answered by Dr. King. In 1714 he was made a commissioner of trade and plantations; and two years afterwards raised to the Irish peerage. Died 22 May, 1725. His lordship published some tracts on agriculture, a letter on the bill of peerage, and a translation of 'The Franco-Gallia' of Hottoman.

MOLESWORTH, Sir WILLIAM, was born in London 23 May, 1810, being son of Sir A. O. Molesworth, Bart. He succeeded to the baronetcy at the age of thirteen, and was subsequently entered as a student at Cambridge, but was rusticated for sending a challenge to his tutor. Afterwards he studied at Edinburgh and at one of the German universities. In 1832 he obtained a seat in Parliament for East Cornwall. He afterwards represented other constituencies, and sat for Southwark, in the liberal interest, from 1845 till his death, which occurred 22 Oct., 1855. It was Sir W. Molesworth who first aroused the attention of Parliament to the importance of our remote dependencies, and explained with incomparable clearness and force the principles of colonial self-government. He was at one time the proprietor and editor of the Westminster Review; and he edited and reprinted at great expense the works of Thomas Hobbes of Malmsbury.

MOLIÈRE, JEAN BAPTISTE POGUELIN, the greatest of the comic dramatists of France, was born at Paris, where he was baptized 15 Jan., 1622. His real name was Poqueuin. His father, who was 'tapissier valet de chambre' to Louis XIII., sent him to the Jesuit College at Clermont, where he made a rapid progress in his studies; but he soon quitted that seminary to attend the Court. It is said that he afterwards studied the law, and was admitted an advocate, but this is doubtful. A strong turn for the stage led him to join a company of comedians, when he altered his name to Molière. In 1653 he produced, at Lyons, his first comedy, called 'L'Etourdi,' or the Blunderer, the principal character of which was performed by himself. From thence he removed with his company to Beziers in Languedoc, where he was patronized by the prince of Conti, who offered to make him his secretary; which honour he declined. After acting in various provinces, he went to Paris, where his company was taken into the king's service in 1665. His last comedy, 'Le Malade Imaginaire,' was performed, the fourth time, 17 Feb., 1673; but while personating the sick man, Molière was seized with a convulsion, which, being followed by a vomiting of blood, carried him off in a few hours. There are numerous editions of his works.

MOLIERES, JOSEPH PRIVAT DE, a French mathematician born at Tarascon, 1677; died 12 May, 1742.

MOLINA, LOUIS DE, a Spanish Jesuit, born at Cuenca, 1535. He became professor of theology at Ebro; and died at Madrid 12 Oct., 1601. His principal work, 'The Agreement of Grace and Free Will,' 1588, occasioned some fierce disputes between the Jesuits and Dominicans; to terminate which Pope Paul V. issued a decree in 1607.

MOLINET, CLAUDE DU, an ecclesiastical antiquary, was born at Châlons-sur-Marne 1620; and died 2 Sept., 1687. He was canon and procurator-general of the congregation of St. Genevieve, at Paris.

MOLINOS, MICHAEL, a Spanish divine, born at Saragossa, 1627. He resided chiefly at Rome, where, in 1675, he published 'The Spiritual Guide,' which was well received at first; but on its being reprinted in 1681, an alarm was taken at the principles it contained, and the author was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Died 29 Dec., 1696. The followers of Molinos, of whom Madame Guyon was the principal, were called Mystics and Quietists, because they maintained that religion consists in an abstraction of the mind from external and finite objects.

MOLIQUE, BERNARD, a musician and composer, born at Nuremberg 7 Oct., 1803; died at Canstatt, Wurtemberg, 10 May, 1869. He settled in London 1849, and resided here several years.

MOLLOY, CHARLES, a dramatic writer, was a native of Dublin, and educated in the college of that city. He afterwards became a student of the Middle Temple, and was the editor of a political paper, called Common Sense. His plays are 'The Perplexed Couple;' 'The Coquet;' and 'Half-Pay Officers.' Died 16 July, 1767.

MONCRIEFF.

MOLYNEUX, WILLIAM, LL.D., F.R.S., a mathematician, born at Dublin 17 April, 1656. After taking his bachelor's degree in Trinity College, he studied the law in the Middle Temple. In 1678 he returned to Ireland, where he formed a philosophical society, of which he became secretary. In 1684 he was appointed a surveyor of the public works, and chief engineer. During the confusion of the times at the Revolution, he retired to Chester, where he finished his 'Dioptrics,' which came out in 1692. The same year he returned to Dublin, and became a member of Parliament. He died 11 Oct., 1698, having just before published a piece, entitled 'The case of Ireland stated, in relation to its being bound by English acts of parliament.' His other works are—'Sciothericum Telescopium;' and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions. His son, Samuel Molyneux, was born at Chester July, 1689. He became secretary to George II., when prince of Wales; and afterwards was made a commissioner of the Admiralty; but died young. He made several improvements in the construction of telescopes. Thomas Molyneux, brother of William, became professor of physic in Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1730 was created a baronet. He died 19 Oct., 1733. Several of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions; and he also published 'Letters to Mr. Locke,' 1708.

MONBODDO, LORD. James Burnett, commonly known by his legal designation of Lord Monboddo, was born at the family seat of Monboddo, in Scotland, in Oct. or Nov., 1714. He was educated at Laurencekirk, next at Aberdeen, and afterwards at Groningen, where he studied the civil law. On his return to Scotland, in 1738, he was admitted an advocate and obtained considerable practice. On the death of his relation, Lord Milton, in 1767, he was promoted to the judicial bench, by the title of Lord Monboddo. He died at Edinburgh 26 May, 1799. His lordship was deeply read in ancient Greek literature, his love of which he carried so far as to despise all modern learning; yet his works may be read to great advantage, notwithstanding the paradoxes which abound in them respecting the history of man in his natural and civil state. His Origin and Progress of Language appeared in 1773; and the first part of his Ancient Metaphysics in 1778. This last work extended to six volumes.

MONCEY, BON ADRIEN JEANNOT DE, duke de Conégliano, a marshal of France, was born at Besançon 31 July, 1754; and died at Paris 20 April, 1842.

MONCKIEFF, SIR HENRY WELLWOOD, Bart., D.D., a celebrated divine of the church of Scotland; born 1750. He became minister of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, 1775; moderator of the General Assembly 1785; and died 9 Aug., 1827. His 'Sermons' were published in 3 vols. 1829-31. He was also author of 'Discourses on the Evidences of the Jewish and Christian Revelations;' and an 'Account of the Life and Writings of John Erskine, D.D.'

MONCKIEFF, WILLIAM THOMAS, a dramatist, was a native of London. In early life he was employed as clerk by Mr. Willoughby, one of the six attorneys permitted to practise in the old Palace Court, Westminster. While thus engaged he gave indications of a talent for poetical and dramatic composition, and produced 'The Diamond Arrow,' 'Rochester,' 'All at Coventry,' and other pieces, which met with such success that his future vocation was decided. His greatest hit was the operatic extravaganza of 'Tom and Jerry,' produced at the Adelphi Theatre 1823. It created a perfect furor. Afterwards Mr. Moncrieff took a printing business at the corner of Clare Court, Drury Lane, in conjunction with the elder Oxberry. The speculation being unsuccessful he next accepted the situation of stage-manager at the Coburg Theatre, and, at a still later date, was employed in the production of 'horse pieces' at Astley's. At this period of his career (1837) his eyesight gradually failed, and he ultimately became totally blind. His necessities compelled him to make several appeals to the Literary Fund, through whose instrumentality he eventually obtained a presentation to the Charterhouse, where he passed the remainder of his life. Died 1857, aged 63.

MONGE, GASPARD, comte de Peluse, a celebrated French mathematician, born at Beaune 1746, and educated among the Fathers of the Oratory at that place, and at Lyons. He succeeded Nollet as professor of physics in the military school at Mezières, and on being admitted into the Academy of Sciences (1780) he removed to Paris and assisted Bossut in a course of lectures on hydrodynamics at the Louvre. He subsequently held the posts of examiner and minister of the marine; and signed the order for the death of Louis XVI. as a member of the executive council of government. Soon afterwards he resigned his functions, and was employed with other men of science in various places for augmenting the military resources of his country. He assisted in the formation of the Normal and Polytechnic Schools, and was one of those sent to Italy for the purpose of making collections for the galleries and halls of the Louvre. The attachment which he on various occasions manifested to Bonaparte led to his being nominated a member of the senate on the first formation of that body. The Emperor further bestowed upon him the title of Count of Peluse, the senatorial lordship of Liege, made him grand cordon of the Legion of Honour, and gave him an estate in Westphalia, and, a little while before he set out on his Russian expedition, a present of 200,000 francs. The fall of his benefactor involved Monge in misfortunes. He was expelled from the Institute in 1816; one of his sons-in-law was exiled; and he was deprived of all his employments. His faculties became disordered and he died 28 July, 1818. It was Monge who laid the foundation of a new and important branch of science, to which he gave the name of 'descriptive geometry.' His principle works are a Treatise on Statics; 'Géométrie Descriptive;' 'Description de l'Art de fabriquer les Canons;' 'Application de l'Analyse à la Géométrie des Surfaces.' He likewise wrote a multitude of memoirs on mathematical and physical science.

MONICA (St.), mother of St. Augustine, was born 332, of Christian parents, and married to Patricius, a citizen of Tagasta, in Numidia, by whom she had two sons and a daughter. She converted her husband, who was a Pagan, and after having, by her prayers and tears, obtained the conversion of St. Augustine, her eldest son, who had been entangled in the pleasures of the age, and the errors of Manichæism, died at Ostia, as she was returning to Africa in 387.

ridge, the seat of his father, Sir Thomas Monk, in Devonshire, 6 Dec., 1608. At the age of seventeen he served under his relation, Sir Richard Grenville, in an expedition against Spain; and, in 1620, he went as an ensign to the Low Countries, where he obtained a captain's commission. In 1639 he attended Charles I. to Scotland, and was made lieutenant-colonel; afterwards he went to Ireland, and for his services in the Rebellion was appointed governor of Dublin. On his return to England with his regiment (1643) he was made major-general in the Irish brigade, then employed in the siege of Nantwich, Cheshire, where he was taken prisoner, and sent to the Tower. After remaining in confinement about three years, he was induced to accept a commission under the parliament against the Irish rebels; in which service he performed several great exploits, but at last fell under censure, for concluding a treaty with Owen Roe O'Neil. Upon this he gave up the command, and retired to his estate; but was soon called to serve with Cromwell in Scotland, where he bore a part in the battle of Dunbar; after which he was left in the command of the English forces in that kingdom. In 1653 he was joined with Blake and Dean in the naval service against the Dutch fleet, commanded by Van Trump, with whom two desperate battles were fought that year, in both of which the English were victorious. Peace being soon after concluded, Monk returned to Scotland, where he remained during the usurpation of Cromwell, who regarded him with jealousy, and even imparted to him, in a letter, the suspicions which he entertained of his design to restore the king. Monk took no notice of this, but watched his opportunity; and when the authority of Richard Cromwell declined, he began his movements, and conducted them with so much judgment as to bring about that important event without bloodshed or confusion. After this he was created duke of Albemarle, and knight of the garter. The remainder of his life was not spent inactively, for when hostilities broke out with the Dutch he again commanded the fleet, and fought De Ruyter and Van Trump, in a tremendous battle, which lasted three days. The duke had scarcely returned into port before he was called to London, in consequence of the dreadful fire which laid the greatest part of the capital in ashes; and so dear was he to the people, that when he passed along, they cried out, 'If his Grace had been there the city would not have been burned.' He died 3 January, 1669-70, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. By his duchess, who survived him but a few months, he had one son, Christopher, who died governor of Jamaica, without issue, in 1688. In 1671 was published a treatise, composed by General Monk, in the Tower, with this title, 'Observations upon Military and Political Affairs.'

MONK, JAMES HENRY, D.D., an Anglican prelate, born at Buntingford, Herts, 1784. From the Charterhouse he was transferred to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship, 1805. Two years later he became assistant-tutor of the college, when he commenced his classical lectures, and such was the effect produced on the minds of his pupils that, during the fifteen years of his tutorship, they carried off the greater part of the higher classical honours at Cambridge. In 1809 he was nominated Greek professor in succession to the celebrated Porson, and he retained this chair till 1822, when he was installed dean of Peterborough. He was promoted to the see of Gloucester and Bristol 1830; and died 6 June, 1826. He published editions of the 'Hippolytus' and 'Alcestes' of Euripides, and wrote an admirable 'Life of Bentley,' 2 vols. 4to., 1831. In conjunction with C. J. Blomfield, afterwards Bishop of London, he edited Porson's 'Adversaria,' and also the 'Museum Criticum,' or Cambridge Classical Researches.'

MONMOUTH, GEOFFREY OF. See GEOFFREY.

MONMOUTH, HENRY CAREY, EARL OF, eldest son of Robert the first earl, was born 1596. He took his bachelor's degree at Exeter College, Oxford, after which he went abroad. He was made a knight of the Bath 1616; and died 13 June, 1661. His publications are 'Romulus and Tarquin; or De Principe et Tyranno,' a translation from Malvezzi; Speech in the House of Peers, 30 Jan., 1641; 'Historical Relations of the United Provinces and of Flanders,' translated from Bentivoglio; 'History of the Wars in Flanders,' from the same author; 'Advertisement from Parnassus,' translated from Boccacini; 'Politic Discourses,' from Paul Feruta; 'History of Venice,' from the same; 'The Use of Passions,' from the French of Senault; 'Man become guilty; or the corruption of his nature by sin,' from the same author; 'The History of the late Wars of Christendom,' which Walpole thinks is the same work as his translation of Sir Francis Biondi's 'History of the Civil Wars of England.' His lordship began also to translate Priorato's 'History of France,' but died before he could finish it. It was completed by William Brent, and printed in 1677.

MONMOUTH, JAMES FITZROY, DUKE OF, a natural son of Charles II., king of England, by Lucy Walters, one of his mistresses, was born at Rotterdam 1649. At the Restoration he was enacted earl of Orkney, and afterwards duke of Monmouth, and K.G. For some time he was in the service of France with an English regiment and signalled himself against the Dutch, for which he was made lieutenant-general. On his return to England he was sent to quell an insurrection in Scotland. After this he joined the disaffected party, who were in favour of excluding the duke of York from the throne. He was also concerned in a plot against his father, for which he was pardoned, and then went to Holland, from whence he returned at the accession of James II., and, having landed in Dorsetshire, obtained many followers, who were decisively defeated at Sedgemoor, in Somersetshire, 6 July, 1685. The duke was taken in a corn field and sent to London, where he was tried and beheaded on Tower Hill 15 July, 1685.

MONMOUTH, ROBERT CAREY, EARL OF, died 1639. His 'Memoirs,' containing some curious particulars of secret history of the Elizabethan period, were published in 1759 from a MS. in the possession of the earl of Cork and Orrery.

MONNET, ANTOINE GRIMOALD, a French chemist and mineralogist, born at Champex (Auvergne) 1734; died 23 May, 1817.

MONNOYER, JOHN BAPTIST, a Flemish painter, born at Lisle 1635. He was at first an historical painter, but afterwards applied himself to flower-painting. In the reign of William III. he came to England, and was employed in decorating Kensington Palace, Montague House, and other edifices. He died in London 16 Feb., 1699. His son, MONRO, ALEXANDER, M.D., an eminent anatomist, was born in London, of Scotch parents, Sept., 1697. After studying under Cheselden he went to Paris and Leyden. In 1719 he was appointed professor and demonstrator of anatomy to the Company of Surgeons at Edinburgh, where, soon after, he instituted that course of instruction which made the university the first medical school in the world. This was followed by the foundation of an hospital, where clinical lectures were commenced by Dr. Monro, who also formed a society for collecting and publishing professional papers, the result of which appeared in six volumes of 'Medical Essays,' and two more on 'Physical and Literary subjects.' Besides the papers contained in these volumes, the doctor published a work entitled 'Osteology, or a Treatise on the Anatomy of the Bones,' and an 'Account of the Success of Inoculation in Scotland.' These, with other tracts left behind him in manuscript, were printed together in 1 vol. 4to., in 1781. Dr. Monro died 10 July, 1767. He left two sons: Dr. Alexander Monro, born at Edinburgh 1732. He succeeded his father, and died in 1817, having published numerous works on anatomical subjects. Dr. Donald Monro, the second son of the first professor, died in July, 1802, aged 71. He wrote 'Observations on the Means of preserving the Health of Soldiers,' Treatise on Medical and Pharmaceutical Chemistry, 4 vols.; and Memoirs of his Father, printed in his works.

MONRO, JOHN, M.D., was born at Greenwich 16 Nov., 1715. His grandfather was principal of the university of Edinburgh, and was nominated to the bishopric of the Orkneys by James II., but did not obtain possession of it on account of the abolition of episcopacy in Scotland at the Revolution. He then settled in London, where his only son became physician to the hospitals of Bridewell and Bethlehem, and died 1752. He was succeeded by his son, the subject of this article, who was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, which university conferred the degree of doctor of physic on him, by diploma, in 1747. He published 'Remarks on Dr. Battie's Treatise on Madness;' and died 27 Dec., 1791.

MONROE, JAMES, fifth president of the United States of America, was born in Virginia 28 April, 1758. On the breaking out of the disputes between England and America he resigned his seat in Congress to enter the army, in which he continued until the conclusion of the war, having risen to the rank of colonel. He then resumed his original profession of a barrister, and was sent as ambassador to Paris and London, and employed in various important missions. At length, in March, 1817, he succeeded Mr. Madison as president of the United States. Died 4 July, 1831.

MONSON, SIR WILLIAM, was born at South Carlton, Lincolnshire, 1660. He received an academical education at Balliol College, Oxford, after which he entered the naval service, and was knighted by the earl of Essex for his conduct in the expedition to Cadiz. In the reign of James I. he distinguished himself against the Dutch, and died in Feb., 1642-3. Sir William wrote 'Naval Tracts,' printed in Churchill's 'Collection of Voyages.'

that he was first collector of taxes, next governor of Cambray, and lastly bailiff of Wallaincourt. He died 1453. His Chronicles begin where Froissart ends, and have been printed in 3 vols. folio. There is an English translation by Col. Thomas Johnes, of Hafod, with a biographical preface.

MONTAGU, ANTHONY BROWN, VISCOUNT, K. G., son of Sir Anthony Brown, being a zealous maintainer of the old religion, was created Viscount Montagu in the first year of Queen Mary's reign, 2 Sept., 1554. He was employed on several honourable occasions, especially when the queen and parliament sent him to Rome to tender their submission on account of the schism, and at the same time to sue for a reconciliation with the Catholic Church. He was one of the commanders at the battle of St. Quintin's, where he displayed great bravery. Among the temporal lords who opposed the Reformation, in the first year of Elizabeth's reign none spoke with more freedom than Viscount Montague; and yet he behaved himself so prudently afterwards as never to be out of favour with her. Indeed she employed him on several occasions, both in civil and military matters. He died at Horsley, Surrey, 19 Oct., 1592.

MONTAGU, Earls of Sandwich. See SANDWICH.

MONTAGU, BASIL, Q. C., was born in London 24 April, 1770, being the natural son of the earl of Sandwich, by Miss Wray, who was shot in Covent Garden (1779) by the Rev. Mr. Hackman, a frantic admirer. He received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1790; M.A., 1793), and was afterwards called to the bar at Gray's Inn. Mr. Montague acquired an extensive and lucrative practice in cases of bankruptcy, to which he chiefly devoted his attention. He formed an intimacy with that literary society of which Coleridge was a leader, and became a convert to the political theories of Godwin, under whose influence he meditated abandoning his profession, as being injurious to society, but was dissuaded from doing so by Sir J. Mackintosh. In 1806 Lord Chancellor Erskine appointed him a commissioner of bankruptcy, his experience in which office so impressed him with the evils of the law administered in his court, that, by publishing a yearly detail of its pernicious results, and giving evidence against it before a committee of the House of Commons, he ultimately effected its reform. Under the new law he was appointed accountant-general, in which capacity he compelled the Bank of England to pay interest (never before demanded) on the moneys that had been deposited there by his court; and thus recovered nearly £20,000 for the bankrupt fund. He also distinguished himself by his exertions for the abolition of capital punishment, in advocacy of which he published several works. Mr. Montagu was a very voluminous author and editor, having published forty volumes, and left behind him one hundred volumes in MS. His principal professional work is 'A Digest of the Bankrupt Laws.' Of his editorial works the most important is his edition of 'The Works of Francis Bacon, Lord Chancellor of England' (16 vols. 8vo., London, 1825-34), the last volume of which contains a 'Life of Bacon,' by the editor. Died at Boulogne 27 Nov., 1851.

MONTAGU, EDWARD WORTLEY, son of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, was born Oct., 1713. He was placed at Westminster School, from whence he ran away three times, which induced his father, at last to engage a private tutor for him, under whom he acquired some regularity. In 1747 he was elected into parliament; but in 1751 he went to France, where he was imprisoned on account of some gambling transactions. In 1759 he published 'Reflections on the rise and fall of the Ancient Republics.' On the death of his father he became possessed of one thousand a year, with an additional thousand at the demise of his mother. He then left the kingdom, and went to Italy, where he turned Catholic. After this he travelled in Arabia and Egypt, and became a Mohammedan. He died at Padua 2 May, 1776. Some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions.

MONTAGU, ELIZABETH, an ingenious lady, was the daughter of Matthew Robinson, Esq., and born at York in 1720. She received a liberal education under Dr. Conyers Middleton, and in 1742 married Edward Montagu, Esq., grandson of the first earl of Sandwich, by whom she had no issue. She died 25 Aug., 1800. Mrs. Montagu entertained at her house a literary society called 'The Blue Stocking Club,' from the circumstance of one of the members being distinguished by that dress. This lady was also celebrated by her annual dinner, on May-day, to the chimney-sweepers. She wrote 'Three Dialogues of the Dead,' printed with those of Lord Lyttleton; but her principal performance is 'An Essay on the Genius and Writings of Shakespeare.' Since her death have appeared four volumes of her letters.

MONTAGU, GEORGE, an English gentleman, distinguished by his acquisitions as a naturalist, was a member of an old Wiltshire family and for many years colonel of the militia of that county. His 'Ornithological Dictionary,' and 'Testacea Britannica: or Natural History of British Shells,' are esteemed works. Col. Montagu died at Knowle House, Devon, 28 Aug., 1815, aged 68.

MONTAGU, Lady MARY WORTLEY, the eldest daughter of Evelyn, duke of Kingston, was born about 1690. She made a great proficiency in the Latin and Greek languages, under the superintendance of Bishop Burnet. In 1712 she married Mr. Edward Wortley Montagu, whom she accompanied to Constantinople, in 1716, and while there caused her son to be inoculated for the small-pox, in consequence of which the practice was introduced into England. In 1718 she returned home, and settled at Twickenham, where, for some time, she lived on terms of intimacy with Pope; but their friendship was at last converted into hatred. In 1739 Lady Mary went to reside in Italy, on account of her health; but in 1761 she revisited England, and died 21 Aug., 1762. The year after her death appeared a surreptitious edition of her letters, in 3 vols. 12mo.; but a more correct and full collection of her correspondence and poems was printed in 1803, in 5 vols. 12mo., with a biographical memoir prefixed.

MONTAGU, RICHARD, bishop of Chichester and Norwich. See MOUNTAGUE.

MONTAGU, WALTER, a Catholic divine, son of Sir Henry Montagu, afterwards earl of Manchester, was born in London 1604, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, after which he travelled abroad, and became favourably impressed by the Catholic religion, which he eventually adopted. On his return he was taken particular notice of by Queen Henrietta Maria, who appointed him her confessor, and sent him on a confidential mission to Rome, where he was very graciously received by Pope Urban VIII. Soon after the breaking out of the civil war he was committed to the Tower (1643), and it appears he remained in confinement for some years. On being released he retired to France, and was made abbat of the Benedictine monastery at Nanteuil. Afterwards he obtained the rich abbey of St. Martin's near Pontoise. At the restoration the queen mother of England appointed him master of St. Katharine's Hospital; and he retained that post till his death, which happened at Paris 1677. The Abbé Montagu published 'The Shepherd's Paradise, a Pastoral Comedy;' 'Miscellanea Spirituaria, or Devout Essays,' 2 parts, 1648-54; a Letter from Paris to his father, justifying his joining the Church of Rome, printed with Lord Falkland's 'Discourse of Infallibility,' 1651; and an English translation of Bossuet's 'Exposition of the Doctrine of the Catholique Church,' 1672.

MONTAGUE, CHARLES, earl of Halifax. See HALIFAX.

MONTAIGNE, MICHEL, Sieur DE, a French writer, born at the castle of Montaigne (Périgord), 28 Feb., 1533. Uncommon care was taken of his education; and he was taught Latin by constantly conversing in it with his tutor. He finished his studies at the college of Bordeaux, after which he applied himself to the law, though he did not follow that profession. He was twice mayor of Bordeaux, and in 1588, took an active part in the assembly of the states of Blois. During one of his visits at court, Charles IX. conferred on him the order of St. Michael. Died 13 Sept., 1592. His 'Essays have been often printed, and were translated into English by Cotton. In 1774 appeared 'Memoirs of a Journey into Italy, by M. Montaigne.'

MONTALEMBERT, CHARLES FORBES DE TYRON Comte DE, a French statesman and author, born 29 May, 1810, in London, where his grandfather and his father had settled during the earlier days of the French Revolution. At the restoration of the Bourbons his father, who had served in the English army, returned to his native land, and was created a peer. (He died 1831.) At an early age young Montalembert formed an intimate acquaintance with the Abbé Lamennais, then the ardent advocate of an alliance between Catholicism and Democracy. A journal called the 'Avenir,' was started as their organ; but the vehemence of its animadversion soon brought it into trouble, and Montalembert being charged with having opened a school without the permission of the Minister, was convicted and condemned to pay a small fine. On attaining the legal age, he took his seat as a peer of France (1835). The visionary scheme of a union of Catholicism and Democracy, which Lamennais, Lacordaire, and Montalembert defended with so much energy, found but little favour at Rome, and the friends resolved to proceed thither and plead their cause in person. After some delay their doctrines were reprobated by Gregory XVI., in the encyclical of June, 1835, as they had been three years previously. Lacordaire and Montalembert submitted to the Pope; but Lamennais revolted, and from that day all intercourse ceased between him and his two former associates. Montalembert now betook himself to study the ideas and manners of the Middle Ages, and, in 1836 brought out his first important work, 'The Life of St. Elizabeth of Hungary.' The following year he made his three famous speeches in the Chamber of Peers, against a bill introduced by M. Villemain, then a member of the cabinet, on the liberty of the church, the liberty of instruction, and the liberty of the monastic orders. He therein declared himself the defender of the Society of Jesus; and in his last speech on this occasion he uttered the memorable words so often quoted afterwards, 'We are the sons of the Crusaders; and the sons of the Crusaders will never give way before the sons of Voltaire.' After the revolution of 1848 he was returned as a deputy for the department of the Doubs, and took his place with the majority, though he voted against the decree banishing the Orleans family. After the Coup d'Etat he protested against the arrest and imprisonment of the representatives. He gave his support to the Government for some time; but becoming indignant at the decree confiscating the property of the Orleans princes, he went into opposition (1852). In the same year he was elected a member of the French Academy. At the general election of 1857 M. de Montalembert, who was now regarded as the declared adversary of the Empire, was defeated in his own department of the Doubs. This defeat closed his parliamentary career. His exclusion from an arena for which he was so pre-eminently fitted, and the tame submission of men who, not long before, were reckless agitators, aroused in him a bitterness of feeling which he rarely restrained. The laws affecting the press prevented him from openly criticising the government; but his feelings found vent in an article published in the 'Correspondant,' on the Indian debates in the English parliament. For this he was sentenced to fine and imprisonment; but all the penalties were at once remitted by the Emperor. During his latter years M. de Montalembert was afflicted with a painful malady, which proved fatal 13 March, 1870. His most important works are 'Du Catholicisme et du Vandalisme dans l'Art,' 1829; 'La Vie de Sainte Elisabeth de Hongrie,' 1830; 'L'Avenir Politique de l'Angleterre,' 1855; 'Pie IX. et Lord Palmerston,' 1856; a biographical sketch of Lacordaire; and 'Les Moines de l'Occident depuis Saint Benoît jusqu'à Saint Bernard,' of which five volumes have appeared. He was also an assiduous contributor to the 'Encyclopédie Catholique' and the 'Correspondant.'

MONTALEMBERT, MARC RENÉ, marquis DE, a French general, born 16 July, 1714; died 22 March, 1800. He served with much distinction in the Seven Years' War, and, in spite of the opposition of the military engineers of the period, succeeded in introducing important improvements in the art of fortification. He published a work on Fortification; three volumes of correspondence on military subjects, &c.

MONTANUS, a heretic of the second century. He was a native of Phrygia; and having deceived two rich ladies, named Priscilla and Maximilla, by his pretended sanctity, they set up claims to the gift of Prophecy; and asserted it as an article of faith, that the fulness of the spirit was imparted to these three chosen vessels to complete the mystery of eternal redemption.

MONTANUS, BENEDICT ARIAS, a Spanish Benedictine, born at Fregenal, in Estramadura, 1527; died 1598. He edited a polyglott Bible, 8 vols. folio, 1569-72; and published some works on divinity.

MONTANUS.

MONTANUS, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian physician, born at Verona about 1498; died 6 May, 1551.

MONTBELIARD, PHILIBERT GUENEAU, a French naturalist, born at Semur-en-Auxois 1720; died 28 Nov., 1785. He was associated with Buffon in the composition of his Natural History.

MONTCALM DE SAINT-VERAN, LOUIS JOSEPH, Marquis DE, a French general, born at Candiac, near Nîmes, 1712. In 1756 he became a field marshal, and was appointed to the command of the French army in Canada, where he opposed Lord Loudoun with considerable skill and success. He afterwards defeated Abercromby the successor of his lordship; but in the battle fought under the walls of Quebec 12 Sept., 1759, he received a mortal wound, as did likewise the English general Wolf. Montcalm died on the 14th.

MONTALVO. See CACCIA.

MONTBELLO, JEAN LANNES, duc DE, a marshal of France, born at Lectoure (Guienne) 1769, being the son of a groom. He commenced life as a dyer, and then enrolled himself as a volunteer (1792). He rose rapidly in the army, and greatly distinguished himself in the first Italian campaign. He accompanied Bonaparte into Egypt, and, having returned with him, rendered him valuable support on the 18th Brumaire. He followed his master into Italy (1800) and covered himself with glory at Montebello (1804). His reputation was still further increased by his gallant conduct at the battles of Austerlitz, Jena, Eylau, and Friedland. He died of wounds received at the battle of Essling 13 May, 1809.

MONTECUCULLI, RAYMOND, a celebrated general, was born 1608, in the territory of Modena. He served under his uncle, who was a general in the Imperial troops; and in 1637 he defeated Razolzi, prince of Transylvania. In 1664 he gained a victory over the Turks at St. Gothard; and in 1673 he had to contend with Turenne, whose death he greatly lamented. He was next opposed to Condé; and he congratulated himself in not having been defeated by two such commanders. Died 16 Oct., 1680. His memoirs were printed at Strasburg 1735.

MONTMAYOR, GEORGE DE, a Spanish poet, born at Montemor, near Coimbra, in Portugal, about 1520. After serving in the army he was employed at the court of Philip II. Subsequently he held an honourable employment in the court of his own sovereign, and died at Lisbon 26 Feb., 1562. He wrote 'Diana,' a pastoral romance, which was continued by Gaspar Polo.

MONTEN, DIETRICH, a German artist, born at Disseldorf 1799; died at Munich 13 Dec., 1843. He excelled in the painting of battle scenes.

MONTESPAN, FRANÇOISE ATHÉNAÏS DE ROCHECHOUART DE MORMELAIT, marquise DE, a celebrated French lady, who was wife of the marquis of that title and mistress of Louis XIV., over whom she gained a complete ascendancy, which she maintained until that monarch became attached to Madame de Maintenon. Madame de Montespan had children by the king, one of whom became duke of Maine, and two daughters, who were nobly married. Born 1641; died 28 May, 1707.

MONTESQUIEU, CHARLES DE SECONDAT, baron DE LA BRÈDE ET DE, was born in the castle of Brede, in Guienne, 18 Jan., 1689. He became a counsellor of the parliament of Bordeaux in 1714; and two years afterwards succeeded his uncle as president à mortier. His first appearance as an author was in the publication of the 'Persian Letters,' a work of considerable ingenuity, though mixed with some free opinions in religion. In 1728 Montesquieu was admitted a member of the academy, on which occasion he delivered an eloquent discourse. Having given up his civil employments he went on his travels, and remained in England three years. After his return he retired to his estate, and there completed his work 'On the Causes of the Grandeur and Declension of the Romans,' 1734. His greatest performance, however, is the 'Spirit of Laws,' 1748, which though attacked by some writers, secured its ground in the estimation of the literary world. The author died 10 Feb., 1755. His other works are—'The Temple of Gnidus;' a piece called 'Lysimachus;' and an 'Essay on Taste.'

MONTFAUCON, BERNARD DE, a learned antiquary, was born at Soulage, in Languedoc, 17 Jan., 1655. He served in the army under Turenne; but in 1675 he entered into the congregation of St. Maur. In 1688 he published 'Analecæ Græcæ, sive varia Opuscula;' and in 1690 a small volume, entitled 'La Verité de l'Histoire de Judith.' His next publication was an edition of Athanasius, 3 vols. 1693. The same year he went to Italy, and after his return, in 1702, published his 'Diarium Italicum,' of which an English translation appeared 1725. In 1706 he gave to the world his 'Collectio nova Patrum,' in 2 vols.; and in 1708 came out his 'Palæographia Græca, sive de ortu et progressu Literarum Græcarum,' which was followed, the next year, by a translation of the book of Philo Judæus, on the contemplative life; which occasioned a controversy between Montfaucun and the president Bouhier. In 1713 this indefatigable scholar published an edition of the remains of the Hexapla of Origen, 2 vols.; and in 1718 he commenced a very fine one of St. Chrysostom, which was completed in 13 vols. folio. But the work on which his fame is principally established, is 'L'Antiquité expliquée et représentée en Figures,' 5 vols. folio; to which was afterwards added a supplement in the same number of volumes. The last production of Montfaucun was printed in 1739, with this title, 'Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum,' 2 vols. He died in the abbey of St. Germain des Prés 21 Dec., 1741.

MONTFORT, SIMON Comte DE, a French general who, in 1209, conducted the crusade against the Albigenses, on which occasion he tarnished his reputation by his cruelties. In 1213 he gained a complete victory over Peter, king of Arragon. He was slain at the siege of Toulouse 1218. His younger son came to England, and was created Earl of Leicester.

MONTGOLFIER, JACQUES 'ETIENNE, the discoverer of aërostation, was born at Annonay, near Lyons, 7 Jan., 1745. He was originally a paper-maker; and in 1782 made his first public experiment, by sending up an air balloon at Avignon. The year following he exhibited one on a magnificent scale before the royal family at Versailles; for which he was rewarded with the order of St. Michael, and a pension. Died 2 Aug., 1799. His brother, Joseph Michel, who was associated with him in all his experiments, was born 1740; and died 26 June, 1810.

MONTGOMERY, ALEXANDER, a Scotch poet, was a native of Ayrshire. His chief work, 'The Cherrie and the Slaye,' appeared in 1607, and it is conjectured that he died soon afterwards. A complete edition of his works was published by David Irving, LL.D. in 1821.

MONTGOMERY, JAMES, a minor poet, born at Irvine, Ayrshire, 4 Nov., 1771. His father was a Moravian missionary, who, leaving his son in Yorkshire to be educated, went to the West Indies, where he and the poet's mother both died. When only twelve years old the bent of the boy's mind was shown by the production of various small poems. His first occupation was as an assistant in a general shop. From this he came to London, where he was employed by a bookseller. After eight months, however, he returned to Yorkshire, and, in 1782, he obtained a situation in the establishment of Mr. Gales, a bookseller of Sheffield, who had started a newspaper called 'The Sheffield Register.' On this paper Montgomery worked con amore; and when his master had to flee from England to avoid his imprisonment for printing libellous articles the young poet became the editor and publisher of the paper, the name of which he changed to 'The Sheffield Iris.' In the columns of this journal he advocated the cause of political and religious freedom. Like his predecessor he incurred the censures of government, and underwent two terms of imprisonment, for three months and six months respectively. Mr. Montgomery contributed largely to the magazines, and established his right to rank as a poet. He died at Sheffield 30 April, 1854. His chief works are 'Prison Amusements,' 1797; 'The Ocean,' 1805; 'The Wanderer in Switzerland and other poems,' 1806; 'The West Indies,' 1809; 'The World before the Flood,' 1812; 'Greenland,' 1819; 'The Pelican Island and other poems,' 1828; 'Original Hymns,' 1853. A complete edition of his poetical works appeared in 4 vols., London, 1855.

MONTGOMERY, ROBERT, an English clergyman and versifier, was born at Bath 1807. His father was one Gomery, a theatrical clown, but the son extended his patronymic, in order to give it a more aristocratic appearance. In 1828 he gained immense popularity by the publication of a poem entitled 'The Omnipresence of the Deity,' which was hailed with delight by the so-called 'religious world,' although the critics, and all persons of judgment, spoke of it with the contempt it merited. The work is chiefly known to readers of the present day in consequence of the sarcastic notice of it contributed to the Edinburgh Review by Lord Macaulay, and reprinted in the 'Essays' of that brilliant writer. Of Montgomery's subsequent productions, which are all in a pietistic vein, the principal are—'The Messiah,' a Poem in six books; and 'Satan, or Intellect without God,' a work which procured for its author the sobriquet of 'Satan Montgomery.' The profits derived from his writings and the liberality of his admirers, enabled Mr. Montgomery to enter Lincoln College, Oxford. He was ordained in 1835, and, after officiating as minister of an episcopal chapel at Glasgow, was appointed in 1843 minister of Percy Chapel, St. Pancras, London. His death occurred at Brighton 3 Dec., 1855.

MONTOLON, CHARLES TRISTAN, marquis DE, a French general, born at Paris 1782. He was warmly attached to Bonaparte, and distinguished himself by his bravery in the Italian, German, and Polish campaigns. He was appointed chamberlain to the emperor 1809, and brigadier-general 1814. He was employed on several diplomatic missions, and shared the captivity of his fallen master at St. Helena, where he wrote down from his dictation several volumes of 'Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire de France.' Subsequently he displayed an equal degree of attachment to Louis Napoleon, whom he accompanied in the memorable expedition to Boulogne. During his imprisonment at Ham he wrote 'Histoire de la captivité de Ste. Hélène,' 1846. He was released at the end of a few years; and died 21 Aug., 1853.

MONTI, VINCENTO, an Italian poet, born at Fusignano, near Ferrara, 19 Feb., 1754. After studying at the university of the latter city he went to Rome, where he became secretary to one of the nephews of Pope Pius VI., and was admitted into the Arcadian Society. The satires and epigrams which he now wrote raised him many enemies, so that he willingly abandoned this species of composition for a higher walk of literature, and produced his two celebrated tragedies of 'Galeotti Manfredi' and 'Aristodemo.' When the French entered Italy Monti repaired to Milan, and was appointed secretary to the Directory of the Cisalpine Republic. On the invasion of Italy by Suwarrow he retired to Paris, whence he returned after the battle of Marengo (1800). At this period he published his celebrated poem on the death of the mathematician Mascheroni. He was successively appointed professor of the belles lettres and of rhetoric in the university of Padua; and, after the creation of the kingdom of Italy (1805) he was constituted historiographer of that state. He preserved his place and pension under the new government; and died at Milan 13 Oct., 1828. Monti was a knight of the Legion of Honour and of the Iron Crown, and a member of many learned societies. Besides the above-mentioned works he was author of three poems, entitled respectively 'Bassviliana,' 'Musogonia,' and 'Lecomadi'; a translation of Homer's Iliad and Juvenal's Satires; 'Bardo della Selva nera;' and Proposals for some corrections of and additions to the Vocabulary of the Accademia della Crusca.

MONTMORENCY, MATTHIEU DE, constable of France, who distinguished himself in the crusade against the Albigenses, and afterwards in the wars with the English, from whom he took several strong places. He died 1230. His descendant, Anne de Montmorency, was also a celebrated general, and was made prisoner, with Francis I., at the battle of Pavia. The services which he rendered to his country obtained for him the sword of constable 1538. Charles IX. employed him against the Protestants, who took him prisoner at the battle of Dreux 1562; but he recovered his liberty soon afterwards, and fell at the battle of St. Denis 1567. His grandson, the Duke de Montmorency, was beheaded 1632, for conspiring with Gaston of Orleans, and raising an insurrection in Languedoc.

MONTPENSIER, ANNE MARIE LOUISE D'ORLEANS, duchesse DE, better known by the name of Mademoiselle de Montpensier, was the daughter of Gaston, duke of Orleans, and born 19 May, 1627. She inherited from her father a most un-governable temper, and in the civil wars took the side of Condé. After a variety of intrigues she married the count de Lauzun, who treated her with great insolence, and one day, on returning from hunting, said, 'Louisa of Orleans, take off my boots.' This extraordinary woman died 5 March, 1693. She wrote her own memoirs, which have been published in 8 vols. Her letters also have been printed, and two romances, one entitled 'Relation de l'Isle imaginaire,' and the other 'La Princesse de Paphlagonie.'

MONTRESOR, CLAUDE DE BOURDEILLES, comte DE, grand-nephew of Peter de Bourdeilles, was born about 1608. He was for some time in the service of Gaston of Orleans, but afterwards retired into private life, and died a July, 1663. His 'Memoirs' have been published.

MONTROSE, JAMES GRAHAM, marquis OF, was descended from the royal line of Scotland. He was born 1612, being the son of the earl of Montrose, who gave him an excellent education, which was improved by a residence in France, where he held a commission in the Scotch Guards. On his return home he experienced such neglect, through the jealousy of the marquis of Hamilton, as induced him to join the Covenanters; but afterwards he saw his error, and took a very active part on the side of the king, and in a few months gained the battles of Perth, Aberdeen, and Inverlochy, for which services he was created a marquis. In 1645 his fortune changed, and after suffering a defeat from Lesley he was obliged to leave the kingdom. He stayed abroad till 1650, when he landed in Orkney, with a few followers, but was soon overpowered, conveyed to Edinburgh, and there hung and quartered on the 21st of May.

MONTUCCI, ANTONIO, a celebrated Chinese scholar, born at Sienna 22 May, 1762, and educated in the university there, being, in 1785, appointed professor of English in the Tolomei College. While in London in 1792 he met four Chinese youths who were about to accompany Lord Macartney's expedition to China in the capacity of interpreters; and from them he received a valuable Chinese dictionary, and received some instruction in their native tongue to the study of which he thenceforward devoted all his spare time. He resided for some years at Berlin, and next at Dresden, where he completed his great work on the Chinese characters. After an absence of forty-two years he returned to his native country, and was kindly received by Pope Leo XII., to whom he presented his books, MSS., and Chinese types. He then retired to his native city, where he died 25 March, 1827.

MONTUCLA, JEAN ETIENNE, a mathematician, born at Lyons 1725. He practised for some time as an advocate, but gave up the law for scientific pursuits. The publication of his 'Treatise relative to the Quadrature of the Circle,' procured him great reputation, which was increased by his 'History of the Mathematics.' He was now made secretary to the Intendance at Grenoble, and in 1764 went to Cayenne, with the title of Astronomer Royal. Died 18 Dec., 1799.

MOOR, KAREL VAN, a Dutch painter, born at Leyden 1656; died 1738.

MOOR, MICHAEL, a divine of the Roman church, born at Dublin 1640. He taught philosophy and rhetoric in the Grassin College at Paris for some years, and then returned to his native country, where James II. made him provost of the college of Dublin. He died at Paris 1726. His works are De existentia Dei; Hortatio ad Studium linguæ Græcæ et Hebræicæ; Vera sciendi Methodus; against the Cartesian system.

MOORE, EDWARD, an English writer, was the son of a dissenting minister at Abingdon, in Berkshire, and born there 22 March 1711-12. He was bred a linen-draper in London, which he quitted for the profession of literature. In 1744 he published his 'Fables for the Female Sex,' which procured him friends among the great, particularly Lord Lyttleton, whom he complimented in a piece entitled 'The Trial of Selim.' After two ineffectual attempts at dramatic composition, in the comedies of the 'Foundling,' and 'Gil Blas,' he succeeded greatly in the tragedy of 'The Gamester.' He next became the editor of a periodical paper called 'The World,' in which he was assisted by Lords Lyttleton, Chesterfield, Bath, and Corke, Horace Walpole, Richard Owen Cambridge, and Soame Jenyns. Died 28 Feb., 1757.

MOORE, JOHN, a learned prelate born at Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1689 he was presented to the rectory of St. Andrew, Holborn, and in 1691 was made bishop of Norwich, from whence he was translated to Ely in 1707. Died 31 July, 1714, æt. 68. Bishop Moore was the patron of Dr. Samuel Clarke, who published his sermons in 2 vols., 1715. His library was purchased by George I., and given to the university of Cambridge.

MOORE, JOHN, M.D., was born 1730 at Stirling, where his father was an episcopal clergyman. He studied surgery and medicine at Glasgow, and in 1747 obtained the appointment of mate in one of the military hospitals in Flanders. After the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle he went to Paris as surgeon in the household of the English ambassador. Two years afterwards he returned to Scotland, and practised as a surgeon in that city with great reputation, till his connection with the Hamilton family induced him to take the degree of doctor of physic. In that capacity he accompanied the duke, who was of a consumptive habit, to the Continent, where they spent five years. In 1775 Dr. Moore settled in London, and there published his Travels in 2 vols.; to which, in 1781, he added two more by way of supplement. In 1785 he printed 'Medical Sketches,' and in 1789 a novel entitled 'Zeluco,' which was uncommonly successful. Happening to be an eye-witness of the dreadful scenes which occurred at Paris in 1792, Dr. Moore was led, after his return to England, to publish 'A View of the Causes and Progress of the French Revolution.' His next work was a novel entitled 'Edward, or various Views of Human Nature,' and in 1800 he produced another, called 'Mordaunt,' but both fell far short of his 'Zeluco.' His last literary concern was an edition of Smollett's works, to which he prefixed a life of the author. Died 30 Feb., 1802.

MOORE, SIR JOHN, son of the preceding, was born at Glasgow, 13 Nov., 1761. At the age of fifteen he obtained an ensigncy in the 51st regiment of foot, of which, in 1790, he became lieutenant-colonel, and served with his corps in Corsica, where he was wounded in storming the Mozello fort at the siege of Calvi. In 1790 he went out as brigadier-general to the West Indies, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who appointed him to the government of St. Lucie, in the capture of which he had a principal share. On his return home, in 1797, he was employed in Ireland during the rebellion, and was raised to the rank of major-general. In 1799 he went on the expedition to Holland, where he was again wounded severely, notwithstanding which he soon afterwards went to the Mediterranean, and at the battle of Alexandria received a cut from a sabre on the breast, and a shot in the thigh. On his return to England he was made a knight of the Bath; and in 1808 was appointed to command an army in Spain, where, after a signal retreat before a superior force, he fell under the walls of Corunna 16 Jan., 1809.

MOORE, JOHN, archbishop of Canterbury, was the son of a butcher at Gloucester, and educated in the Crypt School of that city, after which he went to Pembroke College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders. Becoming tutor to the marquis of Blandford, and chaplain to the duke of Marlborough, he rose rapidly in the church. In 1771 he was made dean of Canterbury; in 1776 bishop of Bangor; and in 1783 archbishop. Died 18 Jan., 1805.

MOORE, JOHN, was elected from Merchant Taylor's School to St. John's College, Oxford (B.A. 1763). In 1797 he obtained a Lambeth degree of LL.B. He was a minor canon and sacrist of St. Paul's, a priest of the Chapel Royal, lecturer of St. Sepulchre's, rector of St. Michael Bassishaw, and Langdon Hills, Essex, and served the office of president of Sion College in 1800 and subsequent years. Died 16 June, 1821, æt. 79. His publications prove him to have been a good biblical scholar and antiquary.

MOORE, SIR JONAS, a mathematician, and one of the founders of the Royal Society, was born at Whitley, Lancashire, 8 Feb., 1617. Charles I. appointed him tutor to the duke of York; but the Rebellion reduced him to the necessity of keeping a school, till he was employed under Cromwell as surveyor of the Fens. At the Restoration he was knighted, and made surveyor-general of the ordnance. His interest at court was considerable, and he used it for the benefit of science, the proofs of which exist in the Observatory at Greenwich, with the appointment of an astronomer royal, and in the endowment of the mathematical school at Christ's Hospital. For this last he drew up a course of mathematics in three vols. Died 27 Aug., 1679.

MOORE, NELLY, an English actress, born 1845; died in London 22 Jan., 1869.

MOORE, PHILIP, a divine, born in 1705. He became rector of Kirkbride and Douglas in the Isle of Man, where he lived on terms of the greatest friendship with Bishop Wilson, whose funeral sermon he preached and printed. He superintended the translation of the Bible into the Manx language, and edited some other works. Died 22 Jan., 1783.

MOORE, THOMAS, was born in Dublin 28 May, 1779, being the son of a dealer in groceries and spirits. Like Pope, he 'lisped in numbers,' and at thirteen years of age became a contributor to the 'Anthologia Hibernica.' Just at the proper moment for Moore, Catholics were permitted to enter Trinity College, Dublin, and the youthful poet, taking advantage of this relaxation of the penal laws, became a student in that society 1794. Then, as now, party politics ran very high in Ireland, and Moore, having adopted democratic opinions, hymned the independence of the Emerald Isle, and wrote in feeling verse to Emmet. After graduating B.A., he came to London to study law and to publish his translation of the poems of Anacreon, which was, by the influence of the earl of Moira, permitted to be dedicated to the Prince Regent. He now plunged into the vortex of London fashionable society, being everywhere a welcome guest on account of the brilliancy of his conversation and his rare musical talents. Among his intimate friends were the earl of Moira, Lord Holland, the marquis of Lansdowne, and other noblemen of the Whig party, which Moore consistently supported throughout the whole of his career. In 1801 he published 'The Poetical Works of the late Thomas Little, Esq.,' a production disfigured by a licentiousness of which the author was, in later life, heartily ashamed. Two years afterwards he obtained the appointment of registrar to the Admiralty in Bermuda; but on arriving there he promptly appointed a deputy to discharge the duties of the office, and went off on a tour through the United States and Canada, returning home with a less exalted idea than he had previously entertained of the great Transatlantic republic. In commemoration of this trip he composed 'Epistles, Odes, and other Poems,' which being somewhat roughly handled in the 'Edinburgh Review,' led to the author's duel with Jeffrey—a bloodless encounter, which happily resulted in an enduring friendship between the combatants. The same affair produced a quarrel and subsequent friendship with Byron. In 1811 Mr. Moore married Miss Bessie Dyke, an amiable young actress, and thenceforward was obliged to ply his pen more actively than ever, in order to procure a livelihood. Having tried his hand at serious political poetry he wrote with more success in a lighter strain, and the 'Intercepted Letters, or, the Twopenny Post Bag, &c.' Thomas Brown, jun.' (1812), set all the world a-laughing. He had already commenced in 1807, and he continued till as late as 1834, the publication of his charming 'Irish Melodies,' the most popular of all his productions. In 1817 another brilliant work by him appeared. Messrs. Longman, the publishers, agreed to give him £3000 for an Eastern poem. Moore retired to the banks of the Dove, imbued himself with oriental reading, and in three years produced 'Lalla Rookh.' Its success was splendid, for it struck a new key, and poured upon the world a dazzling flood of gorgeous Eastern illustration and imagery. After achieving this literary triumph Moore went twice abroad, the first time with the poet Rogers, the second with Lord John Russell, when he proceeded to Genoa, and at Venice visited Lord Byron. Afterwards, in consequence of a difficulty with his agent at Bermuda, he retired to Paris, where he continued to reside till 1822. At this period he wrote 'The Fudge Family in Paris,' to which 'The Fudges in England' was a sequel; 'Tom Crib's Memorial to Congress'; 'Fables for the Holy Alliance'; and 'The Loves of the Angels.' Soon after coming back to England he settled in graceful retirement at a cottage called Sloperton, in the immediate vicinity of the beautiful demesne of Bowood, Wiltshire, the seat of his ever-constant friend, the marquis of Lansdowne. Mr. Moore, who in his declining years was afflicted with mental imbecility, died 26 Feb., 1852. In this brief sketch we have referred only to his poetical works. His principal prose writings are 'Memoirs of Captain Rock,' 1824; 'Memoirs of the Rt. Hon. R. B. Sheridan,' 1825; 'The Epicurean, a Tale,' 1827; 'Life of Lord Byron,' 1830; 'Life and Death of Lord Edward Fitzgerald,' 1831; 'Travels of an Irish Gentleman in search of a Religion,' a vindication of the Church of Rome, 1833; and a 'History of Ireland,' forming 4 vols. of Lardner's 'Cabinet Cyclopædia,' 1839-46. His 'Memoirs, Journal, and Correspondence,' were edited by Lord John Russell, 8 vols., 1852-56.

MORALES, AMBROSE, a Spanish divine, born 1513 at Cordova. He was historiographer to Philip II., and a professor at Alcalá, where he died 1590. His principal works are—'The Chronicle of Spain; and The Antiquities of Spain.

MORALES, LUIS, a Spanish painter who died 1586. He was surnamed El Divino, from having devoted his pencil exclusively to sacred subjects.

MORAND, SAUVEUR FRANÇOIS, a French writer on lithotomy, born at Paris 1697; died, principal surgeon at the Hôtel des Invalides, 21 July, 1773. His son, Jean François Clement, born 1726, became professor of anatomy in the university of Paris, where he died 13 Aug., 1784, leaving some surgical works.

MORANT, PHILIP, F.S.A., was born at St. Saviour's, Jersey, 6 Oct., 1700; and educated at Pembroke College, Oxford (M.A. 1724). He obtained, successively, several livings in Essex, the principal of which was that of St. Mary's, Colchester. He died in London 25 Nov., 1770. Mr. Morant published the 'History of Colchester,' folio; and the History of Essex, 2 vols. folio. He was also one of the compilers of the Biographia Britannica; and was appointed, by the House of Peers, to publish a copy of the rolls of Parliament, which work, at his death, devolved to his son-in-law, Mr. Astle.

MORATIN, NICOLAS FERNANDEZ, a Spanish poet and dramatist, born 20 July, 1737, at Madrid; died there 11 May, 1780. His son, Leandro Fernandez, who likewise acquired fame as a dramatist, was born at Madrid 19 March, 1760; and died at Paris 21 June, 1828.

MORDAUNT, CHARLES, earl of Peterborough. See PETERBOROUGH.

MORE, ALEXANDER, a French protestant minister, born of a Scotch family at Castres, in Languedoc, 1616; died at Paris 28 Sept., 1670. He was for some time professor of history at Amsterdam, and, during his residence in Holland, published a reply to Milton's second Defence of the People of England.

MORE, Sir ANTONIO, a painter, born at Utrecht 1519. He was very successful in his portraits, of which he painted several in England, in the reign of Queen Mary, on whose death he accompanied Philip II. to Spain, where he lived on terms of great intimacy with that monarch for some time, but at last removed to Flanders. Died 1575.

MORE, Sir FRANCIS, an eminent lawyer, born at East Hildesley, Berks, 1558; died 20 Nov. 1621.

MORE, GENTRUDE, an English lady, who, quitting the world, became a Benedictine nun, and died at Cambrai 18 Aug., 1633. Her work, entitled 'Spiritual Exercises, or a Lover's Confessions,' was published 1658.

MORE, Mrs. HANNAH, the daughter of a schoolmaster at Stapleton, Gloucestershire, was born there 2 Feb., 1745, and received her education in a school kept by her sisters at Bristol, in the conduct of which she was herself afterwards associated. From childhood she cultivated the poetic muse, and, in 1773, her first publication, 'The Search after Happiness, a pastoral drama,' made its appearance. It was followed in the succeeding year by 'The Inflexible Captive, a Tragedy,' and 'Sir Eldred of the Bower, and the Bleeding Rock, two poetical tales.' At this period she was introduced to Garrick, Dr. Johnson, Burke, Reynolds, and other eminent literary men in London. Two tragedies by her, 'Percy' and 'The Fatal Falsehood,' were acted at Covent Garden with a certain amount of success; but the serious bent of her mind soon led her to abandon writing for the stage and to devote herself to the composition of religious and moral works. With this object in view, she retired, in 1786, to Barley Wood, a cottage delightfully situated in a village near Bristol; and subsequently, in 1828, to Clifton, where she closed her long and useful life 7 Sept., 1833. In addition to the above-mentioned works, Mrs. More wrote 'Sacred Dramas,' 1782; 'Florio, a tale for fine gentlemen and fine ladies; and the Bas Bleu, or Conversation, two poems,' 1786; 'Slavery, a poem,' 1786; 'Thoughts on the Importance of the Manners of the Great to General Society,' 1791; 'Estimate of the Religion of the Fashionable World,' a series of 'Tales for the Common People,' one of the most popular of which was 'The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain'; 'Strictures on the Modern System of Female Education,' 1799; 'Hints towards forming the Character of a young Princess,' a piece which had reference to the education of the Princess Charlotte; 'Cælebs in Search of a Wife,' 1809; 'Practical Piety'; 'Christian Morals'; and 'Essay on the Character and Writings of St. Paul.' It is said that Mrs. More realised by her writings £30,000, one-third of which sum she bequeathed to various charitable institutions. A complete edition of her works, in 11 vols. 12mo., appeared in 1853; and her Correspondence with Zachary Macaulay in 1860.

MORE, HENRY, a jesuit, born in Essex 1586. He entered the novitiate at Louvain 1614, studied afterwards at Valladolid and Liege, and took the four vows 1622. For six years he acted as provincial of his order; was rector of the college of St. Omer 1649-52, and again 1657-60; and died at Watten, near St. Omer, 8 Dec., 1661. His principal works are 'Vita et Doctrina Christi Domini in Meditationes quotidianas per annum digesta,' 12mo., Antwerp, 1649; 'Historia Missionis Anglicanæ Societatis Jesu,' folio, St. Omer, 1660. The latter valuable work brings the history of the mission down to the year 1635. His brother, Thomas More, also became a jesuit, and died at Ghent 2 Jan., 1623, aged 36. He translated into English William Warford's 'Brevis Institutio,' 1617; and Floyd's 'Deus et Rex,' 1620.—Dodd; Oliver.

MORE, HENRY, D.D., was born at Grantham, Lincolnshire, 12 Oct., 1614. He was educated at Eton, and next at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he applied himself to the study of the Platonic philosophy, took his degrees in divinity, and obtained a fellowship. In 1640 he published 'Psycho-Zoia, or the Life of the Soul,' a philosophical poem, which he republished, with other pieces, 1647. He refused the highest ecclesiastical preferments; and though he accepted a prebendal stall in the church of Gloucester, he soon resigned it in favour of Dr. Fowler. Died 1 Sept., 1687. His philosophical and theological works have been published in 2 vols. folio.

MORE, HENRY, a dissenting minister, was a native of Plymouth. He was educated at Exeter, and afterwards became pastor of a congregation at Liskeard, in Cornwall, where he officiated many years, and died 1802. He published, 'An elegiac poem, amidst the ruins of an abbey,' which, with other pieces, was reprinted, with some account of the author, by Dr. Aikin.

MORE, JOHN. See CROSS.

MORE, SIR THOMAS, chancellor of England, was the son of Sir John More, one of the judges of the King's Bench, and born in Milk Street, London, 1480. He was educated in the family of Cardinal Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, who was wont to say 'More will one day prove a marvellous man.' In 1497 he went to Canterbury College, now Christ Church, Oxford, and, in 1499, became a student of Lincoln's Inn. At the age of twenty-one he obtained a seat in Parliament, where he opposed a subsidy demanded by Henry VII. with such spirit, as to incur the resentment of the king, who avenged himself on the judge his father, by causing him to be fined and imprisoned. When admitted to the bar, More delivered a lecture in the church of St. Lawrence-Jewry, on part of St. Augustine's works, and the reputation he thereby acquired procured him to be chosen law-reader in Furnival's Inn. In 1508 he was made judge of the sheriff's court, and a justice of peace. In 1518 he published his 'Utopia,' a political romance; and about this time the friendship began between him and Erasmus, which lasted through life. Such talents could not pass unnoticed at the court of Henry VIII., who delighted in the conversation of More, and conferred upon him the honour of knighthood; besides which he made him treasurer of the exchequer. Sir Thomas assisted the monarch in his book against Luther, and he afterwards defended it in a very able treatise. In 1523 he was chosen speaker of the House of Commons, at the instance of Wolsey, who was, however, much exasperated by his frustrating an oppressive subsidy; and said, on that occasion, 'Would to God, you had been at Rome, Mr. More, when I made you Speaker.' To which the other replied, 'Your grace not offended, so would I too.' Yet in 1527 they were joined in a mission to France, and, upon More's return, he was made chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. In 1530 he succeeded Wolsey as lord chancellor, which office he discharged for three years with scrupulous integrity. Finding, however, that the affair of the king's divorce, to which he was adverse, would involve him in difficulties, he resigned the seals, and thereby provoked the anger of Henry, who was still more irritated by his refusal to attend the coronation of Anne Boleyn. An attempt was made to implicate him in the practices of Elizabeth Barton; and, though this failed, he was committed to the Tower, for refusing the oath of supremacy. After an imprisonment of twelve months, he was brought to his trial in the court of King's Bench, where, notwithstanding his eloquent defence, he was found guilty of treason, and sentenced to be beheaded. His behaviour, in the interval, corresponded with the uniform tenor of his life; and, on July 6, 1535, he ascended the scaffold, with his characteristic pleasantry, saying to the lieutenant of the Tower, 'I pray you, see me safe up; and as for my coming down, you may let me shift for myself.' In the same spirit, when he laid his head on the block, he told the executioner to wait till he had removed his beard, 'For that,' said he, 'hath committed no treason.' Thus fell this illustrious Englishman, whose learning and virtue entitled him to a better fate. The English works of Sir Thomas More were published together 1557, and his Latin ones at Basle 1663. By his first wife he had four children, three daughters and one son, who all survived him. The latter was also condemned, for refusing the oath of supremacy; but received a pardon, and died not long afterwards. Margaret, the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas, married William Roper, Esq., of Iltham, in Kent. She was a most accomplished woman in Latin and Greek, as well as in music, mathematics, and other sciences. She died 1544. Her husband wrote 'The Life of Sir Thomas More,' printed in 1716. Mary, the daughter of Mrs. Roper, became one of the gentlewomen of the bedchamber in the reign of queen Mary. She translated into Latin Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History, and into English, part of her grandfather's exposition of the Passion.

MOREAU, JACOB NICHOLAS, historiographer of France, was born at St. Florentin 20 Dec. 1717; and died at Chambourci, near St. Germain, 29 June, 1803.

MOREAU, JEAN MICHEL, an eminent French designer and engraver, born at Paris 1741; died 30 Sept., 1814.

MOREAU, JEAN VICTOR, a French general, born at Morlaix, in Brittany, 11 Aug., 1763. In his eighteenth year he enlisted in a regiment, but was brought back to Rennes to study the law, for which profession he was destined. In 1789 a company of Breton volunteers being formed, in consequence of the Revolution, Moreau was appointed their commander, and in that capacity joined the army of the North. He soon acquired military distinction, and being befriended by Pichegru, was appointed commander-in-chief of the army of the Rhine, when he commenced that course of arduous operations which terminated in the celebrated retreat from the extremity of Germany to the French frontier. Meantime, a conspiracy was entered into by Pichegru, which Moreau discovered; but the reluctance with which he accused his friend to the Directory, excited suspicions at Paris, and finding he could not explain himself satisfactorily he begged leave to retire, which was granted. In 1798, however, he was sent to command the army of Italy, where, after some brilliant successes, he was obliged to give way to the Russian force under Suwarrow, and he managed another retreat with great skill. On the return of Bonaparte from Egypt, he at first cordially supported him; but a coldness and jealousy ensued, notwithstanding which the first consul entrusted him with the command of the armies of the Danube and the Rhine. The passage of these rivers, with the battles of Moeckirch, Eupen, Memmingen, Biberach, Hochstedt, Nedenheim, and others, followed, ending with the decisive victory of Hohenlinden, which induced the Austrians to ask for peace. On his return to Paris Moreau married a young lady of birth and fortune, whose ambition, with that of her connections, is supposed to have fomented the discontent which soon afterwards induced him to implicate himself in the conspiracy of Pichegru and Georges. For this he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment; but was allowed, in lieu of imprisonment, to seek an asylum in the United States, on condition that he would not return to France without permission. On his arrival in America he bought a fine estate near Morinville, at the foot of the Delaware, where he remained some years in peace, until, listening to the invitation of the allies, he embarked for Europe, and reaching Göttenburg proceeded to Prague. Here he found the emperors of Austria and Russia with the king of Prussia, all of whom received him with great cordiality, and he was induced to aid in the direction of the allied armies against his own country. His resolution proved fatal to himself, for at the battle of Dresden (27 Aug., 1813), he received a wound in each leg, and amputation of both brought on his death 1 Sept., 1813.

MOREL, GUILLAUME, a learned printer at Paris, was born in Normandy 1505. He succeeded Turnebus as director of the royal press 1555, and directed his labours chiefly to editions of Greek authors. He also wrote Commentaries on Cicero de Finibus; and compiled a Greek, Latin, and French Dictionary. He died 1564. Frédéric Morel was also king's printer at Paris, and royal interpreter for the Greek and Latin languages. He died 17 July, 1583, leaving a son Frédéric, who conducted the printing-office, and was the most learned of the family. He translated from the Greek, and published a number of authors, chiefly ecclesiastical, with annotations. He died 27 June, 1630. His brother, Claude, became king's printer in 1602, and died 16 Nov., 1626, while engaged on an edition of Athanasius. Charles Morel, another son of Frédéric, was also king's printer, but resigned the office in 1639 to his brother, Gille, who published an edition of Aristotle, in 4 vols. folio; and the Bibliotheca Patrum, in 17 vols. Gille died about 1650.

MORELL, ANDREW, a Swiss numismatist, born at Berné 9 June, 1646; died 11 April, 1703.

MORELL, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Eton 18 March, 1703. He was educated on the foundation at Eton, and elected thence to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship (D.D. 1743). The only preferments he enjoyed were the rectory of Buckland, Herts, and the chaplainship of the garrison at Portsmouth. He also held the curacies of Kew and Twickenham. Died 19 Feb., 1784. Dr. Morell selected the words for Handel's oratorios, and assisted Hogarth in his Analysis of Beauty. His own works are, Poems on Divine Subjects; The Canterbury Tales of Chaucer modernized; Euripidis Hecuba, Orestes et Phenissæ, 2 vols.; Thesaurus Græcæ Poeseos, of which valuable work a new edition was printed by Dr. Maltby in 1815; The Prometheus of Æschylus; Sacred Annals, or the Life of Christ as recorded by the Evangelists; an Abridgment of Ainsworth's Dictionary; a translation of Seneca's Epistles, 2 vols.; Notes on Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding, 4to., &c.

MORELLI, COSIMO, an Italian architect, born at Imola 1732; died 1812.

MORELLI, JAMES, an Italian ecclesiastic and bibliographer, for many years keeper of the library of St. Mark at Venice, was born in that city 14 April, 1745, and died 5 May, 1819.

MORERI, LOUIS, a French divine, born at Bargesmont, in Provence, 25 March, 1643. He studied in the College of Jesuits at Aix, and on entering into orders settled at Lyons, where he laid the plan of the 'Historical Dictionary,' the first edition of which came out in 1674, in one volume folio. The author died at Paris 10 July, 1680, and the year following his Dictionary was republished in 2 vols. The subsequent editions have been numerous, the last being in 10 vols. folio, 1759. Moreri's other works are The Lives of the Saints; and A Collection of French Poems.

MORES, EDWARD ROWE, D.D., F.S.A., was born at Tunstall, Kent, 13 Jan., 1730. He received his education at Queen's College, Oxford, where, in conjunction with Mr. Romaine, he edited Calasio's Concordance, 4 vols. In 1748 Mr. Mores printed 'Nomina et Insignia gentilitia Nobilium Equitumque sub Edvardo primo rege Militantium;' also a new edition of MONYUS Halicarnassensis 'De Claris Rhetoribus.' He took the degree of M.A. in 1753, soon after which he went abroad, and obtained the degree of D.D. in some foreign university. Died 28 Nov., 1778. The Equitable Society for Assurance on Lives originated with him, and he published several pamphlets on the subject. His 'History and Antiquities of Tunstall, in Kent,' was published by Mr. Nichols.

MORETO, AUGUSTIN, a Spanish dramatist, who died at Toledo, 28 Oct., 1669.

MORGAGNI, JOHN BAPTIST, a physician and anatomist, born at Forlì, in Romagna, 25 Feb., 1682. He studied under Valsalva, at Bologna, and in 1711 became professor of medicine at Padua. In 1715 he was appointed to the first anatomical professorship, in which situation he continued till his death 6 Dec., 1771. An edition of his works was printed in 1765, in 5 vols. folio.

MORGAN, GEORGE CADOGAN, was born at Bridgend, Glamorganshire, 1754, and studied first at Oxford and next in a dissenting academy at Hoxton. After officiating to congregations at Norwich and Yarmouth he became (1796) a colleague of his uncle, Dr. Price, at Hackney, and a tutor in the college there. However, he entirely laid aside his clerical character and functions some time before his death, which happened at Southend, Middlesex, 17 Nov., 1798. He published 'Lectures on Electricity,' 2 vols., 1795; and the outline of an essay on education.

MORGAN, SIR HENRY, a celebrated commander of buccaners, was born in Wales about 1637. He took Portobello and Panama from the Spaniards, and for several years continued to enrich himself and his followers by the success of his marauding expeditions against that nation. After amassing a large fortune he was appointed governor of Jamaica by Charles II., who conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. Died 1690.

MORGAN, SYDNEY, Lady, was born in Dublin about 1780, being the daughter of a musician named Owenson. At fourteen years of age she produced a volume of miscellaneous verses, and afterwards a series of songs set to Irish airs. When only sixteen she had published two novels, which, although favourably spoken of at the time, produced no very important effects; but 'The Wild Irish Girl' (1801) at once raised her to a conspicuous position in the world of letters. This book passed through seven editions, and introduced the authoress into the highest ranks of society, where her sprightly conversation and engaging manners made her a universal favourite. She first met Sir T. C. Morgan at the house of the marquis of Abercorn, and they were soon afterwards married (1811). Her next publication of importance was 'France,' a critical review of the social state of that country rather than a book of travels. Of her many subsequent works we have only room to mention 'Italy;' 'Florence MacCarthy;' 'The O'Briens and the O'Flahertys;' 'Life and Times of Salyator Rosa;' 'Woman and her Master;' 'Passages from my Autobiography.' The last work was published only a few months before her death, which occurred in Lowndes Square, London, 13 April, 1859. Mr. William John Fitzpatrick published in 1860 a memoir of 'Lady Morgan; her career, literary and personal, with a glimpse of her friends, and a word to her calumniators.'

MORGAN, SYLVANUS, an arms-painter of London, author of one of the rarest of heraldic works, entitled 'The Sphere of Gentry; deduced from the Principles of Nature, an Historical and Genealogical Work of Arms and Blazon,' 1661. Born about 1620; died 27 March, 1693.

MORGAN, SIR THOMAS CHARLES, M.D., husband of the well-known Lady Morgan, was born in London about 1783, and educated at Eton, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He was nominated a commissioner of Irish fisheries, and during twenty years' residence in the sister isle, devoted a large portion of his time to the cause of Catholic Emancipation, which he advocated in the public journals and periodicals. He died in London 28 Aug., 1843. His works are 'Sketches of the Philosophy of Life,' 1818; 'Sketches of the Philosophy of Morals,' 1822; and, in collaboration with his wife, 'The Book without a Name,' 2 vols., 1841.

MORGAN, WILLIAM, D.D., a native of Carnarvonshire, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and afterwards became chaplain to Archbishop Whitgift, who had a high opinion of his abilities, and encouraged him to undertake the translation of the Bible into Welsh, which task he accomplished, his version being published in 1588. He was appointed bishop of Llandaff 1595; translated to St. Asaph 1601; and died 10 Sept., 1604. —Athen. Cantab.

MORGAN, WILLIAM, F.R.S., a Welshman, who, for more than fifty-six years, was actuary to the Equitable Assurance Society. He was a nephew of the celebrated Dr. Price; and his mathematical and scientific attainments were of the highest order. He wrote 'The Doctrine of Annuities and Assurances of Lives;' 'Examination of Dr. Crawford's Theory of Heat and Combustion;' several treatises on financial subjects; and 'Memoirs of the Rev. R. Price,' 1815. Died May, 1833.

MORGHEN, RAFFAELLO SANZIO, an Italian engraver, born 19 June, 1758, at Florence, where he died 8 April, 1833.

MORHOF, DANIEL GEORGE, was born at Wismar, in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, 6 Feb., 1639. After studying at Stettin and Rostock he came to England, and resided at Oxford. In 1666 he became professor of poetry at Rostock, where he published his 'Lessus in Ciconiam Adrianum, carmen juvenile et ludicrum,' which was followed by his 'Dissertatio de entusiasmo et furore poetico.' In 1665 he accepted the professorship of poetry and eloquence at Kiel. In 1670 he again visited England, and contracted an intimacy with Mr. Boyle, some of whose works he translated into Latin. In 1673 he was made professor of history at Kiel, and in 1680 librarian of the university. Died 30 July, 1691. His principal work is entitled 'Polyhistor, sive de Notitia Auctorum et Rerum Commentarii,' the best edition of which is that of 1747, 2 vols. 4to. In 1725 was published by Moesheim a dissertation of Morhof's treatise 'De pura dictione Latina.'

MORIEK, JAMES, an English traveller and novelist, born about 1780; died at Brighton 30 March, 1849. Entering the diplomatic service, he became secretary of embassy in Persia, where he made a long stay, and devoted his leisure to a thorough study of the manners and customs of the people. The knowledge thus acquired he turned to good account in his works, the titles of which are, 'A Journey through Persia, Armenia, and Asia Minor, to Constantinople, in 1808-9. In which is included some account of his Majesty's Mission under Sir H. Jones to the court of the King of Persia,' 1812; 'A Second Journey through Persia to Constantinople,' 1818; 'Adventures of Hajji Baba of Is-pahan,' 1824; 'Adventures of Hajji Baba in England,' 1828; 'Zohrab the Hostage,' 1832; 'Ayeshah, the Maid of Kars,' 1834; 'Abel Allnutt, a novel,' 1837; 'The Banished; a Swabian historical tale,' 1839; 'The Mirza,' 1841; and 'Martin Poutron; a Frenchman in London,' in 1841.

MORIN, ETIENNE, a French protestant divine and biblical scholar, born at Caen 1625. He became professor of the oriental languages at Amsterdam; and died 5 May, 1700.

MORIN, JEAN, a French priest of the Oratory, born at Blois 1591; died at Paris 28 Feb., 1659. He distinguished himself by an edition of the LXX.; had a share in the French Polyglott; and published many erudite works on ecclesiastical history.

MORIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French physician and astrologer, born 1583; died 1656.

MORIN, LOUIS, a French physician and botanist, born at Mans, 1635; died 1 March, 1715.

MORIN, PIERRE, was born at Paris 1531. After living with Paul Manutius as corrector of his press, he taught Greek and cosmography at Vicenza; from whence he removed to Ferrara, and next to Rome, where he was employed on an edition of the Septuagint, and another of the Vulgate. Died 1608.

MORISON, JAMES, was a native of Perth. His father was a bookseller, and brought up the son to the same business, which he carried on first at Leith and afterwards at Perth, where he died 1609, aged 47. Mr. Morison was for some time a member of the society of Glassites, from whom he seceded and founded a distinct sect, of which he became the minister. His works are 'Bibliotheca Sacra; or a Dictionary of the Bible;' and an 'Introductory Key to the Scriptures,' the object of which is to prove that the Gospel was preached in Paradise.

MORISON, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., a dissenting minister, died at Brompton 13 June, 1859, aged 68. He was pastor of the Congregational church at Chelsea; for thirty-two years editor of the 'Evangelical Magazine;' and author of numerous religious works.

MORISON, ROBERT, M.D., a botanist, born at Aberdeen 1620. After studying at the university of his native place, with a view to the medical profession, he entered the royal army, and was so severely wounded in the battle fought near the bridge of Dee, that he went to France, where he took his doctor's degree at Angers. He was also appointed superintendent of the garden of the duke of Orleans at Blois, of which he published a catalogue. At the Restoration he came to England and was made king's physician, a fellow of the Royal College, regius professor of botany, and keeper of the physic garden at Oxford. Dr. Morison died in London 10 Nov., 1683. His greatest work is entitled 'Plantarum historia universalis Oxoniensis,' folio, 1680; to which Jacob Bobalt added another volume 1690.

MORLAND, GEORGE, an English painter, born 1764. He was the son of a very indifferent artist, who kept him constantly employed in such works as would obtain a ready sale, till, at length, the youth, tired of this drudgery, and conscious of his powers, set up for himself. Unfortunately, however, from the manner in which he had been bred, he contracted irregular habits, so that most of his pictures were painted under circumstances of distress, and many of them in places where he was confined for debt. He fell a victim to intemperance 29 Oct., 1804; and his wife, who was of a similar disposition, died a day or two after him. His subjects were landscapes, views on the sea coast, stables, farm-yards, and animals, executed with admirable spirit and accuracy.

MORLAND, Sir SAMUEL, was the son of a clergyman, and born at Sulhamsted, in Berkshire, about 1625. He was educated at Winchester School, and at Magdalen College, Cambridge. In 1653 he accompanied Whitelock on his embassy to Sweden, and at his return became assistant to secretary Thurlow, through whose interest he was sent by Cromwell to remonstrate with the duke of Savoy, on his conduct in persecuting the protestants of Piedmont. On his return, in 1658, he received public thanks for his service, and printed the same year a work, entitled 'The History of the Evangelical Churches of the Valleys of Piedmont.' He was now much employed in the affairs of state, in which capacity he rendered eminent service to Charles II., particularly in detecting a plot, laid by Cromwell, to entrap the exiled family into the kingdom for their destruction. For this he was created a baronet at the Restoration, and made one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber. But though he was in great favour with the king, and obtained some grants, he was generally poor, owing to his expensive projects. He invented the speaking-trumpet, the fire-engine, a capstan to heave up anchors, and, above all, the steam-engine, of which last he wrote a description in French. He was also the inventor of two instruments for arithmetical operations, on which he wrote a treatise, printed 1673. Died 30 Dec., 1695.

MORLEY, GEORGE, D.D., was born in London 1597, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christchurch, Oxford. In 1641 Charles I. gave him a canonry of Christchurch. By an order of Parliament, however, he was deprived of his preferment; on which he left England, and remained abroad till the Restoration, when he was made dean of Christ Church, and, in 1660, bishop of Worcester. He was next appointed dean of the Chapel Royal, and in 1662 translated to Winchester, to which see he was a great benefactor, particularly by the purchase of a palace at Chelsea. He also founded five scholarships in Pembroke College, and gave large sums to various charitable uses. The bishop published some controversial tracts, and sermons. Died 29 Oct., 1684.

MORLEY, THOMAS, Mus. B., an English composer, who died about 1604, was a pupil of Bird's, and one of the gentlemen of Queen Elizabeth's chapel. He acquired more celebrity by his treatise, 'A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Musick' (1597) than by his performance or compositions, although he was eminent for both.

MORNAY, PHILIPPE DE, sieur du Plessis-Marlay, was born at Bubi, in the Vexin-Français, 1540. His mother, being attached to the Protestant faith, carefully instilled the same principles into the mind of her son, who, in 1567, entered the army; but having the misfortune to break his leg, he quitted the service, and, on his recovery, went to Germany, with the intention of studying the law. He next travelled into Italy, and, on his return, visited England. In 1576 he again took up arms on the side of the Protestants, and succeeded in bringing the royal party to terms of conciliation. After this he went to the court of Navarre, where Henry IV. made him a privy-councillor. Du Plessis continued to act for the king till Henry changed his religion, and then he resigned his situation at Court. After publishing some works against the Catholic Church, he printed a treatise on the Eucharist (1598), which occasioned a conference between him and Du Perron, in 1600, at Fontainebleau, where Du Plessis conducted himself so ably as to obtain from his admirers the name of the 'Protestant Pope.' In 1607 came out his work, entitled 'The Mystery of Iniquity, or the History of the Papacy;' but his chief performance is his treatise 'Upon the Truth of the Christian Religion.' Died 11 Nov., 1623.

MORNY, CHARLES AUGUSTE LOUIS JOSEPH, Duc DE, president of the French Legislative Body, and one of the most staunch supporters of Napoleon III.; died at Paris 10 March, 1865, aged 53.

MOROSINI, FRANCESCO, a native of Venice, distinguished by his valour against the Turks, at the siege of Candia. He maintained himself against 120,000 men, with hardly a fourth part of the number; but though allured by promises from the enemy, he continued firm to his country; and when the place surrendered, he was treated with great humanity. His countrymen, though for a moment displeased, appointed him procurator of St. Mark, and enabled him again to attack the Turks, whom he defeated near the Dardanelles. He was in 1688 elected doge, and died 6 Jan., 1694.

MORRIS, CHARLES, a captain in the Life Guards, author of many convivial songs, which were once highly popular, died at Dorking, Surrey, 11 July, 1838, aged 92. His 'Lyra Urbanica, or Social Effusions,' were published in 2 vols. 8vo., 1840.

MORRIS, LEWIS, a Welsh antiquary, hydrographer, and poet, was born in the Isle of Anglesey 1702. He made a survey of the coast of Wales, by order of the Board of Admiralty; and at his death, on 11 April, 1765, he left above eighty volumes of manuscripts to the Welsh charity school in Gray's Inn Lane. Some of his poems have been printed. His brother, Richard Morris, who died 1779, superintended the printing of the Welsh Bible.

MORRIS, MORRIS DRAKE, was born at Cambridge, educated at Trinity College, in that university, and died about 1720. He left in MS. 'Lives of the most illustrious men educated in the university of Cambridge' (MSS. Harl. 7170, 7177).

MORRISON, Sir RICHARD, president of the Institute of Architects of Ireland, died in Dublin 31 Oct., 1840, aged 82.

MORRISON, ROBERT, D.D., F.R.S., an eminent Chinese scholar, was born of Scotch parents at Morpeth, Northumberland, 5 Jan., 1782, and at the proper age apprenticed to his father, a last and boot-tree maker, who was a man of religious tendencies and an elder of a Presbyterian church.

MORTIER.

Subsequently he studied theology under a Presbyterian minister at Newcastle, to which town his father removed, and in 1803 was admitted into the dissenting academy at Hoxton. Two years later he placed himself under the patronage of the London Missionary Society, who sent him to their seminary at Gosport, where he commenced the study of the Chinese language. In 1807 he was 'set apart' to the work of a missionary. Proceeding to Canton the same year, he there continued the study of the language with such success that he was appointed secretary and interpreter to the East India Company's factory. The great object of his life was the translation of the Holy Scriptures into Chinese. The Acts of the Apostles appeared in 1811; the New Testament in 1813; and the Old Testament (translated partly by Dr. Milne) in 1819; but the greatest monument of his literary fame is the Chinese Dictionary, printed at Macao, in 6 vols. 4to., 1815-23. He was also the author of some minor works on the Chinese language, and of a memoir of Dr. Milne. Mr. Morrison accompanied Lord Amherst's embassy to Peking (1817) as interpreter, and the same year was honoured with the degree of D.D. by the university of Glasgow. In 1824 he paid a visit to England, where he met with a reception worthy of his talents and his services. He returned to China 1826, and died at Canton 1 August 1834. 'Memoirs of his Life and Labours, by Mrs. Morrison, with critical Notices of his Chinese works by S. Kidd,' appeared at London in 2 vols., 1830.

MORTIER, EDOUARD ADOLPHE CASIMIR JOSEPH, duke of Treviso, a peer and marshal of France, born at Cateau-Cambrésis 13 Feb., 1768. Having enrolled himself as a volunteer 1791, he distinguished himself in all the campaigns of the republic; made himself master of Hanover, 1803; subdued Hesse Cassel 1806; then passed into Spain 1810-11; took part in the expedition to Russia, and contributed materially in gaining the battle of Lutzen. He shared with Marmont the command of Paris, 1814. At the Restoration he was created a peer of France, but his refusal to sit among the judges of Marshal Ney lost him this dignity, which, however, he afterwards recovered. In 1814 he was appointed secretary of war, and president of the council. He was killed by Fieschi's 'infernal machine' while on horseback by the side of Louis Philippe, at Paris, 28 July, 1835.

MORTIMER, JOHN HAMILTON, an historical painter, born at Eastbourne, Sussex, Nov., 1739; died 4 Feb. 1779. His best pieces are that of King John granting Magna Charta to the Barons, and the battle of Agincourt. He delighted, however, chiefly in the representation of horrible subjects, as incantations and banditti.

MORTIMER, THOMAS, an English author, born in London 1730; died Dec., 1809. He wrote the 'British Plutarch,' 6 vols, 1762; a 'Dictionary of Trade and Commerce;' and other useful works.

MORTON, CHARLES, M.D., F.R.S. was born in Westmoreland 1716. He practised first at Kendal, from whence he removed to London, where he became a licentiate of the College of Physicians, secretary of the Royal Society, and principal librarian of the British Museum. In 1768 he was appointed one of the superintendents of the publication of the Doomsday Book, but never executed the task. Died 10 Feb., 1799. He published an improved edition of Bernard's 'Table of Alphabets;' Bulstrode Whitelock's Journal of his Emassy to Sweden; and papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

MORTON, JAMES DOUGLAS, EARL OF, regent of Scotland, was born at Dalkeith 1530, and educated at Paris under the famous Buchanan. He returned to Scotland 1554, and greatly promoted the Reformation; but on being accused of taking part in the murder of Lord Darnley he fled to England. He was afterwards constituted chancellor of Scotland, and in 1574 succeeded the Earl of Mar as regent, which office he resigned in 1579. He was condemned for high treason 1581, and beheaded on the 3rd of June, in that year, by a machine called the 'Maiden,' very similar to the modern guillotine.

MORTON, JAMES DOUGLAS, EARL OF, and also earl of Aberdeen, was born at Edinburgh 1707. At the age of twenty-six he established a philosophical society at Edinburgh. The Royal Society of London elected him their president 1733, and on the death of the earl of Macclesfield he was chosen an associate of the French Academy of Sciences. He evinced an ardent zeal for the sciences, and was an eminent patron of merit. He was well versed in natural and experimental philosophy, and particularly devoted to astronomical observations. Died 1768.

MORTON, JOHN, an English cardinal, was born 1410, at Bere, Dorsetshire. He received his education at Balliol College, Oxford, after which he became principal of Peckwater Inn. In 1473 he was appointed master of the rolls, in which situation he adhered faithfully to Henry VI., notwithstanding which Edward IV. made him bishop of Ely, and lord chancellor, in 1478. Richard III., however, committed him to the custody of the duke of Buckingham, who confined him in his castle of Brecknock, from whence he escaped to Ely, and next to the Continent, where he joined the earl of Richmond. In 1486 he was made archbishop of Canterbury, the next year lord chancellor, and in 1493 created a cardinal. In 1494 he was elected chancellor of Oxford. Died 15 Sept., 1500. Among other acts of public benefit performed by him was that of cutting the drain from Peterborough to Wisbech.

MORTON, RICHARD, M.D., was born in Suffolk about 1635, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, after which he entered into orders, and became chaplain of New College. At the Restoration he gave up that profession, and took his degrees in physic, which he practised with reputation in London till his death 30 Aug., 1698. His works are 'Phthisiologia, seu Exercitationes de Phthisi,' which was translated into English; 'Pyretologia, seu Exercitationes de Morbis universalibus acutis,' 2 vols.

MORTON, SAMUEL GEORGE, M.D., an American physician and ethnologist, born 26 Jan., 1799, at Philadelphia, where he died 15 May, 1851.

MORTON, THOMAS, an English prelate, born at York 20 March, 1564. He became fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, where he read lectures on logic, and on leaving the university, was appointed chaplain to the earl of Huntingdon, lord president of the north. In 1602 he accompanied the English embassy to Germany and Denmark. In 1606 he took his doctor's degree, and soon after was made dean of Gloucester. In 1609 he was removed to the deanery of Winchester; in 1615 made bishop of Chester; in 1618 translated to Lichfield, and in 1632 to Durham. He suffered many hardships in the Rebellion, and died at Easton Mauduit, Northamptonshire, 22 Sept., 1659. The bishop wrote several books against the Catholics and Nonconformists.

MORTON, THOMAS, a popular dramatist, born at Durham, 1764; died 28 March, 1838. He studied at Lincoln's Inn, but abandoned the legal profession in order to devote himself to writing for the stage, in which branch of literature he achieved great success. The titles of his principal pieces are subjoined: 'The Children in the Wood'; 'The way to get married'; 'A Cure for the Heartache'; 'Speed the Plough'; 'Secrets worth Knowing'; 'The Blind Girl'; 'The School of Reform'; 'Town and Country'; 'A Roland for an Oliver'; 'The Invincibles.'

MORYSIN, SIR RICHARD, an eminent statesman, was probably born in Hertfordshire, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to Cambridge; after which he studied the law, and became a civilian. Henry VIII. employed him as his ambassador to the Court of Charles V., and in the next reign he was knighted, made one of the commissioners for visiting the university of Oxford, and sent on a mission to Brussels. On the death of Edward VI. he went to Strasburg, where he died 17 March, 1555-56. He wrote a defence of Henry VIII. against Cochläus; and some tracts in English, exhorting his countrymen to loyalty.—Athen. Cantab.

MORYSON, FYNES, born in Lincolnshire 1566. He was educated at Cambridge, but created master of arts at Oxford, after which he went on his travels. On his return he settled in Ireland, where his brother was vice-president of Munster. He died about 1614. His works are—'An Itinerary, containing ten years' travels through the two divisions of Germany,' &c., 1617; 'An History of Ireland,' 2 vols., 1735.

MOSCHELES, IGNATIUS, a musical composer, was born in May, 1794, at Prague, of which city his father was a well-to-do merchant, and began to show his love and talent for music so decidedly that his father had him taught the pianoforte at the early age of ten years. After appearing as an infant prodigy for several years in his native city, Moscheles went to Vienna in 1808, where Albrechtsberger became his master, and Salieri, the conductor of the Imperial Opera, his friend and adviser. It was during this period that he made the acquaintance of Beethoven, then in the zenith of his fame, and under his direction he published in 1814 the first selection from 'Fidelio' for the pianoforte. Clementi, who may be said to have been the first eminent pianist, also took a strong liking for the youth, and his influence told not a little on the musical style of Moscheles, who about 1820 gave a series of concerts in Germany, Holland, France, and England, and then settled for a longer period in London in 1825, being appointed to a professorship at the Academy of Music. He was a wonderful improvisatore, and one of his grandest efforts is said to have been on the occasion of the last concert given by Karl Maria von Weber, in May, 1826, he being then in his thirty-second year. It was mainly through his exertions that the Philharmonic Society voted a liberal donation to Beethoven, who, however, died almost before the much-needed assistance reached him, and whose last dictated letter (March, 1827) was one of thanks to Moscheles. After having assumed the direction of the Philharmonic Concerts, a post which he held for fifteen years, Moscheles yielded to the oft-repeated solicitations of his friend Mendelssohn, and, together with him, undertook the leadership of the then newly-instituted Conservatoire at Leipsic. This was in 1846, and he held the post until his death, which occurred at Leipsic to March, 1870.

MOSCHUS, of Syracuse, a Greek bucolic poet, who, with Theocritus and Bion, lived in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Of his works, four Idyls, and a few smaller pieces, have been preserved.

MOSELEY, BENJAMIN, a physician, was born in Essex, and bred to the business of a surgeon and apothecary, which he practised several years at Kingston, in Jamaica. On his return to Europe he took his doctor's degree at Leyden, and by the interest of Lord Mulgrave obtained the situation of physician to Chelsea Hospital. He gained some credit by 'Observations on the Dysentery of the West Indies'; and 'Two Treatises on Coffee and Sugar'; but disgraced himself by his virulence against the vaccine inoculation. He died 15 June, 1819.

MOSER, GEORGE MICHAEL, an artist, born at Schaffhausen, in Switzerland, 1705. He was a chaser in gold, which business he carried on in England with great reputation; but he was also an excellent enameller, and in 1768 was appointed keeper of the Royal Academy. He died 24 Jan., 1783. His daughter Mary, who married a gentleman named Lloyd, was a famous flower painter, and the only woman, with the exception of Angelina Kauffmann, who was ever elected a member of the Royal Academy. She died 1819.

MOSHEIM, JOHN LAURENCE VON, a German protestant divine, born at Lubeck 9 Oct., 1694. At the invitation of the king of Denmark, he went to Copenhagen; whence he was called by the duke of Brunswick to a professorship at Helmstadt, where he was also appointed ecclesiastical counsellor, and superintendent of the schools. In 1747 he was appointed professor of theology at Göttingen, and chancellor of the university. He died there 9 Sept., 1755. Mosheim wrote no fewer than one hundred and sixty-one works, the best known of which is his 'Ecclesiastical History.' It was originally composed in Latin, but has been translated into English and French.

MOSS, CHARLES, D.D., an Anglican prelate, was the nephew of Dr. Moss, dean of Ely. He received his education at Caius College, Cambridge, and became successively archdeacon of Colchester, prebendary of Salisbury, rector of St. Andrew Undershaft, and of St. George, Hanover Square. In 1766 he was consecrated bishop of St. David's, whence, in 1774, he was translated to Bath and Wells. Died 13 April, 1802. Besides some sermons, and a charge, he published a tract, entitled 'The Evidence of the Resurrection cleared from the Exceptions of a late Pamphlet.' This was a vindication of Bishop Sherlock's 'Trial of the Witnesses against Chubb.' Dr. Moss also preached the Boyle's Lecture. His son Charles became bishop of Oxford 1807, and died 1811.

MOSS, ROBERT, D.D., was born at Gillingham, Norfolk, about 1666. He became fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and in 1698 was chosen preacher to the society of Gray's Inn. The following year he was appointed assistant at St. James's, Westminster, and in 1705 he was created doctor in divinity at Cambridge. In 1708 he became lecturer of St. Lawrence Jewry, and in 1712 deau of Ely. Died 26 March, 1720. His sermons were published in 8 vols; besides which he wrote some Latin and English poems.

MOSSOM, ROBERT, a clergyman who suffered much in the civil wars; but in 1666 he was made dean of Christ Church, Dublin; with which he held the bishopric of Derry, where he died 21 Dec., 1679. His works are—The Preacher's Tripartite; Variæ colloquendi Formulæ, 1659; Narrative of George Wild, Bishop of Derry; Zion's Prospect in its first view.

MOSTYN, FRANCIS, an English Catholic prelate, was appointed vicar apostolic of the northern district, and consecrated bishop of Abydos 21 Dec., 1840. Died 11 Aug., 1847.

MOTHE LE VAYER. See LA MOTHE.

MOTHERWELL, WILLIAM, a poet and journalist, born in Glasgow 1798. When a youth he obtained a situation in the Sheriff Clerk's office at Paisley, where he remained till within a few years of his death, which occurred at Glasgow 1 Nov., 1835. In 1828 he became editor of the 'Paisley Magazine' and 'Paisley Advertiser,' and, after having conducted the latter journal about two years, he was offered the editorship of the 'Glasgow Courier,' which he accepted, and continued to conduct that journal till his decease. Mr. Motherwell published, in 1827, a collection of ballads under the title of 'Minstrelsy, Ancient and Modern;' and, in 1833, a collected edition of his own delightful poems, lyrical and narrative. He also superintended an edition of Burns.

MOTTE. See LAMOTTE.

MOTTEUX, PETER ANTHONY, was born 19 Feb., 1660, at Rouen, in Normandy. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he came to England, where he carried on trade in Leadenhall Street. He was found dead in a brothel in the Strand 19 Feb., 1717-18. He published translations of Don Quixote and Rabelais; besides several poems and dramatic pieces.

MOTTLEY, JOHN, an English dramatic writer, was the son of Colonel Mottley, who followed James II. to France, and was killed at the battle of Turin in 1706. This son, who was born 1692, received his education at St. Martin's Library School; after which he obtained a place in the Excise office, but was obliged to resign it 1720. He then had recourse to his pen for a support, and wrote five dramatic pieces; also the 'Life of the Czar Peter the Great,' and 'The History of Catharine of Russia.' He was the real author of Joe Miller's Jests; and died 30 Oct., 1750.

MOUFET. See MUFFET.

MOULE, THOMAS, a topographical and heraldical writer, was for forty-four years inspector of the 'blind letters' at the General Post Office, and he also held for many years the situation of chamber-keeper in the lord chamberlain's department, which gave him an official residence in St. James's Palace, where he died 14 June, 1851, aged 67. His chief work is entitled 'Bibliotheca Heraldica Magnæ Britanniæ. An Analytical Catalogue of Books on Genealogy, Heraldry, Nobility, Knighthood, and Ceremonies,' 1822. A copy, with numerous MS. notes and a volume of MS. additions, is in the British Museum. Mr. Moule also published 'The English Counties delineated,' 2 vols., 1837; and 'The Heraldry of Fish,' 1842.

MOULIN, CHARLES DU, a French lawyer, born at Paris, 1500; died 1566. He at one time left the communion of the Church of Rome, but rejoined it towards the end of his life. The best edition of his legal works, which are highly esteemed, is that of Paris, 5 vols., 1681.

MOULIN, PIERRE DU, a Protestant divine, born at Vexin 18 Oct., 1568. He studied first at Sedan, and next at Cambridge, from whence he removed to a professorship of philosophy at Leyden, where also he taught Greek; but in 1599 he returned to France, and became minister at Charenton. On the murder of Henry IV., Du Moulin charged the guilt of that detestable deed upon the Jesuits, which produced a contest between him and Father Cotton. In 1615 he visited England on the invitation of James I., who gave him a prebend of Canterbury; and the university of Cambridge conferred on him the degree of doctor in divinity. After his return to France he officiated as professor of divinity at Sedan, where he died 10 March, 1658. His works are numerous.

MOULIN, PIERRE DU, son of the preceding, was born at Paris about 1600. He took his doctor's degree in divinity at Leyden, after which he came to England, and was made prebendary of Canterbury, where he died 1684. His works are 'The Peace of the Soul,' which was translated into English by Dr. Scrope; 'Defence of the Protestant Religion;' 'Regii Sanguinis clamor ad Cælum;' this was published in the name of Alexander More, and was answered by Milton. Louis du Moulin, brother of the preceding, became a violent Independent, and wrote some abusive books against episcopacy, but retracted them before his death, 20 Oct., 1683.

MOUNTAGU, or MONTAGUE, RICHARD, a learned prelate, born 1578, at Dorney, Bucks, and educated at Eton School, and King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He assisted Sir Henry Savile in his edition of St. Chrysostom, and in 1613 became fellow of Eton College, and rector of Stamford Rivers, Essex. He was also promoted to the deanery of Hereford, which he resigned for the archdeaconry. In 1620 he was made canon of Windsor. In 1621 he published a sermon and tract on the Invocation of Saints, which brought him under a suspicion of being inclined to Catholicism. The same year he attacked Selden on Tithes, and in 1622 he published an examination of the Annals of Baronius. Soon after this he had a controversy with some Catholic divines, in the management of which he gave great offence to the Calvinists, who complained of his books to Parliament as containing Armenian errors. In consequence of this, he was called to the bar of the House of Commons, and obliged to give security for his appearance. Though the king was displeased at this conduct, the House took up the matter again, and passed several resolutions against the positions advanced by Montagu, who was made bishop of Chichester, and afterwards of Norwich, where he died 13 April, 1641. His other works are—Appello Casarem; Originum Ecclesiasticarum libri duo; Theanthropicum, seu de vita Jesu Christi; The Acts and Monuments of the Church before Christ; Versio et Notæ in Photii epistolæ.

MOUNTAIGNE, or MOUNTAIN, GEORGE, educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, became successively bishop of Lincoln, London, and Durham. He was enthroned archbishop of York 24 Oct., 1628, and died on 6 Nov. in the same year, 'being,' says Fuller 'scarcely warm in his church ere he was cold in his coffin.'

MOUNTAIN.

MOUNTAIN, GEORGE JEHOSEPHAT, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1810), and in 1820 obtained the degree of D.D. at Lambeth. He became Protestant bishop of Quebec 1836, and died 8 Jan., 1863.

MOUNTAIN, JACOB, the first Protestant bishop of Quebec, was born in Norfolk 1750, and educated at the grammar school of Norwich, whence he proceeded to Caius College, Cambridge, graduating B.A. 1774; M.A. 1777; D.D. 1793. In the last-mentioned year he was nominated by his intimate friend Mr. Pitt to the see of Quebec, where he erected a cathedral church. He was also active in promoting missions, building churches, and establishing schools. Previous to his advancement he held the livings of Holbeach, Lincolnshire, and Buckden, Huntingdonshire; and also a prebend in the cathedral of Lincoln. He died at Marchmont House, near Quebec, 16 June, 1825.

MOUNTFORT, WILLIAM, an actor and dramatist, born in Staffordshire 1650. He was an admirable performer both in tragedy and comedy, particularly in love-scenes, to which excellence he owed his death; for, being suspected of enjoying the favours of Mrs. Bracegirdle, one Captain Hill, who paid his addresses to that actress, contrived, with the assistance of Lord Mohun, to murder Mountfort, in the Strand, 1692. The perpetrator of this deed fled from justice, and, though Mohun was acquitted, he afterwards fell in a duel with the duke of Hamilton. Mountfort wrote six plays, which are now obsolete.

MOUNTJOY, WILLIAM BLOUNT, Lord, K.G., an English nobleman, who was much employed in public affairs during the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. He was a liberal patron of learned men, and numbered among his friends Erasmus and the illustrious Sir Thomas More. Died 1534.

MOYLE, WALTER, was born in Cornwall 1672. He studied at Oxford, and next in the Temple, but having an independent fortune, he did not follow the law. He died at his seat in Cornwall 9 June, 1721. His works, consisting of an Essay on the miracle of the Thundering Legion; an Essay on the Lacedemonian Government; and another on the Roman Constitution, and Letters, were printed in 3 vols., 1726-27.

MOZART, JOHN CHRYSOSTOM WOLFGANG THEOPHILUS, a musician, was the son of Leopold Mozart, vice-chapel-master, and composer to the prince archbishop of Salzburg, and born there 27 Jan., 1756. At the age of seven years he exhibited his powers at Paris, from whence he came to London, and then proceeded to Italy, astonishing the lovers of music by his knowledge of every branch of the science. In 1778 he was appointed concert-master to the prince of Salzburg; but he resigned the place in 1780, and went to Vienna, where he became chapel-master to the emperor. He died 5 Dec., 1791. He composed a number of serious and comic operas. The principal are 'Mitridate,' 1770; 'La Finta Giardiniera,' 1773; 'Idomeneus,' 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail,' 1782; 'Le Nozze di Figaro,' 1786; 'Schauspiel Direktor,' 1786; 'Il Don Giovanni,' his chef d'œuvre, 1787; 'Così fan Tutte,' 1790; 'Die Zauberflöte,' 1791; and 'La Clemenza di Tito,' 1791. His other compositions are extremely numerous and greatly admired, particularly the famous 'Requiem Mass,' which he composed on his death-bed.

MUDFORD, WILLIAM, journalist and author, born 8 Jan., 1782, in Half Moon Street, Piccadilly; died to March, 1848. In early life, Mr. Mudford filled the post of assistant-secretary to the duke of Kent; but a strong love of literature, and some favourable notices of a 'Critical Examination of the Writings of Dr. Johnson,' which he published before he was out of his teens, induced him to forego the prospects of advancement before him, and he resigned his situation with the duke, in order to devote himself exclusively to authorship. Among his earlier works were the 'Critical Examination,' above-mentioned, a philosophical romance, entitled 'Nubila'; some books of travels; a 'Life of Cumberland,' 2 vols.; a critical edition of the British Novelists; and many translations from the French and German. He also wrote a 'Historical account of the battle of Waterloo,' a fable, full of valuable information, in the composition of which he received considerable information from the duke of Wellington, to whom the work was dedicated. After the experience of many years, Mr. Mudford, becoming convinced that it is hard to live by literature alone, began to study politics, with a view to journalism. An enthusiastic admiration of the genius of Edmund Burke gave a strong Conservative or old Whig bias to his opinions, which he preserved through life. After a brief connection, as a Parliamentary reporter, with the 'Morning Chronicle,' he obtained the appointment of editor of the 'Courier,' an evening journal, which, under his management, acquired a high degree of popularity and influence, and maintained, upon no unequal terms, a contest for rivalry with the 'Times.' Mr. Mudford warmly supported Mr. Canning during the intrigues that followed upon his acceding to the office of prime minister; and he was in frequent communication with him, until his untimely and lamented death threw the political world into confusion. After that event, a majority of the proprietors of the 'Courier' decided that its principles should undergo considerable modifications; and Mr. Mudford, refusing to take any share in what he considered an act of political apostasy, publicly withdrew from his connection with the paper, in a letter that attracted considerable attention. The change was not a fortunate one for the proprietors. The 'Courier' steadily declined in circulation, and finally expired of inanition, after several unsuccessful efforts had been made to induce Mr. Mudford to resume the editorship of it. Meanwhile, he had the misfortune to lose, at a stroke, by injudicious investments during the speculative mania, the not inconsiderable fortune that his industry had acquired; and, at forty, he had to begin the world again, in company with a young wife and a family that continued, for many years, to increase with great regularity. The habits of application which he had formed, as a young man, now stood him in good stead; and though his health no longer allowed of his sitting up three nights in the week, his pen was never idle during the day. At the invitation of the Conservative party in East Kent, he became the editor, and subsequently the proprietor, of the 'Kentish Observer.' To Blackwood's Magazine he was a regular contributor, and it not infrequently happened that a single number of that periodical has contained three articles from his pen—a tale, a review, and a political paper. The series of 'First and Last' tales, and the contributions under the title of 'The Silent Member,' were especially popular at the time of their appearance. During this period he published two works of fiction, 'Stephen Dugard,' and 'The five nights at St. Alban's,' the latter, a remarkable story of necromancy, which, in a cheap form, still finds readers. Upon the death of Mr. Theodore Hook, the vacant editorship of the 'John Bull' was offered to Mr. Mudge, and accepted by him. It obliged him to remove his residence to London, but he maintained his connection with the 'Kentish Observer,' and had to make, in consequence, constant journeys between Canterbury and the metropolis, at a time when travelling was neither so pleasant nor so expeditious as it is now. But the consciousness of his own daily declining health, and the imperative claims of the young family that he knew he must soon leave behind him, rendered it necessary that he should toil incessantly, though, as he used to say, with one foot already in the grave. A vigorous article on the French revolution, written long after midnight, which appeared in the 'John Bull' of 5 March, was the last effort of his pen. Three days afterwards he sank under an accumulation of maladies, which nothing but a constitution of extraordinary strength had enabled him to resist so long.

MUDFORD.

MUDGE, ZACHARY, was born at Exeter, where he was educated for the ministry, among the dissenters; whom he left, and took orders in the church of England. In 1716 he became master of the grammar-school at Bideford, in Devonshire, where he remained till 1736, when he was elected to the rectory of St. Andrew, Plymouth, with which he held a prebend in the cathedral of Exeter. Died 3 April, 1769. Mr. Mudge published a visitation sermon, and a volume of discourses. He left four sons, of whom Thomas, the second, was born at Exeter in Sept., 1715, and died 14 Nov., 1794. He served his apprenticeship to Graham, the watchmaker, and became equally eminent in that line with his master; and for his timekeepers, which were adjudged superior to any that had ever been invented, he obtained a parliamentary grant of £3000. Dr. John Mudge, the fourth son of Mr. Zachary Mudge, was born at Bideford, and became a physician at Plymouth. He published 'A Dissertation on the inoculated Smallpox;' and a 'Treatise on the Catarrhus Cough.' He had also a mechanical genius, and received the Copley medal from the Royal Society for improvements in the specula of reflecting telescopes. He died 1792. His son, Major-General William Mudge, was employed on a trigonometrical survey of Great Britain, a considerable portion of which he completed before his death, in 1821. He was a fellow of the Royal Society, in whose Transactions are some of his papers on the great work in which he was engaged.

MUDIE, ROBERT, was born in Forfarshire 28 June, 1777, and was entirely self-educated. In 1802 he was appointed Gaelic professor and teacher of drawing in the Inverness Academy. Some years afterwards he became drawing-master in the Dundee High School; but in 1820 he removed to London, where he was engaged as a reporter on the 'Morning Chronicle.' After settling in the metropolis his time was incessantly devoted to his literary labours; and so great was his industry that he composed more than eighty volumes, including 'Modern Athens,' a description of Edinburgh, 1824; 'Modern Babylon,' a description of London, 4 vols., 1824; 'The Feathered Tribes of the British Islands,' 2 vols., 1833; 'History of Hampshire and the Channel Islands,' 3 vols., 1838. Died 29 April, 1842.

MUFFET, or MOUFET, THOMAS, a physician, born in London, and educated at Cambridge, after which he travelled over great part of Europe, being created M.D. at Basle. On his return to this country he practised his profession with great reputation. He represented Wilton in the parliament of 1597. The latter part of his life was spent at Bulbridge, near Wilton, in the capacity of retainer to the Earl of Pembroke, from whom he received an annual pension. Died before 25 June, 1605. The best known of his works are 'The Theater of Insects;' and 'Healths Improvement: or rules comprising and discovering the nature, method, and manner of preparing all sorts of Food used in this Nation.'—Athen. Cantab.

MUGGLETON, LONOWICK, the founder of a sect of English enthusiasts, was born 1607. He was bred to the trade of a tailor, and seems to have persuaded himself, as well as a number of ignorant followers, that he was divinely inspired to foretell future events; that he was entrusted with the keys of heaven and of hell; and that none could obtain admittance into heaven unless he opened the gates. At length the magistrates took cognizance of his conduct, and he was sentenced to the pillory and six months' imprisonment, while his writings were burnt by the common hangman. Died 14 March, 1697-8. The last edition of his works appeared in 3 vols., 1832. The sect of Muggletonians still exists, though its members are very few in number.

MULCASTER, RICHARD, was born at Carlisle, in or about 1533, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed, first to King's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1553), and next to Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1577). In 1561 he was appointed master of Merchant Taylor's School, which situation he held till 1586. In 1596 he became master of St. Paul's School, where he remained twelve years. He was likewise rector of Stamford Rivers, Essex. Died 15 April, 1611. He wrote Latin poems; 'Positions wherein those primitive circumstances he examined which are necessary for the training up of children, either for skill in their booke, or health in their bodie,' 1581; 'The First Part of the Elementarie which entreateth chiefele of the right Writing of our English Tung,' 1582; and 'Catechismus Paulinus, in usum Scholæ Paulinæ conscriptus,' 1599-1601, &c.—Athen. Cantab., iii. 40.

MULGRAVE, CONSTANTINE JOHN PHIPPS, LORD, a naval commander, was born 30 May, 1734; succeeded to his Irish title 1775; was created an English peer 1784; died at Liège 10 Oct., 1792. He entered very young into the naval service, under the auspices of his uncle the earl of Bristol. In 1773 he was placed in command of a north-east Arctic exploring expedition; and he returned the same year, after having reached lat. 80° 40' N., beyond which an impenetrable field of ice stretched as far as could be seen. He published a narrative of the expedition in the following year. Lord Mulgrave was an ardent politician, and was appointed one of the commissioners of the Admiralty under Lord North's administration.

MÖLLER, ANDREW, a German divine and orientalist, born in Pomerania 1630; died at Stettin 26 Nov., 1694. Such was his fame for oriental learning that, according to Moréri, he was invited to England, to assist in Walton's Polyglott.

MÜLLER, CHARLES OTTFRIED, a celebrated classical scholar, born at Brieg, in Prussian Silesia, 28 Aug., 1797. He established his reputation by a dissertation on the island of Ægina; and shortly after its publication he was, although only twenty years old, appointed to a professorship in the university of Göttingen. In 1839 he set out on a tour through Italy and Greece; but, unfortunately, while making excavations at Delphi, he was attacked by fever, of which he died at Athens 1 Aug., 1840. Of his numerous works the following have been translated into English: 'The History and Antiquities of the Doric Race'; 'History of the Literature of Ancient Greece'; 'Introduction to a Scientific System of Mythology'; 'Ancient Art and its Remains, or a Manual of the Archaeology of Art'; and 'Dissertations on the Eumenides of Æschylus.'

MÜLLER, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK VON, an engraver, born at Stuttgart 1783; died at Pirna, near Dresden, 3 May, 1816. His masterpiece is an engraving of the Madonna of St. Sixtus.

MÜLLER, GERAARD FREDERICK, was born in Westphalia, 1705. He settled in Russia, and accompanied Gmelin and De l'Isle in a tour through Siberia, which occupied them ten years. In 1747 he was appointed historiographer of Russia; in 1754 secretary of the Academy of Sciences; and in 1766 keeper of the archives. Died 4 Oct., 1783. His principal work is 'A Collection of Russian Histories.'

MÜLLER, JOHN. See RËGIOMONTANUS.

MÜLLER, JOHN VON, a Swiss historian, born at Schaffhouse 3 Jan., 1752; died 29 May, 1809. An English translation of his 'Universal History' appeared at London, in 3 vols., 1818.

MÜLLER, JOHN GOTTHARD VON, an engraver, born 1747, near Stuttgart, where he died 14 March, 1830.

MÜLLER, LOUIS CHRISTIAN, a Prussian engineer, born 1735; died 12 June, 1804. By his labours and writings he contributed largely to the improvement of the military art.

MÜLLER, OTHO FREDERICK, a celebrated Danish naturalist, born at Copenhagen 11 March, 1730; died 26 Dec., 1784.

MÜLLER, WILLIAM JOHN, a painter, born at Bristol 1812. His father, who was curator of the museum in that city, was a native of Germany, and published some scientific works. After studying art under his fellow-townsman, Mr. J. B. Pyne, he made the tour of Germany, Switzerland, and Italy, and returning to Bristol, pursued his profession there, though with very partial success. During a visit to Greece and Egypt in 1838 he enriched his portfolio with a large number of sketches. The following year he settled in London, where his pictures were purchased with avidity; and in 1841 he published his beautiful 'Picturesque Sketches of the Age of Francis I.' Subsequently he accompanied, at his own expense, the government expedition to Lycia (1843), and brought back some fine sketches, which, to his bitter disappointment, were badly hung at the Royal Academy exhibition. Indeed, it is probable that this disappointment hastened his death, which occurred 8 Sept., 1845. Among the best of his pictures are 'Athens from the Road to Athens,' 'Memnon, or Ruins at Gornou, in Egypt, at Sunset,' 'Turkish Burial Ground,' and 'Xanthian Tent Scene.'

MUNDAY.

MULREADY, WILLIAM, a painter, was born at Ennis, co. Clare, 1786, and in his fifteenth year was entered as a student in the Royal Academy. By 1813 his reputation as an artist was established, and his 'Idle Boys,' in 1815, secured his election as A.R.A. The year following he exhibited 'The Fight Interrupted,' and was elected R.A. 'Lending a Bite,' 'The Wolf and the Lamb,' 'The Careless Messenger,' and a variety of other works, produced steadily year by year, from 1819, marked the maturing of his powers, and displayed the genial humour of his style. 'The First Voyage' appeared in 1833, and was the forerunner of a series of pictures evincing a rare combination of humour and pathos. 'The Last In,' 'The Traveller,' 'The Sonnet,' 'First Love,' 'The Artist's Study,' and 'The Ford,' may be taken as instances of the development of his serio-comic genius. The last-named picture was produced in 1842; but two years previously Mr. Mulready had prepared a series of twenty illustrations of the 'Vicar of Wakefield,' which were engraved on wood by Thomson, and are usually considered unique specimens of this kind of art. The admiration of the public for these designs led to the reproduction of three of them in oil, viz., 'The Whistonian Controversy,' 'Burchell and Sophia Haymaking,' and 'Choosing the Wedding Gown.' The works of Mr. Mulready were collected and exhibited by the Society of Arts in 1848. His 'Blackheath Park,' in 1852, was the last picture he exhibited. Mr. Mulready died at Bayswater 7 July, 1863. There are some choice specimens of this artist's style in the National Gallery, and in the Sheepshanks collection at South Kensington.

MUMFORD, JAMES, was born in Norfolk 1666, became a Jesuit, served on the English mission for twenty-six years, and died 9 March, 1666. He was a learned controversialist, and published 'A Remembrance for the Living to pray for the Dead,' 12mo., St. Omer, 1641; 'De Misericordiâ Fidelibus Defunctis exhibendâ,' 12mo., Liege, 1647; 'A Defence of St. Gregory's Dialogues'; 'The Question of Questions, which rightly resolved resolves all our Questions in Religion,' published under the name of Optatus Ductor, 4to., Ghent, 1658, 12mo., London, 1686-7, 8vo., Glasgow, 1841; 'Catholicke Scripturist,' Ghent, 1662; London, 1686; Edinburgh, 1689, 1707.—Dodd; Otter.

MUNCER, or MUNTZER, THOMAS, a German fanatic, born at Stolberg, in the Hartz Forest. He studied at Württemberg, after which he became a preacher at Stolberg, where he connected himself with Nicholas Stork, an Anabaptist, who pretended to inspiration. Muncer fell into the same delusion, and began to collect disciples, on the principle of greater purity of faith and manners. This spirit, however, soon broke out into acts of outrage, for not only churches and monasteries, but castles, were plundered by these reformers, who maintained that the Almighty had ordained perfect equality among men, and that rank and riches were contrary to the law of nature. Muncer was beheaded at Mulhausen 1525.

MUNDAY, ANTHONY, a dramatic poet, born 1553. He turned Catholic, but afterwards went back to the Protestant religion, though he was far from doing honour to any communion. He betrayed Campian, and published an account of his conduct on that occasion. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that he became servant to the earl of Oxford, and a messenger to the queen. He was the author of the City Pageants; and died 10 Aug., 1633. Munday edited and enlarged Stowe's Survey of London, 1618.

MUNDEN, JOSEPH SHEPHERD, a famous comedian, was the son of a poulterer in Brooks's Market, Holborn, where he was born 1758. He was originally a lawyer's clerk; but, taking a fancy to the stage, he performed in various provincial theatres, and on 2 Dec., 1790, made his first appearance at Covent Garden, where his success in low comedy characters was marvellous. In 1797 and 1798 he played at the Haymarket; but his summer vacations were chiefly filled up by engagements in the provinces. He remained at Covent Garden till 1813, when he joined the Drury Lane company. There he remained till 1824, when he took his leave of the stage. He died in London 6 Feb., 1832.

MUNDINUS, an Italian physician and anatomist, died at Bologna 1326.

MUNNICH, BURCHARD CHRISTOPHER, Count DE, was born at New Huntorf, in Oldenburg, 1683. After distinguishing himself in the German wars, he entered the Russian service, where he rose to the rank of marshal; but in 1741 the Empress Elizabeth condemned him to perpetual exile in Siberia. He was recalled at the accession of Peter III.; and died 16 Oct., 1767. Some of his works on fortification, and other subjects, have been published.

MUNOZ, JOHN BAPTIST, a Spanish historian, born at Muscros, near Valencia, 1745; died 19 July, 1799.

MUNRO, Sir THOMAS, a general in the service of the East India Company, born 1760. He was sent to India at an early age, and went through the campaign against Hyder Ali (1780-4). After being promoted to the rank of lieutenant (1786), he applied himself to the study of Persian and Hindustani. In 1790, when Tipoo Saib rose in rebellion, he took part in the hostilities which ensued, and was present at the siege of Bangalore. In 1792 he was employed as assistant to Capt. Read in the revenue department, being specially charged with the district of Barramahli. At a later period he was sent to Canara to organise the affairs of that new possession, which had come into the possession of the Company during the second war against Tipoo Saib. He was constituted governor-general of Madras 1820, and for his services in the Burman war was created a baronet. It was in contemplation to nominate him governor-general of India, when he suddenly died 6 July, 1827. His Life was published in 1830 by the Rev. G. R. Gleig.

MUNSTER, ERNEST FREDERICK HERBERT, Count DE, a Hanoverian statesman, born 1766; died 11 May, 1839.

MUNSTER, GEORGE FITZCLARENCE, EARL OF, a natural son of the duke of Clarence (afterwards William IV.) by Mrs. Jordan, was born 1794, and committed suicide 20 March, 1843. He was at one period aide-de-camp to the governor-general of India, and published an interesting Journal of a route across India through Egypt to England, 1819.

MUNSTER, SEBASTIAN, a German divine, born at Ingelheim 1489. He received his education at Heidelberg, after which he entered the order of Cordeliers; but left them to join Luther, though he avoided the controversies then in agitation.

MURATORI.

He settled at Basle, where he succeeded Pelicanus in the Hebrew professorship, and died 1552. He published a Latin version of the Bible, from the Hebrew, with notes; also a 'Universal Cosmography'; a Treatise on Dialling; a Latin Translation of Josephus; and several mathematical works.

MURAT, HENRIETTE JULIE DE CASTELNAU, comtesse DE, a French authoress, born 1670; died 24 Sept., 1716. She wrote in a pleasing style 'Les Lutrins de Kermosi'; 'Contes des Fes'; 'Voyage de Campagne', &c.

MURAT, JOACHIM, king of Naples under Bonaparte, was the son of an innkeeper at Cahors, in France, and born 25 March, 1771. When a boy he escaped from the college of Toulouse, where he had been placed with a view to the ecclesiastical profession. He was afterwards a common chasseur, and deserted; served in the constitutional guard of Louis XVI.; then entered the 12th regiment of mounted chasseurs; rose by his zealous Jacobinism to the rank of lieutenant-colonel; was afterwards removed as a terrorist; and remained without employment till his fate placed him in connection with Bonaparte, whom he accompanied as an aide-de-camp to Italy (1796). He followed his leader to Egypt, and distinguished himself at Mount Tabor, during the Syrian expedition. On his return to France he was made commander of the consular guard, and soon after married the sister of the First Consul, whose favours he profusely experienced. He commanded the cavalry at the battle of Marengo; and in 1802 he governed the Cisalpine Republic, with the title of general. In Jan., 1804, he was appointed governor of Paris, with the title of general-in-chief, and he directed the military force when Bonaparte was proclaimed emperor. Shortly afterwards he was created a marshal of the empire; and, being invested with the grand duchy of Berg, he assumed the state of a sovereign prince, and figured as such in two campaigns, particularly at the battle of Jena. He commanded the cavalry at Eylau and at Friedland; and in 1808 he was sent with an army to Spain, when he effected the temporary submission of that country. On the 1st August in the same year he was proclaimed king of the Two Sicilies, and he had reigned peaceably at Naples for four years, when he was called upon to join Bonaparte in his Russian expedition. He commanded the cavalry of the French army; and after the defeat of Smoleasko, he imitated the example of his leader and left the army for Naples. In the campaign of 1813 he joined the French, but after the loss of the battle of Leipsic he endeavoured to make terms with the enemies of the emperor. He entered into separate negotiations with England and Austria, but his vacillating conduct at length proved his ruin, and he was precipitated from his throne. He then resided for some time at Plaisance, near Toulon, till after the battle of Waterloo, when he took refuge in Corsica. Thence, with a few followers, he sailed to Italy, in the hope of recovering his crown; but he was made prisoner soon after landing, and conducted to the castle of Pizzo, where he was shot 13 Oct., 1815.

MURATORI, LOUIS ANTHONY, called the Montfaucon of Italy, was born at Vignola, in the duchy of Modena, 21 Oct., 1672. He obtained some eccleastical preferment, most part of the revenues of which he bestowed in charity. He became keeper of the Ambrosian library at Milan; and afterwards of the archives of the house of Este, at Modena, where he was librarian to the grand duke. Died 23 Jan., 1750. His principal works are—Anecdota Latina, 4 vols.; Anecdota Græca; Della perfetta Poesia Italiana, 2 vols.; Del l'antichità Estense et Italiana, 2 vols.; Liturgia Romana vetus, 2 vols.; Antiquitates Italicæ mediæ ævi, 6 vols. fol., and 17 vols. 4to.; Recum Italicarum Scriptores, 25 vols. fol.; Novus Thesaurus veterum Inscriptionum, 4 vols.; Dissertazioni sopra la antichità Italiana, 3 vols.; Annali d'Italia del principis dell' era volgare, sino all' anno 1749, 12 vols. There is an edition of his works in 43 vols. 8vo.; and another in 36 vols. 4to.

MURDOCH, JOHN, a Scotch prelate of the Roman communion, was born at Wellheads, in the Enzie, 11 Nov., 1796; nominated coadjutor to Bishop Scott 1830; consecrated bishop of Castabala 1833; succeeded Bishop Scott as third vicar apostolic of the western district of Scotland 1846; and died at Glasgow 15 Dec., 1865.

MURE, WILLIAM, a classical scholar, born at Caldwell, Ayrshire, 9 July, 1799. After studying at Westminster School and the university of Edinburgh, he completed his education in Germany, where he imbibed that taste for criticism which inspired him in after years and made his name known far and wide among the scholars of modern Europe. He was M.P. for Renfrewshire 1846-55; lord rector of the university of Glasgow during the year 1847-8; and for many years colonel-commandant of the Renfrewshire militia. His death took place at Kensington 1 April, 1860. He wrote 'Remarks on the Chronology of the Egyptian Dynasties,' 1829; 'Dissertation on the Calendar of the Zodiac of Ancient Egypt,' 1832; and 'Journal of a Tour in Greece,' 1842; but his greatest work, unfortunately left unfinished, is 'A Critical History of the Language and Literature of Ancient Greece.' Col. Mure also edited 'The Caldwell Papers,' 3 vols., for the Maitland Club.

MURETUS, MARK ANTHONY, a learned critic, born at Muret, near Limoges, 1526. He studied at Agen under the elder Scaliger; after which he taught philosophy and civil law at Paris, where he published his poems 1552. About this time he was thrown into prison, on a serious charge, and with some difficulty effected his release. He then went to Toulouse, which he was obliged to quit abruptly on a similar account. He then passed into Italy, and found a patron in the Cardinal D'Este, whom he accompanied to Paris, where he read lectures on Aristotle's Ethics, with great applause. He next entered into orders, and died at Rome 1585. His works were published at Verona, in 1727, in 3 vols. 8vo.; and again at Leyden in 1780, 4 vols. 8vo. He edited several of the classics, which he illustrated with notes.

MURILLO, BARTOLOMEO ESTEBAN, a Spanish painter, was born at Seville in 1618. He was the disciple of Juan del Castillo, whose favourite subjects were markets and fairs; but Murillo, on going to Madrid, studied the works of Titian, Rubens, and Vandyc, with such success, that on his return to Seville he was employed to adorn most of the churches. Died 3 April, 1685.

MURPHY, ARTHUR, was born at Clooniquin, Roscommon, 1727. He lost his father, who was master of a vessel, early in life; but his mother gave him a good education at St. Omer, whence he returned, in 1744, and was placed in the counting-house of his uncle at Cork, which he soon quitted; and, in 1751, came to London, where he began a paper, called 'The Gray's Inn Journal.' He also made an attempt on the stage, but failed; after which he turned his attention to the law, and was called to the bar in 1762. His chief dependence, however, was upon his literary exertions, and few dramatists have been more successful. His 'Grecian Daughter,' a tragedy; 'All in the Wrong,' and 'The Way to keep Him,' comedies; with the smaller pieces of 'The Citizen,' the 'Old Maid,' and 'Three Weeks after Marriage,' long held their places among the popular plays. Mr. Murphy was likewise a political writer, in a paper called 'The Test;' and 'The Auditor,' in favour of Lord Bute against Wilkes. He also wrote 'An Essay on the Life of Fielding,' for an edition of that author's works. In 1792 he published 'An Essay on the Life and Genius of Dr. Johnson;' and the year following came out his translation of Tacitus, in 4 vols. In 1798 he printed a dramatic poem, entitled 'Arminius;' and afterwards a 'Life of Garrick.' Lord Chancellor Loughborough appointed him a commissioner of bankrupts; and he also obtained a pension from the crown. He died 18 June, 1805; and after his death was published his translation of Sallust.

MURPHY, EDWARD, Catholic bishop of Kildare, was in 1724 translated to the archiepiscopal see of Dublin, and died 1729.

MURPHY, FRANCIS, D.D., a native of the county of Meath, in Ireland, was educated at Maynooth, and for some time officiated as a priest in England. Going to Australia, he was made vicar-general of the diocese of Sydney; consecrated bishop of Adelaide 1845; and died June, 1858.

MURPHY, JAMES CAVANAH, a traveller and antiquary, born at Cork about 1760; died 1816. In 1783 he accompanied his friend William Conyngnam to Portugal, where he remained till 1790. On his return he published 'Plans, Elevations, Sections, and Views of the Church of Batalha,' fol., Lond., 1792-5; 'Travels in Portugal,' 1795, translated into French and German; and 'A general View of the State of Portugal,' 1797. He went to Spain 1802, resided there seven years, and on his return to England published 'The Arabian Antiquities of Spain,' fol., Lond., 1813-15; and a 'History of the Mahometan Empire in Spain,' 1816.

MURPHY, PATRICK, the celebrated 'weather prophet,' died in London 1 Dec., 1847.

MURPHY, ROBERT, was the son of a shoemaker at Mallow, in Ireland, where he was born 1806. Being sent to Cambridge, he graduated in arts, and was elected a fellow of Caius College; but, unhappily, he was obliged to leave the university (1832) in consequence of his dissipated conduct. After spending some time in Ireland he settled in London 1836, and two years later was appointed examiner in mathematics and natural philosophy in University College, London. Died 12 March, 1843. Mr. Murphy was author of 'Elementary Principles of the Theories of Electricity, Heat, and Molecular Actions,' 1833; and of a 'Treatise on the Theory of Algebraical Equations,' 1839.

MURRAY, ALEXANDER, D.D., born at Dunkiterick, in the stewardry of Kirkcudbright, 22 Oct., 1775. At the early age of ten he was sent out to get his living as a shepherd, and the education imparted to him by others was of the most meagre kind; but by extraordinary application he contrived to acquire a knowledge of Hebrew, French, Latin, and Greek. The fame of his acquirements procured him admission into the university of Edinburgh (1794), and the progress of his studies continued unabated. He devoted much attention to oriental literature, particularly the Abyssinian language—a circumstance which pre-eminently qualified him to superintend a new edition of Bruce's Travels. In 1806 he became assistant to Dr. Muirhead, minister of Urr, whom he soon afterwards succeeded in the pastoral office; but in 1812 he was called from thence to fill the chair of oriental languages at Edinburgh. He died shortly afterwards on 15 April, 1813. His 'History of the European Languages' was printed in 2 vols., 1823.

MURRAY, DANIEL, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, born at Sheepwalk, near Arklow, co. Wicklow, 18 April, 1768. After an academical training at Salamanca he was ordained priest, and returned to his native country 1790. He was stationed at Arklow till 1798; and in 1809, having been appointed coadjutor to Dr. Troy, archbishop of Dublin, he was consecrated archbishop of Hierapolis. At the instance of his brother prelates he paid a visit, in the following year, to Paris, and succeeded in obtaining from the French government the restoration of the property of religious establishments connected with Ireland. He rendered himself conspicuous, between 1810 and 1816, by his determined opposition to the proposed government veto on the appointment of Catholic bishops in Ireland, and he was delegated to accompany Dr. Milner to Rome, in order to protest against all compromise on this subject; and they carried their point, for the veto was eventually condemned by the Holy See (1814). On 11 May, 1823, Dr. Troy having departed this life, his mitre devolved upon Dr. Murray, who received the pallium from Rome 19 Oct., 1824. The archbishop was one of the foremost in the struggle for Catholic emancipation, and in other political movements. He was appointed by the government a commissioner under the Bequests Act of 1844, and in 1851 an education commissioner. He even consented to act as a visitor of the Queen's colleges; but when the proceedings of the synod of Thurles were ratified by the Sovereign Pontiff (1852), Dr. Murray withdrew from all connection with those 'godless' institutions. Died 26 Feb., 1852. Dr. Murray, who was emphatically a scholar and a gentleman, published some works on political and polemical subjects. His 'Sermons' appeared at Dublin, in 2 vols. 8vo., 1859.

MURRAY, Sir GEORGE, a general and politician, born in Perthshire 6 Feb., 1772; died in London 28 July, 1846. In literature he is known as the editor of 'Marlborough's Dispatches.'

MURRAY, HUGH, a geographical writer, born at North Berwick, in East Lothian, 1779. At an early age he was placed as clerk in the excise office at Edinburgh, where he had ample leisure to devote to literary pursuits. He published numerous works, including fifteen volumes of the Edinburgh Cabinet Library; but his principal production is the 'Encyclopaedia of Geography,' 1834. Died in London 4 March, 1846.

MURRAY, JAMES STUART, EARL OF, natural son of James V. of Scotland, was born about 1533. He proved the ingratitudo of his heart by his barbarous conduct towards the unhappy Mary, against whom he excited the nobles of the kingdom. On the disgrace of Mary he was appointed regent during the minority of the young king 1567. He was shot 23 Jan., 1570, at Linlithgow, by Hamilton, whose wife he had seduced.

MURRAY, JOHN, M.D., a native of Scotland, received his education at Edinburgh, where he rose to eminence as a lecturer on natural philosophy, chemistry, the materia medica, and pharmacy. He died in that city 22 July, 1820. Dr. Murray wrote 'Elements of Chemistry'; 'Elements of Materia Medica and Pharmacy'; 'A System of Chemistry'; 'A System of Materia Medica and Pharmacy.'

MURRAY, JOHN, an English publisher, born in London 27 Nov., 1778; died 27 June, 1843.

MURRAY, LINDLEY, a grammarian, was the son of an American merchant, and born at Swatara, Pennsylvania, 1745. He practised as a barrister at New York till the breaking out of the war with England, when he retired to Islip, in Long Island, and acquired a handsome fortune by mercantile pursuits. On the establishment of American independence he came to this country, and settled at Holdgate, near York, where he wrote a variety of useful works, of which the best known is his celebrated 'English Grammar,' first published 1795. Among his other works are, 'English Exercises and Key,' 'English Reader,' and 'Spelling Book'; and a tract entitled 'The Power of Religion on the Mind.' Died 16 Feb., 1826.

MURRAY, WILLIAM H., a Scotch actor and theatrical manager, died at St. Andrew's 12 May, 1852.

MUSCULUS, WOLFGANG, a Lutheran divine, born at Dieuze, in Lorraine, 1497. He became a Benedictine monk, but quitted the order 1527, and married. After officiating as minister at Strasburg and Augsburg, he was appointed divinity professor at Berne, where he died Aug., 1563, leaving Commentaries on the Bible, and some controversial works.

MUSGRAVE, Sir RICHARD, an Irish historian, born about 1758. By his marriage into the Cavendish family he obtained a seat in parliament, the collectorship of the excise for Dublin, and a baronetcy. He published in 1801 'Memoirs of the Rebellions in Ireland,' a work which gave great offence to the Catholics, on account of the picture exhibited in it of the atrocities committed by the insurgents in 1798. Sir Richard died 7 April, 1818.

MUSGRAVE, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Charlton, Somersetshire, 1657, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he was elected to New College, Oxford, where he took the degree of LL.B. 1682, but afterwards applied himself to physic, and became a fellow of the Royal College, as also of the Royal Society, to which last learned body he acted as secretary. In 1691 he settled at Exeter, where he died 23 Dec. 1721. Besides some Latin tracts on the gout, he published four volumes of dissertations on Roman and British Antiquities. His grandson, Dr. Samuel Musgrave, was also a physician at Exeter, where he died 3 July, 1782. He distinguished himself in 1763 by charging the ministers with having been bribed to settle a peace advantageous to France. As a scholar he is known by an edition of Euripides, and two dissertations on the Grecian Mythology, and the Olympiads.

MUSIUS.

MUSIUS, or MUYS, CORNELIUS, a Catholic divine, born at Delft, in Holland, 1503. He studied at Louvain, after which he resided for some years in France, where he was much respected for his learning and piety. On his return home he became confessor to a nunnery; but when the Reformation made progress in the Low Countries, and the false zeal of fanaticism vented itself in outrages against priests, monks, and nuns, Musius was seized by the infuriated bigots, who mutilated him in a shocking manner, and after dragging him about naked in the snow, suspended him on a gallows at Leyden 1572. He was a good Latin poet, and published several pieces, the principal of which are 'Institutio Fœminæ Christianæ;' 'Ode et Psalmi aliquot;' 'De Temporum Fugacitate;' 'Imago Patientiæ;' 'Tumulusorum Erasmi Libellus.'

MUSS, CHARLES, a celebrated enamel painter, who died in London 1824. His picture of the Holy Family, after Parmegiano, is said to be the largest enamel ever painted.

MUSSATO, ALBERTINO, an Italian historian and Latin poet, born at Padua 1261; died 1330.

MUSSCHENBROECK, PETER VAN, a mathematician, born at Leyden 14 March, 1692. He took his doctor's degree in physic, but applied chiefly to natural philosophy; and on visiting London was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. About 1734 he was appointed professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at Utrecht, from whence he removed to Leyden, where he died 19 Sept., 1761. He published several valuable works in Latin, one of which, 'Elementa Physica,' was translated into English by Colston.

MUSSCHER, MICHAEL, a Dutch painter, born at Rotterdam 1645; died at Amsterdam 1705.

MUSSET, LOUIS CHARLES ALFRED DE, a celebrated French poet and dramatist, born 11 Nov., 1810, at Paris, where he died 1 May, 1857.

MUSURUS, MARCUS, a native of Candia, who went to Italy at the beginning of the sixteenth century, and became professor of Greek at Padua. He published an edition of Plato, to which he prefixed some Greek verses, for which Leo X. made him bishop of Malvasia. He also superintended the first editions of Aristophanes and Athenæus. Died 1517.

MUTIS, JOSEPH CELESTINE, a Spanish divine, physician, and botanist, born at Cadiz 6 April, 1732; died 11 Sept., 1808.

MUZIANO, GIROLAMO, an Italian painter, born at Acquafredda, near Brescia, 1528. He studied painting under Romanini, whose style he forsook for that of Titian. On going to Rome he became the associate of Taddeo Zuccheri, in conjunction with whom he executed several important works. Muziano was a great favourite with Gregory XIII., who employed him to paint a picture of St. Paul the Hermit, and another of St. Anthony, for the church of St. Peter. Sixtus V. also held him in esteem, and entrusted to him the designs for the bas-reliefs of the column of Trajan. At the instance of this artist, Pope Gregory founded the Academy of St. Luke, which Sixtus confirmed by a brief. Died at Rome 1590 or 1592.

MYDDELTON. See MIDDLETON.

MYDORGE, CLAUDE, a mathematician, born at Paris 1585; died there July, 1647.

MYLNE, ROBERT, an architect, was born 4 Jan., 1734, at Edinburgh, where his father was of the same profession, and a magistrate of the city. The son went to Rome for improvement, and during his residence there gained the first prize in the architectural class at St. Luke's Academy, of which he was elected a member. He was also chosen a member of the Academies of Florence and Bologna. On his return home he settled in London, and was selected to build Blackfriars Bridge. He was also appointed surveyor of St. Paul's Cathedral, and built a number of fine seats in different parts of the country. Died 5 May, 1811.

N.

NÆVIUS, CNEIUS, a Latin poet, who died at Utica B.C. 203. Some fragments of his works are extant.

NAHL, JOHN AUGUSTINE, a sculptor, born at Berlin 1710; died at Cassel 1785.

NAIRNE, CAROLINE, LADY, author of 'The Laird o' Cockpen,' 'The Land o' the Leal,' and other popular Scotch ballads, was born 16 July, 1766, at Gask, Perthshire, where she died 27 Oct., 1845.

NALSON, JOHN, LL.D., was born about 1658, and educated at Cambridge. After the Restoration he became rector of Doddington, in the Isle of Ely, and prebendary of that cathedral. He died 24 March, 1685-6. His principal work is 'An Impartial Collection of the Affairs of State, from the Scotch Rebellion to the Murder of Charles I.,' 2 vols., folio.

NANI, JOHN BAPTIST FELIX GASPAR, a Venetian nobleman, born 30 Aug., 1616. He distinguished himself as ambassador to the French court, where he obtained succours for the republic to carry on the war against Turkey. He was afterwards employed in other missions of importance, for which he was made proctor of St. Mark, and captain-general of the marine. Died 5 Nov., 1678. He wrote the 'History of Venice,' part of which has been translated into English.

NANTEUIL, ROBERT, an engraver of portraits, born at Rheims 1630; died at Paris 18 Dec., 1678.

NAPIER, SIR CHARLES, K.C.B., a British admiral, eldest son of Capt. Charles Napier, of Merchiston Hall, co. Stirling, was born there 6 March, 1786. He entered the navy 1799, and was raised to the rank of post-captain 1809. After performing many brilliant services, his ship, the 'Euryalus,' was paid off in June, 1815; and on the 4th of that month he was nominated a C.B. After a long lapse of time he was called into action again in 1829, when he was employed on particular service on the coast of Portugal in the 'Galatea.' In 1833 he commanded Don Pedro's fleet, and the naval victory he won secured the crown for Don Pedro's daughter, Donna Maria. In 1839 Captain Napier, second in command under Sir R. Stopford of the fleet employed on the coast of Syria, effected a landing at D'Journe, at the head of 1500 Turks and British marines; and in this, his first operation on the Syrian coast, he displayed indefatigable zeal. On 2 Nov., 1840, he assisted at the siege of Acre, after which he concluded an advantageous convention with Mehemet Ali. In acknowledgment of his conduct he was created K.C.B. (1840), and he was also included in the thanks of Parliament to the commander-in-chief and his subordinates. He was subsequently appointed rear-admiral of the blue, and held for two years the command of the Channel fleet. After a prolonged interval Sir Charles Napier received the command of the Baltic fleet, on the outbreak of the Russian war (1854). He promised before setting out to take Cronstadt in a month; but, notwithstanding this boast, he returned without having done anything of importance except the capture of Bomarsund. Sir Charles was returned to parliament for Marylebone 1841; and in 1855 he was elected for Southwark, which borough he represented till his death. That event occurred at his seat, Merchiston House, near Portsmouth, 5 Nov., 1860. He published 'The Past and Present State of the Navy,' 1851, and some other works.

NAPIER, SIR CHARLES JAMES, G.C.B., a British general, was born in London 10 Aug., 1782, and before he had completed his twelfth year received an ensign's commission in the 22nd regiment of foot, being gazetted a lieutenant 8 May, 1794. His first service to the country was rendered in Ireland, as aide-de-camp to Sir James Dufl. In 1805 he was appointed major in the 60th regiment, which he commanded during the terrible retreat at Corunna under Sir John Moore, and during the fatal battle in which their gallant leader fell. Nor had Major Napier much better fortune, for he was wounded in five places and made prisoner. Ney received his captive with kindness, and on his recovery permitted him to return to England on parole. In 1811 he was again in the Peninsula, and, as a volunteer, fought desperately at the engagement on the Coa, where he had two horses shot under him, but escaped unhurt. At Busaco, however, he was shot in the face, his jaw being broken and one of his eyes injured. At this period he was elevated to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and in June, 1811, he was sufficiently recovered to take a share in the battle of Fuentes d'Onore. He was likewise present at the second siege of Badajoz. He was not present at Waterloo; but he arrived three days after the battle, took a part in the storming of Cambray, and accompanied the army to Paris. A period of military inactivity followed, during which Colonel Napier, being stationed in the Greek Islands, was appointed to the government of the island of Cephalonia. In 1841, being then major-general, he was ordered to take the command of the army at Bombay. This was the commencement of the most splendid period of his life, resulting in the conquest, the pacification, and the great improvement of Scinde. At the battle of Meeanee, Sir Charles, with only 1600 English and Sepoys, defeated nearly 30,000 Beelooches, strongly posted, with the loss of 6000 men. The Ameers all surrendered except Shere Mahomet, who assembled a new army and faced his terrible antagonist with 25,000 men at Hyderabad, where Sir Charles gained another decisive victory, thus rendering himself master of Scinde, of which territory he was constituted governor. In the course of a few years he completely reorganised the whole physical and moral condition of the district. He returned to England 1847. When the last Sikh war broke out the Duke of Wellington selected him as the fittest officer to take the supreme command. The veteran accordingly started for India in March, 1849, but found, on his arrival there, that the Sikhs had been finally routed. After two years' residence in India he returned to England, where he continued to reside till his death, which occurred at Oaklands, near Portsmouth, 29 Aug., 1853. When Sir Charles Napier was not fighting he was writing, his more important publications being, 'Colonization in Southern Australia'; 'History of the Colonies—Ionian Islands'; 'Indian Misgovernment and Lord Dalhousie'; 'Lights and Shadow of Military Life'; 'Remarks on the Military Law of Flogging.'

NAPIER, or NEPER, JOHN, baron of Merchiston, in Scotland, was born 1550. He studied at St. Andrews, after leaving which university he travelled abroad, and on his return devoted himself to mathematical pursuits and theology. In the former he acquired great celebrity by the invention of logarithms, and the contrivance of a mechanical method of computation, called Napier's bones or rods. As a theological writer he distinguished himself by a curious book on the Apocalypse. Died 3 April, 1617. His other works are, Logarithmorum canonicis descriptio; Mirifici Logarithmorum canonicis constructio; Rabdologia, seu numerationis per Virgulas. A Life of him, containing an account of the invention of logarithms, was published by Mark Napier in 1834.

NAPIER, MACVEY, a Scotch writer, born 12 April, 1776. He was appointed professor of conveyancing in the university of Edinburgh 1825. His literary career prominently commenced in 1825, when he succeeded Jeffrey as editor of the 'Edinburgh Review.' Afterwards he undertook the superintendence of the seventh edition of the 'Encyclopaedia Britannica,' and he also published 'Remarks illustrative of the Scope and Influence of the Philosophical Writings of Lord Bacon,' 1818, and some treatises on Scotch law. Died at Edinburgh 11 Feb., 1847.

NAPIER, SIR WILLIAM FRANCIS PATRICK, K.C.B., a British general, younger brother of Sir Charles James Napier, was born at Castletown, Celbridge, Ireland, 17 Dec. 1785. He entered the army 1800, and served with great distinction, particularly in the Peninsular war. He was lieutenant-governor of Guernsey 1842-48, and in 1859 attained the rank of general. His fame rests mainly on his literary works, especially the 'History of the Peninsular War,' 6 vols., 1828-40. Among his other publications are the 'Conquest of Scinde'; 'History of General Sir Charles Napier's Administration of Scinde'; 'English Battles and Sieges in the Peninsula'; 'Life and Opinions of Sir Charles Napier.' Died at Clipham, 12 Feb., 1860.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE I. was born 15 Aug., 1769, at Ajaccio, in Corsica. His father was a notary who died in the prime of life, leaving a widow with a large family to subsist on a very precarious pittance. Napoleon was brought up in the military school at Brienne, where he applied himself chiefly to the engineering department. At the commencement of the revolution he was a lieutenant, and in that capacity served at the siege of Toulon. Barras was now his friend; and, under his patronage, he went to Italy, at the beginning of 1794, as general of artillery. The successes which followed increased his reputation, and he soon obtained the chief command. The battle of Lodi (12 May, 1796) raised him still higher; and the progress of the French arms from this period spread the fame of Bonaparte over all Europe. It would take a volume to enumerate the actions in which he was engaged. They are the subjects of history; and, therefore, we must confine the present sketch to a few prominent points. After the battle of Lodi the French seized Leghorn, which was followed by the capture of Mantua and war with the Pope, who was compelled to submit to the terms imposed on him by the conqueror. After this a negotiation with the Archduke Charles took place, which produced the treaty of Leoben. Bonaparte now attacked and captured Venice, which was followed by the peace of Campo Formio. A new scene of operations next opened in a distant part of the world. On 20 May, 1798, a French armament, consisting of 300 sail of ships, departed from Toulon, and after taking Malta, anchored in the vicinity of Alexandria in Egypt, where Bonaparte landed on the 2nd of July. The city was soon taken, and the army marched towards Cairo; but the Mamelukes mustered in considerable force, and brought on the battle of the Pyramids, in which they were defeated with great slaughter on the 21st, and two days afterwards the French entered the capital. They had not been long there, however, before their spirits were damped by the intelligence that their whole naval force was annihilated by the English, under the command of Admiral Nelson. The consequences of this victory were soon seen in the changes which took place throughout Europe. The Ottoman Porte issued a proclamation, stating that 'a man named Bonaparte, calling himself a French general, had in that capacity invaded the Turkish province of Egypt. Some of his emissaries,' it was added in this memorial, 'have pretended to persuade the people of that country that they have been sent by Mahomet to give them liberty, and make their religion universal over the earth; but they have answered that Mahomet does not authorize injustice, and that they can place no faith in the promises of those who have denied their God, and renounced their own prophet.' The charge was true enough, for Napoleon changed his name to that of Ali, and even declared publicly that he was a true Mussulman, sent by the Prophet to deliver Egypt. The French general, it must be owned, made the best of his situation, and took great pains in securing the footing which he had acquired; but while he was employed in forming establishments in Cairo, he was apprised of the hostile operations of the old Pacha of Acre, in Syria. Thither, therefore, Bonaparte repaired with a large force, and after capturing Jaffa, where he put about 3000 Turks to death in cold blood (17 March, 1799), he laid siege to Acre in full confidence of taking it; but, though the place was weak, it was defended by Sir Sydney Smith and a small body of English, who inspired the Turks to such a degree, that the conqueror of Egypt, after several desperate attempts, in which he lost numbers of men, was obliged to recross the desert, mortified and enraged. At length he formed the sudden resolution of quitting this hostile shore secretly; and accordingly embarked on the 24th of Aug. in an armed vessel for France, where he landed in safety, and on the 10th of Oct. arrived at Paris. A new revolution was the result. Bonaparte on the 10th of Nov. entered the Council of Five Hundred, expelled the members, and assumed the title of Chief Consul. He began his political career by promulgating a new constitution, and offering peace to Austria, but without effect. He then wrote a letter to the king of England in the same pacific strain, but his proposition was declined, and hostilities were renewed with vigour on all sides. On 30 May, 1800, Bonaparte entered Milan, and re-established the Cisalpine republic; and on the 14th of the following month he gained the battle of Marengo. The victory produced an armistice for two months, and the First Consul retired to Paris. At the beginning of the following year the treaty of Lunéville was signed, whereupon Bonaparte congratulated the French nation that the ambition of England alone continued to disturb the tranquillity of the world. To curb the proud islanders, therefore, vast preparations for invading the British shores were made all along the coast, from Bruges to Ushant; but, instead of being intimidated, the English seemed to acquire new energy from these gigantic menaces, and the whole kingdom was in motion to defend the country. But in the midst of the alarm a change in the British cabinet took place, negotiations for a peace were set on foot, and the treaty of Amiens was concluded 27 March, 1802. The same year he obtained the situation of First Consul, first for ten years, and next for life, with power to name his successor. Thus possessed of all but the title of sovereign, it was obvious that his aspiring hopes had no limits. Anxious as he had pretended to be for peace, it became plain from his conduct that he intended to maintain it no longer than it suited his ambitious views to do so. At the beginning of 1803 he quarrelled with England, war was suddenly renewed, and all British subjects throughout France were made prisoners, contrary to the practice of civilized nations. In 1804 Napoleon introduced a new civil code for the government of the country; but at the same time, in defiance of every principle of justice, he caused the Duc d'Enghien to be seized on neutral ground, conveyed to France, and shot at midnight in the wood of Vincennes. He now assumed the imperial title, and sent for the Pope to consecrate him in the church of Notre Dame, at Paris, on the 2nd of December; but when the service was about to be performed he snatched the crown from the altar and, standing erect, placed it on his own head. In the following year he played the same farce at Milan, on taking the title of king of Italy. A fresh war now broke out between the French and the Austrians, when Bonaparte compelled Mack to surrender Ulm, and on 13 Nov., 1805, he entered Vienna. On the 2nd of Dec. the battle of Austerlitz brought the war to a close, and peace was concluded between France and Austria, at Presburg, on the 26th of the same month. Early in the following year Napoleon adopted Eugene Beauharnois, the son of his wife Josephine by her former husband, as his successor to the crown of Italy. Soon afterwards he made his brother-in-law, Joachim Murat, Duke of Cleves; his own brother, Joseph, king of Naples, and Louis Bonaparte, king of Holland. In the autumn Napoleon marched against the Prussians, who were defeated at the battle of Jena, and the French entered Berlin. This brought on a contest with Russia, which, after the battle of Friedland (14 June, 1807), ended in the treaty of Tilsit. In the following year Napoleon made war upon the Pope, and his troops took possession of Rome. About the same time his designs upon Spain began to be developed, Charles IV. being compelled to resign the throne in favour of his son Ferdinand, and Murat, at the head of a French army, entered Madrid. Bonaparte now obliged the queen of Spain to declare her son illegitimate, in consequence of which the old king resumed the regal title, and then abdicated it for ever in favour of his imperial protector, who caused his brother

NAPOLEON.

Joseph to be proclaimed king. This roused the Spanish nation to arms, and war was declared against France. The English being invited to that country, Napoleon went thither in person, but did not long remain there, having other objects in contemplation. The new war between Austria and the French was decided by the battle of Wagram (8 July, 1809). In December following Napoleon separated himself from his wife Josephine, who had been consecrated empress by the Pope. Notwithstanding this, on 15 Feb., 1810, a marriage ceremony was celebrated between Napoleon and Maria Louisa, the daughter of the emperor of Austria. This connection was productive of a son, whose birth, on 20 March, 1811, was celebrated with great rejoicings. At this time affairs grew serious on the side of Spain, where the flame of patriotism, aided by British valour, proved more than a match for the politics and force of Bonaparte. To extricate himself from this embarrassment he provoked a war with Russia, and, putting the whole Confederation of the Rhine under requisition, marched, with half a million of men, for the north. His progress was marked by devastation till he reached Moscow, where he found a city prepared for destruction by its inhabitants; and soon afterwards the greater part of it was destroyed as a voluntary sacrifice. The winter now began to set in, and Bonaparte, after several ineffectual attempts to effect a peace or a truce, began to retrace his steps for Poland. But the march was impeded by a thousand dreadful disasters; and on his arrival at Smorgonie, in Poland, Napoleon abandoned the wreck of his army to pursue his course to Paris, where he arrived 19 Dec., 1812. The meteor that had so long blazed with splendour was now sinking; and it became evident that, instead of overturning other thrones, Napoleon had business enough on his hands to secure his own. In April, 1813, he marched with another army into Germany; but the Confederation was at an end, and many of those states which had hitherto been at the command of the French ruler were now in the rank of his enemies. At the beginning of August the emperor of Austria joined the coalition, and on the 27th Napoleon suffered a signal defeat at Dresden; but the decisive battle which sealed his fate was that of Leipsic, fought on the 18th Oct., when his army was nearly annihilated. Bonaparte now hastened to Paris and sent commissioners through all the provinces to levy a new conscription; and when desired by the senate to accept terms offered by the allies he dissolved the assembly. On 13 Feb., 1814, the Emperor Alexander and the king of Prussia crossed the Rhine at Basle, where they were met by the Emperor of Austria. Bonaparte, on his part, was not idle; but the decree which he issued at Troyes, threatening death to all Frenchmen bearing the insignia of the Bourbons, indicated desperation rather than fortitude. After a series of actions, in which the allies were successful, negotiations were opened at Chatillon; but such was the extravagance of the demands of Napoleon that they were broken off, and he was abandoned to his fate. On 31 March the allies entered Paris, and the senate decreed that the imperial throne was vacant. Bonaparte being now offered a retreat, chose the isle of Elba, the sovereignty of which was granted to him in perpetuity. Here, at least, he might have been happy; but his restless mind panted after his lost greatness. On 25 Feb., 1815, he escaped from Elba, and landed, with a few men, at Cannes, in the bay of St. Juan, on the 1st of March. His progress was so rapid that on the 21st he entered Paris, chiefly through the treachery of Ney, who, after promising to bring him a captive in an iron cage, went over to him with all his army. On resuming the government Napoleon endeavoured to separate the allies by overtures, and to affect a strain of uncommon moderation. His artifices, however, were seen through, and preparations were made to crush the usurpation and to prevent any further interruption of the peace of Europe. In the meantime Bonaparte having mustered a force sufficient to take the field, marched, on 12 July, to the frontiers, with the design of cutting off the English under Wellington and the Prussians commanded by Blücher in the vicinity of Brussels. On the 15th hostilities commenced near Chalerroi, when the Prussians were repulsed, and Napoleon advanced to Fleurus. The next day were fought the battles of Ligny and Quatre Bras, when Blücher was compelled to fall back to Mont St. Guibert, and the British to Waterloo. On the 18th the great contest, in which so many destinies were involved, took place by a desperate attack upon the English, who for four hours remained steadily on the defensive against a vast disparity of force; but at length the Prussians came up, and the rout of the French became general. Napoleon was the first to escape; and on his arrival at Paris, finding that he could not abdicate in favour of his son, he hastened to Rochefort in order to embark for America. The English government had, however, anticipated his design, and blockaded the whole line of coast so completely that, finding it scarcely possible to elude their vigilance, he came to the resolution of surrendering himself, and accordingly was received on board the 'Bellerophon,' Captain Maitland, who bore away for Torbay. In the meantime Napoleon wrote a letter full of compliments to the prince regent, claiming his protection. To this epistle no attention was paid, and on the 7th Aug. he was transferred to the 'Northumberland,' which ship the next day sailed for St. Helena, where the eventual career of this extraordinary man terminated 5 May, 1821. His remains were taken to France by the Prince de Joinville Oct., 1840, and deposited in the Hotel des Invalides on the 15th Dec. in that year.

NAPOLEON II. (NAPOLEON FRANÇOIS BONAPARTE), son of Napoleon I. and of Maria Louisa of Austria, was born at Paris 20 March, 1811, and from his birth was styled king of Rome. After his father's first abdication (1814) he went with his mother to Vienna, where he was created duke of Reichstadt. Died 22 July, 1832.

NARBONNE-LARA, Count Louis de, a statesman, born at Colorno, in the duchy of Parma, Aug., 1755; died at Torgau 17 Nov., 1813. He held the post of minister of war under Louis XVI., and after the revolution was employed in a diplomatic capacity by Napoleon.

NARDI, JAMES, a Florentine, born 1476; died about 1540. His principal work is a History of Florence.

NARES, EDWARD, D.D., received his education at Westminster School, and thence proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, but afterwards migrated to Merton College, where he was elected to a fellowship. He was collated to the rectory of Biddeford, Kent, 1798. In 1805 he preached the Bampton lecture, and in 1813 was appointed regius professor of modern history and modern languages. He died at Biddenden 20 Aug., 1841, aged 79. His works are, 'Remarks on the Version of the New Testament edited by the Unitarians,' 1810, and again 1814; 'Thoughts I to Myself,' a novel, 1811; 'Elements of General History,' 1822, being a continuation of Professor Tytler's work; 'Heraldic Anomalies,' 2 vols., 1824; 'Memoirs of the Life and Administration of William Cecil, Lord Burghley,' 3 vols. 1828-31.

NARES, JAMES, Mus. D., was born at Stanwell, in Middlesex, in 1715. He was educated first under Mr. Gates, master of the royal choristers, and next under Dr. Pepusch. At the age of nineteen he became organist of York Cathedral, from whence he removed to London in 1755, on being appointed organist and composer to the king. The year following he was created doctor in music at Cambridge, and in 1757 obtained the place of master of the choristers, which he resigned in 1780. Dr. Nares published several esteemed compositions. Died to Feb., 1783.

NARES, ROBERT, F.R.S., F.S.A., son of Dr. James Nares, mentioned above, was born at York 9 June, 1753. From Westminster School he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, and after taking orders obtained several livings in succession. He was appointed preacher at Lincoln's Inn 1788; assistant librarian in the British Museum 1795-1807; archdeacon of Stafford 1800; vicar of St. Mary's, Reading, 1805-18; and finally rector of All Hallows, London Wall. His chief work is 'A Glossary; or a Collection of Words, Phrases, Names, and Allusions to Customs, Proverbs, &c., which have been thought to require illustration in the works of English authors,' 1822. Archdeacon Nares also published 'Elements of Orthoepy'; Essays; and Sermons. He was the projector of, and the principal contributor to, the 'British Critic.' Died 23 March, 1829.

NARUSZEWICZ, ADAM STANISLAUS, a Polish historian and poet, born 1733; appointed bishop of Luck 1790; died at Janow 6 July, 1796.

NARVAEZ, RAMON MARIA, duke of Valentia, and prime minister of Spain, was born at Loja, in Granada, August, 1800. He entered the army at an early age, and took part in the war of liberation against Napoleon I. He afterwards made himself conspicuous by his abilities in the Carlist war, and was in consequence raised to the rank of brigadier. In 1840 he quarrelled with Espartero, and for several years was the prime mover in all the intrigues and plots of Queen Christina against her daughter Queen Isabella. From 1857 the Government of Spain was either in the hands of General O'Donnell or Marshal Narvaez. In 1865 the former was once more succeeded by General Narvaez, who remained prime minister till his decease on 23 April, 1868.

NARY, CORNELIUS, LL.D., a Catholic divine, born in the county of Kildare 1660, and died at Dublin 3 March, 1738. He published The New Testament translated from the Vulgate, with notes, 1705, 1718; A History of the World; and several controversial works.

NASH, JOHN, an English architect, born 1752; died 13 May, 1835. He is chiefly known as the author or promoter of the extensive improvements in the metropolis arising out of the formation of Regent Street and the Regent's Park. He also designed Buckingham Palace, the Haymarket Theatre, and the Pavilion at Brighton.

NAUDE.

NASH, RICHARD, was born at Swansea 1674, and educated at Oxford. He afterwards had a pair of colours, but soon quitted the army and entered the Temple, though he never followed the law. A love of pleasure and gaming drew him, in 1704, to Bath, which city he contrived, by his excellent management, to render a place of fashionable resort. He was chosen master of the ceremonies, and was so much esteemed as to be called king of Bath; but commonly he was called, from the peculiarity of his dress, Beau Nash. Died 12 Feb., 1761.

NASH, THOMAS, a satirist, was born at Lowestoft, Suffolk, 1567, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, which he left after taking one degree, and then settled in London, where he died probably in 1601. He wrote three dramatic pieces, but was chiefly distinguished by the virulence of his pamphlets against Gabriel Harvey and Peiry, who assumed the title of Martin Marprelate. His principal performance is 'Pierce Penniless,' published in 1589.—Athen. Cantab.

NASH, TREADWAY RUSSEL, an English clergyman, was born 1726, and took his degree of D.D. at Worcester College, Oxford, 1758. He was a man of fortune, and died at his seat in Worcestershire 26 Jan., 1811. Dr. Nash published 'Collections for a History of Worcestershire,' 2 vols. folio; a splendid edition of Hudibras, 3 vols. 4to.; and some papers in the Archæologia.

NASMITH, JAMES, D.D., was born at Norwich 1740, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1773 he was presented to the living of St. Mary Abchurch, which he exchanged for Snailwell, Cambridgeshire. His last preferment was the rectory of Leverington, in the Isle of Ely, where he died 16 Oct., 1808. Dr. Nasmith published 'A Catalogue of Benet-college Library,' an edition of the 'Itineraries of Simon and William of Worcester,' and a new edition of Tanner's 'Notitia Monastica.'

NASMYTH, ALEXANDER, a landscape painter, was a native of Edinburgh. He studied painting in London, under Allan Ramsay, the son of the poet, and afterwards visited Italy. Having returned to his native city he commenced practising with great success as a portrait painter; but subsequently he devoted his attention almost exclusively to landscape. He died at Edinburgh 10 April, 1840, aged 83. His son Patrick, born 1786, also excelled as a landscape painter, but was cut off in the prime of life 17 Aug., 1831.

NATHAN, ISAAC, a rabbi of the fourteenth century, who compiled a Concordance of the Bible, which has been several times printed.

NATTER, JEAN MARC, a French painter, born at Paris 1683; died 1766.

NATTER, LAURENCE, an engraver of intaglios, was a native of Biberach, in Swabia, and died at St. Petersburg 27 Dec., 1763. He published a treatise on gems.

NAUDE, or NAUDEUS, GABRIEL, a French writer, born at Paris 1600. He studied medicine at Padua, where he took his doctor's degree. After a considerable stay in Italy he returned to Paris, and became librarian to Cardinal Richelieu, on whose death he entered the service of Mazarin; but when that minister was banished Naudé went to Sweden as librarian to Queen Christina. His stay there, however, was short, and he died at Abbeville 29 July, 1653. His principal works are, Arts pour dresser une Bibliothèque; Apologie pour les NAUDÉ, PHILIPPE, a mathematician, born at Metz 1654; died at Berlin March, 1729.

NAUDET, THOMAS CHARLES, a landscape painter, born 1774 at Paris, where he died 16 July, 1810.

NAUNTON, Sir ROBERT, was born in Suffolk, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to a fellowship at Trinity Hall. After having been employed on some diplomatic concerns in Scotland and France he returned to the university, and in 1601 was elected public orator, in which capacity he attracted the notice of James I., who made him master of the Requests, surveyor of the Court of Wards, and secretary of state. His last preferment was that of master of the Court of Wards, which office he resigned in 1633. His 'Fragmenta Regalia' contains many curious particulars of the court of Queen Elizabeth. Died 27 March, 1635.

NAVAGERO, ANDREW, Naugerius, a Latin poet, born at Venice 1483; died at Blois 1529.

NAVARETE, FERDINAND, a Spanish friar of the order of St. Dominic, served on the Chinese mission, 1659-72; became archbishop of St. Domingo 1678; died 1689. He wrote an account of China, of which there is an English translation in Churchill's Voyages.

NAVARETE, JUAN HERNANDEZ, a Spanish painter, born at Logroño about 1524. He was deaf and dumb from his childhood, whence he obtained the name of 'El Mudo'; notwithstanding which he attained such excellence in his art as to be called the Spanish Titian. Died 1577.

NAYLER, JAMES, a Quaker, born at Ardsley, in Yorkshire, about 1616. He became a soldier in the Parliament army, but quitted the service 1649, and in 1651 attached himself to George Fox. Soon afterwards, however, he pretended to inspiration, and committed such extravagances that the Parliament condemned him to be whipped, branded in the forehead, and have his tongue bored through with a hot iron. This barbarous sentence was carried into execution at Bristol, after which Navler was removed to London, and confined in Bridewell, where he remained till 1660, when he was set at liberty. He died the same year, on his journey into Yorkshire.

NEAL, DANIEL, was born in London 14 Dec., 1678. After receiving a private education he went to Leyden, and on his return to London became minister to a dissenting congregation, which met first at Loriners' Hall and next in Jewin Street. Mr. Neal published, in 1720, 'A History of New England,' 2 vols., for which he received the degree of master of arts from one of the colleges in that country; but his greatest work is 'A History of the Puritans,' 4 vols., which was answered by Bishop Madox and Dr. Zachary Grey. A new edition of Mr. Neal's history was published in 1797, 5 vols. 8vo. Died 4 April, 1743.

NEALE, or NEILE, RICHARD, an English prelate, born in Westminster March 1561-2. From Westminster School he went to St. John's College, Cambridge, and after taking orders obtained in succession a large number of benefices. He became master of the Savoy, 1605; dean of Westminster the same year; clerk of the closet to James I. and Charles I.; bishop of Rochester 1608; of Lichfield 1610; of Lincoln 1613; of Durham 1617; of Winchester 1627; and archbishop of York 1632. Died 31 Oct., 1640. He is the supposed author of a book entitled 'Spalato's Shiftings in Religion,' 1624, against Marc Ant. de Dominis, Archbishop of Spalato.

NEANDER, JOHANN AUGUST WILHELM, a Protestant divine and church historian, born at Göttingen, of Jewish parents, 17 Jan., 1789. After having adopted the Lutheran religion, he studied divinity at Halle and Göttingen, and became, in 1813, professor of ecclesiastical history at Berlin, where he continued to labour as teacher and writer, with very little interruption, till his death on 14 July, 1850. His great work is his 'General History of the Christian Religion and Church,' from the close of the apostolic age to the council of Basle in 1430. This has been translated into English, as have also most of the following works by Neander: The Emperor Julian and his Times, 1812; St. Bernard and his Times, 1813; a treatise on Gnosticism, 1818; St. Chrysostom and the Church of his Time, 1822; 'Antignosticus, the Spirit of Tertullian,' 1825; History of the Apostolic Age, 1832; 'Life of Christ,' in refutation of Strauss, 1837; Memorials of Christian Life.

NECKAM, or NEQUAM, ALEXANDER, an English monk of the order of St. Augustine, who was educated in the abbey of St. Albans. He completed his studies at Paris, and died abbat of Cirencester in 1217. His principal work is a Latin poem, 'De Laude Sapientie Divinae.'

NECKER, JAMES, a celebrated statesman, was the son of Charles Frederic Necker, professor of civil law at Geneva, and born there 30 Sept., 1732. At the age of fifteen he was placed in a banking-house at Paris, after which he became partner with Thellusson, on whose death he established a house of his own, in conjunction with his brother and two others. In 1776 he was appointed director, and soon after comptroller-general of the finances. This last office he held five years, and then published an account of his administration, which was attacked by M. Calonne, and defended by Necker, who was in consequence exiled to his country seat, where he wrote his treatise 'On the Importance of Religious Opinions.' In 1788 he was restored to his post, in which capacity he advised the convocation of the states-general, a measure that accelerated the revolution. The year following, he was ordered to leave the kingdom, on which he retired to Copet, in Switzerland, where he died 30 March, 1804. Besides his political works, he published 'A Course of Religious Morality,' and a novel on the 'Consequences of a Single Fault.'

NECTON, HUMPHREY, a Carmelite, first of Norwich and afterwards of Cambridge, died 1303. He was of great eminence for his learning and abilities.

NEEDHAM, JOHN TURBERVILLE, a Catholic divine, was born in London 10 Sept., 1713, and educated at Douay, where he distinguished himself by his knowledge of natural philosophy. After presiding some time over a Catholic seminary in Hampshire, he was appointed professor of philosophy in the English college at Lisbon; but he soon returned to his native country, and became a travelling tutor to some young noblemen. He finally settled at Brussels, as director of the imperial academy, and died there 30 Dec., 1781. Mr. Needham was a member of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies of London, and also of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. Besides some papers in the Philosophical Transactions, he published, in French, New Microscopical Discoveries; On Microscopical Bodies, and the Generation of Organized ones, 3 vols. He was engaged in a remarkable controversy respecting the Egyptian origin of the Chinese, which conclusion he drew from some characters on a bust at Turin. The idea, however, was soon exploded.

NEEDHAM, MARCHMONT, a political writer, born at Burford, Oxfordshire, Aug., 1620. On leaving the university of Oxford he obtained the situation of usher in Merchant Taylors' School, which place he resigned, 1642, to become a writer to an attorney, but soon quitted that employment for politics. He began his career in this line by a weekly paper, called 'Mercurius Britannicus,' on the side of Parliament, which gained him popularity. After carrying on this journal about four years he espoused the royal cause, in a paper called 'Mercurius Pragmaticus,' for which he narrowly escaped being hanged by his old employers. He now turned again, and conducted a republican paper, under the title of 'Mercurius Politicus.' At the Restoration Needham fled the kingdom, but contrived to obtain his pardon, and then practised physic till his death in 1678. His other works are not worth notice.

NEEFS, PETER, a painter of architectural subjects, born at Antwerp 1570; died in 1651, leaving a son in the same line, who is called the Young Neefs.

NEELE, HENRY, an English poet and novelist, born 1708; died by his own hand 9 Feb., 1828; in a fit of insanity. He was a son of a map-engraver in the Strand, and practised in London as a solicitor. Among his publications are, 'Pain's Dramatic Scenes;' the 'Romance of History,' 3 vols. 12mo.; and a series of tales relating to persons mentioned in the annals of this country.

NEEK, ARNOLD VAN DER, a landscape painter, born at Amsterdam 1619; died 1683. His son, Egton Hendrick Van Der Neer (b. 1643; d. 1703), painted portraits and conversation pieces.

NEELE, RICHARD, Archbishop of York. See NEALE.

NEILSON, JAMES BEAUMONT, F.R.S., a Scotch engineer, invented the hot blast, a process which completely revolutionised the iron trade. Born 1792; died 18 Jan., 1805.

NELSON, HORATIO, Viscount Nelson, was the fourth son of the Rev. Edmund Nelson, rector of Burnham Thorpe, in Norfolk, and born there 29 Sept., 1758. He was educated first at Norwich, and next at North Walsham; but in his twelfth year he became a midshipman under his uncle, captain Suckling, of the 'Raisonable.' Soon after this he sailed to the West Indies in a merchant ship, and on his return was admitted on board the 'Carcass,' one of the vessels sent on an expedition to the North Pole, under the order of captain Phipps. He went next to the East Indies. In 1777 he obtained the rank of lieutenant, and in 1779 that of post-captain, when he was appointed to the command of the Hinchinbroke, in which ship he sailed to the West Indies, where he distinguished himself in an enterprise on the Spanish main. After the peace of 1783 he commanded the 'Boreas,' frigate, stationed for the protection of trade at the Leeward Islands, and while there he married Mrs. Nesbit, the widow of a physician. On the commencement of the revolutionary war he was appointed to the 'Agamemnon' of 64 guns, and was placed under the orders of Lord Hood in the Mediterranean, where he displayed great bravery on many occasions, particularly at Toulon and the siege of Bastia, in which last service he lost an eye. In 1796 he hoisted his broad pendant as commodore on board 'La Minerve,' in which frigate he fell in with the Spanish fleet, from whom he escaped, and conveyed the intelligence to Admiral Jervis, off Cape St. Vincent, on the 13th of February, 1797. The same evening the enemy appeared, and Nelson, shifting his flag to the 'Captain,' had a principal part in the glory of that day, for which he received the order of the Bath, and was made a rear-admiral. In this capacity he commanded the inner squadron in the blockade of Cadiz, where, on the 3rd of July, he made an attack upon the Spanish gun-boats, and on the 15th of the same month he was detached against Santa Cruz in Tenerife. This enterprise however failed, after a fierce contest, at the close of which Nelson received a shot in the right elbow, which rendered amputation necessary. Notwithstanding this, he hoisted his flag in the 'Vanguard' in April, 1798, and rejoined Earl St. Vincent, by whom he was despatched to the Mediterranean, to observe the armament then preparing at Toulon. While thus employed his ship was so much damaged as to be obliged to bear away for Sardinia. In the mean time the French fleet sailed, and having taken Malta, proceeded for Egypt; whither they were followed by Nelson; but not being able to gain any intelligence of the object of his pursuit, he returned to Sicily. His stay at Syracuse was short, and on the 1st of August he had the satisfaction of desiring the enemy moored in the bay of Aboukir. A bloody engagement ensued, in which the British were completely victorious, and two only of the French ships escaped. For this achievement, Nelson was made baron of the Nile, rewarded with a pension, and covered with honours by different sovereigns as well as his own. He next rendered an important service in the restoration of the king of Naples; on which occasion, however, he furnished his reputation by trying and executing the Neapolitan admiral Caraccioli. In 1800 he landed in England, where he soon after separated from his lady through an unfortunate attachment to the wife of Sir William Hamilton. The year following he added to his renown as a naval hero by the destruction of the Danish ships and batteries at Copenhagen, for which he was created a viscount. His next enterprise was an attempt upon the flotilla in the harbour of Boulogne; but after the loss of Captain Parker, and many other brave men, the English ships were under the necessity of relinquishing their object. On the renewal of hostilities, Lord Nelson was appointed to command the fleet in the Mediterranean, where for nearly two years he was employed in the blockade of Toulon. At length the French fleet escaped out of port March 30, 1805, and being joined by the Spanish squadron, proceeded to the West Indies, whither Nelson followed them with the utmost expedition; but after a most extraordinary pursuit, the flying enemy returned to Europe, and got safe into Cadiz. The English admiral, as soon as he had recruited himself, sailed for Cadiz, off which harbour he arrived Sept. 20; and on the 21st of the following month was fought the battle of Trafalgar, previous to which he gave his last order, 'England expects every man to do his duty.' His own example went with the injunction; but, unfortunately, by exposing his person too much, and neglecting to take off the insignia of his rank, he became an object to the marksmen placed in the tops of the ship with which he was engaged. In the middle of the engagement, a musket-ball struck him on the left shoulder, and passing through the spine, lodged in the muscles of the back. He fell, and said to his captain, 'Hardy, I believe they have done it at last; my back-bone is shot through.' He lived just long enough to be acquainted with the number of ships that had been captured, and his last words were, 'I have done my duty; I praise God for it!' His body was brought to England, and buried in the cathedral of St. Paul's, where a monument has since been erected to his memory. An earldom was created in the person of his brother, which title descends with an estate granted by Parliament to the issue of his sisters.

NELSON, ROBERT, a learned and pious writer, born in London 22 June, 1656, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was strongly attached to James II., and he continued to communicate with the nonjurors till the death of Bishop Lloyd, when he returned to the established church. He lived on terms of intimacy with Archbishop Tillotson, and was the zealous promoter of all works of charity. His principal works are: 'A Companion for the Festivals and Fasts'; 'Great Duty of frequenting the Christian Sacrifice'; 'The Practice of True Devotion'; 'Life of Bishop Bull'; 'Letter to Dr. Clarke on the Trinity'; 'Address to Persons of Quality and Estate, on the Means of doing Good.' Died 16 Jan., 1714-15.

NENNIUS, a British historian, and abbat of Bangor in the seventh century, who, when the monks of his house were massacred, fled for refuge to Chester. His work entitled 'Historia Britonum' is inserted in Gale's Hist. Brit. Script. 1691.

NEPHER. See NAPIER.

NEPOS, CORNELIUS, a Latin historian who died in the reign of Augustus. He lived on terms of friendship with Cicero and Atticus. The only work of his extant is the 'Vite excellentium Imperatorum,' containing the lives of twenty-two celebrated generals. It has been often printed.

NERI, ST. PHILIP. See PHILIP.

NESSE, CHRISTOPHER, a Puritan divine, born 26 Dec., 1621, at North Cowes, Yorkshire, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. On taking orders he obtained the living of Cottingham, in his native county, but being deprived of it at the Restoration for nonconformity, he officiated at a dissenting congregation in London, where he died 26 Dec., 1705. His principal work is entitled 'The History and Mystery of the Old and New Testament,' 4 vols., 1690.

NESSERODE, CHARLES ROBERT, Count Von, a celebrated diplomatist, born 14 Dec. 1780, at Lisbon, where his father was Russian ambassador. He was appointed secretary of embassy at Berlin 1805; transferred to the Hague 1805; and appointed councillor of the Russian embassy at Paris 1807; but he returned to St. Petersburg when the formidable Russo-Austrian coalition exploded. Nesserode gained a complete ascendancy over the Emperor Alexander I., whom he followed to France 1814. He signed the treaty of the Quadruple Alliance, and afterwards the convention by which Marmont surrendered Paris to the allied troops. Subsequently he acted as the plenipotentiary of Russia at the congress of Vienna, and in that capacity was instrumental in accomplishing the dismemberment of Poland. It was Nesserode who planned the Holy Alliance, which virtually made the Czar of Russia the master of all the potentates of the continent of Europe, by giving him the right to interfere on all occasions 'for the defence of religion, peace, and justice,' and the 'suppression of the revolutionary spirit.' After the death of Alexander I. Nesserode gained the confidence of his successor Nicholas, but he retired from office soon after the accession of Alexander II. He died at St. Petersburg 23 March, 1862.

NESTORIUS, the founder of a sect, was born in Syria, in the fifth century. On entering into the priesthood he became so popular for his eloquence that Theodosius nominated him, in 428, patriarch of Constantinople; in which station he displayed great zeal against the Arians and Novatians. He also opposed those Christians who differed from the Catholic practice in the celebration of Easter. At last he fell under censure himself for affirming that the Blessed Virgin Mary is not the mother of God. For this he was condemned in the council of Ephesus, deprived of his see, and banished. He died in 439. His followers continue to be numerous in the east, and are organized under a patriarch.

NETSCHER, GASPAR, a painter, born at Prague 1639; died 1684. He had two sons, Theodore and Constantine, who were both good painters of portrait. The first died in 1733, and his brother in 1722.

NETTLETON, THOMAS, M.D., a physician of Halifax, Yorkshire, was born at Dewsbury in that county 1683; and died 9 Jan., 1742. He wrote 'Thoughts concerning Virtue and Happiness,' and an 'Account of the success of inoculating the Smallpox.'

NEUHOFF. See THEODORE.

NEUMANN, CASPAR, a chemist, was born at Zullichau, in Germany, 1682, and prosecuted his studies at Halle, after which he was appointed professor of chemistry in the Royal College, Berlin. The king of Prussia conferred on him the dignity of aulic counsellor. Died 20 Oct. 1737. His chemical works were published in English 1750.

NEUMANN, KARL FRIEDRICH, a German professor, author of a 'History of the East India Company,' and a 'History of the United States,' died at Berlin 17 March, 1850, aged 77. He at one time held a professorship, but was compelled to resign it in consequence of his liberal opinions.

NEVE, TIMOTHY, D.D., was born at Spalding 12 Oct., 1724, and educated at Oxford. He was appointed Margaret professor of divinity in that university 1753, and a prebendary of Worcester the same year. Died 1 Jan., 1798. Dr. Neve published some sermons and 'Animadversions on Philips's Life of Cardinal Pole.'

NEVERS, LOUIS DE GONZAGUE, Duc de, a celebrated general, born 1550, being son of Frederick II. duke of Mantua. He sided with the League during the wars of religion, and greatly distinguished himself, especially in Poictou 1588. Afterwards he espoused the cause of Henry IV., whose reconciliation with the Catholic Church he promoted; and at a later period he was sent against the duke of Parma in Picardy. Died 23 Oct., 1595. His Memoirs were published 1665.

NEVILLE, or NEVILLE, HENRY, a republican writer, born in Berkshire 1620, and educated at Merton College, Oxford. In the Rebellion he took the side of parliament, and was elected a member of the council of state; but on the usurpation of Cromwell he gave up his seat. Died 20 Sept., 1694. He published Machiavel's works, and a piece entitled 'Plato Redivivus, or a Dialogue concerning Government,' which Hollis reprinted in 1763.

NEVILLE, ALEXANDER, was born in Kent 1544. After graduating M.A. at Cambridge he became secretary to Archbishop Parker and his successor, Grindal. He paraphrased Seneca's Edipus, and wrote in Latin an account of the insurrection under Kett. Died 4 Oct., 1614. His brother, Thomas Neville, D.D., who became dean of Canterbury, and was an eminent benefactor to Trinity College, Cambridge, died 2 May, 1615.

NEVILLE, EDMUND, a Jesuit, was a native of Lancashire. He studied in the English college at Rome, after which he was sent upon the English mission. He died in 1610 in London 18 July, 1648, æt. 42. He published 'The Palm of Christian Fortitude, or the glorious combats of the Christians in Japan,' 1630, and prepared for the press 'The Life of St. Augustine, Doctor of the Church.'

NEVILLE, EDWARD, an English Jesuit, whose real name was Scarisbrick, was a native of Lancashire. He became one of James II.'s chaplains and preachers; and died 19 Feb., 1709. Besides sermons, he published the Life of Lady Warner 1690, and again 1692.

NEWBURGH, WILLIAM OF. See WILLIAM.

NEWCASTLE, HENRY PELHAM FIENNES PELHAM CLINTON, 5th duke OF, K.G., was born 1811, and educated at Oxford. He entered the House of Commons in the Tory interest 1832, being then known as Lord Lincoln. When Sir Robert Peel returned to power in 1841, his lordship was constituted first commissioner of woods and forests, a situation which in 1846 he exchanged for that of chief secretary for Ireland. He succeeded to the peerage on the death of his father, the fourth duke, 1851. Lord Aberdeen appointed him colonial secretary 1853, but on the breaking out of the Crimean war in the following year he was transferred to the war department. However, in discharging the duties of that important office he failed to give satisfaction to the public; and accordingly he resigned in 1855, and was succeeded by Lord Pimure. When the second coalition government was formed the duke was again appointed secretary of state for the colonies, and he held that post till a few months previous to his death, which occurred 18 Oct. 1864.

NEWCASTLE, MARGARET CAVENDISH, duchess OF, second wife of William, the first duke, was the daughter of Sir Charles Lucas, of St. John's, near Colchester, where she was born. When very young she had the misfortune to lose her father. In 1643 she went to Oxford, and was appointed one of the maids of honour to the queen, whom she accompanied to France, where the marquis of Newcastle married her in 1645. While abroad she wrote several of her works, which consist of no fewer than ten printed folios, besides manuscripts. She was most extravagantly praised in her lifetime for these performances, not only by servile authors, but even by learned societies and universities. She died at the close of 1673, and was buried in Westminster Abbey 7 Jan., 1673-4. Her publications are—'The World's Olio;' 'Nature's Picture, drawn by Fancy's Pencil to the Life;' 'Orations of divers sorts;' Plays; 'Philosophical and Physical Opinions;' 'Observations upon Experimental Philosophy;' 'Philosophical Letters;' 'Poems and Panics;' 'Sociable Letters;' and a Life of her husband.

NEWCASTLE, THOMAS PELHAM HOLLES, duke OF, was employed in several high offices during the reign of George II. He retired from the administration soon after the accession of George III.; and died 1768.

NEWCASTLE, WILLIAM CAVENDISH, duke OF, was the son of Sir Charles Cavendish, and born 1592. James I. made him knight of the Bath, Baron Ogle, and Viscount Mansfield. Charles I. created him earl of Newcastle, and appointed him governor to the prince of Wales. When the king went to Scotland in 1639 he was most splendidly entertained by the earl of Newcastle at his seat at Welbeck. This feast cost near 5000*l.*, but it was far exceeded by another which his lordship gave to their majesties, the expense of which is said to have been more than 14,000*l.* Besides all this he contributed 10,000*l.* in addition to a troop of horse, towards Charles I.'s northern expedition. He behaved with great spirit and loyalty during the civil wars, till the ruin of the royal cause obliged him to go abroad. After the Restoration he was created duke of Newcastle. Died 25 Dec., 1676. He wrote several plays and poems, but his folio treatise on Horsemanship is the best known of his works.

NEWCOMB, THOMAS, was born in Hertfordshire 1675, and educated at Oxford; after which he became rector of Stopham, Sussex. He also kept an academy at Hackney. He died about 1766. Dr. Newcomb wrote several poems, some of which possess considerable merit.

NEWCOME, WILLIAM, a learned prelate, born at Barton-le-Clay, Bedfordshire, 10 April 1720. He was educated at Abingdon School, whence he removed first to Pembroke College, and next to Hertford College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1765 he accumulated his degrees in divinity, and was appointed chaplain to the earl of Hertford, viceroy of Ireland, who promoted him to the bishopric of Dromore, from whence, in 1775, he was translated to Ossory; in 1779 to Waterford; and in 1795 to Armagh. He died at Dublin 11 Jan., 1800. His works are—A Harmony of the Gospels; Observations on our Lord's Conduct as a Divine Instructor; An Attempt towards an improved Version, a Metrical Arrangement, and an Explanation of the twelve Minor Prophets; An Attempt towards an improved Version of the Prophet Ezekiel; A Review of the chief Difficulties in the History of the Resurrection; An Historical View of the English Biblical Translations; An Attempt towards Revising our English Translation of the Greek Scriptures, or the New Covenant of Jesus Christ, 2 vols.

NEWCOURT, RICHARD, one of the proctors of the Court of Arches, and registrar of the diocese of Canterbury, died at Greenwich Feb. 1716. He published 'Repertorium Ecclesiasticum Parochiale Londinense,' 2 vols. folio, 1708.

NEWDIGATE, SIR ROGER, Bart., of Arbury, Warwickshire, was born 30 May, 1710; educated at Westminster School and University College, Oxford; represented Middlesex in the House of Commons 1751-80; died 25 Nov., 1806. He was a liberal benefactor to the university of Oxford, and gave to it 1000*l.*, to be vested in the funds, for an annual prize for English verses on sculpture, painting, and architecture.

NEWPORT, GEORGE, F.R.S., a naturalist, was the son of a wheelwright at Canterbury, and having a taste for natural history, became the curator of the museum in that city. He next studied medicine in University College, London, and settled as a surgeon in the West End of the metropolis, but failed to obtain an extensive practice, as his attention was almost entirely engrossed by microscopical investigations and philosophical pursuits. The results of his researches were published in the 'Philosophical Transactions.' Died in London 7 April, 1854.

NEWPORT, MAURICE, an English Jesuit, who died in London 4 Dec., 1687, æt. 76, was the author of a Latin poem, much admired at the time of its publication, entitled 'Votum candidum, seu Poema congratulatorium, Carolo II. Regi Angliæ dedicatum,' 1609.

NEWTON, GILBERT STUART, R.A., a painter, born at Halifax, Nova Scotia, 2 Nov., 1795; died at Chelsea, England, 3 Aug., 1835. Among his works are 'Shylock and Jessica'; 'Yorick and the Grisette'; 'The Abbat Boniface'; 'Macheath'; and 'Abelard in his Study.'

NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, the prince of philosophers, was born 25 Dec., 1642, at Woolsthorpe, in the parish of Colsterworth, Lincolnshire. His father died before the birth of this child, and the widow took for her second husband a clergyman of the name of Smith, by whom she had one son and two daughters. Isaac was educated at Grantham School, where he displayed his genius in the construction of several curiosities, particularly a windmill and wooden clock. He had also a turn for drawing, and took several portraits from the life. His mother, on the death of her second husband, took him home to attend the farm; but finding the business ill managed, she sent him to school again, and, in 1660, to Trinity College, Cambridge. Here he studied the mathematics with great diligence, and in 1664 made the discovery of the nature of light and colours. The next year, being obliged to leave the university on account of the plague, he conceived the idea of the system of gravitation, by seeing an apple fall from a tree in his garden. Thus, from the most simple occurrence, his penetrating mind was enabled to trace the principle which keeps the planets in motion and preserves the universe in order. In 1667 he obtained a fellowship in his college; and two years afterwards Dr. Barrow resigned to him the mathematical professorship. In 1671 he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1687 he was one of the delegates appointed to defend the privileges of the university of Cambridge before the High Commission court, where he conducted the cause so ably that James II. dropped his design of obtruding a monk upon that learned body for a degree. The year following Mr. Newton was chosen into parliament for the university, as he also was in 1701. In 1696 he was made warden of the Mint, in the discharge of which office he saved the country above eighty thousand pounds by the improvement of the coinage. In 1699 he was appointed master and worker of the Mint, which situation he held till his death. On being chosen president of the Royal Society, in 1703, he resigned his professorship; and in 1705 he received the honour of knighthood from Queen Anne. He enjoyed his faculties to the close of his long life. His temper also was remarkably even, and he might almost be said to have carried patience too far, particularly in suffering other men to run away with the merit of his discoveries. This would have been the case in regard to the invention of fluxions if some of his friends had not interposed and asserted the claim of their illustrious countryman. Sir Isaac was not only a philosopher but a Christian, and spent much of his time in elucidating the sacred Scriptures; nor could anything discompose his mind so much as light and irreverent expressions on the subject of religion. He died, without a will, March 20, 1727; and on the 28th his body lay in state in the Jerusalem Chamber, from whence it was conveyed to Westminster Abbey, the pall being borne by the lord chancellor, two dukes, and three earls. A monument was afterwards erected to his memory; and his statue, by Koubiliac, has been placed in Trinity College. An entire edition of his works was published by Bishop Horsley, in 5 vols. 4to. Of his 'Principia,' published first in 1687, the best edition is that by the Jesuits, Le Seur and Jacquier, 4 vols. 4to. There is a good English translation of it by Motte, in 2 vols. 8vo. Sir Isaac also left an immense number of manuscripts, of which two only have been published, 'The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms,' and 'Observations on the Prophecies.' His Correspondence with Professor Cotes was published by J. Edleston, 1850.

NEWTON, JOHN, D.D., was born at Oundle, Northamptonshire, 1622, and educated at Oxford. He died rector of Ross, Herefordshire, 25 Dec., 1678. Dr. Newton published 'Astronomia Britannica'; 'Trigonometria Britannica'; and other works on mathematical subjects.

NEWTON, JOHN, was born in London 24 July, 1725. He was bred to the sea under his father, who was master of a merchant vessel. Afterwards he sailed in the Guinea trade, and led a very irregular life for some years; but at last he grew both serious and studious. By indefatigable diligence he attained a knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages, and in 1764 was ordained on the curacy of Olney, in Buckinghamshire, where he became acquainted with Cowper the poet and Mr. Thornton the banker, the latter of whom presented him, in 1770, to the living of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street. He died 31 Dec., 1807. His works are, A Narrative of his own Life; a Review of Ecclesiastical History; Olney Hymns, in which are some by his friend Cowper; Omicron's letters on religious subjects; Cardiphonia, or the Utterance of the Heart; The Messiah, a series of sermons.

NEWTON, RICHARD, D.D., was born in Buckinghamshire about 1676; became principal of Hart Hall, Oxford, 1710; died 21 April, 1753. In 1740, at a great expense, he erected Hart Hall into a college. His works are, University Education; Pluridities indefensible; The Characters of Theophrastus; Sermons.

NEWTON, SAMUEL, alderman of Cambridge, died 21 Sept., 1718, aged 80. He left in MS. a curious diary, of which much use has been made by Mr. Charles Henry Cooper, in his 'Annals of Cambridge.' Two volumes of Newton's MS. collections are in the Harleian library.

NEWTON, THOMAS, a schoolmaster and physician, was born at Butley, Cheshire, and educated at Macclesfield School, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Oxford, and afterwards to Queen's College, Cambridge. On entering into orders he became master of Macclesfield School, where also he practised physic; but in 1583 he obtained the living of Little Ilford, in Essex. He died May, 1607. His principal works are, History of the Saracens; Approved Medicines and Cordial Precepts; Illustriumi aliquot Anclorum enomia; The Herbal to the Bible, translated from Lemnius. He was one of the most elegant Latin poets of his age, and wrote a large number of the commendatory verses which it was then the fashion to prefix to printed works.—Athen. Cantab.

NEWTON, THOMAS, an English prelate, born at Lichfield 1704. He was educated at the grammar school of his native city, and next at Westminster, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1744 he was presented to the rectory of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, and the year following took his doctor's degree. In 1749 he published an edition of Milton's Paradise Lost, with notes, and the life of the author; which was followed by the Paradise Regained, in a similar form. In 1754 appeared the first volume of his Dissertations on the Prophecies, which he completed in 1758. He was made prebendary of Westminster in 1757, and soon after precentor of York, both which preferments he resigned in 1761, on his promotion to the see of Bristol and a canon-residentiaryship of St. Paul's. In 1768 he was made dean of St. Paul's. He died 14 Feb., 1782, and the same year his works were printed, with a memoir of the author, written by himself, in 2 vols.

NEWTON, SIR WILLIAM JOHN, an eminent miniature painter, born 1785, in London, where he died 22 Jan., 1809.

NEY, MICHEL, duke of Elchingen and prince of Moskva, a French marshal, born at Sarrelouis 10 Jan., 1769. After receiving a tolerably good education he was placed with a public notary, but this sedentary occupation did not suit him; so after some time he ran away and enlisted in a regiment of hussars. He was made a lieutenant 1793, and the following year was appointed by General Kleber to the head of a body of 500 partisans. The men he commanded were destined to very hazardous and enterprising services, and Ney, as their leader, acquired the surname of the Indefatigable. In three or four years he fought his way up to the command of a division, and in Nov., 1799, he put the seal to his celebrity by a plan which he laid and successfully executed for taking the city of Mannheim. This achievement procured him the rank of marshal, and soon afterwards he crossed the Rhine into Alsace and fought a well-contested battle, in memory of which he was subsequently created duke of Elchingen. His station was on the right of the grand army, and his opponent the Archduke John, whom, after a series of brilliant successes, he chased from the Tyrol, and whose rear he cut to pieces at the foot of Mount Brenner just as Napoleon conquered at Austerlitz. Such indeed had been his conduct during the campaign of 1800-7 that the veteran conquerors of the continent unanimously dignified him with the title of Bravest of the Brave. He was next employed in the Peninsula, where he destroyed many of the guerilla parties, overran Galicia and the Asturias, defeated Sir Robert Wilson, and cut off many convoys of the allies. In the campaign against Portugal he was compelled by the impregnable lines of Torres Vedras to retreat; but his retreat was a brilliant one. He sustained unmoved the incessant assaults of Lord Wellington's overwhelming forces, though he commanded only a corps of 6000 men; and thus enabled the whole army to retire in perfect safety to Miranda del Corvo. Presently, however, a dispute occurred between him and the commander-in-chief, whom he flatly refused to obey, and for this act of insubordination Ney was divested of his command and ordered to return to France. In the expedition to Russia Ney added to his laurels at the sanguinary battle of the Moskva, but still more by his masterly and heroic conduct in the retreat of Moscow as commander of the rear guard. In the campaign of 1813 Ney contributed to the victories of Bautzen, Lützen, and Dresden; but he and Oudinot received a severe check at Dennewitz from the crown prince of Sweden. On the restoration of the Bourbons Ney was created a knight of St. Louis and a peer of France; and on the return of Napoleon from Elba he was ordered to oppose his advance to Paris. He not only promised fidelity to Louis XVIII., but it is said undertook to bring Napoleon to Paris in an iron cage. However this may be, on his arrival at Besançon he found such a general manifestation of feeling in favour of Napoleon that he immediately tendered him his services. He behaved with his usual heroism at the battle of Waterloo, where five horses were shot under him, his garments pierced with balls, and his whole person covered with blood and mud. Foreseeing the consequence of his defection from Louis he secreted himself with one of his relatives at the château of Bessaris, but was discovered by means of a sabre given to him by Napoleon, which was remarked lying on a sofa by one of his relative's visitors, and the circumstance communicated to the prefect. He was tried by the Chamber of Peers, and being found guilty of treason was sentenced to be shot. The sentence was carried into execution at Paris 7 Dec., 1815. Ney was sincere and honest even to bluntness, merciful, with rare exceptions, to the vanquished, and, equally detesting rapine and extortion, lived and died poor.

NICCOLINI, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian poet, born near Pisa 31 Oct., 1728; died at Florence 20 Sept., 1801. His best works are 'Antonio Foscarini' and 'Arnoldo di Brescia.'

NICERON, JEAN PIERRE, a biographer, born at Paris 1685. He entered into the order of Barnabites, after which he taught the classics and rhetoric, at Loches, in Touraine; but was recalled to the college of Montargis, to hold a professorship; and afterwards he removed to Paris, where he died 8 July, 1738. His great performance is entitled 'Memoirs of Men illustrious in the Republic of Letters, with a critical Account of their Works,' 40 vols. 12mo. He translated several English books into French.

NICHOL, JOHN PRINGLE, LL.D., an astronomer, born at Brechin, Forfarshire, 13 Jan., 1804. He entered the ministry; became professor of astronomy at Glasgow 1836; and died 19 Sept. 1859. Dr. Nichol was the first to make the public familiar with what is called the 'Nebular Hypothesis.' He published several works on astronomical subjects.

NICHOLAS I., a Roman, succeeded Pope Benedict III. 858; died 13 Nov., 867.

NICHOLAS II., Gerard of Burgundy, was elected Pope 1058, and died 22 July, 1061.

NICHOLAS III. John Cajetan, was elected Pope 1277, and died 22 Aug. 1280.

NICHOLAS IV. Jerome of Ascoli, succeeded Pope Honorius IV. 1288, and died 4 April, 1292.

NICHOLAS V. Thomas de Sarzana, succeeded Pope Eugenius IV. 1447, and died 24 March, 1455.

NICHOLAS I. emperor of Russia, was born 7 July, 1796, being the third son of the Emperor Paul, at the time of whose murder in 1801 he was only five years old. On the proclamation of peace in 1815 he made the tour of Europe, visiting especially the scenes of the great battles of modern times, and also the courts of various nations; and in the following year he came to London, where his youthful and martial appearance gained him the general good-will. In 1817 he married Charlotte, eldest daughter of the king of Prussia, Frederick William III., and the years from this period to his accession formed the brightest portion of his life. On the death of his brother Alexander in 1825 he ascended the throne, his elder brother Constantine having been incapacitated from reigning in consequence of his marriage with a Polish lady. The accession of Nicholas to the throne became the signal for a formidable insurrection, in the prompt suppression of which the new czar showed great personal courage and presence of mind, but at the same time a cold-blooded and unrelenting disposition. Both in the present emergency and on another occasion somewhat later, when the prevalence of the cholera excited a tumult among the ignorant population of St. Petersburg, the czar showed what can be done by a strong will and iron nerve; on both occasions he walked forth into the midst of the excited populace and commanded them to fall down upon their knees. The populace obeyed, and Nicholas in describing the scene is said to have declared that was the finest moment of his life. Throughout his career he was animated by a desire to crush out every spark of freedom from his country, and to establish a rigid absolutism. 'Despotism,' he said, 'is the very essence of my government, and it suits the genius of the land.' In 1826 he declared war against Persia, and after continuing more than a year it was concluded by a treaty whereby the shah ceded two fine provinces to Russia, and bound himself to pay twenty millions of silver roubles as the penalty of resistance. About a year later he was successful in a war against Turkey. The revolution of 1830-31 in Poland terminated in the annihilation of Polish nationality and the absorption of that country into the empire of the czar, who was determined to Russinize all his subjects, and who accordingly promoted Pan Slavism, a movement for the amalgamation of all races of Slavonic descent into one body, having one language, one literature, one social polity, and one religion. To accomplish this end the United Greeks, a body who acknowledged the authority of the Pope while preserving the usages of the Greek Church, were compelled to join the orthodox establishment, while the Protestants of the Baltic provinces were persecuted and the Jews subjected to the most barbarous treatment. The best purpose of the czar's life was the emancipation of the serfs. His ambition of gaining preponderance in Turkey was constantly perceptible during his reign, and led, in 1853, on the occasion of a controversy about the guardianship of the Holy Places at Jerusalem and the protectorate over the Danubian Principalities, to the rupture with England and France which resulted in the Crimean war. Russia was now left alone to confront the combined forces of England, France, Turkey, and Sardinia. The anxiety consequent upon this gigantic undertaking hastened the death of the czar, which took place 2 March, 1855. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Alexander II.

NICHOLS, FRANK, M.D., F.R.S., was born in London 1699. He went from Westminster School to Exeter College, Oxford, in which university he was chosen reader of anatomy 1726. Afterwards he settled in London, and in 1734 was appointed Gulstonian reader and lecturer on surgery to the college of physicians. In 1753 he succeeded Sir Hans Sloane as physician to the king. He died at Epsom 7 Jan., 1778. Dr. Nichols published—'De Anima Medica'; 'De Motu Cordis et Sanguinis in homine nato et non nato'; 'The Petition of the Unborn Babies to the Censors of the Royal College of Physicians.' This last was against man-midwifery.

NICHOLS, JAMES, a printer of Hoxton Square, London; died 26 Nov., 1861, aged 70. He was the author of 'Arminianism and Calvinism,' 1824.
