BROOME, WILLIAM, LL.D., an English poet, was born in Cheshire, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A., and entered into orders. He was employed, in conjunction with Ozell and Oldisworth, in translating the Iliad into prose. After this he was engaged by Pope to make extracts from Eustathius, for the notes to his translation of the Iliad; and when the Odyssey was contracted for, Broome had no fewer than eight books allotted to his share, with all the notes, for which he received five hundred pounds and a hundred copies. Afterwards a difference arose between Pope and Broome, which was carried so far as to induce the former to give his old friend a place in the Dunciad. In 1728 he took the degree of doctor of laws at Cambridge. He was some time rector of Sturston, in Suffolk, which he resigned on being presented to the livings of Pulham and Oakley Magna. He next obtained the vicarage of Eye, on which he gave up Pulham. Dr. Broome died at Bath 16 Nov., 1745. He published a volume of poems, and two sermons.

BROSCHI, CHARLES. See FARINELLI.

BROSSARD, SÉBASTIEN DE, a French musician, born 1600, was music master at the cathedral of Strasburg, and afterwards at Meaux, and canon of that church. Died 10 Aug., 1730. He wrote a 'Dictionary of Music,' and 'Podromus Musicalis.'

BROSSE, GUI DE LA, a French botanical writer, physician to Louis XIII., died 1641.

BROSSE, JOSEPH DE LA. See ANGE DE ST. JOSEPH.

BROSSES, CHARLES DE, a French writer, president of the parliament of Burgundy, was born 17 Feb., 1709, and died 7 May, 1777. He wrote Letters on the Discovery of Herculaneum; History of Voyages to the Southern Regions; Parallel between the Idolatry of the Negroes and that of the Ancients; Treatise on the mechanical formation of Languages; History of the Roman Republic, taken chiefly from Sallust. His 'Correspondence' with Voltaire was published in 1836.

BROSSETTE, CLAUDE, a French lawyer, author of a history of Lyons, his native town, and other works, was born 8 Nov., 1671, and died 16 June, 1743.

BROTHERS, RICHARD, an English visionary, and self-styled 'prophet,' was born about 1700, and died 25 Jan., 1824.

BROTIER, ANDRÉ CHARLES, nephew of Gabriel mentioned below, was born 1751. He published his uncle's 'Paroles Mémorables,' and some other works. During the revolution he conducted a journal, for which he was expropriated to Cayenne, where he died 13 Sept., 1798.

BROTIER, GABRIEL, an eminent scholar, was born at Tannay, in the Nivernois, 5 Sept., 1723, and died at Paris 12 Feb., 1789. He was a member of the Society of Jesus, but on the dissolution of his order, went to reside with M. de la Tour, the eminent printer, under whose roof he continued 26 years, during which period he published many valuable works, chiefly on classical subjects.

BROUGH, ROBERT BARNABAS, a comic writer, born in London, 1828; died at Manchester 26 June, 1860. He wrote a number of burlesques, which were received with great applause, and was a constant contributor to most of the comic publications of his day. He likewise wrote some novels and several songs and short poems of great sweetness and beauty. Memoirs of him have been written by Mr. G. A. Sala and Mr. J. Hollingshead.

BROUGHTON, CHARLES, a writer to the Signet in Edinburgh, who died 1823, having published in 1814 a 'Memoir respecting a new Theory of Numbers.'

BROUGHTON, HUGH, a divine, was born in 1549 at Oldbury, in Shropshire. He is said to have been educated at the expense of Bernard Gilpin, who sent him to Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in Christ's College. From the university, where he acquired an uncommon knowledge of the Hebrew language, he removed to London and became a distinguished preacher, though strongly inclined to puritanism. In 1588 he published a celebrated book, entitled 'The Consent of Scriptures,' consisting of the chronology and genealogy of the Bible reduced into harmony. This work was opposed at Oxford by John Keynolds, and at Cambridge, by Lively. The year following, Broughton went to Germany, where he had a long dispute with one of the most learned rabbis at Frankfurt. In 1591 he returned to England, and soon after engaged in a dispute with Whitgift and Bilson, on the article of 'Christ's Descent into Hell.' In 1592 he went to Germany again, and published a book called 'Sinai Light,' engraved on brass at a great expense. On the accession of James I. he came back to England; but not meeting with the encouragement he expected, particularly in regard to the new translation of the Bible, he went abroad as a pastor to the English congregation at Middleburgh. In 1611 he returned home for his health, and died of consumption 4 Aug., 1612. He was a good Hebrew scholar, but extremely vain and conceited. All his works were collected and printed at London in 1692, folio.

BROUGHTON, JOHN, a celebrated pugilist, served an apprenticeship to a waterman, and plied at Hungerford Stairs. Upon some accidental difference with one of his brethren, he fought with him, and by that means discovering his ability, he commenced public boxer, had an academy at Tottenham Court, and continued unrivalled until his unfortunate engagement with Slack. He afterwards became one of the yeomen of the guards, and died at Lambeth 8 Jan., 1789, æt. 88.

BROUGHTON, RICHARD, an English historian and divine of the Roman communion, was born at Great Strakely, Huntingdonshire, and educated in the English College at Rheims, being ordained priest 1593. Afterwards being sent upon the English mission, he divided his time between his pastoral functions and the study of British Antiquities, with which design he sometimes resided at Oxford, where he was entered as a sojourner 1626. He was in great esteem among his brethren, an assistant to the archpriest, a canon of the chapter, and vicar-general to Dr. Smith, bishop of Chalcedon. Died 18 Jan., 1634. His works are 'An Apologetical Epistle, in answer to a Book, that undertakes to prove Catholicism cannot be good Subjects;' 'A Continuation of the Catholic Apology taken from Protestant Authors;' 'An Ecclesiastical History of Great Britain: deduced by Ages, or Centuries, from the Nativity of our Saviour unto the happy Conversion of the Saxons,' 2 vols., Douay, 1633; 'A true Memorial of the present, most holy, and Religious State of Great Britain, flourishing with Apostles, Apostolical Men, Monasteries, Religious Rules and Orders in Great Number, in the time of the Britons, and primitive Church of the Saxons;' 8vo., 1650; 'The Judgment of the Apostolical Ages upon the 20 Articles,' 8vo., Douay, 1632.

BROUGHTON, SAMUEL DANIEL, an English surgeon, born at Bristol, July, 1787; died in London 20 Aug., 1837. He contributed some papers to the Philosophical Transactions, and published 'Letters from Portugal, Spain, and France,' written during the campaigns of 1812-14.—Rosé.

BROUGHTON, THOMAS, a divine and biographer, born in London 5 July, 1704. He was educated at Eton, from whence he removed to Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degree of master of arts. In 1739 he was instituted to the rectory of Stibington, in Huntingdonshire, soon after which he was chosen reader at the Temple Church, where he gained the favour of Bishop Sherlock, who in 1744 gave him the vicarage of Bedminster and St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol, with a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury. He died at Bristol 21 Dec., 1774. Mr. Broughton was one of the writers of the great Historical Dictionary and the Biographia Britannica; besides which he published 'Christianity distinct from the Religion of Nature;' 'Translations of the Mottos of the Spectator, Tatler, and Guardian, &c. &c.; the first and third Olynthiacs, and four Philippics, of Demosthenes, revised, 8vo.; 'The Bishops of London and Winchester on the Sacrament compared, 8vo.; 'Hercules,' a musical drama; 'Bibliotheca historico-sacra, or Dictionary of all Religions,' 2 vols. folio; 'A Defence of the commonly received Doctrine of the Human Soul,' 8vo.; 'A Prospect of Futurity in four Dissertations.' His father, the Rev. John Broughton, rector of St. Andrew, Holborn, wrote an ingenious treatise on the Soul's Immateriality, 8vo.

BROUGHTON, THOMAS DUER, an English writer and colonel in the East India Company's service, died in London 16 Nov., 1835, aged 57. He published 'Letters from a Mahratta Camp;' 'Selections from the Popular Poetry of the Hindoos,' 8vo., 1814; and other works.

BROUGHTON, WILLIAM ROBERT, a naval officer of great reputation, was the son of Charles Broughton, Esq., of Charlton Kings, in Gloucestershire. He entered the naval service at an early age, and was engaged as a midshipman on the breaking out of the American war in 1774. In 1778 he was made a lieutenant while serving in the East Indies; and in 1790 he was appointed to accompany Captain Vancouver on a voyage of discovery, in which employment he commanded the 'Chatham' brig. While engaged in this enterprise he travelled across the continent of New Spain, and from thence to England, to give intelligence respecting the differences relating to Nootka Sound, for which he was made a master and commander. He was also appointed to the 'Providence' sloop, destined to take possession of Nootka Sound: on reaching which settlement, he resolved to survey the coast of Asia, from the 35th to the 52d degree of north latitude. In the execution of this design he ascertained that the great Gulf of Tartary has no channel; and he also made very accurate surveys of the coasts of Japan and the Loo Choo Islands. Of this interesting voyage he published an account in one quarto volume, 1808. In 1797 he was made a post captain, and at various periods commanded the 'Batavier,' of fifty-four guns, the 'Penelope' frigate, of thirty-six, the 'Illustrious,' of seventy-four, the 'Royal Sovereign,' a first-rate, and ultimately the 'Spenser,' a guardship at Plymouth. The principal service in which he was engaged was the capture of Java, where he acted as commodore, and for which he was made a Companion of the Bath, and colonel of the marines. He died at Florence 12 March, 1821.

BROUN, Sir RICHARD, Baronet, was a knight commander of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, and secretary of that order in England, and also to the committee of baronets for privileges. He was also secretary of the Central Agricultural Society, and the author of various works on heraldry, colonization, railway extension, &c. Born 1801; died Dec., 1858.

BROUNCKER, WILLIAM, Viscount Brouncker, of Castle Lyons, in Ireland, was born about 1620. He was the first president of the Royal Society, and also master of St. Katharine's, near the Tower. Some of his papers on mathematical subjects are in the Philosophical Transactions. Several of his letters to Archbishop Usher are at the end of that prelate's Life by Parr. A translation by him of Descartes' Compendium of Music was published without his name. Died 5 April, 1684.

BROUSSON, CLAUDE, a French Protestant minister and writer, was born at Nîmes, 1645, and broken on the wheel at Montpellier, 4 Nov., 1698.

BROUSSONET, PIERRE MARIE AUGUSTE, a French naturalist, born at Montpellier, 28 Feb., 1761; died 27 July, 1807.

BROWALLIUS, JOHN, bishop of Abo, in Finland, wrote several valuable works on theology, and natural history. He warmly defended Linnæus against his adversaries, and the great naturalist showed his appreciation of this by naming a genus of plants after him, 'Browallia.' Born 1707; died 25 July, 1755.

BROWER. See BRAWER.

BROWER, CHRISTOPHER, a Jesuit and distinguished classical scholar, was born at Arnheim 1559, and died at Treves 2 June, 1617.

BROWN, See MONTAGU, Viscount.

BROWN, Sir CHARLES, M.D., an eminent English physician, died 11 May, 1827, aged 80.

BROWN, CHARLES BROCKDEN, an American novelist and miscellaneous writer, born at Philadelphia 17 Jan., 1771; died 22 Feb., 1810.

BROWN, DAVID, was born in Yorkshire 1763, and educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge. After taking orders he proceeded to India, and became provost of Fort William College, and senior chaplain of the Bengal presidency. Died 1812. His Life, with a selection from his sermons, was published in 1816.

BROWN, GEORGE, an English Benedictine, translated from the Italian the 'Life of St. Mary Magdalen de Pazzi,' 1619. He died at Celle, near Paris, 1628.

BROWN, GEORGE, a nonjuring clergyman, who died 1730, æt. 80, was author of 'A Specie Book, serving at one view, to turn any pure number of any pieces of Silver, current in this Kingdom, into Pounds Scots or Sterling,' 12mo., Edinburgh, 1700; 'Rotula Arithmetica, with an Account thereof,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1700; 'System of Decimal Arithmetic,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1701; and 'Arithmetica Infinita, or the accurate Accomptant's Best Companion; with Tables of Interest, all done on copper-plates,' 12mo., 1718.

BROWN, GEORGE, an English prelate of the Roman communion, was consecrated bishop of Tloa, and appointed vicar-apostolic of the Lancashire district 24 Aug., 1840; was transferred to the newly-erected see of Liverpool 1850; and died 25 Jan., 1856.

BROWN, IGNATIUS, an Irish Jesuit, born at Waterford 1630, and joined the Society of Jesus at Compostella at the age of 21. He became the first rector of the house of studies, established at Peitiers, in connection with his order, and died at Valladolid 1679. He wrote 'The Unerring and Unerrable Church,' 8vo., 1675; 'An Unerrable Church or None,' 8vo., 1678; and 'Pax Vobis,' 1679; 5th edition, 1742.

BROWN, JAMES, M.D., a physician of Kello, in the county of Roxburgh, died 1733. He published anonymously a translation of two 'Orations of Isocrates.'

BROWN, JAMES, an English traveller and scholar, was born at Kello, Roxburghshire, 23 May, 1709, being son of the preceding. After receiving a liberal education at Westminster School, he visited Constantinople, where he acquired a knowledge of several languages. In 1725 he returned home, and about 1732 he first started the idea of a very useful book, 'The Directory,' or list of principal traders in London; and having taken some pains to lay the foundation of it, he gave it to Henry Kent, a printer, who continued it from year to year, and acquired an estate by it. Mr. Brown afterwards resided for some years in Persia, and compiled a MS. Dictionary and Grammar of the language of that country. He died at Stoke Newington 30 Nov., 1788.

BROWN, JOHN, D.D., was born at Rothbury, Northumberland, 5 Nov., 1715, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where, in 1735, he took his degree of B.A., and two years afterwards entered into orders. His first settlement was at Carlisle, where he became minor canon of the cathedral; and in the rebellion acted as a volunteer against the rebels. Dr. Osbaldeston, bishop of the diocese, made him his chaplain, and the dean and chapter gave him the living of Moreland, in Westmoreland. His poem entitled 'An Essay on Satire,' addressed to Warburton, led to his acquaintance with that writer, who introduced him to Mr. Allen, at Prior Park. During his stay there he preached at Bath a sermon against gaming, which had a very great effect. In 1751 appeared his Essays on Shattisbury's Characteristics. He obtained the living of Great Horkeley, Essex, 1754; and the next year his tragedy of 'Barbarossa' was acted with success. It was followed by another called 'Athelstan.' He now took his doctor's degree, and in 1757 published the first volume of his 'Estimate of the Manners and Principles of the Times,' of which seven editions were soon printed. The second volume appeared in the following year. About this time he was presented to the vicarage of St. Nicholas, in Newcastle, on which he resigned Great Horkeley, and was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king. His next publication was the 'Cure of Saul,' a sacred ode, which was followed by a 'Dissertation on Poetry and Music.' In 1764 appeared 'The History of the Rise and Progress of Poetry;' and the same year he printed a volume of sermons. In 1765 came out his 'Thoughts on Civil Liberty, Licentiousness, and Faction;' and a sermon preached for the benefit of the female asylum. In 1766 he published a letter to Dr. Lowth, who had alluded to him as one of Dr. Warburton's sycophants. He now engaged to go to St. Petersburg to assist in the regulation of the public schools; but while preparing for the voyage he cut his throat in a fit of insanity 23 Sept., 1766.

BROWN, JOHN, a Scotch divine, born at Carpow, Perthshire, 1722. Though entirely self-taught, he became master of the learned, and of some of the modern tongues. He was chosen pastor of a congregation of seceders at Haddington, where he also conducted a school. Died 19 June, 1787. His principal works are 'The Self-Interpreting Bible,' 2 vols.; 'A Dictionary of the Bible,' 2 vols.; 'Explication of Scripture Metaphors;' 'History of the Seceders;' 'The Christian Student and Pastor;' 'Letters on the Government of the Christian Church;' 'General History of the Church,' 2 vols.; and 'Select Remains,' with his life prefixed.

BROWN, JOHN, a Scotch artist, born at Edinburgh 1752. He went to Italy at an early age, and during ten years' residence in that country acquired a perfect knowledge of the language, besides improving himself in the fine arts. On his return he settled at Edinburgh, where he contracted an intimacy with Lord Monboddo, to whom he wrote his 'Letters on the Poetry and MUSIC OF THE ITALIAN OPERA.' As an artist, his last productions were two beautiful drawings, the one of the bust of Homer, from the Townley antique, and the other of Pope. Died 5 Sept., 1787.

BROWN, JOHN, M.D., a medical writer, born at Buncle, Berwickshire, 1735. He was designed for the ministry, but soon abandoned divinity and became a student of physic at Edinburgh, where he supported himself by teaching Latin to those who were preparing for their degree, and by writing their theses. Dr. Cullen also employed him, both as a tutor in his family and as an assistant in his lectures. Subsequently, however, he turned an enemy to his benefactor, and in opposition to him projected a new theory of medicine, for which purpose he procured a diploma from St. Andrew's. Having completed his plan, he published a work entitled 'Elementa Medicinæ,' as the text-book of his system. He likewise delivered lectures, which at first were pretty well attended, but the number of his hearers soon diminished, and in 1786 he found it necessary to quit Edinburgh for London. Here he published 'Observations on the Old System of Physic;' but habitual intemperance ruined his system, and he died in a state of intoxication 8 Oct., 1788. Brunonianism, as it was called, was for some time rather fashionable, especially in Germany, but the doctrine soon fell into contempt.

BROWN, JOHN, D.D., a Scotch divine, was son of John Brown, author of the 'Self-Interpreting Bible,' and was born 12 July, 1784, in the parish of Whitburn, Linlithgowshire. In 1806 he was ordained burgher minister at Biggar, but afterwards removed to Edinburgh, where he was appointed, by the United Synod, to the professorship of Exegetical Theology. Dr. Brown, who was much involved in the religio-political controversies of the period, died 13 Oct., 1858. His more important works are:—'Expository Discourses on the First Epistle of the Apostle Peter,' 3 vols.; 'Discourses and Sayings of our Lord Jesus Christ: Eserated in a Series of Expositions,' 3 vols.; 'An Exposition of our Lord's Intercessory Prayer, with a Discourse on the Relation of our Lord's Intercession to the Conversion of the World;' 'Resurrection of Life: An Exposition of 1 Cor. xv. With a Discourse on our Lord's Resurrection;' 'Exposition of the Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Galatians.'—Anderson.

BROWN, JOHN, an active member of the Royal Geographical Society of London, was born at Dover 2 Aug., 1797, and died 7 Feb., 1861. In early life he was a midshipman in the navy, but being obliged to leave the sea in consequence of defective vision, he ultimately became a wholesale goldsmith and diamond merchant. In 1858 Mr. Brown produced his well-known book, 'The North-west Passage, and the Plans for the Search for Sir John Franklin: a Review,' of which a second edition, accompanied by a 'Sequel,' appeared in 1860.

BROWN, LANCELOT, an eminent horticulturist, who obtained the name of 'Capability Brown,' from a word often used by him when consulted on the laying out of grounds. He was born at Kirkcubright, Northumberland, Aug., 1715. He came early to London, and was employed by Lord Cobham at Stowe, and by several other persons of distinction. In ornamental gardening he surpassed his predecessors, by approaching closer to nature; and he not only discovered a very fine taste in these works, but realised a considerable fortune. He died 6 Feb., 1783, at which time he was head gardener of Hampton Court.

BROWN, LEVINUS, an English Jesuit, and friend of Pope, the poet, was born in Norfolk 9 Sept., 1671, and educated at the English college at Rome, being enrolled among the professed fathers of the Society of Jesus 31 March, 1709. He died in the college of St. Omer 7 Nov., 1764. He translated into English Bossuet's 'Variations of the Protestant Churches,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1742.

BROWN, MATHER, a painter, born in America about 1760. Coming to England when a young man, he became a pupil of his countryman, Mr. West. He was employed by Boydell to paint some of the subjects for the Shakspeare Gallery, and was afterwards honoured by being commissioned to paint portraits of their majesties, and others of the royal family. Towards the latter end of the last century he enjoyed considerable practice as a portrait painter, and for several years occupied a spacious house in Cavendish Square, which had been previously tenanted by Romney. He also painted the historical pictures from which were engraved some of the most popular prints, particularly the marquis of Cornwallis receiving the sons of Tipoo Saib as hostages. These productions had sufficient merit for public sale, but not to place Mr. Brown in a very high rank in his profession. A picture of the Resurrection, which he painted late in life, was considered one of his best productions. He died in London 1 June, 1831.

BROWN, ROBERT, the founder of a sect called 'Brownists,' was a native of Northampton, and studied at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. About 1580 he began to inveigh against the government and liturgy of the Established Church, which he reprobated as antichristian. His first attempts as a sectary were at Norwich, where the Dutch had a congregation, with whose assistance he succeeded in seducing many from the Established Church. For this he was committed to prison by the ecclesiastical commissioners. On being released he repaired to Middleburg, in Zealand, where he formed a congregation on his model of independency, and published a book entitled 'A Treatise of Reformation without staying for any man.' In 1585 he was in England, and was cited to appear before the archbishop of Canterbury, who induced him to recant his errors; but he soon relapsed, and was excommunicated, which induced him to make a second submission. In 1590 he was presented to the living of Achurch, Northamptonshire. His conformity was of short duration; and Fuller says that he had a wife with whom he never lived, and a church in which he never preached, though he received the profits thereof. After leading a turbulent life, this extraordinary character died in 1630, in Northampton Gaol.

BROWN, ROBERT, of Markie, an agricultural writer, born at East Linton, Haddingtonshire, 1757; died 14 Feb., 1831. His 'Treatise on Rural Affairs,' and his articles in the Edinburgh 'Farmer's Magazine,' which he conducted for fifteen years, evinced the soundness of his practical knowledge, and the vigour of his intellectual faculties.—Anderson.

BROWN, ROBERT, D.C.L., F.R.S., a botanical writer, born at Montrose 21 Dec., 1773; died in London 10 June, 1858. In 1801 he was attached as naturalist to H.M.S. 'Investigator,' under the command of Captain Flinders, and destined for a survey of the coast of Australia. He returned to England 1805, bringing with him nearly 4,000 species of plants, a large portion of which were entirely new to science. After acting for some time as librarian to the Linnean Society of London, he received the charge of the library and collections of Sir Joseph Banks, who left him a pension of between £200 and £300 a year, and the lease of his house in Soho Square. He was next appointed keeper of the Banksian collection in the British Museum, and from 1840 to 1853 filled the office of president of the Linnean Society. His principal works are 'Podromus Floræ Novæ Hollandiæ et Insulæ Van Diemen;' and 'Plantæ Javanicæ rariorès.' He also wrote a number of memoirs, which were collected by Dr. Nees von Esenbeck, and published under the title of 'Robert Brown's Vermischte Schriften.'

BROWN, SIR SAMUEL, knt., a captain in the British navy, was born in London 1770, and died at Blackheath 15 March, 1852. As a man of science he acquired considerable celebrity by various useful inventions, particularly his iron chain-cables. In 1817 he obtained a patent for the construction of iron suspension bridges; and his name is best known from the chain-pier at Brighton, which was erected under his superintendence.

BROWN, SAMUEL, grandson of John Brown, the author of the 'Self-Interpreting Bible,' was born at Haddington 23 Feb., 1817. In 1832 he was sent to study medicine at the university of Edinburgh, and in 1837 removed to St. Petersburg, where his eldest brother was settled; but being stricken down by typhus fever, followed by malignant dysentery, he returned home in the spring of the following year, with his health greatly shattered. He now graduated, and from this period devoted his attention mainly to chemistry. In the winter of 1840-41 he delivered a course of lectures on the Philosophy of the Sciences, in association with Edward Forbes, but they were appreciated rather than popular. In 1843 he became a candidate for the chair of chemistry at Edinburgh, but retired from the field in consequence of being unable to sustain his hastily-conceived theory respecting the isomerism of carbon and silicon. He was not, however, discouraged by this failure; on the contrary, his laboratory labours were continued more strenuously and laboriously than ever. He died at Canaan Grove, Morningside, Edinburgh, 20 Sept., 1856. Mr. Brown published two thoughtful 'Lay Sermons on the Theory of Christianity,' and 'The Tragedy of Galileo Galilei,' 8vo., London, 1850. His 'Lectures on the Atomic Theory; and Essays, Scientific and Literary,' appeared at Edinburgh in 1858, 2 vols. 8vo.

BROWN, THOMAS, an Irish secular priest, who, about 1513, wrote 'The Life of Nicholas Maguire, Bishop of Leighlin,' whose chaplain he had been.

BROWN, THOMAS, a humorous but licentious English poet, was born at Shifnall, Shropshire, and after a preliminary training at Newport School, was sent to Christchurch, Oxford. Taking advantage of a remittance from an indulgent father, and thinking he had a sufficient supply of learning and wit, he left Oxford for the metropolis. Having spent his money, he was compelled to become a school-master at Kingston-upon-Thames; but he was very soon disgusted with his new employment, and returned to London. He now published dialogues, odes, satires, letters, epigrams, and translations without number, for his tavern bills were long, and he lived solely by his pen, which, as well as his tongue, ever made him more enemies than friends. He loved low abuse, and scattered it everywhere with a liberal hand, the clergy coming in for more than their share of it. The earl of Dorset, pitying his misfortunes, invited him to a Christmas dinner, and put a £50 note under the plate. Tom Brown, as he was always called, having thrown away abilities and acquisitions sufficient to have raised him to a respectable situation in any rank of life, died in great poverty in 1704. His works have been collected in 4 vols. 12mo.

BROWN, THOMAS, professor of moral philosophy in the university of Edinburgh, was born in 1778. He received his education at the High School of Edinburgh, and afterwards proceeded to his doctor's degree in the university, where he obtained the professorship. He died at Brompton 2 April, 1820. His works are, 'Observations on Darwin's Zoonomia,' 8vo.; 'Poems,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'A Criticism on the Charges against Mr. Leslie,' 8vo.; 'The Wanderer in Norway,' a poem, 12mo.

BROWN, ULYSSES MAXIMILIAN DE, a distinguished general, was the son of Ulysses, Baron Brown, a native of Ireland, and a colonel in the Austrian service. The subject of this article was born at Basle in 1705, and at the age of twelve was with his uncle, Count George de Brown, at the siege of Belgrade. In 1723 he became captain in his uncle's regiment, and was made lieutenant-colonel 1725. He went to Corsica 1730, and was wounded in that island. In 1732 he was appointed chamberlain to the emperor, and in 1734 made full colonel. In 1739 the emperor made him field-marshal, and gave him a seat in the aulic council of war. The empress-queen placed an implicit confidence in him, and in 1744 he went to Italy, where he signalled himself by several gallant exploits. The victory of Placentia, in 1746, was principally owing to him; after which he took possession of Genoa, from whence he effected a masterly retreat. For these and subsequent services against the king of Prussia he was loaded with honours. He died at Prague, of wounds received at the battle of Potshernitz, 26 June, 1757.

BROWN, WILLIAM, D.D., minister of the parish of Eskdalemuir, in the county of Dumfries, was author of the 'Antiquities of the Jews and their Customs, illustrated from Modern Travels,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1820; 2nd edit., 2 vols. 8vo., Edinburgh, 1826. Dr. Brown died 21 Sept., 1835, æt. 69.

BROWN, WILLIAM LAWRENCE, D.D., a theological writer, born at Utrecht, of Scotch parents, 7 Jan., 1755. After studying divinity at St. Andrew's, he returned to Utrecht, and was appointed minister of the English church there—a post which had been previously occupied by his father and uncle. Subsequently he became professor of moral philosophy and ecclesiastical history at Utrecht, and rector of the university. In 1795 he succeeded Dr. Campbell in the divinity chair at the Marischal College, Aberdeen, and soon afterwards was nominated principal of that university. In 1800 he was named one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary for Scotland; and in 1804 dean of the chapel royal and of the order of the Thistle. Died 11 May, 1830. His principal works are:—'Disputatio de Fabrica Mundi, in quo Mal. insunt, Naturæ Dei perfectissimæ haud repugnante,' in the Memoirs of the Stolpian Society at Lyden,

BROWNBILL, THOMAS ROBSON. See ROBSON, FREDERICK.

BROWNE, ALEXANDER, an English engraver and writer, was author of 'Ars Pictoria, or an Academy, treating of Drawing, Painting, Limning, and Etching,' folio, 1669.

BROWNE, SIR ANTHONY, an English judge, was born in Essex, and educated at Oxford. In the second year of Queen Mary's reign he was made a serjeant-at-law, and in Oct., 1558, lord chief justice of the Common Pleas. He was removed from that office on the accession of Elizabeth, but continued to be one of the justices of that court. Died 6 May, 1597. He wrote 'A discourse upon certain points touching the inheritance of the Crown,' MS. This was answered by Sir Nicholas Bacon, the lord keeper.

BROWNE, ARTHUR, LL.D., king's professor of Greek in Trinity College, Dublin, died 1805. He published a compendious view of civil law; Hæcnon O'Neil, or beauty and the beast, an allegorical poem, translated from the Persian; and Miscellaneous Sketches, written after the manner of Montaigne.

BROWNE, DAVID, a Scotch writing-master, published his 'Calligraphia' at St. Andrew's, 1622. It is dedicated to James I., whose scribe he calls himself.

BROWNE, EDWARD, M.D., F.R.S., son of Sir Thomas Browne, was born about 1642, and educated at Norwich. In 1665 he took his degree of M.B. at Cambridge, but that of M.D. he received at Oxford 1667. After this he travelled into Austria, Hungary, Thessaly, and Italy. On his return he settled in London, being appointed physician to Charles II. and St. Bartholomew's Hospital. He was a fellow of the College of Physicians, and succeeded his father in the presidency of that institution. He died at his seat near Northfleet, Kent, 26 Aug., 1708. Dr. Browne published an account of his travels in 2 vols. 4to., and afterwards in 1 vol. folio.

BROWNE, GEORGE, the first Protestant archbishop of Dublin, was originally an Augustinian friar, and studied at Oxford. Some foreign university created him D.D., in which degree he was incorporated at Oxford 1534, and at Cambridge 1532. Previously to this he had embraced the reformed doctrines. On 12 March, 1535-6, Henry VIII. raised him to the archiepiscopal see of Dublin, and on the 10th of that month he received consecration at Lambeth from Archbishop Cranmer. He was one of the privy council of Ireland, and the chief instrument to obtain from the Irish the acknowledgment of the king's supremacy. The turbulent temper and unhappy disposition of this prelate involved him in many fierce disputes. On the accession of Queen Mary he was removed from his see because he was married. Died about 1556. He wrote 'A Device or petition for an Universitie to be founded and erected in Ireland,' 1547, printed in Shirley's 'Letters.' To him undoubtedly belongs the credit of having originated the scheme, carried out forty-four years afterwards, for the establishment of a university in Dublin.

BROWNE, ISAAC HAWKINS, F.R.S., a poet, born at Burton-on-Trent 21 Jan., 1705-6. He was educated first at Lichfield, of which cathedral his father was a prebendary, and from thence removed to Westminster School. At the age of sixteen he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. In 1727 he was entered a student of Lincoln's Inn, and in due course was called to the bar. Soon after his settlement in chambers he produced his poem on 'Design and Beauty;' but one of the most popular of his poetical pieces was the 'Pipe of Tobacco,' in which he successfully imitated the styles of Cibber, Thomson, Young, Pope, and Swift. The imitation of Ambrose Philips was written by Dr. John Hoadly, who, however, acknowledged that it was much improved by the alterations introduced by Mr. Browne. In 1744 he was elected member for Wenlock, but cut no figure in parliament. In 1754 he published his Latin poem, 'De Animi Immortalitate,' of which there have been several translations. Died 14 Feb., 1760. Mr. Browne's works were printed in 1768, 8vo.

BROWNE, ISAAC HAWKINS, D.C.L., son of the preceding, was born 1745, and educated at Westminster School and Hertford College, Oxford. After making the tour of Europe, he entered himself as a student at the Temple, but never followed the law. He was elected M.P. for Bridgnorth, which borough he represented for several years, and distinguished himself on many occasions as an able speaker. Died 1818. Mr. Browne published a collection of his father's works, and some anonymous works, chiefly on religious subjects.

BROWNE, JAMES, LL.D., a Scotch writer and journalist, born 1793; died 1841. He was sub-editor of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' but is best known by his 'History of the Highlands and of the Highland Clans,' 4 vols. 8vo. Some years before his death he became a member of the Catholic Church.

BROWNE, JAMES, D.D., Catholic bishop of Kilmore, in Ireland, died 11 April, 1805, æt. 88.

BROWNE, JOHN, an English surgeon, born 1642; died about 1700. His most curious work is a treatise on the King's Evil, and the 'Royal Gift of Healing, or Cure thereof by Contact or Imposition of Hands, performed for above six hundred and forty years by our Kings of England.'—Rose.

BROWNE, JOSEPH, LL.D., M.D., an English charlatan, published a 'Treatise on the Blood,' 1701, and 'The modern Practice vindicated,' with a 'Letter to Sir John Floyer, concerning the farther use of Cold Baths,' 8vo., London, 1705; besides which he published, but very inaccurately, the works of Sir Theodore Mayerne. He also wrote against the circulation of the blood. A libeller of the purity of Queen Anne's Whig ministry, he was exalted to the pillory; but this medico-political quack had the assurance to continue the 'Examiner' after Swift, Prior, Atterbury, Oldsworth, and Mrs. Manley had ceased to write in it; consequently it became as inferior to what it had been as his abilities were to theirs.

BROWNE, JOSEPH, D.D., a native of Cumberland, was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, of which he eventually was elected provost. Born 1700; died 17 June, 1767.

BROWNE, LANCELOT, M.D. of the university of Cambridge, principal physician to Queen Elizabeth, and James I. and his queen, died shortly before 11 Dec., 1605. He wrote a Latin epistle prefixed to Gerard's Herbal, 1597.

BROWNE, LYDE, a collector of works of art, and classical antiquary, died 10 Sept., 1787. He was a director of the Bank of England, and occupied a house in town and another at Wimbledon. His collection of antiques, statuary, &c., was amongst the choicest of his day. Shortly before his death he sold his Wimbledon collection to the empress of Russia for £22,000. Of this latter collection there are two catalogues in the British Museum; one in Latin, published in 1768; a second in Italian, fuller and more perfect, in 1769.

BROWNE, MOSES, a divine and poet, born 1703. Of his early life nothing more is known than that he was originally a pen-cutter, and that at the age of twenty he produced a tragedy called 'Polidus,' and a farce called 'All-bedevelled,' neither of which pieces possessed any merit. In 1739 he published 'Piscatory Eclogues,' which, with his poems on various subjects, were reprinted in 1739. On the establishment of the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' Mr. Browne became one of its principal correspondents. In 1750 he published an edition of Walton's Angler, which was twice reprinted, with notes. In 1752 appeared his 'Sunday Thoughts,' a serious work, which was recommended by Hervey, whose interest procured him orders in the church, and the living of Olney, Buckinghamshire. In 1763 he was chosen chaplain of Morden College, Kent, where he died 13 Sept., 1787. Besides the books already mentioned, he published two or three sermons; 'Percy Lodge,' a poem; and a translation of Zimmerman 'On the Knowledge of Christ.'

BROWNE, PATRICK, M.D., was born at Woodstock, in the parish of Crossboyne, county Mayo, in Ireland, about 1720. When young he was sent to the island of Antigua, but the climate not agreeing with his constitution, he returned to Europe, and landing in France, went to Paris, where he resided five years, and applied himself to the study of medicine. He next visited Leyden, and after two years spent there took his doctor's degree. From Holland he proceeded to London, where he practised some time, and then returned to the West Indies. After trying some of the Leeward Islands, he took up his abode at Jamaica, and whilst there exerted himself so effectually as to get Kingston made the port of clearance, instead of Spanish Town. He was also very diligent in collecting materials for a new map of the island, which was published at London 1755. Soon after this he printed his 'Civil and Natural History of Jamaica,' folio. He died at Rushbrooke, county Mayo, 29 Aug., 1790. Dr. Browne communicated to Sir Joseph Banks large collections respecting the natural history of the West Indies, and also contributed to some periodical publications 'Catalogues of the Birds and Fishes of Ireland.'

BROWNE, PETER, a native of Ireland, became provost of Trinity College, Dublin, and afterwards bishop of Cork, where he died 25 Aug., 1735. He wrote 'A Defence of Christianity against Toland; 'The Progress, Extent, and Limits of the Human Understanding;' 2 vols. of Sermons; and a tract against Drinking to the Memory of the Dead. It was a fashion among the Whigs of his time to drink to the glorious and immortal memory of King William III., which greatly disgusted the bishop, and is supposed to have given rise to the last-mentioned work. His notion was that drinking to the dead was tantamount to praying for the dead. The only effect, however, of the bishop's tract was that the Whigs added to their toast, 'in spite of the bishop of Cork.'

BROWNE, SIMON, a dissenting minister, born at Shepton-Mallet, Somersetshire, about 1680. He was educated at Bridgewater, after which he officiated for some years to a congregation at Portsmouth, but removed, in 1716, to the Old Jewry meeting in London, where he continued till 1723, when the loss of his wife and only son shook his understanding in so extraordinary a manner, that he forsook the pastoral charge entirely, and retired to his native place, where he died at the close of the year 1732. He wrote 'A Caveat against Evil Company;' 'The true character of the real Christian;' 'Hymns and Spiritual Songs;' 'Sermons;' 'A sober and charitable Disquisition concerning the importance of the doctrine of the Trinity;' 'A fit Rebuke to a ludicrous Infidel, in some remarks on Mr. Woolston's fifth Discourse on the Miracles of our Saviour;' 'A Defence of the Religion of Nature, and the Christian Revelation, against a book entitled Christianity as old as the Creation.' After his death was published 'The close of the Defence of the Religion of Nature,' &c.

BROWNE, THOMAS, B.D., was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and in 1564 became head master of Westminster School. This appointment he resigned 1570. In 1574 he was collated to the rectory of Chelsea. Died 2 May, 1585. He wrote some Latin verses, and a tragedy entitled 'Thebaïs.'

BROWNE, THOMAS, a divine, was born in Middlesex 1604, and educated at Christchurch, Oxford. Archbishop Laud, to whom he was chaplain, gave him the rectory of St. Mary, Aldermay, and obtained for him a canonry of Windsor. In the Rebellion he was deprived of these preferments, but recovered them at the Restoration. Died 6 Dec., 1673. He published 'A Key to the King's Cabinet,' 1645; a treatise in defence of Grotius against Salmasius, under the pseudonym of Simplicius Virinus; 'Dissertatio de Therapeutis Philonis adv. Henr. Valesium;' and a translation of a part of Camden's Annals of Queen Elizabeth.

BROWNE, SIR THOMAS, M.D., was born 10 Oct., 1605, in St. Michael's, Cheapside, London, his father being a mercer. He was educated at Winchester, and graduated, in 1627, at Pembroke College, Oxford. After practising physic in Oxfordshire, and visiting Ireland with his stepfather, Sir Thomas Dutton, he made 'the grand tour,' making some stay at Montpellier and Padua, then celebrated schools of medicine, and at Leyden, where he took the degree of M.D. He settled about 1634 at Shipden Hall, near Halifax, where, in his leisure hours, he composed Religio Medici. He did not intend this, he says, for publication, but it being his custom to make several copies and lend them to his friends, the work was surreptitiously printed, but so inaccurately as to induce him to issue an authorized edition. He had in the meantime removed to Norwich, and his book, being translated into Latin, and thence into several continental languages, earned him a considerable reputation. The contemptuous tone in which he had spoken of the fair sex, for he had wished that 'we might procreate like trees, without conjunction,' and had described man as the whole world, but woman as only the rib, or crooked part of man, exposed him to some railery on his marriage with Dorothy Milham, of Burlington St. Peter. The union, however, was a happy one, and the lady bore him ten children, and survived him two years. In 1646 he published 'Pseudodoxia Epidemica, or Enquiry into Vulgar and Common Errors,' in which he discusses, with much acumen and learning, the spilling of salt, the ticking of the death-watch, the ominousness of owls and ravens, and a host of kindred absurdities. He shared, however, in some of the fallacies of his contemporaries, for he believed in ghosts and witchcraft, and denied the Copernican theory and the sexuality of plants. In 1669 the discovery of some ancient urns in Norfolk led to the publication of 'Hydriotaphia,' a dissertation on the funeral rites of olden times, which was accompanied by 'The garden of Cyrus,' in which he treats of horticulture, and the mystical properties of the number five. In 1666 he presented to the Royal Society some fossil bones found at Winterton. He was knighted in 1671, on Charles II. visiting Norwich, the mayor having declined the proffered honour. Evelyn, who accompanied the royal party, speaks of Browne's house and garden as 'a paradise and cabinet of rarities, and that of the best collections, especially medals, books, plants, and natural things.' Sir Thomas died on his birthday, 19 Oct., 1682, and was buried in the church of St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich. His tomb was accidentally broken into last thirty years ago, when the features of the corpse were still recognisable. 'Christian Morals' (a continuation of Religio Medici), and some miscellaneous tracts, were published after his death. Browne was an ardent experimentalist and a keen observer; paradoxical in philosophy, he 'loved to keep the road' in theology; a staunch royalist, he disapproved arbitrary measures, and had a large toleration for religious and national differences. He was of an even temperament, had a retentive memory, and was excellent company. His style, though far too Latinized, entitles him to high rank as a prose writer.

BROWNE, THOMAS GUNTER, was born in or about 1757, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He afterwards entered the army, and rose to the rank of captain. Died about 1834 or 1835. He published 'Hermes Unmasked, with an Answer to Dr. Vincent's Hypothesis of the Greek Verb,' 1795; and 'Letters 3rd and 4th, containing the Mysteries of Metaphysics, with an Answer to Monsieur De Brosse's System of Imitative Sound.'—At. West.

BROWNE, WILLIAM, an English poet, born at Tavistock, Devonshire, 1590. He became a student of Exeter College, Oxford, and afterwards of the Inner Temple; but it does not appear that he followed the law as a profession. In his twenty-third year he published the first part of his 'Britannia's Pastorals,' folio, which was honoured with several eulogies by men of great eminence, among whom were Scelden and Drayton. In the following year appeared 'The Shepherd's Pipe,' in seven eclogues, from which, as some think, Milton took much of his 'Lycidas.' The second part of the 'Pastorals' came out in 1616, and both parts were reprinted in 1625. He had now returned to his college, where he became private tutor to Robert Dormer, earl of Carnarvon, who was slain at the battle of Newbury, 1643. He graduated M.A., and is supposed to have died in 1645. His works were edited by T. Davies, 3 vols. 12mo., London, 1772, and some 'Original Poems' of his 'never before published,' were printed at the Lee Priory Press in 1815, under the editorial care of Sir E. Brydges.

BROWNE, WILLIAM, an English botanist, born 1628; died 1678. He drew up a catalogue of the plants in the physic garden at Oxford.

BROWNE, SIR WILLIAM, M.D., was born 1602. He received his academical education at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he was created M.D. 1721. Soon after this he settled at Lynn, in Norfolk, where he published Dr. Gregory's Elements of Catoptrics and Dioptrics, translated from the Latin, to which he added three appendices. Having realised a good fortune, he removed to Queen Square, Ormond Street, London, where he resided till his death, on 10 March, 1774. Sir William was a complete oddity in his opinions, manner, and dress, but extremely good-natured. He published several light pieces in prose and verse, orations, and translations, all of which he collected and printed, with notes written in a strange style, under the title of 'Opuscula varia utriusque linguæ, medicinarum; medicorum collegium; literarum, utraque academiarum; empiricorum, eorumque cultores; sollicitatorem, præstigatorum; poetarum, criticum; patronum, patriarum; religionem, libertatem spectantia. Cum prælatione eorum editionem defendente.' To this whimsical volume he continued making additions until his death. But he will be best and longest remembered by having left three gold medals, of five guineas each, to be given yearly to three undergraduates of Cambridge; the first, for a Greek ode in imitation of Sappho; the second, for a Latin ode in imitation of Horace; and the third, for the best Greek and Latin epigrams.

BROWNE, WILLIAM GEORGE, an English traveller, was born in London, 1768, and murdered in Persia 1814.

BROWNELL, THOMAS CHURCH, an American prelate, was born 1779; consecrated Protestant bishop of Connecticut 1819; and translated to the see of Illinois 1852. He died 13 Jan., 1865. Bishop Brownell published 'The Family Prayer Book,' 1823; 'Religion of the Heart and Life,' 1839; besides numerous charges and sermons.

BROWNING, MRS. ELIZABETH BARRETT, an English poetess, was born in London 1800, and whilst still in her teens became a contributor to several of the best periodicals of the day. Her earliest acknowledged work, however, was a translation of the 'Prometheus Vincit' of Æschylus, which appeared originally in 1833, but was afterwards superseded by a new version from her more mature pen. About 1838 she fell into ill health, and having broken a blood-vessel in the region of the lungs, was ordered to winter at Torquay, where, though slowly recovering from the original disease, her health received so painful a shock from her brother's death, caused by the upsetting of a boat, that she became, and remained ever after—wards, a confirmed invalid. In the seclusion of a sick room, however, she studied the classics most carefully, and in 1844 produced the first collected edition of her poems, on which her fame chiefly rests. New editions appeared in 1850 and 1853. In the interval between the appearance of these two editions, Miss Barrett married Mr. Robert Browning, the poet. She died at Florence 29 June, 1861. In addition to the works above referred to, she was author of 'Casa Guidi Windows,' a poem; 'Aurora Leigh'; 'Times of Cyprus'; 'An Essay on Mind'; 'The Poet's Own'; 'Cowper's Grave'; 'Bertha in the Lane'; 'Catharine to Camoens'; and 'Poems before Congress.'—Ann. Reg.

BROWNLOW, RICHARD, one of the prothonotaries of the court of Common Pleas, and founder of the Tyrconnel family, wrote several legal works. Among them are 'Writs Judicial,' 1653; 'Declarations and Pleadings,' 1654; 'Placita Latine Rediviva,' 1661. In 1651 there appeared 'Reports of diverse choice Cases in Law taken by those late and most judicious Prothonotaries of the Common Pleas, Richard Brownlow and John Goldesborough, Esqrs., with Directions how to proceed in many intricate actions both real and personal.'

BROWNRIG, RALPH, an English prelate, was born 1592, at Ipswich. He received his education at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow, and there took his doctor's degree in 1626. His first preferments were the rectory of Barley, in Hertfordshire, and a prebend of Ely. In 1629 he was collated to a prebend in Lichfield Cathedral, but resigned it on being presented to the archdeaconry of Coventry. He was also master of Catharine Hall, in Cambridge, and, in 1641, preferred to a prebendal stall in the cathedral of Durham. The year following he was consecrated bishop of Exeter, but soon lost these and all other preferments in the civil war. After suffering many hardships, he was chosen preacher at the Temple, and while in that situation had the courage to advise Cromwell to restore unto 'Cæsar that which was Cæsar's, and unto God the things that were His.' He died 7 Dec., 1659, and was buried in the Temple Church. His sermons were printed in 2 vols. folio, 1662, 1674.

BROWNRIGG, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent physician, was born in Cumberland 1711, and educated at Leyden. He settled at Whitehaven, where he realised a considerable fortune. Died 7 Jan., 1800. He published several medical works, and was author of some of the discoveries claimed by Dr. Priestley.

BROWNSWERT, JOHN, a Latin poet, was born in Cheshire about 1540, and received his education partly at Oxford and partly at Cambridge. Afterwards he became master of the grammar school at Macclesfield, where he died 15 April, 1589. He was reputed one of the best Latin poets of Elizabeth's reign. He wrote 'Progymnasmata quædam Poetica, sparsim collecta et in lucem edita, studio et industria Thomæ Newton, Cestreshyrii,' 4to., London, 1589, 1590.

BROXHOLME, NOEL, M.D., a distinguished London physician, who died 8 July, 1748.

BRUCEUS, HENRY, a learned physician and medical writer of Alost, in Flanders, was born 1531, and died 31 Dec., 1593.

BRUCE, ARCHIBALD, M.D., a physician of New York, died 22 Feb., 1818, aged 40. In 1810 he commenced the Journal of American Mineralogy, but published only one volume.

BRUCE, DAVID, a Moravian missionary among the American Indians, died in Litchfield county, Connecticut, 1749.

BRUCE, EDWARD Lord, an eminent Scotch lawyer and statesman, born about 1549; died 14 Jan., 1611. He was an active agent of James VI., and was mainly instrumental in removing the obstacles which seemed likely to prevent the accession of that monarch to the British crown.

BRUCE, JAMES, a celebrated traveller, born at Kinnaird, in Stirlingshire, 14 Dec., 1730. He was educated first at Harrow School, and next at Edinburgh, where he studied the law, which profession, however, he did not follow. On leaving the university he went to London, and entered into partnership with Mr. Allan, a wine merchant, whose daughter he married; but his wife dying of consumption a few months after their union, he relinquished trade, and in 1762 went to Algiers as consul. After staying there about a year, he travelled into Asia, and made drawings of the ruins of Palmyra and Baalbec. In 1768 he set out to explore the source of the Nile. From Alexandria he went to Cairo, and crossed the Desert to the Red Sea, after which he spent a considerable time in Arabia Felix. In 1770 he arrived at Gondar, in Abyssinia, where he rendered himself a favourite at court by his skill in physic. Afterwards he served in the Abyssinian army under the king, and it was with difficulty that he obtained leave to quit the country, after residing there two years. He returned to England 1773, and retired to his seat at Kinnaird, where, in 1776, he married a daughter of Thomas Dundas, esq., by whom he had three children, two of whom survived him. In 1790 he published the long-expected History of his Travels, in five 4to. volumes, which contain much curious information, though the veracity of the author has been unreasonably questioned. He died 27 April, 1794, in consequence of a fall down stairs.

BRUCE, JAMES, a periodical writer, was born in Forfarshire, and educated at St. Andrew's. He then removed to Cambridge, where he became a fellow of Emmanuel College, and graduated M.A. He took orders in the English church, and afterwards became a clergyman in the Scotch episcopal church. Died in London 1800 or 1807. He furnished numerous reviews to the 'Anti-Jacobin Magazine and Review' and the 'British Critic.'—Anderson.

BRUCE, JOHN, F.R.S., a native of Scotland, was educated at Edinburgh, and was appointed professor of logic in that university. Lord Melville afterwards procured for him the office of Keeper of the State Paper Office, and Historiographer to the East India Company. Mr. Bruce was also, for a short time, secretary to the Board of Control. Died 16 April, 1826, æt. 82. His works are—Elements of the Science of First Principles of Philosophy, 1780; Ethics, 1786, being the Heads of his Lectures on Moral Philosophy; 'Historical View of Plans for the government of British India, and Regulation of the Trade of the East Indies,' 1793; 'Report on the Renewal of the East India Company's Exclusive Privileges,' 1794; 'Review of the BRUCE, MICHAEL, a Scotch poet, born of humble parents, at Kinnesswood, in the parish of Portmah, Kinross-shire, 27 March, 1746. After passing four years at the university of Edinburgh, he kept a school in his native county, and prematurely died 6 July, 1767, in the twenty-first year of his age. His poems, which are not very numerous, were revised and corrected by his friend Logan, who published them at Edinburgh in 1770; but in the edition several other poems were injudiciously inserted to fill up the volume, a circumstance which afterwards led to much uncertainty as to which were really Bruce's. The beautiful 'Ode to the Cuckoo,' the episode of 'Levina' in the poem of 'Locheleven,' the 'Ode to Paoli,' and the 'Eclogue after the manner of Ossian,' which are easily ascertained to have been the composition of Bruce, were subsequently claimed by Logan's biographer as his. The best edition of Bruce's works is that which appeared at Edinburgh in 1865, accompanied by a memoir and notes by Alexander Bruce Grosart.—Anderson's Life by Grosart.

BRUCE, PETER HENRY, a military officer, of Scotch extraction, was born in Westphalia 1692, and after serving in the Flemish campaign, under Prince Eugene, passed into the Russian service, and acted in a diplomatic capacity at Constantinople. In 1722 he repaired to Scotland, and in 1740 he was commissioned to superintend the repairs and enlargement of the fortifications in the American colonies. Died in Scotland 1757. In 1784 his 'Memoirs' appeared at London, 'containing an Account of his Travels in Germany, Russia, Tartary, Turkey, and the two Indies.'—Rose.

BRUCE, SIR WILLIAM, of Kinross, an eminent Scotch architect, who died 1710.

BRUCIOLI, ANTHONY, a native of Florence, who made Italian translations of the Bible, Pliny's Natural History, and some of the works of Aristotle and Cicero; died about 1560.

BRUCKER, JOHN JAMES, a German author, born 1696, at Augsburg, where he died 1770. His chief work is the 'Historia Critica Philosophiæ,' a judgment of which has been published in England by Enfield.

BRUMMEL.

BRUCKMAN, FRANCIS ERNEST, a German physician and writer on botany, born 1697; died 21 March, 1753. One of his treatises relates to the asbestos.

BRUCKNER, JOHN, a Lutheran divine, born in the isle of Cadsand, near the Belgian frontier, 31 Dec., 1726. He was educated at Leyden and Francker, after which he settled at Norwich as pastor of the Walloon congregation. He also undertook the charge of the Dutch church in that city, where he died 12 May, 1804. He published 'Theorie du systeme animal,' translated into English under the title of 'A Philosophical Survey of the Animal Creation,' 8vo., 1768; 'Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley,' published under the pseudonym of Cassander; and 'Thoughts on Public Worship,' against Gilbert Wakeneld.

BRUEN, JOHN, a Puritan divine, of Bruen Stapelford, in Cheshire, was born 1606, and educated at St. Alban Hall, Oxford. After the decease of the first of his three wives he took orders. Though a Puritan, he was no slave to the narrow bigotry of a sect. Died Jan., 1625. Some notes from his Life are interspersed in the 'Journal of Nicholas Asheton,' published by the Chetham Society, 1848.

BRUEN, MATTHIAS, a Protestant minister of New York, author of 'Sketches of Italy,' died 6 Sept., 1829, aged 36.

BRUÈRE, CHARLES ANTOINE LECLERC DE LA, a French dramatist, born 1715; died 18 Sept., 1754.

BRUEYS, DAVID AUGUSTIN, a French writer, born at Aix 1640; died 25 Nov., 1723. Originally a Protestant, he was converted to the Catholic Church by Bossuet, after which he attacked his former co-religionists with virulence. Afterwards he abandoned polemics, and in conjunction with Palaprat wrote a number of comedies. His dramatic pieces were printed in 3 vols. 12mo., 1735.

BRUGES, JOHN OF. See EVCK, JOHN VAN.

BRUGNATELLI, LOUIS, professor of chemistry and medicine at Pavia, his native city, was an indefatigable experimentalist, and made several important discoveries, particularly in the properties of the gastric juice, and the varieties of combustion. He published 'Bibliotheca Fisica d'Europa,' 20 vols.; 'Avanzamenti delle Medicinæ e Fisica,' 20 vols.; and other works on subjects connected with his profession. Born 1761; died 24 Oct., 1818.

BRUGUIÈRES, JEAN GUILLAUME, a French naturalist and traveller, born 1750; died 1 Oct., 1799.

BRUHIER D'ABLAINCOURT, JEAN JACQUES, a French physician, died 24 Oct., 1756. His valuable dissertations on the uncertainty of the signs of death have been translated into English.

BRUHL, HENRY, Count DE, minister of Augustus III., king of Poland, was born 1700, and died 28 Oct., 1764.

BRUIN, or BRUYN, JOHN DE, professor of philosophy and mathematics at Utrecht, and author of several ingenious treatises, was born 1620, and died 21 Oct., 1675.

BRUMMEL, GEORGE BRYAN, known as 'Beau Brummel,' the favourite of George IV. when Prince of Wales, was born 1778. He was ultimately much reduced in circumstances, and was confined in a mad-house for some time previous to his death, which took place at Caen 30 April, 1840. His Life, by Capt. Jesse, appeared in 1844.

BRUMOY.

BRUMOY, PIERRE, a French Jesuit, who rendered himself famous by an acute and entertaining work entitled 'The Theatre of the Greeks.' Born 1688; died 16 April, 1742.

BRUN, LE. See LEBRUN.

BRUN, or BRUEN, ANTHONY, an advocate of Dole, who became distinguished in diplomacy, and as a poet and miscellaneous writer, was born 1600, and died 11 Jan., 1654.

BRUNCK, RICHARD FRANÇOIS PHILIPPE, a learned critic, born 30 Dec., 1729, at Strasburg, where he died 12 June, 1803. He published editions of numerous classical works, which were hailed with admiration by the learned world.

BRUNE, GUILLAUME MARIE ANNE, a marshal of France, born 13 May, 1763; assassinated 2 Aug., 1815. He published a 'Picturesque and Sentimental Tour through several of the western provinces of France.'

BRUNEHAUT, or BRUNEHILDE, daughter of Athanagild, king of the Visigoths in Spain, and the wife of Sigibert I., king of Austrasia, during whose life she bore an excellent character. On his death she was seized, and with her two daughters sent to Rouen, where Merovee, the son of Chilperic, king of Soissons, married her. The king, however, being displeased, parted them, and sent back Brunehaut and her daughters to Austrasia, where she assumed the regency during the minority of her son Childobert. On the death of his successor, Theodebert, she resumed the same authority, and to preserve it, is charged with committing great cruelties, for which she was banished. She retired to the court of her grandson Thierry, king of Burgundy, whom she persuaded to take Paris from Clotaire. Her behaviour, according to some historians, was extremely licentious, and she is said to have poisoned Thierry, soon after which she was betrayed into the hands of Clotaire, by whose orders she was tied to the tail of a wild horse, which dragged her along till her brains were beaten out, 28 Feb., 613.

BRUNEL, ISAMBARD KINGDOM, son of Sir Marc Isambard Brunel, was born at Portsmouth, 1806, and died at Westminster 15 Sept., 1859. Mr. Brunel was one of the greatest engineers of his age. He constructed the Thames Tunnel (under his father); the Great Western Railway, with its numerous branches, bridges, viaducts, and tunnels; the South Devon and Cornwall Railway, with its stupendous Albert Bridge over the Tamar; the 'Great Western,' the 'Great Britain,' and the 'Great Eastern' steamships; the Hungerford Suspension Bridge; and numerous other stupendous works of engineering and constructive skill.

BRUNEL, SIR MARC ISAMBARD, a celebrated engineer, born at Haqueville, in Normandy, 25 April, 1769; died in London 12 Dec., 1849. He was educated for the priesthood at the seminary of St. Nic in, at Rouen, but soon evinced so strong a predilection for the physical sciences, that the superiors of the establishment recommended that he should be educated for some other profession. He then entered the French navy, and at the Revolution emigrated to the United States, where necessity as much as inclination led him to adopt the profession of a civil engineer. After having matured his plans for making ship-blocks by machinery he visited England, and offered his invention to the British Government. He experienced much opposition, but in the end was employed to erect the block machinery in Portsmouth Dockyard. It was finished in 1806, and has since continued in full operation, supplying our fleet with blocks of a very superior description to those previously in use, and at a large annual saving to the public. To Mr. Brunel we owe many other useful inventions, but his name will be chiefly remembered in connection with the 'Thames Tunnel,' which was formed after his designs. This stupendous undertaking was commenced in 1824, and completed in 1843. During Lord Melbourne's administration Mr. Brunel received the honour of knighthood.

BRUNELLESCHI, PHILIP, an Italian architect, poet, and engineer, born at Florence 1377; died 1444.

BRUNET, JEAN LOUIS, a learned French canonist, born at Arles 1688; died at Paris April, 1747.

BRUNETTO, LATINI. See LATINI.

BRUNFELS, or BRUNSFELD, OTHO, a learned physician of Strasburg, one of the earliest writers on botanical science, died 23 Dec., 1534.

BRUNI, ANTHONY, an Italian poet, who died at Rome 24 Sept., 1635.

BRUNI, LEONARD. See ARETINO.

BRUNING, ANTHONY, an English Jesuit, born 7 Dec., 1716; died at Liege 8 Aug., 1776. He wrote MS. treatises 'De Gratiâ,' 'De Deo,' 'De Trinitate,' &c.

BRUNING, JOHN, brother of Anthony Bruning, entered the society of Jesus 1756, and was stationed, first at Southend, near Soberton, Hants, and afterwards at East Henderd, Berks. Retiring to Isleworth he died there 3 June, 1802, æt. 64. He published 'The Divine Economy of Christ,' 8vo., London, 1791; and 'Remarks on the Rev. Joseph Berington's Examination of Events termed miraculous in Italy.'

BRUNINGS, CHRISTIAN, a German Protestant divine, author of 'Compendium Antiquitatum Hebraicarum,' &c., was born 16 Jan., 1702, and died 6 March, 1763.

BRUNINGS, CHRISTIAN, a Dutch hydraulic engineer, born 8 Nov., 1736; died 16 May, 1805.

BRUNN, JOHN JAMES, a physician of Basle, author of a learned treatise on Materia Medica, born 1591; died 22 Jan., 1660.

BRUNNE, ROBERT DE. See MANNING, ROBERT.

BRUNNER, BALTHAZAR, a physician and alchemist of Halle, born 1533; died 1604.

BRUNNER, JOHN CONRAD, a physician and medical writer, born in Switzerland 1653; died at Manheim 2 Oct., 1727.

BRUNO, the Great, archbishop of Cologne, duke of Lorraine, son of the Emperor Henry the Fowler, and brother of the Emperor Otho. He was much engaged in the public transactions of his time, understood Greek and Latin, and drew many learned men to Cologne. Died 11 Oct., 905.

BRUNO, ST., bishop and apostle of Prussia, suffered martyrdom 14 Feb., 1008.

BRUNO, ST., founder of the Chartreux, or Carthusian order, canon of St. Cuthbert at Cologne, and rector or prebendary of Rheims, was born at Cologne about 1030. Pope Urban II., his disciple and friend, sent for him into Italy about 1080, and offered him the archbishopric of Reggio, but he refused it and founded a monastery in Calabria, where he died 6 Oct., 1101. He was canonized 1623.

BRUNO Herbipolensis, a learned bishop of Würzburg, son of Conrad, duke of Carinthia, and uncle of the Emperor Conrad II. Several of his works are in the library of the Fathers. Died 17 May, 1045.

BRUNO, ST., of Segni, a native of Volaria, in the diocese of Asti, from whence he was called Bruno Siccius. He was bishop of Segni, and for some time abbat of Monte Cassino. Died 31 Aug., 1125. His works are in the library of the Fathers.

BRUNO, JAMES PANCRAS, a physician and medical writer of Altorff, born 23 Jan., 1629; died 13 Oct., 1709.

BRUNO, JORDANO, was born at Nola, in the kingdom of Naples, 1550. He entered the Dominican order, but becoming dissatisfied with the Roman Church, fled to Geneva, from whence he went to Paris, where he attracted notice by attacking the Aristotelian philosophy. He next visited England, and in 1589 was at Helmstadt, where he was protected by the duke of Brunswick. Venturing again into Italy, he was arrested at Padua and sent to Rome, where he was burnt at the stake 17 Feb., 1600. Bruno, who was regarded as an atheist, wrote several books, the principal of which is entitled 'Spaccio della Bestia Trionfante.'

BRUNSFELD. See BRUNFELS.

BRUNSWICK, FREDERICK WILLIAM, DUKE OF, was born 9 Nov., 1771. He assisted in liberating his country from the French yoke, and fell at the battle of Ligny 16 June, 1815.

BRUNSWICK-LUNENBURGH, CHARLES WILLIAM FERDINAND, DUKE OF, a Prussian general, born 9 Oct., 1735; died 10 Nov., 1806. An account has been published of his Campaign against the French in 1792.

BRUNSWICK-OELS, FREDERICK AUGUSTUS, DUKE OF, a general in the Prussian service, born 1741. He was the second son of Charles, duke of Brunswick, by the Duchess Philippine-Charlotte, daughter of Frederick William I., king of Prussia. His education was suitable to his rank, and on entering into the military service he distinguished himself in many actions. In 1792 he succeeded to the principality of Oels, and died at Weimar 8 Oct., 1805. The duke printed several works for private distribution. His 'Critical Reflections on the character and deeds of Alexander the Great' has been translated from the Italian into English.

BRUNTON, GEORGE, a Scotch lawyer and miscellaneous writer, born 31 Jan., 1799; died at Paris 2 June, 1836. His best-known work was undertaken in conjunction with David Haig, and is entitled 'An Historical Account of the Senators of the College of Justice.'

BRUNTON, MARY, the only daughter of Colonel Thomas Balfour, was born in the island of Barra, in Orkney, 1 Nov., 1778. She received an excellent education, under the inspection of her mother, whom she lost at an early age. In her twentieth year she became the wife of Dr. Alexander Brunton, then minister of Bolton, near Hadington, and afterwards at Edinburgh, where she published anonymously a novel, entitled 'Self Control,' which soon reached a third edition, and was followed by 'Discipline,' a novel which met with equal success. She died in child-bed, 19 Dec., 1818. After her death appeared 'Emmeline,' a tale, with some other pieces, to which is prefixed a biographical sketch, written by her husband.

BRUSCHIUS, GASPAR, an historian and poet, was born at Schlackenwald, in Bohemia, 19 Aug., 1518, and educated at Egra. He was crowned poet laureate and created count palatine by Ferdinand of Austria, king of the Romans, 1552, and was murdered 1559 by some persons who dreaded his satirical powers. His principal works are 'De Germaniæ Episcopatus Epitome,' and 'Monasteriorum Germaniæ præcipuorum Chronologia.' A collection of his Latin poems was printed at Basle 1553.

BRUSONI, JEROME, an Italian historian and poet, was born 10 Dec., 1610, and died after 1679.

BRUSONI, LUCIUS DOMITIUS, an Italian civilian of the sixteenth century, who compiled a popular work entitled 'Facetiarum Exemplorumque Libri vii,' folio, Rome, 1518. This work, which was afterwards reprinted under the title of 'Speculum Mundi,' is a collection of historical anecdotes, thoughts, maxims, and witty sayings extracted from Greek and Latin authors.

BRUTE, or BRUTUS, a supposed king of Britain, whom our chroniclers pretend to have been the son of Sylvius, who was the brother of Ascanius, and consequently the son of Æneas. On the death of his father he is said to have taken refuge in Greece, where he delivered several Trojans from slavery, with whom he passed to Albion, and established a kingdom which he called Britain. This story is now universally regarded as a fable.

BRUTO, JOHN MICHAEL, an historian, born at Venice, about 1515. He was invited to Cracow by Stephen Bathori, who wished to employ him in writing the history of Poland. Afterwards he settled at Prague, and died 1594. Among his works, which are written in correct and vigorous Latin, are 'Florentinæ Historiæ,' and 'De Origine Venetiarum.'

BRUTUS, MARCUS JUNIUS, the son of Junius Brutus by a sister of Cato, was born b.c. 85. The precepts and example of his uncle inspired him with the loftiest sentiments of liberty, and he resolved on the destruction of Cæsar, as a tyrant who had enslaved his country. This design he carried into execution, though Cæsar was one of his friends. Brutus put an end to himself at the second battle of Philippi b.c. 42, after performing prodigies of valour.

BRUYERE, JEAN DE LA, a French writer, born near Dourdan, in the Isle of France, 1644. Little is known of his early life, but his literary talents procured him the patronage of Bossuet, who appointed him to instruct one of the royal children in history, for which La Bruyere was rewarded with a pension. He was also elected into the Academy, but did not live long to enjoy these distinctions, being carried off by an apoplectic stroke 10 May, 1696. He is best known by his 'Characters of Theophrastus, translated from the Greek with the Manners of the present age;' these have been translated into English by Rowe. He was also the author of a work entitled 'Dialogues on Quietism;' which being left unfinished at his death were completed and published by Dupin.

BRUYN. See BRUIN.

BRUYN, CORNELIUS, a painter and traveller, born at the Hague 1652. He began his travels in 1674 through Russia, Persia, and the East Indies, and did not return home till 1708. Died 1719. The best edition of his Voyages is that of Rouen, 5 vols. 4to., 1725.

BRUYS, FRANÇOIS, born at Serrières, a village of Mâconnois, 7 Feb., 1708, embraced Protestantism at the Hague 1728, returned to the Catholic Church 1736, and died at Dijon 21 May, 1738, leaving many works, the principal of which are 'Critique disinteressée des Journaux littéraires;' 'Memoires historiques et critiques;' and 'Histoire des Papes.' Bruys greatly regretted, in after life, that he had written the last-mentioned work, which is full of abuse of the Roman Church.

BRUYS, PETER DE, an heresiarch of the twelfth century, born in the mountains of Dauphiné, who taught that baptism is useless except to adults; that the Sacrifice of the Mass is nothing; that the prayers of the living cannot relieve the dead; that it was an idle superstition to build churches; and that crosses should be destroyed as superstitious. His followers, who were called Petrobrussians, were guilty of great excesses in the south of France; but on the death of Peter, who was burned at St. Gilles in 1190, the sect disappeared.

BRUZEN DE LA MARTINIÈRE. See MARTINIÈRE.

BRYAN, AUGUSTINE, a classical scholar, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and died 6 April, 1726. His edition of Plutarch was published in 5 vols. 4to., 1729.—Rosé.

BRYAN, or BRIANT, Sir FRANCIS, an English poet, gentleman of the privy chamber to Henry VIII., was educated at Oxford, according to Wood. He was employed in various embassies under Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and in 1548 was appointed lord justice of Ireland. He died shortly afterwards. Some of his songs and sonnets are printed with the 'Songs and Sonnets of Henry, earl of Surrey, and Sir Thomas Wyatt the elder.' He translated from the French 'A Dispraise of the Life of a Courtier, and a Commendation of the Life of a Labouring Man,' 1548, written originally in Spanish, by Anthony of Guevara.

BRYAN, JOHN, an English scholar, who is praised by Erasmus, was a native of London, and a member of King's College, Cambridge, in which university he delivered public lectures on Aristotle's philosophy. He became rector of Shellow Bowells, Essex, 1523, and died about Oct., 1545. He wrote a History of France, but it does not appear to have been published.

BRYAN, Mrs. MARGARET, who kept a school at Margate, published 'Lectures on Natural Philosophy,' 4to., 1806. There are two portraits of her after Shelley, one engraved by Ridley, and the other, in which her children are also represented, engraved by Nutter. The latter is esteemed a fine work.

BRYAN, MICHAEL, a distinguished art critic, born at Newcastle 1757; died in London 21 March, 1821. He is well known as the author of 'The Biographical and Critical Dictionary of Painters and Engravers.' The extent of his knowledge, the fervour of his enthusiasm, and the correctness of his taste in every particular of fine art deservedly raised his name as an accomplished connoisseur; and from the period when he was selected to introduce to the British public the celebrated Orleans collection, he swayed for many years the higher branches of pictorial art by his influential opinions.

BRYANT, JACOB, a learned writer, was born at Plymouth in 1715, and educated at Eton, from whence he proceeded to King's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of B.A. in 1740, and that of M.A. in 1744. He was also chosen fellow of his college, and had for a pupil the duke of Marlborough, who in 1756, when master-general of the ordnance, appointed Mr. Bryant to a place in that department, and took him to Germany as his secretary. On his return he settled at Cypenham, near Windsor, contented with a moderate income, and devoted to literary pursuits, the love of which induced him to decline the mastership of the Charter House. His first publication was entitled 'Observations relating to Ancient History,' 4to., 1767. This was followed in 1774 by two volumes of 'A New System, or Analysis of ancient Mythology;' to which a third volume was added two years afterwards. This work established the author's reputation as a profound scholar; though many of his conjectures were opposed by different writers. Mr. Bryant next published 'A Vindication of the Apamean Medal,' 4to., which was succeeded by 'Essay on the Genius and Writings of Homer,' written by Mr. Wood, and edited by our author. This valuable book appeared in 1776, and at the same time Mr. Bryant printed 'Vindiciæ Flavianæ,' in which he defended the authenticity of the passage in Josephus respecting our Saviour. In 1780 he published a letter to Dr. Priestley on the Doctrine of Necessity, which the doctor answered with his accustomed asperity. In 1781 Mr. Bryant defended the antiquity of the poems attributed to Rowley; his observations on which subject were printed in 2 vols. 8mo. In 1783 was printed, at the expense of the duke of Marlborough, that splendid work entitled 'Gemmarum Antiquarum delectus;' the first volume of which was edited by Mr. Bryant, whose next publication was a 'Treatise on the Authenticity of the Scriptures and the Truth of the Christian Religion.' This was followed in 1794 by 'Observations on the Plagues of Egypt;' which is one of his best performances. The ensuing year brought on a controversy occasioned by the publication of Chevalier's 'Description of the plain of Troy;' on which Mr. Bryant printed some observations, and soon after a dissertation concerning the war itself, and the expedition of the Grecians, as described by Homer, in order to show that no such circumstance ever happened, and that even Troy itself never existed. In this our author was combated by many powerful writers. The question, however, remains as it did, and a calm observer will be disposed to think that the defenders of Homer have not cleared up all the difficulties which attend the belief that he was an historian as well as a poet. Mr. Bryant printed in the following year a work on 'The Sentiments of Philo Judæus, concerning the Logos;' and his literary labours terminated with a volume entitled 'Dissertations on the prophecy of Balaam; the standing still of the Sun at the command of Joshua; the Victory of Sampson over the Philistines.' Mr. Bryant died 14 Nov., 1804.

BRYCE, ALEXANDER, a Scotch divine and geometer, born 1713; died 1 Jan., 1786. He constructed a Map of the North Coast of Britain, and contributed several papers to the Philosophical Transactions and to Ruddiman's Weekly Magazine.

BRYDAL, or BRIDAL, JOHN, a legal and antiquarian writer, born in Somersetshire about 1635, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn, and was in due course called to the bar. Died about 1704. His works are 'Jus imaginis apud Anglos, or the Law of England relating to the Nobility and Gentry;' 'Jus Sigilli, or the Law of England touching the four principal Seals;' 'Speculum

Juris Anglicani; or a view of the Laws of England; 'Jus Criminis, or an abridgment of the laws of treason, murder, conspiracies, poisonings, &c.;' 'Camera Regis, or a short view of London;' 'Decus et tutamen, or a prospect of the laws of England framed for the safeguard of the king's majesty;' 'Ars transferendi, or sure guide to the Conveyancer;' 'Non compos mentis, or the law relating to natural fools, mad folks, and lunatic persons;' 'Lex Spuriorum, or the law relating to bastardy;' 'Declaration of the divers prebeminences or privileges allowed by the laws and customs of England, unto the first-born among her majesty's subjects the temporal lords in Parliament;' and 'Jura Coronæ, or his majesty's royal rights and prerogatives asserted against papal usurpations, &c.'

BYDGES, GREY, Lord Chandos. See CHANDOS.
BYDGES, HENRY, a divine, was brother to the duke of Chandos. From Westminster School he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, and taking orders obtained several cathedral preferments, among them the archdeaconry of Rochester and the rectoryship of Agmondesham, Bucks. He was also for some time chaplain to Queen Anne. Died 9 May, 1728, aged 54. Three of his sermons, and a speech delivered to the clergy of his archdeaconry have been printed.

BYDGES, Sir SAMUEL EGERTON, a genealogist and miscellaneous writer, second son of Edward Brydges, esq., of Wootton Court, Kent, where he was born 30 Nov., 1762. He received his academical education at Queen's College, Cambridge, though he quitted the university without graduating. Afterwards he was called to the bar. In 1790, after the death of the last duke of Chandos, Mr. Brydges incited his elder brother to prefer a claim to the barony of Chandos, alleging his descent from a younger son of the first Brydges who bore that title. The consideration of this claim was long procrastinated, but in 1803 the House of Peers pronounced its decision 'that the petitioner had not made out his claim to the title and dignity of Baron Chandos.' Mr. Brydges never lost an opportunity to protest in the press against the decision, and he even stooped to the drudgery of editing a Peerage of 9 volumes, in order that a few of its pages might transmit to posterity an account of his wrongs. That the claim was actually groundless was proved beyond dispute in a volume published in 1834 by George Frederick Beltz, Lancaster herald. Latterly, it may be remarked, Mr. Brydges used to add to his signature the words 'per legem terræ, B. C. of S.,' meaning Baron Chandos of Sudeley. He was for some years M.P. for Maidstone, and in 1814 was created a baronet. In 1818 he quitted England, and died near Geneva 8 Sept., 1837. Mr. Brydges was among the first of the modern school of sonnetters, and commenced his literary career by publishing a volume of Sonnets and other Poems, 1785. This was followed by a host of other works, chief among which were 'Mary de Clifford,' a novel; 'Arthur Fitz Albini,' a novel; 'Theatrum Poetarum Anglicanorum, being a new edition, with additions, of a work under the same title by Philips, nephew of Milton;' 'Memoirs of the Peers of England during the reign of James I.;' 'Censura Litteraria;' 'The British Bibliographer;' 'Restituta,' an edition of Collins's Peerage, 9 vols. 8vo.; 'The Ruminator, a Series of Moral, Critical, and Sentimental Essays;'

'Occasional Poems;' 'Coningsby,' a novel, 1819; 'Letters on Lord Byron;' 'Recollections of Foreign Travel;' 'Lex Terræ,' with regard to the descent of English Peerages; 'The Anglo-Genevan Critical Journal for 1831;' 'Imaginary Biography;' and his 'Autobiography, Times, Opinions, and Contemporaries,' 1834. He was also a large contributor to periodical publications.

BYDONE, PATRICK, F.R.S., a traveller, born in Scotland about 1741. After receiving a liberal education he went abroad as travelling tutor or companion with Mr. Beckford and some other gentlemen. On his return to England from his first tour in the Mediterranean, he published an account of his travels in Sicily and Malta, of which a second edition appeared in 1799, in two vols. 8vo. This work became popular, and procured for the author admission into the Royal Society. He also obtained the situation of comptroller of the stamp office, which he held till his death. That event took place in Berwickshire 19 June, 1818. Besides his Tour he was the author of some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

BYE, THEODORE DE. See BRIE.

BYENNIUS, MANUEL, a musical writer, who flourished in the time of Palaeologus the elder, about 1320. His Greek work on Harmonics was translated into Latin by Dr. Wallis, and published in his works 1699.

BYENNIUS, NICEPHORUS, a native of Orestia, in Macedonia, and the husband of the Princess Anna Comnena, daughter of Alexis Comnenus, on whose death he was offered the throne, which he declined. Died 1137. His history of the reigns of Isaac Comnenus, and of the three succeeding emperors, was published with a Latin translation, by the Jesuit Poussins, at Paris, 1661.

BRYNKNELL. See BRINKNELL.

BRYSKETT, LUDOWICK, a poet, the son of an Italian, was matriculated as a pensioner of Trinity College, Cambridge, 27 May, 1559, but left the university without taking a degree. In April, 1571, he was acting as clerk of the council in Ireland. He accompanied Philip Sidney in his travels on the continent. In 1577 he was appointed registrar or clerk of the chancery for the faculties in Ireland, which situation he gave up in 1580-1 to his friend Edmund Spenser, the great poet. In 1590 he was appointed to the office of clerk-general of the casualties in Ireland, and supervisor of accounts, with an allowance of a shilling in the pound. This office was forfeited by Bryskett in or before 1603, and he was subsequently reduced to great distress. He was alive in 1611, but the date of his decease is unknown. His works are 'The Mourning Muse of Thestylis,' a poem on the death of Sir Philip Sidney. This is printed at the end of Spenser's 'Astrophel,' 1595, but had probably been published separately in 1587, as on the 22nd of August in that year it was licensed to John Wolfe. 'A Pastoral Aeglogue upon the death of Sir Philip Sidney, Knight, &c.,' also printed with Spenser's 'Astrophel;' and 'Discourse of Civill Life,' containing the Ethike Part of Morall Philosophie, 4to., London, 1606. This remarkable and valuable production is addressed to Arthur, Lord Grey, of Wilton, and is conjectured to have been composed between 1584 and 1589.

BUACHE, PHILIPPE, a French geographer, born 7 Feb., 1700, at Paris; died 27 Jan., 1773.

BUAT-NANCAY, LOUIS GABRIEL, Comte DU, a French diplomatist and historian, born 2 March, BUCH.

1732; died 18 Sept., 1787. His chief writings are 'Les Origines, ou l'ancien gouvernement de la France, de l'Italie, de l'Allemagne;' 'Histoire ancienne des peuples de l'Europe;' 'Les Elemens de la Politique;' and 'Les Maximes du Gouvernement Monarchique.'

BUCKER, MARKIN, one of the reformers, was born in 1491 at Schelestadt in Lower Alsatia. At an early age he entered the order of St. Dominic at Strasburg. Afterwards he obtained leave of his prior to study logic and philosophy at Heidelberg. Some works of Erasmus and Luther falling in his way he embraced the opinions of the well-known reformer, with whom he contracted a personal friendship. Subsequently, however, he modified his views on some points, inclining rather to those of Zuinglius. The elector palatine having received a favourable report of his learning, selected him as one of his chaplains. At Strasburg he exercised for twenty years the double employment of a minister and professor. During that period he made numerous converts. In 1529 he was sent by the cities of Strasburg, Memmingen, Landau, and Constance, to the conference convoked at Marburg by Philip, landgrave of Hesse, in order to effect a reconciliation between the followers of Luther and Zuinglius. For a time Bucer succeeded in uniting the adverse parties. The old jealousies, however, were soon revived. Bucer then published, in the name of the four towns which he represented, a profession of faith, in which he subtly treated of the eucharist and other articles of belief. This failed to reconcile the contending factions, and the struggle continued as fiercely as ever. He succeeded, however, in inducing the universities of Strasburg and Memmingen to change their opinions on the subject of the eucharist, and to adopt the doctrine of the real presence. In 1536 he again endeavoured, but without success, to effect a reconciliation between the two parties at Wurtemberg. In 1542 he was invited to Cologne by Herman Wida, the archbishop, to settle the reformation in that diocese, but met with determined hostility from the regular clergy. Notwithstanding his desire to unite contending sects, he refused at the council of Augsburg to lend his support to the Interim, the object of which was to compose the differences between the Catholics and Protestants. He and his friend Paul Fagius were in 1549 invited to England by letters from the Lord Protector Somerset and Archbishop Cranmer. They accepted the invitation, and the king assigned to each of them an annual pension of £100. Bucer took up his abode at Cambridge, where he proceeded D.D. and read the divinity lecture. He died at Cambridge 28 Feb., 1550-1. A list of fifty-two of his works, which are all on theological subjects, is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' In the reign of Mary, Bucer and Fagius were declared to have been guilty of heresy, and a writ 'de hæretico comburendo' having been issued, their bodies were exhumed and burnt in the marketplace of Cambridge 6 Feb., 1556-7.

BUCH, BARON LEOPOLD VAN, a celebrated German geologist, born 25 April, 1774; died at Berlin 4 March, 1853.

BUCHAN, DAVID STEWART ERSKINE, EARL OF, was born 1 June, 1742, and died 19 April, 1820. After receiving a liberal education at Glasgow, he joined the diplomatic service, but on the death of his father DAVID, the tenth earl, in 1767, he withdrew from public life, and thenceforward devoted his time to the elucidation of the history and antiquities of Scotland. In conjunction with Dr. Walter Minto, he published in 1787 'An Account of the Life, Writings, and Inventions of Napier of Merchiston.' He was also author of a memoir of Crichton, and of an 'Essay on the Lives and Writings of Fletcher of Saltoun, and the Poet Thomson;' besides which he contributed various articles to the Gentleman's Magazine, and to the Transactions of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, of which he may be regarded as the founder.

BUCHAN, MRS. ELSPETH, or ELIZABETH, a Scotch visionary or fanatic, whose maiden name was Simpson, born 1738. Her husband was one of the proprietors of the delft-work manufactory at Glasgow. About 1779 she began to prophesy that the end of the world was near, and that all Christians must abandon worldly connections to be in readiness to meet Christ. She gathered many followers, and journeyed with them through several parts of Scotland. On her death in May, 1791, her disciples dispersed.

BUCHAN, WILLIAM, M.D., a physician, born at Ancram, Roxburghshire, 1729. He was educated at Edinburgh, and after residing there several years, was appointed physician to the Foundling Hospital at Ackworth, Yorkshire. On the breaking up of that institution he returned to Edinburgh, but ultimately settled in London, where he died 25 Feb., 1805. His 'Domestic Medicine,' originally published in 1770, became very popular, and several editions of it were called for. He likewise wrote 'Advice to Mothers,' &c.

BUCHANAN, CLAUDIUS, D.D., was born at Cambuslang, near Glasgow, 1766. After studying at Glasgow, he acted as private tutor to two families, but in 1787 went to London, where he became clerk to an attorney. Subsequently, he entered Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. In 1798 he was appointed one of the chaplains to the East India Company at Bengal, and when the Marquis Wellesley founded a college at Fort William, he was nominated vice-provost and classical professor of that institution. In 1805 he was honoured with the degree of D.D. by the university of Glasgow, and the year following he returned to England, when the university of Cambridge, in acknowledgment of his donation of some valuable manuscripts, presented him with the same degree. Dr. Buchanan was employed in superintending an impression of the Syriac Testament for the Eastern Christians, when he died at Broxbourne 9 Feb., 1815. His principal works are, 'The first four Years of the College of Fort William; Memoir on the Expediency of an Ecclesiastical Establishment in India; Christian Researches in Asia; A brief View of the State of the Colonies of Great Britain and her Asiatic Empire in respect to Religious Instruction; A Letter to the East India Company in reply to the statements of Mr. Buller concerning the Idol Juggernaut; An Apology for promoting Christianity in India; and various sermons.

BUCHANAN, DAVID, a Scotch writer, who died in August, 1652. His works are 'Historia Humanæ Animæ;' 'Truth its Manifest,' a piece relating to the conduct of the Scotch nation during the civil war; a memoir of Knox; and 'De Scripturis Scotis,' printed by the Bannatyne Club, 1837.—Anderson.

BUCHANAN, DAVID, a printer and publisher of

BUCHANAN.

Montrose, in Scotland, born 1745; died 1812. His son of the same name, who acquired some celebrity as a publisher and journalist, was born 1779, and died 13 August, 1848. He prepared an annotated and supplemented edition of the 'Wealth of Nations,' published by Murray, 1814.

BUCHANAN, DUGALD, a noted Gaelic poet, was born in Perthshire 1716, and became schoolmaster and catechist at Kinloch-Rannoch, in his native county, where he died 3 July, 1768. His Hymns have passed through several editions, the best of which is that of Glasgow, 1830, entitled 'Laoidhean Spioradail le Dughall Buchannan.' Mr. Reid says of Buchanan:—'He may be called the Cowper of the Highlands. This judgment might be established by a critical reference to his poems. They are allowed to be equal to any in the Gaelic language, for style, matter, and the harmony of their versification. "Laa' Bhreitheanais," and "ann Claiogann," are the most celebrated, and are read with perfect enthusiasm by all Highlanders. An attempt was made to render the former popular in English, but it failed. Had it been Buchanan's fortune to have written in English, his name would have been familiarly known from John O'Grat's house to the Land's End.'

BUCHANAN, FRANCIS, M.D., F.R.S., who subsequently changed his name to Hamilton, was a Scotch surgeon, in the service of the East India Company, and wrote 'A Journey from Madras through the countries of the Mysore, Canara, and Malabar,' 3 vols., 1807; 'Account of Nepal,' 1810; 'Genealogy of the Hindoo Gods,' 1810; 'Account of the Fishes of the Ganges,' 1822. Born 15 Feb., 1762; died 15 June, 1829.

BUCHANAN, GEORGE, a Scotch historian and Latin poet, was born at Killearn, in the shire of Lennox, Feb., 1506. He was educated at Paris, after which he served some time in the army, and then became a student in the university of St. Andrew's, under John Major, whom he accompanied to France. Having taken his degrees in arts, he became tutor to the earl of Cassilis, with whom he lived five years, in which time he translated Linacre's Grammar from English into Latin, printed at Paris in 1533. On his return to Scotland, James V. appointed him tutor to his natural son, the abbat of Kelso. About this time he wrote his satirical poem, entitled 'Somnium,' against the Franciscan friars; which was followed by another poem on the same subject; but though written at the king's command, it exposed the author to the vengeance of the clergy, and Buchanan, not thinking it safe to remain in the kingdom, withdrew to Paris, from whence he proceeded to Bourdeaux, where he taught three years, under the patronage of Andrew Goria, a learned Portuguese, who presided over that university. In 1544 he returned to Paris, and for some time taught in the college of Bourbon; but in 1547 he went to Portugal with his friend Goria, who was called home to superintend the university of Coimbra. He had not been there a year before he lost his protector, and having given some offence by the freedom of his opinions, he was thrown into prison, where he began his translation of the Psalms into Latin verse. He obtained his liberty in 1551, and soon after embarked for England, from whence he went again to France, a country to which he had a strong attachment. After spending five years as tutor to the son of Mareschal de Brissac, he went back to Scotland, where, though he openly professed the Protestant religion, he was well received at court, and assisted the queen in her studies. He was also employed in reforming the universities, and obtained a pension from the unfortunate Mary, which he requited with ingratitude. In 1566 he was made principal of St. Leonard's College, at St. Andrew's; and the next year sat as moderator of the general assembly, by whom he was appointed preceptor to James VI. Having attached himself to the earl of Murray, he accompanied him to England, to prefer charges against Mary; and while at the court of Elizabeth he received many marks of favour. In 1571 he published his 'Detectio Mariæ Regni;' and in 1579 his treatise, 'De Jure Regni apud Scotos;' from which modern republicans have drawn most of their arguments. In 1582 appeared his 'History of Scotland;' and on the 6th of December in the same year he died. Besides the works here mentioned, he wrote two Latin tragedies, one entitled 'Jepthes sive Votum;' and the other 'Baptistes, sive Calumnia.' He also translated the Medea and Alcestes of Euripides into the same language. His works were printed together at Edinburgh, in 2 vols. fol., 1714.

BUCHANAN, GEORGE, an eminent civil engineer of Edinburgh, died 30 Oct., 1852. He was brother-in-law of Michael Faraday. Mr. Buchanan was author of a 'Report relative to the theory and application of Professor Leslie's Photometer,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1824.

BUCHANAN, ROBERTSON, a Scotch civil engineer, born in or about 1770; died 1816. He wrote 'An Essay on the Warming of Mills and other Buildings by Steam,' 8vo., Glasgow, 1807; 'Essays on the Economy of Fuel and Management of Heat,' 8vo., Glasgow, 1810; 'Treatise on propelling Vessels by Steam,' 8vo., 1816; 'Practical Essays on Mill Work and other Machinery,' second edition, 8vo., London, 1823.

BUCHANAN, WALTER, author of several works on the fine arts, especially the 'Memoirs of Painting, with a Chronological History of the Importation of Pictures of the Great Masters into England,' 1824; died at Glasgow 20 Jan., 1864, aged 87. Mr. Buchanan was engaged for many years in purchasing paintings, and bringing them to this country from the Continent.

BUCHANAN, WILLIAM, a Scotch advocate, son of David Buchanan, the editor of the 'Wealth of Nations,' died at Edinburgh 18 Dec., 1863, aged 82. He published 'Reports of certain remarkable Cases in the Court of Session, and Trials in the High Court of Justiciary,' 1813; and a 'Treatise on the Law of Scotland on the subject of Teinds or Tithes,' 1862.

BUCHNER, AUGUSTUS, professor of poetry and eloquence, at Wittenberg, published in Latin, 'Academical Dissertations,' 'Select Poems,' 'Orations,' &c. Born 2 Nov., 1591; died 12 Feb., 1661.

BUCHNER, JOHN ANDREW ELIAS, professor of medicine at Erfurt, and afterwards at Halle, author of several professional works; was born 1701, and died 29 July, 1769.

BUCHOLTZER, ABRAHAM, a German Protestant divine, author of 'Index Chronologicus,' and other works, was born 28 Sept., 1529, and died at Freistadt 14 June, 1584.

BUCHON, JEAN ALEXANDRE, a French historian, born 21 May, 1791; died at Paris 29 Aug., 1846.

BUCHOZ, PETER JOSEPH, a learned physician and naturalist, born at Metz 27 Jan., 1731; died at Paris 30 Jan., 1807.

BUCK, Sir GEORGE, an historian, was a native of Lincolnshire. He became one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to James I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and gave him the office of master of the revels. Sir George wrote the Life of Richard III., in which he attempts to clear the character of that prince from many of the crimes with which he stands charged. Besides this work, which is printed in Kennett's Complete History of England, he wrote 'The third University of England; or a treatise of the foundations of all the colleges, ancient schooles of privilege, and of houses of learning, and liberral arts, within and about the most famous citie of London,' 1615; and a treatise of 'The Art of Revels.' Died about 1623.

BUCK, JOHN, LL.D., was originally a lieutenant in the Bengal Artillery, and afterwards minister of a Baptist congregation in Oxford Street, London. Subsequently he entered Queen's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1825; LL.B. 1830; LL.D. 1835). Having taken orders, he was for some time curate of St. Botolph's, Cambridge, and in 1849 obtained the perpetual curacy of Houghton, Cumberland. Died 5 May, 1864, aged 72. Besides a selection of Hymns he published 'A New, General, and Algebraical Solution of the Higher Orders of Equations; with solutions to the tenth degree inclusive,' 8vo., London, 1823.

BUCK, JOHN WILLIAM, a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, who died 23 Aug., 1821, published 'Cases in Bankruptcy' (1816-20), 8vo., London, 1820.

BUCK, SAMUEL, an English engraver, who, with his brother Nathaniel, executed about five hundred views of churches, monasteries, castles, seats, and ancient ruins in England and Wales. Samuel died in Aug., 1779, having survived his brother many years.

BUCKENHAM, ROBERT, prior of the house of Dominicans at Cambridge, graduated B.D. in that university 1524, and D.D. 1531. He was one of the leading opponents of Latimer. Subsequently he went to Louvaine, and was one of the parties concerned in the seizure of William Tyndal at Antwerp. He was living 1536. A MS. work by him, 'De reconciliatione locorum S. Scripturæ,' is preserved in the English College at Rome.

BUCKERIDGE, JOHN, an English prelate, was born at Draycot, Wiltshire, and received his education at Merchant Taylors' School, whence in 1578 he was elected to St. John's College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow, and in 1605 the president. In 1606 he was installed canon of Windsor. His abilities in the pulpit attracted the notice of James I., who appointed him one of his chaplains. He was also one of the four divines chosen to preach before his majesty at Hampton Court, in support of the Church of England against the Presbyterians. He was elected bishop of Rochester 1610-11, and thence translated to Ely 1628. Died 23 May, 1631. His works are 'De potestate Papæ in rebus temporalibus, adversus Rob. Bellarminum;' 'A Discourse on kneeling in the Communion;' and occasional sermons.

ham, and, it is believed, studied at Cambridge. His father was beheaded 1483 and attainted, but the attainder was set aside on the accession of Henry VII. The young duke being descended from Edward III. through a female, fancied that, in case of the king's death without issue, he had a title to the throne, notwithstanding the superior claims of the dowagers of Scotland and France and their descendants. Impressed with this idea, he used idle and vaunting language to his servants, and most imprudently entered into correspondence with one Nicholas Hopkins, a brother of the Charterhouse, at Henton, Somersetshire, who pretended to the gift of prophecy, and foretold he should be king. Moreover, his enormous wealth excited the king's cupidity, and he in some respects justified suspicion by increasing the number of his retainers. He also treated Wolsey, then in the plenitude of his power, with undisguised contempt, on account apparently of his low origin. The duke was seized on his way to the court, tried for treason, found guilty, and condemned to death. Scorning to solicit mercy, he was beheaded on Tower Hill 17 May, 1521.

BUCKINGHAM, GEORGE VILLIERS, DUKE OF, was the son of Sir George Villiers of Brookesby, in Leicestershire, where he was born 1592. He attracted the notice of James I. at the performance of the play of 'Ignoramus,' in 1615; soon after which he was successively appointed cup-bearer to the king, gentleman of the bed-chamber, and knight of the Garter. He also rose to the rank of marquis, and became lord admiral of England, warden of the Cinque Ports, and master of the horse. But in 1623 he lost the royal favour, in a great degree, by persuading Prince Charles to visit the court of Spain, for the purpose of paying his addresses in person to the Infanta. Though Buckingham was created a duke in his absence, it was generally supposed that if the king had lived his decline would have been as rapid as his rise. The accession of Charles in 1625 increased the power of the favourite, but it also multiplied his enemies, and injured his master. The nation hated Buckingham, and two parliaments for impeaching him were dissolved. At this period, the duke involved the kingdom in a disgraceful war with France, and went himself on an expedition to the Isle of Rhé, where he lost the flower of his army. He then returned to repair his fleet, and was about to sail for Rochelle, when he was assassinated at Portsmouth by Felton, a fanatical lieutenant, 23 Aug., 1628. Lord Clarendon and Lilly the astrologer have recorded a story of the appearance of old Sir George Villiers to an officer at Windsor, charging him to warn the duke of the fate with which he was threatened.

BUCKINGHAM, GEORGE VILLIERS, second DUKE OF, was the son of the preceding, by Lady Catherine Manners, and was born in 1627. After studying at Cambridge, he went abroad, and on his return entered the royal army, for which he was deprived of his estate by the parliament, but recovered a great part of it in 1657, by marrying the daughter of Lord Fairfax. At the Restoration he was made one of the lords of the bed-chamber, lord-lieutenant of Yorkshire, and master of the horse. Of these honours, however, he was deprived in 1666, for being concerned in a plot to effect a change of government. Notwithstanding this, he recovered the royal favour, and retained it, after perpetrating some shocking crimes; one of which was the killing Lord Shrewsbury in a duel, and debauching his countess; and another, the hiring of Blood to seize the duke of Ormond in his coach. In 1676 the duke, with the earl of Shaftesbury and Salisbury, and Lord Wharton, were sent to the Tower, by order of the House of Peers, for contempt. On a petition to the king, however, they were all released. This profligate nobleman died at an obscure house at Kirby Moorside, in Yorkshire, of a fever caught in fox-hunting, 16 April, 1688. He wrote a celebrated comedy called 'The Rehearsal,' and some other dramatic pieces; also a few pamphlets in prose.

BUCKINGHAM, JAMES SILK, an English author and traveller, born 1786. He passed much of his early life at sea, but becoming afterwards connected with a printing-office, adopted the profession of literature. In 1815 he went to India, and established a newspaper, in which he attacked the abuses of the Indian government with such vigour that he was summarily expelled and his journal suppressed. Very many years later, the company were compelled to acknowledge the illegality of their proceedings, and to allow their victim an annuity. He went to India a second time, when the restrictions on the press had been removed. On his way to and from India, Mr. Buckingham travelled through various countries, and afterwards published narratives of his travels. In 1822 appeared 'Travels in Palestine;' in 1825 'Arabia;' in 1827 'Mesopotamia and Adjacent Countries;' and in 1830 'Assyria and Media.' At a later period he made tours in various parts of Europe and North America, his account of the latter country occupying no fewer than ten volumes. His European travels are described in two volumes on Belgium, the Rhine, and Switzerland, and two on France, Piedmont, and Switzerland. But Mr. Buckingham was still better known by his public lectures than by his books. In 1825 he established in London 'The Oriental Herald,' the precursor of several journals of the kind which have since flourished. Mr. Buckingham was M.P. for Sheffield from 1822 to 1837; and died 30 June, 1855.

BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS, RICHARD GREENVILLE NUGENT TEMPLE BRYDGES CHANDOS, first DUKE OF, K.G., was born 21 March, 1776, and died 17 Jan., 1839.

BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS, RICHARD PLANTAGENET TEMPLE NUGENT BRYDGES CHANDOS GREENVILLE, second DUKE OF, K.G., was born 11 Feb., 1797, and died 29 July, 1861. Before succeeding to the peerage he sat in the House of Commons, where for many years he was a warm supporter of the Conservative cause. To his strenuous opposition to the Reform Bill was owing the passing of the 'Chandos clause.' He compiled 'Memoirs of the Court and Cabinets of George III.' of the 'Regency,' of 'George IV.,' and of 'William IV. and Victoria.'

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, JOHN SHEFFIELD, DUKE OF, was born 1640, being son of Edward, earl of Mulgrave. At the age of seventeen, he served in the fleet; and afterwards had the command of a troop of horse. In 1680, being then Lord Mulgrave, he was sent to the relief of Tangier, which service he accomplished. He complied very much with the measures of James II., and yet concurred in the Revolution, for which he was created marquis of Normanby and duke of Buckinghamshire.

BUCKLER.

He died 24 Feb., 1720-1, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, where his epitaph, written by himself, gave great offence. His works, consisting of poems, memoirs, speeches, and essays, were printed in 2 vols. 4to., 1723, and again in 2 vols. 8vo., 1729. Buckingham House was built by this duke.

BUCKLAND, RALPH, a native of Somersetshire, was born in or about 1564, and in 1579 became a commoner of Magdalen College, Oxford. Leaving the university without a degree, he went to London, where for some time he studied the common law, but being at length inflamed with a love for the Catholic religion, he left his parents, country, and the prospect of a fair inheritance, and retired to the English College at Douay, where he spent seven years, and being ordained priest, he first visited Rome, and then returned to England. Here he exercised his sacerdotal functions for about twenty years, dying in 1611. He wrote 'Seven Sparks of the enkindled Soul. Four Lamentations, which, composed in the hard Times of Qn. Elizabeth, may be used at all Times, when the Church happeneth to be extremely persecuted. Drawn out of the Holy Scriptures after the form of Psalms,' 12mo. n. d. This book was afterwards most unfairly quoted by Archbishop Usher, with the object of fixing the Gunpowder Plot on the Catholics generally; 'An Embassy from Heaven, wherein our Lord Christ giveth to understand his Indignation against all such, as being Catholicly minded, dare yield their Presence to the Rites and public prayers of the Malignant Church,' 8vo. He also translated from Latin into English 'De Persecutione Vandelicæ,' written by Victor, bishop of Biserte, or Benserte, in Africa; and the six volumes of Surtius's 'Lives of the Saints.'

BUCKLAND, WILLIAM, D.D., F.R.S., a distinguished geologist, born at Axminster, Devonshire, 1784, and educated at Winchester School and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1813 he was appointed to the readership of mineralogy, and in 1818 to the readership of geology. In 1825 his college presented him to the living of Stoke Charity, Hampshire, and in the same year he obtained a canonry in the cathedral of Christ Church. Sir Robert Peel conferred upon him the deanery of Westminster 1845; and he was also rector of Islip, Oxfordshire. Died 14 Aug., 1850. His principal works are 'Vindiciæ Geologiæ; or the Connection of Religion with Geology explained,' 1820; 'Reliquiæ Diluvianæ; or Observations on the Organic Remains attesting the action of an Universal Deluge,' 1823; and 'Geology and Mineralogy considered with reference to Natural Theology,' one of the Bridgewater Treatises, 1836. He was also a frequent contributor to the Proceedings of the Geological Society, of which he was twice elected president. The name of Dr. Buckland will ever be associated with his discoveries of the remains of animals in the caves of Kirkdale and other parts of England. Of these discoveries he gave an account in the Philosophical Transactions.

BUCKLE, HENRY THOMAS, an English writer, born at Lee 24 Nov., 1822; died at Damascus 29 May, 1862. He was author of an ambitious work entitled a 'History of Civilization in England,' but he only lived to complete the first two volumes of it.

Oxford, where he took his master's degree, after which he was elected fellow of All Souls, and proceeded to his degree of D.D. in 1759. He became vicar of Cumnor, and rector of Frilsham, in Berkshire, and was buried at the former place 24 Dec., 1780. Dr. Buckler drew up the 'Stemmata Chicheleana; or, Genealogical account of the family of Chichele,' 4to., 1765. To this he added a supplement in 1775. He was also the author of 'A Reply to Dr. Huddesford's Observations on the Delegates of the Press,' 4to.; and an anonymous pamphlet, entitled 'A complete Vindication of the Mallard of All Soul's College, against the injurious suggestions of Mr. Pointer,' 8vo. Pointer had, it seems, degraded the Mallard into a goose; and this occasioned a droll piece, called 'Proposals for the History of the Mallardians,' written by Bilson and Morres.

BUCKLEY, JOHN. See JONES.

BUCKLEY, ROBERT, or SIEBERT, an English Benedictine, the last surviving monk of Westminster Abbey. At the commencement of the reign of James I. he was persuaded by some clergymen to revive his order, and accordingly they made their profession under him. Afterwards, uniting themselves to other Benedictines who had taken the habit in Italy and Spain, and were permitted to return to England upon the mission, they were incorporated; and, by express bulls from the see of Rome, assumed the name of the English congregation of St. Benedict. During forty years of his life Father Buckley endured persecution for the Catholic faith, being always shut up in some prison or other. He died 22 Feb., 1610, aged 93, having been blind during the three last years of his life, and was refused burial in the parish churchyard.

BUCKLEY, THEODORE WILLIAM ALOIS, one of the chaplains of Christ Church, Oxford, was born 27 July, 1825, and died 30 Jan., 1856. He published numerous translations from the classics, and edited many popular works.

BUCKLEY, WILLIAM, a native of Lichfield, was educated at King's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1542; M.A. 1545). Afterwards he removed to the court of King Edward VI., who held him in great esteem. In Jan., 1548-9, he obtained a prebend in the church of Lichfield, and in 1550 was appointed tutor to the royal henchmen. Died about 1570. His 'Arithmetica Memorativa' is printed with Seaton's 'Dialectica.' This work consists of the rules of arithmetic reduced into Latin verse, that they may be more easily committed to memory.

BUCKMINSTER, JOSEPH STEVENS, an American divine, orator, and man of letters, was born at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 26 May, 1784, and died 9 June, 1812.

BUCQUET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a distinguished physician and chemist, born at Paris 1746; died 24 Jan., 1780.

BUDEÆUS, or BUDE, WILLIAM, a learned critic, born at Paris 1467. He was second son of John Bude, lord of Yere and Villiers, and received his education at Orleans, but at first led a dissipated life. Afterwards he took to his studies, and became an excellent classical scholar, particularly in Greek, which he almost learnt by himself. He was librarian to Francis I., and died at Paris 23 Aug., 1540. His principal works are 'De Asse;' 'Notes on the Pandects;' 'Commentarii Græcæ Linguae.' All his writings were collected in 4 vols. folio, 1557.

BUDGETT.

BUDD, RICHARD, M.D., an eminent London physician, who died 1821.

BUDDÆUS, JOHN FRANCIS, a German Lutheran divine, professor of philosophy at Halle, and afterwards at Jena, was born 25 June, 1667, and died 19 Nov., 1729. He published the great German Historical Dictionary, and a number of other useful works, chiefly on philosophy and divinity.

BUDDEN, JOHN, LL.D., a civilian of Oxford, was born at Canford, Dorsetshire, in or about 1566. He became reader of philosophy at Magdalen College; principal of New Inn 1609; and afterwards principal of Broadgate Hall, where he died 11 June, 1620. He wrote the lives of William of Waynflete and Archbishop Morton; and several translations from Latin and French.

BUDGE, EUSTACE, a miscellaneous writer, was born at Exeter about 1685. He received his education at Christ Church, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple. Mr. Addison, to whom he was related, took him to Ireland, as one of the clerks of his office. While there he was chosen member of Parliament, and obtained some lucrative employments, which he lost for satirising the duke of Bolton, when that nobleman was lieutenant. On this he returned to England, where in 1720 he lost £20,000 by the South Sea bubble. He now turned party writer, and conducted a popular paper called the Bee; but while thus engaged an affair happened which ruined his reputation. On the death of Dr. Tindal, a bequest was found in his will of £2000 to Budgett, which all who knew the doctor were sensible he never intended. The will, therefore, was contested, and set aside, which, with his desperate circumstances, had such an effect upon his mind, that he threw himself into the Thames, and was drowned, 4 May, 1736. Upon his bureau was found a slip of paper on which was written these words:—

'What Cato did, and Addison approved,
Cannot be wrong.'

He wrote several papers in the Spectator and Guardian; had a share in the Craftsman; and published, also, Memoirs of the Lives of the Boyles, 8vo.; the History of Cleomenes, 8vo.; and a translation of the Characters of Theophrastus.

BUDGETT, SAMUEL, the son of a small shop-keeper, was born at Wrington, Somerset, in 1794. He showed, as a boy, a knack of 'turning a penny into a pound,' and at fifteen years of age had become possessed, by petty bartering, of £30, which he presented to his parents, who happened to be in straitened circumstances. Apprenticed to his brother, a grocer at Kingswood Hill, he was dismissed for 'want of ability,' but was soon afterwards recalled, and as a partner in the business he steadily extended it by his shrewdness and tact, and his principle of cash payments, until the firm of Budgett Brothers became the largest wholesale provision merchants in Bristol, to which city, on their Kingswood premises being burnt down, the establishment had been removed. While an adept in driving a bargain, he was munificent in his contributions to charitable and religious objects, especially those connected with the Wesleyan Methodists, of which denomination he was an attached member. He died 29 April, 1851, and a memoir of him, under the title of 'The Successful Merchant,' has had a wide circulation.

BUFFALMACCO.

BUFFALMACCO, BONAMICO, an historical painter, born at Florence 1262; died 1340.

BUFFIER, CLAUDE, a learned Jesuit, was born in Poland 25 May, 1661, and died at Paris 17 May, 1737. Most of his works were collected into a folio volume in 1733, with the title of 'Cours des Sciences sur des principes nouveaux et simples.'

BUFFON, GEORGE LOUIS LE CLERC, Comte DE, was the son of a counsellor of the parliament of Dijon, and born at Montbard, in Burgundy, 7 Sept., 1707. He studied at Dijon, and was intended for the law, but his inclination lay to the sciences, particularly astronomy and geometry; and it is said he was never without Euclid's Elements in his pocket. At the age of twenty he made the tour of Italy, after which he visited England. On his return he divided his time between Montbard and Paris, and in 1735 published a translation of Males's Vegetable Statics, which was followed by one of Newton's Fluxions. In 1739 he was appointed superintendent of the royal garden and cabinet, which by his care were considerably enriched. In 1744 he published his Theory of the Earth, which he afterwards prefixed to his Natural History. This celebrated work commenced in 1749, and at its completion in 1767 amounted to 15 vols. 4to., and 31 vols. 12mo. To it were afterwards added several volumes by way of supplement. In 1771 appeared his History of Birds; and in 1773 he began the History of Minerals. He was a member of the French Academy, treasurer of that of Sciences, and in 1771 he was created a count. His private character was that of a libertine, and he was extremely vain of his person and talents. 'The works of eminent geniuses,' he would say 'are few; they are those of Newton, Bacon, Leibnitz, Montesquieu, and my own!' Died 16 April, 1788.

BUGENHAGIUS, or BUGENHAGEN, JOHN, one of the Reformers, surnamed Pomeranus, was born at Wollin, in Pomerania, 24 June, 1485. He was employed in establishing the Reformation at Hamburg, Lubeck, and in Denmark, the church of which last kingdom he new-modelled. Died 21 March, 1558. He wrote Commentaries on the Epistles; a Harmony of the Gospels; and assisted Luther in his translation of the Bible.

BUGG, FRANCIS, a tradesman, of Mildenhall, in Suffolk, was born in or about 1640. He was a member of the Society of Friends, which, however, he deserted, and wrote his 'Pilgrim's Progress from Quakerism to Christianity;' 'Battering Rams against New Rome;' and several other books levelled at the doctrines of his former co-religionists. He was living in 1698.

BUGG, GEORGE, a divine, received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge; became rector of Wilsford, Lincolnshire, 1849; and died at Hull 15 Aug., 1851, aged 82. He published 'The Key to Modern Controversy,' 8vo., London, 1843.

BUGIARDINI, JULIUS, a painter, born at Florence 1481; died 1556.

BUHLE, JOHN THEOPHILUS, a German philosopher, born at Brunswick 29 Sept., 1763. At the early age of eighteen he delivered a course of lectures on the literature of philosophy, and two years later he was appointed classical tutor to the young English princes who were then prosecuting their studies at Brunswick. After filling the chair of philosophy at Gottingen, he accepted an invitation to Russia, where he obtained a professorship at Moscow and other preferments. In his latter years he returned to his native country, and died there in Aug., 1821. Among his very numerous works may be mentioned a treatise in German on the History of Philosophy; a History of modern Philosophy from the revival of letters to the time of Kant; a Manual of Natural Law; and Origin and History of the Kosciucians and Freemasons.

BUKENTOP, HENRY VAN, a Recollect friar of Antwerp, and theological professor at Louvaine, died 27 May, 1716. He published many polemical works.

BULKELEY, LANCELOT, appointed archbishop of Dublin 1619, died 8 Sept., 1650.

BULKELEY, Sir RICHARD, baronet, was educated at Dublin and Oxford, and acquired a considerable amount of learning, but was strangely deluded and led away by a set of enthusiastical pretenders to prophecy, who first appeared among the French Camisards and Huguenots. With these he engaged so deeply, that not only his estate partly supplied their extravagances, but he also prostituted his pen in defence of their frenzy, and was only prevented by death from selling his estate to distribute among them. He died 7 April, 1710, æt. 47, and was buried at Ewell, Surrey. He published 'An Answer to Several Treatises lately publish'd on the subject of the Prophets. The first part,' 8vo., London, 1708.

BULKLEY, CHARLES, a dissenting minister, born in London 18 Oct., 1719. He was educated under Dr. Doddridge, and in 1740 became a preacher at Welford, in Northamptonshire, but afterwards removed to London, and joined the Baptists. In 1743 he was chosen minister of a meeting in White's Alley, Moorfields, which congregation removed first to Barbican, and next to Worship Street. He also succeeded Dr. Foster as lecturer at the Old Jewry. Died 15 April, 1797. Besides single sermons, he was the author of 'Discourses on several subjects;' 'A Vindication of Lord Shaftesbury's Writings;' 'Notes on Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophical Writings;' 'Observations on Natural Religion and Christianity;' 'Economy of the Gospel;' 'Discourses on the Parables and Miracles,' 4 vols.; 'Catechetical Exercises;' 'Notes on the Bible,' with a preface, 3 vols. 8vo.

BULKLEY, PETER, a divine, born at Woodhill, Bedfordshire, 1582, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He succeeded his father in the living of Woodhill, where he remained twenty-one years, until he was silenced for nonconformity by Archbishop Laud. He then went to New England, where he died 9 March, 1658-9. His only publication, 'The Gospel Covenant opened,' passed through several editions.

BULL, GEORGE, a learned prelate, was born at Wells, in Somersetshire, 25 March, 1634, and educated at Tiverton School, in Devonshire, from whence he removed to Exeter College, Oxford, but refusing to take the oath to the commonwealth he retired to his native county. At the age of twenty-one he was ordained privately by Bishop Skinner of Oxford, who exercised his office at that critical period, though it was made a capital offence by the parliament to do so. After this he became minister of St. George's, near Bristol, where he read as much of the liturgy as he safely could under the appearance of extemporary disvation. In 1658 he married, and was presented to the rectory of Suddington St. Mary, near Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. While here he composed most of his learned works, and in 1659 published his 'Harmonia Apostolica,' the object of which is to reconcile St. Paul and St. James on the article of justification. This performance gave great offence to the Calvinists, and several replies to it were published. Mr. Bull, however, vindicated his work in an admirable apology, written also in Latin. In 1678 the Lord Chancellor Finch gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Gloucester. In 1685 appeared his principal performance, the 'Defensio Fidei Nicenæ,' in which he proves that the consubstantiality and coeternity of the Son of God was the faith of the church before the council of Nice. This great work gained for the author universal applause, and the university of Oxford conferred upon him the degree of D.D. He also obtained the rectory of Avening, Gloucestershire, and Archbishop Sancroft made him archdeacon of Llandaff. In 1694 he published his 'Judicium Ecclesiæ Catholicæ,' and he had the thanks of Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, and other learned divines of the Gallican church for having so well defended the determination of the Catholic church concerning the necessity of believing the divinity of the Son of God. On 29 April, 1705, he was consecrated bishop of St. David's. He died 17 Feb., 1709-10, and was buried at Brecknock. His sermons were published by Robert Nelson, in 4 vols. 8vo., and all his Latin works in 1 vol. folio, by Dr. Grabe.

BULL, GEORGE STRINGER, an English divine, vicar of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, and afterwards vicar of Almeley, Herefordshire, was born at Stanward, near Colchester, 12 July, 1799, and died 20 Aug., 1865. He wrote many single sermons and tracts in defence of the Church of England, in favour of the Ten Hours Factory Bill, on benefit societies, sick clubs, and other benevolent objects.

BULL, JOHN, Mus. Doc. a famous musician, born in Somersetshire about 1563. In 1586 he was admitted bachelor of music at Oxford, and some time afterwards was created doctor in that faculty at Cambridge, being incorporated at Oxford in 1592. He was organist of the Chapel Royal, and first professor of music in Gresham College; but in the reign of James I. he went abroad, and died at Lubeck about 1622.

BULL, JOHN, was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge (M.A. 1792), became curate of Down and Cudham, Kent, and afterwards rector of Tattingstone, Suffolk, where he died 1834, aged sixty-seven. He was author of 'Husbandry improved by religious meditations, with some forms of prayer for the instruction and comfort of the lower classes of society,' 1805; 'The Clergyman's Companion in visiting the sick. A new edition with additions,' 8vo., 1813; and 'Poems and Translations,' 8vo., 1814.

BULLAKER, THOMAS, an English Franciscan, was a native of Chichester, and studied at the English college at Valladolid. After labouring for some years on the English mission, he was apprehended and executed at Tyburn 12 Oct., 1642, æt. 38.

BULLANT, JEAN, a French architect and sculptor, who flourished between 1540 and 1573.

BULLAR, JOHN, a topographer, was a native of Southampton, where he died 12 May, 1864, aged 67. For forty years of his life he was engaged in tuition, and educated a great number of the principal persons in the town. Besides a number of educational and religious works, he wrote 'An Historical and Picturesque Guide to the Isle of Wight,' 8vo., Southampton, 1806; 6th edit. 1824; 'A Companion in a Tour round Southampton,' 3rd edit., 12mo., Southampton, 1809; and 'A Companion in a Visit to Netley Abbey. To which is annexed Mr. Keate's Elegy,' 6th edit., 12mo., Southampton, 1828.

BULLEN, WILLIAM, M.D., a native of the Isle of Ely, was born in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., and is commonly reputed to have received his education at Cambridge. He appears to have lived for some time at or near Norwich. He travelled over several parts of Germany, visited Scotland, and made many tours in England, studying the productions of nature with a zeal and success not common in that age. Having taken orders, he was instituted to the rectory of Blaxhall, Suffolk, 1550, but resigned that living before Nov., 1554, about which period he commenced practice as a physician at Durham. In or about 1560 he removed to London, and soon afterwards was charged by William Hilton with having murdered his brother, Sir William Hilton, baron Hilton, who in reality had died of a malignant fever. He was arraigned on this charge before the duke of Norfolk, and honourably acquitted. William Hilton, however, ultimately arrested Bullen for debt, and kept him in prison a long time. It is said that Bullen was a member of the College of Physicians, and practised in London till his death on 7 Jan., 1575-6. His works are 'The Government of Health,' 8vo., London, 1558; 'Bulwarke of Defence against all Sicknes, Sorowes, and Woundes,' folio, London, 1562; 'A Regiment against the Pleurisy,' 1562; 'A dialogue both pleasaunte and pietifull; wherein is a goodly Regiment against the Fever Pestilence,' 1564; and 'Doctor Bullen's dyet,' 1585.

BULLER, CHARLES, an English politician and lawyer, who distinguished himself as President of the Commission for the Administration of the Poor Laws, was born at Calcutta Aug., 1806, and died in London 28 Nov., 1848.

BULLER, Sir FRANCIS, an English judge, born 1745, received his education at Winchester School, and was afterwards called to the bar at the Inner Temple. He was made a justice of the King's Bench 1788; removed to the Common Pleas 1794; created a baronet 1789; and died 4 June, 1800. He was author of a valuable 'Introduction to the Law relative to Trials at Nisi Prius.'

BULLET, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French author, born 1699, became professor of divinity and dean of the university of Besançon, where he died 6 Sept., 1775. Among his works are a History of the Establishment of Christianity, which has been translated into English; Memoirs on the Celtic Tongue; and Researches into the History of Playing Cards.

BULLIALDUS, ISMAEL. See BOULLIAU.

BULLIARD, PIERRE, a French botanical writer, born 24 Nov., 1752; died Sept., 1793.

BULLINGER, HENRY, a Protestant divine, born at Bremgarten, near Zurich, 18 July, 1504. He was about to enter the Carthusian order, but changed his intention upon reading the works of Melancthon and other reformers. Going to teach at Zurich, he formed a friendship with Zwingle, adopted his opinions, and defended them through life. He succeeded Zwingle in the pastorage at Zurich, and died 17 Sept., 1575. He married, and had eleven children. His writings are also numerous. It is remarkable that his sermons were ordered to be read by the clergy of the Church of England.

BULLINGHAM, JOHN, D.D., an English prelate, was born in Gloucestershire, and educated at Oxford. Towards the end of the reign of Edward VI. he retired to France, being disgusted at the innovations in religious matters. On the accession of Mary he returned to England, and was appointed one of Bishop Gardiner's domestic chaplains. Shortly after Mary's death he was deprived of all his preferments, but soon afterwards he embraced the reformed doctrines, and in 1581 was consecrated bishop of Gloucester. He likewise held the see of Bristol in commendam until 1589. Died 6 May, 1598. Dr. Bullingham, who bore the character of an unlearned man, published a translation of 'Joh. Venæus his Oration pronounced at Paris before the whole body of the Vniuersitie of Paris, 1537, in defence of the Sacrament of the Altare, with a preface taken out of Tonstal's booke of that argument,' 1554.

BULLINGHAM, NICHOLAS, an English prelate, was born at Worcester in or about 1511, and received his education at Oxford, though he graduated LL.D. at Cambridge. In 1549 he was installed archdeacon of Worcester, but was deprived under Queen Mary for being married. Elizabeth raised him to the bishopric of Lincoln Jan., 1559-60, and he was translated thence to Worcester Jan., 1570-1. Died 18 April, 1576. He translated the canonical epistles, and the Apocalypse for the Bishops' use.

BULLOCK, GEORGE, D.D., an English divine, born in or about 1521. From Eton he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow (B.A. 1538-9; M.A. 1542). During the reign of Edward VI. he left England on account of his dislike to the Reformation; and for two years resided in the abbey of Nevers in France. Returning to his native country upon the accession of Queen Mary, that sovereign presented him to the rectory of Great Mongeham, Kent, and a canonry in the church of Durham. In 1554 he was appointed master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1556 Lady Margaret professor of divinity at that university. Being deprived of his preferments shortly after Queen Elizabeth's accession, he left England, but was captured and deposed of everything by pirates. Ultimately, however, he got to Nevers, where he resided several years. About 1567 he removed to Antwerp, and read a divinity lecture in the monastery of St. Michael there. He died at Antwerp in or about 1590. Dr. Bullock is author of 'Oeconomia Concordantium Scripturæ sacræ,' folio, Antwerp, 1572; 2 vols. folio, Venice, 1585. The first volume is dedicated to Gregory XIII.; the second to Michael Malena, abbat of Nevers.

BULLOCK, HENRY, D.D., was a fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1503-4; M.A. 1507; D.D. 1520). He became rector of St. Martin's, Ludgate, which benefice he held till his death. He was also one of Cardinal Wolsey's chaplains. Died 1526. His works are 'De captivitate Babilonica, contra Lutherum,' a Latin translation of Lucian Περὶ Δαυδαίου, &c. Erasmus, who calls him Bocillus, held him in great esteem.

BULMER, WILLIAM, an eminent typographer of

BULWER.

London, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 1746, and died Sept., 1830.

BULOW, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a celebrated Prussian general, born 1755; died 25 Feb., 1816.

BULSTRODE, EDWARD, a lawyer, born in Buckinghamshire 1588. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar; and in 1649 he was made a Welsh judge. Died April, 1659. His works are 'A Golden Chain, or Miscellany of divers sentences of the sacred Scriptures, and of other authors, &c.' and 'Reports of Cases in B.R. regn. Jac. I. and Car. I.,' in 3 parts.

BULSTRODE, SIR RICHARD, eldest son of the preceding, was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He also studied the law, but quitted it, and espoused the cause of Charles I. in the Restoration he was appointed secretary of arms, and in 1675 received the post of knight-baronet. Disapproving of the revolution, he went over to France, and remained there many years, but at length returned, and is said to have died at an extraordinary age of 101, in 1722. He wrote one hundred and eighty five essays on religious subjects; 'Letters to the Earl of Arlington,' 'Essays,' and 'Memoirs and Reflections upon the reigns and governments of Charles I. and II.'

BULSTRODE, WHITLOCKS, son of the preceding, became prothonotary of the Marshal's Court, and died 27 Nov., 1724, æt. 74. He published his father's Essays, and wrote a treatise on the transmigration of souls; 'Essays, ecclesiastical and civil;' Letters to Dr. Wood, physician to the Pretender; and 'Compendium of the Crown Laws.'

BULTEAU, LOUIS, a French writer, author of 'An Essay on the Monastic History of the East, and of an abridgment of the History of the Order of St. Benedict,' was born 1625, and died 6 April, 1693.

BULWER, JOHN, M.D., a physician, and the first English writer on dactylogy, and other methods of communicating knowledge to the deaf and dumb. Of his personal history hardly anything is known, except that he was the son of Thomas Bulwer, a physician, that he taught the deaf and dumb, and that he was styled the Chiro-sopher. The titles of his publications are 'Chirologia, or the natural Language of the Hand, composed of the speaking Motions, and discoursing Gestures thereof; whereunto is added, Chronomia, or the Art of Manuall Rhetoricke, consisting of the natural Expression digested by Art in the Hand, as the chiefest Instrument of Eloquence, by Historical Manifestos exemplified out of the authentique Registers of common Life and civill Conversation, with Types or Chyrogams: a long-wished-for Illustration of this Argument,' 1644; 'Philocophus, or the Deafe and Dumb Man's Friend, exhibiting the philosophical verity of that Subtile Art, which may inable one with an observant Eie to heare what any Man speaks by the Moving of his Lips. Upon the same Ground, with the Advantage of an historical Exemplification, apparently proving that a Man born Deaf and Dumb may be taught to heare the Sound of Words with his Eie, and thence learne to speake with his Tongue,' 1648; 'Pathomyotomia, or a Dissection of the Significantive Muscles of the Affections of the Mind, being an Essay to a new Method of observing the most important movings of the Muscles of the Head; as they are the nearest and immediate Organs of the voluntarie or im-petual Motions of the Mind; with the Proposals of a new Nomenclature of the Muscles, 1649; 'Anthropometamorphosis: Man transform'd; or, the artificial Changing historically presented,' 1653; 'Vultispe Criticus, seu Physiognomia Medici,' MS. Addit. 80g.

BUNBURY, HENRY WILLIAM, an ingenious artist, was the youngest son of Sir William Bunbury, of Mildenhall, Suffolk, who died 1764. Henry was educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Catharine Hall, Cambridge. After leaving the university he never engaged in any profession, but devoted himself chiefly to the fine arts. His principal residence was at Bury St. Edmund's; but at length he settled at Keswick in Cumberland, where he died in May, 1811. Mr. Bunbury was long distinguished by the excellence of his caricatures, some of which attracted the notice, and called forth the admiration, of Sir Joshua Reynolds. But although Bunbury excelled in the vis comica, he never descended to indecency or personality. His principal work is the humorous volume of drawings and illustrations, entitled 'Directions for bad horsemen, by Geoffrey Gambado.' In the delineation of mountain scenery he drew with the hand of a master, and his performances of that kind are full of animation and taste.

BUNEL, PIERRE, a learned Frenchman, born at Toulouse 1499; died 1546. His Latin epistles were printed in 1581.

BUNN, ALFRED, a London theatrical manager and comic writer, died 20 Dec., 1860.

BUNNEY, EDMUND, a divine, born in Buckinghamshire 1540, and educated at Oxford. He became chaplain to Archbishop Grindal, who gave him a prebend in the church of York, and the rectory of Bolton Percy. He had subsequently a prebend in Carlisle Cathedral, another in St. Paul's, and lastly the sub-deanery of York. Died 26 Feb., 1616-17. His works are 'The Sum of Christian Religion;' 'Abridgment of Calvin's Institutions;' 'Sceptre of Judah;' 'The Coronation of King David, &c.,' pamphlets against Persons, the Jesuit; and 'The Corner Stone, or a form of teaching Jesus Christ out of the Scriptures.'

BUNNEY, FRANCIS, younger brother of the preceding, was born in Buckinghamshire 8 May, 1543, and educated at Oxford, where he became fellow of Magdalen College. In 1572 he obtained a prebend in Durham Cathedral; next year the archdeaconry of Northumberland; and in 1578 was presented to the rectory of Ryton, county Durham. Died 16 April, 1617. He wrote three tracts against Cardinal Bellarmine and the Roman Church; 'Exposition of Romans iii. 28, on Justification by Faith;' and 'Plain and familiar exposition of the Ten Commandments.'

BUNNIK, JOHN VAN, a landscape painter, born at Utrecht 1654; died 1717. His brother Jacob was also a painter, and died 1725.

BUNON, ROBERT, a celebrated French dentist, born 1702; died 25 Jan., 1748.

BUNSEN, CHRISTIAN CHARLES JOSIAH, baron, a distinguished writer and diplomatist, born at Korbach, in the principality of Waldeck, 25 Aug., 1791. After receiving a suitable education at Göttingen he travelled, visiting, among other countries, Holland and Denmark. In the last-named country he acquired the Icelandic language under the learned Magnussen. About the end of

BUONAFEDE.

1815 he visited Berlin, where he became acquainted with Niebuhr, and his acquaintance had much to do with his future life. He repaired to Paris in 1816, and acquired much knowledge in oriental languages from Sylvestre de Sacy; but he at length fixed himself at Rome, where his friend Niebuhr was then minister for Prussia. Niebuhr procured him the post of secretary of embassy, and by his help in literary matters did all he could to put him fairly on the road to fortune. In 1822 Frederick III. of Prussia visited Rome, when the courtly secretary so recommended himself to his royal master by a display of great theological erudition, that on the retirement of Niebuhr in 1824 he was appointed charge d'affaires, and afterwards he became minister. This post he held for nearly twelve years, displaying great zeal to forward Protestant interests in various negotiations between Prussia and the Holy See. He was afterwards accredited to Switzerland, and last of all to England; but his great and real occupation was literature, which he pursued with an energy that caused his character as a diplomatist to be lost in that of a man of letters. He died at Bonn 28 Nov., 1860. His most important works are a 'Description of the City of Rome;' 'Ignatius of Antioch and his times;' 'The Position of Egypt in the History of the World;' and 'Hippolytus and his times.'

BUNYAN, JOHN, a pious writer, was born at Elstow, in Bedfordshire, in 1628. He learnt to read and write, and followed his father's business, which was that of a travelling tinker. For some years he led a dissolute life; but at length he was converted, and began to study the Scriptures, in which he acquired a great knowledge. In the civil war he entered into the parliament army, and was present at the siege of Leicester. About 1655 he became member of a Baptist congregation at Bedford, to whom he occasionally preached; for which, at the Restoration, he was taken up and confined in Bedford Gaol twelve years and a half, supporting himself and family all the while by tagging laces. It was here that he wrote his famous Pilgrim's Progress, a religious allegory, which has gone through countless editions, and been translated into many languages. On his release from prison, for which he was indebted to Bishop Barlow, of Lincoln, he became teacher of the Baptist congregation at Bedford. He also travelled into different parts of England to visit the people of that persuasion, on which account he was called Bishop Bunyan. He died in London of a fever 31 Aug., 1688. His works have been often printed collectively and in separate form. Macaulay remarks of the 'Pilgrim's Progress':—'That wonderful book, while it obtains admiration from the most fastidious critics, is loved by those who are too simple to admire it. Dr. Johnson, all whose studies were desultory, and who hated, as he said, to read books through, made an exception in favour of the Pilgrim's Progress. That work was one of the two or three works which he wished longer. It was by no common merit that the illiterate sectary extracted praise like this from the most pedantic of critics and the most bigoted of Tories. In the wildest parts of Scotland the Pilgrim's Progress is the delight of the peasantry. In every nursery the Pilgrim's Progress is a greater favourite than Jack the Giant-killer.'

BUONAFEDE, APPIANO, a poet, born at Comacchio, in the States of the Church, 1716. He was an abbat of the Celestines; and the best of his poetical works is the 'Ritratti poetici degli' Uomini illustri,' the poetical iconology of great men; and of his prose works, 'The History and Spirit of Philosophy,' 6 vols. 4to. He died at Rome Dec., 1793.

BUONAMICI, CASTRUCCIO, an Italian historian, born at Lucca 1710; died 1761. His most considerable work is 'De Bello Italico Commentarii,' which has been translated into English by Wisbart.

BUONAMICI, LAZZARO, professor at Rome, and afterwards at Padua, was born 1479, and died 11 Feb., 1552. Some of his letters and poems are extant.

BUONANNI, JAMES, duke of Montalbano, was a native of Syracuse, and died 1636. He wrote 'L' Antica Siracusa illustrata.'

BUONANNI, PHILIP, a Jesuit, born 7 Jan., 1638, at Rome, where he died 30 March, 1725. He wrote several works on natural history; History of the Church of the Vatican; Collection of the Medals of the Popes; Catalogue of the military and equestrian orders, &c.

BUONAKOTTLI. See MICHAEL ANGELO.

BUONMATTEI, BENEDICT, a grammarian, born at Florence 9 Aug., 1581; died 27 Jan., 1647. The most esteemed of his works is his grammar 'Della Lingua Toscana.'

BUONONCINI. See BONONCINI.

BUONTALENTI, BERNARDI, a Florentine architect, sculptor, and miniature painter, born 1536; died 1608.

BURBADGE, RICHARD, a celebrated English actor, the original performer of many of the principal characters in Shakspeare's plays, died 13 March, 1618-19. He was also a portrait painter of considerable skill.

BURCH, EDWARD, an English artist. His early life was spent in obscurity, but his genius was discovered by the drawings of the human figure, which he exhibited to the original academy in St. Martin's Lane. He afterwards devoted himself to gem-engraving, in which line he attained superior eminence; and there is scarcely a royal cabinet in Europe but possesses some of his beautiful performances. On the demise of Richard Wilson he was elected librarian to the Royal Academy, which situation he held till his death in Feb., 1814, aged 84.

BURCKHARDT, JOHN CHARLES, an eminent astronomer, born at Leipsic 30 April, 1773; died at Paris 21 June, 1835.

BURCKHARDT, JOHN LOUIS, a traveller, was born at Lausanne in Switzerland, 1784. Being of an ardent and enterprising turn, young Burckhardt came to England, and offered his services to the society for prosecuting discoveries in the interior of Africa. After learning the languages and acquiring the knowledge necessary for an expedition of this kind, he went to Egypt, and proceeded to Cairo, with the intention of joining the caravan which arrived there every year from Timbuctoo. While waiting there he assumed the Mussulman habit, and the name of Sheik Abraham, and thus was enabled to make several discoveries. At length the long-expected caravan reached the capital; but before the time fixed for its return Burckhardt was attacked by a fever, which carried him off 15 Oct., 1817. He bequeathed all his oriental MSS. to the university of Cambridge, but the observations made in his travels were communicated to the African Society.

BURDER, GEORGE, an Independent minister, born in London 5 June, 1752; officiated successively at Lancaster, Coventry, and Fetter Lane, London; and died 29 May, 1832. He was one of the leading men in the formation of the London Missionary Society, and the projector of the Religious Tract Society. His 'Village Sermons' are well known.

BURDER, HENRY FORSTER, D.D., minister of an Independent chapel at Hackney, wrote numerous works on theological subjects between 1811 and 1856. Died 29 Dec., 1864.

BURDER, SAMUEL, D.D., a divine, who was educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, and became lecturer of Christ Church, Newgate Street, London. He published, among other works, 'The moral Law considered as a rule of life to believers, designed as an antidote to Antinomianism,' 1795; 'A concise Dictionary for the profitable employment of the Christian,' 1800; 'Oriental Customs, in illustration of the Scriptures,' 2 vols.; and 'The Scripture Expositor.'

BURDETT, SIR FRANCIS, bart., was born 25 Jan., 1770. After passing through Westminster School he went to Oxford, but did not graduate. In 1790 he went on a continental tour, in the course of which he became a convert to the revolutionary doctrines then so popular in France and other countries. On his return he married a daughter of Mr. Coutts, the banker, and received with her a large fortune. He succeeded to the baronetcy on the death of his grandfather, 1797. By the influence of the duke of Newcastle he was returned to parliament for Boroughbridge, and at the outset of his public career was an ardent supporter of ultra-liberal measures. Afterwards, when member for Westminster, he assailed the government so vehemently and incessantly that his political enemies took the earliest opportunity afforded by his want of discretion to make his conduct the subject of legal proceedings. Early in 1810 he addressed a letter to his constituents, in which he denied the power of committing for libel that the House of Commons had recently exercised in the case of Mr. John Gale Jones. This letter was brought under the notice of the house, and a resolution was agreed to, declaring that the publication of such a document was a gross breach of their privileges. Another resolution immediately followed, that the hon. baronet be committed to the Tower. Sir Francis, however, refused to surrender to the serjeant-at-arms, and his house was consequently broken into. He was seized and taken to the Tower, escorted by a large body of infantry and dragoons. The populace warmly sympathised with him, and on the return of the troops some lives were lost among the mob. The prorogation of parliament put an end to his imprisonment. When the riots occurred in Manchester in 1819, he wrote a letter to his constituents, for which he was prosecuted by the attorney-general, found guilty of libel, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the King's Bench, and to pay a fine of £1000. In 1837 he ceased to represent Westminster, and was afterwards returned for North Warwickshire, when he joined the Conservative party, of which he was ever afterwards a supporter. Died 23 Jan., 1844.

BURDON.

BURDON, WILLIAM, an ingenious writer, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1764. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship, which he resigned because he would not enter into orders. He died in London 30 May, 1818. His works are, 'Three Letters to the bishop of Llandaff,' 'Examination of the Pursuits of Literature,' 8vo.; 'A Vindication of Pope and Grattan,' 'Thoughts on Politics, Morality, and Literature,' 8vo.; 'Materials for Thinking,' 2 vols. 8vo.; 'Life and Character of Bonaparte'; 'Letters on the Affairs of Spain'; 'Treatise on the Privileges of the House of Commons,' &c.

BURE, GUILLAUME FRANÇOIS DE. See DE BURE.

BUREN, MARTIN VAN, an American statesman, born 5 Dec., 1782, was appointed secretary of state 1820; ambassador to London 1831; president of the United States 1836; and died 24 July, 1862.

BURETTE, PIERRE JEAN, a French physician, born at Paris 21 Nov., 1665; died 19 May, 1747. He studied the oriental languages, and wrote several dissertations, chiefly on ancient games and music.

BURFORD, ROBERT, a panoramic artist, proprietor of the Panorama, Leicester Square, London, died 30 Jan., 1861, aged 69.

BÜRGER, GODFRED AUGUSTUS, a German poet, was born near Halberstadt 1 Jan., 1748, and died 8 June, 1794. His ballads of 'Leonora' and 'The Fierce Huntsman' have been translated into English. He may be regarded as one of the best of the German lyric poets.

BURGERSDYCK, FRANCIS, professor at Leyden, and author of a valued treatise on Logic, was born 1590, and died 1629.

BURGES, AMBROSE, an English Dominican friar, passed through the highest offices of his order with distinguished credit, and died at Brussels 27 April, 1747, æt. 67. He wrote the Annals of the Church during the first five ages.

BURGES, GEORGE, a Greek critic, was born at Bengal, and after receiving a fitting preliminary education at the Charterhouse, under Dr. Raine, was sent to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he greatly distinguished himself in classics (B.A. 1807; M.A. 1810). In consideration of his services in the cause of classical learning, Queen Victoria, in 1841, granted him a civil service pension of £100 per annum. Mr. Burges was one of the principal writers in Valpy's 'Classical Journal,' and, during the period of its existence, he crossed many a critical lance with Dr. Blomfield, who, previously to his being raised to the episcopal bench, was one of the conductors of the Cambridge 'Museum Criticum.' Mr. Burges also edited the 'Troades' and 'Phœnissæ' of Euripides; the 'Supplices,' 'Eumenides,' and 'Prometheus' of Æschylus; the 'Philoctetes' of Sophocles; Plato's Four Dialogues; 'Greek Anthology'; Poppo's Prolegomena on the Peculiarities of Thucydidean Phraseology. In addition to these, he was author of a play in five acts, called 'The Son of Erin, or the Cause of the Greeks.' Died 11 Jan., 1864, aged 78.

BURGES, MARY ANNE, sister of Sir James Bland Burges, bart., of Beauport, Sussex, assisted M. de Luc in his last work on Geology, and was the author of an extremely popular book, entitled 'The Progress of the Pilgrim of Good-Intent in Jacobinical Times.' This was originally published anonymously, and reached its tenth edition in 1822. Miss Burges finished, a short time before her death, a MS. account of the British Lepidoptera, in which each insect is traced from its egg, the various plants on which they feed fully described, and with drawings which manifest a correctness of design and delicacy of colouring little, if at all inferior to those of the celebrated Manan. She devoted a great part of her income to works of benevolence and charity, and died at her house, Ashfield, near Honiton, Devonshire, 10 August, 1812, æt. 49.

BURGESS, ANTHONY, a nonconformist clergyman, was the son of a clergyman at Watford, Hertfordshire, and received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He afterwards became a fellow of Emmanuel College, and took his degree of M.A. In 1635 he obtained the living of Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire, but was ejected for nonconformity after the Restoration, and spent the remainder of his days at Tamworth. The celebrated Dr. John Wallis was his pupil, and says he was 'a pious, learned, and able scholar, a good disputant, a good tutor, an eminent preacher, and a sound and orthodox divine.' Mr. Burgess's principal works are, 'Spiritual Retinings; or a Treatise of Grace and Assurance;' 'Sermons on John xvii.:' 'The Doctrine of Original Sin;' and 'Commentary on 1 and 2 of Corinthians.'

BURGESS, CORNELIUS, D.D., a Puritan divine, was descended from the Burgesses of Batcomb, in Somersetshire, and educated at Oxford. He was chaplain to Charles I., but on the breaking out of the civil war he joined the Presbyterians, and had a large share of the plunder of the church. Died 9 June, 1665. Several of his devotional and controversial tracts have been printed.

BURGESS, DANIEL, a witty dissenting minister, born at Staines, Middlesex, 1643, and educated at Westminster School and Magdalen College, Oxford. Subsequently he became preacher to a dissenting congregation in Brydges Street, Covent Garden, over which he presided nearly thirty years. Died Jan., 1712-13. One of his biographers has furnished us with two instances which illustrate the general character of his preaching. Speaking of the 'robe of righteousness,' he said, 'If any of you would have a good and cheap suit, you will go to Monmouth Street; if you want a suit for life, you will go to the Court of Chancery; but if you wish for a suit that will last for eternity, you must go to the Lord Jesus Christ, and put on his robe of righteousness.' In the reign of William III. he assigned a new motive for the people of God who were the descendants of Jacob being called Israelites, viz., because God did not choose that his people should be called Jacobites! One of his sermons is entitled 'The Golden Snuffers.'

BURGESS, JOHN CART, an English water-colour painter, and author of several works on drawing, was born about 1788, and died 10 Jan., 1863.

BURGESS, THOMAS, an English prelate, was the son of a grocer at Odiham, Hampshire, where he was born 19 Nov., 1756. After passing through Winchester School and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was collated by his patron, Dr. Shute Barrington, bishop of Salisbury, to a prebend in his cathedral 1787. After Dr. Barrington's translation to Durham, he gave Mr. Burgess a prebend in that church 1791. In 1803 he was promoted to the see of St. David's. Here he displayed the most exemplary attention to the affairs of his diocese.

and formed a society for the foundation of a provincial college for the instruction of ministers for the Welsh church, who have not the means to obtain a university education. He was translated to Salisbury 1825; and died 19 Feb., 1837. He published a number of works on classical learning and divinity, a list of which will be found in the Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1837.

BURGESS, THOMAS, D.D., an English Catholic priest, was born in Lancashire 1 Oct., 1791, and educated at Ampleforth, where he became a professed monk of the order of St. Benedict 13 Oct., 1807. Afterwards he became secularized, and was stationed successively at Prior Park, near Bath, Portland Chapel, Bath, and Monmouth. On the resignation of Dr. Hendren, the first bishop of the new see of Clifton, Dr. Burgess was selected to succeed him, and was consecrated 27 July, 1851. He died at Westbury-on-Trym, 27 Nov., 1854.

BURGH, JAMES, a moral and political writer, born at Madderty, Perthshire, 1714. He was educated at St. Andrew's for the ministry, which he declined, and then entered into the linen trade, but without success, whereupon he removed to London, and became corrector in the printing-office of Mr. Bowyer. After this he was an assistant in the grammar school of Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire, and while there published a pamphlet entitled 'Britain's Remembrancer,' which ran through five editions. This was in 1746, and the next year he opened a school at Stoke Newington, which he conducted with reputation nineteen years, and then retired to Islington, where he died 26 Aug., 1775. He wrote 'The Dignity of Human Nature'; 'The Art of Speaking'; 'Crito, or Essays on various subjects'; 'Political Disquisitions'; 'A Warning to Dram Drinkers'; 'Hymn to the Creator'; and 'Directions for young Persons.'

BURGH, ULICK DE, marquis of Clanricarde. See CLANRICARDE.

BURGHLEY, WILLIAM CECIL LORD, K.G., a celebrated statesman, was only son of Richard Cecil, Esq., yeoman of the robes, by his wife Jane, daughter and heiress of William Heckington, Esq., of Bourne in Lincolnshire. He was born at Bourne 13 Sept., 1520, and had his school education at Grantham and Stamford. In 1535 he became a member of St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was so diligent a student that he hired the bell-ringer to call him at four o'clock every morning. Leaving the university, after six years' residence, without a degree, he became a member of Gray's Inn 6 May, 1541. In 1547 he came into possession of the office of custos brevium, worth nearly £240 per annum. The duke of Somerset, lord protector, made him master of his requests, and he accompanied that nobleman in his expedition against Scotland, as one of the judges of the marshes. He was present at the battle of Musselburgh, 'where he was like to have byn slaine, but miraculously saved by one, that putting forth his arm to thrust Mr. Cecil out of the level of the caisson, had his arme stricken off.' In 1547 he was returned to parliament for the borough of Stamford, and in the following year was appointed secretary to the lord protector. On the fall of that nobleman he was committed to the Tower, but was liberated on giving a recognizance in 1000 marks to present himself on due warning before the privy council to answer any accusation which might be brought against him. On 5 Sept., 1550, he was appointed one of the secretaries of state, and sworn of the privy council, and in the following year he was created a knight. Reluctantly and against his judgment he was induced to subscribe the instrument by which Edward VI. settled the crown on Lady Jane Grey, and although he at first sullenly acquiesced in her accession, he soon sent in his adhesion to Queen Mary, who granted him a general pardon. It is said, but the statement is open to grave doubt, that she would have continued him as secretary of state if he would have embraced the Catholic religion. Certain it is that he conformed to the change of religion which ensued. He accompanied Lord Paget and Sir Edward Hastings to Brussels to fetch over Cardinal Pole, and was one of the ambassadors on the part of England who met the French and Spanish ambassadors between Calais and Ardres. In the parliament which met 21 Oct., 1555, he served as one of the knights for the county of Lincoln. During Mary's reign he had been the confidential friend and adviser of the Princess Elizabeth, who, immediately upon her accession to the crown, appointed him secretary of state. From this time his history is the history of the reign in which he bore so conspicuous a part. On Shrove Sunday, 25 Feb., 1570-1, he was created Lord Burghley; in June, 1572, elected K.G.; and on 15 July following appointed lord high treasurer. He was also for many years chancellor of the university of Cambridge, and in 1593 became the first chancellor of the university of Dublin. His death occurred at Burghley House, in the Strand, 4 Aug., 1598, and on the 20th of the same month he was buried at St. Martin's, Stamford Baron, in Northamptonshire, his obsequies being also performed on the same day in Westminster Abbey. By his first wife, Mary, daughter of Peter Cheke, he had a son, Thomas, who was created earl of Exeter; and by his second wife, Mildred, daughter of Sir Anthony Cooke (she died 1589), he had issue, Robert, who became earl of Salisbury. Lord Burghley was assuredly a most successful statesman. For nearly forty of the most eventful years in our history he had the chief direction of affairs, and during that period the material prosperity of the kingdom increased in a most extraordinary manner, while numerous perils of a very formidable character were triumphantly surmounted.

BURGO, DE. See BURKE.

BURGOYNE, JOHN, an English officer and dramatic author, was the natural son of Lord Bingley. He entered early into the army, and in 1762 had the command of a force sent to Portugal for the defence of that kingdom against the Spaniards. He distinguished himself in the American war by the taking of Ticonderago; but was at last obliged to surrender at Saratoga, with his army, to General Gates. He was elected M.P. for Preston, and on his refusal to return to America, pursuant to the convention, he was dismissed the service. He published some pamphlets on that subject, but is best known as the author of three dramas, 'The Maid of the Oaks'; 'Bon Ton'; and 'The Heiress.' Died 4 Aug., 1792.

BURGUNDY, MARGARET DUCHESS OF, third daughter of Richard duke of York, and sister of Edward IV., king of England, became the wife of Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, who was slain 1477. Her resentments and friendships were equally warm; and, well knowing the jealousy entertained by King Henry against her family, she determined to do all in her power to make him repent, for which purpose she hired a body of two thousand veteran Germans, under the command of Martin Swartz, a brave and experienced officer, and sent them to Ireland to join Simmel, who was crowned at Dublin as Edward V., but was afterwards defeated at the battle of Stoke, in Nottinghamshire. She then patronised and supported the unfortunate Perkin Warbeck. Died 1503.

BURIDAN, JOHN, a learned Franciscan of the fourteenth century. He was rector of the university of Paris, but being expelled by the realists, he went to Germany, where he established a school which, it is said, was the cradle of the university of Vienna. He wrote a Commentary on Aristotle's Physics, but is principally remarkable for the sophism or argument commonly called 'Buridan's Ass.' He supposed a hungry ass, or, an ass equally hungry and thirsty, placed between two bushels of oats, or a bushel of oats and a vessel of water, each being equidistant from him. He then inquired what the ass would do. If it were answered that the animal would remain there till starved to death, he brought a laugh on his side, since that evidently appeared absurd. If it were answered that the ass would eat and drink in that situation, 'Then,' cried he, 'the ass has free will, or of two equal attractions one is greater than the other.' The term 'Buridan's Ass' has since been proverbially used to express difficulty and hesitation in determining between two objects. Died about 1358.

BURIGNY, JEAN LEVESQUE DE, a French writer, born at Rheims 1691; died at Paris 8 Oct., 1785. His works are, On the Authority of the Popes; History of the Pagan Philosophy; History of Sicily; History of the Revolutions of Constantinople; Lives of Grotius, Erasmus, Bossuet, and Du Perron.

BURKE, EDMUND, a distinguished orator and politician, was the son of an attorney in Dublin, where he was born 1 Jan., 1730. He was educated in the school of Abraham Shackleton, a Quaker, at Ballitore, near Carlow; and in 1746 he was entered of Trinity College, Dublin, but left it in 1749, and soon after became candidate for the professorship of logic at Glasgow, without success. In 1753 he entered of the Middle Temple, where he applied himself more to general literature than the law, and supported himself by writing for the booksellers. In a dangerous illness, occasioned by too close an application to his studies, he removed to the house of Dr. Nugent, a physician, whose daughter he afterwards married. In 1756 he published, without his name, 'A Vindication of Natural Society,' which was so complete an imitation of the style of Bolingbroke, as for a time to impose upon the friends of that writer. His next performance was 'A Philosophical Enquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of the Sublime and Beautiful,' which procured for the author the esteem of the first literary characters of the time, particularly Dr. Johnson. Shortly after this, Mr. Burke suggested to Dodsley the plan of the 'Annual Register,' the historical part of which he wrote for several years. In 1761 he went to Ireland with Lord Halifax, by virtue of which connection he obtained a pension of £300 a year. On his return to England, he wrote some pamphlets, which led to his acquaintance with Mr. Fitzherbert, father of Lord St. Helen's, through whom he became known to the marquis of Rockingham; and when that nobleman was made first lord of the treasury in 1765, he appointed Mr. Burke his private secretary. Soon after this he was returned to parliament for Wendover. He was also enabled by this connection to purchase a villa near Beaconsfield, which continued to be his principal residence during the remainder of his life. The Rockingham party did not long continue in power, and on going out of office Mr. Burke wrote a pamphlet, entitled 'A Short Account of a Short Administration,' after which he became an active member of the opposition. In 1768 Mr. Grenville published 'The Present State of the Nation,' which was answered by Burke, whose next publication was a pamphlet entitled 'Thoughts on the Causes of the Present Discontents.' In the contest between Great Britain and the colonies, Mr. Burke distinguished himself as a vehement opponent of government, for which the dissenters of Bristol, in 1774, elected him one of the representatives of that city; but at the next election, in 1780, he was rejected by them for having supported the free trade of Ireland, and the bill for relieving the Roman Catholics, in consequence of which he took his seat for Malton. On the return of the marquis of Rockingham to power, in 1782, he obtained the post of paymaster-general of the forces; but this was of short duration, for on the death of the marquis, Lord Shelburne became first lord of the treasury, and Mr. Burke, with his friends, retired. During this interval he brought in and carried his famous bill for the reform of the civil list. After the general peace of 1783, Mr. Burke had his share in the coalition ministry, and of the abuse which attended it. The next great business in which he engaged was the impeachment of Warren Hastings, towards whom he displayed a spirit of rancorous animosity. While this prosecution was going on, the king's illness occasioned an extraordinary sensation in the public mind; and it is to be lamented that the conduct of Burke in the debates on the regency was highly indecorous. But his deportment at the beginning of the French Revolution must be allowed to atone for his errors. Here he shone with unparalleled lustre, and, compared to the party with whom he had so long acted, he might justly have been called another Abdiel; for he stood alone, and, like a prophet, warned his country of the danger resulting from those principles which his former associates now made their public creed. In consequence of this patriotic part, a separation took place between him and Fox; but prior to this schism Mr. Burke published his 'Reflections on the French Revolution,' which attracted wonderful attention, and many publications appeared in answer to it. Mr. Burke, after this, printed a variety of pamphlets in support of his views; as 'A Letter to a Member of the National Assembly;' 'An Appeal from the New Whigs to the Old;' 'Letter to a noble Lord on the Subject in Discussion with the Duke of Bedford;' 'Thoughts on a Regicidal Peace;' &c. His zeal was rewarded with a pension of £1200 a year. He died at Beaconsfield 8 July, 1797. His works have been printed in 5 vols. 4to., and 10 vols. 8vo.

BURKE, THOMAS, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, born at Dublin 1710. At the age of thirteen he was sent to Rome to prepare himself for orders, and at the early age of fifteen was invested with the habit of a Dominican friar, making his profession in the following year. During his novitiate he studied philosophy, and for five years afterwards applied himself closely to theology, in which he made such progress as to attract the particular notice of Pope Benedict XIII. At Rome he gradually attained to all the honours of his order, and returned to his native city in 1743. He continued in Ireland from that period, and was promoted by the pope to the see of Ossory 1769. This reward of his talents and virtues he only enjoyed seven years, dying at Kilkenny 23 Sept., 1776. His great work is entitled 'Hibernia Dominicana. Sive Historia Provincie Hibernie Ordinis Prædicatorum,' 4to., Cologne, 1762, to which he added a Supplement in 1772. The historical part is extremely valuable; but the political tendency of the work excited great alarm among the bishops and clergy of Ireland. Seven of the prelates met at Thurles, and signed a declaration, 28 July, 1775, expressive of their disapproval of the publication, as tending to weaken and subvert the fidelity and allegiance due to George III.

BURKE, WILLIAM, a near kinsman and intimate friend of the celebrated Edmund Burke, was a native of London, and received his education at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He became M.P. for Great Bedwin, Wilts; secretary to the island of Guadeloupe 1762; under-secretary of state 1766-8; and died 1798. He published a translation of Brissot's Letters to his Constituents, for which a preface was written by his cousin Edmund. In 1859 a work, by J. C. Smoonds, was published at London, in which an attempt is made to prove 'William Burke the author of Junius.'

BURKITT, WILLIAM, a divine, born at Hitcham, Suffolk, 25 July, 1650, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. In 1692 he became vicar of Ditcham, Essex, where he continued till his death in Oct., 1703. He wrote a 'Practical Exposition of the New Testament,' which passed through numerous editions.

BURLAMAQUI, JOHN JAMES, a learned civilian, was descended from an ancient and noble family, originally of Lucca, but settled at Geneva, where he was born 1694. He became professor there, but afterwards went to reside with Prince Frederick of Hesse Cassel, who had been his pupil. After an absence of some years he returned to his native place, was appointed councillor of state, and died 5 April, 1748. He is known by his Principles of Natural and Political Law.

BURLEY, WALTER, an English secular priest, born 1275, wrote a Commentary on Aristotle, and 'De Vita et Mcribus Philosophorum,' Cologne, 1472, a rare book.

BURLINGTON, RICHARD BOYLE, third EARL OF, and fourth earl of Cork, was born 25 April, 1695. He married Lady Dorothy Savile, eldest daughter of the marquis of Halifax, by whom he had three daughters, one only of whom survived him, who married the duke of Devonshire. The earl of Burlington was distinguished for his skill in architecture and taste in picturesque gardening. He patronised Kent, and had an enthusiastic veneration for Inigo Jones. Besides his works on his Yorkshire estate, he highly ornamented the house built by his father in Piccadilly. Other buildings designed by him were his villa at Chiswick, the dormitory at Westminster School, the assembly room at York, the duke of Richmond's house at Whitehall, and General Wade's house in Cork Street. Both these last were ill-contrived and inconvenient; but the latter had so beautiful a front that Lord Chesterfield said, 'as the general could not live in it to his case, he had better take a house over against it, and look at it.' Lord Burlington published an edition of the antique baths, from drawings of Palladio. Died Dec., 1753.

BURLOWE, HENRY BEHNES. See BEHNES.

BURMAN, FRANCIS, professor of divinity at Utrecht, author of Commentaries on the Pentateuch, and other theological works, was born at Leyden 1628, and died 13 Nov., 1679.

BURMAN, FRANCIS, son of the preceding, also became professor of divinity at Utrecht. He published, in Latin, a Discourse on the Persecution of Diocletian; and in Dutch, a Harmony of the Gospels, &c. Born 1671; died 1719.

BURMAN, GASPARD, a magistrate of Utrecht, where he died 22 Aug., 1755. He wrote a Latin Life of Pope Adrian VI., and a work entitled 'Trajectum Eruditum,' or an account of the learned men of Utrecht.

BURMAN, JOHN, of the same family as the foregoing, was professor of botany and medicine at Amsterdam, and published two curious books, 'Rariarum Africanarum plantarum decades decem,' and 'Thesaurus Zeylandicus.' Born 26 April, 1706; died 1780.

BURMAN, NICHOLAS LAURENCE, a physician, and professor of botany at Amsterdam, rendered great services to the cause of botanical science, on which he wrote several works. Born 1734; died 1793.

BURMAN, PETER, son of Francis (who died 1679), was born at Utrecht 6 July, 1668, and became professor of history and eloquence, and rector of the university of Leyden. He wrote a book on Roman taxes, and edited Virgil, Ovid, Petronius, Quintilian, Suetonius, Justin, Velleius, Phædrus, Valerius Flaccus, Lucan, &c. As a critic he occupies the first rank, and his editions of the classics will ever bear testimony to his judgment. Died 31 March, 1741.

BURMAN, PETER, the younger, son of Francis Burman, and nephew of the first-mentioned Francis, was born at Amsterdam 13 Oct., 1714, and became professor of eloquence and history at Franeker. He edited Aristophanes, Claudian, Anthologia veterum Latinorum epigrammatum, and Propertius; and composed four books of Latin poems. Died 24 June, 1778.

BURN, JOHN, son of Richard Burn, LL.D., was bred to the law, but did not practise. He edited his father's works, improved with valuable additions. Died 1802, aged 58.

BURN, RICHARD, LL.D., a divine, and legal writer, was born at Winton, Westmoreland, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. On obtaining the vicarage of Orton, in his native county, he was appointed a justice of the peace, which led him to compile his 'Justice of Peace, and Parish Officer, upon a plan entirely new, and comprehending all the law to the present time,' 1755. This has passed through many editions. In 1760 he published his 'Ecclesiastical Law,' first in 2 vols. 4to., and next in 4 vols. 8vo. In 1764 he wrote 'A History of the Poor Laws,' and in 1776, 'Observations on the Bill proposed in Parliament for erecting County Workhouses.' He likewise published, in conjunction with Joseph Nicolson, 'The History and Antiquities of the two counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland,' 2 vols. Dr Burn was chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle, and died 20 Nov., 1795.

BURNABY.

BURNABY, ANDREW, D.D., was born 1732, at Ashfordby, Leicestershire, to which living his great-grandfather, grandfather, and father, successively presented themselves. On leaving Westminster School, he entered Queen's College, Cambridge, graduating B.A. 1754, and M.A. 1757. In 1759 and 1760 he travelled through the North American Settlements, and the account which he printed of these travels went through three editions. After this he became chaplain to the British factory at Leghorn. In 1760 he obtained the vicarage of Greenwich, which he retained till his death on 9 March, 1812. Besides the above-mentioned work he published an account of a tour made by him in Corsica; and several sermons and charges delivered in his capacity of archdeacon of Leicester.—Al. West.

BURNEL, HENRY, a gentleman who flourished about the end of Charles I.'s reign, wrote a play called 'Landgartha, a Tragi-Comedy, presented in the New Theatre in Dublin with good applause, being an antient story.' Dublin, 1641.

BURNES, SIR ALEXANDER, an enterprising eastern traveller and diplomatist, born at Montrose 16 May, 1805. He entered the Indian army, and eventually acquired the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1831 he explored the geography of the Indus, being sent, in the following year, on a mission to central Asia. The details of the latter journey have been published in the celebrated 'Travels to Bokhara,' one of the most interesting works in the English language. Afterwards he was the government agent at Cabul, and was slain during an insurrection in that city 2 Nov., 1841. A narrative of his residence at Cabul was published shortly after his death.

BURNES, JAMES, K.H., LL.D., was born at Montrose, 1803; educated at Edinburgh; became physician-general at Bombay; and died 19 Sept., 1862. Dr. Burnes was author of several useful works on the geography and manners of the East; of these the best known is his 'Visit to the Ameers of Scinde.'

BURNET, ELIZABETH, was the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Blake, and was born 8 Nov., 1661. At the age of seventeen she married Robert Berkeley of Spetchley, Worcestershire, and after his death became the third wife of Gilbert Burnet, bishop of Salisbury. Died 1707-8. She composed 'A Method of Devotion; or Rules for holy and devout Living, with Prayers on several Occasions, and Advices and Devotions for the holy Sacrament.' Her life was published by Dr. Goodwyn, archdeacon of Oxford, and afterwards archbishop of Cashel.

BURNET, GILBERT, a celebrated prelate, born at Edinburgh 18 Sept., 1643. He received his education at Aberdeen, and in 1663 went over to Holland, where he studied Hebrew under a learned Jew. On his return he stopped at London, and was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. He entered into episcopal orders in 1665, and was presented to the living of Saltoun; and in 1669 he was appointed professor of divinity at Glasgow. In 1673, however, he settled in London, was made chaplain to the king, preacher at the Rolls, and lecturer of St. Clement's. At this time he engaged in writing the History of the Reformation, the first volume of which came out in 1679, and procured for its author the thanks of parliament. The second volume was published in 1681; but the third did not appear till 1714. Before this he published three interesting biographical works—the Lives of the Dukes of Hamilton, a Life of Sir Matthew Hale, and another of the Earl of Rochester. After the execution of Lord Russell, whom he attended on the scaffold, Dr. Burnet was brought into some trouble and deprived of his ecclesiastical appointments, whereupon he travelled into France and Italy. Of this tour he afterwards published an account, in letters addressed to Mr. Boyle. He now settled in Holland, where he married a Dutch lady, which furnished an excuse for the States to refuse delivering him up, when demanded by James II. The doctor accompanied the prince of Orange to England, and in 1689 was consecrated bishop of Salisbury; but having, in a pastoral letter to his clergy, asserted the right of William and Mary to the throne, on the plea of conquest, he gave such offence, that his discourse was ordered by the parliament to be burnt by the hangman. On the death of his second wife he married Mrs. Berkeley, a widow lady of fortune. Among other important trusts committed to the bishop was that of the education of the young duke of Gloucester, son of Princess Anne of Denmark. In 1699 our author's 'Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles' was published, and incurred the censure of the lower house of convocation. He died 17 March, 1714-15, and was buried in the church of St. James's, Clerkenwell. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote a treatise 'On the Pastoral Care;' several Sermons; Controversial Pieces; 'The Life of Bishop Bedell;' and 'The History of his own Life and Times.'

BURNET, GILBERT, second son of the bishop, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, after which he took orders, and in 1718 was appointed chaplain to the king. He had a share in the paper called 'The Free-Thinker,' and took an active part on the side of Hoadly, in the Bangorian controversy. He also abridged the third volume of his father's History of the Reformation; but died young. He is not to be confounded with Gilbert Burnet, rector of Great Coggeshall, Essex, who published an abridgment of Boyle's Lectures.

BURNET, JAMES, a Scotch landscape painter, born 1788; died 27 July, 1816.

BURNET, JOHN, founder of the literary prizes at Aberdeen, was born in that city 1729, and died 9 Nov., 1784.

BURNET, SIR THOMAS, M.D., brother of the celebrated bishop, was a physician of eminence, and the author of several medical treatises. He practised at Edinburgh, and was living 1699, but the date of his decease is unknown.

BURNET, THOMAS, LL.D., an English writer, was born at Croft, Yorkshire, 1635, and after a preliminary education in the grammar school of North Alerton, was sent to Clare Hall, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. He afterwards removed to Christ's College. Through the interest of his former pupil, the earl of Ossory, afterwards duke of Ormond, he obtained the mastership of the Charterhouse in 1685. After the Revolution he was appointed chaplain in ordinary to King William, and also clerk of the closet. Died 27 Sept., 1715. He wrote 'Telluris Theoria Sacra;' 'Archeologia Philosophica;' 'De Fide et Officiis Christianorum;' 'De Statu Mortuorum et Resurrectionum;' and 'De futura Judaeorum Restauratione.' With the exception of Roger Ascham, there are few of our modern writers who surpass Dr. Burnet in the elegance of Latin composition.

BURNET.

BURNET, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, was educated at New College, Oxford; became rector of West Kingston, Wiltshire, and prebendary of Salisbury; and died May, 1750. His four principal works are an 'Answer to Tindal's Christianity as it is in the Creation;' 'Treatise on Scripture Politics;' sermons preached at Boyle's lecture; and 'Essay on the Trinity.'

BURNET, Sir THOMAS, third and youngest son of the bishop, was bred at Merton College, Oxford, after which he became a student of the Temple, where for some time he led a dissipated life; but at last took a serious turn, and one evening, his father observing him to be very thoughtful, asked what he was meditating. 'A greater work,' replied he, 'than your lordship's History of the Reformation.' 'Ay!' said the bishop, 'what is that?' 'The reformation of myself,' answered the young man; and he fulfilled his promise, by becoming one of the best lawyers of his time. He published several political pamphlets, some poems, and the posthumous history of his father, with a memoir of the bishop. He was for some time consul at Lisbon, and on his return resumed the profession of the law. In 1736 he was called to the degree of a serjeant, and in 1741 became one of the justices of the Common Pleas. Died 5 Jan., 1753.

BURNETT, GEORGE, a miscellaneous writer, was born at Huntsfell, Somersetshire, being the son of a respectable farmer. He evinced more intellect than the rest of his family, and after a suitable introduction to classical literature under the care of a clergyman in the neighbourhood, he was sent to Balliol College, Oxford, with a view to his taking orders in the Established Church. After two or three years he became disgusted with a college life, and, in conjunction with some university friends, formed a plan of emigration to America upon a thoroughly Utopian scheme of policy, which was, in brief, as follows:—Individual property was defined to be a great evil: all the evils and the errors in our civil institutions arise from the system of individual property: ergo, if individual property be done away with, all the evils and errors in our civil institutions will be done away with. Ultimately this wild scheme was very prudently abandoned. After lingering about for a year or two, dependent upon the supplies which he drew from his father, he sought a situation more congenial to his feelings and opinions, and got himself admitted a student in the dissenting college at Manchester. After some time he was appointed pastor of a congregation at Yarmouth, but did not remain there long. He afterwards became for a short time a student of medicine in the university of Edinburgh, and then became an assistant surgeon in a regiment of militia. He soon, however, quitted this employment, and went to Poland with the family of Count Zamyska, as English tutor, but in less than a twelvemonth returned to England, quite without employment. Soon after his return he published an Account of Poland, and afterwards, with the assistance of the booksellers, brought out his 'Specimens of English Prose Writers,' 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1807. He also wrote a preliminary introduction to the 'Universal History,' published under the name of Mavor. His last production was 'Extracts from the Prose Works of Milton.' This unhappy hack writer died in the Marylebone Infirmary in Feb., 1811.

BURNEY.

BURNETT, GILBERT THOMAS, professor of botany in King's College, London, and Demonstrator to the Society of Apothecaries, was born in London 15 April, 1800, and died 27 July, 1835. He was author of 'Outlines of Botany,' 2 vols. 8vo.

BURNETT, JAMES, Lord Monboddo. See MONBODDO.

BURNETT, JOHN, a Scotch advocate, author of a treatise on the Criminal Law of his native country, was born about 1764, and died 8 Dec., 1810.

BURNEY, CHARLES, Mus.D., was born at Shrewsbury 1726. He received his education at the grammar school of his native town, after which he was placed under Mr. Baker, the organist of Chester Cathedral. In 1741 he returned to Shrewsbury, and in 1744 came to London, where he was chosen organist of St. Dionis, Backchurch, but afterwards removed to Lynn, where he continued nine years. In 1766 he returned to the metropolis, and in 1769 obtained the honorary degree of doctor in music at Oxford. The year following he travelled through France and Italy, of which tour he published an interesting account in 1771. The next year he travelled through the Netherlands, Germany, and Holland, of which journey he also published an account. In 1776 appeared the first volume of his History of Music, and the remaining four volumes came out at different intervals, the last being published in 1789. The next work of importance from the pen of Dr. Burney was a History of the Musical Festival in commemoration of Handel, 1785. In 1796 he published the Life of Metastasio. Besides these productions he wrote 'The Cunning Man;' 'An Essay towards a History of Comets;' the 'Plan of a Musical School;' and 'An Account of Little Crotch, the Infant Musician.' The doctor lived some time in the house that had been occupied by Sir Isaac Newton, near Leicester Square, but on being appointed organist of Chelsea College, he removed thither, and died there 15 April, 1814.

BURNEY, CHARLES, D.D., second son of the preceding, was born at Lynn 1757. He was educated at Charterhouse, after which he removed to Caius College, Cambridge, and from thence to King's College, Aberdeen, where he took his master's degree in 1781. The next year he became assistant in an academy at Highgate, and soon afterwards in that of Dr. Rose at Chiswick. While here he wrote some criticisms in the 'Monthly Review,' particularly on the Monstrophics of Mr. Huntingford, afterwards bishop of Hereford. About this time he married the daughter of Dr. Rose, and in 1786 opened a school at Hammersmith, from whence in 1793 he removed to Greenwich. The year before this he had obtained the degree of doctor of laws from Aberdeen and Glasgow. Having conducted his school with the highest reputation for many years, he took orders, on which occasion the archbishop of Canterbury conferred on him the degree of D.D. He was also presented to the living of St. Paul, Deptford, the rectory of Chisle, a prebend in Lincoln Cathedral, and made chaplain in ordinary to the king. Died 28 Dec., 1817. His library was purchased by parliament and presented to the British Museum. His publications are an Appendix to Scapula's Lexicon; Remarks on the Greek verses of Milton; Richardi Bentlen et doctorum virorum epistolae; Tentamen de metris ab Æschilo in operibus cantibus adhibitis; an abridgment of Pearson on the Creed; Philemonis Lexicon Græcæ; and a Sermon at the anniversary of the Sons of the Clergy at St. Paul's. His son, Charles Parr Burney, D.D., became archdeacon of Colchester, and died 1 Nov., 1864.

BURNEY, FRANCES. See D'ARBLAY.

BURNEY, JAMES, an English admiral, was the eldest son of Dr. Burney, author of the History of Music. He entered the navy at an early age, and accompanied Captain Cook in his two last voyages. In 1781 he was appointed to the command of the 'Bristol,' of fifty guns, and in due course rose to the rank of rear-admiral. He was a man of science, and became a fellow of the Royal Society. As an author he distinguished himself by 'A Plan of Defence against Invasion,' 1796; 'Measures recommended for the Support of Public Credit,' 1797; 'A Chronological History of the Discoveries in the Pacific Ocean,' 4 vols.; 'Chronological History of North-Eastern Voyages of Discovery, and of the early Eastern Navigations of the Russians;' 'Experiments to discover a Method for ascertaining the Direction of Currents;' 'A Chart of the Coast of China, with a Memoir.' He also contributed some papers to the Philosophical Transactions, particularly one in which he expresses his opinion that the most extreme point of Asia to the east and the opposite coast of America were once united. Died 17 Nov., 1821, aged 72.

BURNEY, WILLIAM, LL.D., the founder of the Royal Academy at Gosport, died 20 Feb., 1832, æt. 70. He was the author of an extensive Marine Dictionary and other valuable works.

BURNHAM, RICHARD, a dissenting minister, who became pastor of Grafton Street Chapel, Soho, London, was born 1749, and died 30 Oct., 1810. He published a volume of Hymns.

BURNS, ALLAN, was, like his brother, Dr. John Burns, mentioned hereafter, an eminent surgeon and writer on anatomy. He was born at Glasgow 18 Sept., 1781, and died 22 June, 1813.

BURNS, JAMES DRUMMOND, minister of the Trinity Presbyterian Church at Hampstead, wrote 'The Vision of Prophecy, and other poems.' Died in France 27 Nov., 1864.

BURNS, JOHN, M.D., professor of surgery at Glasgow, his native place, was born 1774, and died 18 June, 1850. He published 'The Principles of Midwifery,' and other esteemed works.

BURNS, ROBERT, the celebrated Scotch poet, was the son of a small farmer and gardener, near the town of Ayr, and was born 25 Jan., 1759. He received a scanty education, and at an early age was employed in the labours of the field. At intervals, however, he cultivated his mind by reading, and even wrote some verses which excited the wonder of the neighbouring rustics. After some time spent in agricultural occupations he became partner with a flax-dresser; but the concern came to an end in consequence of an accidental fire. On the death of his father he took a farm, in conjunction with his brother, but this project also failed. While thus engaged he formed a connection with a young woman, in consequence of which he was about to leave Scotland for Jamaica, and was only prevented by the want of money to pay his passage. At this time he was advised to print his poems by subscription, and accordingly a small volume appeared from the Kilmarnock press in 1780. It met with such success that Burns visited Edinburgh to superintend a new edition. Having realised nearly £500, he took a farm at Dumfries, and married the object of his affection. A love of conviviality, however, disarranged his affairs, and to repair them he obtained a place in the excise. He thereupon went to Dumfries, where he died 21 July, 1796. Burns was the poet of nature. His poems were published in 1800, in 4 vols. 8vo., for the benefit of his family, and have since passed through innumerable editions.

BURRELL, Lady SOPHIA, a poet, was daughter of Sir Charles Raymond, bart., of Valentine's, Essex. She married in 1773 Sir William Burrell, and after his decease became the wife of the Rev. William Clay. Died 20 June, 1802. She published two volumes of poems, and two tragedies, 'Maximian' and 'Theodora.'

BURRHUS. See BORRI and BURROUGHS.

BURROUGH, EDWARD, a preacher among the Quakers, was born in Westmoreland 1634. He was at first a member of the Church of England, afterwards a Presbyterian, and lastly a Quaker. He had the courage to reprehend Cromwell for his severities, and obtained from Charles II. the suspension of the persecutions against the Quakers of New England. He was imprisoned, and died of the gaol distemper in Newgate 14 Feb., 1663. His works were printed in one volume, folio.

BURROUGHS, JEREMIAH, a Puritan divine, was born 1599, and educated at Cambridge, which university he was obliged to quit on account of nonconformity. He then went to Holland, and became pastor of a congregation at Rotterdam till the Rebellion, when he returned to England, and was chosen preacher by two congregations, one at Stepney and the other at Cripplelegate. He died 14 November, 1646. He published a Commentary on Hosea, and a work on Patience and Resignation, &c.

BURROUGHS, Sir JOHN, Garter King-at-arms, was a native of Sandwich in Kent. He studied at Gray's Inn, and in 1623 was made keeper of the records in the Tower and secretary to the earl marshal, previous to which appointment he was knighted. In 1633 he was made Garter, and at the beginning of the civil war received the degree of D.C.L. at Oxford, where he died 21 Oct., 1643. He published 'Impetus Juveniles et quedam sedatoris aliquantulum animi Epistola,' under the Latinised name of Burrhus; and 'The Sovereignty of the British Seas.'

BURROW, Sir JAMES, an English lawyer, and master of the Crown Office, was born in 1701. On the death of Mr. West in 1772, he was appointed to act as president of the Royal Society till the anniversary election in 1773, and the society addressing the king at that time, his majesty conferred on him the honour of knighthood. He published 4 vols. of Reports, and one of Decisions in the court of King's Bench. He also wrote an Essay on Punctuation, and some Anecdotes of Oliver Cromwell and his family. Died 5 Nov., 1782.

BURROW, REUBEN, a mathematician, born at Hoberley, Yorkshire. He received a common education; after which he became clerk to a merchant in London, and next usher to a writing-master in Bunhill Row. From thence he removed to Portsmouth, where he kept a school some time, but without success, on which he returned to London, and was employed by Dr. Maskelyne, whom he accompanied in making observations on the mountain of Schehallian. After this he was appointed drawing master in the Tower, and while in this situation became editor of the Gentleman's and Lady's Diaries. In 1773 he published a Dissertation of Apollonius on Inclinations; and a tract on Projectiles. In 1782 he was employed on a trigonometrical survey of Bengal, but while engaged in this important work he died in 1791. In 1790 appeared 'A short Account of the late Mr. Burrow's Measurement of a Degree of Longitude, and another of Latitude, near the Tropic, in Beng.l.' Several of his papers arc in the Asiatic Transactions.

BURSERIUS, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian physician, who wrote 'Institutions of Practical Medicine,' and died 1785.

BURT, Captain EDMUND, agent to General Wade, chief surveyor during the making of the roads through the highlands of Scotland, died in London 4 Feb., 1755. He was author of the amusing 'Letters from the North of Scotland,' from which Sir Walter Scott and Lord Macaulay have drawn so largely. They were originally published in 1754.

BURTION, CASSIBELAN, only son of the historian of Leicestershire, made a metrical translation of Martial, which was published in 1658. Born 1609; died 28 Feb., 1681.

BURTON, EDMUND, a classical scholar, born at Westminster in or about 1721. After receiving a liberal education at Westminster School, he was elected thence in 1738 to Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1741; M.A. 1745). Afterwards he was called to the bar, and took up his residence in Barthomet Street, Westminster. I have not met with the date of his decease. His works consist of an English prose translation of Persius's Satires, 1752; 'Ancient Characters deduced from Classical Remains,' 1763; an edition of 'Manilius,' 1783; and a Dissertation upon Suicides, 1790. He was also a valuable contributor to the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' under the assumed name of Ruben de Mont.—Al. West.

BURTON, EDWARD, an English Jesuit, was born in London, and at the age of twenty-five became a member of the Society of Jesus at Louvain, and died in England about 1624, aged 40. He translated Father Veron's 'Defeat of Henche, the Calvinistic Minister,' Douay, 1616.

BURTON, EDWARD, D.D., professor of divinity at Oxford, was born at Shrewsbury 13 Feb., 1794, and died 19 Jan., 1836. He published many works on classical and theological subjects.

BURTON, HENRY, a Puritan divine, born 1579 at Birdsall, Yorkshire. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A., though he took his B.D. degree at Oxford. Afterwards he became tutor to the two sons of a certain noble knight, by whose interest he was made clerk of the closet to Prince Henry, during whose lifetime he composed a Treatise of Antichrist. After the death of Prince Henry he became clerk of the closet to Prince Charles, and at the age of thirty entered the ministry. After seven years' service, however, he was compelled to leave the court in consequence of a dispute with the bishops. After this he obtained the rectory of St. Matthew, Friday Street, and employed himself in preaching and writing. He was summoned to the Star Chamber for printing without licence a book against bowing at the name of Jesus; and Archbishop Laud prohibited him from preaching, though this sentence was afterwards set aside by the court of Arches.

BURTON.

He was summoned again for writing 'The Balting of the Pope's Bull.' A sermon he preached on the 5th of Nov. caused him to be exposed in the pillory 14 June, 1637. He was also sentenced to lose both his ears, and to be imprisoned for life in Lancaster Gaol, but Guernsey was afterwards selected as the place of his confinement. In Nov., 1640, an order came from the parliament for his release, and he was soon afterwards restored to his living. Died 7 Jan., 1648. He wrote many pamphlets, chiefly controversial. [MS. Addit. 25,475, f. 56.]

BURTON, HEZEKIAH, an English divine, who was successively fellow of Magdalen College, Cambridge, prebendary of Norwich, rector of St. George's, Southwark, and of Barnes in Surrey. He died in 1681. He wrote the preface to Bishop Cumberland's Laws of Nature, and after his death Dr. Tillotson published two volumes of his Sermons.

BURTON, JOHN, M.D., an antiquary and physician, was born at Kipon, in Yorkshire, in 1607. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, but took his degree of M.D. at Rheims; after which he settled at York as a physician, where he became eminent, till, by falling into the hands of the rebels in 1745, his loyalty was called in question, and some severe reflections were thrown upon him, from which he defended himself in a pamphlet called 'British Liberty endangered.' Before this he published 'A Treatise on the Non-Naturals, with an Essay on the Chincough,' 8vo. In 1751 he printed 'An Essay towards a New System of Midwifery,' 8vo.; and in 1753 'A Letter to Dr. Smellie, containing Remarks on his Treatise of Midwifery.' But his greatest work is entitled 'Monasticon Eboracense; and the Ecclesiastical History of Yorkshire,' folio, 1758. Died 19 Jan., 1771.

BURTON, JOHN, D.D., was born at Wembworth, Devonshire, 1606, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where for nearly fifteen years he was an indefatigable tutor. In 1733 he was elected a fellow of Eton College, and about the same time succeeded Dr. Littleton as vicar of Maple-Durham, Oxfordshire. He found on his living his predecessor's widow and three infant daughters in an unprotected state; and the benevolence with which he treated the mother ended in marriage. His retirement here was employed in improving the neighbourhood, and in suggesting hints for removing obstructions in the navigation of the Thames. After the death of his wife in 1748 he spent his time at Eton, and in 1760 was presented to the rectory of Worplesdon, Surrey. Died 21 Feb., 1771. He published 'Opuscula Miscellanæ;' Sermons; 'The Gentleness of Lord Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, printed at Oxford, vindicated;' 'Dissertation et notæ criticae spectantes ad Tragedias quædam Græcæ editas in Pentalogia;' and 'Papists and Pharisees compared; or Papists the corrupters of Christianity,' occasioned by Philip's Life of Cardinal Pole.

BURTON, ROBERT, a learned writer, born at Lindley, Leicestershire, 8 Feb., 1576. He was the younger brother of the Leicester antiquary, and was educated at Sutton Coldfield, after which he became a commoner of Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Christ Church, on being elected to a studentship there. In 1614 he took the degree of B.D., and in 1616 was presented to the vicarage of St. Thomas, in Oxford, to which was afterwards added the rectory of Segrave, Leicestershire. Burton was an hypochondriac, and much given to astrology. He died 25 Jan., 1639-40. His famous 'Anatomy of Melancholy' was printed first in quarto, and afterwards in folio. It is a storehouse of learning on all kinds of subjects, intermingled with quaint observations and witty illustrations, from which many modern writers have drawn amply, without acknowledgment. Burton's 'Philosophaster' and 'Poemata' were published by the Roxburghe Club in 1862.

BURTON, ROBERT, the assumed name of an author who published a number of what are termed 'Chapmen's Books,' at the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth century. They were published by Nathaniel Crouch, who is said by Dunton to have been the compiler of them.

BURTON, WILLIAM, a topographer, brother of Robert Burton, the author of the 'Anatomy of Melancholy,' was born at Lindley, Leicestershire, 24 Aug., 1575, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple. He was in due course called to the bar, and became a reporter in the court of Common Pleas. He died at Falde, Staffordshire, 6 April, 1645. His 'Description of Leicestershire' was published in 1622. He also compiled a work in MS. entitled 'Antiquitates de Dadlington,' and left a great number of heraldic and topographical collections.

BURTON, WILLIAM, an antiquary, was born in London 1609, and educated in St. Paul's School, from whence he removed to Queen's College, Oxford, in 1625. On taking the degree of bachelor in civil law, he left the university, and became usher to Thomas Farnaby; but afterwards he was appointed master of the grammar school at Kingston-upon-Thames. He died at London, 28 Dec., 1657. His works are 'Laudatio funebris in obitum D. Thomæ Alleni,' 4to.; 'Annotations on the First Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians,' 4to.; 'Græcæ Linguae Historia; A Commentary on Antoninus's Itinerary, or Journey of the Roman Empire, so far as it concerneth Britain, folio. This last is a very valuable work. He also translated Alstedius on the Millennium, 1643, 4to.

BURY, ARTHUR, D.D., a native of Devonshire, was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, from which he was ejected by the parliamentary visitors. At the Restoration he obtained a prebend of Exeter, and in 1665 was made rector of Exeter College, and chaplain to the king. His 'Naked Gospel,' in which he avowed the principles of the Socinians, caused his ejection from his preferment, and the work was burnt by order of the university of Oxford. He vindicated his conduct in some pamphlets, and died near Exeter about the end of the seventeenth century.

BURY, ELIZABETH, daughter of Captain Adams Lawrence, of Linton, Cambridgeshire, was born at Clare, Suffolk, 1664, and became the wife, first, of Griffith Lloyd, Esq., and afterwards of Samuel Bury, a dissenting minister. She died at Bristol 1720, leaving behind her a large Diary, which was published by her husband.

BURY, HENRY DE. See BADERICUS.

BURY, JOHN, a graduate of Cambridge (B.A. 1553; M.A. 1555), translated from Greek into English 'Paranensis, or admonition to Demonicus,' 8vo., London, 1557, with a dedication to his uncle, Sir William Chester.

BUSCHING.

BURY, RICHARD DE, as he is commonly called,* though his real name was Richard Jungerville, was born at Bury St. Edmund's, in Suffolk, 1281, and educated at Oxford. He was tutor to Edward III., by whom he was preferred to the bishopric of Durham 1333. In the following year he was made lord high chancellor, and in 1336 treasurer of England. Died 24 April, 1345. He was a very learned prelate, and founded a noble library at Oxford for the use of the students. He wrote a treatise containing rules for the management of the library, how the books were to be preserved, and upon what conditions lent out to scholars. It is entitled 'Philobiblion, seu de Amore Librorum et Institutione Bibliothecæ.' It was first printed at Cologne 1483, and was republished at Oxford 1599, under the editorship of Thomas James.

BUS, CÉSAR DE, a French priest, founder of an order called the Fathers of the Christian Doctrine, was born at Cavailion 3 Feb., 1544, and died at Avignon 15 April, 1607.

BUSBECK, AUGIER GHISLAIN DE, a writer and diplomatist, born at Comines, in Flanders, 1522. He was sent ambassador to Constantinople, afterwards to France and elsewhere, and died 28 Oct., 1592, leaving accounts of his Travels, Letters, and other works, in Latin.

BUSBY, CHARLES AUGUSTINE, an architect and civil engineer, son of Dr. Busby, the translator of Lucretius, died at Brighton 18 Sept., 1834. Many of the most magnificent parts of Brighton will remain the monuments of his genius. He was the inventor of the hydraulic orrery.

BUSBY, RICHARD, D.D., the most eminent schoolmaster of his time, was born at Lutton, Lincolnshire, 22 Sept., 1606, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1628; M.A. 1631). On entering into orders he obtained the prebend and rectory of Cudworth, Somersetshire. In 1640 he was appointed head master of Westminster School, which office he retained for about fifty-five years. In 1666 he obtained a prebendal stall in the church of Westminster, and was made treasurer and canon residentiary of Wells. In the same year he was created D.D. by the university of Oxford. He died 6 April, 1695, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Wood says 'He was a person eminent and exemplary for piety and justice, an encourager of virtuous and forward youth, of great learning and hospitality, and the chief person that educated more youths that were afterwards eminent in the Church and State than any master of his time.' If the common report is to be relied upon, he never spoilt the child by sparing the rod: indeed Dr. Johnson says he used to call the rod his 'sieve,' and to remark that 'whoever did not pass through it was no boy for him.' The publications which pass under Dr. Busby's name are not numerous, and were all for the use of the school. Some of them, more or less altered, continued in use at Westminster till a few years ago.—Biog. Brit.; Al. Wet.

BUSCHETTO DA DULICHIO, a celebrated architect and machinist in the eleventh century, a native of Greece. He built the magnificent cathedral at Pisa.

BUSCHING, ANTHONY FREDERICK, a celebrated German geographer, was born at Stadthagen, in Westphalia, 27 Sept., 1724, and died at Berlin 28 May, 1793.

BUSCHING, JOHN GUSTAVUS, an historian and antiquary, son of the above, was born at Berlin 19 Sept., 1783, and died 4 May, 1829.

BUSCHIUS, HERMAN, born at Sassenberg, in Prussian Westphalia, 1468, professed the belles lettres in several towns of Germany, and died 1534. He was author of Latin poems, and commentaries on various classical authors.

BUSEMBAUM, HERMAN, a Jesuit, born at Notelen, in Westphalia, 1600, became rector of the colleges of Hildesheim and Munster, and died 31 Jan., 1668. He composed a famous work, entitled 'Medulla Theologiæ Moralis,' in which the papal authority is carried to the height of extravagance.

BUSH, PAUL, an English prelate, was educated at Oxford, and became a member of the religious order called Bons-hommes, of which he became provincial. He was also chaplain to Henry VIII., and for his ready compliance at the dissolution of his monastery was made the first bishop of Bristol 1542. Being married, he was deprived of his see in the reign of Edward VI., and passed the remainder of his life privately at Bristol, where he died 11 Oct., 1558, æt. 68. His works are 'An exhortation to Margaret Burges, Wife to Jo. Burges, Clothier, of Kings wood, in the County of Wults,' 8vo., London, n.d.; 'Notes on the Psalm beginning with Miserere mei Deus, &c.,' 'Treatise in praise of the Cross,' 'Dialogues between Christ and the Virgin Mary,' and 'Treatise of salves and curing remedies.'

BUSH, WILLIAM, a dissenting minister, who, for half a century, was pastor of a congregation at Enfield, in Middlesex, died 17 Sept., 1777, aged 77. He published 'An Earnest Invitation to the House of God, or the true Christian's love to God's Publick Worship, being the substance of two sermons,' 8vo., London, 1730; and 'The Inadvertencies and Indiscretions of Good Men a great cause of general Corruption: a Sermon on 1 Tim. v. 22,' 8vo., 1747.

BUSHE, SIR CHARLES KENDAL, chief justice of the Queen's Bench in Ireland, died 7 July, 1843.

BUSHELL, THOMAS, was born in Worcestershire about 1594, and educated at Oxford, probably at Balliol College. He was taken into the service of Lord Bacon, on whose fall he settled at Enstone, Oxfordshire, where he entertained Charles I. and his queen, for which he was appointed farmer of the mines in Wales. At the Restoration he procured an Act of Parliament for working the lead mines in Somersetshire. Died April, 1674. He published 'The several Speeches and Songs at the presentation of the Rock at Enstone, to the queen's most excellent majesty,' 1636; 'A just and true remonstrance of his Majesty's Mines Royal in Wales,' 1642; and an 'Extract, or Abstract of the lord chancellor Bacon's Philosophical Theory of Mineral Prosecutions,' 1660.

BUSLEYDEN, or EUSLIDIUS, JEROME, a native of Arlon, in Luxemburg, who, through the interest of his brother Francis, archbishop of Besançon, obtained several important employments. He was the friend of Erasmus and Sir Thomas More, and founded, at Louvaine, the college of three languages which bears his name. Died 26 Aug., 1517.

BUSSIERES, JEAN DE, a French Jesuit, author of Latin poems, an abridgment of the History of France, &c., was born 1607, and died 26 Oct., 1678.

BUSSY, ROGER RABUTIN, COMTE DE, a French writer, born 1618. His 'Amours des Gaules' gave such offence that he was thrown into the Bastille. He wrote several other works, which show great knowledge and ingenuity. Died 9 April, 1693.

BUSTON, THOMAS OF STEPHEN, who had been servant to a gentleman of fortune named Thomas Pound, was sent by him to Rome, where he became a Jesuit 1575. His superiors, finding him to be a person every way qualified, sent him, in 1578, as a missionary to the East Indies, where he resided for nearly forty years. He died at Goa 1619, aged 70. He wrote a grammar of the Hindustani language; a Christian Doctrine in the same language; and a large work in that language, entitled 'Pazana,' concerning the mysteries of faith.

BUTCHELL, MARTIN VAN, an empiric and eccentric character, was born in London 5 Feb., 1735. He resided between thirty and forty years in Mount Street, Berkeley Square, and died after 1806.

BUTCHER, RICHARD, an antiquary, was born at Stamford in or about 1537, and became town clerk of his native town. In 1646 he published 'The Survey and Antiquitie of the Towne of Stamford,' which was reprinted 1717.

BUTE, JOHN STUART, EARL OF, eldest son of John, the second earl, was born 1713, and received his education at Eton. In 1761 he was appointed a secretary of state, and in the following year succeeded Mr. Pitt as first lord of the treasury. The history of the administration of Lord Bute belongs to the history of the country; but whatever were his merits or demerits, he was certainly the most unpopular English minister of modern times. The only important event in Lord Bute's administration was the termination of the war with France, by the peace of Paris, concluded 10 Feb., 1763. It was long a strong popular belief that the English minister was bribed by France to consent to this treaty: but no evidence worthy of credit was ever brought forward to confirm this rumour. Lord Bute resigned 8 April, 1763, and died 10 March, 1792. He was a liberal patron of men of genius, both in literature and the arts.—Nal. Cycl.

BUTLER. See ORMOND, DUKE OF; OSBORN, EARL OF.

BUTLER, ALBAN, a learned divine of the Roman church, was second son of Simon Butler, Esq., of Appletree, Northamptonshire, where he was born 1710. At a very early age he was sent to a school in Lancashire, from which he was removed, when he was about eight years old, to the English college at Douay. Shortly afterwards he had the misfortune to lose both his father and mother. After he had completed the usual course of study, he was admitted an alumnus of Douay College, where he became professor, first of philosophy, and then of divinity. In 1745 he accompanied the earl of Shrewsbury and the Hon. James Talbot and Thomas Talbot on their travels through France and Italy. Being sent on the English mission, he was stationed first in Staffordshire, and afterwards at Warkworth, in Northumberland. He was then appointed chaplain to Edward, duke of Norfolk, and charged with the education of that nobleman's nephew and presumptive heir. His first residence, after receiving this appointment, was at Norwich, in a house generally called the Duke's Palace. Thither some large boxes of books belonging to him were sent, but by mistake they were delivered at the bishop's palace. The bishop opened them, and finding them full of Catholic books, refused to deliver them to their owner. While at Douay, however, Mr. Butler had gained the good will of the duke of Cumberland, by reason of his having been very active in ministering to the wants of the English prisoners who were taken at the battle of Fontenoy. He now applied to the duke for assistance, and his royal highness at once wrote to the bishop, who was induced to restore the books to their rightful owner. Mr. Butler subsequently accompanied his pupil to Paris, where he completed and sent to press his 'Lives of the Saints,' which had cost him the labour of thirty years. Soon after his return to England, he was chosen president of the English college at St. Omer, in which station he continued till his death, on 15 May, 1773. Mr. Butler's literary reputation rests mainly on his 'Lives of the Saints,' a work of great value and research. It was first published in 1745, in 5 vols. 4to.; and in 1779-80 an edition was published at Dublin, in 12 vols. 8vo., and in 1799-1800 at Edinburgh in the same form, to which was prefixed a memoir of the author, by his nephew, Charles Butler. Other editions of this famous work are 12 vols. 8vo., London, 1812-13; 2 vols. 8vo., Dublin, 1833-6; and it has been translated into French. His other works are 'Letters on the "History of the Popes,"' published by Mr. Archibald Bower; 'Travels through France and Italy, and part of Austrian, French, and of Dutch Netherlands, during the years 1745 and 1746,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1803, edited by Charles Butler; 'The Moveable Feasts, Fasts, and other Observances of the Catholic Church. With Life, by Charles Butler. To which is added, A Continuation of the Feasts and Fasts, by a Catholic Priest,' 8vo., Dublin, 1839; 'Short Life of Sir Toby Matthews'; 'Life of Mary of the Cross, a pious nun in the English convent of the Poor Clares at Rouen'; 'Meditations and Discourses on the sublime truths and important duties of Christianity,' edited by Charles Butler, 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1791-3. Mr. Alban Butler corresponded with many persons of distinction, both among the communicants with the church of Rome, and the separatists from her. Among the former may be reckoned the learned and elegant Lambertini, afterwards Pope Benedict XIV.; and among the latter was Dr. Lowth, bishop successively of Oxford and London.

BUTLER, CHARLES, an English divine, born at High Wycomb, Buckinghamshire, 1559, and educated at Magdalen Hall and Magdalen College, Oxford. After acting for some time as master of the free school at Basingstoke, he was presented to the vicarage of Lawncote Wotton, Hampshire, where he died 29 March, 1647. He wrote 'The Feminine Monarchy; or a Treatise on Bees,' 1609, a work not more curious for its matter, than for the manner of printing, as it abounds with new typographical characters, cast on purpose, and a very singular mode of orthography; 'Rhetoricæ libri duo'; 'De propinquate matrimonium impediens regula generalis,' on the marriage of cousins-german; 'Oratoricæ libri duo'; 'English Grammar'; and 'The Principles of Music,' a work highly praised by Dr. Burney.

BUTLER, CHARLES, nephew of Dr. Alban Butler, above-mentioned, was born in London 1750, and educated at the English college at Douay. On returning to his native country he studied the law, and acquired a great reputation and practice as a conveyancer. He acted as secretary to the committee formed in 1787 for the abolition of the penal laws against the Catholics, and throughout his life he displayed great zeal in promoting the interests of his co-religionists. Mr. Butler died at his house in Great Ormond Street, London, 2 June, 1832, leaving behind him an unblemished character and a considerable literary reputation. Among the numerous productions of his pen are 'Horæ Biblicæ; being a connected Series of Notes on the Text and Literary History of the Bibles or Sacred Books of the Jews and Christians; and on the Bibles or Books accounted Sacred by the Mahometans, Hindus, Parsees, Chinese, and Scandinavians,' 2 vols.; 'Notes on the Koran, the Zend-Avesta, the Vedas, the Kings, and the Edda'; 'Horæ Juridicæ Subsecivæ; or Notes on the Grecian, Roman, Feudal, and Canon Law'; 'An historical and literary Account of the Formularies, Confessions of Faith, or Symbolic Books of the Roman Catholic, Greek, and principal Protestant Churches'; 'Historical Memoirs of the English, Irish, and Scottish Catholics, since the Reformation,' 4 vols.; 'Reminiscences, with a Correspondence between Dr. Parr and the author,' 2 vols.; 'The Book of the Roman Catholic Church. In a Series of Letters addressed to Robert Southey, Esq., on his Book of the Church'; an edition (jointly with Mr. Hargrave) of Coke upon Littleton; and biographical memoirs of Fénelon, Bossuet, St. Vincent of Paul, Henri-Marie de Boudon, Michel de l'Hôpital, Dom de Rancé, Thomas à Kempis, and Erasmus. His 'Philological and Biographical Works' were published in 5 vols. 8vo., London, 1817.

BUTLER, JOHN, third son of Edmond Butler (by courtesy), Baron Dunboynne, was bred to the church, and having been created D.D., was appointed Catholic bishop of Cork. On the death of his nephew, 1786, the barony of Dunboynne devolved upon him, and he applied to the court of Rome for permission to marry, but his request was, of course, scouted with contempt. After much hesitation he determined to conform to the Established Church, and accordingly read his recantation in Clonmel church 19 Aug., 1787. Having taken this step, to the great scandal of the Catholic world, he married Maria, daughter of Theobald Butler, Esq., of Wilford, county Tipperary. Being, however, disappointed in the hope of having children, he left his wife, who survived him, returned to the old church, and spent the last years of his life at Maynooth College, to which he bequeathed the sum of £10,000. Died 7 May, 1800.

BUTLER, JOHN, bishop of Hereford, was born at Hamburg Dec., 1717. On entering into orders, he became a popular preacher in London, and so eminent as a political writer that, soon after the accession of George III., he was made chaplain in ordinary and prebendary of Winchester. He was also promoted to the archdeaconry of Surrey, on which, as he never had a university education, he procured a Lambeth degree. In 1777 he was advanced to the bishopric of Oxford, from whence in 1788 he was translated to Hereford, where he died 10 Dec., 1802. He was author of 'An Answer to the Cocoa Tree (a pamphlet, so called) from a Whig,' 1762; 'Serious Considerations on the Measures of the present Administration,' i.e. of Lord Bute; 'Account of the Character of the Right Hon. Bilson Legge; Sermons and Charges. His name occurs in the list of persons suspected to have written the Letters of Junius.

BUTLER, JOSEPH, a learned prelate, born at Wantage, Berkshire, 1692. Being intended for the ministry among the dissenters, he was placed under Mr. Jones, who kept an academy at Tewkesbury, and while there wrote an anonymous letter to Dr. Clarke, containing remarks on some of his arguments in his 'Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God,' with which the doctor was so pleased that he inserted them in his next edition, though he then knew not who was the author of them. During his residence at Tewkesbury he studied the subject of nonconformity, the result of which was a determination to enter the Established Church; and, accordingly, in 1714 he became a commoner of Oriel College, Oxford, where he formed an intimacy with Mr. Talbot, son of the bishop of Durham, by whose interest he was appointed preacher at the Rolls, and successively rector of Houghton and Stanhope. In 1730 he was made clerk of the closet to Queen Caroline, who delighted much in his conversation. Two years afterwards he was consecrated bishop of Bristol, and in 1740 made dean of St. Paul's, on which he resigned the rectory of Stanhope. In 1746 he was nominated clerk of the closet to the king, and in 1750 was translated to the see of Durham. He died at Bath 16 June, 1752, and was interred in Bristol Cathedral. He published a volume of Sermons, preached at the Rolls Chapel; and a valuable work, entitled 'The Analogy of Religion, natural and revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature,' 1736. He also printed a Charge on External Religion, which brought on him the imputation of being inclined to the Church of Rome, till Archbishop Secker published a reutation of the slander.

BUTLER, SAMUEL, the author of 'Hudibras,' was born at Strensham, Worcestershire, and baptized 8 Feb., 1612. He received his education at the grammar school at Worcester, and afterwards resided six or seven years at the university of Cambridge, though he did not graduate. On his return home he became clerk to a justice of the peace. He next went to live in the family of the countess of Kent, and was employed as amanuensis by the learned Seiden. After this he resided with Sir Samuel Luke, of Bedfordshire, who was a zealous Puritan, and a commander under Cromwell. Here Butler became acquainted with the characters of the leading men of that party, and formed the plan of his 'Hudibras.' The idea of this poem, which gives so faithful a picture of the cant and hypocrisy of his times, was taken generally from Don Quixote; but the humour and verse are wholly Butler's own, in which he stands unrivalled. After the Restoration he became secretary to the earl of Carbury, who appointed him steward of Ludlow Castle. About this time he married Mrs. Herbert, a lady of family and some fortune. In 1663 was published the first part of his 'Hudibras'; the second in 1664; and the third, or concluding part, in 1678. He died in London 25 Sept., 1680, and was buried at the expense of his friend Mr. Longueville, in the churchyard of St. Paul's, Covent Garden. In 1721 Alderman Barber, the printer, erected a monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey. His posthumous works have been published, but his fame rests exclusively on his 'Hudibras,' the best edition of which is that by Dr. Grey, 2 vols. 8vo., 1744. A masterly French translation, by John Towneley, appeared in 1757.

BUTLER, SAMUEL, an English prelate, born at Kenilworth, Warwickshire, 30 Jan., 1774. From Rugby School he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship. He was appointed head master of Shrewsbury School 1798; bishop of Lichfield 1836; and died 4 Dec., 1840. Among his publications are an edition of Bachylus, enriched with the notes of Stanley; and a popular 'Sketch of Modern and Ancient Geography.'

BUTLER, THOMAS, LL.D., took the degree of B.A. at Cambridge 1548, but afterwards went abroad, and was created doctor of the civil and canon laws in some foreign university. He chiefly resided at Rome, with his friend Thomas Godwell, bishop of St. Asaph. He is author of 'A treatise of the holy sacrifice of the altar called the masse. In which by the word of God, and testimonies of the apostles and primitive church, it is proved that our Saviour Jesus Christ did institute the masse, and the apostles did celebrate the same. Translated out of Italian into English,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1570.

BUTLER, WEEDEN, a divine, born at Margate 1742, followed the legal profession for some years, when he entered the church, and became curate and amanuensis to the celebrated Dr. Dodd, whom he succeeded as preacher at Charlotte Chapel, Pimlico. He afterwards kept, for forty years, a classical school at Chelsea. Died 14 July, 1823. He published 'The Cheltenham Guide;' Jortin's Tracts, 2 vols., 1790; Wilcock's Roman Conversations, 2 vols., 1797; and biographies of Dr. Hildesley, bishop of Sodor and Man, and Dr. Stanhope, dean of Canterbury.—Rosé.

BUTLER, WILLIAM, the most celebrated physician of his age, was born at Ipswich about 1535, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. In July, 1563, he was incorporated of the university of Oxford. In Oct., 1572, the university of Cambridge granted him a licence to practice physic, he having then been a regent in arts for six years. He was usually called doctor, but never took the degree of M.D. He acquired the most extraordinary reputation in his profession, and it is said that 'he was the first Englishman who quickened Galenical physic with a touch of Paracelsus, trading in chemical receipts with great success.' Like many other eminent medical men, his habits were very eccentric, and numerous anecdotes are related respecting his odd ways. Here is a sample. 'The Dr. lying at the Savoy in London, next the water side, where was a balcony look't into the Thames, a patient came to him that was grievously tormented with an ague. The Dr. orders a boate to be in readiness under his window, and discoursed with the patient (a gent.) in the balcony, when, on a signal given, two or three lusty fellows came behind the gent. and threw him a matter of twenty feete into the Thames. This surprize absolutely cured him.' Mr. Butler died at Cambridge 29 Jan., 1617-18.

BUTLER, WILLIAM, an educational writer, was born at St. John's, near Worcester, 12 Oct., 1748. In 1765 he settled in London, where he followed the calling of a writing-master and schoolmaster for many years. His death took place at Hackney 1 Aug., 1822. Among his useful publications are 'Arithmetical Questions;' 'Exercises on the Globes,' 'Chronological Exercises,' and 'Geographical Exercises on the New Testament.'

BUTLER, WILLIAM ANCHER, professor of moral philosophy in the university of Dublin, and rector of Raymochy, co. Donegal, died 5 July, 1848. He was author of 'Sermons Doctrinal and Practical,' edited by T. Woodward, 8vo., Dublin, 1849, which went through several editions, and was followed by a second series, edited by J. A. Jeremie; 'Letters on the Development of Christian Doctrine, in reply to Mr. Newman's Essay. Edited by T. Woodward,' 8vo., Dublin, 1850; 'The Church's Seasons a Safeguard against partial views of Christianity,' 8vo., London, 1853; and 'Lectures on the History of ancient Philosophy. Edited from the author's MSS., with notes, by W. H. Thompson,' 2 vols. 8vo., Cambridge, 1856.

BUTT, GEORGE, D.D., a divine and poet, born 26 Dec., 1741, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He was appointed rector of Stanford and of Clifton, Worcestershire, 1771; chaplain to the king 1783; vicar of Kidderminster 1787; rector of Notgrove, Gloucestershire, 1793; died 30 Nov., 1795. He published some single sermons and several volumes of poems. Mrs. Sherwood revised and published, in 1824, a play of his called 'The Spanish Daughter.'—Ill. West.

BUTTER, NATHANIEL, an English journalist, who with much difficulty aided in starting the first printed newspaper. This was commenced in 1622, and at different times was entitled 'The Weekly Newses,' 'Newses from most parts of Christendom,' 'Weekly Newses from Italic and Germanie,' 'The Last News,' 'More News,' 'Our Last News,' &c. He appears to have been a collector of news before he conceived the idea of a printed periodical news-sheet, and to have at one time followed the occupation of a correspondent. In 1641 he published a weekly account of the 'Passages in Parliament.' Died 22 Feb., 1663-4.

BUTTER, WILLIAM, M.D., a physician, was born in Derbyshire 1726, and graduated at Edinburgh. After practising some time at Derby he settled in London, where he died 21 March, 1805. All his works are on subjects connected with his profession.

BUTTERFIELD, ROBERT, a graduate of St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1622-3; M.A. 1626), wrote 'Maschil; or, A Treatise to give Instruction touching the State of the Church of Rome since the Council of Trent. Whether shee be yet a True Christian Church. And if she have denied the Foundation of our Faith. For the Vindication of the right Reverend Father in God, the L. Bishop of Exeter, from the cavills of H. B. [Henry Burton] in his Book intituled The seven Fialls,' 8vo., 1629.

BUTTERFIELD, SWITHUS, an English writer, was, there is every reason to believe, a member of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He died in or about 1611. His works are 'A Summarie of the Principles of the Christian Religion, selected in Manner of Common-Places out of the Writings of the best Diuines of our Age,' 8vo., London, 1582; 'A Catechism, or the principles of the true Christian religion: brevitely selected out of manie good books,' 8vo., London, 1590; 'A great abridgement of the common lawes,' MS.; 'An abridgement of the civil lawes,' MS.; 'Collection of policies in peace and war, written 1604,' MS. &c.

BUTTMANN, PHILIP CHARLES, a distinguished classical critic, author of three esteemed Greek grammars, was born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine 5 Dec., 1764, and died 21 Jan., 1829.

BUTTON, or WILLIAMSON, RICHARD, D.D., an English Catholic divine, resided chiefly in Staffordshire, where he was living in 1635, aged 70. He composed a learned discourse concerning abbey lands.

BUTTON, THOMAS, a native of England, the first arctic navigator who reached the eastern coast of America through Hudson's Straits, flourished 1613.

BUTTS, Sir WILLIAM, M.D., of Norfolk, was educated in Gonville Hall, Cambridge, and became physician to Henry VIII., who, in 1529, granted him forty marks per annum. His learning and skill are highly spoken of by his contemporaries. Died 17 Nov., 1545.

BUXTON, JEDEDIAH, an extraordinary calculator, born at Elmton, Derbyshire, about 1704. Though his father was a schoolmaster, Jedediah could neither read nor write; notwithstanding which he attained a power of calculation almost incredible. Such was his abstraction of mind that company, conversation, and confused noises could not distract him when intent on a problem. A person once proposed to him this question: In a body whose three sides are 23,145,789 yards, 5,642,732 yards, and 54,965 yards, how many cubic eighths of an inch? In about five hours Jedediah accurately solved this intricate problem, though surrounded by more than a hundred labourers. He would measure a piece of land by striding over it as exactly as if done by a chain. In 1754 he walked up to London, and whilst in town was introduced to the Royal Society, whom he called 'the volk of the sixty court.' He was also taken to Drury Lane Theatre, when, instead of minding the entertainment, he employed himself in counting the words uttered by Mr. Garrick and the steps of the dancers. He lived to be above seventy, and had several children.

BUXTON, RICHARD, a celebrated botanist, died at Manchester 2 Jan., 1865, aged 80.

BUXTON, Sir THOMAS FOWELL, was born 1 April, 1786, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he received the university gold medal. In 1811 he joined the firm of Truman, Hanbury, and Co., the well-known brewers, and for several years devoted himself to business with all that energy and perseverance which he afterwards exhibited in more lofty pursuits. His first public effort was a speech on behalf of the distressed inhabitants of Spitalfields, when he not only succeeded in obtaining large pecuniary contributions, but in establishing an extensive and well-organized system of relief. His success on this occasion led him, in conjunction with his sister-in-law, Mrs. Fry, and his brother-in-law, Mr. Hoare, to examine into the state of our prisons. The result of his labours he published in a small volume, entitled 'An Inquiry whether Crime and Misery are produced or prevented by our present system of Prison Discipline.' This attracted much attention, and led to the formation of the Prison Discipline Society, and ultimately to those great improvements in our goals which modern times have witnessed. In 1828 he was returned M.P. for Weymouth, which he continued to represent till 1837. He devoted himself to the carrying out of many philanthropic objects, and in particular the amelioration of our criminal code, and the abolition of the practice of 'suttee' in India. In 1823 he came forward as the recognized successor of Mr. Wilberforce, and he eventually had the satisfaction of seeing his labours for the emancipation of the West Indian slaves crowned with success. He also published a work entitled 'The Slave Trade and its Remedy,' which created a considerable sensation. He was created a baronet 1840, and died at his seat, Northrepps, Norfolk, 19 Feb., 1845.

BUXTORF, JOHN, a learned philologist, born at Camen, in Westphalia, 1564. He became professor of Chaldee and Hebrew at Basle, where he died 13 Sept., 1629. His works are Lexicon Chaldaicum, Talmudicum, et Rabbinicum; a small Hebrew and Chaldaic Lexicon; Thesaurus Linguae Hebraicae, 2 vols.; a Hebrew Bible, with a rabbinical commentary, 4 vols.; Synagoga Judaica, on the religious ceremonies of the Jews; Institutio Epistolaris Hebraica; Concordantiae Hebraicae, &c.

BUXTORF, JOHN, son of the above, was born at Basle 1590, and died 16 Aug., 1664. In a Latin treatise he defended the antiquity of the vowel points with great zeal against Cappellus. He also compiled a Chaldaic and Syriac lexicon, and other works. There were two others of the same family, John James, who died 1704, and John, who died 1732. They were successively professors at Basle, and writers in the same line; but all the Buxtorfs are charged with being too partial to the rabbins.

BYAM, HENRY, D.D. of Oxford, a learned divine and loyalist, was born at East Luchham, Somersetshire, 31 Aug., 1580, and died 16 June, 1669. He wrote 'Thirteen Sermons, most of them preached before his majesty Charles II. in his exile,' 8vo., London, 1675.

BYFIELD, or BIFIELD, NICHOLAS, a Puritan divine, was born in Warwickshire about 1579, and educated at Oxford, though he left the university without a degree. He became pastor of St. Peter's Church, Chester, and afterwards vicar of Isleworth, where he died 1622. His principal works are a 'Commentary on the First Epistle of St. Peter,' and another 'on Colossians.' His son, the notorious Auciram Byfield, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and was one of the Assembly of Divines. Adoniram is one of the few persons who are stigmatised by name in 'Hudibras.'

BYNÆUS, ANTHONY, a Protestant divine and theological writer, born at Utrecht 1654; died at Deventer 8 Nov., 1698.

BYNG. See TORRINGTON, VISCOUNT.

BYNG, ANDREW, D.D., was born at Cambridge about 1574, and educated at Peterhouse in that university. He was elected regius professor of Hebrew 1608, and died Mar., 1651-2. Dr. Byng was one of the divines employed in the Jacobean translation of the Bible.

BYNG, JOHN, son of George Viscount Torrington, was born 1704, served in the glorious expeditions of his father, and was raised to the rank of admiral. His attempts to relieve Fort St. Philip, in Minorca, when blockaded by a French fleet, proved abortive; and his hesitation in engaging the enemy, when a bold attack might perhaps have led to victory, drew the clamours of the nation against him. He was condemned by a court-martial, and shot at Portsmouth 14 March, 1757, meeting death with calm resignation.

BYNKERSHOEK, CORNELIUS VAN, a Dutch jurist, born 1663; died 16 April, 1743.

BYNNES, RICHARD, D.D., a divine, who, after passing through Westminster School, and Trinity College, Cambridge, became rector of St. Mary's, Stafford, and a prebendary of Lichfield. He contributed some verses to three of the Cambridge collections, and published several single sermons, one of which had been preached before the House of Commons. Died 1713.

BYRCHET, PETER, a fanatic, was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, and afterwards studied law in the Middle Temple. Having adopted Puritanical principles, he conceived the most intense animosity against Christopher (afterwards Sir Christopher) Hatton, regarding him as a willful Papist and hinderer of God's glory. On 11 Oct., 1573, Byrchet sallied from the Temple, fully resolved to assassinate Hatton. In the Strand he encountered Captain Hawkins (afterwards Admiral Sir John Hawkins), whom he stabbed with a dagger. Hawkins seized, and with much difficulty disarmed him. Byrchet expressed no contrition until he ascertained that it was not Hatton whom he had stabbed. He was removed to prison, where he killed one of his keepers, and ultimately was hanged in the Strand, near Somerset House, 12 Nov., 1573. This affair rendered the Puritans very unpopular.

BYRNE, EDMUND, a Catholic divine, born about 1657. He received orders at Seville, and in 1707 was appointed archbishop of Dublin. He probably died 1724, in which year his successor was appointed.

BYRNE, MILES, a colonel, who took an active part in the rebellion in Ireland in 1798, and whose 'Autobiographical Reminiscences' were published in 1863.

BYRNE, WILLIAM, an engraver, born in London 1742; died 24 Sept., 1805.

BYROM, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., a poet and steno-grapher, born at Kersall, near Manchester, 1691. He received his education at Merchant Taylors' School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of B.A. 1711. On the publication of the 'Spectator' he contributed to that paper his famous pastoral of 'Colin and Phebe,' and two essays on the subject of dreaming, which procured for him the patronage of Dr. Bentley, by whose interest he was elected fellow of his college. It should here be remarked that the Phebe of the pastoral was the daughter of Dr. Bentley, and afterwards the wife of Dr. Cumberland. On taking his degree of M.A. he went to Montpellier, where he was created a doctor in physic, and imbibed an extravagant love for the mystic theology of Malebranche and Bourignon, to which he afterwards added that of Behmen. Soon after his return he married his first cousin, and to support himself had recourse to the teaching of an ingenious system of shorthand of his own invention. In 1724 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and by the death of his elder brother came into possession of the family estate. He died at Manchester 28 Sept., 1763. Dr. Byrom's poems were published in 2 vols., 1773, and his Journals and Correspondence have been recently printed by the Chetham Society. His poetical character rests on his pastoral of 'Colin and Phebe,' and on several witty epigrams, one of which is given in this work in the memoir of Bononcini. In politics Byron was a staunch Jacobite, and he composed the celebrated equivocal toast:—

'God bless the King!—I mean the faith's defender;

God bless—no harm in blessing—the Pretender!
But who Pretender is, and who is King—

God bless us all—that's quite another thing!

Byron's system of shorthand is one of the neatest and most ingenious ever devised, though for reporting purposes it is inferior to those of Mason, Gurney, Lewis, and Pitman. The best edition is that of Mr. Gawtress, who has introduced into the system many important improvements.

BYRON, GEORGE GORDON BYRON, LORD, was born in London, 22 Jan., 1788. His father, John Byron, the son of the celebrated admiral, was a captain in the Guards, and married first the repudiated marchioness of Caermarthen, on whose death he obtained the hand of Catharine Gordon, by whom he had one son; but he abandoned both after squandering the lady's property, and went to Valenciennes, where he died in 1791. Mrs. Byron went to Aberdeen, where her son was educated, till, on the death of William Lord Byron, he succeeded to the title, and was removed to Harrow School. At the age of seventeen he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, where he remained till 1807, when he took the honorary degree of M.A. The same year he published a small volume of poems, entitled 'Hours of Idleness.' These effusions breathed originality of conception, and were marked by some elegance of versification; but a certain class of critics attacked them with an asperity which roused the feelings of the juvenile author to an exertion of talent which few could have anticipated. His poem entitled 'English Bards and Scotch Reviewers' is a satire of uncommon vigour, and, as far as the occasion called for it, the lash was well applied, though in some instances the young poet committed the fault which he reprehended, in going out of his way to attack men equal in genius to himself, and from whom he had received no provocation. Conscious of his error, he afterwards suppressed this performance. In 1809 Lord Byron, and his friend Mr. Hobhouse, visited the Levant, and while in the Dardanelles, the former tried the experiment ascribed to Leander, of swimming across the Hellespont, which exploit he achieved in little more than an hour. While abroad he lost his mother, and on his return to England in 1811 he took his seat in the House of Peers, where he distinguished himself once by a speech against the bill brought in for the punishment of frame-work breaking. Early the following year he published the first two cantos of his poem, entitled 'Childe Harold's Pilgrimage,' in which he gave an account of his travels. The other portions of this, which is one of the best of Lord Byron's works, came out at distant intervals; the last being published in 1818. 'The Giaour,' 'The Bride of Abydos,' 'The Corsair,' 'Lara,' and 'The Siege of Corinth,' followed each other in rapid succession, and were all eagerly welcomed by the public. On 2 Jan., 1815, Lord Byron married the daughter of Sir Ralph Noel Milbank, with whom he received £10,000, which he soon dissipated. The same year Lady Byron gave birth to a daughter, but a separation took place almost immediately after, attended by circumstances of a very mysterious nature, and so little to the credit of the husband, that he quitted the kingdom, to return to it no more. After wandering for some time in Switzerland, he went to Italy, and took up his abode at Venice, from whence he removed to Rome, where he wrote the third canto of 'Childe Harold.' Subsequently to this came out 'The Prisoner of Chillon,' 'Manfred, a Dramatic Poem,' and the fourth canto of 'Childe Harold.' In 1818 there appeared a playful poem without his name, entitled 'Beppo, a Venetian Story,' the humour of which does not compensate for its licentiousness. In 1819 was published the wild and horrible tale of 'Mazeppa,' and in the same year a contrast to it, as far as wit and liveliness could make a dissimilarity, in the first part of 'Don Juan;' the other cantos followed, without the name of the publisher, who was ashamed of a performance which outraged all decency. In 1820 was published 'Marino Faliero, the Doge of Venice,' called a tragedy, but deficient in every requisite for the stage. Two other poems of a dramatic cast followed, one called 'Sardanapalus,' and the other 'The Two Foscari.' 'Cain, a Mystery,' made its appearance at this time. After rambling over various parts of Italy, Lord Byron took up his residence at Pisa, where he formed a literary society, the result of which was a periodical publication called 'The Liberal.' To this his lordship contributed a poem entitled 'The Vision of Judgment.' The revolution in Greece could hardly fail to affect the feelings of a man who had spent a considerable time in that interesting country, and celebrated its scenery and the manners of its people in his works. Lord Byron accordingly embarked at Leghorn, and arrived at Cephalonia in August, 1823. He now took an active part in the cause of freedom, and advanced large sums to support the Greeks; but while thus honourably engaged he caught a cold, which led to an inflammation of the chest, and brought about his death at Missolonghi 19 April, 1824. Into the personal character of Lord Byron it is unnecessary to enter; and his literary reputation is too well established to be made the subject of a slight criticism.

BYRON, Hon. JOHN, a celebrated British admiral and circumnavigator, born 8 Nov., 1723. In 1764 he undertook, with two frigates, a new voyage round the world, and discovered in the South Sea the island which bears his name. He died at London 10 April, 1780. The Relation of his Voyage appeared in 1766.

BYRTH, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, was a native of Plymouth, and received his education at Magdalen Hall, Oxford. He became incumbent of Latchford, in the parish of Grappenhall, Cheshire; perpetual curate of St. Paul's, Stonehouse, 1833; rector of Wallasey, near Liverpool, 1834; died 28 Oct., 1849, aged 56. He wrote a memoir of Dr. Tattershall of Liverpool, a few sermons on particular occasions, and one or two pamphlets. His 'Remains' were published in 1851, accompanied by a memoir by G. R. Moncrieff.

BYSSHE, Sir EDWARD, in Latin Bistæus, was born in the parish of Burston, Surrey, in or about 1615, and in 1633 became a commoner of Trinity College, Oxford. He was afterwards called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. In 1643 he was chosen M.P. for Bletchingley, and in 1646 was constituted Garter king-at-arms, in the place of Sir John Borough, who had followed King Charles to Oxford. In the parliament which met at Westminster in 1654 he at for Reigate; and for Gatton in that which assembled in 1028. After the Restoration he was deprived of the office of Garter, but he obtained the place of Clarenceux, and had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. In 1601 he was again chosen M.P. for Bletchingley, which borough he continued to represent for seventeen years or more, after which he received an annual pension of £100. He died in London 15 Dec., 1679. He was author of 'Notæ in quatuor libros Nicholai Upton, de Studio Militari;' 'Notæ in Johannis de Bado Aureo Libellum de Armis;' and 'Notæ in Henrici Spelmani Aspidoglogiam.' These three pieces, originally written in English, but translated into Latin by David Whitford, were printed together at London, fol., 1654. Dallaway says that Bysshe was more learned and more perspicuous than his predecessors, and was the first who treated the subject of heraldry as an antiquary and historian, endeavouring to divest it of extraneous matter. Sir Edward also published under his own name a translation from Greek into Latin, with some notes and corrections, 'Palladius de Gentibus Indiæ et Brachmanibus.' 4to., London, 1605.

BYTHNER, VICTORINUS, a philologist, was a native of Poland, who came to England when somewhat advanced in life, and was matriculated at Oxford. For many years he read a Hebrew lecture in the hall of Christ Church, and before the rebellion in 1642 instructed many scholars in that language. After leaving Oxford he repaired to Cambridge, and thence to London. About 1664 he retired into Cornwall, and practised physic, but the time of his death has not been ascertained. He wrote 'Lethargy of the Soul;' 'Tabula directoria: in qua totum TO TEXNIKON Linguæ Sanctæ, ad amissum delineatur;' 'Lingua Eruditiorum,' usually called his Hebrew Grammar; 'Manipulus menses magnæ, sive Grammat. exemplaris;' 'Clavis Linguæ Sanctæ;' and 'Lyra prophetica Davidis regis: sive Analysis Critico-Practica Psalmorum.'

BZOVIUS, ABRAHAM, a voluminous ecclesiastical writer, was born in Poland 1567, and died at Rome 1637. He wrote a continuation of Barncius's Annals; Lives of the Popes, &c.

C.

CAAB, or CAB BEN ZOHAIK, an Arabian poet, author of a panegyric on Mahomet, died 622.

CABALLERO, RAYMOND DIOSDADA, a learned Jesuit, born in the island of Majorca 1740; died at Rome 1820. Among his works are an able essay on the early history of printing in Spain; and a treatise 'De Lingua Evangelicâ,' in which he maintains, against Diodati, that Jesus and his disciples did not speak Greek.

CABANIS, PIERRE JEAN GEORGE, a French physician and writer, born 1757; died 5 May, 1808. He became connected with Mirabeau, and was one of the council of five hundred in the Revolution. His works are, for the most part, on medical subjects.

CABASILAS, NILUS, archbishop of Thessalonica in the fourteenth century, wrote some books against the Latin church. His nephew Nicholas, who succeeded him in the archbishopric, was author of An Exposition of the Greek Liturgy, &c.

CABASSOLE, PHILIPPE DE, a French cardinal and patriarch of Constantinople, was born 1305, and died 26 Aug., 1371. He was the correspondent of Plutarch, and wrote 'De Nugis Curialium,' and a Life of St. Mary Magdalen.

CABASSUT, JEAN, a French priest of the oratory; professor of canon law at Avignon; author of 'Notitia Conciliorum,' and 'Juris Canonici theoria et praxis;' was born 1604, and died 1685.

CABEL, or KABEL, ADRIAN VAN DER, a Dutch painter, born 1631; died 1695.

CABESTAN, or CABESTAING, GUILLAUME DE, a Provençal poet of the thirteenth century, who, according to the custom of that age, sung of various ladies. His last mistress was Tricline Carbonel, whose husband, being jealous of the poet, killed him, tore out his heart, and made his wife eat it. Tricline died of grief 1213.

CABET, ETIENNE, the leader of the communists in France, was born at Dijon 2 Jan., 1788, and died 1856.

CABOT, SEBASTIAN, a navigator, born at Bristol about 1477. He was son of John Cabot, or Gabotto, a Venetian, who in 1495 obtained from Henry VII. letters-patent empowering him and his three sons to discover unknown lands; but it was not till the spring of 1497 that these adventurers sailed from Bristol, with the view of finding a north-west passage to India. In this voyage they discovered Newfoundland; after which they sailed to Florida, and returned with some Indians to England. Thus the discovery of the continent of America is not due to Columbus, who was unacquainted with it till the year after this voyage of John Cabot, concerning whose history we have no further account. Sebastian, in 1517, sailed for the East Indies, but after touching on the coast of Brazil, he shaped his course to Hispaniola and Porto Rico, where he carried on some trade, and returned to England. Soon after this he entered into the service of Spain, and in 1525 sailed from Cadiz to the Canaries, Cape de Verd Islands, and the River Hate. In this voyage he discovered St. Salvador, where he built a fort, and proceeded to Paraguay. He remained on the American coast a considerable time, in order to form an establishment there, but being disappointed, returned to Europe 1531. In the reign of Edward VI. Cabot had a pension settled on him as grand pilot of England; and he also became governor of the company of Merchant Adventurers. While holding this post he procured a licence for an expedition to discover a passage by the north to the East Indies; and drew up ordinances for the voyage, which are preserved in Hakluyt's collection. He was likewise governor of the Russian company. Died about 1557. Sebastian Cabot was the first who noticed the variation of the compass. In 1831 there was published at London 'A Memoir of Sebastian Cabot; with a review of the history of maritime discovery. Illustrated by documents from the Rolls, now first published,' 8vo. Mr. J. Biddle is the reputed author of this valuable work.

CABRAL, or CABRERA, PEDRO ALVAREZ, a Portuguese, sent in 1500 by Emanuel with a fleet to the East Indies. A storm drove him on the coast of Brazil, and he called the place where he landed Santa Cruz. He afterwards reached his destination, and returned to Europe 1501.

CACCIA, WILLIAM, an Italian fresco painter, commonly called Montcalvo, from his residence at that place, was born 1568, and died 1625.

CADAMOSTO, LUIGI, a Venetian navigator, born about 1432. He engaged in the service of Henry of Portugal, and in 1455 proceeded to Madeira, and visited the Canaries and the coast of Africa as far as the Gambia. The next year he proceeded as far as the River St. Dominic, and on his return to Portugal was received with great honour. Died about 1480.

CADDICK, RICHARD, D.D., of Whitehall and Caddick Lodge, Fulham; minister at Knightsbridge; died 30 May, 1819, aged 79. He published 'Hebrew made Easy, or an Introduction to the Hebrew Language;' and 'Paul's Epistle to the Romans in Hebrew.'

CADE, JOHN, a famous rebel in the reign of Henry VI., was slain 11 July, 1450. He was an Irishman by birth.

CADE, LAURENCE, a gentleman of good family, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, but turning Catholic he proceeded to Rome, and was for some time a student in the English College there. On his return he was committed to the Tower, and his friends induced him to recant his opinions at St. Paul's Cross 1581. He then regained his liberty, and soon afterwards returned to the church of Rome. His 'Palinodia' is printed in Aquepontanus.

CADELL, THOMAS, an eminent London bookseller, was born at Bristol 1742, and died 1802.

CADET DE VAUX, ANTOINE ALEXIS, a French writer on agriculture, born 13 Sept., 1743; died 29 June, 1828.

CADOGAN, WILLIAM, first earl of Cadogan, was the son of Henry Cadogan, a barrister, by a daughter of Sir Hardress Waller. He entered early into the army, and in 1703 was appointed colonel of the second regiment of horse, and the year following made brigadier-general, when he distinguished himself greatly at the battle of Hochstedt. He had also a share in all Marlborough's victories; besides which he acted as minister plenipotentiary in the Spanish Netherlands, and afterwards at the Hague. In 1716 he was created Lord Cadogan, and in 1718 made an earl, with the same title. He succeeded the duke of Marlborough as commander-in-chief, and master-general of the ordnance. Died 17 July, 1726.

CADOGAN, WILLIAM, M.D., was educated at Oxford, where he took his M.A. degree 1755, being made doctor of physic the same year. He became a fellow of the College of Physicians, before whom he delivered two Harveian orations, both of which were published. Dr. Cadogan made himself famous by prescribing an abstemious regimen in the gout, in Dissertations on that disorder, 1764, which were replied to by several persons. He also published a treatise on the management of children. Died 26 Feb., 1797, aged 86.

CADOGAN, WILLIAM BROMLEY, second son of the third baron, and first Earl Cadogan, of the new creation, was born 22 Jan., 1751. He was educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. and entered into orders. In 1774 the Lord Chancellor Bathurst gave him the vicarage of St. Giles, Reading; soon after which he was presented to the rectory of Chelsea, when he obtained the degree of M.A. from the archbishop of Canterbury. Died 18 Jan., 1797. He published some single sermons; and after his death his Discourses, Letters, and Memoirs were published by R. Cecil.

CÆCILIUS STATIUS, a freedman and comic poet, contemporary with Ennius. Some fragments of his writings may be found in the 'Corpus Poetarum,' London, 1714.

CÆDMON, the father of Anglo-Saxon poetry, was a monk of Whitby, in Yorkshire, and is said to have died about 680. The best edition of his poems, which possess extraordinary merit, is that published by Thorpe in 1832. Perhaps there never lived an individual who exerted a greater influence on our national modes of thought and expression; and on this ground alone, if on no other, he must rank with the greatest names of our literature. For six centuries he was the great model whom all imitated, and none could equal, and fragments of his verses may be found in the verses of almost every succeeding poet.—Nat. Cycl.

CÆLIUS AURELIANUS, an ancient physician, was a native of Africa, but when he flourished is uncertain. His works were printed at Amsterdam, 1722.

CAERNARVON. See CARNARVON.

CÆSALPINUS, ANDREW, a philosopher, was a native of Arezzo, and going to Rome, became physician to Clement VIII. He was a man of great erudition; and from some passages in his writings it has been conjectured that he was acquainted with the circulation of the blood. He published a treatise 'De Plantis,' and 'Quæstiones Peripateticæ.' Born 1519; died 23 Feb., 1603.

CÆSAR, CAIUS JULIUS, was descended from the ancient family of the Julii, and born at Rome 12 July, B.C. 100. After obtaining various appointments he was sent to command in Spain, and on his return was made consul, when he effected a reconciliation between Crassus and Pompey. Through the interest of the latter, he obtained the government of Gaul, where he enlarged the empire by his conquests, which he extended to Britain. This exciting the jealousy of the senate, a decree was passed by the influence of Pompey, to deprive him of his authority; but Cæsar being informed of this, instantly crossed the Rubicon, and thus a civil war commenced. Pompey and his friends, on being apprized of this movement, retired to Dyrrachium, and Cæsar, after subduing Italy, entered Rome. He next went to Spain, where he conquered the partisans of Pompey, and on his return was declared dictator, and soon afterwards consul. His next object was to meet Pompey, whom he defeated on the plains of Pharsalia, and then pursued him into Egypt, where that general was murdered. While in this country Cæsar became enamoured of Cleopatra, by whom he had a son. His danger in this state of voluptuousness was very great, but he had the strength of mind to extricate himself from it, and after defeating all his opponents in Africa, returned to Rome in triumph. But his glory had now reached its height, and though the senate created him perpetual dictator, this only served to raise against him a band of formidable enemies, at the head of whom was Brutus. A conspiracy was accordingly formed to take him off; and he fell in the senate house, on the 15th of March, B.C. 44. Casca gave him the first blow, against whom he was about to defend himself, when the appearance of Brutus among the conspirators struck him so, that he made no further resistance, but gathered his robes around him, and fell at their feet, exclaiming 'Tu quoque Brute!' Cæsar was a man of uncommon talents, of which he gave many proofs, especially in the reformation of the calendar, and in his valuable 'Commentaries.' His ambition was unbounded, and he well expressed it by saying, as he passed through a miserable village in Spain, that he would rather be the first man there than the second at Rome. He owed most of his success to the quickness of his conceptions, the firmness of his resolution, and the celerity of his operations. After his victory over Pharnaces, he wrote an account of it in these brief terms, 'Veni, Vidi, Vici.' His 'Commentaries' have been translated into English by W. Duncan and others.

CÆSAR, Sir JULIUS, a civilian, born at Tottenham, Middlesex, 1557. His father, a Genoese, was physician to Queens Mary and Elizabeth, who held him in great esteem. Julius was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, from whence he went to Paris, where he took the degree of doctor of civil law. In 1583 he was made master of the requests, judge of the admiralty, and master of St. Katharine's Hospital, near the Tower. James I. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and made him chancellor of the exchequer, which office he resigned 1614, on being appointed master of the Rolls. Died 28 April, 1636. He was exceedingly charitable, and, as a judge, strictly upright. His manuscripts were sold by auction 1757, and many of them are now in the British Museum. His Life has been written by Edmund Lodge, Norroy King-at-Arms.

CAFFIAUX, PHILIPPE JOSEPH, a French Benedictine, author of a learned, though unfinished work, the 'Tresor Genealogique,' was born 1712, and died 26 Dec., 1777.

CAFFIN, or CAFFYN, MATTHEW, a Baptist minister of Horsham, who was subjected to much persecution in consequence of charges of heresy being brought against him. Though educated at Oxford he is not mentioned by Wood. He published 'The Deceived and Deceiving Teachers discovered,' 4to., London, 1656. Died 1714, aged 86.

CAGLIARI, PAUL, an Italian painter, called Paul Ferronez, was born at Verona, about 1530. His most esteemed pieces are at Venice, where he died in April, 1588. His sons, Gabriel and Charles, were also artists. The first died 1596, the latter 1631. Benedict Cagliari, the brother of Paul, was likewise a good painter and sculptor. He died at Venice 1598.

CAGLIOSTRO, Count ALEXANDER, an impostor, born at Palermo 1743. His real name was Joseph Balsamo. He was of mean parentage, and at the age of thirteen he became a novice among the friars of mercy at Cartagirene, where his irregularities exposed him to severe chastisement. A series of frauds, of impostures, of villany, and it is even said of murder, obliged him to fly from Palermo; and after practising some of his stratagems at Rome and Messina, he visited the islands of the Archipelago, and Alexandria, and afterwards exhibited his impostures at London, Paris, and almost every city of Europe. He was at last arrested at Rome, and died in the castle of St. Angelo 1794. A compendium of his Life, published by the apostolical chamber at Rome, contains a curious account of a man who, by a versatile genius, a superficial knowledge of philosophy and chemistry, and a pretended intercourse with supernatural agents, imposed upon the credulity, not only of the vulgar, but of the great, the learned, and the opulent.

CAGNATI, MARCELLO, a physician and medical writer, died at Rome, 1610.

CAGNOLA, LOUIS, marquis DE, an architect, born at Milan, 1762; died 14 Aug., 1833.

CAGNOLI, ANTHONY, an astronomer, born 1743 at Verona, where he died 6 Aug., 1818.

CAHILL, D. W., D.D., an Irish priest, who acquired considerable notoriety in the United States as a journalist and lecturer on 'the wrongs of Ireland,' died 28 Oct., 1864.

CAHUSAC, LOUIS DE, a French writer, died at Paris May, 1759. He wrote several tragedies, comedies, and operas, and 'Histoire de la danse ancienne et moderne.'

CAIET. See CAVET.

CAILLE, NICOLAS LOUIS DE LA, a French mathematician and astronomer, born 15 March, 1713. He became the disciple of Cassini, and with De Thury projected the meridian line which extended from the observatory to the extremities of France. In 1739 he was named professor at the college of Mazarin, and in 1750 he went to the Cape of Good Hope to see the stars of the southern hemisphere, of 10,000 of which, in the course of two years, he determined the exact position. Died 21 March, 1762. His chief works are 'Astronomie fondamentale,' translated into English by Robertson; 'Cours de mathématiques pures;' 'Tables des logarithmes;' 'Cœlum australe stelliferum;' 'Leçons d'optique;' and 'Journal du voyage au cap de Bonne-Espérance.'

CAIRO, FRANCIS, a painter of Milan, born 1598; died 1674.

CAIUS, See CAIUS.

CAIUS, St. elected Pope 283; died 21 April, 296.

CAIUS, JOHN, M.D., an eminent physician, and the co-founder of Caius College, Cambridge, was born at Norwich 6 Oct., 1510. His school education was in the place of his nativity, and he became a student at Gonville Hall, Cambridge, 1529 (B.A. 1532-3; M.A. 1535). He was appointed principal of Physwick Hostel 1533, and elected a fellow of Gonville Hall the same year. He left England in 1539, and in 1541 was Greek professor at Padua, being on the 13th of May in the same year created M.D. of that university. While at Padua he studied anatomy under the famous Vesalius. After making a tour through Italy, France, and Germany, he returned to England, 1544, and was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians. He practised successively at Cambridge, Shrewsbury, and Norwich, but ultimately removed to London, and was appointed one of the physicians to Edward VI. He was also physician to Queen Mary. In 1555 he became president of the College of Physicians, and held the office till 1560. Previously to his election, and during the reign of Henry VIII., he had, at the request of that monarch, commenced the delivery of lectures on anatomy for the instruction of the surgeons of London; and he continued to lecture to them on that science for twenty years together, rightly judging that his doing so was by no means inconsistent with the dignity of his position as president of the College of Physicians. On 4 Sept., 1557, he obtained the letters-patent of Philip and Mary, by which Gonville Hall was refounded as Gonville and Caius College, he being declared a co-founder with Edmund Gonville and William Bateman, bishop of Norwich. He richly endowed the college, enlarged its site, built an additional court, and erected the three singular gates respectively inscribed to Humility, to Virtue and Wisdom, and to Honour. Dr. Caius was president of the new foundation from 1568-9 to 1573, shortly before which date Dr. Byng the vice-chancellor caused search to be made in the college for vestments and ornaments used in the celebration of the Catholic service. These were found and destroyed, to the great grief of Caius, who appears to have been always inclined to the ancient faith. After having been elected president of the College of Physicians no fewer than nine times this learned man died in London 29 July, 1573. It is related that in his last sickness his sole diet was woman's milk; and that whilst he lived upon the milk of an angry, fretful woman he was himself angry and fretful, but that being advised to take it of a good-natured, patient woman he became so beyond the common temper of his age. Dr. Caius will be ever memorable for his munificent benefactions, which evince his warm attachment to literature. He was, moreover, eminent as a classical scholar, a physician, an anatomist, a naturalist, and an antiquary. Gesner speaks of him as a man of consummate erudition, fidelity, and diligence, and terms him the most learned man of his age. A full list of his works is given in Cooper's Athenæ Cantabrigienses. The most important are 'De Medendi Methodo'; 'A boke or counsell against the disease commonly called the sweat or sweating sickness,' 1552; 'De antiquitate Cantabrigiense Academiæ,' 1568 and 1574; 'De Canibus Britannicis libellus'; 'De rariorum animalium atq. stirpium historia libellus'; 'De libris propriis'; 'Historia acad. Cantabrig.' 1574; 'De pronunciatione Græcæ et Latinæ Lingvæ cum scriptiōne nova libellus'; 'Annales Collegii de Goveville et Caius,' MS.; and 'Annales Collegii Medicorum,' MS.

CAIUS, THOMAS, a divine, was born either in Yorkshire or Lincolnshire. He studied at University College, Oxford, obtained a fellowship at All Souls, and became registrar of the university, but was deprived of the latter preferment in consequence of his negligence. In the reign of Elizabeth he was made prebendary of Salisbury, and in 1561 elected master of University College. Died May, 1572. He translated Erasmus on the Gospel of St. Mark, and published a work entitled 'Assertio Antiquitatis Oxoniensis Academiæ,' printed with Dr. John Caius's Answer, 2 vols. 8vo., 1730.

CAJADO, HERMIO, a Latin poet of Portugal, died 1508.

CAJETAN, a cardinal, whose proper name was Thomas de Vio, was born at Gaeta, in the kingdom of Naples, 20 Feb., 1469. Having entered the Dominican order 1484, he became so eminent in it as to be created doctor and professor of divinity, then procurator-general of his order, and at length general in 1508. He was essentially serviceable to Pope Julius II. and Leo X., the latter of whom created him cardinal 1517, and sent him to Germany, as his legate, the year following. Cardinal Cajetan attended the election of the Emperor Charles V., 1510, and held several conferences with Luther. He became bishop of Gaeta the same year, and went as legate into Hungary 1523. Died 9 Aug., 1534. Cardinal Cajetan was one of the ablest divines of his time. His principal works are Commentaries on the Scriptures and on the Summary of St. Thomas of Aquin.

CAJETAN, CONSTANTINE, a Benedictine monk, born at Syracuse 1560, became librarian of the Vatican, and died at Rome 17 Sept., 1650. He furnished Baronius with much material for his 'Annals,' and published editions of numerous ecclesiastical writers, and some original works of his own, in one of which he seeks to prove that Gersen was the author of the 'Imitation of Jesus-Christ.'

CAJETAN, HENRY, an Italian cardinal, who, after the assassination of Henry III. of France, 1589, was sent to that country by Sixtus V., in order to procure the election of a Catholic king. Being unsuccessful in his mission, he was recalled, and despatched the same year to Poland, in order to induce Sigismund to join the imperialists against the Turks; but here again he met with no success. Died 1599, aged 49.

CALABER, QUINTUS, or COINTUS SMYRNEUS, a Greek poet, who wrote a supplement to the Iliad. He is supposed to have lived in the fifth century, and to have been a native of Smyrna. His poem was first brought to light by Cardinal Bessarion, who found it in a church in Calabria, on which account this author is commonly called Quintus Calaber.

CALABRESE, See PRETI.

CALAMY, BENJAMIN, D.D., son of Edmund Calamy the elder, was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow and tutor. He was appointed minister of St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, London, 1677, and chaplain to the king. In 1683 he preached a famous sermon, afterwards published under the title of 'A Discourse about a Scrupulous Conscience,' for which he was attacked by De Laune, a warm Nonconformist, who was sent to prison by the government. Calamy interfered with Jeffreys for the unhappy libeller, but all applications were unavailing, and De Laune being fined in a sum which he could not pay, died a victim to the oppressive measures of the times. In 1683 Dr. Calamy was admitted to the vicarage of St. Lawrence, Jewry, with St. Mary Magdalen, Milk Street, annexed; and two years afterwards obtained a prebend of St. Paul's. His happiness was interrupted by the sufferings of his friend, Alderman Cornish, who was executed for high treason. Died Jan., 1686. Some of his sermons were published after his death by his brother.

CALAMY, EDMUND, B.D., a Presbyterian divine, born in London Feb., 1600, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. Felton, bishop of Ely, made him one of his chaplains, and gave him the vicarage of St. Mary's, Swatham-prior, Cambridge-shire, which he resigned to be lecturer at Bury St. Edmunds, where he continued ten years. He then removed to the living of Rochford, Essex, and in 1639 was appointed minister of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, London. Though he conformed to the Church of England, he soon joined the popular party, and was engaged in writing the treatise against episcopacy, called 'Smectymnuus,' from the initials of the five authors, Stephen Marshall, Edmund Calamy, Thomas Young, Matthew Newcomen, and William Spurston. He was one of the Assembly of Divines; and in his sermons before the parliament and the citizens of London, he displayed the eloquent preacher and zealous partisan. He, however, resisted the usurpation of Cromwell, and promoted the restoration of Charles II. with such loyalty that he was offered the bishopric of Lichfield, which he refused. He was one of the commissioners at the conference at the Savoy, and was soon afterwards ejected from St. Mary, Aldermanbury, for nonconformity. The sight of the great fire of London is said to have broken his heart. Died 20 Oct., 1666. He published several single sermons; and five sermons entitled 'The Godly Man's Ark, or a city of refuge in the day of his distress,' eighth edition, 1683.

CALAMY, EDMUND, D.D., an eminent dissenting minister, grandson of the preceding, was born 5 April, 1671. Having completed his education at different schools in England, he was sent to Utrecht; and in 1694 was ordained at London, in the Presbyterian way. After officiating in different congregations, he succeeded Vincent Alsop at Westminster. In 1702 he published an abridgment of Baxter's Life and Times, with an account of the ejected ministers; a subsequent edition of which was enlarged to 4 vols. This work occasioned a controversy between the author and Hoadly, afterwards bishop of Winchester. In 1700 Mr. Calamy made a tour in Scotland, where the degree of D.D. was conferred on him by three universities. Died 3 June, 1732. He published a number of sermons and tracts, and left in MS. an historical account of his own life; but his most valuable work is his Lives of the Nonconformists, to which every student of English biography must acknowledge his obligations. An abridgment of this work, in 2 vols. 8vo., under the title of 'The Nonconformists' Memorial,' was published by the Rev. Samuel Palmer in 1775, and republished, with additions, in 1802, 3 vols. 8vo.

CALANDRUCCI, HYACINTH, an Italian painter, born 1640; died 1707.

CALAS, JEAN, a merchant of Toulouse, who was accused of having strangled his son 1761, from his aversion to a design which the young man had formed of abjuring the Protestant religion and turning Catholic. He was condemned, and broken alive on the wheel 9 March, 1762.

CALASIO, MARIUS DE, a learned Franciscan, professor of Hebrew at Rome, author of an excellent Hebrew Concordance. Born about 1550; died 1620.

CALCAGNINI, CELIO, was born at Ferrara 17 Sept., 1479, and after serving in the Imperial army, and being engaged in diplomacy, became professor of literature in his native city, where he died 7 April, 1541. His Latin works were printed at Basle 1544.

CALCAR, JOHN DE, a painter, so called from a small town in the duchy of Cleves, where he was born 1499. He died at Naples 1546. He was a disciple of Titian, and his works are hardly distinguishable from those of his master.

CALDARA. See CARAVAGGIO.

CALDECOTT, THOMAS, an eminent barrister, and a bench of the Middle Temple, was educated at Oxford, and died at Dartford 1833, aged 90. He was a Shaksperian commentator and a great collector of scarce books. His collection was brought to the hammer shortly after his decease. He published 'Reports of Cases relative to the Duty and Office of a Justice of the Peace 1776-85,' forming a continuation of Sir James Burrow's Reports; and a specimen of an edition of Shakspere, in a volume comprising 'Hamlet' and 'As You Like It,' 8vo., 1819.

CALDER, JAMES T., author of a 'History of Caithness,' died at Elwickbank, Shapinshay, 15 Jan., 1864, aged 65.

CALDER, JOHN, D.D., a divine, was born at Aberdeen 1733, and became pastor of a dissenting congregation in London, where he died 1818. He wrote the notes to Nichol's edition of the Tatler, 1786, and translated Le Courayer's Last Sentiments on Religion; but is chiefly known on account of his unsuccessful attempt to prepare for the press an improved edition of Chambers's Cyclopædia, an undertaking subsequently accomplished under the superintendence of Dr. Rees.—Rose.

CALDER, Sir ROBERT, baronet, a British admiral, born 2 July, 1745; died 13 Aug., 1818. In 1805 he attacked the Franco-Spanish fleet on its return from the West Indies, but after the engagement had lasted four hours it was discontinued by order of the British admiral, who was subsequently tried by court-martial, and reprimanded for his conduct on this occasion.

CALDERARI, Count OTTONE DE, an Italian architect and writer on architecture, born about 1730; died 26 Oct., 1803.

CALDERBANK, JAMES, an English Benedictine, who, after officiating as priest at Bath for three years, went to Liverpool, where he died 9 April, 1821. He published 'A Series of Letters in answer to certain questions proposed by a clergyman of the Established Church,' 8vo., 1814.

CALDERINUS, DOMITIUS, an Italian scholar, professor of belles lettres at Rome, was born about 1445, and died 1477. He published editions of Juvenal and Martial; also commentaries on the latter author.

CALDERON DE LA BARCA, Don PEDRO, a celebrated Spanish dramatist, born at Madrid 1601; died 25 May, 1681. He acquired honour by his military services, and became a knight of the order of St. James. Afterwards, however, he entered the priesthood, and was appointed a canon of Toledo. Philip IV. king of Spain took particular pleasure in seeing his pieces acted. Calderon is esteemed the best Spanish dramatist after Lope de Vega. His plays were printed at Madrid 1689, in 9 vols. 4to.; to which were afterwards added his 'Autos Sacramentales,' in 6 vols. 4to.

CALDERWOOD, DAVID, a Scotch Presbyterian divine, born 1755. He opposed the design of James VI. to bring the Church of Scotland to a conformity with that of England, for which he was banished the kingdom. He then went to Holland, where he published in 1625 a book called 'Altare Damascenum,' in which he attacked the Church of England with great asperity. He returned home, and about 1639 began an ecclesiastical History of Scotland, of which a part has been printed. In 1643 he was employed in drawing up the form of the 'Directory for the Public Worship of God' by the General Assembly. He died at Jedburgh about 1652.

CALDWALL, RICHARD, M.D., a physician, born in Staffordshire about 1513, and educated at Oxford. He was elected president of the College of Physicians 1570. Dr. Caldwell founded a chirological lecture in the College of Physicians, and translated Horatio Moro's 'Tables of Surgery.' Died 1585.

CALDWELL, ANDREW, an Irish barrister, born

1732; died 1808. He published Observations on the Public Buildings of Dublin; and an Account of the extraordinary Escape of James Stewart (commonly called Athenian Stewart) from being put to death by some Turks.—Rose.

CALENDAR, JAMES LIVINGSTON, EARL OF, a Scotch nobleman, gentleman of the bed-chamber to Charles I., who created him Lord Livingston 1633, and earl of Calendar 1641. On the breaking out of the civil war he took the side of the parliament, but afterwards attached himself to the king, and signalized himself on various occasions, particularly by the taking of Carlisle. Died Oct., 1672.

CALENDARIO, PHILIP, an architect and sculptor, celebrated for the beautiful porticos which he erected round the palace of St. Mark at Venice, about 1354.

CALENTIUS, ELISIUS, a Latin poet, was a Neapolitan, and tutor to Frederick, son of Ferdinand I., king of Naples. Pontanus and Sannazarius speak in very high terms of his elegies and his poem on the battle of the 'Rats and Frogs.' Died 1503.

CALEPINO, AMBROSE, an Augustinian, born at Calcipio in Italy; celebrated for his Latin dictionary. Born 6 June, 1435; died 30 Nov., 1511.

CALETTI, JOSEPH, called Il Cremonese, an artist of Ferrara, born about 1600; died 1660.

CALBY, JOHN, an English antiquary, and keeper of the public records, was born 1703, and died 28 April, 1834. He was a contributor to the Archæologia, and in conjunction with Bandinell and Ellis prepared the new edition of Dugdale's 'Monasticon.'

CALFHILL, JAMES, D.D., a Protestant divine, was born at Edinburgh, or, according to some writers, in Shropshire, in or about 1530, and educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge. He soon, however, removed to Oxford, and was constituted a canon of Christ Church. He afterwards became Margaret professor of divinity at Oxford, and archdeacon of Colchester. It is probable that he was elected to succeed Dr. Sandys as bishop of Worcester, but he died before consecration, in Aug., 1570. He was author of 'An Aunswere to the Treatise of the Crosse,' by John Martiell, 8vo., 1505, reprinted for the Parker Society 1846.

CALHOUN, JOHN CALDWELL, an American statesman, was born 18 March, 1782; became secretary of war 1817; vice-president 1825; secretary of state 1844; died 31 March, 1850. The peculiar doctrine of this eminent man was that the Constitution of the United States was a mere treaty, from the conditions of which any state might separate itself, if such a step were deemed desirable by the inhabitants.

CALIAVARI, LUKE, an Italian painter and engraver, born 1605; died 1729.

CALIGNON, SOFFREY DE, a native of St. Jean in Dauphiné, and secretary to M. Lesdiguières. He was a Protestant minister, and assisted De Thou in drawing up the edict of Nantes. Died Sept., 1606, aged 56. He wrote 'Le Mépris des Dames,' a satire; and to him has been attributed 'L'Histoire des choses plus remarquables advenues en France en Années 1587, 1588, et 1589, par S. C.' 1590, 8vo.

CALIGULA, CALIUS CÆSAR, fourth Roman emperor, succeeded Tiberius A.D. 37, and was slain A.D. 41. He was son of Germanicus and Agrippina, but degenerated into so horrible a monster that even his predecessor's reign was remembered with regret. Nothing could exceed his blasphemies and impieties. His folly was so great that he suffered himself to be adored, affecting to represent all the heathen gods and goddesses in his own person. To all this profaneness Caligula joined the most infamous debauchery, unheard-of cruelties, and everything that could disgrace humanity.

CALIXTUS, ST., succeeded Pope Zephyrinus 217, and died 14 Oct., 222.

CALIXTUS II. (Guy, son of the duke of Burgundy), one of the greatest and most illustrious popes the church ever had. He was elected 1119, and died 13 Dec., 1124.

CALIXTUS III., a Spaniard, was elected pope 1455, died 6 August, 1458.

CALIXTUS, GEORGE, a Lutheran divine, professor of divinity at Helmstadt, wrote 'Anti-Moguntinus,' a treatise against the celibacy of the clergy, &c. He was the founder of the sect called Calixtines, whose object was to reconcile the discordant opinions of all the Protestants. Born 14 Dec., 1580; died 18 March, 1656.

CALKOEN, JOHN FREDERICK VAN BEECK, an astronomer and mathematician, born at Groningen 5 May, 1772; died at Utrecht 25 March, 1811.

CALL, SIR JOHN, baronet, an English military engineer, died 7 March, 1801, aged 69.

CALLANAN, JEREMIAH JOSEPH, a poet, was a native of Cork, and was originally intended for the priesthood, but, changing his determination, he quitted Maynooth and entered Trinity College, Dublin, directing his studies to the law. His subsequent course of life became unsettled. The drudgery of a teacher's life, which his necessities forced him to adopt, he uneasily bore and repeatedly attempted to escape from, but in vain. He died at Lisbon in Sept., 1829, and shortly afterwards his Poems were printed, including the 'Recluse of Inchidony,' 'Donald Com,' &c.

CALLANDER, JOHN, a Scotch antiquarian writer, died 14 Sept., 1789.

CALLARD DE LA DUQUERIE, JEAN BAPTISTE, professor of medicine at Caen, where he established a botanical garden. His great work is 'Lexicon Medicum Etymologicum.' Born 1630; died 1718.

CALLCOTT, SIR AUGUSTUS WALL, R.A., an eminent landscape painter, brother of John Wall Callcott, the musical composer, was born 20 Feb., 1779, at Kensington, where he died 25 Nov., 1844. His pictures are characterized by classic elegance of composition, neatness and precision of drawing, finished execution, and a chaste, silvery tone, verging on coldness. He appears to have modelled his style on that of Claude, and his forte lay in the representation of scenes of tranquil beauty.

CALLCOTT, JOHN WALL, MUS.D., an English musician, born at Kensington 1766; died near Bristol 15 May, 1821. He was celebrated for his original genius and profound science, and printed many of his compositions, though the greater part of them remain in MS. His fame rests mainly on his admirable glees, catches, and canons. He was author of a useful elementary work, 'The Musical Grammar,' and 'A Statement of Earl Stanhope's System of Tuning Keyed Instruments.' The degree of doctor was conferred upon him by the university of Oxford.

CALLCOTT.

CALLCOTT, MARIA LADY, daughter of Rear Admiral George Dundas, was born 1788, and became the wife first of Capt. Graham, R.N., and afterwards of Sir Augustus Callcott, mentioned above. In early life she visited India, South America, and Italy, and afterwards published accounts of her travels. This highly gifted lady died at Kensington 21 Nov., 1843. Among her works are an account of her travels in India, 1812; 'Three Months in the Environs of Rome,' 1820; 'Memoirs of the Life of Poussin;' 'History of Spain,' 2 vols., 1828; 'Essays towards the History of Painting;' 'Little Arthur's History of England;' 'The Little Brackenburners;' and a 'Scripture Herbal.'

CALLENBERG, JOHN HENRY, an oriental scholar, professor of divinity at Halle, was born 12 Jan., 1694, and died 16 July, 1760. He endeavoured to promote Protestantism in the East by printing and distributing versions of the Bible in various oriental languages, but met with no success.

CALLET, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French mathematician, born 25 Oct., 1744; died 14 Nov., 1798.

CALLIACHI, NICHOLAS, was born in the island of Candia 1645, and became professor of literature and philosophy at Padua, where he died 8 May, 1707. His works are 'De ludis scenicis mimorum;' 'De Gladiatoribus;' 'De Supplicis Servorum;' 'De Osiride;' and 'De Sacris Eieusiniis Mysteriis.'

CALLICRATIDAS, a Lacedemonian general, who died 405 B.C.

CALLIERES, FRANÇOIS DE, a French diplomatist, who acted as plenipotentiary at the congress of Kyssack. He was also a writer, his most curious work being 'Des mots à la mode et des nouvelles façons de parler.' His 'Treatise concerning the manner of Negotiating with Sovereigns' has been translated into English. Born 14 May, 1645; died 5 May, 1717.

CALLIERGUS, ZACHARIAS, a celebrated printer, was a Cretan by birth, and carried on business first at Venice and afterwards at Rome. Flourished 1491-1523.

CALLIMACHUS, a Greek poet and grammarian, who flourished in the time of Ptolemy Euergetes. His works have been translated into English by Dodd and Tytler.

CALLIS, ROBERT, a legal writer, was born in Lincolnshire, studied at Gray's Inn, and was called to the degree of serjeant-at-law. He published 'The Reasoning upon the Statute 23 Hen. VIII. cap. 5, of Sewers,' 1647. The fifth and best edition, by W. J. Brodrip, was published 1824. Callis was likewise author of 'The Case and Argument against Sir Ignoramus of Cambridge,' 4to., London, 1648.

CALLISEN, HENRY, a celebrated Danish physician and surgeon, born 1740; died 5 Feb., 1824.

CALLISTHENES, of Olynthus, a celebrated philosopher and historian, who was a disciple and imitator of Aristotle. Flourished about 328 B.C. His writings are lost.

CALLISTUS, JOHN ANDRONICUS, one of the revivers of learning in the nineteenth century, was a native of Thessalonica, and taught Greek at Rome.

CALLOT, JACQUES, an engraver, born at Nancy 1595. At an early age he eloped from his parents and went to Rome, where he learned to design and engrave under two celebrated artists. His etchings having attracted the notice of Charles, prince of Lorraine, he persuaded Callot to accompany him to his father's court, where he had a pension settled upon him. In 1628 he visited France, and was employed in engraving the siege of Rochelle, soon after which he returned to Nancy, where he executed a prodigious number of plates. Died 28 March, 1636. Callot engraved in several styles, and all his works are valuable.

CALLY, PIERRE, a French ecclesiastic, professor of eloquence and philosophy at Caen, where he died 31 Dec., 1709. He prepared the Delphin edition of Boetius' 'De Consolatione Philosophiæ,' and published several works of his own, the best known among which is 'Durand commenté, ou l'accord de la Philosophie avec la Théologie, touchant la Transubstantiation,' 1700. The author revived the opinion of Durand, who said that if the church decided that there was a transubstantiation in the eucharist, there must remain something of what was bread, to make a difference between the creation and production of a thing which was not, and annihilation, or a thing reduced to nothing. The bishop of Bayeux opposed this doctrine, and Cally recanted.

CALMET, AUGUSTIN, a learned French Benedictine, abbot of St. Leopold of Nancy, and afterwards of Senones, was born 26 Feb., 1672, and died 25 Oct., 1757. He wrote a commentary on the books of the Old and New Testament, 23 vols. 4to., besides a number of other valuable works, of which the following have been translated into English: 'Antiquities sacred and profane; or a Collection of critical Dissertations on the Old and New Testament, translated by N. Tindal,' 4to., London, 1727; 'A historical, critical, geographical, and etymological Dictionary of the Bible. Translated from the French, with occasional remarks by John Colson and the Rev. Sam. D'Oylye,' 3 vols. folio, London, 1732; 'Dictionary of the Holy Bible, edited by the late Charles Taylor, with considerable additions, especially in respect to illustrations from the works of recent travellers in the Holy Land,' fifth edition, 5 vols. 4to., London, 1828; and 'Dissertations upon the Apparitions of Angels, Demons, and Ghosts, and concerning the Vampires of Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia,' 1759.

CALMO, ANDREW, a dramatic writer of Venice, born about 1510; died 23 Feb., 1571.

CALONNE, CHARLES ALEXANDRE DE, an eminent statesman, born at Douay 20 Jan., 1734, became successively procurator-general to the parliament of Flanders, intendant of Metz, and in 1783 comptroller-general of the finances. In this last office he continued till 1787; but having ventured to advise the king to restore his finances by convening the notables in a national assembly, to whom he proposed the plan of suppressing the pecuniary privileges and exemptions of the nobles, clergy, and magistracy, the resentment of those powerful bodies fell upon him, and he was disgraced. In his retirement he wrote 'Requête au Roi;' and 'Réponse à l'Écrit de M. Necker.' In 1791 he attended the French princes at Coblenz, and while in their service proposed a plan of counter-revolution, which, however, was not approved by the royalists. In 1802 he obtained leave to return to Paris, where he died on 20 Oct. the same year. Besides the above pieces, he wrote 'An Essay on Agriculture;' 'Observations sur plusieurs matières du droit civil et coutumier;' 'De l'État de la France present et à venir,' 1790; 'Des Finances publiques de la France;' 'Lettre à l'auteur des Considerations sur l'Etat des Affaires publiques,' 1798; and 'Tableau de l'Europe.'

CALOVIVS, ABRAHAM, a native of Morungen in Brunswick, divinity professor at Rostock, and afterwards at Wittemberg. He was a strong Lutheran, and opposed the union of the Protestant churches. His followers were called Calovians. He composed a number of works chiefly on controversial subjects. Born 1612; died 25 Feb., 1686.

CALPRANÈDE, GAUTHIER DE COSTES, Seigneur DE LA, a French writer, born about 1612. He became gentleman in ordinary to the king, and was in high favour at court for his pleasantry. Died 20 Aug., 1663. He wrote some plays, particularly 'Mithridates,' and 'The Earl of Essex,' but is chiefly known by his voluminous romances of 'Cassandra,' 'Cleopatra,' and 'Pharamond.'

CALPURNIVS, TITVS, a Sicilian poet of the third century, who wrote seven eulogues, which possess considerable merit.

CALTHROPE, Sir CHARLES, a judge, was a native of Norfolk; became attorney-general for Ireland 1584; was constituted a justice of the Common Pleas in that kingdom 1606; and died 6 Jan., 1616, aged about 92. He was author of a 'Reading on Copyholds,' 4to., London, 1635.

CALVART, DENIS, a Flemish painter who settled in Bologna, where he opened an academy of painting, which produced Guido, Albano, Domenichino, and other eminent artists. Born about 1553; died 1619.

CALVERT. See BALTIMORE, LOND.

CALVERT, CHARLES, a landscape painter, of Manchester, was born in Derbyshire 23 Sept., 1785, and died at Bowness, Westmoreland, 26 Feb., 1852.

CALVERT, JAMES, a divine, was born at York, and after receiving an academical education at Cambridge, obtained the living of Topcliffe, in his native county, but was ejected for nonconformity 1602. Died Dec., 1698. He published a learned book concerning the ten tribes, entitled 'Naphthali, seu collectatio theologica de Reditu decem Tribuum, Conversione Judæorum et mens, Ezechiælis.'

CALVERT, THOMAS, uncle of James, mentioned above, was born at York 1606, and educated at Cambridge, after which he obtained the vicarage of Trinity, in the King's Court, in his native city. During the Rebellion he became a preacher at the cathedral, but was ejected from his preferments at the Restoration. Died March, 1679. He published 'Mel Cœli, an exposition of Isaiah, chap. 53;' 'The Blessed Jew of Morocco: a demonstration of the true Messias, translated from the Arabic of Rabbi Samuel;' 'Heart-Salve for a wounded Soul;' and some translations from the Latin.

CALVI, LAZZARO, an Italian painter, died 1607, aged 105.

CALVIDIVS, LÆTVS. See GUILLET.

CALVIN, JOHN, one of the reformers, was born at Noyon in Picardy 10 July, 1509. He was educated at Paris, with a view to the church, and accordingly two benefices were procured for him; but becoming dissatisfied with the tenets of the Church of Rome, he resigned his preferments, and applied himself to the law. At the age of twenty-four he published a Commentary on Seneca's treatise 'De Clementia,' on which occasion he altered his name from Cauvin to Calvin. Soon after this a persecution arose against the reformers, brought on them by a speech of Nicholas Cop, rector of the university of Paris, the materials of which were furnished by Calvin, who in consequence retired to Saintonge, where he was protected by the queen of Navarre. By the interest of her majesty this storm passed over, and Calvin returned to Paris 1534, but thinking his life in danger, he removed soon afterwards to Basle, where in 1535 he published his 'Institutions of the Christian Religion,' dedicated to Francis I. But this important work was not completed till 1558. Soon after this Calvin went to visit the duchess of Ferrara, and on his return from Italy passed through Geneva, where William Farel, the reformer, denounced the divine judgments against him, if he did not continue there as his fellow-labourer. To this requisition the magistrates added their earnest entreaties; and Calvin accordingly was chosen one of their ministers, and professor of divinity. This was in 1536, and the next year Calvin called upon the people to swear to a confession of faith, in which they made a renunciation of 'popery;' a strange measure, which it is impossible to justify upon any principle of religion or policy. About this time, however, Calvin and Farel incurred the resentment of the magistrates for refusing to administer the eucharist indiscriminately, and for not submitting to the regulations of the synod of Berne, in regard to the use of unleavened bread, the baptismal fonts, and the celebration of ecclesiastical festivals. As the pastors would not yield to the consistory, they were banished, and Calvin went to settle at Strasburg; but in 1541 he was recalled, and the first measure he set about was to settle the Presbyterian form of church government. The rigour of the system which he established was compared by many to the terror of the inquisition; and the conduct of Calvin, in causing Servetus to be burnt as a heretic, did not tend to lessen the parallel. Calvin died 27 May, 1564. While at Strasburg he married Ideletta de Bure, widow of an Anabaptist whom he had converted. She bore Calvin one son, who died in infancy. The theological system of Calvin is founded upon the irrelative decrees of the Almighty, without any regard to the will or merits of man. As a commentator he stands in the first rank, and has been commended by Scaliger, Huët, Horsley, and other scholars of mark. The best edition of his works is that of Amsterdam, 1671, 9 vols. fol.

CALVISIVS, SETH, author of some valuable works on chronology and music, was born at Gorschleben in Thuringia 21 Feb., 1556, and died at Leipsic 23 Nov., 1615 or 1617.

CAMASSEL, ANDREW, an Italian painter, died 1648, aged 47.

CAMBACÈRES, JEAN JACQUES RÉGIS, Duke of Parma, a French statesman and writer, born 18 Oct., 1757; died 8 March, 1824.

CAMBERT, ROBERT, a musical composer, was born at Paris about 1628, came to England in the reign of Charles II., and died in London 1677.

CAMBIASO, or CANGIAGO, LUKE, an Italian painter, born 1527; died 1585. His principal works are at Genoa.

CAMBRIDGE, RICHARD OWEN, was born in London 14 Feb. 1717. From Eton he was sent to St. John's College, Oxford; and in 1737 he became a member of Lincoln's Inn, but never practised the Law. He settled for some time on his estate at Whitminster, Gloucestershire, where he wrote his poem called 'The Scribleriad;' but in 1748 he took a house in London, and soon afterwards purchased a villa at Twickenham, where he died 17 Sept., 1802. Mr. Cambridge wrote twenty-one papers in 'The World,' several elegant poems, and 'A History of the War upon the Coast of Comorandel.'

CAMBRONNE, PIERRE JACQUES ETIENNE, baron, a French general, born 26 Dec., 1770; died 28 Jan., 1842.

CAMBYSES, king of Persia, succeeded his father, Cyrus the Great, B.C. 529, and died B.C. 521.

CAMDEN, CHARLES PRATT, EARL, was third son of Sir John Pratt, chief justice of the King's Bench, and born 1713. He received his education first at Eton and afterwards at King's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A., and was then entered of the Inner Temple. In due time he was called to the bar, but did not make any progress in his profession for several years. At length, by the interest of Henley, afterwards lord chancellor, he obtained considerable practice and the friendship of Mr. Pitt. On the advancement of Henley to the House of Lords in 1757, Mr. Pratt was made attorney-general, and in 1792 he was constituted chief justice of the Common Pleas. In this elevated situation he distinguished himself by his conduct in the affair of Wilkes, whom, after a very elaborate declaration of the law bearing on the case, he ordered to be discharged. For this the corporation of London voted him the freedom of the city in a gold box, and caused his portrait to be placed in Guildhall. He also received similar marks of distinction from other places. In 1765 he was created a peer, and the year following advanced to the dignity of lord chancellor, in which office he acted with credit to himself and justice to the public. Having on the occasion of the Middlesex election expressed his opinion against the court, the seals were taken from him, on which several other members of the cabinet resigned their places. On the question of libels Lord Camden always opposed the doctrine laid down by high authority, viz., that juries were only the judges of the matter of fact and not of the law. At the time of the American war he resisted the coercive measures of the government. In 1782 he was appointed president of the council, which office he resigned the following year, but was afterwards reappointed, and held it till his death on 13 April, 1794.

CAMDEN, JOHN JEFFREYS PRATT, MARQUIS, K.G., son of Charles, first Earl Camden, was born 1759, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. Shortly after coming of age he was, at the general election of 1780, returned to parliament as one of the members for Bath, and in the same year was appointed one of the tellers of the Exchequer, which office he held for the extraordinary period of sixty years. He succeeded his father in the peerage 1794, and in 1795 was sent to Ireland as lord-lieutenant, in which post he remained till 1798. Earl Camden was secretary for the colonies from May, 1804, to June, 1805; president of the council from the latter date to Feb., 1806, and again from March 1807, to April, 1812, being in Sept. of the last-named year advanced to the dignity of marquis. He was elected chancellor of the university of Cambridge 1834, and died 8 Oct., 1840.

CAMDEN, WILLIAM, an eminent historian and antiquary, born in London 2 May, 1551. He received his education first at Christ's Hospital and next at St. Paul's School, from whence, at the age of fifteen, he removed to Oxford, and entered as a scrivener of Magdalen College; but missing a demi's place he migrated to Broadgate Hall, now Pembroke College, and afterwards to Christ Church. He next stood candidate for a fellowship at All Souls' College, but without success, on which he quitted Oxford and came to London, where he pursued his studies under Dr. Gabriel Goodman and his brother Godfrey, afterwards bishop of Gloucester. We find that he had taken his degree of bachelor before 1588, and in 1613 the university conferred on him that of master. In 1575 he became usher of Westminster School, and spent all his leisure hours in the study of English antiquities, which laid the foundation of his Britannia. This work first appeared in 1586, dedicated to Lord Burghley, and such was its reception that eight editions of it were published in four years, and another at London in 1594. The title is the same in all, viz., 'Britannia, sive florentissimum regnum Angliæ, Scotiæ, Hiberniæ, et insularum adjacentium, ex intima antiquitate, chorographica descriptione.' In 1590 he was presented to a prebend in Salisbury Cathedral, which kind of preferment was then commonly given to laymen. In 1593 he became head master of Westminster School, for the use of which he composed a Greek Grammar, printed in 1597, in which year he was made Clarenceux king-at-arms. This last promotion so irritated Ralph Brooke, York herald, that he wrote a virulent book against the Britannia, but was answered by Camden in his next edition. In 1600 he published an account of the monuments in Westminster Abbey; and in 1603 appeared at Frankfort his Collection of the old English Historians. His next publication, entitled 'Remaines of a greater work concerning Britain, the inhabitants thereof, their language, names, surnames, empresses, wise speeches, poesies, & epitaphs,' was printed in 1605, and has gone through several editions. On the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot the king directed Camden to translate the account of the trial of the conspirators into Latin. This he did, and his translation was published 1607. This year also he printed a new and enlarged edition of his Britannia. In 1616 he published his Latin History of Queen Elizabeth; but the second part did not come out till after the author's death, being printed at Leyden 1625, and afterwards by Hearne, from Camden's own manuscript. In 1622 he founded his professorship of history at Oxford, and appointed Degory Wheare, fellow of Exeter College, the first professor. Camden died at Chiselhurst, Kent, 9 Nov., 1623, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The Britannia was translated into English, first by Philemon Holland, folio, 1610; next by Bishop Gibson, with additions, in 1604, folio, reprinted in 1722, 2 vols. folio; and again, with more matter, in 1752 and 1772; and lastly Mr. Gough published an enlarged edition in 3 vols. folio, 1789.

CAMELFORD, THOMAS PITT, LORD, was son of Thomas Pitt, Esq., lord warden of the stannaries, &c., and nephew of the first earl of Chatham. He was born 1737, and died 19 Jan., 1793. His lordship was author of tracts concerning the American War, &c., privately printed.

CAMERARIUS, JOACHIM, a German scholar, born at Bamberg 12 April, 1500. He became professor of literature at Nuremberg, and afterwards assisted in the establishment of the university of Leipzig, where he died 17 April, 1574. Camerarius was the friend of Erasmus and of Melancthon, whose life he wrote. His literary labours were great, as he translated Herodotus, Demosthenes, Euclid, Xenophon, Homer, Theocritus, Sophocles, Lucian, and Theodoret.

CAMERARIUS, JOACHIM, son of the preceding, was born 6 Nov., 1534, at Nuremberg, where he died 11 Oct., 1598. He published some treatises on botany.

CAMERON, Sir ALAN, lieutenant-general, died 9 March, 1828. In 1793 he raised the 79th regiment, or Cameron Highlanders, at the head of which he afterwards served with great gallantry in the Low Countries and the Peninsula.

CAMERON, ALEXANDER, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born at Auchindryne, in Castleton of Braemar, Aberdeenshire, 28 July, 1747; nominated coadjutor to Bishop Hay 1797; consecrated bishop of Maximianopolis, in Palaestina Secunda, 1798, at Madrid; returned to Scotland 1802; succeeded as fifth vicar apostolic of the Lowland District, on the resignation of Bishop Hay, 1806; resigned his vicarial faculties 1825; and died at Edinburgh 7 Feb., 1828.

CAMERON, Sir EWEN, or EVAN, of Lochiel, a celebrated Highland chief, who was a zealous royalist, and appeared with a numerous train of his followers, the Camerons, at the battle of Killcrankie. Sir Ewen has been called the 'Ulysses of the Highlands.' Born 1629; died 1718. His grandson, Donald Cameron (who died 1748), took a leading part in the rebellion of 1745.

CAMERON, JOHN, a Protestant divine, born at Glasgow about 1580. He studied at the university of his native place, and after reading lectures in Greek, went to France, where the Protestant ministers appointed him master of their new college at Bergerac, from whence he removed to the philosophical professorship at Sedan, and remained there two years. He then went to Paris, and next to Bordeaux, where he was appointed one of the ministers, and officiated with such reputation as to be called to the theological chair in the university of Saumur. Here he remained till 1620, when the civil war rendered it necessary for him to visit England. He was well received by King James, who appointed him professor of divinity at Glasgow; but this situation not being agreeable he went back to Saumur in less than a year, and afterwards removed to Montauban, where he died of a wound which he received from a furious zealot in 1622. He was author of Theological Lectures, published in 3 vols. by Louis Capellus; and 'Myrothecium Evangelicum.' Cameron adopted a more enlarged mode of explaining the doctrine of grace than that of Calvin, which naturally raised him many enemies. He was, however, followed by Amyraut.

CAMERON, MARGARET, a Gaelic poet, was a native of Argyleshire. The first edition of her Songs was published at Edinburgh 1785; the second at Inverness 1805.

CAMERON, RICHARD, a Scotch covenanting divine, who was zealous in opposing the indulgence, and who was slain by the king's troops 20 July, 1680, while fighting at the head of his adherents.

CAMERON, WILLIAM, a Scotch clergyman, minister of Kirknewton, was born 1751, and died 17 Nov., 1811. Two volumes of his poems have been published.

CAMIDGE, JOHN, Mus.D., a musical composer, who was organist of York Minster 1842-50. He took his doctor's degree at Cambridge. Died 21 Sept., 1859, aged 69.

CAMOENS, LOUIS, the most celebrated poet of Portugal, is supposed to have been born at Lisbon in 1524. His father belonged to a noble family, and his mother to the illustrious house of Sá. Camoens studied at the university of Coimbra, and after completing his education returned to Lisbon. He lost one of his eyes in a campaign against the Moors at Ceuta, and afterwards passed to the East Indies, in the hope of bettering his fortunes. Here he began his celebrated 'Lusiad,' but on his return he had the misfortune to be shipwrecked, and with difficulty saved his life, swimming with his right hand, and supporting his poem with his left. He finished his poem 1569, and dedicated it to King Sebastian, but his hopes of patronage were cruelly disappointed. The merits of the poet were neglected by the monarch, and Camoens, feeling all the miseries of indigent virtue, expired in the midst of his ungrateful countrymen, a prey to the deepest wretchedness, 1579. The 'Lusiad,' an epic national picture of Portuguese glory, is his greatest poem, being vastly superior to his other works. It has been translated into English by Fanshawe (1655), Mickle (second edition), 1778, and Musgrave (1826). An English version of some of Camoens' Poems, with remarks on his life and writings, and notes, by Viscount Strangford, was published in 1804.

CAMPAN, JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE GENEST, was born at Paris 6 Oct., 1752, and at an early age was appointed reader to the aunts of Louis XVI., after which she passed into the service of Marie Antoinette, whose secretary, M. Campan, she married. At the breaking out of the Revolution she displayed the most devoted attachment to her unfortunate mistress, and pleaded hard, but without success, to be allowed to share her captivity. In 1794 she established a school at St. Germain, which was highly successful, and was afterwards removed to Ecouen under the patronage of Napoleon I. On the restoration of the Bourbons this devoted servant of the royal family was treated with the basest ingratitude, and her establishment at Ecouen suppressed. This had a prejudicial effect on her health, and she died 16 March, 1827. Madame Campan wrote 'Memoirs of the private life of Marie Antoinette;' 'Conversations of a Mother with her Daughter;' and several other educational works.

CAMPANELLA, THOMAS, a Dominican friar, born at Stilo, in Calabria, 5 Sept., 1508. While still a young man, he distinguished himself by a thesis against an old professor of his order. This so irritated his opponent that he accused Campanella of a desire to betray Naples to the enemies of the state, and of holding erroneous opinions. The consequence was that he underwent an imprisonment of twenty-seven years, and was seven times put to the torture. At length, however, he was released at the request of Pope Urban VIII. In 1624 he went to Paris, where he was patronized by Richelieu. Died 21 March, 1639. His most famous work, 'Atheismus Triumphatus,' appeared in 1651. He also wrote 'De Monarchia Messie Jesu'; 'Discorsi della liberta'; 'Civitas Solis,' a romance of the Utopian kind; and 'De Monarchia Hispanica Discursus,' wherein the king of Spain is instructed how he might attain to universal dominion.

CAMPANUS, JOHN ANTHONY, an Italian writer, bishop of Terrano, was born 1427, and died 15 July, 1477. He wrote the life of Pius II. and of the famous commander Andrew Braccio, besides orations, letters, Latin poems, and moral and political treatises.

CAMPBELL, ALEXANDER, a poet and miscellaneous writer, born in Perthshire 1704; died 15 May, 1824. His chief publications are, 'An Introduction to the History of Poetry in Scotland'; 'Journey from Edinburgh through various parts of North Britain,' 2 vols.; 'The Grampians desolate, a poem'; 'History of the Rebellion in Scotland in 1745-46'; and 'Albyn's Anthology, or a select collection of the melodies and local poetry peculiar to Scotland and the Isles.'

CAMPBELL, SIR ALEXANDER, bart., a gallant general, who became governor of Madras, was born in Perthshire 1759, and died in India 11 Oct., 1824.

CAMPBELL, ARCHIBALD, a prelate of the Scotch Episcopal church, and a near relation of the great duke of Argyle. He was a nonjuror, and in 1721 was elected bishop of Aberdeen, which charge he resigned in 1724. He died in London about 1744. Bishop Campbell was author of 'The Doctrine of a Middle State between Death and the Resurrection,' folio, 1721.

CAMPBELL, COLIN, a Scotch architect, who wrote 'Vitruvius Britannicus,' 3 vols. folio; and built some elegant edifices in Kent. He was surveyor of the works at Greenwich Hospital, and died about 1734.

CAMPBELL, SIR COLIN, LORD CLYDE. See CLYDE.

CAMPBELL, DANIEL or DONALD, a Scotch divine, was the only son of Patrick Campbell, of Queensrook, in Caithness. He was born 1606; graduated as M.A. in the University and King's College of Aberdeen, 1687; and was inducted, 31 Dec., 1691, minister of the united parishes of Kilmichael, Glasrie, Killinure, and Lochgear, in Argyleshire, of which a large portion was then possessed by his kinsmen, the clan Iver. Died 20 March, 1722. He was author of the following religious manuals, which formerly were very popular in the Western Highlands:—'Sacramental Meditations on the Sufferings and Death of Christ,' Edinburgh, 1698, which went through several editions, and was translated into Gaelic; 'The Frequent and Devout Communicant'; 'Meditations on Death,' Edinburgh, 1718, Glasgow, 1741; 'Dæmonomachie, or War with the Devil, in a short Treatise by way of Dialogue between Plülander and Theophilus,' Edinburgh, 1718; 'Man's Chief End and Rule,' Edinburgh, 1721; and 'Meditations on Eternity,' Edinburgh, 1721.

CAMPBELL, DONALD, of Barbreck, a Scotch gentleman, who commanded a regiment of cavalry in the service of the Nabob of the Carnatic, and published a curious account of 'A Journey overland to India, partly by a Route never gone before by any European,' 4to., London, 1796. Died 1804, aged 53.

CAMPBELL, DUNCAN, a Gaelic poet, whose 'Nuadh Orain Ghàilach' were published at Cork 1798, with the following English title-page, which supplies all the biographical particulars that I have been able to find respecting him:—'A New Gaelic Song Book, composed by Duncan Campbell, from Argyleshire; born at Lochlongside, in Stronchulinn, in the Parish of Kilmonn, Cougl; now a Soldier in the second Battalion of Rothsay and Caithness Fencibles.'

CAMPBELL, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a gentleman who resided at Birkhead Lodge, near Ipswich, Suffolk, died 1846. He was author of a privately-printed work, entitled 'A Letter to Mrs. Campbell of Barbreck, containing an Account of the Campbells of Barbreck, from their first Ancestor to the present Time,' 4to., Ipswich, 1830.

CAMPBELL, GEORGE, D.D., a Scotch divine, was born in Argyleshire 1696, and educated at St. Andrew's, where he became professor of history 1718. Died 1767. He wrote 'Oratio de vanitate luminis naturæ'; 'The Apostles no Enthusiasts'; 'An Inquiry into the original of Moral Virtue'; and a 'Vindication of the Christian Religion.—Anderson.'

CAMPBELL, GEORGE, D.D., was born at Aberdeen on Christmas Day 1719. From the grammar school of his native city he went to Marischal College, but was afterwards articled to a writer to the signet at Edinburgh. In 1741 he relinquished the law, and began the study of divinity, after which he was licensed to preach, and in 1748 was presented to the church of Banchory Ternan, near Aberdeen. After remaining nine years in this parish, he was chosen one of the ministers of Aberdeen, where, in 1759, he was appointed principal of Marischal College. In 1763 he published his Dissertation on Miracles, in answer to Hume, for which he received the degree of D.D. from King's College. In 1771 he was elected professor of divinity. His Philosophy of Rhetoric appeared in 1776; and the same year he published a sermon on the American War, of which six thousand copies were quickly sold. In 1779 he printed an address to quiet the apprehensions of the people in regard to the toleration of the Catholics. The last work which Dr. Campbell published was his Translation of the Gospels, with preliminary Dissertations and Notes. Some years before his death he resigned his professorship, on which occasion a pension of £300 a year was settled on him by the king. Died 6 April, 1796. His Lectures on Ecclesiastical History were published in 1800, 2 vols. 8vo., with his life prefixed. His Lectures on Systematic Theology and the Pastoral Character have also been printed.

CAMPBELL, GEORGE, a Scotch minor poet, born at Kilmarnock 1701; died about 1818. His best pieces are 'A Morning Contemplation'; 'Ossian's Address to the Sun'; and 'A Winter Evening Scene, a Farm House in the Country.'

CAMPBELL, HECTOR, M.D., a physician and medical writer, died at his residence, Queen Street, Cheapside, London, 12 Jan., 1837, aged 76. He was a very clever and intelligent man, but occasionally eccentric; and numbered among his sincere friends Sir Isaac Heard, Garter king-at-arms, George Harrison, Clarenceux king-at-arms, and Mr. Chamberlain Clarke. To the disgrace of the College of Physicians it is to be recorded that Dr. Campbell suffered a fine and imprisonment for publishing a paper against that institution. His works are, 'Objections to the opinions and practice of Dr. William Loundes in bilious and liver complaints,' 8vo., London, 1809; Translation of the London Pharmacopoeia, 12mo., London, 1810; and 'The impending Ruin of the British Empire; its cause and remedy considered,' 8vo., London, 1813.

CAMPBELL, Sir HUGH, of Cawdor, a Scotch gentleman, who was knighted 1669, and died 1716. Being very anxious for the introduction of the Lord's Prayer as a part of the regular service of the Presbyterian church, he repeatedly addressed letters to the presbytery of Inverness, to Principal Carstairs, of Edinburgh, and to the General Assembly. He also published the following works on the subject:—'An Essay on the Lord's Prayer,' 8vo., 1704; 'Letters relative to an Essay on the Lord's Prayer,' 8vo., Edinburgh, 1709.

CAMPBELL, JOHN, LL.D., an historical, biographical, and political writer, born at Edinburgh 8 March, 1708. At the age of five years his parents brought him to England, and he never afterwards visited his native country. He was designed for the law, but renounced that profession on the expiration of his clerkship, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. His first known performance was the 'Military History of Prince Eugene and the Duke of Marlborough,' 2 vols. folio, 1736. About this time also he printed a History of the Bible, 2 vols. folio; and the reputation which he acquired from these publications induced the proprietors of the 'Ancient Universal History' to engage him in that great undertaking. While thus employed he found time to compose several other works, as the 'Travels of Edward Browne; Memoirs of the Duke of Ripparda; A Concise History of Spanish America; and the well-known 'Lives of the Admirals,' which first appeared in 2 vols. 1744, and were afterwards extended to 4 vols. In 1743 he published a curious tract, entitled 'Hermippus Redivivus, or the Sage's Triumph over Old Age and the Grave;' and the year following an improved edition of Harris's Collection of Voyages and Travels, 2 vols. folio. He next contributed a number of valuable articles to the 'Biographia Britannica.' In 1748 he wrote the Introduction to Chronology, and the article on Trade and Commerce, for Dodsley's Preceptor. His next publication was 'The Present State of Europe,' of which six editions were printed. He now embarked in the 'Modern Universal History,' of which he wrote by far the best portion. Such was his reputation that the university of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws, and his correspondence was sought by men of letters in every part of the world. Besides the publications here mentioned Dr. Campbell wrote an astonishing number of tracts, for one of which, in vindication of the peace of 1763, he was appointed his majesty's agent for the province of Georgia. His two last works were 'A Treatise upon the Trade of Great Britain to America,' 1773; and 'A Political Survey of Great Britain,' 2 vols., 1774. Dr. Campbell died at his residence, Queen Square, London, 28 Dec., 1775.

CAMPBELL, JOHN, a British admiral, died 16 Dec., 1790.

CAMPBELL, JOHN, a Scotch divine, who for thirty-seven years was minister of Kingsland Chapel, London. He took a deep interest in foreign missions, and twice visited the South African stations of the London Missionary Society. His works are 'Travels in South Africa;' 'Voyages and Travels of a Bible;' &c. Born March, 1706; died 4 April, 1840.

CAMPBELL, JOHN, LORD, was the son of a Scotch minister of narrow fortunes, and was born 1781. After receiving a preliminary education at St. Andrew's, he quitted North Britain and came to London, whilst still a beardless lad, to take his lot amongst those whom the first Lord Colchester designated 'blackguard news-writers.' He obtained employment on the 'Morning Chronicle,' first as theatrical critic, and afterwards as a reporter. In 1806 he was called to the bar, but briefs came in very slowly; indeed, he laboured under almost every disability that it was possible for an intelligent young man of honest repute to labour under. He had, however, three things in his favour—his patience, dogged resolution, and nationality. To gain favour with the attorneys, he introduced their names into his 'Reports of Cases determined at Nisi Prius in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas and on the Home Circuit,' published between 1812 and 1816. Thus, steadily plodding onwards, Campbell slowly advanced to position and practice, and married, in 1821, Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Sir James Scarlett, afterwards Lord Abinger. In 1827 he took silk, and in 1830, when nearly fifty years of age, entered the House of Commons as member for Stafford. In 1832 he became solicitor-general, and took his seat as the representative of Dudley. The attorney-generalship fell to him in 1834, when, on his failing to achieve re-election at Dudley, he was returned by Edinburgh, which constituency he continued to represent till he entered the House of Peers in 1841. In that year he was sent, with a peerage, to preside over Irish equity; but the Irish chancellorship immediately fell from his hands on the resignation of Lord Melbourne's cabinet; and for the next five years, without profession or office, the ex-chancellor devoted himself entirely to literature. Prudential considerations no longer existed to restrain him from indulging his humour, and he entered on those labours which resulted in the production of the 'Lives of the Lord Chancellors,' and the 'Lives of the Chief Justices.' In 1846, on the formation of Lord John Russell's cabinet, he accepted the chancellorship of the duchy of Lancaster; in 1850, when close on seventy years of age, he became chief justice of the Queen's Bench; and in 1859, length of days bringing him the prize he had so long desired and struggled for, he took his seat upon the woolstack. Died 23 June, 1861. As an orator Lord Campbell was, far below the average of his profession; and as an advocate he in no cause displayed either subtlety or tact of a high order. The period, perhaps, in which he appeared to best advantage was when he sat as chief justice of the Queen's Bench, and by a conscientious and sagacious discharge of his judicial functions, made even his enemies allow that his high sense of his own merits was not altogether unsupported by facts. In Chancery Lord Campbell was, for the most part, a mere form. As to his literary productions, when the circumstances under which they were composed are remembered, it is an abuse of charity to abstain from condemning their hastiness and inaccuracy. As gossiping reviews of the books out of which they are compiled, the 'Lives' will bear comparison with the higher sort of lively magazine articles, but Lord Campbell put them forth as grave history, and not as mere books of 'ana.' His most serviceable literary work was the Libel Act (which allowed a person to plead justification), and his Act for the Suppression of Obscene Publications. These Acts have in no small degree contributed to the freedom of discussion and the purity of the press, and of themselves they would be sufficient witnesses to his fame.—Athenæum.

CAMPBELL, JOHN, B.D., a Congregationalist minister, was born in Scotland 5 Oct., 1794, and received his education at the universities of St. Andrews and Glasgow. He was first a minister in Ayrshire, and subsequently became pastor at the Tabernacle, Moorfields, London. After holding this position about twenty years his health compelled him to retire, and he then devoted himself to literature. He started a paper called the 'British Standard,' with the object of vilifying and heading up to public execration the doctrines of the Catholic Church, and likewise published a number of 'religious' works with the same charitable design. He was created D.D. by the university of St. Andrews 1844, and died in London 26 March, 1867.

CAMPBELL, SIR NEIL, a British general, born about 1770; died 14 Aug., 1827.

CAMPBELL, THOMAS, LL.D., the poet, was born at Glasgow 27 July, 1777. He was well educated at the college of Glasgow, and while still a young man removed to Edinburgh, where he made himself honourably known among the choice spirits of the place, devoting himself to private tuition. He published 'The Pleasures of Hope' in 1799. This work was profitable to him in more ways than one, since it enabled him to take the German tour, the earlier and later fruits of which were the noblest lyrics of modern times, 'Hohenlinden,' 'Ye Mariners of England,' and 'The Exile of Erin,' which may all be dated from this tour. Returning from the continent Mr. Campbell again sojourned for awhile in Edinburgh, and wrote several of his celebrated ballads and poems. In 1803 he was drawn southward by the attractions of London. He married his cousin, Miss Matilda Sinclair, in the autumn of the same year, and at once commenced a course of literary activity of which few traces remain. Among his labours was an historical work entitled 'Annals of Great Britain from the Accession of George III. to the Peace of Amiens,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1807. His conversational powers drew around him many friends, and to these, probably as much as to the liberal principles which he unflinchingly maintained from first to last, may be ascribed the interest taken in him by Charles Fox, who placed him on the pension-list at £200 a year. In 1809 he published 'Gertrude of Wyoming,' with 'Lord Ullin's Daughter,' and 'The Battle of the Baltic,' adding to a subsequent edition the ballad of 'O'Connor's Child.' He was afterwards engaged to deliver a course of lectures on poetry at the Royal Institution, and met with a success which induced him to publish his well-known 'Specimens of the British Poets, with biographical and critical notices, and an Essay on

English Poetry,' 7 vols. 8vo., 1819. In 1820 he entered on the editorship of the New Monthly Magazine, which he conducted for ten years; and in 1824 appeared 'Theodoric,' the feebler of his long poems. Among his subsequent publications are 'Letters from Algiers'; 'The Life of Mrs. Siddons'; 'Letters from the South'; and a 'Life of Petrarch.' Campbell interested himself eagerly in the foundation of the London University, took an active part in the cause of Greece, and subsequently in that of Poland, and was twice elected rector of the university of Glasgow. He died at Boulogne 15 June, 1844, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.—Gent. Mag.

CAMPDEN, HUGH, made the English translation of the Romance of King Boccus and Sydrack, printed in 1510. The period when he flourished is unknown.

CAMPE, JOACHIM HENRY, a German writer, born 1746, at Brunswick, where he died 22 Oct., 1818. The best known of his works is the 'New Robinson Crusoe,' in which he has so far exceeded his prototype as to make his hero the inventor and fabricator of everything necessary for human support, instead of obtaining auxiliary or adventitious aid from shipwrecked vessels.

CAMPEGGIO, LORENZO, a cardinal, born at Bologna 1474. He was consecrated bishop of Feltria 1512, and created a cardinal 1517. Two years afterwards he came to England as nuncio, and was made bishop of Salisbury. In 1524 he visited Germany to oppose the progress of the Reformation, but afterwards returned to England to settle the dispute respecting the divorce of Henry VIII. from Catharine of Arragon. He and Cardinal Wolsey presided over the legantine court by which the matter was tried in 1529; but as Catharine appealed to the Pope, the court was dissolved. Afterwards Campeggio was sent to the diet of Augsburg, and died at Rome 19 July, 1539, leaving the character of a man of learning and a patron of learned men. He was much esteemed by Erasmus, Sadoleto, and other eminent scholars. His letters, which contain many historical particulars, have been printed in 'Epistolæ Miscellaneæ,' folio, Basle, 1550.

CAMPER, PETER, a physician and naturalist, born at Leyden 11 May, 1722; died at the Hague 7 April, 1789. His 'Works on the Connexion between the Science of Anatomy and the Arts of Drawing, Painting, Statuary, &c.,' were translated into English by T. Cogan, M.D., and published at London 1794.

CAMPHUYSEN, THEODORE RAPHAEL, born at Gorcum 1886, acquired a great reputation as a landscape painter, after which he studied divinity under Arminius. Died 1627. He translated the Psalms into Dutch metre, and composed some devotional treatises.

CAMPI, BERNARDIN, a painter, author of an interesting book on his art, was born at Cremona 1522, and was living 1590.

CAMPAN, EDMUND, a famous Jesuit, born in London 25 Jan., 1540, and educated at Christ's Hospital. In 1553 he was elected scholar of St. John's College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and entered into orders. In 1568 he went to Ireland; but it being discovered that he had embraced the Catholic religion, he was seized and detained for some time. He escaped soon after to England, but in 1571 transported himself into the Low Countries, and settled in the English

College at Douay. From thence he went to Rome, where he was admitted into the Society of Jesus 1573, being afterwards sent by the general of his order into Germany. He lived for some time at Brune, and then at Vienna, where he composed 'Nectar and Ambrosia,' a tragedy, which was acted before the emperor with great applause. At length, being called to Rome, he was sent, by command of Pope Gregory XIII., into England, where he arrived in June, 1580. Here he performed all the offices of a zealous provincial, and was diligent in propagating his religion. He seems to have challenged the English clergy to a disputation by a piece entitled 'Rationes decem oblati certaminis in causa fidei, redditæ academicis Angliæ,' 1581, many copies of which were dispersed in St. Mary's Church, Oxford, during the time of an act. It was afterwards printed in English, and answered by the English divines. Campian was at last discovered in disguise at a gentleman's house in Berkshire, from whence he was conveyed in great procession to the Tower of London, with a paper fastened to his hat, on which was written 'Edmund Campian, a most pernicious Jesuit.' Afterwards, having been found guilty of high treason in adhering to the Pope, he was hanged and quartered with other priests at Tyburn 1 Dec., 1581. All parties allow him to have been a most extraordinary man, of admirable parts, an eloquent orator, a subtle philosopher and skillful disputant, an exact preacher both in Latin and English, and a man of good temper and address. Besides the works already mentioned he wrote 'Nine Articles directed to the lords of the privy council;' 'The History of Ireland,' published by Sir James Ware 1633; 'Chronologia universalis;' 'Conferences in the Tower,' published by the divines of the Established Church 1583; 'Narratio de Divortio;' 'Orationes;' 'Epistolæ;' and 'De Imitatione Rhetorica.'

CAMPIAN, WILLIAM, an English Jesuit, who died at Ghent 28 Sept., 1665, æt. 66, was author of an anonymous treatise 'On the Catholic Doctrine of Transubstantiation,' against Dr. Cosin, afterwards bishop of Durham.

CAMPION, THOMAS, an English writer, author of 'Observations on the Art of English Poësie,' 1602. He endeavours to prove that the English tongue is capable of admitting as many and as various measures as the Greek and Latin, and to explode what he terms 'the childish titillation of riming.' Campion also published several poems.

CAMPISTRON, JEAN GALBERT DE, a French dramatic poet, the secretary and friend of the duke of Vendome, was born 1656, and died 11 May, 1723.

CAMPOLONGO, EMMANUEL, a poet and archæologist, born at Naples 30 Dec., 1732; died March, 1801.

CAMPOMANES, DON PEDRO RODRIGUEZ COUNT DE, a Spanish statesman, born in the Asturias about 1710. In 1765 he was appointed fiscal of the council of Castile, afterwards president of the same, and minister of state, but was deprived of all his employments when Count Florida Blanca became prime minister. He was director of the Academy of History, and died in 1789. Among his writings are Historical Dissertations on the Knights Templars; Geographical Account of Portugal; and Two Memorials relative to the Gypsies and Vagabonds.

CAMPRA, ANDRÉ, a musician of Aix, admired for his superior knowledge of music and for his popular ballets and tragic operas. Born 4 Dec., 1660; died 29 July, 1744.

CAMPS, FRANÇOIS DE, a French ecclesiastic, author of numerous Dissertations on the history of France, was born at Amiens 31 Jan., 1643, and died 15 Aug., 1723.

CAMUCCINI, VINCENT, a painter of Rome, born about 1775; died 2 Sept., 1844.

CAMUS, ANTOINE LE, a French physician and writer, born 1722; died 2 Jan., 1772. His romance entitled 'Abdeker, or the Art of preserving Beauty,' has been translated into English.

CAMUS, ARMAND GASTON, was born at Paris 2 April, 1740. He was an agent in the French Revolution, and being sent to Dumouriez, was delivered by him to the Austrians, but was afterwards exchanged for the daughter of Louis XVI. Died 2 Nov., 1804. He wrote several works on history and bibliography.

CAMUS, CHARLES ETIENNE LOUIS, a French mathematician, born 25 Aug., 1699; died 2 Feb., 1768. He wrote a Course of Mathematics; treatises on arithmetic, &c. An English translation of his Treatise on the Teeth of Wheels, Pinions, &c., appeared in 1806.

CAMUS, ETIENNE LE, born at Paris 1632, became bishop of Grenoble, and a cardinal, and died 12 Sept., 1707. He was an exemplary prelate, and very austere, always sleeping on straw, and wearing a hair shirt. He was author of a Defence of the perpetual virginity of the Mother of God, &c.

CAMUS, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH DES, a mechanical inventor, was born at Pichomé, in Lorraine, 14 Sept., 1672, and died in England about 1732. A long list of his inventions is given in Calmet's 'Bibliothèque de Lorraine.'

CAMUS, JEAN PIERRE, was born at Paris 3 Nov., 1582, and made bishop of Belley 1609. He indulged in irony against the monks, who complained of him to Richelieu. He resigned his see after he had held it twenty years, and died 26 April, 1652. Among his numerous works are some pious stories, written to counteract the romances of his time.

CAMUS DE MEZIÈRES, NICHOLAS LE, a French architect, author of several works relating to his profession, was born 26 March, 1721; died 27 July, 1789.

CAMUSAT, DENIS FRANÇOIS, a bibliographer and miscellaneous writer, grand-nephew of Nicolas, mentioned below, was born at Besançon 1695, and died at Amsterdam 28 Oct., 1732.

CAMUSAT, JEAN, an eminent bookseller of Paris, died 1639.

CAMUSAT, NICHOLAS, a French historian, canon of Troyes, was born in that city 1575, and died 20 Jan., 1655. Among his works are 'Promptuarium sacrarium antiquitatum Tricassanæ diocesis,' 8vo., Troyes, 1610; and 'Melanges Historiques,' a collection of documents ranging from 1390 to 1580.

CANAL, or CANALETTO, ANTHONY, a celebrated painter, born at Venice about 1697. His father was a scene painter, who gave him his first instructions, after which young Canal went to Rome, and on his return to Venice painted a number of views of that city and neighbourhood. In 1746 he came to England, and painted some very fine pictures. He died in his own country 1768.

CANANI.

CANANI, JOHN BAPTIST, professor of medicine and anatomy at Ferrara, and physician to Pope Julius III., wrote 'Musculorum humani corporis picturata dissectio,' now very rare, and is said to have discovered the valves of the veins. Born 1515; died 20 Jan., 1579.

CANAYE, PHILIPPE DE LA, seigneur du Fresne, a French statesman and diplomatist, born 1551; died 27 Feb., 1610. He was converted to Catholicism at the famous conference between Du Perron and Du Plessis Mornay. He published an account of his travels to Constantinople, and three volumes of his embassies appeared in 1635.

CANCELLIERI, FRANCIS JEROME, an Italian priest of extraordinary erudition, born 10 Oct., 1751, at Rome, where he died 29 Dec., 1826. He wrote an astonishing number of works, one of which contains a minute bibliographical account of the writers on artificial memory and the compilation of commonplace books. An interesting notice of Cancellieri will be found in Cardinal Wiseman's 'Recollections of the last four Popes.'

CANDIAC, JEAN LOUIS PIERRE ELISABETH DE MONTCAULM, a child of astonishing powers, born near Nîmes 7 Nov., 1719. At the age of four he learned Latin, and when six could read Greek and Hebrew, to the astonishment of the learned. This prodigy of premature superiority in learning died at Paris 8 Oct., 1726, when not quite eight years old.

CANDIDO, PETER, a painter, born at Bruges about 1548, settled first at Rome, and then entered the service of the Elector Maximilian of Bavaria, at whose court he died 1599. De Witte was his real name.

CANDISH. See CAVENDISH.

CANDOLLE, AUGUSTE PYRAME DE, a botanical writer, born at Geneva 4 June, 1748; died 9 Sept., 1841.

CANE, ROBERT, M.D., of Kilkenny, author of 'Williamite and Jacobite Wars in Ireland,' died 15 Aug., 1858, aged 61.

CANES, JOHN VINCENT, or JOHN BAPTIST, a Franciscan friar, was born on the borders of Nottinghamshire and Leicestershire, and educated in the Protestant religion. At the age of eighteen he was sent to the university of Cambridge, where he remained two years, but turning Catholic at the expiration of that time he entered the Franciscan convent at Douay, and in due time was admitted lecturer and professor of divinity. He returned afterwards to England, and lived sometimes in Lancashire, but for the most part in London, where he died June, 1672. His works are 'The Reclaim'd Papist: or a dialogue between a Popish knight, a Protestant lady, a parson, and his wife,' 1655; 'Fiat Lux: or a general conduct to a right understanding, and charity, in the great combustion and broils about religion in England between Papists and Protestants, Presbyterians, and Independents,' second edition, 8vo., 1662; 'An Epistle to the Author of Animadversions on Fiat Lux,' 1663; 'Diaphanta; or an Exposure of Dr. Stillingfleet's Arguments against the Catholic Religion,' 1665; 'Three Letters, declaring the strange, odd proceedings of Protestant divines when they write against Catholics,' 1671; and 'Το καθολικόν Stillingfleeto: being an account of Dr. Stillingfleet's late book against the Church of Rome,' 8vo., Bruges, 1672.

CANGIAGO. See CAMBIASO.

CANNING.

CANNI, ANGELO, a grammarian, born at Anghiari, in Tuscany, 1521, taught successively at Venice, Padua, Bologna, Rome, and Paris, where he died 1557. His most important work is a valuable Greek grammar, entitled 'Hellenismus.'

CANISIUS, PETER, provincial of the Jesuits in Germany, was born at Nimeguen 8 May, 1521, and distinguished himself at the council of Trent by his theological learning and zeal against heretics. He died at Fribourg 21 Dec., 1597. His 'Summa Doctrinæ Christianæ' has been translated into various languages. Henry Caninius, his nephew, professed the canon law with reputation at Ingolstadt, and died 1609, leaving several legal works.

CANITZ, FREDERICK RODOLPH LOUIS, Baron von, a German poet, born 1664 at Berlin, where he died 11 Aug., 1699. He was privy councillor of state, and wrote some elegant poems, which have procured him the title of the Pope of Germany.

CANNE, JOHN, an English Puritan of the rigid sect of Brownists or Independents, who fled to Amsterdam at the beginning of the seventeenth century. He succeeded the famous Henry Ainsworth in the pastoral charge at Amsterdam, and is known by a Bible illustrated with more parallel references in the margin than are to be found in preceding editions. It first appeared at Amsterdam 1664. Canne also published 'The Necessity of Separation from the Church of England proved by the Nonconformist Principles,' 1634, and other controversial works. Died about 1667.

CANNING, CHARLES JOHN, EARL, K.G., only surviving son of George Canning, the eminent statesman, was born 14 Dec., 1812, and educated at Oxford. After holding some minor offices under several administrations, he was selected in 1855 to be the successor of the Marquis Dalhousie as governor-general of India. In little more than a year after his arrival in India the mutiny broke out, and severely tested his lordship's energy and statesmanship. His conduct in dealing with it gave rise to much difference of opinion; but instead of resigning his post, as was expected, he carried out his plan for the pacification of India in a conciliatory spirit, and in 1859 received the thanks of both houses of parliament for his eminent civil services during the mutiny. He was also created an earl and a knight of the Garter. Died 17 June, 1862.

CANNING, GEORGE, an eminent statesman, born in London 11 April, 1770. From Eton School he went to Christ Church, Oxford, where he acquitted himself with great distinction. Afterwards he was entered of Lincoln's Inn, but soon abandoned law for politics. The opposition thought they had gained in him a powerful recruit; but as soon as he obtained a seat in the House of Commons, in 1793, he joined the ministerial party. In 1794 he delivered his first speech in favour of one of the measures of Mr. Pitt, who in 1796 appointed him under-secretary of state, which post he retained till Pitt went out of office in 1801. He then acted in opposition to the new ministry, and for his services was nominated treasurer of the navy on Pitt becoming prime minister in 1804. This office he held till 1806, when he again went into opposition. The next year he joined the administration of the duke of Portland, and was appointed foreign secretary. In the following year he defended the bombardment of Copenhagen. There was a split in the cabinet in 1809, when, in consequence of a misunderstanding, Mr. Canning fought a duel with Lord Castlereagh, at that time secretary for war, and was wounded in the thigh. The result was that both the ministers resigned their places. In Nov., 1814, Canning was despatched as ambassador extraordinary to Portugal, where he remained till after the battle of Waterloo. He then passed some time in the south of France, and towards the end of 1816 was appointed president of the Board of Control. He held this office till the scandalous proceedings took place about Queen Caroline in 1820, when he tendered his resignation, which was accepted. In 1822 he was appointed the successor of the marquis of Hastings, as governor-general of India, and was on the eve of his departure for that country when the marquis of Londonderry committed suicide, whereupon he was recalled and made secretary of state for foreign affairs. He fulfilled the duties of this office till 12 April, 1827, when he succeeded Lord Liverpool as premier. Nearly all the old ministers then resigned, and for the first time in his life Canning received the support of the Whigs, some of whom joined his administration. He occupied this exalted post only a short time, dying 8 Aug., 1827. The principal measures which distinguish Canning's ministerial career are the recognition of the states of South America, the maintenance of the independence of Portugal, and the treaty concluded between England, Russia, and France, in favour of Greece. He was a constant and zealous advocate of Catholic Emancipation, though he did not live to see the triumph of that great cause. When a young man at Eton Canning projected 'The Microcosm,' a periodical work, and later in life he contributed several witty satirical poems to 'The Anti-Jacobin.' His widow was created a viscountess 1828, with remainder of the dignity to the heirs male of the body of her late husband.

CANNON, RICHARD, editor of 'Historical Records of the British Army,' died 30 Oct., 1865, aged 86.

CANO. See CANUS.

CANO, ALONZO, a distinguished Spanish painter, sculptor, and architect, born at Granada 1601. He was patronised by Olivarez, and appointed director-general of the king's works at Madrid, the palaces and churches of which city are adorned with his elegant labours. He had the singular misfortune of finding, on his return home one evening, his house plundered, his wife murdered, and his Italian servant fled; and while he suspected the treachery of his domestic, he was himself, in consequence of his resentful temper, seized as the perpetrator of the horrid deed, but no tortures could force him to confess a crime of which he was not guilty. He afterwards entered into the church to escape further persecution, and died 1676.

CANON, or CANONICUS, JOHN, by some called Marbrus, an English Franciscan friar, was the disciple of Duns Scotus, and an eminent teacher of theology at Paris, where he died about 1340. He wrote 'In Aristotelis Physica, Lib. VIII.,' 8vo., St. Albans, 1481; and 'Lecturæ magistrales,' printed at Venice 1492 and 1516.

CANOVA, ANTHONY, a famous sculptor, was born at Passagno, a village in the Venetian territory, 1757. At the age of twelve he placed upon the table of the lord of Passagno the figure of a lion modelled in butter, which gave so much satisfaction that he was sent to Vienna, and articulated to Toretti, the best sculptor of the day. On the death of his master Canova remained some time with his nephew, and then removed to Venice. At the age of fourteen he sculptured, in marble, two baskets of fruit, and at seventeen a half-length of Eurydice. This was followed by an Orpheus, and other works, which procured his admission into the Academy of Fine Arts at Venice, where he gained several prizes; and on his departure for Rome the senate granted him a pension of 300 ducats. At Rome he became acquainted with Sir William Hamilton, whose recommendation did him great service. In 1785 he completed the tomb of Clement XIV.; and about the same time he executed his Psyche, one of the most beautiful of his works; but to enumerate the various productions of his chisel would far exceed our limits. In 1802 he visited Paris, where he was chosen a member of the Institute; and at this period he modelled the colossal bust of Napoleon. In 1815 Canova revisited the French capital, to reclaim the works of art of which his native country had been despoiled. Having completed this mission he came to England, and was highly distinguished by the prince regent. On his return to Rome he was created a knight and a marquis. No man merited these honours better, for he established prizes, endowed academies, and settled a fund for the encouragement of young artists. He was also distinguished by unaffected piety, and among other good deeds built a church in his native village at his own expense. He died at Venice 13 Oct., 1822, and was interred with great solemnity in the cathedral of St. Mark.

CANSFIELD, BENEDICT, alias William Fitch, a Franciscan friar, was born at Canfield, Essex, and died at Paris 21 Nov., 1611, æt. 49. His works are 'The Christian Knight;' 'Rule of Perfection, reducing the whole Spiritual Life to this one Point, of the Will of God,' Rouen, 1609; and 'De bene orando.'

CANT, ANDREW, a Scotch covenanting minister in the reigns of Charles I. and Charles II.; died about 1664. It has been erroneously stated that the opprobrious word 'cant' was derived from his name.

CANTACUZENUS, JOHN, emperor of the East, was born about 1300, and bred to letters and arms. In 1328 the Emperor Andronicus made him generalissimo of his army and first minister of state. On the death of that monarch in 1341 Cantacuzenus was left guardian of the young emperor, John Paleologus; but the jealousy of the empress thwarted his benevolent schemes, till at last he himself assumed the imperial purple at the request of the nobles of Adrianople, 1342. A long civil war ensued, in which Cantacuzenus was victor, but in 1355 he abdicated the throne and retired to a monastery. Died 20 Nov., 1410. He wrote some theological works, and a History of his own Times, of which a splendid edition was printed at Paris 1645, 3 vols. folio.

CANTARINI, SIMON, an Italian painter, the disciple of Guido, died at Verona 1648, aged 36.

CANTEL, PIERRE JOSEPH, a French Jesuit, born 1 Jan., 1645; died 6 Dec., 1684. He wrote 'De Romana Republica;' 'Metropolitanarum urbium [Franciæ] historia;' and edited Justin and Valerius Maximus, in the Delphin classics.

CANTEMIR, ANTIUCHUS, son of Demetrius, mentioned below, was born 1709, and displayed his abilities in several embassies to London and Paris. He was author of some odes, satires, and fables, besides translations of Anacreon and the epistles of Horace. Died 11 April, 1744.

CANTEMIR.

CANTEMIR, DEMETRIUS, a Tartar of illustrious descent, born 1673. He expected to succeed his father as governor of Moldavia; but he was supplanted, and when sent to defend the province against the Russians, he betrayed it to the Czar Peter, who gave him the title of prince. Died 23 Aug., 1723. He wrote a History of the Ottoman Empire in Latin; System of the Mohammedan religion; The present State of Moldavia, &c.

CANTER, THEODORE, a classical scholar, author of 'Vanæ Lectiones,' &c., was born at Utrecht 1545; died 1617.

CANTER, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, was also an able classical critic, and published 'Novæ Lectiones,' &c. Born at Utrecht 24 July, 1542; died 18 May, 1575.

CANTERBURY, CHARLES MANNERS SUTTON, VISCOUNT, was born 20 Jan., 1780, being the son of Charles Manners Sutton, archbishop of Canterbury. After receiving a liberal education at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he studied the law at Lincoln's Inn. Early in life he entered parliament, and in 1809 was appointed judge advocate-general under the administration of Mr. Perceval. In 1817 he succeeded Mr. Abbot as speaker of the House of Commons. He commanded in so high a degree the respect of the house generally, and of his political opponents in particular, that, without the least compromise of principle on his part, the Whigs proposed him for the speakership on two successive occasions, and agreed on several to reject him. He was created Viscount Canterbury 1835; and died 21 July, 1845.

CANTON, JOHN, a natural philosopher, born at Stroud, Gloucestershire, 31 July, 1718. He was early initiated in mathematics, but soon afterwards engaged in the business of his father as a broadcloth weaver. He, however, eluded the vigilance of his father, who forbade him to study by candle-light, and at last constructed, by the help of a common knife alone, a stone dial, which, besides the hours of the day, showed the sun's rising, and his place in the ecliptic, with other particulars. The ingenuity of the son procured the encouragement of the father, who placed on the front of his house the favourite dial. This was admired by the curious, and Canton was invited to the undisturbed use of some valuable libraries. Martin's grammar, and a pair of globes, then first seen, raised his genius to noble exertions. He was invited to London by Dr. Miles, and engaged himself with Mr. Watkins, at an academy in Spital Square. Here he pursued his studies, and succeeded Watkins in his school. In 1745 the discovery of the Leyden phial in electricity attracted his attention. In 1750 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society for his method of making artificial magnets, and he obtained the society's gold medal. He was also honoured with a degree by the university of Aberdeen. Canton was the first person in England who ascertained the truth of Franklin's hypothesis of the similarity of lightning and electricity by attracting fire from the clouds; and this recommended him strongly to the notice of the American philosopher. His discoveries continued to be important, and his opinions were communicated to the Royal Society in various papers, on the shooting of stars, the electrical properties of the tourmalin, the variation of the needle, the transit of Venus in 1761, the compressibility of water, the making of phosphorus, the fixing of electrical conductors on buildings, and the luminousness of the sea. He was likewise a contributor to the Gentleman's Magazine. Died 22 March, 1772.

CANTWELL, ANDREW, M.D., a physician, was a native of Tipperary, but practised his profession at Paris, where he died 11 July, 1764. He published several medical works.

CANTWELL, ANDRÉ SAMUEL MICHEL, son of the preceding, became librarian of the Hotel des Invalides at Paris. He translated into French Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall,' and many other English works, but his versions are inexact, and marked by carelessness. Born 1744; died 9 July, 1802.

CANTWELL, JOHN, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, was consecrated bishop of Meath 21 Sept., 1830, and died 11 Dec., 1866.

CANUS, JAMES, a Portuguese navigator, who discovered the kingdom of Congo 1484.

CANUS, MELCHIOR, a Spanish Dominican friar, born at Tarançon, in the diocese of Toledo, 1523. He was the pupil of Francis Victoria, and succeeded him in the theological chair at Salamanca, where he taught with reputation. Canus appeared also with great distinction at the council of Trent, and was made bishop of the Canary Islands 1552. He afterwards resigned his bishopric, and was appointed provincial of Castile. He died at Toledo 30 Sept., 1560. His treatise 'De Locis Theologicis' is a masterly performance, and has been frequently printed.

CANUS, SEBASTIAN, or del Cano, a Spaniard, who accompanied Magellan in his voyage round the world, and after his death pursued his course to the isles of Sunda, and round the Cape of Good Hope. He returned to Spain 1522, after circumnavigating the globe in three years and four weeks. Died 4 Aug., 1526.

CANUTE, a king of Denmark and Norway, sovereign also of England. He resigned his crown for a monastery, and died 1026.

CANUTE, The Great, succeeded Sweyn as king of Denmark, and afterwards undertook an expedition against England. He attacked Edmund Ironside with such success that the two rivals agreed to divide the country between them; and while Edmund took the land to the south of the Thames, his opponent claimed the north as his own. When Edmund was murdered by Eadric, 1017, Canute seized the whole kingdom. His rule, though severe, was impartial, as he regarded both nations equally as his subjects. He repressed the invasion of the Swedes, killing their king in battle, and afterwards made a pilgrimage to Rome. He died at Shaftesbury 12 Nov., 1035.

CANUTI, DOMINIC, an Italian painter, whose pieces are preserved at Rome and Bologna. Born 1620; died 1678.

CAPACCIO, JULIUS CÆSAR, a voluminous Italian writer, secretary to the city of Naples, was born about 1560, and died 1631.

CAPASSO, NICHOLAS, professor of law at Naples, was born 1671, and died 1746. He wrote some works on jurisprudence, but is chiefly remembered on account of his Latin and Italian poems, and especially his version of the Iliad in the Neapolitan dialect.

CAPECIO.

CAPECIO, SCIPIO, professor of law at Naples, and author of some esteemed Latin poems, died after 26 Feb., 1501.

CAPEL, ARTHUR, Lord Capel, was the son of Sir Henry Capel, knight, and born about 1600. In the parliament of 1640 he represented the county of Hertford, and distinguished himself by his moderation, though he voted for the attainder of the earl of Stratford, an act of which he afterwards repented. Finding that the parliament went further than he wished, he began to oppose their measures, for which the king created him Lord Capel of Hadham. In the civil war he acted so zealously for his majesty that the House of Commons confiscated his estates. He defended Colchester against the parliament forces, but was obliged at last to surrender upon promise of quarter; notwithstanding which he was committed to the Tower, from whence he made his escape, was taken, tried, and condemned to be hanged, which sentence was changed to beheading, and carried into execution 9 March, 1648-9. His literary remains were published 1654, with the title of 'Daily Observations or Meditations,' to which are added 'Certain letters written to several persons.' Some stanzas written by him while a prisoner in the Tower are printed in the 'Gentleman's Magazine' for 1757.

CAPEL, ARTHUR, earl of Essex. See ESSEX.

CAPELL, EDWARD, a Shaksperian critic, born at Troston, near Bury, Suffolk, 11 June, 1713. He obtained the place of deputy-inspector of plays, which probably turned his attention towards publishing an edition of Shakspeare, on which he spent above twenty years; but though it appeared in ten volumes 8vo., it was without the promised notes, which, however, were published in three volumes, 4to. in 1783. He was also the editor of 'Prolusions; or select Pieces of ancient Poetry,' 1700, and the altered play of Antony and Cleopatra, acted at Drury Lane 1758. A Catalogue of his Shaksperiana, presented by him to Trinity College, Cambridge, was printed in 1779. Died 24 Jan., 1781.

CAPELLA, GALEAZZO FLAVIO CAPRA DE, an Italian diplomatist and historian, born at Milan 1487; died 23 Feb., 1537.

CAPELLA, MAATANUS MINUS FELIX, a Latin writer, was a native of Africa, and flourished in the fifth, or, according to some, the third century. He wrote a work, which has been often printed, entitled 'Satyricon,' a kind of encyclopædia, in mingled verse and prose. The two opening books are occupied by a poem, 'De Nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii,' and the remainder treat of the seven liberal arts.

CAPELLUS, LEWIS. See CAPEL.

CAPGRAVE, JOHN, an English historian, born at Lynn, Norfolk, 21 April, 1393. At an early age he was sent to one of the English universities—it is not evident to which in the first instance, though it is clear that at a later period of his life he was connected with both. There can be little doubt that he took his degree of D.D. at Oxford. He became an Augustinian friar, and in his twenty-fourth year was ordained a priest. Shortly after being created D.D. he was chosen to be provincial of his order in England. At one period of his life he was in Rome, where he seems to have occupied his leisure hours in compiling the Description of the Antiquities of that city, of which work only a small fragment has been preserved. He died at

CAPPE.

Lynn 12 Aug., 1464. Capgrave was justly regarded as one of the most learned men of his time. His works are chiefly theological, consisting of commentaries, sermons, and biographies of saints. To the last-named class belongs the 'Nova Legenda Angliæ,' printed in London by Wynkyn de Worde, 1516. His historical works are—1. The Chronicle of England, London, 8vo., 1868. Edited by Rev. Francis Charles Hingeston, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. 2. Liber de Illustribus Henricis. London, 8vo., 1868. This work was likewise edited by the Rev. Francis Charles Hingeston, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. It contains lives of illustrious persons who bore the name of Henry. 3. Life of his patron and friend, Humphrey duke of Gloucester. This work, it is to be feared, is irrecoverably lost.

CAPILUPI, CAMILLO, a native of Mantua, who died 1584. He wrote a book entitled, The Stratagems of Charles IX. against the Huguenots. His brothers, Leio, Julio, and Hippolito, were also distinguished by their talents. Their Latin poems were printed at Rome 1590. Hippolito became bishop of Fano, and died at Rome in 1580.

CAPISTRAN, JOHN (ST.), was born at Capistran, in the Abruzzo, 1386. He became a Franciscan friar, and laboured with great zeal against the Turks and heretics. He headed a crusade against the Hussites in Bohemia, and was present at the siege of Belgrade, soon after which he died, 23 Oct., 1456. Some of his theological works are extant. He was canonized 1690.

CAPITO, WOLFGANG FABRICIUS, a German Protestant divine, born at Hagenau, in Alsace, 1478; died 1541. He wrote, among other works, a Hebrew Grammar; the Life of Ecolampadius; and an Epitome of the Psalms, which was translated into English by Richard Taverner 1539.

CAPMANY Y DE MONTPALAN, ANTONIO DE, a Spanish writer, born about 1750; died 1815. He wrote The Philosophy of Eloquence; History of the Marine, Commerce, and Arts of Barcelona, &c.

CAPO D'ISTRIA, JOHN COUNT OF, was born at Corfu 1780, and greatly distinguished himself in the diplomatic service of Russia. In 1828 he became president of the newly-established republic of Greece, but was extremely unpopular, in consequence of the general belief that he intended to convert that country into a Russian province. He was assassinated 9 Oct., 1831.

CAPON, or SALTOT, JOHN, a Benedictine monk, who took the degree of D.D. at Cambridge 1515. He took an active part in promoting the divorce of Henry VIII. from Catharine of Arragon, and was rewarded with the bishopric of Bangor 1534. He was translated to Salisbury 1539, and died 6 Oct., 1557. This prelate was concerned in compiling The Institution of a Christian Man, and revised the epistles to the Corinthians for the Bishops' Bible.

CAPON, WILLIAM, a scene painter and architectural draughtsman, born at Norwich 6 Oct., 1757; died in London 26 Sept., 1828.

CAPORALI, CÆSAR, an Italian poet, born 1530; died 1601.

CAPPE, NEWCOME, a Unitarian minister, born at Leeds 21 Feb., 1732-3. He was educated under Dr. Doddridge at Northampton, and finished his studies at Glasgow; after which he became minister of a congregation at York, where he died 24 Dec., 1800. He published some single sermons; a Selection of Psalms for social worship; Remarks in vindication of Dr. Priestley; Discourses on the Providence and Government of God; Discourses on Devotional and Practical Subjects; and 'A connected History of the Life and Divine Mission of Jesus Christ, as recorded by the four Evangelists.' In 1802 were published at York his 'Critical Remarks on many important Passages of Scripture, together with Dissertations upon several Subjects, tending to illustrate the Phrasology and Doctrine of the New Testament,' 2 vols. 8vo. To this were prefixed Memoirs of his Life, by his widow, Catharine Cappe.

CAPPEL.

CAPPEL, LOUIS, in Latin Capellus, a French Protestant divine, born at Sedan 15 Oct., 1585. He studied at Oxford, and afterwards became professor of divinity and Hebrew at Saumur. His 'Critica Sacra' is commended by Grotius. He was also author of 'Historia Ecclesiastica,' and other learned works. In his 'Arcanum Punctuorum revelatum' he proves the novelty of the Hebrew accents, against the two Buxtorfs. This book made great noise in the world. Died 18 June, 1658.

CAPPELLO, BERNARD, an Italian poet, born at Venice about 1500; died at Rome 18 March, 1595.

CAPPER, FRANCIS, a divine, was born 1736, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He obtained the rectories of Monk's Soham and Earl's Soham; and died 13 Nov., 1818. He published 'The Faith and Belief of every sincere Christian proved by reference to various texts of Holy Scripture.'

CAPPER, JAMES, an enterprising English traveler, who died at Ditchingham Lodge, Norfolk, 6 Sept., 1825, aged 82. He was a colonel in the service of the East India Company. His works, which contain much valuable information, are 'Observations on the Passage to India through Egypt and across the Great Desert;' and 'Observations on the Winds and Monsoons;' illustrated with a chart, and accompanied with Notes geographical and meteorological.

CAPPERONNIER, CLAUDE, was born at Mont-Uder, in Picardy, 1 May, 1671; became Greek professor at the college of France 1722; and died at Paris 24 July, 1744. To him the learned are indebted for a splendid edition of Quintilian, and of the 'Antiqui Rhetores Latini.'

CAPPERONNIER, JEAN, nephew of the above, was his successor in the professorship, edited Joinville's History of St. Louis; Casar; Anacreon; Plautus; and Sophocles. Born 9 March, 1710; died 30 May, 1775.

CAPPERONNIER, JEAN AUGUSTIN, nephew of the foregoing, became one of the keepers of the printed books in the Royal Library at Paris. He edited the works of several classical authors. Born 3 March, 1745; died 16 Nov., 1820.

CAPPONI, SERAPHINO ANIBAL, a Dominican friar, author of numerous works on divinity, was born at Bologna 1536, and died 2 Feb., 1614.

CAPRARA, JOHN BAPTIST, cardinal, archbishop of Milan, was born 29 May, 1733, and died 21 June, 1810.

CAPRIATA, PETER JOHN, an Italian historian, was born at Genoa, and died there about 1660. He wrote a History of the Wars of Italy 1613-44, which has been translated into English by Henry Carey, earl of Monmouth, folio, London, 1663.

CARACALLA, MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS,

a Roman emperor, born at Lyons 4 April, 188, and succeeded his father Severus 211, being proclaimed emperor conjointly with his brother Geta. He destroyed the physicians who had refused to shorten his father's life, killed his brother Geta in his mother's arms, and put Papinian, the celebrated lawyer, to death, because he would neither defend nor excuse this murder. Caracalla went afterwards into the East; filled all Alexandria with murders and carnage; basely deceived his allies; and treated his subjects with the most inhuman cruelty. But these crimes were not long unpunished, for, being universally detested, he was assassinated 8 April, 217, by order of Macrinus, who succeeded him.

CARACCI, LOUIS, AUGUSTINE, and HANNIBAL, three very celebrated painters, natives of Bologna. Louis (born 1555; died 1619) had most fire, grandeur, gracefulness, and sweetness. He usually chose devotional subjects.—Augustine, the cousin of Louis, and brother of Hannibal, was born 1557. He painted for some time in the gallery of the Farnese palace at Rome, with the two others, but a disagreement happening among them, he retired to Parma, where he died 1602.—Hannibal (born 1560; died 1609) was the most famous artist of the three, having the greatest depth of design, vivacity of expression, and majesty of execution. He painted the principal part of the Farnese palace—a noble work, for which he was very ill rewarded. These three eminent painters worked jointly, communicating their ideas and discoveries to one another. They acquired immortal reputation, and formed a celebrated school, in which a great number of famous painters were educated.

CARACCIO, ANTHONY, an Italian nobleman, born July, 1630; died 14 Feb., 1702. He composed some tragedies, but is best known by his epic poem, entitled 'Imperio Vendicato.'

CARACCIOLI, CHARLES, a foreigner, and most probably an Italian, became master of the grammar school at Arundel, in Sussex, and published the 'History and Antiquities of Arundel,' 1766; and a 'Life of Lord Clive,' about 1780.

CARACCIOLI, PRINCE FRANCIS, a Neapolitan admiral, born 1770, who, after achieving great distinction in his profession, joined the republican party in 1799. On the restoration of the royal family of Naples, in the same year, he was brought before Lord Nelson, and being convicted of treason in having attacked the Neapolitan frigate Minerva, was hanged at the mast-head of that vessel. This deed, which is a foul blot on Nelson's character, is said to have been perpetrated at the instigation of Lady Hamilton.

CARACCIOLI, LOUIS ANTOINE, a biographical and miscellaneous writer, born 1721, at Paris, where he died 20 May, 1803. He is best known as the real author of the Letters of Pope Clement XIV. (Ganganelli), which have been translated into English in 4 vols. 12mo.

CARACCIOLI, ROBERT, bishop, first of Aquino, and afterwards of Lecce, published theological treatises, and some Sermons, which have been frequently reprinted. Born 1425; died 6 May, 1495.

CARACTACUS, a king of the Britons, who offered a determined resistance to the Roman army, but was at length vanquished by Ostorius Scapula A.D. 47. It is supposed that he died A.D. 54.

CARADOG, a Welsh chronicler, died about

CARAFFA.

1150. A copy of his Chronicle, which commences with the year 680, and has been continued down to 1280, is preserved at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

CARAFFA, ANTHONY, a cardinal, who died 1597. Sixtus V. placed him at the head of the editors of the Septuagint, which was printed at Rome 1587. He also published a collection of the letters of the popes from St. Clement to Gregory VII.

CARAGLIO, JOHN JAMES, an engraver, was a native of Verona, and died at Parma about 1551.

CARAMUEL DE LOBKOVITZ, JOHN, a famous casuist, and zealous defender of the doctrine of chances, born 23 May, 1606, at Madrid. He assumed the Cistercian habit, was abbot of Melrose, in Scotland, then of Dissemburg, suffragan of Mentz, and grand vicar of Prague. He afterwards turned soldier, and was engineer and overseer of the fortifications in Bohemia. Returning to the ecclesiastical life, he was made bishop of Königgrätz, then of Campana, and lastly of Vigevano, where he died 8 Sept., 1682. A great number of his works remain, which display much wit, but very little solidity or judgment.

CARASIUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VALERIUS, born of an obscure family in Flanders, rose to the highest naval dignities. His fame rendered him suspected by Maximilianus Hercules, who condemned him to death; upon hearing which Carausius assumed the title of Augustus 287, went to Britain with his fleet, and compelled Diocletian to acknowledge him emperor. He was murdered 293 by Alectus, who enjoyed the purple three years.

CARAVAGGIO, MICHAEL ANGELO AMERIGI DA, an eminent painter, born at Caravaggio, in Lombardy, 1509; died 1609.

CARAVAGGIO, POLIDORO CALDARA DA, another painter, born 1492, at the same place. From being a labourer he became an assistant to Raffaele at the Vatican, and rose to great excellence in a style peculiar to himself. He was strangled in his bed by his servant 1543.

CARD, HENRY, D.D., F.R.S., was born at Egham, Surrey, 1770, and educated at Woodford, Kensington, and Westminster School. In 1797 he removed to Pembroke College, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1805. He was presented to the vicarage of Great Malvern, Worcestershire, 1815, and to that of Dorrington, Herefordshire, 1822. Died 4 Aug., 1844. He published 'Beauford, or a Picture of High Life, a Novel,' 2 vols., 1801; 'The History of the Revolutions of Russia, to the accession of Catharine the First; including a concise review of the manners and customs of the 16th and 17th centuries,' 1803; 'Historical Outlines of the Rise and Establishment of the Papal Power, addressed to the Roman Catholic Priests of Ireland,' 1804; 'Thoughts on Domestic or Private Education,' 1807; 'The Reign of Charlemagne considered, chiefly with a view to Religion, Laws, Literature, and Manners,' 1807; 'An Essay on the Holy Eucharist,' 1814; 'The Brother-in-Law, a comedy,' 1817; 'A Dissertation on the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, or the Refutation of the Hoadlyan Scheme of it,' 1821; 'The Uses of the Athanasian Creed explained and vindicated,' 1825; 'Letter to the Duke of Wellington on the reasonableness of a Church Reform, and its fitness to the present time,' 1830; and 'A Dissertation on the Antiquities of the Priory of Great Malvern, in Worcestershire,' 1834.

CARDWELL.

CARDALE, PAUL, a Presbyterian divine, was born in Derbyshire in or about 1700, and educated under the eminent Dr. Latham. In 1737 he became minister of a congregation at Evesham, Worcestershire, where he laboured till his death on 1 March, 1775. His works consist of a series of Discourses entitled 'The Gospel Sanctuary;' 'The True New Testament Doctrine of Jesus Christ considered;' and 'An Enquiry, whether we have any Scriptural Warrant for a direct Address of supplication, praise, or thanksgiving, either to the Son, or to the Holy Ghost,' 8vo., 1776.

CARDAN, JEROME, a physician, astrologer, and mathematician, born at Pavia 1501. He studied at Pavia, and after taking his degree of M.D. at Padua, professed medicine and mathematics in several of the Italian universities. In 1552 he visited Scotland at the request of the archbishop of St. Andrew's, whom he had cured of a violent asthma, which had baffled the skill of all physicians. He afterwards travelled through London, where he calculated the nativity of Edward VI. On returning to his native country he continued his lectures at Milan and Pavia, but some offence led to his imprisonment at Bologna 1571. He was soon released, however, and afterwards went to Rome, where he died 1576. Cardan regarded astrology as the first of all sciences, and was, in his own estimation, as well as in the opinion of his contemporaries, the first of all astrologers. Like Socrates, he was supposed to have been attended by a demon or familiar spirit. There are many ingenious as well as whimsical and fabulous things in his works, which were printed at Lyons 1663, in 10 folio volumes.

CARDI, LOUIS, an Italian painter and engraver, born 1529; died 1613.

CARDMAKER, or TAYLOR, JOHN, a native of Exeter, became an Observant friar, and studied at Oxford and Cambridge. About 1535 he became notorious for his free preaching against the power of the Pope. He became vicar of St. Bride's, London, 1543, and four years afterwards chancellor of Wells. In the reign of Queen Mary he was convicted of heresy, and burnt in Smithfield 30 May, 1555. He was author of some controversial pieces, none of which are extant.

CARDON, ANTOINE ALEXANDRE JOSEPH, an engraver of Brussels, born 7 Dec., 1739; died 1822. His son Antoine (born 1772; died 16 April, 1813) was also celebrated as an engraver.

CARDONE, DENIS DOMINGUE, a learned French orientalist, born 1720; died 25 Dec., 1783. He wrote a History of Africa and Spain under the Dominion of the Arabs; Miscellanies of Oriental Literature; and Indian Tales and Fables.

CARDUCHO, VINCENT, another painter, brother and pupil of the preceding, was born at Florence 1578, and died at Madrid 1638.

CARDWELL, EDWARD, D.D., F.S.A., a Church of England divine, was born 1787, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford. He was elected Camden professor of ancient history 1826, and in 1831 was appointed principal of St. Alban's Hall. Died 23 May, 1861. Among his numerous publications are editions of Aristotle's Ethics, the Greek Testament, Josephus, the two liturgies of Edward VI.; 'Coinage of the Greeks and Romans;' 'History of the Conferences and other proceedings connected with the revision of the Book of Common Prayer, from 1558 to 1690; 'Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England; 'Synodalia, a collection of Articles of Religion, Canons, and Proceedings in Convocation in the province of Canterbury from 1547 to 1717; and 'Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, or the reformation of the ecclesiastical laws for the Church of England, as proposed by the chief reformers, and attempted to be carried out in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Elizabeth.'

CARE, HENRY, an English journalist, born in or about 1646. He wrote the 'Weekly Pacquet of Advice from Rome,' when he was deeply engaged by the fanatical party after the popish plot broke out in 1678 to write against the Church of England, then supposed to be inclining towards Catholicism. His breeding, says honest Anthony a Wood, was in the nature of a petty fogger,—a little despicable wretch, and one that was afterwards much reflected upon for a poor snivelling fellow in the 'Observators' published by Roger L'Estrange. After all his scribbling against the Catholics, he was in the reign of James II. drawn over so far to the Catholic party, as to write for the sake of bread and money, and for nothing else, to vindicate their proceedings against the men of the Church of England, in his weekly paper, entitled, 'Public Occurrences truly stated.' This first appeared 21 Feb., 1687, and was continued by Care till his death, which took place 8 Aug., 1688.

CAREME, MARIE ANTOINE, a famous French cook, born 8 June, 1784; died 12 Jan., 1833.

CAREW, SIR ALEXANDER, a gentleman of Cornwall, member for that county 1640. He voted for the death of Strafford, and was appointed governor of St. Nicholas island at Plymouth. In this office he made overtures to deliver up the garrison, but his intentions having been discovered, he was dragged to London and beheaded on Tower Hill 1644.

CAREW, BAMPFYLDE MOORE, an eccentric character, son of a clergyman at Bickley, Devonshire. He was educated at Tiverton School, but withdrew from his parents to associate with gipsies. The adventures of a mendicant had greater charms for him than the splendours of polished society, and Carew, the friend, the companion, the hero of the gipsies, was elected their king. It is said that he was twice transported from Exeter to North America, for enticing dogs to follow him; but so artful were his expedients, that he both times returned before the ship which conveyed him from Europe. In his wanderings he gloried in extorting charity under assumed characters, either as the shattered sailor, the broken soldier, the unfortunate tradesman, or the distressed clergyman. He died about 1770, aged 77.

CAREW, SIR BENJAMIN HALLOWELL, a British admiral, born 1760; died 2 Sept., 1834.

CAREW, GEORGE, earl of Totness. See TOTNESS.

CAREW, SIR GEORGE, a diplomatist, was a native of Cornwall, and brother of Richard Carew, the antiquary. He was educated at Oxford, after which he studied the law in one of the inns of court, was called to the bar, and became secretary to Chancellor Hatton, who procured him a prothonotaryship in his court, and the honour of knighthood. Queen Elizabeth sent him ambassador to Poland; and King James I. appointed him one of the commissioners for treating with the Scotch concerning a union of the two kingdoms. After this he went on an embassy to France, where he contracted an intimacy with Thuanus, to whom he imparted some materials for his history. On the conclusion of his embassy, he was made master of the court of wards, which place, however, he did not long enjoy, as it appears from a letter, addressed by Thuanus to Camden, that he was dead in 1613. Sir George wrote 'A Relation of the State of France with the Characters of Henry VI. and the principal Persons of that Court,' published 1749, at the end of Dr. Birch's 'Historical View of the Negotiations between the Courts of England, France, and Brussels.'

CAREW, SIR NICHOLAS, an English gentleman, was one of the favourites of King Henry VIII., who conferred upon him several honourable preferments in his household, and made him a knight of the Garter. Being, however, charged with engaging in a conspiracy to set Cardinal Pole on the throne, he was condemned to death, and beheaded on Tower Hill 3 March, 1539.

CAREW, SIR PETER, a soldier and politician, who died 27 Nov., 1575, in Ireland, whither he had followed the unfortunate earl of Essex. His life, by John Vowel, alias Hooker, was published under the editorship of John Maclean, 8vo., Lond., 1857.

CAREW, RICHARD, a topographer, born at Anthony in Cornwall 1555, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and afterwards went on his travels. On his return he settled in Cornwall, where he served the office of high sheriff in 1586. Died 6 Nov., 1620. He wrote 'The true and ready way to learn the Latin Tongue;' and translated into English Huarte's 'Examination of Men's Wits;' and also 'Godfrey of Bulloigne,' from Tasso; but is best known by his 'Survey of Cornwall,' 1602, reprinted in 1723 and 1769. The best edition, however, is that of 1811, 'to which are added, Notes by the late Thomas Tonkin, and now first published from the original MSS., by Francis, Lord de Dunstanville. Likewise, a Journal or Minutes of the Convocation of a Parliament of Tinners for the Stannaries of Cornwall, held at Truro, in the year 1710, &c.'

CAREW, THOMAS, a poet, was born in Gloucestershire about 1589, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He was appointed gentleman of the privy chamber, and sewer in ordinary to Charles I., and died in or about 1639. His masque, entitled 'Cælum Britannicum,' was performed before the king at Whitehall 1633. His poems were printed in 1640; again in 1772 by Davies; and 8vo., Edinburgh, 1824, under the editorship of T. Matland, afterwards Lord Dundrennan. They are also included in Chalmers' edition of the poets. Carew's Sonnets were more in request between 1630 and 1640 than those of any other poet of his time.

CAREY, earl of Monmouth. See MONMOUTH.

CAREY, DAVID, a journalist, poet, and miscellaneous writer, born in Scotland 1782; died 4 Oct., 1824. Among his works are 'Pleasures of Nature; or the Charms of Rural Life, and other poems,' 1802; 'The Reign of Fancy, a poem,' 1803; 'Lyric Tales, &c.,' 1804; 'Ins and Outs, or the State of Parties, by Chronobotanologos,' 1807; 'Poems, chiefly Amatory,' 1807; 'Craig Phadrig, &c., 1810; 'Picturesque Scenes; or a Guide to the Highlands;' 'The Lord of the Desert, and other Poems,' 1812; and 'Lochiel, or the Field of Culloden,' a novel, 1812.

CAREY, FELIX, son of William Carey, D.D., mentioned below, was born in 1786, and, following the example of his father, proceeded to India. He died at Serampore 10 Nov., 1822. He was a learned orientalist, and published, among other things, a Grammar and Dictionary of the Burmese language; and the 'Vidyahara-Vouli,' an anatomical work in Bengalee.

CAREY, GEORGE SAVILE, son of Henry Carey, the musical composer and poet, was born about 1743. He was bred a printer, but quitted that business for the stage, on which he had little or no success. Then he became an itinerant lecturer upon heads, and the writer and singer of popular songs; besides which he was the author of some farces, and of the following publications:—'Anecdotes in prose and verse,' 2 vols.; 'A Lecture on Mimicry;' 'A Rural Ramble;' and 'Balnea, or Sketches of the different Watering Places in England.' Died 14 July, 1807.

CAREY, HENRY, Lord Hunsdon. See HUNSDON.

CAREY, HENRY, a musical composer and poet, was the illegitimate son of George Savile, marquis of Halifax. He learnt music from Lennert, a German, and had instructions also from Roseingrave and Geminiani. As a ballad composer he possessed great merit, and his 'Sally in our Alley' was extremely popular. In 1715 he produced two farces, one of which, 'The Contrivances,' had a great run. In 1720 he published a collection of poems, and in 1732 six cantatas. His 'Chrononhotologos,' which appeared in 1734, was a happy ridicule of bombastic tragedy. The farce of 'The Honest Yorkshireman' was also very successful; and the burlesque opera of 'The Dragon of Wantley' still more so. Carey, however, with all his talents, could not govern himself with prudence, and on 4 Oct., 1743, put an end to himself. An attempt was made by his son to prove that he composed the national air of 'God save the King,' but evidently on no grounds of probability.

CAREY, PATRICK. See CARY.

CAREY, WILLIAM, D.D., a Baptist missionary in India, and an eminent oriental scholar, was born at Paulerspury, Northamptonshire, 1761, and died 9 June, 1834. He was professor of the Sanscrit, Bengalee, and Mahratta languages in the college of Fort William. Among his publications are a Mahratta grammar and dictionary; a Sanscrit grammar; a Punjabee grammar; a Telinga grammar; an edition of the original text of the Raymayana; a Bengalee dictionary; and a Bho-tanta dictionary. He also superintended the preparation of the versions of the Bible in several of the oriental tongues.

CAREY, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born 18 Nov., 1700, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He quitted the university on being appointed head master of Westminster School 1803; and on resigning the charge of the school in 1814, he retired to his vicarage of Sutton-in-the-Forest, Yorkshire, and devoted himself to the care of that parish till he was nominated bishop of Exeter 16 Oct., 1820. He was translated to St. Asaph 1830; and died 13 Dec., 1846. His only publication was a sermon, CARGILL, DONALD, a Scotch covenanting divine, who was executed 27 July, 1681.

CARIER, BENJAMIN, D.D., an English divine, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He was one of James I.'s chaplains, and one of the original fellows of Chelsea College. Afterwards he embraced the Catholic religion, and retired abroad, dying at Paris in June, 1614. He published 'A Mistle to his Majesty of Great Britain, containing the Motives of his Conversion to the Catholick Faith,' 8vo., 1614, reprinted 1649. It was replied to by George Hakewell, D.D. Dr. Carier also published 'A Letter of the miserable ends of such as impugn the Catholick Faith,' 1615.

CARINUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, son of the Emperor Carus, who declared him Cæsar 282, and sent him into Gaul. He was slain in Mœsia 285.

CARISSIMI, JAMES, a musical composer, born at Padua about 1582; died after 1672.

CARKESSE, JAMES, a poet, was educated at Westminster School, from whence, in 1652, he was elected to a scholarship at Christ Church, Oxford. It seems probable that he joined the Church of Rome before 1679, in which year he published a curious work, entitled 'Lucida Intervalla: containing divers miscellaneous Poems, written at Finsbury and Bethlem, by the Doctor's Patient Extraordinary,' London, 4to. The British Museum catalogue states that this book was written upon Dr. Thomas Allen.

CARLETON, SIR DUDLEY. See DORCHESTER, VISCOUNT.

CARLETON, GEORGE, an English prelate, was born at Northam, in Northumberland, and educated by the care of Bernard Gilpin. In 1576 he was sent to Edmund Hall, Oxford, but after taking his bachelor's degree, he became fellow of Merton College, and while there was considered an excellent orator and poet. In 1613 he took his doctor's degree, and in 1618 was consecrated bishop of Llandaff. The same year he went to the synod of Dordt, where he supported the order of episcopacy with moderate firmness. In 1619 he was translated to Chichester, and died there in May, 1628. Bishop Carleton was a strict Calvinist, and the author of these works:—'Heroici Characteres;' 'Tithes examined, and proved to be due to the Clergy by a Divine Right;' 'Jurisdiction Regal, Episcopall, Papal: wherein is declared how the Pope hath intruded upon the jurisdiction of Temporal Princes, and of the Church, &c.;' 'Consensus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ contra Tridentinos, de Scripturis, Ecclesiæ, Fide, et Gratiâ;' 'A thankfull Remembrance of God's Mercy. In an Historicall Collection of the great and mercifull Deliverances of the Church and State of England, since the Gospel beganne here to flourish, from the beginning of queene Elizabeth;' 'Short Directions to know the true Church;' 'Oration made at the Hague before the Prince of Orange, &c.;' 'Astrologimania, or the Madness of Astrologers;' 'Examination of those things wherein the Author of the late Appeal (Montagu, afterwards bishop of Chichester) holdeth the Doctrine of Pelagians and Arminians to be the Doctrines of the Church of England;' 'A joynt Attestation, avowing that the Discipline of the Church of England was not im-peached by the Synod of Dordt;' 'Vita Bernardi Gilpini,' which was afterwards published in English; and several sermons. Many of his tracts and letters are to be found in miscellaneous collections.

CARLETON, SIR GUY, LORD DORCHESTER. See DORCHESTER.

CARLETON, HENRY BOYLE, LORD, was descended from the first earl of Cork. His father was Charles, Lord Clifford, of Lanesborough, and his mother was the youngest daughter of William, duke of Somerset. In 1701 he was appointed chancellor of the Exchequer, and in 1708 made one of the principal secretaries of state, in which situation he gave great encouragement to men of genius, particularly Addison. He was one of the managers on the trial of Sacheverell, and on the accession of George II. was created Baron Carleton, soon after which he was made president of the council. He died 14 March, 1724-5, at his house in Pall Mall, now known as Carleton House.

CARLI, JOHN RINALDO, COUNT DE, an Italian antiquary, born April, 1720; died 22 Feb., 1795.

CARLILE, CHRISTOPHER, D.D., of Cambridge, a learned divine, who was collated to the rectory of Hackney, which was vacant by his death, 2 Aug., 1588. His works are, 'A Discourse wherein is plainly proved by the order of time and place that Peter was never at Rome;' and 'A Discourse concerning two divine Positions. The first effectually concluding, that the souls of the faithful fathers deceased before Christ, went immediately to heaven. The second sufficiently setting forth unto us Christians, what we are to conceive, touching the descension of our Saviour Christ into Hell.'

CARLILE, CHRISTOPHER, was born in London in or about 1551, and educated at Cambridge, after which he went to the Low Countries, and served under the prince of Orange for five years, displaying great bravery both by land and sea. On returning to this country he projected a scheme for a settlement in America, but the design failed. Through the influence of Walsingham he was appointed lieutenant-general of the land forces, consisting of above 2,300 troops, in the expedition to St. Domingo, Sir Francis Drake being at the head of the fleet, consisting of twenty-one sail. In this expedition the cities of St. Domingo, St. Iago, Carthagina, and St. Augustine were taken, the success of the campaign being in great measure due to the lieutenant-general's good conduct. Subsequently Carlile obtained preferment in Ireland, but died in London 11 Nov., 1593. He was author of 'A brief Summary Discourse upon a Voyage intending to the uttermost parts of America,' printed in Hakluyt; and of some pieces which remain in MS.

CARLINI, AUGUSTINE, a native of Genoa, who settled early in England, and became keeper of the Royal Academy in London. He was an artist of celebrity. Died 14 Aug., 1790.

CARLINI, FRANCIS, an Italian astronomer, born about 1785; died 29 Aug., 1862.

CARLISLE, ANNE, an English painter, died about 1650.

CARLISLE, SIR ANTHONY, F.R.S., a distinguished surgeon and physiologist, born in the county of Durham 1768. In 1793 he was appointed surgeon of Westminster Hospital, which office he held for forty-seven years. He was twice elected president of the College of Surgeons; was professor of anatomy at the Royal Academy from 1808 to 1825; and was appointed surgeon extraordinary to George IV., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood. Died 2 Nov., 1840. His publications, which are numerous, all relate to professional subjects. Sir Anthony suggested many improvements in surgery; and to his ingenuity and application we are indebted for the introduction of the present excellent amputating instruments.

CARLISLE, CHARLES HOWARD, EARL OF, was born 1629, being the great-grandson of William Howard, third son of Thomas, fourth duke of Norfolk. He had a considerable share in the Restoration, and was, in his capacity of a public minister, well qualified to do honour to the king, his master, who, in 1661, created him earl of Carlisle. In 1663 he was sent ambassador to the czar of Muscovy, to recover the privileges of the Russia Company. He met with no success in this embassy, but, on the contrary, was treated with disregard, and even indignity, which he resented in a proper spirit. The next year he was sent on an embassy to Sweden and Denmark, to cultivate an alliance with those kingdoms. There is an account of the three embassies in print, with the earl's portrait prefixed. This book, which is reprinted in Harris's 'Voyages,' contains many curious remarks upon the countries through which the earl passed. He was afterwards appointed governor of Jamaica; and dying 24 Feb., 1684-5, was buried in York Minster.

CARLISLE, FREDERIC HOWARD, EARL OF, was born 28 May, 1748, and at the age of ten succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father. His mother was Isabella Byron, the sister of the celebrated admiral and navigator. The young lord received his education at Eton, where his contemporaries were Charles Fox, the duke of Buccleuch, and Anthony Storer, with the last of whom he formed an intimate acquaintance. While at school he evinced a taste for poetry, in several productions of promising merit. From Eton he went to Christ Church, Oxford, which he left without a degree. In 1777 he became treasurer of the royal household, and the year following was placed at the head of a commission, the object of which was to effect a reconciliation with the revolted colonies. But just as the commissioners arrived in America, the United States had effected a treaty with France. While on that continent, Lord Carlisle was challenged by La Fayette to fight a duel, for having in his correspondence spoken with the spirit of an Englishman on the treacherous conduct of the cabinet of Versailles. His lordship, in reply, observed that he could not accept a challenge for what he had done in the discharge of his public duty. In 1780 the earl was made viceroy of Ireland. When the French Revolution broke out, he took the side of administration with Earl Fitzwilliam and the Duke of Portland. Though not a frequent speaker in Parliament, he was an able politician, and respected by men of all parties. His taste in the fine arts was evinced in the collection of a noble gallery of pictures, and in presenting to the cathedral of York a window of painted glass. As a poet he is chiefly known by an excellent tragedy called the 'Father's Revenge,' which was submitted to the judgment, and received the approbation, of Dr. Johnson. He also wrote another tragedy, called 'The Stepmother,' and some poems. But his nephew, Lord Byron, treated his noble relative with great asperity in his 'English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.' Lord Carlisle died 4 Sept., 1825.

CARLISLE.

CARLISLE, GEORGE WILLIAM FREDERICK HOWARD, seventh EARL OF, was born in London 1802, and educated at Eton and Oxford, bearing the courtesy title of LORD MORPETH. In 1826 he accompanied his uncle, the duke of Devonshire, on his visit to Russia at the coronation of the Emperor Nicholas. He was afterwards returned to the House of Commons for the family seat of Morpeth; and one of his earliest speeches was in defence of the Russian emperor, who had been attacked by the liberal party on account of the cruelties practised on the Poles after the suppression of the insurrection. In the agitation on the reform question he took the side of Earl Grey; and on the dissolution of parliament, which followed the success of General Gascoyne's motion, he was returned for Yorkshire, which he represented until the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832. He afterwards represented the West Riding from 1833 to 1841, when he was defeated; but he was subsequently returned, on the elevation of the Hon. J. S. Wortley to the dignity of Lord Wharncliffe. Lord Morpeth then sat for the riding from 1846 to 1848, when the death of his father caused his elevation to the peerage. His lordship was chief secretary for Ireland from 1835 to 1841; chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster from 1849 to 1851; and lord lieutenant of Ireland from 1855 to 1858; and again from the fall of Lord Derby's ministry until Aug., 1864, when failing health compelled him to retire from the public service. He died at Castle Howard 5 Dec., 1864. Both as chief secretary and viceroy of Ireland his lordship enjoyed great and merited popularity. He paid great attention to the subject of juvenile criminals, and established an admirable reformatory on his estate at Castle Howard. Besides lectures on America, and the life and writings of Pope, he wrote 'A Diary in Turkish and Greek Waters,' and a work on Prophecy.

CARLISLE, NICHOLAS, K.H., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born in Yorkshire 1771, and died 27 Aug., 1847. In 1807 he was elected secretary of the Society of Antiquaries; and he also was for some time an officer in the British Museum. He published, among other things, a Topographical Dictionary of England and Ireland; Description of the Endowed Grammar Schools in England and Wales, 2 vols.; Collections for the History of the ancient family of Carlisle; Collections for the History of the family of Bland; Hints on Rural Residences; Memoir of William Wyon.

CARLONI, JOHN BAPTIST, brother of the preceding, and, like him, an eminent painter, died 1680, aged 85.

CARLOS, DON MARIA ISIDORE, infanta of Spain, was born 29 March, 1788. On the death of Ferdinand VII. in 1833, he disputed the succession to the throne of Spain, and after a protracted war of varied success and disaster retreated into France in 1839, when he was placed under surveillance by the government of Louis Philippe, and confined to the city of Bourges until 1845, when he ceded his right to the throne in favour of his elder son. Died 10 March, 1855.

CARLSTADT. See BODENSTEIN.

CARLTON, RICHARD, a musical composer, who probably received his degree of Mus.B. at Cambridge. Having taken orders he was presented in 1612 to the rectories of Bawsby and Glosthorp, in the county of Norfolk. I have been unable to ascertain when he died. He contributed a madrigal to 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' published under the editorship of Thomas Morley, 1600; and in the following year he published 'Madrigals to Five Voyces.' This collection, which contains twenty-one madrigals, is one of the rarest of its class, and is not mentioned by Hawkins or Burney.

CARLYLE, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Scotch divine, born 26 Jan., 1722; died 25 Aug., 1805. He published two sermons and two ironical pamphlets on the tragedy of 'Douglas.' He also wrote 'Memoirs of his Own Time,' but they remain unpublished.

CARLYLE, or CARHILL, CHRISTOPHER, an English herald, was son of Sir William Carlyle. He held the offices of pursuivant and herald by the title of 'Carlisle,' and on 21 Feb., 1493-4, was appointed Norroy king-at-arms. He was employed in numerous public services during the reign of Henry VII., and died 8 Jan., 1510.

CARLYLE, JOSEPH DACRE, an orientalist and poet, born at Carlisle 1759. From the grammar school of his native city he removed in 1775 to Christ's College, Cambridge, and after a residence there of about two years, was admitted of Queen's College, where in 1779 he obtained a fellowship. About this time he began to study Arabic, assisted by David Zamio, a native of Bagdad, and then a resident at Cambridge. After taking his master's degree in 1783 Mr. Carlyle left college, married, and obtained some church preferment. In 1793 he took his degree of B.D., and was appointed chancellor of Carlisle. In 1794 he was chosen Arabic professor at Cambridge. In 1799 he accompanied Lord Elgin to Constantinople. While in the East he made excursions into Asia Minor, and explored the site of ancient Troy. After visiting Egypt, Syria, and the Holy Land, he returned to Constantinople, from whence he travelled through Italy and Germany to England. Soon after his arrival, in 1801, he was presented to the rectory of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he died 12 April, 1804. His publications are 'Maured Allatafet Jemaleddini Fili Togrî-Bardii, seu rerum Egyptiacarum Annales, ab anno Christi 971 usque ad annum 1453,' Arab. and Lat., 1792; and 'Specimens of Arabic Poetry.' After his decease was published his 'Poems, suggested chiefly by scenes in Asia Minor, Syria, and Greece; with prefaces extracted from the author's journal,' 4to., 1805.

CARLYON, CLEMENT, M.D., was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, proceeding B.A. (10th wrangler) 1798. In the same year he was appointed one of the travelling bachelors on the foundation of Mr. Worts. The Latin letters which, according to the conditions of the endowment he wrote to the vice-chancellor, are dated Gottingen 1799 and 1800. On his return to England he was admitted a fellow of his college, commencing M.A. 1801, and being created M.D. 1831. He practised at Truro, Cornwall, where he died 5 March, 1864, æt. 87. Dr. Carlyon published, 'Early Years and Late Reflections,' 4 vols. 8vo., London 1836-58; 'Scripture Notices and Proofs, chiefly drawn from the writings of eminent Divines, and applied to the present state of religion in this country,' London, 1838; introductory preface to William Gilpin's 'Life of Bernard Gilpin,' 1854; and 'Precepts for the Preservation of Health, Life, and Happiness, Medical and Moral,' London, 1859.

CARMAGNOLA.

CARMAGNOLA, FRANCIS BUSSONE DI, an Italian military commander, born 1390; executed 5 May, 1432.

CARMICHAEL, FREDERICK, son of Gerrhom Carmichael, was born at Monimail 1708. He received his education at Aberdeen, and was ordained minister at Monimail 1737. In 1743 he was translated to Inveresk, and in 1747 was elected one of the ministers of Edinburgh. Died 1751. A volume of his sermons, which possess great merit, has been published.

CARMICHAEL, GERRHOM, a Scotch divine, was born at Glasgow 1082, and educated in the university there; after which he was ordained minister of Monimail, Fifeshire. In 1722 he was chosen professor of moral philosophy at Glasgow, where he died 1738. He wrote notes on Puffendorf's 'De Officiis Hominis.'

CARMICHAEL, JAMES, a grammarian, was a native of Scotland, but was residing at Cambridge in 1597, when he published 'Grammaticæ Latine, de etymologia, liber secundus, ex vetustissimis aris et lingue scriptoribus depromptus.' It is dedicated to James VI. of Scotland.

CARMICHAEL, RICHARD, a distinguished surgeon of Dublin, was drowned near that city 8 June, 1849. He published an 'Essay on the effects of carbonate and other preparations of iron on Cancer, with an inquiry into the nature of that disease;' 'Essay on the nature of Scrofula;' and 'Essay on the Diseases of Literary Men.'

CARMICHAEL, WILLIAM, bishop of Clonfert and Kilmacduagh 1753; bishop of Leighlin and Ferns 1758; bishop of Meath in the same year; and archbishop of Dublin 1765. Died 15 Dec., 1765.

CARMONTELE, a French writer, known by his 'Proverbes Dramatiques,' was born at Paris 25 Aug., 1717, and died 20 Dec., 1806.

CARNARVON, HENRY JOHN GEORGE HERBERT, third EARL OF, was born 8 June, 1800, and educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. He succeeded to the title 1833, and died 10 Dec., 1849. He was author of a play called 'Don Pedro;' 'The Moor,' a poem; and 'Portugal and Galicia; the Social and Political State of the Basque Provinces, and Remarks on recent Events in Spain,' 1836.

CARNARVON, ROBERT DORMER, EARL OF, general of the horse to King Charles I., distinguished himself greatly in every action in which he was engaged, particularly in the memorable battle of Roundway Down. After he had defeated a part of the enemy's horse at Newbury, he fell by the hand of an ignoble trooper 20 Sept., 1643.

CARNE, SIR EDWARD, D.C.L., was son of Howell Carne of Cowbridge, Glamorganshire, and received his education at the university of Oxford, where he was created doctor of the civil law 1524. He was employed in several embassies, and was knighted by the Emperor Charles V. In 1530 he was King Henry VIII.'s orator at Rome, to plead before his holiness that the king his master was under no legal obligation to make his appearance at the papal court, either in person or by proxy, in obedience to the citation in the matter of the divorce of Queen Catharine. He was also ambassador at Rome in the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, but when the latter determined to abjure the Pope's authority, Paul IV. commanded Sir Edward Carne to lay down his office of ambassador, and to take upon him the government of the English hospital at Rome. This detention of

CAROLINE DE BRUNSWICK.

Carne has been represented by some writers as an unwarrantable exercise of arbitrary power on the part of the Pope; but recent researches have fully confirmed the conjecture of Wood, 'that this crafty old knight did voluntary chuse his banishment out of a burning zeal for the Roman Catholic religion, and eagerly desired to continue there (though sent for to come home by the queen), rather than to return to his own country, which was then ready to be overspread with heresy, as he called it.' He died 19 Jan., 1561, and was buried in the church of San Gregorio in Monte Celio.—Hood; The Chronicle, 6 April, 1867.

CARNE, JOHN, an English gentleman, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, but did not graduate. Being possessed of independent means, he travelled through various countries, and while abroad was ordained a deacon of the Anglican church, though it is believed that he never officiated as a clergyman. His death took place at Penzance, Cornwall, 19 April, 1844, æt. 55. He was author of a volume of poems entitled 'The Indian and Lazarus,' 1820; 'Letters from the East;' 'Recollections of the East;' 'Letters from Switzerland and Italy;' 'Lives of the most eminent Missionaries;' 'Tales of the West;' 'A Tale of Palestine;' and 'Stratton Hill,' a novel.

CARNEGIE, SIR ROBERT, of Kinnaird, a Scotch lawyer and diplomatist, died 5 July, 1566.

CARNOT, LAZARE NICOLAS MARGUERITE, a distinguished mathematician, and one of the foremost actors in the French Revolution, was born at Noye, in Burgundy, 13 May, 1753; and died at Magdeburg, whither he had retired after the restoration of the royal family 2 Aug., 1823. His principal works are 'Essai sur les machines en general;' 'Geometrie de position;' 'Principes fondamentaux de l'equilibre et du mouvement;' and 'De la defense des places fortes.'

CARO, HANNIBAL, an Italian poet, born 1507; died 1566.

CAROLAN, or O'CAROLAN, TURLOGH, a celebrated blind Irish bard, was born about 1670 at Newtown, near Nobber, in the county of Meath. He resided with the ancient family of McDermott Roe, then resident at Alderford, in the county of Roscommon. He died 25 March, 1738, and was buried in the church of Kilrouan. Carolan is one of the greatest poets who have written in the Irish language. The original text of the best of his productions, accompanied by admirable translations into English verse by Thomas Furlong, will be found in Hardiman's 'Irish Minstrelsy.'

CAROLINE, daughter of the margrave of Brandenburg-Anspach, was born 1682. Her hand was solicited by Charles III. of Spain, afterwards emperor, but she refused him, and in 1705 married the son of the elector of Hanover, by whom she had four sons and five daughters. She was crowned queen of England, and during the reign of her husband, George I., displayed great dignity, moderation, and sagacity. Died 20 Nov., 1737.

CAROLINE DE BRUNSWICK-WOLFENBUTTEL, AMELIA ELIZABETH, second daughter of Charles William Ferdinand, duke of Brunswick, was born at Brunswick 17 May, 1768, and in 1795 married her cousin, Frederick Augustus, prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV. The union was a most unhappy one, and the persecutions to which the queen was subjected are matters of history. She died at Hammersmith 7 Aug., 1821.

CARON, REDMOND, or RAYMOND, a Recollect friar, born in Ireland 1665. Being attached to the cause of Charles I., he was under the necessity of retiring to France; but on the Restoration he returned to his native country, and died at Dublin May, 1666. His most famous work, which created a great sensation at the time it was published, is entitled, 'Remonstrantia Hibernorum contra Lovanienses, Ultramontanasque Censuras, de immutabili Regum Imperio, seditiorumque fidelitate, et obedientia indispensabili; ex SS. Scripturis, Patribus, Theologicis, &c., vindicata. Cum duplici Appendice; una, de Libertate Gallicana; altera, contra Infalibilitatem Pontificis Romani,' fol., London, 1665, reprinted in Duperray's 'Traitez des Droits et Libertez de l'Eglise Gallicane augmentée par J. L. Brunet,' 4 vols., 1730. Caron likewise published 'Roma triumphans septuaginta annis quibus hactenus et insolita methodo comparativa, &c.,' 16mo., Antwerp, 1635 [misprint for 1653]; 'Apostolatus evangelicus Missionariorum regularium per universum mundum expositus,' 16mo., Antwerp, 1653; 'Controversiæ genuales fidei, contra infideles omnes, Judæos, Mohametanos, et cujusunque sectæ hæreticos,' 8vo., Paris, 1660; 'Loyalty asserted, and the late remonstrance or allegiance of the Irish clergy and laity confirmed and proved by the authority of Scriptures, fathers, &c.,' 4to., London, 1662; and 'A vindication of the Roman Catholics of the English nation from some aspersions lately cast upon them,' 4to., London, 1666.

CAROTTO, JOHN FRANCIS, a painter, born 1470 at Verona, where he died 1546.

CARPENTER, ELIAS, a disciple of Joanna Southcote, published several fanatical works between 1803 and 1814.

CARPENTER, JOHN, a learned town clerk of the city of London in the reigns of Henry V. and Henry VI. He was designed for the profession of the law, and probably studied in one of the inns of court. On 20 April, 1417, he was elected town clerk of London, and in that capacity rendered great service to the city, which he represented in the parliaments of 1436 and 1439. About the latter year he resigned the town clerkship and retired into private life, though he was still occasionally employed in city matters. He probably died on 14 May, 1441, or 1442, and was buried in the church of St. Peter, Cornhill. By his will he left a benevolent bequest, which formed the basis whereon the city of London school was subsequently founded. He compiled a large volume on matters relating to the city of London, entitled 'Liber Albus.' This has been recently printed. A memoir of the life and times of Carpenter, by Thomas Brewer, was printed for private circulation, 8vo., London, 1856.

CARPENTER, JOHN, D.D., a Catholic divine, educated at Lisbon, was appointed archbishop of Dublin 1770, and died 29 Oct., 1786.

CARPENTER, LANT, LL.D., was born at Kidderminster 2 Sept., 1780, and becoming a Unitarian minister, was stationed successively at Exeter and Bristol. He was accidentally drowned in Italy 5 April, 1840. Dr. Carpenter's works, which are more than forty in number, are for the most part on theological and educational subjects.

CARPENTER, NATHANIEL, a divine, born at North Lew, near Hatherleigh, Devonshire, 7 Feb.,

CARPINI.

1588, and educated at Oxford, where he proceeded to his degree of B.D. 1620. On becoming acquainted with Archbishop Usher, that prelate took him to Ireland as his chaplain; and while there he was advanced to a deanery. Died 1628. He wrote 'Philosophia Libera,' an attack on the Aristotelian philosophy; 'Geography;' 'Achtophil, or the Picture of a wicked Politician;' and 'Chorazin and Bethsaida's woe and warning.'

CARPENTER, RICHARD, a theological mountebank, was educated at Eton School, whence in 1622 he was elected to a scholarship at King's College, Cambridge. He continued in the university about three years, and then going abroad was ordained a priest, and, it is said, became a Benedictine monk in Italy. Afterwards returning to England in the quality of a missionary, and having exercised that function about a year, he was reconciled to the Established Church, and had the vicarage of Poling, in Sussex, bestowed upon him. On the breaking out of the civil war he forsook Poling, and took up the more plausible employment of an itinerant preacher—at that time much encouraged. Not, however, meeting with the success he anticipated, he went to Paris, and again professed the Catholic religion. Returning soon afterwards to England, he joined the Independents, and played his pulpit pranks according to the humour of the times, and became a mere mountebank of religion. Subsequently he took a wife, and resided chiefly at Aylesbury, where he preached till the Restoration, pitted by the wise and considerate, while those who were merrily disposed were much diverted by his spiritual antics and buffoonery. He was alive at Aylesbury 1700. Towards the close of his days this jocose minister of the Gospel began to be very serious, and returning to the Catholic church, died in that communion, and brought over his pretended wife to the same faith. His works are 'Experience, Historic, and Divinitic; divided into five books,' 8vo., London, 1642, reprinted under the title of 'The Downfall of Antichrist,' 1648; 'The Perfect Law of God, being a sermon, and no sermon, preach'd, and yet not preach'd,' published when he was an Independent, 1652; 'A new Play called the Pragmatical Jesuit new-levend'd. A Comedy,' London, 4to., n. d.; and 'Astrology proved harmless, uscul, pious,' a sermon, 4to., London, 1663.

CARPENTER, PIERRE, a learned and industrious Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Charleville 2 Feb., 1697. He had a large share in preparing the edition of Ducange's Glossary published between 1733 and 1736, and also compiled a Supplement to that invaluable work. He likewise published 'Alphabetum Tyroniacum,' in which he explains the Tyronian, or short-hand notes used by the ancient Romans. Died 19 Dec., 1767.

CARPI, JEROME DA, a painter, born at Ferrara 1501; died 1556.

CARPI, UGO DA, an Italian painter and wood engraver, who flourished in the earlier part of the sixteenth century.

CARPINI, JOHN DE PLANO, an Italian friar of the order of St. Francis, was in 1246 sent by Pope Innocent IV. on a mission to the Tartars, who had ravaged Russia, Poland, and Hungary. He afterwards wrote an account of his travels, an English translation of which will be found in Hakluyt's collection. The date of Carpini's death is not stated.

CARPIONE.

CARPIONE, JULIUS, a painter and engraver, born at Venice 1611; died at Verona 1674.

CARPIUS. See BERENGARIUS.

CARPZOV, or CARPZOVIVS, BENEDICT, professor of law at Wittemberg, and the most celebrated jurist of his time, was born 22 Oct., 1565, and died 1024.

CARPZOV, or CARPZOVIVS, JOHN BENEDICT, a theological writer, professor of divinity at Lipsic, was born 27 June, 1607; and died 27 Nov., 1657. He had three sons, who were distinguished authors, viz., John Benedict, professor at Lipsic, born 24 April, 1639; died 23 March, 1699; Frederick Benedict, born 1 Jan., 1649; died 20 May, 1699; and Samuel Benedict, born 1647; died 31 Aug., 1707. There were several other learned men of the same family.

CARR, GEORGE, a divine, born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 16 Feb., 1704, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his bachelor's degree, after which he went into orders. In 1737 he became minister of the episcopal chapel at Edinburgh, and officiated there till his death on 18 Aug., 1776. Three volumes of his Sermons were published in 1777 by Sir William Forbes, bart.

CARR, JOHN, an architect, born at Horbury, near Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1721. His practice was very considerable in Yorkshire and the adjoining counties, where he erected several stately mansions and other buildings, both public and private. He was twice lord mayor of York, and realized a handsome fortune. Died 22 Feb., 1807.—Nat. Cycl.

CARR, JOHN, LL.D., an eminent schoolmaster, was born at Muggleswick, co. Durham, 1732. He was educated at St. Paul's School, London, for the mastership of which he became candidate, but without success. He was at first usher, and next master, of that of Hertford; and by the interest of Dr. Beattie obtained the degree of doctor of laws from the Marischal College at Aberdeen. Died 6 June, 1807. Dr. Carr is known as the translator of Lucian. He also wrote some poetical and other pieces, which possess no particular merit.

CARR, SIR JOHN, a writer of travels, was born in Devonshire 1772, and practised as an attorney in the Middle Temple, London. He received the honour of knighthood from the lord-lieutenant of Ireland about 1805, and died 17 July, 1832. He published 'Fury of Discord,' a poem; 'The Stranger in France;' 'Tour from Devonshire to Paris;' 'The Sea-side Hero,' a drama; 'A Northern Summer, or Travels round the Baltic, through Denmark, Sweden, Russia, part of Poland, and Prussia;' 'The Stranger in Ireland,' which gave rise to an excellent jeu d'esprit, entitled, 'My Pocket Book,' by Edward Dubois; 'Caledonian Sketches;' 'Descriptive Travels in the Southern and Eastern parts of Spain and the Balearic Isles;' and a volume of Poems.

CARR, NICHOLAS, M.D., was born at Newcastle in or about 1523, and educated at Cambridge, being in 1546 nominated one of the original fellows of Trinity College, and in the following year regius professor of Greek. He also practised as a physician at Cambridge, where he died 3 Nov., 1568. Dr. Carr, who appears to have been always attached to the ancient faith, was author of a Latin epistle concerning the death of Bucer; Latin translations of the fourth book of Eusebius's Life of Constantine and of the Olynthiac orations of Demosthenes; and 'De scriptorum Britanncorum paucitate, et studiorum impedimentis oratio,' 1570.

CARR, RALPH, of Trinity College, Cambridge, proceeded B.A. 1599-1600, and afterwards studied the law in the Middle Temple. He is author of 'The Mahometane, or Turkish History,' translated from the French and Italian, 4to., London, 1600.

CARR, ROBERT, earl of Somerset. See SOMERSET.

CARR, SAMUEL, D.D., received his education at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. Having taken orders, he became a canon of St. Paul's. He died 1794; and the following year three volumes of his 'Sermons on Practical Subjects' were published at London in 8vo.

CARR, THOMAS, an English Catholic divine, whose real name was Miles Pinkney, received his education in the English college at Douay, being ordained priest 1625. In 1634 he undertook the project of founding a convent of nuns of the order of St. Augustine at Paris, where he resided, as their confessor, till his decease on 31 Oct., 1674, aged 75. He published 'Pietas Parisiensis, or a description of the hospitals, &c., in Paris,' 8vo., 1666; 'Sweet thoughts of Jesus and Mary, or meditations for all the Sundays and Feasts of our Blessed Saviour and Blessed Virgin Mary; for the use of the daughters of Sion,' 2 parts 8vo., 1665; 'The draught of eternity,' a translation from the French of Bishop Camus, 1632; 'Soliloquies of Thomas of Kempis,' a translation, dedicated to Lady Tredway, 12mo., Paris, 1653; 'Occasional Discourses. 1. Of worship and prayers to angels and saints. 2. Of purgatory. 3. Of the Pope's supremacy. 4. Of the succession of the church,' 8vo., Paris, 1646, chiefly with Dr. Cosens; a treatise 'Of the Love of God,' from the French of St. Francis de Sales, 2 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1630; 'The Spiritual Conflict,' from the French of Bishop Camus, 1632; 'A Christian Institution, or Cardinal Richelieu's Catechism,' a translation, 8vo., Paris, 1662; and a translation of Cardinal Richelieu's Controversies, 1662.

CARR, THOMAS, D.D., a native of Yorkshire, was born 1788, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1813). He got his doctor's degree at Lambeth 1832. He was bishop of Bombay 1836-51, and died 5 Sept., 1859.

CARR, THOMAS SWINBURNE, M.A., for thirty-one years one of the classical masters of King's College School, London, died 18 Sept., 1865, aged 56. He published a number of elementary works on the study of the classics.

CARR, WILLIAM HOLWELL, B.D., F.R.S., was son of the Rev. William Holwell (hereinafter mentioned), and was born 1759. He received his education at Exeter College, Oxford, and afterwards obtained the vicarage of Menhenniot, Cornwall. On the occasion of a large property devolving on his wife, who was the representative of the earls of Errol, Mr. Holwell assumed the name of Carr. Died 24 Dec., 1830. For many years he was one of the most distinguished patrons, as well as an exquisite connoisseur, of the fine arts, and was a director of the British Institution. His own pictures consisted principally of the finest productions of the Italian school, one of which is Leonardo da Vinci's 'Christ Disputing with the Doctors.' This highly valuable collection Mr. Carr bequeathed to the nation.

French Revolution, born 1743. When young he travelled to Moldavia, where he became secretary to the hospodar, and on his return to France published a journal called 'Les Annales Politiques et Littéraires,' for which he was appointed one of the keepers of the National Library. He became a member of the convention, but fell with the party of the Gironde, and was guillotined 31 Oct., 1793. He wrote a History of Moldavia and Wallachia; New Principles of Philosophy; Essay on Aerial Navigation; Examination of Animal Magnetism; Memoirs of the Bastille, &c.

CARRANZA, BARTHOLOMEW DE, a Dominican, born at Miranda, in Navarre, about 1504. He distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and accompanied Philip, king of Spain, to England, where he was appointed confessor to Queen Mary. In 1557 he was consecrated archbishop of Toledo, but in 1559 he fell under suspicion, and was imprisoned by the Inquisition. Though eventually acquitted of heresy, he was compelled to make an abjuration of the opinions imputed to him, and confined in a monastery for life. Died 2 May, 1576. His long persecution excited the pity of the Romans, and Pope Gregory XIII. caused an honourable epitaph to be placed on his tomb. Carranza wrote several works, the most remarkable of which are, Summary of the Councils; a Treatise on the Residence of Bishops; and Commentaries on the Christian Catechism. This last was condemned by the Inquisition, but justified by the council of Trent.

CARRÉ, LOUIS, a French mathematician, born 1663; died 11 April, 1711.

CARREL, JEAN BAPTISTE NICOLAS ARMAND, a French writer and journalist, who is best known in this country by his 'History of the Counter-Revolution in England,' was born 1801, and died 24 July, 1836.

CARRENO DE MIRANDA, DON JUAN, a Spanish painter, born 1614; died 1685.

CARRERA, PETER, an Italian writer, born at Militello, in Sicily, 1571; died 8 Sept., 1647. Among other things he wrote a History of Catania; and a rare and curious treatise on chess, entitled 'Il giuoco de' scacchi,' printed at Militello, 1617.

CARRERAS, JOSEPH, a Spanish priest, who was secretary and chaplain to Catharine of Braganza, the queen of Charles II. of England. Flourished 1686. He sometimes amused himself with poetry, in which he made a considerable proficiency.

CARRERI, JOHN FRANCIS GEMELLI. See GEMELLI.

CARRICK, JOHN DONALD, a miscellaneous writer and journalist, born at Glasgow April, 1787; died 17 Aug., 1837. His principal production is a Life of Sir William Wallace, 2 vols., in Constable's 'Miscellany.'

CARRIER, BENJAMIN. See CARRIER.

CARRIER, JEAN BAPTISTE, an infamous republican, born 1756. He was bred to the law, and when deputy to the national convention was sent to La Vendée with a number of assassins. At Nantes, the scene of his barbarities, he often in one day caused twenty-four persons to be put to death, though young and innocent, and, by a new mode of torment, placed them, male and female together, in the most indecent posture, in barges, on the Loire, and then sunk the vessels in the middle of the river. After perpetrating every crime of cruelty, lust, and avarice, he was recalled, and at last condemned to a deserved death, being guillotined 16 Dec., 1794.

CARRIERA, ROSALBA, a female painter, born at Chiozza 1675; died 15 April, 1757.

CARRIÈRES, LOUIS DE, a French priest of the Oratory, born 1662; died 11 June, 1717. He wrote a Literal Commentary on the Bible, a work highly esteemed and often reprinted.

CARRINGTON, SIR CODDRINGTON EDMUND, chief justice of Ceylon, died 1840, aged 80.

CARRINGTON, FREDERICK G., proprietor and editor of the 'Gloucestershire Chronicle,' died at Gloucester 2 Feb., 1864, aged 47. He wrote treatises on Architecture and Painting for the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge; and descriptions of Gloucestershire and other counties in the Encyclopædia Britannica.

CARRINGTON, NOEL THOMAS, a poet, was born 1777 at Plymouth, and apprenticed to a measurer in the dockyard there, but having a decided aversion to this calling, he joined the royal navy as a common sailor. A piece of poetry which he addressed to his captain led to his obtaining his discharge, whereupon he returned to his native town, and kept a school there with great success till 1827, when being attacked with consumption he retired to Bath, where he died 2 Sept., 1830. His works are 'The Banks of Tamar,' 1820; 'Dartmoor, a descriptive poem,' 1826; and 'My Native Village, with other Poems,' 1830.

CARROLL, ANTHONY, a Jesuit, born in Ireland 16 Sept., 1722; died in London 5 Sept., 1794. His translation of some of Bourdaloue's Sermons, under the title of 'Practical Divinity,' was published in 4 vols. 8vo., London, 1776.

CARROLL, JOHN, archbishop of Baltimore, was born in Maryland 8 Jan., 1736, and educated at St. Omer, where he joined the Society of Jesus. When in 1789 Pius VI. erected Baltimore into an episcopal see, Dr. Carroll was nominated its first bishop, being consecrated by Bishop Walmsley, at Lullworth Castle, Dorsetshire, England, 15 Aug., 1790. He afterwards proceeded to his see, and under his government such was the wonderful increase of Catholicity that Pius VII., in 1808, erected Baltimore into an archbishopric. Died 3 Dec., 1815.

CARON, GUI TOUSSAINT JULIEN, a philanthropic French priest, born 23 Feb., 1760; died 15 March, 1820. He wrote Christian Reflections for every day in the year, and other works of piety.

CARRUTHERS, ANDREW, a Scottish Catholic prelate, was born at New Abbey, in the Stewartry of Kirkcubright, 7 Feb., 1770; nominated vicar apostolic of the eastern district of Scotland 1832; consecrated bishop of Ceramus, in Caria, 1833; and died at Dundee 24 May, 1852.

CARSON, AGLONBY ROSS, LL.D., was born in Dumfriesshire 1780, and educated at Edinburgh, where he became rector of the High School. He published editions of some school books, and contributed largely to the Classical Journal, the Scottish Review, and the Encyclopædia Britannica. Died 4 Nov., 1850.

CARSON, WILLIAM, a poetical woolcomber, born at Yolgrave, Derbyshire, 5 Aug., 1744; died 13 May, 1822.

CARSTARES, WILLIAM, a Scotch divine and politician, born at Cathcart, near Glasgow, 11 Feb., 1649, and educated at Edinburgh and Utrecht.

CARSTENS.

While abroad he was introduced to the prince of Orange, who often consulted him upon the state of Britain. After his return to Scotland, Carstares took orders, but his bias being towards politics, he set out again for Holland. On his way he stopped in London, and being seized as a disaffected person, connected with the Rye House conspirators, was sent to Scotland for trial. Here he was put to the torture, which he endured with fortitude; but afterwards he made a confession, and was discharged. He then went to Holland, and remained there till 1688, when he accompanied the prince of Orange to England, and afterwards was appointed king's chaplain for Scotland. In 1704 he was made professor of divinity in the university of Edinburgh, of which he soon afterwards became principal. When the union of the two kingdoms was projected he supported that measure with great zeal, and promoted it by his interest. Died 28 Dec., 1715. His letters and state papers were printed in 1774, in one quarto volume.

CARSTENS, ASMUS JACOB, a Danish painter, was born at St. Gården, near Sleswick, 10 May, 1754. His father was a miller, but gave him a good education. At an early age he evinced a taste for drawing, which his mother encouraged; but on her death he was placed with a wine merchant, though at his leisure hours he pursued his favourite studies, and with such success that he drew the portraits of his master and family. On quitting that connection he went to Copenhagen, where a picture of Adam and Eve procured his admission into the academy. At the age of twenty-eight he and one of his brothers, who had also learnt drawing, went to Italy; but their finances failing at Milan, they resolved to return home again, and accordingly crossed St. Gothard on foot. On entering Germany, Carstens settled at Lubeck, where he practised portrait painting, but occasionally executed some historical pieces. His chief delight, however, was in allegoric and poetic subjects. From Lubeck he removed to Berlin, in which city he found employment from the booksellers, whose literary works he illustrated with designs. At length he was engaged to ornament the principal apartment at the Derville Place, belonging to the prime minister, by which means he obtained the favour of the king, who gave him a pension. Carstens, now in his thirty-eighth year, went to Rome, where he almost lived in the Vatican, and, by the study of Raphael, relinquished his attachment to allegory. He here painted a number of fine pictures on classical subjects, the most remarkable of which were twenty-four on the Argonautic expedition. In his last illness he painted his Œdipus Tyrannus, from Sophocles, and died just as he had finished it, 25 May, 1798. He was buried near the pyramid of Cestus.

CARSUGHU, RAINER, an Italian Jesuit, author of a well-known Latin poem on the Art of Writing Well, was born 1647, and died 1709.

CARSWELL, JOHN, a Scotch prelate, was chaplain to the earl of Argyll and rector of Kilmartine. He was a minister of the new reformation, and superintendent of Argyll and the Isles. On 24 March, 1566, he was presented to the bishopric of the Isles by Queen Mary. The date of his death is unknown, but that event occurred before 20 Sept., 1572. He was author of the first book ever printed in the Gaelic language. It is a translation of Knox's liturgy, and bears the follow-

CARTE, SAMUEL, a divine and antiquary, born at Coventry 21 Oct., 1652 or 1653, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree 1675. On entering into orders he obtained a prebend of Lichfield, the rectory of Eastwell, Leicestershire, and the vicarage of St. Martin, Leicester. Died 16 April, 1740. He published two sermons; and 'Tabula Chronologica Archiepiscopatum et Episcopatum in Angliâ et Walliâ, ortus, divisiones, translationes, etc., breviter exhibens,' folio. His account of Leicester is in the Bibl. Top. Brit.

CARTE, THOMAS, an historian, was son of Samuel Carte, mentioned above, and was born at Clifton, Warwickshire, where he was baptized 1686. In 1698 he was entered of University College, Oxford, where he proceeded B.A. 1702; but that of M.A. he received at Cambridge 1706. After making the tour of Europe as tutor to a nobleman, he took orders, and became reader of the abbey church at Bath. On the accession of George I. he refused to take the oath of allegiance, and lost his preferment. Being suspected of favouring the rebellion in 1715, a search was made after him, but he escaped; and when the inquiry was over he became secretary to Bishop Atterbury, which connection occasioned fresh troubles, for when that prelate was imprisoned a reward of £1000 was offered for the apprehension of Mr. Carte, who, however, succeeded in getting over to France. While in that country he collected materials for an edition of Thuanus, which he disposed of to Dr. Mead, by whom they were entrusted to Mr. Buckley, who published that author in 1733, in 7 vols. folio. Through this interest Mr. Carte obtained leave to return to England, where he published 'The Life of James, Duke of Ormond,' in 3 vols. folio. In 1738 he announced his 'History of England,' by subscription, towards which the corporation of London agreed to give £50 a year; but after the first volume the order was rescinded, from a disapprobation of Mr. Carte's conduct in relating a story of one Lovel, who was said to have been cured of the king's evil by the Pretender. Notwithstanding this check, our author went on with his work, of which he published three volumes, and left the fourth in such a state that it appeared after his death, which took place near Abingdon, Berkshire, 2 April, 1754. Carte's 'History' is a noble monument of industry and fidelity; but at one time it was almost forgotten, owing to the endeavours of Hume to keep it down, that his own plagiarisms might not be detected. Besides the works already mentioned, he published 'Original Letters and Papers on the Affairs of England,' 2 vols.; 'History of the Revolutions of Portugal,' 'Catalogue des Rolles Gascons, Normans, et François, conservés dans les archives de la Tour de Londres,' 2 vols.; and 'Advice of a Mother to her Son and Daughter,' translated from the French.

CARTER.

CARTER, ELIZABETH, eldest daughter of Dr. Nicholas Carter, minister of Deal, in Kent, was born there 16 Dec., 1717. She was educated by her father, and at an early age became mistress of the learned languages, to which she afterwards added French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Hebrew, and Arabic. Before she attained her seventeenth year some of her poetical attempts appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine, and in 1738 Cave published them, with others, in a 4to. pamphlet. In 1739 she translated from the French 'The Critique of Crousaz on Pope's Essay on Man,' and 'Algarotti's Explanation of Newton's Philosophy for Ladies.' These works extended her acquaintance not only with the learned at home, but abroad, and among her correspondents was the celebrated Baratier. In 1741 she contracted an intimacy with Miss Catharine Talbot, niece to Lord Chancellor Talbot, by which means she became acquainted with Dr. Secker, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury. In 1749 Miss Carter began her translation of Epictetus, which was completed in 1752, and printed by subscription in 1758. In 1762 she published a volume of poems, which she dedicated to her friend, Lord Bath, with whom, and Mr. and Mrs. Montague, she made a tour in Germany the following year. When Lord Bath died, all who knew him were surprised to find that no notice had been taken of Miss Carter in his will; but his nephew and heir supplied the neglect by settling upon her £150 a year. In 1774 her father died at the age of 87. From that time the life of this excellent woman was led in a very quiet tenor, and almost in a state of obscurity till 1782, when, at the desire of Sir William Pulteney, she accompanied his daughter to France. In 1791 Mrs. Carter had an interview with the queen, who paid her particular attention. She died of mere old age, without a groan, at her lodgings in Clarges Street, 19 Feb., 1806. The year after her death appeared her Memoirs, and a new edition of her Poems, published by her nephew, Mr. Montague Pennington; and subsequently her correspondence with Miss Talbot was printed in 2 vols. 4to.; and since that her letters to Mrs. Montague and Mrs. Vesey, in 4 vols. 8vo. Mrs. Carter was intimate with most of the eminent literary characters of her time.

CARTER, FRANCIS, an officer in the army, of whom nothing more is known than that he was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and had been in garrison at Gibraltar. His 'Journey from Gibraltar to Malaga' was printed in 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1777. Some copies have an additional volume, containing a chart, medals, &c. He also printed part of 'An Historical Account of early printed Spanish Books,' but the work was never completed. Died 1 August, 1783.

CARTER, JAMES, an English engraver, died Aug., 1855, aged 57.

CARTER, JOHN, a divine, was a native of Kent, and received his education at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He was for many years minister of Bramford, Sussex, and also rector of Belstead, in the same county. He is spoken of as a man of great industry, charity, and piety. It is related that one day as he was dining with several ministers at one of the magistrate's houses at Ipswich, a very vain person undertook to answer any question which might be proposed, either in divinity or philosophy. A profound silence ensued, till Mr. Carter addressed him in these words:—'I will go no farther than my trencher to puzzle you. Here is a sole; now tell me the reason why this fish, which has always lived in the salt water, should come out fresh?' As the challenger did not as much as attempt any answer, the scorn and laugh of the company were presently turned upon him. Died 21 Feb., 1634.

CARTER, JOHN, an Independent minister, born at East Tuddenham, Norfolk, 27 April, 1749. In 1766 he entered the Congregational academy at Heckmondwicke, Yorkshire, and in 1771 was appointed pastor of a congregation at Mattishall, in his native county, where he laboured till his decease on 29 March, 1816. Besides several funeral and other single sermons, he published 'Short Strictures on Infant Baptism,' 1780; 'Essay on the Use and Abuse of Reason in Matters of Religion,' 1795; 'Thoughts on Baptism and Mixed Communion,' 1805; 'Inquiry into the Origin, Nature, &c., of Messiah's Kingdom,' 1806; and 'The Duty of strict attendance on Public Worship,' 1811.

CARTER, JOHN, F.S.A., a native of London, was brought up to the business of a builder, but without any education. By assiduous application, however, he became well versed in the principles of architecture, and designed, among other structures, the Sessions House on Clerkenwell Green. He was a devoted admirer of the old cathedrals, and consequently a determined enemy to all improvements of them. He wrote a series of papers on this subject in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' besides which he published 'Specimens of Ancient Sculpture and Painting in England,' in 2 folio volumes, and Views in England, in 7 vols. 12mo., the plates being engraved by himself. He next engaged in a work on the Ancient Architecture of England, of which only thirty-eight numbers were published. Died 4 Sept., 1817, aged 70.

CARTER, OLIVER, B.D., a divine, was born in Richmond, Yorkshire, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow. Afterwards he was appointed a fellow of the collegiate church of Manchester, where he was buried 20 March, 1604-5. He was author of 'An Answer unto certaine Popish Questions and Demandaues,' 1579.

CARTER, PETER, a native of Lancashire, became a fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, at which university he proceeded to the degree of M.A. He wrote Latin Annotations on Scton's Logic. It is believed that he was living in 1577.

CARTER, THOMAS, a vocalist and musical composer, born in Ireland 1768; died Nov., 1804. He composed 'O Nanny, wilt thou gang with me?' 'Stand to your guns, my hearts of oak,' and other popular ballads.

CARTER, WILLIAM, a noted printer of London, who at one time was amanuensis to Dr. Nicholas Harpsfield. His employment as a printer, and zeal for the Catholic cause, made him concerned in publishing several books in favour of his party. At length he was tried at the Old Bailey for printing 'A Treatise of Schism,' wherein the English were exhorted to treat Queen Elizabeth as Judith did Holofernes. Being convicted, he was executed at Tyburn 11 Jan., 1584.

CARTERET, SIR GEORGE, was born at Jersey 1599. He entered the navy, and in 1626 was appointed governor, in conjunction with Sir Henry Jermyn, of his native island. At the commencement of the civil war he went into Cornwall, where he offered a brave resistance to the parliament forces, for which he received the honour of knighthood, and afterwards the dignity of baronet. On his return to Jersey he put that island into a state of defence, and acted with so much energy as to be excepted from pardon. After the murder of the king, Sir George proclaimed his son at Jersey, which circumstance induced Charles II. to repair thither, where he stayed some time, and then went to Holland. This highly provoked the parliament, and after a desperate resistance, the island was taken; but Sir George escaped to France, where Mazarine, to please Cromwell, threw him into the Bastille. He afterwards regained his liberty, and remained abroad till the Restoration, when he accompanied the king to England, and was made a member of the privy council, and treasurer of the navy. He was also elected a member of parliament, and a patent of peerage was made out for him, when he died 14 Jan., 1670.

CARTERET, JOHN, Earl Granville. See GRANVILLE.

CARTEROMACHUS, SCIPIO, was born at Pistoia, in Italy, 1467, became professor of Greek at Venice, and ultimately settled at Rome, where he died 16 Oct., 1513. He published a Latin oration in praise of Greek learning; an edition of Ptolemy's Geography, &c.

CARTIER, JACQUES, a celebrated navigator, born at St. Malo, who went to Canada 1534, and gave an accurate description of the islands, coasts, straits, and other places which he had seen there.

CARTOUCHE, LOUIS DOMINIQUE, a notorious French brigand, who was executed 28 Nov., 1721.

CARTWRIGHT, CHARLES, accountant-general to the East India Company, was born 1753, and died 1825. He published 'A List of the Duties on all Goods imported from the East Indies, China, and other parts within the East India Company's Charter,' 8vo., London, 1782; and 'Abstract of the Orders and Regulations of the Court of Directors, relative to Commanders and Officers of Ships,' 8vo., 1788.

CARTWRIGHT, CHRISTOPHER, an English divine, noted for his skill in Hebrew and Talmudic lore. He was admitted a pensioner of Peterhouse, Cambridge, 1617, and graduated B.A. 1620, M.A. 1624, being elected a fellow 1625. Died 1658, æt. 56. He was author of 'The Magistrate's Authority, and the Soul's Immortality, in two Sermons,' 'Electa Targumico-Rabbinica, sive Annotationes in Genesim et Exodus,' 'An Exposition of the Creed,' 'The Doctrine of Faith, in several Sermons,' 'Certamen Religiosum; or a Conference between the late King of England and the late Lord Marquis of Worcester, concerning Religion; together with a Vindication of the Protestant Cause from the Pretences of the Marquis's last Papers,' 1651; and 'Mellificium Hebraicum,' in the eighth volume of the 'Critici Sacri.'

CARTWRIGHT, EDMUND, D.D., younger brother of Major Cartwright, mentioned below, was born at Marnham, Nottinghamshire, 1743. He received his education partly at Wakefield school, and partly under Dr. Langhorne, after which he entered at University College, Oxford, 1760; but in 1762 he was elected a demy of Magdalen College, where, in 1764, he succeeded to a fellowship, and in 1766 took the degree of M.A. That of D.D. was conferred on him many years afterwards. In

CARTWRIGHT.

1779 he was presented to the rectory of Goadby Marwood, in Leicestershire, to which was next added a prebend in the cathedral of Lincoln. In 1785 he went to reside at Doncaster, where his extraordinary mechanical talents first were elicited in various inventions, particularly of a loom worked by machinery, and a machine for combing wool, for which, as well as for an improvement in the steam engine, he obtained a patent. In 1796 he removed to the metropolis, and on the death of Mr. Moore, offered himself as a candidate for the office of secretary to the Society of Arts, but voluntarily withdrew in favour of Dr. Taylor. In 1801 he was invited by the late Duke of Bedford to superintend the Agricultural College which that spirited nobleman intended to establish at Woburn, but the death of his grace put a stop to the project. In 1807 his invention of weaving was beginning to be generally adopted, but as his patent had expired, it was too late for him to reap any benefit from the circumstance. The lords of the Treasury, however, consented to an application being made in his favour to parliament, and he received £10,000 as a remuneration. After this he took out a patent for making ropes by machinery; and it is confidently stated that he was the first who suggested the idea of propelling vessels by steam. Dr. Cartwright was for some years one of the principal writers in the 'Monthly Review,' and he published separately several poems, particularly a legendary tale, entitled 'Armine and Elvira.' In the line of his profession he printed a funeral sermon on the death of the Duke of Bedford, and another on the Fast Day, 1803. He died 30 Oct., 1823.

CARTWRIGHT, FRANCES DOROTHY, daughter of the preceding, was born at Goadby Marwood, Leicestershire, 1783, and died at Brighton 12 Jan., 1863. She compiled a memoir of her uncle, Major Cartwright, 1826; and wrote and privately printed several short poems of great elegance.

CARTWRIGHT, JOHN, a political character, was the third son of William Cartwright, Esq., of Marnham, in the county of Nottingham, and born there in 1740. He was educated at the grammar school of Newark, after which he entered the navy, and rose to the rank of lieutenant; but in the American war he retired from that service, and obtained a commission in the Nottinghamshire militia, of which he became major. At the close of life he was unexpectedly included in the list of naval promotions on the score of seniority; but though he ranked as post captain, he was better known by his military title of major. In 1820 this veteran took a part in the extraordinary election of Sir Charles Wolsley, as legislative attorney for Birmingham, which brought all the leaders under a prosecution. Conviction followed, but Major Cartwright was only fined £100, on account of his advanced age. He was a man of great firmness of principle, but carried his ideas of political reform to an extravagant length. He died 23 Sept., 1824. His publications were numerous, but not calculated to perpetuate his name, being wholly temporary and political.

CARTWRIGHT, THOMAS, the celebrated Puritan, was born in Hertfordshire in or about 1535, and educated at Cambridge, where he pursued his studies with avidity, never allowing himself more than five hours for sleep, a rule he adhered to throughout his subsequent life. He was originally a member of Clare Hall, but afterwards removed to St. John's, and was eventually elected a major fellow at Trinity College. He early imbibed Puritan principles, and his popularity as a preacher was very great. In 1567 he proceeded B.D., and two years afterwards was elected Lady Margaret professor. In his lectures he warmly attacked the Church Establishment, and the result was that he was prevented from proceeding to his doctor's degree, and deprived of his professorship and fellowship. On this he went to Geneva, where he formed a friendship with Beza. In 1572 he returned to this country, and visited Field and Wilcox, two Puritan ministers, who were conhd in Newgate for writing the famous Admonition to the Parliament. Cartwright strongly coincided with their opinions, and published a Second Admonition to the Parliament. This gave rise to a prolonged controversy between him and Whitgift. In 1573 Cartwright went to Heidelberg, and subsequently became minister to English congregations at Antwerp and Middleburg. In 1585 he revisited England, and was sent to prison by Bishop Aylmer, though before long he was released in consequence of the interposition of Lord Burghley. About this time he was appointed by the earl of Leicester to the mastership of the hospital he had founded near Warwick; but the bishop of Worcester soon afterwards suspended him from preaching. In consequence of his known hostility to the Church Establishment, he was convened before the High Commission and the Star Chamber, and committed to prison, from which, however, James, king of Scotland, procured his liberation in 1592. In or before 1595, Lord Zouch being appointed to the government of Guernsey, invited Cartwright to accompany him to that island, where he appears to have remained until 1598. Mr. Cartwright died at Warwick 27 Dec., 1603. A long list of his works will be found in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' Besides many controversial pieces relating to church government and discipline, he wrote a Latin Harmony of the Gospels; commentaries on the Colossians and the Proverbs of Solomon; and a Confutation of the Rhemists' Translation, Glosses, and Annotations on the New Testament.

CARTWRIGHT, THOMAS, a native of Northampton, was educated at Queen's College, Oxford. At the Restoration he was made chaplain to the king, and prebendary of St. Paul's; and on the death of Dr. Pearson, 1686, was raised to the see of Chester. He favoured the proceedings of James II., whom he accompanied to France and to Ireland. He died at Dublin 15 April, 1689, aged 55. His Sermons, &c., have been printed, and his Diary from Aug., 1686, to Oct., 1687, was published in 1843, by the Camden Society, under the editorship of Joseph Hunter, F.S.A.

CARTWRIGHT, WILLIAM, a divine and poet, born at Northway, Gloucester-shire, Sept., 1611, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, where he proceeded M.A. 1635. He took orders three years afterwards, and was appointed reader in metaphysics in the university. In 1642 he was appointed precentor of Salisbury. He died at Oxford 29 Nov., 1643. In his short life he acquired an extraordinary reputation, being esteemed one of the greatest poets, and most eloquent preachers of his time. A collected edition of his 'Comedies, Tragi-Comedies, and other Poems,' appeared in 1647, and again in 1651. The titles of the dramatic pieces are, 'The Lady Errant;' 'The Ordinary' (reprinted in Dodsley's Old Plays); 'Siege, or Love's Convert;' and 'The Royal Slave.' The last was acted before the king and queen at Oxford, by the author and his fellow students, 30 Aug., 1636.—Al. Hist.

CARTWRIGHT, WILLIAM, an English actor, who was one of Killgrew's company at the original establishment of Drury Lane, where he played Falstaff. He was also a bookseller. Died in or about 1686.

CARUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, a native of Narbonne, was elected emperor of Rome 282, and reigned sixteen months.

CARUSO, JOHN BAPTIST, author of several works in elucidation of the history of Sicily, was born at Polizzi, near Palermo, 27 Dec., 1073, and died 15 Oct., 1724.

CARVALHO DA COSTA, ANTHONY, a Portuguese priest, born 1650; died 15 Dec., 1715. He wrote several treatises on astronomy and geography.

CARVE, THOMAS, an Irish ecclesiastic, born at Mobernan, co. Tipperary, in or about 1590. He was a secular priest and apostolic notary; and during the latter part of his life resided at Vienna, where he was one of the vicars choral of St. Stephen's church, the cathedral of that city. In his earlier years he had been chaplain to a regiment, and travelled through many parts of Germany, during the war carried on there by Gustavus Adolphus, of which he has given a short account, as well as of the places he saw in his marches, in his 'Itinerarium.' He died at Vienna 1664, æt. 74. His works are, 'Itinerarium R. D. Thomæ Carve, Tipperariensis, sacellani majoris in fortissimâ iuxta et nobilissimâ Legione Strenuissimi Domini Colonelli D. Walteri Devereux sub Sac. Caesar. Maiestate stipendia merentis; cum Historia facti Butleri, Gordon, Lezley, et aliorum,' 3 vols. 16mo., Mentz and Spire, 1639-46, exceedingly rare; 'Rerum Germanicarum ab anno 1017, ad annum 1641, gestarum epitome,' 12mo., 1641; 'Lyrsive Anaphalæosis Hibernica, in qua de Exordio, seu Origine, Nomine, Moribus, Ritibusque Gentis Hibernicæ, succincte tractatur; cui quoque accessere Annales ejusdem Hiberniæ, necnon Rerum gestarum per Europam ab Anno 1148 usque ad Annum 1650. Editio secunda, multis Additamentis locupletata et à Mendis repurgata, cum brevi Rerum calamitosæ contingentium præcipueque Turcicarum, Relatione à 50 usque ad 60 annum, æneis etiam tessellis insignita,' 4to., Sulzbach, 1666; 'Galatæ, seu de Morum elegantia, lib. 12,' Nordhausen, 1669; and 'Responsio veridica ad illeum Libellum, cui nomen Anatomicum Examen P. Antonii Bruodini Hiberni Ord. Min. Strict. Obvontariæ sub ementio nomine P. Cornelli ô Mollionii editum,' 12mo., Sulzbach, 1672.

CARVELL, NICHOLAS, M.A., of King's College, Cambridge, died 1504. He appears to have been the author of two poems in the Mirror for Magistrates.

CARVER, JONATHAN, was born at Connecticut, North America, 1732. He adopted the military profession, and served with reputation till the peace of 1763. After this he formed the resolution of exploring the interior of America, and to penetrate as far as the Pacific Ocean. This project he partly carried into execution amidst numerous difficulties, and published an interesting account of his Travels in 1778. He afterwards came to England, where he died 31 Jan., 1780. Captain Carver also wrote a treatise on the Culture of Tobacco, and his name was prefixed to a compilation entitled 'The Universal Traveller.'

CARWELL, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, whose real name was Therold, was a native of Lincolnshire, and died in London 9 Aug., 1664, æt. 58. He was the author of 'Labyrinthus Cantuariensis, or Doctor Lawd's Labyrinth, being an Answer to the late Archbishop of Canterburys relation of a conference between himselfe and Mr. Fisher, &c., wherein the true grounds of the Roman Catholique Religion are asserted, the principal controversies betwixt Catholiques and Protestants thoroughly examined, and the Bishop's meandrick windings throughout his whole worke layd open to publique view. By T. C., folio, Paris, 1658. This work was replied to by Dr. Meric Casaubon, and Dr. Edward Stillingfleet.

CARY, Viscounts Falkland. See FALKLAND.

CARY, Earl of Monmouth. See MONMOUTH.

CARY, EDWARD, a Catholic divine, who on the accession of James II. became chaplain-general to his majesty's Catholic forces, and after the Revolution was employed in confidential communication with the friends of legitimate monarchy; died 1711. He was author of 'The Catechist catechized concerning the Oath of Allegiance,' 1710, 1682, under the pseudonym Adolphus Boninus.

CARY, FÉLIX, a French writer, born at Mar-selles 24 Dec., 1699; died 15 Dec., 1754. His chief work is a History of the Kings of Thrace, and of the Cimmerician Bosphorus, illustrated by Medals.

CARY, HENRY FRANCIS, was born at Birmingham 1772, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford. In 1797 he obtained the vicarage of Bromley Abbat, Staffordshire. His translation of the 'Inferno' of Dante in English blank verse appeared in 1805, and was followed in 1814 by his entire version of the 'Divina Commedia.' It is to this work that Mr. Cary owes his literary fame. He afterwards produced verse translations of the 'Birds' of Aristophanes, and of the 'Odes' of Pindar; a series of Lives of English Poets, in continuation of Johnson's, and another of Lives of Early French Poets, in the 'London Magazine,' besides editions of the works of Pope, Cowper, Milton, Thomson, and Young. In 1826 he was appointed assistant librarian in the British Museum, but he resigned that situation in 1832. He afterwards received from the crown a pension of £200 a year, which he enjoyed till his death, 14 Aug., 1844.—Nat. Cycl.

CARY, or CAREY, PATRICK, an English poet, was the younger brother of the celebrated Viscount Falkland who fell at the battle of Newbury. It is probable that he entered the Catholic priesthood and became abbat of some foreign monastery. His 'Trivialis Poems and Triolets,' written in 1671, were published at Edinburgh in 1820, by Sir Walter Scott, who, however, was not aware of the fact that Carey's poems had been printed in 1771, under the title of 'Poems from a Manuscript written in the Time of Oliver Cromwell,' 4to.

CARY, ROBERT, D.C.L., was born at Cockington, Devonshire, about 1615, and educated at Oxford, after which he became rector of Portle-mouth, in his native county, and archdeacon of Exeter. He wrote 'Palæologia Chronica, or a Chronological Account of Ancient Time,' folio, London, 1677. Died Sept., 1688.

CARY, VALENTINE, an English prelate, was a native of Berwick-on-Tweed, and received his education at Cambridge, where he became master of Christ's College. He was preferred to the bishopric of Exeter 1621, and died 10 June, 1626.

CARYL, JOSEPH, a nonconformist divine, was born in London 1602, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He became preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, a member of the assembly of divines, and one of the triers for the approbation of ministers. Besides occasional sermons, he published a Commentary on Job. Died 7 Feb., 1672-3.

CARYLL, JOHN, Earl Caryll, a Catholic gentleman, who was secretary to Queen Mary, wife of James II., and for his attachment was rewarded with the honour of knighthood, and the honorary titles of Earl Caryll and Baron Dartford. He returned to England in the reign of Queen Anne, and was very intimate with Pope. He wrote two plays, 'The English Princess, or the Death of Richard III.,' 1667; and 'Sir Solomon, or the Cautious Coxcomb,' 1674. He also translated the Psalms from the Vulgate; and some of his poems are in different miscellanies. Died 4 Sept., 1711.

CARYSFORT, JOHN JOSIUA PREBY, EARL OF, was son of Sir John Proby, afterwards Lord Carysfort in the peerage of Ireland. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1770; LL.D. 1811). He succeeded to the Irish peerage on the death of his father 1772; was made an earl in the Irish peerage in consequence of his services in the parliament of that country; and in 1801 was called to the British House of Lords by the title of Baron Carysfort. In 1800 he was sent as ambassador to Berlin, and the following year filled the same high station at St. Petersburg. Died 7 April, 1828. He wrote 'A Letter to the Huntingdonshire Committee to show the legality as well as necessity of extending the right of election to the whole body of the people, and of abridging the duration of Parliament,' 1783; 'Thoughts on the Constitution, with a view to the proposed Reform in the Representation of the People, and the duration of Parliaments,' 1783; 'Dramatic and Miscellaneous Poems,' 1810; and 'An Essay on the Improvement of the Mind.'

CASA, JOHN DELLA, archbishop of Benevento, in Italy, and an eminent diplomatist, was born 28 June, 1503, and died 14 Nov., 1556. He wrote 'Galateus, seu de morum elegantia,' a poem, which has been translated into several languages; likewise some beautiful Italian poems; and the Lives of Cardinals Contarini and Bembo; and other works.

CASANATA, JEROME, a learned cardinal, librarian of the Vatican, was born at Naples 13 June, 1620, and died 3 March, 1700. He left his library to the Dominican monastery of the Minerva, at Rome, together with a large sum for the purchase of books. A catalogue of this valuable collection was published by Father Audifredi.

CASANOVA, FRANCIS, a painter, born in London 1727; died near Vienna March, 1805.

CASANOVA, MARK ANTHONY, a Latin poet, born at Rome 1470; died 1527. He excelled in epigram. Many of his pieces are in the 'Deiciorum Poetarum Italorum.'

CASAS, BARTHOLOMEW DE LAS, a Spanish priest, born at Seville 1474. At the age of nineteen he accompanied Columbus on his second voyage to the West Indies, and on his return took holy orders; and, on the conquest of Cuba, settled there to convert the natives, and protect them from the oppressions of his countrymen. The cruelties of the Spaniards affected him so much, that he returned to Europe to lay the case of the Indians before Charles V.; and in consequence of his representations the complaint was discussed in council, and ordinances passed to remedy the evil, but they were never executed. One priest had the boldness to apologize for the barbarities, in a book printed at Rome, which was answered by Las Casas, who was made bishop of Chiapa. He resided in America altogether above fifty years, but died at Madrid 1566. His book on the Destruction of the Indians has been translated into several languages; besides which he was the author of a treatise on the Rights of Sovereigns and Subjects.

CASATI, PAUL, a Jesuit, born at Placentia 1617; died at Parma 22 Dec., 1707. His learning recommended him to Christina, queen of Sweden, whom he persuaded to embrace the Catholic religion. His writings are on mathematical subjects.

CASAUBON, ISAAC, a classical scholar, born at Geneva 8 Feb., 1559. He was educated under his father, Arnold Casaubon, a Calvinist minister, and, at the age of nineteen, was sent to the university of Geneva, where at the expiration of four years he became Greek professor. In 1586 he married Florence, daughter of Henry Stephens the printer, and by her had no fewer than twenty children. After residing at Geneva fourteen years, he removed to Montpellier, where he obtained a professorship; but being dissatisfied with his situation there, he went, in 1598, to Paris, where he had the promise of a similar appointment. This promise, however, was not fulfilled, and though a pension was granted to him, it was ill paid. Being one of the Protestant judges in the conference between Du Perron and Du Plessis Mornay, 1600, he gave his opinion against the latter—a circumstance which led many to think that he would change his religion; but in this they were mistaken. He had, however, an increase of his pension, and the reversion of the place of librarian to the king. On the murder of Henry IV. he came to England 1610. He was honourably received by James I., who admitted him to his table, granted him a pension of £300, and made him prebendary of Westminster and of Canterbury. He died 1 July, 1614, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The list of his works is far too long to be repeated here. It must suffice to mention that, either as editor or translator, he gave to the world editions of the 'Stratagemata' of Polyænus; of the works of Aristotle; of the 'Characters' of Theophrastus; of the 'Satires' of Persius, and of Polybius. All these have been superseded; but the labours of Casaubon were of great service to his successors. Among his other works may be mentioned 'In Diogenem Laertium Notæ,' published under the name of Hortibonius; 'De satyricâ Græcorum poeti et Romanorum satyrâ'; 'Exercitationes in Baronium'; 'De Libertate Ecclesiasticâ'; and 'Epistolæ.' The collection of anecdotes called 'Casauboniana' was printed in 1710; and in 1850 Casaubon's 'Ephemerides' appeared at Oxford, in 2 vols. 8vo., with a preface and notes by J. Russell, D.D.

cated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and in 1628 the degree of B.D. Bishop Andrews gave him the living of Bleadon, Somersetshire, and Archbishop Laud that of Minster, Kent, with a prebend in Canterbury Cathedral. In 1636 he was created D.D. at Oxford, but in the civil wars he lost his preferments, and was reduced to great distress. Cromwell made him large offers to write the history of the war, but he declined to do so; nor would he accept the invitation of Christina, queen of Sweden, to superintend the universities in her kingdom. At the Restoration he recovered his preferments. Died 14 July, 1671. He edited several ancient writers, with notes. The most remarkable of his original works are 'A Treatise of Use and Custom,' 1638; 'De quatuor Linguis Commentatio; Pars prior: de Lingua Hebraica et de Lingua Saxonica,' 1650; 'A faithful Relation of what passed many years between Dr. John Dee and some Spirits,' 1659; and 'Of Credulity and Incredulity in Things natural, civil, and divine; wherein, among other things, the Sadducism of these times in denying spirits, witches, and supernatural operations, by pregnant instances and evidences is fully confuted,' in 3 parts, 1668-70.

CASE, JOHN, M.D., a native of Woodstock, Oxfordshire, studied at the university of Oxford, and obtained a fellowship at St. John's College, but resigned it in consequence of his being secretly inclined to the Catholic religion. He was, however, allowed to keep a boarding-school in Oxford, where he also practised physic. Having obtained a competent fortune by his several employments, he took his farewell of the world 23 Jan., 1599-1600. Dr. Case published 'Summa veterum Interpretum in Universam Dialecticam Aristotelis'; 'Speculum Moraliū Questionum in Universam Ethicam Aristotelis'; 'Sphæra Civitatis: sive de Politia'; 'Apologia Musices'; 'Thesaurus Œconomice, seu Comment. in Œconomia Aristotelis'; 'Reflexus Speculi Moralis: seu Comment. in Magna Moralia Aristotelis'; 'Lapis Philosophicus, seu Comment. in 8 Libros Physicorum Aristotelis'; and 'Ancilla Philosophiæ, seu Epitome in 8 Libros Aristotelis.'

CASE, JOHN, M.D., a noted practitioner in physic and astrology, was a native of Lyme Regis, Dorsetshire. He was looked upon as the successor of the famous Lilly, whose magical utensils he possessed. He wrote a very curious astrological work entitled 'The Angelical Guide, shewing Men and Women their Lot and Chance in this clementary Life,' 1697.

CASE, THOMAS, a nonconformist divine, born at Boxley, Kent, 1588 or 1589, and educated at Oxford. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the popular party, on which account he was ejected, after the Restoration, from his rectory of St. Mary Magdalen, Milk Street, London. Died 30 May, 1682. His works consist chiefly of sermons preached on public occasions.

CASELIUS, JOHN, was born at Göttingen 1533, and became professor of philosophy and rhetoric at Helmstadt, where he died 9 April, 1613. He wrote some learned works.

CASENEUVE, PIERRE DE, a French ecclesiastic, born 31 Oct., 1591; died 31 Oct., 1652. Among his works are an Essay on the Origin of the Floral Games, and a Life of St. Edward, king of England.

CASES, PIERRE JACQUES, a painter, born 1676, at Paris, where he died 1754.

CASSIMIR I.

CASSIMIR I., king of Poland, succeeded his father, Miecislav II., in 1034, and died 28 Nov., 1058.

CASSIMIR II., king of Poland, succeeded his brother, Miecislav, 1177, and died 4 May 1194, aged 77.

CASSIMIR III., the Great, succeeded Ladislaus 1333. He defeated John of Bohemia, and conquered Russia. Died 8 Nov., 1370.

CASSIMIR IV. was raised to the throne of Poland 1438, and died 1492.

CASSIMIR V., JOHN, son of Sigismund III., from a cardinal became a king 1648; and died 16 Dec., 1672.

CASSIMIR. See SARBIEWSKI.

CASIRI, MICHAEL, was born at Tripoli, in Syria, 1710, being a member of the Maronite community belonging to the Western, or Roman Church. He took orders, and after staying some time in Rome settled at Madrid, being appointed principal librarian to the king of Spain. Died 12 March, 1791. He published a most valuable catalogue of the Arabic MSS. preserved in the Escorial.

CASLON, WILLIAM, an eminent type-founder, born at Hales Owen, Shropshire, 1692. He served his apprenticeship to an engraver of ornaments on gun-barrels, which business he carried on in London. He also made tools for bookbinders; and the letters which he cut for this purpose so pleased Mr. Bower, the printer, that he encouraged him to turn his attention to the cutting of types, and assisted him in the undertaking. In a short time his letter was found superior to that of other founders, and was exported to foreign countries, whereas previously it had been customary for the English printers to procure their type from abroad. Mr. Caslon's first foundry was in Helmet Row, Old Street; but he afterwards removed to Chiswell Street. Died 23 Jan., 1766.

CASMANN, OTTO, a German divine, who died 1 Aug., 1607. He was president of the College of Stade, and one of the first of those who were called scriptural philosophers, because they sought all physical science in the Bible. He published several works in Latin.

CASSAGNES, JACQUES, a French divine, born at Nimes 1 Aug., 1630; died 19 May, 1679. He translated Sallust and some of the works of Cicero into French, and composed some poems which are now forgotten.

CASSANA, NICHOLAS, called among painters Nicetto, was born at Venice 1629, and died in London 1713. At Florence he painted a picture of the conspiracy of Catiline, consisting of nine figures as large as life. He also painted a portrait of Anne, queen of England. His brother, John Augustine, who died at Genoa 1720, aged 62, excelled in painting animals; and his sister, Maria Fittoria, painted designs for images of devotion. She died at Venice 1711.

CASSANDER, king of Macedon, after Alexander the Great, died 296 B.C.

CASSANDER, GEORGE, a Catholic divine, born near Bruges 1515; died shortly after 3 Feb., 1566. He laboured all his life to effect a union between the Catholics and Protestants, but without success. His writings, many of which had been condemned by the Council of Trent, were printed in a collected form at Paris in 1616.

CASSANDRA, FIDELA, a learned lady, who died at Venice 25 March, 1558, at a very advanced age.

CASSINI.

She wrote Letters and Discourses in Latin, which have been mentioned with great encomiums by the learned.

CASSENTINO, JACOPO DI, an Italian painter, founder of the Florentine Academy, died 1356, aged 80.

CASSERIO, JULIUS, an eminent anatomist, born at Piacenza 1545; died 1610 at Padua, where he was professor.

CASSIAN, JOHN (St.), a celebrated solitary, was a native of Scythia. He spent part of his life in the monastery of Bethlehem with the monk German. They engaged openly in the defence of St. Chrysostom against Theophilus, patriarch of Alexandria. Cassian went to Rome, and thence to Marseilles, where he founded two monasteries, one of men, the other of virgins. Died about 448. He ranks among the greatest masters of the spiritual life. His works have been several times printed.

CASSIAN, JULIUS, a famous heretic, who lived about A.D. 174. He was the chief of the Docetæ, who imagined that the body of Jesus Christ was only a phantom, or appearance of a body.

CASSIANI, JULIAN, an Italian poet, particularly distinguished by his sonnets, was born at Modena 25 June, 1712, and died 23 March, 1778.

CASSIDY, ROBERICK, archdeacon of Clogher, in Ireland, was eminent as a divine, a civilian, and a philosopher. He also possessed an extraordinary knowledge of the antiquities of his country. Besides part of the Registry of Clogher, he wrote the latter part of the Annals of Ulster, together with many amendments of the first part. Died 1541.

CASSINI, JAMES, the younger son of John Dominic Cassini, was born at Paris 1677. At the age of seventeen he was admitted a member of the Academy, and in 1696 he visited England, where he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. He succeeded his father 1712, and enriched the stock of science with many valuable discoveries. He continued the meridian line measured by his father; and in 1720 published a book on the figure of the earth, which he maintained, in opposition to Newton, was an oblong spheroid. To determine this, the French king, some years afterwards, sent out two companies of mathematicians, one towards the polar circle, and the other to the equator, to measure a degree, the result of which was a decided refutation of Cassini's opinion. Died 16 April, 1756. Besides the work just mentioned, he published 'The Elements or Theory of the Planets,' and numerous papers in the Memoirs of the Academy.

CASSINI, JOHN DOMINIC, a celebrated astronomer, born at Perinaldo, in Nice, 8 June, 1625. He received his education in the Jesuits' College at Genoa, and discovered such a turn for Latin poetry that some of his compositions were printed when he was only eleven years old. He afterwards applied himself to the study of astronomy, and in 1650 was appointed professor of mathematics at Bologna. In 1652 he made an observation of a comet, and the same year geometrically determined the apogee and eccentricity of a planet from its true and mean place, a problem which Kepler had abandoned as impossible. In 1653 he drew a meridian line in the great church at Bologna, on which occasion a medal was struck. In 1663 he was appointed inspector-general of the fortifications of Urbino, and superintendent of the rivers in the States of the Church. In 1666 he printed at Rome a collection of astronomical pieces, and his Theory of Jupiter's Satellites, which induced Louis XIV. to request of the Pope that Cassini might go to Paris. The request was granted, but the time of absence was limited to six years. At the expiration of that term he was commanded to return, and on his refusal was deprived of the preferments he held at Rome. Cassini was, however, sufficiently recompensed in France, by being admitted a member of the Academy, and appointed king's astronomer and the first professor at the Royal Observatory, which was finished in 1670. In 1684 he discovered four satellites of Saturn. He went to Italy in 1695 to examine the meridian line which he had settled in 1653, and in 1700 he continued that through France which Picard had begun. He died 14 Sept., 1712. His works are too numerous for our limits.

CASSINI DE THURY, CÉSAR FRANÇOIS, son and successor of James Cassini, was born at Paris 17 June, 1714. He was employed for many years in perfecting a general chart of France, and in continuing the perpendicular of the meridian of Paris. In 1762 he proposed to the English government the plan of a general survey of the British Isles, which was favourably received, and its execution committed first to General Roy, and afterwards to Colonels Williams and Mudge. Cassini published a great number of pieces in the Memoirs of the Academy of Sciences. Died 4 Sept., 1784. His son, Jacques Dominique, comte de Cassini (born 1747; died 18 Oct., 1845), was also a distinguished astronomer, and completed the chart of France commenced by his father. His son, Alexandre Henri Gabriel (born 9 May, 1781; died 16 April, 1832), became a judge of the court of Cassation at Paris, and acquired a great reputation as a naturalist.

CASSIODORUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, called the Senator, was a native of Squillac, in Calabria, and appointed by Theodoric, king of the Goths, governor of Sicily and privy counsellor. In 514 he was raised to the consular dignity, in which he was continued by Athalaric; but King Vitiges dismissed him from all his offices, on which Cassiodorus retired to a monastery of his own founding in Calabria, where he devoted the remainder of his life to study and religion. He died about 560, aged nearly, if not quite, 100 years. His works, among which are twelve books on the History of the Goths, and several biblical commentaries, were published at Rouen, 2 vols. folio, 1679.

CASSIVELAUNUS, a Briton, who was invested with sovereign authority when Julius Cæsar invaded Britain, B.C. 54.

CASTAGLIONE, JOSEPH, a poet and critic, was a native of Ancona. He became governor of Corneto 1598, and died 1616. He wrote in Latin verse a History of his own Time, and left several critical works, published 1694, under the title of 'Varie Lectiones et Opuscula.'

CASTAGNO, ANDREW DEL, a painter, born at Castagno, near Florence, about 1409. At first he painted only in distemper and fresco, but having learnt the art of painting in oil from Domenico Veneziano, he adopted that method, after murdering his friend and benefactor, that he might possess the secret to himself. This atrocious deed Castagno confessed on his death-bed, about 1480.

CASTALDI, CORNELIUS, an Italian lawyer and poet, founder of a college at Padua, was born about 1480, and died 1537.

CASTALIO, SEBASTIEN, a French Protestant theologian, was born in Dauphine 1515, and died at Basle, where he was Greek professor, 29 Dec., 1563. He was author of a Latin translation of the Bible; 'Colloquia Sacra,' &c.

CASTANEDA, FERDINAND LOPEZ DE, a Portuguese historian of the sixteenth century. His 'History of the Discovery and Conquest of India by the Portuguese' appeared at Coimbra between 1552 and 1561. An English translation of the first book, by Nicholas Licheheid, appeared at London, 1582.

CASTEELS, PETER, a painter, was born at Antwerp 1684, and died at Richmond, in Surrey, 16 May, 1749. Twelve plates of birds, designed and etched by him, were published 1726.

CASTEL, LOUIS BERTRAND, a French Jesuit and mathematician, born at Montpellier 11 Nov., 688; died 11 Jan., 1757. He was a great admirer of Newton, and published 'Vrai Systeme de Physique generale de Newton,' and other works.

CASTELL, EDMUND, D.D., was born at Hatley, Cambridgeshire, 1606. He was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to St. John's College, where he proceeded regularly to his doctor's degree. While at the university he laboured in compiling his Lexicon Heptaglotton, which is a standing proof of his industry, though he ruined himself by it. In 1666 he was appointed chaplain to the king, and Arabic professor at Cambridge, to which were added a prebend of Canterbury, the little vicarage of Hatfield Peverell, in Essex, and the rectory of Wodeham Walter, in the same county. His last preferment was the living of Higham Gobion, in Bedfordshire, where he died 1685. He assisted Dr. Walton in his Polyglott Bible, to which his own lexicon is usually appended. There is nothing more of Castell's in print, except a tract entitled 'Sol Angliæ oriens auspiciis Caroli II. Regum gloriosissimi,' 4to., London, 1660.

CASTELL, THOMAS, D.D., prior of Durham, and an excellent architect, died 1519.

CASTELL, WILLIAM, a divine, was educated at Cambridge, and in 1627 was presented to the living of Courtenhall, Northamptonshire, in which parish he was buried 4 July, 1645. He drew up a 'Petition exhibited to the High Court of Parliament for the propagating the Gospel in America and the West Indies, and for settling our Colonies there,' 4to., 1641, which created much excitement in America; and 'A Short Discovery of the Coasts and Continent of America, from the equinoctial northward and the adjacent Islands,' 4to., London, 1644, reprinted in Osburne's 'Voyages.'

CASTELLANI, the Chevalier FORTUNATO PIO, celebrated throughout Europe for the classic taste with which he adapted the designs of ancient Etruscan artists to the exigencies of modern jewellery, died at Rome 1 Jan., 1862.

CASTELLI, BENEDICT, a Benedictine monk, born at Brescia 1577, assisted Galileo in his astronomical observations. He was afterwards professor of mathematics at Pisa, and then at Rome. Died 1644.

CASTELLI, BERNARD, a Genoese painter, born 1557; died 1629.

CASTELLI, JOHN BAPTIST, an architect, sculptor, and painter, called il Bergamasco, was born at Bergamo 1500, and died at Madrid in 1570 or 1580.

CASTELLI, VALERIO, a painter, son of Bernard Castelli, mentioned above, was born at Genoa 1625, and died 1652.

CASTELLO. See ADRIAN.

CASTELLO, GABRIEL LANCELOT, an antiquary, born 1727 at Palermo, where he died 5 March, 1794. He wrote some important works in Italian and Latin relating to the history and antiquities of Sicily.

CASTELNAU, HENRIETTE JULIE DE. See MURAL.

CASTELNAU, MICHEL DE, a French statesman, born about 1518. He was employed by Charles IX. and Henry III. in many important negotiations, particularly in England, where he was five times ambassador. His 'Memoirs' have been printed. Died 1592.

CASTELVETRO, LOUIS, a learned critic, was born at Modena 1505, and died 21 Feb., 1571, at Chavenna, whither he had fled to escape the Inquisition. He wrote a Commentary on Aristotle's Poetics, and Latin poems.

CASTI, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian poet, born at Montecasone, in the States of the Church, 1721. When young he became professor of Greek and Latin at his native place, which, however, he quitted for Rome, where he was admitted into the Academy degli Arcadi, after which he obtained a canonry in the cathedral of Montecasone. He now travelled into various countries, and at Venice was made poet-laureate on the death of Metastasio, which post he resigned and went to Florence, and from thence to Paris, where he died in Feb., 1803. His principal work is entitled 'Gli Annali Parlanti,' which has been translated into English by William Stewart Rose, under the title of 'Court and Parliament of Beasts,' 8vo., London, 1819. Besides this Casti wrote novels in Italian verse ('Nevelle Galanti'), and a satirical poem entitled 'Tartaro.'

CASTIGLIONE, BALTHAZAR, a nobleman of Mantua, born 6 Dec., 1478. After serving the duke of Milan with great bravery in a military capacity, he was employed as a statesman by the duke of Urbino, and sent ambassador to several courts. He was also engaged in the same capacity by Pope Clement VII.; and Charles V., to whom he was sent as nuncio, had a high esteem for him. He died at Toledo 2 Feb., 1529. His principal work is 'Il Cortegiano,' or 'The Courtier,' which by the Italians is emphatically styled 'the golden book.' An English translation, by Sir Thomas Hoby, appeared in 1561. Castiglione's letters were published at Padua 1700, and his poems are in the 'Deliciae Poetarum Italorum.'

CASTIGLIONE, JOHN BENEDICT, called Grechetto and te Benedetto, a painter and engraver, was born at Genoa 1616, and died at Mantua 1670. His favorite subjects were rural scenes, markets, and animals. He had a son, Francis, who was also a very good artist in the same line.

CASTILLEJO, CHRISTOPHER DE, a celebrated Spanish poet, who died about 1596.

CASTILLO Y SAAVEDRA, ANTONIO DEL, a Spanish painter, born 1603 at Cordova, where he died 1667.

CASTLEHAVEN, MERVYN TUCHET, Lord Audley and EARL OF, was convicted of rape and other atrocious crimes, and justly executed in 1631.

CASTRO.

CASTLEMAIN, ROGER PALMER, EARL OF, was son of Sir James Palmer, of Dorney, Buckinghamshire, and was created earl of Castlemain by Charles II. He was very zealous in promoting the Catholic interest, and this was the cause of his being prosecuted at the time of Oates's plot, when, however, he was acquitted. After James II. ascended the throne, Lord Castlemain was distinguished on several occasions, but principally by being sent on an embassy to Pope Innocent XI. An account of this embassy, illustrated with splendid engravings, was afterwards published in Italian and English by Michael Wright, painter, and major-domo to the earl. After the Revolution his lordship was confined in the Tower for some time, and on gaining his liberty he retired to the Continent for several years, but died in Wales 1705. His works are 'Account of the present War between the Venetians and Turks,' 8vo., London, 1660; 'Catholike Apologie against the libels, declarations, &c., made and published by those of the League;' 'To all the Royalists that suffer'd for his majesty, &c. The humble address of the English Catholics,' 1669; 'Reply to the answer of the Catholique Apology, or vindication of the Catholics of England, with catalogue of the Catholics that died and suffer'd for their loyalty,' 1668; 'A short and true Account of the material Passages in the late War betwixt the English and Dutch,' 1671; 'A full answer, &c., of a seasonable discourse,' 1673; 'The Compendium: or a short View of the late Trvials in relation to the present Plot against his Majesty and Government; in answer to Dr. Thomas Barlow's book, called Popery, &c.,' 1679. Lord Castlemain's writings elicited several replies from Dr. Lloyd, afterwards bishop of St. Asaph.

CASTRO, FRANCIS ALPHONSO DE, a celebrated divine in the sixteenth century, a native of Zamora, and a member of the Franciscan order. He accompanied Philip II. to England, when that prince came here to marry Queen Mary. At the commencement of the persecution of the Protestants, Alphonso, in a sermon preached before the court, astonished his hearers by condemning in the most pointed manner the proceedings of the ecclesiastical courts. He pronounced them contrary, not only to the spirit, but to the text of the gospel; it was not by severity he said, but by mildness that men were to be brought into the fold of Christ; and it was the duty of the bishops, not to seek the death, but to instruct the ignorance of their misguided brethren. Men were at a loss to account for this discourse. It made, however, a deep impression; the execution of the prisoners was suspended; the question was again debated in the council, and five weeks elapsed before the advocates of severity could obtain permission to rekindle the fires of Smithfield. Subsequently de Castro was nominated to the archbishopric of Compostella, but died at Brussels 13 Feb., 1548, aged 63, before he had received his bulls. Father Feuardant published his works at Paris, 1578, folio. The most valued is the Treatise against Heresies,

CASTRO.

Paris, 1534, folio, an historical and controversial work.

CASTRO, JOHN DE, born at Lisbon 1500, went with Vasco da Gama to the East, and published a description of the Red Sea. On his return to Europe he was appointed commander of a fleet, and went with Charles V. against Tunis, being afterwards sent out by the Portuguese as governor of the East Indies. He died at Diu 6 June, 1548.

CASTRO, PAUL DE, an eminent Italian civilian, whose works fill eight folio volumes, died 1437.

CASTRUCCIO CASTRACANI, an Italian general, born at Lucca about 1283. At an early age he devoted himself to a military life, and became a partisan of the Ghibelines, who were opposed to the faction of the Guelfs. When the former were driven out of Pavia, Castruccio entered the service of Francis Guingui, who at his death entrusted him with the care of his son and the management of his estate. This raised him enemies, and his commander threw him into prison, but the people of Lucca soon released him, and in a short time made him their prince. He was also created a senator of Rome. After defending his states gloriously, and defeating the Florentines, he died of an ague 3 Sept., 1328.

CAT, CLAUDE NICOLAS LE, a celebrated surgeon and anatomist, was born at Bierancourt, in Picardy, 1700, and died at Rouen 20 Aug., 1768. He excelled in lithotomy and the treatment of cataracts. His works are 'Traité des sensations et des passions en général,' 'Dissertation sur l'existence et la nature du fluide des nerfs,' 'La théorie de l'ouïe,' 'Eloge de Fontenelle,' 'Traité de la couleur de la peau humaine,' 'Nouveau système sur la cause de l'évacuation périodique du sexe,' and 'Cours abrégé d'ostéologie.'

CATALANI, ANGELICA, a celebrated Italian vocalist, born 1782; died 13 June, 1840.

CATARINO, AMBROSE, an Italian divine, born at Sienna 1487. His original name was Lancelot Politi, which he changed on becoming a Dominican. He was at the council of Trent, and in 1547 was made bishop of Minor, in the kingdom of Naples, from whence he was translated to the archbishopric of Conza 1551. Died 1553. He was author of several works in Latin and Italian on controversial subjects.

CATEL, GUILLAUME, an historian, born at Toulouse 1560; died 5 Oct., 1626. His works are Memoirs of the Counts of Toulouse; and Memoirs of the History of Languedoc.

CATESBY, MARK, F.R.S., an English naturalist, born in 1679 or 1680. He went to Virginia 1712, and while there collected various productions in natural history, which he sent to England. He returned in 1726, and published, in 1732, the first volume of 'The Natural History of Carolina, Florida, and the Bahama Islands;' the second in 1743, and the appendix in 1748. The plates were etched by himself, from his own drawings, and coloured under his inspection. This magnificent work was reprinted in 1754, and again in 1771. The author was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, to whose Transactions he communicated a paper on the Migration of Birds. He died in London 23 Dec., 1749.

CATHARINE OF ARRAGON was the fourth daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, king and queen of Castile and Arragon. She was born 1485, and in her sixteenth year was married to Arth. r, prince of Wales, son of Henry VII., but lost her husband a few months afterwards. The king being unwilling to part with her dowry, obliged his second son Henry to espouse his brother's widow, though the prince was no more than twelve years of age. Soon after his accession, in 1509, Henry VIII. began to deliberate on his marriage, and to devise some means for dissolving it. Matters, however, did not come to a crisis till 1527, when Catharine had borne several children, though only one was then living, who afterwards became Queen Mary. It was the passion for Anne Boleyn that determined Henry to separate from his wife, and he accordingly applied to the pope for a divorce. At first the court of Rome appeared willing to comply with the request, but afterwards it threw out many objections. At last a commission was appointed to examine the validity of the marriage, and Campeggio and Wolsey were appointed the legates, who summoned the parties before them in Blackfriars 31 May, 1529. Here Catharine appeared, and declared that she would not submit her cause to the decision of her enemies; upon which the court broke up, and the king was privately married to Anne Boleyn by the primate Cranmer. Catharine now removed to Amphyll, and the archbishop pronounced a sentence of repudiation, but she, of course, persisted in maintaining her claims. Her last residence was at Kimbolton Castle, where she died 6 Jan., 1536. She was buried with great pomp in the abbey church of Peterborough.

CATHARINE OF BOLOGNA (St.) was born at Bologna 1413, and became abbess of the Poor Clares there. She died 9 March, 1463, and was canonized by Benedict XIII. Her 'Revelations' have been printed.

CATHARINE OF BRAGANZA, Infanta of Portugal, the daughter of John, duke of Braganza, was born 14 Nov., 1638, and on 21 May, 1662, was married at Portsmouth to Charles II., king of England, by whom, however, she had no children. She returned in 1693 to Portugal, where she was regent during the imbecility of her brother Peter. Died 31 Dec., 1705.

CATHARINE OF FRANCE, daughter of Charles VI. of France, married, in 1420, Henry V. of England, and after his death Owen Tudor, a Welshman, by whom she had Edmund, the father of Henry VII. Died 2 Jan., 1437-8, æt. 38.

CATHARINE HOWARD, fifth wife of Henry VIII., king of England, was the daughter of Lord Edmund Howard. She was educated under the care of her grandmother, the duchess dowager of Norfolk; and when she grew up the charms of her person soon captivated the affections of Henry, who, upon his divorce from Anne of Cleves, married her, and showed her publicly as queen 8 Aug., 1540. She was afterwards accused of adultery, and being found guilty, was executed 12 Feb., 1541-2.

CATHARINE DE' MEDICI, queen of France, daughter of Lorenzo de' Medici, was born 1519, and married, in 1534, Henry, duke of Orleans, son of Francis I., by whom she had ten children, three of whom became successively kings of France, and a daughter queen of Navarre. Her husband died 1559. During the short reign of her son Francis she obtained no influence in the cabinet, owing to the superior power of the Guises; but on the elevation of Charles IX. she became regent. It was during her regency that the disgraced massacre of St. Bartholomew took place. She died 5 Jan., 1559.

CATHARINE PARR, the sixth and last queen of Henry VIII., was the daughter of Sir Thomas Parr, and married first to Edward Burghc, and next to John Neville, Lord Latimer, whose widow she was when, in 1543, Henry took notice of, and married her. She was a most accomplished woman, and much attached to the reformers, which induced Gardiner to lay snares for her destruction. However, by her prudent management, she escaped the fate designed for her, even when it was resolved to send her to the Tower. After the death of Henry she married Sir Thomas Seymour, lord admiral of England, but this proved an unhappy union, and she died in childhood at Sudeley Castle, Gloucestershire, 5 Sept., 1548. She wrote the 'Lamentation of a Sinner;' and a volume of 'Prayers and Meditations.'

CATHARINE OF SIENNA (ST.), celebrated nun of the third order of St. Dominic, was born 1347, and made a vow of virginity when only eight years old. She took the Dominican habit some time after, and became eminent for her genius, charity, zeal, and writings. Going to Avignon, in order to reconcile the Florentines with Gregory XI., who had excommunicated them, she pressed the sovereign pontiff so much, by her discourses and solicitations, that she engaged him to quit France and go to Rome 1377, where he again fixed the pontifical seat, seventy years after Clement V. had removed it to France. She died 29 April, 1380, and was canonized by Pius II. in 1461. A collected edition of her works appeared at Sienna in 1707, 4 vols. 4to.

CATHARINE L., empress of Russia, was born in Livonia 1688, and in 1704 became the mistress of the Czar Peter the Great, over whom she gained such an ascendancy that he married her in 1711. At his death in 1725 she was proclaimed empress; but died of intemperance 27 May, 1727.

CATHARINE II., empress of Russia, daughter of the prince of Anhalt Zerbst, in Upper Saxony, was born 1729, and at the age of fourteen married the duke of Holstein, afterwards Peter III. The mental infirmity of her husband rendered Catharine dissatisfied and faithless; and on the death of the empress, in 1762, the young monarch found her an ambitious rival instead of a submissive consort. By a well-managed plot she seized her husband, and, after three days' confinement, he was assassinated in the castle of Robschka, whilst his murderer proclaimed herself sole sovereign empress. Prince Ivan, grandson of Peter, an indolent youth, was secretly cut off, and the empress, sure of the tranquillity of her dominions, imposed on Poland her favourite Poniatowski as king, by the name of Stanislaus Augustus, 1764. Great as a sovereign, but dissolute as a woman, Catharine was engaged for ten years in a Turkish war, and lastly with the Swedes, whilst at home she indulged in the most sensual gratifications in the company of her favourites. The patronage which she extended to genius, and the benevolent motives of her government, will always appear as redeeming features in her character, though the bloody capture of Ismael, and the partition of Poland, must excite indignation against her. She died 17 Nov., 1796.

CATILINA, LUCIUS SERGIUS, a Roman of noble descent, who, in the year 65 B.C., formed a conspiracy, with several dissolute characters, to overthrow the government. The plot being discovered by Cicero, Catilina left Rome, and put himself at the head of an army, whereupon he was declared a rebel by the senate. An engagement ensued on the plains of Tuscany, in which Catilina was slain after fighting desperately, B.C. 62.

CATINAT, NICOLAS, a distinguished French general, born 1 Sept., 1637. He defeated the duke of Savoy 1688, and took the fortress of Ath, in Flanders, 1697. Four years afterwards he was appointed commander of the army in Italy against Prince Eugene, but was obliged to retreat. Died 25 Feb., 1712.

CATO, DIONYSIUS, the name given to the author of a work, formerly much used in schools, entitled 'Disticha de Moribus, ad Filium.' It is not known who was the real author, nor in what age he flourished.

CATO, MARCUS PORCIUS, commonly called Cato Censorius, or Cato Major, was born in Tusculum B.C. 234, and became successively military tribune in Sicily, and quaestor in Africa under Scipio. After going through other employments he was chosen consul B.C. 195, and his next advance was to the censorship, in which he showed his dislike to luxury of every kind. Died B.C. 149. Of his writings there only remain a treatise 'De Re Rustica,' and a few fragments of an historical work entitled 'Origines.'

CATO, MARCUS PORCIUS, commonly called Cato Minor, or Cato of Utica, was great-grandson of the preceding. At an early age he manifested that inflexibility of disposition which marked the whole of his public conduct; and his habits of austerity and frugality led him to embrace the doctrine of the Stoics. He served in the army with his brother Cæpio against Spartacus, and displayed so much valour and prudence as to obtain the commission of tribune in Macedonia. In his civil character he served first the office of quaestor, and his uprightness in administering justice gained him great popularity. He gave his support to Pompey against Caesar, whose designs he considered dangerous to the Roman liberty; yet the civil war which ensued filled him with grief. After the battle of Pharsalia Cato fled to Utica, where, after twice reading Plato's Dialogue on the Immortality of the Soul, he fell upon his sword B.C. 46, æt. 49.

CATO, VALERIUS, a Latin poet, who died B.C. 20, was a native of Narbonensis Gaul, and kept a school at Rome. The only piece of his that has reached us is a poem entitled 'Diræ.'

CATROU, FRANÇOIS, a Jesuit, born at Paris 8 Dec., 1659; died 18 Oct., 1737. He published a History of the Mogul Empire; History of the Fanaticism of the Protestant Religion; and a French translation of Virgil; but his reputation rests chiefly upon the Roman History written by him in conjunction with Father Rouillé, who supplied the notes. It has been translated into English, in 6 vols. folio.

CATTON, WILLIAM, a Franciscan friar and D.D. of the university of Cambridge, flourished 1530. He wrote 'Super Magistrum Sententiarum;' and 'Questiones Theologicæ.'

CATULLUS, CAIUS VALERIUS, a Roman poet, born in the peninsula Sirmio, in the territory of Verona, B.C. 86. He was invited to Rome in early youth, and there wasted much of his fortune in dissipation. He accompanied Caius Memmius, the patron of Lucretius, to the province of Bithynia, but did not thereby derive the pecuniary or other benefits which he expected. After his return to Italy his time seems to have been passed in idleness or in licentious amours in his costly residence at Tibur, or his delicious villa on the peninsula of Sirmio. He was on terms of intimacy with Cicero. His death took place when he was about thirty years old. His works, which consist of odes, songs, satires, and epigrams, have been frequently printed, usually with those of Tibullus and Propertius. They have been rendered into English verse by Dr. Nott and the Hon. George Lamb, and into English prose by W. E. Kelly.

CATZ, or CATS, JAMES, a Dutch lawyer, politician, and poet, born 1577; died 12 Sept., 1660. He came to England first to consult Dr. Butler in a hectic case, and twice afterwards in the capacity of ambassador, in the reign of Charles I. and in the protectorate of Cromwell. He was in this country at the time of the engagement between Blake and Van Tromp, and soon afterwards retired to Chelsea, where his lodgings, and those of two others who were associated with him in the embassy, were surrounded by soldiers. This greatly alarmed them; but, as Cromwell told Catz, when he complained of the supposed outrage, the object of the soldiers was to prevent the ambassadors being torn to pieces by the mob, who were extremely exasperated against the Dutch. Catz and his colleagues were, thereupon, sent secretly away, with great care and despatch, by command of the Protector.

CAVALIER.

CAUNTER, JOHN HOBART, B.D., was born at Dittisham, Devonshire, 21 July, 1794, and it is believed was originally a military officer, and served in India. Having taken orders, he officiated for nineteen years as minister of St. Paul's Chapel, Foley Place, London, but in 1846 he took a lease of a proprietary chapel at Kennington. He held for a short time the rectory of Hailsham, Sussex, and was also chaplain to the earl of Thanet. Died 14 Dec., 1851. His chief works are 'The Island Bride, in six cantos' 'Sermons, 3 vols.;' 'St. Leon,' a poem; 'Posthumous Records of a London Clergyman;' 'Illustrations of the Bible,' 2 vols.;" 'The Romance of History: India,' 1836; 'The Fellow Commoner,' a novel; 'The Poetry of the Pentateuch,' 2 vols. From 1830 to 1838 he wrote the letter-press of 'The Oriental Annual.'

CAURROY, FRANÇOIS EUSTACHE DU, a French musician, who composed a much-admired Mass for the Dead, was born 1549, and died 7 Aug., 1609.

CAUSSIN, NICOLAS, a Jesuit, born at Troyes 1583, became confessor to Louis XIII. He opposed Richelieu, by whom he was dismissed from attendance on the king's person. He returned to Paris after the cardinal's death, and died 2 July, 1651. His book, 'De Sacra et Profana Eloquentia,' is well known; and his 'Cour Sainte' has been translated into English by Sir Thomas Hawkins.

CAVAIGNAC, LOUIS EUGENE, a French general and patriot, born at Paris 15 Oct., 1802. In the revolution of 1848 he was appointed minister of war. On the outbreak of June 22, the National Assembly passed a resolution declaring Paris in a state of siege, and nominated Cavaignac dictator, with absolute and unlimited powers. After four days' fighting in the streets, during which the killed and wounded on both sides amounted to above 8000, Cavaignac found himself the absolute disposer of the destinies of Paris and of France. Had he been capable of mere selfish ambition he might doubtless have secured for himself, for a time at least, the possession of unlimited authority. He was true, however, to his republican principles, and laid down his dictatorship, like some ancient Roman, as soon as he had pacified the capital. After protracted discussions the National Assembly resolved that a president should be elected by universal suffrage. Cavaignac was put forward by the middle-class republicans. The result was that 5,534,520 votes were recorded for Louis Napoleon, and only 1,448,302 for Cavaignac. On laying down his extraordinary powers Cavaignac received the thanks of the National Assembly, and the compliments of his successor. When Louis Napoleon executed his coup d'état in 1851 one of his precautions was to arrest Cavaignac. The general was, however, released after a brief detention, and resided in Paris till his death on 28 Oct., 1857.

CAVALCANTI, BARTHOLOMEW, a Florentine, who was employed by Paul III. in some important embassies, and was author of excellent treatises on rhetoric, and on the best forms of a republic. Born 1503; died 9 Dec., 1562.

CAVALCANTI, GUIDO, a Florentine poet, who died 1300. His 'Canzone d'Amore,' has been often published.

CAVALIER, JEAN, son of a peasant in the mountains of the Cevennes, was born 1679, and became famous for his bravery in the wars of the Camisards against Louis XIV. Subsequently he came to England; was appointed governor of Jersey; and died at Chelsea in May, 1740. While in this country he was one of the leaders of a set of fanatics called 'French Prophets.' His 'Memoirs of the Wars of the Cevennes' were published at Dublin in 1726.

CAVALIERI, BONAVENTURE, a famous professor of mathematics at Bologna, was born 1598, and died 3 Dec., 1647. He wrote several works on trigonometry and astronomy.

CAVALLINI, PETER, a painter and sculptor, born at Rome 1259; died 1344.

CAVALLO, TIBERIUS, F.R.S., an eminent philosopher, was born at Naples 1749, but in 1771 settled in London, where he died 6 Dec., 1809. He published treatises on electricity, magnetism, and the nature and properties of air; 'The History and Practice of Aerostation'; and a Description of the Barometrometer invented by him.

CAVANILLES, ANTONY JOSEPH, a Spanish poet and writer on botany, was born at Valencia 19 Jan., 1745, and died at Madrid Aug., 1804.

CAVE, EDWARD, a printer, to whom the literary world is under great obligations, was born at Newton, Warwickshire, 29 Feb., 1691. He was educated at Rugby school, on leaving which he became clerk to a collector in the Exchequer, but soon left that situation, and came to London, where he put himself apprentice to a printer. On the expiration of his time he married and obtained a place in the post-office, though he still continued at intervals to follow his business. He corrected the 'Gradus ad Parnassum,' and wrote for the newspapers. On being dismissed from his place for exposing abuses in the privilege of franking, he set up 'The Gentleman's Magazine,' which had great success, and will ever reflect honour on its projector. Cave died 10 Jan., 1754.

CAVE, WILLIAM, D.D., was born 30 Dec., 1637, at Pockwell, Leicestershire, of which parish his father was rector. In 1653 he was entered of St. John's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.A. 1660. In 1662 he was presented to the vicarage of Islington, in Middlesex, and some time after became chaplain to the king. He took his doctor's degree 1672, and in 1679 was collated to the rectory of All-Hallows the Great, Thames Street. In 1684 he was installed canon of Windsor. He resigned his living of All-Hallows in 1689, and that of Islington in 1691; but the year preceding he had been admitted to the vicarage of Isleworth. Died 4 Aug., 1713. His chief works are, 'Primitive Christianity'; 'Tabulæ Ecclesiasticæ'; 'Antiquitates Apostolicæ'; or the Lives, Acts, and Martyrdoms of the Primitive Fathers; 'Dissertation on the Government of the Ancient Church'; 'Ecclesiastical, or the Lives of the Fathers of the fourth Century'; 'Chartophylax Ecclesiasticus'; and 'Scriptorium Ecclesiasticorum Historia Literaria,' folio, 2 vols., 1688-98. This, which is his greatest performance, was reprinted at Oxford, 1743.

CAVEDONE, JACOPO, an historical painter, born at Sassuolo, near Modena, 1580; died at Bologna 1600.

sented Derbyshire, and afterwards Derby, in several parliaments. In the action of St. Cas, 1758, he was taken prisoner; and when permitted to return to his country, on his parole, he at first refused, lest his voting in the House of Commons should be regarded as a violation of his parole. He died at Twickenham 1803.

CAVENDISH, GEORGE, an English gentleman, who, after studying at Cambridge, became about 1519 one of the gentlemen ushers in the service of Cardinal Wolsey, to whom he adhered with great fidelity. He composed an able and interesting Life of Wolsey, which for many years was attributed to the author's younger brother, Sir William Cavendish. The claims of George Cavendish were, however, successfully vindicated in a masterly work by the Rev. Joseph Hunter, first published in 1814. The best editions of the Life of Wolsey are those by S. W. Singer and John Holmes. In the former will be found some poems by Cavendish, entitled 'Metrical Visions concerning the fortunes and fall of the most eminent persons of his time.' It should be mentioned that Cavendish was zealous for the old profession of religion, and regarded the accession of Elizabeth as an irreparable national calamity. Died about 1562.

CAVENDISH, Sir HENRY, son of Sir Henry Cavendish, baronet, was born 13 Sept., 1732. For some years he was member of parliament for Lostwithiel in Cornwall. He succeeded to the baronetcy 1776, and three years afterwards was appointed receiver-general for Ireland, and a member of the privy council in that country. His death occurred at Black Rock, near Dublin, 3 Aug., 1804. Sir Henry was an adept in writing Gurney's system of shorthand, and took copious notes of the debates in what has been termed the unreported parliament, from 10 May, 1768, to 13 June, 1774. The manuscripts, consisting of 48 volumes, are now in the British Museum (MS. Egerton, 215-262). Mr. J. Wright published 'Debates of the House of Commons, 1774, on the Bill for the Government of Canada,' drawn up from the notes of Sir H. Cavendish, 8vo., London, 1839. Mr. Wright also published 'Sir Henry Cavendish's Notes of the Debates of the House of Commons from 10 May, 1768, to 3 May, 1770,' 8vo., London, 1841. A second volume was commenced, but was not proceeded with beyond the eighth part, which ends on 27 March, 1771.

CAVENDISH, HENRY, son of Lord Charles Cavendish (brother to the third duke of Devonshire) and the Lady Anne Grey, third daughter of Henry, duke of Kent, was born at Nice 10 Oct., 1731. He received his education, first under Dr. Newcome at Hackney, and next at Cambridge. He devoted himself to scientific pursuits, particularly chemistry and natural philosophy. In 1766 he ascertained the extreme levity of inflammable air, now called hydrogen gas, which discovery has given rise to many experiments, especially in aerial navigation. He also made the important discovery of the composition of water by the union of two airs, which laid the foundation of the modern system of chemistry. He was also an excellent mathematician and astronomer, as his valuable papers in the Philosophical Transactions abundantly prove. He was a man of extreme modesty, and reserved even to his own relations; so that by living a recluse life, and never marrying, his property accumulated to the sum of one million two hundred thousand pounds. He died at his house on Clapham Common 24 Feb., 1810. His Life, by J. Dalton, was published by the Cavendish Society, 8vo., London, 1854.

CAVENDISH, Lord JOHN, was son of the fourth duke of Devonshire. He was a very independent nobleman, and trod evenly in the line of his illustrious ancestors. In the administration under the marquis of Rockingham, in 1765, he was appointed one of the lords of the treasury, and during the American war he constantly opposed Lord North. On the resignation of that nobleman he came into office as chancellor of the Exchequer, but on the death of the marquis of Rockingham soon afterwards, and the appointment of the earl of Shelburne, he and his friends resigned their places. His lordship then became one of the famous coalition, against whose united efforts the new administration could not stand. He, therefore, once more entered into office as chancellor of the Exchequer, but the ministry were soon dismissed. From that time he continued in opposition. Died 19 Dec., 1796.

CAVENDISH, MARGARET, duchess of Newcastle. See NEWCASTLE.

CAVENDISH, RICHARD, brother of Thomas, the circumnavigator, was born in Suffolk, and educated at Cambridge, after which he engaged in politics, and represented Denbigh in parliament. He was author of an English translation of Euclid, and 'The Image of Nature and Grace, conteyning the whole course and condition of mans estate,' 8vo., London, n. d., and 1574. Died about 1600.

CAVENDISH, THOMAS, the circumnavigator, was born in Suffolk 1500, and after studying at the university of Cambridge, which, however, he left without taking a degree, he accompanied the expedition sent by Sir Walter Raleigh to Virginia, under the command of Sir Richard Grenville. On returning home he himself planned a predatory expedition to the New World. Accordingly he obtained letters of marque, and fitted out three ships, with which he sailed from Plymouth 21 July, 1586. On the 16th Dec. he fell in with the coast of Patagonia, and the next day came to an harbour, which he named Port Desire. Thence he proceeded to Cape Lucas, in California, where he captured a Spanish vessel, the Santa Anna, having on board a great quantity of treasure. He now set sail for England, and arrived at Plymouth 9 Sept., 1588, having circumnavigated the globe in two years and fifty days. Cavendish was the third person who sailed round the world, and he accomplished the undertaking in less time than either of his predecessors. In 1591 he set out on another expedition to the South Sea, but it proved a very disastrous one. Those of his crew who did not succumb to disease mutinied against their commander, who died of a broken heart 1592, but whether afloat or ashore is uncertain. Cavendish's account of his last Voyage is printed in Purchas his Pilgrimes. From him 'Cavendish' tobacco derives its name.

CAVENDISH, WILLIAM, duke of Devonshire. See DEVONSHIRE.

CAVENDISH, WILLIAM, duke of Newcastle. See NEWCASTLE.

CAVOUR, Count CAMILLO BENSO DI, an Italian statesman, premier of the newly-constituted kingdom of Italy, was born 10 Aug., 1810, at Turin, where he died 6 June, 1861. The main objects of his life were the unification of Italy and the spoliation of the Christian Church.

CAW, JOHN YOUNG, F.R.S., F.S.A., was born in Perth about 1810, and educated at the university of St. Andrew's and at Trinity College, Cambridge. Subsequently he became connected with the Bank of Manchester, both in its head office and in its Stockport branch. On the establishment of the Manchester and Salford Bank he became connected with it, and so continued till his death, on 22 Oct., 1858. He was author of several works on banking.

CAWDREY, DANIEL, a nonconformist, educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and ejected from his living of Dilling, in Northamptonshire. He was a member of the Westminster Assembly of Divines, and wrote sermons, treatises, and pieces against the Established Church. Died Oct., 1664.

CAWTHORN, JAMES, a poet, born at Sheffield 4 Nov., 1719. He was educated at the grammar school of his native town, and afterwards at that of Kirkby-Lonsdale, Westmorland. In 1758 he was entered at Clare Hall, Cambridge, but did not take any degree there, though he subsequently obtained that of M.A. from some other university. On leaving Cambridge he became assistant to Mr. Clare, of Soho school, whose daughter he married. About this time he took orders, and in 1743 was elected master of Tunbridge school, where he died of a fall from his horse 15 April, 1761. His poems were published in 1771, 8vo.; besides which he wrote 'The Perjured Lover,' a poem, and two printed sermons.

CAWTON, THOMAS, a Puritan divine, born at Rainham, Norfolk, 1605, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. He became minister of St. Bartholomew's, behind the Exchange, London, but being implicated in Love's plot against Cromwell, he fled to Holland, and became pastor of the English church at Rotterdam. Died 7 Aug., 1659.

CAWTON, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was born at Wivenhoe, Essex, about 1637. He was educated at Rotterdam, and afterwards at Utrecht, where he acquired a knowledge of the oriental tongues. On his return to England he entered Merton College, Oxford, and was episcopally ordained; but in 1662 he left the university on account of nonconformity, after which he officiated to a dissenting congregation in Westminster, where he died 10 April, 1677. He wrote the Life of his Father; 'Dissertatio de Usu Linguæ Hebraicæ in Philosophia Theoretica'; 'Disputatio de Versione Syriaca Vet. et Novi Testamenti'; and 'Balaam's Wish,' a sermon.

CAXES, EUGENIO, a Spanish painter, was son of Patrizio Caxes, of Arezzo, an eminent artist, who settled in Madrid, where the son was born 1577. His fine fresco paintings are much admired. Died 1642.

CAXTON, WILLIAM, the first English printer, was born in the Weald of Kent, probably in 1412. At the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to a mercer in London, and on the death of his master travelled in the Low Countries for a short time. While abroad he was employed to continue and confirm a treaty of trade and commerce between Edward IV. and Philip, duke of Burgundy. During his residence in Flanders he acquired a knowledge of the new invention of printing, and the first book he executed was the 'Recueil des Histories de Troyes,' by Raoul le Fevre, 1465-7. In 1472 he published his own translation of the same York. The time of his return to his native country is not known with certainty, but the usual supposition has been that he brought the art of printing into England in 1474. Shortly afterwards he was residing near Westminster Abbey, where he set up his press. A list of the works printed by him, sixty-seven in number, is given in Lowndes's 'Bibl. Man.,' ed. Bohn. Caxton died either in 1491 or 1492.

CAYET, PIERRE VICTOR PALMA, a French theologian, born 1525. He was first a Protestant minister, but turning Catholic, he was made a doctor of the Sorbonne, and professor of Hebrew in the Royal College. Besides his 'Chronologie Septennaire,' which is a curious work, he wrote some pieces against the Calvinists. Died 10 March, 1610.

CAYLUS, ANNE CLAUDE PHILIPPE, comte DE, a French writer, born 31 Oct., 1692; died 5 Sept., 1767. To him the world is indebted for that magnificent work, the Description of the Gems in the Royal Cabinet. In 1731 he became a member of the Academy of Painting, in which he founded a prize for drawing. He discovered the ancient art of encaustic painting, and of tinging marble, from hints in the works of Pliny. Besides dissertations on the arts, he published a collection of Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and Gaulish Antiquities; a Discourse on Ancient Pictures; and other works of merit.

CAZES, PIERRE JACQUES, a French painter, born 1676; died 25 June, 1754.

CAZOTTE, JACQUES, a French writer of plays, tales, &c., was born at Dijon 1720, and was executed during the fury of the Revolution 25 Sept., 1792. The best edition of his works is that printed at Paris, 4 vols. 8vo., 1816.

CEADDA, ST. See CHAD.

CEBA, ANSALDO, a Genoese, who composed tragedies, histories, orations, and a treatise on epic poetry. Born 1565; died 12 April, 1623.

CEBES, an ancient Greek author, whose beautiful allegory, 'The Tablature of Human Life,' still remains. There are several English translations of it. Cebes lived B.C. 405, and was a disciple of Socrates.

CECCO DI ASCOLI, whose right name was Francesco de Stabili, was born at Ascoli 1527. The great reputation he had acquired as a physician occasioned his being invited to Avignon to attend John XXII. in that capacity; but the jealousy of some of the courtiers forced him to leave the place. He went to Florence, and from thence to Bologna, where he taught philosophy and astrology from 1322 to 1325. Being obliged to draw the horoscopes of the wife and daughters of the duke of Calabria, the son of Robert, king of Naples, he foretold that they would give themselves up to licentiousness. This deprived him of the duke's protection. His enemies seized the opportunity to accuse him of having said that Jesus Christ was under the influence of the stars; and he was burned by the Inquisition, at Florence, 1527. He wrote a poem on physic, which was first printed at Venice, 1478.

CECIL, JAMES EMILIUS WILLIAM EVELYN GASCOINE, Viscount Cranborne. See CRANBORNE.

CECIL, RICHARD, a divine, born in London 8 Nov., 1748. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he proceeded to his degrees in arts, and on taking orders obtained two small livings in Sussex. Afterwards he removed to

CELLINI.

London, became lecturer of Christ-church, Spitalfields, and minister of Orange Street Chapel, next of that in Long Acre, and lastly of one belonging to the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, in Bedford Row. In 1800 he was presented to the livings of Chobham and Bisleigh, in Surrey. Died 15 Aug., 1810. Mr. Cecil published several sermons, and the Lives of Bacon the sculptor, and the Rev. William Cadogan. All his works were published after his death, in 4 vols. 8vo.

CECIL, ROBERT, earl of Salisbury. See SALISBURY.

CECIL, THOMAS, earl of Exeter. See EXETER.

CECIL, THOMAS, an English engraver, who was living 1634.

CECIL, WILLIAM, Lord Burghley. See BURGHLEY.

CECILIA (ST.), the patron saint of music, has been honoured as a martyr in the Latin Church from the fifth century; but nothing is known of her history.

CEDD (ST.), bishop of London, was the brother of St. Chad, and died on the 29th Oct., about the year 664.

CEDRENIUS, GEORGE, a Greek monk of the eleventh century, who compiled a history from the Creation to the year 1057.

CELESTI, ANDREW, a Venetian painter of great merit, born 1637; died 1706.

CELESTINE I. (SAINT), succeeded Boniface I. in the papal chair 422, and died 6 April, 432.

CELESTINE II. was elected Pope 25 Sept., 1143, and died 3 March, 1144.

CELESTINE III. succeeded Pope Clement III. 1191, and died 8 Jan., 1198.

CELESTINE IV., of Milan, was elected Pope 22 Sept., 1241, and died eighteen days afterwards, regretted by all good men.

CELESTINE V. (ST.), Pietro di Morrone, was born at Isernia, in the kingdom of Naples, 1215. He became a Benedictine monk, and retired, in 1244, to Mont Majella, where he founded the Celestine order. He was elected Pope 5 July, 1294, abdicated the pontificate five months afterwards, and died 19 May, 1296. He was canonized by Clement V. in 1313.

CELIO MAGNO, an Italian poet, author of a noble Ode to the Deity, died 1612.

CELLARIUS, ANDREW, rector of the college of Horn, in Holland, and author of several geographical works, was living 1661.

CELLARIUS, CHRISTOPHER, was born at Smalcalde, in Franconia, 1638. In 1666 he was created D.D. at Jena, and the next year was appointed professor of Hebrew and moral philosophy at Weissenfels, where he remained till 1673, when he became rector of the college at Weimar, which place he quitted three years afterwards for the same office at Zeitz. In 1678 he removed to Mersbourg; and in 1693 he accepted the professorship of history at Halle, where he ended his days 4 June, 1707. He edited several Latin and Greek authors; but the works by which he is best known are those on ancient geography and history.

CELLIER, REMI, a French Benedictine, who wrote a General History of Sacred and Ecclesiastical Authors, 23 vols. 4to.; and an Apology for the Morality of the Fathers against Barbeyrac. Born 1688; died 1761.

CELLINI, BENVENUTO, a famous sculptor and engraver, was born at Florence 1500, and served his apprenticeship to a jeweller and goldsmith.

CELSUS.

He also learned drawing, engraving, and music, and Clement VII. appointed him both his goldsmith and musician. His courage was equal to his ingenuity; for, when Rome was besieged by the duke of Bourbon, the charge of the castle of St. Angelo was committed by the Pope to Cellini, who afterwards surrendered it on honourable terms. However, he was of a capricious humour, never contented in one place, and frequently embroiling himself in quarrels. After rambling about from place to place he went to Paris, but being disgusted with his salary, he resolved to set out for Jerusalem. The king, however, sent for him, increased his salary, and gave him a house to live in. Still his quarrelsome temper would not suffer him to be at peace; and he returned to his native country, where he died 13 Feb., 1570. His curious 'Memoirs written by himself' have been translated into English by Nugent and Roscoe.

CELSUS, AURELIUS CORNELIUS, a celebrated physician, who flourished at Rome in the reign of Tiberius, and wrote eight books on medicine, which have been often printed. He is generally allowed to be the best commentator on Hippocrates.

CELSUS, an Epicurean philosopher of the second century, who wrote a book against the Christian religion, which was answered by Origen.

CELTES, CONRAD, a German Latin poet, born 1459; died at Vienna 3 Feb., 1508.

CENCI, BEATRICE DE, a Roman lady, famous on account of her beauty, her crimes, and her dramatic death. She was the daughter of Francis de Cenci, a man whose character was so infamous that Beatrice, in concert with her mother-in-law Lucretia, and her brother James, caused him to be assassinated. The three Cenci were executed at Rome 11 Sept., 1599. Their story is the subject of a well-known drama by Shelley.

CENNICK, JOHN, a Moravian preacher, author of several published sermons, hymns, &c., died 1755, and was buried in the Moravian cemetery at Chelsea.

CENSORINUS, a grammarian, who flourished at Rome in the third century. His treatise, 'De Die Natali,' was printed at Cambridge, 1695.

CENTLIVRE, SUSANNAH, a dramatist, was daughter of Mr. Freeman, a gentleman of Holbeach, Lincolnshire, and was born about 1667. Her youth was gaily spent, though she did not neglect the cultivation of her mind. Some of her comedies possess merit, and are still performed with applause, particularly 'The Busy Body,' and 'A Bold Stroke for a Wife.' Her third husband, Mr. Centlivre, was yeoman cook to Queen Anne. She died in London 1 Dec., 1723. Her dramatic works were published in 3 vols. 12mo.; besides which she wrote letters and poems.

CENTORIO DEZZI ORTENSII, ASCANIUS, a celebrated Italian, who was not only a soldier, but a scholar, and wrote Military Annals of his Time, printed at Venice in 1505 and 1509, in 2 vols. 4to.

CERACCHI, JOSEPH, a sculptor, was born in Corsica about 1760, and executed in Paris 10 Feb., 1802, for attempting to assassinate Napoleon Bonaparte.

CERATINUS, JAMES, a native of Holland, Greek professor at Leipzig, died 20 April, 1530. He published a Greek-Latin Lexicon; 'De sono Græcæum Literarum,' &c.

CERCEAU, JEAN ANTOINE DU, a French Jesuit, who wrote poems, histories and miscellaneous pieces, was born at Paris 12 Nov., 1670, and died 4 July, 1730.

CERDA, DONNA BERNARDA FERREIRA DE LA, a Portuguese poetess, born 1595; died 1644.

CERDA, JOHN LOUIS DE LA, a Spanish Jesuit, who wrote Commentaries on Caesar's Commentaries; 'Adversaria Sacra,' &c. Born about 1500; died 1643.

CERDO, a heretic, who lived at the end of the first, or beginning of the second century. He maintained the existence of two Gods, one good, the Creator of heaven; the other bad, and Creator of the earth. He rejected the Old Testament, and allowed only a part of the New; he also held that Christ had not a real body.

CÈRE, JEAN NICOLAS, a French writer on botany, born 1737; died 2 May, 1810.

CERETA, LAURA, an Italian lady, born at Brescia 1469; died 1498. Her Latin letters were published with her Luce, by Tomasini, 1680.

CERINI, JOHN DOMINIC, an Italian painter, born at Perugia 1606; died 1681.

CERINI, JOSEPH, an Italian dramatist, and author of Anacreontic Poems, was born 1738, and died 7 Sept., 1779.

CERINTHUS, an heresiarch, the disciple of Simon Magus. He lived A.D. 54; and attacked the divinity of Jesus Christ.

CERISANTES, MARK DUNCAN DE, son of Mark Duncan, a Scotch physician, who settled at Saumur, was born in that town about 1600. He embraced the military profession, and took the name of Cerisantes that he might be distinguished from his brother. When serving under the duke of Guise in Italy he was ordered to attack Naples, and in doing so received a wound which proved fatal, Feb., 1648. He composed some Latin Odes.

CERQUOZZI, MICHAEL ANGELO, a painter, born at Rome 1600, or 1602; died 1666. He was called Michael Angelo di Battaglia, from his excellence in painting battles, and Bambocciate, from his skill in painting fairs and markets.

CERRATO, PAUL, a lawyer and Latin poet, born at Alba, in Lombardy, 1485; died 1541.

CERUTI, FREDERICK, an Italian writer, born at Verona 1541; died 1579. Besides editions of Horace, Persius, and Juvenal, he published a Latin Dialogue on Comedy, a treatise on education, and some poems and letters in the same language.

CERUTTI, JOSEPH ANTHONY JOACHIM, was born at Turin 13 June, 1738, and became a member of the Society of Jesus. Going to France he entered into the Revolution with ardour, and was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly. He published several works in French, and was one of the editors of 'La Feuille Villageoise,' a revolutionary paper. Died 3 Feb., 1792.

CERVANTES SAAVEDRA, MIGUEL DE, a celebrated Spanish writer, and the inimitable author of 'Don Quixote,' was born at Alcada de Henares 1547. From Spain he went to Italy, and served Cardinal Acquaviva at Rome, as chamberlain. Fighting under the banners of the victorious Marc Antonio Colonna, he lost his left hand in 1571. He was taken by the Moors, and suffered a captivity of five years and a half. On his return to Spain he applied himself to writing for the stage. The first part of his 'Don Quixote' was printed at Madrid in 1605. Notwithstanding the vast applause his book everywhere received, he experienced many difficulties from poverty. In 1615 he published a second part. He was the author of several other works; and died at Madrid 23 April, 1616.

CESALPINI, ANDREW. See CAESALPINUS.

CESARI, JOSEPH, a painter, commonly called Arpino, and sometimes Josephino, was born at Rome 1560. His father was a painter and a native of Arpino in the kingdom of Naples. While yet in his thirteenth year his father placed him with the artists employed by Gregory XIII. in painting the lodges of the Vatican, whom he served in the humble employment of preparing their palettes and colours. But in this situation he discovered such talents that the Pope ordered a golden crown to be paid to him daily as long as he worked in the Vatican. Clement VIII. distinguished him by adding new and higher favours to those conferred by Gregory XIII. He made him knight of the Order of Christ, and appointed him director of St. John Lateran. Arpino died at Rome 1640. He was an artist of showy rather than solid talents, whence he acquired great popularity in his time, because his pictures astonished the multitude. He was much assisted by his brother Bernardino Cesari, who painted a large fresco work in the church of St. John de Lateran.

CESARINI, JULIAN, a cardinal, who presided at the council of Biele, and was also at that of Florence. Pope Eugenius IV. sent him afterwards into Hungary to persuade Ladislaus to break the peace which he had made with Amurath. Cesarini succeeded in this undertaking, but perished at the battle of Varna, which was fought Nov. 1444, in consequence of the peace being broken.

CESARINI, VIRGINIO, was born at Rome 1595, and died April, 1624. He wrote poems in Latin and Italian; and a treatise against astrology.

CESAROTTI, MELCHIOR, an Italian poet, born 15 May, 1730, at Padua, where he died 3 Nov., 1808. He translated several orations of Demosthenes, Isocrates, Æschines, Lysias, and other Greek writers, and also Juvenal. His essays and dissertations are numerous, but he is best known by his admirable translation of Ossian into Italian blank verse. He did not succeed so well in his version of the Iliad, which, indeed, is rather a parody than a translation. His collected works were published in 42 vols. 8vo., Pisa, 1809.

CESI, BARTHOLOMEW, an Italian painter, born 1599; died 1627.

CESI, FREDERICK, an Italian prince, and promoter of science, who founded the academy de' Lettere, was born at Rome 1585, and died in or about 1630.

CESPEDES, PAUL DE, a Spanish painter, born 1538 at Cordova, where he died 1608. He was not only a great artist, but also a scholar of the first order, and a distinguished poet.

CETTI, MARK ANTHONY, a Recollect friar, who achieved great distinction as a musical composer, was a native either of Arezzo or Florence, and died at Rome 1688.

CEVA, THOMAS, a Jesuit, distinguished as a mathematician and poet, was born 20 Dec., 1648, at Milan, where he died 3 Feb., 1736.

CEVALLERIUS. See CHEVALLIER.

CHABANON, MICHEL PAUL GUI DE, a French writer, born at St. Domingo 1730; died at Paris 15 July, 1792. He wrote some dramatic pieces, and his translations of Pindar obtained the praise of Voltaire. He also translated Theocritus, and wrote a dissertation on Homer; the Eulogies of Rameau, &c.; the Life of Dante; a Treatise on Music; and his own life.

CHABOT, FRANÇOIS, a French Capuchin friar, who at the Revolution became a violent Jacobin. He was guillotined as an accomplice of Danton 5 April, 1794, aged 35.

CHABRIT, PIERRE, a French advocate, who is known by his book on the French Monarchy and its Laws, printed in 1785, the year of the author's death.

CHABRY, MARC, a French painter and sculptor, born 1660; died 4 Aug., 1727.

CHAD, or CEADDA (St.), brother of St. Cedd, bishop of London, whom he assisted in founding the monastery of Lestingay, in Yorkshire, of which house he ultimately became the sole governor. He was consecrated bishop of York 666, and being afterwards chosen the fifth bishop of the Mercians, he fixed his see at Lichfield. Died 2 March, 673.

CHADERTON, LAURENCE, D.D., the first master of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, was born at Chatterton, Lancashire, and, after studying the law, went to Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship at Christ's College. In 1578 he took his degree of B.D., and was chosen lecturer of St. Clement's church, Cambridge, where he preached for many years; and such was his reputation that Sir Walter Mildmay declared that if he would not accept the mastership of his college, the foundation should not go on. In the beginning of the reign of James I. he was appointed one of the divines at the Hampton Court Conference; and he was also one of the translators of the Bible. In 1613 he took his doctor's degree, and after making provision for twelve fellows and above forty scholars in his college he resigned in favour of Dr. Preston. He died at Cambridge in November, 1640, æt. 103. Dr. Chaderton wrote a Treatise on Justification, and a Sermon preached at St. Paul's Cross.

CHADERTON, WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born at Manchester, and educated at Cambridge, where he became president of Queen's College, and professor of divinity. He was consecrated bishop of Chester 1579, translated to Lincoln 1595, and died 11 April, 1608. This prelate had a taste for antiquities, and left some historical collections in MS.

CHAIGNEAU, WILLIAM, a novelist and dramatist. He served for several years in the army in Flanders, and afterwards carried on the business of an army agent in Dublin, where he was commonly known as Colonel Chaigneau. He was the author of 'Harlequin Soldier,' a farce taken from the French; and 'The History of Jack Connor,' a popular Irish novel, published about 1752. Born 24 Jan., 1709; died 1 Oct., 1781.

CHAI, CHARLES PIERRE, a Protestant divine, born at Geneva 3 Jan., 1701, and in 1728 chosen pastor of the French congregation at the Hague, where he died in Oct., 1785. He published a French translation of the Bible; an Apology for Inoculation; and several theological pieces.

CHAISE, FRANÇOIS DE LA, a French Jesuit, confessor to Louis XIV., was born 1624. His great patron was Cardinal Mazarin; and he at last obtained a complete influence over the king, who, by his means, was brought to marry Madame de Maintenon. Died 20 Jan., 1709.

CHALCONDYLES, DEMETRIUS, a native of Athens, who settled in 1479 at Florence, from whence he removed to Milan, and taught Greek till his death in 1510, at the age of 80. He wrote a Greek grammar, and published the lexicon of Suidas in 1499.

CHALCONDYLES, LAONICUS, an Athenian of the fifteenth century, who wrote a history of the Turks from 1298 to 1462.

CHALIER, MARIE JOSEPH, a French revolutionist, born 1747, and executed 17 July, 1793, at Lyons, where he had been leader of the Jacobins.

CHALKLEY, THOMAS, was born in Southwark 1745, and having joined the Society of Friends, proceeded to America, where he acquired a high reputation for piety and uprightness of life among his co-religionists. He died in the island of Tortola 4 Nov., 1741. His collected works have been several times printed, accompanied by an autobiographical memoir of his life and travels.

CHALLE, CHARLES MICHEL ANGE, a French artist and professor in the Academy of Painting at Paris, where he was born 18 March, 1718, and died 8 Jan., 1778.

CHALLES, CLAUDE FRANCIS MILLIET DE, a Jesuit, was born at Chambéry, in Savoy, 1621, and died professor of mathematics at Turin 28 March, 1078. He is known by 'A Complete Course of Mathematical Learning,' 4 vols. folio.

CHALLONER, RICHARD, D.D., a pious and erudite Catholic prelate, was born at Lewes, in Sussex, of Protestant parents, 29 Sept., 1691. At an early age he lost his father, and was then placed under the care of the Rev. John Gother, who converted him to the Catholic religion. In 1704 he was sent to the English college at Douay, where he made rapid progress both in learning and piety, and was appointed professor of philosophy. In 1716 he was promoted to the priesthood, and subsequently took his degrees in divinity, and was nominated professor in that faculty. He was sent on the English mission 1730, being stationed in London, and soon acquired considerable fame by the numerous controversial treatises which he published in rapid succession. Among these was his 'Catholic Christian Instructed,' in the preface to which he wittily answered the assertions contained in Conyers Middleton's 'Letter from Rome, shewing the exact conformity between Popery and Paganism.' Middleton was stung to the quick; but instead of bearing the castigation like a gentleman and a scholar, he called in the penal laws to the aid of his defective logic and theology, and rendered it necessary for Dr. Challoner to retire from public view until the storm had blown over. On 29 January, 1741, Dr. Challoner was consecrated bishop of Debra, and appointed coadjutor to Benjamin Petre, bishop of Prusa, vicar apostolic of the London district. On the death of Bishop Petre, in 1758, Dr. Challoner succeeded to the vicariate apostolic. He governed his district with great prudence; but between 1765 and 1778 he and his priests were much harassed, in consequence of the penal laws being set in motion at the instance of a common informer. His life was in danger during the riots of 1780, and he was obliged, for safety sake, to flee from the metropolis. He died soon after, on 12 Jan., 1781, and was buried at Milton, in Berkshire. His death is thus recorded in the parish register:—'Anno Domini 1781, January 22. Buried the Reverend Dr. Richard Challoner, a Popish Priest, and titular Bishop of London and Salisbury, a very pious and good man, of great learning and extensive abilities.' He was author of the following works, many of which have passed through numerous editions, and been translated into various languages: 'Think well on't, or Reflections on the Great Truths of Eternity,' 'The Grounds of the Catholic Doctrine,' 1732; 'A Short History of the first beginning and progress of the Protestant Religion,' 1733; 'A Roman Catholic's Reasons why he cannot conform to the Protestant Religion,' 1734; 'The Touchstone of the New Religion,' 1734; 'The Young Gentleman instructed in the Grounds of the Christian Religion,' 1735; 'The Unerring Authority of the Catholic Church in Matters of Faith,' 'A Specimen of the Spirit of Dissenting Teachers, being an Answer to Sermons preached at Salter's Hall,' 1736; 'The Catholic Christian Instructed in the Sacraments, Sacrifice, Ceremonies, and Observances of the Church,' 1737, with a preface in reply to Conyers Middleton; 'Memoirs of Missionary Priests and other Catholics of both sexes who suffered Death or Imprisonment in England on account of their religion, from the year 1577 till the end of the reign of King Charles II.,' 2 vols., 1741, reprinted at Manchester, 2 vols., 1803; 'The Grounds of the Old Religion,' 1742; 'A Letter to a Friend concerning the Infallibility of the Church of Christ,' 1743; a translation of the 'Following or Imitation of Christ,' 1744; 'Britannia Sancta, or the Lives of the most celebrated English, Scottish, and Irish Saints who have flourished in these Islands from the earliest times of Christianity to the change of religion in the sixteenth century,' (anon.), 2 vols. 4to., 1745; an edition of the Douay Bible and Testament, with annotations, 1750; 'Remarks on Two Letters against Popery,' 1751; 'Considerations upon Christian Truths and Christian Doctrines digested into Meditations for every Day in the Year,' 2 vols.; 'The Lives of the Fathers in the Desert,' 1755; 'The Life of St. Teresa,' 1757; 'A Caveat against the Methodists,' 1760; 'The City of God of the New Testament,' 1760; 'British Martyrology,' 1761; 'The Morality of the Bible,' 1762; a translation of St. Francis de Sales's Introduction to a Devout Life; 'The Devotion of Catholics to the blessed Virgin Mary truly stated,' 1764; 'The Garden of the Soul,' the most universally popular of all the manuals of devotion in use among the English Catholics; 'Abstract of the History of the Bible,' 'The Memorial of Ancient British Piety,' and 'The Abridgment of Christian Doctrine, or First Catechism.' The Life of Bishop Challoner has been written by the Rev. James Barnard, 8vo., London, 1784; and by the Rev. John Milner, F.S.A., afterwards bishop of Castabala, 8vo., London, 1798.

CHALMERS, ALEXANDER, F.S.A., an eminent biographical and miscellaneous writer, born at Aberdeen 1759. At an early age he removed to London where he entered upon an active literary career, which was only terminated by his death on 10 Dec., 1834. The list of his works is too long for insertion here. Among them were editions of 'The British Essayists,' 45 vols.; of Shakspeare, Fielding's works, Dr. Johnson's works, Boswell's 'Life of Johnson,' Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall,' Bolingbroke's works, the Works of the English Poets, 21 vols., and 'The General Biographical Dictionary,' 32 vols. 8vo., London, 1812-17. The latter work, which taken altogether, is the best biographical dictionary in the English language, has been constantly referred to by the compiler of these pages.

CHALMERS.

CHALMERS, or CHAMBERS, DAVID, a Scotch ecclesiastic, born in the county of Ross about 1730, and educated at Aberdeen, after which he went to Bologna, where he studied the law. On his return to Scotland he was made parson of Suddy and chancellor of Ross. He was also employed in digesting the laws of Scotland, and in publishing the acts of parliament. Not long afterwards he was named one of the lords of session, by the title of Lord Ormond, but being attached to Queen Mary, he was obliged to go abroad. Died Nov., 1792. His works are, 'Histoire Abrégée de tous les Roys de France, Angleterre, et Ecosse, &c.,' 8vo., Paris, 1779; 'La Recherche des Singularités les plus remarquables concernant l'Etat d'Ecosse,' 1779; and 'Discours de la legitime Succession des Femmes aux Possessions de leurs Parents, et du Gouvernement des Princesses aux Empires et Royaumes,' 1779.

CHALMERS, SIR GEORGE, a painter, was a native of Edinburgh, and died in London 1791.

CHALMERS, GEORGE, a miscellaneous writer, born in Scotland 1742. He went when young to North America, but on the breaking out of the revolutionary war returned to Britain and settled in London, where he obtained a situation in the office of the Board of Trade, which he retained till his death on 31 May, 1825. Mr. Chalmers was a fellow of the Royal Society, and of that of Antiquaries. To the latter he contributed much assistance from his researches into the literature of old times. When, however, Ireland fabricated the Shakspeare papers, Chalmers unfortunately became a dupe to the imposture, and even to the last apologized for his credulity. His principal works are, 'Political Annals of the United Colonies;' 'Estimate of the Strength of Great Britain during the present and four preceding Reigns;' 'Opinions on subjects of Public Law and Commercial Policy connected with American Independence;' 'Life of Daniel De Foe;' 'Life of Thomas Ruddiman;' 'Apology for the Believers in the Shakspeare Papers;' 'Caledonia, or an Account, Historical and Geographical, of North Britain;' 'Chronological Account of Commerce and Coinage in Great Britain;' and 'Life of Mary Queen of Scots.' He also edited the works of Sir David Lindsay, and other old authors.

CHALMERS, THOMAS, LL.D., a most distinguished Scotch divine, was born in Fifeshire April, 1780, and received his academical education at St. Andrew's, after which he obtained the living of Kilmany, in his native county. He first attracted the attention of the public by some sermons which he printed, and the article 'Christianity' in the 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia.' In 1814 he was transferred to the Tron church of Glasgow, and while there became one of the most famous preachers in Scotland, the new church of St. John's, Glasgow, being subsequently built expressly for his accommodation. In 1824 he was appointed professor of moral philosophy at St. Andrew's, from whence he was removed, in 1828, to the chair of theology in the university of Edinburgh. In 1843 came the disruption of the Church of Scotland, when Chalmers resigned his chair, and was elected principal and primarius professor of theology to the seceding body. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the university of Oxford. Died 31 May, 1847. His works on theology and science form twenty-five volumes. Among them are, 'Evidences of the Christian Revelation, being a reprint of the article 'Christianity,' above referred to; 'Discourses on Astronomy;' 'Commercial Discourses;' 'Occasional Discourses;' 'The Civic and Christian Economy of Large Towns,' and 'Lectures on the Romans.'

CHALONER, EDWARD, D.D., son of Sir Thomas Chaloner the younger, was born at Clitwick, Middlesex, 1590. He was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and after taking his degrees in arts was chosen a fellow of All Souls. Afterwards he became principal of St. Alban's Hall and chaplain to James I. Died 25 July, 1625. He wrote 'The Authority, Universality, and Visibility of the Church,' and six published sermons.

CHALONER, JAMES, son of Sir Thomas Chaloner the younger, was born in London, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he removed to one of the inns of court. In the rebellion he joined the parliament, was one of the judges at the trial of the king, and governor of Peel Castle in the Isle of Man. Died 1601. He wrote a Short Treatise of the Isle of Man, appended to King's Vale Royal of Cheshire, 1650.

CHALONER, JOHN, a poet, was a native of Clonmel, Ireland, and entering the army, became a captain in the 36th regiment. He died 3 June, 1862, aged 82, and was buried at Fethard, near Clonmel. His poems are, 'Rome,' 1821; 'The Vale of Chamouni,' 1822; and 'Clara Chester,' 1823.

CHALONER, SIR THOMAS, a statesman, soldier, and poet, was born in London 1521, and educated at Cambridge and Oxford. He went with the Emperor Charles V. on his unsuccessful expedition against Algiers, and on his return to England was made clerk of the council. In 1547 he accompanied the expedition against Scotland, and was at the battle of Pinkie, or Musselburgh, where he displayed such bravery that, immediately after the termination of the engagement, he was made a knight banneret by the Lord Protector Somerset. Afterwards he acted as one of the commissioners appointed to negotiate with the queen of Scots touching the debateable land and other matters, and he was also employed in public affairs during the reign of Queen Mary, although he was reputed a decided Protestant. After the accession of Elizabeth he was successively sent as ambassador to the Emperor Ferdinand at Cambray, to Brussels, and to Spain, being recalled from the latter country in 1564. He died at Clerkenwell, London, 14 Oct., 1565. Sir Thomas was author of, 'A booke of the office of Servantes,' translated from Gilbert Cognatus; a translation of Erasmus's 'Praise of Folly;' 'Howe the Lorde Mowbray, promoted by King Richarde the seconde, was by hym banyshed the Realme, and dyed miserably in exyle,' in the 'Mirror for Magistrates;' 'A little Dictionary for Children;' 'Helen and Paris,' translated from Ovid; and 'De Rep. Anglorum instauranda,' in Latin verse. Pattenham says that Sir Thomas Chaloner deserves the highest praise for eclogue and pastoral poesy, and Meres mentions him as amongst the best pastoral poets of his time.

CHALONER, SIR THOMAS, son of the preceding, was born 1550, and educated at St. Paul's School, from whence he removed to Magdalen College, Oxford, after which he went abroad, and acquired in his travels a considerable knowledge of natural philosophy and chemistry. In 1591 he was knighted, and about the same time discovered alum on his estate near Guisborough, Yorkshire.

CHALONER.

After much money had been expended in forming a mine, the crown seized it as a mine royal, and gave a grant of it to Sir Pam Pindar. The Long Parliament, however, annulled the grant, as a monopoly, and restored the alum-works to their original owners. Sir Thomas was chosen tutor to Henry prince of Wales, whom he attended to Oxford, and was honoured there with the degree of M.A. Died 17 Nov., 1615. He was author of 'The virtue of Nitre, wherein is declared the sundry cures by the same effected,' 1584.

CHALONER, THOMAS, son of Sir Thomas Chaloner the younger, received his education at Exeter College, Oxford. He afterwards became an active member of the Long Parliament, sat as one of the king's judges, and was elected a member of the Council of State. At the Restoration he retired to Holland, and died at Middleburg in or about 1661. He published in 1657 a 'Relation of the strange Finding out of Moses his Tomb, in a Valley near unto Mount Nebo, in Palestina.' 'This book,' says Wood, 'at its first appearance, made a great noise, and puzzled the presbyterian rabbies for a time; at length the author thereof being known, and his story found out to be a meer sham, the book became ridiculous, and was put to posterior uses.'

CHALOTAIS, LOUIS RENÉ DE CARADEUC DE LA, author of a spirited work against the Jesuits, and of an Essay on National Education, was procureur-général of the parliament of Brittany, and was imprisoned for his opposition to the commandant of the province. Born 6 March, 1701; died at Rennes 12 July, 1785.

CHAMBER, or CHAMBRÉ, JOHN, a physician, and one of the founders of the royal college in London, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. After studying and graduating at Padua, he settled in London and became physician to Henry VIII. In 1518 he procured, in conjunction with Linacre and others, a charter for the foundation of a college, which was first in Knight Rider Street, next at Amen Corner, and lastly in Warwick Lane. Dr. Chamber was also a divine, warden of Merton College, and dean of the Chapel Royal. Died 1549.

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE, was born at Ghent, of English parents, 1576; consecrated bishop of Ypres, in Flanders, 1626; and died 19 Dec., 1634.

CHAMBERLAIN, JOHN, a famous English letter writer, was born 1553-4, and was matriculated as a pensioner of Trinity College, Cambridge, in May, 1570, but took no degree. It is surmised that he had a seat in parliament for some time. He enjoyed great intimacy with Sir Dudley Carleton, Sir Ralph Winwood, and other eminent men. It is not known when he died, but he was living 1626. His correspondence, of which a considerable portion has been printed, is in the British Museum. Sarah Williams edited for the Camden Society, 1861, a collection of letters written by Chamberlain in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

CHAMBERLAIN, WILLIAM, M.D., of Shaftesbury, Dorsetshire, was author of a play called 'Love's Victory,' printed in 1658, and acted in 1678, under the title of 'The Wits led by the Nose, or the Poet's Revenge.' He also wrote an heroic poem, entitled 'Pharonnida,' 8vo., 1659. This was published in prose, as a novel, in 1683, under the title of 'Eromena, or the Noble Stranger.'

CHAMBERS.

CHAMBERLAINE, ROBERT, a poet, was born in Lancashire in or about 1607, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He was author of 'Nocturnal Lucubrations,' 1638; 'The Swaggering Damsel,' a comedy, 1640; and 'Sicelides,' a pastoral.

CHAMBERLAINE, ROBERT, D.D., a native of Ulster, was at first a secular priest at Salamanca, but afterwards became a Franciscan friar and lecturer in the Irish college at Louvaine. He wrote a treatise, 'De Scientia Dei,' and another 'De futuris Contingentibus,' both of which remain in MS. Died 11 June, 1638.

CHAMBERLAYNE, EDWARD, LL.D., an English writer, was born at Odington, in Gloucestershire, 1616, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his degree in arts. After the Restoration he was elected F.R.S., and went to Sweden with the earl of Carlisle as his secretary. In 1670 he received the degree of LL.D. from the university of Cambridge. About 1679 he was appointed tutor to Henry duke of Grafton, one of the natural sons of Charles II.; and he had the honour of instructing Prince George of Denmark in the English language. He died at Chelsea in 1703, and was buried in the churchyard of that parish. He directed by will that some of his books should be covered with wax and buried with him, that they might be servicable to future ages. The work by which he is best known is, 'Angliæ Notitiæ; or the Present State of England;' which passed through nearly 40 editions.

CHAMBERLAYNE, JOHN, son of the preceding, and a voluminous writer, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, and died Oct., 1723, aged about sixty. He continued his father's 'Angliæ Notitiæ;' translated Nieuwentynt's Religious Philosopher, and other books; and communicated several papers to the Royal Society, of which he was a fellow.

CHAMBERLEN, HUGH, M.D., a physician and man-midwife, was grandson of Dr. Peter Chamberlen, physician to James I. He was born in 1664, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he proceeded M.D. in 1690. He invented an obstetric forceps which bears his name, and in 1683 published a translation of Mauriceau's Midwifery. He attended the queen of James II. at the birth of the prince who was called the Pretender, of which circumstance he wrote an account to Princess Sophia of Hanover. Dr. Chamberlen visited Bishop Atterbury in the Tower, and that prelate wrote the epitaph which is on his monument in Westminster Abbey. He died 17 June, 1728.

CHAMBERS, DAVID. See CHALMERS.

CHAMBERS, EPHRAIM, F.R.S., editor of the scientific dictionary which bears his name, was a native of Kendal, in Westmoreland, and received only a common education, being designed for trade. He was placed under Mr. Senex, a mathematical instrument and globe maker in Fleet Street, and while an apprentice formed the plan of his dictionary. This design occupied his whole attention, and the first edition of it appeared in 1728, in 2 vols. folio. In 1738 a new edition came out, with additions, and, what is extraordinary, a third in the very next year; a fourth in 1741; and a fifth in 1746. Besides this great work, he was engaged in translating and abridging the History and Remains of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris. He also translated the Jesuit's Perspective. Died 15 May, 1740.

CHAMBERS.

CHAMBERS, GEORGE, a marine painter, was a native of Whitby, Yorkshire, and died 28 Oct., 1840.

CHAMBERS, HUMPHRY, D.D., an English clergyman, author of several theological works, died Sept., 1662.

CHAMBERS, JOHN, abbat of Peterborough, surrendered his monastery to the king 1539, and on the abbey being converted into an episcopal see, was appointed the first bishop thereof 1541. Died 7 Feb., 1555-6. It is said that he was appointed by the Convocation of 1540 to revise the translation of the Apocalypse, but this is doubtful. —Athen. Cant.

CHAMBERS, JOHN, an English biographer and topographer, resided for some years at Worcester, but afterwards removed to Norwich, where he died 28 July, 1839, aged 58. He was the author of 'A General History of Malvern,' 8vo., 1817; 'A General History of Worcester,' 8vo., 1819; 'Biographical Illustrations of Worcestershire, including Lives of Persons, natives or residents, eminent for piety or talent; to which is added a List of Living Authors of the County,' 8vo., 1820; and 'A General History of the County of Norfolk, intended to convey all the information of a Norfolk Tour, with the more extended details of antiquarian, statistical, pictorial, architectural, and miscellaneous information; including biographical notices, original and selected,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1829.

CHAMBERS, SIR ROBERT, was born at New-castle-upon-Tyne 1737, and educated under Mr. Moises, with Lord Eldon and Sir William Scott, whose attachment to him continued through life. In 1754 he became an exhibitor of Lincoln College, Oxford, and afterwards fellow of University College, where he formed an intimacy with Sir William Jones. In 1762 he was elected Vincenzo professor, and in 1766 appointed principal of New Inn Hall. In 1773 he accepted the place of second judge in the supreme court of judicature at Bengal; in 1778 the honour of knighthood was sent out to him; and in 1791 he succeeded Sir Elijah Impey as chief justice. After residing in the East for twenty-five years, he returned to Europe, and died at Paris 9 May, 1803.

CHAMBERS, SABINE, a Catholic divine, was a native of Leicestershire, and received his education at Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. Being dissatisfied with the Protestant religion he went abroad, and at Paris entered the Society of Jesus. He was a good divine and professor in that faculty at Dole. At length he was sent on the English mission, where he laboured during the twenty-five years preceding his death, which occurred 10 March, 1633, æt. 74. He published 'The Garden of the Blessed Virgin Mary,' 8vo., St. Omer, 1619.

CHAMBERS, SIR WILLIAM, an architect, was born in Sweden 1726, but was descended from a Scotch family. At the age of two years he was brought to England and placed in a school at Ripon, Yorkshire. After going on a voyage to China, he applied himself to architecture, under the patronage of Lord Bute, by whose interest he was appointed drawing-master to the Prince of Wales. His first employment as an architect was in building a villa for Lord Besborough at Roehampton, after which he was engaged to lay out the royal gardens at Kew, where he introduced the Chinese ornaments. In 1771 he was honoured with the Swedish order of the Polar Star, and in 1775 appointed to conduct the building of Somerset House. He also held the places of architect to the king, surveyor-general to the Board of Works, and treasurer of the Royal Academy. Died 8 March, 1796. He published, 'Designs for Chinese Buildings;' 'A Treatise on Civil Architecture;' 'Plans, Elevations, and Sections of the Gardens at Kew;' and 'A Dissertation on Oriental Gardening.'

CHAMBERS, WILLIAM FREDERIC, M.D., F.R.S., a distinguished physician, was born in India 1796, being the eldest son of William Chambers, a gentleman in the civil service of the East India Company. He received his education at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was created M.D. 1818. He attained to great eminence in his profession in London, being appointed physician to William IV., and afterwards to Queen Victoria. He was also nominated a knight commander of the Guelphic order by King William, but never assumed the title. Dr. Chambers died at Kordle Cliff, Hampshire, 16 Dec., 1855.

CHAMBRE, FRANÇOIS ILHARRANT DE LA, a doctor of the Sorbonne, born 2 Jan., 1698, at Paris, where he died 16 Aug., 1753. He composed a treatise on the True Religion; another on the Church of Jesus Christ; and many other theological works.

CHAMBRE, MARTIN CUREAU DE LA, a physician, born at Mans 1594, and died 29 Nov., 1669. He was physician to Louis XIV., and one of the first members of the French academy, and of that of sciences. Among his works are 'Les Caractères des Passions;' 'L'art de connoître les Hommes;' and 'De la connoissance des Bêtes.'

CHAMFORT, SÉBASTIEN ROCH NICOLAS, a poet, dramatist, and miscellaneous writer, born near Clermont, in Auvergne, 1741. He took an active part in the Revolution, and destroyed himself to avoid the guillotine 13 April, 1794. His collected works have passed through several editions.

CHAMIER, DANIEL, a Protestant divine, was born at Montélimart, in Dauphiné, about 1570, and became professor at Montauban, where he was killed by a cannon ball when that place was besieged 16 Oct., 1621. He drew up the edict of Nantes, and wrote a book against Bellarmine; but his most esteemed works are a treatise, 'De Œcumenico Pontifice,' and 'Epistolæ Jesuiticæ.'

CHAMILLARD, ETIENNE, a Jesuit, born at Bourges 11 Nov., 1656; died at Paris 1 July, 1730. He published an edition of Prudentius ad usum Delphini; and Dissertations on medals, gems, and other monuments of antiquity.

CHAMILLART, MICHEL DE, a favourite of Louis XIV. of France, who made him his comptroller-general of the finances, and minister at war. Born 1651; died 14 April, 1721.

CHAMISSO, ADALBERT VON, a poet, naturalist, and traveller, born in France 27 Jan., 1781; died at Berlin 21 Aug., 1838. His most popular work was 'Peter Schlemihl, the Shadowless Man.'

CHAMOUSSET, CLAUDE HUMBERT PIARRON DE, a philanthropist, born at Paris 1717; died 27 April, 1773.

CHAMPAGNE, PHILIPPE DE, a painter, born at Brussels 1602; died at Paris 12 Aug., 1674. His nephew, Jean Baptiste Champagne, was a good artist, and a member of the academy. He was born 1643, and died 1688.

CHAMPEAUX, GUILLAUME DE, bishop of Cha-

CHAMPIER.

Jons-sur-Marne, the antagonist of Abelard, who had been his pupil, died 1121. He wrote a treatise on the Origin of the Soul.

CHAMPIER, BENOÎT, CURTIUS SYMPHORËEN, a French medical writer and historian, founder of the college of physicians at Lyons, was born 1472, and died 1539. His principal work is 'Les grans Chroniqueurs des Princes de Savoye et de Piedmont.'

CHAMPION, ANTHONY, was born at Crowdon, Surrey, 5 Feb., 1724-5, and educated at Cheam School and Eton, from whence he went to St. Mary Hall, Oxford, after which he entered of the Middle Temple. He became a member of that society, and served in two parliaments. Died 22 Feb., 1801. His 'Miscellanies in prose and verse, English and Latin,' were published in 1801 by Lord Lyttelton.

CHAMPION, JOSEPH, an English penman, was born at Chatham in 1709. He was educated under Snell, and afterwards kept a school in St. Paul's Churchyard, but latterly in Bedford Street. The time of his death is not ascertained, but he appears to have been living in 1762. His works are 'Practical Arithmetic;' 'Tutor's Assistant,' 40 plates; 'Comparative Penmanship;' 'New and Complete Alphabets;' and various copy-books.

CHAMPION, RICHARD, an eminent porcelain manufacturer of Bristol, died 1787.

CHAMPION, THOMAS. See CAMPION.

CHAMPLAIN DE BROUAGE, SAMUEL, a French voyager, was born in Saintonge about 1600. Henry IV. appointed him to the command of a ship for making discoveries on the coast of America, where he entered the gulf of St. Lawrence, and founded Quebec, of which he became the first governor. He also settled a commercial company in Canada, in which country is a lake still called by his name. He died 1635. Champlain published 'Voyages de la nouvelle France, dite Canada.'

CHAMPMESLE, MARIE DESMARES, a celebrated French actress, born 1644; died 15 March, 1698.

CHAMPNEY, ANTHONY, D.D., an English Catholic divine, was descended from a Yorkshire family, and born in or about 1569. He pursued his studies successively at Rheims, Rome, and Paris. For some time he was superior of Arras College, in the last-named city—a small community of English clergymen who spent their time in writing books of controversy. In 1619 he was appointed vice-president and divinity lecturer of the English college at Douay, and in 1625 became confessor to the English Benedictine nuns at Brussels. The latter appointment he resigned 1628, when he returned to his former employments at Douay. Coming afterwards to England, he was chosen a canon of the chapter, and subsequently dean. When he died is unknown, but he was alive in 1643. Dr. Champney was a learned theologian, and was engaged in sharp controversies with Francis Mason, Richard Pilkington, and Henry Fern. His works are, 'A Manual of Controversies,' 8vo., Paris, 1614; 'Mr. Pilkington's Parallel Parallel'd: in defence of the Manual of Controversies,' 8vo. Omce, 1620; 'A Treatise on the Vocation of Bishops and other Ecclesiastical Ministers, proving the Ministers of the pretended Reformed Churches to have no Calling,' 4to., Douay, 1616, and in Latin, Paris, 1618; 'Dr. Champney's Legacy: or Instructions for Missioners,' at the end of Bishop Smith's 'Monita quædam utilia,' 12mo., Paris, 1647; 'An Answer to a Letter of a Jesuited Gentleman,' 4to., 1601.

CHAMPOLLION, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French Egyptologist, was born at Figeac 1790, and studied the oriental languages at Paris under Langles and De Sacy. In 1811 he was appointed professor of history in the Lyceum of Grenoble, and keeper of the public library there. Subsequently he became director of the Egyptian museum at the Louvre, and in 1828 went to Egypt at the head of the commission appointed by the French government to examine the monuments of that country. He was preparing for the press a narrative of this expedition when he died at Paris 5 March, 1832. Champollion published several important works on Egyptian hieroglyphics, and deduced a phonetic alphabet, applicable not only to the names and titles of foreign sovereigns, but also to those of the native sovereigns and of the divinities of ancient Egypt. In this discovery, however, he had been preceded by Dr. Young.

CHAMPOLLION-FIGEAC, JEAN JACQUES, a French archaeologist, called Champollion the Elder, to distinguish him from his brother Jean François Champollion. He was born 1778, and filled for some years the office of keeper of the Imperial Library, which he resigned when placed at the head of the commission appointed to organise the archives of France. In this capacity he published a vast number of archaeological works, and edited various rare and curious MSS. During the latter years of his life he was librarian to the Château Imperial of Fontainebleau. Died May, 1867.

CHANCELLOR, RICHARD, an English navigator. He went with Sir Hugh Willoughby to discover a north-west passage to China in 1553, under the direction of Sebastian Cabot; but when his companions perished on the coast of Lapland, where they had stopped to winter, he had the good fortune to reach the Russian shores, where, by means of the letters of introduction which he had with him, the grand duke John Basilovitz received him with kindness, and permitted him a free trade with the country. On his return to England, Chancellor found his patron Edward dead; but Mary was sensible of the advantages of commerce, a company was established, and the lucky adventurer again permitted to visit Russia. On his return home, accompanied by a Russian ambassador, he unfortunately was wrecked on the coast of Norway, and while he endeavoured to provide for the safety of the foreigners with him, he fell a victim to the climate. The Russians safely reached London 1557.

CHANDLER, ANNE, a Suffolk cottager, died at Hotton 1814, aged 74. She wrote a small paraphrase on the fifth chapter of the second Book of Kings; the History of Joseph; the Life of Elijah the Prophet; and several other poetical pieces.

CHANDLER, EDWARD, a learned prelate, was the son of Samuel Chandler, Esq., of the city of Dublin. He received his education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A., and on being ordained priest, became chaplain to Bishop Lloyd, of Lichfield, afterwards of Worcester, who gave him preferment in both those cathedrals. In 1717 Dr. Chandler was nominated to the see of Lichfield, from whence, in 1730, he was translated to Durham. Died 20 July, 1750. He wrote 'A Defence of Christianity,' 1725. This was in answer to Collins's Scheme of Literal Prophecy; and that author having replied to the bishop, his lordship published 'A Vindication of the Defence of Christianity,' 2 vols. 8vo. His other works are Eight occasional Sermons; The Chronological Dissertation prefixed to Arnold's Ecclesiastical; a Preface to Cudworth on Morality; and some Letters in reply to Holloway on the Antiquity of the Hebrew Language. These last were published by Dr. Thomas Sharp.

CHANDLER, JOHN, F.R.S., an apothecary of London, brother of Dr. Samuel Chandler, died 12 Dec., 1780, aged 80. He was author of 'A Treatise on the Disease called a Cold,' 8vo., London, 1761.

CHANDLER, MARY, an English poetess, sister of Dr. Samuel Chandler, mentioned below, was born at Malmesbury, Wiltshire, 1687. She resided at Barb, as a milliner, and one of her poems met with the approbation of Pope. She was never married, and died 11 Sept., 1745.

CHANDLER, RICHARD, a printer, who was in partnership with Caesar Ward, of York. Not meeting with the success which he anticipated, he committed suicide about 1745. He compiled 'Debates in the House of Lords from 1660 to 1741,' 8 vols., London, 1752; and 'Debates in the House of Commons from 1660 to 1741,' 14 vols., London, 1752.

CHANDLER, RICHARD, D.D., was born 1738, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and proceeded to his degree of D.D., 1773, after which he was presented to the living of Worldham, Hampshire, and next to that of Tilehurst, Berkshire. His first publication was the 'Marmoræ Oxoniensia,' 1763. The year following he went out, at the expense of the Dilectanti Society, to make observations in Greece and Asia, the result of which appeared in 1769, in an imperial folio, entitled 'Ionian Antiquities.' In 1774 Dr. Chandler published 'Inscriptiones antiquæ, præsertim Athenis collectæ.' The next year came out his 'Travels in Asia Minor,' which volume was followed by his 'Travels in Greece,' and 'The History of Ilion, or Troy.' His last work was the Life of William of Waynflete; but this was not published till the year after his death, which happened 9 Feb., 1810.

CHANDLER, SAMUEL, D.D., was born at Hungerford, Berkshire, 1693. After studying at an academy in Bridgewater, he became a pupil to Mr. Samuel Jones, at Gloucester. On leaving this seminary, Mr. Chandler went to Leyden, and at his return became minister of the Presbyterian congregation at Peckham; but meeting with some losses in the South Sea scheme, he engaged in the book-selling business, in partnership with Mr. Gray in the Poultry, who himself afterwards became a minister, and was ordained in the Church of England. Mr. Chandler, on entering into this concern, did not forsake the pastoral office, and in addition to his charge at Peckham, was chosen lecturer at the Old Jewry. His sermons at this institution he digested into one discourse, and published it with the title of 'A Vindication of the Christian Religion,' which he presented to Archbishop Wake, who paid him a handsome compliment in return. About 1726 he settled as the stated minister of the Old Jewry, after which he relinquished business, and obtained the degree of D.D. from Edinburgh and Glasgow. On the death of George II. he published a sermon, in which he compared that monarch to David. This led Peter Annett to print his tract entitled, 'The History of the Man after God's own Heart,' in which the character of David was grossly vilified. Dr. Chandler then published 'A Review of the History of the Man after God's own Heart;' and he also prepared for the press 'A Critical History of the Life of David,' but it was not published till after the author's death, which happened 8 May, 1766. Besides the above works he wrote 'Reflections on the conduct of the Modern Deists;' 'A Vindication of Daniel's Prophecies,' against Collins; 'A Paraphrase and Commentary on the Prophecy of Joel;' 'The History of Persecution;' 'Vindication of the History of the Old Testament;' 'Sermons,' &c.

CHANDOS, GREY BRYDGES, LORD, succeeded his father William, the fourth lord, 1602. He was made a K.B. 1604, and in the following year was honoured with the degree of M.A. from the university of Oxford. In 1617 he was appointed to receive the Muscovite ambassadors. Died 20 Aug., 1621. He is supposed to have been the author of 'Horæ Subsecivæ, Observations and Discourses,' 8vo., London, 1620.

CHANDOS, SIR JOHN, K.G., a celebrated English captain, whom Edward III. appointed lieutenant-general of the French provinces ceded to England by the treaty of Bretigny. He gazed the day at the battle of Auray, 1364, when he had the glory of compelling the celebrated Bertrand Duguesclin to deliver up his arms. When Edward III. erected Aquitaine into a principality, and bestowed it on his son the prince of Wales, Chandos became his constable. He was slain in the battle of Leusac, near Poitiers, 1369.

CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, D.D., a Unitarian minister, born at Newport, Rhode Island, 7 April, 1780. He was educated at Harvard College, and in 1803 was appointed to the office in which he remained for the rest of his life, that of pastor of the Federal Street congregation in Boston. Died 2 Oct., 1842. Dr. Channing acquired considerable popularity as a preacher, lecturer, and writer. His writings, which were published in a collected form at Glasgow in six octavo vols., include 'Remarks on the Character and Writings of John Milton;' and 'Remarks on the Life and Character of Napoleon Bonaparte.'

CHANTAL. See JANE FRANCES.

CHANTEREAU LE FEBVRE, or LE FEVRE, a French antiquary, born 1588; died 2 July, 1658.

CHANTREY, SIR FRANCIS, a sculptor, was the son of a farmer at Norton, Derbyshire, where he was born 7 April, 1782. He was apprenticed to a carver and frame-maker at Sheffield, and afterwards tried his fortune as a modeller in clay, first in Dublin, then in Edinburgh, and finally in London. A bust sent by him to the exhibition of the Royal Academy in 1811 attracted the notice of Nollekens, who took the young artist under his patronage. Commissions for statues and busts now came in rapidly, and he acquired an extraordinary reputation. He was elected an associate of the Royal Academy 1816, and a member two years afterwards. Subsequently he visited Italy, where he formed an acquaintance with Canova, Thorwaldsen, and Bartolini; and on the accession of William IV. he received the honour of knighthood. Died 25 Nov., 1841. The number of his works is large. Among his masterpieces are the Sleeping Children in Lichfield Cathedral, and the statue of Pitt, in Hanover Square, London.

CHAPELAIN.

CHAPELAIN, JEAN, a French poet, born 1595; died 22 Feb., 1674. He was one of the first members of the French Academy, and drew up the scheme of the Dictionary.

CHAPELLE. See LACHAPELLE.

CHAPELLE, CLAUDE EMMANUEL LUILLIER, a French poet and wit, born 1626; died Sept., 1686.

CHAPMAN, EDMUND, an eminent English surgeon and accoucheur, died at his residence, near Red Lion Square, London, 22 Nov., 1738. He published a 'Treatise on the Improvement of Midwifery, chiefly with regard to the operation; to which are added, Fifty-seven Cases, selected from upwards of 27 years' practice,' 8vo., London, 1733, 1735, 1759; and a 'Reply to Douglas' Short Account of the State of Midwifery in London,' 8vo., London, 1737.

CHAPMAN, FREDERICK HENRY, a Swedish admiral, author of an esteemed Treatise on Naval Architecture, died 1808.

CHAPMAN, GEORGE, an English poet, was born in Kent 1557, and after studying for two years at Oxford, settled in London, where Shakspeare, Sidney, Spenser, Ben Jonson, and Daniel became his friends. He wrote seventeen dramatic pieces, and translated Homer's Iliad and Odyssey into English verse. Died 1634.

CHAPMAN, JOHN, D.D., was born in Hampshire 1704, and educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge. Archbishop Potter gave him the livings of Mersham and Aldington, in Kent, and the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor. He was also appointed archdeacon of Sudbury. As executor to Archbishop Potter, he presented himself to the precentorship of Lincoln, for which he was attacked by a suit in the court of Chancery, where he obtained a decree in his favour, though it was afterwards reversed in the House of Lords. Dr. Chapman was a man of learning, as appears from his 'Eusebius,' in which he ably defended Christianity against Morgan and Tindal. He also wrote two tracts relating to Phlegon, in answer to Dr. Sykes, and assisted Bishop Pearce in his edition of Cicero 'De Officiis.' Died 14 Oct., 1784.

CHAPMAN, MATTHEW JAMES, M.D., an English poet. He took the degree of M.D. at Edinburgh 1820, and subsequently entered Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1832; M.A. 1835). He was author of 'Barbadoes, and other Poems,' 1833; 'Jephtha's Daughter,' a dramatic poem, 1834; and a translation of Theocritus, Bior, and Moschus, 1836. Dr. Chapman died at his residence in Albemarle Street, London, 15 Nov., 1865, aged 69.

CHAPMAN, THOMAS, D.D., was born in the county of Durham 1717. Going to Cambridge, he was elected a fellow of Christ's College, and in 1746 appointed master of Magdalen College. He also became chaplain to the king, and a prebendary of Durham. Died 9 June, 1760. He was author of an 'Essay on the Roman Senate.'

CHAPONE, Mrs. HESTER, was the daughter of Thomas Mulso, Esq., of Twywell, Northamptonshire, where she was born 27 Oct., 1727. Her first production was an Ode to Peace, which was followed by another addressed to Miss Carter upon her Epictetus. She formed a close intimacy with that excellent woman, and their friendship lasted fifty years. The story of Fidelia, written by Miss Mulso, was communicated by Miss Carter to the 'Adventurer.' In 1760 she married Mr. Chapone, but in less than ten months became a widow. In 1770 she accompanied Mrs. Montague to Scotland, and in 1773 published her Letters on the Improvement of the Mind, which work was followed by 'Miscellanies.' Died 25 Dec., 1807. Her works were published in 2 vols. 12mo., 1807.

CHAPPE, CLAUDE, a French mechanic, who invented a system of telegraphing, which has been entirely superseded by the electric telegraph. Born 1763; died 23 Jan., 1805.

CHAPPE D'AUTEROCHE, JEAN, a French abbé and mathematician, born 2 March, 1722. In 1752 he translated into French the works of Dr. Halley, with additions, and was soon afterwards appointed superintendent of some important works in Lorraine. On his return to Paris he was chosen a member of the Academy of Sciences, and in 1759 appointed assistant astronomer. He went to Tobolsk, in Siberia, 1760, to observe the transit of Venus, which was to happen June 6th of the year following. He afterwards visited California for a like purpose. Died 1 Aug., 1769. He published accounts of his voyages to Siberia and California.

CHAPPEL, WILLIAM, a learned prelate, born in Nottinghamshire 10 Dec., 1582, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. He was made dean of Cashel, in Ireland, 1633; provost of Trinity College, Dublin, soon afterwards; and bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross 1638. In the rebellion he suffered many hardships, and on landing in England was sent to prison, but soon obtained his liberty. He died at Derby 13 May, 1649. He wrote 'Methodus Concionandi,' and a treatise on the Use of the Holy Scripture. The Whole Duty of Man has also been ascribed to this prelate, but without probability.

CHAPPELOW, LEONARD, was born 1683, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1712; M.A. 1716; B.D. 1723). He succeeded Ockley in the Arabic professorship 1720. He also obtained a fellowship, which he vacated by accepting the livings of Great and Little Hornced, in Hertfordshire. In 1738 he stood for the mastership of his college, but failed, after a sharp contest. Dying 14 Jan., 1768, he was buried in the church of St. Andrew the Great, where a monument, bearing the following inscription, was erected to his memory:—'In a Vault is inter'd the Body of Leonard Chappelow, B.D., who dyed the 14 of January, 1768, aged 75, formerly Fellow of St. John's College, and was Arabic Professor 48 Years. A Very Pious and Learned Man. Also Mary his Relict, who dyed July 30th, 1779, aged 88.' Professor Chappelow published an edition of Spencer, 'De Legibus Hebraeorum;' 'Elementa Linguae Arabicae;' 'A Commentary on the Book of Job;' two of Bishop Bull's sermons, with a preface; 'The Traveller,' an Arabic poem, translated from Abu Ismael; and 'Six Assemblies, or ingenious Conversations of learned men among the Arabians.'

CHAPPLE, WILLIAM, a topographer, was born in Devonshire 1718, and settling in Exeter, became secretary to the hospital in that city, and steward to Sir William, afterwards Lord Courtenay. Died 1781. He was a contributor to the Lady's Diary and the Gentleman's Magazine; and wrote 'A Review of Part of Risdon's Survey of Devon: containing the general Description of that County; with corrections, annotations, and additions.'

CHAPTAL, JEAN ANTOINE CLAUDE, a famous French chemist, born 4 June, 1756; died 30 July, 1832. Napoleon I. conferred on him several important offices, and summoned him to the chamber of peers. His works relate, almost exclusively, to the application of chemistry to the arts and manufactures. The following have been translated into English:—'Elements of Chemistry;' and 'Chemistry applied to Arts and Manufactures.'

CHAPUZEAU, SAMUEL, a Protestant writer, was a native of Paris. He became preceptor to William, prince of Orange, afterwards king of England; and subsequently was appointed governor of the pages to George, duke of Brunswick Lunenburg. Died 18 Aug., 1701. He published the first two volumes of Tavernier's Voyages, and was author of comedies, &c.

CHARAS, MOÏSE, a French apothecary, who compiled a Pharmacopœia, which was held in great esteem. Born 1618; died 17 Jan., 1698.

CHARDIN, Sir JOHN, F.R.S., a celebrated traveller, was son of a jeweller, of the Protestant persuasion, at Paris, where he was born 1643. He followed his father's trade, and at the age of twenty-one commenced his travels, whence he did not return till 1670. He passed the greater part of this interval in Persia, and he printed at Paris an account of the coronation of Soliman II., king of Persia, and the principal events of the beginning of his reign. Departing again for the East, in 1671, he spent several years in Persia and the East Indies, and laid in a great store of information concerning the state of those countries, which he made public after his second return. He now settled in London, where, in 1681, he was knighted by Charles II., and admitted a fellow of the Royal Society. He was also appointed agent for the East India Company in Holland, and carried on a large trade in precious stones. He married a daughter of a French refugee in London, and dying 25 Dec., 1713, was buried at Chiswick. On his monument in Westminster Abbey is this inscription:—'Sir John Chardin—Nomen sibi fecit eundo.' A collected edition of his travels was published in 1811, in 10 vols. 12mo.

CHARENTON, JOSEPH NICOLAS, a French Jesuit, who served as a missionary in Persia for fifteen years. In literature he is chiefly known by his translation of Mariana's History of Spain. Born 1649; died at Paris 10 Aug., 1735.

CHARENTE DE LA CONTRIE, FRANÇOIS ATHANASE, a French royalist, celebrated for his able resistance in La Vendée against the republicans. Born 21 April, 1763; executed 29 March, 1796.

CHARKE, CHARLOTTE, youngest daughter of Colley Cibber, was educated in a manner more fitting the character of a boy than a girl. She early married Charke, a violinist, whose debaucheries soon caused a separation, and threw a thoughtless wife into the vortex of dissipation. The stage for a while supported Mrs. Charke, and from a humble position she rose to capital characters. Her temper proved the source of many calamities. She quarrelled with Fleetwood, the manager, and though reconciled, she again transgressed, and at last had recourse to the scanty pittance of a strolling company. She died in great distress 6 April, 1760. Mrs. Charke published 'The Art of Management, or Tragedy expelled,' 1735, a dramatic piece intended as a satire on Fleetwood; 'A Narrative of her Life,' 1755; 'The Lover's Treat; or, unnatural Hatred;' and 'The History of Henry Dumont, Esq., and Miss Charlotte Evelyn, with some critical Remarks on comic Actors.'

CHARLES II.

CHARKE, WILLIAM, a noted Puritan divine, who received his education at Peterhouse, Cambridge, from which university he was ejected in consequence of his opposition to the received doctrines of the Established Church. In 1681 he was chosen preacher to the society of Lincoln's Inn, of which situation he was deprived for non-conformity in 1593. Died 1617. He published several pieces against the Catholics.

CHARLEMAGNE, or Charles the Great, king of France, and emperor of the West; born 742. He was the son of Pepin, and succeeded his brother Carloman, king of France, 771. After defeating the Saxons, and putting an end to the monarchy of the Lombards, he was crowned emperor 800. This great prince was not only a warrior, but an encourager of learning, and the founder of several universities. Died 28 Jan., 814.

CHARLEMONT, JAMES CAULFIELD, EARL OF, second son of the third Viscount Charlemont, was born in Dublin 18 Aug., 1728, and was created an earl 1763, in consequence of his important services in quelling an insurrection in Ulster. He was intimately acquainted with Burke, whom he introduced to the celebrated Gerard Hamilton, Flood, and other eminent politicians. In 1764 he visited London, and was introduced to Johnson, Goldsmith, Reynolds, and Hogarth, the last of whom he especially patronised. In 1770 he headed, with Flood, the independent party against Lord Townshend, whose administration he vehemently opposed; and in 1778 he took the command of the armed association called the Irish Volunteers. He was elected president of the Royal Irish Academy 1786; and died 4 Aug., 1799. Several of the earl's letters have been printed, but his History of Italian Poetry remains in MS.—Rose.

CHARLES MARTEL, son of Pepin Heristal, and duke of Austrasia, conquered France, and defeated and slew 350,000 of the Saracens. Born 694; died 23 Oct., 741.

CHARLES I., emperor of Germany. See CHARLEMAGNE.

CHARLES II., The Bald, emperor of Germany, was born 823; crowned king of France 840; elected emperor by the Pope and people of Rome 875; died 6 Oct., 877.

CHARLES III., The Fat, emperor of Germany, and king of France. He was elected king of Italy, and emperor 881, but was driven from his throne by the intrigues of his prime minister; and died 12 Jan., 888.

CHARLES IV., emperor of Germany, and king of Bohemia, ascended the imperial throne 1347, and died 29 Nov., 1378.

CHARLES V., emperor and king of Spain, was born at Ghent 1500, came to the Spanish crown 1516, and to that of the empire three months afterwards. He resigned all his dignities 1555, retired to a monastery, and died 21 Sept., 1558, 'dissatisfied with the world, his son, and himself.'

CHARLES VI. was proclaimed king of Spain 1703, and elected emperor of Germany 1711. A great part of his reign was spent in war. Died 20 Oct., 1740.

CHARLES VII., elector of Bavaria in 1726. He contested the imperial throne with Maria Teresa; and died 30 Jan., 1745.

CHARLES I., king of France. See CHARLES II., emperor.

CHARLES II., king of France. See CHARLES III., emperor.

CHARLES III.

CHARLES III., The Simple, born 17 Sept., 879, and ascended the throne of France 893. On the death of Louis IV. he was elected emperor, but he was reduced to a small dominion by the usurpations of his nobles, and the encroachments of the Normans. He had for a favourite minister one Haganon, who was so odious to the nobles that they revolted against the king because he would not remove him. They chose Robert, of the blood royal, who was crowned by the archbishop of Rheims 922. The same year a battle was fought between the two monarchs, in which Robert was slain; but his son, Hugh the Great, defeated Charles, who fled for shelter to the count of Vermandois, at whose castle he died 7 Oct., 929.

CHARLES IV., The Fair, third son of Philip the Fair, obtained the crown of France 1321. In his reign a fierce war raged between France and England, which ended in the concession of the province of Guienne to the latter kingdom. Died 1 Feb., 1328, aged 33.

CHARLES V., The Wise, was born 21 Jan., 1337. He was the first prince who had the title of dauphin; was crowned king at Rheims 1364; and died 16 Sept., 1380.

CHARLES VI., The Well-beloved, son of the preceding, was born 3 Dec., 1368; crowned 1380; died 20 Oct., 1422. During his reign France was invaded and conquered by Henry V., king of England.

CHARLES VII., The Victorious, so called because he regained his kingdom (with the exception of Calais) from the English. Born 22 Feb., 1403; crowned 1422; died 22 July, 1461.

CHARLES VIII., The Affable, son of Louis XI., ascended the throne of France 1483, aged 13. He made himself master of the kingdom of Naples, and was crowned by Pope Alexander VI. emperor of Constantinople. He obtained in 1495 a great victory over the Italians, though their army was five times as large as his own. Died 7 April, 1498.

CHARLES IX., king of France, was born 27 June, 1550, and succeeded to the throne 1560. His mother, the haughty Catharine de Medici, obtained the regency, which trust she abused in so shameful a manner that the Protestants revolted, and a fierce civil war ensued, in which the insurgents were unsuccessful. The cruel massacre of St. Bartholomew will remain a foul blot on the memory of this prince, or rather of those under whose management he was. Charles died 30 May, 1574.

CHARLES X., king of France, was born 9 Oct., 1757, and succeeded to the throne 1824. The revolution of 1830 compelled him to leave his country, and after passing some time in Great Britain he removed to Austria, where he died 4 Nov., 1836.

CHARLES I., duke of Lorraine, claimed the French throne, but was defeated, and died 994.

CHARLES II., duke of Lorraine, a prudent and warlike prince, died 25 Jan., 1430-1.

CHARLES III., duke of Lorraine, was born 1543, and died 14 May, 1608.

CHARLES IV., duke of Lorraine, was fond of military glory, but lost his dominions, and died 18 Sept., 1675.

CHARLES V., nephew of the preceding, entered the service of the Emperor Leopold, and acquired great military renown. Born 1643; died 18 April, 1690.

CHARLES ALEXANDER of Lorraine, grandson of the preceding, was general of the imperial armies, and a brave warrior. Born 1712; died 4 July, 1750.

CHARLES I., king of Naples, and brother to the king of France, was born 1220, and died 7 Jan., 1285.

CHARLES II., The Lame, king of Naples, was born 1248, and died 6 May, 1309.

CHARLES III., king of Naples, grandson of the preceding, was born 1345; obtained the kingdom, 1380; and died 5 Feb., 1386.

CHARLES GUSTAVUS X., king of Sweden, was born 1622; ascended the throne 1654; died 13 Feb., 1660.

CHARLES XI., king of Sweden, son of the preceding, was born 1655; succeeded to the throne 1660; died 15 April, 1707.

CHARLES XII., king of Sweden, was born 27 June, 1682, being son of Charles XI., on whose death he succeeded to the crown. His reign was one continued scene of bloodshed, and terminated at the siege of Frederickshall, in Norway, where he was slain 30 Nov., 1718.

CHARLES XIII., king of Sweden, was born 1748, and died 5 Feb., 1818.

CHARLES XIV. (Bernadotte), king of Sweden, was born 1764; proclaimed king 1818; and died 8 March, 1844.

CHARLES I., king of Spain. See CHARLES V., emperor.

CHARLES II., king of Spain, succeeded his father, Philip IV., 1665, and died 1 Nov., 1700. He was the last of the eldest branch of the Austrian princes who reigned in Spain.

CHARLES III., king of Spain, was born 1716, and died 14 Dec., 1788.

CHARLES IV., king of Spain, was born 1748, and died 28 Nov., 1819.

CHARLES II., The Bad, king of Navarre, was born 1332, and died 1 Jan., 1387.

CHARLES I., king of England, was born 1600, and succeeded to the throne in 1625, on the death of his father, James I. His reign was turbulent, and in the civil war he was defeated. At last he was tried before a self-created court of his subjects, condemned, and beheaded at Whitehall, 30 Jan., 1648-9.

CHARLES II., king of England, son of the preceding, was born 1630; restored to the throne 1660; and died 6 Feb., 1684-5.

CHARLES EMANUEL I., duke of Savoy, surnamed The Great, an ambitious prince and a brave warrior, was born 1562, and died 26 July, 1630.

CHARLES EMANUEL II., son of Victor Amadeus I., succeeded to the dukedom of Savoy 1638, and died 1675.

CHARLES EMANUEL III., son of Victor Amadeus II., became duke of Savoy and king of Sardinia 1730, and died 22 Feb., 1773.

CHARLES EMANUEL IV., king of Sardinia from 1796 to 1802; died 1819.

CHARLES ALBERT, king of Sardinia, was born 1798; succeeded to the throne 1831; and died 18 July, 1849.

CHARLES DE VALOIS, count of Maine and Anjou, brother of Philip IV., was born 1270, and died 16 Dec., 1325.

CHARLES DE BLOIS, pretender to the dukedom of Brittany, died 20 Sept., 1304.

CHARLES THE BOLD, duke of Burgundy, was born 1433, and slain 5 Jan., 1477.

CHARLES EDWARD.

CHARLES EDWARD LOUIS PHILIP CASIMIR, commonly called The Young Pretender, was born at Rome 31 Dec., 1720, and died at Florence 31 Jan., 1788. He was the eldest son of James, who, by his adherents, was designated as the third king of England of that name. On 16 July, 1745, he landed on the coast of Lochaber, in Scotland, and at Perth published a manifesto, containing a declaration of his claims to the English throne. About 1500 Highlanders joined his standard, at the head of whom he marched to Edinburgh; but though he took the city the castle resisted his efforts. Sir John Cope now hastened against the young adventurer, who encountered him at Preston Pans, and defeated him. This advantage inspired the insurgents, and increased their numbers to such a degree that they made an irruption into England and invested Carlisle, which surrendered in less than three days. From thence Charles advanced to Penrith, and pushed on as far as Manchester, where he established his head quarters, and was joined by about 200 English under Colonel Towler. Thence he pursued his course to Derby, with the intention of going by the way of Chester into Wales, where he expected to be joined by a number of his partisans. This intention, however, was overruled; nor did he, as he might have done, march towards London, where he had many adherents who would have welcomed his approach. Instead of this he wasted his time, and on hearing of the arrival of the Duke of Cumberland made a precipitate retreat into Scotland, where, on the 22nd of Jan., he defeated the royalists under General Hawley, at Falkirk. The elation, however, produced by this advantage was of short duration, for, 16 April, 1746, the representative of the house of Stuart and that of the reigning family encountered each other on the plains of Culloden, near Inverness. The battle began about noon, when the English artillery did terrible execution among the Highlanders, who fought with desperation, but being unsupported by the French, were completely overthrown. The slaughter was dreadful, and, to the disgrace of the victor, many of the Scotch were butchered in cold blood. Charles Edward escaped with great difficulty, and after wandering from place to place about five months, got on board a privateer, which conveyed him to France, from whence, at the peace, he was obliged to go to Rome, where he married the Princess Stolberg. In 1759 he visited London in disguise, but ministers and the king knew of his arrival, though they prudently took no notice of it. He left a daughter, called the princess of Albany.

CHARLES, JOSEPH, vicar of Wighton, Norfolk, was author of a very singular book, entitled, 'The Dispersion of the Men at Babel considered, and the Principal Cause of it inquired into,' 8vo., London, 1755; 2nd edit., 2 vols. 8vo., 1769. He died in 1796.

CHARLES, THOMAS, a Welsh divine, born in Caermarthenshire Oct., 1755, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford. He took orders in the Established Church, but after holding a curacy in Somersetshire, and another in Wales, he withdrew from that communion about 1785, and during the remainder of his life was an active minister among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists. Died 5 Oct., 1814. He edited several works in Welsh, and prepared two editions of the Bible in that language; but his most important literary production was a Scripture Dictionary in Welsh, entitled 'Geiriadu Ysgrythyrol,' 4 vols. 8vo., 1811.

CHARLESWORTH, JOHN, a divine, was born 1742; educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; collated to the rectory of Ossington, Nottinghamshire died 30 Nov., 1821. Besides several occasional discourses, he published 'Practical Sermons selected and abridged from various authors,' 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1788-93.

CHARLETON, LEWIS, bishop of Hereford, died 23 May, 1369. He was distinguished both as a divine and mathematician.

CHARLEVAL, CHARLES FAUCON DE RIS, Sieur DE, a French poet, born 1612; died 9 March, 1693.

CHARLEVOIX, PIERRE FRANÇOIS XAVIER DE, a French Jesuit, who for several years was a missionary in America. His History of Paraguay, and Travels in North America, have been translated into English. Born 1682; died 1 Feb., 1761.

CHARLIER, JEAN. See GERSON.

CHARLOTTE AUGUSTA, the only child of King George IV., by his cousin Caroline, second daughter of the duke of Brunswick, was born at Carlton House 6 Jan., 1796. Her first years were passed under the maternal roof at Charlton, in Kent, after which she had a separate establishment at Shrewsbury House, on Blackheath, where her education was superintended by the countess dowager of Elgin, and Miss Garth. In 1806 Dr. Fisher, bishop of Exeter, became her tutor, and Dr. Nott sub-preceptor; but the latter was soon afterwards superseded by Dr. Short, and the place of governess filled by Lady de Clinton. The progress of her royal highness in every mental accomplishment was highly gratifying to her friends and promising to the nation. The town establishment of the princess was at Warwick House; but upon some occasion, on which it would be painful to be explicit, the household was broken up, and she was taken under the immediate care and observation of her father. It was the intention of the royal family to unite her in marriage to the hereditary prince of Orange; but in 1814 she declared her aversion to the match, and on 2 May, 1816, espoused Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, afterwards king of the Belgians. Great rejoicings took place on the occasion, and parliament was profuse in its grants to the illustrious couple, settling the enormous annuity of fifty thousand a year on the prince in case of his being left a widower. The sad event actually occurred at Claremont, in Surrey, on the 6th of Nov., 1817, after the princess had been delivered of a still-born child. Much blame was attached to the medical attendants, but whether on any just grounds it is difficult to decide. Numerous anecdotes of her royal highness were related with incredible industry, and swallowed with equal avidity after her demise; but the memoirs of her that were then published were for the most part made up of pure invention.

CHARLOTTE SOPHIA, second daughter of Charles Louis Frederick, duke of Mecklenburg Stralitz, was born 19 May, 1744; was married to George III. king of England, 8 Sept., 1761; and died at Kew 17 Nov., 1818.

CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH. See TONNA.
CHARLTON, LIGNEL, a topographer, author of 'The History of Whitley, and of Whitley Abbey, divided into three Books,' 4to., York, 1779. His epitaph in Whitley churchyard has never, I believe been printed, and I therefore insert it in this place:— Erected to the Memory of Lionel Charlton, Philomath, who died the 16th of May, 1788, aged 66 Years. Also Mary, his Wife, who died the 9th of March, 1805, aged 72 years. Also two of their Children, who died in their infancy.'

CHARLTON, RICE, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent physician of Bath, author of a Treatise on the Bath Waters, died at Woodhouse, in the parish of Olveston, Gloucestershire, 23 Oct., 1788.

CHARNOCK, JOB, an English adventurer, who, in the middle of the seventeenth century, went to India, and became governor of the factory of the East India Company, near Hooghly. By singular address he gained the favour of the king of Bengal, who granted him the land on which Calcutta now stands. This district was then overrun with jungles, which Charnock cleared, and erected a fort and factory. About the year 1699 he rescued a young Hindoo widow from the funeral pile, and married her. She lived seven or eight years afterwards; and on her death Charnock enclosed a large piece of ground, where he erected a mausoleum to her memory, and once a year sacrificed a cock to her manes. He died 10 Jan., 1692, and was interred in the same sepulchre. He had several children, one of whom, a daughter, married Charles Eyre, the chief of the factory. Mr. Orme, in his valuable fragments of Indian History, erroneously calls him Chanock.

CHARNOCK, JOHN, F.S.A., was born 28 Nov., 1756, being the only son of John Charnock, Esq., a native of Barbadoes, and once an eminent advocate at the English bar. He received his education at Winchester School, under Dr. Warton, and removed from thence to Merton College, Oxford, which he left without a degree. After this he entered as a volunteer in the naval service; but though born to good prospects he experienced severe disappointments, and died in the King's Bench 16 May, 1807. His works are 'The Rights of a Free People'; 'Biographia Navalis,' 6 vols., forming a supplement to Campbell's Admirals; 'A Letter on Finance and National Defence'; 'History of Marine Architecture,' 3 vols.; 'Life of Lord Nelson'; 'Loyalty, or Invasion defeated,' a tragedy.

CHARNOCK, ROBERT, vice-president of Magdalen College, Oxford, was executed in March, 1695-6, for attempting to assassinate King William III.

CHARNOCK, STEPHEN, a nonconformist divine, was descended of a Lancashire family, and born in London 1628. He was educated first at Emanuel College, Cambridge, from whence, in 1649, he removed to New College, Oxford, of which he became fellow. He was for some time chaplain to Henry Cromwell, in Ireland, and afterwards officiated to a congregation in London, where he died 27 July, 1680. His works were collected, after his death, into 2 vols. folio; the best is a Discourse on Providence.

CHARNOCK, THOMAS, an alchemist, born in Kent 1526, and educated at Oxford. He spent his life in vainly searching for the philosopher's stone. On his marriage he settled in Bridgewater, Somersetshire, but afterwards removed to Comadge, in the same county, where he died in April, 1581. He was author of a work in English verse, 'The Breviary of Natural Philosophy,' printed, with other pieces of his composition, in Ashmole's 'Theatrum Chemicum'; and 'The principal rules of Natural Philosophy, figuratively set forth to the obtaining of the Philosopher's Stone.'

CHARPENTIER, FRANÇOIS, a learned Frenchman, born at Paris 15 Feb., 1620; died 22 April, 1702. He wrote a translation of Xenophon's Cyropædia, and Life of Socrates; On the Excellence of the French Language, &c.

CHARRON, PIERRE, a French divine and popular preacher, born at Paris 1541. Queen Margaret appointed him her chaplain. He formed a close friendship with Montaigne, and resided with him at Bordeaux, where he composed his book 'Les Trois Verités,' or 'The Three Truths.' These three truths are:—1. That there is a God and a true religion. 2. That of all religions the Christian is the only true one. 3. That of all Christian communions the Roman Catholic is the only true church. The bishop of Cahors was so pleased with this work that he made the author his vicar-general. Charron afterwards obtained some dignities in the church of Condom. In 1601 he printed his famous work 'On Wisdom,' which has been translated into English by Sampson Lennard and George Stanhope, D.D. Charron died 16 Nov., 1603.

CHARTIER, ALAIN, secretary to Charles VI. and Charles VII. of France. He was so highly esteemed, on account of his writings, by Margaret of Scotland, first wife of Louis XI., that, finding him one day asleep in a chair, she drew near and kissed him. The nobility of her suite expressing surprise at this, Margaret said, laughing, 'I did not kiss the man, but the mouth which has uttered so many excellent things.' Alain Chartier, who wrote better in prose than in verse, was called the Father of Eloquence. He is supposed to have died about 1458. His works were printed 1617.

CHARTIER, JOHN, a French Benedictine, brother of Alain Chartier, and author of a life of Charles VII., which was printed 1661.

CHARTIER, RENÉ, a French physician, editor of the works of Hippocrates and Galen, was born 1572, and died 29 Oct., 1654.

CHASSENEUX, BARTHÉLEMI DE, a French advocate and legal writer, born 1480; died 15 April, 1541.

CHASTELAIN, CLAUDE, an ecclesiastic of Paris, who composed a Universal Martyrology, and other hagiographical works. Born 1639; died 20 March, 1712.

CHASTELET, GABRIELLE ÉMILIE LE TONNELIER DE BRETEUIL, Marchioness DU, a French lady of extraordinary erudition, born 1706; died 10 Aug., 1749. She published an Analysis of the Philosophy of Leibnitz, and translated Newton's Principia.

CHASTELET, PAUL HAY, Sieur DU, was born of a noble family in Brittany 1592 or 1593. He wrote most of Richelieu's state papers, and became president of the court of judicature in the army, and counsellor of state. He was also one of the first members of the French Academy, and a man of irreproachable integrity. Died 6 April, 1636. His most remarkable works are a History of Bertrand Duguesclin; and 'Plusieurs de pieces pour servir à l'Histoire.'

CHASTELLUX, FRANÇOIS JEAN, Marquis DE, a field-marshal of France, born 1734; died 28 Oct., 1788. He is well known by his writings, the principal of which are 'An Essay on Public Happiness,' and 'Travels in North America.' Both these have been translated into English.

CHATEAUBRIAND, FRANÇOIS RÉNÉ, Vicomte

CHATEAUBRUN.

DE, a distinguished French writer and politician, born at St. Malo 4 Sept., 1768. In 1791 he visited the United States, and on his return joined the army of Conde for a short time. In 1793 he began a life of great misery as an emigrant in London, amidst a group of exiled nobles equally wretched. He continued in England nearly eight years, maintaining himself by translating for the booksellers, and giving lessons in French and Latin. In 1797 he published in London his 'Essay on Revolutions,' a work full of scepticism; but the death of his mother, in 1798, gave a new direction to his thoughts, and restored his faith. In 1800 he went to Paris, and published his romance, 'Atala,' in the columns of the 'Mercure.' This was followed in 1802 by the 'Genie du Christianisme,' which made a deep impression on the public mind. The first consul was so pleased with this work that he took the author into favour, and strove to bind him to his service by two successive appointments, which, however, Chateaubriand gave up on the execution of the duc d'Enghien. On the fall of the empire in 1814, he published his famed pamphlet, 'De Bonaparte et des Bourbons,' the influence of which in disposing the public mind to welcome the returned family was so powerful that it was equal, said Louis XVIII., to an army of 100,000 men. In 1822 Chateaubriand was sent ambassador to the British court, and the next year was appointed minister of public affairs, which office he held till 1824. Afterwards he attacked the monarchy with such merciless rancour that it crumbled beneath his blows. Died 4 July, 1848. — Engl. Cycl.

CHATELHERAULT, JAMES HAMILTON, DUKE OF, and Earl of Arran, is frequently mentioned in the reign of Mary queen of Scots, as being the next heir to the Scottish throne, and his title had been frequently recognized by parliament. He was appointed regent during the minority of Mary. His title of Chatelherault he received from Henry II. of France, 1548, and with it a pension of 12,000 livres per annum. Died 22 Jan., 1574-5. See also ARRAN.

CHATHAM, WILLIAM PITT, EARL OF, born 15 Nov., 1708, being the son of Robert Pitt, Esq., of Boscobock, in Cornwall. He was educated at Eton, and in 1726 entered Trinity College, Oxford, which he left for the military profession. In 1735 he was returned to parliament for Old Sarum, and existed early in the ranks of opposition against Walpole. In his speeches against the Spanish convention, and against the bill for registering seamen, he displayed such acuteness, vehemence, and depth of argumentation, as astonished the house, and marked him as worthy of the highest offices of the state. The duchess of Marlborough, applauding the patriotism of the young orator, left him in her will a legacy of £10,000 for defending, as she said, the laws of his country. In 1746, in the administration which had succeeded Walpole, he became joint vice-treasurer of Ireland, and soon after treasurer and paymaster of the army, and a privy councillor. In 1755 he resigned, and though the next year he received the seals of secretary of state, he did not long continue in office; but the public voice accompanied him in his retirement, and in June, 1757, he became prime minister. His restoration to power was a new era of splendid conquests and of national glory. England proved everywhere successful in consequence of his judicious plans. Quebec was conquered, and the French were defeated in Africa and in the East. The accession of George III. was soon followed by the resignation of the minister, who refused to cooperate with an administration which, by the influence of Lord Bute, as it is supposed, thwarted his vigorous measures. His retirement was attended by the grant of a peerage to his lady and a pension of £3,000. He censured the peace of 1763, declaring that England, from the extent of her victories, was entitled to more solid advantages. He afterwards remained silent till the question of general warrants, in 1764, called forth all his eloquence and the keenness of his satire against those unpopular engines of arbitrary power. In 1766 he accepted the privy seal, and was created earl of Chatham; but he resigned the office 1768. His health now declined, and a hereditary gout undermined his constitution, without, however, diminishing the energetic powers of his mind. During the American war he burst forth from his retirement, and in the House of Peers deprecated severe measures against the colonists. On one of these occasions, after the duke of Richmond had replied to him, the venerable peer rose up to answer the speech, but his debilitated constitution sank under the attempt, and he fell in a fit in the arms of those who were near him. This event happened 8 April, 1778, and he died on the ensuing 11th of May. All parties now united to pay due respect to his memory, and a public funeral and a monument in Westminster Abbey, at the expense of the nation, were immediately voted by parliament.

CHÂTILLON, the Cardinal DE. See COLIGNI.

CHATTERLY, W. S., an English actor, of the Bath and London theatres, died at Lynn, Norfolk, 1821.

CHATTERTON, THOMAS, was born at Bristol 20 Nov., 1752. His father was one of the choristers in the cathedral of that city, and also master of a free school. The ancestors of Chatterton had exercised the office of sexton of St. Mary Redcliffe for a great number of years, to which circumstance is attributed the principal event in his history. At the age of eight he was placed in Colston's charity school, and in 1767 articulated to an attorney, in whose office he had studied time for reading. In 1768, when the new bridge at Bristol was completed, he communicated to Farley's newspaper 'A description of the Friars passing over the old Bridge,' pretended to be taken from an ancient manuscript. This attracted notice and many inquiries, in consequence of which Chatterton became known to Mr. Barrett, a surgeon, who was then engaged in writing a history of Bristol. Chatterton now imparted to his friend several papers which he pretended to have discovered in an old chest in Redcliffe church. Other writings in prose and verse were likewise given by him to Mr. Catcott; and at length Chatterton sent a letter to Horace Walpole, offering to furnish him with notices of a series of great painters who had flourished at Bristol, accompanying this proposal with some verses, which he asserted were written in the fourteenth century by

CHATTO.

Thomas Rowley. Walpole was much pleased; but on submitting the verses to his friends Gray and Mason, they both pronounced them forgeries. After some delay these reliques were returned to Chatterton, who, having obtained his discharge from his master, visited London in 1769, in full confidence of rising by his talents; but after writing for different magazines, and composing songs for the public gardens, he poisoned himself in a fit of despair at a poor lodging in Brook Street, Holborn, 25 Aug., 1770. Some years after this the poems attributed by him to Rowley were made the subject of a long controversy; but at present no doubt is entertained as to their being forgeries. Several editions of Chatterton's works have been published.

CHATTO, WILLIAM ANDREW, author of 'Facts and Speculations on the Origin and History of Playing Cards,' 1848; and of a treatise on Wood Engraving, 1849; died 27 Feb., 1864.

CHAUCER, GEOFFREY, the father of English poetry, was born in London in 1328, and educated at both universities, after which he went abroad. On his return he entered of the Inner Temple, but soon after attended the court, and was made page to the king, who gave him a pension of twenty marks out of the exchequer, which in 1369 was doubled. The year following he was appointed his majesty's shield-bearer. He was sent to Genoa some time after to hire ships for the king's service, and at his return obtained a grant of a pitcher of wine a day, to be delivered by the butler of England, and the place of comptroller of the customs of London. In the reign of Richard II. he was made clerk of the works, but was dismissed from this office about two years afterwards, whereupon he retired into private life, residing at Woodstock and at Donnington Castle, near Newbury, where he employed himself in correcting his works. Henry IV., in the first year of his reign, gave him an annuity of forty marks for his life. He died 25 Oct., 1400, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Chaucer married Philippa Roet, a lady of good family, by which means he became allied to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, who was his great patron while he was himself in power. Chaucer left two sons, one of whom was speaker of the House of Commons, and ambassador to France. Of his poems, the Canterbury Tales are by far the best. There have been several editions of his works.

CHAUDET, ANTOINE DENIS, a French sculptor, born at Paris 31 March, 1793; died 9 April, 1810.

CHAUDON, LOUIS MAIEUL, a French writer, who is best known by his New Historical Dictionary, was born 20 May, 1737, and died 28 May, 1817. He was a Clunian monk.

CHAUPEPIE, JACQUES GEORGE DE, a Protestant divine, born at Leuwarden, of French parents, 9 Nov., 1702, and educated at Franeker. After being admitted into the ministry, he became a preacher at different places, and lastly at Amsterdam, where he died 3 July, 1786. As an author he is best known by his 'Nouveau Dictionnaire Historique et Critique pour servir de Supplement, ou de Continuation, au Dictionnaire de M. Pierre Bayle,' 4 vols. folio, Amsterdam, 1750-6.

born at Nevers 24 May, 1763, and perished by the guillotine 13 April, 1794.

CHAUNCEY, MAURICE, an English historian, was a monk of the Charterhouse in London at the commencement of the Reformation, on which he went to Flanders till the accession of Mary. In 1556 he became prior of the monastery of Shene, in Surrey; but when Elizabeth came to the throne Chauncey went with his brethren to Bruges, and afterwards to Louvain. He died at Paris 12 July, 1581. He was author of 'Historia aliquot nostri sæculi Martyrum, cum pia, tum lectu jucunda, nunquam antehac typis excusa,' 4to., 1550.

CHAUNCEY, CHARLES, B.D., a nonconformist divine, born 1592, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He was vicar of Ware, Hertfordshire, 1627 to 1633, and of Marston St. Laurence, Northamptonshire, from the latter date till 1637. Getting into trouble for nonconformity, he left the Church of England, and fled to New England. For seventeen years he worthily discharged the office of president of Harvard College, New Cambridge, where he died 19 Feb., 1671-2. He was well skilled in all the learned, and especially the oriental languages. He published a single sermon in 1655, and twenty-six sermons on 'Justification' in 1659.

CHAUNCEY, or CHAUNCEY, CHARLES, D.D., an American divine and writer, of the sect called Universalists, was born at Boston 1705, and died 1787.

CHAUNCEY, SIR HENRY, a topographer, was born 1632, and educated at Bishop's Stortford School and Caius College, Cambridge, whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and was called to the bar. In 1661 he was constituted a justice of the peace for Hertfordshire, and at a later period was appointed recorder of the borough of Hertford. In 1681 he was elected reader of the Middle Temple, in which year he received the honour of knighthood. He was made a Welsh judge 1698, and died in April, 1710. Sir Henry published 'The Historical Antiquities of Hertfordshire,' folio, London, 1700, one of the rarest of English topographical works. A reprint, in 2 vols. 8vo., appeared at Hertford in 1827.

CHAUNCEY, ISAAC, eldest son of Charles Chauncey, B.D., above mentioned, was in possession, at the Restoration, of the rectory of Woodborough, Wiltshire. Afterwards he practised physic in London, and finally became a dissenting minister. Died 28 Feb., 1712. He wrote an Essay on Daniel's Prophecy, &c.

CHAUSSE, MICHEL MARIE DE LA, a Frenchman, who settled at Rome, where he died about 1710. He published 'Romanum Museum,' and many other works on antiquary subjects.

CHAUVEAU, FRANÇOIS, a painter and engraver, born at Paris 1613; died 1676. His son René (b. 1663; d. 1722) rose to eminence as a sculptor and architect.

CHAUVEAU-LAGARDE, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a distinguished French advocate, born at Chartres 1707; died 20 Feb., 1841.

CHAUVIN, ÉTIENNE, a Protestant minister, born at Nîmes 1640. He quitted his country on the revocation of the edict of Nantes; became professor of philosophy at Berlin; and died 6 April, 1725. He wrote 'Lexicon Philosophicum,' 'Nouveau Journal des Sçavans,' &c.

CHAZELLES.

CHAZELLES, JEAN MATHIEU DE, an astronomer, born at Lyons 24 July, 1657, assisted Cassini in drawing the meridian line, and in 1685 was made hydrographical professor at Marseilles, in which situation he drew a number of maps and plans. He afterwards visited Egypt, where he measured the pyramids, the four sides of the base of which he found to correspond with the cardinal points of the compass. Died 16 Jan., 1710.

CHEDWORTH, JOHN HOWE, LORD, was born 22 Aug., 1754, and educated at Harrow School and Queen's College, Oxford. He succeeded to the title 1781, on the death of his uncle, the third earl, and died at Ipswich 20 Oct., 1804. His lordship was author of 'Notes upon some of the obscure passages in Shakespeare's Plays; with Remarks upon the Explanations and Amendments of the Commentators in the editions of 1785, 1790, 1793,' 5vo., London, 1805. One hundred and forty of his letters, addressed to the Rev. Thomas Crompton, between Jan., 1780, and May, 1795, were published in a quarto volume in 1828.

CHÉFONTAINES, CHRISTOPHE DE, a divine, born in Brittany about 1532, was consecrated bishop of Caserea 1586, and exercised his episcopal functions in the diocese of Sens, in the absence of Cardinal Pellevé, its titular. His death took place at Rome 20 May, 1595. He was author of many works on divinity, both in French and Latin.

CHEKE, HENRY, eldest son of Sir John Cheke, was born about 1548. After passing through King's College, Cambridge, he became a member of parliament, and in 1581 one of the secretaries to the queen in the north. Died 1586. He is author of 'Acertayne Tragedie wyrtten fyrst in Italian, by Francesco N[iger] Blossentinus,' entitled Freewill, and translated into English; 4to.

CHEKE, SIR JOHN, was born at Cambridge 16 June, 1514, and educated at St. John's College, where he acquired an extraordinary reputation for his knowledge of the learned languages, especially Greek. He was admitted a knight 1529. Henry VIII. granted him an exhibition for encouragement in his studies, and for defraying the cost of his travels abroad. Amongst his pupils at St. John's were William Cecil, afterwards Lord Burghley, Roger Ascham, and William Bill. He became Greek lecturer of the university, and in the foundation of the regius professorships in 1540 was appointed to the Greek chair. His endeavours to reform the pronunciation of that language met with the disapproval of Bishop Gardiner, the chancellor of the university, who issued an authoritative decree enjoining adherence to the old mode of pronouncing Greek. In or about 1544 Cheke was elected public orator, but in July of that year he resigned the office, and left the university on being appointed tutor to Prince Edward. About this time, also, he was made a canon of King's College (now Christ Church), Oxford. Shortly after the accession of his royal pupil to the throne he obtained several grants of lands and rents, and in 1548 was appointed provost of King's College, Cambridge, but continued to act as tutor to the king. He received the honour of knighthood 1551, and two years afterwards was appointed one of the secretaries of state. He concurred in the settlement of the crown on Lady Jane Grey, and acted as secretary of state during her brief reign. On 27 July, 1553, he was committed to the Tower on a charge of treason, but soon regained his liberty, and went abroad, settling eventually at Strasburg, where he earned a subsistence by reading a Greek lecture. As he was travelling with Sir Peter Carew between Brussels and Antwerp, 1566, they were seized by order of King Philip, conveyed to England, and committed to the Tower. In order to regain his freedom and his lands, Cheke became reconciled to the Church of Rome, and made a public recantation of his former opinions before the queen. He survived this about a year, dying in London 13 Sept., 1557. Sir John Cheke was author of 'D. Johannis Chrysostomi de providentia Dei ac de Fato Orationes sex,' a translation from the Greek; 'The Hurt of Sedition, how grievous it is to a Commonwealth;' 'Preface to the New Testament in English,' after the Greek translation, annexed with the translation of Erasmus in Latin, 8vo., London, 1550; 'De chitu Martini Bucer,' 1551; 'Defensio veræ et catholicæ doctrinæ de sacramento,' translated from the English of Cranmer; 'Leo de apparatu Bellico,' translated from the Greek; De pronuntiatione Græcæ linguæ; and an English translation of St. Matthew's Gospel, and of part of that by St. Mark, edited by James Goodwin, 1843. Other works by Sir John Cheke are enumerated in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.'

CHELSUM, JAMES, D.D., was born in Westminster about 1740. From Westminster School he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, but soon afterwards went to Oxford, where he was chosen student of Christ Church. On taking orders he obtained the living of Badger, Shropshire, and the rectory of Droxford, Hampshire. Died 1801. Dr. Chelsum wrote 'Remarks on Gibbon's Roman History,' 1772. Gibbon having noticed this in a contemptuous manner, the doctor answered him in a 'Reply to Mr. Gibbon's Vindication,' 1785. Dr. Chelsum also published some occasional sermons, and is supposed to have been the author of 'An Essay on the History of Mezzotint,' and of a few papers in the 'Olla Podrida.'

CHEMINAIS, TIMOTHÉON, a Jesuit, who acquired great reputation as a preacher, was born at Paris 1652, and died 15 Sept., 1689. His Sermons have been frequently printed.

CHEMNITZ, BOGELAUS PHILIP, grandson of Martin Chemnitz the elder, went to Sweden, where Queen Christina conferred upon him letters of nobility, and appointed him historiographer. He wrote a History of the Swedish Wars in Germany. Born 1605; died 1678.

CHEMNITZ, MARTIN, a Protestant divine, born at Britzen, in Brandenburg, 1522, and educated under Melancthon, after whose death he became the most esteemed divine of the Augustan confession. He died at Brunswick 8 April, 1586. He was author of a Harmony of the Gospels; and of some polemical treatises.

CHEMNITZ, MARTIN, son of the preceding, became chancellor of Schleswig, and died in 1627, aged 66. He wrote 'Historia Navigationis Indiæ Orientalis.'

CHEMNIZER, IVAN IVANOWITZ, a Russian poet and fabulist, born 1744; died 20 March, 1784.

CHENEVIX, RICHARD, was born in England of a French refugee family, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A. 1716; M.A. 1733; D.D. 1744). On taking orders he was appointed domestic chaplain to the earl of Scarborough, and to Lord Whitworth at the congress of Cambrai.

CHENEVIX.

He also accompanied Lord Chesterfield to Holland, and by the interest of that nobleman was preferred, in May, 1745, to the bishopric of Killaloe, whence he was translated, eight months afterwards, to the united sees of Waterford and Lismore. Died 12 Sept., 1777.

CHENEVIX, RICHARD, grand-nephew of the above, was a gentleman of property in Ireland, and devoted his time to scientific and literary pursuits. He contributed numerous papers on chemistry to the Royal Society's 'Transactions,' and was the author of a treatise on mineralogy, a comedy named 'The Mantuan Rivals,' and a tragedy entitled 'Henry VII.,' also of a posthumous work of considerable merit, 'An essay on National Character.' He married the countess of Ronault, and died at Paris 5 April, 1830.

CHENIER, MARIE JOSEPH DE, a French poet, dramatist, and miscellaneous writer, born 1764; died at Paris 10 Jan., 1811.

CHÉRON, ELISABETH SOPHIE, a French painter, engraver, musician, and poet, born at Paris 1648; died 3 Sept., 1711.

CHÉRON, LOUIS, a painter, brother of the preceding, was born at Paris 1660, and died in London 1713.

CHERRY, ANDREW, an actor and dramatic writer, born at Limerick 11 Jan., 1762. After attaining distinction on the Irish stage, he came over to this country, and performed for a time at Drury Lane. He died at Monmouth 12 Feb., 1812. Mr. Cherry wrote some operas and other dramatic pieces.

CHERUBINI, MARIA LUIGI CARLO ZENOBI SALVADOR, a celebrated musical composer, born at Florence 8 Sept., 1760. He exhibited great precocity of intellect, and when he was but thirteen years old a Mass and an interlude of his composition were performed in his native city. Those works were the precursors of others, which were received by the public with great applause, and which procured him a pension from Leopold II., grand duke of Tuscany. After studying under Sarti, at Bologna, for some years, he composed his opera 'Quinto Fabio,' which was brought out in 1782. In 1784 he came to London, where he wrote 'La Finta Principessa,' and brought out his 'Giulio Sabino.' The remainder of his life was for the most part spent in the French capital, where he became director of the Conservatory of Music, and was decorated with the Legion of Honour. Died 16 March, 1842. Cherubini composed the music of thirty-two operas, and twenty-nine pieces for the church. Among the latter a Mass for three voices is highly and deservedly esteemed.

CHESELDEN, WILLIAM, a celebrated surgeon, born at Burrow-on-the-hill, Leicestershire, 19 Oct., 1688. He was placed first with a surgeon at Leicester; and in 1703 became a pupil of Cowper, the anatomist. He also studied practical surgery at St. Thomas's Hospital; and at the age of twenty-two began a course of lectures himself, a syllabus of which was printed in 1711, in which year he was admitted a member of the Royal Society. In 1713 he published his 'Anatomy of the Human Body,' which went through several editions. On the resignation of Mr. Ferri, he was elected head surgeon of St. Thomas's Hospital, besides which he was consulting surgeon to St. George's and the Westminster Infirmary. In 1723 he published his 'Treatise on the high operation for the Stone.' As a lithotomist he stood pre-eminent, and he added to his reputation in 1728 by couching a blind youth, and restoring him to sight. In 1739 Mr. Cheselden was elected a corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, being the first foreigner who ever received that distinction. His Osteography or anatomy of the bones, which came out in 1733, folio, was severely attacked by Dr. Douglas, who had before shown his asperity towards the author. Heister, however, in his anatomy has done justice to Cheselden. In 1737 he was appointed head surgeon to Chelsea Hospital, which he held to his death, 10 April, 1752.

CHESHIRE, JOHN, M.D., an English physician, died 30 April, 1762, aged 67. He wrote 'A Treatise upon the Rheumatism, with observations upon some causes that may produce it,' 8vo., London, 1723.

CHESENE. See DUCHESNE.

CHESTER, ANTHONY, a clergyman of the Church of England, was educated at Merton College, Oxford (B.A. 1821; M.A. 1824). He was author of 'Three Weeks in Palestine,' printed for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 8vo., 1832. Died 10 Dec., 1858, aged 59.

CHESTER, SIR ROBERT, an English poet, received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1585. King James I. knighted him at Whitehall on his progress from Scotland to London 23 July, 1603; and in 1626 he occurs as a justice of the peace for Hertfordshire, and a commissioner for the loan in that county. Died 3 May, 1641. He was author of a very rare work, entitled 'Love's Martyr: or Rosalins Complaint, Allegorically shadowing the Truth of Louc, in the constant Fate of the Phoenix and Turtle. A Poeme enterlaced with much Varietie and Raritie; now first translated out of the venerable Italian Torquato Cœliano, by Robert Chester. With the true Legend of famous King Arthur, the last of the nine Worthies, being the first Essay of a new Brytish Poet: collected out of diverse authentical Records. To these are added some new Compositions of severall modern Writers whose Names are subscribed to their severall Works, upon the first Subject, viz., the Phoenix and Turtle,' 4to., London, 1601. The modern writers are Shaksperc, Jonson, Marston, Chapman, and others.

CHESTERFIELD, PHILIP DORMER STANHOPE, EARL OF, was born in London, 22 Sept., 1694. After a private education, he was sent to Trinity Hall, Cambridge; and at the age of twenty made the tour of Europe. In 1715 he was appointed gentleman of the bed-chamber to the prince of Wales; and about the same time was elected into the House of Commons. In 1726, on the death of his father, he was called to the Upper House. In 1728 he went ambassador to Holland, and on his return was made high steward of the household and knight of the Garter; but he was deprived of the former station for his opposition to Walpole. In 1745 he was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland, from whence he returned the following year, and was made secretary of state, which office he resigned in 1748. He now became ambitious of literary honour, and paid some attention to Johnson, who inscribed to him the plan of his Dictionary; but being neglected by his lordship afterwards, he took no further notice of him, till the earl wrote two papers in the 'World' in favour of the English Dictionary, whereupon the lexicographer sent him one of the severest letters that was ever written. His lordship died 24 March, 1773. He had no issue by his lady, who was the natural daughter of George I.; but he had an illegitimate son, to whom he wrote the celebrated 'Letters,' which exhibit very lax morality. These 'Letters' were published in 2 vols. 4to., 1774, and were followed by two more vols. of miscellaneous works.

CETHAM, HUMPHREY, the founder of the college and library at Manchester, was born 1580, and died 12 Oct., 1653.

CETTLE, HENRY, a prolific English dramatist, flourished between the years 1598 and 1601. Most of his pieces were written in conjunction with other authors.

CETWOOD, KNIGHTLY, D.D., was born at Coventry, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his doctor's degree. He became prebendary of Wells, rector of Broad Rissington, in Gloucestershire, and archdeacon of York. James II. nominated him to the see of Bristol, but the revolution prevented his consecration. He was, however, made dean of Gloucester, and remained so till his death, on 4 April, 1720. He wrote the Life of Lycurgus in the old translation of Plutarch, the life of Virgil, and the preface to the pastorals in Dryden's translation, some poems, three sermons, and a speech in the occasion. His life of Wentworth Dillon, earl of Roscommon, has never been printed, but all the previously unpublished facts contained in it will be found in a paper by Mr. Thompson Cooper, printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for Dec., 1855.

CETWOOD, WILLIAM RUFUS, a dramatic writer, was originally a bookseller in Covent Garden, and afterwards prompter at Drury Lane Theatre. He died poor in March, 1766. Besides some forgotten pieces for the theatre, he wrote 'A General History of the Stage,' 1749.

CHEVALIER, THOMAS, F.R.S., surgeon extraordinary to King George IV., and professor of anatomy and surgery to the Royal College of Surgeons in London, died 9 June, 1824. He published 'An Introduction to a Course of Lectures on the Operations of Surgery,' 1801; 'A Treatise on Gun-shot Wounds,' 1804; and other medical works.

CHEVALLIER, ANTHONY RODOLPH, a Protestant writer, born at Montchamps, near Vire, in Normandy, 16 March, 1522-3. He learnt Hebrew under Francis Vatablus at Paris, and being of the reformed persuasion came to England in the reign of Edward VI., and resided for more than a year in the house of Archbishop Cranmer. He then went to Cambridge, and gave gratuitous lectures on Hebrew, assisting Emmanuel Tremellius, with whom he lodged, and whose step-daughter he married. He also became French tutor to the Princess Elizabeth. On the death of Edward VI. he left England, and was appointed Hebrew professor at Strasburg. Thence he went to Geneva, where he taught Hebrew, and became known to Calvin, by whom he was much esteemed. In 1568 he returned to England, and for some time read a Hebrew lecture at St. Paul's, in London. He was appointed Hebrew lecturer at Cambridge 1569, and shortly afterwards obtained a prebend in the church of Canterbury. After his return to his native country he contrived to escape the massacre of St. Bartholomew, but in doing so was obliged to fly to the hills and woods, whereby he got an ague, of which he died at Guernsey 1572. His works consist of Emendations of Pagninus's 'Thesaurus Linguae Sanctae;' a translation from the Syriac into Latin of the Targum Hierosolymitanum; a Latin version of the Targum of Pseudo-Jonathan on the Pentateuch; corrections of the version of Jonathan's Targum; and 'Rudimenta Hebraica: Linguae accurate methodo et brevitate scripta,' 1567. All these, except the first and last, are printed in Walton's Polyglot.

CHEYNELL.

CHEVERT, FRANÇOIS DE, a French general, born 21 Feb., 1695; died 24 Jan., 1709.

CHEVILLIER, ANDRÉ, doctor and librarian of the Sorbonne, wrote 'The Origin of Printing at Paris;' 'Dissertation on the Council of Chalcedon,' &c. Born 1036; died 8 April, 1700.

CHEVREAU, URBAIN, a French writer, who was secretary to Christina of Sweden, then to the king of Denmark, and lastly to the duke of Maine. Among his works are 'Le Tableau de la Fortune,' and 'The History of the World,' which has been translated into English. Born 20 April, 1613; died 15 Feb., 1701.

CHEYNE, GEORGE, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent physician and mathematician, born in Scotland 1671, and educated at Edinburgh, from whence he removed to London. Here he led rather a free life for some time, in consequence of which he became corpulent and asthmatic to such a degree as scarcely to be able to walk up one pair of stairs. In this state he had recourse to a milk and vegetable diet, by which means he recovered his health, activity, and spirits. He died at Bath 12 April, 1743. His works are 'A new Theory of Fevers;' 'Fluxionum Methodus inversa;' 'Rudimentorum methodi, Fluxionum inversae specimina, adversus Ab. de Moivre;' 'Philosophical Principles of Natural Religion;' 'An Essay on the Method of treating the Gout;' 'An Essay on Health and Long Life;' 'The English Malady, or Treatise of Nervous Diseases;' 'The natural Method of curing the Diseases of the Body.'

CHEYNE, JAMES, rector of the Scotch college at Douay, was born in Aberdeenshire in the sixteenth century. After studying at Aberdeen he went to Paris, and taught philosophy at the college of St. Barbe, from whence he removed to Douay, and after teaching there with great reputation became the head of the seminary. He was also canon and penitentiary of the cathedral of Tournay, and died in 1602. His works are 'Analysis in Philosophiam Aristotelis,' 1573; 'De Sphaera seu globi caelestis fabrica;' 'De Geographia;' 'Orationes de perfecto Philosopho;' 'Analysis et Scholia in Aristot.'

CHEYNE, JANE LADY, eldest daughter of William Cavendish, duke of Newcastle, and wife of Charles Cheyne, who in 1681 was created Viscount Newhaven. She died 8 Oct., 1660, aet. 48, and was buried at Chelsea. Her ladyship was the writer of a drama called 'The Concealed Fancies.'

CHEYNE, JOHN, M.D., a physician, was born at Leith 1777, and after practising some time in Scotland, removed to Dublin. In 1820 he was appointed physician-general to the army in Ireland, but in 1831 he relinquished practice and retired to his estate at Sherington, Buckinghamshire, where he died 31 Jan., 1836. He published several works on medical subjects.

CHEYNELL, FRANCIS, D.D., a fanatic, was the son of a physician at Oxford, and born there in

CHEYNEY.

1608. After taking his bachelor's degree he became fellow of Merton College; but in the Rebellion he joined the Presbyterians, and was chosen a member of the assembly of divines at Westminster. He was also presented to the rectory of Petworth, and made one of the commissioners for reforming the university of Oxford, where he took by force the office of Margaret professor of divinity, and the presidency of St. John's College. At the Restoration he was deprived of his preferments, and died in 1665. He wrote several books, and distinguished himself by his scandalous conduct at the funeral of Chillingworth. His 'Symbolum' is printed in the Gentleman's Magazine for March, 1864.

CHEYNEY, EDWARD, an English prelate, was born about 1513; educated at Cambridge; consecrated bishop of Gloucester 1562; and died 29 April, 1579.

CHIABBERA, GABRIEL, an Italian lyric poet, born 8 June, 1552, at Savona, where he died 14 Oct., 1637.

CHIARAMONTI, SCIPIO, an Italian mathematician and philosopher, born 22 June, 1565, at Cesena, where he died 3 Oct., 1652. He was the founder of the Academy of the Ofuscanti.

CHIARI, FABRIZIO, a painter and engraver, born at Rome 1621; died 1695.

CHIARI, JOSEPH, another painter, born at Rome 1654; died 1727.

CHIARI, PETER, an Italian poet and ecclesiastic, born at Brescia about 1720; died 1788.

CHIAVISTELLI, JACOPO, a painter of Florence, born 1618; died 1698.

CHICHELE, HENRY, archbishop of Canterbury, was born about 1362, at Higham Ferrars, Northamptonshire. He received his education at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he studied the civil and canon law. Such was his reputation, that Henry IV. employed him as ambassador to the pope, and likewise to the court of France. In 1408 he was made bishop of St. David's, and the next year was sent to the council of Pisa. In 1414 he was elected archbishop of Canterbury, in which situation he promoted a contribution to enable Henry V. to carry on the war with France, whither our prelate accompanied him. The archbishop endeavoured to check the principles of reformation propagated by Wickliffe, but at the same time he as strenuously opposed the papal encroachments, for which he was much annoyed by Martin V. In 1442 he applied to Pope Eugenius for leave to resign his see, but before any answer could be received he died, 12 April, 1443. In 1422 Archbishop Chichele founded a collegiate church at Higham Ferrars, to which he attached a hospital for the poor. He also adorned the cathedral of Canterbury, and improved Lambeth Palace; but his noblest work was the foundation of All Souls College, Oxford, in 1437.

CHICHESTER, EDWARD, M.A., a divine of the Established Church in Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1823 was appointed chancellor of the archdiocese of Armagh. He published a work entitled 'Deism compared with Christianity,' 2nd edit., 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1844; and some other pieces. Died July, 1840.

CHICOYNEAU, FRANÇOIS, physician to the king of France and counsellor of state, was born at Montpellier 1672, and died 13 April, 1752. He wrote some works on the plague, in which he maintained that that disease is not contagious—an opinion since adopted by several physicians. His son Aimé François (born 1702; died 1740) became chancellor of the university of Montpellier, and was eminent for his knowledge of plants.

CHIFFLET, JEAN JACQUES, a French physician, diplomatist, and antiquary, born at Besançon 21 Jan., 1588, and died 1660. He was author of thirty-five works.

CHIFNEY, SAMUEL, an English jockey, who died 8 Jan., 1807, was author of 'Genus genuine, a Treatise on Hoses and Horse Racing,' 8vo., London, 1804. This book, which contains an account of some of the first characters on the turf, is said to have been suppressed at the instigation of George, prince of Wales.

CHILD, JOHN, an English author, who after being associated with the Baptists for some time changed his opinions, and became a violent writer against that sect. He committed suicide 13 Oct., 1684.

CHILD, SIR JOSIAH, an English writer, born 1630; died 1699. He is best known by his 'Discourse on Trade,' first published at London in 1694. His 'Proposals for the Relief and Employment of the Poor' will be found reprinted in the eleventh volume of the Somers Collection of Tracts.

CHILD, WILLIAM, Mus.D., was a native of Bristol. In 1631 he took the degree of bachelor of music at Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1636 was appointed organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and soon after of the Chapel Royal at Whitehall. Died 1697, aged 90. His principal productions are psalms for three voices, catches, rounds, canons, and divine anthems.

CHILDEBERT I., king of France, the son of Clovis and Clotilda, commenced his reign 511, and died 558.

CHILDEBERT II., succeeded his father Sigebert 575, and died 596, aged 26.

CHILDEBERT III., The Just, came to the throne of France 675, aged 12, and died 711.

CHILDERIC I., king of France, ascended the throne 456, and died 481.

CHILDERIC II., son of Clovis II., succeeded to the throne 670, and was assassinated 673.

CHILDERIC III., The Idiot, was proclaimed king of France 742, and deposed 752 by Pepin, who confined him in a monastery, where he died three years afterwards.

CHILDREN, JOHN GEORGE, F.R.S., was for many years a banker at Trowbridge, but died at Chelsea 21 August, 1818, æt. 76. He was much celebrated in the philosophical world for his unequalled electrical and galvanic apparatus, and for the very important experiments which he made and published on galvanism. Several papers of his are in the 'Philosophical Transactions.'

CHILDREN, JOHN GEORGE, was born 1777, and educated at Eton and Cambridge. After travelling on the Continent and in America for some years, he settled at his father's seat, Ferox Hall, Tunbridge, where he devoted himself to scientific pursuits. His prospects in life being changed in consequence of the failure of a bank, he subsequently obtained a situation in the British Museum; and he was also for many years one of the secretaries of the Royal Society. Died 1 Jan., 1852. Besides communications in the 'Transactions' of the Royal Society, he published a translation of Thenard's 'Essay on Chemical Analysis,' 1810; and a translation of Berzelius's 'Treatise on the Use of the Blowpipe,' with additional experiments and notes of his own, 1822. He was one of the early editors of the 'Zoological Journal,' and a contributor to other learned works.

CHILDREY, JOSUA, D.D., was born in Kent 1623, and bred at Magdalen College, Oxford. In the Rebellion he was driven from the university, whereupon he opened a school at Feversham. After the Restoration he obtained the living of Upway, Dorsetshire, and the archdeaconry of Salisbury. Died 20 Aug., 1670. His works are 'Indago Astrologica;' 'Syzygiasticon instaurationum, or an Ephemeris of the Places and Aspects of the Planets;' and 'Britannia Baconica, or the natural rarities of England, Scotland, and Wales, historically related, according to the precepts of Lord Bacon,' 1661. It was this work which first suggested to Dr. Plot his 'Natural History of Oxfordshire.'

CHILLINGWORTH, WILLIAM, an eminent divine, was born at Oxford in Oct., 1602, and educated at Trinity College, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship. Besides divinity he studied mathematics, and was also esteemed a good poet. The controversy between the Church of England and that of Rome engaged much of his attention, and the conversation of John Fisher, or John Perse, a Jesuit, had the effect of drawing him over to the Catholic communion. Fisher, that he might secure such an acquisition, persuaded the new convert to go to Douay, and enter the college of Jesuits. Bishop Laud, who was his godfather, being much concerned when he heard of this conversion, wrote to Chillingworth in such terms, that in 1631 he returned to England and the communion he had left. In 1638 Chillingworth printed his famous work in answer to Knott, the Jesuit, entitled, 'The Religion of Protestants a safe Way to Salvation.' But though Chillingworth was a confirmed Protestant, he had some scruples about subscribing to the thirty-nine articles, till his doubts were removed by Gilbert Sheldon, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury. Having thus overcome his objections, he was promoted to the chancellorship of Salisbury, with the prebend of Brixworth, and to the mastership of Wington's Hospital in Leicester-shire. In 1640 he was proctor in the convocation; and in 1642 put in nomination for his degree of doctor in divinity, but the civil war prevented him from receiving it. He was zealous in the royal cause, and acted at the siege of Gloucester as engineer, and soon after was made prisoner at the taking of Arundel Castle. Being at this time very ill, he was removed to the episcopal palace at Chichester, where he died Jan. 30, 1643-4, and was buried in the cathedral without any other ceremony than that of throwing his book into the grave by Francis Chyennell, who made a flaming speech on the occasion. Besides his controversial works, there are extant of his nine sermons and a tract on episcopacy, all included in the edition published by Dr. Birch.

CHILMEAD, EDWARD, a mathematical writer, was born at Stow-in-the-Wold, in Gloucestershire, 1610. He received his education at Magdalen College, Oxford, after which he became chaplain of Christ Church, but was deprived of that place in the Rebellion; on which he went to London, and subsisted by teaching music. He died in 1653. His works are 'De Musica antiqua Græca,' 1672, 'Versio Latina et Annotationes in Joan. Malalæ Chronographum;' 'A Treatise on Love,' translated from the French; 'Galare's unheard-of Curiosities;' 'Campanella's Discourse on the Spanish Monarchy;' 'Treatise on the Globes;' 'Modena's History of the Jews.' He also compiled the catalogue of the Bodleian Greek Manuscripts.

CHILLO, a Greek philosopher, and one of the seven wise men, died B.C. 597.

CHIOCCO, ANDREW, an Italian physician and writer, born at Verona 1503; died 3 April, 1624.

CHIKAC, PIERRE, physician to the king of France, and to the French army in Roussillon in 1692, in which latter capacity he rendered great service when the soldiers were attacked with a dysentery. He wrote some medical treatises. Born 1652; died 11 March, 1732.

CHISENHALE, EDWARD, a gentleman of Lancashire, who bore a colonel's commission for King Charles I. in the civil war, was author of 'A Catholic History, collected out of Scriptures, Councils, Fathers, &c., occasioned by Dr. Thomas Vane's book, called The lost Sheep returned,' 8vo., 1653.

CHISHOLM, ALEXANDER, a Scotch painter of considerable merit, born 1792 or 1793; died 3 Oct., 1847.

CHISHOLM, ENEAS, a Scotch prelate of the Roman communion, was born in Strathglass, 1759; nominated coadjutor to his elder brother, Bishop John Chisholm, 1804; consecrated bishop of Diocæsarea, in Isauria, 1805; succeeded as fifth vicar apostolic of the Highland District 1814; and died at Lismore 31 July, 1818.

CHISHOLM, JOHN, a Scotch Catholic bishop, born at Inchully, in Strathglass, Inverness-shire, Sept., 1752; nominated fourth vicar apostolic of the Highland District 1791; consecrated bishop of Oria, in Africa, 1792; and died at Killicharan, in the island of Lismore, Argyshire, 8 July, 1814.

CHISHULL, EDMUND, was born at Eyworth, Bedfordshire, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he took his degree of master of arts 1693, previously to which he published a Latin poem on the battle of La Hogue. In 1698 he became chaplain to the factory at Smyrna, where he continued till 1702. In 1705 he was admitted to his degree of B.D., and the next year he wrote an answer to Dodwell on the immortality of the soul. In 1708 he was presented to the vicarage of Walthamstow, Essex, and in 1711 was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the queen. In 1731 he obtained the rectory of South Church, Essex, and died 18 May, 1733. He published A Dissertation on an ancient Sigeian inscription; 'Dissertatio de Nummis quibusdam à Smyrænis in medicorum honorem percussis;' 'Antiquitates Asiaticæ Christianam Æram antecedentes ex primariis Monumentis Græcis descriptæ, Latine versæ notisque, et commentariis illustratæ.' A great portion of the MS. of this work is in MS. Addit. 10,101; 10,102. Mr. Chishull's 'Travels in Turkey' were published in 1747 by Dr. Mead.

CHISWELL, RICHARD, a famous bookseller of London, was born in the parish of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, 4 Jan., 1639, and dying 3 May, 1711, was buried in the church of that parish.

CHISWELL, RICHARD, eldest son of the preceding, was an eminent Turkey merchant, and travelled much in the East. In 1714 he was

CHRÉTIEN, FLORENT, a French poet, born 26 Jan., 1541; died 3 Oct., 1596.

CHRISTIAN, or CHRISTIERN I., king of Denmark, succeeded Christopher of Bavaria 1448. He was a popular monarch, and died 21 May, 1481.

CHRISTIAN II., The Cruel, was born 1480, ascended the Danish throne 1513, and was elected king of Sweden 1520. He was expelled from the throne, and died in prison 24 Jan., 1559.

CHRISTIAN III., successor of Frederick I. in 1534; he embraced the opinions of Luther, and died 1 Jan., 1558.

CHRISTIAN IV. was born 1577, ascended the throne of Denmark 1588, and died 28 Feb., 1648.

CHRISTIAN V. king of Denmark, was born 1645; began to reign 1670; died 4 Sept., 1699.

CHRISTIAN VI. was born 1699, succeeded his father Frederick IV. 1730; died 6 Aug., 1746. He was styled The Pious, on account of his zeal for the Protestant religion.

CHRISTIAN VII. king of Denmark and Norway, was born 1749; succeeded his father Frederick V. 1769; died 13 March, 1808.

CHRISTIAN, or CHRISTEN REISEN, CHARLES, a clever gem engraver, born at London of Danish parents about 1695; died 1725.

CHRISTIAN, EDWARD, Downing professor of the laws of England in the university of Cambridge, died 29 March, 1823. He published a number of legal works, including a new and copiously annotated edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, 4 vols. 8vo., 1795.

CHRISTIAN, THOMAS, a German physician and medical writer, born 17 Dec., 1735; died at Vienna 9 May, 1800.

CHRISTIE, GEORGE, a Scotch Jesuit, was rector of his brethren at Louvaine 1598, and died 14 April, 1629.

CHRISTIE, JAMES, an auctioneer of London, who was also a distinguished antiquary and connoisseur, and a prominent member of the society of Dilletanti, died 2 Feb., 1831, aged 58. He was author of 'An Inquiry into the antient Greek Game supposed to have been invented by Palamedes, antecedent to the Siege of Troy; with Reasons for believing the same to have been known from remote antiquity in China, and progressively improved into the Chinese, Indian, Persian, and European Chess,' 1801; 'A Disquisition upon Etruscan Vases, displaying their probable connection with the Shews at Eleusis and the Chinese Feast of the Lanterns; with explanations of some of the principal Allegories depicted on them,' 1806, reprinted with additions 1825; 'Essay on the earliest Species of Idolatry, the Worship of the Elements,' 1814; and 'An Enquiry into the early history of Greek Sculpture,' 4to., London, 1833.

CHRISTIE, SAMUEL HUNTER, mathematician, born in London 1784; died at Twickenham, 24 Jan., 1865. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1805). On leaving the university he became third mathematical assistant in the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and in 1838 was promoted to the mathematical pro-essorship in that institution. He retired from the public service 1854. His scientific investigations were chiefly directed to the science of magnetism, of which he was one of the early pioneers. He contributed many valuable papers to the 'Philosophical Transactions.'

CHRISTIE, THOMAS, a political writer, born at Montrose Oct., 1761. He was brought up to trade, but afterwards studied medicine, though he did not practise it. In the Revolution of France he became an ardent republican, and published 'A Sketch of the new Constitution;' and an answer to Burke. His best performance is entitled 'Observations on the Literature of the primitive Christians.' He had a share in the 'Analytical Review,' and died at Surinam in Oct., 1796.

CHRISTIE, WILLIAM, master of the grammar school at Montrose, was born at or near that place 1730. He was educated at King's College, Aberdeen, where he obtained the degree of M.A. His Latin Grammar, and Introduction to the making of Latin, are useful books. Died 1774.

CHRISTINA, queen of Sweden, and daughter of the great Gustavus Adolphus, was born 8 Dec., 1626. She succeeded her father in the government of the kingdom 1633, and ruled it with great wisdom and prudence till 1654, when she resigned it in favour of her cousin, Charles Gustavus. She then embraced the Catholic religion, and retired to Rome. Yet upon the death of Charles Gustavus in 1660 she returned to Sweden, with the intention of resuming the government; but this could not be permitted, as, by the laws and constitution of the land, Catholics were excluded from the throne. She died at Rome 19 April, 1689.

CHRISTOPHE, a negro of extraordinary character, born about 1767. In 1790, on the insurrection of the blacks in the French part of the island of St. Domingo, he joined the insurgents, and eventually assumed the supreme command, with the title of Henry I., king of Hayti. For some time he maintained his power; but at length a conspiracy was formed against him, and on finding that his troops could not be relied on, he shot himself through the heart 8 Oct., 1820.

CHRISTOPHER (ST.), was martyred in Lycia, during the persecution of Decius, 254.

CHRISTOPHER A SANCTA CLARA. See COLEMAN.

CHRISTOPHERSON, JOHN, an English prelate, was born at Ulverstone, Lancashire, and educated first at Pembroke Hall, and then at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was appointed a fellow of Trinity College by the charter of foundation, 1546. Being a conscientious adherent to the Catholic church, he retired abroad during the reign of Edward VI., but returned to England on the accession of Mary, and was constituted master of Trinity College. In 1557 he was consecrated Bishop of Chichester. On the second Sunday after Queen Elizabeth's accession he preached at St. Paul's Cross, and with great vehemence and freedom answered a sermon preached by Dr. Bill at that place the Sunday preceding, declaring that the new doctrine set forth by Dr. Bill was not the Gospel, but the invention of heretical men. For this sermon he was summoned before the queen, and sent to prison, where he died about a month afterwards. He was buried at Christ Church, London, 28 Dec., 1558. Bishop Christopherson was author of Jephthah, a tragedy, Lat. and Gr.; 'Philo Judæus,' a translation into Latin; 'An exhortation to all men to take heed and beware of rebellion;' 'The ecclesiastical histories of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Evagrius, and Theodoret;' 'Reasons why a priest may not practise physic or surgery;' and translations of Apollinaris and other Greek authors.

CHRISTOPHERSON, MICHAEL, an English clergyman of the Roman church, was educated at the English college at Douay. He was well esteemed among his co-religionists on account of his defence of Bellarmine against Dr. George Downham, in a work entitled 'A Treatise of Antichrist, in three parts,' 1613.

CHROMACIUS (ST.), a pious and learned bishop of Aquileia, died 412.

CHRYSIPPUS, a Stoic philosopher, of Cilicia, who died B.C. 207.

CHRYSOLOGUE, NOEL ANDRÉ, a French Capuchin friar, author of some useful works on astronomy and geography. Born 8 Dec., 1728; died 2 Sept., 1808.

CHRYSOLORAS, EMANUEL, a learned Greek, born at Constantinople about 1355, who came to England in the reign of Richard II., as ambassador from John Palaeologus, to solicit succours against the Turks. Ultimately he settled at Rome, and Martin V. sent him to Germany about settling the Council of Constance, where he died 15 April, 1415. He wrote a Greek grammar, and a parallel between ancient and modern Rome.

CHRYSOSTOM, SAINT JOHN. See JOHN CHRYSOSTOM.

CHUBB, THOMAS, a deistical writer, was born at East Harnham, near Salisbury, 29 Sept., 1679. He received a common education, after which he served his apprenticeship to a glover; but that trade proving injurious to his eyes, he became partner with a tallow-chandler. In 1715 he published a tract in favour of Arianism, when the controversy was carried on between Drs. Clarke and Waterland. This introduced him to some gentlemen of eminence, and particularly Sir Joseph Jekyll, master of the Rolls, who took Chubb into his family, but lessened the favour by requiring him to attend table as a servant out of livery. From being an Arian he passed naturally enough to deism, and published several books, in which he endeavoured to destroy the authority of the Scriptures. He died at Salisbury 8 Feb., 1746-7. His posthumous works were published in 2 vols. 8vo., 1748.

CHUBBES, WILLIAM, D.D., a native of Whithy, Yorkshire, received his education at Cambridge, became the first master of Jesus College, in that university, and died about November, 1505. He was author of an Introduction to Logic, and a commentary on Duns Scotus.

CHUDLEIGH, LADY MARY, was born in 1656, being the daughter of Richard Lee, of Winslade, in Devonshire, esq. She married Sir George Chudleigh, bart., by whom she had some children. Her principal poem is entitled 'The Ladies' Defence,' occasioned by a sermon against the fair sex. This, with other pieces, was published in 1703, in 1 vol. 8vo. She also printed a volume of miscellaneous essays, in prose and verse, dedicated to the Electress Sophia of Hanover. Died 1710.

CHURCH, RALPH, was born about 1709, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He was for many years vicar of Piton and of Sherburn, Oxfordshire, and died in April, 1787. Mr. Church published an edition of Spenser's 'Faerie Queene,' 1738.—Al. West.

CHURCH.

CHURCH, THOMAS, D.D., was born in 1707, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford. In 1740 he was instituted to the vicarage of Battersca, to which was afterwards added a prebend in St. Paul's. He wrote against the Methodists; and a vindication of the miraculous Powers of the three first Centuries, in answer to Middleton, 8vo., 1749. For this last work the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of D.D. He also wrote an Analysis of the works of Lord Bolingbroke, 8vo., 1755. Dr. Church died 1756.

CHURCHILL, CHARLES, the celebrated poet and satirist, was born in Vine Street, Westminster, in Feb., 1731. His father was curate and lecturer of St. John's, and also rector of Rainham, in Essex. He placed his son at Westminster School, after which he went to Oxford, but being rejected for insufficiency, he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, though he never took a degree. In 1756 he entered into orders, and for some time exercised the clerical duties in Somersetshire, and at his father's living in Essex. While at the latter place he kept an academy; but in 1758, on the death of his father, he returned to the metropolis, and was chosen curate and lecturer of St. John's. He also continued the practice of teaching. In 1761 he published, without his name, 'The Rosciad,' a poem in which he satirised the players with great spirit. This was followed by his 'Apology,' addressed to the Critical Reviewers. His conduct now was so vicious as to incur the censure of his superiors, in consequence of which he renounced the clerical profession, and parted with his wife. In 1762 he published 'The Ghost,' a poem, occasioned by a remarkable imposture practised in Cock Lane. About this time he formed an intimacy with Wilkes, at whose desire he wrote 'The Prophecy of Famine.' The Epistle to Hogarth followed, which the painter resented in a print representing Churchill as a drunken bear, clad in canonicals, and holding a pot of porter. The fracas between Wilkes and Martin gave occasion to the 'Duellist;' and about the same time appeared 'The Author,' a poem. Some other pieces succeeded in rapid order, of unequal merit. In Oct., 1764, Churchill went over to Boulogne to see Wilkes, and died there Nov. 4th the same year. His remains were brought to England, and buried at Dover. A volume of sermons was published in his name after his death, but they are supposed to have been the compositions of his father. An edition of his 'Poetical Works,' with a memoir by James Hannay, was published in 1807 by Messrs. Bell and Dalry.

CHURCHILL, JOHN, duke of Marlborough. See MARLBOROUGH.

CHURCHILL, WILLIAM, youngest brother of the poet, was, like him, educated at Westminster school, and was a person of genius and literary pursuits. Amongst other publications he left a life and comment upon his brother's history, which was incorporated into an edition of the poet's works. He was vicar of Orton-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire, and died there in June, 1804. — At. Hist.

CHURCHILL, Sir WINSTON, an historian, was born at Wooton Glanville, in Dorsetshire, 1620. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and married the daughter of Sir John Drake, of Ashe, in Devonshire, at whose house he resided during the civil war, having lost his estate in the service of the king. At the Restoration he recovered his lands, obtained a seat in parliament, and the honour of knighthood. He wrote 'Divi Britannici, being a remark upon the Lives of all the Kings of this Isle,' folio, 1675. He was made clerk of the green cloth, and died 26 March, 1688. Besides his eldest son, who became duke of Marlborough (see MARLBOROUGH), he had several other children, particularly Arabella, who became mistress to James duke of York, by whom she had two sons and two daughters. She was born 1648, and died 1730.

CHURCHYARD, THOMAS, an English poet, born at Shrewsbury about 1520. His principal poem is entitled 'The Worthiness of Wales,' 8vo., 1580. He died 1604, and was buried on the 4th of April in that year, in the porch of St. Margaret's, Westminster.

CHURTON, RALPH, a divine, born at Bickley, Cheshire, 8 Dec., 1754, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He was appointed Bampton lecturer 1784; minister of Middleton Cheney, Northamptonshire, 1792; archdeacon of St. David's 1805; and died 23 March, 1831. Among his works are A Memoir of Dr. Townson, archdeacon of Richmond; 'The Lives of William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, and Sir Richard Sutton, Knight, Founders of Brazen Nose College; Life of Alexander Nowell, Dean of St. Paul's; and some occasional sermons.

CHYTRÆUS, DAVID, a German divine, author of a History of the Confession of Augsburg, &c., born in Swabia 1530; died 25 June, 1600.

CHYTRÆUS, NATHANIEL, brother of the preceding, was born 1543, became professor of poetry at Rostock, and died 1598. He composed Latin poems and other works.

CIACONIUS, ALPHONSUS, a Spanish Dominican friar, titular patriarch of Alexandria, was born 1540, and died at Rome Feb., 1599. He wrote 'Vitæ et gesta Romanorum Pontificum et Cardinalium,' and many other works.

CIACONIUS, PETER, brother of the preceding, was an accomplished critic, and published a learned treatise, 'De Triclinio Romano,' besides notes on various classical authors. Born at Toledo 1525; died at Rome 1681.

CIAMPELLI, AUGUSTINE, of Florence, was eminent as an historical painter. Born 1578; died 1640.

CIAMPINI, JOHN JUSTIN, an Italian, who founded at Rome the academies of ecclesiastical history, of mathematics, and of natural history. He wrote works on the Remains of ancient Rome; on the Sacred Edifices built by Constantine, &c. Born 1633; died 12 July, 1698.

CIBBER, or CIBERT, CAIUS GABRIEL, an eminent sculptor, was a native of Flensburg, in the duchy of Holstein. He came to England not long before the Restoration, and acquired great reputation. His best works are the two admirable figures of Melancholy and Raving Madness, which were formerly placed in front of old Bethlehem Hospital, and are now in the hall of the new hospital in St. George's Fields. Cibber also built the Danish church in London. Died about 1700, aged 70.

CIBBER, CHARLOTTE. See CHARKE.

CIBBER, COLLEY, a poet and dramatist, was the son of Caius Gabriel Cibber, and was born in London 6 Nov., 1671. He received his education at Grantham School, after which he was for a short time in the army, but left it to try his fortune on the stage. In 1695 he brought out a play called 'Love's Last Shift,' the principal character in which he performed himself, and from that time his reputation in comedy was unrivalled. 'The Careless Husband' was his next play, which was followed by 'The Nonjuror,' and procured the author first a pension, and afterwards the place of poet laureate. He was likewise manager of the stage for many years. Cibber incurred the ill-will of Pope, who made him the hero of the Dunciad, for which Colley attacked him in a very spirited remonstrance. He quitted the stage in 1730, and died 12 Dec., 1757. His Plays have been published in 5 vols. 12mo.; besides which he wrote a piece against Middleton's Life of Cicero, and 'An Apology for his Own Life.' This last is one of the most amusing specimens of biography in the language, and contains the best history of the English stage during the period that Cibber was connected with it.

CIBBER, SUSANNAH MARIA, wife of Theophilus Cibber, and daughter of Dr. Arne, the musician, became celebrated as a tragic actress at Drury Lane. She translated 'The Oracle of St. Foix;' and died 30 Jan., 1766.

CIBBER, THEOPHILUS, son of Colley Cibber, was born 1703, and educated at Winchester school, from whence he passed to the stage in the same line as his father. His life was a continued series of extravagance, and in 1757 he ended it by being drowned in his passage to Ireland. He altered some of Shakspeare's plays, and wrote a ballad opera called Pattie and Peggy. His name also appeared to 'The Lives of the Poets,' 5 vols. 12mo., but the real author was Robert Shiel, and Cibber merely received a sum to correct the diction.

CICERO, MARCUS TULLIUS, a celebrated Roman orator and philosopher, born at Arpinum 3 Jan., B.C. 106. His father, Marcus Tullius, took great care of his education, and sent him to study at Rome, where he became acquainted with Greek literature, and discovered uncommon talents both for learning and active life. On his first appearance at the bar he declaimed with great vehemence against the partisans of Sylla, to avoid whose resentment he was obliged to withdraw into Greece. There he studied under the most eminent orators and philosophers, and displayed so much eloquence in a speech he delivered at Rhodes, that his master, Apollonius Molo, bewailed the fate of Greece, which having before been vanquished by the Roman arms, would be vanquished again by his disciple's rhetoric. On returning to Rome, Cicero married Terentia, by whom he had a son named Tullius, and a daughter named Tullia, but divorced her afterwards to marry Papilia, who was young, handsome, and very rich. He was quaestor, and governor of Sicily B.C. 75. On his return he was appointed to the office of ædile, and obtained that Verres should be compelled to repair the extortions he had been guilty of in that office. Cicero was afterwards prætor, and consul with Anthony B.C. 63. During his consulate he discovered Catiline's conspiracy, for which he obtained the appellation of 'Father of his Country.' He was, however, banished by the intrigues of Clodius some time afterwards, but was recalled the following year at the solicitation of Pompey, and appointed proconsul of Cilicia. Cicero adhered to Pompey's party during the civil wars, but after that great man's death employed the meanest flattery to reconcile himself to Cæsar.

This, perhaps, is the most dishonourable action in Cicero's life. Though the intimate friend of Brutus, he had no part in the conspiracy against Cæsar, it being kept secret from him. On the death of that emperor he favoured Augustus; but Anthony, against whom Cicero had directed the Philippics, becoming triumvir, caused him to be killed as he fled in his litter towards the sea of Cajeta, 7 Dec., 43 B.C. A great number of the works of this celebrated Roman remain, which are commonly divided into four parts: the first containing those books which treat of the art of oratory; the second, his orations; the third, his epistles; and the fourth, his philosophical works. Cicero's works are models of eloquence, and in them are displayed genius, true taste, art, invention, and all the qualifications necessary to form a great orator, an excellent philosopher, and a skillful politician. His style is clear, noble, elegant, and admirably pure. His works have passed through numberless editions, and have been translated into English by W. Guthrie.

CICOGNARA, COUNT LEOPOLD, an accomplished Italian writer, born at Ferrara 26 Nov., 1707; died at Venice 5 March, 1834. His most important work is a History of Sculpture from its revival in Italy to the time of Napoleon.

CID, The, a Spanish hero, whose real name was Don Rodrigo Dias de Bravar. He was knighted for his valour, and, in 1063, marched with Sancho of Castile against Ramiro, king of Arragon, who fell in battle, after which he went to the siege of Zamora. On the death of Sancho, Alfonso ascended the throne of Castile; but Roderigo, instead of continuing the obedient subject, declared himself independent, and fixed his habitation at Pena de el Cid, the rock of the Cid, Saragossa. He afterwards took Valencia, and maintained his independence till his death, 1099. The history of this hero has been immortalized in the romances of the Spaniards, and in the popular tragedy of Corneille.

CIGNAROLI, GIOVANNI BETTINO, an Italian painter, born at Verona 1709; died 1770.

CIGOLI, or CIVOLI. See CARRI.

CIMABUE, JOHN, a celebrated painter, born at Florence 1240. He revived in Italy the art of painting, in which he was instructed by some Greek artists. He painted in fresco and distemper, and many of his pieces exist in the church of St. Francis, at Assisi. He was also a good architect. Died 1300.

CIMAROSA, DOMENICO, an eminent musical composer, born at Aversa, in the kingdom of Naples, 1754; died 11 Jan., 1801.

CIMON, an Athenian general, the son of Miltiades, died B.C. 449, æt. 51.

CINCINNATUS, LUCIUS QUINTUS, a Roman, who was called from the plough to be dictator at the time when the city was besieged by the Volsci and Æqui. Having defeated the enemies of his country, he resigned his office and retired to his farm. At the age of eighty he was again called upon to act against Præneste, when he had equal success. Died after 439 B.C.

CINELLI CALVOLI, JOHN, a physician, born at Florence 26 Feb., 1625; died 18 April, 1706. His 'Bibliotheca Volante' is a very curious work.

CINNA, LUCIUS CORNELIUS, a Roman consul 87 B.C. He united with Marius, and the two filled Rome with blood. He was assassinated B.C. 84.

CINNAMUS.

CINNAMUS, JOHN, a Greek writer of the twelfth century, and notary to the Emperor Manuel Comnenus, whose history he wrote, and that of his father John.

CINO DA PISTOIA, a poet and jurist, was a native of Pistoia, and became professor in various universities. Born 1270; died Jan., 1337.

CINQ-MARS, HENRI COEFFIER, Marquis DE, the favourite of Louis XIII. of France, was beheaded 1642, aged 22.

CIPRIANI, JOHN BAPTIST, a painter, born at Pistoia, in Tuscany, about 1727. He received his first instructions from one Heckford, an English artist, who lived in that city under the name of Gabbiani. In 1750 he went to Rome, and in 1755 came to England with Mr. Wilton and Sir William Chambers. When the duke of Richmond opened his gallery as a school of arts Wilton and Cipriani were appointed the visitors. At the foundation of the Royal Academy they were both chosen founders, and Cipriani made the design for the diploma, for which he was presented with a silver cup. He was employed to clean and repair the paintings of Rubens in Whitehall Chapel; besides which he painted a number of pictures for the nobility; and many engravings from his designs were executed by Bartolozzi. He died at Chelsea 14 Dec., 1785.

CIRCIGNANO, NICHOLAS, an Italian historical painter and architect, called Pomerancio, from the place of his birth. Born 1516; died 1588. His son, Anthony, was also an eminent painter; died 1620, aged 60.

CIRILLO, DOMINIC, a writer on botany, and professor of that science at Naples, where he was born 1734. When the French entered Naples he boldly espoused their cause, for which he was condemned and executed as a traitor 1799.

CIRO FERRI. See FERRI.

CISNER, NICHOLAS, a German scholar, born at Mosbach, on the Neckar, 1529. After being professor of moral philosophy at Wittemberg he visited France and Italy, but finally settled at Heidelberg, where he was nominated professor and counsellor to the elector palatine. Died 6 March, 1583. His works were published at Frankfort in 1611.

CITTOIS, FRANÇOIS, in Latin Citæsus, physician to Cardinal Richelieu, and a medical writer of note, was born at Poitiers 1572, and died 1652.

CITTADINI, PETER FRANCIS, a painter, born at Milan about 1616 died at Bologna 1681.

CLAESOON, ARNOLD, otherwise Aarlgens, an eminent painter, born at Leyden 1498; died 1564.

CLAGETT, NICHOLAS, was born at Canterbury about 1607 and educated at Oxford; after which he became vicar of Melbourne, Dorsetshire, and then preacher in St. Mary's Church at Bury St. Edmunds. Died 12 Sept., 1663. He published 'The Abuses of God's Grace, discovered in the kinds, causes, &c., proposed as a seasonable check to the wanton libertinism of the present age,' 1659.

CLAGETT, NICHOLAS, D.D., son of the preceding, was born in May, 1654, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. He obtained the rectory of Little Thurlow, Suffolk, 1683; the archdeaconry of Sudbury 1693; the rectory of Hitcham 1707; and died 27 Jan., 1726-7. He published some sermons; 'A Persuasive to an ingenious Trial of Opinions in Religion;' and 'Truth defended, and Boldness in Error rebuked,' against Whiston.

CLAPPERTON.

CLAGETT, NICHOLAS, son of the preceding, became bishop of St. David's 1731; was translated to Exeter 1742; and died 8 Dec., 1746.

CLAGETT, WILLIAM, D.D., eldest son of Nicholas Clagett the elder, was born at Bury St. Edmunds 14 Sept., 1646, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. He first became lecturer in his native town, but afterwards was chosen preacher to the Society of Gray's Inn. He was also rector of Farnham Royal, Buckinghamshire, lecturer of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, and chaplain in ordinary to the king. Died 28 March, 1688. His works are 'A Discourse concerning the Operations of the Holy Spirit;' 'A Reply to a pamphlet called The Mischief of Impositions,' by Alsop; 'An Answer to the Dissenters' Objections against the Common Prayers;' some tracts against the Church of Rome, and four volumes of Sermons.

CLAIRAUT, ALEXIS CLAUDE, a Frenchman, who was eminent as a mathematician. Born 7 May, 1713; died 17 May, 1765.

CLAIRE, MARTIN, a French Jesuit, author of 'Hymni Ecclesiastici,' was born 1012, and died 25 May, 1690.

CLAIRON, CLAIRE JOSËPHE HIPPOLYTE DE LA TUDE, a distinguished French actress, born 1723; died 18 Jan., 1803.

CLANCY, MICHAEL, M.D., an Irish writer. He was brought up to physic, but having the misfortune to lose his sight, could not engage in that profession, and therefore set up a school, besides which he had a pension. He wrote Memoirs of his own Life, in 2 vols., 1746, and some plays, particularly Œdipus, acted for his benefit at Drury Lane, in which he played the part of blind Tiresias with applause.

CLANIKARDE, ULICK DE BURGH, fifth earl and first Marquis OF, was born in London 1664, and became a strenuous supporter of the cause of Charles I. in Ireland. He was lord deputy of that country in 1650; and died in July, 1657. He wrote Memoirs relative to the Irish Rebellion, 8vo., 1722, and folio, 1757, with additions.

CLAPHAM, DAVID, LL.B., of Cambridge, and an eminent civilian, died in London 14 July, 1551. He published English translations of three works by Cornelius Agrippa.

CLAPHAM, SAMUEL, a divine, born at Leeds 1755, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1778; M.A. 1784). Taking orders, he became successively vicar of Christchurch, Hampshire; vicar of Great Ouseburn, Yorkshire; and rector of Gussage St. Michael, Dorsetshire. Died 1 June, 1830. Mr. Clapham published three volumes of popular Sermons under the assumed name of Theophilus St. John, LL.B.; three volumes of selected 'Family Sermons;' an abridgment of Pretyman's Elements of Theology; and a translation of Massillon's Charges.

CLAPPERTON, HUGH, an African explorer, born at Annan, in Scotland, 1788. After serving in the mercantile marine he joined the navy, where, from being a common sailor, he rose to the rank of Lieutenant. In 1821 he undertook a journey into the interior of Africa, in company with Dr. Oudney and Major Denham. In this expedition the position of the kingdoms of Mandara, Bournou, and Houssa was determined. On his return to England in 1825 he was made a commander in the navy, and appointed to take another African journey in company with Capt. Pearce, Mr. Dickson, Dr. Morrison, and some servants. This expetion was a most disastrous one. Nearly all Mr. Clapperton's companions died of dysentery, to which disease he himself succumbed at Saccatoo 11 April, 1827. Accounts of both his journeys have been printed.

CLARE (ST.), was born at Assisi 1193. She put herself under the direction of St. Francis, who gave her the church of St. Damian, where she founded a convent, was abbess of it, and died there 12 Aug., 1253. The nuns of St. Clare are divided into Damianists and Urbanists. The former follow the rule given by St. Francis to St. Clare; the latter follow the rules given by Urban IV.

CLARE, earl of Pembroke. See PEMBROKE.

CLARE, ELIZABETH DE, daughter of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hereford, succeeded, jointly with her two sisters, to the vast and princely family estates on the death of her brother Gilbert, who was slain in the battle of Bannockburn. She married, first, John de Burgh, son and heir of Richard earl of Ulster; secondly, Theobald Lord Vernon; thirdly, Roger Damory, baron of Armoyn, in Ireland; and died 4 Nov., 1360. She founded Clare Hall, in the university of Cambridge.

CLARE, JOHN, a Catholic divine, was an Englishman, and not an Irishman, as is stated by Wood. He resided for some time at Oxford, but afterwards became a Jesuit, and was tutor or rector at the English college at Rome about 1610. He was author of an able controversial work entitled 'The Converted Jew; or, certain dialogues between Micheas, a learned Jew, and others, teaching points of religion controverted between Catholics and Protestants,' 4to., 1630.

CLARE, JOHN, the Northamptonshire poet, was born at Helpstone, in that county, 1793. His father was a farm labourer. The poetical imagination of John Clare manifested itself at a very early age, in consequence of his hearing his father read a poem. He paid for his own schooling by extra work as a ploughboy and thrasher. When he was thirteen years of age a boy showed him Thomson's 'Seasons,' which so excited his feeling for poetry that he could not rest till he had accumulated a shilling, with which to purchase a copy for himself. In 1817 he was employed at Bridge Casterton, in Rutland, at nine shillings a week, and here he fell in love with Martha Turner, who afterwards became his wife. Love seems to have stimulated him to endeavour to turn his poetical faculty to pecuniary account; and a sonnet of his coming under the notice of a bookseller at Stamford led to a volume of poems by him being published at London in 1820. It was entitled 'Poems descriptive of Rural Life and Scenery, by John Clare, a Northamptonshire Peasant.' It was highly praised by the critics, and passed through several editions. At this time Clare was employed in jigge-burning; but several noblemen and gentlemen now raised a fund, which brought him in an annual income of £45. About this period he married Martha Turner, who bore him several children. In 1821 'The Village Minstrel and other Poems' appeared. This volume added to his reputation. Afterwards he contributed short pieces to the annuals and other periodicals, and in 1827 published 'The Shepherd's Calendar; with Village Stories and other Poems.' His last work, entitled 'The Rural Muse,' appeared in 1835. Unfortunately, Clare at one time engaged in farming, but with ill success, as he was wholly unfitted for business which required competition with his fellow-men, and, amidst accumulating difficulties, he sank into nervous despondency and despair. He became an inmate of a lunatic asylum at Peckham, near London, whence he escaped after the expiration of about two years. Subsequently he was placed in the Northampton General Lunatic Asylum, where he died 20 May, 1864.

CLARE, PETER, an eminent surgeon of Chancery Lane, London, died 1786, æt. 49. He published an 'Essay on the Cure of Abscesses,' and other professional works.

CLARENCE, GEORGE PLANTAGENET, DUKE OF, a younger son of Richard duke of York, and brother to King Edward IV., married Isabel, eldest daughter of Richard Neville, earl of Warwick and Salisbury, with whom he joined in confederacy against his brother. He was attainted of high treason, and suffered death by being drowned in a butt of Malmsey wine, 1477.

CLARENDON, EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF, was born at Dinton, Wiltshire, 16 Feb., 1608. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and afterwards called to the bar. In the parliament which assembled at Westminster 10 April, 1640, he was returned for Wotton Bassett; and in that which followed the same year, commonly called the Long Parliament, he sat for Saltash, when he distinguished himself by carrying up the impeachment against some of the judges. But though he acted zealously in the redress of grievances, he was no less strenuous for upholding the dignity of the crown and the rights of the church. He also opposed the bill of attainder against Strafford; and when the parliament proceeded to call out the militia he left the house altogether; for which he was excused from pardon. He then joined the king at York, and was nominated chancellor of the Exchequer, sworn of the privy council, and knighted. In this capacity he took his place in the parliament that assembled at Oxford; and in 1644 he was one of the king's commissioners at Uxbridge. On the decline of the royal cause he went to Jersey, where he began to write the 'History of the Rebellion,' at the command of the king, who sent him a large collection of papers for the purpose. In May, 1648, he was called to Paris, where he continued to serve Charles II., by whom he was sent to Spain in the following year, to solicit assistance from that court, but returned without success in 1651. He now went to live at Antwerp, and in 1657 was made chancellor of England, being continued in that office at the Restoration. He was also chosen chancellor of Oxford, and advanced to the peerage by the title of Baron Hyde. In 1661 he was created earl of Clarendon; but the marriage of his daughter with the duke of York, and his own inflexible virtue, now operated against him both in court and parliament. In 1663 a charge of high treason was exhibited against him in the Lords, by the earl of Bristol, but it ended to the chancellor's honour. It did not, however, put a stop to the machinations of his enemies; and the splendid house which he built, and the grant of the park which bears his name, gave new scope for malice. He was now accused of having sold Dunkirk to the French; and, in 1667, the seals were taken from him. This was the prelude to an impeachment. To avoid the consequences he retired to France, and an act of perpetual banishment was afterwards passed against him. The year following a villainous attempt was made upon his life at Evreux, by some English seamen, and it was with difficulty that he escaped from their outrage. He then went to Montpellier, next to Moulins, and lastly to Rouen, where he died 9 Dec., 1674. His body was brought to England and interred in Westminster Abbey. Lord Clarendon was twice married. By his first wife, the daughter of Sir Gregory Ayliffe, he had no issue; but by the second, the daughter of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, he had four sons and two daughters, the youngest of whom became the wife of James duke of York (afterwards James II.), and the mother of Mary and Anne, queens of England. Besides the History of the Rebellion, this great man wrote 'Animadversions on Mr. Cressy's book, entitled Fanaticism fanatically imputed to the Catholic Church;' 'A Survey of Hobbes's Leviathan;' Essays, Meditations on the Psalms, a Dialogue on Education, an Answer to the Charges of the Commons, all contained in one folio volume; and An Account of his Own Life. His State Papers have been published in three folio volumes.

CLARENDON, HENRY HYDE, EARL OF, son of the chancellor, was born 1638. After the Restoration he was created M.A. at Oxford, and appointed chamberlain to the queen. He distinguished himself as an able speaker in parliament, and opposed the Exclusion Bill with such force that the House of Commons voted an address to the king, praying that he would remove him from his councils. At the accession of James II. he was made lord privy seal, and afterwards lord lieutenant of Ireland; from whence he was recalled on account of his attachment to the Protestant religion. At the Revolution he was sent to the Tower for some time; and, on his release, he went into retirement, where he died 22 Oct., 1709. His state letters and diary were printed in 2 vols. 4to., at Oxford, in 1763. He also wrote the 'History of the Irish Rebellion;' and an 'Account of the tombs and monuments in the cathedral of Winchester.'

CLARIDGE, RICHARD, a writer among the Quakers, was born at Farmborough, Warwickshire, 1649. He became a student of Balliol College, Oxford, in 1666, but removed from thence to St. Mary Hall. In 1673 he was presented to the rectory of Peopleton, in Worcestershire, but in 1691 he resigned his living and joined the Baptists. About six years afterwards he left them, and entered into the society of Friends. In 1700 he settled at Barking as a schoolmaster, and afterwards removed to Tottenham; but in 1713 he relinquished that profession, and died in London in 1723. He wrote 'Lux Evangelica attestata,' in answer to Keith; 'Melius Inquirendum;' a Treatise on the Holy Scriptures. His Life and posthumous Works were printed in 1726.

CLARIO, ISIDORE, an Italian ecclesiastic, who distinguished himself at the council of Trent, and was afterwards made bishop of Foligni. He wrote Notes on the Bible, &c. Born 1495; died 28 May, 1555.

CLARK, HUGH, a heraldic engraver, who published 'A Short and Easy Introduction to Heraldry' (conjointly with Thomas Wormull), which has passed through many editions; and 'A Concise History of Knighthood,' 1784. Died 1822.

CLARK, JOHN, LL.D., fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, was appointed regius professor of laws in that university 1663, and died March, 1672-3.

Tyne; born at Roxburgh 1744; died 24 April, 1805.

CLARK, JOHN, a Gaelic scholar and agricultural writer, was a land-surveyor at Bultih, in the county of Brecon, and died at Pembroke 1807. Under the auspices of the Board of Agriculture he prepared the reports relating to Herefordshire, Radnorshire, and Breconshire; besides which he published 'The Works of the Caledonian Bards, translated from the Gaelic,' 1778; 'An Answer to William Shaw on the authenticity of the Poems of Ossian,' 8vo., 1781; and 'An Inquiry into the Nature and Value of Leasehold Property.' Mr. Clark was a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Edinburgh.

CLARK, JOHN, an artist, died at Edinburgh, Oct., 1863, æt. 92. He was at one time a popular book-illustrator, and also the inventor and executant of those ingenious art-toys, the Myriorama, Urania's Mirror, &c. He was known as 'Waterloo Clark,' from his aqua-tinted, brightly-coloured sketches of some of the incidents of the field, taken by himself on the spot, immediately after the battle.

CLARK, JOHN RENDALL, an English architect, author of 'The Architectural History of Gloucester,' 'Lanthyony,' and other works; died at Gloucester 31 March, 1863, aged 36.

CLARK, ROBERT, was educated in the English college at Douay, where, it is said, he was professor of the classics. He afterwards became a Carthusian monk, and employed his leisure hours in composing an elaborate work, entitled 'Christias sive de Passione Domini et Salvatoris nostri Jesu Christi, lib. 17,' 8vo., Bruges, 1670.

CLARK, DR. SAMUEL, a descendant of Samuel Clarke the biographer, became pastor of a congregation of dissenters, and wrote a book called 'Scripture Promises.' He was the father of the Rev. Samuel Clark, of Birmingham, who was assistant to Dr. Doddridge, and died 1769.

CLARK, WILLIAM TIERNEY, F.R.S., an English engineer, who was for upwards of forty years engineer to the West Middlesex Waterworks. His masterpiece, which gave him a European reputation, is the great suspension bridge which he flung over the Danube, between Pesth and Buda. This great work was executed at the command of the emperor of Austria. Born 1783; died 22 Sept., 1852.

CLARKE, ADAM, LL.D., a Biblical scholar, was born of English parents at Maggerafelt, about thirty miles from Londonderry, in 1760. On the invitation of John Wesley he became a pupil in Ringwood school. At an early age he was admitted a Wesleyan preacher, being appointed, in 1782, to the circuit of Bradford, Wiltshire. He continued to travel in various circuits till 1805, after which he remained in London for several years, devoting a great portion of his time to literature and bibliography. His studies were greatly facilitated by his appointment, about this time, as librarian to the Surrey Institution. He was elected a member of the Society of Antiquaries and of the Royal Irish Academy; and the university of St. Andrew's conferred on him the degrees of M.A. and LL.D. In 1807 he was appointed one of the sub-commissioners of the Public Records, and in this capacity prepared a new and augmented edition of Rymer's Fœdera, of which, however, only three volumes were published. He died at Bayswater 26 Aug., 1832. Dr. Clarke wrote several works relating to bibliography, and edited many of the works of other authors, but he is chiefly remembered by his Commentary, which originally appeared under this title—'The Holy Scriptures, &c., &c., with the marginal readings, a collection of parallel texts, and copious summaries to each chapter; with a Commentary and Critical Notes, designed as a help to the better understanding of the Sacred Writings,' 8 vols. 4to., 1810-26.

CLARKE, ALURED, D.D., an English divine, was born in 1696, and educated at St. Paul's school, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and obtained a fellowship. In 1723 he was presented to the rectory of Chilbolton, in Hampshire, and at the same time installed prebendary of Winchester. He was created D.D. at Cambridge in 1728, when George II. visited that university. He was also deputy clerk of the closet to that monarch, and in 1731 made prebendary of Westminster. In 1740 he was advanced to the deanery of Exeter. Died 31 May, 1742. Dean Clarke published four occasional sermons, and an 'Essay on the Character of Queen Caroline,' 8vo., 1738. He promoted the Devon and Exeter Hospital; also that at Winchester.

CLARKE, EDWARD, son of Wm. Clarke, the divine and antiquary, was born at Buxted 16 March, 1730. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, and in 1758 was presented to the rectory of Peppert-harrow, in Surrey. In 1760 he went as chaplain to the embassy at Madrid, where he resided two years, and on his return published 'Letters concerning the Spanish Nation,' 4to. Soon afterwards he went to Minorca as chaplain and secretary to the governor, and after his return, about 1768, was presented to the vicarages of Willington and Arlington, in Sussex; but the same year he succeeded his father in the rectory of Buxted, where he resided till his death in Nov., 1786. Besides the work already mentioned, he wrote a copy of Greek verses on the Death of Frederic, Prince of Wales; a Letter to a Friend on Montaucon; a Thanksgiving Sermon for the Victory of Lord Hawke; a Defence of Governor Johnstone, &c.

CLARKE, EDWARD DANIEL, LL.D., a divine and traveller, son of Edward Clarke, the rector of Buxted (mentioned above), was born at Chichester 1768, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, soon after which he accompanied Mr. Hill (subsequently Lord Berwick) on his travels. In 1799 he went with Mr. Cripps on an extensive tour through the north of Europe, into Tartary, Circassia, Asia Minor, Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Greece, and Turkey. The account of these travels rendered his name famous all over the civilized world. Soon after his return the university of Cambridge conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. He presented to that learned body many valuable manuscripts, particularly one of the works of Plato; also a colossal statue of the Eleusinian Ceres, on which he wrote a learned treatise, as he also did another on the Sarcophagus in the British Museum. Not long after his return he was presented to the rectory of Harlton, Cambridgeshire, and in 1808 he was made mineralogical professor, being the first who occupied that chair. He was also appointed librarian of the university, and other distinctions awaited him, when he was cut off in his fifty-fourth year 9 March, 1822.

CLARKE, HENRY, LL.D., a mathematician, was born in 1745, at Salford, near Manchester. His first situation was that of assistant in a school, after which he became partner in a seminary at Sedburgh, but quitted that profession for the business of a land surveyor. When the Manchester Society was formed he was appointed lecturer in mathematics and natural philosophy. In 1802 he became professor in the Royal Military College at Marlow, at which time he obtained the degree of doctor of laws from the university of Edinburgh. He died at Islington April 30, 1818. His works are—The Summatum of Series, translated from the Latin; Treatise on Perspective; Treatise on Circulating Numbers; Treatise on Short Hand; Essay on the Usefulness of Mathematical Learning; Tabulæ Linguarum, or concise Grammars of the Latin, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, French, and German Languages; The Seaman's Desiderata, or New and Concise Rules for finding the Longitude at Sea; A New and Concise Operation for clearing the Lunar Distances from a Star, or the Sun; Virgil Revindicated, in reply to Bishop Horsley; and An Introduction to Geography.

CLARKE, JAMES STANLEY, LL.D., F.R.S., eldest son of the Rev. Edward Clarke, rector of Buxted (mentioned above), and brother of Edward Daniel Clarke, received his education at Jesus College, Cambridge. He was for some time a chaplain in the navy, and afterwards distinguished himself as a preacher at Park Street and Trinity chapels, London. He was likewise domestic chaplain at Carlton House, and historiographer royal; and held at different times the livings of Preston-cum-Hove and of Coombs, in Sussex. His death took place at Brighton 4 Oct., 1835. Dr. Clarke published Naval Sermons, preached aboard H.M.S. the Impetueux, 1798; The Progress of Maritime Discovery, 1803; Falconer's Shipwreck, with a Life of the Author, 1804; Naufragia, or historical memoirs of Shipwrecks, 3 vols., 1805; Life of Nelson (in conjunction with John M'Arthur), 2 vols., 1809; an edition of Lord Clarendon's Essays; and The Life of James II., from his own Memoirs and the Stewart MSS. at Carlton House, 2 vols. 4to., 1816. He was also the founder of 'The Naval Chronicle.'

CLARKE, JEREMIAH, a musical composer, was educated in the Chapel Royal under Dr. Blow, who, in 1693, resigned in his favour the place of master of the children in St. Paul's, of which cathedral Clarke was soon after appointed organist. In 1704 he became joint organist at the royal chapel; but in July, 1707, he shot himself in a fit of despondency, to which he had been long subject. His anthems are remarkably pathetic.

CLARKE, JOHN, a Scotch engraver, who died about 1697.

CLARKE, JOHN, a noted schoolmaster, was the son of John Clarke, an innkeeper of York, where he was born 1687. After a preliminary training in the school of his native city, under Mr. Tomlinson, he was sent to the university of Cambridge, being admitted a sizar of St. John's College, 7 May, 1703. He graduated B.A. 1706-7; M.A. 1710. In 1720 he was appointed head master of Hull school; and afterwards he became master of the grammar school at Gloucester, where he died 29 April, 1734. It should be mentioned that he was never in orders, as he has been confounded with another person of the same name, who was rector of Lacey, Lincolnshire, from 1727 till his death in 1768. The schoolmaster of Hull was author of 'An Essay on the Education of Youth in Grammar Schools,' 8vo., London, 1720; 'An Examination of the Sketch or Plan of an Answer to the Book entitled Christianity as ancient as the Creation, laid down in a Letter to Dr. Waterland,' 8vo., London, 1733; 'A Grammar of the Latin Tongue. To which is annexed, A Dissertation upon Language,' 8vo., London, 1733; 'An Essay on Study,' 8vo., London, 1731, 12mo., 1737; 'Formulae Oratoriae in usum Scholarum; una cum Orationibus, &c.,' 12mo., London, 1737; 'Select Century of Cordery's Colloquies,' 12mo., London, 1740; 'Introduction to the Making of Latin,' 12mo., London, 1742, and a Supplement to the preceding work. He also made literal translations of several of the classical authors, and a free translation of Suetonius and Sallust.

CLARKE, JOHN, D.D., an English divine, brother of the celebrated Dr. Samuel Clarke, was born at Norwich, and educated at Cambridge. By the interest of his brother he obtained a prebend in Norwich Cathedral, was appointed chaplain in ordinary to the king, and lastly promoted to the deanery of Salisbury. He died about 1759, full seventy years old. Dean Clarke preached the Boyle's Lecture, and published the sermons with the title of 'The Origin of Evil,' 2 vols. 8vo. His other works are, a translation of Rohault's System of Physics, 2 vols. 8vo.; another of Grotius de Veritate, with Le Clerc's Notes, 8vo.; and the Notes belonging to Wollaston's Religion of Nature.

CLARKE, JOHN, an eminent schoolmaster, was born 3 May, 1706, at Kirby Misperton, Yorkshire, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. He became successively master of the grammar schools of Skipton, Beverley, and Wakefield, Yorkshire; and died 8 Feb., 1761. Dr. Thomas Zouch printed a life of him, under the title of 'The Good Schoolmaster.'

CLARKE, JOHN, MUS. D. See WHITFIELD.

CLARKE, MATTHEW, an eminent divine among the Independents. His father, of the same name, was ejected by the Act of Uniformity in 1662 from Naborough, Leicestershire, and compelled by the violence of persecution to retire to a solitary house in Leicester Forest, where his only son Matthew was born 2 Feb., 1663-4. Young Matthew entered on his ministerial work in 1684, and in 1689 became joint pastor, with the aged Mr. Stephen Ford, over the Independent congregation in Miles's Lane, London. This charge he retained till his death on 27 March, 1726. He published A Sermon to the Societies for Reformation of Manners, 12mo., London, 1711; A Sermon at the Merchants' Lecture in Broad Street, 8vo., London, 1714; A Sermon on the Birth Day of King George, 8vo., London, 1715; and A Funeral Sermon for the Rev. Thomas Michell, 8vo., London, 1721. A collection of Mr. Clarke's sermons appeared at London in an 8vo. volume the year after his decease.

CLARKE, MATTHEW, M.D., a native of London, was educated at Leyden, but obtained his doctor's degree at Cambridge (com. reg.) 1728. In 1732 he was elected physician to Guy's Hospital, but resigned that office 1754, soon after which he retired from practice and removed to Tottenham, where he died Nov., 1778. He was author of 'Dissertatio Medica Inauguralis de Pleuritide,' 4to., Leyden, 1726.

CLARKE, SAMUEL, a biographer and divine, born

CLARKE.

10 Oct., 1599, at Woolston, Warwickshire, of which parish his father was vicar. He received his education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, after which he took orders, and officiated for some time at Shotwick, Cheshire, from whence he removed to Coventry, and afterwards to Aicester, on the presentation of Lord Brooke. Here he resided nine years, and then became minister of St. Bennet Fink, in London, where he continued till he was silenced at the Restoration. Died 25 Dec., 1682. His principal works are 'A Mirror or Looking-glass for Saints and Sinners;' 'The Marrow of Ecclesiastical History, containing the Lives of the Fathers, Schoolmen, Reformers, and eminent modern Divines, &c.;" 'A General Martyrology;' 'The Lives of sundry eminent persons in this latter age,' folio, 1683; and 'The Marrow of Divinity.'

CLARKE, SAMUEL, son of the preceding, was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, which he lost in the Rebellion for refusing the engagement. He was afterwards preferred to the living of Grendon, Buckinghamshire, from whence he was ejected for non-conformity at the Restoration. Died 24 Feb., 1700-1, æt. 75. He was author of 'Annotations on the Bible,' 1690. His descendants spell their name without the final e. See CLARK.

CLARKE, SAMUEL, M.A., an orientalist, born at Brackley, Northamptonshire, 1623. He became a student at Merton College, Oxford, and in 1648 took his M.A. degree. In 1650 he kept a school at Islington, where he assisted in Walton's Polyglott. In 1658 he returned to the university, and became superior beadle of law, as also archtypographer, being the last person who united the two offices. Died 27 Dec., 1669. His works are 'Variae lectiones et observationes in Chaldaicam paraphrasim,' in the 6th vol. of the Polyglott Bible; 'Scientia metrica et rhythmica; seu tractatus de prosodia Arabica ex authoribus probatissimis eruta,' 1661; 'Septimum Bibliothecae Polyglottum volumen cum versionibus antiquissimis, non Chaldaica tantum, sed Syriacis, Æthiopicis, Copticis, Arabicis, Persicis contextum,' MS. There goes also under his name a translation out of Hebrew into Latin of a piece entitled 'Massereth Beracoth. Titulus Talmudicus, in quo agitur de benedictionibus, precibus, et gratiarum actionibus.'

CLARKE, SAMUEL, D.D., a learned divine and philosopher, born at Norwich 11 Oct., 1675. From the grammar school of his native city he removed in 1691 to Caius College, Cambridge. On entering into orders he became chaplain to Bishop Moore, who gave him the rectory of Drayton, Norfolk. In 1701 he published his Paraphrase of the Gospel of St. Matthew, which was afterwards extended to the other three Gospels. In 1704 he preached the Boyle's lecture, and gave such satisfaction that he was appointed to preach the year following. In 1706 he published a letter to Dodwell on the Immortality of the Soul, which occasioned a sharp controversy. The same year appeared his Latin translation of Newton's Optics, for which Sir Isaac gave him £500. About this time Mr. Clarke was presented to the rectory of St. Bennet's, Paul's Wharf, London, and appointed chaplain to the queen. In 1709 he obtained the rectory of St. James's, Westminster, on which occasion he took his doctor's degree at Cambridge. In 1712 he published an edition of Caesar's Commentaries, and the same year his celebrated book entitled 'The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity.'

which made a great noise, and was not only repeated by numerous writers, but complained of in the lower house of convocation. In 1715 and the following year he had a dispute with Leibnitz on the principles of natural philosophy and religion. In 1717 he published remarks upon Collins's Enquiry concerning Human Liberty. Soon after this an innovation introduced into the doxology in the singing psalms gave such offence to Robinson, bishop of London, that he sent a circular letter to his clergy, warning them against the use of these forms. At this time Dr. Clarke was presented to the mastership of Wigston's Hospital, in Leicester. In 1724 he published seventeen sermons, preached on different occasions; and in 1729 the first twelve books of Homer's Iliad, with a Latin version and annotations. The remaining books were published by his son in 1732. Dr. Clarke died 17 May, 1729. Soon afterwards appeared his Exposition of the Church Catechism, and ten volumes of his Sermons. His other works are Three Practical Essays on Baptism, Confirmation, and Repentance; Some Reflections on that part of a Book called Amynor, which relates to the writings of the Primitive Fathers, and the Canon of the New Testament; A Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God, being the First Boyle's Lecture; The Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, being the Second Set of Lectures; A Discourse concerning the connection of the Prophecies in the Old Testament, and the Application of them to Christ; Tracts in the Trinitarian Controversy; and A Letter to Hoadly on the velocity of Bodies in Motion.

CLARKE, WILLIAM, a divine and antiquary, was born at Haghmon Abbey, in Shropshire, in 1696, and educated at Shrewsbury School, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in 1717, and took his master's degree in 1719. In 1724 Archbishop Wake gave him the rectory of Buxted, in Sussex; and in 1738 he was made prebendary of Chichester. In 1768 he resigned his living in favour of his son, and two years afterwards was installed chancellor of Chichester, to which were annexed the rectories of Chittingley and Pevensey, and the vicarage of Amport. Died 21 Oct., 1771. He wrote a preface to his father-in-law, Dr. Wotton's, 'Leges Walliæ Ecclesiasticæ,' 1730; A Discourse on the Commerce of the Romans; The Connection of the Roman, Saxon, and English Coins, &c.; and some ingenious poems.

CLARKE, WILLIAM, a popular English author, born in or about 1801; died in London 17 June, 1838. He was author of 'Three Courses and a Dessert,' 'The Boy's Own Book,' and other volumes which acquired great and deserved popularity. He was also the editor of, and chief contributor to a curious little work called 'The Cigar,' which contains numerous papers from his pen, some of them as brilliant in fancy as others are rich in humour. For some time he was editor of the 'Monthly Magazine.' During the three or four years preceding his death his time was exclusively devoted to the production of a most elaborate work on natural history.

CLARKSON, DAVID, a divine, was born at Bradford, in Yorkshire, in February, 1622, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, of which society he became fellow, and had Mr., afterwards Archbishop Tillotson, for one of his pupils. He held the living of Mortlake, in Surrey, but was dispossessed of it in 1662 for nonconformity. He then officiated to an Independent congregation in London, and died 14 June, 1686. He wrote some controversial pieces, the principal of which is entitled, 'No Evidence for Diocesan Episcopacy in the primitive times,' 4to., 1681, in answer to Dr. Stillingfleet; and another on the same subject, printed after his death, under the title of 'Primitive Episcopacy,' 1688. The latter was answered by Dr. Henry Maurice. Clarkson's 'Select Works,' edited by Basil Henry Cooper, B.A., were published in an 8vo. vol. at London, 1846.

CLARKSON, JOHN, an English Dominican friar, was the eighteenth prior of Bornhem, and was living in 1762. He published a work on the Rosary, 12mo., London, 1737.

CLARKSON, THOMAS, the anti-slavery agitator, was born at Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, 28 March, 1760, and after a preliminary training at St. Paul's School was sent to St. John's College, Cambridge. His attention was first directed to the subject of negro slavery by the circumstance of a prize being offered at the university for the best Latin dissertation on this question: 'Is it right to make slaves of others against their will?' He carried off the prize, printed an English translation of his essay, and resolved to devote his life to a crusade against the African slave trade. His efforts were unceasing, and his alliance with Wilberforce proved greatly conducive to their joint success. In 1807 he had the satisfaction of seeing an Act pass for the suppression of the slave trade; and subsequently he gave to the world a history of the great struggle in which he and his friends had been engaged. Later in life he became connected with an anti-slavery association formed in 1823; and in the seventy-fourth year of his age enjoyed the unalloyed happiness of witnessing its greatest triumph in the enactment of that Bill which awarded £30,000,000 as compensation to the West Indian slave-owners. He died at Playford Hall, Suffolk, 26 Sept., 1846. It should be mentioned that Mr. Clarkson was originally a member of the Church of England, but afterwards joined the Society of Friends.

CLATER, FRANCIS, a chemist, druggist, farrier, and cattle doctor, of Retford, Nottinghamshire, died 29 May, 1823, aged 67. He published 'Every Man his own Farrier, or the whole art of Farriery laid open,' 8vo., Newark, 1783, 1787; 21st edition, 1812; and 'Every Man his own Cattle Doctor,' being a concise and familiar description of all the diseases incident to Oxen, Cows, and Sheep, with the most simple and effectual methods of cure,' 8vo., London, 1810.

CLAUDE, JEAN, a French Protestant, born in Angoumois 1619. He rendered himself famous by a treatise on the Eucharist, which occasioned a sharp controversy between him, Arnauld, and other learned men. He was suspended from preaching by order of the court, and eventually withdrew to the Hague, where he received a pension from the Prince of Orange. Died 13 Jan., 1687. His 'Essay on the Composition of a Sermon' has been translated into English.

CLAUDE, JEAN JACQUES, grandson of the preceding, was born at the Hague 16 Jan., 1684. Coming to England, he was appointed pastor of the French church in London, where he died 7 March, 1712. A volume of his Sermons was published the following year.

CLAUDIANUS.

CLAUDIANUS, CLAUDIUS, a Latin poet, who died about 408. The best edition of his works is that by Burmann, published at Amsterdam, 1760.

CLAUDIUS I., emperor of Rome, was born a.c. 10, and succeeded Caligula A.D. 41. He was poisoned by his wife Agrippina, who wanted to place her son Nero on the throne, 13 Oct., 54.

CLAUDIUS II. was born 214, succeeded Gallienus 268, and died Aug., 270.

CLAVELL, JOHN, an English highwayman, who died 1642, published a curious work in verse, entitled 'Discovery of the High-way Law; with Instructions how to shun or apprehend a Thief,' 8vo., London, 1628. It was reprinted under the title of 'A Recantation of an ill-led Life,' 4to., London, 1634.

CLAVER, the Blessed PETER, a Spanish Jesuit, who in 1610 was sent as a missionary to the West Indies, where he spent his life in ministering to the wants of the negro slaves, the prisoners, and the poor. He died at Carthagena 8 Sept., 1654. He was beatified by Benedict XIV. in 1747.

CLAVERHOUSE, JOHN GRAHAM OF. See DUNDEE, VISCOUNT.

CLAVERIGO, FRANCIS XAVIER, a Jesuit, born in Mexico 1718; died at Cesena Oct., 1793. He wrote in Italian a curious History of Mexico, which has been translated into English by Charles Cullen, 2 vols. 4to., London, 1787.

CLAVIUS, CHRISTOPHER, a learned mathematician and Jesuit, born at Bamberg, in Germany, 1537. He was employed by Gregory XIII. in the reformation of the calendar, and died 6 Feb., 1612. His works were printed in 5 vols. folio.

CLAY, HENRY, the eminent American statesman, was born 12 April, 1777, and died at Washington, 29 June, 1852.

CLAY, JOHN, a musician of Nottingham, who published in 1720 'The Psalm-Singers Delightful Companion, containing great variety of new Psalm-Tunes, with a Choice Collection of Hymns.'

CLAY, JOHN, was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he proceeded to the degree of B.D. For nearly thirty years he was chaplain to the House of Correction at Preston, Lancashire. During that period he paid great attention to prison discipline and statistics, and the valuable reports he issued on this subject gained for him a European reputation. He died at Leamington 21 Nov., 1858, aged 62.

CLAYTON, JOHN, a botanical writer, was born in Kent 1693, and emigrating to America became secretary of Gloucester County, in Virginia, where he died 1773.

CLAYTON, JOHN, pastor of the Weigh-house Independent Meeting in London, died 1843, æt. 90. He published several sermons and charges.

CLAYTON, JOHN, eldest son of the preceding, became pastor of the Poultry Chapel, London, and died at Bath 3 Oct., 1865, aged 85. He published a Sermon before the Missionary Society, 1809; and a treatise 'On the Choice of Books,' 1811.

CLAYTON, ROBERT, an Irish prelate, born at Dublin, 1695. He received his education at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Dublin. On becoming acquainted with Dr. Clarke he embraced Arianism, notwithstanding which he was successively promoted to the sees of Killala, Cork, and Clogher. His first publication was an Introduction to the History of the Jews, which was followed by the Chronology of the Hebrew Bible vindicated; a Dissertation on Prophecy; and an Impartial Enquiry into the Time of the Coming of the Messiah. In 1751 appeared an 'Essay on Spirit,' which excited a warm controversy. The authorship was universally, though erroneously, ascribed to the bishop, who, however, was at the expense of printing the work, and wrote the Introduction to it. His next publication was a Vindication of the Old and New Testament against Bolingbroke, 1752; and in 1753 he printed 'A Journal from Grand Cairo to Mount Sinai, and back again, translated from a Manuscript written by the Prefetto of Egypt, in company with the Missionaries de Propaganda Fide at Grand Cairo.' In 1754 the bishop printed the second part of his Answer to Bolingbroke. His next publication consisted of some letters between himself and Penn, the quaker, on Baptism. In 1756 his lordship ventured to move the Irish House of Lords to expunge the Athanasian and Nicene Creeds from the liturgy. This led to measures being adopted to deprive him of his bishopric, which had such an effect upon his spirits that he died of vexation 26 Feb., 1758.

CLEANTHES, a Greek philosopher, who succeeded his master, Zeno, in the Stoic School at Athens, B.C. 264. Of his writings nothing remains but an admirable Hymn to Jupiter.

CLEAVER, EUSEBY, a native of Buckinghamshire, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He was consecrated bishop of Cork and Ross 1789; translated to Leighlin and Ferns the same year; raised to the archbishopric of Dublin 1809; and died 1819.

CLEAVER, WILLIAM, an English prelate, brother of Euseby Cleaver, mentioned above, was born at Twyford, Buckinghamshire, 1742. He was educated at Oxford, where he was chosen head of Brasenose College 1785. He was consecrated bishop of Chester 1787; translated to Bangor 1800; to St. Asaph 1806; and died 15 May, 1815. He published 'De Rhythmo Græcorum; Directions to his clergy on the choice of books; Remarks on Marsh's Dissertation on the three first Gospels; and Sermons.' He was also editor of the splendid impression of Homer printed at Oxford by the Grenville family.

CLEEF, JOSEPH VAN, a painter, born at Antwerp 1487. His subjects are generally bankers and misers counting money. There were other painters of the same name and family.

CLEEVE, ALEXANDER, a divine, after taking his B.A. degree at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, in 1771, was presented to the vicarage of Stockton-upon-Tees, Durham, 1772, which he resigned for that of Wooler 1780. He was editor of several devotional exercises from the Psalms, 1801; and printed a sermon preached before the governors of a lying-in hospital 1773.

CLEEVE, BOURCHIER, of Foot's Cray, Kent, wrote 'A Scheme for preventing a further increase of the National Debt and for reducing the same, inscribed to the Earl of Chesterfield,' 4to., London, 1756. Died 1 March, 1760.

CLEEVE, JOHN VAN, a painter of Antwerp, who came to England in the reign of Philip and Mary.

CLEGHORN, GEORGE, M.D., was born at Granton, near Edinburgh, 13 Dec., 1716, and educated at Cramond. In 1731 he began the study of physic under Dr. Alexander Monro, with whom he lived five years. Here he formed an acquaintance with Dr. Fothergill, in conjunction with whom, and some other students, an institution was established, which has since been incorporated by the name of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh. In 1736 he went to Minorca as surgeon to a regiment, and resided there thirteen years. In 1749 he returned, and published, the year following, a volume on the diseases of Minorca. In 1751 he settled in Dublin, where he was admitted a member of the university, and lecturer in anatomy. In 1784 he became honorary member of the College of Physicians, after which he was declared professor of anatomy, and chosen one of the first members of the Irish Academy. Dr. Cleghorn died in Dec., 1789.

CLEGHORN, JAMES, a Scotch actuary and writer on statistics, born at Dunse 1778; died 27 May, 1838.

CLELAND, JOHN, an author, was the grandson of Colonel Cleland, mentioned below. He was educated at Westminster School, and early in life went out as consul to Smyrna; afterwards he sailed to the East Indies, but returned to Europe without having improved his fortune. Being in embarrassed circumstances he wrote an infamous novel, entitled, 'Fanny Hill; or, Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure,' for which Ralph Griffiths, then a bookseller, gave him twenty guineas, though the sale is supposed to have produced some thousands. Earl Granville, in order to draw Cleland from such pursuits, allowed him £100 a year; after which he wrote 'The Memoirs of a Coxcomb;' 'The Man of Honour;' and an etymological work of some merit, entitled, 'The Way to Things by Words, and to Words by Things,' 8vo. He died 23 Jan., 1789, aged 82.

CLELAND, Colonel WILLIAM, a Scotch soldier and poet, born about 1661. At the conflict of Drumclog, when he was scarcely eighteen years of age, he acted as an officer of foot in the Covenanters' army, and at Bothwell Bridge he held the rank of captain. After that engagement he appears to have gone over to Holland, as he published at Utrecht, in 1684, his 'Disputatio Juridica de Probationibus.' In the following year, however, he was again in Scotland. After the Revolution, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the earl of Angus's regiment, called the Cameronian regiment; and on 21 Aug., 1689, he was slain at the head of his corps, while manfully defending the churchyard of Dunkeld against a superior force of Highlanders. His poetical works were published in 1697. The principal piece is entitled 'A Mock Poem on the Expedition of the Highland Host who came to destroy the Western Shires in Winter 1678.'—Anderson.

CLELAND, WILLIAM, son of the preceding, was one of the commissioners of customs in Scotland, and author of the Prefatory Letter to the Dunciad. Died 1741.—Anderson.

CLEMENCET, CHARLES, a French Benedictine, born at Painblanc, in the diocese of Autun, 1704; died 5 April, 1778. He published 'L'Art de vérifier les Dates,' which was continued by Father Clement, and is one of the most useful works compiled by the Benedictine monks; 'Histoire Générale du Port-Royal;' and 'Histoire Littéraire de St. Bernard et de Pierre le Vénéral.'—

CLEMENS ALEXANDRINUS (ST.), a father of the church, who died at Alexandria about 220. The best edition of his works is that by Archbishop Potter, 2 vols. folio, Oxford, 1715.

CLEMENT I. (ST.), Clemens Romanus, succeeded St. Linus in the see of Rome 67, and was the disciple and coadjutor of the apostles. St. Paul mentions him in his epistle to the Philippians. St. Clement governed the church with great wisdom; abdicated in 76; and died in 100. An epistle of his to the Corinthians remains, which is one of the finest pieces of ecclesiastical antiquity.

CLEMENT II., a Saxon; bishop of Bamberg; elected Pope at the Council of Sutri 1046; died 7 Oct., 1047.

CLEMENT III., a Roman, bishop of Prenceste; elected Pope 19 Dec., 1187; died 25 March, 1191. See GUIBERT.

CLEMENT IV., Gui Fouques, a Frenchman, elected Pope at Perugia 5 Feb., 1265; died 29 Nov., 1268, at Viterbo.

CLEMENT V., Bertrand de Goth, a native of France, was elected Pope 5 June, 1305, and died 20 April, 1314. He made the collection of what are called the Clementine Constitutions, which form part of the body of canon law.

CLEMENT VI., Pierre Roger, a native of Limousin, was elected Pope 7 May, 1342, and died 6 Dec., 1352. He reduced the period of the jubilee to fifty years.

CLEMENT VII., Julius de Medicis, an Italian, succeeded Adrian VI. 19 Nov., 1523. He joined with Francis I. and Henry VIII., of England, against the Emperor Charles V., which league was called the Holy League. Rome was besieged and taken, and the Pope retired to the castle of St. Angelo, and was obliged to submit to all the conditions imposed upon him by the conqueror. He afterwards issued a bull against Henry VIII., of England, and condemned his marriage with Anne Boleyn, which occasioned the separation of this country from the Holy See. Died 26 Sept., 1534. This Pope must not be confounded with Robert, of Geneva, who, after the election of Urban VI., was elected Pope at Fondi 21 Sept., 1378, by several cardinals, who asserted that they were not free at the former election. Robert took the name of Clement VII., retired to Avignon, and was acknowledged by France and Spain. Died 1394. His election occasioned a great schism in the western church, which did not end till fifty years afterwards, when the anti-Pope, Clement VIII., abdicated in 1429, and acknowledged Martin V.

CLEMENT VIII., Hippolito Aldobrandini, a native of Fano, elected Pope 30 Jan., 1592; died 5 March, 1605, aged 69.

CLEMENT IX., Julius Rospigliosi, was elected Pope 20 June, 1667, and died 9 Dec., 1669, aged 71.

CLEMENT X., Emilius Altieri, was elected to the papal chair 29 April, 1670, and died 22 July, 1676, aged 86.

CLEMENT XI., John Francis Albani, was born at Urbino 1649; elected Pope 24 Nov., 1700; died 19 March, 1721. His works were published at Rome, in 2 vols. folio, 1729.

CLEMENT XII., Laurence Corsini, was elected Pope 12 July, 1730, and died 6 Feb., 1740, aged 88.

CLEMENT XIII., Charles Rezzonico, a Venetian, born 7 March, 1693; succeeded Benedict XIV. 6 July, 1758; and died 4 Feb., 1769.

CLEMENT XIV., John Vincent Ganganelli, born 31 Oct., 1705, at the town of St. Archangelo, in the diocese of Rimini. He entered the Franciscan order; was created cardinal 1759; elected Pope 1769; died 22 Sept., 1774. His bull for suppressing the Jesuits, 1773, will make his name famous in history.

CLEMENT.

CLEMENT, CÆSAR, D.D., an English priest who, after studying at Douay, Rheims, and Rome, was made dean of St. Gudule's, in Brussels, and vicar-general of the king of Spain's army in Flanders—a place of considerable power and profit. He was thus enabled to render services to many of his countrymen in exile, who ever found him ready to assist them. Dr. Clement was living 1612. Many of his letters were formerly in the possession of Dodd, the church historian.

CLEMENT, DAVID, a Protestant divine, born in Hesse 1701, being son of a French refugee. He officiated at Brunswick, but afterwards removed to Hanover, where he died 10 Jan., 1760. He published 'Bibliothèque Curieuse, Historique, et Critique;' and 'Specimen Bibliothecæ Hispano-Maiansianæ.'

CLEMENT, GREGORY, a merchant of London, who was a member of the court which condemned King Charles I. He was executed as a traitor at Charing Cross, 17 Oct., 1660.

CLEMENT, JACQUES, a French Dominican friar, who rendered his memory execrable, at the age of twenty-five, by assassinating King Henry III. at St. Cloud 1 Aug., 1589. He was immediately slain by the courtiers who were in attendance on the king.

CLEMENT, JEAN MARIE BERNARD, a French critic, who gained celebrity by his severe strictures on the poetry of Voltaire, St. Lambert, La Harpe, Lebrun, and Delille. Born 25 Dec., 1742; died 3 Feb., 1812.

CLEMENT, JOHN, M.D., was educated at St. Paul's school and at Oxford, and became tutor to the children of Sir Thomas More, after which he was constituted by Cardinal Wolsey his rhetoric reader in the university, and afterwards reader of Greek. He afterwards left England for religion's sake, and ended his days at Mechlin 1 July, 1572. He composed 'Epigrammatum et aliorum carminum, lib. i.,' and translated from Greek into Latin the Epistles of Gregory Nazianzen, and other works.

CLEMENT, PIERRE, was born at Geneva 1707, and after being travelling tutor to Lord Waldegrave, settled in Paris, where he conducted the 'Nouvelles Littéraires de France,' from 1749 to 1754. He also wrote some poems; 'Merope,' a tragedy; and a translation of 'George Barnwell' from the English. Died 7 Jan., 1767.

CLEMENTI, MUZIO, an eminent pianist and musical composer, was born at Rome 1752, and died in Worcestershire, 16 April, 1832. He gave to the musical world two elementary books of the highest value, his 'Practical Harmony,' published in 4 vols. between 1811 and 1815, and his 'Gradus ad Parnassum,' in 3 vols.

CLEMENTONE, BOCCIARDI, an Italian painter, born at Genoa 1620. The date of his decease is unknown.

CLEMENTS, WILLIAM, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford (M.A. 1733), and became vicar of South Brent, Somersetshire; lecturer of St. Stephen's, Walbrook; curate of St. Mary-at-Hill, London; and librarian at Sion College. Died 8 April, 1799, aged 88. He was author of 'Eight Sermons preached at Lady Moyer's Lecture. To which is added, A Latin Oration, spoken in the hall at Magdalen College, Oxford,' 8vo. London, 1797.

CLENARD, NICHOLAS, a learned traveller and philologist, born at Diest, in Belgium, 5 Dec., 1495; died 1542.

CLERK.

CLENNEL, LUKE, an English painter, born near Morpeth, in Northumberland, 1781; died 1840.

CLENOCKE, MAURICE, D.D., a Catholic divine, born in Wales, and educated at Oxford. In Mary's reign he was appointed a prebendary of York, and almoner and secretary to Cardinal Pole, likewise chancellor of the prerogative court of Canterbury. In 1558 he was nominated to the bishopric of Bangor, but was never consecrated. After the death of Queen Mary he retired to Rome, and became the first rector of the English college established there in 1578.

CLEOPATRA, queen of Egypt. She was the daughter of Ptolemy Auletes, and the sister of Ptolemy Dionysius, who deprived her of her share of the kingdom, on which she admitted Cæsar to her arms to gain his interest in her behalf, and by him had a son called Cæsarion. Ptolemy was defeated and accidentally drowned; thus leaving the entire throne to his sister, who put away her younger brother by poison. She afterwards resided with Cæsar, and was at Rome when he was killed, on which she fled from the city; and after the battle of Philippi she was summoned by Antony to answer the charge alleged against her of having assisted Brutus. When she made her appearance before Antony the charms of her person ensnared him, and he publicly married her, regardless of his connection with Octavia, the sister of Augustus. At the battle of Actium she fled, and her paramour was defeated. He afterwards died in her arms. Cleopatra, to prevent being led as a captive to grace the triumph of Augustus, caused an asp to be brought to her, which having applied to her breast, she died of the wound, and was magnificently buried by the conqueror B.C. 30, at the age of 39. She was a woman of a most ambitious and extravagant spirit, and is said to have dissolved costly pearls in vinegar, to render her entertainments more expensive.

CLERC LE. See LECLERC.

CLERK, JOHN, an English prelate, received his education at Cambridge, and subsequently became dean of Windsor, dean of the King's Chapel, and the king's orator at Rome. It was he who delivered Henry VIII.'s book against Luther to Pope Leo X. in full consistory, Sept., 1521, making a famous oration on the occasion. In 1523 he was consecrated bishop of Bath and Wells, but being much employed in embassies abroad, his episcopal functions were for the most part discharged by suffragans. Died 3 Jan., 1540-1. He was author of 'Oratio pro Hen. VIII. apud Leonem X. pont. max. in exhibitione operis regii contra Lutherum in consistorium habitam,' 4to., London, 1521, translated into English by T. W., 4to., London, 1687.

CLERK, JOHN, an English Catholic divine, secretary to Thomas, duke of Norfolk, died in prison 10 May, 1552. He published 'Opusculum plane divinum de Mortuorum Resurrectione et Extremo Judicio, in quatuor libris succincte conscriptum. Latine, Anglice, Italice, Gallice,' 4to., London, 1545.

CLERK, JOHN, a native of Eldin, Scotland, who, though not bred to the marine profession, distinguished himself by his skill in naval architecture and nautical tactics, especially as regards the operations of a fleet. By close application to these studies, and paying particular attention to the historical descriptions of sea engagements, he conceived that a material improvement would be made by adopting a more decisive mode of fighting. He demonstrated that the plan of attacking an enemy's fleet at once from van to rear exposed the leading ships to the formidable battery of the whole hostile line, by which means they were often crippled, and disabled as well for action as pursuit. He then first pointed out the manœuvre of piercing the enemy's line, by which means a close action was sure to ensue. This plan, it has been asserted, was communicated to Admiral Sir George Rodney, who carried it effectually into execution on the 12th of April, 1782, when he gained the glorious victory over Count de Grasse; but this assertion has been proved to be totally devoid of truth. Mr. Clerk published an 'Essay on Naval Tactics;' and died at an advanced age at Eldin, May 10, 1812.

CLERK, JOHN, a learned Scotch lawyer, son of the above, assumed the title of Lord Eldin on being appointed one of the lords of session. He had a large collection of paintings, and published a volume of etchings by himself. Died June, 1832, aged 74.

CLERK, SIR JOHN, bart., of Pennycook in Scotland, was born about 1684, became a baron of the Scotch Exchequer 1708, and died 4 Oct., 1755. In conjunction with Baron Scrope he drew up an 'Historical View of the Forms, and Powers of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland,' printed in 1720. He likewise wrote two papers in the 'Philosophical Transactions;' 'Dissertatio de quibusdam Monumentis Romanis;' and some popular ballads. For upwards of twenty years he carried on a learned correspondence with Roger Gale, which forms a portion of the 'Reliquiæ Galeanæ,' in the 'Bibl. Top. Brit.—Anderson.

CLERK-MAXWELL, SIR GEORGE, bart., of Pennycook, in Scotland, was born at Edinburgh Oct. 1715, and died Jan., 1784. He wrote some works on manufactures and agriculture, and did much to promote the commercial interests of his country.

CLERKE, BARTHOLOMEW, LL.D., a civilian, born near London about 1527. After a preliminary training at Eton he removed to King's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees. He afterwards sat in parliament, was admitted an advocate, appointed dean of the Arches, 1573, and archdeacon of Wells 1582. In 1585 he and Sir Henry Killigrew were sent to Flanders to co-operate with the earl of Leicester, being appointed members of the council of state; and two years afterwards he was again despatched thither as one of the agents commissioned to allay the discontent which had been caused by the earl's proceedings, and to open the way to a peace with Spain. Died 12 March, 1589-90. His principal works are 'Balthasaris Castilionis comitis de Curiali, sive Aulico, libri quatuor, ex Italico sermone in Latinum conversi;' and 'Fidelis servi, subdito infideli responsio, una cum errorum et calumniarum quarundam examine quæ continentur in septimo libro De visibili ecclesiæ monarchia à Nicholao Sanderso conscripta,' 1573.

CLERKE, CHARLES, an English circumnavigator, the friend and companion of the illustrious Captain Cook, was born 1741; and died near the coast of Kamtschatka 22 Aug., 1779.

CLERKE, GILBERT, of Uppington, Rutlandshire, was educated at Sidney College, Cambridge. He was an able Grecian and mathematician, but favoured the Socinians, and left the university for a small estate in Northamptonshire, where he died about 1697, aged 69. He wrote an answer to Bishop Bull's work on the divine faith, &c.

CLERKE, WILLIAM, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, is the supposed author of 'The Trial of Bastardie,' 1594, and 'Polimanteia, or, The meanes lawfull and unlawfull, to judge of the fall of a Common-wealth against the frivolous and foolish conjectures of this age,' 1595. In the last curious and interesting work, mention is made of our old English poets sweet Shakespeare, Harvey, Nash, divine Spenser, &c. It is said that this is the earliest known publication in which our immortal dramatist is alluded to by name.

CLERKE, WILLIAM, LL.D., a distinguished civilian, received his education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (LL.B. 1609; LL.D. 1629). He was constituted one of the judges of the admiralty 1651; and died about the month of August, 1655. He was author of 'An Epitome of certain late Aspersions cast at Civilians, the Civil and Ecclesiastical Laws, the Courts Christian, and at Bishops and their Chancellors, wherein the authors thereof are refuted and repelled,' 4to., Dublin, 1631. This treatise is chiefly in answer to the preface of Sir John Davis's Reports, and to some parts of the case of Præmunire, reported by him.

CLERMONT-TONNERRE, STANISLAUS, COUNT OF, a French nobleman, born 1747. He showed himself an able orator in the French Revolution, the friend of limited monarchy, and an enemy to popular tumults. His opposition to the Jacobin club sent him to prison, where he was massacred Sept., 1792. His Opinions have been published in 4 vols. 8vo., and his Examen de la Constitution, 8vo., 1791.

CLERSELLIER, CLAUDE, a Cartesian philosopher, born at Paris about 1614; died 13 April, 1684.

CLERY, MICHAEL. See O'CLERY.

CLEVELAND, AUGUSTUS, son of John Cleveland, Esq., many years secretary to the Board of Admiralty, was born at the family seat in Devonshire 1755. He went to India, and had not been long at Calcutta before his merits recommended him to some important civil situations, and at length he was appointed collector of the districts of Bhaugulpore and Kajamahall. The inhabitants of that mountainous region were then in the most uncivilised state, and subsisted chiefly by plundering their neighbours. Mr. Cleveland, however, by the prudence of his government, reduced them to order, and to engage their confidence he enrolled the chief of them into a regular body as archers, and by introducing military subordination, brought them gradually even to a peaceable deportment. He acquired a knowledge of their language, and then framed for the people a legislative code, perfectly simple in its principles, and easy of application. By such means he became so endeared to these tribes that on his death, which happened 13 Jan., 1784, the Zemindars built a pagoda to his memory, and another monument was also erected by the governor-general and council of Bengal.

CLEVELAND, or CLEIVELAND, JOHN, an English poet, was son of the Rev. Thomas Cleiveland, vicar of Hincley, and rector of Stoke, in the county of Leicester. He was born at Loughborough 1613, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge; where he took his first degree, and then removed to St. John's College, of which he was elected a fellow 1634, proceeding to his degree of M.A. in the following year. He afterwards studied law, and next physic, in order to avoid taking orders in accordance with the statutes of his college. In the Rebellion he joined the royal cause, and did great service to it by his satires, the first of which was the Rebel Scot. In 1655 he was taken prisoner, but was released by Cromwell, to whom he sent a moving petition. He died in London 29 April, 1659. The best edition of his works is that of 1687.

CLEVELY, JOHN, a painter, born 1745, in London, where he died 1786.

CLEVES, ANNE OF. See ANNE.

CLEYN, FRANCIS, an artist, was born at Rostock, studied in Italy, and was some time in the service of Christian IV., king of Denmark. He came to England in the latter end of the reign of James I., and was employed in the tapestry works at Mortlake. A fine suit of tapestry in grotesque, after his designs, is at Petworth, in Sussex, and at Holland House is a most beautiful ceiling by him, which Walpole says 'is not unworthy of Parmegiano.' Cleyn designed many of the plates for Ogilby's 'Virgil' and 'Æsop.' Died about 1658.

CLIFFORD. See CUMBERLAND, EARL OF.

CLIFFORD, ANNE, sole daughter and heir of George, third earl of Cumberland, was born at Skipton Castle, in Craven, 30 Jan., 1580. She was married to Richard lord Buckhurst, afterwards earl of Dorset, by whom she had three sons, who died young, and two daughters. Her second husband was Philip, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, by whom she had no issue. She wrote curious memoirs of herself, preserved in MS. Harl. 6177. Died 22 March, 1676.

CLIFFORD, ARTHUR, an English antiquary, died at Winchester 16 Jan., 1830, aged 52. His works consist of an enlarged edition of the State Papers of Sir Ralph Sadler, 2 vols. 4to., 1809; 'Tixall Poetry, with Notes and Illustrations,' 1813; 'An Historical and Topographical Description of the Parish of Tixall, in the county of Stafford,' jointly with his brother, Sir Thomas Hugh Clifford (afterwards Constable), 4to., Paris, 1817; 'Collectanea Cliffordiana,' 8vo., Paris, 1817; and 'An Essay on an Improved Method of teaching the Dead Languages.'

CLIFFORD, MARTIN, a scholar and wit, was educated at Westminster school and Trinity College, Cambridge; became master of the Charterhouse 1671; and died 1677. He was author of 'Structures on Dryden's Poems; and a 'Treatise on Human Reason,' 1674, which occasioned the publication of several pamphlets. He was also said to have had a considerable share in the composition of 'The Rehearsal.'

CLIFFORD, ROSAMOND, commonly called Fair Rosamond, was daughter of Walter Lord Clifford, and mistress to King Henry II. She is said to have died by poison, administered by Queen Eleanor through jealousy 1177; but this story has been refuted by the historian Carte, who states that through grief at the defection of her royal admirer on his marriage with Eleanor, she retired from the world, and became a nun at Godstow, where she died.

CLIFFORD, THOMAS, Lord Clifford, an English statesman, was born at Chudleigh, Devonshire, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, after which he studied law in one of the inns of court. He afterwards attended Charles II. in exile, and at this period, if Burnet's statement be correct, was reconciled to the Catholic church. After the Restoration he represented Totnes in parliament, and rendered himself a favourite at court by the delivery of several speeches on behalf of the royal prerogative. For this he was knighted. He afterwards served in the fleet under the duke of York, and distinguished himself in various engagements. In 1666 he was made comptroller of the household, and sworn of the privy council; and two years later became treasurer of the household, and one of the lords commissioners of the treasury. In 1673 he was created Baron Clifford of Chudleigh, and advanced to the dignity of lord high treasurer of England. As a statesman he was exceedingly unpopular, in consequence of it being believed that he was privately in communion with Rome. On the passing of the Test Act he resigned the white staff into the hands of Sir Thomas Osborn 19 June, 1673, and died in the winter of the same year. Lord Clifford was one of the ministry called the Cabal. The others were Arlington, Buckingham, Ashley (afterwards earl of Shaftesbury), and Lauderdale.

CLIFFORD, WILLIAM, an English divine of the Roman communion. His ancestors were the earls of Cumberland, and it is said that he himself might have claimed the title, had he not voluntarily declined all honours. He had his education in the English college at Douay, and, being ordained priest, returned to England upon the mission. Afterwards he was rector, for a short period, of the English college at Lisbon. He ended his days 30 April, 1670, in a hospital at Paris, where he had spent the greater part of his time in assisting the poor and the sick. His works are 'The Poor Man's Manual of Devotion, which has been printed times without number; Christian rules, proposed to the virtuous soul, aspiring at holy perfection,' 8vo., 1655, 1665; 'Observations upon all the kings' reigns, since the Conquest,' MS.; and MS. collections concerning the chief points of controversy.

CLIFTON, FRANCIS, F.R.S., an English physician, who was in the service of the Prince of Wales, was the author of a History of Ancient and Modern Medicine 1742, and the translator of some of the works of Hippocrates.

CLIFTON, RICHARD, a Puritan divine, received part of his education in the university of Cambridge. After acting as pastor of one of the Brownist churches in the north of England, he removed to Holland about 1666, and settled at Amsterdam, where he became teacher to the church of which Francis Johnson was pastor. Died 20 May, 1616. He published, among other things, 'A Plea for Infants and elder People concerning their Baptism; or . Process of the Passages between M. John Smyth and Richard Clifton,' 1610.

CLINE, HENRY, an eminent surgeon and lecturer on anatomy, born in London 1751; died 1827. He was for many years surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, Southwark, where he gave lectures to a numerous class of pupils.—Rosel.

CLINT, GEORGE, A.R.A., an English engraver and painter, died 1854.

CLINTON, LORD. See LINCOLN, EARL OF.

CLINTON, ALEXANDER, a Scotch Jesuit, whose real name was MacKenzie, born 23 March, 1730. He joined the Society of Jesus 1749, and seven years later was sent on the London mission. Then he became chaplain to Thomas Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, Dorsetshire, and finally went to Ireland, where he died 5 June, 1800. He published an edition of Dunlery's Catechism; 'The Spiritual Guide'; 'Treatise on Frequent Communion,' from the French of Père Grou, 1780; 'Moral Instructions extracted from St. Augustine's Works,' 2 vols. 12mo., Dublin, 1792; 'Characters of Real Devotion,' 12mo., London, 1791; and 'School of Christ,' 12mo., Dublin, 1801.—Over.

CLINTON, DE WITT, an American statesman, born in the state of New York 1769; died 1828. He was the promoter of the project for the formation of the great canal from Lake Erie to the Atlantic.

CLINTON, SIR HENRY, K.B., an English general, was the grandson of Francis, earl of Lincoln, and became a captain in the Guards in 1758. In 1778 he was appointed general in North America, and returned to England in 1782. Soon afterwards he published a narrative of his conduct, which was replied to by Earl Cornwallis, and vindicated by Sir Henry. In 1784 he published a further defence of himself. He was made governor of Gibraltar 1795, but died on the 24th of Dec. in that year.

CLINTON, HENRY FYNES, a chronologist, was born 1781, and educated at Westminster school and at Christ Church, Oxford. He was returned to parliament for Aldborough at the general election of 1806, and sat during five parliaments, until the dissolution of 1826. Mr. Clinton was well known in the learned world as the author of the 'Fasti Hellenici' and 'Fasti Romani.' He also wrote 'An Epitome of the Civil and Literary Chronology of Greece, from the earliest accounts to the death of Augustus.' Mr. Clinton died at Welwyn, Hertfordshire, 24 Oct. 1852.

CLIVE, CATHARINE, an eminent actress, whose maiden name was Raftor, was born 1711. She first appeared at Drury Lane, in boy's clothes, in the character of Ismenes, and afterwards her delineation of Nell, in 'The Devil to Pay,' exhibited her in the possession of such superior talents, that for thirty years she remained unrivalled on the stage. In 1732 she married a gentleman of the law, named George Clive; but they soon agreed on a separation, and never again lived together. In 1769 Mrs. Clive retired from the stage, and thenceforward resided at Strawberry Hill, Twickenham. Died 6 Dec., 1785.

CLIVE, ROBERT, Lord Clive, a gallant general, born at Stycbe, the family seat in Shropshire, 20 Sept., 1725. In 1743 he received an appointment as a writer to the India Company, and the year following arrived at Madras. In 1747 he was made an ensign in the military service, but had no opportunity of displaying his talents till the following year, when the siege of Pondicherry brought his energies conspicuously into action. The taking of Devi Cotah, a strong fort belonging to the rajah of Tanjore, gave a decisive proof of his superior powers of mind, as well as courage, and he was accordingly advanced to the rank of commissary-general. The state of the English in the east was at this time very low; but within a few years after the arrival of Clive at Calcutta, a wonderful change took place; and instead of being a commercial company, they became sovereign princes, possessing extensive revenues, and ruling over fifteen or twenty millions of people. That Clive laid the foundation of this greatness is unquestionable, for it was he who first broke the French power in the east, by taking Arcot, for which the India Company presented him a sword set with diamonds, and made him governor of St. David's, a situation that enabled him to execute still greater designs. The battle of Plassey cemented the advantages which he had gained, and fixed the power he had established. For these services he was created by the Mogul an omrah of the empire, while in his own country he was advanced to the Irish peerage. In 1764 he was appointed governor-general of India, and after his return in 1769 was made knight of the Bath. He experienced, however, that ingratitude which too generally falls to the lot of public characters. In 1773 a motion was made in the House of Commons, that, 'in the acquisition of his wealth, Lord Clive had abused the powers with which he had been entrusted.' He defended himself with spirit, and the motion was not only rejected, but the house resolved that 'Lord Clive had rendered great and meritorious services to his country.' This treatment, however, had an ill effect on his spirits, and he put an end to himself Nov. 22, 1774.

CLOGIE, ALEXANDER, a divine, the son-in-law and biographer of Bishop Bedell; died 1698.

CLOCCURRY, VALENTINE BROWNE LAWLESS, LORD, was born in Dublin 1773, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he imbibed political principles decidedly adverse to the existing state of things, and became one of the 'United Irishmen.' Soon after 1791 he entered as a student at the Middle Temple. In 1797 he became a marked man, in consequence of a pamphlet written by him on the projected union between Great Britain and Ireland; and in the following year his connection with the obnoxious party led to his arrest on a charge of treason, certain correspondence between him and O'Coigly having fallen into the hands of the government. His restraint on this occasion, however, lasted only about six weeks; but he afterwards continued his political agitation, the result being, that he was again arrested in 1799 on suspicion of treasonable practices, and remained a prisoner in the Tower of London till the expiration of the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act restored him to liberty in 1801. In the meantime his father had died, and he had succeeded him as Lord Cloncurry. After travelling on the continent, he returned to Ireland in 1805, and though for some time he rendered himself obnoxious to the government, he eventually toned down his extreme principles, and thenceforward lived in amity with the ruling powers. He was made a privy councillor, and raised to the peerage of Great Britain 1831; and died 28 Oct., 1853. Lord Cloncurry published, in 1849, 'Personal Recollections of his Life and Times'; and an interesting Life of his lordship was published, after his decease, by William John Fitzpatrick.

CLOOTS, JEAN BAPTISTE DU VAL-DE-GRACE, a Prussian baron, better known as Anacharsis Cloots, was born 1755, and educated at Paris. In the madness of the French revolution he called himself the orator of the human race, and in the National Convention voted for the king's death. He was a man of letters, and published the 'Republique Universelle,' but he was as profane in his religious, as he was licentious in his political tenets. He was guillotined 24 March, 1794.

CLOPINEL. See MEUN.

CLOSE, WILLIAM, an English surgeon and inventor; editor of West's 'History of Furness'; died 27 July, 1813, aged 39.

CLOSTERMAN, JOHN, a painter, born at Osmuburg 1656. He came to England 1681, and in 1696 paid a visit to Spain. He also spent some time in Italy, from whence he brought some fine pictures to England. Died in London 1713.

CLOTAIRE I., son of Clovis, united the whole French monarchy under his power 558. He distinguished himself against the Saxons, and died 561, aged 64.

CLOTAIRE II., successor of Chilperic, in the kingdom of Soissons, was supported by his mother Fredegonde against Childebert. He died 628, aged 45.

CLOTAIRE III., king of Burgundy and Neustria, after his father Clovis II. 655, was governed by his mother Batilda. He died 670.

CLOUET, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French chemist and metallurgist, born 11 Nov., 1751; died 4 June, 1801.

CLOUGH, ARTHUR HUGH, an English poet, born about 1819; died at Florence 13 Nov., 1861. He was one of the examiners in the educational department of the privy council.

CLOVER, JOSEPH, an ingenious blacksmith and farrier, born at Norwich 12 Aug., 1725. He had only a common education, but by intense application he acquired a knowledge of the Latin and French languages, to which he added an intimate acquaintance with mathematics. He was also well skilled in anatomy, particularly of the horse, which induced him to quit the forge for veterinary practice. He discovered the manner in which the larvæ of the bots are conveyed from the coat of the horse into the stomach; and he invented a machine for the cure of ruptured tendons and fractured legs. Died 19 Feb., 1811.

CLOVIO, JULIO, a celebrated miniature painter, born in Croatia 1498; died at Rome 1578.

CLOVIS I., the proper founder of the French monarchy, was born 467, and succeeded his father Childeric 481. He was victorious against the Romans, but in a battle with the Germans, when he saw his troops ready to give way, he made a vow that he would worship the God of the Christians, and after obtaining the victory, he was baptized with three thousand of his subjects on Christmas-day. He was victorious against the Goths, and fixed his residence at Paris, which he made the capital of his dominions. He died 511, aged 45, in the 30th year of his reign.

CLOVIS II., succeeded his father Dagobert 638, and died 655, aged 23.

CLOVIS III., succeeded Thierry III. 691, and died at the age of 14.

CLOWES, JOHN, the English apostle of Swedenborgianism, was born at Manchester 25 Oct., 1743, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1769 he was collated to the rectory of St. John, Manchester, and four years afterwards he read for the first time the writings of Swedenborg, which made an extraordinary impression on his mind, especially the treatise entitled 'Vera Christiana Religio.' Mr. Clowes devoted the remainder of his life to the propagation of Swedenborg's mystical doctrines; but notwithstanding this he retained his rectory until his death, which occurred 29 May, 1831. His writings are numerous.

CLOWES, WILLIAM, an English surgeon, who appears to have been in full practice in 1596. He was surgeon to St. Bartholomew's and Christ's Hospitals, and also to Queen Elizabeth. He served likewise in the army and navy, and wrote a useful book entitled 'Practice for all young Chirurgeens,' 1591.

CLOWES, WILLIAM, a well-known printer of London, born at Chichester, 1779; died 26 Jan., 1847. He was the successful introducer of the steam printing press.

CLUBBE, JOHN, a divine, born 1703, and educated at King's College, Cambridge. He obtained the rectory of Whatfield, and the vicarage of Debenham, in Suffolk, and died 2 March, 1773. He published 'The History and Antiquities of the ancient villa of Wheatfield,' an admirable piece of irony at the expense of modern antiquaries; 'Physiognomy; being a Sketch of a larger work upon the same plan;' and 'A Letter of free advice to a young Clergyman.'

CLUBBE, WILLIAM, son of the preceding, received his education at Cambridge; became vicar of Brandeston, Suffolk; and died 1814. He published, among other things, a translation of Six Satires of Horace; and a metrical version of the same author's Art of Poetry.—Rosé.

CLUNIE, JOHN, a Scotch divine and song-writer, who died 13 April, 1819.

CLUSIUS. See L'ECLUSE.

CLUTTERBUCK, ROBERT, F.S.A., a topographer, born at Watford, Hertfordshire, 28 June, 1772, and educated at Harrow School and Exeter College, Oxford. Subsequently he took possession of his paternal estate at Watford, where he died 25 May, 1831. He published an elegant and complete History of Hertfordshire, in three folio volumes.

CLUVERIUS, PHILIP, an eminent geographer, born at Dantzic 1580, and educated at Leyden, where he died 1623. He published several books, the best known of which are his 'Germania Antiqua,' 'Sicilia Antiqua,' and 'Italia Antiqua.'

CLYDE, COLIN CAMPBELL, LORD, was born at Glasgow 20 Oct., 1792. At the age of sixteen he entered the 9th regiment of foot as ensign, and before long took an active share in the hardships and glories of the British army. When the interests of commerce and civilisation made it necessary for Great Britain to declare war against China in 1842, Colin Campbell, who had been gazetted as lieutenant-colonel ten years before, went out in command of the 98th. Shortly afterwards, on the breaking out of the Sikh war, he was despatched to India, where he proved himself an able general. In 1854 he was appointed to the command of the Highland Brigade in the army destined for the Crimea; and when the allied armies attacked the Russians on the heights of the Alma, he became a conspicuous figure amongst the foremost in the fray. He flew with his gallant Highlanders to the aid of the Light Division; he had his horse killed under him; and for his dashing conduct at the critical moment in the battle, when he used the memorable words, 'Highlanders never retire!' he was personally thanked by the commander-in-chief, Lord Raglan, at the close of the engagement. During the siege of Sebastopol the defence of Balaklava was entrusted to Sir Colin, who, at the head of his Highlanders, gallantly repulsed an attack made by some 1500 Russian cavalry. In 1857, on the outbreak of the Indian mutiny, Sir Colin Campbell, then in London, was sent out to the East at twenty-four hours' notice. The ready zeal with which he undertook the task of quelling that most dangerous and deadly rising, the sound judgment and discretion with which he tempered his eager and impetuous desire to be 'up and at' the foe, and his firm and strenuous enforcement of strict military discipline, are as little likely to be forgotten as the brilliant achievements by which he restored the prestige of the English name in India. Acting in conjunction with the Lawrences, Outram, Havelock, Nicholson, and Neill, he saved our Indian empire. In person he directed the relief of Lucknow, and its subsequent siege and capture; and having trodden out the ashes of the most formidable rebellion which has marked our annals, he was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom in 1828 as Baron Clyde of Clydesdale. He was advanced to the rank of field-marshal shortly before his death, which took place 14 Aug., 1863.

COATES, CHARLES, of Caius College, Cambridge, proceeded M.B. 1767, and obtained a Lambeth degree of LL.B. 1788. He wrote the 'History of Reading,' a valuable topographical work; and died 7 April, 1813.

COBB, JAMES, a dramatic writer, born 1756. He rose to be secretary to the India Company, which office he discharged with great credit till his death, on a June, 1818. He wrote the comic operas of The Humourist; Love in the East; The Haunted Tower; The Siege of Belgrade; and several lesser pieces, which were very successful.

COBB, SAMUEL, a poet, was educated at Christ's Hospital, and Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1762). He became master of the grammar school at Christ's Hospital, but died, in the prime of life, 1713. He published in 1707 'A Collection of Poems on several occasions, &c., to which is prefixed a Discourse on Criticism, and the Liberty of Writing.' Among his other productions are 'Observations on Virgil'; 'The Miller's Tale,' from Chaucer; a translation of the 'Muscipula'; 'The Oak and the Briar,' a tale; and an ode 'The Female Reign,' printed in Dodsley's Collection, and afterwards in the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' 1753, with alterations by Dr. Watts, who thought it 'the truest and best Pindaric he had ever read,' an opinion in which Dr. Warton coincided.

COBBE, CHARLES, a native of Winchester, educated at Oxford. In 1720 he was promoted to the sees of Killala and Achonry; in 1726 translated to Dromore; in 1731 to Kildare; and to Dublin in March 1742-3. Died 12 April, 1765, æt. 79.

COBBETT, WILLIAM, a famous political writer, was born 9 March, 1762, being the son of a farmer and publican at Farnham, Surrey. Towards the autumn of 1782, when on a visit to a relative residing near Portsmouth, he beheld the sea for the first time, and straightway determined to become a sailor. Accordingly he went the very next day on board the 'Pegasus' man-of-war; but both the captain and port-admiral, suspecting him to be a runaway, declined his services, and persuaded him to return home, where he remained till the following spring, when he took a more effectual flight. It was on 6 May, 1783, that being prepared to go to Guildford fair, he was suddenly tempted to mount a London coach, and arrived at Ludgate Hill with about half-a-crown in his pocket. During the journey he fortunately made acquaintance with a hop-merchant, who, he found, had dealt with his father. This gentleman kindly took him to his house, and after having in vain endeavoured to persuade him to return home, procured him a situation as copying clerk to Mr. Holland, of Gray's Inn, where he remained nine months, closely concealed to the desk except on Sundays. At length this dull and dreary labour became so irksome to him that he quitted London for Chatham, where he enlisted into a regiment the service companies of which were in Nova Scotia. During the year he remained at Chatham he improved his education in all its branches. He was soon raised to the rank of corporal, and at length sailed from Gravesend. He stayed but a few weeks in Nova Scotia, being ordered to New Brunswick, where the regiment remained till Sept., 1791, and was then relieved and sent home. Shortly after his landing at Portsmouth he obtained his discharge, receiving at the same time a testimonial from the commander-in-chief. Not long after this he married the daughter of a serjeant-major of artillery, whom he first met in New Brunswick, but who had returned home several years before him. At the same period he brought forward some charges against certain officers for corruption and misconduct, and demanded a court-martial upon them; but in this proceeding he met with no encouragement. 'I went to France,' he says, 'in March, 1792, and continued there till the beginning of September following—the six happiest months of my life. I met everywhere with civility, and even hospitality, in a degree that I had never been accustomed to. I did intend to stay in France till the spring of 1793, as well to perfect myself in the language as to pass the winter at Paris. I had actually hired a coach to go thither, and was even on the way, when I heard at Abbeville that the king was dethroned, and his guards murdered. This intelligence made me turn off towards Havre de Grace, whence I embarked for America.' He landed at New York in Oct., 1792. It was in America that Cobbett first distinguished himself by his pen. Having proceeded from New York to Philadelphia he there opened a bookseller's shop, and commencing a periodical paper or succession of pamphlets, under the title of 'Peter Porcupine,' at once made a display of those extraordinary powers of style and expression which have rendered his name so famous. England was then the chief point of attack with the French or democratic party in America; and Cobbett, with the spirit of contradiction by which he ever delighted to distinguish himself, stood boldly forward as the champion of his country. A Dr. Kush brought an action against him for libel, and obtained 5000 dollars damages, which disgusted him with America so completely that he quitted it and came to England in 1800. In 1801 he settled in London, and established a morning paper under the title of 'The Porcupine,' in which he warmly supported Mr. Pitt. That paper, however, soon failed, and he afterwards set up the 'Register,' which was continued till his death. Cobbett commenced his career in England under very favourable circumstances. He was powerfully patronized by the ministry. Mr. Wyndham even went as far as to declare in the House of Commons that a statue of gold ought to be erected to him. His letters on the subject of the Treaty of Amiens produced a great sensation both here and on the Continent. Of this production it was said by the celebrated Swiss historian, Muller, that it was more eloquent than anything which had appeared since the days of Demosthenes. The sale of Cobbett's writings was at this time so extensive and profitable as to enable him to purchase a valuable estate at Botley, in Hampshire. In 1805, from a hearty 'church and king' man, he became as eager a radical; and for some years from this time he was a grievous thorn in the side of the ministry. At length, in 1810, an opportunity appeared to have arrived for putting him to silence. His remarks on some military flogging at Ely, where some local militiamen were punished under the surveillance of a German regiment, provoked a government prosecution, upon which he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment in Newgate, and to pay a fine of £1000. The latter was paid by a subscription among his friends. During his confinement he continued to write with his wonted spirit and perseverance, one of the chief objects of his attack being the paper currency. In 1816 he changed his 'Register' into a twopenny pamphlet, when the sale is said to have risen to the unprecedented number of 100,000. The passing of the Six Acts, and the anticipated suspension of the Habeas Corpus, induced him to go again to America, whither he sailed in Early, 1817; and during his absence he parted with his estate at Botley. He still continued to publish his 'Register' at intervals, and returned to England in 1819, bringing with him the bones of the infidel Tom Paine. He then took a very active part in the case of Queen Caroline. He also made some unsuccessful attempts as a parliamentary candidate at Coventry and Westminster. Renewing his attention to agriculture, he took a farm at Barnes Elms, in Surrey, where he attempted to grow several plants and trees indigenous to America, and to introduce Indian corn as a staple article of English produce. To further his views he published a 'Treatise on Cobbett's Corn,' printed a number of his 'Register' on paper made from the husks, and established depôts for the sale of its flour and bread. The project, however, failed. He resigned, after a few years, his farm at Barnes, and returned at last to the county from which he came, where he rented of Colonel Woodroffe the farm of Normandy, consisting of about 120 acres, in the parish of Ash, near Farnham. Besides the writings already mentioned, Cobbett published in 1825 'The History of the Protestant Reformation in England and Ireland,' which attained considerable popularity, and was translated into French and Italian, in consequence of its decided bias in favour of the Catholic religion. In 1829 he published 'Advice to young Men and Women;' and about the same time delivered at several places a course of lectures on political economy, by which he gained considerable profit and applause. His other works (excluding mere political pamphlets) are: 'The Emigrant's Guide, in Ten Letters;' 'Cobbett's Poor Man's Friend;' 'Cottage Economy;' 'An English Grammar,' in letters to his son; 'A Grammar to teach Frenchmen the English Language;' a translation of Marten's 'Law of Nations;' 'A Year's Residence in America;' 'Parliamentary History of England to 1803,' in 12 vols.; and 'Debates from 1803 to 1810,' in 16 vols. royal 8vo. When to these are added Porcupine's works in the United States, from 1793 to 1801, in 12 vols., and the 'Political Register,' from 1802, a due estimate may be formed of the quantity of matter which he passed through the press. At length, in 1832, after the passing of the Reform Act, he was returned to parliament for the new borough of Oldham, for which he was afterwards chosen without opposition. In the House of Commons, however, he was neither brilliant nor abusive, though he was occasionally heard with indulgence and attention.

COBDEN.

This extraordinary man ended his days at his farm of Normandy, in Surrey, 18 June, 1835.

COBDEN, EDWARD, D.D., a divine and poet, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree 1713. He afterwards returned to his former college, and there took his doctor's degree 1723. He became chaplain to Bishop Gibson, who gave him the rectories of St. Austin and St. Faith, London, Acton, in Middlesex, a prebend in St. Paul's Cathedral, and the archdeaconry of London. Dr. Cobden was also chaplain in ordinary to George II., but lost that situation some years before his death, which took place 22 April, 1764, aged 80. He published a volume of poems and another of sermons.

COBDEN, RICHARD, the champion of Free Trade, was born at Dunford, near Midhurst, Sussex, 3 June, 1804, being the son of a farmer. At a very early age he was sent to London, and employed as a boy in a warehouse in the city. By his intelligence, his attention to his duties, and his good conduct, he found himself gradually promoted. At length he was engaged as a traveller through the north of England for the house in whose service he was, when he discovered that Lancashire offered great opportunities for business enterprise. Not long afterwards he joined with some of his fellow-employed in founding a calico-printing business in the neighbourhood of Clitheroe. He settled in Manchester, where he became prosperous, and now turned his attention to public wants and interests. In 1835 he paid a visit to the United States; and in 1836-7 he travelled in Egypt, Greece, and Turkey, having previously published two political pamphlets, the first entitled 'England, Ireland, and America,' and the second 'Russia.' In 1837 he made a journey to France, Belgium, and Switzerland, and in 1838 travelled through Germany. On his arrival in England after the last-named tour he commenced an earnest agitation for the repeal of the Corn Laws. The National Anti-Corn-Law League, the most powerful political combination ever known in this country, sprang into existence, and was supported by a public subscription of upwards of a quarter of a million sterling. Mr. Cobden was the chief actor in this memorable struggle. Sir Robert Peel, having at length given his adhesion to the free-trade doctrines of Mr. Cobden, the Corn Law Repeal Bill was finally carried in 1846. Having achieved the great object of his political career, Mr. Cobden visited successively France, Spain, Italy, Germany, and Russia. In the meantime his friends at home were preparing a gigantic testimonial for his acceptance. A subscription was set on foot, and in a short time the princely sum of £60,000 was raised, and presented to him in acknowledgment of his great public services. He was first elected to parliament in 1841 for the borough of Stockport. During his lengthened absence on the Continent, just referred to, he was re-elected for Stockport, and was also elected for the West Riding of Yorkshire. He made his choice in favour of the latter constituency, which he continued to represent till 1857. In the latter year he carried his resolutions on the Chinese war against the government of Lord Palmerston by a majority of sixteen votes. The premier shortly afterwards appealed to the country, when, to the amazement of all parties, neither Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, nor Mr. Milner Gibson was returned. In 1859, however, Mr. Cobden was elected member for Rochdale during his absence in America. In the autumn of that year, acting as her Majesty's plenipotentiary, he concluded a treaty of commerce with the emperor of the French, and spent several months in Paris as first commissioner on behalf of the British government, engaged in completing the details of the treaty. On his return to England, in May, 1861, he was offered by Lord Palmerston a baronetcy and a seat in the privy council, but he declined those honours. Died 2 April, 1862.

COBHAM, Sir JOHN OLDCASTLE, LORD, obtained his title by marrying the heiress of Lord Cobham, who opposed Richard II. He was a zealous adherent of Wickliffe, for which he incurred the hatred of the clergy; and though a favourite of Henry V., that monarch abandoned him to his enemies, who caused him to be condemned by an act of attainder, and he was burnt alive in St. Giles's Fields 25 Dec., 1417.

COCCIEUS, HENRY, an eminent German civilian and writer on international law, was professor successively at Heidelberg, Utrecht, and Frankfort-on-the-Oder. Born 1644; died 18 Aug., 1710. His son, Samuel (born 1679; died 1755), was employed by Frederick the Great of Prussia in drawing up his famous code, and was appointed grand chancellor.

COCCIEUS, JOHN, a German divine, noted as an upholder of the millenarian doctrine, was born 1603, at Bremen, and died 4 Nov., 1669, at Leyden, where he was divinity professor.

COCCHI, ANTHONY, an eminent Italian physician, born 1693; died 1 Jan., 1758.

COCHIN, CHARLES NICOLAS, an engraver, born at Paris 1688; died 1754.

COCHIN, CHARLES NICOLAS, son of the preceding, was also an excellent artist and a man of letters. Born at Paris 1715; died 29 April, 1790.

COCHIN, HENRI, a French advocate and canonist, born 1687; died 24 Feb., 1747.

COCHLEUS, JOHN, a Catholic divine, born at Nuremberg 1479. He wrote furiously against the Reformation, and particularly on the subject of the divorce of Henry VIII., but was answered with equal asperity by Dr. Richard Morison. His best work is entitled Historia Hussitarum, folio. He died 20 Jan., 1552.

COCHRAN, WILLIAM, a Scotch painter, born at Strathaven 12 Dec., 1738. He studied at Rome under Gavin Hamilton; and on his return to his own country settled at Glasgow, where he painted portraits and historical pieces with great success. Died 23 Oct., 1785.

COCHRANE, Earls of Dundonald. See DUNDONALD.

COCHRANE. See MAR, EARL OF.

COCHRANE, JOHN DUNDAS, a captain in the English navy, who rendered himself famous by his pedestrian journey through Russia and Siberian Tartary, from the frontiers of China to the Frozen Sea and Kamschatka. Of this journey he published an amusing account in 1824. Died 12 Aug., 1825.

COCK, JEROME, a painter and engraver of Antwerp, born 1510; died 1570.

COCK, SIMON, a London merchant, died at Chiswick 23 March, 1837, æt. 63. He was author of 'Answer to Lord Sheffield's pamphlet on the Navigation System,' 8vo., 1804; and 'An Examination of the Report of the Bullion Committee, showing that the present high price of Bullion, together with the scarcity of Gold Coin; and also the low rate of the Foreign Exchanges, are not attributable to the issue of Bank Paper; and explaining what are the true causes by which these effects have been produced,' 8vo., London, 1811.

COCKBURN, CATHARINE, was the daughter of Captain David Trotter, of the navy, and born in London 16 Aug., 1679. At the age of seventeen her tragedy of 'Agnes de Castro' was performed with applause, and in 1698 she produced another called 'Fatal Friendship,' which was commended by good judges of the drama. In 1701 came out a tragedy entitled 'The Unhappy Penitent.' While thus engaged in poetry she undertook a defence of Locke's 'Essay on the Understanding,' against Dr. Burnet of the Charterhouse. In 1706 was performed her tragedy of 'The Revolution of Sweden;' and two years afterwards she married Mr. Cockburn, a clergyman of the Church of England, who was presented by the lord chancellor to the living of Morpeth, in Northumberland. In 1720 Mrs. Cockburn engaged in a controversy with Dr. Holdsworth on the resurrection of the same body, in which she vindicated the opinions of Mr. Locke. After this she wrote verses on Queen Caroline's Hermitage, and a pamphlet on 'Moral Duty and Moral Obligation,' which was followed by another on 'The Nature and Obligations of Virtue.' She died 11 May, 1749, and her miscellaneous works were printed in 1751, in 2 vols. 8vo.

COCKBURN, Sir GEORGE, bart., a brave British admiral, born 1772; died 19 Aug., 1853.

COCKBURN, HENRY THOMAS, LORD, a Scotch judge, born 1779; appointed solicitor-general for Scotland 1830; lord of session 1834; lord commissioner of judiciary 1837; died 26 April, 1854. He wrote the Life of his friend Lord Jeffrey, 2 vols. 8vo., 1852; and contributed some articles to the 'Edinburgh Review.'

COCKBURN, Dr. JOHN, an ingenious divine, was born and educated at Aberdeen. He was an Episcopalian, and attached to the fortunes of James II., whom he followed to France, after which he officiated to a congregation at Amsterdam. At length, however, he took the oaths of allegiance, and was collated to the rectory of Northall, in Middlesex, where he died 20 Nov., 1720. He wrote a volume of sermons; a Funeral Sermon for Bishop Compton; the History of Duels.

COCKBURN, PATRICK, a divine, was born in Scotland, and educated at St. Andrews. On entering into orders he went to Paris, where he taught the oriental languages with great applause, till he became suspected of heresy; in consequence of which he returned to his own country, and became minister of Haddington. He died in 1559. His works are 'In orationem dominicam pia meditatio;' 'On the Apostles' Creed;' and 'An Enquiry into the Truth and Certainty of the Mosaic Deluge.'

COCKER, EDWARD, an arithmetician and penman, born in London 1631. He became eminent as a schoolmaster and as a calligrapher. Evelyn mentions Cocker, Gery, Gething, and Billingsley, as comparable with the Italian masters, both for letters and flourishes. Died about 1777. His 'Vulgar Arithmetic,' and 'Decimal Arithmetic,' have gone through very many editions. He published no fewer than fourteen copy-books engraved by his own hand; besides which he was author of a small English dictionary, and editor of a book of sentences for writing, called 'Cocker's Morals.'

COCKSON, THOMAS, an English engraver, who flourished 1630.

CODINUS, GEORGE, an officer of the imperial palace at Constantinople in the fifteenth century, who wrote the antiquities of that city, and other works printed in 1615 and 1648, folio.

CODRINGTON, CHRISTOPHER, was born at Barbadoes 1668. He was educated at Christchurch, Oxford, and afterwards obtained a fellowship at All Souls' College. On leaving the university he entered into the army, and was made captain-general of the Leeward islands. He died at Barbadoes 7 April, 1701. His remains were brought to England, and deposited in the chapel of All Souls, to which college he bequeathed his books, with £10,000; and his estates in the West Indies to the Society for Propagating the Gospel. He wrote some poems in the 'Musæ Anglicanæ.'

CODRINGTON, ROBERT, a writer of the seventeenth century, was born in Gloucestershire 1602, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, and took his master's degree in 1626. He died of the plague in London in 1665. His works are—'The Life of Robert earl of Essex;' 'A Collection of Proverbs;' 'The Life of Æsop,' prefixed to Barlow's edition of the Fables; a Translation of Du Moulin on the Knowledge of God; and 'Heptameron, or the Fortunate Lovers,' &c.

CODRINGTON, THOMAS, a Catholic divine, was educated at the English college at Douay, and afterwards acted as chaplain and secretary to Cardinal Howard at Rome. James II. appointed him one of his chaplains, and he followed his royal master to St. Germann's, where he died about 1691. Some of his pulpit discourses are printed in 'A select collection of Catholic Sermons preached before King James II., &c.' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1741.

COECK, PETER, a Flemish painter, who is also called Peter Van Aelst, died at Antwerp 1550.

COEFFETEAU, NICOLAS, a learned French prelate, born 1574; died 21 April, 1623. He translated Florus, and composed some books of controversy.

COELLO, ALONZO SANCHEZ, a celebrated painter, st. led the Portuguese Titian, was born 1525, and died 1590.

COELLO, CLAUDE, a painter, born at Madrid 1621; died 1693.

COELMANS, JAMES, a clever engraver, born at Antwerp about 1670; died at Aix 1735.

COELN, WILHELM VON, called also Meister Wilhelm, a German painter, who flourished at Cologne 1370-8.

COETLOGON, CHARLES EDWARD DE, a divine, born in London, of French parents. From Christ's Hospital he removed to Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts. On taking orders he was appointed assistant chaplain to the Lock Hospital in London, and afterwards he obtained the rectory of Godstone, Surrey. Died 16 Sept., 1820. He was a strict Calvinist, and very popular as a preacher. His principal works are 'Reflections on the Death of Louis XVI.,' 'Theological Miscellany,' 6 vols.; Sketches of the Life and Character of Moses; 'The Temple of Truth,' 3 vols.; 'A Portraiture of a Christian Penitent,' 2 vols.; and a great number of sermons and funeral discourses.

COFFEY, CHARLES, a dramatic author, whose best-known work is 'The Devil to Pay, or the Wives Metamorphosed,' was born in Ireland, and died in London 13 May, 1745.

COFFIN, EDWARD, a native of Exeter, became a Jesuit, and was a great sufferer on account of his religion, being several times a prisoner, and at last banished, 1603. He lived afterwards at Rome, and for nearly twenty years was confessor in the English college there. Died 17 April, 1626, æt. 56. He was author of a long preface to Robert Persons's posthumous work against Bishop Barlow, 4to., St. Omer, 1612; 'Treatise in Defence of the Celibacy of Priests,' against Joseph Hall, dean of Worcester, 1610; 'The Art of Dying Well,' translated from Bellarmine; 'True Relation of the last sickness and death of Cardinal Bellarmine;' and 'M. Ant. de Dominis Archiep. Spalat. Palinodia,' 1623, translated in 1827 by Dr. Fletcher under the title of 'Motives for renouncing the Protestant Religion, by Anthony de Dominis,' D.D., dean of Worcester.—Oliver.

COGAN, THOMAS, a physician, born in Somersetshire, and educated at Oxford. In 1755 he was chosen master of the school at Manchester, where also he practised physic. He wrote 'The Haven of Health,' and edited some of Cicero's Epistles and Orations. Dying 1607, he was buried on the 10th of June in that year, in Manchester church.

COGAN, THOMAS, M.D., was born at Kewell, Northamptonshire, 1736, and educated at Kibworth under Dr. Aikin, being intended for the ministry, in which capacity he officiated to a Presbyterian congregation at Amsterdam, where he married a Dutch lady of fortune. He now turned his attention to physic, and took his doctor's degree at Leyden 1767. After practising some time in Holland he came to London, and in conjunction with Dr. Hawes, instituted the Royal Humane Society. As Dr. Cogan was much attached to Holland, he relinquished his profession in London, and returned thither. The French revolution, however, obliged him to come back to England, where he published in 1794 a work entitled 'The Rhine, or a Journey from Utrecht to Frankfort.' The next year he translated the works of Camper; after which he published 'A Philosophical Treatise on the Passions;' 'Ethical Questions, or Speculations in Moral Philosophy;' 'Theological Disquisitions,' 5 vols. 8vo.; 'Life and Opinions of John Bunce, jun.;' and 'Letters on the Doctrine of Hereditary Depravity.' Died 2 Feb., 1818. A life of him, by T. J. Pettigrew, was printed with the annual Report of the Royal Humane Society, 1818.

COGGESHALLE, RALPH, an English Cistercian monk of the abbey of his name in the thirteenth century. He was at Jerusalem when that city was besieged by Saladin, and died about 1228. His Chronicle of the Holy Land was published at Paris 1720.

COHAUSEN, JOHN HENRY, a physician, was born 1665, at Hildesheim, in Lower Saxony, and settled at Munster, where he died 13 July, 1750. His curious work, 'Hermippus Kedivivus,' in which he professes to teach the art of prolonging life to 115 years, has been translated into English.

COHORN, MEMNON, BARON, a famous Dutch engineer, born 1641. He skillfully fortified the principal towns of Holland, and supported the siege of Namur against Vauban. He died at the Hague 17 March, 1704. Cohorn wrote a Treatise on Fortification in the Flemish language.

COIGNET, GILES, a painter, of Antwerp, born 1530; died 1600.

COINTE, CHARLES LE, a French priest of the oratory, who compiled, in Latin, the Ecclesiastical Annals of France, was born 4 Nov., 1611, and died 18 Jan., 1680.

COITER, VOLCHERIUS, celebrated as a surgeon, physician, and anatomist, was born at Groningen 1534, and died 5 July, 1576; or, according to others, in 1590 or 1600.

COKAYNE, SIR ASTON, an English poet, born in Derbyshire 28 Dec., 1608, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow. He then travelled abroad with Sir Kenelm Digby, and on his return, married the daughter of Sir Gilbert Kniveton, of Derbyshire. He now settled on his manor of Pooley, in Warwickshire, but being a Catholic and a loyalist he suffered much in the civil war. Died Feb., 1683-4. His poems and plays, printed in 1658, now fetch a high price.

COKE, SIR EDWARD, was born at Mileham, Norfolk, 1549. He was educated at Norwich School, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, and afterwards to the Inner Temple. He gained great reputation as reader at Lyon's Inn, and by his practice realized considerable property, which he augmented on marrying the daughter and co-heiress of John Preston, Esq., after whose death he took for his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas, Lord Burghley, and the relict of Sir William Hatton. In 1592 he was made solicitor-general, and the year following attorney-general; in which office he prosecuted the earl of Essex, whom he treated with very unbecoming levity. He received the honour of knighthood in 1603, and the same year managed the prosecution of Sir Walter Raleigh, towards whom he behaved in a manner that provoked Shakspeare to notice it in his Twelfth Night. In 1606 he conducted the prosecution of the gunpowder conspirators; as a reward for which he was the same year appointed chief justice of the Common Pleas. In 1613 he was removed to the court of King's Bench, and sworn a member of the privy-council; but three years afterwards he was dismissed from his office, to recover which he projected a match between his daughter and the earl of Buckingham's elder brother, Sir John Villiers. By this connection he was restored to favour, and reinstated in his place as privy-councillor; but afterwards, on account of his conduct in parliament, he was disgraced again, and sent to the Tower, from whence he did not obtain his release without a severe censure from the king. At the beginning of the next reign he was made sheriff of Bucks to prevent his being chosen into parliament; but in 1628 he was elected for that county, and distinguished himself by his zeal in support of the privileges of the house. He also made a speech against the duke of Buckingham, whom he had before called the saviour of the nation. Died Sept. 3, 1634. He published eleven parts of his Reports; but the remainder were posthumous. His book of Entries appeared in 1614; and his Institutes upon the Tenures of Littleton in 1628; and again in 1629; but the concluding parts were not published till after his death. The best edition of these Institutes is that of Hangrave and Butler. There are besides of Sir Edward Coke's, 'A Treatise of Bail and Mainprize,' 'Reading on the Statute of Fines,' and 'Complete Copyholder.'

COKE, THOMAS, D.C.L., a divine, born at Brecon, South Wales, 9 Sept., 1747, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford. On entering into orders he obtained the curacy of South Petherton, Somersetshire, where, by meeting a Methodist preacher and reading some puritanical books, he was induced to change his theological opinions. This change was confirmed by an interview he had with Wesley soon afterwards. Being dismissed from his curacy, he preached at the church door. This occasioned a riot, and the doctor left Petherton to join Mr. Wesley, to whom he became an effectual assistant, and who, in 1784, made him a bishop, for the purpose of superintending the methodical societies in America. The doctor made several voyages to the United States and the West Indies, establishing meeting-houses, organizing congregations, and ordaining persons to officiate as ministers. He also visited Ireland, where he held conferences, over which he presided with episcopal authority. At the commencement of the French revolution he attempted a mission in that country, but without success. He next turned his attention to his native country, and in a few years had the pleasure of seeing a number of Wesleyan chapels erected in Wales. After this he formed an establishment at Gibraltar; and on 21 Feb., 1814, he sailed with some lay preachers for Ceylon; but on the 3rd of May the doctor was found dead in his cabin, having fallen on the floor in an apoplectic fit. He published an elaborate Commentary on the Bible; a History of the West Indies; and some sermons and tracts.

COKE, SIR WILLIAM, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, and ultimately became chief justice of the island of Ceylon. Died 1 Sept., 1818.

COLARDEAU, CHARLES PIERRE, a French poet, born 12 Oct., 1732; died 7 April, 1776.

COLBATCH, JOHN, D.D., received his education at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. On taking orders he was appointed chaplain to the British factory at Lisbon, and held that appointment for about seven years. During his stay there he published an Account of the State of Religion and Literature in Portugal, which work was written at the request of Bishop Burnet, to whose son, Gilbert, he subsequently became tutor. Colbatch was also tutor to the son of the duke of Somerset. At the age of forty he returned to Trinity College, having only received a stall at Salisbury as the fruit of all the promises of patronage made to him. In 1707 he was appointed casual professor of divinity. The tranquillity of the latter part of his life was greatly disturbed by a long law-suit which he brought against Dr. Bentley, the master of Trinity. Died 11 Feb., 1748. Besides the work above referred to, and some tracts relating to the Bentley quarrel, Dr. Colbatch published 'An Examination of the late Archdeacon Echard's Account of the Marriage of Charles the Second,' 1733.—Al. West.

COLBERT, JEAN BAPTISTE, marquis of Segnelai, was born at Paris 1619. In 1648 he became clerk to Le Tellier, secretary of state, whose daughter he married. He next entered into the service of Cardinal Mazarine, who sent him to Rome on some important business, and at his death recommended him to his master as the most proper person for intendant of the finances. In 1664, being appointed superintendent of the buildings, he greatly improved Paris by erecting elegant structures. He laboured also to improve the arts, and to increase commerce and manufactures. He instituted the Academy of Painting and Sculpture, and the Academy of Sciences; and by his recommendation the Royal Observatory was built. In 1669 he was made secretary of state, and marine minister. He died 6 Sept., 1683.

COLBERT, JEAN BAPTISTE, marquis of Torcy, and son of the above, was born in 1665. In 1686 he was appointed secretary of state for the foreign department; and in 1699 director-general of the posts. He died 2 Sept., 1746. He wrote Memoirs of the Negotiations from the Treaty of Ryswick to the Peace of Utrecht, 3 vols. 12mo., 1756.

COLBORNE, JOHN, Lord Seston. See SEATON.

COLBY, Major-General THOMAS, LL.D., F.R.S., of the Royal Engineers, was placed at the head of the great Ordnance Survey of this kingdom by the duke of Wellington, when that nobleman was master-general of the ordnance. One of the results of this survey were the invaluable maps which were completed and engraved by the officers and men under General Colby's superintendance. Born 1784; died 1 Oct., 1852.

COLCHESTER, CHARLES ABBOT, LORD, was born at Abingdon, Berkshire, 14 Oct., 1757, and elected from Westminster School to Christ Church, Oxford. After being called to the bar, he practised with considerable success. In 1795 he entered parliament as member for Helston, and after having rendered himself particularly conspicuous by his fervent support of the Seditious Meetings Bill he was appointed chairman of the finance committee. In 1801 he brought in the Population Bill, and on the formation of the Addington cabinet was appointed chief secretary for Ireland and keeper of the privy seal. He had already commenced a reform in the Irish government offices when he was elected Speaker of the House of Commons Feb., 1802. He gave his casting vote against Lord Melville in 1805, and during the debate on the Relief Bill in 1815 spoke warmly against the clause for admitting Catholics to the legislature. Two years afterwards a severe attack of epilepsy compelled him to resign the chair, on which occasion he was called to the House of Peers by the title of Baron Colchester, and granted a pension of £4000 a year. Died 8 May, 1829. With him originated the Royal Record Commission, the institution of the Private Bill Office, and an improvement in the printing of the votes. Some of his speeches have been printed; also a work by him on 'The Practice of the Chester Circuit.'

COLDEN, CADWALLADER, M.D., a Scotch physician and botanist, was born at Dunse 17 Feb., 1688, and educated at Edinburgh. Going to America, he achieved great success, first at Pennsylvania and afterwards at New York, of which latter province he was lieutenant-governor from 1761 to 1775. Died 28 Sept., 1776. Among his works are 'The History of the Five Indian Nations of Canada'; 'The History of the Five Indian Nations depending upon New York'; 'The Principle of Action in Matter, the Gravitation in Bodies, and the Motion of the Planets, explained from their Principles'; and 'Pianta Coldenhamiae in provincia Noveboracensi Americae sponte crescentes,' in Act. Societ. Upsal., 1743, p. 81.

COLDWELL, JOHN, an English prelate, was a native of Faversham, Kent, and received his academical education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was consecrated bishop of Salisbury, being the first married man who held that see, and died 14 Oct., 1596.

COLE, ABDIAH, an English physician of note, who flourished in the reign of Charles I. He wrote the 'Expert Physician,' 12mo., 1657.

COLE, CHARLES NALSON, a lawyer, was born in the Isle of Ely in 1722, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, which he left after taking his bachelor's degree, and became a student of the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar. He afterwards became registrar of the Bedford Level Corporation, the laws and constitutions of which he published in 1761, 8vo. In 1772 he edited Sir William Dugdale's History of the Fens, folio. His next publication was an edition of Some Jenyns's works, in 4 vols. 12mo. Died 18 Dec., 1804.

COLE, HENRY, D.D., a Catholic divine, was born at Godshill, in the Isle of Wight, and educated at Wykeham's School near Winchester, from which he removed to New College, Oxford, where he was admitted a perpetual fellow 1523. After taking his degree of B.C.L. he went to Italy, and on his return settled in London as an advocate in the court of Arches. He was also made rector of Chelmsford, Essex, and prebendary of St. Paul's. In 1542 he was elected warden of New College, and in 1545 presented to the rectory of Newton Longueville, Buckinghamshire. In the reign of Edward VI. he resigned his preferments, but on the accession of Mary he was made provost of Eton College, and created D.D. He disputed at Oxford with Cranmer and Ridley, and preached the sermon at the execution of the former. In 1556 he was constituted dean of St. Paul's, and vicar-general in spirituals to Cardinal Pole, and in the following year official of the Arches, dean of the peculiars, and judge of the archiepiscopal court of audience. In the reign of Elizabeth he was deprived of all his preferments, and cast into prison, where he died. He was buried 4 Feb., 1579-80. He was author of Disputation with Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer; Answer to the first proposition of the Protestants at the disputation before the Lords at Westminster, 1559, MS.; and 'Letters to John [Jewel] Bishop of Sarum, upon occasion of a Sermon that the said Bishop preached before the Queen's Majesty and her most honourable Council, an. 1560,' 8vo.

COLE, THOMAS, D.D., a distinguished preacher, was a native of Lincolnshire, and received his academical education at King's College, Cambridge. He retired to Frankfort and Geneva during Mary's reign, but on her death returned to his own country, and was made rector of High Ongar, Essex, archdeacon of Essex, and a prebendary of St. Paul's. In 1564 he obtained the rectory of Stanford Rivers, Essex, and died June, 1571. Two of his sermons have been printed. He was concerned in the compilation of the form of prayer adopted by the English church at Geneva.

COLE, THOMAS, a dissenting minister, was educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected student of Christ Church, Oxford. In 1656 he became principal of St. Mary Hall, where he was tutor to Mr. Locke; but at the Restoration he was ejected for nonconformity. He afterwards settled in London, and became one of the lecturers at Pinner's Hall. Died about 1694. He was author of a Discourse of Regeneration, Faith, and Repentance; a Discourse of the Christian Religion; a Treatise on Imputed Righteousness, &c.

COLE, WILLIAM, a botanist, born at Adderbury, Oxfordshire, about 1626, and educated at Merton College. He became secretary to Duppa, bishop of Winchester, in whose service he died in 1662. He wrote 'The Art of Simpling,' 1656; and 'Adam in Eden; or, Nature's Paradise,' 1657.

COLE, WILLIAM, of Bristol, died at Bradfield, in the parish of Hullavington, Wiltshire, 30 Aug., 1701. Two volumes of his letters relating to points in natural science are in MS. Addit., 18,598, 18,599.

COLE, WILLIAM, F.S.A., M.A., was educated at Cambridge, being a member first of Clare Hall, and afterwards of King's College. During the greater portion of his life he resided at Milton, Cambridgeshire, where he died 16 Dec., 1782. For forty years he sedulously applied himself to the investigation of the history and antiquities of the county, university, and borough of Cambridge, and to the compilation of an 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' His collections, occupying more than 100 folio volumes, he bequeathed to the British Museum. They contain much that relates to other counties than Cambridgeshire, besides a great deal of miscellaneous matter. As he had strong prejudices, 'a gossip's ear, and a tatter's pen,' they are sullied by much personal and party acrimony. These volumes, however, contain much that is curious, valuable, and interesting, and show that, with all his prejudices and disagreeable propensities, Mr. Cole was a learned, sagacious, and indefatigable antiquary.

COLE, WILLIAM, author of 'Rural Months and other Poems,' died at New Lakenham, Norfolk, 23 Feb., 1835, aged 66.

COLEBROOKE, HENRY THOMAS, F.R.S., an oriental scholar, born 1765, was the third son of Sir George Colebrooke, bart. During the greater part of his life he was a civil servant of the East India Company. Eventually he became a judge, and for some time was president of the board of revenue, and a member of the supreme council at Bengal. He was also director of the Asiatic Society, and died in London 10 March, 1837. He was author of 'Remarks on the Husbandry and Commerce of Bengal;' 'A Digest of Hindoo Law on Contracts and Successions; with a Commentary by Jagannâth ha Terepanchâna, translated from the original Sanscrit,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1801; 'Peotra; or, Dictionary of the Sanscrit Language, by Amara Simba, with an English interpretation and annotations,' 4to., 1810; 'Two treatises on the Hindoo Law of Inheritance, translated from the Sanscrit,' 4to., 1810; 'Algebra of the Hindoos; with Arithmetic and Mensuration; translated from the Sanscrit,' 4to., 1817; 'On Imports of Colonial Corn,' 8vo., 1818. His editions of the Amera Cosha and Hitopadesa are highly appreciated by students of Sanscrit; but his dissertations on the Vidanta Philosophy and Hindoo Algebra, which are more generally known, contain by far the most just and complete view of the merits of Indian medical and physical science.

COLEMAN, EDWARD, was educated at Cambridge, but left the university in consequence of his being converted to the Catholic religion. He now became secretary to the duchess of York. Unfortunately for himself he dabbled in politics, and being found guilty of being concerned in the plot concocted by the miscreant Titus Oates, was executed at Tyburn 3 Dec., 1678. To him are ascribed Letters to Father la Chaise and others; and Reasons for dissolving the Parliament.

COLEMAN, WALTER, or Christopher à Sancta Clara, a Franciscan friar, was a native of Staffordshire, and died in prison 1645. His poem, 'The Duel of Death,' was dedicated to Queen Henrietta Maria.

COLEMAN, WILLIAM HIGGINS, an English clergyman, received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1836; M.A. 1839). He published (in conjunction with Bishop Colenso) 'Examples in Arithmetic and Algebra,' Cambridge, 1834; and (in conjunction with the Rev. H. Webb, rector of Essendon) 'Flora Hertfordiensis,' 1849. Mr. Coleman died at Burton-on-Trent, 12 Sept., 1863.

COLEPEPER, WILLIAM, a gentleman of Hollingbourne, Kent, was an active politician, having been one of the Kentish petitioners in 1701. He had previously displayed his poetical talent by publishing 'A Heroick poem upon the King,' folio, London, 1694. Died 1726.

COLERAINE, HENRY HARE, second Lord, was eminent for divine and human literature. He was skilled in antiquities, especially medals, of which he well knew the utility. His publications are 'The Ascent of the Soul,' translated from the Italian of Loredano, 1681; 'La Scala Santa; or a Scale of Devotion, musical and gradual; being Descants on the Fifteen Psalms of Degrees in Metre; with Contemplations and Collects upon them, in Prose,' 1670 and 1681; and an Account of the Ancestry of Sir Robert Braybrooke, bishop of London, and of Sir Gerard his Nephew, MS.

COLERAINE, HENRY HARE, LORD, was born at Bletchingley, Surrey, 10 May, 1693, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He thrice made the tour of Italy, the second time in company with Conyers Middleton. During these travels he formed a noble collection of prints and drawings, which after his death were given to Corpus Christi College, Oxford. His collection of prints relating to English antiquities came into the possession of the Society of Antiquaries. He died at Bath 4 Aug., 1749. He wrote 'The History and Antiquities of the Town and Church of Tottenham, in the county of Middlesex,' printed in Dyson's History of Tottenham High-Cross.

COLERIDGE, HARTLEY, eldest son of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, was the author of some biographical works and of many minor poems of great merit and poetical power. The titles of his publications are 'Biographia Borealis; or, Lives of Distinguished Northmen,' 4to., 1833; 'Poems;' and 'The Worthies of Yorkshire and Lancashire; being the Lives of the most distinguished Persons that have been born in, or connected with, those Provinces,' 1836. He died at Rydal, Westmoreland, 6 Jan., 1840, aged 52.

COLERIDGE, HENRY NELSON, son of Colonel Coleridge, a brother of the poet, was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and going afterwards to the bar, practised as an equity draughtsman and conveyancer. He accompanied his uncle, the bishop of Barbadoes, on his outward voyage, and the result was a work entitled 'Six Months in the West Indies in 1825.' He published an Introduction to the Study of the Greek Classic Poets, 1830; The Literary Remains of Samuel Taylor Coleridge; and editions of several of the works of his illustrious relative. Died 26 Jan., 1843. His wife, Sara, was the only daughter of the poet. She was a learned and accomplished lady, and was engaged in preparing editions of some of her father's works. Her death occurred 3 May, 1852, aged 49.

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR, a distinguished poet and philosopher, was born 21 Oct., 1772, at Ottery St. Mary, Devonshire, of which parish his father was vicar. From Christ's Hospital he proceeded to Jesus College, Cambridge, but never took a degree, as in the second year of his residence he suddenly quitted the university during a fit of despondency occasioned, it is said, by unrequited love. After wandering almost penniless about the streets of London he enlisted as a private soldier, but was soon removed by his relatives from that degraded situation. Thereupon he betook himself to Bristol, where Southey was then residing. At this time he started a periodical, 'The Watchman,' which, however, did not live beyond its ninth number. In the autumn of 1795 he married Miss Sarah Fricker, of Bristol, Southey, on the same day, wedding himself to her sister. He now took a cottage at Nether Stowey, where he was in the immediate neighbourhood of his friend and benefactor Mr. Poole, and of Mr. Wordsworth, who was then residing at All-Foxden. During the three years of his residence at Nether Stowey the greater part of his principal poems was composed, though most of them were not published until later. 'The Ancient Mariner,' and the first part of 'Christabel,' were written in 1797, and his tragedy, 'Remorse,' was likewise composed at this period. While at Nether Stowey he used to preach on Sundays at the Unitarian chapel at Taunton. In 1798 he was enabled, by the munificence of Mr. Thomas Wedgwood, to visit Germany, for the purpose, as he expresses it, of finishing his education. After his return he resided at the Lakes, where Southey and Wordsworth had then settled, the one at Keswick and the other at Grasmere. The appellation of 'Lake Poets,' given to these three individuals after the publication of the 'Lyrical Ballads,' is well known. Coleridge left the Lakes in 1810, and did not return to them. For some years he was connected with the 'Morning Post.' On his first arrival in London he resided with Mr. Basil Montagu, and not long afterwards became the guest of Mr. Gillman, of Highgate, in whose house he died 25 July, 1834. In his latter years he was in the habit of holding weekly conversations at Mr. Gillman's. Those who know little else of Coleridge are familiar by report with his extraordinary conversational powers. Of these the two volumes of 'Table Talk' which have been published give no adequate notion. His conversation was not in fragments, but was wont to continue, without aid from others, in the way either of suggestion or contradiction, for hours at a time. All things, human and divine, joined with one another by subtlest links, entered into his discourse, which, though employed upon the abstrusest subjects, was a spell whose fascination even the most dull or ignorant could not resist. Into his poetry he infused no small portion of the subtle and far-seeing spirit of his philosophic speculations; and these, again, thrill with the finer animation, and are suffused with the coloured lights of poetry. As a metaphysician his consistent labour was to establish the great distinction between reason and understanding; to combat the material tendencies of his age, which had neglected the truths, interests, and studies which especially belong to the reason; and to connect the Christian faith with the full development of the reason, as 'the perfection of human intelligence.' Since Coleridge's death his principal works have been reprinted in a neat form. The principal are 'Poetical Works,' 3 vols.; 'The Friend,' a series of essays, 3 vols.; 'Aids to Reflection,' 2 vols.; 'On the Constitution of Church and State'; 'Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit'; 'Literary Remains,' 4 vols.; and 'Biographia Literaria,' 2 vols.—Penny Cycl.

COLES, ELISHA, a lexicographer and writer on short-hand, was born in Northamptonshire about 1640, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. Afterwards he became usher of Merchant Taylors' School, but died in Ireland about 1680. He published 'The Complete English Schoolmaster,' 'The newest, plainest, and shortest Short-hand,' 1674; 'Nolens Volens: or, you shall make Latin, whether you will or no'; 'The Youth's visible Bible, being an alphabetical collection (from the whole Bible) of such general heads as were judged most capable of Hieroglyphics,' 'An English Dictionary,' 1676; 'A Dictionary, English-Latin, and Latin-English,' 'The most natural and easy Method of learning Latin,' 'Harmony of the Four Evangelists,' and 'The Young Scholar's Best Companion.'

COLES, ELISHA, uncle of the preceding, and a native of Northamptonshire, became a trader in London, but afterwards was steward of Magdalen College, Oxford. He was obliged to quit that situation at the Restoration, on which he obtained the place of clerk to the India Company. Died Oct., 1688, upwards of 80 years old. His 'Practical Discourse of God's Sovereignty' is in great repute among the Calvinists, and has been often printed.

COLET, JOHN, D.D., was born in London 1466, being the eldest son of Sir Henry Colet, twice lord mayor of the City, who, besides him, had twenty-one children, and left a handsome estate among them all. John was sent to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he spent seven years, and then travelled to France and Italy. While young he was presented to the vicarage of Denington, Suffolk, and, in 1485, to the rectory of Thyrning, Huntingdonshire, but he resigned the latter in 1493. During his absence from England he contracted an intimacy with Erasmus. After his return he read public lectures, which were much attended. In 1502 he was installed dean of St. Paul's, in which situation he laboured so zealously to restore discipline as to bring upon himself the charge of heresy. The clergy whom he attempted to reform became his enemies, and Bishop Fitzjames complained of him to Warham, archbishop of Canterbury, who dismissed him without a hearing. After this he founded St. Paul's School, of which William Lilly was appointed the first master in 1512. Dean Colet died 16 Sept., 1519. He wrote some grammatical pieces for the use of his school, and a few religious tracts of a practical nature.

COLETTE, SAINT, a holy virgin, who reformed the order of St. Clare, was born in Picardy 1380, and died 1446. She was canonized in 1807.

COLEY, HENRY, a mathematician and astronomer, born at Oxford 18 Oct., 1633. He was the adopted son of Lilly, who made him a present of the thirty-sixth impression of his 'Ephemeris,' which was continued by the 'son' for many years. Coley resided in Baldwin's Court, Gray's Inn Lane, London, over against the Hole in the Wall. He was alive in 1604. His principal work is 'Clavis Astrologæ, or a Key to the whole Art of Astrology,' 8vo., London, 1669; 1676.

COLGAN, JOHN, a native of the county of Donegal, was a Franciscan friar of the strict observance in the Irish convent of St. Anthony of Padua at Louvain, in which he was professor of divinity. He had a good acquaintance with the Irish language, as well as with the antiquities and church history of his country. Died 1658. He published the lives of all the Irish saints who died during the first three months of the year, under the title of 'Acta Sanctorum veteris et majoris Scotiæ seu Hiberniæ, sanctorum Insulæ, partem ex variis per Europam MS. Codd. exscripta, partim ex antiquis Monumentis et probatis Authoribus eruta et congesta; omnia Notis et Appendicibus illustrata,' folio, Louvain, 1645; 'Triadis Thaumaturgæ, seu Divorum Patrici Columbar et Brigidæ, trium Veteris et Majoris Scotiæ, seu Hiberniæ, Sanctorum Insulæ, communium Patronorum Acta,' folio, Louvain, 1647; and 'Tractatus de Vita, Patriâ, Scriptis Johannis Scoti, Doctoris Subtilis,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1655. He also left some pieces in MS., which were preserved at Louvain.

COLIGNI, GASPARD DE, admiral of France, was born 16 Feb. 1571. After the death of Henry II. he became the head of the Protestants against the Guises; and the first battle fought in the contest was that of Dreux, which the admiral lost. The battle of Jarnac, in 1569, destroyed the hopes of the Protestants, who, after the death of Conde, had no resource but in the ability of Coligni, and he, being again defeated at Montcontour, made peace in 1571. After this he was treated with flattering marks of distinction at court; notwithstanding which he was the first who fell in the horrible massacre on St. Bartholomew's day, 24 Aug., 1572.

COLIGNI, HENRIETTE, countess de la Suze, a French poetess, born 1618; died 10 March, 1673.

COLIGNI, ODET DE, was born 30 July, 1575, being son of Gaspar de Coligni, marshal of France. He was cardinal de Châtillon at eighteen, archbishop of Toulouse at nineteen, and bishop of Beauvais at twenty. Turning Calvinist, he was deprived of the purple 1563, and in the following year he married, though he still retained his numerous ecclesiastical preferments. He was not more faithful to his king than to the duties of his situation; but taking up arms against his sovereign, was at the battle of St. Denis, 1568. A warrant of arrest being issued, he fled to England with his wife, but Queen Elizabeth not treating his lady with the respect she claimed as wife to a peer of France, he determined to return, but died before he could leave England, being poisoned by his valet-de-chambre 14 Feb., 1570-1.

COLIGNON, FRANÇOIS, a French engraver, born about 1610; died 1671.

COLLADO, DIEGO, a Spanish Dominican friar, who went as a missionary to Japan, and died 1638. He composed a Japanese grammar and dictionary; an Ecclesiastical History of Japan, &c.

COLLAERT, ADRIAN, an engraver, of Antwerp, born about 1530; died 1567. His son, Hans Collaert, was also an excellent engraver; died about 1622.

COLLIER.

COLLÉ, CHARLES, a French dramatist and song writer, born 1709; died 3 Nov., 1783.

COLLE, RAFFAELINO DAL, an Italian painter, was born at Colle, near Città San Sepolcro, about 1490, and died at Rome after 1540.

COLLEGE, STEPHEN, commonly called the Protestant joiner, was accused of being concerned in a conspiracy to seize King Charles II., and to detain him in prison till he should yield to the exclusion of the duke of York. Being convicted, he was executed at Oxford 31 Aug., 1681.

COLLET, JOHN, painter and caricaturist, born in London about 1725; died at Chelsea 1780.

COLLET, PHILIBERT, a French advocate, who published some works on law and botany, was born 1643, and died 30 March, 1718.

COLLET, PIERRE, a French priest, author of 'Theologia Moralis Universalis,' a Life of St. Vincent of Paul, &c., was born 6 Sept., 1693, and died 6 Oct., 1770.

COLLETET, GUILLAUME, a French academician and dramatic writer, born 13 Feb., 1598, at Paris, where he died 11 Feb., 1659.

COLLETON, or COLLINGTON, JOHN, a Catholic divine, born at Milverton, Somersetshire, about 1548, and educated at Oxford; but turning Catholic he left the country, and was ordained a priest at Douay, being sent back on the English mission in 1576. In 1581 he was tried, with Father Campian and others, for conspiring against the queen and government, but was acquitted; notwithstanding which he was kept a prisoner in the Tower till 1584, when he was sent into banishment. In 1587, however, he came back to England; and when Dr. Bishop, bishop of Chelcedon, arrived in this country in 1623, Mr. Colleton was appointed dean of the chapter and his lordship's vicar-general. He died at Eitham, Kent, 29 Oct., 1635. Mr. Colleton was a zealous opponent of the administration of the archbishop Blackwell, and wrote 'A just Defence of the Slandered Priests, &c.,' 1602; 'A Supplication to his Majesty for a Toleration; and A Letter to Pope Paul V.'

COLLIER, ARTHUR a divine of the Church of England. He was rector of Langford Magna, near Salisbury, where he formed an acquaintance with Mr. Norris, of Bemerton, whose principles he defended in a treatise entitled 'Clavis Universalis, or a New Enquiry after Truth; being a demonstration of the Non-Existence or Impossibility of an External World,' 8vo., 1713. In this work he asserts the same notion on matter which Berkeley had started three years before in his 'Principles of Human Knowledge;' yet it is plain that Mr. Collier had never seen that performance, which was printed at Dublin. He died about 1730.

COLLIER, JEREMY, a learned divine, was born at Stow Quay, Cambridgeshire, 23 Sept., 1650. He received his education under his father, who was master of the grammar school at Ipswich, and next admitted a poor scholar of Corpus Collicæ, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1676. In 1679 he was instituted to the rectory of Ampton, in Suffolk, which he resigned in 1685, on being chosen lecturer of Gray's Inn. At the Revolution he refused the oath, and wrote in vindication of the abdicated monarch, for which he was imprisoned in Newgate, but never brought to trial. He was again taken up in 1692, on suspicion of treasonable practices, but no evidence being found against him, he was ordered to be discharged on giving bail, which he refused, as it would have been an acknowledgment of the jurisdiction of the court. However, in a few days, by the intercession of friends, he obtained his release, without any conditions. When Sir John Friend and Sir William Perkins were executed, in 1696, Mr. Collier and two other clergymen attended them to the place of execution, and joined in absolving them by the imposition of hands. For this two of the ministers were taken up, but Mr. Collier absconded, and was declared an outlaw. When this storm had subsided he published in succession three volumes of Essays upon Miscellaneous Subjects. In 1698 he published his 'Short View of the immorality and profaneness of the English Stage.' This brought on a smart controversy, in which Collier had to contend with Congreve, Vanbrugh, Drake, and Dr. Filmer; but Dryden very candidly acknowledged his error, saying, 'It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.' The warfare was carried on briskly ten years, but Collier lived to triumph, by seeing the reward of his labours in the reformation of the theatre. His next work was a translation and improvement of Moreri's Dictionary, of which the first two volumes appeared in 1701, a third in 1706, and an appendix in 1721. In the reign of Queen Anne considerable offers were made to him, on the condition of his compliance with the oaths, which he steadily refused; and in 1713 he was consecrated a non-juring bishop by Dr. George Hickes. Before this he had published the first volume of his Ecclesiastical History; and in 1714 came out the second volume. His other publications are a translation of Antoninus's Meditations; and a volume of practical Sermons. He died 26 April, 1726.

COLLIER, THOMAS, a Baptist minister, who preached with great zeal, and acquired great popularity throughout the west of England. He was living in 1691. He published 'Certain Queries or Points now in Controversy Examined,' 1645, and many other works.

COLLIGNON, CATHARINE, daughter of Charles Collignon, M.D., professor of anatomy at Cambridge, translated from the French the Abbé Ladvocat's 'Historical and Biographical Dictionary,' Cambridge, 4 vols. 8vo., 1799-1801. Miss Collignon died at Bromley, in Kent, 4 Feb., 1832, aged 77, having by her will left £1,000 stock to Addenbrook's Hospital, Cambridge.

COLLIGNON, CHARLES, M.D., F.R.S., son of Paul Collignon, of Hesse Cassel, was born at London 1725. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.B. 1749; M.D. 1754); was appointed professor of anatomy in that university; and died 1 Oct., 1785. Mr. Cole remarks in his MSS.—'Dr. Collignon is of French extraction, as is evident from his visage, and withal one of the most lean and emaciated creatures that ever existed, being a most exact emblem of his profession as anatomical professor: in short a walking anatomy or skeleton. He practises as a physician at Cambridge, and is looked on as a third-rate practitioner, Drs. Plumtree and Glynn carrying away the chief of the business. He is a married man, and has a daughter grown up, by his wife whom he married from Colchester, of Dutch extraction, and both very good people.' He was author of 'Compendium Anatomico-Medicorum quæ in Scholis apud Cantabrigienses mense Martio, quotannis explicat demonstratque Car. Collignon,' 1756; 'An Enquiry into the Structure of the Human Body relative to its supposed Influence on the Morals of Mankind,' 1704; 'Medicina Politica: or Reflections on the Art of Physic, as inseparably connected with the Prosperity of a State,' 1765; 'Moral and Medical Dialogues,' 1769; and 'Miscellaneous Works,' 1786.

COLLIN D'HARLEVILLE, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Frenchman, distinguished as a dramatic poet, was born 30 May, 1755; and died 24 Feb., 1806.

COLLINGES, JOHN, D.D., a nonconformist divine, born at Boxtead, Essex, 1633, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. At the Restoration he was ejected from the living of St. Stephen's, in Norwich; after which he was one of the Presbyterian divines at the Savoy conference. Died 16 Jan., 1690. He was author of many sermons and books of practical divinity and controversy; one of the most singular of which is his 'Weaver's Pocket-Book, or Weaving Spiritualized,' 1675. He also had a very considerable share in the Annotations on the Bible, 2 vols. folio, which were begun and carried on by Matthew Poole, and which go under his name.

COLLINGRIDGE, BERNARDINE PETER, an English prelate of the Roman Church, was born in Oxfordshire 10 March, 1757, and educated at Douay, where he assumed the Franciscan habit. In 1807 he was consecrated bishop of Thespie, and nominated vicar-apostolic of the western district of England. He died at Cannington, Somersetshire, 3 March, 1829.

COLLINGTON. See COLLETON.

COLLINGWOOD, CUTHBERT, Lord Collingwood, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 26 Sept., 1748. In 1761 he entered the naval service, in which he passed through all the regular steps of promotion, till he was made post-captain, and commanded the 'Prince,' Admiral Bower's flagship, in the battle of the 18th June, 1794. After this he had the 'Hector,' and next the 'Excellent,' in which he bore a part, with his old friend Nelson, in the action off Cape St. Vincent 14 Feb., 1797. In 1799 he was raised to the rank of rear-admiral of the white, and in 1801 to the red. In 1804 he was made vice-admiral of the blue, and served with Cornwallis in the tedious but important blockade of Brest. At length, after a variety of services, Collingwood became second to Nelson, in the battle of Trafalgar, on which occasion his ship, the 'Royal Sovereign,' commenced the fight in such a manner as to draw from the commander these expressions:—'Look at that noble fellow! Observe the style in which he carries his ship into action!' After the loss of the great hero the command devolved upon Collingwood at a critical period, and how well he secured by his prudence what had been so gloriously won needs not here be related. He was now advanced to be vice-admiral of the red, confirmed in the command of the Mediterranean fleet, and created a peer. Died 7 March, 1810.

COLLINGWOOD, THOMAS, M.D., a physician, mathematician, and botanist, born near Berwick-on-Tweed 7 July, 1751; died in London 28 Oct., 1831.

COLLINS, ANTHONY, a deistical writer, born at Heston, near Hounslow, Middlesex, 21 June, 1676, was educated first at Eton, and then at King's College, Cambridge. On leaving the university he became a student in the Temple, but did not make the law his profession. He rendered himself famous by some books against Christianity, particularly his 'Discourse on Freethinking,' and his 'Discourse of the Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion,' both of which occasioned much controversy. In 1726 appeared his 'Scheme of Literal Prophecy considered,' which was attacked by a number of able writers, and defended by the author, who died 13 Dec., 1729. Besides the above works he published several others, as 'Priestcraft in Perfection;' 'Historical and Critical Essay upon the Thirty-nine Articles;' and 'A Philosophical Enquiry concerning Human Liberty,' which was answered by Dr. Samuel Clarke.

COLLINS, ARTHUR, an antiquary, born at Exeter 1682. He published his Peetrage first in 1708, and a second edition in 1715, in 4 vols. 8vo., after which the work was extended gradually to 9 vols. He next undertook a Baronetage, which was first published in two volumes, and in 1741 extended to 5 vols. The other publications of this laborious writer are 'The Life of Cecil, Lord Burghley;' 'The Life of Edward the Black Prince;' 'Letters and Memorials of State, collected by Sir Henry Sidney and others,' 2 vols. folio; and 'Historical Collections of the noble families of Cavendish, Holles, Vere, Harley, and Ogle.' He obtained a pension of £400 a year, which, however, he did not live long to enjoy. He died at Battersea 16 March, 1760.

COLLINS, CHARLES JAMES, author of 'Sackville Chase,' and other novels, died 31 Dec., 1864, aged 44. He was connected with the London press for more than twenty years, having been on the parliamentary staff of the 'Sun,' 'Daily Telegraph,' and 'Standard.' He projected and edited the 'Racing Times,' and at one period was editor of the 'Comic News.'

COLLINS, DAVID, son of General Arthur Tooker Collins, and grandson of Arthur Collins, the antiquary, was born at Exeter 3 March, 1756. He was appointed lieutenant in the marines 1770; served afterwards in America; and in 1787 went out with Governor Phillip to Botany Bay, as judge-advocate. On his return to England he published a History of that settlement. Afterwards he was appointed governor of the settlement in Van Diemen's Land, with the brevet rank of colonel. He died there 24 March, 1810.

COLLINS, DOMINIC, an Irish Jesuit, who was executed at Cork 31 Oct., 1602.

COLLINS, JOHN, F.R.S., a mathematician, born at Wood-Eaton, Oxfordshire, March, 1624. He became clerk to Mr. Mar, an officer in the household of Prince Charles; and afterwards went into the Venetian naval service. At the Restoration he was appointed accountant to the Excise Office, and in 1667 was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, to whose 'Transactions' he was a liberal contributor. He was also employed in settling intricate accounts for the court of Chancery. He died 10 Nov., 1683. Mr. Collins held a correspondence with many celebrated mathematicians, as Barrow, Newton, Wallis, Leibnitz, &c.; whose letters appeared in 1712, in a quarto volume, under the title of Commercium Epistolicum. He likewise wrote, an Introduction to Merchants' Accounts; the Sector on a Quadrant; the Mariner's Plane Scale; Treatise on Geometrical Dialling; the Doctrine of Decimal Arithmetic; a Discourse on Salt and Fishery, &c.

COLLINS, JOHN, the son of a tailor at Bath, was a miniature painter, an actor, and the reciter of a monologue entertainment called 'The Brush.'

COLLINSON.

He appears to have been in Ireland some time, but in the end settled at Birmingham, and became editor of the 'Birmingham Chronicle.' Died 1868. His 'Scripscrapologia,' published at Birmingham in 1804, contains some curious and witty pieces by him; and he has displayed poetical ability of the highest order in his song of 'To-morrow.' He was author of the comic song entitled 'The Chapter of Kings.'

COLLINS, JOHN, one of the best of the modern Irish poets, died at Skibbereen, co. Cork, 1816.

COLLINS, SAMUEL, M.D., a physician, was educated at King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and proceeded to his doctor's degree. He was afterwards incorporated at Oxford, and elected to a fellowship in New College in that university. He next proceeded to the Continent, and resided for eight years at Moscow in the capacity of physician to the czar. Of all the physicians known in Russia, Dr. Collins is reputed to have been, without exception, the most celebrated. On his return to England he settled in London, and dying in June, 1085, was buried on the 11th of that month at Cowley, Middlesex. He wrote 'The History of the Present State of Russia;' in a Letter written to a Friend in London, 8vo., London, 1671.—Munk.

COLLINS, SAMUEL, M.D., an anatomist, took his doctor's degree at Padua, but was afterwards incorporated therein at Oxford. He held several important posts in the London College of Physicians, and died 11 April, 1710, æt. 93. Dr. Collins, who was the most accomplished comparative anatomist of his time, published 'A System of Anatomy, treating of the Body of Man, Beasts, Birds, Fish, Insects, and Plants,' 2 vols. folio, 1685.

COLLINS, WILLIAM, a poet, born at Chichester on 25 Dec., about 1720, and educated at Winchester School, from whence he was elected to New College, Oxford; but as there happened to be no vacancy in the list he entered of Queen's, and next at Magdalen, of which he became demy. About 1744 he left the university, and came to London, where he designed many literary works, but executed none, except his 'Odes,' which appeared in 1746; his Oriental Eclogues having before been published at Oxford. At length, after suffering much from distress, brought on by imprudence, his uncle, Colonel Martin, left him about £2000; but his intellect was now disordered, and he died at Chichester in 1756. Many years after his death an 'Ode on the Superstitions of the Highlands' was recovered and inserted in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1735 a monument by Flaxman was erected to his memory in Chichester Cathedral.

COLLINS, WILLIAM, R.A., an eminent English painter, born 1787; died in London 17 Feb., 1847. Among the most celebrated of his productions are, 'The Pet Lamb,' 'Bird Catchers,' 'Fishermen on the look out,' 'Fisherman's Departure,' 'Hop Gatherers,' 'Rustic Hospitality,' 'Skittle Players,' 'Rustic Civility,' and its companion, 'Snow Piece,' 'Scene near Subiaco,' 'Our Saviour with the Doctors,' 'The Catchist,' 'Fetching the Doctor,' 'Early Morning,' 'Happy as a King.' A very interesting life of this artist has been published by his son, Mr. William Wilkie Collins.

COLLINSON, JOHN, F.S.A., a topographer, was vicar of Long Ashton, and curate of Whitchurch, Somersetshire, and vicar of Clanfield, Oxfordshire.

COLLINSON.

He died at Bath 27 Aug., 1793. His works are, 'The Beauties of British Antiquity; selected from the writings of esteemed Antiquaries. With notes and observations,' 8vo., London, 1780; and 'History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset; collected from authentic records, and an actual survey made by the late Mr. Edmund Rack,' 3 vols. 4to., Bath, 1791.

COLLINSON, PETER, F.R.S., a Botanist, born near Kendal, in Westmoreland, 14 Jan., 1693-4. In 1728 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, after which he corresponded with ingenious men in every part of the world, and thereby obtained a noble collection of plants. Among his intimate acquaintance was Linnaeus, who gave his name to an American plant. Another of his friends was Dr. Franklin, who commended his first Essays on Electricity to Collinson, in a series of letters, which were published. He was the first who introduced a variety of trees and shrubs into gardens; and he also procured valuable information respecting the management of Spanish sheep. Amidst these engagements he carried on the business of a mercer in Gracechurch Street, and died 11 August, 1768.

COLLIUS, FRANCIS, a doctor of the Ambrosian College at Milan, and author of a curious work On the Souls of Heathens, died 1640.

COLLYER, JOSEPH, an English compiler and translator, who died 1776. His principal work is a History of England in 14 vols. 12mo. His wife, Mary Collier, was also a writer, and is chiefly distinguished as the translator of Gesner's Death of Abel, 1702. She died 1703.—Rose.

COLLYER, JOSEPH, an engraver, born 1748 in London, where he died 1827.

COLMAN, GEORGE, the Elder, a dramatic writer, was the son of Thomas Colman, Esq., resident at the court of the duke of Tuscany, and was born at Florence about 1733. He received his education at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1758. It was during his residence at the university that he joined with his friend Bonnel Thornton in writing a periodical paper called 'The Connoisseur.' Before this Mr. Colman had displayed his powers in a copy of verses written to his cousin, Lord Pulteney. On leaving the university he entered at Lincoln's Inn, and was called to the bar, but never followed the legal profession. His first dramatic piece, Polly Honeycomb, was performed at Drury Lane Theatre in 1760; and the next year his comedy of the Jealous Wife was acted with applause. About this time he became a proprietor of the St. James's Chronicle, in which he wrote a paper called 'The Genius,' and other light pieces. In 1764 Lord Bath died, and left him an annuity, which in 1767 was enlarged by General Pulteney. In 1768 he became a patentee of Covent Garden Theatre, but soon after sold his share, and purchased Foote's theatre in the Haymarket. In 1783 he published a new translation of Horace's Art of Poetry, accompanied with an ingenious Commentary, which met with the approbation of Bishop Hurd, though it was in opposition to his own hypothesis. About the year 1790 Mr. Colman had a stroke of the palsy, which produced mental derangement, and he was placed in a lunatic asylum, where he died 14 Aug., 1794. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote the Clandestine Marriage, and translated Terence into English.

COLMAN, GEORGE, the Younger, son of the preceding, was born 21 Oct., 1762, and educated at Westminster School, Christ Church, Oxford, and King's College, Aberdeen. He returned to London 1783, and the following year his first play was acted with success at the Haymarket. After his father's seizure he assisted in the management of the Haymarket, and in 1789, when his father was quite disabled, took the whole management upon himself. In 1824 he was appointed examiner of plays, and retained that office till his death on 26 Oct., 1836. The most popular of his plays and farces are 'John Bull,' 'The Poor Gentleman,' 'Heir at Law,' 'Jukle and Yarico,' 'Iron Chest,' 'Mountaineers,' 'Surrender of Calais,' 'Ways and Means,' 'Review,' 'Blue Beard,' 'X. Y. Z.,' and 'Love Laughs at Locksmiths.' He also wrote the well-known comic tales entitled 'Broad Grins,' 'Poetical Vagaries,' &c., and a variety of smaller poems.—Penny Cycl., Al. West.

COLOCCI, ANGELO, bishop of Nocera, in Italy, composed poems in Latin and Italian, which were published 1772. Born 1467; died 1 May, 1549.

COLOMBEL, NICOLAS, a French painter, born 1646; died 1717.

COLOMBIERE, CLAUDE DE LA, a Jesuit, born at St. Symphorien, near Lyons, 1641. He was almoner to the duchess of York, at London, for eighteen months; but at the end of that time being suspected, though not convicted, of having entered into a conspiracy, he was imprisoned, and afterwards banished from England. He returned to France and died at Paray, in the Charolais, 15 Feb., 1682. He left some Sermons, Moral Reflections, and Spiritual Letters. It was he who, in conjunction with the Blessed Margaret Mary Alacoque, introduced the solemnity and office of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

COLOMBINI, ST. JOHN. See JOHN.

COLOMBIES, or COLOMESIUS, PAUL, a learned Protestant, born at La Rochelle 2 Dec., 1638. He followed Isaac Vossius to England, and on entering into episcopal orders was appointed librarian at Lambeth. Died 13 Jan., 1692. He wrote 'Gallia Orientalis;' 'Hispania et Italia Orientalis;' 'Theologorum Presbyterianorum Icon,' &c.

COLONI, ADAM, the Old, a painter, born at Rotterdam 1634; died in London 1685.

COLONI, HENRY ADRIAN, the Young, a painter, son of the preceding, was born 1668, and died 1701.

COLONNA, FABIO, of Naples, an able writer on botany and natural history, born about 1567; died about 1647.

COLONNA, GILES DE, called also Aegidius de Roma, a learned Augustinian, surnamed the well-founded doctor. He was tutor to Philip the Fair, for whose use he composed the treatise 'De Regimine Principum,' folio, Rome, 1492. In 1202 he was elected general of his order; and, some time after, was consecrated bishop of Bourges, in which capacity he assisted at the general council of Vienne 1311. Died 22 Dec., 1316.

COLONNA, POMPEIO, a celebrated cardinal, who was appointed vicerey of Naples, and died 28 June, 1532, aged 53. He was a patron of learning, and himself wrote a poem, 'De Laudibus Mulierum.'

COLONNA, PROSPERO, a brave Italian general, born 1452; died 1523.

COLONNA, VICTORIA, marchioness of Pescara, an Italian poetess, born 1490; died 1547.

COLORIBUS, JOHN DE, a Dominican friar and D.D. of the university of Oxford, was living 1525.

COLQUHOUN.

Cardinal Wolsey employed him to write against Luther; and accordingly he published, in 1521, 'Tractatus contra Doctrinam Lutheri.'

COLQUHOUN, PATRICK, LL.D., an active magistrate, was born at Dumbarton, in Scotland, 14 March, 1745. At the age of sixteen he went to America, in a commercial capacity, and on his return in 1766 settled at Glasgow, where he carried on business as a merchant, and contributed to the improvements of that city, of which he became lord provost and chairman of the chamber of commerce. In 1789 he settled in London, and in 1792 was appointed one of the police magistrates. In 1796 he published his 'Treatise on the Police of the Metropolis,' for which the university of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws. In 1800 came out another work 'On the Police of the River Thames,' containing a plan for the protection of property, which produced the establishment of a separate office at Wapping. After a long period of public service, he resigned his situation in 1818, and died in Westminster 25 April, 1830. Besides the two treatises already mentioned, he published a number of tracts, and three works of great merit, 'A new and appropriate System of education for the labouring People;' 'A Treatise on Indigence, exhibiting a general view of the national Resources for productive labour;' 'A Treatise on the Population, Wealth, Power, and Resources of the British Empire,' &c.

COLSON, JOHN, F.R.S., an eminent mathematician, was master of the free school at Rochester, and vicar of Chalk, Kent, 1724. He was brought to Cambridge through the interest of Dr. Smith, master of Trinity, and at first had chambers in Sidney College, and read mathematical lectures there. Afterwards he became a member of Emmanuel College, and took the degree of M.A. (com. reg.) 1728. He was appointed Lucasian professor 1739; and died at Cambridge 20 Jan., 1760. Mr. Colson was author of a translation (conjointly with the Rev. Samuel D'Oyly) of Father Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible, 3 vols. folio, 1732; an English edition of Sir Isaac Newton's Treatise on Fluxions, 1736; 'The Plan of the Lady's System of Analytics,' MS., Cambridge, Ec. 2, 36; and a translation of the 'Analytical Institutions of Donna Maria Gaetana Agnesi,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1801. The last-named work was edited by the Rev. John Hellins, and published at the expense of Baron Maseres. To Professor Saunderson's Elements of Algebra (Cambridge edition, 2 vols. 4to., 1740) is prefixed his Palpable Arithmetic, deciphered by Professor Colson.

COLSON, LANCELOT, an English astrologer, author of 'Philosophia Maturata, or the practick and operative Part of the Philosopher's Stone, and the Calcination of Metals, with the Work of St. Dunstan concerning the Philosopher's Stone, and the Experiments of Rumiellus, and the preparation of Angel. Sala,' 12mo., London, 1668.

COLSTON, EDWARD, a philanthropist, born at Bristol 2 Nov., 1636. He was a Spanish merchant, and inherited a handsome fortune, which he considerably enlarged by his own industry. He founded a school at Bristol, upon the plan of Christ's Hospital; besides which he built several almshouses, and endowed various charitable institutions, not only in that city, but in different parts of the kingdom. He gave £6000 for the augmentation of small livings; £3000 to St. Bartholomew's Hospital; a like sum to Christ's Hospital; and very large sums for benevolent purposes. Died 11 Oct., 1721.

COLTON, CALEB, an English clergyman, was educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, and in 1801 was presented to the perpetual curacy of Tiverton Prior's Quarter, Devonshire. He became vicar of Kew 1818. A passion for gambling involved him in pecuniary ruin, and he was at length compelled to leave the country. He blew his brains out at Fontainebleau, in France, 28 April, 1832. Mr. Colton published some poems of considerable merit, but is best known by his work entitled 'Lacon, or Many Things in Few Words, addressed to those who think,' 1820.

COLUCCIO, SALUTATIO. See SALUTATIO.

COLUMBA (St.), the founder of the monastery of Icolmkill, was born 521, in Ireland, from which country he went to Scotland about 565. Here he received from the reigning king, Brideus, the isle of Hy, where he established his famous seminary and acquired an uncommon influence. Died 9 June, 597.

COLUMBANUS (St.), was born in Ireland about 543. Going to France, he founded the monastery of Luxeuil, which he governed twenty years. Eventually he went to Italy; and founded the abbey of Bobio, near Naples, where he died 21 Nov., 615.

COLUMBUS, BARTHOLOMEW, brother to Christopher, was ingenious in his drawing of spheres and sea charts. It is said that he was deputed by his brother to come to solicit the king of England, but that his voyage was delayed by falling into the hands of pirates; and when at last the English monarch promised encouragement to his brother, he found that the plan had already been adopted by Ferdinand of Castile. Bartholomew shared the honours and the dangers of his brother's discoveries; and he was the founder of the town of St. Domingo. Died 1514.

COLUMBUS, CHRISTOPHER, celebrated as the discoverer of a new continent, was born about 1445, at Genoa, son of a woolcomber. In his great fondness for navigation, he made himself perfect in geometry, astronomy, and cosmography. After trading in the Mediterranean, he settled at Lisbon, where his brother, Bartholomew, was established; and here he married the daughter of a master of a vessel who had been engaged in discoveries, whose charts he perused; and he increased his knowledge of maritime affairs by several voyages to the Canaries and the coast of Africa. Guided by experience, and encouraged by the correspondence of Paul Foscaneli, a learned Florentine, he became persuaded that a continent must exist in the western ocean. He presented his plans to the Genoese, and afterwards to the king of Portugal; but instead of patronage, he met in both applications with coldness. In Spain, Ferdinand and Isabella showed him greater attention; and after many delays, he was permitted to sail in quest of unknown regions. On the 6th of Sept., 1492, he left Gomera, with three small ships, and on the 12th of Oct., after sailing in a westerly direction, he discovered some islands, and landed at Guana Bay, in the Lucca Islands. After visiting and taking possession of the islands of Cuba and Hispaniola, he returned to Spain, which, after a passage of fifty days, he reached in May, 1493. These discoveries astonished the Spanish monarch. Columbus was declared admiral of the Indies, ennobled, and permitted to return to the new world with a large flect. In his second voyage he discovered Jamaica and other islands; and on his return to Europe, 8 June, 1496, he silenced the malicious insinuations which envy had spread concerning his views, and the importance of the new world. In May, 1498, he made a third voyage, and discovered Paria, on the continent; but so violent were his enemies, that, in spite of his services, he was sent to Spain in irons in Oct., 1500; but the monarch liberated him from captivity. He again visited the new world, and died, soon after his return, at Valladolid, 20 May, 1506. His remains, by the king's command, were magnificently buried at Seville, where this short epitaph records his merits: 'Columbus gave Castile and Leon a new world.'

COLUMBUS, FERDINAND, the son of Christopher, entered the ecclesiastical state, and founded a library in the cathedral of Seville. He wrote the life of his father, and died in 1506.

COLUMBUS, REALDUS, a famous Italian anatomist, who died at Rome 1577.

COLUMELLA, LUCIUS JUNIUS MODERATUS, a Latin writer, was a native of Cadiz, and lived in the first century. He composed a work On Agriculture, in twelve books, to which is added a thirteenth book on the cultivation of trees. The tenth book, containing rules for gardening, is in verse. The work possesses value, both from the beauty of the style and the richness of the matter.

COLUMNA, GUY, a Sicilian, who accompanied Edward I. to England, on his return from Palestine, and wrote a history of the Siege of Troy, first printed in 1477.

COLUTHUS, a Greek poet, who flourished about the year 500. His poem on the Rape of Helen is extant.

COLVILLE, or COLWIL, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Scotch Episcopalian divine, born near St. Andrew's 1620, and educated at Edinburgh, after which he settled as minister at Dysart. In 1662 he was made principal of the university of Edinburgh. He wrote several pieces against the Presbyterians, all of which are now forgotten, except his Scotch Hudibras. Died 1676.

COLVILLE, JOHN, a Scotch controversialist, some time minister of Kilbride and precentor of Glasgow. He finished by turning Catholic and writing bitterly against his former co-religionists. Died 1607. He was author of 'The Palinodie,' and other works.

COMBE, ANDREW, M.D., an eminent physician of Edinburgh, born 27 Oct., 1797; died 9 Aug., 1847. His most celebrated works are 'The Principles of Physiology applied to the Preservation of Health;' 'A Treatise on the Physiological and Moral Management of Infancy;' and 'The Physiology of Digestion,' all of which passed through many editions.

COMBE, CHARLES, M.D., a physician, was the son of an apothecary in Bloomsbury, and born in 1743. He was educated at Harrow School, after which he succeeded to his father's business; but in 1783 he obtained a diploma from Glasgow, and was elected physician to the Lying-in Hospital. He studied medallist antiquities, and classical literature, which induced him to join with Dr. Parr, and the late Mr. Homer, in an edition of Horace. His coadjutors however relinquished the concern, and Dr. Combe published it himself in 1793, in 2 vols. 4to.; when a dispute arose between him and Dr. Parr, which proved fatal to the credit of the work. Dr. Combe died March 18, 1817.

COMBER.

He was also the editor of 'Index Nummorum;' and 'Nummorum vet. Populorum et Urbium in Musæo Gul. Hunter descriptio.'

COMBE, GEORGE, brother of Andrew, mentioned above, was born at Edinburgh 1788, and bred to the law, which, however, he abandoned in order to devote his life to the study of phrenology, on which he delivered lectures and wrote numerous works. He is chiefly known, however, by his 'Essay on the Constitution of Man in relation to External Objects,' first published in 1828. Died 14 August, 1858.

COMBE, TAYLOR, P.R.S., F.S.A., son of Charles Combe, M.D., mentioned above, was educated at Harrow School and Oriel College, Oxford. He was subsequently appointed a director of the Society of Antiquaries, and keeper of the antiquities and coins in the British Museum. Mr. Combe was an accomplished numismatist and superintended the engraving of thirty-three of the plates in Kuling's Annals of the Coinage. He was author of descriptions of the Greek coins, and of various other collections of antiquities in the British Museum, and contributed a number of papers to the Archæologia. Died 7 July, 1826, aged 52.

COMBE, WILLIAM, was born 1741 at Bristol, where his father was a merchant. He was educated at Eton and Oxford; after which he dissipated a handsome fortune in fashionable pursuits, and became reduced to the necessity of adopting literature as a profession, though he never prefixed his name to any of his works. His earliest performances were dramatic and ephemeral; but a poem entitled 'The Diaboliad' attained considerable popularity. After this he published 'The Royal Register,' 9 vols.; 'The Devil upon Two Sticks in England,' 4 vols.; 'The Letters which passed under the name of Lord Lyttelton;' 'A descriptive Account of the River Thames;' 'The Tour of Dr. Syntax in search of the Picturesque;' 'The English Dance of Death;' 'The Dance of Life;' and 'The History of Johnny Quæ Genus, or the little Foundling of the late Dr. Syntax.' These last performances attained great celebrity. The author died in Lambeth Road, London, 19 June, 1823.

COMBEHS, FRANÇOIS, a French Dominican, and ecclesiastical antiquary, born 1605; died 23 March, 1679.

COMBER, THOMAS, a divine, was born at Sherburny, in Sussex, 1 Jan., 1575. He was educated at Horsham School, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow and master. He was also chaplain to Charles I., and in 1630 dean of Carlisle, but in the Rebellion he lost his preferments, and died 28 Feb., 1653-4.

COMBER, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, born at Westerham, Kent, 19 March, 1644-5, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge. He was appointed dean of Durham 1691; and was chaplain to the Princess Anne of Denmark, and to William and Mary. Died 25 November, 1699. He wrote some divinity tracts, discourses on baptism, catechism, and confirmation, and on the liturgy of the Church of England, &c.

COMBER, THOMAS, LL.D., grandson of the preceding, was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge (B.A. 1744; M.A. 1770; LL.D. 1777). He became rector of Kirkby Misperton, Yorkshire, and afterwards of Morbourn and Buckworth, in Huntingdonshire. Died 1778. Dr.

COMBER.

Comber was very intimate with Bishop Warburton, and wrote, 'The heathen rejection of Christianity in the first ages considered,' against Mr. Weston, who retaliated with severity; 'An Examination of a late introductory Discourse concerning Miraculous Power,' by Dr. Middleton; 'A Vindication of the great Revolution in England;' 'Memoirs of the life and death of the right hon. the Lord Deputy Wandesforde,' &c.

COMBER, THOMAS, eldest son of the preceding, was born at East Newton, Yorkshire, 1765, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge (B.A. 1787). In 1793 he obtained the vicarage of Creech St. Michael, Somersetshire, which he exchanged in 1813 for the rectory of Oswaldkirk, Yorkshire, where he died 7 August, 1835. He wrote 'Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Thomas Comber, D.D., some time Dean of Durham,' 1799; 'History of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew,' 1810; 'Adultery Analysed, or an Inquiry into the causes of the prevalence of that vice in these kingdoms at the present day, by Philippus Philaretus,' 1810; 'A Scourge for the Adulterers, Ducuists, Gamblers, and Self-Murderers' (anon.), 1810; Sermons, &c. He was also a constant contributor to the Orthodox Churchman's Magazine.

COMBERMERE, STAPLETON STAPLETON-COTTON, VISCOUNT, was born in Denbighshire 1773, being second son of Sir R. S. Cotton, bart., M.P. for that county. After going to Westminster School he joined the army, and served with distinction on the Continent and in India. In 1807 he succeeded to the baronetcy, and in 1810 was appointed to the command of the whole allied cavalry under the duke of Wellington. He remained in that position until the termination of the Peninsular war in 1814, and distinguished himself at the head of that force in covering the retreat from Almeida to Torres Vedras, and at Busaco, Villa Garcia, Castrol, Fuentes d'Onor, and Salamanca. At the last-mentioned battle he was second in command, and by his promptitude and decision contributed greatly to the success of that brilliant day. His services were acknowledged by both Houses of Parliament, and on 17 May, 1814, he was raised to the peerage with the title of Baron Combermere. In 1817 he was appointed governor of Jamaica, and in 1823 commander-in-chief in India. While holding the latter post he gained fresh laurels by the capture of Bhurstore, which terminated the Burmese war. For this brilliant feat he was created a viscount, though he still retained the title of Combermere. On returning from India he retired from active military service, laden with years and honours. He had become a general 1825, and in 1855 was raised to the dignity of field marshal. He died 21 Feb., 1865.

COMENIUS, JOHN AMOS, a Moravian divine and an esteemed writer on educational subjects, was born at Comna, in Moravia, 1592. He was employed in the instruction of youth in several countries, and in the latter part of his life settled at Amsterdam. In 1641 he visited England, by desire of the parliament, to reform the method of education, but that assembly was too much employed in the reformation of government and religion to attend to the reformation of learning. Died 15 Nov., 1671. The most popular of the ninety-two works which he composed was his 'Janua Linguarum Reserata,' an elementary encyclopædia, containing all the words in ordinary use to the number of more than 9300.

COMPTON.

This was translated into nearly every European language.

COMES, NATALIS, or Noel Conti, a native of Milan, who wrote Greek and Latin poems, and 'Mythologia sive Explicationes Fabularum,' a very useful mythological work. Born about 1520; died about 1580.

COMIERS, CLAUDE, professor of mathematics at the hospital des Quinze-Vingts, at Paris, wrote treatises on the nature of comets, on spectacles, on the art of prolonging life, &c. Died Oct., 1693.

COMINES, PHILIPPE DE, lord of Argenton, was born about 1445 at the castle of Menin, in Flanders. Though he was of noble origin he had not a liberal education; but he was a man of solid understanding, which he duly cultivated. He lived first in the court of Charles the Bold, duke of Burgundy, and next in that of Louis XI. of France, at whose death he was thrown into prison by Charles VIII., but on being brought before the parliament of Paris he was released. Died Oct., 1509. His 'Memoirs,' which have been translated into English, are very valuable for the historical details they give, during thirty-four years, of the affairs of the house of Burgundy, and of Louis XI. and Charles VIII. of France, with anecdotes of the various transactions in England and on the Continent.

COMITOLE, PAUL, a Jesuit, born 1545 at Perugia, where he died 18 Feb., 1626. He was eminent as a casuist, and published 'Consilia, seu Responsa Moralia,' and other works.

COMMANDINE, FREDERICK, a Greek scholar and mathematician, born at Urbino, in Italy, 1509; died 5 Sept., 1575.

COMMELIN, GARPAR, a physician and professor of botany at Amsterdam, born 1607; died 25 Dec., 1731. He was nephew of John Commelin, mentioned below.

COMMELIN, ISAAC, author of several works relating to the history of Holland, was born at Amsterdam 1598, and died 3 Jan., 1676.

COMMELIN, JEROME, a noted printer, a native of Douay, settled at Heidelberg, where he died 1598.

COMMELIN, JOHN, a celebrated botanist of Amsterdam, born 1629; died 1692.

COMMERSON, PHILIBERT, a French physician and botanist, born 18 Nov., 1727; died 1773.

COMMIRE, JEAN, a French Jesuit, born 1625 died 25 Dec., 1702. He wrote Latin so elegantly that his fables are deemed equal to those of Phædrus.

COMMODIANUS, of Gaza, a Christian of the fourth century, author of a work in Latin, entitled 'Institutiones.'

COMMODO, or COMODI, ANDREW, an historical painter, born at Florence 1560; died 1638.

COMMODUS, LUCIUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS, a Roman emperor, was the son of Antoninus the philosopher, whom he succeeded in 180. His disposition was cruel and vicious. It was his ambition to be called Hercules, and he used to fight as a common gladiator. He was poisoned 31 Dec. 192.

COMPTON, earls of Northampton. See NORTHAMPTON.

COMPTON, HENRY, an English prelate, was the youngest son of Spencer, second earl of Northampton, and born in 1632. He received his education at Queen's College, Oxford; and at the Restoration obtained a canony of Christ Church, Oxford, with the rectory of Cottenham, Cambridgeshire. In 1674 he was promoted to the bishopric of Oxford, and the year following translated to London, at which time he was sworn of the privy council, and entrusted with the education of the princesses Mary and Anne, who were both confirmed, and both married by him. He resisted the Church of Rome with great spirit, for which he was dismissed from his place as dean of the Chapel Royal on the accession of James II. The next attack upon him was still more arbitrary; Dr. John Sharp, rector of St. Giles in the Fields, having preached against the doctrines of the Catholic Church, orders were sent to the bishop to silence him; which he refused to do, as illegal. For this he was himself brought before the new ecclesiastical commission, and suspended; but afterwards he was restored to his functions, which he was in no hurry to resume. The first part he acted in the Revolution was to convey the Princess Anne from London to Nottingham, to prevent her being carried off to France. On his return to London, he performed the ceremony of crowning William and Mary in Westminster Abbey. But notwithstanding these services, he was strangely neglected afterwards, and was passed over twice when the see of Canterbury became vacant. He had a fine taste for natural history, and his garden at Fulham contained more exotics than any other in the kingdom. Died July 7, 1713. His works are a translation from the Italian of the Life of Donna Olympia Monaldeschi, 1667; another from the French of the Jesuit's Intrigues; a Treatise on the Holy Communion; Six Letters to his Clergy under the title of 'Episcopalia.'

COMPTON, THOMAS, a Jesuit, was born in Cambridgeshire, and died at Liege, where he was professor of philosophy and divinity, 24 March, 1666, æt. 75. He wrote 'Philosophia Universa,' folio, Antwerp, 1649; 'Prometheus Christianus,' 8vo., Antwerp, 1652, and 'Theologia Scholastica,' 2 vols. folio, Liege, 1658-64.—Dodd, Oliver.

COMPTON, SIR WILLIAM, third son of Spencer Compton, second earl of Northampton, gallantly defended the castle of Banbury till it was relieved by his brother, after the garrison had been reduced to the last necessity. At the Restoration he was made master-general of the ordnance. Died 19 Oct., 1663, æt. 39.

COMTE LE. See LECOMTE.

COMTE, ISIDORE AUGUSTE MARIE FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a learned Frenchman, the chief of the Positive School of Philosophy, was born 1798, and died at Paris 30 Sept., 1857. His principal work, 'Philosophie Positive,' has been translated into English by Miss Harriet Martineau and by G. H. Lewes.

COMYN, JOHN, an English Benedictine, consecrated archbishop of Dublin 1182, by Pope Lucius III.; died 25 Oct., 1212.

COMYNS, SIR JOHN, an English judge, was a native of London, and received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge. He was made a baron of the Exchequer and knighted 1726; justice of the Common Pleas 5 Feb., 1735-6; chief baron of the Exchequer 1738; and died 13 Nov., 1740. His famous 'Digest of the Laws of England' was first printed between 1762 and 1767, in five folio volumes, to which a continuation, in one volume, was added in 1776. The best edition is that by Anthony Hammond, 8 vols. royal 8vo., London, 1822.

CONÆUS. See CONS.

CONANT, JOHN, D.D., an English divine, was born 18 Oct., 1608, at Yeatenton, in Devonshire, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford; where he was chosen fellow, and proceeded to the degree of D.D. He was one of the assembly of divines; in 1649 was chosen rector of his college; and in 1654 professor of divinity. In 1670 he became minister of St. Mary Aldermanbury, London, which he exchanged for that of All Saints, Northampton, to which was added the archdeaconry of Norwich, and, in 1681, a prebend of Worcester. Died 12 March, 1693-4. Six volumes of his sermons have been published.

CONCA, SEBASTIAN, an historical painter, born at Gaeta 1679; died at Naples 1764.

CONCANEN, MATTHEW, a miscellaneous writer, was born in Ireland, and bred to the law. On coming to London he became a writer for the ministry, and was rewarded with the post of attorney-general of Jamaica, where he acquired a good fortune. He died in London 22 Jan., 1749. Some of his poems have merit, but he is now only known by his connection with Warburton, who assisted him in his attacks upon Pope, for which Concanen obtained a place in the Dunciad.

CONCINA, DANIEL, an Italian Dominican friar, who was widely celebrated as a preacher and canonist. He wrote a system of Christian Theology and numerous pieces on casuistical subjects. Born about 1686; died 21 Feb., 1756.

CONDAMINE, CHARLES MARIE DE LA, a French mathematician of great eminence, born at Paris 28 Jan., 1701; died 4 Feb., 1774. After travelling in Africa and Asia, he accompanied Godin to Peru in 1736 for the purpose of measuring a degree, to ascertain the exact figure of the earth. His works are Distance of the Tropics; Relation of a Voyage to America; Measure of the first three degrees of the Meridian, &c.

CONDE, HENRY PRINCE OF, was known in the court of Henry IV. of France, by whose influence he became a Catholic. On the death of Louis XIII. he was appointed minister to the regent, and displayed his abilities in the service of his country. Born 1 Sept., 1588; died 11 Dec., 1646.

CONDE, LOUIS PRINCE OF, son of Charles of Bourbon, duke of Vendôme, was born 7 May, 1530. He signalized himself at the battle of St. Quentin, and behaved with loyalty till the death of Henry II., when he became a leader of the Protestants. He was slain at the battle of Jarnac 15 March, 1569. His 'Memoirs' possess merit.

CONDE, LOUIS PRINCE OF, duc d'Enghien, surnamed The Great, was son of Henry prince of Condé, above mentioned, and was born at Paris 8 Sept., 1621. When only twenty-two he defeated the Spaniards at the battle of Rocroi; and after taking Thionville and other towns he entered Germany as a conqueror. His attempts upon Lenda, in Catalonia, proved abortive, but in Flanders he acquired fresh honours by the defeat of the imperialists. In the civil wars of France he espoused the cause of the court, though afterwards he opposed the views of Mazarin and of the monarchy; and, in the spirit of unyielding pride, he entered into the service of the Spaniards against his country. The peace of the Pyrenees, 1659, reconciled him to France. He was afterwards employed against the prince of Orange; and though wounded at the passage of the Rhine, he completed the conquest of Franche-Comte and spread terror into Germany. Died 11 Dec., 1686.

CONDE, DON JOSEPH ANTHONY, a Spanish orientalist, who held a situation in the royal library at Madrid, was born about 1705, and died 1821.

CONDER, JAMES, son of John Conder, D.D., mentioned below, was born at Mile End, and educated at a dissenting school at Ware. He became a haberdasher at Ipswich, and died 23 March, 1823. A zealous antiquary, he formed MS. collections relating to Suffolk, and published 'An Arrangement of Provincial Coins, Tokens, and Medalets issued in Great Britain, Ireland, and the Colonies within the last twenty years, from the farthing to the penny size,' 1799.

CONDER, JOHN, D.D., a dissenting minister, of London, was born at Wimpole, Cambridgeshire, 3 June, 1714, and died 30 May, 1781. He published some sermons, and an essay on the importance of the ministerial character.

CONDER, JOSIAH, born in London 17 Sept., 1780, was originally a bookseller, but relinquishing that business to devote his whole time to literary pursuits, he became editor of the 'Eclectic Review,' and afterwards of the 'Patriot' newspaper. Died 27 Dec., 1855. Mr. Conder, who was a zealous dissenter, wrote, among other things, a treatise 'On Protestant Nonconformity'; 'The Modern Traveller'; 'The Star in the East: with other Poems'; 'Dictionary of Geography'; and 'An Analytical and Comparative View of all Religions.'

CONDILLAC, ETIENNE BONNOT DE, abbé of Mureaux, a member of the French Academy, and preceptor to the infant son of the duke of Parma, was born at Grenoble 1715, and died 3 Aug., 1780. He was a man of great erudition, strong sense, and austere manners. He wrote an Essay on the Origin of Human Sciences; on the Sensations; a Course of Study for the instruction of his pupils, &c.

CONDIVI, ASCANIO, an Italian painter, who wrote a life of his master, Michael Angelo, printed in 1553.

CONDORCET, MARIE JEAN ANTOINE NICOLAS CARITAT, MARQUIS DE, a French philosopher, born in Picardy 1743. He was educated at the college of Navarre, where he studied mathematics with assiduity. In 1765 appeared his first work, 'On the Integral Calculus,' which was received with approbation by the academy. In 1767 he published the Problem of Three Bodies; and the year following his Analytical Essays. In 1773 he became secretary to the academy, in which capacity he distinguished himself by his eulogies. Condorcet, who was an avowed atheist, applied his mathematical knowledge to the calculation of moral and political probabilities; and these paradoxes he carried to such a length as to make them pass for incontrovertible truths. In 1791 he became a member of the National Assembly, and offered many insults to the king, though he was against his being brought to trial. When Robespierre established his authority, Condorcet escaped from Paris, but being taken, poisoned himself 26 March, 1794. He left a Sketch of the Progress of the Human Mind; a tract on Calculation; a treatise on Arithmetic, &c. His works were published in 21 vols. 8vo., 1804.

CONDREN, CHARLES DE, a French priest, born 15 Dec., 1588; succeeded cardinal de Berulles as general of the Oratory 1629; died 7 Jan., 1641. His Life has been written by Father Amelotte.

CONE, GEORGE, in Latin Conæus, a Scotch Catholic priest, who was sent as the Pope's agent to England 1636, in the place of Gregory Panzani. He wrote 'De Institutione Principis,' 1621; 'Præmitiæ, seu Calumniam Hurlandorum indicatæ; et Epos de Despara Virgine,' 8vo., Bologna, 1621; 'Vita Manæ Stuartæ Scotiæ Regina,' 12mo., Rome, 1624; 'De duplici Statu Religionis apud Scotos,' 4to., Rome, 1628; 'Assertionum Catholicarum, Libri 3,' 4to., Rome, 1629; 'Carmen in Nuptiis DD. Thaddæi Barbarini et Annæ Columnæ,' 8vo., Rome, 1629. He appears to have been living in 1645, though some biographers assign to Jan., 1640, as the date of his decease.

CONEY, JOHN, an engraver, born in London 1786; died 15 Aug., 1833.

CONFUCIUS, or Koong-foo-tse, the celebrated Chinese philosopher, lived about four centuries and a half, or five centuries and a half, before the Christian era. His object in acquiring knowledge was to turn it practically to the purposes of good government, and he accordingly devoted himself exclusively to moral and political science. After travelling through the various kingdoms into which China was then divided, teaching and making proselytes, he was, when fifty-five years old, appointed prime minister, with a recognised authority to carry his theories into practice in his native country, Loo. It is said that in three years he effected a thorough change in the moral condition of the kingdom. Eventually, however, the sovereign of Loo was induced to abandon Confucius, who retired from the world, in company with a few of his chosen disciples, to write or compile those works which became the sacred books of the Chinese, and which have survived twenty-two centuries. He died in his seventy-third year. — Penny Cyc.

CONGLETON, HENRY BROOKE PARNELL, LORD, was born 3 July, 1776, being second son of Sir John Parnell, bart. He distinguished himself in the House of Commons, and on the formation of Lord Melbourne's administration in 1835 was appointed paymaster-general of the forces, treasurer of the ordnance and of the navy, which offices he held till 1841, when he was raised to the peerage. He published several works on the currency, Catholic Emancipation, and other financial and political subjects. Died 8 June, 1842.

CONGREVE, WILLIAM, a dramatic writer and poet, born at Bardsay Grange, near Leeds, in Feb., 1669-70. He was educated at the school of Kilkenny, in Ireland, and next at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he became a student of the Middle Temple. His first literary production was a romance called Incognita, or Love and Duty reconciled, written, it is said, at the age of seventeen. In 1693 appeared his comedy of the Old Batchelor, which was received with great applause, and recommended the author to the earl of Halifax, who made him a commissioner of hackney coaches; afterwards of the pipe office; and next of the wine licences, worth six hundred a-year. His next play was the Double Dealer; and in 1695 he brought out Love for Love. In 1697 the Mourning Bride was acted at the theatre, Lincoln's Inn Fields, and increased his reputation. His attention, however, was now called to another species of writing; by the attacks which Conger made on the licentiousness of his plays. After this he brought out his Way of the World, which did not meet with success; and he retired from the stage in disgust. He now amused himself with writing poems and translations, which he collected and published in 1710. On the death of Queen Mary he wrote a pastoral, for which the king gave him one hundred pounds, and he afterwards presented to that monarch an Ode on the taking of Namur. In 1701 his hymn in honour of St. Cecilia was set to music. He died 19 Jan., 1729, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

CONGREVE, Sir WILLIAM, bart., an eminent military engineer, the inventor of the Congreve rockets, was born 1772, and died 15 May, 1828.

CONINGHAM, JAMES, a Presbyterian minister, born about 1670. He was first settled at Penrith, Cumberland; removed to Manchester 1700; became pastor of the meeting in Haberdashers' Hall, London, 1712; and died 1 Sept., 1716. His funeral sermon, by Dr. Samuel Wright, is in print. Mr. Coningham published 'A Fugal Sermon for the Rev. John Chorlton,' 4to., London, 1705; 'A Sermon to the Societies for the Reformation of Manners,' 12mo., London, 1714; and 'A Sermon on New Year's Day, 1715,' 8vo., London.

CONINGSBY, Sir THOMAS, of Hampton Court, Herefordshire, a gentleman pensioner to Queen Elizabeth, died 30 May, 1625. He was author of a 'Journal of the Siege of Kouen,' printed in the eighteenth volume of the Camden Miscellany, under the editorship of Mr. John Gough Nichols.

CONINGTON, FRANCIS THIRKILL, M.A., fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and author of the 'Handbook of Chemical Analysis,' died at Boston 20 Nov., 1863, aged 35.

CONNELLAN, THADDEUS, a voluminous writer in the Irish language, died in the county of Sligo, at an advanced age, 25 July, 1854. Among his publications are 'The Irish-English Guide to the Irish Language,' 12mo., London, 1824; 'The Irish-English Primer to the Irish Language,' 12mo., London, 1825; 'The Irish-English Spelling Book,' 12mo., London, 1825; and an English-Irish Dictionary. He also published Irish translations of various portions of the Scriptures.

CONNOR, BERNARD, M.D., a physician, was born in the county of Kerry, of a Catholic family, about 1666. He received his education at Montpellier and Paris, after which he went into Italy, and next to Poland, where he was well received at the court of John Sobieski, who appointed him his physician. He came to England in 1695, and read lectures, first at Oxford, and next in London, where he became a member of the Royal Society. He died, it is said, in the profession of Protestant principles, in Oct., 1698. Dr. Connor published 'Dissertationes Medico-Physicæ;' 'Evangelium Medicæ,' in which he attempts to account for the miracles on natural principles; and 'The History of Poland,' 2 vols.

CONNOR, BONAVENTURE, an Irish Franciscan friar, who taught philosophy at Genoa, having previously been jubilate lecturer of the Irish convent at Prague. He was author of 'Quintuplex Pentekadecybris Mariana,' 8vo., Trent, 1658.

CONON, an Athenian general, who died about 393 B.C.

CONRAD I., count of Franconia, was elected king of Germany 912, and died 23 Dec., 918.

CONRAD II. was elected king of Germany 1024; crowned emperor 1027; died 4 June, 1039.

CONSTABLE.

CONRAD III., emperor of Germany, died 15 Feb., 1152.

CONRAD IV. was elected emperor 1250, and died 21 May, 1254.

CONRADIN, son of Conrad IV., was three years old when his father died. His uncle Manfred became his regent at Naples, but Urban IV. bestowed the crown on Charles of Anjou, who defeated his rival and caused him to be beheaded 1268.

CONRART, VALENTIN, founder of the French Academy, born at Paris 1603; died 23 Sept., 1675. He printed 'Lettres familières à M. Félibien,' &c.

CONKING, HERMANN, a German historian and lawyer, born 9 Nov., 1606; died 12 Dec., 1681.

CONRY, FLORENCE, an Irish Catholic prelate; born in Connaught in or about 1561. After receiving a suitable education in Spain and the Netherlands he became a Franciscan friar of the strict observance, and was for some time provincial of his order in Ireland. In or about 1609 he was consecrated archbishop of Tuam. At the request of Pope Clement VIII. he again visited his native country, for the purpose of assisting by his counsels the army which King Philip II. had sent to Ireland, but the rebellion being suppressed he was proscribed by the English. He thereupon left the country; and died at Madrid 18 Nov., 1629, æt. 69. Archbishop Conry, who was exceedingly well acquainted with the writings of St. Augustine, wrote 'De S. Augustini Sensu circa B. Mariæ Conceptionem,' Antwerp, 1619; 'Tractatus de statu Parvulorum sine Baptismo decedentium ex hac vita, juxta sensum B. Augustini;' 'The Mirror of a Christian Life,' being a catechism in the Irish language, printed at Louvain 1626; 'Peregrinus Jerichontinus. Hoc est, de naturâ humanâ feliciter institutâ, infeliciter lapsâ, miserabiliter vulneratâ, misericorditer restauratâ,' 1641; 'Compendium Doctrinæ S. Augustini circa Gratiam,' 1644; and 'De Flagellis Justorum juxta Mentem S. Augustini,' 1644.

CONSALVI, HERCULES, a cardinal, and the principal minister of Pope Pius VII., was born at Rome 8 June, 1757, and died 24 Jan., 1824. It was this cardinal who concluded the concordat with France in 1801.

CONSTABLE, ARCHIBALD, a well-known publisher of Edinburgh and London, born 24 Feb., 1775; died 21 July, 1827.

CONSTABLE, HENRY, an English poet, was probably a native of Yorkshire. He was born about 1555, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1579). He was always a member of the Catholic Church, a circumstance which led to his being suspected, in 1595, of being a party to certain disloyal proceedings against the government of Queen Elizabeth, by opening a treasonable correspondence with France, and he was obliged to avoid the consequences of ulterior proceedings by leaving the country. Having visited France, Poland, Italy, and the Low Countries, he came back to England in 1601 or 1602, but being discovered was committed to the Tower, from which he did not obtain his release till about the close of the year 1604. He then returned to the Continent, and died in exile 1614. His Sonnets and other poetical pieces have been several times printed, but the most complete edition appeared in 1859 under the following title:—'Diana: the Sonnets and other Poems of Henry Constable, B.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge; now first collected and edited, with some account of the author, by William Carew Hazlitt, of the Inner Temple, Esq. To which are added a few notes and illustrations by the late Thomas Park, London, 8vo. It may be mentioned that the researches of Mr. Hazlitt had not enabled him to ascertain the date of Constable's death, which is correctly given above.

CONSTABLE, JOHN, a native of London, studied at Oxford, where he graduated M.A. 1515. He wrote 'Quærela Veritatis;' and 'Epigrammata,' 4to., London, 1520.

CONSTABLE, JOHN, an English Jesuit, died 7 April (N.S.), 1743, at Swynerton, Staffordshire, where he had long resided as chaplain. He wrote Remarks on Father Le Conrayer's Book in Defence of the English Ordinations; The Doctrine of Antiquity concerning the Most Blessed Eucharist plainly shewed, 1736, in reply to Johnson's 'Unbibod Sacricie;' 'Deism and Christianity fairly considered,' 12mo., London, 1739; 'The Conversation of Gentlemen considered in most of the ways that make their mutual company agreeable or disagreeable, in six dialogues; and 'A Specimen of Amendments candidly proposed to the compiler of Church History,' &c. the Rev. Charles Dodd.—Obit.

CONSTABLE, JOHN, R.A., a painter and author of a work on English landscape, was born near Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1776, and died 1 April, 1837. His picture of 'The Corn Field,' in the National Gallery, is a good specimen of his abilities.

CONSTABLE, SIR THOMAS HUGH CLIFFORD, bart., of Tixall, Staffordshire, and Burton Constable, Yorkshire, died at Ghent 25 Feb., 1823, aged 60. He was a member of an old Catholic family, and received his education at Liege and Paris. His name was originally Clifford. Of his acquirements in the science of botany he has left a proof in the 'Flora Tixalliana,' appended to the 'Historical and Topographical Description of the Parish of Tixall,' composed by him (in conjunction with his brother, Mr. Arthur Clifford), and published at Paris 1817. He translated La Fontaine's Fables into English verse; made a new metrical version of the Psalms; and wrote a work in French, entitled, 'L'Evangile Médité.' From the last-named religious work he extracted forty meditations on the divinity and passion of Christ for the forty days of Lent. These he translated into English, and published at his own expense.

CONSTANT DE REBECQUE, DAVID, a learned Protestant divine, professor at Lausanne, was born there 26 March, 1638, and died 27 Feb., 1733. Besides notes on Florus, Cicero's Offices, and the Colloquies of Erasmus, he wrote 'Abrégé de Politique;' some curious dissertations on Lot's wife, the burning bush, and the brazen serpent; a treatise on morality, &c.

CONSTANT DE REBECQUE, SAMUEL, grandson of the preceding, became a lieutenant-general in the Dutch service, but afterwards applied himself to literature, and composed 'Camille, ou lettres de deux filles de ce siècle,' and other works. Born 1729; died 1800. His son, Henri Benjamin, who was born at Lausanne 1767, went to Paris on the breaking out of the French Revolution, and acted a conspicuous part in France as a politician, orator, and writer, until his death on 8 Dec., 1830.

CONSTANTIN, ANTOINE, a physician of Aix, in Provence, died 1616.

CONSTANTIN, ROBERT, a physician, professor of the belles lettres at Caen, published a Greek-

CONSTANTINE.

Latin Lexicon, and editions of Theophrastus, Dioscorides, Celsus, and Socrates. Died 27 Dec., 1605.

CONSTANTINE, the Great, emperor of Rome, was the son of Constantius Chlorus, by his wife Helena, and born about the year 272. On the death of his father at York, in 306, he was proclaimed by the army; soon after which he married Fausta, the daughter of Maximian; notwithstanding which, Maximian endeavoured to depose him, but failed in the attempt, and destroyed himself. After this Maxentius, the son of Maximian, declared war against Constantine, who defeated him, and reduced Italy. It was in this contest that he saw, as he said himself, a luminous cross in the heavens, which induced him to embrace Christianity. After the death of Maxentius he entered Rome in triumph, and received from the senate the rank of Augustus, in conjunction with Licinius and Maximin, the former of whom married his sister, Constantia. A war shortly after broke out between Licinius and Maximin, in which the latter was slain. Licinius then formed a conspiracy against Constantine; who, after one or two battles, put his competitor to death. Having thus obtained full possession of the empire Constantine formed the design of founding a new seat of government, for which purpose he chose Byzantium, which from thence took the name of Constantinople. He also evinced his regard for the religion which he had adopted by building numerous churches, and taking a journey to Jerusalem. Though he gave some offence to the orthodox by consenting to the banishment of Athanasius, he strictly adhered to the confession of Nice, and refused to re-establish Arius. He died 22 May, 337.

CONSTANTINE II., son of Constantine the Great, inherited Gaul, Spain, and Britain; and died 340, aged 25.

CONSTANTINE III., emperor of the East from 668 till his death in 695.

CONSTANTINE IV., Copronymus, born 719; succeeded his father, Leo, the Isaurian, 741; died 775.

CONSTANTINE V., succeeded his father, Leo IV., 780. He was defeated by the Bulgarians, who took him and put out his eyes 792.

CONSTANTINE VII., Torphogogenitus, son of Leo the Wise, was born 905, came to the throne at the age of seven, and died 959. He wrote the Life of the Emperor Basilus the Macedonian, &c.

CONSTANTINE IX., son of Romanus, succeeded to the throne 976, and died 1028.

CONSTANTINE X., Monomachus, ascended the throne 1042; died 1054.

CONSTANTINE XI., Ducas, succeeded Isaac Comnenus 1059; died 1067. His reign was rendered unhappy by an invasion of the Scythians.

CONSTANTINE XIII., Paleologus, was born 1394, and succeeded his brother John 1448. He fell in the defence of Constantinople when that city was besieged and taken by the Turks in 1453. With him ended the Greek empire.

CONSTANTINE, a native of Syria, was elected Pope 708; and died 18 April, 715.

CONSTANTINE, the African, a physician of Carthage, said to have been the first who brought the Arabian and Greek physic into Italy, died 1087.

CONSTANTINE, GEORGE, a Protestant writer, born about 1504, who, after studying at Cambridge, adopted the new doctrines, and went to Antwerp. Returning to England, he became registrar of the diocese of St. David's about 1546, archdeacon of Carmarthen 1549, and archdeacon of Brecon 1559, in which year he died. He assisted Tyndal and Joye in the translation of the New Testament, and the compilation of various books against the Church of Rome.

CONSTANTIUS CHLORUS, obtained the title of Cæsar after his victories in Germany and Britain. On the abdication of Diocletian he was chosen the colleague of Galerius, and died at York 25 July, 306.

CONSTANTIUS, FLAVIUS JULIUS, the second son of Constantine the Great, was born 317; made Cæsar 323; elected emperor 337; died 3 Nov., 361.

CONTANT, PIERRE, a French architect, born 11 March, 1698; died 1 Oct., 1777.

CONTARINI, GASPAR, an Italian cardinal and statesman, author of several theological works, was born 1483, and died 1542.

CONTARINI, GIOVANNI, a Venetian painter, who died 1605, aged 56.

CONTARINI, VINCENT, professor of eloquence at Padua, wrote 'De Re Frumentaria'; 'De Militari Romanorum Stipendio,' &c. Born 1577; died 1617.

CONTE, JACOPINO DEL, a painter of Florence, who was patronized by Pope Paul III.; died 1598, aged 88.

CONTI, ANTHONY SCHINELLA, known as the Abbé, a learned priest, born 22 Jan., 1677, at Padua, where he died 6 April, 1749. He was fond of scientific investigation, and in 1715 visited London for the purpose of observing the solar eclipse. While here he formed an acquaintance with Newton, who had a great respect for him. He wrote some Italian poems, and four tragedies, the best of which is entitled 'Cæsar.'

CONTI, ARMAND DE BOURBON, PRINCE OF, brother of the great Condé, was born at Paris 1629, and died 21 Feb., 1666. He wrote Treatises on the Duties of the Great; two works against stage plays, &c.

CONTI, GIUSTO DE', an Italian poet, who died at Rimini 19 Nov., 1449.

CONTI, NOEL. See COMES, NATALIS.

CONTO PERTANA, JOSEPH, a Portuguese poet of great merit, died 1735.

CONWAY, ANNE VISCOUNTSSE, a lady of extraordinary erudition, was the daughter of Sir Henage Finch, recorder of London, and Speaker of the House of Commons. She was well acquainted with the learned languages, and her ruling passion was for treatises on the most abstruse theosophy and mysticism. After her marriage with Edward Viscount Conway she resided chiefly at Ragley Castle, Warwickshire, where she was assisted in her peculiar studies by Van Helmont the younger, her private physician. She embraced the tenets of the Quakers some years before her death, which happened 23 Feb., 1678-9. She was author of a strange work, first published in Latin, at Amsterdam, 1690, in a collection entitled 'Opuscula Philosophica.' An English translation, by 'I. C. Medicinæ Professor,' of her ladyship's treatise was published at London in 1692, under the following title: 'The Principles of the most Ancient and Modern Philosophy, concerning God, Christ, and the Creatures, viz. of Spirit and Matter in general; whereby may be resolved all those Problems or Difficulties, which neither by the School nor Common Modern Philosophy, nor by the Cartesian, Hobbesian, or Spinozian could be discussed.' A full account of Lady Conway will be found in a paper entitled 'A Forgotten Friend,' by Thompson Cooper, F.S.A., in 'Once a Week' (Feb., 1865) xii. 218.

CONWAY, DERWENT. See INGLIS, HENRY DAVID.

CONWAY, HENRY SEYMOUR, an English general, was the second son of Francis, first Lord Conway, and born in 1720. He entered early into the military service, and served with reputation in Germany during the Seven Years' War. He sat in the Irish and English House of Commons, and in 1765 became joint-secretary of state with the duke of Grafton, but resigned the office in 1768. In 1782 he was appointed commander-in-chief of the forces. He died 9 July, 1795. General Conway wrote several poetical pieces; one or two political pamphlets; and a comedy called 'False Appearances.' He appears to advantage in Walpole's Correspondence.

CONWAY, JOHN, or CONWY, STON, a Welsh poet, who flourished between 1570 and 1600. In MS. Addit. 14,920 is a Welsh translation by him of Leonard Wright's treatise entitled 'A Summons for Sleepers,' printed in 1589.

CONYBEARE, JOHN, an English prelate, born at Pinhoe, near Exeter, 31 Jan., 1691-2. He was sent to school at Tiverton, and thence removed to Exeter College, Oxford. In 1730 he was chosen rector of his college; and the same year he published an answer to Tindal's 'Christianity as old as the Creation,' which proved him to be a great champion of revelation, and an acute scholar. In 1733 he was appointed dean of Christ Church, and in 1750 consecrated bishop of Bristol. Died 13 July, 1755. He was author of two volumes of sermons, published in 1757; and of several single discourses and theological tracts, five of which were reprinted by Bishop Randolph, in his 'Enchiridion Theologicum.'

CONYBEARE, JOHN JOSIAS, an eminent divine and geologist, was son of Dr. William Conybeare, rector of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, and grandson of Dr. Conybeare, bishop of Bristol. He was born June, 1779, and received his education at Westminster School, from whence he was elected, in 1797, to a studentship of Christ Church, Oxford, where, two years afterwards, he gained the undergraduate's prize for a Latin poem on this subject, 'Religio Brahmæ.' He took the degree of M.A. 1804, at which time he was usher of Westminster School, but not liking the employment, he returned to college, and in 1807 was elected to the Anglo-Saxon professorship. In 1812 he was chosen professor of poetry, and in 1824 preached the Bampton Lecture. His favourite pursuits were chemistry and geology; and in the 'Annals of Philosophy' are several valuable communications by him on scientific subjects, particularly mineralogical observations made in a tour through Devon, Cornwall, and Wales. He has also some valuable papers in the 'Archæologia,' chiefly on the Saxon poetry. In 1803 he was promoted to the stall which his father had held in the cathedral of York; and in 1812 he obtained the college living of Bathaston, Somersetshire. He died at Blackheath 11 June, 1824.

CONYBEARE, WILLIAM DANIEL, a divine and geologist, brother of the preceding, was born 7 June, 1787, and educated at Westminster

School and Christ Church, Oxford. For many years he was rector of Sully, Glamorganshire, and in 1836 was presented to the vicarage of Axminster, Devonshire. In 1839 he delivered the Bampton Lecture, which was printed under the title of an 'Analytical Examination into the character, value, and just application of the Antenicæ Fathers.' He was made dean of Llandaff 1847; and died 12 Aug., 1857. Mr. Conybeare published some esteemed works on geology. His brother, the Rev. William John Conybeare, who also died in 1857, was joint author of 'The Life of St. Paul,' and a contributor to the 'Edinburgh Review,' in which appeared his celebrated essay on 'Church Parties.'

COOK, GEORGE, D.D., a Scotch divine, born Dec., 1772; died 13 May, 1845. His principal works are 'History of the Reformation in Scotland,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1811; and 'History of the Church of Scotland,' 3 vols. 8vo., 1815.

COOK, HENRY, an English artist, born 1642. He studied in Italy under Salvator Rosa, but on his return met with little encouragement as a painter. He was obliged afterwards to leave England on account of a murder which he committed on a person who courted one of his mistresses. When this affair was forgotten he came back, and was employed by William III. at Hampton Court. He also painted the choir of New College Chapel, Oxford, and the staircase at Ranelagh House. Died 18 Nov., 1700.

COOK, JAMES, a celebrated navigator, was the son of a day-labourer, and born at Marton, a village in Yorkshire, Nov. 3, 1728. At the age of thirteen he was put to a school, where he learnt writing and arithmetic, after which he was bound apprentice to a shopkeeper at Snaith; but on discovering an inclination for the sea, his master gave up his indentures, and he articulated himself for three years to a shipowner at Whitby. After serving out his time diligently, he entered in 1755 on board the 'Eagle' sixty-gun ship; and in 1759 he obtained a warrant as master of the 'Mercury,' in which ship he was present at the taking of Quebec, where he made a complete draft of the channel and river of St. Lawrence, which chart was published. Mr. Cook was next appointed to the 'Northumberland,' then employed in the recapture of Newfoundland; and there also he made a survey of the harbour and coasts. At the latter end of 1762 he returned to England, and married a young woman of Barking; but early in the next year he went again to Newfoundland, as surveyor, with Captain Graves, and he afterwards acted in the same capacity under Sir Hugh Palliser. While thus employed he made an observation of an eclipse of the sun, which he communicated to the Royal Society. It being determined to send out astronomers to observe the transit of Venus in some part of the South Sea, Mr. Cook was selected to command the 'Endeavour,' a ship taken up for that service, and accordingly he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant May 25, 1768. Our limits will not allow of giving the details of this interesting voyage, and therefore we shall content ourselves with stating that the transit was observed to great advantage at Otaheite, after which Lieutenant Cook explored the neighbouring islands, and then shaped his course for New Zealand, which he circumnavigated, and thus ascertained that it was not a continent. From thence he sailed to New Holland, or, as it is now called, New South

COOKE.

Wales, where he anchored in Botany Bay April 29, 1770, an epoch of great importance in the history of that part of the world. From hence he sailed to New Guinea, and next to Batavia, where the ship being retted, he returned to Europe, and arrived in the Downs June 12, 1771. For his services on this occasion Mr. Cook was promoted to the rank of commander, and an account of his voyage was soon after published by Dr. Hawkesworth. The interest excited hereby induced government to send Captain Cook on another voyage of discovery to the southern hemisphere; and he accordingly sailed with two ships, the 'Resolution,' commanded by himself, and the 'Adventure,' by Captain Furneaux, 9 April, 1772. After proceeding as far as 71° 10' of south latitude, amidst mountains of ice, and discovering some new islands, our voyagers returned to England 30 July, 1775. The 'Resolution' in this enterprise lost only one man out of her whole complement. Captain Cook was elected a member of the Royal Society, and afterwards the gold medal was voted to him by the same learned body. He was also appointed a post-captain, and promoted to a valuable situation in Greenwich Hospital. As the narrative of the former voyage had not given satisfaction, the history of the second was drawn almost wholly from the captain's journals, and digested by Dr. Douglas, afterwards bishop of Salisbury. But the labours of Cook were not to end here. In July, 1776, he sailed again, to decide the long-agitated question of a northern passage to the Pacific Ocean. In this voyage he had two ships, the 'Resolution' and the 'Discovery'; but, after sailing as high as 74° 44' N., the object was considered impracticable, and on 26 Nov., 1778, the ships arrived at the Sandwich Islands. Here, at first, they were well received; but at length the people of Owyhee stole one of the boats, to recover which Captain Cook went on shore, with the intention of getting into his possession the person of the king; but a crowd assembled, and the brave commander was felled to the ground with a club, after which he was despatched with a dagger, and his body carried off in triumph, and devoured. This melancholy event occurred 14 Feb., 1779.

COOK, JOHN, a barrister of Gray's Inn, conducted the proceedings at the trial of Charles I., having been appointed solicitor-general. He was executed as a traitor at Charing Cross 16 Oct., 1660. His book, entitled 'Monarchy no Creature of God's making,' first appeared in 1651, but was reprinted in 1794, a circumstance which led to his name being included in a list of English authors living in the year 1815!

COOK, JOHN, D.D., brother of George Cook, D.D., above mentioned, was professor of divinity at St. Andrew's, and died 1824. He was author of an 'Inquiry into the Authenticity of the Books of the New Testament,' 1821.

COOK, RICHARD, R.A., an English painter, died in London 11 March, 1857, æt. 74.

COOKE, ALEXANDER, B.D., a divine, was a native of Yorkshire, and received his education at Oxford. In 1614 he succeeded his brother Robert (mentioned below) in the vicarage of Leeds, and died 23 June, 1632. He wrote 'Pope Joan'; 'The Abatement of Popish Brags'; 'The Weather-cock of Rome's Religion'; 'More work for a Mass-Priest,' and other works of a similar kind. Says honest Anthony à Wood, 'He left behind him the character of a good and learned man, a man abounding in charity, and exemplary in his life and conversation, yet hated by the R. Catholics who lived near Leeds and in Yorkshire, and indeed by all elsewhere who had read his works.'

COOKE, SIR ANTHONY, was born at Gidea Hall, in Essex, 1504, and is generally believed to have been educated at the university of Cambridge, though there is evidence that his education was entirely private. His deep learning, various accomplishments, and decided success in the education of his own family, and of the son of Lord Seymour, caused him to be selected as preceptor or governor to Edward prince of Wales, afterwards Edward VI., who at his coronation created him a knight of the Bath. In 1553 he was committed to the Tower on suspicion of being implicated in the disastrous movement on behalf of Lady Jane Grey; but he succeeded in obtaining his release, and thereupon repaired to Strasburg. In the reign of Elizabeth he returned to England, obtained a seat in parliament, and served on various royal commissions. He died 11 June, 1576. Sir Anthony wrote many works, nearly all of which have perished; and he was the father of five daughters, who were esteemed the most learned women in Europe, viz., Mildred, second wife of Lord Burghley and mother of the earl of Salisbury; Anne, second wife of Sir Nicholas Bacon, the lord-keeper, and mother of the illustrious Francis Bacon; Margaret, wife of Sir Ralph Rowlett; Elizabeth, wife successively of Sir Thomas Hoby and John Lord Russell; and Catharine, wife of Sir Henry Killigrew.

COOKE, BENJAMIN, Mus.D., an eminent English organist and contra-punctist. He was organist of Westminster Abbey and of St. Martin's in the Fields; and long presided at the Crown and Anchor Concert, which was originally established for the preservation of the best works of the old masters. Died Sept., 1793.

COOKE, EDWARD, son of Dr. Cooke, dean of Ely and provost of King's College, Cambridge, was educated at Eton and at King's College (B.A. 1777; M.A. 1785). During the duke of Rutland's administration he was appointed chief clerk of the Irish House of Commons. He afterwards became secretary for the military, and then for the civil department in Ireland, in which latter office he continued until the Union. He was much esteemed by Lord Castlereagh, whom he accompanied to the congress of Vienna. Died 19 March, 1820, æt. 65. He wrote 'Arguments for and against the Union between Great Britain and Ireland' (anon.), 8vo., Dublin, 1798.

COOKE, EDWARD, M.A., LL.B., was born at Wolverton, near Stony Stratford, 18 March, 1772. After passing through Exeter College, Oxford, he was collated in 1802 to the rectory of Haversham, Buckinghamshire, where he died 27 Feb., 1824. He was a diligent antiquary and a large contributor to many periodical publications. He wrote 'Some Account of Clifton Reynes, in the county of Buckingham,' and 'The History of Whaddon Chase.' Neither of these pieces has been printed.

COOKE, GEORGE, an eminent engraver, born in London 22 Jan., 1781; died at Barnes, Surrey, 27 Feb., 1834.

COOKE, GEORGE, a favourite actor at the Olympic Theatre, London, died 5 March, 1863.

COOKE, GEORGE FREDERICK, an English actor, born in London 1755; died at New York 26 Sept., 1812.

COOKE.

COOKE, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., F.S.A., of Gower Street, London, for many years physician to the London Hospital, died 1 Jan., 1838. He wrote 'A Treatise on Nervous Diseases,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1820-21.

COOKE, ROBERT, a herald, was bred at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his master of arts degree 1501. He was appointed Rose Blanch pursuivant extraordinary 25 Jan., 1561-2; Chester herald four days afterwards; Clarenceux king-at-arms 1566-7; and died 1592. He is author of An English Baronage; Heraldical Rudiments; and an Ordinary of Arms; all of which remain in MS. Cooke was a painter as well as a herald.

COOKE, ROBERT, a divine, born at or near Beeston, Yorkshire, about 1550, received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1590 he was presented to the vicarage of Leeds, where he died 1 Jan., 1614-5. He wrote 'Censura quorundam Scriptorum quæ sub nominibus Sanctorum, et veterum auctorum, à Pontificis passim in eorum Scriptis, sed potissimum in questionibus hodie controversis citari solent,' 4to., London, 1614, 1623.

COOKE, THOMAS, was born at Braintree, Essex, 1702 or 1703. In 1722 he settled in London, where he maintained himself chiefly by translations, the principal being a translation of Hesiod, with notes. He was also the author of some dramatic pieces and poems, for one of which Pope gave him a place in his Dunciad. Died 20 Dec., 1756.

COOKE, THOMAS, an actor, singer, and musical composer, born at Dublin about 1780; died 1848.

COOKE, THOMAS POTTER, an actor, born in Titchfield Street, Oxford Street, London, 23 April, 1788. Having entered the navy, he was present at Toulon, the battle of St. Vincent, and the bombardment of Copenhagen. His first appearance on the stage took place at the Royalty Theatre in 1804, and for many years he was recognized as the best theatrical type of the British seaman. He retired upon a competent fortune several years before his death, which occurred 4 April, 1864. The personality which he left was estimated at £25,000. He bequeathed to the Royal Dramatic College the sum of £2000 in perpetuity for a prize for the best drama on a nautical or national subject, to be called 'T. P. Cooke's Nautical or National Dramatic Prize,' to be competed for; and suggested that on the 23rd of April, the birthday of 'our immortal dramatic poet, Shakspeare, and which is my own natal day also,' a public holiday or treat should be given to the pensioners of the college; and that after the toast of the day, 'To the memory of the immortal bard, Shakspeare,' had been duly honoured, the terms and conditions of this gift should be read, and the appointment made of the successful candidate, as well as of the title of the piece and the theatre at which it was to be performed. For this purpose he bequeathed a further sum of £1000.

COOKE, WILLIAM, received his education at Pembroke College, Cambridge (B.A. 1729-30; M.A. 1733). He was presented to the vicarage of Enford, Wiltshire, 1733, and held it till his death, on 25 Feb., 1780. Mr. Cooke published 'An Enquiry into Patriarchal and Druidical Religion, Temples, &c., being the substance of some letters to Sir Hildebrand Jacob, Bart., wherein the Primæval Institution and Universality of the Christian Scheme is manifested: the Principles of the Patriarchs and Druids are laid open and shewn to correspond entirely with each other, and both with the Doctrines of Christianity; the earliest Antiquities of the British Islands are explained; and an Account given of the Sacred Structures of the Druids; particularly the stupendous Works of Abury, Stonehenge, &c., in Wiltshire, are minutely described,' 4to., London, 1754 and 1755. He also left a work, which was completed by his son, and published 1781, under the title of 'The Medallic History of Imperial Rome: from the first Triumvirate, under Pompey, Crassus, and Caesar, to the removal of the Imperial Seat by Constantine the Great. With several Medals and Coins, accurately copied and curiously engraven. To which is prefixed an Introduction, containing a General History of the Roman Medals,' 2 vols. 4to.

COOKE, WILLIAM, D.D., was born in London 15 Oct., 1711, and educated at Eton, from whence he was elected to King's College, Cambridge. He became head master of Eton School 1743; minister of Stourminster Marshall, Dorsetshire, 1745; rector of Denham, Buckinghamshire, 1748; rector of Stoke Newington 1767; provost of King's College, Cambridge, 1772; prebendary and dean of Ely 1780; died 21 Oct., 1797. He printed a visitation sermon 1750; and a 'Concio ad Clerum' 1781.

COOKE, WILLIAM, a poet and biographer, commonly called Conversation Cooke, was born in Cork, which city he left in 1766, and never returned to it. On his arrival in London he became a student of the Middle Temple, and in due course was called to the bar; but after going one or two circuits he quitted the law and devoted himself to literature. His first performance was a poem entitled 'The Art of Living in London,' his next a prose essay called 'Elements of Dramatic Criticism.' He subsequently wrote the life of Macklin, with a history of the stage; also the memoirs of Foote, with whom he had been intimate. His chief poetical work is a piece entitled 'Conversation.' Died 13 April, 1814.

COOKE, WILLIAM, son of Dr. Cooke, provost of King's College, Cambridge, was educated at Eton and at King's College (B.A. 1770; M.A. 1773). He was Greek professor at Cambridge 1780-93; and rector of Hemstead with Lessingham, Norfolk, from 1785 till his death on 3 May, 1824. He published an edition of 'Aristoteles de Re Poetica cum versione et notis,' 1785, appended to which is an admirable Greek version of Gray's Elegy. In his 'Dissertation on the Revelation of St. John,' 1789, he compares the Apocalypse with the Œdipus Tyrannus of Sophocles, and the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer; but when the subsequent derangement of his mind is considered, he will be regarded with pity and compassion rather than with ridicule or censure.

COOKE, WILLIAM, an eminent lawyer, was a native of Calcutta, where his father was a member of the council. At an early age he was brought to this country, and after a preliminary training at Harrow School was admitted a member of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, but took no degree. He was called to the bar by the society of Lincoln's Inn. At an early part of his career he devoted himself to the study of the bankruptcy laws, and at length obtained in that department a most extensive practice. Lord Chancellor Eldon selected him as one of the commissioners of bankruptcy, and in 1816 he was appointed a king's counsel. In 1825 he relinquished practice, and retired to his residence at Lenham, Kent, where he died Sept., 1832. His work on 'The Bankrupt Laws,' first published in 1785, was long esteemed the best book on the subject, but it has now become quite obsolete.

COOLEY, THOMAS, an Irish architect, who designed the Royal Exchange and other public buildings at Dublin. Born 1740; died 1784.

COOMBES, WILLIAM HENRY, D.D., a Catholic divine, was born at Meadgate, in the parish of Camerton, Somersetshire, 8 May, 1767, and educated at Douay. After being professor of divinity at Old Hall Green he accepted, in 1810, the mission of Shepton Mallett, which he held thirty-nine years. Died 15 Nov., 1850. Dr. Coombes, who was an accomplished Greek scholar, published 'Sacred Eloquence,' 8vo., London, 1798; 'Oration on Pius VI.,' 1800; 'Letters of certain French Bishops to Pius VI.,' 1800; Letters on Catholic affairs in 'Cobbett's Register,' 1804-6, under the signature of 'The British Observer'; 'Life of St. Francis de Sales,' 2 vols. 8vo., Shepton Mallett, 1812; 'Entertainments of St. Francis de Sales, with an addition of some Sacred Poems,' Taunton, 1814; 'Essence of Religious Controversy,' 1827; 'Letter to the Duke of Wellington on certain clauses in the Relief Bill,' 1829; and a 'Life of Jane Frances Chantal, from original records,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1830.—Observer.

COOPER. See SHAFTESBURY, EARL OF.

COOPER, SIR ASHLEY PASTON, a distinguished surgeon, the youngest son of Samuel Cooper, D.D., was born at Brooke, Norfolk, 23 Aug., 1768. In 1784 he left home for London, and was placed with Mr. Cline, surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and one of the most eminent surgeons of his day. Mr. Cline had the sagacity to discover the value of such a coadjutor, and appointed him, in the first place, demonstrator to his pupils, and soon after assigned him a share in his anatomical lectures. These lectures were the foundation of his fame and fortune. On commencing practice Mr. Cooper took up his residence in Jeffrey Square, St. Mary Axe, where he lived for six years. Thence he removed to New Broad Street, where he remained till 1815. He then went to New Street, Spring Gardens, and there continued to carry on a practice unexampled for extent and emolument in the annals of surgery. In 1822, the last year of his abode in London, he realized the largest sum ever received by a medical practitioner. In 1820 he was called in to attend George IV., at whose coronation he was created a baronet. In 1822 he was elected one of the court of examiners of the College of Surgeons, and the same year brought out his great work on 'Dislocations and Fractures.' In the interval between the years 1827 and 1838 Sir Ashley Cooper was elected president of the College of Surgeons, vice-president of the Royal Society, a member of the Royal Institute of France, and of the Royal Academy of Sciences. Died 12 Feb., 1841. 'Before his time,' says Dr. Forbes, 'operations were too often frightful alternatives or hazardous compromises; he always made them follow as it were in a natural course of treatment; he gave them a scientific character; and he moreover succeeded in a great degree in divesting them of their terrors by performing them unostentatiously, simply, confidently, and cheerfully.'—Nat. Cycl.; Rose.

COOPER, BRANSBY BLAKE, F.R.S., a surgeon of eminence, was eldest son of the Rev. Samuel Lovick Cooper, rector of Ingoldsthorpe and Barton, Norfolk. He was originally in the naval service, but at the suggestion of his uncle, Mr. (afterwards Sir) Astley Cooper, he turned his attention to the study of medicine, and acted for some time as an army surgeon. He was admitted a member of the Royal College of Surgeons 1823, having for three years previously been demonstrator of anatomy at St. Thomas's Hospital, and having already published a valuable treatise on the ligaments. Afterwards he became senior surgeon of Guy's Hospital. He made some valuable contributions to the advancement of surgical knowledge, especially in the Guy's Hospital 'Reports.' He was likewise the author of 'Surgical Essays,' and showed his veneration for the memory of Sir Astley Cooper by editing his biography. Mr. Cooper died suddenly at the Athenæum Club 18 Aug., 1853, aged 60.

COOPER, CHARLES HENRY, F.S.A., a biographer and antiquary, was born at Great Marlow, Buckinghamshire, 20 March, 1808, being descended from a Catholic family formerly settled at Bray, in the county of Berks. He received his education at a private school in Reading. In 1826 he fixed his residence at Cambridge, and in 1836 was elected coroner of the borough. Four years later he was admitted a solicitor, and in course of time he acquired an extensive practice; but though a lawyer of no ordinary attainments, and a public speaker of great power, his taste and inclination ultimately led him to devote almost the whole of his time to literary research, and especially the elucidation of the history of the university of Cambridge, and of the lives of the eminent men who received their education at that renowned seat of learning. In the year 1849, Mr. Cooper resigned the office of borough coroner on being elected to the town clerkship, which he retained till his death on 21 March, 1866. His earliest production, 'A New Guide to the University and Town of Cambridge,' was published anonymously in 1831. It is superior to its predecessors, particularly in the architectural descriptions of the various colleges and public buildings. 'The Annals of Cambridge' followed, in 4 vols. 8vo., 1842-52, containing a chronological history of the university and town from the earliest period to the year 1849. His next and most important work, entitled 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses,' was written in conjunction with his eldest son, Mr. Thompson Cooper, F.S.A. It is a companion work to the famous 'Athenæ Oxonienses' of Anthony à Wood, and contains biographical memoirs of the authors and other men of eminence who were educated at the university of Cambridge. Unfortunately this great undertaking was left incomplete at Mr. Cooper's death, only two volumes having been published (in 1858 and 1861), embracing the period between 1500 and 1609. A portion of the third volume was, however, printed, and a continuation of the work, by Mr. Thompson Cooper and Mr. John William Cooper, is in progress. Mr. C. H. Cooper's last publication was 'The Memorials of Cambridge,' 3 vols. 4to. and 8vo., 1858-1866, illustrated with photographs, steel plates, and woodcuts. He was a constant contributor to 'Notes and Queries,' 'The Gentlemen's Magazine,' and other antiquarian publications; and left an immense collection of MS. materials for a Biographical History of Great Britain and Ireland. An admirable bust of Mr. Cooper, executed by Mr. Timothy Butler, has been placed, by public subscription, in the Guildhall at Cambridge.

COOPER, ELIZABETH, the widow of an auctioneer in London, was author of 'The Rival Widows; or Fair Libertine, a comedy,' 8vo., London, 1735; and 'The Nobleman,' a comedy acted once only at the Haymarket about 1736. She is best known, however, as the editor of 'The Muses' Library; or a series of English Poetry, from the Saxons to the reign of King Charles II. Containing the lives and characters of all the known writers in that interval, the names of their patrons, complete episodes by way of specimen of the larger pieces, very near the entire works of some, and large quotations from others, being a general collection of almost all the old valuable poetry now extant, &c.,' 8vo. London, 1737; 1741.

COOPER, JAMES, a dissenting minister, who officiated at Middlewich, Cheshire, from Aug., 1837, till July, 1843. After living in retirement for a considerable time he died at Norwich, 27 May, 1863. He wrote a memoir of Joseph Hitchin; 'Heart Discipline,' 12mo., London, 1852; and 'Death-personification: the practice examined,' 8vo. London [1862].

COOPER, JAMES FENIMORE, an eminent American novelist, born 1789, was the son of Judge William Cooper, an English emigrant. He graduated at Yale 1805. He served for six years in the navy; visited Europe in 1826; and died at Cooperstown, in the state of New York, 14 Sept., 1851. He published various works of fiction: 'Precaution'; 'The Spy'; 'The Pioneers'; 'The Prairie'; 'The Last of the Mohicans'; 'The Pathfinder'; 'The Deer Slayer'; 'The Pilot'; 'The Red Rover'; 'The Water Witch'; 'The Two Admirals'; 'The Bravo'; 'The Heidenmaur'; 'The Headsman'; 'Homeward Bound'; 'The Home as found.' He wrote also a History of the Navy, and six volumes of Gleanings in Europe and Sketches of Switzerland.

COOPER, JOHN, or Giovanni Coperario, a celebrated performer on the viol da gamba, and composer for that instrument and the lute, was one of the musical preceptors to the children of King James I. Some of his vocal compositions are to be found in Sir William Leighton's collection, and there are several others extant in MS. In conjunction with Lanieri and another person he composed the songs in a masque written by Dr. Campion on the marriage of the earl of Somerset with Lady Frances Howard (the divorced countess of Essex), which was represented in the banquetting-house at Whitehall, on St. Stephen's night, 1614. One of the songs in this masque, beginning with the words 'Come ashore,' is inserted in Smith's 'Musica Antiqua,' as a specimen of the music of this composer. Coperario was the author also of 'Funeral Tears for the Death of the Right Honourable the Earl of Devonshire: figured in seven Songs, whereof six are set to the Wordes may be expressed by a treble Voyce alone, to the Lute and Base-Viol, or else that the meane Part may be added, if any shall effect more fullness of Parts. The seventh is made in forme of a Dialogue, and cannot be sung without two Voyces,' 1606; and 'Songs of Mourning and Bewailing the untimely Death of Prince Henry,' 1613. It has been supposed by some persons that Coperario was by birth an Italian. This, however, is an error arising from the circumstance of his having Italianized his plain and genuine name.

COOPER, JOHN GILBERT, a miscellaneous writer, born 1723. He came from a Nottinghamshire family, and was educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1745 he published 'The Power of Harmony,' a poem; and in 1749, without his name, the Life of Socrates, which brought upon him the lash of Warburton. In 1754 appeared his Letters on Taste; and when 'The World' was instituted by Dodsley, he contributed two papers. In 1758 he published Epistles to the Great, from Aristippus; and the year following a translation of Gresset's Ver Vert. Died 14 April, 1769.

COOPER, MILES, LL.D., a divine, was brought up at Queen's College, Oxford. He became president of the college at New York, which place he quitted on the breaking out of the disturbances, and settled at Edinburgh as minister of the episcopal chapel. He died 1 May, 1785. The doctor printed a volume of poems, in 1758, and some sermons.

COOPER, RICHARD, a painter and engraver, who flourished at Edinburgh 1730. There was another engraver of the same name, who was residing in London 1762.—Strutt.

COOPER, SAMUEL, a painter, born in London 1669. He was brought up under his uncle Hoskms, but derived most of his skill from studying the works of Vandyck, and that with such success as to be called Vandyck in miniature. The high prices of his works abundantly evinced their excellence. He drew Charles II. and most of his court; but one of his most famous pictures is that of Cromwell. Besides his miniatures he executed some large paintings, for which his widow, who was sister to Mr. Pope's mother, received a pension from the crown. Cooper died 5 May, 1672, and lies buried in the church of St. Pancras, where a monument was erected to his memory. He had an elder brother, Alexander, who also became a painter under his uncle Hoskins, and excelled in landscapes and portraits.

COOPER, SAMUEL, an American patriot and divine; minister at Boston; was born 28 March, 1725, and died 29 Dec., 1783.

COOPER, THOMAS, an English prelate, was born at Oxford, and educated in grammar learning in the school attached to the college of St. Mary Magdalen, being then a chorister of that house, of which, in 1539, he was elected probationer, and in the year following perpetual fellow. In the reign of Queen Mary he took a degree in medicine, and practised that faculty at Oxford, but on the accession of Elizabeth resumed the profession of divinity, and became a frequent preacher. About 1566 he was made dean of Chnst Church, and in 1569 dean of Gloucester. On 24 Feb., 1570-1, he was consecrated bishop of Lincoln, whence he was, in 1584, translated to Winchester. Died 20 April, 1594. Bishop Cooper was an industrious writer. His theological works are numerous. One of them, the exposition of the lessons from the Old Testament, was deemed by Archbishop Parker worthy of a place in every parish church. He is also well known by his controversy with Martin Marprelate; but his great work is the 'Thesaurus Linguae Romanæ et Britannicæ,' commonly called Cooper's Dictionary. The worthy bishop lived very unhappily with his wife, whose violent temper and levity of conduct caused many remarks in Oxford.

COPE.

It is related that on one occasion Mrs. Cooper took the manuscript of her husband's Dictionary, then about half finished, and threw it into the fire. He however, instead of being discouraged by this mischance, patiently began the work again.

COOPER, VINCENT, a learned English Dominican, died 21 April, 1690.

COOTE, Sir CHARLES, a military commander, was the son of Sir Charles Coote, created a baronet in Ireland in 1621. He was engaged actively against the rebels, and made governor of Dublin. Afterwards he became president of Connaught, under the authority of parliament. He contributed to the restoration of Charles II., by whom he was created earl of Monrath. He was also appointed one of the lords justices of Ireland, but did not long enjoy his honours, dying in December, 1661.

COOTE, CHARLES, D.C.L., an historian and biographer, was educated at St. Paul's school, London, and Pembroke College, Oxford, after which he was admitted an advocate at Doctors' Commons. He died 19 Nov., 1835, æt. 76. Among his works are 'Elements of the Grammar of the English Language,' 1788; 'History of England from the earliest dawn of record to the peace of 1783,' 9 vols., to which he afterwards added another, bringing down the history to 1802; 'History of the Union with Great Britain and Ireland;' 'Lives of English Civilians,' 1804, a very incomplete and unsatisfactory performance; and 'History of Ancient Europe.'

COOTE, EDMUND, M.A., of Peterhouse, Cambridge, was elected head master of the grammar school at Bury St. Edmund's 1596, and resigned that post in the following year. He is author of a scarce work entitled 'The English School-master. Teaching all his Scholars, or what age soever, the most easie, short, and perfect order of distinct Reading and true Writing our English-tongue, that hath ever yet been known or published by any,' 4to., London, 1627. The 37th edition was published in 1673.

COOTE, Sir EYRE, a descendant of Sir Charles Coote mentioned above, was born in Ireland 1726. He served against the rebels in 1745; and in 1754 went to the East Indies, where he distinguished himself at the siege of Pondicherry, for which the company of directors presented him with a valuable sword. In 1760 he was made commander-in-chief of the company's forces; but he quitted Madras at the end of the following year, and returned to England, where he was appointed governor of Fort St. George, and made knight of the Bath. In 1780 he went again to India as commander-in-chief, and in the following year defeated Hyder Aly with 10,000 men, though Hyder's forces amounted to 150,000. He died at Madras 26 April, 1783.

COOTE, RICHARD, earl of Bellamont. See BELLAMONT.

COPE, ALAN, D.D., an English Catholic divine, was born in London and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he was admitted a fellow 1549. Adhering to the Catholic religion he left England in the reign of Elizabeth and proceeded to Flanders, and thence to Rome, where he was appointed canon of St. Peter's. Died 1580. He was a man of great erudition. There go under his name 'Dialogi sex contra Summi Pontificatus, Monasticæ Vitæ Sanctorum, Sacrarum Imaginum Oppugnatores, et Pseudomartyres,' 4to., Antwerp, 1566, a work really written by Nicholas Harpsfield, but which, being put in Dr. Cope's hands, was published by him under his own name, lest danger should befall the author in prison. Dr. Cope himself wrote, 'Carmina Diversa'; 'Historia Evangelicæ Veritas; seu Singularia Vitæ Domini nostri Jesu Christi, eo Ordine, quo gesta fuerunt, recensita; et ipsis quatuor Evangelistarum Verbis contexta,' 4to., Louvain, 1572.

COPE, Sir ANTHONY, a native of Oxfordshire, studied at Oxford, and afterwards visited several of the courts on the Continent, where he was taken notice of on account of his extraordinary accomplishments. He published 'A godly Meditation vpon XX Psalmes of Daud,' 4to., London, 1547.

COPERNICUS, NICHOLAS, a famous astronomer, was born at Thorn, in Prussia, 19 Jan., 1473. At the age of twenty-three he went to Italy, where he improved himself in astronomy; and at Rome obtained the professorship of mathematics. On his return to his own country, after an absence of some years, he set about reforming the system of astronomy, the result of which was, the complete overthrow of the Ptolemaic hypothesis. His great work is entitled 'De Revolutionibus Orbium Cælestium;' and he died just after receiving a perfect copy of it 24 May, 1543. Copernicus was an ecclesiastic, and held some dignities in the cathedral of Thorn, and that of Frauenberg.

COPLAND, PATRICK, LL.D., professor of mathematics, and afterwards of natural philosophy at Aberdeen, was born Jan., 1749, and died to Nov., 1822. He was the first in the north of Scotland who gave a regular series of popular lectures on natural philosophy, divesting that science of its most abstruse calculations, and suiting the subject to the mechanic and operative tradesman.—Anderson.

COPLAND, ROBERT, an English printer, was originally servant to Wynkyn de Worde, and afterwards started business in Fleet Street as a printer, stationer, and bookseller. Several of the works which he printed were translated by himself from the French. He died about 1547.

COPLAND, WILLIAM, probably a relative of the preceding, also carried on the business of a printer in London. His death occurred between July, 1568, and July, 1569.

COPESTON, EDWARD, an English prelate, born at Offwell, Devonshire, 2 Feb., 1776. He was sent to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and afterwards was fellow and tutor of Oriel College. In 1802 he was chosen professor of poetry, an appointment which gave birth to his thirty-five 'Prælectiones,' published in 1813. He became dean of Chester 1826; bishop of Llandaff and dean of St. Paul's 1827; and died 14 Oct., 1849. He published numerous charges, sermons, and theological works; and was a contributor to the 'Quarterly Review.'

COPLEY, JOHN SINGLETON, a painter, was born at Boston, in America, 3 July, 1737, but came to England before the war, and spent the remainder of his life in this country. Died 9 Sept., 1815. He painted 'The Death of Chatham;' 'Siege of Gibraltar;' 'Major Pearson's death on the island of Jersey;' 'Charles I. in the House of Commons;' 'The Surrender of De Winter to Duncan;' and other pieces of an historic stamp. He was father of Lord Lyndhurst. See LYNDHURST.

COPPETTA. See BECCUTI.

COPPINGER, STEPHEN, an Irish Roman Catholic agitator, died 29 May, 1858.

COQ, LE. See LECOQ.

COQUEREL, ATHANASE LAURENT CHARLES, a French Protestant minister, born 1795. For twelve years he ministered and preached in the Calvinistic churches of Utrecht, Amsterdam, and Leyden. He returned to France 1830, and became a member of the Protestant consistory three years later. In consequence of the liberal opinions which he put forward he was accused by the more rigid members of the French Protestant church of abandoning the doctrines of exclusive faith and predestination. The result was a split among the members of the body, M. Coquerel being the leader of what may be termed the liberal section. After the Revolution of 1848 he was elected member of the French Assembly for the department of the Seine. His votes and eloquence, which was great, were always at the service of the republic, but after the coup d'état he retired from politics. M. Coquerel was author of several works; the first two, 'Le Protestant,' and 'Le Libre Examen,' appeared in 1831 and 1834. He also published eight volumes of sermons, from 1819 to 1852; 'Sacred Biography;' 'Analysis of the Bible;' 'Answer to Strauss's Life of Jesus;' 'Modern Orthodoxy;' and 'Experimental Christianity.' He died at Paris in Jan., 1868.

COQUES, GONZALO, a Flemish painter of portraits and conversations, born at Antwerp 1618; died 18 April, 1684.

CORAM, THOMAS, an English philanthropist, was born about 1668, and bred to the sea, in the merchant service. Being by his profession led to observe many children who were abandoned by their parents, he conceived the plan of an asylum for the reception of such poor outcasts. Accordingly he projected the Foundling Hospital, in bringing which to effect he laboured seventeen years, and thereby impoverished himself. He also procured a bounty upon naval stores imported from our colonies, and set on foot a scheme for the education of Indian girls in America. At the close of his life a subscription was entered into for his support. He died 29 March, 1751, and was buried in the chapel of the hospital.

CORAS, JACQUES DE, a French poet, born about 1630; died 1677.

CORAS, JEAN DE, a lawyer of Toulouse, born 1513. Being a Protestant he was murdered 1573, after the massacre of St. Bartholomew became known at Toulouse.

CORBET, JOHN, a nonconformist divine, born at Gloucester 1620, and educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, after which he settled in his native place till he obtained the living of Bramshot, Hampshire, from which he was ejected in 1662. Died 26 Dec., 1680. His works are, 'Historical Relation of the Military Government of Gloucester, from the beginning of the Civil War to the removal of Col. Massie to the command of the western forces,' 1645; 'The Interest of England in the matter of Religion;' and 'Self-employment in secret.' He was also concerned in compiling the first volume of Rushworth's 'Historical Collections.'

CORBET, MILES, a gentleman of an ancient family in Norfolk, who in the time of the Commonwealth had the principal management of the office of sequestration against the loyalists. In Aug., 1652, he was appointed one of the commissioners to manage the affairs of Ireland, and remained in this situation till Jan., 1659-60. At the Restoration he made his escape to the Continent, and settled at Hanau; but having imprudently quitted this secure asylum, on a short visit to some friends in Holland, he was apprehended, sent over to England, convicted of treason, and executed at Tyburn 19 April, 1662.

CORBET, RICHARD, a poet and prelate, born at Ewell, Surrey, 1582. He was educated at Westminster School, and next at Christ Church, Oxford, where he became distinguished by his wit. In 1605 he took his master's degree and entered into orders. In 1612 he delivered an oration on the death of Henry prince of Wales, and the year following another on Sir Thomas Bodley. In 1618 he went to France and wrote a humorous account of his journey. King James made him one of his chaplains, and in 1627 gave him the deanery of Christ Church; at which time he was D.D., vicar of Cassington, and a prebendary of Salisbury. In 1629 he was promoted to the see of Oxford, and in 1632 was translated to Norwich. Died 28 July, 1635. The best edition of his Poems is that by Octavius Gilchrist, 8vo., London, 1807.

CORBIE, AMBROSE, an English Jesuit, was born near Durham 7 Dec., 1604, and was confessor to the English College at Rome in 1649. He was the author of 'Certamen Triplex,' 12mo., Antwerp, 1645, containing an account of the martyrdom of his brethren Ralph Corbie, T. Holland, and Henry Morse.

CORBIE, RALPH, an English Jesuit, who was executed at London on account of his sacerdotal character 2 Sept., 1644.

CORBOULD, RICHARD, an English engraver, died at Highgate 26 July, 1831, aged 75.—MS. Whitby.

CORDARA, JULIUS CESAR, an Italian Jesuit, born 16 Dec., 1704; died 6 March, 1784. He was a most elegant writer in Latin and Italian, prose and verse. His works comprise a history of Charles Stuart the Pretender, and of his expedition to Scotland; a history of the Germanic College; funeral orations; panegyrics; and poems. Cordara also wrote the sixth volume of the History of the Jesuits, 1750, and left a MS. continuation of it to the suppression of the society.

CORDAY D'ARMANS, MARIE ANNE CHARLOTTE, a native of St. Saturnin, in Normandy. She was brought up at Caen, where her accomplishments were seen and admired by Belsunce, the major of a regiment quartered in the town. The murder of this favourite, by assassins, excited the vengeance of the youthful heroine, and when she heard that he was branded with the name of conspirator, by Marat, she hastened to Paris, determined to sacrifice to her resentment the man who had so shamefully abused the object of her affections, and had defended the condemnation of the deputies of merit and virtue in the convention. She was refused admittance at the house of Marat; but she obtained it by writing a letter, in which she informed him that she wished to disclose secrets of importance; and while the tyrant was engaged in conversation with her, she stabbed him to the heart, and he fell at her feet. Glorifying in the deed, she refused to fly, and was dragged to the revolutionary tribunal, where she heard the sentence of condemnation with composure. Charlotte suffered 17 July, 1793. She was 24 years and 9 months old; and was, it is said, descended by the female line from Peter Corneille.

CORIOLANUS.

CORDELL, SIR WILLIAM, an English lawyer, born at Edmonton, Middlesex, and educated at Cambridge. He was appointed master of the Rolls 1557; was a privy councillor to Queen Mary; and Speaker of the House of Commons in the parliament which met 1557-8. Queen Elizabeth continued him in his office of master of the Rolls, and employed him in divers public affairs. Died 17 May, 1581.

CORDEMOY, GÉRAUD DE, a French historian and philosopher, who died 8 Oct., 1684. His son, Louis Géraud (born 7 Dec., 1651; died 7 Feb., 1722), became a priest and published several pieces of controversy, including an Account of the Devil's Conference with Luther.

CORDERIUS, or CORDIER, MATHURIN, a famous French schoolmaster, who died at Geneva 8 Sept., 1564, aged 85. The most celebrated of his school books is the 'Colloquia,' which has been printed many hundreds of times.

CORDES, or CORDERUS, BALTHASAR, a Jesuit, born at Antwerp 1592; divinity professor at Vienna; died 24 June, 1650. He published 'Expositiones Patrum Græcorum in Psalmos,' &c.

CORDES, or CORDERIUS, JOHN, canon of Limoges, was born there 1570, and died 1642. He edited the works of Hincmar and George Cassander; and published several translations.

CORDNER, CHARLES, an episcopalian divine at Banff, in Scotland, wrote 'Antiquities and Secularity of the North of Scotland, in a series of letters to Thomas Pennant, Esq.,' 4to., London, 1780; 'Remarkable Ruins and Romantic Prospects in the North of Scotland, accompanied with singular subjects of Natural History, and Ancient Monuments, hitherto undelineated and undescribed,' 2 vols. 4to., London, 1786-95; and some occasional sermons. He appears to have been living in 1798.

CORDNER, JAMES, M.A., a minister of the Scotch episcopal church, was most likely a relative of the preceding. He published 'Travels in Ceylon,' 1807; and died about 1832.

CORDUS, EURICIUS, a physician, botanist, and poet, was a native of Hesse, and died at Bremen 24 Dec., 1538, aged about 63. His son Valerius, also a famous writer on botany and medicine, was born 18 Feb., 1515, and died 25 Sept., 1544.

CORELLI, ARCANGELO, an Italian violinist and musical composer, born Feb., 1653; died 18 Jan., 1713.

CORENZIO, BELISARIO, a painter, born in Greece about 1558. He studied under Tintoretto; settled in Naples; and died 1643.

CORFE, JOSEPH, organist of Salisbury Cathedral, was born in that city 1740, and died 1820. His compositions are chiefly for the church, and his morning and evening service, with many excellent anthems, are in constant use in the cathedral of Salisbury. His son, Arthur Thomas Corfe, was, like his father, organist at Salisbury and a composer. He died 28 Jan., 1863.

CORILLA, MARIA MADELANA FERNANDEZ, an Italian improvisatrice of extraordinary ability, born 1740; died 8 Nov., 1800.

CORINNA, a Greek poetess, called the Lyric Mus., flourished about 490 B.C. Some fragments of her works are preserved.

CORIO, BERNARDINE, a native of Milan, of which country he wrote the history. Born 1459; died 1519.

CORIOLANUS, CAIUS MARCIUS, an illustrious

Roman, who obtained that name from his valour at Corio's, where, from a private soldier, he was raised to military honour. When Gelo, king of Sicily, sent a quantity of grain to Rome as a present, Coriolanus advised that it should be sold and not distributed gratis, for which he was banished. He then went to Tullus, king of the Volsci, the enemy of the Romans, and became the general of his army. Upon his march he was met by several ambassadors from Rome, who offered him liberal terms if he would return to his country; but he was inexorable, till his mother and wife, attended by a number of matrons, came to him in deep mourning. Their tears and entreaties prevailed, and he returned back to Tullus, who caused him to be murdered B.C. 488.

CORK, RICHARD BOYLE, fourth earl of. See BURLINGTON.

CORK AND ORRERY, HAMILTON BOYLE, EARL OF, second son of John earl of Orrery, was born Feb., 1730, and died 17 Jan., 1764. He was author of two papers (Nos. 60 and 170) in the 'World.'

CORK AND ORRERY, JOHN BOYLE, EARL OF, was the only son of Charles Boyle earl of Orrery, by Lady Elizabeth Cecil, daughter of John earl of Exeter. He was born 2 Jan., 1706-7, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford. In 1728 he married the daughter of the earl of Orkney, but lost his lady in 1732, while residing at Cork; whereupon he returned to England, and settled at Marston, Somersetshire. In 1738 he married the only daughter of John Hamilton, Esq., of Caledon, in the county of Tyrone. The next year he published his great-grandfather's dramatic works, and in 1742 the State Letters of the same nobleman. In 1751 appeared his translation of Pliny's Letters, which were followed by his 'Remarks on the Life and Writings of Swift.' In 1753 he succeeded to the title of earl of Cork, and about this time he assisted Moore in his paper called the 'World;' and he afterwards contributed to the 'Connoisseur.' In 1754 he went to Italy, and while at Florence presented Johnson's Dictionary to the Accademia della Crusca. The next year he returned to England, and in 1758 sustained a great loss in the death of his countess; but, taking refuge from grief in his study, he published in the following year the 'Memoirs of the Life of Robert Cary, earl of Monmouth,' from the original MS. of that nobleman. The same year his domestic troubles were increased by the death of his eldest son. On 16 November, 1762, his lordship died at Marston House. In 1774 appeared his 'Letters from Italy,' with his life by Mr. Duncombe.

CORK, RICHARD BOYLE, EARL OF, was the youngest son of Robert Boyle, of Herefordshire, by Joan, eldest daughter of Robert Naylor, of Canterbury, in which city he was born 3 Oct., 1566. He was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and then entered the Middle Temple. Afterwards he became clerk to Sir Richard Manwood, chief baron of the Exchequer, but left his employ in 1588 and went to Dublin. In 1595 he married a lady of fortune, who left him a widower in 1599, and bequeathed to him her estate. He now made some considerable purchases of lands, which exciting the envy of other proprietors, particularly Sir Henry Wallop, treasurer of Ireland, a conspiracy was hatched against Mr. Boyle, who being apprised of it, returned to England to clear himself before the queen. On his arrival, however, it appeared that his enemies were beforehand with him, and he was thrown into prison. At length he obtained a hearing, and pleaded his cause so effectually that the queen sent him back to Ireland with a special recommendation to Sir George Carew, then lord-president of Munster, who admitted him into his confidence, and consulted him on all occasions. In December, 1601, he was despatched to court with the news of the victory gained over the Irish rebels and their Spanish auxiliaries, which journey he accomplished in a space of time that is almost incredible. On his return to Ireland he assisted at the siege of Donboy, soon after which he married the daughter of Sir Geoffrey Fenton, by whom he had fifteen children. On his wedding-day he received the honour of knighthood. In 1612 he was sworn a privy councillor of the kingdom of Ireland; in 1616 created Lord Boyle; and in 1620 made earl of Cork. In 1629 he was appointed one of the lords-justices of Ireland, and two years afterwards constituted lord high treasurer of that kingdom, at which time, however, it was his misfortune to have some differences with the earl of Strafford, then lord-deputy. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he raised two troops of horse, which he put under the command of his sons, Lord Kinalmeaky and Lord Broghill, and in the battle which the English gained at Liscarrow four of his sons were engaged, the eldest of whom was slain. The earl himself died 15 Sept., 1643.

CORKER, JAMES, or MAURUS, a monk of the order of St. Benedict, was a native of Yorkshire. He was tried for complicity in Oates's plot, but was found not guilty; notwithstanding which he was sentenced to death in consequence of his sacerdotal character. On the accession of James II. he was restored to liberty, and was even received by his majesty at court as resident ambassador of the elector of Cologne, Ferdinand of Bavaria, who also possessed the bishoprics of Liege, Munster, and Hildesheim. This appointment enabled him to erect a convent at Clerkenwell, which, however, was destroyed by the populace on the landing of William of Orange. Forced to seek refuge on the Continent, Father Corker was declared the second president elect of the English Benedictine congregation holden at Paris, 1689, and two years later was voted abbat of Lambspring, in Germany. In 1696 he resigned his dignity, and returned to England, where he closed his life at Paddington, near London, 22 Dec., 1715. He was author of a valuable anonymous tract, entitled 'Roman Catholic Principles in reference to God and the King,' 1080, reprinted under the editorial care of the Rev. John Kirk, 1815; A sermon on the Blessed Eucharist, 12mo., London, 1695; and Memoirs of Lord Stafford.—Oliver; Dodd.

CORMACK, JOHN, D.D., minister of Stow, in the county of Edinburgh, was born 1776, and died suddenly in his own church 20 Dec., 1840. He wrote Lives of the Ancient Philosophers, from the French of Fénelon, 2 vols.; Account of the Abolishment of Female Infanticide in Guzerat; Barzillai the Gileadite, a work abounding in important and most useful considerations on Old Age; and Illustrations of Faith.—Anderson.

CORMONTAIGNE, LOUIS DE, a French military engineer, born about 1606; died 20 Oct., 1752. He was author of several works on fortification.

CORNARIUS, JOHN, a German physician and medical writer, born 1500; died 16 March, 1558.

CORNARO.

CORNARO, LOUIS, a noble Venetian, who rendered himself remarkable by his longevity. He was born 1467, and in his youth lived freely, which bringing on a complication of disorders, he formed the resolution of adhering to a strict regimen in diet, and thereby restored his constitution. At an advanced age he wrote his book on Temperance and Longevity, which has been translated into most languages. He died at Padua 26 April, 1565.

CORNARÒ PISCOPIA, LUCRETIA HELENA, a Venetian lady of great erudition, born 5 June, 1646; died 26 July, 1684. Her works, accompanied by a biographical memoir, were published by Father Bacchini.

CORNAZZANO, ANTONIO, an Italian poet and miscellaneous writer, born about 1431; died about 1500.

CORNEILLE, MICHEL, a French painter and engraver, born 1601; died 1664.

CORNEILLE, MICHEL, a French painter, son of the preceding, was born at Paris 1642, and died 1708. His brother, Jean Baptiste (born 1646; died 1695), was also a good painter and a member of the Academy.

CORNEILLE, PIERRE, a celebrated French poet, born at Rouen 6 June, 1665. He was brought up to the bar, which he abandoned as not congenial to his genius. His first play was Mélite, a comedy, which originated in an affair of gallantry; but so great was its popularity that Corneille was encouraged to contribute more liberally to the public amusement. His next piece was Medea, a tragedy; and, after many others, appeared the Cid, in 1637, his chef-d'œuvre, a tragedy, which drew against him the obloquy of rival wits and unsuccessful poets, among whom was even Richelieu himself, though he had granted a pension to the author. Corneille died 1 Oct., 1684. He was a man of great merit in private life, liberal, humane, and devout, and rather of a melancholy turn of mind. His poetical works are among the sublimest effusions of the French muse.

CORNEILLE, THOMAS, brother of Pierre, and also a poet, was born 20 Aug., 1625. He wrote many plays, which were well received; a Dictionary of Arts, &c. Died 8 Dec., 1709.

CORNELISZ, LUCAS, an eminent artist, who came from Leyden to England in the reign of Henry VIII., and was appointed principal painter to that monarch. Born 1493; died 1552.

CORNELIUS (Sr.), a Pope, illustrious for his learning and virtue. He succeeded St. Fabianus 2 June, 250, and died 14 Sept., 252.

CORNELIUS, JOHN, a Jesuit, born at Bodmin, in Cornwall, and educated at Oxford. He became chaplain in the family of Sir John Arundel, but being apprehended, was hanged, drawn and quartered, together with a gentleman named Bosgrave, 24 July, 1594.

CORNELIUS À LAPIDE. See LAPIDE.

CORNELIUS NEPOS. See NEPOS.

CORNER, GEORGE RICHARD, F.S.A., a solicitor of Southwark, who was a skilful antiquary and contributed numerous papers to the 'Archæologia,' the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' 'Notes and Queries,' and other similar publications. He died 31 Oct., 1803, aged 62.

CORNETO, ADRIAN. See ADRIAN DE CASTELLO.

CORNHERT. See KOORNHERT.

CORNISH, Alderman HENRY, who was sheriff of

CORNWALLIS.

London in 1680, and had then been very active in the discovery of the pretended 'Popish Plot,' was apprehended in the reign of James II., and accused of conspiring, with Lord Russell, against Charles II. He was tried, condemned and executed within a week, 23 Oct. 1685. The perjury of the witnesses against him appeared so flagrant after his death, that in 1688 they were committed to prison by order of Parliament, and his estate was restored to his relations.

CORNWALLIS, CAROLINE FRANCES, the authoress of 'Small Books on Great Subjects,' died January, 1858. A selection from her Letters was published in 1864.

CORNWALLIS, Sir CHARLES, was the second son of Sir Thomas Cornwallis, and a man of distinguished abilities. He was sent by James I. ambassador to Spain, and was afterwards appointed treasurer to Henry, prince of Wales, whose life he wrote with elegance. He died at Harborne, Staffordshire, 21 Dec., 1629. His son, Sir William Cornwallis the younger, was the author of a small volume of 'Essays,' printed in 1632. He died before his father.

CORNWALLIS, CHARLES, Marquis Cornwallis, eldest son of Charles, the first earl, was born 31 Dec., 1738, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed to St. John's College, Cambridge. He entered early upon the military life, and served with the marquis of Granby in Germany. In 1761 he succeeded to the family honours, and in 1765 was appointed aide-de-camp to the king. In the American war he distinguished himself at the battle of Brandywine and the siege of Charleston, after which he was left in the command of South Carolina; but in 1781 his plan of invading Virginia failed, and his lordship with his whole army made prisoners. This brought on a controversy between him and Sir Henry Clinton, in which each party charged the other with being the cause of this discomfiture. Soon after the return of Lord Cornwallis, he was removed from the post of governor of the Tower, but in 1784 he was re-appointed, and held the place till his death. In 1786 he went to India as governor-general and commander-in-chief, and in 1792 he defeated Tippon Saib, who gave up his two sons as hostages for his observance of the treaty. For his success in this war, Lord Cornwallis, on his return to England, was made a marquis, and appointed master-general of the ordnance. In 1798 he was sent to Ireland as lord-lieutenant, and while there succeeded in suppressing the rebellion. In 1801 he was sent to France, where he signed the treaty of Amiens. Three years afterwards he went out again to India, and died at Chazepore, in the province of Benares, 5 Oct., 1805.

CORNWALLIS, FREDERICK, an English prelate, was seventh son of the fourth Lord Cornwallis. He was born 22 Feb., 1713, and educated at Eton and Christ's College, Cambridge. On 18 Feb., 1749-50, he was consecrated bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, and was translated to the archiepiscopal see of Canterbury 1768. Died 19 March, 1783.

CORNWALLIS, JANE, Lady, was born in or about 1584, and married in 1608 Sir William Cornwallis, of Brome, Suffolk, after whose decease she became the wife of Sir Nathaniel Bacon. Died 8 May, 1659. Her Private Correspondence between the years 1613 and 1644 was published at London, 8vo., 1842.

CORNWALLIS, THOMAS, brother of Lord Cornwallis, was the projector and first commissioner of State lotteries in England. Died 29 Dec., 1731.

CORONELLI, MARK VINCENT, a Venetian geographer, made cosmographer to the French king 1685. He published 400 geographical charts. Born about 1650; died Dec., 1718.

CORR, ERIN, a clever Belgian engraver, who died 16 August, 1862.

CORRADINI DE SEZZA, PETER MARCELLINUS, a learned Italian cardinal, the favourite of Pope Clement XI., was born 1658, and died 8 Feb., 1743. His principal work is 'Vetus Latium, profanum et sacrum.'

CORRADUS, SEBASTIAN, a grammarian and professor at Bologna, died 1556.

CORRANUS, or DE CORRO, ANTHONY, was born at Seville 1527. On embracing the Protestant religion he came to England 1570, and the year following was appointed reader of divinity in the Temple. He was also preferred to a prebend in St. Paul's, and died in London, March, 1591. His works are: 'An Epistle to the pastors of the Flemish Church at Antwerp;' 'Tabulæ Divinorum Operum, de humani generis creatione;' 'Dialogus Theologus;' 'Supplication to the King of Spain;' 'Notæ in concionem Solomonis' i. e., Ecclesiastes; Sermons; and 'A Spanish Grammar.'

CORREA DE SERRA, JOSEPH FRANCIS, a Portuguese, distinguished by his attainments as a botanist, was born 1750, and died 11 Sept., 1823.

CORREGGIO, ANTONIO ALLEGRI, called Il, a famous Italian painter, born at Correggio 1493 or 1494. Of his life but few particulars are known. When about twenty years of age he painted an altar-piece for the church of the Cordeliers at Correggio; and in 1519 visited Parma, where he painted the cupola of the church of St. John and that of the cathedral. In the former he represented the Ascension of our Saviour and in the latter the Assumption of the B. V. M. He finished the Assumption 1530, and returned to the place of his nativity, where he died 5 March, 1534. He excelled all previous painters in chiaroscuro and the art of foreshortening. Indeed few artists have approached him in point of design, composition, colour, grace, and expression. Two of his finest productions are in our National Gallery, viz., the 'Education of Cupid,' and an 'Ecce Homo.'

CORRI, DOMENICO, an Italian composer, born in or about 1738, was a pupil of Porpora, at Naples, from 1763 to his preceptor's death in 1767. He came to London 1774, and in the same year produced an opera entitled 'Alessandro nell' Indie.' Afterwards he settled in Edinburgh, but returned to London 1788, in which year he published three volumes of English songs with original accompaniments. Having entered into partnership with John Louis Dussek, he commenced business as a music-seller in the Haymarket 1796. He published a great deal of his own music, but the works by which he is chiefly known are his opera of 'The Travellers;' the Bird Song in 'The Cabinet,' and a treatise entitled 'The Singer's Preceptor; or, a Treatise on vocal Poetry,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1811. Corri died in London 22 May, 1825.

CORRIE, DANIEL, LL.D., an Anglican prelate, was born 10 April, 1777, and educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1823 he was appointed archdeacon of Calcutta, and in 1835 the first bishop of Madras, where he died 5 Feb., 1837. His Memoirs were published by his brothers, 8vo., London, 1847.

CORROZET, GILLES, a bookseller of Paris, author of several works of merit, was born 1510, and died 4 July, 1668.

CORSINI, EDWARD, of Pisa, a monk of great erudition, author of some valuable works on mathematics, criticism, &c. Born 1702; died 27 Nov., 1765.

CORT, CORNELIUS, an engraver, born in Holland 1536; died at Rome 1578.

CORT, HENRY, who has been designated as the father of the iron trade of Great Britain, was born at Lancaster in or about 1740. He entered into business at Gosport as an iron manufacturer, and invented, and secured by patent in 1783 and 1784, two processes which relieved us from commercial servitude, and liberated, for the use of the English manufacturer, the supplies of iron stored up so profusely under the surface of these islands. The first process was the cheap manufacture of wrought iron, by the flame of pit-coal in the puddling furnace. The second process, which was the rolling of the cheap wrought iron through grooved rollers, enabled the manufacturer to produce twenty tons of bar iron in the same time and with the same labour previously required to manipulate one ton of inferior quality by the tedious operation of forging under the hammer. Before 1785, when iron was, comparatively speaking, but slightly used for commercial, maritime, or social purposes, we paid annually to Russia and Sweden something like £1,500,000 for wrought iron. Then came the war, involving commercial embarrassments, depreciated paper, foreign prohibitions, and an overpowering and increasing demand for iron. The inventions of Henry Cort carried us easily through this period of sharp trial, and were indeed the principal cause of our success. But for these unparalleled services Mr. Cort derived no remuneration, although he expended a private fortune exceeding £20,000 in bringing his patent processes to complete perfection. When that was achieved, and the leading ironmasters of the kingdom had signed contracts to pay him 10s. per ton for their use, his patents were seized by a high officer of the Crown, holding the responsible and lucrative posts of treasurer of the navy and secretary of war; and under an extent obtained by the misrepresentation of a deputy, Mr. Cort's works at Fontley, and his freeholds at Gosport, valued, with the stock and good will of a lucrative trade, at £39,000, were handed over to the son of a defaulter in that treasurer's office. Thus Mr. Cort was deprived of all his property and patent rights, valued, when they expired in 1798, at £250,000. He died in London 23 May, 1800. In 1787 there appeared at Gosport 'A Brief Statement of Facts relative to the new Method of making Bar Iron, with raw pit coal and grooved rollers, discovered by Mr. Cort,' 4to.

CORTESE, GREGORY, an Italian cardinal, born 1483; died 21 Sept., 1548. He was bishop of Urbino, and Pope Paul III. held him in high esteem. His works were published at Padua, 2 vols. 4to., 1774.

CORTESE, PAUL, bishop of Urbino, a learned Italian, and a patron of literature; born 1465, and died 1510.

CORTESI, GIOVANNA, a female painter of Florence, born about 1670; died 1736.

CORTESI, or COURTOIS, GUILLAUME, an historical painter, was born 1628, and died at Rome 1679. He, like his brother Jacques, was called Il Borgognone.

CORTESE, or COURTOIS, JACQUES, called Il Borgognone, a painter of battle-pieces, born in Franche-Comté 1621; died at Rome 14 Nov., 1676.

CORTEZ, FERNANDO, a Spanish adventurer, born 1485. He went to the West Indies 1504, and behaved so well that Velasquez, governor of Cuba, appointed him captain-general over the army with which he went in 1518 to Mexico, and founded Vera Cruz. He next marched to the city of Mexico, and laid Montezuma, the emperor, under considerable contribution. The Emperor Charles V. gave him the valley of Guatemala, in Mexico, which was erected into a marquise. Cortez returned to Spain, laden with riches, and died there 2 Dec., 1554.

CORTI, MATTHEW, or Curtius, a native of Pavia; physician to Clement VII.; wrote on fevers, &c. Born 1475; died 1544.

CORTICELLI, SALVATORE, a monk of Bologna, author of a much admired Italian grammar. Born 1690; died 5 Jan., 1758.

CORTONA, PIETRO DA, an Italian painter and architect, whose real name was Pietro Berrettini, was born at Cortona 1596; and died 16 May, 1669. He was the disciple of Andrea Commodi, and of Baccio Carpi, but became vastly superior to his masters, after studying the works of Raffaello, Michael Angelo, and Polidoro, at Rome. His pictures of the Rape of the Sabines, and the Battle of Alexander, surpassed the best judges of the art. His colouring in fresco is better than what he performed in oil. Some of the best of his works in the former line are in the Barberini Palace at Rome, and the Palazzo Pitti at Florence. Of the latter, the altar-piece in the church of the Concezione at Rome is accounted the best. As an architect, he executed several works of importance.

CORVINUS, MATTHIAS. See MATTHIAS.

CORVISART-DESMARETS, JEAN NICOLAS, a celebrated French physician, born 15 Feb., 1755; died 18 Sept., 1821.

CORY, ISAAC PRESTON, fellow of Caius College, Cambridge, died at Blundeston, Suffolk, 1 April, 1842, aged 40. He wrote, 'Ancient Fragments of the Phœnician, Chaldean, Egyptian, Tyrian, Carthaginian, Indian, Persian, and other writers,' Greek and Latin, 2d edit., 1831; 'Metaphysical Inquiry into the method, objects, and result of ancient and modern Philosophy,' 1833; 'Chronological Inquiry into the ancient History of Egypt,' 1837; 'Mythological Inquiry into the recondite Theology of the Heathens,' 1837; 'A Practical Treatise on Accounts, exhibiting a view of the discrepancies between the practice of the Law and of Merchants; with a Plan for the Amendment of the Law of Partnership,' 1839; and 'Proposal for the introduction of a Decimal System of Money.'

CORYATE, GEORGE, a poet and divine, was born at Salisbury and educated at Winchester School, from whence he removed to New College, Oxford, of which society he became fellow in 1562. When Queen Elizabeth visited the university he delivered an oration to her majesty, who rewarded him with a purse of gold. In 1570 he became rector of Odcombe, Somersetshire, and in 1594 was promoted to a prebend in the church of York. He died at Odcombe 4 March, 1606. His works are, 'Poemata varia Latina,' and 'Descriptionis Angliæ, Scotiæ, et Hiberniæ,' in Latin verse.

CORYATE, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was born at Odcombe 1577. He was educated at Westminster School, and next at Gloucester Hall, Oxford, after which he became a domestic in the household of Henry prince of Wales. In 1608 he went into Germany, France, and Italy, through which countries he travelled on foot, with only one pair of shoes, which, on his return, he hung up in the parish church of Odcombe. Of this pedestrian tour he published an account, entitled 'Coryats Crudities hastily gobbled vp in five Moneths Trauels in France, Sauoy, Italy, Rhetia, comonly called the Grisons Country, Heluetia alias Switzerland, some Parts of high Germany, and the Netherlands,' 4to., 1611, reprinted 1776, 3 vols. 8vo. This farrago was ushered into the world with verses written by the first wits of the age. In the same year he printed 'Coryats Crambe, or his Colwort twice sodden, and now serued in with other Macaronicke Dishes, as the second Course to his Crudities.' In 1612, after taking leave of his countrymen at the cross in Odcombe, he set out on a ten years' excursion, and went first to Constantinople, thence into Greece, across the Hellespont into Asia, next to Egypt, over the Desert to Ispahan, and lastly to India. He died at Surat Dec., 1617. Some other eccentric pieces by him were published after his death.

COSIN, JOHN, a learned prelate, born at Norwich 30 Nov., 1594, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge. In 1619 he was appointed chaplain to Archbishop Neile, who gave him a prebend in the cathedral of Durham, and next the archdeaconry of York. In 1626 he was presented to the rectory of Brancepeth, in the diocese of Durham, and the year following published a 'Collection of Private Devotions,' which, on account of certain embellishments on the title-page, brought upon him the charge of being popishly inclined. In 1638 he was elected master of Peterhouse, Cambridge. In 1640 he obtained the deanery of Peterborough, but was soon afterwards sequestered from all his benefices by the House of Commons, who also impeached him on the absurd charge of being popishly affected. On this he went to France, and remained there till the Restoration, when he recovered his preferments. He was raised to the see of Durham 1660, and died 15 Jan., 1671-2, leaving an only son, who was in holy orders of the Church of Rome. Besides the book already noticed, Dr. Cosin wrote 'A Scholastical Treatise of the Canon of Holy Scripture,' a History of Transubstantiation, and other works, which were printed in a collected form at Oxford, 5 vols. 8vo., 1843-55.

COSIN, RICHARD, LL.D., a distinguished civilian, was a native of Hartlepool, co. Durham, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became chancellor of Worcester; judge of the court of Audience, dean of the Arches, and vicar-general of the province of Canterbury; M.P. for Hindon; an advocate of Doctors' Commons; a master in ordinary of the Court of Chancery; and died 30 Nov., 1597. He was esteemed one of the most eminent civilians of his day, and was the author of several works in support of the Church Establishment and the tyrannical oath ex officio. These drew upon him the hatred of the puritan party and the cutting satire of Martin Marprelate.

COSMAS, the Egyptian, or Indicopleustes, a monk of the sixth century, who travelled to Ethiopia, and wrote a Christian topography and other works, which have been published by Montfaucon.

COSME, JEAN DE ST., whose family name was Baethlac, was born 1703, and, after studying surgery, entered a monastery at Paris, but continued nevertheless to practise his old profession. He was especially famous for his skill in lithotomy. Died 8 July, 1781.

COSMO I., grand-duke of Tuscany, born 1519; died 21 April, 1574.

COSMO II., grandson of the preceding, succeeded his father, Ferdinand, 1609, and died 1621.

COSMO III. succeeded his father, Ferdinand II., 1670. He was a patron of learning, and one of the richest sovereigns of Europe. Died 1723. An English translation appeared in 1820 of the account of his Travels in England in the year 1669.

COSSALI, PETER, an Italian monk, author of a History of the Origin and Progress of Algebra in Italy and other mathematical works. Born 29 June, 1748; died at Padua 20 Dec., 1818.

COSSART, GABRIEL, a French Jesuit, who, with Labbe, compiled the great Collection of Councils. He also composed Latin poetry. Born 1615; died 16 Sept., 1674.

COSTA. See ACOSTA.

COSTANZO, ANGELO DI, an Italian nobleman, who wrote the History of Naples and some elegant Italian sonnets. Born 1507; died 1590.

COSTAR, PIERRE, bachelor of the Sorbonne, and author of a defence of Voiture, a curious collection of Letters, &c., was born at Paris 1603, and died 13 May, 1660.

COSTARD, GEORGE, M.A., F.R.S., was born at Shrewsbury about 1710, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1764 he was presented to the living of Twickenham, Middlesex, where he died 10 Jan., 1782. He wrote the History of Astronomy; Observations to illustrate the Book of Job; and other learned works.

COSTE, HILARION DE, a minim friar, born at Paris 6 Sept., 1595; died 22 Aug., 1661. Of his numerous works the most curious is 'Le Parfait Ecclesiastique, ou la Vie de François le Picard, docteur de Paris, avec les Éloges de 40 autres docteurs de la Faculté.'

COSTE, PIERRE, a French Protestant, born 1668. He came to England in the reign of Queen Anne, and after residing many years in London, returned to Paris, where he died 24 Jan., 1747. He wrote a Life of the great Conde; and translated into French, Locke on the Understanding, Newton's Optics, &c.

COSTELLO, DUDLEY, a journalist and novelist, who at different periods was connected with the 'Morning Herald,' 'Daily News,' and 'Examiner' newspapers, died in London 30 Sept., 1865, aged 62. His principal works are 'A Tour through the Valley of the Meuse;' 'Stories from a Screen;' 'The Joint-Stock Banker;' 'The Millionaire;' 'Faint Heart never won Fair Lady;' 'Holidays with Hobgoblins;' and 'Italy from the Alps to the Tiber.'

COSTELLO, WILLIAM BIRMINGHAM, M.D., an English medical writer, died at Paris 15 Aug., 1807, aged 67. He edited the 'Encyclopædia of Practical Surgery, including a copious bibliography,' 8vo., London, 1841-43; and was author of numerous contributions to medical science.

COSTER, LAURENCE, or Laurent Janszoon Koster, a native of Haerlem, who died about 1440. The Dutch affirm that he invented block-printing in 1430, of which, say they, he caught the idea by cutting letters upon the bark of a tree, and then impressing the same upon paper. This, however, is now generally treated as a fable, and given up by all who have considered the subject.

COSWAY, RICHARD, R.A., was a native of Devonshire. In early life he repaired to the metropolis, and was patronized by his countryman, Sir Joshua Reynolds. Mr. Cosway excelled as a miniature painter, and at his death, 4 July, 1821, left a widow, who was distinguished for her skill in the same line of art.

COTELERIUS, JOHN BAPTIST, a famous Greek scholar, professor of that language at Paris, was born at Nîmes 1627, and died 10 Aug., 1686. He published the works of several of the Greek fathers.

COTES, FRANCIS, a painter, and one of the founders of the Royal Academy, was born in London 1726. He became the pupil of Knappton, whom he greatly excelled. He was particularly eminent for his portraits in crayons, and he also painted with considerable ability in oil. Died 20 July, 1770.

COTES, ROGER, a mathematician, was born 10 July, 1682, at Burbage, in Leicestershire, of which parish his father was rector. He received his education at Leicester School, and next at St. Paul's; after which he was entered of Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship in 1705, and became tutor to the two sons of the marquis of Kent, to which family he was related. In 1706 he took his master's degree, and was appointed Plumian Professor of astronomy and experimental philosophy. He entered into orders in 1713, and the same year published a new edition of Newton's Principia, with a learned preface. Great expectations were entertained of this promising genius, which, however, were cut off by his premature death 5 June, 1716. Sir Isaac Newton used to say, 'If Mr. Cotes had lived we should have known something.' A few of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions, and his 'Harmonia Mensurarum' was published at Cambridge in 1722; and his Hydrostatical Lectures in 1737.

COTES, SAMUEL, brother of Francis above mentioned, became the first miniature painter of his time. He died at Chelsea 7 March, 1818, æt. 85.

COTIN, CHARLES, a French divine and poet, born 1604; died Jan., 1682.

COTOLENDI, CHARLES, a French advocate and biographer, who died about 1710.

COTTA, JOHN, a modern Latin poet, born near Verona about 1483; died about 1511.

COTTA, JOHN, M.D., was educated at Trinity and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, after which he removed to Northampton, where he was in practice as a physician as late as 1623. His works are 'Discovery of the unobserved dangers of ignorant and inconsiderate Practisers of Physicke in England,' 1612, 1617; 'The Trall of Witchcraft, with the true discovery thereof,' 1616, 1625; 'A true discovery of the Emperick with the fugitive Physician and Quack-Salvet,' 1617; 'Contra Antonium de Auro Potabile, shewing Dr. Anthony's apology for Aurum Potabile to be false and counterfeit,' 1623.

COTTAM, THOMAS, a native of Lancashire, studied at Brasenose College, Oxford, and afterwards at Rheims, where he was ordained priest.

COTTE.

In 1586 he was sent on a mission into England, but being apprehended soon after his landing, was executed at Tyburn 30 May, 1582. He was admitted into the Society of Jesus shortly before his death.

COTTE, ROBERT, a French architect, born 1656; died 1735.

COTTER, GEORGE SACKVILLE, an English writer, was born in or about 1755, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He took orders, and during the later years of his life resided at Youghal, co. Cork. Died 1831. He published two volumes of poems, 1788; and translations of Terence, and of seven of the plays of Plautus.

COTTERELL, SIR CHARLES, was the son of Sir Clement Cotterell, of Lincolnshire, groom-porter to James I., and received his education at Queen's College, Cambridge. In the time of the Commonwealth he was steward to the queen of Bohemia, and in 1670, when he was created D.C.L. at Oxford, it appears that he was master of the requests. He succeeded Sir John Finet, 1641, as master of the ceremonies, which office he relinquished, 1686, in favour of his son Charles Lodowicke Cotterell. Sir Charles died in 1701, and not, as some assert, in 1700. He translated from the French 'Cassandra, the famed Romance,' by Madame de Scudery; D'Avila's 'History of the Civil Wars of France,' from the Italian; and several pieces of less note from the Spanish.

COTTIN, SOPHIE, née Ristaud, a French novelist, born 1773; died 25 Aug., 1807. Her 'Malvina,' 'Amélie Mansheld,' 'Mathilde,' and 'Elisabeth, ou les Exilés en Sibérie,' entitle her to a foremost place among French romanciers.

COTTINGTON, FRANCIS, Lord Cottingham, was chancellor of the exchequer and master of the court of wards in the reign of Charles I. During the civil wars he was constituted lord high treasurer, but does not appear to have acted in that office. Towards the close of his life he retired to Valladolid, where he died in 1653, æt. 77.

COTTISFORD, THOMAS, a Protestant divine, was a native of Winchester, and studied at both universities, taking his M.A. degree at Cambridge. He held several livings in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., but on Mary's accession left the kingdom, and resided successively at Copenhagen, Geneva, and Frankfurt. His death took place in the last-named city 6 Dec., 1555. He published sixteen works, mostly translations; and is said to have been engaged in the compilation of the liturgy.

COTTLE, AMOS SIMON, a minor poet, received his education at Magdalen College, Cambridge. He died at his chambers in Clifford's Inn, London, 28 Sept., 1800; and some of his poems were published two years afterwards, in a volume entitled 'Malvern Hills, and other Poems, by James Cottle and Amos Simon Cottle.'

COTTLE, JOSEPH, a younger brother of the preceding, was originally a bookseller at Bristol, where he published several of Coleridge's early works. Soon afterwards he retired from business, and died at his residence, Firfield House, Knowle, near Bristol, 7 June, 1853. He was author of several works in prose and verse. Among the latter was 'The Fall of Cambria,' which is satirically alluded to by Lord Byron. The best known of Mr. Cottle's productions is his 'Recollections of S. T. Coleridge.'

COTTON.

COTTON, BARTHOLOMEW DE, an English chronicler, was a monk of Norwich, and did not survive the year 1298. His 'Historia Anglicana (A.D. 449-1208); necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ,' was published, 8vo., London, 1850, under the editorship of Henry Richards Luard. He likewise wrote 'Optima compilationes de libro Britonis, secundum ordinem Alphabeti,' 1291. MS. C.C.C.C.

COTTON, CHARLES, an English poet, was born at the family seat of Beresford, in Staffordshire, 28 April, 1630, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; after which he went abroad, and on his return lived on his estate, which his father left much encumbered. His favourite amusements were study and angling. The result of the former appeared in several translations from the French, particularly of Montaigne's Essays; a travesty of Virgil; and the Wonders of the Peak, a poem. On the latter subject he wrote 'Instructions how to angle for Trout or Grayling in a clear Stream.' He was the intimate friend of honest Izaak Walton; and died in Westminster 1687. His poems are lively and elegant.

COTTON, NATHANIEL, M.D., an English physician and poet, born 1707. He studied under Boerhaave, at Leyden, where he is supposed to have taken his doctor's degree. On his return to England he resided some time at Dunstable, whence he removed to St. Alban's, where he kept an asylum for lunatics, in the treatment of whom he was remarkably skilful. Died 2 Aug., 1788. He was author of 'Visions in Verse,' and other works, which were published in a collected form 1791, 2 vols. 12mo.

COTTON, PIERRE, a Jesuit, born at Neronde, near the Loire, 1504. He was confessor to Henry IV. of France, and possessed so much of his confidence, that it was said the king was good but that he had cotton in his ears. Cotton refused an arch-bishopric and a cardinal's hat, and died 19 March, 1626. He wrote sermons, besides controversial and divinity tracts.

COTTON, SIR ROBERT BRUCE, an eminent antiquary, born at Denton, Huntingdonshire, 22 Jan., 1570. He was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, after which he settled in London, and devoted himself to the collecting of the literary remains of old time, particularly such as related to English history. He became also a member of the society then formed for the promotion of similar objects, and contributed material assistance to several writers who were engaged in the illustration of our national antiquities, particularly Camden, with whom he travelled over a great part of the kingdom. At the accession of James I. he received the honour of knighthood, and he was one of the first baronets created on the institution of that order. In the next reign, however, he fell into trouble, owing to the indiscretion of his librarian in lending out of the collection entrusted to his care a dangerous manuscript written by Sir Robert Dudley. After an investigation of this affair, the library of Sir Robert Cotton, which had been seized, was restored to its owner; but the shock which he had received injured his health, and he died 6 May, 1631. The Cottonian Library, after many vicissitudes, and having been reduced by a fire in 1731, was deposited in the British Museum. The works of Sir Robert are, A Discourse of the lawfulness of Combats to be performed in the Royal Presence; The Antiquity and Dignity of Parliaments; Cottoni Posthuma; A Narrative of Count Gondomar's Transactions; Tracts in Hearne's Discourses; and many others which are yet in MS.

COTTON, ROGER, a draper of Cannon Street, London, learned Hebrew of Hugh Broughton. He was a true scholar of such a master, and so constantly pined the Scriptures that he read over the Bible twelve times in one year, and what proficiency he made therein he gave a specimen in the following works:—'A Direction to the waters of life, Come and behold, How Christ shineth before the Law, in the Law, and in the Prophetes: and withall the iudgements of God vpon all Nations for the neglect of his holy worde, wherein they might haue scene the same,' 4to., London, 1590, 1592; 'An Armor of Proefe, brought from the Tower of Dauid, to fight against the Spannyardes, and all enemies of the truth,' 4to., London, 1596; and 'A Spirituall song: containing an Historiall Discourse from the infancy of the world, vntill this present time: Drawen out of the holy Scriptures,' 4to., London, 1596. This song is in five-lined stanzas: to it is annexed 'A description of olde Rome, or mistical Babylon.'

COTTON, STAPLETON. See COMBERMERE.

COTUGNO, DOMINIC, an Italian physician, professor of anatomy at Naples, was born 29 Jan., 1736, and died 6 Oct., 1822. He made several important anatomical discoveries, especially that of the aqueducts of the human ear.

COUCH, RICHARD QUILLER, a surgeon and naturalist of Penzance, Cornwall, died 8 May, 1803, aged 47.

COUDRETTE, CHRISTOPHE, a French priest, celebrated for his writings against the Jesuits, was born 1701, and died 4 Aug., 1774.

COULOMB, CHARLES AUGUSTIN DE, a French physician and member of the Academy, who devoted himself chiefly to experimental inquiries into electricity and magnetism. In these researches he was led to form a new theory of attraction, the basis of which is the existence of two electrical fluids. Born 14 June, 1736; died 23 Aug., 1806.

COULON, LOUIS, a French historian and geographer, born 1605; died 1664.

COULTHART, RICHARD, an eminent agriculturist, and author of 'The Economy of Agriculture,' long a favourite text-book of the farmers of Scotland, was born 1659, and died 1717.

COUPER. See COWER and COOPER.

COUPER, ROBERT, M.D., a Scotch physician and minor poet, born 22 Sept., 1750; died 18 Jan., 1818. In 1804 he published at Inverness two volumes of 'Poetry, chiefly in the Scottish Language.'

COUPERIN, FRANÇOIS, a French musical composer, born 1668; died 1733.

COUPLET, PHILIPPE, a Jesuit, born at Mechlin about 1628. He went to China as a missionary 1659, and returned 1680. He died on a second voyage 1693, leaving some works in the Chinese language, and several in Latin: the most curious and rare, 'Confucius Sinarum Philosophus,' 1687, contains a compendium of the theology and ancient history of the Chinese.

COURAYEK, PIERRE FRANÇOIS LE, D.C.L., was born in Normandy 17 Nov., 1681. He became a canon regular and librarian of the abbey of St. Genevieve, but fell under ecclesiastical censure for writing a defence of the validity of the episcopal succession in the Church of England. His work appeared in 1723, and occasioned a warm controversy between the author and Fathers Le Quien and Hardouin. The university of Oxford conferred on Courayer the degree of doctor of laws, but in his own country his book was suppressed; and to avoid the consequences of severer measures he came to England in 1728, and remained here till his death, 17 Oct., 1776. Besides the above work he published French translations of Father Paul's 'History of the Council of Trent,' and of Sleidan's 'History of the Reformation.' Though he joined in communion with the Church of England, he did not separate from that in which he had been bred, but went occasionally to Mass. His creed, indeed, appears to have been very unsettled, if we are to judge of it from two posthumous pieces of his, published by Dr. Bell, one entitled 'Declaration des derniers sentimens sur les differens dogmes de la religion;' and the other, 'Traite ou l'on expose ce qui l'écriture nous apprend de la Divinité de Jesus Christ.'

COURCELLES, STEPHEN DE, a Protestant theological writer, professor at Amsterdam, was born 1580, and died 1658.

COURT DE GEBELIN, ANTOINE, a native of Nîmes, Protestant minister at Lausanne, wrote 'Le Monde Primitif analysé et comparé avec le Monde Moderne,' 9 vols.; and a History of the War in the Cevennes. Born 1725; died 10 May, 1784.

COURTEN, WILLIAM, a merchant of Menin, who, in 1568, came to London with his family to avoid the persecution then raging in the Netherlands. Here he traded at first in French hoods, an article of dress at that time much worn. The success which attended this business induced Courten to enlarge his concern, by trading in silks and linens, by which means he left behind him a considerable property. His two sons, William and Peter Courten, continued the firm in partnership, and both received the honour of knighthood. The former extended his mercantile pursuits to the East and West Indies, employing for many years four thousand seamen. He was twice married by his first lady, who was both deaf and dumb, but of great fortune, he had a son, who was one of the first baronets, but died without issue. Sir William, the father, colonized Barbadoes, which was afterwards wrested from him by Lord Carlisle. He sustained also a great loss by the massacre at Amboyna; and died in May or June, 1630, act. 64.

COURTEN, WILLIAM, the last descendant of this family, was born 28 March, 1642. Having received a good education, he went to Montpellier where he studied natural history, formed an acquaintance with Tournefort, and took his degree of doctor in physic. After this he returned to England, and entered into a long law-suit for the recovery of his paternal property; on the termination of which, by arbitration, he went abroad, and assumed the name of Charleton. After an absence of about twenty-five years, he settled in London, and died 26 March, 1702. His collection of natural curiosities was purchased for the public in 1753, at the price of twenty thousand pounds; and some estimate may be formed of the magnitude from the circumstance that the catalogue makes thirty-eight folios and eight quarto volumes.

COURTENAY.

COVENTRY.

COURTENAY, EDWARD, a Jesuit, was born in Sussex, and died at St. Omer 3 Oct., 1677, æt. 79. He wrote 'R. P. Petri Writi, Sacerdotis Angli & Soc. Jesu Mors, quam ob Fidem pasus est Londini 29 Maii MDCLII,' 12mo., Antwerp, 1651; and 'Manipulus Regius SS. Herodum Britannia oblatiæ Reginae Succiaæ' [Christina], folio, Rome, 1626.—Obit.

COURTENAY, HENRY REGINALD, an English prelate, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. He was made bishop of Bristol 1794; translated to Exeter 1797; and died 3 June, 1803.

COURTENAY, JOHN, an Irish writer, was originally a captain in the military service, and patronized by the first Marquis Townshend, who appointed him his secretary, and surveyor of the ordnance. He also obtained a seat in parliament, and on the death of Mr. Pitt was made a commissioner of the Treasury. This situation, however, he soon lost, and then retired from public life. Died 24 March, 1816, aged 75. His publications consist of a Tract on the Duke of Richmond's Plan of Fortifications; A Poetical Review of Dr. Johnson's Character; Reflections on the French Revolution; Poetical Epistles on the Manners of France, Italy, &c.

COURTENAY, THOMAS PEREGRINE, brother to the earl of Devon, was born about 1782, and educated at Westminster School. After holding some minor offices under government, he was appointed secretary to the Board of Control 1812, and afterwards became vice-president of the Board of Trade, a privy councillor, and an honorary commissioner for the affairs of India. He was drowned while bathing near Torquay 8 July, 1841. He wrote Memoirs of Sir William Temple; Commentaries on the Historical Plays of Shakespeare; and some political pamphlets.

COURTENAY, WILLIAM, archbishop of Canterbury, was born 1341, being the fourth son of Hugh, earl of Devonshire, by Margaret, grand-daughter of Edward I. He received his education at Oxford, and on entering into orders obtained several preferments. At the age of twenty-eight he was promoted to the bishopric of Hereford, whence he was translated to London, in which see he distinguished himself by his zeal for the papal authority, and in opposition to some court measures; but he was particularly noticed by citing Wycliffe before him in St. Paul's Cathedral 1377. That divine appeared, supported by John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, and Lord Percy, who behaved with such rudeness to the bishop that the citizens of London were exasperated, and a tumult ensued. In 1381 he was made chancellor, and raised to the see of Canterbury, in which he conducted himself with great firmness and activity. Died 31 July, 1396.

COURTILZ DE SANDRAS, GATIEN DE, a French soldier and author, of a noble family, born 1644; died 6 May, 1712. For nine years he was a prisoner in the Bastille. He wrote the Life of Coligny; Memoirs of Rochfort; History of the Dutch War from 1672 to 1677.

COURTIVRON, GASPARD LE COMPASSEUR DE CAZQUI MONTFORT, Marquis DE, a French nobleman, who distinguished himself as a soldier and mathematician. He wrote a treatise on Optics and other works. Born 1715; died 4 Oct., 1785.

COURTOIS. See COURTESI.

COUSIN, GILBERT, Cognatus, a French ecclesiastic and classical scholar, born 21 Jan., 1526; died 1567.

COUSIN, JACQUES ANTOINE JOSEPH, a mathematician, born at Paris 20 Jan., 1730; died 29 Dec., 1800. He wrote a well-known work on the Differential and Integral Calculus; an Introduction to Astronomy; and Elements of Algebra.

COUSIN, JEAN, a French painter and mathematician, who died about 1590.

COUSTANT, PIERRE, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, born at Compiegne 1624; died at Paris 1721. He wrote 'Vindicia veterum codicum confirmatæ,' and 'De veteribus hæreticis ecclesiasticorum codicum corruptionibus.' He also published an edition of St. Hilary; of the Letters of the Popes, 1721; and assisted in the Benedictine edition of St. Augustine.

COUSTOU, GUILLAUME, a French sculptor, born at Lyons, 1628; died 23 Feb., 1746.

COUSTOU, GUILLAUME, son of the preceding, was also an eminent sculptor. Born 1716; died 13 July, 1777.

COUSTOU, NICOLAS, a sculptor, brother of Guillaume Coustou the elder, was born 9 Jan., 1658, and died 1 May, 1733.

COUTTS, THOMAS, the well-known London banker, died 24 Feb., 1822, aged 87. He was a native of Dundee.

COUVRIER. See LECOUVRIER.

COVARRUVIAS, DIEGO, an eminent prelate and canonist, called the Spanish Bartholus, was born at Diego 25 July, 1512, and died at Madrid 27 Sept., 1577.

COVE, MORGAN, D.C.L., was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he proceeded LL.B., though his doctor's degree was obtained at Oxford. He became rector of Eaton Bishop 1709, and the following year obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Hereford, where he was appointed chancellor of the choir 1828. Died 9 April, 1830, aged 77. He was author of an 'Essay on the Revenues of the Church of England;' and 'An Inquiry into the necessity, justice, and policy of a Commutation of Tithes.'

COVEL, JOHN, D.D., was born at Horningsheath, Suffolk, 1638, and educated at Bury St. Edmunds, whence he removed in 1654 to Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1670 he went to Constantinople as chaplain to the embassy. On his return he was appointed Lady Margaret preacher at Cambridge. He also obtained the rectory of Littlebury, Essex, and the college living of Kegworth, Leicestershire. In 1687 he was installed chancellor of York, and the next year was chosen master of his college. He died 19 Dec., 1722, having just before published an Account of the Greek Church.

COVENTRY, FRANCIS, was born in Cambridgeshire, and educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1752, and entered into orders. He died 1759, having just before been presented to the perpetual curacy of Edgeware. He wrote Peshurst, a poem in Dodsley's collection; a poetical epistle to the Hon. Wilmot Vaughan; a paper in the 'World;' and the well-known satirical romance 'Pompey the Little.'

COVENTRY, HENRY, third son of Thomas first earl of Coventry, was born in or about 1619, and educated at All Soul's College, Oxford. In 1664 Charles II. sent him envoy extraordinary to Sweden, in which country he remained two years. In

COVENTRY.

1667 he was one of the ambassadors despatched to Breda, for the purpose of treating for peace with France, Denmark, and the States General. He was again sent on an embassy to Sweden 1671, and on his return in the following year was constituted secretary of state and privy councillor. He resigned his offices 1679, and died 7 Dec., 1699.

COVENTRY, HENRY, cousin of Francis Coventry, above mentioned, was a fellow of Magdalen College, Cambridge. He was the author of 'Letters of Philemon to Hydaspes;' and was one of the writers of the 'Athenian Letters.' Died 29 Dec., 1752.

COVENTRY, Sir JOHN, K.B., was grandson of Thomas, first earl of Coventry, and nephew to Henry and Sir William Coventry. He was a member in the Long Parliament, and in all the other parliaments in the reign of Charles II., for Weymouth. He was distinguished for his wit, and being often in opposition to the court, a violent and cruel attempt was made on his person 21 Dec., 1670. Four officers of the guards, acting under orders from the duke of Monmouth, waylaid him as he was returning home, and cut his nose to the bone. This led to a furious uproar in the House of Commons, and a bill of banishment against the perpetrators of the outrage was passed, containing a clause that it should not be in the king's power to pardon them, and that it should be death to maim any person. The act was called 'The Coventry Act.' Sir John died about 1682.

COVENTRY, THOMAS, Baron Coventry, lord-keeper of the great seal, was the son of Thomas Coventry, one of the justices of the Common Pleas, and born at Croome d'Abitot, in Worcestershire, in 1578. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple, where, in 1616, he was chosen autumnal reader; and the same year was appointed recorder of London. In 1617 he was made solicitor-general; in 1621 attorney-general; in 1625 lord-keeper; and in 1628 created a peer by the title of Lord Coventry, baron of Aylesborough. He died at Durham House, in the Strand, 14 Jan., 1639-40. He wrote 'An Answer to the Petition against the Recusants;' 'Directions to all that desire to know the Fees of Office in the Common Pleas and Chancery.' Several of his speeches and papers are in the Harleian library.

COVENTRY, Sir WILLIAM, youngest son of the lord-keeper, was born in 1626, and was educated at Queen's College, Oxford. He received the honour of knighthood in 1665, and was made one of the commissioners of the Treasury in 1667. He died 23 June, 1686. Sir William wrote, 'England's Appeal from the private Cabal at Whitehall to the great Council of the Nation;' 'Letter to Dr. Burnet on Cardinal Pole's Secret Powers, respecting the Abbey Lands;' and 'The Character of a Trimmer;' 1689.

COVERDALE, MILES, was born in 1488 at Coverham, in the district called Coverdale, in Yorkshire. He entered the order of Augustinian friars, and was ordained priest 1514. He studied in the house of his order at Cambridge during the period when it was under the presidency of Dr. Robert Barnes, the noted reformer, whose opinions he imbibed. After this he became a zealous opponent of Catholicism, and consequently was patronized by Thomas Cromwell, who befriended him in several emergencies. The statement, oft repeated, that he assisted Tyndal the translation of the Pentateuch, is without foundation. His own translation of the Bible was completed in 1535, and was probably printed at Cologne, though it was not imported into England until the following year. In 1538 Cromwell sent him to Paris, with Richard Grafton, to superintend that translation of the Bible which is commonly called the Lord Cromwell's. Towards the close of 1538 Coverdale published, at Paris, an edition of the New Testament in English and Latin, being induced to do so in consequence of James Nicolson, a printer in Southwark, having, without any authority from him, set forth an inaccurate impression under his name. The printing of the Lord Cromwell's Bible at Paris was ultimately frustrated by the officers of the Inquisition, and Coverdale thereupon returned to England, which, however, he left again about the time of Cromwell's fall. It was, perhaps, at this period that he went to Tubingen, where he was created D.D. He also visited Denmark, but ultimately settled at Bergzabern. On the accession of Edward VI. he returned to England, and was appointed chaplain to the king and almoner to the Lady Catharine Parr, the queen dowager, whose funeral sermon he preached. In 1551 he sat upon the commission under which Van Parre, the Dutch Arian, was burnt for heresy; and on the 14th August in that year was nominated to the bishopric of Exeter. When Mary ascended the throne he was deprived of his see, but, through the intercession of the king of Denmark, obtained the royal licence to quit the kingdom, whereupon he settled at Wesel, in Friesland, as pastor of an English congregation. He afterwards resided at Bergzabern, and then at Geneva, but came back to England in the reign of Elizabeth, and was admitted to the rectory of St. Magnus, London Bridge, 1563-4, but resigned it in 1566. Died Feb., 1568-9. Coverdale's name is chiefly remembered in connexion with his version of the Scriptures, though he was author of a number of works, two volumes of selections from which were printed by the Parker Society 1844-46. Medals in honour of Coverdale were struck by hundreds of thousands in 1835, the 4th of October in which year was observed throughout the greater part of England as a tercentenary of the printing of the whole of the Scriptures in the vernacular tongue, and Coverdale was especially honoured; though it has been doubted whether the originators of this grand burst of exuberant Protestantism were very fully informed as to the circumstances connected with the earlier English translations of the Scriptures, and most assuredly they were mistaken as regards the year when Coverdale's was first published.

COWARD, WILLIAM, M.D., a physician, born at Winchester 1656 or 1657. He became fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, where he published a Latin translation of Dryden's Abssalom and Achitophel. On quitting the university he removed to Northampton, and next to London, where he published a tract 'De Fermento.' In 1702 he printed 'Second Thoughts concerning Human Souls,' which, as a defence of materialism, produced a fierce contest. The House of Commons also meddled in the dispute, and ordered the book to be burnt by the hangman. After this the doctor published a piece, entitled 'Ophthalmia,' on the nature of vision. He was also the author of 'Licentia Poetica; or the true Test of Poetry.' This is a didactic poem of some merit, and the notes are curious. Dr. Coward died about 1724.

COWELL, JOHN, LL.D., a civilian, born at Emsborough, Devonshire, about 1554. He received his education at Eton School, and next at King's College, Cambridge, where he proceeded to his degree of doctor in civil law, and became professor in that faculty and master of Trinity Hall. In 1607 he published in 4to. his 'Interpreter,' or Explanation of Law Terms, which the House of Commons caused to be burnt, on account of its being too favourable to the regal prerogative. Sir Edward Coke was a great enemy to the author, and used to call him, by a miserable pun, Dr. Cow-hell. Died 11 Oct., 1611. He also wrote 'Institutes of the Laws of England, in the same method as Justinian's Institutes,' 1605.

COWHERD, WILLIAM, the founder of the 'Bible Christians,' was born in or about 1764, and became minister of Christ Church, Salford, Manchester, which was opened in 1800. Attached to no sect, his creed was the Bible only, and his followers were designated 'Bible Christians.' He observed and zealously inculcated during the last seven years of his life the duty of abstaining from animal food and all intoxicating liquors. Died 29 March, 1816.

COWLEY, ABRAHAM, a poet, born in London 1618. He was educated at Westminster School; and at the age of fifteen published a small collection of poems, entitled 'Poetical Blossoms.' He removed in 1636 to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he wrote several of his pieces; and in 1638 published his 'Love's Riddle,' a pastoral comedy. In 1643, being then M.A., he was ejected from the college for his loyalty, on which he went to Oxford, where he settled in St. John's College, and published a satire, entitled 'The Puritan and the Papist.' But not satisfied with evincing his attachment to the king by words, he made several journeys to render him service. Afterwards he retired to France with the queen-mother, and was absent about twelve years; during which he was much employed in the royal cause, and suffered considerable distress in common with other exiles. In 1666 he returned to England secretly, but was soon seized and committed to prison, from whence he was bailed by Dr. Scarborough. Next year he went to Oxford, and obtained the degree of M.D. On the death of Cromwell he again visited France, and returned at the Restoration; but being strangely neglected by the court, he retired to a farm at Chertsey, where he died 28 July, 1667. His remains were deposited in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory by George, duke of Buckingham. Dr. Johnson places Cowley at the head of metaphysical poets; but though he is sometimes sublime, always moral, and frequently witty, yet his poems are tedious and affected. He preceded Darwin in giving a poetical personification to plants, being himself a good botanist and horticulturist. He also wrote a comedy called the 'Cutter of Coleman Street,' and some pieces in prose, particularly a 'Discourse on the Government of Cromwell,' and a 'Proposition for the Advancement of Experimental Philosophy.'

COWLEY, HANNAH, a dramatic writer, was the daughter of Philip Parkhouse, a bookseller at Tiverton, in Devonshire, where she was born 1743. At the age of twenty-five she married Mr. Cowley, an officer in the military service of the India Company, who died in 1797. She produced the comedy of 'The Runaway,' in 1776, which was followed by the 'Belle's Stratagem;' and some other popular pieces. She also wrote poems of no common merit, as 'The Maid of Arragon;' 'The Scottish Village;' and 'The Siege of Acre.' Mrs. Cowley died at Tiverton, 11 March, 1809, and her works were published in 1813, in 3 vols. 8vo., with a memoir prefixed.

COWLEY, HENRY WELLESLEY, LORD, younger brother of the duke of Wellington, was born 20 Jan., 1773, and entered the diplomatic service, in which he acquired great distinction. He was British ambassador at Madrid 1800-22; at Vienna 1822-31; and in 1841 was sent ambassador to Paris. He was raised to the peerage 1828; and died 27 April, 1847.

COWPER, EDWARD, professor of manufacturing arts and mechanics at King's College, London, was born 1790, and died 17 Oct., 1852. He was a distinguished inventor and improver of machinery, especially of the printing machine. In early life he was a partner with Mr. Applegath, as a printer, in Duke Street, Lambeth.

COWPER, SPENCER, the second son of Lord Chancellor Cowper, was born in London 1713. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He obtained the rectory of Fordwich in Kent, a prebend of Canterbury, and lastly the deanery of Durham. Died 25 March, 1774. The dean published, without his name, some astronomical tables and calculations. His other works are a speech at the installation of the bishop of Durham; eight discourses; and three occasional sermons.

COWPER, or COUPER, WILLIAM, a Scotch prelate, was born at Edinburgh in 1566. He received his education at St. Andrew's, after which he visited England, and was assisted in his theological studies by the famous Hugh Broughton. On entering into orders he became minister of a parish in the county of Stirling, and next at Perth, where his conduct was so exemplary that James VI. appointed him bishop of Galloway, and dean of the chapel royal. He died 15 Feb., 1619, and in 1629 his works were published at London, in one volume, folio.

COWPER, WILLIAM, a surgeon and anatomist, was born in 1666, near Alresford, in Hampshire. He practised with great reputation in London, where he published, in 1694, Myotomia reformatata; or a new administration of all the Muscles of the Human Body; which was reprinted in 1724, in folio. In 1697, Cowper published at Oxford, in folio, 'The Anatomy of Human Bodies;' which was attacked by Bidloo as a plagiarism. Died 8 March, 1709.

COWPER, WILLIAM, Earl Cowper, and Lord Chancellor, was the son of Sir William Cowper, baronet, and born in Hertfordshire. He rose rapidly at the bar, and was chosen recorder of Colchester. In 1695 he was elected M.P. for Hertford, and distinguished himself greatly by his eloquence. On the accession of Queen Anne he was appointed counsel for the crown; and in 1705 was made keeper of the great seal. In 1706 he was created a peer, and the year following constituted lord high chancellor of England, which office he held till 1710, when he resigned the seals, much against the queen's desire. On the demise of her Majesty he accepted that office again, but retired in 1718, when he was created an earl. Died 10 Oct., 1733.

COWPER.

COWPER, WILLIAM, M.D., F.S.A., a physician of Chester, who died 20 Oct., 1767. He published 'A Summary of the life of St. Werburgh,' and 'Il Penseroso: an evening's contemplation in St. John's churchyard, Chester.'

COWPER, WILLIAM, D.D., youngest son of Earl Cowper, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was made dean of Durham, which he held till his death 1772, in his 59th year. He wrote an able treatise on geometry, besides eight sermons, and an advice to a lady, much esteemed.

COWPER, WILLIAM, a poet, was the son of the Rev. John Cowper, rector of Great Berkhamstead, in Hertfordshire, and was born there, 20 Nov., 1731. He was from his birth of a very delicate constitution, and through life possessed a frame of uncommon sensibility. After going through a country school, he was sent to that of Westminster, and in 1749 was articled to an attorney for three years, at the end of which time he entered the Temple, but never followed the legal profession. Here he renewed an intimacy with his schoolfellows, Churchill, Colman, Thornton, and Lloyd, and contributed some papers to the 'Connoisseur.' At the age of thirty-four he was nominated a clerk in the House of Lords; but an unconquerable timidity prevented him from undertaking the office, on which account he was appointed clerk of the journals, a situation which, it was supposed, would require no personal attendance; but an occasion happening that rendered it necessary for the clerk to appear at the bar of the House, it had such an effect on his nerves that he was obliged to resign the place. Insanity followed, and it was found necessary to place him under Dr. Cotton, at St. Albans, by whose attentions he recovered his mental faculties. In 1765 he settled at Huntingdon, where he formed an acquaintance with a clergyman of the name of Unwin, in whose family he became an inmate. When that gentleman was killed by a fall from his horse in 1767, Cowper and Mrs. Unwin went to Olney, in Buckinghamshire, where they contracted an intimacy with the Rev. John Newton, curate of that parish. To a collection of hymns, published by Mr. Newton, our poet contributed no fewer than sixty-eight pieces. In 1770 he lost his brother John, who died at Cambridge. From this period little occurs in the life of the poet, who suffered much from severe paroxysms of religious despondency. His recovery was slow, but at last he gained a calm tranquillity, which lasted some years. To beguile his hours and employ his mind, he was urged by his friends to write frequently; the result of which was the publication of a volume of poems in 1782, anonymously. Some time before this Cowper had formed an acquaintance with the widow of Sir Robert Austen, who resided at the parsonage house of Olney. To this lady the world is indebted for the ballad of John Gilpin, which she related to amuse Cowper, who turned it into verse. But Lady Austen conferred a greater favour on the public, by suggesting to him the poem entitled 'The Task.' This piece was sent to the press in 1784, in 8vo., in a second volume of his works. He now began a translation of Homer into blank verse, which was published by subscription in 1791, in 2 vols. 4to.; but he was so dissatisfied with it as to begin the work anew, and this revision has been since printed. In 1786 Mr. Cowper and Mrs. Unwin removed to Weston, in Northamptonshire, where our poet undertook an edition of Milton, which he afterwards abandoned. In 1794 he relapsed into a state of mental derangement, and, though a pension of three hundred a year was settled upon him, he was not in a condition to feel any pleasure from the favour. After lingering out a painful existence, with short but glimmering intervals of reason, he died at Dereham, in Norfolk, 25 April, 1800. The 'Life and Letters of Cowper' were published by his friend Mr. Hayley, but Southey's Life of him is far the best.

COX, DAVID, a clever painter in water-colours, born at Birmingham 1793; died 7 June, 1859.

COX, LEONARD, a schoolmaster, was a native of Monmouth, and received his education at Cambridge, after which he became schoolmaster at Reading, next at Carleton, in his native county, and finally, it is supposed, at Coventry. He was living in 1548. Besides some translations he published 'The Art or Craite of Rhetoryke,' 1532; and 'Commentaries upon Will. Lily's construction of the eight parts of speech,' 1540. He had travelled much on the Continent, and was a friend of Erasmus and Melancthon.

COX, RICHARD, an English prelate, was born at Whaddon, Buckinghamshire, about 1500, and studied at both our universities. He then became master of Eton School, which flourished greatly under his management. In 1541 he was preferred to the archdeaconry of Ely, and for some time he acted as tutor to Edward, prince of Wales, afterwards Edward VI. He was made dean of Christ Church, Oxford, 1546. On the accession of his royal pupil he became king's almoner, and was sworn of the privy council, being shortly afterwards elected chancellor of the university of Oxford. At this period, and indeed throughout his career, he displayed great zeal for the Protestant cause. On Mary's accession, he was deprived of his preferments, and wisely took the first opportunity of leaving the country. During his exile he was engaged in some very violent and unedifying disputes with his co-religionists at Frankfurt. On the accession of Elizabeth he came back to England, and was nominated bishop of Ely, 1550. The latter years of his life were embittered by disputes, arising out of his resolute refusal to alienate the revenues of his see. Died 22 July, 1581. Bishop Cox translated the Acts of the Apostles, and St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, for the Bishop's Bible, and was one of the divines employed in revising the book of common prayer.

COX, SIR RICHARD, lord chancellor of Ireland, was born at Bandon, county Cork, 25 March, 1650. He was at first an attorney, afterwards a barrister, and in 1690 was made a judge of the court of Common Pleas, about which time he was appointed governor of Cork. In 1703 he was raised to the chancellorship, and in 1706 created a baronet, but the year following he was deprived of his office. Died 3 May, 1733. He wrote 'Hibernia Anglicana, or the History of Ireland,' 1689. His 'Autobiography' was edited by Richard Caulfield, B.A., 8vo., London, 1860.

COXCIE, MICHAEL VAN, a painter, born at Mechlin 1497; died at Antwerp 1592.

COXE, WILLIAM, an historian, was born in London 7 March, 1747, and educated at Eton School. He obtained a fellowship of King's College, Cambridge, and afterwards made three tours on the Continent, which gave rise to several of his publications. In 1786 he was presented to the living of Kingston-upon-Thames, which he resigned in 1788, on being collated to the rectory of Bemerton, Wiltshire. He became canon residentiary of Salisbury, and archdeacon of Wilts 1805; and died 8 June, 1828. Archdeacon Coxe published a large number of historical, biographical, topographical, and theological works. The principal are:—'Travels in Switzerland,' 'Travels into Poland, Russia, Sweden, and Denmark,' 'Memoirs of Sir Robert Walpole,' 'Historical Tour in Monmouthshire,' 'Memoirs of Horatio Lord Walpole,' 'History of the House of Austria,' 'Historical Memoirs of the Bourbon Kings of Spain,' 'Memoirs of John Duke of Marlborough,' 'Private and Original Correspondence of the Duke of Shrewsbury,' 'Memoirs of the Administration of Mr. Pelham,' and an 'Explanation of the Catechism of the Church of England.'

COXETER, THOMAS, was born at Lechdale, Gloucestershire, 30 Sept., 1689. He became a commoner of Trinity College, Oxford, where he wore a civilian's gown, and then came to London with a view to that profession, which, however, he abandoned in consequence of some disappointment. He now devoted himself to literary pursuits, and collected those materials which were afterwards used in what is called 'Cibber's Lives of the Poets.' He likewise assisted Ames in his 'History of British Typography,' and published a new edition of Bayly's (or rather Hall's) Life of Bishop Fisher. After this he was chosen secretary to a society for the encouragement of English history. Coxeter formed the plan of publishing a collection of old plays, which Dodsley afterwards adopted. In 1759, an edition of Massinger was published in his name. Died 19 April, 1747.

COXON, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, who died at St. Omer 7 May, 1735, aged 85. He was the editor of 'Ribadeneira's Lives of the Saints,' 1730. The translator was the Hon. William Petre, whose version first appeared in 1669.

COYER, GABRIEL FRANÇOIS, a French writer, born 1707; died 18 July, 1782. He published the 'History of John Sobieski,' 'Travels in Italy and Holland,' 'A Treatise of Education,' and a translation of 'Blackstone's Commentaries.'

COYPEL, CHARLES ANTOINE, a painter, born at Paris 1604; died 14 June, 1752. There were several other painters of the same name and family, viz., Noël (b. 1628; d. 1707); Antoine (b. 1661; d. 1722); Noël Nicolas (b. 1688; d. 1734).

COYSEVOX, ANTOINE, a French sculptor, born at Lyons 1640; died 10 Oct., 1730.

COZENS, ALEXANDER, a native of Russia, who settled in London as a landscape-painter and drawing-master. His method of sketching was very extraordinary, for he used to throw down upon several pieces of paper numerous accidental blots and loose flourishes, from which he selected forms, and sometimes produced sublime objects. He published a tract on this method of composing Landscapes, and another work entitled 'The Principles of Beauty relative to the Human Head,' 1778. The principal value of this work is in the plates, which were engraved by Bartolozzi. Mr. Cozens was also the author of some other performances. Died April, 1786. His son, John Cozens, who excelled him as a landscape painter, died in a state of mental derangement 1799.

COZZA, FRANCESCO, a painter, born at Istilo, in Calabria, 1605; died at Rome 1682.

CRACHERODE.

CRAB, ROGER, an eccentric vegetarian, whose life was published 1655, under the title of 'The English Hermit, or the Wonder of this Age; being a Relation of the Life of Roger Crab, living near Uxbridge [at Ickenham], taken from his own Mouth, shewing his strange, reserved, and unparalleled kind of life, who counteth it a Sin against his Body and Soul, to eat any Sort of Flesh, Fish, or living Creature, or to drink any Wine, Ale, or Beer. He can live with three farthings a week. His constant Food is Roots and Herbs, as Cabbage, Turnips, Carrots, Dock-Leaves, and Grass; also Bread and Bran, without Butter or Cheese. His clothing Sackcloth. He left the Army, and kept a Shop at Chesham, and hath now left off that, and sold a considerable Estate to give to the Poor; shewing his Reasons from the Scripture.' Died 11 Sept., 1680, æt. 60.

CRABB, HABAKKUK, a dissenter, born at Wattisfield, Suffolk, and educated at Daventry. He officiated at Stowmarket, and afterwards at Cirencester, and then joined his brother-in-law Fenner in the care of a school at Devizes. On the death of his friend Hanmer, he was invited by his congregation, but being accused of departing from the faith of the dissenters, he retired to Royston, where the loss of his wife and disappointment brought on a nervous fever, which hurried him to his grave 1795. He left several manuscript sermons, some of which were published after his decease.

CRABBE, GEORGE, a poet, born at Aldborough, Suffolk, 24 Dec., 1754. He was apprenticed to a surgeon, but having become enamoured of literary pursuits, he abandoned his profession 1798, and came to seek his fortune in London. In his expectation of deriving some pecuniary advantage from his poem, entitled 'The Candidate,' he was disappointed, owing to the bankruptcy of the publisher; but soon after this he had the good fortune to attract the favourable notice of Edmund Burke, who acted to him in the kindest manner, assigning him an apartment at his seat at Beconsfield, where he became a member of a family with whom it was an honour as well as a pleasure to associate. Burke examined all the young bard's compositions, and signified his approval of 'The Library' and 'The Village,' which were accordingly published. In 1782 Crabbe took priest's orders, and afterwards obtained several benefices. He died rector of Trowbridge, Wiltshire, 8 Feb., 1832. His other principal poems are 'The Newspaper,' 'The Parish Register,' 'The Borough,' and 'Dial in Verse.' Crabbe's poetry is remarkable for pathos, force, and truth in the delineation of character.

CRABTREE, or KRABTREE, HENRY, curate of Todmorden, Lancashire, was born either at Norland, or Sowerby, near Halifax, and was initiated in school learning with Archbishop Tillotson. He had the character of being a good mathematician and astronomer; and published 'Merlinus Rusticus, or a Country Almanack.' London, 1685.

CRABTREE, WILLIAM, a mathematician, carried on the business of a clothier at Broughton, near Manchester, and died at an early age, about 1642, a few months after his friend, Jeremiah Horrocks. Some of his observations are printed in Horrocks's 'Opuscula Astronomica,' 1672.

CRACHERODE, CLAYTON MORDAUNT, P.R.S., F.S.A., son of Colonel Cracherode, governor of Mi-

norca, was born at Taplow, Buckinghamshire, 23 June, 1730, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1753). Though he entered into orders, he would never accept church preferment, his fortune enabling him to live without it. He was a great collector of books, pictures, prints, and antiquities, which he bequeathed to the British Museum. His death occurred at his residence, Queen's Square, London, 6 April, 1799. He contributed Latin verses to the 'Carmina Quadragesimalia,' 1748, and to the Oxford collection on the death of Frederick, prince of Wales, 1751.

CRADDOCK, LUKE, a painter. His birds were greatly admired, and rose in value to three or four times their original price after his death. He worked generally for dealers, and refused to employ his pencil for the great. He died 1717.

CRADDOCK, JOHN, born at Wolverham, and educated at Cambridge, where he was created D.D. He was promoted to the bishopric of Kilmore 1757; translated to Dublin 1772; and died 1778.

CRADDOCK, SAMUEL, a nonconformist divine, was born in 1620, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow, and was presented to the rectory of North Cadbury, in Somersetshire, from whence he was ejected in 1662. After this he settled at Bishop Stortford, in Hertfordshire, where he died 7 Oct., 1706. His works are 'Knowledge and Practice,' a system of divinity; 'The Harmony of the Four Evangelists'; 'The Apostolical History'; 'The Old Testament History methodized'; and 'Exposition on the Revelation.'

CRADDOCK, ZACHARY, brother of the preceding, was born 1633. He was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, and in 1672 was appointed provost of Eton, in opposition to Waller, the poet. He died 16 Oct., 1695. Dr. Craddock was the author of two sermons; one on Providence and the other on the Design of Christianity.

CRAIG, ALEXANDER, a poet, whose songs, sonnets, and elegies were published at London 1606.

CRAIG, JAMES, a Scotch divine, born at Gifford, in East Lothian, 1682. He took the degree of M.A. at Edinburgh, and became minister at Yester, and next at Haddington, whence he removed to the metropolis of Scotland 1732. Died 1744. His sermons, in 3 vols., are much esteemed. He also wrote some poetry.

CRAIG, JAMES, an eminent architect of Edinburgh, where he died 23 June, 1795.

CRAIG, SIR JAMES GIBSON, was the leading partner of the firm of Messrs. Craig, Dalziel, and Brodie, writers to the signet at Edinburgh. He took a prominent part in all the great political struggles of Scotland from 1792 downwards, and was on terms of intimacy with Fox and most of the leaders of the old Whig school. As an acknowledgment of the services which he rendered to that party, he was created a baronet 1831. Died 6 March, 1850, aged 85.

CRAIG, JOHN, a Scotch divine, who attained popularity as a preacher on the side of the Reformation. He was a colleague of Knox; and died 4 Dec., 1600, aged 88.

CRAIG, JOHN, a Scotch divine and mathematician, who settled at Cambridge about 1690. He had a dispute with John Bernoulli on the quadrature of curved lines and curvilinear figures, but his most extraordinary work is 'Theologia Christiana: Principia Mathematica,' first printed 1699 at London, and afterwards at Leipsic, with a learned preface, 1755. The object of this performance is to calculate the duration of moral evidence and the authority of historical facts. By this mode, the author attempts to show that the proofs of the Christian religion will cease in a certain number of years in proportion as the force of the testimony decays. Craig died 1732.

CRAIG, or CRAIGUS, NICHOLAS, a learned Dane, regent of the school at Copenhagen, author of 'The Annals of Denmark,' 'De Republica Lacedaemoniorum,' and other works, was born about 1549, and died 14 May, 1602.

CRAIG, SIR THOMAS, was born at Edinburgh about 1548. He studied the civil law at Paris, after which he became an eminent advocate in Scotland, and was knighted by King James. He died at Edinburgh 26 Feb., 1608. His treatise entitled 'Jus Feudale' is still in great esteem; besides which he wrote a treatise on the right of James to the crown of England.

CRAIG, THOMAS, minister of the associate congregation of Whitby, Yorkshire, 1789, removed to Leeds 1793, and subsequently settled at or near Bocking. Died 1799. He published 'Three Sermons on Important Subjects,' 8vo., Whitby, 1791. His son, Thomas Craig, was for sixty-two years an independent minister at Bocking, and died 21 June, 1865, æt. 85. He published 'Funeral Sermon for Mrs. Fitch,' 8vo., Bocking, 1815; and 'Funeral Sermon for John Tabor, Esq.,' 8vo., Bocking, 1815.

CRAIG, WILLIAM, D.D., was born at Glasgow 1709, and educated in the university there. In 1737 he settled as minister of Cambusnethan, from whence he afterwards removed to Glasgow, where he officiated as minister of St. Andrew's Church. He died in 1784. Dr. Craig wrote an 'Essay on the Life of Jesus Christ;' and a volume of excellent sermons.

CRAIG, WILLIAM, son of the preceding, was born 1745, and was called to the Scotch bar. On being raised to the judicial bench he assumed the title of Lord Craig. Died 8 July, 1813. He was a contributor to the 'Mirror,' and 'Lounger;' periodicals published at Edinburgh.

CRANKANTHORPE, RICHARD, an English divine, was born at Strickland, in Westmoreland, in 1567, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. He died at his rectory of Black Notley, in Essex, in 1624. Dr. Crankanthorpe wrote some controversial pieces against the Roman Church.

CRAKELT, WILLIAM, M.A., vicar of Chalk, Kent, 1774, and also curate and master of the grammar school at Northfleet, in that county, died 21 Aug., 1812, aged 71. He published editions of Entick's Latin Dictionary, and Watson's translation of Horace.

CRAMER, DANIEL, a German Protestant divine, professor successively at Wittenberg and Stettin, author of various theological works, was born 20 Jan., 1568, and died 5 Oct., 1637.

CRAMER, FRANCIS, an accomplished musician, was born 1772, at Schwetzingen, near Mannheim, but was sent while yet an infant to London, where his father, William Cramer, and his brother John, the celebrated pianist, had settled. In 1799 he lost his father, and in the ensuing year succeeded him at the Ancient Concerts as leader, which post he held till 1844. Died 25 July, 1848.

CRAMER, GABRIEL, a mathematician of Geneva, born 31 July, 1704; died 1752.

CRAMER, JOHN ANDREW, a writer on metal-lurgy, born at Quedlinberg 14 Dec., 1710; died at Zurich 14 July, 1777. He was the first who formed the art of assaying into a system.

CRAMER, JOHN ANDREW, a German prose writer and poet of considerable merit, was divinity professor at Copenhagen and afterwards at Kiel. Born 1723; died 12 June, 1788.

CRAMER, JOHN ANTHONY, D.D., born 1793, was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1814; M.A. 1817; B.D. 1830, D.D. 1831). He was curate of Binsey, Oxfordshire, 1822-45; vice-principal of St. Alban Hall 1823-25; public orator 1829-42; principal of New Inn Hall 1831-34; professor of modern history 1842; dean of Carlisle 1844; died 24 Aug., 1848. He published 'A Dissertation on the Passage of Hannibal over the Alps,' in conjunction with his cousin, Mr. Wickham; 'A Geographical and Historical Description of Ancient Italy;' similar works on Ancient Greece and Asia Minor; 'Catena Græcorum Patrum in Novum Testamentum,' 8 vols.; 'Anecdote Græcæ Codd. MSS. Bibliothecæ Regiæ Parisiensis,' 4 vols.; 'The Travels of Nicander Nucus, of Corcyra, in England, in the reign of Henry VIII.' (Camd. Soc.); and an inaugural lecture 'On the Study of Modern History.' Dr. Cramer entirely rebuilt New Inn Hall out of his own property.—Al. West.

CRAMER, JOHN JAMES, a Swiss divine and theological writer, was first professor of the oriental languages in Zurich, and afterwards professor of divinity at Herborn. Born 24 Jan., 1673; died 9 Feb., 1702.

CRANBORNE, JAMES EMILIOUS WILLIAM EVELYN GASCOYNE, by courtesy styled VISCOUNT, eldest son of the marquis of Salisbury, was born 29 Oct., 1821, and died 14 June, 1865. He was blind from his birth, and this affliction prevented his taking that prominent position for which his rank, abilities, and character eminently qualified him. Nevertheless he took a great interest in all the leading questions of the day, and although abstaining publicly from the field of politics, exercised no inconsiderable influence in the social circles in which he mixed. He was author of a 'History of France for Children. In Letters to his Nieces,' 12mo., London, 1853; 'Biographical Sketches of Great Monarchs for Young People,' 16mo., London, 1853; and 'Historical Sketches and Reviews,' 8vo., London [1861].

CRANCH, JOHN, an artist of Bath, whose principal painting is 'The Death of Chatterton,' was born 1751, and died 1821. He wrote 'Inducements to promote the Fine Arts in Great Britain, by exciting native genius to independent effort and original designs,' 4to., 1811.

CRANE, THOMAS, a nonconformist divine, born at Plymouth, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, after which he had a living in Dorsetshire, from which he was ejected in 1662. He died in 1714. There is by him a treatise on 'Divine Providence.'

CRANE, THOMAS, an English painter, who died in London 15 July, 1859, æt. 51.

CRANLEY, THOMAS, D.D., an Englishman, became warden of New College, Oxford, and chancellor of that university. He was appointed archbishop of Dublin 1397, and also held the office of chancellor and lord justice of Ireland. Died 25 May, 1417.

CRANMER, THOMAS, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Aslacton, Nottinghamshire, 2 July,

CRANMER.

1489, being the son of Thomas Cranmer, a gentleman of a very ancient family, and Agnes, his wife, the daughter of Laurence Hatfield, of Willoughby, in the same county. He lost his father early, and in 1503 his mother sent him to Jesus College, Cambridge, where he became well grounded in logic and philosophy. He proceeded B.A. 1511-12, and was elected to a fellowship, which, however, he soon vacated by marriage. His wife was named Joan, and many years afterwards she was derisively termed Black Joan of the Dolphin. She is said to have been the daughter of a gentleman, and the niece of the landlady of the Dolphin, a tavern of good repute which stood at the Bridge Street end of what is now called All Saints' Passage, in Cambridge. After his marriage he lived with his wife at the Dolphin, and became a common reader in Buckingham College. His wife died in childbed, within a year of his marriage, and he was immediately afterwards re-elected a fellow of Jesus College. He now applied himself with diligence to the study of divinity, read through the Holy Scriptures, made himself master of the points then in controversy between the adherents of Luther and the supporters of the old religion, took orders, was appointed one of the university preachers 1520, and in 1521 proceeded B.D. He commenced D.D. 1526, and in that or the preceding year was constituted archdeacon of Taunton. The strenuous efforts now being made by Henry VIII. to obtain a divorce from Catharine of Aragon engrossed the attention of the whole realm, and the case was frequently and eagerly discussed in the universities. In Aug., 1529, the plague prevailed in Cambridge, and Dr. Cranmer retired with two pupils to the house of their father, a Mr. Cressy, situate at Waltham in Essex. The king also at the same period came to that place, and Fox, his almoner, and Gardiner, his secretary, who were in attendance on the sovereign, were lodged at Mr. Cressy's house, and met Dr. Cranmer. At supper the royal marriage was discussed, when Cranmer expressed his surprise that there should be any hesitation as to the mode of proceeding respecting it. If the marriage were unlawful in itself by virtue of any divine precept, it was certain that the Pope's dispensation could be of no force to make that lawful which God had declared to be unlawful. Therefore he thought that, instead of a long fruitless negotiation at Rome, it would be better to consult the learned men and the universities of Christendom, and if they declared against the marriage, the Pope must needs give judgment accordingly, or otherwise, the bull of dispensation being of itself null and void, the marriage would be found sinful, notwithstanding such bull. Shortly afterwards Dr. Cranmer's advice was reported to the king, who was highly pleased with it, and instantly sent for him to Greenwich. He went with apparent reluctance, but expressed himself ready to write a treatise in support of his views on the question, and even to advocate his opinions before the Supreme Pontiff himself at Rome. The king appointed him his chaplain, and directed that he should be accommodated in the house of Sir Thomas Boleyn, and there compose his treatise. The book was soon finished and published, but it is not a little singular that no copy appears to be in existence. It was, however, published in, if not before, Feb., 1529-30. In Dec. 1530 he and others were despatched as ambassadors to the Emperor and the Pope with reference to the divorce; and during his stay in Rome, his Holiness conferred on him the title of penitentiary for all England. Cranmer afterwards spent some time in Germany, and there formed an intimacy with Andrew Osiander; and it seems that it was about this time that he married Anne, a niece of Osiander. The archiepiscopal see of Canterbury became vacant by the death of Dr. Warham, 22 Aug., 1532, and Dr. Cranmer, who was then in Germany, was summoned home to become his successor. The usual papal bulls were applied for, and obtained, and Cranmer received episcopal consecration 30 March, 1533. His equivocation on this occasion is utterly indefensible. He surrendered the bulls to the king because he would not, as he said, recognize the Pope as the giver of ecclesiastical dignities, and then he took the usual oath of obedience to the see of Rome, but previously to doing so made a protestation, declaring that he intended not by the oath he was about to take to bind himself to do anything contrary to the laws of God, the king's prerogative, or to the commonwealth and statutes of the kingdom, nor to tie himself from speaking his mind freely in matters relating to the reformation of religion, the government of the Church of England, and the prerogative of the crown. It should be stated that in the interval between the death of Archbishop Warham and Dr. Cranmer's consecration he had been informed of the secret marriage of Henry to Anne Boleyn; and very soon after he was established in the primacy, he, as archbishop and legate of the apostolic see, pronounced the king's marriage with Catharine of Arragon to have been null and void ab initio, as contrary to the divine law. This sentence was given at the priory of Dunstable, 23 May, 1533. In the preceding April, Anne Boleyn had been publicly introduced to the court as queen, and her coronation had been fixed for the 1st of June. On the 28th of May the archbishop confirmed her marriage, and at her coronation placed the crown upon her head. In the same month he took a part in the examination of John Frith, who was condemned to be burnt for heresy. As soon as the Pope became acquainted with the proceedings in connection with the divorce, he issued a public instrument, declaring the whole process to be null and void, and threatening the archbishop with excommunication unless by a given day he revoked all that he had done. The archbishop, anticipating that this threat would be carried into effect, interposed an appeal to a general council. A series of legislative measures now passed in rapid succession, by which all connection with, or dependence upon, the see of Rome was ultimately broken off. These measures either originated with the primate, or obtained his hearty support. He now sent to Germany for his wife, whom, however, he was obliged to keep privately, and when the Six Articles came into operation, he was obliged to send her back, with his children, to Germany. Shortly after the commitment of Queen Anne Boleyn to the Tower, he interceded for her to the infuriated king, by a letter bearing date 3 May, 1536, but fourteen days afterwards he pronounced her marriage with the king to have been null and void, in consequence of the existence of a pre-contract with another. Subsequently he concurred in the unjust sentence given by the Convocation in favour of the king's divorce from Anne of Cleves; and in 1541 he disclosed to his Majesty the infidelities of Queen Catharine Howard. In 1544 he succeeded in effecting a great change in the forms of public devotion by the introduction of a litany in English. Various further attempts on his part at reformation were, however, defeated by the efforts of his adversaries, but he retained the steadfast friendship of the king, who gave him his ring to be produced in any moment of emergency. He attended Henry on his deathbed, and was appointed one of his executors, and also one of the regents or governors of the realm during the minority of Edward VI., whom he crowned in Westminster Abbey. The archbishop now took the lead in ecclesiastical affairs, unfettered by the adverse influences brought to bear against him in the last reign. With a view to the more complete diffusion of the principles of the Reformation, visitors were appointed for the whole kingdom, which was divided into six circuits, an eminent preacher being associated to each set of visitors. The act of the Six Articles was repealed, as were other persecuting laws, and the Mass was converted into a communion. The marriage of the clergy being now sanctioned by law, the archbishop's wife returned from Germany to reside with him again, and was publicly owned and recognized. The archbishop afterwards published his defence of the true and catholic doctrine of the sacrament of the body and blood of our Saviour Christ. This treatise contains a formal and systematic exposition of his views upon the subject, and was the commencement of a controversy which was carried on by him to the end of his life; his opponents being Bishop Gardiner and Dr. Richard Smith. In 1552 the articles of religion, substantially the same as those now in force, passed the Convocation, and the book of common prayer was revised, being reduced to nearly the same form in which it appears at the present day. When Edward VI. died the primate took the oaths to the Lady Jane Grey, though he subscribed the letter soon afterwards sent by the privy council to the duke of Northumberland, commanding him, in the name of Queen Mary, to disband his army. On the accession of Queen Mary he was committed to the Tower, where he remained till March, 1554, when he was removed with Bishop Ridley and Hugh Latimer to Oxford. In April the same year the archbishop took part in the disputations in that university concerning the sacrament of the altar, and two days afterwards, on his refusal to sign the articles tendered to him, he was condemned as a heretic. A long delay now ensued, during which the papal power was re-established, and the old laws against heresy revived, and in Sept., 1555, the archbishop was again tried on charges of blasphemy, perjury, incontinency, and heresy, and found guilty. After his condemnation he was induced to recant his opinions, but notwithstanding this it was determined to put him to death. On hearing of this Cranmer retracted his recantation, and suffered at the stake, near Balliol College, Oxford, 21 March, 1555-6. The archbishop's principal works, edited for the Parker Society by the Rev. John Edmund Cox, were printed at Cambridge, in 2 vols. 8vo., 1844 and 1846.

CRANTOR, the last philosopher of the old academy, was a native of Cilicia, and flourished about 300 B.C.

CRANWELL, JOHN, a poet, was educated at

CRASHAW.

Sidney College, Cambridge (B.A. 1747; M.A. 1751); became rector of Abbot's Kipton, Huntingdonshire; and died 17 April, 1793. He published translations of Browne's Latin poem 'On the Immortality of the Soul,' 1705; and of Bishop Vida's 'Christiad,' 1708.

CRASHAW, RICHARD, a poet, was the son of William Crashaw, B.D., preacher at the Temple, and the correspondent of Usher. The son was born in London, about 1616, and educated first at the Charter House, and next at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He afterwards obtained a fellowship at Peterhouse 1637, and in 1638 took his master's degree. In 1634 he published a volume of poems, in which is the celebrated line ascribed to Dryden:

*Nympha pudica Deum vidit et erubuit.
The modest water saw its God and blush'd.*

On entering into orders he became a popular preacher, but being expelled by the rebels, he went abroad and became a convert to the Catholic faith. From France he went to Italy, became secretary to a cardinal, and was made canon of Loreto, where he died about 1650. His poems were published in 1640, and again in 1785; but the best edition is that by William B. Turnbull, 12mo., London, 1858. Pope was much indebted to Crashaw for many of his passages.

CRASSUS, PUBLIUS LICINIUS, high priest of Rome, who went into Asia with an army against Antiochus, where he was slain, and buried at Smyrna, about 131 B.C.

CRASSUS, MARCUS LICINIUS, of the same family as the preceding, acquired immense riches by dealing in slaves. When Cinna filled Rome with his cruelties he went to Spain, and from thence to Africa, where he served under Sylla. He was sent against the revolted gladiators, who were headed by Spartacus. In this battle 12,000 of the slaves were killed, and Crassus was honoured with an ovation. He served as consul with Pompey, and entertained the Roman populace at 10,000 tables. He accepted the government of Syria, where he was defeated by the Parthians, and put to death, B.C. 53.

CRATES, an academic philosopher, who flourished 373 B.C.

CRATINUS, a native of Athens, who invented or improved comic poetry. He wrote twenty-one plays, and died B.C. 431, aged 97.

CRATON, or DE CRAFTHEIM, JOHN, chief physician to the emperor Ferdinand I., was born 20 Nov., 1519, at Breslau, where he died 9 Nov., 1585. He published some medical works, and edited Luther's Table Talk.

CRAUFORD, or CRAWFORD, DAVID, an historian; born at Drumsoy, near Glasgow, 1665. He was brought up to the bar, which he seldom attended, being fond of literary inquiries. He was appointed historiographer of Scotland, and in 1706 published 'Memoirs of the Affairs of Scotland, containing a full and impartial Account of the Revolution in that Kingdom begun in 1667.' He is also said to have written two plays, 'Courtship Alamoed,' 1700; and 'Love at First Sight,' 1704.

CRAUFURD, QUENTIN, was born at Kilwinning, Ayrshire, 22 Sept., 1743, and became president of the India Company at Manila, in which situation he amassed a considerable fortune. He afterwards travelled through various countries of Europe, and finally settled at Paris, where he died 23 Nov., 1819. Among his publications are 'Memoires de

CREAGH.

Madame Du Hausset; 'Sketches chiefly relating to the History, Religion, Learning, and Manners of the Hindoos;' 'Essais sur la Littérature Française; écrits pour l'usage d'une dame compatriote de l'auteur,' 2 vols. 4to., Paris, 1803; 3 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1815, 1818; 'History of the Bastille;' and 'Researches concerning the Laws, Theology, Learning, Commerce, &c., of ancient and modern India.'

CRAVEN, ELIZABETH, LADY. See ANSPACH.

CRAVEN, WILLIAM, D.D., was born 1731, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was Arabic professor 1770-95; master of his college 1789; and died 29 Jan., 1815. Dr. Craven published 'Sermons on the Evidence of a Future State of Rewards and Punishments,' and 'The Jewish and Christian Dispensations Compared.'

CRAWFORD, ADAIR, M.D., F.R.S., was the son of a presbyterian minister of Crumlin, near Belfast, where he was born 1748. After receiving a grammatical education under his father, he went to Glasgow with a view to the ministry, but that profession he relinquished for the study of medicine, which he pursued with ardour at Edinburgh. In 1779 he took his doctor's degree at Glasgow, and soon afterwards fixed his residence in London, where he was appointed one of the physicians to St. Thomas's Hospital. He died at Lymington, Hampshire, 29 July, 1795. Dr. Crawford was well known as a medical practitioner, and still more as a man of science. He published 'Experiments and Observations on Animal Heat,' 1779, 1788, and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions. A posthumous treatise by him, 'On the Effects of Tonics on the Animal Fibre,' was edited by his brother, Dr. Alexander Crawford.

CRAWFORD, JOHN LINDSAY, EARL OF, a British general, born 4 Oct., 1702. He received his education at Glasgow, and then embraced the profession of arms. After serving in the Imperial and Russian armies, he commanded the brigade of life-guards at the battle of Dettingen, and displayed great gallantry at the battle of Fontenoy, of which he wrote an interesting memoir. He was engaged in suppressing the rebellion of 1745 and died 25 Dec., 1749. His 'Memoirs' were published in 1769.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM, a Scotch clergyman, author of 'Dying Thoughts,' and some sermons, was born 1676; and died 1742.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM SHARMAN, sometime M.P. for Durdalk and Rochdale, was popularly known in Ireland as 'the father of the tenant-right question.' He died 16 Oct., 1861.

CRAWFURD, GEORGE, a Scotch antiquary, died 1748. His chief works are, a Genealogical History of the Stewarts, 1710; 'The Peerage of Scotland,' 1716; and the Lives and Characters of the Officers of the Crown and of the State in Scotland, 1726.

CRAYER, GASPAR, a painter, born at Antwerp 1585; died 27 Jan., 1669.

CREAGH, PETER, a Catholic prelate, was appointed bishop of Cork, then archbishop of Tuam and in 1603 archbishop of Dublin.

CREAGH, RICHARD, an Irish prelate, was a native of Limerick, and received his education at Louvain, where he entered the priesthood. The Pope appointed him to the archbishopric of Armagh. He died in the Tower of London 1585, having been imprisoned by the State. He wrote

CREBILLON.

'De Lingua Hibernica'; 'An Ecclesiastical History'; 'De Controversiis Fidei'; 'Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae'; and A Catechism in the Irish language. None of these pieces appear to have been printed.

CREBILLON, PROSPER JOLIOT DE, a dramatist, who has been designated the Æschylus of France, was born at Dijon 1674; and died 17 June, 1762. His son, Claude Prosper Joliot de Crebillon (b. 1707; d. 12 April, 1777), wrote some very fine romances.

CREDI, LORENZO SCIARPELLONI DI, a painter, born at Florence 1453; died 1531.

CREECH, THOMAS, a poet, born in Dorsetshire 1659, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford (M.A. 1683; B.D. 1696). In 1699 he obtained the living of Welwyn, Hertfordshire; but in June, 1700, he hanged himself at Oxford. He translated Lucretius into English verse 1682; Horace in 1684; Theocritus in the same year; and various other authors.

CREECH, WILLIAM, was born 1745 at Newcastle, near Edinburgh, where his father was a minister. He received his education at Dalkeith, and next at the university of Edinburgh, with a view to the medical profession, which design he abandoned for the business of a bookseller. He served his apprenticeship to Mr. Kincaid, with whom he afterwards became a partner, and eventually his successor. Mr. Creech was a fellow of the Royal Society of Scotland, and in 1811 served the office of provost of Edinburgh. Died 14 Jan., 1815. He wrote several essays on subjects connected with morals, arts, and literature, published in 1 vol. after his death.

CREED, ELIZABETH, was the daughter of Sir Gilbert Pickering, the relation of Dryden, and was born in 1642. She became the wife of John Creed, of Oundle, esquire, who died in 1701, by whom she had a numerous family. She resided at her seat near Oundle, in Northamptonshire, where she exercised herself in works of benevolence, and instructed many young women in drawing, needlework, and other fine arts. Several of the churches in that part of the country are ornamented with altar pieces of her performance. She died in May, 1728.

CRELL, LOUIS CHRISTIAN, a German divine, professor of philosophy at Leipsic, was born 1671, and died 15 Nov., 1735.

CRELLIUS, JOHN, professor of Greek at Cracow, was born in Franconia 1590, and died 11 June, 1633. He wrote numerous books in defence of Socinianism.

CREMONESE. See CALETTI.

CREMONINI, CÆSAR, an Italian philosopher and professor at Ferrara and Padua, born at Cento, in the Modenese, in 1550, and died at Padua at the age of eighty. He wrote some philosophical treatises in Italian, all agreeable to the Aristotelian system.

CRENIUS, THOMAS, a voluminous writer of Brandenburg, who died at Leyden 29 March, 1728, aged 89. He wrote chiefly on philosophical subjects.

CRESCENTIUS, PETER, or, as he called himself, De Crescentius, was born at Bologna 1233. He was an eminent lawyer in his native country, and amused himself by the improvement of agriculture, on which subject he wrote a treatise, entitled 'Ruralia Commoda,' the first edition of which appeared in 1471 at Augsburg. Died 1320.

CRESCENZI, JOHN BAPTIST, marquis de la

CREVIER.

Torre, an architect and painter, born at Rome 1595; died at Madrid 1660.

CRESCIMBENI, JOHN MARIO, an Italian poet, born at Macerata, in Ancona, 1663. He was the founder of the Arcadian Society, and on entering into orders obtained some ecclesiastical preferments. Died 8 March, 1728. Among his works the principal are, 'Kime di Alfesiben Cario' (his Arcadian name); 'Istoria della Volgar Poesia,' 6 vols.; History of the Academy of Arcadi, with the Lives of its principal members, 7 vols.

CRESPI, DANIEL, a painter of Milan, born 1592; died 1630.

CRESPI, GIUSEPPE MARIA, a Bolognese painter, called Il Spagnuolo, born 1665; died 1747.

CRESPIGNY, PHILIP CHAMPION, king's proctor and afterwards M.P. for Sudbury, died at Bath 1 Jan., 1803, æt. 80. He was a writer in the 'World,' and was much courted on account of his conversational wit and social pleasantry.

CRESSWELL, SIR CRESSWELL, an English judge, born 1794, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. In 1842 he was appointed a justice of the Common Pleas, and in 1858, on the establishment of the new court for causes connected with matrimony, divorce, and wills, he was appointed its first judge. Died 29 July, 1863.

CRESSWELL, JOSEPH, a Jesuit, born in London, became successively rector of the English colleges at Rome and Valladolid, and vice-pretect of the mission, both in Spain and Flanders. He died at Ghent 19 Feb., 1623, æt. 65. He wrote a Latin treatise 'De Vita Beatâ,' a treatise against the cruel proclamation of Queen Elizabeth, bearing date 29 Nov., 1591; another against King James's proclamation of 1610; 'Meditations on the Rosary'; Account of the Martyrdom of Father Henry Walpole; a Spanish translation of Father William Bath's Treatise on Penance; a translation into English and Spanish of Salvian's book 'Quis Dives salvus?' and 'A Preparation for administering, with profit, the Sacraments of Penance and the Eucharist.'—Dodd; Oliver.

CRESSY, HUGH PAULINUS, or SERENUS, D.D., a Catholic divine, was born at Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1605, and educated at Merton College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and became fellow. Having entered into orders he became chaplain to Lord Falkland, whom he accompanied to Ireland, and obtained the deanery of Leighlin, to which was added afterwards a canonry of Windsor. In 1644 he went to Rome, where he renounced the Protestant religion. He next entered among the Benedictines at Douay, on which occasion he took the name of Serenus. At the Restoration he returned to England and became chaplain to the queen of Charles II. He died at East Grinstead, Sussex, 10 Aug., 1674. He was the author of 'The Church History of Brittany, from the beginning of Christianity to the Norman conquest,' folio, Rouen, 1668. Besides this he wrote several controversial pieces, some of which were answered by Lord Clarendon and Dr. Stillingfleet.

CRESTI, DOMENICO, a painter, called Il Passignano, from the place of his birth, a village near Florence. He was a disciple of Zuccherò, and painted history and portrait. Born 1558; died 1638.

CRETI, DONATO, a painter, born at Cremona 1671; died 1749.

CREVIER, JEAN BAPTISTE LOUIS, a French histrian, born 1693. He was professor of rhetoric at Paris, and the pupil of Rollin, whose Roman History he completed. He also wrote a History of the Roman Emperors, and published an edition of Livy. Died 1 Dec., 1765.

CREW, NATHANIEL, an English prelate, was the son of John Lord Crew, and was born at Stean, Northamptonshire, 31 Jan., 1633. He received his education at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. After the Restoration he entered into orders, and in 1663 took his degree of D.C.L. In 1668 he was elected rector of his college, and the next year preferred to the deanery of Chichester, which he held with the precentorship. In 1671 he was advanced to the bishopric of Oxford, whence in 1674 he was translated to Durham, for which preferment he was indebted to James duke of York, whose measures, after his accession to the throne, he supported, and sat in the ecclesiastical commission. When the bishop saw that his master's ruin was approaching, he began to alter his conduct, and in the Convention Parliament voted that James had abdicated the throne. Notwithstanding this he was excepted out of the pardon granted by William and Mary; on which he absconded for some time, but at last he was suffered to retain his see. In 1691 he succeeded to the family title on the death of his brother. Died 18 Sept., 1722.

CREWE, SIR RANDOLPH, was constituted lord chief justice of England 26 Jan., 1624, but two years later was removed in consequence of his not promoting the loan. He died 1642.

CREWE, RANDOLPH, an ingenious artist, was the son of Sir Cliphys Crewe, of Cheshire, and nephew of the preceding. He was attacked by assassins at Paris, and died of his wounds 21 Sept., 1657, at the early age of 27. According to Fuller 'he drew a map of Cheshire so exactly with his pen, that a judicious eye would mistake it for printing, and the graver's skill and industry could hardly improve it.'

CREYGHTON, or CRICHTON, ROBERT, a native of Scotland, was educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, 1613. He became Greek professor 1625; public orator 1627; chaplain to Charles I. and Charles II.; dean of Wells 1660; bishop of Bath and Wells 1670; died 21 Nov., 1672, aged 77. Bishop Creyghton was a very learned man, a famous Greek scholar, and richly endowed with the gift of eloquence. His greatest work is the translation from the Greek into Latin of Sylvester Scrupulus' History of the Council of Florence, 1600.—Al. West.; Cole's MSS.

CREYGHTON, ROBERT, D.D., son of the preceding, was elected from Westminster School to Trinity College, Cambridge, 1655. He was Greek professor 1662-63; chaplain in ordinary to the king; and chaunter and canon of Wells. He spent much of his time in composing church music, and was author of the well-known anthem 'Father, I have sinned.' He also published some sermons; and died 1733-4, aged 97.

CRICHTON, SIR ALEXANDER, M.D., F.R.S., a celebrated physician, was a native of Scotland, and lived near Sevenoaks, Kent, 4 June, 1866, aged 93. He was for many years physician in ordinary to Alexander I., emperor of Russia.

CRICHTON, GEORGE, a Scotchman, professor of Greek at Paris in the seventeenth century, composed several Latin poems and orations.

CRICHTON, JAMES, a celebrated Scotchman, of whom so many wonderful things are related as to have procured him the name of 'The Admirable Crichton.' He was born 1561, in the county of Perth, of a good family, and educated at St. Andrew's, where he made a rapid progress in the languages and sciences. At the age of twenty he visited Paris, where he acquired uncommon reputation as a disputant, and for his skill and activity in games of all sorts, as well as martial exercises. He next went to Rome, and displayed his talents in the presence of the Pope and cardinals. Thence he travelled to Venice, where he became intimate with the learned Aldus Manutius, who dedicated to him the Paradoxes of Cicero in a strain of highflown panegyric, which borders on the ridiculous. At Padua he held disputations with the most learned professors on a number of subjects, but particularly on the Aristotelian philosophy. We next find him at Mantua, where he is reported to have slain a famous fencing-master in a duel, who had never been foiled before. The duke of Mantua was so pleased with Crichton that he appointed him tutor to his son, who was a very licentious young man. This appointment, however, proved fatal to Crichton; for one night, as he was walking through the streets in carnival time, he was attacked by six assassins, and, after a gallant defence, lost his life. It is said that the prince who gave him the fatal stroke was the person his pupil. This event occurred in 1583. Four of his Latin poems are extant; but they are so devoid of merit as to lead to the inference that Crichton's eulogistic biographers were guilty of gross exaggeration.

CRICHTON, WILLIAM, a Scotch Jesuit, much employed in diplomatic transactions, was living at Paris in 1615. To his misplaced confidence may be principally ascribed the failure of Pope Pius IV.'s secret embassy to Mary Queen of Scots.

CRILLON, LOUIS DE BERTHON DE, a French general, born 1541; died 2 Dec., 1615.

CRILLON-MAHON, LOUIS DE BERTHON DES BALBES DE QUIERS, duc DE, born 1718, became distinguished in the Seven Years' War, but afterwards quitted the service of France for that of Spain. In the war between England and Spain he took Minorca, though in his attempts to reduce Gibraltar he was more unfortunate, and saw all his measures baffled by the superior valour of the English and of General Elliot. Died 1796.

CRINESIUS, CHRISTOPHER, a Bohemian divine of the Lutheran persuasion, born 1584; died 28 Aug., 1629. He wrote several works on the oriental languages.

CRINITUS, or RICCI, PETER, professor of the belles lettres at Florence, was born about 1465, and died about 1505. He wrote the Lives of the Latin Poets, and a piece entitled 'De Honestâ Disciplinâ.'

CRISP, STEPHEN, a Quaker, who died at Wandsworth, Surrey, 28 June, 1692. His works were printed in a collected form, 4to., London, 1694.

CRISP, THOMAS, D.D., was born in London 1600, and educated first at Eton and next at Cambridge, whence he removed to Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree. In 1627 he obtained the rectory of Newington, in Surrey, which he quitted soon afterwards for that of Brinkworth, Wiltshire. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he went to London, where he died 27 Feb., 1642-3. He was the head of the Antinomians; but his sermons, entitled 'Christ alone Exalted,' 3 vols. 4to., were not published till after his death, when they occasioned as much controversy as the author did in his lifetime.

CRISPE, Sir NICHOLAS, a merchant of London, eminent for his loyalty to King Charles I., was born 1598, and died 26 Feb., 1604-5.

CRISPUS, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian divine, who died in the kingdom of Naples 1595. He wrote the Life of Sannazarius; 'De Ethnicis Philosophis caute legendis;' and Italian poems.

CRITOPULUS, METHROPHANES, a Greek, who came to England in Archbishop Abbot's time, with a view of being instructed in the doctrine and discipline of the Established Church. Upon his arrival he addressed himself to that prelate, who placed him in Balliol College, Oxford, where he studied Latin and English. In 1622 he returned to his own country; and upon Cyrill's advancement to the patriarchate of Constantinople, he succeeded him in that of Alexandria. Died 1658. He is said to have been the author of the 'Confession of Faith,' published in Greek, 1629, under the name of Cyrill.

CRITTENDEN, JOHN JAY, an American statesman, died 26 July, 1863.

CRIVELLARI, BARTOLOMEO, a sculptor and engraver of Venice, born 1725; died 1777.

CROESE, GERRARD, a Protestant divine of Amsterdam, author of the History of the Quakers and of 'Homerus Hebraeus.' Born 1642; died 10 May, 1710.

CROFT, GEORGE, D.D., was born at Beamsley, Yorkshire, 1747, and educated at University College, Oxford, whereof he became a fellow. Taking orders, he obtained the vicarage of Arncliffe, and the rectory of Thwing, in his native county. He was also head master of Brewod School, Staffordshire, and for eighteen years lecturer of St. Martin's, Birmingham, where he died 11 May, 1809. He published 'Eight Sermons preached before the University of Oxford,' 1786, being the Bampton Lectures; 'The Test Laws defended,' a sermon, 1790; 'Plans of Parliamentary Reform proved to be visionary,' 1793; 'Thoughts concerning the Methodists and the Established Church,' 1795; and 'A short Commentary, with Strictures, on certain parts of the Moral Writings of Dr. Paley and Mr. Gisborne,' 1797.

CROFT, Sir HERBERT, was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and was a member of Parliament in the latter part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. On King James I. coming to the crown, he waited upon his Majesty at St. Theobald's, and was honoured with knighthood. After he had lived fifty-two years in profession of the Protestant religion, he became a member of the Catholic Church, and retiring to Douay, had an apartment in the monastery of the English Benedictines, and, as some say, became a lay brother of the order. This happened in 1617. He died at Douay 10 April, 1622. Sir Herbert wrote 'Letters persuasive to his wife and children in England, to take upon them the Catholick Religion;' 'Arguments to shew that the Church in Communion with the See of Rome, is the true Church;' against Doctor Field his four Books of the Church;' 'Reply to the Answer of his Daughter M. C. [Mary Croft] which she made to a Paper of his, sent to her concerning the Roman Church.' All these pieces were published together in one volume at Douay about 1619, but only eight copies were printed.

CROFT, HERBERT, an English bishop, the third son of the preceding, was born 18 Oct., 1603, at Great Milton, near Thame, in Oxfordshire. He went with his father to Flanders, and was placed by him in the English college at St. Omer; but on returning to England to settle some affairs in 1622, he became acquainted with Bishop Morton, who reconciled him to the Church of England. He then went to Oxford, and was admitted a student of Christ Church, where he proceeded to his degree of B.D., and became rector of Harding in the same county. In 1639 he was presented to a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury, and the year after took his doctor's degree, at which time he became prebendary of Worcester, and canon of Windsor. In 1644 he was nominated dean of Hereford; but the troubles coming on, he suffered much for his loyalty. At the Restoration he was made bishop of Hereford, and in 1667 dean of the Chapel Royal, which latter place he resigned, and retired to his diocese. In 1675 he printed a tract entitled Naked Truth pleading for Toleration of Protestant Dissenters; and in 1685 Animadversions on Dr. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, besides which he published some sermons and religious pieces. Died at Hereford 18 May, 1691.

CROFT, Sir HERBERT, Bart., was born in London in 1751, and educated at University College, Oxford, where he obtained his degree of bachelor of laws, after which he became a student of Lincoln's Inn. In 1782 he relinquished the bar, and took orders, but never enjoyed any ecclesiastical preferment. He acquired some celebrity by a romance entitled 'Love and Madness,' founded on the melancholy cases of Chatterton and Hackman. He also communicated a memoir of Young to Dr. Johnson, who inserted it in his Lives of the Poets. It is, however, an unsatisfactory sketch on an interesting subject. Mr. Croft also published proposals for an enlarged edition of Johnson's Dictionary, but never completed it. He published some trifling pamphlets besides, but they are not worth enumerating. He died at Paris 27 April, 1816, and was succeeded by Dr. Richard Croft, the celebrated accoucheur, who shot himself in 1818.

CROFT, WILLIAM, Mus. D., was born at Nether-Eaton, Warwickshire, about 1657. He was educated under Dr. Blow, whom he succeeded as master of the children, composer of the chapel-royal, and organist of Westminster Abbey. In 1712 he published his 'Divine Harmony;' and in 1715 was created doctor in music at Oxford. In 1724 appeared his 'Musica Sacra,' in 2 vols. He died in August, 1727.

CROFTON, ZACHARY, a nonconformist divine, born in Ireland, and educated at Dublin. At the Restoration he was ejected from the living of St. Botolph, Aldgate. He was afterwards committed to the Tower for writing in defence of the solemn league and covenant; but on petitioning the king he was released. In 1667 he set up a school near Aldgate, and died about 1672. He printed several controversial pieces.

CROFTS, THOMAS, M.A., an eminent book collector, chancellor of the diocese of Peterborough, and rector of Donyat, Somersetshire, died at Milton, Northamptonshire, 1781.

CROIX, or DE CROI, JEAN, a Protestant minister of Uzez, author of some theological works in Latin, died 31 Aug., 1659.

CROIX.

CROIX, JEAN BAPTISTE DE LA, the second bishop of Quebec, went to Canada 1685. He founded three hospitals; and died 1777.

CROIX-DU-MAINE, FRANÇOIS GRUDÉ DE LA, a French bibliographer, who collected an immense library, and published an account of all French writers. Born 1552; died 1592.

CROKE, SIR ALEXANDER, D.C.L., F.S.A., was born at Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire, 22 July, 1758, and educated at a private school at Bierton in that county. In 1776 he commenced residence at Oriel College, Oxford, whence he removed in 1780 to the Middle Temple, and in due course was called to the bar. Afterwards he took the degrees of B.C.L. and D.C.L., and was admitted an advocate in Doctors' Commons. In 1801 he was appointed judge of the vice-admiralty court at Halifax in Nova Scotia. He returned to England 1815, and was knighted in the following year. He spent the remainder of his life in retirement at his seat at Studley Priory; and died 27 Dec., 1842. His principal works are 'Remarks on Mr. Schlegel's Work upon the Visitation of Neutral Vessels under Convoy,' 1801; 'An Examination of the Rev. Mr. Burke's Letter of Instruction to the Catholic Missionaries of Nova Scotia,' published under the pseudonym of Robert Stanser, Halifax, 1804; 'The Genealogical History of the Croke Family,' 2 vols. 4to., Oxford, 1823; 'An Essay, with various Specimens, on Rhyming Latin Verse,' 8vo., Oxford, 1828; 'Regimen Sanitatis Sacramentum, with an Introduction and Notes,' 8vo., Oxford, 1830; 'The Patriot Queen,' 8vo., London, 1838; 'The Progress of Idolatry, a Poem; with other Poems,' 2 vols., Oxford, 1841; and 'An Essay on the Consolato del Mare, an ancient Code of Maritime Law.' A volume of Reports of cases decided by him at Halifax was published at London by James Stewart, 1814.

CROKE, or CROOKE, SIR GEORGE, an English judge, was born at Chilton, Buckinghamshire, 1559, and educated at Thame School, whence he removed to University College, Oxford, and next to the Inner Temple. In 1623 he was knighted and made king's serjeant; and the next year appointed one of the justices of the Common Pleas, which office he held till 1628, when he succeeded Sir John Doderidge in the King's Bench. He gained great credit in 1636 by taking the part of Hampden on the question of ship-money, after which he retired from public employment. Died 15 Feb., 1641. His Reports were published 1685, 3 vols. folio, and reprinted 1792, 4 vols. 8vo.

CROKE, JOHN, was born at Easington, Buckinghamshire; educated at King's College, Cambridge; appointed a master in chancery 1549; and died 2 Sept., 1554. He wrote 'Ordnances upon the estate of the Chancery Courte,' printed in S. R. A. Croke's 'Genealogical History;' and 'Thirteen Psalms and the First Chapter of Ecclesiastes, translated into English verse,' London (Percy Soc.), 1844.

CROKE, RICHARD, D.D., was born in London, in or about 1480, and educated first at Eton, and next at King's College, Cambridge. He afterwards went abroad, and was the first public professor of the Greek language at Cologne, Louvain, Leipsic, and Dresden. In 1517 he proceeded M.A. at Cambridge, and about that time became preceptor to the king in the Greek language. He commenced reading public Greek lectures at Cambridge 1518, and such was his renown for learning and eloquence that, when the office of public orator of the university was instituted in 1522, he was the first person elected to that honourable and dignified position. Shortly afterwards he was elected a fellow of St. John's College, having also a stipend from Bishop Fisher for reading a Greek lecture in that house. After being sent to Italy to forward the king's divorce, Dr. Croke was presented to the rectory of Long Buckby, Northamptonshire, and constituted a canon of King's College (now Christ Church), Oxford. He afterwards resided in Exeter College in that university; but died in London August, 1558. Dr. Croke, whose knowledge of Greek was so profound that he was generally termed the Grecian, was author of 'Encomium Acad. Lipsiensis;' 'Orationes duæ, altera a cura quæ utilitatem laudemque Græcæ linguæ tractat, altera a tempore qua hortatus est Cantabrigienses, ne dessetores essent ejusdem;' 'Introductiones in rudimenta Græcæ;' 'Elementa Grammaticæ Græcæ;' and several translations.

CROKER, JOHN WILSON, a politician and author, was born in the county of Galway 20 Dec., 1780, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, being afterwards called to the Irish bar. In 1808 he was returned to the House of Commons by the borough of Downpatrick, and he soon acquired a parliamentary reputation, in consequence of a speech which he delivered in defence of the duke of York. This led to his appointment, in 1809, as secretary to the Admiralty, a post which he held till 1830. During this period he represented successively Downpatrick, Athlone, Yarmouth, Bodmin, and Dublin University. In Dec., 1832, Mr. Croker retired from parliamentary life on account of his disgust and apprehension at the passing of the Reform Bill. His long official services were rewarded with a pension of £1,500 a year. Thenceforward he devoted himself exclusively to literary pursuits, and resided for the most part at Moulsey, near Hampton Court, where he ended his days 10 Aug., 1857. Mr. Croker was always a consistent supporter, both with his tongue and his pen, of extreme Conservative doctrines, and never lost an opportunity of attacking his opponents with the utmost rancour and malignity. He was a constant contributor to the 'Quarterly Review,' and likewise published a number of separate works. The more important are an edition of Boswell's 'Life of Johnson,' for which he received a severe lashing at the hands of Macaulay; 'Stories from the History of England;' 'A Sketch of Ireland, past and present;' 'A Reply to the Letters of Malachi Malagrowther;' 'Military Events of the French Revolution of 1830;' 'Letters on the Naval War with America;' 'Songs of Trafalgar;' some lyrical poems of merit, including some fine 'Lines on the Death of Canning.' He also edited 'The Suffolk Papers;' 'Lady Hervey's Letters;' 'Lord Hervey's Memoirs of the Reign of George II.;' and the 'Works of Pope.'

CROKER, TEMPLE HENRY, a native of Cork, was born about 1730, and educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, though he graduated M.A. at Oxford. He was rector of Igham, Kent, 1769-73, and afterwards of St. John's, Capisterre, St. Christopher's, in the West Indies. He published 'Orlando Furioso' in Italian and English, 2 vols., 1755; 'Bower detected as an Historian,' 1758; an English metrical translation of the Satires of Ariosto, 1759; 'Experimental Magnetism, or the Truth of Mr. Mason's Discoveries

In that branch of Natural Philosophy approved and ascertained,' 1761; and four sermons, 1790.—Al. West.

CROKER, THOMAS CROFTON, F.S.A., an Irish antiquary, born 1798. He was apprenticed to a firm of merchants in Cork, but in 1819 he received an appointment in the Admiralty, through Mr. John Wilson Croker, to whom, however, he was in no way related. He retired on a pension 1850, and died at his house in Old Brompton 8 Aug., 1854. Mr. Croker was an accomplished antiquary and a clever artist. Among his publications are 'Researches in the South of Ireland'; 'The Fairy Legends and Traditions of the South of Ireland'; 'Legends of the Lakes; or Sayings and Doings at Killarney,' collected chiefly from the MSS. of R. A. Lynch; two novels, 'The Adventures of Barney Mahoney,' and 'My Village versus Our Village'; 'Journal of a Tour through Ireland in 1644,' translated from the French of M. de la Boullaye le Gouz; 'Memoir of Joseph Holt, General of the Irish Rebels in 1798'; 'The Popular Songs of Ireland.' He also edited several works illustrative of Irish History for the Camden and Percy Societies.

CROLL, FRANCIS, an engraver of Edinburgh, died 12 Feb., 1854, aged 27.

CROLY, GEORGE, LL.D., was born in Dublin 1780, and educated at Trinity College, after which he obtained an Irish curacy, but being disappointed with regard to Church preferment, he came to London, and turned his attention altogether to secular literary pursuits. His contributions to the press, as editor, coadjutor, or voluntary ally, during forty years, would occupy a space that would astonish even the most laborious of his literary contemporaries. The 'Standard,' 'Morning Herald,' 'Universal Review,' and many other periodicals were the recipients of these valuable compositions; and yet he published a large number of separate works, and for a quarter of a century devoted himself, with untiring energy, to the discharge of his functions as rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, to which he was presented in 1835. He published numerous theological works, and in fiction also he shone with pre-eminent lustre. His picture of the Wandering Jew in 'Salathiel' is one of the most striking efforts ever seen in that class of literature. Dr. Croly died suddenly, while walking in Holborn, 24 Nov., 1860.—Ann. Reg.

CROMBIE, ALEXANDER, LL.D., F.R.S., a Presbyterian minister, for many years a schoolmaster of high reputation at Greenwich, was born at Aberdeen 1760, and died 11 June, 1840. He published 'An Essay on Philosophical Necessity,' 1793; 'Etymology and Syntax of the English Language Explained,' 1802; 'Gymnasium, sive Symbola Critica,' 2 vols., 1812; 'Letters on the Present State of the Agricultural Interest,' 1816.

CROMPTON, SIR CHARLES, one of the justices of the Court of Queen's Bench, was born 1797; and died 30 Oct., 1805. He published some legal reports.

CROMPTON, HUGH, an English poet, who published 'Poems, being a Fardle of Fancies, or a Medley of Musick, stewed in four Ounces of the Oyl of Epigrams,' 8vo., London, 1657; and 'Perides, or the Muses Mount,' 8vo., London, 1658.

CROMPTON, SAMUEL, an inventor, was born at Erwood, near Bolton, Lancashire, 3 Dec., 1753, being the son of a farmer, who also followed the occupation of a carder and spinner. At the age of five he lost his father, but his mother gave him as good an education as she could. He was placed with his uncle at the mansion called the Hall in the Wood, and here he worked at the loom, and devoted his spare time to study. In 1774, when 21 years old, he began his first essay in a new spinning-machine, which was originally called 'Hall's th' Wood Wheel,' or 'Musin Wheel,' but finally grew into public estimation and public adoption under the name of the 'Mule,' from its partaking of the two leading features of Arkwright's machine and Hargreaves' spinning-jenny. It took Crompton five years and every sixpence he had to perfect his idea, working as he did alone, without help of sympathy or aid of any kind, and only able to work far into the night, when his regular day's weaving was over. After all he cleared only about £60 by his wonderful invention; and died poor, 26 June, 1827.

CROMPTON, WILLIAM, a nonconformist divine, born at Barnstaple, Devonshire, and educated at Oxford, where he took the degree of M.A. He obtained the living of Collumpton, in his native county, from which he was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity, but continued to preach till his death in 1696. He wrote a Remedy against Superstition, and other pieces.

CROMWELL, OLIVER, was the son of Robert Cromwell, the second son of Sir Henry Cromwell, of Hinchinbrooke, Huntingdonshire. The father of the protector carried on the business of a brewer at Huntingdon, which, however, was chiefly entrusted to his wife, Elizabeth, sister of Sir Robert Stewart of the Isle of Ely. Oliver was born at Huntingdon 25 April, 1599, and educated at the grammar school there, from whence he was removed to Sidney College, Cambridge, in 1616; but returned home on the death of his father. After this he went to Lincoln's Inn, where, instead of studying the law, he indulged in various excesses, and dissipated the property which had been left him by his father. At the age of 21 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Boucher, of Essex, soon after which he settled at Huntingdon and became a zealous Puritan. In 1628 he was elected into parliament, where he displayed great zeal against the Established Church, and, with some others, formed a scheme of going to New England; but this design was frustrated by the royal proclamation. In the Long Parliament he was returned for the town of Cambridge. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he raised a troop of horse, and going to Cambridge, acted there with great severity to the loyal members of the university, for which, however, he received the thanks of the house, and was first raised to the rank of colonel, and next to that of lieutenant-general. In the battle of Marston Moor, fought 3 July, 1644, his cavalry obtained the name of Ironsides; and in that of Newbury, which followed soon after, Cromwell made so desperate a charge upon the king's guards, as decided the fortune of the day. He was now regarded as the head of his party, and by his means the self-denying ordinance passed, which excluded all the members of either house, with the exception of himself, from having any military command. He now became lieutenant-general of the army, and at the battle of Naseby, 14 June, 1645, completely ruined the royal cause. When the king was betrayed by the Scotch, Cromwell saw that his advantage lay in getting him into his own hands, and this he accomplished by his agent, Cornet Joyce, who seized his majesty at Holmby, 4 June, 1647, and conducted him to the head-quarters of the army. Charles for some time thought himself safe, but at length his fears prevailed, and he fled to the Isle of Wight. It is needless to relate what followed, for the share which the usurper had in the murder of the monarch is established beyond all doubt. In 1649 Cromwell went over to Ireland, which country he completely subdued, and then returned in triumph. The Scots having now invited home Charles II., prepared for an invasion of England, on which Cromwell entered their country, and, Sept. 3, 1650, gained the victory of Dunbar. This, however, did not prevent the Scotch from crossing the borders, and on the same day of the month, in the next year, was fought the battle of Worcester, which dispersed the royalists, and obliged the king to return to France. From this time Cromwell made no secret of his views, and on 30 April, 1653, he entered the House of Commons with his soldiers, pulled the speaker out of the chair, bade his men take away that bauble, the mace, and then locked up the doors. The government being now vested in a council of officers solely under his control, he was invited to take upon himself the sovereign authority, and accordingly he was proclaimed protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland. His conduct in this station was vigorous, and he applied himself to the management of public affairs with equal diligence and judgment. Notwithstanding this, and the military power with which he was surrounded, he saw a spirit of disaffection rising against him; on which account he called a parliament, but it was soon dissolved, and the protector found himself beset by enemies of various descriptions, of whom the old republicans were the most to be dreaded. Amidst this disquietude he declared war against Spain, and sent Blake to the Mediterranean, where that great commander gained so many achievements, as considerably enriched the public treasury, while Penn, in the West Indies, added Jamaica to the English possessions. By a treaty with France, Cromwell stipulated to send forces into the Low Countries, and his successes abroad now made him ambitious of the title of king. A plan to this effect was proposed, and a parliament convened to carry it into execution: but the usurper, finding that it was disapproved of by his friends, pretended to decline the offer as being against his own conscience. However, his second inauguration as protector took place in Westminster Hall with as much pomp as if it had been a coronation, 26 June, 1657. The same year the usurper was much annoyed by a pamphlet called 'Killing no Murder,' in which the author boldly maintained that one who had violated all law had forfeited all right to life. The troubles of Oliver now accumulated, and the death of his daughter, Mrs. Claypole, with her reproaches, made a deep impression upon his mind. He fell into a deep melancholy, and at last became delirious; notwithstanding which, his chaplains declared that he would certainly recover. He died at Whitehall 3 Sept., 1658; and some days afterwards his funeral was celebrated with more than royal pomp in Henry the Seventh's Chapel, Westminster Abbey; but after the Restoration the body was taken up, suspended at Tyburn, and buried under the gallows. He had six children, viz., Richard, Henry, Bridget, Elizabeth, Mary, and Frances. Richard succeeded him in the protectorate; but when affairs turned, and he found his post no longer tenable, he resigned, and went abroad. He died at Cheshunt in 1712. Henry, who had been lord-lieutenant in Ireland under his father, and bore a good character, died in 1674. Bridget married first Iretton and afterwards Fleetwood. Elizabeth married John Caypole, Esq., of Northamptonshire. Mary married Lord Fauconberg, and died in 1712. Frances married first a grandson of the earl of Warwick, and secondly, Sir John Russell of Cambridgeshire.

CROMWELL, OLIVER, a solicitor of Essex Street, Strand, London; died at Cheshunt, Hertfordshire, 31 May, 1821, aged 79. He published 'Memoirs of the Protector Oliver Cromwell, and his sons Richard and Henry, illustrated by original Letters and other Family Papers. With six portraits, from original pictures,' 4to., London, 1820; 3rd edition, 2 vols. 8vo., 1823.

CROMWELL, THOMAS, earl of Essex. See ESSEX.

CRONEGK, JOHN FREDERICK, baron DE, a native of Anspach, distinguished by his elegant poetry. Born 1731; died 31 Dec., 1758.

CRÖNSTEDT, AXEL FREDERICK, a Swedish mineralogist, born 1722; died 19 Aug., 1765. His Essay on Mineralogy has been translated into English.

CROON, or CROUNE, WILLIAM, M.D., a physician, was born in London, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1659 he was chosen professor of rhetoric at Gresham College; and at the Restoration he was appointed registrar of the Royal Society. He was also created doctor of physic by royal mandate; and through the interest of Mr. Evelyn, he became travelling tutor to the honourable Mr. Howard, son of the duke of Norfolk. In 1670 he was chosen lecturer in anatomy to the Company of Surgeons, on which he resigned his professorship. In 1675 he was admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians. He died 12 Oct., 1684. Dr. Croon published a piece, entitled 'De ratione motus musculorum,' 4to.; and some papers of his are in the Philosophical Transactions. He founded a course of algebraic lectures in seven colleges at Cambridge, and also a yearly anatomical lecture in the Royal Society.

CROSBY, BRASS, lord mayor of London, was born at Stockton-upon-Tees in 1725, and early came to London, where he practised as an attorney. He in 1764 was elected sheriff, the next year alderman, and in 1770 lord mayor. In this high office he opposed the court in the prosecution of Wheble and other printers; and he supported Wilkes and Oliver, for which he was sent to the Tower. During his confinement his conduct was applauded by the city, and various addresses came to him from some counties. He was released by the prorogation of parliament, and conducted to the Mansion House in great pomp by the populace, and honoured by the thanks of the corporation, and the vote of a cup of £100 value. He died 14 Feb., 1793.

CROSS, or MORE, JOHN, D.D., a native of Norfolk, who became a Franciscan friar, and established a community of his brethren in Lincoln's Inn Fields, which was dispersed on the accession of William III. Died before 13 May, 1691. He wrote 'Philothea's Pilgrimage to Perfection, described in a 'Practice of Ten Days Solitude,' 8vo., Bruges, 1668; 'A Sermon preached before the King and Queen on the Feast of the Holy Patriarch St. Benedict, 1686; a treatise 'De Juramento Fidelitatis; another, 'De Dialectica; 'An Apology for the Contemplations on the Life and Glory of Holy Mary the Mother of Jesus,' 12mo., London, 1687; and 'Divine Poems.'—Dodd; Oliver.

CROSS, JOHN, an English painter, whose noble picture of 'Richard I. pardoning the Archer,' is preserved in the Houses of Parliament, died 26 Feb., 1861.

CROSS, MICHAEL, an English painter, who is said to have been sent by Charles I. to copy several pictures in Italy, and having obtained leave to copy Raphael's Madonna in St. Mark's church at Venice, he left his own piece behind him and carried off the original. This picture was bought by the Spanish ambassador, and is now in the Escorial. A painter named Lewis Cross was also a good copyist, and died in 1724.

CROSS, NICHOLAS, a Franciscan friar, some time chaplain to Anne (Hyde) duchess of York, was born in Derbyshire, and died at Douay 21 March, 1698, æt. 83. He published 'The Cynosura; or, a saving Star that leads to Eternity discovered amidst the celestial Orbs of David's Psalms, by Way of Paraphrase upon the Miserere,' fol., London, 1670; and a sermon 'On the Joys of Heaven,' preached before the queen at Windsor, 21 April, 1686.

CROSS, WILLIAM, an English clergyman, proprietor of a school at Turnham Green, died 23 Aug., 1860, aged 58. He was author of 'Initia Latina,' 1841; 'Initia Græca,' 1846; 'Oral Exercises for Beginners in Latin Composition,' 1841; 'Feeling and Fancies,' poems chiefly lyrical, 1850.

CROSSDILL, JOHN, a violoncello player, born in London 1755; died at Eserick, Yorkshire, 1825.

CROSSE, JOHN, a divine, was born in London 1739, and educated at King's College, Cambridge. He was presented to the vicarage of Bradford, Yorkshire, 1784; and died 17 June, 1816. He founded the three 'Crosse Scholarships' at Cambridge, 'for promoting the cause of true Religion.'

CROSSMAN, SAMUEL, B.D., was a native of Monk's Bradfield, Suffolk. He was educated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, and became rector of Little Henny, Essex, from which he was ejected for nonconformity 1662. Subsequently he again conformed to the Establishment, and was made dean of Bristol. Died 4 Feb., 1683-4, aged 59. He was author of 'The Young Man's Monitor,' 1684, and some published sermons.

CROTCH, WILLIAM, Mus.D., was the son of a carpenter at Norwich, where he was born 1775. His musical taste developed itself in a most extraordinary manner in early childhood. In course of time he became a profound theorist, and at the age of twenty-two he was appointed professor of music in the university at Oxford. He became principal of the Royal Academy of Music 1822; and died 20 Dec., 1847. Dr. Crotch composed a vast number of pieces for the organ and piano-forte, and several very charming vocal pieces, among which was his fine ode for five voices, 'Mona on Snowdon calls.' He also composed the oratorio of 'Palestine,' and several didactic works, among which were his 'Elements of Musical Composition and Thorough Bass,' and three vols. of 'Specimens of various Styles of Music of all Nations.'

CROUCH, Mrs., a popular English actress and vocalist, died at Brighton, 2 Oct., 1806.

CROUCH, NATHANIEL. See BERTON, ROBERT. CROUSAZ, JOHN PETER DE, a celebrated divine, philosopher, and mathematician, born at Lausanne, in Switzerland, 13 April, 1663; died 22 March, 1748.

CROW, WILLIAM, D.D., was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (B.A. 1713; M.A. 1717; D.D. 1728), and became in due course a fellow of the college. He is the author of various sermons, published at different times; and he has also Greek verses in the University Collection on the Peace of Utrecht. He was rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, 1730; was collated to the rectory of Finchley in 1731; was chaplain to Bishop Gibson, and one of the chaplains in ordinary to King George II., all which preferments he retained until his death on 11 April, 1743.

CROWDER, ANSELM, a Benedictine monk, was born in Montgomeryshire, and died in London 5 May, 1666, æt. 73. In conjunction with Thomas Vincent Sadler he published 'Jesus, Mary, Joseph; or the Devout Pilgrim of the ever-blessed Virgin Mary, by A. C. and T. V.,' 12mo., Amsterdam, 1657.

CROWLEY, ROBERT, was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In the reign of Edward VI. he carried on the printing business in London, purposely to advance the Reformation; but when Mary came to the throne he went to Germany. On the accession of Elizabeth he returned to England, and had the living of St. Laurence Jewry, London, where he died 18 June, 1588. He was the publisher of Pierce Plowman's Vision, and the author of 'Epigrams in Verse,' and some other pieces of a religious character.

CROWNE, JOHN, a poet, was a native of Nova Scotia. He came to England in the reign of Charles II., with whom he became a favourite, and who suggested to him the plot of his comedy, 'Sir Courtly Nice;' but just as the piece was ready for performance the king died, and Crowne was ruined. He wrote several other plays, and died about 1703.

CROWTHER, BRYAN, a surgeon of London, author of several professional works, died 17 April, 1815. He was the son-in-law of Richardson the novelist.

CROXALL, SAMUEL, D.D., was a native of Walton-upon-Thames, in Surrey, and received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge. While at the university he wrote 'The Fair Circassian,' a poem, which is a licentious imitation of Solomon's Song. On taking orders he obtained the living of Hampton, Middlesex, several preferments in Hereford Cathedral, and the united livings of St. Mary Somerset, and St. Mary Mountlaw, London. Died 13 Feb., 1752. Dr. Croxall was a strenuous Whig, and wrote a book called Scripture Politics. He also published a popular edition of Esop's Fables, and wrote some poems, besides which his name was affixed to a collection of Novels in 6 vols. 12mo.

CROZE, MATHURIE VEYSSIERE LA. See LA-CROZE.

CRUCIGER, GASPAR, a Protestant of Leipsic, author of Commentaries on Scripture, &c., was born 1504, and died 16 Nov., 1548.

CRUSO, JOHN, was matriculated at Cambridge as a sizar of Caius College 5 July, 1632; proceeded B.A. 1635-6; was elected a fellow, and took the degree of M.A., 1639. He was incorporated at Oxford 1643, having lost his fellowship at Cambridge on account of his loyalty. He was created LL.D. 1652, and admitted an advocate 12 Nov., 1652. He was chancellor of the diocese of St. David's. Died 1681. He is author of 'Castrametation; or the measuring out the quarters for the encamping of an Army,' 'Medicamentorum Erythrorum Thesaurus,' 'The Order of Military Watches;' and a translation of Du Praissac's 'Art of War.'

CRUTTWELL, CLEMENT, a native of Wokingham, Berkshire, was originally a surgeon at Bath, but afterwards became a minister. He was an industrious compiler, and published, among other things, an edition of Bishop Wilson's Bible and Works; a Concordance of Parallel Texts of Scripture; and a Universal Gazetteer. He died at Froxfield, Somersetshire, 5 Sept., 1808, æt. 65.

tinguished for her poetry and her acquaintance with the sciences. Born 1651; died 17 April, 1695.

CSOMA DE KÖRÖS, ALEXANDER, a Hungarian traveller and philologist, born about 1791 at Körös, in the district of Transylvania. The great object of his life was to solve the mystery respecting the origin of the Hungarian people. He travelled to Tibet, and applied himself for several years to the study of the language of that country, which he fancied had an affinity to the Magyar; and though eventually he discovered that this notion was erroneous, his labours were not fruitless, as he acquired a profound knowledge of the Buddhist philosophy and sacred writings. After residing for some years at Calcutta, he started on a second expedition to accomplish his darling object; but died shortly afterwards at Darjeeling 11 April, 1842. He composed a Tibetan Dictionary and Grammar, and contributed numerous articles, in English, on Tibetan literature, to the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.

CTESIAS, a Greek physician in the service of Artaxerxes, king of Persia. He wrote a history of Persia and of the Indies. Flor. B.C. 384.

CTESIBIUS, a mathematician of Alexandria, inventor of the pump and water-clock. Flor. 125 B.C.

CTESIPHON, an Athenian, whose attempt to decree the golden crown to Demosthenes was opposed by Æschines, and produced the two famous orations of the rival orators.

CUBITT, MARIA, an actress and singer, who died in London, 1830.

CUBITT, SIR WILLIAM, an eminent civil engineer, was born at Dilham, Norfolk, 1785, and died at his house, Clapham Common, London, 13 Oct., 1861.

CUDWORTH, RALPH, D.D., was born at Aller, Somersetshire, 1617, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. About 1641 he obtained the rectory of North Cadbury, in his native county, and in 1642 appeared his 'Discourse on the Lord's Supper.' Two years afterwards he was appointed master of Clare Hall, Cambridge, to which was added the Hebrew professorship. In 1654 he was chosen master of Christ's College. At the Restoration he was presented to the vicarage of Ashwell, Hertfordshire; and in 1678 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Gloucester. The same year came out his famous book entitled, 'The True Intellectual System of the Universe.' He died at Cambridge 26 June, 1688. In 1731 Bishop Chandler published Dr. Cudworth's treatise concerning 'Eternal and Immutable Morality;' and in 1743 appeared a complete edition of his Intellectual System, with some additional pieces, edited by Dr. Birch.

CUERENHERT, THEODORE VAN, a Dutch engraver, born 1522; died 1590.

CUFFE, HENRY, was born at Hinton St. George, in Somersetshire, about 1560, and educated at Oxford, where he became professor of Greek. On quitting the university he became secretary to Robert, earl of Essex, and when that nobleman was condemned, Cuffe was apprehended, and executed at Tyburn, 30 March, 1601. He was an accomplished scholar, and wrote a book entitled 'The Differences of the Ages of Man's Life, together with the Original Causes, Progress, and End thereof,' first printed in 1607.

CUFFE, MAURICE, an Irish gentleman of Ennis, whose account of the siege of Ballyally Castle, county Clare, in 1641, is printed in the fourteenth volume of the publications of the Camden Society. He was great-grandfather of John Cutie, who was created Baron Desart 1733.

CUJACIUS, or CUJAS, JAMES, a French lawyer, born at Toulouse 1520. He became professor successively at Toulouse, Cahors, and Bourges; and died in the latter city 4 Oct., 1590. His works were printed at Paris, in ten folio volumes, 1650.

CULBERTSON, ROBERT, was born at Morebatt 1765, and educated at Keiso and at the university of Edinburgh, after which he became minister of the associate congregation at Leith. He was editor of the 'Christian Magazine,' and author of 'Lectures, with Practical Observations on the Prophecies of John, and a Dissertation on the Origin and Termination of the Antichristian Apostasy,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1818; and 'The Pillar of Rachel's Grave; a Sermon on the Death of the Princess Charlotte of Wales,' 1817. Died 1823.

CULIN, PATRICK, an Augustinian hermit, and bishop of Clogher, in Ireland, by the assistance of Roderick Cassidy, his archdeacon, compiled a Register of the Antiquities of his Church, and inserted in it A Catalogue of the Bishops of Clogher, which was of great service to Sir James Ware. He also composed a Latin hymn in praise of St. Macartin, first bishop of Clogher. Died 1534.

CULLEN, ROBERT, son of William Cullen, M.D., mentioned below, was appointed a lord of session in Scotland 1796, when he assumed the title of Lord Cullen; became a lord of justiciary 1799; and died 28 Nov., 1810. He was a contributor to the 'Mirror' and 'Lounger.'

CULLEN, WILLIAM, M.D., was born in Lanarkshire 11 Dec., 1712, and served his apprenticeship to a surgeon at Glasgow. On the expiration of his time he went as a surgeon in a merchant ship to the West Indies, and on his return to his own country established himself in business, and had Dr. William Hunter for a partner. In 1740 he took his degree of M.D., and in 1746 he was chosen lecturer in chemistry at Glasgow. In 1751 he was appointed king's professor of medicine in the same university. In 1756 he was elected professor of chemistry at Edinburgh, where in 1766 he was chosen to the chair of medicine. Died 5 Feb., 1790. He raised the university of Edinburgh to an unequalled height in regard to physical learning. His works are 'First Lines of Physic,' 4 vols.; 'Synopsis Nosologiae Methodicae,' 2 vols.; 'Lectures on Materia Medica,' 2 vols.; and a pamphlet on the recovery of persons drowned and apparently dead.

CULLUM, Sir JOHN, Bart., F.R.S., F.S.A., a divine and topographer, born at Hawsted, Suffolk, 1733, and educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and was chosen fellow. He was instituted to the vicarage of Great Thurlow, Suffolk, 1774; and died 9 Oct., 1785. He wrote 'The History and Antiquities of Hawsted and Hardwick, in the county of Suffolk.'

CULLUM, Sir THOMAS GERV, Bart., was born 30 Nov., 1741, and died 8 Sept., 1831. He held the office of Bath king-at-arms, and published in 1813 a new edition of his brother's history of Hawsted.

CULMER, RICHARD, a fanatical divine, was of Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he proceeded

M.A., after which he became minister of Goodneston, Kent, from whence he was ejected for refusing to read the Book of Sports. He afterwards was a lecturer at Canterbury, and on the breaking out of the Rebellion was appointed by the parliament to purge the churches of idolatrous images and pictures, which commission he discharged with all the fury of a zealot. He broke in pieces the fine painted window in Canterbury Cathedral, of which proceedings he published an account. For these services he obtained the sequestered living of Minster, in Kent, of which he was deprived in 1660. When he died does not appear. He was a quarrelsome fellow, and much given to fighting, on which account the country people called him 'Blue Skin Dick.'

CULPEPPER, NICHOLAS, an astrologer and herbalist, born in London 18 Oct., 1616. After receiving a good education at Cambridge he was placed under an apothecary, and on the expiration of his term of apprenticeship settled in Spitalfields. He was an energetic opponent of the College of Physicians, and in 1649 published a translation of their Dispensary; but the most noted of his works is his Herbal, entitled 'The English Physician,' which has been often printed. Died 10 Jan., 1663-4.

CULPEPPER, or CULPEPER, Sir THOMAS, of Hollingbourne, in Kent, was born 1636, and educated at University College, Oxford. He was knighted at the Restoration; and died about 1706. He wrote 'Moral Discourses and Essays;' 'Considerations touching Marriage;' and several pieces against Usury.

CULY, DAVID, a native of Guylrhin, near Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, flourished about 1718, and established at Guylrhin a religious sect. His followers were named Culmites.

CUMBERLAND, DENISON, son of the bishop of Peterborough, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He married the younger daughter of Dr. Bentley, and on going to Ireland with Lord Halifax was made bishop of Clonfert. He was translated to Kilmore 1772, and died 27 May, 1775.

CUMBERLAND, ERNEST AUGUSTUS, DUKE OF. See ERNEST.

CUMBERLAND, GEORGE CLIFFORD, EARL OF, a nobleman distinguished by his naval enterprises, was born at Brougham Castle, Westmoreland, 8 Aug., 1558, being the eldest son of Henry Clifford, the second earl, on whose decease, in 1569-70, he succeeded to the title. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, under Dr. Whitgift, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, and the learned William Whitaker. In 1586 he fitted out a squadron, with which he sailed for South America, and after taking several vessels from the Portuguese returned to England, where he was well received by the queen, who made him a knight of the Garter, and gave him one of her gloves, which he afterwards wore in his hat, adorned with diamonds. She also appointed him her champion in all tilting matches. In 1588 he commanded a ship, and contributed to the destruction of the Spanish Armada. After this he made several voyages to the Western Islands and Spanish America, with various success; but though in one expedition he took a galleon of great value he does not appear to have enriched himself. He died in London 30 Oct., 1605.

CUMBERLAND, RICHARD, an English prelate.

CUMBERLAND.

He was born at London 15 July, 1632, and educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts, and then entered into orders. In 1658 he obtained a living in Northamptonshire, and in 1667 he was presented to the living of Allhallows, Stamford. In 1672 he published a book in Latin, entitled De Legibus Naturæ Disquisitio Philosophica, &c., which has been translated into English by two different persons. This work gained him a great reputation. In 1680 he proceeded D.D. In 1686 appeared his essay on Jewish Weights and Measures. In 1691 he was made bishop of Peterborough. He discharged the duties of the episcopal function in the most exemplary manner; and when he was desired to relax a little from his labours on account of his infirmities, he made this reply—'It is better to wear out than to rust out.' He died 9 Oct., 1718, and lies buried in the cathedral of Peterborough. After his death were published two books by him, one entitled Sanchoniathon's Phœnician History, translated from the first book of Eusebius de Preparatione Evangelica, &c.; and the other, Origines gentium antiquissimæ, or Attempts for discovering the Times of the first Planting of Nations.

CUMBERLAND, RICHARD, was born at Trinity College, Cambridge, Feb., 1731-2, being son of the Rev. Denison Cumberland (afterwards bishop successively of Clonfert and Kilmore) by Joanna, daughter of Dr. Richard Bentley, master of Trinity College. He was educated at Bury and Westminster Schools, and became a fellow of Trinity. Subsequently he was appointed private secretary to Lord Halifax, and when that nobleman went to Ireland as lord-lieutenant accompanied him as under-secretary. He afterwards obtained an office at the Board of Trade, and ultimately became secretary, which situation he held until the abolition of the Board under Mr. Burke's bill. In 1780, conceiving that there was an opening for a separate negotiation with the court of Spain, he went with his family to Lisbon, and thence to Aranjuez. The negotiation was preposterously conducted, and entirely failed, and on his return he was neglected and disavowed by the ministry. He thereupon retired into private life, residing principally at Tunbridge Wells. Mr. Cumberland wrote a great number of dramatic pieces, of which the 'West Indian,' the 'Jew,' and the 'Wheel of Fortune,' may be regarded as possessing considerable merit. His 'Observer' entitles him to a respectable place among the British essayists, but his poems, novels, theological tracts, and miscellaneous pieces, are now but little regarded. He published memoirs of his own life, and continued to compose for publication until nearly his last hour, for it is to be lamented that his old age was exposed to the discomfort attending narrow and reduced circumstances. He is said to have been of a peculiarly jealous and irritable temper, and to have been the prototype of Sheridan's 'Sir Fretful Plagiary.' Mr. Cumberland died 7 May, 1811, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

CUMBERLAND, WILLIAM AUGUSTUS, DUKE OF, second son of George II., was born 1721. He commanded the Briti-h army at the battle of Fontenoy, and put an end to the rebellion in 1746 by defeating the Pretender at Culoden, for which he received the thanks of both houses of parliament. The year following he lost the battle of Val, owing to the treachery of the Dutch. Died 31 Oct., 1765.

CUMING, HUGH, a naturalist, born at West Alvington, Kingsbridge, Devonshire, 14 Feb., 1791. He settled in business at Valparaiso, where his passion for collecting shells found an ample field for its development, and in 1826 he gave up his business in order to devote himself wholly to his favourite pursuit. In the course of several voyages he made a splendid collection of shells and dried plants, which he brought over to England. He died in London 10 Aug., 1865.

CUMING, WILLIAM, a physician, was born in 1714 at Edinburgh, where he was educated. In 1735 he went to Paris to improve himself in anatomy. On his return he settled at Dorchester, where he died in 1788. Dr. Cuming contributed materially to Hutchins's History of Dorsetshire.

-CUMMING, or COMYN, SIR ALEXANDER, a Scotch baronet, who went to America, and was chosen chief of the Cherokee Indians. He held fanatical notions about the Jews, and was an ardent searcher for the philosopher's stone. In 1766 Archbishop Secker appointed him a pensioner in the Charterhouse, London, where he died Aug. 1775.—Anderson.

CUMMING, ALEXANDER, F.R.S., a mathematician and mechanic, was a native of Edinburgh. He was apprenticed to the watchmaking business, which he carried on with great reputation for many years in Bond Street, London. On retiring from trade he settled in Pentonville, where he had several houses. He was also appointed a county magistrate, and continued to pursue his mechanical studies with diligence to the time of his death, which happened in March, 1814. He wrote 'The Elements of Clock and Watch work;' 'A Dissertation on the influence of Gravitation considered as a mechanic power,' 1803; and 'The Destructive Effects of the conical Broad Wheels of Carriages controverted,' 1804. He was the father of James Cumming, F.S.A., the editor of Feltham's Resolves.

CUMMING, GEORGE, M.D., a physician of Chester, died 12 Aug., 1863, aged 81.

CUMMING, JAMES, F.S.A., son of Alexander Cumming, above mentioned, was appointed one of the chief clerks of the Board of Control, and became remarkable for his minute and extensive knowledge of Indian affairs. He died at Lovell Hill Cottage, Berkshire, 23 Jan., 1827. Mr. Cumming published an edition of Feltham's 'Resolves,' 1806, with a memoir of the author. There exists a privately-printed pamphlet giving a 'Brief Notice of the services of Mr. Cumming, late head of the revenue and judicial departments in the Office of the Right Hon. the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India,' dated 20 July, 1824.

CUMMING, THOMAS, an Englishman, who turned Quaker, but was so inconsistent as to plan and almost to command a military expedition to the coast of Africa in 1758, which ended in the capture of Senegal. Died 1774.

CUNÆUS, PETER, professor of law at Leyden, was born 1586, and died 1638. His principal work is 'De Republica Hebræorum.'

CUNEGO, DOMENICO, an engraver, born at Verona 1727; died at Rome 1794.

CUNINGHAM, or KENINGHAM, WILLIAM, M.D., a physician, born in or about 1531, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Between 1556 and 1559 he practised at Norwich, and afterwards removed to London, where he became eminent as a physician and astrologer. In 1563 he was appointed public lecturer at Surgeons' Hall. His most curious work is 'The Cosmographical Glasse, containing the pleasant Principles of Cosmographie, Geographie, Hydrographie, or Navigation,' fol., London, 1559. Many of the cuts in this work were executed by the author, and the map of Norwich is his own production.—Athen. Cantab. vol. 3.

CUNINGHAME, WILLIAM, a Scotch gentleman, author of various works on prophecy and Scriptural chronology, died 6 Nov., 1849.

CUNITZ, MARIA, a learned woman, celebrated for her astronomical acquirements, was a native of Silesia, and died in Poland about 1669, though Lalande assigns 22 Aug., 1664, as the date of her death.

CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER, a critic of acknowledged ability, was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, but went early in life to Holland, where he taught jurisprudence. He died at the Hague in Dec., 1730. Mr. Cunningham, who has often been confounded with the historian of the same name, published the Works of Horace, with animadversions on Bentley's edition of that poet, in 2 vols. 8vo., 1721.

CUNNINGHAM, ALEXANDER, an historian, was born at Ettrick, near Selkirk, 1654, and educated in Holland, from whence he came to England with the prince of Orange. He became traveling tutor to several noblemen, by which means he obtained the appointment of resident envoy at Venice, where he continued five years. He died in London 15 May, 1737. In 1787 appeared his History of Great Britain, from the Revolution to the accession of George I., 2 vols. 4to., translated from the Latin MS. by William Thomson, LL.D. This work contains many curious anecdotes and facts not to be found in other histories. Its author has frequently been confounded with the subject of the preceding article, a circumstance which can hardly excite surprise when it is considered that both the historian and the critic were natives of Scotland, lived at the same time, were educated in Holland, were eminent for their skill at chess, and attained an advanced age.

CUNNINGHAM, ALLAN, was born at Blackwood, Dumfriesshire, of parents in humble circumstances, 1785. He was taken from school when eleven years old, and apprenticed to a mason. He was a diligent and miscellaneous reader, and in 1810 his name began to be first seen in print, one of his earliest appearances being as a contributor to Cromek's 'Remains of Nithdale and Galloway Song.' In 1810 he came to London, and tried by turns most of the means of which a literary man can avail himself. He reported for the newspapers, and wrote for the periodicals, particularly the 'Literary Gazette,' the 'London Magazine,' and the 'Athenaeum.' More substantial labours, such as 'Sir Marmaduke Maxwell,' a drama, the novels 'Paul Jones' and 'Sir Michael Scott,' with the 'Songs of Scotland,' attested in succession his literary industry. Meanwhile his other craft was not forgotten. He obtained a situation in the studio of Sir Francis Chantrey, and this he continued worthily to occupy till his own death. This association had considerable influence upon the future career of both parties. Comfortably situated in the studio of Chantrey, and being brought into contact with men of rank and genius, Allan had leisure enough to cultivate his own literary tastes, and in succession to produce a number of estimable works. His own poetry stamped his name with distinction among the minstrels of Scotland, and Scott, Hogg, and others in the foremost rank at once allowed his brotherhood. His best compositions are sweetly natural, as well as national, and many of them stirring and spirited, contrasting finely with the melancholy strains of others, wherein dole and misfortune supersede the martial theme. His Lives of 'British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects,' 5 vols., deservedly became a popular work. He also published a series of illustrations to 'Major's National Gallery of Pictures;' 'The Maid of Elvar,' a poem; 'The Life of Burns;' 'Lord Roldan,' a romance; and 'Memoirs of Sir David Wilkie.' He also prepared an annotated edition of Johnson's 'Lives of the Poets.' Died 29 Oct., 1842.

CUNNINGHAM, CHARLES, a Scotch painter, who settled at Berlin, was born 1741, and died 1789.

CUNNINGHAM, JOHN, was born in Dublin, 1729, and became a strolling player. He died at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 18 Sept., 1773. He wrote some poems of considerable merit, and a farce called 'Love in a Mist,' from which Garrick 'adapted' his 'Lying Valet.'

CUNNINGHAM, JOHN WILLIAM, an evangelical divine, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship (B.A. 1802; M.A. 1805). For many years he was vicar of Harrow-on-the-Hill, Middlesex, where he died 30 Sept., 1861, aged 81. He was author of 'Christianity in India. An Essay on the duty, means, and consequences of introducing the Christian Religion among the native inhabitants of the British dominions in the East;' 'Church of England Missions;' 'De Rancé,' a poem; 'The Velvet Cushion,' a tale, 1815, 10th edition, 1816; 'A New Covering to the Velvet Cushion;' 'A World without Souls;' 'Six Lectures on the Book of Jonah;' 'Morning Thoughts in prose and verse on single verses in the successive chapters in the Gospel of St. Matthew;' 'Essay on the Genius and Poetry of Cowper;' 'Cautions to Continental Travellers;' Sermons.

CUNNINGHAM, PETER, a poet, was a native of Deal, and became curate first of Eyam, and afterwards of Chertsey, in Surrey, where he died July, 1805. He wrote two poems, 'Britannia's Naval Triumph,' and 'The Russian Prophecy.' Several of his letters are printed in Nichols's 'Illustrations.'

CUNNINGHAM, PETER MILLER, brother of Allan Cunningham, became a surgeon in the British navy, and died at Greenwich 6 March, 1864, aged 74. He wrote 'Two Years in New South Wales,' 2 vols., 1827; a volume of essays on 'Electricity and Magnetism;' and another on 'Irrigation as practised on the eastern shores of the Mediterranean.'

CUNNINGHAM, THOMAS MOUNSEY, elder brother of Allan Cunningham, was born in Kirkcubrightshire 25 June, 1776, and served his apprenticeship to a millwright. He eventually settled in London, and died 24 Oct., 1834. He wrote several poems of great merit. 'Hallowmas Eve' and 'Mary Ogivy' are reckoned among his best pieces.

vine, who was one of the leaders of the secession from the Scotch Establishment in 1843. He succeeded Dr. Chalmers as principal of the New College, Edinburgh, 1847; was appointed moderator of the Free Church Assembly 1859; and died 14 Dec., 1861, aged 55.

CUNNINGHAM, WILLIAM, M.D. See CUNINGHAM.

CUPANI, FRANCIS, a Sicilian botanist, born 1657; died at Palermo 1711.

CUPER, GISEBERT, a learned burgomaster of Davenport, and professor of history, who wrote a History of the three Gordians; Apotheosis of Homer, &c. Born 14 Sept., 1644; died 22 Nov., 1716.

CURÆUS, JOACHIM, a German physician, author of the Annals of Silesia and Breslau, was born 1532, and died 21 Jan., 1573.

CURCELLÆUS. See COURCELLES.

CURETON, WILLIAM, D.D., a distinguished oriental scholar, was born at Westbury, Shropshire, 1808, and educated first at the grammar school of Newport, in his native county, and afterwards at Christ Church, Oxford. He took orders, and in 1849 became canon of Westminster, and rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster. Previously to this, in 1837, he had been appointed keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, which post he resigned in 1850. He died in his native village 17 June, 1864. Dr. Cureton was well skilled in Arabic, Syriac, and other oriental languages. He prepared a catalogue of the Arabic MSS. in the British Museum, and arranged and catalogued the remarkable collection of Syriac MSS. obtained by the Museum from the monastery of St. Mary Deipara, in the desert of Nitra, not far from Cairo. In 1845 he published the ancient Syriac version of the epistles of St. Ignatius to Polycarp, the Ephesians, and the Romans; and afterwards the text of a portion of the Syriac version of the long-lost 'Festal Letters of St. Athanasius.' These letters have been translated into English by Burgess. Dr. Cureton's other works were editions of the palimpsest fragments of the Iliad, contained in MS. Addit. 17,210; of the third part of the 'Ecclesiastical History of John, Bishop of Ephesus;' 'Spicilegium Syriacum;' editions of a Syriac version of the Gospels; and of 'The History of the Martyrs in Palestine,' by Eusebius of Caesarea.

CURIO, CÆLIUS SECRUNDUS, an Italian theologian of the Lutheran persuasion, born in Piedmont 1503; died at Basle 24 Nov., 1569.

CURL, EDMUND, a bookseller, whose name has obtained immortality in Pope's Dunciad. He was born in the west of England, and kept a shop in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden, where his books were generally enlarged by wretched notes and forged letters. He lost his ears for publishing 'The Nun in her Smock.' Died 1748.

CURLING, HENRY, captain in the 91st regiment, died at Kensington 10 Feb., 1864, aged 61. He was a frequent contributor to periodicals, and the author of 'King John,' and some other novels.

CURRADI, FRANCESCO, an Italian painter, born 1570; died about 1661.

CURRAN, JOHN PHILPOT, was born at Newmarket, near Cork, in 1750. He received a grammatical education, and was afterwards admitted a member of Trinity College, Dublin, from whence he removed to one of the inns of court in England, where in regular course he was called to the bar. He did not, however, succeed in practice for a considerable time; but in the administration of the duke of Portland he obtained a silk gown and a seat in parliament. His popularity now rose rapidly, and he was retained in all great causes, especially those of a public nature. In 1800 he was made master of the Rolls in Ireland, which office he resigned in 1814. He died at Brompton 13 Nov., 1817. Mr. Curran was a man of great wit and flowing eloquence. Some of his poetical pieces possess merit.

CURRIE, JAMES, M.D., a physician, born 31 May, 1756, at Kirkpatrick-Fleming, in Dumfriesshire, where his father was the minister. He was educated at Dumfries, after which he went to Virginia, with a view to the mercantile profession, but the troubles in that country obliged him to return in 1776; and in the following year he entered upon the study of physic at Edinburgh, though he took his doctor's degree at Glasgow. In 1781 he settled at Liverpool, where he obtained extensive practice, and in 1783 married the daughter of a merchant, by whom he had a numerous family. Dr. Currie was chosen member of the Literary Society at Manchester, to whose transactions he communicated some ingenious papers, as he also did to the London Medical Society. In 1792 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1793 he attracted notice as a politician by a letter addressed to Mr. Pitt, under the assumed name of Jasper Wilson. In 1797 he published 'Medical Reports on the effects of water, cold and warm, as a remedy in febrile diseases,' in which he recommended cold affusion in fever, a practice that has since been generally adopted. To this work he added another volume in 1804, confirming the positions he had advanced in the former by many cases. His next publication was an edition of the works of Burns, with an account of his life, a criticism on his writings, and observations on the character of the Scottish peasantry, 4 vols. 8vo. Having long laboured under a pulmonary complaint, Dr. Currie went in the summer of 1805 to Sulmouth, where he expired on the last day of August.

CURRY, JAMES, M.D., F.S.A., a native of Scotland, became physician and lecturer at Guy's Hospital, and died 1819. He published some works on subjects relating to his profession.

CURSON, or CORCEONE, ROBERT, an Englishman, who studied at Oxford and Paris. He became chancellor of Paris University, and was made a cardinal by Innocent III. in 1212. He preached the crusades, and died at Damietta 1218. He wrote on the question whether Origen be saved or not.

CURTEYS, RICHARD, an English prelate, was a native of Lincolnshire, and received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He became dean of Chichester 1566; bishop of Chichester 1570; and died August, 1582. He published some Sermons, translations, &c.

CURTIS, WILLIAM, a botanical writer, was born at Abton, in Hampshire, in 1746. He served his apprenticeship as an apothecary to his grandfather, and while in that situation cultivated botany with eagerness. At the age of twenty he came to London, and entered into the service of Mr. Talwin of Gracechurch Street, to whose business he succeeded. His love of botany, however, induced him to give up the shop, and he became a lecturer and demonstrator in his favourite science. His first garden was at Bermendsey, and afterwards he occupied a more extensive one at Lambeth, which he exchanged for another at Brompton. In 1771 he published 'Instructions for collecting and preserving insects,' and in the following year a translation of the Fundamenta Entomologiæ of Linnæus, with the title of an Introduction to the knowledge of Insects. In 1777 appeared the first number of his Flora Londiniensis, which was completed in six fasciculi of seventy-two plates each. This work was followed by the Botanical Magazine, in monthly numbers. In 1782 he published a history of the brown-tailed moth; besides which he wrote Practical Observations on the British Grasses, and some papers in the Transactions of the Linnæan Society. Died 7 July, 1799. His Lectures were published after his death.

CURTIIUS, QUINTUS RUFUS, a Latin historian, who wrote the History of Alexander the Great, is supposed to have flourished in the reign of Vespasian.

CURWEN, HUGH, LL.D., an English ecclesiastic, appointed archbishop of Dublin 1555; bishop of Oxford 1567; died Oct., 1568.

CURWEN, JOHN CHRISTIAN, an eminent agriculturist, born July, 1756, and educated at Cambridge. He sat for many years in the House of Commons, first as member for Carlisle, and afterwards for Cumberland; and died 11 Dec., 1828. Mr. Curwen was particularly attentive to assist that general law of nature by which animals and vegetables reciprocally interchange their qualities with each other. On this circumstance he founded the necessity and propriety of his 'soiling system,' that is, by confining the animals to the spot where they are fed; by which means a more abundant quantity of dress is collected and prepared to be returned to the partly-exhausted soil, whence the food has been produced. Hence Mr. Curwen was called 'The Father of the Soiling System.' He also successfully practised the means of rendering the food of cattle more nutritious, by preparing it for their use by steaming, in preference to simple boiling.

CUSA, NICHOLAS DE, a celebrated Italian cardinal, born 1401; died 1464. His works, which are numerous and valuable, were collected and printed in 3 vols.

CUSPINIAN, JOHN, a German physician and historian, born 1473; died 19 April, 1529.

CUTHBERT (ST.), was born in the north, and educated by the Scottish monks in the abbey of Icolmkill. He settled in the island of Lindisferna, four miles from Berwick, now called Holy Island, from whence he came to the court of Egfred, king of Northumberland, whom he converted to Christianity, and baptised. Died 20 March, 686.

CUTTS, JOHN, LORD, was born at Matching, in Essex. He was early in the service of Monmouth, and was under the duke of Lorraine, in Hungary, and at the taking of Buda by the imperialists. After the Revolution he was created baron in Ireland 1690, and governor of the Isle of Wight 1693. On Anne's accession he was made lieutenant-general of the forces in Holland, commander in Ireland in 1705, and afterwards one of the lords justices of that kingdom, an appointment which broke his heart, because it removed him out of the sphere of active enterprise. He died at Dublin 26 Jan., 1766-7. He wrote a poem on Queen Mary's death, and published, 1687, Poetical Exercises, written on several occasions; a poem on Wisdom; and another on Waller.

CUVIER, GEORGE LEOPOLD CHRISTIAN FREDERICK DAGOBERT, baron, an illustrious naturalist, born 23 Aug., 1769, at Montbeliard, in the department of Doubs. After studying at Tubingen and Stuttgart, he was appointed in 1800 professor of natural philosophy at the Collège de France, and in the same year published the first two volumes of his Lessons in Comparative Anatomy, which were followed by three others. Buonaparte conferred many honours upon him, and in 1814, just before his abdication, named him counsellor of state, an appointment which was confirmed by Louis XVIII., who soon afterwards appointed him chancellor of the university. In 1818 he was elected a member of the French Academy. In 1819 he was appointed president of the council of the interior in the council of state; and Louis XVIII., as a personal mark of his regard, created him a baron. He was made a peer of France by Louis Philippe; and died 13 May, 1832. His most important works are 'Tableau Élémentaire de l'Histoire Naturelle des Animaux;' 'Mémoire sur les Ossements Fossiles des Quadrupèdes;' 'Leçons d'Anatomie Comparée;' 'Règne Animal;' and 'Histoire Naturelle des Poissons.'

CUYP, or KUYP, ALBERT, a celebrated Dutch painter, born 1666; died 1667.

CYNISEA. See AOESILAUS II.

CYPRIAN (ST.), a celebrated Father of the Church, was born about 200, and held the bishopric of Carthage from 248 till his death on 14 Sept., 258. His works have been translated into English by Nathanael Marshall, LL.B.

CYPRIAN, an English friar of the order of St. Francis, was chaplain to Queen Henrietta Maria, and published in 1663, 'Heaven opened and the Pains of Purgatory avoided, by the Indulgences attached to the Devotions of the Rosary and Cord of the Passion.'

CYRANO DE BERGERAC. See BERGERAC.

CYRIL (ST.), bishop of Jerusalem, and a Father of the Church, was born about 315, and died 350. Some of his works are extant.

CYRIL (ST.), bishop of Alexandria, died 444. His works were printed at Paris in seven folio volumes, 1638.

CYRILL LUCAR, patriarch of Constantinople, was deposed for his attempts to reform his clergy, and was strangled by order of the grand signior about 1638.

CYRUS, king of Persia, was defeated by Tomyrns, queen of the Scythians, and put to death B.C. 529.

CYRUS the Younger was appointed governor of Lydia, and endeavoured to obtain the throne of Persia from his brother Artaxerxes, but was defeated and slain B.C. 401. The 10,000 Greeks who came with Cyrus made good their retreat in spite of all the force of the Persians, and returned safe to their own country.

CZARTORYSKI, PRINCE ADAM, a very prominent actor in the Polish revolution of 1830, was born at Warsaw 14 Jan., 1770, and died at Paris 15 July, 1861.

DACH, JOHN, a German painter, born at Cologne 1506; died at Vienna about 1620.

D'ACHERI. See ACHERI.

DACIER, ANDRÉ, a learned Frenchman, born of Protestant parents, near Castres, 6 April, 1631, and educated at Saumur under Tanaquil Faber, or Le Fevre, whose learned daughter he married. He published at Paris, in 1681 an edition of Pompeius Festus for the use of the dauphin. His translation of Horace came out the same year. In 1691 he published his translation of the Reflections of Marcus Antoninus; and the next year Aristotle's Precepts. For his services to literature he was appointed perpetual secretary to the Academy, rewarded with a pension of 2,000 livres, and made keeper of the cabinet of the Louvre. Died 18 Sept., 1722. Dacier and his wife renounced the Protestant religion in 1685. Besides the works above mentioned, he translated into French the Works of Plato, the Lives of Plutarch, the Manual of Epictetus, &c.

DACIER, ANNE, wife of the preceding, and daughter of Le Fevre, Greek professor at Saumur, where she was born 1651. Her father discovered her turn for learning, indulged her taste, and gave her a liberal education. In 1674 she published an edition of Callimachus, which gave so much satisfaction that she was employed to prepare editions of Latin authors for the use of the dauphin, the first of which was Florus. In 1681 she published a translation of Anacreon and Sappho, which was followed by versions of some of Plautus's comedies, and of the Plutus and Clouds of Aristophanes. In 1683 she married M. Dacier, and soon afterwards they renounced the Protestant religion. In 1711 came out Madame Dacier's translation of the Iliad, and in 1714 she defended Homer against De la Motte in a book entitled The Causes of the Corruption of Taste. This was followed in 1716 by another against Father Hardouin. Her version of the Odyssey, published the same year, was the last of her literary labours. Died 17 Aug., 1720.

DAFFY, THOMAS, rector of Redmile, in the vale of Belvoir, and the inventor of the well-known medicine called 'Daffy's Elixir,' died 1680.

D'AGAR, JACQUES, a French painter, born 1640; died 1710. He resided for a time in London, but spent the greater part of his life in Denmark.

DAGOBERT I. succeeded Clotaire II. as king of France 628. He made war against Saxony, Brittany, and Gascony, but stained by cruelty the laurels which he obtained in the field of battle. He died at Epemay 638, aged 36.

DAGOBERT II., son of Sigebert II., was prevented from ascending his father's throne by the mayor of the palace; but afterwards was king of Austrasia, and was assassinated 679.

DAGOBERT III. succeeded as king of Neustria, and died four years after, 715.

DAGOUER, GUILLAUME, rector of the university of Paris, wrote 'Philosophia ad usum scholarum accommodata'; 'Lettres d'un philosophe,' &c. Died 1745.

DAGUERRE, LOUIS JACQUES MANDÉ, the ingenious inventor of the photographic process called, after him, 'Daguerreotype,' was born 1789, and died at Petit Bre, near Paris, 10 Aug., 1851. His process was first published in the autumn of 1839, and the French government granted him a pension of 6,000 francs for his discovery.

DAGUENSAU. See AGLESSEAU.

DAHL, MICHAEL, a painter, born at Stockholm 1650; died in London 1743.

DAHLBERG, ERIC, Count DE, a Swedish general, who was so skilled in the art of fortification as to be called the Vauban of Sweden. He published 'Succia Antiqua et Hodierna,' 3 vols. folio. Born 1625; died 10 Jan., 1703.

DAILLÉ, JEAN, a French Protestant divine, born at Chateherault 6 Jan., 1594, and educated at Poitiers and Saumur. In 1612 he was appointed tutor to the grandsons of M. Duplessis-Mornay, and travelled with them to Italy. In 1625 he was chosen minister of the church of Saumur, but the year following he removed to Paris. In 1631 appeared his book on the Use of the Fathers, which was attacked by many writers. In 1633 he published an Apology for the Reformed Churches, which also led to considerable controversy. Daillé afterwards engaged in the disputes concerning universal grace, and thereby gave offence to the rigid Calvinists. His other works are numerous. Died 15 April, 1670.

DAKINS, WILLIAM, one of the divines employed in the authorised translation of the Bible, was educated at Cambridge, and was appointed Greek lecturer at Trinity College in that university. He became vicar of Trumpington, near Cambridge, 1603; divinity professor at Gresham College 1604; and died Feb., 1606-7.—Athen. Cantab.

D'ALBRET, JANE, daughter of Margaret, queen of Navarre, was betrothed at the age of eleven to the duke of Cleves, but the marriage was annulled by the pope. In 1548 she espoused Anthony de Bourbon, duke of Vendôme; and in 1553 was delivered of a son, afterwards Henry IV. of France. On the death of her father, in 1555, she became queen of Navarre, in which kingdom she established the Protestant religion. Being invited to the French court to assist at the nuptials of her son with Margaret of Valois, she expired suddenly, not without suspicion of poison, in 1572, æt. 44. She left several compositions in prose and verse.

DALBY, ISAAC, a self-taught mathematician, born in Gloucestershire 1744. After being usher in several schools, he was engaged, with Colonel Williams and Captain Mudge, to carry on the trigonometrical survey of England. In 1799 he was appointed professor of mathematics in the Royal Military College at High Wycombe. This institution was subsequently removed to Farnham, in Surrey, where Mr. Dalby died 14 Oct., 1824, having resigned his professorship four years previously. He was a contributor to the Ladies' Diary, and other works; and wrote a valuable 'Course of Mathematics,' in 2 vols.

DALE, DAVID, a Scotch philanthropist, who established the well-known mills of Lanark, and made several attempts to introduce the cotton manufacture into the Highlands. Born 1738; died 17 March, 1806.

DALE, SAMUEL, M.D., F.R.S., was born in or about 1660. He was originally an apothecary at Braintree, in Essex, but finally settled as a physician at Bocking, where he died 6 June, 1739. He published 'Pharmacologia, seu Manuductio ad Materiam Medicam,' several times printed; and 'The Antiquities of Harwich and Dover Court,' written by Silas Taylor, but greatly enlarged and improved by Dr. Dale. He was a good naturalist, and contributed some papers to the Philosophical Transactions.

DALECHAMPS, JACQUES, a French physician and botanist, born 1513; died 1588.

D'ALEMBERT, JEAN LE ROND, was born at Paris 1717. He had the name of J. le Rond from the church near which he was exposed as a foundling, and being discovered by the overseer of the district, he was put out to nurse. His father, hearing of his situation, was touched with parental feeling, and took care of his education and maintenance. Young D'Alembert was placed in the college of Mazarin, where he composed a commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, which the Jansenists beheld with astonishment and delight. They then engaged him in the study of the mathematics, in which he made surprising progress. On leaving the college he went to live with his nurse, with whom he resided forty years, contented with the little fortune which had been left him. In 1741 he was elected into the Academy of Sciences, and two years afterwards he published his treatise on dynamics. In 1746 he obtained the prize medal from the academy at Berlin, for a discourse on the theory of winds. In 1749 he solved the problem of the precession of the equinoxes, ascertained its quantity, and explained the rotation of the terrestrial axis. In 1752 he published an essay on the resistance of fluids, and soon afterwards obtained a pension from the king. He next engaged with Diderot in compiling the celebrated 'Encyclopédie,' for which he wrote the preliminary discourse. While he was engaged on mathematical subjects his name was not much known, but now he became celebrated by works of an historical and miscellaneous nature, such as his 'Philosophical, Historical, and Philological Miscellanies,' 'The Memoirs of Christina, queen of Sweden,' and his 'Elements of Philosophy.' He was elected secretary to the French Academy 1772, and died 29 Oct., 1783. With all his affected moderation and candour, D'Alembert was a bitter and unscrupulous opponent of the Christian religion.

DALGARNO, GEORGE, was born at Old Aberdeen in or before 1627, and educated in the university of New Aberdeen. He kept a private grammar school for about thirty years at Oxford, and died 28 Aug., 1687. Dalgarno was the author of two remarkable works, 'Ars Signorum, vulgo Character Universalis, et Lingua Philosophica,' 1661; and 'Didascalopichus, or the Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor.—Penny Cyclo.

DALHOUSIE, JAMES ANDREW BROWN RAMSAY, MARQUIS OF, was born 22 April, 1812, being the third son of the ninth earl of Dalhousie. He received his education at Christ Church, Oxford, and after sitting for a short time in the House of Commons, he was summoned to the Upper Chamber on the death of his father 1836. During the administration of Sir Robert Peel he was appointed vice-president of the Board of Trade 1843, and president 1845. In 1847 he was offered the splendid position of governor-general of India, as successor to Lord Hardinge. This offer he accepted, and he arrived at Calcutta 12 Jan., 1848. While occupying this exalted post he pursued a policy of conquest and annexation, which, perhaps, indirectly led to the disastrous mutiny of the native troops. He resigned the post of governor-general 1856, and died 19 Dec., 1860.

DALLISON.

DALIBRAY, CHARLES VION, a French poet, who died 1654.

DALIN, OLAF VON, a Swedish historian and poet, born 1708; died 12 Aug. 1763.

DALLANS, RALPH, a noted English organ-builder, died 1672.

DALLAS, ALEXANDER JAMES, an American lawyer and statesman, born 1759; died 1817.

DALLAS, SIR GEORGE, BART., brother of Sir Robert Dallas, was born in London 1758, and entered the civil service of the East India Company, but after six years his health obliged him to return to England. He was created a baronet 1798, and died 15 Jan., 1833. He published a number of political works, which display great ability.

DALLAS, GEORGE MIFFLIN, elected vice-president of the United States 1844; appointed minister to England 1856; died 31 Dec., 1864.

DALLAS, SIR ROBERT, was appointed a puisne judge of the Court of Common Pleas 1813; became lord chief justice of that court 1818; retired from the bench 1823; and died 25 Dec., 1824.

DALLAS, ROBERT CHARLES, a miscellaneous writer, born 1754, at Jamaica, where his father was a physician. He received his education, first at Musselburgh in Scotland, and next under Mr. Elphinston at Kensington, after which he studied the law in the Inner Temple. On coming of age he went to take possession of his paternal property in Jamaica, and while there obtained a lucrative appointment; but after a residence of three years he returned to England, and married. With his lady he again visited Jamaica, but in a few years quitted the island for ever. He now pursued a literary career with varying success. His principal performances were novels, and 'A History of the Maroons.' His last work was a volume of 'Recollections of Lord Byron,' to whom he was nearly related. He died in Normandy 20 Nov., 1824.

DALLAWAY, JAMES, F.S.A., was born at Bristol 1763, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. For some time he acted as chaplain to the British embassy at Constantinople, and after his return obtained the rectory of South Stoke, Sussex, and next the vicarage of Leatherhead, Surrey. He also held the post of secretary to the earl marshal. Died 6 June, 1834. Among his works are 'Enquiries into the Origin and Progress of Heraldry in England;' 'Constantinople, Ancient and Modern;' 'Anecdotes of Art in England;' and editions of 'Lady Mary Wortley Montagu's Letters;' and of 'Walpole's Anecdotes of Painting.'

DALLINGTON, SIR ROBERT, was born at Gedington, Northamptonshire, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. Afterwards he became secretary to the earl of Rutland, and master of the Charterhouse. He was created a knight by Charles I.; and died 1637. He wrote 'A survey of the great Duke's state in Tuscany, an. 1596;' 'A method for travel, shewed by taking view of France, as it stood in the year 1598;' and 'Aphorisms, Civil and Military; amplified with authorities, and exemplified with history, out of the first quartern of Fr. Guicciardine.'

DALLISON, SIR WILLIAM, an English lawyer, who was constituted lord chief justice of the Queen's Bench in the reign of Queen Mary, and appears to be continued in that office under Queen Elizabeth. Some of his legal reports are in print. Died 18 Jan., 1558-9.—Athen. Cantab.

DALMASIO, PHILIP DE, a painter, called also Lippo delle Madone, died at Bologna 1410.

DALMATTIN, GEORGE, a Lutheran divine, who translated the Bible into the Slavonian language 1584. He was alive in 1598.

DALMATIUS (St.), a celebrated archimandrite of the monastery of Constantinople, who discovered great zeal against Nestorius, and was appointed by the fathers of the council of Ephesus, 430, to act in their name at Constantinople. He died soon afterwards, aged about 80.

DALKYMPLE. See STAIR, viscount and earl of.

DALKYMPLE, ALEXANDER, F.R.S., F.S.A., was born 24 July, 1737, at New Hailes, near Edinburgh, the son of his father, Sir James Dalrymple, bart. His mother was the daughter of the earl of Haddington, and had sixteen children, of whom Alexander was the seventh. He was educated at Haddington, and in 1752 went to the East Indies, as a writer in the company's service. While in the east he applied to the study of hydrography; and in 1759 undertook a voyage of observation, in which he gave great satisfaction to his superiors. In 1763 he returned to England, when it was intended to engage him in the service on which Captain Cook was afterwards employed, but some objections arising in a matter of form, the appointment did not take place. In 1775 he went out again to Madras, and returned in 1780. In 1795 he was made hydrographer to the Admiralty, as well as to the India Company, but in 1808 he lost his place under government, and died the same year, on June 10. His principal works are, 'Discoveries in the South Pacific Ocean'; 'Collection of South Sea Voyages,' 2 vols.; 'General View of the India Company's Affairs'; 'Relations of Expeditions from Fort Marlborough to the Islands of the West Coast of Sumatra'; 'Collection of Voyages in the South Atlantic Ocean'; 'Account of the Loss of the Grosvenor Indianman'; 'Plan for promoting the Fur Trade'; 'Memoir of a Map of the land round the North Pole'; 'Journal of the Expeditions to the North of California'; 'A Collection of Songs'; 'The Oriental Repertory,' 2 vols. He also wrote a number of tracts, political and commercial.

DALKYMPLE, SIR DAVID, commonly called Lord Hailes. See HAILES.

DALKYMPLE, SIR JOHN, son of Sir William Dalrymple of Cousland, was born 1726, and after being educated in the university of Edinburgh, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, became an advocate at the Scotch bar. He succeeded to his father's baronetcy 1770; was made a baron of the Scotch exchequer 1776; and died 26 Feb., 1810. His chief works are: 'An Essay towards a general History of Feudal Property in Great Britain'; 'Considerations on the Policy of Entails in Great Britain'; and 'Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland, from the Dissolution of the last Parliament of Charles II. until the Sea Battle off La Hogue,' 3 vols., 4to. Edinb., 1771.

DALKYMPLE, JOHN, F.R.S., a surgeon and oculist of London, died in that city 2 May, 1852, æt. 49. He published a valuable essay on the Anatomy of the Human Eye.

DALTON, JOHN, D.D., was born at Deane in Cumberland 1760, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. While at college he was appointed tutor to Lord Beauchamp. He adapted Milton's

DALZELL.

Comus for the stage, and wrote some songs in it. This piece was performed for the benefit of a granddaughter of Milton. He went abroad with his pupil who died in Italy. On his return he took orders, and obtained the rectory of St. Mary-at-Hill, London, and a prebend of Worcester, where he died 21 July, 1763. He published a volume of sermons in 1757, and some poems.

DALTON, JOHN, D.C.L., F.R.S., a distinguished natural philosopher, was born in Cumberland 5 Sept., 1766, and settled at Manchester, where he died 27 July, 1844. The Royal Society presented him with a gold medal for his scientific discoveries, and the university of Oxford honoured him with the degree of doctor of civil law. Among his published works are 'Meteorological Observations and Essays,' 1793, and 'A New System of Chemical Philosophy,' 1808-10.

DALTON, MICHAEL, a lawyer, born in Cambridgeshire 1554. He was a member of Gray's Inn or Lincoln's Inn, and wrote an esteemed work on the Duties of a Justice of the Peace; and another on 'The Duty of Sheriffs.' There is a MS. of his in the British Museum, entitled 'A Breviary or Chronology of the state of the Roman Church.' It is supposed that Dalton died before the commencement of the civil war.

DALTON, RICHARD, brother of John Dalton, D.D., was appointed librarian to George III., who sent him to Italy in 1763 to collect works of art. After this he was made keeper of the king's drawings and medals. He published an explanation of a set of prints relative to the manners and customs of the inhabitants of Egypt 1781. Died 7 Feb., 1791.

DALY, DANIEL, was born in the county of Kerry 1595, and entered the order of St. Dominic, when he took the name of Dominicus à Rosario. He was at first educated in a monastery of his order at Tralee, but studied principally in Flanders. The fame which he acquired for learning and piety procured him an invitation to Lisbon, to assist in founding a convent for the Irish Dominicans. This being accomplished, he was elected the first superior. He also assisted at the foundation of a second, for the natives of Ireland; and in 1655 the king of Portugal sent him as ambassador to France. He died at Lisbon 30 June, 1662. His only work is entitled 'Initium, incrementum, et exitus familie Geraldinorum Desmonie comitum Palatinorum Kyria in Hibernia, ac persecutionis hæreticorum descriptio, ex nonnullis fragmentis collecta ac Latinitate donata,' 8vo., Lisbon, 1655.

DALYELL, SIR JOHN GRAHAM, a Scotch baronet, who edited various works illustrative of the poetry, history and antiquities of his native country. Born 1776; died 7 June, 1851.

DALZELL, ANDREW, was born at Ratho, near Edinburgh, 1750. After studying at Edinburgh, he became travelling companion to the earl of Lauderdale, on whose recommendation he was chosen Greek professor at Edinburgh. He was also chosen keeper of the university library, and principal clerk to the general assembly. He died at Edinburgh 8 Dec., 1806. Professor Dalzell published several volumes on Greek literature, with the titles of 'Collectanea Minora,' and 'Collectanea Majora.' He also communicated some valuable papers to the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; and translated Chevalier's description of the Plan of Troy.

DALZIEL.

DALZIEL, THOMAS, a Scotch general, who was with Charles II. at the battle of Worcester, after which he was imprisoned in the Tower, but making his escape he entered the service of the czar of Russia. At the Restoration he was recalled, and made commander-in-chief of the forces in Scotland. After the murder of Charles I. he would never shave his beard, but suffered it to grow down to his girdle. His dress was so singular that he never appeared in public without a crowd of boys after him. Died 1685.

DAMASCENUS, JOHN (ST.). See JOHN.

DAMASCIUS, a Stoic philosopher of Damascus, flourished in the sixth century. All his writings are lost.

DAMASUS I., a Spaniard, elected Pope 366; died 384.

DAMASUS II., Poppo, was elected Pope on the death of Clement II., but died twenty-three days afterwards, in August, 1048.

D'AMBOISE. See AMBOISE.

DAMER, MRS. ANNE SEYMOUR, an English sculptor, born 1748; died 28 May, 1828.

DAMIANO, PETER, an eminent Italian cardinal, born about 988; died 22 Feb., 1072.

DAMIENS, ROBERT FRANÇOIS, a Frenchman, born 1715, known by his attempt to assassinate Louis XV. He was executed 28 March, 1757, in a manner most horrible and wantonly barbarous.

DAMINI, PIETRO, an Italian painter, born 1592; died 1630.

DAMM, CHRISTIAN TOBIAS, rector of the Academy at Berlin; compiler of a valuable Lexicon to Homer and Pindar; was born 1699, and died 27 May, 1778.

DAMON, WILLIAM, an English musical composer, who was organist of the Chapel Royal in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

DAMPIER, WILLIAM, an English navigator, was born at East Coker, Somersetshire, 1652. He went to sea early in life, and in 1683 sailed with Captain Cook, who commanded a Bristol privateer. After cruising a considerable time on the American coast, and taking several prizes, the captain died, and was succeeded by Mr. Davis, whom Dampier left, and went aboard another privateer, commanded by Captain Swan. Not meeting with success, they sailed for the East Indies, where Dampier quitted his company, and proceeded to the English factory at Achen. He then engaged with Captain Weldon, and afterwards became gunner to the factory at Bencoolen. In 1691 he returned to England. He next went out from Bristol with Woodes Rogers to the South Sea, and returned in 1711. When he died is unknown. His voyage round the world was published in 4 vols. 8vo.

DANBY, FRANCIS, R.A., a painter, was born near Wexford 1793, and died at Exmouth 17 Feb., 1801. The best known of his works are, 'The Delivery of Israel out of Egypt;' 'The Embarkation of Cleopatra on the Cydnus,' from Shakspere; 'The Opening of the Seventh Seal,' from the Apocalypse; 'The Passage of the Red Sea;' and 'The Deluge.' All of these have been engraved.

DANBY, HENRY DANVERS, first EARL OF, was the son of Sir John Danvers, of Dantese, in Wiltshire, and born 28 June, 1573. He served in the Low Country war, under Maurice prince of Orange; afterwards in France, where he was knighted by Henry IV.; and next in Ireland as a lieutenant-general. On the accession of James I. he was created a peer, and appointed lord-president of Munster, and governor of Guernsey. King Charles I. made him earl of Danby, and Knight of the Garter. Before his death, which happened 20 Jan., 1643-4, he gave a piece of ground to the University of Oxford, for a botanical garden; to support which he left by will the impropriate rectory of Kirkdale, in Yorkshire. He also founded an almshouse and a free-school at Malmesbury.

DANBY, JOHN, a celebrated English composer of glees, died 1708.

DANBY, THOMAS OSBORNE, EARL OF. See LEEDS.

DANBY, WILLIAM, a gentleman of Swinton, in Yorkshire, who published several works on moral philosophy. Died 4 Dec., 1834, at. 82.

DANCE, CHARLES, a writer of burlesques, was born about 1794, and died at Lowestoft, Suffolk, 5 Jan., 1863.

DANCE, GEORGE, surveyor to the corporation of London, and the architect of the Mansion House, died 8 Feb., 1708.

DANCE, GEORGE, R.A., son of the preceding, whom he succeeded as city surveyor, was born 1740, and died 14 Jan., 1825. His chief architectural work is Newgate prison. He published a series of portraits of public characters, 2 vols., fcl. 1811-14.

DANCER, DANIEL, a miser, born near Harrow, Middlesex, 1716. The love of money was the ruling principle in his family. His intercourse with the world was merely in the selling of his hay, and the other produce of his farm, and the winter comforts of his fireside arose from the scanty supplies labouriously collected from the hedges, or the neighbouring common. On the death of his sister, he exchanged the hay-bands which hitherto had protected his legs for a second-hand pair of black worsted stockings, which were the only tokens of his mourning. He died 1794, and left the whole of his property to Lady Templest, who it seems behaved towards him with charity, in alleviating his apparent poverty.

DANCHEŦ, ANTOINE, a French poet, born Sept., 1671; died 21 Feb., 1748.

DANCKERT, or DANCKERTS, a family of artists, in Holland. 1. Cornelius, who was born at Amsterdam in 1561. He resided as a print-seller at Antwerp, where he engraved many portraits, landscapes, and historical pieces. 2. His son, Danckert Danckerts, who was born at Antwerp in 1600, engraved different subjects in a better style than his father. 3. John Danckerts, of the same family, settled at Amsterdam about 1654, and afterwards came to England, where he designed the plates for Juvenal, which were engraved by Hollar. 4. Henry Danckerts, his brother, was an engraver and landscape painter. He also came to England, and was employed by Charles II. in taking views of Windsor, Plymouth, &c. 5. Justus Danckerts was a designer and engraver at Amsterdam, and excelled in portraits. 6. Cornelius Danckerts was an architect, and constructed many public buildings at Amsterdam, which are much admired. He had a son named Peter, who became painter to the king of Poland.

Cortona, and was esteemed an admirable painter of history. Pietro Danaini, nephew to the preceding, was born at Florence 1640, and died 1712. He had an extraordinary talent for imitating the style of ancient masters.

DANDINI, HERCULES FRANCIS, an Italian count; professor of law at Padua; author of 'De servitutibus prædiorum,' &c.; was born 4 Nov., 1695; and died 7 March, 1747.

DANDINI, JEROME, an Italian Jesuit, who published an account of a journey which he undertook at the command of Clement VIII. to the Maronites of Libanus. He also wrote a commentary on Aristotle, 'De Anima.' Born 1554; died 26 Nov., 1634.

DANDOLO, ANDREW, doge of Venice, was born about 1310. He extended the commerce of the republic by a union with Egypt, which produced a war between the Venetians and the Genoese, in which he lost his life 7 Sept., 1354. He wrote the 'Chronicle of Venice,' and corresponded with Petrarch.

DANDOLO, HENRY, was elected doge of Venice 1102. Though then 84 years old and blind, vigour, wisdom, and activity marked his government. He conquered Zara, engaged in the Crusades, and displayed astonishing valour at the siege of Constantinople. Died 1205.

DANDKÉ-BARDON, MICHEL FRANÇOIS, a French writer and painter, was born at Aix, in Provence, 1700, and died at Marseilles, where he was director of the academy, 14 April, 1783.

DANEAU, LAMBERT, called in Latin Danaeus, a French Protestant divine, was born about 1530, and died at Castres 1596. He published forty-three works, the chief of which are 'De beneficiis aut sortilegis quos sorcarios vocant, dialogus;' 'A Treatise of Antichrist;' 'Physics Christianæ partes duæ.'

DANES, PIERRE, was born at Paris 1497. He taught Greek in the royal college; and being sent to the council of Trent, distinguished himself by his eloquence. In 1557 he was made bishop of Lamour. Died 23 April, 1577. His 'Opuscula' were printed 1731. Though he wrote little, he rendered great service to literature.

DANET, PIERRE, abbe of St. Nicholas de Verdun in France, published two Latin dictionaries; an edition of Phædrus for the use of the dauphin; and a Dictionary of Roman and Greek antiquities. Born about 1640; died 1709.

DANGEAU, LOUIS DE COURCILLON abbé DE, a French ecclesiastic, author of a large number of works on history, grammar, geography, &c., was born Jan., 1643 and died 1 Jan., 1723.

DANGEAU, PHILIPPE DE COURCILLON marquis DE, brother of the preceding, was born 21 Sept., 1634, and died 9 Sept., 1720. His Memoirs exhibit a curious portraiture of the court of Louis XIV.

DANHAWER, JOHN CONRAD, a German Lutheran divine, born 1603. He became professor of eloquence at Strasburg, where he died 7 Nov., 1666. He zealously opposed a projected union between the Lutherans and Calvinists; and wrote some theological treatises.

of Cornwall, entered the English college at Douay 1618, and became professor of humanity there. He afterwards studied at Lisbon, being the first scholar sent thither from Douay 1628. For about six years he was president of the English college at Lisbon, but in 1649 he returned to Douay, and was there nominated professor of divinity, which post he held till 1653, when he came to England, and acted as dean of the chapter. Died Sept., 1657. He was author of Meditations collected and ordered for the use of the English College at Lisbon 1649, 1663; and a folio volume of controversies, MS.

DANIEL, GABRIEL, a celebrated French Jesuit, born at Rouen 1649; died 23 June, 1728. His principal work is 'The History of France,' 3 vols., folio, 1713. He also wrote a 'Voyage to the World of Des Cartes,' and some polemical treatises.

DANIEL, NEHEMIAH. See DONELLAN.

DANIEL, PIERRE, an advocate of Orleans, who, when the abbey of St. Benedict-on-the-Loire was pillaged in the civil wars, saved a number of MSS., among which was the commentary of Servius on Virgil, and the 'Querulus' (confounded with the 'Aulularia' of Plautus), both of which he afterwards published. He also prepared an edition of Petronius, but died in 1603, before it was printed.

DANIEL, ROBERT MACKENZIE, a novelist, was born in Inverness-shire 1814, and educated at Aberdeen. Going to London, he there entered upon a literary career, but ultimately settled in Jersey as editor of the Jersey Herald. Died March, 1847. The titles of his works are: 'The Scottish Heiress;' 'The Gravedigger;' 'The Young Widow;' 'The Young Baronet;' and 'The Cardinal's Daughter.'—Anderson.

DANIEL, SAMUEL, was born near Taunton, Somersetshire, 1502. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, and on leaving the university was taken under the patronage of the earl of Pembroke. Afterwards he became tutor to Lady Anne Clifford, daughter of George, earl of Cumberland, who showed her regard for his worth by erecting a monument to his memory. On the death of Spenser he was appointed poet laureate; and in the reign of James was made one of the grooms of the privy chamber to the queen. Some years before his death he retired to a farm in Somersetshire, where he died in Oct., 1619. His poetical works were published in quarto by his brother, John Daniel, and again in 2 vols. 12mo. 1718. His History of England, extending to the reign of Edward III., is in Kennett's Collection. Daniel also wrote: 'The Tragedy of Cleopatra; On the Civil Wars between the Houses of Lancaster and York; Musophilus, or a general Defence of Learning; Tragedy of Philotas; Musa, or a Defence of Rhyme, &c. As a poet he does not stand in the first class, but as an historian he ranks among our best writers of that age.

DANIEL, WILLIAM BARKER, an English clergyman, was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1787; M.A. 1790), and died at the age of eighty, towards the end of the year 1833, in Garden Row, within the rules of the King's Bench, where he had been confined for twenty years. He was author of 'Rural Sports,' 2 vols. 4to., 1801-1803; 2nd edit. 3 vols. 8vo., 1810, 4th vol. 1813; and 'Plain Thoughts of former Years upon the Lord's Prayer, with deference addressed to Christians at the present period,' 8vo., London, 1822.

DANIELL, JOHN FREDERICK, D.C.L., F.R.S., professor of chemistry at King's College, London, was born in that city 12 March, 1790, and died 14 March, 1845. His great work, 'Meteorological Essays,' appeared in 1823. He also published an admirable 'Introduction to Chemical Philosophy,' 1839, and contributed a number of papers to scientific journals.

DANIELL, SAMUEL, an English artist, who published prints of 'African Scenery,' and the 'Scenery of Ceylon;' died 1811.

DANIELL, THOMAS, an English painter, born 1750. In 1784 he visited the East, and on his return exhibited a number of views, which he published 1808, in six folio volumes. Died 19 March, 1840.

DANIELL, WILLIAM, R.A., an English artist, nephew of Thomas Daniell, was born 1769. At the age of fourteen he accompanied his uncle to India for the purpose of assisting him in depicting the scenery, costume, and everything connected with that country. After an absence of ten years the uncle and nephew returned to England, and commenced the large work entitled 'Oriental Scenery,' in 6 folio vols. Among the works engraved and published by Mr. Daniell from 1801 to 1814 were 'A Picturesque Voyage to India,' a work entitled 'Zoography,' prepared in conjunction with William Wood; two vols. of 'Animated Nature;' a series of views of 'The Docks;' the story of 'Hunchback' engraved from pictures painted by Smirke; together with a vast variety of unconnected subjects, besides very many pictures and drawings. In 1814 he commenced the 'Voyage round Great Britain,' a gigantic undertaking, which was finished in 1825, in 4 vols. 4to. He also painted several panoramas, and brought out the 'Oriental Annual.' Died 16 Aug., 1837.

DANIELL, WILLIAM FREEMAN, M.D., staff surgeon to her majesty's forces in Jamaica, died at Southampton 26 June, 1865, aged 45. He was a first-class botanist, and a man of great scientific acquirements. In 1849 he published a volume on the medical topography and native diseases of the Gulf of Guinea.

DANNECKER, JOHN HENRY, a celebrated sculptor—the friend of Schiller—was born at Stuttgart 15 Oct., 1758, and died at Rome 8 Oct., 1841.

DANTE, ALIGHIERI, a famous Italian poet, born at Florence 1265. He was of an ambitious turn, and joined one of the factions which then disturbed Florence, but the party to which he belonged proving the weakest, he was banished. He then prevailed on the prince of Verona to make war on the Florentines, but the result did not answer his expectations; neither could he get himself recalled. He died at Ravenna 14 Sept., 1321. He wrote in his exile the 'Divina Commedia,' a triple poem on Paradise, Purgatory, and Hell. It shows a wonderful imagination, but breathes a bitter satirical spirit. He attacks the city of Florence, the French king, and the Pope with great virulence, as the authors of his misfortunes, which in reality proceeded from his own turbulent disposition. The 'Divina Commedia' has been translated into English blank verse by Cary, and into English triple-rhymes by Wright.

DANTE, IGNATIUS, a descendant of the poet, was born at Perugia 1537. He excelled in mathematics, on which he wrote several treatises; was made bishop of Alatri; and died 19 Oct., 1586.

DANTE, JOHN BAPTIST, a native of Perugia, and an excellent mathematician. He invented wings for flying, with which he succeeded in crossing the lake Trasimeno; but on repeating the experiment he fell upon a church and broke his thigh. He lived, however, to become professor of mathematics at Venice, where he died at the age of forty. He flourished about the end of the fifteenth century.

DANTE, PETER VINCENT, was a native of Perugia. His real name was Rainaldi, but he so successfully imitated the verse of the famous Dante that he was called by his name. He was eminent for his skill in mathematics and architecture, and invented several useful machines. Died 1512.

DANTE, VINCENT, grandson of the preceding, was an able mathematician, painter, and sculptor. He died at Perugia 1576, aged 46.

DANTON, GEORGE JACQUES, a leading man in the French Revolution, was born 28 Oct., 1759. He was a lawyer, and rose to notice in that storm which has brought forth a number of extraordinary persons to view, who would otherwise have passed their days in obscurity. He displayed talents in the convention, and was a powerful speaker. Robespierre, however, supplanted him, and he fell under the guillotine 5 April, 1794.

DANTZ, JOHN ANDREW, a Lutheran divine, born at Santrusen, near Gotha, in 1654. He became professor of theology at Jena, where he died 27 Dec., 1727. He wrote a Hebrew Grammar, a Chaldee Grammar, and several dissertations on the Hebrew Scripture, and the Rabbinical writings.

DANVERS, HENRY, earl of Danby. See DANBY.

DANVERS, HENRY, a politician and writer, appears to have been a colonel in the parliament army, governor of Stafford, and a justice of the peace some time before the usurpation of Cromwell; and it is said that he was well-beloved among the people, being noted for one who would take no bribes. It was at this time that he embraced the principles of the Baptists, and also of the Fifth Monarchy Men, though it is said he could not fall in with their practices. After the Restoration he appears to have suffered considerably on account of his nonconformity. In the reign of Charles II. he was joint elder of a Baptist congregation near Aldgate, but his principles rendering him obnoxious to the government, a proclamation was issued offering £100 for his apprehension. He was at length taken and sent prisoner to the Tower, but his lady having great interest at court, and there being no charge of consequence against him, he was released upon bail about 1675. In the reign of James II. he attended some private meetings, at which matters were concerted in favour of the duke of Monmouth; but the scheme of that unfortunate prince miscarrying, Danvers fled to Holland, where he died 1687. He wrote a 'Treatise on Baptism,' and edit. 1674, which brought upon him a number of adversaries, particularly Wills, Blinman, and Baxter, to whom he replied in three distinct treatises in 1675. He was also author of 'A Treatise of Laying on of Hands,' 1674; and 'Theopolis, or City of God.'

Burney, the second daughter of Dr. Charles Burney, was born at Lynn Regis 13 June, 1752. At an early age she began to exercise herself in works of fiction, tales, and poetry. At fifteen she burned all her early performances, but one of them kept possession of her memory, and gave rise to her first published work, 'Evelina; or the History of a Young Lady's Introduction to the World.' It used to be generally understood, and it has been repeatedly stated, that Miss Burney was only about seventeen when this, her first novel, appeared, but in fact it was published in 1778, when she was twenty-six. The work made a very considerable noise in the world. Her second novel, 'Cecilia,' appeared in 1782. In July, 1786, she was appointed one of the dressers, or keepers of the robes, to Queen Charlotte, and this menial situation she held for five years. In 1793 she married M. Alexandre Fiechard D'Arblay, a French emigrant artillery officer, and in 1796 she produced another novel, entitled 'Camilla.' She survived her husband twenty-two years, dying at Bath 6 Jan., 1840. Besides the works mentioned above, she wrote 'The Wanderer,' a novel; 'Memoirs of her father, Dr. Burney; Diary and Letters, edited by her niece.—Penny Cycl.; Macaulay's Essays.

DARCY, PATRICK, was born in Galway 1603. He was educated in the profession of the law, and became a leading member of the parliament assembled at Dublin 1640, when the Catholics had a joint share with the Protestants in the legislation of the kingdom. On 9 June, 1641, he delivered, by order of the House of Commons, his celebrated argument before a committee of the Lords, in the castle of Dublin, on questions touching the independence of Ireland, the illegality of appeals to England, the castle chamber proceedings, &c., propounded to the judges; printed 1643, 4to. He afterwards became one of the supreme council of the confederate Catholics of Ireland assembled at Kilkenny in 1647, and after sharing in all the political vicissitudes of those eventful times died at Dublin 1668.

D'ARCY, PATRICK, count, was born at Galway, in Ireland, 18 Sept., 1725. Being attached to the House of Stuart, he went to France, and studied under Clairaut with such success that at the age of seventeen he gave a solution of the problem of the curve of equal pressure, which was followed by another of still greater difficulty. In 1746 he accompanied the troops sent to Scotland, and was made prisoner. After this he served with reputation in the Seven Years' War. In 1760 he published an Essay on Artillery; and in 1765 a Memoir on the Duration of the Sensation of Sight. In 1770 he was appointed a maréchal de camp, and admitted a member of the Academy of Sciences. Died 18 Oct., 1770. Besides the above works he wrote a Memoir on Hydraulic Machines, and communicated numerous papers to the Academy.

D'ARGENVILLE, ANTOINE JOSEPH DEZALLIER, a French writer, was the son of a bookseller at Paris, and member of several learned societies in Europe. He wrote a valuable treatise on Gardening, 4to., 1747; the Lives of famous Painters, 3 vols. 4to., 1755; a Catalogue of Fossils found in France; and other curious works. He was also one of the writers engaged in the Encyclopédie. Born 1680; died 29 Nov., 1765.

DARIUS I., king of Persia, the son of Hystaspes, ascended the throne B.C. 521. He entered into a conspiracy with six others against the usurper Smerdis, and having slain him, they agreed that he should have the crown whose horse neigh first in the morning. Darius's groom, on the night preceding, brought his master's horse to a mare on the spot fixed upon. The next morning, when the candidates came to the place, the horse of Darius suddenly neighed, in consequence of which he was saluted king. He took Babylon after a siege of ten months, rebuilt the Temple of Jerusalem, and sent the captive Jews to their own country. His forces suffered a terrible defeat from the Greeks at Marathon, on which he resolved to carry on the war in person, but died in the midst of his preparations B.C. 485.

DARIUS II., surnamed Ochus or Nothus, ascended the throne of Persia B.C. 423, and died B.C. 404.

DARIUS III., or CODOMANNUS, king of Persia, began to reign B.C. 336. He was thrice defeated by Alexander the Great, and died B.C. 330.

DARLING, GRACE HORSLEY, an English heroine, who will ever be remembered for her noble and courageous conduct on 5 Sept., 1838, when she and her father, who was keeper of the Outer-Fern Lighthouse, ventured out in a tremendous sea in a coble, and rescued several of the passengers from the wreck of the 'Foranshire' steamer. Born 1815; died 20 Oct., 1842.

DARNLEY, HENRY STUART, EARL OF, was the eldest son of Matthew Stuart, earl of Lennox, and Margaret Douglas, the granddaughter of Henry VII. On 20 July, 1565, he married Mary Queen of Scots, and had by her one son, who was James VI. of Scotland, and the first of that name in England. Darnley, being in a bad state of health, was lodged in a lone house a short distance from Edinburgh; and on 9 Feb., 1566-7, about eleven at night, the queen left him, in order to be present at a masque in Holyrood Palace. At two the next morning the house in which Darnley lay was blown up with gunpowder, and his dead body, with that of a servant who slept in the same room, was found lying in an adjacent garden without the city wall, untouched by fire, and with no bruise or mark of violence. Such was the unhappy fate of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, in the twenty-first year of his age. It is supposed that Bothwell and Huntley were the perpetrators of this horrid deed.

DARQUIER, AUGUSTIN, a French astronomer, born 1718; died 18 Jan., 1802.

DARRELL, WILLIAM, an English Jesuit, who joined the order 1671. He presided over the college at Liege 1708-12, and before and after this appointment was employed on the English mission.

DARTFORD.

His death occurred at St. Omer 28 Feb., 1721, æt. 70. He wrote 'The Vindication of St. Ignatius of Loyola from Fanaticism,' in answer to Stillingfleet, 4to., London, 1688; 'Gentleman Instructed,' 'Theses Theologicæ, in quibus defenditur Collegii Angli. Leodii Doctrina,' 4to., Liège, 1702; 'Moral Reflections on the Epistles and Gospels of every Sunday,' 4 vols. 12mo., 1711; 'The Case Reviewed, or an answer to the case stated by Dr. Charles Leslie.' It is sometimes said that he was the author of 'Practical Reflections,' but the probability is that that work was composed by the Rev. Robert Lane, alias Bowes.—Oliver.

DARTFORD, BARON. See CARVILL.

DARTMOUTH, GEORGE LEGGE, LORD, an eminent naval commander, born 1648. He was brought up under Admiral Spragge, and at the age of twenty obtained the command of a ship. In 1673 he was appointed governor of Portsmouth, master of the horse, and gentleman to the duke of York. In 1682 he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Dartmouth, and the following year sent to raze the fortifications of Tangier. James II. appointed him his master of the horse, general of the ordnance, and constable of the Tower. He had also the command of the fleet at the time of the prince of Orange's invasion, but was prevented from acting by contrary winds. At the Revolution he was committed to the Tower, where he died 25 Oct., 1691.

DARU, PIERRE ANTOINE NOEL BRUNO, Count, a peer of France, distinguished as a statesman, a poet, and an historian. Born Jan., 1767; died 5 Sept., 1820.

DARWIN, CHARLES, son of Dr. Erasmus Darwin, was born at Lichfield 1758, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, whence he removed to Edinburgh, where he assiduously applied himself to the study of medicine, and obtained the first prize medal offered by the Esculapian Society for the best essay on the means of distinguishing pus from mucus. He died a few months afterwards, 15 May, 1778, leaving behind him an Account of the Retrograde Motions of the Absorbent Vessels of Animal Bodies in some Diseases, in Latin. A translation of this was published by his father.

DARWIN, ERASMUS, M.D., was born at Elton, near Newark, in Nottinghamshire, 12 Dec., 1731. After receiving his education at Chesterfield, he was sent to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.B. 1755, and then removed to Edinburgh to complete his professional studies. Having taken his doctor's degree, he settled at Lichfield, and in 1757 married Miss Howard, of that city, who died 1770, leaving three sons. In 1781 he married again, and went to live at Derby, where he died suddenly 18 April, 1802. Dr. Darwin published in 1781 his poem, 'The Botanical Garden,' in which he celebrated what he called the Loves of the Plants—a performance once popular on account of its novelty. It was happily ridiculed in a burlesque called 'The Loves of the Triangles.' In 1793 he published Zoonomia, or the Laws of Organic Life, a work in which atheism is unblushingly avowed. This was followed by Phytologia, or the Philosophy of Agriculture and Gardening, 1801. He also wrote a tract on Female Education, and some papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

DASSOUCI, CHARLES COYPEAU, a French poet, born at Paris about 1604. He was an idle adventurer, and suffered imprisonment in the Bastille and the Châtelet for imposture. He died in 1678 or 1679. His poems, in 3 vols., were published in 1678.

DATI, AUGUSTINE, a learned schoolmaster of Sienna, was born 1420, and died 6 April, 1478. His works were printed in one folio volume, 1503.

DATI, CHARLES ROBERT, professor of belles lettres at Florence, wrote Italian poems and essays, but is chiefly known by his 'Lives of the Painters,' viz., of Zeuxis, Parrhasius, Apelles, and Protogenes. Born 2 Oct., 1619; died 11 Jan., 1676.

DAUBENTON, LOUIS JEAN MARIE, a celebrated French naturalist and anatomist, born 29 May, 1716; died on the night of 31 Dec., 1799. He became the associate of Buffon in the preparation and completion of his valuable Natural History, and published besides Instructions for Shepherds, a Treatise on Trees and Shrubs, and many curious and interesting memoirs on mineralogy, &c.

D'AUBIGNÉ. See AUBIGNÉ.

DAUBUZ, CHARLES, a French Protestant divine, was born about 1670, and came to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. He became vicar of Brotherton in Cheshire, and is said to have died in 1740. His works are 'Pro testimonio Josephi de Jesu Christo, contra Tan. Fabrum et alios,' and 'A Commentary on the Revelation of St. John,' folio, 1712.

DAUDIN, FRANÇOIS MARIE, a Frenchman, author of the Natural History of Reptiles, and other works on cognate subjects, was born at Paris 25 March, 1774, and died 1804.

DAUGLISH, JOHN, M.D., of Edinburgh, the inventor of the system of making aerated bread, died at Great Malvern 14 Jan., 1866, æt. 42.

DAUSQUE, CLAUDE, a French Jesuit and classical editor, born 5 Dec., 1566; died 17 Jan., 1644.

DAVANZATI, BERNARD, a Florentine writer, chiefly known by his translation of Tacitus, was born 1520, and died 20 March, 1606.

DAVENANT, CHARLES, LL.D., eldest son of Sir William Davenant, was born in 1656, and educated at Cheam in Surrey, from whence he removed to Balliol College, Oxford. At the age of nineteen he produced a tragedy, called Circe, which was acted with applause. He now applied to the study of the civil law, in which faculty he obtained his doctor's degree at Cambridge. He was appointed a commissioner of excise, and afterwards inspector-general of the exports and imports. Died 6 Nov., 1714. Dr. Davenant was an excellent writer on political economy; and his Essay on Ways and Means, as well as his discourses on the Revenues, have been of eminent use to modern statesmen. All his works on these subjects were collected into 5 vols. 8vo., 1771.

DAVENANT, JOHN, a native of London, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of D.D., and became a fellow. He was afterwards elected master of that college, and in 1618 was sent by James I. to the synod of Dort. He was made bishop of Salisbury 1621, and died 20 April, 1641. He wrote an Exposition of the Epistle to the Colossians in Latin; and Animadversions upon S. Hoard's treatise entitled God's Love to Mankind, &c. He was a strong Calvinist.

DAVENANT, Sir WILLIAM, was born in Feb., 1605, at Oxford, where his father kept an inn. He was entered of Lincoln College, but soon left the university, and became page, first to the duchess of Richmond, and afterwards to Lord Brooke. In 1628 he commenced author, and formed an intimacy with the first wits of the age. About this time he had the misfortune to lose his nose in consequence of an amour. On the death of Ben Jonson he was appointed poet-laureate, and in 1639 governor of the royal company acting at the Cockpit in Drury Lane. The civil war soon blighted his prospects, by putting down all theatres, and he went over to France, but soon after returned, and was made a lieutenant-general under the duke of Newcastle, when he also received the honour of knighthood. He was in great favour with the queen, owing to his having embraced the Catholic religion: but on the decline of the royal cause he again sought refuge in France. In an attempt to go to Virginia he was captured, and would have been put to death had not Milton interposed to save his life, which generosity Davenant required after the Restoration by exerting his interest for his brother poet. Charles II. granted him a patent for a theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, and afterwards for another in Dorset Gardens. He died 7 April, 1668, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. His plays and poems, the principal of which last is Gondibert, a kind of irregular epic, were collected and published in 1 vol. folio, 1673.

DAVENPORT, CHRISTOPHER, was born at Coventry about 1598, and sent when about fifteen years of age to Merton College, Oxford, where he spent two years. He then proceeded to Douay, and next to Ypres, where he became a friar of the order of St. Francis. After several removals from place to place, he became a missionary in England, where he went by the name of Franciscus à Sancta Clara, and at length was appointed chaplain to Queen Henrietta Maria. He greatly exerted himself to promote the cause of Catholicism, by gaining disciples, raising money among the English Catholics to carry on public matters abroad, and by writing books for the advancement of his religion and order. After the Restoration of Charles II., when the marriage was celebrated between him and Catharine of Braganza, Davenport became one of her chaplains. He was several times chosen provincial of his order in England, where he died 31 May, 1680. Among the numerous works of this erudite friar are a Latin treatise against Judicial Astrology; 'Paraphrastica Expositio Articulorum Confessionis Anglicæ'; 'Tractatus de predestinatione, de meritis, et peccatorum remissione,' &c., subsequently entitled 'Deus, Natura, Gratia'; 'Systema Fidei: sive tractatus de concilio universalis'; and a work on the Immaculate Conception of the Mother of God. A collection of his works in two folio volumes was printed at Douay 1665.

DAVENPORT, JOHN, brother of the preceding, was born at Coventry 1597, and educated at Oxford. Turning Puritan he went to Amsterdam, and eventually to New England, where he died 13 March, 1670. He wrote a 'Catechism containing the chief heads of the Christian religion,' and other works.

DAVENPORT, ROBERT, an English poet and dramatist, author of 'The City Night Cap,' &c., was living in 1661.

DAVID (St.), the patron of Wales, was the son of a British prince, in Cardiganshire, and born in the fifth century. He founded twelve monasteries, the principal of which was in the vale of Ross. He inculcated labour upon his devotees, which perhaps may account for the leek worn on his festival. He succeeded St. Dubricius in the archiepiscopal see of Caerleon, which he removed to Menevia, now called St. David's, where he died about 544.

DAVID I., king of Scotland, after Alexander the Pierce, 1124, was brought up in England, and married Maud the grand-niece of William the Conqueror. After the death of the first Henry, he maintained with spirit the claims of the Empress Maud to the English throne against Stephen, and entering England he seized Carlisle, which he retained. He died at Carlisle 1153.

DAVID II., king of Scotland, was son of Robert Bruce. During the invasion of his country by Baliol he was conveyed to France, but returned 1342. He was in 1346 taken prisoner by an English army, and sent to the Tower, from which, after ten years, he was liberated on paying a heavy ransom. Died 1371, aged 47.

DAVID, FRANÇOIS ANNE, an engraver, born 1741 at Paris, where he died 2 April, 1824.

DAVID, GEORGE, a fanatic of Ghent, began in 1535 to preach as the true Messiah, the third David, the nephew of God. This strange doctrine created followers and persecution, and he fled to Friesland, and afterwards to Basle, where he died 26 Aug., 1556.

DAVID, JACQUES LOUIS, a celebrated French painter, born at Paris 1748; died at Brussels 29 Dec., 1825. Among the best works of this artist may be noticed The Coronation of Napoleon; The Oath of the Horatii; The Death of Socrates; and The Rape of the Sabinæ.—Rose.

DAVID, JEAN PIERRE, an eminent French sculptor, born 1789; died 1856.

DAVID DE ST. GEORGE, JEAN JOSEPH ALEXIS, a French philologist, born 1759; died 30 March, 1809.

DAVID AP GWILYM, a celebrated Welsh bard of the fourteenth century.

DAVIDIS, FRANCIS, a Hungarian, who at various times embraced the tenets of the Roman Catholics the Lutherans, the Calvinists, the Unitarians, &c. As he declared that no worship was due to Christ, he was accused of favouring Judaism, and was thrown into prison, where he died 1579. He wrote some tracts on the millennium, &c.

DAVIDS, ARTHUR LUMLEY, a promising young Oriental scholar, who died at London 19 July, 1832, a month before attaining his majority. He published a Grammar of the Turkish Language.

DAVIDSON, JAMES, an antiquary of Axminster, Devonshire, whose principal publications are a History of Axminster Church, a History of Newnham Abbey, and 'Bibliotheca Devoniensis.' Died 29 Feb., 1864.

DAVIDSON, JOHN, a traveller, was the son of a tailor in London, where he commenced life as a chemist and druggist. In 1826, however, he gave up his business, and spent the remainder of his life in travelling nearly all over the world. He visited North and South America, India, Egypt (as far as the Second Cataract), Syria, Palestine, Turkey, Greece, Italy, France, and Germany. While endeavouring to reach Timbuctoo he was murdered by the El Hareb tribe, near the southern confines of the district of Egedda, in Africa, Dec., 1836.

DAVIDSON, LUCRETIA MARIA, an American poetess, born 3 Sept., 1808; died 27 Aug., 1825. Her writings were published at New York in 1829.

DAVIES, HUGH, a botanist, was born in Anglesey about 1739, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A. 1752; M.A. 1763). In 1778 he was preferred to the living of Beaumary, which he resigned 1787 for that of Aber, in Carmarvonshire. He rendered great assistance to Pennant; and his work on the botany of Anglesey was published in 1813 under the title of Welsh Botany in English and Welsh. Died 16 Feb., 1821.

DAVIES, or DAVIS, JOHN, a poet and schoolmaster, was born at Hereford, and educated at Oxford. He kept a writing school, first at his native place, and next in London, where he was considered one of the best penmen of the age. He published some copybooks, and several poetical pieces, one entitled 'Microcosmos, or the Discovery of the Little World,' and another on the death of Prince Henry, whom he had instructed in writing. Died about 1618.

DAVIES, SIR JOHN, an English lawyer and poet, was born at Tisbury, in Wiltshire, in 1750, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Middle Temple, and in 1795 was called to the bar, but was expelled the society for his quarrelsome behaviour. On this he returned to Oxford, where he wrote his poem on the Immortality of the Soul, which procured him deserved applause. He was chosen into parliament in the reign of Elizabeth, and restored to his rank in the Temple. In 1603 he became attorney-general in Ireland, and was afterwards appointed one of the judges of assize. In 1606 he was made a serjeant, and the next year received the honour of knighthood. In 1612 he published his 'Discovery of the true Causes why Ireland has never been subdued till the beginning of this Reign;' and soon after he was chosen Speaker of the House of Commons in that kingdom. In 1620 he sat in the English parliament. Died 7 Dec., 1626. The political works of Sir John Davies were published together in 1786; and besides his poem already mentioned he wrote epigrams, acrostics, and the Orchestra, a poem on dancing. His reports of cases adjudged in the Irish courts, were printed in 1715. His widow, Eleanor, the daughter of Lord Audley, pretended to prophesy, and printed some strange revelations. She died in 1652.

DAVIES, JOHN, D.D., was born at Llanveres, in Denbighshire, and educated at Ruthin School, from whence he first went to Jesus College, and afterwards to Lincoln College, Oxford. He obtained the living of Malloyd, in Merionethshire, and took his doctor's degree in 1616. The date of his death is not known. He published Antiquæ Linguae Britannicæ Rudimenta, 8vo., 1621; Dictionarium Latino-Britannicum, folio; Adagia Britannica; Adagiorum Britannicorum Specimen. He also assisted in translating the Bible into Welsh.

DAVIES, JOHN, a translator, was born at Kidwelly, Carmarthenshire, 25 May, 1625, and educated at Oxford and Cambridge. Wood gives a list of upwards of thirty volumes translated by him. Died 22 July, 1693.

DAVIES, JOHN, D.D., LL.D., was born in London 22 April, 1679, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. In 1711 he obtained a living in Cambridgeshire, and a prebend in the cathedral of Ely. In 1717 he was chosen master of his college, and died 7 March, 1731-2. Dr. Davies was the editor of Maximi Tyrii Dissertationes, Gr. et Latin.; C. Julii Cæsaris et A. Hirtii quæ extant omnia; M. Minucii Felcis Octavius; Ciceronis Tusculanarum; De Natura Deorum; De Divinatione et de Fato, &c.; Lactantii Firmiani epitome divinarum institutionum. His editions of Cicero are particularly valuable.

DAVIES, MILES, a Welsh clergyman, born in the parish of Whiteford, Flintshire. Nothing more is known of him than that he came to London in the reign of George I., and published by subscription some volumes under the general title of 'Athenæ Britannicæ,' a kind of bibliographical, biographical, and critical work. The first of these volumes, printed in 1715, is entitled, 'Ελευθεροβιβλιον, sive Icon Libellorum, or a Critical History of Pamphlets.'

DAVIES, ROBERT, a Welsh antiquary and collector of MSS., died 22 May, 1728, aged 44.

DAVIES, ROBERT, a Welsh poet, better known as Bardd Nantglyn, was born about 1769, and died 1 Dec., 1835, at Nantglyn, where he had been parish clerk. Most of his prize poems are printed in his work entitled 'Dilliau Barddas,' 1837. He also compiled an excellent Welsh grammar.—Williams.

DAVIES, DR. ROWLAND, was born at Gille Abbey, near Cork, 1649, and educated at Dublin. Having taken orders he obtained several ecclesiastical preferments in Ireland; but in 1689 he followed the example of many of his reverend brethren, and came over to this country. For some time he held a lectureship at Great Yarmouth. At the close of the war he returned to Ireland, and was appointed dean of Cork. Died 11 Dec., 1721. He is author of several treatises against the Roman church. His Journal from 1688-9 to 1690, edited by Richard Caulfield, was printed by the Camden Society 1857.

DAVIES, SAMUEL, an American divine, president of the college of New Jersey, was born 1724, and died 4 Feb., 1761.

DAVIES, SNEYD, D.D., was a native of Shrewsbury, and received his education at Eton School and King's College, Cambridge. Dr. Cornwallis, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, gave him a canonry in his cathedral, and presented him to the mastership of St. John's Hospital, Lichfield. He was also archdeacon of Derby, and rector of Kingsland, Herefordshire. Died 6 Feb., 1769. He wrote several ingenious poems, which are printed in Doddsley's and Nichols's collections.

DAVIES, THOMAS, a bookseller and writer, born about 1712. He was brought up at Edinburgh, and in 1736 was an actor at the theatre in the Haymarket. Afterwards he turned bookseller, but not succeeding in that business, he became a strolling player. About 1762 he commenced bookselling again in Russell Street, Covent Garden; but in 1778 he became a bankrupt, and was relieved from distress by the liberal exertions of DAVIES.

Dr. Johnson. In 1780 he published the Life of Garrick, which had a good sale. He also wrote Dramatic Miscellanies; the Life of John Henderson; and several fugitive pieces. Died 5 May, 1785.

DAVIES, WALTER, was born 15 July, 1761, in the county of Montgomery, and started in life as a schoolmaster. About 1791 he obtained a clerkship at All Souls' College, Oxford, and while there resident held office at the Ashmolean Museum. He obtained the degree of B.A. in 1795; and that of M.A. in 1803, in the university of Cambridge. Taking orders, he was presented to the perpetual curacy of Ysppytt Ivan, Denbighshire, which he held till his death. He was also vicar of Llanrhaidryn-Mochant. Died 5 Dec., 1849. He composed a number of poems in the Welsh language, and edited the poetical works of Hugh Morris, and of Lewis Glyn Cothi. He also published a 'General View of the Agriculture and Domestic Economy of North Wales and South Wales,' 3 vols.

DAVILA, HENRY CATHARINE, one of the most celebrated of Italian historians, was born near Padua 30 Oct., 1576, and died July, 1631. He wrote the 'History of the Civil Wars in France' from the death of Henry II. to the peace of Verbins in 1598.

DAVILA, PETER FRANCIS, a Spanish naturalist, who died at Madrid 1785 or 1786.

DAVIS, HENRY EDWARDS, a divine, born at Windsor 11 July, 1756, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was elected a fellow. He wrote an able Examination of Gibbon's History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, and was the only one of his antagonists whom the historian chose to answer. Died 10 Feb., 1784.

DAVIS, J. P., an English historical painter, born about 1783; died 28 Sept., 1861. His 'Thoughts on Great Painters' appeared at London, 1860.

DAVIS, JOHN. See DAVIES.

DAVIS, JOHN, an English navigator, was born at Sandridge, Devonshire. In 1585 he had the command of an expedition sent out to discover a north-west passage to the East Indies, in which voyage he discovered the strait which is called by his name. The year following he sailed again on the same design, and having explored the coasts of Greenland and Iceland proceeded as far as latitude 73° N. In 1591 he went out as second in command to Mr. Cavendish, in his unfortunate voyage to the South Seas. After this he made five voyages to the East Indies, but at last was killed in an engagement with some Japanese on the coast of Malacca 27 Dec., 1605. He wrote an account of his voyages.

DAVISON, or DAWSON, EDWARD, an English Jesuit, who died at Brussels 22 Dec., 1622, æt. 46. He wrote 'Practical Method of Meditation,' 12mo., St. Omer, 1614; and 'Lives of many Saints,' from the Spanish of Ribadeneira, Douay, 1615.

DAVISON, FRANCIS, son of William Davison, mentioned below, published a miscellany in 1602, under the title of a 'Poetical Rapsodie,' containing small pieces by the compiler himself and by some friends. A second edition of this appeared in 1608, a third in 1611, and a fourth in 1621.

DAVISON, JEREMIAH, an English portrait painter. He was a disciple of Sir Peter Lely, and died 1745.

DAVISON, WILLIAM, a statesman in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, to whom he was secretary, but whose ill-will he incurred by despatching the warrant for the execution of Mary queen of Scots without orders, as was alleged. For this he was heavily fined and imprisoned; and there can be no doubt that he was sacrificed to the policy of Elizabeth and her ministers. He died 21 or 22 Dec., 1608, and was buried at Stepney on the 24th of that month.

DAVY, CHARLES, was born 1722, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1742; M.A. 1748). He was instituted to the rectory of Topcroft, Norfolk, 1764; to the rectory of Benacre 1766; and to that of Onehouse, in the same county, 1776. Died 8 April, 1797. His publications were 'Conjectural Observations on the Origin and Progress of Alphabetical Writing,' 1772; 'Letters addressed chiefly to a young gentleman, upon Subjects of Literature; Including a Translation of Euclid's Section of the Canon, and his Treatise on Harmonics; with an explanation of the Greek musical modes, according to the doctrine of Ptolemy,' 2 vols. 8vo., Bury St. Edmunds, 1787. In 1768 there appeared 'Proposals for printing by Subscription, An Essay upon the Principles and Powers of Vocal and Instrumental Music. In 2 parts. By Charles Davy, Rector of Benacre, and Christopher Smear, Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge.' The work was never printed, but the MS. is still in existence.—MS. Davy.

DAVY, CHARLES, son of the preceding, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. In 1803 he was instituted to the vicarage of Wickham Market, Suffolk, which he resigned upon being presented, in 1818, to the rectories of Barking and Combs, in the same county. Died 7 March, 1836, aged 79. He was author (conjointly with his brother Frederick) of 'A Relation of a Journey to the Glaciers in the Dutchy of Savoy; translated from the French of M. T. Bourrit, preceptor of the cathedral church of Geneva,' 8vo., Norwich, 1775. He also published 'The Necessary Limitation of the Right of Private Judgment on Controverted Points of Theology. A Sermon,' 4to., Ipswich, 1794.—Ibid.

DAVY, SIR HUMPHRY, inventor of the safety-lamp, born at Penzance 1778. His parents occupied a humble position in society. After a preliminary education he was apprenticed to a surgeon in his native town, and in 1798 became superintendent of the Pneumatic Institution established at Clifton for the purpose of trying the medicinal effects of gas. This post he relinquished in 1801, on being appointed lecturer on chemistry at the Royal Philosophical Institution at London, of which he afterwards became professor. In 1812 the prince regent conferred upon him the honour of knighthood, and shortly afterwards he married Mrs. Apreece, a lady possessed of a considerable fortune. In 1813 he made a tour on the Continent, and became acquainted with many distinguished men of science. He was elected vice-president of the Royal Institution 1814, and in 1817 one of the associates of the Royal Academy. In 1818 and 1819 he made another tour on the Continent, and during his absence abroad in the first-named year was created a baronet. On the death of Sir Joseph Banks, in 1820, he succeeded that celebrated naturalist in the presidency of the Royal Society. This post, however, he resigned, 1827, in consequence of failing health. He died of apoplexy at Geneva 29 May, 1829. Sir Humphry Davy will, chiefly be remembered as the inventor of the safety-lamp, which, by rendering explosions in mines through fire-damp less frequent than formerly, has been the means of saving thousands of valuable lives. This invention, indeed, entitles Sir Humphry to be ranked among the benefactors of his country and of mankind. He also made several important chemical discoveries, and published many scientific works, of which a collected edition was published in 1839-40 in 9 vols. 8vo., under the editorship of his brother and biographer, Dr. J. Davy. Two works by Sir Humphry attained to considerable popularity among general readers, viz., 'Salmonia; or days of fly-fishing, by an angler;' and a posthumous volume entitled, 'Consolations in travel, or the last days of a philosopher.'

DAVY, JOHN, a musical composer, born at Upton Helion, near Exeter, 1766. He discovered his genius for harmony when very young, and imitated the chimes of the church by suspending eight horseshoes between the ceiling of his garret and the thatched roof, after which he struck them with an iron rod. This led to his being patronized by the clergyman, who articulated him, when only twelve years of age, to Jackson, the organist of Exeter Cathedral. When free from his engagement he repaired to London, where he was employed by the theatres, till his infirmities deprived him of his powers. He died, very poor, 22 Feb., 1824. His principal pieces are the operas 'Rob Roy Macgregor,' and 'Woman's Will;' but he excelled chiefly in the composition of ballad music.

DAVY, JOHN, M.D., F.R.S., brother of Sir Humphry Davy, was born at Penzance, Cornwall, 1790. He studied medicine at Edinburgh, and took his M.D. degree there 1814. He entered the army as a surgeon, and ultimately attained the rank of inspector-general of army hospitals. Dr. Davy died at Lesketh How, near Ambleside, 24 Jan., 1868. He was eminent as a chemist, geologist, and physiologist, and wrote several volumes on general subjects, besides a large number of papers ranging over the whole field of natural science. He also wrote the Life of his brother, Sir Humphry Davy, and edited his collected works.

DAVY, MARTIN, D.D. and M.D., for thirty-six years master of Caius College, Cambridge, died 18 May, 1839, aged 77.

DAVYS, GEORGE, an English prelate, born at Loughborough, Leicestershire, 1 Oct., 1780, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow 1806. To him was entrusted the education of the Princess Victoria, afterwards queen of England. He was appointed rector of Allhallows-in-the-Wall, London, 1829; dean of Chester 1831; bishop of Peterborough 1839; died 18 April, 1864. Besides some unimportant theological opuscles, he wrote 'A plain and short History of England for children, in letters from a father to a son, with a set of questions at the end of each letter,' 13th edition, 1860.

DAVYS, JOHN, rector of Castle Ashby, Northamptonshire, was author of a 'Treatise on the Art of Decyphering,' 1737, and an historical tract, 1739.

DAWE, GEORGE, an English painter, born about 1775; died 15 Oct., 1829. He wrote a Life of Morland.

DAWES, RICHARD, a learned critic, was born 1708, probably in Leicestershire, and educated at Market Bosworth, under Anthony Blackwall, after which he was removed to Emmanuel College,

DAY.

Cambridge, where in 1731 he became fellow, and in 1733 took his degree of M.A. In 1736 he published proposals for a Greek version of the Paradise Lost, but the work never appeared. In 1738 he was appointed master of the grammar-school at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where also he obtained the mastership of the hospital of St. Mary. In 1745 he published his 'Miscellanea Critica,' a work of high value, a new edition of which was printed at Oxford in 1781, by Burgess, afterwards bishop of Salisbury. In 1749 Mr. Dawes resigned his school and the mastership of the hospital on a pension. He died at Heworth, near Newcastle, 21 March, 1766.

DAWES, SIR WILLIAM, an English prelate, was born at Lyons, the seat of his father, near Braintree in Essex, 12 Sept., 1671. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, from whence he went to St. John's College, Oxford, but on succeeding to the baronetcy he removed to Catharine Hall, Cambridge. In 1696 he obtained the degree of D.D., and the mastership of his college. The same year he was made chaplain to the king, and prebendary of Worcester. In 1698 he became dean of Bocking, and in 1707 was promoted to the bishopric of Chester, from whence in 1714 he was translated to York. He died 30 April, 1744. His works were published in 3 vols. 8vo., 1733.

DAWSON, JOHN, a mathematician, born at Garsdale, Yorkshire, 1734. He was bred to the medical profession, but afterwards became an eminent teacher of mathematics at Sedburgh. In the early part of his life he had a controversy with Emerson on Newton's system of analysis; another with Dr. Stewart on the distance of the sun; and subsequently one with Mr. Wildbore on the discharge of fluids from vessels in motion. He also wrote a tract against Priestley on the Doctrine of Philosophical Necessity. * Died 20 Sept. 1820.

DAWSON, WILLIAM, a preacher of great celebrity among the Wesleyans, died 4 July, 1841, aged 68.

DAY, GEORGE, an English prelate, born in Shropshire about 1501, and educated at Cambridge, where he was appointed master of St. John's College, 1537. In the same year he was collated to the rectory of Allhallows-the-Great, London, on the presentation of the king, to whom he was chaplain. He became provost of King's College, Cambridge, 1538, and bishop of Chichester, 1543. Being a zealous opponent of the new doctrines, he was deprived of his bishopric 1551, and committed to the custody of Bishop Goodrich, with whom he continued till the death of Edward VI., when he was restored to his see. Died 2 Aug., 1550.—Athen. Cantab.

DAY, or DAYE, JOHN, a celebrated printer, was a native of Dunwich in Suffolk. He settled in the metropolis, where he printed the Bible, Foxe's Acts and Monuments, Latimer's Sermons, Tyndal's works, and many other books. He was a zealous supporter of the new religious belief. Died 23 July, 1584.

DAY, JOHN, son of the preceding, was born 1566, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He was presented to the vicarage of St. Mary at Oxford, and afterwards to that of Thurlow in Suffolk, where he died 1627. He published sermons; and a work under the punning title of 'Day's Day, or his Twelve Hours, that is, twelve several lectures by way of Catechisme.'

DAY.

DAY, JOHN, a dramatic poet, studied at Caius College, Cambridge. He was a writer for the stage in or before 1593, and in the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth, and the earlier part of the reign of James I., he appears to have enjoyed great popularity, although there are several indications of his having been in necessitous circumstances. The time of his death is unknown. He wrote many plays, most of them in conjunction with other authors. Thirty-two of his works are enumerated in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantab.'

DAY, RICHARD, son of the famous printer, was born in London 21 Dec., 1552, and educated at Cambridge. He carried on the printing business for a time, but abandoned it on taking orders, when he became vicar of Reigate, Surrey. He was living 1607. Mr. Day translated John Fox's 'Christ Jesus Triumphant.' As a printer he merits the honour of attempting general reform in the distinct use of the letters j and i, v and u.—Athen. Cantab.

DAY, STEPHEN, the first printer in New England, died 22 Dec., 1668.

DAY, THOMAS, was born in London 22 June, 1748. His father, who was a collector of the customs, died while he was an infant, and left him a fortune of £1,200 a year. He received his education at the Charterhouse, from whence he was removed to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, after which he entered the Middle Temple, but never followed the law as a profession. His manners were very eccentric, and his opinions romantic. He and his friend, Mr. Bicknel, took two orphan children from the workhouse at Shrewsbury, to educate them in the ancient Roman manner, and afterwards to marry them. The project, however, failed, and Mr. Day married, in 1778, a Miss Mills of Derbyshire. He wrote against the American war and the slave trade, and was a strenuous advocate for parliamentary reform; but the only work by which his name will be perpetuated is the History of Sandford and Merton, a romantic tale, for young persons. Mr. Day's notions were theoretical, and though marked with a good deal of sentiment, had little of experience or religion in them. His death was occasioned by his disregard of common customs. Having a favourite foal, he would not suffer it to be broken in, because it was cruel, but undertook the management of it himself, the consequence being that the animal threw him, and gave him a violent kick on the skull, of which he died 28 Sept., 1789.

DAYTON, WILLIAM, was the United States minister at Paris, from March, 1861, till his death 1 Dec., 1864.

DEALTRY, THOMAS, was educated at Catharine Hall, Cambridge (LL.B. 1829), and created D.D. at Lambeth 1846. He became bishop of Madras 1849, and died 4 March, 1861.

DEANE, HENRY, prior of Lanthony, in Monmouthshire, was constituted in 1495 lord chancellor of Ireland, of which realm he was also deputy and lord-justice. He was consecrated bishop of Bangor 1496; translated to Salisbury 1499; appointed lord chancellor of England 1500; archbishop of Canterbury 1501; died 15 Feb., 1502-3.—Athen. Cantab.

DEANE, THOMAS, a native of Kent, was educated at Oxford, and became a fellow of University College. He turned Catholic in 1685, and was afterwards pilloried in London as a priest. During the latter part of his life he was conned in the

DECKER.

Fleet prison; but he died at Malden, Kent, 10 Nov., 1735, aged 84. He wrote 'Some Reflections in Answer to the Vindication of Martin Luther;' and 'His Vindication;' being another Argument of the Schism of the Church of England.' Both these pieces are printed at the end of a work entitled 'The Religion of Martin Luther neither Catholic nor Protestant, proved from his own works,' 1688.

DE BERGH, AUGUSTUS, a geologist, was born at Hamburg in or about 1779. He was bred a sailor, and in the pursuit of his calling stored up a large stock of scientific learning as well as a competent fortune. He was the intimate friend and companion of Leopold Von Buch. The latter years of his life were spent in retirement at Brighton, in England, where he died 27 July, 1864. He was author of 'A Theory, or Considerations on the Motion of the Major Axis, or Revolution and Change of the Line of Apesides of the Earth's Orbit; its Causes, and the Effects produced in its Orbital Revolutions through the Ecliptic, from one Hemisphere to the other, involving a certain number of years;' 'Essay on the Causes of Periodic Inundations.'

DEBRET, JOHN, a London bookseller, the original publisher of the Peerage and Baronetage which bear his name, died 15 Nov., 1822.

DE BUKE, GUILLAUME FRANÇOIS DE, an eminent bookseller and bibliographer of Paris, born 1731; died 15 July, 1782.

DECEMBRIO, PIETRO CANDIDO, was born at Pavia 1399; became secretary to the Pope and to Alphonso, king of Arragon; and died at Milan, 12 Nov., 1477. He wrote the lives of Philip Maria Visconti and Francis Sforza, dukes of Milan, and translated several classical authors into Italian.

DECHALES. See CHALES.

DECIO, PHILIP, a jurist and legal writer, born at Milan 1453; professor at Pisa; died 13 Oct., 1535.

DECIUS, a Roman emperor, born A.D. 201, in Pannonia. The Emperor Philip sent him to quell a sedition in Mesia; but instead of obeying his directions, he turned his arms against him, and on his death assumed the imperial diadem. He distinguished himself by his expedition against the Persians, and by his persecution of the Christians. In his march against the Goths he entered into a bog, where he and his army perished by the attack of the enemy, A.D. 251.

DECKER, or DECKHER, JOHN, a learned Jesuit, rector of the college of Gratz, in Styria. His chief work is a treatise on the years of the birth and death of Christ. Died 10 Jan., 1619, aged 69.

DECKER, Sir MATTHEW, a native of Amsterdam, who came to England in 1702, and was naturalised the following year. Having settled as a merchant in London, he rose to great commercial eminence, was created a baronet 1716, and in 1719 returned to parliament for Bishop's Castle. Died 18 March, 1749. The following work has been ascribed to his pen: 'Serious Considerations on the several high duties which the nation in general (as well as its trade in particular) labours under; with a proposal for preventing the running of goods; discharging the trade from any search, and raising all the public supplies by one single tax. By a well-wisher to the good people of Great Britain,' 8vo., London, 1743. The single tax was to be a house-tax. He has also been commonly, though we believe erroneously, supposed to be the author of 'An Essay on the Causes of the Decline of the Foreign Trade,' &c., 1744.—Nat. Cycl.

DECKER, THOMAS, an English dramatic poet, who died after 1638. His 'Gull's Horn Book' was reprinted 1813.

DE COETLOGON, CHARLES EDWARD. See COETLOGON.

DE COURCY, RICHARD, an Irish divine, who was presented in 1774 to the vicarage of St. Alkmund, Shrewsbury, where he died 4 Nov., 1803. He published 'Christ Crucified,' 2 vols.; Sermons, &c.

DEE, JOHN, LL.D., was born in London 12 or 13 July, 1527, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. On the foundation of Trinity College he was appointed one of the original fellows. Falling under the suspicion of magical practices, he went to Louvain, where he took his doctor's degree. He read lectures in the mathematics there and at other universities with applause. In 1551 he returned to England, and obtained the rectory of Upton-upon-Severn. His application to the mathematics brought upon him the accusation of magic; and in the reign of Mary he was imprisoned for some time, on suspicion of treasonable practices. He was in great favour with Queen Elizabeth, who visited him at Mortlake, where he collected a large library. In 1581 he and Edward Kelly began their magical operations, in which they were joined by a Polish nobleman named Laski, who persuaded them to go to Poland, where they remained some time. Their adventures abroad made so much noise that the queen thought proper to order Dee home. In 1596 he was made warden of Manchester College, and died at Mortlake in Dec., 1608. He published several mathematical works in Latin and English, and wrote many more which were never printed. In 1659 Dr. Meric Casaubon published A true and faithful Relation of what passed for many years between Dr. John Dee and some Spirits, &c.—Athen. Cantab.

DEERING, CHARLES, M.D., a native of Saxony, who took his degree of doctor in physic at Leyden, after which he came to London, and in 1736 removed to Nottingham. In 1737 he published an improved method of treating the small-pox; by which it appears that he was the first who recommended the cooling regimen. His next publication was a Catalogue of Plants growing about Nottingham, 1738; after which he was employed in writing the history of that town, from the papers of John Plumtre, Esq., and others. This work, however, did not appear till 1751. Deering died 1749.

DEERING, RICHARD, the descendant of an ancient family in Kent, was educated in Italy; and when his education was completed he returned to England with the character of an excellent musician. He resided in this country for some time, but, upon a very pressing invitation, went to Brussels and became organist to the convent of English nuns there. After the marriage of Charles I. he was appointed organist to his royal consort, Henrietta Maria, with whom he continued till she was forced to leave England by the Presbyterian outrages in the time of the Rebellion. In 1610 he was admitted to the degree of Mus. B. at Oxford. He died in the communion of the church of Rome about 1657. He has left of his compositions 'Cantica Sacra ad Melodiam Madrigalium elaborata senis Vocibus,' Antwerp, 1618; 'Cantica Sacra ad duas et tres Voces composita, cum Basso continuo ad Organum,' London, 1662, published by John Playford.

DEFFANT, MARIE DE VICHY-CHAMROUD, MARQUISE DU, a French woman of letters, born 1697; died 24 Sept., 1780. Her Correspondence has been published. The best edition is that of 1824.

DE FOE, DANIEL, was the son of a butcher in Cripplegate, and born about 1663. His first publication was a Treatise against the Turks, in 1653; and two years afterwards he fought for the duke of Monmouth; but how he escaped punishment on that account does not appear. After this he became a hosier in Cornhill, but did not succeed in business. In 1695 he was appointed one of the commissioners for managing the duties on glass, but lost that place in 1699, when the tax was suppressed. In 1701 appeared 'The True Born Englishman,' a satire, which procured the author the favour of King William; but in the next reign he was sentenced to the pillory, fined, and imprisoned, for a piece entitled 'The shortest Way with the Dissenters.' While in confinement he projected 'The Review,' a periodical paper, which appeared first in 1704, and was combated by Leslie in his 'Rehearsal.' The same year he obtained his release, and in 1706 published a vindication of the union with Scotland, of which measure he afterwards wrote an elaborate history. At the end of this reign he was again committed to Newgate, but soon gained his liberty. The accession of George I. did not improve the circumstances of De Foe, who from this time employed his pen to other purposes. In 1715 appeared his Family Instructor; and in 1719 Robinson Crusoe, the basis of which he is supposed to have taken from the story of Selkirk, who had been left on the island of Juan Fernandez by some of the buccaneers. The success of this romance encouraged De Foe to publish some others, as the Life of Captain Singleton; a New Voyage round the World; The History of Duncan Campbell; The Life of Moll Flanders; the Life of Colonel Jack; and the Adventures of Roxana. One of the best of these fictions is the Memoirs of a Cavalier during the Civil Wars in England. In 1722 he published his 'Religious Courtship,' and 'A Journal of the Plague in 1665.' This last imposed upon many as being a real narrative. In 1726 he printed 'The Political History of the Devil,' to which he afterwards added 'A System of Magic.' About this time also he printed 'A Tour through England and Scotland,' 3 vols. 8vo., which was followed by some other works. This industrious writer died in his native parish 24 April, 1731, leaving several children, one of whom married Mr. Henry Baker, the naturalist.

DEJAURE, JEAN ELIE BENEDE, a French dramatic poet, born 1761; died 5 Oct., 1799.

DE LA BECHE, SIR HENRY THOMAS, a distinguished geologist, born in London 1796. He served for a short time in the army, but left the service in order to cultivate science, which he did with signal success. He became director-general of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, director of the Museum of Practical Geology, and of the Government School of Mines, and a member of the Health of Towns Commission. He was knighted 1848 and died 13 April, 1855. He published several separate works on geology, besides numerous papers in the transactions of learned societies.

DE LA COUR, JAMES, an Irish poet, was born at Killowen, near Blarney, in the county of Cork, in 1709. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he entered into orders, but was far from doing credit to his profession. His habits were irregular, and he associated with dissipated company, till at length he obtained the name of the mad parson. Died about 1781. He wrote a poem entitled, Abelard to Eloisa; another called 'The Prospect of Poetry,' and some other pieces of no small merit.

DELACROIX, FERDINAND VICTOR EUGENE, a French painter, born 1799; died 13 August, 1863.

DELAMBRE, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, a celebrated French mathematician and astronomer, born 19 Sept., 1749; died 19 August, 1822. His History of Astronomy is a work of great research.

DELAMER, GEORGE BOOTH, LORD, was the son of William Booth, Esq., and grandson of Sir George Booth, Bart., to whose title he succeeded during the usurpation of Cromwell. In 1659 he raised forces for the king's service, but was defeated by Lambert, and being taken prisoner in disguise, was sent to the Tower, where he remained till the Restoration, when he was one of the twelve members sent by the House of Commons to recall the king. He also received a parliamentary grant of £10,000, in recognition of his services, and was created Baron Delamer 1661. Died 8 Aug., 1684.

DELANY, PATRICK, D.D., was born in Ireland about 1686. He received his education in Trinity College, Dublin, where he obtained a fellowship and the degree of doctor in divinity. He was very intimate with Swift, by whose interest he procured the chancellorship of Christ Church, and a prebend in the cathedral of St. Patrick. In 1744 he was made dean of Down. He died at Bath in May, 1768. The dean published Revelation examined with Candour, 3 vols.; Reflections on Polygamy; The Life of David, 3 vols.; Sermons on the Relative Duties; Remarks on Orrery's Life of Swift; and The Humourist, a periodical paper. His widow, Mrs. Mary Delany, died 15 April, 1788. She was the daughter of Bernard Granville, Lord Lansdowne, and became the wife of Alexander Pendarves, Esq., on whose death she married Dr. Delany, in 1743. She excelled in cutting out flowers, and in painting them to imitate nature. George III. voluntarily settled £300 a year upon her, which the queen always paid with her own hand. Mrs. Delany's Autobiography has been recently published.

DELAROCHE, PAUL, a French painter, born 1797; died 1856.

DELAUNE, THOMAS, a nonconformist, who in 1653 published a reply to Dr. Benjamin Calamy's Discourse concerning a Scrupulous Conscience. Delaune's book was called a Plea for the Nonconformists, and gave so much offence that the author was sent to Newgate. He was afterwards brought to trial, and sentenced to pay a heavy fine, which being unable to do, he remained in prison till his death.

DELAVAL, EDWARD HUSSEY, F.R.S., an ingenious chemist and natural philosopher, author of An Experimental Inquiry into the Cause of the Changes of Colour in opaque and coloured Bodies, was born 1720, and died 1814.—Rose.

DELAVIGNE, JEAN FRANÇOIS CASIMIR, a French poet, born at Havre 1794; died at Lyons 11 or 12 Dec., 1843.

DELEYRE, ALEXANDRE, a Frenchman, author of an able Analysis of Bacon's Philosophy; Le Génie

de Montesquieu,' &c., was born 1726, and died 10 March, 1797.

DELFINO, JOHN, a cardinal, and Italian tragic poet, was born at Venice 1617, and died at Udino 20 July, 1699.

DELFT, WILLIAM JAMES VAN, a Dutch engraver and painter, born 1619; died 12 June, 1661.

DELILLE, JACQUES, a celebrated French poet, born 22 June, 1738. He became professor of humanities at the college of Amiens, and, on his return to Paris, at that of La Marche. In 1760 he published his admirable translation of Virgil's Georgics, which opened to him the doors of the Academy. His poem of 'Les Jardins' appeared in 1782. Two years later he accompanied Choiseul-Gouffier on his embassy to Constantinople, and afterwards published a graceful description of his travels in Greece, in the form of a letter to Madame de Vaines. On his return he obtained the chair of Latin poetry in the college of France. After the Revolution he left his native country, but returned to it in 1801, and died 1 May, 1813. His principal poems are translations of the Georgics, the Æneid, and Paradise Lost; 'L'Homme des Champs;' 'Les Trois Règnes de la Nature;' and 'La Pitié.' The most complete edition of his works is that of 1824 in 16 vols. 8vo.

DELISLE, CLAUDE, a French geographer and historian, born 5 Nov., 1644; died 2 May, 1720.

DELISLE, GUILLAUME, son of Claude, above mentioned, was born at Paris 28 Feb., 1675, studied geography, and constructed a number of admirable maps. He was elected a member of the Academy of Sciences, and died 5 Jan., 1726.

DELIUS, CHRISTOPHER TRAUOGOT, a German mineralogist, born 1728; died 21 Jan., 1779.

DELL, JOHN, a minor English poet, died at Sturry, Kent, Nov., 1810, aged 53. His 'Poetical Effusions of the Heart' were printed in an 8vo. volume, 1783.

DELL, WILLIAM, D.D., received his education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. Subsequently he was preferred to the living of Yeldon, Bedfordshire. About 1645 he became chaplain to the army, constantly attending Sir Thomas Fairfax, and preaching at head-quarters. On May 4, 1649, he was made master of Caius College, Cambridge, which he held, with his living at Yeldon, till he was ejected by the Act of Uniformity. Although tinged with the enthusiasm of the times, he was a man of some learning, with very peculiar and unsettled principles. Besides some sermons, he published 'The Doctrine of Baptisms,' a work much esteemed by the quakers. His works were republished in 2 vols. 8vo., 1817.

DELLAMARIA, DOMINIQUE, a French musical composer, born 1768; died 9 March, 1800.

DELMONT, DEODATO, a painter, the disciple and friend of Rubens, was born at St. Trond 1581, and died at Antwerp 25 Nov., 1634.

DE LOLME, JOHN LOUIS, was born at Geneva about 1745. He was bred to the law, but quitted his own country and came to London, where, in 1772, he published 'A Parallel between the English Government and the Constitution of Sweden,' which was followed by his celebrated work on 'The Constitution of England.' This edition appeared in French, but in 1775 an English translation was published. His next performance was 'A History of the Flagellants.' In 1787 he wrote an Introduction to De Foe's History of the Union; and soon afterwards, Observations on the Window Tax, &c. In 1789 he advocated Pitt's plan of a regency. He died in Switzerland 16 July, 1806.

DELORME, PHILIBERT, a French architect, born 1518; died 30 May, 1577.

DELPINI, CHARLES ANTHONY, author of several dramatic works, was for many years the best clown of his day at both the principal London theatres. He was also stage manager of the opera house. Died 13 Feb., 1828.

DELRIO, MARTIN ANTHONY, a Jesuit, born at Antwerp 1551; died at Louvain 19 Oct., 1608. He wrote Disquisitions on Magic; commentaries on the Old Testament; and explanations of difficult passages of Scripture.

DE LUC, JEAN ANDRÉ, F.R.S., a celebrated chemist and geologist, born at Geneva 1726. He came to England early in the reign of George III., after having travelled over a great part of Europe; and on being recommended to Queen Charlotte, she settled a handsome pension on him, and made him her reader. He died at Windsor 6 Nov., 1817. His chief works are Letters on the Origin and Formation of the Earth; Elements of Geology; Geological Travels in the North of Europe, England, France, Switzerland, and Germany, 5 vols.

DEMAINBRAY, STEPHEN CHARLES, was born in London, of French parents, 1710. He was educated at Westminster School, and while there boarded with Dr. Desaguliers, who instructed him in mathematics and natural philosophy. At the age of seventeen he went to Leyden, after which he read lectures on experimental philosophy at Edinburgh. He served as a volunteer in the royal army in 1745, and was at the battle of Preston Pans. The year following he resumed his lectures, and published his discovery of the effects of electricity on vegetables, which the Abbé Nollet afterwards claimed as his own. Dr. Demainbray became instructor in philosophy to King George III., and also to the queen, to whom he gave his MSS., which were sold with her library. He obtained a pension, and was appointed astronomer to the king at his observatory at Richmond, where he died 20 Feb., 1782.

DEMBINSKI, HENRY, general, a celebrated leader in the Polish revolution of 1831, was born in the palatinate of Cracow 1784, and died at Paris 13 June, 1864.

DEMETRIUS NICANOR, twelfth king of Syria, died B.C. 125.

DEMETRIUS PHALEREUS, a celebrated Athenian orator and peripatetic philosopher, died about 282 B.C.

DEMETRIUS POLIORCETES, king of Macedonia from B.C. 294 to 287, died B.C. 283.

DEMETRIUS SOTER, tenth king of Syria, ascended the throne B.C. 162, and died B.C. 150.

DEMETRIUS, czar of Russia, by some historians called the false Demetrius, invaded Russia in 1604, and seated himself on the throne. After a short reign of eleven months he was assassinated 17 May, 1606.

DE MISSY, CÉSAR, was born at Berlin 2 June, 1703. After living some years in Holland he came to London, and was appointed preacher at the French chapel in the Savoy, and chaplain to the king. He assisted Wetstein in his edition of the New Testament, and Dr. Jortin in his Life of Erasmus. Died 10 Aug., 1775. His Sermons, in French, were published in 3 vols. after his death.

DEMOCRITUS, a celebrated Greek philosopher, born at Abdera, in Thrace, about 460 B.C., and died 357 B.C.

DE MOIVRE, ABRAHAM, a mathematician, was born at Vitry, in Champagne, 26 May, 1667. He came to England on the revocation of the edict of Nantz, and gained a subsistence by teaching mathematics. He was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, and died 27 Nov., 1754. Besides papers in the Philosophical Transactions he wrote 'Miscellaneous Analytica'; 'Doctrine of Chances'; or a Method of calculating the probabilities of Events at play; and 'Annuities on Lives.'

DEMOSTHENES, one of the greatest orators of antiquity, was born at Athens about 384 B.C. At the age of seven he lost his father. His guardians wasted his property, and at the age of seventeen he appeared before the courts against them, and urged his own case successfully. Thereby encouraged to speak before the assembly of the people, he failed entirely. He retired and studied, and toiled in secret for several years. At the age of twenty-five he came forward again, and commenced his brilliant career. He especially exerted his eloquence in rousing the Athenians to war with the Macedonians. Having been driven from Athens by the hostility of the Macedonian Antipater, and pursued to his retreat in the island of Calauria, he terminated his life by poison 322 B.C. We have sixty-one Orationes of Demosthenes, and sixty-five Introductions, which are probably not all genuine. The characteristics of this orator were strength, sublimity, and a piercing energy and force, aided by an emphatic and vehement elocution. There are English translations of his works by Francis and Leland.

DEMOURS, PIERRE, a French oculist, born 1702; died 26 June, 1795.

DEMOUSTIER, CHARLES ALBERT, a French dramatist, born 11 March, 1760; died 9 March, 1801.

DEMPSTER, GEORGE, was born at Dundee 1736, and sat in the House of Commons from 1762 till 1790, in which year he retired from parliament and devoted himself to the improvement of the Highlands by agriculture and the fisheries. He wrote an Account of the Magnetic Mountains of Cannay; papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, &c. Died 1818.

DEMPSTER, THOMAS, a Catholic writer, born in Scotland 1579. He received his education at Aberdeen, after which he went to Cambridge, and thence to France, where he assumed the title of baron of Muresk, notwithstanding which he was under the necessity of teaching the classics for a subsistence. After residing for some time at Paris, he obtained a professorship at Nîmes. He next went to Italy, and taught first at Pisa, and afterwards at Bologna, where he died 16 Sept., 1625. His works are 'Antiquitatum Romanarum corpus,' 1613; 'A Commentary on the Institutes of Justinian'; 'De Juramento'; 'Menologium Scotorum'; 'Scotia Illustrata, seu, Mendicabilis repressa.' After his death there appeared a 4to. volume entitled 'Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Scotorum,' 1627, which contains a very long list of Scotch saints, and accounts of some literary men, but the value of this work is destroyed by its total want of verity, Dempster having mentioned names and quoted authorities which never had any existence. Scotland with him was of more importance than truth. As late as 1724 two folio volumes by this writer were published at Florence under the title of 'Thomæ Dempsteri a Muresk Scoti Pandectarum in Psano Lyceo professori ordinari de Eturia regali lib. septem.' A dissertation of his on the Roman Calendar is in Grævius's Roman Antiquities.

DENHAM, DIXON, was born in London 1 Jan., 1786, and entering the military service, eventually rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1821 he solicited Lord Bathurst's permission to be associated with Dr. Oudney and Captain Clapperton in a mission from Tripoli to Timbuctoo. The plan, however, failed. Denham was separated from his companions, and after suffering great privations, and encountering many perils, arrived in England in 1825, and published 'Travels and Discoveries in Northern and Central Africa.' He was afterwards appointed governor of Sierra Leone, where he died 8 June, 1828.—Rose.

DENHAM, SIR JOHN, an English poet. He was born in 1615 at Dublin, where his father was chief baron of the Exchequer, but afterwards became a judge in England. In 1631 he was sent to Trinity College, Oxford, from whence he went to Lincoln's Inn, but he made little or no progress in the law. In 1641 appeared his tragedy of Sophy, and soon after he was made governor of Fareham Castle for the king. In 1643 he published at Oxford his Cooper's Hill, the best of all his works. He attended Charles II. in his exile, and was sent by him ambassador to Poland in conjunction with Lord Croft. He afterwards returned to England, where he was entertained by Lord Pembroke. At the Restoration he was appointed surveyor-general of the royal buildings, and at the coronation he was created knight of the Bath. He died in March, 1668, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. His Cooper's Hill is the only poem of his writing that will now bear a perusal. Dr. Johnson says of Denham, with reference to this poem, that 'he seems to have been, at least among us, the author of a species of composition that may be denominated local poetry, of which the fundamental subject is some particular landscape, to be poetically described, with the addition of such embellishments as may be supplied by historical retrospect, or incidental meditation.'

DENINA, CHARLES JOHN MARY, an eminent Italian writer, born in Piedmont 1731. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, and was appointed professor of humanities at Fignerol, but lost that situation in consequence of some satirical remarks against the Jesuits in a comedy written by him for representation in the college. He then obtained the chair of Latin eloquence, and subsequently that of Greek literature at Turin, and received from his sovereign several marks of esteem; but an infraction of the law relating to the censorship lost him all these advantages, and he soon afterwards repaired to Berlin, on the invitation of the king of Prussia. In 1804 Napoleon appointed him his librarian, whereupon he removed to Paris, where he died 5 Dec., 1813. His principal works are 'Discorso sopra le vicende della letteratura;' 'Delle rivoluzioni d'Italia;' 'Istoria politica e letteraria della Grecia;' 'La Prusse Littéraire;' 'Rivoluzioni della Germania;' 'Istoria dell'Italia Occidentale.'

DENISON, JOHN, D.D., an eminent preacher, was educated at Oxford, and was for some time domestic chaplain to the duke of Buckingham, and afterwards to James I. He held the vicarage of St. Mary, Reading, and was master of the free-school there. Died Jan., 1628-9. He published many sermons, and several pieces of practical divinity and controversy. His chief performance is a Latin book on auricular confession.

DENMAN, THOMAS, M.D., a physician of London, was born at Bakewell, Derbyshire, 1733, and died 26 Nov., 1815. He published an Introduction to the Practice of Midwifery, and other professional works.

DENMAN, THOMAS, Lord Denman, was born in London 23 Feb., 1779, being the only son of the preceding. After passing through St. John's College, Cambridge, he was called to the bar, and soon acquired a considerable practice. He also obtained a seat in the House of Commons, where he distinguished himself by his earnest advocacy of popular freedom. In 1820 he was appointed solicitor-general to Queen Caroline, and in this capacity he ably discharged his duty on the memorable trial of that princess in the House of Peers. In 1822 the city of London elected him their common serjeant; and in 1830 he became attorney-general to the king, and received the honour of knighthood. Two years later he succeeded Lord Tenterden as chief-justice of the King's Bench, and in 1834 he was raised to the peerage. He retired from the judicial bench 1850, and died 22 Sept., 1854.

DENNE, JOHN, D.D., an antiquary, was born at Littlebourne, Kent, 1693, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. In 1728 he was installed archdeacon of Rochester, to which was added, in the following year, the vicarage of St. Margaret's in that city; but this he resigned on being presented to the rectory of Lambeth in 1731. Died 5 Aug., 1767. His own works are not of much importance; but he rendered valuable assistance to other antiquaries. He intended to have written a history of the church of Rochester, but never carried out that design.

DENNE, SAMUEL, F.S.A., son of the preceding, was born 13 Jan., 1730, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. In 1754 he was presented to the vicarage of Lamberhurst, in Kent; and in 1767 to that of Wilmington, to which was afterwards added the living of Darent, when he resigned Lamberhurst. He died 3 August, 1799. He published a Letter to Sir Robert Laubroke on the solitary confinement of Criminals; Historical particulars of Lambeth Parish and Palace; and several papers in the Archæologia; besides which he was the sole author of the 'History and Antiquities of Rochester,' published by T. Fisher, 8vo., 1772. He also contributed much assistance to various works on topographical subjects.

DENNER, BALTHASAR, a portrait painter, born at Hamburgh 1685; died 1747.

DENNETT, JAMES, an English Jesuit, who died at Bury St. Edmund's 1 March, 1789. He translated Muratori's 'Missions in Paraguay,' 12mo., London, 1759.

DENNIS, JOHN, a poet and critic, was born in London in 1657, and educated at Harrow, from whence he removed to Caius College, Cambridge; but after taking one degree there he was expelled the society. On this he went to Trinity Hall, and took there his degree of master of arts. In 1697 he brought out a comedy called 'Plot and no Plot,' which was followed by several other dramatic pieces, one of which, called 'Liberty Asserted,' was very successful, on account of its severe allusions to the French nation. Dennis was so vain of this that when the treaty of Utrecht was settling, he desired the duke of Marlborough to use his interest to prevent his being given up. His grace replied that he was sorry he could not oblige him, not having made any stipulations for himself, though he had done the French almost as much mischief as Mr. Dennis. The poet obtained a place in the Custom House, which he imprudently sold, and in his old age was reduced to extreme poverty. He was also completely blind, on which the players gave him a benefit; but he did not live to enjoy it. He died 6 Jan., 1733-4. Dennis, though an indifferent poet, was an acute critic, and his letters may be read to advantage. He was the constant butt of the wits, particularly Swift and Pope; but then he provoked all this by his own excessive petulance.

DENNISTOUN, JAMES, a Scotch advocate, author of Memoirs of the Dukes of Urbino, and Memoirs of Sir Robert Strange, was born 1803, and died 13 Feb., 1855.

DENNY, SIR ANTHONY, was born of a good family in Hertfordshire, and educated at St. Paul's School, after which he went to St. John's College, Cambridge. On being introduced at court he was made one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber, groom of the stole, and privy-counsellor to Henry VIII., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and gave him a large estate on the dissolution of the monasteries. He was also appointed one of the executors of that monarch's will, in which a legacy of £300 was bequeathed to him for his services. He died in 1550.

DENON, DOMINIQUE VIVANT, BARON, a French artist and traveller, was born at Châlons-sur-Saône 4 Jan., 1747, of noble parentage. In early life he was engaged in the diplomatic service, but during his residence in Italy was inspired with a passion for painting, and became an artist. He accompanied Bonaparte in his famous expedition to Egypt. When the French returned from that country the whole of Europe was longing to obtain some scientific details of the expedition. Denon's 'Travels in Upper and Lower Egypt during the campaigns of General Bonaparte' was the first work which satisfied this eager curiosity, and it consequently met with a glorious success. This grand work, which is adorned with 141 plates, has been translated into English. Napoleon afterwards appointed Denon director-general of museums, and created him a baron. After the restoration of the Bourbons he retired into private life, and died 26 April, 1820. His incomplete work on the history of art was published four years after his death.

DENT, ARTHUR, a divine, was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, became rector of South Shoebury, Essex, 1580, and died 1607. He published 'Exposition of the Articles,' 'A Pastime for Parents,' 'The Rvine of Rome,' written for 'the daunting of Papists, Seminary Priests, Jesuites, and all that cursed rabble,' 'A Plain Mans Path way to Heaven,' 'Exposition upon the Lords Prayer.'—Athen. Cant.

DENT, PETER, an apothecary of Cambridge, was an accomplished naturalist. He obtained a Lambeth degree of M.B. 1678, and dying in 1689, was buried on Oct. 5 in that year at St. Sepulchre's, Cambridge. Ray says he was much obliged to Dent for many observations in his great work, 'Historia Plantarum;' and in the preface to Willoughby's

'Historia Piscium' Ray says, 'Dns Petrus Dent &c. observationes nonnullas de Piscibus cartilagineis planis præcipue de Utero et Ovis Rariarum, et elegantes tum ipsorum Piscium, tum Rariarum eorumdem internarum delineationes communicavit.'

DENTON, JOHN, an English divine, educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he contracted an intimacy with Tillotson, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury. He was ejected in 1662 from the living of Oswaldkirk, Yorkshire; but he conformed afterwards, and obtained the living of Stonegrave, in the same county, and a prebend in York Cathedral. Died 4 Jan., 1708-9. He published some religious and polemical tracts.

DENTON, THOMAS, was born at Sebergham, Cumberland, 1724, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took his master's degree 1752. He became curate of Ashted, in Surrey, and died there 27 June, 1777. Mr. Denton published a supplemental volume to the General Biographical Dictionary, and two poems, one entitled 'Immortality,' 1755, and the other the 'House of Superstition,' in the manner of Spenser.

DENTON, WILLIAM, M.D., was born at Stowe, Buckinghamshire, April, 1665, and educated at Oxford, after which he settled in London, and was appointed physician to Charles I. Died 9 May, 1691. All his works are on political subjects.

DENTRECOLLES, FRANÇOIS XAVIER, a French Jesuit missionary to China, born 1664; died at Pekin 2 July, 1741. He wrote several books in the Chinese language.

DENVIR, CORNELIUS, D.D., was consecrated Catholic bishop of Down and Connor 22 Nov., 1835, and died 13 July, 1866.

DENYS, or DENIS, ST., the apostle of France, and first bishop of Paris, went into Gaul in the time of the Emperor Decius, about 240, and suffered martyrdom there.

DENYS, JAMES, a painter of Antwerp, born 1645.

D'EON, the Chevalier, an extraordinary character, who is registered in the parish of St. Pancras, Middlesex, as 'Charles Genevieve Louis Auguste André Timothée D'Eon de Beaumont.' He was born of an ancient family at Tonnerre, in Burgundy, 2 Oct., 1728. His education was liberal, and being left an orphan, the prince de Conti procured him a cornetcy of dragoons. He was also placed in a public office at Paris, where his conduct gave satisfaction. In 1755 he was employed on a mission to Petersburg, after which he joined his regiment, and served in the campaign of 1762 as aide-de-camp to Marshal Broglie. The year following he accompanied the duke de Nivernois to England as secretary, and was invested with the order of St. Louis. When the duke left this country, D'Eon remained as minister plenipotentiary in his room; but soon afterwards he was superseded by the count de Guercy. This mortified the chevalier to such a degree that he published libels against the count, for which he was prosecuted and convicted in the King's Bench; but not appearing to receive judgment, he was outlawed. About 1771 doubts were entertained concerning his sex, and bets to a great amount were laid on the question, which in one instance produced an action at law, which ended in a nonsuit. In the meantime the chevalier returned to France, where he assumed the female dress, for what reason has never been explained; yet his conduct in this instance was sanctioned by his own court, his pension was continued, and he was suffered to retain the cross of his order. In 1785 he came back to England, and continued here till his death, teaching fencing; but when the revolution broke out he presented a petition to the Assembly as Madame D'Eon, offering his services in a military capacity. This was disregarded, and he remained here in great poverty till death closed the scene, 21 May, 1810, when all doubts as to his sex were completely removed by professional inspection. He published several works on politics and commerce.

DEPARCIEUX, ANTOINE, a French mathematician, born 1703; died 2 Sept., 1768.

DEPPING, GEORGE BERNARD, a French historian and antiquary, born 11 May, 1784; died 5 Sept., 1853.

DE QUINCEY, THOMAS, a popular English writer, was the son of a Manchester merchant, and born 15 Aug., 1785. He was early left an orphan, but received a liberal education, first at the Manchester grammar school, and afterwards at Oxford, where he resided for five years. While yet a very young man he adopted the baneful practice of opium eating, and thus made shipwreck both of a high intellect and a good fortune. He became acquainted with Wordsworth, Lamb, Coleridge, and other men of their class, but did not turn to literature, except as an amusement, until near his fortieth year, when pecuniary embarrassments compelled him to become a contributor to the London Magazine, in which he published his famous 'Confessions of an English Opium Eater.' From that time he laboured with great but fitful industry on a variety of publications, and showed talents that might have produced something far more valuable than mere contributions to periodicals had their author been a man instead of a dreamer. In 1832 he took up his residence in Scotland, and in its metropolis, though living in studied seclusion, he had a group of enthusiastic admirers. He died at Edinburgh 8 Dec., 1859. His works have been published in a collected form.

DERBY, ELIZA, COUNTESS OF. See FARREN.

DERBY, JAMES STANLEY, EARL OF, a gallant English nobleman, born 1596. He gave many signal proofs of his courage and loyalty in the Civil War, particularly in the action at Wigan, where, with six hundred horse, he bravely withstood a body of three thousand horse and foot, commanded by Colonel Lilburne. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Worcester, and basely beheaded, in violation of a promise of quarter which had been given him, 15 Oct., 1651. The heroine, his countess, Charlotte, bravely defended Latham House, and with no less valour maintained her position in the Isle of Man, where she regarded herself as queen, and defied the regicides and usurpers. She was the last person in the British dominions who yielded to the rebels. She died 1663.

DERHAM, WILLIAM, D.D., was born at Stoughton, near Worcester, 26 Nov., 1657, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. He was presented, in 1682, to Wargrave vicarage, Berkshire, and in 1689 to Upminster rectory, Essex. In 1716 he was made canon of Windsor, and in 1730 the university of Oxford granted him the degree of D.D., for his services in the cause of religion by his culture of natural knowledge. Died 5 April, 1735. He published no fewer than forty works on philosophical subjects. The principal are his 'Physico-theology;' 'Sixteen Sermons' at Boyle's lectures in 1711 and 1712; 'Astro-theology;' 'Christo-theology;' and 'The artificial Clock-maker.'

DERING, EDWARD, a Puritan divine, was a native of Kent, and received his education at Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1559-60; M.A. 1563), where he obtained a fellowship. In 1568 he obtained the rectory of Pluckley, in his native county; he was also one of the duke of Norfolk's chaplains, chaplain to the Tower of London, and a prebendary of Salisbury. In 1572 he was appointed divinity reader at St. Paul's, and he began a course of lectures on the Epistle to the Hebrews, which gave great offence to the High Church party on account of their Puritan tendency. His lecture was suppressed 1573, and he was suspended and convened before the Star Chamber. The suspension was, however, afterwards taken off. Died 26 June, 1576. Mr. Dering was a man of great learning, and an excellent writer. Among his works are 'A Sparing restraint of many lavish untruths, which Mr. Dr. Harding doth challenge in the first article of my Lord of Sarisburys reply, &c.:' Exposition of part of the fifth chapter of Hebrews; and Sermons. His works appeared in a collected form in 1595, 1597, and 1614.—Athen. Cantab.

DERING, SIR EDWARD, was born in Kent 1598, and distinguished himself in the reign of Charles I. by his zeal for the reform of abuses, particularly in the church, for which purpose he brought in a bill to abolish bishops, deans, and chapters. However, he afterwards joined the king with a regiment of horse raised at his own expense, and was a considerable sufferer for the royal cause. Died 22 June, 1644. His speeches in parliament were printed in a 4to. volume; and his Essay on Heraldic Differences will be found in Lower's Curiosities of Heraldry.

DERING, RICHARD, the musician. See DEERING.

DERLINGTON, JOHN DE, D.D., an English Dominican, was appointed archbishop of Dublin by the Pope 1279, and died in London 29 March, 1284. He wrote 'Concordantiae magnæ Anglicanæ;' 'Sermones ad utrumque statum;' and 'Disceptationes Scholasticæ.'

DERMODY, THOMAS, a poet, born in Ireland Jan., 1775. He received a classical education, but at an early age ran away from his parents, and after leading a dissipated course of life enlisted as a common soldier. By the favour of Lord Moira he obtained a lieutenant's commission, but forfeited that nobleman's patronage by his bad conduct, and died in a wretched state, near Sydenham, 15 July, 1802. He published two volumes of poems, and after his death another collection appeared, in the same number of volumes.

DERRICK, SAMUEL, was born in Ireland 1724, and served his time to a linendraper, but disliking that business, came to London, where he made an attempt as an actor without success. After the death of Nash he was chosen master of the ceremonies at Bath and Tunbridge. He published some compilations and translations from the French. The most amusing of his works was his 'Letters from Liverpool, Chester, &c.' Died 7 March, 1769.

DERWENTWATER, JAMES RADCLIFFE, third EARL OF, was born 1689. He took part with the Pretender in the rebellion of 1715, but being made prisoner by the king's forces, was brought up to London, tried by his peers, found guilty of treason, and beheaded 24 Feb., 1715-6.

DERYCK.

DERYCK, PETER CORNELIUS, a painter of Delft, born 1568; died 1630.

DERYKE, WILLIAM, a painter of Antwerp, born 1635; died 1697.

DESAGULIERS, JOHN THEOPHILUS, D.C.L., F.R.S., was born at Rochelle, in France, 12 March, 1683. He was brought to England at the age of two years by his father, who was a Calvinist minister. After receiving a classical education he went to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree, and entered into orders. After this he read lectures in experimental philosophy at Hart Hall, and having taken his master's degree, settled in Westminster. In 1714 he was chosen a member of the Royal Society, to whose transactions he communicated some valuable papers. In 1718 he completed his degrees at Oxford as bachelor and doctor of laws. His reputation as a lecturer was very great, and he obtained a living, first in Norfolk, and afterwards in Essex. He was also appointed chaplain to the prince of Wales. Died 20 Feb., 1744. Dr. Desaguliers translated Gravesande's Mathematical Elements of Natural Philosophy into English, in 2 vols. 4to.; and also published his own lectures, in 2 vols., with other works.

DESAIX DE VOYGOUX, LOUIS CHARLES ANTOINE, one of Bonaparte's most able generals, was born 17 Aug., 1768, and fell at the battle of Marengo, to which victory he principally contributed, 14 June, 1800.

DESARGUES, GERARD, a very eminent French mathematician, born 1593, at Lyons, where he died 1662. He was the friend of Des Cartes, whom he defended with great spirit. He wrote a treatise on Perspective; and of Conic Sections; the Practice of Drawing; and a treatise on Stone-cutting.

DESAULT, PIERRE, a French physician and medical writer, born 1675; died 1737.

DESAULT, PIERRE JOSEPH, an eminent surgeon of Paris, born 1744; died 1 June, 1795.

DES BARREAUX, JACQUES DE VALLÉE, Seigneur, a French nobleman, who composed the beautiful sonnet, 'Grand Dieu, tes jugemens,' &c. Born 1602; died 9 May, 1673.

DESBARRES, JOSEPH FREDERICK WALSH, was descended from a French Protestant refugee. He was educated under the two Bernoullis, after which he entered the military service and attained the rank of colonel 1798. As a mathematician and hydrographer, he ranked very high, and had the honour of being instructor to Captain Cook. He published a valuable work for the use of the navy entitled 'The Atlantic Neptune.' After this he was appointed lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief of Prince Edward's Island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where he died 1824, at the extraordinary age of 102.

DESBILLONS, FRANÇOIS JOSEPH TERASSE, a French Jesuit, author of 'Fables' in Latin, a poem in the same language on the preservation of health, and other works; was born 26 Jan., 1711, and died 19 March, 1789.

DESBOIS, FRANÇOIS ALEXANDRE AUBERT DE LA CHESNAIE, an industrious French compiler, born 1699; died 19 Feb., 1784.

DES CARTES, RENÉ, was born at La Haye, in Touraine, 21 March, 1596. He received his education under the Jesuits in their college at La Flèche, on leaving which he removed to Paris, and contracted an acquaintance with Mersenne, by whose advice he applied to the study of mathematics. In 1616 he entered the army of the prince of Orange, and, while serving at Breda, solved a difficult problem, which introduced him to Beckman, principal of the college of Dort. He next went into the Bavarian service, but soon after quitted the military life, and returned to Paris, where he produced his Treatise on the Passions. After devoting some time to these pursuits he went to Italy, and spent two years in that country. In 1629 he settled in Holland; but the publication of his Philosophical Meditations gave such offence to the clergy that he withdrew to England. The Rebellion breaking out prevented his settling here, and he returned to Holland, soon after which he was invited to Stockholm by Christina, queen of Sweden. But he had not been there more than four months when he caught a cold, which brought on an inflammation of the lungs, and he died 11 Feb., 1650. His remains were removed to France in 1650, and interred in the church of St. Genevieve du Mont. The philosophy of Des Cartes, though opposed at first, afterwards became popular, and was taught in many universities; but now it has given way to the sounder method recommended by Bacon. He was indebted for his metaphysics to Plato; for his doctrine of a plenum to Aristotle; and for his vortices to the atomic system of Democritus and Epicurus. As a mathematician he is entitled to respect, and his discovery of the laws of refraction brought dioptrics to a science. It is now proved, however, that he was indebted for the algebraic mode of notation to our countryman Harriot. The works of Des Cartes have been published in 9 vols. 4to., in Latin, and 15 vols. 12mo., in French.

DESENFANS, NOEL, was a native of France, where he had the celebrated Calonne for a fellow-student, and their friendship lasted through life. His taste for the fine arts procured him the patronage of the last king of Poland, who appointed him his consul-general in England, where he resided during the remainder of his life. In 1799 he published a short work, in which he sketched a plan for advancing the arts in England by the establishment of a national gallery, to which he would have largely contributed. In 1802 he printed a Descriptive Catalogue of the Collection of Pictures which he was commissioned to purchase for his royal patron. This work does honour to the compiler, who died in Portland Place 1807, aged 62. His gallery came into the possession of Sir Francis Bourgeois, who gave it to Dulwich College. The 'Memoirs of Noel Desenfans, Esq.; containing also a Plan for preserving the Portraits of Distinguished Characters; Poems and Letters,' were privately printed in 1810.

DESERICIUS, or DESERITZ, JOSEPH INNOCENT, a Hungarian cardinal, author of some Latin works on the history of his country, was born 1702, and died 1765.

DESFONTAINES, PIERRE FRANÇOIS GUYOT, a critic, was born at Rouen 1685. He became a Jesuit, but quitted the order to settle upon a living in Normandy, after which he went to reside with the Cardinal d'Auvergne at Paris, where he conducted the 'Journal des Scavans,' in conjunction with the Abbé Bignon. Died 16 Dec., 1745.

DESGODETS, ANTOINE, a French architect, born 1653; died 20 May, 1728. He published some architectural works.

DESHAYS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French painter, born 1729; died 20 Feb., 1765.

DESLANDES.

DESLANDES, ANDRÉ FRANÇOIS BOUREAU, a French deistical writer of mediocre talents, was born at Pondicherry 1690, and died at Paris 11 April, 1757. He wrote a Critical History of Philosophy; 'Reflexions sur les grands hommes qui sont morts en plaisantant,' &c.

DESMAHIS, JOSEPH FRANÇOIS EDOUARD DE CORSEMBLEU, a French dramatist, born 3 Feb., 1722; died 25 Feb., 1761.

DESMATZEAUX, PETER, F.R.S., was born at Auvergne in France, 1666. Being a Protestant he was obliged to quit his native country, on which he came to England, and in 1720 was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society. He kept up a most extensive correspondence with men of letters; and died in London June, 1745. He wrote the Life of Bayle, prefixed to the edition of his Dictionary in 1730. He also edited that author's miscellaneous works, and those of St. Evremont; besides which he wrote the life of Boileau in French, that of Chillingworth, and that of John Hales in English. He likewise edited some of Locke's works.

DESMARES, MARIE. See CHAMPMELE.

DESMARES, TOUSSAINT GUI JOSEPH, a French oratorian, who was attached to the Jansenist notions. He wrote several works, and furnished materials to D. Rivet for the 'Nécrologe de Port-Royal.' Born 1599; died 19 Jan., 1687.

DESMARETS, NICOLAS, a French statesman. He was nephew of the great Colbert, and had the place of comptroller-general of the finances. Died 1721. There was published after his death an account of his administration, which is very curious.

DESMARETS, ROLAND, a French advocate, born 1594; died 27 Dec., 1653. He wrote Latin letters of considerable merit.

DESMARETS, SAMUEL, in Latin Maresius, a French Protestant minister, born in Picardy 9 Aug., 1599. He became divinity professor at Groningen, where he died 18 May, 1673. He wrote several books against the Catholics and Socinians, and also against Grotius. His 'Collegium Theologicum' is esteemed.

DESMARETS DE SAINT SORLIN, JEAN, brother of Roland, mentioned above, was born at Paris 1595. He led a dissolute life in his youth, but in his advanced years became a fanatic, and predicted that Louis XIV. was ordained by Providence to overturn the Turkish empire and unite all Christians to the Holy See. He wrote some poems and plays; a paraphrase of the Psalms; romances; and religious pieces. Died 28 Oct., 1676.

DESMOLETS, PIERRE NICOLAS, a French priest, librarian of the Oratory at Paris, wrote a continuation of Sallengre's Memoirs of Literature, and published new and improved editions of several useful works. Born 1678; died 26 April, 1760.

DESMOULINS, BENOIT CAMILLE, one of the French revolutionists, known for his zeal at the taking of the Bastille, and in the demolition of the monarchy. He perished on the scaffold 5 April, 1794, aged 33. He wrote The Revolutions of France and Brabant; History of the Brisotins, &c.

DESPAGNE, JEAN, minister of a French congregation at Durham House, Strand, London, was born 1591, and died 25 April, 1659. He was admired as a preacher, and several of his works on theology have been translated into English.

DESPARD, EDWARD MARCUS, was a native of the Queen's County, in Ireland, where his family lived in considerable repute. He early embraced a military life as an ensign, and became an excellent engineer. At the close of the American war he served in the West Indies, where he distinguished himself by an expedition on the Spanish Main, in which he had for a coadjutor Captain (afterwards Lord) Nelson. For his services there he was made lieutenant-colonel, and in 1784 was appointed superintendent of the English affairs in the Bay of Honduras; but his conduct giving offence to the settlers, complaints were sent home against him, and he was suspended, and arrived in England in 1790. He applied to government for an investigation of his conduct, which was rejected, as were also his claims. He now became a violent democrat, and in consequence of his inflammatory conduct was apprehended, and sent, during the suspension of the Habeas Corpus, to Coldbath Fields Prison, from whence he was removed to the House of Industry at Shrewsbury, and next to Tothill Fields Bridewell. Afterwards he was liberated on his own recognizance. His long confinement, however, had not the effect of making him prudent. He endeavoured to seduce the soldiery, and having collected some followers, held secret meetings at different alehouses, to which no persons were admitted without taking a treasonable oath. At these assemblies various plans were devised for the murder of the king, and at last it was determined to make the attack when his majesty should go to the Parliament House. The plot being revealed by some of the conspirators, the colonel and several others were taken up, and after a confinement of some duration were brought to trial before a special commission at the Sessions House in Southwark, 5 Feb., 1803. Despard and nine others were found guilty, and on the 21st they were all executed.

DESPARTS, JACQUES, in Latin de Partibus, a French physician, author of a commentary on Avicenna, died at Paris 3 Jan., 1457.

DESPAUTÈRE, JOHN, in Flemish van Pauteren, a famous grammarian, born at Ninove, in Brabant, about 1400; died at Comines 1520. His 'Commentarii Grammatici,' folio, Paris, 1537, is very scarce and valuable.

DESPIERRES, JEAN, superior of the Benedictine college of Douay, where he died 28 March, 1664, aged 67. He was distinguished by his mathematical talents, and constructed an iron sphere which exhibited the planetary motions. He wrote a Commentary on the Psalms; a Defence of the Vulgate translation, &c.

DESPEISSES, ANTOINE, an erudite French jurist, born 1504; died 1658.

DESPLACES, LOUIS, a French engraver, born 1682; died 1739.

DESPORTES, FRANÇOIS, a French painter, born 1661; died 1743.

DESPORTES, JEAN BAPTISTE POUFÉE, a French physician, who resided for sixteen years at St. Domingo, and wrote a valuable history of the diseases of that Island. Born 1704; died 15 Feb., 1748.

DESPORTES, PHILIPPE, a French poet, born 1546; died 5 Oct., 1606.

DESKROCHERS. See ANDIER.

DESSALINES, JACQUES, a negro slave, born about 1760, was proclaimed emperor of Hayti 1803, when he took the title of Jean Jacques I. He was slain in an insurrection 17 Oct., 1806.

DESSENIUS, BERNARD, a Dutch physician and medical writer, born 1510; died 1574.

DESTOUCHES.

DESTOUCHES, PHILIPPE NÉRICHAULT, a French dramatic writer, born at Tours 1680; died 4 July, 1754.

DETHICK, Sir GILBERT, an English herald, was created Hampnes pursuant extraordinary 1536; Rouge-croix 1540; Richmond herald the same year; Norroy king-at-arms 1547; Garter king-at-arms 1549. Died 3 Oct., 1584, aged 81. Some of his MS. collections are in the British Museum.

DETHICK, Sir WILLIAM, second son of Sir Gilbert, was created Rouge-croix pursuant 1566; York herald 1569; Garter king-at-arms soon afterwards. Died 1612, æt. 70. He was a member of the old Society of Antiquaries.

DEUS-DEDIT. See DIEUDONNÉ.

DEUSING, ANTHONY, a Flemish physician, professor at Harderwick and afterwards at Groningen, was born 15 Oct., 1612, and died 29 Jan., 1666. He wrote some learned professional works, and translated Avicenna's 'Medical Institutions' from Arabic into Latin.

DEUTSCH, NICHOLAS EMMANUEL, a painter and engraver of Berne, born 1484; died 1530.

DEVARIS, or DEVARIUS, MATTHEW, a Greek, was born in the island of Corfu, of a Catholic family, about 1490. He studied at Rome under Lascaris, and afterwards became corrector of the Greek manuscripts in the Vatican. He translated the catechism of the Council of Trent into that language; but is best known by his work 'De partibus Græcæ linguæ,' of which there have been many editions. Died about 1567.

DEVAUX, JEAN, a French surgeon, author of several professional works, was born 27 Jan., 1649, and died 27 Jan., 1729.

DEVENTER, HENRY, a Dutch physician, who was an able accoucheur and a good writer in the peculiar branch of his profession, died after 1730.

DEVERE, Sir AUBREY, Bart., of Curragh, county Tipperary, was born 20 August, 1788, being son and heir of Sir Vere Hunt, the first baronet. He succeeded to the title on his father's death 1818. Subsequently he took the name of De Vere. He was author of 'The Waldenses, or the Fall of Rora, a Lyrical Tale, with other Poems,' 8vo., Oxford, 1842; 'A Song of Faith, Devout Exercises, and Sonnets,' 8vo., London, 1842; 'The Search after Proserpine, Reflections on Greece, and other poems,' 8vo., Oxford, 1843. Died 5 July, 1846.

DEVERELL, Mrs. MARY, the daughter of a clothier residing near Minchin Hampton, Gloucestershire, wrote 'Sermons,' 8vo., 1744; 'Miscellanies in prose and verse,' 2 vols. 12mo., 1782; 'Theodora and Didymus, or the Exemption of pure Love and vital Religion, an heroic poem,' 8vo., 1785; 'Mary queen of Scots,' an historical tragedy. One Mrs. Deverell, the widow of John Deverell, died at Clifton, 26 August, 1806; another, the wife of Robert Blake Deverell, died at the same place 29 June, 1810.

DEVERELL, ROBERT, an eccentric author, whose name was originally Pedley, was the son of Simon Pedley, of Bristol, where he was born 1760. He received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1781), and in 1782 obtained the members' prize for a Latin essay, the subject being 'Utrum ad emendandos magis, an corruptendos, civium mores conferat Musica?' In 1784 he was admitted a fellow of St. John's on the Lady Margaret's foundation, and in the same year commenced M.A. Subsequently he changed his name to Deverell. In 1802 he was elected M.P. for Saltash, being, it seems, a Whig, but an advocate for the slave trade. He died in London 29 Nov., 1841. His works are 'Alter et Idem, a New Review. No. I. for a Summer Month in 1794'; 'A Guide to the Knowledge of the Ancients, 1803'; 'Andalusia; or Notes tending to show that the Yellow Fever of the West Indies and of Andalusia in Spain was well known to the Ancients, &c.,' 4to., 1805; 'Two Letters addressed to the late Right Hon. William Pitt, on the subject of the ancient Aries, or Battering Ram,' 1805; 'A New View of the Classics and Ancient Arts, tending to show the invariable Connexion with the Sciences,' 4to., London, 1806; and 'Discoveries in Hieroglyphics and other Antiquities,' 6 vols. 8vo., London, 1813; 2nd edition, 1816. The last is one of the strangest books ever written.

DEVEREUX, earls of Essex. See ESSEX.

DEVISME, LOUIS, a diplomatist, born about 1722, and educated at Oxford. He became minister plenipotentiary to the Electorate of Bavaria; minister to the Diet of Ratisbon; ambassador to Sweden 1773; died 30 Sept., 1776.

DEVON, or DEVONSHIRE, CHARLES BLOUNT, EARL OF, second son of James Lord Mountjoy, was born 1563. The elegance of his person and his accomplishments recommended him to the notice of Queen Elizabeth, who conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. In 1594 he was made governor of Portsmouth, and the same year succeeded his brother in the peerage. After this he formed a troop, with which he served in the Low Countries and in Brittany; but the queen was displeased with his absence, and ordered him to remain at court. She made him a K.G. 1597, and gave him a military appointment in Ireland, where he succeeded in quelling a rebellion. In 1603 he returned to England, bringing with him the earl of Tyrone, the famous rebel chieftain. James I. created him earl of Devonshire 21 July, 1603, and made him master of the ordinance. At the close of life he fell into disgrace by marrying the divorced Lady Rich, daughter of the earl of Essex, died 3 April, 1666.

DEVON, or DEVONSHIRE, EDWARD COURTENAY, EARL OF, was confined in prison after the attainder of his father in the reign of Henry VIII., but was restored in blood in the first year of the reign of Queen Mary, to whom he was proposed for a husband. The proposal seems to have entirely coincided with the Queen's inclination, but by no means with the earl's, who had a tender regard for the Princess Elizabeth. The earl is said to have been poisoned in Italy by the imperialists in Sept., 1556.

DEVONSHIRE, GEORGIANA, DUCHESS OF, famous for her beauty and poetical talents, and the patriotic friend of Fox, was born 9 June, 1757. She was the youngest daughter of John Earl Spencer; and in 1774 she married William Cavendish, duke of Devonshire. This most amiable and accomplished woman wrote 'Memorandums of the Face of the Country in Switzerland,' 12mo., London, 1799; and a poetical piece, 'The Passage of the St. Gothard, with an Italian translation by G. Polidori,' folio, London, 1803. Died 30 March, 1806.

DEVONSHIRE, WILLIAM CAVENDISH, first DUKE OF, was born 25 Jan., 1640. In 1661 he represented the county of Derby, and in 1665 served as a volunteer in the fleet commanded by the duke of York. He distinguished himself in parliament against the court, and was a witness in favour of Lord Russell, with whom he offered to exchange clothes to enable him to effect his escape. In 1684 he succeeded to the title of earl of Devonshire, and about the same time was fined £30,000 for assaulting Colonel Culppeper in the presence chamber; but though he gave bond for the payment of the fine, he saved it by the Revolution, of which he was a principal promoter. After that event he was made a privy-councillor, and at the coronation served as lord high steward. In 1694 he was created duke of Devonshire, and during the king's absence was one of the regency. Died 18 Aug., 1707. He wrote 'An Ode on the death of Queen Mary,' and 'An Allusion to the bishop of Cambray's Supplement to Homer.'

DEWAILLY. See WAILLY.

D'EWES, SIR SYMONDS, an antiquary, born at Coxden, Dorsetshire, 1603, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He received the honour of knighthood from Charles I., and in 1641 was created a baronet; but on the breaking out of the Civil War he took the solemn league and covenant. Died 18 April, 1650. He compiled the Journals of all the Parliaments during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, which work was published in 1682. His Autobiography has been edited by Mr. Halliwell. Several of his MSS. are in the British Museum.

DEWHURST, JOHN BICKERTON, of Hackney, a dissenting minister and schoolmaster, died 5 Oct., 1812, æt. 35. He was an admirable classical scholar, but the only fruits of his learning which he is known to have given to the public were the classical and biographical articles in the Annual Review, and a series of papers in the Athenæum containing an account of Greek authors from Homer to Thucydides.

DE WINT, PETER, a native of Staffordshire, who acquired distinction as a painter in water colours; died in London 30 June, 1849, æt. 66.

DIBBEN, THOMAS, D.D., a native of Dorsetshire, was educated at Cambridge, became precentor of St. Paul's, and died 5 April, 1741. He published several occasional sermons, and translated Prior's 'Carmen Seculare' into Latin verse.

DICETO.

DIBDIN, CHARLES, a dramatist and song writer, was born at Southampton in 1748. He was educated at Winchester School, which he left at the age of sixteen, and brought out an opera called 'The Shepherd's Artifice,' written and composed by himself. This was followed by 'Lionel and Clarissa,' and 'The Padlock,' in which last he performed Mungo. After this he became manager of the Circus, and next the proprietor of a small theatre near Leicester Square. During the war he wrote a number of loyal and nautical songs, for which Mr. Pitt granted him a pension of two hundred a year, but this was withdrawn on the death of that great man. Being thus reduced to poverty, he became a bankrupt, but at last a subscription was entered into for his support. He died in 1814. Mr. Dibdin published some novels, and 'Observations on a Tour through England and Scotland,' 4to.

DIBDIN, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was introduced to the stage 1775, being then only four years of age, in the pageant of 'Shakspeare's Jubilee,' in the character of Cupid, Mrs. Siddons personating Venus on the occasion. He was apprenticed to an upholsterer, but ran away from his indentures and joined a small company of actors, under the management of Mr. Rickland, at Folkestone, 1789. After six years spent in various theatres, during which time he had performed in every department of the drama, and written more than one thousand songs, he returned to London 1795, and after writing a number of successful dramas for the minor theatres, he was engaged at Covent Garden 1799. For fourteen years he continued a member of that theatre, and amongst his numerous comedies, operas, farces, &c., were 'The Cabinet,' 'The English Fleet,' 'Birthday,' 'Mother Goose,' 'The High-Minded Racer,' 'Jew and the Doctor,' 'Valentine and Orson,' and 'Past Ten o'Clock.' Died in London 16 Sept., 1841, æt. 70.

DIBDIN, THOMAS FROGNALL, D.D., was nephew of Charles Dibdin, the song-writer, being the son of Charles's elder brother Thomas. He studied at St. John's College, Oxford, and was ordained in 1804. He became vicar of Exning, near Newmarket, and rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, London. Died 18 Nov., 1847, aged 71. Dr. Dibdin was an enthusiastic bibliomaniac, and published a series of splendid works on his favourite subject. The principal are 'Introduction to the knowledge of rare and valuable editions of the Greek and Latin Classics'; 'Typographical Antiquities of Great Britain'; 'A Bibliographical Romance'; 'Bibliotheca Spenceriana,' 4 vols.; 'The Bibliographical Decameron,' 3 vols.; 'Ædes Althorpianæ'; 'A Bibliographical, Antiquarian, and Picturesque Tour'; 'The Library Companion, or the Young Man's Guide and the Old Man's Comfort in the Choice of a Library'; and 'A Bibliographical, Antiquarian, and Picturesque Tour in the northern counties of England and Scotland.' Dr. Dibdin took a prominent part in the formation of the Roxburgh Club.

DICCONSON, THOMAS, or EDWARD, an English Catholic prelate, was appointed vicar-apostolic of the northern districts and consecrated bishop of Malla 19 March, 1741; and died 24 April, 1752.

DICETO, RALPH DE, dean of St. Paul's, London, about 1210, wrote an epitome of English history, and the lives of some of our English kings.

DICK, SIR ALEXANDER, M.D., was son of Sir William Cunningham, of Caprington, by the daughter of Sir James Dick, of Prestonfield, and born 23 Oct., 1703. He studied at Leyden, and having taken his degree of M.D. returned to his own country. He afterwards made the tour of Europe, and on his return to Britain settled in Pembrokeshire. On succeeding to the title and name of Dick, he went to live at the family seat of Prestonfield. In 1756 he was chosen president of the College of Physicians at Edinburgh. He died 10 Nov., 1785. He was the first who paid attention to the culture of the true rhubarb in Britain, for which he received, in 1774, the medal from the Society for Promoting Arts and Commerce.

DICK, ALEXANDER, a Scotch gentleman, was brought up in the principles of the church established in his native country, but renounced Protestantism, and was received into the Catholic Church by the venerable Bishop Hay 1795. For many years he resided at Edinburgh, where he died in 1823. His work entitled 'Reasons for Embracing the Catholic Faith. By a Convert,' appeared at Edinburgh, 16mo., 1848, with a preface by the Right Rev. Andrew Carruthers, vicar-apostolic of the eastern district of Scotland.

DICK, JOHN, D.D., an eminent minister of the secession church in Scotland; pastor of the associate congregation of seceders at Aberdeen; was born 10 Oct., 1764, and died 25 Jan., 1833. He wrote an Essay on the Inspiration of the Scriptures; Lectures on some passages of the Acts of the Apostles, 2 vols.; Lectures on Theology, 2 vols.; and Sermons.—Anderson.

DICK, THOMAS, LL.D., F.R.A.S., a popular scientific writer, was born at Dundee 24 Nov., 1774, and educated at Edinburgh, after which he became a minister in the secession church. He afterwards kept a school at Perth, where he published his 'Christian Philosopher.' The success of this work induced him to resign his position as a teacher, and to retire to Broughton Ferry, near Dundee, where his pen was ever busy preparing numerous works in which science was presented in a pleasing and popular form. Died 29 July, 1857.

DICKINSON, CHARLES, a Somersetshire gentleman, author of 'Cyllenius,' and other poetical works, died 5 Feb., 1827.

DICKINSON, EDMUND, M.D., was born at Appleton, Berkshire, 1624, and educated at Merton College, Oxford. In 1655 he published a book entitled 'Delphi Phœnicizantes,' though, according to Wood, the true author of it was Henry Jacob, the Puritan. The chief design of this curious work is to prove that the heathen mythological stories were corruptions of the Scripture histories of the Old Testament. In 1684 Dickinson settled in London, and was appointed physician to the king. In 1702 he published his 'Physica Vetus et Vera; sive tractatus de naturali veritate hexæmeri Mosæici,' in which it is proved that the method of the creation of the universe, according to the principles of true philosophy, is, in a concise and general way, laid down by Moses. Died April, 1707.

DICKONS, Mrs., née Poole, a popular English vocalist, born about 1775; died 4 May, 1833.

DICKSON, DAVID, a divine, born at Glasgow about 1583. After taking his degree of master of arts, he became professor of philosophy in the college of Glasgow. In 1618 he was ordained minister of the town of Irvine, where he remained twenty-three years; and in 1641 became professor of divinity at Glasgow; from whence he removed to Edinburgh, but was ejected for nonconformity in 1662; and died 1662-3. He wrote A Commentary on the Hebrews; On Matthew; On the Psalms, 3 vols.; On the Epistles; 'Therapeutica Sacra,' and A Treatise on the Promises. He had a share in drawing up the Confession of Faith, on which he delivered Prælectiones, which were published in folio.

DICKSON, DAVID, D.D., one of the ministers of St. Cuthbert's parish, Edinburgh, died 28 July, 1842, æt. 63. He published an edition of Horsley on the Psalms, and several sermons preached on public occasions.

DICKSON, SIR DAVID JAMES HAMILTON, M.D., an eminent physician and medical writer—inspector of fleets and hospitals—was born in Roxburghshire 1780, and died at Plymouth 2 Jan., 1850.

DICKSON, JAMES, a botanical writer, was a native of Scotland, and died in London 1822.

DICKSON, THOMAS, M.D., F.R.S., a physician, was a native of Dumfries, and died in London 1 June, 1784, aged 58. He wrote 'A Treatise on Blood-letting,' 1763.

DIDEROT, DENIS, a French writer, born at Langres 1712; died 30 July, 1784. His reputation mainly rests on the famous 'Encyclopédie' which he projected, and completed with the assistance of D'Alembert and other powerful associates. He was himself the principal worker in this vast undertaking. The admirable 'Prospectus,' and the 'Système des Connoissances Humaines,' proceeded from his pen, besides which he wrote all the articles relating to arts and trades. Diderot was a bitter opponent of Christianity.

DIDIUS JULIANUS, M. SALVIUS SEVERUS, a Roman emperor, who was slain 1 June, 193, after having reigned only sixty-six days.

DIDOT, FRANÇOIS AMBROISE, a celebrated printer of Paris, born Jan., 1730; died 10 July, 1804. His son, Firmin Didot (born 1764; died 24 April, 1836), was distinguished both as a printer and an author.

DIECMANN, JOHN, rector of the university of Stade, was born 30 June, 1647, and died 4 July, 1720. He published an edition of Luther's Bible, and several theological works.

distinguished mineralogist, born at Strasburg 1748, and was executed in the French revolution 28 Dec., 1793.

DIEU, LOUIS DE, a Protestant divine and orientalist, born at Flushing 7 April, 1590. He became professor at the Walloon college at Leyden, and died 23 Dec., 1642. His works on matters of Biblical criticism are collected in 'Critica Sacra,' Amsterdam, 1693. He also wrote a Hebrew, Syriac, and Chaldean grammar, &c.

DIEUDONNE I. (St.), or Deus-Ididit, a native of Rome, was elected the sixty-seventh Pope 19 Oct., 615, and died 3 Dec., 618. His festival is observed on Nov. 8.

DIEUDONNE II., or Aleodatus, also a native of Rome, was elected the seventy-eighth Pope April, 672, and died 17 or 26 June 676.

DIGBY. See BRISTOL, EARL OF.

DIGBY, EVERARD, B.D., a divine, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, of which he was deprived 1587, on account of his suspected leaning towards Catholicism. He afterwards obtained a benefice—probably the rectory of Tinwell in Rutland. He published some philosophical works in Latin, and a treatise in the same language on the Art of Swimming. It is commonly said that he was the father of Sir Everard Digby; but this is very doubtful.—Athen. Cantab.

DIGBY, SIR EVERARD, said to have been the son of the preceding, was born 1581. He became a convert to the Catholic church; but, notwithstanding this, he was made a knight at the accession of James I. He was drawn into the Gunpowder Plot, towards which he contributed £1500; and being taken in arms when the treason was detected, he was executed 30 Jan., 1605-6.

DIGBY, SIR KENELM, eldest son of Sir Everard Digby, was born at Gothurst, Buckinghamshire, 11 June, 1603. He was educated in the Protestant religion, and in 1618 was sent to Gloucester Hall, now Worcester College, Oxford. In 1623 he received the honour of knighthood, soon after which he made some noise by his sympathetic powder for the cure of wounds. At the beginning of the reign of Charles I. he was appointed one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber, a commissioner of the navy, and a governor of the Trinity House. Some disputes having risen with the Venetians, Sir Kenelm was sent with a squadron into the Mediterranean, where he attacked the fleet of the republic at Scanderoun. In 1636 he became reconciled to the church of Rome. On the breaking out of the civil war he was committed prisoner to Winchester House, but in 1643 he recovered his liberty, and went to France. About this time he formed an intimacy with Des Cartes, and published some philosophical treatises. At the Restoration he became a member of the Royal Society, the meetings of which he constantly attended. He died on his birthday 11 June, 1665. He was undoubtedly a man of learning and ingenuity, but vain and credulous. His principal works are Observations on Dr. Browne's Religio Medici, printed without that book; Observations on Spencer's Faery Queen; A Treatise on the Nature of Bodies; A Treatise on Man's Soul, &c.

DIGGES, SIR DUDLEY, eldest son of Thomas Digges, was born 1583, and educated at University College, Oxford. He was knighted by James I., who sent him ambassador to Russia; but in the parliament of 1621 he resisted the court measures, and continued to do so in the next reign, for which he was committed to the Tower. In 1636 he was made master of the rolls. Died 18 March, 1638-9. He wrote A Defence of Trade, 1615; A Discourse concerning the Rights and Privileges of the Subject; and Speeches in Rushworth's Collections. His son, Dudley, who died 1 Oct., 1643, wrote some tracts against the Rebellion.

DIGGES, LEONARD, an English mathematician, was born at Barham, in Kent, and educated at University College, Oxford. He wrote a treatise on Surveying, another on Geometry, and one entitled Prognostication everlasting, or Rules to judge the Weather. He died about 1573.

DIGGES, LEONARD, brother of Sir Dudley Digges, was born 1588 and educated at University College, Oxford (B.A. 1606; M.A. 1620). He wrote commendatory verses on Shakspeare, and translated from the Spanish 'The History of Gerardo,' and from Latin into English verse Claudian's 'Rape of Proserpine.' Died 7 April, 1635.

DIGGES, THOMAS, son of Leonard Digges, the elder, was born in Kent, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1550-1; M.A. 1557). He was appointed muster-master of the English forces in the Netherlands, 1586; and died 24 Aug., 1595. He wrote, among other things, Alac sive Scalae Mathematicae, containing Demonstrations for finding the Parallax of any Comet or other celestial Body; 'An Arithmetical Treatise, named Stratioticos, requisite for the Perfection of Soldiers; Perfect Descriptions of the Celestial Orbs; Humble motives for association to maintaine religion establish'd; 'England's Defence, a Treatise concerning Invasion.'—Athen. Cantab.

DIGHTON, ROBERT, an English painter and caricaturist, died in London 1814.

DILKE, CHARLES WENTWORTH, an English journalist, born 8 Dec., 1789; died at Alice Holt, Hampshire, 10 Aug., 1864. In early life he was an extensive contributor to the leading reviews and magazines, and subsequently he became editor of the 'Athenæum.'

DILLENIUS, JOHN JAMES, an eminent botanist, born at Darmstadt, in Germany, 1681, and educated at the university of Giessen. He contributed several curious papers to the Miscellanea Curiosa, and in 1721 accompanied Dr. Sherard to England, where he spent the remainder of his days. Soon after his arrival he undertook a new edition of Ray's Synopsis Stirpium Britannicarum. He was appointed the first botanical professor at Oxford on Dr. Sherard's foundation, and in 1735 the university admitted him to the degree of M.D. Died 2 April, 1747. He published an elaborate work entitled Hortus Elthamensis, and a History of Mosses.

DILLON, THOMAS, an Irish Jesuit, born 1613, and educated in Spain. He published a Spanish Panegyric on the Centenary of the Society of Jesus, 4to., Seville, 1640; and arranged materials for a commentary on the Books of Maccabees; but delicate health and weakness of sight prevented him from finishing them for the press. He was living in 1676.—Oliver.

DILLON, WENTWORTH, earl of Roscommon. See ROSCOMMON.

DILWORTH, THOMAS, an industrious schoolmaster, who served his apprenticeship to the well-known Mr. Dyche, at Stratford-le-bow, and then set up for himself at Wapping, where he had great success. Died 17 Jan., 1780. Mr. Dilworth published a Spelling-book, a treatise on Arithmetic, another on Book-keeping, and one on the Use of the Globes.

DIMOCK, JAMES, a Catholic divine, was descended from a very ancient family in Norfolk. Being ordained a priest abroad, he returned to England upon the mission, and was afterwards made prior of St. Arnoul, near Chartres, in France, to which was added another small benefice. He was alive in 1718, a very old man. He was a person of great reading and curiosity. The following works are a specimen of his abilities:—'The great sacrifice of the new law, expounded by the figures of the old,' 12mo., London, 1687; A geographical history, 8vo; A miscellaneous dictionary, 4to., MS.

DIMSDALE, THOMAS, M.D., was the son of a surgeon and apothecary at Theydon Garnon, Essex, where he was born 1712. He served as a surgeon in the army of the duke of Cumberland during the Rebellion of 1745, after which he settled at Hertford. In 1768 he went to Russia, where he inoculated the empress Catharine, and her son Paul, for which he received £12,000 and a pension, with the title of baron. After his return from St. Petersburg he opened a banking-house in Cornhill; and in 1780 was elected M.P. for Hertford, whereupon he declined medical practice; but in 1781 he went again to Russia to inoculate the emperor and his brother. Died 30 Dec., 1800. Baron Dimsdale published a Treatise on Inoculation, and some tracts on the same subject against Dr. Lettsom.

DINGLEY, ROBERT, was educated at Oxford, where he was a strict observer of all church ceremonies. He afterwards became a zealous Puritan, and was remarkably active in ejecting such as were by that party styled 'ignorant and scandalous ministers and schoolmasters.' He was rector of Brixton, in the Isle of Wight, and died 12 Jan. 1659-60, æt. 40. He wrote 'The Spiritual Tast described;' 'Disputation of Angels;' 'Messiah's Splendor;' 'Divine Opticks: or, a treatise of the eye, discovering the vices and virtues thereof; as also how that Organ may be tuned;' and 'Philosophical, Historical, and Theological Observations of Thunder, with a more general view of God's wonderful works.'

DINOCRATES, an architect of Macedonia, who flourished in the time of Alexander the Great.

DINOSTRATES, a Greek mathematician, contemporary with Plato.

DINOUART, JOSEPH ANTOINE TOUSSAINT, canon of St. Benedict at Paris, was born 1 Nov., 1716, and died 23 April, 1786. He wrote some theological works; conducted the 'Journal Ecclesiastique;' and published editions of Quintus Curtius, Cæsar's Commentaries, &c.

DIOCLETIAN, CAIUS VALERIUS, was chosen emperor of Rome 284; renounced the crown 305; and died July, 313.

DIODATI, JOHN, a Protestant minister, born at Lucca 6 June, 1576. He became professor of Hebrew at Geneva, where he died 3 Oct., 1649. He translated the Bible into Italian and French, and also gave a version of Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent. His nephew, Charles Diodati, the friend of Milton, settled in England, and died 1638. He was a physician in Cheshire.

DIODORUS, of Antioch, a learned bishop of Tarsus, 378, who was the preceptor of SS. Chrysostom, Basil, and Athanasius.

DIONYSIUS.

DIODORUS, of Caria, a philosopher of the Megaric sect, flourished about 280 b.c.

DIODORUS SICULUS, a Greek historian, was a native of Agrigium, in Sicily, and flourished in the first century.

DIOGENES, a cynic philosopher, was born at Sinope, a city of Pontus, and became a disciple of Antisthenes, at Athens. Though not the founder of the cynics, he added many austerities to the order. He used to lodge in a tub, and subsisted by begging. When Alexander the Great visited him, and requested to know whether he could do him any service, Diogenes replied 'Yes, by not standing between me and the sun!' He died b.c. 323, probably at Corinth, aged 90.

DIOGENES, the Babylonian, a stoic philosopher, who flourished 200 b.c.

DIOGENES LAERTIUS, a Greek writer, was born at Laertes, in Cilicia, and probably flourished in the beginning of the third century. He left a work containing the biography of the principal philosophers, and their most remarkable apothegms.

DION, a celebrated patriot of Syracuse, died 353 b.c.

DION CASSIUS, a native of Nicæa, in Bithynia, who wrote in Greek the History of Rome. All that remains of this work was printed in 1548, and has been translated into English by Mr. Manning. Dion died after A.D. 229.

DION CHRYSOSTOM, a Greek rhetorician and sophist, who died about A.D. 117.

DIONIS, PIERRE, a French surgeon and anatomical writer, born about 1640; died 1718.

DIONIS DU SEJOUR, ACHILLE PIERRE, a mathematician, born at Paris 11 Jan., 1734; died 22 Aug., 1794.

DIONYSIUS I., king or tyrant of Syracuse, obtained the throne 404 b.c., and died 366 b.c.

DIONYSIUS II., the Younger, son and successor of the preceding, was driven from the throne b.c. 343.

DIONYSIUS, a Roman, was elected Pope after St. Sixtus 19 Sept., 259, and died 26 Dec., 269.

DIONYSIUS of Alexandria (St.), succeeded Heraclas as patriarch of Alexandria 248, and died 17 Dec., 264. Of his works only some fragments remain.

DIONYSIUS, the Areopagite (St.), so called from his being one of the judges of the Areopagus. He was converted by St. Paul, became the first bishop of Athens, nobly confessed the faith, and suffered martyrdom about the year 95. The works attributed to him are spurious.

DIONYSIUS CATO. See CATO.

DIONYSIUS HALICARNASSENSIS, an historian and critic, was a native of Halicarnassus, in Caria. He visited Rome in the reign of Augustus b.c. 29, and resided there twenty-two years. He wrote, in Greek, an account of Roman Antiquities, and also a treatise, 'De structura Oratorum.' His critical works are much more valuable than his history. There was another Greek writer of the same name, who flourished about 180 b.c. He wrote a history of ancient musicians, &c., but none of his works are extant.

DIONYSIUS the Little, a Scythian, who went to Rome, where he became an abbat. His principal work is a collection of canons and decretals. He renewed the Paschal cycle of ninety-five years, and first introduced the method of computing the years from the birth of Christ. Died about 540.

DIONYSIUS.

DIONYSIUS, Periegetes, a native of Charax, in Persia, was a contemporary of Strabo. His geographical treatise in Greek hexameters, entitled Περιεγητικὴ Οἰκουμένης ('Description of the Habitable World'), has been several times printed.

DIOPHANTUS, a mathematician of Alexandria, to whom is attributed the invention of algebra. He probably lived in the seventh or eighth century.

DIOSCORIDES, PEDACIUS, or PEDANIUS, a physician and botanist, was born at Anazarbus, in Cilicia, and flourished in the time of Nero. He wrote five books in Greek on Materia Medica.

DIPPEL, JOHN CONRAD, a German physician and alchemist, born 1672; died 25 April, 1734. To him we are indebted for the discovery of the Prussian blue.

DIROYS, FRANÇOIS, a doctor of the Sorbonne, and canon of Avanches, was born 1620, and died 11 Oct., 1690. His principal work is 'Preuves et Préjugés pour la Religion Chrétienne et Catholique, contre les fausses Religions et l'Athéisme.'

DISNEY, JOHN, was born at Lincoln 1677. He studied the law at the Middle Temple, but did not follow it as a profession. At the age of forty-two he was ordained, and presented to the vicarage of Croft and the rectory of Kirkby-super-Baine, both in Lincolnshire. In 1722 he obtained the living of St. Mary, Nottingham, where he died 3 Feb., 1729-30. He wrote 'Primitivæ Sacræ, the reflections of a devout Solitude; 'Flora,' prefixed to a translation of Rapin's poem on Gardens; Two Essays upon the Execution of the Laws against Immorality and Prophaneness; Remarks upon a Sermon preached by Dr. Sacheverell; The Genealogy of the House of Brunswick Lunenburg; A View of ancient Laws against Immorality and Prophaneness; and Sermons on particular Occasions.

DISNEY, JOHN, D.D., F.S.A., a descendant of the preceding, was born at Lincoln 17 Sept., 1746, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He became rector of Panton, Lincolnshire, vicar of Salfordbury, in the same county, and chaplain to Dr. Law, bishop of Carlisle. After having relinquished his preferments and prospects in the church of England, he was for some years minister of the Unitarian chapel in Essex Street, Strand, London, but retired from that post on Mr. Thomas Brand Hollis bequeathing him his estates. Died 26 Dec., 1816. He was author of various biographical works, sermons, and tracts. Among them are 'Reasons for quitting the Church of England,' 1783; 'Memoirs of Dr. Arthur Ashley Sykes, Dr. Jortin, and Mr. Hollis;' and an edition of the works of Dr. Jebb.

D'ISRAELI, ISAAC, D.C.L., was born at Enfield, near London, in May, 1766, being the only child of Benjamin D'Israeli, a Venetian merchant, who had been for many years settled in this country. Much of his boyhood and youth was spent abroad, and on returning to England he devoted himself to the cultivation of literature, and produced a number of poems and novels, which have fallen into complete oblivion. His 'Commentaries on the Life and Reign of Charles I.' procured him the degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford; but he is now chiefly remembered as the compiler of 'The Curiosities of Literature,' 1791-1823, the manifold blunders in which have been ably though severely exposed by Mr. Bolton Corney, in a brochure entitled 'The Curiosities of Literature Illustrated.' Among his other works are an 'Essay on the Man- ners and Genus of the Literary Character;' 'Miscellanies, or Literary Recreations;' 'Calamities of Authors;' 'Quarrels of Authors;' 'Inquiry into the Literary and Political Character of King James I.;' and 'Amenities of Literature.' Died 19 Jan., 1848. Dr. D'Israeli was the father of Mr. Benjamin Disraeli, the present (1868) Prime Minister of England.

DITTMAR, JUSTUS CHRISTOPHER, professor of history and natural law at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, was born 13 March, 1677, and died 13 March, 1737. He wrote learned dissertations on the ancient Germans, on the origin of public law in Germany, on the testimony of Josephus concerning Jesus Christ, &c.

DITMAR, bishop of Mersburg, in Misnia, and author of a Chronicle of his times, was born 970, and died 1 Oct., 1028.

DITTERS DE DITTERS DORF, CHARLES, a celebrated musical composer, born at Vienna 1739; died 1 Oct., 1799.

DITTON, HUMPHREY, was born at Salisbury in 1675. He was educated for the ministry among the dissenters, and officiated some time at Tunbridge, in Kent, but quitted that profession, and, at the recommendation of Sir Isaac Newton, was elected mathematical master of Christ's Hospital. He rendered himself remarkable, and in some degree an object of ridicule, by proposing, in conjunction with Whiston, a plan for the discovery of the longitude. He died 15 Oct., 1715. He published 'The Institution of Fluxions;' 'The Synopsis Algebraicum of Helvetius, with additions;' 'A Treatise on Perspective;' 'A Discourse upon the Resurrection of Jesus Christ;' and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

DIVINI, EUSTACHIUS, an Italian, who distinguished himself by his skill in making telescopes. Born about 1620; died about 1664.

DIXON, JOSEPH, D.D., an Irish Catholic divine, for many years professor of Sacred Scripture and Hebrew in the royal college of St. Patrick, Maynooth, was appointed archbishop of Armagh and primate of all Ireland 1852. He died 29 April, 1866. He wrote 'A General Introduction to the Sacred Scriptures, in a series of dissertations, critical, hermeneutical, and historical,' Dublin, 2 vols. 8vo., 1852. A review of this learned work by Cardinal Wiseman, archbishop of Westminster, appeared in 1853 under the title of 'The Catholic Doctrine of the Use of the Bible.' Dr. Dixon was also author of a work entitled 'Blessed Cornelius.'

DIXON, ROBERT, D.D., had his education at St. John's College, Cambridge, and became rector of Tunstall, Essex, but was sequestered from his benefice 1644, on account of his attachment to the royal cause. After the Restoration he was restored to his living, and appointed a prebendary of Rochester. Died May, 1688. He wrote 'The Nature of the Two Testaments,' and other learned works.

DLUGOSS, JOHN LONGINUS, a Polish writer and ecclesiastic, born 1415; died 29 May, 1480. His principal work is a History of Poland.

DOBREE, PETER PAUL, a classical scholar, was born in Guernsey 1782; educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; appointed Greek professor in that university 1823; died 24 Sept., 1825. He edited Porson's 'Aristophana;' Photius's 'Lexicon,' from Porson's beautiful transcript; and wrote notes on several classical authors.

DOBSON, JOHN, an architect of considerable celebrity, was born 1787, and died 8 Jan., 1865.

DOBSON.

Mr. Dobson resided at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and made the designs for a large number of churches and other structures in the north of England.

DOBSON, WILLIAM, a painter, born in London 1610. He imitated the manner of Vanduyck, who introduced him to Charles I. He died poor in Oct., 1646. He painted both history and portrait with great excellence.

DOD, CHARLES ROGER, compiler of the 'Parliamentary Companion,' and of a 'Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage,' was born in Ireland 8 May, 1793, and died in London 21 Feb., 1855. He was for some years manager of the parliamentary staff of the 'Times' newspaper. After his decease new editions of the above-mentioned compilations were annually brought out by his son, Robert Phipps Dod, who was accidentally shot 9 Jan., 1865.

DOD, JOHN, a Puritan, born at Shotledge, Cheshire, 1547. He became fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and was appointed minister of Hanwell, Oxfordshire, from whence he removed to Fenny Compton, and next to Canons Ashby, Northamptonshire. In 1624 he was presented to the living of Fawesley, in the same county, where he died Aug., 1645. He wrote An Exposition of the Commandments, which work procured him the name of the Decalogist; and An Exposition of the Book of Proverbs. His 'sayings' were once proverbial, and commonly to be found in cottages.

DODART, DENIS, a French physician and botanist, born 1634; died 5 Nov., 1707.

DODD, CHARLES, an English ecclesiastical and historian. His true name was Hugh Tuotel, and he was born in the neighbourhood of Preston 1673. In 1688 he was sent over to Douay, and he also studied for a time in the seminary of St. Gregory, at Paris. Having been admitted to the priesthood, he was sent on the English mission 1698, and had charge of a congregation in Lancashire. In 1718 he was again at Douay, collecting materials for his well-known 'Church History,' in which he was very ably assisted by Edward Dicconson, then vice-president of the English college and professor of divinity, and by Ingleton, of the seminary at Paris. For many years he was stationed at Harvington, Worcestershire, where he completed his great work, which was published under the following title—'The Church History of England, from the year 1500 to the year 1688. Chiefly with regard to Catholics, being a complete account of the Divorce, Supremacy, Dissolution of Monasteries, and first attempts for a Reformation under King Henry VIII., the unsettled state of the Reformation under Edward VI., the interruption it met with from Queen Mary; with the last hand put to it by Queen Elizabeth: together with the various fortunes of the Catholick Cause during the reigns of King James I., King Charles I., King Charles II., and King James II. Particularly the Lives of the most eminent Catholics, Cardinals, Bishops, Inferior Clergy, Regulars, and Laymen, who have distinguished themselves by their Piety, Learning, or Military Abilities: also, a distinct and critical account of the works of the learned; the trials of those that suffered either on the score of religion, or for real or fictitious plots against the Government: with the foundation of all the English Colleges and Monasteries abroad. The whole supported by original papers and letters; many were never before made publick. To which is prefixed a General History of Ecclesiastical Affairs under the British Saxon and Norman periods,' 3 vols. folio, Brussels, 1739-1742. A new and corrected edition of this valuable work was commenced by the late Rev. Mark Aloysius Tierney, but only five volumes were published, 8vo., 1839-43. Dodd was also author of a great number of other works. 'The virtues and talents of Mr. Dodd were eminent,' remarks Chalmers, 'and his labours in the range of literature were incessant and manifold.' Died 27 Feb., 1742-3.

DODD, CHARLES EDWARD, an English barrister, author of 'An Autumn near the Rhine' (anon.), 1818; died 15 April, 1835.

DODD, JAMES SOLAS, a surgeon, who published, in 1752, 'An Essay towards a Natural History of the Herring.' He also took part in the controversy about Elizabeth Canning, and published a pamphlet in her defence. Subsequently he composed 'A Lecture on Hearts,' which he read publicly at Exeter Change with some degree of success. He also published a dramatic piece called originally 'Gallic Gratitude,' and afterwards 'The Funeral Pile.' He died at Dublin, March, 1805, at the great age, it is said, of 104.

DODD, RALPH, a civil engineer and architect, born in Northumberland 1756; died 11 April, 1822. He wrote an Account of the Principal Canals in the World, &c.

DODD, THOMAS, a printseller of London and Manchester, author of 'The Connoisseur's Repertorium,' was born in London 11 July, 1771, and died at Liverpool 17 Aug., 1850.

DODD, WILLIAM, LL.D., was born at Bourne, Lincolnshire, 1729. He studied at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he published a translation of Callimachus. On entering into orders he became a popular preacher in London, and added to his celebrity by promoting the Magdalen charity, for which Dr. Squire, bishop of St. David's, gave him a prebend in the collegiate church of Brecknock. He also obtained private pupils, one of whom was the heir of Lord Chesterfield, by whose interest he was made chaplain to the king. In 1772 he was presented to the living of Hockcliffe, Bedfordshire, but in 1774 he was struck off the list of the king's chaplains for attempting to gain the living of St. George's, Hanover Square, by bribery. To console him under this disgrace, his pupil, then become earl of Chesterfield, gave him the living of Winge, Buckinghamshire. Notwithstanding this kindness, he forged a bond in the name of that nobleman, for which he was condemned at the Old Bailey 24 Feb., and executed 27 June, 1777. He published a Commentary on the Bible; Sermons to Young Men; Reflections on Death; The Visitor, a periodical paper; Sermons on the Miracles and Parables; Several Poems and Miscellaneous Pieces; and lastly he left ready for the press 'Thoughts in Prison.'

DODDRIDGE, or DODERIDGE, Sir JOHN, was born at Barnstaple, Devonshire, 1555, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He was appointed a justice of the King's Bench 1613, and so continued till his death on 13 Sept., 1628. Besides 'The English Lawyer,' 'Compleat Parson,' and other legal works, he published 'The History of the ancient and moderne Estate of the Principality of Wales, Dutchy of Cornwall, and Earldome of Chester,' 1630; reprinted 1714.

DODDRIDGE, PHILIP, D.D., a nonconformist divine, born in London 26 June, 1702. He was educated under Mr. Jennings, at Kibworth, Leicestershire; and in 1722 became minister at that place, whence, in 1725, he removed to Market Harborough, where he opened an academy in 1729. Shortly after this he settled at Northampton as minister and tutor, and acquired there great reputation for his learning and candour. He published several works, the principal of which were his Family Expositor, 6 vols.; the Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul; the Life of Colonel Gardiner; and Sermons on the Evidences of Christianity. Intense application to study brought on a pulmonary complaint, in the hope of curing which, after trying the Bristol waters without effect, he went to Lisbon, where he died 26 Oct., 1751.

DODINGTON, BARTHOLOMEW, a famous Greek scholar, professor of that language at Cambridge, died 22 Aug., 1595.—Athen. Cantab.

DODINGTON, GEORGE BUBB, lord MELCOMBE. See MELCOMBE.

DODOENS, or DODONÆUS, REMBERT, professor of physic at Leyden, was born 1518, and died 10 March, 1585. He published some botanical works.

DODSLEY, ROBERT, was born at Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, 1703. He was originally apprentice to a stocking weaver, and afterwards became a footman. In this last capacity he published by subscription a volume of poems entitled 'The Muse in Livery,' the profits of which and of his dramatic piece called 'The Toy-shop,' enabled him to commence business as a bookseller in Pall Mall, where he published a number of excellent works, as the 'Preceptor,' in 2 vols. 8vo.; 'A Collection of Poems,' 6 vols. 8vo.; another of 'Old Plays,' 12 vols.; the paper called the 'World,' and the 'Annual Register,' of which Burke was the editor. It redounds to the credit of Doddsley that he also projected the dictionary executed by Johnson. His own works are—'The King and Miller of Mansfield,' and 'Sir John Cockle at Court,' dramatic entertainments; 'Clone,' a tragedy; the 'Economy of Human Life,' a moral piece of great popularity; a selection of Fables, and a miscellaneous collection of pieces in prose and verse, to which he gave the modest title of Trifles. He died at Durham 25 Sept., 1764.

DODSON, MICHAEL, a lawyer, born at Marlborough 21 Sept., 1732. He studied under his uncle, Sir Michael Foster, and after practising many years as a special pleader, was called to the bar in 1783. Died 13 Nov., 1799. Mr. Dodson published a new edition of Justice Foster's report of the trial of the Rebels. He also wrote a life of that Judge; and published a new translation of Isaiah with notes, 8vo.

DODSWORTH, ROGER, an antiquary, was born at Newton Grange, in the county of York, 24 July, 1585, and died in Aug., 1654. He assisted Dugdale in his Monasticon, and collected one hundred and twenty-two folio volumes in manuscript, illustrative of the antiquities of his native county, which are deposited in the Bodleian Library.

DODSWORTH, WILLIAM, a clergyman of the Anglican communion, who, after officiating for some time as minister of Margaret Street Chapel, London, joined the Church of Rome. He did not take holy orders in his adopted church, but after his conversion led a quiet and unobtrusive life as a layman. Died 10 Dec., 1861, aged 63. Among his works are 'Anglicanism considered in its results,' 1851; 'Popular Delusions concerning the Faith and Practice of Catholics,' 8vo., London, 1857; 'Popular Objections to Catholic Faith and Practice considered,' 8vo., London, 1858.

DODWELL, EDWARD, an English gentleman, author of 'A classical and topographical Tour through Greece, during the years 1801, 1805, and 1806,' 2 vols. 4to., London, 1818. He died at West Moulsey, Surrey, 14 Dec., 1828, aged 80.

DODWELL, HENRY, a learned writer, was born in Oct., 1641, at Dublin, where he received his education, and became fellow of Trinity College, but resigned it to avoid going into orders in 1666. He settled in London in 1674, and devoted himself chiefly to literary pursuits. In 1688 he was elected Camden's professor of history at Oxford, but lost that place at the Revolution for refusing the oaths to the new government. In 1706 he published a discourse on the natural mortality of the soul, which produced a warm controversy. Mr. Dodwell died at Shottesbrooke, Berkshire, 7 June, 1711. His other works are Two Letters of advice for Holy Orders; His Camdenian lectures: Account of the ancient Geographers; Dissertations on the ages of Phalaris and Pythagoras; An account of the Roman cycles; and various tracts.

DODWELL, HENRY, eldest son of the preceding, was bred a barrister. He imbibed sceptical principles, and in 1740 published a tract entitled 'Christianity not founded on argument,' in which he covertly attacked revealed religion. This was answered by his brother, also by Dr. Doddridge and other writers.

DODWELL, WILLIAM, D.D., youngest son of the first Henry Dodwell, was born at Shottesbrooke 17 June, 1709. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he proceeded master of arts in 1732. He became rector of Shottesbrooke, vicar of Bucklesbury, prebendary of Salisbury, and archdeacon of Berks. For his answer to Dr. Middleton on the miraculous powers, the university of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of divinity by diploma. Died 21 Oct., 1785. Besides several occasional sermons, he published Practical Discourses, 2 vols. The Sick Man's Companion, charges and controversial tracts.

DOES, JACOB VANDER, a painter, was born at Amsterdam 1623; died 1673. He had two sons, Jacob and Simon, both good artists: the first died 1693; the latter 1717.

DOGGET, THOMAS, an actor, was a native of Dublin. He played comic characters at Drury Lane with applause, and was joint manager of that house. He died at Eltham, Kent, 22 Sept., 1721. Being a zealous Whig, he left a sum to provide a coat and badge to be worn by six watermen, yearly on the first of August, the day of the accession of George I. He wrote a comedy called The Country Wake, afterwards altered to Flora, or Hob in the Well.

DOIG, DAVID, LL.D., a Scotch orientalist, born 1719; died 16 March, 1800.

DOLBEN, SIR GILBERT, eldest son of the archbishop, was educated at Oxford, and sat in the English parliament nearly thirty years. He was appointed a justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland; created a baronet 1704; and died 22 Oct., 1722, aged 64. He is chiefly remarkable for the assistance which he rendered to Dryden, when the poet was preparing his translation of Virgil. His only son, Sir John Dolben, became a prebendary of Durham; sub-dean of the Queen's chapel; and died 20 Nov., 1756, aged 73. He published a 'Concio ad Clerum.'

DOLBEN, JOHN, was born at Stanwick, Northamptonshire, 24 March, 1624-5, and educated at Christchurch, Oxford. He served as a volunteer in the royal army, and at the Restoration was rewarded with a canonry of Christchurch and the deanery of St. Paul's. In 1666 he was consecrated bishop of Rochester, and in 1683 translated to the archiepiscopal see of York. Died 11 April, 1686. Some of his sermons on public occasions are in print.

DOLCE, CARLO, a painter of Florence, born 1616; died 17 Jan., 1686. He chiefly excelled in devotional subjects, and his female figures in particular are exquisite.

DOLCE, LOUIS, a voluminous Italian writer both of prose and verse, was born at Venice 1508, and died 1569.

DOLET, ÉTIENNE, a French printer and writer, was born at Orleans 1509, and was burnt at Paris as an atheist 3 Aug., 1546.

DOLLOND, GEORGE, F.R.S., nephew of Peter Dollond, and his successor in business, died at Camberwell 13 May, 1852, aged 78. He was the inventor of the instrument called the Atmospheric Recorder.

DOLLOND, JOHN, F.R.S., was born in Spitalfields 10 June, 1706. He was bred a silk-weaver, and carried on that business for some years, but at last he commenced optician with his eldest son, Peter Dollond. In 1753 he communicated to the Royal Society an account of his improvement of refracting telescopes; and soon afterwards he presented to the same learned body his discovery of the micrometer, as applied to the reflecting telescope. He next defended Newton's doctrine of refraction against Euler, and the correspondence between them was printed in the 'Philosophical Transactions.' For his experiments on this subject he received the Copley medal, and in 1761 was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, but this honour he did not long enjoy, dying 30 Nov., in the same year.

DOLLOND, PETER, son of the preceding, was born about 1731, and died at Kennington 2 July, 1820. He communicated in 1765 a paper to the Royal Society on his improvement of telescopes; and in 1772 another on his additions to and alterations in Hadley's quadrant. In 1779 he gave an account of his equatorial instrument for correcting the errors arising from refraction in altitude; and in 1789 he published 'Some account of the discovery made by his father in refracting telescopes.'

DOLOMIEU, DEODAT GUI SYLVAIN TANCRÈDE DE GRATEL DE, a French mineralogist, born 24 June, 1750; died 26 Nov., 1801.

DOMAT, JEAN, a French jurist, born at Clermont, in Auvergne, 30 Nov., 1625; died at Paris 14 March, 1696.

DOMBEY, JOSEPH, a French physician, botanist, and traveller, born 1742; died 19 Feb., 1796.

DOMENICHINO, a celebrated painter, whose true name was Domenico Zampieri, was born at Bologna 1581, and died at Naples 15 April, 1641. His principal works are at Rome and Naples.

DOMINIC (St.), founder of the order of preaching friars, was born 1170, at Calahorra, in Old Castile, being the son of Felix de Guzman, a gentleman of an ancient and noble Spanish family. After studying at Palencia, he was appointed canon, and then archdeacon of Osma. Subsequently he became professor of divinity at Palencia, which office he resigned in order that he might go as missionary into Galicia, Castile, and Aragon. Visiting France with the bishop of Osma, he opposed the errors of the Albigenses with so much zeal, that the Pope made him inquisitor of Languedoc. It was at Toulouse that he laid the first foundation of his famous order, which was approved by Honorius III. in 1216. He died at Bologna 6 Aug., 1221, and was canonized by Gregory IX., 1235.

DOMINICUS À ROSARIO. See DALY.

DOMINIS, MARK ANTONIO DE, an ecclesiastical adventurer, born about 1566, at Arbe, an island off the coast of Illyria. He received his early education in the Illyrian College at Loreto, and at Padua. Having determined to devote his life to the service of the church, he entered the society of Jesus. In 1602 he was appointed bishop of Sènia, on the coast of Dalmatia, and two years later was translated to the archiepiscopal see of Spalatro, the chief city and one of the three metropolitan churches of that kingdom. Becoming acquainted with the Rev. William (afterwards Bishop) Bedell at Venice, he communicated to him his book, 'De Republica Ecclesiastica,' and in 1616 accompanied him to England, where he professed himself a convert to the Protestant faith, though before taking this step he resigned his see with its rich revenues to one of his relatives. Soon after his arrival here he was appointed dean of Windsor, master of the Savoy, and rector of West Ilsley, Berkshire; but, being disappointed in his ambitious expectations of obtaining the highest honours in the Anglican church, he left England in 1622, and proceeded to Rome, where he was received with much kindness by Gregory XV. The following year he published an exposition of the reasons of his return from England. In 1624 he was arrested and imprisoned in the castle of St. Angelo, where he died in Sept., 1624. Besides the work above mentioned, he wrote a treatise on optics, in which he first explained the phenomenon of the rainbow.—Life by Dr. Newland; Dublin Review, vol. 47.

DOMITIAN, TITUS FLAVIUS, a Roman emperor, succeeded to the imperial dignity, A.D. 81, and was assassinated A.D. 96. He was the last of the twelve Cæsars.

DONALDSON, JOHN, an artist, born at Edinburgh 1737. He painted portraits in miniature, and was distinguished also for his skillful imitations of the old engravers, which he executed with a pen so correctly as to deceive even connoisseurs. He published a volume of poems, and an 'Essay on the Elements of Beauty,' among his other studies, he cultivated chemistry, and discovered a method of preserving meat and vegetables during long voyages. Died 11 Oct., 1801.

DONALDSON, JOHN, a Scotch advocate, professor of the theory of music at Edinburgh, died 12 Aug., 1865.

DONALDSON, JOHN WILLIAM, D.D., a classical scholar, was educated in the university of London, and afterwards at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. After officiating for some time as master of the grammar school at Bury St. Edmunds, he settled at Cambridge as a classical 'coach,' and died 10 Feb., 1861, aged 48. He published the book of 'Jasher,' which exposed him to a large share of 'odium theologium'; 'Theatre of the Greeks,' 'New Cratylus,' &c.

DONALDSON, JOSEPH, author of the 'Eventful Life of a Soldier,' and 'Scenes and Sketches of a Soldier's Life in Ireland,' was a native of Glasgow, and died at Paris 5 Oct., 1830.—Anderson.

DONATELLO, or DONATO, a Florentine sculptor, born 1383; died 13 Dec., 1466.

DONATI, VITALIANO, an Italian physician, and writer on natural history, born 1717; died 1763.

DONATO, ALEXANDER, a Jesuit, was born at Sienna 1584, became professor of rhetoric at Rome, and died 23 April, 1640. He wrote Latin poems and works on antiquarian subjects, especially 'Roma Vetus ac Recens.'

DONATO, BERNARDIN, an Italian scholar, and classical editor; professor of Greek and Latin at Capo d'Istria; died about 1550.

DONATO, JEROME, a Venetian statesman and scholar, died 1513.

DONATUS, a schismatic bishop of Casa Nigra in Numidia. He is regarded by some as the author of the sect of Donatists, which took its rise in 311. Some writers, however, assert that the sect derived its name from Donatus, bishop of Carthage, who died about 356.

DONATIAN, a celebrated grammarian, who was tutor to St. Jerome, and lived at Rome 354. He left a work 'De Barbarismo et octo partibus orationis.' The commentaries on Virgil and Terence, which pass under his name, were not written by him.

DONCKER, or DONKER, PETER, a painter of Gouda, born 1622; died 1668.

DONDI, DONDUS, or DE DONDIS, JAMES, of Padua, was living in 1355. He was a noted physician, mathematician, and philosopher.

DONDUCCI, JOHN ANDREW, a Bolognese painter, born 1575; died 1665.

DONEAU, HUGUES, in Latin Donellus, a legal writer, was born in France 1527, but being obliged to leave that country on account of his attachment to the Protestant religion, he removed to Altorf, where he died 4 May, 1591. His Commentaries on the Civil Law were published at Nuremberg, 4 vols. 8vo., 1801.

DONELLAN, or DANIEL, NEHEMIAS, a native of the county of Galway, received his education at Cambridge, first in King's College, and afterwards in Catharine Hall (B.A. 1581-2). In 1595 he was made archbishop of Tuam, but he resigned his see 1609, and died soon afterwards. He was well versed in the Irish language, and besides translating the Communion Book into that tongue, he continued the version of the New Testament which had been commenced by John Kearney and Nicholas Walsh, bishop of Ossory, and which was completed by William O'Donnell, or Daniel, who was afterwards raised to the archbishopric of Tuam.—Athen. Cantab. iii. 15.

DONI, ANTHONY FRANCIS, an ecclesiastic of Florence, author of 'Dialoghi della Musica,' and other works, was born about 1503, and died Sept., 1574.

DONI, JOHN BAPTIST, a Florentine, who wrote a treatise on Music, in Latin, and some other works on the same subject in Italian. He also invented a musical instrument called the Lyra Barbellini. Born 1594; died 1647.

DONI D'ATTICHI, LOUIS, a French prelate, was born 1506. Cardinal Richelieu gave him the bishopric of Riez, from whence he was translated to Autun, where he died 1664. He wrote—History of the Minims; Life of Queen Joan, foundress of the Annonciades; Life of Cardinal de Berulle; History of the Cardinals.

DONIZETTI, GAETANO, an Italian musical composer, born 1798; died 8 April, 1848.

DONLEVY, ANDREW, an Irish priest, who was director or prefect of the Irish community at Paris, published 'An Teagasc Criosduidhe do reir ceasda agus freagartha. The Catechism, or Christian Doctrine, by way of Question and Answer,' 8vo., Paris, 1742. This scarce work is in Irish and English. To it is appended (pp. 487-498) an Abridgement of Christian Doctrine in Irish rhyme, compiled more than a century before by Bonaventure O'Heoghosa or O'Hussey. The book also contains a treatise by Donlevy on 'The Elements of the Irish Language.' It treats of orthography only, but is the best dissertation which had appeared on the subject up to that time.

DONNE, BENJAMIN, was born 1729 at Bideford, Devonshire, where his father and brother Abraham were eminent teachers of the mathematics. The latter was the friend and instructor of Mr. James Hervey, who preached his funeral sermon 1746. Benjamin succeeded his father, but afterwards removed to Bristol, where he died in June, 1798. He became master of mechanics to King George III., and published Mathematical Essays 1759; A Map of Devonshire from an actual survey, made by himself; The Accountant and Geometrician; The British Mariner's Assistant; Essays on Trigonometry; An Epitome of Natural Philosophy; A Treatise on Mechanical Geometry.

DONNE, JOHN, D.D., a divine and poet, born in London, of Catholic parents, 1573. He studied first at Hart Hall, Oxford, next at Trinity College, Cambridge, and lastly in Lincoln's Inn. At the age of nineteen he abjured the Catholic religion, and became secretary to the Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, but lost his situation for marrying secretly the niece of that nobleman's lady. He was also thrown into prison at the instigation of Sir George More, his wife's father; but soon obtained his release, on which he went in the suite of the English ambassador to France. After endeavouring in vain to obtain some civil appointment, he entered into orders, and was created doctor of divinity at Cambridge. In 1620 he was made dean of St. Paul's, to which was added the vicarage of St. Dunstan in the East. Died 31 March, 1631. His works are—The Pseudo-martyr; Sermons, 3 vols. folio; Biathanatos, a thesis on self-homicide; Poems; Letters; Problems, Essays, and Characters, published by his son. As a poet the dean ranks at the head of the metaphysical class. His satires possess great merit.

DONNE, JOHN, LL.D., son of the dean of St. Paul's, was educated at Westminster School and Christchurch, Oxford, but took his doctor's degree at Padua. He died in London 1662. Wood describes him as 'a man of sense and parts,' but says that his productions were 'frivolous trifles,' and himself 'an atheistical buffoon,' yet valued by King Charles the Second.

DONNELL, or DONNELLY, EDMUND, a Jesuit, was a native of Limerick. Pope Gregory XIII. sent him to confirm and propagate Catholicity in Ireland, at the time that Campian and Persons were proceeding to England with the same object. He was apprehended, however, soon after his arrival, and executed 30 Jan., 1581.

DONOUGHMORE.

DONOUGHMORE, JOHN HELY HUTCHINSON, second EARL OF, a distinguished military commander, was born 15 May, 1757, being the second son of John Hely Hutchinson, secretary of state for Ireland. When the expedition to Egypt was sent out, he was appointed second in command to Sir Ralph Abercrombie, and on Sir Ralph's death he succeeded to the chief command of the army. For his important services he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Hutchinson; and afterwards he succeeded his brother as earl of Donoughmore. Died 6 July, 1832.

DONOVAN, EDWARD, F.L.S., was born 1798, and died in London 1 Feb., 1837. He wrote 'The Natural History of British Insects;' 'The Natural History of Birds;' 'The Natural History of British Fishes;' and many other similar works.

DOODY, SAMUEL, F.R.S., a botanist, was born in Staffordshire, and settled in London as an apothecary. He also became superintendent and administrator of the gardens at Chelsea. In 1695 he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society, to whose Transactions he communicated some papers. The early editions of Ray's Synopsis were amplified by his labours, and he struck out a new path in botany, by leading to the study of the plants called Cryptogamia. Died 1706.

DOOLITTLE, THOMAS, a nonconformist, born at Kidderminster 1630, and educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He became minister of St. Alphage, London Wall, but in 1662 was ejected from that living for nonconformity. He then kept a private academy in Monkwell Street, Cripplegate, where he continued to preach, and trained up several ministers of considerable note. Died 24 May, 1707. His works on practical divinity were once very popular, especially his 'Treatise concerning the Lord's Supper,' and 'Call to delaying Sinners.'

DOPPELMAYER, JOHN GABRIEL, a German mathematician, born at Nuremberg 1671; died 1 Dec., 1750.

DOKAT, or DAURAT, JEAN, in Latin Auratus, a French poet, who died 1 Nov., 1588, aged above 80. He was Greek professor in the royal college at Paris.

DOKBAY, FRANÇOIS, a French architect, who died at Paris 1607.

DORCHESTER, CATHARINE SEDLEY, COUNTESS OF, daughter of Sir Charles Sedley, became the mistress of James duke of York, who raised her to the peerage, and continued to visit her after he had succeeded to the throne as James II. This gave great uneasiness to the queen, who employed her friends, and especially the priests, to persuade him to break off his amorous correspondence. These counsels at last induced him to forsake her. She died at Bath 26 Oct., 1717.

DORCHESTER, DUDLEY CARLETON, VISCOUNT, an eminent statesman, born in Oxfordshire 1573, and educated at Christchurch. After visiting different courts in a diplomatic character he was appointed ambassador to the United Provinces, where he bore a distinguished part in the synod of Dort. He returned to England 1625, and was created a peer the year following by the title of baron Carleton. Soon afterwards he was sent again to the Hague, and employed there in several important concerns. He was recalled 1628, created viscount Dorchester, and appointed secretary of state. Died 15 Feb., 1631-2. His letters, written during his embassy in Holland, have been printed.

DORMER.

DORCHESTER, GUY CARLETON, LORD, was born at Strabane, in Ireland, 3 Sept., 1724. Having entered upon the military life, he rose to be lieutenant-colonel in the guards in 1748. He served afterwards with General Amherst in America, and in 1762 distinguished himself at the taking of the Havannah, where he was wounded. In 1772 he obtained the rank of major-general, and was appointed governor of Quebec, which he defended successfully against the Americans. By his subsequent exertions he saved the whole of Canada, for which he was made a K.B. in 1776. The next year he became a lieutenant-general, and in 1781 was appointed commander-in-chief in America, where he remained till the termination of the war. In 1786 he was again nominated governor of Quebec, and at the same time created Lord Dorchester. Died 10 Nov., 1808.

DORIA, ANDREW, of Genoa, a celebrated admiral, born 1468; died 25 Nov., 1560.

DORIGNY, MICHEL, a French painter and engraver, born at St. Quentin 1617; died at Paris 1665. His son, Louis, was an historical painter, and died at Verona 1742, aged 88. Nicolas, the younger son of Michel, was also an artist, and engraved the cartoons at Hampton Court, for which he was knighted by George I. He died at Paris 1746, aged 89.

DORINGK, or THORINGK, MATTHIAS, a Franciscan friar, was born at Kirtz, in Brandenburg, and died about 1494. To him is ascribed the 'Miroir Historial,' commonly called the Chronicle of Nuremberg.

DORISLAUS, ISAAC, LL.D., a Dutchman, who came to England, and was appointed by Fuike Lord Brook to read lectures on history at Cambridge; but avowing republican principles, Dr. Cosin, the vice-chancellor, silenced him. Afterwards he became judge-advocate in the king's army, in the expedition against the Scotch, but quitted his majesty's service for that of the parliament, and assisted in drawing up and managing the charge against Charles I. In 1649 he was sent ambassador to the Hague, where he was stabbed on the 2nd of May in the same year, by some exiled royalists. The Parliament caused his body to be brought to England, and interred in Westminster Abbey, from whence it was taken at the Restoration, and buried in St. Margaret's churchyard.

DORMAN, THOMAS, D.D., a native of Berkhamstead, Hertfordshire, was educated at Oxford, first at New College, and next at All Souls, where he obtained a fellowship 1554. He afterwards took the degree of D.C.L. Being attached to the ancient faith, he left his country shortly after the accession of Queen Elizabeth, and fixed his residence first at Antwerp, then at Louvain, where he proceeded D.D., next at Douay, and finally at Tournay, where he died in 1572 or 1577. His works are—A Proof of certain Articles in Religion denied by Mr. Jewel, 4to., Antwerp, 1564; A Request to Mr. Jewel, that he keep his Promise, made by solemn Protestation in his late Sermon had at Paul's Cross, 8vo., London, 1567; and A Disproof of Mr. Alexander Nowel's Reproof, 4to., Antwerp, 1565.

DORMER, JOHN, an English Jesuit, who after filling the office of preacher at the court of James II., was appointed rector of his brethren at Lige 1680, and continued in that situation till 1691. Died 27 Jan., 1700. Besides several sermons preached before James II., he published, 'The

DORMER, ROBERT, EARL OF CARNARVON. See CARNARVON.

DORPIUS, MARTIN, a Dutch divine and author, the opponent, but afterwards the friend of Erasmus, was professor of philosophy at Louvaine, where he died 31 May, 1525.

DORRELL, WILLIAM, S. J. See DARRELL.

DORSAY, Count ALBRED, was born at Paris 1798, and served as an officer in the French army. The turning point in his career was his becoming acquainted with the earl of Blessington, and his fascinating countess. Byron's correspondence abounds with allusions to the count's accomplishments and wit, and to the equivocal position in which he was placed in the earl's family. He married a young daughter of the earl, but a separation followed soon afterwards; and on his lordship's decease he and the countess of Blessington removed to London, and settled at Gore House, where they became the centre of a society highly distinguished by taste, literature, and elegant accomplishment. The count, who was an admirable artist, died at Paris 4 Aug., 1852.

DORSCH, EVERARD, a famous engraver on gems, born at Nuremberg 1649; died 1712. His son, John Christopher (b. 1676; d. 1732), also excelled in the same line of art.

DORSET, ANNE CLIFFORD, COUNTESS OF. See CLIFFORD.

DORSET, CHARLES SACKVILLE, sixth EARL OF, was born 1637. In 1665 he volunteered on board the fleet, and the night before the engagement with the Dutch, wrote the famous song 'To all you ladies now on land.' Soon after this he was made a gentleman of the bedchamber by Charles II., who also sent him on several embassies. On the death of his uncle, Cranfield, earl of Middlesex, he came into possession of the estate, and the title was renewed to him by patent. In 1677 he succeeded his father as earl of Dorset. At the Revolution he was appointed lord chamberlain to William III., whom he accompanied to Holland. He died at Bath 19 Jan., 1705-6, leaving a son who was created a duke in 1720, and died in 1765.

DORSET, EDWARD SACKVILLE, EARL OF, K.G., was born 1590. In 1613 he fought a desperate duel near Brunen-op-Zoom, with Lord Bruce, of which an account may be seen in the third volume of Athene Cantabrigienses. He was one of the principal commanders sent in 1620 to assist Ferdinand, king of Bohemia, and was present at the memorable battle of Prague. The year following he was sent ambassador to the court of France. In 1624, on the death of his elder brother, he succeeded to the title and estate. He was in great favour with King Charles I., who appointed him president of the council and lord privy seal. Died 17 July, 1652.

DORSET, THOMAS SACKVILLE, EARL OF, K.G., son of Sir Richard Sackville, was born at Buckhurst, in the parish of Witham, Sussex, 1536. He was educated first at Oxford, and next at Cambridge, whence he removed to the Inner Temple. Here he wrote, in conjunction with Thomas Norton, the tragedy of 'Gorboduc' (sometimes entitled 'Ferrex and Porrex'), which was performed in the great hall at Christmas, and afterwards at Whitehall, before the queen, in 1561. This is the earliest regular drama in blank verse in our language. Sackville was also one of the principal writers in the 'Mirror for Magistrates.' On leaving the Temple he went abroad, and after his return was created Lord Buckhurst, 1567. In 1587 he was sent on an embassy to the United Provinces. After this he was installed a knight of the garter, and chosen chancellor of Oxford. On the death of Burghley he was appointed lord treasurer, and in March, 1603-4, was created earl of Dorset. Died 19 April, 1608.—Athen. Cantab.

DOUGLAS.

DOSSI, Dosso, a painter of Ferrara, who died about 1560.

DOUBLEDAY, EDWARD, an English naturalist, who died in London 14 Dec., 1849, aged 38. He was connected with the zoological department of the British Museum.

DOUCE, FRANCIS, F.S.A., an English antiquary, died in London 30 March, 1834, at. 77. He wrote 'Illustrations of Shakspeare and Ancient Manners;' 'A Dissertation upon the series of beautiful designs known by the title of the Dance of Death;' and some papers in the 'Archæologia;' and 'Gentleman's Magazine.' He left his MS. collections to the British Museum, with an injunction that the box containing them should not be opened till the year 1900.

DOUCIN, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, who wrote a History of Nestorianism, a History of Jansenism, and some pieces against the Jansenists. Born 1652; died 21 Sept., 1726.

DOUDAL, JAMES, an Irish merchant, who was executed at Exeter 13 Aug., 1598, for denying Queen Elizabeth's spiritual supremacy.

DOUGALL, JOHN, a Scotchman, who settled in London as a man of letters, and died, extremely poor, in 1822. Among his works are 'Military Adventures;' 'The Modern Preceptor;' and 'The Cabinet of Arts.'

DOUGLAS. See ANGUS, EARL OF.

DOUGLAS, Admiral Sir CHARLES, born in Scotland, and entered into the Dutch service, which he quitted for the English navy. When the American war commenced he was appointed commodore of a squadron in the gulf of St. Lawrence, where he obtained great reputation. In 1787 he was made rear-admiral, and died in 1789.

DOUGLAS, DAVID, a botanist and traveller, born near Perth, in Scotland, 1799; died in the island of Hawaii 12 July, 1834.

DOUGLAS, GAWIN a poet and bishop, was the younger son of Archibald earl of Angus, and born at Brechin 1474 or 1475. He received his education, first in his own country, and next at Paris. On his return to Scotland he was made provost of the church of St. Giles, at Edinburgh, and afterwards abbat of Aberbrothick. He was also nominated to the archbishopric of St. Andrew's, but this dignity he never obtained, owing to the refusal of the Pope to confirm the appointment. He was, however, advanced to the bishopric of Dunkeld, which diocese he improved by many public works, but the violence that prevailed obliged him at last to retire to England, where Henry VIII. granted him a pension. He died of the plague at London in April, 1522. Bishop Douglas translated the Æneid of Virgil, with the additional book of Maphæus, into Scottish verse, printed at London in 1553, 4to. His other works are a poem called 'The Palace of Honour,' 4to.; another, entitled 'King Hart,' printed in 1756. His Virgil was reprinted at Edinburgh, in folio, with a glossary, in 1710.

DOUGLAS, SIR HOWARD, bart., an English general, born at Gosport, Hampshire, 1776; died at Tunbridge Wells 8 Nov., 1861. He published some works on Naval Gunnery and Steam Fleets.

DOUGLAS, JAMES, earl of Morton. See MORTON.

DOUGLAS, JAMES, earl of Morton and Aberdeen. See MORTON.

DOUGLAS, JAMES, a Scotch nobleman, commissioned by Robert Bruce to go on a crusade, to carry his heart to the Holy Land. Douglas set out after the king's death, 1327; but he was slain 1331.

DOUGLAS, JAMES, M.D., an eminent anatomist, born in Scotland 1675. He settled in London as a practitioner in midwifery and teacher of anatomy, and died 2 Aug., 1742. He wrote Myographiæ comparatæ Specimen, or a comparative Description of all the Muscles; Bibliographiæ Anatomicæ Specimen; A Description of the Peritonæum; History of the Lateral Operation for the Stone; and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He had a curious library, wholly consisting of editions and translations of Horace, of which a catalogue is given by Watson in his translation of that author. This Horatian collection was originally formed by Dr. Mead, and was enlarged by Dr. Douglas, of whose executors it was purchased by the Chevalier D'Eon, whose administrator sold it by public auction, with the Chevalier's other books, in 1813.

DOUGLAS, JAMES, a divine and antiquary, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge; became rector of Middleton, Sussex, and chaplain in ordinary to the Prince Regent; and died 5 Nov., 1819. His chief work is 'Nenia Britannica; or, a Sepulchral History of Great Britain, from the earliest period to its general Conversion to Christianity,' folio, London, 1793.

DOUGLAS, JOHN, F.R.S., brother of James Douglas, M.D., was surgeon of the Westminster Infirmary. He wrote some books against Cheselden's Anatomy; and others in opposition to Chamberlen, Chapman, and Smellie, on Midwifery. His best performance is 'An Account of Mortifications and of the Effects of Bark.' Died 25 June, 1743.

DOUGLAS, JOHN, a learned prelate, born at Pittenweem, in Fifeshire, 1721. He was educated at the school of Dunbar, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he became a student of Balliol College, and there took his degree of master of arts. He was a chaplain in the guards at the battle of Fontenoy, and afterwards travelled with Lord Pulteney, by virtue of which connection he obtained the livings of Eaton Constantine, Uppington, and High Ercal, in Shropshire. In 1751 he detected the imposition of Lauder, in regard to Milton. In 1754 he was equally successful in refuting Hume on Miracles, and in 1756 he exposed the frauds of Archibald Bower. In 1758 he took his doctor's degree, and in 1762 was made canon of Windsor. The earl of Bath left him his library, which the doctor sold for one thousand pounds to General Pulteney, who, at his death, bequeathed it to him again, when it was once more redeemed for the same sum by Sir William Pulteney. In 1764 Dr. Douglas exchanged his country livings for the rectories of St. Austin and St. Faith, London, and in 1776 the canonry of Windsor for one of St. Paul's. In 1787 he was made bishop of Carlisle, the next year dean of Windsor, and in 1791 he was translated to Salisbury. Died 18 May, 1807. Besides his 'Criterion on Miracles,' of which he published a new edition just before his death, the bishop wrote several tracts, and was the editor of Cook's Voyages, to which he prefixed an admirable introduction. He also contributed assistance to Sir John Dalrymple, Lord Hardwicke, and others, in their literary works.

DOUGLAS, JOHN, an English prelate of the Roman communion, was appointed vicar-apostolic of the London district 1790, being consecrated bishop of Centurie, in partibus, on the 19th of December in that year. Died 8 May, 1812.

DOUGLAS, SIR ROBERT, a Scotch baronet, who succeeded his brother, Sir William Douglas, in 1764. He compiled 'The Peerage of Scotland,' which first appeared in 1764. There is a vastly improved edition by John Philip Wood, 2 vols. folio, Edinburgh, 1813.

DOUGLAS, SYLVESTER, lord Glenberrie. See GLENBERVIE.

DOUGLAS, WILLIAM, a miniature painter, born in Fifeshire, 14 April, 1780; died at Edinburgh 30 Jan., 1832.

DOUJAT, JEAN, a French lawyer, was one of the editors of the Delphin classics, and author of numerous works on philosophy and the canon law. Born 1609; died 1688.

DOUSA, JANUS, a learned Dutchman, author of a History of Holland, Notes on Classic Authors, and other works, was born 1545, and died 12 Oct., 1604. He had four sons, all men of learning, and good writers, viz., Janus (died 1596), George, Francis, and Theodore.

D'OUVILLY, GEORGE GERBIER, an English dramatist, of whom nothing is known except that he wrote a tragi-comedy of considerable merit, entitled 'The False Favourite Disgrac'd, and the Reward of Loyalty,' 12mo., 1657.

DOUW, GERARD, an eminent painter, born at Leyden 1613; died about 1674.

DOVE, HENRY, D.D., received his education at Westminster School, and was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge, 1638. He became archdeacon of Richmond 1678; was chaplain to Charles II., James II., and William and Mary; and died 11 March, 1694. He published a 'Concio ad Clerum,' and several single sermons.

DOVE, JOHN, D.D., was born in Surrey about 1561, and educated at Oxford. He became rector of St. Mary's, Aldermary, London, and died 1618. He published some sermons; 'A Defence of Church Government, as established in the Church of England'; the 'Conversion of Solomon,' being a commentary on the Book of Canticles; and some tracts against the Catholic Church.

DOVE, NATHANIEL, an English penman, who wrote the Progress of Time, or Verses upon the Seasons and Months, in 16 plates. Died 1754, aged 44.

DOVER, GEORGE JAMES WELBORE AGAR ELLIS, LORD, was born 14 Jan., 1797, being son of Henry Welbore, afterwards Viscount Clifden. He received his education at Christ Church, Oxford; represented various constituencies in the House of Commons; was created a peer 1831; and died 10 July, 1833. His lordship was a man of literary attainments, and a munificent patron of the fine arts. He wrote 'The true History of the State Prisoner commonly called the Iron Mask,' whom he demonstrated to have been Count Matthioli; Historical Inquiries respecting the character of Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon; Life of Frederick the Great. He also edited The Ellis Correspondence, and Horace Walpole's Letters to Sir Horace Mann.

DOVISI, BERNARD, or Bernard of Bibiena, was born at that place 1470. Lorenzo de Medici appointed him one of his secretaries; and he had the honour of instructing John de Medici, afterwards Leo X., who made him a cardinal, and employed him in several embassies. Died 1520. He wrote a comedy entitled 'La Calandria.'

DOW, lieutenant-colonel ALEXANDER, a Scotchman, wrote, among other things, 'The History of Hindoostan, from the earliest Account of Time to the Complete Settlement of the Empire under Aurungzebe,' 3 vols. 4to., London, 1708-72. Died 1779. Mr. Dow formed a new language and alphabet. This language and the characters used in its notation were so easy that a female of his acquaintance acquired the knowledge of them in three weeks, and constantly corresponded with him therein.

DOWLAND, JOHN, an English musician, born 1592; died about 1615.

DOWLEY, GEORGE, an English priest of the Roman communion, who wrote 'A Dialogue concerning the chief Points of Christian Religion,' 8vo., 1616.

DOWNES, JOHN, book-keeper and prompter of the Duke's Company of Players from 1602 to 1706, is remembered as the author of 'Roscius Anglicanus, or an Historical Review of the Stage, 1641-1500,' 8vo., London, 1708. It is reprinted in Waldron's Literary Museum, 1789.

DOWNHAM, GEORGE, bishop of Derry, was the son of William Downham, bishop of Chester. He was born at Chester, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. He was advanced to the episcopal dignity 1616, and died 17 April, 1634. He wrote a Treatise concerning Antichrist, and other theological works.

DOWNHAM, JOHN, brother of the bishop of Derry, was educated at Cambridge, where he proceeded B.D. He became a minister in London, and died 1644. His principal work is 'The Christian Warfare.'

DOWNING, CALVBUTE, an English divine, who, being disappointed in his ambitious views, joined the Parliament party in 1640, and preached some violent sermons against the government. Born 1609; died 1644.

DOWNING, Sir GEORGE, son of the preceding, was, according to Wood, a sinner with all times and changes, skilled in the common cant, and a preacher occasionally. He was sent by Cromwell to Holland as resident there. About the time of the Restoration he espoused the king's cause, and was knighted, and elected M.P. for Morpeth, in 1661. Afterwards he became secretary to the treasury and a commissioner of customs. He was created a baronet of East Hatley, in Cambridgeshire, 1663; and died 1684.

DOWNING, Sir GEORGE, bart., founder of Downing College, Cambridge, died 10 June, 1749. The college was established by royal charter 22 Sept., 1800.

DOWNMAN, HUGH, M.D., a physician and poet, born at Newton St. Cyres, Devonshire, 1740, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, after which he entered into orders, but quitted the church in order to study physic, in which profession he attained considerable eminence. It may be mentioned that he took his M.A. degree at Cambridge. He died at Exeter 23 Sept., 1809. Dr. Downman published The Land of the Muses, a poem; Editha, or the Siege of Exeter, a tragedy; Infancy, a poem; Poems on various Subjects. He was also the author of some curious articles in the 'Essays by a Society of Gentlemen at Exeter,' 1790.

DOYLE, JAMES WARREN, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, was born 1786, and educated in the university of Coimbra, in Portugal, from whence he was transferred to the professorship of theology in the college of Carlow. In 1819 he was appointed bishop of Kildare and Leighlin. He was an active politician and polemical writer, most of his productions being signed 'J. K. L.' He died at Carlow 15 June, 1834, and was buried in the magnificent cathedral which had been erected under his auspices and by his exertions.—Life by W. J. Fitzpatrick.

DOYLE, JOHN COLSTON, a vocalist and musical composer, was a native of Bristol, and died at Brompton, Middlesex, 26 Sept., 1813, æt. 40.

D'OYLY, GEORGE, D.D., was born 31 Oct., 1778, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow. In 1811 he was appointed Christian advocate. He obtained in 1815 the vicarage of Herne Hill, Kent, which he resigned the same year for the rectory of Buxted, Sussex, vacated by the death of his father; but in 1820 he exchanged that living for the rectories of Lambeth, Surrey, and Sundridge, Kent. Died 8 Jan., 1846. Besides frequent contributions to the Quarterly Review, he wrote Letters to the Right Hon. Sir William Drummond, relative to his Observations on parts of the Old Testament in his Ædipus Judaicus; Two Discourses preached before the University of Cambridge on the Doctrine of a Particular Providence and Modern Unitarianism; an annotated edition of the Bible, in conjunction with Richard Mant, afterwards bishop of Down, Connor and Dromore; Life of Archbishop Sancroft; Sermons.

D'OYLY, Sir JOHN, was born 1774, and educated at Westminster School, and next at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he gained a fellowship. On leaving the university he went into the Ceylon civil service, and by the administrative talents which he displayed there, contributed mainly to the subjugation and final capture of the king of Kandy, and to the firm establishment of the British rule in that island. For his services he was created a baronet 27 July, 1821. Died 25 May, 1824.—At. West.

DOYLY, SAMUEL, received his education at Westminster School, whence in 1700 he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1703; M.A. 1707). He was presented to the vicarage of St. Nicholas, Rochester, 1710, where he died in May, 1748. He is described as a man of taste and learning, but his person was so corpulent that in 1741 he was unable to attend his duty as chaplain to the army, as no horse could carry him! He published 'Christian Eloquence, in Theory and Practice, made English from the French original,' 1718; and (in conjunction with John Colston) a translation of Father Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible.

DRABICIUS.

DRABICIUS, NICHOLAS, a Protestant visionary and pretended prophet, was born at Strassnitz, in Moravia, about 1597, and was beheaded by the Austrians at Presburg 17 July, 1671.

DRACO, an Athenian legislator, famous for his rigid administration of justice B.C. 621.

DRAKE, Sir FRANCIS, was born near Tavistock, Devonshire, in or about 1545. After serving under his relation, Sir John Hawkins, he obtained the command of two ships, with which he sailed to the West Indies in 1570. He made another expedition in 1572, and gained considerable advantages over the Spaniards. He next served under the earl of Essex in Ireland, where he distinguished himself so much by his bravery that Sir Christopher Hatton introduced him to Queen Elizabeth. In 1577 he made another voyage to the Spanish settlements in America, and sailed as far as forty-eight degrees south latitude, calling the country which he discovered New Albion. He then went to the East Indies, and having doubled the Cape of Good Hope, returned to Plymouth in 1580, which voyage round the world took up two years and ten months. On his arrival at Deptford Queen Elizabeth went on board his ship, where she dined, and afterwards conferred on Drake the honour of knighthood. In 1587 he made an attack upon Cadiz, and destroyed a quantity of shipping. The year following he commanded as vice-admiral, under Lord Howard, and was instrumental in the destruction of the Spanish armada. After this he went to the West Indies with Sir John Hawkins, but the two commanders disagreeing in their plans, little was done, in consequence of which Drake became melancholy, and died off Nombre de Dios 28 Jan., 1595-6.

DRAKE, FRANCIS, F.R.S., F.S.A., an eminent antiquary and surgeon at York, who published 'Eboracum,' or the History and Antiquities of that City, 1736. Died 1771, æt. 76.

DRAKE, JAMES, M.D., F.R.S., a physician and political writer, born at Cambridge 1607, and educated there, after which he removed to London. His 'History of the last Parliament of King William,' 1702, was considered so severe that he was prosecuted by the attorney-general, but acquitted. In 1704, upon the rejection of the bill to prevent occasional conformity, he ventured with Poley, M.P. for Ipswich, to publish 'The Memorial of the Church of England,' which highly offended Godolphin and the House of Commons, who offered a reward for the discovery of the author, who, however, escaped detection. In 1706 he was prosecuted for the publication of the 'Mercurius Politicus,' a newspaper which severely reflected upon government, and though acquitted through a flaw in the information, he took to heart the asperity of his persecutors, and falling into a fever, died at Westminster 2 March, 1707. Besides the above works, he wrote 'The Sham Lawyer,' a comedy; an English translation of Herodotus, never published; and A New System of Anatomy.

DRAKE, NATHAN, M.D., an essayist, was born at York 15 Jan., 1766, and graduated at Edinburgh 1789. After a short residence at Billericay, in Essex, and at Sudbury, in Suffolk, he finally settled, in 1792, as a physician at Hadeleigh, in the latter county, where he died 7 June, 1836. Of his literary works the best known are—The Speculator, a periodical paper, written in conjunction with Dr. Edward Ash, 1790; Poems, 1793; Literary Hours; Essays illustrative of the Tatler, Spectator, DRANT, THOMAS, a poet and divine, was a native of Lincolnshire. He was educated at Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.D. 1560, in which year he obtained a prebend in the church of St. Paul, and was appointed divinity reader at St. Paul's. He afterwards became a prebendary of Chichester; rector of Slinfold, Sussex; and archdeacon of Lewes. Died 17 April, 1578. He left an unfinished translation of Homer into English verse; 'Horace his arte of Poetrie, pistles, and Satyrs, Englished,' 1567; 'Poemata varia et externa;' Sermons, &c.—Athen. Cantab.

DRAPER, Sir WILLIAM, an English general, was born at Bristol 1721, and educated at Eton, from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge; but preferring a military life, he went to the East Indies, where, in 1760, he rose to the rank of colonel. In 1761 he was at the taking of Belleisle; but in 1763 went again to the East, and, in conjunction with Admiral Cornish, reduced Manila, where they consented to accept a ransom for the fort of four millions of dollars, which the Spanish government never paid. In 1769 the colonel, who was then knight of the bath, appeared in print as the antagonist of Junius in defence of the marquis of Granby. In 1779, being now a general, he was appointed lieutenant-governor of Minorca; on the surrender of which place he preferred charges against Governor Murray, for which he was directed by the court to make an apology to that officer. Sir William died at Bath 8 Jan., 1787.

DRAYTON, MICHAEL, was born at Atherston, Warwickshire, in 1563. He received his education at Oxford, but never took a degree. In 1593 he published his pastorals, entitled 'The Shepherd's Garland,' which were followed by his poems of 'The Baron's Wars,' and 'England's Heroical Epistles.' On the accession of James I. Drayton addressed to him a congratulatory poem, which his majesty treated with great indignity. In 1613 he published the first part of his Poly-Olbion, or a Description of England, which Selden illustrated with notes. This work was reprinted in 1622, with the second part. In 1627 he published another volume of poems; and in 1630 a third in quarto. He died in 1631, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

DREBBEL, CORNELIUS VAN, an alchemist, born at Alkmaar 1572; died at London 1634. His principal work is 'De Naturâ Elementorum.' He is said to have invented the microscope and thermometer.

DRELINCOURT.

DRELINCOURT, CHARLES, was born at Sedan 1535, and died at Paris 3 Nov., 1669. He wrote a number of books, the best known of which is entitled Consolations against the Fears of Death, which has gone through numerous editions. Laurerz, his eldest son, was bred to the ministry, and died in 1681, aged 50. He published Christian Sonnets and Sermons. Charles, the third son, was a physician, and professor of anatomy at Leyden, where he died in 1697. He wrote Apologia Medica; De Arthritide, &c.

DRESSER, MATTHEW, a German, who became professor of rhetoric and history at Jena, and in 1581 accepted the chair of rhetoric at Leipsic. He was the author of several learned works. Born 24 Aug., 1536; died 5 Oct., 1607.

DREUX DU RADIER, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French advocate, who abandoned the bar for the pursuits of literature, and became the author of various works. Born 10 May, 1714; died 1 March, 1780.

DREVEY, PIERRE, an eminent engraver at Paris. His son, also named Pierre, was equally eminent in the same profession. They both died in 1739; the father aged 75, the son 42.

DREW, SAMUEL, was born of humble parents at St. Austell, Cornwall, 3 March, 1765, and brought up as a shoemaker. He followed his trade for some years, but having acquired a considerable stock of learning, ultimately became a Methodist preacher, and abandoned his business altogether. He resided for some years in Liverpool, and died 29 March, 1833. His works include a refutation of Paine's Age of Reason; Essay on the Immateriality and Immortality of the Soul; Life of Dr. Coke; Treatise on the Being and Attributes of God; History of Cornwall. He edited the Imperial Magazine, and superintended all the works issued from the Caxton press.

DREXELIUS, JEREMIAH, a celebrated Jesuit, was born at Augsburg 1581; was preacher at the court of Maximilian, elector of Bavaria, for twenty-three years; and died at Munich 19 April, 1638. He wrote 'Considerations upon Eternity,' and a number of other curious theological treatises, several of which have been translated into English. His 'Aurofodina' is an elaborate and instructive treatise on the art of keeping commonplace books. It has been abridged by Horne, bishop of Norwich.

DRIDONS, in Latin DRIEDO, JOHN, a learned divinity professor of Louvain, who distinguished himself as an opponent of the Reformation. He published several theological works, and died 4 Aug., 1535.

DROLLINGER, CHARLES FREDERICK, privy councillor to the margrave of Baden Durlach, was admired as a poet and a scholar. Born 26 Dec., 1684; died 1 June, 1742.

DROUAI, HUBERT, a French painter, born 1699; died 9 Feb., 1767.

DROUET, ETIENNE FRANÇOIS, a laborious French editor, born 8 Nov., 1715, at Paris, where he died 11 Sept., 1779.

DRUMMOND, JAMES, Earl of Perth. See PERTH.

DRUMMOND, JAMES, an indefatigable botanist, was a native of Scotland, and died in Cuba 1835.

DRUMMOND, ROBERT HAY, second son of Lord Kinnoul, was born 10 Nov., 1711, at London, and educated at Westminster School and Christchurch, Oxford. In 1736 he took orders, and the next year he was made king's chaplain. The influence of his relations insured his promotion; he became prebendary of Westminster; in 1748 bishop of St. Asaph; in 1761 bishop of Salisbury; and soon after was translated to York. He published six occasional sermons, besides a sensible letter on theological study. Died 10 Dec. 1776.

DRUMMOND, WILLIAM, a Scotch poet, was the son of Sir John Drummond, of Hawthornden, where he was probably born 13 Dec., 1585. He was destined for the law, but Parnassus had more charms for him than the courts. In his retirement at Hawthornden he wrote several beautiful poems; but the death of a lady to whom he was about to be married affected him so much that he went abroad, where he resided some years, and then returned to his own country. He wrote his History of the Seven Kings of the Name of James, and several other pieces in favour of the Royalist party. Died 4 Dec., 1649. There have been several editions of his Poems. His notes of his Conversations with Ben Jonson are printed in one of the volumes issued by the Shakspeare Society.

DRUMMOND, SIR WILLIAM, sat for many years in the House of Commons; was sent as envoy extraordinary to the court of Naples; was afterwards ambassador at the Ottoman court; and died at Rome 29 March, 1828. Sir William, who was a profound and elegant scholar, published A Review of the Governments of Sparta and Athens; a translation of Persius's Satires; Academical Questions; Herculaniensis, or Archaeological and Philological Dissertations, containing a MS. found among the ruins of Herculaneum; Odin, a poem; Origines, or Remarks on the Origin of several Empires, States, and cities; and 'Ædipus Judaicus,' in which an attempt was made to show that certain parts of the Old Testament were allegories. See D'OVLV, GEORGE.

DRUMMOND, WILLIAM ABERNETHY, D.D., a Scotch episcopalian, was made bishop of Brechin 1787, and shortly afterwards elected to the see of Edinburgh, which he held till 1805. He wrote several small tracts, and was a good deal engaged in theological controversy, both with Protestants and Catholics.—Anderson.

DRUMMOND, WILLIAM HAMILTON, D.D., a Unitarian minister, who died at Dublin 16 Oct., 1803, aged 87. Besides a number of religious works he published 'The Battle of Trafalgar, a heroic poem,' 1806; 'The Giant's Causeway, a poem,' 1811; 'The Pleasurs of Benevolence, a poem,' 1835; 'Ancient Irish Minstrelsy,' 1852. He also wrote many of the English metrical translations of Irish ballads in Hardiman's Irish Minstrelsy.

DRURY, DREW, a jeweller in the Strand, London, better known as a naturalist and collector of curiosities, died Jan., 1804. He wrote 'Illustrations of Natural History,' 3 vols.

DRURY, JOSEPH, a divine and classical scholar, master of Harrow School 1785-1805, was born in London 1750, and died 9 January, 1834.—At West: Athen. Cantab.

DRURY, ROBERT, a Jesuit, was a native of Middlesex, and was admitted into his order at Rome 1608. On receiving holy orders he was sent to the English mission, where his religious virtues and his commanding talents conciliated general esteem and admiration. While preaching in the afternoon of 5 Nov., 1623, at Hunsdon Hall, Blackfriars, London, the residence of the French ambassador, to a congregation of three hundred persons, the floor suddenly gave way, and this zealous Father, with nearly eighty of his hearers, unfortunately perished. This tragical event obtained the name of 'The Fatal Vespers.' The uncharitable bigotry of the times considered this calamity as a judgment on the Catholics, 'so much was God offended with their detestable idolatry!' There is a book entitled 'F. Robert Drury's Reliquary,' 1624, containing his prayers and devotions.—Dodd; Oliver.

DRURY, ROBERT, a native of Leicestershire, was shipwrecked 1762, in the Degrave East Indiaman, on the south of Madagascar, where he remained in slavery fifteen years. On his return he published, 1729, an interesting account of that country.

DRURY, WILLIAM, an English gentleman, who, in or about 1616, was imprisoned on account of his attachment to the Catholic religion. On obtaining his release through the intercession of Count Gondomar, the Spanish ambassador, he went to Douay, and began to teach poetry and rhetoric in the English college there in Oct., 1618. He wrote three Latin plays, which were exhibited with great applause, first privately in the refectory of the college, and again in the open court or quadrangle before all the principal persons of the town and university. Their titles are 'Alvredus, sive Alfreddus. Tragicæ-Comediæ;' 'Mors: Comediæ;' 'Reparatus, sive Depositum. Tragicæ-Comediæ.' They were printed together in a 12mo. volume, the second edition of which appeared at Douay 1628.

DRUSIUS, JOHN, a Protestant, born at Oudenard 28 June, 1550. He was educated at Ghent and Louvain, and on his father's settlement in England went to Cambridge, where he learnt Hebrew. He was afterwards professor of the oriental languages at Oxford. He next studied law at Louvain, and settled as professor of oriental languages at Leyden, whence he removed, in 1585, to Francker, where he filled the professor's chair till his death, 12 Feb., 1616. His works show that he was very learned in the Hebrew tongue and in Jewish antiquities.

DRUTHMAR, CHRISTIAN, a French monk of the ninth century, who wrote a commentary on St. Matthew, which is said to contain a denial of the doctrine of transubstantiation.

DRYANDER. See ENCINAS.

DRYANDER, JOHN, an anatomical writer, died at Marpurg, where he was professor, 20 Dec., 1560.

DRYANDER, JONAS, a naturalist, born in Sweden 1748. He came to England with Dr. Solander, and was patronised by Sir Joseph Banks, at whose house he died in Oct., 1810. He was librarian to the Royal Society, and a vice-president of the Linnæan Society. The catalogue of his patron's valuable library is a standing monument of his abilities.

DRYDEN, CHARLES, the favourite son of the poet, was born at Charlton, Wiltshire, 1666, and after a preliminary education at Westminster, removed to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1692 he went to Italy, and by the interest of Cardinal Howard became chamberlain of the household to Pope Innocent XII. He returned to England 1698, and was accidentally drowned near Windsor 20 Aug., 1704. He had a good poetical turn, and published a translation of the seventh satire of Juvenal, and several detached pieces.—Al. West.

DUBOIS.

DRYDEN, JOHN, was born at Aldwinkle, Northamptonshire, 9 Aug., 1631, and educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected to Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1653-4; M.A. 1668). On the death of Cromwell he paid respect to his memory in some 'Heroic Stanzas;' and he was equally complaisant to Charles II. on his Restoration, in a poem entitled 'Astræa Redux.' In 1661 he produced his first play, 'The Duke of Guise,' which was followed by a number of tragedies and comedies. In 1667 came out his poem of 'Annus Mirabilis,' for which he was made poet-laureate and historiographer-royal. His popularity, however, excited envy, and the duke of Buckingham exhibited him on the stage in the character of 'Bays,' in his comedy of the Rehearsal. Dryden suffered also a severe castigation in 1679 for his share in a satire on the earl of Rochester and the duchess of Portsmouth, who hired ruffians to cudgel him on his return from the coffee-house. In 1681 he published his 'Absalom and Achitophel,' a poem against the associates of the duke of Monmouth. This was followed by the 'Medal,' a poem equally caustic on the earl of Shaftesbury. On the accession of King James he embraced the Catholic religion, of which he published a masterly vindication in the poem of 'The Hind and Panther.' At the Revolution he lost his places, but not his powers, which were exercised with great vigilance in a translation of Virgil; another, of Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting; his Ode on Alexander's Feast; and his 'Fables in Verse.' He died 1 May, 1700, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Lady Elizabeth Howard, by whom he had three sons. The best edition of Dryden's works is that of Sir Walter Scott, in 18 vols., 8vo., Edinburgh, 1821.

DRYDEN, JOHN, son of the preceding, was born 1667, and educated at Westminster School, whence he was elected to a scholarship at Christchurch, Oxford, though he never matriculated as a member of the university, owing, no doubt, to his having become a member of the Roman Church. He followed his brother Charles to Rome, and officiated as his deputy in the Pope's household. He made a tour through Sicily and Malta, with Mr. Cecil, from 19 Oct., 1700, until 28 Jan., 1701, and died at Rome shortly after his return. The journal which he kept during his tour was published 1776; and he was likewise author of 'The Husband his own Cuckold,' a comedy.

DRYDEN, JONATHAN, a cousin of the poet, was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards became a canon residentiary of York. He is the supposed author of a translation of Appian, which appeared in 1679. Died 25 Aug., 1702, aged 63.

DRYSDALE, JOHN, D.D., was born at Kirkcaldy, in Scotland, 29 April, 1718. In 1748 he was presented to the church of Kirkliston, whence he removed to Lady Yester's church, Edinburgh. In 1765 he was appointed king's chaplain for Scotland, and in 1773 was moderator of the general assembly. Died 16 June, 1788. His Sermons were published in 2 vols. 8vo., 1793, by Andrew Dalzel, who has prefixed an account of the author's life and character.

DUBARRY, MARIE JEANNE GOMART DE VAUBERNIER, COMTESSE, the mistress of Louis XV., was born 1744; and executed by order of the revolutionary tribunal 6 Nov., 1793.

DUBOIS.

DUBOIS, DOROTHEA, daughter of Annesley, afterwards earl of Anglesea, married a musician, and endeavoured by her writings to reclaim her rights from her father, who had disowned her as his child. She wrote The Divorce, a musical entertainment; and Theodore, a novel, 2 vols., 1770, in which she delineates her history. Died 1774.

DU BOIS, EDWARD, an English barrister and man of letters, died 10 Jan., 1850, æt. 76. In 1808 he published 'My Pocket Book, or Hints for a right merry and conceited Tour in Quarto,' a satire on Sir John Carr's manufactured books of Travels. This was so well received that it passed through three editions immediately. The only works published by him with his name were 'The Wreath;' 'Old Nick,' a satirical story; 'The Decameron of Boccaccio, with remarks on his Life and Writings,' 1804, 2 vols.; and an edition of Francis's Horace, 4 vols., 1807.

DUBOIS, GERARD, a French priest of the oratory, who completed Le Comte's Ecclesiastical Annals of France, and wrote a History of the Church of Paris. Born 1620; died 15 July, 1660.

DUBOIS, GUILLAUME, a French prelate, born 6 Sept., 1656. Originally but a valet at Paris, he rose to consequence by the influence of Orleans, to whom he was reader. In 693 he obtained the rich abbey of St. Just, and became councillor of state, and in 1717 came as ambassador to England to sign the Triple Alliance. He was next minister and secretary of state, archbishop of Cambrai, and in 1722 raised to the dignity of prime minister. Died 10 Aug., 1723.

DUBOIS, JEAN, a French monk, who, for having accused the Jesuits of being accessory to the death of Henry IV., was confined in the castle of St. Angelo, at Rome, where he died 28 Aug., 1626.

DUBOS, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a Frenchman, dean of Luçon, was born 1601, and died 3 Oct., 1724. He wrote the Life of Barillon, Bishop of Luçon.

DUBOS, JEAN BAPTISTE, was born at Beauvais 1670, and employed under Torcy in negotiations with Germany, Holland, England and Italy. He wrote Critical Reflections on Poetry and Painting; History of the Establishment of the French Monarchy, &c. Died 23 March, 1742.

DUBRAW, or DUBRAVIUS, JOHN, bishop of Olmutz, in Moravia, died 6 Sept., 1553. He was sent ambassador to Silesia, and was author of a history of Bohemia.

DUBY, PIERRE ANCHER TOBIESIN, a native of Switzerland, who became interpreter at the Royal Library, Paris. He was an expert numismatist, and wrote some able treatises on the coinage of France. Born 1721; died 10 Nov., 1782.

DUC, FRONTON DU, in Latin Ducaeus, a Jesuit of Bordeaux, a man of learning and devotion, editor of St. Chrysostom's works, 6 vols. folio, was born 1558, and died at Paris 25 Sept., 1624.

DUCANGE, CHARLES DU FRESNE SEIGNEUR, a celebrated antiquary, born at Amiens 18 Dec., 1610. He was made treasurer of France, and was highly esteemed for his amiable manners as well as his great learning. His principal works are A History of the Empire of Constantinople under the French Emperors; History of St. Louis, by Joinville, with dissertations; Glossarium ad Scriptores mediæ et infimæ Latinitatis, 3 vols. folio, a work of vast merit; and 'Glossarium ad Scriptores mediæ et infimæ Græcitatibus.' Died 23 Oct., 1688.

DUCAREL, ANDREW COLTÉE, LL.D., a civilian and antiquary, was born at Caen, in Normandy, in 1713. He was educated at Eton, and next at St. John's College, Oxford, where he took his degree of doctor of civil law in 1742. In 1755 he was elected official of the peculiar of the collegiate church of St. Katherine near the Tower, and in 1758 appointed commissary of the diocese of Canterbury. Dr. Ducarel was also keeper of the manuscripts at Lambeth, a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and a member of some foreign institutions. Died 20 May, 1785. Besides many papers in the Archæologia, the Philosophical Transactions, the Bibliotheca Topographica, and Gentleman's Magazine, he published A Tour through Normandy; Anglo-Norman Antiquities; A Series of Anglo-Norman or Norman and Aquitaine coins; A List of various editions of the Bible; and A History of the Royal Hospital and collegiate church of St. Katherine near the Tower.

DUCART, ISAAC, a skilful painter of flowers on satin, was born at Amsterdam 1630, and died 1697.

DUCAS, MICHAEL, a Greek of the fifteenth century, who wrote a history of Greece from Andronicus to the fall of the empire, printed at Paris 1649.

DUCCIO DI BUONINSEGNA, an artist of Siena, who is supposed to have died about 1340.

DUCHAL, JAMES, D.D., a dissenting minister, was born in Ireland in 1607, and educated at Glasgow. After officiating as pastor of a congregation at Cambridge, he removed to Ireland, and succeeded Mr. Abernethy, first at Antrim and lastly at Dublin, where he died in 1761. He printed a volume of discourses on the truth of the Christian religion, and after his death three volumes more of his sermons were published.

DUCHANGE, GASPARD, an engraver, born at Paris 1662; died 1756.

DUCHAT, JACOB LE, a Frenchman, born at Metz 23 Feb., 1628. After the revocation of the Edict of Nantes he settled at Berlin, where he died 23 July, 1735. He edited the Menippæan Satire, the works of Rabelais, &c., and contributed much to the completion of Bayle's Dictionary.

DUCHATEL, FRANCIS, a painter of Brussels, born 1625; died 1679.

DUCIS, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French tragic poet and dramatist, born at Versailles 14 Aug., 1733; died 30 March, 1810.

DUCK, SIR ARTHUR, LL.D., a civilian, born at Heavitree, Devonshire, 1580. He became a student of Exeter College, Oxford, and afterwards fellow of All Souls. On taking his doctor's degree he was made chancellor of London and master of requests. He died at Chiswick in May, 1649. Smith, however, in his Obituary, assigns 16 Dec., 1648, as the date of his death. His works are 'Vita Hen. Chichele, archiep. Cant.' This book was translated into English. 'De usu et auctoritate Juris Civilis Romanorum in dominiis principum Christianorum.'

DUCK, STEPHEN, a poet, who was originally a thresher; but on some of his verses being shown to Queen Caroline, she took him under her patronage and made him one of the yeomen of the guard. Afterwards her majesty got him ordained, and procured him the living of Byfleet, Surrey. He drowned himself in the Thames in March or April, 1756. His poems have long ceased to attract notice.

DUCKWORTH, SIR JOHN THOMAS, Bart., a British admiral, born at Leatherhead, Surrey, 28 Feb., 1747-8. In 1794 he gained a decisive victory over the French fleet near St. Domingo, for which exploit he received the thanks of Parliament. He was appointed governor of Newfoundland, 1810, and in 1815 governor of Plymouth, where he died 1 Sept., 1817.

DUCLOS. ANNE MARIE CHATEAUNEUF, known by the name of De Duclot, a popular French actress, born about 1664; died 1748.

DUCLOS, CHARLES PINEAU, historiographer of France, was born at Dinant, in Brittany, 12 Feb., 1704, and died at Paris 26 March, 1772.

DUCKREUX, JOSEPH, an eminent painter of Paris, who went to Vienna to take portraits of the imperial family. Born 1737; died 1802.

DUDEFANT. See DEFFAND.

DUDGEON, WILLIAM, a farmer in East Lothian, Haddingtonshire, and a man of considerable learning, published Letters to the Rev. Mr. Jackson concerning the Immensity and Unity of God, &c., 1737, and 'Philosophical Works, viz.—The State of the Moral World considered—A Catechism founded upon Experience and Reason—A View of the Necessitarian or Best Scheme—Philosophical Letters concerning the Being and Attributes of God,' 12mo., 1765.

DUDITH, ANDREW, a Hungarian prelate who gave offence at the Council of Trent by advocating the cause of reform. Ultimately he married, renounced his preferments, and went to Silesia. He wrote a discourse on comets; a Latin translation of Beccatelli's Life of Cardinal Pole, &c. Born 6 Feb. 1533; died 23 Feb., 1580.

DUDLEY, AMBROSE, earl of Warwick. See WARWICK.

DUDLEY, EDMUND, a statesman, born 1462. He was of an ancient family in Staffordshire, and received his education at Oxford, after which he studied in Gray's Inn, and became so eminent as a lawyer that Henry VII. gave him several employments. He and Empson, however, were charged with committing many acts of oppression, for which, at the commencement of the next reign, they were sent to the Tower, tried, and beheaded 18 Aug., 1510. While in confinement Dudley wrote a treatise entitled 'The Tree of the Commonwealth,' which still remains in MS.

DUDLEY, LORD GUILFORD, fourth son of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, married, in May, 1553, Lady Jane Grey, daughter of Henry Grey, marquis of Dorset and duke of Suffolk. Lord Dudley and Lady Jane were executed 12 Feb., 1553-4, for having laid claim to the English crown.

DUDLEY, SIR HENRY BATE, was born at Fenny Compton 25 Aug., 1745. His father, Henry Bate, was rector of St. Nicholas, in Worcester, and afterwards of North Farmbridge, Essex. The son was educated for the church, and took his degrees in arts in the university of Cambridge, after which he became curate of Hendon, Middlesex. At this period of his life he was chiefly known as a man of pleasure in the town, and the editor of two newspapers in succession, the 'Morning Post' and 'Morning Herald.' He also produced a few dramatic pieces, of which the principal were 'The Flitch of Bacon,' and 'The Woodman.' In 1781 the advowson of Bradwell juxta Mare, Essex, was purchased in trust for Mr. Bate, subject to the life of the incumbent; but without waiting for his demise, he began many alterations and improvements of the church, parsonage, and glebe, at an expense of more than £28,000. But when, in 1797, he applied for institution to the living, on the death of the incumbent, the bishop of London gave him a refusal on the ground of simony. Shortly afterwards the rectory lapsed to the crown, and Dr. Gamble was presented to it. This was an exceedingly hard case, and very nearly ruined Mr. Dudley (which addition to his name was made in compliance with the will of a relative). In 1804 he was compensated in some degree for his loss by a presentation to the rectory of Kilscoren, in Ireland, and the chancellorship of the cathedral of Ferns, to which, three years afterwards, was added the living of Kilglass, in the county of Longford. He resigned the two Irish benefices in 1812, on being presented to the rectory of Willingham in the county of Cambridge; and in the same year he was created a baronet. In 1816 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Ely. At one time Sir Henry was magistrate for seven counties in England, and four in Ireland; nor was he by any means an inactive one, for he was a zealous administrator of the laws, and a great promoter of improvements. He died at Cheltenham, 1 Feb., 1824.

DUDLEY, HOWARD, an English wood-engraver, born about 1820, died in London 4 July, 1864.

DUDLEY, JOHN, duke of Northumberland. See NORTHUMBERLAND.

DUDLEY, JOHN WILLIAM WARD, EARL OF, an English politician, born 9 Aug., 1781, being the only son of William third Viscount Ward. He sat in the House of Commons from 1802 till 1823, when he succeeded his father in the peerage. On the formation of Mr. Canning's administration he was appointed foreign secretary, and sworn of the privy council, being raised to the dignity of an earl the same year. He resigned the secretaryship 1828, and died 6 March, 1833. His only literary production is an article in the Quarterly Review on the life and character of Horne Tooke.

DUDLEY, ROBERT, earl of Leicester. See LEICESTER.

DUDLEY, Sir ROBERT, son of Robert earl of Leicester, by the Lady Douglas Sheffield, was born at Sheen, Surrey, 1573. His father, though he treated him as illegitimate, left him the bulk of his estate after the death of his uncle Ambrose. In 1594 he made a voyage to the South Seas. In 1605 he commenced a suit to prove his legitimacy; but the countess dowager of Leicester filed an information against him and others for a conspiracy, on which he went to Florence, where the grand-duke appointed him chamberlain to his wife, the archduchess of Austria, sister to Ferdinand II. That emperor created him a duke of the holy Roman empire, on which he assumed the title of duke of Northumberland. He drained the morass between Pisa and the sea, by which Leghorn became one of the first ports in the world. He died near Florence, Sept., 1639. He wrote several works, the chief of which is entitled 'Del Arcano del Marc.'

DUPIEF, NICOLAS GOUIN, a Frenchman, who, for nearly five-and-twenty years, was an able teacher of his native language in America and England. He published 'Nature Displayed in her mode of teaching language to Man; a French-English Dictionary;' and other useful and philosophical works applicable to the purposes of instruction. Died in London 12 April, 1834.

DUFRESNE. See DUCANGE, QUINAULT.

DU FRESNE, PHILIPPE DE LA CANAYE SEIGNEUR. See CANAYE.

DUFRESNOY, CHARLES. See LENGLET.

DUFRESNOY, CHARLES ALPHONSE, a French painter and poet, born at Paris 1611; died 1665. His memory has been kept alive by his celebrated Latin poem on the Art of Painting ('De Arte Graphica'). Dryden gave a prose translation of it 1684, and in 1782 Mr. Mason published a metrical version accompanied with the notes of Sir Joshua Reynolds.

DUFRESNY, CHARLES RIVIÈRE, a French poet and dramatist, born 1648; died 6 Oct., 1724.

DUGARD, WILLIAM, was born at Bromsgrove, Worcestershire, 9 Jan., 1605. He was educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree in 1630; soon after which he was appointed master of the school at Stamford, from whence he removed to Colchester, and, in 1644, was chosen master of Merchant Taylors' School; but in 1650 he was dismissed and sent to Newgate on account of his loyalty. On gaining his liberty he kept a school on St. Peter's Hill, Doctors' Commons, but shortly after was restored to his former station. In 1661, however, he lost this place again, and died the year following. His works are Lexicon Græci Testamenti; Rhetoricis compendium; Luciani Samosatensis dialogi selecti; and a Greek Grammar.

DUGDALE, Sir WILLIAM, was born at Shustoke, Warwickshire, 12 Sept., 1605. He was educated at Coventry till his fifteenth year, and then completed his studies under his father, who had been a member of St. John's College, Oxford. He was made pursuivant at arms in 1638, and two years afterwards Rouge Croix pursuivant in ordinary. In 1642 he was created master of arts at Oxford, and in 1644 appointed Chester herald. On the ruin of the royal cause he undertook, with Roger Dodsworth, the 'Monasticon Anglicanum,' the first volume of which was published in 1655, the second in 1661, and the third in 1673. In the meantime Dugdale printed his 'Antiquities of Warwickshire,' folio, 1656, of which a second edition appeared in 1730, in 2 vols. In 1658 he brought out the 'History of St. Paul's Cathedral,' folio, which came to a second edition in 1716. At the Restoration Dugdale was made Norroy king at arms; and in 1662 he published 'The History of Imbanking and Draining of divers Fens and Marshes,' folio, of which work a new edition was printed in 1772. He next completed Sir Henry Spelman's Councils, and in 1666 published his 'Origines Juridicales, or Historical Memoirs of the English Laws, &c.,' folio. This was followed by 'The Baronage of England,' 3 vols. folio, 1676. In 1677 he was made Garter principal king at arms, and received the honour of knighthood. In 1681 he published 'A short view of the late Troubles in England,' folio, which was succeeded by 'The ancient usage in bearing of arms,' 8vo. His last publication was 'A perfect copy of all summons of the nobility to the great councils and parliaments,' folio, 1685. Sir William died at Blythe Hall, 10 Feb., 1685-6, and was interred in the church of Shustoke. His manuscript collections he bequeathed to the university of Oxford. The Life, Diary, and Correspondence of Dugdale appeared in 1827, under the editorship of William Hamper, F.S.A.

DUGHET. See POUSSIN.

DUGUESCLIN, BERTRAND, constable of France, and an illustrious warrior, was born in Brittany about 1314, and died, in the midst of his triumphs, before Châteaufort-Randon, 13 July, 1380. He gained many signal victories over the English, and defeated the troops of the king of Navarre.

DUGUET, JACQUES JOSEPH, a French priest of the oratory, author of scriptural commentaries and other pious works, was born 9 Dec., 1649, and died 25 Oct., 1733.

DUHALDE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Jesuit, born 1 Feb., 1674, at Paris, where he died 18 Aug., 1743. His Historical and Geographical Description of the Empire of China, and Chinese Tartary, 4 vols. folio, 1735, compiled from the records of French missionaries, is a work of great merit.

DUHAMEL, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French priest of the oratory, author of works on divinity, philosophy, and mathematics, was born 1624, and died 6 Aug., 1706.

DUHAMEL, JEAN PIERRE FRANÇOIS GUILLOT, a French metallurgist, born 31 Aug., 1730; died 19 Feb., 1816.

DUHAMEL DU MONCEAU, HENRI LOUIS, a Frenchman, who devoted himself to agriculture and commerce, the marine, and mechanical arts, on which subjects he published various able works. Born 1700; died 23 Aug., 1782.

DUIGENAN, PATRICK, LL.D., an Irish civilian, was born 1735. From being a sizar in the college of Dublin he rose to the degree of doctor of laws, was made advocate-general, a judge of the prerogative court, vicar-general of Armagh, and a privy counsellor. In the Irish parliament he zealously supported the union, and in that of Great Britain he as strenuously opposed the claims of the Catholics to political power. Died 10 April, 1816. He published Lachrymæ Academicæ; An Address to the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland; and some other tracts on political subjects.

DUISBURG, PETER OF, a priest, born at Duisburg, in the duchy of Cleves, in the fourteenth century. He wrote The Chronicle of Prussia in Latin.

DUJARDIN, CHARLES, a painter of Amsterdam, born about 1640; died 20 Nov., 1678. He was almost equal to Paul Potter as a painter of animals.

DUKE, RICHARD, a divine and poet, was born 13 June, 1658, being son of Richard Duke, a citizen of London, by his wife Anne [Pierce]. He received his education at Westminster School, from whence he was elected in 1675 to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1688 he was presented to the rectory of Blaby, Leicestershire, and soon afterwards was installed prebendary of Gloucester. In 1710 he was inducted to the living of Witney, Oxfordshire, but died of apoplexy 10 Feb., 1710-11. His works consist chiefly of translations of the ancient poets. The Fourth Satire of Juvenal fell to his share in the translation of that poet which was made under Dryden's auspices; and, in conjunction with Dryden, Creech, Sir William Temple, and other literary persons, he translated the Eclogues of Virgil. His poems were collected and edited with those of Roscommon in 1717. A volume of Sermons by him was published in 1714.

DUKER, CHARLES ANDREW, professor of ancient history at Utrecht, editor of Thucydides, Florus, &c., was born 1670, and died 5 Nov., 1752.

DULAURE, JACQUES ANTOINE, a voluminous French writer, born 3 Sept., 1755; died 19 Aug., 1835.

DULLAERT, HERMANN, a Dutch painter, born at Rotterdam 1636; died 6 May, 1684.

DULON, LOUIS, a celebrated Prussian flautist and musical composer, born 14 Aug., 1769; died 7 July, 1826.

DULONG, PIERRE LOUIS, a distinguished French chemist, born 12 Feb., 1785; died 19 July, 1838.

DUMANIANT, JEAN ANDRÉ, a French actor and dramatist, born 1754; died 4 Sept., 1826. His real name was Bourlain.

DUMAS, CHARLES LOUIS, a French anatomist, professor at Montpellier, was born at Lyons 8 Feb., 1765, and died 3 April, 1813.

DUMAS, LOUIS, a French musician and writer on the theory of the art, was born 1676, and died at Paris 19 Jan., 1744.

DUMONT, JEAN, a native of France, who became baron of Carlsroon and historiographer to the emperor. He died at Vienna 1726. He was a profound publicist, and wrote, among other works, 'Memoires Politiques, pour servir à la parfaite intelligence de l'histoire de la paix de Ryswick,' 'Voyages en France, en Allemagne, à Malte, et en Turquie,' 'Corps universel diplomatique du droit des gens,' 8 vols.; 'Hist. Militaire du prince Eugene, du prince et duc de Marlborough,' &c., 3 vols.; 'Lettres Historiques,' 'Recueil de Traites.'

DUMONT, JEAN, a painter of Paris, born 1700; died 1781.

DUMONT, PIERRE ÉTIENNE LOUIS, a publicist, born at Geneva 18 July, 1759; died at Milan 29 Sept., 1820. He was one of the friends of Jeremy Bentham, several of whose works he edited.

DU MOULIN. See MOULIN.

DUMOURIEZ, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French general, born at Cambrai 1739. After serving for some time as a volunteer he procured a commission, and soon afterwards obtained the rank of captain of horse, but at the peace of 1763 he was dismissed. In 1768, however, he was sent to Corsica, and in 1770 was ordered into Poland.

DUNCAN.

Being of an active and enterprising disposition, he turned his thoughts, during the American war, to an invasion of Great Britain, and actually planned a descent on the Isle of Wight in 1778. On the breaking out of the Revolution he joined the patriots, and after a short administration as minister for foreign affairs, at the head of the war department, he was obliged to resign. Dumouriez was afterwards in command of the army destined to save his native country. The famous battle of Jemappe was the first decisive victory gained by France; but his subsequent exploits were less brilliant, and he ultimately emigrated from France. His latter years were spent at Little Ealing, Middlesex, where he died 14 March, 1823.

DUN, LORD. See ERSKINE.

DUNBAR, GEORGE, a classical scholar, professor of Greek at Edinburgh, was born in Berwickshire 1774, and died 6 Dec., 1851. He published a Greek-English, English-Greek Lexicon; An Inquiry into the Structure and Affinities of the Greek and Latin languages, &c.

DUNBAR, JAMES, LL.D., author of 'Essays on the History of Mankind in Rude and Uncultivated Ages,' was professor of moral philosophy at King's College, Aberdeen, where he died 28 May, 1798.—Anderson; Watt.

DUNBAR, WILLIAM, a Scotch poet, born about 1465, at Saltoun, in East Lothian. He appears to have travelled abroad as a preaching friar of the Franciscan order, but eventually he settled in his native country, where he died about 1530. His principal productions are 'The Freirs of Berwick,' 'The Golden Terge,' and 'The Thistle and Rose.' Mr. David Laing published an edition of Dunbar's Poetical Works at Edinburgh, 2 vols. 8vo., 1824.

DUNBOYNE, LORD. See BUTLER, JOHN, D.D.

DUNCAN, ADAM, Viscount Duncan, was born July, 1731, being the son of Alexander Duncan, esq., of Luncie, in the county of Angus. He entered early into the naval service, and, in 1755, obtained a commission as lieutenant; in 1759 was made master and commander; and in 1761 appointed post-captain, when he had a share in the reduction of the Havannah. In 1779 he commanded the Monarch, and distinguished himself in Rodney's victory over the Spanish fleet. From that ship he removed to the Blenheim, and served under Lord Howe in the relief of Gibraltar. In 1789 he was made rear-admiral of the blue; the next year promoted to the same rank in the white squadron; in 1793 appointed vice-admiral of the blue; and of the white in 1794. The year following he was made commander of the North Sea fleet, and hoisted his flag on board the Prince George, but shifted it to the Venerable, as better suited to the service. After watching the Dutch fleet in the Texel for two years, a mutiny in his squadron compelled him to return to Yarmouth Roads. The enemy took advantage of this movement and put to sea. The English admiral being apprised of this, hastened to the coast of Holland, and on the 11th of October, 1797, gained a complete victory off Camperdown, taking the Dutch admiral, De Winter, and eight ships. For this achievement he was made a viscount, had the thanks of parliament, and a grant of two thousand a year for himself and the two next heirs to the peerage. Died 4 Aug., 1804.

DUNCAN, ANDREW, M.D., a Scotch physician and medical writer, born at St. Andrew's 17 Oct., 1744; died 5 July, 1828. His son, of the same names (born 10 Aug., 1773; died 13 May, 1832), was also an eminent physician at Edinburgh, and the editor of the Edinburgh New Dispensatory, &c.

DUNCAN, DANIEL, a physician, born at Montauban 1649. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he relinquished a very lucrative practice at Paris, and ultimately settled in London, where he died 30 April, 1735. He wrote a treatise entitled 'Explication nouvelle et mécanique des actions animales'; 'La Chymie Naturelle'; 'Histoire de l'animal'; 'Avis contre l'abus des liqueurs chaudes, et particulièrement du café, du chocolat, et du thé.' His only son, Daniel Duncan, became a clergyman of the Church of England, and died June, 1761. He left two sons, the younger of whom was John Duncan, D.D., rector of South Warmborough, Hampshire, who died at Bath 28 Dec., 1808, aged 88. He wrote 'An Essay on Happiness,' a poem; 'An Address to the rational Advocates of the Church of England'; 'Religious View of the present Crisis.' He also published a posthumous tract of Mr. Andrew Baxter on the proof of the soul's immortality.

DUNCAN, HENRY, D.D., the founder of savings banks in Scotland, and author of many popular works, was born in Dumfriesshire 8 Oct., 1774, and died 12 Feb., 1846.

DUNCAN, MARK, a Scotch physician, who became professor of philosophy in the Calvinist college at Saumur, in France, and regent of the university. He wrote a Latin System of Logic, &c. Died 1640. See CERISANTES.

DUNCAN, PHILIP BURY, D.C.L., was born at South Warmborough, Hampshire, 1772, and educated at New College, Oxford, where he was elected to a fellowship. He afterwards took a residence at Bath, and thenceforward divided his time between that city and Oxford. He was keeper of the Ashmolean Museum 1826-55; and died 12 Nov., 1864. Besides editing Dr. William King's 'Anecdotes,' he published 'Essays on Various Subjects,' 2 vols.; 'Railway Readings'; 'Essays on Conversation and on Quackery'; and 'Literary Conglomerate; or a Combination of various Thoughts and Facts on various Subjects.'

DUNCAN, THOMAS, a painter of eminence, born in Perthshire 24 May, 1807; died 25 May, 1845.

DUNCAN, WILLIAM, was born at Aberdeen July, 1717, and educated at Marischal College (M.A. 1737), after which he removed to London, and became an author by profession, in which capacity he published a translation of the 'Select Orations of Cæsar,' and another of the 'Commentaries of Cæsar,' with an excellent preliminary Discourse on the Art of War among the Ancients. He also wrote the 'System of Logic' for Doddsley's Preceptor. This was afterwards printed in a separate form. In 1752 he was appointed professor of philosophy in the Marischal College of Aberdeen, where he died 1 May, 1760.

DUNCOMBE, JOHN, son of William Duncombe, mentioned below, was born in 1730. He became fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and in 1757 was presented to the united livings of St. Andrew and St. Mary, Bredman, Canterbury. In 1766 Archbishop Secker appointed him one of the six preachers in Canterbury Cathedral; and in 1773 Archbishop Cornwallis gave him the living of Herne, and the mastership of Harbledown, and St. John's Hospital. Died 18 Jan., 1786. Mr. Duncombe was the author of 'The Fæminiad,' a poem, and three Sermons; and he had a share in his father's translation of Horace. Some of his antiquarian papers are in the Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica; and he was the editor of Archbishop Herring's letters; and also of the letters of the earl of Cork. His wife was Susanna, daughter of Joseph Highmore, the painter. She was an accomplished and learned lady, and wrote the story of Fidelia and Honoria in the Adventurer, besides some small contributions in the Poetical Calendar and Nichols's Poems. She died at Canterbury 28 Oct., 1812.

DUNCOMBE, WILLIAM, was born in London 9 Jan., 1680-90. He was for some years a clerk in the navy office, from which he retired to a private life in 1725, and the next year married the sister of Hughes, the poet. Some strictures on the Beggar's Opera, which he published in the Whitehall Evening Post, procured him the friendship of Dr. afterwards Archbishop Herring. In 1732 he brought out a play called 'Lucius Junius Brutus,' which had but little success. He contributed a paper called 'Prosperity and Adversity' to the World; and wrote a number of fugitive pieces; besides which he edited his brother-in-law's works, and published a translation of Horace in 4 vols. 12mo. Died 13 Feb., 1769.

DUNDAS, SIR DAVID, a gallant British general and writer on military subjects, born in Scotland about 1735; died 18 Feb., 1820.

DUNDAS, HENRY, Viscount Melville. See MELVILLE.

DUNDAS, ROBERT, a Scotch judge, was the son of Robert Dundas, an eminent lawyer, and born in 1685. In 1717 he was made solicitor-general, and in 1720 lord-advocate. In 1722 he was returned to parliament for the county of Edinburgh; but when the Walpole party came into power he was removed from his office. In 1737 he was raised to the judicial bench by the title of Lord Armlston, and in 1748 was appointed president of the court of session. Died 26 Aug., 1753. To his lordship the Scotch are indebted for establishing the right of a jury to return a general verdict in capital cases. His son, Robert Dundas, became solicitor-general for Scotland, dean of the faculty of advocates, lord-advocate, and, in 1760, president of the court of session. Died 13 Dec., 1787, aged 75.

DUNDEE, JOHN GRAHAM, VISCOUNT, commonly called Claverhouse, a Scotchman, who in the reign of Charles II. obtained a captain's commission in one of the troops of horse employed in enforcing obedience to the penal laws against nonconformists. Among many cruel agents he made himself conspicuous by his barbarity, and obtained an unenviable renown in history, romance, and local tradition. He was defeated by the Covenanters at Drumlogie 1 June, 1679, and compelled to fly for his life. At the subsequent battle of Bothwell Bridge his exterminating counsels were counteracted by the milder genius of Monmouth, the commander of the expedition. In 1688 he was raised to the peerage. While the Convention Parliament was sitting in Scotland, arranging the Revolution Settlement, he put himself at the head of some Highland and Irish marauders, with whom, on 17 June, 1689, he successfully defended the Pass of Killiecrankie against Mackay, until he was killed by a random shot.—*Nat. and navy; but after succeeding to the title on the death of his father, 1778, he devoted himself entirely to scientific pursuits, principally with the view of making improvements in the commerce and manufactures of the country. His labours were, however, so unprofitable to himself, that he was reduced to penury, and at one period received assistance from the Literary Fund. Died 1 July, 1831. He published several scientific treatises.

DUNDONALD, THOMAS COCHRANE, tenth EARL OF, son of the preceding, was born at Annfield, Lanarkshire, 14th Dec., 1775. In consequence of his father having impoverished himself through his devotion to scientific pursuits, the son, although heir to a peerage, had to start in life with no other expectations than those arising from his own exertions. When in his eighteenth year he entered the navy, and displayed such valour that in course of time he was placed in command of a vessel, and decorated with the order of the Bath. In the intervals which he passed on shore he became M.P., first for Honiton and afterwards for Westminster; but by persistently calling attention to the abuses which then disgraced the navy, he rendered himself highly obnoxious to the government, who seized the earliest opportunity of putting him to silence. In 1814 a rumour was spread that Napoleon had fallen, in consequence of which the funds suddenly rose, and Lord Cochrane and some friends of his sold out to a large amount. The news, however, proved false; and as the chief actor in the fraud was known to have changed his dress at Lord Cochrane's, suspicion naturally fell upon his lordship, who, being brought to trial, and found guilty, was sentenced to pay a fine of £1000, to undergo a year's imprisonment, and to stand in the pillory. He was also deprived of the order of the Bath, and his rank in the navy, and expelled from the House of Commons. One part of the sentence, however—that relating to the pillory—was remitted. The electors of Westminster again chose him as their representative, and, breaking out of prison, he took his seat in the House, but was recaptured, and his constituents were consequently deprived of his services until the expiration of his sentence. In 1818 he went abroad, and served with distinction in various foreign navies. When the Whigs came into power in 1830 his rank in the British navy was restored to him, and in the following year he succeeded his father as earl of Dundonald. He now continued to obtain promotion in his profession, until, in 1854, he attained the rank of rear-admiral. Died 30 Oct., 1860. He enjoyed a high reputation for his scientific acquirements, and was the author of a pamphlet entitled Observations on Naval Affairs and on some collateral Subjects; as well as of two interesting volumes of Autobiography.

DUNFERMLINE, JAMES ABERCROMBY, LORD, was born 7 Nov., 1776, being the third son of Sir Ralph Abercromby. In 1807 he entered the House of Commons, and immediately joined the Whig opposition, with which party he steadily acted for half a century. From 19 Feb., 1834, till May, 1839, he occupied the Speaker's chair. Died 17 April, 1858.

DUNGAL, an Irish monk, who settled in France, where he died about 840. He was a good astronomer, and was consulted by Charlemagne respecting two eclipses of the sun in 810. The answer of Dungal is in D'Acheri's Spicilegium. He also wrote in defence of images in religious worship, which treatise was printed in 1608.

DUNSTANVILLE.

DUNI, EGIDIO ROMUALDO, an Italian musical composer, born 9 Feb., 1709; died at Paris 11 June, 1775.

DUNLOP, WILLIAM, a divine, born at Glasgow 1692. He took his degree of master of arts in 1712, and afterwards studied at Utrecht, from whence he returned to Edinburgh, and became regius professor of divinity and church history in 1716. Died 29 Oct., 1720. His works are 'Sermons,' 2 vols.; 'An Essay on Confessions of Faith.' He had a brother, Alexander Dunlop, who was professor of Greek at Glasgow. He published a grammar of that language, and died in 1742.

DUNN, SAMUEL, a mathematician, was a native of Crediton, Devonshire. He kept an academy many years at Chelsea; and he was also nautical examiner of the young officers in the East India Company's service. He died 1792, and left most of his property for the endowment of a mathematical school in his native town. Several of his astronomical papers are in the Philosophical Transactions; besides which he published an Atlas, in folio, 4 vols.; and a Treatise on the Doctrine of the Sphere.

DUNNING, JOHN. See ASHBURTON.

DUNS SCOTUS, JOHN, an eminent divine of the Franciscan order, was probably born in the north of England about 1265. After studying at Oxford he went to Paris, where he took his degrees, and taught with so much reputation that he was surnamed The Subtle Doctor. He went afterwards to Cologne, and there died 8 Nov., 1308. His published works fill twelve folio volumes. Scotus entertained opinions contrary to St. Thomas of Aquin, which produced two parties in the schools, called 'Thomists' and 'Scotists.' Duns Scotus was a zealous upholder of the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception.

DUNSTABLE, JOHN, an English musician, author of a treatise 'De Mensurabili Musica,' died in London 1458.

DUNSTAN (ST.), was born at Glastonbury, Somersetshire, 925. He became abbat of the celebrated monastery at his native place, and the fame of his sanctity recommended him to King Edred, who made him his counsellor; but his conduct giving offence, he was banished till the accession of Edgar, when he was recalled and made bishop of Worcester. He afterwards was appointed archbishop of Canterbury; and died 19 May, 988. His works were printed at Douay 1626. He was a good musician, painter, and graver, and amused himself with joinery, turning, and smithery. He was supposed to be employed in the last-mentioned occupation when he seized the devil by the nose with a red-hot pair of tongs.

DUNSTANVILLE, FRANCIS BASSET, LORD, was born in Oxfordshire 9 Aug., 1757, and educated at King's College, Cambridge. He afterwards travelled on the continent, and on his return entered the House of Commons, where he supported the Tory party. When in 1799 the combined fleets of France and Spain unexpectedly steered into Plymouth Sound, Mr. Basset put himself at the head of the miners, who came forward to defend Plymouth. His patriotic conduct on this occasion led to his being created a baronet 24 Nov., 1779. On 17 June, 1796, he was raised to the Upper House by the title of Lord Dunstanville. Died 14 Feb., 1835. He was a liberal patron of the fine arts, and presented his country, in 1811, with an edition of Carew's Survey of Cornwall, with notes by

DUNSTER.

Tonkin. He was also the author of several papers in Young's 'Annals of Agriculture.'

DUNSTER, CHARLES, son of Dr. Samuel Dunster, mentioned below, received his education at Trinity College, Oxford (M.A. 1775). On entering into orders he obtained the rectory of Petworth, Sussex, where he died in April, 1816. He published The Frogs, a comedy from Aristophanes; Phillips's Poem of Cyder, with notes; Milton's Paradise Regained, with notes; Considerations of Milton's early Reading; Letter to the Bishop of London, on a Passage in St. Matthew's Gospel; A Letter to Granville Sharpe, on the Lord's Prayer; Discursive Considerations on St. Luke's Gospel and St. Matthew's Gospel; Points at issue between the Editor of Dr. Townson's Works and the Author of Discursive Considerations.

DUNSTER, SAMUEL, D.D., was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1696; M.A. 1700; D.D. 1713). He was a prebendary of Salisbury, and chaplain to the duke of Shrewsbury and to Lord Maynard. Died 1752. He was author of an English prose translation of the Satires of Horace; 'Anglia Rediviva,' 1699, containing a full description of all shires, cities, principal towns, and rivers in England; and an English translation of the Jesuit Drexelius's Reflections on Eternity.

DUNTHORNE, RICHARD, was born at Ramsey, Huntingdonshire, in or about 1712, and for some time kept a private school at Alconbury, in the same county, with reputation and success. Subsequently he entered the service of Dr. Roger Long, master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, by whom he was preferred, first to the mastership of the free school at Coggeshall, Essex, and then to the office of butler of the college. In 1754 he was elected by the Bedford Level Corporation deputy surveyor-general of the Middle and South Levels—an appointment which he held till his death, 3 March, 1775. Mr. Dunthorne was an able astronomer, and contributed a number of papers to the 'Ladies' Diary' and the 'Philosophical Transactions.' He also published 'The Practical Astronomy of the Moon; or new Tables of the Moon's Motions. Exactly constructed from Sir Isaac Newton's Theory as published by Dr. Gregory, in his Astronomy. With Precepts for computing the Place of the Moon, and Eclipses of the Luminaries,' 8vo., Camb., 1739.—Memoir by C. H. Cooper, F.S.A.

DUNTON, JOHN, a bookseller, born at Grafton, Huntingdonshire, 14 May, 1659. He carried on an extensive business as a publisher in London, but failed by his projects, one of the most remarkable of which was the 'Athenian Mercury,' a monthly paper, containing questions on all subjects, with their solutions. This work was afterwards reprinted under the title of the 'Athenian Oracle,' 4 vols. He also wrote a curious book, called 'Dunton's Life and Errors.' Died 1733.

DUNZ, JOHN, a portrait and flower painter, born 17 Jan., 1645, at Berne, in Switzerland, where he died 10 Oct., 1736.

DU PAN, JAMES MALLET, a native of Geneva, who went to Paris, but being obliged to quit that city in consequence of his attachment to the monarchy, came to London, where he edited a journal called 'Le Mercure Politique.' Born 1749; died 10 May, 1800.

DUPATY, CHARLES MARGUERITE JEAN BAPTISTE MERCIER, advocate-general, and president à mortier in the parliament of Bordeaux, was born at Rochelle 1744, and died at Paris 17 Sept., 1788. He wrote A Treatise on Penal Laws; Academical Discourses; and Letters on Italy.

DUPATY, CHARLES MERCIER, son of the above, distinguished himself as a sculptor. He was born at Bordeaux 29 Sept., 1771; and died 12 Nov., 1825.

DUPERRON. See PERRON.

DUPETIT THOUARS, LOUIS MARIE AUBERT, a distinguished French botanist, born 1756; died 12 May, 1831.

DU PIN, LOUIS ELLIES, doctor of the Sorbonne, was born in Normandy 17 June, 1657, and died at Paris 6 June, 1719. He was professor of divinity in the Royal College, but lost the place on account of his moderation in the Jansenist controversy. He also incurred censure in consequence of the candour he displayed in his 'Library of Ecclesiastical Writers,' published in 47 vols. 8vo., and at Amsterdam in 19 vols. 4to. There is an English translation in 8 vols. folio. He held a correspondence with Archbishop Wake respecting a union of the English and Gallican churches; and was also consulted by Peter the Great on a junction of the Latin and Greek communions. He wrote a great number of other works, of which three have been translated, viz., The Universal Library of Historians; An Abridgment of the History of the Church; and A Method of studying Divinity.

DUPLEIX, JOSEPH, MARQUIS, governor of the French possessions in India, died 1763.

DUPLEIX, SCIPION, historiographer of France, was born 1659, and died March, 1691.

DUPLESSIS MORNAY. See MORNAY.

DUPONCEAU, PETER STEPHEN, LL.D., a Frenchman, who settled in the United States, and died at Philadelphia 2 April, 1844. He was an acute philologist, and wrote 'Memoire sur le Systeme Grammatical des Langues de quelques Nations Indiennes de l'Amérique du Nord;' 'A Dissertation on the Nature and Character of the Chinese System of Writing,' &c.

DUPONT DE NEMOURS, PIERRE SAMUEL, a writer on political economy, born at Paris 14 Dec., 1739; died in the United States 6 Aug., 1817.

DUPORT, JAMES, D.D., was born 1666 at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which his father, Dr. John Duport, was master. He received his education at Westminster and Trinity College, Cambridge. As one of the tutors of Trinity he continued to take pupils for above thirty years with unrivalled success and reputation. In 1639 he was admitted regius professor of Greek, and shortly afterwards he became a prebend in the church of Lincoln, and archdeacon of Stow. During the civil war he was deprived of his ecclesiastical preferments, but he contrived to keep his fellowship and professorship at Cambridge, notwithstanding that he was a decided royalist. In 1654, however, the commissioners for regulating the university prevailed on him to resign the Greek professorship. Soon afterwards he was appointed one of the senior fellows of Trinity College, of which he was elected vice-master in 1655. At the Restoration he was constituted one of the king's chaplains, and reinstated in his prebend, though he did not regain the archdeaconry of Stow. In 1660 he was created D.D. by royal mandate, and in 1664 was installed dean of Peterborough. In 1668 he was appointed master of Magdalene College, and held that office until his death, which took place at Peterborough 17 July, 1679. Dr. Duport's published works are a translation of Job into Greek verse; translations of the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Solomon's Song in Greek hexameters, with a Latin translation; 'Homeri Gnomologia,' a Greek translation of the Common Prayer; a translation of the Psalms into Greek Homeric verse; a collection of Latin and Greek poems, entitled 'Musæ Subsecivæ, seu Poetica Stromata,' and one sermon entitled 'Evangelical Polity.' Dr. Dupont's Latin and Greek poetry was held in high estimation by his contemporaries.

DUPPA, BRIAN, was born at Lewisham, Kent, 10 March, 1588-9, and educated at Christchurch, Oxford, of which he was afterwards dean. In 1638 he was appointed tutor to the prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II., and the same year was consecrated bishop of Chichester, from whence he was translated to Salisbury 1641. He attended Charles I. in the Isle of Wight, and was always a staunch adherent to the royal cause. At the Restoration he was made lord almoner. Died 26 March, 1662. A little before his death Charles II. visited him, and kneeling down by his bedside, craved his blessing, which the expiring prelate gave him with great solemnity. The bishop published some sermons and other works of piety; and also 'Jousonius Virbius,' a collection of poems on Ben Jonson's death.

DUPPA, RICHARD, F.S.A., a barrister, who received his academical education at Trinity College, Oxford, though he afterwards proceeded LL.B. at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (1814). He published the Life of Michael Angelo; Travels in Italy; Maxims; and a great number of other works. Died 11 July, 1831.

DUPRAT, ANTOINE, cardinal legate, archbishop of Sens, chancellor of France, and principal minister of Francis I., was born 17 Jan., 1463, and died 9 July, 1535.

DUPRÉ DE SAINT MAUR, NICOLAS FRANÇOIS, master of the accounts at Paris, translated the Paradise Lost into French, and published some esteemed works on numismatics. Born about 1695; died 1 Dec., 1774.

DUPUIS, CHARLES FRANÇOIS, a French writer of the so-called philosophical class, was born 26 Oct., 1742, and died 29 Sept., 1809. His chief works are 'Mémoire sur l'Origine des Constellations et sur l'Explication de la Fable par l'Astronomie;' and 'Origine de tous les Cultes, ou la Religion Universelle,' 3 vols., 1794.

DUPUIS, THOMAS SAUNDERS, Mus.D., an eminent organist and musical composer, born in London 1733; died 17 June, 1796.

DUPUY, PIERRE, a French historian and antiquary, born 27 Nov., 1582; died 14 Dec., 1651.

DUPUYTREN, GUILLAUME, BARON, a celebrated French surgeon and anatomist, born 3 Oct., 1777; died 8 Feb., 1835.

1328. He wrote a treatise respecting the mode of holding a General Council.

DURAND, JEAN NICOLAS LOUIS, an architect, born at Paris 18 Sept., 1760; died 21 Dec., 1834.

DURAND DE MAILLANE, PIERRE TOUSSAINT, a French canonist, born 1 Nov., 1729; died 15 Aug., 1814.

DURAND DE ST. POURÇAIN, GUILLAUME, a French Dominican, bishop of Puy, and afterwards of Meaux, where he died 1333. He was an eminent scholastic divine; left commentaries on the Sentences; and was termed the 'Most Resolute Doctor.'

DURANT, GILLES, seigneur de la Bergerie, advocate in the parliament of Paris, was born about 1550, and died 1615. His Poems have been often printed with those of his friend Bonnefons. An author of the same name was executed 16 July, 1618, for having published a libel on the king.

DURANTE, FRANCIS, one of the great Italian musical composers, was born at Naples 1693, and died at Rome 13 Aug., 1755.

DURANTI, Count DURANTE, an Italian orator and poet, born 1718 at Brescia, where he died 24 Nov., 1780.

DURANTI, JEAN ETIENNE, first president of the parliament in 1581. When the fury of the league raged with the greatest violence, he was most inhumanly murdered 10 Feb., 1589. His work, 'De Ritibus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ,' was printed at Rome 1591.

DUREL, JOHN, D.D., was born at St. Heliers, in Jersey, 1625. He studied at Merton College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Caen, and took his master's degree there in 1646. In 1673 he obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Salisbury; and in 1677 was made dean of Windsor. Died 1683. His principal works are, A View of the Government and Worship of the reformed Church of England; Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ Vindiciæ; Theoremata Philosophica.

DURELL, DAVID, D.D., was born in Jersey 1728, and bred at Pembroke College, Oxford, but after taking his degrees in arts there, he became fellow of Hertford College, of which in 1757 he was appointed principal. He obtained a prebend in the church of Canterbury 1767; and died 19 Oct., 1775. He published The Hebrew Text of the Parallel Prophecies of Jacob and Moses, relating to the Twelve Tribes, with a Translation and Notes; and Critical Remarks on the Books of Job, Psalms, Ecclesiastes, and Canticles.

DURER, ALBERT, an eminent painter and engraver, born at Nuremberg 20 May, 1471. His first work was the three graces, which was engraved in 1497. He engraved more than he painted, so that his pictures are wonderfully scarce and highly valued. In the palace at Prague is a piece by him representing Adam and Eve, and another of Christ bearing the cross. The people of Nuremberg still show, with pride, in the senator's hall, his portraits of Charlemagne and some other emperors. However, he has gained the greatest name by his engravings, which are numerous and valuable. His woodcuts are masterpieces of the art. The Emperor Maximilian had a great regard for him, and conferred on him a pension and patents of nobility. He died at Nuremberg 6 April, 1528. Durer wrote a book on the rules of painting, and some other works.

D'URFEY, THOMAS, a facetious English poet, born at Exeter. He wrote a great number of plays and songs, all of which are tinged with the licentiousness of the reign of Charles II., who used to treat our hard with great familiarity. He resided frequently with the earl of Dorset at Knole, where is a portrait of him painted when he was asleep after dinner, for Tom had such an ordinary visage, that he could not bear to have his likeness taken. His ballads, &c., were printed in 6 vols. under the title of 'Wit and Mirth, or Pills to purge Melancholy.' He died in Feb., 1722-3, and was buried on the 26th of that month in St. James's Church, Middlesex, at the charge of the duke of Dorset.

DURHAM, JAMES, a Scotch divine, born 1622, and educated at St. Andrew's. He settled in Glasgow, and was greatly followed as a preacher. Died 25 June, 1688. He wrote a Commentary on the Revelations, and other theological works.

DURHAM, JOHN GEORGE LAMTON, EARL OF, son of William Henry Lamton, M.P. for the city of Durham, was born 12 April, 1792. In the House of Commons, to which he was first elected in 1813, he distinguished himself by the advocacy of liberal measures, and promulgated a scheme of parliamentary reform. In 1828 he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Durham. On the formation of Lord Grey's cabinet, 1830, he became a member of it and lord privy seal, and had entrusted to him, with Lord J. Russell, Sir J. Graham, and Lord Duncannon, the preparation of the Reform Bill. In 1833 he retired from the administration, and was created an earl. He was sent the same year on a special mission to the emperor of Russia, for the purpose of endeavouring to soften the rigour of the vindictive proceedings against the Poles. He went again to Russia as ambassador in 1835, and remained there till 1837, when he returned to England; and in the following year he went out as governor-general to Canada. Not, however, being well supported by the ministry, he returned home in the course of the same year. Died 28 July, 1840.

DURHAM, SIMON OF. See SIMON.

DURIE, JOHN, a Scotch Jesuit, was born in Fifehire, and died 20 Oct., 1598, or 1608. He was author of a confutation in Latin of Whitaker's Reply to Campian's 'Decem Rationes.' The title is 'Confutatio Responsionis G. Whitakeri ad x. Rationes, quibus fretus Edm. Campianus Certamen Anglicanæ Ecclesiæ Ministris obtulit in causa Fidei.' 8vo., Ingoldstadt, 1585.

DURIE, JOHN, in Latin Dureus, a Scotch divine, who laboured all his life to bring about a union of the Protestant churches. He began this project in 1634; but though encouraged by Archbishops Laud and Usher, he found his scheme impracticable, after he had travelled over a great part of Europe with the view of attaining his great object. Died about 1675. He published several treatises on church government and reformation.

DUSART, CORNELIUS, a Dutch painter, born 1665; died 1704.

DUSAUTOY, JAMES, a young poet of great promise, who, chiefly through the exertions of Southey, was sent to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was cut off by a fever 2 May, 1816, æt. 20.

DUSSAULX, JEAN, author of a French translation of Juvenal, and other works, was born at Chartres 28 Dec., 1728, and died 16 March, 1799.

DUSSEK, JOHN LOUIS, a musical composer, born in Bohemia 9 Feb., 1761; died at St. Germain en Laye March, 1812.

DUTENS, LOUIS, was born at Tours, in France, 15 Jan., 1730. He obtained orders in the Anglican church, and was appointed chaplain to the embassy at Turin, where he also held the situation of chargé d'affaires. He was presented to the rectory of Eildon, in Northumberland, 1766; and died there 23 May, 1812. He edited the works of Leibnitz, 6 vols. 4to., Geneva, 1769, and wrote among other things 'Recherches sur l'origine des Decouvertes;' 'Journal d'un Voyage aux villes principales de l'Europe;' 'Histoire de ce qui s'est passé pour l'établissement d'une Regence en Angleterre;' 'Mémoires d'un Voyageur qui se repose.'

DUTERTRE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Dominican friar, who passed many years as a missionary in the West Indies and South America, and wrote accounts of the various countries he visited. Born 1610; died 1687.

DUVAL, ANDRÉ, doctor of the Sorbonne, superior general of the Carmelites, and dean of the faculty of theology at Paris, was born 15 Jan., 1564, and died 9 Sept., 1638. He wrote several works on divinity. His cousin, Guillaume Duval (who died 22 Sept., 1646), was professor at the Royal College at Paris, and doctor of physic. He wrote a History of his College, and published an edition of Aristotle.

DUVAL, VALENTINE JAMERAI, was born in 1695, at Artonay, in Champagne. His father, who was a labourer, left a large family, so that young Duval was obliged to go to service at the age of twelve. After residing with a shepherd about two years, he went to live with a hermit, who recommended him to the convent of St. Anne, near Luneville, the brothers of which house entrusted him with their cows. By a fortunate occurrence he became known to an English gentleman, who lived at Luneville, and gave him instruction, which he improved by close application. A similar stroke of good fortune brought him to the knowledge of Leopold, duke of Lorraine, who sent him to college; after which he made him his librarian, and appointed him professor of history at Luneville. On the removal of Francis, duke of Lorraine, to Tuscany, Duval accompanied him thither, and afterwards to Vienna, where he became sub-preceptor to the Archduke Joseph, and keeper of the medals. Died 3 Sept., 1775.

DUVERGIER DE HAURANNE. See ST. CYRAN.

DUVERNEY, JOSEPH GUICHARD, a celebrated French anatomist, born 5 Aug., 1648; died 10 Sept., 1730.

DUVERNOY, GEORGE LOUIS, a French anatomist and zoologist, born 1777; died 1 March, 1855.

DUVOISIN, JEAN BAPTISTE, bishop of Nantes, published 'The Authority of the Books of Moses established;' 'An Examination of the Principles of the French Revolution,' &c. Born 16 Oct., 1744; died at Paris 9 July, 1813.

DWARRIS, SIR FORTUNATUS WILLIAM LILLEY, F.R.S., one of the masters of the court of Queen's Bench, and a member of the Middle Temple, published 'The West India Question plainly stated,' 1828; 'A General Treatise on Statutes,' &c. Died 20 May, 1860, aged 73.

DWIGHT, SAMUEL, was educated at Oxford; became a licentiate of the College of Physicians 1732; and died 10 Nov., 1737. He published several medical treatises, and was the inventor of a method of colouring earthenware like china.

DWIGHT.

DWIGHT, TIMOTHY, a popular American divine of the Presbyterian persuasion, born 1752; died 11 Jan., 1817. He was president of Yale College; and published Travels in New England and New York; Sermons, &c.

DWNN, LEWIS, a Welsh herald, who flourished in the year 1614. His Visitations of Wales have been printed.

DYCE, WILLIAM, R.A., an eminent painter, was born at Aberdeen 1766, and educated at Marischal College, after which he entered the Royal Scottish Academy, completing his art studies at Rome. In 1838 he became superintendent of the new Government School of Art at Somerset House, London, but resigned that situation in 1843, on being appointed inspector of the provincial schools. In 1844 he exhibited a picture of 'King Joash shooting the Arrow of Deliverance,' which made his reputation, and secured for him the honour of being elected an associate of the Royal Academy. At a later period he was employed to paint some of the frescoes in the new palace of Westminster; and he was for some time professor of the theory of the fine arts in King's College, London. Died 14 Feb., 1864. Among his many works perhaps the best known are 'St. Dunstan separating Edwy and Elgiva'; 'Titian and Irena da Spilemburgo'; 'Omnia Vanitas'; 'The Meeting of Jacob and Rachel'; and 'Lear in the Storm.' He was also an accomplished musician and an author, as well as an artist. In 1844 he published an edition of the Common Prayer, with its ancient Canto Fermo, accompanied by a dissertation on that kind of music; and in 1851 a theological pamphlet entitled 'Notes on Shepherds and Sheep,' in reply to Ruskin's 'Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds.'—Gent. Mag.

DYCHE, THOMAS, an English divine and schoolmaster at Stratford-le-Bow, in Middlesex. He published an English dictionary; a spelling-book; and several school books of considerable utility. Died about 1750.

DYER, SIR EDWARD, an English poet, was born probably in Somersetshire about 1540. He was educated at Oxford; after which he became a courtier, and was appointed chancellor of the Garter in 1596. He died about 1610. Some of his poems are in 'England's Helicon.'

DYER, GEORGE, was born in London 15 March, 1755, and after a preparatory training at Christ's Hospital, proceeded to Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1778). Subsequently he joined the dissenters, and officiated as a preacher in various parts of the country, but eventually, in 1792, he fixed his residence in London, and maintained himself by private tuition and literary labour. His death occurred at his chambers in Clifford's Inn 2 March, 1841. Mr. Dyer was a man of the most amiable disposition, and was beloved by all who knew him. As a classical scholar he distinguished himself by editing two plays of Euripides, and also a Greek Testament; but the greatest labour of his life was the share he had in the production of Valpy's edition of the Classics in 141 vols.—being a combination of the Delphin, Bipont, and Variorum editions. With the exception of the preface, Dyer contributed all that was original in this vast work, upon which he was engaged from 1819 to 1830. Scarcely had he completed the undertaking when his eyesight gave way, and he was shortly afterwards left in total blindness. Amongst Mr. Dyer's other works the more important are Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Robert Robinson, the dissenting minister; 'An Enquiry into the Nature of Subscription to the XXXIX. Articles'; 'History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge; including notices relating to the founders and eminent men,' 2 vols 8vo., London, 1814; 'The Privileges of the University of Cambridge, together with additional Observations on its History, Antiquities, Literature, and Biography,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1824; 'Academic Unity, being the Substance of a general Dissertation contained in the Privileges of the University of Cambridge, as translated from the original Latin, with additions,' 1827; 'Poetics, or a Series of Poems and Disquisitions on Poetry'; 'Four Letters on the English Constitution.'

DYER, SIR JAMES, a judge, born at Roundshill, Somersetshire, about 1512. From Oxford he went to the Middle Temple, where he was called to the degree of a serjeant. He afterwards became Speaker of the House of Commons. In 1557 he was appointed a justice of the Common Pleas, of which court he was made chief in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Died 24 March, 1581-2. His reports are held in great estimation.

DYER, JOHN, a poet, was born at Aberglasney, Caermarthenshire, in 1700. He was educated at Westminster School, after which he became a clerk in the office of his father, who was an attorney; but he quitted that profession to study painting. This pursuit he also relinquished, and entered into orders. He obtained the living of Calthorp, and afterwards that of Belchford, in Lincolnshire, with which he held Coningsby and Kirkby, in the same county. Died 24 July, 1758; having a little before published 'The Pleece,' a poem. His other works are 'Grongar Hill,' a descriptive piece; and 'The Ruins of Rome.'

DYER, SAMUEL, F.S.A., was born about 1725. He received his education under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton, and next at Glasgow. Having a small fortune, he led a private life in London, where he became a member of Johnson's Literary Club, and died in Sept., 1772. He translated 'Les Mœurs' from the French; and some of the lives of Plutarch from the Greek. The letters of Junius have been ascribed to him without the shadow of a proof.

DYER, WILLIAM, was educated at Cambridge, and afterwards became minister of Cholesbury, Buckinghamshire, but was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity. In the latter part of his life he turned quaker. He published a number of sermons, which were once very popular. Died April, 1696, æt. 60.

DYKE, DANIEL, B.D., an eminent Puritan preacher, was educated at Cambridge, and became minister of Coggeshall, Essex; but on the publication of Whitgift's three articles in 1583 he was suspended by Bishop Aylmer. Afterwards he settled at St. Albans, but was again silenced. Mr. Dyke, who appears to have never taken more than deacon's orders, died about 1614. His works were published after his death by his brother, Jeremiah Dyke, minister of Epping, Essex.

Cambridge (M.A. 1660). In 1670 he published a book entitled 'The Grounds and Occasions of the Contempt of the Clergy,' which was answered by several writers, to whom Eachard replied with wit and argument. He next attacked Hobbes in two dialogues on the state of nature, written with exquisite humour. In 1675 he was chosen master of Catharine Hall, on which he obtained the degree of doctor in divinity by mandamus. Died 7 July, 1697. His works have been published in 1 vol. 8vo., and more completely in 3 vols. 12mo., 1774.

EADMER, or EDMER, an English monk, who in 1120 was elected bishop of St. Andrews, in Scotland, which see he refused to accept because he could not be consecrated by the archbishop of Canterbury. He died in or about 1124. His works are 'Eadmeri monachi Cant. Historia Novorum,' fol., 1623; 'A Life of St. Anselm; The Lives of St. Wilfrid, Oswald, Dunstan, &c.'

EADON, JOHN, a noted mathematician, master of the free writing-school at Sheffield, died 8 May, 1810, aged 80. He published 'The Arithmetical and Mathematical Repository, being an improved System of Arithmetic,' 1793; and 'The Arithmetician's Guide.'

EAGLES, JOHN, son of Thomas Eagles, mentioned below, was born at Bristol 1784, and educated at Winchester School, whence he proceeded to Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1812; M.A. 1818). During twelve or fourteen years he was curate of Halburton, and afterwards of Winford, near Bristol. Died 9 Nov., 1855. Mr. Eagles was a man of great literary acquirements, and an admirable artist. To Blackwood's Magazine he contributed a series of valuable essays on subjects connected with fine art, besides a number of sonnets and poems.

EAGLES, THOMAS, collector of the customs at Bristol, a gentleman of great literary accomplishments, and the translator of the Deipnosophistæ of Athenæus, died 28 Oct., 1812.

EAMES, JOHN, F.R.S., a dissenting minister and schoolmaster, was born in London, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School. He kept an academy in Wapping, and was a fellow of the Royal Society, whose Transactions he abridged, with Lowthorp and Jones. Died 1744. A MS. work by him, entitled 'Mechanica, sive de Motu Corporum,' was formerly in the library of M. Libri.

EARLE, JABEZ, a dissenting divine, was born about 1676, and died in 1768. He officiated in the London meeting-houses near seventy years. Besides some sermons, he published 'A Treatise on the Sacrament;' and a collection of poems, Latin and English.

EARLE, JOHN, an English prelate, born at York 1601. He took his degrees at Merton College, Oxford, and became sub-tutor to Prince Charles by the appointment of Bishop Duppa, who gave him the place of chancellor in his cathedral, of which he was deprived in the Rebellion. He then went abroad, and attended the king as his chaplain. At the Restoration he was made dean of Westminster, and, in 1663, consecrated bishop of Worcester. He was translated to Salisbury 1663, and died 17 Nov., 1665. He wrote 'An Elegy on Mr. Francis Beaumont;' 'Microcosmography; or a Piece of the World discovered: in Essays and Characters.' The best edition of this entertaining little work is that of Dr. Philip Bliss, 1811. Bishop Earle also published a Latin translation of the 'Bikon Basilike.'

EBEL.

EARLE, WILLIAM BENSON, a benevolent gentleman, born at Shaftesbury 7 July, 1740; died at Salisbury 21 March, 1796. He left above £7,000 to charitable purposes, and above £1,500 to scientific and agricultural societies. Mr. Benson wrote an account of the eruption of Mount Ætna in 1766.

EARLON, RICHARD, an engraver and painter, born in London 1742; died 9 Oct., 1822.

EASTHOPP, SIR JOHN, a politician and journalist, was born at Tewkesbury 1784, and sat in parliament successively for St. Albans, Banbury, and Leicester. In 1834 he became the proprietor of the Morning Chronicle, then the leading organ of the liberal party, for his services to which he was created a baronet. Died 11 Dec., 1865.

EASTLAKE, SIR CHARLES LOCKE, a painter, born at Plymouth 17 Nov., 1793, and educated at the Charterhouse, which he quitted at an early age for the purpose of pursuing his artistic studies. For several years he resided at Rome. He was made a Royal Academician 1830, and twenty years later succeeded Sir M. A. Sisee as president of the Royal Academy, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He was appointed director of the National Gallery 1855, and died 24 Dec., 1865. His earlier works were costume-groups illustrative of Italian life; but he afterwards took to a higher branch of art, and painted a number of pictures on religious subjects. Among the more remarkable of these were 'Christ blessing the little Children,' 'Christ weeping over Jerusalem,' 'Hagar and Ishmael.' He also made several valuable contributions to the literature of the fine arts by publishing 'Goethe on Colour,' 'Notes to Kugler's Hand-book of Painting,' and 'Contributions towards a History of Oil Painting.'

EASTMEAD, WILLIAM, an English clergyman, who wrote 'Historia Ricwallensis: containing the History of Kirkby Moorside, and an account of the most important places in its vicinity,' 8vo., London, 1824; 'Observations on Human Life;' 'The Perfections of the Works of Christ;' 'The Complaint;' and 'The Power of Satan Limited, and his Policy confounded by Christ.' I have been unable to ascertain the date of his decease.

EASTWOOD, JONATHAN, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1846; M.A. 1849), and taking orders, became successively curate of Eckington, Derbyshire, and incumbent of Hope, Staffordshire. He died at St. Leonards-on-Sea 5 July, 1864, aged 40. Mr. Eastwood published 'Notes on Scriptural and Liturgical Words,' and 'The History of the Parish of Ecclesfield, in the County of York,' 8vo., London, 1862.

EATON, CHARLOTTE ANNE, nee Waldie, an English authoress, wife of Mr. Stephen Eaton, died 1859. She wrote several works, 'At Home and Abroad;' 'Three Days in Belgium,' &c. Her sister, Jane, who became the wife of George Augustus Watts, and died 1826, wrote 'Waterloo by a near Observer,' and 'Sketches in Italy.'

EATON, JOHN, was born in Kent 1575, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford (M.A. 1603). In 1625 he was presented to the living of Wickham Market, Suffolk, where he died 1641. His writings, which have a tendency to Antinomianism, are 'The Discovery of a most dangerous Dead Faith,' and 'The Honeycomb of Free Justification.' For the latter he was imprisoned by the Long Parliament. It was from this divine that the Antinomians were termed 'Eatonists.'

EBERT, JOHN ARNOLD, a German poet, who translated Young's 'Night Thoughts' and Glover's 'Leonidas' into his native tongue. Born 1725; died 10 March, 1795.

EBERT, THEODORE, rector of the university of Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, and a profound Hebrew scholar, died 1030. He published several learned works.

EBION, the founder of a sect, in the first century, who denied the divinity of Christ, and received only a mutilated copy of the Gospel of St. Matthew.

ECCARDUS. See ECKHART.

ECCHELLENSIS, ABRAHAM, a Maronite, who became professor of oriental languages at Rome, where he died 1664. He translated from Arabic into Latin some of the books of Apollonius's comics, and assisted Le Jay at Paris in the publication of his Polyglott Bible.

ECCLES, AMBROSE, a native of Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, after which he travelled on the continent. From France he went to Italy, where he studied the language with great success. On his return he devoted himself chiefly to literary pursuits, the fruits of which appeared in his illustrated editions of Shakspeare's plays of 'Lear,' 'Cymbeline,' and 'The Merchant of Venice.' He had prepared 'As You Like It' upon the same plan, but died 1809, before he could give it to the public. To each of the above plays he assigned a volume of notes, with critical and historical essays; and to 'Cymbeline' he added a version of the ninth tale of Boccaccio's 'Decamerone.'

ECCLES, JOHN, son of Solomon, hereafter noticed, acquired great popularity as a violinist and composer for the theatre. Died 1735.

ECCLES, SOLOMON, an English musician, who turned quaker, and thereupon destroyed his instruments. He pretended to the gift of prophecy and the power of working miracles, but at last became a deist. He died at the close of the seventeenth century.

ECCLESTON, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, who was employed on the Yorkshire mission, and for a time served Ingatestone Hall, passing by the name of Holland. He was rector of St. Omer's College 1731-7, and died in England 30 Dec., 1743, O.S. He was the author of a treatise entitled 'The Way to Happiness,' 8vo., London, 1726.—Oliver.

ECHARD, JACQUES, a French Dominican friar, who wrote the lives of the learned men of his order, was born at Rouen 22 Sept., 1644, and died at Paris 15 March, 1724.

ECHARD, LAURENCE, was born at Cassam, Suffolk, about 1671, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, after which he was presented to the livings of Welton and Elkinton, Lincolnshire. In 1699 he published his Roman History, which was followed in 1702 by his General Ecclesiastical History. In 1707 he published the first volume of his History of England, which he completed in two more volumes in 1718. This work does credit to his candour and industry; but the story of Oliver Cromwell and the devil brought it into disrepute. In 1712 he was made archdeacon of Stowe, and in the reign of George I. presented to the livings of Rendlesham, Sudbourn, and Alford, in Suffolk. Died 16 Aug., 1730. Besides the above works he published a Gazetteer; a Description of Ireland; a translation of three comedies of Plautus; another of Terence; and a volume of maxims from Tullotson.

ECKHART, JOHN GEORGE, of Eccardus, a German historian and antiquary, born 7 Sept., 1674. He became professor of history, first at Helmstadt, and next at Hanover; but on embracing the Catholic religion he removed to Wurtzburg, where he died Feb., 1730. His works are numerous.

ECKHEL, JOSEPH HILARY, a Jesuit, born at Entzesheld, in Austria, 13 Jan., 1737. He was appointed director of the imperial cabinet of medals, and professor of antiquities, at Vienna. Died 10 May, 1798. His works on numismatics are deservedly held in great repute.

ECKIUS, JOHN, a divine of the Roman church, born in Swabia 1483. He became professor at Ingoldstadt, and distinguished himself by his opposition to Luther at the diet of Augsburg. Died 1543. He wrote several controversial treatises against the Protestants.

ECLUSE. See L'ECLUSE.

ECTION, JOHN, receiver of the tenths of the clergy, died at Turnham Green, Middlesex, 20 Aug., 1730. He was the original compiler of the 'Liber Regis,' which has passed through numerous editions. It contains an account of the valuations of all the ecclesiastical benefices in England and Wales.

EDEMA, GERARD, a Dutch landscape and botanical painter, who resided in London for some years, was born about 1654, and died about 1700.

EDEN. See AUCLAND.

EDEN, SIR FREDERICK MORTON, Bart., of Auckland, county Durham, a man of distinguished knowledge, particularly on political and commercial subjects, died in London 14 Nov., 1809, aged 43. Among his works are 'The State of the Poor; or an History of the Labouring Classes in England,' 3 vols.; 'An Estimate of the Number of Inhabitants in Great Britain, 1801'; 'Observations on Friendly Societies'; and 'Eight Letters on the Peace, and on the Commercial Manufactures of Great Britain.'

EDEN, RICHARD, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, under the celebrated Thomas (afterwards Sir Thomas) Smith. Of his subsequent career all that has been discovered is that on 1 Aug., 1562, he was living at the Fold beside Barnet, in the house of a friend. He died before 4 July, 1577. A list of his works, consisting of translations of Voyages and Travels, is given in Cooper's 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses.' Eden was the first Englishman who undertook to present in a collective form the astonishing results of the spirit of maritime enterprise which had been everywhere awakened by the discovery of America.

EDEN, THOMAS, LL.D., an eminent civilian. He was master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, M.P. for the university, and Gresham professor of Law. Died 1645.

EDGAR.

EDGAR, king of England, succeeded his brother Edwy 929, and died 8 July, 975, aged 33.

EDGAR, king of Scotland, died 8 Jan., 1107.

EDGAR ATHELING, the son of Edward, the son of Edmund Ironside, king of England, was bred up by Edward the Confessor, his great-uncle, who intended him for his successor. But on his death he was supplanted by Harold, son of Earl Godwin, in 1066, after whose death the people considered Edgar as king; but the success of William duke of Normandy frustrated their loyal intentions. He then retired to the north, where he collected many followers, and made himself master of York; but being deserted by many of his troops, he was obliged to retire to Scotland. From thence he went to Normandy, where he was well received by Duke Robert. He was with Baldwin II. in the crusade, and on his return was honoured by several of the European sovereigns for his valour. He died at Malmesbury.

EDGAR, JOHN GEORGE, an English writer, died 15 or 22 April, 1864, aged 30. He was the editor of the 'Boys' Own Magazine,' and author of several novels and entertaining works on English history and biography.

EDGEWORTH DE FIRMONT, HENRY ALLEN (the Abbé), a Catholic divine, born 1745, at Edgeworthstown, in Ireland. His father, who was a benefited clergyman of the Church of England, became a convert to the Catholic faith, in consequence of which he went abroad and settled with his family at Toulouse. The son studied at Paris, and entered into the fraternity of 'Les Missions Etrangères.' His piety recommended him to the Princess Elizabeth, who made him her confessor; by which means he became known to Louis XVI., whom he attended in his distress, and accompanied to the scaffold. After this he escaped in disguise, and got to England, from whence he went to Mittau, to wait upon Louis XVIII., and died there of a fever, caught in the discharge of his spiritual duties at the military hospital, 22 May, 1807. His letters were printed in 1818, with his life prefixed.

EDGEWORTH, MARIA, daughter of Richard Lovell Edgeworth, was born in England 1 Jan., 1797, but at the age of thirteen was removed to Ireland, in which country she passed the greater portion of her life. Devoting herself to literature, she published 'Castle Rackrent,' which at once established her in the first class of novelists as a shrewd observer of manners, a warm-hearted gatherer of national humours, and a resolute upholder of good morals in fiction. This work was the precursor of a long series of Irish tales, among the best of which are 'Vivian,' 'To-morrow,' and 'The Absentee.' In conjunction with her father she wrote the well-known Essay on Irish Bulls, and the treatise on Practical Education. Her death occurred at Edgeworthstown, county Longford, 21 May, 1849.

EDGEWORTH, RICHARD LOVELL, a relation of the Abbé Edgeworth, was born at Bath 1744, and died at Edgeworthstown 13 June, 1817. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and next at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whence he removed to the Temple. Instead, however, of studying the law, he applied to the mathematical sciences, and became an excellent mechanic. In 1797 he invented the telegraph, which many years after he saw generally adopted. He also contrived several agricultural instruments and wheel carriages upon new principles. On going to France, he was employed in directing the works across the Rhine at Lyons. In 1780 he became a member of the Royal Society; and in 1785 he was named in the patent for establishing the Royal Irish Academy. He proved a great benefactor to that part of the country where he resided by making railways, draining bogs, and introducing an improved system of agriculture. Some years before he died he formed a spire for the church of Edgeworthstown, which was all constructed of framework on the ground, and then elevated by machinery to the tower, where it was fixed. Mr. Edgeworth published Poetry Explained; Readings in Poetry; Essays on Practical Education, 2 vols.; Professional Education; Letter to Lord Charlemont on the Telegraph; Essay on the Construction of Roads; besides various tracts and papers in the Philosophical Transactions, the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, &c.

EDLIN, RICHARD, an English writer on astrology, died Jan., 1676-7.

EDMONDES, SIR CLEMENT, son of Sir Thomas Edmondes, comptroller to Queen Elizabeth's household, was born in Shropshire 1566. He became fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, and on entering into public life obtained the place of master of requests, with the honour of knighthood. Died 12 Oct., 1622. He wrote Observations on Caesar's Commentaries.

EDMONDES, SIR THOMAS, was born at Plymouth about 1563. After filling several diplomatic situations with great honour he became clerk of the privy council, and secretary for the French language to Queen Elizabeth. James I. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, gave him the reversionary grant of clerk of the crown, and sent him envoy to Brussels and Paris. Died 20 Sept., 1639. His state papers were published by Dr. Birch, 1749.

EDMONDSON, JOSEPH, F.S.A., a genealogist, was originally a barber; but discovering a strong predilection for blazoning arms, he became a herald painter. He was appointed Mowbray herald extraordinary 1764, and died 17 Feb., 1786. His works are 'Historical Account of the Greville Family;' 'A Companion to the Peerage;' 'A Complete Body of Heraldry,' 2 vols. folio; 'Baronagium Genealogicum, or the Pedigrees of English Peers,' 6 vols. folio.

EDMONDSTON, ARTHUR, M.D., a Scotch physician, who wrote some professional works and also 'A View of the Ancient and Present State of the Zetland Islands,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1810. He died at Lerwick 1841.

EDMONDSTON, HENRY, a surgeon of Newcastle-on-Tyne, who wrote a work on Cow-pox, and many valuable papers in the medical periodicals. Died 1831.

EDMONDSTONE, ROBERT, a Scotch artist, born 1794; died at Sept., 1834.

EDMUND (St.), king of the East Angles, was defeated and taken prisoner by the Danes under Ivar, who caused him to be fastened to a tree and shot to death with arrows, 20 Nov., 870. His remains were interred at Bury St. Edmunds, in Suffolk.

EDMUND (St.), archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Abingdon, and studied at Paris. On his return to England he became an eminent preacher. Pope Innocent III. appointed him to the archbishopric, but incurring the resentment of King Henry III. he was obliged to retire to France, EDRIDGE, HENRY, A.R.A., F.S.A., a landscape and miniature painter, born at Paddington, London, 1768; died 23 April, 1821.

EDWARD the Elder, king of the West Saxons, succeeded Alfred 901, and died 924.

EDWARD THE MARTYR (St.), the younger son of Edgar the Great, succeeded 975, and was murdered 978.

EDWARD THE CONFESSOR (St.), son of Ethelred, succeeded 1041, and died 5 Jan., 1066.

EDWARD I., king of England, was born 1239; succeeded his father, Henry III., 1272; died 7 July, 1307.

EDWARD II., son of the preceding, was born 1284, succeeded to the throne 1307, and was murdered 21 Sept., 1327.

EDWARD III., son of the preceding, was born 1312, ascended the throne 1327, died 21 June, 1377.

EDWARD IV., son of Richard of York, was born 1441, obtained the crown 1461, died 9 April, 1483.

EDWARD V., son of the preceding, was born 1470, and succeeded to the throne when only twelve years old. He was murdered in the Tower 1483, by direction of his uncle, afterwards Richard III.

EDWARD VI., son of Henry VIII. by Jane Seymour, ascended the throne at the age of ten, 1547, and died 6 July, 1553.

EDWARD THE BLACK PRINCE, eldest son of Edward III., was born 1330, and died 8 June, 1376.

EDWARDS, BRYAN, was born 21 May, 1743, at Westbury, Wiltshire. He was brought up by his maternal uncle, a planter in Jamaica, to whose property he succeeded, as he also did to that of Mr. Hume, another merchant of the same island. In 1796 he was elected to parliament for Gram-pound, which borough he represented till his death 15 July, 1800. His works are Thoughts on the trade of the West India Islands; A Speech on the Slave Trade; History of the British Colonies in the West Indies; The Proceedings of the Governor and Assembly of Jamaica in regard to the Maroon Negroes.

EDWARDS, EDWARD, an artist, born in London 7 March, 1738. He was brought up to his father's business of a chair-maker and carver, but quitted it for drawing, in which he acquired skill enough to become a teacher, and by that means he supported his mother when a widow, and also his brother and sister. He obtained two premiums from the Society of Arts for historical pictures, and in 1773 became an associate of the Royal Academy. After this he visited Italy, and on his return was employed by several gentlemen, particularly Horace Walpole and Mr. Hamilton of Bath. In 1788 he was appointed teacher of perspective in the Royal Academy. Died 19 Dec., 1806. Mr. Edwards published a 'Treatise on Perspective,' and after his death there appeared his 'Anecdotes of Painters,' with his own life prefixed.

EDWARDS, GEORGE, an eminent naturalist, born at Stratford, in the parish of West Ham, Essex, 3 April, 1693. He was bred to trade, but on the expiration of his apprenticeship he renounced the shop, and went abroad. On his return to England he was appointed librarian of the College of Physicians. He published the History of Birds, 7 vols.; Gleanings of Natural History, 3 vols.; and a volume of Essays. Died 23 July, 1773.

EDWARDS, JOHN, D.D., son of the author of 'Gangræna,' was born at Hertford 26 Feb., 1637. He received his education at Merchant Taylors' School, London, from whence he went to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was chosen fellow. After the Restoration he was ordained, and became minister of Trinity Church, Cambridge. He was next chosen lecturer of Bury St. Edmunds, and soon after gave up his fellowship. From Cambridge he removed to the living of St. Peter's, Colchester, but after continuing there three years returned and took his doctor's degree. Died 16 April, 1716. Dr. Edwards was a zealous Calvinist, and a most voluminous writer. The principal of his numerous works is entitled 'The Preacher,' 3 vols.

EDWARDS, JONATHAN, D.D., was born at Wrexham, Denbighshire, 1629. He was a servitor of Christ Church, Oxford, and afterwards fellow of Jesus College, of which he became principal, and also treasurer of Llandaff in 1687. Died 20 July, 1712. He published 'A Preservative against Socialism.'

EDWARDS, JONATHAN, president of the college of New Jersey, and a Calvinistic divine of very considerable fame in the United States, was born at Windsor, in Connecticut, 5 Oct., 1703, and died 22 March, 1758. He published the Life of David Brainerd, a missionary; An Inquiry into the notion of Freedom of Will, which is supposed to be essential to moral agency; The great Christian doctrine of Original Sin defended; and other theological works.

EDWARDS, RICHARD, an English writer, born in Somersetshire 1523, and educated at Oxford. Queen Elizabeth made him gentleman of her chapel and teacher of music to the children of the choir. He wrote two comedies, entitled respectively 'Damon and Pythias,' and 'Palemon and Arcyte,' besides some poems, which are printed in the 'Paradise of Dainty Devices.' Died 31 Oct., 1566.

EDWARDS, TEAK SYDENHAM, F.L.S., an accurate and able botanical draughtsman, who designed and established 'The Botanical Register,' and was employed by Mr. Curtis and the elder Mr. Sowerby in all their publications. He died 8 Feb., 1819, æt. 50.

EDWARDS, THOMAS, an English divine, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (M.A. 1609). He was a Presbyterian, and in the civil war wrote with equal zeal against the Episcopalian and Independents. When the latter gained the ascendancy he withdrew to Holland, where he died 24 Aug., 1647. His 'Gangræna' exhibits a curious picture of the religious divisions of that period.

EDWARDS, THOMAS, a divine and orientalist, was born at Llanllechid, Carnarvonshire, 1652, and received his academical education at Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. In the early part of his life he lived with Dr. Edmund Castell, the compiler of the Heptaglot Lexicon; and in 1685 he was engaged by Dr. Fell, bishop of Oxford, to assist in the impression of the New Testament in Coptic, almost finished by Dr. Thomas Marshall. He became rector of Aldwinckle, Northamptonshire, 1707, and died 1721. He left a Coptic Lexicon ready for the press, and published 'Diocesan Episcopacy proved from Holy Scripture;' with a letter to Edmund Calamy in room of an epistle dedicatory,' 8vo., London, 1705.

EDWARDS, THOMAS, a miscellaneous writer, was born in 1699, at or near London. At a proper age he was entered of Lincoln's Inn, and in due course called to the bar, which, however, he did not follow on account of an impediment in his speech. From his zeal for Shakspeare he attacked Warburton's edition of his favourite author, which drew a severe retort, and Edwards retaliated in his 'Canons of Criticism, with a Glossary,' of which there were seven editions. To the last he added fifty sonnets in the manner of Spenser, and an account of the trial of the latter. Died 3 Jan., 1757. In 1761 appeared his tract on the doctrine of predestination.

EDWARDS, THOMAS, D.D., a divine, born at Coventry 10 Aug., 1729, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1755 he published a translation of the Psalms, reduced to metre, on the plan of Bishop Hare. In 1758 he was appointed master of the school at Coventry, and rector of St. John the Baptist in that city. The year following he published a book against the doctrine of Irresistible Grace. In 1762 he attacked Dr. Lowth's 'Metrice Hariana,' in a Latin dissertation, to which Lowth replied in a note, and Edwards rejoined in a Latin epistle, which called forth a more elaborate answer. In 1766 our author took his doctor's degree, after which he published 'Two dissertations on Bigotry and Persecution.' His next publication was in Latin, being 'Two dissertations;' the first concerning various readings in the Scripture text, and the second on St. Paul's doctrine of Predestination,' 8vo. In 1770 he was presented to the living of Nuneaton, in Warwickshire; and in 1779 he resigned the school and the rectory of St. John's. He died at Nuneaton 30 June, 1785. Besides the above works he published 'Selecta quædam Theoreticæ Idyllia,' and some sermons.

EDWARDS, THOMAS, LL.D., fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge, editor of Plutarch 'On Education,' author of a Discourse on Free Enquiry in matters of Religion, and of tracts on classical literature, flourished 1798.

EDWARDS, WILLIAM, a common mason, who acquired celebrity as a bridge-builder. His bridge over the river Taaf, which is the segment of a circle, the chord of which is 147 feet from the surface of the water, is a remarkable instance of his ingenuity. He was occasionally a Methodist preacher. Born 1719; died in his native parish of Egwilsian, county Glamorgan, 1789.

EDWIN, JOHN, an English comic actor, who was distinguished by his eccentric habits, as well as by his histrionic talents. Born 1749; died 31 Oct., 1790.

EDWY, succeeded as king of England 955, and died in exile 1 Oct., 959.

ECKHOUT, ANTHONY VANDER, a fruit and flower painter, was born at Brussels 1656, and settled at Lisbon, where he was murdered 1695.

EGERTON, JOHN, bishop of Durham, was the son of Henry bishop of Hereford, and born in London 30 Nov., 1721. He received his education at Eton, and next at Oriel College, Oxford. In 1745 he obtained the rectory of Ross, and the year following a prebend in the cathedral of Hereford. He was appointed chaplain to the king 1749, and the next year dean of Hereford. In 1769 he was consecrated bishop of Bangor, translated to Lichfield 1768, and finally to Durham 1771. Died 18 Jan., 1787. The bishop published only three sermons. He was a most munificent prelate.

EGERTON, THOMAS, Lord Ellesmere, and afterwards Viscount Brackley. See BRACKLEY.

EGG, AUGUSTUS LEOPOLD, R.A., a painter, born in London 1817. He became a contributor to the Academy 1838, and produced a great number of pictures illustrative of humorous scenes from Shakspeare, Le Sage, and Sir W. Scott. Died at Algiers 26 March, 1863.

EGGELING, JOHN HENRY, a learned antiquary and numismatist of Bremen, born 23 May, 1639; died 15 Feb., 1713.

EGGLESFIELD, ROBERT, the founder of Queen's College, Oxford, was a native of Cumberland. In 1332 he became rector of Burgh, in Westmorland, but he lived at court, where he was chaplain to Philippa, queen of Edward III. Died June, 1349.

EGINHARD, a German historian, wrote a Latin life of Charlemagne, to whom he had been secretary, and the Annals of France from 741 to 829. Died about 840.

EGINTON, FRANCIS, an Englishman, distinguished by his skill in painting on glass, was born 1737, and died 26 March, 1805.

EGMONT, JUSTUS VAN, painter to the king of France, was born at Leyden 1602, and died 8 Jan., 1674.

EGMONT, LAMORAL, Count, a Flemish nobleman, born 1522. He served in the armies of Charles V., and was general of the horse at the battle of St. Quintin, and also at that of Gravelines. After the departure of Philip II. of Spain he took part in the troubles of the Low Countries, for which the duke of Alva caused him to be beheaded at Brussels 5 June, 1568.

EGNAZIO, JOHN BAPTIST, a celebrated Italian scholar, professor of eloquence at Venice, was born in that city about 1478, and died 4 July, 1553.

EHRET, GEORGE DIONYSIUS, F.R.S., a botanical painter, born in Germany 1710. In 1736 he was employed by Mr. Clifford, in Holland, for whom he illustrated with beautiful figures the Hortus Cliffortianus. Thence he came to England, where he met with liberal encouragement. He painted a number of flowers in the English botanical gardens, of which one hundred were engraved, under the title of 'Plantæ Selectæ.' Died Sept., 1770.

EICHMAN. See ENCIAS.

EICHORN, JOHN GOTTFRIED, a distinguished German orientalist and biblical critic; professor at Jena, and afterwards at Göttingen; was born 1752, and died 25 June, 1827. His son, Charles Frederick (born 1781; died July, 1854), attained distinction as a jurist.

EISENMENGER, JOHN ANDREW, professor of oriental languages at Heidelberg, was born at Mannheim 1654, and died 20 Dec., 1704. His writings are chiefly directed against the traditions and Talmudical doctrines of the Jews.

EISENSCHMIDT, JOHN GASPAR, a physician, born at Strasburg 15 Nov., 1656; died 4 Dec., 1712. His most celebrated work was a treatise on the figure of the earth.

EKINS, JEFFERY, D.D., a native of Cheshire, was educated at Eton, and at King's College, Cambridge. He became rector of Sedgfield, afterwards of Morpeth, and lastly dean of Carlisle. Died 20 Nov., 1791. He translated from the Greek of Apollonius Rhodius 'The Loves of Medea and Jason,' 1771.

ELDER, WILLIAM, an eminent Scotch engraver, died about 1698.

ELDON, JOHN SCOTT, EARL OF, was the son of William Scott, a coal-fitter of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the brother of Lord Stowell. He was born 4 June, 1751, and after proceeding through the royal grammar school of his native town was sent to the university of Oxford. He chose the bar as a profession, but his earliest efforts as an advocate were not very brilliant. Lord Chancellor Thurlow, however, appreciated his talents and capacity, and took him under his patronage. By his lordship's influence Mr. Scott obtained a seat in the House of Commons, where he proved himself to be a clever legislator and a fluent speaker. In 1783 he was made a privy councillor; and in 1788 solicitor-general. On the latter occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He was advanced to the attorney-generalship 1793. The period during which he held this office was memorable for the state trials connected with the political excitement produced in this country by the breaking out of the French revolution. In 1799 he was constituted chief justice of the court of Common Pleas, being at the same time raised to the peerage. In 1801 he was nominated lord high chancellor, and he retained the seals until Fox came into office. They were restored to him 1807, on the return of his party to power, and he finally resigned them 1827, when Mr. Canning became prime minister. Died 17 Jan., 1838. Lord Eldon was notorious for his obstinate opposition to Parliamentary Reform and Catholic Emancipation.

ELEUTHERIUS (St.), Pope of Rome, succeeded Soter 171, and died 26 May, 185.

ELGIN AND KINCARDINE, JAMES BRUCE, eighth EARL OF, eldest son of Thomas the seventh earl, was born in London 20 July, 1811. From Eton he proceeded to Christchurch, Oxford, and afterwards became a fellow of Merton College in that university. In 1841 he entered parliament for Southampton, and the same year succeeded to the earldom, which, being a Scotch one, did not affect his seat in the House of Commons. This, however, he resigned 1842, on being appointed governor-general of Jamaica. In 1846 he was despatched in a like capacity to Canada, and during his administration, which extended over eight years, he did much to quell discontent, and to knit the Canadian provinces closely to the mother country. His services were rewarded by his being, in 1849, raised to the British peerage as Baron Elgin. From Canada he was transferred to China as special ambassador. On his way thither he received news of the Indian mutiny, and took the determined step of landing some of his own troops to assist in suppressing it. But notwithstanding this diminution of the force under his control, his expedition to China proved a success, as he saw Canton taken, and negotiated the important treaty of Tientsin. In 1859 he became a member of Lord Palmerston's cabinet, with the office of postmaster-general. But he was not destined to remain long at home. His brother, Mr. Bruce, had been appointed envoy in China, and, in accordance with the treaty, he ought to have been received at Peking. Access to the capital was, however, refused to him, save on conditions which were considered derogatory to the British representative; and when the rights secured by treaty were insisted upon, there ensued the disaster of the Peiho. Forthwith, in 1860, Lord Elgin was despatched once more to sustain the English authority, and he thoroughly fulfilled his mission by entering Peking in state and compelling the submission of the Celestial chiefs. Scarcely had he gained this triumph when he was appointed to succeed Lord Canning as governor-general of India, where he maintained external peace and developed the internal and material resources of the country. During a tour in the north of India he died at Dhurumsala in the valley of Cashmere 20 Nov., 1863.

ELGIN AND KINCARDINE, THOMAS BRUCE, seventh EARL OF, was born 1766, and succeeded to the title while an infant. After passing through Harrow and Westminster schools, he studied in the university of St. Andrews, and then entered the army, attaining eventually in 1837 the rank of general. He greatly distinguished himself as a diplomatist, being entrusted with several missions of the highest importance. In 1795 he was nominated envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin; and in 1799 he proceeded to Constantinople in the same capacity. To this latter appointment we owe the collection and preservation of the Elgin Marbles and other treasures of ancient art, which in 1816 were purchased by the nation for £35,000, and are now deposited in the British Museum. Lord Elgin died at Paris 14 Nov., 1841.

ELIAS LEVITA, a German rabbi, who taught Hebrew at Rome and Venice. He published several learned works, and by his rejection of the antiquity of the Hebrew vowel points brought upon himself the enmity of his brethren. Born 1472; died 1549.

ELIAS, MATTHEW, a painter, born near Cassel 1658; died at Dunkirk 22 April, 1741. He was professor of painting in the academy of St. Luke, at Paris.

ELICHMANN, JOHN, a native of Silesia, practised physic at Leyden, where he died 1639. He was well acquainted with sixteen languages, and published, among other works, the Arabic and Greek versions of the Tablature of Ceibes, accompanied by a Latin translation by himself.

ELIE DE BEAUMONT, JEAN BAPTISTE JACQUES, a French advocate, born Oct., 1732. He distinguished himself by his affecting memoir of the family of Calas, and several other esteemed pieces. Died 10 Jan., 1786. His wife (born 1729; died 1783) wrote an excellent novel entitled Letters of the Marquis of Roselle.

ELIOT, FRANCIS PERCEVAL, one of the commissioners of audit at Somerset House, London, wrote 'Letters on the Subject of the Armed Yeomanry, 1794; 'Observations on the Fallacy of the Supposed Depreciation of the Paper Currency,' 1811; and 'Demonstration; or Financial Remarks,' Died 23 Aug., 1818, æt. 63.

ELIOT, SIR JOHN, a distinguished patriot, born at Port Eliot, Cornwall, 20 April, 1590, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He left the university without a degree, and subsequently studied in one of the inns of court. In 1614 he entered the House of Commons as member for St. Germans, and greatly distinguished himself by his eloquence and independent spirit. He received the honour of knighthood on being appointed vice-admiral of Devon. While holding this office he captured a famous pirate named Nutt, but instead of being rewarded for this gallant deed he was actually cast into prison, as the 'rover' had very influential friends at court. After a time Eliot regained his liberty, and was returned to the parliament which assembled in 1623. In the reign of Charles I. he came into prominence as one of the popular champions, and, like most of his brethren, evinced his spirit of liberality and toleration by loudly clamouring for penal laws against the unfortunate Catholics. He became at length so troublesome to the court that he was cast into the Tower together with Holles, Selden, and others. The harsh treatment he received in prison caused his death 27 Nov., 1632. Mr. John Forster published in 1863 an excellent biography of Eliot, who is termed by Hallam, 'the most illustrious confessor in the cause of liberty which that time produced.'

ELIOT, JOHN, called the Apostle of the Indians, was born in Devonshire or Cornwall about 1604. He was educated at Cambridge; after which he became an assistant at a school, but being dismissed on account of his nonconformity, he went to New England, where he was chosen pastor of an Independent congregation. In 1646 he began to study the Indian language, that he might be enabled to preach to the native tribes of America. In this he had such success, that he undertook a translation of the Bible into the Mohawk tongue. He wrote several books, as, an Indian Grammar, a Primer for the Indians, &c. Died 1689.

ELIZABETH OF HUNGARY (St.), daughter of Andrew II., king of Hungary, was born 1207, and married, 1221, Louis, landgrave of Hesse, by whom she had three children. After the landgrave's death she was deprived of the regency, and reduced to beg her bread from door to door. She was, however, afterwards settled in the palace and treated suitably to her rank; but, preferring a state of humiliation to dignity, she took the habit of the third order of St. Francis, and employed herself in spinning wool, and attending on the poor in the hospital at Marburg, founded by herself, in which holy exercises she died 10 Nov., 1231, aged 24. She was canonised by Gregory IX. four years afterwards.

ELIZABETH (St.), daughter of Peter III., king of Aragon, was born 1271, and married 1281 to Dionysius, king of Portugal, after whose decease she took the habit of St. Clare, and founded the convent of Coimbra. Died 4 July, 1336.

ELIZABETH, queen of England, was the daughter of Henry VIII. by Anne Boleyn. She was born 1533; succeeded to the throne on the death of her half-sister, Queen Mary, 17 Nov., 1558; and died 24 March, 1602-3.

ELIZABETH PETROVNA, daughter of the Czar Peter the Great, was born 1709. She usurped the imperial throne by dethroning the infant Ivan 1741, and died 20 Dec., 1761.

ELLENBOROUGH, EDWARD LAW, LORD, fourth son of Edmund Law, bishop of Carlisle, was born at Great Salkeld, Cumberland, 1749. He was educated at the Charterhouse, and next at Peterhouse, Cambridge. After taking his first degree he entered at Lincoln's Inn, and when called to the bar went the northern circuit. The trial of Warren Hastings gave ample scope for Mr. Law's talents, he being the leading counsel for that gentleman. In 1801 he was made attorney-general; and the next year he succeeded Lord Kenyon as chief justice of the King's Bench, on which occasion he was created Baron Ellenborough. He died shortly after the resignation of his office 13 Dec., 1818.

ELLER DE BROCKHUSEN, JOHN THEODORE, a physician and medical writer, in the service of Frederic I. and Frederic II. of Prussia, was born 1680, and died 31 Sept., 1760.

ELLERKER, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, who died at Stonyhurst 1 May, 1795. Dr. Oliver pronounces him to have been one of the ablest professors of theology that the English college ever produced, and adds that his treatise 'De Incarnatione' may be regarded as a chef-d'œuvre.

ELLESME, FRANCIS EGERTON, EARL OF, was born 1 Jan., 1800, being second son of the marquis of Stafford, afterwards duke of Sutherland. After passing through Eton School and Christchurch, Oxford, he entered the House of Commons, being then known as Lord Francis Leveson Gower. He gave an earnest support to the policy of Mr. Canning. In 1828 he was sworn of the privy council, and not long afterwards accompanied the marquis of Anglesey to Ireland as chief secretary. From July to November, 1830, he was secretary-at-war. He was raised to the peerage 1840; and died 18 Feb., 1857. The earl was a man of great literary acquirements, and wrote a translation of Faust; the Pilgrimage, a poem; Mediterranean Sketches; and several poems which were printed for private circulation.

ELLESME, THOMAS EGERTON, LORD. See BRACKLEY, VISCOUNT.

ELLIGER, OTTOMAR, principal painter to the elector of Brandenburg, was born at Gottenburg 1632, or 1633, and died 1688. His son, Ottomar (born 1666; died 24 Nov., 1732), acquired fame as an historical painter.

ELLIOT, GILBERT, earl of Minto. See MINTO.

ELLIOT, SIR GILBERT, baronet, of Minto, in

ELLIOT.

Scotland, was born Sept., 1722. He became an advocate, and besides distinguishing himself in his profession, gave proofs that he possessed considerable literary abilities. After filling several high official situations, he died Jan., 1777. He wrote some beautiful ballads, and maintained a philosophical correspondence with David Hume.

ELLIOT, SIR JOHN, a physician, was a native of Peebles, in Scotland. He was bred a surgeon, in which capacity he went out in a private ship of war, which took a valuable prize. His share of the prize-money enabled him to become a physician, and so great was his practice in London, that he realized £5,000 a-year. He was created a baronet; and died 7 Nov., 1786. Sir John wrote various popular works relative to medical science.

ELLIOT, or SHELDON, NATHANIEL, an English Jesuit, born May, 1705, was called to the government of the colleges at St. Omer, Rome, and Bruges, and also to be provincial of his brethren in difficult and stormy times. On quitting office he retired to Holt, where he died to Oct., 1780. 'The Occasional Letters on the Affairs of the Jesuits in France' were collected and published in London under his direction; with the 'Judgment of the Bishops of France concerning the Doctrine, Government, Conduct, and usefulness of the French Jesuits.' He was also the translator of Pinamonti's treatise of 'The Cross in its true Light,' 1775.—Oliver.

ELLIOTT, EBENEZER, an English poet, known principally by his 'Corn-Law Rhymes,' was born at Masborough, near Rotherham, Yorkshire, 17 March, 1781, and died near Barnsley 1 Dec., 1849.

ELLIOTT, HENRY VENN, an 'evangelical' divine of some note, was a native of Paddington, and received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow (B.A. 1814; M.A. 1817). He was incumbent of St. Mary's Chapel, Brighton, for thirty-seven years, and died in that town 24 Jan., 1865. Several of his Sermons are in print. A Life of Mr. Elliott, by Josiah Bateman, M.A., was published in 1868.

ELLIOTT, RICHARD, was born at Kingsbridge, Devonshire, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He became chaplain to St. George's Hospital, Hyde Park Corner, from whence he was dismissed 1759, for preaching antinomianism. He afterwards turned Arian, and took a meeting-house in Aldersgate Street, where he officiated till his death, which happened suddenly in the pulpit 28 Dec., 1788. He published some controversial tracts, a volume of discourses, and many single sermons.

ELLIOTT, WILLIAM, an English artist and engraver, born at Hampton Court 1717; died in London 1766.

ELLIS, CLEMENT, was born in Cumberland 1630, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford. In 1660 he obtained the living of Kirkby, Nottinghamshire, and in 1693 a prebend in the collegiate church of Southwell. Died 1700. He wrote the 'Gentle Sinner, or England's brave Gentleman characterised;' some books on practical divinity; and poetical pieces.

ELLIS, GEORGE, F.R.S., P.S.A., a native of London, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was one of the writers of the Kolliad, a satirical publication, intended to annoy the administration of Mr. Pitt; but afterwards he became much attached to that statesman, and was appointed secretary to Lord Malmesbury when he went on the embassy to Lisle. Died 15 April, 1815, aged 70. His works are, Specimens of the Early English Poets, 3 vols.; Preface, notes, and appendix to a translation of Le Grand's Fabliaux; Specimens of English Metrical Romances, 3 vols.

ELLIS, G. J. W. Lord Dover. See DOVER.

ELLIS, HENRY, F.R.S., an English voyager, born 1721; died 21 Jan., 1806. He is known by his account of a voyage which he made in 1746 with Captains G. Moor and Smith, with the view of discovering a north-west passage by way of Hudson's Bay. He became governor of New York and Georgia.

ELLIS, HUMPHREY, D.D., an English Catholic divine, some time professor of philosophy and divinity at Lisbon, afterwards dean of the English chapter, died July, 1676.

ELLIS, JOHN, F.R.S., a naturalist, supposed to have been born in London about 1710. When very young he applied himself assiduously to scientific observations, the result of which was a discovery of the animal nature of corals and corallines, on which he published 'An Essay,' 1755. In botany he distinguished himself by an account of new plants from America; a description of the Conferve, and a dissertation on the Varnish-tree of Japan. He also wrote an account of Coltee, a description of the Mangostan and bread fruit, and directions to voyagers for bringing home vegetable productions. He was likewise the author of various papers in the Transactions of the Royal Society. Lord Chancellor Northington gave him the place of agent for West Florida and Dominica. Died 15 Oct., 1776. His 'Natural History of many curious and uncommon Zoophytes' was published by his daughter 1786.

ELLIS, JOHN, was born in London 22 March, 1698, and brought up as a scrivener. For many years he was deputy of Broad Street Ward, and master of the Scriveners' Company. He was the intimate friend of Dr. Johnson, and wrote several poetical pieces which are included in Dodsley's Collection. He also published separately The Surprise, or Gentleman turned Apothecary, a tale in Hudibrastic verse; and a Travesty of the canto added by Maphæus to Virgil's Æneid. Died 31 Dec., 1791.

ELLIS, PHILIP MICHAEL, an English prelate, was the third son of the Rev. John Ellis, rector of Waddesden, Buckinghamshire, and was born 1655. Whilst a pupil in Westminster School he embraced the Catholic religion, and accordingly proceeded to St. Gregory's convent at Douay, where he made his profession as a Benedictine monk 30 Nov., 1670. Being sent on the English mission, his great abilities recommended him to the notice of James II., who appointed him one of his chaplains and preachers, and when Pope Innocent XI., on 30 Jan., 1688, signified his wish that his majesty should nominate three fit subjects to fill the newly-constituted vicariates—Midland, Northern, and Western—Dom Ellis was selected for the western vicariate, and was consecrated bishop at St. James's 6 May, 1688, by the title of bishop of Aureliopolis. On the breaking out of the revolution at London he was apprehended and committed to Newgate, though his confinement was of brief duration. After staying for some time at St. Germain he went to Rome, and in 1693 was nominated an assistant prelate by Innocent XII.

ELLIS.

Resigning his western vicariate he was promoted by Clement XI. in 1708 to the see of Segni in the Campagna di Roma, where he established a seminary. Died 16 Nov., 1726. He published seven of his sermons preached at St. James's; and also the acts of a synod held in his cathedral in 1710.—Observer; Ellis Correspondence.

ELLIS, SIR RICHARD. See ELLYS.

ELLIS, ROBERT LESLIE, an accomplished scholar, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected to a fellowship; and died at Granchester, near Cambridge, 12 May, 1859, aged 41. Mr. Ellis took a leading part in bringing out the Cambridge edition of the Works of Lord Bacon. A Life of him, by Harvey Goodwin, D.D., was published in 1864.

ELLISTON, H. T., an English musical composer; inventor of the transposing piano; died 19 April, 1864, aged 63.

ELLISTON, ROBERT WILLIAM, a celebrated actor, born in London 1774; died 7 July, 1831.

ELLWOOD, THOMAS, was born at Crowell, near Thame, Oxfordshire, 1639. He was bred in the Anglican communion, but was converted to Quakerism, in consequence of which he lost the favour of his father. He became reader to Milton, which tended greatly to his improvement in learning. Ellwood suffered imprisonment on account of his religious belief, and wrote a number of books in defence of it. He also edited George Fox's Journal, and published a History of the Old and New Testament; a sacred poem on the Life of David, &c.; and his own life. Died 1 March, 1713.

ELLYS, ANTHONY, an Anglican prelate, born 1693, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He was appointed bishop of St. David's 1752, and died 17 Jan., 1761. He published some single sermons; an Answer to Hume on the Miracles; a Plea for the Sacramental Test; and after his death appeared his Tracts on the Liberty, spiritual and temporal, of the Protestants in England.

ELLYS, SIR RICHARD, baronet, was born at Wyham, Lincolnshire, about 1688. He was well versed in the ancient languages, and corresponded with many scholars of the greatest eminence at home and abroad. In his religious principles he was a Calvinistic dissenter of the Independent persuasion. Died 21 Feb., 1741-2. Sir Richard wrote 'Fortuita Sacra, quibus subjicitur Commentarius de Cymbalis'; A Vindication of the History of the Septuagint; and Critical Examination of the Holy Gospels, with regard to the History of the Birth and Infancy of our Saviour.

ELMACINUS, GEORGE, a Christian of Egypt, who wrote a History of the Saracens. Born 1223; died 1273.

ELMENHORST, GEVEHART, of Hamburg, a learned critic and classical editor, died 1621.

ELMES, HARVEY LONSDALE, a London architect, who died 26 Nov., 1847, aged 32, in Jamaica, whether he had gone for the benefit of his health. His chief work is St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

ELMSLEY, PETER, D.D., was born in London 1773, and educated at Westminster, whence he removed to Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1797). In 1798 he was presented to the chapelry of Little Horkeley, Essex, but having a good private fortune he gave all the emoluments to his curate. After the peace he went to Italy, and was employed with Sir Humphry Davy in superintending the development of the papyri found at Herculanicum. To Mr. Elmsley was left the choice of the MSS., but the experiment proved abortive. On his return he settled at Oxford, where he took the degree of D.D. In 1823 he was appointed principal of St. Alban's Hall, and Camdenian professor of history; but he did not live to enjoy the higher distinctions to which his learning and merits would have raised him. Died 8 March, 1825. Dr. Elmsley was the editor of some of the plays of Euripides and Sophocles.

ÉLOY, NICOLAS FRANÇOIS JOSEPH, physician to Prince Charles of Lorraine, was born at Mons 20 Sept., 1714, and died 10 March, 1788. His chief work is an Historical Dictionary of Medicine, Ancient and Modern.

ELPHINSTON, JAMES, a miscellaneous writer, born at Edinburgh 6 Dec., 1721, being the son of an Episcopalian clergyman of that city. He was educated at the high school and university of Edinburgh; on leaving which he became tutor to Lord Blandyre. In 1750 he superintended an edition of the Rambler, printed at Edinburgh, with translations of the mottoes. The year following he settled near London, and kept an academy till about 1778; after which he delivered a course of lectures on the English language at Edinburgh and Glasgow. He died at Hammersmith 8 Oct., 1809. He was a man of learning, but rendered himself ridiculous by endeavouring to introduce a new mode of spelling. He translated Martial into English, and published 'Propriety ascertained in her picture,' 2 vols. 4to., which was followed by 'English Orthography epitomized,' and 'Propriety's Pocket Dictionary.' In 1794 came out a selection of his correspondence, in 6 vols. 8vo.; but his best work is a grammar for the use of schools, 2 vols. 12mo.

ELPHINSTON, WILLIAM, a Scotch prelate, born at Glasgow 1431 or 1437. He received his education at the university of his native place, and on entering into orders obtained the rectory of Kirk-michael. After this he went to Paris and Orleans, at both which places he was chosen professor of civil and canon law. At the end of nine years he returned to Scotland, and became rector of the university of Glasgow. He also sat in parliament, and had a place in the privy council. James III. sent him on an embassy to France, and when he came home he was made bishop of Ross, from whence, in 1484, he was translated to Aberdeen. In 1488 he was advanced to the post of lord chancellor; soon after which he went on an embassy to Vienna, and on his return was made lord privy seal. In 1494 he began the foundation of King's College, Aberdeen, which he completed and endowed in 1506. Besides this great work, he left large sums for the building a bridge over the Dee. Died 25 Oct., 1514.

ELPHINSTONE, ARTHUR, Lord Balmerino. See BALMERINO.

ELPHINSTONE, MOUNTSTUART, fourth son of the eleventh Earl Elphinstone, was born in or about 1778. He entered the service of the East India Company, and was much employed in a diplomatic capacity. In 1808 he was entrusted with an important mission in Central Asia, being nominated our first envoy to Kabul. At Peshawar he concluded the important alliance with Shah Shuja which led to many complications and disasters, but which was triumphant for its immediate purpose, as a treaty was signed under which the shah engaged to join the Afghan arms to those of the English in the event of a French invasion of India. This mission led to the publication by Mr. Elphinstone of an interesting 'Account of the Kingdom of Caubul, and its Dependencies in Persia, Tartary, and India; comprising a View of the Afghan Nation, and a History of the Doorannee Monarchy,' 1815. In 1820 he was appointed governor of Bombay. During the seven years that he ruled Western India the Elphinstone Code became law—a code which for brevity, completeness, clearness, and enlightened provisions might be compared with the Code Napoleon. Mr. Elphinstone returned to Europe 1827, and devoted his leisure to the composition of his well-known 'History of India,' which first appeared at London in 2 vols. 8vo., 1841. Died 20 Nov., 1859.

ELRINGTON, THOMAS, a native of Ireland, received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became in succession mathematical professor and provost. He was appointed bishop of Limerick 1820; translated to Leighlin and Ferns 1822; and died July, 1835. He published editions of Euclid and Juvenal, besides a number of polemical and political pamphlets, one of which is in support of the validity of the Anglican orders.

ELSHEIMER, ADAM, a painter, born at Frankfort-on-the-Maine 1574; died 1620.

ELSHOLTZ, JOHN SIGISMUND, a physician and botanist of Berlin, was born 1623, and died 1688. He published several works, one of which, 'The curious Distillatory, or the Art of Distilling,' was put into English by Thomas Sherley, M.D.

ELSNER, JAMES, a Prussian divine and theological writer, born 1692; died 8 Oct., 1750.

ELSTOB, ELIZABETH, sister of William Elstob, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 29 Sept., 1683. She was well acquainted with the Saxon and other languages, and translated from the French Madame Scudery's 'Essay on Glory.' In 1713 she published 'Some Testimonies of Learned Men, in favour of an intended edition of the Saxon Homilies.' A few of these homilies were printed at Oxford, but she did not find encouragement to go on with the work. In 1715 she published a Saxon grammar. On the death of her brother she was reduced to poverty, and kept a school at Evesham. Queen Caroline gave her a pension, which ceased at her majesty's death. After this she was taken into the family of the Duchess of Portland as a governess. Died 30 May, 1756.

ELSTOB, WILLIAM, a divine and antiquary, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne 1 Jan., 1673. He was educated at Eton, whence he removed to Catherine Hall, Cambridge, and afterwards to Queen's College, Oxford. In 1696 he was chosen fellow of University College, where he took his master's degree 1697. In 1702 he obtained the rectory of St. Swithin and St. Mary Bothaw, London, where he died 3 March, 1714. He was remarkably skilled in the Saxon language, of which he gave proofs in a translation of the Homily of Lupus; and an edition of that on St. Gregory. He also undertook, but did not complete, a collection of the Saxon laws; a specimen of which was published under the title of 'Hormesta Pauli Orosii,' 1699. In connection with his profession he printed some sermons, and an 'Essay on the Connection between Law and Divinity.'

ELSWICH, JOHN HERMANN DE, a Lutheran divine, born at Rensburg, in Holstein, 1684; died at Stade 1721.

ELSYNGE, HENRY, was born at Battersea, Surrey, 1598. From Westminster School he removed to Christ Church, Oxford, after which Archbishop Laud procured for him the place of clerk of the House of Commons, which he resigned 1648. Died 1654. He wrote 'The ancient Method and Manner of holding Parliaments in England.'

ELTON, SIR CHARLES ABRAHAM, a English baronet, born 1778; died at Bath 1 June, 1853. He was a man of literary tastes, and published several volumes of poetry and history. His most important work is entitled 'Specimens of the Classic Poets, in a chronological series from Homer to Tryphiodorus: translated into English verse, and illustrated with biographical and critical Notices,' 3 vols. 8vo., London, 1814. He also published a translation of Hesiod.

ELVIUS, PETER, a mathematician and astronomer, secretary of the Royal Academy of Stockholm, was born at Upsala 1710, and died 27 Sept., 1749.

ELWES, JOHN, an Englishman, who acquired notoriety on account of his miserly habits. He sat in parliament for some time as member for Berkshire, and died 26 Nov., 1780, aged about 77, leaving a fortune of £500,000, besides entailed estates.

ELY, HUMPHREY, D.D., was educated at Oxford, but remaining firm in his allegiance to the Roman Church, he afterwards went to Douay, where, in 1570, he established a school for the study of the civil and canon laws. In 1578 he followed the English college to Rheims. He was appointed professor of laws at Pont-à-Mousson 1586; and died 15 March, 1603-4. Dr. Ely was intimate with Dr. (afterwards Cardinal) Allen, who employed him in revising several controversial books. He also published 'Certain brief Notes upon a brief Apology; set out under the Name of the Priests united to the Archbishop,' 8vo., Paris, 1602. His brother, William Ely, D.D., was some time president of St. John's College, Oxford. Like his brother, he adhered to the Catholic cause, and became a very laborious missionary in Herefordshire, where he was confined in the common goal for several years. He died a prisoner 1609, very old.

ELYOT, SIR THOMAS, though generally stated to have been born in Suffolk, was more probably a native of Wiltshire. He received his education at Jesus College, Cambridge (M.A. 1507), and not at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, as Wood and others assert. Henry VIII. conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and sent him on several embassies. He died at Carlton, Cambridgeshire, and was buried there 25 March, 1546. His works are 'The Governor,' a treatise on education; 'Pasquil the Playne;' 'Castle of Health;' 'Bibliotheca Eliotta, Elyots Library or Dictionary,' afterwards improved by Bishop Cooper; 'Defence of good Women;' 'Banquet of Sapience;' 'Preservative against the fear of death;' 'De rebus memorabilibus Angliæ;' 'Of the knowledge which maketh a man wise;' and a number of translations.—Athen. Cantab.

ELYS, EDMUND, Elisæus, was born in Devonshire, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1055, and obtained a fellowship. In 1059 he succeeded his father in the rectory of East Allington, Devonshire, but was deprived at the Revolution for not taking the oaths. He was alive in 1693. He published two volumes of miscellaneous pieces, in prose and verse; a tract against Tillotson's Sermons on the Incarnation; and a volume of letters.

ELZEVIRS, famous printers at Amsterdam and Leyden. There were five of this name, Lewis, Bonaventure, Abraham, Lewis, and Daniel. Lewis began to be known at Leyden in 1595, and was the first who made the distinction between the v consonant and the u vowel. Daniel died 1680 or 1681. He published a catalogue of books printed by his family.

EMANUEL, king of Portugal, succeeded John II. 1495; and died 1521, aged 53.

EMERSON, WILLIAM, a mathematician, born 14 May, 1701, at Hurworth, county Durham. He kept a school for some time, but quitted that employment, and contented himself with a small paternal estate. He was a profound mathematician, but of singular habits, being vulgar in his manners, fond of low company, and extremely shabby in his dress. Died 26 May, 1782. He wrote treatises on Fluxions, Mechanics, Algebra, Optics, Astronomy, Navigation, Arithmetic; a Commentary on the Principia of Newton; and several other esteemed works.

EMERY, JOHN, a comic actor, born at Sunderland 1777; died 25 July, 1822. His success upon the London stage, especially in personating rustic characters, was very great.

EMILIUS, PAULUS. See PAULUS.

EMILYN, THOMAS, was born at Stamford, Lincolnshire, 27 May, 1663. After receiving a preparatory education, he was admitted a preacher, and became chaplain to the countess of Donegal, a dissenter, whom he accompanied to Ireland. In 1683 he returned to England, and became minister of a congregation at Lowestoft, where he turned Arian. In 1691 he removed to Dublin to be assistant to Mr. Boyse; but his religious sentiments being discovered, the Dublin synod suspended him from the ministry, whereupon he wrote a book entitled 'An humble Enquiry into the Scripture Account of Jesus Christ.' For this he was prosecuted by the dissenters, and the jury having found him guilty of blasphemy, he was sentenced to pay a fine of £1,000, and to suffer a year's imprisonment. The fine was afterwards commuted to £70, but he remained in confinement two years. On recovering his liberty he went to London, where he ministered to a small congregation for a few years. Died 30 July, 1743. Besides the above work, he wrote several others in defence of Arianism, and some sermons, all collected in 2 vols. 8vo., by his son, Sollom Emlyn, a barrister, who edited Hales on the Pleas of the Crown, and died 1756.

EMMETT, ROBERT, the son of a physician of Cork, was born in that city 1780. He was studying for the bar when the French revolution led to the popular movement in Ireland, which he deemed it his duty to encourage. He supported the insurrectionary party with all the enthusiasm of youth, and was a member of the secret directory of the United Irishmen. He was arrested in Dublin, and having been found guilty of treason was executed 20 Sept., 1803.

EMMETT, THOMAS ADDIS, elder brother of the above, was born in Dublin 1763. He was called to the bar, but instead of following his profession became one of the most active leaders of the United Irishmen. On being apprehended he made a full confession, and ultimately gained his liberty. He afterwards went to New York, where he rose to great distinction in the profession of the law. Died 14 Nov., 1827.

EMMIUS, UNBO, professor of history and Greek at Groningen; a distinguished philologist and historian; was born at Gretha, in East Friesland, 1547, and died 9 Dec., 1626.

EMPEDOCLES, an ancient philosopher, was a native of Sicily, and flourished B.C. 444.

EMPEREUR, CONSTANTINE L', a Dutch orientalist, who died 1648. During twenty-one years he was professor of divinity and Hebrew at Leyden. He published several esteemed translations of Jewish and Talmudical works.

EMPSON, SIR RICHARD, a statesman, was the son of a sieve-maker at Towcester, Northamptonshire. He became a favourite with Henry VII., and on account of his oppressions rendered himself odious to the nation. He was beheaded with his condjuror, Dudley, 17 August, 1510.—Athen. Cantab.

ENCINAS, FRANCIS, commonly known by the name of Dryander, and also by those of Du Chene, Van Eyck, and Eichman, was born at Burgos, in Spain, about 1520. After receiving the rudiments of education in his native country, he visited Germany, and adopted the new doctrines. In consequence of publishing a Spanish translation of the New Testament, he was arrested and imprisoned at Brussels 1543. Coming subsequently to England he was appointed Greek reader to the university of Cambridge. He afterwards visited Strasburg and Geneva, and died about 1570. Besides the translation of the New Testament referred to above, Encinas wrote a History of the Low Countries, and of Religion in Spain; and a Spanish translation of Plutarch.—Athen. Cantab.

ENFANTIN, LE PÈRE, restorer of the sect of St. Simonians, died 1 Sept., 1864.

ENFIELD, WILLIAM, was born at Sudbury 29 March, 1741. In 1763 he was chosen minister of a dissenting congregation at Liverpool. About 1770 he removed to Warrington, as a teacher in the academical institution established there; which did not succeed, though continued till 1783. After this he went to Norwich, where he died 3 Nov., 1797. Dr. Enfield published, The Speaker, a popular school-book; Exercises on Elocution; The Preacher's Directory, a collection of texts; The English Preacher, 9 vols.; Biographical Sermons; Institutes of Natural Philosophy; An abridged Translation of Brucker's History of Philosophy, 2 vols.; General Biography, in conjunction with Dr. Aikin, who published his friend's sermons, 3 vols., with his life prefixed.

ENGELBRECHTSEN, CORNELIUS, a painter, born at Leyden 1468; died 1533.

ENGHELRAMS, CORNELIUS, a painter, born at Malines 1527; died 1583.

ENGHEN, LOUIS ANTOINE HENRI DE BOURBON duc d', son of the duke of Bourbon, and grandson of the prince of Conde, was born at Chantilly 2 Aug., 1772. This amiable young prince resided at a seat which had been left him by his great-uncle, the cardinal prince de Rohan, in the principality of Ettenheim, which appertained to the elector of Baden. Here he devoted himself, under the misfortunes of his family, in a peaceful retirement, to the cultivation of his estate; when Bonaparte's agents came by night, and having seized him in his bed, hurried him to France, where he was tried and condemned by a mock tribunal for having taken up arms against France in the time of Robespierre. In the night of 28 March, 1804, he was shot in the wood of Vincennes.

ENGLAND, JOHN, a distinguished Catholic prelate, was born at Cork 23 Sept., 1786. He was originally intended for the law, but subsequently embraced the clerical profession, and received his theological education at Carlow. His first missionary years were spent in his native city, and next he was appointed to the important parish of Bandon. During this period he laboured incessantly in the cause of religion and the liberty of his country. In 1814 he published 'The Religious Repertory,' a weekly magazine devoted to this object. In 1820 he was consecrated bishop of the newly-erected see of Charleston in the United States; and his administration of that diocese for twenty-two years was one continuous and successful effort for the dissemination of religion, and the improvement of his adopted country. In 1822 he commenced the publication of 'The United States Catholic Miscellany;' he also published many miscellaneous pamphlets, and a work of great research and erudition on the 'Roman Chancery.' The other separate works by him which I have seen are 'Letters of the late Bishop England to the Hon. J. Forsyth, on the subject of Domestic Slavery; to which are prefixed copies in Latin and English of the Pope's Apostolic Letter, concerning the African Slave Trade, with some introductory remarks, &c.,' by W. G. Read, Bro., Baltimore, 1844; and 'Explanation of the Construction, Furniture, and Ornaments of a Church, of the Vestments of the Clergy, and of the Nature and Ceremonies of the Mass,' 12mo., Rome, 1845. The Works of Bishop England were collected and arranged under the advice and direction of the Right Rev. Ignatius A. Reynolds, and published at Baltimore, in five octavo volumes, 1849. Died 11 April, 1842.

ENGLAND, THOMAS R., a Catholic divine, brother of the preceding, was for many years parish priest of Passage, near Cork. He appears to have been living in 1849. Mr. England published a very valuable 'Life of the Reverend Arthur O'Leary, including Historical Anecdotes, Memoirs, and many hitherto unpublished documents, illustrative of the condition of the Irish Catholics during the eighteenth century,' 8vo., London, 1822; 'Letters of the Abbé Edgeworth;' and several occasional pamphlets.

ENGLEFIELD, SIR HENRY CHARLES, an eminent antiquary and astronomer, was descended from a very ancient family in Berkshire and Wiltshire, one of whom, Francis, was created a baronet 1612. Sir Henry succeeded his father in 1780, at which time he was F.R.S. and F.S.A. In the Transactions of the former, and the Archæologia of the latter, are many of his communications. His separate publications are 'Tables of the apparent places of the Comet in 1661;' 'On the Determination of the Orbits of Comets;' 'A Walk through Southampton;' 'Description of the Beauties and Geological Phenomena of the Isle of Wight.' Sir Henry was a Catholic, and defended the principles of his communion with great spirit from the charges brought against it in a 'Review of the Case of the Protestant Dissenters.' He died in London 21 March, 1822, aged 70.

ENJEDIN, GEORGE, a learned Socinian of Hungary, who wrote 'Explicatio locorum Scripturæ veteris et novi Testamenti ex quibus dogma Trinitatis stabiliri solet.' Died 28 Nov., 1597.

ENNIUS, QUINTUS, a Latin poet, was born at Rudiae, in Calabria, about 240 B.C., and died about 170 B.C. Only some fragments of his works have come down to us.

ENNODIUS, MAGNUS FELIX, bishop of Pavia, in Italy, was born about 473, and died 17 July, 521. He wrote a panegyric on Theodoric, king of the Goths; a life of Epiphanius, bishop of Pavia, &c.

ENT, SIR GEORGE, M.D., a physician, born at Sandwich, Kent, 6 Nov., 1604. He was educated at Sidney College, Cambridge, but took his doctor's degree at Padua. He was knighted by Charles II., and became president of the College of Physicians. Died 13 Oct., 1689. His works are 'Apologia pro Circulatione sanguinis contra Emilio Parasoni' and 'Animadversiones in Malachia Tristroni diatribam de Respirationis usu primario.'

ENTICK, or ENTINCK, JOHN, an English writer, born 1713. In his eighteenth year he published a tract, entitled 'The Evidence of Christianity proved from Facts,' which we suppose was only a translation from Houteville. He afterwards became a schoolmaster, and appears to have been in orders. He was much employed by the booksellers, for whom he compiled a Naval History; a History of the German War; and a History of London; but he is best known by his Spelling Dictionary; and his Latin and English Dictionary. Died at Stepney May, 1773.

EOBANUS HESSUS, HELIUS, a Latin poet, was born in Hesse 9 Jan., 1488, and died at Erfurt where he was professor of eloquence, 5 Oct., 1540.

EPAMINONDAS, a Theban general, who received a mortal wound at the battle of Mantinea, and died triumphantly on being assured of the victory, B.C. 363.

ÉPÉE, CHARLES MICHEL DE L', a French abbé, born at Versailles 25 Nov., 1712. He obtained a canonry in the cathedral of Troyes, and made himself famous by conducting a seminary at Paris, for the instruction of the deaf and dumb, in which he had extraordinary success. He died 23 Dec., 1789, and was succeeded by the Abbé Sicard. L'Épée wrote an Account of the cure of Marianne Pigalle; and 'Instruction des Sourds et Muets.'

EPHKEM, (Sī.), a learned father of the Church and deacon of Edessa, was a native of Nisibin. He was styled the doctor and prophet of the Syrians. His works fill six folio volumes. Died about 378.

EPICARMUS, a Greek poet and philosopher, who lived about 440 B.C.

EPICETUS, a stoic philosopher, was a native of Hierapolis, in Phrygia, and the slave of Epaphroditus, the freedman of Nero. He died after A.D. 118. His works have been translated into English by Mrs. Carter.

EPICURUS, a celebrated Athenian philosopher, born about 342 B.C.; died 270 B.C.

EPIMENIDES, a Cretan poet and philosopher, who flourished about 596 B.C.

EPIPHANIUS (Sī.), a father and doctor of the Church, who displayed great zeal against the writings of Origen. He was chosen bishop of Salamis; and died 403, aged above 80. His works were published by Petavius, in 2 vols. folio, 1622.

EPIPHANIUS.

The principal among them is a treatise against heresies.

EPIPHANIUS, the Scholastic, was living in Italy about 510. At the request of his friend Cassiodorus he translated into Latin the Ecclesiastical Histories of Socrates, Zozomen, and Theodoret.

EPISCOPIUS, SIMON, a learned divine of Amsterdam, who was one of the principal leaders of the Arminians or remonstrants. His works occupy two folio volumes. Born 1583; died 4 April, 1643.

ERARD, SEBASTIEN, a noted manufacturer of pianofortes and other musical instruments, was born at Strasburg 5 April, 1752, and died near Paris 5 Aug., 1831.

ERASISTRATUS, a Greek physician and anatomist, flourished about 200 B.C.

ERASMUS, DESIDERIUS, was the illegitimate son of one Gerard, by Margaret, daughter of Peter, a physician, of Sevenbergen. He was born at Rotterdam 28 Oct., 1466, and named after his father, but subsequently he assumed the name of Desiderius, the Latin equivalent for the Dutch word Gerard, signifying 'amiable,' and Erasmus, the Greek for the same word. To these he added Roterodamus, from the place of his birth. At an early age he was a chorister in the cathedral of Utrecht. The first school he was sent to was at Terzan, but after remaining there a short time he was removed to Deventer, in Guelderland, where he had for his schoolfellow Adrian Florentinus, afterwards Pope Adrian VI. Subsequently he entered among the canons regular of a house at Stein, near Terzan, and was ordained priest 1492. It was at Stein that he composed his first work, 'De Contemptu Mundi.' In 1490 Herman à Bergis, archbishop of Cambray, being in want of a Latin secretary, took Erasmus from the convent and employed him in that capacity. The archbishop advised Erasmus to go to the university of Paris, promising him a pension for his support. He accordingly went there 1496; but the archbishop neglected to fulfil his promise, so that Erasmus was reduced to the greatest necessities, being at times almost destitute of food and clothing. The plague broke out at Paris 1497, and he returned to Cambray, and afterwards came to England on a visit to William Blount lord Mountjoy, who had been his pupil at Paris. From London he went to Oxford, and studied in St. Mary's College, devoting his time chiefly to the acquirement of the Greek language. In 1506 the degrees of B.D. and D.D. were conferred upon him by the university of Cambridge. During his abode in this country he became intimate with Sir Thomas More, Dean Colet, Tunstal, Warham, Grocyn, Lynacre, and other learned men, and was exceedingly gratified by their reception. On leaving England he proceeded to Italy, and again took the degree of D.D. at Turin. He then visited Bologna, and afterwards Rome, where he was well received, especially by Cardinal de Medici, afterwards Leo X. In 1510 he paid another visit to England, in consequence of hopes held out to him by Henry VIII. At this period the prior of Stein desired to recall him to his convent, but he obtained from the pope a dispensation releasing him from his vows. He again went to Cambridge, and resided at Queen's College, being, in 1511, admitted Lady Margaret professor of divinity. While at Cambridge he also read public lectures on the Greek tongue. He may be mentioned that he rendered great assistance to Dean Colet in the foundation of St. Paul's School. Towards the end of 1510 he quitted England, and from that time led a wandering life, residing sometimes at Antwerp, sometimes at Louvaine, sometimes at Brussels, and once in London, rarely remaining six months in one place. His circumstances were by no means good, and he was a bad economist. His income arose principally from the dedications of his books, and the pensions he received from the patrons of literature. In 1521 he settled at Basle, but was obliged to quit that city 1520, on account of the establishment of the Protestant religion there. After an interval of six years, during which he resided at Fribourg, he returned to his favourite residence at Basle, where he passed the remainder of his days. His death occurred in the night, between the 11th and 12th of July, 1536. Erasmus has left a name which will never perish. To a vast stock of learning, both sacred and profane, he added the graces of eloquence and the charms of wit. His numerous works, which are all written in Latin, embrace a great variety of topics. To him belongs the glory of having been the first publisher of the New Testament in the original Greek. The first edition was published in 1516, and four more impressions were called for in his lifetime. Among his other works the most celebrated are 'The Manual of a Christian Soldier;' 'Adages;' 'Enchiridion of Folly;' 'Colloquies;' and 'Ciceronianus.' At the outset of the Reformation, Erasmus inclined towards the reformers, as he approved of their attempts to effect changes in certain matters of discipline, but on finding that Luther and his companions were making attacks on the doctrine of the Church, he withdrew from their cause and wrote his 'Treatise of Free Will.' Le Clerc put forth a new edition of Erasmus's works at Leyden, 10 vols. folio, 1703—1706.—Athen. Cantab.

ERASTUS, THOMAS, a Greek physician, born at Baden, in Switzerland, 7 Sept., 1524; died at Basle 31 Dec., 1583. He wrote some books on subjects connected with his profession, but is best known by his treatise on Excommunication, in which he enunciates the principle that ecclesiastical censures and other inflictions are not the proper method of punishing crimes, but that the administration of the penal law, and of the law for compelling performance of civil obligations, should rest with the temporal magistrate.

ERATOSTHENES, a Greek of Cyrene, keeper of the library at Alexandria, died 194 B.C. He was the first who discovered the method of measuring the circumference of the earth.

ERCILLA Y ZUÑIGA, ALONSO, a Spanish poet, born at Madrid 1533; died after 1596. His great work is the 'Araucana,' an epic poem, describing a revolt of the Araucanians against the Spaniards in Chili.

ERDESWICKE, SAMPSON, was a native of Sandon, Staffordshire, and received his education at Brasenose College, Oxford. He died 11 April, 1603. He was an accomplished antiquary, and left in MS. 'A short view of Staffordshire,' which has been several times printed. It is incorporated in Shaw's history of the county.

EREMITA, DANIEL, was born at Antwerp 1684. He became secretary to the duke of Florence; and died 1613. He wrote 'De Aulica Vita ac Civili;' Latin poems, &c.,

ERICSSON, JOHN, an engineer, was born in Sweden 1803; but his inventions were brought before the scientific world in England and America. His name is chiefly known in connection with a project for a caloric engine, which was to supersede steam. As the principle did not obtain the sanction of the scientific men to whom the British Government referred its consideration, Ericsson tried it in America, and obtained sufficient co-operation to enable him to launch a vessel named after himself, and measuring 2000 tons. This vessel made a trial trip in which she sailed at the rate of twelve miles an hour; but on her return she was struck by a squall, filled, and foundered close to the city of Jersey. The 'Ericsson' was subsequently raised, and the caloric engine replaced by a steam engine, which possessed some improvements invented by Mr. Ericsson. He died Nov. 1829.—Engl. Cycl.

ERIGENA, JOHN SCOTUS, a celebrated schoolman, was a native of Ireland, and resided chiefly in France, at the court of Charles the Bald. His theological writings were considered heterodox; and his treatise on the eucharist was condemned by the Council of Rome 1059. In his 'Dialogus de Divisione Naturæ,' he displays a wonderful amount of information for the times he lived in, and an intimate acquaintance with the Greek language. Died about 875.—Penny Cycl.

ERINNA, a Greek poetess, flourished about 595 B.C. She was the friend of Sappho.

ERIZZO, SEBASTIAN, was born at Venice 19 June, 1525. He filled some important offices in the republic; and died 5 March, 1585. His chief work is a Discourse on Ancient Medals.

ERNEST AUGUSTUS, king of Hanover, duke of Cumberland, &c., fifth son of George III. of England and Queen Charlotte, was born at New 5 June, 1771, and died 18 Nov., 1851.

ERNESTI, AUGUSTUS WILLIAM, nephew of John Augustus Ernesti, was born 26 Nov., 1733, and died 29 July, 1801. He was professor of eloquence at Leipsic, and published excellent editions of Livy, Quintilian, and other classics.

ERNESTI, JOHN AUGUSTUS, was born at Taenstadt, in Thuringia, 4 Aug., 1707. He studied theology at Leipsic, and in 1734 was chosen rector of St. Thomas's School in that city; in 1742 made extraordinary professor of ancient literature; in 1756 professor of eloquence, and in 1758 professor of divinity with the degree of doctor. Died 11 Sept., 1781. His editions of Homer, Callimachus, Xenophon, Aristophanes, Cicero, Tacitus, and Suetonius are very valuable. His other works are Initia doctrinæ solidioris; Institutio interpretis Nov. Test.; an edition of Hederici's Lexicon; a Theological Library, 11 vols.; Opuscula Oratoria; Archæologia Literaria; and a new edition of Fabricius's Biblioth. Græca.

ERNESTI, JOHN CHRISTIAN THEOPHILUS, nephew of the preceding, was professor of philosophy, and afterwards of eloquence, at Leipsic. He published an edition of Æsop's Fables; 'Lexicon Technologiæ Romanorum Rhetoricæ;' and other works. Born 1756; died 5 June, 1802.

ERNULPH, bishop of Rochester. See ARNULF.

ERPENIUS, THOMAS, a learned Dutchman, born at Gorcum 7 Sept., 1584. He was educated at Leyden, after which he travelled into several countries to perfect himself in the oriental languages. In 1613 he was appointed professor of the oriental tongues at Leyden. Died 13 Nov., 1624. He published many works, the principal of which, his Arabic Grammar, passed through numerous editions.

ERSKINE.

ERRIDGE, JOHN ACKERSON, an English topographer, author of the History of Brighthelmstone, died 5 Nov., 1862.

ERRINGTON, ANTHONY, D.D., an English priest, author of 'Catechistical Discourses,' 1654; and of 'Missionarium: sive opusculum practicum pro fide propaganda, et conservanda,' Rome, 1672.

ERSCH, JOHN SAMUEL, a celebrated German bibliographer, was chief librarian and professor of geography and statistics at Halle. Born 23 June, 1706; died 16 Jan., 1828.

ERSKINE, CHARLES, a cardinal, born at Rome, of Scotch parents, 13 Feb., 1753. He was much esteemed by Pius VI., who raised him to the episcopate, and appointed him canon of St. Peter's. He was sent to London as minister when that pontiff became a member of the coalition against France, and remained eight years in the British capital. He was raised to the purple by Pius VII., and died at Rome 19 March, 1811. Cardinal Erskine was a skilful negotiator, and a most learned and accomplished man.

ERSKINE, DAVID STEWART, Earl of Buchan. See BUCHAN.

ERSKINE, DAVID, Lord Dun, a Scotch lawyer, born at Dun, in the county of Angus, 1670. He received his education at St. Andrew's and afterwards at Paris. In 1696 he was called to the bar, and in 1711 took his seat on the bench. In 1713 he was appointed one of the commissioners of the Court of Justiciary, which place he held till 1750. Died 1755. He published a little volume, entitled 'Lord Dun's Advices.'

ERSKINE, ERENEZER, son of the Rev. Henry Erskine, who was ejected from the living of Cornhill, in the county of Durham, in 1662, and afterwards imprisoned in the fort of Bass, in the mouth of the Forth, where the son was born 22 June, 1680. He received his education at Edinburgh, and in 1703 was ordained minister of Portmouk, in the county of Fife, from whence he removed, in 1731, to Stirling. The year following, in a sermon before the synod of Perth, he censured some proceedings of the general assembly with regard to patronage, for which a prosecution was commenced against him, which produced a schism in the church. Mr. Erskine and his followers were called Seceders, and the sect thus formed has continued to the present day. He died at Stirling, 2 June, 1754. Four volumes of his sermons were printed at Glasgow 1702, and a fifth at Edinburgh 1795.

ERSKINE, HENRY, elder brother of Lord Erskine, was born at Edinburgh 1 Nov., 1746. He was called to the Scotch bar, 1768, and, though young, was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates, where he soon raised himself to high distinction as a lawyer and pleader. In 1783 he held for a short time the high official situation of lord advocate of Scotland, and afterwards became dean of the Faculty of Advocates. In 1806 he was re-appointed to the situation of lord advocate, but retired again at the same time that his brother in England was deprived of the great seal. Mr. Henry Erskine was a man of infinite wit, and wrote some epigrams of considerable merit. Died 8 Oct., 1817.

ERSKINE, JOHN, baron of Dun, was born near Montrose 1508 or 1509. At an early period he embraced the Protestant religion, which he promoted with great zeal, and became a preacher, after having been a warrior. He was one of the ecclesiastical superintendents appointed by the Scotch parliament, and in that capacity assisted in compiling the book of discipline, or model of church government. Died 21 March, 1591.

ERSKINE, JOHN, of Carnock, an eminent Scotch lawyer, was born 1695, and died 1 March, 1768. He wrote 'The Principles of the Law of Scotland,' and 'Institutes of the Laws of Scotland.'

ERSKINE, JOHN, D.D., a Scotch divine, born 2 June, 1721. He became a student of the university of Edinburgh, and while at college wrote an essay entitled 'De recte rationis usu legitimo, sive de libertate cogitandi.' In 1744 he was ordained minister of Kirkintilloch, from whence he removed, in 1754, to Culross, and, in 1758, to the New Gray Friars church at Edinburgh; but the next year he and Dr. Robertson were admitted joint ministers of the Old Gray Friars church. Died 19 Jan., 1803. Dr. Erskine published Theological Dissertations; Sketches of Church History, 2 vols.; and a volume of Sermons. He corresponded with Bishop Horsley, who, in his collection of controversial letters with Priestley, inserted some strictures written by Dr. Erskine. A volume of his letters, and another of his sermons, were printed after his death.

ERSKINE, RALPH, the brother of Ebenezer, was born at Monilaws, Northumberland, 15 March, 1685. He was educated at Edinburgh, and became minister of Dunfermline; but in 1734 he joined the Seceders, and was deposed by the general assembly. Died 6 Nov., 1752. His works were printed 1764 in 2 folio volumes.

ERSKINE, THOMAS, LORD ERSKINE, was the third and youngest son of Henry David Erskine, tenth earl of Buchan in Scotland. He was born at Edinburgh 29th Jan., 1749-50, and received his education partly in that city and partly at the university of St. Andrew's; but at the age of 14 he became a midshipman, and four years afterwards quitted the naval service for the army, as an ensign in the first regiment of foot. With this corps he went to Minorca, where he resided three years, and then removed to Gibraltar; but after being upon the rock nearly as long, upon some misunderstanding he gave up his commission, and returned to England with the resolution of studying the law. Accordingly, at the age of 26 he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, as a fellow-commoner, and at the same time inscribed his name as a student on the books of Lincoln's Inn. One of his college declamations, delivered in the chapel, on the subject of the Revolution, gained the first prize, and was an earnest of his future eminence. The circumstances of Mr. Erskine, which were originally circumscribed within very narrow limits, were rendered more so by an early marriage and an increasing family. His embarrassments were, therefore, very great previous to his being called to the bar, which was in 1778; but the same year he had the good fortune to start into popularity and practice. The first cause in which he was engaged was for Captain Bailie, who had been dismissed by Lord Sandwich from a situation in Greenwich Hospital. The conduct of Erskine in this trial gave such satisfaction that he was retained as counsel for Carnan the bookseller, to plead his cause against the claim of the Stationers' Company and the two universities to the sole right of printing almanacs. His next employment was that of conducting the defence of Admiral Keppel at Portsmouth, for which he was rewarded with a thousand guineas. Never was a counsel, at the outset of his professional course, engaged in more important concerns than Mr. Erskine. In 1781 he advocated the cause of Lord George Gordon, who was indicted in the Court of King's Bench for being the promoter of the riots of the preceding year. The eloquence and ability displayed by him on this trial procured him a silk gown, at the particular recommendation of Lord Mansfield. This was in 1783, and the same year he was chosen M.P. for Portsmouth. Soon after this he defended the dean of St. Asaph, who was tried at Shrewsbury on a charge of libel; and on this occasion he had a remarkable dispute with his old preceptor Mr. Justice Buller, who, having reprimanded him for the asperity of his language, received a caustic retort, uttered in such a lofty tone of defiance, that the judge, who was not formed of very pliable materials, felt abashed and checked his passion. But, perhaps, the most popular period of Mr. Erskine's life was when he pleaded the cause of Hardy, Tooke, and Thelwall, in 1794 at the Old Bailey. These trials, for constructive treason, brought all his great powers as an orator into play, and he certainly then distinguished himself by extraordinary energy. His undertaking the defence of Paine, however, threw a momentary shade over him, and he was actually for a time dismissed from the office which he held as attorney-general to the prince of Wales. But in 1802 he was restored to that honour, and soon afterwards appointed chancellor to his royal highness, and keeper of the seals for the duchy of Cornwall. On the death of Mr. Pitt, 1806, Mr. Erskine was all at once elevated to the peerage and the wooolsack. His lordship did not hold the seals many months, the administration of which he formed a part being suddenly dissolved early in the following year. Lord Erskine now retired into private life; the prince of Wales became regent, and conferred on him the order of the Thistle. He died at Amondell House, near Edinburgh, 17 Nov., 1823. Lord Erskine was a decided Whig, and a close adherent of Mr. Fox. As an orator at the bar few excelled him, but in parliament he was not equally successful. His speeches have been published. In 1797 he wrote a tract entitled 'A View of the Causes and Consequences of the War with France,' which went through several editions. Subsequently he printed a political romance, called 'Armata,' a pamphlet in favour of the Greeks; and some poems.

ERKELEBEN, JOHN CHRISTIAN POLYCARP, professor of philosophy at Gottingen, was born 22 June, 1744, and died 19 August, 1777. He wrote 'Elements of Natural History,' and many other esteemed works in the German language.

ERYCEIRA, FERDINAND DE MENESES, count DE, of Lisbon, distinguished himself in military affairs. He wrote a History of Tangiers; History of Portugal, &c. Born 27 Nov., 1614; died 22 June, 1699.

ERYCEIRA, FRANCIS XAVIER DE MENESES, count DE, great-grandson of the preceding, was born at Lisbon 20 Jan., 1673. He also became a general; and died 21 Dec., 1743. He was a member of various learned societies, and composed a host of works, including Memoirs on the Coins of Portugal; Reflections on Academic Studies; and a MS. epic poem entitled 'Henriqueida.'

ESCHENBURG.

ESCHENBURG, JOHN JOACHIM, a German scholar, born at Hamburg 7 Dec., 1733. He was for many years professor in the Carolinum at Brunswick, where he died 29 Feb., 1820. To him Germany is indebted for an acquaintance with many good English writers in the department of aesthetics, viz., Brown, Webb, Burney, and Hurd, whom he translated and in part accompanied with notes and additions. His greatest desert, however, lies in his translation of Shakspeare (Zurich 1775-87, 14 vols; 1798-1806, 12 vols.). Students in this country are familiar with his useful 'Manual of Classical Literature,' which has been translated into English by N. W. Fiske.

ESCOBAR Y MENDOZA, ANTHONY, a Spanish Jesuit, and writer on casuistry, was born at Valladolid 1589, and died 4 July, 1669.

ESCOBAR, BARTHOLOMEW, a Spanish Jesuit, born at Seville, 1562; died at Lima 1624. He published Latin Sermons, &c.

ESCOBAR, MARINE DE, a pious virgin, born at Valladolid 8 Feb., 1554; died 9 June, 1633. She was the foundress of the order of St. Bridget.

ESCOIQUITZ, DON JUAN, a Spanish statesman and writer, born 1762; died 19 Nov., 1820. He translated into Spanish Milton's 'Paradise Lost' and Young's 'Night Thoughts.'

ESMENARD, JOSEPH ALPHONSE, a French poet and dramatist, born in Provence 1770, died 25 June, 1811.

ESPAGNAC, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH DAMAZIT DE SAHUGUET, baron D', a French general, and writer on military science, born 25 March, 1713; died at Paris 28 Feb., 1783.

ESPAGNET, JEAN D', president of the parliament of Bordeaux, rendered himself famous by his writings on alchemy. Flourished 1623.

ESPEN, ZEGER BERNARD VAN, an erudite canonist of Louvain, born 1646; died 2 Oct., 1728.

ESPENCE, CLAUDE D', a learned doctor of the Sorbonne, born 1511; died 5 Oct., 1571. His theological works were printed at Paris 1619.

ESPER, JOHN FREDERICK, a German naturalist and astronomer, born at Drossenfeld, in Baireuth, 6 Oct., 1732; died at Wunsiedel 18 July, 1781. His brother, Eugene John Christopher (b. 2 June, 1742; d. 1810), was professor of philosophy at Erlang, and published many valuable works on natural history.

ESPERIENTE, PHILIP CALLIMACHUS, was born in Tuscany 1457, his real name being Buonacorsi. He formed a society at Rome, all the members of which were to adopt Greek names, in consequence of which he took that of Callimachus. Subsequently he adopted the name of Esperiente or Experience, in allusion to the vicissitudes of his life. The foundation of the society at Rome rendered Esperiente obnoxious to the Pope. He accordingly fled to Poland, where he became tutor to the children of Casimir III., who sent him on several embassies. He died at Cracow 1 Nov., 1496. He wrote 'De Gestis Attilæ,' and other historical works.

ESPKIT, JACQUES, a member of the French Academy, was born 23 Oct., 1611 at Béziers, where he died 6 July, 1678. He wrote Paraphrases on some of the Psalms; and the Fallacy of Human Virtues. He is generally styled the Abbé Esprit, though he was never in orders.

ESSENIUS, ANDREW, a Lutheran divine, professor of theology at Utrecht, was born Feb., 1618, and died 18 May, 1677. He wrote a great number of polemical treatises, chiefly in Latin.

ESSEX.

ESSEX, ARTHUR CAPEL, EARL OF, son of Arthur, Lord Capel, was born 1635 and created earl of Essex at the Restoration. He was also sent ambassador to Denmark, and made lord lieutenant of Ireland. In 1679 he became first lord of the treasury, but resigned that place a few months afterwards. In July 1683 he was charged with being concerned in the Rye House Plot, and committed to the Tower, where on the 13th he was found with his throat cut.

ESSEX, JAMES, F.S.A., an architect, was born in 1723, at Cambridge. He was brought up under his father, who was a builder, and whom he succeeded in his business. He was much employed in public works, particularly in repairing King's College chapel, and the cathedrals of Ely and Lincoln. Died 14 Sept., 1784. He wrote some excellent papers on Gothic Architecture, in the 'Archæologia.' His MSS. and drawings came to the Rev. Thomas Kerrich, who bequeathed them to the British Museum.—Cooper's Annals of Cambridge.

ESSEX, ROBERT DEVEREUX, second EARL OF, son of Walter, the first earl, was born 10 Nov., 1567, at Netherwood, Herefordshire. He had his education in Trinity College, Cambridge, and on being introduced at court, became a great favourite with Queen Elizabeth. In 1585 he went to the Low Countries, and distinguished himself at the battle of Zutphen. On his return he was made master of the horse, and commanded the cavalry in the camp at Tilbury. After this he went on two expeditions against Cadiz, the last of which failed, owing to a difference between the Earl and Raleigh. On his return home, Essex was made Earl Marshal of England, and master-general of the ordnance. But he had now attained the height of royal favour, and his fall was hastened by repeated acts of indiscretion. At the council-board he contradicted the queen, who gave him a box on the ear, and told him to go and be hanged; when, instead of making an apology, he rose in extreme wrath, swore that he would not have taken such an affront from the great Harry, and quitted the presence. An apparent reconciliation took place, but it was a short calm. The earl was sent soon after to Ireland, where he made peace with the rebel Tyrone, contrary to instructions; and next, to complete his ruin, he left the government without leave. After his arrival in London, he created considerable alarm by arming his followers and putting his house in a state of defence; for which he was summoned to appear at the council-board, but he refused to attend; on which a conflict ensued, and being soon compelled to surrender, he was sent to the Tower. His trial and condemnation quickly followed, and he was beheaded 25 Feb., 1600-1. The story of his giving a ring to the countess of Nottingham, to be conveyed to the queen, but which commission that lady, at the instigation of her husband, neglected to perform, though long regarded as fabulous, is now known to be true. The earl married the widow of Sir Philip Sidney. He had a taste for poetry, and his style of composition is vigorous and correct. He was also a great patron of men of learning and genius.—Athen. Cantab.

ESSEX, ROBERT DEVEREUX, third EARL OF, son of the preceding, was born 1592, and educated at Eton and Oxford. At the age of 14 he was betrothed to Lady Frances Howard, but immediately afterwards he went on his travels, and in his absence his young wife became enamoured of Carr, afterwards Earl of Somerset. A divorce ensued, that she might be gratified, whereupon Essex went abroad and served in the wars of the Netherlands. On his return he formed another unhappy marriage with the daughter of Sir William Paulet, from whom he was also divorced. At the breaking out of the civil war, he accepted a commission as general of the Parliamentary army, and fought the king in the battle of Edgehill. After this he gained many advantages, for which he received public thanks and the most profuse grants from his employers. Died 14 Sept., 1646.

ESSEX, THOMAS CROMWELL, EARL OF, was born in or about 1498, being the son of a blacksmith at Putney, in Surrey. Early in life he became clerk or secretary to the English factory at Antwerp, which situation he soon left, and went into several countries as the secret agent of his sovereign. On his return to England he was taken into the service of Cardinal Wolsey, who obtained for him a seat in the House of Commons, where he defended his master with great spirit. On the fall of the cardinal the king took Cromwell into his own service, and gave him several valuable and important offices. He was very instrumental in procuring the dissolution of the religious houses and in promoting the principles of the Reformation. For these services he obtained the title of the Earl of Essex, with many manors and estates, chiefly the spoils of the church. At length his affairs took an adverse turn. He had the imprudence to advise the marriage of the king with Anne of Cleves; but the union did not prove agreeable to the tyrant, who wreaked his vengeance on Cromwell by causing him to be attainted of high treason and heresy. He was beheaded on Tower Hill, 28 July, 1540. With his dying breath he declared his firm belief in the sacraments and doctrines of the church which he had been engaged in persecuting and robbing during the greater part of his career.—Athen. Cantab.

ESSEX, WALTER DEVEREUX, EARL OF, was born at Caermarthen, in or about Dec., 1538. For some time he was known as Lord Ferrers; but in 1558 he succeeded to the title of Viscount Hereford. In 1574 he was created Earl of Essex for his bravery against the northern rebels. He was afterwards sent to Ireland to subjugate the province of Ulster, and in 1576 he was appointed earl-marshal of that kingdom for life. He died at Dublin shortly afterwards, on 22 Sept., 1576. He was the author of a poem entitled 'The Complaint of a Synner,' printed in Farr's Select Poetry of the Reign of Elizabeth, and in other collections.—Athen. Cantab.

ESTACO, ACHILLES. See STATIUS.

ESTAING, CHARLES HECTOR, Comte D', a French naval and military commander, was born in Auvergne, 1729; and was guillotined 28 April, 1794.

ESTAMPES, ANNE DE PISSELEN, Duchesse D', mistress of Francis I., king of France, was born about 1608. She carried on a correspondence with Charles V., and informed him of the state of the armies and the country, by which means he gained the greatest advantages, and nearly ruined France. After the death of Francis she retired to her country-seat, where she died about 1576.

ESTREES.

ESTCOURT, RICHARD, an actor and dramatist, born at Tewkesbury, Gloucestershire, 1668. He eloped from school to join a company of strolling players, and, after leading a vagrant life some years, became a comic performer at Drury Lane. He was a great favourite with the Duke of Marlborough; and, when the Beef-steak Club was formed, Dick Estcourt, as he was called, had the office of providore conferred on him, when, as a mark of distinction, he wore a gridiron of gold suspended about his neck with a green riband. Died 1713. His plays are 'The Fair Example,' a comedy; and 'Prunella,' an interlude.

ESTIUS, WILLIAM, a Catholic divine, born at Gorcum, in Holland, about 1542. He became professor of theology, and afterwards chancellor of the university of Douay, where he died 20 Sept., 1613. His works are 'Martyrum Edmundi Campaniani,' from the French; 'Historia Martyrum Gorcomensium;' 'Orationes Theologicae;' 'Commentarii in quatuor libros Sententiarum,' 4 vols. folio; one of the best theological works, according to Dupin, which the Roman Church can boast of; 'Annotationes in præcipua difficiliora S. Scripturæ loca,' 'In omnes B. Pauli et aliorum apostolorum epistolas Commentaria,' 2 vols. folio.

ESTOILE, PIERRE DE L', grand auditor of the chancery of Paris, was born 1546, and died Oct., 1611. His Journals of Henry III. and Henry IV. were published after his death. His son Claude (b. about 1547; d. 1652) was a member of the French academy, and wrote some plays and poems.

ESTRADES, GODEFROID, comte d', marshal of France, distinguished himself both as a soldier and diplomatist. He was born at Agen, 1627, and in 1661 was sent ambassador to England, where he maintained his right of precedence over the Spanish ambassador, and negotiated the sale of Dunkirk. He was despatched again to London, 1660; and the year following went to Holland, where he concluded the treaty of Breda. In 1673 he distinguished himself at the conference of Nimeguen for a general peace. Died 26 Feb., 1686. His 'Negotiations' have been several times printed.

ESTRÉES, CÉSAR D', cardinal, and abbat of St. Germain des Prés, was born at Paris 5 Feb., 1628. He was son of the Duke d'Estrees, and was raised to the see of Laon, 1653. Louis XIV. employed him in several negotiations, particularly at Rome. Died 18 Dec., 1714.

ESTRÉES, FRANÇOIS ANIBAL D', son of Jean d'Estrees, became a duke and marshal of France. He was born 1573, and educated for the church, which he quitted to follow the profession of arms. He distinguished himself on many occasions in the field, and was no less eminent as a diplomatist. Died at Paris, 5 May, 1670. He wrote 'Memoirs of the Regency of Mary de Medicis;' 'Relation of the Siege of Mantua,' &c. His sister, Gabrielle d'Estrees, was the mistress of Henry IV., by whom she had three children. She died suddenly 10 April, 1599.

ESTRÉES, JEAN D', grand master of the artillery of France, distinguished himself at the taking of Calais, 1558, and on several other occasions. Born 1486; died 1567.

ESTRÉES, LOUIS CÉSAR LETELLIER, maréchal d', a French soldier and statesman, born 2 July, 1605; died 2 Jan. 1771. In 1756 he was appointed to the command of the army in Germany, where he obtained signal advantages over the duke of Cumberland.

ESTRÉES, VICTOR MARIE, duc d', vice-admiral and marshal of France, was born 30 Nov., 1660, and died 28 Dec., 1737. He was a man of letters as well as a soldier.

ESTYF, GEORGE, B.D., was educated at Caius College, Cambridge; became preacher at St. Mary's church, Bury St. Edmund's, 1598; died 2 Aug., 1601, æt. 36. He wrote seven theological treatises in English, published in one volume, 1603; and 'De Certitudine Salvit, et perseverantia Sanctorum non interisca.'—Athen. Cantab.

ETHELBERT, king of Kent in 560; died 616.

ETHELBERT, king of England, the second son of Ethelwulf, succeeded his brother Ethelbald 860, and died 866.

ETHELKED, king of England, the son of Edgar, succeeded his brother Edward the Martyr 978, and died 1016.

ETHELWOLF, king of England, ascended the throne 838, and died 857.

ETHEREGE, GEORGE, a native of Thame, Oxfordshire, received his education at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (M.A. 1539), and became Greek professor in that university; but, adhering to the Catholic religion, he was deprived on the accession of Elizabeth, whereupon he removed to the metropolis, and established a school for Catholic youths. One of his pupils was William Giffard, afterwards archbishop of Rheims. Mr. Etherege, who underwent much persecution on account of his religion, was living in 1588. He wrote some Latin Poems; Observations on the Classics, &c.

ETHEREGE, SIR GEORGE, was born about 1636, in Oxfordshire. In 1664 he produced a comedy, called 'The Comical Adventure, or Love in a Tub,' the favourable reception of which encouraged him to write another in 1668, entitled, 'She Would if She Could;' and in 1676 appeared the 'Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter.' He received the honour of knighthood about 1683. He was sent envoy to Ratisbon, where, having drunk too freely, he fell down stairs, and broke his neck, about 1689.

ETOILE. See ESTOILE.

ETTMULLER, MICHAEL, professor of botany, anatomy, and chemistry at Leipzig, was born 26 May, 1644, and died 9 March, 1683. His works were published in a collected form at Naples, 5 vols., folio, 1720. His son, Michael Ernest (b. 26 Aug., 1673; d. 25 Sept., 1732), became director of the Academy Naturæ Curiosorum. Many of his works are in the collections of that academy, and in the 'Acta Eruditorum.'

ETTRICK, WILLIAM, M.A., an English clergyman, died at High Barnes, Sunderland, 19 Jan., 1847, aged 90. He was an excellent biblical scholar, and the author of several works on the subject of Sacred Prophecy.

ETTY, WILLIAM, a painter, born 10 March, 1787, at York, where he died 13 Nov., 1849. In 1807 he was admitted a student in the Royal Academy, and was also a private pupil of Sir Thomas Lawrence for a year. By degrees he succeeded in building up a reputation, and in 1821 his 'Cleopatra's Arrival at Cilicia,' in which the nude female form was depicted with great correctness, and with a voluptuous glow of colour, brought him into considerable notice. In 1822 he went to Italy, and spent many months in the study of the Venetian colourists. In 1848 an exhibition of his works was opened in London, prominent among which were the nine great paintings which he considered the triumphs of his artistic career, and in which he says he aimed 'to paint some great moral on the heart.' They comprise 'The Combat,' the three 'Judith' pictures, 'Ennaiah, David's Chief Captain,' 'Ulysses and the Sirens,' and the three pictures of 'Joan of Arc.' Etty is one of the chief artists of the modern English school.

EUBULIDES, of Miletus, a philosopher, the disciple and successor of Euclid, flourished b.c. 360.

EUCLID, the mathematician, lived at Alexandria, about 300 b.c. His native place is not known. He was a teacher of mathematics, particularly of geometry, in which branch he was the most distinguished scholar among the Greeks. His 'Elements' have gone through countless editions. Of his other works the principal are the 'Data,' containing geometrical theorems, and the 'Phenomena,' relating to astronomy.

EUCLID, an ancient Greek philosopher, was a native of Megara, a circumstance which led to his sect being designated the 'Megaric.' It was also called 'Eristic,' from its disputatious character, and 'Dialectic,' from the form of discourse practised by its disciples. Euclid flourished about 400 b.c.

EUDEMON, JOHN ANDREW, a native of Crete, who entered the society of Jesus, and became rector of the Greek College at Rome. He was also chaplain to Cardinal Barberini, when he went into France, where he gave much offence by his book entitled 'Admonitio ad Regem Ludovicum XIII.' Died 24 Dec., 1625.

EUDOCIA, or EUDOXIA, wife of Theodosius II., emperor of Rome, died 460, aged 67. She composed several poems which are lost. There is attributed to her a singular work entitled 'Homocentra,' being a Life of Jesus Christ, in 2343 hexameter lines, formed by verses and hemistichs selected from Homer. The authorship is, by some, ascribed to one Pelagius, who lived in the 5th century.

EUDOXUS, a Pythagorean philosopher of Cnidus, a city of Caria, lived about 370 b.c.

EUGENE, the PRINCE, Francis of Savoy, commonly called Prince Eugene, was born at Paris 18 Oct., 1663. His father was Eugene Maurice, general of the Swiss, governor of Champagne, and earl of Soissons; his mother, Donna Olympia Mancini, niece of Cardinal Mazarin. After the death of his father and the exile of his mother, he and his brother Philip went to Vienna, where they met with a gracious reception. In the war which broke out with Turkey, Prince Philip fell in battle, and left his command to Eugene, who signalled himself at the siege of Vienna in 1683, as he afterwards did at Buda. He next served against the French in Italy; and in 1697 commanded the army in Hungary, where he gained a splendid victory, in which the Turks lost above thirty thousand men, with their commander the Grand Vizier. On the breaking out of the war occasioned by the disputes about the Spanish succession, Eugene commanded the Imperialists in Italy, where he was opposed to Villeroi, whom he made prisoner. After this he acted in conjunction with Marlborough; but the history of their campaigns would far exceed our limits. In 1712 the prince came to England, to prevail upon our court to continue the war, but could not succeed. Compelled now to act on the defensive, he exerted himself to the utmost; and in 1714 settled preliminary articles with Marshal Villars at Rastadt, which ended soon after in a general peace. In 1716 the war with the Turks was resumed; and the prince again took the field in Hungary, where he attacked the enemy in their camp, and obtained a complete victory, which was followed by the capture of Temeswar and Belgrade. From this time to 1733 Eugene remained at Vienna, employed in the councils of the emperor; but in that year he assumed the command in Italy, where he experienced various success in the contest with the combined powers of France, Spain, and Sardinia. He was found dead in his bed 21 April, 1736. The prince was a man of letters, and left memoirs of his own life, printed at Weimar 1809.

EUGENIUS, an illustrious bishop of Carthage, died 6 Sept., 505.

EUGENIUS I., Pope, elected 654; died 657.

EUGENIUS II., a Roman, elected Pope 824; died 27 Oct., 827.

EUGENIUS III. was elected Pope 1145; died 8 July, 1153.

EUGENIUS IV. Gabriel Condolmerio, was elected Pope 1431, and died 23 Feb., 1447.

EULER, LEONARD, a mathematician, was born at Basle 14 April, 1707. In 1727 he followed his friends, Nicholas and Daniel Bernouilli, to Petersburg, whither they had gone four years before to become professors in the academy of that city. Here he was associated with them in the mathematical class; and in 1733 was appointed professor of philosophy. In 1735 he lost the sight of one of his eyes by a fever, brought on through excessive labour on a calculation which he performed in three days, when other mathematicians had required as many months for the completion of it. In 1740 he divided a prize given by the Academy of Sciences at Paris for a paper on the tides, having previously gained one for a memoir on the nature of fire. In 1741 he went to Berlin to assist in the formation of the academy there; and the early volumes of that institution were enriched with many of his papers. In 1749 appeared his great work on the construction and manœuvring of ships, for which he received a handsome present from the king of France, and another from the English government, for that and his lunar tables. In 1766 he returned to Petersburg, where he employed himself incessantly in preparing papers for the academy, besides publishing separate works. At length he lost his sight entirely, but still continued his studies, the result of which he dictated to an amanuensis. He died 7 Sept., 1783. The catalogue of his works, which makes fifty pages, is too voluminous even for an abstract.

EUNAPIUS, a native of Sardis in Lydia, in the fourth century, was a physician and historian. He wrote the Lives of the Philosophers and Sophists, in which he is very severe on Christianity.

EUNOMIUS, an Arian of the fourth century, was born at Dicora in Cappadocia, and became the head of a new sect, called Eunomians. In 366 he was made bishop of Cyzicum by his patron, Eudoxius of Antioch. Died about 394.

EUPHORIION, a Greek poet and historian, who flourished B.C. 274.

EUPHRANOR, a sculptor and painter of Athens, was the disciple of Aristides, and lived about 302 years B.C.

EUTOCIUS.

EUPOLIS, an Athenian comic poet, who lived about the year 435 B.C.

EURIPIDES, a Greek tragic poet, born at Salamis, of Athenian parents, 480 B.C. He was instructed in rhetoric by Prodicus, and by Anaxagoras in philosophy. Socrates was his familiar friend. He died B.C. 406, at the court of Archelaus, king of Macedon. Most of his plays, of which he composed at least seventy-five, are lost. Seventeen or eighteen, however, remain, besides some fragments, and the 'Cyclops,' which was a performance of Euripides belonging to the satirical drama. These have been repeatedly edited and translated into most modern languages.

EUSDEN, LAURENCE, a poet, born at Spofforth, Yorkshire, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree, after which he entered into orders. In 1718 he was made poet laureate, which procured him many enemies, and among the rest Pope, who gave him a place in the Dunciad. He afterwards obtained the rectory of Comingsby, Lincolnshire, where he died 27 Sept., 1730. Some of his best poems are in Nichols's 'Select Collection.'

EUSEBIUS, a Greek, who succeeded Pope St. Marcellus 2 April, 310, and died 17 Aug., in the same year.

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS, bishop of Caesarea in Palestine, one of the most learned men of his age, was born about 267, and died 338. He left many valuable works. The most important is an Ecclesiastical History, in ten books. There were several other ecclesiastics of the same name, the principal of whom was Eusebius, bishop of Samosata, in the fourth century, who opposed the Arians, and was murdered by a woman of that party in Syria.

EUSTACE, JOHN CHETWODE, an English clergyman of the Roman communion, was born in or about 1762. He was educated in the Benedictine seminary of St. Gregory at Douay; but after taking the habit quitted without making his profession, though he ever retained a warm attachment to the order. He became travelling tutor to some noblemen and gentlemen, and died at Naples 1 Aug., 1815. He published 'A Classical Tour through Italy, An. MDCCCLII.,' 2 vols., 4to., London, 1813. This much-admired work has gone through eight editions. Mr. Eustace was also author of an 'Answer to a Charge delivered by the Bishop of Lincoln in his Triennial Visitation in 1812.'

EUSTACHIUS, BARTHOLOMEW, a celebrated Italian anatomist, professor at Rome, died 1574.

EUSTATHIUS (Str.), was a native of Sida in Pamphylia. He was bishop of Berea, and afterwards of Antioch. He opposed the Arians, who procured his deposition and banishment to Thrace, where he died about 337. His 'Treatise on the Pythoness' was printed 1689.

EUSTATHIUS, a native of Constantinople, became archbishop of Thessalonica, and died about 1198. He wrote commentaries on Homer and the Periegesis of Dionysius.

EUSTRATIUS, archbishop of Nice in the twelfth century, wrote commentaries on Aristotle's Analytics and Ethics.

EUTHYMIUS ZIGABENUS, a Greek monk of the twelfth century, author of a treatise against heresies, entitled 'Pamphila,' and of other works.

EUTOCIUS, a mathematician of the sixth century, was a native of Ascalon in Palestine. He wrote Commentaries on the Conics of Apollonius, and others on the works of Archimedes.

EUTROPIUS.

EUTROPIUS, FLAVIUS, a sophist and historian, was secretary to Constantine the Great, and afterwards a soldier under Julian, whom he attended in his last expedition against Persia. He also bore the offices of proconsul and praetorian prefect. His Compendious History of Roman affairs comes down to the reign of Valens, to whom it is dedicated.

EUTYCHES, a monk of the fifth century, who was elected abbat of the convent near Constantinople, where he lived in great repute, till, in his zeal against the Nestorian heresy, he fell into an opposite one, by asserting that the human body of Christ was only apparent. For this he was deposed in the council of Constantinople in 448; but the sentence was reversed in another held at Ephesus the year following. A third council was then called at Chalcedon in 451, in which Eutyches and his opinions were condemned. When he died is unknown. There was a grammarian of this name in the sixth century, who wrote a treatise 'De Aspiratione,' and two books, 'De discernendis conjugationibus.'

EUTYCHIUS, a Christian writer and physician, was born at Cairo 876. Towards the close of life he studied divinity, and in 933 was chosen patriarch of Alexandria. He wrote annals from the beginning of the world to the year 900, which were published by Pocock. Died 950.

EVAGRIUS, a monk of the fourth century, surnamed Ponticus, from the place of his birth near the Euxine Sea. He became archdeacon of Constantinople; but being obliged to fly from thence on account of some charges of immorality, he retired to Syria, where he died in 399. He espoused the doctrines of Origen, and added others to them similar to Pelagianism. He wrote some works which are extant.

EVAGRIUS SCHOLASTICUS, was born at Epiphania in Syria, about 536. He practised law at Antioch, where he was raised to the rank of counsellor, quaestor, and prefect. It is uncertain when he died. His ecclesiastical history has been printed several times.

EVANS, APEL, D.D., a divine and poet, of whom little is known, except that he was of St. John's College, Oxford, where he took his doctor's degree in 1711. He was bursar of his college and vicar of St. Giles's, Oxford. Many of his poems are in different collections, and his epigrams are evident proofs of his wit.

EVANS, ARISE, an astrologer, was a native of Wales, and educated at Oxford. On taking orders he obtained a curacy in Staffordshire, but was dismissed on account of his irregularities. He then came to London, where he taught mathematics and practised astrology. He also obtained fame as a necromancer. He died during the great rebellion. The noted Lilly was his pupil.

EVANS, BENJAMIN, a dissenting minister, born at Plynnon-Adder, in the parish of Melme, Pembrokeshire, 23 Feb., 1740. He officiated first at Llanywellyllyn; next at Haverfordwest; and finally at Trewen in Cardiganshire, where he resided from 1770 till his death 2 March, 1821. All his published works are in the Welsh language. They include a work on Infant Baptism, to which the 'Serious and Plain Discourse concerning Baptism,' by Dr. Richards of Lynn, originally published in Welsh, was intended as a reply; and a Catechism on the Constitution and Order of Christian Churches. Mr. Evans was a good poet in Welsh and English, and left a number of MSS. in both languages.

EVANS, CALER, D.D., a Baptist minister at Bristol, where he was born 1737. He succeeded his father in his meeting, and also in his academy, which he conducted with great reputation. He received the degree of doctor in divinity from Aberdeen in 1789, and died 9 Aug., 1791. Dr. Evans published Sermons on the Deity of the Son and Holy Spirit, with a Preface against Harwood, 1766; Hymns for public Worship; Address to Christian Professors; Christ crucified; four discourses; and Occasional Sermons.

EVANS, SIR DAVID WILLIAM, recorder of Bombay, and a writer on legal subjects, died 4 Dec., 1821.

EVANS, EVAN, a Welsh poet, born in Cardiganshire about 1730. He entered at Jesus College, Oxford; after which he took orders and officiated as curate in several places. He died at his native place in 1790. In 1764 he published a volume in 4to., entitled 'Disertatio De Bardis,' to which were subjoined 'Specimens of the ancient Welsh bards, translated into English.' His other works are an English poem on 'The Love of our Country,' some Welsh poems; and two volumes of sermons in Welsh, translated from Tillotson and others.

EVANS, JOHN, D.D., a dissenting divine of the Independent persuasion, born at Wrexham, Denbighshire, 1686. He became assistant to Dr. Daniel Williams, and succeeded him in his meeting in London. He was also a lecturer at Salter's Hall, and obtained a doctor's degree from the universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen. Died 16 May, 1730. Dr. Evans is advantageously known by two volumes of excellent sermons on the Christian Temper; and another volume of discourses to young people.

EVANS, JOHN, LL.D., was born at Usk, Monmouthshire, 2 Oct., 1767, and received a liberal education at the universities of Aberdeen and Edinburgh. In 1792 he was appointed pastor of a Baptist congregation in Worship Street, London, and officiated in that capacity till his death, which occurred 25 Jan., 1827. He published a 'Sketch of the Denominations of the Christian World,' and numerous other works.

EVANS, PHILIP, a Welsh Jesuit, who was executed at Cardiff 22 July, 1679, æt. 34.

EVANS, ROBERT WILSON EVANS, B.D., was born at Shrewsbury 30 Aug., 1789, and educated at the grammar school there. Thence he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, and after being tutor of his college for some years became vicar of Tarvin, near Chester (1836-1842). In 1842 he took the college living of Heversham, Westmorland; and in 1856 was appointed archdeacon of Westmorland. Died 10 March, 1866. He wrote 'The Rectory of Valehead,' 'Scripture Biography,' 'Biography of the Early Church,' 'The Ministry of the Body,' 'The Bishopric of Souls,' 'Tales of the Ancient British Church,' 'England under God,' &c.

EVANS, THOMAS, an ingenious bookseller of London, born 1742. He kept a shop in the Strand, and died 30 April, 1784. Mr. Evans, besides publishing new editions of rare books, edited 'Four Volumes of Old Ballads with Notes.'

EVANS, THOMAS SIMPSON, LL.D., was first assistant astronomer-royal to Dr. Maskelyne, but in 1797 took charge of a private observatory at Black-death, belonging to Mr. William Larkins. On the death of that gentleman he was elected master of Travers's mathematical foundation in Christ's Hospital. In 1803 he was appointed mathematical master in the military academy at Woolwich, and in 1813 he succeeded to the royal mathematical school at Christ's Hospital. Dr. Evans, who was a man of rare scientific acquirements, died 28 Oct., 1818, aged 41. He contributed some interesting papers to the Philosophical Magazine, and left behind him, among other translations from foreign scientific works, the whole treatise of Cagnoli on Plane and Spherical Trigonometry, besides a vast number of unfinished papers in several departments of philosophy.

EVANSON, EDWARD, was born at Warrington, Lancashire, April, 1731. He took his degrees in arts at Emanuel College, Cambridge; after which he obtained the vicarage of South Mimms, near Barnet, and next the rectory of Tewksbury, in Gloucestershire, with which he held the living of Longton. On turning Socinian he altered the church service, for which being prosecuted by the parishioners of Tewksbury, he thought proper to give up his preferments when he found that he could hold them no longer. Died 25 Sept., 1805. Mr. Evanson published some pamphlets in justification of his conduct and principles; but his most remarkable performance is entitled 'The Dissimilarity of the four generally received Evangelists,' in which he attempts to destroy the authenticity of the principal part of the New Testament.

EVARISTUS, Pope, successor of St. Anacletus, 96. He suffered martyrdom in 108.

EVEILLON, JACQUES, a French ecclesiastic of Angers, author of works on Excommunications, Ecclesiastical Processions, &c., was born 1572, and died Dec., 1651.

EVELYN, JOHN, was born at Wotton 31 Oct., 1620. He received his education first at Lewes, and next at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1640 he was entered a student of the Middle Temple, but soon afterwards went into Italy. In 1647 he married the daughter of Sir Richard Brown, in whose right he became possessed of Saye's Court, in Kent. For his exertions in promoting the restoration of Charles II. he was appointed a commissioner for the sick and wounded during the Dutch war. He was also one of the first members of the Royal Society. It was by his persuasion that Lord Henry Howard gave the Arundelian marbles to the university of Oxford, for which Mr. Evelyn received the thanks of that learned body, and the degree of doctor of laws. He was likewise appointed one of the commissioners for the rebuilding of St. Paul's, had a place at the board of trade, and was nominated a member of the council for the management of the plantations. After the accession of King James he was made one of the commissioners for executing the office of lord privy seal, and in 1665 he became treasurer of Greenwich Hospital. When Peter the Great was in England, he took up his residence at Mr. Evelyn's house, where he and his attendants did much damage, particularly to the gardens. After a long life spent in useful employment and scientific researches, this worthy man died at Wotton 27 Feb., 1705-6. The principal works of Mr. Evelyn are An Essay on the First Book of Lucretius, in English verse; The French Gardener; Fumifugium, or the inconveniences of the air and smoke of London dissipated; Sculpture, or the History and Art of Chalcography and Engraving on copper; Sylva, or a Discourse of Forest Trees, to which is added Pomona, concerning Fruit Trees; A Parallel of the Ancient Architecture with the Modern; Calendarium Hortense, or the Gardener's Almanac; Public Employment and an Active Life preferred to Solitude; An Idea of the Perfection of Painting; A Discourse on the History of Trade and Navigation; Terra, a philosophical Discourse of Earth; Numismata, or a Discourse of Medals. To modern readers Evelyn is chiefly known by his Memoirs, comprising his Diary from 1641 to 1705-6, and a selection of his familiar letters. These first appeared in 1818, 2 vols. 4to., under the editorship of W. Bray.

EVELYN, JOHN, third son of the preceding, was born at Saye's Court, near Deptford, 14 Jan., 1654-5. He was entered of Trinity College, Oxford, 1668, and while there wrote a Greek poem, prefixed to the second edition of his father's 'Sylva.' In 1673 he published a translation in verse of Rapin's poem on Gardens. He also translated from the French the lives of the grand viziers, Mahomet and Achmet Coprogli; and the life of Alexander the Great, from Plutarch. He became one of the clerks of the treasury, and a commissioner of revenue in Ireland. Died 24 March, 1698.

EVERARD, GILES, M.D., an English physician, known as the author of a curious little book entitled 'Panacea, or a universal Medicine, being a Discovery of the wonderful Virtues of Tobacco,' 8vo., London, 1659. Prefixed is a portrait of the author smoking his pipe.

EVERARD, JOANNES SECUNDUS, second son of Nicholas, mentioned below, was born at the Hague 1511, and studied the civil law at Bourges. In 1533 he became secretary to the archbishop of Toledo, and while in that situation he wrote his 'Basis,' a series of amatory poems, the elegance of which will not atone for their licentiousness. They have been translated into English. Everard served at the siege of Tunis with the Emperor Charles V., who appointed him his Latin secretary. Died 8 Oct., 1536.

EVERARD, NICHOLAS, a Flemish lawyer, president of the councils of Holland and of Mechlin, was born 1462, and died 1532. He wrote 'Topica Juris;' and 'Concilia, sive responsa juris.'

EVERARD, NICHOLAS GRUNDUS, son of the preceding, became treasurer of the States of Brabant and secretary of the Golden Fleece. He was a good Latin poet. Died 1571.

EVERARD, PATRICK, D.D., Catholic archbishop of Cashel, died 31 March, 1821.

EVERARD, ROBERT, an English gentleman, who turned Catholic, and published in 1604 'An epistle to the several congregations of the Non-conformists.'

EVERARD, THOMAS, a Jesuit, who died in London, 16 May, 1633, æt. 73. He translated a dozen Latin, French, and Spanish treatises on ascetic subjects.

EVERDINGEN, ALDRET VAN, a painter, nephew of Cæsar van Everdingen, was born at Alkmaar 1621, and died 1675.

EVERDINGEN, CÆSAR VAN, an historical painter, born at Alkmaar 1666; died 1679.

EVERETT, EDWARD, an American statesman and writer, born at Dorchester, Massachusetts, 1794; died at Boston 15 Jan., 1865. In 1815 he was elected Greek professor at Harvard University, but before entering on the duties of that office he spent four years in Europe—two at Gottingen. In 1821 he was returned to congress, and soon acquired a high reputation for eloquence. He belonged to the Whig party, and always supported a Conservative policy. In 1835 he was elected governor of Massachusetts, and in 1840 appointed minister to the court of St. James's. He returned home in 1845, and in 1846 was chosen president of Harvard university. In 1853 he was appointed secretary of state and subsequently elected a member of the senate. During the American civil war he was a strong supporter of President Lincoln's policy. Three volumes of his orations and speeches have been published.

EVREMOND, ST. See SAINT EVREMOND.

EWALD, JOHN, a Danish poet, born 1743, at Copenhagen, where he died 1781.

EWING, GREVILLE, an eminent Scotch minister of the Congregational church, was born at Edinburgh 27 April, 1707, and died 2 Aug., 1841. He published a number of sermons and theological works; also 'Elements of the Greek language, and a Greek and English Lexicon for the use of those who wish to make themselves acquainted with the New Testament in the original, and also containing all the words which occur in the Septuagint and Apocrypha as well as the Testament.'

EXETER, THOMAS CECIL, first EARL OF, only son of William Cecil, first Lord Burghley, was born at Cambridge, 1542, and probably studied in that university. In 1575 he received the honour of knighthood. He distinguished himself in the wars of the Low Countries, and was constituted governor of the Brill, one of the cautionary towns pledged by the States of Holland to Queen Elizabeth. On the death of his father in 1598 he succeeded to the title of Lord Burghley. In the 43rd Elizabeth, he was engaged in commanding the forces against the earl of Essex and his adherents, and in 1601 he was installed a knight of the Garter. King James I. made him earl of Exeter. He died 7 Feb., 1622-3.

EXIMENO, ANTHONY, a Spanish Jesuit, born 1720; died at Rome 1808. He wrote a Military History of Spain, and a celebrated Italian work on music, entitled 'Dell' origine e delle regole della musica, colla storia del suo progresso, decadenza, e rinnovazione.'

EXMOUTH, EDWARD PELLEW, VISCOUNT, was born at Dover 19 April, 1757, and entered the navy at an early age. In 1793, soon after being appointed to the command of 'La Nymphé,' he captured the French frigate 'La Cleopâtre,' after a most gallant and determined action. His conduct on this occasion was rewarded with the honour of knighthood. Subsequently, when in command of the 'Arethusa,' he was engaged in several encounters both with batteries on shore and the enemy's vessels at sea. In 1796, while in command of the 'Indefatigable,' he displayed the greatest bravery and humanity in saving the crew of the 'Dutton,' East Indian, which had been driven on the rocks near the garrison at Plymouth. This led to his being created a baronet. He afterwards distinguished himself in numerous engagements with the French. On the renewal of the war after the peace of Amiens, he was appointed to the 'Tonnant,' 84 guns; and in 1804 he was promoted to the rank of rear-admiral, and appointed commander-in-chief in the East Indies. In 1808 he was advanced to the rank of vice-admiral of the blue, and in the commencement of the following year he returned home. He was employed in the blockade of Flushing, 1810, and shortly afterwards was appointed commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean. In 1814 he was created Baron Exmouth, and raised to the rank of full admiral. During his command in the Mediterranean, besides assisting in the restoration of Joachim King of Naples, and reducing the rebellious Toulouise, he concluded treaties with Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, for the abolition of Christian slavery. On his return to England, however, he learnt that the Algerines had violated the treaty in the most flagrant manner. The British government deemed it necessary to inflict signal chastisement on the refractory Dey and his nest of pirates. Lord Exmouth was accordingly sent out, and the memorable bombardment of Algiers ensued. His lordship received on his return the thanks of both houses of parliament, and was created a viscount 1816. The several powers whose subjects he had set free (to the number of 1,200 Christians) also acknowledged the obligation by sending him theft several insignia of knighthood. His lordship died 6 Feb., 1833.

EXPILLY, CLAUDE, a French lawyer, born 21 Dec., 1561; died at Grenoble 25 July, 1636. He wrote legal works, French poems, &c.

EXPILLY, JEAN JOSEPH, a French ecclesiastic and traveller, author of several esteemed works on geography, was born 1719, and died 1793.

EXTON, SIR THOMAS, LL.D., master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, judge of the Admiralty, and vicar-general of the province of Canterbury, died 4 Nov., 1688.

EYBEN, HULDERIC, a lawyer of Helmstadt, born 1629; died 1699.

EYCK, VAN. See ENCINA

EYCK, HUBERT VAN, a painter, who is regarded as the founder of the Flemish school, was born at Maeseck 1366. He was much distinguished by his paintings in distemper; and after the introduction of oil-painting by his brother, he practised in that with equal success. Died 18 Sept., 1426.

EYCK, JOHN VAN, called also John of Bruges, was brother of the preceding, and was born at Maeseck about 1370. He acquired very great reputation even during his lifetime, by his great share in the introduction of oil-painting, the invention of which has been incorrectly ascribed to him by many. He also rendered great service to the art by his improvements in linear and aerial perspective, and in painting upon glass. Died 1445 or 1446.

EYCK, MARGARET VAN, sister of the preceding, was likewise distinguished as a painter. She died about 1430.

EYKENS, PETER, called the Old, a painter of Antwerp, born 1599; died 1649.

EYNDIUS, of Helmsede, JAMES, a Dutch poet and historian, who died 1614.

EYRE, FRANCIS, a Catholic gentleman of Warkworth Castle, Northamptonshire, who died 1804. He was the author of Remarks on the History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, 8vo., 1778; A Short Appeal to the Public on the same, 8vo., 1795; A Short Essay on the Christian Religion, 8vo., 1799; A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Churton, in defence of the Roman Church, 8vo., 1795; and a Reply to Mr. Churton, 1798.

EYRE, SIR JAMES, was born in Wiltshire 1734, and educated at Oxford. Going to the bar, he became one of the city council, and afterwards recorder. In 1772 he was made a baron of the Exchequer; in 1787 chief of that court; in 1792 one of the commissioners of the great seal; and the next year chief justice of the Common Pleas. Died 6 July, 1799.

EYRE, JAMES, an English clergyman, who received his academical training at Catharine Hall, Cambridge. He became head master of the grammar school at Solihull, Warwickshire, and rector of Winterbourne Stoke and Nettleton, Wiltshire, and died 1813, æt. 65. He made numerous annotations on Johnston's Dictionary, which are incorporated in Todd's edition of that valuable work, 1818.

EYSEL, JOHN PHILIP, a medical writer, professor at Erfurt, was born 1652, and died 17 July, 1717.

EYSTON, BERNARD, an English Franciscan friar, author of 'The Christian Duty,' died at Douay 28 May, 1709, æt. 82.

F.

FABER, BASIL, a German Lutheran divine, rector of the college of Erfurt, was born 1520, and died 1575. He was one of the Magdeburg Centurions, and published a dictionary entitled 'Thesaurus Eruditionis Scholasticæ.'

FABER, FRANCIS WILLIAM, D.D., nephew of George Stanley Faber, mentioned below, was born at Durham 1814, and educated at Harrow School and University College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship, which he resigned 1843, on being appointed to the college living of Elton, Huntingdonshire. At this period he was noted for his 'high church' principles, and he wrote and said many harsh things against the Roman church, which, however, he formally joined in 1845, and of which he became a distinguished ornament. For some time after his reconciliation, he was a resident of St. Wilfrid's, Staffordshire, where he founded a confraternity. In 1849 he came to London, and established the Oratory of St. Philip Neri, first located in King William Street, Strand, but removed in 1854 to Brompton. Here he laboured zealously till his death, which occurred 26 Sept., 1863. In his earlier days he was considered one of the most graceful and charming of young poets, 'The Chervell Water-lily and other Poems' being a most popular book in the days of his Oxford career. After his secession from the Anglican establishment, he published a number of works which breathe a spirit of deep earnestness and piety. Among them may be named 'All for Jesus,' which gained extraordinary popularity; 'The Saints and Servants of God'; 'The Spirit and Genius of St. Philip Neri'; 'Spiritual Conferences'; 'Growth in Holiness'; 'Jesus and Mary'; 'Tales of the Angels'; 'Discourse on the Sacraments'; &c. Many of his works have been translated into French, German, and Dutch.

FABER, GEORGE STANLEY, B.D., was born 25 Oct., 1773, and educated at Oxford. In 1832 he was appointed to the mastership of Sherburn Hospital, which he held till his death, 27 Jan., 1854. He published a great number of works on prophecy and controversial subjects.

FABER, JOHN, called the 'Hammer of Heretics,' was born in Swabia about 1470. He became archbishop of Vienna 1531, and died 12 June, 1541. His works were printed at Cologne, 3 vols. folio, 1537-41.

FABER, JOHN, the name of two engravers in mezzotint. The first was born in Holland, and besides engraving he drew portraits with a pen on vellum. He died at Bristol May, 1721. His son, John Faber, probably died in London 1756. The principal of his portraits are the Kit-Kat Club, the beauties of Hampton Court, and the Perceval family, in the history of the house of Yvry.

FABER, TANAGUIL, or TANNEQUI LE FEVRE, a distinguished French scholar, born at Caen, in Normandy, 1615. He was educated at the Jesuits' college of La Flèche, but refusing to take orders in the Roman church, he left Normandy for Paris, where he was appointed by Richelieu inspector of the press of the Louvre. After the cardinal's death he retired to Langres, and finally to Preully, where he openly professed the doctrines of the reformed faith. He was immediately offered a chair in the university of Saumur, which he shortly afterwards exchanged for a more eligible appointment at Heidelberg, where he died 12 Sept., 1672. Faber left Notes on Anacretius, Longinus, Phædrus, Apollodorus, Eutropius, Aelianus Victor, Justin, Terence, Virgil, Horace, Aclian, and on Lucian's Timon and Peregrini. Also two volumes of letters, 1659 and 1665, 4to.; 'Lives of the Greek Poets;' and several other works. His poem of 'Adonis' and his 'Fables of Lockman' are particularly admired. He left a son of the same name, who was an author, and returned to the Catholic church; and also a daughter, the famous Anne Dacier, who edited the classics for the use of the dauphin.

FABERT, ABRAHAM, marshal of France under Louis XIV., was born 11 Oct., 1599, and died at Sedan 17 May, 1662.

FABIANUS, a Roman, who succeeded Anterus as Pope 236, and died 20 Jan., 250.

FABIUS MAXIMUS RULLIANUS, QUINTUS, a Roman, who attacked and defeated the Samnites B.C. 324, against the orders of the Dictator Papirius, who ordered him to be put to death, but an appeal to the people saved his life. He was five times consul, twice dictator, and once censor, and triumphed over seven nations near Rome.

FABIUS MAXIMUS, QUINTUS, the fourth in descent from the preceding, was also consul five times. He distinguished himself by his policy in defending the republic against Hannibal; and died 203 B.C., at the age of 100.

FABIUS PICTOR, QUINTUS, a Roman historian who lived in the third century before Christ. He wrote the history of the war with Hannibal and also the annals of Rome. Of his works only fragments remain.

FABRE, JEAN CLAUDE, a French priest of the oratory, who wrote two dictionaries, an indifferent translation of Virgil, and a continuation of Fleury's Ecclesiastical History. Born at Paris 15 April, 1668; died 22 Oct., 1753.

FABRE D'EGLANTINE, PHILIPPE FRANÇOIS NAZAIRE, an agent in the French revolution, was born at Carcassone 28 Dec., 1755. He was an actor, painter, musician, and poet. As a writer for the stage he possessed merit, and by gaining the prize of the eglantine at the Florida, he added that to his name. He published a periodical work called 'Les Etrennes du Parnasse,' and a poem, entitled 'Châlons sur Marne.' His come-

FABRETTI, RAPHAEL, a Roman antiquary, born at Urbino 1618; died at Rome 7 Jan., 1700. His works are—De Aquis et Aquaductibus veteris Romæ; De Columna Trajana Syntagma; Jasitheii ad Gronovium Apologema; Inscriptionum Antiquarum Explicatio.

FABRI, HONORÉ, a Jesuit, born about 1607 at Bellay; died at Rome 9 March, 1688. He studied medicine and anatomy, and assumed the merit of having discovered the circulation of the blood. His works consist of a System of Optics; an Apology for the Peruvian Bark; and essays on plants and animals.

FABRIANO, GENTILE DA, an historical painter, born at Verona 1332; died 1412.

FABRICIUS, CAIUS, a Roman general, who died about 250 B.C.

FABRICIUS, FRANCIS, was born at Amsterdam 10 April, 1663. He studied the Oriental languages at Leyden, where he was chosen to the pastoral office and the divinity professorship, to which was afterwards added that of eloquence. Died 27 July, 1738. His works consist of five volumes of dissertations on biblical subjects.

FABRICIUS, FREDERICK ERNEST, Baron, a statesman, was a native of Hanover. The duke of Holstein sent him as his minister to Sweden, where he became a great favourite with Charles XII. He was afterwards in equal esteem with Stanislaus of Poland and George I. of England. The Baron is known by his letters, which were published in English 1761.

FABRICIUS, GEORGE, was born at Chemnitz, in Misnia, 24 April, 1516, and died master of the school at Meissen 13 July, 1571. He wrote Latin poems; a Description of Rome; and Origines Saxonice.

FABRICIUS, JAMES, a physician, born at Rostock 1577. He became professor of medicine and mathematics at his native place, but afterwards removed to Copenhagen, where he was appointed physician to the court, and died 16 Aug., 1652. He wrote several medical works in Latin.

FABRICIUS, JAMES, a Lutheran divine, professor at Stettin, was born 1593, and died 1654.

FABRICIUS, JEROME, an eminent physician, also known by the name of Aquapendente, his native place, was born 1537, and became the pupil and successor of Fallopius. He applied himself chiefly to surgery and anatomy, of which he was professor at Padua for forty years. The republic of Venice gave him a pension of one thousand crowns in gold, and honoured him with a statue and a gold chain. He died 21 May, 1619, leaving various learned works on anatomy and surgery. Some authors assert that his pupil, Harvey, learnt the circulation of the blood from him and Fra Paolo.

FABRICIUS, JOHN ALBERT, was born at Leipsic 11 Nov., 1668. He lost his parents at an early age, but was carefully brought up by his guardian, Valentine Albert, a professor of Leipsic, who sent him to Quedlinburg school, and afterwards took him under his own instruction. In 1692 he was admitted a preacher, and soon afterwards settled at Hamburg, where he was appointed librarian to a gentleman of distinction; and in 1699 chosen professor of eloquence. He died there 30 April, 1736. His principal works are—Bibliotheca Latina, 2 vols.

FABRICIUS, VINCENT, a Latin poet and miscellaneous writer, born at Hamburg 25 Sept., 1612; died at Warsaw 11 Sept., 1667.

FABRICIUS, WILLIAM, Hildanus, a German physician and surgical writer, who practised with reputation at Berne. Born 25 June, 1560; died 17 Feb., 1634.

FABRICY, GABRIEL, a French Dominican, who was a learned bibliographer and biblical scholar. Born about 1725; died at Rome 1800.

FABRONI, ANGELO, an Italian ecclesiastic and biographer, born 7 Sept., 1732; died 22 Sept., 1803.

FABROT, CHARLES ANNIBAL, a French lawyer, professor at Aix, in Provence, was born 1780, and died 16 Jan., 1859. He edited Cujas and other writers on the civil law.

FABYAN, ROBERT, an alderman of London, was a native of Essex, and a member of the Drapers' company. He was actively employed in the city on many public concerns; but in 1502 he resigned his gown to avoid the mayoralty. Died 28 Feb., 1511-12. He wrote a chronicle, called 'The Concordance of Histories,' partly in prose and partly in verse, printed first in 1516.

FACCIO, NICOLAS (of Duilier), was born in Switzerland 16 Feb., 1664, and educated at Geneva. Here he became acquainted with a Count Fenil, who formed the design of seizing, if not assassinating the prince of Orange, afterwards William III. This design Faccio communicated to Bishop Burnet, who, of course, imparted it to the prince. In his Travels, Burnet speaks of Faccio as an incomparable mathematician and philosopher, who, though only twenty-one years old, was already become one of the greatest men of his age, and seemed born to carry learning some sizes beyond what it had hitherto attained. In 1687 he came to England, and was honoured with the friendship of Newton. About 1704 he taught mathematics in Spitalfields. During the latter years of his life he was an ardent supporter of the fanatical sect of French Prophets, for which he was pilloried at Charing Cross in 1707. He died at Worcester 28 April, 1753. He wrote MS. commentaries on Newton's Principia; and a number of papers and letters, which are preserved in the British Museum. Among them is a Latin poem entitled 'N. Facci Duellerii Auriaci Throno-Servatus,' in which he claims the merit of having saved King William from the above-mentioned conspiracy.

FACCIOLATI, JAMES, an Italian writer, professor of philosophy and afterwards of logic at Padua, was born 4 Jan., 1682, and died 25 Aug., 1760. His works are numerous, and on various subjects of criticism, grammar, theology, and antiquities.

FACINI.

FACINI, PETER, a painter of history, born at Bologna about 1566; died 1602.

FACIO. See FESCH.

FACUNDUS, bishop of Hermianum, in Africa, who defended the books called the 'Three Chapters' at the council of Constantinople, in 547, for which he was banished. He wrote some pieces which are extant.

FAERNO, GABRIEL, a distinguished Latin poet, was a native of Cremona, and died at Rome 17 Nov., 1561. His most celebrated work is a collection of Fables in Latin verse.

FAESCH. See FESCH.

FAGAN, CHRISTOPHE BARTHÉLEMI, a French comic dramatist, born 1702; died 28 April, 1755.

FAGAN, JAMES, D.D., Catholic bishop of Meath, died at Rome in Aug., 1713.

FAGAN, LUKE, Catholic bishop of Meath, was translated to Dublin 1729, and probably died 1733.

FAGE, RAIMOND DE LA, a French engraver and designer, born 1648; died 4 Nov., 1690.

FAGIUS, PAUL, one of the reformers, whose German name was Buchlein, was born at Rhein-zabern, in the Palatinate, 1504. He received his education first at Heidelberg, and next at Strasburg, after which he became a schoolmaster, but quitted that occupation for the ministry at Inse. Thence he removed to Strasburg, where he obtained a professorship, and next to Heidelberg. In 1549 he came to England with Bucer, on the invitation of Cranmer, who intended to settle them at Cambridge, but Fagius died almost immediately after his arrival there 25 Nov., 1549. He published several works on Hebrew and rabbinical literature. —Athen. Cantab.

FAGNANI, PROSPER, a canonist of great fame at Rome, died 1678, aged 80. He compiled a Commentary on the Decretals.

FAGNANO, JULIUS CHARLES, COUNT OF, and marquis of Toschi, a celebrated mathematician, born at Sinigaglia, in the Roman States, 1682; died 26 Sept., 1766. His works contain an account of his discoveries relative to the property and use of the geometrical curve, commonly called the Lemniscate.

FAGON, GUI CRESCENT, physician to Louis XIV., was born at Paris 11 May, 1638, and died 11 March, 1718.

FAGUNDEZ, STEPHEN, a celebrated casuist among the Jesuits, was a native of Viana, in Portugal, and died 13 Jan., 1645, aged 68.

FAHIE, SIR WILLIAM CHARLES, a British admiral, born 1763; died 1833.

FAHRENHEIT, GABRIEL DANIEL, an experimental philosopher, born at Dantzic 1686. He improved the thermometer, by making use of mercury instead of spirit of wine. He also formed a new scale for the instrument, which the English have adopted; though the French prefer that of Reaumur. Fahrenheit died 16 Sept., 1736.

FAILLE, GERMAIN, syndic of Toulouse; a French antiquary and topographer; born 1616, died 12 Nov., 1711.

FAIRFAX, EDWARD, an English poet, was the son of Sir Thomas Fairfax, of Denton, Yorkshire. He had a liberal education, but led a retired life at Fuyistone, his favourite seat, where he devoted himself to the Muses; and died about 1632. He wrote a book on Demonology, in which he declares his belief in witchcraft, grounded on his own experience. But his great work is a translation of Tasso's poem of 'Godfrey of Boulogne,' which was once very popular.

FAIRFAX, THOMAS, an English Jesuit, who was appointed professor of philosophy at Magdalen College, Oxford, in the reign of James II., and died 2 March, 1716, æt. 60. He was author of 'Some reasons tendered to impartial people why Dr. Henry Maurice, Chaplain to his Grace of Canterbury, ought not to be traduced as a Licenser of a Pamphlet entitled, "A plain answer to a Popish Priest."' This is printed at the end of a work entitled, 'Twenty-one questions further demonstrating the Schism of the Church of England,' Oxford, 1688.

FAIRFAX, THOMAS, Lord Fairfax, the eldest son of Ferdinando Lord Fairfax, was born at Denton, Yorkshire, in Jan., 1611. He studied at St. John's College, Cambridge; but being of a martial disposition, entered early into the military service as a volunteer, under Lord Vere, in Holland; whose daughter he married. At the breaking out of the civil wars, he took a decided part against the king; as his father also did, under whom he served till he obtained a principal command. He contributed to the victory of Naseby; and next went into the West of England, the whole of which he subdued. Cromwell, however, with whom he was associated, deceived him, and Fairfax, when too late, saw his error in pushing things to extremities. In 1647 he succeeded to the family estate and honours, but still continued in public employment under a government which he disapproved. He assisted, however, in the Restoration, and died at his seat 12 Nov., 1671. Lord Fairfax was an encourager of letters, and particularly of antiquarian researches. He wrote some poems, and 'Short memorials of his own life,' published in 1699.

FAIRHOLT, FREDERICK WILLIAM, F.S.A., an English artist, died 3 April, 1866. His works 'On Costume,' his 'Dictionary of Terms of Art,' his 'History of old Civic Pageantry,' 'Up the Nile and Home again,' are well known. He executed the whole of the drawings and engravings of Lord Londesborough's sumptuous 'Miscellanea Graphica,' the 'Inventorium Sepulchrale' of Bryan Faussett, Mr. Roach Smith's 'Roman London,' and 'Antiquities of Richborough,' Mr. Wright's 'Histories of Domestic Manners and Caricatures,' Mr. Halliwell's folio edition of 'Shakspeare,' &c. His last work, which was left almost, if not quite, completed at the time of his death, is on 'Pageantry in the Middle Ages,' one of the subjects on which he had so well qualified himself to write. Mr. Fairholt's drawings upon wood amount to very many thousands, and his etchings also are exceedingly numerous.

FAISTENBERGER, ANTHONY, a painter, of Innsbruck, born 1678; died 1722.

FAITHORNE, WILLIAM, an engraver, was a native of London. At the breaking out of the rebellion, he became a soldier in the royal army, and was made prisoner at Basing House; upon which he was sent to Aldersgate, in London, where he supported himself by engraving. After his release he went to France, and while there profited by an acquaintance with Nanteuil. About 1650 he returned to England, and opened a shop near Temple Bar, for the sale of prints. After continuing there thirty years, he retired from business, but continued still to work for the booksellers. He also painted portraits in miniature.

FALCANDUS.

Died May, 1691. He published a book entitled 'The Art of Engraving and Etching.'

FALCANDUS, HUGO, the author of a History of Sicily, flourished in that island about 1190.

FALCONBERG, LORD. See FAUCONBERG.

FALCONER, SIR DAVID, lord president of the court of Session, in Scotland, and a legal writer, died 15 Dec., 1685, æt. 46.

FALCONER, HUGH, M.D., an eminent naturalist, born at Forres, in Morayshire, 1608; died at London 31 Jan., 1805. He received his education at Aberdeen and Edinburgh; and afterwards proceeded to India as assistant surgeon in the service of the East India Company, of whose botanical gardens he became superintendent. In this capacity he passed twenty years of his life, first at Scharunpore, and afterwards at Calcutta. Dr. Falconer ranks high among the botanists of India. He may be said to have created the teas of Assam—the first successful attempt to transfer the teaplant of China to a foreign region; and it was he also who developed the resources of the great teak forests of Martaban, and first suggested the naturalization of the Jesuits' bark in the Himalaya Mountains and the Neigherry Hills. Dr. Falconer published 'Fauna Antiqua Sivalonis,' in conjunction with T. Cautley; and 'A Descriptive Catalogue of the Fossil Remains of Vertebrata in the Museum of Bengal,' in conjunction with H. Walker; besides many valuable scientific papers in the transactions of various learned societies.

FALCONER, JOHN, an English Jesuit, who died 7 July, 1656, aged 89. Under the signature of B.D. he published 'The Refutation of the Errors of John Thrask,' 4to., St. Omer, 1618; and 'The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary,' 12mo., St. Omer, 1632. He also published several English translations under the initials I.F.—Dodd; Oliver.

FALCONER, THOMAS, a learned writer, born at Chester 1736; died 4 Sept., 1792. He laboured under a severe malady thirty-two years; notwithstanding which he pursued his studies with uncommon diligence, whereof he left indubitable evidences in his Chronological Tables, from the reign of Solomon to the death of Alexander the Great, printed at Oxford 1769; and his edition of Strabo, published by his nephew, the Rev. Thomas Falconer, 1807, 2 vols. folio. In his life-time Mr. Falconer printed 'Devotions for the Sacrament,' 1786; and 'Observations on Pliny's Account of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus.'

FALCONER, WILLIAM, a poet, born at Edinburgh about 1730. At an early age he went to sea, in the merchant service, where he rose to the station of second mate, and was acting in that capacity when he suffered the hardships which he has so well described in his poem of 'The Shipwreck,' published 1762, and dedicated to Edward duke of York, by whose interest he became a midshipman on board the 'Royal George,' 1763. Previous to this he published 'An Ode on his Patron's Departure from England.' Soon after this he was appointed purser of the 'Glory'; and compiled 'An Universal Marine Dictionary.' In 1765 he attacked Wilkes and Churchill in a poem called 'The Demagogue.' In 1760, being made purser of the 'Aurora,' he sailed to the East Indies; but after quitting the Cape, the ship was never heard of, and is supposed to have been lost in the Mosambique Channel.

FALCONER, WILLIAM, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Chester 1743, and after studying medicine at ## FALKLAND.

Edinburgh, settled at Bath, where he obtained a considerable practice as a physician. Died 30 August, 1824. In addition to numerous professional works, he published a translation of Arrian's Voyage round the Euxine Sea; and an anonymous tract entitled 'Observations on the Words which the Centurion uttered at the Crucifixion of our Lord,' 1808. Dr. Falconer was the brother of Thomas Falconer, the editor of Strabo.

FALCONET, CAMILLE, a French physician, book collector, and man of letters, born at Lyons 1 March, 1671; died 8 Feb., 1762.

FALCONET, ETIENNE MAURICE, a French sculptor, born at Paris 1716; died 24 Jan., 1791. His 'Reflections on Sculpture' have been translated into English.

FALCONIA, PROBA, a Latin poetess, who flourished A.D. 395. She composed a cento from Virgil, containing the sacred history from the creation, and the history of Christ in verse.

FALDA, JOHN BAPTIST, an Italian engraver, born about 1640; died about 1700.

FALETTI, JEROME, an Italian poet, born about 1518; died at Padua 3 Oct., 1564.

FALIERI, MARINO, doge of Venice in 1354. He formed the design of murdering all the senators to render himself absolute, but the plot being discovered he was beheaded 17 April, 1355.

FALK, JOHN PETER, a Swedish naturalist and traveller, born in Westrogothia 1727; died at St. Petersburg 30 March, 1774.

FALKENSTEIN, JOHN HENRY, was born in Franconia 1682, and in 1714 became director of the academy of noblemen at Erlingen. He abandoned the Protestant for the Catholic religion; and died 3 Feb., 1760. He published the Antiquities of Nordgau, and several other works of a similar kind.

FALKLAND, HENRY CARY, VISCOUNT, was born at Aldenham, Hertfordshire, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. In 1608 he was made knight of the Bath, and in 1620 created Viscount Falkland in the peerage of Scotland. He was soon afterwards made lord deputy of Ireland, where he continued till 1629. Died Sept., 1633. His writings are 'The History of the most unfortunate Prince, King Edward II.,' Letter to James I.; Epitaph on the Countess of Huntingdon; and Letters to the Duke of Buckingham.

FALKLAND, LUCIUS CARY, VISCOUNT, eldest son of the preceding, was born in Oxfordshire about 1610. He was educated first at Dublin and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, after which he went abroad. In 1639 he served in the army against the Scotch, and in 1640 sat in parliament for Newport in the Isle of Wight. For some time he was an opponent of the court, but when the civil war broke out he raised troops in defence of the king. It was observed of him that he grew more pensive as the breach widened, and was frequently heard to utter the word 'peace.' He was slain at the battle of Newbury 20 Sept., 1643. His principal work is 'A Discourse on the Infallibility of the Church of Rome.' He assisted Chillingworth in his Religion of Protestants, and wrote some verses on the death of Ben Jonson. Lady Falkland, his widow, was the daughter of Sir Richard Morison, knt. On the death of her husband she devoted herself to works of piety and charity, and died Feb., 1646, æt. 35. A memoir of her by John Duncan appeared in 1649, under the title of 'The holy

FALKNER.

Life and' Death of the lady Lettice, viscountess Falkland.'

FALKNER, THOMAS, was born at Manchester 1710. After practising as a surgeon at home, he made a voyage to Guinea, and subsequently sailed for the Brazils. Falling dangerously ill at Buenos Ayres, he experienced such charitable and courteous treatment from the Jesuits that he not merely became a convert to Catholicity, but also a candidate for admission into their society. He was duly received, and eventually qualified for the painful life of a missionary among the savage tribes of South America, in whose service he laboured diligently for nearly forty years. Returning to England after the expulsion of himself and his brethren from those countries by the Portuguese government, he retired to Plowden Hall, Shropshire, where he died 30 Jan., 1784. He wrote 'A Description of Patagonia and the adjoining parts of South America,' 4to., Hereford, 1774.—Obit.

FALKNER, WILLIAM, D.D. received his education at Peterhouse, Cambridge, after which he became rector of Glemsford, Suffolk, and one of the town preachers at King's Lynn, where he died 9 April, 1682. He was author of 'Libertas Ecclesiastica'; 'A Vindication of Liturgies'; and other theological publications.

FALLE, PHILIP, was born in the island of Jersey 1655. He took his degrees at Exeter College, Oxford, after which he returned to his native place, where he enjoyed the living of St. Saviour's, till he was presented to the rectory of Shenley, Hertfordshire, with which he held a prebend in Durham Cathedral. Died 1742. He published 'An Account of the Isle of Jersey.'

FALLOPIUS, GABRIEL, was born at Modena about 1523, and became professor of anatomy, first at Pisa and afterwards at Padua, where he died 9 Oct., 1562. He discovered the tubes of the uterus, which are called by his name. His works were printed at Venice, 3 vols. folio, 1584.

FALLOWS, Rev. FEARON, F.R.S., an eminent astronomer, was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship (B.A., 1813; M.A., 1816). He was appointed astronomer royal at the Cape of Good Hope, where he died 25 July, 1831, aged about 43. Mr. Fallows contributed to the Transactions of the Royal Society a catalogue of 273 southern stars, and a series of pendulum observations.

FALSTER, CHRISTIAN, a Danish critic and classical scholar, who published several learned works between 1717 and 1732.

FALZ, RAYMOND, a celebrated metallist, born at Stockholm 1658; died at Berlin 26 May, 1703.

FANCOURT, SAMUEL, a dissenting minister, born in the West of England 1678. He became pastor of a congregation at Salisbury, from which he was dismissed for denying the Calvinistic doctrines. He then came to London, and established the first circulating library about 1740; in which, however, he had no encouragement; and died poor at Hoxton 8 June, 1768. He published several tracts on the Divine prescience, and the liberty of the human will.

FANSHAWE, Sir RICHARD, was born in Hertfordshire June, 1608. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to the Inner Temple, after which he became secretary to the embassy at Madrid. In the civil wars he acted with loyalty, and was made prisoner at the battle of Worcester. On his release he retired into Yorkshire, where he translated the 'Lusiad,' of Camoëns. In 1659 he went to Breda, where he was knighted by Charles II. After the Restoration he went ambassador to Portugal, to negotiate the marriage between his sovereign and the Infanta Catharine. In 1664 he went to Spain in the same capacity, and died there 4 June, 1666. Besides his version of the Lusiad, he translated Guarini's 'Pastor Fido,' and wrote several pieces in prose and verse. In 1701 his correspondence was published. His lady, Anne, the daughter of Sir John Harrison, left a manuscript, entitled 'Memoirs of the Fanshawe Family,' which was published by Sir N. Harris Nicolas, 1829. She was born 1625 and died 1679.

FANTONI, JOHN, a celebrated anatomist, professor at Turin, was born in that city 1675, and died 15 June, 1758.

FANTONI, JOHN BAPTIST, father of the preceding, was physician to Victor Amadeus, duke of Savoy, and died 1692. He wrote several medical works.

FARADAY, MICHAEL, a distinguished man of science, born at Newington, Surrey, 1794. He was one of those men who have attained distinction in spite of every disadvantage of origin and of early education. His father was a smith, and he himself, after a very imperfect elementary education, was apprenticed to a bookbinder named Kiebau, in Blandford Street. He was, however, already inspired with the love of natural science. His leisure was spent in the conduct of such chemical experiments as were within his means; and he ventured on the construction of an electrifying machine, thus foreshadowing the particular sphere of his greatest future discoveries. He was eager to quit trade for the humblest position as a student of physical science; and his tastes becoming known to a gentleman who lived in his master's neighbourhood, he obtained for him admission to the chemical lectures which Sir Humphry Davy, then newly knighted, and in the plenitude of his power, was delivering at the Royal Institution. This was in 1812. Faraday not only attended the lectures, but took copious notes of them, which he carefully re-wrote and boldly sent to Sir Humphry, begging his assistance in his desire 'to escape from trade and to enter into the service of science.' The trust in Davy's kindness which prompted the appeal was not misplaced. Sir Humphry warmly praised the powers shown in the notes of his lectures, and hoped he might be able to meet the writer's wishes. Early in 1813 the opportunity came. The post of assistant in the laboratory in Albemarle Street became vacant, and Sir Humphry offered it to Faraday, who accepted it with a pleasure which can be easily imagined; and thus commenced, in March, 1813, the connection between Faraday and the Royal Institution, which terminated with his life. Faraday became very soon firmly attached to Davy. The only instance of a suspension—for it was a suspension, and not a breach—of his connection with the Royal Institution occurred from October, 1813, to April, 1815, during which time he accompanied Sir Humphry, as his scientific assistant and secretary, in his travels on the Continent. His life, after his return, was devoted uninterruptedly to his special studies. In 1821, while assisting Davy in pursuing the investigation of the relations between electricity and magnetism, first started by Oersted, he made the brilliant discovery of the convertible rotation of a magnetic pole and an electric current, which was the prelude to his wonderful series of experimental researches in electricity. These investigations procured him the honour of being elected corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences in 1823, and F.R.S. in 1825. In 1827 he published his first work, a volume on 'Chemical Manipulation'; and in 1829 he was appointed chemical lecturer at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, a post which he held, in conjunction with his duties at the Royal Institution, for many years. In 1831 his first paper appeared in the 'Philosophical Transactions,' on the subject of electricity, describing his experimental studies of the science; and from that time for many years the 'Transactions' annually contained papers by Faraday, giving the method and results of his investigations. These papers, with some others contributed to scientific journals on the same subject, were subsequently collected, at different intervals, in three volumes, under the title of 'Experimental Researches in Electricity.' The first volume appeared in 1839, the second in 1844, and the third in 1856. It is not too much to say that by the experiments thus described Faraday formed the science of electricity. He established the identity of the forces manifested in the phenomena known as electric, galvanic, and magnetic; he ascertained with exactness the laws of its action; he determined its correlation with the other primal forces of the natural world. While he was still pursuing the brilliant career of investigation which thus proved so successful, the chair of chemistry was founded at the Royal Institution in 1833, and Faraday was naturally appointed the first professor. In 1835 he was recommended by Lord Melbourne for a pension of £300 a year, in recognition of his great distinction as a discoverer. From that time his career was one of increasing honour. Oxford conferred on him an honorary degree upon the first occasion of the meeting of the British Association at the university. He was raised from the position of corresponding member to be one of the eight foreign associates of the Academy of Sciences. He was an officer of the Legion of Honour, and Prussia and Italy decorated him with the crosses of different orders. The Royal Society conferred on him its own medal and the Rumford medal. In 1858 Queen Victoria allotted to him a residence at Hampton Court, between which and Albemarle Street he spent the last years of his life, and where he died 25 Aug., 1867.

FARDELLA, MICHAEL ANGELO, professor of natural history and astronomy at Padua, wrote several works on mathematics and philosophy. Born 1650; died 2 Jan., 1718.

FARE, CHARLES AUGUSTE, marquis de la, was born at Valerze 1644, and died 1712. He was a captain in the French Guards, and at the age of sixty began to write poetry. His memoirs are spirited and characteristic.

FAREL, GUILLAUME, a French Protestant divine, born in Dauphine 1480; died at Neuchâtel, 1505.

FAREY, JOHN, a geologist, born at Woburn 1766; died 6 Jan., 1826. For some years he was agent of the Duke of Bedford's Bedfordshire estates. He made a Survey of Derbyshire for the Board of Agriculture, and a large collection of observations respecting the order and nature of the strata throughout Britain.

FARNABY.

FARIA Y SOUZA, MANUEL DE, a Portuguese historian and poet, born 1590, and died 3 June, 1649.

FARINACCIO, PROSPER, a learned lawyer, born at Rome 1554; died there 30 Oct., 1618. His works are voluminous.

FARINATO, PAUL, a painter and architect, born at Verona 1525; died 1660.

FARINELLI, a celebrated Italian vocalist, whose real name was Charles Broschi. He was born in the kingdom of Naples 1705, and suffered emasculation in consequence of an accident. After obtaining great applause in the Italian theatres, he came to London, where he added to his fame and fortune. He then went to Spain, and gained the favour of Philip V. and of his successor Ferdinand. The latter conferred on him the order of Calatrava. His conduct rendered him deserving of the honour, for he never abused the interest he had at court for an improper purpose. On the death of his patron he went to Bologna, where he died 15 July, 1782.

FARINGDON, ANTHONY, was born at Sunning, Berkshire, 1596, and educated at Oxford. In 1634 he was presented to the vicarage of Bray, but was deprived of it in the civil wars. After this he was chosen minister of St. Mary Magdalen, Milk Street, London, where he died Sept., 1658. His sermons were published in three folio volumes.

FARINGTON, GEORGE, an English artist of great promise, was born 1754, and died in India 1788.

FARMER, HUGH, a dissenting minister, was born near Shrewsbury 1714, and settled at Walthamstow, where he died 6 Feb., 1787. He wrote an Enquiry into Christ's Temptation in the Wilderness; Dissertation on Miracles; Essay on the Demoniacs of the New Testament; and the general prevalence of the Worship of Human Spirits in the ancient heathen nations.

FARMER, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Leicester 28 Aug., 1735. He was educated at the school of his native town, whence he removed to Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1757; M.A. 1760). In 1750 he served the office of junior proctor, and the year following published proposals for a History of Leicester, which he never completed, but gave the materials and plates to Mr. Nichols. In 1766 came out his celebrated 'Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare.' In 1775 he was chosen master of his college, and in 1778 was elected librarian of the university. In 1780 he became prebendary and chancellor of Lichfield; in 1782 prebendary of Canterbury; but in 1788 he exchanged the latter preferment for a canonry of St. Paul's. Died 8 Sept., 1797.

FARNABY, THOMAS, an eminent schoolmaster, was born in London about 1575, and admitted a servitor of Merton College, Oxford, 1590. Thence he was drawn away by a Jesuit, whom he accompanied to Spain, but not being inclined to a religious life, he entered on board the English fleet; after which he served as a soldier in the Low Countries. On his return to England he kept a school at Martock, Somersetshire, whence he removed to London, where he gained a great reputation as a teacher. In 1616 he was admitted to the degree of M.A. at Cambridge. In the civil wars he was imprisoned for his loyalty. Died 12 June, 1647. He published Juvenal and Persius; Seneca's Tragedies; Martial; Lucan's Pharsalia; and other classical authors, with notes; Index

FARNESE.

Rhetoricus et Poeticus; Florilegium Epigrammatum Græcorum; Systema Grammaticum; and Phrasæologia Anglo-Latina.

FARNESE, PETER LOUIS, first duke of Parma and Placentia, was born about 1490. He was the son of Pope Paul III. by a secret marriage, before he became a cardinal. He was assassinated by his subjects, on account of his oppressive conduct, 1547.

FARNESE, ALEXANDER, a Roman cardinal, was the eldest son of the above, and born in 1520. Charles V. said, that if all the members of the sacred college were like Farnese, it would be the most august assembly in the world. Died 1589.

FARNESE, ALEXANDER, third duke of Parma, and nephew of the preceding. He distinguished himself as an able general in the Low Countries, and afterwards in France, where he was killed 3 Dec., 1592.

FARNEWORTH, ELLIS, was born at Bonteshall, Derbyshire, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge (M.A. 1738). In 1762 he obtained the rectory of Carsington, in his native county, but died on 25 March in the following year. He translated the Life of Pope Sixtus V. from the Italian; Davila's History of the Civil Wars of France; the works of Machiavel; and Fleury's History of the Israelites.

FAKQUHAR, GEORGE, the son of a clergyman at Londonderry, in Ireland, was born there 1678. In 1694 he was sent to Trinity College, Dublin, but quitting the university, he made his appearance on the stage. Having the misfortune to wound a brother-player, by accidentally using a sword instead of a foil, he relinquished the profession of an actor, and came to London, where Lord Orrey gave him a lieutenant's commission in his regiment. In 1698 his comedy of 'Love in a Bottle' was performed with applause; and in 1700 he increased his reputation by 'The Constant Couple; or a Trip to the Jubilee.' In 1701 came out the comedy of 'Sir Harry Wildair;' and the next year he published his 'Miscellanies, or collection of poems, letters, and essays.' In 1703 he brought out 'The Inconstant, or The Way to win him;' and the same year he married a lady, who had fallen in love with him, and gave herself out as a person of fortune, to accomplish her object. In 1704 appeared the farce of 'The Stage Coach;' which was followed by the 'Twin Rivals;' and that by his comedy of 'The Recruiting Officer.' His last piece was the 'Beaux Stratagem.' He died in April, 1707.

FAKQUHAR, Sir WALTER, bart., M.D., a celebrated London physician, was a native of Peterhead, and died 26 March, 1819.

FARQUHARSON, JOHN, a Scotch Jesuit, born 19 April, 1699. He joined the society at Tournay, and in 1729 landed at Edinburgh to serve the mission. Father Farquharson, who died after 1755, was an accomplished Gaelic scholar, and formed an immense collection of poetry in that language, in a folio volume, which he placed in the Scotch college at Douay. Instead, however, of its being carefully preserved, it was suffered to be thrown aside and to perish.—Olivier.

FARR, SAMUEL, M.D., a physician of Taunton, Somersetshire, was born 1741, and died 11 March, 1795. He published several professional works.

FARRANT, RICHARD, an English composer of church music, died about 1585.

FARREN, ELIZA, a celebrated actress, who, in

FAUSTUS.

1797, married the earl of Derby. Born 1759; died 23 April, 1829.

FASTOLFF, Sir JOHN, was born in Norfolk about 1378. He distinguished himself in Ireland, and afterwards in France, as a statesman and a warrior; for which he was knighted in the field, and honoured with the Garter. He was dangerously wounded at the battle of Agincourt, but recovered, and had the manor of Fritense, near Harfleur, settled on him for life. After a great variety of service, and many brilliant actions, he returned to England, where he died 6 Nov., 1459. On account of the similarity of names, some have ridiculously supposed that Shakspeare drew his character of Falstaff from this great commander, which would be doing as much injustice to the poet as the knight.

FATHERWOOD, ALFRED, M.D., died in London 19 Feb., 1865, aged 62. He was author of a treatise on the diseases of the air passages, lungs, and pleura.

FAUCHET, CLAUDE, a French historian and antiquary, born 1529; died 1601.

FAUCHET, CLAUDE, a French ecclesiastic, who espoused the revolutionary cause with ardour, and became notorious for blasphemy and profanity. In 1791 he was appointed to what was termed the constitutional bishopric of Bayeux, and two years later he was bishoptined. Born 22 Sept., 1744; died 13 Oct., 1793.

FAUCHEUR, MICHEL LE, a French Protestant divine, and celebrated pulpit orator, died at Paris 1 April, 1657. He wrote a treatise on Oratorical Action; Sermons, &c.

FAUCONBERG, THOMAS BELARVSE, second Viscount, married in 1657 Mary, second daughter of Oliver Cromwell. He deserted the cause of his father-in-law, and concurred in the restoration of Charles II., who sent him as ambassador to Venice and the princes of Italy. He was advanced to the dignity of an earl at the Revolution; and died 31 Dec., 1700. His wife survived till 14 March, 1712.

FAULKNER, GEORGE, an Irish printer of great celebrity, and the friend of Dean Swift and Lord Chesterfield. He was chosen an alderman of Dublin, where he died 28 Aug., 1775.

FAUNT, LAURENCE ARTHUR, a Jesuit, born at Poston, Leicestershire, 1554. He was sent to Merton College, Oxford, but soon left for Louvain, where he joined the society. Being sent to Poland, he became professor of Greek and theology at Posna, and died 28 Feb., 1590-1. He wrote numerous treatises on religious controversy.—Dodd; Olivier.

FAUQUES, MARIANNE AGNES DE, a French romancist, known as Madame de l'Aulaise, was born 1720, and died in London after 1777.

FAUR, GUY DE, lord of Pibrac, was born at Toulouse in 1528. He became an advocate, and was sent by Charles IX. to the council of Trent, where he ably defended the liberties of the Gallican church. In 1565 he was appointed advocate-general in the parliament of Paris; and in 1570 he was made counsellor of state. Died 27 May, 1584. He wrote an Apology for the Massacre of Paris; and 'Quatrains,' or Moral Maxims, in French verse.

FAUST, JOHN. See FUST.

FAUSTUS, an English monk of the fifth century, who became abbat of a monastery in the Lerin Islands, and afterwards bishop of Riez, in Provence,

FAVORINUS.

466. In the controversy respecting grace he took the side of the Semi-Pelagians, and maintained the freedom of the human will.

FAVORINUS, a philosopher and orator, who taught at Athens and Rome in the reign of Adrian.

FAVRE, ANTHONY, Faber, a lawyer and poet, governor of Savoy, was born at Bourg, in Bresee, 4 Oct., 1557, and died 28 Feb., 1624.

FAWCETT, BENJAMIN, a dissenting minister, born at Sleaford, Lincolnshire, 16 Aug., 1715. He officiated at Taunton 1741-45, and at Kidderminster from 1745 till his death, in Oct., 1780. He published an abridgment of some of Baxter's large works, and a few pious tracts of his own.

FAWCETT, JOHN, a popular comedian, born in London 29 Aug., 1768, being the son of a humble actor at Drury Lane. After receiving a sound education at St. Paul's School, he was apprenticed to a linendraper, but his love of the stage induced him to quit trade and to join a company of strolling players. He made a reputation in the provinces by his admirable rendering of comic characters, and in 1791 made his début at Covent Garden. He continued to be a great favourite with the public till 1830, when he retired into private life. Mr. Fawcett produced some little pantomimic dramas at Covent Garden and the Haymarket; the chief of these, 'Obi, or three-fingered Jack,' was for some time very popular. Died 13 March, 1837.

FAWCETT, SIR WILLIAM, K.B., a general, born at Shipdenhall, Yorkshire, 1728. He served in the German war with great reputation, and was appointed aide-de-camp to the marquis of Granby. In 1772 he was promoted to the rank of colonel by brevet, and, in 1777, to that of major-general. The year following he succeeded to the adjutant-generalship, and in 1782 he was made lieutenant-general. In 1780 he received the order of the Bath, and in 1796 the full rank of general. His last promotion was to the governorship of Chelsea College. Died 22 March, 1804. He translated 'The Reveries of marshal Saxe,' 'Regulations for the Prussian cavalry and infantry;' to which he added, 'The Prussian Tactics.' He also published the 'Rules and Regulations for the formation, field exercise, and movements of his majesty's forces,' 1702.

FAWKES, FRANCIS, a poet, born in Yorkshire about 1721. He took his master's degree at Jesus College, Cambridge, 1745, and became curate of Bramham, in his native county, where he wrote 'Bramham Park,' a poem. In 1754 he obtained the curacy of Croydon, where he became known to Archbishop Herring, who gave him the vicarage of Orpington, with St. Mary Cray, Kent, which, in 1774 he exchanged for the rectory of Hayes. Died 26 Aug., 1777. He published, 1761, a volume of original poems and translations; and in 1767 an eclogue, entitled 'Partridge Shooting.' Besides these works he printed translations of Anacreon, Sappho, Bion, Moschus, Musaeus, and Theocritus. His name was also prefixed to a family Bible; and after his death appeared his translation of 'Apollonius Rhodius.'

FAWKES, GUINO, an English Catholic gentleman, who took a leading part in the Gunpowder Plot. He was executed in Palace Yard, Westminster, 31 January, 1605-6.

FAYDIT, ANSELM, a Provençal poet or troubadour, died about 1220. He wrote a poem on the death of his patron, Richard Cœur de Lion; 'The Palace of Love;' and several plays.

FAYDIT, PIERRE VALENTIN, a French priest of the Oratory, who wrote a work on the Cartesian philosophy, for which he was censured by his superiors; and several other works of little merit. Died 1709.

FAYETTE, LOUISE MOTIER DE LA, a French lady, celebrated for her wit and beauty, was maid of honour to Anne of Austria. Louis XIII. fell in love with her, but she resisted all his attempts on her virtue. In 1637 she retired to a convent, where she died 1665.

FAYETTE, MARIE MADELINE PICHOC DE LA VERGNE, Comtesse DE LA, a French writer, born 1632; died May, 1693. She composed the romances of 'Zaide,' the 'Princess of Cleves,' and the 'Princess of Montpensier,' 'Memoirs of the Court of France; History of Henrietta of England, &c.

FAZIO, BARTHOLOMEW, an Italian writer, secretary to Alphonso, king of Naples, died Nov., 1547. He composed several historical works in Latin.

FAZZELLO, THOMAS, a Dominican friar of Palermo, author of a History of Sicily. Born 1498; died 8 April, 1570.

FEARNE, CHARLES, a legal writer, was a native of London and educated at Westminster School. Going to the bar he became very eminent as a chamber counsel, but neglected business for philosophical experiments and mechanical inventions, by which he benefited others, without receiving any advantage himself. Died 21 Jan., 1794, aged 45. He wrote an Essay on Contingent Remainders, and other legal works.

FEATLEY, or FAIRCLOUGH, DANIEL, D.D., was born at Charlton, Oxfordshire, 15 March, 1582. He received his education at Oxford, and having taken orders officiated for some years as chaplain to the English embassy in France. Soon after his return he became chaplain to Archbishop Abbot, who gave him the rectory of Lambeth. Dr. Featley was the last provost of Chelsea College, which post he resigned on his marriage in 1625. At the commencement of the civil wars he was chosen one of the Assembly of Divines, but his views being at variance with those of the majority he was sent to prison. On regaining his liberty he retired to Chelsea College, where he died 17 April, 1645. He wrote several polemical treatises, principally against the Church of Rome. One of his works bears this quaint title: 'The Dippers dipt, or the Anabaptists ducked and plunged over head and ears, at a disputation in Southwark.'

FECHT, JONS, a Lutheran divine and theological writer, born at Sultzburg, in Brisgau, 1636; died at Rostock 5 May, 1716.

FECKENHAM, JOHN DE, whose real name was Howman, was born near the forest of Feckenham, in Worcestershire. He was brought up in the monastery of Evesham, on the dissolution of which he was thrown adrift on the world with a pension of £10. After this he became chaplain to Bonner; and in 1549 was sent to the Tower. Queen Mary made him her chaplain, dean of St. Paul's, and abbat of Westminster. He held a conference with Lady Jane Grey, and also disputed at Oxford with Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer. His conduct towards the Protestants entitled him to respect; and he interceded with Mary for the release of her sister Elizabeth, who nevertheless, on her accession to the throne, caused him to be imprisoned in the Tower. He was subsequently removed to Wisbech Castle, where he died 1585. He was the last mitred abbat who sat in the House of Lords, where he zealously defended the interests of the FEINAIGLE, GREGORY VON, a celebrated mnemonist, was born in Germany about 1762. In the beginning of 1806 he visited France, and gave lectures on the art of memory, being accompanied by a young man who acted as interpreter. At Paris his lectures attracted much notice, and he was even ridiculed on the stage. Subsequently he came to London, and lectured with success. He died in Dublin 27 Dec., 1819. There is a book well known to mnemonists, entitled 'The New Art of Memory, founded upon the Principles taught by M. Gregory Von Feinaigle, and applied to Chronology, History, Geography, Languages, Systematic Tables, Poetry, Prose, and Arithmetic.' To which is added some account of the principal systems of artificial memory from the earliest period to the present time; with instances of the extraordinary powers of natural memory,' Lond., 12mo., 1812; and 3rd editions 1813. This work, the historical portion of which is most creditably executed, was compiled by John Millard, assistant librarian to the Surrey Institution.

FEITH, EVERARD, a German Protestant, author of a book on the antiquities of Homer, disappeared mysteriously at Rochelle in the seventeenth century.

FEITH, RHYNVIS, of Zwolle, in Over-Yssel, a distinguished Dutch poet, born 7 Feb., 1753; died 1824.

FELIBIEN, ANDRÉ, counsellor and historiographer to the king of France, was born at Chartres May, 1619; and died 11 June, 1695. He left some able works on architecture and painting.

FELIBIEN, JACQUES, brother of the preceding, became canon of Chartres, and published several books of devotion. Born 1636; died 23 November, 1716.

FELIBIEN, JEAN FRANÇOIS, son of André, and his successor in all his places, died at Paris 23 June, 1733, aged 75. He published Historical researches respecting the Lives and Works of celebrated Architects, &c.

FELIBIEN, MICHEL, a younger son of André, became a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, and wrote a History of the Abbey of St. Denis, &c. Born 14 Sept., 1696; died 25 Sept., 1719.

FELICIANUS, JOHN BERNARDINE, a Benedictine of Venice, who published several Latin translations of Greek authors between 1533 and 1545.

FELIX I., succeeded Pope St. Dionysius 269, and died 1 Jan., 274.

FELIX II., anti-pope, was obtruded into the Holy See 356, but three years later was driven from Rome in disgrace, and died 22 Nov., 375.

FELIX III., succeeded Pope Simplicius 6 March, 483, and died 25 Feb., 492.

FELIX IV., succeeded Pope John I. 24 July, 526; died 25 Sept., 530.

FELIX V. See AMADEUS VIII.

FELIX (ST.), bishop of Dunwich, in Suffolk, converted to Christianity Sigebert, king of East Anglia, and almost all the idolaters of that kingdom. Died 646.

FELL, JOHN, a learned prelate, born at Longworth, Berkshire, 23 June, 1625, being the son of Dr. Samuel Fell, noticed below. He received his education at Christ Church, but in the Rebellion was ejected from the college for his loyalty. At the Restoration he was made canon and dean of Christ Church, to which college he was a liberal benefactor. He served the office of vice-chancellor several times, and in 1675 was made bishop of Oxford, with leave to hold the deanery in commendam. Died 10 July, 1686. He published the Life of Dr. Hammond; a Paraphrase on St. Paul's Epistles; and annotated editions of St. Cyprian, and other ancient authors.

FELL, JOHN, a dissenting minister, born 22 August, 1735, at Cockermouth, Cumberland. He was ordained over a congregation at Beccles, in Suffolk; whence he removed to Thaxted, and lastly to Homerton as tutor in the dissenting academy. Here he had not been long before he was censured and dismissed for reading a newspaper on Sunday. On this, some of his friends engaged him to preach a lecture at the Scott's Church, London Wall; but after four sermons he died 6 Sept., 1797. His works are 'Genuine Protestantism'; 'The Justice and Utility of Penal Laws for the Direction of Conscience'; 'An Inquiry into the doctrine of Demons, in answer to Farmer'; 'Remarks on Rowley's Poems'; 'An Essay towards an English Grammar'; 'The Idolatry of Greece and Rome distinguished from that of other Heathen Nations'; and the lectures above mentioned.

FELL, RALPH, an English writer, author of a 'Life of Mr. Fox,' 'A Tour through Holland,' &c.; died 26 Feb., 1814.

FELL, SAMUEL, D.D., a learned divine, born in London 1594. He was elected from Westminster School to Christ Church, Oxford, 1601; and in 1615 he became minister of Freshwater in the Isle of Wight. In 1619 he was installed canon of Christ Church; and in 1626 appointed Margaret professor of divinity. He was made dean of Lichfield 1637, and the year following dean of Christ Church. He served the office of vice-chancellor 1645; and again 1647, but was ejected the same year by the parliamentary visitors. He died of grief, on hearing of the murder of Charles I., 1 Feb., 1648-9. A few of his discourses have been printed.

FELLENBERG, PHILIP EMANUEL, a Swiss educator and philanthropist, founder of the institutions at Holwyl, was born in Berne 27 June, 1771, and died there 21 Nov., 1844.

FELLER, FRANCIS XAVIER DE, a Jesuit, born at Brussels 18 Aug., 1735; died at Ratisbon 23 May, 1802. He wrote some ingenious pieces in defence of the Christian religion, and one against the Copernican system.

FELLER, JOACHIM, a Latin poet, professor of poetry at Leipsic, was born at Zwickhau 30 Nov., 1628, and died 5 April, 1691. His son, Joachim Frederick (b. 1673; d. 1726), became secretary to the duke of Weimar, and published a Genealogical History of the House of Brunswick Lunenburg, &c.

FELLOWES, ROBERT, LL.D., was born in Norfolk, in or about 1771, and educated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford. He took orders in 1795, and wrote many religious publications, but gradually quitted the doctrines of the established church, and adopted the opinions maintained in his work entitled 'The Religion of the Universe.' He was the intimate friend of Dr. Parr and of Baron Maseres, the latter of whom gave substantial proof of his affection by leaving him nearly £200,000. Dr. Fellowes was an ardent supporter of the London University, and founded in University College the two Fellowes gold medals for the greatest proficient in clinical science. In addition to his religious works, he published 'Poems, chiefly descriptive of the softer emotions of the heart, original and translated;' 'The Rights of Property vindicated against the claims of Universal Suffrage;' 'Observations on the plan for the more frequent delivery of the Gaols;' 'The Spirit of Hampden, evoked in a series of letters.' Died 6 Feb., 1847.

FELLOWS, Sir CHARLES, an archaeologist, born near Nottingham 1799; died in London 8 Nov., 1860. During his travels in Asia Minor he discovered the ruins of the ancient city of Xanthus, and among them a number of interesting remains and beautiful sculptures, which were eventually brought to this country and deposited in the British Museum. Sir Charles, who was knighted in 1815, published Journals of his travels and some minor works in reference to his discoveries.

FELTHAM, OWEN, was a native of Suffolk, but no particulars are known of his personal history, farther than that he lived many years in the family of the earl of Thomond. He wrote a book of great merit entitled 'Resolves, Divine, Moral and Political,' of which there have been many editions. Feltham died about 1678.

FELTON, HENRY, D.D., a divine, born at Westminster 3 Feb., 1679. He became principal of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford; and afterwards rector of Bewicke, Yorkshire, where he died 1 March, 1739-40. Dr. Felton dedicated to his pupil, the duke of Rutland, 'A Dissertation on reading the Classics, and forming a just style.' He was also the author of numerous published sermons.

FELTON, JOHN, a Catholic gentleman, who, on 25 May, 1570, allied to the gates of the bishop of London's palace the bull of excommunication against Queen Elizabeth issued by Pope Pius V. For this he was executed 8 Aug., 1570. His son Thomas was a Franciscan friar, and visiting England as a missionary, was apprehended and executed 1588.

FELTON, JOHN, an Englishman, who assassinated George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, at Portsmouth, 1628, for which crime he was soon afterwards executed.

FENÉLON, FRANÇOIS DE SALIGNAC DE LAMOTTE, archbishop of Cambrai, was born of an illustrious family, at the castle of Fénélon, in the province of Perigord, 6 August, 1651. He completed his studies at the university of Paris, where while young he distinguished himself as an elegant preacher. In 1686 he was employed as one of the missionaries sent along the coast of Saintonge to convert the Protestants. In 1689 he was made tutor to the dukes of Burgundy, Anjou, and Berri, and in 1693 chosen member of the French academy. The improvement which his pupils made under him gave so much satisfaction, that the king presented him with the abbey of St. Valery, and shortly after preferred him to the archbishopric of Cambrai. About this time he fell into considerable trouble, occasioned by his book, entitled 'An Explication of the Maxims of the Saints,' which abounded with mystical sentiments. Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, who was a violent enemy to Madame Guyon, the celebrated mystic, soon discovered a similarity between her notions and those of the archbishop of Cambrai. Several conferences took place between these two prelates on this subject, and at last the cause was referred to the Pope, who condemned Fénélon's book. The good archbishop submitted quietly to this sentence, and even read it publicly himself in his cathedral of Cambrai. He wrote many other books, but that which has conferred immortality on his name is his Telemachus. He spent the remainder of his days in his diocese, beloved by all who knew him, and universally admired. In the last war of Louis XIV. with the allies, the duke of Marlborough had so profound a regard for him, that he gave express orders to his army not to injure the lauds of the archbishop. Died 7 Jan., 1715. Besides the above works, we must mention as peculiarly excellent his Dialogues of the Dead, in 2 vols.; Dialogues on Eloquence in general and that of the Pulpit in particular; a treatise on the Education of Daughters; a Demonstration of the Existence of God; Spiritual Works; and Directions for the Conscience of a King.

FENN, JOHN, was born at Montacute, Somersetshire, and educated in Winchester School, whence he removed to New College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. In the reign of Mary he became master of the free-school at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk; but when Elizabeth came to the throne he retired abroad, and having taken orders in the Catholic Church, was, during forty years, confessor to the English nuns at Louvain. Died 27 Dec., 1615. His works are, Vita quorundam martyrum in Anglia; an English translation of the Catechism of the Council of Trent; another of Osorius's Treatise against Haddon; Life of St. Catharine of Sienna, from the Italian; Mysteries of the Rosary, from the Italian, &c.

FENN, Sir JOHN, an English antiquary, born 1730; died 14 Feb., 1794. He edited the famous 'Paston Letters,' and received the honour of knighthood in 1787, on the occasion of presenting some of the original MSS. to King George III. It was intended that these documents should be deposited in the Royal Library, but they never reached their destination, and no trace of them has yet been discovered. In 1865, Mr. Merivale wrote an article in the 'Fortnightly Review,' in which he impugned the authenticity of the Paston Letters. This led to the production before the Society of Antiquaries of the complete originals of the fifth printed volume, besides upwards of two hundred unpublished Paston MSS. Mr. Merivale attended the meeting, and withdrew the suspicions which he had raised against the genuineness of the Paston correspondence. Lady Eleanor Fenn, the wife of Sir John, was a most accomplished woman, and published numerous works for children under the assumed names of Mrs. Lovechild, and Mrs. Teachwell. She died 1 Nov., 1813, at 70.

FENNER, DUDLEY, a puritan divine, was a native of Kent, and received his education at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He became minister of Cranbrook, Kent, but being dissatisfied with the Church of England, went to Antwerp and was ordained according to the manner of the reformed churches at that place, renouncing his former ordination. On his return to England he was brought into many troubles for nonconformity, and ultimately he went to Middleburg, where he was chaplain to the English merchants. He is said to have died there in 1589, under the age of thirty. He was author of a number of 'Godly and Learned Treatises,' published in a collected form 1599; and is said to have been concerned in writing the celebrated Marprelate tracts.—Athen. Cantab.

FENNER, WILLIAM, B.D., a puritan divine, received his education at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, being elected to a fellowship in that society. He became rector of Rochford, Essex, 1629; and died 1640 or thereabouts, aged 40. His works were published in a folio volume. London, 1657.

FENTON, EDWARD, a navigator, born in Nottinghamshire about 1550. He was at first in the military service; but afterwards joined Sir Martin Frobisher in his voyage to discover a north-west passage in 1577. He also accompanied the same commander in another expedition, with the title of rear-admiral; and though unsuccessful he had spirit enough to venture upon an enterprise in the South Seas, where he had an engagement with a Spanish squadron, which he defeated, and returned home in May, 1583. In 1588 he fitted out a ship against the armada, and had an active concern on that occasion. He died at Deptford 1603.

FENTON, ELIJAH, a poet, born at Shelton, Staffordshire, 20 May, 1683. He was admitted a pensioner of Jesus College, Cambridge; but after taking his bachelor's degree he quitted the university, and became secretary to the earl of Orrery. After this he was chosen master of the school of Sevenoaks, in Kent; but in 1710 he gave up this appointment upon promises made to him by Buckingham, which were never performed. He then returned to the family of Lord Orrery; after which he assisted Pope in his translation of the Iliad and the Odyssey, for which he was inadequately rewarded. By the interest of Pope he was appointed tutor to the son of Lady Trumbull; at whose seat he died 13 July, 1730. His poems were printed in 1717. He also wrote the Lives of Milton and Waller.

FENTON, Sir GEOFFREY, brother of Edward, mentioned above. He went to Ireland, where he suppressed more than one rebellion, and contrived to reduce the whole island. He died at Dublin 19 Oct., 1608. Richard Boyle, afterwards earl of Cork, married his daughter. He published Certain Tragical Discourses, written out of French and Latin, 1567; A Dispute at Paris between two Doctors of the Sorbonne and two Ministers of God's Word; Golden Epistles gathered out of Guevara's Works; and a Translation of Guicciardini's History of the Wars of Italy.

FENTON, RICHARD, F.S.A., a barrister-at-law, who died at Glynamel, near Fishguard, Pembroke-shire, November, 1821. His principal work is 'A Historical Tour through Pembroke-shire,' 1811. He also published 'Poems,' 1773; 2 vols. 1790; 'A Tour in Search of Genealogy' (anon.); and 'Memoirs of an Old Wig' (anon.). He left in MS. an English translation of 'Athenæus.'

FENWICK, FRANCIS, D.D., an English Benedictine monk, who in 1689 was elected prior of St. Edmund's convent at Paris. He was an eloquent preacher, and in great repute with King James II., who sent him as his agent to the court of Rome, where he died 30 Oct., 1694, æt. 50.—Oliver.

FENWICKE, GEORGE, B.D., was born in or about 1690, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow. In 1722 he was presented to the rectory of Hallaton, Leicestershire, which he held till his decease 10 April, 1760. Mr. Fenwick published 'The FERDINAND I., emperor of Germany, was crowned king of Hungary 1527, elected king of the Romans 1531, and succeeded his brother Charles V. as emperor 1558. Born 1503; died 1564.

FERDINAND II., king of Bohemia and Hungary, and emperor of Germany in 1619. He subdued his revolted Bohemian subjects and waged successful war against Denmark, and other neighbouring powers. Born 1578; died 1637.

FERDINAND III., son of the preceding, was also king of Bohemia, &c., and emperor of Germany. His plans of ambition and aggrandizement were successfully opposed by the Swedes under the duke of Weimar, and by the French, under the great Condé. Born 1608; died 1657.

FERDINAND I., king of Castile and Leon, surnamed the Great, defeated the king of Leon and usurped his throne. He penetrated into the centre of Portugal, and afterwards defeated and killed his brother, the king of Navarre. Died 1605.

FERDINAND II., king of Castile and Leon, and son of Alphonso VIII., died 1188.

FERDINAND III. (ST.), obtained the throne of Castile on the abdication of his mother; and that of Leon, on the death of his father, Alphonso IX., in 1230. He made war successfully against the Moors. Born 1200; died 1252.

FERDINAND IV., born about 1285, succeeded to the throne of Castile at ten years of age, and died suddenly in 1312.

FERDINAND V., The Catholic, united the kingdoms of Castile and Arragon, by his marriage with Isabella, of Castile. During their reign the Moorish power in Spain was destroyed by Ferdinand, and a new world was added to their dominions by the discoveries of Columbus. Born 1452; died 1516.

FERDINAND VI., The Wise, king of Spain, was born 1713, succeeded his father, Philip V., 1746; died 1759.

FERDINAND VII., king of Spain, was born 1784; succeeded to the throne on the abdication of his father, Charles IV., 1808; died 29 Sept., 1833.

FERDINAND, king of Naples and Sicily, was born 1423, and died 1494.

FERDINAND I., king of the Two Sicilies, was born 1751; succeeded to the throne 1759 on the accession of his father, Charles III., to the Spanish crown; died 1825.

FERDINAND II., king of the Two Sicilies, was born 1810, and died 22 May, 1859.

FERG, or FERGUE, FRANCIS PAUL, a landscape painter, born at Vienna 1689; died in London 1740.

FERGUSON, ADAM, LL.D., was born 1724, at Logierait, in Scotland. He was educated at St. Andrew's, and after obtaining his degree of master of arts, he went to Edinburgh to qualify himself for the ministry. His first situation as a clergyman was in the capacity of chaplain to the 42nd regiment of foot, with which he served in Flanders till the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, and then returned to Edinburgh; where, in 1759, he was appointed professor of natural philosophy, which chair he afterwards resigned for that of moral philosophy. In 1767 he published his 'Essay on Civil Society,' and soon afterwards married a niece of Dr. Black. In 1773 he accompanied the earl of Chesterfield on his travels; and in 1776 published an answer to Dr. Price 'On Civil Liberty,' which procured him the favour of the ministry, who appointed him secretary to the mission sent to America, 1778, to effect a reconciliation between the two countries. On his return, Dr. Ferguson sat down to the duties of his professorship, and the composition of his 'History of the Roman Republic,' which was published 1783. He now resigned his professorship to Dugald Stewart, and took that of mathematics as less laborious. In 1793 he reduced his lectures to the form of a 'Treatise on Moral and Political Science,' and not long afterwards went abroad. On his return he settled at St. Andrew's, and died there 22 Feb., 1816. Besides the works already noticed, he published 'Institutes of Moral Philosophy.'

FERGUSON, JAMES, F.R.S., a mathematician, mechanic, and astronomer, born at Keith, Banthshire, 1710. His parents being poor, he was employed by a farmer to keep his sheep; in which situation he acquired a knowledge of the stars, and, from his observations, constructed a celestial globe. This attracted the notice of some gentlemen, who gave him further instructions in mathematics, to which he added a proficiency in drawing. At length his improvement was such that he went to Edinburgh, where he drew portraits in miniature; and this profession he pursued afterwards in England. The king settled on him a pension of £50 a-year, and in 1763 he was chosen F.R.S. without the usual fees. Died 16 Nov., 1776. His works are, Astronomical Tables and Precepts; Tables and Tracts; Introduction to Astronomy; Astronomy explained upon Sir Isaac Newton's Principles; Lectures in Mechanics, Hydrostatics, Pneumatics, and Optics; Select Mechanical Exercises; The Art of Drawing in Perspective; Introduction to Electricity; Three Letters to the Rev. John Kennedy; and several papers in the Philosophical Transactions.

FERGUSON, ROBERT, a nonconformist divine and politician, was a native of Scotland, and benefited in Kent till he was ejected in 1662. After this he became a plotter against government, and was concerned with the duke of Monmouth, whose memorial he drew up. He always contrived to escape, though large sums were offered for his apprehension. At the Revolution he came into favour, but was despised by all men of integrity. Died 1714. Ferguson was a Calvinist, and wrote some books on religious subjects.

FERGUSON, WILLIAM, a Scotch painter, who excelled in painting dead birds and still life. Died about 1690.

FERGUSON, ROBERT, a poet, born at Edinburgh 5 Sept., 1750 or 1751. He received his education at Dundee, and next at St. Andrew's, from which university he was expelled for his irregularities. On this he returned to Edinburgh, and became clerk in an attorney's office, but at last became insane, and died in the lunatic asylum 16 Oct., 1774. His poems in the Scotch dialect are much admired by his countrymen.

FERMAT, PIERRE DE, an eminent French mathematician, born at Toulouse, 1608; died 12 Jan., 1665.

FERMOR, WILLIAM, Count VON, a celebrated Russian general, born 1704; died 1771.

FERNE, HENRY, a prelate, was the son of Sir John Ferne, and born at York 1602. He was first a commoner of St. Mary Hall, Oxford, and afterwards fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. On taking orders he was presented to the livings of Masham, in Yorkshire, and Medborn, in Leicestershire. He was also made archdeacon of Leicester, and in 1642 took his doctor's degree. The same year he published a piece in defence of the king, with whom he was a favourite. After the Restoration he was made master of Trinity College, dean of Ely, and bishop of Chester. He held his bishopric only about five weeks, dying 16 March, 1661-2. Among his works are The Case of Conscience touching Rebellion; Episcopacy and Presbytery considered; Sermons and tracts.

FERNE, Sir JOHN, an antiquary, born in Lincolnshire, and educated at Oxford, whence he removed to the Inner Temple. In the beginning of the reign of James I. he was knighted, and made keeper of the king's signet of the council for the north. Died about 1610. He published 'The Blazon of Gentry,' 1586.

FENNEL, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French physician and mathematician, born in Picardy, 1497; died 26 April, 1558.

FERRACINO, BARTHOLOMEW, a self-taught mechanic, born at Bassano, in the territory of Padua, 1602; died at Solagna 1777.

FERRAIUOLI, NUNZIO, a Neapolitan painter, born 1660; died 1735.

FERRAND, LOUIS, a French advocate, born at Toulon 3 Oct., 1645, and died at Paris 3 March, 1699. He wrote several works on sacred subjects.

FERRANDUS, surnamed Fulgentius, deacon of the church of Carthage in the sixth century, the disciple of St. Fulgentius, and one of the first who declared against the condemnation of 'the three Chapters.' He left a collection of canons and other works.

FERRAR, NICHOLAS, a gentleman remarkable for his piety, was born 22 Feb., 1592, in London, where his father was a merchant. He received his education at a private school, and next at Clare Hall, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. On completing his degrees in arts he went abroad, and at his return, became secretary to the Virginia Company. In 1624 he was chosen a member of parliament; but in 1626 he entered into deacon's orders, and with his family retired to Little Gidding, in Huntingdonshire, which became a kind of Protestant monastery. Here he died, 2 Dec., 1637. He translated Valdeso on Religion from the Spanish. His life has been edited by Mr. J. E. B. Mayor, fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

FERRAR.

FERRAR, ROBERT, was born in the parish of Haitax, Yorkshire. He became a canon regular of the order of St. Augustine, and studied at Cambridge and Oxford; but on embracing the doctrines of the Reformation he was made chaplain to Archbishop Cranmer, after whose example he took a wife. In 1548 he was consecrated bishop of St. David's; but not being able to pay the first-fruits and tenths, he was imprisoned. In the reign of Mary he was brought before Gardiner, on a charge of heresy, and condemned to the flames, which sentence was executed at Caermarthen March 30, 1555. It is said that he burnt all the records of the see of St. David's.—Athen. Cantab.

FERRARI, FRANCIS BERNARDINE, was a native of Milan, and laid the foundation of the Ambrosian Library in that city. His works, which display great erudition, relate to various points of antiquity, both ecclesiastical and profane. Born about 1577; died 3 Feb., 1609.

FERRARI, GAUDENZIO, an Italian painter, born at Valdagia 1484; died 1550.

FERRARI, JOHN ANDREW, a painter of Genoa, excelled in landscapes as well as historical subjects. Born 1599; died 1609.

FERRARI, JOHN BAPTIST, a Jesuit, born at Sicenna about 1580, became professor at Rome, and died 1 Feb., 1655. He published a Syriac dictionary; 'De Florum cultura,' &c.

FERRARI, LOUIS, professor of mathematics at Bologna, his native place, discovered the method of resolving biquadratic equations. Born 2 Feb., 1522; died 1565.

FERRARI, OCTAVIAN, was born at Milan 23 Sept., 1518. After being professor of ethics and politics in his native city, he lectured at Padua on Aristotle's philosophy, and then returned to Milan, where he died 1586. He wrote De Sermonibus exoticis; De Disciplina Encyclica; De origine Romanorum; a Latin translation of Athenæus; Notes on Aristotle.

FERRARI, OCTAVIUS, a Milanese, became professor of rhetoric in the Ambrosian College, and afterwards removed to the university of Padua, which he restored to a flourishing state. Of his works, which are chiefly on classical antiquities, the best known is 'Origines Linguae Italicae.' Born 1607; died 16 March, 1682.

FERRARS, EDWARD, a gentleman of Warwickshire, who wrote some plays, none of which are extant. He was educated at Oxford, and died 1564.

FERRARS, GEORGE, a lawyer, historian, and poet, was born near St. Albans, Hertfordshire, about 1512, and educated at Oxford, after which he entered Lincoln's Inn. He was in great esteem with Henry VIII., who gave him a large grant of lands in Hertfordshire. He wrote some pieces inserted in the 'Mirror for Magistrates,' 1559; and the History of Queen Mary in Grafton's Chronicle. Died 1579.

FERRARS, HENRY, a gentleman of Warwickshire, who, after receiving a liberal education at Oxford, applied himself to the study of antiquities, and made collections for a history of his native county, which were made use of by Dugdale. Died 1633, aged 84.

FERREIN, ANTOINE, a French surgeon and anatomist, born 1693; died 28 Feb., 1769.

FERREIRA, ANTHONY, a Portuguese poet, author of the celebrated tragedy of 'Ines de Castro,' was born at Lisbon 1528, and died 1569.

FERRIER.

FERRERAS, JUAN DE, a Spanish ecclesiastic, who composed a great number of works, the chief of which is a History of Spain. He also had a considerable share in the compilation of the great Spanish Dictionary. Born 7 June, 1652; died 14 April, 1735.

FERRETI, EMILIUS, an Italian civilian, who, after being professor of law at Rome, where he was appointed secretary to Leo X., went to France, and was there patronized by Francis I., who sent him on an embassy to Venice and Florence. He next attended Charles V. in his African expedition, and eventually settled, as professor of law, at Avignon. He published legal works, and an edition of Cicero's Orations. Born 1489; died 15 July, 1552.

FERRETI, JOHN BAPTIST, a native of Vicenza, who became a monk in the famous Benedictine monastery of Monte Cassino, and published, 1672, 'Musæ Lapidariae,' a collection of inscriptions on ancient monuments. Born 1639; died 1682.

FERRETO, or FERRETIUS, of Vicenza, a poet and historian of the fourteenth century, who contributed to the revival of literature. He wrote Latin poems, and a history of his own times from 1250 to 1318.

FERRI, CIRO, an Italian painter and architect, born 1634; died 1689. He was employed by Pope Alexander VII.

FERRI, PAUL, a Protestant divine of Metz, born 24 Feb., 1591; died 27 Dec., 1609. He published a Catechism of the Reformation, which was reprinted by Bossuet; and other works.

FERRIER, JOHN, M.D., was born at Chester 1764. After graduating at Edinburgh he settled in practice at Manchester, where he became senior physician to the infirmary, and also to the lunatic asylum. Died 1815. He published Medical Histories, 3 vols.; Illustrations of Sterne, in which the plagiarisms of that writer were detected; The Bibliomania, an Epistle; and an Essay towards a history of Apparitions.

FERRIER, ANNAUD DE, professor of law at Toulouse, where he was born about 1508. In 1562 he was sent ambassador to the Council of Trent, where his bold language gave much offence. He afterwards visited Venice in the same capacity, and assisted Father Paul in writing his celebrated history. He ultimately turned Protestant; became chancellor to the king of Navarre; and died Oct., 1585. He was the author of several works.

FERRIER, JAMES FREDERICK, was born at Edinburgh 1808, and educated at Oxford. In 1842 he was elected to the chair of history in the university of Edinburgh, and in 1845 to that of moral philosophy in the university of St. Andrews, which office he held till his death, on 11 June, 1864. He wrote 'Theory of Knowing and Being,' and was a frequent contributor to Blackwood's Magazine.

FERRIER, JEAN, a French Jesuit, author of several books against the Jansenist sect, was born 1614, and died 1674.

FERRIER, JÉRÉMIE, a Protestant minister of Nîmes, who embraced the Catholic faith after maintaining that Clement VIII. was the Antichrist. He was employed by the king of France in several important affairs; and died 26 Sept., 1626. Ferrier wrote a book called 'Le Catholique d'État.'

FERRIER, Miss SUSAN, a novelist, was born 1782, at Edinburgh, where she died in Nov., 1854. Her works, which display great talent, are 'Mar- riage,' 1818; 'The Inheritance,' 1824; and 'Destiny, or the Chief's Daughter.'

FERRIÈRES, CLAUDE DE, a civilian, born at Paris 1639; died at Rheims 11 May, 1714. All his works are on legal subjects. His son, Claude Joseph (d. about 1749), who published a Dictionary of Law, was dean of that faculty at Paris.

FERRON, ARNOUL LE, counsellor in the parliament of Bordeaux, wrote continuations of Paulus Æmilius, and of Du Haillan's History of the Kings of France. Born 1515; died 1563.

FESCH, JOSEPH, cardinal and archbishop of Lyons, was born at Ajaccio, Corsica, 3 Jan., 1763, being the half-brother of Letizia Ramolino, mother of Napoleon Bonaparte. The influence of his nephew raised him to the archbishopric of Lyons 1802, and obtained a cardinal's hat for him 1803. As ambassador of France at Rome in 1804, after conducting the negotiations, he accompanied Pius VII. on his way to Paris to crown the emperor. Many civil dignities and emoluments were afterwards bestowed on him, but in 1809 he declined the archbishopric of Paris. He was president of the council which sat in Paris 1810, and also of the national council of 1811, called to consider the disagreement between Napoleon and the Holy See concerning the nomination of bishops. In this capacity he did not satisfy the emperor. For a time he disappeared from court and afterwards adhered to the Pope, greatly to the displeasure of his nephew. His latter days were spent in Rome, where he died 13 May, 1839. His magnificent collection of paintings was dispersed after his death.

FESCH, or FAESCH, SEBASTIAN, professor of law at Basle, was born there 1647, and died 1712. He wrote on legal and philological subjects.

FETI, DOMENICO, a Roman painter, born 1589; died 1624.

FEU-ARDENT, FRANÇOIS, Fevardentius, a Cordelier, and doctor of the Sorbonne, born at Coutance 1539; died 1 Jan., 1619. He preached zealously against heretics, and also wrote against them with a degree of fire and ardour which discovered much analogy between his temper and his name. Having joined the League, he declaimed from the pulpit against Henry III. and Henry IV. His publications are numerous, and comprise editions of some works of the Fathers.

FEUERBACH, PAUL JOHN ANSELM, a Prussian writer on criminal jurisprudence, born at Jena 14 Nov., 1775; died 9 May, 1833.

FEUILLÉE, LOUIS, a French Minim friar, born at Manc, near Forcalquier, 1660; died at Marseilles 18 April, 1732. This learned ecclesiastic contributed greatly to the advancement of astronomy, geography, and various departments of natural history. He wrote several works embodying the results of his laborious and perilous researches during his protracted travels in different parts of South America and India, which countries he explored under the patronage of Louis XIV.

FEUQUIÈRE, MANASSÈS DE PAS, Marquis DE, a French commander, born at Saumur, 1 June, 1590. He contributed greatly to the capture of Rochelle; after which he was sent ambassador to Germany, and died 14 March, 1640, of the wounds he had received at the siege of Thionville. His negotiations were printed at Paris in 1753, in 3 vols. 12mo. Isaac de Pas, marquis de Feuquières, his son, was lieutenant-general in the army, counsellor of state, and governor of Verdun. He died

FIDDES.

6 March, 1688. Antoine de Pas, marquis de Feuquières, son of the last mentioned, was born in 1648. He rose to the rank of marshal-de-camp, and distinguished himself greatly in the wars of Italy, where he died 27 Jan., 1711. His memoirs have been published.

FEVRET, CHARLES, a French civilian, author of a treatise, 'De L'Abus,' and other learned works, was born at Semur 16 Dec., 1583, and died 13 Aug., 1661.

FEVRET DE FONTETTE, CHARLES MARIE, great-grandson of the preceding, was born at Dijon 14 April, 1710, practised law there with success, and died 16 Feb., 1772. He published a greatly improved edition of Le Long's 'Bibliothèque Historique de la France.'

FEYDEAU, MATHIEU, a Jansenist writer, born at Paris 1616; died in exile 24 July, 1664.

FEYJOOY MONTENEGRO, FRANCIS BENEDICT JEROME, a celebrated Spanish Benedictine, who endeavoured to enlighten his countrymen, by displaying their vices and defects, in his 'Teatro Critico,' 14 vols. A selection of his Essays or Discourses was translated into English by John Brett, 4 vols. 8vo., 1780. Fejoo was born at Compostella 6 Feb., 1701, and died at the monastery of St. Vincent, at Oviedo, whereof he was abbat, 16 May, 1764.

FIBER. See CASTORIUS.

FICHARD, JOHN, a jurist and biographer of Frankfurt, born 1512; died 7 June, 1581.

FICHET, ALEXANDRE, a French Jesuit, professor at Lyons, published several works, the best known of which is 'Arcana Studiorum omnium methodus, et Bibliotheca Scientiarum, librorumque earum ordine tributorum universalis.' Born 1588; died 30 March, 1659.

FICHTE, JOHN THEOPHILUS, a German metaphysician, born at Rammenau in Lusatia 19 May, 1762. After studying at Wittenberg and Leipzig, he became a tutor in the family of a gentleman at Konigsberg, where he contracted an intimacy with Kant, whose principles he zealously espoused. In 1792 he published 'A Critical Review of all Revelations,' and in the following year his 'Contributions towards rectifying the opinions of the public respecting the French Revolution,' which excited a violent controversy. This work however did not prevent his election to the philosophical chair at Jena, which he held till his open avowal of principles tending to atheism occasioned his removal to Berlin. In 1805 he obtained a professorship at Erlingen; and eventually became rector of the University of Berlin, where he died 29 Jan., 1814. His works are numerous, but extremely obscure. They are all in German.

FICINUS, MARCELLIUS, was born at Florence 19 Oct., 1433, and educated at Bologna. Having studied the philosophy of Plato, his patron, Cosmo de Medici, who was much attached to that system, formed an academy for the cultivation of it, of which Marsilius became president. Died 1 Oct., 1499. He published a complete translation of Plato into Latin; and his own works were collected in 2 vols. folio, 1641.

FICORONI, FRANCIS, a Roman medallist and antiquarian writer, born 1664; died 23 Jan., 1747.

FIDDES, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Hunmanby,

FIDELIS.

near Scarborough, Yorkshire, 1671, and educated at Oxford. In 1694 he took orders, and soon afterwards obtained the rectory of Halsham in his native county; but the air being bad in that marshy place, he contracted an illness, which affected his speech and deprived him of the power of preaching. He then removed to London and subsisted chiefly by writing, though he was appointed chaplain to Lord Oxford and to the garrison of Hull. He died at Putney 1725. His principal works are 'The Life of Cardinal Wolsey,' which brought on him the charge of being well-affected towards the Roman Church; 'A Body of Divinity,' 'Fifty-two Practical Discourses,' and a 'Treatise of Morality.'

FIDELIS. See CASSANDRA.

FIELD, JOHN, was, according to Wood, born in London 1510, and educated at Oxford, but the correctness of these statements is open to doubt. He published 'Ephemerides' for the years 1557, 1559, and 1560, which are remarkable as being the earliest publications in which the Copernican system was made the basis of calculations for practical purposes by any English mathematician. Field afterwards retired to Ardsley, or Ardslove, near Wakefield, Yorkshire, where he died 1587.—Memoir by Hunter.

FIELD, JOHN, a celebrated English pianist and musical composer, born at Bath 1783; died at Moscow Jan., 1837.

FIELD, NATHANIEL, was one of the actors of the Globe and Blackfriars theatres, among whom he is named in the list prefixed to the folio of Shakspeare's works printed in 1623. It is supposed that his death occurred in or about 1641. He wrote two comedies, 'A Woman is a Weathercock,' and 'Amends for Ladies,' and a part of the fine tragedy of 'The Fatal Dowry,' printed among the works of its other poet, Massinger.—Nat. Cyc.

FIELD, RICHARD, D.D., was born at Hempstead, Hertfordshire, 15 Oct., 1561, and educated at Oxford. In 1598 he was made chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, and about 1610 dean of Gloucester. He died 15 Nov., 1616, just as he was about to be nominated to the see of Oxford. Dr. Field wrote a learned work 'Of the Church.'

FIELDING, COPLEY VANDYKE, an English artist, president of the Old Society of Water Colours, died at Worthing 3 March, 1855, æt. 68.

FIELDING, HENRY, was born at Sharpham Park, Somersetshire, the seat of his father, General Fielding, 22 April, 1707. He was allied to the Denbigh family; and his mother was the daughter of the first judge Gould, and aunt to Sir Henry Gould, one of the justices of the Common Pleas. He was educated at Eton, after which he went to Leyden, and on his return began to write for the stage. His first piece was 'Love in several Masques,' which was well received; as also was his comedy of the 'Temple Beau.' He was not equally successful in his subsequent performances; and to one of them he prefixed in the title-page, 'As it was damned at the Theatre Royal, Drury Lane.' While thus employed he married a Miss Craddock, of Salisbury; and about the same time, by the death of his father, became possessed of an estate of about £200 a year, which he soon dissipated. He now turned to the law as a profession, went through the customary terms at the Temple, and was called to the bar, in which he might have shone, but for his irregular habits. He still continued to write, and produced a number of political tracts and poems; but his genius appeared to most advantage

FILELFO.

In his novel of 'Joseph Andrews,' which was surpassed by his 'Tom Jones.' This was followed by 'Amelia,' which, though free from the grossness of the former novels, is far inferior to them in humour and interest. While thus engaged, Fielding exerted his talents in support of the government against the Jacobites, for which he was put into the commission of the peace. At length, worn out by an hereditary gout and intemperate living, he was advised to go to Lisbon, where he died 8 Oct., 1754. Besides the works already mentioned, he published 'The Champion;' 'A Journey from this World to the next;' 'The History of Jonathan Wild;' and after his death appeared his 'Voyage to Lisbon.'

FIELDING, SIR JOHN, half-brother of the novelist, and his successor in the magistracy, in which he distinguished himself by his activity, though blind from his youth. He was knighted 1761; and died at Brompton Sept. 1780. He published 'An Account of the Origin and Effects of a Police;' 'Extracts from the Penal Laws, relating to the Peace;' 'The Universal Mentor, containing Essays on the most important Subjects in Life; and Charges to Grand Jurors.'

FIELDING, SARAH, sister of the novelist, was born 1714, and died, unmarried, at Bath, April, 1768. Her novel of 'David Simple' was once very popular. Besides this work she wrote 'The Cry, a dramatic fable;' 'The Governess, or little Female Academy;' 'The Lives of Cleopatra and Octavia;' 'History of the Countess of Delwyn;' and the 'History of Ophelia.' She understood the learned languages, and translated from the Greek Xenophon's 'Memoirs of Socrates.'

FIENNES. See LINCOLN, Earl of.

FIENNES, NATHANIEL, second son of William, Lord Say and Sele, was born at Broughton, Oxfordshire, 1608, and educated at New College, Oxford. He was governor of Bristol when Prince Rupert made himself master of that place, for which the Parliament caused him to be tried, and he was sentenced to lose his head. By the interest of his father he obtained a pardon, and afterwards became a great favourite with Cromwell, whom he persuaded to assume the title of king. Died 16 Dec., 1669. He published speeches and tracts.

FINCH, SIR HENRY, was the son of Thomas Finch, Esq., of Eastwell, Kent, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, whence he removed to Gray's Inn. He was made a serjeant and knighted by James I. Died 11 Oct., 1625. He wrote 'Nomotechnia, on description del commun Leys d'Angleterre,' 1613. This he afterwards printed in English, with the title 'Of Law, or a Discourse thereof.' His son, Sir John Finch, became keeper of the great seal, and was created Lord Fordwich.

FINCH, ROBERT, P.S.A., was born in London 27 Dec., 1783, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1809). He took orders, but in 1814 quitted England, and never returned to it except as an occasional visitor. He died at Rome 16 Sept., 1830. His valuable collection of books, pictures, and antiquities he bequeathed to the Ashmolean Museum.

FINCK, THOMAS, a Danish physician and mathematician, professor at Copenhagen, was born 1561, and died 26 April, 1656.

FINDEN, WILLIAM, an English engraver, born 1787; died 20 Sept., 1852.

FINDLAY, ROBERT, D.D., a Scotch divine, born 1721. He was educated at the university of Glasgow, after which he went to Leyden, and on his return spent some time at Edinburgh with a view to the medical profession, but soon relinquished that design, and devoted himself to the church. In 1744 he was ordained minister of the parish of Stewarston, from which he removed to Galston the year following, and next went to Paisley. In 1756 he became minister of the north-west parish of Glasgow, and in 1782 professor of divinity in that university. He died in 1814. The works of Dr. Findlay are Vindication of the Sacred Books, and of Josephus against Voltaire; The Divine Inspiration of the Jewish Scriptures asserted.

FINET, SIR JOHN, was born near Dover, 1571. He became a great favourite with James I., who conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and sent him to France on missions of importance. In 1626 he was made assistant-master of the ceremonies. Died 1641. In 1656 James Howell published 'Fincti Philoxenus: some choice observations touching the reception and precedence, &c., of foreign ambassadors in England.' Sir John also translated from the French 'The beginning, continuance, and decay of Estates,' 1606.

FINIGUERRA, TOMMASO, a goldsmith and engraver of Florence, who discovered the art of copperplate printing about 1452.

FINLAY, JOHN, a Scotch poet and biographer, born at Glasgow 1782; died at Moffat 8 Dec., 1810. His principal poem, 'Wallace, or the Vale of Ellerslie,' was published when he was only 19 years old. The more important of his other works are 'Scottish Historical and Romantic Ballads, chiefly Ancient, with Explanatory Notes,' and a 'Life of Cervantes.' He also edited Blair's 'Grave,' and Smith's 'Wealth of Nations.'

FINLAYSON, GEORGE, was born at Thurso, in Caithness, about 1790, and studied medicine at Edinburgh. He became an army surgeon, and afterwards accompanied the embassy sent by the governor-general of India to Siam and Cochin China. On the return journey he died, in Aug., 1823. An account of this mission, extracted from Mr. Finlayson's journals, was published in 1825, with a biographical memoir by T. S. Raffles, F.R.S.

FINNERTY, PETER, a London journalist, for many years employed on the 'Morning Chronicle,' died 11 May, 1822.

FIORAVANTI, LEONARD, a physician and medical writer of Bologna, who died 1588.

FIRENZUOLA, ANGELO, an Italian poet and ecclesiastic, born at Florence 1493; died at Rome 1545.

FIRMICUS MATERNUS, JULIUS, a Christian writer of the fourth century, whose book, 'De Errore profanarum Religionum,' has been frequently printed. An Astronomical Treatise, printed first at Venice in 1497, has also been ascribed to him.

FIRMILIAN (ST.), bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, and the friend of Origen, died 269.

FIRMIN, GILES, was born in Suffolk 1617, and educated at Cambridge; after which he went to New England and practised as a physician. On his return he became minister of Shalford, from whence he was ejected in 1662. He then resumed the practice of physic, and died April, 1697. He wrote 'The Real Christian,' and other works.

FIRMIN, THOMAS, was born at Ipswich June, 1632. He was bound apprentice to a tradesman in London, and when out of his time began business for himself in the linen trade, in which he had good success. He erected a warehouse for the employment of the poor in the linen manufacture, and when the French Protestants came over he set up another for their use at Ipswich. He was one of the governors of Christ's and St. Thomas's Hospitals, to which he was a liberal benefactor.

FISCHER.

In his religious sentiments he was a Socinian, but this did not narrow his sentiments of charity. Died 20 Dec., 1697. He published 'Some Proposals for the employing of the Poor, and especially in and about the city of London, and for the Prevention of Begging.'

FISCHER, JOHN ANDREW, a physician and medical writer of Erfurt, born 1667; died 13 Feb., 1729.

FISCHER, JOHN CHRISTIAN, an eminent musician and performer on the hautbois, was born at Fribourg, and settled in London, where he died 29 April, 1800.

FISH, SIMON, was a native of Kent. After studying at Oxford he went about 1525 to Gray's Inn, to study the law. Having acted a part in a play intended to ridicule Wolsey, he incurred that minister's resentment; to avoid which he fled to Germany, where he wrote 'The Supplication of the Beggars,' a satire upon the Catholic clergy, which was answered by Sir Thomas More in his 'Supplication of Souls.' Henry VIII., however, was so pleased with the wit of Fish, that he granted him his protection. He died about 1531.

FISHACRE, or FIZACRE, RICHARD, a Dominican friar, was a native of Devonshire, and educated at Oxford. He was the intimate friend of Robert Bacon, and celebrated for his knowledge in philosophy and divinity. His works are numerous. Died 1248.

FISHER, JOHN, an eminent cardinal, was a native of Beverley, Yorkshire, and received his education at Michaelhouse (now Trinity College), Cambridge (B.A. 1487; M.A. 1491). He became a fellow of his house, and in 1497 was elected master. About this time he was appointed confessor to the king's mother, the Lady Margaret, countess of Richmond and Derby; and it was by his advice that she undertook the foundations of St. John's and Christ's Colleges at Cambridge. In 1501 Fisher took his D.D. degree, and the same year was chosen chancellor of the university. In 1503 he was appointed Lady Margaret's professor of divinity; and, in 1504, bishop of Rochester, from which diocese he refused to be translated, saying that he would not change his little old wife for a wealthier. In 1505 he became president of Queen's College, Cambridge. He was one of the first in England who wrote against Luther. He also had the spirit to declare against the divorce of Henry VIII.; and he strenuously resisted the novel doctrine of the royal supremacy. Such conduct made him obnoxious at court; and an opportunity was soon taken to make him feel the royal resentment. The bishop unfortunately became involved in the absurd business of Elizabeth Barton, the Holy Maid of Kent, and for not having communicated to the king her pretended prophecies, he was in 1533 attainted of misprision of treason, and subjected to the forfeiture of his personal estate and to imprisonment for life. It would appear that he was, nevertheless, permitted to have his liberty. For his refusal, however, to take the oath relating to the succession, he was sent to the Tower 26 April, 1534, and his see declared void. While he was in confinement the pope created him a cardinal, which only hastened his end; for Henry, on being informed that he intended to accept the hat, said, 'Yea, is he so lusty? Well, let the Pope send it him when he will; he shall wear it on his shoulders then; for

FISHER.

I will leave him never a head to set it on.' And he was as good as his word; for a special commission was appointed to try the bishop, who, of course, was found guilty. This good and learned man was accordingly beheaded on Tower Hill 22 June, 1535. His last moments were in every respect consistent with his honest and courageous character, and the unaffected piety by which his life had been distinguished. He was author of numerous controversial works against Luther, Œcolampadius, Velenus, Clichtovæus, and Faber, and of various sermons and devotional treatises. He also wrote a history of the king's divorce, which is preserved in MS. in the Cambridge University library.—Athen. Cantab.

FISHER, JOHN, a celebrated Jesuit, whose real name was Piercy. He was a native of Durham, and at an early age became a convert to the Catholic faith. He was educated at Tournay and Rome; and joined the society 1504. On his arrival in England he was committed to Bridewell, but at the end of seven months he effected his escape. He was an active missionary and made many proselytes, among whom was the duchess of Buckingham, whose conversion led to a conference between Fisher and Laud. He died in London 3 Dec., 1641, aged above 70. His works are 'A Treatise of Faith, wherein is briefly and plainly shown, a direct way by which every man may resolve and settle his mind in all Doubts, Questions, and Controversies, concerning matters of Faith,' London, 1600; 8vo., St. Omer, 1614; 'A Reply made unto Mr. Anthony Wotton and Mr. John White, Ministers, wherein it is showed that they have not sufficiently answered the Treatise of Faith, and wherein also the chief points of the said Treatise are more clearly declared, and more strongly confirmed,' 4to, St. Omer, 1612; 'An Answer unto the Nine Points of Controversy, proposed by our late Sovereign, of famous memory (James I.), unto M. Fisher, of the Society of Jesus; and the Rejoinder unto the reply of Dr. Francis White, Minister; with the Picture of the said minister, or Censure of his Writings prefixed,' 4to., St. Omer, 1625.—Dodd; Oliver.

FISHER, JOHN, an Anglican prelate, was born 1748, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge. In 1780 he was appointed tutor to Prince Edward, afterwards duke of Kent; and the next year chaplain to the king, and one of the deputy clerks of the closet. He was promoted to a canonry of Windsor 1786. In 1803 he was raised to the bishopric of Exeter; was appointed preceptor to the Princess Charlotte of Wales the same year; translated to Salisbury 1807; and died 8 May, 1825. He published a Charge and some single sermons.

FISHER, PAYNE, or, as he called himself in his Latin compositions, Paganus Piscator, was born at Warnford, Dorsetshire, 1616, and educated at Hart Hall, Oxford, whence he removed to Magdalen College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. After this he became a soldier in the royal army, but abandoned that cause in its declining state, and joined the triumphant party, for which he was made poet-laureate to Cromwell. Died 2 April, 1663. His works are, 'Marston Moore, sive de obsidione prælioque Eboracensi carmen,' 'Threnodia gratulatoria,' in honour of Cromwell; 'Oratio Anniversaria,' on the inauguration of Cromwell; 'Threnodia triumphans,' on the death of Cromwell; 'Epinicium; vel elogium facilissimi sereniss. fortiss. Ludovici XIV.;" A Synopsis of Heraldry, 1682.

FISHER, THOMAS, F.S.A., was a native of Rochester, where his father carried on the business of a bookseller. He became searcher of records at the India House; and died 20 July, 1836, æt. 65. Mr. Fisher was a frequent contributor to the 'Gentleman's Magazine,' and published some valuable plates illustrative of the topography of Bedfordshire, and 'Allegorical, Historical, and Legendary Paintings at Stratford-upon-Avon.'

FITZ, WILLIAM. See CANSFIELD, BENEDICT.

FITZALAN. See ARUNDEL, EARL OF.

FITZGEFFREY, CHARLES, a divine and poet, born in Cornwall 1575. He became a commoner of Broadgate Hall, now Pembroke College, Oxford, and obtained the rectory of St. Dominick in his native county, where he died 1636. He wrote, 'The Life and Death of Sir Francis Drake,' in verse; Alfama; sive Epigrammata et Cenotaphia; Sermons; 'A Curse for Corn-hoarders'; and 'The blessed Birthday,' a religious poem.

FITZGERALD, LORD EDWARD, son of the duke of Leinster, was born 15 Oct., 1763. He joined the disaffected party in Ireland during the rebellion of 1798, was proscribed, and was apprehended in a house in Thomas Street, Dublin, while secreting himself in disguise. In a scuffle with the officers he mortally stabbed one of them with a dagger, but was shot through the body by another, and died in prison a few days afterwards, 4 June, 1798.—Rose.

FITZGIBBON, JOHN, earl of Clare, was the son of an Irish barrister, and born 1749. He was educated at Dublin and Oxford, after which he studied the law; and, in 1784, became attorney-general for Ireland. In 1789 he received the great seal, and was created Baron Fitzgibbon. In 1793 was made Viscount Clare, and in 1795 raised to the earldom. To these honours was added an English barony in 1799. He was the great promoter of the union of the two countries, and died at Dublin 28 Jan., 1802.

FITZGIBBON, PHILIP, an Irish scholar, who died at Kilkenny April, 1792. He left an Irish Dictionary and other works in MS.

FITZHERBERT, MARIA ANNE, was born 26 July, 1756, being the youngest daughter of Walter Smythe of Bambridge, Hampshire. She was first married in 1775 to Edward Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, Dorsetshire, uncle to Cardinal Weld. He died, however, without issue the same year, and she was secondly united in marriage to Thomas Fitzherbert, Esq., of Norbury, Derbyshire, who also died without issue at Nice 7 May, 1781. Soon afterwards her beauty and fascinating manners attracted the particular admiration of the prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.), and she consented to a marriage with him according to the rite of the Roman Church. As under the Act of Settlement such a marriage incapacitated his royal highness from succeeding to the Crown, great pains were taken to keep the matter secret, and when a rumour respecting it got abroad, the prince sent Mr. Fox to the House of Commons to deny in the most explicit terms that the marriage had taken place. Mrs. Fitzherbert died at Brighton 27 March, 1837. A Memoir of her, by the Hon. Charles Langdale, was published in 1856.

FITZHERBERT, SIR ANTHONY, was born at Norbury, Derbyshire, and educated at Oxford, from whence he removed to one of the inns of court. In 1511 he was called to be a serjeant-at-law; knighted in 1516; and in 1523 made one of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas. He opposed Wolsey, and enjoined his children never to purchase church lands. Died 27 May, 1538. His works are, 'The Grand Abridgment,' often printed; 'The Office and Authority of Justices of Peace,' 1538; 'The Office of Sheriffs, &c.,' 1528; 'Of the Diversity of Courts,' 1529, in French; the new 'Natura Brevium,' in French, and afterwards translated; Of the Surveying of Lands, 1539; and 'The Book of Husbandry,' 1534.

FITZHERBERT, NICHOLAS, a grandson of the judge, was born about 1550, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford. About 1572 he went to Italy, and became secretary to Cardinal Allen. He was drowned in 1612. He wrote a description of the University of Oxford; on the Antiquity and Continuance of the Catholic Religion in England; the Life of Cardinal Alan, &c.

FITZHERBERT, THOMAS, grandson of Sir Anthony, was born at Swynnerton, Staffordshire, 1552, and educated at Oxford. On account of his zeal for the Catholic religion he went abroad; and in 1614 entered the society of Jesus. In 1618 he became rector of the English College at Rome, and held that office till his death 17 Aug., 1640. His writings are wholly controversial.

FITZHERBERT, SIR WILLIAM, of Tissington, Derbyshire, bart., was born 1748, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He became a barrister, but did not practise. Hewas created a baronet in 1784 and was one of the gentlemen-ushers to King George IV. Died 30 July, 1791. Sir William wrote two tracts: one entitled 'Maxims'; and the other 'A Dialogue on the Revenue Laws.' He is said also to have been the author of a pamphlet 'On the Knights made in 1778.'

FITZMAURICE, HENRY PETTY, marquis of Lansdowne. See LANSDOWNE.

FITZROY, HENRY AUGUSTUS, duke of Grafton. See GRAFTON.

FITZROY, JAMES, duke of Monmouth. See MONMOUTH.

FITZROY, ROBERT, a famous meteorologist, born in Suffolk 1805; died by his own hand at Norwood, Surrey, 30 April, 1865. He entered the navy at an early age, and ultimately became vice-admiral. He is chiefly known in connection with the meteorological department of the Board of Trade, of which he was the head. To him are owing the storm signals and other modes of warning which are now used for the benefit of seamen. He published 'Narrative of the Surveying Voyages of H.M.S. "Adventure" and "Beagle";' 'Remarks on New Zealand'; and 'Sailing Directions for South America.'

FITZSIMON, PATRICK, appointed Catholic archbishop of Dublin 1763; died 1769.

FITZ-SIMONS, HENRY, a Jesuit, born at Dublin 1560. He was educated first in Hart Hall, and next at Christ Church, Oxford; but left the university on embracing the Catholic religion, and went to Louvain, where he entered the society of Jesus. On account of his singular talents, he was sent by his superiors as a missionary to Dublin, where he was imprisoned some years, during which Usher, then a mere lad of nineteen, undertook to dispute with him, and continued to do so until the Jesuit thought proper to decline the contest. On gaining his liberty he went into the Low Countries, and thence to Rome. Some years afterwards he was again sent to Ireland, where he made many proselytes; and died miserably during the rebellion 1 Feb., 1643-4. He wrote 'A Catholic Confutation of Rider's Claim of Antiquities'; 'The Justification and Exposition of the Divine Sacrifice of the Masse, and of all Rites and Ceremonies thereto belonging'; 'Britannomachia Ministrorum in perissequæ et Fidei Fundamentis et Fidei Articulis gissidentium'; 'Catalogus Sanctorum Hiberniæ.'

FITZSIMONS, WALTER, LL.B., appointed archbishop of Dublin 1484; died 14 May, 1511. He was instrumental in crowning Lambert Simnell, but was pardoned, and afterwards taken into great favour by the king, who made him chancellor and lord deputy of Ireland.

FITZSTEPHEN, WILLIAM, an historian, was a native of London. He became a monk of Canterbury, and secretary to Archbishop à Becket, who appointed him a remembrancer in his exchequer, and reader of bills and petitions, when his grace sat to hear causes in chancery. This worthy monk is supposed to have died in 1191. He wrote, in Latin, a 'Description of the City of London,' of which an excellent translation by Dr. Pegge was published in 1772.

FITZWILLIAM, RICHARD, Viscount Fitzwilliam, founder of the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, died 5 Feb., 1816. He had been educated at Trinity Hall, in that university.

FITZWILLIAM, WILLIAM, earl of Southampton. See SOUTHAMPTON.

FIXLMILLNER, PLACIDUS, an astronomer, born at Achleiten, in Austria, 1721. He embraced the rule of St. Benedict 1737, and became professor of canon law, and also astronomer in the monastery of Kremsmunster, where he made a number of observations which tended greatly to the promotion of astronomical science. He was one of the first who calculated the orbit of the planet Uranus. He wrote theological as well as astronomical works; and died 27 Aug., 1791.

FIZES, ANTOINE, a physician of Montpellier, born 1690; died 14 Aug., 1765.

FLACCUS, CAIUS VALERIUS, a Latin poet, who lived in the reign of Vespasian. A poem of his on the Argonautic expedition is extant.

FLACIUS ILLYRICUS, a Lutheran divine, born in Istria 1520; died at Frankfurt 11 March, 1575. His real name was Matthias Franconwitz. He was the principal author of the 'Centuriæ Magdeburgenses,' and a zealous defender of the rigid principles of Luther against those who held more moderate doctrines.

FLAMEEL, or FLEMAEL, BARTHOLOMEW. See BERTHOLET-FLEMAEL.

FLAMEL, NICOLAS, a notary of Paris, who accumulated a vast property, which he appropriated to benevolent purposes. The ignorant multitude ascribed his great wealth to his being possessed of the philosopher's stone; and more than a century after his death, which occurred 22 March, 1418, some forged books on alchemy were published with his name.

FLAMINIO, JOHN ANTHONY, an Italian poet and biographer, professor of belles lettres at Bologna, was born about 1464, and died 18 May, 1536.

FLAMINIO, MARK ANTHONY, son of the above, was born 1498; became secretary to Cardinal Pole, whom he accompanied to the Council of Trent; and died at Rome 18 Feb., 1550. He composed

'Carmina Sacra,' and some prose works on divinity.

FLAMSTEED, JOHN, an astronomer, born at Denby, Derbyshire, 19 Aug., 1646. He received his education at the free school of Derby till he was sixteen, when he was taken home, where he followed his studies, particularly mathematics, without assistance. On sending some astronomical observations to the Royal Society, he received in return a letter of thanks. In 1671 he visited London, and soon afterwards became a student of Jesus College, Cambridge, where he wrote a tract on the true and apparent diameters of the planets, which, being communicated to Newton, was made use of by him in his Principia. In 1673 he wrote an Ephemeris, which procured him the friendship of Sir Jonas Moore, at whose desire he drew up one for the king. He also made a barometer, which was presented to his majesty, who appointed him royal astronomer, with a salary of one hundred pounds a year. About this time, having taken his master's degree, he entered into orders; but the only preferment he enjoyed was the living of Burstow, Surrey. In 1675 the royal observatory was founded at Greenwich; and here Mr. Flamsteed continued for the remainder of his life, employed in the promotion of his favourite science. Died 31 Dec., 1719. His great work, the 'Historia Cœlestis Britannica,' was published 1725, in 3 vols. folio.

FLANDRIN, PIERRE, of Lyons, was celebrated for his knowledge of the veterinary art and of comparative anatomy. He wrote a treatise on the management of cattle and other works. Born 1752; died June, 1796.

FLATMAN, THOMAS, a poet, born in London about 1633. He was educated at Winchester School, whence he removed to New College, Oxford, and next to the Inner Temple, where he was called to the bar, though he never followed the law. From one of his poems it appears that he painted portraits in miniature. Died 1688. Wood says that in his younger days he wrote a ballad against marriage, and that, on taking a wife, his comrades serenaded him that night with the same song. His poems were printed in 1682.

FLAVEL, JOHN, a nonconformist divine, born in Worcestershire about 1627, and educated at University College, Oxford. In 1650 he was ordained among the Presbyterians at Salisbury; after which he settled at Dartmouth, in Devonshire, but was ejected in 1662. He died at Exeter 1691. His works have been published in 2 vols. folio, and also in 6 vols. 8vo.

FLAVIAN, patriarch of Antioch, died 404.

FLAVIAN, patriarch of Constantinople, flourished 447.

FLAVIGNY, VALÉRIEN, a doctor of the Sorbonne, and writer on biblical criticism, was born at Villiers, near Laon, and died at Paris 29 April, 1674.

FLAVIUS BLONDUS. See BLONDUS.

FLAXMAN, JOHN, a sculptor, born in York 6 July, 1755. In the workshop of his father, a moulder of figures, who had established himself in London, he acquired his first ideas of form. Being a boy of delicate health, he was allowed to follow his own tastes, and showing a strong inclination for modelling, he was placed at the Royal Academy. After many years of severe study, during which he supported himself by designing for the Wedgwoods and others, and produced some meritorious works, including a monument to the poet Collins, he went, in 1787, to Rome. He had previously read the Greek poets in the original, and soon testified his sense of their beauty and of the purity of antique art by his two series of outline illustrations of Homer and Æschylus, by which he is, perhaps, more widely known than by any of his other works. A series of illustrations of Dante, almost equally celebrated, was subsequently executed for Mr. Thomas Hope. After seven years' sojourn in Rome, he returned to England, and commenced a series of scriptural compositions, remarkable for religious fervour and pathos. Of the numerous statues which he executed those of Nelson, Howe, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Mansfield, and Kemble are the best known. His 'Shield of Achilles' is one of the finest achievements of modern art. Flaxman was a member of the Royal Academy, in which he also filled the chair of professor of sculpture, to which he was appointed in 1810. Died 7 Dec., 1826.

FLECHIER, ESPRIT, a French prelate, born 10 June, 1632, at Pernes, in the diocese of Carpentras. He was greatly admired as a preacher at Paris, and his funeral orations put him on a level with Bossuet. In 1685 he was made bishop of Lavaur, being translated to Nîmes two years later. Died 16 Feb., 1710. He wrote a History of Theodosius the Great; Miscellaneous Works; Panegyrics of the Saints; Funeral Orations; Sermons; and the Lives of Cardinals Ximenes and Commendon, &c.

FLECKNOE, RICHARD, an English poet, who lived in the reign of Charles II. Though a priest of the Roman church, he incurred the resentment of Dryden, who has conferred a lasting importance on his name by prefixing it to one of the severest satires in our language. Flecknoe wrote some plays, one only of which was ever acted; and several poems of no repute. Died 1678.

FLEETWOOD, CHARLES, a parliament general in the civil wars, was the son of Sir William Fleetwood, knight, cup-bearer to James I. and Charles I., and comptroller of Woodstock Park. In 1644 the subject of this article was made colonel of horse, and governor of Bristol. He was afterwards raised to the rank of lieutenant-general, and had a share in the defeat of Charles II. at Worcester. On the death of Ireton he married his widow, and being now related to Cromwell, he was appointed deputy of Ireland, in which place he was succeeded by the Protector's younger son Henry. Fleetwood joined in deposing Richard, after which he became one of the council of state, and commander-in-chief of the forces. He was favourable to the Restoration, after which event he lived in retirement at Stoke Newington, where he died 1692.

FLEETWOOD, WILLIAM, a native of Lancashire, studied at Oxford, became recorder of London, and died 28 Feb., 1593-4. He wrote Annals of Edward V., Richard III., Henry VII., and Henry VIII.; The Office of a Justice of Peace; Notes on Lambard's Archaion, &c.

FLEETWOOD, WILLIAM, a bishop, was born 21 Jan., 1656, in the Tower of London, where his father had resided. He was educated at Eton, whence he was elected to King's College, Cambridge. After taking orders he became chaplain to William and Mary, vice-provost of Eton, fellow of the college, canon residentiary of St. Paul's, and rector of St. Austin's, London. A little before the death of the king he was nominated to a canonry of Windsor, on which he resigned his city living in order that he might reside near Eton. In 1706 he was made bishop of St. Asaph, and in 1714 translated to Ely. Died 4 Aug., 1723. His works were published in a folio volume 1737. The principal are Inscriptionum Antiquarum Sylloge; Essay on Miracles; Practical Discourses; Chronicon Preciosum, or an Account of English Money; Life and Miracles of St. Winifrede.

FLEMAEL, BARTHOLOMEW. See BERTHOLET-FLAMMÆL.

FLEMING, ABRAHAM, was born in London in or about 1552, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge (B.A. 1581-2). He took orders, and became chaplain to the Countess of Nottingham. In 1593, Archbishop Whitgift gave him the rectory of St. Pancras, Soper Lane, London. He died at Botolph Claydon, Leicestershire, 18 Sept., 1607. Mr. Fleming, though a poor poet, was a diligent and excellent antiquary. He published many works, including English translations of Virgil's Eclogues and Bucolics; A Panoplie of Epistles, from the Latin; 'Of English Dogges,' translated from Caius; 'A Paradoxe, proving by reason and example, that baldnesse is much better than bushie haire, &c.,' translated from Synecius; 'The Diamond of Devotion,' an edition of Holinshed's Chronicles. He left a large collection of antiquarian MSS., which were formerly in the possession of the Rev. Francis Peck.—Athen. Cantab.

FLEMING, CALER, a dissenting minister, born at Nottingham, 1698. He became assistant and successor to Dr. Foster, at Pinner's Hall; and died 1779. He was a Socinian, and wrote several pamphlets, of little interest; the principal is entitled, 'A Search after Souls.'

FLEMING, PATRICK, an Irish priest of the Roman church, was born in the county of Louth, 17 April, 1599. He studied at Louvain, and next at Douay, where he took the habit of St. Francis. He continued his studies at Rome, in the Irish college of St. Isidore, and both there, and afterwards at Louvain, was appointed to lecture on philosophy. From Louvain, where he remained some years, he removed to Prague, and was appointed first superior and lecturer on divinity. There he stayed until the city was besieged by the Elector of Saxony, when he was obliged to fly; but he had scarcely escaped the Saxon forces, when he was met by some peasants in arms, who murdered him, 7 Nov., 1631. He wrote 'Collectanea Sacra, or Lives of Irish and Scotch Saints'; 'Vita rev. patris Hugonis Cavelli' (Mac Caghwell); and an abridgment of a work entitled 'Chronicon consecrati Petri Ratisbonæ.'

FLEMING, ROBERT, a Scotch divine, born at Bathens 1630. He was pastor of Cambuslang; but on the establishment of episcopacy at the Restoration he retired to Holland, where he died 25 July, 1694. He wrote a noted book, called 'The Fulfilling of the Scriptures.'

FLEMING, ROBERT, son of the above, was born in Scotland and educated in Holland. After officiating to the Scotch church at Amsterdam, he came to London, and was appointed pastor of a congregation in Louthbury. He was also one of the preachers of the lecture at Salters' Hall; and died 24 May, 1716. He published numerous sermons and tracts, in one of which he was supposed to have predicted the downfall of the French monarchy.

FLEMING.

FLEMING, THOMAS, a Franciscan, became professor of theology at Louvain, and in 1623 was appointed archbishop of Dublin by Urban VIII. Died 1666.

FLEMMING, RICHARD, a bishop, born at Crofton, Yorkshire, and educated at University College, Oxford. In 1406 he was presented to a prebend in the church of York, and for some time was zealous in supporting Wickliffe's doctrines, which he afterwards as strenuously opposed. He became rector of Boston, and in 1420 bishop of Lincoln. In 1424 he was sent to the council of Sienna, the result of which was, that four years later he executed the decree passed for the burning of Wickliffe's bones. Died 25 Jan., 1430-1. This prelate founded Lincoln College, Oxford.

FLEMING, ROBERT, nephew of the above, was educated at Oxford, and in 1451 made dean of Lincoln. He visited Italy, where he was much admired for his learning and eloquence, particularly by Pope Sixtus IV., to whom he presented a Latin poem, entitled 'Lucubrations Tiburtinae.' Died 12 Aug., 1483.

FLETCHER, ABRAHAM, a mathematician, born 1714 at Little Broughton, in the parish of Bridekirk, in Cumberland. He was brought up a tobacco-pipe maker; and the only education he ever had was three weeks' schooling, which cost as many pence. However, by unremitting application, he learned writing, arithmetic, and the mathematics, without any other assistance than what he derived from books. Such was his improvement, that he was enabled to keep school; and to this profession he added that of a village practitioner in medicine and astrology; by which means he left £4,000 at his death, 1 Jan., 1793. He compiled a good book called 'The Universal Measurer,' 1762.

FLETCHER, ALEXANDER, D.D., a Presbyterian divine, born in Perthshire 8 April, 1787. In 1810 he came to London, and occupied, in succession, the pulpits of Mile End Road, Miles's Lane, Albion Chapel, Moorfields, and Finsbury Chapel. Died 30 Sept., 1860. His fame rests mainly upon his talent in preaching to children, and upon his 'Family Devotion,' which work has passed through very many editions.

FLETCHER, ANDREW, a political writer, was the son of Sir Robert Fletcher, of Saltoun, and born in 1653. He was educated under Dr. Gilbert Burnet; after which he travelled through Europe, and, on his return, became a member of the Scotch parliament. He acted with such violence in opposing the government, that proceedings were about to take place against him, when he withdrew into Holland, where he engaged in the enterprise of the duke of Monmouth, whose cause he injured by shooting a gentleman for refusing him a horse. After this he engaged in the Hungarian service, but, at the Revolution, returned home, and took possession of his estate. Died 1716. His 'Political Works' have been published in one volume, with his life prefixed.

FLETCHER, GILES, LL.D., brother of the bishop, was born in or about 1549 at Watford, Hertfordshire, though previous biographers have erroneously named Kent as his native county. From Eton he was elected to King's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. After taking his doctor's degree, he was sent to Scotland with Thomas Randolph, the English ambassador in that country, and at a subsequent period he was employed in negotiations in Germany, Hamburg, and Stade. In 1588 he was despatched on a special embassy to Russia, where he was treated with the greatest indignity; but he nevertheless contrived to secure for the English merchants very considerable concessions. He returned to England 1589, and appears to have been appointed shortly afterwards a master of requests in ordinary. About the same time he was constituted secretary, or remembrancer, to the city of London. He was appointed treasurer of the church of St. Paul 1597; and died in London Feb., 1610-11. Dr. Fletcher wrote a remarkable work 'Of the Russe Common Wealth; or, Manner of Government by the Russe Emperour (commonly called the Emperour of Moskonia) with the manners and fashions of the people of that country.' The appearance of this book in 1591 excited much alarm among the Eastland merchants of London, at whose instance it was quickly suppressed; and it was not until 1856 that the work was republished in its integrity under the editorship of Mr. Edward A. Bond. Fletcher also wrote 'Licia, or poems of Loue;' and 'An Essay upon some probable grounds, that the present Tartars, near the Cyprian Sea, are the Posterity of the ten Tribes of Israel.'—Athen. Cantab. iii. 34.

FLETCHER, GILES, B.D., son of the preceding, was born 1588, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was presented to the living of Alderton, Suffolk, where he died 1623. He wrote 'Christ's Victory,' a poem.

FLETCHER, JAMES, assistant in a school at St. John's Wood, London, wrote, 'The History of Poland,' which acquired some reputation. He was also the author of some poems, 'The Siege of Damascus,' 'The Gem,' &c. Induced by the success of his work on Poland, he foolishly gave up his situation at Christmas 1831, and devoted himself solely to literary pursuits; but becoming pecuniarily embarrassed, he put an end to his existence 3 Feb., 1832, at the early age of 21.

FLETCHER, JOHN, a dramatic poet, was the son of the bishop, and born in Northamptonshire 1576. He received his education at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and then removed to London, where he became an associate with Beaumont in writing plays. He died of the plague 28 August, 1625. See BEAUMONT, FRANCIS.

FLETCHER, JOHN WILLIAM, or DE LA FLETCHERE, was born at NYON, in the Pays de Vaud. He was educated at Geneva for the ministry, but went into the military service in Portugal, which country he soon left, and came to England, where he became tutor in the family of Sir Richard Hill. Here he joined the Methodists, and obtained orders, after which he superintended the institution of Lady Huntingdon, at Trevecca, in Wales, but quitted it, and became vicar of Madely, Shropshire, where he died of consumption 1785. His works are mostly controversial, against Calvinism.

FLETCHER, PHINEAS, son of Dr. Giles Fletcher, was educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. In 1621 he was presented to the living of Hilgay, in Norfolk, and died there about 1650. He wrote several poems; 'Piscatory Eclogues;' and a dramatic piece, entitled, 'Sicelides;' but his principal performance is the 'Purple Island,' in Spenser's manner, and which Milton has imitated.

FLETCHER, RICHARD, a prelate, was born in Kent, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, whence he removed to a fellowship in Corpus Christi College in 1569. In 1572 he obtained a prebend in St. Paul's, and in 1581 took his doctor's degree. Two years afterwards he was made dean of Peterborough, in which capacity he attended Mary queen of Scots at her execution. In 1589 he was advanced to the bishopric of Bristol; translated to Worcester 1592; and in 1594 to London, where he gave offence to the queen by taking a second wife. Died 15 June, 1596.—Athen. Cantab.

FLEURIEU, CHARLES PIERRE CLARET, Comte DE, a French hydrographer, born 1738; died 18 Aug., 1810.

FLEURY, ANDRÉ HERCULE, a cardinal, was born 23 June, 1653, at Lodeve, in Languedoc. He received his education at Paris, where he became a doctor of the Sorbonne. In 1698 Louis XIV. made him bishop of Frejus, and the same monarch appointed him preceptor to his grandson. In 1726 he was created a cardinal, and soon afterwards became prime minister, in which office he acted as a lover of peace, and with strict integrity: Died 29 Jan., 1743.

FLEURY, CLAUDE, was born at Paris 6 Dec., 1640. He was at first a lawyer, but afterwards took orders and obtained the abbey of Loc Dieu and the priory of Argenteuil. He was also appointed confessor to Louis XV. Died 14 July, 1723. His chief works are, The Manners of the Israelites; The Manners of Christians; and an Ecclesiastical History. All these have been translated into English.

FLEURY, JULIEN, canon of Chartres and editor of Apuleius, in usum Delphini, died 13 Sept., 1725.

FLEXMORE, ROBERT, a popular pantomimist, died in Lambeth 20 Aug., 1860, aged 37.

FLINCK, GOVAERT, a painter, born at Cleves 1616; died 1660.

FLINDERS, MATTHEW, was born at Donington, Lincolnshire, and bred to the sea. In 1795 he went as midshipman with Captain Hunter to New South Wales, where he formed an acquaintance with George Bass, a surgeon, who had a great ardour for voyages of discovery. These two friends ventured, in a small boat called 'Tom Thumb,' to explore the coast of that extensive country. An account of the discoveries they made was published by Colonel Collins, in his account of that settlement. In 1801 Mr. Flinders was sent out in command of the 'Investigator,' to prosecute his researches in those seas, which mission he discharged with great credit; but his vessel was afterwards lost, and on his voyage home, aboard a schooner, he was obliged to put into the Isle of France, where the governor, De Caen, in defiance of the law of humanity, condemned the vessel and detained the commander above six years. Though he obtained his liberty at last, he could not recover his journal, which the French kept, in order to appropriate to themselves the merit of those discoveries in Terra Australis which belonged to our countryman. Captain Flinders, however, drew up an account of his voyages, which was just completed at the press when he died, 19 July, 1814, of a disorder occasioned by the cruelty he had experienced.

FLODOARD, a French historian, born 894; died 906.

FLOGEL, CHARLES FREDERICK, professor of philosophy in the Academy of Nobility at Leignitz, wrote a History of the Human Understanding;

FLOWER.

Present State of the Belles Lettres in Germany; History of Comic Literature, &c., all in German. Born 3 Dec., 1729; died 7 March, 1788.

FLOOD, HENRY, son of the chief justice of the King's Bench in Ireland, was born 1732, and educated at Dublin University and at Oxford. He sat in the Irish House of Commons, and acquired great popularity by his eloquence. Died 2 Dec., 1791. Several of his orations and poetical pieces are in print.

FLOREZ, HENRY, a Spanish friar, who wrote on ecclesiastical history, chronology, and numismatics. Born 1701; died 20 August, 1773.

FLORIAN, JEAN PIERRE CLARIS DE, was born in Languedoc 6 March, 1755. He was allied to Voltaire, on whose recommendation the duke de Penthièvre gave him a commission in his regiment, and encouraged him in his literary pursuits. He became a member of the Academy, but in the reign of terror was thrown into prison, where he wrote his poem on the story of William Tell, and finished that of Ebrahim. He was released on the downfall of Robespierre, and died 13 Sept., 1794. His pastoral romances, Estelle and Galathea, are much admired, as also are his Numa Pompilius and Fables. His Theatre, in 2 vols., contains likewise some pleasing pieces.

FLORIO, JOHN, the Resolute, as he used to style himself, was a native of London, but descended from an Italian family, who, being Waldenses, settled in England till the reign of Queen Mary obliged them to go into Germany, where John received his education. On the accession of Elizabeth he settled at Oxford, where he taught French and Italian. James I. appointed him tutor to Prince Henry; and he was also made clerk of the closet to the queen. He fell a victim to the plague 1625, aged about 80. His works are 'First Fruits, which yield familiar speech, merry proverbs, witty sentences, and golden sayings,' 1578 and 1591; 'Perfect Introduction to the Italian and English Tongues,' printed with the preceding work; 'Second Fruits to be gathered of twelve trees, of divers but delightful tastes to the tongues of Italian and English men,' 1591; 'Garden of Recreation, yielding six thousand Italian Proverbs,' printed with the preceding work; 'Dictionary, Italian and English,' 1597, afterwards published in 1611, by way of compliment to his royal mistress, under the title of 'Queen Anna's New World of Words; 'The Essays of Montaigne' translated into English.

FLORIS, FRANCIS, a painter of Antwerp, styled the Raphael of Flanders, died 1570, aged 50.

FLORUS, LUCIUS ANNEUS, a Roman historian of the second century, who wrote a concise history of Rome, from the foundation of the city to Augustus.

FLOWER, BENJAMIN, was originally engaged in commercial pursuits. In 1783, being then a partner in the house of Anstice and Worstead, grocers, of London, he lost the whole of his property by a speculation in the funds. He was afterwards a printer at Cambridge, where, in 1793, he commenced a weekly newspaper, 'The Cambridge Intelligencer.' The freedom of his remarks in this print subjected him to prosecution and imprisonment. His paper declined, and was discontinued. In 1816 he was residing at Harlow, Essex, where he was still engaged in the printing business, being also the conductor of a monthly work, entitled the Political Review. He died at Dalston 18 Feb.,

FLOYD.

1820, aged 74. Mr. Flower published numerous political tracts, and edited the Miscellaneous Works of Robert Robinson, with his life, 4 vols. 8vo., 1808.

FLOYD, JOHN, a Jesuit, was a native of Cambridgehire. He joined the society at Rome 1592, and died at St. Omer 16 Sept., 1649. He wrote numerous controversial pieces against the Protestants, some of them under the pseudonym of Daniel à Jenu.

FLOYER, Sir JOHN, M.D., born at Hinters, Staffordshire, about 1649. He became a commoner of Queen's College, Oxford, after which he settled at Lichfield, and received the honour of knighthood. Died 1 Feb., 1734. His works are The Touchstone of Medicines; The preternatural State of the Animal Humours; An Inquiry into the Use of Baths; History of Cold Bathing; Treatise on the Sybilline Oracles; Comment on Hippocrates's Book of Epidemics; Essay to restore the Dipping of Infants in Baptism; A Treatise on the Asthma; The Physician's Pulse Watch; The Galenic Art of preserving Old Men's Health; Essay on the 2d Book of Esdras.

FLUDD, ROBERT, in Latin De Fluctibus, an English philosopher, was the son of Sir Thomas Fludd, and born at Milgate, in the parish of Bearsted, Kent, 1574. He received his education at St. John's College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and then travelled abroad. In 1605 he returned to England and settled in London, where he became fellow of the College of Physicians. Died 8 Sept., 1637. His writings are numerous, but extremely perplexed, and full of cabalistical mystery.

FOES, or POESIUS, ANUTIUS, a physician of Mentz; editor of Hippocrates; was born 1528, and died 15 Nov., 1595.

FOGGINI, PETER FRANCIS, a Roman prelate, prefect of the Vatican library, published several learned works on ecclesiastical antiquities, and edited Virgil from the famous MS. in the library of the Medicis. Born at Florence 1713; died 3 June, 1783.

FOGLIETTA, UBERTO, a Genoese historian, born 1518; died at Rome 1581.

FOIX, GASTON DE, duke of Nemours, son of John de Foix, count d'Etampes, and of Mary of Orleans, sister of Louis XII., signalised himself at the age of twenty-three in his uncle's wars in Italy. He beat an army of Swiss and gained the battle of Ravenna; soon after which he was killed, at the age of twenty-four, in April, 1512.

FOIX, MARC ANTOINE, a French Jesuit, who wrote a treatise on the Art of Preaching, and another on the Education of Princes. Born 1627; died June, 1687.

FOIX, PAUL DE, archbishop of Toulouse, a celebrated French statesman and diplomatist, was born 1528, and died May, 1584.

FOLARD, JEAN CHARLES DE, a Frenchman, was author of several works on military tactics. The principal are, a Book of Discoveries in Wars and a Treatise on the Defence of Places. He also wrote a commentary on Polybius. Born 1669; died 23 March, 1752.

FOLENGO, JOHN BAPTIST, a Benedictine monk, author of Commentaries on the Psalms, &c., was born at Mantua 1490, and died 5 Oct., 1559.

FOLENGO, JEROME, or THEOPHILUS, brother of the preceding, likewise assumed the Benedictine habit, but reflected no honour on his profession.

FONBLANQUE.

He published some macaronic poetry, under the pseudonym of Merlin Coccaie. Born 8 Nov., 1491; died 9 Dec., 1544.

FOLEY, Sir THOMAS, a distinguished British admiral, who died 3 Jan., 1833.

FOLIGNO, S. FREZZI.

FOLKES, MARTIN, D.C.L., F.R.S., was born in London 29 Oct., 1690, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. In 1714 he was chosen a fellow of the Royal Society, of which he became president 1741. In 1746 he was honoured with the degree of D.C.L. by the university, and he was also chosen a member of the Academy of Sciences at Paris. Died 28 June, 1754. He communicated several papers to the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, which were printed in their respective Transactions; and published 'A Table of English Gold Coins.'

FOLLETT, Sir WILLIAM WEBB, was born at Topsham, Devonshire, 2 Dec., 1798, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1818 he entered the Inner Temple, and in 1821 commenced practice as a special pleader. He was called to the bar 1824, and joined the western circuit, where his rise to eminence was rapid. He was returned to parliament for Exeter in 1835, being re-elected in 1837, 1841, and 1844. In politics he was always a decided conservative. In 1834, on Sir Robert Peel's first accession to place as prime minister, Mr. Follett was appointed solicitor-general, and the same year was honoured with the dignity of knighthood. On Peel's resumption of office in 1841, Sir William was again appointed solicitor-general, and in 1844 he succeeded Sir F. Pollock as attorney-general. Died 28 June, 1845.

FONBLANQUE, JOHN DE LA GRENIER, an English jurist, was descended from an ancient family of Languedoc, and inherited the title of marquis, though he never assumed it in England. After receiving a liberal education at Harrow and Oxford, he was called to the bar in 1783. In 1802 he was returned to parliament for Camelford, which borough he represented till the dissolution of 1806. He was an able advocate of the Whig party, and a personal friend of the prince of Wales, for whom he is supposed to have written the celebrated letter to the king on the subject of his royal highness's exclusion from the army, which was generally attributed at the time to Lord Moira. He received the rank of king's counsel with a patent of precedence 1804, and died 4 Jan., 1837, aged 77. As an equity lawyer Mr. Fonblanque stood high; and his Treatise on Equity, originally published in 1793-4, was admitted as an authority in the courts during the lie-time of its author.

FONBLANQUE, JOHN SAMUEL MARTIN, was born in London March, 1787, and educated at the Charterhouse and at Caius College, Cambridge. Whilst at the university he burst a blood-vessel on the lungs, and being advised that only change of climate could save his life, he obtained a commission in the 21st Fusiliers. With this regiment he served at Cadiz, Gibraltar, in Sicily and the Greek Islands, then in Italy under Lord W. Bentinck, from whom, at Genoa, he received the appointment of Deputy Judge-Advocate-General. Thence he went to America, was present at the taking of Washington, at the battle of Baltimore, and ultimately at the fatal repulse before New Orleans, when he was made prisoner within the enemy's lines, being one of the very few who had succeeded in crossing the works. His last military service was with the Army of Occupation in France. He left Valenciennes in Nov., 1816, and was almost immediately afterwards called to the bar, having kept the necessary terms at Lincoln's Inn during his residence at Cambridge. Early in the following year, Lord Eldon appointed him one of the then seventy Commissioners of Bankruptcy. The abuses and imperfections of the bankruptcy system did not escape his attention, and long before law reform had become fashionable, he published a pamphlet on the subject. In or about 1826 Mr. Fonblanque and others started 'The Jurist,' a quarterly journal of jurisprudence and legislation, being the first periodical which systematically advocated the amendment of the law. Mr. Fonblanque having attracted the notice of Lord Brougham as a law reformer, was appointed one of the original commissioners of the newly-instituted Court of Bankruptcy. In 1823 appeared his 'Treatise on Medical Jurisprudence,' published by him in conjunction with Dr. Paris. Mr. Fonblanque died at Brighton 3 Nov., 1865.

FONCEMAGNE, ETIENNE LAURKAULT DE, a French writer, preceptor to the duc de Chartres, was born at Orleans 1694, and died 26 Sept., 1779.

FONSECA, PETER DA, a Jesuit, styled the Portuguese Aristotle, was born at Cortizada 1528, and died 4 Nov., 1599. Philip II. appointed him a member of his council of ministers, and Pope Gregory XIII. employed him in several important negotiations. He wrote 'Institutiones Dialecticæ,' and a commentary on Aristotle's Metaphysics.

FONSECA, RODRIGUEZ, a celebrated Portuguese physician, professor at Pisa, and afterwards at Padua, where he died 1622. His nephew, Gabriel Fonseca, became chief physician to Pope Innocent X., and died 1668.

FONTAINE, JEAN LA. See LAFONTAINE.

FONTAINE, NICOLAS, a French theological writer of great piety, learning, and industry, was born at Paris 1625, and died at Meulan 28 Jan., 1709.

FONTAINES. See DESFONTAINES.

FONTANA, DOMINIC, an Italian architect and engineer, born at Milan 1543; died 1607. John, his brother, excelled in hydraulic works, and died 1614.

FONTANA, FELIX, a celebrated Italian naturalist, born at Pomarolo, in the Tyrol, 15 April, 1730; died 11 Jan., 1805. His works on physiology, natural philosophy, and chemistry, are very numerous. His brother, Gregory Fontana, was born near Roveredo 7 Dec., 1735, entered into the ecclesiastical state, held the mathematical professorship at Milan for thirty years, and died 24 Aug., 1803. His works are numerous.

FONTANA, PROSPERO, an historical painter, born at Bologna 1512; died 1597. His daughter, Lavinia (born 1552; died 1614), was an excellent portrait painter, and was patronized by Pope Gregory XIII.

FONTANINI, GIUSTO, archbishop of Ancyra, was born in Priuli 30 Oct., 1660, and died at Rome 17 April, 1736. His numerous works include 'Bibliotheca della Eloquenzia Italiana,' and the 'Literary History of Aquilicia.'

FONTE MODERATA, a learned Venetian lady, whose real name was Modesta Pozzo. She wrote some elegant poems and a prose work, in which she maintained that the understanding of women is equal to that of men. Born 1555; died a Nov., 1592.

FORBES.

FONTENAY, JEAN BAPTISTE BLAIN DE, a French painter of fruit, flowers, and insects, was born at Caen 1654, and died 1715.

FONTENAY, PIERRE CLAUDE, a Jesuit of Orleans, was born at Paris 1683, and died 15 Oct., 1642. He continued Longueval's History of the Gallican Church.

FONTENELLE, BERNARD LE BOVIER DE, nephew of the great Corneille, was born at Rouen 11 Feb., 1657. He first became known by some trifling poetical pieces, and some dramatic works, which met with no success. The 'Dialogues of the Dead' first gave him a reputation, which was increased by his 'Discourses on the Plurality of Worlds,' and his 'History of Oracles.' These have all been translated into English. He was admitted into the French Academy 1691, and six years later into the Academy of Sciences, of which he became secretary in 1699. During the forty-two years that he held this post, he acquired a well-merited celebrity by his Eulogiums of deceased academicians. He was, indeed, the creator of this class of compositions, in which he never has been surpassed. Died 9 Jan., 1757.

FONTIUS, BARTHOLOMEW, a Florentine, who was appointed keeper of the library formed at Buda by Matthew Corvinus, king of Hungary. He wrote a commentary on Persius, Italian poems, &c. Born 1445; died 1513.

FOOTE, SIR EDWARD JAMES, a British admiral, born 1767; died 23 May, 1833.

FOOTE, SAMUEL, was born at Truro, in Cornwall, about 1726. He was educated at Truro, and next at Worcester College, Oxford, from whence he removed to the Temple; but the law having no charms for him, he neglected that study and made his appearance on the stage. His first attempt was in Othello, but he soon struck into a new path by uniting the two professions of comic writer and actor. This he carried into effect in 1747 at the little theatre in the Haymarket, where he performed an olio, called 'The Diversions of a Morning.' He was at first opposed by the justices, on which he altered the title to 'Mr. Foote giving tea to his friends,' and then went on without molestation. The next season he produced a similar entertainment, called 'An Auction of Pictures.' After this he went to Dublin, where he took off Faulkner the printer, for which an action was brought against him, and he was cast in heavy damages. In 1760 Foote brought out his comedy of 'The Minor,' to ridicule Methodism, which, though successful, gave great offence, and was at last suppressed. In 1766 he had the misfortune to lose his leg, by a fall from his horse, on which the duke of York procured him a patent for his theatre. After a life of great vicissitude and irregularity, he died at Dover, on his way to France, 30 Oct., 1777. His remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. His dramatic works were published in 4 vols. 12mo., 1778.

FOPPENS, JOHN FRANCIS, professor of divinity at Louvain, was born about 1680, and died 16 July, 1761. He is known as the author of 'Bibliotheca Belgica,' and other learned works illustrative of the literary and ecclesiastical antiquities of Belgium.

FORBES, ALEXANDER, LORD, of Pitshgo, in Scotland, took a leading part in the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745; and died at Auchincry, Aberdeenshire, 21 Dec., 1762. He was author of 'Moral and Philosophical Essays.'

FORBES, DUNCAN, a Scotch judge, born at Cul-

Joden 1665, and educated at Edinburgh, Utrecht, and Paris. In 1710 he was called to the bar, and gained considerable reputation. In 1717 he was appointed solicitor-general, and in 1725 lord advocate. In 1742 he was made president of the court of session. Died 1747. He was a man of piety and learning, and well versed in the Hebrew Scriptures. His works are, 'Thoughts on Religion'; A Letter to a bishop, in favour of Hutchinson's System; 'Reflections on the Sources of Incredulity.' The best edition of his works is that published at Edinburgh in 1816.

FORBES, Dr. DUNCAN, author of several well-known manuals for the use of students, in Persian, Hindustani, and other eastern languages, died Aug., 1868.

FORBES, EDWARD, a naturalist, born at Douglas, in the Isle of Man, 1815. He studied medicine at Edinburgh from 1831 to 1839, varying his residence there by excursions to Southern Europe, the Mediterranean, and Algeria. Ultimately he gave up the idea of joining the medical profession. In 1841 he published his 'History of British Starfishes,' and in the spring of the same year embarked in the capacity of naturalist on the surveying ship 'Beacon,' destined for the coast of Asia Minor, where, among other duties, she was to receive the Xanthian marbles, the existence of which had then recently been made known by the explorations of Sir Charles Fellows. During the eighteen months that he remained on board the vessel he established, by innumerable dredging operations in various depths of water, the important law, that the distribution of marine life, like that of terrestrial animals and vegetables, is determined by certain fixed laws, and that the zones which the different species inhabit are as distinctly marked in the one case by the climate and the depth and composition of the water as in the other by temperature, altitude, and other influences. In 1846 he published, in conjunction with Lieutenant Spratt, 'Travels in Lycia, Milyas, and the Cibyrates,' the numerous illustrations in which were from his pencil. In 1842 Mr. Forbes was appointed professor of botany in King's College, London; and in the following year he was constituted curator of the museum of the Geological Society, and palæontologist of the new museum of Practical Geology, established in connexion with the Ordnance Geological Survey. He subsequently became professor of natural history at this institution. One of the most important works in which he took part after his connexion with the Geological Society was the preparation of a palæontological and geological map of the British Isles, to which he appended an explanatory dissertation and a map of the 'Distribution of Marine Life.' In 1852 he was elected president of the Geological Society, and in the succeeding year obtained the professorship of natural history in the university of Edinburgh. Died 18 Nov., 1854. He published a number of scientific works in addition to those mentioned above, and his 'Literary Papers' appeared in a collected form in 1855 with a memoir by Huxley. Although in the universality of grasp of his knowledge, and in the variety of his accomplishments, Forbes showed himself pre-eminent, it has been truly said of him that he made no remarkable discoveries, initiated no critical movement, and never showed himself inventive, like Linnaeus, or Cuvier, or even Buffon.

FORBES, JAMES, was born in London 1749.

FORBES.

He went early in life to Bombay as a writer, and travelled over various parts of India, making observations and taking drawings of all the objects worthy of notice. In 1784 he returned, with an ample fortune, to England. In 1803 he went to France, and died at Aix-la-Chapelle 1 Aug., 1819. He published Letters from France, 2 vols.; Reflections on the Character of the Hindoos; and Oriental Memoirs, 4 vols.

FORBES, JOHN, son of Patrick, hereafter noticed, was born 2 May, 1593. From Aberdeen he went to Heidelberg, and on his return home became professor of divinity in King's College, till he was ejected by the Covenanters in 1640. On this he went to Holland, where he published his father's commentary, and his own 'Institutiones historico-theologicæ.' He then returned to Scotland, and died at his seat of Corse 29 April, 1648. In 1703 his works were printed at Amsterdam, 4 vols. folio.

FORBES, JOHN, a young English naturalist of great promise, was a botanical collector in the service of the Horticultural Society of London. He died at Senna, on the Zambesi River, in Eastern Africa, Aug., 1823, æt. 22.

FORBES, Sir JOHN, M.D., was born in Banffshire 18 Oct., 1787, and educated at Aberdeen and Edinburgh, taking the degree of M.D. at the latter university 1817. He practised as a physician first at Penzance, then at Chichester, and removed in 1840 to London. He became physician to the royal household; and died at Whitechurch, Oxfordshire, 13 Nov., 1861. Among his numerous publications are, 'Nature and Art in the Cure of Disease'; 'Physician's Holiday; or a Month's Tour in Switzerland'; 'Of Happiness in its relation to Work and Knowledge'; 'Memorandums made in Ireland in the Autumn of 1852'; 'Sight-seeing in Germany and the Tyrol in 1860'; translations of the treatises of Laennec and Avenbrugger. He also took a very prominent part in organising and elaborating the Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine; and he was founder of the British and Foreign Medical Review.

FORBES, PATRICK, a Scotch divine, born 1564. He was lord of Corse, and baron of O'Neil; but at the age of twenty-eight he took orders, and became minister of Keith. In 1618 he was made bishop of Aberdeen, where he died 28 March, 1635. His Commentary on the Revelations was printed at London 1613.

FORBES, ROBERT, a Scotch prelate, was at one time minister of the episcopal congregation at Leith. When Prince Charles came down from the highlands, Mr. Forbes was suspected of Jacobite leanings, and was accordingly apprehended at St. Ninian's in Sept., 1745, and imprisoned till the following May. After gaining his liberty, he lived in the house of the Dowager Lady Brown, of Kinross, where he steadily pursued his design of collecting from the mouths of the survivors of the enterprise such narratives and anecdotes as they could furnish him with. Ultimately the collection filled ten MS. volumes. These were published in 1834 under the title of 'Jacobite Memoirs of the Rebellion of 1745. Edited by Robert Chambers.' Mr. Forbes was chosen bishop of Caithness and the Orkneys 1762; and died 1776.

FORBES, WILLIAM, bishop of Edinburgh, was born 1585 at Aberdeen. He became principal of Marischal College, and rector of the university of Aberdeen; and on the erection of Edinburgh into an episcopal see, he was consecrated the first bishop, but died 1 April, 1634, having enjoyed the dignity only three months. His 'Considerationes modestæ et pacificæ controversiarum de justificatione, &c.' appeared after his death in 1658.

FORBES, SIR WILLIAM, baronet, of Pitsligo, was born at Edinburgh 5 April, 1739, and became head of the eminent firm of Forbes, Hunter, and Co., in that city. He frequently visited London, and was one of the earliest members of the celebrated Literary Club, which numbered among its associates Johnson, Burke, Reynolds, and Garrick. The leisure of his latter years was devoted to the composition of a life of his friend Dr. Beattie, which was printed with the doctor's works, in 2 vols. 4to., 1805. Died 12 Nov., 1806.

FORBIN, CLAUDE, Chevalier DE, a French officer, born 1056. He served in the East Indies, and was admiral to the sovereign of Siam some years. On his return to Europe, he distinguished himself in the Mediterranean, and in 1708 conveyed the Pretender to Scotland, but could not effect a landing. Died 4 March, 1733. His maxims and reflections were printed 1749.

FORBONNAIS, FRANÇOIS VÉRON DE, a French writer on political economy, born at Mans 1722; died 20 Sept., 1800.

FORBY, ROBERT, a learned philologist, was a native of Stoke Ferry, Norfolk. From the first school at Lynn he went to Caius College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a fellow (B.A. 1781; M.A. 1784). On leaving college he undertook the education of the sons of Sir John Berney, who gave him the small living of Horningtoft, Norfolk, 1787. In 1799 he was collated to the rectory of Fincham in the same county, which he retained till his death 20 Dec., 1825. He wrote a 'Dissertation upon the different uses of the middle Verb in Greek,' printed in Davy's 'Letters upon Subjects of Literature;' but his principal work was not published till after his death, viz.: 'The Vocabulary of East Anglia, an attempt to record the vulgar tongue of the twin sister counties, Norfolk and Suffolk, as it existed in the last twenty years of the eighteenth century, and still exists, with proof of its antiquity from etymology and authority,' 2 vols. 12mo., Lond., 1830.

FORCELLINI, GILES, a learned Italian priest, born near Padua 26 Aug., 1688; died 4 April, 1768. He was the author of one of the works which have most contributed to facilitate the study of the ancient languages and of classical antiquities. It is entitled 'Totius Latinitatis Lexicon,' and contains a vast Latin vocabulary, every word being translated into Italian and Greek, and illustrated by copious examples.

FORD, SIR EDWARD (not Sir John, as he is frequently, but erroneously called), was born at Up Park, Sussex, 1605, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. He was knighted by Charles I. in 1643. In 1656 he was employed on a plan for raising water from the Thames to supply the city; afterwards in draining mines and lands; and lastly in a copper coinage for Ireland, where he died 3 Sept., 1670. He published 'A Desigue for bringing a Navigable River from Richmunsdown, in Hartfordshire, to St. Giles-in-the-Fields; the benefits of it declared, and the objections against it answered,' 1641; and 'Experimental proposals how the King may have money to pay and maintain his fleets with ease to his people: London may be rebuilt, and all proprietors satisfied: money to be but at six per cent. on pawns, and the Fishing Trade set up, which alone is able, and sure, to enrich us all. And all this without altering, straining, or thwarting any of our Laws or Customs now in use,' 1666, reprinted in the Harleian Miscellany.

FORD, JOHN, a dramatic poet, born at Ilington, Devonshire, 1586. He became a member of the Middle Temple; and in 1606 wrote a poem on the death of his patron, the earl of Devonshire. In 1613 was acted his play, entitled, 'A bad beginning makes a good ending;' and he subsequently produced ten others. He is supposed to have died about 1639. His 'Dramatic Works' were published in 2 vols. 8vo., 1827, with notes by W. Gifford.

FORD, RICHARD, was born in London 1796, being son of Sir Richard Ford, who was, for many years, the chief police magistrate of the metropolis. From Winchester School he went to Trinity College, Oxford, and was subsequently called to the bar, though he never practised. He travelled much upon the Continent, especially in the Spanish peninsula, and on his return settled at Heavitree, near Exeter. His literary reputation mainly rests on his 'Handbook for Spain,' a clever work, though full of vulgar prejudices. Mr. Ford also published 'Gatherings from Spain,' and some papers in the Quarterly Review.

FORD, SIMON, D.D., was born at East Ogwell, Devonshire, 1619, and educated at Oxford. He became vicar of St. Laurence, Reading, 1651; vicar of All Saints, Northampton, 1659; chaplain to the king 1665; rector of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, London, 1670; and finally rector of Old Swinford, Worcestershire, where he died 7 April, 1699. Dr. Ford wrote some elegant Latin poems; sermons; a new version of the Psalms; and 'A Discourse concerning God's Judgments.'

FORDUN, JOHN DE, a Scotch historian, is believed to have been a canon of Aberdeen, and to have died in 1386. Almost the whole of the early history of Scotland is founded on his 'Scotchchronicon,' which was printed by Hearne in 5 vols. 8vo., 1722; and again by Walter Goodall, 2 vols. folio, Edinb., 1759.

FORDYCE, DAVID, professor of philosophy at the Marischal College, Aberdeen, was born in that city 1711. He was educated for the church, but, though licensed to preach, he never obtained a regular settlement. In 1742 he was appointed to the professorship; and in 1750 he made a tour to the Continent, on his return from whence he was drowned in a storm off the Dutch coast 1751. He wrote the Elements of Moral Philosophy in Dodsley's Preceptor; and Dialogues on Education. After his death were published from his manuscripts 'Theodorus, a Dialogue concerning the Art of Preaching;' and the Temple of Virtue, a Dream.

FORDYCE, GEORGE, M.D., F.R.S., nephew of Sir William, was born at Aberdeen 18 Nov., 1736, and educated in that university, but took his doctor's degree at Edinburgh 1758, and the next year settled in London. He commenced his career as a lecturer on chemistry; to which in 1764 he added a course upon the materia medica and the practice of physic. In 1770 he was chosen physician to St. Thomas's Hospital; and in 1787 admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians. Died 25 May, 1802. His works include 'Elements of Agriculture and Vegetation;' 'Elements of the Practice of Physick;' and a 'Treatise on the Digestion of Food.'

FORDYCE.

FORDYCE, JAMES, D.D., brother of David, mentioned above, was born about 1720 at Aberdeen, and educated at the Marischal College. His first settlement was at Brechin, from whence he removed to Alloa; and while in that station he distinguished himself by a sermon preached before the general assembly, on unlawful pleasures, for which the university of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of D.D. About 1762 he became assistant to Dr. Lawrence, of Monkwell Street, London, and afterwards his successor. In 1782 he resigned this situation and went to Bath, where he died 1 Oct., 1796. He published a Sermon on the Eloquence of the Pulpit; Sermons to Young Women; Addresses to Young Men; Addresses to the Deity; and a volume of poems.

FORDYCE, SIR WILLIAM, brother of David and James, who have been already noticed, was born 1724, and educated in the Marischal College, Aberdeen, of which he became lord rector. He served as surgeon in the wars of Germany, after which he entered upon medical practice in London, and was knighted 1787. Died 4 Dec., 1792. He wrote several treatises on subjects connected with his profession.

FOREIRO, FRANCIS, in Latin Forerius, a learned Dominican friar, born at Lisbon 1523. He appeared with great distinction at the Council of Trent, and was one of the three divines appointed by that august assembly to draw up the Catechism which appeared in 1566. After his return to Portugal he founded a convent at Almeida, where he died 10 Jan., 1597. He wrote a valuable Commentary on Isaiah.

FOREST, JEAN, a landscape painter, born 1636 at Paris, where he died 1712.

FORESTI, JAMES PHILIP DE. See BERGAMO.

FORESTUS, PETRUS, or Peter Van Forest, a learned Dutch physician and medical writer, born 1522; died 1597.

FORKEL, JOHN NICHOLAS, a German musician, born at Meeder near Coburg, 22 Feb., 1749, became director of music in the university of Gottingen; and died 17 March, 1818. He published a General Bibliography of Music and other works on his favourite science.

FORMAN, SIMON, a noted astrologer, born near Wilton, Wiltshire, 30 Dec., 1552. After receiving a very irregular education he studied for a time in the free school adjoining Magdalen College, Oxford, and eventually settled in London, where he practised as an empiric, astrologer, and fortune-teller, being much patronised by the credulous. He was greatly harassed by the College of Physicians, until he managed to get a regular licence to practise physic from the university of Cambridge. Died Sept., 1611. His only published work is 'The Grounds of the Longitude,' 1591; but he left a mass of MSS., most of which are now in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford. — Athen. Cantab. vol. iii.

FORMEY, JOHN HENRY SAMUEL, was born 31 May, 1711, at Berlin. He became pastor of the French church there, and afterwards professor of philosophy and secretary to the Royal Berlin Academy of Sciences. Died 8 March, 1797. Of his many works the most remarkable are an Ecclesiastical History; History of Philosophy Abridged, which, like the former work, has been translated into English; 'Introduction générale aux Sciences, avec des conseils pour former une Bibliothèque choisie;' Researches on the Elements of Matter;

FORSTER.

The Christian Philosopher; and Anti-Émile, against Rousseau.

FORMOSUS was elected Pope 19 Sept., 891, and died 4 April, 896.

FORNARI, MARIA VICTORIA, was born at Genoa 1562. She married Angelo Strata, and had by him three sons and two daughters, who all chose the monastic life. After her husband's death, she founded the order of the 'Annonciades Celestes;' and died 15 Dec., 1617.

FORREST, JOHN, D.D., assumed the habit of a Franciscan friar at Greenwich, and afterwards being sent to Oxford, was created a doctor. He became confessor to Catharine of Arragon, queen of Henry VIII., and in the matter of the divorce argued strongly in favour of his royal mistress. In consequence of this he fell under the king's displeasure, and was condemned to die on the pretence that he was guilty both of treason and heresy. He was accordingly hanged 22 May, 1538. Dr. Forrest wrote 'De Auctoritate Ecclesie ad Rom. Pontif.' Letters to Queen Catharine, &c.

FORREST, THOMAS, an English navigator, was captain of a vessel in the East India Company's service. Accounts of his discoveries will be found in his description of his 'Voyage (1776-8) to New Guinea and the Meluccas from Balambangan; including an account of Magindano, Sooloo, and other Islands;' and his 'Voyage from Calcutta to the Mergui Archipelago, &c.,' 1792. The latter work is justly of great authority for its details in maritime geography. Died about 1802.

FORSHELL, JOSIAH, M.A., F.R.S., an English clergyman, was sometime fellow and tutor of Exeter College, Oxford, subsequently keeper of the MSS., and also secretary of the British Museum, and for thirty-four years chaplain to the Foundling Hospital. He died 18 Dec., 1863, aged 67. In conjunction with Sir Frederick Madden he edited the Wycliffite versions of the Scriptures; and he was also author of a 'Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury on Church Reform,' &c.

FORSKAL, PETER, a Swedish naturalist, born 1736, accompanied Niebuhr to the east, and died in Arabia 11 July, 1763. His observations on natural history were published by his fellow-traveller.

FORSTER, GEORGE, a naturalist, born at Dantzic 1754, was the son of Dr. John Reinhold Forster, whom he accompanied in the circumnavigation of the globe. He was professor at Cassel, and afterwards at Wilna and Mayence. He next visited Paris, and was about to travel to Thibet when he died in the midst of his preparations 15 Feb., 1792. He wrote a Voyage round the World with Captain Cook; Reply to Wales's 'Remarks' on the previous work; a Letter to the Earl of Sandwich, &c.

FORSTER, JOHN, a Protestant divine, born at Augsburg 1495, taught Hebrew at Wittemberg, where he died 8 Dec., 1556. He published a Hebrew lexicon. There was another German divine of the same name, who wrote commentaries on Scripture, and died 1613.

FORSTER, JOHN REINHOLD, LL.D., a naturalist, born at Dirschaw, in Polish Prussia, 22 Oct., 1729. Coming to England, he taught French and German in the dissenting academy at Warrington. In 1772 he went out as naturalist with Captain Cook, and on his return, in 1775, received the degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford. Having published, contrary to the engagement entered into with Government, a botanical account of plants discovered in his voyage, he was treated with such coolness that he quitted England and went to Halle, where he was appointed professor of natural history. Died 9 Dec., 1798. He published Observations made in a Voyage round the World; History of Voyages and Discoveries in the North; a dissertation on the Byssus of the Ancients, &c.

FORSTER, NATHANIEL, D.D., was born 3 Feb., 1717, at Stadcombe, in the parish of Plymstock, Devonshire, and educated at Oxford. In 1750 he became chaplain to Bishop Butler, who died in his arms, and in 1754 obtained a prebend in the cathedral of Bristol and the living of Rochdale, Lancashire. He was also appointed chaplain to the King, and preacher at the Rolls Chapel. Died 20 Oct., 1757. He published 'Reflections on the natural antiquity of government, arts, and sciences in Egypt; 'Platonis dialogi quinque,' with notes; 'Appendix Liviana; 'Dissertation upon the account supposed to have been given of Jesus Christ by Josephus,' which account Dr. Forster believed to be genuine; 'Biblia Hebraica, sine punctis;' dissertation on the Marriages of Minors.

FORSTNER, CHRISTOPHER, an Austrian lawyer and statesman, born 1598; died 28 Dec., 1667.

FORSYTH, ALEXANDER JOHN, a Scotch clergyman and experimenter in chemistry, especially in fulminative powders, which led to his discovery of the percussion lock. Born 1769; died 11 June, 1843.

FORSYTH, WILLIAM, a Scotch horticulturist, who succeeded Philip Miller in the garden at Chelsea, and in 1784 became superintendent of the royal gardens at Kensington and St. James's. He published two works on fruit trees; and for his discovery of a composition to remedy the diseases in trees he received a grant from parliament. Born 1737; died 25 July, 1804.

FORTESCUE, JAMES, D.D., fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and afterwards rector of Wotton, Northamptonshire, was author of 'Essays, Moral and Miscellaneous,' 2 vols. 8vo., London, 1759. Died 1777.

FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN, is conjectured to have been born in Devonshire and educated at Oxford, from whence he removed to Lincoln's Inn. He was constituted, in 1442, chief justice of the King's Bench. He was zealously attached to Henry VI., whom he accompanied in his exile to Scotland. From the circumstance of Henry's having entrusted him with the great seal, he is commonly styled chancellor of England, though he never exercised the office. He was afterwards in Flanders, and while abroad wrote his famous book, entitled 'De Laudibus Legum Angliæ,' which, however, was not published till the reign of Henry VIII. He returned to England with Queen Margaret, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury 1471. On being pardoned by Edward IV., he retired to his seat at Ebrington, Gloucestershire, where he died at the age of 90.

FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN FORTESCUE ALAND, LORD, an eminent judge, was son of Edmund Fortescue, of London, by Sarah, daughter of Henry Aland, of Waterford, in honour of whom he took his name. He was born 1670, and received his education at Oxford, whence he removed to the Inner Temple, where he was chosen reader, and called to the bar. In 1714 he was appointed solicitor-general to the prince of Wales, and next year to the king. In 1717 he was made one of the barons of the Exchequer; in 1718 removed to the King's Bench; and in 1728 to the Common Pleas, which situation he resigned in 1746. He was created an Irish peer, by the title of Baron Fortescue of Credan, and died 10 Dec., 1746. He was an able lawyer, an impartial judge, and well versed in Saxon literature. Sir John Fortescue published in 1714 a treatise on absolute and limited monarchy. After his death his 'Reports' were printed in folio. This judge was remarkable for a flat nose; and a serjeant who had lost an arm one day arguing a case in an awkward manner, the judge told him that he appeared to handle the matter somewhat lamely, to which the serjeant replied, 'With submission, I trust to be able to make the case as plain as the nose on your lordship's face.' He was very intimate with Pope, and furnished him with the burlesque of 'Stradling versus Styles.'

FORTIGUERRA, NICHOLAS, an Italian prelate, who wrote a burlesque poem, called 'Ricciardetto,' and an Italian translation of Terence. Born 1674; died 17 Feb., 1735.

FORTIS, ALOYSIUS, the twentieth general of the Jesuits, was born at Verona 1748, and died at Rome 1829.

FOSBROKE, THOMAS DUDLEY, F.S.A., was born 27 May, 1770, and educated at St. Paul's School and Pembroke College, Oxford (M.A. 1792). Taking orders, he became curate of Horsley, Gloucestershire, and continued so till 1810, when he became curate of Walford. He obtained the vicarage of Walford 1830; and died 1 Jan., 1842. His works are chiefly antiquarian and are of little value. Their titles are 'British Monachism,' a book which affords a striking proof of its author's ignorance of the subject; 'Economy of Monastic Life,' a poem; 'Abstracts of Records and MSS. respecting the county of Gloucester; 'History of the city of Gloucester; 'Encyclopædia of Antiquities and Elements of Archæology.' He also edited the Berkeley Manuscripts.

FOSCARINI, MICHAEL, a Venetian senator, who continued Nani's History of Venice, and composed two Italian novels. Born 1632; died 31 May, 1692.

FOSCOLO, UGO, an Italian author, was born about 1776, and received his education at the university of Padua. Before he was twenty years old he composed a tragedy, which was represented at Venice in 1797, when it was received with unbounded applause. In 1798 he published the 'Ultime Lettere di Jacopo Ortis,' a romance. He subsequently adopted the military profession, and remained in the Italian army till 1805, but disliking the service of Napoleon after he had become emperor, he quitted it, but retained his military rank as captain. About this time he succeeded Monti professor of literature in the university of Pavia, where he commenced his lectures by an oration, the boldness of which alarmed the Emperor Napoleon, and the professorship was suppressed. In 1812 he produced another tragedy, 'Ajace,' which was performed at Milan. He went to that city in 1814, and was promoted to the rank of major. In 1815 he came to England, where his reputation procured for him a cordial reception. He published 'Ricciarda,' a tragedy; 'Essays on Petrarch,' 1821; and 'Discorso sulla Testa di Dante,' 1826; and also contributed many articles to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews. He might, by his writings alone, have insured himself independence if he had acted with prudence, but he involved himself in difficulties by erecting a cottage in the Regent's Park, and his pride and violence of temper disgusted all his friends. Dying 14 Sept., 1827, he was buried in Chiswick churchyard.

- FOSSE. See LA FOSSE.

FOSSOMBRONI, VITTORIO, an Italian statesman and mathematician, was born at Arezzo 1744; became prime minister to Ferdinand III., grand duke of Tuscany, 1795; and died 1844. He published treatises on mathematics and mechanics.

FOSTER, HENRY, an English navigator, born at Wood Plumpton, Lancashire, 1797. At an early age he entered the Royal Navy, and accompanied Captain Parry in his arctic expeditions. In 1829 he received the command of the 'Chanticleer' sloop, which was sent on a voyage of scientific research in the antarctic seas. On his return he was accidentally drowned at Panama 5 Feb., 1831. An account of the voyage, extracted from Mr. Forster's private journal, was published by Mr. Webster, surgeon of the 'Chanticleer.'

FOSTER, JAMES, D.D., was born at Exeter 16 Sept., 1697. After officiating to different congregations of the Independent denomination, he turned Baptist, and in 1724 succeeded Dr. Gale at the meeting in Barbican, London. In 1744 he was chosen minister at Pinner's Hall; and in 1749 received the degree of D.D. from Aberdeen. Died 5 Nov., 1753. He wrote a Defence of the Christian Revelation against Tindal; 'Tracts on Heresy'; 'An Account of Lord Kilmarnock,' whom he attended on the scaffold; 'Discourses on Natural Religion and Social Virtue'; and Sermons.

FOSTER, JOHN, D.D., was born at Windsor 1731, and educated at Eton, from whence he was sent to King's College, Cambridge. He afterwards became an assistant in Eton School, and in 1765 head master, which station he soon resigned in consequence of his infirmities, and in 1772 obtained a canonry of Windsor. He died Sept., 1773, at Spa, whether he had gone for the benefit of his health. He published 'An Essay on the different nature of Accent and Quantity,' 1762.

FOSTER, JOHN, an essayist, born at Halifax, Yorkshire, 17 Sept., 1770. In early life he was engaged in the business of a weaver, to which, however, as to all menial labour, he had an invincible dislike; and at the age of 17 having joined the Baptist church, he resolved to devote himself to the ministry, and finished his studies in the Baptist College at Bristol. He commenced his career as a preacher at Newcastle-on-Tyne 1792, and afterwards went to Dublin, where he endeavoured unsuccessfully to establish himself either as a preacher or schoolmaster. In 1797 he went to a Baptist chapel in Chichester, and thence successively to Downend (1800), and Frome (1804), but though his preaching was powerful it made little or no impression on the popular mind. While at Frome he first published his celebrated 'Essays,' and also became the principal contributor to the 'Eclectic Review,' the articles for which, one hundred and eighty-five in number, formed his almost exclusive literary labour for thirteen years. In 1817 he returned to Downend, where he wrote his 'Essay on the Evils of Popular Ignorance.' His health failing, he then employed himself chiefly in preparing works for the press, though preaching at intervals till his death, which occurred at Stapleton, near Bristol, 15 Oct., 1843. Mr. Foster was a profound thinker and a powerful writer. His 'Life and Correspondence' was published 1846, and his 'Historical and Biographical Essays' in 1859, 2 vols.

FOSTER, SIR MICHAEL, was born 16 Dec., 1689, at Marlborough, Wiltshire, and educated at Oxford. He became recorder of Bristol 1735; a justice of the King's Bench 1745; and died 7 Nov., 1763. Sir Michael wrote a pamphlet against Gibson's Codex; A Letter of Advice to the Protestant Dissenters; and 'Report of the proceedings on the commission for the trial of the Rebels in 1746, and other crown cases.'

FOSTER, SAMUEL, a native of Northamptonshire, or, according to Aubrey, of Coventry, received his education at Emanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1619; M.A. 1623). He was chosen professor of astronomy in Gresham College 1636, and was one of the first members of that association which afterwards obtained the name of the Royal Society. Died July, 1652. His works are: 'The Description and Use of a portable Quadrant; The Art of Dialling; Posthuma Fosteri; Four Treatises on Dialling; The Sector altered; Miscellanies, or Mathematical Lucubrations.'

FOTHERGILL, GEORGE, D.D., was born at Lockholme, in Ravenstonedale, Westmoreland, 31 Dec., 1705. He was educated at Kendal, and next at Queen's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship; and in 1751 was elected principal of St. Edmund Hall. Died 5 Oct., 1760. Dr. Fothergill was the author of two volumes of sermons.

FOTHERGILL, JOHN, M.D., was born at Carr End, Yorkshire, 1712. His parents were Quakers; and in 1728 he was put apprentice to an apothecary of that denomination at Bradford, after which he removed to London, and studied two years under Sir Edward Wilmot, at St. Thomas's Hospital. He next went to Edinburgh, and there took his doctor's degree. After visiting Leyden, France, and Germany, he settled in the metropolis, where he became a licentiate of the college, a member of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and acquired a large fortune, of which he made a most liberal use. Died 26 Dec., 1780. Dr. Fothergill published an inaugural thesis 'De Emeticorum Usu'; An Account of the Putrid Sore Throat; several Papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and in the Medical Observations and Inquiries, which were collected and printed in 1781, and again by Dr. Lettsom 1784.

FOTHERGILL, SAMUEL, brother of George, mentioned above, was born at Carr End, in Wensleydale, Yorkshire, 9 Sept., 1715. He became an eminent preacher among the Quakers, and travelled over Great Britain and North America to propagate his doctrines. Memoirs of his Life and Gospel Labours, by George Crossfield, were published in 1843, and again in 1857. Died 15 June, 1772.

FOUCAULT, NICOLAS JOSEPH, a French antiquary, born 1643; died 7 Feb., 1721.

FOUCHE, JOSEPH, duke of Otranto, was born at Nantes 29 May, 1763, and became prefect of studies among the Oratorians of that town. On the outbreak of the Revolution he embraced its principles with ardour, and in 1792 was elected a member of the National Convention. In 1793 he accompanied to Lyons, Collot d'Herbois, who was charged with the execution of the decree for the destruction of that city. At the termination of this mission various charges of cruelty were brought against

FOUCHER.

Fouché. After the dissolution of the Convention he was protected by Barras, and on 13 Thermidor, An VII., was nominated minister of police. In this post he displayed the greatest activity joined with a rare sagacity, and rendered most important services to Bonaparte on the day of the 18 Brumaire. Bonaparte, however, having little confidence in his probity, took his portfolio away in 1802, but restored it to him in 1804. Fouché retained it till 1810, when he was replaced, but for what reason is unknown. After the Russian campaign he was charged by Napoleon with the government of the Illyrian provinces, a task of great difficulty. During the Hundred Days he again held the portfolio of police; and after the battle of Waterloo he was nominated president of the provisional government, and treated with the allied powers. Louis XVIII. put him for a short time at the head of the police, and then sent him as ambassador to Dresden. But coming within the purview of the 'ordonnance' of 12 Jan., 1816, as having voted for the death of Louis XVI., Fouché went into exile, and died at Trieste 25 Dec., 1820. According to the general opinion, Fouché was a minister of great ability, but not over-scrupulous. The 'Mémoires' which go under his name are fictitious.

FOUCHER, SIMON, a French priest, author of a Treatise on the Wisdom of the Ancients and other works, was born 1644, and died 27 April, 1696.

FOUCHIER, BERTRAM DE, a Dutch painter, born 1609; died 1674.

FOUGEROUX DE BONDAROY, AUGUSTE DENIS, a naturalist, of Paris, born 10 Oct., 1732; died 28 Dec., 1789.

FOUILLOU, JACQUES, a French priest of the Jansenist sect, and author of several works against the bull 'Unigenitus,' died at Paris 21 Sept., 1736, aged 66.

FOULIS, ROBERT and ANDREW, two printers of Glasgow. Robert began business about 1740; and one of his first works was Demetrius Phalereus, 4to. In 1744 he brought out his edition of Horace; which was followed by a number of elegant editions of the classics and other works. At length these public-spirited men ruined themselves by establishing an academy for the instruction of youth in painting and sculpture. Andrew Foulis died 18 Sept., 1775; and in 1776 Robert sold his collection of pictures in London, when the balance in his favour amounted to no more than fifteen shillings. He died the same year, on his return to Scotland.

FOULLON, JOHN ERARD, a Jesuit, born at Liege 1609; died at Tournay 1688. His principal work is a History of Liege.

FOULON, WILLIAM, a Latin poet, born at the Hague 1483, and died 1558.

FOULSTON, JOHN, an architect, whose labours were for the most part directed to the improvement of the towns of Plymouth, Devonport, and Stonehouse. In 1838 he published his designs in a volume entitled 'Public Buildings erected in the West of England.' Died 30 Dec., 1841.

FOUNTAIN, SIR ANDREW, an English antiquary, born at Narford, Norfolk, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he wrote a piece entitled 'Numismata Anglo-Saxonica et Anglo-Danica,' inserted in Dr. Hickeys's Thesaurus. He received the honour of knighthood from King William, and travelled over most part of Europe in search of pictures and antiquities, of which he formed a noble collection. He was intimate with Swift, for whose 'Tale of a Tub' he drew some designs. In 1727 he succeeded Newton as warden of the Mint; and died 4 Sept., 1753.

FOUQUE, FREDERICK HENRY CHARLES, Baron de la Motte, a German poet and novelist, born at Brandenburg 12 Feb., 1777; died 23 Jan., 1843.

FOUQUET, CHARLES LOUIS AUGUSTE. See BELLE-ISLE.

FOUQUET, NICOLAS, marquis of Belleisle, became superintendent of the finances under Cardinal Mazarin, but abused the trust in such a manner that in 1661 he was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Born 1615; died 23 March, 1680.

FOUQUIER-TAINVILLE, ANTOINE QUENTIN, a French revolutionist, who rendered himself infamous by his sanguinary conduct, was born 1747, and perished on the scaffold 7 May, 1795.

FOUQUIERES, JAMES, a landscape painter, born at Antwerp 1580; died 1659.

FOUREROY, ANTOINE FRANÇOIS, COMTE DE, a celebrated chemist, born at Paris 15 June, 1755. He studied at the college of Harcourt, after which he applied himself to medicine and the sciences connected with it. In 1776 he published a translation of Ramazzini 'On the Diseases of Artizans;' and in 1780 received the degree of doctor in physic. In 1784 he was appointed professor of chemistry in the royal gardens, and the year following was admitted into the Academy of Sciences: He bore a part in the Revolution, and was elected a member of the National Convention, though he did not take his seat till after the murder of the king. In 1794 he became a member of the Committee of Public Safety, and was consulted on several subjects of importance. On the foundation of the Institute he was nominated professor of chemistry. Died 16 Dec., 1809. He published many esteemed works on chemistry.

FOUREROY, CHARLES RENÉ DE, a celebrated military engineer, born at Paris 19 Jan., 1715; died 12 Jan., 1791. He was also distinguished as a naturalist.

FOURIER, FRANÇOIS CHARLES MARIE, a celebrated French communist, born 7 April, 1768; died 10 Oct., 1837.

FOURIER, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, was born at Auxerre 21 March, 1768. At an early age he distinguished himself by his proficiency in mathematical studies, and was appointed to a professorship in the central school of Public Works. He was a member of the scientific commission which accompanied Bonaparte's expedition to Egypt, where he acted as secretary of the Egyptian Institute, and was employed likewise in judicial and diplomatic affairs. Returning to France, he was constituted prefect of the department of Isère, in which situation he was continued by Louis XVIII. When Napoleon came back in 1815, Fourier quitted Grenoble on his approach, and on being appointed by the emperor to the prefecture of the department of the Rhône, he refused to carry out the measures proposed to him by the minister, and was accordingly superseded. From that time he resided quietly at Paris, devoting his time to the cultivation of literature and science. Died 16 May, 1830. He was author of the historical preface to the great work on Egypt; a valuable treatise on the Theory of Heat; Reports on the Mathetical Sciences; and some useful works on statistics.

FOURIER, PIERRE, reformer of the canons regular of Lorraine, and founder of the female branch of the same order, was born at Mirecourt 15 Nov., 1565, and died 9 Nov., 1640. He was beatified 1690.

FOURMONT, ETIENNE, a French orientalist, born at Herbelay 1683; became Arabic professor in the Royal College at Paris 1715; died 18 Dec., 1745. He was the first who studied the Chinese characters in Europe, and he wrote a grammar and dictionary of that language. His other principal works are 'Meditationes Sinicæ;' and Critical Reflections upon Ancient History. His brother, Michel (b. 28 Sept., 1690; d. 5 Feb., 1746), was Syriac professor in the Royal College, and a member of the Academy of Inscriptions.

FOURNIER, PIERRE SIMON, an engraver and typefounder, born at Paris 15 Sept., 1712; died 8 Oct., 1768.

FOURQUEVAUX, RAIMOND DE PAVIA, BARON DE, an Italian soldier, who, going to France, was appointed governor of Narbonne, and died 1574, aged 66. He wrote the Lives of eminent French Generals.

FOWLER, CHRISTOPHER, a Puritan, born at Marlborough 1610 or 1611, and educated at Magdalen College, and Edmund Hall, Oxford. He in 1641 declared himself a Presbyterian, and drew crowds after him by the oddity of his gestures and the violence of his appeals in the pulpit. He afterwards was vicar of St. Mary's, Reading, and then fellow of Eton, and an able assistant to the Berkshire commissioners in the ejection of those then called insufficient ministers. Died 15 Jan., 1676.

FOWLER, EDWARD, a bishop, born at Westerleigh, Gloucestershire, 1632, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, though he took his M.A. degree at Cambridge. In 1656 he became chaplain to the countess of Kent, who gave him the rectory of Northill, Bedfordshire. In 1673 he was presented to All Hallows, Bread Street, London; and in 1675 to a prebend in the church of Gloucester, where he had a dispute with the corporation respecting a sermon which he preached and printed. In 1681 he was instituted to the vicarage of St. Giles's, Cripplegate, whereupon he resigned All Hallows. He was constituted bishop of Gloucester 1691; and died 26 Aug., 1714. Besides several sermons and tracts, he wrote 'The Principles and Practices of certain moderate divines of the Church of England, abusively called Latitudinarians, greatly misunderstood, truly represented and defended;' 'The Design of Christianity;' 'Libertas Evangelica, or a Discourse of Christian Liberty.'

FOWLER, JOHN, a printer, was born at Bristol and educated at Winchester School, after which he obtained a fellowship in New College, Oxford; but resigned it 1559, and went to Louvain, where he conducted the printing business, and wrote some books, chiefly in defence of the Roman Church. He died at Newmark, in Germany, 13 Feb., 1578-9.

FOWLER, JOHN, inventor of the steam plough, died at Acworth, Yorkshire, 4 Dec., 1864, at the early age of 38.

FOWLER, ROBERT, an Irish prelate, educated at Cambridge (B.A. 1747; M.A. 1751; D.D. 1764). He was appointed bishop of Killaloe and Kilfenora; afterwards archbishop of Dublin; and died 10 Oct., 1801.

FWOWER, THOMAS, M.D., a physician of York, author of some medical treatises, was born 22 Jan., 1736; and died 22 July, 1801.

FOX, CHARLES JAMES, second son of Henry first Lord Holland, was born 13 Jan., 1748. He received his education at Eton, where he distinguished himself by his classical exercises. From that seminary he removed to Hertford College, Oxford, after which he went on his travels, and in 1768 was returned to parliament for Midhurst. In 1770 he was appointed a commissioner of the Admiralty, which place he resigned 1772, and soon afterwards obtained a seat at the Treasury board. Some differences arising between him and Lord North, he was dismissed in 1774, and from that time took a leading part in the opposition. In 1780 he was elected for Westminster, which city he continued, with but a slight interruption, to represent till his death. When the Rockingham party came into power, Mr. Fox was appointed secretary of state for foreign affairs. On the dissolution of this administration by the death of the chief, a coalition was formed between Mr. Fox and Lord North, who, with their respective adherents, came again into office, till the introduction of the India Bill occasioned their final dismissal (1784). In 1788 Mr. Fox went abroad with the lady whom he acknowledged as his wife; but while in Italy he was recalled in consequence of the king's illness. On this great occasion he maintained that the prince of Wales had the right to assume the regency; which was opposed by Mr. Pitt, who was supported by parliament and the nation. The next remarkable event in the public life of Mr. Fox was the part he took in regard to the French Revolution. That change he hailed as a blessing, while Burke denounced it as a curse; and this difference of sentiment produced a schism in the party, which was never repaired. On the death of Pitt (1806), Fox came again into office, as secretary of state; but within a few months he followed his great rival to the grave. He died of a dropsy 13 Sept., 1806, and his remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. His 'History of the early part of the reign of James II.' was published in 1808; and his 'Speeches in the House of Commons' appeared in 6 vols. 8vo. 1815.

FOX, EDWARD, an English prelate, born at Dursley, Gloucestershire, and educated at Eton. Thence he proceeded to King's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected provost 1528. Cardinal Wolsey took him into his service; and in 1528 he was sent to Rome to promote the divorce of Henry VIII. He was afterwards employed in several embassies in France and Germany; and in 1535 made bishop of Hereford. Died 8 May, 1538. He was a friend to the Reformation, and wrote 'De vera differentia Regiæ Potestatis et Ecclesiasticæ;' &c.—Athen. Cantab.

FOX, FRANCIS, was educated at Oxford, and became vicar of St. Mary's, Reading, where he died 1738. He published 'The New Testament explained;' 'The duty of Public Worship proved;' and a sermon on moral obligations, which led to a controversy between the author and the Rev. Joseph Slide.

FOX, GEORGE, father of the Quakers, was born at Drayton, Leicestershire, 1624. He was apprenticed to a grazier, who employed him in keeping sheep—a situation very favourable to a mind naturally enthusiastic. After experiencing much trouble, he resolved to forsake all forms of religion, and attend to the teaching of the Spirit. He next felt himself called upon to propagate his opinions, and accordingly commenced preacher at Manchester, insisting on the necessity of receiving Christ in the heart, and of avoiding all ceremonies in religion. At Derby, his adherents were called 'Quakers,' on account of the trembling accent used in their exhortations, and perhaps from the vehemence of their gestures. About 1669 Fox married Margaret, the widow of Judge Fell, one of his converts in Lancashire, after which he went to America, and on his return visited the Continent. He lived to see his society in a flourishing condition, and died 13 Jan., 1690-1. His journals and tracts were printed in folio, 1706.

FOX, HENRY, Lord Holland. See HOLLAND.

FOX, JOHN, a divine, was born at Boston, Lincolnshire, 1517, and brought up at Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he removed to a fellowship in Magdalen College; but it becoming known that he had imbibed the reformed doctrines, he was expelled in 1545. He now went to reside with Sir Thomas Lucy, of Warwickshire, as tutor to his children; and while there he married the daughter of a citizen of Coventry. When his pupils were grown up, he became tutor to the children of the unfortunate earl of Surrey; but in the reign of Mary he found it expedient to leave the kingdom and settle at Basle, where he maintained his family by correcting the press for Oporinus, the printer. It was here that he laid the plan of his Acts and Monuments; preparatory to which he published, in 1554, a volume entitled 'Commentarii Rerum in Ecclesia gestarum.' On the accession of Elizabeth he returned home, and was kindly received by the duke of Norfolk, who took him into his house, and gave him a pension. In 1563 he obtained a prebend in the church of Salisbury; and he might have had higher preferment, if his scruples in regard to the ceremonies had not hindered his promotion. But though Fox was a nonconformist, he was a very moderate one, and on that account was ill-treated by the Puritans, who went so far as to get his son ejected from his fellowship in Magdalen College. He was, however, restored by the command of the Queen, who used to call the martyrologist 'Father Fox.' He died 18 April, 1587, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Cripplegate. He wrote some Latin plays, tables of grammar, and religious tracts; but his fame rests upon his great work, the 'Acts and Monuments of the Church,' commonly called 'Fox's Book of Martyrs,' printed first in 1563, in one vol. folio, and afterwards in 3 vols. The last edition appeared in 1843-9, 8 vols. 8vo. Dr. Maitland and other writers have shown that Fox's work abounds in falsehoods and wilful misrepresentations.

FOX, Captain LUKE, of Kingston-upon-Hull, an English navigator, who in 1631 made an unsuccessful attempt to discover a passage to the north-west of America. On his return he published an account of his voyage, entitled 'The North-west Fox, or Fox from the north-west Passage,' 4to., Lond., 1635.

FOX, RICHARD, an English bishop, born at Ropesley, Lincolnshire. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, whence he removed to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, and next to Paris, where he gained the friendship of Dr. Morton, bishop of Ely, who recommended him to the earl of Richmond, afterwards Henry VII. On the accession of that monarch, he was made privy councillor, and in Feb., 1486-7, bishop of Exeter. He was also sent on several embassies; and in Feb., 1491-2, was removed to the bishopric of Bath and Wells; from whence in 1494 he was translated to Durham; and finally in 1501 to Winchester, where he died 14 Sept., 1528. He was a liberal prelate, as appears by his foundation of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; his additions to Winchester Cathedral; and his two schools at Taunton and Grantham. He translated into English for the use of the nuns of his diocese the Rule of St. Benedict, Lond., 1516, folio.—Athen. Cantab.

FOX, Sir STEPHEN, a statesman, born at Farley, Wiltshire, 1627. At an early age he entered into the service of the earl of Northumberland, and next into that of Lord Percy; after which he became attached to the fortunes of the exiled king, whose family affairs he conducted with great prudence. At the Restoration he was made clerk of the green cloth, ay-master of the forces, and knighted. He continued in public employment during that reign; but in the next he was dismissed. After the Revolution he was restored, but lost the favour of William by opposing the bill for a standing army. In the reign of Queen Anne, however, he was replaced, and her successor also courted his service. Died 1716. Sir Stephen married twice, the second time when he was near eighty; and had issue by both wives. He built a new church at Farley, founded several almshouses, and was the first projector of Chelsea College as a military asylum.

FOX, WILLIAM JOHNSON, the son of a small farmer, was born at Uggheshall Farm, near Wrentham, Suffolk, 1786, and educated at Homerton College. He afterwards became a Unitarian preacher, but eventually took a position independent of all sectarian denominations, and preached for many years at the South Street Chapel, Finsbury, whither he attracted large congregations by his oddities. He also took an active part in politics, always supporting the Liberals. He was one of the first to join the Anti-Corn Law League; and his speeches, full of sarcasm and invective, and by no means free from profanity, were beloved by his admirers to have had great weight in the settlement of the question. In 1847 he was elected M.P. for Oldham, and, with the exception of short intervals, continued to represent that borough till 1862, when failing health compelled him to retire from parliament. He died in London 3 June, 1864. Mr. Fox, besides performing his ministerial duties, was much occupied with the press. At one time he was editor of 'The True Sun;' at another, of the 'Monthly Repository;' and the 'Westminster Review' numbered him amongst its earliest contributors. He also published a number of sermons, lectures, and other works.

FOX MORZILLO, SEBASTIAN, author of a commentary on Cicero's 'Topica' and other able works, was born at Seville 1528; and died 1560.

chief work is 'Il Seminario de Governi di Stato, e di Guerra.'

FRADELLE, H. M. J. B., a painter of London, died 14 March, 1865, aged 87.

FRAGONARD, HONORÉ, a French painter, born at Grasse 1732; died at Paris 1807.

FRAGUIER, CLAUDE FRANÇOIS, a French Jesuit, who wrote numerous dissertations in the memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions; Latin poems, &c. Born 29 Aug., 1666; died 31 May, 1728.

FRAMERY, NICOLAS ÉTIENNE, a French musician and dramatist, born at Rouen 25 March, 1745; died 26 Nov., 1810.

FRANCES, ST., of Rome, was born in that city 1384, being the daughter of Paul Bussa and Jacobella de' Roffredeschi. She became the wife of Lorenzo Pontiano, a rich nobleman, and while carefully discharging all her duties to her husband and children, she gave up every moment she could spare to practices of piety. It is related of this saint that an archangel was assigned to her as a visible guardian throughout her life. She herself gave the following description of her supernatural protector: 'His stature is that of a child of about nine years old; his aspect full of sweetness and majesty; his eyes generally turned towards heaven; words cannot describe the divine purity of that gaze. His brow is always serene; his glances kindle in the soul the flame of ardent devotion. When I look upon him I understand the glory of the angelic nature, and the degraded condition of our own. He wears a long shining robe, and over it a tunic, either as white as the lilies of the field, or of the colour of a red rose, or of the hue of the sky when it is most deeply blue. When he walks by my side his feet are never soiled by the mud of the streets or the dust of the road.' St. Frances founded the community of oblates of Tor di Specchi, of which, after the death of her husband, she became superioress. She died 9 March, 1440, and was canonized by Paul V. in 1608. A Life of St. Frances, by Lady Georgiana Fullerton, was published at London, 12mo., 1855, with an introductory essay by J. M. Capes, on the miraculous life of the saints.

FRANCESCA, PIETRO DELLA, a painter, commonly called Francesco dal Borgo a San Sepolcro, was born at Borgo, in Umbria, about 1408, and died about 1496.

FRANCHESCHINI, MARK ANTHONY, a painter of Bologna, born 1648; died 24 Dec., 1728.

FRANCHI, JOSEPH, an Italian sculptor, born at Tarare 1730; died at Milan 11 Feb., 1806.

FRANCIA, FRANCESCO, or Francesco Raibolini, an eminent painter, born about 1450 at Bologna, where he died after 1523.

FRANCIA, DR. JOSE GASPARD RODRIGUEZ DE, dictator of Paraguay, was born at Asuncion 1756, and died 5 Nov., 1837.

FRANCIS I., king of France, was born 1494, being son of Charles of Orleans. He ascended the throne 1515; and died 31 March, 1547.

FRANCIS II., king of France, was born 1543; succeeded his father, Henry II., 1559; died 5 Dec., 1560.

FRANCIS of Lorraine, was born 1708; elected emperor of Germany 1745; died 18 Aug., 1765.

FRANCIS II., born 1768, succeeded his father Leopold II. as emperor of Germany 1792. This title, however, he renounced 1806, when he took the title of emperor of Austria, under the name of Francis I. Died 2 March, 1835.

FRANCIS DE SALES.

FRANCIS of France, duke of Alençon, brother of King Francis II., was crowned duke of Brabant and earl of Flanders at Ghent 1582; and died 10 Feb., 1584.

FRANCIS OF ASSISI (ST.), founder of the order of Priars Minors, was born at Assisi, in Umbria, 1182. After spending his early years in commercial pursuits, he gave up his property, and making profession of evangelical poverty had soon so large a number of disciples that he determined to form them into a religious order, and did so about 1209, establishing several monasteries in Italy, Spain, and France. After holding a general chapter at Rome he went into Egypt, and on his return to Europe continued to found monasteries, to convert the people by his sermons, and to edify them by his virtues. St. Francis resigned his office of general to Peter de Catania, and retired to one of the highest of the Appennine Mountains, where he is said to have seen a crucified seraphim all on fire, who imprinted 'stigmata' on his body, representing the wounds of our Saviour on the cross; from which circumstance he received the name of 'seraphic,' which has been continued to his whole order. He died at Assisi 4 Oct., 1226. He was only a deacon, his humility having prevented him from being ordained priest. Pope Gregory IX. canonized him 1230. The Franciscan order has produced several popes, and a great number of cardinals, bishops, and other persons eminent for learning and virtue.

FRANCIS BORGIA (ST.), duke of Gandia and viceroy of Catalonia, was born 1510. He resolved to renounce the world after the death of his wife, Eleanor de Castro, by whom he had a numerous family. Accordingly he entered among the Jesuits 1548, and was elected their third general 1565. St. Francis rendered the most important services to his society and to Pope Pius V. He died at Rome 30 Sept., 1572, after having several times refused the cardinalate and other ecclesiastical dignities. He left several works, which were translated from Spanish into Latin by Alphonsus Deza, S.J.

FRANCIS A JESU-MARIA, a learned Carmelite of the Reform of St. Teresa, was a native of Burgos. He taught divinity at Salamanca with reputation, and was detinator-general of his order. Died 1677. His principal work is 'Cursus Theologiæ Moralis Salamanticensis.'

FRANCIS OF PAULA (ST.), founder of the order of Minims, was born at Paulo, in Calabria, 1416; and died in France 2 April, 1507. His institution was more rigorous in discipline than even that of St. Francis of Assisi.

FRANCIS DE SALES (ST.), was born at the castle of Sales, in the diocese of Geneva, 21 Aug., 1567, being descended from one of the most ancient and noble families of Savoy. Claude de Granier, bishop of Geneva, sent him as missionary into the valleys of his diocese to convert the Zwinglians and Calvinists, which he did in great numbers. The bishop chose him afterwards for his coadjutor. Religious affairs then called him to France, where he was universally esteemed. On his return to Savoy, 1602, he found that Bishop Granier had died a few days previously. St. Francis then undertook the reformation of his diocese, where piety and virtue soon flourished through his zeal. He restored regularity in the monasteries, and in 1610 instituted the Order of the Visitation, which was confirmed by Paul V. 1618, and of which the baroness de Chantal, whom he had converted at Dijon, was the founder. He also established a congregation of hermits in Chablais, restored ecclesiastical discipline to its ancient vigour, and converted numerous heretics to the faith. In 1618 he again visited Paris, with the cardinal de Savoy, to conclude a marriage between the prince of Piedmont and Christina of France, second daughter of Henry IV. Returning to Annecy, he continued to visit the sick, relieve those in want, instruct the people, and discharge all the duties of a holy bishop. He died at Lyons 28 Dec., 1622, leaving several religious works, the best known of which are his 'Introduction to a Devout Life,' 'Philotheus, or Treatise on the Love of God,' and 'Spiritual Letters.' He was canonized 1665.

FRANCIS DE VICTORIA, an eminent divine of the Dominican order, was a native of Navarre, and became professor at Salamanca, where he died 14 Aug., 1549.

FRANCIS XAVIER (St.), surnamed 'The Apostle of the Indies,' was born 7 April, 1506, in the castle of Xavier, in Navarre. He was admitted master of arts at Paris, and taught philosophy in the college of Beauvais, with the intention of entering the society of the Sorbonne; but having formed an acquaintance with St. Ignatius Loyola, he renounced all establishments and became one of his first disciples. St. Francis Xavier then went to Italy, where he attended the sick at the hospital of incurables at Venice, and was ordained priest. Some time after John III., king of Portugal, having applied to St. Ignatius for some missionaries to preach the gospel in the East Indies, St. Francis was chosen for that purpose, who, embarking at Lisbon 7 April, 1541, arrived at Goa 6 May, 1542. He established Christianity not only at Goa, but on the coast of Comorin, at Malacca, in the Molucca Islands, and Japan; converted a prodigious number of barbarians, and died 2 Dec., 1552, on an island within sight of China, where he had a great desire to propagate the faith. He was canonized 1622. St. Francis Xavier left five books of Epistles; a Catechism; and some other small works.

FRANCIS, ALBAN, a Benedictine monk, who was recommended by James II. to the university of Cambridge by a letter dated 7 Feb., 1686-7, the import whereof was that they would admit him M.A. without the usual oaths. This request being refused by Dr. John Peachel, vice chancellor of the university, the king was very much displeased, and gave them to understand that it was in his power to dispense with such kinds of ceremonies. Francis, however, was not admitted.—Dodd; Cooper's Annals of Cambridge.

FRANCIS, LUKE, a painter, born at Mechlin 1574; died 1643. He is styled The Old, to distinguish him from his son of the same names, who was born at Mechlin about 1606, and died 1654.

FRANCIS, PHILIP, D.D., a poet, was the son of the dean of Lismore, in Ireland, and educated in Dublin. After taking orders he settled at Esher, Surrey, where he kept a school, and for some time had Gibbon under his care. Francis distinguished himself by his translation of Horace, which was followed by a version of Demosthenes. He also wrote two tragedies, 'Eugenia' and 'Constantia.' By the interest of Lord Holland he obtained the chaplainship of Chelsea Hospital and the rectory of Barrow, Suffolk. Died 5 March, 1773.

FRANCIS, SIR PHILIP, son of the preceding, was born in Ireland 1740. He was educated at St. Paul's School; after which he obtained a place in the secretary of state's office. In 1760 he went in the suite of the English ambassador to Lisbon; but in 1763 he was a clerk in the war office; and in 1773 he went out to India as a member of the council of Bengal, where he fought a duel with Mr. Hastings, and was wounded. He returned to England in 1781, and in the next parliament was elected member for Yarmouth in the Isle of Wight. The impeachment of Mr. Hastings followed, and in that concern his old antagonist had a principal share, though he was not made one of the managers. He became, however, an active member of the opposition. When his friends came into power he was made knight of the Bath. He died 22 Dec., 1818. He published several political pamphlets and speeches. Many critics, including Lord Macaulay, maintain that Sir Philip was the writer of the famous 'Junius' letters. On this point the reader may consult the interesting 'Memoir of Sir P. Francis, K.C.B., with Correspondence and Journals. Commenced by the late Joseph Parkes, Esq., completed and edited by H. Merivale,' Lond., 1867.

FRANCISCUS A SANCTA CLARA. See DAVENPORT.

FRANCIUS, PETER, a Greek and Latin poet, born 1645, at Amsterdam, where he became professor of history and rhetoric, and died 19 Aug., 1704.

FRANCK, RICHARD, a native of Cambridge, served in the Parliament army, in which he seems to have attained the rank of captain. At or soon after the Restoration he appears to have gone to America. He wrote 'A Philosophical Treatise of the Original and Production of Things. Writ in America in a Time of Solitude,' and 'Northern Memoirs, calculated for the meridian of Scotland,' Lond., 1694. A new edition of the latter work, with preface and notes by Sir Walter Scott, appeared at Edinburgh, 1821.

FRANCK VON FRANCKENAU, GEORGE, a German physician and writer on medicine and botany, was born at Naumburg 1643, and died at Copenhagen 16 June, 1704.

FRANCKE, AUGUSTUS HERMAN, a divine, born at Lubeck 1663. He became professor of the Oriental languages, and afterwards of divinity at Halle, where he founded an orphan house, for the maintenance of deserted children. He also carried into effect a mission for propagating the Gospel in Malabar. Died 8 June, 1727. He published some Latin works on divinity.

FRANCKENSTEIN, CHRISTIAN, GODFREY, an advocate of Leipsic, born 1661; died 26 Aug., 1717. He wrote a Continuation of Puffendorf's Introduction to History; Life of Christina, Queen of Sweden; History of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries. His son, James Augustus (b. 1689; d. 10 May, 1733) wrote 'De Collatione honorum;' 'De Junibus Judæorum singularibus in Germania.'

FRANCKLIN, THOMAS, D.D., was born in London 1721, and educated at Westminster School. Thence he proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became fellow. In 1750 he was chosen Greek professor. In 1757 he was presented to the livings of Ware and Thundridge, Hertfordshire, and in 1767 made chaplain to the king. He was presented to the living of Brasted, Surrey, about 1776; and died 15 March, 1784. Dr. Franck-lin published translations of Phalaris's Epistles; Cicero's Nature of the Gods; Sophocles; and Lucian. His other works are a Dissertation of ancient Tragedy; a volume of Sermons; the tragedy of the Earl of Warwick, taken without acknowledgment from La Harpe; a Letter concerning Lectureships; Ode on the Institution of the Royal Academy. He had also a share in the Critical Review, and was concerned with Smollett in a translation of Voltaire's works.

FRANCKS, or FRANCKEN, FRANCIS, called Old Francks, a Flemish painter, who died 3 Oct., 1616, aged 72. His son Francis, called Young Francks, was born 1580, and died 1642.

FRANCO, BATTISTA, a painter and engraver, born at Udine about 1498; died at Venice 1561.

FRANCO, NICHOLAS, a licentious Italian poet, was born about 1505, and executed at Rome 1569.

FRANÇOIS, LAURENT, a French priest, author of some useful works in defence of Christianity, was born a Nov., 1698, and died 24 Feb., 1782.

FRANÇOIS DE NEUFCHATEAU, NICHOLAS, a French statesman and voluminous writer, born 17 April, 1750; died 10 Jan., 1828.

FRANCOWITZ, MATTHIAS. See FLACIUS.

FRANCUCCI, INNOCENT, an Italian painter, often called Innocent da Imola, from the place of his birth, which took place about 1480. He died about 1550.

FRANK, JOHN PETER, a German physician, professor at Vienna, was born 19 March, 1745; and died 24 April, 1821. He wrote 'Système de Police Medicale,' &c.

FRANKLAND, THOMAS, was born in Lancashire 1633, and educated at Oxford. After taking orders he became a member of the College of Physicians, by virtue of a forged diploma. He wrote 'Annals of King James and King Charles I.,' and died 1690.

FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN, an American philosopher and statesman, born at Boston, New England, 6 Jan., 1706. He was well educated under his father, who was a fallow-chandler and soap-boiler, and after being engaged in the business, he was bound to his father's elder brother, a printer. Eager after knowledge, he read attentively in the night the works which he had printed in the day, and from Xenophon he derived that energetic ardour which at last raised him to fame and distinction. A difference with his uncle removed him from New York to Philadelphia, where he was noticed by the governor, Keith, and encouraged to set up business for himself. With this view he came to London; but soon discovered that the promises of his patron were the unmeaning professions of polished life, and, after working as a journeyman printer, he, in 1726, returned to Philadelphia. He began business, and published a periodical paper, which was read with avidity. In 1730 he married a widow, whom he had courted before her first marriage, and the next year he began the public library of Philadelphia, which was enriched by the valuable contributions of the Penn family, of Collinson, and others. His Poor Richard's Almanack appeared in 1732, and so pleased the public, on account of the valuable maxims of prudence and economy which it contained, that no fewer than 10,000 copies were sold in one year. He was, in 1736, made clerk to the general assembly in Pennsylvania, and the next year postmaster at Philadelphia. In 1738 he formed an association for preserving the houses of Philadelphia from fire; and in the war of 1744 he ably promoted some popular measures for the defence of the province. In 1747 he addressed an account of his discoveries on electricity to his friend Collinson, and explained the Aurora Borealis, and the laws of thunder and lightning, and not only recommended the propriety of guarding buildings against the effects of storms, by means of conductors, but showed that the lightning from the clouds is the same as the electric fire. Distinguished as a philosopher, he was equally so as a statesman. By his advice the Militia Bill was passed, and he was, in consequence, appointed colonel of the Philadelphia district. On his appearance in England, in 1757, as agent for Pennsylvania, he was received with respect by the public men, and was honoured with a seat in the Royal Society, and the degree of doctor of laws at St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Oxford. He returned home in 1762, and two years after he again visited England. The spirit which now began to appear in America roused the attention of the government, and Franklin, as a man of knowledge, was called to the bar of the Commons, and examined with respect to the Stamp Act. His conduct on this occasion was firm and manly, and his answers clear. He returned, in 1775, to America, and was elected one of the members of Congress, and he displayed the most active zeal and proposed the strongest measures for full emancipation from the mother-country. He next completed the negotiations of America with France, and as the resources of his country were low, he embarked with a cargo of tobacco, which he sold at Nantes, to defray his expenses. He was received with great distinction by the French; the people admired the singularity of his dress and the simplicity of his republican manners; the poets, and Voltaire particularly, paid respect to his merits; and the government, by signing a treaty of offensive and defensive alliance with him, declared war with England. When the independence of America was acknowledged, Franklin, who had continued at Paris, signed the treaty of peace in 1783, and advanced the interests of his country by forming new connections with Prussia and Sweden. He returned to America in 1785, and was received as a venerable father; he was made governor of Pennsylvania, and he applied the strong powers of his mind to heal the differences in the province by wise laws and conciliatory regulations. This great man died 17 April, 1790, and his countrymen ordered, on the occasion, a public mourning for two months. The epitaph which he composed for himself is well known. His discoveries in electricity, and his services in the emancipation of his country, were depicted by the pen of Turgot in this bold line, placed under his portrait:—

Eripuit cœlo fulmen, sceptrumque tyrannis.

Franklin wrote an amusing Autobiography, which has been frequently printed. His 'Complete Works in Philosophy, Politics, and Morals,' were published at London, 3 vols. 8vo., 1800, and again 1811.

FRANKLIN, ELEANOR ANNE, was the daughter of William Porden, an architect, and was born in London 1795. In 1815 she published a poem entitled 'The Veils, or the Triumph of Constancy.' Her next work was an Ode on the Coronation of George IV., which was followed by an heroic poem, entitled 'Cœur de Lion, or the 'Third Crusade,' 1822. In the following year she married Captain (afterwards Sir) John Franklin, R.N., one of the officers engaged in the overland northern expedition. The day after the departure of her husband she died of consumption, 22 Feb., 1825. See the next article.

FRANKLIN, SIR JOHN, an English admiral and arctic explorer, born at Spilshy, Lincolnshire, 16 April, 1766. At the age of fourteen he became a midshipman in the royal navy, and served at the battle of Copenhagen, 1801. In the ensuing summer he joined the 'Investigator,' which was commanded by his cousin, Captain Flinders, and was commissioned by the English government to explore the coasts of Australia. In 1818, the British government having fitted out an expedition to attempt the passage to India by crossing the Polar Sea to the north of Spitzbergen, Franklin was appointed to the command of the 'Trent,' one of the two vessels of the expedition—the other, named the 'Dorothæa,' being commanded by Captain Buchan. After passing lat. 80°, the 'Dorothæa' received so much damage from the ice that her immediate return to England was decided on. At this juncture Franklin begged to be permitted to continue the voyage with the 'Trent' alone, but his commander, Captain Buchan, would not consent, and the two vessels returned to England together. Franklin's conduct on this occasion brought him prominently into notice, and gave him a high reputation as a bold and thorough seaman, and a competent surveyor and scientific observer. In 1819, on the recommendation of the Lords of the Admiralty, he was appointed to the command of an expedition to travel overland from Hudson's Bay to the Arctic Ocean, for the purpose of exploring the coast of America eastward from the Coppermine River. In the course of this expedition he and his companions walked 5,560 miles, and endured many hardships, of which he has left an account in the thrilling narrative of his adventures. He returned to England in 1822; and in August, 1823, married Eleanor Porden (see the preceding article). In 1825 he was appointed to the command of another overland expedition to the Arctic Ocean. When the day of his departure arrived his wife was lying at the point of death. She, however, insisted that he should not delay his voyage on her account, and gave him as a parting gift a silk flag, which she requested him to hoist when he reached the Polar Sea. She died the day after he left England. Captain Franklin returned home by way of New York, arriving at Liverpool 24 Sept., 1827. In the following year he published an account of his second expedition; and married his second wife, Jane Griffin. In 1829 he was knighted, and received the degree of D.C.L. from the university of Oxford, and the gold medal of the Geographical Society of Paris. He next served in the Mediterranean, and in 1836 was made governor of Van Diemen's Land, in which office he continued till 1843. In 1845 Sir John was appointed to the command of a new expedition to discover the north-west passage. It consisted of the ships 'Erebus' and 'Terror,' which were furnished and fitted out in the strongest and most complete manner, and manned by picked crews, amounting in all, officers and men, to 134 persons. They sailed from Sheerness 26 May, 1845, and the expedition was last seen by a whaler, in Baffin's Bay, on 26 July in that year. Franklin's orders were to return in 1847; and in 1848, no tidings of the expedition having reached this country, the anxiety of the public as to his fate led to the fitting out of several expeditions in search of him. The last expedition was sent out in 1857 under the command of Captain (now Sir Leopold) McClintock, who discovered on the north-west shore of King William Land a record announcing that the 'Erebus' and 'Terror' had been abandoned; that Sir John Franklin died 11 June, 1847; and that out of the 134 persons originally composing the expedition, the survivors, amounting to 105 officers and men, proposed to make their way to the American continent by the Fish River. There can be no doubt, however, that these also perished. Such was the fate of Sir John Franklin, to whom belongs the honour of being the first discoverer of a north-west passage leading from Lancaster Sound to Dease's Strait, which strait had been previously discovered, and through which a passage for ships exists to Behring's Straits.

FRANSHAM, JOHN, was born at Norwich 1730, and after receiving an ordinary education, including the rudiments of Latin, was apprenticed to a cooper, whom he left at the expiration of two years. He now studied mathematics, and became clerk to an attorney, in which situation he did not remain long, but took to rambling about the country, and at Newcastle enlisted for a soldier. Being considered unfit for the service he was discharged, and returned to Norwich, where he acted as amanuensis to Mr. Bourne, a dissenting minister, and occasionally gave instructions in mathematics. He now renounced the Christian religion to profess paganism, and wrote a number of pieces in support of his favourite notions. After this he wandered again, and lived for some years in London, where he subsisted by teaching. But in 1772 he revisited his native place, and died there 1810. He is said to have been a skilful instructor, but his habits savoured of insanity. He left a great number of MSS. on various subjects.

FRANTZIUS, WOLFGANG, a German Lutheran divine, professor of his faculty at Witttemberg, was born 1564, and died 1628.

FRASER, ALEXANDER, a painter, born at Edinburgh 1786; died at Wood Green, Hornsey, 15 Feb., 1865.

FRASER, JOHN, B.D., a Scotch divine of the Roman communion, was abbat of Noyon, or Compiègne, in France, and in 1596 was elected rector of the university of Paris, where he died 19 April, 1606. He was author of several philosophical treatises, and of 'An Offer to Subscribers to the Ministers of Scotland's Religion, if they can prove themselves to have the True Kirk,' 1604; 'Epistles to the Ministers of Great Britain, against Subscription to their Confession of Faith,' 1605.

FRASER, SIMON, Lord Lovat. See LOVAT.

FRASSEN, CLAUDE, a French Observant friar and theological writer, born 1620; died at Paris 26 Feb., 1711.

FRAUNCE, ABRAHAM, a poet, was a native of Shropshire, and probably received his education at Shrewsbury School. He was sent by Sir Philip Sidney to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship, and proceeded to the degree of M.A. Removing to Gray's Inn, he was in due course called to the bar, and practised in the court of the marches of Wales. He was living in 1590. Among his works, which consist chiefly of poems in English hexameters, are, 'The Lamentations of Amintas for the death of Phyllis,' 1587; 'The Arcadian Rhetorick,' 1588; 'The Countesse of Pembrokes Emanuel,' 1591; 'The Countess of Pembrokes Yvychurch,' 1591.—Athen. Cantab.

FRÄUNHÖFER, JOSEPH, a celebrated optician, born at Straubing 1787; died at Munich 7 June, 1826.

FRÆART, ROLAND, sieur de Chambray, an architect, died at Paris 1676. His 'Parallel of ancient Architecture with the modern' was translated into English by Evelyn, 1664.

FRÆGARIÜS, a French chronicler, flourished in the seventh century.

FRÆDERICK (Str.), bishop of Utrecht, suffered martyrdom 838.

FRÆDERICK I., surnamed Barbarossa, emperor of Germany, was born 1121; crowned 1152; died 10 June, 1190.

FRÆDERICK II., grandson of the preceding, and son of Henry VI., was born 1194; elected emperor 1210; died 13 Dec., 1250.

FRÆDERICK (III.), son of Albert I., was chosen emperor 1314 by some of the electors, but the majority elected Louis of Bavaria. Frederick died 1330.

FRÆDERICK III., The Pacific, was born 1415; ascended the throne 1440; died 19 Aug., 1493.

FRÆDERICK I., king of Denmark, succeeded his nephew Christian II. 1523; and died 1533.

FRÆDERICK II. was born 1534; succeeded his father Christian III. 1558; died 1588.

FRÆDERICK III. succeeded his father Christian IV. 1648; and died 1670, aged 61.

FRÆDERICK IV. ascended the throne of Denmark on the death of Christian V. 1699; and died 1730, aged 59.

FRÆDERICK V., grandson of the preceding, was born 1723; came to the throne 1746; and died 1766.

FRÆDERICK VI., son of Christian VII., was born 1763; became regent 1784; ascended the throne 1809; died 1839.

FRÆDERICK VII. was born 1808; succeeded Christian VIII. 1848; died 15 Nov., 1863.

FRÆDERICK V., elector palatine of the Rhine, was born 1596, and married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James I. of England, 1613. In 1619 he was elected, by the Protestant states of Bohemia, their king; but Frederick II., emperor of Germany, after the fatal battle of Prague (1620), dispossessed him not only of Bohemia, but of the Palatinate. Died 29 Nov., 1632.

FRÆDERICK-WILLIAM, elector of Brandenburg, called the Great Elector, and king of Prussia, was born 1620; succeeded his father 1640; died 1688.

FRÆDERICK I., king of Prussia, was born 1657, being son of Frederick-William, elector of Brandenburg. He was crowned 1701; and died 1713.

FRÆDERICK-WILLIAM I., son of the above, was born 1688; commenced his reign 1713; died 1740.

FRÆDERICK II., king of Prussia, commonly called The Great, was the son of Frederick-William I., and born 24 Jan., 1712. In 1733 he was married to the princess of Brunswick Wolfenbuttle. In 1740 he succeeded to the throne, and by taking advantage of the defenceless state of Maria Theresa, queen of Hungary, he added Silesia to his dominions. In 1744 he again took up arms against the empress-queen, and the treaty of Dresden, which was concluded in 1745, left him in possession of an extended territory. In 1755 he entered into an alliance with England, which produced the seven years' war, when Frederick exhibited all the powers of his character as a skillful general. In 1757 he had to contend with Russia, Austria, Saxony, Sweden, and France; notwithstanding which, and though his enemies made themselves masters of his capital, he extricated himself from his difficulties, and by the battle of Torgau repaired all his losses. In 1763 peace was restored; after which Frederick led a philosophic life, with the exception of his share in dismembering Poland in 1773. He died 17 Aug., 1786; and was succeeded by his nephew. Frederick the Great was an author as well as a warrior, but his writings are all in French, which language he preferred to German. Though he was a tolerable poet, as he evinced in his didactic piece on the art of war, he excelled in history. His works have been published in 19 vols. 8vo. He had fine parts, and well understood the art of governing a great kingdom; but his principles were Machiavelian, and he was a confirmed infidel.

FRÆDERICK-WILLIAM II., nephew of the preceding, was born 1744; succeeded to the throne 1786; died 1797.

FRÆDERICK-WILLIAM III., son of the above, was born 1770; commenced to reign 1797; died 1840.

FRÆDERICK-WILLIAM IV., king of Prussia, was born 1795; succeeded his father Frederick-William III. 1840; died 1 Jan., 1861.

FRÆDERICK, elector of Saxony, surnamed the Wise, was born 1463, and died 1526. He was the friend and patron of Luther.

FRÆDERICK-AUGUSTUS I., king of Poland, was born 1670. He succeeded his father John George III. as elector of Saxony 1694; was chosen king of Poland 1697; and died 1733. His son, FRÆDERICK-AUGUSTUS II., was born 1696; commenced his reign 1734; died 1763.

FRÆDERICK-AUGUSTUS, first king of Saxony, was born 1750; succeeded his father, the Elector Frederick-Christian, 1703; received the title of king 1806; died 1827.

FRÆDERICK LOUIS, prince of Wales, the eldest son of George II., king of England, was born at Hanover 1707; created prince of Wales 1728; died 20 March, 1751. He was the father of King George III.

FRÆDERICK (Colonel), son of the unfortunate Theodore, commonly called king of Corsica, of whose misfortunes and imprudence he partook. He was bred to the military profession, and obtained the rank of colonel, with the cross of the order of merit from the duke of Wurtemberg, for whom he acted as agent in England. Being greatly reduced in circumstances, he shot himself in the portal of Westminster Abbey, 1796. He wrote 'Memoirs of Corsica,' 1708; 'Description of Corsica, with an Account of its Union to the Crown of Great Britain,' 1795.

FRÆDRO, MAXIMILIAN, a Polish historian, died 1676.

FRÆEBAIRN, ROBERT, a landscape painter, was a native of London, and died 1808, aged 42.

FRÆEKE, WILLIAM, son of Thomas Freeke, of Hannington, near Highworth, Wiltshire, was born in or about 1663, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. He next went to the bar, but instead of practising the law, devoted himself to theological studies, and published 'Essays towards an Union between Divinity and Morality, Reason or Natural Religion and Revelation; calculated to the Meridian of our present Differences in Church and State,' 1687; 'A Dialogue by way of question and answer concerning the Deity,' printed 1693, with another work by him, entitled, 'A brief and clear Confutation of the Doctrine of the Trinity.' The two works were ordered by the House of Commons to be burnt, and the Court of Queen's Bench fined the author £500 for writing them. He died 1746.

FREELING, Sir FRANCIS, Bart., F.S.A., for thirty-eight years secretary to the Post Office, was born at Bristol 25 Aug., 1764, and died 10 July, 1836.

FREGOSO, or FULGOSO, BATTISTA, a doge of Venice, who was elected 1478, and deposed 1483. He wrote on Memorable Actions; Learned Women; Life of Pope Martin V., &c.

FREHER, MARQUARD, a lawyer, born at Augsburg 26 July, 1565. After studying civil law in France under Cujacius, he became professor at Heidelberg, and was engaged in important affairs by the Elector Frederick IV. Died 13 May, 1614. He wrote forty-nine books on law, criticism, and history.

FREHER, PAUL, a physician of Nuremberg, well known as the compiler of the Theatrum Virorum Clarorum; was born 1611, and died 27 April, 1682.

FREIGIUS, JOHN THOMAS, a learned German, born at Friburg 1543. He taught law at his native place, and afterwards at Basle, and was appointed rector of the new college of Altorf 1575. His principal works are, Questiones Geometricæ et Stereometricæ; Logica consultorum; Ciceronis Orationes perpetuis notis logicis. Died 16 Jan., 1583.

FREIND, JOHN, M.D., was born at Croton, Northamptonshire, 1675. He was educated at Westminster School, and elected from thence to Christ Church, Oxford, where he revised the Delphin edition of Ovid's Metamorphoses, which involved him in a dispute with Bentley. He proceeded to his master's degree in 1701, and to that of bachelor in physic the same year. In 1704 he was chosen professor of chemistry, and the next year went to Spain, as physician in the army of the earl of Peterborough, whose conduct he vindicated in 1707, at which time he was created doctor of physic by diploma. In 1709 he published his lectures; in 1711 he was elected a member of the Royal Society; and in 1716 admitted a fellow of the College of Physicians. He now settled in London, where he published 'A Commentary on Fevers,' which being attacked by Woodward, produced a controversy respecting the treatment of the smallpox. In 1722 he was elected into parliament for Launceston, and as a senator distinguished himself by his eloquence; but his speeches in favour of Atterbury gave such offence, that he was sent to the Tower, where he remained three months, and was then admitted to bail. Dr. Mead generously refusing to attend Sir Robert Walpole till Dr. Freind was set at liberty. In 1725 our author published the first part of his 'History of Physic,' which he completed the year following. He was now made physician to the prince of Wales, as he afterwards was to Queen Caroline; but did not long enjoy that favour, dying of a fever 26 July, 1728. His Latin works were published by Dr. Wigan in 1 vol. fol., 1733, and reprinted at Paris in 1735, 4to.

FREND.

FREIND, ROBERT, D.D., elder brother of the preceding, was born 1607. He was educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford. In 1710 he became rector of Witney, Oxfordshire, and in 1711 head master of Westminster School. In 1729 he obtained a canonry of Windsor, which in 1731 he exchanged for a prebendal stall of Westminster; and in 1733 he resigned his mastership, as he did also his prebend in 1744, in favour of his son. Died 9 Aug., 1754.

FREINSHEMIUS, JOHN, was born at Ulm, in Swabia, 1608. He was professor of eloquence at Upsala; then librarian and historiographer to Christina of Sweden; and, lastly, professor at Heidelberg, where he died 31 Aug., 1660. He acquired a great reputation by his edition of Florus, his notes upon Tacitus, and his supplements to Quintus Curtius and Livy.

FREIRE DE ANDRADA, HYACINTH, a Portuguese writer in prose and verse, born 1597; died 1657.

FREITAG, JOHN, a German physician and medical writer, professor at Groningen, was born 1581, and died 8 Feb., 1641.

FREMINET, MARTIN, a French painter, born at Paris 1567; died 1619.

FREMOT, JANE FRANCES. See JANE FRANCES (Str.).

FREMONT D'ABLANCOURT, NICOLAS, a Protestant writer, born at Paris about 1625. On the revocation of the edict of Nantes he went to Holland, and became historiographer to the prince of Orange. Died Nov., 1693. He wrote some works on classical subjects, and Memoirs on the History of Portugal.

FRENCH, JOHN, M.D., was born at Broughton, Oxfordshire, 1616. He took his degrees at Oxford, and in the civil wars was physician to the parliamentary forces. He died at Boulogne in Oct. or Nov., 1657. His works are, 'The Art of Distillation;' 'The Yorkshire Spaw, or a Treatise of four famous Medicinal Wells.'

FRENCH, PETER, an Irish Catholic divine, was a native of Galway, where he died 1693. For upwards of thirty years he was a successful missionary among the Indians of Mexico. He compiled a catechism, or exposition of the Christian faith, in the Mexican tongue, and converted multitudes from idolatry.

FREND, WILLIAM, was born at Canterbury 22 Nov., 1757, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. Subsequently he removed to Jesus College, of which he was elected fellow and tutor. Having taken orders, he obtained in 1783 the living of Madingley, near Cambridge, where he regularly officiated till 1787, when a change took place in his religious opinions, which induced him to resign his incumbency. His motives for taking this step are explained by himself in the preface to the first edition of 'Thoughts on Subscription to Religious Tests,' and in a 'Letter to the Rev. H. W. Coulthurst, B.D.' He was now deprived of the office of college tutor, and for a time travelled on the continent. When he returned to Cambridge he buried himself in the obscurity of college life, deeply engaged in the study of Hebrew. In 1793 he wrote his pamphlet entitled 'Peace and Union recommended to the associated bodies of Republicans and Anti-republicans.' For publishing this he was removed or banished from the university, though not expelled, as is generally stated, for he continued to be a member of the university till his death. This sentence of banishment led to protracted legal proceedings, but Mr. Frend was unable to procure its reversal. After leaving Cambridge he fixed his residence in the metropolis, where he died 21 Feb., 1841. He published a large number of works in addition to those mentioned above. Among them are Principles of Algebra; Principles of Taxation; Animadversions on Bishop Pretzman's Elements of Christianity; The Effect of Paper Money on the Price of Provisions; Essay on Patriotism; and Evening Amusements.

FRENICLE DE BESSY, BERNARD, a French mathematician, born 1605; died 1675. His brother, Nicolas Frenicle, was a poet, and died dean of the court of the mint 1601. He wrote theatrical pieces and some on religious subjects.

FRERE, JOHN HOOKHAM, was born in Norfolk 21 May, 1766, and educated at Eton, where he was associated with Canning and others in producing the 'Microcosm.' For some time he was a fellow of Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1792; M.A. 1795), and in 1796 was returned to Parliament for the borough of West Looe. In 1799 he succeeded Canning as under-secretary for foreign affairs, and subsequently he was despatched as ambassador to Portugal, Spain, and Prussia. He died at Malta 7 Jan., 1846. Mr. Frere was an admirable scholar and a person of great and varied talents. His literary productions, however, were fugitive, and are to be sought for chiefly in the works of his friends, as they have not been published in a collected form.

FRERE, JOSEPH, an English Benedictine monk, prior of the convent of St. Gregory at Douay, died 10 Jan. 1694, aged 96.

FRERES, THEODORE, a Dutch painter, born 1643; died 1693.

FRÈRET, NICOLAS, a French infidel writer, perpetual secretary of the academy of inscriptions, was born at Paris 15 Feb., 1688, and died 8 March, 1749. His chief works are The Letters of Thrasylbus to Leucippus; and an Examination of the Apologists for Christianity.

FRÉRON, ELIE CATHERINE, a French critic and miscellaneous writer, born at Quimper in Brittany 1719; died at Paris 10 March, 1776. He attacked the works of Voltaire with great asperity, and was replied to with no less bitterness by that author, who could never hear the name of Freron without throwing himself into a passion. His son, Louis Stanislas Fréron (b. 1757; d. 1802), took an active part in the French revolution, and was author of several works.

FRESNAYE, JEAN VAUQUELIN DE LA, a French poet, born 1534; died 1606.

FRESNEL, JEAN, a French physician and natural philosopher, born 10 May, 1788; died 14 July, 1827.

FRESNOY, DU. See DUFRESNOY.

FREWEN, ACCEPTED, an English prelate, eldest son of John Frewen, rector of Northiam, Sussex, is said to have been a native of Kent, though it is not improbable that he was born at Northiam, where he was baptized in 1588. After a preliminary education in the free-school at Canterbury, he removed to Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he was elected fellow 1612. In 1622 he attended the court of Prince Charles, while he was in Spain courting the infanta, and in 1625 he was made chaplain in ordinary to the said prince, then king. He was elected president of Magdalen College 1626. In 1631 he obtained the deanery of Gloucester, and in 1643 the bishopric of Lichfield and Coventry. At the Restoration he was translated to York, and died at Bishophorpe, 26 March, 1664.

FREWEN, JOHN, a learned divine, rector of Northiam, Sussex, died 1627. He wrote 'Fruitful Instructions and necessary Doctrine, to edify in the Fear of God,' 12mo., Lond., 1587; 'Fruitful Instructions for the general Cause of Reformation against the Slander of the Pope and League,' 4to, Lond., 1589; 'Certain choice Grounds and Principles of our Christian Religion, and their several Expositions, by Way of Questions and Answers,' 8vo., Lond., 1621.

FREY, JOHN JAMES, an engraver, born at Lucerne, in Switzerland, 1681; died at Rome 1752.

FREYCINET, LOUIS CLAUDE DESAULNES DE, a celebrated navigator and scientific explorer, born in Dauphiné 7 Aug., 1779; died 18 Aug., 1842.

FREYTAG, FREDERICK GOTTHELF, a burgo-master of Nuremberg, born 1723; died 12 Feb., 1776. He wrote 'Analecta Litteraria;' 'Adparatus Litterarius;' 'Orator, et rhetor, græcor. quib. statuae honor. causâ positae fuerunt Decas;' and 'Specimen Historiæ Litterariæ.'

FRÉZIER, AMADÉE FRANÇOIS, a French military engineer, born 1682; died 26 Oct., 1773.

FREZZI, FEDERIGO, bishop of Foligno in Italy, died 1416. He wrote a long poem entitled 'Quadrirégio,' wherein he describes the four reigns of Love, Satan, Vice, and Virtue.

FRISCH, JOHN LEONARD, a native of Sultz-bach, was founder of the silk manufactures at Brandenburg, and the first encourager of the cultivation of the mulberry tree in Prussia. He was a Lutheran minister, and belonged to the Berlin academy of sciences. His works include a German and Latin dictionary; and a Description of German Insects. Born 19 March, 1666; died 21 March, 1723.

FRISCHE, JACQUES, a learned Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, died at Paris 15 May, 1693. In conjunction with Nicolas le Nourri, he published an edition of St. Ambrose. He also began a new edition of St. Gregory of Nazianzen, but did not live to finish it.

FRISCHLIN, NICODEMUS, was born at Balingen (Wurtemberg) 22 Sept., 1547, and at the age of twenty obtained a professorship at Tübingen. He wrote so vehemently in praise of a country life, and on the corrupt manners of the great, that he was obliged to quit his native country. At length he was imprisoned at Aurach, and in endeavouring to escape he fell from the window and was killed 29 Nov., 1590, leaving behind him the character of a persecuted man, whose abilities were strongly exhibited in his tragedies, comedies, elegies, and elegant translations from Greek and Latin authors.

FRISI, PAUL, professor of mathematics at Milan, his native city, published some excellent works on mathematics, electricity, hydraulics, and mechanics. Born 13 April, 1728; died 22 Nov., 1784.

FRISIUS, HENRY, professor of languages at Zurich, wrote 'De sede animæ rationalis;' 'De Communionis Sancturum' &c.; and died 1718.

FRISIUS, JOHN, a Swiss divine, born in the canton of Zurich 1505. He became president of the college at Zurich, where he introduced the study of the oriental languages. Died 1565. He translated several books of the Scriptures into German, and published a Latin and German dictionary.

FRISIUS, JOHN JAMES, son of the above, became professor of philosophy and theology in various Swiss and German universities. He published the best edition of Gesner's 'Bibliotheca' and some learned works of his own. Died 1611, aged about 65.

FRITH, JOHN, one of the Reformers, was born at Westerham, Kent, 1503, and educated at King's College, Cambridge, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was converted to Protestantism by Tyndal, and brought to the stake in Smithfield, 4 July, 1533. His collected works, edited by John Fox, were printed with those of Tyndal and Barnes, Lond., 1573, folio.—Athen. Cantab.

FRIZON, PIERRE, doctor of the Sorbonne and grand master of the college of Navarre at Paris, died 1651. His principal work is 'Gallia Purpurata,' 1620, containing lives of the French cardinals.

PROBENIUS, JOHN, a German printer, who set up a press at Basle 1491, and was greatly esteemed by Erasmus, whose works he printed. Died 1527.

FROBISHER, SIR MARTIN, a celebrated navigator, born near Doncaster, Yorkshire. He was the first Englishman who attempted to discover a north-west passage to China. After fruitless endeavours in his favourite scheme for fifteen years, he obtained the interest of Dudley, earl of Warwick, and with three barques sailed from Deptford, 8 June, 1576, in sight of Queen Elizabeth, who, waving her hand, bade him farewell. After visiting Greenland, and penetrating to a strait to which he gave his own name, he returned to Harwich 2 Oct., the same year. As he brought with him a black and heavy stone, which was discovered to contain gold, a new expedition was quickly planned. With a ship of the royal navy and two barques he sailed from Harwich 31 May, 1577; and after passing by islands of ice on the coast of Friesland, he discovered and gave name to various bays and isles; and after loading his ships with some of the golden ore of which he was in pursuit, he came back to England at the end of September. The queen received him with great condescension. The ore he had brought proved valuable; and another expedition was prepared. The third expedition, consisting of fifteen ships, sailed from Harwich 31 May, and returned in October. Afterwards Frobisher served in the West Indies; and in 1588 he commanded the 'Triumph,' one of the ships sent out against the Spanish Armada. For his services he received the honour of knighthood on board his own ship; and he afterwards commanded a fleet on the Spanish coast. In 1594 he supported Henry IV. against the leaguers and Spaniards, but in an attack against Crovzon, near Brest, he was unfortunately wounded by a ball in the hip 7 Nov., 1594, and dying soon afterwards was buried at Plymouth.

PROELICH, ERASMUS, a native of Gratz, in Styria, entered the Society of Jesus, and became professor of belles lettres and mathematics at Vienna, where he followed the study of medallic history, on which he wrote several works. Born 1700; died 7 July, 1758.

FROISSART, JEAN, a French historian, born at Valenciennes about 1337. He travelled through England, Scotland, Italy, and other countries, and was for some time in favour with Philippa, queen of Edward III. He died canon and treasurer of Chimay about 1410. His 'Chronicle' is a valuable work, containing an account of the events in England, France, Spain, &c., from 1326 to 1400. It was continued to 1466 by Monstrelet. There are several editions of Froissart's work in English.

FROMAGE, PIERRE, a French Jesuit, born 12 May, 1678. He resided for many years in Egypt and Syria, as superior of the missions; and died in the latter country 10 Dec., 1740. He established a printing-press in the monastery of St. John, near Antura, from whence he issued a number of pious pieces in the Arabic language.

FRONTEAU, JEAN, a French priest, born at Angers 1614; died 1662. He published several able works, particularly the 'Kalendarium Romanum,' and a vindication of the claim of Thomas à Kempis to the authorship of 'The Imitation of Christ.'

FRONTINUS, SEXTUS JULIUS, a Roman writer, was consul A.D. 74, and died in the office of aurg A.D. 106. He wrote 'Stratagematica,' in 4 books; and a treatise on the 'Aquaducts of Rome,' of which the author had the superintendence under the Emperor Nerva.

FRONTON DU DUC. See DUC.

FROUDE, RICHARD HURRELL, a divine of the Anglo-Catholic school, was the eldest son of Robert H. Froude, archdeacon of Totnes, and was born at the parsonage house of Dartington, Devonshire, 25 March, 1803. After a suitable training at Ottery Free School, and at Eton, he removed to Oriel College, Oxford, of which society he became fellow and tutor (B.A. 1824; M.A. 1827). Though in orders he obtained no preferment in the church. His health was always bad, and it was in vain that he sought to improve it by travelling on the continent, and making a voyage to the West Indies. Returning to England he died 28 Feb., 1836, in the same house in which he was born. His 'Remains,' published in 4 vols. 1838-9, by Dr. Newman and Mr. J. Keble, created a profound sensation among the members of the Established Church, and gave a great impulse to the movement which led to the submission of Dr. Newman and other eminent divines to the Church of Rome. Mr. Froude was author of 'Tracts for the Times,' Nos. 9 and 63, and of some poetry published in the 'Apostolic Lyre,' 1836.

FROWDE, PHILIP, a poet, educated at Oxford, where he became an intimate friend of Addison's. He was author of some elegant Latin poems in the 'Musæ Anglicanæ;' and of two tragedies, 'The Fall of Saguntum,' and 'Philotas.' Died 19 Dec., 1738.

FRUGONI, CHARLES INNOCENT, an Italian poet, born at Genoa 1692; died 20 Dec., 1768.

FRUMENTIUS (ST.), the apostle of Ethiopia, propagated Christianity in that country in the fourth century.

FRY, EDMUND, M.D., was a quaker, and originally bred to the medical profession, but became known to the public as an eminent and learned typefounder. His foundry was in Type Street, Chiswell Street. Died 22 Dec., 1835. Mr. Fry was the author of 'Pantographia: containing copies of all the known alphabets in the world,' 1799. There is a fine copy on vellum in the Cambridge University Library.

FRY, ELIZABETH, an English philanthropist, born at Bramerton, near Norwich, 21 May, 1780, being the daughter of John Gurney, a wealthy merchant and banker of Norwich. The family belonged to the Society of Friends, but did not adhere strictly to the usages of the sect. At the age of seventeen Elizabeth visited London, in the height of the season, attended theatres, and the Opera, made acquaintance with Mrs. Inchbald, Amelia Opie, and Dr. Wolcot (Peter Pindar), taking especial delight, as she herself says, in 'scandal and grand company.' In 1798 an American quaker, William Savery, who was travelling in England on a religious mission, preached in the Friends' meeting-house at Norwich. The assembly consisted of about 200 persons, among whom were Elizabeth and her six sisters; and Savery was astonished and pained to find himself in presence of the gayest company of quakers he had ever seen. As he lamented in his discourse the departure of the ancient plainness and gravity of the sect, Elizabeth was profoundly affected, and subsequent discourses and conversations with the preacher contributed to her change to the strict piety and usages of a 'plain Friend.' In 1800 she was married to Joseph Fry, whose family belonged to the strict section of the quakers, and she afterwards resided in London, till in 1809 she removed to Plasket House, Essex. In 1810 she became a minister among the quakers, and in 1813 made her first visit to Newgate prison, where she witnessed nearly 300 women crowded together in rags and filth, without bedding, and suffering all the privations and neglect of the old prison system. Her liveliest sympathies were awakened, and she supplied them with clothing, and did all in her power to ameliorate their condition. After several other visits, in 1817 she succeeded in establishing a school and manufactory within the prison, organized a ladies' association for the reformation of the prisoners, and thenceforward devoted all her energies to the promotion of prison reform. Within a few years she personally inspected prisons in many parts of Great Britain, extending the improvements which had been already introduced into Newgate, and instituting committees for visiting female prisoners. Her influence was apparent in most of the gaols, houses of correction, lunatic asylums, and infirmaries of the United Kingdom. From 1837 to 1842 Mrs. Fry made several journeys in France, and in northern and central Europe, visiting prisons, and expounding her plans of improvement to the public authorities. She died at Ramsgate 12 Oct., 1845.

FRYE, THOMAS, a native of Dublin, settled in London, where he acquired eminence as a painter. He engaged in a porcelain manufactory at Bow, but ill-success obliged him to return to his palette. He also attempted mezzotint engraving. His picture of the Prince of Wales, painted for Sadler's Hall, in 1734, was admired. Born 1710; died 2 April, 1762.

FRYTH. See FRITH.

FUCHS, or FUCHSIUS, LEONARD, a physician, anatomist, and botanist, born in Bavaria 1501. He was ennobled by the Emperor Charles V.; and became professor of medicine at Tubingen, where he died 1566. The best known of his works is 'Historia Plantarum,' 1564.

FUESSLI, JOHN GASPARD, of Zurich, was eminent as a painter. He wrote the Lives of the Artists of Switzerland; and died 6 May, 1781, aged 75. See FUSELI.

FUGGER, ULRICH, was born at Augsburg, 1526.

FULLER.

He expended so much money in the purchase of ancient MSS., and getting them printed at the press of Henry Stephens, that his relations had him declared by a court of justice incapable of managing his affairs. Retiring to Heidelberg, he died there 25 June, 1584.

FULBECK, WILLIAM, was born at Lincoln 1560, and educated at Oxford, after which he entered Gray's Inn; though when he died, or what profession he followed, does not appear. He wrote 'Christian Ethics,' 1587; 'Historical Collection of the Factions and Tumults at Rome before Augustus,' 1600; 'A Direction or Preparative to the Study of the Law,' 1600; 'The Pandects of the Law of Nations,' 1602.

FULBERT, bishop of Chartres, eminent for his learning, piety, and zeal for ecclesiastical discipline, died 10 April, 1029. His works were printed in 1608.

FULDA, FREDERICK CHARLES, a Lutheran divine, born at Wimpfen, in Swabia, 1724; died at Einsingen, where he was pastor, 2 Dec., 1788. He was an accomplished philologist, and published several able works on the German language.

FULFORD, FRANCIS, D.D., was educated at Oxford, being for some time a fellow of Exeter College, in that university. He held various appointments in England up to 1850, when he was nominated Anglican bishop of Montreal, and metropolitan of Canada. His death occurred at Montreal 1868.

FULGENTIUS (Str.), bishop of Ruspæ, in Africa, was born about 468, and died 1 Jan., 533. He was a zealous opponent of the Arian heresy, and wrote several excellent works, which were printed at Paris 1684.

FULKE, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, born in London before 1538, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he obtained a fellowship. In 1571 he was presented to the rectory of Great Wharley, Essex, and soon afterwards to that of Dennington, Suffolk. He accompanied the earl of Lincoln on his embassy to France, and in 1578 was chosen master of Pembroke Hall. Died Aug., 1589. Dr. Fulke was highly esteemed by the puritan party, and even amongst them was distinguished by his virulence against the Church of Rome. Among his numerous works are, 'A Defense of the sincere and true Translations of the holie Scriptures into the English tong, against the manifold cavils, frivolous quarrels, and impudent slanders of Gregorie Martin, one of the readers of Popish divinitie in the trayterous Seminarie of Rhemes,' 1583; and an attack on the Rhemes translation of the New Testament.—Athen. Cantab.

FULLER, ANDREW, a Baptist minister, born at Kettering, Northamptonshire, 1754. He received only a common education, and was bred to the weaving business; but being of a serious turn, he applied himself diligently to study, and, without assistance, except what could be obtained from books, he made himself master of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. He was then ordained, and officiated to a congregation at Kettering, till his death, 7 May, 1815. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the college of New Jersey, in America; but he never assumed the title of doctor. He published 'The Calvinistic and Socinian systems examined and compared; Socinianism indefensible; Expository Remarks on the Discipline of the Primitive Churches; The Gospel its own Witness; Memoirs of Samuel Pearce; The Backslider, or an Inquiry into the Nature of Religious Declension; The Gospel worthy of all acceptance; Discourses on the Book of Genesis; Dialogues, Letters, and Essays; Apology for the Christian Missions to India; and Sermons. His works were published in a collected form, with a memoir by Dr. Ryland, 8 vols. 8vo., 1824.

FULLER, ISAAC, an English painter, who died in London 17 July, 1672.

FULLER, NICHOLAS, was born at Southampton 1557, and educated at Oxford. He obtained the living of Allington, Wiltshire; to which were afterwards added a prebend of Salisbury, and the rectory of Bishop's Waltham, Hampshire. Died 1622. He published 'Miscellanea Theologica,' and left some MSS. now preserved in the Bodleian, which show his great skill in Hebrew and in philological learning.

FULLER, SARAH MARGARET, marchioness of Ossoli, was born at Boston, U.S., 1810. She travelled in Europe, and at Rome became the wife of the marquis of Ossoli. On the passage from Rome to New York she was drowned 16 July, 1850. Her best-known works are, 'Woman in the Nineteenth Century,' and 'Papers on Literature and Art.'

FULLER, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Aldwinckle, Northamptonshire, 1608. At the age of twelve he was sent to Queen's College, Cambridge, but he afterwards removed to Sidney College, of which he was elected a fellow. He obtained a prebend at Salisbury, and was afterwards presented to the rectory of Broad Windsor, Dorsetshire. Upon the loss of his wife, about 1641, he removed to London, and was appointed lecturer to the master and brotherhood of the Savoy. In 1642 he preached at Westminster Abbey, and gave such offence by his zealous support of the royal cause that his life was considered in danger. He joined the king at Oxford 1643, but a sermon which he preached there before his royal master appeared as lukewarm as that at Westminster had been interpreted as violent—a proof of the moderation to which he doubtless exhorted all parties. In 1644 he was chaplain to Sir Ralph Hopton, and was left with part of the army at Basing House when it was besieged by Sir William Waller. Fuller animated the garrison to so vigorous a defence of the place, that the parliamentary general was obliged to raise the siege. He then took refuge in Exeter, and continued in that city while it was besieged. At the close of the war he returned to London, and was chosen lecturer at St. Clement's, near Lombard Street, but soon removed to St. Bride's, Fleet Street. In 1648 he was presented to the rectory of Waltham, Essex, which he left in 1658 for that of Cranford, Middlesex. At the Restoration he recovered his prebend, and was appointed chaplain extraordinary to the king. It is probable that he would have risen to a bishopric had not a fever unfortunately carried him off 15 Aug., 1661. His principal works, all of which overflow with wit and humour, are, 'The Church History of Britain,' to which is appended 'The History of the University of Cambridge,' and 'The History of Waltham Abby'; 'History of the Worthies of England'; 'History of the Holy War'; 'The Holy and Profane State'; 'Good Thoughts in Bad Times'; 'Good Thoughts in Worse Times'; 'A Pisgah-Sight of Palestine, and the countries thereof: with the Historie of the Old and

New Testament acted thereon,' 'Abel Redivivus,' a collection of lives of divines.

FULLER, THOMAS, M.D., was born 24 June, 1654. He was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge; after which he settled at Sevenoaks, Kent. He was a great benefactor to that place, and died there 17 Sept., 1734. In addition to some medical works, Dr. Fuller published, 'Introductio ad Prudentiam: or directions, counsels, and cautions, tending to prudent management of affairs of common life,' 2 vols., 1727; and 'Gnomologia; a Collection of adages and proverbs.'

FULMAN, WILLIAM, an antiquary, born at Penshurst, Kent, Nov., 1632, and educated at the school of Magdalen College, Oxford, from whence he removed to Corpus Christi, but was ejected by the parliamentary visitors. At the Restoration he was created master of arts, obtained a fellowship, and the rectory of Meysay Hampton, Gloucestershire, where he died 28 June, 1688. He wrote, 'Academia: Oxoniensis Notitia;' Appendix to the Life of Edward Stanton, D.D.; Corrections and Observations on Dr. Burnet's History of the Reformation, and published in the second volume of that work. He also edited the works of Charles I., and those of Dr. Hammond, who was his patron. Many of his MS. collections are in the library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

FULTON, ROBERT, a native of Pennsylvania, born 1765. At an early age he evinced a genius for mechanics and painting, and came to England to improve himself in the latter. His attention, however, was soon turned to mechanics, and he became a civil engineer. From that time his discoveries and inventions were numerous and important. That which will continue his name to posterity, and cause him to be numbered among the benefactors of mankind, is his successful application of steam to the propelling of boats. The discovery was made and the first experiment tried at Paris, 1803, after which he returned to America and exhibited a steamboat in successful operation on the River Hudson. Died 24 Feb., 1815.

FUMANI, ADAM, an Italian ecclesiastic and Latin poet, was a native of Verona, and died 1587. He was one of the secretaries of the Council of Trent.

FUNCK, JOHN, a Lutheran divine, born at Werdien, near Nuremberg, 1518. He married the daughter of Osiander, and was a great advocate for his opinions. He became a minister in Prussia, and almoner to Albert, the duke of that country; but was beheaded, as a disturber of the public peace, 28 Oct., 1566. He published a work on chronology and some theological treatises.

FUNCK, JOHN NICHOLAS, a classical critic, professor and librarian at Kintlen, in Westphalia, was born at Marburg 29 March, 1603, and died 26 Dec., 1777. His nephew, of the same name (b. 1715; died 2 April, 1758), was professor of eloquence at Marburg, and author of many dissertations in Latin.

FURETIERE, ANTOINE, a lawyer, born at Paris 1620. He afterwards took orders, and was expelled from the French Academy 1685, on the accusation that he had composed a 'Dictionary of the French Tongue,' which, being borrowed from the same materials, was intended to supersede theirs. This work was published two years after his death, which occurred 14 May, 1688.

FURIETTI, JOSEPH ALEXANDER, an Italian cardinal, born at Bergamo 1685; died 14 Jan., 1704.

FURIUS.

He edited the works of Gasparino Barziza, and the poems of Fontana; but his principal work is a history of the art of painting in mosaic.

FURIUS, FREDERICK, a Spanish historian, surnamed Ceriolanus, was born about 1510, and died 1592.

FURLONG, THOMAS, a poet of considerable merit, was born at Scarawalsh, in the county of Wexford, Ireland, 1794. He was apprenticed to a trader in Dublin, and Mr. Jamieson, an eminent distiller of that city, gave him a confidential situation in his establishment. Here he remained till his death, 25 July, 1827. Mr. Furlong was author of 'The Misanthrope, a Poem,' London, 1819, 1821; 'The Plagues of Ireland,' a satirical work, 1824; 'Doom of Derenzey,' London, 1829; and translations of Carolan's Remains, and other ancient Irish poems and songs in Hardiman's 'Irish Minstrelsy.' He was also a contributor to the New Monthly Magazine; the New Irish Magazine; the Morning Register, a Catholic paper published in Dublin; and Robins's London and Dublin Magazine.

FURNEAUX, PHILIP, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Totnes, Devonshire, Dec., 1726. He was assistant to a nonconformist congregation in Southwark, afterwards a lecturer at Salters' Hall, and in 1753 succeeded Lowman at Clapham. Died 23 Nov., 1783. He wrote an Essay on Toleration; and Letters to Judge Blackstone on his exposition of the Toleration Act.

FURSTEMBERG, FERDINAND DE, was born in Westphalia 21 Oct., 1626. Pope Alexander VII. made him bishop of Paderborn; and in 1678 he obtained the see of Munster, with the title of vicar-apostolic of all the northern countries. Died 20 June, 1683. He published 'Monumenta Paderbornensia,' and Latin poems.

FURSTENEAU, JOHN HERMANN, a German medical writer; professor at Rintlen; was born 1688, and died 7 April, 1756.

FUSELI, or FUESSLI, HENRY, was the second son of John Gaspar Fuesli, and born at Zurich 1741. He came to England at an early age, and devoted himself to painting. His performances are numerous, and all of them display, in many points, the mind of a master. For twenty years he worthily filled the offices of professor of painting and keeper of the Royal Academy. Died 16 April, 1825. He published 'Lectures on Painting,' 1801; and an enlarged edition of Pilkington's Dictionary of Painters, 1805.

FUST, or FAUST, JOHN, a goldsmith of Mentz, who is said by some to have been the inventor of printing by means of movable metal types. Others, however, are of opinion that he only assisted Gutenberg and his son-in-law, Schoeffer, in bringing the discovery to perfection. He was living at Paris 1466, and is supposed to have died soon afterwards.

FUZELIER, LOUIS, a French dramatist, born about 1672; died 19 Sept., 1752.

FYT, or FEYDT, JOHN, a painter of Antwerp, born 1625; died 1671.

G.

GAAL, BARENT, a Dutch painter, born at Haarlem 1650; died 1705.

GABBIANI, ANTHONY DOMINIC, a Florentine painter, born 1652; died 1726.

GAGER.

GABRIEL, JACQUES, an architect and engineer of Paris, died 1686. His son Jacques (b. 1667; d. 1742) was eminent in the same line; as was also his grandson, Jacques Ange (b. about 1710; d. 1782).

GABRIEL SIONITA. See SIONITA.
GABRIELLI, CATTARINA, a celebrated Italian singer, born at Rome 12 Nov., 1730; died April, 1796.

GABRINI. See RIENZI.
GACON, FRANÇOIS, a French satirical poet, born 1667; died 15 Nov., 1725.

GADBURY, JOHN, an astrologer, born at Wheatley, Oxfordshire, 1627. After serving his time to a tailor, he became a pupil of Lilly, under whom he profited so well as to set up for himself in the trade of casting nativities. He was a Catholic, and fell into trouble at the time of Oates's plot on account of some remarks in his almanacs. In 1674 he published one for Jamaica, and Lilly says that he perished by shipwreck on a voyage to that island; but it seems certain that he outlived his master, with whom he quarrelled. Partridge published, in 1693, a book entitled 'The Black Life of John Gadbury.'

GADDESSEN, JOHN OF, a physician in the fourteenth century. He was an ecclesiastic, as most of his profession were in those times. His reputation stood very high, and he was the first Englishman who enjoyed the post of royal physician, which office was conferred on him by Edward II. He wrote a book called 'Rosa Anglica.'

GAERTNER, JOSEPH, a German botanist, born at Calu, in Wurtemberg, 12 March, 1732; died 13 July, 1791.

GAFFAREL, JACQUES, an ecclesiastic, born at Mannes, in Provence, about 1601; became librarian to Cardinal Richelieu; died 1681. He published several works, one of which, entitled 'Unheard-of Curiosities,' was translated into English.

GAPPURIUS, FRANCHINUS, an Italian writer on music, born at Lodi 1451; died at Padua 1523.

GAGE, THOMAS, was born at Haling, Surrey. He entered the Dominican order in Spain; after which he was sent as a missionary to the Philippine Islands, but instead of going thither, he settled in Mexico, from whence he came to England in 1637, after an absence of twenty-four years, during which he had forgotten his native language. He now turned Protestant, and obtained the living of Ely, in Kent, where he died before the Restoration. He published his recantation sermon in 1642, and a piece entitled 'A Duel fought between a Jesuit and a Dominican,' &c.; but he is best known by his 'Survey of the West Indies,' 1655. His enmity to the Church of Rome was so bitter that he became noted as a priest-catcher, and gave evidence against several gentlemen of that character whom he persecuted to death. He even appeared as a witness at the trial and condemnation of Mr. Wright, a Jesuit, chaplain to his brother, Sir Henry Gage.

GAGER, WILLIAM, D.C.L., was educated at Westminster School, from whence, in 1574, he removed to Christ Church, Oxford. Afterwards he became vicar-general to the bishop of Ely. He had a controversy with Dr. Rainolds about the lawfulness of stage plays, and another with one Heale, about the right of husbands to chastise their wives. Gager also wrote 'Meleager,' a tragedy;

'Rivales,' a comedy; and 'Ulysses redux,' a tragedy.

GAGNIER, JOHN, an orientalist, born in Paris about 1670. He took orders in the Roman Church, but being desirous to marry, he came over to England, where, on his declaring himself a Protestant, he obtained a favourable reception, and the degree of M.A. from Cambridge and Oxford. He settled in the latter university; and died 2 March, 1740. His principal works are an edition of Joseph Ben Gorion's 'History of the Jews,' with a Latin translation; an edition of Abulfeda's 'Life of Mohammed,' in Arabic and Latin; and 'Vindiciæ Kircherianæ, seu defensio Concordantiarum Græcarum Conradi Kircheri, adv. Abr. Trommii animadversiones.'

GAGNY, or GAIGNY, JEAN DE, in Latin Gagnæus, a French divine, was almoner to Francis I. and chancellor of the university of Paris, where he died 1549. He wrote a commentary on the New Testament, and Latin poems.

GAGUIN, ROBERT, a French chronicler, born about 1425; died 22 July, 1501. He was keeper of the royal library at Paris, and general of the Trinitarian order.

GAILLARD, GABRIEL HENRI, a French historian and miscellaneous writer, was born at Ostel, in Picardy, 26 March, 1726, and died 13 Feb., 1806. His principal works are 'Rhetorique Française;' 'Poétique Française;' 'Histoire de Marie de Bourgogne;' 'Histoire de François I.;' 'Histoire de Charlemagne;' 'Histoire de la rivalité de la France et de l'Angleterre,' 11 vols.; 'Histoire de la rivalité de la France et de l'Espagne;' and the 'Dictionnaire Historique,' in the 'Encyclopédie Méthodique.'

GAINSBOROUGH, THOMAS, an English painter, born at Sudbury, Suffolk, 1727. He was entirely self-taught, and used to entertain himself by drawing landscapes from nature in the woods of his native county. Here he was accustomed to pass his mornings in sketching an antiquated tree, a marshy brook, a few cattle, a shepherd and his flock, or other casual objects. From Sudbury he came to London, where he commenced portrait-painting, in which line he also acquired great eminence. His greatest excellence, however, was as a landscape painter, in which he united the brilliancy of Claude with the simplicity of Rysdael. This great artist was no less distinguished by his virtues than his talents: he impoverished himself to assist the needy. Died 2 Aug., 1788.

GAISFORD, THOMAS, D.D., dean of Christ Church, Oxford (1831-55), was born at Iford, Wiltshire, 22 Dec., 1779, and died 2 June, 1855. He was a man of great learning, and published esteemed editions of numerous classical works.

GAIUS, or CAIUS, a celebrated Roman jurist, who was living A.D. 161. He was author of numerous treatises, the principal being 'Libri Institutionum quatuor.' This valuable work, which served as a model for the Institutes of Justinian, was discovered in 1816 in a codex rescriptus, or palimpsest MS. belonging to the library at Verona. As much of it as could be deciphered was published by Göschen at Berlin in 1821. A third edition by Lachmann appeared in 1842.

GALATEO FERRARI, ANTONIO, a native of Galatina, in Otranto, became physician to the king of Naples, and died 12 Nov., 1517, aged 73. He suggested the practicability of a voyage to India, round Africa, before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope. His works are, 'De Situ Elementorum;' 'De Situ Iapygiæ;' Description of Gallipoli; Successi dell' armata Turchescanella città d'Otranto dell' anno, 1480.

GALBA, SERVIUS SULPICIUS, was born B.C. 3; proclaimed Emperor of Rome 68; slain 15 Jan., 69.

GALE, JOHN, a Baptist preacher, born in London 26 May, 1680. He studied at Leyden, where he was created M.A. and doctor of philosophy. He next went to Amsterdam, where he studied under Limborch, and contracted an acquaintance with Le Clerc. On the publication of Wall's History of Infant Baptism, he undertook an answer to it, which raised his reputation very high. He was chosen one of the ministers of the Baptist congregation in Paul's Alley, near Barbican, London; and died Dec., 1721. After his death a collection of his sermons was printed by subscription.

GALE, ROGER, F.R.S., F.S.A., son of Dr. Thomas Gale, hereafter noticed, was born 1672, and educated at St. Paul's School, from whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge. On leaving the university he became a member of parliament; also a commissioner of the stamps, and afterwards of the excise; which last place he lost 1735. He was the first vice-president of the Society of Antiquaries, and died at Scruton, Yorkshire, 25 June, 1744. He published The Itinerary of Antoninus, illustrated with his own and his father's notes; The Knowledge of Medals, translated from the French; Registrum Honoris de Richmond; and various papers in the Philosophical Transactions, Horsley's Britannia Romana, &c.

GALE, SAMUEL, son of Dr. Thomas Gale, and brother of Roger, mentioned above, was born in London 17 Dec., 1682. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and afterwards obtained a situation in the Custom House. He was one of the revivers of the Society of Antiquaries, of which he became treasurer. Died 10 Jan., 1754. He edited 'A History of Winchester Cathedral,' 1715, begun by Henry earl of Clarendon; and a few of his papers on English antiquities are in the 'Archæologia' and the 'Bibl. Top. Brit.'

GALE, THEOPHILUS, a nonconformist, born 1628 at King's Teington, Devonshire, where his father was vicar. He became a commoner of Magdalen College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts, and was elected to a fellowship. On taking orders, according to the independent forms, he was chosen minister at Winchester, but lost that situation and his fellowship at the Restoration for not complying with the terms of subscription. He then became tutor to the sons of Lord Wharton, and went with them to Caen, where he contracted a friendship with Bochart. In 1665 he returned to England, and officiated as assistant to Mr. John Rowe, who had a congregation in Holborn. He also conducted a seminary at Newington, where he died March, 1678. He published 'The True Idea of Jansenism;' 'Theophilus, or a Discourse of the Saints' Amity with God in Christ;' 'The Anatomy of Infidelity;' 'Idea Theologiæ tam contemplatiwæ quam activæ, ad formam S.S. delineata;' 'Philosophia generalis;' 'The Court of the Gentiles,' wherein he attempts to prove that the theology and philosophy of the pagans were derived from the Holy Scriptures.

GALE, THOMAS, an eminent surgeon of London, was born 1507, and died after 1586. He wrote some works on practical surgery, an epitome of Galien, &c.

GALE, THOMAS, D.D., was born at Scruton, Yorkshire, 1636. He was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge, in which university he became regius professor of Greek (1666-72). He was appointed master of St. Paul's School 1672, and collated to a prebend in St. Paul's Cathedral 1676. He was fellow and secretary of the Royal Society, to whose transactions he was a contributor on subjects of antiquity. In 1697 he was promoted to the deanery of York, where he died 8 April, 1702. He published 'Opuscula Mythologica, Ethica, et Physica, Gr. et Lat.:' 'Historia Poeticae Scriptores antiqui, Gr. et Lat.:' 'Rhetores Selecti.:' 'Jamblichus Chalcidensis de Mysteriis.:' 'Psalterium juxta exemplar Alexandrinum.:' an edition of Herodotus; 'Historia Anglicanae Scriptores quinque.:' 'Historia Britannicae, &c., Scriptores quindecim.:' He left many MSS., among which was that of Antoninus's Itinerary, published afterwards by his son Roger, who also printed a volume of his father's sermons.

GALEANO, JOSEPH, a physician of Palermo, who published several medical works, and a collection of the Sicilian poets. Born 1605; died 1675.

GALEN, MATTHEW, a learned Catholic theologian, was chancellor of the university of Douay, where he died 1573.

GALENUS, or GALEN, CLAUDIUS, a very eminent physician, born at Pergamus, in Asia, about 130. Having learned philosophy, he devoted himself to physic, studied under Satyron and Peleops, the two most celebrated physicians of that time, went afterwards to Alexandria to consult with the learned, and from thence, in 169, to Rome, where he composed several works. Leaving this city Galen travelled into Asia, but was soon recalled to Rome by the emperor Marcus Aurelius. He returned to Pergamus on the death of that prince, and is supposed to have died there about the year 200. Galen is justly considered as the greatest physician of antiquity after Hippocrates. The most interesting and important of his works are—'Of Anatomical Manipulations.:' 'On the use of the different parts of the Human Body.:' regarded as his chief-œuvre, and containing a demonstration of divine wisdom and design; 'The Healing Art.:' cited in the middle ages under the title of 'Tegnum.:' 'Microtegnum.:' or 'Microtechnum.:' a work which was adopted in all the schools, familiarity with it being made a prerequisite for admission to practice; and 'Therapeutics.:' called in the middle ages 'Megalotechnum.:'

GALEOTTI, MARZIO, an Italian writer, known chiefly by his collection of the bon-mots of Mathias Corvinus, king of Hungary, to whom he was secretary. He was also famous for his acquisitions in the occult sciences. Born at Narni about 1440; died 1494.

GALERIUS. See MAXIMIANUS.

GALESINI, PETER, an ecclesiastical antiquary, prothonotary-apostolic at Milan, was born at Ancona about 1520; and died about 1590. He was an intimate friend of St. Charles Borromeo.

GALIANI, FERDINAND, an Italian abbé, born in the Abruzzi 2 Dec., 1728; died at Naples 30 Oct., 1787. He was an eminent scholar, and maintained a correspondence with many of the savants of England and France. Among his works are treatises on Money; on the commerce of corn; on the Neapolitan dialect; and a commentary on Horace.

GALILEI, GALILEO, a renowned astronomer, born at Pisa 15 Feb., 1564. His father wished him to apply himself to the study of medicine, but his strong attachment to mathematics prevailed, and so rapid was his progress that in 1589 he was appointed mathematical professor at Pisa. His opposition there to the maxims of Aristotle rendered his situation unpleasant, and in 1592 he removed to Padua. His treatise on 'Mechanics' and his 'Balance.:' or the problem of Archimedes about the crown, made him known as a man of genius. In 1609, while at Venice, he heard of the invention of the telescope by Metius, and immediately applied the powers of his mind to improve that astonishing instrument, by which he penetrated into regions before unknown. He discovered mountains in the moon, and first observed four of the satellites of Jupiter, to which he gave the name of Medicean stars, in honour of his patron, Cosmo II. de' Medici. In 1610 he was re-established at Pisa by the duke, and continuing his astronomical labours, he observed the phases of Venus. His discoveries were, however, too much opposed to the doctrines of Aristotle to escape the censure of the age; and no sooner did he assert, with Copernicus, that the sun, disfigured by spots, remains immovable in the centre of the universe, and that the earth turns round in annual and diurnal motions, than he was summoned (1615) before the inquisition at Rome for disseminating opinions contrary to the Holy Scriptures. The proceedings were soon dropped on Galileo promising not to teach the doctrine of the earth's motion. Despite this promise, however, he published, in 1632, his famous 'Dialogue on the Ptolemaic and Copernican Systems of the Universe.:' in which he betrayed an evident leaning in favour of the system of Copernicus. This led to his being again cited before the inquisition at Rome, where he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and required to pronounce a solemn abjuration of his opinions respecting the motion of the earth. It is said that on rising from his knees after this solemnity he whispered to a friend, 'It moves, for all that.:' Though the discretion of the inquisitors may have been inferior to their zeal, they did not act with cruelty towards Galileo. At first he was confined in the house of one of the superior officers of the tribunal—his friend and pupil. Next he obtained leave to reside in the country near Florence, and later at Florence itself. He became blind at the age of 74; and died 8 Jan., 1642. His works were published at Florence 1843-6, in 20 vols. 8vo. It has been frequently alleged by Protestants that the Church of Rome decided, in Galileo's case, against the earth's motion. This, however, has been generally denied by Catholics, and, as most candid writers now admit, with justice. The reader who wishes to investigate this somewhat knotty point, is referred to an able article in the 'Penny Cyclopædia.:' where the facts and arguments bearing on the controversy are set forth with fairness and accuracy.

GALL, FRANCIS JOSEPH, M.D., the founder of the science of phrenology, was born in Swabia 9 March, 1757, and practised as a physician at Vienna, where he adopted those peculiar opinions which gave celebrity to his name. He and his associate, Spurzheim, subsequently visited several countries, diffusing their doctrines and collecting materials. Dr. Gall eventually settled at Paris, where he died 22 Aug., 1828.

GALL, RICHARD, a Scotch poet, born near Dunbar Dec., 1776; died 10 May, 1801. A selection of his poems, which consist principally of songs in the Scottish dialect, was published in 1819.

GALLAGHER, JAMES, D.D., an Irish Catholic prelate, born in Ulster, and educated first at Paris and afterwards at Rome, in the college De Propagandâ Fide. He was promoted to the Catholic bishopric of Raphoe, and from thence translated to Kildare. He published at Dublin, in 1735, a volume containing Seventeen Sermons in the Irish language. The eighteenth edition of this work, revised by Edward O'Reilly, appeared in 1841.

GALLAND, ANTOINE, an orientalist, born at Rollot, in Picardy, 1646. After studying the oriental languages he went to the East, where he acquired an uncommon knowledge of the manners and doctrines of the Mahomedans. He was a member of the Academy of Inscriptions, and professor of Arabic at the royal college at Paris, where he died 17 Feb., 1715. He published a collection of maxims and bon-mots from oriental writers; a treatise on the origin of coffee; and a translation of 'The Thousand and One Nights,' commonly called 'The Arabian Nights' Entertainments.'

GALLAND, AUGUSTE, a French councillor of state, who wrote Memoirs for the History of France and Navarre; On the ancient Ensigns and Standards of France, &c. Born about 1570; died about 1645.

GALLAUDET, THOMAS HOPKINS, LL.D., an American clergyman, who was born in Philadelphia 10 Dec., 1787, is deserving of notice as being the founder of the first institution in the United States for the instruction of the deaf and dumb. It was established at Hartford, Connecticut, 1817, and upwards of one thousand persons had received their education in it at the time of the benevolent founder's decease, on 9 Sept., 1851.

GALLE, or GALLEUS, SERVATIUS, a Dutch clergyman, author of a treatise on the Sybilline Oracles, &c., was born 1627, and died 1709.

GALLI, CATHARINE RUINI, a vocalist, died at Chelsea, Dec., 1804.

GALLOCHE, LOUIS, a French painter, born 1670; died 1761.

GALLOIS, JEAN, a French ecclesiastic, born at Paris 11 June, 1632. He was well acquainted with ancient and modern languages, and of such universal information that he projected, in conjunction with De Salle, the 'Journal des Savants.' Gallois was patronised by Colbert, whom he instructed in Latin, chiefly in his coach, as he travelled between Versailles and Paris. He became a member of the Academy of Sciences and of the French Academy; also librarian to the king, and Greek professor in the royal college. Died 19 April, 1707.

GALLOIS, JULIEN JEAN CÉSAR LE, a French physiologist, was the son of a farmer, and educated at Caen, where, at the outset of the revolution, he headed his fellow-students as a Federalist, for which he was obliged to fly from Normandy. He afterwards became a pupil in one of the schools of medicine at Paris, and was admitted to his doctor's degree. He distinguished himself by his 'Experiments on the Principle of Life, particularly on that of the Motion of the Heart, and the Seat of this Prin-ple.' Much was expected from his farther observations on this abstruse subject, when he died Feb., 1818.

GALLONIO, ANTHONY, a priest of the Oratory, was a native of Rome, where he died 1665. His chief work is a treatise on the modes of torture inflicted by the pagans on the primitive Christians.

GALLUCCI. See GALLUZZI.

GALLUCCI, JOHN PAUL, an Italian astronomer, who was one of the original members of the academy founded at Venice 1503.

GALLUCCIO, ANGELO, an Italian Jesuit, born 1593, is principally remembered as the author of a History of the wars of the Low Countries from 1593 to 1609. He died at Rome 28 Feb., 1674.

GALLUS, CORNELIUS, a Latin poet, was born in Gaul about B.C. 70. He was appointed prefect of Egypt, and died B.C. 26. His works are lost, the six elegies usually ascribed to him being certainly the production of a later and inferior poet.

GALLUZZI, TARQUINIO, an Italian Jesuit, born 1574, wrote 'Vindicationes Virgilianæ,' in which he asserted the superiority of Virgil over Homer against Madame Dacier. He was rector of the Greek college at Rome, where he died 28 July, 1649.

GALLY, HENRY, D.D., was born at Beckenham, Kent, Aug., 1696, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. After being lecturer of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, he became prebendary of Gloucester, rector of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, and chaplain to the king. Died 7 Aug., 1769. He published 'The Moral Characters of Theophrastus,' from the Greek; 'Considerations upon Claunderine Marriages; two Dissertations against pronouncing Greek according to Accents, &c.'

GALT, JOHN, a biographer and novelist, born at Irvine, Ayrshire, 2 May, 1779. He started in trade in London, but failed; and next went to the bar, though he never practised the law. After travelling on the Continent he settled in London, where he spent the greater part of his life in literary industry as a journalist and writer of books. At one time he was agent to a company for establishing emigrants in Canada, but unfortunately he soon got involved in disputes with the government, the result being that he was superseded in his office. He died at Greenock 11 April, 1830. His works, which are very numerous, include Voyages and Travels; The Life and Administration of Cardinal Wolsey; four tragedies; Letters from the Levant; Life of Benjamin West; Life of Byron; The Majola, a tale; Lawrie Todd, a tale; Southennan, a tale; Annals of the Parish; The Provost: The Entail; Ayrshire Legatees; and his Autobiography.

GALUPPI, BALDESSARO, an Italian musical composer, born near Venice 1703; died Jan., 1785.

GALVANI, LOUIS, was born at Bologna 9 Sept., 1737, and studied anatomy under Professor Galeazzi, whose daughter he married. In 1762 he took his doctor's degree; soon after which he was appointed public lecturer in the university, and reader of anatomy to the institute of Bologna. The origin of the discovery which has immortalized his name was this:—His wife, being in a declining state of health, used a soup made from frogs. Some of these animals, when skinned, were placed accidentally in Galvani's laboratory, where one of the assistants, surprised at the convulsive motions produced in the several nerves of a frog by the electrical machine, repeated the experiment, which led to the discovery of animal electricity, now known by the name of Galvanism. The first publication on this subject was in 1791, with this title, 'Aloysii Galvani de Viribus Electricitatis in Motu Musculari Commentarius.' Besides this work, the author published several papers on curious subjects. Died 5 Dec., 1798.

GAMA, VASCO DE, a Portuguese navigator, was a native of Sines. In 1497 King Emanuel appointed him to command an expedition, destined to sail round the Cape of Good Hope for the East Indies. This he accomplished, and proceeded as far as Calicut; after which he returned to Lishon, where he was created a count, and made admiral of the Persian, Indian, and Arabian seas. In 1502 he sailed again for Calicut, and returned the year following. In 1524 he made a third voyage to India, as viceroy of the Portuguese settlements, and died there 24 Dec., 1525. The poem of Camoens is founded upon Gama's first discovery.

GAMACHES, ETIENNE DE, a French divine and writer, born at Meulan 1672; died at Paris 1756. 'The Elegances of Language reduced to their Principles' is his best work.

GAMBARA, LORENZO, a Latin poet of Italy, died 1586, aged 90. His principal poem is entitled Columbus, or the Discovery of America.

GAMBARA, VERONICA, a learned lady, born at Brescia, 30 Nov., 1485; died 1550. Her Poems and Letters were published in a collected form, 1759.

GAMBIER, JAMES, Lord Gambier, a British admiral, born in the Bahama Islands, 13 Oct., 1750. Early entering the naval service, he obtained in 1778 the rank of post-captain, and, as commander of the frigate 'Raleigh,' was engaged in repelling the French attempt upon Jersey in 1781, and afterwards in the reduction of Charleston, in South Carolina. In 1793 he was appointed to the command of the 'Defence,' of seventy-four guns, under Earl Howe; and in the engagement with the French fleet under Villaret de Joyeuse (1 June, 1793) his ship was the first to break through the enemy's line. Advanced to the rank of rear-admiral 1795, and of vice-admiral 1799, he became third in command of the Channel fleet 1801, and in the following year was entrusted with the government and defence of Newfoundland. In 1807 he commanded the fleet sent to Copenhagen with troops under Lord Cathcart to demand the surrender of the Danish navy. The bombardment of the city continued three days, when Admiral Gambier took possession of nineteen sail of the line, twenty-three frigates and sloops, and twenty-five gun-boats, together with the stores in the arsenal. He was rewarded with the dignity of baron, and with the order of a pension, which he declined. In 1808 he was appointed to the command of the Channel fleet, drew up a code of signals and the general disciplinary instructions for the navy, and in April, 1809, attacked the French squadron in the Aix Roads, and burned five of the ships. Lord Cochrane had charge of the British fire-ships (catamarans), and in consequence of a disagreement between him and Lord Gambier, the latter requested a court-martial, by which he was honourably acquitted. In 1814 he was appointed at the head of the commissioners to conclude a peace with the United States; and the treaty was signed at Ghent on 24 Dec. He afterwards lived in retirement; received the grand cross of the order of the Bath 1815; was made admiral of the fleet on the accession of William IV.; and died at Iver, near Uxbridge, 10 April, 1833.

GAMBOLD, JOHN, was a native of Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire, and received his education at Christ Church, Oxford (M.A. 1734). About 1739 he was presented to the vicarage of Stanton Harcourt, Oxfordshire, which living he quitted to join the Moravians, among whom he was consecrated a bishop in 1754. He died at Haverfordwest 13 Sept., 1771. Mr. Gambold published an edition of the Greek Testament; Maxims and Theological Ideas; Sermons; and a religious poem, in the dramatic form, called Ignatius.

GANDOLPHY, PETER, a Jesuit, born in London 26 July, 1779. After studying at Liege and Stonyhurst he was charged with the mission of Newport, in the Isle of Wight. He was subsequently attached to the Spanish chapel in London, where he laboured with great success, though he unfortunately incurred, by the publication of his 'Liturgy' and his four volumes of sermons 'in defence of the ancient faith,' the displeasure of his ecclesiastical superior, Bishop Poynter, who suspended him, and denounced his works in a pastoral letter, dated London, 24 April, 1817. From this blow Mr. Gandolphy never recovered. He resigned his post as chaplain in Spanish Place the year following, and died 9 July, 1821. Besides the works above mentioned, he wrote a Sermon on the text 'Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's,' 1813; Letter to Dr. Herbert Marsh; Letters to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1817; Vetoism illustrated; A Letter to a noble lord on the conduct of Sir J. Cox Hippisley at Rome; Lessons of Morality and Piety extracted from the Sapiential Books of Holy Scripture, 1822.

GANDON, JAMES, F.S.A., an Irish architect, died at Canon Brook, near Lucan, 1824, aged 82. He was the author of 'Vitruvius Britannicus,' 3 vols. folio.

GANDY, JAMES, a painter, born in Devonshire 1619. He became a pupil of Vandycck, and went to Ireland with the Duke of Ormond, of whom and his friends there are several portraits existing, some of which were sold for originals of Vandycck. Gandy died at Exeter, 1680. His son William was also a painter, and superior to his father in genius; but he led a most dissipated life, and died about 1716.

GANGANELLI. See CLEMENT XIV.

GARAMOND, CLAUDE, an engraver and letter-founder of Paris, died 1601.

GARASSE, FRANÇOIS, a Jesuit, born at Angoulême 1585; died at Poitiers 14 June, 1631. His principal works are Latin Elegies on Henry IV; 'La Doctrine curieuse des beaux esprits de ce temps,' 1623; 'La Somme Theologique des Verités capitales de la Religion Chretienne.'

GARAY, JAMES, a Hungarian poet, born 1812; died 5 Nov., 1853.

GARCILASO DE LA VEGA, a Spanish poet, was born of a noble family at Toledo 1503. He accompanied Charles V. in his military expeditions, and died of a wound which he received in Provence 1536. His works were printed at Naples in 1664. There was another of both his names (b. 1530; d. 1598), who was a native of Peru, of that country he wrote the history, as he also did that of Florida.

GARDEN, ALEXANDER, M.D., F.R.S., a botanist, born in Scotland, Jan. 1730. He studied at Edinburgh, and in 1752 settled at Charleston, in South Carolina, where he acquired a fortune by the practice of physic. He returned to England 1783, and died in London 15 April, 1791. His works consist only of a few detached papers; but his name will be botanically perpetuated by the beautiful and fragrant 'Gardenia,' so named after him by his friend Linnaeus.

GARDEN, FRANCIS, better known by his judicial title of LORD GARDENSTONE, was born at Edinburgh 24 June, 1721. After a liberal education at the university, he was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates; and in 1764 became solicitor to the king, which prepared the way for his advancement to the judicial bench, on which occasion he assumed the title of Lord Gardenstone. He distinguished himself by erecting a town called Laurence Kirk on his estate of Johnston, in the county of Kincardine, which he had the pleasure to see in a most flourishing state under his management. Died 22 July, 1793. He published anonymously 'Miscellanies in Prose and Verse;' and 'Travelling Memorandums,' 2 vols. To the latter work another volume was added after his death.

GARDIN DU MESNIL, JEAN BAPTISTE, professor of rhetoric at Paris, was author of two well-known works, 'Précèptes de rhétorique tirés de Quintilien,' and 'Synonymes latins.' Born 1720; died 1802.

GARDINER, JAMES, a brave and pious colonel in the army of George II. He was born at Carriden, Linlithgowshire, 10 Jan., 1687-8. He was a native of Scotland, and in his youth was very gay and licentious; but the perusal of a religious book entitled 'Heaven taken by Storm,' made him religious, and he was thenceforward distinguished for his piety. He was killed by the rebels at the battle of Preston Pans, within sight of his own house, 21 Sept., 1745.

GARDINER, SIR ROBERT WILLIAM, an English general, born 1781; died 26 June, 1864. He wrote a 'Memoir of Admiral Sir Graham Moore,' and a pamphlet on the National Defences.

GARDINER, STEPHEN, bishop of Winchester, was the son of John Gardiner, clothworker, of Bury St. Edmund's, Suffolk, where he was born about 1495. He was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, of which he became fellow, and where he applied himself with great diligence to the study of classical literature and the laws. He proceeded doctor of the civil law 1520, and doctor of the canon law in the year following. Soon after this he was taken into the service of Wolsey as his secretary. He was also made chaplain and almoner to the king, and in 1525 was elected master of Trinity Hall. Soon after this period he devoted all his energies in favour of the king's divorce from Catharine of Arragon, and in 1527-8 was sent ambassador to Rome on that business. Although unsuccessful in this mission, his conduct gave the king great satisfaction. On his return he obtained the archdeaconry of Norfolk; afterwards that of Leicester; and in 1531 the bishopric of Winchester. He went considerable lengths in complying with Henry's changes, and defended his assumption of the supremacy in a book entitled 'De verâ Obedientiâ.' He was also employed on several embassies; but at the close of this reign he fell under the royal displeasure. In the next he was committed to the Fleet, and subsequently to the Tower, for opposing the Reformation. At the accession of Mary he recovered his liberty and was appointed lord chancellor. He also crowned the queen, with whom he continued in high favour, as prime minister, during the remainder of his life. He died at Whitehall 12 Nov., 1555, filled with remorse at having, in Henry VIII.'s reign, temporarily renounced his allegiance to the Holy See. Bishop Gardiner was a man of great genius and ability; but in consequence of his devotion to the ancient form of religion, he was very odious in his own day and generation to the Protestants, among whom, to this hour, his name is regarded as synonymous with craft, sophistry, and cruel intolerance. He wrote several works, which are enumerated in 'Athenæ Cantabrigienses;' and to his pen has been attributed 'The Necessary Doctrine and Erudition of a Christian Man,' published 1543 in the name of Henry VIII.

GARENCIÈRES, THEOPHILUS DE, a French physician, who came to London, where he died in extreme poverty about 1680. He wrote 'A Treatise on the Tincture of Coral; Angliæ Flagellum, seu Tabes Anglica numeris omnibus absoluta; and an English translation of the Prognostications of Nostradamus.

GARNGEOT, RENÉ JACQUES CROISSANT DE, a French writer on surgery, born 1688; died 12 Dec., 1759.

GARISSOLES, ANTOINE, a Protestant divine of Montauban, who wrote some theological treatises; an epic poem, in Latin, on Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden; and another on the Protestant Cantons of Switzerland. Born 1587; died 1650.

GARLAND, JOHN, is stated by some writers to have been a native of Devonshire, while others say he was a Norman. He lived about 1080, and wrote—'A poem on the Contempt of the World;' Floretus, or Liber Floreti; a Treatise on Synonyms and another on Equivoques, or ambiguous terms; 'Facetus,' a poem; and 'Dictionarium Artis Alchymicæ.'

GARNERIN, ANDRÉ JACQUES, a French aeronaut, born 1770; died 18 Aug., 1823.

GARNET, HENRY, a Jesuit, born in Nottinghamshire 1555. From Winchester School he removed to New College, Oxford; but having decided on professing the Catholic religion he went to Spain, and next to Rome, where he joined the Society of Jesus. He became professor of philosophy and Hebrew in the Italian college, where also he occasionally assisted Clavius in lecturing on mathematics. In 1586 he returned to England in company with Father Robert Southwell, and became superior of his order in this country. After residing here several years without being molested, he became acquainted—but only in the confidential—with the design of the gunpowder-plot conspirators. For this he was tried and executed 3 May, 1606. He published 'A treatise of Schism; A treatise on Christian renunciation; a translation of 'Summa Casii,' with supplements on pilgrimages, invocation of saints, and indulgences, 8vo., London, 1590; St. Omer, 1622; translations of some little works on the Society of Jesus; a treatise on the Rosary of Our Lady. His nephew, Thomas Garnet, also became a Jesuit, and was executed at Tyburn 23 June, 1608, æt. 34.

GARNET, THOMAS, M.D., was born at Casterton, Westmorland, 21 April, 1766. He graduated at Edinburgh, and in 1796 was elected professor of chemistry at Anderson's institution, Glasgow. Removing afterwards to London, he became professor at the Royal Institution. Died 28 June, 1802. His works are—A Treatise on the Horley Green Spa; A Tour through the Highlands of Scotland; Zoonomia, or the Laws of Animal Life.

GARNIER, JEAN, a learned French Jesuit, born at Paris 1612; died at Bologna 16 Oct., 1681.

GARNIER, JEAN JACQUES, a French writer, born at Goron, in the Maine, 18 March, 1720. He became Hebrew professor in the royal college at Paris, till the Revolution compelled him to fly from that city. He died at Bougival 21 Feb., 1805. He wrote L'Homme de Lettres, 2 vols.; Traité de la origine du gouvernement Française; De l'Education civile; De Commerce remis a sa place; additional volumes to Velly and Villaret's History of France.

GARNIER, ROBERT, a French tragic poet, was born at Ferté Bernard, in the province of Maine, 1534, and died 15 Aug., 1590.

GARNIER-PAGES, ÉTIENNE JOSEPH LOUIS, a French politician, born at Marseilles 27 Dec., 1801; died at Paris 23 June, 1841.

GARRARD, or GERARDS, MARK, a painter, born at Bruges 1561. He was principal painter to Elizabeth queen of England, and also to Anne of Denmark, wife of James I. Died 1635.

GARRICK, DAVID, was the grandson of a French merchant, who settled in England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. The father of David was a captain in the army, who being on a recruiting party at Hereford, this son was born there, and baptized, 28 Feb., 1716. He received his education at the grammar school of Lichfield, and afterwards was placed under Samuel Johnson, with whom he came to London in 1735. Here Garrick embarked in the wine trade as partner with his brother Peter; but business not suiting his inclination, he turned his thoughts to the stage; and in 1741 made his first appearance under the assumed name of Lyddall, at Ipswich, in the character of Aboan in Oroonoko. On the 10th of Oct. the same year he came out in Richard III., at the theatre in Goodman's Fields; and here his popularity exceeded all that had ever been known in dramatic history. The other houses were deserted, which so provoked the patentees that they exerted their interest in getting the rival theatre suppressed. Garrick now entered into a contract with Fleetwood, of Drury Lane; and in the ensuing summer he was invited to Dublin, where the concourse of spectators was so great every night as to occasion a disorder, which went by the name of Garrick's fever. In 1747 he became a joint patentee of the theatre; and in 1749 married Mademoiselle Violetta, an Italian performer. In 1769 he projected an entertainment in honour of Shakespeare at Stratford-upon-Avon, called the Jubilee, which was admired by some, and ridiculed by more, as a silly piece of pageantry. On the death of Lacy, in 1773, he became sole patentee of the theatre, which he sold, in 1776, for £35,000, to Sheridan, Linley, and Ford. He died 20 Jan., 1779, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. He wrote several dramatic pieces, songs, prologues, and epilogues. Mrs. Garrick died, at the age of 98, on 16 Oct., 1822.

GARSAULT, FRANÇOIS ALEXANDRE DE, a French writer on the horse, &c., died 1778, aged 85.

GARTH, SIR SAMUEL, M.D., was born in Yorkshire, and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he took his degree of doctor of physic in 1691. Soon after this he became a fellow of the Royal College in London, which, at this time, was engaged in a charitable design of attending the sick poor gratis; but this benevolent scheme being thwarted by some mercenary men of the faculty, particularly the apothecaries, who thought that their craft was in danger, Dr. Garth drew his pen against these mercenariness, in a poem, entitled 'The Dispensary.' This gave him great popularity, which was increased by his zeal in providing a funeral for Dryden. He was one of the members of the Kit-Kat Club, the object of which was to promote the Hanoverian succession; for which he was knighted by George I., who made him his physician in ordinary, and also physician-general to the army. Died 18 Jan., 1718-19. Besides several miscellaneous poems he published a translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses.

GARTHSHORE, MAXWELL, M.D., F.R.A.S., was born at Kirkcudbright, in Scotland, 28 Oct., 1732. At the age of fourteen he was placed with a surgeon and apothecary at Edinburgh, after which he entered into the medical service of the army. In 1756 he settled at Uppingham, in the county of Rutland; but in 1763 he removed to London, where he practised with great reputation for nearly half a century. He was physician to the lying-in hospital. Died 1 March, 1812. Some of his papers are in the Philosophical Transactions, and other journals.

GARZI, LOUIS, a painter, born 1640, at Rome, where he died 1721.

GARZONI, THOMAS, an Italian priest, author of several works, the best of which is entitled 'La Piazza universale di tutti le professioni del mondo.' Born 1549; died 8 June, 1689.

GASCOIGNE, SIR BERNARD, a military man, and a native of Tuscany, took up arms for Charles I. in his struggle with the parliament. King Charles II. granted him a pension. He died in or about Jan., 1686-7. His description of Germany is given in Brown's 'Miscellanea Aulica.'

GASCOIGNE, GEORGE, a poet, was the son of Sir John Gascoigne, and, it appears, a native of Westmoreland. He was educated under Stephen Nevyson, a fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, of which society Gascoigne was also, in all probability, a member. On leaving the university he entered one of the inns of court, but his course of life was so dissolute and extravagant that he was disinherited by his father. Subsequently he obtained a seat in the House of Commons, and in 1573 visited Holland, where he obtained a captain's commission under the prince of Orange, and acquired considerable military reputation. On his return to England he became an attendant at court, and accompanied the queen in some of her progresses, during which he wrote masques for her entertainment. He died at Stamford 7 Oct., 1577. A complete list of his works is given in Cooper's 'Athen. Cantab.' Mr. Alexander Chalmers remarks:—'In smoothness and harmony of versification he yields to no poet of his own time, than those qualities were very common; but his higher merit is that in everything he discovers the powers and invention of a poet, a warmth of sentiment tender and natural, and a fertility of fancy, although not always free from the conceits of the Italian school.' It may be added that he was a good prose writer and a judicious critic.

GASCOIGNE, SIR WILLIAM, chief justice of the King's Bench, was born at Givthorpe, Yorkshire, about 1350. On the accession of Henry IV. he was made one of the justices of the Common Pleas, from whence he was removed, in 1401, to the King's Bench. In this high office he distinguished himself on many occasions, particularly for refusing to pass sentence upon Archbishop Scroop as a traitor, by the king's commandment, as being contrary to law; and still more remarkably by committing the prince of Wales, afterwards Henry V., to prison, for striking him when on the bench. This last scene is admirably described by Shakspeare. Died 17 Dec., 1413.

GASCOYNE, WILLIAM, a mathematician of Middleton, Yorkshire, was slain at an early age, fighting for Charles I. at Marston Moor, 2 July, 1644. He invented methods of grinding glasses, and is stated to have been the first who used two convex glasses in the telescope. It is also generally admitted that he was the original inventor of the wire micrometer, of its application to the telescope, and of the application of the telescope to the quadrant, though the invention was not promulgated until after the independent inventions of Auzout and Picard had been announced.

GASKELL, ELIZABETH CLEGHORN, an English novelist, was born about 1820, her maiden name being Stevenson. She became the wife of a Unitarian minister at Manchester, and died 12 Nov., 1865. Her principal works are 'Mary Barton,' 'Ruth,' 'North and South,' and 'A Life of her friend, Charlotte Brontë.'

GASPARINI, FRANCESCO, a musical composer, born at Lucca about 1665; died at Rome April, 1737.

GASPARINO, surnamed Barziza, one of the restorers of learning, was born at Barziza, near Bergamo, 1370. He became a professor in several universities, and died at Milan 1430. His writings consist of treatises on grammar and rhetoric, orations, epistles, and poems.

GASSENDI, PIERRE, a French philosopher, born at Chantiers, near Digne, in Provence, 22 Jan., 1592. In his infancy he frequently amused himself by gazing at the moon and stars; and at school at Digne he far outstripped all his fellow-students in every branch of science. At sixteen he was made teacher of rhetoric, and three years after he removed to Aix, as professor of philosophy. His 'Paradoxical Exercitations' against Aristotle's philosophy gained the attention of Nicolas Peirese and of Joseph Walter, prior of Valette; and by their means he entered into orders, and became warden of Digne church, where he continued twenty years. He was, in 1645, appointed professor of mathematics at Paris, and in this office unfortunately contracted a cold, which assumed such unpleasant symptoms that he left Paris for his native air. His studious pursuits enfeebled his constitution, but he was in some degree relieved by phlebotomy. He had already undergone that operation nine times when he remonstrated; but one of his physicians prevailed upon the other two to assent to the necessity of a repetition of the bleeding, and the yielding patient submitted to it, even to a fourth time. He soon after sunk under his complaints, and placing the hand of his faithful amanuensis on his heart, after hearing that the motion of that spring of life was faint and fluttering, he exclaimed in these last words, 'You see what is man's life,' and immediately expired 22 Oct., 1655. His papers were left to the care of his friend Monmor, who deemed them all worthy of the name of the philosopher. These, therefore, with the books printed before, appeared uniformly in 6 vols. folio, at Leyden, 1658. This great man, who lived and died a Catholic, was the correspondent of Kepler, Longomontanus, Snellius, Hevelius, Galileo, Bullialdi, Kercher, and other scholars; and to his genius, learning, and application, are owing in some degree the rapid changes in philosophy which banished the hypothesis of Aristotle from the schools of Europe.

GAST, JOHN, D.D., was born in Dublin 1715, and after passing through Trinity College, took orders, and became curate of the parish of St. John. In 1753 he published 'The Rudiments of Grecian History,' for which the university of Dublin presented him with his doctor's degree. In 1761 he was instituted to the living of Arlow, which he exchanged for that of St. Nicholas, Dublin. He was also appointed archdeacon of Glendalough. Died 1788. Besides the above work, he published 'A Protestant Clergyman's Letter to his Popish Parishioners.'

GASTAUD, FRANÇOIS, a French divine and lawyer, died 1732.

GASTON DE FOIX. See FOIX.

GASTRELL, FRANCIS, an English prelate, was born at Slapton, Northamptonshire, about 1662, and educated at Westminster School, from whence he was elected to Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree of bachelor of divinity in 1694, and the same year became preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn. In 1700 he took his doctor's degree; and in 1702 obtained a canonry of Christ Church. He engaged in the controversy with Clarke, on the Trinity, in 1714, and the same year was advanced to the bishopric of Chester, where he contested the validity of the degrees conferred by the archbishop of Canterbury as legal qualifications for ecclesiastical preferments. The bishop also opposed the prosecution of Bishop Atterbury, in the House of Lords. Died 24 Nov., 1725. Besides his Boyle's Lectures, and book against Clarke, he published 'Christian Institutes.'

GATAKER, CHARLES, son of Thomas, mentioned below, was born at Rotherhithe about 1614, and took his degree of M.A. at Pembroke College, Oxford; after which he became rector of Hoggston, in Buckinghamshire, where he died 30 Nov., 1680. He wrote several treatises in favour of Calvinism, some of which were answered by Bishop Bull.

GATAKER, THOMAS, a divine, was born in London, 4 Sept., 1574. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, from whence he removed to a fellowship in Sidney College. About 1601 he became preacher to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, and in 1603 took his degree of bachelor of divinity. In 1611 he was presented to the living of Rotherhithe, in Surrey, where he published, in 1619, a 'Discourse of Lots,' which occasioned some controversy. He complied with the ruling powers in the Rebellion, and was nominated one of the assembly of divines at Westminster, but disapproved the violent measures then carried on, and protested strongly against the trial of the king. Died 27 June, 1654. Besides the works already noticed, he wrote against the Antinomians, and published an edition of Marcus Antoninus's Meditations. His Opera Critica were published at Utrecht 1698.

GATES, JAMES, a scene-painter, whose artistic representations of fairyland and transformation-scenes made him very popular with the public. He died in London 30 June, 1808.

GAUBIL, ANTOINE, a French missionary in China, was born at Caillac, in 1708, and died at Pekin 24 July, 1759. He wrote the history of Gengis Khan, and translated the Chou King.

GAUBIUS, JEROME DAVID, a physician and medical writer, was born at Heidelberg 1705; became professor at Leyden; and died 29 November, 1780.

GAUCHER, CHARLES ÉTIENNE, a French engraver and writer on the fine arts, was born at Paris 1740, and died 28 Nov., 1803.

GAUDEN, JOHN, an English prelate, born at Mayfield, Essex, 1605, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degrees in arts; after which he was presented to the vicarage of Chippenham, Cambridgeshire, and the rectory of Brightwell, Berkshire. He now entered himself a member of Wadham College, Oxford, where he took his degree of D.D. 1641. At the beginning of the civil war he complied with the ruling party, was made dean of Bocking, and a member of the Westminster assembly, which, however, he did not attend. Having got into his possession the manuscript of the meditations of Charles I., he published them under the title of 'Icon Basilike, or the Portraiture of his sacred Majesty in his Solitude and Sufferings.' For this he was made bishop of Exeter at the Restoration, and, in 1662, was translated to Worcester, where he died on 20 Sept. the same year. The bishop published a number of books, and, among the rest, 'The Life of Bishop Brownrigg.'

GAUDENTIUS (St.), bishop of Brescia, died about 427.

GAUDICHAUD-BEAUPRÉ, CHARLES, a French botanist, born in Angoulême 4 Sept., 1789; died in Paris 26 Jan., 1854.

GAULL. See BACCICCO.

GAULMIN, GILBERT, a French counsellor of state, who wrote Notes on Psilus and Theod. Prodromus; Remarks on the false Callisthenes; Poems, &c. Born 1587; died 1667.

GAULTIER, ALOISUIS EDOUARD CAMILLE, a French abbe, who devoted himself with much success to the education of youth, both in France and London, on the mutual instruction system. He published a number of useful educational works. Born about 1745; died 19 Sept., 1818.

GAULTIER, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French priest, born at Louviers 1685; died 30 Oct., 1755. Among his works, which are numerous, is one charging Pope's 'Essay on Man' with impiety.

GAUPP, JOHN, a divine and mathematician of Lindau, in Swabia, born 1667; died 1738.

GAUSS, KARL FRIEDRICH, a German mathematician, born in Brunswick 30 April, 1777; died 23 Feb., 1855, at Göttingen, where he was professor of mathematics and director of the observatory. His profound works, though produced with a rapidity which astonished the savants of Europe, were elaborated with the greatest care, and many of them mark an era in the history of science.

GAVARD, HYACINTHE, a French anatomist, born 1753; died 1802.

GAVESTON, PETERS, a favourite of Edward II., king of England, was the son of a gentleman of Gascony who had rendered considerable services to Edward I. He was a worthless character, and after a great abuse of his power, and changes in his fortune, he was beheaded 19 June, 1312.

GAZA.

GAY, JOHN, a poet, was born at Barnstaple, Devonshire, 1688, and educated at the grammar school in that town; after which he was placed apprentice to a silk mercer in London, but that situation not proving agreeable, he obtained his discharge before the expiration of his indentures. He now amused himself with writing verses, which recommended him to Swift and Pope, to the latter of whom he dedicated his 'Rural Sports,' 1711. The year following he was appointed secretary to the duchess of Monmouth. About this time came out his burlesque poem, entitled 'Trivia; or the Art of Walking the Streets of London,' which was succeeded, in 1714, by the 'Shepherd's Week; a series of Pastorals,' in ridicule of Phillips. The same year he went to Hanover with the earl of Clarendon as secretary to the embassy, but though he had great expectations from the court, they were never realised. In 1720 he published his poems by subscription. They produced him a considerable sum of money, but he lost it all in the South Sea scheme. He next wrote 'The Captives,' a tragedy, which, being read to the princess of Wales, she desired Gay to compose some fables in verse for the use of the duke of Cumberland. With this request he complied, but the performance, though popular, failed in giving satisfaction at court. Out of resentment at this neglect, Gay wrote his 'Beggars' Opera,' the success of which exceeded anything that had ever been known in dramatic representation. The author followed up this attack on the Italian operas by a supplement called 'Polly,' which was not suffered to be performed; but it was published by subscription, and proved exceedingly lucrative. The cause of Gay was taken up by the duke and duchess of Queensbury, who gave him a residence in their house, where he died 11 Dec., 1732. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. An edition of his works was printed at London in 6 vols. 12mo., 1772-5.

GAY-LUSSAC, JOSEPH LOUIS, a celebrated French chemist, born at St. Léonard (Haut-Vienne) 6 Dec., 1788; died at Paris 9 May, 1850. In 1816 he was chosen professor of chemistry at the Polytechnic School, having previously distinguished himself by his aerial voyages, in company with M. Biot, for the observation of atmospheric phenomena at great heights. From 1832 till the time of his death he was professor of chemistry at the Jardin des Plantes. There is scarcely a branch of physical or chemical science to which M. Gay-Lussac did not contribute some important discovery.

GAYOT DE PITAVALE, FRANÇOIS, a voluminous French writer, who was successively an abbe, a soldier, and an advocate. The best known of his works is a collection of 'Causes Célèbres,' in 20 vols. Born 1073; died 1743.

GAYTON, EDMUND, was born in London 1609, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and St. John's College, Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship. He became superior beadle of the university, but was ejected in 1647 by the parliamentary visitors. However, he recovered his place at the Restoration, and died 12 Dec., 1666. He wrote several books, the chief of which is entitled 'Pleasant Notes upon Don Quixote.'

GAZA, THEODORE, was born at Thessalonica, in Greece, 1398. On the invasion of his country by the Turks in 1430 he went to Italy, and became one of the brightest ornaments to whom Europe is indebted for the revival of learning. He settled in Rome 1450, and was engaged by Nicholas V. to translate Greek authors into Latin. On the death of that pontiff (1456) he went to the court of Alphonsus, king of Naples, but subsequently returned to Rome, where he died 1478. His principal works are 'Grammaticæ Græcæ libri quatuor,' written in Greek, and translated into Latin by Erasmus; 'Liber de Artibus Mensibus,' also written in Greek; and a translation into that language of Cicero 'De Senectute' and 'De Somnio Scipionis.' He likewise translated Aristotle's History of Animals, and other works, into Latin. Gaza's learning was so highly respected that Scaliger said there were but three scholars whom he was inclined to envy—Thodore Gaza, Angelus Politianus, and Picus of Mirandula.

GAZET, WILLIAM, Gazæus, a Flemish ecclesiastic, was born at Arras 1554, and died 25 Aug., 1612. He composed numerous works relating to the history of the Low Countries.

GAZOLA, JOSEPH, of Verona, a physician and medical writer, born 1661; died 14 Feb., 1715.

GEBELIN. See CELEST.

GEBER, JOHN, a celebrated physician and astronomer of the ninth century, who composed, in Arabic, several works, which have been translated into the principal European languages.

GEBHARDI, JOHN LOUIS LEVIN, was born at Brunswick 1699, became professor of theology, &c., at Lunenburg, and died 10 Nov., 1764. He published some esteemed genealogical and historical works in German.

GED, WILLIAM, a goldsmith of Edinburgh, who, in 1725, invented the method of printing called stereotype. To carry this method into effect he entered into partnership with a stationer in London, but the concern failed for want of encouragement, upon which Ged returned to Scotland, where he printed an edition of Sallust. Died 19 Oct., 1749.

GEDDES, ALEXANDER, LL.D., a divine of the Roman Church, was born at Ruthven, in the shire of Banff, in 1737. He was educated in the Scotch college at Paris, after which he officiated for some years as a priest in his native country, where he published a translation of the satires of Horace, and obtained the degree of doctor of laws. In 1780 he removed to London, and officiated in the Roman Catholic churches; but, in 1782, he relinquished the priestly function altogether. He now entered upon the great work of translating the Bible, and issued proposals for the undertaking, which met with encouragement; and Lord Petre allowed him a pension to carry it into effect. The first volume appeared in 1792, and the second in 1797; but much to the disappointment of those who had formed great expectations of it. In 1800 he published 'Critical Remarks on the Hebrew Scriptures;' in which he vilified Moses as a writer and a legislator to such a degree that even Priestley doubted whether Geddes could be a Christian. Died 26 Feb., 1802. After his death appeared his 'Translation of the Psalms.' His other tracts are not worth notice.

GEDDES, JAMES, a Scotch writer, born in the shire of Tweeddale 1710. He was educated at Edinburgh, after which he was admitted to the bar, but was cut off by a consumption in 1749. He was the author of 'An Essay on the composition and manner of writing of the ancients, particularly Plato,' 1748

GEDDES, JOHN, a Scotch Catholic prelate, born at Curridoun, in the Enzie, Banffshire, 9 Sept., 1735; nominated coadjutor to Bishop Hay, vicar-apostolic of the Lowland district of Scotland, 30 Sept., 1779; consecrated bishop of Maroccochia, in Africa, 30 Nov., 1780, at Madrid; resigned the coadjutorship on account of paralytic attacks 1797; and died at Aberdeen 11 Feb., 1799.

GEDDES, MICHAEL, LL.D., an ecclesiastic, was born in Scotland, and educated at Edinburgh, from whence he removed to Oxford, where he became a member of Balliol College. In 1678 he went to Lisbon as chaplain to the English factory, but being prevented from exercising his function by the Inquisition, he returned to England, and, at the Revolution, was made chancellor of the church of Sarum, on which he took the degree of doctor of laws. He died before 1714. His works are—The Church History of Malabar; The Church History of Ethiopia; The Council of Trent no free assembly; Miscellaneous Tracts on Civil and Ecclesiastical History, 3 vols.; several Tracts against the Roman Church.

GEDIKE, FREDERICK, a German educationist, was born in Brandenburg 15 Jan., 1754, became inspector of schools in Prussia, and died 5 May, 1803.

GEDOYN, NICOLAS, a French priest, who published translations of Quintilian and Pausanias, and 'Ouvres diverses,' or moral and literary essays. Born 1667; died 10 Aug., 1744.

GEER, CHARLES DE, a Swedish naturalist, born 1720; died 8 March, 1778.

GEIER, MARTIN, a Lutheran divine of Leipsic, who wrote Commentaries on the Old Testament, and a treatise on the Mourning of the Jews. Born 1614; died 22 Aug., 1681.

GEINOZ, FRANCIS, a classical antiquary, born in Switzerland 1666; died 1752.

GEISSEL, JOHN VON, cardinal, for twenty-three years archbishop of Cologne, died 8 Sept., 1804, aged 69. He was a man of great ability and integrity, and happily succeeded in terminating the serious conflicts which arose between the government of Frederick William III. and the Holy See under his predecessor archbishop Clemens Augustus.

GELASIUS I., succeeded Pope Felix II. March 1, 492; died 19 Nov., 496. This pontiff assembled a council of seventy bishops at Rome, in which the canon of Scripture was settled according to the form now received in the Catholic Church.

GELASIUS II., John of Gaeta, was elected Pope 25 Jan., 1118; and died 20 Jan., 1119.

GELASIUS, the Elder, bishop of Casarea, and nephew of Cyril of Jerusalem, wrote several works on ecclesiastical history, of which only fragments remain. He is to be distinguished from Gelasius of Cyzicus, a Greek author in the fifth century, who wrote a worthless history of the Nicene Council, held 325.

GELDENHAUR, GERARD EOBANUS, a divine and historian, born at Nimeguen 1482. After adopting the new doctrines he married, and was engaged in the education of youth at Worms, at Augsburg, and lastly at Marburg, where he died 10 Jan., 1542. He wrote histories of the Netherlands, of Holland, of the Bishops of Utrecht, and other works. Though a man of great ability, the freedom with which he inveighed against the Pope offended his friends, particularly Erasmus, who compared him to the traitor Judas, and spoke with contempt of his conduct.

GELÉE, CLAUDE. See LORRAINE.

GELIENUS, SIGISMUND, a learned German, born at Prague about 1498. He was the intimate friend of Erasmus, who recommended him to Frobenius as corrector of his press. He died at Basle 1554 or 1555. He translated into Latin the works of several Greek authors, and compiled a dictionary in four languages, Greek, Latin, German, and Sclavonian.

GELL, Sir WILLIAM, a classical antiquary, was born 1777, being son of Philip Gell, Esq., of Hop-ton, Derbyshire. He received his education at Emmanuel College, Cambridge (B.A. 1798; M.A. 1804), and was created a knight 1803, on his return from a mission to the Ionian Islands. In 1820 Queen Caroline appointed him one of her chamberlains, in which capacity he attended during her trial in the House of Lords. Subsequently to that period he resided altogether in Italy, sometimes at Rome, and sometimes at Naples, in which latter city he died 3 Feb., 1836. His learned and valuable works were produced in the following order:—The Topography of Troy and its Vicinity, 1804; The Geography and Antiquities of Ithaca, 1808; The Itinerary of Greece, with a Commentary on Pausanias and Strabo, and an account of the monuments of antiquity at present existing in that country, 1810; The Itinerary of the Morea, 1817; Pompeiana, 1817—1819, written in collaboration with J. P. Gandy; Attica, 1817; Narrative of a Journey in the Morea, 1823; Topography of Rome.

GELLERT, CHRISTIAN FURCHTEGOTT, a celebrated German poet, born at Haynichen, in Saxony, 4 July, 1715. He supported himself for many years as tutor in private families, but was afterwards professor of philosophy at Leipzig, where he died 13 Dec., 1769. He is best known by his 'Tales and Fables,' 'Didactic Poems,' and 'Sacred Songs.' His brother, Christlieb Ehregott (b. 1713; d. 1795), was distinguished as a metallurgist and chemist.

GELLI, JOHN BAPTIST, a tailor of Florence, eminent for his genius, and his works both in verse and prose. He became a member of the academy of Florence, and was acquainted with all the learned men of his time. His works comprise translations of Latin and Greek authors; dialogues after the manner of Lucian, which have been much censured for their indecency; 'La Circe,' and two comedies, 'La Sporta' and 'L'Error.'

GELLIBRAND, HENRY, a mathematician, born in London 1597. He went to Trinity College, Oxford, where he took his degrees in arts. In 1627 he was elected professor of astronomy at Gresham College. He was brought into the high commission court 1631 for publishing an almanack, in which the names of the saints were changed for the Protestant martyrs. As, however, similar almanacks had been printed, the information was dismissed. In 1632 he completed his friend Briggs's 'Trigonometria Britannica,' which was printed at Gouda the year following. Died 1636. His own works are a Discourse on the Longitude; another on the Variation of the Magnetic Needle; 'An Institution Trigonometrical;' 'A Latin Oration in praise of the Astronomy of Gassendus;' and 'Diatriba Lunarum,' MS.

GELLIUS, AULUS. See AULUS.

GEMELLI-CARRERI, JOHN FRANCIS, an Italian,

GENGHIS KHAN.

was author of a voyage round the world between 1693 and 1698. Some imagine that this is a work of fiction. Born 1651; died 1725.

GEMINIANI, FRANCIS, a musician, born at Lucca about 1666. He came to England 1714, and was patronised by George I. Died at Dublin 17 Sept., 1762. He published 'Guida Armonica, or a Sure Guide to Harmony and Modulation,' 1742; 'The Art of Playing on the Violin;' 'Harpichord Pieces,' &c.

GEMISTUS, GEORGE, surnamed Pletho, a Platonic philosopher and mathematician, was born 1390 at Constantinople, but on the capture of that city by the Turks he went to Florence, where he greatly distinguished himself by his learning and talents. He died in his native city at the age of 101. His works include a commentary on the Magical Oracles of Zoroaster; and a treatise on the Difference between Plato and Aristotle.

GEMMA, REINIER, Frisius, a physician, born at Dockum, in Friesland, 1508; practised medicine at Louvain, where he died 1555. He wrote several works on astronomy and other branches of mathematics. His son Cornelius became royal professor of medicine at Louvain, and died 1577. His works are on mathematical and philosophical subjects. One John Baptist Gemma, a Venetian, and physician to Sigismund III. of Poland, wrote a treatise on Epidemics, printed in 1584.

GENCE, JEAN BAPTISTE MODESTE, a French writer, chiefly known by an able work on the authorship of the 'Imitation of Jesus Christ,' which he contends to have been written by the celebrate Gerson. Born 1755; died 17 Aug., 1840.

GENDALL, JOHN, an English painter, died at Exeter 7 March, 1865, aged 75.

GENDRE. See LE GENDRE.

GENDRON, CLAUDE DESHAIS, a French physician, born 1663; died 3 Sept., 1750.

GENEBRARD, GILBERT, a French Cluniac monk, sometime archbishop of Aix, was born about 1537, and died 16 Feb., 1597, at his priory of Semur. Among his works are a 'Sacred Chronology;' a Commentary on the Psalms; and a translation of Josephus. St. Francis de Sales gloried in having been his pupil.

GENESIUS, JOSEPHUS, a Byzantine historian, who flourished about 940.

GENEST, CHARLES CLAUDE, a French poet and abbe, born at Paris 17 Oct., 1636; died 19 Nov., 1719.

GENEVIEVE (St.), a virgin, celebrated for her piety and miracles, was born at Nanterre, near Paris, about 422, and died 3 Jan., 512. She is the patron saint of the city of Paris.

GENGA, JEROME, a painter and architect, born at Urbino about 1476; died 11 July, 1551. He was a friend, as well as fellow-townsmen, of the immortal Raffaele. His son Bartholomew, born 1518, was also celebrated for his skill in architecture. He superintended the fortifications at Malta, where he died 1558.

GENGHIS KHAN, son of a khan of the Moguls, was born 1164. He began his reign when he was only thirteen, and shortly after was compelled, by a general conspiracy of his subjects, to take shelter with Aveni Khan, a Tartar prince. This prince being deposed by his brother, Genghis Khan replaced him on the throne, and married his daughter. Aveni Khan afterwards attempted to destroy him, but he escaped, and having raised an army, defeated his father-in-law. Genghis Khan afterwards made himself master successively of Cathay, Corea, the greater part of China, and almost all Asia. He died 24 Aug., 1227.

GENLIS, STÉPHANIE FÉLICITÉ DUCREST DE SAINT AUBIN, Comtesse DE, a famous French writer, born 25 Jan., 1746, near Autun, in Burgundy. Her pretty figure and musical talents obtained for her at an early age the entrance into all the most distinguished salons of Paris, and her literary skill so captivated the Count de Genlis that he was induced to lead her to the altar. The duke de Chartres, afterwards duke of Orleans, was so enchanted by her wit and acquirements that he entrusted to her the education of his children, including Louis Philippe, who afterwards succeeded to the throne of France. While occupying this honourable situation she published several educational works, which became very popular—'Théâtre d'Education,' 'Adele et Theodore,' 'Les Vieilles du Château,' 'Les Annales de la Vertu.' The outbreak of the Revolution found Mme. de Genlis fully prepared to adopt its principles, and she did not fail to make profession of the most exalted patriotism. Being warned of the events which would occur in France, she prudently crossed over to London in company with Mdlle. Adelaide d'Orléans. She was recalled to Paris by the duke of Orleans, but a few months afterwards was again obliged to quit France. She now fixed her abode at Tournai, where her adopted daughter Pamela was married to the ill-starred Lord Edward Fitzgerald, whose acquaintance she had made in London. Events afterwards compelled her to quit Belgium, and seek refuge in Switzerland. After the 18th Brumaire she obtained from the First Consul not merely permission to return to her native land, but also a pension of 6,000 francs and free apartments in the Arsenal. From this time she wrote of the head of the new government in terms of the grossest adulation, although on the restoration of 1814 she felt disposed, like so many other emigrants whom Napoleon had overwhelmed with favours, to repudiate the idol at whose shrine she had but recently offered incense. In the hope of retaining the pension she had enjoyed under the empire she wrote to Louis XVIII., but that monarch altogether declined to entertain the application. The duke of Orleans, however, allowed her a regular pension, and even honoured his former governess with occasional visits in private, but she was never received publicly at the Palais Royal. She died at Paris 31 Dec., 1831. The list of her works, which occupy no fewer than eighty-four duodecimo volumes, is far too long for insertion here. Among them may be mentioned 'Mémoires inédits sur le 18e siècle,' and 'La Revolution Française.'

GENNADIUS I., patriarch of Constantinople, succeeded Anatolius 458, and died 471. Of his works only some fragments have been preserved.

GENNADIUS II. See SCHOLARIUS.

GENNADIUS, a celebrated priest of Marseilles, died about 492, leaving 'De illustribus Ecclesie Scriptoribus,' and 'De Dogmatibus Ecclesiasticis.' The latter may be found among St. Augustine's works.

GENNARI, CÆSAR and BENEDICT, two painters, who were the nephews and disciples of Guercino. After working together some years, Cæsar established himself at Bologna, and Benedict went to England, where he became painter to James II., on whose expulsion he returned to Italy. He died 1715, aged 82. There was another artist of this family, Bartholomew Gennari, uncle to the preceding, and also a copyist of Guercino.

GENNARO, JOSEPH AURELIUS DE, a famous civilian of Naples, born 1701; died 8 Sept., 1761.

GENNINGS, JOHN, was born at Lichfield, and educated as a Puritan, but the execution, in 1501, of his brother Edmund, a Catholic priest, so deeply affected him with remorse and horror that he determined to join the church of Rome. He accordingly entered the English college at Douay, was ordained priest 1607, and in the year following returned to England. In 1614 he assumed the habit of St. Francis, and he became celebrated as the restorer of the English Franciscan province. He established a house of studies, with a novitiate, under the name of St. Bonaventure, at Douay, where he died 2 Nov., 1660, aged about 60. He published 'The Life and Death of Mr. Edmund Geninges, priest, crowned with martyrdom at London, the 10th day of November, in the year MDXCI.' St. Omers, a very rare work, eagerly sought after by bibliomaniacs; 'Institutio Missionariorum,' Douay, 1651.—Dodd; Olivier.

GENOVESI, ANTHONY, a learned ecclesiastic, born at Castiglione, near Salerno, 1 Nov., 1712. He acquired celebrity at Naples as lecturer on philosophy, but exposed himself to censure by his metaphysics, in which he recommended the works of Galileo, Grotius, and Newton. Though protected by the king of Naples, his application for the theological chair drew upon him from the clergy the ill-founded charge of heresy. He was afterwards professor of political economy, and died 22 Sept., 1769. He wrote Elements of Metaphysics; a System of Logic; Philosophical Meditations; and other works.

GENSERIC, king of the Vandals, in Spain, died 477.

GENT, THOMAS, a printer, born at York 1601. In 1724 he began business for himself, in his native city, and died there 17 May, 1778. He published Ancient and Modern History of York; Compendious History of England and Rome, 2 vols.; Ancient and Modern History of Ripon; History of Kingston-upon-Hull; Life and Death of St. Robert of Knaresborough; The most delectable, scriptural, and pious History of the famous and magnificent great Eastern Window in St. Peter's Cathedral, York.

GENTILESCHI, HORATIO, a painter, born at Pisa 1563. He came to England in the reign of Charles I., who employed him in decorating the palace at Greenwich, and other public buildings, the ceilings of which he painted in a fine style. He died here 1657, leaving a daughter, Artemisia Genteschi, who painted historical subjects in a manner equal to her father, while she excelled him in portraits. She resided chiefly at Naples, and died 1642.

GENTILIS, ALBERICUS, an Italian, who became professor of law at Oxford. He wrote 'Lectiones Virgilianæ,' 'De Jure Belli,' &c. Born 1550; died 1611.

GENTILIS, JOHN VALENTINE, was born in Calabria about 1520. Having embraced the Protestant doctrines, he quitted Italy for Geneva, where he learned Anianism, but to save himself from sharing the fate of Servetus, he subscribed the orthodox confession of faith. After going to several places, and suffering imprisonment more than once on account of his opinions, he was beheaded at Berne Sept., 1560.

GENTILIS.

GENTILIS, ROBERT, son of Albericus, born in London 1590, and educated at Oxford. He probably died after 1654. He translated Paul Servita's 'History of the Inquisition,' and other works.

GENTILIS, SCIPIO, brother of Albericus, was born 1565; became professor of civil law at Altorf; and died 1616. Besides some legal treatises he published 'Epic Paraphrases of twenty-five of David's Psalms,' and a translation into Latin verse of Tasso's Jerusalem.

GENTILLET, INNOCENT, a French Protestant writer, who died about 1595.

GENTLEMAN, FRANCIS, a poetical writer, was born in Ireland 23 Oct., 1728, and received his education at Dublin. He obtained a commission in the army; but being dismissed the service he took to the stage, and performed at Foote's theatre in the Haymarket. He afterwards returned to his own country, where he died 21 Dec., 1784. He wrote some dramatic pieces; a volume of 'Royal Fables' in verse, in imitation of Gay; and the 'Dramatic Censor,' 2 vols. 8vo., 1770.

GENTZ, FREDERICK VON, a German statesman and writer, born 1764; died 9 June, 1832.

GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH, a British historian, was a native of the town from which he derived his name. It is supposed that he received his education in the Benedictine monastery at Monmouth. He became archdeacon of Monmouth, and in 1129 was consecrated bishop of St. Asaph. Died about 1154. It is generally admitted that the 'History of Britain,' written by Geoffrey, was taken by him from a Welsh MS. of Tyssilio, bishop of St. Asaph; but that he made additions to it, particularly with regard to Merlin's prophecies. There are two editions of it in Latin, one printed at Paris 1517, and the other at Heidelberg 1587. An English version, by Aaron Thompson, appeared at London 1718.

GEOFFROY, ÉTIENNE FRANÇOIS, a French physician, botanist, and writer on the Materia Medica, born 13 Feb., 1672; died 5 Jan., 1731. His son Etienne Louis (b. 1725; d. 1810) was also a distinguished physician and naturalist.

GEOFFROY, JULIEN LOUIS, a French dramatic critic, born 1743; died 26 Feb., 1814.

GEOGHEGAN, ARTHUR, an Irish Dominican, was condemned to death on account of his priestly character, and suffered at Tyburn, Michaelmas, 1633.

GEORGE, St., the patron of England, is supposed to have suffered martyrdom under Diocletian about 284. Of his history nothing is known, but he is honoured in the Catholic Church as one of the most illustrious martyrs of Christ, while the Greeks have long distinguished him by the title of the 'Great Martyr,' and kept his festival as a holiday of obligation. Festival, April 23.

GEORGE, the Cappadocian, was elected by the Arians bishop of Alexandria 354 after the expulsion of St. Athanasius. He rendered himself extremely odious to the people, and was assassinated about 361.

GEORGE OF TREBIZOND, Trapexuntius, a learned Greek, was born in the island of Crete about 1396, of a family which originally belonged to the city of Trebizond. He studied at Padua, and was for some time Greek professor at Vicenza; but afterwards he was called to Rome, and employed in translations, till he was banished for some offence taken at his version of the Almagest of Ptolemy. Though he was restored to his situation, he fell again into trouble and was imprisoned in the castle of St. Angelo. Died 1485, or 1486.

GEORGE, Prince of Denmark, son of Frederick III., king of Denmark, was born 1653. In 1683 he married Ann, daughter of the duke of York, afterwards James II., king of England. Prince George deserted his father-in-law, and espoused the cause of William of Orange, who on coming to the English throne created him duke of Cumberland. On his wife's succession to the throne Prince George was created lord high admiral of England, but he took no part in public affairs. He died at Kensington Palace 28 Oct., 1708.

GEORGE (LEWIS) I., king of Great Britain, was son of Ernest Augustus, elector of Hanover, by Sophia, daughter of Frederick, Elector Palatine, and the grand-daughter of James I. of England. He was born 1660; created duke of Cambridge 1706; succeeded Queen Anne 1714; died 11 June, 1727.

GEORGE (AUGUSTUS) II., was born 1683; succeeded his father George I., 1727; died 25 Oct., 1760.

GEORGE (WILLIAM FREDERICK) III., grandson of the preceding, and eldest son of Frederick, prince of Wales, was born 4 June, 1738; succeeded to the throne 1760; died 20 Jan., 1820.

GEORGE (FREDERICK AUGUSTUS) IV., son of the preceding, was born 12 Aug., 1762; succeeded his father 1820; died 26 June, 1830.

GEORGE, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French diplomatist and historical writer, born 29 Jan., 1731; died 14 Nov., 1813.

GERANDO, JOSEPH MARIE, BARON DE, a French writer on philosophical and philanthropical subjects, born at Lyons 29 Feb., 1772; died 11 Nov., 1842.

GERARD, ALEXANDER, D.D., was born in Aberdeenshire 22 Feb., 1728. He was educated at Aberdeen and Edinburgh, being chosen in 1750 professor of philosophy in the Marischal College in the former place. In 1759 he was ordained a minister, and the following year chosen professor of divinity. He was appointed theological professor in King's College 1771; and died 22 Feb., 1795. He wrote an Essay on Taste; Dissertations on the Genius and Evidences of Christianity; an Essay on Genius; 2 vols. of Sermons; and a discourse on 'The Pastoral Care.'

GERARD, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French painter, born at Rome, of French parents 1770; died 11 of 12 Jan., 1837.

GERARD, GILBERT, son of Dr. Alexander Gerard, was born and educated at Aberdeen. On entering into the ministry he became pastor of the English church at Amsterdam, where he continued several years; and on his return was appointed professor of Greek in King's College, Aberdeen. He succeeded his father in the chair of divinity, was elected one of the ministers of Old Aberdeen, and made king's chaplain for Scotland. Died 28 Sept., 1815. Dr. Gerard published—'On Indifference with respect to Religious Truths,' a sermon; 'Institutes of Biblical Criticism.'

GERARD, JOHN, a Jesuit, was a native of Derbyshire. His father, Sir Thomas Gerard, was a great sufferer in person and property on account of his chivalrous devotion to Mary, queen of Scots. The son was sent to Exeter College, Oxford, but afterwards removed to Rheims, where he determined to join the Society of Jesus. Previously to taking this step he returned to England for the purpose of arranging his worldly affairs; and after much vexatious opposition, and nearly three years imprisonment in the Marshalsea, for his attachment to the Catholic faith, he at last succeeded in retaining his liberty. He was admitted into the society 1588; and professed 1606. Father Gerard became the first rector of the English college at Liege, to the establishment of which he had himself greatly contributed. It has been erroneously stated that he was imprisoned in the Tower and tortured after the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot. It is true, however, that he was tortured in the Tower, but he effected his escape therefrom in 1597. The last ten years of his life were spent in the English college at Rome, where he closed a long, arduous, and meritorious career 27 July, 1630, aged 73. He wrote 'The Exhortation of Jesus Christ to the Faithful Soul,' from the Latin of Lansberg; 'The Spiritual Combat,' from the Italian; Account of the Gunpowder Plot, MS.; 'Narratio de Rebus a se in Anglia gestis,' MS.—Oliver.

GERARD, JULES, the famous French traveller and lion-hunter, was born 1817, and drowned in crossing the Jeng river, in Upper Guinea, in Sept., 1864. His work 'Le Tueur de Lions' was published in 1857-8.

GERARD, LOUIS, a French physician and naturalist, of Cotignac, Département du Var, born 18 July, 1733; died 16 Nov., 1819.

GERARD THOM, or TENQUE, the founder and first grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, was born in the isle of Martigue, on the coast of Provence, about 1040, and died about 1121.

GERARDE, JOHN, a botanist, born at Nantwich, Cheshire, 1545. He practised surgery in London, where also he became gardener to Lord Burghley. Gerarde himself had a large botanic garden in Holborn, of which he published a catalogue 1596. But his great work is his Herbal, printed in 1597, and republished by Dr. Thomas Johnson in 1630. Gerarde died about 1607.

GERARDS, MARK. See GARRARD.

GERBAIS, JEAN, a doctor of the Sorbonne, born 1629; died 14 April, 1699. He wrote several works in Latin and French on ecclesiastical subjects.

GERBELIUS, NICHOLAS, a German lawyer, professor at Strasburg, died 1560. He wrote a description of Greece; a history of the Anabaptists, &c.

GERBER, ERNEST LOUIS, a German organist and composer, born 29 Sept., 1746; died 30 July, 1819.

GERBERON, GABRIEL, a French Benedictine, born 28 Aug., 1628. He espoused the opinions of the Jansenists, and was consequently imprisoned for a time, though set at liberty on signing the formulary. Died 29 March, 1711. His chief work is the General History of Jansenism.

GERBERT, MARTIN, baron of Hornau, an Austrian Catholic prelate, was born 13 Aug., 1720; became prince-abbat of St. Blaise; and died 13 May, 1793. He published many learned antiquarian books, the most esteemed of which is a work on the history of music.

GERBIER, Sir BALTHASAR, a painter, born at Antwerp 1592. He came to England with Rubens, and received the honour of knighthood from Charles I., who made him his agent at Brussels, and employed him in different negotiations. In the civil wars he attempted, without effect, to establish an academy in London. Afterwards he went to Surinam; but was seized by the Dutch, and sent to Holland. At the Restoration he prepared the triumphal arches for the reception of the king. Died 1607.

GERBILLON, JEAN FRANÇOIS, a Jesuit missionary in China, was born at Verdun 11 Jan., 1654. He wrote 'Observations on Great Tartary;' and an Account of his Travels is inserted in Du Halde's History of China. He was in great favour with the emperor, for whom he composed the Elements of Geometry, which were printed in the Chinese and Tartar languages. He died at Peking 25 March, 1707.

GERDES, DANIEL, a divine, born at Bremen 1698, was professor first at Duisburg and afterwards at Groningen, where he died 1765. He composed some theological works.

GERDIL, HYACINTH SIGISMOND, a cardinal, born at Samoens, in Piedmont, 23 June, 1718. He was of the Barnabite order; and in 1742 was chosen professor of philosophy at Macerata, from whence he removed to Turin, where he was appointed tutor to the prince royal of Sardinia. In 1777 he was made a cardinal. He treated the concordat proposed by Bonaparte as an hypocritical farce; and told the Pope that in signing it he had ruined religion. Died at Rome 12 Aug., 1802. The cardinal published—A Treatise on the Immortality of the Soul; A Treatise on the Nature of Ideals; Introduction to the study of Religion; another against Duels; Reflections on Education, in confutation of Kousseau; The Phenomena of Capillary Tubes.

GERHARD, EPHRAIM, a lawyer, born in Silesia 1682; became professor at Altorf; and died 1718. He wrote 'Delimitatio Philosophiæ Rationalis.'

GERHARD, JOHN, a Lutheran divine, born at Quedlinburg, in Saxony, 1582. He was theological professor at Jena for many years, and died 17 Aug., 1637. His best known work, entitled 'Meditations' has been translated into English.

GERHARD, JOHN ERNEST, son of the preceding, was born at Jena 1621; became professor of history there; and died 24 Feb., 1688. Among his works are 'Harmonia Linguarum Orientalium;' and a treatise on the Coptic Church. His son of the same name became divinity professor at Giessen, where he died 18 March, 1707.

GERING, ULRIE, a native of the canton of Lucerne, who, with Martin Crantz and Michael Friburger, was invited from his native place to print at the Sorbonne, by the doctors of that house. They published their first impressions in 1469 and 1470. Gering died 23 Aug., 1510.

GERLACH, STEPHEN, a Lutheran divine, was a native of Swabia. He resided five years at Constantinople in the suite of the imperial ambassador; and on his return was appointed professor and dean of Tübingen. The most curious of his works is 'An Account of the Embassy to the Porte.' Born 26 Dec., 1546; died 30 Jan., 1612.

GERMANICUS, CÆSAR, was the son of Drusus, who was a son of Livia, the wife of Augustus. He was adopted by Tiberius, and gained several splendid victories, especially over the Germans, whence he was called Germanicus. By command of Tiberius, who had grown jealous of him, he was poisoned at Antioch A.D. 19, aged 34. He is known as a poet by his translation into Latin of the Phenomena of Aratus, and by some fragments, particularly of a poem entitled 'Diosemeis,' or 'Prognostica.' The bodily and mental endowments of Germanicus are highly celebrated in history.

GERMON, BARTHÉLÉMI, a Jesuit of Orleans, who is principally known by his protracted quarrel with the Benedictines of St. Maur, on the subject of Mabillon's 'Diplomatique.' Born 1663; died 2 Oct., 1718.

GERMONIO, ANASTASIO, an Italian canonist and diplomatist, born at Sala 1551. He became archbishop of Tarantaise; and died 4 Aug., 1627. His works are, for the most part, on canon law.

GERSON, JEAN CHARLIER DE, an eminent divine, was born at Gerson, in Champagne, 14 Dec., 1363, and educated at Paris, of which church he became chancellor and canon. He distinguished himself at the councils of Pisa and Constance, and, on account of his learning and piety, obtained the designation of 'Doctor Christianissimus.' Died at Lyons 12 July, 1429. His works, which are numerous, have passed through many editions. To his pen some have attributed the celebrated 'Imitation of Jesus Christ,' which usually bears the name of Thomas à Kempis.

GERSTEN, CHRISTIAN LOUIS, a mathematician, was born at Giessen 1701; became professor there; and died 1762.

GERVAISE, ARMAND FRANÇOIS, a French friar of the order of Barefooted Carmelites, which he quitted for that of La Trappe 1695, and insinuated himself so much into the favour of the celebrated de Rancé as to be appointed abbat of La Trappe on the death of Dom Zozima 1696. This office, however, he resigned. Subsequently he got embroiled with the Bernardines, who had him arrested and confined in the abbey of Notre Dame de Reclus, where he died 1755. He wrote A General History of the Cistercians; Life of St. Cyprian; Lives of Abelard and Heloise; History of the Abbé Segur; Life of St. Irenæus; Life of Rufinus; Life of the Apostle Paul; Letters on the English Ordinations against Courayer, &c.

GERVAISE, NICOLAS, a missionary, brother of the preceding, was born at Paris about 1662. Before he was twenty he went to Siam, where he remained four years; and on his return published the Natural and Civil History of that kingdom; also an Historical Description of the kingdom of Macassar. He was afterwards provost of the church of St. Martin, at Tours, which induced him to write the life of that saint. He next printed the 'Histoire de Boèce.' Being consecrated bishop of Horren, in Guiana, he went thither, but the Caribbees murdered him and all his clergy on their arrival 20 Nov., 1729.

GERVASE OF CANTERBURY, an historian of the thirteenth century, was a monk of Canterbury. He wrote a chronicle of the Kings of England from 1122 to 1200; also a History of the Archbishops of Canterbury, from Augustine to Hubert, who died in 1205.

GERVASE OF TILBURY, an historian of the thirteenth century, so called from the place of his birth. He was nephew of Henry II., and became marshal of the kingdom of Arles. He wrote a commentary on Geoffrey of Monmouth's British History; also 'A tripartite History of England;' the 'History of the Holy Land;' 'Origines Burgundiorum;' 'Mirabilia Orbis;' and a chronicle entitled 'De Otii imperialibus.' The 'Liber Niger Scaccarii' has been ascribed to him, but erroneously.

GESNER.

GESENIUS, FREDERICK HENRY WILLIAM, was born at Nordhausen 3 Feb., 1780, and in 1800 was appointed professor of ancient literature in the gymnasium of Heiligenstadt. He next became professor of theology at Halle; and died 23 Oct., 1842. Gesenius was the greatest scholar of modern times in his particular department of oriental literature. The best of his works are his Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon to the books of the Old Testament; his works on Hebrew Grammar; and his German translation of Isaiah, with a commentary.—Nat. Cycl.

GESNER, CONRAD, called the 'German Pliny,' was born at Zurich 26 March, 1516. He studied at Strasburgh, from whence he was called by the university of his native place, and appointed teacher of the public school. His original destination was the church; but having an inclination to medicine, he resigned his school, and went to Basle, where he entered on the study of the sciences connected with physic. While thus engaged he was invited to Lausanne to be Greek professor, the advantages of which situation enabled him to prosecute his researches into natural history, and to take his doctor's degree at Basle. He now returned to Zurich, where he was chosen professor of philosophy; but after filling that post twenty-four years, he was carried off by the plague 13 Dec., 1565. His works are—'Bibliotheca Universalis,' a catalogue of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew books; Historiæ Animalium, 3 vols.; Aquatilium Animalium enumeratio juxta Plinium; De Lacte; De Secretis Remediis Thesaurus, i.e. a pharmacopœia; De raris et admirandis herbis, quæ sive quod noctu luceant, sive alias ob causas, Lunariæ nominantur; De omni rerum Fossilium genere; De rerum Fossilium, Lapidum, et Gemmarum maxime figuris.

GESNER, JOHN, a canon of Zurich, and professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in that university, was born 1709, and died 28 March, 1790. He published two dissertations on plants (1741), in which he announced the new system of Linnæus; eleven dissertations, published under the title of 'Phytographia Sacra' and other works.

GESNER, JOHN MATTHIAS, a learned critic, born near Newburg, in Germany, 1691. After studying at Anspach, he became master of the public school of Weinheim, and lastly settled at Gottingen as professor of the languages, librarian, and inspector of the schools. He died there 3 Aug., 1761. His greatest work is a Thesaurus of the Latin tongue, 4 vols. folio. He also published editions of Horace and Claudian, in Latin; and in the Greek, the Argonautics of Orpheus; with the tracts, 'De Lapidibus;' and the 'Hymns.' His brother, John James, who died in 1787, was an ingenious medallist, and published a very valuable work, entitled 'Thesaurus Numismatum.'

GESNER, SOLOMON, a Lutheran divine, of Wittenberg, born 1559; died 7 Feb., 1605. All his works are on theological subjects.

GESNER, SOLOMON, a poet and painter, born at Zurich 1730. He was placed under a bookseller at Berlin; but soon eloped from his master, and employed his time in painting and poetry. On his return to Zurich he published 'Daphnis;' which was followed by 'Inkle and Yarico;' but his fame was established by his pastorals. He next added to his celebrity by the very popular piece of 'The Death of Abel.' About his thirtieth year he married; and from this time carried on the various occupations of poet, engraver, painter, and bookseller. The latter profession, however, devolved chiefly on Mrs. Gesner. In 1765 he was admitted a member of the great council of Zurich; and two years after to the lesser. He was appointed bailiff of Eilzbach 1768; and died 2 March, 1788. He published some plates, etched and engraved by himself, from his own landscapes.

GETA, SEPTIMIUS, son of the Emperor Severus, and brother of Caracalla, with whom he was declared Cæsar. Caracalla, who hated him, killed him in the arms of his mother at the age of 23, in the year 212.

GETHIN, LADY GRACE, was the daughter of Sir George Norton, of Abbotsleigh, Somersetshire, and born 1676. She married Sir Richard Getlin, bart., of Ireland, but died soon after on 11 Oct., 1697, and was buried, not in Westminster Abbey, but at Hollingbourne, Kent. There is, however, a beautiful monument to her memory in the abbey, where a sermon in commemoration of her is preached every Ash Wednesday. She wrote miscellaneous essays, published after her death under the title of 'Reliquiæ Gethinianæ.'

GETHING, RICHARD, a celebrated penman, was a native of Herefordshire. Settling in London, he opened a writing school in Fetter Lane, and published some fine works on calligraphy between 1616 and 1645.

GEUSS, JOHN MICHAEL, professor of mathematics at Copenhagen, was born in Holstein 1745, and died there 1780.

GEVARTIUS, JOHN GASPAR, an eminent philologist at Antwerp, born 1593; died 23 March, 1666.

GHIBERTI, LORENZO, a sculptor, born at Florence 1378; died about 1456.

GHILINI, JEROME, an Italian writer, born 1589; died about 1670. His principal work is 'Teatro d'uomini letterati.'

GHIRLANDAIO, DOMENICO, a painter, whose family name was Curadi, born at Florence 1449; died 1493. Michael Angelo was one of his pupils. His son, Ridolfo (b. 1482; d. 1560), was an excellent artist, and highly esteemed by Raffaele.

GIANNI, FRANCIS, an Italian poet, born at Rome 1759; died at Paris 17 Nov., 1822.

GIANNONE, PETER, an Italian historian, born 1676; died 7 March, 1748. His chief work, a History of the Kingdom of Naples, has been translated into English.

GIARDINI, FELICE, a violinist, born at Turin April, 1716; died at Moscow Sept., 1796. About thirty years of his life were spent in England.

GIB, ADAM, a divine, one of the founders of the Secession Church in Scotland, was born in Perthshire 1713, and educated at Edinburgh. He was dismissed from his pastoral charge 1733, and then formed a congregation of his own; but in 1746 a new schism arose respecting the oaths of the burghesses, and from this time the Secession Church became divided into burghers and anti-burghers, of which latter party Mr. Gib was the advocate. Died 18 June, 1788. He wrote 'A Display of the Secession Testimony,' and 'Sacred Contemplations.' Appended to the latter work is an 'Essay on Liberty and Necessity,' in answer to Lord Kames.

GIBBON, EDWARD, the celebrated historian of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, was the son of Edward Gibbon, Esq., of Putney, where he was born 27 April, 1737. He was sent to Westminster School, but being of a sickly constitution, was taken from thence, and placed under Philip Francis, the translator of Horace, by whose instructions he profited little. Yet, with a meagre stock of classical learning, he was sent, at the age of fifteen, to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he remained a little more than a year, having professed himself a convert to the Catholic religion. His father then placed him with a Calvinist minister at Lausanne, where he renounced the Roman faith, without taking up any other in its room. He made, however, a good proficiency in the classics, and also in the French language: While at Lausanne, he fell in love with Made-moiselle Curchod, but was prevented from marrying her by the interdict of his father; and the lady became the wife of the celebrated Necker. In 1758 he returned to England, and in 1761 published his first literary performance, entitled 'Essai sur l'Étude de la Littérature.' About this time he obtained a commission in the Hampshire militia, and when the regiment was disbanded he resumed his studies, chiefly devoting his time to the Greek language, with a view to historical composition. In 1763 he went on his travels, and while sitting amidst the ruins of the Capitol at Rome, he formed the idea of writing the history of the decline and fall of that city. In the meantime, he joined M. Deyverdun in a journal called 'Mémoires Littéraires de la Grand Bretagne,' which met with no success. The next production of Mr. Gibbon was entitled 'Critical Observations on the Sixth Æneid,' against Warburton. In 1770 he began his celebrated history of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, the first volume of which, in quarto, appeared in 1776; but though greatly admired, it was immediately attacked on account of the offensive chapters in it respecting Christianity. To one of his assailants only, however, did Mr. Gibbon vouchsafe to make a reply; and that was Mr. Davis, who had charged him with falsifying his quotations. The remainder of the work came out at intervals, the sixth and last volume being published in 1788. Previous to this undertaking, Mr. Gibbon was chosen into parliament for Liskeard, and when hostilities commenced between this country and France, in 1778, he was employed to draw up the manifesto on that occasion; for which he was made commissioner of the Board of Trade, but lost the place on the change of administration in 1783. He then went to reside at Lausanne, where he continued till the French revolution obliged him to return to England; and here he died 16 Jan., 1794. His friend, Lord Sheffield, published, in 1799, the memoirs and miscellaneous works of Mr. Gibbon, in two vols. 4to., to which another volume of papers was afterwards added.

GIBBON, JOHN, was born in London 3 Nov., 1629, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, after which he became a soldier. Afterwards he obtained the post of Blue-Mantle pursuivant in the College of Arms; and died about 1700. He is exclusively remembered by his 'Introductio ad Latinam Blazoniam, an Essay towards a more correct Blazon in Latin than formerly hath been used,' 1682. He was an ancestor of the historian.

GIBBONS, GRINLING, a carver and statuary, was a native of London. He gave to wood the lightness of flowers, and executed several fine works both in that way, in marble, and in bronze. The principal of his productions are, the wooden throne at Canterbury, the monument of Viscount Camden, at Exton in Rutlandshire, the font in St. James's church, the statue of Charles II. at Charing Cross, and that of James II. in the Privy Garden. Died 3 August, 1721.

GIBBONS, JOHN, a Jesuit, born at Wells, Somersetshire, 1544. He was educated at one of the English universities, and afterwards became a canon of Bonn, but resigned that preferment in order to embrace the institute of St. Ignatius. He died rector of the college at Triers 3 Dec., 1589. He wrote, A Treatise on the Saints; The Confutation of George Schon's [a Calvinist minister at Heidelberg] Thesis, that the Pope was Anti-Christ; A Treatise on Communion in one kind, 1584. He was also the principal compiler of the 'Concertatio Ecclesiarum Catholicarum in Anglia,' Triers, 1583. It was re-edited with considerable additions the year following, by John Bridgewater; and again in 1598.—Oliver; Dodd.

GIBBONS, ORLANDO, a native of Cambridge, was appointed organist of the chapels royal 1604. In 1606 he was admitted bachelor of music at Cambridge, and was created doctor of music at Oxford 1622. Being commanded to Canterbury to attend the solemnization of the marriage of Charles I. with the Princess Henrietta Maria, he was seized with the smallpox, of which he died in that city 5 June, 1625. He was concerned, jointly with Dr. John Bull and William Byrd, in the composition of a music book for the virginal, entitled 'Parthenia.' In 1612 he published Madrigals of five parts, for voices and viols. He also composed the tunes to the hymns and songs of the church, translated by George Withers. Numerous services and anthems of his are extant in the cathedral books, and some are printed in various collections. The service in F and his anthem of Hosanna are mentioned with great approbation by writers on music, who agree as to the superior excellence of his church music in general. One of his sons, Christopher Gibbons, Mus. Doct. Oxon., was organist to Charles II., and many of his anthems are extant, though he was more celebrated for his skill in performing on the organ than for his compositions. He died 1676. Edward Gibbons, the brother of Orlando, was organist of Salisbury Cathedral, and the author of some madrigals.

GIBBONS, RICHARD, a Jesuit, brother of John, mentioned above, entered the Society at Rome 1573; and died at Douay 23 June, 1632, æt. 83. He published numerous works, but is chiefly known by his edition of Nicholas Harpsfield's 'Historia Anglicana Ecclesiastica,' folio, Douay, 1622; and his translations of De la Puente's Meditations on the Mysteries, and Louis de Granada's Memorial of a Christian Life.—Oliver; Dodd.

GIBBONS, THOMAS, D.D., a dissenting minister, born at Swaffham, Norfolk, 31 May, 1720. He became pastor of an Independent meeting in Silver Street, London, 1743; but the next year removed to Haberdashers' Hall. In 1754 he became one of the tutors of the academy at Mile End, and in 1764 received the degree of doctor in divinity from Aberdeen. Died 22 Feb., 1785. Dr. Gibbons published—Juvenilia; or poems on several occasions; Family Sermons; A System of Rhetoric; Female Worthies, or the Lives of Pious Women, 2 vols.; Memoirs of Dr. Isaac Watts. After his death, three volumes of his sermons were published by subscription.

GIBERT.

GIBBS, JAMES, M.D., was born at Rouen about 1616, being son of William Gibbs, physician to Queen Mary, wife of King Charles I. At nine years of age he was brought to England, and after being initiated in the rudiments was sent to the English college at St. Omer. He next studied anatomy and medicine at Padua; and in 1644 removed to Rome, and became tutor to Almericus, son of Francis, duke of Modena. Having spent two years in this honourable employment, he was appointed physician to Cardinal Bernardini, after whose decease he was a domestic to Prince Giustiniani. In 1657 Pope Alexander VII. appointed him professor of rhetoric in the famous school 'Sapienza.' Gibbs was much admired for his ingenious performances in poetry, and the Emperor Leopold honoured him with the title of poet-laureate 1667. He also received the degree of M.D. from Oxford, on which occasion some of the choicest wits of that university complimented him with Latin verses. Dr. Gibbs died at Rome 26 June, 1677, aged 66. He wrote 'Carminum pars lyrica, ad exemplum Quinti Horatii Flacci,' &c., 8vo., Rome, 1668; Carminum pars altera; Orationes et prelationes; Epistolæ; Pinacotheca Spadia, sive Pontificum Romanorum series; De Medico, libri iii.

GIBBS, JAMES, an architect, born at Aberdeen 1674, and educated at the Marischal College, where he took the degree of master of arts; after which he went to Holland, and entered into the service of a builder. Here he became known to the earl of Mar, who patronized him, and thus he was enabled to travel for improvement into Italy. About 1710 he came to England, where, by the interest of his noble friend, he was employed in planning and executing St. Martin's Church in the Fields, St. Mary's in the Strand, and other public works. After this he executed the Radcliff Library at Oxford, and the Senate House at Cambridge, where also he showed his abilities in King's College, and the Royal Library. Died 5 August, 1754.—In 1728 he published a folio volume of his designs.

GIBBS, SIR VICARY, chief justice of the Common Pleas, was the son of an apothecary at Exeter, and born there 1752. He received his education at Eton, from whence he removed to King's College, Cambridge, where he was distinguished by his classical attainments, and in 1772 was elected to a Craven scholarship. While at college, he entered as a student of Lincoln's Inn, and in due course was called to the bar. Through the friendship of Dunning, he became a leading counsel on the western circuit; and on the death of Mr. Richard Burke was chosen recorder of Bristol. The trials of Horne Tooke, Hardy, and others, for high treason, brought the talents of Mr. Gibbs still more conspicuously before the public, and soon afterwards he became king's counsel. He was also elected into parliament for the university of Cambridge; made chief justice of Chester; next solicitor and afterwards attorney-general, with the honour of knighthood. In 1813 he was appointed a puisne judge of the Common Pleas; and the year following chief of the same court. After discharging the duties of this office with the greatest reputation, he resigned it, at the end of 1818, on account of his increasing infirmities. Died 9 Feb., 1820.

GIBERT, BALTHAZAR, a celebrated professor in the university of Paris, born at Aix 17 Jan., 1662; died 28 Oct., 1741. He published a Treatise on True Eloquence, and a great number of other works.

GIBERT, JEAN PIERRE, a cousin of the preceding, and able writer on canon law, was born at Aix 1660, and died at Paris 2 Nov., 1736.

GIBERTI, JOHN MATTHEW, was born at Palermo 1495; consecrated bishop of Verona 1524; died 30 Dec., 1543. The works of this learned and pious prelate, who rendered important services to the church, were published at Verona 1733.

GIBOUKS, PETER. See ANSELM, FATHER.

GIBSON, EDMUND, a bishop and antiquary, was born at Bampton, Westmerland, 1669. He became a commoner of Queen's College, Oxford, where he studied the northern languages. He also published new editions of Drummond's 'Polemio-Middiana,' and James V. of Scotland's 'Cantilena Rustica,' with notes. These works were followed by a Latin translation of the Saxon Chronicle, 1692, and a catalogue of MSS. in Tenison's Library, and those at Oxford which had belonged to Dugdale. In 1695 he published a new translation of Camden's 'Britannia,' with additions. Of this new edition appeared several years afterwards. In 1698 he edited Sir Henry Spelman's posthumous works, and about this time he became chaplain to Archbishop Tenison, who conferred on him the degree of D.D., the archdeaconry of Surrey, and the rectory of Lambeth. In 1713 he published his 'Codex Juris Ecclesiastici Anglicani,' 2 vols. folio. In 1715 he was consecrated bishop of Lincoln, whence, in 1720, he was translated to London. Died 6 Sept., 1748. Besides the works already noticed, he published several on the antiquities of Britain; the life of Sir Thomas Bodley; tracts on the convocation; sermons; and pastoral letters.

GIBSON, MATTHEW, an English Catholic prelate, was consecrated bishop of Comana 3 Sept., 1780, and appointed vicar-apostolic of the northern district. Died 19 May, 1790. He published A Pastoral Letter addressed to all the Clergy and Faithful of the Northern District on the New Oath framed for the Catholics of this Kingdom, &c., Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1790. An answer to this, by a Protestant Catholic (to wit, Alexander Geddes), appeared the same year.

GIBSON, RICHARD, called 'the Dwarf,' an English painter, and the contemporary of Lely, whose manner he studied. In his youth he was servant to a lady at Mortlake, who put him under De Cleyn for instruction. Afterwards he became page to Charles I., and on marrying Anne Shepherd, who was also a dwarf, the king honoured the wedding with his presence, and gave away the bride. They were of equal stature, each measuring three feet ten inches; but their children, five of whom arrived at maturity, were of the usual size. Gibson died in 1690, æt. 75, and his wife in 1709, aged 89. William Gibson, the nephew of Richard, was also a painter and copyist of Lely. He died 1702, aged 58. Edward Gibson, a member of the same family, painted portraits in oil and crayons.

GIBSON, THOMAS, a native of Morpeth, in Northumberland, was educated at Cambridge (M.B. 1511). He was noted for his extraordinary success in curing diseases, and also for his strong antipathy to the Catholic religion. For some years he carried on the business of a printer in London, where he died 1562. He wrote much, and with one exception, all the known productions of his press were compiled by himself. Among his works are 'The Concordance of the New Testament,' 1535; 'The Great Herball newly corrected,' 1539; 'A breve Cronycle of the Bysshope of Romes Blessynge, and of the Prelates Bynneicall and charitable rewardes from the tyme of King Heralde unto this day,' no date, in English rhyme. His Concordance is the first printed work of that kind in the English language.—Athen. Cantab.

GIBSON, THOMAS, an English painter, who died 28 April, 1751, aged about 71.

GIBSON, WILLIAM, an English Catholic prelate, was consecrated bishop of Acanthos 5 Dec., 1790, and appointed vicar-apostolic of the northern district. He died 9 June, 1821.

GIDDY. See GILBERT.

GIFFARD, BONAVENTURE, D.D., a prelate of the Roman Church, born at Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, 1642. At an early age he was sent to the English college at Douay, where he remained till 1667, and then spent ten years in the university of Paris, where he was created D.D. James II., on ascending the throne, made him one of his chaplains; and he was promoted to the episcopal dignity, and consecrated 22 April, 1687, with the title of bishop of Madaura. At first he was vicar-apostolic of the midland district; but was transferred to the London district 1702. On the breaking out of the Revolution (1688) he was committed to Newgate, where he remained a prisoner about twelve months. After gaining his liberty he lived privately in London by connivance of the government, who gave him very little disturbance, being fully satisfied of the inoffensiveness of his behaviour. He died at Hammersmith 12 March, 1733-4, according to Dodd, though the inscription on his tombstone, in St. Pancras church, gives 12 March, 1736, as the date of his decease. He was author of A Sermon on the Nativity of our Lord, preach'd before the King and Queen at Whitehall, 1687, 4to., London, 1688; and in 1722 there was printed a Relation of a Conference between him and W. Jane, dean of Gloucester, concerning the Real Presence.

GIFFARD, WILLIAM, D.D., archbishop of Rheims, was born in Hampshire 1554 or 1555. At the proper age he was sent to Lincoln College, Oxford, where he pursued his studies for at least four years; and from thence proceeded to Louvain, where he went through a course of divinity under the celebrated Bellarmine, and was passed bachelor of that faculty. The degree of doctor was conferred upon him at Pont-à-Mousson 1584. For eleven years he worthily filled the chair of theology at Rheims. He was also rector of the university of Rheims, and dean of Lisle, in Flanders. About 1602 he entered the order of St. Benedict, on which occasion he assumed the name of Gabriel à Sancta Maria; and it was he who induced the cardinal of Lorraine to bestow Dieulwart on Englishmen of that order. He became prior of the Benedictine monastery at St. Malo; and in 1617 president of the English Benedictine province. In or about 1619 he was nominated coadjutor to the cardinal archbishop of Rheims, and consecrated as bishop of Archidapolis; and in 1622 he succeeded as archbishop and duke of Rheims, first peer of France, and legate born of the Holy Sec. This virtuous and learned prelate died 11 April, 1629. He assisted Dr. Anthony Champney in his 'Treatise on the Protestant Ordinations,' 1616; and his 'Sermons for Advent,' delivered in French, and translated by himself into Latin, were published at Rheims 1625. He also completed the treatise 'Calvino-Turcismus,' which had been commenced by Dr. William Reynolds.—Dodd; Obit.

GIFFEN, HUBERT VAN, in Latin Gifanius, a jurist and philologist, born at Buren in Guelderland 1534; died at Prague 26 July, 1604.

GIFFORD, ANDREW, D.D., a Baptist minister, born at Bristol 17 Aug., 1700. In 1725 he became pastor of a congregation at Nottingham, whence he removed to the meeting in Eagle Street, London, and in 1754 obtained his doctor's degree from Aberdeen. In 1757 he was appointed assistant-librarian of the British Museum. He published some Sermons, and an edition of Folkes's Tables of Coins. Died 19 June, 1784.

GIFFORD, JOHN, a political writer, whose real name was John Richard Green, was born 1758. He was brought up by his grandfather, who left him some property, which enabled him to go to Oxford, where he became a commoner of St. John's College; but left the university without a degree. He now turned to the law as a profession; but having dissipated his little fortune, he was obliged to go abroad, under the assumed name, which he ever after retained. He returned in 1788, and, on the breaking out of the French revolution, devoted his pen to the defence of government in church and state. He contributed to the establishment of the 'British Critic,' and afterwards of the 'Anti-Jacobin Review,' which last arose out of a newspaper of the same name. Besides these concerns, and a number of pamphlets which he published, Mr. Gifford found time to compile some larger works; as—'The History of France,' 5 vols.; 'The Reign of Louis XVI.;' and 'History of the French Revolution;' 'History of the Political Life of the Right Hon. William Pitt, 3 vols. For these services he was rewarded with a pension, and made a police magistrate. He died at Bromley, Kent, 6 March, 1818.

GIFFORD, RICHARD, after graduating as B.A. at Balliol College, Oxford, took orders and was appointed curate of Richard's Castle, Herefordshire. Afterwards he was appointed morning preacher at St. Anne's, Soho, and in 1758 chaplain to the marquis of Tweeddale. He was presented to the vicarage of Duffield, Derbyshire, 1759; to the rectory of North Okendon, Essex, 1772; and died 1 March, 1807, aged 82. Mr. Gifford published 'Remarks on Mr. Kennicott's Dissertation on the Tree of Life in Paradise;' 'Contemplations,' a poem; and 'Outlines of an Answer to Dr. Priestley's Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit,' 1782.

GIFFORD, ROBERT, Lord Gifford, was born at Exeter 24 Feb., 1779, and at first articled to an attorney in that city, though he subsequently went to the bar. In 1817 he was appointed solicitor-general, and shortly afterwards took his seat in parliament for the borough of Eye, in Suffolk. He was advanced to the attorney-generalship 1819. In 1824 he was appointed chief justice of the Common Pleas, and the same year the university of Cambridge conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.A. The same year, also, he was appointed deputy speaker of the House of Lords, being created a peer by the title of Baron Gifford, of St. Leonard's, co. Devon. He succeeded Sir Thomas Plumer as Master of the Rolls 1824; and died 4 Sept., 1826.

GIFFORD, WILLIAM, a critic and poet, born at

GILBERT.

Ashburton, Devonshire, April, 1756. He was left an orphan in early childhood, and apprenticed to a shoemaker. His master refused to allow him to lighten the drudgery of his occupation by reading, but he nevertheless contrived by stealth to acquire considerable knowledge of mathematics, and occasionally wrote verses. Some of the latter came into the hands of Mr. Cookesley, a surgeon, who raised a subscription to purchase his freedom. He was immediately put under the charge of a teacher, and although, with the exception of mathematics, his attainments were then almost nothing, in two years he was fitted for the university of Oxford, and entered Exeter College, where he was appointed Bible reader. Having accidentally fallen under the notice of Lord Grosvenor, he was invited by that nobleman to live with him, and subsequently spent many years on the Continent as travelling tutor to his son. After his return to England he published in 1791 his 'Baviad,' a paraphrase on the first satire of Persius, in which the popular Della Cruscan poetry of the day was happily ridiculed and effectually put down. This work was followed in 1795 by the 'Mæviad,' an imitation of Horace directed against the corruptions of the drama. His 'Epistle to Peter Pindar,' published in 1800, is one of the bitterest attacks ever directed against an opponent. Being now known as a keen political writer, he wrote with George Ellis and Frere for the 'Anti-Jacobin' upon its commencement by Canning, and from this connexion received two offices under government, which he held for life. He also translated Persius, and edited the dramatic works of Massinger, Ben Jonson, Ford, and Shirley. Upon the establishment of the Quarterly Review in 1809 he became its editor, a position he retained till about two years before his death, which event occurred in London 31 Dec., 1826.

GIGGEO, ANTHONY, a Milanese divine, who compiled a valuable Arabic-Latin Lexicon. Died 1632.

GILBERT, JAMES WILLIAM, F.R.S., a writer on banking, was born in London 21 March, 1794. He was for some years general manager of the London and Westminster Bank; and died 8 Aug., 1863. His principal works are an answer to Cobbett's History of the Reformation; 'Practical Treatise on Banking;' 'The History and Principles of Banking;' 'The History of Banking in Ireland;' 'The Logic of Banking;' 'Banking and the Currency;' 'History of Banking in America;' 'Logic for the Million.'

GILBERT, ST., the founder of the Gilbertin order, was born at Sempringham, Lincolnshire, and after a clerical education received ordination from the bishop of Lincoln. In 1123 he became parson of the united livings of Sempringham and Tirington. He gave a rule to seven holy virgins, who lived in strict enclosure in a house adjoining to the wall of his parish church of St. Andrew at Sempringham, and another afterwards to a community of men, who desired to live under his direction. Such was the origin of the order of the Gilbertins, the approbation of which he procured from Pope Eugenius III. He built nine monasteries of women, and four of canons regular, in which monasteries he left, at the time of his death, 1500 religious women, and 700 religious men. He died 3 Feb., 1189-90, being 106 years old, and was canonized by Innocent III. in 1202. Festival, Feb. 4.

GILBERT.

GILBERT, DAVIES, D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., whose name was originally Giddy, was born at St. Erth, Cornwall, March, 1767, and educated at Pembroke College, Oxford (M.A. 1790). In 1792 he served the office of high sheriff of his native county; and he also sat in parliament as member for Helston (1804-6), and for Bodmin (1806-1832). In 1808 he married the daughter and heiress of Thomas Gilbert, of Eastbourne, Sussex, and he assumed the name of Gilbert only in 1817. Throughout life Mr. Gilbert was very fond of scientific pursuits, and for three years he held the honourable post of President of the Royal Society. The university of Oxford also honoured him with the degree of D.C.L. 1832. His published works, however, relate to antiquarian and not scientific subjects. The principal are:—'A Collection of ancient Christmas Carols, with the tunes to which they were formerly sung in the West of England,' 1823; 'Mount Calvary, or the History of the Passion, Death, and Resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; written in Cornish and interpreted in the English tongue by John Keigwin, gent., in 1682,' 1826; 'The Creation of the World, with Noah's Flood, written in Cornish in 1611 by William Jordan, and translated by John Keigwin,' 1827; works on the history of St. Neot's, Cornwall; 'Parochial History of Cornwall, founded on the MS. Histories of Mr. Hals and Mr. Tonkin,' 4 vols. 8vo., London 1837-8. Dr. Gilbert died at Eastbourne 24 Dec., 1839.

GILBERT, Sir HUMPHREY, an enterprising but unfortunate navigator, was born in Devonshire 1539. He lost his father at an early age, and his mother married Mr. Raleigh, by whom she had the celebrated Sir Walter. The subject of this article had his education at Eton and Oxford; after which he went, in a military character, to Ireland, where for his services he was knighted 1570. He returned soon after to England, and married a rich heiress, but lost a good part of his property in a speculating concern with Sir Thomas Smith, for converting iron into copper. He published, in 1576, a discourse to prove the practicability of a north-west passage to China; and in 1578 he sailed on a voyage of discovery himself to the coast of America. In a second voyage, in 1583, he took possession of Newfoundland; but his ship foundered in her passage to England 9 Sept., 1584. He was a good mathematician, and of an enterprising genius.

GILBERT, Sir JEFFREY, a judge, was, it is supposed, a native of Devonshire, and born 10 Oct., 1674. Of his education no particulars are recorded; but in 1715 he was appointed one of the judges in the Irish Court of King's Bench, from which he was removed to the situation of chief baron of the Exchequer in that kingdom. In 1722 he was recalled to England, and made a baron of the Exchequer; and, two years afterwards, he was one of the commissioners of the great seal, with Sir Joseph Jekill and Sir Robert Raymond. In 1725 he was appointed chief baron of the Exchequer, but died 14 Oct., 1726, at Bath. He published a number of legal works and an abridgment of Locke on the Understanding.

GILBERT, WILLIAM, M.D., was born at Colchester 1540. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge; after which he travelled abroad. On his return he became fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and settled in London, where he was greatly esteemed for his skill, and was appointed physician to Queen Elizabeth. In 1600 he published a work on the nature and properties of the loadstone, entitled, 'De Magnete, magneticisque corporibus, et de magno magnete Tellure, physiologia nova.' In this work he pointed out the variation of the magnet, and the uses to which it was to be applied in navigation; a discovery of great importance to mariners. He died at Colchester 30 Nov., 1603. After his death was printed another work of his, entitled, 'De mundi nostro sublunari philosophia nova.'—Athen. Cantab.

GILBERT, WILLIAM, B.D., a nonconformist divine, born in Shropshire 1613, and educated at Edmund Hall, Oxford. He went to Ireland, and, on his return, was presented by Lord Wharton to the living of Upper Winchington, Bucks; afterwards to the vicarage of St. Laurence, Reading; and, lastly, to the rectory of Edgmond, in his native county, from which he was ejected at the Restoration. He then officiated in conventicles at Oxford and London, and died at the former place 15 July, 1694. His works are, 'Vindiciae supremi Dei domini,' against Dr. Owen; 'England's Passing Bell, a poem, written soon after the plague, the fire of London, and the Dutch war;' 'Super auspaticissimo regis Gul. in Hiberniam descensu;' 'Epitaphia diversa.' He also published a dialogue, called 'Julius Secundus,' which he ascribed to Erasmus.

GILBERTUS ANGLICUS, an English writer of the twelfth century. His principal work is entitled 'Compendium Medicinæ tam mortuum universalium quam particularium,' printed at Lyons, 1510.

GILCHRIST, EBENEZER, a physician, was born at Dumfries 1707. He studied at Edinburgh, London, and Paris, but took his doctor's degree at Rheims, after which he returned to his native country, where he practised till his death 1774. He wrote two dissertations on nervous fevers in the Edinburgh Medical Essays; and a separate treatise on the use of sea voyages in medicine.
