PREFACE

The addition of a thirteenth volume devoted to an index and analysis of the twelve-volume Library, THE SOUTH IN THE BUILDING OF THE NATION, is intended to meet the oft-expressed desires of many readers. Certainly no work of reference more keenly merits such treatment. At every turn as the editor progressed with the work new avenues opened up inviting research and suggesting still further fields of investigation.

It has been a wonderfully inspiring study, and one which in the doing would be calculated to make every Southerner and every American citizen glow with pride. If only the men of early deeds, the empire-builders of the past, had been privileged to look through the broad, rich pages of these books, foreseeing the achievement of each state and of the South as a Whole,—how great would have been their joy of proprietorship! But what was denied them is now within the reach of every schoolboy and girl. Truly the half had never been told—no, nor even the tenth part set down—until this series of monumental volumes was published!

To have aided in any way in such a work, even though it be only as a guide pointing out pleasant paths to follow, is a source of gratification to the present editor. The need of systematic guidance to the Library has been long apparent. There is far too much in these comprehensive volumes for even the experienced reader to grasp at one trial; while the student following any special lines would inevitably miss many related topics of great value—without recourse to an Index or Courses of Study.

The present Index merits the name of Analytical, as it cites every important name and subject throughout the twelve volumes—often in more than one way, as, for example, a state university will be found listed both under the state and under the word university. The Index is closely alphabetized, and contains nearly 20,000 references, each complete in itself.

The Reading and Study Courses, which follow are given a special word of explanation. They are the other hemisphere to the completed whole, or, to vary the figure of speech, the other segment to the keystone of the arch. They should be used closely in connection with the Index, as they constantly refer back to it for further citations. This was found necessary in order to avoid extending the Courses uselessly. For example, George Washington might be referred to only once at a given place in the Courses, whereas an entire column of entries will be found under his name in the Index.

With the two placed side by side, the reader should be able to map out many congenial lines of related research and pleasurable perusal for himself. This is but another tribute to the inexhaustible quality of the Library. It carries us back unwearied to the very well-springs of history and shows us all the varied causes—social, industrial, political, intellectual, æsthetic, military,—which have made the South a mighty factor in the upbuilding of our common country.

SOUTHERN READING AND STUDY COURSES

HOW TO USE THE SOUTHERN READING AND STUDY COURSES

HE courses for reading and study which follow are intended to guide the reader through a fascinating journey—one which no general history has pretended to describe, as never before has such an array of facts been accessible. This journey conducts us through each and every one of the Southern states, showing us not only the intimate secrets of their splendid history of the past, but also unfolding their life and growth through successive decades and showing their share “in the building of the Nation.”

Before the completion of such a Library as “The South in the Building of the Nation,” a Reading Course such as the present one would have been impossible. But with this monumental Library at hand, many courses could be prepared, specializing along the lines in which the reader is most interested. Here in twelve generous volumes, made possible only by the contributions and coöperation of the ablest authorities in every state, the reader will find a wonderful story for each individual state and the South as a whole. It is a story of exploration and settlement—progress and development—misunderstanding and war—reunion, peace and prosperity—writ large on the annals of our nation for the last three hundred years.

The very wealth of material, however, is apt to confuse the reader who sees this splendid Library for the first time. There is so much of interest and value that it is an “embarrassment of riches.” Hence the need of a Reading and Study Course, such as the present one, to outline suggestive topics and point out important parallel features.

Each state is taken up in alphabetical order, for ease of reference, and the states are followed by a treatment of the South as a whole. When used in conjunction with the Analytical Index, the Courses will be found to open up a wide array of pleasant and profitable fields.

Take Alabama, the first state considered, for example. It is divided into five main heads, viz., General History, Politics and Government, Economic History, Intellectual Life and Social Life. These heads are subdivided, General History having five sections as follows: (1) Formative Period,

(2) Federal Period, (3) War Period, (4) Reconstruction Period, and (5) Modern Period. The five sections are again split up into subheads, each with its group of topics, cited to volume and page. Thus the youngest reader would have no difficulty in following some line of interest; while the oldest student would find abundant material for advanced research—all provided for within the pages of this comprehensive Library itself.

A similar plan to that of the states, but much broader, is followed in the South as a whole; and in each instance a series of Review Questions are included to sharpen the reader's memory. The Courses are by no means exhaustive; they are merely suggestive. The reader is referred to the thorough Index for further subjects and full treatment of related topics. But by the time he has followed any one of the Reading Courses he can easily draw upon the Index to map out other lines for himself.

If the reader is interested in History he will find a story as absorbing as fiction, yet true in every detail, showing the important part played by the South in the Nation's development—picturing the creation of each state from the wilderness—outlining its remarkable growth in spite of conditions before which many a mighty nation has gone down to oblivion—and describing every phase of state life for three momentous centuries.

If he is a student of Politics and Government, here he will be given broad lines of research into the integral causes of our country's political stability. To this section, as to others, some of our keenest writers and most incisive thinkers have contributed.

Again, in Economics an abundance of material comparative and statistic is given, showing the industrial life of pioneer days as related to the progress of the present time.

If one is especially interested in Sociology, Racial Problems, or Social Movements, here will be found suggestive and valuable lines of research. Each and every subject, such as Education, Science, Art, Religion, Temperance, Labor, the Professions, etc., receive through-going treatment at the hands of the writers and experts best fitted to handle them.

For those interested in Literature, the achievements in various fields of letters are traced for each state, as well as those of the South as a whole. The criticisms and estimates are scholarly and illuminating; well-written biographies place one in intimate touch with the career of every important writer. An entire volume is devoted to examples of the work of the South's fiction writers.

For those particularly interested in culture and æsthetics, there are sections devoted to Music, Painting, Sculpture, Pottery, and Architecture. In a word, this comprehensive Library provides abundant material for every reading taste.

Not only individual readers, but also study clubs, reading circles, and classes in schools and colleges, will find something here of help and mental stimulus. What, indeed, could be more practical, now that the South has come again into her own, than a course in Southern history and affairs? To every careful reader and earnest student, North and South, this is offered as a quick guide and introduction to a fountain source of fact—"The South in the Building of the Nation."

ALABAMA

Alabama is the twenty-second state in order of admission to the Union, and the twenty-seventh in point of size. It is a south-central state, bounded on the north by Tennessee, on the east by Georgia, on the south by Florida and the Gulf of Mexico, and on the west by Mississippi. Length, north to south, 336 miles; width, east to west, 175 miles; area, 51,998 square miles; population (census of 1910), 2,138,093, of whom 1,228,841 are white. The northern part of the state is occupied by low spurs of the Appalachian mountains, the level Piedmont plain and the Cumberland plateau, in which are extensive coal fields. The southern part is a coastal plain. About sixty-five per cent. of the population are engaged in farming; but of recent years the coal and iron interests have been increasingly important.

ARKANSAS

Arkansas is the twenty-fifth state in order of admission to the Union, and is at the extreme west of the group of southern states. It is bounded on the north by Missouri; on the east by the Mississippi River which separates it from Tennessee and Mississippi; on the south by Louisiana and Texas; and on the west by Oklahoma. Length, north to south, 250 miles; width, east to west, 175 to 275 miles; area 53,335 square miles; population (census of 1910) 1,574,449, of whom 1,331,031 are white. The general surface of the state is an inclined plane, with a slope from the north to the south or southeast. Arkansas is largely an agricultural state, lumbering industries also being important. Coal is the chief mining product.

FLORIDA

Although Florida was one of the first places discovered and explored in America, it was the twenty-seventh state to be admitted into the Union, long remaining under foreign control. It is the southernmost state, occupying the peninsula separating the Gulf of Mexico from the Atlantic Ocean. This peninsula is about 375 miles long, with an average width of 95 miles. The total area is 58,666 square miles, of which 3,805 square miles is water. The surface is very low and flat, the highest point being about 300 feet. The southern part is largely occupied by the Everglades, an extensive swamp, which when reclaimed has proved very fertile. The census of 1910 shows the population to be 752,619, of whom 443,646 are white. The state is noted for its fruit raising. Forests cover over sixty per cent of the surface, and turpentine products are important. Phosphate mining and sponge fishing are also noteworthy.

GEORGIA

Georgia was one of the original thirteen colonies, and is the largest state east of the Mississippi River, having an area of 59,265 square miles. Its length, north to south, is 320 miles; width, east to west, 254 miles. It is bounded on the north by North Carolina and Tennessee; on the east by South Carolina and the Atlantic Ocean; on the south by Florida; and on the west by Alabama. The surface is irregular, rising in terraces from low, swampy land at the coast to mountain ranges in the north and northwest. The land is noted for its variety of soils and many streams. The population (census of 1910), was 2,609,121, of whom 1,431,816 were white. Seventy per cent of the land area is in farms, the chief crops being corn and cotton. Manufactures of cotton goods, lumber and fertilizers are important. Mining is largely stone and clay products.

KENTUCKY

Kentucky was the second state to be admitted into the Union, after the thirteen original colonies had promulgated a Constitution. It is one of the most northern of the Southern States, being bounded on the north by Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, following the lines of the Ohio River; on the east by West Virginia and Virginia; on the south by Tennessee; and on the west by Illinois and Missouri. Its total area is 40,598 square miles. The surface in the eastern part is mountainous, and the country is rolling, with a gentle slope toward the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The state is well watered and fertile, and is noted for its Blue Grass region and live stock. The principal crops are corn and tobacco, the former being valued at $53,000,000, and the latter at $37,000,000, in 1910. Coal is the most valuable mineral. The population in 1910 was 2,289,905, of whom 2,027,995 were white.

LOUISIANA

Louisiana is the eighteenth state in the Union and its early history is extremely important, as the Louisiana Purchase from the French in 1803 opened up not only the mouth of the Mississippi River to the United States but also included a vast tract of middle western country extending as far north as Montana. Louisiana, the present state, is bounded on the north by Arkansas, on the east by Mississippi, on the south by the Gulf of Mexico and on the west by Texas. Its area is 48,506 square miles, of which 3,097 square miles is water. The Mississippi River, whose delta forms the lower part of the country, traverses the entire length of the state. The average elevation above the sea level is only 75 feet. The river banks are protected by high levees, on which upwards of $50,000,000 have been expended. The soil is especially suited to sugar cane and rice. Cotton also is a leading crop. Fisheries are important, oysters representing about one-half of the annual catch. Oil wells produce a good grade of petroleum valued at over $2,000,000 per year. Population (census of 1910), was 1,656,388, of whom 941,125 were white.

MARYLAND

Maryland, one of the original thirteen colonies, is an Atlantic Coast state. It is bounded on the north by Pennsylvania and Delaware, on the east by Delaware and the ocean, and on the south and west by Virginia and West Virginia. It is the most northerly of the Southern States. Its outline is very irregular. The Chesapeake Bay divides it in half, and the land surface varies from a low coastal plain to rolling and mountainous country. The area is 12,327 square miles, of which 2,386 square miles is water. Maryland has a variety of soils suitable for grains, fruits, and vegetables. Corn, wheat, hay, potatoes and tobacco are among the most important products. The most valuable minerals are coal and iron. In 1910 Maryland ranked fifth among the states in fisheries. The 1910 census gave the state a population of 1,295,346, of whom 1,062,645 were white.

MISSISSIPPI

Mississippi is the twentieth state of the Union, and is one of the Gulf States; being bounded on the north by Tennessee, on the east by Alabama, on the south by the Gulf of Mexico and Louisiana, and on the west by Louisiana and Arkansas. Length, north to south, 332 miles; greatest breadth, 142 miles; area 46,865 square miles, of which 503 square miles is water. The state is divided into two sections by a low, broad ridge. To the east of this ridge are fertile plains; to the west the land descends to the swamps bordering the Mississippi River. The state ranks third in the production of cotton, and also raises large crops of corn. The lumber industry is important. The population in 1910 was 1,797,114, of whom 786,119 were white.

MISSOURI

Missouri was the twenty-fourth state admitted to the Union, and the eighteenth in point of size. It is at the extreme northwest of the Southern States, being bounded on the north by Iowa, on the east by Illinois and Kentucky, on the south by Arkansas, and on the west by Nebraska and Kansas. The Mississippi River forms its entire eastern boundary, and the Missouri a large portion of the western boundary before crossing the state. The total area is 69,420 square miles, of which 693 square miles is water. The southwest is mountainous, and the middle is rugged, becoming more level toward the Osage River. Agriculture and live stock interests are important, the annual output of corn being valued at over $100,000,000. Wheat and oats together total about one-half this sum. Hay and potatoes rank next in value. The chief mineral deposits are zinc and lead. The state is also prosperous in manufactures, which are largely dependent upon agriculture, live stock and forestry. The population (census of 1910) was 3,293,335, this state ranking seventh in order.

NORTH CAROLINA

North Carolina, one of the original thirteen colonies, is an Atlantic coast state bounded on the north by Virginia, on the south by South Carolina and Georgia, and on the west by Tennessee. Its width, east to west, is 503 miles, and length 187 miles. The area is 52,426 square miles, of which 3,686 square miles is water. The greater part of the surface belongs to the Atlantic slope, the ground gradually rising until it becomes mountainous in the west. The state is chiefly agricultural, the crops of corn, wheat and oats aggregating about $50,000,000 annually. Tobacco and cotton are important. Minerals are found but not in large quantities. The manufacture of cotton fabrics, tobacco products, and lumber is extensive. The 1910 census showed a population of 2,206,287, of whom 1,500,513 are white. This population is largely rural.

SOUTH CAROLINA

South Carolina, one of the original thirteen colonies, is a South Atlantic state, being bounded on the north by North Carolina and on the west and south by Georgia. It is triangular in shape, with 190 miles of coast line, and an apex 240 miles inland. The area is 30,989 square miles, of which 494 square miles is water. The surface is roughly divided into five sections; the coastal region, the pine belt, the sand and red hills, the Piedmont region, and the Alpine region. Sixty-nine per cent of the land is in farms, the chief products being cotton, corn and tobacco. Manufactures, especially of cotton goods, have shown rapid growth in recent years. The census of 1910 showed a population of 1,515,400, of whom 679,162 are white.

TENNESSEE

Tennessee is the sixteenth state in order of admission, and is noted geographically for the number of states it borders. On the north are Kentucky and Virginia; on the east North Carolina; on the south Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi; and on the west Arkansas and Missouri. In shape it is like a sled, the extreme length east to west being 432 miles, and the extreme breadth 109 miles. The total area is 42,022 square miles, of which 335 square miles is water. The state is divided into three parts: East Tennessee a valley lying between parallel mountain ranges; Middle Tennessee being a central geological basin; and West Tennessee being a part of the Mississippi Valley proper. This results in a wide diversity of climate and products, the mountain section being rich in minerals such as coal, copper, iron and marble; and the agricultural products of the whole state being extensive. Manufactures are also important, textiles, iron, lumber and tobacco being especially noteworthy. The population, according to the 1910 census, was 2,184,789, of whom 1,711,433 were white.

TEXAS

Texas is, next to Florida, the most southerly state in the Union and also contains characteristics of western life. It is by far the largest state, containing an area of 265,896 square miles, of which 3,498 square miles is water. The land rises gradually from the Gulf coast toward the western boundary, but is generally a plain. In the southwest is a rugged, mountainous country. To the south and southwest of Texas lies Mexico, of which it was formerly a part. On the northwest is New Mexico; north is Oklahoma; and east is Louisiana. Texas ranks first in live stock, due to its extensive ranges. Agricultural products, including cotton, form a large part of its wealth, although in recent years petroleum and coal have been increasingly developed. The census of 1910 showed a population of 3,896,542, of whom 3,204,896 were white.

VIRGINIA

Virginia, one of the thirteen colonies, has the distinction of containing the first permanent English settlement on the continent. The early history is largely that of the beginnings of the country as a whole, and the original area and northwestern conquests gave the colony preponderating influence. The present state has an area of 42,627 square miles, of which 2,365 square miles is water. Three great topographical regions cross in parallel bands—the Coastal Plain, the Piedmont Plain, and the Appalachian Range. The soil is peculiarly adapted to tobacco, corn, wheat, oats, hay and vegetables. Live stock is important, and the state ranks second in fisheries. Coal and iron are principal minerals. Manufactures of tobacco, cotton, steel and lumber products are extensive. The population in 1910 was 2,061,612, of whom 1,389,809 were white.

WEST VIRGINIA

West Virginia, the thirty-fifth state in the Union, has the most irregular outline of any of the states. It is also one of the most northerly of the southern group, bordering Ohio and Pennsylvania on the north, Ohio and Kentucky on the west, and its parent state of Virginia on the southeast. The state embraces four distinct physical regions, a large part of the surface being rugged and mountainous. The area is 24,715 square miles. While agriculture is important, it is outranked by the mineral resources such as coal, gas and petroleum. In 1910 the state ranked second in the production of coal. The population in 1910 was 1,221,119, of whom 1,158,817 were white.
