PREFACE.

THE inscriptions contained in this volume were copied in intervals of leisure by Mr. John Smith, messenger, Royal Bank, with an enthusiasm and care worthy of all commendation. They have since been compared with the tombstones, brought up to date, and any accidental errors rectified. Mr. Smith is also responsible for the Index.

The present volume deals only with that portion of the burying ground lying more immediately round the church, and extending up the "knowe" to the south west. The latter part is the most ancient portion of the churchyard, and has probably been a place of interment for more than a thousand years, as we know there has been a church on the present site from very early times. That part of the accompanying plan which contains the numbers referring to the different "lairs" shows exactly the area dealt with in the following pages. The oldest part is, as has been said, the "knowe"; at the end of the sixteenth century it was in a very neglected condition, "nowt, horse and scheipe" grazed unrestrained upon it, but in 1597 the wall surrounding it was repaired. Nothing more seems to have been done till 1701, when the ground proving too small for the requirements of the parish, an addition was made by taking in some land to the west, up to the present entrance on that side. Eighty-six years afterwards a further addition was effected by which the ground to the north and east of the church, then a marsh extending to the shore of the Nor' Loch, was drained and to a certain extent filled with earth. The churchyard was further enlarged in 1814 by a narrow strip to the north being taken in, and again in 1831 and 1834 by the inclusion of a large area of ground to the south-east of the church. The inscriptions in this newest portion (only half of which appears on the plan) are not included in the present volume, but it is to be hoped that they will be copied later.

Of the usefulness, from the point of view of family history and genealogy, of a work like this, there can be no doubt. Had the task been undertaken a hundred years ago or so it would have been still more important, because hundreds of inscriptions which would then have been perfectly legible must have totally disappeared, stones and all. It is indeed singular that in a place of interment which must have existed as such from the dawn of authentic history, there is only one stone (now removed inside the church), that of Robert Pont, which dates back so far as 1606. Very few indeed are earlier than the end of the seventeenth century, though eighteenth century stones are common.

Lovers of the grotesque, the humorous or the pathetic in mortuary literature will find little here to gratify their taste. With characteristic Scottish reserve the inscriptions do little else, as a rule, than commemorate names and dates. Occasionally a note of pathos is struck; when verse is introduced it is generally confined to a portion of a psalm or a paraphrase. Scriptural texts are of course very frequent, but it has not been thought necessary to reproduce these in the present rendering of the inscriptions. Stilted epitaphs, full of turgid encomium, are commendably rare. One gentleman does not entrust the task of framing his eulogium to his surviving relatives or executors; it is therefore recorded on his monument that "when dying he desired that if any epitaph should be written on him it should simply be that his conduct in life met with the approbation of his own mind at the hour of death." This amazing specimen of self-righteousness is however unique in the record.

It is interesting to observe the somewhat frequent occurrence of the burial of old servants with a testimony of the esteem in which they were held by their employers. They are often interred in the burial place of the family with whom they had spent most of their life.

There are not many specimens among the tombstones themselves of outstanding artistic merit. The most elaborate monument is a modern one (No. 17), but there are on the "knowe" some nicely carved old stones; one especially has such deeply undercut foliage decoration that it will outlast many memorials of much later date. Subjected as they now are to the devastating influences of the atmosphere in the centre of a large city, the tombstones show in many cases evidences of rapid decay. Some inscriptions which appear on the following pages will in a very few years be illegible. But much depends on the quality of the stone and the depth of the cutting. The lettering in many has not lasted more than a generation, while that of better original workmanship has resisted to a greater extent the ravages of time. What corroding influences stones have to combat in this situation is well illustrated by the fact that as these lines are being written much of the ornamentation on the outside of the church itself is being renewed and repaired owing to its decay ; this after a short existence of twenty years.

Here lie many members of the best and oldest families in Scotland ; some of the ancient nobility and many more of the untitled Scottish lairds ; one of the latter, Henry Nisbet of Dean, has one of the oldest and most interesting burying places of any in a vault below the church itself (No. 376). But many better known and more brilliant names occur. Of divines there are those of two ministers of St. Cuthbert's who stand out pre-eminent amongst their compeers, Robert Pont and "Dainty Davie" Williamson ; Principal Lee, the "Archdeacon Meadows" of the Book Hunter, is interred in the "ministers' knowe," though never an incumbent of the parish ; Dr. David Dickson has a noble monument to his memory on the west side of the church, a work difficult to excel in its combination of dignity and simplicity ; Dr. Macknight, famous in his day as the author of a Harmony of the Gospels, and James Alexander Haldane, who, though professionally a sailor, is chiefly known as an enthusiastic worker and preacher of evangelical religion, may also be mentioned. Of lawyers there is, as might be expected, no lack ; Lords Alva, Henderland, Murray, Handasyde and Ardmillan are all worthy representatives of the Scottish Bench, while lesser lights of the law are innumerable. In medicine, perhaps the most eminent exponents who are buried here are Dr. John Abercrombie, the author of a work on the "Intellectual Powers" which went through many editions, and a physican in great practice in his day, and Andrew Combe, physiologist and phrenologist, who was a learned and successful practitioner, and who must not be confounded in connection with phrenology with his more extreme brother George. Amongst authors and scholars one transcendant name stands out conspicuous, that of De Quincey, whose modest tomb is still an object of pilgrimage to many. Susan Ferrier, the authoress of Marriage, Inheritance and other stories not yet forgotten, Mark Napier, the gallant champion of Montrose, and whose keen and witty controversial writings on historical and genealogical matters may still be read with interest and amusement, James Pillans, the erudite professor whose scholastic career in Edinburgh extended from 1810 to 1863, all these, with other writers of now forgotten works, are interred in this old burying ground. Art is not largely represented ; the name of Sir Henry Raeburn occurs as the owner of a burial ground, but he is actually buried in the adjoining cemetery attached to St. John's. William B. Johnstone, R.S.A., whom some yet alive may remember as the first official keeper of the National Gallery, lies here, and he is not the only Academician. Hieronymus, or Jeremy Stabalini, a quaint Italian musician whose features are commemorated by John Kay in his Portraits, had a stone erected to his memory in 1815.

Digitized by Microsoft®

Such is a slight record of some of the more distinguished names to be found in the following pages. But the inscriptions touch life, and especially Edinburgh life, on all points, and can hardly fail to be of interest to the explorers of the records of the past.

The churchyard is kept in good order, but it is evident that epitaphs and tombstones are perishing year by year from causes over which the superintending body has no control. It is hoped that the representatives of those who lie in this ancient place of sepulture will see that the monuments of their ancestors are not allowed to moulder to decay.

67. Monument.

Beneath are the remains of Jane Bruce, whose long and honourable life manifested the purest feelings guided by a correct judgment, whose still voice of religion heard only in meritorious deeds, whose talents and truth, firmness in adversity, and lowliness in prosperity during xxxiii years of widowhood, were the sources of her own and of her family's happiness, her virtues have stamped impressions on their memories which time will hollow deeper till their ashes be mouldering with those of their mother. She died August 10th, 1794, in her 73rd year, was the widow of Captain Andrew Bruce, who fell in the service of his country, and the only descendant of the Rev. John Squyre, who in America, England and Scotland, by learning and publick virtues, became the companion and friend of the greatest characters of the age.

"Ah, whither fled art thou dear spirit blest
So pale and silent lies that form at rest,
How are the roses faded from the cheek
Which late the pure, the heavenly blush did seek
Health on her forehead shone, grace in her mein
With life and thought glowed her soft eye serene
Fair was the blossom bright as cloudless sky,
Elate with hope we deemed no tempest nigh,
When lo, a whirlwind's instantaneous gust
Left all her beauties to wither in the dust."

By him whose conquests thro' the world are known,
I to my first original am thrown
My earth lies here my better part's above
And lives, so I not death the conquerer prove
Yet lest the stingless king of terrors boast
Of what he's won and what he thinks I lost
He that's Almighty and for ever true
Engag'd this dust should rise and conquer too
What I possess secures me what's to come.
My clay shall be refin'd then sent for home.

ON SOUTH SIDE.

Sacred to the memory of William Whyt, Esquire of Kingston, Jamaica, and nephew of Bain Whyt, Esquire, Writer to the Signet. He died at Edinburgh 14th May 1820, aged 37 years.

Bain Whyt, son of the Rev. John Glen, Portobello, and grand nephew of the late Bain Whyt, Esquire, W.S., died 23rd March 1826, aged four years. Possessed of qualities uncommonly engaging he was much admired while he lived and deeply regretted when he died. "An angel's arm can't snatch me from the grave, Legions of Angels can't confine me there."

Sarah Isabella Glen, daughter of the Rev. John Glen, Portobello, died the 26th January 1828, aged one year and seven months. "A sweet blossom early cutt off, but ripe for glory."

PREFACE.

THE burying ground of St. Cuthbert's Church has been enlarged from time to time. The inscriptions in the more ancient portions of it were published in a previous issue by the Scottish Record Society. What are now given are those contained in the more recently acquired ground. In 1831 the manse, which belonged to the junior minister of the parish, with the adjacent garden and grounds which lay to the south of the south-east of the old churchyard, were feued to the Kirk Session for the purpose of being made into a burying ground, and in the same year another piece of ground lying to the south of the manse garden and which formed part of the glebe was allotted to the same purpose. Three years afterwards a small piece of waste ground also forming a portion of the glebe was added to those previously disposed of.

The newly acquired ground did not lie long undisturbed. In 1841 the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway obtained power to lay their lines through it, partly by a cutting and partly by means of a tunnel, and in more recent times further ground was acquired by the North British Railway to allow of the lines being doubled. Such a desecration of a burial ground is fortunately not common, but as the track is chiefly underground it does not obtrude its utilitarian ugliness into the quiet resting place of the dead so much as might have been expected.

The inscriptions noted in the following pages are, from the nature of the case, comparatively modern, and have not the same historical interest as those published in the preceding part. But there are many names commemorated which will not be soon forgotten. The great majority of the inscriptions are to the memory of more or less distinguished citizens of Edinburgh. Among them may be noted that of a former Lord Provost, Mr. Duncan Maclaren, a well known man in his day. The Bench is represented by at least two distinguished members, Lord Kinloch and the second Lord Curriehill; lawyers are numerous, and of Doctors there are not a few. The name of John Philip Wood, auditor of Excise, will always be remembered as that of one who triumphed over many natural disabilities, and who not only held an important Government appointment, but was the painstaking editor of a new addition of Sir Robert Douglas's Peerage of Scotland. Another literary celebrity may be mentioned in the person of Mrs. Grant of Laggan, the authoress of "Letters from the Mountains" and other works. Art has a distinguished representative in George Kemp, the ill-fated architect of the Scott monument.

None of the ministers of St. Cuthbert's are buried in this part of the ground, but several eminent and esteemed clerics are commemorated, generally by lengthy inscriptions, which contrast with the usually brief notices on the other tombs. Perhaps the best known of these ministers is Professor James Robertson, D.D., the founder of the Church of Scotland's Endowment Scheme. His step-son, Captain James Sholto Douglass, a gallant and picturesque figure whom few can now remember, is also commemorated here.

It is in the fitness of things that the remains of William Sime, along with ten of his grandchildren, should lie in St. Cuthbert's Churchyard, of which he was for many years Recorder. He also performed a public benefit by writing the "History of the West Kirk," in which there is much useful information. Here are also buried the members of many families who were intimately connected with the congregation who worshipped in the parish church, such as MacCullochs, Aikmans, Lorimers, Cattanachs, etc.

As before, the onerous task of copying the inscriptions has been carried out by the self-denying labour of Mr. John Smith, who has laid posterity under a debt of gratitude to him for having preserved for all time these frail and perishable records of a time that is past, but which one day will be looked back upon with interest and curiosity. His example should be followed throughout the whole country.

CENTRE PANEL.

In memory of the Reverend James Robertson, D.D., Professor of Divinity and Church History in the University of Edinburgh, whose warm heart extended its sympathy to all who love the Lord Jesus, and its compassion to those who were ignorant and out of the way, whose powerful advocacy was readily given to every noble enterprise, and who as Convenor of the Church of Scotland's Endowment Committee, conferred unspeakable benefit upon his church and country in the erection of upwards of sixty new parishes. He died in the midst of abounding labours December 2nd, 1869, in his fifty-eighth year, having adorned the age in which he lived and done honour to the country which gave him birth ; also Ann Forbes or Douglass, his wife, who died at 32 Blacket Place, Edinburgh, 24th February 1890, aged eighty-five.

LEFT PANEL.

In memory of Captain James Sholto Douglass, 4th Madras Light Cavalry, eldest son of the late Reverend Robert Douglass, minister of Ellon, Aberdeenshire, and step-son of the Reverend James Robertson, D.D., Professor of Divinity and Church History, Edinburgh, born at Ellon, January 28th, 1823, he died at Buxar October 8th, 1858, of wounds received the previous day while gallantly leading a charge against the rebels at Kheree ; his remains were interred at Buxar, where a monument erected by his brother officers bears testimony to the cordial esteem and affection with which they regarded him, and their deep grief for his untimely fall, the blank made by his death in the relations of son and brother is not to be filled up by the hand of time. In this burial ground are interred the remains of Robert Douglass, youngest brother of Captain James S. Douglass; he was born at Ellon, September 1st, 1827, and died of consumption at St. Heliers, Jersey, May 23rd, 1846.

The Reverend George Paxton, D.D., Sanct. Theol. Professor, late senior minister of Infirmary Street congregation of Original Seceders, author of "Scripture Illustrations," etc., died 9th April 1837, aged 75 years. His ardent and powerful mind was refined and polished by learning and liberal art; by vital religion were (sic) his manly virtues exalted into Christian graces. In the theological chair he taught and trained his pupils with wisdom, dignity and affection. In the pulpit preached a pure gospel in mellow strains of nervous eloquence, "from house to house," counselled and comforted with a pastor's lowly assiduity; in all the walks of life, devoted to the service of his Master, taste and talents, decision, and energy of character, descending into the vale of years with the firm peaceful aspect of faith and hope, he left a dying testimony to Scotland's solemn vows in behalf of religion and liberty; and bade adieu to the field of warfare, honoured in not putting off his armour till called to put on his crown.
