

HISTORY
OF SCOTLAND.

BY PATRICK FRASER TYTLER, Esq.

---

F. R. S. E. AND F. A. S.

VOLUME IV.

EDINBURGH :

WILLIAM TAIT, 78, PRINCE'S STREET.

MDCCCXXXI.

P R E F A C E.

---

THE period which embraces the reigns of James the Second and James the Third, has been justly considered one of the most obscure portions of Scottish history. Even in Pinkerton, the latest, and certainly not the least acute of our historians, the narrative, from the want of access to authentic and then undiscovered materials, is often meagre, abrupt, and contradictory. Sensible of this, Mr Thomson, Depute-Clerk Register for Scotland, began, many years ago, to collect all the original muniments, and fragments of contemporary history which related to the reign of James the Second, with the laudable design of giving them to the public. This intention he afterwards abandoned, but not before he had printed the valuable Chronicle quoted so frequently in the following volume, under the title of the Auchinleck Chronicle. To this circumstance, and to the liberal communication of several other manuscript papers which he had collected, the following volume owes not a few of its facts and illustrations. I have yet another obligation to acknowledge. The Bannatyne Club, an institution which has already done much for Scottish history and antiquities, determined, some time ago, to print, from the most ancient manuscripts, a new edition of Lindsay of Pitscottie's Chronicle of Scotland. As this author, however, although one of the most amusing of our early writers, did not enjoy a high character for authenticity, it was resolved to correct and illustrate his text by notes and chronological tables, drawn up from original sources. This task was committed to the Reverend Mr Macgregor Stirling, a gentleman, whose talents for abstruse and accurate research had already been exercised on similar subjects. He enjoyed also the advantage of Mr Thomson's superintendence, and the result has been a voluminous and valuable collection of notes and extracts from original documents, drawn up by Mr Stirling in chronological order, and compiled principally from manuscript sources. To these, which are still in manuscript, I have had unlimited access during the composition of this part of the history. They have facilitated my labour, and often alleviated the irksomeness of minute research; whilst from their materials I have frequently been enabled to derive a gleam of light, or to supply a link in the narrative, which, but for such assistance, must have remained as obscure and as defective as before.

CONTENTS

OF

THE FOURTH VOLUME.

---

CHAP. I.

JAMES THE SECOND.

---

	PAGE
RELATIVE situation of the nobility and the crown, after the assassination of James the First, . . . . .	1
Retreat of the queen-mother to Edinburgh Castle, . . . . .	4
Coronation of James the Second, . . . . .	5
A truce concluded with England, . . . . .	8
The young king secretly conveyed from Edinburgh Castle to Stirling, . . . . .	12
Siege of Edinburgh Castle by the Earl of Livingston, . . . . .	15
Marriage of the queen-mother with Sir James Stewart, . . . . .	19
The king carried off, by Crichton, to Edinburgh Castle, . . . . .	24
Distress of the people occasioned by the feuds of the nobles, . . . . .	25
Turbulent conduct of William sixth Earl of Douglas, . . . . .	30
His execution in Edinburgh Castle along with his brother David, . . . . .	36
Friendly relations between Scotland and England, . . . . .	39
Exorbitant power of William eighth Earl of Douglas, . . . . .	41
Feud between the Crawfords and Ogilvies, . . . . .	57
Sagacious and determined policy of the young king towards the nobles, . . . . .	61
Border feuds, . . . . .	64
Marriage of the king and Mary of Gueldres, . . . . .	67

Vigorous proceedings of the king against the turbulent nobility, . . . . .	70
Important parliamentary enactments, . . . . .	75
Determination of the Earl of Douglas to maintain his power,	85
His reception of Sir Patrick Gray, the king's messenger, .	96
Douglas sent for, and assassinated in Stirling Castle by the king, . . . . .	99
The Earl of Crawford defeated by Huntley, . . . . .	105
Conspiracy of James, ninth Earl of Douglas, . . . . .	108
The king marches against Douglas, reduces, and pardons him,	111
Submission of the Earl of Crawford, . . . . .	116
University of Glasgow founded, . . . . .	117
Intrigues of Douglas with the York party in England, . .	118
Douglas defeated at Arkinholme, . . . . .	122
Predatory expedition of Donald Balloch, . . . . .	125
Extraordinary Letter of the English King to the King of Scots, . . . . .	129
Followed by war on the Borders, . . . . .	131
Measures adopted for strengthening the crown, . . . . .	132
Dispute with the King of Norway as to the Western Isles,	142
Parliamentary enactments regarding dress, war-beacons, and Border raids, . . . . .	136
Provisions of Parliament regarding arms, the Borders, and the pestilence, . . . . .	145
Act regarding the money of the realm, . . . . .	148
Mutual support of the king and the clergy, . . . . .	153
Earldom of Mar annexed to the crown, . . . . .	154
James attacks the York party in Northumberland and Durham, in support of Henry of Lancaster, . . . . .	160
Institution of the Session, . . . . .	163
Acts of Parliament regarding weapon-schawing, dress, leases, and other internal regulations, . . . . .	164
James breaks the truce with England, to aid Henry of Lancaster, . . . . .	175
And besieges Roxburgh Castle, where he is killed, . . .	176
His character, . . . . .	179

CHAP. II.

JAMES THE THIRD.

	PAGE
Accession of James the Third, . . . . .	183
Feuds of the Island Lords, . . . . .	185
Award of the King of France between Norway and Scotland, . . . . .	189
Rebellion of the Earl of Ross, . . . . .	195
Rise of the Boyd Family, and their league with the House of Fleming, . . . . .	200
Death and character of Bishop Kennedy, . . . . .	205
The king carried off by Lord Boyd and other nobles, . . . . .	206
Parliamentary enactments, . . . . .	210
Intercourse between Scotland and Denmark, . . . . .	215
Marriage of the king with the Princess of Denmark, . . . . .	222
Downfall of the house of Boyd, . . . . .	ib.
Rise of the Hamiltons, . . . . .	227
Character and situation of the young king, . . . . .	228
Persecution of Graham, Bishop of Brechin, . . . . .	233
St Andrews raised to the dignity of an archiepiscopal see, . . . . .	234
Intrigues of Louis the Eleventh of France, . . . . .	237
Birth of James the Fourth and his betrothment, . . . . .	241
Causes which led to the disaffection of the nobles towards the king, . . . . .	248
Character and proceedings of Albany and Mar, . . . . .	250
Rebellion of Albany, and siege of Dunbar, . . . . .	255
Hostile attitudes of the French, English, and Scottish kings, . . . . .	261
Revolt of Albany to the English interest, . . . . .	264
The Scottish army stopped by a Papal bull on their march, . . . . .	266
Intrigues of the English kings with the Scottish nobles, . . . . .	267
Rise and magnificence of Cochrane, called Earl of Mar, . . . . .	269
His murder, and the king's seizure by the nobles, . . . . .	272
Albany and the king's party reconciled, . . . . .	276
Albany made lieutenant-general of the kingdom, . . . . .	279
But afterwards deprived of his office by the king's party, . . . . .	283

