EDINBURGH:

WILLIAM TAIT, 78. PRINCE'S STREET;
AND JAMES RIDGWAY, 169. PICCADILLY, LONDON.

M DCCCXXXI.

THE first Settlement of the Province of Nova Scotia, by Sir William Alexander, (afterwards Earl of Stirling), at his own expense, led to the foundation of this Order, which was expressly limited to the number of 150 persons, who were to be nominated by Sir William and his heirs, upon a previous conveyance by them of a certain proportion of lands to each of those persons, as his qualification for receiving the dignity of Baronet, and which possesses the peculiarity of combining hereditary rank, on the basis of nobility, with a portion of the splendid prominence that distinguishes the Knights of the Garter, Thistle, Bath, and St Patrick. But the honour of the Order seems to have fallen from its high degree, and not to have acquired the notice of the historian, to commemorate its institution, or the estimation of its members, to vindicate its rights, in the enjoyment of their precedence and the territorial appendages which were attached to their creations.

To perpetuate these objects, to explain their original value and present interest, together with the genealogy of the families of these dignified persons, is now the intention of the Author, who flatters himself that, in the pages of his work, will be found a novelty of account, a general accuracy, and specific information, not to be met with in the antecedent printed histories of the Baronetage of the United Kingdom; the whole being calculated to meet the wishes, the expectation, and the approbation of the public.

To enable the Author to be as correct as possible in the statement of the genealogy of the respective families on whom the dignity of this Order has been conferred, he respectfully solicits their communications, that he may bring down the same to the present period, supported by the best authorities to warrant his representations.

THE work will be published in two volumes 4to.

ADVERTISEMENT.

IN pursuance of an advertisement of the 10th June 1831, calling a meeting of the Baronets of Nova Scotia, and those who have right, as their representatives, to lands in that province, a meeting took place at Mackenzie's Hotel in Edinburgh, on the 24th of the same month. Letters had previously been received from many of the Baronets who were unable to attend.

There was laid before the meeting a general statement with reference to the creations, privileges and rights of the Baronets; which being considered by the parties assembled, with the documents referred to in it, they were of opinion, that it was desirable that the subject should be more generally understood by those having interest, but resolved that the statement should remain unpublished till a further meeting was agreed on.

It has since, however, been considered to be proper, in the meantime, to order the present publication of the statement, for the information of all parties concerned.

STATEMENT

WITH REFERENCE TO THE

KNIGHTS BARONETS OF NOVA SCOTIA, &c.

THE institution of the order of Knights Baronets of Nova Scotia, it is well known, was first contemplated by King James I, upon the settlement of that colony having been made by Sir William Alexander, to whom his Majesty, by a Royal Charter under the Great Seal of Scotland, dated 10th September 1621, was pleased to grant the whole of that extensive country, with the hereditary government thereof; together with full power of conferring honours and bestowing titles, and with divers other great privileges, as are more fully set forth in the charter itself. As the King's intention, however, to grant the institution of the order was not then carried into effect, and he died before it was accomplished, his son and successor King Charles I, taking into consideration his late father's royal intention, was pleased, by another Royal Charter under the Great Seal, dated 12th July 1625, to confirm the previous charter in its full and utmost extent, and to institute the order of Knights Baronets of Nova Scotia, whose number he appointed should never exceed, or be increased to more than, one hundred and fifty. And Sir William Alexander was empowered to grant a conveyance of a certain portion of land to each of them, to be erected into a free barony, with great and ample privileges, to be enjoyed by all the persons created Baronets, their heirs-male and assigns whatsoever, heritably, together with the dignitorial rank to them, their heirs-male whatsoever, and their wives and children, as in the said charter may be seen at length ; the priority of precedency being always reserved to Sir William Alexander, his heirs and assigns.

Thus the Baronets were created, in the manner that the King declared his pleasure to the Privy Council * ; and after the order had been for some time established, his Majesty, for the conferring on them the greater degree of honour and public distinction, by a royal warrant, dated at Whitehall, 17th November 1629, granted the Baronets a particular badge or cognisance, which no other person should presume to wear † ; the preamble to the said warrant at the same time setting forth, that Sir William Alexander had established the colony of Nova Scotia, where his son Sir William Alexander was then resident.

The particular care and regard which his Majesty had for this colony, and the honourable and worthy persons on whom the title of Baronet was conferred, is apparent from various letters which passed between his Majesty and the Estates of the realm on the subject, among the Privy Council records.

* Vide Appendix, No. I.

† Vide Appendix, No. II.

It may, however, be here necessary to remark, that the charters of Nova Scotia granted to Sir William Alexander, containing the boundaries of the country, the privileges and immunities to be enjoyed under his government by the settlers, and every thing connected with the Baronets, were ratified in open Parliament, holden at Edinburgh, 28th June 1633 *, the King being present.

As to the number of persons who were actually created Baronets of Nova Scotia, according to the stipulated terms and conditions of the institution, it may be difficult to determine, inasmuch as the names of the respective parties on whom the title was conferred do not all appear from the public registers. As to those whose creations appear to be so registered, a list is hereto annexed, with an asterisk prefixed to the names of those who are found to have had seisin of their baronies † ; from which it will be seen that those creations did not go beyond December 1638. On this point it arises to be considered how far any persons created Baronets after that period can be deemed Nova Scotia Baronets, and as such entitled to local or territorial possessions, or to the privileges which were specially granted to be enjoyed by the Nova Scotia Baronets alone.

The persons appearing from the registers to have been created Baronets in Scotia, from 5th March 1661 downwards, had merely patents, without any grant of lands to accompany their titles, and consequently had no interest in the colony ; and besides, there was no previous institution of an order of Baronets in Scotland, while there was an order of Baronets of Nova Scotia, expressly instituted by King Charles I, and confirmed by the Parliament. It is submitted, therefore, that the Baronets in Scotland were not Nova Scotia Baronets, but persons on whom his Majesty was pleased to confer an hereditary title, with a name, but without the right to wear the distinctive badge authorised to be carried exclusively by the former, or to enjoy the great privileges set forth in their respective charters.

In relation to this subject it may be right to mention, that a general meeting was called at Edinburgh, and did meet there, the 14th June 1775, with a view to come to some resolutions affecting the rank, rights and honours of the Baronets, denominating themselves as one body by the style of Baronets of Scotland ; but as whatsoever was discussed on that occasion is not within the object which the present statement professes to embrace, it may be as well merely to leave the consideration of the proceedings of that meeting, to the annexed account of what then took place *.

Further, meetings of the Nova Scotia Baronets, and their representatives in right of their lands in Nova Scotia, were called at Edinburgh, for 1st July and 1st October 1783, the specific object of which has not been discovered.

In now bringing into notice the first creation of Nova Scotia Baronets, it becomes material to entertain the question, how far the heirs of the first Baronets have lost their rights of inheritance, or whether they still remain capable of being reclaimed.

The first objection seems to be, that King Charles I, by the treaty of St Germain, signed the 29th March 1632, ceded to the French the territory of Nova Scotia, and with that cession the Baronets lost their territories. But this objection ceases, when it shall be seen, that so far from having ceded Nova Scotia to the French, his Majesty, on the contrary, in open Parliament at Edinburgh, ratified and confirmed, as before mentioned, all the charters and grants, &c. made to Sir William Alexander, which ratification bears date upwards of twelve months after the pretended cession to the French. But the fact was, that King Charles having agreed, by the treaty of St Germain, to retrocede to France Quebec and other territory in Acadia, (the then general name of all that part of America,) the French, under pretence that Nova Scotia formed part of Acadia, usurped the same, and King Charles at that time was too weak in power to maintain the rights of his Crown or of his people against the foreign enemy. But a further proof that the country was never intentionally surrendered by the King, or sold to the French, by Sir William Alexander, (as said by some authors,) may be found in the subsequent creations made by King Charles, and the seisins taken by the grantees of the lands contained in their charters; while there is also upon record a deed of assignment, dated 29th January 1640, made by Sir William Alexander, then Earl of Stirling, to Messrs Kinneir and Gordon, of such interest and compositions as he might be entitled to from his right to procure the honour and dignity of Knights Baronets of Nova Scotia, containing an obligation to procure the same to all such persons as Messrs Kinneir and Gordon should nominate and appoint, likeas he might have done himself ; which deed, being for the payment of debts, is registered in the books of Session in Scotland, 15th February 1640, and would have been most ridiculous if no real sums of money were derivable therefrom.

A second objection is suggested, that the lands became forfeited by the failure of the grantees to fulfil the condition which is supposed to have been impliedly annexed to their grants, of defending and maintaining the same under the Royal authority. But this objection is at once nugatory ; for if the King had truly ceded Nova Scotia, his subjects had no right to dispute his will, and take up arms against his act of prerogative. But if, as was the case, the King did not cede the territory, he ought to have given the assistance of the power of his Crown to have supported the settlement, and have called on his subjects, the settlers, to have brought forward their force, as a part of their feudal duty. The King was as much bound to protect his subjects who had purchased that protection, as the subject was to defend his own and the King's dominion. But the objection is solely by implication, and not from any expressions of an imperative nature in any grant.

A third objection is interposed, that the claims have become antiquated by the neglect or the omission of the grantees to act upon their grants from the period thereof to the present time. To settle this question, it should be considered what law, if any, of prescription or limitation interferes; whether Scots law, English law, or Colonial law, or some law, rule or principle different from all these. By a recent decision in the United States of North America, it has been determined, and affirmed upon appeal to the Supreme Court at Washington *, that a grant, originally well and sufficiently made, remains indefeasible, whether acted upon or not; and that no laches, however long continued, on the part of the grantee or of his heirs, affect the same.

On the present occasion, it is to be borne in mind, that from the treaty of St Germain in 1632, to the time when the treaty of Utrecht took place, the French were, during the chief period, usurpers on the territory, and its inhabitants in a state of constant aggression. At the last-mentioned treaty, the British Commissioners required that Nova Scotia should be given up to Great Britain according to its ancient boundaries, with its whole rights; the French occupation having been founded upon usurpation, not acquisition by force of arms, or cession by treaty. The French Commissioners in reply assumed, that Nova Scotia was a country unknown to them, and never before mentioned to them, and that the district claimed was Acadia entirely. To this the British Commissioners made replication, that if Nova Scotia, as a country, was unknown to the French, it consequently had never been ceded to them; and as to the boundaries, they rested upon the description of them, as contained in the charters to Sir William Alexander.

Thus Nova Scotia was re-acquired in its full plenitude of extent and rights: but still the contention between Great Britain and France for boundary line continued, till, by the treaty of Paris in 1763, the French made a final quit-claim of Nova Scotia and Canada, and Great Britain has ever since remained in possession thereof: and thus, when these countries returned to the British sovereignty, the rights of the grantees of the British Crown are to be deemed to have returned to them, or their heirs representative.

The British Government, repossessed of Nova Scotia, still to the present day insist on its boundaries according to Sir William Alexander's charters, and have so done upon the late arbitration, on the question submitted to be determined between them and the American Government by the King of Holland. And here it may be remarked, that while the Crown urges the validity of these charters of Sir William Alexander and his occupancy under them, and the territory and appendages granted have ever remained as a colony or province of Great Britain, these admissions must show, that if Great Britain never lost or forfeited any thing by the cessions under the treaties of St Germain, or of Breda in 1667, so neither Sir William Alexander nor his heirs lost or forfeited the proprietorship of what had been granted by the charters thus so strongly relied upon by the British Government, and the less can that right be extinguished, inasmuch as the first proceeding in the foundation of the colony was at the sole charge and expense of Sir William Alexander, and was therefore a valuable consideration advanced for the grant, and a bona fide ground for its endurance to all his posterity. In like manner, the grants to the Baronets of Nova Scotia of the original creation, whereof seisin in most instances was actually taken, may be concluded to have a great weight for restitution if of late granted out, and to constitute a positive right to what lands may now remain unoccupied.

Having noticed something as to the objection of prescription, it may not be irrelevant to observe, that the right of prescription has never been held to be so essentially a principle of natural justice that it might not be set aside by law. Two very important maxims of English law are directly opposed to it, viz. the rules "nullum tempus occurrit Regi," and "nullum tempus occurrit Ecclesie;" that is to say, no adverse possession, of however long standing, can be a bar to a prior right of the King or of the Church.

Indeed, the doctrine of prescriptive right formed no part of the old common law of England, but was first introduced by statute of the 32. Hen. VIII *, so that far from being a fundamental principle of natural equity, it has been altogether excluded by some laws, and certainly required the aid of positive enactment to give it any binding force or validity whatsoever. In the present instance of claim against the Crown, it would be rather bearing too much upon excessive prerogative to take away property by virtue of a nullum tempus exception, and yet refuse to restore it, by not allowing the same exception to those whose claims were derived from the Crown itself.

What may be the claims of those persons entitled to the honours of Knights Baronets of Nova Scotia must depend upon the nature of their respective grants, the conditions contained in them, and their several boundaries, all which it is believed their charters sufficiently set forth.

The bill proposed by Lord Howick for the encouragement of emigration to Canada and Nova Scotia evidently deserves the attention of those entitled to lands in those colonies, and particularly as to the prospect of their becoming much more valuable. It may be to be noticed, that although many of the Nova Scotia baronies may have been settled upon by subsequent grants from the Crown, and presumption of an escheat by the silence of the heirs, it does not follow that the right of the mines in these baronies may have been granted to the new settlers, and if not, they form a subject for the heirs to appreciate.

As one of the strongest grounds which is attempted to be set up against the claims either of the heir of Sir William Alexander, or of the Nova Scotia Baronets, is length of time of non-user, and a conclusion therefrom of a voluntary abandonment of their claims, it is important to be observed, that in the charters of the original Nova Scotia Baronets there is a special clause, which declares, that the grant shall be valid, sufficient and effectual in all time coming, in all points, in law, in all the King's courts, and in all other places, notwithstanding any law, custom, prescription, practice, decree or constitution before made, decreed or published, or afterwards at whatever time to be made, decreed and published, ordained or provided. These words are certainly strong, and seem to have been used with an allusion to the Scottish prescription, then recently introduced by the act 1617, c. 12. The law of Scotland, therefore, was directly excluded, and that of England could not apply. The inference, therefore, of a non-user even voluntarily continued cannot avail, for the charters must all be interpreted and expounded according to their letter, and the principle of the true consideration which induced the granting of them.

On this point, with a very striking analogy of non-user and voluntary abandonment, there has been very lately decided before the Lords' Committee for Privileges, (the Lord Chancellor Brougham maintaining the doctrine,) a case of claim made by the Viscount Courtenay to the Earldom of Devon. This honour was conferred on Henry Courtenay, who was created Earl of Devon by Queen Mary, by letters patent, in which the words of limitation are, "Sibi et hæredibus suis masculis," without the further words, "de corpore," or "quibuscunque." He died shortly afterwards unmarried, and consequently without legitimate issue. The Crown considering the title vacant, conferred it afterwards, in the reign of King James I, upon the Lord Montjoy, who enjoyed it about three years, when he died without lawful issue, and it again fell to the Crown; whereupon the King once more revived the title, and created the then Lord Cavendish Earl of Devonshire, in whose family it now remains.

From the period of the death of Henry Courtenay, Earl of Devon, till the last year, the heir-male of his family never claimed the dignity, but allowed it, without objection or pretension, to be granted to strangers. The several heirs-male in succession continued commoners, till at last raised to the peerage dignity, in 1762, by the inferior title of Viscount Courtenay. But on a sudden, the present Nobleman, (a person of overmuch notoriety,) has thought fit to come forward and claim the Earldom, asserting that the limitation "hæredibus masculis," without additament, meant heirs-male collateral, and was not confined to heirs-male of the body; and citing, as a precedent for such construction, the claims pending before the Lords for the title of Earl of Annandale. The Lords have decided in his favour; and though length of time is certainly not a bar to the inheritance of a title of honour, yet, in this instance, it is apparent there was a voluntary abandonment, with a voluntary approval of other families to take the dignity now demanded. But the rule laid down by their Lordships was a conformance to the exact words of the letters patent. It may now remain only to add, that

The Earl of Stirling has presented a petition to the House of Commons * on his claims ; and in asserting them, he has thought proper to take notice of the rights which may appertain to those who represent the grantees of his ancestor the first Earl. He has deemed it incumbent, as Hereditary Lieutenant of the Colony, to attempt to vindicate them, while supporting his own claims ; and in having so done, he trusts he shall have acted to the approbation of those persons. It may now remain for the Baronets to consider what ulterior measures are to be adopted, and may be approved of, to assert and maintain the rights and interests they may have in their honours and territorial appendages.

One point it may not be improper, lastly, to mention, that if any barony has been taken possession of by the Crown as in the nature of an escheat, and still remains in the Crown unlocated, the Earl of Stirling will contend that the escheat appertains not to the Crown but to himself, as the proprietary patentee of the Crown ; and in the event of making good this position, he will feel much gratification in making a re-grant to the true heir.

No. V.

To the Honourable the COMMONS of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled,

The PETITION of ALEXANDER, Earl and Viscount of STIRLING, Viscount CANADA, &c. &c. &c. Hereditary Locum tenens of Nova Scotia, &c. &c.

Sheweth,

THAT his Majesty's Government having submitted to Parliament certain measures for the appropriation or settlement of those lands, designated the Waste Lands in the British Colonies of the Canadas and Nova Scotia in North America, your Petitioner considers it is incumbent upon him to make known to Parliament the rights and interest which are vested in him, with regard to the territories of the Colonies aforesaid.

That for this purpose, your Petitioner must observe, that his ancestor, viz. his great-great-grandfather Sir William Alexander, Knight, of Mentrerie, in the kingdom of Scotland, Privy Counsellor to King James the First, and afterwards created Viscount and Earl of Stirling, &c. &c., having founded and established a settlement, at his own cost and expense, in a certain part of the mainland of North America, he thereupon, in consideration of the great charges he had been at and had incurred, obtained a charter from the said King James the First, dated the 10th of September 1621, whereby the said district was erected and incorporated into a colony or province, which henceforth was to be called and denominated Nova Scotia, in honour of the Founder, and of the kingdom to which by the charter it was to be attached, and thereof holden by Sir William Alexander, as Hereditary Locum tenens for the King, and with divers other great offices, privileges, administrative powers and immunities, of all which territory, offices, &c. he had possession and legal seisin accordingly.

That King James having shortly after deceased, his Majesty Charles the First, by a further charter of novodamus, dated the 12th of July 1625, reciting the former charter, and the considerations on which it had been granted, was pleased to confirm to the said Sir William Alexander the same in its most full and ample contents: And having then instituted the Order of Knights Baronets of Nova Scotia, for the encouragement of settlers, of persons of rank and family, in the said Colony, his Majesty constituted him the premier Baronet of the Order; with power to nominate others, and apportion to them a certain quantity of lands, to be holden and enjoyed by them in free barony.

That his Majesty King Charles the First was also pleased, by another charter, dated the 2d February 1628, to grant to the said Sir William Alexander, (therein designated his Majesty's Hereditary Locum tenens of Nova Scotia,) another territory of great extent, whose limits and boundaries are therein particularly described, which thenceforth was to be called the Lordship of Canada, and to be holden and enjoyed by Sir William Alexander, with the same powers and privileges as Nova Scotia.

That these charters were afterwards confirmed in open Parliament by the King in person in 1633, the 9th of Charles the First: And moreover, Sir William, who had been created Viscount of Stirling in 1630, was by patent, dated 14th June 1633, advanced to the dignity of Earl of Stirling and Viscount Canada, the latter title being to perpetuate the name of the territory so granted to him.

That your Petitioner does not think it necessary to set forth herein ad longum the description of the extent and boundaries of the territories mentioned in the aforesaid charters, the said charters being matter of historical notoriety, well known to his Majesty's Government, and always admitted, brought forward and insisted upon, whenever any discussion on the subject of boundary has occurred, whether with the French, at and after the treaty of Utrecht, or more recently between Great Britain and the United States of North America, on the late dispute submitted by them to the arbitration of the King of Holland.

That your Petitioner, agreeably to the form and practice provided and required by the law of Scotland to establish heirship, was, by a jury of fifteen persons appointed, and solemnly assembled, on the 7th February 1826, found and declared, by their verdict, on their great oaths, heir-male of the body of his mother Hannah, the last surviving heir-female of her brother, Benjamin (8th Earl of Stirling,) the last heir-male of the body of Sir William Alexander, Knight, the first Earl of Stirling, his great-great-grandfather, and afterwards, viz. on 11th October 1830, your Petitioner was, by a jury similarly appointed and solemnly assembled in like manner, found and declared, by their verdict, on their great oaths, to be the nearest and lawful heir in general of the said William, the first Earl of Stirling, his great-great-great-grandfather.

Wherefore your Petitioner prays that your Honourable House will take care that, in whatsoever resolutions you may come to respecting the allotments or locations of any of those lands called the Waste Lands, either in Nova Scotia or the Canadas, such resolutions shall not affect the right of your Petitioner, the nearest and lawful heir in general of the first grantee of the charters before mentioned. And further, your Petitioner prays, that no resolution shall be passed to affect those rights which may appertain to any other of the Baronets of Nova Scotia, whose rights may depend upon, or be derived through, the sub-grants made by your Petitioner's ancestor, the said William, the first Earl of Stirling. And, lastly, your Petitioner prays, that your Honourable House will be pleased to receive, and have this petition entered on your Journals, as a notification of his claim, right and interest in the premises in question.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

(Signed) STIRLING.

74.) WASTE LANDS, (Canada).

Petition of Alexander Earl and Viscount of Stirling, Viscount Canada, &c. Hereditary Locum tenens and premier Baronet of Nova Scotia, praying that in whatsoever resolutions the House may come to respecting the allotments or locations of waste lands, either in Nova Scotia or the Canadas, his rights may not be affected. To lie on the table, and to be printed. (Appendix, No. 1782.)
