INTRODUCTION.

By a solemn instrument of the 15th October 1553, confirmed under the abbot's seal and the common seal of the monastery, Abbot Donald and his brethren resolved that, with Divine help, they would lead regular lives, ruling their manners according to the reformers of the Cistercian order. As sustenance, they devised for themselves and their guests a daily and yearly provision, for the administration of which four or six of the brethren were, along with the cellarer and bursar, to be appointed annually. To each friar there was granted a daily allowance of one pound (sixteen ounces) of wheaten, and a like quantity of oaten bread, with two quarts of beer. The sum of £13, 6s. 8d. was provided to each monk as an annual allowance for flesh, fruit, and other necessaries. Each monk was besides to receive yearly four stones of cheese, with an ample supply of poultry and salmon. For vestments there was a grant of fifty-three shillings and fourpence each year. To the abbot was to be submitted a statement of accounts at least twice a year, while the surplus revenue was to be expended under the direction of the prior and auditors. To this indenture are appended the names of the abbot and brethren, who, including Peter Trent, the steward, numbered seventeen persons. The members of the monastery next proceeded to elect certain officers, when they constituted as prior Thomas Hamilton;

as sub-prior, William Baxter; as cellarer and bursar, John Lawson; as under-cellarer, Sir Thomas Cowle; as chanter, Sir Alexander Anderson; and John Fogow, elder, as sub-chanter. To each were granted the usual perquisites of office. In the same instrument the abbot and chapter made provision for the entertainment of guests, including friends of the brethren and religious persons who might arrive at the convent in the abbot's absence.¹ As the accommodation in the abbey was evidently circumscribed, a portion of the tenantry undertook to accommodate the convent's visitors. On receiving from Abbot Donald, in 1559, a charter of the lands of Galloraw, Robert Alexander, his wife and son, became bound to build and hold ready for the reception of the convent's guests a large hall and chambers, with well-appointed tables; a cellar stored with wine and victuals; also a stable with straw, hay, and oats. In this charter guests arriving on the sea-coast of Angus are named specially. In his charter of the lands of Causayend, which was granted in 1558, William Ray and his heirs became bound to maintain a sufficient house and stabling, with meat and drink to be sold to servants of the monastery when they were abroad.

For the entertainment of guests provision was secured in 1538, and afterwards in 1551, in the lease to Mr Alexander MacBroke of the abbot's principal seat at Campsie Craig.² In addition to a moderate rent, MacBroke bound himself to keep in repair the abbot's mansion at Campsie, consisting of a hall, chapel, chamber, and kitchen, together with a bakery and brew-house. He engaged, on twenty-four hours' notice, to provide for the "abbot, brethren, and famyle" four feather beds and four other beds convenient for servants, along with towels and table-linen, broom and other fuel. He also pledged himself to furnish pots, pans, and other cooking and culinary utensils, and further to provide wax for Saint Adamnan's Chapel; also a sufficient "rollar" (rower) for a boat to be used by the abbot or monks when they chose to enjoy the sport of angling in the river.

² The Linn of Campsie is situated in the parish of Cargill, about seven miles to the south-west of the abbey. The Linn is formed by the river Tay falling over a dyke of basalt which bisects the district. On the south side of the Linn is Stobhall Castle, an ancient residence of the family of Drummond, and on the north side Taymount, the romantic residence of Mr Charles A. Murray.

The abbot and brethren possessed town residences (hospitia) at Dundee and Perth, these towns being each about fifteen miles distant from the monastery. At Pentecost 1469, the hospice at Dundee was let to William Tulloch, a condition being that on arriving at the place, the abbot and brethren should enjoy their wonted privileges. A garden attached to it was protected by walls, which the lessee was bound to keep in repair. In 1542, this hospice yielded a rent of 13s. 4d., and its occupant was bound to supply all necessaries for beds, table, and kitchen, with kail and herbs, and also to have a stable and two cellars. One of the two hospices at Perth, situated in the Speygate, was, in 1549, granted in a feu-charter to George Brown, perfumer, on condition that he kept the building in constant readiness for the granters and their successors. In the stipulated accommodation are included a hall and chambers with four beds, vessels, and napery, two cellars for provisions, and stabling for eight horses. This hospice, in 1542 and 1549, realised a rent of 13s. 4d.; the other, which appears to have been situated immediately beside the Cross, had four booths. In 1542 it yielded a revenue of £6, 6s. 4d., its lessee being John Merschell, who also held some land beside the Market

Cross, on the north side of Market Street.¹ Another booth, standing in the corner of the hospice beside the Cross, was separately let for 26s. 8d. Besides his mansion at Campsie (I., xlv.), which was on one occasion granted for occupation to a lessee of the fishings, houses were at times reserved for the abbot at Little Perth. Accommodation seems also to have been provided at Dalvany and Dunkeld.

In the Preface (xlvii.) are enumerated among the possessions of the abbey the churches of Alvah, Banffshire; Airlie, Glenisla, and Mathie, Forfarshire; and Bendochy and Fossoway, Perthshire. Leased generally to laymen, these churches were considerable sources of revenue. In 1547, and again in 1557, the church of Alvah was let to Sir Walter Ogilvy and his spouse, Dame Agnes Hume, at a money rental of £74, besides a payment of ten merks "to the stall in Aberdeen," and an allowance to the vicar of ten pounds a year, with manse and glebe. The parish church of Airlie was, in August 1550, let to the vicar-pensioner of Airlie, Sir John Smith, on a rental of twenty-four pounds; he further consenting to pay all ecclesiastical dues, and to maintain the fabric. To Master David Campbell and his assignees were let, in November 1557, the teindsheaves, profits, and oblations of the church of Glenisla, at a rental of eighty pounds and for payment of other dues. Thomas Kennedy, in October 1553, obtained a lease of the church of Mathie, at a rent of one hundred merks additional to the vicar's fee and other dues. The church of Bendochy was, in 1462, let to David Blair of Benachty (Bendochy) for the annual payment of £20, with all ordinary expenses. In the second volume the parish clerk and Lady-priest of Bendochy are mentioned frequently. In 1511 the church of Fossoway, in three parts of its fruits, was leased for one hundred merks to Patrick Howbrone and his sons.¹

In the leases of Adhory and Soutarhouse (I., 204, 224) there are allusions to the ancient practice of "riding the marches." In the lease of John Campbell of Soutarhouse, dated 26th November 1557, there is a reference to a "perambule" or perambulation between the abbey and that of Scone, with special regard to the pasturage of twenty-six head of cattle and of horses in the muir of Monkell. It is worthy of mention that the determination of the marches between the lands occupied by the various tenants was sometimes settled by arbitration or by agreement among the tenants themselves. When Herbert Turnbull of Middle Drimmie was accused by George Turnbull of Easter Drimmie of "ryving out of certane faldis of corne land" from the commony, in the first instance "certane honest men" were chosen in the "debate," and adjudication was finally given by the lord abbot (II., 130, 131). Tenants were bound to keep or defend their marches.

In granting those who held feu-charters corporal possession of their portions, a ceremony was observed, essential to the completion of their titles. A bailie-depute of the monastery attended on the land, and there legally invested the feuar by handing to him portions of "earth, tree, and stone," or when mills and other buildings were conveyed, portions of "thack and duffat," that is, of thatch and sod.

Feuars were bound not to dispose of their portions without

in the first instance giving to the monastery an opportunity of purchase, and they were not to dispose of their lands to persons of higher rank than themselves. Their successors were to pay double feu-duty at the first year's entry, while attendance was sometimes pledged to the three pleas of the monastery or the three courts which the bailie or principal judge held annually.

Of the abbey stewards, two are at a later period frequently named, Peter Trent and Sir John Hammill. Sir John was latterly Prebendary of Kippen.

The abbey physician did not reside in the monastery. On the 21st May 1554, Alexander Turnbull, who belonged to a family above the average importance of tenants, received the lease of a portion of land in recompense of service as "mediciner." By his lease he became bound at all times "to do his cure," the brethren finding him "sic stuff as might be needful." It was further stipulated that he would not practise his craft at Keith-ock, the people of that barony probably employing a physician selected by themselves.

Among the convent's ordinary retainers were the baker, brewer, fowler, foresters, bullock-herds, storemasters, land-stewards, gardeners, and warreners. On the 1st September 1550, Symon Wilson, described as "brewer of the Lord Abbot," was assigned three acres of land at Balgershow.

In 1541, and again in 1547, John Soutar in Millhorn was constituted fowler; he became bound to deliver into the hands of the cellarer what fowls were "slain" by himself or his assistants. In remuneration he was to receive for a wild goose, two shillings; for a crane or swan, five shillings; for a partridge, eightpence; and for a plover, dottrel, curlew, wild duck, red-shank, lapwing, teal, and other small birds, fourpence each. If he failed in diligence, or kept back any portion of his fowling, he was, for each offence, to pay a fine of thirty shillings. Henry Brown, in Westhorn (II., 203, 241, 254), obtained higher remuneration—three shillings for a goose, and six shillings and eightpence for a crane.

In 1549, James Hering with his two sons received the “forestership and keeping of the woods of Drymmie.” It was stipulated that they should “keip the samyn fra thameself, servands, and tenantis, and fra all vtheris at thai may stop at thair vter powar, exceptand to the vphald of the said grund alanerlie, vnder the pane of ane vnlaw of grene wod.”¹ It was further required that they should faithfully discharge their duties to the “Lady-priest of Bennathy,” and the boatman of the river Isla. In the first, as well as in the present volume, frequent references occur to the woods and forests in possession of the abbey, which were jealously guarded from the intrusion of tenants and their cattle, and from the trespass of “outmen.” Part at least of the forest of Campsie was defended by walls erected by the tacksmen of the neighbouring lands and fishings (I., 237, 242). Other woods or forests mentioned are those of Cally, Forthir, and Glenprosen, Inverwick, and Murthly in Athole; and reference is made to a forester in Strathardle. Sometimes, however, pasturage was allowed in the woods, and, under the direction of the officers of the abbey, tenants were permitted to obtain trees for building purposes. In one case (I., 201), where tenants were responsible for the defence of the forest, the “unlaws” were to be divided among them for their “trouble.” Towards the forester’s better remuneration, contributions were exacted from the tenantry. The forester of Glenbrichty in Glenisla became bound in 1558 to keep and herd as many sheep as the abbot might "ples to put to him;" besides paying a money rental and restricting the number of cattle to be fed by him in the forest; or in the event of exceeding that number to share their profits with the abbot.

At Pentecost 1470, the office of studarius or keeper of bullocks and black cattle, was conferred on one "Maknychol" and another, together with a lease of the lands of Forthir, at a certain rental including half-a-stone of butter to be used in the convent at the six annual feasts. In the "stodhirdrye," William M'Nicholl and John M'Nychol and his grandson were confirmed in 1557, when it would seem the office had become hereditary. With reference to the rent in butter, it is interesting to learn that "fresh butter" on six feast-days was an early exaction from the Forthir tenants, and that a plate of butter was to be supplied by tenants in the pastoral district of Athole.

In the pastoral districts there were storemasters. Their duty was to enter in "a store book" the number of sheep belonging to the monastery fed on the different lands; also an account of the rent in kind paid by the tenantry. The land-officers empowered to see that the tenants fulfilled the conditions of their leases, are frequently mentioned in both volumes, and what is probably a complete list will be found in the separate rental of 1542 (II., 181-204). They were five in number, and to each was allotted a separate district. These divisions were—the district above the Isla and Ericht; Persie, Cally, and Drimnie; Glenisla; Athole and Mar; Glenboy, Kinereich, and Little Perth; and the Carse.

Horticulture was actively promoted. In 1542, David Howieson held a lease of three gardens belonging to the monastery, from which he agreed to furnish to the abbot and brethren "kail and herbs for fifteen days in his turn." He undertook to cultivate parsley, beet, and lettuce, and to supply to the warden onions and "bow-kaill" or colewort; also half the produce of the fruit trees. He further agreed, as did the other gardeners, to rear "eschis" (ash trees);¹ carefully nurturing them till they were four or five years old. He was to prune the trees and hedges, to repair the stone-fences, to preserve the alleys, and to keep open and clear the pools and water-courses. He consented that he would "nocht lat ane craw big within the bundis." On obtaining a renewal of his lease at Carsgrange in 1549, James Jackson promised to render service by preserving the trees, keeping clear the ditches, planting young trees, and watching the orchard against the intrusion both of beasts and robbers. If in any point pertaining to "ane trew and gude gardner" he proved unsteadfast, he was thereupon to "tyn his rycht," that is forfeit his holding.

The "warandar of conyngar," or keeper of the rabbit-warren, is occasionally mentioned in the earlier Rental Book. In receiving, in 1475, a life lease of two acres in the Grange of Kethyk, Gilbert Ra undertook to keep the "conyngar fra all scath and peryl, and promofe and put yt to al profit at is povar."

Hotel accommodation was not overlooked. For example, in September 1557, Alexander Baxter consented to conduct at Keithock a hostelry by the "biggin of houssis, chameris, and stablis, for the ressavng of strangeris honestlie," and by providing "to thame hors meit and mannis meit."

In their feu-charter of the lands of Bogside, dated 22d April 1557, Thomas Ogilvy and his wife, Janet Fraser, agreed to keep in constant repair and use a malt kiln, "with meat and drink to be sold to the abbot and convent, and their tenants and servants travelling between the lands of Glenisla and the monastery." To this charter were appended the common seal of the chapter, also "the privy seal of the queen, and the manual subscription of Mary, queen-dowager and regent of the kingdom."

The privilege of vending bread, wine, and ale, was granted to a portion of the tenantry. Special permission to engage in baking and brewing, also in general merchandise, was allowed to the convent's burgh of Keithock. A common alehouse pertaining to the mill of Keithock was held in special protection.

Contrary to an opinion generally entertained that rotation of crops and the use of manure are modern improvements, we find that both were recognised by the monks at Cupar. In his charter of the lands of Galloraw, dated May 1558, Robert Alexander was promised, for the manuring of his lands and croft, "all the dung in the common stables, with ashes and dust from the convent workshops and courtyards." But a portion of ashes was to be "reserved by the convent for young plants." On Alexander's lands the east park was granted to the husbandmen or tenants, on condition that they would sow the field two years in succession; and that when the fruits of the second year were gathered in, they would prepare it for raising broom to be used at the monastery. The park was to remain as a broomfield for seven years, the tenants being allowed to mow the grass only, while the broom was reserved for the "hearths and ovens of the abbey." After seven years the soil was to be restored to cultivation. Somewhat similar regulations were laid down at an earlier period (I., 142, 143, 147, 173, 219).

Corn-mills propelled by water were established in every district; and although their maintenance was sometimes imposed on the tenantry, yet it was "the old custom," as early as 1447, that they should be repaired by the lessees, on whom also fell the burden of conveying the millstones and conserving the water. "Thirlage" to the mill of the sokyn or district was enforced. It is described in most leases as “doing debt to the mill.” This debt consisted in the miller’s right to a fixed quantity of multure, which in the lands of Keithock is described as “the ane-and-twenty corne,” doubtless the twenty-first sheaf, or nearly five per cent. of the produce.

Mills for pressing or fulling cloth, styled “walk-mills,” existed at Keithock, Balgersho, Kinreich, and other places. To these mills thirlage was unexacted. In 1550 the widow and son of William Walker obtained in lease the “walk-mill” of Kinreich, their family name being doubtless derived, like the English synonym, Fuller, from their occupation.

The ancient custom of “herezeld” was recognised, if not strictly enforced. According to usage, on the death of the tenant, the “herezeld” or “heriot,” which was the best horse or ox on the farm, might be claimed by the landlord. As early as 1483, a tenant in Athole is bound to pay a herezeld in event of his succession on his father’s death (I., p. 231). William Forbes, bailie of Murthly in Mar, had the privilege of the herezelds in the district under his superintendence (I., 244). In several of the later leases the convent reserved “all herezelds of each pleucht-gang which happen to become vacant;” and on other occasions, “all herezelds of the men dwelling within the lands,” or the “herezelds of them that labour the ground for the time.” In allusion to these claims by rapacious ecclesiastics, Sir David Lyndsay, in his “Satyre of the Three Estates,” composed in 1535, adopts this pungent strain :

“ Wee had ane meir, that caryit salt and coill,
And everie ilk yeir, scho brocht us hame ane foill.
Wee had thrie ky, that was baith fat and fair,
Nane tydier into the toun of Air.
My Father was sa waik of blude and bane,
That he deit, quhairfoir my Mother maid great maine :
Then scho deit, within ane day or two ;
And thair began my povertie and wo.

Our gude gray meir was baird on the feild,
 And our Land's laird tuk hir, for his hyreild,
 The Vickar tuk the best cow be the heid,
 Incontinent, quhen my father was deid.
 And quhen the Vickar hard tel how that my mother
 Was deid, fra hand, he tuke to him ane uther :
 Then Meg, my wife, did murne baith evin and morrow,
 Till at the last scho deit for verie sorrow :
 And when the Vickar hard tell my wyfe was dead,
 The thrid cow he cleikit be the heid.
 Thair nimest clayis, that was of rapploch gray,
 The Vickar gart his Clark bear them away.
 Quhen all was gane, I nicht mak na debeat,
 Bot with my bairns past for till beg my meat."¹

Muirland tenants became bound to keep hounds, or a "leiche of howndis, to hunt the tod (fox) and wolf." In their lease of the barony of Glenisla, dated 16th November 1552, David Ogilvy, and his wife, Margaret Campbell, engaged to "nourish a leish of good hounds, with a couple of raches" (sleuth-hounds), and to be ready at all times to pass to the hunt with the abbot or his bailies.

Tenants whose holdings adjoined the river Isla, or other streams, were generally bound to provide a boat and fishing tackle for the use of the friars. In their lease, dated 1544, John Pery of Laidcassie, and his wife, Mary Falow, agreed "to uphault ane ele-ark and the stand thereof as it salbe delyuerit to thame, and lelely and trewly to delyuer the fische to ws and our successoris."

As stated previously (I., xxvi.), rents were paid in money, service, and kind. The money rental was ordinarily reckoned in pounds, shillings, and pence, being the usual currency; but occasionally "crownis of wycht" and "crownis of the sone" are mentioned. Being of the standard weight, the former coin was of the value of thirteen shillings and fourpence. The "crown of the sone," so designated from bearing a sun as the mint mark, was a French coin representing the value of fourteen shillings; but weighing actually one grain less than its Scottish equivalent, it was in 1540, by an Act of the Estates, declared to be of the same value as the "crown of wycht;" and as such was passed into circulation.

On the subject of rent in kind, we would refer to the preface to Vol. I. (xxvi., xxix.). In the present volume we find that lessees of corn-mills were required to pay as a portion of rent a fat boar yearly, or "ane sufficient clene-fed bair" every second year. A portion of the tenantry were bound to maintain herds of milt or black cattle during the months of winter. Geese fed on a farm are described as "tame," "fatted," or "fed," in contradistinction to wild geese, the securing of which was the province of the fowler. One of the payments in kind was black oats, a description of grain still in use.¹

In the "Register of Tacks" 1539-59, additional light is thrown on the services of the tenantry. A nearly uniform provision was the supply of peats. The tenants were to recover peat from the marsh, and after proper preparation, to convey it to the monastery. Carriage service was of two kinds, the common or ordinary; and that which was designated the long carriage or great draught. The common carriage consisted in the delivery at the monastery of so many "fidderis" or cart-loads of fuel, including peat, bent, roots, and branches of fallen trees. Cheese and fish, both fresh and dried—the latter being styled hard-fish—were also to be conveyed. The long carriage was required of the principal tenantry once a year, when two horses and four oxen were employed in conveying to the abbey such articles as timber, lime, slates, and coal. By the long carriage, otherwise called the great draught, goods were brought to the monastery from Dundee, the nearest port; also from other towns. A "small long carriage" is once mentioned.

Land was divided into "in-field," that is cultivated, and "out-field," or land which was unreclaimed. Certain pastoral districts are described as "shepherd-land,"¹ and it was a condition in respect to it, that the lessee should be willing to pasture as many sheep as the abbot might send to his care. Portions of territory were open to the tenantry, both for pasturage and fuel. The meadows and broom-parks of Baitschell and Wester Drimmie, and the marshes of Balbrogie and Cowbyre, are specially named. There was also common pasturage at Campsie and Monkmyre. Respecting the latter the conventual authorities instituted a judicial inquiry in July 1546, when, on the testimony of elderly persons, it was shown that while a portion was retained by members of the convent, the remaining part had been used by the tenants at Cowty, Bendochy, Galloraw, Baitschell, and other places; also by their sub-tenants or cottars.

During the fifteenth century leases were generally granted for five or seven years, though in some instances for nineteen years, and even for life. But in the incumbency of Abbot Donald more liberal covenants were allowed. These were, however, accompanied by an exaction at entry, known as a composition or "grassum." Ample material for judging of the nature, extent, and value of this exaction is afforded in the "Buik of Compositiones of Gressumis," beginning in the present volume at p. 221. It was to be expected that Abbot Campbell would look favourably on his kinsmen; and thus we find him making a composition (II., 227) for a liferent of Easter Percy to John Campbell, younger, and Robert and William, his natural sons, the composition being "gratis for his and thairis service." Not infrequently, the composition was made payable to the "fabric of the monastery." For such a purpose, even twelve merks were accepted; but sometimes the composition on a life lease was from one hundred to two hundred pounds. In March 1548, William Spalding "componit" for a life lease of the Miln of Keithock, by paying sixty pounds and a puncheon of "romany."¹ When a widow re-married, it was common for the new husband to settle down into the tenancy which she had enjoyed with her former husband; and for this privilege, as well as for the licence to marry, it was customary to make an exaction (II., 238, 243, 250).

Towards old tenants and their representatives much favour was extended. The married tenant was in every lease associated with his wife, who was always designated by her maiden name; it was provided that the survivor should retain the farm during the subsistence of the lease. Occasionally the eldest son was conjoined with the parents; but at other times the head of the family was permitted to select his successor from among his sons. When there was a daughter only, the "gude son" (son-in-law) was conjoined in the lease, and where there were no children, heirs-male whatsoever, or heirs and assignees were named.

For aged tenants the convent made due provision. Thus when Andrew Oliver, and Ellen Allan, his wife, received, in 1546, a lease of the twelfth portion of Cupar Grange, they became bound to provide in meat and clothes, and other necessities, John Allan, the former tenant, then aged and infirm. Orphan children of tenants were in like manner provided for. Guardians were appointed from among their nearest friends, and in some cases benefactions were bestowed by the convent.

When leases were renewed to widows, it was expressly stipulated that, should they marry without permission, their leases would be forfeited; and curiously enough, a clause as to re-marriage is sometimes inserted in leases granted during the husband's life. When a lease was renewed to a widow with children, a provision was made for the children. In certain leases the convent reserved power to take possession of a portion of the tenant's lands, but it was specified that, in this event, land should be granted to the tenant equal to that appropriated, and at the sight of husbandmen mutually chosen.

The humbler tenantry were, in cultivating their portions, bound to use their own horses and farm-gear. The principal tenantry were, by special favour, empowered to make sub-tenants, but on these conditions; that the sub-tenants were to be of no higher degree than themselves, and that their introduction was approved by the convent. In more important leases, it is set forth that lessees were to have power to appoint and eject tenants as often as they deemed expedient; but that each tenant at entry should make oath to be faithful to the monastery, and willing to be corrected of all faults by its ministers of justice, both spiritual and temporal. Tenants might abandon their holdings on giving six months' notice. In some leases, it was made a condition that poor sub-tenants were not to be removed from their holdings. For behoof of the humbler tenantry or others falling into poverty, a bursa pauperum was kept in the monastery.¹

Military service was exacted from the principal tenantry, but the large supply of armour required in the earlier record (Preface, xxxii.) was not demanded subsequently. In leases granted from 1539 onwards, the principal tenantry became bound, in proportion to the extent of their holdings, to provide one or two mounted horsemen, each furnished with a spear or lance, for the service of the queen and abbot. Such service was to be rendered in war, and in the event of hostile gatherings or intestine feuds. The provision for mounted horsemen was generally combined with that of furnishing one or two horses for the abbot's carriage. In his feu-charter dated August 1550, Robert Montgomery, of Dundee, became bound to provide an armed horseman in defence of the abbot and convent against assailants and heretics.

For many causes leases might be forfeited. A few may here be specified, but a full list will be found in the Index (see Forfeiture of Lease). In feu-charters it was provided that if rent was unpaid for three successive years, the conveyed property was to revert to the convent. "Tynsall of tack," that is, forfeiture of lease, was to follow conviction for theft or reset of stolen goods; also the destruction of young timber or the unauthorised appropriation of forest trees. Adultery was punishable in like manner, as was sorning, or sponging on one's neighbours.

In their lease, granted on 14th August 1542, Alexander Jackson, and his wife, and heir, promised to fulfil a part of their agreement, "under the pain of cursing." In his lease dated 3d June 1543, Simon Donald of Easter Cotyards, Janet Rattray, his spouse, and Simon, his son, covenanted under "tynsall of tak," to "fortify and defend the liberty and common wealth of the realm, of the Christian faith, and of Holy Church and of the abbey." But in 1544, and until 1558, "tynsall of tak" was made contingent upon the adoption of heresy, that is, of conversion to the reformed doctrines; the spread of which had excited among churchmen no inconsiderable alarm. In the lease of the lands of Bruntyhill, granted on the 22d May 1545, to John Thom, and his wife, Ellen Small, also to one of their sons, it was thus provided: "If it happens John, Ellen, his spouse, and son foresaid, to hold any opinions of heresy against the ordinance and constitution of Holy Kirk; it being sufficiently proved upon them, this our letter of tack to be of no avail from that time forth; but we freely to dispone thereupon as shall be thought expedient by us." In other leases a mode of escape is afforded to those who renounced the new faith, since those alone who "byde thairat obstinatlie," are subjected to punishment. When the doctrines of Luther had made marked progress, it was deemed essential to characterise them more specifically. Accordingly in his feu-charter of the lands of Little Perth, dated in 1550, Robert Montgomery, of Dundee, and his wife, became bound to "defend the abbot and convent, their place and goods to the best of their ability, against all assailants and heretics whomsoever; and if they shall fall into the Lutheran madness (rabiem) and heresy, or if they shall obstinately hold new opinions contrary to the constitutions of the Church, the said feu shall revert to the abbey."

Among scions of notable families who held leases from the abbey, mentioned in the Preface (xlii.), were members of the house of Spalding. To King Robert the Bruce Peter de Spaldyng betrayed the town of Berwick in 1318, pleading as his excuse that the burgesses were oppressed by the English troops. From King Robert he, on the 1st May 1319, received, in exchange for his lands and tenements at Berwick, the lands of Ballourthy and Petmethy, in the county of Forfar, together with the keepership of the royal forest of Kylgerry.¹ In 1469, Alexander Spaldyng of Auchinhary is named in the rental book as receiving in lease the church of Glenyleff (Glenisla). At the Feast of Pentecost 1469, the Grange of Erolie (Airlie) was let to William Spalding for five years. John Spalding, son and heir of James Spalding, received, on the 9th November 1560, a feu-charter of half the Grange of Airlie; George Spalding, on the same day, obtaining a charter of the other portion. Several other members of the Spalding family are noticed in the rental book.

With the accession to the abbacy, in 1526, of Donald Campbell, fourth son of Archibald, second Earl of Argyle, members of families hitherto unknown in the district appear among the tenantry. Among these was the family of Montgomery. To Robert Montgomery, Abbot Donald, on the 31st May 1558, granted a feu-charter of a portion of the lands of Balbrogy. The abbot's niece, Helen, daughter of Colin, third Earl of Argyle, was wife of Hugh Montgomery, third Baron, and first Earl of Eglinton.

Members of the baronial house of Ogilvy appear as tenants on the abbey lands. In 1443 Patrick Ogilvy received from the convent the lease of a portion of the lands of Persie; he, in January 1460, is named as bailie-depute.

The office of bailie was afterwards granted in lease to John, second Lord Ogilvy of Airlie; it was also held by James, third, and James, fourth Lord Ogilvy. Among the Airlie Papers (II., 297) is a letter of James V., in which the abbot and friars are commanded to allow James, Lord Ogilvy, to discharge his office of bailie without impediment, in consideration that his father and grandfather had held the same office, and that his lease of office had five years to run. This royal letter was signeted at Edinburgh on the 28th May, year unnamed; but as it contains the name of Abbot William Turnbull, it clearly belongs to the period between 1509 and 1526 when that abbot held office. Turnbull's successor, Abbot Donald, granted to James, Lord Ogilvy, a charter, making the office of bailie hereditary in his house. It is set forth in the charter that his predecessors had well defended the convent, their servants and lands, both in peace and war. Besides a pecuniary recompense, Lord Airlie was privileged to personally receive the services of the tenants due to the monastery, also the fines and escheats levied in his court. On the 29th September 1539, Abbot Donald and the convent granted to James, Master of Ogilvy, son and heir-apparent of James, Lord Ogilvy of Airlie, and to Katherine Campbell, his spouse, a feu-charter of the lands of Glentullach and Auchindorie. In this charter, Lord Ogilvy binds himself and his heirs to defend the abbot and convent in actions, pleas, and quarrels, criminal or civil, against all persons, the king's majesty excepted.

The legal authority of the abbey court began to wane. This is evident from a minute of the court of bailiery held on the 30th June 1540 (II., 298), in which it appears that James, Master of Ogilvy, had summoned the tenantry to his court, and there exhibited to them an heritable infeftment, with an instrument of sasine, confirming him in office as bailie, while his authority was further vouched by the abbot in person. Thereupon a memorial, subscribed by twenty-one of the tenantry, was produced, praying that the practice of litigants seeking justice at distant courts might be prohibited; whereupon both the abbot and bailie ruled that all who brought their neighbours to any court other than that of the abbey should be fined five pounds for the first offence, and for the second ten pounds; while if they continued disobedient, they should be extruded from their holdings.

James, Master of Ogilvy, married Katherine, daughter of Sir John Campbell of Calder, the abbot's brother. In the abbot's bed-chamber in the monastery, on the 30th July 1545, he executed his will, constituting his wife his executrix. As a reason moving him to execute his testament, he refers to "the troublous time, and the raid against Englishmen, the old enemies of Scotland;" he had anticipated his fate, for he fell at the battle of Pinkie in September 1547. His widow became second wife of David, Earl of Crawford, and as such was, by the abbot, on the 10th September [1557], liferented with her son, James, fifth Lord Ogilvy, in the lands of Mickle Forthar, in the barony of Glenisla. From Katherine Campbell are descended the present representatives of the noble Houses of Crawford and Airlie.

By the help of the Airlie Papers we obtain the not uninteresting history of an office in the monastery, less subordinate than modern usages might infer, and which, by purchase, ultimately became a hereditary appanage of the noble House of Airlie. As has already been detailed (I., 41), about 1480-1509, John Porter was appointed hereditary porter of the abbey, the duties of the office having been efficiently discharged by his predecessors. In recompense, he was allowed the use of a chamber near the abbey gate, with a monk's portion from the cellar; also a dwelling-house at Baitschell, with six acres of arable land, and pasturage for two horses and seven cows and their followers. This grant was, in the year 1550, confirmed to Robert Porter by Abbot Donald, who, in 1557, granted to him and his wife, Agnes Campbell, a lease of a portion of the lands of Keithock. From the chamberlain's account, in 1563, we find Robert Porter entered as receiving a commuted allowance, consequent on the secularisation of the monastery.

By an instrument executed on the 15th January 1584-5, Robert Porter, on account of age and infirmity, resigned his office of porter in favour of David, his son. Consequent on his son's death, he, in March 1586-7, granted his hereditary office to his son-in-law, John Farar, together with his house and lands at Baitschell, and his annual pension of fifty-five merks, the estimated value of a monk's portion. In terms of this instrument, the rights and privileges of the office were, in March 1586, granted to John Farar, by Leonard Lesley, the commendator. To Farar and his wife, Janet Porter, the commendator's grant was, on the 10th June 1587, confirmed by royal charter. By a contract, dated 12th March 1589, confirmed by the commendator, Farar and his wife sold, for four hundred pounds Scots, their office and its privileges to William Ogilvy in Easter Keillor, and his son Archibald. Having, by sale, transferred the office and its privileges to James, Lord Ogilvy, Archibald Ogilvy granted sasine of the same on the 28th June 1609. When, in 1747, the Act of George II. for abolishing heritable jurisdictions in Scotland was passed, John, fourth Earl of Airlie, received the sum of eight hundred pounds sterling, as compensation for the loss of his office as bailie of the monastery.

To the family of William Roger, bailie-depute of the monastery, we have already (I., xxxvii-xl) referred somewhat fully. The name Roger appears in the rental book so early as 1454, when a twelfth part of the lands of Cupar Grange was let for seven years to William Roger.¹ At Pentecost 1457, one-half of Polkak, Blarachnoch, and Achnekathyl, was let for a short term to William Haldane, and the other half to John Roger; a son of the latter, styled John Rogerson, obtained a renewal of lease in 1467. At Whitsunday 1474, John Roger received a lease of an eighth part of "Arthurstone, in the lands of Balbroggy; and in 1479 a house and croft at Chapelton of Balbroggy was let to William Rogerson. At Pentecost 1468, William Roger is named with nine others, who together received a lease of Cupar Grange for five years. He and his neighbours, at Whitsunday 1473, had a renewal of lease "for al the termys of thar livys."

In 1505, the twelfth part of Cupar Grange was let for five years to William Roger. This William Roger died prior to the Feast of Pentecost 1508, when his portion at Cupar Grange was leased to James Ireland.² He was survived by a son and a daughter; these at the time of his death were probably infants. The daughter described as "Jonet Rogeare, wife of William Hudson," received, conjunctly with her husband on the 19th September 1542, a renewed lease of the twelfth part of the lands of Cupar Grange. She seems to have married a second time; for Jonet Roger, relict of unquhile John Findlay, is, on the 9th March 1557, described as receiving in lease a portion of the lands of Downy.

William Roger received from Abbot Donald, on 1st May 1542, along with his wife Marjory Blair, a lease of the twelfth part of the lands of Cupar Grange. The lease extended not to their joint-lives only, but to the lives of their son and daughter. On the 23d April 1544, William Roger appears as bailie-depute of the monastery.¹ As bailie-depute he was in 1561 associated with David Campbell, an illegitimate son of the abbot.² William Roger died at Cupar Grange in June 1562, and his personal estate was valued at £452, 18s. 6d., exclusive of "silver lent to the Laird of Ruthven." In his will, executed on the 16th April 1562,³ he appointed as executors, his wife Marjory Blair and his son William; and among four "oversmen" he names "David Roger in Redie, and William Roger his son."⁴ David Roger of Redie was the testator's kinsman; William Roger married one of his daughters.

¹ The Rogers of Cupar Grange, we subsequently find, were related to the family of Roger of Redie, parish of Airlie, Forfarshire. In the Acta Dominorum Concilii, lib. vii., fol. 2, 15th June 1496, is mentioned an action by Thomas Roger against James, Lord Abernethy, anent the half lands of Redy.

² In the Preface to vol. I., p. xxxix., we have fallen into an error. Through the information supplied by entries in the present volume, it appears that William Roger was not granger of the abbey as formerly stated.

William Roger, son of William Roger and Marjory Blair, received from Sir John Campbell of Calder, a charter of feu-ferme of the portion of land at Cupar Grange rented by his predecessors. He married Margaret Rollock.⁵ He must have died in 1604, for on the 21st December of that year his son William obtained sasine of his lands at Cupar Grange.⁶ In this inheritance he was succeeded by his son William who married Elspeth Angus, whose progenitors rented a portion of the abbey lands. According to a family tradition he died of a pestilential sickness which visited the country in 1664, while soon thereafter the family inheritance was by his widow sold to one of the family of Meek, whose progenitors had also been rentallers at Cupar.⁷

⁷ The family of Meek are noticed in vol. I. as tenants of Balmyle and portioners of Cupar Grange.

George, son of William Roger, son of the second portioner of Cupar Grange, leased a portion of the abbey lands, in which he was succeeded by his son William, and his grandson Peter.¹ James, eldest son of Peter Roger, espoused Jane Haldane, whose ancestors, proprietors of Bermony, Perthshire, were formerly connected with the abbey lands. Their only son, the editor of these volumes, is one of the numerous descendants of the Lords Ogilvy, hereditary bailies of the abbey, and of Archibald, Earl of Argyle, father of Abbot Donald.

In relation to the later history of the monastery, the records and documents contained in the present volume supply much new information. While, consequent on the Act of the Estates establishing the reformed faith, the institution was divested of its ancient character, Abbot Donald, irrespective of any arrangements by the Privy Council, completed its secularisation. For those connected with him he endeavoured to secure the entire revenues of the disestablished monastery.² His brother, Sir John Campbell of Lorn, had, by espousing Muriel, daughter and heiress of Sir John Calder of Calder, in the county of Nairn, acquired

² It is not improbable that the subjoined document, which is contained among "The Errol Papers," may have reference to instructions issued against some of his tenants by Abbot Donald:

no ordinary opulence.¹ Yet he was not unwilling to accept from his brother the teinds of the church of Alvah. In a charter of the lands of Murthly in Mar, granted by the abbot to Alexander Forbes in April 1541, are named among the witnesses, Sir John Campbell of Calder, Archibald Campbell, parish clerk of Bendochy, and Mr David Campbell in Easter Denhead.² Archibald Campbell is described in the "Rental Book" (I., 316) as brother-german to James Campbell of Lawers; he obtained a lease of the lands of Invirtschie and Dunfallinch some time between the years 1532 and 1536. Archibald Campbell, "burgess of Dundee," is witness to a charter of a house at Perth "signed and sealed at Cupar on the 8th August 1541," and to this charter are subscribing witnesses, Patrick Campbell, who appears to have rented a portion of Kinereich (I., 316); also Mr John Campbell, pensioner de Ilys. John Campbell obtained a portion of the abbey lands at Murthly, and in September 1550, a lease of Newbigging of Carsgrange. John Campbell, along with his wife, Elizabeth Blacklock, had, from Abbot Donald, in November 1557, a lease of the lands of Soutarhouse and Muirton. John Campbell, "Lord of Skipinsh" (Skippinche), received from the abbot and convent, in April 1559, a charter of the lands of Cupar Grange. John Campbell of Lundie (Londie) is named under 16th January 1561. About the year 1532, Mr David Campbell received a lease of the teinds of the church of Glenisla, which was renewed to him in 1557; he some time rented a portion of the lands of Balbroggy. He was depute-bailie in 1553, and as "David Campbell in Denhead," witnessed, in 1558-9, a charter of the lands of Kynereich. His remains were deposited in the church of Bendochy (I., 112). Colin Campbell,

² Walter Montgomerie, probably a son of the first Earl of Eglinton, is also a witness.

feuar at Crunan, is a witness to the charter of David Campbell, in the lands of Cupar Grange; in 1563 he is named in the chamberlain's account as put to the horn for non-payment of dues. Many other members of the family of Campbell are named in the rental book.¹

When, in 1563, Alexander Wishart of Carnbeg, the chamberlain, presented to his relative, Sir John Wishart of Pitarrow, the comptroller, an account of the thirds of the abbey rents (App. I.), he had to report that, while "the hail pay of the said abay wes intromettit with and disponit be my Lord of Argyil and his seruandis," there were among those "denuncit rebellis and put to the horn" for non-payment of rent, Lady Crawford, the late abbot's niece, and Colin and John Campbell, most probably the abbot's sons. Representing that he had been in possession of "all and hail the toun and landis of Cowpar Grange, with the pertinentis," since the 29th May 1569, John Campbell of Caddel [Calder] complained to the Privy Council, in 1579, that Lord Boyd, collector-general of thirds, had illegally exacted a payment from his tenants. The Council decreed an exemption.²

John, fourth Earl of Athole, was, as husband of Mary Campbell, the abbot's sister, enabled to acquire a principal share of the abbey estate. On the 7th October 1558, he obtained from the convent a charter of the lands of Innerwick. By a royal charter in April 1564, he received, as portion of his justiciary, "all and hail the lands pertaining to the abbot and convent of Cupar, liand within the earldom" of Athole; which grant was, in 1578, confirmed by the Privy Council.³

² Register of the Privy Council of Scotland (Edin., 1880), iii., 142.

³ Ibid., ii., 698-700.

On the 24th August 1565, the Earl of Athole appointed Leonard Lesley spiritual commendator of the abbey, his act being confirmed under the Privy Seal. By a disposition (App. V.) dated 17th March 1610, James, Earl of Athole, on behalf of the four daughters of his predecessor, James, Earl of Athole, conveyed to James Drummond in Boghall, ten thousand merks, in return for the abbey lands of Cupar, consisting of the farms of Over Drimmie, Over Persie, Grange of Aberbothrie, Arthurstone, and Campsie, along with the market-town of Cupar and the precincts or "constabulary" of the monastery.

It is interesting to remark in the chamberlain's account that in 1563 John Knox received stipend as minister of Edinburgh from the abbey "thirds." The sum paid him under the comptroller's precept was £66, 14s. 4d., for which it is recorded he granted a discharge.¹

In the chamberlain's account, we have some particulars as to the state of the abbey buildings in 1563. The chamberlain describes the chapel as being so completely wrecked, that with a view to preserve the timber, he had built up both doors; also the undermost door of the steeple. In the cloister, he had collected the slates which had been removed from the roof. He had also repaired the broken windows, providing them with iron framework. The abbot's apartments he had partially restored, and with proper fastenings made secure the granaries and store-houses. From having, in August 1562, accommodated the royal stud, the stables of the monastery are in the account styled the "quenens stables." The further history of the structure will be found in the Preface (xxi.-xxv.).

On the resumption of the abbey lands by the crown, James VI., in a charter dated 7th February 1595, granted to Leonard Lesley, "the spiritual patrimony of the abbey—viz., the tower, fortalice, and all within the precincts; with the parsonage and vicarage teinds of the churches of Bendochy, Glenisla, Airlie, Methie [Mathy], Fossoway, and Alveth." What revenue Lesley had originally as spiritual commendator, does not appear; but a provision, actual or contingent, was made to his four sons. Leonard, his eldest son, on the 16th March 1597, demitted into the hands of the king, that portion of the temporality of the abbey, held by his father. On the 3d February 1583, Andrew, another of the sons, obtained a decret against the commendator and others, for payment of a pension of £50 out of the abbey rental. Andrew subsequently became clerk to Cornelius Tennant, advocate; as such he, on the 24th June 1603, granted a contract of £50, together with seven dozen of capons, and two dozen of poultry, to Mr David Williamson, minister at Mathy. Alexander, another of the commendator's sons, received, on the 30th June 1592, by a Privy Seal grant, a portion of the abbey's revenues, formerly enjoyed by "Dean John Fogo, monk;" which grant was confirmed by his father, as commendator, on the 18th July of the same year. He, in 1601, became minister of Mortlach, in Banffshire; and on the 28th October of the following year, assigned his portion to his brother James.

Leonard Lesley was deprived of his office prior to the 26th December 1595, when the commendatorship was by royal precept conferred upon Mr George Halyburton, son of George Halyburton of Kincape. He was succeeded by Mr Andrew Lamb, whose gift of the benefice, dated 24th March 1603, was confirmed on the 1st June 1605. He demitted his office on the 24th January 1607, in favour of James Elphinstone, second son of the first Lord Balmerino; for whose behoof an Act dissolving the abbey, and erecting it into a temporal lordship, was passed on the 9th July 1606.

In the Preface (li.-liv.) will be found a history of the abbey site and its environs, from 1606 to 1832, when Francis Archibald Stuart became owner. On the death of this gentleman, which took place on the 14th July 1875, the constabulary of the abbey, extending to 145 acres, devolved by succession on his nephew, Edward Archibald Stuart, who has since inherited the estates of Gray and Kinfauns, and, in consequence, added to his patronymic the name of Gray. Edward Archibald Stuart-Gray is eldest son of the Rev. Edmund Luttrell Stuart, rector of Winterbourne-Houghton, in the county of Dorset, by his wife Elizabeth, second daughter of the Rev. J. L. Jackson, rector of Swanage, Dorset: he is heir-presumptive of the earldom of Moray.

In the first volume is contained the earlier of two manuscript volumes, registers of leases and charters granted by the convent from 1443 to 1538. In the present volume will be found a continuation of the register, embracing entries from 1539 till September 1559; also "the rental" of the monastery in 1542. The appendices embrace a number of documents, among which are nine charters, not before printed. From the Brockie MS., a small volume in modern binding, preserved in the library of the Catholic College at Blairs, several important documents have been printed. The original transcriber, Marianus Brockie, a native of Edinburgh, was prior of the monastery at Ratisbon, and the transcripts of the documents contained in the earlier part of his collection, were made by him at Edinburgh, where, about the period of the Hanoverian succession, he was employed as a missionary.

From the Brockie MS. (Ap. III.) are presented charters by William the Lion, confirming grants to the abbey by William of Hay and his successors. Among these are charters by the king to the monks of Cupar, confirming the donation which William of Hay made to the convent of the lands of Lidderpoles

(I., ix., 328); also a charter by David of Hay, with consent of Gilbert his heir, whereby he bestowed on the monks a net's fishing and an ark for eels on the river Tay. In the same MS. is a grant by Sir Gilbert de Hay, Lord of Errol, to the convent of free passage on his lands for their men and goods; also a perpetual right to the herbage and fishing in Ederpoles (Lidderpoles).

In Appendix III. we obtain the correct name of a witness to a charter of confirmation by King William the Lion which is contained in the Breviary. In the charter referred to (I., 320, 321), Sir James Balfour writes "Bernardo, filio Bain." From the Brockie MS. we find that Balfour had inaccurately written Bain for Briani. The name Brian occurs in other charters of the period.

In the Brockie MS. (Ap. III. 5) is a charter by King Robert the Bruce to the abbot and convent, confirming grants by Sir Adam of Glen Bathlach, Sir Alexander of Abernethy, Gilbert of Hay, Alexander of Lindesay, and Marjory, Countess of Athole. These grants include the lands of the two Drimmies and Kinreich, the church of Mathie, the church of Fossoway, the land of Littleport, near Montrose, and the church of Alvah. There is a charter by Nicholas of Hay, Lord of Errol, of an oxgate of land "in Carso," which they had by gift of Roger, son of Baudrice. An undated charter by Philip de Valoniis (Ap. II., 2), bestowing on the monks of Cupar an acre in his port of Stinkinhaven, evidently belongs to this period. For the use of the Brockie MS. we are indebted to the kindness of Archbishop Strain.

From the original there is given in Appendix II. a charter of Alexander II. of the same date as another charter of confirmation recorded in the Breviary (I., 328). Herein the king grants to the monks exemption from toll, and renews privileges bestowed by his royal predecessors, Malcolm and William. A facsimile of this instrument is presented as a frontispiece. The grant to the convent by Alexander II., exempting the members from a payment to the royal falconers, was formerly (vol. I., xiv., 329), on Balfour's authority, described as airimam waytingam. The tax was "annua waytinga," a duty otherwise known as conveth, assessed on certain lands in place of an obligation to entertain the sovereign in his royal progresses. The priory of Coldingham yielded a sum of twenty merks of "annua waytinga" to the Scottish crown, which was remitted by Alexander II.¹ Entries respecting the "waytinga" frequently occur in the Exchequer Rolls.

In the Breviary (I., 336), Sir James Balfour has fallen into error in regard to the dates of two charters of Sir Hugh de Abernethy. These charters clearly belong to the reign of Alexander III., probably to the years 1268-69 and 1271 instead of the earlier dates assigned to them in Balfour's transcript. For Sir Hugh de Abernethy, father of Sir Alexander, first appears in history in 1257, when, with the Earl of Mar and others, he was concerned in the surprise and abduction of the young king Alexander III.; he died before 1293, when his son, Sir Alexander, then under age, succeeded him. Three of the witnesses, Hugh, abbot of Inchaffray, Sir Nicholas de Hay, and Sir Alan de Harears, severally flourished in the reign of Alexander III.

For the documents relating to the abbey, contained in Appendix IV., we are indebted to the Earl of Airlie, who kindly placed at our service his family papers preserved at Cortachy Castle. In possession of Lord Airlie (Ap. IV.) is the original of that charter, noted in the Breviary (I., 323), by which King William the Lion granted "to God and to the monks and brethren of the monastery of St Marie at Cupar" exemption from toll and other customs; freedom from molestation, with other benefits; also plenary authority over the lands of Grange. Among the witnesses subscribing is Lyulph the son of Machus; not Mathei, as in the Breviary the word is by Sir James Balfour inaccurately rendered.¹ By Mr Stuart-Gray of Gray and Kinfauns, we have had submitted to our inspection the inventories and other papers relating to the abbey lands preserved in his family charter-chest. Lord Saltoun has favoured us with useful information.

Apart from their topographical interest and importance in relation to the origin of many notable families in central Scotland, these records of the Abbey of Cupar must be regarded as of no ordinary historical value. Certainly no other work contains such ample details relating to Scottish husbandry and rural affairs during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. For it must be remembered that the printed chartularies of religious houses are chiefly valuable in connection with the history of landed property, and in illustration of the comparative wealth of ecclesiastical establishments. In these pages we learn how the Pre-Reformation clergy administered their estates, and otherwise conducted their affairs; while in the various details is presented a portraiture of social and domestic life among that class of persons—the agricultural—which then and long afterwards formed the bones and sinews of the nation.

The editor has, in conclusion, to renew his acknowledgments to Mr Thomas Dickson of the General Register House, also to the Rev. Walter Macleod, his accomplished and indefatigable transcriber. To Mr James D. Crichton he has been indebted for valuable help in preparing the Glossary appended to the present volume. For the singularly accurate and admirable Index, and other important help, Mr Matthew Macmaster, formerly of Edinburgh, now of London, is entitled to the editor's special thanks and commendation. To all who have responded to his inquiries, and so aided in rendering the work more worthy of public acceptance, the editor returns his grateful acknowledgments. In completing a task which has occupied a portion of his time during a space of three years, he feels stimulated to further labours in the same field.

LETTER OR CHARTER OF GEORGE BROUNE, OF THE LAND OR HOSPICE WITHIN THE BURGH OF PERTH.

61. Tack by Donald, abbot of Cupar, and the convent thereof, whereby, considering that the lodging (hospitium) within the burgh of Perth, belonging to the said abbey, has been allowed to fall into a ruinous condition, and that it is necessary to provide for its repair, they have to that end, given, granted, and set, and by this charter confirmed, to George Broun, perfumer (aromatario), burgess of the burgh of Perth, and Beatrice Balfour, his spouse, in conjunct fee, and the longer liver of them two, and their lawful heirs, all and whole the said lodging, with garden of the same and pertinents, lying within the burgh of Perth, in Spey-gate (vico de lye Spay), and on the east side of the same street, between the waste land or gardens of Walter Balwarde on the south, the garden of the Queen's lodging on the north, the water of Tay on the east, and the said Spey-gate on the west. To be held of the said abbot and convent and successors in feu-farm heritably for ever; paying therefor yearly 13s. 4d. Scots, being the old rental with 2s. 8d. of augmentation; keeping up, building and repairing the said lodging and tenement with all its necessities, and making the same in all future times ready, open, and prepared for the granters and their successors, and providing a hall and sufficient chambers, with four beds in the same, properly furnished with vessels and napery for table and kitchen, with stabling for eight horses, and two cellars for the reception and preservation of provisions, to be placed at their convenience within the same lodging, as often as they or their successors shall happen to reside there; also the heirs of the said George and Beatrice doubling the said feu-farm the first year of their entry; and if the said George and Beatrice, or their heirs, shall fail three terms running to pay the said feu-farm, or in keeping up the said hall, chambers, beds, etc., then the said lodging, garden; etc., shall revert to the monastery. Signed and sealed at Cupar, 13th September 1549.

In a docquet attached to the above entry, by "Sir Walter Ramsay, notary public," it is stated to be a "true copy of the original charter, word for word."

ASSIGNATION OF THE CONVENT OF CUPAR.

[Translation.]

115. In the name of God, this present writing attests that it is determind between us, Donald, Abbot of Cupar and the convent of the same place, as we have resolved together, God being our guide, to lead a regular life, and to order our manners according to the reformers of the Cistercian order; and specially that all the fruits, income, and provision of the monastery of Cupar be possessed and used in common by us, Donald, abbot, and convent: So that we, Donald the abbot, shall faithfully give and appoint a proportion of all the produce, once in the year, to four or six of our brethren to be chosen by us and the convent; and what remains over at the end of the year, with their advice we shall spend upon the necessaries of the monastery, for the support of the convent and their friends occasionally visiting the monastery and of other religious men arriving in the absence of the abbot: They shall have a cellarer and bursar likewise to be chosen annually by us, that is to say, religious men, with the advice of the more judicious (sanioris) part of the convent; which bursar shall receive yearly, according to the number of the convent, the rents of lands of the barony of Cupar, as well money as victuals, to the proportion for each brother for daily bread sixteen ounces of good wheat, sixteen ounces of oaten bread, two quarts of beer (ceruisie), and for the said strangers yearly 1 boll of wheat; and each brother in the year, £13, 6s. 8d. for flesh, fish, butter, salt, and other spices, and figs, soap (smigmat), and candles for the refectory, hall of grace (aula gracie), infirmary, and other places needful, and for the wages of servants of the refectory, cellarer, bursar, cook, gardeners, and other necessary servants ministering to said convent, besides the baker and brewer; and for clothing, 53s. 4d. each friar annually; likewise, the same cellarer shall receive capons and hens, wont to be paid to the convent, as well on ordinary days as feast days, along with eight dozen of salmon from our fisheries of Campsy and Ileff, and four stones of cheese for each friar in the year, from our church of Fossoquhy, and these shall be served to each as need may be, according to the tenor of the rule: And account shall be made, at least, twice a year before the abbot, and each day before the prior and auditors, and if there be a surplus, it shall be disposed of to their uses, by our authority: Done in the chapter place of Cupar, 15th October 1553, confirmed by our own seal and the common seal with our manual subscriptions; the abbot and each of the brethren have subscribed: D. de Cupro abbas—Bernerd Murdosoun, John Turnbull, John Frog, William Blare, Adam Anderson, Thomas Hammiltone, Alexander Anderson, Johannes Fogow, James Maistertoun, William Auchinlek, Thomas Dron, Alexander Dotho, John Fogow, junior, Thomas Cowle, John Lawstone.

PETRUS TRENT.

Which day the said abbot, with advice of the brethren above written, appointed friar Thomas Hamilton to be prior, William Baxter to be sub-prior, during the will of the abbot, John Lawson to be cellarer and bursar, Sir Thomas Cowle under-cellarer and for out-door matters, Sir Alexander Anderson to be chantor, and John Fogow, elder, to be sub-chantor, with their perquisites.

So it is, Peter Trent, writer in the premises.

CHARTER TO ROBERT MONTGOMERY, OF THE FOURTH PART OF THE LANDS OF THE EASTERN PORTION OF THE TOWN OF BALBROGY.

207. Charter by Donald, abbot of Cupar, and the convent thereof, whereby, for sundry reasons and certain sums paid for the benefit of the monastery, church, and houses thereof, they give, grant, and confirm to Robert Montgomery and his heirs, all and whole the fourth part of the lands of the eastern portion of the town of Balbroggy, presently occupied by the said Robert, and Andrew Alan, his subtenant, lying within the lordship of Cupar and sheriffdom of Perth: To be held and possessed by the said Robert and his heirs whomsoever, of the convent and successors, in feu-farm and heritage for ever: Paying therefor yearly £4, 8s. 11d., with 28s. 6d. of augmentation, in all £5, 17s. 5d. Scots, together with sixteen "pultreis," six bolls and two bushels of oats, and one "turs" of straw, with digging and cutting of thirty-three "fidders" of peats in the moss of Balbroggy, or other places lying near the monastery, where the convent or successors shall obtain power of digging; also with carriage of seventeen "fidders" of the same to the monastery at their own cost, with one long draught or carriage of coals, logs, lime, lead, and tiles, with their own oxen or horses in carts (curribus) or otherwise, in each year, when required, with the astricted multure of the grain mill of Kathik; also a yearly due to the dominical chaplain of Bennathy, and the parish clergyman of the same, also of the ferry-boat of Ylef; with all forinsec service, as well in time of war as of peace, and going in company with the abbot or with the commissaries of his family (familie nostre) in the army of the kingdom, or convention of the lieges for defence of the kingdom and resistance of "our old enemies of England," and for defence of the said monastery; with power to the said monastery to distrain the said Robert's movables, if he fail in payment of said feu-farm, within forty days after requisition thereof, with 20s. Scots as damage for delay, and this beside other penalties which may be incurred on account of the premises: Providing also that it shall not be lawful to the said Robert to sell the said lands, except they be first offered to the monastery, and if refused, then he may sell to any one of no higher rank than himself, this charter to be null if he do otherwise; and in the case foresaid, the said Robert shall be bound to answer, with premonition of twenty-one days, to three pleas to be held at the said monastery; and the said Robert shall keep up the houses, woods, etc., on said lands, his heirs doubling the feu-duty at their first year's entry. Moreover, the said Robert shall, if necessary, freely receive and carefully preserve the teind sheaves of said lands, and shall have granaries prepared for the same; reserving to the monastery, inter alia, the fisheries of salmon on the water of Ylef, and a place for hanging and stretching nets, if need be: Signed and sealed at Cupar, 31st May 1558.

[Fol. 93, 94.]

CHARTER TO ROBERT ALEXANDER, OF THE THIRD PART OF THE LANDS OF GALLORAW, ETC.

208. Charter by Donald, abbot of Cupar, and the convent thereof, giving, granting, and confirming to Robert Alexander, and Margret Blair, his spouse, Alexander Alexander, their son, and their heirs, all and whole the third part of the lands of Galloraw, with pertinents, together with a plot of ground (prædio), garden, and croft lying in the eastern quarter of the new place, inhabited and possessed by the said Robert and Margaret, and also the houses and gardens contiguous, on the east side, inhabited by the widows of Donald Randell and John Mathy; also the croft of St Katherine, and the croft lying on the west side of the common street leading to the end of the place, with their plot of ground between the plot of Thomas Pilmour on the east, and the plot of David Cuben on the west, with all pertinents of said lands and others lying in the lordship of Cupar and sheriffdom of Perth: To be held and possessed by the said Robert, and Margaret, his spouse, and the longer liver of the two in conjunct fee, and by Alexander, their son, and his heirs whomsoever, of the convent, etc., in feu-farm heritably for ever: They paying therefor 40s. Scots as formerly, with 3*l*s. 8*d*. augmentation, in all £3, 14*s*. 8*d*., and five bolls, two bushels, two pecks, and two parts of a peck of barley, free from straw, with two dozen capons, two bolls of oats, two "turssis" of straw, with carriage of hay in the carts of the convent, by their own oxen and sufficient horses, from the abbey meadow yearly, that all hay may be built up in their hay-yard, with astricted multures, payment to chaplain of 'the blessed Mary' at Ben-nathy, ferry-boat, [and other similar conditions as to failure of payment of rent within forty days, 30*s*. being penalty, and other clauses as in the preceding charter]. Moreover, the said Robert, and Margaret, and Alexander, shall build and have always in readiness ample buildings on their eastern plot of ground, viz., a large hall, chambers, with well-appointed tables, stable with straw, hay, and oats, a cellar stored with victuals, drinks, and wines, when they can be had, always ready to be sold to the convent and successors, and their servants and guests arriving on the sea-coast of Angus; also they shall plant orchards, herb-gardens, flower-gardens, and other things suitable to this soil; also the said Alexander's heirs shall double the feu-duty as use is: Finally, the said abbot, etc., grant to the said Robert, Margaret, and Alexander, the right of citizens, with liberties and privileges granted to the monastery by King James the Fourth in "our burgh of Kethik;" also the portion of marshy land, measured by certain good men, and annexed to these plots of ground and crofts, lying in the marshy land in a field of the Grange of Cupar, between the portion of the husbandmen of Cowbyre on the west, and the portion of Alexander Ramsay on the east, extending in breadth fifteen roods in length to the middle portion of the said marshy land, for digging and drying their peats; and also for manuring the said lands and crofts, they give yearly all the dung in the common stables, with ashes and dust from the convent workshops and courtyards (areis), to be carried away by the said

Robert, etc., according to a decree of the abbot, part of the said ashes being reserved to the convent for young plants, when they need it: Reserving to the convent, inter alia, the fisheries of salmon on the Ylef, and a place for spreading and hanging nets, and a place of common market and unmolested passage to the house and garden of the cook of the convent, and also the "wester perk" of Galloraw, for the use of the convent in any manner to be determined; but the east park the husbandmen of Galloraw shall themselves cultivate for their own use by this rule (hac lege)—they shall sow the field for two years, [then] the fruits of the second year being gathered, they shall make ready that field for growing broom; and they shall carefully preserve and everywhere enclose the park lands for seven years, the broom for the convent, the pasture for themselves, from which broom they shall drive all the cattle, that it may grow; and they shall begin to drive the cattle from the broom in the year 1559, thus alternating the broom for seven years for the hearths and ovens of the abbey, and two years' produce for themselves, with pasture in proper season and soil: Signed and sealed the last day of May 1558. [Cancelled by renewal.]

THE FOLLOWING ARE ABSTRACTS OF THE PRECEDING CHARTERS.

1. Charter by King William the Lion to the monks of Cupar, confirming the donation which William of Hay made to them of the lands of Lidderpoles: To be held in free and perpetual alms, in terms of the said donation, saving the king's service. Given at Stirling.

2. Charter by David of Hay, with consent of Gilbert, his heir, whereby, for the souls of King William, of William Hay, the granter's father, of Ethna, his mother, of himself, of Eva, his wife, and of his heirs, ancestors, and successors, he grants to the monks of Cupar one net upon the main water of Tay, wherever they may judge most useful to them, to fish with the said net when and as often as they will, between Lornyn,¹—Randolph of Hay, and the Hermitage, which Gillemichell, sometime Hermit, held; with three acres of land lying next to the said Hermitage, and with all easements which the said Hermit enjoyed about the Hermitage: And one erch (? ark for eels) to draw upon the foresaid water and within the foresaid boundaries, where they may think most expedient; saving the granter's fishings, that is to say, his charis (yairs?): To be held of the granter and his heirs as freely, fully, and honourably as any alms-gift is held by religious men in the kingdom of Scotland.

3. Licence granted by Gilbert of Hay, knight, Lord of Erroll, to the abbot and convent of Cupar and their men, of free passage, without impediment, with their goods, on his lands, by all roads and paths by which his own men used to pass; granting also, that in case they or their men should incur forfeiture within his land, or be fined in his court, that their fines or forfeiture should be quit to the said religious men, without gainsaying on the part of any one : Providing, however, that a principal crime shall be corrected at the sight of the common friends of both parties. Sealed.

4. Demission by Gilbert of Hay, knight, Lord of Errol, in favour of the abbot and convent of Cupar, and their successors, for ever, of all right which he had to the whole herbage and fishing of the pool of water of Ederpoles, as far as their land extends ; which water runs to the granter's mill ; and all other easements belonging or that may belong to the said fishing, pool, and herbage. Sealed with the seal of the granter, together with that of Nicolas of Hay, his firstborn son and heir.

5. Confirmation by Robert the Bruce, in favour of the abbot and convent of Cupar, in free, pure, and perpetual alms, of all grants made to them of the lands of the two Drymeis, within the tenement of Glenbaclach, which they have by gift of Adam of Glenbaclach, with the whole common of the same, which they have by gift of Eustace of Ratray and confirmation of the said Adam ; and also of the land of Kincreik, within the barony of Lour, with the mill and whole multure of the same barony ; and also of two acres of land on the north side of the Water of Kirbeth, between the baronies of Innerichty and Lour, with advocacy of the church of Mathy, which they have by gift of Alexander of Abernethy, knight ; and also of two acres of land, with advocacy of the church of Fossoquhy, within the earldom of Strathern, which they have by gift of Gilbert of Hay, knight, and confirmation of Malise, Earl of Strathern ; and likewise of the land of Littleport, near Montrose, which they have by gift of Alexander of Lindsay and confirmation of John of Kinros, knights ; and also of two merks of annual rent from the land of Adinlesk, within the tenement of —, which they have by gift of the foresaid John, with all right which he had to the same ; and also of the lands of —, of Duny, and Clair, which they possess by gift of the same John ; also of the advocacy of the church of Alveld (? Alweth), in the earldom of Aberdeen, with the whole land lying near that church, which they have by gift of Marjory, Countess of Athole, relict of the late John, Earl of Athole, and confirmation of David, his firstborn son and heir : And also of free passage with their goods and burdens through the lands of the foresaid Alexander, Gilbert, John, knights, Eustace, Adam, and Alan, the doorward, and indulgence as to the forfeiture of them and their men : To be held in terms of the said grants. Dated at Dunkeld, 5th October 1309. This charter is attested by Gilbert of Hay, Constable of Scotland, and his seal set thereto at Dundee, the Thursday next before the Feast of St Clement, pope and martyr, 1309.

6. Charter by Nicolas of Hay, Lord of Erroll, to the monks of Cupar, of that oxgate of land in Carso which they had by gift of Roger, son of Bandrice, together with the annual rent which the said monks were accustomed to pay to the said Nicolas over the said land : Granting the same free from all service, exaction, and secular demand, and that all the lands which they held of the granter in his tenement of Erroll, they should hold as freely, quietly, fully, and honourably as any religious men in Scotland, hold any land of any baron, in pure and perpetual alms. Sealed, etc.
