May we seek thee with all our hearts, that we may find thee according to the promise. May we ever remember that thou art a God of truth, that thou hatest iniquity, and that liars are an abomination in thy sight. Lord, do thou accompany with thy rich blessing all the exercises in which thy people have been engaged on the past sabbath. May the fruit be unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. May thy people have been fitted and prepared thereby for all thy will. Grant, O God, that we may be enabled on the strength of that meat to go many days. We have been with thee upon the mount. We are now about to go down again into the world. May we carry with us the savour of divine things. May our faces shine like theirs who have been upon the mount with God. May we have grace given us so to act, in all our intercourse with our fellow-men, that they will be constrained to take notice of us that we have been with Jesus. Deliver us from a worldly spirit. Save us from the evil that is in the world. Save us from the evil that is in our own heart. Lord, let thy way be known in all the earth, thy saving health among all nations. Hasten that happy time when the heathen will be given to the Son for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Bless each of us before thee. Hear our prayer, and when thou hearest, do thou answer and forgive, for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXIV.

SCRIPTURE—1 THESSALONIANS V.

REMARKS.

It has been well remarked by a judicious commentator, that 'curious inquiries about times and seasons are commonly unprofitable and vain.' At all events, we are, in the commencement of this chapter, assured of an event which it becomes us habitually to realize. Nothing can be plainer than that there was a degree of prominence given, in the early ages of the church, to the fact of the second coming of the Lord, which is now in a great measure lost. Look for example at this very epistle. In every chapter the solemn and awakening event is referred to. In the end of chapter first he speaks of 'waiting for his Son from heaven.' In the end of chapter second he asks, 'For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?' In the end of chapter third, in the end of chapter fourth, and again, both towards the commencement and towards the close of that which has been read, the same great and animating theme is referred to. Let no one say, then, that it ought not to be prominent. Let no one say that it was not much in the apostle's heart.

There may be, as there are, differences of opinion with regard to the time, and the circumstances, and the object, of the second advent of our Lord; but the doctrine itself is one, which ought to form the rallying point of the church's hope in the future, as the decease which he accomplished at Jerusalem forms the grand basis of its confidence in the past. We find this hope pervading the New Testament writings. 'The Lord is at hand,' says he to the Philippians. He charges Timothy, before the Lord Jesus Christ, who would 'judge the quick and the dead at his appearing.' He speaks to Titus 'of looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus.' And the last words of Jesus to his church were, 'Surely I come quickly.' When we read all this in the word of God, what can we say but that the church has fallen, in a great measure, from the realization of a doctrine which was once bound close upon her heart? It will be a fearful event to the wicked. 'Sudden destruction will come upon them, and travail, as upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape.' But it will be different with regard to the people of God. It is what they look forward to with hope. It is an event which of all others will be the most glorious. The practical effect of the realization of it in their hearts is expressed in these words: 'Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober.' Let us be awake, performing the high functions of Christians; watching on every hand; abounding in labours of love, and praying; for upon the prayers of God's people depends the upholding of the world. Christians little realize either their high destinies or their high duties, otherwise they could not 'sleep as do others.' And if there is any thing that is calculated to animate us in respect of these, it is the believing realization of this great truth, that 'the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night.' The chapter concludes with an enumeration of Christian duties, accompanied by the language of exhortation and counsel. Let us hear the Spirit speaking them, 'If we know these things, happy are we if we do them.'

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God, enable us to worship thee in spirit and in truth, and to come into thy presence with the trust and the confidence of thy children. We come to thee at the close of another day, beseeching thee to grant us thy fatherly forgiveness, and to accept of us in Jesus. We look back upon this day, and we see much on account of which we are ashamed in thy sight; much on account of which we ought to be deeply grieved; much unfaithfulness and sin. Pour out upon us the spirit of a true repentance. Enable us to look unto him whom we have pierced, and to mourn. We have to confess this night, that at the best we are unprofitable servants, and we have no hope of pardon or acceptance except in him who is all our salvation and all our desire. O that we knew and felt more of the plague of our own hearts; that we were brought to a more full and intimate knowledge of all their deceitfulness and all their villainess; that we were led to see how full they are of every thing that is dishonouring to God, so that we might feel more our need of the Spirit, and our need of Christ. We have this day had experience of the evil heart that is in us. How have we been carried away by the world! How have we indulged in the polluted and vain imagination of our hearts! How have we forgotten the God that made us, and lightly esteemed the Rock of our salvation! Lord, our place is in the lowest dust; and we can only say before thee, Unclean, unclean; God be merciful unto us sinners. Almighty Father, do thou carry home to our hearts those precious truths which we have now been reading from thy word. May they be impressed upon us by the Spirit, so that we may experience all their realizing power. May we not sleep as do others. Lord, how unutterably dread is the sleep of that soul which is sunk in darkness and insensibility! Permit us not to sink into such a state. Awaken us to prayer, and to the love of thyself. Quicken us that we may call upon thy name. Make us active and devoted in the ways of righteousness and peace, walking in the footsteps of the blessed Jesus. May we ever remember the coming of the Lord. Behold thou comest quickly. Thou comest with clouds; thou comest for judgment. The Lord is at hand. May we live every day in the realization of this. May it animate us in every duty. May the thought live every day in our hearts, that the Lord cometh; and may we be upheld and comforted by the thought, that when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory. In that great and dreadful day, may all here present meet thee, not as an avenging Judge, but as a reconciled Father. We would lie down this night in the faith of this great truth, as those who know not what a day or an hour may bring forth; and we would repose our souls upon the finished work and the all-prevailing intercession of the Lord our Redeemer. Bless all our dear friends, and all connected with us, by whatever tie. Look in mercy upon the poor and the afflicted. Hear the prayer of the destitute. Draw near to those who are drawing nigh to death. And may these the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, find acceptance before thee, through Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH XXXI.

REMARKS.

In this and the preceding chapter, the return of the Jews from their captivity and dispersion to the land of their fathers is foretold.

The prediction is first announced in direct terms, ver. 1; and then described in varied scenes of beautiful imagery, as it seems to have been presented to the mind of the prophet, ver. 26. As the difficulties in the way of their return might seem insuperable, God was pleased to remind them of what he had done for their fathers of old, who survived the sword and perils in the wilderness. Conducting them safely through fire and water into their rest in Canaan, which might encourage their hope of a similar interposition and like favourable result.

That his love to them was not a recent and sudden attachment, but of ancient origin and long duration, ver. 2. That though the edifice of their civil and ecclesiastical polity was now in ruins, it should be rebuilt and restored, and the daughters of Israel celebrate the happy event with the usual demonstrations of music and the dance, ver. 4. That the mountains of Samaria shall yet become cultivated vineyards, and the clustering grapes so plenty as to be accounted common things, and eaten without the ritual restrictions of the law, (Lev. xix. 23.) that law being then abrogated, ver. 6. Now appear to the prophet's vision, watchmen as heralds on mount Ephraim, (the country of the ten tribes,) proclaiming the jubilee of their release. To intimate the certainty of the event, the ten tribes are addressed as in possession of their own land, and exhorted to go up and worship the Lord God in Zion—praise him for his wonderful works in behalf of his people, and pray for the safety and welfare of their remnant.

Then, as in answer to their prayer, Jehovah calls upon all nations of the world to rejoice in, and celebrate the restoration of Israel, ver. 10—13. Though this great company on their return, came weeping for their own and their fathers' sins, which had occasioned their long exile, and grievous suffering, tears of joy also mingled as they reached the height of Zion, that the Lord, notwithstanding their great unworthiness, had had compassion on them, miserable outcasts in their low and lost estate, ransomed them from the powers that held them captive, and had now blessed them with abundance of those good things, corn, wine, oil, and flocks, which constituted the wealth of Palestine. Nations and isles the most distant, are called upon to celebrate such a wonderful manifestation of the power and goodness of Jehovah in behalf of his people, ver. 14. The worship of God is also represented as restored; for the souls of the priests are said to be satiated with fatness, viz. through abundance of offerings brought to the altar, ver. 15—17. The scene now suddenly changes. Rachel, the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, so desirous of offspring, is seen risen from her grave in Ramah, and wistfully looking about her for her children who are no where to be seen; being all carried away into captivity, she is heard loudly bewailing the loss. In the outburst of her grief, she refused to listen to the accents of consolation; but is afterwards soothed and comforted with the assurance that her posterity, though absent, are not irrecoverably lost, but shall yet be restored from the land of the enemy, ver. 18—20. The scene is next diversified by Ephraim, the chief of the ten tribes, and personating the whole, rising into view, appearing in the character and attitude of a mourner for sin, and suppliant for mercy.

His humiliation, confession, and supplication, are graciously accepted by an affectionate forgiving parent.

Next follows (ver. 31—35.) a remarkable prophecy, foretelling a change of the Mosaic economy or religious institution of the Jews, and the introduction of another or new dispensation, full of grace and truth.

In the return of Ephraim, or the ten tribes, we see the process of a sinner's conversion unto God exemplified, and the compassion of our heavenly Father to his offending relenting children beautifully illustrated; and in their privileges and prosperity, are shadowed out the blessings of Christ's redeemed people. Let them value and improve them, and show that his laws are written on their hearts, and practised in their lives.

PRAYER.

O God, we come unto thee believing that thou art, and that thou art the rewarder of them who diligently seek thee; surely it is good for us to draw near unto God. But how shall we, sinful dust and ashes, take upon us to speak unto thee in whose sight the heavens are not clean, and who chargest thine angels with folly? How good and gracious art thou to bear with us so much and so long, and not to have dealt with us as we have sinned, nor requited us according to our deserts, but hast mercifully spared us, and waited on us to do us good; condescending even to treat with us by means of thy word, Spirit, and providence, to bring us to an affecting sense of the evil of our character, and danger of our situation, and persuade us to turn and live. But, alas! we have not listened to thy calls and counsels as we ought; we have been refractory and unsubmissive under those chastenings which were designed and calculated for our good. As moral Governor of the world, who lovest righteousness and hatest iniquity, transgression of thy law, and rebellion against thy authority, cannot, shall not pass unpunished. But we know that thou hast no pleasure in afflicting or grieving the children of men. It is we who are the authors and procurers of all the evils we suffer, and when thou chastenest, it is for our profit. For, sustaining the near and endearing relation of a Father, thou hast the compassionate regards and sympathies of an affectionate parent, and we are persuaded that thou art willing to receive into thy favour and forgiveness the returning, however prodigal, son; there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. Hast thou not said, Come and let us reason together, and though your sins be as crimson and scarlet, they shall be as snow and as wool. Return ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. May the reply of our hearts be, Behold we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God. We thank thee for the new covenant dispensation of great and precious promises, under which we have the happiness to live. May we be enabled suitably to value the high and holy privileges which we enjoy, and gladly to avail ourselves of such inestimable blessings so freely proffered. May we be all taught of thee, who teacheth savingly and to profit, that our minds may be suitably instructed, impressed, and improved. May we all know thee, so as to love and delight ourselves in thee, and love thy law which is holy, just, and good, and in the keeping of which there is so great a reward. Vouchsafe to be our God, and make us all thy people, whose habitual aim and endeavour it is to conduct ourselves in some measure worthy of thee, and as children of so many mercies. Inscribe thy law upon our minds, that it may be the master principle of action in and rule of our life. Be merciful to our unrighteousness, and in whatever we daily come short of thy glory, and our duty; our sins and iniquities remember no more. Let goodness and mercy continue to follow us all the days of our life, and may our dwelling at last be in thy house eternal in the heavens, for all that we ask is in the name and for the sake of our Mediator and High Priest, whom thou hearest always. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVI. 3.

SCRIPTURE—2 THESSALONIANS I.

REMARKS.

After writing his former epistle to the Thessalonians, the apostle learned that they had misunderstood his meaning respecting the coming of Christ at the day of judgment, as if that awful event was just at hand, and would happen in their own time. In consequence of this impression, some already were become idle, giving up their secular employments, as inconsistent or interfering with their preparations for this all-important, all-absorbing event; he, therefore, wrote them this second epistle to remove their misapprehension on that subject, to encourage and comfort them under their present sufferings for the sake of their religious profession and a good conscience; and farther recommends the practice of several Christian virtues.

This epistle, like the former, is addressed to the church of the Thessalonians in general, which seems not yet to have been completely organized, 1 Thess. v. 12. As Silvanus and Timothy assisted the apostle in first preaching the gospel, and founding the church in Thessalonica, they are joined with him in his salutation to the Christian brethren, and in prayers for them.

As the apostle loved his new converts, and felt much solicitude for them in their very trying circumstances, he begins his letter by offering up a fervent prayer, that grace or the special favour of God in its richest manifestations, and peace, including all manner of happiness, might be vouchsafed them from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The apostle and his fellow-labourers had prayed, chap. iii. 12, 'that the Lord would make the Thessalonians increase and abound in love one towards another, and towards all men even as they did towards them.' This prayer (ver. 3.) was not in vain.

Ver. 4. The apostle was so much gratified with such an expression of Christian principle and feeling in so recent converts, that he rejoiced to acquaint others with their distinguished faith and patience, under all the persecution and tribulation which they endured; and to encourage the Thessalonians to persevere in faith and fortitude, he now tells them how much they had been approved and commended by him, and how highly they were esteemed in other churches of God.

Ver. 5, 6. The sufferings to which they were now subjected, and which they sustained with such exemplary faith and patience, served as a token and pledge of a coming judgment. Ver. 7. 'Rest with us.' As God, the righteous governor of the world, will assuredly punish those who vex and persecute his people, so in all their tribulations he awards them rest or comfort, having inward peace or rest from all distressing anxiety and fear, founded on a consciousness of their acceptance with God through Christ, and a good hope through grace of a blessed and glorious immortality. Thus, though Paul and his fellow-labourers were grievously troubled on every side, yet, as they say, they were not distressed; though perplexed, they were not in despair; though in the world they had tribulation, in Christ they had peace; so that, though apparently sorrowful, they were always rejoicing. The apostle refers to the second coming of Christ, when their 'rest' would be complete.

This second coming is for the purpose of awarding righteous retributions. In the first place, to take vengeance on them that know not God; and, secondly, on those that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who receive not with gratitude and joy the grand and supremely interesting discoveries of the gospel, who enter not into its gracious purport and design, comply not with its earnest urgent calls and invitations.

But though Jesus Christ will be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on the disobedient and impenitent, he also comes to be glorified in his saints, or those whom he has graciously selected and set apart and sanctified for himself.

The apostle, applying what he had said about saints in general to the Thessalonians, states that, because of their believing the gospel which he preached to them, they also should form a part of that happy number in and by whom Christ would be admired and glorified.

Ver. 11. Wherefore, seeing the Thessalonians had such a glorious prospect before them at the coming of Christ, the apostle assures them, that he and his fellow-labourers always prayed for them, ceased not in their stated times of prayer to offer up fervent intercessions in their behalf, that God, whom they addressed under the appropriate relation of their God in covenant, would render and reckon them worthy, fit, or meet for the state of glory and blessedness to which they were called by the gospel; the prize of the high calling. Next that he would fulfil the good pleasure of his goodness, the sole and sovereign dictate of his surpassing benevolence in their behalf, and render their faith so sure and vigorous as to produce in them all holy tempers, and corresponding good works, ver. 12. The end proposed and sought to be attained is, that the name or character, and perfections of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in them, by their walking worthy of him, and of their high and holy vocation; and that they again may be glorified in him, that is, be approved and honoured by him now, and may hereafter share in his glory and felicity, according to the exuberant grace of our God and Lord Jesus Christ.

PRAYER.

Most great and gracious God, we thy guilty polluted children of the dust, are taking upon us to speak unto thee the Most High, whom we have so often and grievously offended. We do bless thee that thou hast not dealt with us as we have sinned, nor requited our ill; but in the midst of deserved wrath hast remembered us with undeserved mercy. Truly it is of the Lord's mercies that we have not been consumed, and how much more that we enjoy all things pertaining to life and godliness. We thank thee for the means of grace, and that our season of merciful visitation is still prolonged, that a Saviour mighty, and willing as mighty to save, has been provided for us, and is presented to us in the gospel; that we are not only permitted, but exhorted and urged to come to him and be saved. May we be persuaded and enabled cordially to receive him whom thou hast sent to seek and save us; and willingly yield up ourselves to his saving offices and influences, as desirous to be saved from the love and service of sin now, as from its penal consequences hereafter. May it be given us in behalf of Christ to believe on his name, and may our faith evince its genuineness and power, by growing exceedingly, and effectually working in us grateful returns of love to him who first loved us, and by abounding in all the charities of life to one another. We have great reason to be thankful that we are not subjected to sore privations and persecutions, as many of thy people have been, on account of our religious profession; but may avow our adherence and allegiance to thee, and worship thee according to our consciences, and none to make us afraid. May the blessings of religious liberty, which we so happily enjoy, be long continued in this our native country, and be speedily extended over the world. But as we may not expect exemption from troubles and trials as they may be needful for us, grant that we may be suitably exercised under them, so that they may yield to us the peaceable fruits of righteousness. May our faith in the wisdom and goodness of him who appoints them, enable us not only humbly to submit to, but acquiesce in them, and to bear them with meekness and patience, as the chastening of an affectionate parent for our good, who does not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men. We rejoice in thy paternal government, that nothing does or can happen to us without thy knowledge, permission, or appointment; and that when thou shalt judge the world in righteousness, thou wilt rectify the apparently unequal allotments of thy dispensations here, when it will be manifest that thou hast done all things wisely and well. May our minds be suitably solemnized with the awful prospect of the glorious coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, and our appearing before him to receive our everlasting award, according to our character and works here. God forbid that we, who enjoy such superior advantages now, should not know thee the true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent; should not now fully comply with all thy gracious calls and counsels addressed to us by the gospel, and so at last be punished with everlasting destruction from thy blissful presence. But believing the grand and supremely interesting truths respecting Jesus Christ testified to us in the gospel, being united and assimilated to him now, may we be of the happy number of those in that day, in whom his divine workmanship and image shall be gloriously manifested, and celebrated by all the heavenly hosts, as trophies to the praise and glory of his grace, and admired and praised by us as all our salvation, and all our desire. May God give us suitable worthiness and meetness for this inheritance of the saints in light, the object and hope of our high and holy calling, and fulfil in us the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power, that Christ may now be more and more honoured by us, and we by him. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH XXXIII.

REMARKS.

In this chapter our attention is directed to the return of Israel and Judah from their long captivity. Jeremiah was now in the court of the prison, where he received this oracle; but though he was bound, 'the word of God was not bound.' It came to him the second time, as if to intimate the certainty of the event—the vision is doubled. The second causes, or means, no doubt would intervene. Jehovah distinctly asserts himself to be the maker, or rather doer, of what he was to reveal. He bids Jeremiah ask, and he would show him great and mighty things which he would bring to pass. The prophets knew not always the full import or design of the things which they uttered; and Jeremiah, though not without information on this interesting subject, is thus prepared to expect farther communications upon it.

The people of Judah had not yet gone into captivity, when their return from it is here foretold by him who has the times and seasons in his own power.

The cause of their going into captivity, it appears, was their wickedness. Men are the authors of their own misery. God does not unnecessarily nor willingly afflict the children of men. 'It is their own wickedness that corrects them,' and is the source of all the evils they suffer. Thus (ver. 5.), on account of their wickedness, God hid his face, withdrew his favour from the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and then, though they fought against the Chaldeans, they could not prevail. The result was only to fill their houses with dead bodies of the slain. But he promises (ver. 6.) to heal their breaches and disorders, whether political or religious; restore them to moral health, and bless them with abundance of peace and prosperity. For (ver. 7.) he would cause the captive tribes to return to the land of their fathers (ver. 8.), freely pardon their sins, and restore them to the possessions and privileges of their nation as at the beginning. Now it appears that this restoration does not refer to the return of the two tribes from their captivity of seventy years in Babylon, but of the ten tribes also; for (ver. 7.) the Lord says, 'I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel, to return.' Both appeared in perspective to the prophet, on the same field of vision, though not as contemporary events; but the near accomplishment of the one might serve as a pledge and earnest of the fulfilment of the other. Next, it is not a partial, but a national return that is meant, for it is announced in general terms, 'the captivity of Israel and of Judah.' Chap. xxx. 3. 'I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord.' Chap. xxxi. 1. Rom. xi. 26. 'So all Israel shall be saved.' Some indeed of the ten tribes joined the two on their return from Babylon; but not in a body. Farther, by the return of Israel is not meant their conversion merely to the faith and obedience of the Messiah, but a restoration also to the land of their fathers; for the description of places to be inhabited by them (ver. 10—13.) is so marked and minutely distinguished, as to be incapable of a figurative interpretation, and must therefore be taken in its obvious and literal acceptance.

It is likewise evident that this predicted restoration is yet future. For, in the first place, the ten tribes have not returned in a body; and next, if David (according to ver. 17.) shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of Israel, it is certain that, since the captivity in Babylon to the present day, there has not been one of the royal line of David sitting upon the throne of Judah and Israel; nor (according to ver. 18.) have the Jews had a regular priesthood of the order of Levi in the stated exercise of their sacred functions; from which we seem warranted to conclude, that this prediction refers to a future period yet to come.

Farther, it appears that this restoration of Judah and Israel will be so marvellous as to excite the wonder and interest of all nations of the world. Their restoration will afford great cause for joy, as it will usher in the general conversion of the Gentile world, and thus be, as the apostle expresses it, life from the dead. And what ground of praise also to him, whose goodness and mercy endureth for ever, and whose faithfulness is from generation to generation!

From the promise and prospect of such temporal good, the prophet, as usual with the sacred writers, passes on to announce a greater spiritual good, even the coming of Messiah, there denoted (ver. 15.) by the Branch of righteousness, the rod or shoot from the decayed root or stem of Jesse, as to his human nature, Isa. xi. 1. The Branch of the Lord, produced and sustained by him, appointed to rule and exercise judgment and righteousness in the protection and government of his people. Many of the branches, or descendants of David, who filled his throne, were unrighteous; but this Branch is emphatically the righteous one; righteous in himself, and the author of righteousness to others. Ver. 16. 'In those days of Messiah's reign shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the (name) wherewith he shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness,' the 'Jehovah our righteousness.'

Then follows (ver. 17, 18.) the promise of an unbroken succession of rulers, in the line of David and of the priesthood, to perform their sacred functions. But seeing the Jews have had neither a king nor priesthood of their own since the destruction of Jerusalem and dispersion of their nation, this promise remains still to be accomplished. For the certainty of its fulfilment an appeal is made to the stable course of nature in the unvarying ordinances of heaven, ver. 21. And as some might be ready to suppose, from suffering the Jews to be so long scattered over the earth, every where despised and maltreated, that God had entirely cast them off, and would never gather and restore them, he repudiates the unworthy supposition by again referring to the uniform regularity and stability of the ordinances of heaven as a pledge of his faithfulness.

PRAYER.

Great fear is due unto thee, O God, in the meetings of thy saints, and thou art to be held in reverence of all them that would acceptably approach thee. May we have grace wherewith to serve thee. For as we are unworthy to come unto thy presence at all, we feel utterly unequal to order our thoughts and speech aright, and to commune with thee on our most momentous interests, which involve our present peace and everlasting welfare. Be pleased to vouchsafe us the promised aid of the Spirit of grace and of supplication, to help our infirmities, to teach us what things to pray for, and to give us a proper frame of spirit with which to ask them. In thee compassions flow. Hadst thou delighted in the destruction of sinners, hadst thou been unwilling to save, thou wouldst not have provided such a ransom to deliver them from the lowest hell; thou wouldst not still continue to wait on us to be gracious, and even to beseech us to be reconciled unto thee. We have no reason to suspect thy willingness to save; but we have great cause to fear lest we come short of salvation through the unbelief and impenitence of our own hearts. Preserve us from deceiving ourselves with a name to live, while we are dead; from saying peace, peace, to ourselves, when thou sayest there is no peace; from imagining ourselves safe, though in imminent peril. Save us from listening to the enticing temptations of the world; from yielding to the corrupt inclinations of our own evil hearts, and from being led captive or astray by our spiritual enemies; and above all, save us from the fearful guilt and irreparable doom of self-destruction. But however great our spiritual destitution, and imminent danger from without and within, we bless thee that our case is not yet desperate, that we are still in the land of the living and place of hope. Thou hast laid our help on one who is mighty to save; and being commanded to look to him alone for salvation, we feel warranted to call and claim him Jehovah our Righteousness, to say, In the Lord I have righteousness and strength. May a sense of our infinite obligations to our redeeming God and Saviour constrain us to returns of grateful love and duty; and may his grace, that bringeth salvation, so conspicuously manifested in the gospel, teach us effectually to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Wherein soever we are called, may it be our earnest desire and study therein to abide with God. Conscientious and faithful in the discharge of the duties of the several stations and relations in life, may we make our light so to shine, that others, seeing our good works, may be won to glorify thee our Father in heaven. May thy great name be hallowed, and the kingdom and reign of the Redeemer be speedily extended and established over the whole earth. May the means for widely diffusing the light and influence of the truth as it is by Jesus, be multiplied and blessed with abundant success. We rejoice in the bright and happy prospects which yet await thine ancient people the Jews, in the latter days. We thank thee for the sympathy and interest excited, and the exertions put forth on their behalf, throughout the churches. Rend the veil of ignorance and prejudice that is upon their mind, that they may see and be convinced that Jesus of Nazareth is indeed the true Messiah, and that it is vain for them to look for another, seeing there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved. Hear the prayers that are daily offered up for their conversion to the faith of Christ, and restoration to the land of their fathers, that with the fullness of the Gentiles they may constitute one great fold, under the chief Shepherd and Bishop of souls. May thy work prosper and prevail more among ourselves, especially in our own souls, and in all who are near and dear to us. May we become wiser and better daily, more fit for living, ready for dying, and meet for thy heavenly kingdom. And all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake of him whom thou hearest always. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 15.

SCRIPTURE—2 THESSALONIANS II.

REMARKS.

Having in the preceding chapter mentioned the coming of the Lord to judgment, the apostle takes occasion to correct an error into which some had fallen, through misapprehension of his words or meaning, as if this coming was about to take place in their own time. He therefore expressly guards them against entertaining such a notion, however they might have heard it, whether as being a revelation of the prophetic spirit to some one, or as supposed to have been taught by himself when at Thessalonica, or by a forged letter from him since he left it. He earnestly beseeches and adjures them by this awful advent, and their gathering together to meet the Lord in the air, not to give heed to such groundless fancies. For before that event takes place, there shall be (ver. 3.) a falling away first, literally, the apos-tacy from the faith once delivered to the saints, called the apostacy by way of eminence and emphasis, and because referred to by the prophet Daniel, and of which the apostle himself had personally before apprized them. The principal errors of which it consists are enumerated by the apostle, 1 Tim. iv. 1—3.

Again, this apostacy (ver. 3.) is to be headed and conducted by one, who is designated the man of sin, the son of perdition, and, in ver. 8, that wicked or lawless one; all which import his extreme malignity, wickedness, destructiveness, and fearful doom.

But though spoken of as one, we are not to consider him as a particular individual, but rather as a series or succession of persons, who are all, indeed, as one man, animated and governed by the same spirit, one in object and pursuit. This head of the apostacy is further described, having his seat or throne in the temple of God (ver. 4.), or Christian church, in which, of course, he is a member or minister; as arrogating and affecting supreme authority; opposing, and exalting himself above all that is called God, as magistrates, who are sometimes so denominated; nay, usurping even the prerogatives of Deity himself, above all that is worshipped; daring to make and unmake laws and ordinances at pleasure. The apostle had made the Thessalonians acquainted with this grand apostacy when he resided among them; and showed them that this anti-Christian power was then secretly at work, but let or hindered for a time; that when this obstruction was removed, then that wicked or lawless one would be revealed in all the energy and extent of his malignant power; and having reached his height of domination and wickedness, by the working or agency of satan, he would seek to maintain it by asserting the possession of supernatural powers, enabling him to work miracles, and thereby establish his claims to supremacy over all persons and things, and all matters civil and ecclesiastical, which in fact, however, were only lying wonders, or wonders of lies, practised on the credulity of mankind, brought forward with all manner of artifice and circumstance to mislead and deceive; and that the success of his deception would be among those who, because they receive not the truth in the love of it, but have pleasure in unrighteousness, are judicially given up of God to embrace and believe lies, even such a gross and palpable lie as transubstantiation. See Gal. ii. 16; Col. ii. 21, 22; 1 Tim. iv. 3.

But though the man of sin shall indeed have great power and reign, as we have seen, and deceive the nations of the earth, to comfort the hearts of Christians, and support their faith and patience under so long and grievous a trial, the apostle states that his days are numbered, and his doom pronounced. 'Whom the Lord will consume gradually; weaken 'with the breath of his mouth'—the preaching of the word in its purity and power; and at last will utterly destroy by the brightness of his coming, or signal interposition of judgment. While those who profess themselves Christians, but have not a sincere love of the truth, having more pleasure in error and unrighteousness, are judicially given up by God to have their own will and way, and left to embrace the delusion of error to their ruin; the apostle would confirm and comfort real Christians against the fear of thus falling away, or of such judgment coming upon them. Their preservation is secured, for God has chosen them to salvation, not on account of any foreseen merit which they might possess, but because he loved them. Nor is this love of recent origin, for they were beloved of him from the beginning of time, before the world was. The happy fruits and effects of this choice were apparent in their sanctification by the Spirit, and their cordial belief of the truth, which never fails to verify itself by corresponding good works. These circumstances afforded great cause for thanksgiving to God on their behalf, which the apostle now cordially offers up. The apostle exhorts them to stand fast in the belief and love of the truth, without wavering or receding; and to hold the traditions or doctrines which they had been taught, whether by word when he was personally among them, or by this and the former epistle sent them in absence. To this exhortation the apostle subjoins a fervent prayer, ver. 16, 17.

PRAYER.

O God, how awfully great art thou, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. We thank thee that, in despite of all opposition, thou hast in every age a seed to serve thee; that thy sanctuary is with men, and thy church founded on a rock, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail. Many times, and in various ways, have enemies afflicted her from her youth, but have not prevailed, for thou, who art mighty to save, wert in the midst of her. Even in the great defection from the faith and purity of the gospel, which has so much and so long injured the interests, and marred the beauty of thy church, thou didst not leave thyself without a witness to display a banner in behalf of the truth. And now, O Lord, as we have seen the rise and reign of this mystery of iniquity, as foretold in the word, may our faith be yet farther confirmed, if it please thee, by increasing tokens of its speedy decline and ruin. May the light of the glorious gospel of thy Son soon scatter the shades of ignorance, error, and superstition, which have so long shed such a baleful influence over so large a portion of the earth. May the Spirit of thy mouth, by the gospel preached in purity and power, more and more convince men of the evil and danger of departing from thee, from that only rule of faith and life which thou hast given us, listening to the traditions and commandments of fallible men. May the time to favour Zion soon come, when thou wilt appear in thy glory, to the purification and extension of thy church, and the signal destruction of the man of sin. Preserve us from all dislike or indifference to any portion of that truth which is able to save our souls, or from holding the truth in unrighteousness; that we may be kept from being ensnared or enslaved by the craft and malice of evil spirits, and being judiciously given up by thee to self-deception, and to the fearful delusion of believing and embracing lies to our destruction. Save us from the condemnation of loving darkness rather than the light; from not believing the truth, but having pleasure in unrighteousness. May our experience of the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit on our hearts, through belief of the truth, afford the satisfying and cheering evidence that we are beloved and chosen of thee to share in the glory of Christ, to which we are now called by his gospel, and for which we can never enough feel too grateful. Having this witness in ourselves, and such a good hope through grace, may we be strengthened and encouraged to stand fast wherein we have attained, and keep in mind and memory realizing impressions of the instructions we have received of divine things. And may our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, who hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort our hearts, and stablish us in every good word and work. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5—9.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH XXXV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The Rechabites, of whom such honourable mention is made in this chapter, belonged to a tribe of the Kenites, 1 Chron. ii. 55; and appear to have been descended from Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. We read in Num. x. 29—33, of the invitation which Moses gave Hobab, his brother-in-law, to accompany the children of Israel to the promised land; and it appears, from Judg. i. 16, and iv. 11, that the invitation was accepted, and that Hobab's descendants settled in the land of Canaan, though they obtained no inheritance in it, but dwelt in tents as 'strangers,' ver. 7.

Jonadab, who was the author of those rules of self-denial which the Rechabites observed, lived about three hundred years before Jeremiah, in the reign of Jehu, 2 Kings x. 15—26. From the marked attention paid to him by that king, it would appear that Jonadab was a man of some eminence, and zealous for the honour and worship of the true God. The reason which induced Jonadab to enjoin the Rechabites neither to drink wine, nor build houses, nor till the soil, is mentioned (ver. 7.), 'that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.' This, it is obvious, would be the natural result of a strict observance of Jonadab's rules. For not only would their temperate mode of living tend to promote health and longevity; but by refraining from the cultivation of the soil, and possessing no landed property, the Rechabites would avoid giving offence to the Jews among whom they dwelt. The whole land of Canaan was allotted to the various tribes and families of the children of Israel; and, therefore, if the Rechabites had engaged in agriculture, or shown a desire to obtain any inheritance, the jealousy of the Israelites would instantly have been awakened, an unpleasant collision might have ensued, which would lead to the expulsion of the Rechabites from Judea, and deprive them of the religious privileges which they enjoyed. Jonadab, therefore, from motives both of prudence and piety, prescribed rules to his family well adapted to secure to them the unmolested possession of their civil immunities and their religious advantages. The Rechabites were proselytes to the Jewish religion; and many of them were 'scribes,' who employed themselves in copying or expounding the book of the law, 1 Chron. ii. 55. As a reward for their obedience to Jonadab's commands, it is said (ver. 19.), that 'Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before the Lord for ever.' This prophecy has been literally fulfilled. The Beni-Rechab, sons of Rechab, still exist in Arabia, a 'distinct and easily distinguishable' race. They are called also Beni-Kheiber, probably from Heber the Kenite, Judg. iv. 11. They boast of their descent from Rechab, observe the rules of Jonadab, and profess pure Judaism. 'To this present moment,' says a recent traveller, 'they drink no wine, and have neither vineyard, nor field, nor seed, but dwell like Arabs in tents, and are wandering nommades. They believe and observe the law of Moses by tradition, for they are not in possession of the written law.*'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Observe, first, The filial piety of these Rechabites. During many hundred years they strictly complied with the injunctions of their father Jonadab, for which they obtained a striking testimony of God's approbation. The fifth commandment is the first with promise. Obedience to it is an important element in that godliness which has 'the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.' Let children, therefore, be incited, by the example here presented, to obey their parents in the Lord; and let them look to a witness nobler still, to the Son of God himself, who has left this instructive example to the young, that 'he was subject unto his parents.' And let parents also learn how important is the influence with which God has invested them over the minds of their children.

Observe, second, How desperately wicked is the heart of man! While the Rechabites 'obeyed their father's commandment,' the children of Israel disobeyed the commandments of God, notwithstanding all his goodness, warnings, and entreaties to them.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we would unite together in acknowledging, with grateful hearts, thy watchful care and thy paternal kindness toward us, thine unworthy children. Thou art the Father of our spirits, the former of our bodies, and the giver of every good and perfect gift. Thou hast bestowed upon us many temporal and spiritual blessings. Thou hast liberally supplied our daily returning wants. Thou hast preserved us from danger. Thou hast delivered us out of temptation, and guided us in difficulty, and comforted us in sorrow. And when we look back on all the way by which thou hast led us, we may truly say that goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our lives. But, O Lord, we must confess, with shame and sorrow, that though thou hast nourished and brought us up as children, yet we have rebelled against thee. We have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and are no more worthy to be called thy children. We have not cherished toward thee those sentiments of filial reverence and love, nor rendered unto thee that filial obedience which are due to our kind and beneficent Father in heaven. And though thou hast often spoken to us in the holy scriptures, not only by thy servants the prophets, but also by thine own Son; though thou hast warned us by the terrors of the law, and hast besought us by the still small voice of the gospel, and by the striving of thy Holy Spirit, to turn unto thee and live; yet, O Lord, we must confess that we have refused to obey thy voice speaking to us from heaven. O do thou awaken us all to a just sense of our guilt. Give unto each of us that godly sorrow for sin which worketh repentance unto salvation; and lead us, in the exercise of a lively faith, to that fountain which has been opened for sin and uncleanness, that so we may be washed, and sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. O God, be merciful unto us, and bless us. Cause thy face to shine upon us, and we shall be saved. May we be cleansed from all our sins in the atoning blood of Christ. May we be clothed with his perfect righteousness, so that we may be accepted in the Beloved, and may enjoy the peace of God, which passeth understanding. Deliver us from a spirit of bondage, causing us again to fear; but grant us a spirit of adoption, whereby we shall cry, Abba, our Father. May the love of God be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost; and may our souls be replenished with his saving grace and sanctifying influences, so that henceforth we may live as obedient children, and may walk steadfastly in the way that leadeth to everlasting life. Enable us to deny ourselves to all ungodliness and worldly lusts; to live as pilgrims and strangers upon the earth; and to prepare, by patient continuance in well-doing, for that better country which the Saviour is preparing for them that love him. O Lord, let thy kingdom come. Let thy will be done by us, and by all our fellow-creatures throughout the earth, even as it is done in heaven. Make known thy salvation, and show thy righteousness openly in the sight of the heathen. Have mercy on the sons and daughters of affliction. Hear their cry of distress, and send them the relief and consolation suited to their various circumstances. Be very gracious, O Lord, to our friends and relatives. Our heart's desire and prayer for them is, that they may be saved. Dwell in this family. Be thou the God of each member of it, and make us all thy people. Accept of our cordial thanksgivings for the mercies of the last night. Take us into thy holy protection this day; and be with us, to bless us and to do us good, both now and ever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM LXVII. 1—7. (Second Version).
SCRIPTURE—2 THESSALONIANS III.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. The apostle had concluded the preceding chapter with an earnest prayer for the Thessalonian converts; and he begins this chapter with requesting their prayers for himself and his fellow-labourers in the ministry. Ministers and people should pray for each other. They should pray especially that every obstacle to the success of the gospel may be removed, and that the word of the Lord may be glorified by the conversion of sinners, and the holy lives of believers. Observe the character of those who persecuted the preachers of the truth, and rejected their testimony. They were 'unreasonable,' impenetrable to conviction, and 'wicked' in their lives and conduct. The apostle seems here to refer to the insurrection of the Jews at Corinth, when they dragged him before Gallio, Acts xviii. 12. For though it is mentioned, in the note appended to this epistle, that it was written at Athens, yet that note is of no authority; and as Silvanus and Timotheus were with Paul when it was written (chap. i. 1.), while they did not join him at Athens, but at Corinth (Acts xviii. 1, 5.), it appears that he wrote this epistle from the latter city.

Ver. 6, 14. Those professing Christians who walk disorderly, and bring dishonour upon religion, ought to be subjected to the censure of the church, and separated from the communion of the faithful. Before proceeding, however, to excommunicate them, milder methods should be tried. They must not be counted as enemies, but admonished as brethren.

Ver. 7—9. As there were some among the Thessalonians who neglected the pursuits of honest industry, and ate the bread of idleness, the apostle reminds them of the example of diligence which he had himself given, by labouring with his own hands in his occupation of tent-making. He had refused to receive at Thessalonica that temporal support which he was entitled to, from those among whom he ministered; just as at Corinth, also, he waived his right to subsistence from the Christians there, and accepted it from another quarter, that 'the gospel might not be hindered,' and that they might see he was not actuated by mercenary motives in preaching it, 2 Cor. xi. 7—9; xii. 14.

Ver. 10—12. Those who are able, and yet refuse to work, ought to receive nothing out of the funds allotted to the poor. Idleness is the parent of many vices. It renders men 'busy-bodies,' 'for usually none are so busy in other men's matters as they that neglect their own.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast commanded us to pray; and thou hast promised to teach us, by thy Holy Spirit, how to pray, and what to pray for. And in obedience to thy command, and trusting in thy promise, we would this evening come to thy throne of grace to make known our wants and our requests to the hearer of prayer. O Lord, near the voice of our supplication when we cry unto thee, when we lift up our hands toward thy holy oracle. Let our prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the evening sacrifice. We would adore thee, O God, as the first and the last, as the fountain of all existence, and the sum of all excellence, and the giver of all true happiness. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, thou didst exist, in the solitude and silence of a past eternity, clothed with light as with a garment. And though the works of thy hands are ever changing, yet thou the Lord changest not; thou wilt continue the same, in glory and blessedness, throughout eternal ages. O Lord our God, thou art exceeding great. Who can by searching find out God? Who can find out the Almighty unto perfection? Such knowledge is too wonderful for us; it is high, we cannot attain unto it. But, O Lord, we would bless thy name that thou hast revealed to us, in thy holy word, as much of thy character and will as is necessary for our guidance and salvation. We thank thee that as thou didst, at sundry times and in divers manners, make thyself known unto the fathers by the prophets, thou hast likewise spoken unto us by thine own Son, who is the brightness of thy glory, and who, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high. We thank thee for the inestimable privilege of a translated bible, by which we are enabled to read in our own tongue the wonderful works of God, and to understand what great things thou hast done for us through the atoning sacrifice and meritorious obedience of God manifested in the flesh. O that thy blessed word may have free course in our hearts. May it be quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, casting down all our high thoughts, and subduing us unto the obedience of faith. May thy word be glorified in us, and by us. May it be a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path. May we have faith to rest for salvation upon him of whom the scriptures testify. Feeling our ignorance, may we sit daily at the feet of Jesus, with an earnest desire to learn his word, and to know what the will of the Lord is. Feeling our guilt and sinfulness, may we rest all our hopes of pardon and eternal life on the atoning blood and perfect righteousness of our great High Priest. Feeling our weakness and waywardness, may we submit to the authority of the King of Zion. May he render us willing in the day of his power, and defend us from all our spiritual enemies, and rule over us by his word, and reign in our hearts by his Holy Spirit. O Lord, let thy word have free course among all the nations of the earth. May every obstacle to its progress be taken out of the way; and grant that many may run to and fro preaching the everlasting gospel, so that the knowledge of the Lord may be increased, and cover the earth as the waters cover the channel of the sea. Bless and encourage thy servants who have gone to preach among the heathen the unsearchable riches of Christ. May the Lord of the harvest send forth more labourers into his harvest. Bless all the faithful ministers of Christ, of every name and denomination. O Lord, revive thy work in our native land, and send us a time of refreshing from thy presence. Have compassion on the afflicted, spare useful lives, and prepare the dying for death. Be very gracious to all who are near and dear to us. Accept of our thanks for thy watchful care of us this day. Take us into thy holy protection during the night. Let no evil befall us. Let no plague come nigh our dwelling. Raise us up, if it be thy will, to behold the light of a new day; and when we awake, may we still be with thee. Hear us, O Lord, and send an answer of peace, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM cv. 1—6.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH xlix.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In this chapter the prophet denounces the judgments of God upon various nations for their sins, and especially for the sin of oppressing and insulting the children of Israel. The present condition of the countries here mentioned furnishes a striking commentary on the prophet's graphic predictions; and the testimony of modern travellers proves, beyond all doubt, that prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but that holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Ver. 1. One of the reasons is here stated why the Ammonites were to be visited with the divine judgments. It was because they had taken violent possession of the land of Gad, which belonged of right to the children of Israel. See also Ezek. xxv. 1—7. Hence it is foretold (ver. 2.) that Rabbah, the chief city of the Ammonites, 'shall be a desolate heap.' This city was at that time a place of great strength, and it was very advantageously situated in a fertile country. But a recent traveller informs us, that its site is now 'covered with the ruins of private buildings, nothing of them remaining except the foundations and some of the door-posts. The buildings, exposed to the atmosphere, are all in decay.*' Thus Rabbah is literally a desolate heap.

Ver. 7. The judgments of God are next denounced upon the descendants of Esau, who dwelt in Edom, or Idumea, and who had shown 'a perpetual hatred' to the children of Israel, Ezek. xxxv. 5. The Edomites were celebrated, in ancient times, for their wisdom, Obad. 8, 9. Idumea is generally regarded as the first seat of learning, and the nursery of the arts and sciences.† It was from thence that the Egyptians and other nations of antiquity derived their knowledge of astronomy and navigation. The book of Job, also, with the discourses of 'Eliphaz the Temanite,' bears testimony to the wisdom of the Edomites. But 'wisdom is no more in Teman, and counsel has perished from the prudent.' The present inhabitants of that country are sunk in the grossest ignorance; in proof of which it may be mentioned, that the clearing away of a little rubbish, merely to allow the water to flow into an ancient cistern, so as to preserve it for their use, is 'an undertaking which (a modern traveller states) is far beyond their views.' Ver. 16—18. Many of the inhabitants of Edom dwelt in caves cut out of the rocks and hills. The ruins of an ancient city of Edom, called Petra (the rock), and situated near mount Hor, where Aaron was buried, bear testimony to its former strength and grandeur, and render it still one of the most interesting and curious remains of ancient art. There are still to be seen at Petra the ruins of palaces, sepulchres, theatres, and temples, all cut out of the solid rock. 'O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord. Also, Edom shall be a desolation; no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it.' This prophecy has been so strikingly fulfilled, that a spectator of the scene tells us that 'the barren state of the country (which was once fertile), together with the desolate condition of the city of Petra, without a single human being living near it, strongly verifies the judgment denounced against it.'‡

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. How unreasonable is infidelity! The stones of Petra cry out against it; and from the 'desolate' wilderness a voice is heard proclaiming, in reason's ear, that the prophets were inspired by that God who 'declareth the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.'

2. We learn also from this chapter, that nations, as well as individuals, are subject to the over-ruling providence of God. The study of fulfilled prophecy is well calculated to strengthen our conviction of the great truth, that the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God, thou art greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about thee. Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? Who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy; for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest. It becometh us, who are sinful dust and ashes, to adore, with reverence and godly fear, the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, who ruleth in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; whose Almighty hand none can stay from working, and to whom none can say, with a prevailing voice, What doest thou? But knowing that the Lord reigneth, therefore would we rejoice, because we know that all the dispensations of thy providence are holy, and just, and good, and shall not fail to promote thy glory, and the happiness of them that love thee. Almighty Father, we rejoice that, while righteousness and judgment are the habitation of thy throne, mercy and truth continually go before thy face. And we would especially rejoice, and give thee thanks, that thou didst devise a scheme of redemption for us, in which mercy and truth meet together, righteousness and peace embrace each other. We bless thy name that the gospel of Jesus Christ, which secures glory to God in the highest, likewise proclaims peace and goodwill to the guilty children of men, and shows us that thou art just, while the justifier of the ungodly who believe in Jesus. O may thy Holy Spirit dispose and enable us to receive the atonement of Christ by faith, and to rest upon this sure and tried foundation, that thus we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Forbid, O Lord, that there should be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, leading us to doubt thy word, or to disbelieve thy promises, or to depart from the living God. May we be admonished by the judgments inflicted upon thine enemies, to forsake all iniquity, and to walk in the light of thy countenance, and in the way of thy commandments. And conscious of our own weakness, we humbly beseech thee to strengthen us with all might by thy Spirit, that so we may overcome the manifold temptations to which we are exposed in this present evil world, and may walk in close and humble fellowship with the Father of our spirits. Take us, O Lord, into thy holy keeping, and preserve us by thy mighty power through faith unto salvation. We desire to offer up our prayers and intercessions in behalf of all whom we ought to bear on our hearts at thy throne. Bless the church of Christ throughout the earth; and grant that, through the word of thy grace, many may be added unto it daily of such as shall be saved. Bless our native land, and all ranks and degrees of persons in it, from the least to the greatest. May pure and undefiled religion flourish more and more in our day. Command thy blessing upon our kindred and friends. Comfort and relieve all who are in affliction. Render us truly grateful unto thee for causing us to lie down in peace, and to awake this morning in safety. Keep us in thy fear all the day long, and help us to live as seeing thee, who art invisible. Graciously hear our prayers, and pardon our sins, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—1 TIMOTHY I.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The distinguished person to whom this epistle is addressed, was a native of Lystra, a city of Lycaonia. His father was a Greek, or Gentile; but his mother Eunice was a Jewess; and she, as well as her mother Lois, was eminent for her piety, 2 Tim. i. 5. Under their pious care, Timothy was brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and made acquainted with the holy Scriptures from his youth, 2 Tim. iii. 15. It is probable, that he was converted to the faith of Christ during Paul's first visit to Lystra, Acts xiv. When Paul came there the second time, Timothy had made such progress in knowledge and grace, that the apostle, by divine direction, ver. 18. selected him as the companion of his travels and labours. Accordingly, Timothy was solemnly ordained to the sacred office, by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery; the apostle joining with them in the performance of this duty, 1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6, 7. From that time, this young minister was the constant companion, and the faithful assistant of the apostle, who frequently speaks of him, in language of the tenderest regard, Phil. ii. 19; 1 Thess. iii. 3.

Ver. 3, 4. The apostle reminds Timothy of the reason why he had left him at Ephesus; viz., to oppose the Judaizing teachers, who were endeavouring to draw away the Christian converts from the simplicity of faith. These teachers gave heed to 'fables,' invented to recommend the observance of the Mosaic law, as essential to salvation, also to 'endless genealogies,' in the belief that they would be saved, if they could prove that they had Abraham for their father, ver. 5—12. The apostle explains the end and use of the law, and its perfect consistency with the gospel. The end of both is 'charity,' or that love to God and our neighbour, which is the fulfilling of the law, and the object of the gospel. The law is used unlawfully, when we seek justification by it. The right use of it, is that of a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, and a rule to direct our obedience. When the apostle says, that 'the law is not made for a righteous man,' he does not mean, (as Antinomians imagine), that the Christian is delivered from his obligation to obey the law, as the rule of his life, but that the Christian is delivered from the penalties of the law. 'The righteous man' is under the directive, but not under the condemning power of the law. But 'the lawless and disobedient' are still under the curse and condemnation of the law, because they have not fled for refuge to Him who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

Ver. 12—18. The apostle magnifies the grace of Christ, in pardoning his sins, and calling him to preach the faith which he once laboured to destroy. In ver. 13. Paul does not mean that his ignorance excused his sin, or deserved the mercy of God. He obtained mercy, only because of the abounding grace of our Lord, ver. 14. His ignorance and unbelief were culpable, inasmuch as there was evidence within his reach, of the truth of the gospel; while he did not seek for it, but shut his eyes to the light. Still, the fact that he sinned in ignorance, while it did not excuse his sins, rendered his case more hopeful. Had he sinned against light and knowledge, had he persecuted and blasphemed knowingly and deliberately; that would have been a near approach to the sin against the Holy Ghost, when it might have been impossible to renew him to repentance. The apostle's meaning may probably be better expressed thus: 'I was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief, but I obtained mercy.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we are unworthy to come into thy presence, or even to lift up our eyes to thy holy habitation. Thou canst not look upon sin without abhorrence. Thou art a consuming fire to all the workers of iniquity. Thou hast declared to us in thy holy word that, even though we should keep the whole law, yet if we offend but in one point, we incur thy righteous displeasure. But, O Lord, which of thy commandments have we not broken? which of thy precepts have we not trampled under foot? which of thy mercies have we not despised? We have often sinned against thee in thought, and word, and deed; and have lived without God in the world; and have walked every one in the sight of his own eyes, and after the devices of his own evil heart. Nor can we plead that we have sinned in ignorance, and that we have had no opportunity of knowing our Lord's will. Thou hast cast our lot in a land, where the light of the gospel shines; thou hast given us thy holy word, from our childhood, to make us wise unto salvation; thou hast permitted us, sabbath after sabbath, to hear the joyful sound of heaven's offered mercy; thou hast given us line upon line, and precept upon precept; and thou hast sent forth thy Holy Spirit to strive with our obdurate and rebellious hearts. But, O Lord, we must confess that we have not improved our privileges, or walked worthy of our high and holy vocation; and, therefore, we would lay our hand upon our mouth, and our mouth in the dust, acknowledging that to us belongeth shame and confusion of face, and beseeching that God would be merciful to us sinners. O do thou give unto each of us that broken and contrite heart which thou wilt not despise; and wash us thoroughly in that blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel, which crieth not for vengeance, but for mercy, and which shall purge our consciences from dead works to serve the living God. We rejoice to know that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; and that there is no guilt so aggravated that he cannot remove it, and no heart so polluted that he cannot cleanse it, and no disease so inveterate that he cannot cure it. We would come, therefore, to this great Physician, beseeching him to heal our spiritual diseases, and to cleanse us from all our sins by his atoning blood, and to strengthen us by his Holy Spirit to serve thee, without fear, in holiness and righteousness, all the days of our lives. May we delight in the law of God after the inward man; may we have the same mind in us that was also in Christ Jesus; may we strive to follow his holy example, and to adorn his doctrine in all things. O Lord, send forth thy light and thy truth to those benighted nations who are still sitting in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death. Bless the preaching of the gospel, and all thy faithful ministers. Bless our beloved country; arrest the progress of infidelity, and superstition, and vice; may thy fear dwell in every heart, and may thy worship be established in every family. Bless the church which thou hast planted in this corner of the land. Draw near, with thy divine consolations, to all who are in trouble or distress. Be gracious to all with whom we are connected, by whatever bond. Pardon the sins which we have committed against thee this day. Watch over us during the silence of the coming night; and spare us, if it be thy will, to see the light of another day; for all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVI. 6.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH L.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter contains predictions of the same events to the church of God and to her enemies, as those foretold in the 45th, 46th, and 47th, &c., of Isaiah. And as the time of their accomplishment drew near, the prophet rises in the awful grandeur and plainness of his style of prediction.

Ver. 1—3. Conquering nations generally respected the religion and the gods of the vanquished; but the God of Abraham had doomed the Babylonians to an exception in this respect, and that the Medes and Persians, coming from the north, should wreak their vengeance on their gods, as well as on themselves, who, in their ravages in Judea, had plundered his holy temple.

Ver. 4—8. The time alluded to in the 4th verse is that which corresponds to the sacking of Babylon by Cyrus, at the head of the Medo-Persian army, and when, as is supposed, on being shown the prophecy of Isaiah, where he is mentioned by name, he issued a decree, permitting the Jews to return to their own land, and to rebuild their temple. God had given them the land of Canaan by covenant with their father Abraham; that covenant he had often renewed: its tenor was, 'If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword,' (Isa. i. 19, 20.) They did refuse and rebel so often, that the Lord was at last provoked to give them up to the bondage of Babylon for the space of seventy years. He had, notwithstanding, given them many assurances, that, on repentance, they would, at the end of this time, be restored to his favour and all their covenanted privileges. The prophet here represents them as in such a penitent attitude, moving as a great multitude of pilgrims borne down with a sense of guilt, back to the land of their fathers, and determined never again to violate the covenant on which their fathers had obtained it from their God. What Jeremiah so feelingly predicts, Ezra, who lived some time after him, as an eye-witness verifies, in his record of this movement of the Jews from Babylon to Jerusalem. In the 8th verse, the prophet warns them that the time of deliverance is near, by exhorting them to hold themselves in readiness to depart, and, when at liberty to do so, that they must enter upon their long and arduous journey homeward, with a courage exemplified by the he-goat, as he advances the undaunted leader of the rest of the flock.

The remaining part of the chapter is taken up in more minutely describing the desolation that was to come upon Babylon, and the character of those that were to be instrumental in God's hand for effecting it, interspersed, according to the prophetic style, with comfortable assurances that all this was done for the sake of his own people. The Babylonians had been as a rod in God's hand to chastise his people, but they knew it not. They oppressed them to gratify their own blood-thirsty rapacity, ver. 11; and therefore, God was just in dealing by them as they had done unto the Jews, ver. 15.

The Persians excelled in all warlike exercises, especially in arching and in horsemanship, so that the description which the prophet gives of the conquerors of Chaldea, in ver. 9, 14, 29, 42, fixes on them as Babylon's destroyers. How they made themselves masters of it, is narrated by ancient historians. Cyrus, diverting the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of the city, and leading his army into it on a festive night, and the consternation of its surprised king and courtiers, seem to be pointed to in ver. 30, 38, 43.

All that is prophesied here of Babylon's utter ruin, so that, although then the wonder of the world for splendour, magnitude, and strength, she should become the rendezvous of ravenous wild beasts, is verified by all modern travellers, who speak of the place which she occupied as a waste howling wilderness, and of her ruins as leaving no trace of her ancient greatness.

PRAYER.

Lord thou hast been the dwelling place of thy people in all generations, and thou hast ever shown that thou dost cause all things to work together for their good. Even when they did grievously provoke thee to anger, when they did break thy law, and disregard their covenant with thee; when they went after other gods, and did worship the dumb idols of the heathen nations; and when for all this thou didst, according to thy threatening, give them up to the sword of the enemy, and didst bring upon them the chains of the captive in a foreign land; yet, even there, thy pity did find them, and thy promises of reconciliation were renewed and fulfilled unto them. Thou didst still place thyself before them as their refuge and their strength, and thy voice of compassion unto them was still, Turn to the strong hold ye prisoners of hope; behold, I will render double unto you. Thou didst indeed show them that their Redeemer was strong, and that he was Lord of hosts, giving the conquest to whomsoever he would. For when the time to favour thy Zion was come, and when her children did turn their faces with contrition of heart towards thee, then didst thou take up the mighty nations, and the strongly fenced cities in which they did in captivity groan, and as a potter breaketh a vessel, so didst thou dash these nations in pieces, and set thy people free. Almighty God, we do trust, that we are part of thy heritage, that we are also of the commonwealth of Israel, and partakers of the promises made unto her. Thou hast still a Zion, and he who came in the likeness of our flesh, mighty to save, is still her king. O we do trust, that by his blood, we, notwithstanding all our backslidings and grievous provocations, may still return unto thee our God, and that we shall, through thy grace, be kept in covenant relation with thee. Alas! how often have we professed to seek thee with weeping and lamentation! How often have we, at thine altar, vowed that we did join ourselves unto thee in a covenant never again to be forgotten! And yet for all these solemn transactions with thee in our heart, and by the symbols of the blood of the new covenant, have we again gone after the idols, and the sins, and the vanities that we did renounce, and shown unto the world, thine enemy, that we pay not what we vow unto thee the living God. We beseech thee, heavenly Father! not to cast us off, because of these our iniquities. We beseech thee, for thine own name's sake, to make us more steadfast unto our solemn engagements. We beseech thee, by thy Spirit, to unite us more closely unto our covenant Head; and to enable us with more constancy to follow him Zion-ward. May we be refreshed in our pilgrimage thither, by all the means of thy grace. May we be enabled to go on from strength to strength, till we all arrive in the new Jerusalem. May all enemies, temporal and spiritual, be confounded, that seek our halting; and may we this day encourage one another in the paths of righteousness. We thank thee for the mercies of the past night, for its refreshment of the body, and for its meditations to the soul in communion with thee. Lord, be with all thy people as they go forth to the work thou hast given them to do. Enable us to do all things for thy glory. And may thy blessing rest upon this household, according as thou hast promised in Christ Jesus. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—1 TIMOTHY II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Bearing in mind the opposition from the unconverted Jews, and even from many Judaizing Christians, to the universal offer of salvation by the gospel, we shall have a key to the right interpretation of one or two passages in the first half of this chapter; First, it is asked, Are we to give thanks for all men, most of whom are grossly wicked? No; but only in as far as God maketh them the instruments of doing good, as is evident from the last clause of ver. 2. But the apostle may signify that it was the duty of those Jews who would confine the benefits of Christ's redemption to the seed of Abraham, to give thanks to God for all the Gentiles that were made partakers of them; and also to thank God, when he disposed the hearts of those in authority, to promote the reception of them among their subjects.

Ver. 4. has been often confidently quoted by the supporters of universal redemption. The difficulty of explanation lies in this: It is a fact that all are not saved; yet it is here stated God wills all to be saved; and therefore, the Almighty comes short in executing his purpose of universal salvation. The general way of removing the difficulty, is by making a distinction between the secret and the revealed will of God. The Lord knoweth them that are his, but he hath not made them individually known to the preachers of the gospel. His revealed will to them is, that they teach it unto all nations as if he willed all to be saved; not to the Jews only, but to the barbarian, Scythian, the bond, and free. The passage evidently is intended to combat the uncharitable doctrine of confining salvation to the descendants of Israel only, and it meaneth much the same as the declaration of our Lord, 'that many shall come from the east, and from the west, and sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven;' that is, some of all kindreds and tongues shall be brought to a knowledge and belief of the gospel, and be saved by that gospel. These remarks are equally applicable to the explanation of ver. 6. where all must be understood as meaning some of all sorts of men. The apostle enforces the duty of the Jews to work the salvation of the Gentiles, by the argument of there being but one God and one Mediator. This verse is best illustrated by Rom. ix. x. xi. and the second chapter of the Ephesians, where it is shown, that not only was peace made between God and his elect from among Jews and Gentiles, by Christ Jesus, but that in him also were Jew and Gentile reconciled. By his finished work all the legal partitions were taken away; and therefore, it behoved the Jews to look upon the Gentiles as now made fellow-heirs with them of the heavenly inheritance. And this was just the reason why the apostle was compassing sea and land, and instructing them in their high privileges as fellow-citizens of the saints, and of the household of God, ver. 7.

God had a controversy with man because of his iniquities, and man had an enmity towards God because of the holiness and justice of God, and the corruption of man's own nature. To reconcile God and man, thus at variance, constituted Christ's mediatorial office. And that he might be fitted for this mighty work, it behoved him to unite the human nature to the divine. When speaking of him as Mediator, sometimes the scriptures point to his divine nature only, and sometimes to his human nature, as the apostle does here; and the apostle does so here, as an argument why Jew and Gentile should strive together for the faith of the gospel, since the author of it took upon him their common nature.

The last verses give the reason why females, as being the weaker vessels, should not be admitted as office-bearers in the church, since the first woman discovered, in giving way to satan, that they are not by nature so well calculated to repel the assaults that may be made upon them as the men are. Yet though, in consequence of the fall, woman became the more disabled for discharging such duties, and although, in one of her most honourable functions, a severe memorial of her conduct in that sad catastrophe remains, salvation, through the merits of Christ, is not the less hers, if, by faith, she apprehend it, and lead a life in conformity with its glorious prospects.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast made of one blood all the nations of the earth. We bless thee, that in the fulness of the time thou didst send thy Son, and didst give unto him a body of the seed of Abraham, which he offered up a sacrifice once for all, that he might bring in an everlasting righteousness, which should be unto and upon all them that believe. We thank thee, that when our first parents did give heed to the voice of the great deceiver of mankind; when they did ruin themselves and their posterity by breaking covenant with thee; when they had brought sin, disease, suffering, and death upon their soul and body by their own wilful transgressions; and when there was no hand to help and no eye to pity, when thy justice was turned against man, and man's heart turned against thee, thou didst send forth the eternal Son of thy love, made of a woman, made under the law, that through the offering of his sinless flesh he might overcome sin in our flesh; that through the shedding of his precious blood he might satisfy thy law and thy justice, and thus reconcile us unto thee. We bless thee that thou art pressing the acceptance of this salvation, wrought out by Jesus Christ as our Mediator, upon the very chief of sinners; and that the voice of thy gospel is, O every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, without money, and without price. We would obey this voice, gracious God! and we would come to this fountain thou hast opened up for sin and for uncleanness; and guilty and polluted as we are, poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked as we must acknowledge ourselves to be, we would believe that we shall be accepted through thy Beloved. We beseech thee to enable us to pass through the polluting and ensnaring things of time, as becometh those who are sensible that they have upon them the spotless robe of their Redeemer's righteousness. May the men who are given still to the pomps and vanities of this life, take knowledge of us that we are the self-denying followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. O Lord, we thank thee that thou hast again brought us so near to another sabbath of gospel ordinances. If spared by thee to the coming hallowed morn, grant that its sun may not only rise in peace upon us, but that the Sun of righteousness may arise with healing on his wings, through the means of all the solemn services of that day. Enable us to put both house and heart in order for the spiritual keeping of thy sabbath. May thy Spirit move to and fro over the families of the earth, so that the time be hastened when all shall know thee from the least unto the greatest. Bless the rulers of our land; dispose their hearts more and more to the welfare of the kingdom of thy Son. Accept of our thanksgivings for the mercies of the day now for ever gone by. Pardon its many sins. We praise thee for whatever good thou hast enabled us to do. Be over this household and all that it contains. O thou keeper of Israel, keep our hearts in communion with thee, as we repose in the slumbers of the night. May our sleep be refreshing, and our meditations profitable and sweet. So that if body and soul are spared together, to arise to more work on this side the grave, that work may be done more unto thy glory, and body and soul be more and more fitted for entering into thy rest, through the blood of Christ. Amen, and Amen.

FORTY-SECOND WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 7—11.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Though this psalm has no title either to tell its author or its object, yet, from the sameness of many of its expressions with those of other psalms which are undoubtedly the composition of David, there can be little doubt but that this one too is the breathing of his inspired soul; and the object of it seems to be, to preserve a record of the workings of a heart born of God, and striving to keep in close communion and fellowship with him. There cannot be a more profitable exercise for a soul in its progress Zionward, than to study the joy and the sadness, the strength and the feebleness, the confidence and the doubting, the light and the darkness, the warmth and the deadness, the love and the indifference, the divine manifestations and the fatherly chastisements, of a soul who, there can be no doubt, was intended for a pattern to Zion's pilgrims, and who did itself arrive there with songs of everlasting joy. Such mixed experience of a heaven-born soul, on whom the Spirit of truth was largely shed, we have in this psalm. From the peculiarity of its poetical construction, it looks as if it were intended that a very familiar acquaintance should be made with it; for it has, in the original, all those peculiarities of divisions, and commencements of these divisions with the same alphabetical letter, which are found materially to assist the memory in its recollections. It does not appear to have been all written at the same time, for the tone of the author's spirit varies too much in the course of it to admit of such a supposition; yet there is one uniform attitude of his soul which never varies, that of the most intense meditation over the word of God. There may be shades of difference in his relish for the word; and according to these alterations of his spiritual taste, he may have given it the diversified names of law, and statutes, and testimonies, &c., which so often occur; yet at all times it is to him meat indeed and drink indeed. The first part contains a summary of the whole psalm.

Ver. 1—3. State the true way of attaining to happiness, both in time and in eternity, viz. a life of faith and of holiness in strict conformity with God's law. And lest some should fancy, as many, alas! do, that they are pursuing this way to blessedness, when they are only following the deceitfulness of their own deceived hearts, certain marks of character are given by which their path may be tried. All that is stated of them that are truly blessed, as to their holiness and spiritual ability, is to be understood either as that standard of perfection which God has still a right, in virtue of man's original accountability and purity, to demand; and such as man, had he continued innocent, would have come up to; or it is rather to be accounted as that standard to which every Christian is in all sincerity to aim, and as that light in which God views the regenerated soul who is walking in Christ Jesus. They daily, indeed, commit sin, but it is their earnest endeavour not to do so; and it is the grief of their heart if they do. And God is pleased to look upon such in the face of his Anointed, and to regard them in him as without iniquity.

In ver. 5. the psalmist feels his own inability to comply with the just demand in ver. 4. to the extent he desired. He knew that one great end of bringing the high exactments of God's holy law in full force upon the sinner, was just to make him feel his helpless condition for obeying it; and to make him betake himself to that Spirit which is promised to be put within the people of God, and to cause them to walk in his statutes; and this is just what the psalmist does. He felt that 'it was not in himself to direct his own steps,' but God had promised to be his leader and his guide, and he, accordingly, prays for the fulfilment of that promise.

Ver. 9. Well acquainted with the proneness of youth to mistake the road to true happiness, and aware how they feel towards the path of life, as being an irksome and a gloomy bondage; and knowing how recklessly they break through all restraints, and what sad lengths they go in licentiousness, pleading all the while the violence and the waywardness of their natural passions, as an excuse for their profligacy, and that it is impossible to do otherwise; he assures them, would they only, in good earnest, try to frame their ways by the word of God, that a power from on high would bring that word upon their hearts in such a quickening manner as to produce a spirit of new life, and to root out or destroy the old corrupt desires of the flesh and of the mind. Then he gives his own plan of using the word of God, so as that it may produce this blessed effect; not perusing it superficially, but hiding it in his very heart; not trusting to the powers of his own mind properly to comprehend it, but wrestling at the throne of grace for the Spirit to guide him unto all truth. And lest the young, who are so apt to think that supreme happiness can be got only out of great wealth, should still think that such study of divine things, could not be equal in pleasure to the former kind of enjoyments; he asserts that he found it so, that it gave him more joy than all his wealth and honours as king of Israel.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

While we feel and acknowledge the just demands of God's holy law, and believe that these have been fully satisfied by the merits of a Redeemer, let us also feel that his magnifying the law in our room and stead, thus taking away its curse from us, has bound us more than ever to pursue the paths of righteousness which that law still enjoins. If the blood of Christ presents us in the eye of God's law as having no iniquity, it redeemed us from all iniquity that it might also purify us and make us a peculiar people unto God, zealous of good works. Let us ever bear in mind, that true happiness and holiness can never be separated. And that our ways may be more and more cleansed, let us apply ourselves earnestly to that word through which the people of God are sanctified. And while we inculcate the necessity of its study upon the young, we ought to take care, that we be able to enforce our admonitions by an exhibition of its power upon our own hearts in restraining us from every false and evil way, and in setting us above the fleeting vanities that they run so madly after. And may our endeavours, both with them and ourselves, be ever quickened by an abiding recollection of the awful declaration, 'that without holiness, no man shall see the Lord.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art glorious in holiness, and fearful in praises; angels and archangels stand around thy throne, and they cry, day and night, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of hosts; yea, such a sense have they of thy holiness, and such shame of their unworthiness to be in thy presence, that they veil their faces with their wings. And thou dost indeed charge them, pure and spotless as they are, with folly. Ah, Lord, what manner of creatures must we be in thy sight? we who have been conceived in sin, and brought forth in iniquity; we who have committed transgression in its most aggravating stains when we ran in the heedless paths of youth, when we would give ear to no admonition, when we despised all reproof, when we sought our happiness in the sinful pleasure of a world that lieth in wickedness, and when we felt towards thy word, and thy worship, and service, as a grievous yoke that we would never bear. How thankful ought we to be that thou hast thus spared us during our rebellious and ungrateful course. And if now, O Lord, thou hast brought any of us to bemoan the sins of our youth; if thou hast pierced our heart by the sword of thy Spirit, and if, by the power of thy Spirit, we have been turned into the way of the statutes, Lord, we beseech thee to uphold our goings, and never take thy free Spirit from us. And if there be any now before thee who are still left to the imaginations of their own heart, and to the leadings of satan in the search of their happiness, Lord, be pleased to quicken them according to thy word; create in them a clean heart, and renew in them a right spirit; bring them also to the cross of Jesus, and while, through faith, thou purgest away all their sin, by his blood, from the book of thy remembrance, so that thou seest no iniquity in them finally to condemn them, do thou also enable them to crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts, and to dedicate themselves unto thee a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy sight. We rejoice that salvation dependeth not upon our own merits; but yet we do know that blessed only is the man who striveth to purify himself even as Christ is pure; because thou hast assured us, that without such purity, thy blessedness cannot be enjoyed. Evermore then, heavenly Father, fit us by all the means of thy grace for being received into thy bosom. We desire to thank thee for the continued supply of these means, for the return of thy sabbath, for the prospect of going up to thy sanctuary, where thou hast promised especially to bless thy people. O may we be able to hide thy word in our heart, so that satan may not be able to catch it away, and that we sin not against thee. Enable us, in using it, to follow the example of the saint whose inspired portion of it we have now read. Enable us to profit by all the sweet experiences of his soul which he has recorded. We would remember all who are detained, by necessary causes, from going up with us to the meeting of thy people. Stand by thy servants who are preparing this day to preach thy gospel. O may their sound go to the uttermost parts of the earth. And may we, as a congregation, and as a family, be among those who are blessed in knowing that joyful sound to the saving of our souls. We would again thank thee, in a family capacity, for the mercies of the past night. Lord, grant that we all meet again in the evening at thy throne, with acceptance through Christ. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 25—32

REMARKS.

This third part begins with prayer for the light of God's countenance, for the psalmist seems now to be in trouble. The frequent repetition of the same petitions in this psalm, marks his great sense of his entire dependence upon God; moreover, the threatening calamities prompted such a mode of prayer. The language of this part is similar to that which David uses in other psalms when his life was threatened by Saul, and when he was fleeing from him, and wandering a stranger among the Philistines. Yet, under all circumstances, his support was a firm grasp of the promises of God; and his consolation, an assurance of his favour. The more he studied his word, the more he saw in it to excite his wonder at God's redeeming love, and his providences towards himself. Men, until the eye of their understanding is enlightened by the Spirit of God, can see nothing remarkable in his word; yea, it is unto them as an unintelligible and a wearisome tale. The natural man perceiveth not the things of God, they are foolishness unto him; but when the Spirit cometh with demonstration and with power upon his heart, they then become unto him the wisdom of God and the power of God. A boundless field of wonders then open up to his view, which he finds it will require eternity to explore. Nothing does a child of God dread more, than being left to his own light and to his own will, and in the time of trouble, to the natural propensity of his flesh. The only guard, then, against self-deception, is a most prayerful and rigid inquiry after what is the scriptural path of duty. And it is the blessedness of such a searching, that it is the best means of fortifying as well as of directing the mind in the day of trouble. If we are thus more earnest in trying to find out what God would have us to do while beset on every side, than in trying to avenge our wrongs, God will, in due time, rebuke those who oppress us, and set us free from their persecution. Instead of meditating railing for railing, let us meditate, like the psalmist, upon the promises of the gospel, while men sit and speak against us. It is no sign of a heart and a conduct being right with God, when all men speak well of us. All that live godly will, in some way, suffer persecution; but if we are so tried, let us rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer for him, who endured the contradiction of sinners in our stead.

Ver. 28. The fourth part presents us with a view of the psalmist's mind in a very desponding attitude. It was sore pressed, and is now wrestling in the very dust, as if ready to give up the contest; still it is not in despair, because it is not trusting to its own strength, but cleaving to the Rock that is higher than itself. It is still in the attitude of assured prayer. And often when a soul in such a frame thinks it cannot become lower, it is then most strong—strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. And we see from the wrestling of the psalmist here, that however low we may be lying, pressed down by a sense of aggravated backsliding or unbelief, still it is by cleaving to the promises of pardon and reconciliation through our merciful and gracious High Priest, that we are set up again. As the psalmist again and again had besought the Lord, that he might be quickened and raised up, and prepared for running the way of all his commandments, so in the last verse he repeats this holy determination, when God should 'enlarge his heart;' that is, when he should set him free from the spirit of bondage and of fear, by granting him an assurance of his love, and an abiding sense of pardon and of peace, so as to make his heart swell with love and gratitude, and fill his mouth with praise. Let us never be at ease, while our hearts are content with little sensibility of having the love of God shed abroad in them, and with a small degree of willingness and strength to run the way of his commandments.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, thou hast never said unto any of the seed of Jacob, Seek ye my face in vain. Believing that we are part of thy heritage, unto whom thou hast given many great and precious promises, would we approach thy throne of grace in the name of thine only and well-beloved Son, in whom thou hast promised to bless thy chosen ones with all spiritual blessings.

We rejoice that we have free access unto thee with all our sins, by his peace-speaking blood; and that this blood may be sprinkled the more abundantly upon us, do we confess our manifold transgressions. Lord, thou hast promised, that though our sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; although they be red as crimson, they shall be as wool. We would feel them thus aggravated in thy sight. And, O how must they appear before thee, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity at all. Well, indeed, may our souls cleave unto the dust in thy presence, and melt for heaviness, when we think of what we have done against thee. Thy law is holy, just, and good; but we are carnal, sold under sin, and if thou, by thy grace and mercy in Christ Jesus, hast redeemed any one of us, we would ascribe the glory to thy free and unmerited favour. Behold what manner of love, that such sinful rebels should be called thy sons; that we should have such endearing names bestowed upon us, and that we should have such high privileges assured unto us. O that thy Spirit, in opposition to the deep feeling of our unworthiness, would bear more clear evidence in our hearts that we are indeed thine adopted children, and joint heirs with thy Son. Be thou pleased to make our faith in all the promises of our adoption more strong, so that our hearts may become more enlarged towards thee. Shed abroad thy love in them, that they may be filled with gratitude unto thee the God of all their comfort, and the Father of all their mercies. We mourn over their natural deadness, their forgetfulness of thy tender compassions; yea, and their wilful backslidings from thee. Justly mightest thou have cast us off from thy free favour, and let us alone to reap the fruit of our own doings. O we do trust that thou wilt never thus leave us, that thou wilt never utterly forsake us. And we do hope that we may take all the warnings and pleadings in the preaching of thy gospel this day, as a token that we are not yet beyond the day of grace and merciful visitation. May the word that was spoken be sealed upon our souls, so as to seal them under thy Spirit against the day of redemption. Grant that we give evidence in the rest of our weary pilgrimage, that we and all thine Israel have this day received refreshing from on high. Open, we beseech thee, our eyes, that we may see more and more of the wonders of thy law, that we adore more and more the wonders of thy redeeming love. O surely great is the mystery and the wonder of God being manifested in the flesh. As thine angels delight to look into these things, O may we, who are the objects of this wonderful work of redemption, delight to consider it by day and night. We beseech thee to bless all those for whom thou wouldst have us to pray. Our friends and our relations do thou preserve; and as we can ask for no better thing unto them, than that thou wouldst open their eyes to the things that belong to their everlasting peace, Lord, grant us to see them seeking, with all earnestness, the way of life. Enable us to forgive all those who sit and speak against us; while we endure their hatred and scorn, enable us to meditate on the example of him, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again. Lord, turn the hearts of the persecutors of thy people and of thy cause. And whereas we fear that many have this day profaned thy sabbath, and turned it into a day of sinful recreation, we beseech thee to make them, before it return again, more alive to their own best interests and to thy wrath. Refresh the spirits of all that have spent themselves either in teaching or in preaching thy gospel. Especially do thou encourage the heart of him who has the spiritual oversight of our souls. Enable us, in the silent watches of the night, to turn our thoughts back to the exercises of the past day. Alas! Lord, for our little profiting with all, for our deadness and formality, for our wandering of thought and worldly-mindedness. Pardon these sins mixed with our solemn duties. And we again entreat thee to hear the prayers of the closet, of the family, and of the sanctuary, through the merits and mediation of him whom thou hearest always, even him who is exalted at thy right hand, our Prince and our Saviour, Jesus Christ, the Lord our Righteousness. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXVII.

SCRIPTURE—JEREMIAH LI.

REMARKS.

The prophet here goes on with those denunciations against Babylon, and those predictions of her final overthrow, on which he had entered in the preceding chapter. He had, on some previous occasions, been suspected of falling away to the Chaldeans, because of his testifying against the sins of his own nation; and declaring God's purpose of employing the king of Babylon as the instrument of punishing the iniquity of Judah.

The prophet was thus looked upon with an evil eye by his own people, as if he were disaffected to them, and friendly to their enemies, and a prophet of evil only against the land of his nativity. But in the tremendous plagues which he now announces, as destined to be inflicted on the cruel oppressors of Judah, he displays the Divine nature of his message equally to his countrymen by the prophecy itself, or to those in after ages, by its fulfilment. In Jeremiah's day there was no prospect of Babylon's desolation, whatever signs there might be of the approaching captivity of Judah. And yet it is with an equal minuteness of detail, and undoubted certainty of the result, he declares that the former as well as the latter event should take place.

Babylon is now what the inspired prophet declared it should be. His very words have been literally and remarkably fulfilled. Modern travellers of every variety of opinion, unite in bearing testimony to the complete fulfilment of Jeremiah's prediction. They all unite in showing, that no words could describe the present state of that once famous city, or the feelings of those who witness its signal desolation, like the language of Jeremiah, ver. 37, 43.

But we must be chargeable with error, not knowing the scriptures or the power of God, if we confine the fulfilment of this prophecy to the destruction of the literal Babylon. There is a mystical or spiritual Babylon, the destruction of which is the main subject of the predictions contained in the book of Revelation. The language employed by the inspired writer of that book, completely harmonizes with the very words in which the prophet Jeremiah pronounces the doom of that Babylon which was the enemy of God's ancient people. Whoever compares this chapter of Jeremiah with the first of Revelation, cannot fail to be struck with the coincidence.

As the Spirit of God moved both Jeremiah and John to write the words of their prophecies, it is evidently not without design that this great similarity of language as well as of sentiment, pervades their denunciations against the spiritual Babylon, whose doom they foretold. In the first instance, it was the literal Babylon, whose destruction Jeremiah was commissioned to predict. But yet, as Israel of old foreshadowed those that are the true Israel, who worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, 'and have no confidence in the flesh;' so the Babylon which was of old, prefigured or typified that Babylon that is drunk with the blood of saints and martyrs, and which remains yet to be fully and for ever destroyed.

The spiritual Babylon, that mystery of iniquity, in a concentrated form, is none other than the apostate church of Rome, whose bishop or head has seated himself in the temple of God, and whose merchandise is the souls of men. And as this system of iniquity, amid all the false religions and heresies in the world, has been the masterpiece of Satan's devices against Him who shall bruise satan under the feet of the saints; so the denunciations of Jeremiah and of John, against Babylon, are truly applicable in a more extended but not less just acceptance to all those who are not the people of God; who are not with Christ, and must therefore be regarded as antichristians.

Wherefore, let all such as follow diverse lusts and pleasures; as believe not God's testimony concerning his Son, and are enemies to the cross of Christ, tremble and be afraid; for as they make war with the Lamb, so the Lamb shall overcome them, and they shall be banished from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, for ever and ever.

PRAYER.

O Lord, who can stand in thy sight, when thou arisest to judgment! Thou art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Evil cannot dwell with thee, the Lord; neither can fools stand in thy sight. Thou hatest all the workers of iniquity. We lament, before thee, O God, that through the entrance and influence of sin, the earth is filled with violence, and the hearts of the children of men are fully set in them to do evil. From the very beginning, one generation hath risen up after another, to renew the deeds of their fathers, and to realize the sufferings and sorrows that are inseparable from the commission of sin. We desire, O Lord, to mourn over the corruption of our nature, and the sinfulness of our race. We lament, that even in the early ages of the world, all flesh had corrupted its way, and it repented the Lord that he had made man; and in his righteous judgment he sent the flood to destroy the world of the ungodly. But alas! O God, how soon did iniquity again lift up its head. How speedily did the children of men take counsel together, to plot against the Lord and his Anointed; that they might oppose his cause, and oppress his people. Blessed be thy name, O Lord, that thou didst remember thy covenant, and broughtest salvation to thy chosen; and didst take vengeance on thine adversaries. Thou didst, O God, smite great nations, and slay mighty kings. The sins of Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, and the beauty of the Chaldeans' excellency, came up in remembrance before thee; and thou didst visit her with a fearful overthrow, and swept her away as with the besom of destruction. O righteous Father, do thou remember the word that thou hast spoken respecting the spiritual Babylon, the mystery of iniquity, the mother of abominations, that has wrought such wickedness in the earth. Grant, we humbly beseech thee, that the time of her visitation may speedily come, when thou wilt avenge upon her the oppressions of thy people, and the blood of those that were slain for the testimony of Jesus; and when she shall be cast as a great millstone into the sea, never to be found any more at all. O Lord, do thou save us from all errors and delusion. Enable us to hold fast the word of life, and to maintain the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end. Blessed be thy name, O God, that on the day that is past we were permitted to enjoy the hallowed rest of the holy sabbath. Follow with thy blessing the spiritual services in which we were engaged. May saving impressions of divine things abide with us, and exercise their proper influence on our conduct. Give us grace, we humbly beseech thee, that in entering on the work of the six days that are given us for our employments, we may be enabled continually to set thee before us, that thou mayest direct our goings, that every pursuit may be conducted in thy fear, and every work be done to thy glory. May our whole life here below, be a walking with God. Through the grace of thy Spirit may we grow up in a meetness for the heavenly inheritance, that an abundant entrance may be administered unto us into thine everlasting kingdom. These, and all other blessings needful for us, we implore in the name, and for the sake, of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXII. 13—18.

SCRIPTURE—I TIMOTHY III.

REMARKS.

In this chapter the apostle instructs Timothy respecting the duties and qualifications of the office-bearers in the Christian church. As he makes mention only of bishops and deacons, we may conclude that these two orders constituted the chief ecclesiastical functionaries. The presbyter, or elder, not being distinguished from the bishop, shows that the two terms are convertible, or descriptive of the same office. The certainty of this is evident from the address of Paul to the elders of the church at Ephesus, as recorded in the 20th chapter of Acts: 'Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, or bishops.' He writes in a similar strain to Titus, chap. i. 5.: 'For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly;' and then adds, 'for a bishop must be blameless;' thus proving it beyond all doubt, that by the terms bishop and elder he meant one and the same office. The apostle Peter, also, in his first epistle, chap. v., teaches the same doctrine, and uses similar language: 'The elders which are among you I exhort'—'feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof,' or discharging the office of bishop towards it. From these and other passages in the New Testament it may be concluded, that the terms presbyter and bishop refer to the same office. They err, then, who distinguish them from each other, and thereby cause divisions and dissensions in the church of Christ.

The character of the deacon's office, and the duties that belong to it, are described in Acts vi. From these we see that the great Head of the church has made provision for the temporal necessities of his people, as well as for the supply of their spiritual wants; and that while he 'gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ,' he has also appointed deacons, or servants, to minister to the temporal wants of the poor of his flock.

From this account we may learn, that no Christian church is to be considered as complete in which these two offices are not recognized, and the duties of them faithfully attended to; and that, although they be not of equal importance, yet they severally contribute to the good order and prosperity of the church, as well as to the comfort and edification of individual believers.

The things here set forth are calculated to teach profitable lessons both to the office-bearers in the church, and also to the people. To the former they show the importance and sacredness of the offices with which they are invested, and that personal piety, practical godliness, and grace, for the glory of God, are necessary to the faithful discharge of the duties connected with them; and they require of the latter to obey those that have the rule over them, and submit themselves, to esteem them very highly for their works' sake, and to regard their ministrations as channels for conveying to their souls streams of blessings from 'the fullness of him that filleth all in all.'

PRAYER.

O thou who art the God of grace and of mercy, do thou incline thine ear to hear the voice of our supplications. We ever adore thee as the Father of lights and of life, from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift. We would acknowledge our entire dependence upon thee, both for the life that now is, and that which is to come. Thy mercies are new to us every morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Thou art crowning us with loving-kindness and tender mercies. O that there were in us such a heart as that we would love thy name, revere thine authority, and obey thy holy will. Do thou, O God, cleanse us from our pollutions and idols; do thou blot out our manifold transgressions for thine own name's sake; and grant that we may be washed, and sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. We rejoice, O Lord, that in every age and generation thou hast had a seed to serve thee, who were fed and nourished through the ministrations of thy word and the grace of thy Spirit, and were enabled to adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour by a life and conversation becoming the gospel. O grant, we humbly pray thee, that there may be many such in our day. May the ministers of the word, and all who bear rule in thy church, obtain mercy to be faithful. May they be instant in season, out of season, willing to spend and be spent in the service of their Lord and Master. And do thou, with whom is the residue of the Spirit, bear testimony to the word of thy grace, that it may become effectual for the conversion of sinners, and for building up thy people in their most holy faith. Do thou clothe thy priests with salvation, that thy saints may shout aloud for joy. We would desire, O Lord, at the close of this day, to acknowledge thy goodness towards us during the course of it. Blessed be the Lord who hath given us this day our daily bread; who hath compassed us about with his favours as with a shield, and who hath upheld our goings. O God, do thou graciously forgive wherein we have forgotten thee and forsaken thy law; and do thou condescend to accept of all our humble endeavours to honour and obey thee. May the good Lord now meet with us when we are met together in his name, and bless us severally according to our need. May he be pleased to accept of our evening sacrifice. May he extend over us this night the shadow of his wings, and grant us the sleep which he giveth to his beloved, that being refreshed with needful rest, we may awaken to the activities of a new day, and be enabled to glorify God in our bodies and spirits, which are his. These, and all other needful blessings, we pray for in the name of Jesus Christ, our strength and Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXX.

SCRIPTURE—LAMENTATIONS I.

REMARKS.

When we consider the subject and strain of this book, we must acknowledge the propriety of the name given to it by the Jews when they call it Kinnoth—tears. It is the plaintive utterance of one whose 'head was as waters, and his eyes as fountains of tears,' and who wept day and night for the sins and sufferings of the daughters of his people.

Jeremiah had been moved by the Holy Ghost to prophecy concerning Judah and Jerusalem; to proclaim the indignation of Jehovah against his own people, on account of their heinous and highly aggravated transgressions; and to predict the fearful judgments with which they should be visited if they did not repent and turn unto the Lord. It was appointed unto him not only to denounce these calamities, but to witness and record their accomplishment. His eyes beheld the desolations of Israel; and although he was himself personally exempted from these inflictions, yet he tenderly sympathized with the misery of his people, and poured out the sorrows of his heart in the pathetic strains of this most affecting composition.

The contents of this chapter are sufficient to show that it was not without reason the prophet was so grieved and afflicted. Under the notion of a city, Jeremiah here speaks of the Jewish state. Although his language and illustrations are unusually strong, yet he seems as if he could not give full utterance to all that he felt in beholding her desolations. Through the captivity of her king, and the dispersion of her inhabitants, Jerusalem was like a bereaved widow, deprived at once of her husband and children. Her bereavements were manifold, and her afflictions great. Formerly she was full of inhabitants, and her prosperity very great; but now she sat solitary—her tears are on her cheek, and she has none to comfort her. After suffering the utmost extremities of hunger and other privations, she was at last removed from her place, like one turned out of doors, and reduced to the lowest servitude.

Her sufferings were greatly aggravated by the remembrance of former times, when she was eminent for dignity and authority, when many of the surrounding nations owned her sway, courted her alliance, and paid her tribute; but now she is despised and trampled upon, and brought very low. To aggravate still more her sufferings, she found that those who professed friendship and attachment had now become cold in their regards, and disclaimed the connection, and were become her cruel adversaries.

In the desolations of Jerusalem the prophet had to lament the profanation, as well as the interruption, of her solemnities. The heathen entered her sanctuary, they laid hands on her pleasant things, mocked all her sabbaths, and blasphemed the holy name of Jehovah, the Lord of hosts. Well indeed might Jerusalem be grieved under the pressure of such accumulated evils. Well might she say, 'Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow.' But the bitterness of her sorrow was greatly aggravated by the consideration that all this was the fruit of sin—that she had brought upon herself these fearful visitations by her undutiful and treacherous conduct towards the Lord her God. While he had separated and sanctified her as a heritage for himself—while he was as a wall of fire around her, and the glory in the midst of her, yet she did not walk worthy of her mercies; she greatly corrupted her ways, and multiplied her transgressions; therefore the Lord became her enemy, and requited her according to his righteous judgments.

It must have afforded the prophet some consolation that the daughters of his people, for whose misery he poured out such bitter lamentations, had some sense of her guilt and unworthiness. She owned the hand of Jehovah in all that had befallen her, justified him in his inflictions, and rested her hopes of deliverance solely on his compassion and mercy. But, alas! this promising appearance was like the morning cloud and early dew, which soon goeth away. Her's was not the godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation. Although she poured out strains of sorrow, yet was she not separated from her sins; and, therefore, he who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity sent her far away among the heathen, and gave her up to a grievous captivity.

Let all who read the sorrowful sayings of this book hear, and fear, and return unto the Lord. Let us take warning from the sins and sufferings of Israel, lest we should be entangled in the yoke of bondage, and be banished from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

PRAYER.

O thou who art Jehovah, the Lord of hosts, the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things that are in heaven and in earth, do thou bow down thine ear to hear the voice of our confessions and supplications at this time. We would come before thee with reverence and godly fear. We would sanctify thee, the Lord God, in our heart, and make thee our fear and our dread. Do thou pour out thy Spirit upon us as a Spirit of understanding, and of the fear of the Lord—as a Spirit of faith, and repentance, and holiness—as a Spirit of grace and supplication, that we may, in a suitable manner, sanctify our lives before thee, and exercise the godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, and return unto the Lord, from whom we have deeply revolted. We rejoice, O Lord, that thou art righteous in all thy ways, and holy in all thy works. Thou afflictest not willingly, nor grieveest the children of men. Thou chastenest them not for thine own pleasure, but for their profit, and that they might be partakers of thy holiness. We would therefore cry unto thee, O God, out of the depths of our guilt, and misery, and helplessness. We would adore the wisdom, and forbearance, and mercy, of thy dealings with us. O that the goodness of God may lead us to repentance, and that we may be enabled henceforth to live not unto ourselves, but unto the praise of the glory of thy grace. Heavenly Father, do thou give us grace to improve aright what thou hast made known to us of thy dealings with Israel of old. Thou didst choose them out of all the families of the earth; thou didst set them apart as a heritage for thyself; thou didst bestow upon them many great and precious privileges; but, alas! they were not faithful to thy covenant, nor obedient to thy will. They forsook the God who made them, and did lightly esteem the Rock of their salvation; they provoked thee to anger by their idolatries and evil ways; wherefore thou didst, in thy righteous judgment, scatter them among the nations, and disperse them among the people, and they are, unto this day, a bye-word and a proverb in the earth. O God of their fathers, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, do thou remember mercy in the midst of wrath. Turn them again, Lord God of hosts, and so they shall be safe. Remove the vail that is over their hearts, and cause them to see the light of the knowledge of thy glory in the face of Jesus Christ. O convince them that Jesus of Nazareth is he who should come, and that they need not look for another; and bring them back from their unbelief and wanderings unto the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls. Help us, O Lord, to abide in the faith of Christ, and to bring forth the fruits of righteousness to the praise of the glory of thy grace. Keep us, O God, by thy power, through faith unto salvation. And do for us, and in us, exceeding abundantly above all that we are able to ask or think, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIV.

SCRIPTURE—I TIMOTHY IV.

REMARKS:

The subject of this prophecy evidently is the great apostacy that should be realized in the rise and reign of the papacy. The description is so pointed and precise as not to be gainsayed or mistaken. Accordingly we find, that there is a very general agreement among commentators upon the subject. Indeed the application to the church of Rome is so obvious, as that he who runneth may read it.

The Spirit of God beforehand gave express testimony respecting the coming and character of this apostacy. He was pleased to give warning to the Old Testament church respecting it by the mouth of Daniel, and Jeremiah, and others; and now, when the time of its actual manifestation was drawing near, although not just at hand, there appears to have been given to Paul, and others of his brethren, an immediate revelation concerning this momentous matter.

It would seem, indeed, as if the Spirit, with an audible and articulated voice, had made known these things to his servants, in order to impress them more deeply on their own minds, and that they might be led to give them forth with greater solemnity to others.

This apostacy was to originate in a departure from the faith, from the sound doctrine of the gospel, and the simplicity that is in Christ. It was to be carried on by persons pretending to extraordinary communications from the Spirit of God; but the nature of whose teaching would clearly show that they were the servants of the father of lies, and that their whole conduct bore the character of hypocrisy. And so injurious would the effects of their hypocrisy be, as to render them incapable of discerning the moral distinctions of things; their conscience should become seared as with a hot iron, and God would send them a strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

How remarkably is all this realized in the church of Rome, and in the errors and iniquities by which it is distinguished! The doctrines and practices of paganism respecting demons are adopted and applied to the worship of saints and angels. The restrictions of marriage and of meats are without any authority from the word of God, and lead to practices of the most immoral and pernicious character. The whole system is a remarkable fulfilment of the word of God, and an awful visitation to the inhabitants of the earth.

The apostle inculcates upon Timothy, and upon all other good ministers of Jesus Christ in after times, the duty of putting the brethren in remembrance of these things; to hold up continually before their minds the certainty of the rise and progress of this antichristian delusion, to guard them against its influence, and to stir them up to seek for its complete destruction.

Have not ministers and people, in the present day, much reason to confess that their obligations respecting this matter have been much neglected; and may not this be the reason why the Lord has permitted popery again to lift up its head, and threaten to subjugate the nations? Let all who love the truth as it is in Jesus bestir themselves to resist the adversary; let them take unto themselves the whole armour of God, that they may be able to stand in the evil day, and be more than conquerors through him that loved them.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the God of truth, and of grace, and of holiness. Thou dwellest in light that is inaccessible and full of glory. Evil cannot dwell with thee, neither shall fools stand in thy sight. Thou hatest all the workers of iniquity. O blessed be thy name for the revelation which thou hast given us of thy character and will in the scriptures of truth, and that all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. Grant, we humbly pray thee, that we may be enabled to receive the truth in the love of it, and that the truth may make us free; that the entrance of thy word may give life and light to our souls; and that, through the effectual operation of thy Spirit, we may become as living epistles of the truth, known and read of all men. O help us to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. May we hold fast the word of life, and cleave closely unto him who is the way, and the truth, and the life, and by whom alone we can come unto the Father. We would tremble and be afraid, O God, when we think of the delusions and iniquities to which we are so liable. How easily are we turned aside from the right path! how readily do we submit our neck to the yoke of bondage! O do thou arise for our defence, deliver us in the hour of danger, and keep us in safety under the shadow of thy wings. Hasten the time when all superstition and idolatry shall be banished from off the face of the earth. O deliver us from the aspirations and encroachments of the man of sin, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. O may the Lord speedily consume him with the Spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the brightness of his coming, and may there be nothing to hurt or destroy throughout all God's holy mountain. May the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the channel of the sea, and all the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ. Heavenly Father, be with us now when we retire to rest. Give us the sleep of thy beloved. Pardon our manifold and highly aggravated offences, and speak peace to us through the blood of the cross. And unto the Father, and unto the Son, and unto the Holy Ghost, be undivided and eternal glory. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LI. 4.

SCRIPTURE—LAMENTATIONS II.

REMARKS.

It forms no part of the design of the gospel, either to deny the existence of suffering under the moral government of God, or to rebuke the tears we shed over our own distresses or the distresses of others. On the contrary, it declares that 'it is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of mirth;' and he who wept over the tomb of Lazarus whom he loved, has lent, by his own example, a sanction to the afflicted, in both the feeling and the expression of their sorrow. But while it is neither necessary nor desirable to suppress, in the hour of grief, the feelings of bitter mourning and lamentation which nature prompts, even in those cases where affliction has been immediately appointed as the punishment of our sin, yet it is good always to trace up the affliction to the hand and ordination of God, even when in doing so, we are made to feel that he has sent it in his anger.

The prophet of God laments, in most mournful language, the miseries of Jerusalem, when its walls and palaces were cast down, when the sword and the fire of the enemy had wasted it, when its children had been given up to famine and death, when the Lord had cast off his altar and abhorred his sanctuary, and when the tabernacle of Israel, unto which had pertained the divine presence and glory, was forsaken by its God. But amid the melancholy catalogue of judgments and calamities which caused the daughter of Zion to clothe herself in sackcloth, and to sit in the dust, it is instructive to remark how affliction is throughout identified with the divine appointment, and the tribulations she suffered acknowledged as the doing of the Lord. In her present misery, the prophet recognised the fulfilment of the divine threatenings on her sins; it was 'the Lord that had covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger,' it was 'his fierce anger' that had put the cup of bitterness into her hand; and in the evil that she felt and feared, she knew that 'the Lord had done that which he had devised, and that he only fulfilled 'his word that he had commanded in the days of old.'

It is only in such a spirit, and with such a direct recognition of God in our distresses, that we can ever enjoy the sanctified use of them. When we thus learn to trace all our afflictions to their cause in the displeasure of God against our sins, or in the discipline of God with a view to our sanctification; when we are taught to connect them with the defects in our own characters, and with the dealings towards us of a righteous and sovereign Judge, it presents us with such a view of our sorrows as is fitted both to humble us and to do us good.

And especially it is under such a feeling, that in seeking deliverance from affliction, we will be led to 'arise and cry out in the night,' and 'to lift up our hands towards God,' as our only hope and help in trouble. It is not wrong to mourn, when God sends us cause for mourning; it is not wrong to weep with those that weep; but it is especially good to trace the hand of God in all our sorrows, and to cause our hearts to cry unto the Lord, who alone can make us 'joyful in the midst of tribulation.'

PRAYER.

O thou who art the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, we desire to humble ourselves before thee this morning, in acknowledgment of thine absolute sovereignty over us, and our entire dependence upon thee. Thou didst make us, and not we ourselves; we are the people of thy hand, and the sheep of thy pasture; thou orderest all the events that befall us here; thou appointest sorrow, and thou givest joy; thou hast set the bounds of our earthly habitation; thou hast numbered the days and years of our mortal existence. Help us to remember that we are altogether in thy hand, and subject to thy disposal; and may we be enabled to look up to thee continually under all the dispensations of thy providence, with a perfect reliance on thy wisdom, thy faithfulness, and thy love. We desire, O Lord, this day to acknowledge our transgressions, and to remember our sins before thee. When we look back upon our past life, and number over our provocations, when we look inward upon our own hearts and discern their corruption, when we look around upon the sinfulness of our own doings, when we look up to him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, we deeply feel that we cannot enter into judgment with God, or answer him when he contends with us. Once have we spoken, but we will not answer; yea, twice, but we will proceed no further; we had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now our eye seeth thee; wherefore we abhor ourselves, and repent in dust and ashes. Humble our souls, we beseech thee, under a deep and abiding sense of our own sinfulness and demerit; give us the broken and contrite heart that mourns and confesses its corruption; let every proud and self-righteous feeling within us be utterly cast down, and may we be taught to feel and acknowledge that the Lord is just and righteous when he judgeth. Especially, amid the afflictions with which thou art pleased to visit us, may we learn the lesson at once of our own guilt and of thy holiness, and be taught to remember that sin is the bitter cause of sorrow, and that it is our own iniquities that have armed thy providence against us. Help us to acknowledge thy mighty hand and thy truth even in thy sorest chastisements; and knowing that nothing but sin can separate between us and God, may we be stirred up to a holy anxiety to search our own hearts, and try our own ways, and to cast out the accursed thing that hath kindled thy displeasure against us. We bless thy name that there is still mercy with thee, that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption, that thou mayest be sought after. Thou wast a little angry with us, but thou hast turned thee from thine anger and hast comforted us; behold God hath become our salvation, and the Most High our Redeemer. May we find in Jesus Christ that resting-place for our souls which he hath promised to the weary and heavy laden; let our sins be forgiven us for his name's sake; teach us to look up to thee through him as unto a reconciled Father; and abiding continually in him by faith, may we taste of that peace which the world cannot give, and experience of that grace and strength which will fit us for duty and trial. In him is our confidence, let it not be disappointed; may he become to us in growing fullness every day our wisdom, our righteousness, our sanctification, and redemption. Unto thee, as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we commend ourselves during this day, and for all the days of our appointed time on earth. Be thou our shield and our guide, our hope and our joy. Watch over all our interests and our footsteps; enrich us with the treasures of thy grace, and keep us by thy power unto thy kingdom. Be very gracious unto all whom we love. Be gracious unto all who are of the household of faith. Let thy kingdom come, let thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven; and hasten on the promised peace and blessedness of a better age. Hear these our supplications, and send us an answer in peace, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXII. 13.

SCRIPTURE—I TIMOTHY V.

REMARKS.

The followers of Jesus, whatever be the differences among them in other and less important respects, are closely united to each other, and separated from the rest of men by the profession of the same religious truths, by the worship of the same God, the faith of the same Saviour, the fellowship of the same Spirit, the sprinkling of the same baptism, the communion of the same supper, the observance of the same rites and ordinances. Bound together in this manner among themselves, and disjoined from the world, they form the visible church of Christ upon earth, a society of professedly Christian men, who ought to be separated from others, not more by the peculiarity of the truths which they hold, than by the holiness of the lives which they exhibit. Our Saviour has appointed for that church a certain government, and has authorised certain office-bearers to guard the purity and to provide for the edification of the Christian society; and individual believers are thus taught to consider religion as something more than a private and personal concern, and to feel the obligation of duties owing to each other as members of the same religious body, and united in the communion of the same church.

It is more especially the duty of the office-bearers of the church of Christ, to provide for the purity of its communion, by the exercise of counsel, and admonition, and censure, and rebuke towards those who may have erred; a healing discipline administered with peculiar reference to the circumstances and character of those to whom it is applicable. Those who are advanced in age or in office, are to be censured with something of the tenderness with which one would uncover the sin of a parent; those less advanced in life, are to be dealt with in the spirit of that love which one feels towards brethren. It is only in this manner that a salutary discipline may be preserved from the charge of oppression on the one hand, and laxity on the other, and be instrumental in keeping pure and blameless the body of Christ; and not only in regard to the spiritual censures, but also in regard to the charities of the church, the same righteous strictness is to be observed. The poor and the destitute, and the widow who have none of their own to care for them, are to share in the liberalities of the church of Christ, in proportion as they maintain characters 'void of offence,' and have exhibited lives 'well reported of for good works;' those supported by the alms presented along with the prayers of the believers on the first day of the week, must be such as 'give none occasion to the adversary to speak reproachfully.'

But among all those duties that are owing by Christians to each other in their character as members of the church, not the least important is the reverence and honour due to those appointed to preside over them in the government and instruction of the flock. The ordained servant of the Lord, duly authorised to minister between Christ and Christ's people, is to be esteemed very highly in love for his work's sake; and if need be, those who reap of his spiritual things, are bound to contribute to his necessities of their carnal things. On the other hand, the man who is charged with such a high office and responsibility, must give himself in fear to the discharge of such duties, as done not unto men, but unto God. Being appointed to sit in judgment over the character and conduct of others, it is especially necessary that he do so 'without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality;' 'he must keep himself pure, neither be partaker of other men's sins.' It is by the observance of such rules, and in such a spirit, that the body of Christ may be built up in holiness and honour; by a righteous zeal in admonishing each other of duty, and reproving each other's faults, joined to the tenderness and loving-kindness of brethren, Christians may 'edify one another;' and the 'house of God' will best be advanced in peace and purity when the honour and authority, wherewith Christ has invested the office-bearers of his church, are combined and associated with the freedom wherewith he makes his people free.

PRAYER.

O God, we would now approach thee in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. In him, O Lord, we desire now to be found; and we entreat thee, for his sake, to receive us graciously, and love us freely, to blot out the multitude of our transgressions, to enrich our souls with thy sanctifying grace, to number us with thine adopted and chosen ones, and to visit us with thy great salvation. Teach us more and more our own lost and undone condition as sinners; and under a deep and active feeling of our personal need, may we be led to draw near in faith to him upon whom thou hast laid the burden of our infirmities and guilt, and who, once having died for our sins, hath been exalted to bestow their forgiveness. May we maintain habitually upon our hearts the conviction, that without Christ we can do nothing, and that as the branch cannot bear fruit except it abide in the vine, so neither can we except we abide in Jesus. Do thou, therefore, teach us every day to cultivate a nearer and more intimate fellowship with him, to abide in him continually by faith, and never to cease our desires and endeavours to increase in an experimental knowledge of him as our own Saviour and our own God. Crucified with him, may we nevertheless live; and grant that the life which we live in the flesh may be by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave himself for us. We desire to render thanks to thee for all the means of grace and opportunities of spiritual improvement with which we are favoured. Unto us the lines have fallen in pleasant places, yea, we have got a goodly heritage. We bless thee for the word of life, for the light of the gospel which has shone around our dwellings, for our sabbaths and means of grace, for the church of Christ and the ordinances that draw down of his presence and blessing in the midst of us, for the promise of the Spirit to abide with us for ever. May we never forget that to whom much is given, from them much will be required; and may we be stirred up to a more adequate feeling of the value of the privileges we enjoy, and to a greater anxiety for the right improvement of them. Forbid that those means of grace, to which the promise of thy Spirit and blessing are annexed, should be neglected or undervalued by us. But rather may we be found growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and living henceforward as the children of so many mercies. May our souls be nourished and watered from day to day, by the dew of thy grace, and outpouring of thy Spirit; and O may the fruits of the Spirit, in faith and holiness, be made manifest in our habitual walk and conversation. We beseech thee, gracious Father, to be with us during the watches of the night; and may he, in whose eye the darkness and the light are both the same, grant us his presence and protection during our slumbers. Give us to lie down under a confiding sense of thy goodness, and when we awake may our thoughts be still with thee. Bless all who are united to us by the ties of kindred or affection. May they too share in thy blessing. May they and we be safe under the shadow of thy wings; and all that we ask is for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SCRIPTURE—LAMENTATIONS III.

REMARKS.

'It is good that a man both hope and wait for the salvation of the Lord.' Such was the persuasion of the prophet, even when suffering with his afflicted countrymen, and mourning over the ruin both of his home and of his sanctuary. The tribes of God had been sent into captivity; Jerusalem, heretofore 'the joy of the whole earth,' sat widowed and afflicted; and the sanctuary of Jacob was trodden under foot by the idolater and the stranger. - Yet Jeremiah was assured that 'the Lord would not cast off for ever;' and that although for a time 'he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.' And therefore it was that he looked forward in faith to the end of the days that were determined upon his people and the holy city. He felt that there was profit to be found in the affliction while it lasted, and advantage to be gained from a state of expectation while the deliverance was deferred; and he confessed that it was 'good that a man both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord.'

Such indeed is the attitude which it is both the interest and the duty of the Christian to assume when he is made to 'see affliction, and to bear the rod of divine anger.' In greatness and confidence shall be his strength. Even when 'remembering his affliction and his misery, the wormwood and the gall,' and when almost ready to say in despair, 'My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord,' yet is he conscious that the infliction is less than his iniquities deserve; and under the heavy burden appointed for him to bear, the language of his heart is, 'Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?' 'It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.' Let a man but ponder the nature and painful extent of the truth that he is a guilty creature in the sight of God, and exposed justly and deservedly to his wrath, and the consciousness of that fact will go far to quench every proud and impatient feeling, under affliction, and will teach him, whatever be his sorrows, in silence and patience of spirit to wait and hope for the salvation of the Lord.

The darkest aspects of God's providence, and the sharpest inflictions of his hand, ought never to shake the Christian's faith in his God. It is a precious and sealed truth, that 'he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.' Were there no sin, there would be no suffering, and no need of it under the moral government of God. In its own nature, indeed, and apart from its moral effects, suffering must be utterly repugnant to the character and nature of a God whose delight is in mercy. And it is a truth fraught with strength and comfort to the heart of the afflicted, to think that God employs suffering, in the case of his people, only in such measure, and in such a way, as may be the instrument of advancing their spiritual good; that affliction in his hand is a moral discipline admirably suited to the character and state of those to whom it is applied; and that it is never sent except with the view either of remedying the evil, or of promoting the good, of his children. The moral benefit of affliction has been felt and acknowledged by the people of God in all ages; and the experience of multitudes can bear witness to its blessed efficacy, who have either been at first chosen in the furnace, or have subsequently been purified by its fires. It may be in consequence of sin secretly cherished, or of love and faith waxing cold, that God sees reason to contend with his servant ; and then the language that he is taught by affliction is that of Jeremiah, ' Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord ; let us lift up our hearts with our hands unto God in the heavens ; we have transgressed and rebelled ; thou hast not pardoned.' Or it may be that, after hoping and waiting long for deliverance, he has been taught by affliction to render thanks with the same prophet, and to say, ' I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon. Thou hast heard my voice ; hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry. Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee : thou saidst, Fear not.'

PRAYER.

Unto whom, O Lord, can we go but unto thee, for it is thine ear that is never heavy that it cannot hear, and it is thine arm that is never shortened that it cannot save ? When our souls are overwhelmed and in perplexity, we would flee unto the rock that is higher than we. We rejoice in the assurance that thou afflictest not willingly, nor grieveest the children of men ; and we desire to rest in the promise, that the Lord will not cast off for ever ; that though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. The Lord is our portion, therefore will we hope in him. O give us to abide under the shadow of the Almighty. May he cover us with his feathers, and under his wings may our trust be. Whatever be the trials with which thou art pleased to visit us, may we still be sensible that we are safe in thy hand. In all thy dealings with us, teach us to trace the tokens of Fatherly wisdom and compassion. May we remember that thou contendest with thy people not in anger, but in love. And in the dispensations of thy hand, may we learn to acknowledge that thou afflictest not for thine own pleasure, but for our good. Drawing closer to thee as our reconciled God in Christ Jesus, may we lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees, and rejoice in the assurance that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. We give thee thanks for the assurance, that we have not an High Priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities ; but one who in all our afflictions is afflicted. O may he who once was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, visit us in the season of our sorrow. He knows our frame, he remembers that we are dust. May he be our help, our refuge, and our stay. Teach us, amid all our trials, to look up to that once crucified, but now exalted Saviour, who still well remembers in heaven his own earthly distresses. And satisfied that to him belong infinite power and infinite compassion, and both exercised for the good of his church, may we learn neither to despise the chastenings of the Lord, nor to faint when we are rebuked of him. Sanctify, we beseech thee, to our spiritual good, all the discipline of thy providence with us. May tribulation work patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, even that hope which maketh not ashamed, but which, as an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, entereth in within the veil. Teach us to know more experimentally the unsatisfactory nature of all earthly good ; and let our souls be lifted up to heaven to seek there for a better and more enduring portion. We would now rest our burden upon the Lord. We wait and watch for his salvation. We commit ourselves, and all our interests, into thy faithful hands. Be this day our guide and shield through the wilderness. Save us from danger, save us from sin, and lead us at last to the land of rest. Let all our days on earth be spent in thy fear, and in the enjoyment of thy favour. Let our friends be thy friends ; let them enjoy thy blessing. May they and we together be partakers of thy goodness here, and the heirs of thy kingdom hereafter. Our supplications are before thee. Do thou for us, and in us, more than we can ask or think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIII.

SCRIPTURE—1 TIMOTHY VI.

REMARKS.

It is a great mistake to suppose that Christianity is adverse to the inequality of station and ranks which obtains in civil life, or was designed to subvert the relations of human society. If the gospel finds a man in the condition of a servant, it does not dissolve the tie that obliges him to yield obedience to his earthly master, but rather teaches him to render that obedience in such a spirit of faithfulness and devotion, as shall tend to adorn the profession that he makes. Any other doctrine is inconsistent with the love of Christ, and can only be maintained by men who prefer the form to the power of godliness, and who are actuated by a spirit of pride or self-interest. The gospel can sanctify a state of poverty, and make contentment with our own condition to be better than great gain. It will make a man happier with nothing but the bread and water which are necessary for life, than if without the gospel he were rich in all that this world can bestow. They that love and haste to be rich, who set their hearts on a perishing world, and covet its wealth, are laying up for themselves sorrow and bitter disappointment ; for sooner shall a camel pass through the eye of a needle, than a rich man enter into the kingdom of heaven.

It is necessary that those who are devoted to God should resist the temptation of such hurtful doctrines and unlawful passions, and strive in faith and patience to secure for themselves a more enduring portion, and to lay hold on eternal life. Private Christians, but more especially ministers of the gospel, ought to remember that coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, which will stamp with the seal of utter vanity the wealth, and the honours, and the distinctions of this world; and, in the hope of his appearing, should be ready to esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, having respect unto the recompence of reward.

And if such be the temptations arising from 'uncertain riches,' and such the sorrows of those who make the fine gold their portion, it is peculiarly needful that the wealthy in this world be reminded, by the faithful servants of God, that they ought not to rest in these things as their confidence. The commandment to such is, 'occupy till I come;' and in the faithful use of their riches, as of a talent confided to their trust. In the employment of them for the temporal and spiritual good of their fellow-men, they will find at once their duty and their reward. The fruit of such a use of riches is more precious than gold. It is only in this way that the rich can make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, and 'lay up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come.'

PRAYER.

Thou art the blessed and the only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Thou only hast immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see. Wherewithal shall we come before the Lord, or bow ourselves before the most high God? We bless thee that thou thyself hast shown us that which is good; and that when we had no offering or sacrifice to present for ourselves, thou didst provide the Lamb for the burnt-offering. Do thou be pleased to call to remembrance, on our behalf, the perfect sacrifice and all-sufficient atonement of the Lord our Redeemer; and seeing that he shed his blood, and poured out his life for our redemption, may we receive through faith all those blessings of a spiritual kind which he died to purchase, and is now exalted to bestow. Let not our sins separate betwixt us and thee. Let not our iniquities turn away thy compassion from us. For the sake of thy Beloved, do thou lift upon our souls the light of thy reconciled countenance, and visit us with thy salvation. May we find, in our happy experience, that in Jesus Christ there is plenteous redemption; that with him there is mercy for our souls, and pardon for all our offences. Teach us to count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord; and the more we come to know, with regard to ourselves, that we are poor, and needy, and naked, may we seek the more earnestly to be clothed upon with the righteousness of him who, although he knew no sin, was yet made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. And while seeking to be justified freely through faith in Jesus Christ, we would entreat also that our natures may be renewed and sanctified by his Spirit. May that Spirit work in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure towards us. May our hearts become the temples of the Holy Ghost, in which he delights to dwell. And may every impure thought, every worldly passion, every unholy desire, every unlawful feeling, be cast down and rebuked at his presence. As the ransomed people of the Lord, may we continually feel that we are not our own, and that we are bound to glorify him in our bodies and spirits, which are his. Forbid that at any time sin should have the dominion over us. But remembering that holy name by which we are called, and that precious blood which was given to redeem us, may it be our heart's desire and effort to walk through the world as the disciples of Jesus, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour by enlightened conversation becoming the gospel. Let us not be conformed to this world in its maxims, its manners, or its feelings; but may we be transformed by the renewing of our minds. And as strangers and pilgrims, who have neither their home nor their portion here, may we be waiting and longing for that second coming of our Lord and Saviour, when he shall appear without sin unto salvation. We desire to unite in thanksgiving to thee for the mercies of the past day; and in the confidence of the same mercy we would now commit our bodies, and spirits, and all that concerns us, to thy keeping for the night. May he who neither slumbers nor sleeps watch over us during its darkness, and let not any plague come nigh our dwelling. Bless those that are dear to us. Be very gracious to thine own heritage. May thy church every where be built up, and thy people multiplied; and very soon may the ends of the earth see the salvation of our God. Hear us, we beseech thee, gracious God, and accept of us, and answer us, for Christ our Saviour's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 31.

SCRIPTURE—LAMENTATIONS IV.

REMARKS.

Every prophet has not lived to see his own predictions fulfilled. Hundreds of years have often elapsed between the prediction of the event and its actual occurrence; but the events which Jeremiah relates in this chapter as an historian, he had foretold elsewhere as a prophet. On turning to the nineteenth chapter of his prophecies, we find him, at the sixth verse, declaring of Jerusalem, 'Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall be called the valley of slaughter. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and the straitness wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.' It is a shocking picture which the prophet draws of Jerusalem. Not only was its glory gone, so that the gold had lost its lustre, and those that were once its honoured and honourable men, were now held in no higher estimation than a broken earthen pitcher; but in place of all earthly glory had come desolation, and sufferings of the most horrid and harrowing description. Under the famine, which, while the sword killed without, slew its thousands within the city, the survivors walked about like living skeletons, beauty was turned into blackness, and like the ostrich of the desert, which leaves its eggs to be hatched by the sun, and its young ones to provide for themselves as they best can, the mothers of Jerusalem abandoned their own offspring. They did worse; the mother not only forgot her sucking child, that she should have no compassion on the fruit of her womb; the hands of the pitiful women, says the prophet, have sodden their own children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. Well might the prophet envy the fate of Sodom. Its destruction came like a flash of lightning—his people died in pining lingering agony. How true is God to his word! He is not a man that he should lie. We said that this was all predicted by Jeremiah; it was threatened a thousand years before Jeremiah was born. In the twenty-fourth chapter of Deuteronomy we find Moses warning the Jews, that if they did not observe the statutes of the Lord their God, then they would be visited with the very calamities which overwhelmed their city and people in the days of Jeremiah.

Let the wicked take warning. God is as true to his threatenings as he is to his promises. Hell is as sure as heaven. Wrath is approaching. Its steps may be slow, but they are sure; and as long as we Christians have an ark to flee to, let us enter it before the flood come. We may apply, as many a one does on a death-bed, when it is too late, and the only answer given to the application shall be, 'the door is shut.'

To the ministers, elders, and office-bearers of the church, this chapter addresses a special solemn warning. The prophet tells us that it was especially for the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that Jerusalem was deluged with blood, and burned to ashes, and her survivors borne into captivity. When a land has been blessed with ordinances adequate to the public necessities, a godless and careless people is but the index of a godless and a careless ministry. Such priest, such people. If the priests are clothed with salvation, the people will shout for joy; and hence, while the office-bearers of the church should be alive to their double responsibility, God's people should use all means for securing, and be most fervent in prayer, for a godly, zealous, and faithful ministry; that God would give them pastors after his own heart, and keep them clean who bear the vessels of the sanctuary.

PRAYER.

Thou art, O Lord, a holy and a sin-hating God. Thine eyes are purer than to look on sin, and thou abhorrest the workers of iniquity; and though on him thou dost not always execute judgment speedily, yet thou wilt at length make bare thy holy arm. Thou wilt not be mocked for ever; and before thy terrible wrath the tabernacles of the wicked and the hope of the hypocrite shall perish. Thy judgments have been known upon the earth. This drowned and deluged world, Sodom in ashes, Jerusalem in ruins, thine ancient people this day vagabonds on the earth, a hissing, a bye-word, and a proverb among the nations,—these proclaim thy justice, and that it is indeed a terrible thing to fall into the hands of a living and an angry God. And amid these monuments of ruin, here we stand, not monuments of man's merit, but of God's mercy. Why hast not thy glittering sword been stretched out against us? Why hast not destruction overthrown our cities, and the sword drunk our blood, and the famine devoured our strength, and the pestilence walked in darkness through our habitations? Lord, our sins and our shortcomings bear witness that it is of thy mercy that we have not been consumed, and because thy compassions fail not. Pastors and people, sovereign and subjects, parents and children, all, even all of us, have sinned against thee, and sinned against thee times and ways without number. Our first parents fell, and buried us in their fall; our glory departed; thy image was destroyed; and now, instead of righteousness, clothed us over with iniquity, covered us over with sin. How is the gold become dim; the most fine gold, how is it changed! May we be warned by thy past judgments on the earth to flee from a more terrible judgment than them all. Hell is coming, and we have deserved it; but yet thou art waiting to be merciful and gracious; and because thou art now restraining thy wrath, wicked men are saying, Where is the promise of his coming? Whatever others say and do, may we listen to the voice from heaven, which says, Escape for thy life; flee from the wrath to come. Blessed be thy name, thou hast provided a refuge, a free refuge, a full refuge, open to all, and large enough for all. Turn us, Lord, turn us by thy mighty power; turn us unto Christ; drive us unto him by the terrors of a coming judgment; draw us unto him by the cords of love. O send forth thy light and thy truth, that we may be guided to this city of refuge, for surely the avenger is behind us, and there may not be an hour to lose. Like thy ancient people, we may be watching for a nation that cannot save us. Trusting to our own righteousness, to our own repentance, to our own characters, to our own merits, we may be thinking to swim the flood in an ark of our own building. If so, open our eyes to this, that these are refuges of lies, and that out of Christ there is no salvation. Wash us in his blood, sanctify us by his Spirit, and so prepare us for that day when thou wilt come to judge the earth, and to take vengeance on all thine enemies. Then may his wing cover us, then in his pavilion may he hide us; and when the angel passes through the land, may the blood of the Lamb of God be seen upon our door-posts. Keep us now through faith unto salvation, and afterwards receive us into glory, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—2 TIMOTHY I.

REMARKS.

Paul was, in a spiritual sense, Timothy's father. He was his father in God; and hence the apostle addresses this letter to Timothy, 'My dearly beloved son.' And it would be well for parents to remember, that the best wishes they can form for their children are not that they may be crowned with health, and wealth, and worldly prosperity, but that they may get the grace of God, and find that mercy and peace which the apostle asked for Timothy. It is worthy of notice how Paul ascribes to God the glory of all that he or his son possessed. Was he himself an apostle of Jesus Christ? it was by the will of God; was Timothy distinguished for his faith? he neither took to himself, nor gave to Timothy, the credit of that. Faith is the gift of God, and he gave the glory to him to whom it was due. Though both Timothy's mother and grandmother had been distinguished saints, yet he knew that, though sin was hereditary, grace was not; and that if, as does not always happen, godly parents are blessed with godly children, they are to say, Not unto us, O Lord, not unto our prayers and our teaching, not unto any thing that we have done, not unto any thing naturally good in them, but unto thee be all the glory.

Paul, separated from one whom he ardently longed to see, teaches parents what they should do, and what they can do, when separated from their children. Without ceasing he remembered Timothy in his prayers, and he followed him with his counsel.

As men stir up the coals to make the fire burn brighter; so Paul calls on Timothy to stir up the gift that was given him, when, by the laying on of his hands, he was set apart for the ministry. And it is not only the duty of Christian ministers, but of all Christians, to be stirring at their gifts and graces. Keep the fire of love, and zeal, and devotion, bright. Constant use is the best remedy against rust; and it is with our graces as it is with our limbs, the more they are called into exercise, the stronger they grow. It is true that zeal and devotion to Christ and his cause, lively and decided piety, may expose us to shame and suffering; but we are never to be ashamed of Christ. There is little worth living for but to serve Christ; there is nothing worth glorying in but his cross. If we suffer for Christ, we suffer in a good cause, and suffer in good company; and they alone who carry the cross will wear the crown. The apostle not only exhorts his son to be steadfast in duty, but to be steadfast also in doctrine. When Christians are driven about by every wind of doctrine, and are ready to embrace every novelty in religion, the cause of piety is thereby injured. It gives occasion to the enemies of God to mock and blaspheme, and some appearance of truth to their charge against warm-hearted zeal, that it is all fanaticism. Paul tells us how we are to be kept steadfast, both in faith and practice. We are to be so kept by the Holy Ghost dwelling in us. We are to trust in a higher power than our own. It is not in man that walketh to direct his own steps. How necessary this exhortation was appears from the fact, that in Asia there had been a sad falling away among the Christian converts. Those who had embraced the truth had now abandoned it; those who had once adhered to the apostle, had now deserted him. Paul there found, as many a minister since has found, that the servant is no better than his master. This great apostle was now deserted by multitudes, whose cry was wont to be, 'I am for Paul.' One honourable exception is all he mentions. Onesiphorus was faithful among a faithless multitude. He sought out the apostle in his prison. Paul repaid this kindness with his prayers. And there is a day coming, when Onesiphorus, and all who have shown kindness to his servants, will find, that in so far as they did unto the least of them, they did unto Christ himself. The widow's mite cast in for their support, the cup of water presented for their refreshment, shall not go without their reward.

PRAYER.

Our Father which art in heaven, thou art the fountain of all our mercies, the God of all our comforts. We thank thee for the health, the bread, the protection, the earthly blessings that we have enjoyed this day. If we have gone out and come in; if we have sat down and risen up in safety and peace; if the outgoings of another morning and another evening have rejoiced over us, this is the Lord's doing; and, considering our many sins and shortcomings, it is marvellous in our eyes. And if there be any good thing in our souls, any grace, any love, any faith, these are thy gifts, O God. By grace it is that thy people are what they are. May we all be made partakers of the grace of God. Give us, as thou gavest to Timothy, a faith unfeigned. If we have had godly parents as he had, we thank thee for it. May the prayers of the parents be answered in the children; and may the young grow up from their mother's knees in the knowledge of the word of that gracious Saviour, who said, Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. May thy sovereign grace, which leaveth one and taketh another, passeth one generation and resteth upon a second, rest and abide on us; and whatever gifts have thereby been bestowed on us or ours, may they be diligently stirred up. May we think much of our sins, that our humility may be deepened. May we think much of our Saviour, that as we muse on the sufferings, and the kindness, and the love of Jesus, the fire may burn within us, our love may grow warmer, and our faith may grow stronger, and we may increase in devotedness to him, who so graciously and generously devoted himself to us. And by thy Holy Spirit, ever dwelling, abiding, and working in us, may we be kept steadfast, amid all our trials and temptations, to the truth and the cause of Christ. Let us not lapse into error, nor fall back into sin. Give us courage to stand by Christ's cause and servants. Keep us, Lord, for we cannot keep ourselves. We commit our way to the Lord, the keeping of body and of soul to him. May thy providence watch over us this night. Thou that givest thy beloved sleep, give us quiet repose; and ever may our last and our first thoughts be of thee. In the blood of Jesus wash away all our sins, thou very God of peace. Sanctify us wholly; and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 34.

SCRIPTURE—LAMENTATIONS V.

REMARKS.

It is a mark of the ungodly when the hand of affliction presseth them, that they howl upon their beds, but call not on the Lord. God's people, on the contrary, kiss the hand that smiteth them, and on the very God that sendeth the affliction they seek their refuge and their comfort. The prophet in this chapter carries his complaint to the Lord; to the same quarter from whence the calamities had come he looks for deliverance, and, as it were, to move the divine compassion, he relates in the ear of God the sorrows of his suffering people; and seldom has any nation been crushed under such an accumulation of miseries. They were stripped of their property, driven from their homes, reduced to the meanest, most cruel, oppressive bondage; the curse of Canaan was on them, they were the servants of servants. During the progress of the siege, so terrible was the famine, that their skin grew black as an oven; so scarce was the water, that those who had no money to pay for it were left to perish of thirst; they paid money for wood and water, and every morsel that they eat was got at the point of the sword; and these sufferings were but the prelude of still more tremendous evils which followed the taking of the city; then the most shocking and revolting crimes were committed on the defenceless inhabitants; neither sex nor age was spared. Jerusalem was turned into a scene of brutal violence and indiscriminate slaughter, and the horrors that were committed there were repeated in every city of Judah, and the whole land was represented by the prophet's roll, which was written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

Of these national calamities the prophet took the proper and profitable view; 'is there evil in the city, and the Lord hath not done it?' In these he not only saw the hand of God, but also the guilt and sins of his people. They did not come by chance; they were the righteous retribution for a long course of national backsliding and iniquity. The cup had been filling and filling, until at length, in the days of the prophet, the measure of their iniquity was full. 'Our fathers,' says he, 'have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities.' In the providence of God, we see here how national sins are followed by national judgments, and this should be a warning to our nation and our church to repent, and from all our backslidings to return to the Lord, lest the crown should fall from our head also, and God, in his righteous judgment, should make the mountain of our Zion so desolate, that the foxes shall walk upon it. The language in which the prophet makes confession for his people, may be taken up by every nation, and church, and family, and individual: 'Woe unto us that we have sinned.' Woe is deserved by us, and if woe has not fallen upon us, this is to be ascribed to God's long-suffering patience; and certain it is, that woe will fall on all who shall persevere in a course of sin, regardless of the cry of heaven, 'Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?' From every man's head the crown of primeval righteousness has fallen; we sinned and fell in the first Adam, and woe, eternal woe, will be to that man who does not seek, in Christ the second Adam, a refuge from the coming storm. God has, in his own Son, proved a refuge and a restoration; he has not utterly rejected us. In Christ, salvation, mercy, pardon, peace, are offered to the chief of sinners; but if the offer he makes in the gospel of his Son and Spirit is rejected, then he will utterly reject us, and send us away to that place of misery, where neither money nor prayers can procure so much as one drop of water to cool the burning tongue. Let ours then be the prayer of the prophet, 'Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old.' We have, in ourselves, neither the power nor the will to turn, but God is greater than our wicked wayward hearts, and can turn them as he turneth the rivers of waters.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we draw near unto thee, who art a very present help in every time of trouble; remember, O Lord, what is come upon us, consider and behold our reproach. Thou didst at first make man upright, thou didst crown us with glory and honour, but alas! the crown has fallen from our heads; woe unto us that we have sinned. From our high and holy estate we have fallen, and fallen under the power of a worse than Assyrian, of a heavier than Egyptian bondage; we are not only the servants of servants, but we are the bond slaves of satan, the servants of hellish passions; these, by nature, have dominion over us, their bondage is grievous, their wages is death. O that thou wouldst resume thine authority over us, that thou wouldst deliver us from the captivity of sin, that thou wouldst break their sinful fetters, not only proclaiming, but giving liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound. Thanks be to God the proclamation has been made; thanks be to Jesus the ransom is paid; and now when he says, I have set before thee an open door, O give us grace to rise and embrace this offer of salvation. But, Lord, of ourselves we cannot accept of it; we are like a captive with an open door, but fettered and bound to the floor; the love of the world, the lust of sin, pride, unbelief, these bind us, and we pray thee send thy Holy Spirit to break these fetters and set us free. We are bound, and need to be delivered; like Peter, we are asleep in prison, and need to be awakened. He was smitten by the angels and so do thou smite us with convictions of sin, so do thou rouse us to a sense of our danger, open thou our eyes to such a sight, impress our hearts with such a sense of our lost, ruined, and miserable condition, that we may earnestly seek, and gladly embrace the Saviour. Restore the crown to our heads, restore thine image to our hearts, restore to our souls the joy of thy salvation, and build us up anew from the ruins and desolation of the fall. That we may not be utterly, awfully, eternally rejected, preserve us from rejecting Christ; may we remember that though thou remainest for ever, the day of grace remaineth not for ever, nor the throne of grace for ever; that these shall pass away to usher in a day and a throne of judgment, where our state will be fixed for eternity, and as the tree falleth it shall ever lie. If we have never yet been converted, may we be converted now; let this be the day of our spiritual birth, for we know not but this may be our dying day, the very last opportunity that we shall have of embracing an offered Saviour. Saving, do thou sanctify us; sanctify thy people more and more. May the very God of peace sanctify us wholly. In thy fear do thou this day keep us, with thy mercies do thou this day crown us; thou that hast preserved us in our lying down, preserve us in our going out and coming in, preserve our eyes from tears, our feet from falling, and our souls from death; and bring us all at last in peace to thy heavenly kingdom, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 9.

SCRIPTURE—2 TIMOTHY II.

REMARKS.

It is not enough to be possessed of grace, we need to be strong in grace, that we may attain that constancy and perseverance in the Lord's work to which Paul in this chapter encourages Timothy. The Christian life is represented here under the figure of a warfare, and the Christian himself under the figure of a warrior. There are many encouragements in this warfare. We go not to it on our own charges, we go not to it without sufficient armour; the believer is armed by his Captain from head to heel, and with salvation for his helmet, righteousness for a breast-plate, truth for a girdle, the shield of faith in his left hand, and the sword of the Spirit in his right, he is fit, in the strength of the Lord, to face, fight, and conquer all his spiritual enemies. Yet, aided and armed as he may be, a soldier life is at the best one of hardships, self-denial, and privations; and accordingly the apostle exhorts Timothy, and, in exhorting him, exhorts all to lay his account with these, and, by the grace of God, to endure all the temptations and trials to which he should be exposed as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

Careful for the church, the apostle provides for its instruction. He was himself to fall in the Christian warfare, Timothy might soon be added to the honoured list of martyrs, and to preserve the truth even when such lights were extinguished, such candlesticks removed, Paul instructs his son to rear other teachers, to communicate what he himself had learned to faithful men, that there might thus be a succession and multiplication of Christian ministers. Besides this, the apostle gives his son instructions how to discharge, in his own person, the office of the ministry. He was to discountenance all unprofitable speculations on the doctrines of religion, these often generating strife, creating divisions, and being after all but a dispute about words, he was rightly to divide the word of truth, giving due prominence to the great doctrines of man's ruin in Adam, his redemption in Jesus, his regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and instead of preaching and working so as to obtain the applause of men, he was to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. Knowing well that if the fountain was impure, it would spread impurity in its streams, that it was of especial importance that he should be sound in the faith to whom the education of a ministry was entrusted, the apostle warns Timothy against some heresies that were then afloat, and which he characterizes as vain and profane babblings. It would appear that the heretics of these days had even gone the length of denying the resurrection of the dead; and if men will be wise above what is written, and believe nothing but what they can fully explain or understand, there is no doctrine they will not deny. But whatever men in their presumption may doubt, in their daring may deny, the foundation of God standeth sure, the rock of ages cannot be shaken, the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ, the Lord knoweth his own people, and he will never permit their faith to be overthrown. Some had, however, for a while at least, been led astray, and while Timothy was exhorted to set an example of every Christian grace, and so to adorn the doctrine of his Christian profession, the apostle exhorts him to reclaim those who had fallen into sin and error. He was to go into the wilderness after these lost sheep, he was to win them back by patience, gentleness, kindness; these, with the divine blessing, are the means by which the Christian minister, teacher, or parent is to reclaim from error, conquer opposition, and recommend the truth to the hearts of men.

PRAYER.

O Lord, Almighty God, thou fountain of light, and life, and purity, make the light of the glorious gospel of Christ to shine into our hearts. We thank thee for our church, our ordinances, our ministers, and our teachers, and we pray that these fountains may ever be preserved from pollution. With these means of grace, give us that blessing from above without which a Paul might plant, an Apollos might water, and yet there would be no increase. May we not be satisfied with belonging to an orthodox church, with holding an orthodox creed, seeing that it will profit us nothing to know the truth unless we believe it and obey it. With sound teachers give an effectual blessing; with the teaching of men, give the application of thy Spirit, so that we may be taught savingly and to profit, so that the gospel may not come to us in word only, but in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. May we be brought into a state of grace, and be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus; may we not only be kept from error, but delivered from weakness; may we not only be found in Christ's ranks, but enduring hardness and staying sin, and resisting satan, and overcoming the love and the lust of the world, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. As those that have named the name of Christ, may we be enabled to depart from all iniquity; let no sin whatever have dominion over us, let every Achan be cast forth, every root of bitterness removed, and in heart, as well as habit, may we be so purified, that we may be vessels unto honour, sanctified, meet for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work. May the young flee from youthful lusts, and seek the Saviour early; bend thou the tree in the earliest stage of its growth, giving the young heart a direction towards heaven, holiness, and Christ; and whether old or young, may be found following righteousness, faith, charity, and peace; our feet ever treading those ways of wisdom which are ways of pleasantness, and all whose paths are peace. Crown our heads with the blessings of grace here, crown them with glory hereafter. May the mercies of the day be followed by rest and protection this night. Preserve us to the light and the duties of another day, and when we lie down at last to sleep in the grave, may the night of death be followed by a glorious morn. May we rise to a gracious and glorious acquittal; then may we be found in Christ; and when our eyes open on a great white throne of judgment, may they open also on a blood-purchased crown of glory; and beseeching thee to hear and answer our prayers for the sake of Jesus Christ thy beloved Son, and our only Saviour, we would ascribe all glory unto the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, world without end, for ever and ever. Amen.

FORTY-THIRD WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 49—72.

REMARKS.

Ver. 49—56. It has been supposed by many, that when the psalmist makes mention of 'the word,' that God had spoken to him, he particularly refers to what is recorded in 1 Chron. xvii. 23, which he might regard as embodying the promise, that of him the Messiah was to be sprung, who was to sit on his throne for ever. But there is no need for such a limitation. The substance of the doctrine of salvation had been borne home upon his mind in many other ways, and at different times. He could say with confidence, 'He hath made with me an everlasting covenant;' and he was fully warranted to make this the ground of pleadings with God. Just so can every believer, for Jehovah will ever be mindful of his covenant; and he that trusts in Christ can never be confounded. It is interesting to trace the effects which are here ascribed to the divine word, where-soever it is truly received. It sustains the mind amidst the trials of life; it opens up the fountain of pardon and peace to him who is overwhelmed by conscious guilt; it affords strength to the weak, and quickens the soul by giving new energies and unspeakable joys. When he is exposed to the derision of the proud, the divine word affords to the child of God pure motives to perseverance in the right way. The best of them will be sometimes perplexed when they see the good in affliction, and vice triumphant; and in such case it is only by perusing the record of God's judgment that we can find relief. It is from this book that we learn the evil of sin and its ruinous effects, and thus we are filled with horror at the case of the wicked. By this we are taught so much of God's mercy, and the pleasures of obedience, that the divine statutes become our song, the sources of our highest joy even on earth. The doctrine of this part of the psalm we may consider as reiterated at the 55th verse. It is the remembrance of the divine perfections that renders obedience pleasant.

Ver. 57—64. The psalmist here encourages himself in the right way by the remembrance of what he had already felt and done; and he makes an appeal to God for his sincerity. He had chosen the Lord as his portion, and he had vowed fidelity. He had sought him with the whole heart, he had grieved for sin, and he had proved the genuineness of his repentance by a renewed and ardent obedience, even amidst the insults and injustice of the wicked. And now, in the remembrance of what he had seen of the divine faithfulness and mercy, he purposes to maintain a closer walk with God, and with those who keep his precepts; and, under a feeling of his own weakness, he asks that grace which he knew his all-bountiful Father is willing to bestow. Can we make such appeals to God, and enter into similar vows, as in his immediate presence? Thus only do we prove ourselves his children.

Ver. 65—72. The more closely we examine into the divine dealings with us, the greater encouragement have we to commit our way to the Lord. God has been faithful to his word, and therefore may we ask his teaching. He has often afflicted us; but that has been for our profit. If, then, he has thus followed us with goodness, we may well ask for that teaching, in the bestowing of which we are assured he is glorified. And if we are thus called on, from day to day, to sing of his mercies, how well does it become us to resolve that no devices of the wicked shall ever divert us from our holy purposes, and that all their prosperity shall never induce us to seek our happiness from any other source than the service of God. Happy are we if we have learned, even in the school of affliction, that God's law is better than thousands of gold and silver.

PRAYER.

Most blessed Lord, we praise thee for all the manifestations of thy character in thy works and thy ways; but especially on this day of rest, sacred to the remembrance of a once crucified, but now risen Saviour, we would extol thee for that covenant of grace, in the old time the refuge and hope of believing men, and which is now sealed by the blood of Christ. We praise thee for the full and free overtures of mercy which are addressed to us through the divine Redeemer; for all the benefits that are treasured in him; for the encouragement that his doctrine affords us to perseverance in a holy obedience, and to the cultivation of a close intercourse with thee our Father in heaven, and for the comfort it yields us amidst every trial of life, and the slanders and reproaches of the ungodly. Grant that we may never be moved away from the hope that is in Christ; that through the blood of the covenant alone we may ever look for pardon, and all needed spiritual blessings; that by faith in this we may learn from this day to eschew those ways that are evil, and to esteem thy law as better than thousands of gold or silver: thus may we become companions of all them that fear thee. And may the holy book, that records the things that belong to our peace, ever be prized by us as the charter of our privileges, the storehouse of our treasures. May we learn to make it the man of our counsel, the frequent companion of our solitude, our guide in seasons of difficulty, our refuge in danger, our comfort in affliction. Lord God of the sabbath, vouchsafe to us thy presence and countenance on this day, which thou hast specially made for thyself. Quicken our hearts, and enliven our affections for all the devotional exercises, both public and private, to which we are now invited. Let this prove truly a season of rest and refreshment to each one of us. Be with us when we enter thy house; or if thy presence go not with us, carry us not up thither. Remember thy word of promise unto thy servants, that where two or three are met together in thy name, thou wilt be in the midst of them. Give testimony to the word of thy grace whensoever and by whomsoever it may be proclaimed this day, so that many who have hitherto been living at a distance from thee, may now choose thee as their portion, and may, with deep repentance, entreat thy favour with the whole heart, and that thy people may, with grateful hearts, anew take encouragement in thy service. May the sick and sorrowful, who cannot enter thy house, know that thou art with them, and in the issue learn thy statutes from their affliction. All these things we beg for Christ's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 73—96.

REMARKS.

Ver. 73—80. There is no want of evidence that man has fallen from his original glory; and that, amidst all the proofs which his nature still affords of divine workmanship, he is not, and cannot be, what he was when he came forth from the hand of his Creator. And however painful, yet it is not without its use, for us to examine the ruin of our former greatness. To the child of God it is especially profitable. He knows that the great end of the gospel is to bring man back to the state in which he was before the introduction of sin, and, therefore, he takes encouragement to pray that he may have understanding to learn God's commandments. This plea he can urge with the more earnestness, because by granting it God will glorify himself, and returning men will be gladdened. Faithful are the wounds of a friend; and so he owns God has been to him, even in those cases in which, by his judgments, he has crossed, at the time, his hopes and desires; for he feels that the design of every afflictive dealing has been to rebuke him for sin, and to animate him to holiness. On this account, his remembrance of the divine judgments gives juster confidence to his prayer for spiritual blessings. All his supplications for comfort and quickening grace have this as their end, that his heart may be sound in God's statutes. Can we appeal to the Searcher of hearts, in our prayers, that his law is our delight, and that we meditate on his precepts?

Ver. 81—88. There are many fluctuations in the condition of the child of God. However desirable to him that it were otherwise, his faith often fails, and he mourns as a consequence over his declension in the graces of the divine life. Some have vainly endeavoured to demonstrate that such a case cannot be; the psalmist may be regarded as telling us here that it often is so. In such case, where can the devout mind hope for comfort but from the divine word? What so properly ought to be the object of prayer as the increase of faith? The formidable nature of his spiritual adversaries is that which renders faith of the highest moment. Their snares, their persecutions, and their wicked devices, it is hard to withstand; but the shield of faith quenches all their fiery darts. If we never feel spiritual anxiety, we have reason to fear we are still without hope. If we have no enemies, we can have no faith.

Ver. 89—96. It is a pleasant, and, if rightly conducted, it is a profitable thing, to study the operations of nature, and to examine into the laws by which the whole creation is governed and preserved in order and beauty; but to the believing heart such exercises are doubly gratifying, for in the harmony of all the parts of the universe, and in the steadfast operation of nature's laws, he sees the working of his heavenly Father, and gathers fresh confidence of faith in the unalterable promises of the written word. It is by the ordinance of God that the heavens are made continually to declare his glory. It is he that establishes the earth, and it abideth; so also it is that, by his word of promise and grace, he speaks peace to the soul that can find relief from no other quarter. The precepts of the gospel give quickening to the soul that is ready to die; and he that has been made to know that God is the source of his comfort, looks to him for the completion of that which he has begun. By divine teaching we learn the breadth of the law, and it is only by grace that we can make it our delight.

PRAYER.

O God, our Creator, who hast made us fearfully and wonderfully, and whose inspiration did at the first give us understanding, we have much cause to bless thee that thou art still permitting us to worship at thy footstool. We confess that by sinning against thee we have unmade ourselves, and reduced our souls to shame, perplexity, and sorrow. Instead of being perplexed at thy judgments, we may well wonder that thou hast not altogether disowned thine own dishonoured handiwork, by driving us for ever from thy presence. Yet thou hast spoken in thy word of thy purpose of mercy. Thou art making provision for again rearing thy temple in the hearts of men, and restoring thine image to those souls which are darkened and defaced by transgression. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again to the lively hope. Blessed be he that came to save us. Blessed be the Spirit who vouchsafes to accomplish this good work in our hearts. O pardon our sins for thy mercies' sake, even through the shed blood of Jesus Christ our Lord. Let thy merciful kindness be for our comfort. Thou knowest how ready we are to be fascinated by the things of this earth, to the neglect of our souls, and how we often sink into self-righteousness, while we profess to make salvation our chief concern. O Lord, do thou then by thy Spirit fix our hearts on the things that belong to our peace. Grant that we may never be moved away from the hope that is in Christ, nor despair of thy mercy. Do thou who, at the first, didst command the light to shine out of darkness, shine into our hearts again, to give us the knowledge of thy glory. Restore to us thine image which we have lost; grant us understanding that we may learn thy commandments; and renew us in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, after the likeness of him who created us. We are surrounded by enemies, we are beset by dangers, and our hearts are weak and treacherous. O do thou uphold and strengthen us, that we may never make shipwreck of our profession, but that by our steadfastness we may gladden the hearts of those that fear thee. Blessed be thy name for the privileges of another sabbath; and grant that a blessing may follow all the religious services, whether public or private, in which we have this day engaged. Pity those who dwell in the lands of blood and cruelty, who have no sabbaths, and who are in darkness because they have not received thy word. Have mercy on those who are misimproving their privileges, and who hate the light. Let the cry of the afflicted, and the sighing of the prisoner, come up before thee; and prepare us also for the days of darkness and sorrow. Hear us in these our requests for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXXVII.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL 11. III.

REMARKS.

'Son of man,' seems to be a title given to Ezekiel in consequence of his being invested with the prophetic office. Christ is called 'the Son of man,' because he is that person of the Godhead who assumed the human nature in order that he might execute the offices of his mediatorship. Because Ezekiel was a man, he could sympathize with those among whom he ministered; but how much more He who is touched with a feeling of all our infirmities!

Ver. 1. God manifests his grace toward sinful men by addressing to them invitations of mercy, and solemn warnings and remonstrances, even after they have misimproved many privileges. This was strikingly manifest in the history of ancient Israel. By a succession of prophets he continued to deal with them even after they had proved themselves 'impudent and stiff-necked children, and a rebellious house.' So it is that the long-suffering patience of heaven waits on ungodly men. If sinners perish, it is because they will not hear.

Ver. 2. Fidelity to his master, freedom from the spirit of the world, and tenderness for immortal souls, are essential qualifications in him who would be a faithful minister. If a man is not prepared sometimes to encounter stern looks and hard words, and even obloquy and persecution, how can he prove a workman that needeth not to be ashamed? God's messengers are called, at all hazards, to the fearless discharge of their duty, and woe to him who falters!

Ver. 3. The substance of the doctrine that the ministers of salvation are called to unfold has been, in all ages, substantially the same. If they must speak words of 'lamentation, and mourning, and woe,' that is because men will not listen to the tidings of peace which they deliver. God addresses warning to sinners because they are slow to receive his promises.

CHAP. III. 1. It can be of little moment to inquire whether the command to Ezekiel to eat the roll of his prophecies was to be literally obeyed; but even on the supposition that it was so, it never can be considered as an example to be followed to the letter. The ancient prophets were called to perform many symbolical acts; and when we notice that 'eating' in scripture is a term used to denote spiritual participation, we must conceive the lesson here taught to be, that he who teaches others ought to know and feel the truths which he proclaims.

Ver. 2. He who has a relish for God's word, regarding it 'as honey for sweetness,' must feel it no hard office to make it known to others. A believing heart disposes such a one to encounter many difficulties. But he has this especially for his encouragement, that God is with him to strengthen him, and that in no case is he called to wage war on his own charge. Even when he goes, in bitterness weeping, while he bears the precious seed, he is made to feel, amidst the heat of his spirit, that 'the hand of the Lord is strong upon him.'

Ver. 3. But amidst all their encouragements, the ministers of Christ, and the same thing may be said of every Christian, are called to consider how responsible is their situation. They are watchmen; they watch for souls. If they are unfaithful, if they prophesy smooth things in every case, and permit the wicked to sin unwarned, fearful is the forfeit that will be exacted of them. The blood of souls is on their skirts. On the other hand, how abundant is the reward to the faithful watchman! He has delivered his soul. If sinners have failed to profit by his counsels, their blood is on their own heads; but if they have listened to his words, he has the commendation due to one who has saved a soul from death. But every Christian should consider himself as a watchman. He has received the light of divine truth that he may impart it to others, and he is guilty if he hides his lamp under a bushel. Parents, and teachers, and men of influence, ought particularly to consider this.

Ver. 4. When God at one time ordained the prophet to silence, and at another time to speak, this was designed for a warning to the Israelites, that the day of grace would soon pass away, and that it was now or never with them. So it is that God removes his candlestick from men when they do not repent.

PRAYER.

O God, most holy and righteous, we acknowledge that we have rebelled against thee. We have sinned with our fathers, and have done wickedly, and have been froward and stiff-necked children. From our childhood we have been taught thy word, we have been permitted to wait on thee in thine ordinances, and we have enjoyed many quiet sabbaths. Thou hast addressed us by the ministers of salvation. Our dwellings have been changed, yet thou hast still continued to afford us the light of sacred truth; and we have had line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. Yet, after all these warnings and instructions, we have been unprofitable and unfruitful. Surely it is because thou art long-suffering that thou hast not utterly cast us off, and that thou art still warning us by thy providence, and by thy word, to flee from the wrath to come. O grant, merciful Father, that none of us may be guilty of neglecting the great salvation, or of stifling our own convictions, that thou shouldest, in just displeasure, give us over to a reprobate mind, and a seared conscience. May we know by thy grace what it is to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of man, daily to participate in his blessings, and to be fed out of his fullness, that we may enjoy the full benefits flowing from reconciliation with thee, and may bring forth, under a constraining sense of thy love, the fruits of righteousness to thy praise. And when we remember how unprofitable and unfruitful we have been during our past lives, may we be filled with ingenuous sorrow, and earnest desire, henceforward to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. We bless thee for the ordinances of grace regularly dispensed among us, and that thou hast made provision, by the ministry of reconciliation, for the warning of sinners, and the edification of thine own people. May the ministers of Christ feel and know the importance and preciousness of the truths which they are called to proclaim to others, that they may speak as becomes dying men to dying men, and with a heartfelt tenderness for the precious souls of their fellow-sinners. Give them grace to be faithful in the execution of the sacred trust committed to them, that they may be ever animated by zeal for the honour of their great Master, and for the extension of his kingdom. Thou knowest the temptations they may often feel to yield to a worldly spirit, or to temporise amidst the reproach and obloquy of wicked men. Give them, then, strength to live above the world while they are in it, and to give good proof that reverence for thine authority has served to banish every other fear. While they feed others, may they themselves be fed abundantly, that they may be the better prepared to endure hardships, and may prove in all things faithful watchmen. And do thou keep us all mindful, that for the use we make of our privileges we must give an account to thee at the last day; and that if the ministers of the gospel have been faithful, our blood must rest on our own heads if we die in our sins. O grant that many who have been living at a distance from thee may now take warning, and flee from the wrath to come. Let not the wickedness and unbelief that still prevail in our land provoke thee to turn away from us as a nation in holy displeasure. Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish thou the way of the just, for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LII.

SCRIPTURE—2 TIMOTHY III.

REMARKS.

In the first six verses of this chapter St Paul forewarns Timothy of certain persons who, professing the Christian religion, and undertaking to teach others, should nevertheless be alike corrupt in character and false in doctrine. It was important for Timothy to be aware that such persons were about to appear, that, on the one hand, he might be on his guard against those 'evil communications' which 'corrupt good manners,' and that, on the other, he might labour, as a minister of Christ, to counteract the evil influence of these inconsistent and wicked men. Alas! that human nature should attain to such a pitch of wickedness as is here described. Alas! that the vices here enumerated, obviously and fearfully opposed alike to the spirit of the Christian gospel, and to the precepts of the Christian law, should ever be practised by any who 'name the name of Christ.' But is every one of us entirely free from each and all of them? Is there no selfishness among us? no covetousness? no vain-glorious boasting? no pride? no blasphemy? no undutifulness to parents? no ingratitude to benefactors? no cold-heartedness towards fellow-creatures? no faithlessness to promises? no false accusation? no sensual indulgence? no contempt for pious persons or for sacred things? no treachery in the management of business? no rash or headstrong mode of acting? no arrogance or vanity? no preference of earthly pleasures to the all-sufficient God? no hypocrisy? no glaring inconsistency between religious profession and moral character? If by divine grace, we have been led to 'crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts,' and to 'adorn the doctrine of Jesus Christ;' let us give God the glory. And O, if any of us is still the victim of natural corruption, let him see, in the awful picture which St Paul here holds up before the eye of Timothy, the degradation, the vileness, the 'folly,' ver. 9. and the fatal tendency of corrupt principles and habits. Nor let any one say that, although he is still unconverted, he has not yet attained such a height of wickedness as is here described, and therefore need not take the lesson to himself. Sin is progressive, and that very height of wickedness, or a higher still, the unconverted sinner, who is now comparatively regular and decent, will perhaps have reached before many years have passed. How may a check be raised? Where may an antidote be found? Let him yield now to the regenerating grace of God.

In the remainder of the chapter, St Paul, in contrast with the representation he has just given, holds up his own doctrine and practice, and the written word of God, as guides and models for his friend. He suggests that Timothy, as his companion in the ministry of the gospel, had attained an intimate acquaintance with his 'doctrine' and 'manner of life,' ver. 10, 11. and, by early instruction in holy Scripture, had learned such principles of divine truth, as were calculated to prepare him for private and public duty, ver. 15—17. This twofold view the apostle turns to practical account, addressing to Timothy the corresponding admonition, 'Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of.' Timothy was officially a 'man of God,' and it is not improbable that, in applying to him that appellation, ver. 17. the apostle refers to the office of the ministry. But not only is this precept applicable to private Christians, inasmuch as they are elsewhere enjoined by the same apostle to be 'stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord,' but the great principles here propounded respecting St Paul's 'doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, persecutions, afflictions, and deliverance,' and respecting Scripture as 'given by inspiration of God, and profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness,' have obviously no exclusive bearing on Christian ministers. Of St Paul's character and conduct, let us seriously and prayerfully read the record which the New Testament contains, and let each of us be able, like him, to say, 'The life that I live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God.' In reading Scripture, let us realize the truth that it 'is given by God's inspiration.' What it declares, let us confidently believe; what it commands, let us cordially perform. Even the Old Testament, containing as it does such a treasury of practical and precious truth, is well fitted by God's blessing, to promote the spiritual improvement of the soul, and recording as it does so many typical and prophetic representations of Christ, was calculated, even before his advent, but still more thereafter, by means of the illustration which his ministry and that of his apostles cast on the meaning of the sacred page, to lead to the 'faith which is in Christ Jesus,' ver. 15. Nevertheless, let us be truly thankful that the New Testament has been added to the Old, and 'continue in the things' of which it assures us. O that, by the blessing of that Spirit who edited Scripture for the instruction and consolation of the human soul, we may indeed be 'wise unto salvation.'

PRAYER.

Glorious Lord God, manifest thy greatness to our souls, that we may worship reverently before thee, and convince us of our own unworthiness, that we may rightly estimate thy kindness and condescension in permitting and inviting us to ask blessings at thy hand. Great, O Lord, is thy mercy towards us, and we are now experiencing thy goodness in having another opportunity to pray. May we experience thy goodness also in receiving an answer to our prayers. O give us what we truly need. May we possess a competent portion of this world's substance, such a portion as thou knowest to be reasonable and right. But O, convince us that we need provision for the immortal soul, and dispose us diligently and perseveringly to use the means by which it is to be obtained. May we daily read that word of thine which is profitable for doctrine and reproof, for correction and instruction in righteousness. May we devoutly meditate on the sacred truths which it contains. Sabbath by Sabbath may we enter the house of prayer, and may the word preached be mixed with faith in us who hear it. By earnest supplication, may we ask thy blessing on our souls. May we habitually wait at wisdom's gates, and watch at the posts of her doors. And may we receive instruction not only from the ordinances of thy worship and the lessons of thy word, but also from the events that befall us in the world. May the blessings we possess stir us up to heart-felt gratitude, and may thy bereaving and other afflictive dispensations towards us wean our minds from the creature, and direct them in earnest aspiration and filial confidence towards thee. O give us thy Holy Spirit. May he instruct us in our ignorance, and guide us in our folly. May he sanctify our souls, and shed abroad celestial consolation on our hearts. Be thou thyself our reconciled Father, and in Christ thy Son may we find a friend that loveth at all times, a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. Watch over us for good and not for evil, and take us in thine own time to the inheritance. Whether we live or die, may we be the Lord's, and may each one of us have cause to say, I know in whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against that day. Defend us this night. Spare us, if such be thy holy will, till another day, and grant, that so long as thou continuest our lives, we may devote them to thy service. Promote thine own cause. Suppress ignorance, irreligion, and vice. Stay wicked men in their wild career. Make manifest to all men the folly as well as criminality of unbelief and crime. Send holy Scripture forth throughout the world, and accompany it by the influence of that Spirit by whom it was inspired. From childhood may immortal creatures be taught the doctrines of thy gospel, and the precepts of thy law, and by the holy Scriptures may they be wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Father of mercies, answer these our unworthy petitions for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXXXIX. 30.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL VII.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains a prediction of the dreadful judgments by which the sins of Israel were to be punished. God was shortly to pour out his anger upon them, judge them according to their ways, and recompense them for all their abominations, ver. 8. None of them were to remain, neither was there to be any wailing for them, ver. 11. The sword was to devour without, and the famine within, ver. 15. All hands were to be feeble, and all knees weak as water, ver. 17. The law was to perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancient, ver. 26. King and people, wise and foolish, young and old, were equally to be overwhelmed by a great national ruin, because the land was full of bloody crimes, and the city of violence, and because the Most High determined to convince them that there was a God who judgeth in the earth.

The principles of the divine government embodied in this prediction are of perpetual and universal application. For example, nations, as such, are dealt with by God in judgment and mercy, and therefore, in that capacity, ought to acknowledge and serve him. All these Jews were not equally wicked; but as a 'sinful nation,' all were punished. And whilst sun and moon endure, God shall punish not only the individuals and the families, but the nations that call not on his name. When we think of this, and also that our own nation is so deeply criminal in the sight of God, not only because of our national sins and contempt for God's authority, but because we spread out before the eye of omniscience such an awful scene of sabbath-breaking, drunkenness, contempt for the promises and threatenings of the gospel, and all this in the face of so many advantages of which others are deprived, we may well say, 'It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, and because his compassions fail not.' 'O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years. In wrath remember mercy.'

Not only so, this chapter proclaims aloud the truth, that even in this life 'there is no peace to the wicked.' Indeed, all the temporal evil to which we are exposed is the direct result of sin. Why do we live in a world of woe instead of in a paradise, and see around us so many ravages of disease, war, pestilence, and death? Simply because 'sin hath entered the world.' Sin is the great and fruitful parent of every woe, and not one particle of the evil by which we are surrounded would have existed had not man sinned. This is the grand fact which should be impressed on every mind. But besides this, even as in this chapter, there are special punishments which accompany and follow the commission of special sins; and whilst all are involved in the general doom of Adam, each sinner, and each separate nation, is specially made to feel that it is an evil and a bitter thing to depart from the living God. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth; and 'his wrath hath been revealed from heaven, 'in every past age,' against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men.' He puts into the hand of the drunkard a cup of trembling, destroys the gains of the thief, discovers the hiding-place and guilt of the murderer, makes the tongue of the swearer to cleave to the roof of his mouth. He drowned the old world, poured fire and brimstone on Sodom, drowned Pharaoh in the Red sea, hung up Absalom and Judas in the sight of the sun, made Herod to be eaten up of worms, scattered like vagabonds the whole Jewish nation, and will cast the mystic Babylon down like a great millstone thrown into the sea, never to rise any more at all. All for this, amongst other reasons, that his judgments against sin may appear, and that men may 'see and fear,' and know that 'there is a God that judgeth in the earth.'

'Be sure your sins shall find you out;' 'flee therefore to the blood of sprinkling,' and wash therein. Desire to be taught, by the Spirit of God, to 'hate every false and wicked way.' Know that it is the most exalted patriotism which, in any measure, saves your country from sin which is the destruction of any people, and the noblest brotherly kindness, which 'saves a soul from death, and covers a multitude of sins;' but 'the residue of the Spirit,' by which such results can be accomplished, is only with God.

PRAYER.

O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of face, as at this day, to our kings, to our princes, to our fathers, to all the people of the land, because we have sinned against thee. We are a seed of evil doers, and have sinned times and ways without number, from our youth until now. Our sins have been committed against the clearest light and the richest mercy, against the remonstrances of our own consciences, and in the face of our solemn vows. Thou hast written to us the great things of thy law, and given to us the exceeding great and precious promises of thy gospel; but we have undervalued thy mercies and thy judgments, and despised the riches of thy forbearance in Christ Jesus. Behold, O Lord, we are vile, and what shall we answer unto thee, O thou preserver of men? Our own hearts condemn us, and thou art greater than our hearts, and knowest all things. Justly mightest thou condemn us to reap the fruit of our own doings by removing our privileges from us, and pouring out thy wrath upon us as individuals, and as a people, even unto the uttermost. But thou art God and not man, therefore we are not consumed. There is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption that thou mayest be sought unto. Thou hast no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, but rather that he should turn to thee and live; and thou hast made thine own Son to be sin for us, though he knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. O Father of mercies, work in us now before thee all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power. Wash us all in the blood of sprinkling, which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel. Pardon our iniquities, for they are very many, and heal our souls, which have greatly sinned against thee. And O gracious God, do thou rescue us from the dominion of sin. May we hate it with a perfect hatred. May we shun those paths in which destroyers go. May the Spirit of all grace persuade and enable us not to live unto ourselves, but unto him who died for us and rose again. And we beseech thee grant that, having our hearts established in thy fear and love, and our goings in the ways of thy commandments, we may go on from strength to strength, unwearied, conquering and to conquer all our spiritual enemies. O Lord, fill the hearts of the rulers of our land with thy fear; and let all the ends of the earth see thy salvation. Bring the wickedness of the wicked to an end. Establish universally the way of the just. Be the friend of our friends. Forgive our enemies, and teach us to forgive them. Supply the wants of the poor; heal the diseases of the afflicted; save the souls of the dying; may we learn to die. Accept of our thanks for the kindness of last night. Thou hast permitted us to take quiet rest, and hast caused us to dwell in safety. May our souls, and all that is within us, be stirred up to magnify and bless thy name. Give us this day our daily bread. And may the Lord be our sun and shield, and bless our lying down and our rising up, from henceforth even for ever. Hear these our imperfect prayers, forgive our many sins, save us with an everlasting salvation; and unto thee, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, shall we ascribe glory, majesty, and dominion, world without end. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIV. 4.

SCRIPTURE—2 TIMOTHY IV.

REMARKS.

The epistle, of which this is the last chapter, seems to have been written immediately before the death of its inspired author. In this chapter, striking reference is made to that event, to which the apostle looked forward with exalted confidence. 'I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth,' that is, throughout an endless eternity, 'there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness.' What a wonderful illustration of the change which living Christianity works upon human nature, and human prospects! This is the very same man who went as a persecutor to Damascus, but see how changed! The soul filled with cruelty, is now filled with love; the persecutor is an apostle; the man without God and without hope, is the leader of Christ's people, about to die a martyr to his cause, and, in the prospect of that martyrdom, he triumphs in the highest strains of exaltation. 'This is the Lord's doing, and is marvellous in our eyes.' Let it teach us the absolute necessity of being born again, that 'over us the second death may have no power.' The power which converted a Saul is still omnipotent; the fountain in which he washed, is still open; the heaven of glory to which he has gone, has still room for the chief of sinners. 'Not for me only,' says the apostle, is the crown of righteousness 'laid up,' 'but unto all them also that love his appearing.' Let us flee to the stronghold as 'prisoners of hope;' even to-day, saith the Lord, will I render double to you.

A striking instance is recorded here of spiritual backsliding. 'Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world.' The scriptures often point out those temptations to abandon the cause of Christ, which arise from worldly considerations. Indeed, 'the world' is one of the three great enemies against which Christians are called to struggle as in a battle, and it appears that in the conflict Demas was overcome. This is all the more striking, when we find (Phil. ver. 24.) the same man saluting the churches under the character of a distinguished Christian, and in company with the inspired apostle. 'All are not Israel, that are of Israel.' 'Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.' And let us all pray, that our blessed Redeemer may intercede for us, that 'our faith fail not,' when 'Satan desires to have us, that he may sift us as wheat.' 'If ye keep the word of my patience, I will keep you,' says Christ, 'in the hour of temptation, which shall try all the men that dwell upon the earth.'

The minute directions which the apostle gives here, concerning his 'cloak,' 'parchments,' and the various salutations which he sent to his friends, even amidst such trying circumstances, ought to teach us to neglect no duty in this world, even in the immediate prospects of another. Those who upon pretence of attending to their spiritual interest, neglect the interests of time, bring discredit upon Christianity. 'Not slothful in business,' is not only in the same chapter, but in the same verse of the word of God, with 'fervent in spirit serving the Lord.' 'Attend to thy flock, look well to the state of thy herds.' 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways, and be wise,' are important scriptural precepts. Let us avoid all extremes, but especially let us 'seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto us.'

PRAYER.

We will extol thee, our God, O king. We will bless thy name, for ever and ever. Every day will we bless thee, and praise thy name, for ever and ever. Thou didst at first create us out of nothing, and thy merciful visitation upholds our souls in life, our bodies in health; keeps our eyes from tears, our feet from falling; makes the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us. How precious have been thy thoughts towards us, and how great has been the sum of them; we cannot reckon them up in order before thee; if we would attempt to speak of them, they are more than can be numbered. O that our hearts were filled with thy love, and our mouths were filled with thy praise, and that as every day brings fresh proofs of thy loving kindness, every day may see us devote ourselves anew to thy love and service. Eternal thanks be to thee, O God of Abraham; because when we had rebelled against thee, and exposed ourselves to thy just and eternal indignation, thy thoughts towards us were thoughts of love, and thou didst lay help upon one mighty to save. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up for them an horn of salvation in the house of his servant David. And blessed be he who came in the name of the Lord to save us, who though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. O let not the manifestation of thy mercy be in vain with regard to any of us. If yet in vain, as thou hast been graciously pleased to lay the chastisement of our peace on Christ, grant that by his stripes we may all be healed. Adopt us into thy family. Make us heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Search us; O God, and try us, and see what wicked ways are in us, and lead us in thy way everlasting. May we live as children of the promise, having our treasure in heaven, and our hearts also there, and following those things which are pure, and honest, and lovely, and of good report. And may the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, make us perfect to do his will, working in us that which is well pleasing in his sight. May we not deceive ourselves with a name to live, whilst we are dead. We earnestly pray for all mankind. Have respect unto thy covenant, for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Revive thy work in our own land in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known; in deserved wrath remember mercy. Bless our friends with all temporal blessings, but especially let their souls prosper before thee. May they all be thine in that day when thou makest up thy jewels. Be very gracious to the afflicted. As their day is, so may their strength be. Jesus, the son of David, have mercy on them; send them strength out of Zion, and if they are appointed unto death, may they be prepared for heaven, and at length fall asleep in Jesus. Teach us so to number our days as to apply our hearts unto wisdom. Watch over us for good this day. May all our wants be supplied; and may we be taught to praise thy goodness in the land of the living. Uphold our goings in the ways of thy testimonies, that our feet may not slide, and command thy blessing upon us, even life that shall never end, and righteousness from the God of our salvation, for all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII. 27.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XI.

REMARKS.

The rulers of Israel, in too many periods of her eventful history, were the leaders in wickedness. It was so in the present instance. Nor can there be a greater curse to a nation than ungodly rulers, not only as bringing directly down upon the people the judgments of God, but as fostering and promoting sin amongst their subjects. 'When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when the wicked rule, the land mourneth.' When the wicked are exalted, 'vile men walk on every side.'

God sees and marks the conduct of all men in their public, as well as private capacity. Some rulers foolishly imagine, that they are responsible to none; some that they are only responsible to their subjects. God interposes, and by his judgments makes them feel that he rules 'amongst the kingdoms of men;'

and will render to every man according to his works. And, although rulers and people may wrap themselves up in a fatal security, 'because sentence against their evil works is not speedily executed,' although they may despise the voice of God's prophets, as the Jews did in this instance; the messengers of God must continue to cry out against iniquity, and point to the ark of safety; and if men will not hear, leaving the issue to prove that there is indeed 'a God that judgeth in the earth.'

This chapter not only contains threatenings against wickedness, but comfort to the people of God. When driven into distant lands, God promises to be 'a little sanctuary unto them;' (ver. 16.) to give a new heart and a right spirit to those whom he hath chosen unto salvation, and to restore his people to their own land. The spiritual restoration is to precede the temporal. For since all temporal evil results from spiritual, by removing the cause, the effect also will be removed. Hence, the grand object of the gospel is to 'create men anew in Christ Jesus.' When that is accomplished, there shall be a new heaven and a new earth.' The world was once a paradise, but it was when sin was unknown. Heaven is a paradise still, but it is because there is no sin there. The world will become a paradise again; but it shall be when 'the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth, as the waters cover the sea.' And in conformity with the same great principle, the captivity of Sion will be brought back 'like the streams of the south' when God shall take away the hard and stony heart from Israel, and give his ancient people 'an heart of flesh.' Let us all pray for the dawn of that glorious day; for if the casting away of the Jews conferred unspeakable blessings on the Gentiles, what shall their restoration be but 'life from the dead?' Above all, let us seek earnestly our own regeneration. 'Unless a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.' And 'in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free; for 'by him have we all access by one Spirit unto the Father.' 'Ask and ye shall receive, and your joy shall be full.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we adore thee as the high and holy One who inhabiteth eternity, and the praises thereof. Thou art seated on a throne high and lifted up; thy train filleth the heavenly temple. Ten thousand times ten thousand angels excelling in glory and strength, veil their faces with their wings, whilst they cry day and night, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts, the whole earth is full of thy glory. Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man, that thou visitest him? What are we, or what has our fathers' house been, that we are permitted to approach so great and holy a Lord God. Lo! the heavens are not clean in thy sight; thou chargedst thine angels with folly; how much more abominable is man, who drinketh iniquity like water. Adored be thy name, that by the death and ascension of Jesus, a new and living way is opened; whereby we may come with boldness to thy throne, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help us in every time of need. For thou hast made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Heavenly Father! we draw near unto thee at this time, to thank thee for thine unspeakable gift, Christ Jesus; and for all the glorious hopes which through him we are permitted to cherish. We rejoice that he died for the offences of his people, and rose again for their justification; and that through him pardon, and peace, and eternal life are freely offered, even to the chief of sinners. O may it be given to each of us, in the behalf of Christ, to believe on his name; and believing on him, may we be united to him, as branches of the true vine, and receive pardon, peace, sanctification, and every blessing. Shine upon us with the light of thy countenance; and give us peace, even that peace which passeth all understanding, to keep our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ. May we put off the old man with his deeds, and put on the Lord Jesus, and walk in him, being rooted and grounded in love. Keep us from every evil, and especially from sin. Cleanse us from secret faults. Keep us back from all presumptuous sins, that we may be upright, and free from the great transgression. May we serve thee in holiness and righteousness all our days, that in the ages to come, even through the ages of eternity, we may show forth the riches of thy grace, and thy kindness towards us, through Christ Jesus. Save thy people every where, and bless thine inheritance; feed them also, and lift them up forever. And may those that love the Lord Jesus, be more of one heart and of one mind; may there be no divisions among them. Satisfy our friends early with thy loving-kindness, and uphold them with the right hand of thy righteousness. May they all at last return, and come to Sion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. Be near to those that mourn in every time of trouble; and may affliction work the peaceable fruits of righteousness in them that are exercised thereby. Teach the living and the strong to remember, that although they live many days, and see good in them all, the days of darkness are coming, and that these days may be many. Be with us during this day, and all our days, and never leave us, nor forsake us, but lead us in the paths of righteousness, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII. 4.

SCRIPTURE—TITUS I.

REMARKS.

The same fervour of zeal by which the apostle Paul was distinguished before his conversion; although proceeding now from a new principle, and directed to an entirely different end; characterized his labours in the work of the Lord. As Jerusalem was too narrow a field for his persecuting spirit; so as an inspired apostle, he felt as if 'the care of all the churches' was committed to him. And in this exhibition of a spirit of boundless Christian love, he left us a noble example. Let us in this be a follower of him, as he was of Christ.

This chapter contains, first, directions in regard to the kind of ministers to be ordained at Crete. These directions were intended to guide the office-bearers of the church in every age. They point to two distinct kinds of qualifications, neither of which will do without the other. The first are moral qualities; 'a bishop,' or Christian minister—for the word merely signifies, an overseer, and is applicable to all ordained Christian ministers—'must be blameless;' in other words, a man under the influence of the truth of which he is appointed an ambassador; and the practical effect of which is to make the man of God 'perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work.' The people must not be able to turn round and say, 'physician heal thyself,' for there is no preaching so powerful for good, or evil, as the preaching of example. But lest any should suppose, that mere personal Christianity is sufficient to constitute an efficient herald of the gospel, that the same qualities which constitute a Christian are sufficient for a Christian minister, the apostle points to intellectual qualifications also, as equally essential. A bishop must be 'able by sound doctrine, both to exhort, and to convince gainsayers.' And all this, not merely in his own opinion, but in the opinion of competent judges, as in the case before us. It is on these scriptural grounds that our Church proceeds in preventing novices from intruding themselves into the ministry, and in insisting upon a thorough examination of the character and talents of such as stand at her altars. Let the people also learn to respect this divinely appointed ordinance of the Christian ministry, and avoid the crude mistakes of those that are puffed up with pride.

This chapter also contains a searching and plain description of the people of Crete, who seem to have been notorious for their wickedness. In dealing with them, the apostle admonishes Titus to use all plainness of speech. The hurt of the daughter of Sion must not be 'healed slightly,' by men who 'cry peace, peace, when there is no peace.' The spiritual physician must lay open the disease with a bold and skillful hand, as the first step towards applying a remedy. And those who take offence at this, and wish the prophets to 'prophesy smooth things,' only manifest in what a dangerous state they are, and how much they need to be aroused. Never did any 'preacher of righteousness' denounce the iniquities of men in stronger or plainer terms, than our blessed

Lord. And every minister who sees heaven and hell as the only alternative of man's conduct, in regard to the offered mercy, 'will lift up his voice like a trumpet,' and warn men to 'flee from the wrath to come.' Let us learn to esteem the bold and faithful preaching of the gospel. Better to be awakened now, than when it is too late. And then is the word of God effectual when it is 'quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword.' 'Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, who faintest not, neither art weary; there is no searching of thine understanding. By thy word were the heavens made, and all the hosts of them by the breathing of thy mouth. Thou didst speak, and it was done; thou didst command, and all things stood fast. And this day they stand as thou didst ordain them, for they are all thy creatures. All thy works praise thee, and thy saints bless thee. Worthy art thou to receive glory, and dominion, and power; for thou hast created all things; and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. But in the glorious work of redemption, thou hast especially abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence. Mercy and truth have met together, righteousness and peace have embraced each other. All we like sheep had gone astray, we had turned every one to his own way, but thou hast laid upon Christ the iniquities of us all. O the height and the depth, the breadth and the length, of the love of God, in Christ Jesus, it passeth knowledge. Do thou who didst at first command the light to shine out of darkness, shine into our hearts, giving us the light of the knowledge of thy glory in the face of Jesus Christ, whom not having seen, do thou enable us greatly to love, and in whom though now we see him not, yet believing, may we rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory. And beholding as in a glass, the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, may we be changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. We are insufficient for any good word or work, for it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. But do thou sprinkle us with clean water, and we shall be clean; work in us both to will and to do of thy good pleasure; and make us meet to become partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Save our souls with an everlasting salvation. Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion; build up the walls of Jerusalem. Let God arise, and let his enemies be scattered, and let those that hate him flee before him. Let thy way be made known in the earth, and thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee, O Lord; let all the people praise thee. Comfort and bless our friends. Keep them as the apple of thine eye. Be their portion in the land of the living, their refuge in the time of trouble, their shield and exceeding great reward. Keep us in safety during this night, O thou Shepherd of Israel, who slumberest not, nor sleepest, and to whom the darkness and the light are both alike alway. And all the days and nights of our appointed time may we wait until our change comes; and may an abundant entrance be administered to each of us into thy heavenly kingdom and glory, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLII. 4.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XVI.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

In this chapter there are set before us the riches of God's mercy to Israel, and the rebellion of Israel against God; the low state from which Israel sprung; the acts of kindness which God performed; the exaltation to which Israel was raised; the gross idolatry to which he turned; the fearful judgments threatened; the deep humiliation and repentance to which he was brought.

1. The state in which God finds Israel. 'Thy nativity is of Canaan, thy father an Amorite, thy mother an Hittite,' ver. 3. These tribes were idolaters, enemies to God, and therefore under his curse. The origin of Israel was the same. This is our origin; we sprung from a corrupt state. 'We were shapen in sin, and brought forth in iniquity.' We are corrupted, and exhibit the spirit and temper of Canaanites. 'Thou wast cast out in the open field,' ver. 5. Man is cast out from the presence of God, like a child cast out before any attentions are shown to it. Adam and all his seed are out cast; and driven from paradise and the presence of God, to the wilderness of a state of rejection and wretchedness. 'Polluted in their own blood,' ver. 6. An infant polluted in its own blood is an affecting sight. Unrenewed sinners are polluted in their own blood; guilty, and already many wounds inflicted, and blood shed. Believers have been in this state, and have felt it. 'Naked,' ver. 7, 8. How complete the wretchedness of sinners! In the open field, polluted in their own blood, and naked. Without ornament, and without defence. 'No eye pitied them.' When God pronounces a curse, none can impart a blessing. As sinners, we can find no effectual pity in creation.

2. The riches of God's mercy in commanding deliverance. 'I passed by thee, and saw thee,' ver. 6. Our salvation is all of sovereignty. The omniscient and compassionate eye of Jehovah passed by the outcast sinner, and made him an object of love.

'Thy time was the time of love,' ver. 8. All the former time was lost; this alone is 'thy time.' It is the 'time of love,' in the dealings of God, and in the experience of the soul. Others have their time of love; but the time of the pouring out of God's love on the soul is pre-eminently 'the time of love,' 'I said unto thee, Live,' ver. 6. It is the mandate of Jehovah, of him who has life in himself, and who can give life to the dead. 'I spread my skirt over thee,' ver. 8. God spread his skirt over the first-born of Israel, by the sprinkling of blood on the door-posts, when the first-born of Egypt were slain. He spread his cloud over Israel in their wanderings in the wilderness. God spreads the skirt of his power, righteousness, and love, over his people; and they have confidence, comfort, and safety. 'Fear not, Abraham, I am thy shield.' 'A man shall be a hiding-place from the storm.' 'I washed thee with water, and anointed thee with oil,' ver. 9. The infant in its blood is washed with water to cleanse it; and anointed with oil to heal and comfort it. The blessed Spirit of our God imparts 'the washing of regeneration,' forms his graces in the soul, and anoints the soul as with fresh oil. 'I sware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee,' ver. 8. 'My beloved is mine, and I am his.'

3. The unworthy conduct of Israel, ver. 15—59. Yet God did not utterly forsake Israel, but did cause him to remember, and be confounded, and not open his mouth any more, because of his shame. May there be poured out on us, and on all the churches, a spirit of true repentance, ver. 60—63.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, we, and the whole race to which we belong, have been idolaters. It is thine unalienable prerogative to claim and to receive the homage of worship; and thou wilt not give this glory to another. Yet we have given this glory to our idols; we have been guilty of fearful idolatry, in giving to the creature our trust, our supreme love, our worship, and our service, and we have sought from the creature our happiness. Thou hast justly been offended with us, and hast pronounced on us a fearful curse. We were, in the persons of our first parents, cast out from thy presence to the wilderness of a state of rejection and misery. We have lost thy favour, communion with thee, and all the blessings flowing from thy gracious person; and we have merited the fate of the Canaanites, who were devoted to the curse which their iniquities deserved. As sinners, we are polluted in our blood, guilty, and already experiencing the infliction of many wounds. We are destitute of righteousness, naked, defenceless, and exposed to shame and wretchedness; and there is no eye to pity, nor hand to help. O convince us thoroughly of our sinful and miserable condition; and lead us to cry to thee, God, be merciful to us sinners. Adored be thy name, thou didst pass by us in thy sovereign love and mercy, and thou saidst, Live; yea, when we were in our blood, thou saidst, Live. Thou didst form and reveal the purpose of giving up thine only begotten, thy beloved Son to death. Thou didst lay on him the iniquity of us all, and hast redeemed us from the curse, through his being made a curse for us; and we adore thee he has said, Because I live, ye shall live also. Grant us to attain to the life of pardon and justification, to the life of grace in our souls, that we may come eventually to the enjoyment of the life of glory in heaven. We are exposed to many injuries and hardships, O do thou spread thy covering wings over us. Fulfil thy promise, I will spread my skirt over thee; say unto us, Fear not, I am thy shield, and thine exceeding great reward. Wash us with the washing of regeneration, and anoint us as with fresh oil. Pour down thy Spirit on our souls, as the Spirit of truth and of holiness, of wisdom and of might, of supplication, adoption, and consolation, that we may have in us a savour of Christ, and be thoroughly furnished to every good word and work. May our feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; that we may be prepared for the hardships of the warfare, and of the enemy. We give ourselves up to thee, to serve thee, and to be sanctified and saved by thee; and we take thee to be our God, Redeemer, and Portion. Make with us an everlasting covenant, swear unto us, and make us thine; and enable us to make with thee a covenant by sacrifice, even the sacrifice offered on Calvary. Keep us from being unfaithful in thy covenant; let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, the Son of man whom thou hast made strong for thyself, so henceforth we will not go back from thee. Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts, cause thy fear to shine, and we shall be saved. Let thy way be known on the earth, and thy saving health to all people. Make known thy salvation to the heathen; let the people praise thee, let all the people praise thee. Rend asunder the vail from the hearts of the seed of Abraham; and gather the dispersed of Israel, in their conversion to God, into one. Prosper the efforts which are made in their behalf, and let their restoration be like life from the dead to the Gentiles. Let thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Let the whole earth be filled with thy glory. Now unto the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be honour, glory, blessing, and praise, world without end. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIV. 3.

SCRIPTURE—TITUS II.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. The ministry. What a blessing to any people is a faithful gospel ministry, in its instruction, its example, and in its authority!

Direction. The minister of Christ must speak 'the things which become sound doctrine,' that the people may be sound in faith and in manners, ver. 1. The doctrine must be with 'uncorruptness,' ver. 7; it admits of no substitute or admixture. The manner, with 'gravity and sincerity,' ver. 7. Levity or hypocrisy is most unbefitting the messenger of God to man, who is called to treat with them concerning life and death.

Example, ver. 7. 'In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works.' The minister must be what he preaches; exhibit the doctrine in character, and teach by his life. Thus he will raise the esteem of his people, prepare them to receive his instruction, and draw them to his ministry.

Authority, ver. 15. 'Exhort and rebuke with all authority.' The minister of Christ possesses an authority deputed to him from his Master, which he himself should feel, and which he should cause his people to feel; an authority in doctrine and in discipline. The true servant of Christ drinks into the spirit of his Master, who 'taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes.' He will 'exhort and rebuke,' in love for the souls of men, and with hope in the presence and favour of Christ, that men may be impressed, and turned from sin to serve the living God.

2. The character required, and formed, by the gospel ministry in different ages and relations. 'Aged men,' ver. 2. ought to study gravity and sobriety, as becometh their years; to possess sound views of divine truth, a faith operative in its character, producing charity and patience. 'The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.' 'Aged women,' ver. 3. should have their behaviour in holiness, not in slander, or intemperance; but as their age entitles them, their wisdom should qualify them, to be 'teachers of good things.' To teach 'the young women,' ver. 4, 5. to acquire and exhibit such a temper and character, as that they shall be blessings to their husbands, their children, and their household, and as that they shall appear amiable, kind, and useful in all the relations and circumstances of life. 'Young men,' ver. 6. should guard against pride, and vanity, and excess of every kind, and be humble, and teachable, and moderate in all things. 'Seekest thou great things for thyself, seek them not.' 'Servants,' ver. 9. are to be exhorted to the faithful performance of their duty to their masters, in strict obedience in all things lawful, in a respectful regard to their wishes and comfort, in not interfering with the smallest portion of their property, and in constant and unvarying faithfulness to every trust.

3. The way in which men come to right character, ver. 11—15. 'The grace of God,' in its source, good will; its blessings, justification, adoption, and sanctification; its application by the influences of the Holy Ghost; its medium, the gospel of the grace of God. 'Brings salvation,' provides salvation for man, and prepares man for salvation. The grace of God 'hath appeared to all men,' in all classes and ages. It is suited to all, required by all; it hath appeared to all, that all may receive it, experience it, and be saved by it. Grace teaches men what to 'deny.' 'Ungodliness,' every thing in sentiment, affection, word and deed, contrary to the perfections, glory, word and worship of God. 'Worldly lust;' pride, impurity, covetousness, lusts which lead to injustice, lying, dealing cruelly and unfaithfully with our fellow-men. Grace teaches how to live. 'Soberly,' with regard to our own personal deportment. 'Righteously,' with regard to our relation to others. 'Godly,' with regard to our relation to God. The grace of God teaches man what to 'look for.' 'The glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour.' Our Saviour is the great God; what confidence, reverence, and worship, should this inspire! His coming the second time, without sin, unto salvation, shall be attended with glory ineffable. The doctrine inspires 'a blessed hope,' blessed in its future prospects, and present exercise.

PRAYER.

We approach thy majestic throne, O thou who dwellest in the heavens, who art the creator and the preserver of all things, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the God of our salvation. Reveal thy glory in us, and let the apprehension of it produce its proper effects on our spirit, temper, and whole character. In the light of thy holiness may we see our deep depravity, and cry out, Woe is me, for I am undone, for I am a man of unclean lips, for I have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Let the glory of thy justice promptly impress our souls with a sense of guilt and danger, that we may, in saving awakenings of conscience, confess, against thee, thee only, have we sinned, and in thy sight done evil. O may the glory of thy majesty annihilate our pride, subdue our ambition, and cause us to lie in the dust before thee. Adored be thy name for the humiliation of the Son of God, his substitution, obedience, righteousness, triumphs, intercession, and salvation. Behold, O God, our shield, and look on the face of thine Anointed. Unite us personally to him who is the Lord our righteousness; and let his Spirit dwell in us, as a well of living water, springing up to eternal life. Form, and strengthen, and render active in us, all the graces of the Holy Ghost. May faith be in us, directed to its proper object; may we look to him whom we have pierced, and mourn, and be in bitterness for our sin. May faith be in us, working by love, purifying the heart, and overcoming the world.

Create in us a clean heart, renew in us a right spirit; inspire us with a spirit of wisdom, of meekness, of holiness, and of zeal. Blessed be thy name for the dispensation of grace, in the ministry of reconciliation, under which thou hast placed us. Make thy servants the honoured instruments of turning many sinners from darkness to light, from death to life, from the bondage of Satan, to the liberty of the sons of God. Appoint faithful shepherds over the flock of Christ; ministers over thy people who will rightly divide the word of truth; watchmen in the towers of Zion, who will faithfully blow the trumpet, and warn the people as from thee. Clothe thy priests with righteousness and salvation; bless the provisions of Zion, and cause the saints to shout aloud for joy. Bless each one of us, in our respective ages and relations. May the youth remember their Creator; may they love thee, and thou wilt love them; may they seek thee early, and they shall find thee. May the aged not be found standing idle in the market place at the eleventh hour, but diligently working while it is day, faithfully bearing the burden and the heat of the day, that when the service is finished they may enter into the joys of their Lord. May the servants in serving their earthly master, serve Christ. Let great grace be vouchsafed to us all, that it may bring to each one of us salvation, and effectually teach us what to deny, what to practise, and what to hope for. May we indeed deny iniquity, live godly, and look for the blessed hope of Christ's second coming without sin unto salvation. Let the light of this salvation shine on them who sit in darkness; may the Lord God give them light, that they become true worshippers, and bind their sacrifices with cords to the horns of that altar which gives value and acceptance to any offering presented on it. Exceed all our supplications in the Beloved. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XVII.

REMARKS.

The prophet was directed to put forth a riddle, an enigma, a dark problem, which, when explained, strikes the mind with the truth which it contains. The riddle, or parable, is put into the mouth of the prophet, and he has only to propound it. The mind of God is thus delivered to Israel to engage the attention and impress the heart. The parable shows,

1. The position in which Israel stood.

'A great eagle—came—and took,' ver. 3. The king of Babylon, for his ambition and rapacity, is like the soaring eagle, a bird of prey. The eagle had 'great wings, was long-winged, and full of feathers,' (ver. 3.); the means of accomplishing its object. By means of these wings its movements towards its prey were rapid, and powerful, and terrific. The king of Babylon possessed vast dominions and many people, which made him a formidable enemy. The eagle came to Lebanon, and cropped off the top of the young twigs of the cedar, and carried it into a city of merchants, ver. 4. The king of Babylon came to Jerusalem, and carried away the king Jehoiachin and his princes, ver. 12. This he did of his ambition, and the Lord permitted him because of Israel's sin, 2 Kings xxiv. 15. The eagle also 'took of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field,' ver. 5, 6. The king of Babylon took Mattaniah the king's seed, called him Zedekiah, made him king, made a covenant with him, and confirmed it by the sanction of an oath, ver. 13. The kingdom of Israel was thus made tributary to the proud king of Babylon. 'Yet by keeping the covenant it might stand,' (ver. 14.); and it might have enjoyed many privileges and much happiness.

2. The conduct of Israel in these circumstances.

'Another great eagle,' ver. 7. He also was very formidable. The vine 'did bend her roots, and shot forth her branches toward him.' The king of Israel sent 'ambassadors to Egypt,' (ver. 15.); violated the treaty with the king of Babylon, and in doing so 'despised the oath,' ver. 18; 2 Kings xxiv. 20. He thus sinned against God. It was his oath which he despised, his covenant which he brake, ver. 19. The breach of a promise, or oath, by a nation or individuals, is sin against God. In turning to Egypt he forsook God, and trusted in worldly dependencies for help.

3. The consequent judgments on Israel.

'Shall it prosper?' ver. 9. If we know any thing of God, of his righteousness, of his conduct, of the fate of sinful men and nations, we must see that neither Israel, nor any other nation or individual guilty of such treachery, can prosper. The king of Babylon could pull up the roots of the vine 'without much people or great power,' ver. 9. Then the vine would wither in all its leaves and fruit. We, and all our prosperity, must wither if we are turning to the world, and violating the covenant of our God. 'Pharaoh shall not make for him in the war,' ver. 17. How weak is the instrument and unwilling, when God is not with him! How vain are all the schemes which are at variance with God, his righteousness, and glory! 'God will recompense his oath,' ver. 19, 20. It is an evil and a bitter thing to depart from God and his righteousness.

4. Yet great mercy to Israel.

What is formerly done in judgment is now done in mercy. 'I will also take of the highest branch of the cedar,' ver. 22. Greatness and abasement are wonderfully blended in the Messiah, the spiritual King of Israel. 'The highest branch, and a twig, a tender one,' ver. 22. This vine is planted 'in the mountain of the height of Israel'—the church of the living God. It puts forth boughs, and bears fruit, and believers sit under its shadow with great delight.

This is pre-eminently the work of God. 'I will also take,' &c. The Son given, the Child born, is the mighty God. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. 'Mercy shall be built, said I.'

5. Learn from the whole subject,

The sin and misery of idolatry; that God overrules the ambition of great kings for judgment; the wickedness of the disregard of promises, treaties, and oaths, in individuals or nations; the vanity of the expediency of worldly wisdom, turning to Egypt; the work of God, in planting Christ and his church, will prosper gloriously; 'the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified.'

PRAYER.

We come with the deepest self-abasement, and prostration of our souls, into thy presence, O our God. We have sinned against thee exceedingly, and done dishonour to thy holy name. All our sinfulness in conduct has proceeded from our hearts. How deceitful and desperately wicked are they! And there is more wickedness in our hearts than has ever appeared in action. Thou hast kept us back from much sin, into which our lusts, our pride, our selfishness, our covetousness, our enmity, and our unbelief, would have plunged us. Evils past numbering compass us about. Yet, blessed ever be thy holy name, we are encouraged to pray. God be merciful to us sinners. Pardon our iniquity, for it is very great. Create in us a clean heart, renew in us a right spirit. We flee to thee to cover us. Clothe us with the robe of righteousness, the garment of salvation. Reconcile us to thee through the death of thy Son; and enable us to say, in faith and love, Surely in the Lord have I righteousness and strength. O do thou form, and maintain, and increase in us all the graces of the Holy Ghost, all the parts of the Christian temper. Write thy law in our hearts, and put thy statutes into our inward parts, and then our obedience to thy law will be natural, certain, and constant. The character of our inner man being moulded and formed according to the principles of holiness, the conduct of our outer man shall be framed in truth and in righteousness. Leave us not to be, like Israel, unfaithful to our promises and our vows, and to violate the oath of thee our God. Let us not transgress thy covenant, or turn to Egypt for help. Adored be thy name, thou hast not permitted our fierce enemy to rule over us. Thou hast not afflicted us according to our sin. But delay of judgment is not pardon of sin; the suspension of the curse is not peace with God. We feel that there is in us an evil heart of unbelief, which departs from thee the living God, and we have been perfidious in thy holy covenant. O let not our sin work thy wrath against us. We cannot expect that thou wilt continue to cause the light of prosperity to shine upon us if we continue to transgress thine oath, and turn to Egypt, and forsake thee our God. Thou hast many means, ready and powerful, by which thou canst turn our prosperous state into mourning. In the day of thy east wind do thou stay thy rough wind. In the midst of deserved wrath, remember mercy. Behold, O God, our shield, and look on the face of thine Anointed. Behold us in Christ with a pleasant countenance. Uphold our goings, that our footsteps may not slip. Keep us as the apple of thine eye, and in the hollow of thine hand. Wilt not thou, who saved our souls from death, keep our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling, and enable us to walk before thee in the land of the living. Have mercy on the afflicted; know their souls in their adversity; make their bed in their sickness; and purify them in the furnace as gold seven times purified. Spare useful lives, and prepare the dying for entering into the world of spirits. Give Christ actually, according to the promise, to be the light to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the glory of thy people Israel. Upon them who sit in darkness let light arise. Let thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LVI. 4.

SCRIPTURE—TITUS III.

REMARKS.

The gospel, as it is a gracious, so it is a practical system. Through the gospel the law is written on the heart; and when a man thus becomes righteous in principle, he will naturally and necessarily be righteous in action. Ministers, in treating of the doctrines of the word of God, and the people in hearing it, therefore, ought to be careful that it fail not of its proper practical uses.

1. The conduct required by the word of God, ver. 1, 2. 'Put them in mind to be subject to principalities,' &c. The civil magistracy is the ordinance of God; it is an appointment of great importance; the discharge of its duties requires high principle and great faithfulness; and men owe to it extensive and constant obedience, Rom. xiii. 1—4; 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14. It is our duty not only to be submissive in all things not forbidden by the word of God, but to support the government, by giving a portion of our goods in the shape of taxes. It is our duty to contribute to the support of the government which affords us protection in such a variety of important respects. The Christians in Crete were required to be subject to heathen magistrates. 'Ready to every good work.' The state of society, the times in which we live, the church and the law of God, require the performance of many good works. The Christian should, from inward principle, ardent zeal, benevolence to man, be ready to perform good works. And there should be a comprehensiveness in his services—'Every good work;' 'Speak evil of no man.' Not only is the thing, which it would be a violation of truth to state, and an injury to one's name and usefulness, not to be spoken, but we ought not to propagate evil, even in truth, except when duty calls for it. 'No brawlers, but gentle.' Not quarrelsome, not litigious, not apt to give railing for railing, but cultivating a mild and gentle temper of mind; and by such conduct we will often gain our brother.

2. We are taught forbearance and hope in regard to unbelievers, from the former and present state of believers, ver. 3; the former state of Paul, Titus, and all believers. They were 'sometimes,' i.e. in their unconverted state, 'foolish.' Ignorant of the word of God, destitute of true wisdom, pursuing conduct naturally proceeding from such a state of heart. 'Disobedient.' The heart, being opposed to the life, will transgress the law of God. 'Deceived' by their own heart, and satan, they were 'serving divers lusts and passions,' and were willing slaves. Living in malice 'to all,' 'and envy' of the prosperous, they were 'hateful' in the view of God, 'and hating one another.' What a fearful character, what an awful view, of the world of unconverted men which lieth in the wicked one! It is, then, surely the duty of believers, who themselves were once in this state, to bear with men in an unrenowned state, to pity them, to pray for them, and to hope concerning them.

3. The provision of the God of mercy and love for accomplishing this blessed change, ver. 4—7. The arrangements of love, the admirable provisions of the new covenant, are made to 'appear' in Christ, and in the word, and become effectual when, by the grace of the Holy Ghost, they are made to appear to the soul. The awakened sinner then renounces human 'works of righteousness.' The source of this blessed change is mercy. 'According to his mercy,' &c., rich, free, mighty, immutable mercy, God saves the sinner. The manner—'By the washing of regeneration,' a spiritual birth, a new nature. As there is a change of heart, so there is a change of state, 'being justified by his grace.' The sinner is restored to the favour and to the image of God. The agent—'The Holy Ghost,' according to the constitution of the covenant of grace, applies the salvation. The channel—'Through Jesus Christ our Saviour,' the channel through which grace flows from God to man, and man approaches to God. The result—'Made heirs according to the hope of eternal life,' and 'saved.' What a prospect!

4. The great duty of applying these means incessantly, that the end may be accomplished, ver. 8. The same means, accompanied by the same agency, will produce the same results. The faithful word, applied by the Holy Ghost, brought the early Christians to faith, justification, sanctification, and 'good works,' and preparation to salvation. The same results have arisen from the same means in past ages; so shall it be, in all ages to come, till the end of time. And so let it be. Amen.

PRAYER.

Thou, O God, art the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God. We confess that we have been rebels against thee our God, and injurious to our fellow-men. Woe is unto us, for we have sinned. We have been foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and passions, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another. The sanctions of the law are set to guard the precepts; if the precepts are violated, the sanctions must be borne. We have times without number transgressed all the precepts of the law, and, therefore, we are under its fearful curse; as it is written, Cursed is every one who continueth not in all the things which are written in the book of the law to do them. This curse we cannot avert by any deeds or sacrifices of our own. We cannot, by any works of righteousness of ours, obey the precept, much less can we expiate our guilt, and turn away the curse. Our case is helpless; in our hands it is desperate. Our destruction is, for all that we can accomplish, remediless. Wrath has gone out against us. Adored be thine ever blessed name, thou hast made thy love and kindness appear in Christ, and in thy word. According to thy mercy, which is rich, free, sovereign, mighty, immutable, eternal, thou hast provided salvation. Infinite mercy has found for itself an infinite expression; infinite mercy in God has provided an infinite sacrifice in Christ. Through the channel of his most blessed mediation, pour out the influences of the Holy Ghost upon us, and impart the blessings of the new covenant to us. Wash us by the washing of regeneration, and justify us truly by thy grace. Constitute us thy redeemed children, put us into their state by adoption, and form in us their nature by regeneration, and thus make us the heirs of the hope of eternal life. Make us faithful in all the relations of life, zealous for the advancement of thy glory in the earth, living epistles of Christ, seen and read of all men. Believing the testimony of thy holy word, may we be careful to maintain good works. Help us, through grace, to be faithful unto death, that we may receive a crown of life. Cause men to press into thy kingdom, to strive to enter in at the strait gate, and to walk in the narrow way which leadeth unto life. Do thou add to the church, day by day, such sinners as shall be saved; and make them a people which, in time past, have not been a people. On all the glory of Zion do thou create a defence. Be a wall of fire around Zion, and the glory in the midst of her. We commit ourselves to the guardianship of thy gracious providence during the approaching hours of sleep. O thou who keepest Israel, who slumberest not nor sleepest, grant us refreshing rest, even the sleep which thou givest to thy beloved people. May we commune with our hearts on our beds. May we lie down and take quiet rest, because thou causest us to dwell in safety; and whatever time we awake, may we still be with thee. Do more for us than we are able to ask or think of, in Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXVI. 7.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XVIII.

REMARKS.

‘God is love.’ His providence must be not only equitable, but benevolent; hence the psalmist says, ‘The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice.’ Yet an objection is often made to the justice of the divine government, founded on the common occurrence, that in temporal judgments the innocent suffer equally with the guilty; and that, if such judgments be prolonged, the children are punished for the sin of their parents. The Jews had now, for several years, been captives in Babylon. Aware that exile was the punishment denounced against idolatry by every messenger of God, from Moses downward, and had been inflicted on the remnant of their nation which had survived the desolation of Nebuchadnezzar’s invasion, they professed to return unto the Lord, expecting, as the immediate consequence, that they would be restored to their native land. But as their captivity still continued, they proudly expressed their impatience under the rod. They alleged that they suffered not for their own deeds, but for the sins of a former age; ‘that the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children’s teeth are set on edge.’ From this charge the prophet, by the command of God, delivers a solemn and satisfactory vindication. Had the Jewish captives been sincere, though afflicted, servants of God, they would undoubtedly have been addressed in the language of consolation; they would have been told the corrections of their heavenly Father proceeded not from wrath; that they are effects of love, and are designed for their good. As they were unhumbled and unholy, the prophet is instructed to vindicate the justice of God, by referring to the procedure of the great day of judgment, when every man shall bear his own burden, when every man shall be judged according to his works. This general rule is illustrated, 1. By the example of one who has lived and died as a righteous character; without respect to his parentage, God shall render unto him eternal life. 2. By the example of an open and habitual wicked character; his personal guilt, whatever may be his parentage, shall be the ground of his final condemnation. 3. By the example of an apostate who has fallen away, after seeming to be religious; he shall not be saved by his early and temporary piety, but shall perish in the sin with which he closes life. 4. By the example of an humble penitent, who, after a long career of wickedness, turns from sin unto God; he shall be accepted, and all his transgressions shall not be punished, shall not even be mentioned at the day of judgment.

What is the reason, it may be asked, of such unmerited mercy? Listen to the gracious language of God himself: 'Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die, and not that he should return from his ways and live? Hence the encouragement to repentance given to the Jews in captivity, and to sinners of every age. 'Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions, so iniquity shall not be your ruin; make you a new heart, and a new spirit; for why will ye die?'

Note. Religion gives no countenance to sloth; and God here speaks as if repentance depended entirely on human strength. It is the fundamental principle of the gospel, that salvation, from first to last, is not of works, but of grace. This doctrine, however, is often abused, so as to represent a sinner, in his natural state, rather as unfortunate than criminal, and to supersede all exertions on his part in the use of means. The bible does not explain how diligence on the part of man unites with assistance from the Spirit of God; but it asserts the reality and the constancy of that union. It is our duty, as well as our privilege, to repent. We are commanded 'to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in us to will and to do.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we desire to appear in thy presence as humble suppliants, confessing our sins, deprecating thy wrath, and imploring thine unmerited mercy. We acknowledge that we are less than the least of thy mercies; that as we were at first born in sin and conceived in iniquity, so as thou hast been adding to the number of our days, we have increased the multitude of our offences. But we rejoice, O Lord, that though in ourselves we are sinful and polluted, though we are unworthy to lift up our hands and eyes to heaven, thou hast regarded our lost estate, laid our help on him who is mighty to save, and sent down from heaven the Son of thy love, not, as our guilty fears might have suspected, to condemn the world, but as a Messenger of peace and reconciliation, to assure us of the mercy of heaven, and to make way for the exercise of such distinguished mercy by assuming our nature, by suffering in our stead, and by his obedience unto death, purchasing for us eternal life. Open, O God, the eyes of our understandings, that in the cross of Christ we may see the wonders of redeeming love. May we esteem it a faithful saying, highly credible in its nature, and on our part worthy of all acceptance, that Christ came into this world to save sinners. May we count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus; and may it be our main concern how to win Christ, that when we come to die, we may be found in him, clothed with his righteousness, and heirs of his salvation. We pray for all our brethren of mankind. May all our fellow-men be fellow-Christians; and may they who are already Christians in name, be also Christians in nature. Accept of our united thanks for thy goodness in sparing us through the last night, and raising us up in health and comfort to see the light of another day. Fit us for all its duties, and trials, and events. And after doing and enduring thy will on earth, may we at last enter into that rest which remains in heaven for the people of God. Gracious God, pardon all our sins, and hear in heaven these our humble prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—PHILEMON.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Of the apostolic epistles most are addressed to Christian societies, two to pastors of churches, and one to a private member. Philemon was an inhabitant of Colosse, distinguished by his affluence, piety, and usefulness. He had a 'church in his house,' and granted the use of his mansion to the Colossian converts, when they had no public building for religious purposes. His door was always open for the reception of the faithful, and by his hospitality he had often 'refreshed the bowels of the saints.' One of Philemon's slaves, for domestic slavery was then universal, was Onesimus, who was an ungodly man, though living in a pious family. There is no good reason to say that he had robbed his master; but he deserted his service, and fled to Rome, expecting to avoid detection in the crowded and varied population of the metropolis of the world. At this time St Paul was a prisoner in that city; and Onesimus, without friends, and without resource, being reduced to distress, applied to the apostle, having witnessed his wisdom and benevolence in his master's house at Colosse. The result of this application was the conversion of Onesimus, which was followed by its proper and usual fruit, confession of sin, and amendment of life. He acknowledged to the apostle that he was a runaway slave, and professed his wish to repair the wrong by returning to his former master. St Paul, though sensible of the kind services rendered to him by Onesimus, yet aware that Philemon had a prior claim, cheerfully agreed to send him back with this recommendatory letter, in which, with much warmth of affection, he urges that the penitent should be pardoned for his fault, and honoured as a Christian. The sequel of the history is, that Onesimus mus was graciously received by Philemon; that his worth was soon generally felt in the church; that, having entered into the ministry, he was the successor of Timothy at Ephesus; and that he at last finished his course by suffering martyrdom at Rome.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Although the epistle to Philemon relates only to domestic affairs, yet it furnishes a pleasing and profitable illustration of the powerful influence which true religion has on the duties of social life. 1. It is good for servants to live in a pious family. Onesimus, besides witnessing the order of Philemon's house, had heard St Paul conducting the offices of public and family worship. He enjoyed that high privilege probably without immediate advantage; but an impression was made on his mind which ultimately produced fruit, and which led him to consult the apostle in the time of distress. 2. A religious servant is 'profitable' to his master. An irreligious person serves from worldly motives, and will be overcome by worldly temptations; but a pious character has an additional safeguard of fidelity. Onesimus, after conversion, is anxious to repair former wrong. Joseph, while a slave in Potiphar's house, retains his integrity from the power of religion, declaring, in the face of powerful temptation, 'How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?' 3. Religion does not exempt from obedience to lawful authority. Slavery is inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity; yet it was established by the laws of the Roman empire. Onesimus' return to his former servitude is sanctioned by St Paul; who thus showed that Christians, for conscience sake, should be 'subject to the powers that be,' whether supreme or subordinate. 4. Religion confers true dignity. Onesimus, though, in the estimation of the world, a degraded slave, is regarded by the apostle as a 'dear son,' and is recommended to the wealthy Philemon as 'more than a servant,' 'as a brother beloved.' Still higher honours have the saints, for they are adopted into the family of heaven, are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we desire to close the day, and the week, with offering up our humble tribute of thanksgiving for all that goodness and mercy which thou hast made to pass before us. Thou art our great Creator, our constant Preserver, and bountiful Benefactor. To thee we are indebted for the form and fashion of our bodies; for the nobler powers and faculties of our souls; for every comfort that we enjoy in a present life; and for the better things that we look for beyond death and the grave. For thou hast not limited our views to this short and transitory scene; but, by the death and resurrection of thy beloved Son, hast brought life and immortality to light; and hast assured us, that they who fall asleep in Jesus shall at death pass into a state of blessedness, large as their wishes, and lasting as eternity. Help us all, O God, to live worthy of our Christian privileges, and of our Christian hopes. May we labour less for the bread which perisheth, and more for that which endureth to everlasting life. May we regard the salvation of our souls not as a secondary, but as a primary concern. May we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, that all other things may be added thereto. May we lay up treasure in heaven, which moth and rust do not corrupt, which thieves break not through to steal, that when this earthly tabernacle is dissolved, we may have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. With ourselves, O God, we pray for all mankind; we pray for their spiritual and eternal welfare. May the whole world know that God so loved it as to send his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Look down in mercy on the sick and the distressed. Sanctify affliction wherever it is sent. Supply the wants of the poor and needy. Spare young and useful lives for farther usefulness. And, Lord, be with the dying, and fit and prepare them for death, and for its awful consequences, judgment and eternity. Pour down thy Spirit and blessing on this house and family. Bless the heads of it, and make them blessings to one another. Bless the children; may they be all children of the promise, and heirs of the grace of God. Bless the servants; may they be faithful and conscientious, not with eye-service, pleasing men, but remembering that we have all a great Master in heaven, to whom we must give account. We thankfully acknowledge thy goodness through the past day and the past week. Pardon wherein we have offended thee, or come short of our duty. Take us under thy care and watchful providence during this night; and if it be thy will to spare us to see the light of another day, prepare us for the solemn duties of the ensuing sabbath. We put our whole trust and confidence in thee our God. Never leave us, never forsake us. Be our God and our guide, our guardian and our friend, in every step of our pilgrimage on earth; and when our course is finished, may we at last all see the salvation of God. These our prayers we now present to thee, in the name of Jesus, thy Son, and our Saviour. Amen.

FORTY-FOURTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XIX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 97—120.

REMARKS.

This passage shows the high estimation in which the psalmist held the word of God, notwithstanding the darkness of the Mosaical dispensation, and the scanty revelation enjoyed in that distant age. Our Lord commands us to 'search the scriptures,' (John v. 39.) adding two reasons for studying them with care; they contain the words of eternal life, and they acquaint us with the character of our divine Redeemer. By the scriptures, we are here to understand the writings of the Old Testament, for no part of the New was then composed. The language of Christ therefore intimates, that the Jewish scriptures not only contain obscure allusions to the gospel, but furnish precise information about the way to salvation. In an interview with the disciples, after his resurrection from the dead, our Saviour, referring to the events of his life and death, states, 'that all things must be fulfilled which were written concerning him, in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms,' Luke xxiv. 44. We know well that the Psalms and Prophets contain many clear predictions concerning Christ. The inspired penman declares, with feelings the most rapturous, and in descriptions the most magnificent, the dignity of his nature, the excellence of his character, and the felicity of his kingdom. They represent him as David's Son and Lord; as the King of Zion, whose name shall endure for ever, and whose dominion should extend to the uttermost parts of the earth; as the Deliverer of a world grievously afflicted by a spiritual usurper; invested with the hard-earned spoils of victory, 'travelling in the greatness of his strength;' as 'the Sun of righteousness' rising on a benighted world, and diffusing light, life, and joy. These, and similar revelations, were made generally to generations posterior to that of David. He had access only to a small part of the Old Testament, to the writings of Moses, and to the histories of Joshua and Judges. But though the law was only 'a shadow of good things to come;' and though the predictions of Christ, prior to the law, were few and dark; yet we find David rejoicing in the heart-felt experience of the mercy of God, and walking with confidence in the way of salvation. He celebrates the excellence of 'the law of God,' that is, of the word of God, small as the portion was that he possessed. It was his 'meditation all the day;' its truths were ever present 'to his mind, and made him' wiser 'than his enemies, and teachers, and even the ancients.' In his journey through life, he takes the word of God 'for a lamp unto his feet, and a light unto his path,' and was thus enabled to shun every evil way, and to advance with steady persevering steps in the path of duty; going on from grace to grace, till he appeared in Zion before God. In accounting for this enlightening and sanctifying influence of the word of God, we must bear in mind that the psalmist partook largely of the Holy Ghost. He enjoyed not only the external instructions of scripture, but also the internal teaching of the Spirit; and probably derived from this source more light than we are apt to imagine, concerning the economy of redemption. Like Abraham, who lived at an earlier and darker period, 'he rejoiced in the day of the Son of man; he saw it afar off, and was glad.'

It is the duty of Christians to prize and to improve the great advantages which they enjoy over the Old Testament church, for they have not a part, but the whole word of God; not only Moses and the prophets, but Christ and his apostles. But the mere reading of scripture, unaccompanied by the influence of the Spirit, will not make mankind wise unto salvation. Mankind naturally are not only ignorant, but blind; and this blindness must be removed, before they can understand scriptural truth. 'For the natural man receiveth not the things of God; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned,' 1 Cor. ii. 14. Let then the reading of the bible be ever accompanied with a prayerful frame of mind, that the Spirit may bless your scriptural researches, and 'guide you into all truth.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we adore thee as the parent of universal nature; as the Lord of heaven and of earth; as the Father of angels and of men. We bless thee, that having made of one blood all the nations that dwell upon the face of the earth, thou hast so ordered the circumstances of our lot and life, as that we should be born in a Christian land, that we should enjoy the advantages of a religious education, and that, from our earliest years, we should have access to the scriptures of truth, which are able to make us wise unto salvation. We bless thee, that we have been familiarly acquainted with the mysteries of redeeming love; that wonderful work of God, which many prophets and patriarchs desired to see, and to hear, but were not permitted. For all the powers and faculties of our reasonable nature, and for all the expressions of thy kind paternal providence which we have received in the course of our lives, we desire to offer up our humble tribute of thanksgiving. But more especially would we bless thee for that unmerited, unparalleled grace which thou hast displayed in our redemption; in sending down from heaven the Son of thy love to suffer, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God. May it never, O God, be our condemnation, that light has come unto the world, and that the light of the gospel has shone in our land; and that we love darkness rather than light, because our deeds are evil. Open the eyes of our understanding, that we may understand the scriptures. Convince us of sin, by the effectual operation of thy Holy Spirit. Convince us not only of our sinful life, but of our sinful nature. Enlighten our minds in the knowledge of Christ, that we may appreciate his excellence, and appropriate his blessings. And having received Christ Jesus the Lord, may we walk in him; may we be enabled to show our relationship to Christ, and our interest in his atoning blood, by a growing resemblance to his divine image, and a growing obedience to his holy will; by having our fruit more and more unto holiness, that our end may be everlasting life. With ourselves, O God, we would pray for all men; and on this, the morning of thy sabbath, we would pray for their spiritual welfare and prosperity; that the interests of pure and undefiled religion may flourish; that wherever the gospel is this day preached, it may be accompanied with power, and be the effectual means of opening the eyes of mankind; of turning them from darkness to light, and from the power Satan to the service of God. We thankfully acknowledge thy goodness, in sparing us through the last night, and in permitting us to see the light and comforts of a new morning, and of a new sabbath. Fit and prepare us for the various duties of thy day. Go up with us to thy house of prayer. Help us to worship thee, who art a Spirit, in spirit and truth. May we receive the truth in the love of it. May we lay it up in our hearts, practise it in our lives. Most gracious God, we commit ourselves, and all our interests, into thy hand. Be thou our God through life, our guide till death, and at last our portion for evermore. Father of mercies, pardon all our sins, and do for us more abundantly than we can ask or think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XXV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 121—144.

REMARKS.

The psalmist continues to detail the advantages resulting from studying the word of God, expresses his cordial attachment to it, and asks heavenly aid that he might be able to keep it. His reflections are so plain as to require no illustration, but they are so detached as to make it difficult to present a connected view of them. A few remarks may be made on their general bearing and tendency. They show, 1. The devotional spirit of the psalmist. There is an unhappy tendency in human nature to forget God. Wicked and worldly characters give full scope to that bias, by allowing the things of the world to engross their time and their thoughts. The psalmist looks beyond the world, and habitually realizes the presence and perfections of God. In the sunshine of prosperity, as well as in the gloom of affliction, when busy with the labours of the day, or when wakeful in the silence of the night, 'he sets the Lord always before him.' 2. The psalmist followed up the reading of scripture with meditation. The food that we eat is of no use, except it be digested; neither will the word of God, the bread of life, be profitable to ourselves, unless we meditate upon it, and mix it with faith. The apostle Paul praises the Jews of Berea 'because they received the word with readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, to see whether these things were so;' and the result was what might have been expected from such a hopeful exercise; a great multitude of them believed, Acts xvii. 11. 3. The Psalmist, in his experience, combined faith and practice. He examined the word of God, not to increase his stock of speculative knowledge, but to obtain practical directions for his journey through life. And such should be the course followed by every humble Christian. Our divine Saviour hath said, 'If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them, John xiii. 17. The apostle James gives a similar counsel. 'Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein,' that is to say, whoever carefully and continually consults the unerring rule of scripture, 'being not a forgetful hearer of the word, but a conscientious doer of the word, that man shall be blessed,' Jam. i. 25.

PRAYER.

Most gracious God, we rejoice in it as our highest honour, and as our noblest privilege, that we are permitted to approach in prayer the supreme majesty of heaven and of earth. We rejoice that thou art now in Jesus Christ reconciling a guilty world to thyself, and not imputing to mankind their trespasses. We rejoice that now is the accepted time, that now is the day of salvation. Lord, teach us highly to value the advantages of grace and salvation which we now enjoy. In this, the day of our merciful visitation, while we are spared in the land of the living, and in the place of hope; while we have access to the means of grace, and to the offers of salvation; in this our day of mercy may we seek the things that belong to our eternal peace, ere they be for ever hid from our eyes. Awaken us all to a serious concern for our welfare in eternity. Help us to mind the one thing needful. Whatever else in this vain and perishing world thou art pleased either to grant or to deny, deny us not thy grace. Help us to gain an interest in Christ, and to find that better part, that part shall never be taken from us. May we never be foolish enough to attempt establishing a righteousness of our own, but may we cheerfully and gratefully submit ourselves to the righteousness of God. Under a deep sense of our unworthiness and guilt, we would place all our hopes of mercy, and all our pleas for salvation, upon the atoning blood of thy beloved Son. May we experience the blessedness of that man whose sin is covered, whose transgression is forgiven, and to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. And may we ever live as becomes them who are redeemed by the blood of Jesus, and sanctified by the Spirit of the living God, and who are raised to the hope of glory, honour, and immortality beyond death and the grave. With ourselves, O God, we pray for all mankind. We pray especially for the cause and kingdom of Christ. Extend the boundaries of the Mediator's kingdom. Give him the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. We pray for the success of the gospel in our native land. May grace, mercy, and peace, be upon all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity. We pray especially for that worshipping society with which we are connected, and beseech thee to follow with thy blessing the religious exercises in which we have this day been engaged. Bless the word spoken. May the entrance of thy word give light, and life, and joy; and in our future pilgrimage, amid the snares and dangers of an evil world, may we take thy word to be a light to our feet, and a lamp to our paths. May we run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and the finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the majesty on high. Accept of our united thanks for thy goodness through the day. Take us under thy watchful providence through the silent watches of the night. May we lie down in thy fear. May we rise in thy favour. May we be at all times safe under the protection of the Almighty. And all that we ask is in the name, and as the disciples, of Jesus Christ. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XIX.

REMARKS.

The lamentation here enjoined is narrative, not prophetic. The events alluded to had already taken place. By the mother, described as 'a lioness,' (ver. 2.), is meant the state or kingdom of Judah; and by her whelps, her kings or rulers, so Zeph. iii. 1—3. The particular prince pointed at in verse 3, is understood to be Jehoahaz, the son of Josiah, whose brief history is related in 2 Kings xxiii. 30, &c.; and the description given of him, as one who 'learned to catch the prey and devour men,' corresponds with the plainer statement, 2 Kings xxiii. 32. After a short and inglorious reign, he was taken by 'the nations in their pit, and brought in chains into the land of Egypt,' (ver. 4.), as is more circumstantially related, 2 Kings xxiii. 34.

Thus deprived of her king, Judah chose, or rather her Egyptian conqueror appointed, his brother Elia-kim, now called Jehoiakim, to be king in his stead, and he was succeeded by his son Jehoiachin. From comparing the parallel passages in 2 Kings xxiv. 6, and 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, it seems not quite clear whether it be of the father or the son that the prophet speaks, ver. 5. It would seem to be of the son, there being no doubt but he was carried captive to Babylon. Neither warned nor instructed by the misconduct or punishment of his predecessors, he followed their example, and shared their fate, ver. 6—9; all which is more plainly related in 2 Kings xxiv. 2, &c.

The remaining five verses of the chapter describe the former prosperity of Judah, under the favourite metaphor of a vine planted by the waters, fruitful, and full of branches (ver. 10.), and having powerful and prosperous princes ruling over it (ver. 11.), till, in the end, its multiplied and obstinate transgressions brought down upon it the signal judgments of God, ending in a long and humbling captivity. All this is described, in the figurative language of the prophetic writers, in ver. 12—14.

'All scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for correction, for reproof, and for instruction in righteousness.' The historical parts are more especially instructive, and written for our learning. The piety and virtues of good men are intended for our imitation and encouragement; the sins of the wicked for our admonition and warning. Although retributive justice may not now be so clearly discernible, in the administration of providence, as under the Jewish economy; yet a pious and attentive mind may observe many indications, that, even in the present life, it is generally 'well with the righteous, and ill with the wicked.' 'In the keeping of God's commandments there is a great present 'reward;' and experience shows, that, by the constitution of the moral world, sin and suffering are generally, perhaps invariably, though not always obviously or immediately, linked together. Our inattention, therefore, must be inexcusable, and our guilt proportional, if we overlook a lesson at once so deeply interesting and so plainly taught.

PRAYER.

Accompany with thy blessing, O Lord, the reading of thy word. We believe that whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning. Teach us to read savingly and to profit. From the dispensations of thy providence, as well as the precepts of thy law, may we learn wisdom. May we remember that thou afflictest not willingly, nor grieveest the children of men; but that thou correctest for our profit, that we may be partakers of thy holiness. Let us not then despise the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked of him. When thy judgments are in the earth, may we learn righteousness. Nor let us despise the riches of thy goodness, and long-suffering, and forbearance; but may thy goodness, which we so constantly and so largely experience, lead us to repentance. May thy mercies move us to present ourselves living sacrifices unto thee, which is our reasonable service, and thus may all things work together for our good. We would bless thee, above all, for thy love to the world, manifested in the incarnation, sufferings, and death of thy Son. Let it not prove our condemnation that he came to seek and save that which was lost, and yet that we despised and rejected him; but may he be precious to us as he is to all that believe, and may we so receive him as to become the children of God. May all men become partakers of the like precious faith. May the light of the glorious gospel shine into those dark corners of the earth which are still full of the habitations of cruelty, and into the darkened understandings and polluted hearts of all who are alienated from thee by reason of the ignorance that is in them. May the disobedient be turned to the wisdom of the just, and thine erring and offending children to thee their Father in heaven. We pray for all whom we ought to remember before thee. Be the friend of our friends; forgive our enemies; relieve the distressed; comfort the mourner; strengthen the weak; encourage the timid; satisfy the doubting; succour the tempted; awaken the careless; turn the sinner. We thank thee for thy preserving care, for the rest and refreshment of the night, and for the light of a new day. Keep us ever mindful how deeply we are indebted to thee. May we acknowledge thee in all our ways, and then thou wilt direct our path. Fit us for the duties of the day, keep us from evil, and preserve us by thy power through faith unto salvation. Hear us for the sake of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee and the Holy Spirit, be the praise for ever. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXIX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS I.

REMARKS.

Paul is generally thought to have been the writer of this epistle. His object evidently is to show that the gospel was superior to, and intended to supersede, the dispensation of Moses. For this purpose he begins by showing the superiority of Him by whom the gospel was introduced, ver. 1, 2. This superiority he first states absolutely, describing our Lord as being appointed heir of all things, as the agent by whom God created the world, Col. i. 16; as being, in his own character, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, the visible image of the invisible God; as exhibiting, in a living embodied form, the several perfections which constitute the character of God, so that he could say, 'He that seeth me seeth him that sent me,' John xii. 45.; as not only originally creating, but continually upholding all things by the word of his power; and when he had by himself purged our sins, a subject to which he barely alludes here, intending to enter more fully upon it afterwards, as having sat down at the right hand of God, meaning the power and authority which he now exercises.

Having thus stated the inherent or personal glory of Christ, he goes on to show his relative greatness. By reference to several passages in their own scriptures, he proves to the Hebrews that our Lord was superior to angels, or the highest created excellence. To this he devotes the whole of this chapter from the fourth verse, thus showing the importance which he attaches to it as the ground of our reverence for our Lord as the Apostle, and of our reliance on him as the High Priest of our profession, as he more fully explains in the subsequent part of the epistle.

How fervently thankful ought we to be to God who hath sent no less a person than his own Son as the Messenger of peace and reconciliation, and is by him beseeching us to be reconciled. How reverently should we listen to him, of whom the Father said, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear him.' How deeply indebted are we to him, who, though rich, and heir of all things, became poor, and had not even where to lay his head, that we might be rich. And justly may our souls magnify the Lord, and our spirits rejoice in God our Saviour, that he who has graciously undertaken our redemption is exalted at the right hand of God, all power in heaven and in earth being committed unto him; that his throne is for ever and for ever; that he remaineth ever the same, and that his years shall not fail; that he is as unchangeable in his purposes as in his nature, so that whom he loveth he loveth unto the end.

PRAYER.

We desire to bless thee, O Lord, for the various discoveries of thy being, perfections, and government, made to the world; but above all, that thou who, in times past, spakest to the fathers by the prophets, hast in these later ages spoken unto us by thy Son. We would thank thee that he appeared as the only begotten of the Father, full alike of grace and truth; that in him were hid all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge; and that out of his fullness he so freely communicated to the world, having spoken as never man spake, and given an example of having fulfilled all righteousness. We bless thee that he came not only as the light of the world, but also by himself to purge our sins, and by one offering of himself to perfect for ever them that are sanctified. We would rejoice that, having suffered for the offences of his people, he rose again for their justification, and is now set down at the right hand of God, exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and forgiveness of sins; that he is Head over all things to the church; that his throne is for ever; and that he is ever the same, without variableness or shadow of change. We have reason to acknowledge that we have not received his instructions with that reverence, nor observed his example with that care, nor embraced his atonement with that thankfulness, nor bowed to his authority with that submission, which are so justly due. Pity, O God, our blindness to our own best interests. Pardon our perverseness in thus despising our own mercies, and rejecting the counsel of God against our own souls. Save us from slighting so great a Teacher, so perfect an example, so costly a sacrifice, so righteous a King; but may we humbly, thankfully, joyfully, receive him in all his offices, lest he be angry, and we perish from the way. Extend the blessings of the gospel to all lands. May that kingdom which is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, be universally and everlastingly established. May more understandings be enlightened, and their hearts purified, by the knowledge of thee the only true God, and of Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent, whom to know is eternal life. Be merciful to this place with which we are more immediately connected. Pity those who are far from thee, who desire not the knowledge of thy ways, or who, professing to know thee, in works deny thee. May thy truth and love pierce and soften their hearts, so as to make them willing and obedient. Strengthen, stablish, settle, all who love thy name. May they adorn the doctrine they profess, and shine as lights in the world. Preserve the young from being enticed by the error of the wicked. Prepare the aged and the dying for their change. Keep us all mindful that it is appointed for all men once to die, and that after death there is the judgment. We thank thee that thou hast added another day to our lives, and for what of thy goodness we have experienced. With all thine other givings, give us, we pray thee, grateful and affectionate hearts. Who can understand his errors? Cleanse us, O God, from secret faults, and let no sin have dominion over us. We would now commit ourselves, and all for whom we ought to pray, to thy care, through the silence of the night. We would lay us down in peace, humbly trusting that thou wilt make us to dwell in safety. Be our guide and guardian until death, in death our support, and after death our portion for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM L. 21.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XXII.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we have an enumeration of the sins of Jerusalem, termed here, as in other places, 'the bloody city,' Nah. iii. 1. The description gives a humbling and appalling view of the depravity of this favoured but faithless city. She is charged with shedding of blood, and making idols against herself; with unnatural disregard of parental affection and authority; with oppression of strangers, and vexing the fatherless and the widow; with contempt of God's holy things, and profanation of his sabbaths; with a sensuality offensively gross; with usurious exactions, and unfeeling extortion, ver. 3—12. Such an accumulation of wickedness provoked God to threaten to make 'her a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries,' ver. 4. And in ver. 13 he says 'Behold, therefore, I have smitten my hand,' &c., a figure of speech strongly expressive of astonishment and indignation at her manifold iniquities, as chap. xxi. 14. He then proceeds to expostulate with her in terms, and to denounce judgments against her, which might be expected to make the most careless think, and the stoutest tremble, ver. 14—16.

The prophet, naturally falling into his usual figurative style, speaks of Jerusalem as dross. God, by his mouth, threatens to put it into the furnace, to blow upon it in the fire of his wrath, until it should be melted in the midst thereof, and should know that he had poured out his fury upon it, ver. 17—22.

Dropping the metaphor, he resumes his complaint in language plain, pointed, and penetrating, and proceeds to charge the several classes of her inhabitants with their own peculiar and professional trespasses; her prophets with covetousness, ver. 25; her priests with profaneness, ver. 26; her princes with extortion, ver. 27; her prophets with palliating, and even pleading the authority of God for, the iniquities of those rulers, ver. 28; and the whole people of the land with robbery, injustice, and oppression, ver. 29. Having thus 'reproved them, and set their sins in order before their eyes,' he adds ver. 30, 31.

How different is our condition! Although our sins are great and many, as well as those of Jerusalem, and should therefore lead us to deep humility, unfeigned contrition, and serious apprehension of the righteous displeasure of God, yet still our comfort and joy is, that 'He hath found one to stand in the gap before him for us, that he should not destroy us;' one 'mighty to save to the uttermost even the chief of sinners, who come to God through him,' and able to save in every age and in every clime, seeing 'he ever liveth to make intercession.'

PRAYER.

We bless thee, O Lord, for the instructions and warnings, for the counsel and reproof of thy word. May that portion of it which has now been read prove life and spirit to our souls. Give us to behold ourselves in this glass, and let us not be of those forgetful readers or hearers who go away and straightway forget what manner of persons they are; but looking steadfastly unto this perfect law of liberty, may we continue in it, and so be blessed in our deed. May thy word and Spirit convince us of sin. When we read or hear of the offences of others, may we be led to think of our own. May each feel the plague of his own heart, and the errors of his own life, princes and rulers, prophets and priests, magistrates and subjects, parents and children, masters and servants. May we feel the evil and danger of sin, so as to confess it not merely with our mouths, but with that real contrition and sorrow which will work repentance not to be repented of. We rejoice to hear that with thee there is mercy that thou mayest be feared, that with our God there is plenteous redemption. Pardon, O God, all our sins, and let them not rise in judgment against us. Turn us, that wherein we have done wrong in time past, we may do so no more. We adore thee that, in order to give the penitent full assurance of faith, and that the heirs of promise might have strong consolation and good hope, thou hast found One to stand before thee in the breach, that thou shouldst not destroy them. May we be found in him as our covert from the storm, and hiding-place from the tempest. May his blood cleanse our souls from the guilt, and our hearts from the love of sin. We thank thee for sparing mercy. It is because we have obtained help of thee that we continue to this day. May each returning day find us wiser and better, more pure, more heavenly-minded, more kindly affectioned, more humble, meek, and patient, more watchful against temptation, and more fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. May we this day walk with thee, ever remembering that thou, God, seest us. May we behave as seeing thee who art invisible, and walk wisely in a perfect way. May thy truth have free course and be glorified. May ignorance and error, superstition and sin, in all their forms, be destroyed by the breath of thy mouth and the brightness of thy coming, and may thy reasonable creatures every where offer thee a reasonable service. Be merciful to all according to their need. Bind up the broken hearted; give liberty to the captives, the opening of the prison door to them that are bound; enlighten the ignorant; reclaim the erring; confirm the wavering; and say to the faint hearted, Be strong. Hear us in these our prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS 11.

REMARKS.

'Therefore,' i. e. because Christ is a being of such unequalled dignity and authority, 'we ought to give the more earnest heed,' &c.; for if the word spoken by angels, meaning the law of Moses, Gal. iii. 19, was steadfast, &c., how shall we escape if we neglect a salvation so great in itself, which was first published by Christ himself, was confirmed by those who heard him, and attested by many signs and wonders. The apostle then recurs to the comparative excellence of Christ and angels (ver. 5.), meaning, as is thought, that the ministry of angels was not employed in publishing the gospel, here termed the 'world,' or age 'to come,' and then proceeds to obviate a difficulty, which might occur, from Psalm ylii., regarding the superiority of Christ over angels. He understands the psalmist to speak there not of man, because all things are not put under him (ver. 8.), but of Christ (ver. 9.), who was made lower than the angels, by taking upon him the likeness of sinful flesh, which he did, that, by the grace of God, he might suffer death for every man; and having done so, for the suffering of that death he was crowned with glory and honour, Phil. ii. 9. He then states that it became God to make Christ suffer as the Saviour of sinners, and, therefore, that it was necessary that he the Sanctifier, and they the sanctified, should be of one nature, which being the case, he is not ashamed to call them brethren, ver. 11—13.

In verse 14 he gives another reason why Christ became man, that through death he might destroy, &c. This spirit, called the accuser of the brethren, might demand the punishment of man from the justice, holiness, and truth of God. He might say, If thou art just, punish man, for he too has rebelled; if thou art holy, cast man off, for he is polluted; if thou art true, man must die, for thou saidst, 'In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.' In this sense he may be said to have had the power of death; but our Lord, by his death, has destroyed this plea and power, hence Col. ii. 15.; he has overcome the accuser by the blood of the Lamb, Rev. xii. 10, 11, and so delivered them who through fear of death, &c., ver. 15.

In verse 17 he assigns a further reason why Christ was made like unto his brethren, that in administering the government of God he might be merciful and faithful, i. e. entitled to the fullest and most entire confidence on our part, because having himself been tempted as we are, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

If they who trespassed against the law of Moses died without mercy, of how much sorer punishment shall we be thought worthy if we trample under foot the Son of God? See then that ye refuse not him that speaketh. How wonderful the grace of Christ, who took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham! who had a body prepared for him, that he might have somewhat to offer, and suffer death for every man. And how joyful is it to know, that for the suffering of this death he is crowned with glory and honour, God having highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that he has destroyed him that had the power of death; and that, in administering the things pertaining to God, he is merciful, and entitled to the most reposing confidence, and most assured reliance of his followers, since he can be touched with a feeling of their infirmities, and strengthen them according to their need.

PRAYER.

Dispose us, O God, to give earnest heed to thy word, as to a light that shineth in a dark place. May we receive it into a good and honest heart, reverencing it not as the word of man, but as it is in truth the word of God, which worketh effectually in them that believe. May it dwell richly in us in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, enlightening our minds, rejoicing our hearts, converting our souls, and making us wise unto salvation. May the authority of Christ awe us, and his love constrain us, to listen reverently, obey unreservedly, and rely implicitly. We adore thee that he who was in the form of God humbled himself, and was found in fashion as a man; that by his death he has destroyed him that had the power of death, and given the victory to as many as receive him; that having conquered, he has ascended most gloriously far above all heavens, that he might fulfil all things, and can still be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Having such a High Priest over the house of God, we would draw near thee with humble confidence to obtain mercy, and find grace to help us in time of need. May we love thee who first so loved us. May we love him who gave himself for us, to wash us from our sins, and redeem us to God by his own blood. May our love abound in knowledge and in all judgment, that being rooted and grounded in it, we may walk in love, and be followers of thee as dear children. May that gospel which breathes not the spirit of bondage unto fear, but the spirit of power, love, and of a sound mind, reach every land, and gladden every heart. Hasten the time when, in this sense, the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, when the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose, when man shall be blessed in Christ, and call him blessed. Remember us of this place with that favour which thou bearest to thine own. Visit us with thy salvation, that we may see the good of thy chosen, and rejoice in the gladness of thy nation. May all of every rank and age fear thee and thy goodness, and remember that blessed is that people whose God is the Lord. Enrich us with the wisdom that is from above. We thank thee for the mercies of this day. Thou givest liberally, and upbraidest not. May we ever feel that we are thine. Pardon, O God, our errors and imperfections. What we know not in this respect, do thou teach us; and when we have done wrong in time past, enable us to do so no more. Be with us, and with all in whom we are interested, in our lying down and our rising up, in our going out and our coming in. Show us thy way, teach us thy path, and keep us, soul, body, and spirit, unto the coming of Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVIII. 5.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XXXIII.

REMARKS.

It will contribute to a clearer understanding of this chapter if the reader peruse at the same time the 36th chapter of 2 Chron. Jerusalem, we learn, was left standing for nearly twelve years from the date of the seventy years' captivity. The inhabitants of that city, and of Judea, instead of availing themselves of this period of measured and suspended judgment, to return with godly sorrow and repentance to their God, only 'increased their transgression and mocked the messengers of God, till wrath arose, and there was no remedy.' Instead of being surprised at this conduct of the Jews, we should remember that it is but an exemplification of a lamentable fact common to every age, viz. that chastisement and forbearance are alike lost on unhumiliated sinners. When 'hardly bested,' they only fret themselves, curse men and God, and look upward, Isaiah viii. 21.

Of the destruction of Jerusalem, the prophet is informed by a fugitive, ver. 21. For some time previous to that, the Lord had ceased to speak by the prophet; but had made him in his own person a sign, by enjoining him not to mourn or weep when the desire of his eyes was taken away with a stroke; and by making him dumb, until he should be informed of the destruction of the city, when his mouth should be opened, chapter xxiv. By no judgment does God more fearfully display his anger against a people, than by refusing to hear the intercessions of his servants, who sigh for prevailing abominations, and making them dumb, that 'they should not be reprovers to a rebellious house,' chap. iii. 28. It then becomes manifest, that God's spirit has ceased to strive with sinners; and that 'the peace and safety' from which they derive courage, are only the forerunners of sudden destruction by temporal calamities.

'On the evening afore he that had escaped from the city arrived, the hand of the Lord, or the prophetic inspiration, was upon the prophet.' He is reminded of his reponsibility as a watchman, his mouth is opened, and he is no more dumb, but a reposer. As Jerusalem is by this time destroyed; the coming sword of which he is set up to give warning, refers, we think, to the subsequent judgments which were to overtake those who now considered themselves safe in the wastes, the forts, and the fields of Judea. 'They said Abraham was one, and yet he sojourned safely in the land, but we are many,' ver. 24. They forgot that Abraham's safety lay not in his sword, but in his God, who was his shield and exceeding great reward; and that their enemies were not the Babylonians, but their evil hearts and transgressions. The prophet takes not up a lamentation; weeps not for the destruction of Jerusalem, the desire of their eyes, but winds a blast of warning, ver. 25—29. The prophet asserts the desire of God, that sinners should turn and live; but he asserts his holiness also, which treats men according to their character; and that a sinner will not be spared for bygone righteousness, nor a penitent rejected on account of past sins. There need be no fear that the truth which makes God deal with men according to their character, will jar with the doctrine of righteousness by faith. Nor is the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints, which is but the declaration that saints are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, contradicted by the expression of the 'righteous turning from his righteousness.' Besides, there is a standard of character which secures temporal prosperity, and which yet falls short of a qualification for heaven. When Nineveh repented, and Ahab humbled himself, judgment was averted for a time; and their case was made a confirmation of the truth that God has no pleasure in the death of the sinner. But sinners always wish to exhibit God's word as full of self-contradictions; 'saying, If our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?' ver. 10. They cavil with God's government of the world, saying his ways are not equal, when they should be mourning for sin and repenting. But such impeachments subvert not the truth; for 'wisdom is justified of her children.'

The prophet receives what seems a caution, ver. 30—33. Avidity for hearing is not to be mistaken for docility of spirit; nor approbation of a preacher for love of the truth. Popularity is neither the test of truth, nor of necessity the criterion of usefulness; but a proof that the preacher has a place, and his words an echo, in the hearts of his hearers. And there are attachments and sympathy on erroneous and bad principles, as well as on good. It is a lamentable fact, too, that those whose daily life makes void the law, relish as a lovely song, those views of truth which the real believer receives with trembling joined to his joy; that they seem to think, that exposing their hearts to the searchings of God's word is tantamount to the forsaking of evil; and that multitudes are lulled into fatal repose by representations which rouse the disciple indeed to make his calling and election sure. 'Let us therefore fear,' &c. Heb. iv. 1.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, before whom our fathers walked, and in whom they trusted, and who art ever the shield and great reward of such as serve thee with a perfect heart; we now present ourselves at thy footstool, to bless thy name, and give thee honour and thanks for thy past bounty and present goodness to us as individuals, a household, and a people. We bless thee, that thou hast been as a wall of fire around our country, our city, and our home; that we have neither been debarred from rest, nor risen to sorrow, by hearing that either has been smitten with the sword, or with the pestilence. Justly mightest thou have judged us, every one after his ways; made our land most desolate, and the pomp of our strength to cease, because of all our abominations. But we are living witnesses of thy grace, forbearance, and want of pleasure in the death of the wicked. Bless the watchmen whom thou hast counted faithful, to be set on the walls of the city of our solemnities. May they be as signs by which our Zion shall be called, sought out, a city not forsaken. May they be circumspect against sin; and feel that they are themselves as a city set upon a hill, and that many wait for their halting, talking of them by the walls and in the doors of the houses. Make them jealous for thy honour, zealous in thy truth; men who seek the things of Christ; his commendation and reward; and free alike of fearfulness in reproving slothfulness in labour, and of shame on account of the testimony of the Lord in the afflictions of the gospel. Save them from being misled by the apparent docility of multitudes who sit as thy people sit, and hear thy words, but do them not. Far be it from us this day, to sin willfully, and to make shipwreck of faith. Wean us from whatever exercises an undue ascendancy over our hearts. May we be found all our days walking in the statutes of life without committing iniquity. May we receive grace daily now, and be received to glory hereafter, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS III.

REMARKS.

From his course of remarks on the intrinsic and conferred glory of the Son, and from his exposition of the purposes which Christ's assumption of humanity serves in the achievement of the great salvation, the apostle now turns to point our attention more especially to the Son's apostolic and sacerdotal functions. If the transgression of the law was no venial crime, as the annals of the Jewish nation could testify, the superiority of Jesus to Moses, which stood relatively as that of the heir to the servant, must of necessity enhance the guilt of transgression under the gospel, and 'Christ is faithful in his house,' ver. 2.

The Jews were partakers of an earthly calling, Christians of a heavenly. Christ, like Moses, spoke on earth, as a minister of the circumcision; by his apostles he speaks from heaven. The calling of Christians, here described to be an honour, refers not to their being called to the inheritance of heaven, so much as to their being called by an authority now addressing them from heaven, and to which, at their peril, they must implicitly give respect as an authority superior to that of Moses. It was an honour to the Jews to have had this heavenly voice addressed first to them; and its design, wherever it may come, is to confer the same honour, by turning from sin those who receive it. Christians stand similarly situated, as to the heavenly voice, with the Jews, as to the law given by Moses. The voice of God in the law was, (Exod. xix. 3.) 'If you will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be to me a peculiar treasure, a kingdom of priests, an holy nation.' They were God's household, or temple. God was in the midst of them. The voice of Christ accords with that which we have quoted, John viii. 31, 'If ye continue in my word, then ye are my disciples indeed.' 'Whose house are we,' &c. ver. 6. 'We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence,' &c. Else like them we may fail of the promised rest, 'through unbelief.'

Some Christians feel perplexed in the attempt to reconcile such statements as these, in which individual salvation seems to be made dependent on individual will and effort, with those which teach the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. We can only observe, that that doctrine is one from which no Christian is warranted to draw encouragement, unless he is actually, at the time, in possession of the testimony of his conscience, that he holds fast his profession, and that in godly sincerity he has his conversation in the world. When conscience testifies of decaying faith, increasing sloth, worldly-mindedness, a spirit of slumber, or of harboured sin; for a man to connect the doctrine of perseverance with what he once felt, with what he has done, or has been, and to thank God and take courage, is to apply the opiate of delusion to his conscience, and to shut his ears to that voice which thunders against hypocrites in

Zion. The Christian fainting in his struggle against sin, or in dread of sinking from unbelief in the waters around him, can rejoice that it is not the way of God, nor of man, to begin a good and a great work, with the view of abandoning it before it is finished. The commencement and the past, become a pledge of the future. He judges of his safety, however, not by the truth of the doctrine, but by the fact of his heart being kept in the love of God; not by a faith and fervour out of date, but by a faith and dependence truly, though weakly, in exercise; and if he rejoices in the doctrine, it is with trembling in himself. The reasonableness of this solicitude he can vindicate, by a reference to the Master in whose house he is a servant, and who is gracious, but jealous also, who is of great pity, but who is faithful; and by a reference to what befel some who did provoke in former ages, and though saved out of Egypt, perished in the wilderness. Instead of considering warning as out of place, in speaking to believers, he with daily gratitude hears the word and ministers of God, saying, 'take heed, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief.' As he has returned to God by repentance, he fears departing from him by sin. He deplores the remaining unbelief in his heart; but a heart of unbelief he dreads, as one not right with God, as evil, inasmuch as it robs God of his veracity, denies the infinite resources of his nature, doubts and frustrates his purpose of grace, grieves and provokes him to say, Lo-ammi, 'ye are not my people;' and to swear in his wrath 'that they shall not enter into his rest.' And while he suffers the word of exhortation himself, he would, while it is called to-day, pass the word of exhortation to others. Conscious of the imperceptible steps by which the heart becomes hardened, by the deceitful operation of sin, when once entertained, he would stir up himself and others to watch, knowing that he only becomes a partaker of Christ, if he continue steadfast to the end.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, who art the builder and Creator of all things; and who of thy great mercy hast had compassion on thy sinful and erring creatures, and hast condescended to make some, in all ages, partakers of thy heavenly calling, and to dwell among them as thy household; we bless thee, that thou hast visited us from on high with that light of life which bringeth salvation to all who receive it with lowly and thankful hearts. Teach and enable us, we implore thee, to fix our ardent and reverent contemplation on Him who is the brightness of thy glory, and the Captain of our salvation, and who by one sacrifice of himself has purged our sin. As thou hast highly exalted him in honour above every name, and put all things under him, may his name and honour be precious to us above every interest, and may we make every wish and purpose subordinate to his holy will and glory. May thy love and mercy manifested in Christ, be the only ground of our confidence, and our chiefest joy. United to Christ as our Head, may we be one in thee, O Father, and in thy Son, that we may be witnesses to the world that Christ has come from thee, and that we are of the many sons that he is bringing unto glory. Make us daily partakers of Christ, of his excellent knowledge, of his holy mind, of his spiritual gifts; and by thy power through faith, may we be kept, holding the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end. Keep us from secret faults, save us from presumptuous sins. Let us not grieve thee, as did those who saw thy work, but did always err in heart. From the deceitfulness of sin and of our evil hearts, for ever preserve us by thy good Spirit. Qualify us, by the graces of holy love and zeal, to exhort others, lest they be hardened from thy way; and in this our household may we mutually suffer the word of exhortation. Raise up in thy church faithful stewards of thy mysteries, and stir their hearts to hallowed jealousy for thy glory. We would, by prayer, constrain thee, saying, Abide with us this and every night. May the length and strength of our days be consecrated to thee; and may we be enabled at the close of life, with a hope full of immortality, to commend our spirits into thy hand. May we then sleep in Jesus, and be satisfied with thy likeness when we awake. Hear us in thy grace, we beseech thee, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XXXVI.

REMARKS.

The characteristic feature and end of moral discipline being to ameliorate individuals or a community with their own concurrence, it is indispensable to the success and to the credit of such a system, that the principles, according to which the awards of conduct are determined, be distinctly and universally understood, alike by the spectators of the consequences of disobedience, as by the sufferers themselves. Accordingly we find Ezekiel, in a preceding part of these prophecies, endeavouring to convince the suffering Jews of the righteousness of God's judgments, and that his ways are equal. Without a conviction of this, there could be no shame nor godly sorrow for their sins; but their feelings would rise against the government of Jehovah as if he were a tyrant oppressing them. Hence we find that one purpose of the calamities with which they were visited was, that they might know that the Lord was God. It would seem, also, that the heathen, among whom the Jews, in their captivity, were scattered, had drawn erroneous conclusions from the dealings of God in surrendering his people to the will of their enemies. The taunts and boastful anticipations to which they gave utterance, fell as a scornful reproach on that God by whose hand the judgment had been inflicted. In these circumstances his jealousy is awakened for his own name; and, therefore, refraining from what the iniquity of his people, in other circumstances, might have warranted him in inflicting upon them, he resolved, for his name's sake, to show such marvellous kindness, by gathering them from all countries, that if the heathen misconstrued the design of his chastisements, they would find it impossible to doubt the exceeding riches of his grace, or the resources of his power. We are told that the effect of such favour extended to his people would be, 'Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate; I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it,' ver. 36.

1. Let the people of God remember, in their deepest afflictions, that if the impression made on those round about them, by the chastisements of their sins, tends to produce a mistaken opinion of the cause of these judgments, and one adverse to the character of the Lord whom they serve, he will show mercy and favour, 'not for your sakes, be it known unto you, but for his holy name's sake, saith the Lord.'

2. It is no abatement from the riches of God's grace to say that he is moved to mercy by considerations affecting his name and honour. Mercy without a reason is mere fondness. That his name is concerned in what they ask is an old and effectual argument of his servants, Exod. xxxii. 12.

3. Let not, however, God's suffering people expect deliverance from chastisement till they cordially renounce their idols and false hopes, vindicate the rectitude of God's dealings with them, lothe themselves in their own sight, and learn to serve the Lord more unreservedly than before in newness of spirit, ver. 31. This is the will of God, even their sanctification; and the reproach of the enemy will not, as in the case of feeble man, provoke the Lord to jealousy until this his will be accomplished in his people, ver. 33.

4. Does the stubborn obduracy of our will refuse to yield to the influence of God's chastisements? The case is not hopeless. Hear the promise of the new covenant, 'I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; a new heart also will I give you,' &c., ver. 23—28.

5. We only use God's promises aright when we begin to convert them into importunate pleas at a throne of grace. God foretells what he purposes to do for his people; but he connects the accomplishment of the promise expressly with their supplication for it. 'I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel.' How often may believers have exclaimed, 'Has the Lord forgotten his promise?' or have said, 'the time is not yet come,' when it was they who restrained that prayer which God requireth previous to his plucking his hand from his bosom on their behalf.

PRAYER.

Holy Father, Lord of heaven and of earth, we thank thee that albeit thou dwellest enthroned in light, to which we cannot approach, yet thou hast condescended to reveal thyself to us, thy rebellious children, by the inspiration of thy good Spirit, in prophets and apostles, and, above all, in thy only begotten Son, who is the brightness of thy glory, and the express image of thy person. We rejoice that in and by him we can see thee, O Father, and learn all that thou art, and all the purposes of thy love toward our wretched and guilty race. We rejoice to know that thou wilt not that any of us should perish; that even now thou afflictest us not willingly, and that the chastisement of our sins is with the view of making us partakers of thy holiness. We acknowledge that thou hast been ever righteous in all thy proceedings towards us, and that it is of thy infinite grace that we have not been consumed. Thou hast appointed us the bounds of our habitation, and the circumstances of our lot, with a view to our good and the glory of thy great name. If we have wisdom to guide our steps; if we have, day by day, the meat that perisheth; if we have power to get wealth; if we ever remembered our doings that were not good, and lothed ourselves for them; if we have yet trusted in Christ, or, as candidates for glory, honour, and immortality, exercise, however feebly, watchfulness, patience, and self-denial, and desire to follow Christ in the regeneration, we owe it all to thy grace, and would say, Not unto us, not unto us, be the praise. Be pleased to begin, and if begun, to fulfil in us the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power. Save us from self-delusion, from trusting in ourselves that we are righteous, from resting in any fancied attainment, from making shipwreck of faith and a good conscience, and from becoming the reproach of the foolish. May our minds be moulded after that of thy Son, may we be all taught of God, and may we feel, in our daily transformation into thine image, the verification of those promises of a new heart, and of the indwelling of thy blessed Spirit, of which we have at this time read in thy holy word. May thy promises excite in us ardent desires and unceasing prayer to become heirs of their fulfilment, and more and more partakers of that divine nature which is the evidence of our having been born from above. Be surety for thy servants for good during this and every other day. May we use the world as not abusing it; and although in the world, may we never become identified with those who are of it. As they who are in thy house are still praising thee, may we, possessed of that peace which Christ giveth to his own, and with the testimony of our conscience to our godly sincerity, be glad in thee all our days. May we see on earth the good of thy chosen, and be guided by thy Spirit to the land of uprightness. Be pleased to grant us these blessings, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CXVI. 7—11.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS IV.

REMARKS.

This chapter is a continuation of the line of admonition on which the apostle enters in the third chapter. He there asserts that as Moses was faithful in his house, so is Christ faithful in his own house. That the words of Moses did not fail of effect, the history of the Jews bore lamentable evidence. Years and centuries after Moses and his successors, the prophets, had been gathered to their fathers, their predictions of good or of evil were fulfilled to the letter. In Zach. i. 3, God appeals to this fact, 'Your fathers, where are they?' and the prophets, do they live for ever? But did not my words take hold upon your fathers, and they said, Like as the Lord of hosts thought to do unto us, so hath he dealt with us?' To the same purpose the apostle cautions the Hebrews, lest they, guilty of similar contempt of the gospel of Christ, should fall after the same example of unbelief. 'Let us therefore fear,' &c.

It is not to be imagined that a Christian is actuated solely by fear, as if the word of God were designed only to hang over the heads of mankind like a drawn sword, in order to restrain them from evil. The word of God appeals certainly to our fears, but chiefly to the generous sentiments of our hearts. The Christian is animated and attached to the service of his Lord by exceeding great and precious promises. The fear of coming short of these, and of grieving the Lord and his Spirit, rather than the fear of penal infliction, is the leading motive of his conduct.

There is an abruptness in the reasoning of this chapter, which evinces the confidence of the apostle that he is speaking to minds familiar with the Old Testament scriptures. He but hints, as it were, the interpretation of statements, and the application of facts, in that volume, leaving it to his readers to pursue the application more fully themselves.

The reader must observe the course of the argument relative to the different rests. At the creation man entered into God's rest, or into a sabbatic state of being and blessedness with God. In his fallen condition man is doomed to toil, and is without rest; and although, as regarded the journey through the wilderness, Canaan was a rest to Israel, yet it could not be the rest promised by God, as David, in his day, speaks of that rest as unpossessed, and remaining still to be entered. The conclusion of the apostle is, that it is only by Christ's guidance that the people of God enter into God's rest, wherein they cease from their works.

It will require likewise to be attended to in studying this chapter, that the apostle is not, at this stage of his argument, in circumstances to explain in what the true rest consists, until he opens up the priestly character of Christ, which he begins to do at the conclusion of this chapter. Having brought his remarks on that department of Christ's work to a conclusion, he speaks at large of the true rest which we enter by faith, in chap. viii. x. xii., and concludes, 'Wherefore we, receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved, let us have grace,' &c.

But as he had begun with admonition, he presses upon the Hebrews the necessity of labouring to enter into the true rest, that land of promise, to possess which Christ was commanding them to 'go up.' But how are we to press into the kingdom of heaven? by faith in the Captain of our salvation; by laying aside every weight (chap. xii. 1—3.); by being followers of those who are now by faith inheriting the promises, (chap. vi. 12.); and by habitual fear of failure. For we, like the Israelites, are liable to rebel and vex his Holy Spirit; to limit the Holy One of Israel; to forget past mercies; to faint and murmur at the difficulties and length of the way; to loathe the light food of common truths, and to incline to return to the flesh-pots of Egypt, or the pleasures of sin. Let us, therefore, not be slothful, but diligent to make our calling and election sure.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, who art the author of life, and the inexhaustible fountain of all mercies, we bless thee for that goodness which thou didst manifest to mankind when the works were finished at the creation of the world. We with sorrow acknowledge our grievous sins, by which we have forfeited thy gracious favour, and that divine rest of blessedness and joy, passing all understanding, which was originally possessed in the enjoyment of thy fatherly love, and of filial confidence in thy holy presence. How can we worthily admire that manner of love which did triumph over the indignation and wrath which our transgressions had so justly deserved, and which has opened to us a door of return, to become thy children again by faith in Jesus Christ thy Son? When we seriously consider our past folly and sin, and think of those to whom the gospel was preached, as well as unto us, and who perished with the land of promise in their view, we would fear, though a promise is left us of entering thy rest, lest any of us should come short of it through unbelief. As thou art saying to us, To-day, if you will hear my voice, harden not your hearts; may we strive to enter in, and labour to make our calling and election sure. May we, by the indwelling of thy Spirit in our hearts, grow daily in enlarged understanding of the unsearchable riches of thy grace; in the mortification of every sinful affection; in hatred of all envious and uncharitable thoughts; in freedom from all disturbing passions; in a more unfeigned and lively faith in things unseen and eternal; in submissive acquiescence in the appointments of thy holy will; in weaned humility of mind; and in a visible transformation into the image of thy Son. Ever defend us by thy grace from the snares which beset our path; and give us not up to the misleading influence of a world lying in iniquity, nor of those inclinations which darken our minds so that we venture on presumptuous sins. Pardon, good Lord, what thy holy eye has seen impure in our motives, or sinful in our thoughts, words, and acts, this day. When we look back on the events of this day, we have reason to fear that we have been more earnestly labouring for the things which perish in the using, than in laying up durable riches at thy right hand; and that it has been more with fleshly wisdom than under the guidance of that which is from above, that we have had our conversation in the world. Yet we would look to thee to whom all things are naked and open, and would, though with jealousy of ourselves, presume to say, in the spirit of thy servant of old, Lord, thou knowest that it is our desire to love thee and to keep thy commandments. Good Shepherd of Israel, and God of Bethel, spread thy covering wing over us, and over those whom we bear on our spirits, and over our common interests this night. Guide us through life; be with us in the valley and shadow of death; and receive us afterwards to thy glory, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM IX. 13.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XXXVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This prophecy conveyed a warning to the Israelites, not to expect that the deliverance mentioned in the preceding chapter would free them from all future troubles, or secure for them a perpetual peace. It very probably had its fulfilment some time after their return from captivity. By Gog, many think that Antiochus Epiphanes, one of their most violent persecutors, is meant. Magog may signify the country, or rather the people, over whom he ruled. We are told, that these enemies should invade the land of Israel from the north; the regions of which seem to have been peopled by the posterity of Magog; second son of Japheth, who were of old generally called Scythians, their descendants in modern times, Mogul Tartars; their appearance, it is said, should be so formidable as to fill the inhabitants with consternation and terror; but an assurance is given, that they would be under divine restraint, and be ultimately defeated by the immediate hand of God.

It is observable that the names 'Gog and Magog,' which are given here to the last enemies of the Jewish church, are given also, in Rev. xx. 8, to the last enemies of the Christian church, of whom it is there foretold, that they should be utterly destroyed shortly before the second coming of our Lord.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Whoever Gog and Magog may have been, it is sufficient for all practical purposes, to know that they were enemies of righteousness, and of the church of God. God forewarned the Israelites, as our blessed Lord forewarned his disciples, that in this world they should have tribulation. So tender, however, is he, of his people's comfort, that he assures them beforehand, 'that he will be as a wall of fire around them,' and make all their afflictions, whatever these may be, work together for their good. As the nations; formerly at variance with each other, united in one formidable combination against the Israelites, so does it still happen with respect to the church and people of God; those join together against them who have no bond of union among themselves but that of common envy and hatred. The Israelites enjoyed but a short respite from war and captivity, when they were unexpectedly assailed by other enemies. Nor can we, while in this world, be secure from trouble, nor know always whence it may come, nor how soon. No. The Christian's house of perfect and unceasing rest, lies in scenes beyond the grave. God is indeed against the enemies of his church and people, but still he makes use of them for the advancement of his own glory, and the accomplishment of his gracious purposes, Psal. lxxvi. 10; Hab. i. 12. Although, however, he may permit them, for these ends, to go on for a time in sin, yet will he manifest, in their destruction at last, his hatred of it, and displeasure against it, and he will do so in such a manner as to show, even to themselves, the grounds of his controversy with them; and as to constrain even themselves to acknowledge that he is just when he judgeth. And since he will assuredly render vengeance to his enemies, let us lay down the weapons of our rebellion against him; let us embrace now his overtures of mercy in Christ, and be at peace; let us give glory to his name before our feet stumble on the dark mountains. And since the Bible tells us plainly, that in this world the Christian shall meet with afflictions, yea, often severe, and complicated, and unlooked for afflictions; let its precious statements and promises be treasured up in our minds, that when afflictions do come, they may find us not only forewarned to receive them, but also knowing him who can strengthen us under them, and deliver us from them.

PRAYER.

Gracious God, we approach thee at this time with deepest reverence, and in the name of Christ.

For his sake vouchsafe the unction of the Holy Spirit, that we may learn practically and singly those lessons of heavenly wisdom which every portion of thy word is fitted to convey. We bless thee, that although we were conceived in sin, and have been transgressors from the womb, and deserve nothing but to be left to perish under our deeply aggravated guilt, thou art still making overtures of peace to us in the gospel; thou art still manifesting, by thy forbearance with us, that thou hast no pleasure in our death. May we be made willing, in a day of thy power, to lay down the weapons of our rebellion, to renounce the service of sin, to take thee in Christ as our covenant God, and to surrender ourselves to thee as thy covenant people. Form us for thyself by thy grace and Spirit, that we may show forth thy praise, and thus give glory to thy name, before our feet stumble on the dark mountains. Sanctify to us thy dealings in providence, whether apparently favourable, or adverse, and grant that they may work together for thy glory in our good. Blessed be thy name, that while thou hast forewarned thy people that in this world they shall have tribulation, yet thou assurest them that thou wilt chasten them only for their profit, that they may be partakers of thy holiness, and that their light afflictions shall work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Enable us, in every hour of peril and distress, to rejoice in believing that thou sittest King on every flood; that thou wilt lay no burden upon thy people, beyond what thou wilt enable them to bear; that thou wilt glorify thyself in delivering them in the best time, and in the best way, even in thine own time, and in thine own way. We thank thee for the circumstances in which we are now permitted to compass the family altar. May our spared lives be devoted to thee, and may we know sensibly the preciousness of thy grace, which helpeth in the time of need. Be very gracious to all who are dear to us; be propitious to every interest and concern in which we should feel interested and concerned. Sanctify afflictions to the afflicted, and bereavements to the bereaved; and may we be more and more fitted by every dispensation of thy providence and grace for leaving this world of sin and sorrow, and entering into the joy of our Lord, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The apostle having asserted the priesthood of Christ, and shown the encouragement which believers should derive from it, begins in this chapter to explain the nature of the office, especially as to its typical meaning, ver. 1—4. And he adds, in ver. 5, that Christ had not taken this honour to himself, but like as Aaron had been appointed to it by God, so was he appointed to it by his heavenly Father. In the discharge of his priestly office, which being after the higher order of Melchizedec, was not successive and temporary, but personal and eternal, the apostle tells us, ver. 7, 'Who in the days of his flesh,' &c. 'His prayers and supplications,' &c. were expressions of the deep anguish of his holy soul in his last sufferings, and 'his being heard,' &c. may signify his being delivered from the overwhelming dread, felt by his human nature, of that wrath which, as our Surety, he had undertaken to endure, or his being carried safely through death, and revisited with the sensible presence of his heavenly Father at his resurrection. The consequences were, ver. 8, that though he was the eternal Son of God yet he learned, i. e. experimentally, as far as could consist with his sinless humanity, the difficulty of obeying the divine law, amidst the temptations and trials of this world, the agony caused by the infliction of the divine wrath, and the sustaining efficacy of the love of his heavenly Father; and, ver. 9, that by his obedience unto death, and subsequent exaltation, he became fully qualified to be the Mediator and Redeemer of all who believe in him as their only Saviour, and submit to him as their only Lord, ver. 10—14. Though the believing Hebrews had long known and professed the gospel, yet, either from the slowness of their apprehension, or from want of duly improving their privileges, they had need of being taught anew which be the first principles of the oracles of God, or of the revelations of Moses and the prophets. By milk, is to be understood the most obvious truths of Christianity; and by strong meat, its deeper and more spiritual doctrines. Those who require the former, must be considered as only babes in religion, however long they may have professed to know and believe the gospel. But the more sublime truths which were obscurely intimated in the ceremonial dispensation, were as strong meat, and fit only for such as were matured in judgment and experience, or had their spiritual senses exercised to discern good from evil, or truth from error.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

In our fallen state we cannot approach unto God, but through the intervention of a Mediator. Christ alone has been appointed to this high office, and is fully qualified for the discharge of it. And now the gospel exhibits him as the Author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. Are we of that number? We do not savingly confide in him as our great High Priest, unless we submit cheerfully to him as our prophet, and receive his instructions with faith, and love, and practical application; and unless we, moreover, take him to be our king, to subdue the iniquity of our hearts, to govern us by his laws, and to defend and deliver us from all our enemies. God requires that we should grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, in proportion to the time and means afforded us, which time and means, if neglected or abused, will tend fearfully to aggravate our guilt, and increase our condemnation. And since there are some truths more difficult to be understood than others, we should seek to become experimentally acquainted with those that are simple first, and then proceed to such as are more deep and perplexing, which will tend greatly, under the divine blessing, to our comfort, and stability, and fruitfulness.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, cause our souls to live, that we may praise thee for all the mercy, and goodness, and truth, which thou art day by day making to pass before us. We would now set up another stone of remembrance, and call it by the name of Ebenezer, and say, Hitherto hast thou helped us. At the same time we would acknowledge, with shame and sorrow, how greatly we have forgotten thee the God who made us, and how lightly we have esteemed the Rock of our salvation. O deliver us from the fool's heart, which saith thou art not, and enable us to endure as seeing thee who art invisible. Enter not into judgment with us, but look upon us in the face of thine Anointed, and deal with us in him as thou seest our needs to require, and not as our sins deserve. We bless thee that he has been appointed by thee to the high office of Mediator, and that by his voluntary obedience unto death he magnified thy law, and satisfied thy justice, and thus wrought out a righteousness so perfect and meritorious, as to be the infallible ground of pardon, and acceptance, and eternal life, to all who rely on it by faith. May we confide implicitly in him as our great High Priest; submit cheerfully to his instructions as our Prophet, and receive him cordially as our King. Blessed be thy name, that there is milk provided by thee for those who are only babes in religion, as well as strong meat for such as are more advanced. Send forth thy Holy Spirit's light with thy truth, that we may grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, in proportion to the means which are afforded us. May we yield an implicit faith to all that thou revealest, and a willing obedience to all that thou commandest. And with respect to those mysteries of thy word, which though not contrary to our reason, are yet above it, may we with profoundest adoration say, O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God ! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out ! We commit ourselves and all whom we ought to bear upon our spirits, to thy care this night. May thy sleepless eye be upon us, and shine for good. Let our rest be refreshing, that we may be strengthened in body, and invigorated in mind, for the duties and trials of a new day, if it be thy will that we should see it ; but whatever be thy will respecting us, Lord, prepare us for it, and make us resigned to it, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 16.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter, which contains the conclusion of the prophecy concerning Gog and Magog, intimates the great and utter destruction that should befall them, ver. 1—7; the way in which it was to be effected, ver. 8—22; and God's gracious purposes in this and his other providential dealings with regard to his church and people, ver. 23—29. We are repeatedly told that his chief end, in whatever he permits or does, is to magnify and sanctify himself, and to make his name to be known. He magnifies himself when he discloses, in his works and ways, the unbounded nature of his perfections, Gen. xix. 19; he sanctifies himself when he manifests the unspotted holiness and perfect rectitude of his dispensations, Ezek. xxxviii. 23; and by his name, which he makes to be known, we are to understand especially the excellencies of his nature and character, Exod. xxxiv. 5—7, or the honour and reputation of his government, Deut. xxxii. 3, 4. Now it is the glory of this his name; it is the excellencies of his nature and character; it is the honour and reputation of his government; it is the development or manifestation of these that he proposes to himself, in all that he permits or does, as his chief end, his primary design; and it is most befitting the majesty of the Godhead, it is most befitting the independent self-sufficiency of the ever blessed Jehovah, to make the pleasure which he takes in the goodness and glory of what he himself is, and what he himself does, his chief end, his primary design. But God delights in diffusing his own blessedness, and in imparting it to his intelligent creatures. Accordingly, he recommends himself to their admiration, love, and praise, by giving them such discoveries of himself as are necessary, not to his, but to their happiness; and it is in proportion as he does so in creation, or providence, or grace, that he is, with peculiar propriety, said to magnify or sanctify himself, or to make his name to be known.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

No weapons formed against Zion shall prosper. God is opposed to those who wield them. Of this we have an awful proof in the destruction of Gog and his army. The Lord is known by the judgments which he executeth. His enemies shall be made to know him as a God of perfect purity and rectitude, who hates all sin, and will assuredly punish it; and not only shall his people be made to know more of his power, and faithfulness, and care, in the deliverances which he works out for them, and to see more clearly their covenant interest in him, but also their experience, in this respect, in times past, will lead powerfully to silence their doubts, remove their fears, and assure their hearts for the time to come. God permits troubles to befall his people not from forgetfulness of them, or inability to protect them, but because they forfeit, by their sins, the sensible enjoyment of his favour, and need to be corrected and restored. No sooner, however, are they brought to humble themselves beneath his rod, and to fall in with his gracious purposes, than he reveals himself again to them as the Lord their God, and shows them the great goodness which he has laid up for those who fear him. Be it ours to remember that our duty and privilege are wisely and graciously connected; that every special deliverance lays us under an additional obligation to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour; and that since it is his primary design, in all his works and ways, to make known his own glory, so it is our duty, in all that we seek or do, to aim at and promote it. Our prayer individually should be, 'Do for me, that I may glorify thee;' and if we ask in faith, he will pour out his Spirit upon us, he will give us the grace which is sufficient for us, and as sure as he begins a good work in us, he will preserve us safe unto his heavenly kingdom, and present us at last faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

PRAYER.

We bless thee, O Lord, that thou art still seated on a throne of mercy and grace with respect to us, and that this fact is of itself sufficient to convince us, not only that thou hast mercy and grace in store for sinners, but art ready to bestow them in a kingly way upon us. Grant us a felt nearness to thee at this time, and may thy Holy Spirit make intercession in us, that we may have the comfortable assurance of Christ's making intercession for us. We unite in offering our morning sacrifice of thanksgiving for thy watchful care of us during another night. We lay down and slept, and rose to see the light and enjoy the comforts of a new day. In the exercise of genuine faith and unfeigned repentance, we desire to approach the fountain of redeeming blood, that our consciences may be purged from guilt, and that we may be put into a capacity of serving thee better, and loving thee more than ever we did. Remembering that none have hardened themselves against thee and prospered, we pray that thou wouldst pour out thy Holy Spirit upon us, to subdue our naturally proud and rebellious hearts, and to mould us into conformity to thy will; and may we know the great peace which they have who love thy law; may we know thy name in Christ, that we may fear thee and hope in thy mercy; and may we know our covenant-relation to thee in him, that we may be encouraged, by our experience of thy past care, to trust thee more for future need. We rejoice to believe that thou restest in thy love to thy people, and that when thou permittest troubles to befall them, it is for the purpose of correcting and sanctifying them, and of bringing the graces of thy Spirit more fully into exercise in them; and we rejoice in believing, also, that when thou seest it to be more for thy glory and their good, to allow the waters of affliction to deepen, thou wilt make the sources of their consolation to open, and enable them to go forward, resigned and undisturbed, though they should see no cessation to the tempest but in the tranquillity of the tomb. Grant us grace to fall in with thy gracious designs in all thy dealings towards us; and may we be cheered during the days of our sojourn here below, by the good hope, that when time to us shall be no more, an abundant entrance shall be administered to us into that world where no tears shall bedim our eyes, nor pangs of anguish gnaw our hearts, but where our happiness shall be inconceivably great, without alloy, without interruption, and without end. We adore thee in the judgments which thou executest on the enemies of thy church and people. Deliver not the souls of thy people to the multitude of the wicked. Have respect unto thy covenant, and visit the dark places of the earth, and of sinners' hearts, with saving light; and may our adorable Redeemer sway his sceptre of grace and authority over those who have hitherto been rebellious. Enable us this day to walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, which is so short, and uncertain, and precious. Keep us watchful unto prayer, lest we fall into temptation. Teach us more clearly our duty, and give us the needful grace to perform it. Vouchsafe to us the light of thy countenance, and preserve us from every thing that might occasion the withdrawal of it, that we may be harmless and blameless, the sons of God without rebuke, and that others, seeing our good works, may glorify thee our heavenly Father. All that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXI. 10.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The apostle exhorts the Hebrews to make greater proficiency than they had yet done in the knowledge of divine things (ver. 1—3.), as being one of the best means of preserving them from apostacy, the nature and consequence of which sin he sets forth in an awfully solemn manner, ver. 4—6. Those of whom he here writes are said to have been enlightened or instructed in the truths of Christianity; to have had experience of the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which were common in those days to many who were unregenerate, Mat. vii. 21—23; to have felt a kind of pleasure in the gospel without receiving it in love; and to have tasted of the powers of the world to come, and to have had some dread of hell and desire after heaven. Now if these fall away and become avowed enemies to Christ, they crucify him afresh, by showing that they approve of the conduct of those who nailed him to the cross, and they put him to an open shame, by showing that they hold him worthy of the ignominy and contempt with which he had been treated; and these may be considered, humanly speaking, as given up to final obduracy, for they are supposed to have a knowledge not only of the doctrines of the gospel, but also of its evidences, and yet these evidences they despise; besides, by forsaking the means of grace, they put themselves out of the ordinary course of God's dealings in converting sinners; and, moreover, the heinous nature of their guilt is such as tends to provoke him in the highest degree to withhold his Spirit and grace, without which it is absolutely impossible savingly to repent. In verses 7, 8, the nature and consequence of the sin of apostacy are illustrated by an allusion to ground which no culture improves, and the wild produce of which is to be burned; and thus professing Christians are solemnly warned to beware, lest, through their unfruitfulness, they should be left to fall into it. Ver. 9—12. The apostle having declared his favourable opinion of the Hebrew believers, exhorts them to persevere in works of faith and labours of love, telling them that God would not fail to remember his gracious promises to those who gave such evidences of their covenant-relation to him; and telling them, also, that by being diligent followers of the saints, in their graces and godly conversation, they might attain to the assurance of Christian hope, through the assurance of their possessing the Christian character. He concludes, in ver. 13—20, with unfolding the security of the covenant of grace, as confirmed to Abraham by the word and oath of God, and which extends to all the heirs of Abraham's faith. The oath of God cannot add to the validity of his word. There is, nevertheless, an obvious distinction between them. When his oath is added to his word, all the attributes of Deity are engaged and pledged to support that word, and make it good. This affords strong consolation to those who, from a deep conviction of their guilt, and danger, and helplessness, have fled to Christ, and laid hold on him as the ground, and his salvation as the object of their hope; and this hope, like an anchor, keeps them steadfast in their adherence to the truth and cause of God. Piercing through every intervening object, and resting on the word and oath of Jehovah the Redeemer for all needful mercy and grace, it elevates the believer above the world's smiles, and cheers him under its frowns, and it fills him with joyful anticipations of the blood-bought inheritance, of which Christ, as the fore-runner, has taken possession in his name.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Since those who are renewed to repentance shall be saved, the apostle's language should not be made a ground of discouragement to the trembling soul that pleads guilty before God, and implores mercy through Christ; and since perseverance is the believer's privilege, as well as duty, none who are truly in Christ shall ever become final apostates from him. It is only, however, in so far as the fruits of faith evince the reality of our interest in him, that we can properly and legitimately derive comfort from this doctrine; and since knowledge, and gifts, and lively affections, are no certain evidences of conversion without brokenness of heart for sin, and without faith which worketh by love, we should seek to possess these essential features of Christian character, and thus to arrive at the assurance of Christian hope. Let us adore the condescension of God to our weakness in confirming, by oath, his gracious covenant. We need this strong consolation to support and cheer us under our sense of natural infirmity and remaining depravity, and amid the trials and spiritual conflicts which we meet with in our Christian course. Let us therefore pray for faith and hope equal to the security which our redeeming God has given us; and by staying ourselves upon him, and perseveringly following his footsteps, we shall be kept steadfast and in peace here, and at last inherit the promises.

PRAYER.

Gracious and ever blessed God, with deepest reverence we desire to prostrate ourselves before thee. By the new and living way which has been opened up in the gospel we would approach unto thee; the helpful influences of thy Holy Spirit we implore from thee. We thank thee for this renewed opportunity of singing thy most worthy praise, of reading thy most blessed word, and of calling upon thy name by prayer. It is but a small portion of our race on whom thou hast conferred such invaluable advantages for eternity as we enjoy. But wherefore is it, O our God, wherefore is it that, when thou didst most reasonably look that we should bring forth corresponding fruit, our grapes have been the grapes of Sodom, and our clusters the clusters of Gomorrah? Justly might the dread mandate go forth against us, Cut them down, why cumber they the ground? But spare us, O Lord, spare us yet a little longer, till we acquaint ourselves with thee, and be at peace. Be merciful to us, O our God, be merciful to us, and heal our souls, for we have sinned against thee. Let thy hand be upon the Man of thy right hand in our behalf, and may he be made unto us, as he is unto every one that believeth, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. May thy Spirit descend to purify our hearts from the deep moral depravity which naturally pervades them, to implant in us the principles, and affections, and desires of a new nature, and by his continued and powerful operation, to support, and cherish, and mature them, until we bring forth all the fruits of righteousness. We rejoice to believe that wherever thou hast begun a good work, thou wilt perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Hold up our goings in thy paths, that our footsteps may not slip; and when at any time, through the remaining corruption of our nature, and the violence of temptation, we may fall, let us not be utterly cast down, but do thou graciously restore our souls, renew us to repentance, and keep us by thy mighty power through faith unto salvation. O grant unto us the consolation and support which arise from the good hope through grace, that when time to us shall be no more, we shall enter into the joy of our Lord. Prepare us, on this preparation evening, for the duties of the ensuing sabbath. Send help out of Zion to thy faithful servants; and may thy people take no rest to themselves, nor give rest to thee, until thou makest Jerusalem a praise in the midst of the earth. Be gracious to all whom we ought to remember before thy throne, according as their several and varied cases may require. Be unto them, and unto us, a sin-pardoning, a heart-sanctifying, a soul-refreshing, a covenant-providing, a faith-strengthening, a hope-inspiring, a prayer-answering God, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FORTY-FIFTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM i. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 145—160.

REMARKS.

Our duty and our privilege is to 'pray always with all prayer, and to watch thereunto with all perseverance.' We have especial need to wait upon the Lord by prayer, when 'trouble and anguish have taken hold upon us.' This, judging from the 145th verse, seems to have been the psalmist's case at present, and what does he then do? He lays his case before the Lord by prayer, and he does so with his whole heart. Strange it would have been, if the prayer of a man in trouble and anguish had been only the prayer of the lips. And if we did carefully mark the workings of our own hearts, every hour, of the restless propensity to live without God, it would appear strange that we should, any hour, neglect prayer for mercy to pardon, and grace to help; and stranger still that we should, any hour, pray only with our lips. Like the psalmist, let our whole heart present the prayer which in words our lips express. And like him let the whole heart be desirous that the Lord may hear the prayer; and let the heart, in the spirit of prayer, look up and wait, after the prayer is presented, for an answer. The psalmist's prayer here is, 'save me;' and that is the prayer which suits all circumstances in the case of sinful men in this evil world. Seek, in every prayer, to be saved from your own corrupted and godless hearts; and if you obtain an answer to that prayer, you will be comforted, whatever be your trouble; soothed, whatever be your anguish. Now always when we pray and look up for a gracious answer, we must maintain, through grace, the psalmist's resolution here expressed, 'I will keep thy statutes, I shall keep thy testimonies.' And sweet, and precious, and profitable, it is to make, like the psalmist, prayer our first work in the morning. If this were our constant care, and if, like David too, all our wakeful thoughts during the night were thoughts of spiritual meditation and believing prayer, we might well 'hope in God's word,' that all things would work together for our good. We might then have 'the witness in ourselves,' that God loved us specially, and was working in us graciously, and be well assured that he would hear us because of his love to us, and quicken us because of his covenant with us. Meditate on the word in the night-watches, pour out your whole heart before the Lord in the morning, walk with God throughout the day, let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, and be always watchful unto prayer, and, regarding yourself as led to all this by the Spirit of the Lord, you will then be well assured, that, however your spiritual or temporal enemies may 'draw nigh' to do you evil, the Lord is near you to fulfil his word to you, and to be your refuge, and strength, and present help in trouble. If we be unto God a people, he will be unto us a God. Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you. Forget not God's law, and he will consider all your affliction, and deliver you. But if we walk not with God and keep not his law, we shall not find God as our friend in need, nor our friend at all. 'Great are his tender mercies,' and many are the ills to which we are exposed, but neither our misfortunes nor his tenderness will move him to our help, unless we can, through grace, truly say with the psalmist, 'yet do I not decline from thy testimonies.' Do we delight in the law of the Lord, and are all its precepts precious in our regards, because they are divine? Does it humble our hearts to mark abounding ungodliness, and are we grieved to behold transgressors, and have we the spiritual confidence of a living faith in God, and in his pure word of truth, and precious word of promise? If so, and in the degree in which it is so, we resemble the psalmist. And we are not safe for an hour, because we are not partakers of grace at all, unless we have some measure of resemblance to him who was the man after God's own heart.

PRAYER.

O Lord, enable us now to approach thee in prayer, with spiritual reverence and living faith. We desire to be enabled to adore thee with spiritual understanding, as the God in whom we live, and move, and have our being. And we desire to be enabled to adore thee in spiritual faith, as the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who hast begotten thy people again unto a lively hope by his resurrection from the dead. On this morning of thy holy sabbath, we desire to be enabled to look by faith at the place where the Lord lay; and whilst we endeavour thus to see the empty sepulchre of our redeeming Lord, may our hearts look upward to him as now exalted as a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to sinners like us, and the remission of sins. O Lord, we can neither of ourselves spiritually know, nor spiritually repent of our sin. Grant to us, we pray thee, a spiritual view of our condition. May we discern our sin, and all our sin, and feel the exceeding sinfulness of sin. O how our hearts are naturally alienated from the life of God; how we worship the creature, and live to ourselves! And, O Lord, who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? No man, and no one but that Spirit who, we rejoice to know, is free to the chief of sinners. O may he apply to us the washing of regeneration. May he sanctify and restore us to thee. May he purge our consciences from dead works, and make us truly alive to thee, and enable us to walk by faith, and to walk in the way of all that holiness without which no man shall see thee in glory. Bless to us and to all, for conviction of sin, for sanctification of heart, and for revival in holiness, the means of grace to be used on this holy day. May the Spirit of the Lord speak to souls this day by his servants, with convincing, converting, and edifying power. May the word read and preached this day, be quick and powerful, and prove a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. And may many humbled souls this day find Jesus to be precious, and be quickened and qualified, through his imparted grace, henceforth to follow him, in new obedience, and in all duty, through good and through bad report. O take us into covenant with thee; save us from our own spirit, and from the power of the world, and from the power of Satan. May Satan's power in human souls be overcome through the word and the Spirit of him who is stronger than he; and Jews and Gentiles throughout the earth become regenerated and obedient subjects of Jesus. O may our fellowship be every hour with thee, and our hearts in every thing devoted to thy glory. Gracious and Almighty Father, hear our prayer, and bless us abundantly, for the Lord Jesus' sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 7—11.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXIX. 161—176.

REMARKS.

There is no little important matter contained in this small portion of the divine word. All have gone astray from God, and from the sources of true happiness, like sheep who have strayed from the shepherd and the green pastures. God seeks the wanderers, desires to make them his true servants, in mercy leads those whom he is to save, to meditate on the commandments and doctrines of his word, searches and sanctifies their hearts through the truth by the Spirit of truth, thus makes their souls to live, and so fits them to glorify him. Then he cherishes this life regularly by his ordinances, quickens it by his providences, and employs it in the willing and delighted obedience of his law. The principle of spiritual life in the soul makes the individual, with decided preference, to choose the way of the divine precepts, and to select, as his peculiar delights, the present joys and the future hopes of salvation. This person regards Christ as his life, and the Lord God as his helper, and all his strength. He discerns a singular beauty in holiness, and he marks and appreciates this divine beauty in every precept of his Father's word, in every requirement of his Father's will, and in every act of responsible duty. Like the psalmist too, his tongue speaks to others of the preciousness of his Father's word, as the word of salvation, and the word of holiness. He owns the Lord to be his teacher, and feels that he alone can open up to man the spiritual views, and impart to man the spiritual relish of the divine testimonies, and statutes, and precepts. And he applies to God by prayer, to have his understanding enlightened, and his heart comforted according to his faithful word of promise. He says habitually in his heart, 'thou God seest me, all my ways are before thee;' and it gives him delight when he finds the Lord graciously enabling him to keep his testimonies with his whole soul. Oftentimes a-day does he lift up his soul in prayer and praise to his covenant God, and he feels that whatever happens to him is right and good, because his God reigneth. He abhors sin as treachery to his God. When he goes to his Father's word in darkness, or depression, he is often made to rejoice in that word, as one that findeth great spoil. He finds his heart always in peace when it is in love with holiness; and he knows that if his love of holiness were perfect and perpetual, the tranquillity of his peace nothing could ruffle. And his determination is, that, in the strength and grace of that Spirit whose very temple he is, he will reverence, and obey, and walk with God, unshaken by any persecution that may ever arise for righteousness' sake, and patient under whatever trials his God may deem it wise to send.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we are indeed unworthy to take thy holy name into our lips. Do thou grant us the Spirit of grace and supplication, and quicken us to call upon thy name. We know not our own hearts, but thou, O Lord, knowest them; they are deceitful above all things, and thy word assures us that the imaginations of their thoughts are by nature evil continually. Give us grace to know ourselves. Prevent us from saying peace, peace, to our souls, whilst we may be living without holiness and without thee. Incline and fit us for the work of self-examination. What we have read or heard of thy word this day, enable us to apply faithfully to ourselves. May we know and remember well, whatever of this searching and sanctifying word is specially applicable and suitable to our case. O may thy Spirit take of the things of Christ, and show them unto us; may he search our hearts by his searching word. May it be indeed spirit and life to our souls. And then, O Lord, may it be as a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path. May we ever apply to it as our guide, and read and meditate on it daily, our minds ever inquiring, Lord, what wilt thou have us to do? And, alike in health, and in sickness, in prosperity, and in adversity, may its precious promises, and precepts, and spiritual views, be sweet to our taste; yea, sweeter than honey to our mouth. And may he whose word it is, he who is the life and the light of men, be ever regarded by us as the chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely. O may we have grace steadily to realize our life hid with Christ in God. May we really be, and have the blessedness of, steadily realizing ourselves as being members of the Redeemer's body, of his flesh, and of his bones. And may we live by that faith without which it is impossible in one thought, or word, or deed, to please thee. May we truly live as not of this world, and as truly feeling that we are not our own. And, in solitude, and in society, in leisure, and in business, may thy Spirit ever maintain in us that love to thee, and to all, which is the fulfilling of the law. As instruments of righteousness in the hand of the Spirit, may we faithfully discharge every duty, temporal and spiritual, which we owe to every one, in their several places and relations. And do thou guide us every day, and guard us every night, and to us fulfil thy promise, I will never leave thee, and I will never forsake thee. When we would wander from thee, do thou graciously arrest and restore us again; and with enlargement of heart, enable us, to the end, to run in the way of thy commandments. Hear, Lord, our prayer, and grant us all we need, to fit us fully to serve and glorify thee, for the sake of him who is all our righteousness, and our all-prevailing Intercessor. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XLIII.

REMARKS.

The prophet is in this chapter reproving the Israelites for their departure from the worship of the living and true God. Though they had been favoured highly above all the nations of the earth, by being instructed as to the way in which the Deity was to be worshipped, yet their history testifies that they frequently abused their privileges; and went and served strange gods, even the gods of the heathen. For this departure from the truth, God was angry with them, and withdrew from their temple that presence which had made it the glory and excellence of the whole earth. Yet the prophet distinctly informs them, that if they would return from their idolatries, and forsake their evil practices, that God, whose character is mercy itself, would forgive their iniquities, and would return to them, and ‘dwell in the midst of them for ever.’ And then he concludes, by pointing out with minuteness the various duties they should perform in fulfilling, hereafter, the religious observances God had established in their land.

Highly favoured as the ancient Jews were, our privileges may be regarded as even still more exalted. The Lord has given to us a completed revelation of his will, wherein are contained all the things which belong to our peace. We have detailed to us the sufferings and worth of the blessed Saviour; and we have pointed out to us most minutely what the ‘Lord doth require of us.’ Yet is it a fact, no less prominent in our history than even it was in theirs, that we neglect our privileges; and amidst the weekly preaching of the gospel, and the frequent dispensations of its ordinances, there are many who are either at ease in Zion, or are devoting the whole energies and affections of their souls to the service of another God than the ‘God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.’ We may not, like the Jews, have our visible idols and altars, where we give away the service that should have been given to God alone. But we may have our invisible idols. If the world, or aught that savours of it, occupy that place in our affections which the Deity should have, then are we as much idolaters as were those whom the prophet in this chapter was reproving. Let us beware lest by abusing our gospel privileges, God in judgment should remove them away, and leave us in the darkness which our souls by nature love. Let us prize them highly, let us cultivate them diligently, let us improve by them steadily, exercising repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, if so, it may be that the Lord may continue to be gracious to us, and ‘dwell in the midst of us for ever.’

PRAYER.

Most gracious and most merciful Father, be pleased to regard us with compassion, as we now around our family altar offer up our morning supplications. Let thine ear be open to the cry of thine erring and feeble children, as now conscious, in some degree, of our great sin. We prostrate ourselves before thy throne, and confess that we have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and are not worthy of thy favour. The Lord be merciful to us, and bless us, and cause the light of his countenance to shine upon us. The Lord pardon our iniquities, for they are very great. Look upon us in Christ; see us in the face of thine Anointed; and for his sake blot all our sins out of the book of thy remembrance. Blessed be thy name, O Father of mercies, for that great love wherewith thou hast loved us. Herein indeed was love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us, and gave his only Son to be our propitiation. Kindle within our souls a flame of affection to him who suffered and died for us. Touch these hearts, which are naturally cold and dead, as with a live coal from off thine altar, and give us to say of Jesus, He is precious to our souls; he is to us the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. And O grant us an interest in his sacrifice, and give us the testimony of thy Spirit with our spirit that we are members of the household of faith, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. In thy great mercy, O Lord, thou hast highly favoured us. Ours is a land of bibles, and sabbaths, and sanctuaries. The Sun of righteousness has risen above us with healing beneath his wings, revealing to us the path that leads to everlasting light. O let the preaching of the gospel be profitable to our souls; may we all feel it to be the power of God, and the wisdom of God to salvation. May the word which was yesterday spoken to us not soon be forgotten, but may its beneficial effects be visible in our conduct, causing us to abstain from all ungodliness, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in the present evil world. Forbid that it ever should be said of us, that light has come into the world, and that we love the darkness rather than the light, our deeds being evil. But may we walk as the children of the light and not of the darkness, remembering that we are not our own, but bought with a price, even the precious blood of Christ; and therefore are bound to glorify God with our bodies and spirits which are his. Let thy presence and blessing rest upon us this day. May all the members of this family walk as becometh those who are called by the name of Christ. Counting the days past more than sufficient to have been working the will of the flesh, and that henceforth we shall live not to ourselves, but to the God that redeems us. And may our humble morning prayer rise with acceptance before thee, for the sake of him in whom our trust is placed, even Jesus Christ the Saviour. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS VII.

REMARKS.

The exalted nature and character of Christ is a favourite theme with all the sacred writers. They dwell upon it with the delight of those who know that it is to them a matter of the deepest importance. In reasoning with the Hebrews, it was necessary that St Paul should give the subject a decided prominence. For as the Christian was to supersede the Mosaic economy, he could not naturally expect that they would abandon the faith of their fathers, and embrace the religion of Jesus, till they were convinced of the superiority of the one over the other. And therefore, as in the former, there had been an order established to offer up the daily sacrifice for the people, which order was now to be abolished, it was necessary that he should show them the excellence of the High Priest of our faith. And this he does by quoting from the Old Testament scriptures, the authority of which all the Hebrews acknowledged; founding Christ's claims to their service upon the fact, that he needed 'not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once, when he offered up himself.'

Nothing can be more consolatory to the Christian than to know that once in the end has Christ appeared to take away sin by the offering of himself; that he having made his soul an offering for sin, 'there is now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.' And it is consolatory to them, that as the priests of old made intercessions for the people, so 'if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ.' 'Seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us.' Let us therefore cast our burdens on him, and while we strive to live as becomes those for whom the Saviour died, let us take courage in contending with our foes, from the fact that 'he is able to save to the very uttermost all that will come unto God by him.'

PRAYER.

To whom else, O Lord, can we go but unto thee, thou only hast the words of eternal life. Thanks be to thee for that freedom of access which we have to thy throne through Jesus Christ our great High Priest. We bless thee that thou didst think upon us in our lost condition, and didst send thy Son to seek and save us. We thank thee that he became bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, that in the very form in which the sin had been committed, in the same form should the atonement be made. Let our souls be washed in that fountain which was opened in Israel for sin and uncleanness. Let us all have an interest in that atoning sacrifice which Jesus offered when he expired on Calvary. We bless thee for the guidance and protection which thou hast extended towards us during the day now drawing to a close. In the house, and by the way, thou hast been our guardian; and in the midst of a multitude of dangers which our eye could not see, nor our arm arrest, we have walked in safety, thou the Lord sustaining us. O what shall we render to the Lord for all his goodness, and for his works of wonder done to the children of men! Our souls and all that is within us would be stirred up to praise and magnify the Lord, for he forgiveth our iniquities, he healeth our diseases, he crowneth us continually with loving kindness and tender mercies. This night, O Lord, ere we close our eyes in slumber, we would make acknowledgment of the many sins and shortcomings which have this day marked and characterized us. Our conduct has often been inconstant as it was inconsistent. Our light has not always been shining, our principles have not always been practised, our aim has not always been to promote thy glory, our very imaginations have been evil in thy sight. O deal not with us according to our merits, but according to thy mercy; for if thou wert to reward us according to our deeds, thou wouldst assuredly cut us down as cumberers of the ground. For the sake of our dear Redeemer, blot our transgressions out of the book of thy remembrance. And be pleased, O Lord, to grant unto us an enlarged measure of grace, that henceforth we may live not to ourselves, but to the God that redeems us; that the light of our Christian profession may so shine, that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify thee our Father in heaven. O give us to feel the constraining influence of the love of Christ, conforming us more and more to that blessed example he has set us, and causing us to be followers of those who through faith and patience are now inheriting the promises. Most holy Father, thou who rulest and upholdest all things, in whom we live, and move, and have our being, take us this night under thy peculiar care. Let thine arm be around us as a protecting shield. Let no harm come near our dwelling-place. We go to repose confident in this, that he who keeps Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. May we meet together in peace and health on a new morning, with hearts filled with gratitude for all thy tender mercies. Graciously hear our evening supplications, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—EZEKIEL XLVII.

REMARKS.

The vision which the prophet in this passage is represented as beholding, seems to point to the future history of the church. The gospel, after the ascension of our Saviour, was but like a trifling rivulet proceeding, indeed, from the holiest of all sources, the heavenly temple of God and of the Lamb, but as yet hardly noticeable amid the prevailing systems of the world. Soon, however, its hallowed influence was to extend and deepen till from less to more all the nations of the earth should own its sacred character, and its divine claims. The east country, the cradle of science, an apt type of the more civilized portions of the world; and the wilderness, peopled only by rude tribes symbolizing the uncultivated tenants of more distant lands, were alike to partake of its healing and refreshing waters; and that stream, which at first silently sought the light from under the threshold of the spiritual temple, was to swell and spread till the great sea itself, the prophetic symbol of all the nations of the earth, should experience its effects through every portion of its own wide expanse. These effects are peculiarly characteristic, ver. 9. The necessity of a reviving work of grace among the children of men, the remarkable success which is yet to attend the gospel, and the soul-healing and quickening influence which it is to exert, are here very powerfully exhibited. And though this effect must necessarily result from divine grace, and the Holy Spirit's operations, we find, as we proceed, that the active exertions of a gospel ministry are not to be dispensed with. The ministers and preachers of the gospel, spoken of here as fishers, and in the

New Testament, as 'fishers of men,' are to be zealously employed during all the period of its rapid progress, in gathering into their nets those multitudes for whose conversion and revival it is sent. True, the happy influence of the divine message is not to be at first universal. Besides the flowing waters of this blessed stream, there are likewise to be found the troublesome and stagnant waters of marshes and pools, incapable of sustaining life, and tending rather to spread infection and disease, wherever their influence extends. These being intended to illustrate the condition of the obstinately rebellious and ungrateful, who will not be reclaimed, shall never be healed, but shall be given to salt, to indicate the melancholy and irreversible doom to which such characters are to be consigned. But all along the river's bank, trees laden with delicious fruit for food, and clothed with fresh leaves for medicine, indicated the ample provision which is to be made in the gospel economy for the sustenance of the spiritual life of the church, and for the healing of the nations.

It is of importance to observe, in this and many similar prophecies, the intimate and inseparable connection of the ancient people of God with the latter day of the church of Christ. The Gentile nations converted to the knowledge of the truth, are not for ever to supplant the Lord's peculiar people, but, on the contrary, are to become united with them as joint participants in the divine mercy, or rather are to be attached to them, and made to partake along with them of that rich provision which the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, has made for their spiritual welfare, under their own crucified King. For it is 'according to the twelve tribes of Israel,' that the Lord's people are here informed they are to inherit the land; and when they divide it by lot, the strangers that shall sojourn among them, shall likewise receive their inheritance.

From these considerations let us learn to value the gospel in all its rich provisions, and to promote its progress by all the means in our power.

PRAYER.

O thou eternal and ever blessed Jehovah! look down at this time from thy heavenly throne, and accept the imperfect services of us who are now assembled before thee. O Lord, we acknowledge that we cannot plead any merits or services of our own to entitle us to the high privilege of coming into thy presence; and we confess our inability to seek thy face in an acceptable manner. Our righteousness is as filthy rags. Our best services are tainted with sin, and every day has added to the weight and number of those iniquities which attach to our character. Were it not that thou hast graciously promised to forgive our sins, and to hear our prayers, we should not dare to hope for acceptance when we cry to thee. But pleading the merits of Him whom thou hearest alway, we venture to approach thee; and we earnestly beseech thee, O Lord, to be very merciful to us sinners. Show us the value of a Saviour's love. Enable us to accept of Christ Jesus in all his offices, as our Mediator and intercessor. Help us to rely simply on his blood, and to repose all our confidence in his gracious advocacy. May we no longer regard thee as an enemy, but may we rejoice in thee as our best and most powerful friend; feeling that being justified by faith we have peace with God. Strengthen our weak faith. O Lord, give us grace to resist our temptations and to withstand our spiritual foes. Vouchsafe to us a perpetual sense of thy presence, that we may at once fear to offend thee, and love to serve thee, and enable us ever to live near to thee. Shed abroad in our hearts the sacred influences of the Holy Spirit, that so the good seed of thy word and gospel may grow up unto perfection in our experience and history. And may we never be content with inferior attainments, but be still led to press forward unto the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. We thank thee for the cheering intimations of thy holy word, that a period of universal holiness, and peace, and joy, is approaching, and though at present men are too generally sunk in ignorance of thee, and in a state of sin, that we are permitted to look forward to an era in which the bright glory and happy dominion of our exalted Saviour shall be hailed by all tribes and tongues throughout the habitable globe. We bless thee for the progress which the gospel has already made, and is now making; and we beseech thee, to hasten the time when the small stream of gospel light and liberty issuing from the temple of God, shall spread and deepen till it covers the earth as the waters cover the channels of the sea; when thine ancient people shall see their guilt and apostacy, and shall humble themselves, and return unto thee from whom they have deeply revolted, and when it shall be said to thy ransomed church, Arise, shine, for thy light is come; the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. O stir up among all thy professed servants an ardent desire to advance the cause of the gospel. Increase the number and the zeal of thy ministers, for the harvest is plenteous but the labourers are few; and bless whatever means are employed consistently with thy holy will, for advancing the enlargement of thy Son's kingdom. Pour out upon all thy people a Spirit of grace and of supplication, and may they not cease to cry unto thee until thou hast established, and till thou hast made Jerusalem a praise in the earth. And now, O Lord, we beseech thee, to take us, and all who are dear to us, under thy peculiar care and protection during this day. Keep us in thy fear, defend us from our temptations. Enable us to redeem the time, and to advance with diligence in the narrow way that leadeth unto life, and may this day be thus rendered a means of preparing us for meeting thee at death, and at the bar of judgment. And do thou graciously hear and accept of us, for the sake of Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LVIII. 1—5.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS VIII.

REMARKS.

Following out his argument, as to the priestly office of our blessed Redeemer, the apostle begins this chapter by announcing the sum, or rather the chief and fundamental article of the whole doctrine which he is engaged in promulgating, viz., that we have such an High Priest as he has described in the former chapter, of the order of Melchizedec; holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners; who having fulfilled his sacrificial office, is now exalted to the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens. This sublime assurance brings comfort to the desponding Christian; for it teaches him that the means of his recovery are at hand, that life and immortality are brought to light, and that the dark valley of the shadow of death, which his Master has trod before him, leads to a glorious inheritance in the mansions above. But the apostle is even more particular. He assures us, that this High Priest is still executing the functions of his office. Exalted to the throne of God, he is even now 'a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle,' the former signifying the glorious place of his abode on high, where he is for ever engaged in presenting his intercessions for us to the Father, pleading his own merits and sufferings on our behalf, and the latter symbolizing his true church on earth, with which he has graciously promised to be present, even to the end of the world. For this benevolent and gracious work, how admirably fitted is our adorable Redeemer! Into the very presence of the Godhead on high has he carried with him the body in which he tabernacled while on earth. With what force then must his intercessions on behalf of sinners be presented; and how comfortable an assurance does this thought afford us that they must be successful! But to this sanctuary service, he adds, that of the true tabernacle, or spiritual church, 'which the Lord pitched and not man.' Like the priests of old who, from the door of the temple, pronounced a benediction upon the people, our exalted Saviour looks abroad on his church, and showers down on her his rich and abundant blessing. He orders all events in his providence for her real good; giving her times of refreshing from his presence, or visiting her with trial for her purification and improvement ; causes the wrath of men to praise him, and restraining the remainder of wrath.

What a delightful reflection ! the great work to which the Messiah was commissioned, has thus the very surest pledge for its complete accomplishment.

The grand external distinction between the Mosaic and the gospel dispensation, lies in the spirituality of the latter, which addresses itself to the heart, and demands a spiritual homage. Hence the apostle directs the attention of the Hebrews to a prophetic declaration of Jeremiah, xxxi. 31, with reference to the abolition of the Mosaic covenant, in which he states, that after that event God would put his laws into the minds of his people, and write them in their hearts. The New Testament requires not the cold exterior services of a pompous ritual, but it demands a sincere and hearty obedience to the law of God, and an unwearying confidence in the promises of God, and the work of the Redeemer ; and when this period shall have reached its perfection, the full fruition of the plan of salvation shall be brought about, and the ignorance and ungodliness of men shall universally yield to the light, and the love, and the holiness of pure religion. Conscience and the dread anticipation of deserved wrath, shall no longer keep the sinner under bondage ; for the Lord will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will be remember no more. Such is the end of the Christian's hopes, such the object of the church's history and experience. How delightful the prospect ! How blessed the assurance ! And how well calculated to stimulate our feeble energies, and to urge on our steady footsteps in the way of life !

PRAYER.

O thou eternal and ever blessed Jehovah, the God of all the families of the earth, behold us thy servants prostrating ourselves before thee, this evening, as humble suppliants of thy mercy. Wherewithal shall we come before the Lord, or bow ourselves before the Most High God. Behold we have no merits to plead, no rights to demand. We must cast ourselves, as we now do, on thy undeserved mercy vouchsafed unto us through the mediation of thy blessed Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ ; who hath given himself a ransom for us, and through whose intercession thou seest neither iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel. We thank thee, O Lord, that thou hast so graciously visited the lost and ruined race of Adam, by the mission of thy Son into the world, and hast through him bestowed upon us so many privileges, and so many promises. Without thy mercy thus manifested in him, how sad must have been our condition, how miserable our prospects ! And when we meditate upon thy love, we desire to feel the warmest sentiments of gratitude to thee the Father of mercies, and to him the Fountain of every blessing. Forbid, we beseech thee, that we should continue to live in forgetfulness of thee, or that the love we owe thee should fail to be manifested in our lives. Let us not be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. O grant us true repentance, and so impress us with the danger of our natural state, and with thy hatred of iniquity, as to induce us henceforward to live in the exercise of the principles of our holy faith, and under the powerful impression of our obligation to devote ourselves to thy service. Behold what manner of love thou our Father in heaven hast bestowed upon us, that we should be called the children of God ! Grant us grace, we entreat thee, to be followers of thee, as dear children, and to honour thee in our thoughts, words, and actions. We commit ourselves to thy care during this night. May we lay us down in thy fear, and arise in thy favour ; and may we be fitted by the repose of the night for a diligent and faithful discharge of duty on the morrow. Look in kindness upon all who are dear to us. May we all be united under Christ Jesus as our common head, our elder brother, our best and truest friend. Bless all who belong to the household of faith, especially those of the same parish and congregation with ourselves. Grant that the holy religion of the cross may produce its happy fruits in rich abundance among us. May vice in all its degraded forms give place to the holiness, and peace, and joy of the faith of Jesus ; and may old and young, rich and poor among us, learn to be faithful to the cause of our blessed Master. Extend the influence of our holy faith among all nations, and may all the ends of the earth remember and turn unto the Lord. Gather thy people Israel into thy fold. Stir up a spirit of prayer on their behalf among all who know thy name, and send forth many faithful and devoted ministers to proclaim in every quarter of the globe the unsearchable riches of Christ. These our humble prayers, O Lord, are before thee. Hear us, we beseech thee, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 9—15.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL I.

REMARKS.

The profaneness of the Jewish people having at length reached its climax, the dreadful threatenings which had so frequently been pronounced upon them by the prophets, began to be fulfilled. Having lost their independence as a nation, and having ventured to rebel against their Chaldean conquerors, Nebuchadnezzar seized the excuse thus afforded him for establishing more rigorously than ever his dominion in Judea. It was with this view that he bound and carried captive Jehoiakim the king, dismantled the temple of many of its sacred treasures, and caused a certain number of the noblest of the Jewish youths to be brought to Babylon, that they might be educated in the learning and religion of their new masters, and thus contribute, by their station and influence, to maintain his authority over their countrymen. Among these youths, as we find by this chapter, were Daniel the prophet, to whose divine inspiration we are indebted for this account, and the three children who were afterwards so barbarously exposed to the fury of the burning furnace, and so miraculously preserved amid the flames. It was not the policy of the king of Babylon to treat these young men with severity. On the contrary, being desirous to inspire them with love for their new country, and to wean them from the associations of childhood, he at once introduced them to the luxuries of the royal palace, and placed them under the charge of one of his courtiers, that they might be educated in the mode most likely at once to win their affections and to expand their minds. But here we witness the importance of early instruction in the principles of true religion. Daniel, whose influence it would appear prevailed over the other three to follow his example, resolved that he would not indulge in the sumptuous viands with which his appetite was courted, but would content himself with a spare diet and simple fare. His reasons, doubtless, were well founded, and such as might have been expected from his character.

Whatever motives induced Daniel and his fellows to abstain as they did from the indulgences by which they were solicited, we are assured that their conduct was approved by their divine Master. The fears of their keeper, the prince of the eunuchs, lest their personal appearance might suffer from poverty of diet, and thus his own life be endangered, which prevented his listening to the petition of these godly youths, were proved to be unfounded. The simple food of which they partook was blessed by God as the means of health and happy spirits; and the kindness of Melzar, the steward of the prince of the eunuchs, in granting their request, even at great personal risk, was acknowledged by God in the speedy and manifest improvement of their personal appearance. Nor can we doubt that the superiority which they afterwards discovered over the young men who 'did eat the portion of the king's meat,' and even over the magicians and astrologers of the realm in those very sciences on an acquaintance with which they most prided themselves, was to be traced to the approbation of that great God, who, in one way or another, never fails to afford the amplest attestation to the self-denial, zeal, or devotion, of his faithful servants; who, in exile and captivity, in imprisonment and pain, follows his people with the kind consolations of his grace and the merciful dispensations of his providence; who, if he does not see meet to remove his stroke from them, or to free them from their foes, gives them peace of mind in their severest sufferings, and causes even their enemies to be at peace with them, and all who observe them acknowledge that blessed is the man who trusteth in him.

From this passage, then, let us learn, 1st. The importance of self-denial. 2d. Let us learn that good dispositions will generally gain friends under the most unfavourable circumstances. 3d. Let us learn to cultivate a spirit of contentment with the lot which providence has appointed us, making the most of our opportunities, improving our advantages, and diligently devoting ourselves to the duties to which we are called.

PRAYER.

We desire to unite this morning, O Almighty Father, in adoring thy perfections, and in thanking thee for our continued preservation, and for all our mercies. But, O Lord, we confess we had been too long ungrateful and disobedient. In vain had thy perfections been manifested in thy works of creation and providence; in vain had the gracious invitations of the gospel been proclaimed to us. We too long and too frequently continued to follow after the devices and desires of our own hearts. We rejected thy counsel, and would none of thy reproof. But thou wouldest not cast us off for ever. Thou didst graciously continue to invite us to the knowledge and reception of thy truth, and we are now permitted to approach thy throne through the mediation of that adorable Redeemer whom thou hearest always. O may our gratitude to thee be permanent and practical! May the goodness of God lead us to that repentance which needeth not to be repented of. May the grace of God, which bringeth salvation, teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. Teach us the comparative value of time and of eternity. Enable us to make the only wise choice between them; and in seeking for heaven, may we not forget that thou requirest of us to resist temptation in whatever form it may assail us, and to renounce sin, however pleasing to our natural propensities. May the example of thy youthful servants, of whose faithfulness we have just been reading in thy holy word, encourage us to maintain our devotedness to thee in the midst of a crooked and perverse world; and may we be ready, at all times, to make whatever sacrifices thou mayst see meet to demand, in order that we may bear our faithful testimony to the purity and holiness of thy law, and to the justice and supremacy of thy demands. Watch over us this day for good; defend us from all our enemies; encourage us in resisting temptation; and enable us to walk as in thy presence, and to live continually to thy glory. Give us the same mind which was also in Christ, that we may be humble, forgiving, and patient. Lord, bless, we beseech thee, all whom we love. Bless our friends and relations every where. May they be thy friends, united with thee by a living faith, and with us by stronger ties than nature or earthly affection can supply; and when at last the purposes of thy providence are finished with us, one by one, upon earth, may we meet to part no more in the glorious abodes which are prepared for thy servants in the land of heavenly promise. Bless the parish and congregation to which, in thy providence, we belong. May religion, pure and undefiled, flourish among us. In every heart and in every family do thou preside. Discourage the works of darkness and of vice. Strengthen the better principles of thy people, and shed abroad thy Holy Spirit upon them. Visit with thy supports and encouragements of thy grace thy servant who ministers among us in holy things, and may he experience the true happiness of a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Bless and prosper thy universal church. Spread her boundaries from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. Bless especially our beloved Zion. Stir up in her ministers and people a more ardent zeal for thy honour and glory, and render her an instrument of extensive usefulness both at home and abroad. Give prosperity to all the measures adopted by her courts for advancing the interests of the gospel, and cheer the hearts of thy servants by establishing the work of their hands in thy cause. We beseech thee to hear these our humble prayers for the sake of Christ Jesus, whom thou hearest always. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXIV.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS IX.

REMARKS.

The chief object of the apostle in this chapter is to show that the blood of Christ is necessary to the ratification and efficacy of the covenant of grace. With this view, writing as he does to his Hebrew countrymen, who were too apt to repose in the formalities of the Jewish ritual, he begins the chapter by an enumeration of several important parts of the tabernacle and its furniture, each of which symbolized or illustrated some great truth connected with the work of man's salvation. He thus reminds them that the high priest, in accomplishing the service of God, though he habitually went into the first or outer tabernacle, entered the second, or the holy of holies, only once every year, and this not without blood, which he there offered in expiation of the sins first of himself, and then of the people. This act of his, striking and solemn as it was, and well calculated to awe the multitude by its mystery, appointed, too, as it had been, by God, still had no inherent efficacy. Its value mainly consisted in its being a type or symbol of the great expiatory offering of Jesus, our spiritual High Priest, who, having laid down his life on the altar of Calvary, entered into heaven, that holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us, and carried with him there not the blood of the sacrifice only, but the very body in which he suffered as our expiation.

Hence he argues that the blood of Christ, symbolized as it had been by the blood of the tabernacle offerings, must be effectual for the purification of believers; and he appeals to their Jewish principles in confirmation of this conclusion, arguing from the acknowledged efficacy of the Mosaic sacrifices in purifying from outward pollutions, to that of Christ's offering in the cleansing of the soul and conscience from its spiritual guilt. But there is another view of the Saviour's work which leads to the same conclusion, and to which the apostle next turns the attention of believers. It is derived from the fact, that the gospel possesses the nature of a testament or will, the force of which depends on the death of a testator. Hence it appears that the whole value of the gospel promises is derived from the death of Christ, the shedding of whose blood on Calvary brought these promises within the reach of believers. This argument is likewise confirmed by reference to the symbolic services under the first testament, the most important feature in which was the use of the blood of the sacrificial victims, sprinkling and purifying both the tabernacle and the vessels of the ministry.

The conclusion, then, to which we are thus brought is, that without shedding of blood is no remission; that the sacrifice of Christ is not only necessary, but perfectly effectual to the purification of God's people from every taint of sin; and that the heavenly places into which Christ hath already entered are his gracious purchase for his redeemed family.

Hence we learn, 1st, The folly of trusting to any other mode of salvation than that provided by Jesus the Son of God, or of fancying that any hope of pardon is to be found in abstract views of the divine mercy.

2d. The perfection of the plan of salvation by the humiliation and death of Christ.

3d. The glorious prospects of the followers of Jesus—heaven. The abode of angels, and of the spirits of the just, the seat of holiness, and peace, and joy, where God and that Saviour whom they love reside, is the home to which they are going.

PRAYER.

O Almighty God, the Creator and Governor of the universe, who, though infinitely exalted above the conception of men or of angels, condescendest to invite us into thy presence, and to accept our humble prayers, regard, we beseech thee, with kindness and grace, us, thy unworthy creatures, who now approach thy footstool that we may adore thy infinite perfections, and claim thy favourable regards. We plead no merits nor services of ours in thy holy presence. We know that we are all as an unclean thing, and that our very righteousnesses are as filthy rags. But we plead the merits of that divine Redeemer, who was made under the law, that for us transgressors he might fulfil it, and who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. We plead thy acceptance of his vicarious righteousness, and we joyfully rest in the assurance that his finished work has amply satisfied thy justice, and opened a way to heaven for all believers. Teach us, O Lord, to come to Jesus for pardon and peace, for strength and holiness. Justify us by his blood, and sanctify us by his Spirit. Draw us and we will run after thee. Work thou in us to will and to do of thy good pleasure. Grant us repentance unto life, and the various graces of thy Holy Spirit. May he dwell in our hearts by faith, that so we may be rooted and grounded in love, and be enabled to comprehend, with all saints, what is the height and the depth, the length and the breadth, of the love of God in Christ Jesus. Subdue the numerous enemies who on every hand are waiting for our halting. Fortify us against our temptations, which are too strong for our unaided power to resist with success. Keep us humble, watchful, and prayerful. May we never think we have attained, either are already perfect, but still press forward towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. We desire to thank thee for thy kindness to us during the course of this day, and for the comfortable circumstances in which we are permitted this evening to assemble before thee. We would lay us down this night with the most perfect confidence in thy protection. Thou never slumberest nor sleepest, neither wilt thou suffer thy servants to fall into any real evil. May we be refreshed by the repose of the night, that we may the better pursue our Christian course on another day. Protect, we beseech thee, all our dear relatives and friends. Bestow upon them in this world the knowledge of the truth, and in the world to come life everlasting. May they and we be brought in safety through all the dangers and temptations of this mortal existence, till at last we arrive at the blessed kingdom above, to dwell together in thy glorious presence for ever and ever. Prosper thy cause in the world. Send the glad tidings of salvation through all the nations of the earth. Let the offers of thy gospel speedily reach both Jew and Gentile, both bond and free; and may the time soon come when there shall be one fold and one Shepherd, and when in all the holy mountain of the Lord there shall no longer be any thing to hurt or to offend. Bless all thy faithful ministers. Give them true knowledge of thy word, and enable them to adorn the doctrine of our God and Saviour, and to be an example to all the flock. Make them wise to win souls to Christ. May thy servant who ministers to us in holy things be abundantly honoured by thee in all his duties, and may the fruits of his exertions, accompanied by thy Spirit, be abundantly manifested in our community. Accept these our humble and united prayers for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXXXVI. I.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL II.

REMARKS.

The scene of the very striking events recorded in this chapter, was the city of Babylon, which, on account of its vast extent, its wealth, and grandeur, has been justly regarded as one of the wonders of the world. Being the capital of the empire of Chaldaea, several monarchs, ambitious of fame, exerted their influence to render it impregnable, and to adorn it in a manner becoming the seat of royalty. Situated on the Euphrates, that noble river flowed through it; and by its pure and salubrious stream afforded many advantages to its immense population. The inspired writers, speaking of Babylon, in reference to its magnitude, and wealth, and splendour, make use of expressions which demonstrate the proud pre-eminence which it attained at this period of its history. They style it the 'golden city,' 'the glory of kingdoms,' 'the beauty of Chaldaea's excellency;' besides other appellations equally descriptive of its magnificence and pride.

'But that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God.' Here we have an instance in point. Babylon, you know, was the chief seat of ancient idolatry. There was the temple of Belus, and probably, the tower of Babel that was impiously reared by vain and wicked men, after the flood, to make themselves a name, and to render them independent of the God of heaven. There, every species of error, and of impurity, and ungodliness, was openly and unblushingly indulged. And hence, this renowned city became the appropriate emblem of the apostate church which hath upon her forehead a name written, 'Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.'

idolatry, how can we fail to be struck at the wisdom, the sovereignty, and power of Jehovah, in making his name known there, and signally demonstrating the vanity of idols. On the very spot where Satan's kingdom had its throne, God confounded the worshippers of Baal, and used the very king of Babylon as the instrument of giving a fatal blow to idolatry.

How this unlooked for event was brought about, we are informed in the sacred narrative. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had recently returned from Egypt and Judea, flushed with victory. We doubt not, he entered his capital amidst all the demonstrations of triumph. Who can describe the pride of his heart, as he contemplated the magnitude and variety of his conquests. The Jews, as a nation, were dragged at his chariot wheels, and treated with every species of ignominy. He had profanely destroyed their temple by fire, and robbed it of all its vessels of gold. And now that he carried the worshippers of Jehovah away from the land of their fathers, and deprived them of all the means of grace, he concluded that the principles of their religion would be utterly destroyed, and the very name of Jehovah, whom they adored, blotted out from the annals of the universe.

But how vain are the expectations of the wicked ! They may desire, but they cannot overturn the throne of omnipotence. There is an overruling and special providence that can say with effect to the wrath of man, 'Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed,' and Nebuchadnezzar is forced to acknowledge the supremacy of the God of Israel. This he openly confesses. 'Of a truth it is, your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret.' And thus a public and emphatic testimony was borne to the glory of Jehovah, not by a private individual, but by one of the mightiest sovereigns that ever filled a throne, and that on the very seat of idolatry. And after the lapse of ages, when the ruins of Babylon can hardly be traced by the inquisitive traveller, how cheering the thought, that the faith of Daniel and his companions has survived every change, and every danger, and is, at this moment, a source of pure and everlasting consolation to the people of God over the habitable parts of the earth.

On the interpretation of the memorable dream our limits do not permit us to enter. The stone cut out without hands denotes the kingdom of Christ, which is destined to smite the image of idolatry, and to increase in magnitude and in glory till it fill the whole earth. Let us rejoice in the bright prospect that is then held out to our view ; and let us labour and pray that it may be speedily and fully realized. Amen.

PRAYER.

O God, our God, thou art very great. Thou art clothed with honour and with majesty. Thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment ; thou makest the clouds thy chariot ; thou walkest on the wings of the wind. Who would not fear thee, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy. May our souls be filled with sacred awe, while in prayer we draw nigh the footstool of thy mercy. Be pleased, O Lord, to give us vivid and exalted conceptions of thy matchless glory, that we may feel the solemnity with which it becomes us to approach thy throne, and to present to thee the tribute of our adoration and praise. May we now be privileged to enter into thy presence-chamber, and to hold direct converse with the King of kings and Lord of lords. And while engaged in holy worship, may all our thoughts and desires be supremely fixed on thee, so that under the elevating and sustaining influence of the Spirit of grace and supplication, we may be enabled to enjoy close communion with thee, and to feel assured that thou art the hearer of prayer. O thou who art the preserver of men, what shall we render to thee for having watched over us so graciously during the silence of the bygone night, and for having brought us in safety, in peace, and in comfort, to the light of another day ? Hadst thou dealt with us as our iniquities deserve, thou mightest have turned the season of our repose into a time of misery ; have scared us with dreams, and terrified us with night visions. We are reminded, in the portion of thy word which we have now perused, that thou hast access to the spirit of men, and that thou observest all its impressions and thoughts by night as well as by day. Thou art thus bearing testimony to thine own presence and omniscience, as the invisible Jehovah ; and by the terror awakened in the guilty soul, art rebuking the atheism and idolatry of our fallen nature, and bidding the unbeliever to consider and know that thou, and thou only, art God. May we ever bear in remembrance that it is in thee we live, and move, and have our being. We desire, O God, to rejoice in thy special providence. Thou takest knowledge of all the secret motions of our minds, as well as of our words and actions. Nothing escapes thine omniscient eye. Thou takest special notice of whatever relates to the welfare of thy people, or that bears on thy kingdom and glory. The evil designs of the wicked are known to thee. And we bless thee who markest the schemes formed by the ungodly for the destruction of thy church, and in due time dost signally defeat them. Verily thou art our refuge and our strength, our very present help in trouble. O God, in these times of danger do thou in mercy interpose in behalf of thine own cause. With thee nothing is impossible. Thou canst make the wrath of man to praise thee, and restrain the remainder thereof. We rejoice, therefore, that under the protection of the great Head of our church, all its interests are safe. Hasten, O Lord, the time when the stone cut out without hands shall smite every idolatrous image, and become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth. May we live to behold the dawn of the latter day glory. May our souls be completely delivered from atheism and idolatry, and be made temples of the Holy Ghost, that this day, and henceforth, we may live wholly to thy praise. Wash us from all our iniquities. Clothe us with Christ's righteousness, and beautify us with his salvation. And all we ask is for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XL. 6.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS X.

REMARKS.

So rich is this chapter in precious matter, that instead of a few remarks, it would require, to do it justice, a volume of illustrations. To the eye of the believer, how immense and how glorious is the field of Christian doctrine which it opens up to our view. The perfection of Christ's atoning sacrifice forms the leading theme, and the establishment of this fundamental article of our holy faith, by arguments the most clear and irresistible. There is, first of all, a demonstration given of the absolute necessity of such an atonement, founded on the fact, that the sacrifices under the law were utterly inadequate to take away the guilt of sin, or to protect those who offered them from merited condemnation. They possessed no intrinsic efficacy whatever. The very circumstance of their being so frequently repeated, of their being offered year by year continually, manifestly implied that they could not 'make the comers thereunto perfect.' Why were they presented every day, every week, every month, every year, if they possessed any virtue for the expiation of sin? Had the conscience of the transgressor been once purged from guilt, why require another and another sacrifice? This is the question we have to put in reasoning with an unbelieving Jew. 'But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.' The sinner was thus taught not to rest in them for pardon and eternal life. They were merely a shadow of good things to come, a type of the vicarious sacrifice, which, in the fullness of time, was offered up upon the cross; a means of directing the eye of faith, and hope, and desire, to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. And, if this was their proper character and design, how emphatically did they proclaim the necessity of a divine atonement. 'For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.'

How marvellous the love of Christ! When there was no eye to pity us, and no hand to save us, his own eye had compassion on us, and his arm brought us salvation. Of his own accord he generously undertook our recovery. 'Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.' He descended from the throne of his glory, assumed our nature without any of its depravity, obeyed the violated law in our stead, brought in an everlasting righteousness, and made an end of sin. He is the propitiation. This is the ground of our hope. By one sacrifice he perfected for ever all them that are sanctified. We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Having by his obedience and suffering magnified the law, and made it honourable, he, as an evidence that he accomplished the work of our redemption, rose as a conqueror over death and the grave, and as the High Priest of our profession, ascended into heaven, and entered the holy of holies, there to present, before his Father's throne, the blood of atonement, in virtue of which all who believe in him are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. Let us, therefore, in his name, draw nigh to the mercy seat, and with holy boldness, plead for mercy to pardon, and grace to help us in time of need. Let every awakened sinner cast his burden on the Lord, and he shall sustain him. The blessings which he purchased are freely bestowed. The new covenant, with all its treasures of grace, invites our confidence. The Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ declares that he will effect a saving change on all who take refuge in the hope that is set before us in the gospel. 'I will put my laws into their hearts, and write them in their minds, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.'

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts; the whole earth is full of thy glory. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. The heavens are not clean in thy sight; thou chargest thine angels with folly. Shall mortal man, who drinketh in iniquity like water, be therefore just with God? O do thou impress our souls with this awakening consideration. May we, in the light of thy holiness, clearly see our own guilt and depravity. Behold we are vile, and what shall we answer thee? Our hearts condemn us, and thou art greater than our hearts, and knowest all things. Wert thou to mark iniquity against us, who, O Lord, could stand? The angels who surround thy throne veil their faces with their wings while contemplating the glory of thy eternal holiness. Lord teach us how deep ought our self-abasement and our penitence to be. We feel that we are all sinfulness together, and utterly unworthy to take thy holy name into our polluted lips, or to lift up our eyes to the place where thine honour dwells. Under an overpowering sense of our guilt and corruption, we desire to make a full and unfeigned acknowledgment of our transgressions, and smiting upon our breasts, to say, God be merciful to us sinners. We bless thee, O God, that thou hast not left us to perish in our iniquities. We rejoice in the tidings of mercy which the gospel has brought to our ears. O do thou savingly reveal to each of us the adorable Redeemer who came in the name of the Lord to save us. May we now, and ever, honour him as the High Priest of our profession, in whose name alone we can have access to thy throne, and through whose merits alone we can hope for pardon and eternal life. Help us to cast the heavy burden of our sins upon him, and trusting in his blood and righteousness, to enter into a state of peace and reconciliation. May we experience the constraining influence of his redeeming love, while we contemplate his willingness to undertake our cause, and to suffer and die, to atone for our guilt. Believing that he has finished the work of our redemption, may we joyfully embrace his righteousness, and know assuredly that his blood cleanseth from all sin. O do thou, for his sake, seal pardon on the conscience of each of us. Say to the trembling soul, Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee. And having washed our robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, may we be enabled to live as the redeemed of the Lord. Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us through the veil; and having an High Priest over the house of God, may we draw near with a true heart, in the full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. May the Holy Spirit perform his own blessed work in our souls. May he make us living temples of the holy God. May he sanctify our whole nature, and fit us for thy kingdom and glory. And now that another day is gone, never to return, and that this night may be our last, may we experience the blessedness of a personal interest in the atoning sacrifice, the righteousness, and intercession of Christ, so that, living or dying, we may as individuals, and as a family, be the Lord's. Extend to others the blessings we have implored for ourselves. May all men take refuge in the only name through which we can be saved. And now to thee the Father, the Son, and Holy Spirit, we would ascribe all blessing and glory. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXIV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL III.

REMARKS.

What a melancholy contrast between the conduct of Nebuchadnezzar, as related in the end of the preceding chapter, and that recorded in this! We now find him trampling on his own solemn profession, and setting the power of God at defiance, and endeavouring to destroy the true faith, and using all his influence, as a king, to promote idolatry. Surely his goodness was 'but as the morning cloud and early dew that soon vanisheth away.' 'Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.'

How long it was after the discovery and interpretation of his dream Nebuchadnezzar committed this daring sin, we are not informed. We think it highly probable that the magicians, and astrologers, the sorcerers, the Chaldeans, these priests of Baal, embraced the first opportunity of alienating his mind from the servants of Jehovah, and from the testimony which he had borne to the true faith. They were manifestly alarmed at that testimony. Their whole system of worship was in danger. Should the king continue to receive instruction in the principles of religion from Daniel and his friends, might he not speedily renounce his allegiance to Baal, and command that every vestige of idolatry be abolished throughout the empire? And we doubt not that, under the influence of such fears, and actuated by the enmity of the carnal mind, they, and the leading men of the nation, used means to prevail upon Nebuchadnezzar to make a public demonstration in favour of idolatry. The fickle monarch was the willing victim of delusion. He accordingly sought at once to gratify his own vanity, and the malignity of the priests of Baal. The golden image which he set up on the plains of Dura, was designed as a fatal snare for Daniel and his companions. Their enemies well knew that they would, on no account, worship the idol. The plot was, therefore, artfully laid for their destruction. The ceremony of dedication was of the most imposing description. The king sent to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, and judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers, &c. They assemble. The royal decree is promulgated. Every one is required, on pain of death, to do homage to the golden image. The trumpet sounds and presently all the worshippers of Baal, high and low, obsequiously fall down and worship. What a painful spectacle. A whole empire prostrated before a dumb idol! This is British India in our own day. And this is a picture of every soul that is dead in trespasses and in sins. Be it atheism, or infidelity, or popery, or the love of the world, that reigns within your soul, behold in this picture your own image. And can you deliberately consent to perish under this guilt, and to sink into this degradation?

Where are now the exiles of Israel? Are they among these idolatrous worshippers? No. They have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. Their adversaries were fully aware of this, and exulted in the consideration. Tidings are instantly conveyed to the king. The report of disobedience roused his ire. Three of the captives are dragged into his presence. The murderous command is issued afresh. All are required to worship the golden image. Music, with its enchanting influence, is brought to bear on their minds. And if allurement prevail not, let the fiery furnace pour forth all its terrors. How trying the situation of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Hear the threatening: 'But if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver ye out of my hands?'

There is a magnanimity in true faith that rises superior to all danger. What flesh and blood can never communicate, the grace of God can impart. The servants of Jehovah are calm, intrepid, and faithful. They hesitate not for a moment. Read ver. 17, 18. This is truly sublime. How strong their faith! How firm their confidence! How noble their determination! And is this the spirit of devotedness to Christ which, in this day of trial, we breathe? Are we really on the Lord's side? Are we resolved, come what will, never to injure our own conscience, or betray his cause?

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. There is no mercy in the heart of an idolater, towards the servants of God. The three young confessors are forthwith cast into the midst of the fiery furnace, and their enemies lift the fiendish shout of exultation at the success of their villanous plot.

But how short-lived are the triumphs of the wicked! What is this that so powerfully arrests the eye of Nebuchadnezzar? 'Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.' Yes. It is no illusion. The Lord of glory is there. Behold the wondrous sight. Approach all ye nobles, and rulers, and captains. and look into the fiery furnace. Baal, the god of fire, cannot injure so much as a hair of the heads of the servants of Jehovah. The king is alarmed. Conscience tells him he has been fighting against omnipotence. How can he endure to look on the Son of God, at whose tribunal he and all his idolatrous subjects must soon appear? He is now solicitous to save the lives which a few moments ago he sought to destroy. 'Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither.'

We are thus impressively taught what is the duty of the church in times of difficulties and danger. Let her be faithful to her divine Head. He is able to succour her. And those who are now in league to effect her ruin, will learn how vain it is to contend against the Lord and his Anointed. The bush may burn, but cannot be consumed. 'Be still, and know that I am God.'

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only living and true God. To whom shall we go but unto thee; thou only hast the words of eternal life. We desire therefore ever to view thee in Christ Jesus as our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble. Our lot is cast in perilous times. We live in an age, and in a country, in which multitudes are combined to resist thy authority, and to overthrow thy righteous cause. Our hearts tremble for the safety of the ark of the covenant. Thy church, O blessed Saviour, that church which thou hast loved with an everlasting love, and purchased with thy blood, is cast into the fiery furnace of persecution. The hand of power is lifted up against her to inflict a fatal blow. Her adversaries mock at her sabbaths; and treacherous friends forsake her in the hour of peril. But we rejoice that thou who hast all power in heaven and on earth, reignest, and that thou art faithful to thy promises. O be graciously present with thy church amidst all her tribulations. Say to her, When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flames kindle upon thee; for I am the Lord thy God, the holy One of Israel. Grant that when the enemy cometh in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord may lift up a standard against him. Be thou a wall of fire around our Zion, and the glory in the midst of her. Suffer no weapon formed against her to prosper. And may she be, in due time, brought out of the furnace, as silver that is purified seven times. We pray that we, individually, may have grace to be faithful even unto death. Amidst the afflictions and bereavements of life, help us to look up to thee for strength and consolation. May we experience the tenderness of thy care and sympathy. Thou art a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. Thou hast graciously said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. Adored be thy name for this endearing promise. And using it aright, may we lean on that arm which is never weary, and on that bosom which is never cold. And may the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, of holiness, and love, dwell in us, and guide us safely into heaven. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS XI.

REMARKS.

The inspired writers indulge but very sparingly in the use of definitions. They do not waste their time in exhibiting the niceties of philosophical distinctions, or evince any desire to gratify the pride of intellect, by a display of metaphysical refinements. They have no sympathy with the spirit of the schoolmen who, in their eagerness to show the acuteness of their own minds, and the extent of their learning, lose sight altogether of the truth, and darken counsel by words without knowledge. Nobler objects occupy their regards, and holier principles regulate their conduct. They unite on matters of eternal moment. They are the servants of God. They speak as they are moved by the Holy Ghost. And what is the result? Their style is plain and perspicuous as the light of day; so plain, indeed, that he who runs may read.

Is heaven’s easy, artless, unincumbered plan;
Majestic in its own simplicity.’

While, however, the scriptures do not abound in the use of definitions, we have here an instance in which it is used; and for its use a good reason may be assigned. This apostle is about to proceed to show the mighty influence which faith is designed to exert on our heart and life. This great principle, simple though it be, is but little understood by multitudes who hear the gospel. Some regard it as altogether mysterious, if not as destitute of reality. Now, to guard against such an erroneous impression, and to make it appear that it is an intelligent and active principle, of mighty power, it is thus defined, ‘the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.’ And as illustrations, appropriate, and vivid, and powerful, we are directed, in this chapter, to mark the high place which it occupies in the economy of our salvation, as demonstrated by the example of many of the Old Testament saints, the great cloud of witnesses. This is most felicitous. We may not be able to comprehend the abstract principle of faith; but who can look into its effects, as here delineated, and not be satisfied that those in whose souls it is in lively exercise are deeply sensible of its life-giving and sustaining influence. May ours be that faith which is of the operation of God.

One thing regarding true faith is in this chapter brought very prominently into view. It rests wholly and exclusively on the word of God. This is its sure and immutable foundation. Whatever the Lord has been pleased to reveal, that is sincerely and cordially believed by the true Christian. There must be no mental reservation, and no restriction as to what is credited in reference to the sacred volume. What God requires is an entire faith in the entire testimony. How beautifully was this exemplified in the case of those elders who obtained a good report. Even what was mysterious in its nature, what was beyond the range of their observation, or what was above their limited capacities, enough with them that it bore the impress of divine authority. They embraced it as an article of their faith, and in circumstances the most trying, acted upon it, doubting not, that what the Lord God had spoken was infallibly true, and that every word must have its accomplishment. Mark the conduct of Noah, of Abraham, of Sarah, of Moses, and other worthies. They implicitly relied on what God had revealed to them. They evidenced their faith by their steady and cheerful obedience. They patiently submitted to trials and afflictions, to persecutions and dangers; and under the influence of this holy principle, they rose above them all. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. One other fact, in connection with true faith, merits our special notice. Under its blessed influence these believers impressively realized the gracious presence of their God and Saviour, and felt the blessedness of religion. Enoch walked with God. He walked as seeing him who is invisible. He walked with him in prayer, and every other holy duty. He set the Lord God continually before him. Hence being in a state of friendship with God, he enjoyed the light of his countenance, and grace in conformity to his image, and rejoiced in the manifestations of his glory. The glories of the heavenly world rose with transcendent brightness on his view. Eternity was felt to be a solemn reality. And if we truly believe in Christ, shall not this be our experience, and this our hope? Amen.

PRAYER.

We desire, O God, to approach thy throne of mercy, this evening, in the belief that as a father pitieth his children, so doth the Lord pity them that fear him. Thou hast given us innumerable proofs of thy fatherly compassion. With thee is the fountain of life. From thee cometh down every good and perfect gift. What heart can conceive, or what tongue can express, the extent of thy benignity, or the tenderness of thy love? From thy redeeming mercy has originated that wondrous scheme of salvation, which in the fullness of the time Christ Jesus, thine only begotten Son, died to accomplish. From thee also, proceedeth the grace which is necessary to bring in to the possession and enjoyment of this great salvation. We lament, O God, that whilst thou hast amply provided for the welfare of our never-dying souls, that we have been hitherto so blind to the glory of thy grace, and so indifferent to thy claims on our faith, and gratitude, and holy obedience. Unbelief has exerted a blighting influence on our souls. How prone are we to question the tidings of great joy which have reached our fallen world, and in the reception of which alone we can obtain spiritual life and healing. How slow to believe the testimony concerning thy Son. How unwilling to renounce our own righteousness, and to submit wholly and unreservedly to the righteousness of God. Thy power alone can subdue our evil hearts of unbelief. We earnestly plead that that power may be put forth for our salvation. With thee nothing is impossible. Do thou, who with a word, hast created the world, create a clean heart and renew a right spirit within us. Do thou, O compassionate Redeemer, who didst give sight to the blind, open our understandings to understand the scriptures. And O thou Holy Spirit, whose office it is to glorify Christ, and to apply the benefits of his redemption, be pleased savingly to enlighten our souls, and to sanctify our hearts, and so to work in us effectually the work of faith with power, that like the saints of old, we may set our seal to God's testimony that he is true. O do thou increase our faith. May we daily live by faith on the Son of God. While contemplating his matchless excellencies, may we be changed from glory to glory, and obtain such cheering evidences of a personal interest in his salvation, as will enable us now, and at the hour of death, to say, I know in whom I believe, and am persuaded that he will keep that which I have committed to him unto that day. May this be the happy attainment of all. May the servants of Christ, our pastors, be enriched with this grace, that from personal experience they may be able to recommend the all-glorious Saviour to their flocks. May our friends and relations be blessed with the hope of glory. May all the world see the salvation of God. And now, O Lord, pardon all our sins, and grant us thy grace. All we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM X. 3. or LXXV. 5.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter contains the confession of a royal penitent, whose impious arrogance had been checked and cured by an awful judgment inflicted by the King of kings. It strikingly displays the danger to which despotic power exposes its possessor.

'Wherefore doth the wicked condemn God?' saith the psalmist; addressing himself to that omniscient Being who is the 'Watcher and the holy One,' he adds, 'Thou hast seen it, for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand.' The most high God 'who ruleth in the kingdom of men' had, by means of a significant dream, forewarned the haughty monarch of the terrible consequences with which his impiety would be visited, unless his heart underwent an effectual change. His own conscience, indeed, seems to have smitten him before he knew the full meaning of that dream, for he owns to Daniel that he 'was afraid,' and that 'the thoughts upon his bed, and the visions of his head, troubled him.'

Daniel, with great modesty, but with the unshrinking honesty which became him as a prophet of God, interpreted the allegorical appearance which had been made to pass before his royal master's mind. Calmly braving the violent temper of the despot, he manfully announced to him the frightful and unexpected downfall which the dream portended; and, faithful to his God as well as dutiful to his earthly king, concluded with urging the benevolent counsel contained in the 27th verse: 'Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor.' This advice he enforced by intimating his hope that the observance of it might 'be a lengthening of Nebuchadnezzar's tranquillity.'

To give the tyrant space for repentance, 'the judgment was not executed speedily.' A whole year of trial was granted to him; but at length he experienced the truth of the proverb, 'Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.' His reason and his kingdom departed from him, and the mighty monarch at whose frown the princes of so many nations and languages had trembled; he whose greatness had 'reached unto heaven, and his dominion to the end of the earth,' was degraded to the level of the beasts of the field, and wandered over the deserts, and through the howling wilderness, a houseless, lothesome, and miserable maniac.

The chastisement was severe, but salutary, and proved that even 'in wrath the Lord remembereth mercy.' The dispensation had assuredly not 'seemed to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yielded the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto him who was exercised thereby.' And he 'blessed the Most High,' whom 'before he was afflicted,' he had set at nought. 'He praised and honoured him' who had abased him for his arrogance. And he gave the most convincing proof that he had deliberately relinquished his pride, when he prepared the penitential proclamation of which this chapter is composed, and sent it abroad 'unto all people, and nations, and languages, that dwelt in all the earth.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us avoid the vulgar error of envying those who 'Say to one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh;' and to a third, 'Do this, and he doth it.' Should we ourselves, in the course of providence, be invested with power, let us beware of its seductive and ruinous influence, lest our 'hearts being hardened with pride,' we should 'deny God, and say, Who is the Lord that we should serve him?' 'Let not the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth God, that he is the Lord which exerciseth judgment and righteousness in the earth.' Let us all remember who hath warned us that, 'if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.'

We have good cause to rejoice that there is a vigilant 'Watcher, and an holy One' who 'doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth.' And though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.' And when we have been smitten of God because of our rebellious dispositions, or when we hear the awful denunciation of divine judgments, let us instantly 'break off our sins by righteousness, and our iniquities' by repentance and conformity to the gospel of Christ, trusting that it will 'be a lengthening of our tranquillity.'

Finally, we ought to feel such confidence in the wisdom and justice of the divine administration that, whether worldly prosperity, or temporal adversity, be our lot, we may 'praise, and extol, and honour the King of heaven, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment;' and we should never permit ourselves to forget that 'those who walk in pride he is able to abase.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we approach the footstool of thy throne with the deepest reverence; for thou art the Creator, the Preserver, and the Governor of all things. Thou knowest the proud afar off, but hast respect unto the lowly. O teach us to know ourselves, and the duties which become us as dependent and responsible creatures. In all thy dealings with us, may we delight to trace the operation of thy providence, and may we never presume to question thy wisdom, or thy goodness. May we shrink with horror from the thought of contemning the warnings of the most High, and of lifting ourselves up against the Lord of heaven. When thou triest us in the furnace of tribulation, may we come forth purified and refined, so that our light affliction, which is but for a moment, may work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. O God of mercy, if we yield to the corrupt propensities of our nature, and rebel against thy law, may our imaginations be speedily cast down, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God; and may every thought be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. For this purpose, we earnestly pray that we may be enabled to examine ourselves with scrupulous candour, and to see the plague of our own hearts. Give us deep contrition, and sincere repentance, together with a growing love to thee, and firm confidence in the sufficiency of the atonement and intercession of thy holy Son. Being thoroughly cleansed in the laver of regeneration, and strengthened with might from above, may we lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith. And now, O Holy Father, before we go forth to our several occupations, we humbly implore thee to bless us a family, and as individuals. May we all be knit together in the bands of mutual affection. May the heads of this house, feeling their great responsibility, endeavour, both by precept and example, to promote the growth of godliness in the hearts of those whom thy providence has committed to their charge. May the children be trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, walking in that good way from which they may not depart when they are old. May they learn obedience to their parents and superiors; and under wise and pious instructors, may they diligently improve their time and their talents. May the servants be honest and faithful, that they may adorn the doctrine of God and our Saviour in all things. Seeing thee who art invisible, may we this day undertake nothing on which we should be ashamed to ask thy blessing, and may all the duties in which we are severally to be engaged, be discharged under the solemn conviction that thou, God, seest us, and that we must answer to thee for all that we do or say. These our humble supplications, O our God, we present to thee in the name, and trusting in the merits of thy Son Jesus Christ our Redeemer, and our Advocate and Intercessor. Amen.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LIX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The author of this epistle had observed with grief that many of his Hebrew converts were deterred from openly avowing their faith by the fear of persecution from their bigoted brethren. This was their besetting sin; and as it sadly impeded their progress in the Christian course, he here implores them to disentangle themselves from its fatal influence. With this view, in the xi. chapter, he shows them the heroic and unflinching fortitude which genuine faith had produced in the character of holy men whose characters were recorded for their instruction. Those illustrious believers he represents, by a bold figure of speech, as witnesses to the efficacy of faith, in availing itself of the power of God for their deliverance and support in trial. He then set before them the still more authoritative example of Jesus, the Son of God, whose name they bore, and whom they all acknowledged as the Author and Leader of their faith; of Jesus who, in the face of murderous foes, and with the perfect knowledge of all the agonies which awaited him, resolutely persevered in declaring the truth, till he had finished the generous work of redemption, enduring even the cross, and despising the shame. For their encouragement, he reminds them that their crucified Master had entered into glory, and urges them, like him, to continue steadfast until death, seeing it will assuredly be followed by a life of endless and triumphant joy. And to prevent them from fainting under the apprehension that their tribulation was any proof of their heavenly Father's wrath, he assures them that, on the contrary, it was an evidence of his tender love. 'For,' says he, 'if ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons.' If properly improved, affliction will yield the 'peaceable fruit of righteousness.' He warns them, at the same time, to cultivate holy and meek dispositions; 'following peace with all men,' even with their persecutors. He demonstrates the great superiority of the Christian over the Mosaic dispensation, and sets before them the ruin which must inevitably overtake all who refuse to obey the voice of Jesus Christ, who 'speaketh from heaven' with divine authority, and is the Founder of a dispensation which shall never be charged.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

As God so loved us that he spared not his own Son, but gave him up to die for our salvation, we have abundant proof that he will not afflict us without good cause. We should therefore neither despise his chastening, nor sink under it; but, when exercised thereby, should earnestly pray that it may yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness.

Animated by the example of those who, 'through faith and patience, inherit the promises,' and remembering that 'without holiness no man shall see the Lord,' let us search out and renounce our besetting sins, 'striving against' temptation, even in its most alluring forms, 'resisting,' if necessary, 'even unto blood,' and 'looking unto Jesus' as our teacher, our example, our intercessor, our Saviour, and our judge; carefully and jealously watching our corrupt hearts, 'lest any root of bitterness spring up' in them to mar our peace, and ruin our prospects for eternity.

Never can we be sufficiently grateful to God for having granted us the privilege of living under the dispensation of grace, a privilege which many prophets and righteous men in vain desired to enjoy. But let us never forget that our responsibility is just so much the greater, for 'unto whomsoever much is given, of him much will be required. Let us, then, pray for grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear.' Let us hasten with humble docility to him that speaketh from heaven. 'This is my beloved Son,' said the divine voice which came out of the cloud on the mount of transfiguration, 'This is my beloved Son, hear him.' He is the Mediator of the new covenant, and through him alone can we be admitted into 'the general assembly of the church of the first-born, which are written in heaven.' But, O appalling thought, if we 'refuse him,' we shall find 'our God a consuming fire!'

PRAYER.

Our Father which art in heaven, before we retire to repose for the night, we kneel to thee for thy blessing. We gratefully acknowledge the providential care by which thou hast preserved us amidst all the dangers, seen or unseen, to which we have been exposed since last we presented ourselves before thee as a family. We know that we are not worthy to receive the least of all thy mercies, and therefore, in imploring thy grace, we can plead only the merits of thy beloved Son, the Mediator of the new covenant, who in his infinite love, has undertaken to be our Advocate and Intercessor. May we be his disciples, not in name only, but in deed and in truth, hearing his voice with reverence, and cheerfully conforming to his will as revealed to us in the gospel. Of that gospel may we never be ashamed. As Christ loved us unto death, may we gratefully love him in return. As we are bought with a price, even with his precious blood, may we act as becometh the Lord's freemen, and glorify him in our body and in our spirit. As we hope that he will confess us before thee, his Father, may we never shrink from confessing him before men. O do thou enable us with the heart to believe unto righteousness, and with the mouth to make confession unto salvation, trusting in the declaration of thy servant that, if we confess with our mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in our heart that thou raised him from the dead, we shall be saved. May thy Holy Spirit sanctify our hearts wholly, and strengthen us inwardly, that we may strive with success against our spiritual enemies, resisting even unto blood. When we faint do thou lift up the hands that hang down, and when weary with the struggles of our Christian course, do thou, O Lord, nerve our feeble knees, and make straight paths for our feet. Should it be our lot to suffer oppression, may we consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, and who said, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven. May we this night commune with our hearts upon our beds, and stand in awe that we sin not. May our meditations of thee be sweet, thy comforts refreshing our souls. Prepare us for the duties of the approaching sabbath. May we be in thy Spirit on the Lord's day, and withdrawing our thoughts and affections from the world, and the things of the world, may we fix them on the great Lord of the sabbath, and those things which are above. May we gratefully meditate on that glorious resurrection from the dead, of which the first day of the week is a lasting memorial in the Christian church, and may we, being dead unto sin, be alive unto righteousness, and unto thee. May the close of every succeeding week find us further and further advanced towards the happy termination of our Christian race, until each of us shall be enabled to adopt the words of thy servant, and say, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at the great day. Heavenly Father, hear us, and acknowledge us as thy children, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our only hope of glory. Amen.

FORTY-SIXTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXI.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXX. CXXI. CXXII.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXX. This and the fourteen psalms which follow are termed 'songs of degrees,' probably owing to the manner in which they were set to the music adapted to the temple service. This psalm is generally thought to have been composed by David when suffering under the calumnies of Doeg and others, ver. 1, 2. However great or complicated his distresses may be, the believer in Jesus has the assurance of God's word of truth that he shall be delivered out of them all. This assurance is immediately derived from the promises of God, and from the recorded experience of his servants. When our characters are calumniated by the ungodly, we may with confidence commit our case to him who 'judgeth righteously,' seeking to imitate the example, and to rely upon the sympathy and aid of that Redeemer, who, 'when he was reviled, reviled not again,' who, 'when he suffered, threatened not,' ver. 3, 4. Let us beware of backbiting and evil-speaking, which, though too common, alas! among mere professors of the gospel, is altogether inconsistent with the character of a humble follower of the Lamb. Slanderers, being malicious liars, 'shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone,' ver. 5—7. While we sojourn in the wilderness of this world, we cannot expect the enemies of God to be at peace with us; yet, still, if we are believers in the Prince of peace, we need not fear what men or devils can do unto us. 'In the world,' says Jesus, 'ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.' 'Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you.'

PSALM CXXI. Ver. 1—6. This psalm is probably intended to express the feelings of a godly Israelite journeying towards Jerusalem, that he might worship Jehovah in his holy place on mount Zion; and when beset with the perils of the moral wilderness, through which we are travelling to the New Jerusalem, the city of the living God, well may we 'lift up our eyes' to heaven's 'everlasting hills' of holiness for that strength and 'help' which this sinful world can never afford. No creature in heaven or in earth can effectually succour us in the hour of need. Let us therefore look beyond and above the things that are created, to him who is the Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer of his people. Let us 'lift up our eyes' unto Jesus, the 'Rock of ages,' and we shall receive that aid which we require.

Ver. 7, 8. In our most important undertakings and severest trials, as well as in the more ordinary affairs of life, let us with humble confidence entrust ourselves to the ever-watchful care of him that 'keepeth Israel,' assured that whatever he may see fit to appoint with reference to our temporal interests, he will make 'all things work together' for the good of our souls.

PSALM CXXII. David here expresses his own gladness, and that of every true worshipper of Israel's God, when summoned to wait upon him in his appointed ordinances. And in a higher and more spiritual sense, these words are fitted to embody the sentiments of every real Christian. The believer is renewed after the image of God, and, therefore, amid the toil, and temptation, and impurity, of this fallen world, he feels that he is not in his proper element. The language of his care-wearied soul frequently is apt to be, 'O that I had the wings of a dove, for then would I fly away and be at rest.' When Jesus prayed the Father in behalf of those who had been given him, he besought not that they should be removed out of the world, but that they might be 'kept from the evil.' The believer has an important work to perform. He must fight the good fight of faith without wavering, that thus he may prove a living witness of the might and mercy of God in his redemption from the power of sin. Now that the Christian soldier may be strengthened for the performance of this duty, God has placed the means of grace within his reach, and among these, the institution of the sabbath, and of sabbath ordinances, stand prominently forth. If we are sincere Christians, then, we shall be 'glad when it is said unto us, Let us go into the house of the Lord;' and shall love, and rejoice in, and pray for, the peace and prosperity of the church of Christ.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, in Christ our reconciled Father, we, thine unworthy creatures, would approach thee, on this the morning of thine own holy day, with humility as sinners, but with confidence as believers in Jesus. We would come before thee in the spirit of adoption, crying, Abba, Father. See, O God, our shield, look on the face of thine Anointed, and for his sake do thou accept our petitions, and vouchsafe unto us an answer in peace. We thank thee for all the temporal favours wherewith thou hast blessed us. More especially would we acknowledge thy mercy, O thou Shepherd of Israel, in that thou hast watched over and preserved us in safety during the silence, darkness, and helplessness of the night which is gone, and hast once more brought us together as a family, in peace and comfort, to join in prayer around the domestic altar. On this thy day, O Lord, may we be in the Spirit, and may we be enabled to worship thee in spirit and in truth. We confess that we are sinners before thee exceedingly; we have no merit of our own to present unto thee; and by nature we have neither the will to love, nor the power to serve thee. But with thee all things are possible. God be merciful to us, sinners. We would lift up our eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh our help; our help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. Enable us to keep thy sabbath. May we regard it as the holy of the Lord, and honourable. Enable us to reverence thy sanctuary. May we consider a day in thy courts to be better than a thousand; and may we be glad when it is said unto us, Let us go into the house of the Lord. May all thy ministering servants this day experience the special presence and assistance of thy Holy Spirit, that they may be duly qualified rightly to divide the word of truth. More particularly would we pray for him who stately ministers unto us in holy things. May he come to us this day in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and may we wait on his ministrations in an humble, teachable, prayerful, faithful spirit. Enable us, whether as masters, or parents, or children, or servants, to spend this day together in the public and private exercises of thy worship. May we find it to be a time of refreshing from thy presence, a foretaste of the happiness of heaven. We pray for our relatives, and for all who are dear to our hearts. May they be reconciled unto thee by the death of thy Son, and therefore, with us, be adopted into thy family, and have a right to all the privileges of thy children, both in time and throughout eternity. If we have enemies, do thou forgive them; may we be enabled to forgive them also; and may they and we be at length united in the unity of the Spirit, and in the bond of peace, having one Lord, one faith, one baptism. We beseech thee in behalf of our heathen brethren. O have respect unto the covenant, because the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Bless the means which are used, in dependence on thy grace, for advancing the honour of thy name, and extending the limits of thy kingdom. May thine ancient people of Israel be brought to regard thee, not merely as the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and thus may all thy people be saved, and may the whole earth be filled with thy glory. We commit ourselves to thee. Be with us during this day, and at all times, to protect us by thy providence, to guard us in the hour of temptation, to comfort, enlighten, and sanctify us by thy Spirit. And throughout eternity, O God, be thou our all-satisfying portion. Hear our prayers, and forgive our sins, and bless us, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CXXV.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXIII. CXXIV. CXXV.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXIII. So long as we turn not away our sight and our eyes from beholding, with admiring gaze, the follies and vanities of earth, we must be strangers to that 'perfect peace' which is the privilege of those whose minds are stayed upon God; and we shall find, to our cost, that the pleasures and the profits of the world are far from sufficient to satisfy our souls. Unless we can say, with Job, 'Whom have I in heaven but thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee;' and with David, 'Unto thee lift I up my eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens,' we are not Christians. Let us therefore 'wait upon the Lord' in earnest, praying that we may be enabled, by a diligent study of his holy word, to ascertain what is his will concerning us, and how we may be rendered capable of obedience to its precepts; that 'God may send forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father;' that we may be taught entirely to depend on him as our all in all.

PSALM CXXIV. Here David rejoices in the great goodness of the Lord, who had delivered his people out of the hands of their temporal enemies. And as belonging to the spiritual 'Israel,' may not each one of us say, 'If it had not been the Lord who was on our side,' we should never have been delivered from the enemies of our soul's salvation, we must have been 'quickly swallowed up' in the gulf of eternal perdition. If we are Christians, if we have taken up our position against all that is hostile to God and to righteousness, we must have recognized in Satan, the prince of this world, in the fallen world itself, with its varied terrors and temptations, and in our own corrupted and unbelieving hearts, the enemies of our real welfare, of our everlasting peace; we must have felt conscious that 'vain is the help of man,' and that 'he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool;' we must have thankfully acknowledged the completeness of the deliverance which the Lord hath wrought out for us, and, feeling our own helplessness, must have given him all the glory, in his having for us abolished death, spiritual and eternal, and taken away the sting of death temporal, in his having 'conquered him that had the power of death, that is, the devil,' and in his having 'spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in his cross.' Such being the state of our views, and sentiments, and feelings, in all our subsequent struggles, up to the hour when, at the close of this life's conflict, we shall lay down our spiritual weapons, that we may put on the kingly crown, in humility and in faith, the language of our souls shall be, 'Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth.'

PSALM CXXV. We are told that 'the wicked are like the troubled sea that cannot rest;' and our Lord informs us that he who does not submit himself to the gospel, who receives not its promises, and regards not its precepts, 'is like a foolish man that built his house upon the sand.' Scripture and experience unite to teach us, that as well might we seek to rest securely on the shifting quicksand, or the deceitful ocean, as look for permanent tranquillity among 'the things which are seen, and temporal.' But the true Christian leans not on himself, or on any thing that earth can afford. He trusts in the Lord, as in Christ, 'redeeming him from all iniquity.' 'He is a Rock; his rock is perfect.' On this solid foundation he securely builds. 'The covenant of the Lord's peace' shall never be 'removed' from mount Zion, and, therefore, each humble worshipper shall abide under the shelter of the Almighty. True, the Christian may be destined to meet with many earthly trials, and, if he continues faithful, he must expect to be despised and persecuted by the ungodly. But 'the rod of the wicked' shall not always 'rest upon his lot.' 'God will not suffer his people to be tempted above what they are able to bear.'

PRAYER.

Unto thee lift we up our eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens. Whom have we in heaven but thee? and there is none upon the earth that we ought to desire besides thee. We thank thee for that holy rest which it has this day been our privilege to enjoy. We bless thee that, as a family and as individuals, we have been preserved from outward evil; that we have been permitted and commanded to turn away from the things that are seen and temporal, and to direct our believing regards to those things which are unseen and eternal. We gratefully acknowledge thy mercy in having called us this day into thy sacred courts, that we might worship thee according to thine own appointment. O Lord, grant an answer in peace to the prayers which we then presented at thy mercy-seat; and may the word which was preached unto us profit our souls, having been mixed with faith in us who heard it. But, alas, O Lord, we would confess that we have violated the sanctity of thy sabbath in thought, if not in word or deed. Pardon, we implore thee, the sins of our holy things. Grant us the spirit of true repentance. O send forth thy light and thy truth; let them lead us, let them guide us. And if any good impression has been made upon our hearts, or if any good resolution has been formed by us in thy strength, may it be confirmed and rendered permanent, and may its fruit be unto holiness. Grant that the hallowed effect of our sabbath exercises, in public or in private, may be manifested in all we think, and say, and do, throughout the week on which we have entered, so that the world may take knowledge of us that we are advancing in our Christian course. We pray thee to bless thy church throughout the world. May her ministers be disinterested, devoted, and zealous in the cause of the Captain of our salvation. May her members be more consistent in their profession and in their practice, and more united to one another, growing up into him in all things, who is the Head, even Christ. May the glad tidings of salvation be proclaimed throughout every land. May sabbath privileges and gospel ordinances be observed and appreciated more and more in our own country. May the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing on his wings, so that, both among ourselves and in the dark and distant lands of heathenism, the wilderness and the solitary place may be made glad, and the desert may rejoice and blossom as the rose. We beseech thee to bless us as a family. May we, and all who are dear to our hearts, whether present or absent, be more and more closely united together on earth by the bonds of holy Christian love; and when all our sabbaths here below are ended, may we meet to part no more, and enjoy that eternal and unbroken rest which remaineth for thy people in heaven. Watch over us, we implore thee, throughout this night. Grant us that sleep which thou givest unto thy beloved. May thy arm of mercy and of might protect us from all temporal and spiritual evil. If thou art pleased to spare us till the light of morning, may we feel that we are still with thee; and in thy strength, and under thy blessing, may we go forth to the discharge of our week-day duties, not slothful in business, yet fervent in spirit, thus serving thee the Lord. Hear these, O God, our evening supplications, and when thou hearest, forgive, and accept of us, and bless us, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL v.

REMARKS.

In this chapter, we have a striking instance of impiety and its punishment. The impiety was manifested by one, whom past experience might have taught to reverence the Lord of heaven and earth. Indeed, all who mock the majesty of the most High, are without excuse; but he whose sin and punishment are here recorded, was chargeable with the deepest ingratitude and guilt. Belshazzar was the son or grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, who had been made a striking monument of divine judgment and mercy. Yet instead of being warned by his example, Belshazzar proceeded to manifest the most deliberate and daring impiety. In the midst of a great feast, made, probably, for the purpose of proclaiming more widely his audacious wickedness, he brought forth the golden vessels which had been employed in the service of the temple at Jerusalem, and which had been sacrilegiously carried off by Nebuchadnezzar. From these consecrated vessels, he and his princes and his concubines drank wine, and in mad derision of the true God, praised the idols of wood and of stone which they worshipped. In the midst of their impious carousals, a hand came forth, and wrote upon the wall a doom, which none of the Chaldeans could read or interpret, but which, even in its inscrutable mysteriousness, smote the prince and his nobles with terror and dismay. The queen-mother, who seems not to have been present at their profane revelry, entered the banquet house, in consequence of the panic which spread throughout the palace. She recollected the services of Daniel, upon a former occasion, and recommended that he should now be sent for; and thus the servant of that God whom Belshazzar had insulted, became the instrument of denouncing his ingratitude and impiety, and of foretelling the swift judgment with which they would be visited. Because he had known the pride and the punishment of Nebuchadnezzar, and had not humbled his heart; but, on the contrary, had lifted himself up against the most High, and had desecrated the vessels dedicated to the worship of the true God, by employing them in the service of idolatry and licentiousness, therefore Daniel was commissioned to declare unto him that he had been weighed in the balances, and found wanting; and that now his kingdom would be taken from him, and given to the Medes and Persians. Similar predictions had previously been uttered by the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah; and the fulfilment of them is attested by profane historians.

From this passage of holy writ, we may learn, that pride and impiety are sure to provoke the divine wrath; and that if we neglect the warnings which God gives, by the punishment which he sends upon others, we shall draw down heavier judgment upon ourselves. Nebuchadnezzar sinned, and was punished; but because he repented, his reason and his kingdom were restored to him. Belshazzar neglected this warning, and he was cut off without any farther opportunity of repentance. These things happened as ensamples; and 'except we repent, we shall all likewise perish.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God! it is good for us at all times to wait upon thee, to show forth thy praise, and to declare thy loving-kindness. Thou art a great God, and a great King, above all gods; and we are thy feeble and dependent creatures. We rejoice, however, to know that, in the plenitude of thy bliss, and the sufficiency of thy nature, thou art not unmindful of the wants and the weaknesses of those beings whom thou hast made; for we, the children of men, have been the objects of a salvation into which even the angels desire to look. We had destroyed ourselves, but in thee was our help found. Thou wast pleased to send thy Son from heaven, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have everlasting life. And we pray, O Lord, that the great end for which Christ came may be fully answered in us. May we all believe on him to the saving of our souls. May we have that faith which purifieth the heart, and worketh by love, which is without partiality, and without hypocrisy, full of mercy, and of good fruits. May we be enabled to walk worthy of the high and holy vocation wherewith thou hast called us, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, by a life and conversation becoming the gospel. We pray for all whom we ought to remember before thee. Give repentance and resignation to the sick, help and deliverance to the persecuted and the needy, support and comfort to the aged and the dying. Speak peace to those who are troubled in mind. Give them a true knowledge of thee, and of their duty, and deliver them from all groundless fears and causeless scruples. Bless our friends, reward our benefactors, forgive our enemies, and grant, we beseech thee, that the time may soon come, when, by the universal diffusion, and influence of the gospel of peace, all discord and dissension shall cease, when men shall walk together as brethren, and celebrate, by lives of unity and forbearance, the praises of thee, who art a God forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin. We thank thee for all that goodness and mercy which thou art continually making to pass before us. We beseech thee to continue to us the many blessings which we already enjoy, and to turn away from us the many evils which our negligence and provocation may deserve. As thou art adding to our days, and multiplying upon us thy mercies, be pleased to grant us increase of grace and perseverance in holiness, that, as we are drawing nearer to our end, we may be growing more meet for the inheritance of thy heavenly kingdom. And unto thee, who alone art able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the throne of thy glory, with exceeding joy, we would ascribe dominion and praise, through Jesus Christ.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LX.

SCRIPTURE—HEBREWS XIII.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains a series of observations upon subjects, which may at first seem to be detached; yet a close and intimate connection may be traced in the several sections of which it consists.

Ver. 1—4. It begins with an exhortation to cherish brotherly love. Of this feeling the natural fruits, in the circumstances in which the early Christians were placed, would be hospitality to strangers, and sympathy with the persecuted and afflicted. According to many critics, ver. 4. should be translated, 'Let marriage be honoured, and the bed undefiled;' and in this view of it, personal purity and self-restraint might be regarded as the fruit of brotherly love, and as an illustration of the connection which subsists between all the virtues; just as in the following portion of the chapter we have an illustration of the connection between faith and holiness.

Ver. 5—16. Christians are here cautioned against covetousness, and encouraged to contentment, on the ground of the divine promise. The means or instrument by which we lay hold of the promises of God is faith; and hence the apostle exhorts us to hold fast the great and unchanging verities of our religious belief; and instead of occupying ourselves with new or strange doctrines, or with subordinate and trifling discussions, to seek rather to have our hearts established with grace—brought under the gracious and powerful influence of the truth. The relief of the truth is the only principle able to support us under all the trials to which we may here be exposed, and to sustain and cheer us in rendering a joyful service unto God, and in showing kindness to our fellow-men.

Ver. 17—21. The church being the ground and pillar of the truth, and its ministers being appointed to preserve the doctrines, and dispense the grace of the gospel, the apostle exhorts Christians to obey them that have rule over them. The solemn responsibility under which they watch for souls, is deduced as an argument for submission. But to show that the obedience of Christians to their spiritual rulers is not blind and implicit, the apostle proceeds to request from those whom he is addressing, an interest in their prayers, with a special view to his being more speedily restored to them. And the testimony of the deep and earnest desire which he had for their welfare, and of the interchange of communion which he sought to establish with them at a throne of grace, he concludes with a solemn supplication that the great end of the everlasting covenant may be accomplished in their spiritual perfection.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, who hast set thy glory above the heavens, we thy feeble and dependent creatures bow before thee. We know that we cannot be profitable to our Maker, and that our goodness can never extend itself unto thee, the Lord. But thou, in great kindness, hast invited us to approach thee with the voice of supplication and thanksgiving. Moved by our necessities, and encouraged by thy mercy, we seek, this evening, to shelter ourselves under the shadow of thy wings. Thou art rich in mercy to all who call upon thee in sincerity and truth, and savest such as are of a contrite heart. Day by day we have reason to magnify and bless thy worthy name. Thy mercies are new to us every morning, they are repeated to us every evening; great is thy faithfulness. We cannot praise thee according to the riches of thy grace; and thy favours towards us have risen up into a sum of blessing which we are unable to compute. Imprint, we beseech thee, and preserve upon our minds, a deep and lasting sense of thy mercies, that so we may yield ourselves up to thy service, and walk before thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives. Kindle the flame of thy love within us. Break every tie which may detain us from thee, our chief good, and melt our whole souls into a compliance with thy will. Give us such views of thy kindness and love to us, as may lead us more and more to honour and to obey thee. Instruct us in the knowledge of our duty to thee, our God, to our neighbour, and to our own souls. Preserve us from the temptations of the world, and from the deceitfulness of our own hearts. Excite in us a constant watchfulness against sin, and an eager desire after holiness. Help each of us to reform whatever may be amiss in our temper, or in our conduct, and what we know not, do thou teach us. Guide us, by thy good Spirit, in the way of faith and holiness, and give us grace to order our conversation as becometh the gospel. Endue us with that wisdom which cometh from above, which is pure and peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated, so that all of us may be inoffensive in our deportment, faithful and diligent in the discharge of our several duties, and adorned with those virtues and graces which thou delightest in. As thou hast given to us thy Son to be both a sacrifice for our sins, and an example of godly living, give us grace truly to receive this inestimable benefit, and faithfully to follow the blessed steps of his most holy life. And do thou strengthen and uphold us, that we may not only be kept from falling, but may go on from one degree of grace and of improvement to another, till at length we come to be presented faultless, before the throne of thy glory, with exceeding joy. Extend thy mercy to all mankind, and be pleased to bring them to the knowledge and obedience of thy will. Look with compassion upon all who are in affliction. Give them patience and comfort under it, and in thy good time a joyful deliverance. We bless thee for thy patience towards us, notwithstanding our many provocations. Accept of our united expressions of gratitude for this day holding our souls in life, and turning away from us the many evils to which we are liable. Into thy hands we commend our spirits during the silent watches of the night. Lighten our darkness, that we may not sleep the sleep of death. Refresh our bodies with quiet rest, and our souls with the consolations of thy Spirit; and when we awake in the morning, may we still find ourselves with thee. And now, Almighty God, who art always more ready to hear than we are to pray, and who givest us more than we deserve or ask, deal not with us according to our imperfect supplications; but pardon our offences, pity our infirmities, consider our necessities, and pour down upon us the abundance of thy mercy, through Jesus Christ.

TUESDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL VI.

REMARKS.

Of all the passions which agitate the breast of man, there is no one more hateful in itself, or more hurtful in its consequences, than envy. 'A sound heart is the life of the flesh; but envy is the rottenness of the bones. Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?'

Because an excellent spirit was in Daniel, and he had explained what had baffled all the wise men of Babylon, it pleased Darius to prefer him above all the princes and presidents of his empire. This promotion of Daniel provoked their envy, and they sought to find occasion against him. Such, however, were his faithfulness and discretion, in the high duties of his office, that even their malice and ingenuity could find nothing to lay hold of. Despairing of finding any fault concerning the administration of the kingdom, they laid a snare for him, in reference to his religion, the observances of which he inflexibly adhered to, in the midst of surrounding idolatry. Under the appearance of magnifying the power and majesty of Darius, his princes and governors agreed to make a decree that, for the space of thirty days, no petition should be made to either god or man, save to himself, under pain of being cast into the den of lions. With all the forms of oriental flattery, they approached the king, and requested that he would give his irrevocable sanction to this decree. The king fell into the snare which his nobles had laid, and the decree was signed with the royal seal. But all this could neither shake the fortitude nor restrain the piety of Daniel, who prayed and gave thanks before his God as he did aforetime. This was construed into contempt of the royal authority, and a violation of the royal decree, and the nobles urged the king to inflict punishment on this rebellious son of the captivity of Judah. The king now saw the snare into which he had been led, and exerted all his influence to deliver Daniel from the danger which threatened him. But even the royal prerogative could not reach this case. According to the constitution of the kingdom, a decree, which had been agreed on by the nobles, and sanctioned by the king, could not be summarily abrogated. The nobles pressed, with unrelenting malice, the advantage which they had gained, and, as a violator of their perfidious decree, Daniel was cast into the den of lions. But the God whom he served is he of whom it is written, 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.' The lions, less cruel than the envious men who had cast him into their den, spared the prophet, and did not return to their native fierceness till they received as their prey those perfidious men who deceitfully accused Daniel, and misled their prince. Punishment fell upon themselves, deliverance was wrought for Daniel, and the glory of the true God was extended.

This incident furnishes a striking illustration of the scripture, which saith of the wicked man, 'Behold, he travaileth with iniquity, and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood. He made a pit, and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made. His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate. I will praise the Lord according to his righteousness, and will sing praise to the name of the Lord most high.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, who formest the light and createst the darkness, the day is thine, and the night also is thine. All thy works praise thee, and thy saints do magnify thy name. We desire this morning to join our voices unto theirs in ascribing unto thee all glory and honour, and in acknowledging that we are thy dependent creatures. By thee we were made, and by thee we have been preserved. It is owing entirely to thy goodness and mercy that we have been furnished with the comforts and advantages of this life, and with the hopes and expectations of a better through Jesus Christ. Every thing we enjoy, and every thing to which we can aspire, flows to us from thine unmerited bounty. Accept, we beseech thee, of our unfeigned thanks for all the benefits which thou hast been pleased to bestow upon us, and pardon our great unworthiness of what thou hast done for us. Impress us with a deep sense of thy love to us, and lead us more and more to honour and to obey thee. Making it our daily care to do the things which thou hast commanded, may we preserve a settled peace of conscience, a sure trust in thy providence, and a joyful hope of everlasting life. With this hope may we purify ourselves, even as thou art pure. May we put away from us all envy, and malice, and evil-speaking, with every dishonest view and every wicked intention, and be careful to cultivate the virtues and graces which thou hast enjoined. May we see and feel the reasonableness and propriety of the commandment to be holy, even as thou who hast called us art holy. May we consider the exceeding riches of that grace which thou hast promised to all who ask it in sincerity and truth. May we remember that, although in ourselves we are weak, yet that in thee, the Lord, there is both righteousness and strength. May we, therefore, take to ourselves the whole armour of God, fight the good fight of faith, and study to be strong in the Lord and in the power of thy might. May thy word be our rule, thy Spirit our guide and helper, thy goodness our pattern and example, thy promises our encouragement, and thy joys our everlasting recompense and reward. And do thou, O God of peace, who broughtest again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the flock, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every good work, working in us that which is well-pleasing in thy sight. The blessings which we seek for ourselves, we would also supplicate for others. Turn the wicked and the careless from the evil and security of their ways, that they may live and not die. Make them to see and feel that the wages of sin is death, and stir them up to seek the gift of eternal life which is through Jesus Christ. May the sick, and the sorrowful, and the dying, find thee to be their stay and trust. Make us all more sensible of the frailty of our nature and the precariousness of our condition, and enable us more fully to fix and stay ourselves on thee and on thy laws. Accept of our united expressions of gratitude for thy good providence over us during the past night, and for every thing comfortable in our present condition. As thou hast been pleased to bring us to the light of another day, let it prove to us a day of grace and favour. Keep us continually in thy fear and service, and preserve us to thy heavenly kingdom, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—JAMES 1.

REMARKS.

Two persons of the name of James are mentioned in the New Testament history. The one was the son of Zebedee, and brother to John; and was called James the Greater. He is mentioned Matt. iv. 21. In the book of Acts (xii. 1, 2.) we read that he was killed by Herod, about the beginning of the reign of Claudius Cæsar, in the year of our Lord 44. The dispersion of the Jews did not take place till after this; so that James the Greater could not be the writer of this epistle. The other James was the son of Alphaeus, and brother to the apostles Simon and Jude. He was himself an apostle, and was generally called James the Less. In the epistle to the Galatians (i. 19.) he is called the brother of our Lord; because he was the kinsman of Christ according to the flesh; and the Jews denoted various degrees of consanguinity by the general term brother. In the second chapter of that same epistle, he is called a pillar or leading apostle. It is said that he was appointed the first pastor over the church at Jerusalem, which he governed, with great praise, for the space of thirty years, and at last suffered martyrdom by being cast from a pinnacle of the temple.

The Jews, to whom this epistle is more immediately addressed, were scattered and persecuted. James, as their kinsman, endeavours to console them, and, as their spiritual teacher, he calls on them to rejoice. He soothes their wounded feelings by a kindly salutation, and animates their Christian hopes by pointing to the improvement which they might derive from their afflictions. 'My brethren,' says he (ver. 2.) 'count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations.' He proceeds to show that the trials and afflictions of this life are fitted and designed to promote the growth of the Christian graces, and the perfection of the Christian character. They are appointed by a wise and a gracious God, who hath promised to give direction and help to all who faithfully ask him. It is not his will that we should sink under trial, or fall under temptation, but rather that we should resist and overcome. We should, therefore, guard against any dark or injurious views of the character of God, and regard him as the rich and unchanging source of every good and perfect gift. The apostle reminds those whom he is addressing that they had already received from him the gift of regeneration. He calls on them to consider the high and holy ends for which this gift had been conferred, and to value and improve the ministrations of that word by which it had originally been conveyed, and by which it was to be maintained and perfected within them. He exhorts them to lay apart all dispositions and practices which were inconsistent with the right reception and the fruitful operation of the engrafted word; to guard against all hypocrisy and self-deceit; to look steadfastly to that perfect law of liberty into which they had been delivered, that so they might see the joyful service which was expected of them, and continue therein. He animates them to this clear and consistent course by assuring them that its end would be blessed; and he warns them against instability and insincerity, by assuring them that before him with whom they had to do, mere professions and appearances would be altogether unavailing, and that without personal purity and brotherly love, true godliness cannot exist.

Let us learn, then, to bear with patience and fortitude the trials which may be appointed us; to rely with confidence on the unchanging goodness of God; to receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls; and endeavour to purify our heart and life according to its precepts.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, who art the hope and confidence of all ends of the earth, we desire this evening to approach thee with the voice of supplication and thanksgiving. We bless and magnify thy worthy name for all that goodness and mercy which thou hast been making to pass before us ever since we had a being. We thank thee for the rank which thou hast assigned to us among thine intelligent creatures. We thank thee that thou hast endowed us with the powers of reason and understanding, and hast made us capable of knowing, of loving, and of serving thee, who art the source of all happiness, and the centre of all perfection. We lament that even our best services should be inferior to thy purity and excellence; and still more deeply do we lament that, instead of serving thee with a perfect heart and a willing mind, we should so often have wandered from that path of peace and of duty which thou hast prescribed unto us. We have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and are not worthy to be called thy children. We rejoice, however, that there is forgiveness with thee that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption that thou mayest be sought after. This is thy name and thy memorial unto all generations, the Lord merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and slow to wrath, keeping covenant and mercy with them that love thee. We rejoice in the gracious assurance that thou wast in Christ reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. In his name, and for his sake, we implore from thee the pardon of our past offences, and grace to help us in our future life. Teach us carefully to redeem the time which we have lost, and diligently to improve those means of grace with which thou art still pleased to favour us. As pilgrims and strangers, may we pass the time of our sojourning here in fear, looking for a house eternal in the heavens. While we are in the world, may we keep ourselves from the evil which is in the world, and study to perfect holiness in thy fear. May we remember that this life is the preparation for immortality, the time which thou hast appointed for working out our salvation; and that, if we here neglect to exercise that faith, and to follow after that holiness which thou requirest, we cannot hereafter obtain that happiness which thou hast promised, for there is no work, nor device, nor wisdom, nor knowledge, in the grave, whither we are hastening. To-day, therefore, while it is yet called to-day, may we hearken to thy voice, as the night cometh wherein no man can work. May we give all diligence to make our calling and election sure. May we seek thee the Lord while thou art to be found; may we call upon thee while thou art near, before our feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and the things which belong to our eternal peace be for ever hid from our eyes. We pray not for ourselves only, but beseech thee to be merciful to all men, and to give them grace truly to repent of their sins, that they may receive forgiveness and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. Bountifully reward all from whom we have received any good, and graciously forgive those who have done or wished us any harm. We pray for those who are related to us by the ties of friendship and of blood. Give them the fear of thy name and a sense of thy mercy. Keep them contented with their condition, and steadfast in their obedience. Hear their prayers for us, and our prayers for them; and grant that, although here we may be separated by distance, and must at last be separated by death, we may meet in thy heavenly kingdom to celebrate the praises of thee, who hast been known as a refuge throughout all generations. We thank thee for thy providential goodness towards us through the past day, and for every thing comfortable in our present condition. Defend us through the darkness of the night and the unconsciousness of sleep. Keep thy fatherly hand ever about us; let thy Holy Spirit ever be with us; and do thou so guide and govern us in the knowledge and obedience of thy will, that finally we may attain to the inheritance of thy heavenly kingdom, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL VII.

REMARKS.

This chapter, with which the prophecies of Daniel begin, may be divided into two parts; the vision which Daniel saw, and the interpretation of it, which he received from one of those ‘ministering spirits’ who stood by him, ver. 16.

The four beasts are explained as representing the four kings or kingdoms, which should successively ‘arise out of the earth,’ and to which the church of God should be brought into subjection, previously to the establishment of Christ’s kingdom, under the last of them, the fourth, viz. the Roman, which latter event also is foretold, ver. 18. And thus far Daniel’s vision corresponds with Nebuchadnezzar’s dream, chap. ii. The fourth kingdom, however, besides being coeval with the coming of Christ, and the introduction of Christianity, was to differ from all its predecessors in this respect, that ten kings or kingdoms, ver. 24. were to arise out of it, that another, an eleventh, should arise ‘after’ or behind them, i. e. unperceived by them. And that by it, though wholly diverse from the former, three kingdoms should be subdued.

This, it cannot be doubted, is a distinct prediction of the papacy, and the facts of history both explain and fulfil it. The ‘horn,’ or kingdom of papacy, grew out of the Roman empire, after its ten-fold division; it differed from all other kingdoms, in that it was at first entirely ecclesiastical or spiritual, not openly claiming temporal jurisdiction until several centuries after its establishment, when it had become strong enough to enforce the claim. And ultimately, in the eighth century, it succeeded in reducing three states or kingdoms into subjection to the papal chair, which the pope retains at the present day. So that, in the words of bishop Newton, ‘The pope, by wearing his triple crown, hath in a manner pointed out for himself the person here intended!’

The character of the ‘man of sin’ is also depicted, ver. 25. and depicted with equal fidelity. ‘He shall speak great words against the most High,’ referring to his blasphemous assumption of the name, and attributes, and worship of Jehovah, ‘exalting himself as God,’ and ‘sitting in the temple of God,’ ‘and he shall wear out the saints of the most High,’ referring to the papal massacres and the inquisition, and ‘shall think,’ or presume, ‘to change times and laws,’ to interfere both with the positive and moral duties of religion, referring to those papal decrees, by which, in a variety of ways, the obligation of the law of God has been ‘made void,’ and the authority of scripture superseded, by which ‘the mystery of iniquity’ has been permitted ‘to work’ so long, and so fatally, to the subversion of the truth, and the ruin of souls.

The duration of this power, however, blessed be God, is limited, and is fixed, ver. 25. ‘The saints shall be given into his hand,’ i. e. shall be subject to, or shall be called to contend against his domination, ‘until a time, and times,’ and ‘the dividing,’ or ‘the half’ ‘of a time,’ a prophetic period, corresponding in all probability with that referred to, once and again, in the apocalypse, in connection with the same subject; a thousand, two hundred, and threescore days,’ or ‘forty and two months,’ which, according to the rule of prophetic interpretation, allowing each day to stand for a year, is equivalent exactly to ‘a time,’ or year of prophetic days, ‘and times, and half a time,’ in other words, to a period of twelve hundred and sixty years. That is the duration of the papacy; ‘hitherto shall it come, and no farther!’ We cannot, indeed, tell precisely when this period began, nor consequently, when it shall reach its termination; it is not intended that we should, but, without question, whatever date may be fixed upon, as the ‘coming up of the little horn,’ its course is already well nigh run; its fall, its destruction is at hand, for when the time has come for ‘the saints to possess the kingdom,’ ver. 22. for ‘Messiah the Prince to rule,’ then, ver. 11. ‘the beast shall be slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame,’ ver. 26. ‘The judgment shall sit, and the saints shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.’ ‘The Lord shall consume that Wicked with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the brightness of his coming,’ 2 Thess. ii. 8.

And this destruction of antichrist will not be an isolated event. It will be coeval, or ready, so we have reason to believe from another part of this book, chap. xii. 1. with the gathering in again of the Jews, ‘the children of God’s people,’ and that, the apostle Paul tells us, whensoever it may be accomplished, will be to the Gentile world as ‘life from the dead,’ Rom. xi. 15. imparting a new and mightier impulse than it has ever yet received, since the days of primitive effusion, to the church’s missionary enterprise, and so hastening on the arrival of that blessed jubilee of the earth, when, ver. 27. ‘the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.’

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven. We rejoice to know that thou reignest, and that the great Messiah reigns, that the government of the world and of the church is upon his shoulder, and that he must reign until he hath made all his enemies his footstool. We are naturally thine enemies, O God, and his; our hearts are rebellious, our wills are perverse, there is none of us that doeth good. We deserve to be dealt with as thine enemies, to be denounced and punished for our rebellion; thou wouldst be just in judging, clear in condemning us. But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared; judgment is thy strange work, thou delightest in mercy. We bless thee for Jesus, our Peacemaker, and for the assurance of thy love through him. O Lord, we will praise thee; though thou wast angry with us, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest us. May we enjoy more and more largely the peace of believing. May we know our election of God. May we have the inward witness testifying our adoption. Say unto our souls, I am your salvation. And, Lord, we would desire to have the spirit as well as the privileges of thy children. We would seek to be made dutiful, submissive, humble, anxious to know, and willing to do all that thou requirest of us. There is much rebelliousness still lurking in our souls, much pride, self-will, self-seeking, self-glorying. O for deliverance from these accursed things; O to be thoroughly subdued by thy grace; to have our every thought brought into captivity. Draw us, Lord, and we will run after thee. Turn us, O Lord, and we shall be turned; for thou art the Lord our God. And do thou multiply, we beseech thee, more and more, every day the number of the faithful. We hail the blessed prospects thou hast opened up in the sure word of prophecy for the world in which we live, covered as it now is with darkness, and groaning beneath the bondage of corruption. Hasten thou their fulfilment, condescend to own and prosper every scriptural means employed with a view to this high end; let Jew and Gentile be made one in Christ; let antichrist be overthrown, and may every plant be rooted up which our heavenly Father hath not planted. Be favourable to our land; return and visit us, as in days of old; revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy. Accept our morning tribute of praise for all thy bountiful kindness. To thy care we would commend ourselves; during this day preserve us from evil, preserve us, especially, from sin. Help us to realize thy presence continually, to maintain the remembrance of thee in our minds, to walk before thee in the land of the living. And do thou so replenish our souls with a sense of thy love to us in Christ Jesus, that we shall be raised above the influence of every meaner affection, and shall be constrained to run in the way of thy commandments, rejoicing in thy name all the day. Lead us in thy way, and teach us, for thou art the God of our salvation, on whom we desire continually to wait. We ask all for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL VIII.

REMARKS.

The vision of the ram and he-goat contained in this chapter, as explained by the angel Gabriel, ver. 20—25. refers to the Persian and Grecian monarchies, and in its general outline admits of easy verification.

1. The ram with the two horns is the Medo-Persian empire, under Cyrus and his successors.

2. The 'he-goat,' is 'the king' or kingdom of Greece, and the 'first king' of that kingdom; 'the great horn between its eyes,' is unquestionably Alexander the Great, by whom the 'ram was smitten, and his two horns broken,' i. e. the Persian empire, in both divisions of it, subdued and taken.

3. After his death, it is well known his kingdom was subdivided into four smaller monarchies, under four of his commanders; this accords with the prediction of ver. 22; and,

4. 'In the latter time of their kingdom,' another king was to stand up, 'a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences,' whose power should be mighty. This was fulfilled in the person of Antiochus Epiphanes, the great enemy of the Jews, whose power and policy are foretold, ver. 11, 12, 24, 25. and who, in accordance with that prophecy, 'magnified himself against the Prince of the host,' 'the Lord God of Israel,' profaned the temple, took away the 'daily sacrifice,' and 'gave both the sanctuary' and its attendant ministers 'to be trodden under foot.'

A part of this prophecy, however, seems to have a further reference, and, like that which precedes it, to point forward to a period still future. What Antiochus was to the Jewish church, that 'the man of sin,' 'the beast out of the bottomless pit' has been, and is, to the Christian. 'He has destroyed wonderfully, he has prospered, and practised, and has destroyed,' or made havoc, 'among the mighty ones, the people of the saints.' Also through his policy, he 'caused craft,' or fraud, 'to prosper in his hand, and he has magnified himself in his heart,' and in times of tranquillity has destroyed multitudes, 'even against the Prince of princes, has he stood up' and 'magnified himself.' The prophecy may thus be regarded as a double one, including both the type and the antitype, and with this latter view corresponds even more exactly than with the former, the period specified during which the hostile power should be allowed to prevail, ver. 14. 'Unto two thousand three hundred days.' Literally, these 'days' were accomplished in the experience of the Jewish people, before 'the sanctuary was cleansed.' Of this there can be no doubt, though there is some difficulty in tracing the chronology of an age now so far remote. But viewing them prophetically, as in the foregoing chapter, (each day representing a year), we may regard them as indicating an event which has not yet taken place, viz. the destruction of Antichrist; and thus the prediction of this chapter, though dating from a different period, will be found to harmonize with that of the preceding, at once confirming its certainty, and also our interpretation of it. 'The two thousand three hundred days,' if dated, as bishop Newton supposes they ought to be, from the time of Alexander's invading Asia, 334 years before Christ, will correspond almost to a unit with the '1,260 days,' or years, there specified; and since we know whatever be the exact space of time indicated by these numbers, it has long ago begun its course, and is now advancing, we are furnished with a two-fold argument, instead of a single one; and an argument all the stronger, that the coincidence between the two prophecies is apparently undesigned, for cherishing the assured hope of what God has then promised to do, of the deliverance of his church from oppression, and the triumph of that spiritual kingdom which is to 'stand for ever.'

PRAYER.

O God, do thou deliver us from self-deceit and hypocrisy, from every secret sin. May we be sincere and upright before thee; may we be pure in heart within. Thou knowest how prone we are to flatter ourselves in our own eyes; to be satisfied with a name to live; to say, Peace, when there is no peace. And we confess, most gracious God, that we have been chargeable with much insincerity, and manifold inconsistencies, both in our conduct towards thee, and towards our fellow-men. We have said that we have faith, yet our faith has not wrought by love, nor has it purified our hearts, nor has it enabled us to overcome the world. It has been at the best feeble and fluctuating, and often, alas! has given place to the evil heart of unbelief, leading us to depart from thee, the living God. Yet, Lord, we would believe, we would desire above all things, to have the precious faith of thine elect, that faith which unites the soul to Christ, and which by uniting, assimilates, conforms it to his image. Do thou by thy Holy Spirit increase our faith. May Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, and be formed in us the hope of glory. May the same mind be in us that was also in Christ Jesus, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich; who came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister; who pleased not himself. Like him, may we be humble, condescending, forgiving, enduring, loving one another out of a pure heart, fervently; yea, walking in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour. May we be living epistles of Christ, seen and read of all. Be pleased, gracious Father, to forgive wherein this day we have sinned against thee, in the intercourse with each other, or with the world. Alas! the sins even of a day are too many for us to bear; wert thou to mark iniquity, we could not stand. But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. We would have recourse, anew, to the blood of Jesus, which cleanseth from all sin. May we be washed, and justified, and sanctified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. To thy fatherly protection we commit ourselves during the ensuing night, giving thee thanks for the mercies which this day thou hast bestowed upon us, and trusting in the continuance of thy favour. May the eternal God be our refuge, and underneath us the everlasting arms. Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, &c.

THURSDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—JAMES II.

REMARKS.

The practical and holy tendency of the gospel is here, as throughout the whole of this epistle, strongly enforced, James's design being not opposite to, but different from Paul's; not to show what the gospel is, but what it does; not what it is, as revealed by God, but what it does as believed and obeyed by man. The principles of the gospel are unfolded in the epistles to the Romans and Galatians; its practice, 'the pure and undefiled religion' of which it is the source, is delineated here.

1. The apostle condemns the sin of 'partiality,' especially as exemplified in the 'respect' shown to 'the rich,' to the disparagement of the poor, in Christian assemblies. This sin, comprehending, of course, every thing in the conduct of Christians that bears a resemblance to it, he condemns, as at direct variance with 'the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ,' 'the Lord of glory,' ver. 1., which unites all believers in one body, which recognizes no distinction between them but that of brotherhood, which owns no superiority of one above another, save in respect of that spiritual excellency or 'glory' which is received from him; as a sin, of which every genuine disciple, in as far as he possesses the Spirit of Christ, must be self-convicted, so that he cannot fail to be conscious in himself of his partiality to be 'a judge of his own evil thoughts,' ver. 4., as a sin which openly dishonours God, by depreciating those whom he exalts, by despising, for their poverty, those whom he has endowed with 'his durable riches and righteousness,' ver. 5.; and as a sin for which of all others there is the least apology, as committed in deference to a class of persons, by whom spiritually the followers of Christ have never been laid under obligation, by whom they have been often oppressed and persecuted, 'drawn before the judgment-seats,' and committed at the expense of those by whom at least they have never been injured, many of whom have been their 'helpers in Christ Jesus,' and all of whom ought to be regarded by them as their friends, ver. 6, 7.

2. The apostle traces up the sin, thus exposed, to its source, and proves that while the gospel condemns it, the law, 'the royal law' of love, condemns it also. That law requires us indeed 'to love our neighbours as ourselves;' to love, therefore, even 'the rich, who oppress' us, and 'despitefully use and persecute us.' But while it requires us to love them as 'our neighbours,' it does not require us to love them because they are 'rich,' or powerful, or capable of advancing our worldly interests. On the contrary, the very generality of the term employed in reference to our fellow men, when they are described simply as 'our neighbours,' proves, that when, to serve a purpose, and at the sacrifice of our consistency, we confine our 'respect' to the few, at the expence of the many, we are not obeying the law of God, but gratifying the evil inclinations of our own minds; thus we are convicted of the law as 'transgressors,' and 'whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.' This is the apostle's argument, ver. 8—12.

3. Having thus denounced the sin of 'partiality,' he proceeds to expose that 'hypocrisy,' with which it is associated, chap. iii. 17. and under the covert of which it seeks to find shelter; the 'hypocrisy' of those who because scripture teaches that we are 'justified by faith alone,' content themselves with possessing a faith which is alone, which is 'without works,' either to prove or to recommend it. This he shows, 1. To be at variance with sound reason, as would be the supposition that words and deeds of charity are of equal value, that words dissociated from deeds are of any value at all, ver. 15, 16. 2. It is at variance with analogy; unproductive faith is no better in men than in devils; their faith is speculatively correct so far as it goes, yet, instead of bringing them nearer to God, as true faith does, and so imparting enjoyment, it only increases their alienation from him, and aggravates their misery, ver. 18, 19. And, 3. It is at variance with scriptural history and example; the examples of Abraham and Rahab; the former the most distinguished, the latter 'one of the least,' among those by whom, of old, faith is said to have been possessed. Both of them, it is true, were justified, obtained the approbation of God, in virtue of their faith only; this the apostle Paul demonstrates in reference to Abraham, Rom. iv. 3. quoting the same expression from Genesis, used here, ver. 23. and James does not deny it; but both of them also 'were justified by works,' i. e. they were justified before men, their faith was proved to be genuine, it justified itself, 'it wrought with their works, and by works was made perfect.' Abraham's faith in the promise, in the promise of a son, by which he was justified before God, Rom. iv. 3. justified itself before men, by the performance, thirty years after, ver. 21. when being strong in faith, he gave glory to God, by offering his son upon the altar; and Rahab the harlot's faith in the God of Israel, by which she became an object of the divine regard, 'proved itself sincere,' when afterwards in circumstances of difficulty and danger, 'she received the messengers' who came to examine Jericho, and in order to save them from their pursuers, 'sent them out another way.' The question proposed, ver. 15. when thus explained, at once loses its difficulty. 'What doth it profit, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works?' Can faith, can such a faith, 'save him?' And this is the answer to it, ver. 26. 'As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.'

Let us be reminded, by the whole argument, how vital a feature of true Christianity is 'love to the brethren,' love to them especially as brethren; and because they are so, because they bear the image of Christ, because though 'the world knows them not,' they are known and loved by God. Let us remember also that there is only one source from which this love can emanate, even from the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory; the faith of his love to us, in becoming poor, that we might be rich; in emptying himself of his glory, that we might become partakers of it. 'Walk in love, as Christ also loved us, and gave himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour.'

PRAYER.

Everlasting and omniscient God, unto thee would we lift up our souls, and in his name, with whom thou art ever well-pleased, we would supplicate thy favour. Solemnize our minds by the recollection that thou, who knowest the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that shall be, art also the searcher of all hearts, the ever-present witness, the infallible judge. Thou art greater than our hearts, and thou knowest all things. And thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel, so holy that thou canst not look upon sin, so holy that no sinner can stand in thy presence. Our God is a consuming fire. Yet to whom can we flee for succour, under the consciousness of guilt, or the dread of vengeance, but only to thee, O God? Blessed be thy name, that we are permitted to address thee as our God, our God in covenant, our God in Christ, who art reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses, who art as gracious to forgive as thou art holy to hate and just to punish, who art just even in justifying the ungodly who believe in Jesus, at once the sinner's friend and sin's eternal foe. And we rejoice to believe, that thine is an omniscient mercy; that though the number of our sins be incalculable, save only by thyself, thou art willing, for Christ's sake, abundantly to pardon them all; that in him we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of thy grace, wherein thou hast abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence. O do thou grant us the blessed consciousness that this redemption is ours, that Christ himself is ours, and we are his. Increase our faith in the Lord Jesus; increase it in its simplicity, in its vitality, in its comforting and quickening energy. May we know whom we have believed; may we count all but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, whom having not seen, may we love, and believing in him may we rejoice, even with a joy unspeakable, and full of glory. And do thou impart to us, in larger and yet larger measure, the influence of thy free Spirit to renew and sanctify us. Cleanse the sanctuary of our hearts, dethrone every idol, take full possession for thyself; may the Lord alone be exalted. Thou knowest our individual necessities, be pleased to supply them; may each of us receive grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ, and may that grace be sufficient for us. Dwell in this family, and as thou hast been our fathers' God, the God of Bethel, do thou vouchsafe to us also thy choicest blessing. As for us, and our house, we will serve the Lord. May each of us be a living member of thine own holy and happy family; let none of us be wanting in that day when thou makest up thy jewels. Be gracious to our friends, forgive our enemies, reward our benefactors; be the husband of the widow, the father of the fatherless, the helper of those who have no help in men. Prosper thine own cause, gather in thine elect, and hasten thy kingdom. Let thy way be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the King reign and prosper; and from the uttermost corners of the earth may there be heard songs, even glory to the righteous One. We implore thy protection and guidance during this day. May the Lord preserve us from all evil, may the Lord preserve our souls. Henceforth, in going out and in, do thou keep us for ever. And all we now ask is for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XXXIV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—JAMES III.

REMARKS.

'What man is he that loveth life, and desireth to see good days? let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips from speaking guile.' Thus speaks the psalmist, and his words derive an impressive illustration from the picture here presented to us, of the destructiveness of the tongue. Though 'a little member,' it worketh mightily; mightily for good, if wisely used, but mightily for ill, if left unbridled and untamed. It is like the 'bit' in the horse's mouth, which turns about his whole body; it is like the helm of a vessel, which instantly obeys the master's will, and which, even in a tempest, the vessel obeys; it is like a spark of fire, which though itself harmless, may kindle a conflagration. Most of the wars which desolate the earth, most of the tumults which rend society, and many of the jealousies and discords by which the peace of families is disturbed, by which happiness and health, and even life are sacrificed, arise from rash, false, or malicious speaking. 'The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison,' even 'the poison of asps,' 'it setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell.'

How valuable an attainment, then, the government of the tongue, the government of those passions which speak by the tongue. This may truly be called 'the elixir of life,' more effectual by far, both to sweeten life and to lengthen it, than all the medicines in the world.

But who can tame the tongue, and make it the minister of health and peace? 'The tongue can no man tame;' though the experiment has often been tried, it has never yet succeeded. Every other monster, whether of air, earth, or sea, has been tamed, and made tractable, but this; it is 'deceitful above all things, and incurably wicked, who can know it?' But 'that which is impossible with men, is possible with God.' He alone can achieve the deed, for 'behold,' saith he, 'I make all things new.' And this blessing, as well as every other, comes to us from Christ, out of the 'fullness of grace' which was 'poured into his lips,' and which he imparts to ours. 'If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature.' The soul of a man who has been regenerated by the Holy Spirit, regains in a measure its power of self-control; can enchain the malignant passions, making them captive under the dominion of holy love, and pour a balm of honeyed words unto the wounds of his own or his neighbour's miseries. Would we then obtain this divine cure? We must seek it of that heavenly Physician who 'healeth all our diseases,' and 'who satisfieth our mouth with good things;' and if we would preserve it, in its native freshness and efficacy, we must guard against every deleterious admixture, and sedulously watch its daily application. If we would have our speech to be 'with grace,' we must 'keep our hearts,' and keep them 'with all diligence, since out of them are the issues of life.' The fountain must be pure, that the stream may be pure also, and that the stream may be uniform, not 'sending forth from the same fountain sweet water and bitter,' ver. 11., a thing, indeed, impossible in nature, but exemplified by that unnatural, 'unruly evil,' the tongue, when 'out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing.' How much do we stand in need of the pure and perfect 'wisdom that is from above,' ver. 17. Let us highly value it, especially as contrasted with that which is 'earthly, sensual, devilish;' let us diligently 'seek for it as for hid treasure,' and 'if we lack wisdom, let us ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given us.'

PRAYER.

O God, our heavenly Father, do thou inspire us with the grace of true humility, especially when, as now, we present ourselves before thy holy Majesty, and take thy name into our mouths. Give us to feel, as did thy servant of old, when, beholding the vision of thy glory, he exclaimed, Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Behold, we are vile, and what shall we answer thee? We have destroyed ourselves, O God, but in thee is our help. And there is hope in Israel concerning this thing, for there is a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. Though the tongue can no man tame, yet thou canst, and thou hast often done it, and thou hast promised to do it again; with thee is the residue of the Spirit; from thee cometh down the wisdom that is pure, peaceable, and gentle, and it hath pleased thee, the Father, that in Christ Jesus, thy dear Son, all fullness of grace and blessing should dwell. O then, do thou grant us a living faith in Jesus, and a vital union to him, that so our guilt and pollution may be cleansed at once, that being joined to the Lord, we may be of one spirit with him, that Christ may be formed in us the hope of glory, and that, animated by a continual and constraining sense of his love, we may grow in conformity to his example, who did no sin, and in whose mouth no guile was found, who was meek and lowly in heart, on whose tongue was the law of kindness and love. Forgive, we beseech thee, wherein this day, we have offended, or come short. Alas! wert thou to enter into judgment with us, even for the sins of a day, we could not stand, nor answer thee for one of a thousand; even the thought of foolishness is sin before thee. But how precious the assurance, that the blood of Christ thy Son cleanseth from all sin, and that if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. May every day's experience serve to shut us up more entirely to the faith of this blessed truth, that so the love of Christ filling our hearts, our mouths may be eloquent with his praise, and our lives devoted to his service. Be the God of this family; may each member of our household belong to the household of faith; may each heart be a temple for thee to dwell in. And may those of our dear friends, who are absent from us, be fellow-partakers with us of thy grace. Bless all thy chosen people every where; feed, and lead, and lift up. Heal their divisions, bring to a perpetual end their envyings one of another, and let the blessed period soon arrive, when the shepherds shall see eye to eye, and when all that now distracts and weakens thy holy church universal shall be buried and forgotten in the love of one another. Bless our own land, and our own church, and this portion of thy vineyard in which thou hast cast our lot. May thy work flourish among us; may it revive and prosper, as in the days of old. Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts, and make thy countenance to shine, and so we shall be safe. To thy care and keeping we commend ourselves during the ensuing night, giving thee thanks also for the mercies of the day which is now drawing to a close. We will lay ourselves down in peace, and take quiet rest, because thou, Lord, our Father who art in heaven, makest us to dwell in safety. Hear our supplications, forgive, answer, and accept of us, for Jesus our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXII. 5.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL IX.

REMARKS.

Understanding from the writings of Jeremiah, that the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time, was close at hand, Daniel set himself to seek from God by prayer and fasting the fulfilment of the mercy promised to his people. The supplication which he offered up in their behalf extends from the 3d to the 20th verse; and the answer which he received from the 20th verse to the end of the chapter.

His prayer breathes a spirit of profound humility, meekness, faith, earnestness, and zeal for the glory of God. Believing the fervent prayer to be the effectual prayer, he manifested the same spirit that Jacob did when he said to the angel of the covenant, 'I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.' O let us, like him, go to the throne, and continue there, asking until we receive, seeking until we find. Let us, too, like him, go thither with a statement of the wants of others as well as of our own, remembering that by acting the part of intercessors, we may be the means of imparting many a blessing, and of removing or sanctifying many a woe.

Never did the hearer of prayer say to any of the seed of Jacob, Seek ye my face in vain. 'Whiles Daniel was speaking, and praying, and confessing his sins,' the angel Gabriel, under a human form, appeared to him about three in the afternoon, the time of the evening oblation. Important was the message with which this heavenly visitant was entrusted. It related to him to whom the Jews under all their sorrows were directed to look for consolation; and it made known the time, the design, and the consequences of his advent. An edict was about to be issued for the rebuilding of the holy city, which then lay desolate; and within seventy weeks, or 490 prophetic days, in other words, 490 common years thereafter, the dispensation of Moses was to be finally, and for ever superseded by the dispensation of the Messiah. Now in the seventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes, Ezra received a commission to 'beautify the house of the Lord which was at Jerusalem;' in seven weeks, or forty-nine years, a 'troublous' season, the work was completed under Nehemiah; six-two weeks, or 434 years elapsed from that date ere the Baptist appeared in the wilderness of Judea, announcing the kingdom of heaven to be at hand; and in the midst of the last week, or towards the close of the last, seven years, the Lord Jesus Christ, by the one offering of himself upon the cross, fulfilled Old Testament predictions, caused the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and brought in an everlasting righteousness. It is impossible to mistake the calamitous events to which the latter portion of both the 26th and the 27th verses refers. During the course of his public ministry, our Saviour frequently adverted to them; never perhaps with more pathos than just before he made his last public entrance into Jerusalem. On that occasion, when, as he passed over the brow of the mount of Olives, he saw the city spread out in all its magnificence before him; he wept over it and said, 'If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee.' These words may be regarded as an exposition of the closing communication which was made to Daniel; and every reader of history knows with what unerring accuracy the prediction was verified. Before the 'seventy weeks' had passed away, Jerusalem had become a heap, and the mountain of God's house like high places of the forest. God forbid that any of us should fall upon the same example of unbelief. The disasters by which the Jews were overtaken 'happened unto them for our admonition; and the awful warning which they give, is briefly but significantly embodied in the words, 'How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation.'

PRAYER.

Thou, O Lord, art our God, and we will praise thee. Thou wast our fathers' God, and we will exalt thee. But above all, thou art the God and the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and anew would we thank thee for thine unspeakable gift. We adore thee that thou hast laid our help upon One mighty and able to save. Glory be to the Father, who when there was no eye to pity, and no arm to work deliverance, was pleased, in the fullness of his compassion, to provide the Lamb without blemish and without spot, for a burnt-offering! Glory be to the Son, who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame! Glory be to the Holy Ghost, the Comforter and the Sanctifier of the church, who applieth to the souls of thy people the blessings of the Saviour's purchase! O forbid that any of us, like the unbelieving Jews of old, should do despite to redeeming love. May we be washed, justified, and sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. O give us thy good Spirit, to teach us what thou wouldest have us to do, to make us what thou wouldest have us to be, to lead us into all the truth, to adorn us with all the graces of the Christian life, to crown our faith with the peaceable and the enduring fruits of righteousness. By nature we are dead in trespasses, may thy Spirit revive and quicken us. By nature we are far from thee; may thy Spirit bring us near, and make us one by faith with thy dear Son. By nature we are averse to thy holy law; may thy Spirit slay this enmity; enlarging and purifying our hearts, may he lead us to run with delight in the path of all thy commandments. And may thy Spirit seal us unto the day of complete and everlasting redemption, enabling us to persevere in well-doing to the end, preserving us faithful unto death. We bless thee that by the recorded example of thy people, as well as by the precepts and the promises of thy word, thou hast invited and encouraged us to pray for others as well as for ourselves. We rejoice to think that in our Father's house there is bread enough, and to spare. Giving does not impoverish thee, withholding does not enrich thee. Be pleased then to listen to our prayers in behalf of the church of Christ, the church universal on earth; our hearts desire is that thou wouldest heal her divisions, that thou wouldest remove her corruptions, and that thou wouldest extend her boundaries. Build up the waste places of Zion, satisfy her poor with bread, clothe her priests with salvation, cause her saints to shout for joy. Revive thy work in the midst of our own country, of our own neighbourhood, of our own family. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. We bless thee for the comfort of the past night, and for the circumstances of tranquillity and comfort in which thou hast permitted us to assemble together around thine altar. Be with us, and with all who are near and dear to us, throughout this day. And whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, may we do all to thy glory, may we do all in the name of Jesus, may we do all in dependence upon thy blessing, may we do all as with a view to the account which we must give in at a judgment-seat. Hear these our prayers. We present them in the name of him whom thou lovest and hearest always. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XC. 11.

SCRIPTURE—JAMES IV.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. At the beginning of this chapter it appears to be the design of the apostle to guard Christians against the sins with which the Jews of the day were chargeable. It may be supposed to be to the latter that he more especially addresses himself, when he declares that the disputes in which they indulged had their origin neither in patriotism nor in piety, but in covetousness, contention, and revenge. These unsanctified passions, after giving battle to and triumphing over the dictates of reason, and of conscience, proceed, according to his expressive metaphor, to wage war against the peace and well-being of society, unscrupulously assailing whatever stands in the way of their gratification. But it is their fate to be disappointed. The worldlyminded men who give way to them seek after happiness, but seek after it in vain. Ignorant of the elements of which happiness is composed, and of the quarter in which happiness is to be found, they either pray not at all, or pray only for gifts which perish in the using. Well may they who thus make temporal possessions and temporal pleasures the objects of their idolatry, be signalized as adulterers and adulteresses, despisers of him to whom they are professedly espoused, and well may they be reminded that the disposition to mind earthly things which characterizes them is neither more nor less than enmity against God. God is not loved at all unless he be loved predominantly; and above all, if he reign in the heart, his throne must be undivided, he must reign without a rival. Altogether opposed to the temper which distinguishes his children is the tendency which is evinced by those who are of the earth, earthy. Theirs is 'a spirit which lusteth to envy,' a corrupt principle which leads them to regard prosperity, and the various indulgences which prosperity can command as their chief good, and which produces as its natural fruits, strife, fraud, malice, and injustice. To the dominion of such vile affections God will not leave any of those who are his. The good work which he begins within their hearts, he will carry on, mature, and perfect; and while he 'resisteth the proud,' while he sets himself, as it were, in battle-array against the self-witted, and the highminded, 'he giveth grace to the humble,' to all who feel their need of that precious blessing, and pray in sincerity for its bestowal.

Ver. 7—10. From these considerations is deduced the obligation which lies upon all to make a surrender of themselves unto God. If they would be his, they must submit with meekness and docility to the guidance of his word, to the direction of his Spirit, and to the conduct of his providence. If they would be his, too, they must resist his enemy and their own, the prince who ruleth over the children of disobedience; opposing to his fiery darts the shield of faith, and saying in reply to his every temptation, 'shall I do this great evil and sin against God.' At the same time that they may be strengthened for the conflict, and be replenished with every necessary grace, they are enjoined to go to the mercy-seat of God in Christ, and to go thither humbly, yet confidently, mourning over their demerit, but not despairing of forgiveness. Such is the sorrow which is assured of consolation, such the abasement that terminates in glory.

Ver. 11, 12. Next follow certain dissuasives against the sin of rash judgment and detraction.

Ver. 13—17. The folly of boasting of to-morrow is the subject with which the chapter concludes. Such conduct is less excusable by far in one who enjoys the light of revelation, than in a benighted heathen. 'To him who knoweth to do good, and doeth it not,' to him who is aware that in all things he ought to acknowledge God, and who in the ordinary affairs of life makes no such acknowledgment, 'to him it is sin,' the greater and the more aggravated sin.

PRAYER.

Thou, O Lord, art great, and greatly to be praised; thou art holy, and therefore to be had in profoundest reverence; thou art good to all, and supremely to be adored, both on earth below and in heaven above. Bless the Lord, ye his angels that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word. Bless the Lord, all ye his hosts, ye ministers of his that do his pleasure. Bless the Lord, all his works, in all places of his dominion; bless the Lord, O our souls. Towards us how manifold and how wonderful have been the expressions of thy favour! Thou madest us at first, not we ourselves; and we gratefully acknowledge that it is only because thou hast never left nor forsaken us that we have been so long preserved in the land of the living, and the place of hope. Graciously hast thou dealt with us in every stage of our existence. Liberally hast thou supplied our returning wants. Thou hast guided us through many difficulties, thou hast protected us from many dangers, thou hast disappointed many of our fears, thou hast exceeded many of our hopes, thou hast been a very present help in our time of trouble. Herein especially, and above all, was love, not that we loved thee, but that thou lovedst us, and didst send thy Son into our world to impart unto thy people pardon of sin, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, purity of heart and life, and the hope of glory. It is only in his name that we are emboldened to come into thy presence, and to bow before thy throne. We believe in him, help thou our unbelief; rebuke every suspicion of his faithfulness and supremacy away from us. Give us grace to confide in his love, to lay hold of his righteousness, and to surrender ourselves to his disposal. May he be formed in us our sole hope of glory. May he be made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. Thus reconciled to thee through the blood of his cross, may we be enabled to live as becometh the children of thine adoption, hating that which thou hatest, and following after that in which thou takest pleasure. And do thou who hast all hearts in thy hands, and who turnest them as the rivers of water whithersoever thou pleasest, so dispose our hearts, by the grace of thy Spirit, as that sin may become our aversion, and the paths of holiness may be regarded by us as paths of pleasantness and peace. Living in the world, and discharging the duties which we owe to the world, but renouncing its spirit, and keeping aloof from its defilements, may we be enabled to show that our home is on the other side of death, that our treasure is within the veil. O amidst all the trials and turmoils of time, may this glorious hope, the hope of immortality, be as the anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast. May it fortify against temptation, quicken to the discharge of duty, minister comfort under sorrow, and counteract the fear of death. Be very gracious to all who are connected with us by whatever tie. The Lord bless them, the Lord cause the light of his countenance to shine upon them, and give them peace. Be very favourable to us as a family. May goodness and mercy follow us; may the everlasting arms be ever underneath and around us; and may we at length appear before thee, no wanderer lost, a family in heaven. These our prayers we present in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, thine eternal Son, and our adorable Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXXXIX.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL X.

REMARKS.

In the seventy-third year of his captivity, and in the ninetieth of his age, Daniel was honoured with another vision, the details of which occupy the whole of the chapter which is before us, and of the other two chapters which succeed. Before receiving this mark of favour, he had spent three weeks in humiliation before God, mourning over the want of patriotism manifested by some of his countrymen, who chose to remain in the land of their bondage, and over the difficulties experienced in the rebuilding of the temple by others of them who, taking advantage of the proclamation of Cyrus, had returned to Jerusalem. The vision took place in the neighbourhood of Shushan, the palace, in which the prophet is supposed to have been at that time residing. Whilst walking on the banks of the Hiddekel, or Tigris, he lifted up his eyes, and beheld one under a human form who, from the description which is given of his appearance, could be none other than the eternal Word, the only begotten of the Father. The linen dress bespeaks the great High Priest of our profession; while the golden girdle which he wore, may be regarded as an emblem at once of his faithfulness and of his power. His countenance, his form, and his speech, were transcendantly majestic; and so overwhelming was the effect which they produced upon the prophet, that he felt himself bereft of strength, and fell prostrated upon the ground. Believing him in whose presence the seraphs veil their faces with their wings, he felt as Moses did at mount Sinai, when he said, 'I exceedingly fear and quake.' O how should our hearts burn within us when we think that of this greatness he emptied himself, and over this glory he drew a covering, when he came down from his throne, and became a partaker of flesh and blood!

From the state of amazement into which he had fallen, the prophet was roused by an angel, who, after silencing his fears, and encouraging his hopes, proceeded to make him aware of the design of his coming. During the time which Daniel had spent in prayer, that ministering spirit had been employed at the Persian court in warding off the dangers with which the Jews were threatened; and by the assistance of Michael had been enabled to do so successfully. The enemy from whom these dangers arose was Cambyzes, the son of Cyrus; and he, as a persecutor of the Jews, was to be succeeded by the king of Greece, whilst Michael, their guardian and deliverer, is supposed by some to have been an angelic being of surpassing power and dignity, and by others the great Head of the church himself. The whole passage is full of encouragement to the people of God, and of warning to his adversaries. In seasons of perplexity, in dark and troublous times, what truth is better fitted to minister comfort to believers trembling for their own security or for the prosperity of the cause of Christ, than the assurance that he who sitteth upon his holy hill, disposes of all events as he pleases, and causes the opposition of his foes to rebound to his honour? He has a people on earth against whom no hostility can prevail, and whom no event can separate from his love. They may be overtaken by the hurricane, they may be required to pass through the furnace, persecutors may insult over them for a season, many tribulations may befall them; but they know—and is not the persuasion an animating one?—that under the government of the Prince of peace, nothing evil in itself, or evil in its consequences, will be permitted to come near their dwellings. Do we belong to the happy number? Then are we safe in a rock-built citadel, against which, because of the strength that is enlisted in its defence, no weapon shall prosper, neither shall the gates of hell be permitted to prevail. 'The kings of the earth may set themselves, and the rulers may take counsel together against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast their cords from us. But he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision.' They can do nothing against the truth; their very efforts to overthrow it are overruled for its more triumphant establishment.

PRAYER.

With profound humility, but at the same time, with holy, reverential, child-like confidence, we desire to lift up hearts unto thee, O Lord, our Father which art in heaven. Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the vail of his flesh; and having an High Priest over the house of God, we desire to draw near in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Pour down upon us the Spirit of grace and of supplications. We adore thee for the freedom of access which we have to thy mercy-seat. We adore thee that, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, we are commanded to make known our requests unto thee. We adore thee for the assurance that we have a gracious and all-prevalent Intercessor at thy right hand, one who is able to save to the uttermost all who come to thee through him, seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession in their behalf. We appear before thee in his name, beseeching thee that thou, for his sake, wouldst open up the treasures of thy grace, and impart to each of us the blessings of which thou knowest us to stand in need. We stand, all of us, in need of justifying mercy; we have all of us reason to say, God be merciful to us sinners. Which of thy commandments have we not broken, which of thy precepts have we not despised? But be pleased, for thine own name's sake, to lift upon us the light of thy countenance, and to cause us to experience the blessedness of those whose transgressions are forgiven, whose persons are accepted, whose peace is made. We stand, also, all of us, in need of purifying and strengthening grace; for our hearts are deceitful, our wills are perverse, and in us, that is, in our flesh, there dwelleth no good thing. Therefore it is that we beseech thee to create the clean heart, and to renew the right spirit within us. Take away the hard and stony hearts, and give us hearts of flesh, hearts softened by thy grace, moulded to thy will, devoted to thy service. Enable us to glorify thee on earth; and deliver us from the evil with which the world abounds. Save us from the great adversary of souls, save us from the contagion of ungodly example, save us from the fear of man that bringeth a snare, save us from the deceitfulness of our own corrupt nature. Fit us for whatever thou hast in store for us, and forbid that the summons of death should find any of us unprepared. Draw near to the sick, to sanctify to them their sufferings; draw near to the dying, to make them ready for their great change. Bless the interests of godliness at home and abroad, and enable us to show our love to Christ by our love to his people, and our desire to promote his cause. Holy Father, into thy hands we commend ourselves, and all in whom we are interested. Do to them, and do to us, beyond what we can ask or think; and the praise shall be thine, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVI. 9.

SCRIPTURE—JAMES V.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. The wealthy Jews, who were the principal enemies of the gospel, are understood to be the individuals to whom the apostle addressed the solemn warnings which are contained in the first six verses of this chapter. The time was at hand when the many sins with which they were chargeable, their avarice, their injustice, their selfishness, their luxuriousness, and above all, their condemnation of the meek and righteous One, were to be overtaken by divine judgments. Let him whose cup runneth over, profit by their experience. The wealth which he possesses will not continue his for ever. It is a trust committed to him only for a season; and grievous will be his doom if, as a miser, he hoard it up for the gratification of selfishness, or if as a sensualist he pervert it into an instrument of sin. Unlike to such a one is the man who is spiritually minded. He keeping his mortality in view, is disposed to take the use of the divine liberality without abusing it; and 'remembering the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive,' is enabled to maintain, amid abounding temptation, the character befitting a steward who must soon give in his account.

Ver. 7—11. From rich oppressors the apostle turns to afflicted saints, and after directing language of menace to the former, speaks a few words of encouragement and instruction to the latter. Patience is the grace which he calls upon them to exercise; and with the view of leading them to bear their sorrows without murmuring, and their injuries without revenge, he reminds them that the time of their endurance would be short, the termination glorious.

Ver. 12. One of the effects of impatience under trials is a profane use of the name of God; and against this sin St James entreats believers, above all things, to beware. Their probity ought to be such as, on every occasion when an appeal to the Searcher of hearts as an act of religious worship is uncalled for, to secure credit to their statements, made under the form of simple negatives, or simple affirmations. Alas! by how many who call themselves Christians, is this injunction despised! On the night on which he wished to prove that he was no disciple of Jesus, Peter cursed and swore; and in our own days many imitate his example, as if for the purpose of exonerating themselves from the suspicion of being men who hallow the name and reverence the authority of the most High!

Ver. 13—18. With the view of securing their happiness under the various circumstances in which they may be placed, believers are next enjoined, in their season of distress, to betake themselves to prayer, and in their season of enjoyment to abound in praise. Requests, proceeding from fervent and believing hearts, will not be presented in vain. In compliance with the prayer of faith, God has been pleased to pardon the sins, to subdue the corruptions, to sanctify the sicknesses, to gladden the death-beds of his people in former days. His hand is not shortened now that it cannot save; his ear is not heavy now that it will not listen to the penitential and persevering cry.

Ver. 19, 20. The epistle concludes with a call upon believers to do what in them lies to promote the spiritual well-being of their fellow-men. The conversion of a sinner from the error of his ways is an event with which in point of importance none other will admit of comparison; and as often as it occurs on earth, the voice of melody and congratulation is heard in heaven, the elder branches of the family of God saying to each other, 'This our younger brother was dead but is alive again; he was lost but is found.' O then what wisdom is equal to the wisdom of winning souls; and how unspeakably great is the honour which the Head of the church puts upon him whom he makes the instrument of saving one imperishable spirit from death, and hiding a multitude of sins!

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, adored be thy name, that to the most disobedient of us all the unsearchable riches of Christ are offered without money and without price! O that we may all have grace given to us to close with the merciful proclamation. Hearing the joyful sound, may none of us harden ourselves against it. May we be captivated, may we be overcome by the grace and condescension which appeared in the incarnation, the obedience, the sufferings, and the death of the Lord Jesus Christ. May our eyes be brought to see, our minds to understand, our hearts to adore the wonders of his redeeming love. For this cause we bow our knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant us, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; that we being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge. May we esteem him to be precious; may we lean upon him as the beloved of our souls; may we rejoice in him as all our salvation and all our desire. We lament that hitherto we have known so little of the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. We mourn over the feebleness of our desires, the coldness of our hearts, the deadness of our affections towards him. We have reason to be full of heaviness when we think how sad a requital we have made for his kindness to usward; how little anxiety we have ever manifested, or ever felt, to adorn his gospel, and to do him honour. But O grant that henceforth we may be enabled to live as becometh those whom he came to redeem from iniquity, and to purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Calling ourselves by his name, may we seek to walk in his steps; professing to love him, may we manifest our love by keeping his commandments; calling him our Master and our Lord, may we be enabled to render him a willing obedience. We pray that his kingdom may be established within us, that kingdom which consists of righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. We pray that all the kingdoms of this earth may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. May he take to himself his great power and reign; may he go forth on the morrow in the chariots of the gospel, conquering and to conquer. We bless thee for the weekly return of the Christian sabbath; we hail the near approach of the day of rest. Grant that to many it may be the date of their conversion; that to many it may be a stage on their path of progressive holiness; that to many it may be a foretaste and a pledge of that sinless and endless sabbath which remains for thy people in the sanctuary above. At the close of another week, we bless thee for the many mercies which during the course of it we have enjoyed; and we commend ourselves anew to thee at its close. If spared to see the dawn, O may we be in the Spirit on the Lord's day; may it prove a season of much refreshing to our souls. Our prayers are before thee, be pleased to send us the answer of peace, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FORTY-SEVENTH WEEK.SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXVI.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXVI. CXXVII. CXXVIII.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXVI. This psalm is supposed to have been written by Ezra, or some other pious writer, in commemoration of the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon. It breathes a spirit of the most devout and lively gratitude to God for the deliverance he had wrought for them.

Ver. 1—3. The Lord is here explicitly recognized as the sole cause and author of his people's return. The penman of the psalm, writing in the name of the church, does not say that they had themselves effected their return, or that Cyrus, king of Persia, had restored them; but that 'The Lord had turned again their captivity;' and that not to themselves, or to Cyrus, but to the Lord, was to be ascribed the glory of their return. This return seems to have filled them with strange emotions. 'When the Lord turned again their captivity, they were like men that dream.' The thing was at once so desirable, and so unlooked for, that they knew not how they could believe it to be true. They were to remember that it was the Lord that 'stirred up Cyrus' spirit' so to favour them, and that to the Lord their thanksgivings were due.

Ver. 4—6. While the Lord had done much for them which called for their praise, there was yet much he had to do for them. Hence they prayed, 'Turn again our captivity as streams of the south.' Many of their brethren were yet left behind, whose return they could not but most ardently desire. The Samaritans, and Ammonites, and other enemies, opposed the efforts of such as had returned to repair their breaches. Among themselves, too, there were many unsound and hypocritical professors, more concerned about their own worldly good than about the interests of Zion. But the pious took encouragement from what God had already done for them, so far beyond their expectations or deserts, to pray that he would glorify his power and mercy in perfecting what concerned them; that his farther gracious interposition in redressing their grievances might be refreshing to them, 'like streams of water' to the thirsty scorched soil. The psalm concludes with language which may be regarded as at once expressive of gratitude for what God had enabled the restored captives to experience, and of encouragement to others who might be called to encounter difficulties and sorrows.

PSALM CXXVII. This psalm is entitled a song of degrees for Solomon, written probably by his father David, to impress deeply upon his mind a sense of his entire and absolute dependence upon God.

Ver. 1, 2. Solomon had to build a house of unparalleled magnificence, a 'palace not for man, but for the Lord God.' Solomon, with all his surpassing wisdom, could not have erected this house without the Lord's special guidance and Almighty aid; nor without these could Solomon, with all his skill and influence, have built up and protected the Jewish state. The superior wisdom and experience of Ahithophel, though tendered to Absalom, was not allowed to avail him, because he sought without God, yea, in opposition to the will of God, to erect for himself the Jewish state. 'Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.' How mad in rulers to attempt to preserve the peace and order of society without God! How perverse and pernicious the doctrine of those who would counsel them that it is not their duty to have religion taught to those whom, as the ministers of God, they are appointed to govern!

PSALM CXXVIII. God is to be feared by the children of men. This is implied in the relation that subsists between God their Creator and them, as his dependent rational creatures. The very idea of God and rational creatures, as the workmanship of his hand, implies that he is to be feared by them. God is infinitely worthy to be feared. He possesses every quality and attribute calculated to secure their fear and homage. To fear him implies a knowledge of his character, as revealed in the face of the Lord Jesus Christ. It implies reconciliation to him through the death of his Son; a trembling at his threatenings; a standing in awe of his judgments; a submission to his chastisements; an acting upon the principle that he must be obeyed rather than men. It is a sanctifying him in the heart, and making him habitually the fear and the dread. He that feareth God 'walketh in the way of the Lord.' He makes conscience of attending to all his will, and that from those principles to which alone the Lord can have respect. Now, the man who thus fears the Lord is a blessed man. He need have no other fear. Sanctifying him in his heart, he will be a sanctuary to him to preserve him from the evils, enemies, dangers, and fears, to which he is exposed. 'He shall eat of the labour of his hands.' Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is. There is no want to them that fear God. Surely it shall be well with them in this life, and in that which is to come. If for their good, they shall be blessed with children, who, by God's blessing, shall be a comfort and honour to them. 'They shall see, if they duly seek, the good of Jerusalem, and peace on Israel,' which they cannot but desire above their chief joy.

PRAYER.

Thou, even thou alone, O Lord, art he that should be feared; and who may stand before thee if once thou be angry? Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? Thy hand is for good upon all them that seek thee; but thy power and thy wrath are against all them that forsake thee. The Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake, because it hath pleased the Lord to make them his people. The mountains may depart, and the earth be removed, but thy loving-kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of thy peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy upon thee. Do not thine eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show thyself strong in behalf of him whose heart is perfect towards thee. Let us sanctify thee in our hearts, and make thee our fear and our dread, that thou mayest be for a sanctuary to us, to preserve us from the evils and dangers to which we are exposed. Let us not fear men, who can merely kill our body, but afterwards have no more that they can do; but may we fear thee, who, after thou hast killed our body, hast power to cast both soul and body into hell. Let not our heart envy sinners; but let us be in the fear of the Lord all the day long, for surely there shall be an end both of the triumphing of the wicked, and of the sorrows and sufferings of thy people, and the expectation of those who fear thee shall not be cut off. We thank thee, Lord, for our sabbath liberty, and our sabbath opportunities. May we enter into the spirit of this day's service. May we call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, and honourable, and honour thee upon it by not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasure, nor speaking our own words. May we have such a relish for the holy exercises of the sabbath as shall be a satisfactory evidence that we shall spend an eternal sabbath in thy blissful presence. Let those who profane thy sabbaths consider their guilt and folly ere it be too late, lest the time come when they shall intensely desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, but shall not be so favoured. Go forth this day with the preaching of thy Son's gospel. May it have free course and be glorified. Pour out thy Spirit this day as rain upon the mown grass, and as showers that water the earth. Make the places round about thy hill a blessing. Cause the rain to come down in his season. Let there be showers of blessings. When the poor and the needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, do thou, the Lord, hear, do thou, the God of Israel, not forsake them. Revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known, in wrath remember mercy. Prepare us for rendering thee that public homage which is so justly due unto thee. And to thy name, in Christ, be glory and praise, now and for ever. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXX.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXIX. CXXX. CXXXI.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXIX. This psalm has a reference not to the case of any individual, but to the concerns of the church in her public capacity, and was probably written when she was in trouble.

Ver. 1—4. On the present occasion the church called to her remembrance, and rehearsed in the ears of the Lord, the manifold trials in which she had been involved, with his seasonable interpositions in her favour, whereby he had restrained her enemies from 'prevailing against her.' From her youth, or institution, the church of God has been persecuted and afflicted by the ungodly and the profane. From the beginning the seed of the serpent have displayed hatred, malice, and cruelty, towards the seed of the woman. More especially from the period of the church's sojourn in Egypt, which is elsewhere represented as 'the time of her youth,' was she afflicted and oppressed by enemies. In Egypt her members were made to groan by reason of taskmasters, while her children were cruelly destroyed. But from her bondage and affliction in Egypt the Lord delivered her with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and instituted the passover, to be annually observed in the church, partly in commemoration of that mighty deliverance. Often was the church oppressed and afflicted by enemies in the land of Canaan. It is true it was the backsliding of the church that provoked the Lord to allow enemies to assail and injure her. Yet when she saw and confessed the evil of her sin, and cried unto the Lord out of her affliction, he restrained enemies, and rescued his church out of their hands. Many instances of this kind are recorded in the book of Judges. In this psalm the church is to be viewed as gratefully acknowledging such deliverances, as an argument to induce God to rescue her from the trouble and oppression to which she was at that time involved. She acknowledges, to God's honour, that though 'the plowers had plowed her back, making long their furrows, God had cut asunder their cords,' thereby putting an end to such injurious treatment. Some suppose the captives in Babylon to have been subjected to scourging, to which there may here be an allusion. 'The Lord is righteous who hath cut asunder their cords,' righteous in afflicting us, and faithful and merciful in hearing our cry in our time of need; righteous in confounding and punishing our relentless enemies, by whom we were so unjustly and cruelly oppressed.

Ver. 5—8. Those who love Christ, the King of Zion, cannot but desire that 'the haters of Zion,' who hate her King without a cause, may 'be confounded and turned back,' and prevented from performing their enterprise of accomplishing her injury and ruin. The language here employed, in the form of a wish or prayer, on the part of the church, may be regarded as a prediction, on the part of the Spirit of God, that the haters of Zion may be 'like grass on the house tops, which withereth before it groweth up,' which entirely disappoints the labours of the mower, to whom, while engaged in reaping it, it would be mockery to address the pious salutation usually presented to reapers while engaged in the work of the harvest. Most suitable is the exercise of the church, unfolded in this psalm, to the state and circumstances of the church in this land, in her present perilous condition. Were she duly to enter into the spirit of the exercise here described, the Lord would without fail accomplish her enlargement.

PSALM CXXX. This psalm has a reference to the psalmist's individual case, and seems to have been written when he was in great distress.

PSALM CXXXI. This psalm is supposed to have been written by David, to vindicate himself from certain false charges.

Ver. 1, 2. By Saul and his adherents David was charged with intolerable pride and boundless ambition in seeking for himself the crown and kingdom of Israel. The psalmist indignantly repelled such charges, appealing confidently to the Searcher of hearts, that he aimed at nothing to which he had not called him to aspire; and that, however he had been provoked by Saul's malice and cruelty, and solicited by his followers to avenge himself and better his condition, he had restrained himself, as devoid of the ambition with which he had been charged, and as dependent upon the providence of God to bring him to the throne, as the weaned infant who takes no care to provide for itself, but depends upon its mother for the supply of its wants. The believer, when assailed with charges injurious to his character, and derogatory to the honour of the religion which he professes, is fully warranted, with David, and Samuel, and Paul, and others, to vindicate himself.

PRAYER.

Who, O Lord, is a God like unto thee, who pardonest the iniquity, and passest by the transgression of the remnant of thy heritage, because thou delightest in mercy? There is forgiveness with thee, because there is a propitiation with thee that thou mayest be feared. If the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thought, and return unto thee in the way thou hast appointed, thou wilt have mercy upon him, thou wilt abundantly pardon his sins. Thou graciously proclaimest, I was, I am he that blot-eth out thine iniquity for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. We bless thee that in Christ thou art reconciling a guilty world unto thyself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and that thou hast sent to us, in this distant island of the Gentiles, the word of reconciliation. We adore thee for the gift and sacrifice of him on whom thou hast laid our help. In this was manifested thy love to us, because that thou gavest thine only begotten Son that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us, and gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins. We bless thee for the perfection of that sacrifice which he presented to thee when he offered up himself. It was impossible that the blood of bulls and of goats could take away sin. It was necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified by these; but the heavenly things themselves by better sacrifices than these. The legal sacrifices, though in themselves worthless, might, by thine appointment, make a typical atonement; but it was only the sacrifice of Emmanuel that could make a real atonement for sin. It was only by setting forth thy Son, as a propitiation through faith in his blood, that thou couldst be seen to be just, and holy, and true, in justifying the ungodly. We thank thee that through Christ there is preached to us the forgiveness of sins, and that by him all that believe are justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. May we be justified by his blood, and saved from wrath through him. As he has reigned in us unto death, so may grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord. And may his grace, bringing us salvation, teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, and righteously, and godly, in the present world, thereby looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. For all that we ask or hope for is in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL XI.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—4. The three kings that arose after Cyrus, the monarch reigning at the time of this vision, were Cambyzes, or the Ahasuerus of scripture, Smerdis, or Artaxerxes, and Darius Hystaspes. The fourth, who was to be far richer than these, was Xerxes, who invaded Greece with an immense army, which was there completely overthrown and destroyed. The mighty king who was to stand up, and do according to his will, was Alexander the Great, who invaded and subdued the Persian empire. After his death, four of his generals took possession of his dominions. But two only of these, with their respective successors, are referred to in the sequel of this chapter, the one of which lying north, and the other south of Judea, are styled 'the king of the north,' and 'the king of the south,' that is, the kings of Syria and Egypt.

Ver. 5—9. Ptolemy Lagus the first king of Egypt after Alexander, was rich and powerful, yet Seleucus the conqueror, king of Syria, was, in all respects, greater than he. After their death, their sons, another Ptolemy, and Antiochus, entered into alliance by marriage, Antiochus divorcing his wife, Laodice, and marrying Berenice, Ptolemy's daughter, with whom he received an immense dowry. But this wealth, here called 'the power of the army,' did not secure her or her partner; for Antiochus recalled Laodice, by whom he was poisoned, and Berenice and her son murdered, with all who adhered to her cause. But the brother of Berenice, Ptolemy Euergetus, came with a mighty army, and avenged her death, taking many cities and much spoil from the king of the north; and presenting to the God of Israel, at Jerusalem, sacrifices in acknowledgment of his victory. After various engagements between the successors of these monarchs, we are introduced to one who is notable as a persecutor of the church of God.

Ver. 21—29. This Antiochus, surnamed in profane history, 'Epiphanes,' or the illustrious, here designated 'a vile, or contemptible person.' He usurped the throne of Syria, which belonged to his nephew, whom he had contrived to send as a hostage to Rome, in his own stead; and was through life notorious for craft, flattery, and deceit. By these means, he frustrated the attempt of Ptolemy to support Heliorus, minister of his late brother. Seleucus killed Onias the high-priest, ravaged and plundered, in two successive campaigns, the richest provinces of Egypt, having bribed the generals of Ptolemy to betray their sovereign. Undertaking a third campaign into that country, he was resisted and driven back with shame; 'the ships of Chittim,' or of the Romans, going forth against him. Mortified and indignant at his defeat, he returned and vented his rage against Jerusalem, which he laid waste, and set on fire. In the latter part of the chapter, there is a transition from Antiochus to the Romans, or at all events, Antiochus is there described as the type, while the Roman power, and especially the Roman apostacy, is the antitype, of the most inveterate hostility to the church of the living God.

Ver. 31—35. Both Antiochus and the Roman power corrupted the unsound professors of the true religion by flatterers, while the people who knew their God did exploits; the Maccabees, in the time of Antiochus; the first Christians in the time of pagan Rome, the Waldenses, and Albigenses, and others, in the time of papal Rome. While the description, 'They that understand shall instruct many,' followed by the intimation, 'yet shall they all by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil many days,' may have a primary reference to the instruction and sufferings of the Maccabees, it cannot be doubted but there is an ultimate reference to the instruction and sufferings under pagan and papal Rome. The sufferings of the Maccabees, under Antiochus, were short; those of the Christians, as here intimated, of long continuance. The 'little help' wherewith those who should fall should be helped, may refer primarily to the aid afforded to the Jews by Matthias and Judas Maccabeus, but ultimately to that vouchsafed to the Christians by the emperor Constantine.

Ver. 36—39. The description contained in these verses is chiefly applicable to papal Rome, as may be seen by comparing them with 2 Thess. ii 4; Rev. xiii. xvii. Of this power it is said that he shall not regard the God of his fathers, the true God, whose worship is supposed to have been antecedently introduced by his fathers, but shall in his stead honour the 'God of forces,' or Mahuzzim, that is, saints, angels, and images, as the patrons, guardians, and protectors of mankind. 'Neither shall he regard the desire of women.' Pagan Rome discouraged marriage, and papal Rome more so, till monks and nuns greatly multiplied, and marriage was at last forbidden to the clergy. The Romish bishops, priests, and monks, are the champions and defenders of Mahuzzim, in the sense now explained; and they were 'increased with honour, ruled over many, and divided the land for gain.' The remaining parts of the prophecy are not so applicable to Antiochus as to Rome.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou knowest the end from the beginning. Thy counsel shall stand, and thou wilt do all thy pleasure. Thou art of one mind, and who shall turn thee. Thou art not a man that thou shouldst lie, nor the son of man that thou shouldst repent! Hast thou said it, and wilt thou not do it; or hast thou spoken it, and wilt thou not make it good? Thy mighty hand can easily accomplish whatever thy mind and counsel determine before should be done. There is no difficulty or restraint laid upon thee. Who hath resisted thy will? Who would set the briars and the thorns before thee in battle? Wouldest thou not go through them, and burn them up together? Thou, even thou alone, art he that should be feared, and who may stand before thee if once thou be angry? Thou makest the wrath of man to praise thee, and the remainder of his wrath thou dost restrain. What man meaneth for evil, thou often meanest for good, to bring to pass the purposes of thy grace to those who love thee, and are the called according to thy purpose. We bless thee for the special care thou exerciseest over thy church. We adore thee for the promises of protection and favour which thou hast afforded her. We thank thee for thy counsel to walk about Zion, and go round about her, to tell the towers thereof, to mark well her bulwarks, to consider her palaces, that we may tell it to the generation following, and may say, This God is our God for ever and ever, he will be our guardian unto death. Bless thy church universal. May she lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes. Hasten the latter day glory. Overrule all the events that are taking place for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. May the time soon arrive when voices shall be heard in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our God, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. May we belong to Christ's kingdom. May we be his disciples, not in name, and by profession merely, but in deed and in truth. May he be formed in our hearts the hope of glory. May his love constrain us to live not unto ourselves, but unto him who died for us and rose again. May we seek his glory above our chief joy. Whether we live, may we live to the Lord; or whether we die, may we die to the Lord, that living or dying we may be his. May we be crucified with Christ, that Christ may live in us, that the life which we live in the flesh may be by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us, and gave himself for us. May we habitually act faith in him, that we may receive supplies of grace and strength out of his fullness. And do thou guide us with thy counsel while we live, and afterwards bring us to glory, for all that we ask is for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXI.

SCRIPTURE—1 PETER I.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. Real Christians have abundant cause to stir up their souls to the exercise both of thanksgiving to God and contentment with their condition. How can they ever express or feel sufficiently their obligations to thanksgiving and gratitude to God, for making them the objects of his free, sovereign, electing love, before the foundation of the world; for opening a fountain in his Son's blood to wash them from their sins; and for bestowing on them his Spirit, to conduct them to this blood of sprinkling, and to sanctify and seal them unto the day of redemption? Through eternity they will not be able sufficiently to acknowledge their obligations to God, for this distinguishing, redeeming love. What abundant reason have they, in consideration of being made the objects of God's sovereign, immutable, everlasting love, to acquiesce cheerfully in the arrangements of his providence, in regard to the present disposal of their lot? Those to whom Peter wrote were strangers scattered abroad, through the countries here specified; expelled, it may be, from their native beloved land, by the rage of persecution, and subjected to manifold annoyances, privations, and hardships, in foreign regions. But being elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, sprinkled by the blood of Christ, and sanctified by the Spirit, all things were theirs. They might well reckon that the sufferings of this present time were not worthy to be compared with the glory that should be revealed in them.

Ver. 3—9. Even the people of God, who are the called according to his purpose, are not always devoid of doubts and fears as to the goodness of their state. In the resurrection of Christ they recognize the evidence and pledge of their own resurrection, and admission into that place which Christ has gone to prepare for them. How precious the heritage of God's chosen. An earthly inheritance is so transitory, that it may be said to perish in the using. But the inheritance of the saints in light is 'incorruptible,' immortal, everlasting. The one is polluted, the other 'undefiled.' The former produces satiety, palling upon the senses, and leading to dissatisfaction and disgust; the latter is ever new and ever fresh, like certain flowers, which are said to retain their odour, verdure and beauty. For the saints, the called of God according to his purpose, this precious inheritance is secured in heaven. 'You are kept,' says the apostle, 'by the power of God,' as in an impregnable garrison, in the view of his all-seeing eye, and under the protection of his Almighty arm. Have believers, then, such security for such an inheritance, have they not cause to rejoice, yea, to rejoice greatly therein? No sufferings they may be called to encounter need extinguish or impair their well-grounded and exalted joy. It is needful for their purification and meetness for glory, that they be tried with adversity and affliction. To men gold is precious. Yet they scruple not to try it in the fire, to purify it from the dross, even though a portion of it should thereby be lost, and though the pure metal secured should afterwards be found to perish in the using. And though God's chosen are more precious to him than gold that perisheth is to men, he scruples not to try them in the furnace of affliction. But he takes care that they lose nothing therein but the dross, and that their refining issues in their imperishable beauty and glory, while it redounds to his eternal honour and praise.

Ver. 10—12. Peter was the apostle of the circumcision. Most of the believing strangers whom, on this occasion, he addressed, were Jewish Christians, who cherished a great veneration for the holy prophets. Peter therefore apprised them that it had been the study of those prophets to search and inquire, with all the intense diligence and eagerness of miners searching for precious ore, into the nature and excellence of gospel blessings, and into the characteristics of the period when the mysterious sufferings of Christ should be accomplished, and should come in unparalleled glory to him as Mediator, and to a benighted and perishing world. The Spirit of Christ testified to these prophets, that not their eyes and ears, but ours, were to be blessed by seeing and hearing the things which it is our privilege to witness, and into which the holy angels display an intense desire and ambition to look.

Ver. 13—21. It becomes God's chosen, in consideration of their surpassing privileges, to exercise habitual watchfulness and sobriety, and to cherish an abiding hope of immortal glory. Having become God's children, they are also to make conscience of conducting themselves 'as obedient children,' with reverence, love, gratitude, confidence, submission, zeal. God requires conformity to his holy image. And believers are called to cultivate holiness, not merely by a regard to his authority, but by a consideration of the nature and value of the price paid for their redemption, the shedding of the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot.'

PRAYER.

Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created. Thou hast made all things for thyself, that they might show forth all thy praise. Thy works praise thee, thy saints bless thee. Thousands of angels minister unto thee, and ten thousand times ten thousand stand before thee. We adore thee for thy kindness to us, the sinful children of men. We thank thee especially for the work of our redemption, by Jesus Christ the Son of thy love. In this chiefly was manifested thy love towards us, that thou gavest thine only begotten Son, that we might live through him. We bless thee that while he sojourned in this world, thou didst repeatedly testify thy complacency in him as our Mediator, and that when he had finished the work which thou gavest him to do, by humbling himself, and becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, thou didst raise him from the dead, and give him glory at thy right hand, that our faith and hope might be in thee; that we might know that thou art fully satisfied with his undertaking, and art ready to justify those who believe in him from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. May we obtain redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the richness of thy grace. Bless us with a right to an inheritance among them that are sanctified, through faith that is in him; to that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. And graciously prepare us, by thy dealings and dispensations, for the enjoyment of this pure and blissful inheritance. Sanctify the afflictions wherewith thou seest meet to visit us, that the trial of our faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth, though it be held in the fire, may be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. May we reckon the sufferings of this present time not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall then be revealed in us, if we belong to Christ. May we possess the faith, love, and joy of his disciples. May we recognize his glory as the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, and rejoice in him as our beloved, and our friend, and the rock of our salvation. Enable us to realize a growing conformity to thy holy image. Beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, may we be transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Since we call thee Father, that without respect of persons, judgest according to every man's work, may we pass the time of our sojourning here in thy fear, forasmuch as we know that we have not been redeemed with any corruptible things, such as silver or gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. Now to God, only wise, be glory, through Jesus Christ, for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CX.

SCRIPTURE—DANIEL XII.

REMARKS.

We have now come to the end of this most interesting book, with respect to which it may be said, that from the minuteness with which it describes so many events that were to take place long after it was written, it tends more to illustrate the argument for the divine inspiration of the bible, arising from the fulfilment of prophecy, than perhaps any other portion of the Scripture. At the same time, there is much in it that yet remains in obscurity, so that the curiosity of those, who would desire an elucidation of every event predicted in it, must stand rebuked, as Daniel did by the words of the angel at the 9th verse, 'Go thy way, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end.' Let us be thankful to God for those precious truths contained in this chapter, about which there can be no difference of opinion.

It is to be noticed, first, that after all the troubles which were foretold, as awaiting God's chosen people, in former chapters, a time of deliverance is here spoken of. Michael the first prince, who is generally supposed to be put here for Christ, stands up for them, and through him they will at last be delivered. Just as the book of Revelation closes with words of comfort and encouragement, so does the prophecy of Daniel; and in like manner, when the world's history shall be wound up, we are told that there remaineth a rest for the people of God. Whether or not the 2d and 3d verses were intended to refer to the final judgment, they accord so completely with what is written elsewhere of that momentous period, that we may with profit consider them as referring to it.

The Spirit teaches us in the 3d verse what is true and practical wisdom. Let us seek to be turned to the Lord ourselves, and then, with hearts burning to spread the knowledge of the Saviour among the ignorant, let us strive to turn others to him, so that we may leave the world better than we found it; and then for our services, imperfect as they are at the best, there is reserved, through the grace of God, a bright reward. How gloriously do the stars shine in the firmament, and how sweetly does their light fall upon this dark world! Yet they are but faint emblems of the glory that awaits the followers of Jesus, when he shall come to be admired of his saints, and of all them that look for him.

Even now the statement contained in the 4th verse is receiving its accomplishment. Many run to and fro, and knowledge is increased. Missionary exertion is now, blessed be God, an object of public interest. The means of communication between distant parts of the world are becoming more and more easy and available, and the dawning at least has appeared of that glorious day when the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord. So many different views have been given of the particular dates referred to in the 7th, 11th, and 12th verses, that it would tend rather to perplex than to edify were we especially to allude to them. The church must be contented to wait until these predictions are more fully cleared up in the providence of God.

It is profitable to contemplate the concluding words of the chapter. The prophet was to stand in his lot at the end of the days. There is no assurance here given to him that he might rest with confidence in the fact of his personal acceptance with God through the promised Messiah. The words may, indeed, be thought to imply this; but as there is nothing written in the bible in which sinners individually are authorized to conclude that they are in the number of God's chosen and saved people, nothing which says to you, or to me, that whatever may become of others we are safe; so there was nothing revealed to Daniel which placed him in a different situation from that which we occupy. We have reason to believe that his lot will be on the right hand of the judge at last; that for him one of the many mansions will be provided; yea, that he is now in the presence of Immanuel; but he received no special revelation to that effect. 'Thou shalt stand in thy lot,' says the Spirit of God. The same words are equally applicable to the drunkard, to the impure, and to the sensualist. Each of us shall stand in his lot. 'He that is filthy shall be filthy still, and he that is holy shall be holy still.' May the Lord grant that our lot may be where the Shepherd of Israel feeds his flock, and leads them to living fountains of waters, that we may see that just One, and rejoice with joy unspeakable in his blessed presence.

PRAYER.

Most gracious God, we draw near to thee this morning to thank thee for thy goodness to us, and through our great High Priest to present to thee our morning sacrifice. Thou knowest our hearts, thou art acquainted with our state before thee, all things are naked and open to the eye of the God with whom we have to do. Gracious Father, may all of us who now kneel before thee, and all in whom we feel an interest, be thine when thou makest up thy jewels. We put our bodies and souls into thy hand; Lord, fit us for the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ, that we may awake to everlasting life. May we walk under the power of the world to come. May we live as it were under the sound of the trumpet of the archangel. If we are but prepared for enjoying thee, if our robes are made white in the blood of the Lamb, we shall be satisfied. Let the way be thine, for thy way is right, but lead us to the city of habitation. O our God, there was one who wrestled with thee of old, and thou didst hear him, hear us for Jesus' sake. We are poor short-sighted creatures. We cannot know the time which thou hast kept in thine own hand, and we would not seek to know them. Reveal only thy Son in us, and we shall be satisfied. Thy word tells us that the wicked shall do wickedly, and that the wise shall understand. Alas! we have done wickedly, we have not understood, we have not sought after God. But the same word says that now is the accepted time. We would desire to flee from our wickedness, and to turn to thee with full purpose of heart. Our sins, O God, have caused thee to hide thy face from us, but now we come back to thee. May thy Holy Spirit draw each of us, and all our friends, from the path in which destroyers go, and lead us into the way of truth and holiness. May our lot be with Christ. We feel that there can be no blessedness without him, and we know that our souls will be satisfied if they have him as their portion. O gracious God, may we, and all who are dear to us, have our place on the right hand of the throne, when he comes to judge the world in righteousness. Again we bless thee for the mercies of the past night, and of this morning. We would seek to go forth to the duties of the day under the guidance of thy Holy Spirit. And now we commend to thee the work that is thine own. Send forth labourers into thy harvest, thou who art the Lord of the harvest. May many run to and fro, that the knowledge of thee may be increased. May thy way be known upon earth, and thy saving health among all the nations. And may a special blessing rest upon the efforts which are made for the diffusion of the truth among thine ancient people; they have forgotten thee, but thou art found of them that seek thee not. O Lord, cause thy face to shine upon them that they may be saved. And now, O God, may thy mercy be upon us, as we hope in thee. This day make thy grace sufficient for us, and perfect thy strength in our weakness. And may he who stands up for the children of thy people be with us this day to guard us against the assaults of the wicked one. Lord, hear our prayer, and answer us according to thy mercy, and not according to our imperfect asking, for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XV.

SCRIPTURE—1 PETER II.

REMARKS.

This chapter is wholly practical, and contains admonitions that are suitable to us in whatever circumstances we may be placed. First of all, the apostle, in imitation of his divine Master, compares those who have been born again by the Holy Spirit to little children; and the word of God, by which their souls are nourished, to the milk by which the suckling is nourished during the first month of its existence. As the child cleaves to its mother's breast, and there finds every want supplied, so the believer betakes himself to the word, and thence draws all that is needful for direction, for comfort, and for enjoyment. Yea, and the farther he advances in the Christian course, and the nearer he comes to the perfection which he is commanded to attain, with the more child-like simplicity does he draw from the fountain of divine truth, and the more closely and implicitly does he adhere to the word of the living God. We grow in grace, just in proportion to our growing love of the sacred oracles.

In verses 4—7, the church is compared to a building, every true believer being a living stone in that building, and the Lord Jesus being the chief corner-stone on which the whole rests. In ver. 9, 10, the apostle enumerates some of the special privileges that flow to believers through their union to Christ. They are made kings and priests unto God, ranking as the brethren of him who reigns over the holy hill of Sion. In the 11th and 12th verses the apostle insists upon this point. He tells us that the followers of Christ, the partakers of a kingly name, and of a priestly character, are strangers and pilgrims upon earth. With the world's lusts and pleasures they must have nothing to do. They have not time to waste in the pursuits of vanity, as they journey toward the land that is afar off. In the remaining part of the chapter the apostle refers more particularly to the duties of Christians in different situations of life. He first enjoins the duty of submission to rulers. Resistance to lawful authority, when it ordains what is lawful, or at least not contrary to the will of God, is a sin. It is forbidden in many passages of scripture, and is just as manifest a transgression of the divine law, as it would be to do what man commands, when the word of God is plainly against it. We must not pretend that we are justified, in virtue of our Christian liberty, or of any private light which we enjoy, to bid defiance to civil government, when it enforces nothing that is in itself sinful; but we must not, on the other hand, submit to its enactments, merely because they are issued with authority, when they would require us to do what the scripture expressly forbids. It is better with a safe conscience to suffer for refusing to obey man, than at the expense of conscience and of principle, to act in opposition to the will of God. Again, the apostle reminds servants of their duties; and enforces them with reference to the example of Christ. The Son of God became the servant of God, in order to work out the salvation of his people. He who was from eternity in the bosom of the Father, made himself of no reputation, and submitted without a murmur to the most undeserved sufferings. What a noble example! Who can occupy a more degraded situation than Christ on earth occupied in the estimation of the unbelieving world? Yet what was his great object? To do the will of him that sent him! He was loaded with contempt, he was exposed to the most injurious treatment. But these things did not move him. He came into the world to suffer and die; and he did suffer and die for us. Shall we then shrink from the post which he has commanded us to occupy? No! if we are called to endure trouble, so was Christ. If we are treated unjustly, so was he! If we are evil spoken of on account of our religion, so was he! Christ is my Master. He died for me; and my purpose is to follow him through life, through eternity. I have been unprofitable. I have gone astray like a lost sheep; but now I desire to return to the Shepherd and Bishop of my soul. Had it not been for his grace, that soul would have been lost, but he has done much for me. To him I dedicate all that I have, and all that I can do. May the Lord enable me to fulfil my resolutions, and may he bless the reading of his word. Amen.

PRAYER.

O righteous and eternal God, we desire to draw near to thee this evening, and to render unto thee our grateful acknowledgments for thy kindness to us throughout the day. Adored be thy name, for the privileges which are promised to thy people, and conferred on them through Jesus Christ. O may we be the temples of the living God, by the Spirit dwelling in us. Our hearts, O Lord, are unfit for the residence of thy Holy Spirit. Impure thoughts, unholy desires, evil tendencies, vain imaginations have their seat there. Alas! there is no place for the King of glory. Yet, O God, cast us not from thy sight. Visit us with thy salvation. Mould our hearts according to thy will. Come and dwell in us; for until thou comest, and preparest for thyself a place, sin will continue to have the dominion over us. O make us kings and priests to thee. As kings, and brethren of him who is the king of Sion, may we have power over our own hearts, and over the evil one and his emissaries, who would seek to lead us captive. As thy priests, O Lord, may we be holy, and by the Spirit's grace may we ever be enabled to present to thee the sacrifices of believing prayer, and praise, and uniform obedience to thy law. Heavenly Father, we pray that we may ever feel the reality of our condition as pilgrims and sojourners upon earth. Our hearts would lead us to seek our rest here, and many things conspire to make us forgetful of the great eternity. Blessed God, we beseech thee to keep us in mind of our immortal destiny; and may all the lessons and warnings of thy providence, as well as the teaching of thy word and Spirit, confirm us in the pursuit of those things which are unseen and eternal. May our conversation on earth always be such as to cause those who are opposed to thee to perceive that the doctrine of Christ is according to godliness. O that each of us could be made instrumental in turning from the path of destruction were it but one soul. The feeblest instruments are powerful in thy might. Lord, let us ever speak and act so as to diffuse the sweet savour of the Redeemer's name wherever we go, and whatever pursuit we engage in. Once more, O God, we beseech thee to give us grace to keep Christ ever before us. We do take him as the only ground of hope toward thee. We do rely upon his perfect righteousness; O lead us to follow his example. Let that mind which was in him be also in us. May he reign over our hearts, may he by his Spirit make us like himself, that in our varied situations we may all adorn his blessed doctrine, and stop the mouth of the enemy and the blasphemer. And now, O God, bless all who are dear to us, and remember them with the love thou bearest to thine own. Bless all who have ever sought an interest in our prayers, and visit them in mercy. Send the knowledge of the glorious gospel to them that are far off. And may all who already know the joyful sound, walk in the light of thy countenance. Keep us, O God of Israel, this night; may we be refreshed by sleep, and fitted for the labours of another day, if it is thy will to spare us. Thou keepest Israel. Keep us, O Lord, And O forgive all our trespasses; wash us in the blood of Jesus, and sanctify us wholly to do thy will; that whether we sleep or wake, we may live with Christ. And to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, we would ascribe everlasting praise. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 172.

SCRIPTURE—HOSEA V. VI.

REMARKS.

These two chapters are read together, because there is evidently a continuation of the sense from the one to the other. We must remember that the division of the bible into chapters and verses, is purely arbitrary. And although it would be difficult to find a better translation of the scriptures than that which we possess, yet there is nothing to confine us to the precise division into chapters and verses which has been adopted in our authorized version of the bible. Now let it be observed, that in the particular portion of the divine record which has been read this morning, although it forms part of one of the prophetic books, the prophet does not address the people so much in the character of a foreteller of future events, as of a teacher of the will of God, with respect to present duty. He speaks to those among whom he lived, just as any faithful minister would address his flock now; the only difference being, that the message which we have now read was dictated immediately by the Holy Spirit; while at present such declarations as we have in these chapters must stand as the authority upon which the message of the gospel ministry rests. 'We are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.' The message of the prophet seems evidently to have been intended for the instruction of two classes of persons: the ten tribes who revolted in the days of Rehoboam, and formed the kingdom of Israel, and who are addressed in prophetic language under the name of Israel or Ephraim; and the tribe of Judah and Benjamin, who continued steadfast in their allegiance to the house of David, and who are generally addressed under the name of Judah. In practically applying the language of the prophet in these chapters, and throughout his whole book, we would perhaps come as near the truth as possible were we to understand by Israel, or Ephraim, those religious professors who have fallen into an open and notorious course of backsliding, thereby bringing disgrace upon their profession; and by Judah, or Benjamin, those who in heart have equally forsaken the Lord, but who maintain generally all the proprieties and decencies which religion enjoins. In the midst of both classes there was to be found a seed that feared the Lord, and called upon his name; but upon the whole, the great majority of both were involved in courses calculated to draw down upon them swift destruction. Let us mark the words of inspiration, and stand in awe!

The 15th verse of this chapter should properly form the first verse of the succeeding one. The threatenings of God are designed to lead sinners to repentance. He will not all at once give them up to their fate! And in the case of his own people who have backslidden from the truth, this is peculiarly remarkable. He does sometimes withdraw from them the light of his countenance. He consigns them to horror of conscience. He leaves them to learn, from their own experience, how bitter a thing it is to depart from the living God. But all this is done to draw them back again to himself. And hence the comforting and encouraging message which he puts into the mouth of the prophet in the commencement of the 6th chapter. Notwithstanding of all their transgressions, the people are invited to return; their sins are set in array before them, that they may see the evil and choose the good. The language of the prophet is like that of the apostle when he says, 'I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service.' And what should our language be in answer to all this kind expostulation, but that of the psalmist: 'We have gone astray like lost sheep; seek thy servants, O Lord, and bring us back to the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.'

PRAYER.

O thou righteous and sovereign God, we would draw near to thee this morning in deepest self-abasement, confessing our sins, and imploring thy pardoning mercy. Thou hast favoured us with privileges, and we have misimproved them; thou hast placed us among our fellow-creatures as thy witnesses, and we have been witnesses for sin; thou hast arranged all thy providential dispensations for our good, and we have abused and trampled upon thy mercies. Behold, we are vile, and what shall we answer thee! O Lord, we would desire to return unto thee. We have found no enjoyment in the paths of sin. Our own consciences testify, what thy word also testifies, that the wages of sin is death. We have sought happiness apart from thee, but we have not found it; and now would we seek to be brought back to thee the Fountain of all enjoyment. Blessed be thy name for revealing to us the way in which lost creatures like us may return to God. Thanks be to our heavenly Father for Jesus Christ, his unspeakable gift. O Lord, we bless thee that thou hast been pleased to set him forth as the propitiation for sin, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish. We feel that without him we must perish; but we rejoice to know that through him, and in him, there is life eternal, even for such as we are. Gracious God, we have tried in vain to be saved without him. We would not conceal it from thee, O thou that searchest the heart, that we have endeavoured to heal the wounds of our consciences by may false remedies. We have said, Peace, peace, when there was no peace. But now, O God, we would take him as our peace with whom thou art pleased. What pleases thee, we feel should satisfy us. With his righteousness thou art pleased, and in the merit of that righteousness we would place our confidence. Jesus delivereth his people from the wrath to come; we pray that we may be delivered from wrath through him. O cast us not from thy sight, because of our past sinfulness, and ingratitude, and unprofitableness, as thy professing people. Lord, we desire to be thine; save thou us. Draw us to thyself by thy Holy Spirit. May he lead us to return to thee. So wayward and blinded are our hearts, that we would never choose thee as our portion. May the Spirit lead us to make the choice. O give us to experience some of the privileges and enjoyments of those who have truly turned to thee. The choicest gifts, O Lord, we dare scarcely implore, but there is all fullness treasured up in Christ; give us what thou knowest to be most needful. Open our hearts to desire more, and to contain more, and then, O God of grace, fill us abundantly with the goodness of thy house. We have been too long satisfied with earthly good, but now we would seek to taste of the blessedness with which thou refreshest the souls of thy chosen people. Heavenly Father, thou hast been pleased to protect us during the night, and to bring us to the light of another day. Accept, for Christ's sake, of our thanksgiving for thy goodness, and be near to us this day to guide us, and to guard us from all evil. O Lord, may we be preserved this day from doing any thing that would dishonour our Christian profession; may we be strengthened for doing what will glorify it. May our footsteps be kept in the way of thy commandments; and in the midst of our worldly duties may we remember that there is a life beyond the present, and that we are here but for a very short time, that we may prepare for the endless eternity. Lord, prepare us thyself for all the duties of time, and for the great realities that lie before us. Into thy hands we put ourselves, O Jehovah, God of truth. May thy rod and thy staff support us during our pilgrimage on earth, and at last may we be advanced to dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. Hear our prayer, O God; and accept of us, and of our morning sacrifice, for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXVIII. 18.

SCRIPTURE—1 PETER III.

REMARKS.

In this chapter, the apostle pursues the train of practical remark begun in the preceding one. We have first the duties of wives pointed out; and if any proof were needed to show that the first followers of the Lord were not carried away by a wild enthusiasm, that they were not visionaries who followed the delusions of an over-heated fancy, we could not find a more conclusive one than these verses furnish. With a minuteness of detail which shows that he was familiar with all the arrangements of domestic life, and that he marked attentively what was passing around him, the apostle lays down rules for the guidance of persons in the married state, which all must acknowledge would, if they were more closely observed, tend to promote in a high degree the present happiness of mankind. From the 1st to the 7th verses he lays down the mutual duties of wives and husbands. The directions which the apostle gives with respect to the decoration of the person are, in spirit at least, equally applicable to either sex. What is the body that all our care should be expended upon it? Can men be justified in adorning that part which must soon be consigned to the corruption of the grave, while they neglect the immortal part, the undying soul? The verses which follow from the 8th to the 16th, allude to several separate duties, and need no lengthened comment. It were a happy world, if we all strove to live in the performance of these gospel precepts. What peace would there be in families, and among neighbours! What mutual enjoyments, where at present all is embittered by strifes and envyings. The 15th verse is peculiarly worthy of remark. The apostle tells us that it is not enough for us to maintain a profession of Christianity; but that we must be able to give a reason for our maintaining it. Most people are Christians because their parents were so, and because they happen to be educated according to the forms of Christianity. They would have been heathens for the reason in other circumstances, although they had been born where they might have heard the gospel preached! We must walk upon surer ground. The bible we know is from God, because it is according to holiness; it was confirmed by miracles, and signs, and wonders, wrought by those who were commissioned to write it; it contains a vast number of predictions, many of which have been manifestly fulfilled; it is precisely suited to the circumstances of the human race, bringing that very salvation within the reach of man which he needs, and over and above all, its blessed influence has been experienced by countless multitudes who have been raised by it from the power of sin to the service of the living God. O let us seek for this experimental evidence of the truth of the scriptures; let us not rest until we are able to say, the bible must be true, because the Spirit whom it promises dwells in our hearts, giving us life, and light, and peace, and joy. The verses 18—20, are somewhat involved in obscurity, and many opinions have been given respecting them. Without entering into controversy upon the subject, which would not be profitable, we would simply remark, that the whole world might be said to be in prison in the times of Noah, because the flood was threatened, and men were like malefactors about to be led forth to execution. Christ preached by his Spirit unto them for 120 years through Noah, who is called a preacher of righteousness. For it was the Spirit of Christ that taught all the prophets, and gave them their messages. Infatuated mortals would not listen to the counsels of the Spirit, and the flood came and swept them away. The ark was a type of Christ, or rather of the salvation which he offers; and so also is baptism, one of the seals of the covenant. Noah and his family were saved in the ark; and so those who are baptized, and who along with the outward sign receive the spiritual grace, who with the outward washing are made partakers of the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ, and of the sanctifying grace of the Spirit, are saved from the wrath to come. It is interesting to notice how the apostle always dwells with delight upon Christ and his work. No sooner does Peter speak of the resurrection of the Lord, than he is hurried away as it were by the glorious theme, and breaks forth into the glowing language, 'Jesus who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels, and authorities, and powers being made subject to him.' O what joy and confidence should the thought impart to us, that our Friend, our elder Brother, is at the right hand of the Majesty on high. Our prayers, offered up in faith, will assuredly be answered, when he is there to plead for us. What have we to dread if we are truly united to him as members of his spiritual body? He reigns, and he will reign, until he hath put all enemies under his feet. O that he would reign in our hearts. 'Be opened ye doors, while Jesus knocks, that the king of glory may come in!'

PRAYER.

O thou high and holy One who inhabitest eternity, we would now, before retiring to rest this night, approach the footstool of thy throne of grace, in the all-prevailing name of our great High Priest, who hath gone into the heavens, and is at thy right hand. We would be deeply humbled before thee when we think of our own vileness and unworthiness. O Lord, we have been more attentive to the interests of the perishable body than to the concern of our immortal souls; more disposed to be anxious about what we should eat, and what we should drink, than to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Lord, pity us and pardon us for Christ's sake. O God of all grace, make us all monuments of thy grace and mercy in Christ Jesus. We would all seek to take shelter from the wrath to come in the ark of Christ's righteousness. His we desire to be. Among his saved people let our names be written. In our hearts may his Spirit dwell; and while the outgoings of the morning and of the evening rejoice over us in providence, our prayer is, that every morning and every evening may find us drawn more and more closely to him who is our Lord, our life, our all. O gracious God, fit us by thy Spirit for the discharge of all the duties which are incumbent upon us. May we discharge them as thy people, with a single eye to thy glory. We bless thee for pointing out to us so clearly the path of duty. We would esteem it a high privilege that we know what duty is, upon thine own authority. Our shortcomings have been fearful, they have been aggravated, they might have justly provoked thee to visit us with thy judgments. But, O Lord, thou delightest in mercy, and in this is our hope. Help us, good Lord, to fulfil all the duties of this life, so as to adorn our Christian profession. We would seek to find pleasure in duty. We would esteem it an honour to live as thine, and to live for thee in the world. Lord, make this not a passing thought, but a firm purpose of our hearts. O give us grace to set Christ ever before us. We desire to take him as our only Saviour, and to follow him as our great example! But what are we, O God, that we should presume to present these petitions at thy footstool! Thy holy law shuts us up under wrath. We are as prisoners, for whom is reserved unending punishment. Adored be thy grace, that we are prisoners of hope. Our trust is in him who died, and who rose again, and who is at thy right hand. We bring our prayers with confidence to thee, because we have in him an all-prevailing advocate. O blessed Jesus, grant unto us that repentance and remission of sin which thou art enabled to bestow. O divine Spirit, take up thy residence in our hearts, and make us in all things what thou wouldst have us to be. Cleanse us from all our sins. Give us fortitude to withstand the attacks of the wicked one. Impart to us a mind conformed to the mind of Christ. Before we leave thy footstool, O thou great parent of the universe, we would beseech thee to send the knowledge of thy truth to those who are in heathen darkness, and to open up a way for its more full diffusion among thine ancient people. The whole earth, O Lord, except a few favoured spots, is full of ignorance and of the habitations of cruelty. Arise, O Lord God, and assert thy saving and converting power among the miserable victims of spiritual death. Send forth labourers into thy harvest, and bless their labours. May thy choicest blessings rest upon all who are dear to us. May the beauty of the Lord our God be upon them as well as upon us. May we all meet together on the right hand of thy throne, and see him whom we love with joy in the place where there is no night, and no sorrow, and no sin. Unto God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, the eternal God, we would ascribe praise everlasting. And through Christ we would expect an answer to our imperfect prayers, because worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive glory, and honour, and blessing.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—HOSEA VII. VIII.

REMARKS.

In these chapters the prophet is remonstrating with the Jews for their sins, and threatening them with punishment unless they forsake them. The sins of which they are stated to have been guilty are specifically pointed out, so that they could not plead ignorance, or an apology for persevering. Neither the people nor their rulers are excepted; both classes had joined in setting God and his laws at defiance. They are charged with being ungrateful for mercies, with despising the true God and worshipping idols, with incorrigibleness under the chastenings with which they were visited from time to time; while the whole was aggravated by the religious profession they maintained, and the hypocrisy that characterized all their professions of penitence. And having thus sinned, the prophet threatens them with chastening judgments; announcing that their projects would be blasted, that their confidence in idols would bring disappointment; while if these things failed to lead them to repentance, God would at last bring an enemy upon them, and visit them with destruction.

The history of the Jews sufficiently bears out all that the prophet had spoken. What nation so highly favoured, and yet so ungrateful; what people so well instructed in the truths of religion, and yet what people so readily abandoned the service of God? What land so frequently visited by chastenings to bring them to repentance, and yet what land so demonstrated the hollowness of their professions, by frequently returning to iniquity? Chastenings brought no amendment, and therefore the Lord delivered them up at last to the destruction of which they had been warned, and has made them a by-word and a proverb over all the earth.

Let us be warned and instructed by the experience of the ancient Israelites. How signally have we been favoured! The Sun of righteousness has risen above us, with healing beneath his wings. Ours is a land of bibles, and sabbaths, and sanctuaries. Yet alas! have we not to acknowledge that like them we have been ungrateful for the many mercies bestowed upon us, that like them we have forgotten the Lord who made us, and lightly esteemed the rock of our salvation, giving the affections and homage of our hearts to the golden gods of the earth, worshipping the creature rather than the Creator.

But let us not like them despise the chastenings of the Lord; let us 'hear the rod, and who hath appointed it.' Let not our 'goodness be as the morning cloud and the early dew,' lest having thus set at nought the lessons which by his works, as well as by his word, the Almighty was reading us, he may at length say, 'Let them alone, they are wedded to their idols, let them alone,' and reply to us, when at his judgment bar we plead our church goings and our almsgivings, 'Depart from me, I never knew you.' Thus consigning us to a destruction to which that which befel the Israelites is not once to be compared.

PRAYER.

O Lord, to whom alone belongeth all power in heaven and earth; thou mighty God who rulest over all, look down on mercy on us, thine erring and feeble children, as we now at the footstool of thy throne present our humble prayers. Look on us in Christ; see us in the face of thine Anointed; and whilst thou seest us to be poor, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked, and altogether vile, remember that worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and for his sake hear us graciously. We have nothing to offer thee but the sacrifice of sinful hearts; but we implore that by thy grace thou wouldst make them holy altars on which to do thee homage. Help us to present ourselves before thee a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to the Lord. We offer up our praises and thanksgivings to thee for the many mercies with which thou has been pleased to bless us. Thou hast cast our lot in a happy and a highly favoured land. Thou hast given us thy word in our own tongue. Thou hast offered for our reception a salvation finished and free. Thou hast filled our cup, and spread our table. Thy hand has led us through the slippery paths of youth. Thine arm has been around us as a shield. From the first moment we opened our eyes on the light of this world, thou hast upholden us. Yet alas! O Lord, what return have we made for all thy goodness? We have forgotten thee the God that made us; we have lightly esteemed thee the rock of our salvation. We have sinned and come short of the glory of God; we have departed from the paths of integrity; we have loved the darkness rather than the light. The Lord pardon our iniquities. The Lord hear us when we cry for forgiveness, and mercifully blot our transgressions out of the book of thy remembrance. Help us, O Lord, to recognize thy hand in all the events continually occurring around us; and to read thy will in the book of providence, as well as in the book of revelation. Blessed be thy name, that thou art fencing in our way, even as with a hedge, and permitting us not to sin without showing us that thou art angry with sinners every day. Sanctify thy ways of dealing with us. And when thou chastenest us, either as individuals, or families, or communities, O turn us at thy rebuke, and give us, in our happy experience, to confess that even afflictions from thy fatherly hand are blessings in disguise. Take the members of this family, O Father, under thy gracious care. Through this day guide, and uphold, and bless us. Render our efforts all successful, making us to sing for joy and gladness. Give us strength and grace to rise above every temptation we encounter, and enable us to walk as the children of the light. And may the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every way, working in us that which is well-pleasing in thy sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee the Father, and the ever-blessed Spirit, be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIV.

SCRIPTURE—1 PETER IV.

REMARKS.

It is a mistaken and mischievous opinion of the Christian religion, to suppose it to be a system of truths only to be believed, without remembering, at the same time, that these truths, when believed, were designed to produce a salutary effect upon the life. Faith is not a thing to be confined entirely to the bosom; it will prove its existence, and its power, by leading the believer to live as becomes the gospel. If we consult the sacred writers for their opinion on the subject, we will find them invariably joining faith with practice, regarding it as an express contradiction of terms for a man to profess the Christian faith, and yet not to practise Christian morality. Hence we can scarcely read over a single page of the New Testament without observing that its most doctrinal parts are mingled with what is preceptive, intimating most evidently, that the faithful reception of these doctrines would just be as the seed from whence would spring the 'fruits of righteousness,' which would ultimately bring in a rich harvest of holiness to the praise and glory of Christ the Redeemer.

Of such a nature is this chapter. It consists of exhortations: firstly, regarding the duty, and secondly, regarding the becoming endurance of those painful dispensations to which, as Christians, we may be exposed. Laying the foundation upon those great first principles of our faith stated at the commencement of the epistle, the apostle goes on to rear the superstructure, by directing attention to the various duties devolving upon us as members of the church, and as members of society. And he shows us that so far from Christian faith being a principle which was to lie dormant and undiscovered in the bosom of the professor, it was one which would regulate our conduct, as well in reference to the highest as the lowest in the kingdom; as well on the great arena of the world, as within the hallowed retreat of the family circle. The bible is not only to be the rule of our faith, but also the guide of our practice; and our guide too in every circumstance and situation in which we can be placed. The apostle having thus directed the attention of the Christian world to the duties required of them, urges them, in this chapter, to the performance of them, by the consideration of the example of Christ, and of the fact that the end of all things is rapidly approaching. We are to have the same mind in us that was in Christ, and hence to live not after the flesh. And because the end is at hand, when every one must give an account of the deeds done in the body, we are to be 'sober,' and 'watch unto prayer,' to be charitable and hospitable, and to employ every gift as 'stewards of the manifold grace of God.' And though in the prosecution of our duty, persecution or opposition may be endured; still the apostle tells us that so far from fainting, we must rejoice, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings, committing the keeping of our souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator. Let us then, not only be hearers, but doers of the word of God. While we read of the wonders of redeeming love, and rely upon the work which Jesus has accomplished, let us recollect that we 'are not our own, but bought with a price, and therefore are bound to glorify God with our bodies and our spirits, which are his.'

PRAYER.

Blessed be thy great name, O Lord, that we, thine unworthy servants, have been protected in safety and peace through the course of another day, and once more permitted to gather ourselves around our family altar. Let our evening prayers ascend into thy presence as the savour of a sweet-smelling sacrifice, and let an answer to our humble supplications be graciously vouchsafed. We thank thee that thou hast thought upon us in our lost condition, and hast not left us to perish for lack of spiritual knowledge. We bless thee that thou hast given us thy word, making known to us the principles we are to believe, and the precepts we are to obey. O may we be enabled to take it as the rule of our faith, and the guide of our practice. May we have our conversation as becometh the gospel, giving all diligence to add to our faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness, charity; so that these things being in us, and abounding, we may neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Pardon, we beseech thee, the sins which we have this day committed. Our sins of thought, and word, and deed, Lord, who can reckon? They are more in number than the very stars of heaven. But we bless thee that with thee there is plentiful redemption that thou mayest be sought unto. And therefore we would cry to thee for mercy to pardon us. O let not our sins be remembered against us. And let enlarged supplies of grace be imparted to us, that we may be enabled hereafter to walk in the ways of thy commandments, having the light of our profession so shining, that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify thee our Father in heaven. We offer up our thanksgivings for the goodness which through the course of another day we have been privileged to receive. Thou hast fed us with food convenient for us; thou hast clothed us, and sheltered us from the storm; thou hast kept our bodies in health, and our spirits in peace. And what shall we render to the Lord for his goodness? O that our souls and all that is within us were stirred up to praise and magnify thy name; thou forgivest our iniquities, thou healest our diseases, thou coverest us with loving-kindness and tender mercies. And now, Lord, that the shades of another night have gathered round us, and that we are to close our eyes in slumber, O do thou watch over us, and spare all the members of this family to meet together on another morning. And when we see the light of another day, may our hearts glow with grateful affection to that God who watches over his people as the apple of his eye. Our prayers, O Lord, are before thee. Hear in mercy, and graciously answer, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—HOSEA XI. XII.

REMARKS.

God, by the mouth of his prophet, intimates here his great goodness to the children of Israel, recapitulating shortly, but comprehensively, the care with which he had watched over them, and the kindness he had conferred on them, from the earliest period of their national history. He had chosen them from among all the kingdoms of the earth, and made them his peculiar people. But while the Lord had thus highly favoured and blessed them, their ingratitude was such as to have become proverbial. 'They forgot the God that made them, and lightly esteemed the rock of their salvation.' In these chapters they are charged with this ingratitude, and told that their sins were deeply aggravated by the advantages, which, as a people, and as individuals, they had enjoyed. Yet, though threatenings of vengeance are made, there is given, at the same time, gracious intimations of the mercy that is in store for them if they would but 'turn to God; keep mercy and judgment, and wait on God continually.' For while the anger of the Almighty is so excited by their sins, as to cause him to say of Ephraim, 'the sword shall abide on his cities, and they shall consume his branches, and devour them; yet does he immediately exclaim, as if yearning over his people with more than a father's love, 'how shall I give thee up, O Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim; for I am God and not man; the holy One in the midst of thee.'

He who thus spoke to his people of old, is still the same. 'He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' What he was in ancient times, he is at the present moment. The mercy which distinguished his conduct towards the Israelites, has distinguished his conduct to the world in all ages. His name and memorial in all generations have been 'the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious.' If we take a survey of our individual history, we will find not only a striking resemblance between God's conduct toward the children of Israel and us, but also between their conduct and ours toward God. Have there not been instances innumerable of God's mercy exhibited in our experience? have not goodness and mercy followed us all the days of our life? Conferring upon us those temporal and spiritual blessings which we require. And yet is it but true, that our hearts, instead of being filled with gratitude, have rather been under the influence of practical indifference? As the Israelites 'sacrificed to Baalim, and burned incense to graven images,' have not we often 'provoked him to anger most bitterly?' O let us remember that no man can harden his heart against the Lord, and yet prosper. Let us remember that however much the 'God of patience' may continue to deal with us graciously, rewarding us not according to our iniquities, but granting opportunities of repentance and amendment, yet if we convert his mercy into an argument for our perseverance in sin, his Spirit may at length cease to strive with us, and he may say, 'let them alone, they are wedded to their idols, let them alone.' Let our privileges, therefore, be diligently improved; let us endeavour by them to 'grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ.' Let the experience we have had of the mercy, and patience, and love of God, constrain us to love him in return. And let it be the great object of our lives to exhibit in our conduct the power of redeeming grace, remembering that it is man's chief end to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever.'

PRAYER.

Whom have we in the heavens, but thee, O God? and there is none upon the earth whom our souls desire besides thee. When our flesh and our hearts are fainting and failing, thou art the strength of our heart, and our portion for ever. Surely, O Lord, we are unworthy of the great privilege of standing in thy presence, and making our requests known to thee by prayer. Pour out upon us the influences of thy Spirit, as a spirit of prayer and supplication, that we may be enabled to come before thee and find acceptance. Lord, teach us how to pray. And do thou, for the sake of Christ Jesus, listen graciously to our humble petitions. We thank thee, O Father, for all the mercies which thou art daily causing to pass before us. As a family, and as individuals, we have experienced much of thy goodness. From our earliest years thou hast cared for us, and led us in safety through the slippery paths of youth. In the midst of our unworthiness, thou hast graciously supplied all our wants, granting us health, and strength, and peace, and all the worldly comforts which our circumstances required. And if in the ways of thy wise yet unsearchable providence, thou hast been pleased to visit us with personal or family afflictions; if thou hast laid thy chastening hand upon us, or called away those that were dear to us, still we rejoice in the hope that thou makest all things work together for good to them who believe, and who are called according to the purpose of God. And therefore, O Lord, upon the review of thy past goodness, we would now call upon our souls, and all that is within us, to be stirred up to bless thy holy name, who forgiveth our iniquities, who healeth all our diseases, who redeemeth our life from destruction, who crowneth us with loving-kindness and tender mercies, who satisfieth our mouth with good things, so that our youth is renewed as the eagles. But, O Lord, we have to lament our ingratitude, and our unprofitableness. Though thou hast given us, in addition to our temporal blessings, the unspeakable gift of thy Son; though thou hast sent him to seek and save us, and hast given to us the blessed gospel, making known to us the things that belong to our peace, yet have we to confess that we are ungrateful as the recipients of thy bounty, and unprofitable as professing believers in Christ. Like thy people of old we have compassed thee about with lies and with deceit; for while we have professed to love and serve thee, like them we have gone after strange gods, and served the desires of our corrupted hearts. Lord, hear us when we cry for pardon. Forgive, we entreat thee, all our iniquities. Blot our sins out of the book of thy remembrance, and draw us with the cords of a man, with bands of love, and cause us to turn to thee, to keep mercy and judgment, and wait on our God continually. In the multitude of thy mercies we have been permitted to see the light of another day. Thanks be to thee for the comfortable circumstances in which we are this morning gathered together. Blessed be thy name for the repose we have enjoyed, and the peace thou continuest with us. And now that our avocations cause us to go forth once more to the world, Lord, do thou go with us where we go, and abide with us where we abide, so that we may act ever under the impression that thou, Lord, seest us. Fit us for our duties; enable us to be diligent in business, and fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. God be merciful to us, and bless us, and cause thy face to shine upon us. Save now, we beseech thee, O Lord; we beseech thee, send now prosperity. Let thy blessing rest upon us, let thy presence go with us, let thy Spirit guide us, let thine arm uphold us, let our iniquities be forgiven us, that we may have that peace which the world cannot give us, nor take away. And to the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, one God, be glory and praise, now and ever. Amen

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXV. 9. (Second Version.)

SCRIPTURE—I PETER V.

REMARKS.

‘All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.’ The gospel was intended by its Author, not only to reveal to us the principles we were to believe, but also the precepts we were to obey. Hence we find that doctrine and duty are closely and constantly intermingled; the one as the cause, and the other as the effect. For in the whole history of the church, there will not be found one single instance, where true belief of the doctrine of the scriptures did not lead to the observance of the duties that were enjoined. And thus are Christians taught to be ‘doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving our own selves.’

In the present instance, the apostle points out the duty required at the hand of two great classes of the Christian community, whom he calls the ‘elder,’ and the ‘younger.’ The first term may be taken to signify either age or office; and may thus be applied to those who are ‘elders,’ either on account of their years, or on account of the office they sustain in the church of Christ. In the former case, the aged are to be ‘ensamples to the flock,’ setting forth in their conduct the beauty of holiness, becoming, by their actions, preachers of righteousness—living epistles, known and read of all men. In the latter case, the office-bearers of the church are to ‘feed the flock, taking the oversight thereof,’ exercising such a vigilant care over the members of the church, as will have a tendency, by the divine blessing, to prevent their straying into the tempting pastures of sinful enjoyment. For the purpose of stimulating the aged Christian, and the official servant in the house of God, to the faithful discharge of this duty, the apostle tells them that their ‘labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.’ He directs their attention to the period when the ‘chief Shepherd shall appear,’ surrounded by countless myriads of his Father’s angels; when every man shall be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body; and when these ‘elders’ who have served him in his church here, shall ‘receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.’ For they who turn many to righteousness, shall shine as the stars in the firmament for ever.

The other class to whom this passage is specially addressed the apostle calls the ‘younger,’ which, as it stands connected with the previous phrase, may be taken to signify either those who are young, in respect of their years, or in respect of their place in the church. In reference to the first, they are exhorted to observe and imitate the example of the aged portion of the flock of Christ; they are to be ‘clothed with humility,’ to ‘be sober and vigilant;’ and though their ‘adversary the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour,’ while they ‘resist’ him, and remain ‘stedfast in the faith,’ they are to cast ‘all their care upon’ God, ‘for he careth for’ them. In reference to the latter, (the members of the church,) it is the exhortation of the apostle that they ‘submit unto the elder;’ yielding that cheerful obedience to the rule established in the church, which has been found necessary, not only for the maintenance of order, but for the promotion of the spiritual prosperity of the people. And thus both portions of the Christian community observing and discharging their duty, the one being ensample to the flock, and the other submitting to their authority and following in their steps, the body of Christ would be edified; the members of the church would grow together in grace; the cause of religion, while it prospered in our own hearts, would be extending its influence in the world: and the time would thus hasten on when the apostle’s concluding desire would be accomplished, that ‘the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.’ Let the aged Christian, therefore, be as eminent for his virtues as his years;

let the office-bearer in the church exhibit in his life the power and purity of gospel principle; let the young remember their Creator in the days of their youth, and be followers of those who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises; let the members of the church walk as becometh their high vocation; let all be 'provoking each other to love and good works.'

PRAYER.

We bless thee, O Lord, that after the labours and cares of another day we are permitted in peace to meet around our household altar, and present before thee our evening sacrifice. For all the goodness which personally, or as a family, we have experienced, we would desire to give thee thanks. For all the sins we have committed, our sins of thought, and word, and deed, we would ask forgiveness. And now, as we kneel in thy presence, we implore that thou wouldst graciously hear us, and grant our requests. We bless thee that thou didst think upon us in our lost condition; that thou didst devise the plan of redemption, and in due time accomplish it by the sacrifice of thy Son. We thank thee for the everlasting gospel, wherein are revealed the glorious doctrines of salvation. We thank thee for the establishment of thy church on earth, and for the various privileges which within it we enjoy. Oh! that all its members were members of the body of Christ, washed in his blood, sanctified by thy grace, and fitted for duty in this life, and for glory in the life that is to come. Oh! that its office-bearers were all clothed with salvation, that the people may shout for joy, and that the gospel may have free course and be greatly glorified among the people. And Oh! that all professing Christians were enabled to walk as becometh their high vocation, living soberly, righteously, and godly, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. May all of us, O Lord, benefit by the various privileges with which we are favoured. May the example of those who have preceded us, stimulate us to diligence and activity in the service of Christ. May our souls be watered by the preaching of the word, and the administration of ordinances within the sanctuary. May we remember that they that are Christ's, have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts: and that we having professed ourselves to be his, it is incumbent on us to live in accordance with the precepts of the gospel. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with his benefits, even the God of our salvation. It is God that guideth us with strength, and maketh our way perfect, that hath blessed the work of our hands. Our houses have been safe from fear, and there hath been no rod of God upon us, so that the voice of rejoicing and salvation hath been heard in our tabernacle from day to day. But especially do we thank thee, that thou hast blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ. Thou hast laid our help on One who is mighty, even Jesus Christ the righteous. Oh! let us who now worship before thee, have a saving interest in the sacrifice he has offered, and let the word of Christ dwell in us richly, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. The very God of peace sanctify us wholly, and we pray God our whole spirit, and soul, and body, may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Let the grace of God, which hath appeared unto all men, bringing salvation, teach us to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, that we may be rendered unto Christ a peculiar people, zealous of good works. And while we thus thank thee for our own privileges, and implore thy blessing upon them, we would remember at thy throne the case of those who are not so highly favoured. Hear us, O Lord, when we cry to thee on behalf of the benighted heathen, who are yet lying in darkness and the shadow of death. Let the people who sit in darkness, see a great light; and to them who sit in the region and shadow of death, let light spring up. Bring thy seed from the east, and gather them from the west; say to the north, Give up, and to the south, Keep not back: bring thy sons from afar, and thy daughters from the ends of the earth. From the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, let thy name be great among the Gentiles. And now, O God, thou who makest the outgoings of the evening, as well as of the morning, to rejoice over us, to thee do we commit all that belongs to us. Let our souls return to thee and repose in thee as our rest, because thou hast dealt bountifully with us, so shall our sleep be sweet to us. Let the angels of the Lord encamp round us to deliver us, that we may lie down and none make us afraid. And let these, our humble prayers, be heard and answered, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—HOSEA XIII. XIV.

REMARKS.

CHAP. XIII. In this chapter the prophet Hosea sets before us, in that peculiarly rapid manner which constitutes the characteristic feature of his writings, the fearful extent of Ephraim's idolatry, the heinous aggravations which had accompanied it, and the awful and unavoidable destruction in which it was now at length about to terminate.

This chapter sounds a warning note of the most awful and impressive character. The progress of Ephraim in idolatry is verified in the experience of every impenitent sinner. Arising at first in scarcely perceptible droppings, sin rushes forward in the end with the resistless impetuosity of a desolating flood, breaking down one barrier of restraining grace after another, overwhelming one after another the delusive hopes of its hapless victim; and yet stunning him at the same time into a grosser insensibility to his actual condition; until, having rendered him altogether blind to the destruction towards which it is hurrying him, and deaf to the last lingering call of mercy, which could he but have heard, he might have still been rescued; it precipitates him at length, in a fatal moment, into the overwhelming abyss of reprobation and misery.

O that God would make us wise in time to attend to the things that belong to our peace, before they be for ever hid from our eyes; and that convincing us of our sin and misery, before we be utterly hardened in guilt, he would teach us to flee while a time for escape yet remains for us, to lay hold on the hope set before us in the gospel.

CHAP. XIV. opens with a serious admonition to Israel, to return to that gracious God from whose favour they had fallen by their iniquities. The prophet, in the 2d and 3d verses, puts words of confession and supplication in their mouths, and urges them to place their confidence, in distrust of all their refuges of lies, in him alone in whom the fatherless findeth mercy. In ver. 4—6, God the Saviour himself comes forward, and promises, in terms of the most endearing tenderness, to heal their backslidings, to love them freely, and to fill them with the fullness of his inexhaustible mercy. Ver. 7, describes, in the glowing words of the prophet, speaking again in his own person, the happiness of Ephraim when the day spring from on high shall thus visit him, and the times of refreshing come upon him from the presence of the Lord. In ver. 8, Jehovah puts into his people's mouth the renunciation of their idols, declares that he will hear and answer their prayers, that he will make them flourish like the green fir-tree, and that he will supply them abundantly with the blessings of his grace. This chapter and the prophecies of Hosea, concludes with a solemn declaration on the part of the prophet, infinitely weighty in its matter, and eminently simple and unaffected in its diction, that the wise shall consider and comprehend Jehovah's straight and even ways, and, being justified by his grace, proceed onward in the same, but that those ways shall be to the rebellious transgressors as a rock of offence, and a stone of stumbling. In accordance with the solemn admonition of the prophet, let it be the first and most anxious care of all who read this portion of sacred writ, so replete with the words of grace and truth, to return with singleness and sincerity of heart to that thrice merciful God from whom they have separated themselves by sin; to take with them words of confession and supplication, and, trusting in the Lord with all their might, to say to him, in humble dependence on his own grace for the perfecting of their resolutions, 'Other lords have had dominion over us, but henceforth will we be called only by thy name.' In the case of all who thus return to him, God will in very deed heal their backslidings and love them freely; he will justify them by his free grace, and cause them to understand his ways, and to walk therein to the saving of their souls. 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.'

PRAYER.

Almighty and eternal God, we would desire on every occasion of drawing near unto thee, to adore thee as the greatest, and the wisest, and the best of beings, who art infinitely good in thyself, and who delightest in the communication of good to all thy creatures. O Lord, thou art indeed our God, thou didst separate us from the womb, thou hast made us continually the objects of thy fatherly care, it is in thee alone that we live and move and have our being; yet we have forgotten thee the God that made us, and lightly esteemed thee the rock of our salvation; we have hardened ourselves against thy long-suffering and patient forbearance, and too often have we said in our hearts, Let us go on to sin because grace abounds. We have exposed ourselves to thy just and righteous indignation; most justly mightest thou have consumed us in the fierceness of thine anger, and most justly, in leaving us to reap the bitter fruits of our impenitence and obduracy, mightest thou have glorified the perfections of thy character and the purity of thy government. Times and ways without number have we turned a deaf ear to the calls of thy grace, and steeled our hearts in utter insensibility against the good motions of thy blessed Spirit. It is indeed because thou art God and not man, that we have not long ere now been cut down in our sins; it is because thy compassion flows without failing, that we are still in the land of the living and in the place of hope. But blessed, for ever blessed be thy holy name, there is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared, and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. O Lord, it is in the name of the Saviour alone, and in humble dependence on the infinite merits of his sufferings and death in behalf of sinful men, that we now present ourselves at the footstool of thy throne of mercy, humbly imploring of thee the forgiveness of our sins, and the reviving influences of thy Spirit of grace. See, God, our shield; look, we beseech thee, on the face of thine Anointed, and for his sake say unto us, as thou didst unto Ephraim of old, I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely. And, O God, enable us with thy servant Ephraim to put away every one the idol of his heart, and to bring into the light of distinct consciousness, and to crucify with an unsparing hand, our most cherished sins. Turn us, O God, from the evil of our ways, and we shall be turned; give us wisdom to understand the deep things of thy holy law, and make us willing, in the power of thy grace, to walk in thy statutes with perfect hearts. Enable us, O God, to set thee the Lord continually before us, and in the exercise of that faith which worketh by love, to acknowledge thee in all our paths, that we may thus go forward from strength to strength, until at last we become meet, through the merits of the Redeemer, to appear before thee in the heavenly Zion. Make us thankful for the refreshing slumbers which we have enjoyed through the past night, and for the mercies which have preceded the dawn of the morning. May we go forth to the labours of the day in thy fear; may we be fitted by thy grace for all its trials, and may its path of duty be made plain to us by the light of thy truth. Bless us, O God, and all in whose welfare we ought to be interested, with the blessings which thou bestowest upon thy chosen ones, for the sake of Him whom thou hearest always; to whom with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, be everlasting praises, now and henceforth. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—2 PETER I.

REMARKS.

The Epistle of Peter, of which this chapter forms the introduction, is generally supposed to have been written by the apostle, and indeed bears internal evidence to that effect, when he had now a near prospect of sealing with his blood the testimony of Jesus. It is addressed to those who had obtained, through the righteousness of God in Christ, the like precious faith with the apostles themselves. The inspired writer, in expressing his anxious desire, that those to whom he wrote might be established in the grace and peace of the everlasting gospel, points out clearly, in a few introductory sentences, the all-important purpose which this gospel is intended to effect. Such purpose is, that believers might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. In ver. 5—7, he urges upon Christians, in furtherance of the object now mentioned, that, inasmuch as they have received, through the glorious benignity of God shown forth in the Redeemer, all things that pertain unto life and godliness, they should cultivate and cherish more and more assiduously all the graces and virtues of the Christian character; the knowledge of divine truth, the regulation of their own temper and passions, piety towards God, and brotherly-kindness and charity towards their fellow-men. The grounds on which this exhortation is urged by him, are stated with great perspicuity and precision in ver. 8—11. It is, he says, through the abundance of these fruits unto holiness, that the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ makes manifest in the Christian its saving influences, and proves his profession to be founded in truth; whereas, he observes again, if such fruits be wanting, it becomes equally manifest that the light of divine truth hath not yet illumined the soul, that the conversation is not directed by the eye of faith; in fine, that even the essential conditions of the Christian calling are wholly misunderstood. It is, he adds farther, only by the cultivation in himself of the like purity which was in his God and Saviour, that the Christian can assure himself that he has been called of God, that he shall be able to stand in the evil day, and that he shall, with certainty, attain the end of his labour in the salvation of his soul. In ver. 12—15, the apostle, wholly engrossed with the infinite importance of the truths which he had just enunciated, and having his bowels yearning towards his fellow-believers with the deep and unaffected tenderness of genuine Christian sympathy, declares it to be his fixed purpose to employ the brief interval that might yet remain to him in stirring them up to an affectionate remembrance of the truth, and in providing for the continuance of this remembrance upon their minds, when he himself should be removed from his fleshly tabernacle. And the consideration of the important duty in reference to this matter, which he regarded as still incumbent upon him, led him to press upon their attention, in the concluding verses of the chapter, with the utmost earnestness, the indubitable reality of the truths which had been declared to them. The chapter concludes with an affectionate exhortation to professing Christians to revolve in honest and sincere hearts, and with deep and fervent meditation, the confirmation from prophecy of the divine mission and character of Jesus, which the circumstances of his life, and death, and resurrection had made abundantly manifest, waiting with anxious expectation for the time when the day should dawn, and the day-star of the Spirit arise in their hearts.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever-blessed God, thou art the giver of every good and perfect gift; thou hast bestowed upon us, in Christ Jesus the Saviour, all things that pertain unto life and godliness, and thou hast given us the exceeding great and precious promises of the aids of thy Spirit, to deliver us from the bondage of corruption, and to reinstate us in the liberty of thy dear children. Grant, we humbly beseech thee, most gracious God, that making our escape through thy grace from the corruption that is in the world through lust, we may become partakers of the divine nature, and have our consciences purged from dead works, to serve thee the living God. May thy Holy Spirit dwelling within us enable us day by day to be adding to our faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly-kindness; and to brotherly-kindness, charity. May we abound in those fruits of the Spirit, being deeply impressed with the feeling that it is thus only that we can have the Spirit of God bearing witness with our spirits that we have passed from death unto life, and that it is thus only that we can make our calling and election sure; that we can know in our own joyful experience what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God, and that we can be confirmed and established in the mind of Christ. Forgive, we earnestly beseech thee, our past abuse of the inestimable privileges which have been so plentifully bestowed upon us. Cut us not down according to our just deserts as lumberers of the ground, but dig about us and dress us, and enable us yet, through the re-animating power of thy grace, to bring forth fruit unto life eternal. Wash us, and make us clean from sin, in that fountain which thou hast opened up for the house of Israel for sin and for uncleanness; renew us in the spirit of our minds; sanctify us wholly by thy truth, and enable us in what may still remain to us of life to redeem the time with redoubled diligence. Fit and prepare us, O most gracious God, for discharging every duty required of us in a manner becoming thy redeemed people, and such as may best promote the advancement and establishment of thy kingdom among men. O make us fellow-workers with thine own Spirit, in reaping the travail of the Redeemer's soul, in promoting the growth of holiness in our own hearts, and in winning our fellow-men to the knowledge, and love, and obedience of the truth. We bless thee, O God, that thou hast established our faith on a sure foundation, that thou hast adapted it to the many wants and weaknesses of our fallen nature, and that thou hast confirmed the mission and doctrine of Jesus as the Messiah, by the manifest fulfilment, in all the circumstances of his life and death, of the word of prophecy, as well as by signs, and wonders, and divers miracles, and especially by his glorious triumph over death and the grave. Enable us, we beseech thee, to give good heed to the precious truths of thy most blessed word, and to wait upon thee in the appointed ordinances of thy grace, with humble and believing hearts. Prepare us more especially, if thou shalt be pleased to spare us to see the light of a new morning, for the solemn duties of the coming Sabbath; may we read and hear the lively oracles of divine truth with deep reverence and attention; may these oracles be applied in season to our souls; and grant, we humbly beseech thee, that while we are yet reading and hearing thy holy word, the quickening Spirit may descend from on high, and cause the day to dawn and the day-star to arise in our hearts. Accept now, most gracious God, the feeble expression of our thanksgiving for all the mercies of the past day and this evening; forgive, we again entreat thee, our many sins and short-comings, and be with us, with all who are near and dear to us, and with all whom we ought to bear upon our minds at a throne of grace, throughout the watches of the ensuing night, to bless us and to do us good, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FORTY-EIGHTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXII. 13. OR CXXXIII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXXII. CXXXIII.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXXII. This beautiful psalm is generally understood to have been composed by Solomon on the occasion of the dedication of the temple. It is obviously directly applicable to the circumstances of the Christian church, and, indeed, it is only as thus applied, that the full beauty and strength of the psalmist's expressions come to be perceived. What professing Christian can read the vow of David, that he would neither give sleep to his eyes, nor slumber to his eye-lids, until he had found an habitation for 'the mighty God of Jacob,' and yet fail to be impressed with the conviction that an obligation lies upon himself to manifest an anxiety, if possible yet more intense, to find for the same God a living temple in his own heart. If again Solomon rejoiced in the enlarged facilities which his times afforded for waiting upon God in the ordinances of his grace, with what emotions of gratitude does it become us to speak of our privileges, before whose eyes Christ hath been set forth crucified; who have in our hands the now completed volume of God's living word, and who have sounded in our ears, from sabbath to sabbath, the all-encouraging invitations of the everlasting gospel. O that the Lord would arise in his strength, and cause the work of his grace to prosper in the midst of us; that he would enable his ministering servants to rejoice in his righteousness, and to display it in all its beauty and fullness to perishing sinners; and that quickening his word by the energies of his Spirit, he would thus constrain his saints to 'shout aloud for joy.' Then only can we know with certainty that the Lord hath chosen our Zion to be the place of his rest, when his Spirit dwells in our hearts by faith, bearing witness with our own spirits that we are living unto the Lord, having been emancipated from the slavery of sin and Satan, and delivered into the liberty of the sons of God.

PSALM CXXXIII. The language of this psalm is extremely beautiful, describing the blessings which result from the concord and unity of brethren, by figurative expressions of the most appropriate character. Like the precious ointment poured upon the head of the high priest, which flowing down his beard to the skirts of his garment, anointed his whole person, such blessings are represented as diffusing their hallowed influences throughout the entire system both of individual and social life. Like the dews of Hermon that descending on the mountains of Zion, amidst the stillness of the early dawn, communicate fresh beauty and loveliness to every opening plant and flower, invigorating the parched stem and reviving the drooping leaf, the peace and concord of brethren, on which the Lord hath commanded the blessing, even life for evermore, are set forth to us by the psalmist, as a sovereign balm for all the ills of time, restoring the care-worn spirit of man, healing the sorrows of the mourner in Zion, and raising the fainting soul on the wings of love, to contemplate the dawn of that yet more lovely morn when, the Sun of righteousness looking forth in his brightness, not to parch, but to cherish every plant that the hand of the Lord hath planted, shall spring up at once in the full beauty of immortal verdure. If as is generally supposed this beautiful psalm was appointed to be sung by the tribes of Israel, when they assembled in Jerusalem to celebrate the solemn festivals which the Lord had appointed, what, let the Christian inquire at the mouth of conscience, are the spirit and temper of mind towards his brethren with which it becomes him to present himself in the courts of the sanctuary. Peace was the gift bequeathed to his church by a departing Saviour; peace had been proclaimed on earth when he first tabernacled among men, and the Prince of peace is the style and title under which he hath been designated by the Spirit of inspiration. It is too evident then, that the heart which is still a stranger to peace, and to that charity which is the bond of perfectness, is no less a stranger to the justifying and sanctifying power of the everlasting gospel.

PRAYER.

Eternal God, thou art the fountain of light and life, thou art the Father of our spirits, thou art the Creator and preserver of universal nature. On the morning of thy day we desire to draw near unto thee in the name of Christ, and through the aids of his Spirit to worship thee who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Accept us, O God, in the face of thine Anointed; blot out our iniquities from the book of thy remembrance, and bestow upon us in double measure the blessings of thy grace. Prepare our hearts, O God, as places of rest for the ark of the covenant, as living temples of holiness, in which may be celebrated continually the praises of thy glorious and unsearchable mercy. We desire to bless thee with our whole hearts, that while thou didst in former times speak unto our fathers by the prophets, giving them the promise of good things to come; thou hast in these last days spoken unto us, their children, by the mouth of thine only begotten and well-beloved Son, whom thou hast now revealed in all the fullness of grace and truth, and in whom thou hast brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. We bless thee for all that he did, and taught, and suffered on our account, and for all that he is still doing, now that he has ascended up on high to perfect his work in the hearts of his people, and to prepare for them a place of everlasting rest. We bless thee that we have in our hands the precious volume of revealed truth, that we enjoy the privilege of worshipping thee according to the dictates of conscience, no man making us afraid, that the solemnities of the weekly recurring sabbath have it for their object to call off our attention from the things of the world, and to fix it on the enduring realities of eternity; and especially that from our earliest years we have been instructed in the knowledge of our God and Saviour, whom to know in the power of his gospel, is life everlasting. Well doth it become us to exclaim, under emotions of the deepest and most fervent gratitude, Surely the Lord hath done great and wonderful things for us, and things whereof it becometh us to be glad; he hath not dealt so with any people. But alas, Lord, the distinguished privileges which we enjoy can tend only to deepen our condemnation, unless we are enabled, through the aids of the living Spirit of grace, to improve them to thy glory, and to our own good. Forgive, we humbly intreat thee, our past unfruitfulness under the ministry of thy grace, and quicken us henceforth by the power of thy Spirit, that we may yield fruit abundantly unto eternal life. Fill, we beseech thee, the mouths of thy ministering servants among us with the praises of thine everlasting righteousness, and enable them to show it forth, in all its beauty and fullness, to those among whom thou hast appointed them to labour in holy things; and, O God, make thy people willing in the day of thy power, clothe them with the garment of praise, and cause them to shout aloud for joy. Make the horn of David to bud in Zion, and ordain there thy blessed word as illumined by the light of thine eternal Spirit, to be to thy people for a light to their feet and a lamp unto their paths. Pour forth upon us this day, we beseech thee, the Spirit of prayer and supplication, of love towards thee, our God, and of brotherly-kindness and charity towards our fellow-men. May the prayers of a united people, animated by one common Spirit, and feeling themselves to be members of that spiritual body of which Jesus himself is the living head, and thus also members one of another, united in the bonds of a more than brotherly affection, rise up before thee this day in grateful memorial from the courts of thy sanctuary, and bring down upon us the blessing which thou hast commanded, even life for evermore. Be this day in all the worshipping assemblies of thy people, and carry forth, we beseech thee, to the ends of the earth the preaching of the everlasting gospel. Hasten, for thine own name's sake, and for the glory of thy grace, the happy period when the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, and when the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, when the universal church shall be established in love and peace, and when thy will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. Hear us, O God, in heaven thy dwelling-place, and when thou hearest forgive, and send us an answer of mercy and peace, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CXXXIV.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXXIV. CXXXV.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXXIV. This psalm is generally supposed to have been sung by the priests and Levites at and after the time when the worship of God was set up in the second temple upon the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity. Some critics, of whom Bishop Lowth is one, are of opinion that it contains the address and response of the parties, one to another, who were entrusted with the duty of keeping a nightly watch over the temple. In this view the first chorus of watchmen are supposed at the end of every stated interval of time, to have addressed to the second chorus the exhortation to praise contained in the first and second verses, while the parties thus addressed answered the call by pronouncing the blessing recorded in the concluding verse of the psalm. Whether this last conjecture, to which the practice, still prevalent among watchmen in the east, gives some countenance, is or is not founded in truth, it seems quite clear that the psalm in question was used by the priests and Levites in celebrating the praises of Jehovah in his temple. And such having been its use in the dispensation which has passed away, we can be at no loss as to the application to be made of it in the case either of a Christian church, or an individual Christian. Most urgently are we called upon by the whole tenor and spirit of the gospel, and by every part of God's dealings with us, both as a church and as individuals, to make melody in our hearts unto the Lord, alike in the retirement of our closets, and in our solemn assemblies in the courts of the sanctuary, and to pray with unfailing fervour that God would bless his people from his holy hill of Zion, and cause to descend upon their hearts, in rich effusion, the fostering dews of his heavenly grace.

PSALM CXXXV. This beautiful psalm would appear to have been sung by three different choirs: the high priest, with the house of Aaron, constituting the first; the Levites serving in the temple the second; and the congregation of Israel the third; all having their distinct parts, and all at stated intervals uniting in full chorus. It was in the strictest sense of the term a national hymn of praise and thanksgiving to the God of Jacob. The first three verses are occupied with mutual exhortations of the several parties above noticed, by which they affectionately encouraged each other to engage in the delightful duty of giving praise to Jehovah. In the 4th verse the full chorus assign the reason of these mutual exhortations. 'For the Lord hath chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure.' In ver. 5—7, the greatness of God is shown forth, his universal sovereignty asserted, and proclamation made of the overruling power of his providence over all the elements of the natural world. Ver. 8—12, set forth as grounds of more peculiar thanksgiving, the special interpositions of his providence in behalf of his people of Israel, their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the slaughter of the kings on the eastern bank of the Jordan, and, finally, the establishment of the posterity of Abraham in the peaceable possession of the goodly land which God had promised to their father to give them for a heritage. Ver. 13, 14, contain a grateful commemoration of the everlasting faithfulness of Jehovah, and of the riches of his grace and mercy toward his chosen inheritance. The congregation of Israel, conscious of their many transgressions and backslidings, take comfort in the thought that God, according to his promise, and the past experience of their nation, would judge his people, and repent himself concerning his servants. Ver. 15—18, contain an indignant reproof of the folly and guilt of idolatry, and evidently contrast, at least by implication, as an ever enduring ground of praise and adoration, the happiness of Israel over the people of the surrounding countries, in having the living God as their portion, and the superintending providence of the holy One as the rock of their defence. The psalm having, by touching on the stirring topics now enumerated, wound up, as may well be supposed, the heart of every worshipper to a high strain of pure devotional feeling, concludes, as it had commenced, with mutual exhortations to thanksgiving and praise.

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who wast, who art, and who art to come. Thou art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, the only proper object of all religious homage and veneration. We rejoice to know that thou didst so love the world as to send into it thine only begotten and well-beloved Son, that whosoever should believe on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. We bless thee, that thou hast planted in the midst of us the ministry of the everlasting gospel; that thou hast given us free access to the ordinances of salvation, and that thou hast displayed before our eyes Jesus Christ, and him crucified; that we may obtain redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. O let it not be our condemnation, that light is come into the world, and that we have yet preferred the darkness to the light, through our love of that which is evil. But open our eyes, we beseech thee, that we may see our lost and perishing state by nature, and our unspeakable need of Christ to be our Saviour; that we may see the folly of every ground of trust which has not for its foundation the righteousness of God in Christ, and that we may be led, while the day of grace is yet lengthened out to us, to flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us in the gospel. Impress effectually on our hearts and consciences what we have this day read and heard from thy blessed word, and give us that living faith in its saving truths which worketh by love, which purifieth the heart, and which overcometh the world. Enlighten us by the teaching of thy Spirit from on high, and give us, through him also, the contrite and believing heart, and the submissive and willing mind, that we may be conformed in all things to the pure and spotless example of our divine Redeemer, having the Lord himself formed within us, and being fully established in the mind of Christ. Heavenly Father, make thy grace sufficient for us, perfect thy strength in our weakness, and work in us in all things both to will and to do of thy good pleasure. Forgive, we beseech thee, the sins of our holy things, and more especially the many short-comings and infirmities that have marked the discharge of our religious duties during the past day. Suffer us not to rest satisfied with any attainment we may have already made, but teach us to press forward day by day with increasing eagerness towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. O God, make it ever the most earnest desire of our hearts, to glorify thee in our bodies and in our spirits which are thine, and to count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord, that we may win him, and be found in him, not having our own righteousness, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God through faith. Gracious God, follow with thy effectual blessing the whole religious services in which thy people have been engaged during the past day. Enable all that have named the name of Christ to depart from iniquity, and hasten in its appointed time the joyful period when the whole earth shall become one vast temple of its Maker's praise, and when all thy rational creatures shall be ministering servants at thy holy altar. We would thank thee, now, for all the goodness which thou hast made to pass before us. We would again entreat of thee, the forgiveness of our sins and short-comings, and we would implore for ourselves, and for all whom we ought to have upon our minds at a throne of grace, the watchful care of thy providence throughout the ensuing night. And all that we ask, and hope to receive, we ask in the name, and through the mediation of our great Intercessor, to whom, with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, be everlasting praise. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—JOEL 1.

REMARKS.

There is an uncertainty as to the precise time at which Joel prophesied, but it is generally fixed before the captivity in the days of Uzziah. In this chapter he foretells a terrible calamity as about to come upon Judah, a visitation of divine vengeance, whereby the whole land would be turned into barrenness, and the labour of the husbandman made to fail utterly, so that even the beasts of the field would groan by reason of their privations. He indicates the means also by which this would be effected, drought and a succession of noxious vermin, and calls upon all classes to humble themselves, and to put up their supplications that the threatened judgment might be stayed. When the Almighty purposes to stretch forth his arm in punishment upon a people, how various are the means which he can employ! The resources of all the kingdoms of nature are in his hand, and he can call forth the ministers of his vengeance from any quarter; even the most insignificant insects which are fully under the power of man, may yet be brought upon us in such numbers as to be altogether overwhelming. To strengthen his description, the prophet, in various parts of the chapter, sets before the eye the images of an actual desolation, speaking of the judgment as already past, and calls upon the old men and all the inhabitants of the land to remember it, and to tell it unto their children, and they again to their children, and so that it should be reported to future generations. It is good for us to treasure up the lessons which we are taught in the school of adversity, to bear them in solemn remembrance upon our souls, and to speak of them to those with whom we are connected. God chastens, from a purpose of mercy; many are brought in affliction to humble themselves before him, and to see, in another view than they had ever done, their highest interests. It is the design of all the divine chastisements, whether national or individual, 'that the people may learn wisdom;' that they may be brought to a true sense of transgression, and to direct their lives with a view to the divine glory. In ver. 5, one class of sinners is appealed to as specially visited in this judgment, inasmuch as through it the means were taken away of their sinful indulgence; drunkards are there required 'to awake because the new wine is cut off.' Ver. 13, 14. In these verses the prophet calls upon the priests, the ministers of the altar, to engage in fasting and other exercises of solemn humiliation and mourning for sin; to convene the elders also, or heads of the people; nay, the whole inhabitants of the land unto this service, that so their united prayers might rise up unto the Lord. Whether the bodily exercise of fasting may accompany it or no, it becomes us ever, in making approach unto the Lord, to strive to possess mortification of the passions and deep feelings of humility and unworthiness, and both in the actual experience of calamity, or having it only in anticipation, to lift up the prayer of humble confidence to him, believing that he will make all things work together for good to them that love him, and seeking either that prospective trouble may be averted, or that if already in the experience of it, we may have grace given to endure and to improve it to the divine glory.

PRAYER.

Draw near now, O Lord, unto us, while we humbly seek to draw near unto thee; give unto us the spirit of grace and of supplication, and that sense of unworthiness and self-abasement, which becomes creatures laden with sin as we are, in making approach to a thrice holy God. We bless and praise thee that amid all our unworthiness, thou hast revealed unto us a way of access, and given us a name to plead which is above every name. We come before thee in the name of the Saviour, humble, penitent, anxious believers; we trust in his name, and beseech thee to look graciously upon us for his sake.

We adore thee as the God of our life, and the author of all our mercies; we give thee thanks for all thy goodness which thou hast made to pass before us. Hitherto, we would say, hath the Lord helped us. Before we knew the hand from which our comforts flowed, or could raise our souls in gratitude to the Author of our mercies, thou didst watch over and sustain the interests of our being. Yet thou art a God of judgment as well as of mercy; thy judgments have been abroad in the earth, thou hast made bare thine arm and smitten the nations; and truly if thou hadst dealt with us according to our deservings, if thou hadst laid justice to the line and equity to the plummet, we had not been here in comfort before thee. We desire to remember, O Lord, that we are monuments each one of us of thy great long-suffering, that it is because thy thoughts are not as ours, nor thy ways as ours, that we are still in the place of hope. O give us a sanctified use of the dealings of thy providence, as they are declared in thy word. May they come home with power to our souls; may thy long-suffering in our own case lead us to repentance, to a devoted and faithful living unto thee, lest this threatening of thy word be at last fulfilled on us, 'he that being often reprov'd hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.' Help us, Lord, to feel our dependence upon thee for life, and breath, and all things; that with all our superiority over the other creatures of this lower world, we are yet as dependent as the meanest of them, and have nothing that we have not received; that in spiritual things also, as well as in temporal, the blessing cometh from above; while Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, that the increase is from the Lord. O may the good seed of the word be implanted and take deep root in our souls; may it be watered with the dew of thy blessing, and be manifested abroad in fruits of righteousness to thy glory. In all circumstances, O God, we will look unto thee; what time our hearts are overwhelmed and in perplexity, do thou lead us unto the Rock of ages. Give unto us to experience protection under its shade, and refreshing and comfort from the stream of blessing that flows from it. Grant that this spiritual rock may follow us through the burden and heat of this day; enable us to realize through the course of it a sense of thy presence, and to experience the direction and aid of thy Spirit, and in all that we put our hand unto, have a regard to thy glory. Hear us in Christ, and accept of us for his sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—2 PETER II.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—3. The apostle, in these verses, gives warning of the danger arising from perverting the truth, and speaks of the numbers that would be deceived by it, and of the certainty with which they were treasuring up unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath. It is a warning which is applicable to the church in every age; it should ever be a primary object to preserve the truth in its purity, and to this end it becomes every faithful disciple to co-operate, to hear about with him our Lord's declaration, 'ye are the salt of the earth, the light of the world;' and his searching appeal to all professing believers, 'if the light that is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness.' Ver. 4—11. Here the apostle speaks of the avenging justice of God upon the angels who sinned, and how the same was fulfilled on two remarkable occasions on the ungodly of the human race, adducing also pleasing examples of the deliverance of the godly in these latter judgments, how the remnant of the faithful, the true seed, was spared. Even in the most corrupt times, God has had a seed in the earth, a few witnesses for his name and cause; and it is a very sustaining assurance that he knoweth how to deliver these in all seasons of tribulation, that he will not forsake them utterly, but will be the comfort and stay of them that fear him, while the unjust will be reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished. Ver. 12—16. The previous declaration of certain judgment, swift destruction impending over the ungodly and despisers of the truth, had been made, and there follows here a more special description of those who were involved in this condemnation of the peculiar vices by which they were enslaved. In reviewing these, the leading characteristics are pride, covetousness, and sensuality. The whole passage forms a striking comment on the words of the Psalmist, 'the wicked, through the pride of his countenance, doth not seek after God. God is not in all his thoughts.' Ver. 17. Here a simile is introduced, descriptive of the hollowness and deceitful nature of the prospects of happiness that are held forth by the parties before referred to, they are called 'wells without water,' to show that nothing really refreshing and sustaining to the soul can flow from their principles. The apostle Jude employs a somewhat similar figure in describing like characters, 'clouds they are,' he says, 'without water, carried about of winds;' their end of destruction is also noted in the words, 'to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.' Ver. 18, 19. In these verses, the apostle speaks of the power of seducing and leading away others that was possessed by the class of persons whom he had described, a power so great that it often drew within its fatal influence those who had been able to escape from the grosser pollutions. The seducers had upon their lips the promise of liberty, while they were alluring them into the greatest slavery that is known, the slavery of inward devouring lust. Ver. 20—22. Here the high degree of guilt of parties so yielding, is declared. If some sins in themselves, by reason of several aggravations, are more heinous in the sight of God than others, it is the uniform assurance of scripture that those persons incur a very heavy condemnation, who fall back into debasing sins after they had in some measure entered on a life of piety. God is more dishonoured, and the cause of religion suffers more from the apostacy of such individuals, than even from the uniform course of the habitual sinner. The words of the concluding verse are most significantly descriptive of their moral deformity.

PRAYER.

We desire, O Lord, at the close of another day, to draw near unto thee, and to present our united tribute of thanksgiving and praise for thy gracious providence which hath watched over us throughout it. We desire to humble ourselves before thee, on account of our sins of the past day, of thought, of word, and of deed; we beseech thee to look in mercy upon us, cause thy countenance yet to shine upon us, and we shall be saved. We bless thy name for thy word, which thou hast given us for a light unto our feet, and a lamp unto our path. O incline our hearts ever so to adopt it; and when at any time dubious paths may perplex the mind, may we turn to this guide, and in its faithful counsels trace the path of duty; may we see written, even as with a sunbeam, This is the way, walk ye in it. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? In the blindness of their hearts men have sought to pervert it, even to wrest the scripture to the ruin of souls; do thou dispel the mists of human prejudice and error by which it may ever be attempted to darken it, and through thy grace may we be enabled to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. May thy law be our delight. Like thy servant of old, may we be able to say of thy testimonies, More to be desired are they than gold; yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honey comb. Our times are in thy hand, thou numberest the days of our generations here; by the more awful dispensations of thy providence, or in the silent course of ordinary nature, we are speedily removed from this earthly scene, and the place that knoweth us now, knows us no more. Impress our minds, O Lord, with a becoming sense of the shortness and uncertainty of the period of our present being, that we may not crowd its little span with those things that are displeasing in thy sight, and which will be recorded in awful characters against us in heaven. May thy judgments which have been abroad in the earth, touch our hearts, and lead us, in this our day to seek for the things which belong to our peace, before they be for ever hid from our eyes. Leave us not, O God, unto ourselves; we have to mourn over the power of depravity within us, a law in our members which warreth against the law of our mind. O give us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord; dethrone the god of this world in our souls, and reign thyself there, to the bringing every thought, and feeling, and desire into captivity to the love of Christ. In the service of sin, which thou hatest, may we never seek for our happiness; save us from the fatal influence of those who would persuade us to seek it in such a source; and if we have been favoured ever to taste, even in smallest measure, the comfort of thy service and the joys of the Spirit, O suffer us not again to be entangled in the yoke of bondage; to be found in the dark scenes of earthly pollution. But may our path be as that of the sun when he goeth forth in his strength, shining more and more unto the perfect day; may our evidences become clearer both unto ourselves and to others, that thy glory is our object, and that heaven is our end. Watch over us during the silence of the coming night; spare us to see the light of a new day, and to enter upon its duties. May we rise to engage in them in the fear of the Lord, to maintain a witness for thee. Hear us in the Son of thy love, and accept of us for his sake.

TUESDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—JOEL II.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—12. In language highly figurative, and of great sublimity, the prophet continues his description of the coming desolation, and speaks of the feeling of utter dismay and horror with which it would possess the whole inhabitants of the land. The priests are directed to blow the trumpet in Zion, to proclaim the impending judgment, that all classes might humble themselves, and put up their prayers that the Lord would either modify or avert it. And if in respect of temporal calamity the priests were directed to sound an alarm, to call unto repentance and humiliation, how much more does it become ministers of the Lord, now, and in all time, to cry aloud nor spare, but to lift up their voice like a trumpet, and give warning of a future day of vengeance, with all earnestness to entreat sinners to flee from 'the wrath to come.' Ver. 12—15. In these verses the prophet exhorts again to fasting and humiliation, and declares the spirit in which these exercises are to be gone about. In the immediately succeeding verses he renews his exhortations to this duty, and with yet greater earnestness than ever. The priests, the ministers of the Lord, are called upon again to sound an alarm, to sanctify a fast; and there is a more minute description than in any preceding passage of those who are to join in it. Infants sucking the breast, even are mentioned; their parents were to bring them along with them into the courts of the temple, in order that their own feelings might be more deeply affected with the thought of the privations and sufferings in which their helpless offspring might be involved; the bridegroom, also, was directed to leave his chamber, and the bride to go forth of her closet; all other interests whatsoever were to be suspended in order that the whole people might unite in the exercises of humiliation and prayer. There is something solemn and affecting in all this. Ver. 18, 21, 27. The promise is held forth that the Lord will be entreated for, and pity his people; that he will not permit them to be a perpetual reproach: and there is no doubt that the prayers of the faithful will ever come up with acceptance to heaven; and for the sake of the remnant of such in any land, the Almighty often tempers his judgments, and in his good time removes them wholly; the tares are not rooted up lest the wheat should be destroyed with them. Large promise even is given of returning plenty, and Zion's children are directed to rejoice in the Lord because of it, with thankfulness to acknowledge the hand whence their deliverance hath come. Ver. 28, 32. The chapter concludes with a most precious and sustaining promise, bearing distinctly upon gospel times, the promise of an abundant out-pouring of the grace of the divine Spirit upon all classes in the latter days. The apostle Peter expressly referred to this promise on the day of Pentecost, and declared its being then in a measure fulfilled in the gift of tongues bestowed upon the twelve. It is still in the course of accomplishment, and we may warrantably look forward to a time when it will be fulfilled on a scale far beyond any thing that has yet been witnessed; and the daily prayer of the believer will rise to heaven, that God in his mercy would hasten it in his time.

PRAYER.

On this morning of a new day we desire, O Lord, to present ourselves before thee; with prayer and thanksgiving, to draw near unto the footstool of thy throne. Who shall not fear thee, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? We have heard with our ears; the writings of the fathers have told us, what wonderful works thou didst in their days. Truly thou hast an arm that is full of power, strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand; thou art clothed with honour and with majesty; clouds and darkness are round about thee, righteousness and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. We are unworthy to come into thy presence. O that we may feel our unworthiness, and be enabled in drawing near to rend our hearts in true contri-tion before thee, with godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of; to mourn over own backslidings. Times and ways without number, O Lord, we have forgotten thee; we have wandered upon the mountains of sin and vanity, and the God in whose hand our breath is, have we not glorified. We have to lament sin committed, and duties omitted, opportunities lost in which we might have witnessed more faithfully for thee, and more resolutely maintained thy cause. O be merciful unto us, and pardon our iniquity, for it is great; far as we have wandered, and grievously as we have sinned, do thou yet remember us with favour; visit us with thy salvation, that we may see the good of thy chosen, and rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that we may glory with thine inheritance. We rejoice to know that when thou afflictest, thou afflictest not willingly, but for profit, and that behind the gloom of a present frowning providence there is distinguishable, by the eye of faith, the smile of a heavenly Father's love; great are thy promises of returning favour to thy people when they truly humble themselves under thy chastening hand. O give us a sanctified use of all thy dispensations; make them instrumental in bringing us nearer to thyself, in subduing the enmity of our hearts, and leading us to set our affections upon those things which are above, whence we look for thy coming. Help us to maintain upon our souls an expectation of thy coming, and to cultivate a preparedness and meetness for it. May we remember that we have no continuing city here, but are pilgrims and strangers on the earth, as were all our fathers; may we seek ever to possess the feelings of pilgrims; and by the whole tone of our life and conversation declare plainly that we seek a country, even an heavenly. We bless thy name that we are able, in full assurance of faith, to look forward unto a time of great spiritual refreshing from thy presence. We humbly pray thee for a measure of this blessing now, and that our souls may be thus visited individually. Quicken us, Lord, yet more to thy love; may our desire be yet more toward thy service and our aim yet more for thy glory. Revive thy work in our neighbourhood, and in this family, and throughout the earth may thy kingdom come. Direct and be with us this day; may we be faithful in all things to thy cause, remembering the vows which we have left at thine altar. Accept of us, and vouchsafe unto us an answer in peace, for the Lord Jesus' sake, Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXII. 11.

SCRIPTURE—2 PETER III.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. The apostle declares in these verses, as in another part of this epistle, chap. i. 12, 13, that his purpose in writing it was more to enforce upon the minds of the brethren the truths which they knew, the doctrines in which they had already been instructed, than to bring before them any new or farther revelations. He proceeds to give warning, ver. 3—5, of corruptions that would prevail in the latter days, of the spirit of infidelity which would especially appear, of the springing up of a class of men walking after their own lusts; who in order that they might indulge these lusts with a greater feeling of security, would attack the very foundations of religion, and by means of scoffing and ridicule strive to bear down its most solemn truths. He declares how they would especially deride the doctrine of the Lord's second coming to judgment.

Ver. 7. In regard to the second and final destruction of the world, the apostle intimates here that other parts of scriptures also confirm that it will be effected through the agency of fire; that the material heavens which we behold, and the earth also upon which we dwell, shall be burnt up at last before the great and awful day of the Lord come. Ver. 8—11. Here we are reminded that the ordinary divisions of time which obtain among men are as nothing in respect of that eternity with which all the purposes of God are connected, and that it becomes us to take this into account when we should ever think that the fulfilment of the divine promises is delayed. What seems delay unto us, and on account of which perhaps we may even feel impatience, we may rest assured is according to the purpose and mind of the Eternal. Delay of the divine judgments is ascribed to the long suffering of God, who delighteth not in the death of the sinner, but rather that he would turn from his sin and live. Ver. 10—13. But we are reminded immediately that a day of vengeance, and of destruction of the whole frame of the universe, will come. O let us remember that the day of our death will be the same unto us as the day when these awful convulsions shall be; and since it is alike uncertain to all, let us take home the appeal of the apostle: 'Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness.' Ver. 13. Our thoughts are directed next to that new and more glorious scene of things which shall be called into existence immediately after the present frame of the universe shall have been dissolved. Ver. 14. In the prospect of these glories, the apostle exhorts again to diligence in the use of the means of grace, that so believers may be found of the Lord without spot at his coming, and farther to account the divine long-suffering, the lengthening out unto them of opportunities of salvation to be the very mean of preparing them for glory and felicity. Ver. 15, 16. In terms of much affection and tenderness he next refers to his fellow-labourer in the Lord, the apostle of the Gentiles, and notes a peculiarity in his epistles. The writings of St Paul perhaps enter more into the deep things of God than other parts of scripture; but if there were no mysteries in the bible, it would want one important proof of being a revelation from heaven. Let us beware of wresting any part of it. Ver. 17, 18. After the solemn truths which the apostle had delivered, he closes his epistle with an exhortation to steadfastness and growth in grace. We should bear ever in mind that the Christian state is one of growth or progress; there is no standing still in it. If we are not making attainment in spirituality and heavenly-mindedness, we may rest assured that we are falling back, that the enemy of our souls is gaining upon us.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we desire this evening to bow ourselves before thee; with the humble confidence of children to draw near in the service of adoration and praise. We adore thee as the self-existent Jehovah who art from everlasting to everlasting, who sittest upon the throne of the universe, and rulest the affairs of all worlds. One day is with thee as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day; when thou hast proposed, none can disannul it; when thou hast stretched forth thine arm, none can turn it back. We are of few days; as a flower we come forth and are cut down, our life flieth as a shadow, and there is none abiding. Every thing connected with our existence here is transient and perishing; thy word assures us that even the heavens which we behold shall vanish away as the cloud that covers them, and that the earth on which we tread shall dissolve like a morning-dream; that they who dwell therein shall die in like manner. We believe these solemn revelations. O may they possess over us a constraining influence; may they lead us to moderate our anxieties after the treasures of earth; to strive to sit lightly to all mere worldly joys or sorrows, and with increasing desire to seek for an inheritance and portion in heaven. Thou hast veiled in solemn mystery, from all created beings, the time of thy second coming; and hast concealed in mercy from us the period when our frail bodies shall return to the dust whence they were taken, and our souls pass upward to judgment. Through weakness of our flesh we could not bear the disclosures, yet, O may the uncertainty which hangs over an issue so momentous, lead us to watch and be sober, so as this day may not come upon us unawares. In whatever our hand findeth to do may we be diligent, that when the Lord cometh we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. Help us to keep our eyes steadily fixed on the promised glories of immortality, amid the troubles of life to remember that there remaineth a rest for the people of God, and under the discouragements in thy service to take comfort from the assurance that in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Regard us individually as worshippers before thee; enlighten what is dark within us, quicken what is dead to thy love, confirm what is wavering, and enable us to follow on yet more to know the Lord, to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. We pray for those with whom we are more immediately connected, kindred and friends, may their souls prosper. We pray for all our brethren of the world; may thy word have free course, and be glorified; may the Redeemer see largely of the travail of his soul. Take us this night under thy divine protection; grant us in thy great mercy to rest in peace, and to rise in comfort, with our bodies invigorated, and our souls refreshed from on high; may we be permitted to enter upon the duties and trials of a new day. Hear us in the Beloved, and accept of us for his sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CII. 13.

SCRIPTURE—JOEL III.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—8. In the close of the former chapter, the prophet had foretold the judgments, which after the introduction of the gospel, were to be executed on the unbelieving Jews. In prophetic vision, his mind is carried over the many dark centuries, during which the chosen people were to be scattered and oppressed, to the time of their glorious restoration. He notices the various indignities and cruelties which in various ages the Jewish people have suffered at the hands of their enemies; their children bartered as the price of the basest pleasures; their sacred things dedicated to the service of idols; and themselves removed into captivity far from their border. God will 'swiftly' recompense their oppressors. 'He was but a little angry, and they helped forward the affliction.' Even in their state of dispersion and degradation, the seed of Israel are still 'beloved for the fathers' sakes.' God's judgments have accordingly been signally executed already upon various nations which have oppressed his people. But the particular prediction now before us remains yet unfulfilled.

Let us here learn the guilt and danger of oppression. 'He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy.' Especially, when exercised against the people of God, 'he that toucheth them toucheth the apple of his eye.' Observe also the origin of this sin; man even in his fallen state has seldom any delight in cruelty for its own sake; it springs from lust, the lust of power, of money, of pleasure. 'Whence come wars and fightings among you?' 'Even from your lusts;' let us crucify our lusts, and thus we shall strike at 'the root of all evil.'

Ver. 9—17. These verses present us with a sublime view of the conflict in which the enemies of God's cause and people are finally to be overthrown. They are first summoned to prepare for war, as it were once for all to try their strength against the Almighty. It will be a season of alarm and trial to the righteous; but as in the time of Jehoshaphat, 'the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel.' The combination of the wicked against God's design having issued in their utter destruction, will only prove the means of ushering in the glorious establishment of righteousness in the earth. Parallel predictions will be found in Isaiah lxvi. 15, to the end; Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix.; Zech. xiv. 12, to the end. But when Israel's blindness shall be removed, 'the fullness of the Gentiles' shall also 'come in.' Accordingly, we find events corresponding to those here set before the nation of Israel foretold also with reference to the church at large, Rev. xi.; xiv. 14—20; xvi. 13—16; xix. 11, to the end, compared with xx. 1—3.

The 1260 years, repeatedly fixed in prophecy as the period of Antichrist's reign, is now, perhaps, drawing to a close, and about the time of its expiry these grand events will begin to be fulfilled. Let us watch against specious and prevailing errors, and take heed that we be found on the Lord's side. Having God's sure testimonies for our guide, we can afford to despise the vain pretensions of what is called the spirit of the age; which, it appears, will prove in the end a spirit of desperate hostility to divine truth. Let us 'keep the word of Christ's patience, and he will keep us from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.'

Ver. 18—21. God's outcast people, now gathered from the heathen, and freed from the intrusion of aliens and uncircumcised, shall dwell safely, rejoicing in the blessings of Messiah's reign; while the life-giving streams of salvation will go forth from the house of the Lord, to bless the desert places of the earth. In the effects of God's judgments on their enemies, the chosen people will have a perpetual memorial of their interest in the covenant-protection of an Almighty arm; and in the presence and blessing of Him who dwelleth in Zion, they will have a joyful pledge that the 'blood' which their fathers shed on Calvary has at length been 'cleansed.'

May we be found waiting for Christ's coming, keeping our garments undefiled, that we may be accounted meet, in the possession of such joys as these, to live and reign with him, whether on earth or in heaven.

PRAYER.

O thou supreme Creator, and most righteous Governor of the universe, who doest according to thy will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, we adore thy majesty, we stand in awe before thy mighty power. Thou seest and declarest the end from the beginning, and orderest all events for the furtherance of thy glory, and for the good of thine Israel. We would trust in thy providence; we would rest in thy promises; we would wait and pray for the coming of thy kingdom, and for the establishment and consolation of thy redeemed people. We beseech thee, O Lord, to look in mercy on thine ancient and outcast people. Rebuke and turn the hearts of their persecutors; especially deliver them from the bondage of a hardened and unbelieving mind, and set them again in their own land, that they may declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem; that the heathen may fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth his glory. O thou who hast purchased thy church with thine own blood, do thou protect, and guide, and sustain, and abundantly bless thy believing people of every name. Keep them from the evil that is in the world. Enable them to glorify thee by their faithful testimony for thy truth, and their holy and unblameable conversation. Prepare them for the trials that are to come upon the earth. Shorten the times of tribulation, and hasten the universal prevalence of righteousness, and truth, and peace. Be pleased speedily to remove every obstacle to the progress of thy work. Let Zion's watchmen see eye to eye. Grant a spirit of love, and of power, and of a sound mind, to thy weak and distracted church. Let not Ephraim envy Judah, or Judah vex Ephraim, but let them join in withstanding thine enemies and their own. Bruise Satan under thy people's feet. Defeat his rage. Turn his craft into foolishness. Expose the delusions of Antichrist. Consume that Man of sin by the breath of thy mouth, and the brightness of thy coming, and let there be no enemy to hurt or to offend in all thy holy mountain. We give thee united thanks for the rest of the night, and for the renewed tokens of thy bountiful kindness with the opening of a new day. Enable us to glorify thee in thine undeserved gifts. O let thy good hand be upon us for good this day. Suffer us not to be moved from our fidelity to thee. Keep us from all outward, and from all spiritual ill, and preserve us even to thy heavenly kingdom, for Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXVIII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—1 JOHN I.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—4. The apostle John commences this epistle, as he does also his Gospel, by declaring Christ the Word of Life, his eternal Godhead, and is real manhood. This is the 'great mystery of godliness—God manifest in the flesh.' It is besides the only foundation of true godliness, and therefore the apostle is careful to present it to Christians as the motive of every duty, and the ground of all holy joy. He declares this truth as having been himself a witness of it. To him and the other apostles, the Word of Life was specially manifested. As respected his body, they looked upon him with their eyes, and their hands handled him. As regarded his divine nature, they beheld his glory—the glory as of the only begotten of the Father. What they had seen and heard, they now declared, for no selfish ends, either for the gratification of a vain curiosity in others, but that others might be joined with themselves in holy fellowship with God and with Christ. How grand and benevolent the design! Through all mankind have lost communion with God, and have thus fallen into an estate of misery. Through the knowledge of the divine Redeemer, those who are afar off are made nigh to God by the blood of Jesus, and in this gracious change they attain to a pure, a full, and an unchangeable joy. It appears then that they only know the gospel message aright, who have tasted this blessed fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.

Ver. 5—7. The apostle having announced a message of mercy, next proceeds to guard it from abuse. With views of infinite mercy, Jesus Christ had come to make known God; but he had made him known as a holy God, not only 'love' but 'light,' in whom is 'no darkness at all.' The sinner then, who walks in darkness, can have no fellowship with God. On the other hand, if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we shall receive ever-increasing tokens of the divine favour and blessing, being advanced in all the graces and privileges of the Christian life. The Spirit of God delights to apply the precious blood of Christ, in all its peace-speaking and sanctifying power, to a soul which is separating itself from the unclean thing, and seeking to be purified as a temple of the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 8—10. The apostle next shows how this blessedness is to be acquired and maintained. To be thus exalted by God, we must ever humble ourselves. From the beginning of our Christian course to the end of it, we are to lie low under a conviction of our sinfulness, and by the confession of our bygone and our daily repeated offences, seek the renewed application of Christ's saving blood. 'The whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick.' The gracious Saviour will leave the proud and self-satisfied to perish in the 'filthy rags' of which they boast. How encouraging to the convinced and anxious inquirer, to be assured that the very confession of his sin, and the mere complaint of his misery, will procure for him the Almighty deliverance which he needs.

PRAYER.

O thou Almighty and most glorious Father, thou eternal Life, who givest life to thy creatures, and thyself derivate it from none; thou uncreated light, in whom is no darkness at all, we, the unworthy creatures of thy hand, would bow before thy footstool in deepest reverence and humility. How shall we find acceptance in thy sight? We are but of yesterday, feeble, ignorant, and wholly dependent on thee, and yet we have sinned; we have wandered far from the most pure light of thy presence; we have walked in darkness, and by our unfruitful works of darkness we have oftentimes provoked thy righteous wrath. Oh! we thank thee that thou hast pitied us in our guilty and miserable estate; that thou hast sent thy dear Son to deliver us, and to restore us to light and life with thyself. Blessed be thy name for the privilege of confessing our sins, and returning to thee as a Father, compassionate and reconciled through the blood of Jesus Christ. Do thou now pity us; accept and heal us, O our Father in heaven. For Jesus' sake, forgive us our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. O thou eternal and most blessed Word, thou only Light and Life of a fallen world, we bless thee for thy designs of love, conceived while in the bosom of the Father, towards the sinful children of men. We praise thee, that in the fullness of time thou didst become manifest in the flesh, submitting to be born of a woman, and to carry our griefs, and to bear our infirmities; especially that thou didst endure an accursed death, that thus becoming sin for us, we might be made the righteousness of God in thee. Let us gladly receive the testimony of them who saw and believed, that we may obtain the blessedness of those who have not seen and yet have believed. For this end send thy Holy Spirit of promise into our hearts. O vouchsafe yet more and more of the gift of thy good Spirit, that we may know thee not only by the hearing of the ear, but in the daily and blessed experience of our souls; that in holy fellowship with thee and with all saints, our joy may be full, and that we may abound in the fruits of righteousness which are to thy praise. We thank thee, O Lord, for thy continued and unmerited goodness; that the outgoings of the morning and the evening are still made to rejoice over us. We commit ourselves, and all who are dear to us, to thy keeping this night. Under a sense of thy blessing, let us lie down and not be afraid, and so our sleep shall be sweet. On a new day may we rise to praise thee, and let goodness and mercy follow us all the days of our life. Look in mercy on all who are in distress. Give them a speedy issue out of their afflictions; meantime be pleased to sustain, to comfort, and to sanctify them. Prepare the dying for their great change. Give them a victory over death, and him who has the power of death, by faith in Jesus. We pray for the good estate of thy church. Do thou purify, and extend, and protect it. God be merciful unto us as a professing people, and bless us, and so his way shall be known upon the earth, and his saving health unto all nations. Hear, and answer, and accept us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM II.

SCRIPTURE—AMOS I.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1. The prophet Amos informs us here, and in another place, that he was an herdsman. He was not furnished with the qualifications of human learning like those trained for their office in the schools of the prophets. We ought to engage every lawful outward means in furthering the knowledge of divine truth; but God acting as a sovereign has often chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, by the extraordinary gifts of his Spirit conferring on them qualifications for their mission far beyond the reach of human labour or skill.

Ver. 2. God dwelt in Zion on a mercy-seat. Yet out of Zion was he to roar when chastening his people, and executing judgment on his enemies. The mercy of a covenant God is not of a kind which excludes, but necessarily supposes his vengeance against sin. 'Behold the goodness and the severity of God.'

Ver. 3—5. Judgments are here threatened against Damascus and the people of Syria, whose capital city it was. The expression, 'three transgressions, and four,' throughout this prophecy, signifies multiplied sins. There is one offence noticed as the special occasion of God's judgments, the perpetration of signal cruelty against the Gileadites, whose country bordered on that of Syria. The conquest and captivity of the Syrians here foretold is recorded in 2 Kings xvi. 9.

Ver. 6—10. A righteous retribution is here denounced against the Philistines, and the people of Tyre. The transgression singled out is the same in the case of both, delivering the captive Israelites into the hands of the Edomites, who, they knew, would treat them with unrelenting severity; aggravated in the latter case by the brotherly covenant esta-lished between Tyre and Israel in the days of Hiram and David. The Jews under Hezekiah, and other nations, were made instrumental in bringing the national existence of the Philistines to an end, and Tyre, whose 'merchants were princes,' was utterly destroyed, successively by the arms of Nebuchadnezzar and Alexander the Great.

Ver. 11—15. The Edomites, the posterity of Esau, and the Ammonites, one of the branches of the children of Lot, are threatened for their inhuman and relentless cruelty towards Israel, on whose borders both nations dwelt. The scriptures mark the implacable rage of Edom against their kinsmen, the children of Israel, at different periods of their history. The righteous retribution, here and in other passages, denounced against both has been signally fulfilled. Edom, once 'blessed with the fatness of the earth, and the dew of heaven from above,' is now 'a desolate wilderness.' Ammon, once fertile and populous, has 'perished out of the countries,' and Rabbah its chief city is 'a stable for camels, and a couching place for flocks.'

By these predictions we are forcibly taught the malignant nature of covetousness. A desire to 'enlarge their border' appears to have been the moving cause of those enormities on the part of the enemies of Israel of which we find the righteous judge thus taking account. Covetousness not only, in common with every inordinate affection, leads to the commission of other sins, but particularly steels the heart against the common feelings of humanity. Let the history of Judas in both views show its accursed fruits.

This passage teaches us farther the doctrine of national responsibility. We see the people and their rulers alike threatened with the vengeance which in their national capacity their enmity to God's people had provoked. The whole of history, sacred and profane, is a commentary on the great principle that nations, having their corporate existence only in this world, receive a temporal retribution in divine providence corresponding to their public character, especially their conduct towards the church and cause of the Redeemer. 'The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.'

Yet, even in regard to nations, he is long-suffering and slow to anger. It was for 'three transgressions, and for four,' that is, for obstinate and persevering wickedness that these judgments were denounced. Thus the reason of the delay in giving possession of the promised land, was that 'the iniquity of the Amorites was not yet full.' Let us not then presume on our national prosperity as a certain token of the divine approbation, lest 'despising the riches of God's goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering,' we should only prove to have treasured up for ourselves wrath against the day of wrath.

PRAYER.

O thou everlasting and unchangeable Sovereign, who rulest in the heavens; and on the earth, and doest whatsoever seemeth thee good; thou art to be adored, and loved, and served, for thou art supremely excellent in thyself, and thy government is directed by unerring wisdom, and perfect rectitude, and boundless goodness. Thou dwellest in Zion, and art there seated on a throne of grace, dispensing blessings to thy humble and believing people. We would desire, as a family, on this morning of a new day, to come to thee with the voice of praise and prayer. O let us partake of the satisfying provision of Zion, and as Zion's children make us joyful in thee our gracious King. Thou hast made reconciliation for iniquity by the death and obedience of thy Son. Thou art very good and merciful to all who come unto thee by Christ. Let us taste of thy grace. O save us by the mighty power of thy Spirit. Thou art terrible, O righteous Father, in thy vengeance against the workers of iniquity. Even out of Zion wilt thou roar against thine enemies. Preserve us from turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and bringing upon ourselves swift destruction. Let us delight to obey thy holy precepts, with fear and trembling may we work out our salvation from the power of sin. We are now about to mingle anew in an evil world. We go forth trusting in thee. O Lord, enable us faithfully to perform its duties, and stedfastly to resist its wickedness. Let us not love the world, nor any evil thing that is in the world. Save us especially from the power of covetousness. Grant us in all our dealings with our fellow-men, a spirit of equity, and meekness, and forbearance, and love, that not by our lips only, but in our lives, we may adorn Christ's doctrine, and show forth his praise. We praise thee for thy distinguished kindness to us as a nation, that in so great a degree we have been exempted from the outward messengers of thy wrath, from the ills of famine, and pestilence, and the sword, especially that thou hast established thy testimony and thy law in the midst of us, and that from the fathers to the children, the message of thy grace is made known. We acknowledge our unfaithfulness, and our many backslidings. We confess that we have even deserved to perish with the nations and kingdoms that have opposed Christ. O grant us, universally, the spirit of repentance and fidelity to thee. Let our earthly sovereign rule in thy fear. Let all who are in authority over us be subject unto the Lord Jesus Christ, that we, under them, may lead quiet, and peaceable, and godly lives, and that glory may dwell in our land. We pray that the kingdom of Christ may speedily extend to all lands. Let all the kings fall down before Messiah, and let all nations serve him; and to thee, O Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, be ascribed the glory, the dominion, and the power, now and for ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXV. 6.

SCRIPTURE—1 JOHN 11.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. The great design of God's word, and of the gospel of Christ, in particular, is that men 'sin not.' Yet if those who are seeking to obey the gospel fall into sin, as 'there is no man who liveth and sinneth not,' it does not leave them to despair, but invites them anew to resort to the satisfying righteousness and prevailing advocacy of the Lord Jesus Christ. The tendency of this is not to encourage sin, but truly the reverse, and it is the neglect of Christ's peace-speaking blood, and his saving offices, to which every instance of continued backsliding is to be traced. Would we ascertain then that we truly know Christ, and are abiding in him, let us simply ask, Are we keeping Christ's commandments? are we walking as he walked?

Ver. 7—11. Neither our Lord himself, nor his apostles, addressed to Christians any moral precept which was absolutely new. The gospel, however, more expressly and more powerfully enforces the law of love than the old dispensation did. Each of the ten commandments, given from Sinai, was indeed only a particular application of this one great commandment. The gospel, however, plainly exhibits the love of God, and of man, as the sum of all holiness, and furnishes the most powerful motive to the cultivation of holy love in the example of Christ's unspeakable love to ourselves. Do we cherish hatred towards a single fellow-being, even our greatest enemy? It is enough to prove us strangers to the saving power of the gospel, not less than to the mind that was in Christ.

Ver. 12—14. The apostle addresses himself to the Christian experience of believers according to their several circumstances and stages of advancement in the divine life, that from a sense of what God has already wrought for each of them personally, they may be stirred up to a right improvement of his exhortations. Are we only as little children, beginning our Christian course, having recently begun to taste the blessedness of a pardoned state, and of knowing God as our reconciled 'Father?' or as young men have we made some progress in the faith, having withstood the fiery trials of the world? or are we fathers in the church of God, having long been growing in knowledge of the mystery of Christ as the life and comfort of our souls? In each case we have strong and peculiar inducements to give ear to the lessons of heavenly truth, that we may enjoy increasing experience of the blessedness which it offers, and to a measure of which we have already attained.

Ver. 15—17. The apostle warns us against the love of the world, meaning by this apparently not the world as created by God, which we are only forbidden to love inordinately, but the world as distinguished from the church, the evil world, the friendship of which is enmity with God. 'All that is in the world,' the principles by which it is governed, are evil and ungodly, whether the lust of the flesh, seeking the indulgence of the appetites, the lust of the eyes directed to the unbounded accumulation of wealth, or the pride of life, ever thirsting for the vain aggrandizement of the world; and what is there 'in the world' to entice our hearts from God? These passions and the objects which gratify them, must alike utterly fade and perish, and leave their votaries in helpless and endless destitution. Be it thine, O my soul, to love God, and to do his will, that when my flesh and my heart, together with every earthly good, shall fail, he may be the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

Ver. 18—29. The present epistle was written towards the close of the Jewish commonwealth, when Jesus had foretold that many false teachers should arise. As they had heard that one grand antichristian delusion should appear before the end of time, the apostle calls them to observe that even at the present great crisis of the history of the church, only second in importance to that, there were many antichrists. The term, both in its special and more general meaning, is applied to a false teacher arising out of the church itself, or professing the Christian name, and yet craftily subverting the saving doctrines of the gospel. In the times on which our lot has fallen, we have special need to seek an unction from the Holy One, that we may be kept from the wiles of antichristian deceivers. Let us not forget that one mark by which it is ever profitable to be proving our stedfastness in the faith of Jesus: 'If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.'

PRAYER.

We desire again, O Almighty Father, to come into thy most holy presence, and to spread before thee our returning wants. Let our prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the evening sacrifice. We have, anew, to profess our short-comings and our offences. Our own hearts condemn us, and thou art greater than our hearts. How much more then are we condemned in thy pure sight? We feel our constant need to have recourse to that fountain which thou hast opened for sin and for uncleanness. Forgive, for Jesus' sake, whatever thou hast seen amiss in our temper and conduct during the past day. Speak peace to our souls by the blood of Jesus. Wash us from all our filthiness, and let us lie down in such a frame of mind that should we never wake again in this world, we may be meet for waking in thy presence, and beholding thy face in righteousness. If thou shalt be pleased to spare us to a new day, suffer us not to turn again unto folly. Enable us to value the lengthening out of our days only that we may grow in grace, and finish thy work. Cause us, O Lord, to grow in holy love. Deliver us from the power of all selfish passions, and let us walk towards all men after the example of Christ's unspeakable love to us. Save us from the love of this present evil world. Teach us the insufficiency of every worldly joy, and the ungodliness of every worldly lust, that when the world and the lust thereof shall have passed away, we may find an abiding portion in thy favour. O save us from the wiles of antichristian deceivers. Grant us an unction from the Holy One, that we may know the truth and cleave to it, and that, abiding in thy holy truth, we may abide in the Son and in the Father. We would bear the necessities of our brethren on our spirits at thy footstool. Be the friend of our friends. Reward our benefactors. Forgive our enemies if we have any, and grant us hearts also to forgive them, as we seek forgiveness from thee. Do good unto them that are good. Pity and reclaim all who are out of the way. Have compassion on the multitudes who are sitting in darkness and the shadow of death. Let all nations be blessed in Jesus, and let all nations call him blessed. Pour out thy Spirit abundantly on the parish and congregation to which we belong. Give increasing wisdom, and fidelity, and strength to thy servant who is over us in the Lord, and and to all who are called to labour in thy work. Prosper them greatly in their faithful labours, and let the souls of thine elect be speedily gathered in, and the praise and the glory shall be thine own, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XCII. 7—10.

SCRIPTURE—AMOS IV.

REMARKS.

'The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked.' Lamentable evidence of this truth is contained in the present chapter. The wickedness of the people of Israel appears in the prevalence of oppression. Ver. 1—3. Proud and wanton, like the unruly kine that fed on Bashan, they cruelly oppressed the poor and crushed the weak. But the cry of the needy, though unheeded by man, came up before God; and with an oath sanctioned by His holiness, he declares that their wrongs shall be requited. Let those whom providence has entrusted with power over their fellowcreatures, remember that God, who is no respecter of persons, will visit inhumanity and injustice with righteous retribution. Ver. 4, 5. There is poignant irony in these words, emphatically expressing the divine displeasure. The depravity of the heart is only equalled by its deceitfulness. While Israel perpetrated these enormities, they sought, by the number and costliness of their sacrifices, to quiet the conscience and to propitiate God. Let us beware of that artifice by which Satan would lead us to repose in formal services, as a substitute for duties neglected and as a peace-offering for sins committed. Often has the arrow of conviction been thus loaded, and spiritual apathy induced. The children of the light may here learn a lesson from the children of this world. Do not the liberal gifts of the latter, upon the shrine of an unworthy object, speak reproach to Christians who grudge a scanty portion of their substance to the true service of God?

Ver. 6—11. It indicates a reprobate mind when severe and successive judgments fail to humble and correct; when again and again, God is constrained to say, 'Yet have ye not returned unto me.' The famine and the sword had been employed in vain to reclaim abandoned Israel. May the chastenings of the Lord ever be sanctified and improved; for, if despised, they will harden our hearts and aggravate our guilt! They who resist correction, may provoke God to cut them off in their impenitence; or by withdrawing his Holy Spirit, to let them alone. 'Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will revolt more and more.'

Ver. 12, 13. What words can express the folly of resisting the Lord! The God of hosts is his name. Let these sublime discoveries of his almighty power and heart-searching knowledge, which prove that he can neither be deceived nor opposed, persuade the sinner to comply with the invitation, 'Prepare to meet thy God.' Temporal judgments may be impending over us, as over Israel, fraught with desolation. This we know, that the day of the Lord cometh when we must meet him as our judge. He is now ready to meet with us in his ordinances, in his word, at a throne of grace, dispensing pardon, peace and eternal life. In these let us wait upon him in faith and penitence. In conclusion, there is one, and only one way, in which here or hereafter, we can meet him with acceptance. 'Jesus saith, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me.' 'And a man shall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of waters in a dry place; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.'

PRAYER.

O Lord God of hosts, we adore thee as almighty, all-wise, and most holy, the maker and preserver of all. Give us grace to worship thee with sincerity and truth, for thou knowest and declarest to man what is his thought. May we be humbled under the affecting record which thy word contains of the deceit and depravity of our hearts. Thy grace alone restrains us from the excesses which provoked thine anger against thine ancient people. Our presumptuous sins and secret faults might justly have moved thee to visit us with thy judgments, and cast us utterly away. Even in our offerings, and sacrifices, and solemn assemblies, we multiply transgression. Yet, O Lord, in the midst of deserved judgments, thou still rememberest mercy. Thou hast passed by before us, and proclaimed thy name, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth. For thy name's sake pardon our iniquities, for they are very great. We plead the unchanging promise of the new covenant, I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Create also within us a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within us. Cast us not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from us. May the fruits of that Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, be matured in our hearts, and exhibited in our lives. As thou hast appointed a day in which thou wilt judge the world in righteousness by that Man whom thou hast ordained, may we give all diligence to prepare to meet our God. Increase our faith, and bring us more powerfully and habitually under the influence of things unseen and eternal. The life which we now live in the flesh, may we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and gave himself for us. Impress us deeply with the shortness and uncertainty of life; and seeing that all earthly things must soon be dissolved, may we, in all holy conversation and godliness, be looking and preparing for the coming of the day of God. We thank thee for the gifts and mercies of thy providence. How great is the sum of them! if we would count them, they are more than the sand; when we awake we are still with thee. We have laid us down and slept; we have awaked; for the Lord sustained us. Thy mercies and compassions are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness. May goodness and mercy follow us during this day, spreading a table for us in the wilderness, delivering us from dangers and temptations, and strengthening us for all duties. Be the portion of our kindred, and adopt them into that family whose members Christ will own for his brethren. Be the refuge of the afflicted, and may tribulation yield to them the peaceable fruits of righteousness. Bless the church of Christ with peace and prosperity; upon all its members may the Lord command the blessing, even life for evermore. May the dispersed of Israel soon be gathered in;

for thou hast promised to bring thy seed from the east, and to gather them from the west; to say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth. Let thy kingdom come, when all the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE LXIII.

SCRIPTURE—1 JOHN III.

REMARKS.

The contents of this chapter may be comprehended under three heads, viz. the exalted privilege of believers as the sons of God; the evidences of that filial relation, arising from a holy life and love to the brethren; and the blessed result of assurance toward God.

Ver. 1, 2. Astonishing condescension! love passing knowledge! that the children of disobedience and wrath, rebels against God, and covered with moral pollution, should be received into an alliance so exalted and endearing. Yet this honour have all the saints. Nor let their gratitude and joy be abated because an unconverted world neither know nor value this privilege. This might only be expected, since God's eternal Son came into the world and it knew him not. We may be poor, unknown, despised; but now are we the sons of God. Even in this life are we partakers of a divine nature and image, blessed with the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father, and invested with an inalienable title to the inheritance of sons. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor heart conceived the full blessedness of this inheritance. But this we know, that the glorious moral image of God, lost at the fall, and now but partially restored, shall then be perfected, and shine with undimmed lustre. Mark the cause of this complete conformity, 'We shall see him as he is.' Even here, beholding as in a glass darkly the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image from glory to glory; and that transformation shall be perfected when faith is changed into sight. What are the marks, O my soul, by which thou mayest know that this exalted privilege is thine? The apostle proceeds to state them from the 3d to the 10th verse. These are clear marks: may they be clearly inscribed on our character and life.

Ver. 11—18. As the first and great command is supreme love to God, the second is like unto it, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself;' and the latter branch of the law, the apostle now enforces by various motives. What a fearful proof of the effects of malice is presented in Cain, who, stung by envy, slew his brother; a bloody beacon to all ages of the crimes to which hatred may hurry us, and an example of the enmity which ever actuates the seed of the serpent. It is an appalling thought, that in the eye of him who seeth not as man seeth, harboured malice is murder in the heart, 'Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer.' Ye who deem resentment essential to honourable character, and are quick to sacrifice your own or another's life upon the altar of revenge, what claim have you to be called the sons of God? The usages of man, however sanctioned, cannot alter the holy and eternal law of God. On the contrary, if we at all appreciate the love of Christ in laying down his life for us, or regard him as our great example, we shall acquiesce in the apostle's statement, that 'we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.' But if mutual love ought to reach this high devotedness, how far do they come short who shut their sympathies against the destitute, and who substitute empty expressions for the deeds of Christian kindness.

Ver. 19—24. Where these precious evidences exist, they bring with them their own reward. 'Hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before God.' If conscience testify against us, let us not expect to impose on him who knows our state of heart more thoroughly than we can do. 'Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.' But if, amidst confessed and lamented infirmities, conscience, enlightened and unbiassed, shall bear testimony to these evidences in us, we shall enjoy a humble yet undoubting confidence toward God. 'Judge me, O Lord, for I have walked in mine integrity.' One happy effect will be, filial assurance in our pleadings at a throne of grace. To keep his commandments indeed, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, can never form our plea for favour; but they evince a reconciled state, in which the Father of lights will deny us no good gift. To believe in Christ and to love the brethren, are here presented as the sum of the divine commandments. Happy they, who by the spirit and dispositions graciously given to them, possess assured evidence that they truly have fellowship with God, and that he resides in them as his chosen temples!

PRAYER.

O righteous and eternal God! in thy free and sovereign grace receive us as thy children, and impart to us a filial spirit, that with all liberty we may have access to thee as our Father in heaven. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hast predestinated us unto the adoption of children, according to the good pleasure of thy will. Everlasting praise be unto thee, O Saviour, who givest power to such as believe on thy name to become the sons of God. And we magnify thee, O divine and most gracious Spirit, who by thine inhabitation bearest witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. Adored be thy name that we, who were the children of disobedience and wrath, have been translated into thy family and become heirs of glory. Make us sensible that we were by nature even as others, guilty and polluted, and that all our privileges and prospects redound to the praise of the glory of thy grace, wherein thou hast made us accepted in the Beloved. May the hope set before us exert a hallowed and purifying influence upon our souls, transforming us more and more into the holy and beautiful image of Jesus. Enable us to abide in him, and then shall we glorify thee our Father, by bringing forth much fruit unto righteousness. The Lord make us to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men. Of the abundance with which thou blestest us, make us willing to communicate to the wants of others; imbue us deeply with that love which moved the Redeemer to lay down his life for us. Seal us with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession. Preserve us, O God, from temptations, corruption, and grievous sins which wound the conscience, lest we grieve thy Holy Spirit. We thy children are weak, dependent, and ignorant; O our Father instruct, protect, and provide for us. Chasten us for our profit, that we may be partakers of thy holiness; and let us not despise thy chastenings, nor faint when we are rebuked of thee. We pray that the heathen and all families of the earth may soon know and call upon thy name, and that all kindreds of the nations may worship before thee as a reconciled Father. May the country to which we belong be a land wherein dwelleth righteousness. Unite our relatives to thyself as thy children by adoption. May the afflicted know that thou chastenest because thou lovest them, and thus possess their souls in patience. In thy pity, O Father, forgive the sins of this day, and make us grateful for its mercies. Keep us this night, for thou neither slumberest nor sleepest; and let our sleep be sweet and refreshing. If the Lord will, may we awake in health and peace, to devote our preserved lives to his service. Let our prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the evening sacrifice, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—AMOS v.

REMARKS.

So slow are we of heart to believe what God reveals, that precept must be upon precept, and line upon line. The house of Israel is again called upon to hear a message from the Lord, similar to that addressed to them in the preceding chapter. As the things written aforetime were written for our learning, let us meditate upon these verses with faithful self-application.

Ver. 1. The sins of Israel are asserted, and set before them. Idolatry had supplanted the pure worship of the true God. Bethel, Gilgal, and Beersheba, places famed in Israel's history, were now desecrated with strange gods and rites. Equal justice was perverted, for they turned judgment to wormwood, and righteousness was left off. The poor were oppressed by fraud and extortion at the very gate where justice was professedly administered. Faithful reproof from the word, or the messengers of God, was abhorred in these evil times; till the prudent kept silence, finding it both dangerous and fruitless to lift their warning testimony. They are charged with multiplied sins; 'I know your manifold transgressions.' And who among us can plead guiltless to the same charge?

Ver. 2. They are forewarned of impending desolations. There is an unfailing connection between sin and misery. Heavy judgments ever follow great degeneracy or corruption, whether national or individual. The sword was soon to desolate the land, till only a tenth part of its inhabitants should be left in Israel. The ruthless hand of rapine, armed to execute the divine vengeance, would despoil Gilgal and Bethel, which had been enriched with so many costly offerings. The stranger would destroy or occupy the stately dwellings which they had raised, and eat the fruit of the vineyards which they had planted. The anger of God, like a consuming fire, would scathe and devour the entire house of Joseph. The voice of lamentation and wailing would be heard through the land. Let these terrible calamities which the sins of Israel provoked, remind us of the woes which await the finally impenitent.

Ver. 3. God declares that he would not accept the show and form of devotion which they maintained, while they lived in the practice of flagrant iniquity. Their festivals, sacrifices, and solemn assemblies were hateful in his sight, as hypocrisy ever must be to him upon whom the most artful semblance cannot impose, and whose claim upon every worshipper is, 'My son, give me thy heart.' During many years of Israel's sojourn in the wilderness, their sacrifices and offerings were interrupted and omitted; but as this arose from necessary causes, no censure was attached. Hence follow two important truths. When by the restraints of providence the external services of religion cannot be observed, no blame will be imputed; the aged or infirm, debarred from the sanctuary and table of the Lord, may in their solitude hold communion with an ever-present God, and be accepted. On the other hand, we may stately frequent the place of prayer, and punctually honour all his ordinances; but if, like Israel, we regard iniquity in our hearts, and stain our hands with sin, our sacrifice is an abomination in his sight. Beware, O my soul, lest perfunctory services secretly supplant the power and practice of godliness.

Ver. 4. They are repeatedly exhorted in this chapter to seek the Lord. The idols whom they had served were lying vanities, which could neither satisfy nor save the worshipper. If we have forsaken our own mercies, and idolatrously made the creature our portion and our God, let us henceforth seek the Lord, inquiring into his will, and supplicating his favour. He who established, and sustains the ordinances of nature can alone avert the judgments which sin provokes. Hating the evil, and loving the good, let us cultivate that integrity which is here commended to Israel. Then may we humbly plead his own promise, 'Ye shall live.'

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord of hosts! the whole earth is full of thy glory. Wherewith shall we come before the Lord, and bow ourselves before the high God? If thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Thou knowest our manifold iniquities and grievous sins; they are more than the hairs of our head; they have been done against clear light, against many mercies, and against the motions and strivings of thy Holy Spirit. We have sinfully given that glory to the creature which was due to thee, the ever-blessed Creator. We have not done justly, nor loved mercy, nor walked humbly with our God. If thou hadst laid judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, we had been found altogether perverse. O most merciful God, no sacrifices which we can offer, can atone for sin; enable us to look with faith and penitence to the great sacrifice once offered upon the cross, even Jesus. We bless thee that when thou hadst no pleasure in burnt-offerings and sacrifices, he said, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. May he be made of thee unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. Encouraged by thy gracious invitations, we desire to seek thee in the way appointed in thy word. While we seek thee in prayer, be thou found of us. Fulfil unto us thy promise, Ye shall live. Begin in each of us thy good work, and carry it forward unto perfection. Let our minds be filled with spiritual light, and our whole souls with zeal for thy glory. Fulfil in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power. Animated by promises, may we give all diligence to adorn the doctrine of our God and Saviour, by adding to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and charity; for if these things be in us, and abound, they make us that we shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. We pray for the spread and enlargement of the Redeemer's kingdom. May every valley soon be exalted, and every mountain and hill made low, and the crooked made straight, and the rough places made plain. Let thy glory, O Lord, be revealed, and all flesh see it together. We would bear on our spirits before thee, the interests of those to whom we are united by any of the ties of thy providence; enrich them with thy favour, which is life, and with thy loving-kindness, which is better than life; let none of them be wanting when thou makest up thy jewels. Visit, in compassion, the sons and daughters of affliction. According as their day is, such may their strength be. Impart consolation to those who are mourning over the bereavements which death occasions, and enable them to bow before thy holy will. Accept our thanksgiving for the mercies of the past night, and this morning. During this day we commend us to thee, and to the word of thy grace, which is able to build us up, and to give us an inheritance with them that are sanctified. And all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

REMARKS.

Before he left the earth, our Lord thus warned his disciples: 'There shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect; behold, I have told you before.' Ere long the need of this faithful caution became apparent; corrupt teachers and doctrines soon arose, and made havoc in his church. Hence the apostle opens this chapter with the affectionate solemn counsel: 'Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world.' As dangerous errors and seducers from the truth still exist, let us attentively mark how they may be known.

To distinguish the spirits, we are directed to try their doctrines by the infallible word of God. 'To the law, and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.' Especially we are taught, ver. 2, 3, that every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God; and that every spirit not con-ssing this, is not of God, but of antichrist. The divinity of Christ and his incarnation to atone for sin, which are implied in this confession, form the capital pillars of the Christian faith. Where these, with the other truths inseparably connected with them, are maintained, we may infer that the doctrine is of God; where they are denied, the system, however plausible, is of antichrist. So repugnant are the doctrines of the cross to the depraved taste of the natural man, and so grateful are the false doctrines which the great seducer suggests, that our preservation in the truth is ascribed to the interposing power of God. 'Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.' These things are hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes. Spirit of truth! give us renewed hearts, and humble, teachable minds, that we may receive the kingdom of God as little children.

The apostle supplies another test. These false spirits are of the world, speak of it, and are welcomed by it. The doctrine which indulges the lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life, meets with cordial reception in the carnal mind. On the other hand, the doctrines of Christ crucified, staining the glory of man, and enforcing purity of heart, bear the signature of their holy and glorious Author. The opposition which they have experienced might have been expected; that they have ever prevailed, or been received, is a proof that the power of God was with them, honouring them as his own.

With these cautions the apostle returns to his favourite theme. He had leaned upon the bosom of Jesus, and largely imbibed his Spirit of love. He commends mutual affection from its heavenly origin. 'Love is of God;' from its indication of a heavenly disposition, 'every one that loveth is born of God;' and from the amazing manifestation of God's love to us. There is peculiar emphasis in the expression, 'Herein is love.' As the stars, bright though they be, disappear when the sun comes forth, so do the other gifts of God's goodness, however great, appear as nothing when we contemplate this unspeakable display of his love in Christ Jesus. Whether we consider the ineffable love which the Father bore to his only begotten Son, or the deep humiliation and anguish of soul and body which Jesus endured, or the polluted and rebellious character of those whom, with his own consent, he was sent to save, or the generous freeness with which he gave him; we must feel that love like this wants anaine, and passeth knowledge. What more constraining motive can be conceived to commend mutual love? 'Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought to love one another.' God is invisible; but believers are his visible, though imperfect, representations; let the image of God in them attach us to them. Mutual love is thus its own reward, because imparting sweet assurance of our union to God, and communion with him.

PRAYER.

We bless thee, O thou high and holy One who inhabitest eternity, whose name is Holy, that though thou dwellest in the high and holy place, thou dwellest with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and the heart of the contrite ones. For this spirit of humility and contrition we earnestly pray. Open our eyes that we may discern the spirituality of thy law, that we may die to self-righteousness. Pour out upon us a spirit of grace and of supplication, that looking upon him whom we have pierced, we may mourn as one mourneth for an only son, and be in bitterness as one that is in bitterness for his first born. Give us that godly sorrow for sin which worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of. While we mourn over our ingratitude and sinfulness, may thy Spirit enable us to apprehend thy mercy in Christ Jesus. We rejoice to know that in him thou art a just God, and yet a Saviour, and that it is consistent with thy holiness, and conducive to thy glory, freely to dispense that mercy which we need. Adored be thy name, that mercy and truth have met together, that righteousness and peace have kissed each other. We magnify and praise thee for the amazing manifestation of thy love in the gift of thine only begotten Son. Herein is love, not that we loved thee, but that thou lovedst us, and sentest thy Son to be the propitiation for our sins. May we love thee, because thou first lovedst us. And as thou hast so loved us, may we, O Lord, love one another with a pure heart fervently. Blot out, as a thick cloud, our transgressions, and as a cloud, our sins. May thy grace, that bringeth salvation, teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. We pray for the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom throughout the world. May the time, even the set time, to favour Zion, soon arrive. In this neighbourhood, in all parts of our native land, and throughout the habitable earth, may the joyful sound of the gospel be heard; and let it come not in word only, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and with power. We acknowledge with gratitude the goodness and mercy which have attended us during the past day and week. We commend our bodies and spirits to thy guardian care, during the hours of silence and of darkness. Prepare us, and all the household of faith, for the services and privileges of the approaching sabbath. In every tabernacle may there be the voice of joy and health; and on every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and on all her assemblies, may the Lord create a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; and upon all the glory let there be a defence. Now unto him that is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God, our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

FORTY-NINTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXXXVI.

REMARKS.

This psalm bears a striking resemblance to the one immediately preceding it, with this difference, that it is what is called a responsive song, the first part of the verse being sung by the Levites, and the second, or what may be termed the burden, by the people. It is supposed to have been written after the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, and is in itself a noble hymn of thanksgiving, as comprehensive as it is sublime. If we implore the influence of that Spirit who dictated it, and thus have our hearts sanctified and prepared to feel its import, then with something like the inspired poet's enthusiasm, we shall contemplate the great object of his adoration, and with becoming reverence celebrate the power and providence of that Being whose sovereignty is absolute, whose kingdom ruleth over all, and whose 'mercy endureth for ever.' The Psalmist first views Jehovah as the 'God of gods, and the Lord of lords,' supreme and independent, doing according to his will throughout the extent of his vast dominions; for all this excellence is implied in the titles here given to him, and yet 'his mercy endureth for ever.' He 'doeth wonders' wherever his eye reaches, or his arm is stretched out; but especially was his might displayed, and his wisdom manifested in the creation of the heavens and their hosts, and of the earth and its fullness, 'for his mercy endureth for ever.' The sun, the centre of unnumbered worlds, to which he imparts light, life, and fertility; irradiating nature, and diffusing health and joy with his beams: the moon, in silent grandeur, pursuing his course through the sky, and the stars that rejoice along with her in the Creator's omnipotence, are objects which cannot fail to produce a strong impression on every rational being, whatever may be the individual's ignorance of that science which has enlarged so incalculably the astronomer's acquaintance with the operations of him who is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working. But how must even these stupendous effects of almighty agency be diminished in their splendour to our conceptions, when we compare them with the God who is their origin and end, who dwells in uncreated light because the effulgence of himself, and in whose presence angels and archangels veil themselves, and yet 'his mercy endureth for ever.' The Psalmist next reviews, and gratefully acknowledges, the Lord's goodness in the deliverances which he wrought out for his chosen people, when he destroyed the first-born of their Egyptian oppressors; when he divided the Red sea, that his ransomed might pass over; when he overwhelmed their implacable enemies in the returning waves, and made them sink as lead in the mighty waters; when he guided them through the wilderness by a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night; when he subdued powerful kings before them, and gave their lands to the seed of Israel his servant; when he brought them in safety to their promised possession, and settled them there, till by their sins they provoked him to give them into the hands of the Chaldeans; and the period of their appointed captivity being now come to a close, when he remembered them in their low estate, and restored them again to their own beloved Jerusalem, 'for his mercy endureth for ever.' These works of mercy, as astonishing as they were gratuitously performed, were done for a certain specified portion of his intelligent creatures; but we should reflect, that in even a higher sense he has been as mindful of us, to whom, on account of our sins, there remained only a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation to devour the adversaries. He remembered us also in our low estate; and delivered us through the mediation of his beloved Son. 'O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.'

PRAYER.

On this another sabbath morning, would we desire, with feelings becoming our situation, to approach thy throne, O thou who art the God of heaven, and whose mercy endureth for ever, earnestly imploring thy gracious presence, and the answer of our petitions, through him whom thou hearest always, and in whom thou art ever well pleased. We adore thee as that eternal, self-existent, and omnipotent Being who didst create the heavens and the earth, who didst set a tabernacle for the sun, and hast ordained the moon and the stars. Thou art continually doing wonders, and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. Thou didst remember thy covenant with Abraham thy servant, and in thy faithfulness didst bring his seed, when thou sawest their affliction, and hearest their cry because of their taskmasters, from the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. In the greatness of thy excellency thou didst overthrow them that rose up against thee and thy chosen. In thy mercy thou didst lead forth the people which thou hadst redeemed. Thou didst guide them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation. Thou didst bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance; in the place, O Lord, which thou hadst made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands had established. And when in utter forgetfulness of the marvellous things which thou hadst done for them, their posterity sinned with their fathers, and committed iniquity, and did wickedly; and thou in thy righteous displeasure hadst delivered them over to their enemies, who carried them away captives to Babylon, thou didst think on them in their low estate, and turn again their captivity as streams in the south. In thy dealings with thy people of old, would we desire to behold thy dealings with us, who also have forsaken the Lord and lightly esteemed the Rock of our salvation. Thou hast rescued us from a far more wretched and galling than Egyptian slavery; from the thralldom of sin, from the tyranny of Satan, from the power of the grave, and from the second death. All these wonders thou hast performed for us by the voluntary humiliation, sufferings, and crucifixion of thy only begotten Son, the brightness of thy glory, and the express image of thy person; and through the effectual application to our souls, of the redemption purchased by the Lord our righteousness, by the Spirit of holiness, one with thee, and the eternal Word, God over all, blessed for ever. May we then, O Lord, be filled this morning with that peace which passeth understanding, when we think on thy preserving goodness; and especially when we dwell on the love in Jesus wherewith thou hast loved us, and in the exercise of our lost affections, purified by the Sanctifier, and set on things above, may we go to thy house of prayer, engage in the solemnities of the sanctuary, and hear for eternity. Let thy presence be with thy servant who is to lead our devotions, and to instruct us in what thou requirest of us; so that he who soweth, and they who reap, may rejoice together. Graciously hear us, O Lord, in these our humble supplications, and when thou hearest, forgive and answer, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXXXVII. CXXXVIII.

REMARKS.

PSALM CXXXVII. The place where, and the occasion on which, this psalm was written, are evident from the composition itself; but the writer is unknown. The Jews were now in captivity, far from the country which they loved so well, and from the temple where they had worshipped the only living and true God. This pathetic psalm has two parts: 1. The complaint of the Israelitish exiles; and never was complaint expressed in language more tender and affecting; and, 2. A prophetic denunciation of the doom which awaited their idolatrous and cruel oppressors. The first subject of their mournful reflection is the scene of their banishment, and the continuance of their misery. It was by the rivers of Babylon, that they sat down and wept, when they thought on far distant Zion. They were among proud and insulting enemies, who laughed at their tears; and they knew that many years of servitude must pass away before the eyes of their children—for before then their own eyes would be closed in death—should again behold the city of their God, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth. Such was the intensity of their grief, that the harps on which they had celebrated the praises of Jehovah, as their covenanted God and King in Jeshurun, had been hung on the willows; and to complete their wretchedness, the very men who had carried them away captive and wasted them, insulted them in their sorrows, by requiring of them not only a song, but mirth; asking them, with a sneer, to sing for their amusement one of the songs of Zion. How touching the answer of the captives to this inhuman mockery, and how worthy of the people whose God was the Lord! 'How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land!' And then in the full recollection of what they had been, compared with what they were, they exclaim, in all the anguish of their bursting hearts, and with all the fervour of their re-awakened piety, and with all their devotedness of affection to the religious institutions and civil privileges of their country, If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning, its skill in touching the harp. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, never again to swell the hymn of praise; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

The remaining part of the psalm is, as already intimated, a prophetic declaration of the fate of the church's enemies; for it is in this light, and not in that of vindictive imprecation, it should be viewed. 1. Of Edom. Thou wilt remember, O Lord, the children of Edom; and how they treated thy people when thy anger, on account of their sins, was kindled against them; and how they added to our affliction, when in the day of Jerusalem's visitation and fall, they shouted in the fury of their vengeance, Raze it, raze it, even to the foundation. 2. Of Babylon; that the cup of the Lord's indignation, which he had in justice put into the hands of his own chosen ones, should, after it had passed from them, be put into the hands of their destroyers, who must drain it to the dregs; nay, the very dregs themselves they must wring them out and drink them. Such was the prediction, and it was fearfully accomplished. Babylon at the appointed time became, and still continues to be, ruinous heaps.

PSALM CXXXVIII. This psalm, as its title bears, is the composition of David; and is thought to have been written, as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, when having been delivered from all his enemies, he was firmly and peaceably seated on the throne of Israel. In ver. 1—3, the royal prophet, on reviewing the Lord's gracious interpositions in his behalf, promises a return of gratitude, and of heart-felt praise for all the goodness which God had made to follow him. In ver. 4—6, he speaks of gospel times, when kings would be the nursing-fathers of the church; and in the two last verses, he professes his believing and sanctified confidence in God, shows what he, in the exercise of a lively faith, expects to receive from One who had loved him with an everlasting love; and in the assurance, that he who had begun the good work in him, would perfect that which concerned him, he concludes by earnestly imploring the Lord his protector, guide, and comforter, never to leave him nor forsake him.

PRAYER.

Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. We give thee thanks for all the blessings of the past day, and that thou hast in abundant mercy allowed another sabbath to close around us in peace. We bless thee, O thou God of ordinances, that we have been permitted to appear in thy courts, to join with the congregation of saints in the songs of praise, and to hear instruction from that word, which is one of the chief instruments thy Spirit employs for making sinners wise unto salvation. We confess, O Lord, the wanderings of our hearts, and the coldness of our affections, even when engaged in the solemn duties of the sanctuary. We would feel, O thou who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, that our sins are too often increased and aggravated by the very means which we use to obtain the forgiveness of them. Revive thy work, O God, in the midst of the years, and in the midst of us; in the midst of the years, and in the midst of us, make known thy grace and thy truth; in deserved wrath, remember and exercise utterly undeserved mercy. But while we are in the undisturbed possession of the freely bestowed and precious privileges of the gospel, we would bear on our minds the state of thy visible church in the days of old; when the enemy entered the city of thy people's solemnities; when the heathen came into thine inheritance; when they defiled thy holy temple, and laid Jerusalem on heaps. And we would fear, O Lord, lest we by our lukewarmness, our indifference, and our sins, should provoke thee, though judgment is thy strange work, to remove our candlestick out of its place, and leave us in the deepest spiritual darkness. We would tremble, O Lord, lest thou shouldst withdraw for ever the light of thy countenance from us, because we have dealt deceitfully in thy covenant, and have not known the day of our merciful visitation. O in thy loving-kindnesses, which have been of old for ever, forbid that we should be compelled to hang our harps on the willows, and weep when we remember Zion. And whatever may be the trials by which thou art to prove the faith and patience of the saints, may we rest with assured confidence on thy promise, that thou wilt bring thy church in safety through all her difficulties and dangers, and compass her, and all who pray for her prosperity and peace, with songs of deliverance. To encourage us in our exertion for the good of Jerusalem, lead us, O Lord, with thy servant the sweet singer of Israel, to meditate on thy former doings in our behalf; to look forward in faith to the period when the interests of the Redeemer shall be the interests of every one whom the Redeemer has exalted in the earth; and when in the well-grounded belief that we and our land are once more married to the Lord, the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of peace, quietness and assurance for ever. Influenced by these desires, and animated by such hopes, we would commit ourselves to rest this night, praying that we may be satisfied early on another morning with thy mercy; and that all our days we may rejoice and be glad in thee. May the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, be acceptable in thy sight, through Jesus our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—AMOS IX.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we have a confirmation of the prophecy in which the inspired man of God foretells the final ruin of the kingdom of Israel, and the dispersion of its people among all nations. The destruction here predicted was to be complete; and as Jehovah himself, in the exercise of his irresistible power, was the judge who had pronounced the sentence, and pledged his faithfulness to execute it, there could be no hope of escape for the guilty. In language distinguished by the boldest eastern imagery, the Lord, by the mouth of his servant, declares the impossibility of their deliverance from the fate which he had appointed for them. Wherever concealed he would search them out, and exhibit the folly and the hopelessness of man in attempting to hide himself from the eye of omniscience. Nay, even amongst their enemies he would show himself a still more terrible adversary, by commanding the sword of those who might be disposed to pity them, and had sheathed it, to be drawn again, furbished, brandished, and bathed in their blood. The Lord had set his eyes on them for evil, and not for good, and therefore their very land should be touched by his avenging hand, and turned to desolation and mourning, and at last to silence. He proclaims the means by which he would still farther effect what he had so fearfully threatened, that he is the Director as well as the Creator of the elements of nature, and would make them subservient to his purposes of judgment. He tells them that they must not presume on the astonishing kindness which he had shown towards them in ransoming them from the house of bondage, and bringing them into a land flowing with milk and honey; for thus had he, to a certain extent, acted towards the neighbouring nations who had been their most inveterate enemies. But though scattered and peeled, and obstinate sinners among them irrevocably ordained to the slaughter, still a remnant was to be saved, and a glorious day yet to dawn on the outcasts of Israel. The sun of Israel's day has not appeared above the horizon, but he will arise, and even now there are streaks of light in the eastern sky, announcing that his rising is at hand. The lost sheep shall be sought out and found in every mountain and valley where they strayed, and are straying, and brought back to the fold, from which, reposing on greener grass, and led by stiller waters, they shall wander no more. Messiah, their long-rejected, but then their fully recognised Prince, shall be their shepherd and guide, and guard them for ever.

Most intimately are we concerned in the accomplishment of this cheering prediction; for the apostle declares that he would not that we should be ignorant of this mystery, that blindness is in part happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles come in. The universal spread of the gospel is in the divine decree closely connected with the conversion of the Jews; and how anxiously should we pray and labour, that the vail may be taken from their hearts, and that there may soon come out of Zion the Deliverer, who shall turn away ungodliness. The Lord hasten it in his time. Make no tarrying, O my God!

PRAYER.

We will both lay us down in peace and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety. Ever blessed be thy name, O thou who keepest Israel, that we have in our experience again realized the humble expectations thus expressed in thy ever-watchful providence. Thou hast made the out-goings of the evening, as well as of the morning, to rejoice over us, and we are still before thee living monuments of thy preserving mercy. Not unto us, O God, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake. We adore thee for the high privilege of having thy holy word still in our hands! May thy Spirit write it on the table of our hearts! We would particularly at this time, desire to profit by the contemplation of thy dispensations to the people whom thou didst choose for thine own, that to them thou mightst reveal thy will, and manifest thy glory. We would trace thy sovereign goodness in their unspeakable blessings, and thy as sovereign justice in their dreadful punishment. Their sins separated between them and their God, and constrained thee, the Lord of hosts, weary with repenting, to touch their land and it melted, and all that dwelt therein mourned, and it rose up wholly like a flood, and was drowned as by the flood of Egypt. Thine eyes were upon the sinful kingdom; but thou didst not make a full end of the house of Jacob; for thou hadst reserved unto thyself a remnant, according to the election of grace. We know, O God, that it was because of unbelief that they fell, and that we can stand only by faith. Let us not then be high-minded, but fear. Enable us, O Lord, to behold thy goodness and thy severity; on them who fell, severity; but towards us goodness, if we continue in thy goodness, otherwise we also shall be cut off. Our hearts' desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they may be saved; and we praise thee, with whom all things are possible, that thou hast ordained that they shall not abide in unbelief, and that thou wilt graff them into the good olive tree again; for this is thy covenant unto them when thou shalt take away their sins. In their behalf, O Lord, we plead thy own promise, that thou wilt arise and have mercy upon Zion, and that the time to favour her, yea, the set time, will assuredly come. He that testifieth these things, saith, Surely I come quickly; even so come, Lord Jesus. And while we thus pray for the conversion and restoration of thine ancient people, we would earnestly supplicate restraining, strengthening, and confirming grace for ourselves. Fulfil in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power, that we may enter on the duties of a new day in the sustaining belief that we are under thy gracious protection, and that as thou hast delivered our souls from death, thou wilt also preserve our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. May thy Spirit inspire the resolution, and enable us individually to keep it, I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. Let thy mercy, O Lord, in Christ, be upon us, according as we desire to hope in thee. Amen.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXIV. 5.

SCRIPTURE—1 JOHN V.

REMARKS.

In this chapter the apostle directs our attention to some most important points of Christian doctrine and practice. 1st. He lays it down as an unquestionable position, that whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, is born of God; because the Spirit has, in the change produced in him at his regeneration, wrought so effectually on his understanding and heart as to enable him to receive Christ in all his offices; and thus to inspire him with that love to God, who hath called him to his kingdom and glory, which necessarily manifests itself in that love to the brethren which is the end of the commandment. Another evidence of the reality of this love, and of the source whence it flows, is, that it uniformly and irresistibly leads to obedience, and makes the believer feel and acknowledge, that whatever may be the trials of his pilgrimage, the doing the will of his Father in heaven is one of the most delightful employments in which the disciple of Jesus can be engaged. The Saviour's yoke, he can declare from his own blessed experience, is easy, and his burden is light.

2. The apostle asserts and illustrates the great truth, that faith in Christ, and it alone, overcometh the world; because the believer, looking beyond the things of sense and of time, keeps his eye steadily fixed on the prize of his high calling. He estimates earthly objects at their real value, and having ascertained it to be less than nothing and vanity, he proceeds on his way Zionward, unseduced by the attractions, and smiling with a noble contempt at the frowns of the world, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, and continuing steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

3. The apostle observes that he who is at once the Object and the Author of this faith, though the Son of God, and thinking it not robbery to be equal with God, became incarnate, that he might die the just for the unjust, and by uniting his people to himself, secure their union with the Father, who by his Spirit seals them to the day of redemption. The essential divinity of Jesus was attested by water, the water of baptism, when the Holy Ghost descended like a dove upon him, and a voice from the excellent glory proclaimed, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.' And by blood, when by his bloody sweat in the garden he showed the unutterable anguish of his soul under the pressure of the divine wrath, which in our stead he was then enduring; and by his atoning death on the cross, when under the hidings of his Father's countenance as our substitute, he exclaimed, 'my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me.'

4. The apostle declares that besides the testimony of the three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and the three that bear witness on earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood, the believer has the witness in himself, the Spirit bearing witness with his spirit, that he is one of the sons of God, and if a son, adopted into the Saviour's family, then an heir, according to the hope of eternal life; an heir of God, and a joint heir with Christ.

5. The apostle states the end which he had in view in making the preceding important remarks to the saints in Christ Jesus whom he addressed, that being assured of their personal interest in the great atonement, and through it of being put in possession of their everlasting inheritance, they might pray, Lord, increase our faith, and rest confident that whatever they asked agreeable to the will of God, he would hear them in this very thing, and cause them to know and to feel that they had the petitions which they desired of him.

6. The apostle having pointed out the privileges and the advantages of faith in Christ, gives direction in prayer in reference to the condition of others; that if a believer, by the suggestion of the Spirit, perceives that a Christian brother has committed such a sin as to expose himself to disease which is not necessarily to end in death, but to be cured by the means employed in dependence on the great Physician, then let the disciple of Jesus implore God in behalf of the afflicted; and God, in answer to his petitions, will grant life, health, and strength to the person for whom his supplications have been offered. But if the sin is such as from its very nature to end in death, the apostle does not say, or mean, that any believer should pray for his recovery, because in such circumstances he can have no reason to expect that the Lord would listen to his request.

The apostle concludes with a recapitulation of what he had stated respecting the believer's privileges, that he who is born of God is secured from the wilful commission and condemnatory power of sin; fortified against the assaults of the great adversary of God and man; the good soldier of Jesus Christ in the midst of a world lying in wickedness; enlightened in the knowledge of the true God, and in blessed union with him, and therefore bound to worship and serve him alone in reverence and godly fear, having his conversation habitually in heaven, from whence he looks for the Saviour to come again, and to receive him into his Master's joy.

PRAYER.

O thou God, whose we are, and whom we desire to serve, we adore thee that thou hast once more blessed us with an opportunity of assembling, as a family, in thy presence, for the purpose of singing thy praise, of reading thy word, and pouring out our souls before thee. Sanctify to our spiritual improvement and growth in grace, that portion of holy scripture which has now been brought under our consideration, and from it may we learn wisdom. May we see more clearly the nature, apprehend more distinctly the excellence, and partake more rejoicingly of the triumphs of that saving principle which overcometh the world, and will enable us to pass through it as strangers and pilgrims who look for

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXVII. 7—9.

SCRIPTURE—OBADIAH.

REMARKS.

This sublime vision, in common with the 49th chapter of Jeremiah, of which it is in a great measure a reiteration, and in some parts a transcript, relates chiefly to the destruction of those hereditary enemies of God's ancient people, the Edomites, or descendants of Esau.

The prophet begins by announcing, on the authority of Jehovah, that the doom of the Edomites was already sealed, and a confederacy of nations formed for their destruction. He next describes the desolations which were to precede and attend their downfall. He then turns to the grounds of God's controversy with them, reminding them how richly they merited their doom by their base and unbrotherly hostility to Israel; and especially by the malevolent pleasure with which they had contemplated the captivity to Babylon. And he concludes by assuring his countrymen, that a very different and far more desirable fate awaited the seed of Jacob; that a reversion of precious blessings was yet in store for them; and that the day was not distant when they should not only recover their own land, but also possess the gates of their enemy. As respects diction and style, the prophecy is highly poetical. The greater part is couched in the form of an address to Idumea, which the prophet, in the bold spirit of Eastern poetry, personifies. At the 17th verse, he turns, with a suddenness of transition characteristic of the scriptures, from Idumea, and apostrophizes Israel. In the close, the style of simple narrative is pleasingly resumed.

The vision of Obadiah regarding Edom has received, at least in its literal sense, a complete fulfilment. Within a few years from the date of the prophecy this powerful and opulent kingdom was overrun and subjugated by the same Assyrian conqueror whom it had previously assisted to humble Jerusalem: and though it again, at a subsequent period, recovered its independence—though it again 'builded,' as Malachi expressly predicted, 'the desolate places,' (Mal. i. 4.), and continued for a few centuries longer a great and prosperous community, yet sentence of extinction was only suspended, not recalled: and for the last thousand years, the name of Edom has been extinct among the nations, and its territory a desolate waste, almost without inhabitants.

Nor has the promise of 'deliverance' to Zion been less signally fulfilled. The lapse of a few years from the time of Obadiah saw the Jews restored from the Babylonish captivity; and restored, too, a wiser and better people than they had been for many generations before. A long course of comparative prosperity succeeded. While the heathen nations around continued to be trampled under foot by all the great powers—Mede, Persian, and Greek, that successively swayed the destinies of the East, the Jews were upon the whole befriended a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. It is to thee, O thou triune Jehovah, that we would render our thanksgivings for devising, executing, and completing the scheme of our redemption, and most earnestly do we pray that we may have the witness in ourselves that thou hast given unto us eternal life, and that none shall be able to pluck us out of thy hand. And being placed by thy grace in this blessed state, we would support our hearts with the belief that thou wilt hear us at all times from thy sanctuary, and strengthen us out of Zion. We know, O Lord, that all unrighteousness is sin; we feel our own exceeding sinfulness, and that we can entertain no hopes of pardon but through the sufferings and intercession of him who came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ, and on him therefore would we rely exclusively for wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and redemption. Perfect in us, we beseech thee, O God of our salvation, the gracious work which thou hast begun, so that through the indwelling influences of thy Spirit, we may not wilfully and deliberately transgress that law which is holy, and just, and good. O may we have indeed been begotten of thee, and in thy might may we keep ourselves from evil, so that the wicked one may be effectually restrained from touching, tempting, and leading us to forget that we are the Lord's. And as we are persuaded that the whole world lieth in wickedness, we would offer up our supplications for all whom thou hast not as yet visited with the day-spring from on high. Show them, O Lord, that thy Son has come to pay the penalty due by the guilty, and to make peace by the blood of his cross. O give them an understanding of their real state and prospects, that through the communications of thy grace they may know experimentally as the only Saviour, him that is true, in whom thou seest no iniquity in Jacob, and no perverseness in Israel. May they be satisfied of his all-sufficiency to redeem, from the conviction which thy Spirit alone can produce in them, that he is the true God, the Prince of life, and the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. May the arms of thy protection be around us this night, and thus guarded we will fear no evil; and if we shall be permitted to open our eyes on the light of another morning, may our first thoughts be of thee, and of what thou hast done for us; and may it be the firm purpose of our souls to devote ourselves henceforth and for ever to the service of him who is the health of our countenance, and our God. Hear us, O Lord, and answer us, for the Redeemer's sake.

by foreign princes. And under their own Asmoenean kings, those 'saviours who should come up on mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau,' they were enabled not merely to repossess their own land, but to extend their frontier so as to include Idumea itself; thereby making themselves the masters of those very children of Edom who had cheered on the Babylonians in their assault on the holy city, saying 'in the day of Jerusalem, Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation,' Psal. cxxxvii. 7.

The truth of the prophetic testimony, in regard to Edom, has of late years received remarkable confirmation from the researches of travellers. After having lain concealed for centuries amidst the inaccessible fastnesses of Arabia Petræa, the ruins of the ancient capital of Idumea have been, as it were, disinterred; and a picture thereby presented to the world of past grandeur and present desolation, than which, nothing can be conceived better illustrative of this and the other prophecies respecting Edom. The ruined temples, theatres, and aqueducts of Petra, all of them excavated out of the solid rock, and chiselled into the most exquisite symmetry, fully confirm all that the prophets tell us of the pristine glory of the people who 'dwelt in the clefts of the rock;' whilst the stern desolation of the inhospitable solitudes which surround these colossal remains, decisively proves that Divine judgment has overswept and blasted a land which, incredible as its present aspect seems to render it, is known to have been for long ages a fertile and populous region, the highway and emporium of the commerce of the East. It is thus certified by the most unambiguous evidence, that the ancient splendour of Edom, as described in holy writ, is no poetic figment; the announcement of its eventual desolation, no idle threat.

PRAYER.

Blessed be the Lord God who hath guarded us during the unconscious hours of sleep, and raised us in health and safety to behold the cheering light of a new day! O grant that our sins may be scattered with the morning cloud; and that, like the risen sun, we may be prepared to run the race of piety and duty this day. We are not worthy, O our God, to render thee praise for thy goodness, far less to implore the protection and help which are needful to keep us safe, and good, and happy; but we come before thee, not in our own name; we come in the name, and plead the merits of him who died, the just for the unjust, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us. We believe that for his sake thou art willing, not merely to accept our persons and services, but to bestow upon us all the blessings we need, and greater blessings than we can ask. Vouchsafe us then, O God, we beseech thee, grace to lay now to heart, and to reduce this day to practice, the solemn lessons of thy holy word. Help us to act on the conviction, that thou art faithful in visiting for sin, not less than in rewarding righteousness; and that though the wicked exalt themselves as the eagle, and set their nest among the stars, yet thence wilt thou bring them down. O let us not hope, then, because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore our sins shall not last find us out. Instead of deceiving ourselves through the pride of our hearts, and supposing that our mountain standeth strong, may we cease from every refuge of lies, and from every arm of created might, and put our trust in thee, the only Rock of salvation. Instead of ranging ourselves with the enemies of thy church and people, and rejoicing over them, and speaking proudly in the day of their distress, may we seek the peace of Jerusalem, and cast in our lot with those upon whom thou hast declared that there shall be deliverance and holiness. From every thing that is hateful in thy sight, and injurious to our own or our brother's well-being, do thou defend us, O God; and whatsoever is honouring to thee, and good for us, do thou be pleased, even though we have asked it not, to bestow upon us. Prosper thine own cause, O Lord, throughout the world. Let them be confounded and turned back who hate Zion; let them be as the grass which withereth before it grow up! Thou didst remember Edom, the enemy of thy people Israel, and didst reward her as she had served them; covering her with shame, and cutting her off for ever: so let all thine enemies perish, O Lord! But let them that love thee be as the sun when he goeth forth in his strength. Favourably regard that branch of the church of Christ to which we belong; the parish in which we dwell; and thy servants who minister in the same. And graciously remember and reward all among us who bring forth good fruit and are rich in faith and in charity; for their earthly things, giving them heavenly; for their temporal, eternal; for their corruptible, those which do not decay. All we ask is in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXIII.

SCRIPTURE—2 JOHN.

REMARKS.

It would be difficult to name any writings which more clearly reflect the temper of their author, notwithstanding the absence of all direct reference to the subject, than the Gospel and Epistles of John.

A spirit of holy charity pervades every sentence; and no intelligent student can rise from their perusal without feeling as confident that they are the productions of a man full of devoted love, alike to his Master and his brethren, as if they had been written for the express purpose of telling us so. The triumph of the ancient statuary, who stamped his own image so deeply on the buckler of his Minerva, that it could not be defaced without destroying the statue, may find its parallel in the curious felicity with which St John has made his writings the mirror of his own benevolent spirit.

This remark is peculiarly applicable to his letter to the elect lady and her children. The 'beloved disciple' appears in every line. How plainly is the gentle spirit of the disciple who leaned on Jesus' bosom, revealed in the affectionate interest with which he speaks of this lady and her family! How characteristic of the apostle, who in his declining years was wont, as primitive legends tell, to address the Christian assemblies the brief and simple precept, 'Little children, love one another,' is the solemn earnestness with which he presses on his correspondents the duty of walking in mutual love and charity! Who but that devoted servant and advocate of Christ, who refused so much as to remain in the same bath with the heretic Cerinthus, could have penned the emphatic warning against Antichristian teachers; or exhorted a matron eminent for her hospitality, not so much as to bid 'God speed,' far less receive into her house, such as ventured any doctrine derogatory to the divine Redeemer.

The epistle, however, is not valuable solely from the light which it sheds on the character of the author. It breathes throughout a spirit of holy love, characteristic not more of the beloved disciple, than of that blessed gospel of which he was a minister. What a lovely example of domestic piety does it set before us, in the elect lady and her children walking in the truth! How encouraging and instructive is it to mark the delight with which an apostle contemplates the spiritual progress of his converts! Nor are the fatherly counsels which he addresses to this honoured household, without their claim on our attention. To abide in the doctrine of Christ; to hold fast the grand fact of the incarnation; to shun the delusions of false doctrine; and to practise the great and indispensable commandment of Christian love and charity: these are counsels which are never either unnecessary or inapplicable to the church of God.

One injunction—that which relates to the proper mode of treating heretical teachers, may seem at first sight scarcely compatible with the spirit of Christian love. Yet due reflection will satisfy you, that even this injunction, instead of being harsh, is the dictate of a deep and pure charity. It is no true kindness, either to heretics themselves, or to those who are exposed to the infection of their opinions, to show them the deference and honour due only to faithful evangelists. No one can receive a heretic into his house without at least seeming to countenance his errors. And, surely, the love which the gospel enjoins cannot require us to do what may scandalize our brethren, or to abet, however indirectly, a teacher who is the enemy of Christ and of men's souls. To persecute heretics, or even to use them with incivility, were indeed opposed alike to the lessons of the gospel, and to the dictates of humanity. But to withhold from them our countenance, is not persecution; to refuse to acknowledge them as our instructors, is not incivility. It may suit the temper of a latitudinarian charity to regard doctrinal error as innocent, and to treat its advocates as if their opinions did not affect their claim on our brotherly-kindness. But the charity of the gospel is based on love to the truth, not less than on love to men; and such is its nature, that it constrains us to seek the well-being, rather than the pleasure or praise of our fellow-creatures; to offend them for the good of their souls, rather than caress and soothe them, when thereby their salvation might be hindered.

PRAYER.

By thy goodness, O Lord, we find ourselves before the throne of thy grace, at the close of another day. To some of our fellow-creatures, the day has been a season of bodily anguish; to some a time of mental distress; to others a passage through affliction to death. But to us it has been a day of health; of soundness of mind; of personal comfort; of means of improvement; of unnumbered mercies. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits, who keepeth our feet from falling, our eyes from tears, and our souls from death. Alas! that our conduct has been so little accordant with thy mercies, O our God. Furnished by thy fatherly goodness with so many new reasons for loving and serving thee, we ought to have this day conquered some sin, and added to our acts of virtue; we ought to have grown in love to Christ, and in love to one another; in knowledge of thy truth, and in zeal for thy commandments: instead of which, we have been content to live in great forgetfulness of the God of our mercies, and in grievous unconcern about thy cause and glory; and have only added to the load of guilt which days, and months, and years have been accumulating. O God, have mercy upon us, and take away our sins. Have respect, we pray thee, to the merits and advocacy of him who became incarnate, and suffered, and died for our redemption. For his sake, forgive our sins, and restore us to thy favour; a new heart do thou also give us; and from all our idols do thou cleanse us. As thou condescendest to give us the name of thy children, be pleased also to confer the spirit of sons, even love to thee our Father, confidence in thy goodness, and jealousy of thine honour. As thou permittest us to call ourselves after Christ, be pleased also to shed upon our souls a spirit of devotedness to his cause, a holy zeal for his glory, and a double portion of his mind and temper. As thou commandest us to love each other, and all our Christian brethren in the truth, be pleased also to enable us to exercise towards all men that charity which rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; and which regardeth nothing as good for a brother, which is not good for his soul. And these great and precious blessings, do thou mercifully grant us now, even now, O our God; so that though we deserve never more to rise from the beds whither we now go, we may yet both lay us down in peace, and awake in safety, thy hand sustaining us. For all who are dear to us, as for ourselves, we entreat thy blessings. Let thy covering wings be over us all; thy protecting arms around us all. And grant, that at the last, when the shadows of the long night shall have fallen on our path, we may dwell together in that blessed land where there is no darkness, and no sin, neither any more death. And now may grace be with us, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXVI. 1—6.

SCRIPTURE—JONAH I. II.

REMARKS.

The view of Jonah's character with which this prophecy opens is far from prepossessing. He is honoured with a special commission as the prophet of Jehovah; but instead of executing it, he peremptorily refuses to obey. That he may not proceed to Nineveh, he hastens to the opposite coast; that he may not be disturbed by any renewal of the command, he tries to place the sea between him and the place of the divine oracle. Yet let us not condemn Jonah for this wayward disregard of God's authority, without at the same time remembering that the perverse nature, to whose pleadings Jonah yielded, is our own, and that the disposition to evade commands which run counter to his wishes, is not peculiar to any one sinner. At all times, and in all places, men are to be found who 'flee from the presence of the Lord' to avoid the messages of his holy oracle, and rush into pleasure or business to drown the still small voice of the Spirit or of conscience.

It might have been expected that Jonah's contumacy would draw down upon him some signal token of the divine displeasure. But God's ways are not as our ways. That all-gracious Being is ever more bent on bringing his people to repentance, than on punishing them; and the calamities which attended the steps of the fugitive, were sent in mercy, not in anger; to correct, not to punish. The will of God is manifested, not when he afflicts the backslider, but when he lets him alone. It is kindest, truest kindness, to make the way of transgression hard; to strew the road to perdition with thorns rather than with roses. Nor are there any circumstances in the history of the prophet which more distinctly proclaim the mercy of his God than the course of corrective discipline to which he was subjected during his attempted flight to Tarshish.

Of Jonah's trials, the most remarkable was his temporary entombment 'in the belly of the fish.' This mystical burial of Jonah was indeed intended to serve other ends besides that of reclaiming him from his rebellion. It was, primarily, a miraculous interposition, designed to prepare the Ninevites for receiving his message with faith and reverence. The traces which still survive, in pagan mythology, of this singular event, show that it was widely known and believed at the time; and its miraculous character obviously fitted it to form a divine attestation to the mission of the prophet. It was likewise intended to serve the further purpose of foreshadowing the resurrection of Christ. The time of Jonah's continuance in the belly of the fish is cited by our Lord himself as a type of his continuance in the grave Luke xi. 30—32. And 'thus,' as has been well remarked, 'in the first and oldest of the prophets, for to Jonah belongs this pre-eminence, we perceive that the first image, the introductory representation which meets us in the opening of the prophetic canon, when we explore it in a Christian sense, is that of the great fact of Christ's resurrection.' Nevertheless, as respected Jonah himself, this miracle was the last and most important step in a process of providential discipline, designed to recall him to his God, and gratify him for the resumption of his sacred functions.

It is consolatory to reflect, that the same beneficent wisdom which presided over the discipline of Jonah, and meted out his trials one after another according to his need, still orders and regulates the afflictions of believers. The all-wise God will not send on his people one trial too few; neither will he inflict one too many. He knows the case of each of his children; and he will subject the backslider to that precise measure of discipline, and that only, which is necessary for his amendment. Yet let not the believer remain passive under the divine chastisements as if these were to operate on him as a charm, and against his will. He must hear as well as bear the rod; he must improve as well as endure the trial; and he must be specially careful to eschew that obduracy of heart which requires for its subjugation a long and bitter course of adversities. It is infinite condescension in Almighty God to descend to the task, if we may so speak, of framing expedients for the purpose of recalling men from their sins; and surely it must frightfully aggravate the backslider's guilt, when by hardening his neck under the divine corrections, he pours contempt on the condescension, not less than the laws of his God.

PRAYER.

We worship and praise thee, O Lord God, as the author of all our mercies. Though we are together unworthy of thy regard, thou hast never displayed, thou still displayest, the most benevolent concern for our well-being. From beginning eternity thy delights were with the sons of men; and in the fullness of time thou didst send forth thy well-beloved Son to die for us men, and for our salvation. Thou hast built a fair world for us to dwell in. Thou hast bestowed upon us bodies curiously made, and souls vondrously endowed. Thou hast caused our cup to run over with temporal mercies. And so good and gracious art thou, that even the adversities which mingle in our lot, are all ordered, regulated, and overruled through thy mercy, so as to advance our welfare, to make us sit loose to a sinful world, and to shut us up to thyself, the only rest and portion of the immortal soul. We desire to esteem it a new token of thy goodness, O God, that we have been all spared to begin another day in peace. Our sleep might have been death; our bed might have been in hell; fire might have consumed our dwelling; wicked men might have spoiled our goods. But thou hast been our shade on our right hand, and the voice of health and rejoicing is still heard under our roof. O grant that our conduct before thee this day, may be in some good degree answerable to thine invariable conduct towards us. Let not a day begin in professions of gratitude, and end in acts of heartless forgetfulness and rebellion. May the Holy Spirit dwell in each of our hearts to defend us against such an issue. May he strengthen us to watch against evil; to be diligent and conscientious in our several callings; careful of our time; thankful for our mercies; gentle and considerate in our mutual intercourse; patient under our crosses and vexations. Should bad example allure us, may he enable us to resist its influence. Should scenes of temptation invite us, may he enable us to turn from them and pass away. Should the black shadows of adversity fall on our path, may he enable us to pierce the cloud with the eye of faith, and to bear the rod, and him who sends it. Throughout the day, may we have grace to secure, at whatever sacrifice of personal feeling, and at whatever risk of ridicule, the sweet testimony of a good conscience; and being thus upheld, and guided, may we find ourselves, at its close, a stage nearer to the heavenly rest, as well as to the end of this transitory life. Dwell with us as a household, making our habitation a Bethel where thou art; a Bethany, where the peace of Christ abides, as well in the day of affliction as in the season of joy. Bless all who are dear to us; whether near or at a distance; whether in this or in other lands; whether on the land or on the sea; graciously answer our prayers for their well-being, and their prayers for ours, O God of our fathers! Bless and protect our earthly sovereign. Bless all thy faithful ministers, and multiply their number. Be the guide of inexperienced youth; the staff of declining age; heal the sick; convert the unconverted; build up thy saints in their most holy faith; and let the ends of the earth soon see thy salvation. Hear, O God, in heaven thy dwelling place, these our petitions; and when thou hearest, forgive, accept, sanctify, and save us through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXII. 4—7.

SCRIPTURE—3 JOHN.

REMARKS.

A well-informed commentator asserts that we seldom hear this epistle quoted, but in reproof of lordly tyrants, or prating troublesome fellows in the church. If this be the fact, it argues little for either the piety or the discrimination of the majority of readers; for assuredly the epistle contains many things worthy of being produced besides the notice of Diotrephes. The severe censure indeed, pronounced on this turbulent presbyter, ought not to be overlooked; demonstrative, as it is, of the jealousy with which the inspired founders of the church regarded that spirit of antichristian usurpation which had begun, even in their times, to exhibit itself. But this censure occupies only a fifth part of the epistle; it is introduced not so much on its own account, as to explain the apostle's reason for addressing Gaius a member, rather than Diotrephes the minister of the church, on the subjects of the reception and treatment due to Christian itinerants; and it ought therefore, one would think, instead of engrossing the reader's attention, to have the effect of more fully recommending, by the contrast, the benignant tone of approbation which pervades the remaining portion. To every mind open to generous impulses, the portrait of Demetrius, the itinerant evangelist, must afford a far more pleasing study than that of Diotrephes. And it surely says little for either the impartiality or the high moral tone of modern Christians, that the arrogance of the latter should be better recollected, and more frequently adduced, than the honourable fame of the former.

The individual, however, whom the epistle invites us mainly to contemplate is neither the ambitious Diotrephes, nor the estimable Demetrius; but the apostle's own correspondent, the well-beloved Gaius. In this man, though only a private member of the church, we are presented with a finished pattern of Christian excellence. Observe how many features of character, worthy of universal imitation, meet in him. He is the 'well-beloved Gaius;' his spiritual attainments are so exalted that the apostle can express no better wish for his bodily health and worldly interests, than that they should flourish in an equal degree; he is abundant in labours of love; he is widely known and honoured as a blessing to the church! It is not surprising that such a man should have been applied to, when the offices of hospitality were required in behalf of the brethren, or that St John should have felt himself at liberty to commend strangers, such as Demetrius, to his care rather than to that of Diotrephes. By Gaius, a command on this subject would be regarded as imposing not a burden, but an honour and privilege. Nor would all the opposition of the pastor and his faction be sufficient to make him shut his house or his heart against a Christian missionary, especially when introduced to him by St John. Happy the church which numbered among its members such a character as Gaius! Happy the brethren and strangers who found at the various points of their evangelistic journeys, such a cordial 'fellow-helper to the truth!'

Nor ought the friendship of the beloved disciple to Gaius to pass unnoticed; illustrative, as it is, of the individualizing nature of that brotherly-love which the gospel encourages. The apostles were no converts to that vague and general philanthropy, so much extolled in later times, which overlooks and merges the individual in the species. Men who, like them, had the daily care of all the churches, might indeed have been excused, though in their attention to the collective mass they had neglected individual members; though in writing works for the Christian world at large, they had failed to descend to correspondence with private friends. But the apostles stand in no need of such an apology. Their concern for the Christian community did not prevent them taking and expressing an interest in individual Christians. Their benevolence was wide in its range, but not on that account vague in its regards. St Paul could single out his friend Onesiphorus, and pray for him with as undivided a heart as if no larger circle of friends existed to fill it; and St John could snatch an hour to pen an affectionate letter to the well-beloved Gaius, without in any measure encroaching on the time allotted to the composition of more important works. Let us imitate, while we admire, the large yet discriminating charity of the apostles. Nor let us forget, in estimating their Christian kindness, to acknowledge and adore the condescension and love of that Holy Spirit whose instruments they were in their private intercourse, not less than in their public labours; in their letters to individuals, not less than in their more general and extended compositions.

PRAYER.

Blessed be thy name, O Lord God, for encouraging us to pray to thee, and to expect to be heard. Thou hast revealed thyself as seated on a throne of grace. Thou hast appointed a Mediator who, by his obedience and sufferings in the room of sinners, has made it possible for thee, the just and holy God, to receive and bless the sinner. Thou hast set him at thy right hand to present our prayers, and intercede for us. Thou hast sent down many a precious promise, that we may send it up again in prayer. And for our farther encouragement, thou hast recorded the experience of a cloud of witnesses who have found in prayer a key to unlock the treasury of thy grace. Emboldened by these considerations, we, thine unworthy servants, again fall down before thee, and prefer our prayers and praises at thy throne. Another day of our appointed time on earth has passed away, and in passing has left us greater debtors than before to thy mercy, greater offenders than before against thy holy laws. We acknowledge thy continued goodness, O God; we confess and lament the continuance of our ingratitude; we beseech thee, for the sake of our Redeemer, to take away our sins, and impress upon our hearts a sense of thy mercy. While we grieve over our sins and shortcomings, may we discover their origin in that root of bitterness, an evil and apostate heart; and may a growing sense of our natural sinfulness, and of the consequent impurity of our best acts, lead us to discard all self-dependence; to rest our hope of acceptance solely on the righteousness of Jesus Christ; and to look up constantly for thy help amid the duties and temptations of this mortal life. Follow with thy blessing, O God, the reading of thy holy word at this time; and enable us to shun the temper which it condemns, as well as to exemplify the graces which it stamps with thine approval. Deliver thy church from all such as love to have the pre-eminence, and seek their own, not the things that are Christ's; and multiply among us and everywhere, those who walk in the truth, who love Christ and his ministers, and who have no greater joy than in promoting, according to their ability, the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. Peace be on all such, and on the whole household of God! And help us, now before thee, to follow and imitate, not them that do evil, but them that do good, so that we too may have a good report of all men, and of the truth itself, and, above all, enjoy thine approbation, O our God! And now we desire, again, to commend to thee all who are dear to us. Vouchsafe to them the same blessings which we ask for ourselves; and grant that, however far and long separated on earth, we may all be ever tending to the same blessed point, and meet at last in the same happy and eternal home. Preserve us through the dark watches of the night. And on the morning of a new day, may we arise with renewed strength, and quickened piety, to love and serve thee better than we have hitherto done. And all that we ask is for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XXIX. 3—9.

SCRIPTURE—JONAH III. IV.

REMARKS.

CHAP. III. We see here the benefit of sanctified affliction to the ministers of God's word. By it they are made experimentally to feel the weight of the divine displeasure on account of their own sins, the bitterness of repentance, the sweetness of pardon, and the necessity of obedience. They are thus better qualified than ever for the work of the Lord. They are made so to fear God, as to have no other fear. Their commission is to speak to those to whom they are sent, not what pleases themselves, or may please others; but simply and fearlessly what God bids them speak, whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear. God by his servants warns sinners before he destroys them. He has no pleasure in their death: and his very warnings, while they testify that he observes and is angry at their sins, imply his compassions and mercy. We ought to admire the grace of God in the prophet, and towards Nineveh; in the prophet, who, a stranger in a far distant heathen city, proceeds along its crowded streets, and bold as a lion cries aloud, and repeats his cry in the hearing of all, that a speedy destruction awaits them from God for their sins; and towards Nineveh, which he in his sovereignty had chosen to visit with his words, while he left so many other heathen, and doubtless equally wicked cities, unvisited and unwarned. Was there ever a more striking instance than we have here of the mighty power of the word of God? A short sentence serves to awaken the innumerable inhabitants. They believe God, and a vast practical reformation of this corrupt people is the immediate result. Thus, by this seed of the word, and the divine power accompanying it, a nation is, as it were, born at once. Fear of the divine judgments generally diffused among rulers and their subjects, is a necessary means of preparing them for seeking mercy; and it is a blessed time when princes and people, to whom the word of God comes, unite together in the feelings and expressions of a genuine repentance; when kings giving command to fast, and pray, and repent, and themselves setting the example, all the people, in the same spirit, obey and follow. It is then that a sinful nation becomes a penitent nation, and, as a nation, may expect mercy of the Lord. God observes the fruits of his word in those who hear it; and when they turn to him, he arrests his anger, and shows how graciously he looks on those who are poor and of a contrite spirit, and who tremble at his word.

CHAP. IV. It is painful and humiliating to see what unsanctified and selfish tempers may long remain, even in a true servant of God; and what a rebellious spirit will dare to think and speak towards the Most High. He who formerly fled from God, and was brought back in so signal a manner, now finds fault with God to his face, for being so merciful as to spare Nineveh after all that had been said and done. In his ignorance and folly, he seems to have thought that God's honour and his own were pledged to its overthrow; and that the threatened destruction should have been allowed to sweep its terrible course over the city, penitent though it was, rather than that occasion should be afforded for saying that his word had not been fulfilled. He was presumptuously judging for God and for himself. We see that men may sometimes pray to God with a mixture of mortified pride and anger; and ask of him what would be infinitely injurious to themselves. Yet he will sometimes bear with this, though he will assuredly reprove and correct them for it, and withhold from them the ruinous answers they desire. If the prophet would have that spared which was the gift of God's goodness to him, and is sadly grieved at the loss of it, how much more may not God preserve to himself a multitude both of rational and irrational creatures which he has formed with wonderful skill and power, and whose preservation he can make greatly instrumental in promoting his glory? Was not Jonah himself a monument of God's mercifulness? and why had he soon forgotten this? He did not deserve the pity that had been shown to himself; and why did he not reflect on this? Let us see in this wonderful history what poor human nature is, and magnify God, whose ways are not as our ways, neither his thoughts as our thoughts; who because he is God and not man, does not consume the seed of Jacob.

PRAYER.

O most holy and most merciful Lord God! we would come to thee this morning, to offer up to thee our united prayer in the name of Jesus Christ, thy well-beloved Son, through whom alone thou wilt hear and answer us. O let thy Spirit help our infirmity in prayer. Humble us under a deep sense of our sinfulness in thy sight. Alas! we do not know sufficiently the plagues of our own hearts; what amount of corruption, unbelief, pride, and unthankfulness, there is in every one of us. Lord, reveal us to ourselves, that we may loathe ourselves in our sight, and come to thee for pardon, and purification, and increase of all grace. How wonderful, O God, are thy compassions to guilty men! Thou warnest sinners to flee from the wrath to come; and when they repent and turn to thee, thou receivest them graciously, and lovest them freely, and savest them from everlasting destruction, through the death and mediation of thy dear Son. O come and save us for thy mercies' sake. O how much dost thou magnify thy forbearance and thy grace towards thy unworthy servants. Thou chastenest them for their sins, but thou dost not utterly cast them off. May we, O most gracious God, be kept from offending thee. Do thou thyself keep us; for we dare not trust in our own wisdom, or strength, or goodness. Make thy grace sufficient for us, and perfect thy strength in our weakness. And as we must stand indebted to thy mercy every day, O enable us readily to extend mercy to others who offend us, and to be glad when we see others sharers in thy mercy with us. Let thy precious word of salvation, O Lord, speedily be sent to all the heathen people of the world; and let thy Almighty Spirit make it as a fire, and as a hammer, to break their rocky hearts in pieces, bringing thus the people under thee, and making them believe and repent unto salvation, to the glory of thy name, and to the praise of our Lord Jesus Christ. And do thou grant unto all thy servants whom thou hast called into the ministry of thy word, whether at home or abroad, that with all boldness, faithfulness, and patience, they may declare thy truth; and open thou the hearts of sinners, to receive with meekness the ingrafted word of life, which is able to save their souls: so that all the kingdoms of the world may soon become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. We would now thank thee, O Lord, for having spared us through the darkness of the night, and for having called us, as at this moment, to look again towards thy holy temple in heaven. Fill us with a holy fear of thee. Help us this day to live to thy glory, amidst all the temptations and trials which may await us. Be thou surety to us for good; blessing each one of us according to our need, and according to thy manifold mercies, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIV.

SCRIPTURE—JUDE.

REMARKS.

We should bless God for having so richly furnished his church and people, with all needful directions and warnings for all the parts of a Christian's duty. The truth and ways of Christ being contrary to the bent of our fallen nature, and his people having in them still that which wars against the law of their minds, and strives to bring them into captivity to the law of sin which is in their members, they are in continual danger of being led aside by the error of the wicked, and of falling from their own sted-fastness; and, but for his constant grace, every one of them would so fall. He, therefore, reminds them of the necessity of steadfastness in him, and warns them of the awful condemnation that awaits apostates, and false unholy professors. He would have them especially to beware of those who, because he is gracious, and freely pardons his people's sins, take to themselves, and teach others to take liberty to indulge even in the very grossest sins. He describes to them the character and sentiments of these wretched and dangerous men, and the dreadful fate that awaits them. They pamper and please the flesh; they hate and despise the control of government, however just; spurning all control of shame or of power. They boast of liberty, but they know not in what true liberty consists; and, pursuing their mad course, they never find it. They will not believe that that man is truly and blessedly free, who is in willing subjection to the Father of his spirit, to the almighty, eternal King, and who loves and keeps his laws: nor that this liberty is found in Christ alone, who by the new birth of his Spirit, introduces the sinner into his own holy kingdom, where he reigns supreme, and satisfies all of the perfect happiness of their lot in being his servants. They never understand that they are the slaves of their passions, and of this world; and that they must, however reluctantly, stand to be judged by him whom they would not have to reign over them; and by that holy law which they greatly hated and dishonoured. The dark description here given of these men, should lead true believers to stand afar off from them, lest they become partakers of their sins and of their plagues. We must never rail against any one, as they do against those in dignified rank or office, speaking evil of dignities. Our freedom from their sins, gives us no title to speak thus of them; for even the holiest archangels dare not rail against the greatest and wickedest of apostate spirits. It becomes us rather to pray that the Lord would rebuke them. However much the existence of such ungodly and licentious men in the world, and even sometimes springing out of the church, is to be deplored, and their example and fellowship shunned; yet forewarned by Christ, as we are, we are not to be surprised when they appear. Our great care should be, always to be armed against their principles, and to keep aloof from their polluting society. We must not feel secure, nor be high-minded, but fear, seeking to establish our faith more and more on Christ; to remember constantly his word; to cultivate the love of God; to continue instant in prayer; and to be habitually looking forward to the coming of our Lord, who, while he will receive his faithful humble followers to himself, will visit these his enemies with everlasting destruction from his presence, and from the glory of his power. And, while it becomes us to feel a holy indignation at the sentiments and conduct of those of whom we are here warned, we should feel a tender compassion for their souls, and strive by all due means to fill them with a salutary and just fear of the everlasting fire, towards which they are assuredly hastening. And remembering what we are, and what the world is in which we live, let us daily commit ourselves to the keeping of God's grace, ascribing to him the honours which are due to his name; who possesses of right, universal and glorious dominion; and who is the fountain and pattern of all rule, and dignity, and holiness; and to whom every knee shall bow, and tongue confess that he is Lord.

PRAYER.

O God, we would now lay ourselves down at thy footstool, and, through the great Mediator who sits at thy right hand, would adore thee. Thou art great, and thy greatness is unsearchable to all but thyself, and thy Son, and Holy Spirit. O teach us to think of, and feel aright thy holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. Make us sensible of the glory and majesty of thy kingdom; and of the amazing love which thou hast shown to guilty men, in sending thine own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, to redeem them from the dreadful curse of thy law, and to raise them to the favour, the likeness, and the enjoyment of thee through all eternity. O may it please thee by thy Holy Spirit to open our eyes, and to turn us from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto thee. O may he create in us the faith of thine elect, that we with our whole hearts may embrace thy Son as our Saviour, and be by him delivered from all the most grievous evils of our sad apostacy from thee. May he lead us forth more and more from a world that lieth in wickedness, and from our own deceitful carnal hearts. Let his love constrain us to live no longer unto ourselves, but unto him who died for us, and who rose again. Let us not be left to turn thy grace into licentiousness, nor to indulge in that sin from which Christ came to save his people. Fill us with a perpetual sense of thy holy indignation against all sin; and O let those who name the name of Christ, be by thee led to depart from all iniquity. Teach us in our very hearts, and by our tongues and lives, to reverence all thine ordinances: so that instead of speaking evil of dignities, we may bless thee for them, praying for kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. Pardon, gracious God, the sins of which any of us have been guilty this day. We confess we have offended in many things, and in all have come short of thy glory. Accept of our thanks for thy manifold mercies; and keep us safely through the night, that whether we wake or sleep, we may be ever with thee. These our prayers, we present to thee in the name of thy beloved Son. For his sake, accept, and answer us, O God; and to thee be all glory, now and for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. 16—23.

SCRIPTURE—MICAH I. II.

REMARKS.

CHAP. I. We have here the sublime and appalling description of God's wrath against the seed of Jacob, a people in covenant with him, and to whom he had been so favourable, but who had become idolatrous and wicked like the heathen nations around them. The transgressions of such a people are more hateful to God than those of the heathen; for they are trampling on love and mercies, on privileges and vows; and they bring greater dishonour on him, the holy One of Israel, whose people ought, above all others, to be holy even as he is holy, and pure even as he is pure. He here declares the cause of his anger against them. It is their sin. Indeed, nothing but sin is a provocation to him. It is for sin that he punishes the world and his church. And yet such are the compassions of the righteous Lord who taketh vengeance, that he has no pleasure in the misery which he inflicts, ver. 8, 9. Jesus wept over Jerusalem while he saw and pronounced its awful doom. There is a point of sinning reached by men, and by churches, which does not admit of remedy. The wound, kept so long open, becomes at last incurable and fatal. The blood of Christ being despised and trodden under foot, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and of fiery indignation to devour that adversary. This should make us to fear, and to turn before iniquity prove our ruin. And when we see men going on in sin, it becomes us to mourn and lament over their conduct, which if it be not repented of, and forsaken, will certainly bring upon them, either here or hereafter, the righteous and terrible judgments of God. It is mournful to think what sad use ungodly men make of the judgments of God on a people that are called by his name. They reproach the Lord for them. They speak evil of his holy religion, and harden themselves in their impieties by those very things which should fill them with alarm; for, if judgment begin at the house of God, what shall their end be? The people of God should, therefore, seek to avoid those things which will be made matter of impious and insulting triumph by those who act like the idolatrous inhabitants of Gath.

CHAP. II. In this chapter the prophet denounces a woe from God on those who compose themselves to the task of contriving wicked schemes of self-aggrandisement, and violence, and fraud, and oppression, and who have these ready to execute whenever opportunity offers. Such conduct shows how deep and strong are the very principles of wickedness in their hearts, since they go so deliberately and coolly to the perpetration of it. The Lord knoweth all this, and is filled with a just indignation when he sees it. He will devise a punishment suitable for all such as thus pervert their hearts and ways. He will make them fall into the pit which they have dug for others, and fasten their own feet in their own snare. Let every one that fears the Lord beware of incurring his anger for any such thing. Let him occupy his thoughts with truth, and justice, and mercy, and devise how he may best serve the cause of righteousness, that he may be prepared to engage in this service whenever God gives him the means and the call to do so. A man's life, we may rest assured, will partake of the character of his habitual thoughts; for out of the heart are the issues of life; and then again the very thought of wickedness is sin, and is well known to God; though it should never come forth unto open act, he will publish it abroad at the last day. The people that are here described do not like to be told of their sin, or warned against it by the ministers of the divine word, and hence God at length in judgment ceases to send a messenger, or a message to them, and so they are left to go on without shame or fear, till ruin come suddenly upon them, ver. 6. Sinners may silence, in this manner, the ministers of Christ; by doing so they are attempting to shut out and keep away from themselves the Holy Spirit of God. He also may depart in his wrath, and cease to strive with such men, but this will arise from his holy sovereignty, and not from any inability to break through the barriers which the sinner interposes. And what is it that this poor sinner is doing, who resists the warning voice and the striving Spirit of God? He is acting as his own enemy, by rejecting the good word and the good Spirit of God. Is it wise to prefer falsehood to truth; or a false prophet to a true? And yet many of those who are called by the name of gods, choose to listen to prophets whose words are evidently not from God, allowing, as they do, the indulgence of the things which God hates. Indeed this is the very reason why such prophets are chosen by wicked men. They would rather be flattered and indulged than saved, obvious and fatal as the folly of such conduct really is.

PRAYER.

Our Father which art in heaven, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, bend thine ear, this morning, to hear our prayers. O let this word of thine, which we have been reading, sink deep into all of our hearts. Inspire us with a holy fear of thy righteous judgments, that we may not commit sin against thee. O let us not forget that thy holy eye is continually upon us, that thou seest the thoughts of our hearts, and ponderest the paths of our feet. Deliver us, O Lord, from an unbelieving and ungodly heart, ever inclining us to those sins which have drowned others in destruction and perdition. O never suffer us to trust in ourselves, or in an arm of flesh. Never let us listen with distrust to any word of thine, for we need all thy words; they are all given by inspiration of thee, and are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction in righteousness. And, gracious God, may we never be left by thee to think or act in such a manner as should prevail with our deceitful hearts to make them rise up against the messages of thy servants to us, and provoke thy good Spirit to depart. O may we rather seek salvation and thy glory than to be pleased and gratified after the desire of the flesh and of the mind. We beseech thee to cause thy word to dwell in us richly, by making us partakers of the abundant grace of thy Spirit, and by inclining to meditate on thy statutes day and night. May Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, and may we be rooted and grounded in love to thee who hast first loved us; and if any of us are still strangers to thy saving grace in the heart, O be pleased to come in thy rich grace to quicken and enlighten us, that we all may be to the praise of the glory of thy grace, accepted in the Beloved, and may walk in newness of life. O Lord, have mercy on us all, and bless us all, that so we having thee dwelling in the midst of us, may be safe from fear of evil, and may serve thee in love and holy fear all the days of our lives. Wash us in the blood of thy Son; put on us the garment of his salvation, animate us with his Spirit, lead us on after his example, enable us to be faithful to him; and when our service on earth is over, O may we find ourselves welcomed by him into that blessed world where all thy people are ever with thee, freed from all corruptions, and temptations, and sufferings, and where they serve thee with unspeakable joy, day and night, in thy temple. Grant this, for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom with thee and the Holy Spirit be all glory, and dominion, world without end. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XLV. 1—6.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION I.

REMARKS.

This chapter, the opening of the sublimest and most mysterious book of the New Testament, speaks of a new and most glorious revelation of Jesus Christ himself as he now is, and of his kingdom as it advances through the world, and down through future ages to its fullness of numbers, and to its perfection in the everlasting heavens. The book is indeed dark and hard to be understood, but then its darkness is not that of a night all cloudy. It is bespangled with many shining stars of clear and blessed truth, and is often irradiated with the bursting splendour of the Sun of righteousness himself. Christ is its Alpha and Omega, its beginning and ending. There is a special blessing pronounced on those who shall read, understand, and keep its sayings; which teaches us that it ought to be read with a humble and holy inquisitiveness that it may be understood, through the teaching of the divine Spirit, and that an intelligent obedience should be yielded to its blessed commands. It is addressed, in the first instance, to the seven churches of Asia, a perfect number, embracing all the varieties of character and circumstances which can belong to every true church in any age of the world, and the book was intended for all churches of Christ in all future ages. It begins with blessing, and is thus characteristic of the gospel. The fountain of this blessing is the eternal God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The Spirit is called the seven spirits, to denote the completeness of his power to accomplish all the purposes of grace in all the churches, and to fill them with his most blessed fruits. God's blessing his people leads them to bless and praise him, especially for his unspeakable gift, and to honour the Son, even as they honour the Father, because of his love, and death, and all the glorious fruits and consequences of union with him. No wonder, believers love to dwell on the name and character of Christ. It is as ointment poured forth. His three-fold office: witness or prophet; the first begotten from the dead; the priest who was dead for sin, but is alive again, to make intercession for his people, and to go before them in glory; and the prince of the kings of the earth, head over all things to the church which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. He will come to judge the world, and be the object of deepest universal attention to all men and angels, and of unutterable anguish to those who crucified him, and were not crucified with him. Believers rejoice in the hope of his coming; hail the prospect of it, and say, Amen. The apostle had in Patmos, to which he had been banished on account of Christ, a wonderful revelation of the glorious person of the incarnate Son of God. This was on the Lord's day, when he was in the Spirit, much occupied with spiritual and divine things. It is in affliction, and on that blessed day, that we may still expect the brightest manifestations of Christ's glory by the Spirit; for he walks in the midst of the churches, which are lights set up and kindled by him, to make men see and know him, and his people behold his beauty as they inquire in his temple. His beauty, so full of majesty, when clearly seen, overpowers the faculties, and lays the creature low in deep self-abasement; and it requires the putting forth of the gracious power of Christ himself to raise and assure the souls before him when he says, 'Fear not.' It is with such sweetness and strength that it gives life from the dead; and how joyful is it to his people to know from himself that he is eternal, almighty, and has, as the Son of man, and the head of his church, dominion over death and hell; that he was dead and now lives for evermore, so that the benefits of his death shall be secured to all his people; so that they may know that he fixes the time and manner of their death; will pass through it with them, and cause them to share in that blessed life of his beyond death and the grave. How pleased should believers be when they think of this, and how ready to say Amen to it all. The ministers of the gospel are as angels, messengers sent by Christ to publish his truth and salvation, and to pray sinners in his stead to be reconciled unto God; and they are as stars, receiving all their light from him, the Sun of righteousness, to shed it around, while he is personally invisible, and till he come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that now believe. And they are set in the churches as in candlesticks, to shine there in truth and holiness, and to attract the eyes of those who are still at a distance in the dark and dreary night of sin and death. Blessed are those eyes which see the ministers of the gospel shining in the light of Christ, and are by it devoted to Christ himself, beholding his glory, and changed unto the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

PRAYER.

How shall we, O Lord, who are sinful dust and ashes, appear before thee, who art so glorious in holiness, that if we could but see thee we should abhor ourselves. What blindness is this that sin has brought upon the eyes of our minds? What amazing ease and indifference of spirit is this which we feel when we kneel before thee, and take upon us to speak to thee. O God, do thou, in thy wonderful grace and power, remove our guilt, by leading us in repentance and faith to wash in Christ's blood. Does it not cleanse from all sin? O send thy quickening Spirit into our hearts, that we may live before thee. May he bring Christ the life unto our souls. May he open the eyes of our minds to see the matchless glory of thy only begotten Son, incarnate for our sakes, so that the power of that sight may humble us to the very dust, and we be made to feel the sweetness of his reviving word as it enters our ears and our hearts. O, for the glory of thine own name, let us be brought out of the death in trespasses and sins, to walk with Christ in newness of life. May we never be left any more to doubt his power and willingness to save us from sin, and death, and hell. We would cleave to him who is the resurrection and the life, that we may never die, and that we may find, when we leave this world, that he forsakes us not, but walks with us through the dark valley, and guides us past the shut gates of hell to his mansions of glory. And while he keeps us in this world, O may we be enabled rightly to understand and improve by his ministers, and ordinances, and word. Let us ever seek and ever find him in all these. May we never be absent from them. May we never find him absent, nor be guilty of provoking him to hide himself from our view. Clothe thy priests, O Lord, with salvation, that all thy saints may shout aloud for joy. Purify, defend, and bless thy church, and let the kingdom of thy dear Son be established in all the nations of the world.

Let antichrist be speedily consumed by the breath of Christ's own mouth; by the knowledge and power of that divine word which he speaks, but which his enemies hate, despise, and forbid to be known. O arise and plead thine own cause, and let thy Spirit and thy providence teach thy servants to read, understand, and keep the sayings that are written in this book. Let the heathen people fear thy name, and let all kings see thy glory. To thee, O most blessed Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to him thy well-beloved Son our Saviour, and to the Holy Ghost, our enlightener, sanctifier, and comforter, be glory, dominion and praise in earth among men, as in heaven among angels and spirits of the just made perfect. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM CV.

SCRIPTURE—MICAH V. VI.

REMARKS.

CHAP. V. The daughter of troops here addressed, may refer either to the Assyrian, or to the Babylonian power. Both fulfilled the predictions of the prophet, in the contempt and cruelty with which they treated God's ancient people. Human instruments, as well as the elements of the material world, are equally at the call, and under the control of Jehovah. While he authorizes them to smite, he permits them not to destroy his servants. Their utmost violence and despite cannot overstep his appointment, but are made to promote his high designs. Ver. 2. A ray of hope has ever gladdened the darkest period of the church's history. The Star of Bethlehem in the land of Judah, rises upon the eye of faith in the dreariest night. Inconsiderable as Bethlehem was among the flourishing cities of the distinguished tribe to which it belonged, it was the predicted birth-place of him who was co-existent with the everlasting Father, and set apart in the counsels of eternity to his mediatorial work. It is his high prerogative to confer dignity, while he can receive no addition to his essential greatness from any adventitious cause. He selected his earthly condition not more in evidence of his condescension, than of his inherent majesty and glory. A humble cottage may still be dignified by the presence of the 'King of saints,' and the lowly heart is honoured to entertain a heavenly guest. Ver. 3—5. The Jews should, nevertheless, for a season be given up to be harassed and led captive by the Chaldeans, and their other enemies, until a remnant of that chosen seed, united in the gospel age with the believing Gentiles, would be fed by the hand of the good Shepherd, under whose authority and care his church would be blessed with safety and enlargement. Happy they who are found in him, who is at once the door, the food, and the shepherd of his sheep. 'By me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.' Ver. 5—15. He is the source of peace to his church. Although enemies and persecutors, numerous and strong as the Assyrian host, assail, he shall raise up wise and powerful guardians to defend his spiritual Zion, and even to carry the war into the territory of the enemy. The doctrine of his word, when first proclaimed by his commissioned servants, distilled as the dew upon a parched and barren world; yet the very heralds of mercy were terrible and destructive, 'even as the lion among the beasts of the forest,' to proud and obstinate opposers. In the latter days does God promise to save his redeemed people from all false refuges, to purify them from their defilements, and to remove every vestige of their former idolatries. So, when the truth descends into the soul, it detaches from all self-righteousness; it cleanses from every pollution of the flesh and of the spirit; and ever whispers in the ear of its disciples, 'little children, keep yourselves from idols.'

CHAP. VI. The inanimate creation is here summoned to listen to the expostulation of Jehovah with Israel, on account of their flagrant ingratitude. All nature will finally adore, when his judgments are made manifest. If the appeal which God makes to his ancient people, upon the ground of national mercies and deliverances, is felt to be resistless, is not the argument equally powerful when applied to ourselves? What blessings has he bestowed; what protection vouchsafed; what a marvellous interposition has he made in our behalf? But, alas! how unthankful! Yet, blessed be the compassionate Power that still pleads with us, we are not left in perplexity as to the means whereby the perturbed conscience may be soothed and pacified. It is not the costly oblation. It is not the accumulation of sacrificial offerings; much less is it the revolting rite which a murderous superstition has often practised, that can appease an offended Judge. The path of acceptance, and of duty, is clearly marked by the finger of God. He hath showed thee, O man, in the scriptures at large, 'what is good;' he hath spoken to thee by its types, and by its prophecies; he hath pointed out the good way of justification by faith, and the good way of personal obedience. He hath made peace by the death of Immanuel's cross, a believing view of which calms all the terrors awakened by the consciousness of unexpiated guilt, and lays the foundation of a willing and devoted service. Then, and then only, shall we learn to do justly in reference to God, our neighbour, and ourselves; then, to be gentle, compassionate, and kind to others, because we have ourselves been forgiven; then, to walk humbly with our God, renouncing the various forms of pride and self-dependence so natural to the heart, and advancing in the path of life, subdued and quickened by the conscious and welcome presence of a heavenly witness, protector, and guide.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the great source of all light and holy influence. We bless thee that thou hast in thy holy word shown us what is good, truly good for our fallen condition. We thank thee that thou hast there made known to us a Saviour, who has paid the debt incurred by all who shall believe in his name, who has satisfied by justice, and through whom thou dost now manifest thyself to us as a reconciled God. Apply by thy Holy Spirit thine own most precious gift. In vain is it held forth to us, unless thou dost give the disposition to receive it. Make us willing to submit ourselves to the proposals of thy mercy and grace. Let us know Christ, not only as a Saviour, but as our Saviour. Let us not only be persuaded by the authority of thy word, that he is able and willing to save unto the uttermost; but let us be assured, that he is able and willing to save us. And being justified freely by thy grace, may we be sanctified fully by thy Spirit. Having been shown the good way of admission to thy favour, O grant, that what brings peace, may bring purity to our souls. Let a sense of our unspeakable obligation be expressed by doing what thou the Lord our God dost require of us. Whilst we bring all our doings, as well as all our sins, to the foot of the cross, and look for acceptance only through his accepted sacrifice, who was there wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities, may we take thy law as a rule of life, and may we be humbled and quickened by the knowledge that it is exceeding broad. May all our intercourse and transactions with others this day, be regulated by the scripture maxims of justice, integrity, and truth. Let a spirit of forbearance and forgiveness manifest itself, under whatever provocation we may suffer; even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven us. Teach us to bear each other's burdens, and so to fulfil the law of Christ. And thus by thy grace let us seek to prove, by an evidence which none can gainsay nor resist, that by faith we do not make void but establish the law. Especially, do thou dispose and enable us, we beseech thee, to walk humbly with our God. May a sense of sin; a feeling of dependence; and the weight of those obligations of gratitude under which thou hast placed us, press us down, and keep us lowly; so that we may know in our experience, that he who walketh humbly, walketh surely. And, when we remember that thou art with us; that it is our honour and our privilege to walk with thee, O let the solemn but animating thought, stimulate us to duty, sustain us under temptation, and be a sweet solace in the hour of tribulation and sorrow. May the knowledge of thy revealed will, with which we are favoured and comforted, be extended to the whole family of man. Let all whom we should bear upon our spirits before thee, receive the blessings we desire and supplicate for ourselves; and all that we would ask, is for the sake of Christ Jesus, our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 11.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION II.

REMARKS.

Of the seven epistles, addressed immediately by Christ to the seven churches of Asia, four are contained in this chapter. They are ushered in to our reverend attention and regard, by the solemn views they present of the character of their Author, and of our own interest in the admonitions and warnings they convey. Our exalted Lord and King, manifests himself by different, but appropriate representations, to each of the several churches. To that of Ephesus, as exercising a minute and special guardianship over the condition and affairs of his church; watching the purity and lustre, or marking the growing dimness of the light which he had kindled; a representation fitted to give the utmost weight to the approval he expresses of the soundness and steadfastness of their faith; to impart a deep solemnity to the rebuke he administers to the declining ardour of their love; and to the threatening he denounces, to withdraw the privileges they had failed to improve. To the church in Smyrna he makes himself known as the First and the Last, a description that can only be justly appropriated by the one living and true God; and at the same time alludes to his humiliation unto death, and his glorious resurrection; a view of his character, suited to sustain and encourage them under their tribulations and sufferings. the measure and duration of which were appointed by one who could fully sympathize with them, and from which he was able in due time to give them a joyful deliverance. To the church at Pergamos, he describes himself as having the sharp sword with two edges; thus manifesting his power at once to conquer the wicked one, in the midst of whose usurped empire that church was situated, and to punish and overthrow those, who, professing to be among the number of his people, corrupted or perverted the truth. To the church in Thyatira he addresses himself as the Son of God, whose eyes are like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brass; a representation at once of his omniscience and purity, which could not fail to convince that church, that while he did not overlook their faith and patience, he knew and hated the false doctrines and evil practices with which they were chargeable.

While there is thus an appropriate character in which Christ represents himself to each of those churches, there is much and solemn instruction conveyed to us in his addresses to them all. His observation of their state is special and minute. Not only is open heresy and defection detected, but no languor or decay is too incipient, no seed or element of evil is too latent, no form of delusion and sin is too specious or subtle, to escape the notice of his all-seeing eye. His epistles denote keen and searching discrimination. He distinguishes between the most imposing counterfeits and true grace, with a certainty equal to that with which he shall at last divide the sheep from the goats. Candour and kindness no less distinguish these solemn addresses to the churches. He pronounces no universal censure, and no sweeping condemnation. He recognises and approves whatever is right and praiseworthy in their condition, marks what is wanting, and denounces only what is amiss. Nor can we at the same time fail to observe, that he speaks the language of holy strictness and stern severity. He is jealous of the purity and truth of his nature. His glory will he not give to another, neither his praise to graven images; and his threatenings against those churches, in case of continued impenitence, to remove their candlestick, and to fight against them with the sword of his mouth, have long ago received a sad fulfilment. Yet he speaks too, in the animating language of encouragement and hope, to such as by his grace shall be enabled to overcome. The fruit of the tree of life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God; an everlasting exemption from the second death; the hidden manna, the white stone, the morning star, are among the blessings and rewards that shall crown the conqueror. 'He that hath an ear, therefore, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.'

With that Lord and Judge who addresses them we have to do. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. His omniscience, purity, justice, and truth are unchanged and unchangeable. He here, therefore, speaks to us with an admonitory voice, to search and try our ways, to repent of our departures from the simplicity of faith, and the purity of life he demands, and to maintain the conflict like good soldiers in the Christian warfare, that by his strength we may overcome.

PRAYER.

Thou God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we rejoice to know, that it hath pleased thee, that in him should all fullness dwell. We bless thee, that while he is raised to universal dominion, he exercises a special superintendence and control over the affairs of his spiritual kingdom. Thou exalted Saviour, who art head over all things to thy church, having all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit dwelling in thee, and power to dispense them in their utmost perfection and variety, unto thee would we desire to lift up our souls. Give us, we pray thee, the spirit of repentance. Enable us to review with deep humility, the sins and defections with which we stand chargeable before thee; and realizing thy presence, whose eyes are as a flame of fire, let us be humbled when we reflect, that if our own hearts condemn us, thou art greater than our hearts and knowest all things. Let the love of God, we beseech thee, be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us, and let the existence of that divine principle be manifested by its increasing prevalence and power. Keep us from yielding to the causes of fainting and weariness in the Christian life to which we are liable; nor ever suffer us to subject ourselves to the rebuke incurred, by departing from our first love. Bless us with the purity of heart which shall fit us to see God; and from the fountain thus made pure, may there ever flow the streams of a new and holy obedience. Implant and perfect within us all the graces of the spiritual life, and then wilt thou look with divine complacency upon thine own work in our souls. May we be distinguished for our labour and patience; for that poverty of spirit which maketh truly rich; for a firm adherence to our Christian profession, whatever dangers or persecutions may arise; for our charity, and service, and faith. Amid the struggles and the warfare in which we are engaged, when the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, when Satan tempts, when the world allures, God of our salvation, give us to look unto Jesus with a simple faith, who for our sakes hath overcome, and beckons us to follow his footsteps, and calls us to share the fruits of his victory. Thou God of our lives, we give thee thanks for thy sustaining providence, exercised towards us during the past day, and the week that is now brought to a close. We would betake ourselves, with all the sins which memory records and conscience condemns, with the sins of ignorance and those which we have forgotten; we would bring them all to the purifying fountain thou hast opened, and to which thou invitest us to apply. O cleanse us from all our pollutions. Let ours be the peace that arises, not from sins being forgotten, but from its being forgiven and washed away. Watch over us during the helpless hours of repose; and should we arise to another sabbath of the Son of man, fit us, and all thy servants and people for its solemn duties, that its services may promote in us and in them the qualities that are pleasing in thy sight, and that prepare for the rest of heaven, through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

FIFTIETH WEEK. SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXIX.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXXXIX.

REMARKS.

In this sublime composition, which seems to be a solemn appeal to God upon the part of the psalmist, that he was innocent of the traitorous designs alleged against him, we are presented with the most exalted views of the divine omnipresence and omniscience. In a succession of the loftiest thoughts that were ever embodied in the language of mortals, the inspired writer describes the exact and intimate knowledge of all things possessed by the great object of his worship. Every movement of the body, every forming thought and rising emotion before it finds utterance in speech, the most hidden motive, the most secret purpose, the most private act, is fully open to the eye of God. With a feeling of awe, mingled with that of exultation, he celebrates the presence of Jehovah, pervading and filling the universe he has made. There is no escape from his special and searching observation. Heaven is filled with his glory; the grave cannot cover from his sight; the invisible world is open to his view. Though darting with the rapidity of a sunbeam to the outskirts of creation, the fugitive spirit finds that God is there. The shades of deepest darkness cannot protect from his notice; but the night shineth as the day. Regulating the gradual process by which the human frame, so wondrous in its texture, is curiously wrought and fashioned, he equally mingles with the inmost workings of the Spirit that inhabits it.

How alarming and distasteful soever such a contemplation must be to the unrenewed soul, it is full of comfort to the devout spirit of the psalmist. Every returning morning brings fresh delight in the consciousness that his God was near. He appeals to omniscience that he had no fellowship of purpose or of spirit with the cruel and ungodly, with whose alliance he had been accused. And above all, he desires to lay open his heart to the inspection of infinite purity, that whatever was sinful might be removed, that he might be wholly conformed to the divine will, and guided in the way everlasting.

This view of the omniscience of God may well fill us with adoration and gratitude on account of his forbearance and patience towards the children of men; that, although he knows every sin of purpose and of feeling, as well as of conduct, which pollutes the human character; pollution which, were it in the case of any of us known to our fellow-men, would cover us with shame, and which must be infinitely odious in his sight, he still suspends the execution of his wrath, permits us to breathe the air of this his world, and to hope for his mercy. How favourable the influence which this affecting doctrine would have, were it practically realized, in deterring from sin, and quickening in the path of obedience! How would it rebuke hypocrisy, and encourage sincerity and truth! How would it support the mind under calumny and reproach, and strike terror into the heart of the perpetrator of secret wickedness, as well as unnerve the arm of the ruthless oppressor!

For the purpose of Christian edification too, the great truth which this psalm so impressively exhibits may be made subservient to the comfort of the returning backslider. How widely soever he may have gone astray, though he may have sullied his Christian reputation, belied his profession, denied his Lord, if blessed with a Spirit of repentance, and conscious of returning love, he can still make the appeal, 'Lord, thou knowest all things.' Others may doubt the reality of my repentance, question the sincerity of my tears; I cannot convince them, for they have no access to the consciousness of my bosom; but thou knowest the frame of my spirit, the grace with which thou hast blessed me, and wilt thou not accept that which is thine own? Would we be humbled in the dust before God, let us ponder the solemn truth elucidated in this psalm. Alas! how dismal the contrast presented between the purity of him whose character it describes, and the pollution that stains our hearts! and yet his eye rests upon each of us, as if each of us were the only objects of his inspection. Let but the consciousness of his invisible presence exist within us, and then should we repent and abhor ourselves in dust and ashes. Would we be encouraged to pray, let us reflect that he is here to teach us to pray, to search out and cleanse away our sins, to anticipate our wants and desires, to hear and answer our supplications.

PRAYER.

Inspire us, O Lord, with reverence and godly fear when we would presume to approach the majesty of heaven. If at all times thou God seest us, and if our inmost thoughts are at all times open to the inspection of thine eye, let us remember that it becometh us more especially to realize thy spiritual presence, when we come before thee as worshippers, and solicit thy notice in the language of prayer. Let the impressive contemplation of thy character, as the all-seeing and all-present God, brought before our minds in the portion of thy word which we have been reading together, be blessed by thee for our conviction and comfort. Till thou dost thyself, by thy Holy Spirit, enable us justly to appreciate and rightly to feel this solemn truth, it will produce no salutary effect; we will still seek to hide ourselves from thy presence; the truth concerning thee will fill with sullen dislike, not with holy fear; it will inspire terror, but will not awaken confidence. Give us, therefore, we pray thee, to know thee as our reconciled Father in Christ Jesus the Son of thy love. May ours be the feelings towards thee of the children of thine own redeemed and adopted family. May we rejoice in the continual and conscious presence of our Father in heaven. Remembering that thou understandest our thoughts afar off, let us be watchful over the spirit of our minds. Knowing that thou possessest our reins, may we be on our guard against all dissimulation, and have grace to serve thee in sincerity and truth; and may we be filled with deep self-abasement when we think that thou settest our iniquity before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance. When temptation assails, when corruption struggles for the mastery, let us maintain the conflict as seeing thee who art invisible. To the voice of sinful allurements may our reply ever be, Shall we do this great evil and sin against God? May we walk with thee, receiving the fulfilment of the promise, that we shall know, if we follow on to know the Lord. And as we advance in our pilgrimage, may we find in the presence of a covenant God a support under every trial, and a consolation in the season of bereavement and affliction. And especially, in the duties of this thine own day, the light of which thou hast made to cheer our dwelling, may we realize thy presence in the sanctuary. May the blessed Saviour preside by the power of his Spirit over the ordinances he has appointed. May he lead his people, by the ministry of his commissioned servants, among the green pastures and the still waters, by which their spiritual nature shall be refreshed and matured. May we and all our fellow-worshippers be impressed with the solemn thought, that thou dost mark the frame of mind, as well as the outward deportment, of every one who approaches thy courts. And whether in the exercises of devotion, or in listening to the truths of thy word, give us grace to worship thee in spirit and in truth, and thus to worship thee with acceptance through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Our Father who art in heaven, &c.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLI.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXL. CXLI. CXLII.

REMARKS.

These several psalms seem to have been indited during a time of trial and persecution which David suffered, and which included a considerable period of his life. Nor is it wonderful that so large a portion of the divine record, designed as it is for the instruction and support of the believer in a world of tribulation, should be employed to describe the workings of the devout mind in the season of suffering and disquietude. Among other important particulars which these psalms suggest, they teach us, 1st, That it is the privilege of the believer to pour all his anxieties and cares into the ear of God. He has an ever present, powerful, sympathizing, and unchanging friend. To him he is not only permitted but disposed to make known his whole case. Having received the Spirit of adoption, the child of God delights to unbosom all his perplexities and sorrows to his Father in heaven. It is said of John's disciples, after they had buried their master, who had been beheaded by the command of a cruel tyrant, that 'they went and told Jesus;' a similar impulse brings to Jesus still. When the wicked sharpen their tongues; when they hide their snares and spread their nets for his feet; when the most dismal calamities overtake him, and the bones of his adherents and friends are scattered at the grave's mouth, the believer tells it all to his Saviour and God, at once acknowledging his providence, and seeking his sympathy, direction, and aid, in the time of need. It is one evidence of affliction being sanctified when it brings near to God. The passage instructs us, 2d, That true prayer is eager and importunate. 'Deliver me;' 'Lord, I cry unto thee;' 'Attend to my cry;' 'Bring my soul out of prison,' are some of the expressions here employed, powerfully denoting the utmost intensity of desire, and the earnestness of supplication. How solemn the rebuke which such language administers to the cold and formal worshipper! A sense of weakness, destitution, and danger, will ever find utterance in strong crying, with tears, to him who is able to help. Peter, when about to be swallowed up by the devouring waves, cried out, 'Lord, save me, I perish.' And when we think of the consequences of being denied God's interposition in our behalf, does not the consideration justify the utmost earnestness in imploring it? If it may not be said of us, Ye receive not because ye ask not; may it not justly be said, Ye receive not, because ye ask amiss? 3d, We are also taught that a desire to be freed from all sin characterizes the spiritual worshipper. That the psalmist might be preserved from offending by his words or his conduct, amid the provocations he suffered, is the subject of his earnest prayer. His request is that God would set a watch before his mouth, that he would prevent the inward thought of evil. Nay, such was his anxiety to know and to avoid every form of sin to which he might be tempted, that he would regard the enlightened rebuke, the sharp reproof of the righteous, as a softening and healing oil. We too should seek especially to be delivered from those sins to which our outward trials may furnish an occasion, or which they may tempt us to commit. Grace in the soul can never exist in union with cherished corruption. The desire of every devout mind is to be cleansed from secret faults, as well as delivered from presumptuous sins. It further appears, 4th, from the psalms we have read, that some hope of ultimate deliverance will usually cheer the pious soul, even during the season of darkness and affliction. This hope is repeatedly expressed by the psalmist. In the midst of all the persecutions and reproach to which he refers, he expresses his confidence that the Lord would maintain the cause of the afflicted; 'the up-ght,' says he, 'shall dwell in thy presence;' 'the ghteous shall compass me about, for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.' Amid all the darkness and mystery which envelop the dispensations of God, ever let us lose sight of the encouraging truth, that erily it shall be well with the righteous. Nor let be convinced and humbled sinner ever be filled with espondency or despair. His abasement is the pledge of his exaltation. As the cross conducts to the crown, as the night of death precedes the dawn of immortality, so must we die unto sin that we may live unto righteousness. And, finally, we are instructed that the triumph of the wicked shall be short. While every feeling of personal malice and vengeance will be anxiously suppressed in the devout reast, the friends of truth and godliness cannot but rejoice with the psalmist in the prospect of the final revelance of those principles which will bring glory to God and happiness to the universe. Although his state of things implies the overthrow and destruction of obstinate sinners, as well as of persecutors and oppressors, the judicial infliction by which the wicked shall fall into their own nets, even into deep pits, that they rise not up again, shall not interrupt the happiness of the redeemed. 'All nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest.'

PRAYER.

Great and marvellous are all thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are all thy ways, thou King of saints. Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? O thou who desirest truth in the inward parts, do thou purify our souls from every pollution. Keep us not only from an open violation of thy righteous commands, but incline not our hearts to any evil thing. Let all old things be made to pass away, and all things as to the views, aims, desires, and actings of our minds, to become new; and from the mountain of a heart, purified by thy grace, may there flow forth the streams of a holy obedience.
Inspire us with that hope which is an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast; and through whatever course of discipline thou mayest be-leased to conduct us, however painful to the flesh, or how great soever the exercise of self-denial it may involve, we would desire to submit ourselves in a humble and child-like spirit, in the blessed expectation that thou wilt make the means of fitting us for the inheritance of the saints in light. Encourage us to maintain the conflict with sin, whether within or around us.
Let us remember that although the warfare may be sharp, the victory is sure; and as thou art the source of our strength in fighting the good fight of faith, let us be disposed to ascribe to thee the glory of our success. Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. For the purpose of moulding our souls into an entire conformity to thy blessed will, O thou who alone canst render the ordinances of thine appointment subservient to the great purposes of spiritual edification, give efficacy to the word of thy grace spoken to us this day. May thy word be mighty and powerful in our case and in that of our fellow-worshippers, in promoting all the gracious designs for which it has been proclaimed from heaven. Let not our sins and manifold provocations; let not the pollution which taints our holy duties, obstruct the blessed influence which, by the power of thy Spirit, it is fitted to exert. May its impression be rendered abiding and practical; nor suffer us to be like the man who, beholding his natural face in a glass, goeth away, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But grant that the truth as it is in Jesus may be so continually present to the eye of our faith, that it may transform us into his image, from one degree of glory to another, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Exercise thy guardian care over us through the silent watches of the night. If it is thy will that we should arise to the life and blessings of a new day, when we awake may we be still with thee. May the duties of the sabbath exert a salutary and sanctifying influence upon our minds during all the intercourse of the week; and enable us to prove the difference that there is between those who live unto God, and those who live unto themselves. And unto the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, be all the glory, now and for evermore. Amen.

PRaise—PSALM XIV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MICAH VII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The first six verses contain a humiliating account of the moral degeneracy into which the whole nation had fallen. Good men were so scarce that, compared with the wicked, they resembled the scanty gleanings of the vintage. Iniquity alone seemed to abound, and on all hands it presented itself in its most appalling forms. Avarice, deceit, cruelty, selfishness, bribery, were indulged by all ranks without restraint, and without remorse. Justice, like a marketable commodity, was openly bought and sold; for princes and judges, the ruler and the ruled, were equally ready to deal in bribes, and to take reward against the innocent. In the gratification of these evil passions, the dearest ties of relationship were sacrilegiously violated; for the wife was ready to betray the husband, and the son to dishonour the father. There remained no friend in whom any one could trust; for the worst of a man's foes might arise from among the men of his own house.

This was an excessive state of degeneracy; but notwithstanding its prevalence, there was still a few in the land who remained steadfast in the service of God. Like those in the days of Elijah who refused to bow the knee to Baal, these faithful worshippers formed a very precious remnant; and as constituting the proper representatives of the church, they are introduced at ver. 7. as taking comfort in the prospect that the Lord would, in due time, interpose in their behalf, and deliver them from all the wickedness, and all the troubles by which they were surrounded. In the confident expectation of this they counselled their enemies, the heathen nations that sought to waste the heritage of God, not to triumph over them, as if they should never regain the freedom and prosperity they were destined for a time to forfeit. For a certain season they would be condemned to sit in darkness, as a just punishment for the sins of the nation, but when the Lord had exacted what he considered to be right in vindication of his authority, he would return in mercy to his ancient people. This their enemies would behold with confusion, for then they themselves would be overtaken with fearful retribution, even to 'be trodden down as the mire of the streets.' Merited punishment would overtake the enemies of the church, and the walls of Jerusalem would be rebuilt, when to this the city of their fathers, the children of the captivity would return from the land of Assyria, and all other places whether they had been scattered.

Looking forward to these happy events, which the prophet was fully assured would come to pass, he humbly entreats the Lord, at ver. 14, to feed his people, and to this the Lord is represented as returning an answer by declaring, that, as in their former deliverance out of Egypt, he would once more show them wonderful things, which would wholly confound the nations around, and especially those who had been the oppressors in the times of their captivity. As all these revolutions were to take place through the Lord's great mercy to his people, notwithstanding their many provocations, the prophet was led very justly to exclaim, 'Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage!' Great as the blessings were which the church expected to derive from the Lord, she might still confidently hope that none of them would be withheld, for they had been promised by him, and not one of his promises will he ever forget.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. The enjoyment of the richest means of grace affords no security in itself against indulgence in the greatest wickedness. 2. The fearful state of moral degeneracy into which the Jewish nation so frequently fell, abundantly showed that they were not chosen by God because of 'the uprightness of their heart.' 3. There is no security for faithfulness and continued tenderness of affection in the dearest relative except religious principle sanctifies the union of friends. 4. God often employs wicked men to chastise his own people, and when their work is done, they are next brought under his awful judgments for their cruel oppressions. 5. All our trouble arise from our sins, and we should readily acknowledge that they justly awake the indignation of God. 6. Our hope of salvation is in the pardoning mercy of God through Jesus Christ. 7. The security possessed by the church, that God will not forsake her amidst her many provocations, consists in his own gracious covenant made with the Son of his love.

PRAYER.

O God, we desire to approach the footstool of thy throne with the deepest humility, because we know that in thy sight we are naturally polluted and vile. We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities, like the wind, have carried us away. Like a deceitful bow we have all turned aside, so that there is none righteous, no not one; we have become all unprofitable. We desire, O our God, to consider attentively the great degeneracy of our nature, that we may see what abundant cause there is for our being humbled in thy sight. Thou hast shown us, in what thou hast recorded of the history of thy church, how desperately wicked men may become amidst the greatest outward advantages. In the deeds of the ungodly, by whom we are surrounded, we fully recognise the corruption of our common nature, and we are satisfied from our own experience that the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. We are all ready to despise the kindest warnings; to reject the most salutary counsels; to spurn from us the richest offers of mercy. O Lord, do thou in thy goodness enable us to deplore this our fallen and helpless state. Lead us to perceive its misery and wretchedness, and leave us not to despair of relief, but guide us to him who is mighty to save, even to him who is both able and willing to deliver. We rejoice that thy hand has been upon the man of thy right hand, upon the Son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself. Look upon us, therefore, in the face of thine Anointed, and for his sake, do thou blot out all our iniquities. Wash us in his blood; and though our sins be red like scarlet, and like crimson, they shall be white as the snow, and white as wool. Cleanse us from all our sins, and thus prepare us for that blessed place into which nothing can enter that defileth, or worketh abomination, or maketh a lie. These things we take all encouragement to ask, for verily there is no God like unto thee, who pardoneth iniquity, and who passeth by the transgression of the remnant of thine heritage. Hear the voice of our entreaty, through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be everlasting praise. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION III.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. Sardis was the capital of Lydia in Asia Minor. It was much celebrated for its great wealth, and the dissolute manners of its inhabitants, but it is now reduced to the condition of presenting only a few mud huts, which are occupied by Turkish herdsmen. Within it Christianity has not so much as even a name; for no professed disciple of Jesus is found in the place, so that the church which was once there is literally dead. When Jesus here speaks of himself as having the seven Spirits of God, it may be considered as referring to his having at his disposal the gift of the Holy Ghost, who although but one undivided person in the Trinity, is spoken of in this figurative way as if he were many, in consequence of the variety of his graces and operations. The church at Sardis was appropriately reminded by its great Head of his being able to communicate this divine agent, so that it might look for the blessing, in order to awaken the many who were spiritually dead within its pale to new life and vigour. So long as they remained in this condition they were every moment exposed to danger. Hence the necessity of repentance and reformation. Nor did their case admit, safely, of any delay; for Jesus might come speedily, even as a thief in the night, to demand their final account. The consideration of this was calculated to quicken their diligence, and they had another argument, not less powerful, in the promise mentioned in ver. 5; for this they would inherit, if they came to resemble those of their neighbours who were commended as keeping their garments unspotted by the flesh; who were attempting to serve their God in holiness and purity of life.

Ver. 7—13. The epistle, in these verses, is addressed to the church in Philadelphia. This city, which is now known by a different name, still remains, and reckons about a thousand among its inhabitants who profess the Christian religion. The titles which the Saviour claims, in the epistle, are very significant. He speaks of himself as 'he that is holy,' which implies his supreme divinity; for the title, 'Holy One' pertains to God only, and this gives intimation, at the same time, of his hatred of all sin, and his love of righteousness and purity. As 'he that is true,' he exercises all faithfulness, for he is ever mindful of his promises; and in declaring that he possesses the key of David, whilst he shuts and opens at pleasure, he sets forth his prerogative to admit into his church, or to exclude from it whomsoever he sees fit. He is the supreme Governor in his own house, opening the door to whom he will, whether by the key of doctrine or of discipline. In the exercise of this function he had presented to the inhabitants of Philadelphia, a door of entrance into his church, by the preaching of the gospel; and after commending his faithful servants therein for all that was praise-worthy in their conduct, he urged them to maintain their stedfastness, by alluding to the honour and the blessedness he would confer on them in the mansions of eternal rest.

Ver. 14—21. The city of Laodicea has long been reduced to a mass of ruins; without inhabitant, save in so far as it is the dwelling-place of beasts of prey. The desolation that has overtaken it, is more complete than what has befallen any of the other six cities from which the seven churches of Asia derived their name. As it was the most corrupt of them all, so hath its punishment been the more signal. It was threatened with awful judgments if it did not repent. This was calculated to arouse its lukewarm professors to a sense of their danger; and farther to encourage their return to duty, they were invited to come to Jesus for the supply of every thing of which they stood in need. He was at hand for this very purpose; he was at the very door, and even importunately asking admittance, that he might go in, and hold sweet intercourse and fellowship with them. Nor was this all that those should enjoy who were ready to entertain him; for in the event of their being proclaimed victors in the end, they would be allowed to sit down with him on his throne in the kingdom of heaven.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, we draw near unto thee in the name of thy Son Jesus Christ, through whom we have access by one Spirit unto thee the Father. We rejoice to contemplate him in the ever-blessed characters in which he has revealed himself in that portion of thine own word we have now read, wherein he is made known to us as the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the beginning of the creation of God. We have the assurance that in all respects he bore witness to the truth, while on earth, by which he earned the testimony that he was faithful to him who appointed him, even as Moses was faithful in all his house. He kept no part of God's counsel back, for he delighted ever to make known his will; he always rejoiced to make known the message with which he was fraught for the salvation of perishing sinners. O Lord, enable us, attentively, to consider the heavenly message with which we have thus been favoured. May the word of Christ dwell in us richly in all wisdom, so that it may ever be a light unto our feet, and a lamp unto our path. We rejoice, O our Saviour, to look to thee as still continuing to give direction by thy word, and thy Spirit, in the church which thou hast planted and watered with thine own blood. Thou art still a witness; thou art still a leader, and a commander to the people; for thou hast the keys of David, and shuttest, and no man openeth, and openest, and no man shutteth. O Lord, do thou, in thine abundant mercy, exercise thy prerogative in our behalf, and open the door of our hearts, that thy word may have free entrance, so that we may glorify thee in our walk and conversation. May it be rendered effectual through the Spirit in casting down every imagination; every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and in bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of thee our Lord and Saviour. O that we were brought into this state of conformity to the divine will, for then would Christ come in and sup with us; then would our fellowship be with the Father, and with the Son, and with the Holy Ghost. O that we had more of longing desire after such communion; but, alas, our affections are too much set on earthly things! We have too much regard for the world and its polluting pleasures; and thus, like the church of Laodicea, we are lukewarm, being neither cold nor hot. May we instantly take warning respecting the danger of continuing in such a state, and forthwith seek to love thee with all our soul, with all our heart, and with all our might. Constrain us, by thy great power, to give ourselves wholly to thy service; and may we always be ready to declare, even in the most trying circumstances in which we may be placed, that we are for thee, and not for another. Hear, O our God, these our humble petitions. Return to them an answer in peace, and all that we ask is in the name of our once crucified, but now highly exalted Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—HABAKKUK I.

REMARKS.

As the things to which Habakkuk's attention was directed at the time of writing his prophecies, were much calculated to excite grief in the pious mind, while they were to be the means of producing great misery and wretchedness among his countrymen, he alludes to them with great propriety by the expressive name of 'a burden.' In this way he designates the abounding of iniquity in the land; the triumphing of the ungodly in their wickedness; and the remarkable dispensation he anticipated in the threatening of God, who was about to employ a nation to scourge and chastise another nation, although in itself still more desperately wicked and meritorious of suffering under the afflictive judgments of heaven.

themselves laid under a temptation to yield to the supposition entertained by the ungodly, that 'the way of the Lord is not equal,' Ezek. xviii. 25, and one thing which they are apt to regard as illustrating this, consists in his occasionally permitting proud and haughty sinners to enjoy prosperity, while his faithful servants are borne down by oppression. David, we find, was tempted in this way, as he informs us in Psal. lxxiii. Habakkuk also seems to have been in some measure influenced by a similar view in reference to the Chaldeans being permitted to indulge in wanton cruelty and oppression against the Jews, notwithstanding their being chosen by God to be his peculiar people: but all his difficulties arising from this source, he was enabled to surmount by what he learned was to be the fate of these enemies of his nation. They were first of all to be employed as instruments in punishing his countrymen for their numerous and aggravated sins; and when this their appointed work should be performed, then the Lord would in a signal manner bring them under condign punishment for their wanton cruelty and other heinous offences. The Jews were highly deserving of severe chastisement, for, as represented in ver. 2—4, they abounded in transgression.

This fearful state of crime was not to pass unpunished, and the destined punishment was to be inflicted by the Chaldeans, for God was to make use of them for this special purpose. The miseries which were thus destined to come upon the Jews, the prophet contemplated with considerable distress of mind; but he derived at the same time encouragement enabling him to bear up under 'the burden' of sorrow, from certain animating views of God's character, and these he notices for the consolation of others in ver. 12. Therein he speaks of God as the 'holy One,' and the very title implies that every thing that he does is free of sin and all unrighteousness. Having, even from eternity, ordained the preservation of Israel, which he made known to the patriarchs, and through them to the world, they certainly would not be allowed to 'die' or perish as a nation, notwithstanding the calamities they were to endure. The Chaldeans, fierce and destructive as they were, could not exceed the bounds set for them by Jehovah. They were no more, after all, than instruments in his hand; for 'he had ordained them for judgment, and established them for correction.' The prophet took farther comfort from contemplating God as 'of purer eyes than to behold evil,' for while this view of his character would of itself account for his bringing severe judgments on his ancient people, it was also a guarantee that their destroyers, in this case, would not escape that punishment they justly merited on account of their relentless cruelties. Confiding in this view, the prophet ventured to appeal to the Lord, as to whether he would continue silent while the wicked persecutors of the Jews destroyed and devoured the men that after all were 'more righteous than they themselves were.' In farther proof of the wickedness of these scorers, the circumstance is adverted to, that after seizing on their unfortunate captives, as if they had been catching fish, they, in a manner, idolized the means they adopted in carrying forward their onquests, as if these had been the divinities that insured their success. In this they acted as foolishly as the fisherman would do were he formally to worship his net, and the other implements of his craft.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O God, for what thou art in thyself, and for what thou art to the children of men. Thou art glorious in holiness; thou art fearful in praises; thou art ever doing wonders. The greatness of thine acts in providence and grace, illustrate the excellence of thy wisdom, and thy power, and thy goodness. They show that thou art unsearchable in thy ways, and that thy judgments are past finding out. As King over all, thou doest whatsoever seemeth good unto thee in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth. Thou alone art Governor among the nations, and in the exercise of thy sovereignty thou buildest up and thou pullest down; thou carriest away as with an overwhelming flood, and again thou bringest back, so as to cause the voice of joy and gladness to be heard in the land. All things are in thine hand, and thou doest with them according to thy pleasure; for as may best serve the great purposes of thy government, thou killest, and thou makest alive; thou bringest down to the grave, and thou bringest up again; thou makest poor, and thou makest rich; thou raisest up the poor out of the dust, and liftest up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory.

We gladly acknowledge thy right to do these things, O Lord; for the pillars of the earth are thine, and thou hast set the world upon them. O Lord, do thou help us to recognize continually thy sovereignty, that we may pay more attention to the evidences that are afforded in the distresses thou bringest on the kingdoms of the earth, of thy displeasure at sin. Incline us fully to obey the invitation which bids us come and behold what desolations the Lord hath brought upon the earth. Of old thou didst in thy wrath destroy the world with a flood, and the cities of the plain with a deluge of fire. Thou hast swept from the face of the earth many of its once mightiest monarchies; for when the cup of their iniquity was full, thou didst make them drink, in punishment of their desperate wickedness, the wine of astonishment. Verily thou art a jealous God, and wilt assuredly take vengeance on all thine adversaries. Who can stand before the indignation of the Lord? who can abide the fierceness of his anger? Heavenly Father, enable us to seek freedom from all sin; for sin is the cause of all the calamities to which as individuals, or as a nation, we are exposed. Help us to take refuge in the Son of thy love, who, through his atoning sacrifice, has become to all who have faith in his righteousness, as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Thither may thy Holy Spirit induce us to flee, for it is only in the blood of the Redeemer that safety is to be found. O God, listen to these our supplications. And now unto thee the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be everlasting praise, world without end. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE LXV. 5.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION IV. V.

REMARKS.

CHAP. IV. This chapter may be regarded in the light of an introduction to the prophetic part of the book of Revelation. In preparing John for recording the predictions regarding the future state of the church, which he was about to write, the Spirit favoured him with a vision or an emblematical representation of the third heavens, which is set forth in scripture as the peculiar dwelling-place of God, and of the spirits of just men made perfect. The throne which he beheld in this manner, was designed to bring into recognition the majesty and the sovereignty of God, and although he is spoken of as having been seated on this throne, yet he is not described as possessing any particular form or shape. By this we are reminded that God is without bodily parts, and therefore any description which is attempted of him must be guided by a reference to his glorious perfections, as these are displayed in his works of providence and grace. In this instance, John endeavours to produce suitable impressions of the greatness of God, by alluding to the resplendence and glory in which he was displayed, and this he describes, by saying that he who sat on the throne 'was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone.' The figurative language that is farther made use of, in delineation of the scene which was thus contemplated, is evidently constructed with the design of exalting our conceptions regarding the supereminent glory in which Jehovah is revealed to his saints in his holy temple.

The four and twenty elders who were seen occupying seats around the throne, are generally considered to be the representatives of the church of God; and possibly there may be an allusion to the twelve tribes, and the twelve apostles, which added together, make up the number twenty-four. Along with these, there were also seen near the throne four 'beasts,' or as the phrase should be translated, 'living creatures,' full of eyes before and behind, which seem to denote their vigilance and circumspection

These creatures, as being comparatively few, in proportion to the number of elders, and as occupying an intermediate space between the elders and the throne, seem to represent the ministers, or pastors, of the church. Their different forms may be considered to be symbolical of the different powers and dispositions for which public teachers are distinguished; some resembling the lion in courage and fortitude; some resembling the calf or ox in patience and labour; some rising superior to their neighbours in wisdom and prudence; and others, typified by the eagle, are distinguished for the heavenliness of their temper and dispositions. As a farther characteristic of the living creatures, it is said that each had six wings, and this may denote their great activity in the service of God. This interpretation is borne out by what is stated regarding the manner of their service, for it is remarked, that 'they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty,' &c. They are incessantly engaged in the work of praise, and as directed and encouraged in this way, the four and twenty elders follow the example, and worship continually him who sitteth on the throne. How desirable that God's will were thus done on earth, as it is in heaven!

CHAP. V. The book which John saw in the hands of him who sat on the throne was, doubtless, the book of God's eternal decrees. Into this no mere creature can possibly look, and therefore none could be found who was fit to examine and to reveal its contents. But Jesus the Son of God, 'the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David,' was found duly qualified for the task. When the book was given to him for this purpose, the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders acknowledged his right to the exalted privilege by falling down before him, and proclaiming in strains of deep devotion, that he was 'worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof.' The ground, or reason, of this worthiness they attribute to his sacrificial death, whereby he washed them from their sins, and exalted them to the honour of being made kings and priests unto God. The whole inhabitants of heaven, amounting to 'ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands,' are represented as celebrating the praises of the Lamb of God; and from the things that are therein ascribed to him, and the manner in which it is done, constituting, as it does, an act of solemn religious worship, the supreme deity of the Lord Jesus Christ is most explicitly acknowledged. In this we are taught to honour him even as we honour the Father.

PRAYER.

When we appear before thee, O God, at the footstool of thy throne, and thus place ourselves more immediately in thy holy presence, may we remember that we are but dust and ashes; may we remember that we are of unclean lips; that we dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, and are altogether unworthy of the privilege of addressing ourselves to thee in prayer and supplications. O that we were impressed by a large portion of that reverence and humility with which the seraphims, who minister in the upper sanctuary, approach thy throne, when they cover their faces with their wings, and cry one to another, saying, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory. Blessed be thy great name, that we are permitted with them to draw near, and to ascribe blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever. It is because thou hast sent redemption to thy folk; it is because thou hast taken them out of the deep pit and the miry clay; it is because thou hast put a new song into their mouth, even the song of salvation, that they enjoy the unspeakable privilege of celebrating thy praises, and the praises of him who gave himself a ransom for their souls. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel that he hath visited and redeemed his people; that he hath raised up an horn of salvation for them in the house of his servant David. Lord, help us by the power of thy Holy Spirit to make this wonderful deliverance the unfailing theme of our admiring gratitude and praise, so that we may resemble those blessed spirits in the heavenly world, whose constant employment it is to acknowledge thee and thy Son for the accomplished redemption. All thy works praise thee, but thou hast magnified thy name above all thy works, in the wonderful means thou hast devised for delivering thy chosen ones from going down to the pit, and for restoring them to the enjoyments of Immanuel's land. In the great scheme of salvation, all thy perfections are glorified, for mercy and truth have met together, and righteousness and peace have kissed each other. The demands of thy holy law have all been answered in the perfect obedience and atoning death of thy dear Son, so that thou art just whilst justifying him who believeth in Jesus. O God, may we all be among those who thus believe to the saving of the soul. In seeking for pardon and acceptance, may we plead nothing except the merits of the Saviour's all-prevailing sacrifice. His blood cleanseth from all sin, and his blood alone can accomplish this. We, therefore, desire to have our sole dependence on it for justification in thy sight. Forbid that any of us should be found trusting to his own righteousness, for by the deeds of the law no flesh can be justified. And may we, in receiving Christ, walk worthy of him, and give no occasion to any one to speak evil of our profession. O Lord, guide us by thy Spirit, for it is not in man that walketh to direct his own steps. Be our God and our Guide even unto death, and then our exceeding great reward; and all that we ask is in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXXXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—HABAKKUK II.

REMARKS.

In the last part of the preceding chapter the prophet expostulates with God in reference to the triumphant success of the Chaldeans, notwithstanding their treachery, wickedness, and idolatry. They were permitted to devour those who were more righteous than themselves. The prophet now places himself in that situation in which he was to learn the mind of the Lord, and receive an answer to his expostulations. The answer of the Lord is worthy of the most serious attention, for it points out to godly men what is their duty when the providential dispensations of the Most High appear involved in perplexity and obscurity. The vision, or revelation, now given, was to be set down in language so plain and simple, that it might be easily apprehended by the most cursory perusal. The certainty of its accomplishment is distinctly declared; and the people of God are directed to wait in the exercise of true faith till the proper time should arrive. The punishment of the Chaldeans might be postponed; but it would not be forgotten, for nations, as such, can only be punished in this world for their iniquities. The revelation begins at the fifth verse, and is directed against the king of Babylon, who may be considered as the representative of the inhabitants of his kingdom. The threatenings are denounced against them for their pride, their insatiable ambition and covetousness, for their cruelty, drunkenness, and idolatry. These were the vices not only of their kings, but also of a large portion of the people, and of these the history of that people furnishes many examples. The pride of Nebuchadnezzar, and its punishment, are well known, and require no illustration. The ambition of the Chaldeans, and their covetousness, form a prominent feature in the character of several of their kings, especially in that of Shalmanezar, Sennacherib, and Esarhaddon. Their cruelty is discovered in the treatment of the nations which they conquered, in depriving them of their wealth, and in reducing them to a state of the most abject slavery. The history of Belshazzar is well calculated to illustrate the habits of drunkenness which were common to the king and the people; and the image on the plain of Dura, and the praises bestowed upon the gods of gold, silver, wood, and stone, by Belshazzar, his princes, his wives, and his concubines, present an unquestionable proof of the idolatry which universally prevailed. Woes are denounced against all these sins, of which the Chaldeans, here represented by their king, are found guilty. Utter ruin as a nation was to be the certain consequence of their many vices. Those who had been oppressed would rise against their oppressors; and those who had been spoiled would spoil in their turn. Their covetousness would be followed with shame; and the cities on which they had brought misery and ruin, would testify against them. Their drunkenness was actually followed by the overthrow of the monarchy, and by the transference of the empire to the Medes and Persians; and they were practically taught that there is no profit in idols, and no deliverance in a god in which is no breath.

As we meditate on these things, and observe the woes which were here denounced put into execution, let us contemplate the evil nature of sin, which, if persisted in, will be visited with the divine indignation, both in this world and in that which is to come.

PRAYER.

Most gracious and most merciful God, we, who are but dust and ashes before thee, would this morning draw near to thy throne of grace, and would bless and magnify thy name for all the goodness which thou makest to pass before us. We have laid ourselves down and slept, we have awaked, for thou the Lord hast sustained us. We would be thankful that, during the past night, while we were unconscious of what was passing around us, no evil has befallen us, and no plague has come near our dwelling. And now that we have opened our eyes to the light of another day, may we be enabled to begin the duties of this day with God, and be pleased to lift on us the light of thy countenance. O thou who art the refuge and dwelling-place of thy people in all generations; O thou who art not unmindful of the dwellings of Jacob, be the God of this family; and whatever others do, may we be enabled to serve thee the Lord. We acknowledge the power which the things of this world maintain over us; we confess the proneness of our hearts to evil; the vain thoughts that pass through our minds, and the tendency that we feel to permit the cares and perplexities of life to choke the seed of the word that may be sown in our hearts; and we now earnestly pray that our sins may be washed away in the blood of Christ, and pour out upon us thy Spirit, that we may obtain strength to overcome the corruptions of our hearts, and our tendency to all that is sinful. Help us to discharge all our relative duties as they are laid down in thy holy word; and may we have the grace that we need to enable us to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour. As we go forth this day to our ordinary occupations, may we carry along with us the principles of the gospel, and may our conduct be regulated by that wisdom which cometh down from above. Preserve us through all our duties from violating any of thy holy commandments, and from committing any gross sin. May we be sober and temperate, just and honest. May we be desirous to cultivate truth and sincerity, so that we may not be found to change, even though we must speak to our own disadvantage. O that thy blessing may accompany the portion of thy word which has now been read, and may our souls profit by those lessons which the bible teaches. May we be convinced that the ways of sin lead to destruction, and that everlasting misery and ruin are the certain portion of the wicked, and of them that know not God. Teach us to live separate from the world, while we take part in its business and pursuits; and may we be enabled to watch over ourselves with a godly jealousy. Sanctify to us any crosses, disappointments, and afflictions, with which we may be visited, and preserve us from falling into the sin of murmuring and repining at thy holy providence. We pray for the sick and the distressed, the sorrowful and the dying. Comfort their souls, be a present help in their trouble, and prepare the dying for their awful change. Build up thy church in the midst of us, and accompany the preaching of the gospel with an abundant blessing. Pardon the sins of this approach unto thee; and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVII.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION VI.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains an account of the opening of the seals of that book, which of all in heaven and in earth, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of Jesse, was the only one able to loose. When he opened the first seal, the voice of one of the living creatures was heard; and if we take them in the order mentioned in the 4th chapter, this must have been the voice of the lion. It is known to be very majestic, and is therefore spoken of as resembling the strength and majesty of thunder. The first seal may be viewed as a representation of the preaching of the gospel, and its gradual diffusion over the world. The emblem is a white horse, indicating purity; his rider is armed with a bow, and his progress is distinguished by conquest. The voice of the lion may signify the uncompromising firmness with which the gospel was preached during the first ages of the Christian church. The opening of the second seal shows for its emblem a red horse, and refers to the opposition which was made to the gospel, and to the persecution of its ministers and adherents by civil authority. The voice of the second living creature is that of a calf, humble and subdued; and perhaps it points to the meekness and patience with which the servants of the gospel endured the sufferings which were inflicted by their cruel persecutors. The opening of the third seal presents a black horse, which may be generally considered as an emblem of disaster. From what the rider held in his hand, as well as from the proclamation that was made, this was to be a period of famine, when men should eat their bread by weight, and drink their water by measure. The voice of the third living creature was that of a man, by which wisdom and high attainments are denoted; and the history of that time proves that the ministers of religion were remarkable for their knowledge and learning. The opening of the fourth seal is accompanied with the voice of the fourth living creature, which is the flying eagle; and as the eagle is a bird of prey, it has been considered as indicating something unfavourable in the character of the ministers of the gospel; but others, with more probability, view it as indicating the exalted devotions of the servants of Christ, as the eagle's flight exceeds that of every other bird. The emblem is a pale horse, with Death for a rider, and hell, or the state of the dead, following. This foretells the pestilence and dreadful mortality, as well as the woful disasters, which occurred from the reign of Commodus to that of Dioclesian. The fifth seal refers to the martyrs who were slain for the testimony of Jesus. Their cry was, that the Lord most holy and true should avenge their blood; and we learn from this that vengeance belongs only to God, and the cry of the martyrs is to be resolved into zeal for the honour of God. They were called up from the altar, under which they lay as bleeding sacrifices, and they received white robes, and were informed that it would be yet for a short period till the iniquities of the persecutors should be filled up in the blood of the martyrs, who were to lay down their lives for the truth. The opening of the sixth seal was accompanied with an earthquake; a symbol, in the language of prophecy, of a revolution, either civil or religious. The event to which this seal points is the overthrow of pagan worship, and the establishment of Christianity over the Roman empire. The reign of idolatry terminated under Constantine the Great. Its sun, the false gods of the heathen, became black as sackcloth of hair; the moon, the adherents of idolatry, became as blood; the stars, the heathen priests, fell to rise no more. It is thus history teaches us the fulfilment of prophecy, and affords additional means of strengthening and establishing the faith of Christians.

PRAYER.

We, O God, fall down before thee, who art the former of our bodies, the preserver of our lives, and our constant and unwearied benefactor. To thee we offer the tribute of our thanksgiving and praise for the mercy and loving-kindness which we have this day experienced, and for all the proofs of thy goodness which we have received. Thou hast bestowed the health and strength which were necessary for going through our daily occupations. Thou hast fed us with the food which was convenient for us. Thou hast preserved us from dangers which were ready to overwhelm us. Thou hast enabled us to resist temptations which the corruptions of our hearts rendered powerful; and now would we rejoice in thee the Lord, and unite together in blessing thy name for all our benefits. We appear before thee with shame and confusion of face when we remember the sins of which we have this day been guilty before thee, who art infinitely holy. How many sinful thoughts have passed through our minds since the morning light! How frequently have we spoken unadvisedly with our lips! and we have now to lament in thy presence that our conversation this day has not been with grace seasoned with salt. How many sinful actions have we this day committed, and how many duties have we neglected to perform! We have been transgressing thy holy law, while we were unconscious of the transgression; and many of our sins have passed away without a moment's observation. O enter not into judgment with us; visit us not with the punishment which we deserve. We pray that thou mayest now lead us to that fountain which is opened in the house of David for sin and for uncleanness. Say to each one of us, Thy sins be forgiven thee. We would look to Christ, and with the eye of our faith; and may we practically understand that he is the only way of access to thee our God; that he is the only channel of communication between heaven and earth, and that through him alone all temporal and spiritual blessings flow to the children of men. Lead us, holy Father, to the Lord Jesus Christ, and may we find that in him is our peace. We would desire at this time to express our gratitude and thankfulness to thee, that thou, O God, hast called us from our various employments to enjoy a period of rest. O that we may be made duly sensible of the wise arrangements of thy gracious providence, which has appointed a time of rest to succeed that of labour, and to afford us an opportunity for refreshing and invigorating our bodies. Give us this night the rest and refreshment which thou hast promised to thy chosen. Enable us to repose on Christ as our only rest; and when we lay down our heads on our pillows, may our sleep be sweet. We look to thee for the protection that we need through the silent watches of this night; and may we rise in the morning in thy fear. Let those who are dear to us, wherever they are, be the objects of thy special protection. Bring them into thy sheepfold, and make them thine own. We pray for the church of Christ, strengthen her stakes, and lengthen her cords. May the preaching of the gospel receive the blessing from on high, and do thou prosper thy work in the midst of us. May thy blessing rest upon this house. Be our God, our guide, and our exceeding great reward. Forgive our sins; and all that we ask is for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXV. 6.

SCRIPTURE—HABAKKUK III.

REMARKS.

The title of this chapter, contained in the first verse, leads us to look for a composition of a devotional character, embracing a great variety of topics. The prophet had received the revelation, in which the fate of the Chaldeans was distinctly intimated, and knowing the sins with which his own countrymen were chargeable, and perhaps impressed with a sense of his own unworthiness, he declares that he was afraid. Can any man, who feels that he is a sinner, observe judgments about to fall on the ungodly without some degree of apprehension and alarm? If others deserve punishment on account of sin, well may we inquire, what is there in us to merit the divine favour. Hence the appropriate prayer, 'revive thy work in the midst of the years.' At the time when Habakkuk prophesied, which was about the beginning of the Babylonish captivity, the priest and the people had equally degenerated, and there was need for a revival of vital religion. This prayer is well suited to every period in the history of the church of Christ. In her present state she has many spots, and wrinkles, and blemishes; often is the divine wrath well merited, but in the midst of them all he refreshes and revives his people, and never fails to show them mercy. We have thus great encouragement to earnest prayer. In the next portion of the chapter the glory and majesty of God are celebrated in language that is strikingly sublime. First, we have an account of his appearance on mount Sinai, as if he came from Paran in the immediate neighbourhood, or from Teman, the country of Edom, at a greater distance. The effulgence of his glory was manifest, for beams, here styled horns, came out of his head, and darted in all directions, and the greatness of his power was veiled by his indescribable brightness. Next the prophet alludes to the pestilence and other diseases, which like burning coals devoured the adversaries of true religion, and became the instruments of Jehovah's vengeance. This seems to be an allusion to the plagues with which God had visited the inhabitants of Egypt. In ver. 6, he refers to the division of the land of Canaan among the tribes of Israel, both by Moses and Joshua, the expulsion of the Canaanites, and the overthrow of their kings, and princes, and mighty men; and in all these events we have an assurance that his covenant is unchangeable, and that his mercy endureth to all generations. God's dealings with the Canaanites struck terror into the hearts of the surrounding nations, so that the people of that part of Arabia, called Cushan, and Midian, were in deep distress. They had heard of the wonders done at the Red sea, and at the crossing of the Jordan. The trembling of mount Sinai, the sun and moon standing still at the command of Joshua, proclaimed the power of him, who had declared himself to be the God of his people. When the prophet thus brings to the remembrance of his countrymen God's mighty works for the deliverance of their fathers, he, at the same time, teaches them a most useful and important lesson. If they believed all these things, they must also believe that it is the same God who is dealing with them, that delivered their ancestors out of all their difficulties. Here, then, is ample ground for the exercise of faith. They might be slaves, and destitute in a foreign land, but the Lord is the joy of his people, and he will not forsake them that put their trust in him. Let us apply this lesson to our own hearts, and let us still put our trust in God, who is alone able to give us comfort.

PRAYER.

Holy and ever-blessed God, we humble ourselves, this morning, at the footstool of thy throne, and acknowledge thy great condescension in permitting us to approach thy holy presence. We would desire, at this time, to think of all thy mighty works, and of all the wonders which thou hast wrought for thy people's deliverance. Thou causedst thy name to be feared; thou broughtest terror upon the nations, and madest the people to tremble. Even in the exhibition of thy mercy and love in the gospel of Christ, thou hast fully evinced thy glory and majesty; and in contemplating thy dealings with the nations, well may we hide our faces, and say that we are afraid. How can we, who are sinful and degraded creatures, lift our eyes to the place where thine honour dwelleth, or take thy holy name into our guilty and polluted lips? We lament over the coldness and indifference of our own hearts, and our lukewarmness in the things of religion; we mourn over the decay of vital godliness around us, and the worldly and carnal spirit with which so many of our fellow-men are actuated; and we would now earnestly pray that thou mayest revive religion in the midst of the years. O Lord, in wrath remember mercy. We have, like prodigal children, gone far from our Father's house; we have despised the wise regulations of our Father's family; we have neglected our advantages; we have abused all our privileges; we have been satisfying ourselves with husks, and have not been seeking to partake of the gospel feast which thou hast prepared for us. We are, indeed, unworthy to be called thy children, and were we to receive our deserts, thy wrath would be our portion, and hell would be our inheritance. Merciful God, deal not with us as we have deserved; look not on us as we have sinned; see, God, our Shield; look on the face of thine Anointed. We would be thankful that there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared; with thee there is mercy and plenteous redemption. Lord, we believe, help our unbelief. Dispose our hearts to listen to thy word, and to receive, in all meekness and humility, thy truth. May it become the rule of our faith, hope, and practice. Pour out on each one of us, now kneeling before thee, thy holy Spirit in rich abundance, and as we read thy word, may our souls be watered as with the rains and dews of heaven, so that we may bring forth the fruits of righteousness to the praise and the glory of thy name. May thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. May thy way be known upon the earth, and thy saving health among all people. Let the people praise thee, O Lord, let all the people praise thee. O that thou, who of old didst show thy wonderful work in the deliverance of thy people, mayest be pleased still to manifest thy power in the conviction and conversion of sinners. We bless thy name for the mercies of the past night, make us truly thankful for all thy benefits. Be with us throughout this day. In our goings out, and in our comings in, in the house, and by the way, enable us to set thee the Lord always before us. Forgive the sins of our holy services, and hear us from thy holy habitation, and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION VII.

REMARKS.

The vision which is recorded in this chapter, is introduced between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals, and represents in general the great success which attended the preaching of the gospel. Four angels appear to be standing on the four corners of the earth, and as the earth here is to be interpreted of the Roman empire, it was without impropriety spoken of as having a square form. These ministers of the Most High were appointed to hold the four winds of heaven, so that whatever might be the appearance of the atmosphere, none of its contents should be discharged within the limits that they had been commanded to guard. During he period symbolized by the blowing of the trumpets the winds were permitted to rage in all their fury, but at this time there was a complete calm; it was a time of rest and tranquillity to the church. After the opening of the sixth seal the appearances in the heavens had been dreadful; an earthquake had desolated the earth, and terror had fallen on all classes of men, but the storm was hushed till the servants of God should be sealed. This was, in all probability, the period of tranquillity which the church enjoyed under Constantine the Great; for it was at that time that the persecution of the pagans terminated, and the members of the church could profess to be Christians without any apprehension of civil penalties. The angel who was to seal the servants of God, is the Redeemer himself, and by the sealing may be understood their steady adherence to pure and scriptural religion. The persons were not to be considered as descended from Abraham according to the flesh; they were Israelites according to the Spirit, and were preserved from apostacy during the blowing of the trumpets. The numbers sealed must be understood indefinitely, for we cannot suppose that the converts, even during the reign of antichrist, did not exceed an hundred and forty-four thousand. It must not be forgotten that the making or sealing is still going on, and will not be fulfilled till the last of Messiah's purchase shall receive this mark on his forehead. From the 9th to the 12th verse, there is found a prophecy of the multitude that shall be saved, which may probably take its date from the Reformation, and its final accomplishment will be found in the latter day. Multitudes, of all nations, hundreds, people, and tongues, shall stand before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with the righteousness of Christ, and having in their hands palms, the emblems of that victory which he has obtained in their behalf. While we continue members of the church militant, let it be our earnest desire to prepare for joining in the exercises of the church triumphant; and may we be taught from the heart to sing the song, 'Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.' From the 13th verse to the end of the chapter, the apostle is instructed as to the individuals who appear in white robes, and as to the way in which they come. They had come out of great tribulation; they had suffered severe persecution, and they were now enjoying the favour of God, and the love of their fellow-servants. Heaven is a place of service, not of suffering; of rest, not of idleness; of pleasure, not of unholy indulgence. The Lamb will be the light of his people; he will direct all their enjoyments; no sorrow or calamity will ever reach them, and the cold storms of this world will no longer be heard. O that we may die the death of the righteous, and may our last end be like his.

PRAYER.

To thee, O Lord, will we go, for thou hast the words and the gift of everlasting life. Thou hast made us, and not we ourselves, therefore to thee we lift up our souls; we seek our happiness in thee alone, and we pray that thou mayest visit us with thy salvation. Not only hast thou preserved and supported us, but we have received the accumulated proofs of thy goodness and benevolence, when we were in actual and open rebellion against thee. We would acknowledge, in deep humility, that we are the monuments of thy mercy, and have not become, as we deserved, the memorials of thy righteous indignation. It is only of thy long-suffering and forbearance in Jesus Christ, that we have not been cut off in the midst of our sin. We desire to celebrate thy praise, and to magnify thy name, for thou art holy. Day unto day uttereth speech, night unto night teacheth knowledge concerning thee. By thy protecting care we have been brought in peace and safety to the close of another day, and in health and comfort we have been again permitted to meet together, as a family, before thee. O Lord, we would be thankful, that thou hast been with us through the various employments, occupations, and duties, in which we have this day been engaged, and we would now make mention of the loving-kindness of the Lord, who is good, and whose mercy endureth for ever. We bless thy name for the comfort that we have in our relations, and for the domestic peace and happiness that we enjoy; enable us to be faithful and conscientious in the discharge of all our relative duties. We bless thee for the home in which we dwell, and for the provision which thou hast made for the supply of all our wants; in the midst of all our comforts, help us to remember the wants of the poor and needy, of the homeless and the wanderer; give us grace to bestow of our abundance upon them, and may we be enabled to exercise our charity in the true spirit of the gospel. May our house be a Bethel; a place where thy worship is regularly practised, and where thou, the Lord, mayest delight to dwell. We bless thee, O Lord, for the service of the inferior animals which thou hast placed at our disposal; enable us to use them as thy gift, and not treat them with cruelty, nor make them the instruments of sin. We bless thee, O Lord, for the exercise of our reason which thou continuest to us unimpaired, and we pray that thou mayest help us to devote it to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ, and to the extension of his kingdom in the world. We bless thy name, above all, for the gift of thy Son to the children of men, through whose sufferings and death we obtain peace of conscience; and for the great and precious promises which are in him yea and Amen; and for the throne of grace to which, through Christ, we have free and ready access. May thy Holy Spirit dwell in our hearts; may our bodies become the temples of the Holy Ghost; may he enable us to avail ourselves of all our privileges, and to make a right use of all our advantages. Thy goodness has been displayed to us in casting our lot in a land where the gospel is preached. Give us an ear to hear it, an understanding to comprehend it, a heart to relish its truths, and strength of mind to carry them into practice. May our rest, this night, be free from all disquieting fears and all perplexing cares; and may we be preserved from every danger during its silent watches. In thee we put our trust, and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—ZEPHANIAH I.

REMARKS.

Sin is the reproach, and if not forsaken and forgiven, must prove the ruin, of any people. As the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem had become exceedingly degenerate, and apostatized from the worship of Jehovah, the prophet Zephaniah was sent unto them to denounce the desolating judgments that were coming upon them. But however guilty a people may be, when grievous calamities befall them, they are ever ready to murmur and complain; the prophet, therefore enjoins them to keep silence, and meekly to submit to the merited correction of the Almighty. When these threatened judgments should overtake them, the Lord would search Jerusalem with candles, and in a peculiar manner punish the men that were settled on their lees; who were self-confident; who trusted in their wealth and external privileges; who had become so hardened in iniquity, and so bold in their infidelity and impiety, as to despise the promises and threatenings of Jehovah, declaring that he would neither fulfil the one nor execute the other, but regarded their conduct with indifference. The prophet, however, assures them that the evil day was near at hand, and when it arrived, their wealth and property would be of no avail; they would become a prey to their enemies, and their habitations and vineyards they would destroy. The day of national desolation should be a day of wrath; a day of darkness and gloominess, of clouds and thick darkness; a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities and the high towers, which should then afford them no protection or defence.

Let us then, as a sinful nation, take warning; let us not trust in our riches, our privileges, our army, or our navy; let us not be proud and self-confident, while we hold fast iniquity, and will not let it go: but let us repent, and turn unto the Lord, who is waiting to be gracious, and to our God, who is rich in mercy and ready to forgive. Let us seek for pardoning mercy through the atoning sacrifice of Christ, for sanctification through the agency of the Holy Spirit, and for grace to help us in time of need. To excite us to this, let us remember the consequences of persevering in national impenitence and impiety. 'For the nation or the kingdom that will not serve him shall perish; yea, all those nations shall be utterly wasted,' Isa. lx. 12.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the great God and Governor among the nations, ruling in Jacob, and unto the ends of the earth. Thou displayest thy glory in the works of the visible creation, in the procedure of thy providence, and especially in the work of our redemption by Jesus Christ. Thou exercisest a supreme, righteous, and merciful government over all the works which thou hast made; and we rejoice that we live under thy moral administration, and that all things work together for good to them that love thee, and are the called according to thy purpose. We acknowledge our constant dependence upon thee, and our increasing obligations to love and serve thee. We desire to thank thee for all the privileges we enjoy, and for all the goodness and mercy thou hast caused to follow us. We acknowledge we have not been duly grateful to thee for thy benefits; that we have been disobedient children unto thee our heavenly Father, and rebellious subjects unto thee our righteous Sovereign. Our sins are numerous, heinous, and highly aggravated, and it is of thy mercies we have not been consumed. O may we be humbled under a deep sense of our sins and sinfulness; may we confess and forsake them, that we may obtain mercy. May we be enlightened, purified, and comforted, and be enabled henceforth to depart from all iniquity, to walk in the way of thy commandments, and to abound in all the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the praise and glory of God. Lord, fulfil in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in us, and we in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ. May our faith work by love, and our love be manifested by a cheerful and constant obedience to all God's holy commandments. Thus may we consecrate ourselves to the service of God by presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service. We thank thee for thy kind care over us during the past night, and for the mercies of this morning; and we beseech thee to be with us, and to bless us with thy gracious presence through the day, and to preserve us from all evil. May we be in thy fear all the day, remembering that we are ever under thine inspection, and that thine eye is continually upon us. Assist us in the discharge of the several duties that are incumbent upon us; may we be universally conscientious, and whatever we do, may we do all in obedience to thine authority, in dependence upon thy promised grace, and with a view to thy glory. Hear, O Lord, these our supplications, pardon our offences, and accept of us, and bless us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 5.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION VIII.

REMARKS.

This chapter stands in immediate connection with the opening of the sixth seal in the 12th verse of the sixth chapter, and the opening of the seventh seal in the beginning of this eighth chapter. 'And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour.' By heaven here, it is obvious we are not to understand the celestial world, but the visible church, which is frequently styled in the Gospels, and in this book of Revelation, heaven, or the kingdom of heaven; while the heathen, or Roman empire, is denominated the earth. There being silence in heaven, therefore, means that at the time here referred to, there should be a short season of peace and tranquillity in the visible church, which took place after Constantine embraced Christianity. At the 2d verse, it is stated that John saw seven angels who stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets; and then he adds that another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer, and there was given to him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne, &c. This other angel was not a created angel like one of the seven who had received the seven trumpets, but was Jesus Christ our great Mediator, who is styled in scripture the Angel of the Covenant, who is now in heaven, and is our great High Priest and Intercessor, before the throne of God. Heaven, in this vision, is represented under the emblem of the ancient tabernacle or temple, and we know that in the Jewish temple the golden altar of incense stood in the holy place, just before the vail which separated it from the holy of holies. This angel had a golden censer which held live coals, on which incense was scattered, and which raised a fragrant smoke which was to be offered with the prayers of all saints, in order to render them acceptable unto God. All the people of God are an holy people; they are saints, people devoted to the service of God; being holy, they are all a praying people, none of them are prayerless. All their prayers, however, are accompanied with many imperfections and sinful defects, and, therefore, could not be accepted on account of any merit of their own. But Christ our great High Priest pleads the merits of his own perfect sacrifice, and perfumed with this incense, they are accepted by God, or heard and answered. At the 5th verse, we are informed that this angel, or Jesus Christ, took the censer he held, and going from the golden altar before the vail, he went to the brazen altar without, and filled it with burning coals, as emblematical of the wrath of God, and cast the fire upon the earth, or Roman empire; in consequence of which there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. These are descriptive of the sore judgments coming upon the empire and its inhabitants, as a punishment of their sins, and which were inflicted in their appointed season. We have not space to proceed with the explanation of the four trumpets, which in succession were sounded, as narrated in the rest of this chapter; and have only room to remark that the seasons of peace which the church has hitherto enjoyed, have, in general, been of short duration, and ought therefore to be well improved. It is comfortable for Christians to know, that amidst all the persecutions the church may endure, and all the revolutions which take place in the world, and all the judgments inflicted upon sinful nations, the Lord reigns in righteousness, and will overrule them for the destruction of his enemies, and the preparation and improvement of his saints. These winds may blow away the chaff, or high nominal professors, but the precious wheat shall remain and be gathered into the heavenly garner. This passage holds out great encouragement to Christians to pray and not to faint. Their prayers are imperfect and defective; but when presented with the much incense of their interceding High Priest, they shall be heard and answered. Let them pray always, and not faint; for the Lord will assuredly hear his own elect, who cry day and night unto him.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity, and the praises of Israel, and whose name is holy; the Creator and Preserver, the Proprietor and Governor of all things. We bless thee for creating goodness and providential care; but especially for the wonders of thy redeeming love, for so loving the world as to send thine only begotten and well-beloved Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. We acknowledge that we are less than the least of all thy mercies, and that as sinners we deserve to suffer all the effects of thy righteous displeasure. We bless thee for thy sparing mercy, and pray that it may be accompanied with thy saving mercy to each of us now before thee, that we may be made vessels of mercy, meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. May thy goodness soften our hard hearts, and lead us to repentance; and, like returning prodigals to our heavenly Father, to say, Father, we have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and are no more worthy to be called thy children. Grant that we may be reconciled unto thee by receiving the atonement, and that being found in Christ, he may be made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, that glorying we may glory only in the Lord. Thus may we all be saints, holy beings conformed to God in his moral perfections, and constantly employed in his holy and honourable service. O may we receive the spirit of grace and supplication, praying always with all prayer and supplications in the Spirit, and having Christ as our New Testament altar. May we through him offer unto God all our spiritual sacrifices for acceptance. May we remember that if we are not saints, we must be impenitent sinners under the curse of the law, and having thy wrath abiding on us; and that when Christ comes again to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe, we must be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power. We thank thee, O Lord, for our personal and domestic comforts; and now we commit ourselves to thy care and keeping during the silence and slumbers of the night. May we be safe, being under thy protection, and if spared to see the dawn of another day, may we be raised up in health and comfort, and receive those supplies of grace which are necessary to fit us for its duties. Forgive, we beseech thee, our manifold transgressions, and may these, our imperfect prayers, be heard and answered, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXVIII.

SCRIPTURE—ZEPHANIAH II.

REMARKS.

In the beginning of this chapter the Jewish people are enjoined to assemble and humble themselves before the Lord, to deprecate his deserved wrath, and supplicate his unmerited mercy. They are directed to attend to this duty without delay, before the sentence denounced against them should be carried into execution. Although this solemn and seasonable warning should be disregarded by the great body of the people, yet the meek and humble among them, who trembled at the word of the Lord, and were afraid of his righteous judgments, would obey this injunction, and would seek the Lord by fervent supplication, and trust in his mercy, and this would either be had in the day of the Lord's anger, or supported and comforted under the calamities that came upon them. They are assured, for their encouragement, that Gaza and the other sea-port towns of the Philistines, and their associates, who had often harassed them, would be destroyed, and their sea-coasts should be dwellings for shepherds, and folds for their flocks to lie down in safety; and that Moab and the children of Ammon, who had often reproached them and invaded their territories, should, like Sodom and Gomorrah, become a perpetual desolation. Nay, the Ethiopians also would be slain by the sword, and Assyria, with Nineveh its capital, should become a desolation and a wilderness. Thus the Lord would be terrible unto the nations who oppressed and persecuted his people; would famish all their gods, destroy their idols and overturn idolatry, and establish the worship of the true God in the land, and even in all the distant islands of the Gentiles, of which we in this isle are a living proof. No sinners are more hateful to God than hypocritical professors of the true religion; and yet even persons of this character, we learn from this chapter, are called upon to consider their ways, and to turn unto the Lord, and to plead for pardoning mercy and sanctifying and saving grace, for where sin hath abounded, grace much more abounds. Even sinful nations, under tokens of the divine displeasure, ought to assemble themselves together, and to cry unto the Lord for mercy, for they shall not seek his face in vain. But the avowed enemies of God and of his people, who persevere in impenitence and unbelief, shall not escape his righteous judgments. He hears their revilings and reproaches, and he will at last humble their pride, and inflict upon them his threatened judgments.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art holy, and just, and good, of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Evil cannot dwell with thee, nor can sinners in themselves stand before thee with acceptance. We all are as an unclean thing, and our iniquities as the wind have carried us away from thee. We have transgressed thy holy law, forfeited all claim to thy favour, and become obnoxious to the effects of thy righteous displeasure. Thou mightest have banished us for ever from thy presence, and deprived us of the hope of mercy, and of the privilege of prayer. But we bless thee for opening to us a new and living way, by which we, sinful as we are, may draw near unto thee with the hope of acceptance. We thank thee for setting Christ before us as the way, the truth, and the life; through him we would now come unto thee and present our supplications. Whilst thou art commanding us, in thy word, to turn unto thee that we may live, we beseech thee to give us the grace of true repentance. Turn us and we shall be turned, for thou art the Lord our God; and whilst thou art saying unto us, Seek ye my face, dispose our hearts to reply, Thy face and favour, O Lord, will we seek, for thy favour is life, and thy loving-kindness is better than life and all its enjoyments. Grant, O Lord, that we may be poor in spirit, that ours may be the kingdom of heaven. May we mourn over our sins, that we may be comforted. May we be meek, that we may inherit the earth. May we hunger and thirst after righteousness, that we may be filled. May we be merciful, that we may obtain mercy. May we be peace-makers, that we may be called the children of God; and pure in heart, that we may see God. May it be our constant study to be growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and may we trust in the name of the Lord, that we may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger, and saved from the wrath to come. May we be safe under the protection of the Almighty, and suitably exercised under the dispensations of divine providence. In the day of health and prosperity may we not be proud, and in the day of sickness and adversity may we not despond; but trusting in the Lord, may we be kept in perfect peace, and enabled to say in every situation, Good is the will of the Lord. Deliver us from the slavery of sin and satan; bring us into the glorious liberty of the children of God. May idolatry and wickedness, cruelty and crimes, be banished from the face of the earth; and may incense and a pure offering be presented unto the Lord from the rising to the setting sun. May men be blessed in Christ, and all nations call him blessed. We thank thee, O Lord, for protecting us during the past night, and for any rest we have enjoyed, and for the mercies of this morning. Be with us through the day, assist us in discharging the duties that are incumbent on us in our several stations and relations, and thus may we promote our own personal happiness and the comfort of all the members of our household. Pardon all our offences, accept of our thanks for all thy mercies, and let goodness and mercy follow us all our days, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATIONS IX.

REMARKS.

The star which fell from heaven, by the most approved interpreters, is understood to denote Mahomet the impostor. He began early in the seventh century to declare that he had enjoyed extraordinary intercourse with God, that he had been in heaven, and there learned a religion which he was to publish to the world as an improvement of Christianity, and a reformation of the corruption it had contracted; hence he is not unaptly represented as a star falling from heaven to the earth. Power is given to this deceiver to open the bottomless pit, the pestiferous exhalations of which contaminated the atmosphere, and darkened the sun. The locusts which came out of the smoke represent the numerous armies of the Saracens, who spread desolations through the neighbouring nations; they also resembled scorpions, whose sting is frequently mortal. These locusts and scorpions, however, were not to hurt the grass of the earth, but only the men who had not the seal of God on their foreheads, or were only nominal Christians. The time when they were permitted to harass mankind was limited to five months, or a hundred and fifty years. During this period the sufferings of many were so great that they preferred death to the enjoyment of life. The locusts are said, in the 7th verse, to be like horses prepared unto battle; but although like horses, they carried desolation with them. The greatest mischief they effected was by their tails, which, being provided with stings, they spread their deadly and poisonous errors, and thus proved active agents of satan the great destroyer. The voice of the angel, from the horns of the altar, announced the judgments which were coming on those who corrupted the gospel, and thus deprived it of its saving efficacy. After the sounding of the trumpet of the sixth angel, he was ordered to loose the four angels who were bound in the great river Euphrates. This is generally understood to refer to the four Turkish sultans of Bagdad, Damascus, Aleppo, and Iconium. These were loosed, or prepared, for a definite period, to kill the third part of men by the fire, smoke, and brimstone, which issued from their mouths; and yet the rest of the men who were not killed, but survived these massacres, repented not of their evil deeds, of their murders, their sorceries, their fornications, and their thefts. Let Christians learn from this passage to be well established in the knowledge and belief of the truth, that they may not be seduced by heretics and impostors, who lie in wait to deceive; and they may also perceive that, although all the sufferings which God inflicts upon a sinful people are designed to lead them to repentance, that their sins may be forgiven, yet such is the deep depravity of human nature, that they hold fast iniquity, and will not let it go, and thus they harden their hearts, and are given up to judicial blindness, so that nothing can touch or turn them. Wo to the individuals and nations from which the Lord thus departs, for they have nothing before them but the prospect of increasing misery in this world, and everlasting destruction in the world to come; for he who, being often reprov'd, hardeneth his own heart, shall suddenly perish, and that without remedy.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, thou art exceeding great, being clothed with honour and with majesty. Thou art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, ever doing wonders. Thy power is Almighty, thy wisdom is unsearchable, thy goodness is unbounded, thy holiness unspotted, thy justice inflexible, and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. We bless thee for proclaiming thy name to be the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and ready to forgive iniquity, transgression, and sin, and yet will by no means clear the guilty without satisfaction to thy justice. We thank thee for appointing, under the ancient dispensation, typical atoning sacrifices, as prefiguratives of the great atonement which Christ in the end of the world was to make for sin, when he gave himself for us a sacrifice and an offering for a sweet smelling savour; and we thank thee for setting him forth under the gospel dispensation as a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare thy righteousness in the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God, that thou mightest be just, and the justifier of them who believe in Jesus. We desire, therefore, to approach the footstool of the throne of grace, to confess our sins with humility and contrition, in the hope of obtaining mercy and grace to help in time of need. We acknowledge we have not loved thee with all our hearts, nor worshipped thee in spirit and in truth. We have not hallowed thy name, nor sanctified thy sabbaths. We have failed in the duties we owe unto thee, to our fellow-creatures, and fellow-Christians, and to ourselves. We are exceedingly guilty; our sins are great and highly aggravated. We have been careful about many things, and neglectful of the one thing needful. We have preferred the safety of our bodies to the salvation of our souls, and the shadows of time to the realities of eternity. Deaf to the voice of wisdom, we have walked in the ways of folly; and because sentence against our evil deeds has not been speedily executed, our hearts have been set in us to do evil. Lord, be merciful to us sinners. Justify us freely by thy grace, sanctify us by thy Spirit, strengthen us by thy grace for the various duties we may be called to discharge. Put thy laws into our minds, write them upon our hearts, and cause us to keep thy statutes, and judgments, and all thy holy commandments. Enable us to repent of all our past sins, and to bring forth the fruits meet for repentance; and when thy judgments are abroad in the earth, may we learn righteousness. We thank thee for the mercies of the day that has now closed upon us, and for all the mercies of the week now about to terminate. We commit ourselves to thy gracious protection through the night. If we are spared to see the light of another Lord's day, may we be raised in a spiritual frame of mind, and be enabled to sanctify thy sabbath, and reverence thy sanctuary, and derive much spiritual benefit from thy word and ordinances. And when we shall have finished our course, may we die in faith, and receive the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls. Graciously hear, pardon, and accept of us, and bless us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FIFTY-FIRST WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXLIII. CXLIV.

REMARKS.

With what freedom does the psalmist here come into the presence of God, and with what confidence does he appeal, not so much to his mercy as to his faithfulness and truth. This is the more remarkable, inasmuch as he pretends to no merit, and urges no plea from former services. On the contrary, he entreats God not to enter into judgment with him, as in his sight no flesh living shall be justified. This is indeed a mystery, but it has a key, and that key is the atoning death of Christ, through means of which not only may one man, but even the most ungodly man living be justified, even in God's sight.

This is a precious truth we should never let slip from our memories, for in no other way can we know Jehovah to be a just God, and yet a Saviour; and in no other way can we come boldly to a throne of grace, to obtain mercy and find grace to help us in every time of need.

At this period the psalmist seems to have been in a very distressed state. He was exposed to more than ordinary persecution, for his life was smitten down to the ground, and he was made to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead. By all this his spirit was overwhelmed within him, and his heart made desolate.

The psalmist's heart, however, was not long thus desolate, for he soon remembered the days of old, and meditated on God's works. Nay, from musing he proceeded to praying, till his earnest cry, 'hear me speedily, O Lord,' brought relief.

By nature we are all not only ignorant of, but unwilling to obey God. This the psalmist felt, and hence he said not only 'teach me,' but lead me.' Both to teach and to lead is the blessed work of God's 'good Spirit.' Blessed are those who are taught by such a teacher, and led by such a guide. But, alas, how few are found thus blessed, for by multitudes the falsehoods of the father of lies are preferred to the truths of this divine Instructor. In these circumstances it would be well for each of us to ask, 'who is my teacher, and who my guide?'

In battle king David was eminently successful, but he knew well to whom to ascribe the glory; for he exclaimed, 'Blessed be the Lord my strength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight.' Christians, like him, have still their battles, for their whole life is a warfare. Enemies they have both within and without, but to subdue either the one or the other, is what they cannot do, until God himself teach their hands to war, and their fingers to fight. He, however, can and will do this for them, for he is their strength and their fortress; their high power, their deliverer and shield. Well may all who have known the Lord's goodness, and who have experienced him to be a present help in time of trouble, say, 'I will sing a new song unto thee, O Lord, upon a psaltery, and on an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.'

King David desired great prosperity for himself and for his people. His prayer was that their sons might be as plants, not withered, but growing; that their daughters might be as corner-stones, after the similitude of a palace, beautiful as well as useful; that their garners might be full; their flocks increased; their oxen healthy and strong; and that there be no breaking in, and no complaining, because not plundering and no poverty. This was his prayer, and happy, he exclaims, is the people that is in such a case. With this we all readily agree, but we must not forget that if temporal blessings be good, spiritual blessings are better; and if 'happy is that people that is in such a case,' happier far is that people 'whose God is the Lord.' Let each of us now ask, 'Am I among that happy people; is God the Father my Lord; God the Son my Redeemer, and God the Holy Ghost my Sanctifier?'

PRAYER.

Gracious Lord, we desire to come before thee, on this the morning of thine own day, with the voice of gratitude and praise. This is the day the Lord hath made, in it would we rejoice. We bless thee, O Lord, for thy unspeakable gift, Christ Jesus; and that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life. Enable us to believe on his name, and rely on his finished work. May we be graciously redeemed from all iniquity, and so purified as to be made a peculiar people, zealous of good works. May we be so strengthened by thy grace, as ever to testify that we have been with Jesus. We mourn, O Lord, that hitherto this has been so much forgotten by us. We mourn that our zeal for good has been so cold; that our faith has been so weak, and our love so transient. We mourn that, notwithstanding all our privileges, we come so lamentably short, that notwithstanding all our light, we still walk in so much darkness. We mourn that we have often allowed the cares and pleasures of this world to wean our hearts from thee, and that through the deceitfulness of sin, we have so often disobeyed thy voice, and despised thy correction. We confess with shame that often through the wilful blindness of our minds, we behold no beauty in Emmanuel, that he should be desired; and no glory in his work, that he should be confided in. O Lord, we beseech thee this day so to fill us with thy Spirit, that the word read and to be spoken may be abundantly blessed to our souls. Wherever Christ is preached this day, there may he be glorified in the conversion of sinners. May thy word be attended every where with demonstration of the Spirit, and with power, and may multitudes be led to forsake the service of sin and satan. O Lord, hasten the time when all shall know thee; when the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, and when the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Hasten the time when the eyes of the spiritually blind shall be opened, the ears of the deaf be unstopped, and the lame leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing. Hasten the time when all the divisions in thy church shall be healed; when Judah shall no more vex Ephraim, nor Ephraim envy Judah, but when all thy people shall be of one mind, and one heart. May brotherly love more and more abound, till those that are without are again constrained to say, Behold how these Christians love one another. O Lord, remember the young and rising generation. Bless all the efforts now making for their conversion. Bless every sabbath-school in our land. May teachers and taught be alike taught of thee, and possess not only knowledge in their understanding, but grace in their hearts. Keep us by thy Holy Spirit throughout this day. May we not think our own thoughts, nor speak our own words, nor do our own actions, on thy holy day. Graciously remember all our friends and relations. May all of them be related to thee by the blood of thy Son, and become friends of Jesus. Give them a new heart, and put a right spirit within them. Cause them to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning, and to know the way in which they should walk. Teach them all to do thy will, and quicken them for thy name's sake. Graciously remember too, we beseech thee, all the children of affliction. Suit the communications of thy grace to their respective wants. Give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. May they feel that all things whatsoever work together for good to them that love God. Forgive, O Lord, the sins of our holy things, and now graciously hear and answer these our prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM CXLV.

REMARKS.

The more we know of God, the more will we feel disposed to extol and bless his holy name. Those only who know not God, weary in his service, and have no sympathy with the psalmist when he said, 'every day will I bless thee, and praise thy name for ever and ever.' But why did he thus praise the Lord. He did so because his greatness was unsearchable; because his majesty had a glorious honour; because his works were wondrous, and because of the memory of his great goodness.

From this, the wonder evidently is, not that he praised the Lord so much, but that multitudes praise him so little; not that he blessed the Lord every day, but that multitudes never bless the Lord at all. We need not a stronger proof, than this affords, of the natural alienation of our hearts from God; for were we not naturally without God, no day could possibly pass without praise and prayer.

'Who is a God like unto thee?' exclaims the prophet, and the more we consider the character of God, the more will we feel disposed to join with the prophet in the exclamation: for the Lord is not only gracious, but full of compassion; not only slow to anger, but of great mercy; not only good to all, but spreading his tender mercies over all his works. Had this not been the character of God, our condition now would not be what it is; for who, but One slow to anger, could have borne with all our sinfulness and rebellion? and who, but One of great mercy, could have endured our vile ingratitude and waywardness of heart? We have been unwearied in sinning, yet God has borne with us. We have been incessant in our provocations, yet has his gracious compassion not failed. We have broken his laws, opposed his will, trampled on his authority, yet has he proved a God of tender mercies.

Where sin abounded, his grace does much more abound. God has given a proof of his grace, transcendently glorious, for he commended his love to us in giving up his beloved Son to the death for us, even while we were yet sinners.

This very psalm, indeed, tells us of this Son, for he is no other than the 'my God, O King,' whom the psalmist here extols. But let us observe what he here says in regard to him, 'He upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all that be bowed down. Yes, Emmanuel himself upholds his fainting people, and prevents them from falling by his own blessed arms. Those, too, whom he sees bowed down with grief, and being laden with sin, does he raise up, removing, by his own hand, their grievous burden. But, more than this, he becomes their friend and keeper, so that they want no good thing. Their meat they ever receive in due season. Their every want he supplies, for he opens his hand to them. Their every wish is gratified, for he fulfils the desire of them that fear him. Never are they disappointed by them, for he is holy in all his works, and he is righteous in all his ways. Their prayers never ascend in vain, for he hears their cry, and will save them. Their trust in him is never misplaced, for he is nigh to all that call upon him in truth. When exposed to danger, or pursued by enemies, they never resort to him in vain, for he preserves all them that love him, while he destroys the wicked. Such is the character of this gracious King, and happy surely must all those be who are truly his subjects. His subjects alas, however, are still few, although there are many in profession. His subjects must all be willing ones, for a forced subjection he will not acknowledge.

If in reality this King is our King, and this Lord our Lord, then let each of us in sincerity say, 'I will extol thee, my God, O King.' If we are truly his people, let our constant aim be to spread the knowledge of his name; and if from the kingdom of darkness we have been brought into his kingdom of light, let us never cease to show forth the praises of him who called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. Let us, among other ways, do this by praying earnestly for the enlargement of his kingdom. The kingdoms of the world are yet, alas, not his. Satan is still, to a sad extent, the god of this world, and commands the services of multitudes. Blessed be God, however, this shall not always be the case, for the sure language of prophecy is, 'all kings shall yet fall down before him, and all nations shall serve him.' Encouraged by this glorious prophecy, let us rest not till every knee bow, and every tongue confess him to be both Lord and King.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art great, and greatly to be praised; thy greatness is unsearchable. All thy works shall praise thee, and thy saints shall bless thee, for thou art good to all, and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. We bless thee for all our privileges, for all the means of grace, and for the joyful sound of the gospel. May we not misimprove them, but do thou send a plenteous rain to refresh thine inheritance when it is weary, and make all the places about thy hill a blessing. Our time and our thoughts we have wasted upon the vanities of the world, and have been forgetful and careless of the realities of eternity. We have much need to say, forgive even in our very holiest services, and to plead that thou wouldest not enter into judgment with us, for in thy sight can no flesh be justified. Lead us now to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. May we be washed in his blood, and purified by his Spirit; and give us, O Lord, unwavering trust in thy unchangeable love and grace, and unshaken confidence in the atoning death and glorious intercession of our Redeemer. Do thou so unite us by faith to our great Head, that neither life, nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, may be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus the Lord. Hear also, O Lord, our prayers in behalf of all thy people throughout the world. Graciously bless all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth. Awaken all careless sinners who yet care for none of these things. By thy Spirit convince them of sin, and lead them to inquire what they must do to be saved. Instruct them in the saving knowledge of the Redeemer, and give them grace to believe unto salvation. Let thy word, O Lord, have free course, and be glorified. Remember, we beseech thee, all thy outcast people, who are still loved for their father's sake. Bless all the ministers of the gospel, make them wise, faithful, and diligent in their Master's service. Bless all our friends and relations with the precious blessings of the gospel. Remember also in thy great mercy, all the children of affliction. In the night of their trouble, do thou encourage them by the stars of thy promises, and may they get grace fully to rely on thy faithfulness, knowing that all thy promises are yea and Amen in Christ Jesus. And now, O Lord, be very near to us. Be our God and our guide, even unto death, and our never-failing portion. During our pilgrimage on earth do thou never leave us, and in our temptations do thou never forget us. Ever make thy grace sufficient for us, and perfect that strength in our weakness. Hitherto, O Lord, thou hast mercifully blessed us, and hast never left thyself without a witness to thy love and goodness, for thou hast crowned us with loving-kindness, and hast satisfied our mouths with good things. Accept of our thanksgiving for all these mercies, and make us more and more grateful. Watch over us during the silent watches of the night, and continue to bless us. Our waiting eyes are now towards thee. Do thou hear and answer us for the Lord Jesus' sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

SCRIPTURE—ZEPHANIAH III.

REMARKS.

We have here a very striking proof of the depravity of human nature. The city is said to be not only filthy, but oppressing; not only disobedient to the voice, but heedless of correction; not only distrustful of the Lord, but totally alienated from him. Such cities, alas! may still be found which sadly resemble this one, and not until God's people send up their united and effectual prayers, will there be that glorious change announced in prophecy, when righteousness shall flow down all our streets. Observe farther, however. Not only were the princes as roaring lions, but the judges were as evening wolves; not only were the prophets light and treacherous, but the priests polluted the sanctuary, and did violence to the law. Thus, we see that all ranks of the people were alike depraved; the rich equally with the poor, fatally infected with the disease of sin. How vain, then, to speak as some do, of the dignity of human nature, and of the love to virtue which the human heart naturally possesses. All such statements are contradicted by the most palpable experience; for, let men say what they may, it is undeniably true that there are none righteous, no not one. Slight outward differences there may indeed be, for some may be open, while others are more secret transgressors, but yet, when measured by the holy law of God, how slight is the difference between them.

In the midst of this, however, it is pleasing to hear the prophet exclaim, 'the just God is in the midst thereof, he will do no iniquity.' Whatever others may do, he still remains the same holy God, who is of purer eyes than to behold evil. And, as God can do no iniquity himself, so neither can he endure it in others, for his express determination, mentioned in ver. 8, is 'to gather the nations and to assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them his indignation, even all his fierce anger.' From this let us learn that while God is a God of mercy, he is no less a God of justice; and that while he is ready to forgive the humble penitent, he is no less ready to punish the impenitently guilty.

In the verses following, glorious things are promised. Those who now know not God, are yet to serve him, and the dispersed of Israel are again to be restored. So fully are God's people to be forgiven, and their backsliding healed, that they will have no more conscience of sin.

In that coming glorious day, they shall not be put to shame for all their doings, wherein they had transgressed against God. They that rejoice in their pride are to be removed, and all haughtiness because of God's holy mountain is to be brought low. Humility is to take the place of pride; faith, of unbelief; and doubting, of despair, for then will they trust the name of the Lord. Then, too, the remnant of Israel shall do no iniquity, and speak no lies; a deceitful tongue shall no more be in their mouth, for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid. Such are the blessed prophecies, and such the sweet promises contained in this chapter.

O how refreshing to think that Christ is mighty, that his arm is not shortened that it cannot save. How sweet to think that he will save and deliver his people from all the power, from all the guilt, and all the pollution of their sins; and that when thus saved, he will rejoice over them with peculiar gladness, renewing from time to time his love. But O how sad will it be, if notwithstanding such a salvation, and such a Saviour, we are not saved. How mournful, if through indifference or enmity, our guilt is not removed, our peace not restored, our wounds not healed, our sins not forgiven, and our wants not supplied. When so much is at stake, there should be no trifling. Our immediate duty is to examine our condition, that if not yet in the faith, we may cry out, What shall we do to be saved; and that if renewed, we may the more entirely surrender ourselves, soul and body, to God's glorious service.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we bless thy holy name, that through Christ we now enjoy freedom of access to a throne of grace. O Lord, graciously draw near to us at this time, and fill us with thy love. So deal with us, that our souls may bless thy holy name for all thy benefits. May we know thee to be gracious in forgiving our sins, healing our diseases, redeeming our lives from destruction, and in crowning us with loving-kindness and tender mercy. We rejoice to know, O Lord, that we cannot ask too much, if we ask in the name of Christ. For his sake thou art ready to fulfil all our petitions, and to supply all our wants. O Lord, we need life, light, and love; and we rejoice that in Christ there is a fullness of these blessings, to which we are all welcome. We beseech thee, O Lord, not to leave us to ourselves. Allow us not to be satisfied with a mere name to live, while dead; or to rest in the form, without the power of godliness. Help us to say in all sincerity of soul, Search us, O God, and know our hearts, and see if there be any wicked way in us. By thy good Spirit, O Lord, do thou teach us, and lead us into the land of uprightness. We deserve not these blessings at thy hands, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified. We claim them, not for any merit of ours, but only through the infinite merits and glorious intercession of Jesus Christ, in whom and by whom alone, we can approach with humble boldness the footstool of thy throne. Accept, O Lord, of our thanksgivings for all thy kindness to us since we had a being. We thank thee for what peace and repose we may have last night enjoyed, for the light of another day, and, above all, for the precious truth we have now been permitted to read. We thank thee for all our unnumbered mercies; but especially for a preached gospel, and an all-sufficient, all-willing Saviour, through whom we may find eternal life. From a sweet experience in our hearts of the truth of thy word, may we truly feel that the gospel is a joyful sound, and may we be enabled to testify by our whole life and conversation its glorious and divine efficacy on the soul. Attend us all, O

Lord, throughout this day. Be thou our gracious Keeper; preserve us from all evil, and enable us at all times to let our light so shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, may be led to glorify thee our Father in heaven. By the instructions received by us on thy holy Sabbath be ever brought to our remembrance, and applied in all the duties and trials of life. Let us never be ashamed of thee nor of thy call, but so faithfully confess thy name, that all may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. O Lord, graciously remember those that are over us in the Lord. Make them pastors after thine own heart, men of God and men of prayer, faithfully devoted to thy service. Remember, too, all that are in authority over that they may at all times be under thy holy guidance, and that we under them may live in peace and godliness. Remember in mercy the efforts now making to spread the gospel both among Jews and Gentiles. Abundantly bless every exertion, and pour out thy Spirit to refresh thy heritage, for it is weary. Now, wait we for but thy blessing. Lord, hear us in mercy, forgive, and answer us, for the Lord Jesus' sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION X.

REMARKS.

Much that is written in this book is dark, but we have reason to bless God, that what is essential for a sinner to know, is so plain that a very child may understand. In regard to the meaning of different parts of this chapter, different opinions are entertained; but most commentators seem to be at one in thinking that Jesus is the angel here referred to. And observe the glory of his nature and character. He is said to be 'mighty,' and who can doubt this, when he is here said to stand with one foot on the land, and another on the sea, thus denoting that both are alike under his royal sway. Yes, he is truly mighty. Hear this, and be encouraged, all ye weak and trembling saints, for though you are weak he is strong, and will perfect his strength in your weakness. He is mighty, and all his might will be employed in your protection. How strong soever your enemies may be; how fiercely soever the lion may rage; how proudly soever the winds may blow, or the waters foam, yet what of all this, when Jesus your friend is mighty, and by one word can shut the lion's mouth, and still the tempter's rage!

But on the other hand, the might of Jesus may well alarm every sinner, who is not yet through him reconciled to God. Who can resist such power as that possessed by Emmanuel? Alas! no sinner can or will ever dare. O then that sinners now would kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and they perish from the way, when his anger is kindled but a little.

But while Christ is mighty, he is at the same time faithful. The covenant which he has made with his people, is one never to be forgotten. It is a covenant ordered in all things and sure, and though saints often fail in their part of the engagement, yet Christ continues faithful.

In proof of this, we have only to look to the rainbow, here said to be on his head, for it is the emblem of his faithfulness and of the perpetuity of his covenant. O when such is his faithfulness, how strong should be our faith; and when such is his truth, how unwavering should be our confidence, and how cheerfully should we resign ourselves into his hands. Farther still, his face is said to be as 'the sun;' thus pointing out, on the one hand, the fullness of his personal glory and majesty, and on the other, the fullness of that light by which he enlightens his beloved people. Yes, in Christ is treasured up all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. This fullness is as a fountain ever flowing for the benefit of his people, out of which they are freely invited to draw without money and without price.

And while the face of Jesus is like the sun, his feet are like pillars of fire. Those who depend upon him, are not trusting to a broken reed, but to a pillar more stable than the mountains, for the mountains shall depart, but he shall remain. Let all then who are concerned for their salvation ask, Am I, or am I not, leaning on this pillar.

In his hand, we are told still farther, was a little book, and he cried with a loud voice as when a lion roareth. And when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices. What the little book contained, or what these seven thunders were, it is difficult to say. Indeed, for the time, this seemed to be intentionally hid, for when the apostle, hearing the seven thunders, was about to write, a voice from heaven forbade him, saying, 'Seal up these things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.' Let us learn from this that God's thoughts are not as man's thoughts, nor God's ways as man's ways, and that secret things belong unto God.

There is one declaration of the Angel very solemn, when swearing by him who liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven and the things that are therein; he declares 'that time should be no longer.' How ready are we to forget this solemn truth in the midst of our many worldly engagements. Time is ours now, but how long it may be so, we cannot tell, for sooner or later this sentence shall go forth, that time shall be no longer. While time is ours, let us improve it; while there is time to repent and believe, let us not trifle. Eternity is rapidly approaching, and O how sad will it be to find, when time is no longer, that nevertheless we are unprepared to meet our God.

What the little book may mean, it is difficult to say; but the effects of it on John, when it was eaten, strikingly illustrate the deceitful character of sin. At first it is a sweet morsel, as sweet as honey, but soon it becomes fearfully bitter. Sin is just like poison a little sweetened, or like a serpent harmless in appearance, but deadly in its sting. It promises bread, and it gives a stone; life, and it gives death. Let us evermore then learn to hate sin as that abominable thing which God hates, and which ruins man.

PRAYER.

O Lord, enable us now to draw near to the footstool of thy throne, remembering that thou art a Spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit and in truth. Enable us, O Lord, to confide at once in thy wisdom and love, and in our sweet experience may we feel, that through Christ thou canst be a just God and yet a Saviour. We confess, O Lord, that our faith is weak, and that we are ready to give way to the suggestions of unbelief, to walk more by sight than by faith, and thus sinfully to question thy truth and faithfulness. But, O Lord, do thou graciously forgive, and mercifully subdue our unbelief; and sooner may we believe that heaven and earth would pass away, than one promise of thine be unfulfilled, or one pledge unredeemed. May we have a sure and abiding interest in Christ, and serve him with a warm and unchanging love. May we so walk that those who are over us in the Lord may be enabled to give thanks, hearing of our faith and love toward the Lord Jesus and toward all saints. O Lord, be graciously pleased to strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts of all those whom thou hast made pastors in thy church. Remember also, O Lord, the dark places of the earth. Have mercy on those who are still worshipping stocks and stones, and bowing before gods which have eyes but see not, and ears but hear not. Make them willing in the day of thy power, and speedily bring them to bow the knee to Jesus. And, O Lord, we earnestly entreat thee to remember the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Send forth faithful and devoted men to seek their welfare. Yea, greatly bless all missionaries in their labours of love, whether preaching to Jews or Gentiles. Be especially gracious to all the members of this household. In rich mercy, do thou grant that all of us may belong to the household of faith, and the family of Christ. May our eyes be so opened, and our hearts so touched, that each of us may be able to say, My beloved is mine, and I am his. Accept, O Lord, of our thanksgiving for all thy goodness to us during the past day, for delivering us from evil, for protecting us from danger, and for all our temporal and spiritual comforts. Continue, O Lord, thy goodness to us; and with all thy blessings give us, we beseech thee, the blessing of a grateful heart for all our mercies. Remember all that are in affliction, and suit thy grace to their wants, and bring to their remembrance all thy precious promises. Be thou the Father of the fatherless, the Husband of the widow, the orphan's stay, and the stranger's shield. Remember all thy gracious promises to them, and in their own experience may they know the Lord's unchangeable love and grace. May all their afflictions prove blessings, and by them all may they be led to a closer walk with God. Our waiting eyes, O Lord, are now towards thee, and our hope is in thy word. We plead no merit of ours, but place our entire reliance on the perfect merit of our Lord and Saviour. It is in his name we now approach, and now present these our petitions. O Lord, do thou graciously hear, answer, and forgive, for the Lord Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CII. 13—18.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH I.

REMARKS.

The book of Zechariah is properly placed between those of Haggai and Malachi, for he was, in some respects, the colleague and coadjutor of both these prophets. We read in scripture of several persons of that name; but this Zechariah was the son of Barachias, or Barachiah, and a descendant of Iddo the seer. He seems to have been of the sacerdotal race. His name signifies the powerful mind of God; and the mind of Christ was largely revealed to him, and dwelt in him richly. He began to prophecy 'in the eighth month of the second year of Darius;' and as 'there was now no king in Israel,' he dates by the reign of the Persian monarch. He opens his commission, as we find in the second verse, by reminding the people that God had 'been sorely displeased' with their 'fathers;' and he thus intimates to them that, if they transgressed after the manner of their ancestors, they could not expect to escape similar punishment. It is a fearful thing, to fall into the hands of the living God, for who knows the power of his wrath? Yet he is merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin, and willing to save, even to the uttermost, all who turn unto him by humble faith and sincere repentance, as children to an offended father. 'Turn ye unto me,' he says, repeating his name and title as 'the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you.' The Lord of hosts speaks the same language to us, and waits to be gracious.

In the fifth verse the prophet reminds the Jews who had survived the captivity, that not only their fathers, but also the prophets who had warned them, were now no longer in the land of the living; but he declared that the divine word had taken effect, and had been accomplished on their fathers; and that the great and solemn truth, that all must die and come to judgment, still remained, and should teach the living to learn wisdom. The prophets, though dead, yet still spake, and lifted up a warning voice, even from the recesses of the tomb. We are here taught, that while the goodness of man is as the flower of the grass, the word of the Lord abideth for ever. Let us all hearken to the voice of God speaking in his providence, in his word, and in the gospel ministry, lest death should overtake us in the midst of our sins unrepented of, lest the Lord of hosts should deal with us according to our ways and our doings.

Ver. 8—11. Here the prophet narrates a vision of mercy and deliverance to his 'kinsmen according to the flesh.' It was a vision of the night, and it is diversified by shades of obscurity. The mighty King of Zion, and great Head of his church, appears here, in regal pomp and majesty, as a victorious leader at the head of his legions, all in red array, and 'riding prosperously.' The Captain of our salvation is here represented as 'mighty to save,' and ever ready to defend his people, and to conquer all their enemies, yet, in some measure, hiding, at the same time, his power, and refraining from putting forth 'the greatness of his strength.' We are here taught that 'the Lord reigneth,' and that nothing is beyond his control, or hid from his all-seeing eye.

Ver. 12—17. The Angel of the covenant, the Messenger of the Lord of hosts, is here introduced as an earnest Intercessor with his Father in behalf of both Israel and Judah, and receiving answers of peace, for God is unwilling to give up either Ephraim or Judah, and returns 'comfortable words.' The period of captivity was closed; the time decreed for mercy had arrived; the indignation was past; Zion was to be comforted; the temple was to be finished; and Jerusalem, the city of the Lord, was to flourish as the grass; her suburbs were to be extended; and her children were to multiply exceedingly, and to replenish the land. For although there is a night of rebuke and of weeping, there is a morning of revival and of joy; let Israel, then, rejoice in his Maker, and 'let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.' For 'in Judah God is known; his name is great in Israel; in Salem, also, is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion.'

Ver. 18—21. The encouragement to the church of Christ is here repeated, and confirmed by a second vision of comfort, that of the four horns, and the four carpenters or smiths. Horns in scripture are symbols of strength; and we are here assured, that if there are horns of power to annoy and harass God's people, there are in his hands hammers of iron to break these horns, and to hinder them from doing any hurt. The horns of the wicked shall be cut off; but those of the righteous shall be exalted.

PRAYER.

Holy and heavenly Father, in whom the families of the earth are blessed, we bow with one accord before thy throne. We lament, O God, our as and our shortcomings before thee. Wert thou mark iniquity, we could not answer thee for thee, even the least, of the countless thousands of thy transgressions. Enter not into judgment with us, we humbly beseech thee, for in thy sight can no man living be justified. May we be justified wholly through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. Create within us clean hearts and right spirits, sanctify us wholly, and let no idol of this world withdraw our hearts from thee, who alone art worthy of our highest adoration and supreme affection. Enable us to love thee supremely, and to walk in love to one another, as thou hast loved us, and hast given thy Son as a propitiation for our sins. Blessed be now the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for in him thou hast blessed us with all spiritual mercies; and blessed be he who came in the name of the Lord to save us. Blessed be the Lord our God, the God of Israel, who hath visited and redeemed his people. Our souls magnify the Lord, and our spirits rejoice in God our Saviour, for he who is mighty hath done for us great things, holy, and excellent, and venerable is his name. When we consider the glory and majesty with which thou art invested, the spirituality and extent of thy law, the exceeding purity and breadth of the commandment, and, at the same time, reflect upon our own guilt and unworthiness, we have much reason to be covered with shame and confusion in thy holy presence, for our sins are many and aggravated. We have sinned with our fathers, and after the manner of their transgression. Mark not against us our sins, deal not with us according to our ways and our doings, but according to the multitude of thy tender mercies in Christ, even the sure mercies of David, and accept us in the Beloved. Make us more and more sensible of our danger, that we may flee to the stronghold which thou hast provided for the prisoners of hope; and also of our disease, that we may apply to the sovereign Physician of souls for a remedy. Convince us more and more of our wants and our weaknesses, that we may come to thee in whom all fullness dwells, and with whom is everlasting strength. Make us deeply acquainted with our coldness and deadness in spiritual and heavenly things. Quicken us, and we shall be a family rightly calling upon thy name, and worshipping thee in spirit and in truth. We rejoice to know that thou, the Lord God omnipotent, reignest, that all things are under thy sovereign control, that nothing can befall to us without thy permission, and that thou makest all things to work together for good to those who love thee, and are called according to thy purpose. We pray for the peace and prosperity of our Jerusalem. Build up her walls, repair the breaches of them, and let the ark of thy covenant and of thy strength remain in her temple. May the Holy One of Israel be great in the midst of her, may her suburbs be extended, and may her children multiply and replenish the land. Visit the vine which thou hast planted; let not the beasts of the forest or of the field trample upon it; water it with dew from heaven; may it extend its branches to the ends of the earth: and may generations yet unborn sit under its shade, and be refreshed with its fruit. Let thy watchful eye be upon us for good, guide us this day by thy counsel, prepare us for every duty and for every trial, and enable us to grow daily in grace and in meekness for thy heavenly kingdom and glory. Hear these our humble and united prayers, and give an answer of comfort and of peace, for the sake of Christ our Redeemer, whom thou always hearest, and to whom, with thee and the Holy Spirit, be the glory for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXX. 3—6.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XI.

REMARKS.

The design of God in the apocalypse, and other prophetic books, as Sir Isaac Newton observes, 'was not to make us prophets,' or to gratify our curiosity by enabling us to know things to come; but that future occurrences might be interpreted after they have taken place, and that his foreknowledge, and not ours, might be thus manifested to the world. Events accordingly will, from time to time, open, in some measure, the seals of this mysterious book. The grand series of revolutions predicted by the holy prophets 'since the world began,' will at last be fully disclosed to view, and a glorious light thrown upon the magnificent scheme of providence from the beginning to the end. Till then we, who have not the gift of prophecy, must and ought to content ourselves with what has been already revealed by him who alone governs futurity, and hath put its 'times and seasons in his own hand.'

Ver. 1, 2. The prophet Ezekiel in his vision, to which St John here evidently alludes, had seen the Old Testament church hurt and harassed by Antiochus, and by various distressing causes; and the prophet of Patmos here, in the visions of heaven, beheld the church of the New Testament troubled and tarnished by the cruelties and corruptions of antichrist, and by the multiplied defections and persecutions of the times. He receives a divine commission to measure the Christian temple, to notice what sacrifices were offered in it, what kind of fire burned on its altar, and what was the number and the character of the worshippers. To all these things he was to apply the measuring reed, the perfect rule of God's holy word. We should consider that the great Angel of the covenant is still abroad in his church, giving commissions to his servants, ministers, and hearers, to take care that 'all things be done in order,' and according to 'the pattern' and the direction given by the sovereign Architect of the house, and Lord of the kingdom. If we walk not, in our different stations and circumstances, according to his divine rule, 'it is because there is no light in us.'

Ver. 3—7. In these verses we have the figurative life and death of the two prophetic witnesses, the eminent ministers of the word, and zealous defenders of 'the faith once delivered unto the saints.' The term two is sometimes used to signify a small number. When the widow of Zarephath said to Elijah that she was 'gathering two sticks,' she meant indefinitely a few sticks, with which to make ready the humble repast for herself and her son. A peculiar propriety has been noticed in the use of the number two here, for by the mouth of two or three witnesses, according to the law, every thing was to be established. Our blessed Saviour, it has been remarked, sent forth his seventy disciples 'two and two;' and power is here given to the witnesses, as our Lord gave to the seventy, to do wonderful things in vindication of the truth. By the divine authority which they had received, they went with a portion of the power and of the spirit with which Elias was favoured, and were thus mighty to pull down the strongholds of sin and of sinners, and to maintain 'the testimony of the Lord Jesus.' Those faithful witnesses were 'clothed in sackcloth,' as a token of the depressed condition of the church; and they continued testifying for twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days, or for so many years, even till the sounding of the seventh trumpet. They are represented as falling at last into the hands of their enemies and 'killed.' Thus we are apprized that the light of divine truth was, for a season, obscured, and its progress retarded. Truth may meet with temporary opposition and obstruction; but it is great, and sooner or later will prevail and be glorified. The gospel sun will ultimately shine forth in unclouded majesty, and will destroy the kingdom and power of darkness by the brightness of its shining.

Ver. 8—10. Wicked and ungodly men are here described as rejoicing and making merry over the martyred friends of the Redeemer, refusing sepulture to 'their dead bodies,' and 'sending gifts' of gratulation 'to one another' as tokens of their joy for their having overcome those 'right hearted men,' who had annoyed them by the 'fire' and force of sacred truth. He who is 'the faithful and true Witness,' says, 'because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you.' He says, 'in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be not afraid, I have overcome the world, and I have the keys of death and the grave.'

Ver. 10—15. We find here that, after a very short time, the dead witnesses are revived: 'The Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet.' When 'the Spirit quickeneth,' this is to God's servants as 'life from the dead,' then they 'renew their strength,' and proceed in their appointed work with new courage and constancy. They hear a voice from heaven saying to them 'Come up hither;' resume the station from which your enemies vainly imagined that they had pulled you down never to rise again. Occupy your former places, which shall be filled with others after you inheriting your zeal and faithfulness. 'The wicked shall see it and be grieved;' they shall, like Askelo of old, 'see it, and fear, and shall give glory to the God of heaven.' Thus we see that the woes of God's church shall at last pass away, and the light afflictions of his servants shall work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Let us hearken to the 'loud voices' of acclamation 'in heaven,' noticed in the fifteenth verse, and recognize the supreme dominion and sovereign power of Jehovah. Let us anticipate, in joyful hope, the blessed period when 'the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.'

Ver. 16—19. Here we have the triumphant thanksgivings and rejoicings of saints and angels on account of God's universal sovereignty, and for the victory of his truth over every form of Antichrist in the world. 'The nations' had been and still 'were angry' at the great things which God had done for his church and people, and they were now to suffer 'terrible things in righteousness,' as a just punishment for their cruel and 'ungodly deeds.' 'The temple of God,' which had for a time been comparatively shut, was now opened; the 'ark of the testament,' which had been, in comparison, concealed from general view, was now publicly 'seen;' the book of the divine word, which had been, in some measure, buried in the ruins of the temple, was now found, and given to be 'read of all men.' Good magistrates and good ministers are now appointed to watch, with one accord, for the good of the church of Christ, and for the peace of his Jerusalem.

PRAYER.

Infinitely great and gracious God, of whom, through whom, and to whom, are all things, and who alone art the worthy object of all religious worship, we would lift up our hearts with our hands to thee in the heavens, and offer unto thee our united homage, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving. Quicken us, and we will call upon thy name. Open our lips, and we will show forth thy praise. Look not on us as we are in ourselves; but look on the face of thy beloved Son, and our prayers shall come up before thee as a memorial, through his all-prevalent intercession. For his sake pardon all our sins, and receive us graciously, and love us freely. May he be made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; and may we receive him in all his offices and characters, and rest upon him alone, as he is offered to us in the gospel. Enable us to glorify thee our Father in heaven, and to adorn the doctrine of od our Saviour. Enlarge our hearts, and we shall run the ways of thy commandments, which are all holy, and just, and good. Give us the knowledge of thee and of thy truth, which maketh wise unto salvation; the faith which worketh by love, and the love which casteth out every fear but that of offending thee. Give us the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, and the wisdom which cometh from above, and which is first pure, then gentle and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and of all good fruits. Give us what is good, whether we ask it or ask it not; and withhold from us what is evil, though in our ignorance we should ask it; and be ever gracious and bountiful to give us what is truly good for us in time and through eternity. We pray for the advancement of pure and undefiled religion in the world. May thy word have free course every where, and be glorified. Give thy Son the heathen for an inheritance. Have mercy on thy once chosen people, the children of Abraham, and bring in the Jews with the fullness of the Gentiles. Pour out thy Spirit on the house of David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and open, on the high mountains of Israel, a fold for thy flock. We pray for our country, for the sovereign on the throne, and all subordinate magistrates, for the Christian church, and all the ministers of thy word. Pour oil into the lamps of thy sanctuary, that they may give light to all in the house. Put the Spirit of life into thy servants who minister in holy things. May they stand firmly on their feet, and deliver thy word with freedom and faithfulness, and may their report be received with meekness; and may thy arm be manifestly revealed by the number of those who have been turned unto righteousness. May the ark of thy covenant be seen in thy sanctuary on earth; and may we all be prepared to see it more perfectly in the holy place of the heavenly temple. Prepare us for joining in the triumphant song of the saints and angels above, who give blessing, and honour, and glory, to the Majesty of heaven for ever and ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XLVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH II. III.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In these two chapters we have two remarkable visions; the former, consisting of 'a man with a measuring line in his hand;' and the latter, 'of

Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him.' Both symbolically import the restoration of the Jewish church and state to their pristine glory, in spite of earth and hell combined to oppose their growing prosperity under the fostering and protecting care of the Lord and his Anointed; and both point, not merely to the Jewish, but chiefly to the Christian dispensation, and to the conversion and restoration of the Jews in the latter day. To measure a place is a symbol of divine care and heavenly protection, Zech. i. 16; Rev. xi. 1. To measure Jerusalem, ver. 2, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof, symbolically imports what is declared in ver. 4, 5. 'Jerusalem shall be inhabited,' &c. 'For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and the glory in the midst of her.' Joshua in the 3d chapter, clothed with filthy garments, and hearing the Lord command that these filthy garments should be taken away, that a change of raiment be substituted in their room, and a mitre be set on his head, symbolically imports the same glorious truth; for God delights to comfort his people abundantly by giving them a succession of consolatory visions; and whereas Satan has to be rebuked, ver. 2. this shows that he is mightily opposed to the glory of the church, and would soon prove her ruin, were she not a brand plucked out of the fire by sovereign grace. 'Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?' In the latter part of the 2d chapter, the church is exhorted to deliver herself from Babylon, and to perfect the begun restoration; also to rejoice that the Lord dwelt in the midst of her as of old, and that many nations shall be joined to the Lord, 'in that day when he should inherit Judah, his portion, in the holy land.' This appears from ver. 7. 'Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwells with the daughter of Babylon;' also from ver. 10. to the end. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee,' &c. The same delightful truth is imported by the figurative language of the latter part of the 3d chapter. Here Christ is promised: 1st. Under the figure of a branch, ver. 8; 2d. Under the figure of a stone, and of a stone with seven eyes, a symbol of perfection; an engraven stone, a symbol of divine excellence, ver. 9; and, 3d. The glory of the church in the latter day; her rest from persecution; and the conversion of heathen nations are pointed at in the last verse. 'In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine, and under the fig-tree.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Here we learn: 1st. That God hath planted a church in the world, and that earth and hell are combined against her; but that she is a brand plucked out of the fire, and will ultimately prevail against all her enemies; 2d. That salvation is to be found in the church, and in her only; for her king is the Lord Jesus; he dwells in the midst of her; and he gives grace and glory to all his believing people; 3d. That we ought to inquire, whether we belong to the true church or not; whether we are on Christ's side, or on the side of his enemies; whether we are his subjects, or the subjects of Satan ; for in the one case we are secure for eternity, in the other we shall perish for ever with all his enemies, who shall be consumed before him as stubble before the devouring fire.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we bend the knee at thy footstool, and lift up our voice unto thee. Thou art the living and true God, the Creator of heaven and earth, the Father of angels, and of men ; the first and last ; the wisest and best, the holiest and greatest of beings. Every perfection is thine ; all nature is subject to thy control ; man alone is rebellious. Yet, O Lord, thou pitiest him, and hast sent forth thy Son to save him from eternal ruin, by calling him to repentance, faith, and prayer, in virtue of the great sacrifice of the cross. Our voice therefore, O Lord, shalt thou hear in the morning ; in the morning will we direct our prayer to thee, and will look up. We approach thee, O Lord, this morning, in the name of Jesus Christ thy Son, and our adorable Saviour. We approach thee with the language of thanksgiving and praise. We bless, we magnify thy holy name together, for the mercies of the past night, for the light of another day, for life, health of body, soundness of mind, food, raiment, society, friends, relatives, and every worldly comfort ; but more especially for spiritual mercies, for Jesus Christ thine unspeakable gift, and for casting our lot in a Christian land. We bless thee, O Lord, with grateful hearts, for pitying man in his low and lost estate ; for sending the Son of thy love to suffer and die for his sins ; and for planting a church in this rebellious world, redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, which may be afflicted, but shall never be forsaken of thee ; which may be persecuted, but shall never be destroyed ; which though small in its beginning, shall be great in its increase, and glorious in its triumphs, subduing and filling the whole earth, of which thou hast spoken, saying, I will be a wall of fire around thee, and the glory in the midst of thee. We pray, O Lord, that we may be brought into thy church, and kept in it by the mighty power of thy grace. Father, we have sinned, and perverted our way before thee. We grieve, we mourn for our sins, which are many and great ; and we desire to hate and forsake them, and to turn unto thee, unfeignedly, with our hearts. O Lord, we beseech thee to have mercy upon us. Blot out our sins, O divine Saviour, in thy most precious blood. Sanctify us, O thou Holy and Eternal Spirit ; and purge our consciences, by the blood of Christ, from dead works, that we may henceforth serve thee in righteousness and fear all our days. Grant us thy mercy, O God ; and show to us thy salvation ; then shall we praise thee with joyful lips. Extend, O Lord, we beseech thee, the borders of the Redeemer's kingdom. Bless the church which thou hast planted and watered with precious blood, and which thou hast sworn to defend against all her enemies. O give unto thy Son, the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. Fulfil all thy promises made to Christ, and to his believing people ; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Pity, O God, we beseech thee, the perishing heathen ; and O remember in mercy thine ancient people the Jews, and may it be given unto them, as here promised, to dwell in their own land, and worship under their own vine and fig-tree. Lord, be merciful to us this day, and O keep us in thy holy fear, and deliver us from all evil ; for all we ask is in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee, O Father, and the Holy Spirit, be praise and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM II.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XII.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains a vision of the suffering state of the church of God, first, under Rome Pagan, and then under Rome Christianized, but holding the truth in unrighteousness. The former period extends to the conversion of Constantine, in the year 317 ; the latter embraces all that vast portion of time which is comprehended within the rise, the growth, the predominance, and the decay of popish error and popish tyranny. Like the visions in Zechariah which we have been considering, while it predicts a state of suffering, it also foretells a coming period of glory and triumph, for the gates of hell shall not prevail against her ; in character it is similar to them, but it embraces a different section of the church's eventful and chequered history. The woman clothed with the sun, &c. is the true church, as consisting of genuine believers in the original promise ; the child with which she travails in birth is Christianity, or Christ and his seed ; the great red dragon, &c. is the Roman empire, while pagan and idolatrous ; and the tail, which drew the third part of the stars, and did cast them to the earth, is the false religion which he taught and upheld. Whereas the dragon stood before the woman, to devour her child as soon as it was born, this imports the attempts that should be made by Herod, the Jewish sanhedrim, Nero, and others, to crush Christianity in its infancy ; and whereas this child was caught up to God, and to his rone, this signifies, that Christianity should be under the peculiar care and protection of heaven. At prior to the final triumph of the church, we are even to understand, by way of prolepsis, or anticipation, that she was to be in the wilderness, or in affliction, for 1260 years, as declared in the 6th verse. 'And the woman fled into the wilderness,' &c. Meanwhile there was to be war in heaven, or in the church, between her and the pagans, between Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels, or between the friends and the enemies of Christianity; and the result would be that paganism would be cast out of the councils of the Roman empire, ver. 9; which happened under Constantine the Great in the fourth century, ver. 10, 11. Then was heard great rejoicing in the church in consequence of this important victory obtained by the blood of the Lamb; and the praise of those is celebrated who loved not their lives unto the death, i. e. who suffered martyrdom for the testimony of Jesus. But this season of tranquility was not long to continue, ver. 12. 'Woe to the inhabitants of the earth,' &c. The cause of these new persecutions is till the dragon, i. e. the Roman empire as influenced by the devil, whose title is the old serpent, and Satan, who deceive the whole world; and whereas he carried on these persecutions after he was cast into the earth, this imports that he would find other means of persecutions than those councils of the Roman empire from which he was ejected, such as by dividing Christians, and arraying them against each other, and by stirring up the surrounding barbarians against them; all which has literally and fully been accomplished. Under these new persecutions the woman was to fly into the wilderness, ver. 14. by divine aid, and to be nourished there for 1260 years from the completion of her flight; though even there she is not to enjoy perfect repose, but quite the reverse; for though she is to be protected in her retreat, and nourished for better times, yet the dragon, ver. 17, is to make war with the remnant of her seed who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. The state of the church has long existed, and still continues. But the time is limited, and the Lord reigneth. Therefore let us rejoice, and patiently wait.

PRAYER.

The heavens declare thy glory, O Lord, and the firmament proclaims thy handy work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night teaches us new knowledge of thee. Thou, O Lord, makest the mornings and the evenings to rejoice over us. Therefore, O Lord, do we humbly and reverently, in Christ Jesus our Lord, draw near to pay our evening tribute of adoration, gratitude, and praise; also to bewail our transgressions, and humble ourselves before thee; and fervently to implore pardoning mercy, sanctifying, consoling, and quickening grace, and eternal glory beyond death and the grave; as a free gift through the precious blood of thy dear Son. Accept now, O Lord, we beseech thee, our heartfelt thanksgivings for all thy mercies, temporal and spiritual, manifested to us ever since we had a being. See our deep and unfeigned humiliation for sin. And O pity and forgive, for the sake of Christ's righteousness, for the sake of his incarnation, obedience, sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, and constant intercession at thy right hand. We admire and praise thee, O Lord, for all thy works, which are truly wonderful, but more especially for the stupendous work of human redemption. Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and gave his Son to die for us, and to set up a kingdom of righteousness, peace, and joy, which shall terminate only with the world itself. Translate us, O God, most merciful, by thy Spirit, into this holy and happy kingdom. Clothe our souls with the bright robes of Christ's righteousness. Infuse also thy healthful grace into our hearts. Make us sons and daughters by adoption. Strengthen us to endure afflictions and temptations. Dispose and enable us to abound in good works. And O preserve us safe to thy heavenly kingdom, so that when we awake on the resurrection morn we may behold thy face in mercy, and be satisfied with thy likeness. Sensible, O Lord, of the great value of gospel blessings, we pray that thy Son's kingdom may be universally extended. O give thy Son the heathen for an inheritance. And let all his obdurate enemies and opposers speedily perish. We rejoice, O Lord, to know, that thy church is not always to abide in the wilderness; but is soon to come forth as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners. O! hasten the time, and let the song be sung again by multitudes in every land,—Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of the brethren is cast down, who accused them before God day and night. Bless, O God, most merciful, all our brethren of mankind. Bless the sovereign, and all in authority. Bless our relatives, benefactors, and acquaintances. Visit the sick and afflicted with great compassion. Prepare the dying for death, and teach the living to be ever mindful of death and eternity. Dwell in this family by thy covenant-presence. May the Lord bless us, and keep us evermore; for all we now beg, is for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH IV. V.

REMARKS.

The subject matter of these two chapters is distinct; but still the church in some one or other of her aspects is the important theme. In the former, by the golden candlestick is shadowed forth the good success which shall attend Zerubbabel's foundation of the temple; and by the two olive trees, the liberal supply of heavenly grace which should accompany the administration of divine ordinances in the second, as well as in the first temple. The whole is a vision or a representation of objects to the eye of the prophet, while he was perfectly awake. Ver. 1. 'And the angel that talked with me came again, and waked me,' &c. A candlestick signifies in prophecy, a church. A candlestick, such as is described ver. 2, 3, imports a true church founded, nourished, and beautified by the Lord of hosts; or the Jewish church restored, built up, and made glorious after a long captivity. 'What are these, my Lord?' The answer is given in ver. 6—9, where we are plainly told that the candlestick, with the bowl, the seven lamps, and seven pipes, imports the restoration of the Jewish church, and the success that shall crown Zerubbabel's and Joshua's efforts in building the temple. And hereby the church is comforted and led to trust in Jehovah. Ver. 10. 'For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro over all the earth.' Whereas those lamps were supplied with oil from two olive branches, this signifies a plentiful supply of grace, primarily from Jesus Christ and from the Holy Spirit, the two anointed ones that stand before the Lord of the whole earth, as his servants in the grand work of human redemption; and secondarily, from Joshua and Zerubbabel, the two anointed ones that were raised up by Jesus Christ to be his representatives and instruments in the visible church. Ver. 11—13. 'What are these two olive-trees?' 'Then said he, These are the two anointed ones,' or sons of oil, 'that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.'

In the latter chapter we have two visions, a flying roll, and an ephah with a woman in the midst of it. The flying roll is described, ver. 2, as being twenty cubits long, and ten cubits broad; and as having, ver. 3, recorded upon it the curse of God against the various crimes to which the nation was addicted, such as lying, stealing, swearing, murder, and the like offences against God's holy law; but stealing and swearing are particularly enumerated, and only these as being more generally practised. The meaning of the symbol is, that God is the moral Governor of the universe; that his eyes are upon the ways of men, viewed nationally or individually; that stealing and swearing are grievous sins, and that his curse, ver. 4, shall remain in the midst of the swearer's house, or rather the perjured swearer, and also the thief's, and shall consume it, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof; not only in one place, in one city, or in one province, but through the whole breadth and length of the land, as signified by the roll not being stationary, but a flying roll. The ephah is described in ver. 6—8. The ephah is a measure containing ten omers. This ephah had a woman sitting in the midst of it, called Wickedness, denoting the injustice of their commercial dealings. A talent of lead, denoting the judgments of God, was lifted up, and cast upon the mouth thereof. Then the ephah, ver. 9, was lifted up and carried by two women with wings to the land of Shinar, and there established on its base, to intimate that if the Jewish nation should continue to be wicked as before, it should, as before, be uprooted and cast out, and set on its base in a far distant land; a prophecy which has been fulfilled, for the Romans came and took away their place and nation. O Lord, how unsearchable are thy judgments, and thy ways past finding out. Ver. 11. Surely thou hast built it an house in the land of Shinar, established it there, and set it there upon her own base.

PRAYER.

We rejoice, O Lord, in the morning light; for truly the light is sweet, and it is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun; and we desire to give thee hearty and unfeigned thanks for the mercies of the past night, for the light of a new day, for every worldly comfort, for every social blessing, for food and raiment, and all things which thou hast given us richly to enjoy. Much more, O Lord, would we rejoice in the light of the Sun of Righteousness, for truly his light is sweet, and it is a pleasant thing to behold his face in mercy; and we desire to praise, to magnify thy name, that he has risen upon us and our country with healing in his rays. O may he shine into our hearts this day by the light of his word and Spirit, to enlighten their darkness, to expel their fears, and to assuage their tumultuous sorrows. May he comfort our afflicted souls with the joys of his salvation; and may he turn away the flying roll laden with the curses of Jehovah from our doors, and from our persons and families. May our sun never go down, and may we rejoice in the salvation of the Lord evermore, saying, The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? Lord, we have sinned and perverted our way before thee. We humble ourselves in thy holy sight, and greatly afflict our souls for sin, that abominable thing which thou hatest, for which Christ suffered, bled, and died; and for which he descended into the grave, that we might live eternally. Be merciful to us, O Lord, thine unworthy servants. Christ, be merciful to us, we beseech thee; and O plead our cause with the Father, making mention of thy righteousness, and of thine only. Holy Spirit, be merciful to us, and make intercession within us with groanings which cannot be uttered. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, be merciful to us sinners who trust in thee by virtue of the everlasting covenant; and O heal our backslidings, and love us freely; putting thy grace into our hearts, that we may no more wilfully offend against thee, no more handle the ephah of wickedness. Lord, remember, we beseech thee, thy Zion. Build up her walls, beautify her palaces, and strengthen her towers. May she speedily become the joy and refuge of all nations. We rejoice in what is written concerning her, Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me. She was brought low by the sins of her people in the time of the captivity; but thou didst build her up again by thy servants Zerubabel and Joshua; and thou art still feeding her with oil poured forth from the two olive-branches, the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth; and wilt feed her, we believe and trust, till the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. Lord, hear this our cry, and let thine ear be attentive to the voice of our supplications. Lord, bless us and keep us. Lord, make thy face to shine upon us, and be gracious to us. Lord, lift up thy countenance upon us, and give us peace. And now unto God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be glory, honour, and praise, ascribed for ever and ever, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CII. 13.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XIII.

REMARKS.

In this chapter two beasts are prophetically described, which are personally and specifically distinct, but politically and ecclesiastically blended together. The one is denominated the ten-horned, and the other the two-horned beast, because the former had ten, and the latter two horns upon his head, i. e. the one influenced, or was composed of ten kingdoms; the other influenced, or was composed of two sovereignties or kingdoms. The Roman empire when broken down into ten kingdoms by the invasions of the Goths and Vandals, in the fifth and sixth centuries, and afterwards compacted by the spirit of Popery into one living body in the eighth century, constituted the first; the regal and ecclesiastical empire of the bishops of Rome, when fully established in the same century, constituted the second. From the 1st to the 10th verse, we have a prediction and description: 1st. Of the personal appearance and dreadful aspect of this monstrous beast. Ver. 1, 2. 'And I stood upon the sand of the sea,' &c.; and surely a beast more ferocious, more powerful, more dreadful, never existed before. 2nd. Of a terrible calamity that was to befall this monster in losing one of his heads, a calamity, however, which was speedily to be repaired, whereby new glory and a fresh accession of power were to accrue to him, insomuch that all the world wondered after the beast, ver. 3; a prediction which was accomplished in the revival of the Western empire in the person of Charlemagne, and in his political and ecclesiastical union with the bishops of Rome. 3d. Of his frantic and ferocious achievements against the saints of the Most High God, in his state of revived power and glory; such as speaking great things and blasphemies, making war against the saints and overcoming them, and exercising power over all kindreds, tongues, and nations. Ver. 4—8. A prophecy which has been accomplished in the history of Europe, Asia, and America, from the eighth century down to the present hour, in the history of Popish persecutions, of the Inquisitions, of the Crusades, and of the wars attendant on the Reformation; but still much remains to be fulfilled. This beast is to rage and be rampant for forty-two months, or 1260 years from the revival of the Western empire. Ver. 10. Then he is to go into captivity and be slain with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints, i. e. on this sure ground may the patience and faith of the saints be exercised.

From the 11th to the 18th verse, we have a prediction and description of the other beast, which had two horns like a lamb, but spake as a dragon, which well agrees with the bishops of Rome, politically and ecclesiastically viewed. This beast sprung up out of the earth, and not out of the sea, like the former; which description farther agrees with the rise and progress of Papal power, for it grew up insensibly among the ten horns after they had ceased from their commotions, and had settled down in their different provinces into comparative tranquillity and repose. Ver. 12—14. This beast, like the former, was to do great wonders, and exercise all the power of the first beast, a prediction which well accords with Popish influence over Roman Catholic kingdoms, with Popish arrogance and assumption of divine power, titles, and prerogative. Ver. 15—19. This beast was to be as bloody as the former, as tyrannical, and as overbearing; and who is ignorant of the exclusive, overbearing, tyrannical, and bloody character of Popery wherever it gains complete ascendancy? See a similar picture of him in 1 Thess. ii. 1—12. Ver. 18. Here is wisdom, or scope for the exercise of wisdom in finding out his name, nature, or duration, or all of them together, from his number, which is that of a man, (or which is used among men), and which number is 666. From this number, we learn that his name is the Latin beast, and that his nature is apostacy from the true faith. How long his duration will be, is elsewhere told, viz. 1260 years from the year 800, or the revival of the wounded head or Western empire, in the person of Charlemagne.

PRAYER.

Lord God Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, we worship thee. We adore thee as the true God, as the Father of our spirits, and the framer of our bodies. Early were we cast on thy divine care, and hitherto hast thou sustained us. How manifold, O Lord, are thy loving-kindnesses! They are new to us every morning, and thy faithfulness every evening; yea, every moment of our existence. We thank thee, O Lord, through Jesus Christ, for every one of them, and particularly for Jesus Christ himself, thine unspeakable gift to a lost and perishing world. O may we be saved by him from the wrath to come; and crown, we beseech thee, O Lord, the various acts of thy tender mercies, by bestowing upon us, though his infinite merits, everlasting life and unfading honours. Then shall we praise thee with hearts glowing with admiration, love, and gratitude, not only through the transient scenes of our earthly pilgrimage, but also through the ever-enduring ages of eternity, saying, Now, unto him that loved us, and washed us in his blood, and made us kings and priests unto God, be glory, honour, and dominion, for ever. Of the least of thy mercies, O Lord, we are utterly unworthy. Father, we have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight. Our sins are a burden too heavy for us to bear. We confess them. We mourn over them. We cry for help. We look, O God, to thy mercy in Christ. We look to Jesus as crucified for us. We look to the Holy Spirit, as the Spirit of Christ for sanctification. We look to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than the blood of Abel, for justification. Thus looking, O suffer us not to perish. Let us be as brands plucked from the fire. Let us be washed, let us be justified, let us be sanctified, by the blood of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of the living God. Lord, grant that all men may be brought along with us, our friends, relatives, acquaintances, and benefactors into the kingdom of Christ, set up from the beginning in this evil and rebellious world. And O let no weapon formed against it ever prosper. Bring down the man of sin, the two-horned beast that maketh war against the saints of the Most High. And with him, O Lord, bring down all those antichristian kingdoms that fight to uphold his spiritual despotism. We rejoice, O Lord, that thou reignest, that thou art able, and art pledged to bring down every power that exalts itself against thee and thine Anointed.

O hasten the time. Fill the earth speedily with thy glory. Bless our country. Bless our Sovereign with grace to reign for Christ. Dwell in this family. Watch over us this night. May goodness infinite and covenanted, be our portion in time and throughout eternity, for the sake of the merits of Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee the Father, and the ever-blessed Spirit, be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH VI. VII.

REMARKS.

In the first of these chapters God reveals himself, by his prophet, in two different attitudes: first, as the King of the whole earth indiscriminately, carrying on the government he administers, by the agency of his angels; and, second, as the King of saints, ruling the church through Jesus Christ, and raising it up to that universal dominion for which it is intended. The angels of the Lord are frequently, in scripture, compared to chariots, as in Psalm lxxviii. 17; and the providences of God are also represented by the different colours of horses, as in Rev. vi. In the present chapter we mark the origin and course of all events. The decrees of God stand fast like the mountains, and are imperishable as mountains of brass. From this, as the spring, come forth the chariots of the Lord, his angels, to carry into execution what he has devised and decided. Yet while the various events of providence issue from the same fountain, they assume different aspects at different periods. Sometimes they are red, denoting indignation and wrath; sometimes they are black, denoting the sadness which chastenings bring; sometimes they are white, denoting the return of joy; and sometimes they are grizzled and bay, denoting an intermingling of evil and good in the destiny of man. Yet while we observe the varied dealings of God with the earth, let us rejoice in this, that all things are ordered by a wisdom that cannot err, and a love that never cannot be exhausted.

The concluding portion of the sixth chapter, contains a prophetic description of the building up of the church of God. The man whose name is the 'Branch,' even Jesus Christ, (see Isaiah xi. 1.) 'he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne.' Such a prediction of the coming glory and greatness of the kingdom of the Messiah, cannot but be highly consolatory to every genuine believer. Though the dispensations of providence, in regard to the church, may be often varied, and sometimes painful, yet can we look forward with joyful anticipation to the time when all the prophecies and promises of scripture shall have been fulfilled, when the heathen shall have been given to Christ for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

In the seventh chapter, the prophet solemnly re-vokes the people for the hypocrisy of their religious professions. During the seventy years' captivity they ad fasted and mourned; they had hung their harps pon the willows, and could not sing the songs of Zion in the land of the stranger. Even after that eriod their fasts continued to be observed, at least a so far as the external appearance went. But here did not accompany these the performance of hose duties which are imperatively incumbent on all who profess to serve the Lord. For when they vere exhorted to 'execute judgment, and show mercy and compassion every man to his brother, and to ppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, or the poor, they refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear.' Warned therefore by them, and applying to ourselves the solemn reproof and exhortation of this passage, let us strive to make principle and practice, profession and performance, go hand in hand, endeavouring by our walk and conversation to adorn the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. 'Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. For many will say to me at that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works? to whom I will say, Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you.'

PRAYER.

Blessed be thy great name, O Lord, for the privilege we enjoy of drawing near to thee in the exercise of prayer, and making our requests known to thee. O that thy Spirit were poured out upon us as a Spirit of supplication, that we might be enabled thereby to approach thy throne in genuine devotion, and through Christ Jesus our Lord, to find acceptance in thy sight. We are not worthy, O God, of the least of all thy benefits. We are the sinful children of apostate fathers; and if thou wert to reward us according to our merits, thou wouldest banish us for ever to the place where thy mercy is unknown. Thanks be to thee for all thy great compassion, and for all thy tender mercies toward the children of men. Especially do we praise thee for all the goodness which thou hast caused to pass before us who now worship around thy throne. We rejoice that thou art the Lord God omnipotent that reigneth; that thy decrees stand like the mountains; and that thou hast ordered all things wisely and well. And though our experience in this world be varied; though we are in afflictions sometimes, and sorrow, and again are made joyful by the reception of thy bounty, we would learn, in whatsoever situation we are, therewith to be content; and we would pray that thou wouldest overrule all things for our good, even for the good of our immortal souls. We praise thee for the unspeakable gift of thy Son, and for all the hopes and prospects which are opened up to us through him. We thank thee that thou hast opened up a way, by the shedding of the blood of the Lamb of God, whereby thou mayest justify the ungodly, and yet be the just God who hates sin and punishes transgressors. O that we were all enabled to receive him as he is offered to us in the gospel, as our prophet, our priest, and our king. O that we had an experimental acquaintance with him, and that we were enabled in truth to say of him, He is all our salvation and all our desire. Forgive, we beseech thee, the hardness of our hearts, and the rebelliousness of our lives; and pour out the influences of the Holy Spirit upon us to conform us to the image of Christ, and to receive him as all and in all to us.

 We bless thee, O Lord, for the high privileges with which we have been favoured. We thank thee that thou hast established thy church in the midst of us; and that Jesus, the Head of the church, is daily building up the temple of the Lord. We earnestly entreat that thou wouldest hasten the triumphs of the Redeemer's cause; that thou wouldest hasten the time when wickedness shall hide its face as if ashamed, and when all shall know the truth, and by it be made free.
 Break down whatever opposes the progress of the gospel, whether it be heathenish idolatry, Mahometan delusion, or popish superstition.
 Send forth thy light and thy truth, to scatter the darkness which broods over the hearts of the children of men. Let all the people praise thee, O Lord, let all the people praise thee. And may we, who profess to be thy servants, have grace imparted to us, to enable us to walk worthy of our vocation. May we avoid ungodliness, and live soberly, righteously, and godly, in the present evil world, redeeming the time, because the days are evil. Do thou take us, and all who are dear to us, under thy care through the course of the day which we now begin. May thy word be a light to our feet, and a lamp to our path, guiding us in the ways in which we should walk. May we be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Prosper, we pray thee, the works of our hands, that we may have wherewith to supply our own wants, and to minister to the necessity of the poor around us. The Lord be our portion, and the portion of our friends, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM II.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XIV.

REMARKS.

The inspired writer having, in the preceding chapters, pointed out the great sufferings and trials of the servants of God, brings in this passage to open up to them a brighter and more pleasing prospect. In the 13th chapter we have an account given us of the rise and reign of antichrist, and of the power he should acquire, and the cruelties he should inflict upon the saints. In this chapter we are told of the downfall of Babylon, and the condition of the people of God, after the dominion of the man of sin shall have come to an end. The curtain which conceals the world of spirits from the view of mortals is again drawn aside, and John is again permitted to behold the state of things in heaven. The former vision was afforded him on the occasion of the downfall of pagan Rome after the church had waded through seas of blood; when he was shown the happy condition in eternity of those who had 'come out of great tribulation, and washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.' On the present occasion he sees the downfall of papal Rome, when he observes the same happy results; he beheld those who 'were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb;' and he 'heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps,' and singing 'as it were a new song before the throne.'

While thus the mind is delighted with these prophetic descriptions of the overthrow of superstition, and of the glorious state of those who have suffered for Christ's sake, we are not left in ignorance of the means by which God is to effect this deliverance for his church. Before the period come when it shall be said, that 'Babylon is fallen,' the everlasting gospel is to be preached unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. The darkness must depart as the light advances; the reign of antichrist must come to an end as the kingdom of Jesus progresses in its triumphs. Powerful and extensive as may be the present dominion of the enemy of Christ, yet the Lord has provided an instrument and agency, which feeble though it be in the estimation of the world, is yet destined, in the purposes of God, to undermine the bulwarks of Babylon, and lay them prostrate in the dust. The Redeemer is to ride forth in the chariot of the gospel, conquering and to conquer, subduing nation after nation, till the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ. When such assurances are given us of the triumphs of the cross, and such instructions as to the means whereby men are to be brought to the liberty of the children of God; let us regard it as our duty, as well as our privilege, to do what in us lies to hasten on the victory of the gospel, when it will be said, not only prophetically, but in reality, that 'Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

The concluding portion of the chapter, while it informs us of the blessedness of the dead that die in the Lord, contains fearful denouncements of divine wrath against those who shall worship the 'beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand;' and gives us in language, sublime and terrific, a description of the vintage when Christ shall come forth in his glory and power, to take vengeance of those who had served the beast. Let all who read, take warning. Whatever be the allurments with which antichrist may surround himself; whatever be the blandishments with which he would delude souls; let the children of men, warned by prophetic announcements of John, resist them all, resolving stoutly that they shall love the Lord their God, and that him only shall they serve. For whosoever serveth the beast, 'the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou who art the Father of the spirits of all flesh, unto thee would we lift up our souls in prayer. Who would not fear thee, O God, and glorify thee, for thou only art the holy One. Yet blessed be thy name, that whilst thou art great beyond all conception, and whilst we are wicked and unworthy creatures, it is yet our high privilege to approach thy throne as humble suppliants. Mercifully hearken to the voice of our evening prayers, and graciously pardon our numerous trespasses, dealing with us not according to our merits, but according to thy great compassion. O our God, we are ashamed, and blush to lift up our faces before thee, for our iniquities are increased over our heads, and our trespass is grown up into the heavens. Our understandings are darkened, our mind is carnal, our thoughts are evil, our affections are earthly; we have spoken frowardness; we have done wickedly; we have forgotten the God who made us; we have lightly esteemed the Rock of our salvation. Even during the day, now drawing to a close, we have sinned against thee, times without number. The good we would, that we have not done; the evil we would not, that we have done. Did we not say we would not transgress, we would not offend any more? Yet we have not performed the words of the covenant which we made before thee, but as treacherous dealers we have dealt treacherously. For thy name's sake, O Lord, pardon our iniquity. O let us have the blessedness of those whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered, to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile. O let us have redemption through Christ's blood, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of thy

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH VIII.

REMARKS.

The mode of procedure adopted by God in his dealings with the Jews, as recorded in this chapter, is deserving of serious consideration, not merely on account of the insight it gives us into the details of their history, but because it makes us acquainted with certain principles which admit of the strictest application to the circumstances of the people of God in all ages of the world. First of all, there is a succession of rich and comfortable promises granted to the remnant of Israel amid the miseries of their captivity at Babylon, and opening up before them the bright prospect of their re-occupying the streets of Jerusalem, with the full enjoyment of the divine blessing, and amid the manifest tokens of a state of the highest external prosperity. But observe next, how it was that these promises were to be carried into accomplishment. It was not by means of the direct agency of Almighty God, whilst the children of Israel themselves were either following after their idols, or remaining in a state of passive indifference. On the contrary, they were called to be workers together with God; and therefore, and for that purpose, they were commanded to be strong in the building of the temple of the Lord; and it was just in the vigorous prosecution of that great work, the neglect of which had already subjected them to many signal judgments, that they were actually to realize the state of unexampled prosperity depicted in such glowing colours before them. And finally, it deserves to be noticed, that the building of the Lord's house, with the consequent administration of the ordinances of God, was so to bear both on their condition as a prosperous people, and on their character as a people zealous of good works, as to attract the favourable notice of other men, and thereby render them instrumental in extending the religion of the living and the true God to all nations of the earth.

How far these principles have already been realized in the experience of the Jews, and how far, and in what way they yet remain to be carried into accomplishment in the course of their future history, are points into which we cannot at present enter. But the principles themselves, whether viewed in their application to the circumstances of the Jews, or brought to bear on that branch of the Christian church to which it is our own privilege to belong, are of great practical importance. The treasury of God is as full now as it ever was of exceeding great and precious promises. But if we would draw them out, and regale ourselves with their bright prospects, and with the plenitude of their consolations, then on our part there must be a building of the Lord's house; a fervent zeal for the establishment of the services of the sanctuary, and a diligent waiting upon God in the way of his instituted ordinances. The church that is devoting itself to such a work may, like the persecuted remnant of Israel, be compassed about with mighty difficulties; but if even in troubgrace. Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us salvation. Blessed be the Lord, who daily visiteth us with his benefits. The candle of the Lord hath shined upon our head, and by his light we have walked through darkness, and the secret of the Lord has been in our tabernacle. We will extol thee, our God, O King, and will bless thy name for ever and ever. Every day will we bless thee, we will abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and sing of thy righteousness. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ. We receive it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Glory be to God in the highest, there is on earth peace and good-will toward men. O that we all may be savingly interested in that glorious work which Christ accomplished on Calvary with his agony and blood. Grant us an increase of faith, that more firmly and fondly than ever we may be able to lay hold on Jesus as our only refuge. And give us to be crucified with Christ, so that the life we now live in the flesh, we may live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us, and gave himself for us. May the privileges we so richly enjoy, be likewise extended to others. Lord, teach transgressors thy ways, and let sinners be converted unto thee. Let the word of God prevail to the pulling down of strong holds, and the casting down of imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and let every thought be brought into obedience to Christ. Let the people which sit in darkness see a great light, and to them which sit in the region and shadow of death, let light spring up. And now, Lord, we commend us to thee. Thou art our refuge, and our strength. The Lord watch over us, even he that keeps Israel, and neither slumber nor sleeps. The Lord be our shade on our right hand, that the sun may not smite us by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord preserve us from all evil, the Lord preserve our souls. The Lord preserve our going out and coming in, from this time forth, even for ever more, for Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

lous times, and amid the assaults of mortal enemies, the building of the walls of Zion be steadily advancing, then of this we may rest assured, that against that church the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail, and not only so, but we may confidently expect that it will be honoured in diffusing the blessings of prosperity over the land, whilst it operates, as an instrument in the hands of God, in extending the knowledge of salvation to the remotest corners of the earth.

PRAYER.

Most merciful Father, we praise and magnify thy name for the rich provision thou hast made for the well-being of thy church, even in dark and troublous times; for the exceeding great and precious promises of thy word; for the sweet and refreshing consolations of thy Spirit; for the bright prospects of the coming glory; and for all the lessons of instruction embodied in thy procedure in the days of old with the seed of Abraham thy servant. May thy Spirit enable us to form right conceptions of the wisdom and rectitude of all thy dealings; and seeing that blindness hath now happened in part, even to the very people to whom pertained the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises, whose were the fathers, and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever; and that by reason of their fall salvation hath come unto the Gentiles; O preserve us from the guilt and devices of an unbelieving spirit, lest our provocations also should, in like manner, bring down upon us the vengeance of thy righteous judgments. But grant rather, that impressed with a sense of our solemn responsibility, and alive to the value of our religious privileges, we may be enabled diligently to improve them in this the day of our merciful visitation, that so the gospel, which has been unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness, may become unto us the wisdom of God, and the power of God unto our salvation. Nor let the influence of these high privileges be confined altogether to ourselves. Let ours be the honour of co-operating with thyself in the building up of the walls of Zion, that so the enlargement of thy church may not only diffuse the blessings of external prosperity over the land, but be rendered instrumental in the bringing out of all nations of many sons and daughters unto glory. Have mercy especially on thine ancient people. O grant that the vail may be removed from their eyes, that they may look upon him whom they have pierced, and may mourn, and be in bitterness for him as one mourneth and is in bitterness for an only son; that so thou mayest conduct them to the fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin, and for uncleanness, whilst in that day thou putteth the song of the prophet into their lips. O Lord, I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me. Behold God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my strength, and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall we draw water out of the wells of salvation. Accept of our thanks for thy goodness to us through the night. Be with us during the course of this day. Assist us in the faithful discharge of every duty, in the vigorous resistance of every temptation, in the patient endurance of every trial. And hear us, and accept of us, and bless us, not because of any merit that belongs to ourselves, for in ourselves we deserve not the least of all thy mercies, but only for the sake of Jesus Christ thy Son, with whom thou art always well-pleased, and whom thou hearest always. Amen.

PRAISE—PSALM CXVIII. 22.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XV. XVI.

REMARKS.

These are solemn chapters. Judgments of tremendous import form the subject to which they relate. And from the deep recesses of eternity the notes of awful warning break like thunder on the heart.

It would seem as if there were some dread commotion in heaven. For what mean the mustering of those victorious hosts on the sea of glass that is mingled with fire; the loud thunders of adoration which the congregated armies of heaven are sending forth with an air of triumph before the throne; the dense clouds of smoke filling the whole temple which at other times is illuminated with the light of the glory of the Lord; the loud voices calling to the angels to go their ways and to pour out upon the earth the vials that are full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever? Wherefore these portentous signs in heaven; these solemn movements among the ministering spirits that are within the vail; these voices issuing, like the noise of many waters, from the temple, and from the throne of God? Mark! It is for the overthrow of Babylon the great; for the destruction of antichrist; for the perdition of the man of sin. What an arresting consideration! Let us ponder it with all seriousness of mind; nor let us ever forget the solemn lesson which it teaches. Amid the lax principle and the spurious liberality of the present day, it is but too common for professing Christians to look upon all systems of religion, however monstrous, as if they were entitled to equal countenance, nay, even to contemplate with a spirit of what the world calls charity, the very antichrist that is usurping the dignities of Christ's crown; the mother of abominations, that is drunk with the blood of saints. But can this be the charity that cometh from above? No such thing. The charity that cometh from above is love for the souls of men; love for the purity of eternal truth. But that truth it is the province of antichrist to extinguish; these souls it is the aim of the man of perdition to destroy. And what sort of charity is that? It may be the charity that passes current in a world that lieth in wickedness; the charity which stript of its integrity, and clothed in the vile guise of a traitor, can betray the Saviour with a kiss; the very charity which exists in all its liberality in the spirit of that great adversary, who puts the gloss upon all falsehood, and grants the toleration to all corruption, while at the same time, he is going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. But there is no such charity, nor any thing that bears the faintest semblance to it in heaven. No trace of it among the hosts that are standing on the sea of glass, praising God for the truth and righteousness of his judgments; no trace of it among the angels, who, amid the dire commotions of thunder, and lightnings, and great earthquakes, are discharging the vials of God's wrath upon the men that have the mark of the beast, and that worship his image; no trace of it in the bosoms of the martyrs who were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus, and who, from amid the solemn precincts of another world, and from beneath the very altar, are crying out with loud voices unto God in these awful and soul-arresting words; 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth.'

Therefore, we conclude, that the man who is at peace with antichrist, in love with the abominations of popery, or in league with any system of religion opposed to the principles of eternal truth, can have no community of feeling with the purest intelligencies of heaven. And if the prayer do ever pass from his lips; 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,' he is pronouncing sentence of condemnation against himself, and whilst conniving at the guilt of Babylon's sins, he is virtually invoking a share in the vengeance of Babylon's plagues.

PRAYER.

O Lord, most holy and true, we desire, this evening, in presenting ourselves before thy throne, to have our minds so imbued with the sentiments of thy holy word, that we may stand greatly in awe of thy Majesty, and of thy terrible judgments. Thou art indeed to be feared, and to be had in reverence of all that are round about thee, for thou art a most holy Lord God, who takest vengeance of men's inventions, and who wilt by no means give thy glory unto another. O forbid that we should ever be found in the position of stout-hearted and impenitent sinners, who are either far from righteousness, or wandering in paths of darkness or delusion, refusing to come to the light lest our deeds should be reproved, and seeking shelter to ourselves in refuges of lies. In thy great mercy do thou deliver us from all blindness of understanding, and from all callousness of heart, and from all seariness of conscience, and from all waywardness of affection, and from all systems of falsehood or corruption, that would keep us at a distance from the great Redeemer, whom thou hast revealed to guilty and miserable sinners as the way, and the truth, and the life. And so vouchsafe to us of the grace of thy Holy Spirit, that sitting at his feet with the docility of little children, we may be brought to the knowledge of the truth, and made wise unto salvation. And grant, that counting all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, we may win him, and be found in him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness which is of God by faith, that so we may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, and be made conformable unto his death, and attain unto the resurrection of the dead, and be finally admitted into the kingdom of heaven. Nor suffer us at any time to be indifferent to the purity of eternal truth, or regardless of the glory of the Redeemer's cause. Looking frequently within the vail, and beholding the ministering spirits that are pouring out on the earth below, vials that are impregnated with wrath for the destruction of sinners, as well as laying on the altar above, censers that are filled with the prayers of saints; may it be given to us to embody in our own characters somewhat of their fervent charity towards all that is holy, and just, and true, blended with their righteous zeal against all that is base, and abominable, and false. And O grant thy people every where being stirred up, not only to pray, but to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that all obstacles to the progress of the truth may be removed; that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified amongst all nations, that so the blessed era may come speedily, when the power of antichrist shall be utterly destroyed, and the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the whole earth. Father of mercies, for the blessings of the week now drawing to a close, we render unto thee, as is most due, the devoutest gratitude of our hearts. Take us, and ours, under thy protection, during the silent watches of the night. And grant that, being refreshed with the sleep which thou pro-misest to thy beloved, we may arise in the morning impressed with a sense of thy great mercies, and prepared for joining without distraction of spirit, and with all our hearts, in the solemn and delightful services of another day of the Son of man. And all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FIFTY-SECOND WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXLVI. OR CXLVII.

REMARKS.

How cheering, to every true believer, is the view given in these psalms of the character of that great Redeemer into whose hands he hath intrusted all his interests, and who reigneth over Zion throughout all generations. And how striking the contrast between the glorious majesty of his kingdom, and the pomp and pageantry of the mightiest of earthly kings? Man, even when raised to the elevation of a throne, and invested with the dignity of a crown, is but moving in a vain show. His foundation is in the dust. He is crushed before the moth. The issue of a moment may strip him of his royal prerogatives, and turn him into a mass of dust and ashes, cold, senseless, inanimate, fit only to be removed from the sight of living men, and given up as a worthless and a loathsome thing to the darkness and corruption of the grave. Well, therefore, might the psalmist exclaim, 'Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help; his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish.' How different with the divine Redeemer, and how blessed the condition of the man who is making him the portion of his soul! He needs not to be ashamed of his confidence, and will never be confounded, world without end. The Saviour in whom he trusts presides over the mightiest operations of the universe; for he covereth the heavens with clouds, and prepareth rain for the earth, and maketh grass to grow upon the mountains, and giveth to the beast his food, and telleth the number of the stars. And not only so, but his tenderness is equal to his almightiness; for he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel, and healeth the broken in heart, and raiseth them that are bowed down, and relieveth the fatherless and widow, and executeth judgment for the oppressed, and taketh pleasure in them that hope in his mercy. Well, therefore, might the psalmist again exclaim, 'Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, and whose hope is in the Lord his God.'

Have we committed the keeping of our souls into the hands of a Being so full of tenderness, and so mighty to save, then with us verily it is well. Not a hair can fall from our heads without permission from the very Being who sits on the throne of the universe, bearing on his shoulders the government of eternity. And whatsoever be the rugged paths through which we are conducted, the trying circumstances into which we are brought, or the dark prospects that are opened up before us, we need not doubt that, his everlasting arm being round about and underneath us, we shall be kept from the snares of the destroyer, and conducted by his mighty power through faith unto everlasting life.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, who art ever to be sought after in the way of thine appointment, we come unto thee on this the morning of thy holy day, specially imploring that thou wouldest send down upon us a large portion of thy Spirit, to sanctify us for the solemn services in which thou invitest us to engage. O forbid that we should ever be tempted, either by the force of our own corruptions, or by the allurements of a world lying in wickedness, to cast contempt on any of the ordinances which thou hast established, or be led to engage in them with a spirit of carelessness or formality, lest they should become the savour of death unto death, instead of the savour of life unto life. But entering into the courts of thy house with true hearts, and in the full assurance of faith, may we be enabled to worship thee, who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth, offering to thee the sacrifices of righteousness, and rendering the glory that is due to thy great name. This day especially may we attain to some elevated conceptions of the power, and tenderness, and eternal Godhead of that great Redeemer, who reigneth over Zion throughout all generations. Whatsoever be the number, the variety, or the urgency of our wants, we rejoice that we have access to the very Being who regulates the movements of all worlds, whilst he attends to the interests of the humblest of his people. May he be the propitiation for all our sins, and the foundation for all our hopes, and the fountain of all our consolation; and coming to him, in his ordinances, with simplicity of faith, and with enlarged desires, may we be so relieved from the pressure of our burdens, so cleansed from the pollution of our sins, and so replenished with the fatness of his house, that we may go forward on our way rejoicing, adorning the doctrine of Jesus Christ our Saviour in all things, and bringing forth the fruits of righteousness which are to the praise and glory of God. Father of mercies, and God of all grace, who lovest the gates of Zion, yet despisest not the dwellings of Jacob, look thou with an eye of tenderness on all afflicted and sorrowful spirits shut out this day from the precious ordinances of thy house, and lying upon beds of languishing, of death. Amid the multitude of their anxious and disquieting thoughts, let thy sweet comforts replenish and delight their souls. Grant, especially, that the angel of the everlasting covenant may be with them, even he upon whom thy Spirit hath descended, because thou hast anointed him to preach good tidings unto the meek, to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, to comfort all that mourn, to give unto them that mourn in Zion beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Even amid their silent and their solitary sabbaths, may they hear his blessed voice saying to them, Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. And grant that, entering freely into spiritual fellowship with him, they may be so comforted amid all their tribulations, and so animated with the hopes of the future glory, that, forgetful of their miseries, they may be joyful upon their beds, singing aloud the high praises of God, and feeling in their very hearts that their light affliction, which is but for a moment, is not worthy to be compared with the glory that is yet to be revealed. The angel that walketh amid the golden candlesticks be present this day in all the churches throughout the Christian world, that so the voice of rejoicing and salvation may be heard in all the tabernacles of the righteous. And let the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, find acceptance in thy sight, through Jesus Christ, our strength, and our Redeemer. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLVIII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS CXLVIII. CXLIX. CL.

REMARKS.

These are not like the strains of a lyre that was ever hung in sadness, or in silence, on the willows by the waters of Babylon. It would seem rather as if the psalmist had risen on the wings of an eagle into heaven, and tuned his harp amid the symphonies of blessed spirits, on the banks of that mighty river that maketh glad the city of our God above. For truly it is a sublime and celestial conception that is embodied in its final notes of melody. The entire universe appears as if transformed by his sanctified imagination into one vast and magnificent temple for the celebration of Jehovah's praise. Even the floods, and the fruitful trees, and the everlasting hills, and every element of nature, and all the stars of light, are at once invested with the attributes of living creatures, and animated with the spirit of adoration. And the earth below, with all that it contains, whether animate or inanimate, is summoned to arise and to join in concert with the heavens above, and with all their hosts, in rendering glory unto him that sitteth upon the throne for ever and ever.

This is just as it ought to be. It is in perfect harmony with the new order of things which it is the beneficent design of the great Redeemer to bring about. And the privilege, granted to sinful and miserable beings such as we are, of engaging, even now, in the same kind of exercises which form the main employment of the worshippers before the throne above, is one assuredly that is fitted to exercise a most ennobling influence on the mind, whilst it awakens in the heart, that rightly understands it, the most overpowering conceptions of the manifold wisdom of God.

What then is the state of our hearts? Are they rightly estimating and realizing this exalted privilege? If they are not, there cannot be a doubt, that we are outcast and alienated beings, estranged from the spirit whereby all the sanctified on earth are brought into communion with all the sanctified in heaven. And that being the case, our hearts must be filled with guilt, and disorder, and misery, unprepared for the duties which belong to the relationships of earth, having no sympathy with God, no fellowship with angels, no meetness for heaven.

But is praise the very element in which we live, and move, and breathe, then ours, even now, is the spirit of heaven. And in that case, we have a fellow-feeling, not only with all the saints of God that are upon earth, but with the great multitude whom no man can number, that are worshipping before the throne, and with the angels and the archangels, and with the cherubim and the seraphim; with the crowned heads and the high nobility of heaven. What a dignified position, and how solemn the obligations which it involves! Let us see, then, that we adorn our relationship with beings of such stupendous power, and purity, and glory. And, instead of grovelling in the dust, or polluting ourselves with the world's abominations, let us comport ourselves with the dignity and elevation of spirit that are suited to our rank, remembering, evermore, that if we belong to the family of God that is upon earth, we are also, and at the same time, incorporated with the family of God that is in heaven.

PRAYER.

O Lord of hosts, who dwellest in the high and holy place, seated on the throne of the universe, and inhabiting eternity with all its glories, condescend, in thy great mercy, to touch our hearts, this evening, as with a live coal from off thine altar, that so they may be stirred up with all that is within them to the celebration of thy praise. It is a privilege altogether inestimable, that thou invitest us to come, even in the character of needy and miserable suppliants, to the very throne on which thou art seated, because if we ask in faith thou hast promised to give to us the blessings that we need, both for the world that now is, and for the world that is to come. But wherewithal shall we extol the riches and liberality of thy grace, in calling us to aspire also to the spirit of adoration, and thus permitting us to take a part in the highest of all the exercises in which it is possible even for unfallen intelligences to engage! Yet we lament that our hearts are so indifferent to the value of this high privilege, and that even on the day specially set apart for thy worship there is so little in common between us and the glorified hosts, who are serving thee day and night in thy temple, singing for ever, without distraction, and without weariness, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come! O that our hearts were so enlarged in the range of their desires, and so expanded with all the fullness of God, that we might be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, of that love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ours, even now, may be the spirit of heaven, making us joyful in the house of our pilgrimage, and furnishing the prelude and preparation for the new song which shall be sung for ever before the throne above, unto him that hath loved us, and given himself for us. Follow with thy rich blessing all the religious exercises in which we and thy people throughout the Christian world have this day been engaged. Whatever salutary impressions have been produced, do thou strengthen and confirm more and more; and give us grace to carry the influence of our religious exercises wherever we go, that in all the business of life, and in every relationship, and in all that we do, we may let our light so shine before men that they may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus; and grant also, that by means of the services of every successive sabbath that we spend on earth, our souls may approximate to a greater meetness for the enjoyments of that sabbath above, which shall be without weariness, without sadness, and without end. And now, O Lord, let thy blessing be upon us, and upon all in whom we are interested. Let thy blessing be upon our sovereign; let thy blessing be on our senators, that they may be guided by the wisdom that cometh from above; on our magistrates, that they may be a terror to evil doers, and in all things a praise and protection to those that do well; on our ministers, that the pleasure of the Lord may prosper greatly in their hands; on the great body of the people, that they may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty; on the poor, the comfortless, the bereaved, the tempted, and the dying, that the joys of the Lord may be their strength and their song; let thy blessing be upon ourselves, in soul, and in body, and in spirit, that we may be thine amid the watches of the night, thine amid the light of the morning, thine during the future course of our pilgrimage, thine in the day of our prosperity, thine amid the swellings of Jordan, thine in the morning of the resurrection, thine in the day of judgment, and thine for ever. And unto him who is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, be all the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In these chapters, the sacred writer follows out the grand burden and design of his prophecy. This had respect, more immediately, to the events concomitant or consequent upon the restoration from Babylon, but in the remoter distance to ulterior destinies of Israel; and there are two intimations of God, in the earlier part of the book, which furnish the key to its outline and method. The first of these is the announcement, 'I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies,' chap. i. 16; the second, the language in chap. ii. 9, I will shake mine hand upon the nations which spoiled you. In accordance with this analysis of the prophecy, the first eight chapters are occupied mainly with the reviving hopes of Israel. In the ninth, the prophet enters on the detail of the judgments awaiting their enemies. He predicts disaster to Hadrach, a region of Syria, and, more especially, to Damascus its capital, ver. 1; to Hamath, another region of Asia Minor, ver. 2; to Tyre and Zidon, ver. 2—4; to Philistia, ver. 5, 6. These predictions were soon after signally fulfilled. Alexander the Great subjugated Syria, and pillaged Damascus; took Tyre, notwithstanding the strength of its insular position, and destroyed it by fire; subdued Philistia, and made Ashdod, one of its most renowned cities, the seat of foreign rule. A striking contrast to these calamitous visitations was vouchsafed in the case of the Jews. The conqueror, approaching at the head of his victorious armies, was so propitiated by the intercessions of Jaddua the high-priest, that he issued orders that not one hostile footstep should profane the thresholds of Jerusalem, verifying thus memorably the divine assurance, 'I will encamp about mine house,' ver. 8. But the prophet is not content with dwelling on Israel's exemption from the doom and disaster of their enemies. He hails, in the ecstasy of prophetic anticipation, the era of Israel's brightest triumphs, when he who was the hope, the consolation, the glory of Zion, was to appear; and, in language not more fraught with literal adaptation to special incidents in the Messiah's history, than with beautiful prefiguration of the spiritual nature of his kingdom and conquests, expatiates on the gladsome trophies of an era which was not unworthy of being introduced in the jubilant language, 'Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem, for behold thy King cometh unto thee.' In the 10th chapter, under a significant allusion to the then urgent circumstances of the Jews, he adverts to the copious outpouring of spiritual influences awaiting the latter times of the Jewish history. It had been the experience of Israel before their captivity, that the fructifying rains were withheld, so that their heaven over them became as brass, and their earth beneath as iron. But the prophet was now commissioned to assure them that their supplications for this boon should no longer be unavailing, ver. 1. And, following out the parallelism of spiritual dispensations, the admonition was significant to the house of Jacob, to improve the ample power of new covenant blessings awaiting new testament times; those times when, as respects the Jewish community, it could be said that the fields were 'white already to the harvest.' He then admonishes them of what had been the bane of Jacob—their tendency to take other counsel than God's; the disastrous effects of this, in the scattering of the flock, as if they had no shepherd; a description significant in Zechariah's times, still more significant in the times of our Lord, ver. 2. He explains God's dealings, that his indignation was chiefly armed against the teachers and the rulers, (the shepherds and the goats,) because, though a people cannot be held guiltless in following bad counsel or example, the more aggravated guilt is their's who mislead them, ver. 3. He finally launches into a field of bright anticipation, in respect to the future prosperity and blessedness of Israel, ver. 5—12.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us take heed that we do not range ourselves among the enemies of God, for he will shake his hand against such. Let us see to it, on the other hand, that we improve our day of visitation, 'that we ask of the Lord rain in the day of latter rain.' Let it not be our condemnation, that a gospel day should be fraught with rich pledges of the Spirit's effusion, and that we should disown that fervent importunity with God which our blessed Saviour admonishes, when he says, 'if ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Father in heaven give the Holy Spirit to them who ask him.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, who art the confidence of thy people, and the confusion of thine enemies, we come this morning to seek the hiding place of thy grace. We confess before thee our sins, and our manifold provocations, walking contrary to thee, as we have done, and rebelling against thee, even by departing from thy precepts and from thy judgments. And we have to lament that every day brings us fresh occasion for shame and confusion of face in thy presence, adding, as it does, to the catalogue of our offences. Deal not with us, we entreat thee, according to our iniquities; for if thou rise up against us to execute judgment, we cannot answer thee for one of a thousand. We cast ourselves on thy free pardoning mercy in Christ Jesus the Lord. O may his blood be the cleansing of all our sins. We come to thee also to ask the renewal of our hearts. We have occasion to testify and make complaint against ourselves, that while God is entitled to all our heart, and soul, and mind, other objects and other influences steal in upon our affections and estrange them from thee. O let us not thus continue to be a reproach to ourselves, and a living offence against the claims which thy transcendent, thine infinite mercy, has established upon our gratitude. Bestow upon us, we beseech thee, that effectual teaching and operation of thy Holy Spirit, which shall ensure all our affections to God, and enlist all our energies to thy service. We take the more encouragement to prefer this petition, for thou hast invited us to ask rain in the time of the latter rain. Come thou down, then, with such copious spiritual effusions as shall be to us like rain upon the mown grass, as showers that water the earth. So that our Christian graces and virtues shall revive, and grow, and expand, and yield much fragrance. We pray for thy blessing this day upon this family. Be their God. Vouchsafe to them thy counsel. Uphold them by thy grace. Direct them in the active duties of life. Protect them from its temptations and dangers, and may they, from stage to stage of their sojournings, have occasion to adopt the memorial, Hitherto the Lord hath helped us. All we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xcvi. 1.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION xvii.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter is substantially a supplement to a preceding portion of the book. It contains a digression from the chain of the prophecy; and its object is very plainly intimated to be a fuller development of what had previously been foretold, the doom of mystical Babylon, 'I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore.' The chapter divides itself into two parts; the former occupied with significant prophetic emblems, the latter with an inspired comment on these emblems. The epithet by which Babylon is here styled, points, in the very threshold, to an apostate church. The church is espoused as a chaste virgin to Christ; and whatever shall belie the sanctity of this contract is spiritual adultery. The scarlet-coloured beast is an emblem of the secular power by which this apostate church has been supported and aggrandized; and subsequent notices of the chapter make it manifest that this is no other than Rome. The voluptuousness, the opulence, the ambition, the licentiousness, the pollutions, the persecuting genius of the papal church, are strikingly imaged in the succeeding verses, 4—6. The glossary to the symbols, furnished in the latter part of the chapter, releases us from much vagueness of conjecture. The seven mountains on which the ecclesiastical tyranny seats itself, find literal coincidence with the seven hills on which Rome was built; and when associated with the intimation made in the closing verse of the chapter, dissipate the last shadow of uncertainty. It may simply be asked, of what city but one in John's time, could it be said, 'that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth?' But a further key is afforded us. The seven heads, we are told, have another symbolical meaning, they signify seven kings, or forms of government. And, accordingly, taking John's time as our point of chronology, five forms of Roman government had then fallen, or were extinct, viz. kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, and military tribunes; one subsisted, viz. emperors, and one had not yet come. The profound mystery of the prophecy is associated with that aspect of the Roman polity which had not yet come. The prediction makes it perplexing, for it speaks of it as continuing only for a short time; as so anomalous that while, in one view, it might be termed the seventh form of Roman government, in another it was to be treated as a cypher in the national annals, and to be superseded and merged in another form, of which it could be said, 'It is of the seven,' ver. 11.

History makes it perplexing, for while there is no difficulty in tracing the Roman polity up to the termination of its sixth aspect, as it expired with its emperors, there is great obscurity attending the question, what, in the interval between the imperial and papal, was the form of Roman government at all? Perhaps this riddle in history is best interpreted by the riddle in prophecy, that what was called the seventh, was scarcely to be numbered in the calendar of national changes at all, and that what is termed the eighth, is properly to be reckoned of the seven. But one thing seems clear, that the first signal system of policy succeeding the overthrow of the imperial, must be that to which the finger of prophecy points as the last. It cannot be a puny, it must be a gigantic structure of policy, which claims dimension corresponding to the widely extended empire of ancient Rome. And it may be submitted, if under any other than the Papal dynasty, the language can be verified, 'It was, it is not, and yet it is?' ver. 8. Rome had its sovereign princes, before whom tributary kings made obeisance. Rome possessed again its sovereign pontiffs, whose feet kings deemed it an honour to kiss. Rome had its host of gods and demigods, whom servile nations worshipped. Rome possessed again its calendar of saints and angels, to whom prostrate peoples were taught to offer adoration. Rome issued its manifestoes, which made subject thrones to tremble. Rome issued again its bulls and interdicts, which shook the authority of kings. Rome carried its trophies of military domination to the very verge of the civilised world. Rome carried again its trophies of spiritual domination over the face of an enthralled moral and intellectual world. And it was at this juncture, when Rome the second had risen out of the ashes of Rome the first, diverse though not dis-similar, that the language could be applied, 'It was, it is not, and yet it is.' It is to be remarked that the emblematic description of ten horns bearing each its crown, (that is, ten separate monarchies,) serves, in so far, as a finger-post to the chronology of the prophecy. It is clear that the epoch indicated was posterior to the dissolution of the empire; for, during its existence, there was no such thing as the crown resting on ten heads. And if, as history seems to testify, the Western empire was parcelled out into ten separate principalities or kingdoms, we shall be pretty near our epoch when we find these ten kingdoms concurring to give their power to the beast, or, in other words, finding their principle of unity, their cement of general policy, in the papal influence, ver. 12, 13.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us prize our privileges, if we are favoured to enjoy the ordinances of the gospel in their scriptural simplicity and purity. Let us pray for the prosperity of Zion; and let us, as its members, earnestly seek to be adorned with those meek and holy graces of Christ's own Spirit, which own their native lustre in whatever is pure, and honest, and lovely, and of good report.

PRAYER.

O Lord, who art a Spirit, enable us this evening to approach thee in spirit and in truth. Enable us to treat the singleness of thy gracious purpose with the singleness of contrite and fervent hearts. We thank thee for the gospel, the pure, the benignant, the peace-inspiring gospel. We thank thee for the ordinances, the simple ordinances of Christianity, fraught with such gracious earnestness of heaven's mercies to the soul. We thank thee for the bible, and for the freedom of its perusal. We thank thee for sabbaths, and for their spiritual sanctity. O may we be taught to cultivate these privileges, in the spirit of the admonition, that to whom much is given, of them much shall be required. We pray that thou wilt endow us with the native, lovely, and lowly graces of Christ's own gospel. Suppress in us every lofty imagination, every high thought, every aspiring temper, every vain-glorious motive, every ostentatious feeling, every self-exalting impulse, every self-righteous pre-ension. Beget in us, we entreat thee, a love or whatever partakes of the simplicity, the lowliness, the meekness, the gentleness that is in Christ. May we be taught the apostolic precept, To be clothed with humility. May our adorning be that of a meek and quiet spirit. May our ruling principle be unfeigned faith wrought by God in us. May our frame of heart be love, as Christ also loved us. May our trophies of Christian calling be the beauties of holiness. May our proficiency be in that wisdom which is from above, which is pure, peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy, and of good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy: And may our glorying, if we glory at all, be in the cross of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. May our dependence be on thy Holy Spirit. We thank thee, O Lord, for thy goodness during the past day. We commend us to thy gracious care this evening. Amid the silent hours of darkness be thou our defence, spreading over us the guardianship of thy wakeful providence, and making a covenant with the night that no evil shall come near us. May our sleep be sweet, our safeguard being the Lord. Fear thou us in thy mercy, and answer us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXLVII.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH XI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In this chapter the sacred writer enters formally upon a new page of the Jewish destinies. And the more simply to elucidate this portion of inspired writ let it be noted that there are two captivities of the Jews, and two restorations, distinctly indicated in the prophetic writings. The captivity in Babylon and the restoration from it are but the foreground whence an Old Testament seer's eye travelled to a second captivity and a second restoration, even more signal and memorable than the former. Of this second captivity, this second dispersion of Israel, we in existing times are eye witnesses; of this second restoration our posterity, if not ourselves, shall be witness. Zechariah looking in distant prospective to these coming events, launches into a strain of the most portentous and impassioned denunciation. In language fraught with the finest poetical allusions, he predicts the destruction of the temple and of Jerusalem, ver. 1, 2. The dismay and ruin of the treacherous pastors, who, characterized by our Saviour in New Testament times as blind leaders of the blind, caused Israel to stray, ver. 3. He introduces a fine allusion to our Saviour's ministry, as pursued among a people, because of their headstrong infatuation, a doomed people, 'a flock of slaughter,' ver. 4. He lends a striking typical representation of the characteristics of that ministry. He assigns, as its badge, two shepherd's staves, the one called Beauty, and the other Bands. The former the emblem of Jewish privileges, still asserted by our Lord when he said, 'I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.' The latter the emblem of Jewish union, still upheld while the burden of Christ's ministry was in prosecution. But both the staff of Jewish privileges and the staff of Jewish concord was to be broken, when by an impious rejection of their Prince they entailed a transference of their religious advantages to the Gentiles, and a disruption of every national bond amid the final desolations and ruin of their state, ver. 7—17. In the course of this hodeful summary of events, there are two distinct notices which merit special remark. The first is the minute, and in some kind literal allusion to what formed the grand and blasting transgression of the Jews, their misprising the Lord of glory, 'valuing him at thirty pieces of silver,' ver. 12, 13. The second, the significant notice of the combined infatuation and imbecility which should characterize the Jewish pastorship, that is, their priesthood and teachers; an infatuation and an imbecility lamentably betrayed amid the latter annals of Judea, and of which no language can be more expressively descriptive than the words, 'the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened,' ver. 17.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The crowning sin of the Jews was that they slew the Prince of life. Let us beware lest we virtually perpetrate their sins. If we disown Christ's claims to our allegiance, we crucify the Son of God afresh. If we hold cheap his salvation, we crucify the Son of God afresh. If we deride or prostitute his ordinances, we crucify the Son of God afresh. If we assume a hollow and unhallowed profession of his gospel, we crucify the Son of God afresh. If we sell ourselves to deliberate sin, we crucify the Son of God afresh.

PRAYER.

O Lord, the all-seeing Jehovah, whose eyes behold, and whose eyelids try the children of men, look down upon us at this time to prove our hearts, and whilst thou provest in thy mercy, to amend them. We often know not what manner of spirit we are of, and if left to our own dimness of discernment will be betrayed into the most fatal mistakes as to our character and state. But thou, O God, do thou search us and know our hearts, try us and know our thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. More especially do we entreat thee, heavenly Father, to preserve us from a spurious profession of thy blessed gospel. O may it not be ours to incur the guilt of crucifying afresh the Lord of life. Slay thou rather within us whatever would oppose itself to his undivided empire over our hearts. Let not sin be the darling object of our affection while we profess Christ. Let not the world occupy the supreme place in our affections while we profess Christ. Let not self-righteousness exert a secret sway over our minds while we profess Christ. Let not unhallowed tempers, and inclinations, and appetites hold ascendancy in our bosoms while we profess Christ. O may Christ himself be enthroned, where alone he is entitled to reign, in our heart, and soul, and mind. Cast thou down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against his knowledge, and bring into captivity our every thought to the obedience of Christ. May we be enabled, in unfeigned sincerity, to testify he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. And may our life, our daily life, be a practical comment on the language, We count every thing but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. O Lord, who bringest the light out of his chambers, we thank thee for the dawn of another day, and for the many blessings with which it finds us surrounded. Teach us to sacrifice unto thee the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and to declare thy works with rejoicing. Surely it belongs to us to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. For thou, Lord, presentest us with the blessings of thy goodness; thou makest the outgoings of the morning, and of the evening to rejoice over us. We pray that thou wilt enable us to dedicate this day to thy glory. May no wilful offence against thee be indulged by us. May no service which we can render in thy name be indifferent to us. May what is well-pleasing in thy sight be what is most grateful to our minds. Give us this day our daily bread. Enable us to discharge every personal, domestic, and social duty aright. Dispose us for all thy will, whether that will be to crown us with blessing, or to visit us with trial. In either case may God be our rock, for there is no unrighteousness in him. Hear us in heaven thy dwelling-place, and forgive, and accept, and do, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM II. 8.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In this chapter are three cardinal topics pursued. The first of these the sudden and irretrievable ruin of the mystic Babylon, the apostate church, the grand enslaver of the souls of men. The whole of the emblems employed concur to the effect that the overthrow of this empress of spiritual abominations shall not be more rapid than it is irremediable; and, more than this, that the overthrow shall be at a moment when she is congratulating herself on her triumphs; when she is saying, 'I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow,' ver. 7. Like as the fire of heaven came down on Sodom and Gomorrah, like as the retribution of God descended on ancient Babylon, when Belshazzar sat amid his revels and his wine, shall the torrent of the divine vengeance descend on the mystic Babylon, as in a moment. 'The plagues shall come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burnt with fire,' ver. 8. The second topic, embraced in this chapter, is the fearfulness of the reverse with which she shall be visited. We are led to conclude, from an intimation in the previous chapter, that the very powers which had previously subverted her ascendancy, shall in great proportion at last array themselves against her, 'shall hate her, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire,' chap. xvii. 16. Probably the force of public opinion, both on the part of rulers and people, shall be so irresistibly directed against her, in consequence of fresh disclosures of her treachery, and perjury, and priestcraft, and corruptions, that an almost universal cry of indignation shall pervade the limits of Christendom. And it does not seem the least emphatic corroboration of this view what is supplied in the tone of her remaining adherents, her mercenary abettors, as the prophecy intimates they shall be, when they are described as appalled by the magnitude of her calamities, 'standing afar off for the fear of her torments;' and when uttering the language of unavailing lamentation, they cry, 'Alas, alas! that great city, for in one hour is she made desolate,' ver. 10—19. Whether God shall lend an almost miraculous aggravation to her plagues, futurity must disclose. The third topic involved in this chapter, is the appeal to the people of God to beware of sympathy with the deeds of this meretricious church; an admonition which is not overstrained, if it be supposed to intimate that on the eve of the latter popish ascendancy, (for that there shall be such a latter ascendancy is implied, even if no other evidence were furnished in scripture, in the jubilant language of that apostate church itself, 'I sit as a queen, and shall see no sorrow;') there shall be a general tendency to extend a false charity to her errors and iniquities. Let professed Christians, in these times, decide for themselves, whether an indulgent view of the perversions of popery, whether an acquiescence in her antiscriptural plans of educaon, whether a deference to the voice of her organs, whether in the senate, or in the popular assembly, be not a virtual partnership of her corruptions. And let us not neglect to count the cost. The plagues of that apostate church are, in God's adjudication, not trivial. What if popery should itself be the scourge of those who abet it? ver. 4.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us be assured that every departure from the simple letter of God's word is spiritual apostacy. The question is not whether the pagan, or the Mahometan, or the Papist, be in furthest remove from the spirit of undefiled religion. The question is, What is our inscription? Is it Christ's, or is it anti-christ's? Am I, or am I not, partaker with the enemies of God?

PRAYER.

O Lord, the great and dreadful God, whose eye of purity cannot behold iniquity, and the fire of whose holy indignation shall utterly devour mine enemies, we come, this evening, to abase ourselves at the footstool of thine infinite Majesty. Let not the fervour of thy righteous jealousy burn against us, while we seek to produce our cause, to bring with us reasons, to take with us words, why God should avert his anger; while even we venture to prefer the language, take away all iniquity. We have, indeed, heinously sinned, and wherewith shall we answer thee. And if thou wert to lay judgment to the right, and righteousness to the plummet, we must entail the extreme measure of thy wrath; must be consigned to the blackness of darkness forever. But thou, O God, have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. We plead that there is a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness; that there is peace in the blood of the cross; that there is a propitiation of thine own gracious approval for sin; that there is a way opened into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus. And our prayer is, that thou wilt see God our shield; that thou wilt behold us in the face of thine Anointed; that thou wilt admit us to the exercise of thy free grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; that thou wilt let thine eye be upon the Man of thy right hand, upon the Son of man, whom thou madest strong for thyself; that thou wilt regard all our transgressions as allotted out in that precious blood of Christ which cleanseth from all sin; that thou wilt accept us in the Beloved. O God we come to entreat that thou wilt grant us true repentance, and thy Holy Spirit. We have occasion to be jealous of ourselves lest any amount of the abominable thing which thou hatest should still adhere to us. But we would seek our resource in thy great and precious promises and assurances. Is not Christ exalted a Prince and a Saviour, to grant repentance as well as remission of sins? Is the Lord's arm shortened that it cannot save? Is thy Spirit straitened that he cannot deliver? Is not thy promise, If ye being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father in heaven give the Holy Spirit to them who ask him? O vouchsafe unto us, then, those effective influences of thy grace which shall lay prostrate the whole of our moral man to God. Pour in upon our souls that godly sorrow for sin which worketh repentance unto salvation. May the mountains of our remaining corruptions melt down at thy presence. May the hard and stony fabric of our hearts be softened into sympathy with thine overflowing mercies. May the sensibilities of a tender and broken spirit abide with us as a perpetual source of holy experience, and diffuse themselves in every direction in our lives in perpetual issue of holy actions. O thou who keepest Israel, we consign us, this night, to thy care. May we lay us down and sleep, the Lord protecting us. May we awake to the light and duties of a new day, the Lord sustaining us. May thy goodness, and thy mercy, follow us from day to day, and may we dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. We present our thanksgivings and prayers in his name, whom thou acceptest always. And now glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 17.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH XII. XIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

CHAP. XII. There can be no doubt that this chapter refers primarily to the Jewish church and people; although, from the circumstance of the greater part of the events to which it relates, being still future, the precise import of several of its predictions may not be understood till the event shall declare it. On ver. 10—14, events already past have shed important light. The passage is a promise of the pouring out of the Holy Spirit—a promise to the Old Testament church, kindred to that which the New Testament church has from her departing Lord, John xvi. 7—11. It received a remarkable accomplishment in the conversion of three thousand souls on the memorable day of Pentecost, immediately after the ascension of our blessed Lord into heaven, Acts ii. 37—41. It has been fulfilled in all the memorable seasons of revival which the church has enjoyed in succeeding ages. It is fulfilled in every conversion of a soul to Christ. And it will be fulfilled, in a remarkable manner, in the experience of the Jewish people in the latter days.

CHAP. XIII. This, like the preceding chapter, looks forward to the gospel day. It announces: 1. The opening of a fountain for sin and for uncleanness, ver. 1. This promise was fulfilled when our great High Priest shed on the cross that blood which cleanseth from all sin; and when, as xii. 10, the Spirit of grace was given in his fullness, to regenerate and sanctify polluted souls. 2. The turning of men from idols, and from all idolatrous and false worship, ver. 2—6. This part of the prophecy was fulfilled in the deeply rooted aversion to idols, with which their long captivity in Babylon was sanctified to inspire the minds of the Jewish people, Isa. xxvii. 9. It was accomplished, too, in the signal overthrow of Pagan idolatry throughout the whole Roman empire, in the primitive ages of Christianity. And it is most blissfully realized in a spiritual sense, when, through converting grace, souls are brought to renounce the world and all their spiritual idols, and cleave to God as their everlasting portion. 3. The vicarious sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ, ver. 7. Against him, when standing in the room of his whole church, the sword of divine justice awoke in Gethsemane and Calvary, the good Shepherd was smitten, and the sheep were scattered, Matt. xxvi. 31; but the smiting of the Shepherd was the safety of the sheep—it was, that Jehovah, the great smiter, might turn his hand in mercy on the poor and perishing little ones—might bring them into the fold of grace; and, at last, into the fold of glory. 4. The rejection and ruin of the unbelieving Jews but, at the same time, the extension of mercy to a chosen and believing remnant, ver. 8, 9.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

God will employ his church's enemies for her chastisement; but he will in the issue punish them for their hostility to his people, xii. 1—9. The great promise to the New Testament church is the promise of the Holy Spirit, of whose operations faith, repentance, and all other saving graces are the blessed fruits, ver. 10—14. Let us earnestly seek the indwelling in our souls of this Holy One; that, being purified from all our guilt in the fountain of the Saviour's blood, xiii. 1, and cleansed from all our idols, through the grace of his Spirit, ver. 2—6, we may be devoted to the service of him who hath redeemed us to God by his own blood, ver. 7. And if it shall please our heavenly Father to cause us to pass through the fire of affliction, may that fire refine us, and bring us with more devoted heart to say, The Lord is our God, ver. 8, 9.

PRAYER.

O thou that hearest prayer, pour out upon us, according to thy promise, the Spirit of grace and of supplications. May he enable us to worship thee with reverence and holy fear. We would mourn before thee because of our great and manifold transgressions. We have offended thee, O our God. We have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and are no more worthy to be called thy children. But we bless thee with all our heart, that as we have been great transgressors, we have a great Saviour, whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and who is able to save to the very uttermost. We come to thee this day through him. The sword of justice has smitten him. The great and good Shepherd has given his life for the sheep. O, for his sake, turn thy hand of mercy upon us. Pardon our iniquities, for they are very great; and let us know the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. O Holy Spirit, condescend to take up thy gracious dwelling in each of our hearts. Alas, they are polluted, the seat of many idols. But thou art the Spirit of grace. Take away their pollutions, expel their idols, give us the new heart, that we may walk in the ways, and keep the statutes of the Lord, and do them. And now, when we are to go forth into the world, and be conversant with its duties, its temptations, and its trials, we consecrate ourselves, O our God, unto thee. May thy light and thy truth guide us; may thy strength support us; may we endure, as seeing thee who art invisible, and count it our meat and our drink to do the will of our heavenly Father. Our own interests we leave with thee. Our afflicted friends and brethren we commend to thy compassion. Zion, the city of our solemnities, we make mention of before thee. May her purity and her peace be promoted; may her boundaries be enlarged; may her hallowed privileges soon be extended to the people of every language and every clime. Gather to thyself thy long outcast people of Israel, and bring in the fullness of the Gentiles. Enable us, O gracious God, highly to prize, and suitably to improve all the invaluable blessings and privileges which we ourselves enjoy. May we bring forth fruit under them all to thy praise and glory. And now, O Hearer of prayer, may our unworthy persons, and our imperfect worship, be accepted in thy sight, for the sake of him who is our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLV. 3.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XIX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Of the gathering of the people of Israel to the Saviour in the latter days, we have abundant assurance. The vision in this chapter, ver. 1—9, seems particularly to allude to this joyful event. It is an anthem of praise on the fall of the New Testament Babylon. But its leading note, or chorus rather, is in the language of the Jews, and is not to be found in any of the eucharistic odes that are interspersed through the preceding part of the Apocalypse. The supposition is, therefore, a natural one, that the introduction of the Hebrew doxology in this place is intended to intimate that the time of the restoration of God's ancient people will then be come, and that converted to Christ, they will join with the Gentile church in extolling the faithfulness and equity of his administration. On any other hypothesis than this, the harmony of the vision will be destroyed; but regarded in this view, its several parts appear harmonious and sublime. First, converted Israel, now brought within the 'heaven' of the visible church, but still remaining a distinct community, celebrates the holiness and faithfulness of God, as manifested in his judicial procedure toward the antichristian state, ver. 1—3. Then in admiration of the divine judgments, and in joy because of the sudden and happy restoration of God's ancient people, the Gentile church, symbolized by 'the four living creatures,' and 'the four and twenty elders,' is represented as uttering her delighted response to Israel's praise, ver. 4. After which, in mutual gladness for the recovery of the one, and the enlargement of the other, they are represented as both joining in one rapturous and triumphant song, ver. 6, 7. This view of the vision harmonizes with all the other prophecies regarding the same subject. It appears to be the scope of them all, that the general conversion of the Jewish people will take place immediately after the destruction of the antichristian power, and that that destruction will be an important mean, in the hand of the Spirit of God, for opening their eyes, overthrowing their prejudices, and bringing them to the faith and obedience of Christ. Such a correspondence will they perceive between the predictions respecting antichrist and their fulfilment, that they will be brought to a thorough conviction of the truth of Christianity; to 'look on him whom they pierced,' and to 'mourn for him;' to acknowledge him as their Saviour and Lord; and to join with his church in celebrating the majesty and rectitude of his whole administration. The remaining part of the chapter contains a sublime metaphorical description of our glorious Redeemer, going forth in his gospel, and in the great dispensations of his providence, to consummate and follow up the triumph over his antichristian adversary.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Times of blessed enlargement and joy are in store for the church. Her seasons of trial and suffering may be dark and long; but they shall be sanctified for good, and they shall all have a happy and glorious issue. Her Head reigns King of kings, and Lord of lords; and in his mediatorial reign, and in all the high attributes that adorn his mediatorial character, she has ample security for the final overthrow of all her impenitent foes, and the accomplishment of all the promises on which she has been caused to hope. Blessed are they who belong to him, who are arrayed in his righteousness, and who follow him whithersoever he goeth.

PRAYER.

O God, we adore thee, and desire to rejoice in thee as the God of Zion, the church's God. Thou hast said of Zion, This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it. Thou hast been with her throughout all generations, and hast never forsaken her. Thou hast moved toward her, in thy providence, many times in a dark and mysterious way, clouds and darkness have been round about thee. But thou hast been Zion's God still. By her afflictions thou hast tried the faith and patience of her members, thou hast purified her in the furnace. And we believe and rejoice that thou wilt be with her even to the end. O blessed God, may we be numbered among the true members of thy spiritual Zion. Let us not be satisfied with a mere form of godliness, a name to live, while we are dead. Let us be brought, in thy great mercy, into a pardoned, accepted, and holy state. From all our innumerable transgressions may we be purified through faith in the fountain of the Saviour's blood. May it be granted to us to be arrayed in the fine linen which is the righteousness of saints, even in thy righteousness, O blessed Jesus. We would count all things but loss, that we may win thee, and be found in thee. The crown of our salvation we would place on thy head, O thou King of kings, and Lord of lords, for thou art worthy. Subdue us unto thyself. Make us thy willing people in the day of thy power. And enable us, by thy Holy Spirit, to follow thee fully in all the paths of holy obedience, in the observance of thy sacred institutions, and in all the leadings and disposals of thy sovereign and wise providence. Let us be faithful unto death, and at last receive a crown of life. We put thee in remembrance, O thou Faithful and True, of these blessed promises respecting thine ancient people, and thy Gentile church, on which we have been permitted to meditate at this time. And we plead their fulfilment. Gather into one the outcasts of Israel; and let the united church of Jews and Gentiles soon lift up her joyful voice, and say, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. And now, Father of mercies, when brought to the close of another day, we raise our souls in gratitude to thee, because of all the kindness that has brought us hitherto. May the everlasting arms be underneath us, and all who are near and dear to us, during the slumbers of the night. And if we shall be spared, in thy goodness, to behold the light of another day, when we awake, may we be still with thee. Hear us, O Lord our God, for thy beloved Son's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—ZECHARIAH XIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This concluding chapter of Zechariah's prophecy comprehends the whole time from the destruction of Jerusalem till the days of the millennial glory of the church. It announces,

I. Jerusalem's overthrow, ver. 1, 2. Her people had been long honoured and exalted as the peculiar people of God. But they had gone away from him by a great and perpetual backsliding. They continued impenitent amidst all the overtures of his mercy, and all the dispensations of his judicial displeasure. At length they filled up the cup of their transgression by rejecting and crucifying the Lord of glory. Therefore wrath was announced, and ere long wrath came on them to the uttermost. Yet, in the midst of wrath, Judah's offended God remembered mercy. 'Half of the city,' it is foretold, 'shall go forth into captivity;' but 'the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.' Divine mercy visited many of the Jewish people before they were finally overthrown, Acts ii. 41; iv. 4. They were saved in the time of indignation—were hid in the day of God's anger.

II. God's procedure towards the Gentile nations. It shall be, in the first place, judicial and wrathful, ver. 3. From the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, God went forth, in the great dispensations of his providence, and fought against the last of the four monarchies. The Roman empire never, thenceforth, prospered as it had done in former ages, and ere long it was broken to pieces, Dan. ii. 40—44. But this judicial procedure, the prophet announces, shall be with a view to signal mercy. Spiritual conflicts, spiritual triumphs, great spiritual mercies to the Gentile nations shall ensue, ver. 4—21. These predictions began to receive their fulfilment when, through the death of Jesus, the middle-wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles was broken down—a new and living way into the holiest made manifest—and the church, with all its blessed privileges, made accessible to the long-separated people of the heathen world, ver. 4, 5. This was—this is the gospel age; a season of most blessed light, in comparison with the dark economy of prophecies and types, ver. 6. But greater light and greater privilege still await the church in the close of this age. The Sun of righteousness shall illumine and gladden all lands, the river of the water of life shall flow throughout the whole desolate heritages of the earth, and Jesus, King of his united and glorious church, shall be acknowledged and adored in all nations and kindreds of the world, ver. 7—9. In that period Judah and Jerusalem shall be inhabited, and shall abide in safety, ver. 10, 11. Judgments from the Lord shall plead the cause of his church and people against all by whom they are opposed, ver. 12—15. The ordinances of gospel worship shall be sacredly observed; or if there shall be those by whom they are neglected and despised, they shall be visited with sore spiritual, and it may be also, with temporal judgments, ver. 16—19. In fine, in those future, happy times, the Spirit of holiness shall be more abundantly poured forth than in former generations. Under his enlightening and sanctifying influence, multitudes in all lands shall be consecrated to God; they shall love and keep his holy institutions: the glory of the Lord shall be their animating principle even in the ordinary transactions of life, and the church shall be blissfully purified from the evils that polluted and debased her in former days, ver. 20, 21.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us beware of unbelief. It brought fearful ruin on God's long-favoured people; and we ought to give earnest heed lest we perish after the same example. Enjoying the precious privileges of the gospel church, let us diligently and wisely improve them. From time to time let us wait on God's holy institutions, and be deeply concerned while we do so, that the spiritual rain may descend, and fertilize, and gladden our souls, and render us, in heart and life, Holiness to the Lord.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the God of providence. Thou rulest over all. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are all thy ways, O thou King of saints. Thou wilt fulfil thy threatenings against thine adversaries, as surely as thy promises to them that fear and love thee. We would, for our part, take refuge under the shadow of thy wings. We bless thee for him, our glorious Emmanuel, who is a hiding-place from the storm, and a covert from the tempest. We would, in the humble confidence of faith, enter into that hiding-place. There we are safe from guilt and from wrath, both here and hereafter. There we are accepted in the Beloved. And there we can and there we desire to hold blessed converse with thee as our Father and our God. We adore and bless thee, O Lord, as the God of salvation. Our souls magnify thee for its wondrous scheme, for its glorious Executor, for his finished work, for his exaltation to give repentance and the remission of sins, for the free offer of mercy through his blood, and because we, the dwellers in the isles afar off in the sea, have heard the joyful sound. But, O our God, we would fear lest a promise having been given us of entering into thy rest, we should come short of it through unbelief. Save us, we beseech thee, from this great sin. O may it be given to us, in the behalf of Christ, to believe on his name. And all-guilty and hell-deserving as we are, receiving him and resting upon him, may we have peace with thee, and access into the grace wherein thy people stand, and be enabled to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. We rejoice, blessed Jesus, in the promise that thou shalt be King over all the earth. O let thy kingdom come. Erect it in these poor, rebellious, polluted hearts of ours. Subdue them to thyself. Renew them by thy Holy Spirit to delight in obedience to thine ordinances and thy laws. And, through him that loved us, may we be made more than conquerors over all the enemies of our salvation. We bless thee for all thy holy institutions. Make them indeed the means of grace to our souls. As we go forward in the observance of them, may we grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. May we make it our persevering study, and be enabled by the Spirit of holiness to die to all sin, and to live unto righteousness. We unite this morning in thanksgivings to our Preserver. We have slept and awaked, because thou hast made us to dwell in safety. And now, O our covenant God, we lift our eyes to thee for thy mercy to conduct us in thy fear through the duties, temptations, and trials of this day. Enable us to set the Lord before us, and he will direct our steps. Remember, in thy great mercy, our afflicted and sorrowing friends and brethren every where. May their troubles be alleviated, and their consolations, through Jesus Christ, greatly abound. Do good in thy good pleasure to Zion, build up the walls of thy Jerusalem. Let no weapon formed against Zion prosper, and every tongue that riseth in judgment against her do thou condemn. O have respect unto thy covenant, for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty. Let thy way be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let men be blessed in Christ, and all nations call him blessed. Our humble prayer, O our God, is before thee; hear us, for thy name's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. 3.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The sublime vision contained in this chapter relates to the millennium, or the thousand years' reign of the saints with Christ, the general resurrection, the final judgment, and the eternal state.

The chapter announces: I. A period of signal restraint to the great tempter and adversary of souls. He shall be bound up from deceiving the nations for a thousand years, ver. 1, 2. It is the Angel of the covenant who binds Satan. He triumphed over him in his cross: he has obtained many a triumph over him in succeeding ages; and he will obtain one more signal and glorious triumph over him, ere the church's militant state shall be closed. When this blessed period shall commence, we cannot with certainty determine. But it cannot be far distant—it must be near at hand. It will be a season of peace and prosperity to the church, such as she has never known before; a period of success to the gospel, and of the abounding of pure and undefiled religion, more glorious than the annals of the church have ever recorded.

II. The resurrection and reign of the martyrs during this happy period, ver. 4—6. It is a spiritual resurrection; not of bodies, but of souls; not of individual persons, but of a great and glorious cause. The spirit of those holy men who laid down their lives for the testimony of Jesus shall revive, and the cause for which they contended, and suffered, and died, shall be held in renown. It will be a blessed period. Holy men shall abound in the earth. Holy exercises shall be delighted in. Earth shall, in those long and happy ages, be no faint emblem of heaven.

III. The removal of Satan's restraint, his last great effort against the church, and his final overthrow, ver. 7—10. Uninterrupted peace will not be the privilege of the church in this world. Even the long and happy period of the millennium shall be followed by a season of signal apostacy and great tribulation. Satan, the deceiver of souls, shall be released from his imprisonment of a thousand years, and permitted to go forth, as in former ages, to deceive the nations and draw them into hostility to Christ and his church. And his delusions shall be permitted to be extensively successful. Who the nations are over whom he shall prevail, here termed Gog and Magog, whether they shall consist of such merely nominal Christians as, in the latter days of the millennium, may have been in their hearts disaffected to the purity of the gospel and the power of godliness; or of those who, through enmity or fear, may have fled from the scene of flourishing Christianity to the remotest countries of the earth, it is not of much moment to inquire. Over multitudes he shall prevail; and, in number as the sand of the sea, these deceived nations shall assail the Christians throughout the world, and especially those of them who shall be then living in the land of Canaan and the city of Jerusalem, with warfare and persecution. But this season of deception and ungodliness shall be short, ver. 3. God will permit it for holy and wise reasons; but he will cover with everlasting confusion this last dreadful effort of his adversary against his cause. Accordingly, ver. 9, they shall be suddenly and totally destroyed. It may be that they shall be literally devoured by fire from heaven, as the wicked cities of the plain were in ancient days; but, at all events, their overthrow shall be accomplished in such a way as to convince the whole world that it is from God—that therein he is vindicating his government against his rebellious foes, and pleading the quarrel of his persecuted church.

IV. The general and final judgment, and its solemn consequences, ver. 11—15. This will, in all probability, take place soon after the overthrow of Gog and Magog. Jesus will be the judge, Acts xvii. 31. Infinite majesty and spotless purity are his own attributes, and will characterize his whole procedure in the judgment-day, ver. 11. All will be judged, the young and the old, the rich and the poor. All the generations of mankind shall be assembled around the great white throne, ver. 12. The books shall be opened—the book of God's omniscience, in which are registered all thoughts, words, and actions—the book of every man's own conscience—the book of the law of nature—the book of revelation—and the book of life in which are written the names of those who belong to Christ. All shall be judged according to their works. They who shall be testified to be the people of Christ shall be adjudged to life everlasting. The ungodly and unbelieving shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. This is the second, the most awful death, which will never be succeeded by any blessed resurrection.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The friends of Zion should be cheered, amidst all her present afflictions, by anticipating the times of refreshing that await her in the latter days. And for these blessed times they should long and pray. Meanwhile, it is to be borne in mind, that neither the collective church nor individual believers can, so long as they are in the present state, enjoy untroubled peace. This is not their rest; it is polluted. Their rest is on high, and they must enter it through much tribulation. But, blessed be God, the tribulations of his church and people shall all have a happy and glorious issue. They shall, in due time, come out of them all, and be made more than conquerors through him that loved them. Let us often realize the solemn and awful period when we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ. Let us now make the judge our friend by believing in his adorable and worthy name. Let us make it our great concern to be found in him; so shall we obtain mercy of the Lord in that day.

PRAYER.

Ever blessed and adorable God, we, thine unworthy and sinful creatures, would this evening approach the footstool of thy throne. We would humble ourselves before thy holy majesty, and confess that we are not worthy to take thy name into our lips. O let not the Lord be angry when we take upon us to speak unto the Lord. Behold us in thy beloved Son, Christ Jesus, in whom thou art well pleased. And for his sake, because he is worthy, may we find grace in thy sight. We praise thee, O most gracious God, for all thy manifold providential gifts, and for all the saving mercies which any of us have been privileged to enjoy. O if the Spirit of grace has revealed to us the excellency and glory of Jesus, the Saviour; if he has enabled us to receive him into our hearts by faith, and shed abroad his love in our hearts, and brought us to dedicate ourselves to be his people and servants for ever, may we be filled with holy, humble gratitude, and spend our redeemed lives to thy praise and glory. If there be amongst us any who are without Christ, dead in trespasses and sins, unpardoned, unholy, O, we beseech thee, Lord, have mercy. Take such from the fearful pit and the miry clay. Lead them to the blood of sprinkling. May they lay hold of the hope set before them, and experience, through the grace of thy Holy Spirit, that blessed change of heart, that spiritual resurrection, without which no man shall see the Lord. Then shall we be a happy family indeed; having thee as our covenant God, enjoying the good-will of him who dwelt in the bush, and conducted onward by thy free Spirit to the land of everlasting uprightness. O our gracious God, we plead thy fatherly pardon for all the transgressions of heart and life wherewith this day we have transgressed against thee. Alas! that we should so often offend thee; so often grieve thy Holy Spirit; so often wound him who redeemed us by his own blood. Subdue our iniquities. Cast our sins into the depths of the sea. Heal our mournful diseases; there is balm in Gilead, and a physician there. When, in thy good providence, we are permitted to retire to the repose of another night, O Shepherd of Israel, be thou our protector. May we dwell in the secret place of the Most High, and abide under the shadow of the Almighty. We pray on behalf of all our brethren of mankind. Have mercy on those who know thee not, who, in the midst of external light, are sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. And may the light of everlasting life soon be made to shine into all lands, that men may know thee, from the least even to the greatest. O thou Comforter of them who are cast down, may thy consolations be ministered to all the sons and daughters of affliction and sorrow. And may we, and all who are near and dear to us be taught of thy Holy Spirit to live as those who are strangers in the earth. May our portion be on high, and may our hearts be there; and in the day when Jesus shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in them that believe, may we form part of that happy company who shall be found in him, and shall enter in with him into the everlasting kingdom of their Father and their God. Now, unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we are able to ask or think, be glory in the church, by Jesus Christ, throughout all ages. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXI. 10.

SCRIPTURE—MALACHI I. II.

REMARKS.

The prophets were witnesses for God in the world. In particular, they bare witness, each in his own day, of a Saviour to come. 'Now we have only one witness more to call, and we have done with our evidence.' With Malachi the spirit of prophecy ceased in the Jewish church. A long period of darkness intervened between him and the 'voice crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord.'

* We have no means of ascertaining exactly the time at which Malachi lived; but it is probable he was cotemporary with Nehemiah. The state of the people, as seen in the prophet's complaint, is exactly similar to that in which Nehemiah found them when he assumed the government. After they returned from captivity, the Jews continued a stiff-necked and a backsliding people still. Their adversity had not made them wise. Haggai and Zechariah were sent to reprove them for delaying to rebuild the temple. Malachi is sent to reprove them for neglecting and profaning its services after it had been built.

At the commencement of the first chapter we find the Lord, by the mouth of his prophet, condescending to maintain a controversy with Israel, defending his own system of government against their unjust complaints. By many successive messengers Jehovah had declared that the seed of Jacob were his chosen people, the special objects of his love. But the men of that generation boldly questioned the truth of that announcement. God had chastised them for their sins, but instead of being humbled under his hand, they turn round upon him who made them, point to their sufferings, and say, 'Wherein hast thou loved us?' That which was originally an act of free grace on the part of God, they now demand as a right, and will not acknowledge that Israel had been favoured by the Lord.

How easily does the prophet stop the mouth of the gainsayer, 'Was not Esau Jacob's brother?' These Jews thought that in virtue of their descent from Abraham, they had a right to all the privileges they enjoyed: but Esau was of Abraham's seed as well as Jacob, yet 'I loved Jacob and hated Esau,' chose the seed of Jacob as the objects of my free favour, and left the seed of Esau, like other nations, to the just consequences of their sin.

From the 6th verse to the end of the first chapter there is a complaint directed generally against the whole body of the people, but more immediately against the priests; a complaint that they did not serve God with sincerity of heart, and did not reverently observe the ordinances of his house. The people were worldly and irreligious; the priests instead of reproofing and instructing them, connived at their impiety, and shared in their guilt. The whole matter is summed up in the 13th and 14th verses. Those who ministered at the altar, despised it in their hearts. They dragged themselves through the prescribed form of duty, but they did not revere the ordinances as appointed of God. They grew wearied of the continual recurrence of sacrifices in which they could see no spiritual meaning. Having lost the spirit, they soon departed also from the letter of the law. Contrary to the express precept of the law, the people brought, and the priests allowed, the torn, and the lame, and the sick to be offered as sacrifices in the temple. They served themselves with the best, and set apart the refuse for the service of God. For this a curse is denounced against them. That curse is written for warning to us on whom the ends of the world have come. It is the same spirit that still animates the children of disobedience. Under the gospel dispensation, since the Lamb of God has been slain once to take away the sins of the world, we are not required from time to time to take a lamb without blemish from our flock, and lay it a sacrifice on the altar: yet the same God demands of his people still the same service in another form. The tenor of his requirement still is, 'my son, give me thine heart.' There are many ways in which we may, in which we do, closely imitate that very sin of the Jews which brought a curse from heaven upon their heads; for example, in youth the intellect is clear, the affections are warm, and all the faculties of body and mind are in vigorous exercise: if ye spend that season of youth in seeking your own pleasure, with the intention of becoming religious after you grow old, ye have in your flock a male, and are vowing and sacrificing to the Lord a corrupt thing. Again, a man spends a day in toil or in business, the evening in recreation or amusement, and late at night, when all his faculties are worn out, when his eyes are becoming heavy with sleep, spends a few moments saying a prayer; that man hath in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing. He has kept the best to himself, and has brought as an offering to the Lord that which could be applied to no other purpose. And should he accept this at your hand? No, he has recorded a curse against those who offer it. Those who know the Saviour, do not serve God thus. They feel that they are not their own. They are bought with a price, and they account it but a reasonable service to consecrate themselves to the service of him who redeemed them; they seek to glorify him with their bodies and spirits which are his.

PRAYER.

O thou holy Lord God Almighty, we would approach unto thy presence and learn to speak thy praise. We bow before the Lord our Maker. In conscious unworthiness we would bow down our souls while we reverently adore our Creator, our Preserver, our Judge. We have fallen by our iniquity. We have sunk into a fearful pit. We have destroyed ourselves. Out of the depths, O Lord, we cry unto thee. Hear us, God of our salvation. Look on him who bare iniquity in his own body on the tree, and for his sake have mercy on us. Now, seeking to hold communion with God, we would place our confidence in the appointed Mediator. We seek to approach the Holy One. Unclean, we draw nigh to him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. We come through the veil now rent, into the holy place; we turn our eyes toward the mercy-seat, that we may see there the glory of the Lord. O Lord, show us thy glory, thy glory as it is seen in the face of Jesus. Admit us now into thy presence, in Christ accepted worshippers before thy throne. Admitted, through him who loved us, to hold converse with thee our God, we would frame our lips to speak thy praise. We will remember thy works, thy works of wonder done unto the sons of men, and we will learn to praise the Lord for his goodness. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and all that is within us be stirred up to bless his name. Thy thoughts, O Lord, have not been as our thoughts, nor thy ways as our ways. Thou hast not dealt with us as we have sinned. We were lost. By nature we were all under the curse, the curse of God. Under that curse we could not lie, it would weigh us down into hell. Yet we are spared, and are here praying in hope. There is no help in man, but thou, Lord, hast laid our help on One that is mighty. God said, Save from going down to the pit. God gave his own Son to save the lost; thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift. And now, Lord, unable to save ourselves, we wait for thy salvation. We pray for grace according to our need. Lord, increase our faith. Enable us to place our confidence where thou hast laid our help; enable us to build our hopes on the foundation thou hast laid. Lord Jesus, thou art mighty to save, stretch out thine hand to help us. Lord, save us or we perish. Cleanse us in thy blood. Clothe us in thy righteousness. Deny not thy grace. Withhold not thy enlightening and convincing Spirit. Redeemer exalted, redeem our souls from sin, and death, and hell. And now, O God of providence and grace, we cast ourselves on thee. Sustain us in the duties, and trials, and temptations of this day. Make thy grace sufficient for us. Send thy light forth to lead and guide us. Open thy hand wide and satisfy us with good, the good that we need for the life that now is, and the better blessings of the life to come. Forgive our sin; accept our thanksgiving; and send an answer to our prayer, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATION XXI.

REMARKS.

The greater part of this book is occupied by a prophetic history of the church militant; and now, in the conclusion of it, we obtain a view of her celestial glory. After making known so much of what should happen to the saints in their journey through life, the inspired writer, or rather the inspiring Spirit, proceeds to delineate, so far as that can be done in the language of men, the glorious things which God hath prepared for his own in the world to come. The scheme of divine revelation was drawing to a close, and it pleased its Author to wind up the whole with the fullest exhibition of heaven's joys which can be presented to a believer's mind before he has put off this earthly tabernacle. Here we find a beam from the sanctuary above penetrating the gloom in which this world is involved, attracting our thoughts, and aiding our view to an incorruptible, an undefiled, an unfading inheritance. Believers are all the children of a king: but while they sojourn in this land of the stranger, their appearance is very unlike their station. They are lean from day to day. Their hands hang down, their knees are feeble, their hearts are heavy. Such a discipline is needed. He who loved them with an everlasting love, allows troubles to come upon them, but he does not delight in troubling them. The bitter draught is necessary: but to show that it is administered by a Father's hand, it is mingled with much of sweetness. His own designs of love will not admit of their being freed from tribulation, but he can enable them to rejoice in the midst of it. Various are the springs of comfort which send forth their streams to refresh the traveller in this weary land. Various the means which the eternal Father has employed to revive the drooping spirits of his own adopted children, while they are imprisoned in the flesh. One of these means is to direct the hope of the weary to a rest that remaineth; to tell the poor of a treasure at God's right hand; the wanderer of a home in heaven. Believer, what a privilege is here! But like all others, it is peculiar to them that believe. When sorrow comes on in such a flood as would overwhelm the unaided energies of nature, ye have the means of rising high above it; many means ye have, and among others this. Look to the mansions that Christ hath prepared for you in the Father's house. Think of the joy unspeakable and full of glory that shall succeed the light affliction which endureth but for a moment, the portion that cannot be taken away. But not only has the hope of heaven been held out to the believer, much has been told him of what it is that constitutes heaven. Left to form a conception of it for himself, he would assuredly err in every feature. Although revelation is nothing more than a glass through which spiritual things are seen but darkly; still it is a glass which, when applied to our weak sight and turned upward, is sufficient not only to find out that there is a city of the living God, but to distinguish many of its peculiar glories. The city shines afar, not an undistinguishable blaze of light: for through this glass ye can perceive the Rock of its foundation. Salvation it hath for walls and bulwarks. Even from this far-off world ye can see within the glittering, gladdening streams of the river of life, the streets of pure gold. Ye can see there a crowd unnumbered of pure spirits rejoicing, adoring. In the midst a great white throne, and in the midst of the throne a Lamb as it had been slain; the city filled with light, and the Lamb the light thereof.

Just glance at some of the leading features in this description of future bliss. Ver. 2. The new Jerusalem prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. See Isa. lii. 1. The church collective fully sanctified; every component member clean. All lovely and without spot in the eye of him who redeemed them. Ver. 3. One item of the blessedness of heaven is, God himself shall be with them. Are we ready for enjoying such a heaven? If left to write out a description of heaven to suit ourselves, would we put this clause in it? Whether is our experience that of Asaph, Psal. lxxvii. 3, or that of David, Psal. xliii. 4? Is the thought of God's presence 'trouble,' or 'exceeding joy?' Ver. 5. All things new, all things; not only a new home, but new inhabitants. Every one who is admitted there has put off the old man with his deeds. Not only a new heaven and a new earth, but a new heart, in all who are admitted therein from this sinful world. Ver. 8, 27. The wicked shall not stand in God's sight. All in heaven are under his eye, in the light of his countenance, and he is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. Ver. 23. The Lamb the light thereof. He who was the Lamb slain to take away the sins of the world, is now the Lamb as it had been slain, in the midst of the throne—the glory of God, in which all the hosts of heaven rejoice.

PRAYER.

O thou that dwellest in the heavens, we lift our eyes to thee. At thy gracious command would we arise from the dust of earth, and send upward the affections of our souls to thy throne.

We would awake at thy bidding from the sleep of worldliness, and seek even now to hold communion with the Father of our spirits. We have been cleaving to the dust. The God of this world hath blinded our minds, so that we have not seen thy glory. We have not known ourselves, nor thee. This day we have been living as if we were of the world. We have been seeking here our reward. We have sinned in this thing. We have broken our Lord's command. We have forgotten the one thing, and been cumbered by the many. O our Father, this is not our portion, it fadeth away. This is not our rest, it is polluted. Blessed be thy name that there is a better portion. Blessed be God for the hope he has given us of a rest that remaineth. Thanks be to God for all the high hopes he has held out to us in his word; thanks for the precious revelations contained in the word now read. In the light of thy word, O Lord, we would look up to the mansions which our Saviour has prepared for his own. We would learn to wean our affections from earth, and set them on those glorious things that are at thy right hand. But into thy presence nothing entereth that defileth, and we are unclean,—altogether vile; we are born in sin. Our iniquities have gone over our heads. Be merciful to us, O God. Create a clean heart. O thou who sittest on the throne, make all things in us new. By the mighty working of thy Spirit, make our souls meet for thy presence. We confess ourselves impure; we would learn to lament our impurity. We would mourn and be in bitterness because of felt uncleanness. We would look to the Lamb of God. We would trust in his atonement. We would be clothed in his righteousness. Cast us not away, O God, from thy presence. Look on us now in love. The souls thou seest here still unbelieving, and in thy sight abominable, bring to the fountain opened, and purge away their sin. Look on those whom thou seest already in Jesus, and perfect that which concerneth them. Sanctify us wholly. Give us the hope, the hope well-founded, of a portion in the inheritance of thy saints. Bring us to Christ. Being brought to him, may we abide in him, and his word abide in us. Believing, may we be enabled also to rejoice in the Lord, and to show ourselves his by a conversation becoming his gospel. Our prayer, Lord, is before thee; thou knowest our wants; supply them out of thy fullness; see us in the face of Jesus; accept us in the Beloved, and to thy name we ascribe eternal praise. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXX.

SCRIPTURE—MALACHI III. IV.

REMARKS.

At the commencement of the third chapter there is a very distinct announcement of Messiah's advent, ver. 1. A messenger to prepare the way; that is, John the Baptist, see Matt. xi. 10. Ushered in by this appointed forerunner, the Lord himself, the prophecy continues, shall suddenly come to his temple. After a repeated assurance of the certainty of his coming, there is in the second verse a much needed caution to those who lightly expected a temporal Deliverer, and thought not of one glorious in holiness, to purge away iniquity from Jacob. The saints of old were wont to address their prayer to the 'terrible God who keepeth covenant and mercy.' God is no where more terrible than in the keeping of his covenant of grace. He keeps it in so far as it demands the punishment of guilt, even though that fell on the head of his own Beloved. He keeps it in so far as to cast out the unbelieving and impenitent,—to cast them out for ever, ver. 3. This Saviour shall sit as a refiner of silver. Oft his own chosen are put in a sore furnace of affliction, but it should be their consolation to know that the refiner is looking on; that he willeth not their suffering; that he afflicts them for good; that like the refiner of silver he will keep them in till all the dross is away, in order to have them pure in his sight, but will not keep them in a moment longer. And as the refiner of silver, sitting over his crucible, knows the exact moment when the purifying process is complete, by observing when his own image begins to be reflected from the surface of the silver; so this Refiner lets his own chosen lie in the furnace till they begin to reflect his image, that image which had been defaced by sin. Mark the wonderful declaration of the sixth verse. Many illustrations of it might be given. It is the immutability of God that secures a period of respite to a sinful race. Had that attribute been wanting, another would have poured vengeance on the whole human race the moment they had sinned. When the divine law is broken, divine justice demands the punishment of the transgressor, but a previous counsel of God secured for the condemned a period of trial; that counsel is carried out; that covenant is kept, for he who made it changeth not. The whole course of Israel's history is one continued illustration of this. At any point in the progress of the nation, had Jehovah their King looked to their deserving only, they would have been instantly consumed; but at every point in their progress he remembered his covenant, and they were spared. Had God dealt with them as they deserved, the Red sea would not have opened to afford them a passage, for the unbelieving Hebrews would have perished all in the land of bondage. The inhabitants of Canaan would not have fainted because of them, for their carcases would have fallen in the wilderness. In the time of Malachi they had become sinners before the Lord exceedingly; but still his own eternal purpose required their preservation, and he changeth not. And even now it is in this verse that we can get the only solution of the problem, how the Jews continue to this day a distinct people. Why have the sons of Jacob been preserved to this day from extinction, or from being merged among the nations? History cannot tell, for it records only the operation of causes calculated to destroy them. Philosophy cannot tell. The infidel cannot get an answer to it from any of his dumb idols; when he has wearied himself in vain let him turn to the Bible, and read the answer here, 'I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.' The same thing is illustrated in our own experience. This verse contains a key to the greatest mystery which the universe exhibits. A soul that has sinned, and yet not suffered the threatened doom; a guilty rebel left to roam free in the very heart of the kingdom; a defiling spot allowed to lie on the surface of an otherwise fair creation, not swept off into the bottomless pit; this is the wonder, and it is all explained in the verse before us; Jehovah changeth not though we do. Ver. 16—18. This is a passage to which believers delight to turn, as the source of much consolation. The Lord knoweth them that are his. Those who delight themselves in the Lord, and therefore speak of his grace, enjoy more than communion with each other. In each little company of two or three met to hold converse on the things that concern their peace, God himself is present to hearken and hear, present to bless them. Looking on them from his holy habitation, he marks them his own; he keeps them his own amid the temptations of the world; he will acknowledge them his own, number them among his jewels in the great and terrible day.

CHAP. IV. Before the prophecy is sealed, ere yet the lips of the last witness are closed, another exhibition is made to the Jewish church of their Redeemer's glory. Thanks unto God that he never left himself without a witness throughout the successive dispensations preparatory to the coming of his own kingdom. Thanks be to God, that in all ages, from the first and more obscure designation, 'the seed of the woman,' down to Malachi's 'Sun of righteousness,' the same Jesus was revealed to the faith of his people. And thanks be to God for his greater goodness to us. That which angels strained to look into; that mystery by their own lips proclaimed into which the prophets made diligent search; that mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh, our eyes have clearly seen. The fathers believed in a Saviour coming; how shall we escape if we reject the Saviour come? Unto us much is given; of us much shall be required. Let us arise and shine, for our light has come, and the glory of the Lord has arisen upon us.

PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we worship thee; preserved by thy power during the darkness of the night, we have assembled this morning to give thee the praise. In the enjoyment of life and all life's blessings, we desire to acknowledge with gratitude that all is the gift of thy hand. From thee, Father of lights, every good gift smeth down. We will trace thy goodness in the remembrance of the past, and we will depend on thee for the time to come. Sanctify our memories, that they may record thy wondrous works. Sanctify our whole nature, that we may give to thy glory. We praise thee, Lord, for thy word given, a light in the darkness. We raise thee for him whom the word reveals, Christ the Lord. Open our eyes to behold the wonders contained in thy word. May we see here the face of Jesus. Reveal thy Son to us, reveal thy Son in us. May the Spirit enlighten the eyes of our understanding to behold, in the glass of the word, the beauty of thine own Beloved; may our affection be so sanctified that we shall be in our eyes the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. O that this Jesus whom thou hast set up King in Sion, may be acknowledged King in our heart's affections. Thou, O Lord, hast exhibited thy love in Christ crucified. Let that love constrain us; let thy love in the gospel overpower the opposition of our carnal minds, and melt our hard hearts. Lord, we have gone astray, let thy loving-kindness draw us; draw us unto thyself. Holy Spirit cease not thy striving until the enmity be subdued. Holy One, depart not from these hearts until thou hast made all things new; until thou hast driven out the buyers and sellers that defile the temple, and set Jesus, our Lord, in the midst of the throne. Our Father in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Let thy way be known on the earth. Let the people praise thee, Lord, let all the people praise thee. O let the light which has arisen on us penetrate the thick darkness that covers many lands. Make the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ. Give to thy Son the earth for his possession. Have mercy, Lord, on Israel, scattered and peeled. How long, O Lord, wilt thou cast off thy people whom thou hast redeemed? Will thy wrath burn for ever more? Arise, O Lord, and have mercy on Zion. At last, O Lord, take away the blindness which hath happened unto Israel. Show them thy glory. Teach them to seek and to find thy glory in the face of Jesus. Let them see and flow together unto Zion; to him who is King in the palaces thereof. Save thy people, O God; bless thine inheritance. In the same Saviour let the Gentiles trust. Of Jew and Gentile make one adopted, redeemed family; make thy people willing in the day of thy power; let thy sons come from far, numerous as the dew of the morning. Let the people praise thee, O Lord, let all the people praise thee. And now, our Father, give us this day our daily bread; protect us from danger; guard us from temptation; help our infirmities. As we are preserved by thy power, enable us to live to thy glory. Forgive the sin of our holy things. Let our persons and services be accepted, and our prayer heard and answered, for the sake of Christ our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXVI.

SCRIPTURE—REVELATIONS XXII.

REMARKS.

In this chapter the same subject is continued. The vail which hides from mortal eyes the world of spirits is here in part drawn aside, that the heirs may get a glimpse of their inheritance. In this description of the New Jerusalem, there is one feature which is more frequently introduced, and stands more prominently out than any other. It is the place occupied by Christ, here called the Lamb of God. The Lamb is the 'temple,' the 'light' of heaven. In the Lamb's book the names of the saved are recorded. The throne, the great white throne, around which angels and redeemed spirits stand adoring, is 'the throne of God, and of the Lamb.' This chapter should fortify the believer against the fatal heresy which denies the divinity of Christ. No array of verbal criticism can avail to dim the mark of Deity that here encircles the Saviour's head. It is not by throwing out one word and explaining away another, that you can reduce the personage here spoken of to the level of our nature. The parts of this description so cohere that none of them can be wanted; you must blot out the whole of this record ere you can hide from the inquirer's eye the proof that the man Christ Jesus is the mighty God. You must extinguish the light of heaven ere you can bring the eternal Son down to the level of created things. O the Socinian's heaven must be very darkness, for a mortal man is the light thereof. From this passage we may learn farther, that there will be no popery in heaven; therefore there should be none on earth. Worthy the Lamb, is the ever new song of the redeemed. A papist would vary the chorus by worthy the virgin; worthy a hundred other lesser idols; no such discordant note will ever mar the symphonies of the upper sanctuary. There are many saints in heaven, more than in the pope's calendar, but no one does homage to his fellow; no idolatry there; they worship God. In heaven, as on earth, there is but one Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus.

The principal thing to be derived from the whole passage, is the position which Christ occupies in his church in heaven; and that settles the position he should occupy in his church on earth. The kingdom of God, now and hereafter, is one. Those who are adopted children, are made meet for the inheritance. They are so prepared that on entering heaven they will feel themselves at home. When redeemed souls get within the portals of the holy city, no time will be spent in the exercises of an awkward novitiate; they will strike in at once in sweet accord with the highest notes of spirits who have been ages there. Would it be so with you were the silver cord now broken that binds you to the body? If even now you were taken from earth and admitted into heaven, could you glide at once, and without conscious effort, into all the habits and employments of the place? would you find nothing new there? especially would you find nothing new in the position occupied by the Lamb of God? In heaven he is all. Take away the light, and there cannot be day; so take away Christ, and you have blotted heaven from the universe. If ever we obtain the inheritance, we must even now be made meet for it; and we are not being made meet for it unless we be allowing Christ that place in our affections which he occupies in the realms of glory. In the realms of glory his place is the midst of the throne! In the multitude of our thoughts within us, are we willing to place him there?

And now we have read the word. The whole counsel of God has passed in review before us. It ends as it began, in grace. The distinguishing characteristic of the salvation of God is, that it is all of grace; and no where is that characteristic more distinctly declared than in these the parting words of the inspiring Spirit, 'whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.' When Malachi had finished his "report" the curtain was drawn, and for many generations no direct message reached the church from her King on high. Then the Lord of glory suddenly came to his temple, he came to save. John, too, has finished his message. Long the curtain has been drawn; no direct revelation from heaven. Again the Lord shall come suddenly; shall come again! but there is no more sacrifice for sin—come again to be glorified in them that believe, and to take vengeance on them that know not God. His own emphatic declaration is, 'I come quickly.' They who wait for his salvation account not this a threat; they read it a promise, and joyfully respond, 'Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'

PRAYER.

God Almighty, our Creator and Preserver, we again unite our hearts and tongues to give thee praise. We have been preserved another day; all our wants have been supplied. We would learn to receive all the common blessings of life as the good gift of a Father's hand. Hitherto hath the Lord helped us, and now we will stir up our souls to praise the Lord. Thou, God of our life, and length of our days, accept the tribute of our thanks. We have been cumberers of the ground, yet up to this moment we are not cut off. We recognise here the power of the Intercessor's prayer. Blessed Jesus, we owe our all to thee. Subdue our rebellious hearts that we may be wholly thine. King of Zion, reign over us. We desire now to open our mouths unto the Lord; we avouch the Lord to be our God. Lord, what wilt thou have us to do? Lord, teach us thy will, and enable us to do it. Our days and years are passing; passing into eternity, and alas, they bear engraven on them a testimony against us; we have not spent them aright; we have not been waiting for and hastening to the coming of our Lord. God and Father of our Lord Jesus, give us the spirit of adoption, make us thy children. Let it not be with any of us a name to live; renew and sanctify our souls. Make them meet for the inheritance. We give thee praise for the prospect of another sabbath of rest. We pray that thou wouldst preserve us this night, and spare us to the light of that blessed day. Then raise our affections to thyself. O that we may know what it is to long for God, the living God, and desire to come and appear before him. Bring us to thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacle; bring us in faith to thine altar; give us a dependence on the one efficacious sacrifice thereon laid, to come unto God, and to find God gracious, and to account him our exceeding joy. We unite now, O Lord, to pray for all our brethren around; prepare a worshipping people for thy day of rest, and prepare a good word for a waiting people. Let those who minister in holy things be strong in the Lord, and speak boldly the whole of thy counsel. Knowing themselves the terror of the Lord, may they be faithful and urgent in persuading men. And O may many be persuaded. Holy Spirit, administering the covenant now on earth, persuade men to turn from the world to God. Thou who didst give the word, put forth thy power with the preaching of it in this land. Let it mightily prevail. Let thy work appear before us; revive us yet again. Add to the church souls saved. Let glory arise to God in the highest from many saints edified, and many sinners saved, through the preaching of the everlasting gospel. Again, O God of mercy, we commit the keeping of our souls to thee; we pray for pardon. Let not thy wrath lie on any soul worshipping here. Take away sin. O God be reconciled to us through the death of thy Son. One thing we seek for, peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Our waiting eyes are toward thee, O Lord; our hope is in Jehovah. O give the blessedness of the man whose trust is in the Lord. Bless us, even us, O our Father, with all spiritual blessings in Christ; and to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be honour, and glory, and power, for ever and ever. Amen.

PARTICULAR OCCASIONS.

MORNING.

SACRAMENTAL FAST-DAY.

Almighty God, by whose care and mercy we have been preserved throughout another night, and brought in peace and safety to the beginning of this day, inspire our hearts with deep-felt gratitude to thee. Show us the value of salvation, that, while we cordially praise thee for the common bounties of thy providence, we may specially celebrate the riches of thy saving grace. Convince us of our own unworthiness and sin, that we may unfeignedly acknowledge ourselves to be less than the least of all thy benefits. Alas, O God, how numerous and how great have our transgressions been! We were shapen in iniquity, and are by nature the corrupt descendants of a fallen father. But we especially confess our actual violations of thy law. That law is holy, just, and good; and as our Creator, Governor, and Benefactor, thou art entitled to our absolute and unswerving obedience. But in ten thousand times ten thousand instances we have disobeyed thee. Thou knowest whether some of us are not even yet entirely alienated from thy service, and practically opposed to thine authority. And if any of thy professing worshippers here present have become new creatures in Christ Jesus, we acknowledge that by thy grace they are in this respect what they are, and that still they are miserably short of what they ought to be, of what they by this time might have been. Alas! that those who have tasted and seen that the Lord is gracious, should be so cold and lifeless in his service, and should do so little to promote his cause. And, alas! that any to whom thy law and gospel have been brought, should perversely violate the precepts and sanctions of the one, and resist the invitations and promises of the other. O God, regenerate unrenewed souls, sanctify thy believing people, and pardon all of us. We are called this day to confess our sins and implore forgiveness in the house of prayer. Grant that we may do so with true hearts. Render the approaching services eminently useful in showing us our own sinfulness, and in stirring us up to avail ourselves of that glorious provision which thou hast made, by Jesus Christ, for the pardon and salvation of the sinner. May thy ministers be enabled clearly and affectionately to exhibit alike the heinousness and danger of sin, and the value and all-sufficiency of the Saviour; and may many impenitent and unpardoned sinners be led to flee from the one and to embrace the other. Bless the sacred exercises of this day to all who are about to sit down at the sacramental table. Do thou thyself prepare them, and grant that at the approaching solemnity this day's believing penitents may be thankful and happy guests. Hear us, God of mercy, in these our prayers, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

EVENING.

SACRAMENTAL FAST-DAY.

O God, the day is thine, the night also is thine; and it becometh us morning by morning, and evening by evening, to celebrate thy praises and to ask thy blessing. We give thee thanks for all the benefits, whether personal or social, which we have this day received at thy hand, more especially for the continuance of those great religious privileges which, alas! we have often neglected and abused. Blessed be thy name for the special opportunities we have this day had of holding conference with thee, and of receiving instruction and consolation from thy word. O God, in the greatness of thy mercy we may trace the greatness of our own unworthiness and sin; and while we thank thee for the means of grace which this day has brought along with it, we implore thee to forgive our remissness in using them for the high and holy purposes which they are fitted to promote. With pardon give us penitence. Sanctify us also in the whole man, body, soul, and spirit. For the future may we avoid whatever thou hatest, and do whatever thou commandest. Cordially believing the doctrines of thy gospel, may we faithfully obey the precepts of thy law. May we adorn the doctrine of Jesus Christ by walking in all his commandments and ordinances blameless. Promote, we pray thee, the sanctification of our souls by the discipline of thy providence, the instructions of thy word, and the ordinances of thy worship. Follow with thy blessing our attendance this day in the house of prayer. Accept of the confessions, the praises, and the prayers which we professed to offer before thy throne; and grant that we may be led by what we have this day heard and done to cleave to Christ, to avoid sin, to practise holiness, and to love thy law. Bless our fellow-worshippers. May the sacred exercises in which they have been engaged prove to many of them a useful preparation for the solemn and delightful service of communion. Throughout the whole extent of our father land cause knowledge, good order, and true religion to prevail. Guide and prosper thy servants in the holy ministry. May they rejoice to spend and to be spent for the best of Masters, and in the best of causes; and may they be encouraged to serve thee by seeing that their ministrations are eminently useful to immortal souls. May thy servants in the magistracy prove honoured instruments of promoting social order and personal religion in the midst of us. O regenerate the earth. Make the world to believe on Jesus, and to worship thee. And now, Father of mercies, we commit ourselves to thy guidance and protection. May we retire to rest, penitent for our sins, and thankful for thy great and continued kindness towards us. And if we are spared to engage in the business of another day, O may we spend it like true-hearted disciples of Christ, and children of God. Hear and answer us in peace and mercy, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

MORNING.

COMMUNION SABBATH.

Most gracious God, thou God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our reconciled God and Father in him, help us on this the morning of a communion sabbath to present ourselves before thee with hearts in the right frame, and in the lovely exercise of every Christian grace. We come in the name of Jesus to adore thee, that in thy special goodness toward us we have been spared to see the light of another sabbath, and that a sabbath set apart to show forth the love of Jesus in giving himself an atonement for our manifold transgressions. What thanks, what praise do we not owe thee, that in the midst of such deep unworthiness we have thus been dealt with; that when, in strict justice, we should this day in the place of woe have been drinking the cup of wrath; we are invited to thy table, there to drink the cup of salvation. O Lord, thou hast indeed dealt bountifully with us; O that our hearts were filled with an overpowering sense of thy love, and, while we would feel it in its depth and power, we would humble ourselves deeply before thee. We would acknowledge that a sense of thy love in Christ can alone break our hard hearts, and humble their proud spirit of self-sufficiency. Let the private prayers we have this morning offered in our closets, and those we now present before thee, be answered according to thine own gracious promises, and let the abundant love of Christ be shed abroad upon us through the grace of the Spirit, and thus let our hearts be drawn out in lowly confession of our great sinfulness and multiplied sins. In view of the solemn service before us, we would confess and deplore the original corruption of our nature. Thy holy law demands a holy heart, and we are guilty, we are defiled before thee, because we have brought into the world with us an evil heart, a heart alienated from thee, filled with the love of sin. We would confess and deplore the multitude of sins which have sprung from our cherishing this evil disposition. We have obeyed its impulses, and rebelled against thee, and have trampled ten thousand times on thy commandments, drowning the voice of conscience, resisting the strivings of thy Spirit, and putting away the solemn admonitions of thy holy word. Our sins are multiplied beyond number, and aggravated immeasurably beyond our imagination. We would lament that we have so multiplied our transgressions; and as we are to confess this day at thy table that thou wert righteous in demanding from our Surety full satisfaction for all our violations of thy law, we would confess that it is righteous, and just, and good, that we are righteously condemned by it, and that we can see no reason why its dread sentence of condemnation should not now be executed, save that Jesus died, the just for the unjust, to bear our guilt, to satisfy thy justice, and reconcile thy law to us, and us to thy law. Or would we less, in view of the solemn service of this day, confess and deplore our neglect of Jesus, our indifference to the precious offers of pardon and forgiveness in his blood. We would seek and implore grace to assist us in beailing the littleness of spiritual desire which we have permitted the love of Jesus to awaken within us, and the cold indifference of heart with which we have so often met the boundless affection and compassionate tears of a crucified redeemer. Gracious God, we know not what to say; our guilt in trampling on thy law is an evil of infinite offence, and deserving of dread vengeance. O what then must our guilt be in having so long rejected Christ, and shut our hearts against the offers of thy grace. We confess this guilt, we deplore it before thee, and implore forgiveness. We see no reason why we should not be shut out from an interest in Jesus; we can use no plea against thy sovereign justice making us a curse both now and when our Lord cometh, save the all-prevailing plea that sovereign grace hath put in our power, that Jesus died the just for the unjust, to bring us sinners to God. Blessed be thy name, that we are assured this is a plea which thou wilt never refuse to own as prevailing and precious before thee. And while we regard the coming services of the day as a gracious means of edifying our souls in the faith, that thou art well pleased with us for Jesus' sake, and in him pacified towards us for all that we have done, we would confess and deplore our manifold provocations of thy gracious Spirit. O thou most gracious Spirit, we have met thy advances of love with rebellious opposition, and spurned thee by indifference and sin, and driven thee away by backsliding; and what can we say? We have no excuse; we feel that we love sin, and justly mightest thou leave us under its power, justly forsake us this day, and leave us to feel all the misery of a communion sabbath that brings not with it thy refreshing and enlivening presence. But we beseech thee to acknowledge us in this our confession. We can use no plea save that which thou stirrest us up to employ, that Jesus died for us; pardon us for his sake, and be graciously present with us this day. O depart not from us, but accompany all the means of grace this day with thy blessing, that we may be refreshed. O most gracious God, we adore thee for this day. We praise thee for the blood of Jesus which cleanseth from all sin. We glorify thee for his finished work of atonement and righteousness, and for his ceaseless work of all-prevailing intercession. What love to put in our power so prevailing a plea! We would feel that we need none other. We would discharge every other plea whatsoever, save that which springs from the blood of Jesus and his spotless righteousness. We would feel that in having this, we have all that we need, and on the ground of this all-sufficient plea would we plead that this day, thy word, thy ordinances, and thy providence may work together for our spiritual advancement, our everlasting welfare, and thy glory. Gracious Father, we implore thy holy keeping and guidance while in the house of prayer. If thy presence go not with us, carry us not up. But do thou carry us up, sustained by thy presence, and purified by thy Spirit, according to the purification of the sanctuary. Carry us up, relying by a living faith on the blood of Jesus, humbled to the dust under the united sense of thy love and our unworthiness; prepared to testify heartily before thee, before angels, before thy people, and before the world, that we have embraced Jesus, that we are resting steadfastly on him, and that we find him indeed precious to our souls. For this purpose strengthen, we pray thee, all our graces. Pour out upon us the grace of repentance. Let our hearts be broken and made contrite by beholding thy love in sparing not thine own Son; work in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power; elevate our love, draw it out into lively exercise, and do thou, the God of hope, fill us with hope and eager expectation, that we shall assuredly find thy table and its exercises sweet to our souls. We would unite our hearts to pray for thy servant, our pastor, whom thou hast set to preside this day over the service, and for all whom thou mayest send to help him in the work. O Lord, enlarge the heart of thy ministering servant; give him to feel the unutterable preciousness of Christ, and to be concerned for the salvation of precious souls. Bring him up fully fraught with the spirit of the gospel, and rejoicing that he is commissioned to offer Jesus freely to us all. Let him be strengthened to set a full Christ before empty sinners, and helped to plead with them from the heart that they will accept of his salvation. In prayer be his mouth. Bring his petitions, his confessions, his thanksgivings from a full heart; and give us, thy servants, grace indeed from the heart to join in the public prayer. We pray for like mercy to those who are brought this day to assist thy servant, our pastor, in the work of dispensing the word and bread of life. May the Holy Spirit be shed abroad abundantly on them, and by them speak to us, and give us hearts to receive their message. Bless thy servants in the eldership; give them much of thy countenance, may thy Spirit hold them up, and may they find it sweet to deal forth the bread of life to thy people. Remember in mercy our fellow-worshippers. Strengthen such as are rejoicing to maintain their confidence in Christ, and may they indeed find Jesus all their salvation. Be gracious to any that are suffering from the oppression of spiritual darkness. Gracious God, dissipate the clouds of their sorrow, and reveal Christ to them, and convince them that thou art ready and waiting to be gracious to them for his sake. Be gracious to thy aged people, and to the young of the flock. May we all this day, severally and together, enjoy Christ. Be in the midst of all the worshipping congregations of thy people. Preside in them by the presence of thy Spirit. May many souls this day be brought to embrace Jesus; may many this day be edified by him. May thy name be hallowed, thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. O go forth with the preached gospel, and give the missionaries of the cross a mouth and wisdom to preach Christ crucified, so as to extend the boundaries of the Redeemer's kingdom, and multiply the number of his redeemed. O God, we again implore the grace of thy Spirit to keep our heart and mind this day in thy fear, and to enable us in all our exercises and services to glorify thee; and the glory shall be to thee the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, through Jesus Christ, now and for ever. Amen.

~~~~~ EVENING.

COMMUNION SABBATH.

O Lord, we would again approach unto thy throne of grace, in the name of Jesus, to glorify thee for all the loving-kindness which thou hast vouchsafed to us this day. We have been in thy house, and there have we seen thy goings in thy sanctuary. We have been at thy table, and there have tasted the gladness wherewith thou makest glad the hearts of thy chosen. O most gracious God, we would acknowledge the greatness of the honour conferred upon us; that we, so unworthy, so guilty, so polluted, should be permitted to engage in a service so holy and exalted as that of showing forth the death of Jesus Christ. Glory be to thy holy name that thou hast spared us this day in peace, and crowned us with manifold blessings. Surely thou mightest have testified against us, and caused thine hot anger to burn against us because of our manifold sins. But thou hast been gracious for Jesus' sake. We are spared because he was not spared. We have enjoyed mercy and blessing because he has pleaded for us on the ground of his own righteousness. O most holy and most merciful Father, draw forth our hearts in thanksgivings, and while we feel thy love awakening our gratitude, help us to feel it binding on our hearts the obligations of duty. Help us from this day and forward to obey as thy children, not from a slavish fear of thy wrath as manifested against all disobedience and unrighteousness of men, but from the confiding love of reconciled children, who tremble indeed at thy judgments, but love thy commandments. Help us to count thy commandments not grievous, but righteous and holy. May we feel the yoke of Christ easy, his burden light, and feel that his love constraineth us to live no longer as they do who are dead in sin, but as those who are alive from the dead. Blessed Lord, permit us not to forget that we have this day at thy table renewed our obligations to be thine. May the memory of these be deeply engraven on our heart; may the weight of them be on the conscience, and while we feel constrained by the love of Jesus to yield to them, do thou supply ever-renewed strength to aid us in our obedience. Having tasted this day how sweet are the joys that Christ vouchsafes to the soul which seeketh him, and how pure are the pleasures that are administered by the Spirit of all grace, may we henceforth regard the loftiest joys of the world as insipid, and turn from its pleasures as below the notice of God's children. Again, we have set to our seal that thou art true, that Christ is precious, that we are bound to holiness. Graciously forbid that we should backslide. Confirm us in the possession of Christ's constraining love, that love which moveth in our hearts, the love which filleth the law. We lament that we have so often vowed, and been found unfaithful. Our past backslidings testify against us, and wert thou to deal with us as we deserve, thou wouldst shut us out from Christ, and deny us the grace of thy Spirit. But do thou heal our ackslidings. Put away all iniquity from us, receive us graciously, and love us freely, and put us in thy good and holy way, and keep us in it. O gracious God, we trust we have this day felt the preciousness of the broken and the ontrite heart. It is thy gift and thy workmanship, and we pray thee to bestow it on us yet more and more. Humbly would we entreat thee to take away from us the hard and stony heart that is in our flesh, and give us an heart of flesh. O fulfil thy gracious promise to us. We would earnestly beseech thee to do as thou hast said, and put thy Spirit within us, and teach us to walk in thy statutes and do them. O that we may henceforth carry along with us the influence of this communion sabbath. May we long retain the memory of its sweetness, and seek by increasing holiness to fit ourselves the more for the eternal sabbath of communion with thee in glory. Gracious Lord, we would implore thee to accept of our thanksgivings for all the grace we have this day enjoyed. All our enjoyment, our rest in thy faithful promises, our satisfaction in thy ordinances, our views of Jesus and his cross, our exercise of faith, all, all, have come from thee, and to thee do we owe the acknowledgment. Let us not spend our gratitude in mere expression of words. Let it abide with us, and constrain us to live so as to manifest our thankfulness. We regret that our highest privileges here below so soon terminate, that our sweetest enjoyment is clogged by much carnality of feeling, and speedily closed by weariness of the flesh. Stir up our desires more actively, and lead us by deeper experience of the short-lived seasons of spiritual enjoyment here, to long the more ardently for that kingdom of glory where communion comes not to a close, where the weariness of the flesh is not felt. We bless thee for the aid vouchsafed to thy servants in the ministry who this day dispensed the ordinance of the Lord's Supper amongst us. In their services and in ours thou hast seen many sins, and much that thy pure eye cannot regard without being offended. Deal mercifully with us in respect of these sins. Remember them no more. Do thou, the good Lord, pardon us, and wash us from our filth and guilt in atoning blood and by sanctifying grace. May thy servants who have this day dealt forth to us the bread of life be themselves nourished. We thank thee in their behalf that they were strengthened for the work, and we thank thee in our own behalf that our eyes this day beheld our teachers. We bless thee for all the grace manifested to our fellow-worshippers. Thou hast been gracious to them. If any have been enlightened, thou hast opened their eyes to see Jesus, and turned their hearts to him. If any have rejoiced, thou hast awakened their joy. If any have found peace in resting on the blood of Jesus, thou of thy mercy hast made them to acknowledge and embrace its sufficiency. Be pleased, Lord, to accept our thanksgivings in their behalf. Visit in thy mercy such as have come to thy table mourning, and have departed with a heavy heart. Convince them that the cause of their wretchedness is in themselves; that they are looking to their own sinful emptiness, and putting away Jesus from them. Bring them to him, and make them willing to embrace him as all-sufficient for them. And pardon, of thy mercy, such as have profaned the ordinance of the Supper. O lead us all to self-examination, that we may know how we have attended on it. Lay us not to rest, till we come to the blood of Jesus. Wash us from all the guilt of this day in that fountain, and clothe us in the robe of his righteousness, that we may lie down with confidence of thy forgiving grace. Follow with thy blessing the preaching of the gospel. O speed on the happy time when the pleasure and enjoyment of a communion sabbath shall be open not to one congregation here and there, but when all the earth shall enjoy the sabbath, even as all shall see the salvation of our God. Let Christ triumph this day among Jews and Gentiles. May the truth of his gospel have free course and be glorified. Hasten the triumph of the latter-day glory. And for this purpose pour out more largely of the spirit of revival at home, and grant a missionary spirit to us all, that we may give thee no rest till both among Jews and Gentiles the name of Jesus be known and published to the ends of the earth. Keep us graciously in thy fear, blot out our manifold sins, and answer these, our supplications, in peace, for Jesus sake. Amen.

TO BE USED BY A FAMILY WHEN VISITED WITH SICKNESS.

O Lord our God, we desire to unite in blessing thee for the freedom of approach which we enjoy at all times to the throne of grace, through the atoning sacrifice of our merciful Redeemer; and we bless thee not only for the throne of grace, but also for the many encouragements we have through thy goodness to draw near in making known our requests. We give thee thanks, O God, that whilst thou dost permit us to call on thy name at all times, and in all circumstances, thou givest us special invitation to draw nigh in the season of distress, in saying, Call upon me in the day of trouble. And this, O most merciful God, is with us of this household a day of trouble, seeing thou art visiting us by the disease thou hast brought on one of our number. O God, we would say thy hand is upon us, thy hand is upon us, for we know that affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground, and that it is the Lord who maketh sore, and bindeth up; who woundeth, and whose hands again make whole. It is thy prerogative alone, O God, to say, See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no God with me; I kill and I make alive, I wound and I heal, neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. O Lord, seeing we are so powerfully reminded by the testimony of thine own oracles that making sore and binding up, that the sending of disease and the removing it again, pertain unto thee and to no other, may we ever be prepared by thy grace to submit with all readiness to every chastisement by which thou mayest see fit to visit us. We especially entreat, in the present instance, that thy will as expressed in the visitation under which we are suffering at this time, may be affectionately accepted by us all as the rule of our duty. Whatever may be the issue of this trouble to our dear friend, as it respects life or death, may it issue in bringing us all nearer to the cross of him who died to save the perishing, and in preparing us to meet him with joy when he appears in the glory of his Father at the judgment-day. O Lord, have mercy upon us all in the trying circumstances in which we are placed, and as our several needs require. We rejoice to place ourselves in thy hands, for thou art acquainted with all our wants, and it is by thee alone they can be supplied. According to thy riches in grace do thou supply all that is lacking in us out of the abundant and inexhaustible fullness that is treasured up in our ever-blessed Redeemer. Visit especially, in the greatness of thy compassion, this afflicted one, and if consistent with thy heavenly will restore him [her] to health and strength, and other days of usefulness in the world. Rebuke the distemper which confines him [her] to the bed of languishing. Say unto him [her], O our Saviour, as thou didst of old to many who were diseased, Arise, thy sins are forgiven thee, take up thy bed and walk. If such mercy is yet in store for him [her] may he [she] never forget thy kindness and love; may he [she] never forget to praise thee for thine abundant goodness. May the language of all his [her] acting manifestly be, What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? But, O God, if death be in the cup; if indeed this sickness be unto death prepare him [her] for going hence. Reveal thyself in mercy to his [her] soul, and give him [her] to enjoy the comfort of knowing that he [she] possesses an interest in thy love which is better than life. Quicken his [her] apprehensions with regard to all that pertains to salvation, so that every doubt and all distracting fear may be removed from his [her] mind, and thus in the pure light of Jehovah he [she] shall see light. O thou Shepherd of Israel, compass him [her] meanwhile as with a shield, and when he [she] walks through the valley of the shadow of death, be thou with him [her] to comfort him [her] by thy rod and thy staff, and to conduct him [her] safely to the mansions of everlasting bliss in the kingdom of heaven. Impart to him [her] every consolation of which he [she] stands in need, and say in mercy to his [her] soul, Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine: when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee: for I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour. Heavenly Father, do thou listen to the voice of our supplications in behalf of our afflicted friend, and listen when we supplicate thee in our own behalf. We cannot tell how soon we may be laid prostrate on the bed of disease and of death. We know that our foundation is in the dust, and that we are crushed before the moth. O that this important truth were habitually remembered by us, and that we were also habitually to remember how it is that we have become so frail; how it is that we are so much exposed to disease, and so certainly exposed to the stroke of death. Lord, thou hast taught us in thy holy word to look for this root of bitterness in sin, for by sin death hath entered into the world. We all do fade as a leaf, because our iniquities like the wind have taken us away. Enable us therefore to look constantly to him who can take away sin itself; who can cleanse us from all our pollutions, and clothe us in those robes which have been made white in the blood of the eternal covenant. O may we put on Christ as we are entreated to do, and then we shall not be hurt of the second death. Under the shadow of his wings we shall find protection from every enemy, and at last we shall enter in safety that happy place where there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. Lord, help us by the guiding influences of thy Holy Spirit to take comfort, amid all our troubles and afflictions, from these happy prospects. And to thee the Father, to thee the Son, to thee the Holy Ghost, be everlasting praise, world without end. Amen.

AFTER RECOVERY FROM SICKNESS.

O Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth; thou hast set thy glory above the heavens. When we contemplate the works of thy hands, and consider the magnificence of all that thou hast created, well may we say, What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him? Yet thou condescendest to notice our guilty and fallen race, and nothing can occur to them without thy permission and appointment. The hairs of our heads are all numbered, and not even a sparrow can fall to the ground without our heavenly Father. Health, the greatest of temporal blessings, is thy gift; and sickness proceeds from thee, who art a gracious and merciful Father. Thou hast appointed to the children of men their lot here below, and thou hast said to them, Thus far shall ye go and no farther. None can go from thy Spirit, or flee from thy presence; none can escape thine observation, or avoid the wounds of those arrows which thou aimest. Blessed God, we this day appear before thee to take a review of our past life, and to pour out the feelings of grateful hearts in thy presence. The blessing of health was long enjoyed by us, but how little did we value it, and how sinfully and uselessly was it employed. It only led to the pleasures of the world; it was thoughtlessly wasted in securing this world's good things, which perish in the using; and in those gratifications and amusements which as they fly away leave their sting behind them. This precious blessing has been made subject to vanity, and has become the instrument of sin, instead of being the means of holy living and of promoting thy glory. In consequence of the enjoyment of health, we were living in false security, unmindful of thee our God, and of the awful eternity that is before us: but thou hast been pleased to visit us with sickness, and to show us the value of the blessing which we had so grossly abused.

The sorrows of death compassed us, and the pains of hell got hold on us, we found trouble and sorrow. It was then we said, In the cutting off of our days we shall go to the gates of the grave: we are deprived of the residue of our years. We said we shall not see the Lord, even the Lord, in the land of the living; we shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world. But in the day of our trouble and calamity we called upon thee the Lord, and thou heardest our cry, and hast sent to us deliverance. Thou hast rebuked our distemper, so that it has fled from us, and by thy gracious dealings with us we still walk before thee in the land of the living. Now would we offer the tribute of thanksgiving and praise for all thy mercy and goodness, which we have experienced in these last days. Thou art the Physician of soul and of body, and it is thou who hast directed the physician's skill to those means by which the power of the disease raging in our body was subdued, and thou hast given thy blessing to the medicines which were employed, so that the sickness under which we laboured was prevented from drinking up the springs of life. We would desire to praise the Lord, to give thanks to his name, to exalt him before the people, and to celebrate his loving-kindness in the congregation of his saints. The Lord bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up. We will sing to the Lord, and talk of all his wondrous works. We are not worthy of the least of all thy mercies. Make us, O Lord, to see our former vileness in thy sight, and teach us how we may best devote our preserved lives to thy service. We would desire to live to thy praise, we would make known to others thy truth. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ would we give thanks to thee our heavenly Father; and every blessing that we need would we desire to receive through him who is the only channel of communication between heaven and earth. May we never forget thy loving-kindness, or any of the benefits which thou hast so graciously conferred; for thou hast healed our diseases, and redeemed our lives from destruction. The vows which we have made on a sick bed, help us faithfully to pay. On former occasions we have vowed, but have not paid; we have made good resolutions, and have failed to carry them into effect; we have made professions of amendment, but they have passed away unheeded as the morning cloud or the early dew. But now, in thy strength, we earnestly desire to pay our vows, and to keep our resolutions, and to practise what we have professed. May we now be enabled to produce in our conduct and conversation the peaceable fruits of righteousness, and may we be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. Save us from the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of our hearts, and may we never again be found in the paths of folly and of sin. We recommend to thy pity and compassion all who are in sickness and distress. Draw near to them in the hour of trouble, and visit them with thy salvation. May those who are appointed to live be speedily restored to wonted health and strength; and for this purpose bless all the means which may be used for accomplishing that end, and prepare the dying for their great and awful change. May the living lay to heart this solemn truth, that death awaits them, and no one can tell how soon this summons may be put into their hands. O that this thought may bring men to sober reflection, and may it lead them to seek their refuge in the gospel. May Christ be discovered as an all-sufficient Saviour. May the period soon come when Jew and Gentile shall know Christ, and be found in him, and O that true religion may more and more prevail. Bless the families of our land, and may family religion greatly abound. May the head of the house be also its priest. These, our thanksgivings and prayers, we now present; may the sins of our holy services be forgiven, and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

APPROPRIATE TO THE DEATH OF A RELATIVE OR FRIEND.

O God, in this, the time of our bereavement and distress, we betake ourselves to thee. Receive us graciously, and hearken to our feeble but imploring cry. For wise and holy reasons thou hast taken from us the desire of our eyes with a stroke. Dispose us to say with meek and thankful submission to thy will, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. We acknowledge that this dispensation is righteous and merciful on thy part; O may it be rightly understood, and practically applied on ours. May it show us the evil of sin, with which sickness, and suffering, and death, are all so intimately connected. May it show us the insufficiency of the creature, and the need we have of a better than an earthly portion. May it show us the value of the Saviour, and the infinite importance of having a personal and vital interest in him. O God, be thou thyself our reconciled Father. Protect us by thy power, and guide us by thy counsel. Like as a father pitieth his children, so do thou pity us. Amidst all the losses and afflictions of our lives may we have good reason to believe that thou art treating us with paternal care, that thou art training us by paternal discipline; and in the issue of all, may each one of us have cause to say, It is good for me that I was afflicted. Meanwhile, O God, we feel, may we also bear, the rod. By this bereaving stroke may we be warned and admonished. Yet, Abba, Father, console us under it. O give us the comfort of thine exceeding great and precious promises. Many of thy servants hast thou cheered in circumstances similar to ours, and even on the gloomy grave thy gospel has shed celestial light. We thank thee for that blessed gospel. We thank thee for the Saviour it sets forth. We thank thee for the blessings it offers and reveals. Christ has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light; and them that sleep in Jesus wilt thou, O God, bring with thee. Meekly and thankfully, therefore, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, may we leave in thine everlasting arms our pious friends departed, rejoicing to believe that their souls are at rest in paradise, and that hereafter, in their case, that which is sown in weakness, shall be raised in power; that which is sown in corruption, shall be raised in glory; that which is sown a natural body, shall be raised a spiritual body: and so shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory! The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God who giveth to his saints the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. O may we all be prepared to die. May each of us have good cause to say, For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. And may the departure of relatives and friends powerfully and practically remind us that time is passing away, that eternity is rushing on, and that, when a few years are come, we shall all have left the world in which, amidst the ravages of death, our lives have heretofore been lengthened out. God of comfort, console our hearts; God of holiness, sanctify our souls; Father of mercies, hear our prayers: and all through the merits of thy Son Jesus Christ, who died for sinners and rose again, and to whom be ascribed blessing and honour for ever and ever. Amen.

ON THE FUNERAL-DAY OF A FRIEND OR A MEMBER OF THE FAMILY.

O Almighty Parent of the universe, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we, thy frail, guilty, erring creatures would prostrate ourselves before thee with the most profound humility and holy awe. We feel our unworthiness to approach the Divine Majesty, but thou in mercy encouragest us to draw near, and through the gracious Mediator to come to thy throne of grace with the confidence of children to a father. There we are privileged to unbosom and unpurthen our souls; there we may implore of thee mercy to pardon and grace to help us. On this day of heaviness to this household, we would recognise and bow before thee as the righteous Sovereign of the universe, as the uncontrolled Disposer of all events. Thou dost according to thy will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth. Thou pullest down one, and thou raisest up another; thou woundest, and healest; thou killest, and makest alive. With thee are the issues of life and of death, none can stay thy hand, nor may any say to thee, What dost thou? While we acknowledge thy absolute right to do with us and to us as thou, Lord, seest fit, we know and are persuaded that thou reignest in righteousness, that thou dost all things wisely and well, and that however trying thy dispensations, and however inscrutable thy dealings may be, yet justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne, mercy and truth go before thy face.

Thou, O righteous Father, hast been pleased in thine adorable sovereignty to take away from us the desire of our eyes with a stroke, to rob us of one who was dear to our souls; yet, Lord, let us not refuse to be comforted, prevent us from murmuring and repining under thy chastening rod. Teach us to acquiesce in thy righteous dealings, help us in the sincerity of our hearts to say, The will of the Lord be done; the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. This lesson, O Lord, we feel is very hard to learn. We cling to what is created, we cleave to the dust, we feel reluctant to part with the objects of our affection even at thy call. Do thou, gracious God, thyself teach us; teach us heartfelt submission, teach us holy resignation, teach us in patience to possess our souls. Lord, prevent us from fainting when we are rebuked of thee. But, O Lord, while we lament our present bereavement, let us never lose sight of the cause of all our woes. We would ever bear in mind that it is sin that has robbed us of thy favour, robbed us of thine image, and robbed us of those friendships that sweeten the cup of life; and, therefore, when thou dost thus contend with us, and afflict us, we will justify thee in thy dealings, and clear thee when thou judgest and tryest us. And, O Lord, while we bewail sin's ravages, enable us to lament sin's guilt and defilement; soften these hard hearts of ours; give us, each one, to feel the plagues of his own heart; open up within us the sources of godly sorrow, that we may weep, and lament, and be in bitterness because of sin, of our own sins. Take away, we beseech thee, the guilt of sin through the blood of atonement, deliver from the love and the power of sin by the effectual working of thy Holy Spirit.

What cause have we, O Lord, to rejoice and be thankful, that while we mourn for sin, and mourn on account of personal distress and domestic bereavements, we are not left to mourn like those who have no hope, left to mourn in despair. This might have been our portion, and must, O holy Father, have been our portion, hadst thou dealt with us after our sins, or rewarded us according to our iniquities. We might have been justly allowed to eat the fruit of our doings without deliverance, without hope, to live in misery, and to die in misery. We might have been permitted to regard death as the extinction of our being, or the harbinger of woe unutterable; to look to the grave as man's eternal resting-place, or the threshold to the abode of misery. But blessed, for ever blessed be thy name, we are not left to die in our sins, to perish without a remedy. Thou hast looked upon us and pitied us. Thou hast sent the Son of thy love to seek and save that which was lost, to redeem our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling; and by his precious blood, by his all-perfect righteousness, by his life and by his death, to bring salvation and consolation near to us, to restore our lost privileges, and our forfeited hopes. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift! What is man that thou takest knowledge of him! And we would adore and bless thee, O gracious God, for the revelation of mercy, the gospel of salvation, the words of eternal life.

O what precious promises, what soothing consolations, what glorious prospects, what ennobling hopes are ours through the mediation of thine own Son, as made known to us in the gospel of peace! Now we know that there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus; now we know that nothing, neither earth, nor hell, neither life, nor death, can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus; now we know that the sting of death is taken away, that the dominion of the grave is overthrown; now life and immortality are brought to light; now we are begotten to the lively hope of an inheritance that is incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. O thou Spirit of all grace and consolation, thou divine Comforter, do thou in this day of tribulation, when our spirits are disquieted and cast down, draw near thyself to comfort us, bring the promises of thy word to bear on our circumstances, give us by faith to lay hold on them, to meditate, to feed upon them; give us to feel their soothing influence, their consoling power, their sustaining efficacy. We do find that man's help is vain in those dark and trying hours of life, do thou thyself uphold us; we do find that the consolations of the world reach not the wounded spirit with effect, do thou thyself refresh and comfort us with thine own consolations; Lord, withdraw us from the stream, carry us up to the fountain! When we are ready to faint in our minds, help us to consider him who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself.

We give thee thanks, O Lord, for that support thou wast graciously pleased to vouchsafe to the departed during his [her] season of affliction, for the patience that possessed his [her] soul when thy chastening hand was laid upon him [her], for the views that were opened up to him [her] of Christ and his salvation, for the firm hold he [she] was enabled to take of the covenant of peace, and for the calmness, and tranquillity, and good hope with which he [she] was enabled to commend his [her] spirit into the Redeemer's hands. And, Lord, we bless thee for the support and consolation that has been administered to surviving relatives under the blow of thy hand. Though lover and friend thou hast put far from us, and our acquaintance into darkness, yet thou hast enabled us, and thou art now enabling us to sing of mercy in the midst of judgment; to feel that the same hand that lays us low, does indeed hold us up; that while tribulation abounds, the consolations of God do much more abound; and bowing to the sovereignty of Jehovah, yet adoring the wisdom, the rectitude, the mercy, and the love of him that rules on high, thou art enabling us in faith to say, Though the Lord should slay me and mine, yet will I trust in him.

And now, Lord, continue to be gracious to us. Hold us up and support us when we leave the house of mourning, and go forth to perform the last melancholy duty, and commit the mortal remains of our beloved friend to the cold mansion of the dead, the house appointed for all living. Even at the grave's mouth may we be cheered by the gracious declaration of the Redeemer: I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. Because I live ye shall live also. And, O Lord, though we do feel the pang of separation, do thou cheer us by the assured hope that that separation is not for ever; and though the grave has received and conceals from our view the ashes of one whom we loved so tenderly, yet let us be comforted by the thought that such as fall asleep in Jesus, die only to live, and live to die no more; that death's reign and the grave's triumph shall be of short endurance; that this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality, and that the ransomed of the Lord shall return to the Sion above, and shall be for ever with the Lord. And, Lord, help us to improve this trying dispensation of thy providence. O let us who remain remember that there is nothing but a step betwixt us and death; that we too shall soon be numbered with the dead, and that the voice thus addresses us this day, Be ye also ready. Help us then, O gracious God, to be living near to thee, to be living much in heaven. Raise our views and our affections above all the emptinesses of time, and enable us to live by faith in the unseen realities of eternity. O give us to feel that we are nothing but pilgrims and strangers in this world. May we be ever rising above it, and living above it, and may we be habitually looking forward to, and ripening for the rest that remaineth for the people of God. All our appointed time we would be waiting till our change come. And, O Lord, grant that when that solemn period shall arrive, we may have nothing to do but to commit our spirits into the hand of him who gave them, and to fall asleep in Jesus. And now, Lord, we give ourselves wholly up to thee, fit us for every duty, and prepare us for every trial, guide us by thy counsel while here, and afterwards receive us to glory. And to thee the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, one God, we would ascribe everlasting praise. Amen.

ON THE MORNING OF THE MARRIAGE OF A FEMALE MEMBER OF THE FAMILY.

Our Father in heaven, we would together approach thy throne of grace this morning gratefully to acknowledge the multitude of thy mercies, and to implore the continuance of thy loving-kindness. Blessed be thy great name, that in the riches of thy grace thou hast made the amplest provision for our immortal souls. A being guilty and defiled, they do indeed deserve to perish; but thou hast given thy beloved Son to be our Saviour, and hast addressed to us in thy word the overtures of reconciliation. In great condescension hast thou invited us to enter into the nearest and tenderest relation to thyself, and plied us with every consideration most fitted to win our confidence and love. O that thou wouldst effectually persuade us all to make an unreserved surrender of ourselves, and to join ourselves unto thee in a perpetual covenant not to be forgotten. Do thou betrothe us unto thee in righteousness, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies; and let us enjoy the safety, and blessedness, and honour of those to whom it is said, Thy Maker is thy husband, the Lord of hosts is his name.

We would unite, O God, in praising thee for the arrangements which thou hast made for the peace and good order of society, and for the innumerable mercies which thy providence is daily pouring down on the path of our pilgrimage. Do thou help us in all our ways to acknowledge thee, that our steps may be directed aright; and shed abroad thy love in our hearts, that all the events which befall us, and all the changes in our lot may work together for our good. On this day would we in a special manner implore thy blessing. Thou wast pleased to constitute in paradise the conjugal relation; and the celebration of a marriage was graced by thy presence, and honoured by the first miracle of our incarnate Lord. Now, therefore, that we have the prospect of having this ordinance observed amongst ourselves, we entreat that thou wouldst cause thy blessing to rest upon the head of her who is this day to be separated from her brethren, and enrich her with all precious things. Be very gracious to both the parties who are about to be united in wedlock. Let them be helpers of one another's joy, and live together as heirs of the grace of life. Grant that, like Zacharias and Elizabeth, they may be both righteous before the Lord, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless; and that they may so spend the time of their sojourning here below, as to be prepared for spending a blessed eternity together in that more perfect state of being, where they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are all as the angels of God.

Do thou fit us, Lord, for all the duties and trials to which we are respectively called. To the Saviour may we be united by a living faith. To him may we abide faithful even unto death. And so may we live at all times, that when the cry is made, Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him, we may be found with our lamps filled and trimmed, and may be honoured to go in ere the door is shut, and to sit down at the marriage-supper of the Lamb.

Heavenly Father, be our guide and guardian during the day. Take charge of all that concerns us. And O do thou grant that whatever changes come over us, we may enjoy thine unchanging friendship; and that to whatever separations we may be subjected, we may still be united in the bonds of the everlasting covenant. And all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

ON THE BIRTH OF A CHILD.

Let us have grace imparted to us, most holy and most merciful God, that on this occasion we may be enabled to encompass the footstool of thy throne with the sentiments which become thy faithful and grateful worshippers. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and all that is within us bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all our iniquities; who healeth all our diseases; who redeemeth our life from destruction; who crowneth us with loving-kindness and tender mercies. We lift up to thee, O God, our humble tribute of praise for all thy goodness manifested to us on this occasion. Our hearts give thanks to thee for the member thou hast added to our family, and for the life thou hast spared to us. In the midst of dangers which no knowledge of man could detect, and no power of man avert, thou hast watched over us, and brought us through the hour of trial in safety, and permitted us in the land of the living once more to offer up our gratitude to thee. Thou hast delivered our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. Blessed and holy Father, may the impressions which we now feel be permanent, and the thanksgiving we now render be evidenced in our conduct; that we may devote our lives to the service of that God in whom we live, and move, and have our being. May the same kind providence which watched over this family still continue to bless us. And as thou hast heard our prayers, and brought us thus far in peace, hear us again when we implore that she whom thou hast thus mercifully dealt with may continue to experience much of thy favour, till in due time she is raised in strength, more resolutely determined than ever to live not to herself but to the God who redeems her. Take the child, with which thou hast been pleased to bless us, under thine especial care and favour. From this very hour sanctify him [her] to thyself. Amidst all the dangers of youth, amidst all the evils of this world, amidst all the snares and temptations which beset the human path, do thou guide and protect him [her], till having served thee on earth, the purposes of thy providence being accomplished, he [she] may be a member of the household of faith, and meet at last with the whole family of God in heaven. Thou knowest, O God, all that lies between the cradle and the grave; and therefore to thee would we dedicate our offspring, imploring thy favour, which is life; and thy loving-kindness, which is better than life. If thou shalt be pleased in thy wise yet dark providence to take him [her] away ere the years of maturity shall have been reached; if he [she] shall fall a victim to some of the diseases to which the young are exposed, O give us grace to part with those thou hast given in the spirit of Christian resignation. May we hold lightly by all the things of this earth, so that at thy command we may easily let them go, saying in faith, It is the Lord that gives, and the Lord that takes away, and blessed be his holy name. May we who are placed in the important situation of parents, hear thy voice at this hour saying, Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy reward. Grant us grace, O Father, to act as becometh us, so that having trained up our children in the path of Christ, at the great day of accounts we may be enabled to say, Lord, here are we and the children whom thou hast given me. Hear us graciously, thou hearer of prayer, and grant us an answer in peace, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOR THE USE OF PARENTS ABOUT TO DEDICATE A CHILD TO GOD IN BAPTISM.

Help us, Almighty Father, to approach thee on this occasion with those feelings of mind with which thy worshippers should be filled. To thee, O God, do we lift up our souls, imploring that thou wouldst graciously listen to our requests, and for the sake of thy Son grant us an answer in peace.

Blessed be thy great name for the institution of the ordinance of the gospel, whereby thou art instructing the people in the things which concern eternity. We praise thee for the appointment of the sacraments, which thou hast constituted as seals to the covenant thou hast made with us through Jesus Christ. We praise thee for thy goodness in permitting us to engage in these ordinances and to enjoy these sacraments; and we implore that thou wouldst make them to us the power of God and the wisdom of God for the salvation of our souls.

In a very especial manner would we bless thee that thou art affording to us the privilege of the ordinance of baptism, therein to dedicate our offspring to thee. Help us, O Lord, to entertain those sentiments, and O form those resolutions and cherish those feelings which become Christian parents on an occasion so solemn and interesting. Give us proper and spiritual views of the nature of the ordinance, and through the symbols and signs employed, help us to discern the blood of Christ shed for the remission of sins, and the influences of the Holy Spirit, which alone can cleanse us from all our iniquities. And when we witness the water sprinkled, may we think of the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, and seek with our whole heart and soul that inward purification which washing therein can alone give.

We are now about to dedicate our child to thee. It was from the Lord we received him [her], and in thus blessing us with offspring we would desire to hear thy voice as if speaking to us in this act of thy providence, and saying, Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy reward. Thou art the God of all. The souls of the parents and the souls of the children are thine; we therefore present our child to thee a living sacrifice, and we pray that it may be holy and acceptable. May he [she] be sanctified to thyself, and made one of thine own, even from this very hour. Deeply impressed with a sense of the solemn duty we are about to perform, and of the solemn engagements under which we are about to come, we would seek to be spiritually exercised while thus employed. And as thou hast encouraged us to bring our little children to thee, we would implore, O blessed Saviour, that thou wouldest take up this child in the arms of thy power and grace: put thy hands on him [her] and bless him [her]. May this child be one of the lambs of thy flock, whom thou wilt bear in thine arms, and carry in thy bosom, watching over his [her] welfare through time, protecting from trouble, guarding from temptation, guiding by thy grace and counsel in the ways of truth and holiness, till at last thou bringest him [her] to that place where thou leadest thy people unto fountains of living waters. Oh, let us now be in the Spirit; with humble yet grateful hearts may we engage in this solemn service; and may the prayer we now offer, and the prayer of the church to be offered for us and our offspring, rise up before thee as the incense of sweet-smelling savour. And may our persons and our services be accepted, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOR THE USE OF PARENTS AFTER HAVING DEDICATED A CHILD TO GOD IN BAPTISM.

In the goodness of thy providence, O Lord, we have been permitted to present our child to thee in the sacrament of baptism, and to receive for him [her], the sign of his [her] admission among the members of the visible church: The promise is to us and to our children, and therefore we entreat thee to make good thine ancient covenant, and be the God of believers and of their seed for ever. Oh, hear the prayers which the assembled church offered up on this solemn occasion; and deny not thy grace and blessing to us or our child. We have now solemnly pledged that we will bring him [her] up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, doing all that in us lies to teach him [her] to remember his [her] Creator in the days of his [her] youth. But Oh! thou knowest how feeble and fleeting are the best of human resolutions; how soon the remembrance of vows and promises is forgotten, amidst the business or temptations of life: and therefore our prayer is, that thou wouldst deepen the impressions we presently feel, and strengthen the resolutions we presently form, and help us by thy grace to act in accordance with our solemn engagements. And while we thus endeavour to use the means, do thou, O God, grant thy enriching blessing; pour out thy Spirit upon our seed, and thy blessing upon our offspring, that they may spring up as willows by the water courses, and grow in grace and religious knowledge as they increase in stature and strength.

We would renew our supplications on behalf of the child we have now dedicated to thee in baptism. Known to thee, O God, are all things from the beginning to the end. While we are ignorant of the various events which may befall him [her], between this and the grave, we would desire, in faithful confidence, to commend him [her] to thee and the word of thy grace. Oh, permit not any evil to befall him [her] by the way. Amidst all the troubles incidental to youth, do thou be with him [her]; when he [she] walks through the waters, may they not overwhelm him [her], and through the fires may the flame not kindle against him [her]. Spare him [her] Oh Lord, if it be thy holy will, till in the days of our old age our eyes be gladdened by seeing him [her] walking in the ways of thy commandments. When temptations assail, those temptations to which youth are so peculiarly exposed, be thou his [her] upholder, strengthening against every enemy, raising above every difficulty, and guiding amidst every snare, supporting under every trial, and causing all these to work for good; till having completed all the purposes of thy providence here he [she] may be taken home at last to the mansions of glory. Or, if thou hast determined that his [her] existence here is to be short and fleeting, and that he [she] should be called away in infancy or youth, Oh, may we in that trying hour remember the deep solemnities of this; and then, in the spirit of Christian resignation give him [her] up to thee, the God to whom we have this day devoted him [her]. Hear us, O God, in heaven, thy dwelling-place; and when thou hearest, graciously answer and forgive, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

ON PARTING WITH RELATIONS GOING TO A FOREIGN COUNTRY.

Almighty Father, we give thee thanks and praise that we are permitted to kneel together once more around the family altar, to mingle our voices in praising thee, to listen to thy holy word, and to pour out our hearts before thee. Lord, we pray that we may carry all our griefs and all our joys to thee. In everything enable us by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving to make our requests known unto thee. Help us to look so directly to Jesus, to wash so thoroughly in his blood, to put on so fully the white raiment of his righteousness, that we shall have access with confidence by the faith of him. May there be no distance between us and thee, no cloud between our soul and thy pardoning smile. May we feel that our sins, which are many, are forgiven us. May we feel thine eye resting upon us in love. Help us to spread out all our sorrows, all our anxieties, all our wants before thee in this time of need.

We praise thy holy name for all the mercies thou hast poured down upon us from the first day until now. Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with his benefits, even the God of our salvation. O that our souls might bless thee, and not forget any of thy benefits. The young lions do lack and suffer hunger, but thou hast never suffered us to want any good thing; thou hast given us daily bread; thou hast provided raiment; thou hast made our cup to run over; thou hast made the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice. We thank thee for every domestic blessing we have enjoyed together; for every smile of thy providence upon our dwelling; for all the joys of home and of kindred, thy holy name we praise. How wonderfully thou hast dealt with us! How many families thou hast afflicted from morning to evening, stroke upon stroke, and wave upon wave; but thou hast been very pitiful toward us, as a father pitieth his children.

We thank thee for all the afflictions we have passed through together. It has been good for us that we were afflicted. Before we were afflicted we went astray, but now we have kept thy word. O that we were wise, and would observe these things, that we might understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. But most of all we bless thee, O God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that thou hast blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; that thou hast chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before thee in love. Ah Lord! it would be a painful parting this day if we were to separate for eternity; but we do bless thee for as many of us as thou hast made one in Christ Jesus, and for the sweet assurance that we shall never be separated in the world to come.

We confess the sins we have committed together; we have been most unfaithful to thee and to one another. Ah Lord! we remember this day how little we have cared for one another's souls; how much of our time together we have misspent; how many precious opportunities we have neglected; how little we have warned, entreated, comforted, and exhorted one another; how little we have been like Andrew, who brought his own brother to Jesus; how little we have lived together, as we shall wish we had done when we stand before the great white throne. It would be a righteous thing in thee to make this day of our parting a cloudy and dark day, a day of trouble, and rebuke, and desperate sorrow. But thou hast not dealt with us as we have sinned, neither rewarded us according to our iniquities. As the heaven is high above the earth, so great has been thy mercy toward us. As far as east is from the west, so far hast thou removed our transgressions from us.

Almighty Father, we now commit ourselves and one another into thine everlasting arms, for time and for eternity. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so be thou round about our souls from henceforth and for ever. In an especial manner we now commit to thee those dear ones who are now with us, but soon to be parted from us. Thou didst give them to us at the first; thou hast made them sweet and pleasant to us. We have gone together to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with the multitude that kept holy day. And now, in thine all-ruling providence, thou art calling us to separate, help us to say, The will of the Lord be done; the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. Watch over them, O Lord, by night and by day. When they go from one nation to another, suffer no man to do them wrong; yea, reprove kings for their sakes. Suffer not their foot to be moved. Thou that keepest them will not slumber. Thou keepest Israel, thou dost neither slumber nor sleep. Be thou, O Lord, their keeper. Be thou their shade upon their right hand. Let not the sun smite them by day, nor the moon by night. O Lord, preserve them from all evil. Preserve their souls. Preserve their going out and coming in, from this time forth and even for evermore. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given to Christ, that they all may be one. We pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil.

We pray for those that remain behind, that thou wouldest make up for all thou takest away. Art thou not more to us than ten sons? Thou only art the fountain of living waters. When thou takest away the streams, may we come the more to thee. However far separated, O our Father, grant that we may all be branches of the true vine, filled with the same spirit, bearing the same holy fruit. Far from one another, may we be equally near to thee. May we lean on the same beloved coming up out of this wilderness; may we walk in the same narrow way that leadeth unto life; may we kneel together on the same footstool. Washed in the same precious blood, may we draw near to the same heavenly Father, and obtain the same blessings for ourselves and for one another. Enable us to fill up the short time that remains in the service of Jesus. Help us to confess Jesus before men, that he may confess us before thee, his Father, in heaven. Keep us from denying Christ before men, lest he deny us before thee, his Father, in heaven. And may we all be found at the right hand of Jesus, in that awful day when he shall separate the nations as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. And may we hear him saying to all of us, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. If we are never to meet together on earth any more, grant, O our Father, that we may meet in that day to cast our crowns together at the feet of Jesus, and to sing, Worthy is the Lamb! And now, we commend one another to thee, and to the word of thy grace, which is able to build us up, and to give us an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with our spirits. Amen.

Christ. Enlighten us to see that all blessings, temporal as well as spiritual, are the purchase of his death, and secured by the covenant of grace. May we thus not only enjoy them, but may we enjoy Christ in them. May they continually serve as memorials of his love, and excitements to obedience. And while we own that we have received all we possess out of his pure and undeserved mercy, may we cheerfully contribute of our substance to such ends as are agreeable to his will. Cause us ever to be sensible that wealth is a talent for which we must render a strict account. Lord, forbid that it should harden our hearts, but may we so employ it as to cherish the habits of generosity and benevolence. May the mind that was in Christ be in us, and may we delight in doing good. As we have received freely, may we be enabled to give freely. We know that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and we pray that we may be such. Enable us to make to ourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness. And bless all those with spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, whose temporal wants we seek to relieve. Sanctify their poverty, and sanctify our wealth. And grant that both they and we, when our earthly course is ended, may be admitted to the enjoyment of an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. We ask all for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOR A FAMILY ABOUNDING IN WEALTH.

O Lord, thou art the giver of all good. From thee cometh down every good and perfect gift. It is thine to endow with wealth, or subject to poverty. And in all the allotments of thy providence thou dost what is right. It has pleased thee, in thy great mercy, to bestow upon us, thine undeserving and sinful creatures, a goodly portion of the blessings of this life. May they never be a snare to our souls, nor be suffered to estrange our hearts from thee. O Lord, enable us ever to remember that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. May we continually feel that poverty, with the divine favour, is better than riches where thy blessing is not. Help us to bear in mind how transitory is all earthly good. May we never count it our treasure. May we be independent of it, and ready to part with it at thy call, knowing that riches make to themselves wings and fly away. And while we possess them, enable us, O Lord, to consider through whom we have obtained them, even through the worthiness and intercession of our Lord Jesus

IN A TIME OF POVERTY.

We will bless thee, O Lord, at all times. Thy praise shall be continually in our mouth. Our soul shall make her boast in thee; the humble shall hear thereof and be glad. Truly thou art good to Israel, to such as are of a clean heart. Thou hast been our hope, O Lord God; thou hast been our trust from our youth up. We are as a wonder unto many, but thou art our strong refuge. How wonderful has been the way by which thou hast brought us! Thy way toward us has been in the sea, and thy path in the deep waters; and thy footsteps are not known, yet thou hast us led like a flock. Thou hast done all things well. How amazing has been thy love in visiting our souls, when so many have their good things in this life, and are stumbling over their riches into eternal misery. How shall we praise thee that though thou hast brought us low in the things of this world, thou hast made us rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom. O Lord, we feel it would be no profit if we had gained the whole world and lost our own soul. Teach us to praise thee, that in taking away from us earthly comforts, thou hast given us wine and milk without money and without price, even the sure mercies of David. We thank thee that we feel the forgiveness of sins through the blood of Jesus sweeter than all the world. Thy smile is better to us than the smile of all the creatures. There be many that say, Who will show us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Thou hast put gladness in our hearts, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

We are less than the least of all thy mercies. We are not worthy that thou shouldest come under our roof. We know that thy judgments are right, and that in faithfulness thou hast afflicted us. We are like a beast before thee.

We were shapen in iniquity, and in sin did our mother conceive us. Every particle of matter obeys thy holy will. Every created being, except ourselves and devils, serves thee alone. We only live contrary to thee. Every power of our body and mind is naturally at enmity to thee. We have no right to anything but wrath, condemnation, and curse. Lord, humble us under a sense of our vileness, and teach us to flee to the Lord Jesus Christ. May we be found in him, and in him obtain the children's bread and daily mercies according to our need.

Lord, we remember the grace of the Lord Jesus, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor; may this make us contented to be poor. We remember that he had not where to lay his head; may this make us thankful for our humble lodging. We remember that others ministered to him of their substance; may this take its sting from our poverty. Make us feel it enough for the disciple to be as his master, and enough for the servant to be as his lord.

We pray for near access to thee in this time of need. When thou takest away our broken cisterns, may we come near to the fountain. When thou showest us the emptiness of the creatures, lead us to the fullness of the Creator. When we have little of the bread of this life, may we have much of the bread of God which came down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. May we feel so accepted in the beloved, so completely thine, that we shall have no anxiety for to-morrow. Thou art able to supply our need. Thou art able to strengthen us to bear our want. Thou that didst not spare thine only-begotten Son, wilt thou not with him also freely give us all things? Help us to behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns, yet thou, our heavenly Father, feedest them. Make us feel that in Christ Jesus we are much better than they. Help us to consider the lilies of the field, which toil not, neither do they spin; and yet, even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. O thou who clothest the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, make us feel that thou wilt much rather clothe us though we are of little faith. O our heavenly Father, who lovest us better than we love ourselves, thou knowest that we have need of all these things. Make us seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and let all these things be added unto us. Keep us without carefulness. Make us cast all our care upon thee, for thou carest for us.

O Lord Jesus, we remember in the days of thy flesh that thou hadst compassion on the multitudes because they had nothing to eat, and thou wouldest not send them away fasting lest they should faint by the way. Thou didst take the seven loaves and give thanks, and brakest them, and gavest to the disciples, and they to the multitude, and all did eat, and all were filled. Lord Jesus, thou art the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. Have compassion upon us. Give us this day our daily bread. O Lord, thou didst say by the mouth of thy servant David, that the young lions may lack and suffer hunger, but that they that seek thee shall not want any good thing. Do as thou hast said. Let this promise be yea and amen to us in Christ Jesus. Supply all our need according to thy riches in glory. We look to thee. May we be lightened, and our faces be not ashamed. For thine own honour we plead with thee to fulfil thy word. Will not the world reproach thy great name if thou help us not? Our tears have been our meat day and night, while they say to us continually, Where is thy God? O our Rock, why hast thou forgotten us? Why do we go mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? As with a sword in our bones our enemies reproach us, while they say daily unto us, Where is thy God? O let not our soul be cast down, let it not be disquieted in us; make us hope in thee, for we shall yet praise thee, who art the health of our countenance and our God.

O Lord, do not let us despise thy chastening, neither be weary of thy correction. Help us to inquire into the cause of thy controversy with us. Make us new creatures in Christ Jesus. May we no more be haughty. May we learn Christ, who is meek and lowly in heart. May the Holy Spirit fill every chamber of our heart. Cast out every idol. If we be poor, make us Christ's poor. May Jesus be known in our wellings for a refuge. May we not be like Martha, careful and troubled about many things. May we be like Mary, who chose the good part that could not be taken away from her. The law of thy mouth is better to us than thousands of gold and silver. Keep us near to thee all the day. Satisfy us with thy love at all times. Make us glory in nothing but in the cross of Christ. By it may the world be crucified unto us, and we unto the world. Be thou our Shepherd, and we shall not want. Make us to lie down in green pastures, and lead us beside the still waters. Restore our soul, and cause us to walk in the paths of righteousness, for the sake of thy name. Yea, though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death, make us fear no evil, for thou art with us. Thy rod and thy staff, let them comfort us. Prepare a table before us in the presence of our enemies. Anoint our head with oil. Make our cup to run over. Make goodness and mercy to follow us all the days of our life. And may we dwell in thy house for ever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR A FAMILY SUFFERING FROM THE LOSS OF WORLDLY SUBSTANCE.

The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord. Once we were rich, but now are we poor; and we look to thee, O Lord, in whose hand are all our ways. Teach us submission to thy will. Help us to say with all our heart, Thy will be done. May we be willing to bear the ills of poverty, if thy will be so; and may it be given us to say, I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content. May we not only bear thy will, O Lord, but may we have grace to profit by it. May we be enabled to say, under the loss of worldly substance, When we are judged we are chastened of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world. May we feel that this is not our rest. May we be careful to have our treasure laid up in heaven. And may we be taught to estimate more highly those durable riches that cannot be taken from us. At the same time, Lord, enable us to trust in thee for such things as are necessary for us. Our heavenly Father knoweth what things we have need of. Thou hast said, Bread shall be given, and water shall be sure. Help us to believe the promise, and wait for its accomplishment. May we be contented with what thou art pleased to bestow. Thou hast assured us that all things are ours. Enable us to exercise faith in the promises of the covenant. May we remember the promise, According to your faith so be it unto you. But, O Lord, deliver us from presumption and self-deception. Enable us to examine ourselves whether we be indeed in the faith, whether we are truly united to Christ, and possess a covenant-right to receive out of his fullness. And may we never forget that thou hast united the diligent use of the means with the enjoyment of the end. Enable us to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. May a blessing be upon our basket and our store. We would remember him who fed the thousands with the few loaves and fishes. May he feed us. Enable us to lead a life of faith upon his providence and grace. May we be willing to be dependent upon thee. May we be satisfied to have reason to say, Give us this day our daily bread. And whatever we receive may we have grace to look upon as thy gift for Christ's sake, and be enabled to use it in thy service, and to thy glory. However it may please thee to deal with us, may it ever be our principle and rule to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, knowing all other things shall be added unto us. All we ask is for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THANKSGIVING FOR AN ABUNDANT HARVEST

Lord God Almighty, we desire to draw near to thee with that humility which becomes us as creatures, and with that contrition and self-abasement which becomes us as fallen and guilty creatures. We feel and lament our backwardness to come to a throne of grace. Help, we beseech thee, our infirmities; pour out upon us a spirit of grace and supplications; draw us, and we shall run after thee.

We adore thee as our Creator and Preserver; our constant Benefactor and our Friend. Often, too often, have we been unmindful of thee; and yet, at no time hast thou been forgetful of us. Thy forbearance is indeed wonderful! By hardness and impenitency of heart; by neglect of duty; by sins committed against knowledge, and with an high hand, we have been offending against thee from day to day: and yet all this while thou hast been sparing us alive, and upholding us with thine arm, and waiting to be gracious. Yea, thou hast not only borne with us, and been in no haste to remove us out of our place as cumberers of the ground; but thou hast given us all things richly to enjoy; thou hast led us and fed us all our days; and thy mercies have been new to us at every moment. Never hast thou left thyself without witness, in that thou hast given us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. Year by year thou visitest the earth and waterest it; thou makest it soft with showers, and blessest the springing thereof. Surely as the heavens are high above the earth, so are thy thoughts and thy ways better than ours.

Thou, Lord, keepest covenant and promise, and thy faithfulness hath again been manifested anew. The pastures have been clothed with flocks; the valleys also have been covered over with corn; and the little hills have rejoiced on every side. And now, thou hast crowned the year with thy goodness, and hast poured us out a blessing so abundant, that there hath not been room enough to receive it. Bless the Lord, then, O our souls; and all that is within us, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits; who crowneth us with loving-kindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth our mouth with good things; and who prepareth of his goodness for the poor.

Amid all thy giving, O God, deny us not the blessings of thy salvation. Thine ancient people did eat manna, even angels' food, in the wilderness, and are dead; and all thy temporal bounties notwithstanding, a day, we know, will come when we also will sicken and die; when our breath will depart, and the fashion of our countenance will be changed; and when we shall go the way whence we shall not return. But we rejoice to be told of that bread which cometh down from heaven, of which, if any man eat, he shall live for ever. Lord, evermore give us this bread, even a saving interest in him which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. And whilst we reiterate this our request unto thee for the best of all blessings, even eternal redemption through the merits and atonement of thine own Son, we would draw encouragement alike from thy providence and from thy word. Thou hast no pleasure at all in the death of him that dieth; thy mercy endureth for ever; and thou art far more willing to grant, than we are in sincerity to seek, the benefits of thy Son's mediation. And in the blessed influences of the summer's sun and the summer's dew; in the clouds that drop down fatness upon the pastures of the wilderness; in the rich and laden harvest which, year by year, is seen to move over all the land; and which tells of a beneficence that is never weary, and of a love which is as the love of a parent; in all this we behold the tokens of a good-will, which nothing but perverse carelessness on our part can prevent from showering down upon us all that is necessary to make us wise, and happy, and good for evermore; in all this we perceive the marks of the same bounty, in the exercise of which thou givest grace and glory, and withholdest no good thing from them that love thee. And from these, then, the intimations of thy word, and the ways of thy providence, we would draw encouragement whilst we reiterate our earnest prayer for the blessings of thy salvation. O grant us then the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered; give us of the quickening, and enlightening, and purifying influences of thy Holy Spirit; so shall thy temporal mercies be blessed to us; so shall we receive them with thankful hearts; and so shall the lives which are supported by thy bounty be devoted to thy service. Hear us, O God, in these our petitions; and accept of us also in our thanksgivings, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

IN REFERENCE TO A SCANTY HARVEST.

Most gracious and ever-blessed Lord God, we desire at this time to draw near unto the footstool of thy throne. We would render unto thee that worship which is thy due; and by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, we would make known unto thee our requests. May we remember that angel and archangel stand in thy presence with shaded visage; and that it becometh us to worship reverently towards thy holy place.

Thou, even thou, art God; there is none else; there is no God besides thee. Thou sittest upon the throne of the universe, and doest according to thy pleasure in the armies of heaven, and amongst the inhabitants of this world; none can stay thy hand from working, or say unto thee, What doest thou? Thou formest the light, and createst darkness: thou makest peace, and createst evil: thou the Lord doest all these things.

We would acknowledge and adore thee, at this time, as the bounteous Giver of all good. There is not a comfort we enjoy, not a supply which we receive, not a hope that gilds our path and sustains our heart, but comes from thy gracious hand. The plenteousness brought by the appointed months of harvest is thy yearly gift, and it is because thine hand is opened liberally that the wants of all creatures are supplied. And when, as now, the blessing is less abundant, it still becomes us to bow the head and adore; to say, Shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not receive the evil also?

O God, we believe that thou dost not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men; we believe that amid much apparent confusion thou doest all things wisely and well; we believe that thy chastenings are, all of them, administered in a spirit of parental kindness and love. And we confess that such discipline is not uncalled for. Often have we received thy providential bounties, and rendered thee no thanks; often have we drunk at the stream of thy benefits, without so much as looking up to thee the fountain whence they do all proceed. And such, unhappily, is our tendency away from thee, that wert thou sending us abundance by a law equally fixed with that under which the seasons follow one another with undeviating regularity, it is to be feared that our gratitude would be less than ever, and that thy hand would be less than ever recognised and adored in the supplies which are daily sent us. Not only, therefore, would we adore thy sovereignty; not only would we acknowledge thine unquestionable right to do what thou wilt with thine own; but we would bless thee also for all that discipline by which thou art seeking to impress us with a sense of our entire dependence upon thee, of our helplessness without thee, and of the miserable condition of all those who live and die in a state of alienation from thee.

O give effect, by the demonstration of thy Spirit, to that lesson which, in the course of thy providence, thou art seeking to impress upon our minds and hearts; and grant unto us and unto all the families of this land, that we may be humbled before thee; that we may understand that it is upon the account of our sins that thou art contending with us; and that in all time coming we may constantly set thee before our face, and be habitually thankful for thy mercies, and be found walking in the way of thy commandments. Above all, grant unto us that we may not be involved in the guilt and condemnation of those who are insensible to thy goodness in giving us a Redeemer; who think that they are rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and know not that they are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; but, as befits those who in themselves are undone, and yet have been told of thine unparalleled goodness in providing an all-sufficient Saviour, even thy well-beloved Son, let the language of our hearts be, Thanks unto God for his unspeakable gift.

• We feel, O God, the force and conclusiveness of the inspired argument: He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things; and we are encouraged to pray, Give us this day our daily bread. Also, in a time of scarcity and privation, be thou the friend of the poor. When thy people were faint through hunger in the wilderness, thou didst send them manna; when thy servant, the prophet, fled from the face of a wicked prince, and dwelt by the brook Cherith, thou didst send him supplies by the ministry of the birds of the air; and when the people of Samaria were pressed by grievous famine, thou didst make over to them the abundance of the Syrian camp; and we rejoice to believe that thine ear hath not become heavy, so that thou canst not hear, nor hath thine arm been shortened so that it cannot still save. Put it then, we beseech thee, into the hearts of those who are rich and increased with goods, to devise liberal things towards the poor; and, in regard to these last, do thou impart unto the little that they have the blessing of the widow of Sarepta, that the handful of meal waste not, and that the cruise of oil do not fail.

These, our petitions, O God, are before thee; incline thine ear and hear; for we do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousness, but for thy great mercies. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do: for all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake of Jesus Christ, thy Son and our Saviour. Amen.

FAMILY PRAYER FOR THE LAST DAY OF THE YEAR.

Oh Lord! the ancient of days, whose goings forth have been from of old, even from everlasting, in the beginning hast thou laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed, but thou art the same and thy years shall have no end. What are we, the children of a day, whose life on earth is as a shadow that declineth; whose emblem is the flower of the field; in the morning, it flourisheth and groweth up, but the wind passeth over it, and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more; what are we, that we should approach thine august presence, or lift our suit to the ear of the Eternal? Thou inhabitest eternity; it befits that creatures should approach thee with awe whose breath is in their nostrils.

Oh thou who art the first and the last! on the expiry of another year we prostrate ourselves as a family at thy footstool. Our days are verily as an hand-breadth, season after season passes, and we scarcely note its march. Day succeeds day, night succeeds night, but neither day nor night can assert one trace of stability. The visions of life flit before us like so many dreams of the night; when the morning breaks the illusions have gone, and the hours have gone with them. Oh do thou break in upon our souls with that rousing consciousness of the vanity of time, which shall ensure our hearts for eternity. Do thou teach us, do thou effectively teach us, so to number our days, as to apply our hearts unto wisdom! May the effect of all our lessons of life's insufficiency be to engage our aspirations to God!—to God, the antidote to the vanities of time—to God, the sum of blessedness—to God, the centre of a creature's hopes and felicity—to God, the fountain head of mercies whether for time or for eternity—to God, the only adequate portion for an immortal nature—to God, the covenant God, whose memorial is pity and love to all them that seek him.

Oh Lord! on a review of the past season, we adore that kindness and care which in thy merciful providence have encompassed our path. Thy goodness has been like the morning sun; it has smiled upon us with returning day. Thy faithfulness has been like the gathering twilight, it has encircled us around with the canopy of thy guardian vigilance. If we appeal to the day as our witness, it testifies, God is kind. If we appeal to the night as our witness, it testifies God is kind. If we make our private experience the judge, the testimony is, God is kind. If we make our family experience the judge, the testimony is, God is kind. If we look to the sum of our past life, the moral is, God is kind. If we look to the accumulation of blessings, which crown our present experience, the record, the signal record is, God is kind.

And, heavenly Father, if we have to acknowledge thy temporal benefits, how much more those which are spiritual in their character! Oh! we would not forget that a past season has been rich to us in the means of grace. We would fervently thank thee that during the bygone year a Saviour has been proclaimed to us; that sabbaths have come round to us, rich with the inscription of grace, mercy, and peace; that thy word, thy blessed word, has opened its page to us, replete with hope to the guilty, and fraught with consolation to the wretched; that the good news of salvation have saluted our ear, inviting us to the ascription, Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men. Oh grant, we entreat thee, that our multiplied privileges and opportunities may be fraught with some corresponding improvement. Allow us not to shake off the conviction, that to whom much is given of them shall much be required. Let not an expiring year take its final flight a solemn witness against us of inconsistencies or derelictions, of misimproved opportunities or neglected seasons of grace, of ordinances outraged or gracious appeals frustrated, of convictions stifled or religious advantages defied! Oh grant, that even the eleventh hour of a season's circuit may realize some more favourable experience. May this last day of the year not pass away without such precious participation of gracious influences as shall make it also the crowning day of the season. May thine own blessed Spirit pour out his rich effusions like the latter rain, reinforcing the final promise of the year. May gracious fruits yet be reaped from all the gracious means we have enjoyed, and may a departing season yet carry in its bosom treasures that shall enrich the garner of eternity.

Heavenly Father, we would make confession before thee of all during the expiring year wherein we have offended or done amiss. Sins of omission have prevailed against us; sins of commission, we fear, have prevailed against us. And if we can condescend on many such delinquencies, how much more can thine all-seeing eye detect our many iniquities.

Oh do thou enter not in judgment, but in mercy, into a scrutiny of our character. Do thou lay bare the obliquities of our hearts, that we may learn to hate them ourselves. Do thou search us and try us, and see what is the wicked way that is in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. Do thou grant us in thy mercy to see ourselves in that light in which thine eye views us, and to see salvation in that light in which its own native glories enshrine it.

Oh God! we pray that when the closing day of life shall arrive; we may be found prepared for it. Oh may Christ at that solemn season be our preparation and our hope. May we be encircled with the embrace of his grace and his faithfulness. May our pillow be the bosom of his promises, and when we resign ourselves to the inescapable summons of death, may our rapturous anthem be the inspiring testimony of a Saviour: I am the resurrection and the life.

Heavenly Father, anew we consign us to thy keeping; never leave us, and never forsake us, but let thy goodness and thy mercy follow us, being all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FOR THE FIRST DAY OF THE YEAR.

O Lord, who art the great first cause, thy power gave birth to creation, and thy word ordained the first march of time. On the dawn of a new season we would prostrate ourselves at thy footstool to bespeak the safeguards of thine everlasting arm, and to commend to the riches of thy beneficence the short and uncertain compass of our appointed time upon earth. O may the contemplation of the vanity of the things of life, written on the ceaseless lapse of the seasons, dictate to our minds the attainment of a better and more enduring portion. May God's transcendent excellencies, thine own infinite fullness of good, so pre-eminently contrasting with the shadowy and fallacious character of created joys, determine our aspirations to Jehovah himself as our heritage. Abandoning all unsubstantial and visionary forms of happiness, may we seek it in the supreme centre of good himself; in the joys and consolations of his grace; in the light and love of his countenance; in the unfailing enjoyment of his bliss, in whose presence is fullness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore.

O God, do thou teach us on the recurrence of a season so solemn to us, to dedicate our early vows to thyself. To thy matchless providence we owe it that we are encompassed around with thy benefits. Thou hast caused thy sun this day to shine upon us; thou hast spread the table for our returning wants; thou hast imparted whatever of comfort enters into our domestic lot. O teach our souls to bless thee for thy goodness, and all that is within us to magnify thy name. May our hearts, as the altar on which we would spread our family thank-offering, be taught to shed forth their grateful incense, thine own Spirit supplying the celestial fire which shall kindle the sacrifice. And, Lord, we would hail these immediate benefits as the earnest of thy goodness to us during the season. We implore a continuance of the good gifts of thy providence. May each succeeding day bring us the sunshine of thy beneficence. May thy hand supply our returning wants; give us each day our daily bread. May thy foresight avert impending calamities; deliver us from evil. May thine eye tend our faltering steps; thou who hast led our fathers through their weary pilgrimage, be the guide of their succeeding race. May thy paternal care recruit the current of our domestic joys; do thou who settest men in families, order our family allotments in love. May thy merciful providence encompass us during the day; let not the sun smite us by day. May thy guardian faithfulness overspread us during the night; let not the moon smite us by night. And O, with all thy benefits, bestow upon us the thrice-precious gift of hearts inspired to thy praise. Let thy beneficent providence constantly stir up within us daily and fervent gratitude. Let our home be thus the little sanctuary whence incense and a pure offering shall ascend to thee; ascend to thee on each returning day with the constancy of the morning sacrifice; ascend to thee on each returning night with the acceptance of the evening sacrifice; ascend to thee in every instance as the oblation of pure hearts fervently; and ascend to thee purer and purer till the measured blessings of time give place to the ampler joys of eternity.

O Lord, it may be thy pleasure that, during the course of the year on which we have entered, affliction shall becloud our path. We pray, if consistent with thy will, that it may be otherwise. In the spirit of the prayer of our Lord, we would plead that, if it be possible, such a cup may pass from us. Let us, if it please thee, be taught rather by the gentler methods which thou employest with thy children; let us be swayed by the sweet suasions of the gospel, and by the benign and gracious admonitions of thine own blessed Spirit. But, if thou hast otherwise determined; if the cup may not pass away from us except we drink it, prepare us to say, Thy will be done. Give us grace to exercise patience in proportion to our adversities; to kiss the rod, even while we feel its smart; to bless the scourge, even while we feel the stripe; to glorify thee, even while we endure the fires. And O do thou bestow upon us consolations commensurate with every dark and trying hour. May thine own blessed comforts revive our souls. May thine own sweet mercies pour themselves like some softening balm over every aching sore. May thy paternal endearments flow in upon us a more than antidote to every distressful visitation. May the unspeakable soothings of thy blessed Spirit breathe in upon our hearts, giving them even more gladness than when our wine and our corn increased. And may the fruit, O may the fruit of all be to bring us nearer to God. As we are divorced from creature comforts, may we live closer to the Creator. As the ties of earth are broken, may the ties of heaven be strengthened. As affliction strips us of temporal joys, may we be supplied out of Jehovah's fullness. As vanity overspreads the visions of life, may our retreat more eagerly be to that bosom of divine light and love in which an immortal spirit shall find unalloyed bliss through eternity.

O Lord, we cannot look out on the prospects of a now revolving year, without preferring our most earnest prayer that thou wouldest grant us to make a more adequate improvement of our religious advantages than in times past we have done. We have to confess, with sorrow and shame, that too nearly, in many instances, have we verified the reproach of the parable, Lo, yet this one year more have I sought fruit on this fig-tree, and have found none. O do thou, nevertheless, forbear to execute judgment upon us. Say not in thine indignation, Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? Continue to us rather, in thy great mercy continue to us, the ordinances and opportunities of the gospel. But O, above all, grant that we may more adequately profit by them; may learn more of the grace and excellency of Christ; know more of the heighth, and depth, and length, and breadth of his love; acquire a more thorough conformity to his will; be more imbued with his Spirit; be more entirely moulded to his likeness; wear more of the graces and virtues which adorn his calling. May the close of the year, if we are spared to reach it, witness us in advance of the Christian growth which marked its commencement; witness us more assimilated to the Saviour, and more ripe for the felicities of heaven.

O merciful Father, we consign us unreservedly to thy keeping. Thou hast been our help in times past. Be our portion evermore. And now, let our prayer come before thee with acceptance; let thine ear be attentive to our cry. And do thou to us, and do thou for us, above what we can ask or think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FAMILY PRAYER FOR A BIRTHDAY.

Oh Lord! the Creator of the ends of the earth, the former of our bodies and the Father of our spirits, we approach thy footstool to bless thy name and to lift up our supplications to heaven, thy dwelling-place. Thou hast made us and not we ourselves; we are thy people and the sheep of thy pasture. Thy fostering providence sustained us amid the helplessness of infancy; thy tender guardianship watched our ripening years; thy hand has showered around us the blessings which from day to day have sweetened the path of life, and thy matchless goodness has so crowned the portion of our temporal bliss, that we may fitly adopt the language, Our cup has been made to run over. We would fervently lift the testimony at thy footstool, What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits? Thy loving kindness has been new to us every morning, and thy faithfulness repeated to us every night.

But above all thy other works are the mercies of redemption. When we had forfeited every original hope, thou didst beget us to a new hope. We thank thee, that when we were in our low and lost estate, thine own eye beheld us with a look of pity, and thine own arm grasped us with the embrace of salvation. We bless thee, we unfeignedly bless thee, that the same hour which recorded a Saviour's birth, recorded also the day-spring of our own hopes; that the same anthem which proclaimed, To you is born a Saviour, proclaimed also, Peace on earth, good-will toward men. Oh may the rise of the Sun of righteousness be associated in our experience with the rise of the day-star in our own hearts; may the nativity of the Saviour be reflected in the new birth of a soul begotten to his image. May Christ be formed in our hearts, the hope of glory, and enshrined in our sentiments, and sympathies, and affections; may the holy One of God's anointing be also the beloved One of our souls.

Heavenly Father, on an occasion interesting to us, for it is the day when one of our circle was born into the world, we would approach thee with our special tribute of praise. We bless thee in respect of the individual whose nativity this day commemorates, for all the goodness and mercy of which thy Providence has been the vehicle. We thank thee in respect of us unitedly, for the loving-kindnesses which, as a family, we have received from stage to stage of our history. Our birth has thus been only the first-fruits of a goodness and mercy which has tended us from day to day and from night to night; a goodness which hath extended itself to every period and every province of life; a goodness which multiplying itself as our days advanced, has shed blessing on our domestic sphere, added the bosom of our home, mitigated our sorrows, enhanced our joys, chastened our trials, quickened our hopes, ministered to our wants, refined our pleasures, spread a charm over the past, and gilded with promise every vision of the future. Oh let us feel constrained to set up our Ebenezer, our memorial, our most grateful memorial, Hitherto the Lord hath helped us.

Heavenly Father, when recounting thy goodness in giving us being, we would not forget that there is a second birth, to which, if we are strangers, it had been better for us not to have received being at all. We would recognise our Saviour's language, Except a man be born again, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. Oh may thine own Divine Spirit, who can alone re-fashion a soul in thine image, beget us to that spiritual renovation which shall usher us to newness of life. May thy quickening power implant all those divine graces and instincts, and principles and tastes, which mark the nativity of a child of God. May Christ be formed in our souls. May faith in him, the principle of a new life, quicken all the activities of the inner man. May the love of God be shed abroad in our hearts. May the simplicity of little children in Christ characterise our uniform conduct. With the instincts of little children, may we desire the sincere milk of the Word. With the filial confidence of children may we cry, Abba, Father. With the dutifulness of children, may we grow up to him in all things, who is our Head, even Christ. May we evince ourselves the children of the light and of the day, the children of him who is light and in whom is no darkness at all. May the title, Sons of God, be verified both in our tastes and experience.—In our tastes,—may we be followers of God as dear children. May our souls follow hard after him. May our aspirations lift themselves to that sublime tribute of filial devotedness, As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so pant our souls after thee, O God.—May our experience, again, be that of thy children. Vouchsafe to regard us with a parent's love. May thy Spirit bear witness in unison with our spirits of thy fatherly complacency. May the consolations of God, like a parent's caress of tenderness, gladden our souls. May the delights, the sweet mercies of God, gladden our hearts. May ours be the record on earth, One is our Father, even God. May ours be the patrimony in heaven, to join the general assembly and church of the first born, of which God is the Father and Christ the elder Brother.

Oh God! prolong to us as a family thy kindness and thy care. We have enjoyed them since we had our being, continue them to us till the hour of death; and may eternity be to all of us the ripe birth-day of a still higher, and holier, and happier existence.—Hear us in heaven, thy dwelling-place, and when thou hearest, forgive, and accept, and do, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TO BE USED BY A SAILOR'S FAMILY IN REFERENCE TO HIS ABSENCE.

Eternal God, we bow in reverence before thy throne, and bless thee that we are privileged to have access unto thee; we give thanks unto thy name, O righteous Father, that thou hast not banished us eternally from thy blissful presence, as our rebellion deserved, but hast kindly invited us sinners to approach thee again; welcoming us back to thee through Jesus the one Mediator. Everlasting praise be to God, unceasing thanksgiving to Jehovah, for his love to a guilty world, and for the redemption of his elect people by Christ. Grant, O blessed Lord, that the sound of the gospel salvation which hath reached this earth, may also reach our hearts; and give us a personal and saving interest in the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world. O give us, with all earnestness and without delay, to receive Christ, and with him all the fullness of his purchased and covenant blessings. May each one of us now bending before thee in prayer, and may all connected with us, wherever they be, have the comfortable and well-grounded assurance that we are reconciled to God through Christ the Son of his love. May we know and feel, in our happy experience, that our sins are pardoned, that we are accepted in the Beloved, that we have cast in our lot and portion with God's people, and that we are now all on our journey to Emmanuel's land. O may thy Spirit enlighten, strengthen, guide us; may we each one, day by day, be planting our footsteps more firmly on the Rock of ages; may we be taking refuge in Christ, the only ark of safety, and then, though the waves of trial dash against us, we shall not be moved. Give us, O blessed God, the faith that unites to Jesus, that overcometh this evil world; give us the love that marks out thine own children. Give us the firm and assured hope of eternal joy through him that loved us; keep us in mind, O Lord, that we are pilgrims and strangers here, and that our home, our rest, is above. Thou dost separate us at times from those who are very dear to us; but O may none of us be separated from Jesus at any period of our earthly sojourn. Holy Father, keep from sin those of our number that are absent in the midst of the dangers of the ocean; we cry unto thee to preserve him [them] that is dear to us, that we may see him [them] again in peace and safety; when the storm rages, and he [they] is [are] in fear, do thou calm his [their] troubled mind; and speak peace and say, Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid. Thou art the God of providence, the elements obey thy command, and when the proud waves uplift themselves, thou canst still them again; we commit unto thy care and keeping those whom we love, and who may be now tossed upon the raging billows. Let thy mighty power defend him [them]. Be thou, the eternal God, their refuge, and underneath and around them let thine everlasting arms be. Bring them, O Lord, to their appointed haven, and let his [their] soul rejoice in thee. They see thy wonders in the deep, O let not them be careless and indifferent to thy voice and to thy warnings; may they remember whence deliverance cometh; not by their own might, or wisdom, or power, but from thee, the God of Jacob; and Oh! may they be ready and willing to ascribe unto thee all the glory and the praise. We give thee, O Lord, our most cordial and hearty thanksgiving for thy mercies to us and to all connected with us. Oh give us to live closely to thee, and to testify our gratitude by obedience to thy commands; and we would not forget all those that are on the sea. Preserve, amid the perils of the deep, the father, that his children may rejoice together; the husband, that he may comfort and cherish her that is dear to him; the son, that he may be the support and the stay of his parents. Be also with the stranger, and undertake thou for him.

O Lord, hear us in behalf of all men; especially would we pray for thine own people, and for those of them that are under any trial. Hasten the time when Christ shall reign spiritually with a sceptre of peace over a ransomed and regenerated world. Purify thy church; and now Lord, what wait we for? our hope is in thee. Hear, answer, and accept of us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FOR A FISHERMAN'S FAMILY.

O Lord our God, thou art very great. Thou art the only Creator and sovereign Ruler of all things. At first thou didst command the waters under the heavens to be gathered together into one place, that the dry land might appear. And still art thou mightier than the noise of many waters; yea, than the great waves of the sea, so that thou canst say to it, Hitherto shalt thou come, and no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed. Yet thou art as gracious, as thou art great: and worthy, therefore, to be the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea. Thou hast manifested thy compassion, especially, in providing for us an ark of safety. We had exposed ourselves to the storm of thy wrath; and had it not been for thy mercy our souls should have been utterly wrecked, and even swallowed up in the abyss of hell. But thou hast sent thine own Son from heaven to rescue us from ruin. And we pray thee that, as he is both able and willing to save us, thou wouldst enable each of us to cast ourselves upon him, and to cleave to him as our only and our all-sufficient Saviour. O may we be in him, as Noah was in the ark, that we may be preserved from the dangers that surround us, and may live as the monuments of thy distinguishing mercy, and may be prepared for the new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

We thank thee, Lord, for all the provision thou hast made for us here below. Thou hast created whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas: and over the fishes of the sea hast thou given man dominion that he may use them for his support. Be thou, then, the guardian of all who, in the exercise of their lawful calling, cast angle or spread nets in the sea. May their lives be preserved, and their labours prospered; and may they ever gratefully trace their safety and success to thee. Bestow thy special blessing on the members of this family. May our industry be crowned with success, and our wages be spent in thy fear. Do thou also graciously grant deliverance when any of us are exposed to danger; and sanctify to us any losses and bereavements we may sustain. And O may he who chose for his apostles the fishermen of Galilee, be our friend and Saviour. May he dispose us to follow him as his disciples, and to devote ourselves to his service.

We pray for all that go down to the sea in ships, and do business on the great waters, and see thy works and wonders in the deep. Give them safe and prosperous voyages. And when by thy command the stormy wind is raised, and the boisterous waves are lifted up, so that the mariners are at their wits' end, do thou hear them as they cry to thee, and deliver them out of their distresses, making the storm a calm, and bringing them to their desired haven. And O that those who are delivered would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men. Be peculiarly gracious to any connected with ourselves who may be on the face of the deep. Let us have comfortable tidings of them from time to time. And let them, in due season, be restored to their homes and their friends.

We plead with thee in behalf of all our brethren. Let the net of the gospel be more widely spread, and let it inclose great multitudes. Make our own minister a successful sower of men. May we individually be brought to the Saviour; and having enjoyed his presence and protection during all the troubled voyage of life, be brought at length in safety to the promised land, through his merits and mediation. Amen.

DURING THE VISITATION OF A PESTILENTIAL EPIDEMIC.

O Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. To whom can we go but unto thee, thou hast the words of eternal life? Give us nearer access to thee than ever we enjoyed before. From the end of the earth, will we cry unto thee. When our heart is overwhelmed, lead us to the rock that is higher than we. We have ran with the footmen, and they have wearied us, but now thou art calling us to contend with horses. In the land of peace, wherein we trusted, we have been wearied, but now thou bringest us to the swellings of Jordan. Oh grant, that we may trust in thee, and feel thee a present help in trouble.

O Lord, being afflicted, we pray; we set our faces to seek thee in this day of trouble, and rebuke, and blasphemy. We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly; and have rebelled even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments. O Lord, to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee. To thee our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against thee. O Lord, thou hast watched upon the evil and brought it upon us.

Humble each of us now kneeling before thee, under a sense of our own guilt and deformity in thy sight. In our own heart do thou reveal to us the cause of thy judgments. Alas, we confess, that in every one of us there is as much sin as may justly be the cause of this great evil that has come upon us. How long we lived without thee in the world, serving diverse lusts and pleasures; living in malice and envy, hated and hating one another. Our sins, as we are in ourselves, appear like an infinite deluge, or mountains over our heads. As a fountain casteth out her waters, so our heart casteth out its wickedness. Everything in which our heart is concerned is polluted. If thou wert to deal with us according to our sin, thou wouldst send the breath of the pestilence into our dwellings, and sweep us away with the besom of destruction. Our flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and we are afraid of thy judgments. Thou turnest man to destruction, and sayest, Return ye children of men. Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as asleep; they are like the grass which groweth up; in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withered. For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance. Why hast thou spared us hitherto, O Lord? We are no better than others. Lord, teach us so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. We pray that this time of darkness may lead us to cleave closer to the Lord Jesus Christ. O thou that art the hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, like rivers of waters in a dry place, and the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, hide us deeper in thyself. Cause us to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning, for in thee do we trust. Deliver us, O Lord, from our enemies; we flee to thee to hide us. O grant, in this time of calamity, when so many are taken suddenly to their great account, that we may be found in Christ. May the Lord be all our righteousness. May Jesus be our present and eternal all.

May we be willing to be hell-deserving in ourselves, and heaven-deserving in Christ alone. Love us freely; be like the dew upon our souls. May we be kept in perfect peace, our minds being stayed on thee, because we trust in thee. Make us feel that the same hand that wields the pestilence was nailed to the accursed tree for us. Cover us with thy feathers, and under thy wings make us trust. Make thy truth our shield and buckler; do not let us be afraid of the terror by night, nor of the arrow that flieth by day, nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. When a thousand fall at our side, and ten-thousand at our right hand, may it not come nigh us. Be thou our refuge, then there shall no evil befall us, neither shall any plague come near our dwelling.

We pray that we may improve by this solemn visitation. May afflicting time be quickening time. Lord, increase our faith; Lord, teach us to pray. Lord, what change wouldest thou have wrought in us? Cleanse us from secret faults, keep us back from presumptuous sins. Wean us from this world; may our conversation be in heaven. Make us willing to be sick and willing to be well; willing to live and willing to die; willing to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.

Most merciful Father, we pray for thine own children who are sick, that thou wilt be their physician; make all their bed to them in their sickness. Give them peace and joy in believing; give them an anchor within the veil. Make them more than conquerors through him that loved them. O God, who hast no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that they should turn and live, spare unconverted souls who are now trembling on the brink of eternity, Lord, turn their hard hearts, turn their dying eyes to Jesus lifted up to save sinners. Give them to look as the dying thief looked to Jesus, and to cry, Lord, remember me. Have compassion on the bereaved; may they spread their sorrows before Jesus.

And now turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease. Wilt thou be angry with us for ever; wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations? Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee? Give a double portion of thy spirit to thy ministers at this solemn time, that they may be instant in season and out of season. Quickened thy people in prayer and supplication, and let this time of calamity be a time of blessing from on high. May many souls be saved, and may glory dwell in our land. Make us more compassionate to the sick and afflicted; make us more laudably alive to the interests of Zion; make us more humble, more holy, more watchful; make us take heed, watch, and pray, seeing we know not when the time is, lest the master coming suddenly should find us sleeping.

O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not for thine own sake, O our God. And may glory undivided everlasting be to thee, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Amen.

GRACES BEFORE MEAT.

I.

O Lord, thou spreadest a table for us from day to day. The earth is full of thy riches, and of these thou art constantly bestowing abundance upon us. Grant, O most gracious Father, a covenant-blessing with this renewed manifestation of thy bounty and faithfulness, and pardon our every sin, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

II.

O Lord, thou feedest and thou clothest us, and all that we have is thine. Of thine own blessings hast thou now set before us. Grant thy fatherly blessing with them, that we may enjoy them free from the curse which sin has entailed on all our earthly enjoyments. May they be to us the gifts of covenant-grace, and tokens of thy love. Pardon, and accept us, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

III.

God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Lord of heaven and earth, thou art ever mindful of our wants. Thy faithfulness never fails, thy bounty is ever with us. Gracious Lord, vouchsafe us thy forgiveness and blessing with these the gifts of thy providence. Let these mercies come to us with Christ present in them all. May we feel them doubly sweet because gifted to us for his sake. Blot out our offences, and quicken us for thy service, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

IV.

In thee, O Lord, we live, and move, and have our being. Keep us mindful of our dependence upon thee, and our obligations to thee. Do thou graciously forgive our sins, and sanctify us by thy Spirit. Grant us also, now, a Father's blessing with the bounty of thy providence, for Christ's sake. Amen.

V.

Most gracious God, we are entirely dependent on thee for all things pertaining to life and godliness. Feed us with food convenient for us. Do thou also feed our souls with the bread of life; and strengthen us that we may do thy holy will, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

VI.

O God, we are utterly unworthy of the least of all thy mercies; and yet thou art continually doing us good. As thou spreadest a table for us, let us receive thy blessing with our daily bread. Do thou likewise dispose us to labour for the bread that endureth unto everlasting life; and while we hunger and thirst after righteousness, may our souls be filled thereby, for the sake of our blessed Saviour. Amen.

GRACES AFTER MEAT.

I.

Most gracious Father, accept of our united thanksgiving for the mercies thou hast now conferred upon us. May we ever feel the constraining influence of thy love; and walk in love, obeying thy commandments in all things. Let us not want for the bread of life. Fill the savings of our soul with the provisions of thy grace, and pardon and accept of us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

II.

We praise thee, O God, for thy constant love. Thou art ever renewing thy mercies towards us, and constantly renewing and enhancing our obligations to love and serve thee. Help us, gracious God, to discharge these obligations, and stir us up to glorify thee in our lives as well as in our lips. Forgive all our sins, and accept of us for Jesus' sake. Amen.

III.

Praised be thy name, O God, for the token of thy abiding love which we have now enjoyed. Surely thou art ever merciful. O make us good stewards of thy manifold grace. Let not thy bounteous fullness steal away our hearts from thee. Bind us by thy living grace to thyself, and fill us with the Spirit of Christ, and the glory shall be thine for ever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IV.

Thou loadest us daily with thy benefits, O God of our salvation. Let our souls live and praise thee. Make us, indeed, as the children of so many mercies, devoted to thy fear; and let us find acceptance in thy sight, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

V.

Accept, O Lord, our grateful acknowledgments for the mercies we have now received. Teach us thy statutes; and enable us, as we live by thy bounty, to live to thy praise. Sanctify us for thy service, and accept us in the Beloved. Amen.

VI.

We bless thee, heavenly Father, for what we have now received of thy bounty, and pray thee to enable us to use it in thy service. Give us grace to remember that man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of thy mouth; and by that word do thou nourish us up unto life eternal, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

SHORT PRAYERS TO BE USED BEFORE COMMENCING FAMILY WORSHIP.

I.

O God, do thou bless us with special favour in the situation in which we are now placed, as thus surrounding the domestic altar; and do thou send help to us out of thy holy sanctuary. May thy grace be found, in our happy experience, to be sufficient for us. May thy strength be perfected in our weakness, and thus we shall read with profit to our immortal souls a portion of the sacred oracles, and thus we shall address ourselves to thee with acceptance at the throne of grace. O Lord, do us all the good we need, according to thine abundant mercy, in the Son of thy love, and all we ask is for his sake. Amen.

II.

Most merciful God, as we well know that the preparations of the heart in man and the answer of the tongue are from thee, we would earnestly entreat that in thy kindness and love thou wouldest impart all the preparation we require to enable us to worship thee at this time in a becoming manner. May we realize the majesty of thy presence, so that we may appear with the greatest reverence before thee, and may we be deeply impressed with a sense of our own unworthiness, that we may appear in the exercise of the utmost humility and contrition of spirit. Help us withal to come before thee in holy confidence, that we may with the freedom of children drawing near to a kind father, willingly confess our many transgressions, and supplicate thy pardoning mercy. O Lord, deal with us very bountifully, in accepting of our persons and services, and our praises shall be of thee, through Jesus Christ, our all-prevailing Advocate. Amen.

III.

Heavenly Father, we desire to give thee thanks for the freedom of access we at all times enjoy into thy holy presence, whether in public or in private: and in drawing near at this time may we find that in very deed thy presence is with us. Lord make it known unto us that thou art nigh by causing us to sing thy praises with melody in our hearts. Enable us to sing with the spirit and with the understanding also. Guide us likewise in the reading of a portion of thy most blessed revelation. May the sound of it not only reach our ears, but may it touch our hearts, and may we be filled with all joy and peace in believing. We also entreat thee, O Lord, to direct us in lifting up our voice to thee in prayer. Do thou thyself fill our mouths with arguments wherewith we may order our cause before thee. O God, answer these our desires, and our approach at this time will be as the offering of the morning and evening sacrifice. Hear us in Christ. Amen.

IV.

O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come. We gladly recognise it as our duty to worship thee in the family, and now that we are together in a family capacity, that we may unite in thy service, be thou in the midst of us to bless us and to do us good. Bestow on us the spirit of true devotion, that we may worship thee who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Visit us with the joys of thy salvation. Uphold us by thy Holy Spirit, and so we shall rejoice in calling on thy most holy name, and in learning what thy will is in that part of the sacred records which we are about to consult. O shine on thine own word, and shine in our hearts by the enlightening influences of thy Spirit, that we may gladly take thy word as a light to our feet and a lamp to our path. Direct us in singing thy praises; and bow thy heavens when we bow our knee before thee in the name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

V.

O Lord, we desire not only to regard it as an important duty, but also to esteem it as an unspeakable privilege that we are permitted to assemble in this manner, that we may engage in praising thy holy name, and in supplicating thy favour at the throne of grace. Thou requirest of us that in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving we should let our requests be made known unto thee. Prepare us for doing so in this approach, and do thou return to our prayers an answer in peace. Do thou also give testimony to the word of thy grace in our experience, by causing those instructions in it to which our attention may be directed at this time, to reach our hearts. Thus teach us thy will and our duty, and may we be accepted through the Saviour, on whose atoning sacrifice we altogether depend in looking for a blessing on our services. Amen.

VI.

O God, may all worldly and distracting thoughts be shut out from our minds whilst we are occupied in the solemn services on which we are entering. O forbid that we should seem to show much love with our mouth, whilst it is recorded in judgment against us that our heart is going after its covetousness. O Lord, may it be far from us to offer unto thee strange fire, and to mock thee with sacrifices that are vain. Wherefore do thou mercifully undertake in our behalf to bring us into thy holy presence with clean hands and a pure heart. Spiritualize our sentiments and feelings, that we may find acceptance in thy sight, and experience the comfort of holding sweet fellowship with thee, and with thy Son Jesus Christ, and with the Holy Ghost. Deal thus bountifully with us, O Lord, according to thy riches in grace through our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

 PRAYERS SUITABLE FOR CHILDREN.

MORNING.

O God, thou art very great, but thou art also very kind. May I fear thee because of thy greatness, and may I love thee because of thy kindness. I have often sinned against thee, and deserve to die and go to hell. But thou hast preserved me in life throughout another night, and thou art still giving me many comforts. Thou art even offering to pardon me and make me happy for ever. O may I believe what thou hast told me about Jesus Christ, who took little children in his arms and blessed them, and died upon the cross for sinners such as I am. May I love Jesus, and do what he has commanded me. May I avoid falsehood, and quarrelling, and all other sins. May I remember that thou always seest me, and that it is very wrong and dangerous to disobey so great and holy a king and so kind and affectionate a Father. Bless my parents and all my relations. May they serve and enjoy thee. Bless the whole world. Keep me this day by thy power and mercy, and answer these my prayers for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

EVENING.

Great God, whom the holy angels worship, and who art far more glorious than they, look down in mercy on a little child, and hear his [her] prayers and praises. Thou hast been very kind in sparing me so long, and in giving me so many comforts. And O how kind hast thou been to me and others in sending Jesus Christ that sinners might be saved! For his sake pardon my sins, and enable me to obey thee, and take me at last to heaven. O may I become wiser and better the longer I live. Be very kind to my parents and to my other relations and friends. May they be children of God and disciples of Jesus Christ. Have pity on children who have lost their father or mother, and be thou thyself a kind parent to them. Cure sick persons, and send food to the poor. And O may sinners remember that they have souls as well as bodies, and be prepared not only to live, but also to die. Keep me in safety throughout this night, and bring me, if that be thy holy will, to the light of another day. O God, have mercy on me, forgive my sins, and hear these my prayers, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

CHILD'S MORNING PRAYER.

O Lord thou art my God, and I praise thee that thou dost let a child like me kneel at thy throne. Look on me in Christ, and for his sake love me, and blot all my sins out of thy book. I thank thee that I have seen the light of this day. I thank thee for the rest of the past night. Lord, keep me through this day. May thine arm lead me, and guard me from all harm. May I walk and act as a child of Christ; may I hate all sin, and love all that is good, and live, as thy word bids me, to thy praise. Let my friends be thy friends, and be thine in this world, and thine in the world to come. Make us all pure in the blood of the Lamb of God that was slain, and good by thy grace, for Christ's sake. Amen

CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

This night, O Lord, I lift up my voice to thank thee for all the love thou hast this day shown me. Thou hast kept me from harm, and hast given me all that I stood in need of. Make me to love thee more and more, and to serve thee with all my heart. May my sins be pardoned, and my soul saved for the sake of Christ. Watch over me and all whom I love this night, and while we sleep be our shade on our right hand, and spare us to meet on a new day, for Christ's sake. Amen.
