

FAMILY WORSHIP.

A SERIES OF PRAYERS,

WITH REMARKS ON PASSAGES OF SACRED SCRIPTURE,

BY CLERGYMEN

OF THE

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

PRAYER

BLACKIE & SON, QUEEN STREET GLASGOW;

SOUTH COLLEGE ST EDINBURGH, AND WARWICK SQUARE LONDON.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

A SERIES OF PRAYERS,

WITH

DOCTRINAL AND PRACTICAL REMARKS ON PASSAGES

OF

SACRED SCRIPTURE,

FOR EVERY MORNING AND EVENING THROUGHOUT THE YEAR;

ADAPTED TO THE SERVICES OF DOMESTIC WORSHIP,

BY

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY CLERGYMEN

OF

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

BLACKIE & SON, QUEEN STREET, GLASGOW;

SOUTH COLLEGE STREET, EDINBURGH;

AND WARWICK SQUARE, LONDON.

MDCCCXLI.

CAVEN LIBRARY
KNOX COLLEGE TORONTO

PUBLISHERS' PREFACE.

THIS work originated in the suggestion of several pious and highly talented individuals, that an attempt should be made to promote the important duty of Family Worship, and to aid in its revival where it has unhappily fallen into neglect, by placing in the hands of the community what may be termed a model book, embracing so great a variety of examples, as to avoid the monotony of a single form of prayer, and suited, by its extensive and comprehensive application, to the varied wants and circumstances of man. It was ultimately determined that the plan of the work should include—the selection of a portion of scripture for every morning and evening throughout the year, and also a psalm or paraphrase for praise; a brief comment on the scriptural passage of each service, and a prayer for every morning and evening, adapted to the circumstances of the entire household, and based upon the portion of holy writ recommended to be read. The passage of scripture must be read from the Bible itself, that it may be always in the hands of the family. This plan met the approbation of all the ministers of the Church of Scotland to whom it was submitted; and from this learned and pious body of men, no fewer than one hundred and eighty individuals were selected as contributors to the work. It has been altogether a labour of love on their part; and the varied talent and devotional spirit so conspicuous throughout the FAMILY WORSHIP, attest the Christian zeal with which they have performed their respective parts. This work, it is believed, will long remain a valuable and delightful record of their piety and usefulness; and will, in after times, serve to stimulate the labourers in the Lord's vineyard to that exemplary discharge of the ministerial duty which so eminently distinguishes the clergymen of the Church of Scotland in the present day.

The entire superintendence of the work was confided to the Rev. James Gibson, A.M., of Glasgow; and the proprietors are deeply sensible of the advantages that have accrued to the publication from his talent and untiring assiduity. To this gentleman, and to the numerous contributors, the publishers offer their respectful thanks.

As a companion to the FAMILY WORSHIP, a work is in preparation, to be entitled, "The CHRISTIAN'S DAILY COMPANION, presenting an entire View of Divine Truth, in a Series of Meditations for every Morning and Evening throughout the Year. To which is appended, a brief Manual of Prayers for Private Devotion." The arrangement of this work is in the hands of the Rev. N. Paterson, D.D., Glasgow; and many distinguished ornaments of the Church of Scotland will aid in its composition.

EDITOR'S PREFACE.

Our labours in editing this work have now been brought to a close : and we can look back on the occasional hours spent in them with unmingled satisfaction. The object of the work has been to aid and promote the duty of Family Worship ; a duty alike commended by its essential interest and importance, and dictated by the principles of Scripture and even the feelings of natural religion, a duty whose decay or revival is always coincident with the revival or decay of vital religion itself. It is usually understood to consist in praise and prayer, and reading of the Word of God. It has its foundation in our dependence on God for all the blessings and comforts of our being, and our duty to praise and obey the Author of them all. Prayer is the natural expression of a dependent being, and is especially the duty and the privilege of man, sinful, weak, ignorant, subject to many trials and miseries, and born for eternity.

The very same principles and circumstances that make it a duty and a privilege in an individual to pray to God, make it incumbent upon a family. Nay, the family relation strengthens the feelings and obligations of prayer, multiplies the inducements and combined them into one united interest of deeper and more tender intensity. The very existence of one Great Father of the universe, implies, that the common and united homage of all creation is his due. 'Of him, and to him, and through him, are all things.' All beings and all combinations of being must look up to him who is the great centre and source of their existence, and their joy. Especially is it most reasonable and natural that this should be the case in the closest, most intimate, and endearing of all social relations,—that of the family. Here there is a clear and a felt community of wants, difficulties, trials, and enjoyments, in which every member feels and sympathises, as intensely as in his own individual concerns ; even with an intensity increased in proportion to the number of individuals of whom it is composed. Every morning and every evening they have the same common blessings to acknowledge, the same sins to be confessed and forgiven, the same natures to be renewed and sanctified, and the same hopes to cherish. They need protection from the same dangers ; they have the same consolations to seek, the same trials and afflictions to endure ; they are journeying together to the same home ; they hope to die in each other's presence, or if scattered in the providence of God for time, they hope to meet together at last,—a family in heaven. Having one God and Father, one faith, one Lord, one baptism, and one hope of eternal life, nothing can be more reasonably suitable and delightful than to meet together round the same family altar, morning and evening, to commit their way to God.

Family Worship has many great and obvious advantages. Besides the all-important benefits of a directly religious kind, in promoting piety and drawing down the blessing of God, and of him who both promised his presence to two or three meeting together and asking anything in his name, it promotes order, regularity, and propriety of behaviour in a household. The very submission to the God of all, which it expresses and cherishes, promotes the spirit of submission and obedience in the family. It checks unseasonable levity, rebukes disorder, quarrelling, or unruly passions, which cannot consist with family devotion. Either the one or the other must cease. It invests the parent and master with the most venerable of all characters,—that of a servant of God : and where the natural affection of parents and children, and the proper kindness on the one hand, and respect on the other, of masters and servants, are hallowed and deepened by the benign and solemn feelings of religion, love, peace, and obedience will reign through the family. The principles and examples of Scripture entirely harmonize with these views. We do not expect to find particular precepts on this head ; because, as we have seen, the reasons that enforce prayer on man as an individual, enforce it on him in all his relations ; and it is worthy of remark, that all God's commands are addressed to him as an individual ;—"Thou shalt, or shalt not" do this or that, binding on him every where and at every time. Wherever there are social blessings and duties, social prayer to God is due. But we may expect examples of these principles in the Scriptures ; and accordingly there are many. Thus Abraham was commended for his observance of family religion, and that too in connection with the promise, that in him all the families of the earth should be blessed, Gen. xviii. 19. Eli was punished for not religiously training and ruling his family. Joshua resolved, that as for him and his house, he would serve the Lord. Job was in the constant practice of family religion ; David, Daniel, and others. Our Lord and his apostles joined in domestic prayer ; and that inimitably beautiful and comprehensive form of prayer dictated by our Lord, is a social or family prayer, and that on the principles we have above laid down.

Many difficulties are pled as an apology for neglecting this duty ; especially, some plead that they cannot overcome their natural reluctance and timidity to engage in prayer in the presence of others. We cannot attach much importance to this as a reason for neglecting the duty ; though we doubt not it prevails to a great extent. It is therefore highly necessary to remove it. With such a form as this in his possession, no one may plead such an apology. There is in this work ample matter and variety as a help to beginners ; and even what may be very useful to stir up devotion, and supply varied expression to the more experienced Christian. It is with this view and not to supersede the practice of extempore prayer, that this work has been projected ; and both publishers and contributors would deeply regret if this were the result. They believe, on the other hand, that it will greatly tend to furnish such matter and expression for prayer, as will soon enable any one who devoutly uses it to dispense with forms altogether.

There is, however, in this country, what we cannot but consider a very unreasonable prejudice against the use of forms in all circumstances. It has arisen from the fearful evils and abuses arising out of the shameless and idolatrous forms of Popery, mumbled over by a lazy and corrupt priesthood, without feeling, and almost without decency ; succeeded by the cruel and insane attempts to force upon a reluctant people, forms containing sentiments and rites which they abhorred. Yet it is a well known fact, that our early reformers prepared and used forms in the worship of God, and the sentiments of our forefathers on this head may be gathered from the following passage in the Directory for Family Worship, usually bound up with the Confession of Faith of the Church of Scotland, and containing many wise and excellent directions :—

“So many as can conceive prayer, ought to make use of that gift of God ; albeit, those who are rude and weaker may begin at a set form of prayer, but so as they be not sluggish in stirring up in themselves (according to their daily necessities) the spirit of prayer, which is given to all the children of God in some measure,” &c.

We need not refer to the form left by our Lord as an example of such a practice ; where his disciples were taught to “say” the same words. Indeed, what are all the passages of Scripture usually adopted in extempore prayer ? what are the apostolic benedictions, but forms of prayers ? We every day more and more admire the wisdom and piety of our forefathers, who permitted them when necessary, while they did not encourage them where they can be dispensed with. We greatly venerate the practices of our Church, and the habits they have cherished among our people. We are persuaded that it is highly advantageous, in order to keep alive the spirit of devotion, to leave the mind unfettered by fixed forms ; and that there are times and circumstances in the providential and spiritual history of a pious soul and a pious family, for which no previous foresight can provide suitable expression at a throne of grace, and which will overflow all the artificial channels previously prepared. In such cases it would be most improper that the spirit should not be left to its free and unfettered exercise.

Having such views, we, with many others, hailed the present attempt of the enterprising publishers of this work with much satisfaction. The Christian world is deeply indebted to them for the extensive circulation of many religious works of the most useful kind ; and which have been of great service in reviving and promoting religion in districts of the country where it had fallen low. We have occasion to know, that the present undertaking has been a valuable treasure to many, and especially to families with females at their head ; or where the usual head of the family has been absent or unqualified from sickness or inability. We have had high satisfaction in superintending the publication of a work, which, from the great success it has already attained, promises, by the blessing of God, to be extensively useful to generations yet to come. May God be pleased to vouchsafe his Holy Spirit to crown this anticipation with an abundant increase in the fruits of righteousness, which are, by Jesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God. Amen.

LIST

OF THE

CLERGYMEN WHO HAVE GIVEN THEIR ASSISTANCE IN THE

PRODUCTION OF THIS WORK:—

Rev. Allan, John, Aberdeen	Moral Philosophy in the Uni-	Rev. Muirhead, G., D.D. Cramond
— Anderson, A., Boindoe	versity of Glasgow	— Munro, Alexander, Manchester
— Arnot, David, Dundee	Rev. Gardiner, M., D.D. Bothwell	— Munro, James, Rutherglen
— Arnot, William, Glasgow	— Gentle, A., Alves	— Murray, John, Aberdeen
— Bannerman, James, Ormiston	— Gibson, Alex., Balmaghie	— Murray, John, Dunbog
— Barr, J., D.D. Port-Glasgow	— Gibson, James, A.M., Glasgow	— Napier, Peter, Glasgow
— Begg, James, Libberton	— Gilston, W., Carnock	— Nicholson, W., Ferry-Port on-
— Bennie, Archibald, Edinburgh	— Glen, James, A.M., Benholm	Craig
— Black, Wm., D.D. Glasgow	— Gordon, A. L., Aberdeen	— Nisbet, Archibald, Glasgow
— Bonar, J. J., Greenock	— Grant, John, Petty	— Nixon, William, Montrose
— Booth, P., A.M., Inverleithen	— Gray, A., D.D. Kincardine, W.	— Noble, J., A.M., St Madoes
— Brewster, James, D.D. Craig	— Gray, Andrew, Perth	— Noble, John, A.M. Fodderty
— Brodie, James, Monimail	— Grierson, James, Errol	— Paisley, Robert, Partick
— Brown, M., A.M., Morpeth	— Guthrie, Thomas, Edinburgh	— Park, John, Liverpool
— Brown, David, Roslin	— Graham, J., D.D. Killearn	— Paterson, John J., D.D. Sunder-
— Brown, Robert J., D.D. Professor	— Hay, J. K., Edinburgh	land
Marischal College, Aberdeen.	— Henderson, J., Carmunnock	— Paterson, N., D.D. Glasgow
— Brown, Thomas, D.D. Glasgow.	— Henderson, J., D.D. Glasgow	— Paterson, Alex., Glasgow
— Brown, Thomas, Kinneff	— Henry, David, Marnoch	— Paton, Robert, Straiton
— Bryce, James, Aberdeen	— Hill, Alexander, D.D. Dailly	— Paul, John, Edinburgh
— Bryce, John, Ardrossan	— Hutchison, A., Warrenford	— Paul, William, Banchory
— Brydon, Robert, Dunscore	— Jamieson, Robert, Currie	— Philip, Alexander, Cruden
— Buchan, William, Hamilton	— Jeffrey, Robert, Girthon	— Ralph, H., LL.D. Liverpool
— Buchanan, H., Strathblane	— Keith, P. H., Hamilton	— Reid, Alexander, Portsoy
— Buchanan, Robert, Glasgow	— Laird, John, Inverkeillor	— Robertson, James, Ellon
— Burns, Robert, D.D. Paisley	— Landsborough, D., Stevenston	— Rose, Alex., D.D. Inverness
— Burns, James C., London	— Lee, Robert, A.M., Campsie	— Rose, Lewis, A.M., Glasgow
— Burns, William, Kilsyth	— Leishman, M., Govan	— Roxburgh, John, Dundee
— Cameron, D., Glasgow	— Lewis, George, Dundee	— Russel, J., LL.D. Dalsersf
— Campbell, Hugh, Manchester	— Lewis, James, Leith	— Shanks, Robert, Buckie
— Clark, John, A.M., Edinburgh	— Lochore, A., A.M., Drymen	— Simpson, David, Aberdeen
— Clark, Alex., A.M., Inverness	— Lorimer, John G., Glasgow	— Simpson, Robert, Kintore
— Clark, Thomas, Methven	— Lorimer, Peter, London	— Smith, Robert, D.D. Montrose
— Clugston, William, Forfar	— Lorimer, R., D.D. Haddington	— Smith, J., Wellpark, Glasgow
— Clason, Patrick, D.D. Edinburgh	— Lumsden, James, Barry	— Smith, James, Chalmers's Church
— Cooke, H., D.D. LL.D. Belfast	— Macbeth, James, Arbroath	— Smyth, John, D.D. Glasgow
— Craig, Robert, A.M., Rothsay	— Macfarlane, John, Collesie	— Spence, Alexander, Aberdeen
— Crawford, Robert, Irongray	— Macfarlane, P., D.D. Greenock	— Steen, Geo., Newtonlimavady
— Cunningham, W., Edinburgh	— Mackay, M., LL.D. Dunoon	— Stevenson, William, Arbroath
— Cumming, A., Bridge of Earn	— Mackray, W., A.M. Stirling	— Stevenson, J.A.M., Newton-on-Ayr
— Cripples, George, Stirling	— Macpherson, Robert, Inverness	— Stewart, C. C. Aberdalgie
— Davidson, Alex. D. Aberdeen	— M'Cheyne, R. M., Dundee	— Stewart, Harry, Oathlaw
— Davidson, David, Broughty F.	— M'Cosh, James, Brechin	— Stewart, R., D.D. Broughshane
— Davidson, Geo. R., Drumblade	— M'Culloch, J. M., Kelso	— Stewart, J., Wallacetown, Ayr
— Denham, J., Londonderry	— M'Donald, Robert, Blairgowrie	— Strong, David, Kilmarnock
— Doig, Thomas, A.M., Torryburn	— M'Farlane, The Very Reverend	— Thomson, Charles, Wick
— Drummond, J., Forgandenny	Principal, University, Glasgow	— Thomson, John, Dystart
— Duncan, Alexander, Coynton	— M'Kellar, A., D.D. Pencaitland	— Thomson, John, Yester
— Duncan, George, J., Kirkpatrick-	— M'Kenzie, Kenneth, Bo'ness	— Thomson, J. W., Monedie
Durham	— M'Kinlay, J., D.D. Kilmarnock	— Thomson, Peter, Dumfries
— Duncan, H., D.D. Ruthwell	— M'Lure, W., Londonderry	— Thomson, Wm., Old Monkland
— Duncan, T. T., M.D. Dumfries	— M'Laggan, James, Kinfauns	— Thorburn, Joseph, Forglan
— Duncan, Thos., Kirkintilloch	— M'Morland, Peter, Glasgow	— Topp, A., Elgin
— Dunn, William, Cardross	— M'Nair, Robert, Paisley	— Turner, Alexander, Glasgow
— Fairbairn, Patrick, Salton	— M'Naughton, A., D.D. Kilbride,	— Tweedie, W. K., Aberdeen
— Foote, Alex. L. R. Brechin	Arran	— Wallace, J. A., Hawick
— Foote, James, A.M., Aberdeen	— Manson, John, Fyvie	— Watson, Charles, D.D. late of
— Forbes, John, D.D. Glasgow	— Mather, William, Stanley	Bruntisland
— Forbes, Robert, Woodside, Aber-	— Menzies, David, A.M., Glasgow	— Whyte, Alexander, A.M., Fetter-
deen	— Middleton, G., Strathmiglo	cain
— Fowler, J. C., A.M., Glasgow	— Mitchell, G., A.M. Kilmadock	— Whyte, James, A.M., Methlick
— Flyter, Alexander, Alness	— Montgomery, T., Sanquhar	— Wightman, J., D.D. Kirkmahoe
— Forman, A., A.M., Innerwick	— Morgan, James, Belfast	— Wilson, William, Carmylie
— Fleming, W., D.D. Professor of	— Morren, N., A.M., Greenock	— Wood, J. J., A.M., Edinburgh.

LIST OF THE CONTRIBUTORS

TO FAMILY WORSHIP.

FIRST WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	The Rev. John Smyth, D. D., St George's Parish,	Glasgow
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Nathaniel Paterson, D. D., St Andrew's Parish,	do.
Thursday and Friday,	— James Henderson, D. D., St Enoch's Parish,	do.
Saturday,

SECOND WEEK.

Sabbath,	— John Forbes, D. D., St Paul's Parish,	do.
Monday and Tuesday,	— John G. Lorimer, St David's Parish,	do.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Thomas Brown, D. D., St John's Parish,	do.
Friday and Saturday,	— Patrick Fairbairn, Bridgeton Parish,	do.

THIRD WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— J. C. Fowler, A. M., St Luke's Parish,	do.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Alex. Turner, Gorbal's Parish,	do.
Thursday and Friday,	— Alex. Gibson, St Ann's Parish,	do.
Saturday,

FOURTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— Patrick Macfarlane, D. D.,	Greenock.
Monday and Tuesday,	— William Dunn,	Cardross.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Lewis Rose,	Glasgow.
Friday and Saturday,	— A. M. Brown, A. M.,	Morpeth.

FIFTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Charles Watson, D. D., late of	Burntisland.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— James Gibson, A. M., Kingston Church,	Glasgow.
Thursday and Friday,	— George Cupples,	Stirling.
Saturday,

SIXTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— Archibald Bennie,	Edinburgh.
Monday and Tuesday,	— William Cunninghame,	do.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— J. Julius Wood, A. M.,	do.
Friday and Saturday,	— John Paul,	do.

SEVENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	The Rev. John Clark, A. M.,	Edinburgh.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Robert Jamieson,	Currie.
Thursday and Friday,	— P. Booth, A. M.,	Inverleithen.
Saturday,	— James Gibson, A. M.,	Kingston Church, Glasgow.

EIGHTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	Very Rev. Principal Macfarlan, University,	do.
Tuesday,	Rev. Robert Lee, A. M.,	Campsie.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Robert Burns, D. D.,	Paisley.
Friday and Saturday,	— James Monro,	Rutherglen.

NINTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— A. Nisbet,	Glasgow.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— James Foote, A. M.,	Aberdeen.
Thursday and Friday,	— Robert Buchanan,	Glasgow.

Saturday,	}
TENTH WEEK.		— William Nixon,	Montrose.

Sabbath,
Monday and Tuesday,	— Robert Paisley,	Partick.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— P. Napier,	Glasgow.
Friday and Saturday,	— H. Duncan, D. D.,	Ruthwell.

ELEVENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Robert Shanks,	Buckie.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— E. M'Kenzie,	Bo'ness.
Thursday and Friday,	— Robert Lee, A. M.,	Campsie.

Saturday,	}
TWELFTH WEEK.		— William Burns,

Sabbath,
Monday and Tuesday,	— Allan M'Naughton, D. D.,	Kilbride, Arran.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— William Black, D. D.,	Barony, Glasgow.
Friday and Saturday,	— Alexander Gray, D. D.,	Kincardine, West.

THIRTEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Nathaniel N. Morren, A. M.,	Greenock.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Hamilton Buchanan,	Strathblane.
Thursday and Friday,	— William Thomson,	Old Monkland.

Saturday,	}
FOURTEENTH WEEK.		— James Brewster, D. D.,

Sabbath,
Monday and Tuesday,	— W. K. Tweedie,	Aberdeen.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— James Glen, A. M.,	Benholme.
Friday and Saturday,	— William Paul,	Nether Banchory.

FIFTEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— David Simpson,	Aberdeen.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Robert Simpson,	Kintore.
Thursday and Friday,	— George Muirhead, D. D.,	Cramond.

FIFTEENTH WEEK.

Saturday,

SIXTEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

SEVENTEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

EIGHTEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

NINETEENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

TWENTIETH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

TWENTY-FIRST WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

TWENTY-SECOND WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

TWENTY-THIRD WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

TWENTY-FOURTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

} The Rev. David Arnot,

Dundee.

— David Davidson,
— William Clugston,
— William Nicholson,Broughty-Ferry.
Forfar.
Ferry-Port-on-Craig.— R. M. M'Cheyne, — William Stevenson,
— William Wilson,Dundee.
Arbroath.
Carmylie.

} — James Macbeth,

Arbroath.

— John Roxburgh,
— James Grierson,
— William M'Kay, D. D.,Dundee.
Errol.
Dunoon.— George Lewis,
— Thomas Duncan,
— Robert M'Nair,Dundee.
Kirkintilloch.
Paisley.

} — J. J. Bonar.

Greenock.

— R. Buchan,
— P. H. Keith,
— Thomas Clark,Hamilton.
do.
Methven.— James K. Hay,
— David Brown,
— John Henderson,
— James Brodie,Edinburgh.
Roslin.
Carmunnock.
Monnemail— Daniel Cameron,
— John Murray,
— James Smith, Well Park,
— Alexander Lochore, A. M.,Glasgow.
Dunbog.
Glasgow.
Drymen.— Andrew Gray,
— James Barr, D. D.,
— Alexander Duncan,Perth.
Port-Glasgow.
Coylton.

} — Robert Forbes,

Woodside.

TWENTY-FOURTH WEEK.

Monday and Tuesday,	The Rev. J. Noble, A. M.,	St Maddoes.
Wednesday,	— Thomas Brown,	Kineff.
Thursday,	— James Smith, Well Park,	Glasgow.
Friday and Saturday,	— James Lumsden,	Barry.

TWENTY-FIFTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Robert Smith, D. D.,	Montrose.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— A. L. Gordon,	Aberdeen.
Thursday and Friday,	— Alexander Philip,	Cruden.
Saturday,

TWENTY-SIXTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— Alexander Reid,	Portsgy.
Monday and Tuesday,	— Alexander Spence,	Aberdeen.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— J. T. Patterson, D. D.,	Sunderland.
Friday and Saturday,	— Gordon Mitchell, A. M.,	Kilmadock.

TWENTY-SEVENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— M. Leishman,	Govan.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— John Russell, LL.D.,	Dalserf.
Thursday,	— A. L. R. Foote,	Brechin.
Friday,	— James M'Cosh,	Do.
Saturday,

TWENTY-EIGHT WEEK.

Sabbath,	— A. T. Patterson,	Glasgow.
Monday and Tuesday,	— T. Montgomery,	Sanquhar.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Hugh Ralph, LL.D.,	Liverpool.
Friday and Saturday,	— John Park,	Do.

TWENTY-NINTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— James Lewis,	Leith.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— H. Cook, D. D., LL.D.,	Belfast.
Thursday and Friday,	— James Morgan,	Do.
Saturday,

THIRTIETH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— R. Stewart,	Broughshane.
Monday and Tuesday,	— James Denham,	Londonderry.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— W. M'Clure,	Do.
Friday Morning,	— G. Steen,	Newtownlimavady.
Friday Evening,	— James Smith, Well Park,	Glasgow.
Saturday Morning,	— G. Steen,	Newtownlimavady.
Saturday Evening,	— James Smith, Well Park,	Glasgow.

THIRTY-FIRST WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— R. M'Pherson,	Inverness.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Alexander Munro,	Manchester.
Thursday and Friday,	— Hugh Campbell,	Do.

THIRTY-FIRST WEEK.

Saturday,

THIRTY-SECOND WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

THIRTY-THIRD WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

THIRTY-FOURTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

THIRTY-FIFTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

THIRTY-SIXTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

THIRTY-SEVENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

THIRTY-EIGHTH WEEK.

Sabbath,

Monday and Tuesday,

Wednesday and Thursday,

Friday and Saturday,

THIRTY-NINTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,

Tuesday and Wednesday,

Thursday and Friday,

Saturday,

} The Rev. James Whyte, Methlick.

— James Drummond, Forgandenny.

— C. C. Stewart, Aberdalgie.

— John W. Thomson, Monedie.

— James M'Laggan, Kinfauns.

— William Mather, M. A., Stanley.

— Alexander Cumming, Bridge of Earn.

} — Alexander Whyte, Fettercairn.

— James Stevenson, M. A., Newton, Ayr.

— A. Gentle, Alves.

— Professor Brown, Aberdeen.

— George R. Davidson, Drumblade.

— Joseph Thorburn, Forglen.

— A. S. Patterson, Hutchesontown.

} — John Laird, Inverkeilor.

— James Stewart, Wallacetown, Ayr.

— David Strong, Kilmarnock.

— T. Doig, Torryburn.

— David Henry, Marnoch.

— William Gelston, Carnock.

— Charles Thomson, Northshields.

} — James Smith, Well Park, Glasgow.

— David Landsborough, Stevenston.

— John Bryce, Ardrossan.

— Robert Brydon, Dunscore.

— Robert Crawford, Kirkpatrick-Irongray.

— Alexander Clark, A. M., Inverness.

— Matthew Gardiner, D. D., Bothwell.

— Robert Paton, Straiton.

FORTIETH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	The Rev. Professor Hill, D. D.,	College, Glasgow.
Tuesday,	— Robert Paton,	Straiton.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— A. Topp,	Elgin.
Friday and Saturday,	— Peter Lorimer,	London.

FORTY-FIRST WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Peter M'Moreland, St Matthew's,	Glasgow.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— Dr Lorimer,	Haddington.
Thursday and Friday,	— John Thomson,	Yester.
Saturday,

FORTY-SECOND WEEK.

Sabbath,	— Henry Stewart,	Oathlaw.
Monday and Tuesday,	— Dr M'Kellar,	Pencaitland.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Mr Bannerman,	Ormiston.
Friday and Saturday,	— Thomas Guthrie,	Edinburgh.

FORTY-THIRD WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday Morning,	— Dr Clason,	Do.
Monday Evening,	— A. S. Paterson, Hutchesontown,	Glasgow.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— James Begg,	Libberton.
Thursday and Friday,	— Alexander Flyter,	Alness.
Saturday,

FORTY-FOURTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— John Graham, D. D.,	Killearn.
Monday and Tuesday,	— Alexander Rose, D. D.,	Inverness.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— John Grant,	Petty.
Friday and Saturday,	— J. Noble, A. M.,	Fodderty.

FORTY-FIFTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— David Menzies, A. M., Martyrs,	Glasgow.
Monday,	— James Smith, Chalmers' church,	Do.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— George J. Duncan,	Kirkpatrick-Durham.
Thursday and Friday,	— John Thomson,	Dysart.
Saturday,

FORTY-SIXTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— Thomas T. Duncan, M. D.,	Dumfries.
Monday and Tuesday,	— Professor Fleming, D. D.,	College, Glasgow.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— James C. Burns,	London.
Friday and Saturday,	— Peter Thomson,	Dumfries.

FORTY-SEVENTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— John Murray,	Aberdeen.
Tuesday and Wednesday	— Alexander D. Davidson,	Do.
Thursday and Friday,	— James Smith, Chalmers' church,	Glasgow.
Saturday,	— James Robertson,	Ellon.

FORTY-EIGHTH WEEK.

Sabbath,	The Rev. James Robertson,	Ellon.
Monday and Tuesday,	— John Manson,	Fyvie.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— A. Anderson,	Boindree.
Friday and Saturday,	— George Middleton,	Strathmiglo.

FORTY-NINTH WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Robert Jeffray,	Girthon.
Tuesday and Wednesday,	— J. M. M'Culloch,	Kelso.
Thursday and Friday,	— Robert Craig,	Rothsay.

FIFTIETH WEEK.

Sabbath,	— John M'Farlane,	Colessie.
Monday and Tuesday,	— John Allan,	Aberdeen.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— J. Bryce,	Do.
Friday and Saturday,	— James M'Kinlay, D. D.,	Kilmarnock.

FIFTY-FIRST WEEK.

Sabbath and Monday,	— Robert M'Donald,	Blairgowrie.
Tuesday,	— Dr Wightman,	Kirkmahoe.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— Andrew Hutchison,	Warrenford.
Friday,	— James Smith, Chalmers' church,	Glasgow

FIFTY-SECOND WEEK.

Sabbath,	— James Wallace,	Hawick.
Monday and Tuesday,	— Adam Forman, A. M.,	Innerwick.
Wednesday and Thursday,	— W. M'Crae,	Stirling.
Friday and Saturday,	— W. Arnot,	Glasgow.

PRAYERS FOR PARTICULAR OCCASIONS.

	Page		Page
The Morning of a Sacramental Fast, . . .	935	In a time of Poverty, . . .	949
The Evening of Do. . .	ib.	For a Family suffering from the loss of worldly substance, . . .	951
The Morning of a Communion Sabbath, . . .	936	Thanksgiving for an abundant Harvest, . . .	ib.
The Evening of Do. . .	938	In reference to a scanty Harvest, . . .	952
To be used by a Family when visited with Sickness, . . .	939	Family Prayer for the Last Day of the Year, . . .	953
After recovery from Sickness, . . .	941	For the First Day of the Year, . . .	955
Appropriate to the Death of a Relative or Friend, . . .	942	Family Prayer for a Birth-day, . . .	956
On the Funeral-day of a Friend or a Member of the Family, . . .	943	To be used by a Sailor's Family in reference to his absence, . . .	957
On the Morning of the Marriage of a Female Member of the Family, . . .	945	For a Fisherman's Family, . . .	958
On the Birth of a Child, . . .	ib.	During the Visitation of a Pestilential Epidemic, . . .	959
For the use of Parents about to Dedicate a Child to God in Baptism, . . .	946	Graces before Meat, . . .	960
For the use of Parents after having Dedicated a Child to God in Baptism, . . .	947	Short Prayers to be used before commencing Family Worship, . . .	961
On parting with Relations going to a Foreign Country, . . .	ib.	Prayers suitable for Children, Morning and Evening, . . .	962
For a Family abounding in wealth, . . .	949	Child's Morning Prayer, . . .	ib.
		Child's Evening Prayer, . . .	ib.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S PASTORAL LETTER TO THE PEOPLE OF SCOTLAND, ON FAMILY WORSHIP.*

THE Publishers consider that they cannot more appropriately commence their Work on FAMILY WORSHIP, than by prefixing the GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S PASTORAL LETTER to the PEOPLE OF SCOTLAND, on the same subject, in which the duties and privileges of domestic worship are most strongly recommended and enforced.

The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, To our dearly beloved People: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord.

On your behalf, brethren, we thank God, whom we serve with our spirit in the Gospel of His Son, that your faith and devotion have long been spoken of throughout the world; and we are bound always to have remembrance of you in our prayers night and day, greatly desiring that, like your forefathers in times of clearest light, you may continue steadfastly in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, abounding in the exercises of that unfeigned godliness, which is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

In compliance with the solicitations of many who watch for your souls, and are jealous over you with godly jealousy, we have resolved to issue this brotherly exhortation on the sacred and indispensable duty of Family Worship,—not as if we had any recent ground for apprehending that it is likely to fall into more extensive neglect, but because we know too well that it is by no means universally practised, and because even the purest minds require to be stirred up, by way of remembrance, that, while they hold fast the profession of their own faith without wavering, they may consider one another to provoke and encourage, by good counsel and good example, to the love of truth and holiness, and to the habitual and serious observance of those offices of piety, whereby, as surely as the body is nourished and refreshed by its daily bread and its nightly rest, the soul of man, through the nurture and admonition of the Lord, is progressively matured in excellence and strength, till it is advanced to the perfection and glory of its immortal existence.

In calling your attention to this momentous topic, we think it superfluous to enlarge on the high obligations by which the duty is enforced,—obligations which are involved in the very constitution of our frail and dependent being, and impressed on the understanding and the heart by the persuasive voice of Scriptural authority, opening the ears of men, and sealing the instruction, by which God speaketh, not once or twice, but at sundry times, and in divers manners, adding line upon line, precept upon precept, promise upon promise, and threatening upon threatening, so as to bring perpetually to remembrance both the blessings which are multiplied to them that fear the Lord, and the fury which is poured out on the families which call not on his name. The appointment of the reasonable service of bowing down at the domestic altar before the Lord our Maker, that, in waiting for the promised effusion of the Spirit of grace and supplications, we may be filled with the fruits of righteousness, has ever been regarded by all men of sound mind and Christian experience, not as the imposition of an irksome yoke, but as the conveyance of an inestimable privilege; for as often as we mark the tokens of God's power and presence in making the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice, must every enlightened and purified heart, lifting up its affections to the Father of Spirits, acknowledge, with triumphant satisfaction, that it is a good thing to show forth His loving-kindness in the morning, and His faithfulness every night.

To those only who have tasted and seen it, can we speak intelligibly of the tranquil delight which is awakened and sustained by such periodical acts of household worship, as are not a mere formal ceremony in which the members join with reluctance or cold compliance, but the fervent utterance of lips, which, out of the abundance of the heart, in which the love of God is shed abroad, are, by the influence of that unquenchable affection, most pleasingly constrained to celebrate the mercies which are new every morning, and to offer up the spiritual incense of prayer with as unceasing regularity, as from the sanctuary of Israel the smoke of the evening sacrifice arose, or as the early dew of Hermon descended on the mountains of Sion, when there the Lord commanded the blessing—even life for evermore.

Without all controversy, the benefits produced

* Edinburgh, May 30, 1836.—The General Assembly having considered and approved the Overtures recommending a renewed Admonition for the purpose of stirring up the people of this land to the faithful and regular observance of the Worship of God in their Families, did, and hereby do, require the following Pastoral Letter to be read by all the Ministers of this Church, from their several pulpits, on the first convenient Lord's Day after it shall come into their hands.

by this hallowed exercise are ineffably precious. It is not enough to say that thus are devout and grateful emotions awakened,—thus is faith in the superintending providence and holy promises of God confirmed,—thus are the graces of humility, resignation, and patience, nourished and increased, while, with the contemplation of the infinite excellence, the unwearied beneficence, and the everlasting strength of the Lord Jehovah, we contrast the instability, deceitfulness, and desperate wickedness of the heart of man. By the infallible testimony of Heaven, we are authorised to affirm constantly that there is an efficacy in the prayer of faith, which, though inexplicable by our feeble understandings, must, through all ages, continue to avail as much as it did in the days of those patriarchs, prophets, and righteous men, who, as princes, had power with God, when, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, they had grace to serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear. The Lord is ever nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit, when, taking with them the words which inspired wisdom has taught them to utter, they lift up their desires at His footstool, not seeking great things for themselves, or panting after the dust of the earth, or sighing for the vain delights of the sons of men, but thirsting and longing for the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven, and who, being justified by faith, has peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. We have no encouragement to hope that, by taking thought for temporal satisfactions, we shall find grace in the sight of the Lord; but if we aspire after the best gifts which are the heritage of the faithful, seeking first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness, we believe, and are sure, that His Divine power will give us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue. Though our Father in the heavens knoweth what things we have need of before we ask them, and though the purposes of His everlasting kindness are often fulfilled more substantially by withholding than by granting the desires which we naturally cherish, it is only to them who worship Him in spirit and in truth, that He has promised to do exceeding abundantly above all that they ask or think; and we have no more solid ground to expect that we shall receive without asking, or that we shall find without seeking, than the husbandman has to look for an abundant harvest springing up in the fields which he has neither planted nor watered, or than the merchant has to calculate on receiving his own with usury, for the talent which has been tied up in a napkin, or buried in the earth.

It is not for us to unfold the laws of the spiritual world, or to demonstrate why and how it is that the communications of heavenly influence and favour are in any degree suspended on the frequency and fervency of our supplications. But this we know, that, as in old time, the father of the faithful commanded his children, and his household after him, to unite with him in the exercises of a holy life, that the Lord might bring upon Abraham that which he had spoken of him,—even so, in all generations, may the willing and obedient hope, that, while seeking unto God, and committing their cause to Him who doeth great things and unsearchable, they place their confidence, not in their own importunity, or their own efforts; but in the exalted merit and prevalent intercession of the Mediator of the New Covenant, they cannot fail to be made partakers of that abundant grace which ought to be the chief object of all our prayers, and which is never denied to the humble. We know assuredly that our heavenly Father giveth His Holy Spirit to them who ask Him; and if, for the sake of His beloved Son, He is pleased to bestow this unspeakable gift in answer to the prayer of the believing soul, why should we hesitate to admit that it is of the Lord's mercies, that, by the eternal ordination of Divine wisdom, prayer has been rendered one of the sure and sufficient means of transmitting to the faithful every other good and perfect gift which cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning?

To the duties of social prayer and thanksgiving, accompanied with that instruction in righteousness which the reading of the Scriptures is calculated to impart, let the benefits thus conferred on your several domestic circles operate as a strong incitement. It is not, indeed, within the compass of human ability to infuse grace into the souls which are most tenderly beloved. But great will probably be the influence of a pious example on those who confide in your affection, and have cause to revere your worth. If your children and dependents perceive, that, while you are not slothful in the business of time, you are also fervent in spirit serving the Lord, and that, while you provide for your own food and the raiment which are obtained by the blessing of God on the hand of the diligent, you ask for them that bread of heaven which strengtheneth the heart, may you not hope that they will be stirred up both to pray and to labour for the meat which endureth to life everlasting, and that they will learn to regard the favour of God as a better portion than the abundance of corn and wine? May you not hope, that while your own minds are elevated by contemplating the works of creation, providence, and redemption, and by reflecting on the dignified and endearing relation to which you have been raised in having 'received the Spirit of adoption, whereby you cry, Abba, Father,' they who look up to you for guidance and protection will take pleasure in approaching to God, and, through the experience of the peace of walking with the wise, will be taught to abhor the enticements of sinners, and to hold fast that which is good? And even in the case of those who, through perversity of heart, and the snares of an evil world, have forsaken the path of integrity and truth, may it not be hoped that the wise counsels which they have for a season forgotten, and the devotional habits which they have long failed to imitate, will, like the bread cast upon the waters, be found after many days? Small must have been your experience of the discipline of providence, if you have never known so much as one who had wandered so far from the way of peace as to disappoint the earnest expectations of his father, and to turn the joy of her who bare him into bitterness, but who, after his own wickedness had corrected him, and his backslidings reproved him, has been awakened to new obedience, by recalling to his agonized mind, with reverential awe, the solemn image of the parental guide, in whose quiet habitation the daily exercises of prayer and praise hallowed every pursuit, lightened every care, soothed every sorrow, and seasoned every enjoyment, so as to render the voice of rejoicing and salvation in the tabernacles of the righteous, a lively type of the blessed conversation of heaven, and a delicious foretaste of the fellowship of the saints in light.

If you know these things by your own experience, or by the incontrovertible testimony of them who have tasted that the Lord is gracious, happy are ye if ye do them. Nor can you have peace and safety if, knowing what is good, you leave it undone.

And while you present your supplications for yourselves and your families, forget not the eternal concerns of the families which call not on the name of God. If it be, as it ought to be, your heart's desire, that they may be brought to the obedience of the gospel, brethren, pray for us, and for all the ministers of the truth, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, even as it is with you. Such an intercession as this will assuredly prove efficacious towards the enlargement of the household of faith, if all of you, both small and great, not only in the congregations of the upright, who in heaviness of heart sigh for the abounding of iniquity and the failing of truth, but in your families apart, and in your unseen retirements, prostrate yourselves at the footstool of your Father in heaven, who seeth in secret, and pour out your desires before Him in that effectual, fervent importunity which, like the long and patient waiting of the husbandman for the precious fruit of the earth, will, according to the sure word of promise, issue in plenteous showers of blessings, not confined to any favoured spot, or any privileged community, but dropping down fertility far and wide over fields co-extensive with the inhabited world, filled as it shall be in that evening-time of light with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea: and thus the God of the whole earth, in remembrance of His holy covenant, and in fulfilment of the good pleasure of His goodness, will arise and have mercy not only on the mountain of holiness in which He had His dwelling in time past, but on all in every place who call on the name of Jesus Christ our Lord; so that, while He clothes His priests with salvation, and makes His people shout for joy, the ways of Zion, which have mourned because few came to the solemn feasts, shall be thronged with the multitudes who keep the holy day with thanksgiving in their hearts, and the high praises of God in their mouths,—wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of those times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, when His work shall appear before the face of His servants, and His glory to their children; and they that fear the Lord, being all replenished with the riches of grace, shall take that sweet counsel together which revives the inward part, and knits the brotherhood of Christians in the unity of the faith and the holy bond of perfectness. ‘Then shall the offering of His people be pleasant unto the Lord as in the days of old, and as in former years.’ ‘And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a defence.’

FAMILY WORSHIP.

FIRST WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM I.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS I. and II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

PSALM I. ver. 1—3. The happiness of the true believer is set forth as contrasted with that of irreligious and ungodly men. 'Walking,' 'standing,' 'sitting,' express various gradations of character. 'The counsel of the ungodly' expresses the opinions and customs of those who consider not the Lord, nor regard the operation of his hands. 'The way of sinners' denotes their usual course of living. 'The seat of the scornful' is the high place of open infidelity: to sit in it is to occupy it with conscious satisfaction. Ver. 3, 4. describe, by means of a beautiful similitude, the rise, progress, and consummation of true religion in the heart. As the tree with its fruit and leaves proves the kindly qualities of the soil on which it grows, so the renewed heart brings forth the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ unto the praise and glory of God. Ver. 4—6. express the several destinations of the righteous and the ungodly: the honour consequent upon the one condition—the debasement and wretchedness which are inseparable from the other.

PSALM II. ver. 1—4. describe the malignant hostility of both Jews and Gentiles to the gospel and its author. This interpretation is fully sanctioned, Acts iv. 25—29. xiii. 32, 33. Ver. 6. David, as type of Christ, was established upon his throne on Mount Zion. Christ the antitype, eternally ordained King of kings, and Lord of lords; his name is exalted above every name. Ver. 7. 'Declared to be the Son of God with power, by his resurrection from the dead,' Rom. i. 4. Ver. 8, 9. He is to rule over all the earth. Ver. 10—12. direct to the supremacy of the Son of God over all flesh, and the homage due to Him from all the potentates and subjects of the earth.

PRACTICAL REFLECTIONS.

The first psalm is replete with the obligations of the law: the second is more conversant with the privileges and good hopes of the gospel. The one dwells on the duties and attainments of the renewed sinner—the other on the work and triumphs of the Saviour and King of Zion. In the former we are taught the blessedness of the godly man: in the latter, 'the righteousness of God our Saviour.' The first directs our meditations to the destinies of the righteous and the wicked: the second to the judgment-seat of Christ, unto whom the Father hath committed all judgment—that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. Let us meditate with reverence and godly fear on the unalterable state of the soul at death and judgment: and let us 'kiss the Son, lest he be angry and we perish from the way.' Let kings and all in authority be deeply impressed with their responsibility to Him, by whom kings reign and princes decree justice. And let Christians rejoice in the sure word of Jehovah's testimony, that 'all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God;' that 'all nations shall be blessed in Jesus Christ; and that all nations shall call him blessed.'

PRAYER.

Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion, and unto thee shall the vow be performed. We are altogether unworthy to appear before thee, thou Holy One of Israel. In thy sight, O Lord, we are all as an unclean thing, and our righteousnesses are as filthy rags. Enable us to draw nigh at this time unto thee, in the all-prevailing name of our only Mediator, Jesus Christ the righteous. For his sake, pardon our iniquity, which is very great. Receive us graciously, love us freely. Put thy Holy Spirit within us, that we may never walk in the counsel of the ungodly, nor stand in the way of sinners, nor sit in the seat of the scornful. It is of thy mercy that we have not followed a multitude to do evil, and this day we would bless thy name for the institution of the Christian Sabbath. May we be enabled to commemorate with humility and thankfulness, the finished works of creation and redemption. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. May we rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us. Be pleased, O Lord, to send forth thy light and thy truth: let them lead us, let them bring us unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles. May our delight be in the law of the Lord: and in thy law may we be disposed to meditate all the day. Sanctify us through thy truth; thy word is truth. Make us fruitful in every good word and work. Make us as trees planted by the rivers of water, the planting of the Lord, that He may be glorified.

Bless to us, O Lord, for these and all other holy purposes, the reading of thy word and the public duties of thy sanctuary. Go with us to the house of prayer, and grant thy heavenly blessing to pastors and people, that whatsoever shall be spoken or heard, may be as it becometh the oracles of God. Suffer not the good seed to be choked, or to be rendered unfruitful by the cares or the vanities of this present evil world.

Thou hast set thy King upon thy holy hill of Zion. May all nations be blessed in Him, and call Him blessed. May the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ. Give thy Son the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. May the waste places of Zion be rebuilt, and the glory of the Lord arise upon her as in the days of old. Visit, with thy special consolations, the sons and daughters of affliction. Let them receive, O Lord, this day a portion of the children's bread. We render our united thanksgivings for the blessings and privileges of the by-gone week, for the rest of the past night, and for the return of thy holy day. Unworthy of the least of all thy mercies, we cast ourselves on the exceeding riches of thy grace, in Jesus Christ our Lord; in whose words we sum up these our petitions, 'Our Father which art in heaven,' &c.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM IV.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS III. IV. and V.

PRINCIPAL DOCTRINES.

The III. Psalm has been generally considered as referring to the rebellion of Absalom, and the conspiracy which he fomented in Israel, against his father. No guilt can be conceived more atrocious than that of a child rebelling against his father and seeking his life, unless it be that of rebellion against God. David's Lord experienced persecution of the basest kind. His enemies hated him with a cruel hatred. He was wounded in the house of his friends. Jehovah is the defence and the glory of his people, when all created refuge faileth. Blessed is the man that trusteth in Him. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. God hath never said to any of the seed of Jacob, seek ye my face in vain. It is most upholding to know, that greater is He that is with us, than all that can be against us. The glory of the Church's salvation is to be ascribed to Jehovah alone: 'of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things.'

In Psalm IV. we are taught that the Lord is a hiding place from the tempest, and a covert from the storm, both of outward persecution and of inward trouble: that to Him the righteous run and are safe. We learn the peculiar honour which God puts upon the godly man, and the gracious answers which He vouchsafes to his prayers of faith. We are instructed in the duties of habitual reverence towards God, abstinence from wilful sin, self-examination, meditation, and communion with the Most High. No sacrifices will be acceptable to the Lord but sacrifices of righteousness. It is our duty and privilege to dedicate ourselves wholly unto God. This is, indeed, our reasonable service. All men have the desire of happiness, but it can be satisfied only by the enjoyment of God, and the uplifted light of his reconciled countenance. Great peace have they who love God's law, and nothing shall offend them.

In Psalm V. 1—3. we are taught the duty and privilege of early grateful prayer to God, as King and Lord of all. 4—9. As a God of everlasting holiness, hating iniquity and loving righteousness, He will destroy the wicked, and preserve his prayerful servants. He will banish the former from his presence, but the latter He will bring into his tabernacles, guide them by his counsel, and receive them to His glory. The treachery, cruelty, and deceit of the wicked against Christ and his church, are so great, that God alone is able to protect his people from their hatred, and to lead them in a plain path. Ver. 9. is a description of the natural character of all men, see Rom. iii. 9—20. The words 'destroy thou' in the original, are 'thou shalt destroy,' and to be understood either in the future or imperative sense, as a threatening, or as a prayer; in which latter case it is the Spirit of God, the advocate, vindicating, by David the type of Christ, the government of the holy and just God, in which all holy creatures will acquiesce and say 'even so, amen;' see Rev. i. 7. Ver. 11, 12. All the righteous shall rejoice in God, their refuge and their strength, their shield and buckler.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How deceitful and desperately wicked is the human heart! From whence come wars and fightings? Come they not hence, even of our lusts, which war in our members. Heaven is the region of perfect concord; of unclouded and immortal friendship. Into that blissful land there shall enter nothing that can hurt or destroy. Let us strive to breathe more of its spirit and temper whilst we are on earth. What precious experience David had, amidst all his troubles, of the help and the consolations of his God and Saviour. In all things, let us likewise, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, make our requests known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. With Jehovah as our sure defence, we need fear no evil. Myriads of wicked men and infernal spirits, cannot injure a hair of our head when God is on our side. If He be for us, who can be against us. 'Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword; nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through Him that loved us.' Opposition to pure and undefiled religion will, inevitably, cover all who indulge in it with shame and confusion of face. Our experience of the Lord's mercies ought to strengthen our faith in praying without ceasing, for the needed succours of His grace and Spirit. Prayer must be accompanied with 'the sacrifices of righteousness, for if we regard iniquity in our hearts, the Lord will not hear us.' Let our treasure and our heart be in heaven, that we may experience true and lasting gladness—joy unspeakable and full of glory.

How delightful to have access to the presence of God at all times, as a refuge from trouble and oppression. How delightful and animating 'in the morning,' even 'a great while before day,' like our blessed Lord, to lift up our souls in prayer to God. Let us avoid the path and the company of the wicked, for they shall be destroyed, 'all of them,' and angels and redeemed spirits shall acknowledge the justice of their condemnation; and while it is our duty, after this example of the Lord of glory, to long and pray for their forgiveness and salvation, even though our enemies, nevertheless we must acquiesce in the sovereign righteousness of God, in destroying the wicked, and say, 'even so, amen.' But let us remember, that by nature 'we are no better than they,' and that God alone can 'make us to differ,' and let our joy and praise be heard, because in punishing the wicked, God defends and blesses the faithful, though He 'plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.'

PRAYER.

Almighty and most merciful Lord God, who hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations, we would cast ourselves, this evening, upon thy wakeful care and grace. Thou causest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us. We have, this day, experienced thy gracious protection and loving-kindness. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits. We beseech thee, O God, to follow with thy richest blessing all the religious duties in which we and others have been engaged. May thy holy word sink deeply into our hearts. Forbid, O Lord, that it should prove to the condemnation of any of us that light is come into the world, but that we love darkness rather than light, because our deeds are evil. May we receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls. Grant that thy Holy Spirit may impart to us spiritual discernment of the truth as it is in Jesus—enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Him—and working in us both to will and to do of thy good pleasure. We beseech thee, good Lord, to forgive the sins and infirmities with which we are all chargeable in the duties of this thy holy Sabbath. In every thing we sin and come greatly short of thy glory. Be merciful, O Lord, to our unrighteousnesses: and remember not our transgressions against us. Grant that the whole services of the sanctuary on earth may be blessed for preparing us to join in the purer services of the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Lord, increase our faith, deepen our repentance, enlarge and sustain our charity towards all men. May we die daily unto sin, and live unto righteousness. May we stand in awe and sin not. May we commune with our own heart upon our bed in the night watches, and be still. Whatever be thy will concerning us, with respect to the good things of this life, be pleased to put gladness into our hearts; even the gladness of thy nation, that we may rejoice with thine inheritance. Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, and give us peace through the peace-speaking blood of the great atonement, and we will both lay ourselves down in peace and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest us dwell in safety.

O Lord our God, let thy way be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee. Restore thine ancient Israel, with the fulness of the Gentile nations. Grant that Pagan idolatry and the power of the man of sin, may be destroyed by the Spirit of the Lord and the word of his testimony. Revive thy work in the midst of the years: in the midst of the years make known: in wrath remember mercy. Bless and prosper thy true church: clothe thy priests with righteousness, and let thy saints shout for joy. Prosper vital religion in our hearts and families. Bless our Sovereign, and all in lawful authority. May they be ministers of God to us for good, both spiritual and temporal. Take us, and all near and dear to us, under thy divine protection. May we be defended by the Shepherd of Israel, who never slumbers nor sleeps. Into thy hands we commend ourselves—that, whether we wake or sleep, we may be the Lord's. Never leave nor forsake us. Be our God and guide, even unto death; and may we dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. Now, unto Him that is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE I. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS I.

PRINCIPAL DOCTRINES.

Ver. 1. Introductory to the sequel of the chapter, stating comprehensively, the creation of all things out of nothing, by the good pleasure of the Omnipotent. It deserves special notice, that in the original Hebrew, God is in the plural number; the verb 'created' in the singular—intimating, thereby, a plurality of persons with unity of will and of action. Ver. 3. This verse has been justly cited by writers on the sublime, as an irresistible evidence of the inspiration of Moses. The will of the Almighty is instantaneously followed by the thing willed. Ver. 5. 'The evening and the morning were the first day,' agreeably to the oriental computation of time, which was measured from one sun-setting to another. Ver. 11, 12. We are here taught, that the works of God are as entirely dependent upon Him for their productive powers, as for their original formation. Whatever they are, as blessings to the creature, they must be derived from the power and the beneficence of the Creator. Ver. 14—24. How varied and striking are the adaptations, enumerated in these verses, of the objects created to their several places and uses! The Divine providence is as conspicuous as the Divine supremacy. Ver. 26, 27. 'Let us make man in our own image.' So God created man in his own image; language which admits of satisfactory explanation only from the doctrine of the trinity in unity: resemblance to whose image includes all intellectual and moral perfections. Ver. 29, 30. 'The food convenient for us,' or for any other race of creatures, whatever secondary causes and instruments may contribute to its production, is the free gift of God, and to be used for his glory.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How gloriously do the finished works of creation manifest the being and attributes of Jehovah! 'For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead.' In rising from nature up to nature's God, every spiritual worshipper rejoices that 'the heavens declare his glory, and the firmament sheweth his handy work: that day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.' Man at his original creation, loved to contemplate heaven and earth, the sea, and all deep places, as bearing the impress of Him who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working. Creature enjoyments were not then pursued for their own sake, but as means of communion with the giver of every good and perfect gift; 'of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things.' What a mournful change has sin introduced by effacing from the soul that image of God, in which our first parents were created! 'How is the gold become dim? how is the most fine gold changed?' Ichabod, 'the glory hath departed,' is awfully visible where once God was all and in all. But there is revealed to the faith of every returning transgressor, another and a more glorious work of the Almighty, whereby apostate man is made a new creature in Christ Jesus: is born again of the Spirit, delivered from the bondage of corruption; and, according to God's promise, looks for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

PRAYER.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are all thy ways, thou King of saints. We adore thee, the former of our bodies, and the Father of our spirits; in whom we live, and move, and have our being. We humble ourselves in thy presence as sinful dust and ashes. Thou didst create us at first in thine own image, holy, just, and good. Thou hast continually preserved us, and given us all things richly to enjoy. Thou hast caused the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us. It is of thy mercies that we are not consumed, and because thy compassions fail not. Be pleased, O Lord God, to look upon us in the face of thine anointed. May we be found in Him. May we be washed and sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. Renouncing all confidence in the flesh, may we glory only in the Lord our Saviour, as made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. It is our prayer, that God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, may shine in our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. May the Holy Ghost form us anew in Christ Jesus, unto every good work. May He subdue the remaining enmity of our carnal minds; strengthen us with all might in the inner man; prepare our hearts for every Christian duty, and make us more than conquerors over sin and satan, death and hell, through Him that loved us and gave himself for us. Be pleased to sanctify to us, O Lord, for these purposes, the services of thy Sabbath, in which we were yesterday engaged. May we retain serious impressions of the things that belong to our present and eternal peace. In our transactions during this week, may we have grace to set the Lord always before us. May a sense of thy presence solemnize our minds. Hold thou up our goings, that our footsteps may not slide. Guide us by thy counsel, and afterwards bring us unto glory.

May thy way, O Lord, be made known upon earth, and thy saving health among all nations. Bless abundantly our native land. Be gracious to all ranks and conditions of men; high and low, old and young: thou art the Maker of them all. Comfort the sons and the daughters of affliction. Visit them in their times of trouble, in the multitude of thy tender mercies, and be thou a very present help. Never leave us, nor forsake us. Be our God and our guide, even unto death; and after death our exceeding great reward. Now, unto the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, the one true God, be glory everlasting. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE XIX. 4.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW I.

PRINCIPAL DOCTRINES.

The first verse of the New Testament intimates the divine and human natures of the Author and Finisher of our faith, in the one person of the anointed Saviour. Ver. 1. Genealogical history of our Saviour's descent from David, as proving his Messiahship; it having been predicted that he should spring from that monarch. 'The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne,' Psalm cxxii. 11. Ver. 18—20. We are taught that our Lord's incarnation is the object of faith, not of intellectual comprehension; that, in his human origin, as in his divinity, He is 'holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners.' 'Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh.' Ver. 21. Our Lord's distinctive character, 'the Saviour of his people from their sins,' embraces both his work of obedience and atonement in the flesh, and the omnipotent application of it by his Spirit to the heart and conscience. Ver. 22,

23. Prophecy an invaluable branch of Christian evidences. Ver. 24. Conduct of Joseph, eminently worthy of commendation, and graciously rewarded by God with special and supernatural guidance. 'If any man will do the will of God, he shall know the doctrine, whether it be of God.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let the church rejoice that the question of the inspired prophet, 'who shall declare his generation?' (Isaiah liii. 8.) has been most satisfactorily answered in this chapter, which contains 'the book of the generation of Jesus Christ.' Men frequently boast of a line of distinguished ancestry, as reflecting honour upon themselves. How few consider themselves ennobled by the fact, that 'the root and offspring of David' has become bone of their bone, and flesh of their flesh. Yet, what earthly relationship is to be compared in dignity with this? It is not, however, in this alone, or even mainly, that a Christian's elevation consists. As the Lord Jesus came into the world to 'save his people from their sins,' our spiritual deliverance, begun on earth, and consummated in heaven, is the blessed fruit of a vital union with the Saviour. If we come short of this, we have neither part nor lot in the primary blessing of our 'New Testament' dispensation. Let us be reminded that salvation is all of grace—'not of works, lest any man should boast.' 'He shall save his people.' They do not save themselves by any merit of their own. 'Jehovah hath become their salvation, redeeming them from all iniquity and purifying them unto himself, a peculiar people, zealous of good works,' Titus ii. 14. What cause of thankfulness is it, that 'no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.' For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; ver. 22. compared with 2d Peter i. 21.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most merciful Lord God, we beseech thee to pour out upon us, this evening, the spirit of grace and of supplication; that we may worship thee with reverence and godly fear. From everlasting to everlasting thou art God, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working. Unite our hearts in thy blessed service: and grant that our prayers may come up before thee with acceptance, through the all-prevailing merits and intercession of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, the righteous, in whom thou art ever well-pleased.

Blessed be thy name, that unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, through whom we have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Our souls would magnify the Lord: our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour. He that is mighty hath done for us great things, and holy is His name.

We adore thee, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hast so loved the world, that thou didst give thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Grant, we humbly implore thee, that we may have redemption through his blood—the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of thy mercy. May none of us neglect so great salvation, but may we receive it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief. Enlighten our minds, heavenly Father, in the knowledge of our guilt and unworthiness. Convince us by thy Holy Spirit, of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. May we be deeply humbled in thy sight, because of our numberless and aggravated transgressions. We pray, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we may have our conversation in the world. Deliver us from the love and prevalence of all iniquity; and renew us in the spirit of our minds, by the effectual working of thy mighty power. Cleanse thou us, O Lord our God, from secret faults. Keep back thy servants also from presumptuous sins: let them not have dominion over us. Work in us both to will and to do of thy good pleasure. May our faith in the Lord Jesus, who alone can save his people from their sins, be instrumental in purifying our hearts and overcoming the world. Vouchsafe to us thy grace and strength whereby we shall serve thee with all good fidelity, and endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. We unite in thanksgivings to thee, the Father of mercies, for thy protection and loving kindness towards us this day: and for all the goodness and mercy which thou art ever making to pass before us. May our experience of thy love constrain us to live, not to ourselves, but to him who died for us. O thou Shepherd of Israel, who never slumberest nor sleepest, we commit ourselves anew unto thee this night. Watch over us for good. If it be thy blessed will to spare us in the land of the living, may we awake to praise and honour thee, the God in whom we live, and move, and have our being. Be very gracious to all our dear friends. Bestow upon them thy richest blessing, even life that shall never end. Have mercy upon Zion. May thy beloved church be edified and comforted in all her borders. May her people be all righteous. Bless her provision, and satisfy her poor with bread. Let thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Sanctify afflictive visitations to all who are under thy chastening hand. May the fruit be unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Hear these, our unworthy supplications, and when thou hearest, forgive and accept for our great Redeemer's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE I. 7.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS II.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The universe is God's temple, and no sooner has the Sovereign architect finished the place of worship, than He ordains the Sabbath. By this He so unites the spiritual with the material parts of creation, that whilst the heavens declare his glory, the souls of men may, on a set day, behold what the heavens declare, and paying the homage that is due, remember the God in whom they live. God rested on the seventh day from all the works which he had made—thus adding the force of example to the authority of law; for it is further said, he sanctified, or set apart that day to himself, making the weekly Sabbath 'an ordinance for ever;' and he blessed it, or made it a blessing to his creatures who should keep it holy to him. Let it be remembered then, that the institution of the Sabbath is co-eval with the commencement of time; that the law of the Sabbath is written throughout the Bible with remarkable frequency: and that it is every where sanctioned by the Almighty, in terms the most terrible, or the most engaging; and let every parent, every child, every master, every servant of the household, 'remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.' It may be seen as well as read, that the devout observance of the Lord's day is followed with peace and prosperity, whilst Sabbath profanation never fails to draw down a curse, which wastes the substance, darkens the prospects, and pursues the soul of the sinner. 'Hallow my Sabbaths, and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.' We have read that the Lord God made man of the dust of the ground, from which lowly origin let us learn to be humble and mindful of death. But, let the sinner seek no solace to a guilty conscience in the dissolution of the body; for a different origin, and one unconnected with dust, is ascribed to the spirit in man,—'The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul;' and so when the body returns to dust as it was, the spirit ascends to God that gave it. That we may fear sin as the only evil, and seek God as the only good, let us see, by the goodness shown to sinless man, that God is love. For man's abode, He planted a garden called Eden, which signifies delight. He watered it and made it fruitful, with every tree that was fair to the eye and good for food; those patterns of heavenly things, doubtless, implying the heavenly things themselves, by which the creature, made after the image of the Creator, was supremely blessed. But as a proof that no happiness is to be found in idleness, Adam was put in the garden 'to keep and dress it.' Thus, in nature's plan, a place is made for human hands; and delightful task it is, by ingenious arts, to add to the beauties of nature; but let no one, unless he can plead a birth and dominion higher than Adam had, complain of labour, for idleness is misery; and the law is just and good, which says, 'if a man will not work, neither shall he eat.' The single restriction as to the fruit of one tree, is no objection to the goodness of God. As God must rule, it was fit that there should be a test of the creature's allegiance; and the forbidden tree being only one of many, the prohibition was the least, whilst the trial was the best. The words of restriction were alike peremptory and plain; the precept was positive, not moral; it did not forbid murder or other crimes to which man's nature, being yet sinless, was not inclined; but it imposed an obligation which might be known to have its source simply in the Divine will, without obedience to which God could not be glorified and could not be enjoyed. It is a farther manifestation of the goodness of God, that man had nothing to fear from the lower creatures; as all their tribes of various temper and power came to him with one accord, and in token of friendly submission, to receive their names; and then, for the completion of his felicity, God seeing that with all other good, it was not good for Adam to be alone, took one of his ribs and made a woman, and brought her unto the man; at the same time, in behalf of posterity, ordaining, in these terms, the marriage law; that 'a man shall leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh.' This ordinance, in the state of innocency, and when the world was least peopled, is a proof that polygamy, which is fertile in strife, and results from tyranny of the stronger sex, is as contrary to the divine law, as it is to the order of nature, and to the excellent economy of the family tie. Let husbands and wives, then, remember their vow; and seek its fulfilment, according to the words of the apostle, as they would seek the blessing of their heavenly Father. 'Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it. Let every one of you in particular, so love his wife, even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art a spirit, and no man hath seen thee at any time: thou goest by and we see thee not, thou passest on also and we perceive thee not; yet art thou nigh to every one of us, for in thee we live and move, and have our being. The darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: thou lookest unto the ends of the earth, and seest under the whole heaven: neither is there any creature that is not manifest in thy sight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. Thou knowest our sitting down and our rising up; thou understandest our thoughts afar off, and art intimately acquainted with all our ways. Thou hast preserved us through the silent watches, and brought us unto the light of a new day. We would this day acknowledge thee our Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer; we would seek thy favour, and remember the account that we have to give.

From everlasting to everlasting thou art God, but all flesh is as grass; we all do fade as the leaf: and our iniquities like the wind have carried us away. Thou didst form man of the dust of the ground: thou didst breathe into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Thou madest him after thine own image, and didst crown him with glory and honour. But how is the fine gold become dim! the crown is fallen from our heads: woe is unto us, for we have sinned. Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; but the Lord pondereth the hearts. There is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good and sinneth not. We are guilty, O Lord, and deserve that wrath which is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness and ungodliness of men. We bless thee that thou hast laid our help upon one that is mighty to save. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. O Lord, let thy Holy Spirit take of the things that are of Christ, and show them to us, that we may know our need of a Saviour, and flee for refuge to the hope set before us in the gospel. Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. By a living faith, may we be interested in all the benefits of the Saviour's death; and show, in our renewed hearts and holier lives, the power of his resurrection. Create in us, O God, a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us. Sanctify us through thy truth, that dying daily unto sin, and living unto righteousness, we may grow daily in conformity to thy will, and be prepared to meet our God. May the like mind be in us which was in Christ.

Follow with thy blessing our reading of thy word and our meditations at this time. May we profit by every opening of thy book. Teach us to hallow thy Sabbaths, to reverence thy sanctuary, to wait upon thee in all thy ordinances, that we may renew our strength; and do thou grant us in this and every season of grace refreshing from thy presence. Lord, dwell in this house and family. Never leave us, and never forsake us. In our several places, duties, and relations, may we all have a single eye to thy service, and do all things to thy glory. Shed abroad thy love in our hearts, that we may love the Lord our God with all our heart, and soul, and mind, and strength; that as thou hast loved us, we may love one another with pure hearts fervently; that we may bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Let the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, find acceptance with thee, through Christ our strength, and our Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII. 9.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The wise men, guided by a star, having found Jesus, opened their treasures and presented him with gifts. And if these distant Magi came on an errand of homage, and were led by a star, what shall be said of us, whom the day-spring from on high hath visited, if we refuse to bring presents to him, and accept the salvation which he bestows? Surely these less gifted sages of the East will rise up in judgment against us.

Warned of God by a dream, the wise men take their way homeward, without returning to Herod with farther information; and thus time is gained for securing the safety of the infant Jesus. The providence, by which he is carried out of Herod's reach, and kept in Egypt till they were dead who sought his life, is just that same holy, wise, and all-ruling providence, which we ought at all moments to consult; and in which, amidst all dangers, we may safely confide. Preserved amidst such perils, and reared to man's estate, when he enters on the ministry of his kingdom, our Lord teaches his disciples, as the children of his Father, to trust in the same providential care that guarded him. 'Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.' God does nothing in vain. Providence and grace have no contrariety; but both, proceeding from the same loving heart, are directed by the same unerring counsel, and the same omnipotent hand. A heavenly Father tended all the steps of the child Jesus, that the gift unspeakable might not be lost to the world; and the like care will he take of all who, believing in Christ, have the adoption of sons: he will save them from harm, or make all things work together for their good.

To make sure of killing Christ, and being stung with resentment, because the wise men did not return to tell the place of the Saviour's birth, Herod sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof. Whilst we are satisfied that the dealings of providence are all in perfect harmony with those of grace, we have yet humbly to confess, that a deep mystery frequently envelops the path of the divine procedure. But though it be hard to think of this inhuman murder, and to say to Him that ruleth over all, 'thy will be done;' yet have we a joyful hope in the death of infants. Christ, the Lamb of God, was slain from the foundation of the world; and at all times his death was equally efficacious. He is able to save even the chief of sinners; and how not able to save these little ones who never denied him, and may be regarded as martyrs to his cause? When we look to the ruthless hand that could dis sever so tender a tie as that which bound the infant to the mother's breast, let us look also to the love that embraces the infant soul on its arrival in glory, and it will be easier to say, 'thy will be done.' But the heart sickens at the sight of the wretched tyrant, who, growing hard in crime and fearless by impunity, seems eager, in old age, to finish more wickedness before he dies, and to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath; and we read his retribution, in the disquietude that sought peace by the ceaseless murder of those whom his guilt suspected; in the fearful looking for of judgment, which shall be without mercy to them that showed no mercy; in a conscience growing more tormenting by the very vices which its rage demanded, and in the worms of which he died—an emblem and probable foretaste of the worm that dieth not. Such rulers, whilst they persecuted our Lord, and by their abuse of power filled the world 'with lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning,' afforded an affecting proof of the world's utmost need of one who should proclaim glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, and good will to the children of men. Let us thank God for better laws. We owe them to the advent of his Son. And if the enemy be not all subdued, let it be enough, should we suffer persecution for righteousness' sake, that the servant must not be above his Lord; for he also suffered, and gave himself for us. 'It is a faithful saying: for, if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: if we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we adore thee as our Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer; the God in whom we live, and with whom we have to do. We adore thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have access to thy throne, and in whom thou art reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses.

We would offer unto thee the sacrifice of praise, with thanksgiving, for all the goodness and mercy which thou art daily making to pass before us. Thou hast heard our morning prayer; thou hast preserved us throughout the day, thou art still supplying our wants, and giving us all things richly to enjoy. Above all, O God, we thank thee for the gift of thy Son; for the means of grace, and the hope of glory. Bless to us at this time the reading of thy word. May it be the sealed instruction of thy Spirit, and may the fruit be unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Look on the face of thine anointed, and look in mercy upon us; for thy name's sake, for thy mercy's sake blot out all our transgressions; receive us graciously, heal all our backslidings, and love us freely. Enable us to lead a life of faith in thy Son; to hate every false way, to depart from evil and do good; to add to our faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity; that these things being in us, and abounding, we may neither be barren nor unfruitful, in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. And may we give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, that we may never fall; that we may endure temptation, that we may be faithful until death, that so an entrance may be ministered unto us abundantly, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Take us all, O Lord, under thy protecting care during the silent watches: suffer no evil thing to come nigh our dwelling; make us to lie down in peace, and to dwell safely under the cover of thy wings. Bring us, if it be thy holy will, into the light of a new day, and when we awake, may we be still with thee. We know not, O Lord, what trials may yet await us; but do thou prepare us for all that thou hast prepared for us. We adore thee for the riches of thy grace, and we will trust in the wisdom of thy providence. Thy chastisements are not for thy pleasure, but for our profit; thou dost not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men. We would look to him who endured the cross for our sakes, and who, in that he suffered, being tempted, is able to succour us when we are tempted. The very hairs of our head are all numbered, and not a sparrow falleth to the ground without thee. We will trust in thee and not be afraid; for thou, the Lord Jehovah, art our strength and our song, thou also art become our salvation. We commend to thee all who are dear to us. Watch over them and bless them; and may they all, together with us, be kept by thy power through faith unto eternal life. And all that we ask is in the name of Christ, and for his sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS III.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

We shrink with horror from the sight of a serpent, because we know its venom, and would save our lives; but a child, having no apprehension of danger, will admire the beauty of the reptile, and run to caress it. All the lower creatures being good in God's sight, must also have appeared good to the eye of man, whilst he was yet innocent like his Maker; and the worst of creatures now, might be the most winning then; for none were noxious when they came to Adam, in token of submission, to receive their names. The serpent therefore being as little dreaded as a lamb, and more subtle than any beast of the field, was selected by Satan, as the cover of his wiles and the instrument of his malice. So disguised, the arch-fiend said unto the woman, when he found her alone, 'Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?' God so good! why this needless restriction? surely there must be some mistake. Of a kindred spirit are those modern tempters who raise doubts either as to the amount of canonical scripture, or the meaning of any part; alleging, for the one uncertainty, the obscurity of history, for the other, the diversity of sects; and then insinuating that God has not made any certain communication of his will at all. Let every immortal soul see the necessity of diligent reading, with prayer, for the divine teaching, that he may know the truth as it is in Jesus, and be able to set his seal to the certainty of what God hath spoken; and then it will be easy, knowing what spirit they are of, to resist all such tempters.

The devil, having probably observed some wavering as the effect of his first assault, proceeded to a bolder step, as tempters always do; and in direct opposition to the word of God asserted, 'ye shall not surely die.' If first there was a doubt as to the meaning of that word, there would next be less fear of the threatened punishment; and to a mind that in the smallest swerves from the firm holding of any truth, the most arrant lie against that truth, from whatever lips, will not be without effect. And having thus inspired the hope of impunity, the serpent, with consummate guile, began to reckon the immediate advantages which might be gained by eating of the forbidden tree. 'Your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil;' and that, too, in the very day that you eat, as God knows; you shall see the most distant things as well as those that are near; things in heaven as well as things on earth; what peoples the remotest star, and what upholds the universe; from which grand sights you are debarred, having your eyes, as yet, but partially opened; and then, as knowledge is power, you will not be subject to God at all, but be his equal. And thus the tempter suggests, that God knowing such wisdom to be the effect of the forbidden tree, had prohibited his creatures from its taste, either because he grudged them so lofty an enjoyment, or was afraid to intrust them with a power that might rival his own.

By these temptations Satan prevailed; and doubtless it was for wise and holy ends that God permitted the success of the enemy's wiles. But see now the woful consequences. The woman having consented to Satan, becomes in her turn a tempter, and prevails with the man, as the serpent did with her. The voice of God, till now their best delight, has become their terror; and on hearing his voice, they think to hide themselves amongst the trees of the garden. Wretched sinners! is this the amount of your new wisdom? to hide from God! might not He that made the sun take it as a candle in his hand to search those trees; and what then would become of you and your sheltering leaves?

Their fallen and their foolish hearts being darkened, they are called to a reckoning with their Maker; and every answer they gave goes only to show that all truth and wisdom and allegiance are laid in the dust. They own no sin, but seek an excuse by false pretences, and betake themselves to a refuge of lies. What beguiling could there be with regard to a precept so plain? And whilst both offenders shift the blame from themselves, they have the hardihood indirectly to lay it upon God. 'The serpent, that subtle creature of thy making; the woman that thou gavest to be with me.' When we read such a defence, let us view the deceitfulness of our own hearts; and thinking of a judgment to come, remember that all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.

In such frame of spirit, when we see that in all this confession of our first parents, there is no repentance, no truth, no love to God; but ignorance, hardness of heart, and accusation of their Creator; when it is seen that these are the natural consequences, or the concomitants of their first sin; and that the act itself, by which they rebelled, was the violation of a precept remarkably plain, and which, as it respected no moral obligation, being simply a positive injunction, was more obviously, as it was more fit to be, a test of the creature's affiance; and when we perceive that not the earth only, but the universe, was concerned; that if there might be within nature's bounds, any act at once uncontrolled, and contrary to the will of her Founder, the very foundations of nature were shaken to their base; we shall, so reflecting, stand aloof in dread abhorrence of the impiety which cavils at the account of man's fall, on the ground that eating of the forbidden tree was a slight offence.

Let our hearts be humbled. The proofs of our guilty origin we have not only in our Bible; they stand thick around us: the world's history written in blood; idolatry in all lands; death reigning; sin in every soul from the dawn of thought; the sufferings and early demise of tender babes; the testimony of conscience; all conspire to prove the doctrines of man's fall, and the reality of the curse that came upon the ground for man's sake. 'By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.' But let our souls rejoice in the gospel promise recorded in this chapter. 'The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent.' When the fulness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. He was delivered for our offences; He was raised again for our justification. He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him. If by one man's offence, death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Amen.

PRAYER.

O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth. Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who shall not fear thee and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy. Thou art of purer eye than to behold evil; thou art angry with the wicked every day: thine eye is in every place beholding the evil and the good. Who shall stand before thee, O holy Lord God? We have all sinned and done evil in thy sight: we have provoked thee to anger, we have deserved thy wrath; we are less than the least of thy mercies. As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned; who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one. What is man that he should be clean? and he that is born of a woman that he should be righteous? Behold thou puttest no trust in thy saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in thy sight. How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water. Every imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?

O Lord, we have destroyed ourselves, but in thee is our help. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for He hath visited and redeemed His people. We are encouraged to come unto thee, because thou art good, and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them that call upon thee. We bless thee, O God, for thy gracious promise that 'the seed of the woman should bruise the head of the serpent.' We thank thee, O God, for that early dawn of gospel light; and for all the grace and love which thou hast ever since manifested towards thy church and people. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. May our hearts be united unto him by a living faith, that we may partake of all his benefits. May he be made to each one of us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.

Let thy blessing accompany all the means of grace with which we are favoured. Bless our retirement for prayer, and communion with thyself; our meeting around the family altar, our sabbaths, and the services of thy sanctuary; and may thy word not return unto thee void, but be as the good seed sown in our hearts, that it may bring forth in some thirty, in some sixty, and in some an hundred fold. We invoke thy care and protection throughout this day. Keep us from every evil work, from proud thoughts, and the snares of the devil. Give us this day our daily bread, contentment with our lot, and thankfulness for all thy mercies. Bless all men. Our heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel, is that they may be saved. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in all the earth as it is in heaven. These our prayers we offer up in the name of thy Son, our Saviour. Hear, O Lord, and do for us above all that we can ask or think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXII. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW III.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The Bible being a history of God's church, and a record of the divine will, has small regard to man's curiosity. The gratification of this would, in a human composition, naturally be a first object; in the sacred scriptures it is evidently the last. Of such glorious persons as Christ and John the Baptist, it would be interesting to know many things concerning their early days; but whilst the preceding chapter speaks only of the Saviour's infancy, this begins with a time when he is nearly thirty years of age; and of John, this Evangelist says nothing, till he presents him preaching in the wilderness of Judea. That was the dawn of a new day in a valley without vision, and after a night of 300 years without a prophet. Well might the people long for, and much their darkness needed the appearance of, Him who was the expectation of Israel, and came to be the light and the life of the world. And as the rising sun sends first a fainter ray, to prepare the eye for the brightness of his coming; so the Lord of glory had in John a forerunner, who, like the modest dawn, bore witness to the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

The description of his person, meanly attired and poorly fed, and crying in a desert, was becoming alike the preacher of repentance and the herald of a king whose kingdom was not of this world.

Such mortification, not of body but of spirit, and well proved by an earnest and godly sincerity, unlike the mendicant cloak of knavery, too frequently worn, is of great power both to attract the regard and overawe the minds of those, who have the witness of conscience that they are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. And hence, moved partly by his austerity, and partly by the prophecies going before, together with the evidence of his being a prophet, Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the regions round about Jordan went out to John, and were baptized by him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

That comparatively few of those multitudes did indeed receive Christ, and bring forth the fruits meet for repentance, will be no excuse to us in the day of reckoning. Let our minds be impressed with the necessity of repentance. 'Render your hearts and not your garments,' was the constant language of the Old Testament prophets. John was sent in New Testament times to declare the same thing; and Christ came to give repentance to Israel and the remission of sins. The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin, and his invitation is, 'come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' But be it well known, that with all the plenitude of his power to save, and all the fervour of a love that is stronger than death, and all the pity of a brother, touched with a feeling of our infirmities, he declares of all men, whatever be their virtues, or their rank, that 'except they repent, they shall all likewise perish.' Let no man deceive himself: this is the Lord's word, and He is judge, and will show in the judgment that His word shall stand. It is no formal repentance that is enjoined by the forerunner of Christ; but that which is proved to be genuine by its proper fruits: 'bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance.' And of this work of repentance there must be no delay; for the axe is laid to the root of the tree. Wherefore let no impenitent soul look for safety under the impending stroke; for every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

It is a great encouragement to this repentance, and to a cordial reliance on Christ, that He is at once so condescending and exalted; so careful to fulfil all righteousness, and so witnessed in his baptism, by the opening of heaven, the descent of the Spirit, and the voice of His Father: saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Beloved of God, because He was faithful as a Son, and wrought so great salvation for us; and shall we not love Him with all our hearts, as the most amiable being ever presented to the eyes of men; and who in His love, and in His pity, laid down His life for our sakes. The opening of the heavens showed that they were no longer as a canopy of brass over the prison house of a guilty and godless world; but that a way was opened, that as the eye of God followed his Son in His exile, it would rest with complacency on all who should embrace Him; and as the Spirit descended on Him it should descend also on us, that He who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified might be all of one; and He their Lord not ashamed to call them brethren. The Spirit is holy, and the dove-like figure betokened peace. Let us follow peace with all men, and holiness; without which no man shall see the Lord.

PRAYER.

We bless thee, O God, who at sundry times and divers manners didst speak, in time past, unto the fathers by the prophets, that thou hast in these last days spoken unto us by thy Son. Thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion and gracious, long-suffering, slow to anger, and plentiful in mercy. Thou art good to all, and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beside thee; neither is there any rock like our God.

We have all sinned and come short of thy glory. We have forsaken thee, the fountain of living waters, and have hewn out to ourselves, cisterns; broken-cisterns, that can hold no water. Alienated from thee by wicked works, we have followed our own devices, and deserve to be filled with the fruit of our doings. Receiving from day to day the gifts of thy providence, and hearing the calls of thy gospel, we have lived unmindful of thee, and have neglected the great salvation. Lord, what shall we render unto thee, for the gift of thy Son, and all the goodness thou art making to pass before us? Yea, rather, what shall we answer unto thee, for the mercy we have despised, and the grace we have received in vain? All souls are thine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is thine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die. Out of the depths would we cry unto thee, O Lord. Lord, hear our voice; let thine ear be attentive to the voice of our supplications. Thou hast promised that a new heart thou wilt give us; that thou wilt put thy Spirit within us; and cause us to walk in thy statutes, to keep thy judgments, and do them; yet, for this, thou wilt be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them. We ask, O God, and trust in thy grace, that we shall bountifully receive. Give us repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; fill our hearts with that godly sorrow which worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of. We have been as sheep going astray; let us now, with grief for our sin, and godly sincerity, return unto the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. May we be owned and accepted in the Beloved; may we be brought nigh by the blood of Christ; may we taste and see that thou art gracious. Shed abroad thy love in our hearts, that loving thee, we may love thy law, and delight to do thy will; that, waiting upon thee in all thy ordinances, we may renew our strength; that we may lead lives of faith in thy Son; that we may bring forth fruits meet for repentance; and glorify thee in our body, and in our spirit, which are thine.

Bless us as a family, and bless every individual apart; bless our basket and our store, and the fruit of our labour; may our souls prosper and be in health. We would acknowledge, with gratitude, thy goodness in the day that is past; and now that thou hast drawn over us the shadow of night, we would remember the night of the grave, and the reckoning for eternity. We desire to lay us down in thy fear, knowing that darkness hideth not from thee; to stand in awe and sin not; to commune with our own hearts and be still; to offer sacrifices of righteousness, and put our trust in the Lord. Be with us on the return of a new day. Guide us by counsel while we live, and receive us to thy glory when we die. All that we ask is in the name, and for the sake of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LV. 21.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS IV.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

God created not the earth in vain, but to be inhabited. Adam's forfeited life therefore is prolonged, and his seed begin to multiply. But soon, alas, it becomes evident, that he has miserably fallen, and that his children inherit both the corruption and the curse! Observe first, in what circumstances the first human family is formed. Every member of it is born beyond the precincts of paradise; and as they grow up to manhood they enter on the toils of a wilderness life. Observe, again, the character of Adam's family. It is already manifest, that 'a blessing is in it;' that from the fountain of eternal love, a renewing and healing influence has descended on the hearts of some of its members. Eve devoutly acknowledges God's hand in the birth of her first-born; and Adam maintains God's worship, and trains his sons to the stated observance of it. But even their worship discovers their sin and guilt. Cain is heartless and proud, wanting in the reverence which befits the creature, and in the contrition which becomes the sinner, before the high and holy God. Abel offers unto God a more excellent sacrifice—a lamb of the flock, expressive of conscious guilt and deserved death, and of his hope of mercy only through atoning blood. Therefore, God who giveth grace unto the humble, has respect unto Abel and his offering, probably sending fire from heaven to consume it. But unto Cain and his offering he had not respect; for God knoweth the proud afar off. How blessed is the experience of Abel: being justified by faith he has peace with God. What a wretch is Cain! he burns with wrath, when he should have been subdued into godly sorrow; directs that hatred against God, which should have been directed against his own ungodly deeds; and nurses his malice and envy against his brother, whose righteous works, and gracious acceptance, ought to have furnished a pattern and encouragement to his own repentance. And O how appalling the fruit of his wounded pride and his cherished hatred. It breaks out in murderous violence, and the earth opens her mouth to receive his brother's blood. Alas, what dispeace, and distrust, and sorrow, had already invaded this first family, whom God's law, if kept, would have knit together in bonds of love and peace.

Do we mourn the fate of righteous Abel, and brood over the mysterious providence which suffered him to be slain? But, is not his death happy and honourable, who, by whatever means, dies in peace with God? who dies for the sake of righteousness? and whose death has distinguished him as the first of martyrs, and the first of redeemed and saved sinners in heaven? Why should it be thought a mystery, that when ripe for their change, however early in life, men should be taken away to enjoy God?

Much rather may we pity the life of Cain. Alas, he lives a vagabond on the earth, the victim of agonizing remorse, yet of obdurate impenitency; striving to flee from God; to forget the memory of his sin, and to exclude the anticipation of the judgment when God shall make inquisition for blood. How bitter and deadly are the native fruits of sin in the first-born of men. How infinite our obligations to converting or restraining grace, which keeps in check the evil passions of our fallen nature, and prevents the world from being turned into a field of blood.

Cain's family multiply and learn of their father his evil ways. Yet, though debased in morals, they are skilful both in the useful and elegant arts which minister much to earthly enjoyment, but are little helpful to the higher ends of our moral and immortal nature. There is great obscurity in the speech of Lamech. But it plainly intimates, that deeds of blood were not unknown, and that lighter sins already abounded among the posterity of Cain. Why?—may some ask—Why was not righteous Abel preserved to raise up a godly seed? For this, among other reasons, that God might show that he is not dependent on any; that though Abel die, God shall not be without a seed to serve him. Hence, Seth is born to fill the place of Abel, and is made the father of a pious family, to revive the neglected worship, and to testify for the rightful honours, of their God.

PRAYER.

O Thou who wilt be sanctified in all them that draw nigh unto thee, enable us, on the return of the hour of prayer, to approach the footstool of thy throne with true hearts, and with unfeigned faith. We know that thou hearest not sinners, and how then may we hope that thou shouldest hear us when we call upon thee? We do not forget, O God, that we are sinners in thy sight—that we are the degenerate children of a fallen father; by nature, children of disobedience, and therefore children of wrath. Yet from the beginning thou hast been known as the Hearer of prayer. Thou hast had respect to the persons and offerings of men, born under sin, even as we: and we believe, that we too may be saved, even as they. O thou God of grace and salvation, assist and direct us to come in the spirit of thine accepted worshippers. We plead the sacrifice of the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world; over it we confess and bewail our guilt; and on the ground of its all-atoning merit, we entreat thee to receive us graciously, to heal our backslidings, to love us freely. Having an High Priest over the house of God, even Jesus, the Son of God, we long to have all the distrust of guilt dispelled, and all the distance to which it has driven us from thee overcome, and our minds filled with the peace of God, and restored to a life of communion with thee. Mercifully deliver us from the dominion of sin, from the unbelieving and impenitent heart, from the proud, and envious, and uncharitable spirit, and from every forbidden and fatal way. Enable us to cultivate obedience to thy good and holy law. Clothe us with humility; open our ear to thy rebukes. Make us truly penitent for all our sin. Replenish us with all the graces of the Spirit, and let us be filled with all the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the glory and the praise of God.

Thou God of all the families of the earth, and of those families especially who call upon thy name, be thou the God of this family. O that we were all united in the same mind and in the same judgment, that family affection may continue and increase; that not one of all this domestic circle may live as an alien from God, and a stranger to those Christian sympathies which at once hallow and endear the bonds of social life. May one and all of us have one faith, and be found, in all our intercourse, adding to our faith, godliness, and brotherly kindness, and charity.

O Lord, let the blessed power of Christian love gather strength and prevalence throughout this fallen world. Let all enmity between man and man be slain by the power of the cross. Let Jew and Gentile be united in the bond of Christian brotherhood. Let all divisions in thy church be healed, and let all, with one mind and one mouth, unite in ascribing salvation unto Him who hath redeemed us out of all nations by his own blood.

We unite in presenting to thee our thanksgivings, for our preservation to another day. Let us all this day live as becometh brethren, in unity. Keep us from all evil, help us in all our duty, and preserve us all by thy power unto eternal life, through the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCVIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW IV.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Jesus, the beloved Son of God, knew no sin, and could not be tempted with evil. Still, it was both possible and important, that he should endure temptation. It served to prove and display his character, as the holy One of God: to evince his power, and to advance his cause, as the conqueror of Satan, and the destroyer of his works; and to accomplish or perfect him as the Captain of salvation, and the faithful and merciful High Priest of his people, who having himself suffered, being tempted, might be able to sympathise with and to succour them that are tempted. Wherefore, he was led of the Spirit to be tempted of the devil. There is a deep and awful mystery in this experience of the Son of God. Yet there is much precious instruction and comfort in it. It shows us that temptation is under divine guidance, and the tempter himself subject to divine control—that when God gives grace he will try it—that with the disciple, as with his Lord, seasons of most signal privilege may generally prove the precursors of severest trials; and that the desolate wilderness, and the lovely Eden; the mountain solitude, and the crowded city; the consecrated temple, and the mart of merchandise, equally admit and invite their approach. First, the devil finds the Saviour fasting, and tries, through the medium of his hunger, to provoke him to impatience, and insinuate distrust of God's paternal care and love. Finding him immovable in his filial confidence and submission, he next tries, on the ground of God's promised and confided protection, to urge him to the opposite extreme of pride and presumption. And when this also has failed, as a last and desperate effort he offers him the kingdoms of the world, which he came to redeem as his inheritance, by his blood, for the easy but forbidden tribute of an idolatrous homage. It matters nothing to this enemy of souls, through what means he can prevail. It is enough for his malignant purpose, if he can entice to sin in any form, whether through our privations, our privileges, or our prospects; by the lust of the flesh, or the lust of the eye, or the pride of life. But the prince of this world had nothing in Jesus. With holy abhorrence and with triumphant power, he repelled each successive assault, until, baffled and discomfited in all his wiles, the devil left him. And mark the weapon with which the Saviour overcame. It is the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. It is written—it is written—it is written; introducing the appropriate scripture, used in assured faith, was his sole, but his effectual defence. This armour of heavenly proof has been bequeathed to us. Let us use it after Christ's example, and in our hands, as in his, it will prove mighty through God to repel all the darts of the wicked, and to make us partakers of the Saviour's victory.

While Jesus is thus assaulted by the old serpent, John the Baptist is persecuted by the serpent's seed.

Herod added this to all his other sins, that he shut up John in prison. On hearing of this deed of enmity against God's cause and kingdom, Jesus withdrew to the remote parts of Galilee, which were under the jurisdiction of Philip, a milder and more tolerant prince. Into these regions which sat in darkness, and in the shadow of death, Jesus, as Isaiah (ix. 2.) had foretold, carried the light of his gospel. He preached repentance, which is gospel doctrine, glad tidings of great joy to sinners. Here he began to call his disciples. Their ready obedience to his call displayed his kingly power, while their humble condition intimated that his kingdom should not be of this world, not built by human might and power, but by the Spirit of the Lord. Here, too, he cast out many devils, and healed all manner of sickness and disease among the people; thus confirming his high claims, and illustrating the grace of his kingdom as founded on the overthrow of satan's power, and effectuating the pardon and blessedness of his saved people; while the multitudes flocking to him from every quarter, gave happy omen and earnest of his future universal triumphs, when all nations shall be blessed in him, and all nations shall call him blessed.

PRAYER.

O Thou who art holy, who dost abhor all sin, and with whom evil cannot dwell! wherewithal shall we appear in thy presence? We are prone to evil. Like our first father, we have been more ready to give ear to the false and unholy suggestions of satan than to give heed to thy words of truth, and thy precepts of holiness. Alas, we have given place to the devil, and, but for the riches of thy mercy and forbearance, might, ere now, have had part in his condemnation. With our whole hearts would we bless thee, O Lord, that thou who sparedst not the angels which sinned, but didst cast them down to hell, hast been mercifully pleased to spare us; that thou hast sent thy beloved Son into the world to destroy the works of the devil; to redeem us from guilt, and sin, and death, and hell; as the fruit of his victory, to restore our right to the tree of life, and by the power of his grace to prepare us anew for the paradise of God. O thou who art the God of all grace, suffer not that our hearts should be insensible to that unsearchable love which prompted the errand of thy Son into the world, and sustained him all through his life of deep humiliation and manifold temptations. Let not one among us continue in league with satan, and at enmity against God and his Christ. Recover us out of the snare of the devil. Enable us to wield the sword of the Spirit after the example, and in the strength, of the Lord Jesus. Amid straits and difficulties, help us to possess our souls in patience, and to hold fast our confidence in thy faithfulness and love. In circumstances of outward prosperity, and in the experience of spiritual privileges, let us not be high-minded but fear; and whatever prospect of advantage be set before us, let us be strong to resist or refuse it, when its acceptance would require unfaithfulness to thee. Vouchsafe to us severally, an interest in all the grace of Christ's kingdom. Bring us out of darkness into thy marvellous light. Make us willingly obedient, and cordially devoted to thy service. Cause us to experience, and help us to exemplify, the precious fruits of thy Spirit, in our release from the dominion of all sin, and in our gradual advancement in the health, and vigour, and maturity of the spiritual life.

We pray for the downfall of satan's kingdom; give unto thy Son the heathen for his inheritance, and all the kingdoms of the world for his possession. Unto Him let every knee bow, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth; and every tongue confess that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Be thou the light and defence of all dear to us. Be especially gracious to this family. Let all under this roof abide under thy shadow. We offer our grateful thanks for thy care over us throughout the day. We ask thee to blot out the sins of the day—all our sins, in the blood of the Lamb of God. We commit ourselves to thy faithful keeping throughout the night, and would desire to be preserved by thy power, through faith unto everlasting life. And unto the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be ascribed the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS VI.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Men do not improve, but degenerate as they multiply on the earth. When sinners abound, seductions to sin are more powerful; restraints upon it more feeble; the power of conscience is more apt to be overborne, and even a regard to character to be cast away amid the urgency of besetting temptations and evil example. Thus evil men and seducers wax worse and worse. How disastrous this effect of evil communications on the sons of Seth! For their piety they had been distinguished by the name of 'sons of God.' But alas! for the instability of human goodness; instead of withstanding and restraining the rising tide of corruption, they are borne before it, and already mingle with, and swell the torrent. From early habit, and for the sake of family distinction, they might still maintain a form of godliness; but, their marriage with the ungodly was the effect of existing, and the cause of an increasing degeneracy; 'they were carnal and did walk as men,' and were soon too sure to fall away from all their distinctions as the sons of God. These ungodly alliances, formed in a breach of consistency on the part of God's professing people, embarrass and enfeeble all subsequent efforts to maintain a consistent piety; they hinder family religion, they divide and impair parental influence, and unsettle or subvert the principles, and enfeeble or destroy the character, of a succeeding generation. Either they are a snare or a cross, for how can two walk together except they be agreed? For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Wherefore be not unequally yoked with the unbelieving or ungodly. The effects of these unequal unions in the sons of Seth may well dissipate all the delusions by which the flesh pleads for them, in so many of the seeming and sincere children of God. They increased unto more ungodliness. The sons of God being thus joined to the daughters of men, the whole family of men are become 'flesh,' one unmingled mass of corruption. God's Spirit, long resisted, had all but ceased to strive with man; and the poisoned fountains of fallen nature being no more healed and purified by the infusions of His grace, sent forth only polluted streams. What a sight now meets the eye of God when he looketh upon man; his heart in its inmost thoughts 'evil, only evil, always evil,' and how mournful and humiliating the fruits of it, as realized universally in his character and experience. The earth is filled with corruption and violence; all are become enemies to God, and to one another; and gross ungodliness, and hateful selfishness, and oppression, and cruelty, lay waste both the virtue and the happiness of the human family.

As God beheld this sad degeneracy, it repented God that He had made man, and it grieved Him at the heart. This is spoken after the manner of man. God's omniscient mind and infallible purpose preclude his literal experience of such disappointment and regrets as are here expressed. But it intimates how deep and dreadful is the ruin which sin has wrought on the work of God. Behold, says He, the end of all flesh is come before me; 'He that made them will not have mercy on them, and He that formed them will show them no favour.'

Amid this crooked and perverse generation, Noah alone is found just, and sincere, and faithful; like Enoch, he walked with God, in the peace of reconciliation, in the paths of righteousness, and in the privilege of communion with God. God therefore 'who giveth more grace,' shows favour to him—and, agreeably to the great principle on which His gracious covenant proceeds, to his family also for his sake. Wherefore when the world shall be destroyed, righteous Noah shall be preserved. For this end he is commanded to build an ark of safety, in which he may outlive the flood; and though the work was great, and the time long, and the trial of cruel mockings was severe and painful, yet, true to his character, according to all that God commanded him, so did he. 'By faith, Noah, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, whereby he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.' Let us follow in the footsteps of Noah, while now the long-suffering of God waiteth as in his day; let us flee to the refuge which is set before us in the gospel, that when the threatened flood of fiery indignation shall sweep over the earth, we may be sheltered from its fury, and preserved in Christ Jesus, as in the ark—to that new heavens, and that new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

PRAYER.

O thou who art infinitely blessed in thyself, and art absolutely independent of any or all thy creatures; we wonder and adore, when we contemplate the riches of thy forbearance and long-suffering towards a world that lieth in wickedness. Alas! what a world of iniquity does thine all-seeing eye continually behold, to offend thy purity and provoke thy judgments. How much have we, thy professing people, lived as the children of disobedience; we have followed the multitude to do evil, we have conferred with flesh and blood, and instead of living to glorify thee, the God in whom our breath is, we have loved to fulfil the desires of our sinful hearts. Adored be thy patience which has borne with us amid these manifold provocations—adored be thy grace and mercy which has provided for us a great redemption, and doth invite us still to the free and welcome participation of its blessings. O God, let not any of us abuse thy patience and despise thy grace. Let the interposition of the Son of thy love to save us, rouse our secure and our careless minds, and melt and subdue our hard and rebellious hearts. Let thy love constrain us to live not unto ourselves but unto Him who loved us, and gave himself for us; instead of walking after the course of this world, we may be as the sons of God, without rebuke, walking with God, holding fast our integrity, following submissively and obediently the leadings of thy Holy Spirit, and willing to stand out from the ways, and to bear the scorn and enmity, of the ungodly world, provided only we may have this testimony, that we please God.

O thou whose name is called upon by us, the Covenant God unto whom we have been baptized, let it please thee to unite us all as indeed the children of thy covenant, and the heirs of its sure mercies. Let the ties of nature be hallowed and endeared by the bonds of grace. Let the heads of this house be united in the Lord. Let the children of the family rise up before thee a holy seed, who shall be to the Lord for a generation; and let all our family intercourse, in all our several relations, promote the growth of our Christian character, and prepare us for holier and more blissful communion together, as members of thy blessed family in heaven.

O God, let the wickedness of the wicked be brought to an end; not again, if it please thee, by the destruction, but by the conversion and salvation of the world, by the power of thy Spirit, and by means of thy gospel. Let the righteous flourish and abound; let the nations be made subject to the reign of Messiah. We bless thee, Lord, that thou art prolonging our day; while the day of life lasts, let us spend it for thee. O God, we would walk with thee, we would cleave to the way of thy precepts; we desire to be guided by thee in the way of life. Hear us, O God, in these our prayers, for the sake of Him who is the Mediator of thy better covenant. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 11.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW v. 1—26.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

This sermon Jesus delivered near Capernaum. Though spoken in the hearing of the multitudes, it was addressed directly to His disciples, whom it especially concerns. It opens with Christ's doctrine of happiness, a subject attractive to all ears, and to all hearts, and deserving of all attention, when treated by the great prophet of God, and the gracious friend of man. Those whom he declares blessed, are not such as the world admire or imitate, but, as appears from his description, such rather as they dislike, and despise, and persecute. They are the poor in spirit, the mourners, the meek, the merciful, the persecuted and the reviled. This may seem a paradox, but these are the truly blessed. 1. The characters they exhibit are not the gifts of nature, but of grace; the effect of God's special blessing, and the pledge of their signal blessedness. 2. Their characteristic dispositions, and desires, and affections are the elements of blessedness; meekness of temper, mercifulness of disposition, purity of heart, faithfulness to conscience, are not more expressive of virtue than of happiness. 3. Though, in some instances they involve suffering, yet, in every instance they tend to, and prepare for, blessedness. They that mourn for their own sins, and they who suffer persecution from love of righteousness, or from fidelity to Christ, are in the sure and the only way to the sweetest and sublimest blessedness—the blessedness of the pardoned sinner, and the perfected saint! And lastly, these tendencies towards perfect blessedness are in no way liable to disappointment; for all these capacities and desires of the renewed nature, God has provided the appropriate object in His kingdom of grace or of glory, and the Saviour has declared that in the timely bestowment of it their blessedness shall be full. Let us learn hence that character is fundamental to happiness; that our efforts to find it in outward good are misdirected, and that they are best bestowed in cultivating the graces of the inner man, without which, nothing on earth or in heaven can make us truly blessed.

The disciples of Jesus, formed into this character, and fitted for such blessedness, are destined to signal use and honour in the world. 'Ye are the salt of the earth;' that is, the moral conservatives, who preserve it from corruption and ruin, and diffuse among its families the savour of grace and godliness. But this influence, be it observed, belongs only to the vitality and strength of the spiritual character; when Christians degenerate into lifeless formalists, their influence over others is lost: and beyond others they become despicable in character, and desperate in condition. 'Ye are the light of the world.' They are so, because they are light in the Lord; and having received His light, not to conceal, but to reflect and diffuse it; they should feel concerned not for self-display, but for the good of men, and for the glory of God, to manifest and commend the light to all around. O! did all professing Christians perform their appointed part, soon should our dark and sinful world be pervaded with the light of truth, and seasoned with the grace of holiness, producing blessedness among men, and blessing and glory to God.

In order to guard his character, while he asserts and exercises his office as a divine teacher, Jesus next explains the object of his coming. 'This was not to destroy the law, but to fulfil it; not to destroy it, for it is more stable than the ordinances of heaven and earth; not to relax it, for he demands the observance of the least, as well as the greatest, of its commandments;—but to fulfil it, for he requires a righteousness in principle, and spirit, and extent, far exceeding that which was maintained or taught by the strictest religionists of that day. In illustration of these truths, he proceeds to expound the law. He begins with the sixth commandment, as it was spoken to the fathers. This was understood by the Pharisees to forbid the deed of murder; Jesus interprets it as forbidding every word or feeling, which as proceeding from, and expressing hatred of a brother, violates the great principle of the law; and exposes the transgressor not only to the penalties of human courts, but to the danger of hell-fire. Who but may now cry out, Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O my God. Of this doctrine our Lord, ver. 23—25. makes a practical application: first, in regard to an offended brother, next in regard to an injured and angry adversary. As if to live at variance with either, were such a violation of this law as prevents our acceptance in worship, and provokes our subjection to condemnation, he admonishes to a speedy reconciliation and agreement with all who have taken offence at us, or to whom we have given it. How should this enforce the apostle's admonition, Be kindly affectioned one to another, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another; if any man have a quarrel against any; even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you.

PRAYER.

Thou God of peace, who hast turned away from us all thine anger, and dost invite us, through the blood of the cross, to approach thy throne of grace and blessing; forbid that, when we thine offending creatures come before thee to implore thy forgiveness, we should exclude our prayer by refusing forgiveness to any who may have offended us. Enable us to lift up holy hands unto thee, without wrath and doubting, and to pour our hearts in the confidence of love. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath sent Him to bless us, to procure all blessings for us, by the blood of his cross, to proclaim them in the word of his gospel; and to dispense them from the throne of his kingdom. O Lord, let us be blessed in Him; grant that thy Holy Spirit may produce and perfect in us all the lovely character of thy blessed people. Make us lowly and contrite in heart, as becometh sinful creatures; let the desires of our souls be after righteousness; imbue our tempers with the meekness and gentleness of Christ; let us be merciful as our Father in heaven is merciful; make us pure in heart, peaceable in demeanour, upright and faithful in our uniform conduct; resolved in thy strength to suffer rather than to sin, and able to rejoice if counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Jesus. O that we were effectually taught of Jesus that they are the truly blessed who are thus renewed by the Spirit into the mind of Christ, that, to acquire, and to increase in this blessedness, we were quickened to the daily cultivation of all the spiritual graces; and that we might so largely possess, and so vigorously exercise, and so visibly exemplify them, that those who see us might acknowledge that we are the seed whom the Lord hath blessed!

O God, cause the light of Christian truth and holiness to spread speedily throughout this dark world; cause the power and energy of thy Spirit's grace to work mightily in recovering it from that moral corruption which has so deeply infected it. Let thy blessing rest on our country; revive, and purify, and prosper thy church at home and abroad; comfort the mourner, sustain the persecuted, give repentance to sinners, and salvation to the dying. Be the God of this family; let ours be the blessedness of the people whose God is the Lord. We resign ourselves to thy charge, imploring thy pardon of all our sin, and thy protection from all evil; while we live let us be blessed in the graces of thy Spirit; when we die make us blessed with the glories of thy kingdom, and to thy name be all the glory, in Christ Jesus. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVII. 16.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS VII.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

As judgment is God's 'strange work,' it becomes the duty of men sedulously to improve, and long and deeply to remember every interposition of providence which bears the character of an evidently punitive infliction. The stupendous and unparalleled event recorded in this chapter is sufficient to proclaim, to the latest ages, the awful danger connected with irreligion, impenitence, immoral and sensual indulgence, the neglect of divine warnings and reproofs, and a wide-spread deterioration of principle, and corruption of manners. Accordingly we find Christ, more than two thousand years posterior to this era, referring to the history of the flood, and the unprepared state of that wicked generation whom it swept away, as illustrative of the deeply infatuated security which shall mark the final age of the world. 'And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark; and the flood came, and destroyed them all.'

The forbearance of God is strikingly manifested, even to the last, towards this impenitent generation. After 120 years of long-suffering and mercy had been extended to them in vain, still seven days are added, to afford them a final opportunity for repentance.

Amidst the swelling surges and the dark confusion of the destroying deluge, God did not leave himself without a witness that He is gracious; and faith, fixing her eye upon the ark that sheltered the remnant ordained to be saved, as it still rises above the waters, and rides in safety through the terrors of the all-embracing inundation, can sing of mercy and judgment on this portentous and deeply solemn occasion, 'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.'

The preservation of Noah and his family in the ark is a beautiful and instructive type of the salvation of the people of Christ, who have fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the gospel. And accordingly the faith of this patriarch, who 'being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house,' is commended to the adoption of all, in reference to their eternal interests, and the great duty of complying with the calls of divine mercy. 'Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.' 'Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord

Almighty.' 'And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear: having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noe, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject unto him.'

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, the creator and preserver of the universe, in whom we live and move and have our being: enable us, we humbly pray thee, to worship acceptably at the footstool of thy throne of mercy with reverence and with godly fear. Thou dwellest on high, yet hast thou regard to the lowly, and with that man wilt thou dwell, who is of a humble and contrite spirit, and who trembleth at thy word. We adore the infinite holiness of thy nature, and the perfect rectitude of thy government, and confess that our iniquities have justly subjected us to a state of condemnation, misery and death. It is of thy mercies, O Lord, that we have not been utterly consumed, because thy compassions fail not. We bless thee that thou hast provided for us, in the infinitude of thy love, an all-sufficient Saviour, who becomes, to all who receive Him, a refuge from the storm, and a hiding place from the tempest—a river of water in a dry place, and the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. May we be enabled, by the power of the Holy Spirit, to believe in Jesus to the saving of our souls; and to realize all the benefits which belong to those who have an interest in his perfect righteousness and all-prevailing intercession.

O God, give us grace to escape from the corruptions that are in the world, and to maintain a walk and conversation becoming the gospel. Incline our hearts to thy testimonies, that we may not be ensnared and defiled by the examples and counsels of those who err from thy statutes, and who are treasuring up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and perdition of ungodly men. Deliver us from the wickedness of our own hearts, and may sin no more reign over us; but having our souls enlightened and sanctified by thy truth dwelling in us, may we bring forth the fruits of righteousness which are through Jesus Christ, to thy praise and glory.

We bless thee for thy holy word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. O grant that being warned to flee from the wrath to come, we may be induced to imitate the faith of thy servant of old, by entering within the ark of the new covenant, and living in preparation for an approaching eternity. May we be followers of them who having walked in faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises. May neither the enticing pleasures, nor the dismaying trials of a passing world, so engross our minds as to turn us aside from that narrow path which conducts to the mansions of everlasting bliss. Strengthen us, O God, that we may endure, as seeing thee who art invisible. And at last, having fought the good fight, and finished our course, and kept the faith, may we receive from thy hand the crown of righteousness, which is laid up for all them who love thine appearing. And now, to the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLIX. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW V. 27—48.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The purity and spirituality of the law of God are exhibited in this discourse, in a manner peculiarly instructive and impressive. The prevailing sin of the people of the Jews at this period, consisted in making void the law of God by their traditions, and in entertaining inadequate and defective views in regard to those religious and moral duties, the obligation of which they continued to allow. Thus, the law of chastity was interpreted as if it forbade only gross and heinous acts of lewdness and wickedness; and as if the heart, with its thoughts and affections, were wholly exempted from its control. In opposition to this, our Lord taught that this and every other commandment had a primary bearing upon the secret movements of the inner man; and that it is necessary, in the work of a sincere and thorough repentance, to go to the root of the evil, and make the heart good, before it can be possible to give to the divine law that spiritual and holy obedience which it essentially requires.

The principle of giving a full, unreserved, and unconditional compliance to the will of God, in contradistinction to those sinful and often capricious limitations and exceptions, which the doctrines of the scribes and pharisees recognised and sanctioned in matters of duty, constitutes the subject which our Lord inculcates throughout the sequel of the chapter. He forbids all tampering with oaths, all idle and profane swearing, all use of any form of appeal or invocation, to whatsoever object addressed, in testimony of the truth and sincerity of what we say,—as utterly inconsistent with that profound reverence for the character and perfections of God, which we ought ever to cherish in our minds. It was to check the furious and ungovernable passion of revenge that our Lord delivered those precepts, enjoining the duty of forbearance and meekness under injurious treatment. We are not 'to render evil for evil,' not to foment strife and irritation, not to indulge in revengeful retaliation, even against the most insolent and malicious enemies. At the same time, nothing that is here delivered can be construed into a permission to allow malefactors to pursue their injurious practices with impunity. Civil rulers are ordained to be a terror to evil-doers, and to afford protection, in all important matters, to the well-disposed and peaceable members of society. Yet, the precepts of the gospel forbid the making use even of the authority of rulers, for purposes of revenge; and if there be a law on the statute book of a Christian commonwealth which admits of being perverted to such an unholy purpose, it ought to be corrected or abolished. A creditor ought not to be allowed to harass an obnoxious debtor by prolonged imprisonment, with a view to soothe the feelings of exasperation produced by a sense of the loss or injury incurred by his negligence or fraud. We are to bear with many wrongs rather than to take any cognisance of them whatever; but when they are of that important and serious nature, that they should not be suffered to pass neglected, we ought to leave the matter in the impartial hands of public justice; and still be ready to pity, and if possible benefit the malefactor, whilst we acknowledge the justice of his conviction, and the propriety of his punishment.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God, we implore thy grace to enable us to worship thee, who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth; and to present the homage of our sincere thanksgiving, adoration, and praise, at the footstool of thy throne of mercy. All thy works praise thee, and all thy saints bless thee. The heavens declare thy glory, the firmament sheweth forth thy handiworks; day unto day uttereth speech, night succeeding night, teacheth knowledge of thee.

To thy preserving care, and unwearied beneficence, are we indebted for being carried in safety through the duties and pursuits of this day; and for being delivered from danger, sickness, and death. Thy goodness is new to us every morning, and thy loving-kindness every evening; great is thy faithfulness. Forgive, we humbly entreat thee, O God, every thing wherein we have offended thee, or violated thy most holy and righteous law, whether in thought, word, or deed, during the course of this day, or of the week, which is now drawing to a close. Teach us to understand the extent, the spirituality, and the purity of that obedience which the scriptures require; and may we be enabled to cultivate that true holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. May we delight in thy law, cordially esteeming it as in all respects holy, and just, and good, and as supplying, to every one who reverences and obeys it, a great reward. May we be delivered from the delusion and danger of conceiving that we can ever merit salvation, by our defective and polluted righteousness: and enable us to implore the forgiveness of those sins which mingle even with our best actions, and pervade the whole tenor of our frail and guilty lives. Whilst we receive the law from the lips of Jesus, may we also embrace the salvation which he purchased with his blood: and in endeavouring to make him our example in all his imitable perfections, may we place all our hope for acceptance upon his finished work.

We bless thee for all our mercies and privileges, temporal and spiritual: and desire to feel thy goodness as the rich and exuberant fountain whence they are supplied. May we obtain refreshing sleep during the silent hours of this night, and may we rise up on the return of the Christian Sabbath, with hearts prepared for engaging in the sacred and interesting duties for which it has been ordained. Bless and protect our friends and relatives. Comfort the poor, the sick, the distressed, and the dying. Extend the bounds of the Redeemer's kingdom, at home and abroad: and may the whole earth become filled with the knowledge of thy glory. Hear these, our humble prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SECOND WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM VII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS VI. VII.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Affliction is often employed by a gracious God, as a means of sanctifying his people; and blessed are they, who, like David, are led to entreat the divine mercy in their distresses, and to express contrition for their sins, with unfeigned sincerity and truth. As we are chastened of God, not for his pleasure, but for our profit, that we may become partakers of his holiness; we are encouraged to pray, that He would overrule all our trials and sufferings, for this end; so that they may conduce to our moral and spiritual improvement in this life, and work out for us, hereafter, a far more exceeding, even an eternal, weight of glory. When we receive grace to improve affliction as a call to repentance, and to bear it with patience, as a trial of our faith, we may be assured that the Lord is not rebuking us in his anger, neither chastening us in hot displeasure; that the discipline of Providence is not penal, but merciful, and that, ultimately, we shall have cause to bless God for the painful dispensation. In the season of affliction, it becomes the penitent and the humble solemnly to renounce every sin, and to determine, if restored to health, that they shall abstain from every foolish pursuit and wicked way, which they see cause to deplore. 'Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity, for the Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping. The Lord hath heard my supplication: the Lord will receive my prayer.' The afflictions of David should remind us of the sufferings of Christ, who was, indeed, 'a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. He was wounded for our iniquities, and bruised for our transgressions; the chastisement of our peace was laid upon him, that by his stripes we might be healed.'

What repentance and grief should fill our souls, as we meditate upon the mighty burden of the Redeemer's sorrows. 'Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, where-with the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger.'

The prayer in the seventh Psalm, evidently represents David, pleading his righteousness, as a type of Christ: for 'He only, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth,' could appropriately propose the condition stated in the 3, 4, and 5 verses. 'O Lord my God, if I have done this, if there be iniquity in my hands; if I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me: (yea, I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy;) let the enemy persecute my soul and take it: yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the dust. Selah.' The resurrection of Christ and his glorious ascension into heaven constitute the infallible evidence of his perfect and unspotted righteousness, and of the infinite merits of his atoning sacrifice and death. His life was not trodden upon the earth, neither was his honour laid in the dust, 'but God raised him up, having loosed the pains of death,' according as the Spirit of prophecy had declared; 'For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell: neither wilt thou suffer thine holy One to see corruption.'

At the 6th verse the inspired Psalmist, evidently speaking in the person of Christ, prays that God would arise and vindicate his cause against its combined and inveterate enemies. The awful judgments which shall overtake the enemies of the gospel, are solemnly and minutely described in the following verses. 'God judgeth the righteous, but God is angry with the wicked every day. If he turn not, he will whet his sword: he hath bent his bow and made it ready. He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death: he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.'

Knowing these things, how cordially should we pray for the conversion and the salvation of sinners, and of all who in any way oppose the cause of Christ. 'O let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end: but establish the just, for the righteous Lord trieth the hearts and reins.'

PRAYER.

Most gracious God, we bless thee for all the goodness, which thou art causing to pass before us from day to day. On thee do we continually depend for life and health, and every blessing which gladdens our lot. We thank thee for thy preserving care during the past night; and that whilst many of our fellow-creatures have slept the sleep of death since we lay down to rest, we have been raised up to the renewed enjoyment of the mercies and privileges connected with the land of the living, and the place of hope. We especially bless thee that we have been spared to see the return of another Sabbath: that day which thou hast ordained, in a particular manner, for thine own worship and glory. O grant that we may be enabled to employ its sacred hours, in subserviency to the great and holy ends for which it has been instituted; and that our Sabbaths on earth may ripen and prepare our souls for the services and enjoyments of that eternal rest, which, hereafter, remaineth for the people of God. Do thou, who at first commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shine this day into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Keep us from all vain thoughts, sinful cares, and worldly imaginations: deliver us from impenitence, formality, hypocrisy, and every secret sin; and may we be enabled so to engage in all the religious services of this day, public and private, that the fruit may be unto holiness, and the end life everlasting.

We bless thee for thine unspeakable gift, Jesus Christ, and for all the treasures of grace and salvation, which are presented to us in the gospel. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us, and gave his Son to be a propitiation for our sins. When there was no eye to pity, and no arm to save us, thine own eye pitied us, and thy right hand wrought out our salvation. O God, make us truly grateful for thine infinite mercy and goodness; and enable us to comprehend with all saints, what is the length, and the breadth, and the height, and the depth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fulness of God.

And now, that life and immortality have been clearly brought to light by the gospel, may we this day, rise on the wings of faith and contemplation, from earth to heaven, from time to eternity; that we may know what is the hope of thy calling, and what the riches of the glory of thine inheritance in the saints; and what is the exceeding greatness of thy power to usward who believe; according to the working of the mighty power which was wrought in Christ, when thou didst raise him from the dead, and set him at thine own right hand in heavenly places.

Confirm and increase our faith, quicken our hope, animate our love, and invigorate and promote every Christian grace and virtue in our souls. O send forth thy light and thy truth into our hearts, that they may lead us, and bring us into thy holy hill, and thy tabernacles. Prepare our hearts for waiting upon thee, in the ordinances of thy house. Bless the ministers of the everlasting gospel, and may they be workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of God, and giving to every one his portion of meat in due season. May we hear thy truth this day preached to us with faith, self-application, and much spiritual benefit: and wherever two or three shall meet together in thy name, be thou in the midst of them, to bless them, and do them good. O hasten the time when the light of salvation shall visit every land, and when the glad tidings of the gospel shall be declared unto all people. Bring in thine ancient people, the Jews, with the fulness of the Gentiles: that, as there is only one Shepherd, there may also be but one people. And now, let the words of our mouth, and the meditations of our heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our strength, and our Redeemer. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM VIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS VIII. IX.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

As an intelligent being, before whose view God has spread forth the infinite manifestations of his wisdom, goodness, and power, in the various departments and works of creation, it is peculiarly the duty of man to celebrate the praises of the adorable Author of the sublime and magnificent universe. No employment can be more elevating and interesting; or more worthy of that rational nature, which enables mankind alone, of all that dwell upon the earth, in the exercise of spiritual contemplation, to rise through nature up to nature's God. The pious mind can find themes of unfailling admiration, gratitude, and praise, in every direction, and will record that the name of the Lord is excellent 'in all the earth:' and recognizing the boundless infinitude of the divine perfections, it will also declare, 'thou hast set thy glory above the heavens.' Our Lord evidently refers to the second verse of Psalm viii. in the 21st chap. of Matt. ver. 16; when the children cried in the temple, saying, 'Hosanna to the Son of David;' and when the scribes, displeased at the testimony which they bore to his character and claims, wished them to be silenced; but Christ, on the other hand, approved of their conduct, and said to his enemies, 'Yea, have ye never read, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?' The work of redemption is even more replete with the glory of God, than the structure of the material universe; and if the wonders of the one are calculated to excite the astonishment and praise of all descriptions of persons, not excepting the youngest, or the most ignorant, much more is this the case with regard to the doctrines, promises and blessings, of the other, when the heart has been opened by the influence of the Holy Spirit to understand and embrace them. At the same time, there is a wonderful harmony between the views which nature and revelation present on many subjects; and particularly with regard to the distinguished favour which God has been pleased to manifest towards the human race. We see man, placed at the head of this lower world, and we know, that originally he occupied a still more exalted position, 'being made a little lower than the angels, and crowned with glory and honour.' Now, a similar kindness has been exhibited, in a manner equally conspicuous, though in a degree infinitely more astonishing, in the covenant of grace. There the love of God to man has appeared in providing for him eternal salvation through Jesus Christ, and in calling him to glory, honour, and immortality. How well, therefore, may we say, 'Bless the Lord all his works, in all places of his dominion; bless the Lord, O my soul.'

The ninth Psalm consists of a thanksgiving and a prayer; being composed probably to celebrate some of those victories which David gained over his numerous enemies. The pious example of the king of Israel, teaches us, in all the events of life, to acknowledge God, as ruling among the armies of heaven, and over the inhabitants of the earth; as holding in his hands the reins of universal government; and as ordaining whatsoever comes to pass. In the present state of mingled good and evil, we may not always be able to comprehend the exact designs of Providence in every case; but we know that 'the Lord hath prepared his throne for judgment,' and in the end it shall be well with the righteous, and ill with the wicked. Let us, therefore, put our trust in God, and 'commit the keeping of our souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.' For 'he will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble. And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.'

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, we adore thee, who art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders, and whose ways are past finding out. Thou hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as a garment: and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail. We bless thee for the infinite and unmerited goodness which thou art continually exercising towards us. What are we, O Lord, or what our fathers' house, that thou shouldest deal so bountifully with us. Our righteousnesses are as filthy rags, and we all do fade as the leaf; and our iniquities as the wind do carry us away. But yet, O Lord, we rejoice that there is mercy with thee, that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption, that thou mayest be sought after. We thank thee for the invitations and promises of the gospel; and we pray that Christ may be made unto us, wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and complete redemption.

O grant that the opportunity enjoyed by us this day, of hearing thy word preached, may contribute to our spiritual improvement and growth in grace; and may constrain us to abound with greater zeal and sincerity, during our future lives, in thy holy service. We desire that we may be not hearers only, but doers also, of thy will: and that, adding to our faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly-kindness, and charity, we may be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. May an abundant blessing follow the preaching of the everlasting gospel, to all by whom it has been heard; and may there be joy among the angels of heaven, over many sinners, who have been brought to repentance. O grant that the time may soon arrive, when all ignorance, idolatry, and wickedness, may come to an end; and when the earth shall become filled with the knowledge of thy glory, as the waters cover the channel of the great deep. We bless thee for all the mercies temporal and spiritual, we have this day enjoyed. Pardon all our sins, and especially the sins of our holy things. Watch over us this night: keep us from evil; and now to thee, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, one God, we ascribe all praise and glory, and blessing, and honour, and thanksgiving, world without end. Amen

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCIII. 3.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS VIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

It is worthy of notice, that the sacred historian continually acknowledges God, and traces events to his operation. There is nothing in which, generally speaking, uninspired historians more sadly fail, nor is there anything which detracts more from the interest of their writings. The protracted duration of the flood and its gradual disappearance, tried the faith, patience, and submission of Noah and his family, and impressed them with a sense of the exceeding evil of sin, as also of the exceeding holiness and justice of God. The employment of means, in the raven and the dove, to ascertain the state of the earth, shows that God is frugal of his miracles; and never intends to supersede human wisdom. The frequent allusion to the 'seven days,' and the remarkable division of time into weeks, among most heathen nations, plainly point to the revealed account of creation as recorded in the word of God. The same remark applies to the deluge itself. The traditions of a flood are clear and strong in all nations, even the most distant and inaccessible; and so far as the inquiries of modern geology have yet gone, instead of discrediting, they decidedly confirm the authority of scripture and profane history, in regard to the same event. The piety of Noah is discovered in his building an altar to the Lord, as soon as he was delivered from the ark, before he had raised any building for his own accommodation. The union of his family in the same service, is a testimony to the obligations of family and social worship; and God's high approbation of such sacrifices is proclaimed in the strong language that he smelled a sweet savour, and that in answer he gave a promise of safety in the blessings of which all subsequent generations continue to share.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us mark the power and faithfulness of God, in preserving Noah and his family for above a year in the ark, floating on the face of an impetuous and universal flood; and let us notice his tenderness in remembering though he might justly have forgotten, and abandoned them for their sins. Let us ever acknowledge God's hand in the various circumstances and events of our lot. It was He who led the patriarch to build an ark, and invited him to enter it and shut him in. It was He also who remembered him, and bade the waters to assuage, and at length commanded him to come forth. And it is the same God who compasses our path; ordering all the events of our history, the inconsiderable as well as the great. Let us, like Noah, gladly acknowledge God, not merely in words, but in the way of his own appointment, by suitable sacrifices; and let us be persuaded, in doing so, we shall detract nothing from our true honour; on the contrary, whatever reproach we may encounter from the world, we shall add to our happiness, and bring down the best blessings upon our families and even upon posterity. Let us, in the first instance, care for the glory of God, and He in return will assuredly care for us. Above all, let the burnt-offerings of Noah and God's high approbation of them, remind us of the far nobler sacrifice of Christ, who gave himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour. It was a reference to the Saviour which bestowed upon the offerings of the patriarch their chief significance and value. Dreadful as the deluge was, it was as nothing to that flood of Divine displeasure which was poured out upon Christ, as the surety of sinners. Blessed be his name, he triumphantly rode out the storm; and now all believing and resting on his sacrifice, are as safe as Noah and his family in the ark, under the special protection of Jehovah. Let us look perpetually upon his cross as the bow in the cloud, the pledge of Divine love, the proof that no second deluge shall ever reach us. Great, no doubt, would be the happiness and gratitude of the patriarch and his children, when, after being for a year tossed on the tremendous sea of the deluge, they were safely landed on the washed and renovated earth; and how great will be the joy and praise of the ransomed of the Lord, when, safe from all their enemies, they shall set their feet on the shore of the heavenly country.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God; thou art over all. Thy mercy is in the heavens, and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds; thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep; thou preservest man and beast. How excellent is thy loving-kindness; therefore, the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. We must acknowledge with shame and confusion of face, that the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; and that by our many and aggravated offences, we have justly provoked thy high displeasure. Yea, we have added to our guilt in not being warned, as we ought to have been, by the tokens of wrath with which thou hast visited the generation before the flood. We deserve, O Lord, to be overtaken like them with the judgments of heaven; our advantages have been greater, our sin has been more heinous. We admire, most gracious Father, thy long-suffering and faithfulness. How tenderly didst thou remember Noah and his family, and the very beasts of the field. Remember us also, even with the love which thou bearest to thy children, and forgive all our sins, and visit our souls with thy benign salvation. We rejoice in the proofs which thou hast given of thy faithfulness, not only in the deliverance from the ark, but in the regular succession of seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night, through so many hundred years. May we remember with comfort, that if thou art so faithful in nature, thou wilt be not less faithful in grace; and that all the promises which thou hast given in connection with thy Son and Spirit, thou wilt most assuredly fulfil to the believing soul. May we therefore, with greater confidence, be induced to acknowledge thee in all our ways, and in dark and trying seasons trust thy paternal protection and love. May the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus be our only hope, and his gospel the olive branch of peace to our souls; and may we be enabled to look forward with growing joy, to the time when there shall be new heavens and a new earth; when there shall be no more curse, when all shall be righteous.

God of ordinances, accompany with a divine blessing, the religious exercises of yesterday. Thou hast all hearts in thy hand, and turnest them as easily as thou turnest the rivers of water. May we ever look up to Thee for the Holy Spirit, and may He, in answer to prayer, be richly vouchsafed, and instruct, and impress, convert, comfort, and sanctify us and our fellow-worshippers, according to our and their respective circumstances and wants. We pray for the church with which we are more immediately connected. Abundantly prosper her undertakings for thy glory and the good of souls, both at home and abroad, and hasten the time when all thy elect children shall be gathered from the four winds into the ark of salvation, and the reign of heaven begin. May these the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts, find acceptance with thee, the Hearer and Answerer of prayer, seeing all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake, of our blessed Emmanuel. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW VI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Detailed instruction in duty, is quite consistent with the preaching of the peculiar doctrines of the gospel. While Christ dealt so largely in the doctrine of salvation; the better to meet and correct prevailing errors, he descended to minute counsel on alms-giving, prayer and fasting. His exhortations on these points, show how generally corrupt was the state of religion in the Jewish church, even at a period when its members were free from idolatry; and how strong is the tendency to convert religion, which is truly generous, consisting of love to God and love to man, into an instrument of selfishness, for drawing praise upon ourselves. The counsels given in the duties referred to, all take for granted that the followers of Christ are to practise alms-giving, prayer, and fasting. The Saviour does not slight these, or defer to the objections which have often been started against them. He only condemns abuses and improper motives. It is not even publicity of which he complains, for there are cases of charity, prayer, and fasting, which necessarily take place before our fellow-men, and which are commended in other parts of scripture, but it is publicity in order to be seen of men, and not for the glory of God. Though the Lord's prayer does not seem to have been intended to establish a form of prayer, and we have no evidence it was used as such by the disciples, yet it is at once a most precious directory and encouragement in prayer. Its brevity, comprehensiveness, simplicity, fervour, and adaptation to our wants, are all admirable, not less so is the instruction which it conveys, both by its order and its sentiments. It reveals the true character of God as a Father; the social nature of prayer; that God's glory in His name, and kingdom, and will, are to be preferred to human happiness; that our temporal wants are entitled to a prominent place in our petitions; that we daily sin and need daily pardon; that we are not entitled to hope for forgiveness from God, unless we cheerfully forgive our fellow-men offending against us, and that we plead the glory and honour of God as the chief reasons why we expect to be heard. The views contained in the Lord's prayer are so exalted and original, that though we had nothing else, the prayer would furnish evidence that the book in which it is found is divine. The exhortations regarding the 'not laying up treasures on earth,' and 'taking no thought for our life,' are not intended to forbid the acquisition of property, or a due attention to the lawful business of the world. They are evidently only designed to repress the supreme love of the world, and that anxious care about it which is at war with the duty we owe to God and to our fellow-men. The arguments in behalf of this course, are drawn from a variety of sources: the instability of earthly treasures; the blessedness of a single eye to the glory of God; the impossibility of serving God and the world; the superior value of what has been already bestowed—a pledge, that inferior blessings shall be added; God's providential care over vegetable and animal life; the vanity of solicitude about the future; the unworthiness of distrust of God, on the part of those who have been blessed with a divine revelation; the sufficiency of the evil of the present, without anxiety about the evil of the future; the gracious promise, that if men seek first the kingdom of God, and the righteousness of his Son, they shall receive, by way of surplus, all temporal blessings which are good for them.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How thankful should we be to Christ, for the ample and minute instruction which he has given, not only in matters of doctrine, but also of duty; and for his own example, by which he has so impressively illustrated his precepts. Let us beware of the selfishness and ostentation in alms-giving, prayer, and fasting, of which the Saviour so justly complains, and pursue these, and all similar duties, from right motives. Let us adore the condescension of Christ, in supplying his followers with a directory for prayer, and rejoice in the multitude of holy desires and affections of which in every age it has been the vehicle. Let us realize the character of God, and the character of man, which it unfolds; and make it our study, honestly to use every petition as our own; especially, let us be impressed with the high importance of a forgiving disposition toward our fellow-men, and remember, that unless we exercise it, every time we use the Lord's prayer, we condemn ourselves. Let us discourage, in ourselves and in others, the undue love of the world, and rejoice in the great variety of motives drawn from nature and reason, as well as scripture, by which the Son of God seeks to wean us from its power. Let us be single-eyed in our aims, and draw from every lily of the field, and every fowl of the air, fresh inducements to trust the care of our Father who is in heaven. Above all, let us seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Let us pursue religion in the appointed order, as first in time, and first in importance: and then shall we not only receive a promise of outward blessings, but we shall be kept from those errors and corruptions in religious duties, (such as prayer, and almsgiving, and fasting,) which are fitted to bring reproach upon religion, and deceive our own souls.

PRAYER.

Father of mercies, we thy unworthy servants, desire this evening to come into thy presence, and to lift up our united praises and supplications at thy footstool. Be pleased graciously to assist us, and to accept of our persons and sacrifices, in the name of our great High Priest. We thank thee for all the revelations which thou hast condescended to make of thyself in nature, and providence, and thy word. Especially do we rejoice, that instead of revealing thyself in terrors, thou hast discovered thyself under the endearing and delightful appellation of our Father in heaven. It is thou, O God, who arrayest the lilies of the field, in such beauty as to surpass Solomon in all his glory; and it is the same tender hand which feeds the fowls of the air, which neither sow, nor reap, nor gather into barns. Wilt thou not then care for us? We bless thy name, that thou encouragest us to draw near to thee in prayer; supplying us with a form of words, and mercifully promising to confer upon us all the blessings of which we stand in need. Give us, we beseech thee, to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. May we not lay up for ourselves treasures on earth which are liable to danger and decay, but treasures in heaven, which neither moth nor rust corrupt, and which thieves cannot break through to steal. May we all possess Christ, the pearl of great price, and may He so dwell in us, that we shall be delivered from anxious and unbelieving care about things seen and temporal. In duties more directly religious, may we beware of ostentation and vain glory. Whether we give alms, or fast, or pray, grant, most merciful Father, that we may do all unto thee—under the guidance of such motives as thou wilt approve.

God of grace, we pray that thy kingdom may come universally. Visit the dark places of the earth, the habitations of cruelty, with the benevolent light of the gospel. Be especially merciful to those millions of the heathen who live under the British sceptre, our many emigrant brethren abroad, and the multitudes of spiritually destitute at home, for whom the church to which we belong, is making it her care to provide the means of salvation. Every where bless the ministers of the everlasting gospel, multiply their number, and increase their zeal and faithfulness. Abundantly bless the pastor with whose ministry we are connected. Give him largely of the grace of thy Holy Spirit, that feeling the sweetness of religion in his own soul, he may be more enabled to contribute to our spiritual good, and to that of our fellow-worshippers. We desire to conclude our evening petitions in the words which our blessed Lord has taught us to use, 'Our Father,' &c.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XI. 1—9. and XII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

CHAP. XI. 1—9. The building of the tower of Babel affords a striking proof of the power of human depravity. After all the impressive teaching of the deluge—after the renewed tokens of the divine goodness in making a new grant of the earth to man, and bestowing a fresh dominion over the creatures—after God had commanded Noah and his family to be fruitful and multiply, and had appointed the rainbow as a seal of his covenant—after all these things, such is the weakness even of the best, we forthwith read of Noah's fall; and have no sooner perused the genealogical tables of his sons, before we are called to contemplate their pride and presumption. Fired at once with ambition and rebellion, they resolved to build a great tower and city, by which they might procure for themselves a name, and lay the foundations of a universal empire, and abide together a mighty people. With the utmost facility Jehovah defeated their plans. It is not unworthy of notice, that the researches of the most recent travellers in the East have succeeded in tracing out the ruins of a tower corresponding in description to that of Babel; while the investigations of the most eminent scholars, such as Sir W. Jones, go to establish the fact, that the various languages of men were once one.

CHAP. XII.—The calling of Abraham marks the rise of a new and interesting dispensation of divine providence. Since the fall, God has sought to teach mankind at large through traditional knowledge, and occasional revelations to distinguished servants. Owing to the strength of human corruption, this mode of communicating with man is exchanged for another. God will separate a family, and ultimately a nation, to himself, and make them, in a peculiar manner, the depositories and dispensers of divine truth. Abraham is called from Ur of the Chaldees, and, at seventy-five years of age, leaves his father's house at the simple command of God, not knowing whither he went. This step indicated the exercise of very strong faith. The promise that he, an old man without a son, was to be the founder of a great nation; that all who blessed him were to be blessed, and those who cursed him were to be cursed; and that he was to be the progenitor of Messiah, in whom all nations were to be made glad—has been fulfilled to the letter in the history and present existence of the Jewish nation; in the fate of the heathen which oppressed them; in the fact, that the Son of God was a descendant of Abraham; and that the world has been inexpressibly indebted to his gospel. Like Noah, the Father of the faithful carried his religion into every thing, into the ordinary business of life; and took care not only that himself, but all his family and followers, constituting a little colony, should have the means and opportunity of worshipping Jehovah. Thus did he recognise the obligations under which the head of a house, and the prince of an infant nation, lie to honour the living God. Strong as Abraham's faith was, it was put to a severe test, when the country which he expected to find flowing with milk and honey, turned out to be the victim of famine; but it stood this trial, and doubtless was strengthened by it. Alas! that he should fall under the next; yet so it was. In a selfish, cowardly fear, utterly unworthy of such a man of faith as Abraham, he listened to the temptations of an expediency as foolish as it was sinful, and said to the king of Egypt that his wife was his sister. For this, as soon as the falsehood was detected, he was rebuked by the very heathen. It would seem Jehovah is determined to stain the pride of man; and so he suffers his people to fail in those very graces for which they are most distinguished—the father of the faithful shall sin by unbelief.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

CHAP. XI. 1—9. How awful is the depravity of man! What moral weakness is discovered in circumstances well fitted to animate and strengthen in good! What a serious evil has the confusion of languages proved! How much time and labour have been lost in acquiring foreign tongues! How has diversity of language operated as a barrier to the progress of knowledge, and the triumphs of the cross! Easily does God defeat the schemes of his enemies. They collect their strength to build a great tower which may reach to heaven. He introduces but a little confusion into their speech, and all their plans are frustrated. Let us remember how easy it is for God to punish—to defeat—to overrule; and let us trust his moral government with the greater confidence.

CHAP. XII. Let us be thankful to God for that peculiar dispensation of which Abraham was the head—a dispensation which lasted for 2000 years—which was deeply interesting and impressive in itself—admirably adapted to the circumstances of the world—and which has been the source of unnumbered blessings to mankind, preserving and diffusing that divine knowledge to the faith of which is attached eternal life. Let us stand in awe of the sovereignty of God. He called Abraham not for his good works, or prospective attainments, but of his own free grace, for the manifestation of his divine glory, from the heart of an idolatrous family, sunk in ignorance and sin, without one good quality to recommend; and while God chose him, he passed by multitudes not more guilty than he. Should not the faith of Abraham lead to our imitation. With all the simplicity of a child he took God at his word, confided in him, without reserve, and enjoyed the honour and the blessedness of being the Father of the faithful. Let us ever, amid the darkest providences, trust in the faithfulness of Jehovah as our covenant God; and though temporal greatness should be withheld, God will bless us, and make us blessings to others. Let us beware of unbelief. Even the most honoured are not secure against serious backsliding. Let us put no confidence in human wisdom and resources where opposed to the mind and will of God; but study to walk before God perfectly, cherishing a sense of our own weakness, and depending on the promised grace of the Holy Spirit. Thus only we can hope to recommend the truth which we believe, and escape the severe reproach of being reproved for our sins by the very heathen.

PRAYER:

Most blessed God! What God is there in heaven or in earth that can do according to thy works? And well may the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of thee, for thou didst speak and it was done—thou commandedst and it stood fast—thou bringest the counsel of the heathen to nought, thou makest the devices of the people of none effect; but thy counsels, O Lord, stand for ever; the thoughts of thy heart are to all generations. How great is the pride and rebellion of man! How often, alas! do we lift up ourselves against the Lord, and attempt to follow our own way, disregarding thy law and providence, and seeking even to frustrate the purposes of thy grace. Yet how easy is it for thee, O God, to confound and scatter all the schemes of thy rebellious children. Well is it for us that thou dost not abandon us to our waywardness. May we feel truly grateful for thy kind interpositions. We adore the sovereign, we rejoice in the condescending, mercy by which thou didst choose Abraham and his family to be the guardians and dispensers of thy blessed truth to men. May we approve ourselves sons and daughters, by crediting thy word with the simplicity of children, and going forth to duty, and temptation, strong in the Lord, and in the power of thy might. Forbid we should ever listen to the suggestions of human expediency in opposition to the requirements of thy holy law; may we remember that whilst thou art the God of mercy, thou art also the God of holiness, and wilt not fail to punish sin even in thine own people. May we ever make it our study to walk before the Lord perfectly; and may the Holy Spirit help our infirmities, and in the hour of trial lead us upwards to our compassionate Intercessor.

God of all the families of the earth! be very gracious to the whole body of our brethren of mankind in their varied circumstances and relations. Be especially merciful to thine ancient people, the descendants of Abraham. May the goodness and severity of God lead them to repentance. May they be humbled in the dust for all their offences, particularly for their protracted rejection of thy Son, the true Messiah; and may they behold in Jesus of Nazareth that blessed Seed of Abraham, in whom alone they, and all the families of the earth, can be blessed. May the means which are employed for the conversion of the Jews be greatly extended, and signally honoured by the great and good Shepherd of the flock; and may the time speedily arrive when the confusion of Babel shall be healed, when human language, the repository of words of wickedness, profanity and war, shall give place to one holy, united, and harmonious tongue, even the language of the New Jerusalem. These, our morning requests, we present before thee, entreating a favourable answer, in the name of Him who is our only Hope and Confidence. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW VII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In reading this chapter, one is struck with the severe honesty of our blessed Lord. Many of the topics are highly offensive and irritating to the natural mind; such as the exposure of self-deception and false teachers; and the observations on the danger of missing the way of life, and the disappointment and ruin of a mere religious profession. Had He consulted his own acceptance among men, he would not have ventured upon such points, and so his conduct upon the present occasion, poor though he was, and surrounded by powerful enemies, may be classed among the internal proofs of the divinity of his mission. It is scarcely necessary to remark, that it is not all judgment on the spirit and conduct of others, which Christ condemns: for immediately after he calls upon his people to judge of false teachers; but rash and censorious judgment, which was common among the Jews, and which was then, as it is now, often associated with great self-ignorance and deception. We are not to throw our pearls before swine. Injudicious proceedings are often as hurtful to the cause of Christ, as censorious judgments. Scripture not only instructs in the duty, it also supplies us with the strongest encouragements to prayer. It invites the utmost importunity, and it is illustrated by homely examples, which appeal to every heart, and reveal the character of God in aspects of beauty and tenderness, unknown to false religion. It is sad, that in addition to the corruption within, there should be the addition of man's deception from without; but false teachers there have always been, and ever will be. It is, however, ground of thankfulness, that false doctrine is usually associated with selfish and unholy practices, so that the tree may be known by its fruits. It is not by external distinctions, such as ecclesiastical ordination or religious professions, that false teachers are to be distinguished from the true. It is by the tendency of the system they preach, and their own prevailing temper and conduct. Condescending and tender as the Saviour was, he was faithful in declaring that the mere profession of religion, as distinct from its practice, would not only nothing avail in the great day, but would overwhelm the professor in shame and confusion. This is quite reasonable. Men have no value for an empty profession—why should God? The declaration of Christ, that 'many will say in that day, Have we not prophesied in thy name,' &c., shows that men may go a great way in religion, to the extent of preaching with acceptance in the name of Christ, and even working miracles; and yet, after all, come short of eternal life.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Reviewing the chapter, let us be on our guard against censoriousness in our judgment of others. No spirit can be more injurious to the peace of society, and of the church of Christ, and few more miserable or deceiving to our own souls. Let us never forget the just appointment by which, even in this world, it shall be measured to us according as we mete to others. Great are the scripture encouragements to prayer! The revealed character of God as a Father, and his own warm, and comprehensive, and repeated promise of success, as well as the intercession of Christ in heaven, and the intercession of the Holy Spirit upon earth, all invite to its importunate exercise. How abandoned the heart, how strong the sense of guilt which restrains prayer before God, and will not be moved by his most gracious encouragements. There may be difficulties occasionally in applying the golden rule, but for the great mass of cases, and for the ordinary business of life, it is a safe and sufficient guide. Let us be thankful to God for it. Let us not be surprised or stumbled, because false teachers frequently appear in the church, under the aspect of the sheep, bearing the character of the wolf. This is no more than what our Lord has taught us to expect. Let us be on our guard, and never fail to bring their doctrine, and character, and proceedings, to the test of God's holy word; and where we have detected, let us shun them. And seeing that many who promised fair, and are highly reputed in the church on earth, shall be excluded from the kingdom of heaven, let us take care that we are among the doers of Christ's word, and not the mere hearers; and with this view, let us be given to watchfulness and prayer, and be contented with nothing short of a consistent, holy life.

PRAYER.

It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High! to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Blessed be thy goodness for the encouragement which thou hast given us, to draw near to thee in prayer; that thou hast not only said, 'Ask and ye shall receive—seek and ye shall find—knock and it shall be opened to you;' but hast assured us, that as certainly as an earthly parent gives good things to his children, so certainly wilt thou, our Father who art in heaven, give the Holy Spirit to them who ask thee. We rejoice in the promise of the Spirit, and would honour Him, even as we honour the Father and the Son. We would remember his personality and divinity, and the high and glorious offices which he executes, in applying to the souls of men the redemption which Christ hath wrought out. Under his teaching and guidance, may those of us who have not entered the strait gate, now enter it in repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ; and under the same blessed guardianship may those who have entered, be persuaded to press forward with increasing diligence and perseverance on the narrow way which leadeth unto life. Most merciful God! forbid that any of us should content ourselves with a mere religious profession; saying, Lord, Lord, while we do not the will of our Father who is in heaven. May we remember that every tree is known by its fruits: and examine ourselves, whether our fruit, our spirit, and temper, and life, be the product of the good or the corrupt tree. May we make it our care to build upon Christ, the Rock of ages, that when the rains descend, and the floods come, and the winds blow and beat upon the house of our hope, it may not fall, being founded on a rock. And in the meantime, may we prove the reality of our Christian discipleship, by not only loving the Lord supremely, but by loving our neighbour even as we love ourselves. May we shun rash and censorious judgments, and beware, when marking the mote in our brother's eye, lest a beam be found in our own. May we, in all our intercourse with others, even the unworthy and injurious, be animated by that divine principle of Charity, which suffereth long and is kind, which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

God of love! we lift up our earnest and united intercessions in behalf of all men; in behalf of our beloved country, our Sovereign, and all placed in authority over us. Pour down upon them, and upon all ranks, the spirit of true humiliation for numberless national offences; and turn away from our land merited judgment. Bless the church universal! Bring to a speedy and effectual end the reign of Antichrist, in all its forms of infidelity, superstition, and error; greatly revive the churches of the Reformation, even with a double portion of the spirit of apostolic times, and hasten the glory of the latter days, when Jew and Gentile shall rejoice universally in the rule of Messiah.

Be very gracious, Father of mercies, to our friends and relatives, our benefactors, our enemies. Look in compassion upon the children of affliction, and adapt the communications of thy grace to their necessity: and while ourselves about to lie down and take sweet rest and sleep, may we not forget the hour when we shall be stretched on beds of sickness, and death; and gladly improve our present privileges and opportunities. Hearer of prayer! we present our supplications at thy footstool, entreating an answer, not according to the poverty of our requests, but according to the riches of thy free and sovereign mercy: in the name, and for the sake of thy dear Son, the Lamb who was slain, to whom, with thee, O Father and the Holy Spirit, the triune Jehovah, be ascribed honour and glory, blessing and praise, now and for ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCII. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 4. The place of the altar. Altars in these days were rude erections of earth or stone, on which sacrifices were offered. Wherever Abram pitched his tent, he erected an altar to the Lord, and though surrounded by idolaters, he was neither ashamed nor afraid to worship the true God. In Canaan, before going down to Egypt, he built an altar, and called upon the name of the Lord; and on his return to Canaan, he repaired to the same consecrated spot to renew his acts of devotion. Ver. 7. When Abram was first called, his nephew Lot accompanied him, and they sojourned together till this period. But their substance increasing to such an extent, that the land was not able to bear them, jealousy and contention arose amongst their servants. The cause of the strife might be the encroachments that were made by their respective herdsmen, either on the rich pastures or the wells of water. The Canaanite dwelt then in the land. That such a spirit of hostility and strife should manifest itself in the view of these natives, who were idolaters, occasioned deep distress to the mind of Abram. Their neighbours taking advantage of their quarrels, might denude them of their property; but what was worse, the name of Jehovah would be blasphemed; the true religion wounded and disparaged. Ver. 10. Lot beheld the plain of Jordan, &c. The whole banks of the Jordan were rich and beautiful, but the vale of Siddim, where once stood Sodom and Gomorrah, was peculiarly so. This plain was by divine vengeance transformed into a pestilential lake; but then, it possessed every thing to attract and charm the eye; it was pleasant as the garden of Eden, and fertile as the banks of the Nile. Ver. 15. To thee will I give, &c. The promise which God had made to Abram, chap. xii. 7. is here renewed, and in fuller and more explicit terms. Yet, God did not give to Abram, personally, the actual possession of Canaan, for he was a pilgrim and a stranger in it: nor did he give to his seed the perpetual possession of it, for it has now fallen into other hands; still he himself acquired the title to it now by the divine donation, and his posterity took the full possession of it at the appointed time, in virtue of the original promise, and for Abram's sake.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Wherever the people of God go, they will cherish a spirit of prayer; and they will maintain the worship of the true God, even in the presence of enemies. While the wealth of this world cannot purchase contentment and happiness, it is often the occasion of much dispeace, and often severs the strongest ties of friendship and brotherly love. The child of God will always be a peace-maker, and he will make many personal sacrifices to promote and maintain peace and good-will. Many, for the gains and advantages of this world, sacrifice their spiritual privileges, expose themselves to the most dangerous temptations, and thereby hazard their eternal well-being. Those who, in choosing their secular relations, employments, companionships, and settlements, seek not the interests of religion and the weal of their souls, but carnal gratification and earthly aggrandisement, cannot hope for the presence and blessing of God. When men unnecessarily and unguardedly throw themselves into the way of sinners, they are sure to suffer by it. Although robbed of earthly friends, yet nothing can rob us of the presence and friendship of God. In seasons the most threatening, and gloomy, and dark, the soul may have the richest communications from above. 'Man's extremity is God's opportunity.' Whatever were the promises, and the prospects, and the hopes that Abram enjoyed, ours are more cheering, more enlivening, more animating; ours is a richer, more glorious, more abiding inheritance than his. Let us ever set the Lord before us; let us ever raise our altar to our three-one God: then shall his presence be with us, to render every change, every situation in life, a blessed preparation for the heavenly Canaan.

PRAYER.

Father of mercies, and God of all grace and consolation, we come before thee this morning, in the multitude of thy tender mercies, and as a family we would surround our domestic altar, and present to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving and praise. Many, O Lord, are the blessings we are receiving at thy hand. They are new to us every morning, and every evening, yea, every moment of our lives. That we have been protected during the watches of the last night; that we have had refreshing sleep; that we have been permitted to assemble together in circumstances of comfort, is because thy mercy never faileth. Justly, O Lord, mightest thou have made our sleep our death, and our awaking this morning to be in outer darkness; for we have forgotten the Lord that made us, we have overlooked the hand that feeds us, the arm that sustains us; but the mercy of the Lord endureth for ever; his grace never faileth, and thus it is that we are in the land of the living, that we are on praying ground. 'Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits.' Let the goodness, the forbearance, the tender mercies of God, of which we have shared so richly, awaken in our souls the feelings of deep contrition, while they kindle the flame of holy gratitude and love. When thou, Lord, art loading us with thy benefits, and art heaping coals of fire on our heads, let these hard hearts of ours be melted, and let our unfeigned language be, What can we render to the Lord for all his goodness to us?

But we have not merely to thank thee, O gracious Father, for unnumbered temporal mercies, but for the continuance of spiritual blessings and privileges; we have to thank thee for the word of salvation, and for the renewed privilege of pouring out our hearts before thee. We thank thee for all that the gospel reveals and makes known to us: for its doctrines, its promises, its consolations, its hopes. We thank thee for bringing before us the lives of thine own children, that by their fidelity, and constancy, and contempt of the world, we may be encouraged and stimulated: that by their failings and departures from God, we may be warned and deterred. Give us, Lord, we beseech thee, the spirit of the Father of the faithful, who lived as a pilgrim and stranger on the earth, and whose eye was habitually directed to a better country. Guard us against the allurements and temptations of this world, and help us, Lord, to place our affections on the things that are unseen and eternal. Lord, do thou enable us to follow peace, and to seek peace by all means; and may we ever cherish the Spirit and follow the steps of Him who was meek and benignant, and lowly in heart.

We acknowledge, O Lord, our natural proneness to cleave to the dust and to seek a resting place here; we acknowledge that our hearts in their natural state are very enmity to thee, that we are hateful and hating one another; O may thy Spirit be given to change these hard hearts, these carnal inclinations, these worldly desires of ours; that changed, and renewed, and moulded into thine own blessed image, we may live as the redeemed of the Lord, as the expectants of future glory.

Help us, Lord, in our intercourse with the world this day, in our varied duties and engagements, to set the Lord before us, to live as seeing God who is invisible, to keep at a distance from every thing that is sinful, and while we are in the world, and mingle with the world, may we never be of the world. We offer up these our supplications in the name of Him whom thou hearest always, who is our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xcvi. 10—12.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW viii.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

There being several mighty deeds of Christ recorded in this chapter, it has been called by an old divine, the miraculous scripture. The miracles of Christ were deeds of mercy, and their very character shows the benignity of his heart; but the manner in which they were performed not merely shows that God was with Him, but that He was God; that it was by no delegated power, but by his own inherent might, that the deed was performed; there is such a majesty and authority as bespeaks a present Deity. Christ speaks and it is done; He says, 'I will, be thou clean,' and a cure instantly follows.

There is reference made to various instances of supernatural power, the casting out of devils, and the healing of the sick of every name. These were plain intimations that Christ was the Son of God. But they were also a fulfilment of Old Testament prophecy. Jesus appeared in the very time, and place, and manner, sustaining the very character, preaching the very doctrines, and exhibiting the very credentials that the prophets, hundreds of years before, had announced in reference to the coming Messiah; so that it might very justly be asked, 'Is not this the Christ?'

The last recorded miracle in this chapter is Christ's ejection of the devils from the bodies of two unfortunates, and his permitting them to take possession of a herd of swine; and here we are called to notice the recognition, by these evil spirits, of Christ as the true Messiah, who came to subvert their kingdom, and to destroy their works; even Satan himself is compelled to bear testimony to the Son of God. But do the Gadarenes hail his appearance? do they beg him to prolong his stay? do they intreat a further manifestation of his mercy and power? No, they beseech him to depart—they reject him. Christ yields to their wish; He departs from the midst of them, and never do we again hear of his return.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Mark the greatness and the lowliness, the dignity and the abasement of the Saviour in the days of his flesh. He is at once the Son of God, and the Son of man. While all the majesty of Jehovah is displayed in Him, stilling the raging elements, controlling the powers of darkness, awakening the dead from the slumbers of the tomb, who can forbear crying out, My Lord and my God! Yet when we behold the lowly condition of the Son of man, born in poverty, and living in poverty, not having where to lay his head, despised and rejected of men, and that all this, and much more than this, was submitted to by the Son of the Highest, to bring apostate rebels to God, who can forbear exclaiming, 'O the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!' If Christ discovered such majesty and power, such grace and mercy, while he tabernacled on earth, how deserving is he of our most unlimited trust and confidence. He is able to save to the uttermost; let us put all our concerns into his hands, banish every feeling of doubt, distrust, and fear, and rest persuaded that believing in Christ, all shall be given with Christ, and for Christ's sake. Let us cultivate the spirit of the centurion; deep humility, a consciousness of great unworthiness, an unshaken reliance on the power of the Saviour, and a sincere feeling of sympathy in the distresses of others. Are we, like Christ, more captivated with grace than with greatness? Have we, like him, a higher admiration of gracious principle in the soul of the meanest, than the highest display of earthly grandeur in the state of the most exalted? Faith has never lost, and never will lose its reward. Heathens shall stand up in the judgment against those who have had the offers of Christ and salvation brought near to them, and have rejected or neglected them. Many, under the influence of a momentary feeling, express admiration of Christ, and purpose to follow him without counting the cost; that they must forsake all, count all things loss, leave father and mother for Christ, yea, take up the cross and follow him. It is only a conviction of great and imminent danger that leads men to cry out in earnest for deliverance. Yet while there is a trembling on account of sin, and the earnest prayer, 'Lord, save us,' there must be no distrusting his power, no doubting his willingness, and no disbelieving his promise to save. Unbelief distracts the soul and dishonours the Saviour. The malignity of Satan impels him to seek the ruin of immortal souls; yet it is matter of joy that the legions of hell are under the eye and subject to the control of the Saviour; that they cannot proceed a step beyond what he permits; that a hair of a saint's head they cannot touch but as he allows. You perceive how powerfully the love of the world, love of the gains and profits of this world, operates on many; they would rather lose the presence of Christ, lose their souls, than part with their worldly substance. Awful is the state of that nation, that community, that family, that soul that seeks Christ to depart, and loses his presence. Let us remember, that if we entreat Christ to depart, he may listen to our request: and once forsaking us, it may be for ever!

PRAYER.

Before thee, O Lord, the Father of all, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, would we again prostrate ourselves, in holy reverence. We acknowledge our great unworthiness to appear in thy presence, but thou dost encourage us to come boldly to thy throne of grace, and, for the sake of Him whom thou hearest always, to hope for mercy to pardon, and grace to help us. Give us then to draw near with true hearts, and with the confidence of children to their Father, to pour out our hearts before thee.

And now, Lord, we entreat of thee to give us just views of our own sinfulness. We are in thy sight, wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; covered with the leprosy of sin, the whole head sick, and the whole heart faint. But how little do we feel this our natural condition. How prone are we to lose sight of our guilt and depravity, to draw a covering over the diseases of our corrupt nature, the plagues of our deceitful and desperately wicked hearts, and thus to say, Peace, peace to our souls, all is well. Do thou, then, O merciful Father, by thy Holy Spirit, shine into our hearts, to give us just views of sin, and just views of ourselves as sinners. Discover to us our deep depravity, our personal guilt, our manifold transgressions, that we may thus be led to unfeigned humility, to genuine contrition, to fervent supplication. At this moment we would use the language, with, we trust, somewhat of the feelings of the abased publican,—God be merciful to us sinners; or the trembling disciples,—Lord save us, we perish. O what ground is there for eternal thankfulness and praise, that with the Lord there is mercy, that with our God there is plenteous redemption; that there is a way of escape from sin's guilt and sin's pollution and power; there is now balm in Gilead, there is a physician there. Thou, O Lord, hast laid our help on one that is mighty to save. We triumph in Christ, who is revealed and made known to us in the gospel, and of whom such glorious things are spoken in that portion of the word of life now read. We would mark, with adoring gratitude, the compassion and tenderness of our gracious Redeemer, the dignity and power of our Almighty Saviour; and we do rejoice in the thought that that Saviour, exalted though he is on high, is the same gracious, compassionate friend; that he is willing, as he is able, to save to the very uttermost, all that come unto God through Him; that he retains a feeling of our infirmities, and that he will succour those that are tempted. Let it be given to us, Lord, in the behalf of Christ, to believe on his name. Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. We would say in faith, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make us clean; speak the word and we shall be healed. Pardon, Lord, our iniquities, for they are very great. Cure, Lord, our every disease. Heal our backslidings; mortify our corruptions; uproot our every sinful propensity; transform us into thine own blessed image; make us, Lord, what thou wouldst have us to be, and keep us by thy mighty power, through faith, unto salvation.

We would look back on the way by which thou, Lord, hast led us this day; thou hast carried us out and brought us in in safety, and hast permitted no evil to approach us; and we would set up our Ebenezer, saying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. And now, Lord, we commit ourselves to thee this night; defend us, we beseech thee, from all danger; grant us refreshing sleep; bring us, if it is thy holy will, to the light of a new day, with increasing desires to love, to serve, and to obey thee. And to thy name, in Christ Jesus, we will ascribe all the praise. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXIII. 3—7.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. Vision. Before there was a written record, God's will was communicated to mankind, chiefly, either by dreams or visions. These visions were of two kinds, sometimes the thing was made known by an external representation when the senses were all awake and alive; at other times the senses were suspended, but the mind was kept active and elevated to the contemplation and understanding of what was revealed. Ver. 3. Born in my house, &c. It was not unfrequent for servants or slaves born in the house and brought up under a master's eye, and who, by their affection and fidelity, had ingratiated themselves, to become, when the master was childless, his sole heir, or to inherit a large share of his wealth. Ver. 6. Believed in the Lord, &c. Abram's unshaken reliance on the faithfulness and power of God, to accomplish that which appeared impossible, his having a son when both he and Sarah were far advanced in years, a son whom he was prepared to sacrifice at God's command, yet whom he was persuaded God could raise up though consumed to ashes—was such an instance of faith that he was called the Father of believers. It was through this principle of faith that he was accepted, that he was viewed and treated as righteous, and not in virtue of any or all his other heavenly graces, nor in virtue of any or all his virtuous and holy deeds. Ver. 9. Take me an heifer, &c. Ere the vision is granted, Abram is directed to go through certain rites. The different creatures here mentioned, and which, doubtless, were sacrificed, are the same which were afterwards prescribed in the Levitical law. When the victim was slain and equally divided, and its parts placed asunder, the contracting parties approached at the opposite ends of the passage that was formed, met in the middle, and there took the oath of confirmation. Ver. 17. Smoking furnace, &c. God was symbolized as passing through the parts of the victims, and thus does he condescend to ratify his covenant in the usual prescribed mode. Some expositors seem to think, that by the sign of the smoking furnace, God meant to point out Israel's misery in the iron furnace of Egypt, and that by the burning lamp is signified God's light and deliverance after the long dark night of affliction.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Blessed are they whose God is the Lord; they shall want no good thing: He will be their protection in danger, their guide in perplexity, and their stay in want; He will give them grace here and glory hereafter. It is a matter of great comfort, that we can pour all the complaints of our oppressed and burdened spirits into the ear of our compassionate, almighty, and faithful Friend. The promises of God are suited to all our circumstances and exigencies; but that we may experience their soothing influence; that they may prove an anchor and stay to the soul, we must exercise a firm, unshaken reliance upon them. Would we be the children of Abram and be counted righteous as he was, and heirs of the inheritance to which he is raised, we must have a faith like his: faith in the wisdom, the power, the mercy, and the faithfulness of God. Above all, faith in Him who is the alone righteousness and strength, the alone salvation and desire, of his people. This reliance on the promise of God through Christ, this trust in the Redeemer, is that divine principle which, in the economy of grace, gives a title to all the privileges and blessings of the new covenant. If we would meet with God, hope for the light of his countenance, and the aids of his almighty power; we must have recourse to all the instituted ordinances of his grace. In the history and experience of God's people, great darkness often precedes great light. The departure of God's people hence, is peaceful and serene, because the Lord is with them, and they anticipate a life and blessedness that shall never end. The covenant betwixt God and his own people, has been confirmed by sacrifice, even by the blood of the Son of God. Let us, like Abram, look beyond a numerous offspring to the promised Seed, and beyond the earthly Canaan to the land of eternal rest.

PRAYER.

It is good for us, O Lord Most High, to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night; for while all thy works praise thee, it surely becomes thy rational offspring to bless thee. We thank thee, Lord, for all thy mercies to us, undeserving sinners; but especially would we bless thy name for thine unspeakable gift, Jesus Christ. In this hast thou manifested thy love towards us, in a way that passeth all understanding. And we bless thee, Lord, for the early intimations of thy purposes of grace, in regard to our rebellious, fallen, and lost race. Never hast thou left thyself without witness of thy gracious designs; We thank thee, that to the first transgressor the whispers of peace were addressed; that to the patriarchs a Deliverer was promised; and that as time advanced, and generation succeeded generation, the declarations of heaven became more full and explicit, and the views of the Deliverer and the deliverance more clear and enlivening; and we adore thee, that in the fulness of time, the promised Deliverer, has appeared to establish thy faithfulness, to magnify thy law, and to bring lost sinners to thee. And now, Lord, what reason have we to thank thee that the Day Spring from on high hath visited us; that to us Christ is made known; that to us his salvation is published; that to us all the riches of his grace and glory are freely offered. O let us never forget, that to whom much is given, of them much shall be required. Inspire us with that holy principle that distinguished the Father of the faithful; give us that faith which raises above all doubts, all suspicion, all fear; which unites the soul savingly to Christ, and gives an interest in his salvation. Give us, we beseech thee, to rely with unshaken confidence on the promises of the faithful and immutable Jehovah. Give us to lay hold of, and trust to, the provisions of that covenant which was ratified by the blood of Christ, and which is in all things well ordered and sure. Give us to look to Christ as our righteousness and strength, as all our salvation and all our desire. Justify us, Lord, freely by thy grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. And we pray, Lord, that we may experience the sanctifying influence of this divine principle, that our faith may work by love, that it may overcome the world, and that it may be accompanied by all the fruits of righteousness to the praise of thy name. And, Lord, relying on the gracious declaration to Abraham, that in his seed all the families of the earth shall be blessed, we plead thine own faithful word of promise. Give thy Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. May men be blessed in Jesus; may all nations call him blessed! We pray for the sorrowful and the afflicted, that the consolations of God may refresh their spirits. Give the dying an interest in Christ, that to them to depart may be great gain.

And now, Lord, we would place ourselves this day under thy guidance and guardianship; we would go whithersoever thou leadest us. We would ever hear thy voice behind us, saying, 'This is the way, walk ye in it.' We would sanctify thee, the Lord, in our hearts, and we would live habitually under the constraining influence of redeeming love. Lord, direct us! Lord, uphold us! Lord, strengthen us! Be our God for ever and ever, and our guide even unto death. And now to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, would we ascribe all the glory, now and for ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XC. 14.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW IX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter exhibits a frightful picture of the deep malignity and indomitable hatred of the Pharisees towards our Lord. No deeds of power could conquer their prejudices; no acts of kindness could win their affections. He can say nothing, he can do nothing, that meets their approval. Because Christ said, on curing the paralytic, 'thy sins are forgiven thee,' they accused him of blasphemy. Christ, however, vindicates the expression, and lays claim to divinity; he tells them plainly, that He, the Son of man, has power to forgive sins, and that he no more blasphemes in using this expression, than in saying to the lame man, 'Arise and walk.'

After our Lord's conversion of an earthly-minded publican, Christ repaired to his house, where he was brought into immediate contact with those who, by the law, were ceremonially unclean. This gave grievous offence to these same self-righteous scribes. They allege, that by this intercourse with noted sinners, he was at once opposing the will of God, and contracting defilement. Be it even as they alleged, that there was a departure from the letter of the ceremonial ritual, they should bear in mind that God himself declared, Hosea vi. 6. that the ceremonial rite was to give place to the deed of mercy. God preferred mercy to sacrifice. Why did he associate with these publicans and sinners? For no other purpose than that he might bring light, and conviction, and salvation near to them. They were the sick and diseased, and where should the physician be but in company with the sick? Casteth out devils, &c. Christ might just appeal to the character of his miracles, to disprove the alleged fellowship. While they were deeds of might, they were deeds of mercy. He came not to destroy, but to save. By every divine act of his, distress was removed, and happiness conferred; the lame were made to leap for joy, the dumb to sing the high praises of the Lord. Is it thus that satan, the enemy of God and of goodness, acts or can act? The thing speaks for itself; Christ can have no concord with Belial.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The first thing that strikes us in this chapter and in the whole of Christ's history, is his unbounded compassion and unwearied beneficence. He went about doing good. Let us go and do likewise; let the same mind be in us that was in Christ; let us do good as we have opportunity. Mark the sovereignty and omnipotence of divine grace, in the call and conversion of Matthew. What is this individual who becomes a monument of mercy? He is one whose character is contemptible, whose employment is infamous, a detested publican; yet he is brought into the intimate fellowship and honourable service of the Redeemer. 'God has mercy on whom he will have mercy.' And as the grace of God is sovereign, so it is resistless; it is like the lightning which rends asunder and shivers the loftiest oak, which levels to the dust the proudest tower. Christ speaks the word and the change is effected. There is something sublime in the account given of the conversion. Christ says, 'Follow me. And he arose and followed him.' With an attachment to the world that might appear unconquerable, in circumstances and in society that naturally steeled against any saving impression, with a heart hard as the nether millstone, the publican listens, he yields, he follows Him who has not where to lay his head. Has such a saving change been wrought in us? has the voice of Christ reached our heart? If we are really changed, effectually called, we will, we cannot but follow Christ. In every case where conversion is genuine, the world, and satan, and self, all combine in holding away from Christ; but in despite of all, in defiance of all, the liberated captive flies to Christ, lays hold of him, and will not let him go.

How graciously does Christ accommodate his requirements to the special circumstances and attainments of his children. Christ taught his disciples as they were able to bear, and he summoned to duties corresponding to the degree of light, and knowledge, and strength, that was imparted. Let ministers and parents, and advanced Christians, act similarly; let them take the children by the hand, and lead them gently along; let them not despise the day of small things; let them not look for the maturity of Paul the aged, in the child Timothy. If there is a sin more awful than another, it is that of these Pharisees, who ascribe to a co-partnership with satan, what can only be effected by the finger of God. Read what Christ himself says of it, Mat. xii. 31.

Our Lord lets us see what the duty of Christians is, with regard to the church, and the world; it is to pray and to continue to pray. There is a plenteous harvest to be reaped, sinners are fainting, souls are perishing, Christians must pray the Lord to increase the number of the labourers, and to increase their zeal, their activity, their affection, their faithfulness.

PRAYER.

How excellent is thy name, O Lord, in all the earth; thou hast set thy glory above the heavens. Thou art clothed with honour and majesty; angels worship thee, archangels adore thee. But though thou humblest thyself to behold the things that are in heaven, thou dost not disregard the things that are on earth. To that man thou lookest, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit. Encouraged by this consideration, weak, helpless, and guilty, and polluted, though we are, we would this evening prostrate ourselves before thee. We would thank thee, Lord, for the unnumbered mercies that have been crowded into our lot. Well may we say, that our blessings have been numerous as the moments of our existence. We were cast on thee from the womb, and thou hast never ceased to care for us; our wants have returned daily and hourly, but thy hand has been opened for their supply; dangers have threatened and overtaken us, but thine arm has been stretched out for our defence. Surely on looking back on the way by which we have been conducted through the wilderness, and marking God's dealings towards us, we may well say, 'goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life.' And yet, what are we that the Lord should deal thus bountifully with us; for although we have been nourished and brought up as children, we have rebelled against thee. And during this very day that has fled away, how often have we forgotten, how often have we forsaken thee, how much have we been cumbered with the many things to the neglect of the one thing needful, how little have our thoughts, and words, and actions, been under the direction and control of religious principle, and how little have we in our duties and trials been influenced by a sense of the divine goodness. Lord, thou mightest righteously have cut us down as the cumberers of the ground: but thou art God and not man, therefore thou hast borne with us, and waitest to be gracious to us. See God our shield, look on us in the face of thine own Anointed. Receive us graciously, love us freely, for Christ's sake. And now we adore thee, that thou hast permitted us once more to read thy most holy word, to learn of Christ and his salvation, and to meditate on things that are spiritual and divine. Bring the doctrines and lessons of thy word home with saving power; let them dwell in us richly, in all knowledge and understanding. Do thou, Lord, who hast the hearts of all in thy hands, speak with resistless energy to each of our hearts. If there are among us benighted souls, may thy Holy Spirit enlighten us; if there are dead among us, may we be quickened and revived; if we labour under spiritual apathy, do thou, O Lord, arouse us; strengthen the spark within us that may be ready to die; speak to us, Lord, according to our different cases, and make us what thou wouldest have us to be. Fill us with deeper concern for the glory of the Redeemer; inspire us with more sincere, and ardent, and active love for perishing souls. Lord, the harvest is great; soon may the wilderness be glad, the desert rejoice, and blossom like the rose!

We commit ourselves, Lord, to thy divine protection this night; may the eternal God be our refuge; may the everlasting arms encircle us. Bring us, if it is thy holy will, to the light of a new day; and whether we sleep or wake, may we be still with thee. Our prayers now, Lord, are before thee, we beseech thee to hear, to accept, and to answer us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 42.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XVII.

REMARKS.

Abram in his impatience to obtain the promised seed, had formed an improper connection with Hagar, and the child that was born of her had for some years been fondly regarded as the son of promise. When the Lord, therefore, began to renew the intercourse with Abram, and to make a full disclosure of his purpose concerning the promised seed, he began with declaring himself to be the Almighty God, before whom Abram was to walk and be perfect (ver. 1.); implying that as he was well able to accomplish every word of promise, though to the eye of sense it might be attended with seeming impossibilities, it was the part of his servant to resort to no crooked line of policy, but to pursue the onward path of integrity, resting with assured confidence in the word, 'whereon God had caused him to hope.' And to render the things promised concerning the largeness of his offspring, and their inheritance of the land of Canaan, more sure to the faith of Abram, the Lord proceeded to make them matter of covenant-engagement, appointing the rite of circumcision to stand as the sign and memorial of that between them. Nor did he stop there in his condescension and goodness to his servant, but having converted what had hitherto existed merely as matter of promise into the terms of a stipulated engagement, he proceeded to disclose the still undeclared, and now even unsuspected fact, that Sarah was to be the mother of the son through whom the promised seed was to come.

A momentary feeling of delightful surprise and wonder seems to have passed through the mind of Abraham when he heard this unexpected intelligence; but it soon passed away, like a vision of the night, leaving the mind more distressed and desolate than before. The thought instantly occurred to him, that the promise of a child by Sarah was fatal to the interests of Ishmael, and that his long-cherished hopes concerning this beloved child were to be for ever quenched in disappointment. He therefore pled with the earnestness of parental affection, that 'Ishmael might still live before God;' but it was the pleading of nature against the purposes of grace. Ishmael was not the child of promise, nor were the things revealed as objects of faith at all spoken concerning him; he was the son of the bondmaid, the mere offspring of the flesh, not the fruit of that everlasting covenant, the blessings of which are all the gifts of grace on the part of God, and received, on the part of his people, by the exercise of a living faith. He must, therefore, be removed, that the purpose of grace might stand, though the heart-strings of a father's love were to be rent asunder by the stroke.

Abraham's prayer, however, was not altogether rejected; for the Lord promised to make Ishmael also the head of a numerous and powerful offspring. And Abraham, in testimony of his cordial acquiescence in the covenant, and full confidence in its promised blessings, proceeded to administer to himself and to his household the rite of circumcision—giving a prompt and faithful obedience to all that was commanded, ver. 23—27. In this he stands forth to us as a pattern of the sincere and ready obedience, which must ever be yielded by the covenant-people of God to all his righteous commands; and as we learn here the necessity of such an obedience, so in the previous transactions we learn, that if we would inherit the blessings of the everlasting covenant, we must lay our account by having the feelings and affections of nature mortified by the operation of grace, and must renounce all confidence in the flesh, that the power of God may be magnified in us.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God! thou art worthy to receive our humblest adoration; yea, thou art exalted above all blessing and praise; and there is none in heaven or on earth that can once be compared to thee. The nations before thee are as nothing, and are counted less than nothing, and vanity. Help us, therefore, to fall down before thee with reverence and godly fear; and while we venture into thy presence, let every proud thought be abased, that God alone may be exalted in our hearts.

We give thanks unto thy name, O Lord, that though we see thee not with our bodily eye, we are yet permitted to behold thee with the eye of faith—revealed in a character fitted to draw forth the liveliest feelings and affections of our heart. It is thy mercy which hath thus made us to differ from the blinded and idolatrous nations who worship they know not what, being carried captive by Satan at his will. And since thou hast revealed thyself, not only as possessed of that essential glory and excellence, which is inseparably thine own, but as condescending to hold with us, thine unworthy creatures, a covenant-relation through thy Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, O grant that we may be enabled to apprehend thee aright in this endearing character, and to close heartily with the terms which thou art therein holding out to our acceptance.

May we ever bear in mind, that it is in Christ alone we can possess the privileges of thy children; that it is only by faith in Him, that we have access into the grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. Let Christ appear increasingly precious to our souls; and seeing that in Him, as our surety, we have one infinitely able to satisfy every demand which law and justice could bring against us, may we ever have grace to hold fast this confidence of our rejoicing, and count all things but as loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord.

We pray also, heavenly Father, that as thy covenant-people, thou wouldest enable us to walk worthy of thee unto all pleasing. Having been brought from the depths of misery and corruption, to stand so near to thyself, and inherit the blessings of thine everlasting covenant, O grant that we may be enabled to purify ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, to keep our garments undefiled, and walk with thee our God in the white robes of righteousness. Fill us with the grace of thy blessed Spirit, that we may be able to crucify sin in all our members—that we may rise superior to the desires and affections of nature—that at thy bidding we may be ready to part with every object, however much endeared to our affections, yea, and may not count our very lives dear to us, that we may finish with joy the course which thou hast set before us. May we all be of one mind with our blessed Redeemer, whose meat it was to do the will of His Father in heaven; and may we feel it to be our happiness, as well as our duty, to walk in the careful observance of every precept thou hast enjoined upon us.

Let thy blessing, we humbly beseech thee, be upon us this day, to which, in thy mercy and loving-kindness, we have been spared. Give us our daily bread, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Where we go, do thou, Lord, go with us; cause the light of thy countenance to shine upon us, and let the right hand of thy righteousness establish our goings.

We commend unto thee our friends and relatives, praying that they may all be enriched with thy grace, and satisfied with thy abundant goodness. Let the land in which we live be eminently blessed of thee; let those who rule, rule in the fear of God, and let the hearts of the people be turned away from all manner of iniquity to the knowledge and service of thee, the living God. Yea, let all lands, we pray thee, soon come to know thy truth, and rejoice in thy salvation. Cause thy word to have free course and be glorified throughout the earth—even till thy knowledge cover it as the waters cover the channel of the sea. And now, heavenly Father, let our prayer this morning come up before thee with acceptance, blot out all our sins, and accept of us in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xxxiii. 10.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW x. 1—23.

REMARKS.

The selection of the twelve apostles at this period, and sending them forth to proclaim the approaching institution of Messiah's kingdom, was both a wise and a merciful arrangement. It gave these apostles some trial of the peculiar work in which they were to be engaged, before their divine Master had left them: and it served to acquaint the whole land of Judea with the progress of the mighty work that was going on in the midst of them; while the miraculous power, with which they were invested, evidently bespoke them to be the true and accredited messengers of one who was entitled to the humblest reverence and regard.

The instructions which Christ gave to his apostles for their guidance on this their first embassy to the people, were partly of a special nature, and not intended to be observed, even by the apostles at any subsequent period of their ministry. Thus, they were commanded to provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, nor anything, in short, but what formed a part of their ordinary attire: that going forth unfurnished with any manner of provisions, and carrying nothing with them, either for defence or support, they might have a more sensible experience of the watchful care and providence of their divine Master, and might be the more disposed to trust him for whatsoever was needful, after he had visibly withdrawn his presence from them. But this was the main design which these instructions were intended to serve, and having served that, they were no longer to be considered binding; and indeed, were expressly recalled by Christ, shortly before his crucifixion, (Luke xxii. 35—38,) and the apostles were commanded thenceforth to provide themselves with every thing they possibly could for their defence and support. It is the latter, therefore, and not the former temporary directions, which the Christian missionary or spiritual labourer is to regard as properly applicable to him; and though he should not doubt the ever-watchful care and faithful oversight of the great Shepherd of the sheep, he must remember, that this does not by any means supersede the exercise of his own prudence and foresight.

In the other instructions given by our Lord on this occasion, his apostles were enjoined to confine their labours strictly to the Jews, as the design of God required that these should be first offered the blessings of Messiah's kingdom; and by the time they had gone through the land of Judea, the things which concerned the actual establishment of that kingdom should be at hand, (ver. 23.) This was therefore, but a temporary restriction of their labours; and we know that their commission was afterwards enlarged, so as to reach even to the uttermost parts of the earth. But while sent forth to labour among their own countrymen and to make known the approach of Messiah's kingdom, they were forewarned of much danger and opposition in their course; the miraculous power which they possessed, and the blessed errand on which they were sent, could not save them from malice and persecution at the hands even of those who were of one stock and kindred with themselves; as they amply experienced, though not to any extent now, yet presently after Christ rose from the dead. They were therefore to go forth as in the midst of enemies, with all prudence and circumspection; giving no unnecessary ground of offence, and using every precaution for their safety; but resting assured all the while, that Christ was with them, and would account whatsoever was done against them as done against himself, and would put words of wisdom and power into their mouths, which all their adversaries should not be able to gainsay or resist.

Neither the Christian minister nor the private believer must expect to pass through the world without experiencing its envy and malice, perhaps even its bitterest hatred, if they are indeed faithful to the cause of Christ and zealous in his service. They are not of the world, and therefore the world hateth them. But this should never daunt or discourage them, seeing it is only what they have been taught from the first to expect, and knowing, as they do, that they are cheered with the presence and support of Christ—that if they boldly confess him now, they shall be openly confessed by him hereafter; and if they only endure to the end, they shall unquestionably be saved.

PRAYER.

We bow down before thee, O Lord, adoring thee as the Father of mercies and the God of all grace. Thy thoughts towards us have ever been thoughts of peace, and all thy ways have been faithfulness and truth. The experience of every day brings to us renewed manifestations of thy fatherly goodness, and every new opening of thy counsel unfolds to us fresh discoveries of the everlasting love wherewith thou hast loved us in Christ.

We would unite, O God, in giving thee thanks, eternal thanks, that thou hast sent thy Son into this world to seek and to save the lost. We rejoice that in his blood thou hast provided a ransom sufficient to atone for all guilt, and hast brought in an everlasting righteousness, which for ever perfects them that are sanctified. Herein indeed was love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and gave up his only begotten Son to the death, even the painful and accursed death of the cross, for us. And blessed be thy name, O God, that thou hast not left us in ignorance of thy manifested grace, but hast brought near to each of us the message of this salvation, testifying of thy willingness to receive us to an interest in its blessings, and seal us up to an inheritance in thy kingdom.

O let the glad tidings be received with welcome into our hearts, and have their gracious design fulfilled in our experience, by turning us away from all our iniquities to serve the living God. May we ever hail it as a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Jesus Christ has come into the world to save sinners, even the chief; and seeing that for our sakes thou hast caused him, though he knew no sin, to become sin for us, grant that we may indeed be found the righteousness of God in him.

But, O Lord, we pray, not only that we may be thus led to receive and abide in Jesus, but that we may also be enabled to approve ourselves his faithful followers, and be ready to bear his reproach. Thou hast cast our lot in a world where thy truth is little known, and much disliked; where many sinful prejudices and worldly interests are ever rising up to withstand the claims of Christ: so that the cause of holiness is often oppressed, and the good of thy people evil spoken of. Give us grace, therefore, O Lord, to stand fast against the dangers to which we are exposed, and permit us not to be moved from the hope of that gospel, which thou hast delivered to us. Let the power of our risen Lord flow down into our hearts, and strengthen us with all might, by thy Spirit, in the inner man, that we may overcome, even as he also has overcome; that we may never fall from our steadfastness, but follow him through good report and through bad report, and that in all things he may be glorified by us.

Look, we beseech thee, O Lord, upon thy suffering cause in the earth, and revive it in the midst of the days. Send forth refreshments from thy presence, and ordain strength out of the mouths even of those who are as babes in thy heavenly kingdom, so that they may still the enemy and the avenger. Purify thy church more and more from the corruptions which have defaced her comeliness, and impaired her strength. Clothe thy priests with salvation, and cause thy saints to shout for joy. Let thy work increase and prosper, and let multitudes be added to thy church of such as shall be saved. We commit ourselves to thee for protection and blessing this night. Let the banner of thy love be over us, and let no plague come nigh our dwelling. When we lie down, be thou with us. When we awake, may we find ourselves still with God. And O grant, that whether we wake or sleep, we may all live together with Christ. Hear, Lord, our prayer: pardon our transgressions; accept our thanksgivings for thy manifold mercies through another day; and do to us even more than we can ask or think, through Christ Jesus the Beloved. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 20.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XVIII.

REMARKS.

The events of this chapter form a delightful commentary on the expression, 'Abraham was called the friend of God.' Throughout the whole history of this patriarch, God never appears to admit his servant into such near and familiar terms with him as here. And Abraham was now precisely in the condition, when if ever, we might have expected him to receive the largest manifestation of divine favour. His faith was now complete, able to take in the entire compass of the divine promises, as well as to rest with undoubting confidence on the fulfilment of what was promised. Nor had he only reached this state of completeness as a man of faith, but had also been raised to the high and elevated standing of a covenant-relation to God; so that in regard to the rank and privileges of a spiritual condition he had become a perfect man and had nothing farther to obtain. And now, therefore, God not only revealed himself to his servant as formerly, but comes near to him as a friend—talks with him face to face—gives him to walk in company with angels—admits him to a share in the divine counsels—treats him, in a word, to the noble freedom and distinguishing privileges of a son. In all this Abraham stands as an exact type of the believer, who through faith has laid hold of the everlasting covenant and has come to the full enjoyment of its privileges; and for the purpose of foreshadowing this more distinctly, the things here recorded of Abraham were no doubt specially designed and ordered. When faith is fully formed in the soul, and has attained to settled and comprehensive views of all the mercy and the grace which are disclosed in the divine covenant of love, there is no longer any reserve in the communications that are held between it and God; it sees as with open face the glory of the Lord, and exercises realizing confidence in his blessed word; the secret of the Lord is with it; it enjoys the companionship and ministry of angels, and has power even with God as a prince to prevail.

In Abraham's entertainment of these divine strangers we learn the duty of being hospitable and kind to all, even to those who may be personally unknown to us; and in Sarah's fruitless attempt to deny her unbelieving laughter, we are admonished of the folly of seeking to conceal sin from an all-seeing God. We see, however, that Abraham did not merely entertain those heavenly guests, but also went with them by the way, scarcely knowing how to part with such blessed company. And he reaped the benefit of his heavenly temper by being treated to double honour—by obtaining an insight into the secret counsel of God concerning Sodom and Gomorrah. But he felt the honour to be one which brought with it a solemn responsibility, and seeing that he alone of all men living enjoyed the confidence of God in this behalf, and was admitted to the place of a friend, he regarded himself as called upon to think with concern upon the doomed condition of so many of his fellow-creatures, and to use the friendship he was privileged to hold with God in striving, if possible, to avert the impending ruin. With the deepest reverence and humility, yet with the greatest freedom and earnestness, he entreated that, for the sake of the righteous, God would be pleased to spare the guilty; and God ever granted his request, promising even for the sake of ten, if only ten righteous persons could be found, to spare the whole mass of profligate and wicked men that were crowded into those cities of the plain; but at the same time intimating, that even that limited number could not be found, and that therefore the judgment of God must proceed. How great is the honour which God puts upon his saints, that he will thus allow them to plead with him concerning his judgments! How precious in his sight must be their lives, that for a mere handful of such he will have mercy on an immense multitude of sinners! And O how hateful before him, and how hard to themselves, are the ways of transgressors, which ever cry to heaven for vengeance, and which cannot escape from receiving, sooner or later, at the hands even of a God who delighteth in mercy, the overwhelming visitations of his wrath!

PRAYER.

O Lord God, how great is thy goodness! how adorable is thy condescension toward sinners! Thou art so highly exalted above all creation, that thou humblest thyself even to behold the things that are in heaven and on earth. Yet thou dost not only behold us, but dost graciously think upon us, and rejoice over us to do us good; and we are all before thee as living monuments of thy mercy, and constant pensioners upon thy bounty, receiving daily at thy hand innumerable mercies, of the very least of which we are altogether unworthy.

O Lord, thou mightest have dealt otherwise with us—thou mightest have given us judgment instead of mercy, and sent hard things into our experience. For how often have we provoked thee, the Lord, to anger by our iniquities! and behaved ourselves with a proud and stubborn heart toward thine infinite majesty! We have indeed added sin to sin—day after day transgressing thy righteous precepts—disregarding thy severe threatenings, and trampling upon that holy covenant which thou hast ratified with the blood of thy dear Son.

We would, therefore, in drawing near to thee, make mention of thy loving-kindness and of thy righteousness, even of thine only. Blessed be thy name, that thou hast revealed thyself in a character of free and sovereign grace; that thou hast taken for thy memorial through all generations, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness, and truth, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin. And when we think what thou hast done for us in the exercise of this thy wonderful compassion; how thou hast not spared the Son of thy love, but given Him up to the death for us, that we might be redeemed from wrath and obtain the adoption of sons, it well becomes us to exclaim in devout astonishment, Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God! O let each one of us be humbled to the dust under a sense of thine infinite goodness and undeserved mercy. Give us to feel the obligations under which we lie; because of the riches of redeeming grace, to honour and glorify thy name; and as owing every thing we have and hope for to thine unmerited goodness, may we be constrained to yield ourselves as living sacrifices to thee, which is our reasonable service.

Forbid, O God, we earnestly implore thee, that any of us should reject the offers of a mercy so undeserved, and lose our inheritance in a salvation so unspeakably great. Draw us near to thee with the cords of thy love, and bind us up to a saving interest in thine everlasting covenant. O let our portion be the portion of thy children. And enable us by thy grace ever to bear in mind the high and holy calling wherewith we are called, as thy redeemed and covenant people in Christ, that we may walk worthy of it. May our conversation indeed be in heaven; may we walk as becomes those, who have their fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ.

We thankfully acknowledge thy goodness in sparing us to see the light of this day, and would commit ourselves in confidence to thee as thy children, that we may be kept from all evil, and fitted for the discharge of our respective duties. Let integrity and uprightness preserve us. And while we are called to mingle in the society and go into the employment of this present evil world, O suffer us not to forget that thou hast called us out of the world to be thy chosen people, to do thy blessed will and be faithful witnesses of thy truth. Hold thou up our goings, so that our footsteps may not slide from the path of thy commandments. Let thy blessing, we humbly pray thee, be upon our kindred, upon our rulers, upon the land of our nativity, and upon all that love the Lord Jesus Christ in every region of the earth. Refresh thy weary heritage with much of thine own Spirit, and cause the sound of thy gospel to be heard in every land, and to reach even to the ends of the earth. Let the people praise thee, O Lord, let all the people praise thee. Our waiting eyes are toward thee. Hear in heaven thy dwelling-place, and when thou hearest forgive, for all we ask is in the name of Jesus Christ, our ever blessed Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XXXIV. 18.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW X. 24—42.

REMARKS.

In this second part of our Lord's exhortations, he rises to considerations of a more general nature than those contained in the earlier part, and directs the minds of his apostles to such thoughts as were most fitted to confirm and animate them in the prosecution of their course. Reminding them of the false accusation which had been brought against him, as having cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub, the prince of the devils, he gives them plainly to understand, that they who were but his servants or followers, had no reason to look for any better treatment, if they were not even more harshly dealt with; but proceeds immediately to impress upon them a variety of truths, which, if rightly apprehended and felt, must have been sufficient to fortify their hearts against all opposition, and prepare them for the hardest encounters. He speaks to them of the tender care and concern of their heavenly Father, by whom the very hairs of their head were numbered, and of the close and inseparable connexion that subsisted between them and himself, which was such, that whosoever received them virtually received him, and whosoever, for his sake, gave to them so much as a cup of cold water, should be sure of a plentiful reward. But he speaks to them also, of things fitted to arouse their fears, as well as to fill them with encouragement—tells them that though they might have to suffer the worst from their fellow-men, by adherence to his cause, they had much more to dread, if, by forsaking it, they fell under the displeasure of God, who has power not merely to kill the body, but to cast both soul and body into hell-fire—that necessity was laid upon them, whatever evils they might incur in this life, boldly to confess their attachment to him, otherwise he would not confess, but deny them, before his Father in heaven—and that from the very nature of the kingdom he was going to establish, which would divide families, and part asunder the nearest friends, they must be ready to die to the tenderest feelings of nature, and not count any thing on earth dear to them, unless they would make entire shipwreck of their faith and interest in him.

The dangers to which the apostles were exposed, were certainly more formidable, and the trials, through which they had to win their crown, more painfully severe, than such as commonly fall to the lot of Christians. But it is well to remember, that the smallest stumbling-block in our course may prove our overthrow as well as the largest, and that there are temptations in the lot of all sufficient, and much more than sufficient, to corrupt them from the simplicity that is in Christ. If we are upheld in our steadfastness and enabled to persevere to the end, it can only be from our having become alive to the same views and considerations, which were present to the minds of the apostles in their difficult and dangerous career. Let us, therefore, lay seriously to heart, the equally solemn and animating reflections, which are pressed upon our notice in this concluding part of our Saviour's address. We have nothing comparatively to fear, if we are but faithful to his cause, and allow nothing to come between us and a devoted obedience to his precepts. The eye of a covenant God is then upon us continually for good; the everlasting arms are underneath us; blessed are those that bless us, cursed are those that curse us. But, if either the trials or the pleasures of life move us to forsake Christ, or to turn back like a deceitful bow from the more difficult duties of his service, O how dreadful is the condemnation that awaits us! We have betrayed the cause of him whom we profess to honour as our Redeemer, and have done what will assuredly kindle against us the wrath of God and of the Lamb.

PRAYER.

Our Father, who art in heaven! we come to thee as a portion of thy family on earth, to adore and praise thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. We come to thee in his name, in whom thou art ever well pleased, and desire to know nothing as the ground of our confidence at thy throne, but Jesus Christ, and him crucified. See us, we humbly pray thee, in the face of thine anointed; draw near and visit us with thy salvation; give us to experience the good of thy chosen, and fill our souls abundantly with the riches of redeeming grace.

We esteem it good for us, O God, to be waiting as humble suppliants at thy footstool. For thou hast all power, and glory, and blessing, at thy disposal: and in thee alone can we find what we need to restore and satisfy our natures. Thou art the fountain of living waters, and apart from thee there is no life and refreshment to the soul. O let us know somewhat of the infinite sufficiency that is in thee. Manifest thyself to us in another manner than thou dost unto the world. With the blessed light of thy countenance do thou shine upon our souls, and out of the fulness which thou hast treasured up in Christ for thy believing people, give us all to receive, even grace for grace.

Thou hast declared, that all who are far away from thee shall perish, and that tribulation and wrath shall be revealed against those who have despised the gospel of thy grace in Christ. Save us, we therefore pray thee, save us from falling into that perdition of ungodly men. Quicken us by thy Holy Spirit, that we may ever be kept truly alive to the things which belong to our everlasting peace. And if thou art pleased to bring danger or difficulty into our path—if reproach, or persecution, or distress, is appointed to us in the course of thy providence, for the sake of Christ, enable us to take all meekly as from thy hand, and as knowing that we have with thee an inheritance that faileth not. Let eternal realities be so deeply impressed upon our minds by the power of the Spirit, that we shall be disposed to count even the reproach of Christ greater riches than all the treasures of a perishing world; that neither the fear of men's displeasure, nor the love of men's applause, may have power to bring us under bondage to sin, but that we may hold fast to the end our spiritual freedom, and permit no one to take our crown. While it is given us now to live amid the light and privileges of the gospel, O enable us to live to the Lord, that when we die, we may also die unto the Lord; living or dying, may we alike be thine.

We bless thy name, that another day, another week, has passed over our heads, bringing to us, as individuals and as a family, many tokens of thy care and tenderness. We are not worthy, O Lord, of the least of thy mercies; and with every remembrance of thy goodness, we desire to couple a deep sense of our exceeding sinfulness. Visit us not, we beseech thee, according to our iniquities—requite us not after our folly: but bury our transgressions in the depths of the sea, and in thy great mercy come over all the mountains of our provocations. Watch over us in covenant-faithfulness during the silence and the darkness of this night. Let the blood of sprinkling be upon the door-posts of our dwelling, that the destroying angel may not come nigh us. Give us all to experience the rest of thy beloved, and refresh us both in body and in soul, for the solemnities of another day of the Son of man. May the outgoings of a returning Sabbath be felt to rejoice over us, with manifestations of love and favour to us from on high. And O may the Sun of righteousness arise on the morrow, with healing under his wings, upon many dark and benighted souls. Hear, Lord, when we call unto thee, and let grace, mercy and peace, now and evermore, rest upon us, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THIRD WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM X.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM X.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

It is a well-known characteristic of believers, in every age, that they not only mourn over, but endeavour to arrest the prevalence of sin, as injurious to their own spiritual comfort, offensive in the sight of a holy God, and destructive of the highest interests of those who practise it. In the first eleven verses of this Psalm, a description is found of the pitch to which ungodly men were carrying their wickedness, at the time when David penned it, and of the cruelty with which they oppressed the humble and needy around them. The description is given in terms the most melancholy and alarming. The wicked man, says the Psalmist, inflated by pride, took pleasure in persecuting the poor, either because they protested against his ungodly ways, or in order to satiate his ambition. Instead of concealing his depravity, he boasted of gratifying his lawless passions and encouraged the participators in his guilt. Haughtiness sat enthroned on every feature of his countenance, and proclaimed that to no superior, on earth or in heaven, would he bow; that according to his own wisdom his opinions would be formed, and according to the bent of his own wishes his conduct would be regulated. His actings were despotic towards all within his reach; the threatenings of the Almighty he totally disregarded. Elated by temporary prosperity, he fancied that he could never be moved; that no adverse events could rob him of his enjoyments. Out of his mouth flowed blasphemy against God, and deceit, mischief, and vanity were ever ready to further his iniquitous purposes. In hiding places, in the neighbourhood of the villages, he concealed himself for the purpose of murdering the innocent, and plundering them of their substance. He occasionally humbled himself, assuming the attitude of their equal, or even of their inferior, that the unsuspecting might more easily be led astray by his diabolical stratagems. In the full height of impiety, he disclaimed the divine omniscience, affirming that his shame-faced character was unknown in heaven; that his deeds of violence, and oppression, and licentiousness would never be visited by retributive judgment. Such is a description of the wicked, when David penned the psalm which we have read; a description which bears surely a dreadful testimony to the depravity of the human mind, and the need there is of restraining grace to keep it within even tolerable bounds. It is not, however, to be understood that by any one individual all these crimes were perpetrated, but that they abounded throughout the land, and, because the perpetrators were not visited with immediate punishment, their numbers and hardihood were rapidly on the increase.

At the 12th verse, the psalmist, conscious of the sovereignty and mercy of God, and that he alone is able to care for his people, presents an earnest prayer that such ungodly men might be humbled, and the poor, whether in spirit or in outward estate, delivered from their unexampled tyranny, and ascribes praise to God, as our everlasting king, who will hear and answer the desire of the humble.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

From the procedure of David in this psalm, a very obvious admonition is spoken to us. As well as the other righteous men in the land, he doubtless employed every method, argument, and remonstrance, and affectionate entreaty with his countrymen, to convince them of their profligacy, and lead them to repentance, but, persuaded that all human means, without the blessing of heaven, are powerless, he betakes himself to prayer, beseeching that the Almighty would arise and vindicate his own cause; interpose in behalf of his poor and afflicted ones, and arrest the licentiousness and cruelty of the oppressor. Never should this example be absent from our minds. We may and ought to exert ourselves for the suppression of infidelity around us, the spread of gospel truth, the spiritual edification of one another, and the overthrow of every thing opposed to the will of God; at the same time, while as individuals, and as members of institutions scripturally founded, and designing God's glory, we do thus exert ourselves, like the psalmist, we ought to implore the Divine blessing upon our endeavours, and perseveringly seek that the Lord would give them efficacy. The reason why iniquity prevails so much at home, and why the cross has made so little way against idolatry in heathen lands is, because prayer, earnest and persevering, has been so generally neglected; because we have trusted too much to the excellence of human plans, and to the zeal of their abettors, and recognised too slightly the doctrine, that Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but that God alone can give the increase. Let this fact then be henceforth more deeply than ever engraven upon our recollection; and while we esteem it a privilege to be fellow-workers with God, and to do all that in us lies to promote his cause, let us pray that, by the outpouring of the Spirit, we may be strengthened for every good word and work, and have the satisfaction of witnessing Christ's enemies submitting to the truth, and becoming heirs of glory, joint heirs with Christ.

PRAYER.

Most blessed and gracious Father, the Creator, the Redeemer, and Ruler of all things, vouchsafe to us thy Spirit, that we may now draw near to thee in faith, and present our supplications in a right spirit, relying for acceptance on the finished work of thy Son. Verily thou art the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth. Notwithstanding the depravity of our hearts, the perversity of our wills, and the aggravated violations of thy law with which we are chargeable, thou art still sparing us in the land of the living, and in a place of hope. In the multitude of thy tender mercies we are preserved to see another sabbath morning, and in health and strength to surround the altar of family prayer. O help us to remember the spiritual things with which a sabbath morning is so much calculated to impress us. We desire to remember, that on this morning our Redeemer arose from the dead, as the spoiler of principalities and powers, as a pledge that he was the Messiah promised to thy people, and that, when we are trusting in him for salvation, we are indeed trusting in one in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. We desire that all of us may be in the Spirit on this thy holy day, and that we may be enabled to spend it as a foretaste of that everlasting sabbath promised to thy people, when time shall be no more; may we serve thee with our whole hearts, and feel ourselves refreshed and built up in our most holy faith. We mourn over the multitudes, O Lord, who desecrate thy sabbaths, and prostitute them to the obedience of their own passions, who abstain from meeting with thee in thy sanctuary, and stout-heartedly oppose themselves to thy revealed word. This, O God, we do mourn, as hateful in thy sight, destructive to their own souls, and a grief to thine own people. Graciously stop them in their career of wickedness, pluck them as brands from the burning, and make them yet monuments to the praise of thy sovereign grace. Revive, we beseech thee, thy work in the midst of the years. Visit thine own heritage, and water and sanctify it by thy Holy Spirit. May multitudes be daily added to the church, of such as shall be saved, that righteousness may run down our streets as a stream, and iniquity, as ashamed, hide its head. Prepare our hearts for waiting acceptably upon thee in thy house. May thy servant come forth to us, fraught with the glad tidings of salvation. May sinners be converted, and mourners in Zion comforted. May all thy worshipping people be refreshed from thine own presence. If we are spared, O Lord, to see the evening, may we have great cause to say, Truly the Lord is faithful, he hath visited our souls, and given us more enlarged and experimental views of the preciousness of Christ. This, our imperfect prayer, is now before thee; be pleased to hear, and accept, and graciously answer, because all that we ask is for the sake and through the mediation of thy Son, whom thou hearest always. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XI. XII. XIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

PSALM XI. was evidently written by David while suffering under the exasperated persecutions of Saul, whose successor to the crown of Israel he was divinely appointed to be. If ever a nation was shattered by despotic administration, and the exercise of cruelty towards its righteous subjects, we have only to look into the first book of Samuel, to see that it was that of the Hebrews, during the reign of Saul. Twice did the wretched monarch attempt to slay David, by a javelin from his own hand; craftiness, and deceit, and hollow-hearted friendship were virulently employed to take away his life. But, notwithstanding the perilous situation in which he was placed, persuaded that the Lord was able to preserve and deliver him out of his troubles, the psalmist repudiates the counsel addressed to him, to flee for safety, and leave his countrymen to the uncontrolled dominion of a wicked man. The language quoted in the conclusion of ver. 1. Flee as a bird to your mountain, may be understood as spoken either by the friends of David, alarmed for his safety, or tauntingly, by his enemies, disposed to ridicule and triumph over him. If understood as spoken by his friends, along with the two following verses, it may be thus paraphrased. Ye see how maliciously the king is bent upon taking away your life, and tyrannizing over the godly; it will be of no use longer to oppose his measures, or attempt to save the kingdom from destruction; consult your own safety, by betaking yourself to a place of retreat. If understood as spoken by the enemies of David, the import is this; You boast of having a rock of defence in the Almighty, a supernatural shield protecting you from the arrows of enemies; it is high time to take your position behind that shield; hasten away, and let its impotency be demonstrated! In this sense, verses 2. and 3. contain an answer to this infidel statement, and was designed to animate and strengthen his timid friends. Lo! the wicked are aiming their bitter invectives (Psalm lxi. 3.) against the upright in heart, and are scorning the idea of hope in the Lord; if, therefore, we shall shrink from the avowal of that hope, or pusillanimously concede a want of confidence in God, which lies at the foundation of our faith, what can we do; are we not left, of all men, the most miserable? From ver. 4. to the end, the psalmist breaks forth in a strain of confidence in the divine sovereignty and providence, affirming, that however now despised by them, the Lord is marking the wickedness of the ungodly, and will, sooner or later, bring them to judgment.

PSALM XII. Again, during a period of general apostasy and persecution by Saul, according to his usual practice David expresses his reliance upon God, that in seasons of greatest adversity he will watch over the interests of his people.

In PSALM XIII. David appears in deep mental distress. In ver. 1. he mourns the absence of God's reconciled countenance; in ver. 2. that he was in so much perplexity of soul, and so deeply wounded in his feelings by the haughtiness of his enemies; in ver. 3, 4. he beseeches God to enlighten his mind, and bring him into a state of comfort, lest the wicked should take courage in their wickedness, think that they had totally confounded him, and thereby dishonour the cause of truth; in ver. 5, 6. he declares that so sure, from past experience, is he of the mercy and loving-kindness of God, that no threatenings, or blasphemy, or pride around him shall ever stagger his faith, that he will yet be visited with peace, and be most glad in the Lord.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How unspeakable are the privileges of believers! When the wicked are suffering disappointment, or bereavements, or worldly persecution, they have no reconciled Father in whom to trust, no friend that sticketh closer than a brother, to whom they may tell their sorrows, and from whom they may receive consolation and encouragement. Far otherwise, however, was it with the psalmist; far otherwise is it with every faithful child of God. Does protracted sickness overtake us? We receive it not as an arbitrary infliction, but as designed to nourish in us patience, and experience, and hope. Do the wicked breathe slander on our reputation, and try to wound our feelings? We know that they are blessed who are persecuted for righteousness' sake. Does death invade our family, and carry one away who was dear to us? We believe that all things are wisely ordained by our heavenly Father, and, comforted by the promises in his word, are enabled to say, 'Yea, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.' Are we in spiritual distress, because deprived of the tokens of divine favour? We can search our hearts, try wherefore the Lord is angry with us, go back in contrition to his footstool, and find him willing and anxious to bless us. Whatever be their circumstances, however hard their trials, however pungent their sorrows, however terrified their souls, blessed be God, believers know where to find the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

PRAYER.

Into thy presence, O Lord, we desire this evening to come with holy reverence for thy character, with hearts grateful for the mercies which we have this day experienced, and with earnest anxiety for grace to keep us in every time of need. Thou art well acquainted with our different cases, with our natural unbelief and hostility to thy will, with the sin that is mingled up with our purest services, and with the great need that we have of thy Spirit to work in us that godly sorrow which is not to be repented of. O grant that our souls may be enriched with thy blessing; that our progress in holiness, our love for thy word, and our experience of thy grace, may become daily more enlarged; that we may struggle against every thing in our hearts which exalteth itself against thee, and be ever ready to resign ourselves to thy holy disposal. Accept of our thanks for the loving-kindness felt by our souls this day, in thy sanctuary. May the truths which we heard be made effectual for our spiritual nourishment and growth in grace; strengthen our memories to remember them, and soften our hearts, that we may feel their power. Let the good hand of the Lord be around us all during the silent watches of the night; forbid that any of us should give sleep to our eyes or slumber to our eyelids, till we have called upon thee in secret, and consigned into thy hands our interests both for time and eternity; hear and graciously answer our several supplications. Bless, O Lord, all who are in distress; the sick and the dying we especially commend to thy care. Call them not into eternity till thou hast made them meet for the inheritance which is on high. May our friends and relations be ever the objects of thy paternal regard, and when we and they have been gathered to our fathers, may we meet in thy own presence, where there are fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore. Be pleased to listen to this, the voice of our supplication; and unto God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, be glory and honour, dominion and praise, world without end. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIV

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XIX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The two angels, mentioned in ver. 1. are most probably two of those who, in the preceding chapter, announced the doom of Sodom to the patriarch Abraham, and who were farther commissioned to interpose for the preservation of Lot. By the treatment which the angels received, during their stay in the ill-fated city, a signal proof is given of the length to which its inhabitants dared to go in perpetrating the vilest abominations, and hence, of the equity, on the part of God, in visiting them with the heaviest punishment. So tyrannically did passion govern the Sodomites, that unless preserved by miraculous interposition, Lot, along with his illustrious strangers, would have fallen victims to its fury. Graciously, however, as Lot had all along been dealt by, faithfully as he had protested against abounding iniquity around him, and deeply anxious as he appears to have been for the safety of his relatives, it is necessary to remark three occasions, in this chapter, on which depravity usurped the place of religious principle in his mind, and betrayed him into conduct altogether indefensible. In ver. 8. he made a most wicked concession to the multitude, immediately before they were smitten with blindness; in ver. 16. he lingered in the devoted city until forced away from it; and, in the conclusion of the chapter, he appears in circumstances at which, on reflection, he must have shuddered. In the first of these cases, he forgot that no combination of events can warrant the violation of God's law; that in spite of persecutions, however sanguinary, its letter as well as its spirit must be obeyed. In the second case, he ought to have fled, with alacrity, for his life, when peremptorily commanded to do so. In the third case, one crime led to another, which, till the day of his death, must have proved to him a source of bitter regret. It is impossible to read this portion of Lot's history, without deploring that a righteous man, one who had found favour with God, and had withstood the contaminations of Sodom, should have left so foul a blot upon his memory. Ver. 24. Numberless are the ways in which God may punish his adversaries; already, with the exception of a small company, he had swept mankind from the earth by a flood, and now, with the exception of Lot and his friends, he buries all the inhabitants of the plain under showers of fire and brimstone. The expression, 'from the Lord out of heaven,' was obviously meant to intimate that the calamity was not the result of natural causes, but an immediate visitation from the hand of the Almighty. Ver. 26. Lot's wife became a pillar of salt, or sulphurous matter, to be a memorial of the guilt of trifling with a divine command. Josephus mentions that the pillar was standing in his day, about 1900 years after the destruction of Sodom.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How desperately wicked by nature are the hearts of men; how sad a proof does this passage afford of the ungodly principles with which they are filled; how much are grace and the operation of God's Spirit required to subdue and rescue us from their dominion! When reading of the wickedness of others, let us not forget our own, and how obnoxious we must personally be in the sight of one who cannot look upon sin but with abhorrence. Justly might God visit us with as awful a doom, as that with which he visited the inhabitants of the plain; and yet, in mercy, he is proclaiming to every sinner, 'Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, lest thou be consumed.' Within the gospel refuge there is pardon for guilt, peace with God, union to the Saviour, and the possession of all the gifts and graces of the Spirit. Without that refuge all are the enemies of God, slaves to their guilty passions, and crucifiers afresh of the Saviour. How long will sinners refuse to consult their highest interest, and register up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and neglect a salvation unspeakably precious. Let them not be deceived. The judgments of God are progressing with unerring certainty; whatsoever a man soweth that shall he assuredly reap. On the morning on which the Sodomites were destroyed, they were as hardy and profligate as ever, imagining that no calamity was near, but before the evening came, they were all in eternity. This very night our souls may be required of us; before another day, our everlasting destiny may be sealed. Let us examine our hearts, then, whether we be in the faith; and if, through divine grace, we are so, let our light so shine before others, that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven.

PRAYER.

O most holy and ever blessed God, we desire this morning to come to thy footstool, in the name of Christ, penetrated with a sense of our unworthiness, and mourning our apostacy from thee as the alone cause of all our misery. When we think of the dignity with which man was originally invested; of the knowledge, and righteousness, and holiness which characterized his nature; and of the communion which thou didst condescend freely to hold with him; and then examine the present state of our hearts, their ignorance of spiritual things, their unrighteousness and sin, and the disinclination which we naturally cherish for intercourse with our God; it becomes us to lie low in the dust, and confess that the crown has fallen from our heads, and that woe is unto all of us because we are sinners.

We lament, O Lord, the provocations which, day after day, we are giving thee; the weakness of our faith; the coldness of our love; the little interest with which we read thy word; the insensibility which often overtakes us in prayer; the sinful thoughts which pervade our minds; the unguarded words which escape from our lips; and the unholy deeds which we perform. Truly may we say that our iniquities have grown over our heads; that we are desperately wicked; that we are the children of wrath, even as others. Eternal thanks be unto the Lord our God, that a Saviour has been provided, through whom we may come into thy presence, and whose merit we may plead as a ground for our forgiveness. We bless thee that this Saviour is revealed unto us in all his freeness, in all his mercy, and in all his grace. O grant that we may be savingly united to him; that our guilt, for his sake, may be pardoned, and our souls cleansed from the pollution of sin. May the Holy Spirit strengthen us for the obedience of thy will; and, amid abounding iniquity, may we be enabled to manifest a walk and conversation becoming the gospel; never shrinking from any trial or persecution into which we may be thrown, for righteousness' sake. Put an end to idolatry and wickedness every where; hasten the period when all shall know thee, from the least even to the greatest; when, at the name of Jesus, every knee shall bow, and when all kindreds and tongues shall call Him blessed. Accept of our thanksgivings for the mercies of the past night and this morning. Be with us in the duties to which we may this day be called. Suffer us never to forget that an omniscient God is present with us, and that a day is fast approaching when a solemn account is to be rendered unto thee for every thing done in the body. Keep us ever in thy fear, guide us by thy counsel, and receive us at last to see thy salvation in glory, for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXIV.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

When John despatched his two disciples with the question, mentioned in ver. 3. he was a prisoner in the castle of Macherus, into which he had been thrown, for no other reason than that he had reprov'd Herod for marrying his brother's wife. A variety of opinions have been entertained regarding the origin of this question. Some have supposed that the disciples of John, puzzled by the protracted imprisonment of their master, and that no effort was made for his release, began to doubt the Messiahship of Jesus, and were therefore sent to converse with him personally, in order to receive a confirmation of their faith. Others have supposed that the Baptist's own mind, not yet fully enlightened as to the nature of Christ's mission, and unable to account for the treatment he was receiving, yielded to a temporary despondency, and dictated this application to Jesus, with the view of obtaining additional grounds on which to rest its faith, and bear up under its trials. On either supposition, the method employed by our Lord was well calculated to remove the doubt, and demonstrate the reality of his claims. The messengers were privileged to witness the miracles he was performing, and to hear from his own lips the fulfilment, in his person, of the Old Testament prophecies. On their departure, a memorable eulogy was pronounced on the character and work of the Baptist. Ver. 7—16. He was more than a prophet. The inspired men who preceded him, told much of the mission and spiritual achievements of the Saviour, but it was reserved for John to point to him, in the form of humanity, and say, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world! The Jews, interpreting literally Mal. iv. 5, 6. expected that, previous to the advent of Messiah, Elias the prophet would re-appear in the world; the words, This is Elias which was for to come, struck at the root of this erroneous interpretation, and identified John with the individual prophesied of, who, with the same spirit of boldness, and power in advocating truth which were manifested by Elias, would preach and enforce the claims of Jesus when he came. From the preface, given by Luke vii. 29, 30. to the address, running in this chapter from ver. 16—20. it is evident that the pharisees and lawyers were principally in view, whom nothing could allure into a belief of the divinity of Jesus. From ver. 20—25. a fearful doom is pronounced against those cities who rejected the force of his miracles, and displayed an inflexible obstinacy in sin. From ver. 25—28. Christ, who knew the counsels of his Father, and the rectitude and efficacy with which they were being fulfilled, gives thanks for the wisdom with which they were contrived, and signifies his acquiescence in the mode of their accomplishment. In the conclusion of the chapter, notwithstanding the infidelity and perverse captiousness with which his labours were derided, Christ proclaims the gospel, in all its freeness, to the multitude around him, calling upon all who were labouring under a sense of guilt, to come unto him, and receive rest to their souls. No limitation fetters the invitation; how wicked soever any man was, however violent his resentment of Jesus, however weighty the terrors of judgment may have been lying on his conscience, the blessed call is, Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

It is a dreadful reflection that, in spite of the clear and indubitable proofs vouchsafed by our Lord that he was the Son of God, so comparatively few, during his own ministry, yielded to his claims; that so great a number who heard, from his own mouth, the divine doctrines which he taught, the unequalled expositions which he gave of the moral law, his transcendent views of the justice, and mercy, and long-suffering of the Almighty, and who saw the stupendous deeds which, in his own name, and by his own power, he performed, the sick healed, the lepers cleansed, the deaf made to hear, the lame to walk, and the dead to come into life—continued to stigmatise and pour calumny on his character. Not less dreadful is it to think that, hedged around as the gospel is with so many and such challengeless proofs of its divinity, which successive ages are continuing to strengthen, there should still be found not a few who take offence at the Saviour, and reject and blaspheme him. What is the reason of this? The cause of offence lies within; infidelity is not a disease of the intellect but of the heart; it does not arise from a deficiency of evidence, but from an unregenerated mind, at all hazards, at the expense of reason and common honesty, determined to reject truth. To every doctrine and principle inculcated in the Bible it is an enemy. Nothing but the grace of God can subdue its carnality, and lead it to appreciate and receive the truth as it is in Jesus. Believers therefore should pray, that this grace may be more and more vouchsafed, until all shall know and love Christ, from the least even to the greatest.

O let us beware, lest in any of us there be an evil heart of unbelief. We claim the name of Christians, but are we Christians indeed? Is there no lurking offence at any of the doctrines which Christ taught, any of the sanctifying precepts which he inculcated, any of the dispensations of providence with which we have been visited, any of the ways by which he is leading his people to a city of habitation? To the extent to which there is so, we are offended at Christ, and dishonouring his name.

PRAYER.

Most blessed and gracious Father, thou art infinitely holy, and how shall polluted creatures present themselves before thee; thou art infinitely just, and how shall rebels against thy government come to thy footstool; thou art infinitely wise, and how shall we, who have preferred our own folly, venture to commune with thee. See God our shield, look upon us in the face of thine Anointed. We come not concealing our sins, but, sensible of our great depravity, and of the outrages which we have committed against thy law, that, through the Lord our righteousness, we may be forgiven, and obtain grace to subdue our carnal mindedness, to deliver us from the evil of sin, and to make us walk more holily before thee in the land of the living. We magnify thy name for the redemption of sinners, for the love which thou bearest to thine own, for the care with which thou watchest over them, and for the comforting assurances which their souls receive from thy Spirit, that they are the heirs of glory. We bless thee for the animating prospects to which thou art encouraging believers to look as their portion when time shall be no more. O make us thy children indeed, interested in the new covenant of grace, and heirs of the promises. May the Holy Spirit dwell within us, to sanctify, and comfort, and enlighten our souls, to give us wisdom to believe the record which thou hast given of thy Son, confidence in the mercy of the dispensation, and more ardent desires after conformity to thy will. Lord, impress upon our minds the dreadful fate of those who continue at a distance from thee, and enable us to strive and pray that they may come to the Saviour, and obtain from him peace, and rest, and eternal joy. Humble thine enemies under the sceptre of mercy, and may the lips that now blaspheme thy name, soon praise and adore the workings of thy sovereign grace.

Thou, O Lord, never slumberest nor sleepest, and we commend ourselves to thy watchful providence during this night. Save us, we beseech thee, from danger and from ill. Never leave us nor forsake us, but keep us in thy fear, and guide us always by thy counsel. May we die the death of the righteous, and may our last end be like his. Hear us in heaven thy dwelling place, and grant us a gracious answer to this our humble prayer, through Christ, our blessed Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XXXIV. 11.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. This chapter furnishes one instance of the faithful impartiality of the sacred record. The scripture makes no concealment of the blemishes which mark the fairest characters. The fault of Abraham was attended with this aggravation, that this was at least the second occasion on which he had been guilty of it, (chap. xii. 13,) nay, it would seem, even from the terms of his apology (ver. 13.), that he had formed the resolution of resorting to this equivocation, whenever he might suppose it necessary for his safety.

Ver. 3—8. The consequences of this false step had well nigh proved fatal, both to Abraham and to others. God, however, preserved him; and that by a method which at once checked the sin of Abimelech, and made him the instrument of reproving Abraham. Acting in accordance with a then common lawless practice, the king of Gerar had sent and taken Sarah. But God prevented him from carrying his sinful purpose into effect. In a dream, by night, he informed him that the woman whom he had taken was the wife of another. Jehovah 'holdeth the hearts of all men in his hand.' The upright he keepeth 'as the apple of the eye;' and, even when he corrects them for their sins, he preserves them from their fatal effects. In excuse for his meditated sin, Abimelech pled ignorance of the fact that Sarah was the wife of Abraham, and his plea was accepted. Wilful ignorance will never excuse, but that of Abimelech was not wilful. He had been misled both by Abraham and Sarah herself. Ver. 9, 10. Abimelech had good cause to blame the conduct of Abraham; yet, like most men, he overlooked his own fault. Though his excuse of ignorance was so far accepted, he had yet been guilty of a crime, and for this the Lord had punished him. He had done what he had no right to do, in sending and taking Sarah, even although she had been unmarried. But this, it would seem, does not occur to him. He adverts only to the equivocation of Abraham, and to the danger to which, through it, he had been exposed; forgetting that, but for his own unwarrantable conduct, there would have been no occasion for Abraham's resorting to this disguise. We can readily observe the mote in our brother's eye, while the beam in our own is unperceived. Ver. 11—13. Yet Abimelech had too much reason to reprove the patriarch. It was humiliating to Abraham to be questioned by the king of Gerar. No sin appears so heinous as that which deforms the character of a saint. And what was the patriarch's apology? He knew the wickedness of the place, the violence of those who fear not God, and that the only effectual restraint did not exist here; 'I thought surely the fear of God is not in this place;' he was afraid of his life, and had, therefore, resorted to his preconcerted deception. It was proper thus distinctly to stigmatise the wickedness and violence of Gerar, yet vain was his excuse. It seems to have satisfied the king, for he knew that there was truth in the allegation; but alas, it was only a confession of guilt. Although the statement which he and Sarah had agreed to make was not untrue, (ver. 12,) it was, nevertheless, an attempt to deceive. It was intended by them to be received as a denial of their relation as husband and wife; and it is in the intention to deceive, that the guilt of lying or equivocating consists. Ver. 14—16. Although the patriarch was thus guilty, it was Abimelech who had committed injury, and accordingly we find him making restitution. His conduct amounted to an acknowledgment of his own sin, while he justly reproves Abraham and Sarah for theirs. Ver. 17, 18. We must repent and turn from our sins, if we hope to be forgiven, and to have the hand of God removed from us.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. Let us beware of unbelief. This was the root of Abraham's sin. He distrusted the protection of that God at whose command he had formerly gone out, not knowing whither he went. If he watch not unto prayer, the Christian may fail even in those graces for which he is most distinguished. No warning can be more striking than that afforded by the Father of the faithful falling, through want of faith. 'Lie not one to another.' Every attempt to deceive, whether by word or by deed, is contrary to the command of God. And let us gratefully remember who it is that keepeth back the wickedness of the wicked. 'I withheld thee from sinning against me.' But for God's overruling providence and restraining grace, wickedness 'would come in like a flood,' sweeping off the godly from the earth.

PRAYER.

Ever blessed Jehovah, O enable us, by thy grace, this morning, to draw near unto thee with deep reverence and godly fear. We are thy dependent creatures; thy disobedient children. How shall we approach thy glorious majesty? Thou art the blessed and only potentate; glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. Thou art very great: thou art clothed with honour and majesty. Thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment. We prostrate ourselves before thee, humbly supplicating that God would be merciful to us sinners. And blessed be thy glorious name, we are encouraged to approach thee as a gracious Father. Thou hast commanded us to pray always, with all prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving. Yea, we have confidence to draw near by that new and living way which Jesus hath opened up and consecrated with his blood. The desire of our souls is to thy name: with our souls have we desired thee in the night, and with our spirits within us will we seek thee early. We rejoice that there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. The blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. In him, O Lord, may we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins.

And seeing, O most blessed God, we are in ourselves so weak, and exposed to such dangers from the allurements of the world, the temptations of the deceiver, and the corruptions of our own hearts, may we obtain mercy and find grace to help us in our time of need. O Lord, grant us the teaching and the guidance of thy good Spirit, that he may lead us into all truth, and uphold our goings. May we be indeed followers of them who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises; the spiritual children of faithful Abraham, and heirs with him of the grace of God. But may we take no encouragement, from the errors of thy people, to continue in the practice of any known sin, or to fail in any known duty, or to yield to any known temptation. May we never, in any case, do evil that good may come. May we at no time swerve from the truth, but speak every man truth with his neighbour, knowing that the lips of truth shall be established, but that a lying tongue is but for a moment. Make us, in very deed, the followers of Jesus Christ, in whose mouth no guile was found. Hold thou up our goings, that our footsteps slip not. Make thy grace sufficient for us. Let thy word be a lamp unto our path and a light to our feet.

We give thanks unto the Keeper of Israel, for the rest and protection of the past night. We supplicate thy blessing to be upon us throughout the day. Be thou with us in all our employments. Keep us from all evil. Strengthen us for every duty. Enable us to resist every temptation. Grant that, this day, whatsoever we do, in word or in deed, we may do all in the name of Jesus, and giving thanks unto God, even the Father, through him. And unto thee, the Father, the Son, and the blessed Spirit, be all glory ascribed, both now and for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXIX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XII. 1—21.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The leading topic in these verses, is one, the importance of which we cannot over-estimate, viz., the duty and privilege of keeping holy the sabbath of the Lord. It is to the Jewish sabbath, no doubt, that our Saviour refers, but his teaching is equally applicable to the Christian sabbath. The observance of this sacred ordinance is as really binding upon us, as it was upon the Jewish church. The time of its institution, the reason given for its appointment, the place which it occupies in the decalogue, and the designs which it is intended to serve, refer to all men alike. In the passage before us, we have a view of what our Saviour has taught respecting its observance; the kind of rest which it implied, with the limitations and exceptions which he admitted. While the pharisees, in our Saviour's time, neglected the weightier matters of the law, they were most scrupulous in their attention to the external services of religion, and especially those which they had received by tradition from the fathers. Ver. 1, 2. We find them here blaming the disciples, not for plucking ears of corn, which were not their own property, for, in such circumstances, this was allowed by their law, (Dent. xxiii. 25.) but for doing what they conceived to be servile work on the Sabbath day. Our Saviour replies to their accusation. The first part of his answer is founded upon the declaration, that God would have mercy rather than sacrifice; and that the very end of the sabbath, while a due homage to God, was, at the same time, an institution of mercy to man, and that to satisfy the necessities of nature was no violation of it; that works of necessity and mercy are lawful on the sabbath day. This he illustrates by a case to which a Jew could not object, ver. 5. being sanctioned by such examples, and by the Spirit of God.

The necessary service of the temple also required that, on the sacred day, the priests should do certain works with their hands. Ver. 6—8. The pharisees might urge that the nature of the labour and the holiness of the cause, sanctified the servile work performed. Our Lord, therefore, reminds them, that God prefers mercy even to sacrifice, and if work was justified in the one case, still more was it so in the other. But he answers them on other grounds. He asserts his own authority, as Lord even of the sabbath-day; not, to be sure, to annul a moral law, but to interpret it. 'And if,' says he, 'the temple sanctifies the labour necessary in its whole external worship, greater is the holiness of the true and spiritual temple, to free all its worshippers from blame, whilst performing such duties as piety requires.' Ver. 9—13. Having defended his disciples in this matter, he forthwith himself performs a work of mercy. Ver. 11, 12. And in answer to the malevolent question of the pharisees, proposes another, to which they could not reply without condemning themselves. Even according to their own conduct, he was justified in healing the man which had his hand withered. Ver. 14. To answer the objections of the wicked and unbelieving, is frequently only to exasperate their malevolence. Ver. 14—16. 'His time was not yet come,' and rather than occasion a tumult among the people, who would even have taken him by force and made him a king, he withdraws from the scene of strife. Ver. 17—21. In so doing he was just fulfilling the ancient prophecy, in which his character and work had been so strikingly described.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The conduct of the pharisees, who attempted to conceal their hatred of our Lord under the semblance of zeal for the law, should be full of warning to us. Of all kinds of hypocrisy, that surely is the worst which not only assumes the garb of outward piety, but does so for the very purpose of concealing sin, and even of accomplishing the ends of malevolence. The just rights of conscience are peculiarly sacred; but for this very reason, so much more aggravated is the sin of prostituting its rights to an unholy end. Let us beware of contenting ourselves with the letter, while we neglect the spirit of ordinances. Let us keep sacred and entire the sabbath of the Lord. To us let it be as indeed the day of rest which God himself has given; a type of the everlasting rest which remaineth for the people of God, in which there shall be no more sorrow, nor toil, nor suffering, but everlasting jubilee, in the presence of God and of the Lamb.

PRAYER.

Most merciful and most glorious Jehovah, we would, this evening, bow ourselves before thee, the most high God, our creator, our preserver; the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. O teach us how to pray. Give us thy Holy Spirit, the spirit of adoption, whereby we may cry, Abba, Father. We cannot of ourselves order our speech, by reason of darkness. Enable thou us to worship thee in spirit and in truth.

Who is a God like unto thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Thou art great, and dost wondrous things; thou art God alone.

We pray, most merciful Father, that we may not be permitted to deceive ourselves. Thee we cannot deceive, for all things are naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Thou searchest the heart and triest the reins, that thou mayest give to every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. But our hearts are deceitful above all things. Search us, O Lord, and know our hearts; try us, and know our thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. Let us not incur the guilt of those who make religion a cloak to their sins; but may we be enabled to maintain a conscience void of offence toward God and toward man. We give thee thanks for the temporal mercies which we enjoy. But especially do we give thee thanks for the rich provision which thou hast made for the supply of our spiritual wants. Thanks be unto God for Jesus Christ, his unspeakable gift. May he be made unto us righteousness, and wisdom, and sanctification, and redemption.

We bless thee, O God, for the ordinances of religion. The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly heritage. Enable us, O Lord, to value and improve all our privileges. May thy word be dearer to us than thousands of gold or silver: that it may not, at length, be to our condemnation that light hath come into the world. May the sabbath of the Lord ever be to us a delight, the holy of the Lord, and honourable. May we never be contented with that bodily service which profiteth little; but, consecrated to thee in soul, and body, and spirit, present ourselves a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable, through Jesus Christ. We desire to live by faith upon thy Son. We desire to be made partakers of his Spirit, and to be enabled, while discharging, with fidelity, every present duty, to have our affections set upon the things which are above. Make our bodies the temples of the Holy Ghost, and let thy gracious Spirit witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.

We bless thee for all the goodness which thou hast, this day, made to pass before us. In the blood of Jesus blot out all the guilt which we may, this day, have contracted. Take us under thy protection during the night. May the angel of the Lord encamp around us. We would remember thee upon our bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. Uphold, protect, and guide us during all the days and all the nights of our appointed pilgrimage, and at length graciously receive us to the city of habitation; through Jesus Christ our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XL. 15.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. The covenant-keeping Jehovah is faithful in all his promises. It had been promised to Abraham, that he should have a son, and that, in his seed, all the nations of the earth should be blessed. For many years the fulfilment of this promise had been delayed. His faith and patience had long been tried; and not until all appearances were against it, Sarah and her husband being 'as good as dead,' was the special promise made, that Sarah should have a son. Now the prediction is accomplished. God is not a man, that he should lie. Ver. 3, 4. As the Lord had commanded, the child is named Isaac, or laughter. His birth was an event full of joy. He was the child of promise. But the certainty of the covenant-promise does not make the patriarch forgetful of his own duty. He does not omit the seal of the covenant which the Lord God had appointed. Ver. 6, 7. The fulfilment of part of a promise will sometimes overcome all the unbelief of the doubting. Sarah is now assured that, in Isaac, all nations shall be blessed; that all who hear her will laugh with her. Ver. 8—11. But the portion of every one is a mingled cup. In the midst of our highest joys, grief will sometimes arise. Already he that was born after the flesh, began to persecute him that was born after the Spirit. (Gal. iv. 29.) God sometimes makes the sins into which his people fall, the sources of their sorest trials. The wayward disposition of his elder son, born of the bond-woman, grieved Abraham; the imperious demand of Sarah grieved him not less. He loved his son, and would not willingly part with him. Ver. 12, 13. God brings his people out even of those difficulties into which their own sins have led them. He eases Abraham's mind. What seemed to be only the result of Sarah's displeasure, was according to the counsel of God. Her wrath was fulfilling his design. The promise of God is ample security for the preservation and well-being of Hagar and Ishmael. Ver. 14. We are commanded to 'deny ourselves,' and, when God commands, a good man will not 'consult with flesh and blood.' Ver. 15—17. Abraham, in the promise of God, had ample security for the outcast wanderers. Temporary distresses, however, are not inconsistent with the promise that our bread shall be given us, and that our water shall be sure. To teach us dependence, we may sometimes be reduced to the deepest distress, but 'man's extremity is God's opportunity.' He is full of compassion. His ear is open to the groans of all the wretched. Ver. 18—21. Our faith is apt to fail in the midst of suffering and danger. We require constantly to 'watch and pray.' When we remember the case of the disciples, in the hour of their Master's extremity, we need not wonder that the poor bond-woman forgot the promise made to her on a former occasion of great distress, chap. xvi. 10—12. But God is pleased to repeat that promise, and, as a pledge that in due time all shall be fulfilled, he sends her immediate relief. 'To God the Lord belong the issues from death.'—'He redeemeth our lives from destruction; he crowneth us with loving-kindness and tender mercies.' Ver. 22—32. At the call of Jehovah, Abraham had forsaken 'his country, and his kindred, and his father's house,' and 'gone out, not knowing whither he went;' and now, according to his promise, God had 'made his name great.' The princes of the land where he is sojourning are anxious to enter into covenant with him. 'Them that honour me,' saith the Lord, 'I will honour.' And thus hath Jesus promised, 'And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life.' Ver. 33, 34. A good man, wherever he may sojourn, will not neglect the worship of God. He will call on the name of the Lord.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Ver. 1—5. Let us learn to live by faith in God. Let us follow the footsteps of faithful Abraham, who saw afar off the coming of the Lord, and was glad. Committed to him, our eternal interests are secure. 'In him all the promises of God are yea, and in him amen.' Ver. 6, 7. Let it be to us an unfailing source of gratitude and joy, that 'unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, whose name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace.' Ver. 12—21. We must learn to submit willingly to all God's appointments, even when they are severe to flesh and blood. Thus acting, we may be assured that, under every trial, he will support us. To his care let us intrust ourselves, and our children, and all our interests. 'Cast thy burden on the Lord; he will sustain thee.' Ver. 22—34. Let us so conduct ourselves that others, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven.

PRAYER.

Be pleased, O most gracious Father, to look down in mercy upon us thy sinful creatures, while we, this morning, venture to draw near to the footstool of the eternal throne. Let not the Lord be angry that we, who are but dust and ashes, take upon us to speak unto the Most High. See, O God, our shield; look upon us in the face of thine anointed Son. Thine own most gracious invitations encourage us to approach thee. We indeed are less than the least of thy mercies; we have incurred thy just displeasure. We are by nature the children of wrath. If thou, Lord, should mark iniquities, who, O Lord, should stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared; with thee there is mercy and plenteous redemption. Thou art a God that keepeth covenant; faithful and true art thou. In thee, O Lord, we will rejoice, we will be glad in the God of our salvation, for thou hast remembered thy promise, and done great things for us. Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, whose name is Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Thou hast visited and redeemed thy people, and raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of thy servant David.

The Lord grant that this Saviour we may be enabled to follow through good report and through bad report. We pray that thy grace may enable us to submit ourselves willingly to all the dealings of thy most wise and holy providence. In the hour of affliction may we recognise the hand of a merciful and gracious Father, and say, 'It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth to him good.' Sanctify to us all thy visitations, and, according to thy gracious word, cause all things to work together for our good. Heavenly Father, be thou our God and our guide; under trials support us; in dangers defend us; keep thou our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. In the day of our distress lead us to the Rock that is higher than we; and when our spirits are depressed and our souls ready to faint, open thou our eyes, and discover to us the wells of thy salvation, that we may drink, and be refreshed with the waters of life. O let us never wander from the right path, but, as strangers and pilgrims, having our faces Zionward, and our conversation in heaven, may we be ever looking for the coming of the Lord. Let nothing, at any time, seduce us from thy worship. May we walk in all thy ordinances and commandments blameless, showing forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light, as becometh those who are truly thy servants; who are not their own, being bought with a price, even with the precious blood of Jesus Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot.

We desire, with grateful hearts, to thank thee for thy goodness to us during the silent watches of the past night. We laid us down and slept: we awaked; for thy hand sustained us. Be thou our guide and our protection throughout the day. Strengthen us for duty; preserve us from sin. To thy care and blessing we commend the prosperity of Zion, all our friends, and all in whom our hearts are interested. And to thee, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, be all glory, both now and for ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XII. 22—50.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 22, 23. In our Saviour's time a more than ordinary power, even over the bodies of men, seems to have been permitted to the devil and his emissaries, as if to give opportunity for displaying the divine authority of Jesus, who made even the malice of the wicked to praise him. 'He cast out many devils.' In this instance, as might have been expected, the spectators were filled with astonishment. They were almost persuaded that Jesus was the Messiah. A notable miracle had been performed; and when Messiah should come, would he do any greater works? Ver. 24—27. Our Saviour knew the blasphemous thoughts of the Pharisees, and shows that satan, in testifying by miracles to the holy doctrines of Christ, would destroy his own kingdom. Nay, how could they know that the pretended miracles of their own exorcists, and the miracles of Moses, which they admitted to be real, were not the work of the devil, if they ascribed his to such an agency? Ver. 28, 29. His doctrines and works declared that he was not in league with satan; and since satan was compelled to yield to Jesus, it was obvious that God was with him—that he cast out devils by the power of God, so that they were without excuse. Ver. 30. Satan could not be with him; and not being with him, he would be most violently opposed to him. And Christ warns his hearers that he will permit no neutrality. The nature of his cause forbade it. Ver. 31, 32. Although the gospel proclaims pardon to the chief of sinners, there is a state of mind, which, rejecting the offered blessing, precludes the possibility of salvation. What our Saviour specially refers to, it is impossible here to attempt to examine. It seems to imply a malicious speaking against the Holy Ghost, a gainsaying of his testimony in the face of the strongest evidence, and even in the face of the sinner's own convictions. They with whom the Spirit still strives; who are conscious that they do really desire that salvation which Jesus offers, have evidence that this awful guilt is not theirs. Ver. 33. The character of a man's mind is to be judged of by his deeds. By this test, our Saviour should have been fully acquitted from such a charge as the pharisees had made; while they were justly condemned. Ver. 34, 35. Not only the actions, but the words of a man declare the state of his heart. Ver. 34—37. There is not 'a word in our tongue,' 'but God knoweth it,' and even for every foolish, as well as wicked word, we shall at length be called to give account. Ver. 38. Vain man is ever ready to prescribe to God. Numerous signs had already been given, but the Pharisees desire one of a special kind, a sign from heaven (Luke xi. 16.) as if that would have been more convincing than those already vouchsafed. Ver. 39. But God will not be dictated to. He has regard to the humble, but the proud he will resist. Ver. 40. Jesus was indeed, but not at that time, to give them a sign from heaven, when he should arise, victorious over death. Ver. 41, 42. If, however, they would not believe the testimony already afforded, neither would they believe though one rose from the dead. This was their condemnation, that light had come into the world, but they had loved the darkness rather than the light. Our responsibility is in proportion to our privileges. To whom much is given, of them much shall be required. Ver. 43—45. Those that have enjoyed lofty privileges and have misimproved them, are generally reduced to a worse condition than those who have not been so highly honoured. It was peculiarly so with the Jews, as their future history testifies. And of all, it is true (2 Pet. ii. 20.) 'that, if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.' Ver. 46—50. How great is the honour of those who do the will of God! The Lord of all is not ashamed to call them brethren.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let our Lord's saying, that he that is not with him is against him, be often and solemnly pondered by us: and let us remember that, just as he will acknowledge no middle state of indifference now, so he will acknowledge none in the day of judgment. 'I would,' says he, addressing an ancient church, 'that thou wert cold or hot; since thou art neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.'

Let us learn to appreciate, and pray that we may be enabled, by the grace of God, to improve our privileges. We have been highly favoured. 'The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly heritage.' O let us not despise him who speaketh from heaven! Ours is the 'ministration of the Spirit, which excellet in glory;' and surely it will be more tolerable in the day of judgment, for Sodom and Gomorrah, than for us, if we neglect so great salvation.

PRAYER.

'Our Father which art in heaven,' we adore thine unspeakable condescension in that, though thou art the high and lofty One inhabiting eternity, thou dost permit us to draw near and to address thee as our Father. Thousands of angels surround thy throne, worshipping reverently, and in thy presence veiling their faces with their wings; yet dost thou regard the humble and the contrite among the sons of men, and the prayer of the destitute thou wilt not despise. Thou art graciously revealed as the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ; and in him, the God and Father of all thy believing people. O give to us thy Spirit, as a Spirit of adoption, and teach us to cry, Abba, Father. Blessed Saviour, we worship thee, as the omniscient One. Thou knowest our thoughts. Thou triest the hearts of the children of men. May we maintain upon our souls an abiding sense of this most solemn truth. May we be enabled ever to walk as seeing him that is invisible. We rejoice in the victory of him who hath spoiled principalities and powers. The Lord grant that we may be indeed with him, zealously devoted to his cause, and ready to follow the Captain of salvation through good report, and through bad report.

O Lord, preserve thou us from all presumptuous sins; let us not resist or gainsay the Spirit of truth: and take not thou thy Holy Spirit away from us. We do most earnestly desire, that thou wouldest enable us to set a watch upon our lips. May we not forget that death and life are in the power of the tongue, that all foolish talking has been forbidden by thee, and that for every idle and sinful word we shall give account. Let our speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, as befits the ransomed of the Lord. The tongue is verily an unruly member; and with our tongues how often have we dishonoured thee, murmuring at thy dealings, or uttering words of folly. Do thou, O gracious Father, so purify our souls, and fill them with thy grace, that henceforth, out of the good treasure of the heart, we shall bring forth good things.

We bless thy name, for the abundant evidence with which thou hast favoured us of the truth of thy word. Grant that we may have the witness in ourselves—we being enabled, with open face, to behold the glory of the Lord, and being changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. We exult in the resurrection of our Redeemer from the grave, and that as he died and rose again, so his people shall rise also. O may this hope purify us, even as God is pure.

We thank thee for all the goodness which we have this day enjoyed. O have mercy upon those less highly favoured than we. Look down in mercy upon the afflicted, and grant that the Sun of righteousness may speedily shine upon all the kingdoms of this benighted world. To thy care and protection, we now commend ourselves. Watch thou over us during the dark hours of night; and if graciously preserved to behold the dawning of another day, when we awake may we feel ourselves with thee. These our humble prayers, we present in the name of Jesus, our ever blessed Saviour and Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XL. 8.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXII.

REMARKS.

The devil tempts man by deceiving his judgment, perverting his will, corrupting his affections, and inclining him to what is evil. But God tempts no one in this sense. As he 'cannot himself be tempted with evil, so neither tempteth he any man.' Nevertheless, he 'proves' his servants, 'to know what is in their heart, and whether they will keep his commandments or no.' That it was in this sense and no other that the Lord 'did tempt' Abraham, the apostle Paul plainly intimates in his Epistle to the Hebrews, where, referring to this transaction, he says that Abraham 'was tried.'

The trial to which he was subjected was indeed a sharp one. A son, dutiful, promising, and greatly beloved, must die by a parent's hand; a father's heart must know the misery of living under the expectation of, to it, the greatest of evils, for three days were to intervene ere the sentence should be carried into execution; during all that time he must listen to the dear accents of his son's voice, and yet retain his purpose sad and unshaken; during all that time his busy imagination must be employed in conceiving a mother's woe, perhaps a mother's hate, when he should return, and the 'lad not with him;' and, during all that time, too, he must needs think of the world's severest censure, and make up his mind to part with his reputation, at the same time that he parted with his boy. Moreover it was in the line of Isaac that Messiah was to be born, and, therefore, to sacrifice him was, humanly speaking, to prevent the promises from being fulfilled, the hope of the church from being born, the nations from being saved. Such, then, was the duty to which Abraham was called; a duty more difficult by far than the plucking out a right eye, or the cutting off a right hand; and yet, so firmly was this admirable man persuaded 'that what God commands must be good, and that what he promises is infallible,' that he instantly addresses himself to his heavy task. Nor was his faith more implicit than it was rational; for he considered that God, to whom nothing is impossible, could find ways of vindicating the consistency of the promises he had given, with the deed he had enjoined to be done, for that 'he was able to raise up Isaac even from the dead.' No such event, indeed, as the restoration of a dead man to life had ever yet taken place; but in the absence of a precedent, answerable in every respect to the case in hand, the patriarch reasoned from one that was at least analogous, 'accounting' that 'the same hand which raised Isaac from the dead womb of Sarah can raise him again from the ashes of his sacrifice.' Wherefore he made no delay, but rose up early in the morning, got all things in readiness, set forth upon his journey, came to the place which God had told him of, there built an altar, bound the victim, and raised his hand to slay his son. This sufficed, for 'thé Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy;' a substitute was provided and Isaac's life spared. And now a voice came down out of the 'excellent glory,' testifying to Abraham that he was greatly beloved, and promising that nations should spring from him, and that he in whom all people should be blessed should be born in his line. And, in regard to this latter promise, it is worthy of being noticed that the transaction which was just closed contained a twofold type of its fulfilment; for, in the actual sacrifice, Christ was represented as dying, whilst, in Isaac risen from the pile, he was revealed to the eye of faith as the risen Saviour of mankind.

Happy are they who are prepared to sacrifice unto God whatsoever is dearest unto them. The command which requires this, in any particular instance, appears an hard saying to flesh and blood, yet it is expedient to remember, that they who will not sacrifice with Abraham, must not expect to rest with him. Nor do we 'go a warfare at our own charges.' By the grace of God, Abraham was what he was; to this grace all can have 'access by faith in Jesus Christ,' and we are told, upon the highest authority, that it shall be made sufficient for us. Let us, moreover, be assured that, however difficult the duties may be to which we are from time to time called, yet we have but to engage in them, with firm determination and trust in God, and we shall find that many a spot over which we pass, in this our earthly pilgrimage, may be appropriately called Jehovah-jireh, that is, the Lord will provide.

PRAYER.

O Lord, unto thee do we lift up our souls, for thou art God, and there is none else; there is no God besides thee. Clouds and darkness are indeed round about thee, and thy judgments are a great deep; thou doest all thy pleasure, and none can let it, neither may any one say unto thee, What doest thou? Yet thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of thy throne; in thine administration the absolute sovereignty is infinite wisdom and beneficence, and thou doest all things wisely and well.

Whatsoever thy dispensations, it is for us to bow the head and adore; and whatsoever thy commands, it becometh us to say, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. For it hath ever been the experience of thy people, that although weeping may endure for a night, yet joy cometh in the morning, and that verily the Lord is pitiful and of tender mercy. But, alas, we are prone to take counsel of flesh and blood, and so it comes to pass, that whilst the convinced judgment willeth one thing, the affections will a quite different thing; that what we would, that we do not, but what we hate, that we do; for there is a law in our members, warring against the law of our minds, and bringing us into captivity to the law of sin which is in our members. O wretched men that we are! who shall deliver us from the body of this death? May he, whom thou hast anointed to open the prison doors, set us free. May he work in us, by his Spirit, that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen; that faith, in the exercise of which, thy servant was of old enabled to offer up his only begotten son, as believing that what thou wilt must be best, and that thy faithfulness in keeping covenant and promise would be made to appear, notwithstanding every difficulty, yea, and every apparent impossibility. May he also, by the same Spirit, shed abroad the love of God in our hearts, and thus rule over us by the law and sceptre appropriate to his kingdom—the law and sceptre of love. May he thus make us willing and obedient, and enable us to say, We delight to do thy will, O our God; yea, thy law is within our heart.

We desire to render unto thee hearty thanks for the mercies of the past night. We bless thee that thou hast spared us to see the light of another day, and that thou art continuing to supply our wants as heretofore. Above all, we would say, thanks be unto God for Jesus Christ, his unspeakable gift. In him may we be found: through his blood may we obtain the remission of all our sins, with a covenant right and title to all the other benefits of his mediation.

We beseech thee to be with us this day, in our going out and coming in. Help us to set thee continually before our face. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. We cast ourselves on thy care; care thou for us. Hear us, O God, and forgive and accept, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 15.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XIII. 1—23.

REMARKS.

Whilst the husbandman proceeds along the highway to the field in which he is about to sow, some portion of the seed he carries with him may chance to escape. Such portion, it is obvious, will never spring into life. There will be no green blade, no lengthening stalk, no 'full corn in the ear.' The beaten pathway affords it no shelter, and the fowls come quickly and devour it up. Moreover, in the field itself, there may be spots where the rock approaches so near to the surface that there is no 'deepness' of soil, and, in the case of seed sown in such places, the effect, although different, is equally unprofitable. The green blade, indeed, quickly appears, and the stalk and the ear follow in course; but, all the summer long, it waves useless and sere, and, in autumn, it fills not the bosom of the reaper with sheaves. Or, little may have been done to redeem the ground from the thistly curse, and although the plough may have passed over the surface, the thorns and the briars may be there still, and nothing may be wanting to cherish them into life, save the summer's sun and the summer's dew. To cast the seed into such a field were well nigh vain, since it will, ere long, be prevented by these from bearing any fruit 'unto perfection.'

Alas, answerable results appear in too many, with respect to that seed which is 'the word of the kingdom,' and which the 'Son of man soweth.' There are persons so thoughtless that they never stay to consider that which is spoken; there are hearts so flinty that the divine seed can effect no lodgement within them; and easily, therefore, doth the watchful and 'wicked one catch it away.' It is but presenting some vanity to the too congenial mind; it is only holding out some polluting image to the heart, and every trace of the word, which may have been heard but a little while before, is effaced. In the case of such there is not even the appearance of any fruit unto holiness. There are others who, on hearing, under certain circumstances, the glad news of pardon, life, and glory, receive them with the liveliest joy, and speak of them with an emotion which the experienced disciple might envy; and yet, having 'no root of deep conviction in themselves, and no real love to holiness,' there needs but some trial of 'mocking,' upon the part of their acquaintances, or some persecution of a domestic or public character, and presently all this fair promise is blasted, and the observer may say with the disciples, 'how soon is the fig-tree withered!' There are yet others who continue to hear the word with apparent seriousness all their lives, but who, nevertheless, bring no fruit unto perfection; for, as briars and thorns do oftentimes choke the seed of the husbandman, so these persons, through the eager desire of getting rich, are tempted to do things which are incompatible with holy living, or they are so concerned about the portion they have obtained, that they are distracted with the fear of losing it; or they are so much set upon station, equipage, and attendance, that although they may impose upon themselves, yet others can clearly see that they 'are not of the Father but of the world.'

However, the picture hath a bright as well as a dark side. The effect of the primeval curse is not yet exhausted, and thorns, and thistles, and many a weed besides, does the ground naturally yield; nevertheless, there are vast tracts of country which, year by year, produce an ample return. And, how pleasing to look upon the meadows when 'covered over with corn,' and yielding some an 'hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, and some thirty-fold!' The counterpart of the rich prospect is to be seen in the moral world, when the great husbandman opens up, by his Spirit, the fallow-ground of the heart, that the divine seed may enter in, when the dews of heavenly grace descend upon it, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and when the precious fruits appear, even 'love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.' That we may contribute, each in his own person, to this fair scene, let us disencumber ourselves of all undue care respecting the world and the world's things; let us attentively hear the word which is spoken to us; let us lay it up in our hearts, and practise it in our lives. And, whilst we thus put forth our own best endeavours, let us, at the same time, wait and pray for the 'promise of the Spirit,' and let us be assured that, as the husbandman, though doomed to eat his bread in the sweat of his brow, yet finds a real satisfaction in prosecuting the labours of his honest calling, so we shall find a high and solid happiness in cultivating the field of our own hearts, and be cheered onward by the ever-brightening hope that, ere long, they will bear no plants but such as are of heavenly growth, and the fruits of which shall be all copious, and fair, and well-flavoured.

PRAYER.

Blessed and everlasting Lord God, unto whom can we go but unto thee? Thou knowest our frame, thou rememberest that we are dust, and thou hast the words of eternal life. We would make mention of the righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ; we would give thee thanks that thou hast filled our mouth with that prevailing argument; and feeling that we cannot hope to be heard for aught that is in ourselves, we would beseech thee to behold our Shield, and to look upon us in the face of thine Anointed. Truly, O God, thou keepest covenant and promise, and thy words be true. Thou causest the west wind to awake, and the south to come; and under their warm influence the snows of winter are dissolved, and the sealed fountains set free, and the earth covered over with a carpet of green. From summer to summer thou visitest the earth and waterest it; thou makest it soft with showers, and thou blessest the springing thereof; the pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn: they shout for joy, they also sing. And thus, according to thy promise, cold and heat, and summer and winter, and seed-time and harvest do not cease; thine hand is opened liberally, and the desire of every living thing is satisfied. Other and more precious seed, even the word of the kingdom, thou wouldest sow in men's hearts, and wouldest cherish it into life by the warm and refreshing influences of thy grace, and wouldest fill all the world with the fragrant fruits of holiness. But, alas, whilst all else is in readiness, we are still backward; and too often, when the word has been cast into the ear, we do not meditate upon it day and night, so that it may pass downward into the heart and take root there; or if, in the day of visitation, and when our soul is poured out within us, we receive it with joy, and speak of it with delight, yet, when trial comes, we do too often fall, and our new experience passeth away as the morning cloud and the early dew; or, although we may wait with regularity upon the preaching of the word, and abound with the leaves of profession, yet we are so beset with cares respecting the present world, and so allured by its pleasures and its gains, that we may well fear that we are bringing no fruit unto perfection. Yet all this while, season after season is passing away, and we know that if we bear not the fruits of righteousness here, we shall never be transplanted into the paradise of God above. Out of the depths, therefore, would we cry unto thee, O God. Visit us with thy salvation. Take away our hard and stony hearts, and give us hearts of flesh. Make the tree good, and the fruit shall be good also. O when wilt thou come unto us? Wilt thou not revive us, O our God? Our trust is in thee, our hope is in thy word. Well-pleased thou hearest the voice of thy Son's intercession, and rejoicest to glorify his worthy name in the salvation of sinners. Save us, we beseech thee, for his name's sake, and make us, in all respects, what thou wouldest have us to be. Accept of thanksgiving for the mercies we have this day received. Pardon us, we beseech thee, wherein we have done amiss. Look, in thy mercy, upon all the sons and daughters of affliction. Send us, in thy goodness, sound and refreshing sleep. May we lie down in thy fear, and awake in thy favour. Hear, and pardon, and accept, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVII. 41.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXIV.

REMARKS.

Putting the hand under the thigh, in taking an oath, was a token of subjection and homage rendered by a servant to his lord. The attentive reader will have noticed the steward's solicitude exactly to acquaint himself with the details of the duty required at his hand, and that too before swearing to perform it faithfully; for in those days, happily, a man making a profession of godliness, would have shuddered so much as to think of tampering with the sanctity of an oath.

In the narrative which this chapter contains, there is much that is instructive. Worldly advantage, through matrimonial alliance, the patriarch did not seek for his son; but, well knowing that the intimate companionship, resulting from such connection, might be either favourable or the reverse, and that in a very high degree, to his spiritual well-being, the good old man was deeply solicitous that Isaac should be united to one who had enjoyed the benefit of godly up-bringing. Such a bride, he was well aware, the land of Canaan could not supply, since all its tribes were sunk in idolatry and vice; and, therefore, he turned his eyes to his country and his kinsfolk, in the east. True, there is evidence that even they 'served other gods,' but it would appear that, in the then state of the world, a connection amongst them was the most hopeful that could be formed. For we may gather from the 31st and 50th verses of the chapter which has been read, that they conjoined with the service of idols the knowledge and worship of the true God; and then, their residence was at so great a distance from Canaan, as to encourage the hope that, in the event of one of their daughters being espoused unto Isaac, she, influenced no longer by the example of her father's house, would appreciate and adopt a 'more excellent way.' For these reasons he dispatched his servant into Mesopotamia, to the city of Nahor, to 'take a wife unto his son Isaac,' and, in doing so, it would appear that he had the perfect concurrence of this last, who, although he was now forty years of age, was yet well pleased to be directed by the matured experience and pious views of his excellent father.

And now, see how God is pleased to give countenance and the happiest issue to measures adopted in his fear, and shaped with a view to his glory! The steward comes to his journey's end, and there makes it his petition to the God of his master Abraham, that he would be pleased to indicate, by certain marks, the damsel whom he had appointed for his servant Isaac; and, ere he has finished with 'speaking and praying,' the maiden comes forth, and, by her kind and obliging deportment, answers to the appointed signs. Moreover, in the providence of God, the minds of Rebecca's natural guardians were pre-disposed to a favourable entertainment of the proposal submitted to them, and the result was, that the wish of Abraham's heart was gratified, since his son obtained, from amongst his kinsfolk, a wife whom 'he loved,' and one who, although not without infirmities, was yet deserving of being loved.

The more general lesson to be learned from this narrative is, that religion ought to enter, as an important element, into every arrangement which we make; and that, if we would be followers of them who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises, we must, in all things, be guided by the views of faith.

The more particular lesson is this, that in entering into a connection so intimate and lasting as that which marriage implies, reference should be had, in a particular manner, to the all-important qualification of personal piety. Ah, how often does it happen that youth's fair promise is effectually nipped, never to put forth bud or blossom more; that in the husband or the wife, we can discern no remains of the early piety which adorned the young man or the maid; and that we can trace the sad change to a disregard of the wise maxim of inspiration, 'be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers!' In the counsel, then, which parents give, in a case of this kind, to their sons and their daughters, let them never forget to impress them with the vast importance of forming a connection only with the pious and the good; and let the young behave themselves, after the example of Isaac, and be guided by the wisdom and experience of those who are older and wiser than themselves, and who 'have no greater joy' than in being witnesses of their children's well-being

PRAYER.

Lord, thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations. Even to old age thou art he, and even to hoary hairs thou dost carry them; thou causest them to flourish like the palm-tree, and to grow like a cedar in Lebanon; whom thou lovest thou lovest unto the end; through thy grace they still bring forth fruit in old age, and thou blessest them in all things. Happy, therefore, is that people that is in such a case; yea, happy is that man whose God is the Lord. As for us, we confess that iniquities prevail against us. Careful, and troubled about many things, we ask with solicitude, what shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed? And we remember not the word which saith, 'seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.' Neither, in the arrangements which we make for ourselves, or for those whom thou hast given us in charge, do we set thee sufficiently before our face, nor do we frame them in subserviency to thy glory and our own salvation, but are prone to consult chiefly for worldly advancement, and for the happiness which we imagine is to be found in it. Lord, pardon thy servants in this and all other things. Enter not into judgment with us; for in thy sight shall no man living be justified in virtue of his own doings. But although we are unworthy, yet Christ is worthy. For his name's sake blot out all our iniquities. Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress, so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God until he have mercy upon us. And we beseech thee, O God, put power into thy word, and teach us effectually that one thing is needful. Make us to know our end and the measure of our days, what it is, that we may know how frail we are. Behold, thou hast made our days as an handbreadth; and our age is as nothing before thee: verily, every man at his best state is altogether vanity. Believing these things, may we seek to lay up enduring riches in that place where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. And in every connection which we form, and every enterprise which we undertake, may we have an eye to thy glory and our own spiritual well-being. Accept, O God, our thanksgivings for thy goodness during the past night. To thee we are indebted for our preservation from one day to another; thou carest for us far more and far better than we are able to care for ourselves. We beseech thee to look in compassion upon those who have been full of tossing to and fro until the dawning of the day. Heal their diseases, if it be thy will. O spare them, that they may recover strength, before they go hence and be no more. Sanctify their affliction, and grant that no separation may take place between soul and body, until a full and a final separation has been effected between their souls and their sins. Be with us this day in our going out and coming in. Keep us from evil, that it may not grieve us. Hear us in these our petitions, and, when thou hearest, forgive for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE LXII. 7.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XIII. 24—58.

REMARKS.

The gospel had indeed its 'day of small things.' 'The man Christ Jesus,—the carpenter's son,' with his twelve illiterate and humble followers! How unlikely, in human estimation, to effect a revolution throughout the world! Looking to the outward appearance, how aptly were they compared by our Lord himself to a little leaven, or to a grain of mustard seed, which last is so small, that it was proverbially used to signify a very little thing. And yet, as the leaven which appears at first to be 'lost in the mass of dough, secretly works through it by a speedy, though insensible fermentation, till at length the whole is leavened;' or, as in the genial climes of the East, one of the smallest of seeds gives birth to a plant of such dimensions, that it may be termed a tree; so, he who knoweth the end from the beginning, predicted that the kingdom of heaven, or gospel dispensation, should become conspicuous throughout the world, and exercise a mighty influence upon its destinies. And at the present day, do we not see the fulfilment, in great measure, of this prediction. Compared, indeed, with the latter-day glory, aught which has yet been realized, is only as the shaking of the fig-tree before the vintage has come. But yet, considered absolutely, and in itself, the progress has been wonderful, and they surely are fully blind, who see not the finger of God in this matter.

It is, however, melancholy to reflect, that the true subjects of this kingdom are vastly fewer than they appear to be, and that very many persons profess to believe the gospel, who yet feel none of its power. At present they mingle with the sanctified ones, as the tares with the wheat; but the day of separation will come: and in that day their going forth shall be from the presence of the blessed God, and from sights of joy and gladness, and from the voice of song and praise; and their destination will be hell, and their portion woe; and their companionship a companionship of fiends. Then, also, shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Since then, the respective results of an hypocritical profession, and a cordial reception of the gospel are so awfully different, let it be our earnest prayer to the God of all grace, that he would so impress our minds with the unspeakable value of the blessings which it confers, that we may be willing to part with whatever is dearest to us, that we may secure them.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, we desire, at the conclusion of another day, to draw nigh unto thee in a social and family capacity. Be pleased thyself to draw us as with the cords of affection and the bands of love. Give us to say, with the ardent aspirations of thy servant in the old time, As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth our soul after thee, O God.

We would give thee thanks that thou hast set up a kingdom in this our world—a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and against which the gates of hell shall not be suffered to prevail. We would rejoice in the measure of success which this kingdom, so small in its beginnings, hath already had. Hasten, we beseech thee, the latter-day glory. May the time soon come when thou wilt give thy Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; when in every land he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. We thank thee more especially that this kingdom hath been set up amongst ourselves, and that we have been born in a land of ordinances and a valley of vision. O may we of this household, be made willing and obedient subjects of Messiah's kingdom; so that when the summer is past and the harvest is come, our souls may not be gathered with sinners, but may be bound up in the bundle of life. What we ask for ourselves, we would also beseech in behalf of all whom we ought to bear upon our spirits at a throne of grace. Set up a throne in the heart of each one of our friends, and an altar in all their families. Bless them with thy blessing, even life everlasting. Everywhere restrain abounding sin; let the people praise thee, let all the people praise thee.

We beseech thee to pardon the sins of which we have this day been guilty; for alas, there is no day in all our lives which bears not the mark upon it of some wickedness committed against thee; and that thou art sparing us alive, and continuing to supply our wants, and giving us time and opportunity for repentance; this is not because thou seest any goodness in us, but because thy compassions fail not, and because thy mercy endureth for ever.

We would commit ourselves to thy care.

Watch over us during the watches of the night; preserve us, we entreat thee, from the pestilence that walketh in darkness. Spare us, if it be thy will, that we may see the light of a new day; and enable us to spend all the days of our pilgrimage here in thy fear and service. Guide us with thy counsel while we live, and afterward receive us to glory. And now unto thee, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—4. (compared with ver. 27—33.) The purposes of God are unchangeable; and they shall not fail of their accomplishment, either through the infirmity and perverseness of his own people, or through the impiety and malignant opposition of unbelievers. It was the will of God that Jacob should have the chief blessing, that his seed should inherit the promised land, and that of them, as concerning the flesh, Christ should come, 'who is over all, God blessed for ever.' The blind partiality of Isaac for Esau, could not prevent this. Ver. 6—25. The faithfulness, and the condescension, and goodness of God, in the fulfilment of his promises, are never more strikingly displayed than when he fulfils these, notwithstanding the unbelief of his people, and by means of the unworthy conduct which their unbelief has suggested. 'If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself.' Ver. 41—46. (compared with chap. xxxi. 38.) But God does not permit the sins of his people to pass unpunished. Rebecca's unbelief, and Jacob's and Rebecca's guile endangered the life of Jacob; and caused his banishment, not for 'a few days,' but for 'twenty years' from a mother's fondness, and a father's home.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Ver. 1—4. 30—33. How beautifully simple are the narratives of sacred scripture! With what perfect fidelity do they record for our warning and correction in righteousness, the infirmities and the errors of the children of God. Isaac's liking to Esau's venison, and his partiality for Esau on this account made him forget the purpose and decree of Jehovah; and to human appearance, had well nigh plunged him into the sin of bestowing on Esau the blessing intended for Jacob. No wonder that he 'trembled very exceedingly,' (Heb. 'trembled with a great trembling greatly,') when he thought of the impiety which he blindly meditated. Let us guard against a taste for the pleasures of the table, and all other sensual gratifications. They never fail to darken the understanding and pervert the judgment. Ver. 5—24. It is the duty and the privilege of believers to entertain, in all circumstances, the most unshrinking confidence in the faithfulness and the power of God; and like Abraham, against hope to believe in hope. The Lord will assuredly fulfil his purposes in such a way, and by such means, as shall glorify his great name; and he cannot but be offended with his people, when, in the spirit of unbelief, they have recourse to guile or falsehood, or any thing sinful, for the accomplishment of what they believe to be the purposes of the Almighty. Let us not stagger at his promises through unbelief; but be strong in faith, giving glory to God. Ver. 34—40. Esau 'for one morsel of meat, sold his birthright: and when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.' If, through divine mercy, we be numbered among the first-born whose names are written in heaven, let us guard our spiritual birth-right with a holy vigilance, striving against sin; and laying aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, let us run with patience the race set before us.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God, we thank thee for all the goodness and mercy which thou hast made to pass before us; for the temporal blessings with which thou hast crowned our lot, and the forbearance with which thou hast followed us in the midst of multiplied provocations and aggravated sins. Above all, we thank thee for the provision which thou hast made for the safety of our immortal souls in the scheme of salvation by Christ Jesus. We thank thee for the promises made unto the fathers, and for the mercy and faithfulness with which thou hast fulfilled these promises in all generations. We praise thy name, that when the fulness of the times had come, thou didst send forth thy Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, and that we might receive the adoption of sons. And we would rejoice together, that through him, who-soever believeth in him is justified from all his iniquities. We confess our sins before thee, and our need of a Saviour, and of salvation by his atoning blood. Convince us of sin; bring us in deep self-abasement and humility of soul to the cross of Christ, and give us grace to believe in the name of the Son of God. May we receive him into our hearts, as all our salvation, and all our desire: and, giving ourselves to him in the bonds of an everlasting covenant, may we walk so as to please him, and have our fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

Save us and our fellow-believers from a spirit of unbelief. May we profit by the example of the saints, whether it be intended to warn us of our danger, or to animate us to growing diligence in the work of our salvation. May the errors into which they fell through an evil heart of unbelief, be the means of saving us from sinning against God in a similar manner; and may we ever be followers of their faith and patience. Lord, lead us not into temptation; keep us from dishonouring thee, by distrusting the promises of thy word, and limiting the holy One of Israel; and employing any means but those which God has sanctioned and approved for the fulfilment of his purposes, and the promotion of the good of others. Be at our right hand this day that we may not be moved. Stablish our hearts in thy fear; strengthen us for every duty, and for every temptation; and whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, may we do all to thy glory. Bless all who are near and dear to us. Encompass them with thy favour as with a shield. Bless all mankind. Let the people praise thee: let all the people praise thee. May thy kingdom come; and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Hear in heaven, thy dwelling-place; and whilst thou hearest, forgive: for all that we would ask is in the name, and through the merits, of Jesus Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCVI. 10—13.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. A guilty conscience suggests many groundless fears. It makes the tyrant tremble upon his throne; and fills him with apprehensions which neither the shame of acknowledging them, nor any other consideration, can prevent him from confessing. 'The wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.' Ver. 3—5. Faithful ministers may expect persecution in one form or in another, from all who are strangers to the fear of God, especially when they denounce the threatenings of the divine law on the favourite vices of their hearers. Ver. 6—12. External accomplishments do not change the heart. A savage disposition has often been found to exist in the fairest female form, and in the most youthful breast. True religion alone can teach men the spirit of gentleness and love. Ver. 13—36. Christ was indeed a teacher sent from God. No man can do the miracles which he did. For who can feed thousands with a few barley-loaves and two small fishes? or who can walk on the water, and still its waves? Of a truth he was the Son of God.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Ver. 1—11. With what deep humility and lively gratitude, ought we to contemplate the character and conduct of the wicked Herod, and his female relatives! Placed in the same circumstances, and exposed to the same or similar temptations, it is more than probable that we should have exhibited the same depravity. God has made us to differ. Our opportunities of spiritual improvement have been more abundant; we have been exposed to fewer and less powerful temptations. The restraints of divine Providence, and the sovereign grace of God, have prevented us from going to the same excess of wickedness, or have converted and renewed our souls. Let us be humble and thankful. Ver. 14—21. How rich the compassion of Jesus! All his miracles were miracles of beneficence. He healed the sick—he fed the hungry—he did both with the majesty, the resistless power, and the wonderful beneficence of the Son of God. He permits his people to be tossed with tempests, that he may glorify his great name in their deliverance, and that they may be made to feel their dependence on him. Let us not be slow to trust in him who has the winds and the waves at his command. When our faith is ready to fail us, let us remember the years of the right hand of the Most High, and cry, 'Lord save us.' He will hear our prayer and grant us an answer of peace.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the King eternal, immortal, and invisible—the only wise God. Thou doest according to thy will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; none can stay thy hand, or say unto thee, What doest thou? Thou makest the wrath of man to praise thee, and restrainest the remainder of his wrath. All things are under thy control, and thou hast arranged every event in Providence for the glory of thy great name, and the good of thy people.

We bless thee, O Lord, that thou hast cast our lot in a land of Christian light and liberty. We thank thee that thou hast given us the knowledge of the everlasting gospel; and that we are permitted to make profession of our faith under the protection of civil authority. Give us grace to value and to improve our privileges: and to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

We desire to acknowledge, with deep humility, the sinfulness and depravity of our hearts; the estrangement of our affections from thee, and the numberless transgressions which we have committed against thee. We have broken thy commandments times and ways without number; we have despised the warning-voice of thy providence; we have turned a deaf ear to the merciful invitations of the gospel. Our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; we are altogether as an unclean thing in thy presence.

Blessed be thy name, there is a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, for the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. In the riches of thy compassion thou hast sent thine only begotten Son to be the propitiation for our sins. It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that he came into the world to save sinners. O God, do thou give us an interest in him. Wash us from all our iniquities in his atoning blood; clothe us with his all-perfect righteousness, and impart to our souls the peace which has been purchased through the blood of the cross, the peace which passeth all understanding; and the joy in believing which is full of glory. And save us from the power of sin, and enable us to walk in the paths of righteousness for thy name's sake.

Blessed Jesus, thou who didst feed the hungry and heal the sick, do thou evermore feed our souls with the bread of life. Heal our backslidings, receive us graciously, and love us freely; and enable us to render unto thee the calves of our lips. In every season of difficulty and danger, be thou present to deliver us: that our souls may live and praise thy name.

Preserve us, O God, during the darkness of this night. Give us refreshing sleep: and if it be thy holy will, do thou raise us up on the morning of the Sabbath day. We would hail with gladness, the approach of this day of holy rest. May we be prepared for improving it aright. May thy name be hallowed, and may our Sabbaths on earth be anticipations of the rest which remaineth for the people of God, in heaven. We commend to thy holy keeping, all who are near and dear to us. May they be blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus. We pray for all men. May the knowledge of the Lord soon cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. In every place, may incense and a pure offering be presented to the Lord. Comfort the afflicted: prepare the dying for death, and teach us to live in mind of our latter end. Hear our prayers, and accept of us in Christ Jesus our Lord, and to thy name be the glory. Amen.

FOURTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCII. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XIV. XV. XVI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

PSALM XIV. ver. 1—4. All the impiety and wickedness of man has its commencement in the estrangement of the heart from God, and in driving him far from our thoughts; and, when irreligion prevails among a people, corruption and wickedness of every kind are the natural and invariable results. Ver. 5—7. Yet God does not forsake or cast off his people. The salvation of Israel has come out of Zion: Christ hath led captivity captive, and glad tidings of great joy have been proclaimed to the spiritual Israel.

PSALM XV. ver. 1—5. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Evil cannot dwell with him, nor the fool stand in his sight. There is no safety, no sure or permanent happiness to any but those who possess the character of his children.

In explanation of the XVI. PSALM there is reason to think that, in the first part of the Psalm, David speaks in his own person, and, whilst he disclaims the idea of being profitable unto his Maker, as a man may be profitable unto himself, he gives thanks to God that he had not been led away by the error of the wicked, and that he had been enabled to choose the Lord as the portion of his inheritance and his cup; that the lines had fallen unto him in pleasant places, and he had received a goodly heritage. In the latter part of the Psalm, David may be considered as personating the Messiah; predicting his resurrection, and anticipating the fulness of joy, in the prospect of which Christ endured the cross, despising the shame.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

PSALM XIV. ver. 1—7. How many are there among men professing Christianity who, in the blindness and folly of an unregenerated heart, practically say 'No God;' deliberately putting away from them the thought of a present Deity, the witness of their thoughts and actions, that they may do their abominable works, and walk in the way of their own hearts! Justly may it be said of such that they have no knowledge. Let us seek to have our place and our lot in the generation of the righteous, and among the sons of God, that he may visit us with his salvation; that we may see the good of his chosen; that we may rejoice in the gladness of his nation, and may glory with his inheritance.

PSALM XV. ver. 1—5. If we have been taught the spirit of the holy Psalmist, and have learned to say, with him, 'one thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after: that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple,' let us bear habitually in mind that we cannot, with acceptance, enter the tabernacle of God upon earth, and cannot possibly dwell in his presence in heaven, unless we have attained, in some good measure, to the uprightness and sincerity, the brotherly love and the kind affection of true believers; and let us be continually engaged in cultivating these amiable qualities.

PSALM XVI. ver. 1—11. We cannot sufficiently value the unspeakable privilege of regarding God as our Lord, and the object of our confidence, and of having recourse to him as our preserver and deliverer in every season of difficulty and danger. Those who take refuge in lies, and hide themselves under falsehood, shall have their sorrows multiplied; while all true believers shall find that, trusting in the Lord, mercy shall compass them about. Let us imitate the example of our divine Redeemer, the chief leader and the perfecter of faith, Heb. xii. 2. Like him let us set the Lord always before us, and, in the assured hope of a blessed resurrection, and the joyful anticipation of the pleasures which are at God's right hand, let us endure with patience every affliction, and strenuously and perseveringly perform all our duties to our Father in heaven.

PRAYER.

Gracious and merciful Jehovah, we look up to thee as the God in whom we live, and move, and have our being. Thou didst breathe into our nostrils the breath of life, and thy merciful visitation sustains our spirits. We lay ourselves down and sleep: we awake again; for thou, Lord, sustainest us. We thank thee that thou hast been pleased to spare us to behold the light of this day. We bless thee that it is the day which thou hast made; the day of the Lord. May we have grace to account it a delight, the holy of the Lord and honourable; and may we be enabled to honour it, not thinking our own thoughts, or speaking our own words, or doing our own works. Especially may we be enabled to remember, with faith and holy joy, that on this day of the week our blessed Redeemer rose from the dead; the first-fruits of them that sleep; and may we have it, as the testimony of our consciences, that we are risen together with him, our affections being set on the things which are above; the things which are at the right hand of God, where Jesus Christ sitteth. May we be in the Spirit on thy holy day, spiritually minded, which is life and peace.

We would confess, with deep humility, our misimprovement of the means of grace, and the scantiness and deficiency of the fruit which we have brought forth unto thee. Justly mightest thou say, with regard to us, 'Cut them down, why cumber they the ground?' and justly mightest thou remove our candlestick out of its place, and give our privileges to others who should bring forth more abundantly than we the fruits of righteousness. But, behold, thou waitest to be gracious. Thou continuest to give us free access to a throne of grace. Our eyes see our teachers; and, on each returning sabbath, we hear the call addressed to us, 'Let us go into the house of the Lord.' Mercifully forgive our unworthiness; cast all our sins behind thy back, and visit us, this day, with the light of thy countenance and the joy of thy salvation. May we profit by every opening of the mouth, and know, in our happy experience, that it is good for us to draw near to God.

Thou hast said that thou wilt dwell with him that is of an humble and contrite spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the hearts of the contrite ones. Visit, this day, we beseech thee, the tabernacles of Jacob, and supply the wants of thy people who may be reluctantly detained from the house of prayer. Speak peace to their souls, and give them bread to eat which the world knoweth not. Have mercy on the sabbath-breaker, and the despoiler of thine ordinances, and give them true repentance ere it be too late, and their feet stumble on the dark mountains.

Go forth with thy servants everywhere in the preaching of the everlasting gospel. Let thy word have free course and be glorified. May the ignorant be enlightened. May the hardened and impenitent be convinced. May the mourner be comforted. May believers be built up in their holy faith. May this day be a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and may great grace be upon us all. And to thy name, in Christ, be all the praise. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

We do not know for certainty, on what occasion this psalm was composed. But we have the strongest reasons for supposing that it was penned by David, at the time of his persecutions by Saul. The psalm has every appearance of having been written by one who, at the time, or shortly before the composition of it, was persecuted with deadly hatred by a multitude of cruel and malignant enemies; and, in these circumstances, 'encouraged himself in the Lord his God.' There is no person whose history is recorded in the Old Testament to whom the description in the psalm so accurately applies as David; whether we consider the circumstances in which the writer appears to have been placed, or his confidence in God in the time of affliction. It is not improbable, however, that there may also be a reference to the sufferings of Christ the Son of David, and the anti-type of the king of Israel, and to his confidence in his Father amidst the persecutions to which he was exposed.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. Let us bear habitually in mind, our continual dependence upon God, and in all our approaches to him; let us rely on the all-prevailing intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ. But let us also remember that the character of an Israelite indeed, is described by our Lord in these words, 'A man in whom is no guile,' and that our prayer cannot be accepted, if it go not out of unfeigned lips, and, if it be not the prayer of one who by the word of God has been enabled to keep himself from the paths of the destroyer. Ver. 7—15. Marvellous is the loving-kindness of God to his people, when they put their trust in him. The protection which he affords in the time of danger and perplexity, is perfect. It is in infinite wisdom and almighty power. In the present peaceful times of the church, we feel but little of the persecuting hatred of the men of the world. But our adversary, the devil, goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour—as a lion greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion, lurking in secret places:’ and we have constantly need to pray that the Lord would ‘disappoint and cast him down, that he would deliver our souls from the wicked one.’ The Son of God, the Captain of our salvation, will bruise satan under our feet shortly: and if we commit the keeping of our souls to him in well-doing, he will enable us to be faithful unto death; and when we awake at the resurrection-day, our best desires shall be fully gratified; we shall behold the face of God in righteousness, and, seeing him as he is, we shall be satisfied with his likeness.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty. Thine understanding is infinite—thy wisdom is unsearchable—thy kingdom ruleth over all. When we consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained, it well becomes us to say, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him? Blessed be thy name, unworthy though we be, thou hast permitted, yea, commanded, us in Christ Jesus to regard thee as the object of our confidence and love;—in our perplexities to look to thee for wisdom to direct us, in the consciousness of guilt and sinfulness to cast the burden of our sins and our infirmities upon thee; and in the hour of temptation and duty, to rely on the grace which thou hast promised to give us abundantly. Thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in the generations that are past, and thou wilt be their refuge and their strength in the generations that are yet to come. May it be given unto us to believe on the name of the Son of God, and believing, may we have life through his name. May Christ be made unto us, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.

We unite in thanking thee, O Lord, for the mercies and the privileges of this thy holy day; for the opportunities which we have enjoyed in public or in private of waiting upon thee, and for every good impression which may have been made upon our minds by the ordinances of thine appointment. We would be humbled before thee when we think of the sins of our holy things, of the distraction of our minds, and the coldness of our affections while engaged in the solemn services of religion; and the imperfection that has cleaved to our purest desires and our most holy and devout aspirations. Lord, show us thy mercy in the forgiveness of the sins of this day, and in pouring out so rich and abundant a blessing on our solemn religious observances, as shall assure our hearts before thee, and enable us on looking back on this day’s spiritual sacrifices, to say that a day spent in thy courts is better than a thousand.

Gracious Lord, perfect that which concerneth us. Confirm every good impression made in the private exercises of religion, or in the house of prayer. Hold up our goings in thy paths, that our footsteps may not slip. We know that thou wilt hear us: keep us as the apple of thine eye: and let not our spiritual enemies prevail over us. Give us the victory over the fear of man: and animate us to steadfast and persevering obedience by the assured hope of a glorious resurrection.

Bless thy word preached and heard this day. Let not the seed which has been sown, be caught away by the wicked one, or wither away before temptation and persecution, or be choked by the cares, or the pleasures, or the riches of the world; but may it be as good seed sown in a good soil, and bring forth in some a hundred fold, in some sixty, in some thirty.

Watch over us during the darkness of the night, and, if it be thy will, raise us up in health and comfort on the morning of the coming day. Prepare us for all thy will and all our duty. May goodness and mercy follow us all the days of our life; and may we dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. For all that we ask is for Christ’s sake, to whom, with the Father and blessed Spirit, be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXI.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXVIII.

REMARKS.

Scarcely has the blessing been pronounced on Jacob ere he begins to suffer for the deceit by which he has procured it. His brother seeks his life, and to escape his malice, he is obliged to leave his father’s house and flee to Syria. It is a long journey through an inhospitable wild; and to avoid suspicion and remark, he undertakes it alone. In the course of it, a very singular incident occurs. Weary and benighted, the pilgrim lays him down to rest: the earth his bed, a stone his pillow; a glorious vision bursts upon him in a dream: a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, with angels ascending and descending on it; the Lord himself stands at the top of it in visible shape, and solemnly ratifies the benediction of Isaac, and vouchsafes to him his promise of perpetual protection. Jacob awakes out of his sleep—reverently confesses a present deity—rises up and consecrates the stone on which he lay, as a pillar of memorial—names the place Bethel, ‘the house of God:’ and vows a vow of devotion to the worship and service of heaven, during all his future life.

Let us contemplate in the ladder, an emblem of Jehovah’s providential care. Even from his habitation on high he holds constant intercourse with his creatures, and controls all their affairs. And the figure is a striking one, which represents this great truth by angels seen ever and anon descending from heaven to earth charged with commissions from him; and again, in turn, incessantly re-ascending to report them fulfilled, and to ask new ones. Specially let us contemplate in the ladder, an emblem of the Lord Jesus Christ. It was the mystic glimpse of Immanuel which it revealed that made it so interesting to the patriarch, and makes it still so interesting to us. By him it is, that a communication has been opened and perpetuated between earth and heaven. He is the day’s man that stands between the sinner and God. Through him alone it is, that grace and peace descend from the throne; by him alone can the believer rise to the image of heaven here, and to its fulness of joy and holiness hereafter. ‘I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me.’ Let us learn that the Lord is a very present help in times of trouble. It was when Jacob needed him most, a poor solitary wanderer,—at midnight, far from the home and the ordinances of his fathers, that he manifested himself to him in peculiar glory. And the experience of believers in every age has confirmed it, that the consolations of the gospel are sweetest far, and strongest when the trials of life are bitterest. ‘As thy day, so shall thy strength be,’ is an eternal promise, and it never fails. How often at eventide is there light! how often is the valley of Achor given for a door of hope!

The Lord is indeed in every place at all times, and Jacob knew well his omnipresence, even though he cried ‘surely the Lord is here.’ But, in peculiar times and places, his presence is often more sensibly felt than in others; and every Christian has his Bethel and his stone of memorial. O how many have cried in their hearts in the sanctuary, on a holiday of Zion, over the memorials of Christ’s sacrifice, ‘This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.’ Jacob, after the mystic vision, yielded himself up most solemnly to the God of his fathers. How doth it become us to inquire,—What have we rendered unto the Lord for all his goodness? Have we ever seriously begun a religious life? Have we avouched the Lord as our God, and sworn to honour him and serve him in the world? ‘O Lord God, thou knowest.’ Our hearts’ desire is that he would enable us this very morning to consider, in right earnest, the things that belong to our peace—that he would impress on us evermore his own words, ‘When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay it. For God hateth the sacrifice of fools.’

PRAYER.

Bless the Lord, O our souls, and all that is within us be stirred up to bless and to magnify his holy name. It is a pleasant thing to give thanks unto the Lord; to sing praises unto thee, O thou Most High; to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Thou hast never left thyself without a witness on the earth: we would remember the wonders done of old, O thou Spirit, who didst speak to the fathers by the prophets. Thou art he who made a covenant with Abraham; who taught thy servant Moses from the flame of fire in the bush; who gave the living oracles from Sinai; who brought up Israel from Egypt, through the wilderness; who showed beforehand to thy church, by type and symbol, the great things which were to come. In these last days thou hast spoken to us by thine own Son. We have seen what many of old sought to see, and were not permitted; we have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Our souls would magnify the Lord; our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour. Now, lettest thou thy servants depart in peace, for our eyes have seen thy salvation which thou hast prepared before the face of all people, a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Israel. O God, help us to see that we need a Saviour; help us to feel that the Lord Jesus Christ is the very Saviour we need; deliver us from the pride of heart which prevents men from embracing so humbling a salvation as the gospel of his grace proclaims; dispose us to accept of him humbly and heartily in all his offices, as our Prophet, and Priest, and King. He is the only mediator between God and men; by him alone have we privilege of access to thee; our only hope of heaven is in thy mercy through his blood. The Lord make us partakers of his righteousness; the Lord renew us after his image; the Lord sanctify us through his truth. We believe in him; help thou our unbelief. Build us up, stablish, strengthen, settle us in the faith; every day may we be drawing out of his fulness and living to him. And O evermore, give us to enjoy the consolations of his word in affliction; to be guided by his counsel in difficulty and peril; to be strengthened by his grace and truth in times of temptation. May we find him an ever present God; may we never be ashamed to confess him, and to remember him in his ordinances; may we devote ourselves, heart and soul, to his service, and find strength to keep our vows. Lord, bless this family and all connected with us. Be thou our shepherd and we shall never want. Deliver us from the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and from the arrow that wasteth at noon-day; hide us in thy pavilion, and let thy banner over us be love. Sanctify to us every sabbath we spend, every chapter of thy bible we read, every prayer we offer up together at thy footstool; and let us never forget, that to whom much is given, of them much will be required. Hear in heaven thy dwelling-place, our morning supplications, and forgive us, and accept of us in Christ Jesus. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XV.

REMARKS.

The scribes and pharisees made void the law by their traditions; and under the pretence of superior precision and sanctity, were the bitterest enemies of the truth. Jesus knew their hearts and took many occasions to expose their deceit, and refute their cavillings, and rebuke their malice. And what he has denounced against them, applies to all in every age, who love sacrifice rather than mercy; who substitute the form for the power of godliness; who draw nigh to God with their lips, and honour him with their mouths, while their hearts are far from him. 'What is the hope of the hypocrite though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? From his death-bed, does he look back to his prayers? they were a mockery of omniscience; to his solemnities? they were a fashion and a pretence; to his zeal for the truth? it was a lying profession with selfish reserves; to the seemliness of his morality? it was a cloak, to hide from the spirit of the law. His religion is found a shadow, just when he needed its consolations most—his trust is as the spider's web.

How wonderful was the faith of the poor woman of Canaan! see her disregarded, repulsed, scorned, yet still persevering in her suit; see her hoping against hope, and with singular ingenuity, turning the very objections argued against her into an argument in her favour! O how beautiful an instance is this of the efficacy of importunate prayer—of the triumph of humility; of the riches of gospel grace; how admirably calculated to animate the faint and weary penitent! How doth it become each one of us to take up her cry, 'O Lord, thou Son of David, have mercy upon me;' and despite all disappointment and delay, never to let him go without a blessing. The miracles of Christ were not less remarkable for their love than for their power; not only were they fitted to demonstrate the divinity of his mission, but also to illustrate the doctrines he taught. We have been reading that he had compassion on a great multitude who were three days without food in the wilderness, attending to his instructions; and also that after having fed them abundantly with seven loaves and a few little fishes, seven baskets of fragments were gathered up. Let us never forget, that besides ministering on all occasions of distress to the temporal wants of his people, he has prepared for them a spiritual feast in his gospel, and invited them all to partake of it, and given them the assurance of a hearty welcome and abundant provision. Let us never forget that himself is the bread of life, and that whoso is privileged to eat of it never hungers again. Lord, evermore give us this bread!

PRAYER.

O Lord, we would receive it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. In his name, and through his merit, we would approach thee in prayer; our only hope of thy favour is for the sake of what he did and suffered for us. O do thou show us more and more of the perfection of his sacrifice, and the fulness of his compassions, and the riches and freeness of his grace. Do thou send down the Spirit of truth to open our understandings, that we may understand aright those things which are spoken of him in the scriptures. Do thou unite us to him by true and living faith; do thou dispose us to cleave unto him as the Lord our righteousness, and the Lord our strength, that our inmost hearts may cry out, None but Christ, none but Christ! O let our souls be nourished by him, from day to day as the hidden manna—the bread which came down from heaven—and when they are ready to faint, let him be to us as water in the wilderness, as a spring in the desert. Lord, deliver us from the hypocrisy of those who desire to appear righteous before men; who are satisfied with a barren profession; who have a name to live while they are dead. God forbid that ours should be merely a religion of show. Create thou in us clean hearts; renew a right spirit within us; and by our daily walk and conversation, may we approve the sincerity of our faith. Our earnest cry, morning and evening, would be, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on us. O give us grace, to be humble, and importunate, and persevering in our devotions; let us wait patiently on the Lord, and though he slay us, still trust in him. Lord, we pray for the downfall of satan's kingdom, and the triumphs of the Redeemer's cause among the heathen nations; we pray for peace and charity among all of every name, to whom the tidings of salvation have come; we pray that our Sovereign may reign long and happily over our native land; we pray for our beloved Zion, that grace may be poured out abundantly on all the ministers and all the congregations; we pray for the sick, the afflicted, and the dying; that all may find thee a very present help in time of trouble. Accept of our thanks for thy goodness to us during the past day; we commit us to thy care and keeping during the watches of the night; underneath us ever be thine everlasting arms.

Hear and answer us in Christ Jesus. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXIX.

REMARKS.

Animated and strengthened by the vision of Bethel, Jacob continued his journey, and reached safely the dwelling-place of Laban. His meeting with Rachel in the fields, as she tended her father's sheep, is described with the most touching simplicity. His heart clung to her at the very first: but Laban was selfish and sordid, and would not consent to their union, except on the condition of his serving with him seven years. It was a harsh proposal, but Jacob willingly acceded to it, and we read, that 'the seven years seemed to him but a few days for the love he had to her.' And it is true still, that where our heart is in a work, the most difficult and laborious work, it becomes pleasant to us; especially is it so in religion. O it were a cold creed that would not let the affections be touched—that would brand the devotion of our deepest and dearest feelings to religion as fanaticism! Every true believer can say, 'the love of Christ constraineth me!' This is the strongest of all the principles that can influence human nature, stronger than all others combined. It has compelled men by a sweet violence, to consecrate all they had and all they could do to the cause of the cross; it has compelled men to renounce riches, reputation, honour, as dross for the gospel's sake; it has compelled men to leave the homes of their fathers, the old familiar faces of their youth, and to go out to the far land, to the desert isles of the sea, to preach to the stranger and the savage, the unsearchable riches of Christ. O it is an indomitable, and indestructible principle, this love of Christ: it sustains the spirit amid the worst perils; it makes the longest trials short!

After the seven years of Jacob's service were ended, Laban, by a most unworthy artifice, cheated him out of the promised reward; and by driving him into polygamy, introduced strife and misery into his household ever after. How strikingly calculated was this to remind the patriarch of his own treachery to his brother Esau; to impress him with a sense of the retributive justice of God! And it were well for us to remember, that very generally, even in this life, a man reaps the fruit of his own evil doings. How often is his sin written as with fire on his punishment! The careless parent may trace it in the ruin of his family; the spendthrift in beggary and disgrace; the miser in the scattering to the winds of his hope and his fortunes; the perjured man and cheat in the scorn and loathing of his fellows; the drunkard in a diseased and withered age before its time. O it is both a tormenting and a silencing scripture, 'as I have done, so hath my God requited me!'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast said, that whatever we ask of thee in the name of the Lord Jesus, believing, we shall receive. Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. We are by nature under the condemnation of the law; justify us through the blood of the great sacrifice. We are corrupted in thought, and word, and deed; renew us after thine own image. Our understandings are darkened; enlighten us by thy good spirit. Our hearts are cold and hard; touch us as with a live coal from off thine altar; say unto us, Live; yea, say unto us, Live, and the time will be a time of love. We are weak and helpless in ourselves; let thy grace be sufficient for us; strengthen the things which remain and are ready to die. We are dust, and return to dust again; raise us up together, and make us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. O help us with all our heart, and all our soul, to love him who first loved us; may the love of Christ be the quickening, ruling principle of our lives; may we count all things but loss and dung, that we may be found in him, and do his will. Lord, deliver us from pride, from hypocrisy, from envy, from all uncharitableness. Put it into our hearts to hate all fraud and deceit; to be honest in all our ways; ever to do to others as we would that others should do to us. Give us that charity which is the bond of perfectness, which hopeth, and believeth, and endureth all things; and impress on us evermore, the new commandment of our Lord to his disciples, 'that they should love one another as he loved them.' Accept of our thanksgiving for thy preservation of us during the night that is past; take us this day under thy care and keeping; lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: and all we ask is in the name of Jesus, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XVI.

REMARKS.

The pharisees and sadducees laid aside, for a time, their mutual animosities, and directed their united malice against Christ. They tempted him with a request for a sign from heaven, in confirmation of his mission; but he exposed their hypocrisy and left them.

Is it not so still, that many of the enemies of the gospel affect to seek other testimonies to its truth than those that have been given already? They shut their eyes to these, however close, and varied, and incontestible, and wish new ones. They dare to prescribe to God the evidence he ought to have furnished in behalf of his revelation; they will not be convinced except on terms themselves propose. They are perfectly satisfied to act, in common life, on the most slender probabilities; they will be content with nothing short of demonstration, not even with demonstration itself, in religion. Alas, it is not the deficiency of signs, nor the difficulty of interpreting them, that makes men infidel; it is an evil heart. Unless we believe in Christ, for the sake of the words he spoke, and the works he did, and the lives and deaths of his apostles, no other evidence will be given us; and though it were, it would be impotent to convert us. Jesus asked his disciples, 'Whom do men say that I am?' Well doth it become us to put the question to ourselves, 'What think we of Christ?' Do we feel that he is the very Saviour we need? Is he precious in our eye, as he in whom all the prophecies and types of Old Testament history meet and centre? Can we take up the words of zealous, ardent Peter, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the most high God?' Let us never forget that no one can say in faith, 'That Jesus is the Lord,' but by the Holy Ghost.

It is on this solemn truth that the church is founded as on a rock; blessed be God for the promise that the 'gates of hell shall never prevail against it.' How singularly has this promise been verified in its past history? The church of Christ has been tried in every possible way. She has been despised, and ridiculed, and scourged; she has had to contend with kings of the earth, and with traitors within her own bosom; she has passed through the calm and the storm together. Is it not fair to argue that, since neither the extravagance of persecution nor of indulgence, neither indifference nor fanaticism, has proved effectual to subvert her, she will continue unscathed to the end. The arm of the omnipotent has been often raised in her defence, and she has but emerged from every trouble into which the ungodly have cast her, ay, sometimes as from the very ashes, fresher and fairer than before. Jacob shall arise though he be small. The ark may be tossed, but it shall never perish. To thousands still the dust of Zion shall be precious, and Jerusalem preferred to their chiefest joy.

But let us not rest in vain boastings of the perpetuity of Zion, while ourselves have not sought and found a refuge in it. What matters it to me that all the malice of men and devils are impotent against it, if I have neither part nor lot in the covenant? It is not enough that we call ourselves by the name of Jesus; unless we have the spirit, unless we take up his cross and follow him, we are none of his. The time is coming when the most careless of us will be brought to confess that this were our best portion. O what comment can add to the touching, constraining pathos of these simple words, 'What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?'

PRAYER.

O Lord, in thy presence, and at thy footstool, we would plead no other merits than the life and death of Jesus Christ. We believe that he is indeed the Christ, the Son of the most high God; that he is the Messiah who should come, and that we are to look for no other. Thanks be unto him who came in the name of the Lord to save us; hosannah in the highest! Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; he hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood; he is willing to save to the uttermost all who come unto him. See, O God, our Shield. Our souls would magnify the Lord; our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour. O thou who hast given thy Son for us, and wilt, for his sake, refuse no good thing to them that ask thee, give us faith in the acceptance of his finished work; make him unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; help us to flee for refuge to the hope of his gospel, and to rest in him as all our salvation, and all our desire. Lord, thou knowest our hearts; speak to us, this evening, a word in season. If our burden be a heart of unbelief, lift on us the light of thy truth, and scatter all our doubts; if we are weary and heavy laden, give us the rest of the covenant; if we have a name to live while we are dead, the Lord send even on us an unction from the Holy One; if we are at ease in sin, without spending a serious thought on death and hell, the Lord say unto us, live; if we are panting after the dust of the earth, and laying up our treasures here, O show us the vanity of this world's cares and enjoyments, raise us up out of the fearful pit, out of the miry clay, and put a new song in our mouths, even praise to our God. We confess before thee the sins of the day; we resign us to thy keeping during the night. Dwell thou ever in our household. While we live, may we live to thee; and when thou callest us hence, may death be gain to us. Hear and accept of us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE II.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXI.

REMARKS.

1. Prosperity has its sorrows as well as adversity. Jacob formerly suffered from adversity; he is now suffering from prosperity. Twenty years before he was obliged, having nothing but his staff in his hand, chap. xxxii. 10. to flee from the face of his brother Esau; now, in his affluence, he is obliged to flee from the face of Laban and his sons in the land of Syria. Jealousy, and envy, and hatred towards him, had filled their minds, on account of the prosperity wherewith God had blessed him, as they conceived, at their expense. They forgot, or overlooked, his patience under the dishonest treatment he had met with at their hands; the faithful and long continued services he had performed for them; the prosperity wherewith they themselves had been blessed on his account; the debt of gratitude they owed to him and his God; and the tender regard they ought to have felt and shown towards him and his wives and children, as members of their own family; as bones of their bones, and flesh of their flesh.

2. What a selfish being is man! What an evil principle the love of the world! It separates the nearest relatives, the choicest friends. It expels or excludes every generous emotion, every holy affection. 'Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him,' 1 John ii. 15.

3. What a mercy, whether we be rich or poor, to know that the God of Jacob changeth not, and that his purposes cannot be frustrated! The same God is equally watchful over our interests, and knows and takes the proper time and way of delivering us out of temptation and difficulty, and the power and malice of enemies. Let us be this day led by the Spirit of our covenant God, as Jacob was; and, in the use of means, above all, in the exercise of faith, let us leave all our concerns, for time and eternity, in the hands of him who died to save us.

4. How much are we indebted to the restraining grace and providential government of God! In this chapter we see how Laban was kept from injuring Jacob; and, in chap. xxxiii. we find that the same restraining grace prevented Esau from injuring him. Were it not for the restraints which God imposes, in an infinite variety of ways, upon the tempers and dispositions of ungodly men, the world would be ten thousand times worse than it is, and the righteous would have no living at all. But let us fear no evil; for if God be for us, who can be against us?

PRAYER.

O God of Jacob, we would approach thee in the name of Jesus, and adore thee in the glorious and endearing character of an electing, a loving, a redeeming, a covenant-making, and covenant-keeping God. We would bless thee for the bible, that reveals thy character, and contains a record of thy dealings with thy people of old. We would rejoice in believing that, however mysterious may be the ways in which thou leadest the objects of thy wondrous love, thou wilt keep them as the apple of thine eye, and bring them at last, by the right way, into a city of habitation. Be pleased to make an everlasting covenant with each one of us, and to manifest thyself unto us, in another way than thou dost unto the world. Dwell in our house as in thy Bethel, and let thy Spirit dwell in our hearts as in his holy temple. Visit us with those communications of thy love, and manifestations of thy glory, wherewith thou art sometimes pleased to refresh the souls, and lighten the burdens, and sweeten the troubles, and guide the steps, and animate the hopes, and elevate the affections of thy weary people. Of these unspeakably precious privileges we are utterly unworthy, for our sins are more numerous and aggravated than tongue can tell or heart conceive; but worthy is the Lamb that was slain, and in him thou art at once a just God and a Saviour. Behold, O God, our Shield. Thou, in the riches of thy grace, and wonders of thy love, hast been pleased to appoint thy Son to be thy people's shield from the corruption of their own nature, the fiery darts of the wicked one, the temptations of the world, and the curse of a broken law. Enable us, by thy Spirit, to put on and employ aright this shield for the purposes for which it is provided. Let Christ be our all and in all. Let him be precious to each one of us. In our wants let us have faith wherewith to draw out of his fulness; in our weakness let us be found leaning on him for strength; in our fears let us realize the might of Jesus; in our transactions with our fellow-creatures let us imitate his example; and in the multitude of our thoughts within us, about sin, and the world, and salvation, and death, and eternity, let Calvary's cross be the star to guide us; and the grace of the Sufferer the theme of our praise, and the foundation of our hopes. Whatever be thy dealings with us this day, forbid that we should dishonour thy name, or grieve thy Spirit; and however painful may be the duties or trials to which we may be called, let us be supported under them by the assurance we have that the God of Jacob changeth not, and that those whom he hath once loved, he loveth, and guideth, and protecteth unto the end. Should the world frown on us, let us have the smiles of thy countenance. Should we be in perplexity, let the God of Bethel direct us. If enemies pursue our souls, let us know thee as our hiding-place. If we be called to sickness or death, let the Lord hear, and the name of the God of Jacob defend us. With ourselves we would bear on our spirits all with whom we are connected. May they be a seal on the heart and on the arm of the great high priest before the throne. May our friends be friends of Jesus, and may our enemies receive forgiveness through his blood. Let all the children of affliction be sanctified and comforted by the Holy Ghost. Let the dying be prepared for their great change. Let the troubled in mind have from thyself the peace which the world cannot give. Let ministers of the gospel be faithful and successful. Let thy kingdom come. Hasten the time, Lord, when the posterity of Jacob shall believe in Jacob's God, and when all the nations of the earth shall be blest in Jesus Christ, and participate in the glories of his reign. We would thank thee for thy care of us through the past night, and for the mercies of the morning. We would bless thee for all thy goodness towards us in time past. Whatever trials we may have experienced, we still acknowledge that we have more reason to sing of mercy than of judgment, and it is because thy compassions fail not that we are not consumed. Help us to honour thee through the day. Keep us from evil. Sanctify us wholly. Let no weapon formed against us prosper. Let us be found in Christ, and then we shall be safe in life, and death, and through eternity. Hear, pardon, and accept us for his sake, and the glory shall ever be thine in him. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVII. 4, 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—9. There is a probable tradition that the holy mount is Tabor, situated near Cana and Nazareth in Galilee. The ascent would probably have required a day, and, from this, and other circumstances, it would appear that the transfiguration took place during the night season. Jesus went to pray, and the three disciples fell asleep. The same three were with him afterwards in the garden, and fell asleep while he prayed there. The transfiguration appears to have been a visible, external emanation, from the person of Jesus, of the glory that dwelt within him, and probably was preparatory to his death, for they spake of 'the decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.' Moses and Elias appeared to do homage to him as the great prophet and law-giver, from whom they received and to whom they now surrendered their commission. They 'appeared in glory,' and thus would encourage and cheer the disciples in the trials that awaited them.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. What a glorious event is the death of Christ! Angels desire to look into its wonders. Moses and Elias came from heaven to speak with him concerning it. All the redeemed glory in it as the source of their salvation, and as the masterpiece of God's wisdom and power. Let us commemorate it as often as we have opportunity, with becoming love, humility, and gratitude; and let the contemplation of it expel every unholy fear, and excite every holy emotion. It is Christ that died; who can condemn us? It is Christ that died; who would sin any more?

2. How great must be the glory and complete the happiness of heaven, when a partial and transient glimpse of the glory of Christ and of two of his redeemed ones, on the mount, could have so ravished the heart of Peter, that, in the ecstasy of enjoyment he said, 'Lord, it is good for us to be here!' There are moments in which some of God's peculiar people, on earth, have a foretaste of the glory and happiness that await them in the upper world, and then it is natural enough to say, 'Lord, it is good for us to be here.' But however desirable high spiritual enjoyments may be in themselves, they are not frequently followed by great trials; and we should remember that the hidings of God's face may be as necessary and profitable, though not so agreeable to the soul, as would be the smiles of his countenance.

3. If the Father gave such testimony of his satisfaction in his Son, and expressed so divine a desire that we should hear him, what miserable infatuation must they be under, that see no beauty in his person, and that heed not the gracious words that proceed from his mouth! Let us beware of such infatuation. Sin may have its pleasures now, but it has none in death, none in eternity. Love to Christ may have its cross and sorrows now, but it has no sting at death, and occasions no pain when crowned with an eternal weight of glory.

PRAYER.

O Lord God, thou art the wonderful one. Thou art wonderful in thyself, and wonderful in all thy works and ways. Thou art specially wonderful in thy redeeming love. We would bless thee for a Saviour, and that Saviour every way worthy of the God that provided him, and infinitely suited to the guilt and misery of the poor objects for whom he is provided. May it be given us, on his behalf, to believe in his name, and to behold his glory. May we now so realize thy gracious presence, as that we shall have reason to say, from our sweet experience, 'Lord, it is good for us to be here.' Let us feel our hard hearts melted and enlarged by a sense of our personal interest in Jesus; and let the eyes of our minds be so opened, as that we shall behold the evil of sin, and the worthlessness of every thing worldly, in comparison with the excellency of the knowledge of thy beloved Son, in whom thou hast declared thyself well-pleased. Holy Father, enable us, by thy Spirit, to accept him as our friend, by loving him; as our guide, by following him; as our Saviour, by trusting in him. Let us have pardon of sin, and peace with thee through his blood. As thou art well pleased with him, be well pleased with us for his sake. Adopt us into thy family. Give us thy Holy Spirit. Create in us clean hearts, and renew right spirits within us. Draw the desires of our souls towards thyself; and while we remain in the world, let us live near to thee, and by the faith of thy Son. Let us realize and exhibit to the world the constraining influence of his love. O let us be dying daily to sin, and living continually to the praise of the glory of thy grace. We would confess and lament the many sins of omission and commission, whereof we have been this day guilty. We are indeed great sinners. What a mercy to know that thy Son is a great Saviour, and that, where our sin aboundeth, thy grace doth much more abound. Make us debtors to the riches of thy grace, in Christ Jesus, for pardon and eternal life. We would praise thee for the many comforts of the day. It is to thy unmerited goodness we are indebted for every comfort. We desire to be enabled to bless thee even for our troubles. It surely becometh us to bless the Lord at all times, and in all circumstances. We would bless the God that withholdeth or taketh away, as well as the God that giveth. We would love the God that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, as well as the God that shineth on our tabernacle. What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits to us? O to have hearts to love and praise thee! O to be enabled to say with Job, 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.' We desire to commit ourselves and all our concerns to thy holy and fatherly keeping through the night. Enable us to do it with the confidence of children. Be a wall of fire and defence around us and our dwelling. Take charge of all whom we ought to remember before thee. Upon our relatives, and well-wishers, and benefactors, we implore thy special blessing. For our enemies we implore forgiveness. Lord, increase our faith, that we may do it from the heart. The sick, and the afflicted, and the poor, and the dying, we would remember with compassion and sympathy. May their diseases be healed, and their wants supplied, and their spirits supported, and saved by the gracious Redeemer at thy right hand. We would pray for ministers at home, and missionaries abroad. May they have the spirit and presence of their Master, and labour successfully in his strength. We pray for the edification of saints and the conversion of sinners. In the seed of Abraham we feel a peculiar interest. Lord, send deliverance to Jacob. Gather the outcasts of Israel. Let them be taught by thyself that Moses and Elias have surrendered their commissions to Jesus of Nazareth. Let idolatry cease every where, and Jesus be crowned Lord of the whole earth. Now, Lord, forgive the sin of this approach unto thy presence. Prepare us for whatever thou art preparing for us. Prepare us for the solemnities of a dying hour, and for the still more awful solemnities of a judgment-day. And do all for thine own Son's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

We yesterday morning left Jacob, after he had parted with Laban, at Mizpah, and offered sacrifice to the God of his father. We now find him on his way to Canaan, and the angels of God meeting him in a place, to which he gave the name Mahanaim, (signifying two hosts or camps, or the camp of God;) and which afterwards became one of the four Levitical cities within the territories of the tribe of Gad, Joshua xxi. 38.

From Mahanaim, Jacob from prudential motives, and in conformity to eastern customs, sent messengers to his brother Esau, who had become prince of the neighbouring country, called Edom, from the name of its chief and proprietor, Gen. xxv. 30. This country, which was situated to the south of Judah and Moab, and extended southward to the eastern gulf of the Red Sea, had been given by special grant, by God, to Esau and his posterity. Ver. 24. There seems no reason to doubt, that the man that wrestled with Jacob, was the Lord Jesus Christ in human form, though not in human flesh in reality. He had previously appeared in human form to Abraham, Lot, and others. Having in the covenant of redemption, undertaken to become God manifest in the flesh, he was pleased occasionally, and before the fulness of time, to assume the appearance of a man to some of his favoured expectants; and thus to communicate to Israel some knowledge of the manner in which, as the promised Messiah, he was to accomplish the salvation of his people. Jacob knew not at first, Him with whom he wrestled. He afterwards knew him to be God. The customary abstinence of the children of Israel from eating of the sinew which shrank, is a remarkable illustration and proof of the truth of the sacred record in the case of Jacob.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. We cannot expect a vision of angels, neither have we any right to look for dreams to direct us in our difficulties. But still the angels of God are about us as ministering spirits; and we have the Bible, which is a more sure guide than dreams or visions, to be a light to our feet, and a lamp to our paths.

2. We have here a combination of the prayerfulness, and watchfulness, and prudential diligence in business, that becometh a Christian. Jacob, in his distress, went to pray. He then prudently exercised the reason and power which God had given him, to protect himself and his property. And his watchfulness is very remarkable.

3. We have an exemplification of God's gracious dealing, with his own spiritually exercised people. And thus does God, by his providence, or by a more than ordinary supply of his Spirit, refresh his people when they are weary, or strengthen them when they are weak, or give them such a sense of his love, and such a manifestation of his glory, as will elevate them above every slavish fear, and enable them, feeble as they be in themselves, to stand in the evil day.

4. See the benefit of secret retirement with God. It was during the watches of the night, and while alone in the wilderness, that the angel of the covenant wrestled with Jacob. The gates of Zion are good, and God loveth them. But that man has reason to suspect his Christianity, who delights not in retirement from the world that he may enjoy fellowship with Jesus.

5. See how wonderfully God makes our very fears and dangers work for our good. It was Jacob's trouble and fear on account of Esau, that occasioned the visions at Mahanaim and Peniel. Why should not we then welcome the trouble that gives God an opportunity of manifesting the riches of his grace, and the might of his arm in our behalf?

6. Do we know the God of Jacob as our own God? Have we had any meetings with him? Are we, or any of us, an Israel? In our several duties and trials this day, let us depend on the help of the God of Jacob, and be enabled to exercise the faith, by which we shall be made more than conquerors through him that loved us.

PRAYER.

O thou holy One of Israel, graciously condescend to look on us now in the face of thine Anointed Son. We would bless thee for him, and for all the privileges we receive for his sake. We would bless thee for thy holy word, and for that portion of it, wherewith we have been favoured. Give us thy holy Spirit, that he may enable us to accept Jesus, as he is freely and fully offered; and that he may beget in our souls a holy understanding, and relish, and remembrance of thy word. We would admire and adore that God who sent his angels to meet Jacob at Mahanaim; that God who personally wrestled with him at Peniel; that God who preserved him from Esau, and who fulfilled the promise he had given at Bethel. We need direction and salvation as much as ever Jacob did. Give us what we need out of thine own riches in glory. We deserve nothing good, but thou delightest in mercy, and art more willing to give than we are to take. O may the Spirit of grace subdue our iniquities, renew our wills, enlighten our minds, and fill us with thy peace. May thine angels minister unto us. May our souls be found in Christ—washed in his blood—clothed in his righteousness, and conformed to his image. May we have direction in difficulty, support under trial, strength for duty, and victory over our spiritual enemies. Of ourselves, we are weak and ignorant, prone to evil, and exposed to innumerable dangers. But united to the Lord Jesus, and exercising faith on his fullness, and strength, and sufficiency, we can do all things that thou requirest of us. Let us go through the wilderness leaning on him, and drawing by faith out of his fulness, the supply of every want and grace to help us in every time of need. Let us be found walking with God, living near unto him, enjoying a sense of his love, and realizing a covenant interest in the God of Jacob. Preserve us from seeking our own wills and ways. Let thy glory be continually in our view; and as we are not our own, but bought with a price, let us not fail to deny ourselves, to take up the cross, and to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth: enduring, as seeing thee who art invisible, and purifying our hearts, and conversation, and conduct by faith; so that when the solemnities of death overtake us, we may be found meet for the enjoyment of that rest that remaineth to thy people.

We would thank thee for thy tender and gracious care of us through the past night, and for the health, and food, and raiment, and other mercies of the morning. We desire to remember before thee, all that are dear to us. May they be objects of thy providential care, and subjects of thy saving grace! If we have enemies, Lord, do thou forgive them, and increase our faith, that we may forgive them from the heart. Have mercy on the children of affliction. Spare useful lives. Prepare for death such as are appointed to die. Bless with thy favour, and with the reviving, and sanctifying influences of thy Spirit, the established church in our land, and every other denomination of professing Christians that desire the glory of thy name, and put their seal to the truth of thy holy word; and let the time soon come, when divisions of human contrivance shall cease, and when, as there is but one Lord, there shall be but one faith. Let thy presence be with all faithful ministers of the gospel, in public and in private; and O forbid that they should forget the account they have to render to thee of the trust committed to them. Let the seed of Jacob, scattered every where, be gathered unto Shiloh; and let the idolatry of pagans and papists be destroyed by the brightness of the coming of the Son of man.

We now desire to commit ourselves to thy holy care and keeping through the day. Let the peace of God that passeth understanding, fill, and keep our hearts and minds; and do thou perfect whatever concerneth us. Pardon the sins of this approach unto thy presence. Wash our persons and services in the blood of the Lamb, and the glory shall be ascribed to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, now and for ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXI.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XVIII.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we have, in a variety of ways, an inculcation of the spirit, temper, and conduct that should characterise us as Christians. We have here a sure touchstone wherewith to try the state of our hearts, and the sincerity of our profession. Let us this evening put our Christianity to the test. We are too prone to take it for granted. If, on trial, we find that we have not the spirit of Christ, let us bless God for the discovery, and go to the blood of Christ for the salvation we need. If, on the other hand, we find, on trial, that we are of the number of God's little children, let us bless him for the proof, and take the comfort that belongs to such a state. Ver. 1—5. Have we been humbled and converted? This is a question of infinite importance to each one of us. Pride and ambition are natural to us, and among men these are not unfrequently considered noble qualities. But in the sight of God they are abominable, and exclude from the kingdom of heaven. God respecteth not the proud, but he does respect the lowly. Let us not be deceived. Conversion to God, by faith in Jesus, is necessary to our salvation, and, if we be thus converted, we shall be indeed humble. Ver. 6—15. If we have the Spirit of Christ, we love and cherish his people, and are careful to avoid offending or hurting them in any manner or degree. We cannot avoid offending the people of the world, if we be faithful witnesses for Christ, and however agreeable to flesh and blood their friendship may be, it is not desirable, in a spiritual sense, for it is enmity against God. But we are bound, by every solemn and spiritual consideration, to abstain from offending the generation of God's children. It is true they may not always be in the right, and their ignorance may sometimes render them apt to take offence when no offence is intended. But the Spirit of Christ is so kind and gentle, that a Christian will readily deny himself rather than offend a weak brother. And if this be the case, what shall the end be of cruel persecutors of those for whom Christ died. It is peculiarly observable that, on the great day, men are to be judged by their conduct towards Christ's people. Ver. 16—20. How little is the instruction in these verses regarded, even by those who make the most flaming profession of Christianity! In so far as obedience to these rules is concerned, they are in a great measure a dead letter. But, whatever others do, let us obey them, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Had we the spirit of Christ, we would have respect to all his commandments. Ver. 21—35. We have here clearly and strongly inculcated the necessity of a spirit of forgiveness. The true Christian forgives much, because much is forgiven him; and the more he is made a debtor to Christ, the more readily does he forgive his brother that offendeth him. If any of us entertain malice or revenge in our hearts, towards a fellow-creature, we are not Christians. We may bear the name of Christ, but what can that avail us without the Spirit of Christ? Now, the Spirit of Christ is a spirit of forgiveness; and it is in vain that we expect forgiveness from the heavenly Father, whom we have offended, times and ways without number, unless we forgive our offending brother. Lord, increase our faith, and then shall we forgive others, as we expect to be forgiven by Thee.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the high and holy One, in whose presence the holy angels veil their faces and their feet with their wings; yet, high and holy as thou art, thou condescendest to dwell on earth with the man that is of a contrite and humble spirit. To the lowly in heart thou hast respect, but the proud thou beholdest afar off. We would bless thee, this evening and for ever, for what thou art in thyself, and for what thou art to us in Christ Jesus. Glory be unto that God that hath so loved us as to have sent his Son to die for us. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift, and thanks be unto him that consented to be given, and came in the name of the Lord, to seek and to save that which was lost. All of us are lost by nature. By the fall of our first parents we have become guilty, corrupt creatures. We were shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin. In our flesh there dwelleth no good thing. Our hearts, that were originally intended to be a temple and throne to the God that made us, have become nests of every unclean bird. They are indeed deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Our conduct is in correspondence with the state of our hearts. Lord, convert us to thyself. Create in us clean hearts, and renew right spirits within us. We have now read and heard from thy word, that except we be converted, and become as little children, we shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Give us thy holy Spirit, that he may quicken our souls by uniting us to Jesus. Let Christ be in us by his word and Spirit, and let us be in him by a living faith. Let us be made humble, and meek, and docile, and inoffensive, and forgiving as little children. Let us bear the image of the God that made, and of the Saviour that redeemed us. Forbid that any of us should deceive himself, or be deceived by others, with respect to his spiritual condition. All of us are too prone to be vain, and proud, and selfish, and unforgiving. Let us be brought to the cross of Christ, that in its light we may see what we are, what we have done, what we have deserved, and what grace must make us before we can see God. Let the life we henceforth live be a life of faith on the Son of God; a life of holy and uniform obedience to thy law; a life of weanedness of heart from sin and the world; a life of unreserved devotedness to the praise of the glory of thy grace. Let us realize, in our hearts and consciences, a vital and spiritual union to Christ. Let us feel the efficacy of the atonement he hath made, and let our conduct, in the various relations of life, exhibit the power of genuine godliness. We would bless thee for the many mercies of the past day. We cannot number them all. Surely thou art to us a gracious God. We pray for the forgiveness of the many sins whereof we have been guilty. We would pray for mercy, not merely to ourselves, but to all that need it. Do thou cause thy salvation to be known and believed by all men. Let the unbelief of the Jews be ended. Give them thy Spirit, as a spirit of grace and supplication, and then they shall look to him whom they have pierced, and be saved. Put an end to the idolatry of papists and pagans, and the delusions of Mahomet. Reform and purify the Protestant churches. Unite them as one family. Bless our sovereign and all the inhabitants of our native land. May they be a holy people unto the Lord. Pity the sick and dying. Comfort all that mourn. Be the help of all that have no help in man. Let travellers, on sea or land, be under thy protection. Let widows and orphans find mercy in thee. Let our friends and well-wishers be children of thine own, and realize their adoption into thy family. Forgive all our enemies, and bless them with the spirit that will make them our friends. Watch over us through the night. May the Shepherd of Israel be our shepherd. Prepare us for all the events before us. As our days are may our strength be. Living or dying, may we be found in Christ, for all we ask is for his sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXIII.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 3. Jacob bowed himself, according to the custom prevalent in the East, when he approached near to his brother, to mark the respect he entertained for him, and to remove from his mind all suspicion of his usurping the honour which belonged to him. Ver. 10. 'To accept a present from an inferior was a customary pledge of friendship, but returning it implied disaffection. It is the same in Eastern countries at the present day. If your present be received by your superior, he necessarily becomes your friend, and you may rely on his friendship; if it be not received, you have reason to fear. It was on this ground that Jacob was so urgent with Esau to accept his present.' 'As though I had seen the face of God;' i. e. Jacob regarded Esau's kind reception of him as a token of the divine favour,—he saw God's presence and agency in it. Ver. 20. The altar which he built was dedicated to El-elohe-Israel, i. e. God, the God of Israel, who had delivered him from the hands of his enemies, and lately bestowed upon him a new name, even that of Israel.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

'When a man's ways,' saith Solomon, 'please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.' This was beautifully exemplified in the case of Jacob, as related in this chapter. He had incurred his brother's bitter hatred, and had to quit his father's house in consequence, and flee for his life. Though many years had passed away since that event took place, still he had reason to think that Esau had not forgotten it, but would embrace the opportunity now afforded of wreaking his vengeance upon him, for having deprived him of his birth-right. Accordingly, when he drew near to the place where he dwelt, and when he saw him coming with a large company of servants, he was afraid, and made preparation for a hostile attack. But the God whom he worshipped and served, and to whose guidance and protection he had committed himself and all his interests, interposed in his behalf, and soon dissipated his fears. By his unseen but powerful agency, he softened the heart of Esau, banished his resentful feelings towards his brother, and gave him favour in his sight; so that from being a bitter enemy he became a loving friend. How easily can the Almighty change the temper and disposition of any individual! The hearts of all men are in his hands, and he can turn them as he doth the rivers of waters. He can soon allay the most bitter animosities, and unite in the bonds of friendship those who have for years been living in hatred and strife. But the conduct of the patriarch plainly shows, that it is our duty to use all proper means to soften the anger of a brother, whom we may have offended, while we implore the assistance and direction of the God of Jacob. It is ours to use the means, it is his to render them effectual. We should never forget our constant dependence upon the Most High, for all the blessings, both of a temporal and spiritual kind, which we enjoy. He it is who gives us kind and loving friends, and makes our enemies to be at peace with us; therefore we ought to give him the homage of our hearts, and the unreserved obedience of our whole life.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, we approach the footstool of thy throne this morning with grateful hearts, to make mention of thy loving-kindness and tender mercy. Thou art the author of our life, and to thee we are indebted for every blessing which sweetens life, and renders it in any measure comfortable and happy. By thee we were called into being, and thy kind providence has hitherto sustained us. Ever since we drew the breath of life, thou hast watched over us with all the tenderness and affection of a loving parent; and amid much forgetfulness of thee, thou hast never for a single day nor a single hour been unmindful of us, but hast daily loaded us with thy benefits; so that in looking back on our past life, and reviewing all the way by which thou hast led us, we can set up our stones of remembrance, and say, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and all that is within us, bless and magnify his holy name.

But alas! O Lord, we must confess, we have not requited thee as we ought; we have proved ungrateful and disobedient children; we have frequently transgressed thy laws, and violated thy holy precepts; and wert thou strict to mark our iniquities, we could not stand before thee. Have mercy upon us, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; and for the sake of thy Son, and our Saviour, be pleased, we humbly beseech thee, to blot out all our sins, to love us freely, and receive us graciously. Create in each of us a clean heart, and renew in us a right spirit, that we may henceforth live devoted to thy praise and glory. Justify us freely by thy grace, and sanctify us wholly by thy Spirit. Thou hast raised us up to see the light and enjoy the comforts of a new day; enable us to spend it in thy fear. Fit us for every duty; prepare us for every trial. May we deny ourselves to all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and live soberly, righteously, and godly. Be the God of this family, and of all our dear friends and relations; reward our benefactors and forgive our enemies. We ask all in the name of him who has taught us thus to pray, 'Our Father,' &c.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLIX.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XIX.

REMARKS.

1. Respects the marriage covenant. From our Lord's discourse with the Pharisees as here related, we may justly take occasion to admire and adore the wisdom and goodness of God, in having created the human species, male and female; and in having appointed such an equal proportion between them, as is at once necessary for the preservation of the human family, and admirably adapted for promoting the comfort and happiness of both. As the marriage relation ought not to be entered into rashly and inconsiderately, but in the fear of God, and with an eye to his glory, and the best interests of our immortal souls; so we are here taught, that it is of the most sacred nature, and that nothing but the violation of the solemn contract, by the infidelity of either party, can be considered a sufficient reason for its being broken up. Since this is the case, how necessary and important for married persons to study each other's temper and disposition—cautiously to avoid every thing that might engender domestic discord; and to strive as far as possible, to promote their mutual comfort and happiness. 2. Respects the young. The endearing manner in which our Lord embraced the little children that were brought to him to receive his blessing, ought to encourage parents to bring their infant offspring to Jesus, and to dedicate them to his service by the sacred rite of baptism and by prayer. Though Jesus be no longer visible on earth, as he was in the days of his flesh, yet he is present in the church, by his Spirit; and is peculiarly pleased with such an offering. He has graciously promised to bless the parent, and to bless the children; and surely the tender and affectionate regard which Christ displayed toward the young, should induce them to remember their Creator in the days of their youth; and consecrate themselves to his service. 'I love them,' saith he, 'that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me.' 3. Respects self-deception and the love of riches. The history of this young man who came to Jesus, wishing to know what he must do to inherit eternal life, teaches us the awful danger of self-deception. A person may be free from the grosser vices: from dishonesty, drunkenness, adultery, and murder; and yet be far from the kingdom of God. The divine law is holy and spiritual, and reaches to the thoughts and desires as well as to the outward conduct; it takes cognizance of duties neglected, as well as sins committed. A man must be able to keep it perfectly in every point, before he can expect to be justified by it. How absolutely necessary, therefore, is faith in the righteousness of the Redeemer! How ensnaring the love of riches! how ruinous to our immortal souls! yet how eagerly are they courted and sought after by persons of all ranks, as if they constituted the one thing needful to human felicity, both here and hereafter. O let us never forget that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth; that a man may possess a large portion of this world's goods, and not be happy; and on the other hand, a man may be poor in outward estate and enjoy a peace of mind and an inward satisfaction, to which the men of the world are altogether strangers. Should riches increase, let us not set our hearts upon them; let us use the world as not abusing it: and lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven, which can never be destroyed; and from which death cannot separate us.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, how excellent is thy name in all the earth; thou art God thyself alone, and besides thee there is none else. We adore thee as the King eternal, immortal, and invisible; the only wise, living, and true God. Thou art from everlasting to everlasting, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Thou didst create all things, and thou dost continually uphold them in being. To thee we are indebted for our existence, and for the exalted rank we occupy in the scale of creation. We thank thee for having conferred upon us more wisdom than the fowls of heaven, and more understanding than the beasts of the field—for having made us intelligent beings; and rendered us capable of knowing, loving, and serving thee: and deriving pleasure from the contemplation of thy works, with which we are surrounded. We thank thee for the comforts which, as a family, we enjoy, and for all the blessings of civilized and social life. In an especial manner, we thank thee for having cast our lot in a land of gospel light and liberty; where we have been made acquainted with thy character, not only as the God of providence, but of grace: as in Jesus Christ reconciling a guilty world unto thyself, not imputing to men their trespasses. We rejoice to read in thy most blessed word, that thou hast no pleasure in the death of sinners; that with thee there is forgiveness, that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption, that thou mayest be sought after. We desire, O God, to receive Jesus Christ in all his offices, as our Prophet, our Priest, and our King; and to trust in him alone for salvation. While we look to his atoning sacrifice as the ground of a sinner's justification, we desire to look to his holy life as the bright pattern for our obedience. O grant us the gift of the Holy Ghost, to enable us to imitate his pure and spotless example. May the same mind be in us which was in him. May we ever strive to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thee our God. Enable us to discharge aright all the relative duties of life; and thus manifest that we are indeed the disciples of Jesus. May we set our affections on things above, and not on things on the earth; using this world as not abusing it.

O God, we thank thee for the mercies of the past day: for preserving us in our outgoings and incomings; and supplying all our returning wants. Watch over us during the night, and defend us from all ill; pardon our sins, and accept of us in Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE II.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. Put away the strange gods. Rachel had brought along with her the teraphim which her father worshipped, and it was to be feared made some superstitious use of them. Jacob might suspect, that among the men servants and maid servants he brought with him out of Mesopotamia, there were some idols to which they paid homage; therefore, he asserts his authority, and insists that they should all be given up for destruction, previous to their going up to Bethel, to worship the Lord God of his fathers. Ver. 4. The ear-rings which were in their ears. These rings were not worn for mere ornaments as among ourselves, but for superstitious purposes: being probably considered as charms, having engraven on them the image of some heathen deity, or stamped with certain magical characters; which they regarded as efficacious in preserving those who wore them, from disease and danger.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Jehovah is the only proper object of religious adoration. The idols which the heathen worship, are no gods: they are utterly incapable of protecting their blinded votaries; but he is the true God, the living God, and the everlasting King; he gives us life, and breath, and all things; therefore, we ought to worship him; but, let us bear in mind, that he is a holy and a jealous God—of purer eyes than to behold iniquity. So that in order to worship him acceptably, we must worship him reverently and with godly fear, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed as with pure water. 'God is a spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth.' And how comforting the thought to the true Christian, that the God whom we adore is every where present, and that his throne of grace is at all times, and in all places, accessible; that wherever the devout worshipper is, there he is present to accept and to bless: whether his devotions ascend from the humble cottage, or the splendid palace. Yet while he delights in the gates of Zion, he is also to be found in the dwellings of Jacob: and he manifests himself to his people as a God of mercy and compassion. His presence gladdens their souls, and causes them to say with the patriarch at Bethel, 'this is none other than the house of God, and the very gate of heaven.'

The Christian, so long as he sojourns on earth, must lay his account to meet with troubles and trials of various kinds: for this is not his rest, it is the scene of his conflict, the field on which he is called to fight the good fight of faith, and endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Here his enemies are both numerous and powerful; but with God on his side, he has no cause to be afraid. For greater is he that is for him, than all they who can be against him. Among the many causes of his grief, the loss of near and dear relatives is not the least. When he is called to witness the death of a beloved wife, who had been the solace and comfort of his heart for many years, and to follow to the grave the mortal remains of a venerable parent, his soul is often wrung with pain, and he weeps bitterly; but the presence of God, in the season of distress, administers relief, and calms the troubled mind. How cheering to him the hope which the gospel inspires; that they who die in the Lord, are immediately released from all the miseries and pains of this sinful world, and are admitted to the enjoyment of the pleasures which are at God's right hand. O let us be followers of those who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises; so that we may meet with them in that better world, where there is no separation:

'Where death-divided friends
Shall meet to part no more.'

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations. Thou art the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Thou didst reveal thyself unto them, as full of mercy and compassion; thou didst protect them in the season of danger, and support them in the hour of sore temptation. Thou hast never, at any period of the world, left thyself without a witness. Our fathers trusted in thee, and were not put to shame, they found thee a present help in the time of need; and that all thy gracious promises were fulfilled in their behalf. We rejoice to believe that thou art an unchangeable God, and that thine arm is not shortened that it cannot save; neither thine ear heavy that it cannot hear. We draw near unto thee this morning, believing that thou art every where present, and the bountiful rewarder of all those who diligently seek thee. We desire to seek thee, O God, with our whole hearts; and to place ourselves under thy special guidance and protection. Whom have we in heaven, O Lord, but thee? and there is none on all the earth that our souls desire besides thee. Thou alone canst impart to us those blessings of mercy and grace, which we need; thou alone canst pardon our multiplied transgressions, and blot out our sins; thou alone canst sanctify our corrupted natures, and make us holy. Have mercy upon us miserable sinners, and for the sake of him who died for guilty men, extend unto us thy pardoning mercy, and thy sanctifying grace. Adopt us into the number of thy spiritual family, and make us partakers of the blessed privileges of thy children. Create in each of us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us; lift upon us the light of thy reconciled countenance, and uphold us by the right hand of thy righteousness.

O God, thou knowest our frame, thou rememberest that we are dust; teach us so to number our days, as to apply our hearts to heavenly wisdom. Help us daily to bear in mind that this is not our resting place; that our breath is in our nostrils, and that soon the place which now knows us, shall know us no more for ever. May we spend every day as if it were to be our last, in making preparation for our latter end; so that when we come to die, death may to us be great gain. We bless thee, O Lord, for the mercies of the past night. We lay down on our beds, we slept in safety, and awoke in peace, and refreshed, because thou hast sustained us. Keep us in thy fear all the day long. Bless all the members of this family, as we respectively stand in need. Bless our native land. Prosper the interests of pure and undivided religion in the midst of us. O have pity upon the sick and afflicted, and prepare the dying for their great change. All we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XI.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The grand design of the striking parable of the labourers in the vineyard, is to teach us that God is debtor to no man, but can do what he will with his own;—can distribute the blessings of his providence and grace to whom, and in what measure he sees meet; and it is the greatest presumption in us to say unto him, 'what doest thou,' or to murmur and complain at his providence, because it does not agree exactly with our ideas of right and wrong. He did no injury to the Jews, by admitting the Gentiles to an equal participation of the same religious privileges. Ver. 2. The Roman penny amounted to $7\frac{1}{2}$ d. of our money, and this seems to have been the price of a day's labour among the Jews, at the time here referred to. Ver. 9. The civil day of the Jews was divided into twelve hours, which they computed from six in the morning to six in the evening; the first hour corresponding to seven o'clock with us; the third to nine; the sixth to twelve; and the eleventh to five afternoon. Ver. 12. The Jews were ready to look on themselves with great complacency, as a people who had for many ages adhered to the worship of the true God; and, at certain periods, had suffered severe persecutions on account of it. Hence they may be said to have borne the burden and heat of the day.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

God, in the sovereignty of his wisdom and grace, has made known to us, in this distant isle of the sea, and in these latter days, the glad tidings of salvation. To us the call has been given to repent and believe the gospel; to go and work in his vineyard: let us yield obedience thereto, and be diligent in doing the work of him who called us, striving to promote his glory in our respective stations, and the best interests of our brethren around us. Now is the accepted time. Let us no longer delay the season of repentance; no longer stand idle in the market place: the day is far spent; the night is at hand when no man can work. If we have delayed till the eleventh hour, and are apt to imagine that our day of grace is past, let us remember that, even at that late period, the great householder invited some to go and work in his vineyard, and gave them the same wages as those who wrought the whole day, thus intimating that none need despair of mercy. So long as there is life there is hope to the very chief of sinners, and whoso believeth in Christ shall not perish but have eternal life. But let none imagine that, though the hoary headed sinner, who is brought to the knowledge of the truth at the last hour, and is plucked as a brand out of the fire, shall be saved from eternal misery, he shall have the same glorious reward as the man who has spent a long life in the service of God, and been instrumental in doing much good: no, this is contrary to the dictates of reason, and the express declaration of scripture, which saith, that the Judge, at the great day of retribution, will render to every man according to his works. Let us then be incited to be active and diligent in our Master's cause; to do all the good in our power; to be faithful in the performance of every duty; patient in the endurance of every trial; instant in season and out of season, in spreading abroad the knowledge of the Redeemer's name, and converting sinners from the evil of their ways. So that, when the evening of life shall arrive, and we are called to give an account of our stewardship, we may hear from the lips of our sovereign Master, those joyful words, 'Well done, good and faithful servants, enter ye into the joy of your Lord. Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the sovereign ruler of the universe. Thou didst create all things by the word of thy power, and thou dost continually uphold them in being. Thou rulest in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of this lower world, and none can stay thy hand from working, nor say unto thee, What doest thou. We bless thy name for the assurance thou hast given us in thy most holy word, that, though thou inhabitest eternity, and receivest the homage and worship of angels and arch-angels, thou condescendest to dwell with men on the earth, and thou lendest a kind and compassionate ear to the supplications of thy human family. We rejoice to contemplate thee, O God, as seated on a throne of mercy, and holding out the sceptre of peace to the returning sinner, saying, As I live I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that they should return unto me and live. Thy name and memorial to all generations is the Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, long-suffering and slow to anger, and plenteous in redemption, and therefore we have boldness and confidence to come into thy presence, and take thy holy name into our polluted lips. We have sinned against thee, O God, and have done very wickedly. Our own hearts condemn us for many violations of thy law, but we rejoice to think that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, and that its cleansing efficacy is freely offered to the very chief of sinners. O grant that we may have redemption through his blood, and the forgiveness of all our sins. We thank thee, O Lord, for our distinguished religious privileges. Thou hast made known to us the unsearchable riches of thy grace, and called us out of darkness into the marvellous light of the gospel. O give us grace to walk worthy of our high and holy calling; that it may never be to our condemnation that we are so highly favoured. Enable us to bear in mind that to whom much is given, of them much shall be required; and that it shall be more tolerable for those in the day of judgment who have never heard of the name of Christ, than it shall be for us, if we neglect this great salvation. May we be active in doing our Master's work; diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; laying up a good foundation against the time to come. We thank thee, O Lord, for the many tokens of thy favour and friendship, vouchsafed to us during the week that is just about to close. During its progress many equally deserving have been cut down as cumberers of the ground. We are still spared, the living monuments of thy mercy. May we live devoted to thy praise and glory. O prepare us for the solemn services of an approaching sabbath. May our minds be freed from all distracting cares, and be ready to receive the engrafted seed of the word, that we may grow thereby. O thou, who never slumberest nor sleepest, watch over us during the unconscious hours of rest. Let no evil befall us, let no plague come nigh our dwelling. Sleeping or waking, living or dying, may we be thine. And to thee, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, one God, be ascribed all glory and praise, world without end. Amen.

FIFTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XVIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XVIII.

REMARKS.

This psalm is at once a record of deliverances and a thanksgiving on account of them. We have only to think of David fleeing before Saul, or when a fugitive from his capital, during the unnatural rebellion of Absalom, in order to form an idea of the circumstances in which it might have been written.

If applied to David's Son and Lord, who was also the theme of David's song, we can be at no loss, in the variety of his humiliations and sufferings, to discover a parallel to the lively pictures of calamity and distress which the psalm presents to our mind. Never sorrow was like unto his sorrow, in the day when his Father's hand was laid upon him, when 'floods of ungodly men compassed him about;' when 'the snares of death prevented him,' and anguish, from a deep invisible source, drew from him a bloody sweat, and mysterious cries and tears. But when his soul was in its deepest exercise; when his horizon was wrapt in darkness; and when the frown on his Father's countenance 'dried up his strength like a potsherd, and melted his heart within him like wax;' even then the holy sufferer rested on the knowledge of his Father's plans, rejoiced in the assurance of his Father's unfailing love, and dwelt with ineffable delight on the prospect of the sons and daughters who were to form his spiritual seed, and whose glory was to reward the travail of his soul. Nor was he left alone when the hour and power of darkness were at their height. Voices from the excellent glory proclaimed him the beloved Son of the Father on some of those occasions, when, to judge from appearances, he seemed most helpless and deserted. An angel descended to strengthen him when he was in an agony. And even the cross, where he was numbered with transgressors, and lifted up between heaven and earth, as if unworthy of a place in either, formed the sublime eminence where, in the view of a wondering universe, he spoiled principalities and powers, and whence his eye contemplated the fruits of a victory which shall be commemorated by the endless thanksgivings of the whole family of the redeemed out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. 'Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people; thou hast made me the head of the heathen. It is God that avengeth me, and subdueth the people under me. Great deliverance giveth he to his King.'

If we regard the psalm in its application to ourselves, how often must the Christian have occasion to acknowledge that 'his extremity' has proved to be 'God's opportunity;' that, when in his distress he called upon the Lord, and cried unto his God, the Lord heard his voice out of his temple, and the cry came before him into his ear! However barren of remarkable incidents or striking alternations of feelings a Christian's experience may have been, his memory must retain many traces of those silent but decisive interpositions which speak a language to the heart not to be misunderstood; which delightfully remind him of covenant love and evangelical promises; which rebuke his want of faith, and stimulate his sluggish gratitude; and which form, in all time coming, a record of divine faithfulness, within the sphere of his own recollection, to which he has only to revert, in order to become superior to distrust and fear when thrown into similar situations of danger or suffering. Looking back to these personal memorials of divine watchfulness and love, he will often find the psalmist's language rising to his lips, 'I will love thee, O Lord, my strength;' and will delight in the copious enumeration of attributes and names by which the psalmist celebrates his sense of the gracious relations in which God has appeared in his behalf, as the fittest expression of his own gratitude and thanksgiving. From the history of the past he will draw encouragement for the future, and will feel assured that he has only to call upon the Lord, whom he has found so worthy to be praised, in order to be saved from his enemies. In this spirit he will peruse, and meditate upon, this psalm, borrowing its images as descriptive of his own experience; adopting its ascriptions as the terms of his own thanksgivings; warming his own cold gratitude by the inspired ardour of its praises and acknowledgments; and combining, in his application of its elevated strains to himself, that higher reference which it bears to him who is the spiritual David, the Anointed of God, the King of Zion, through whom, and for whose sake, all that he has to bless God for, of temporal or spiritual good, has been graciously vouchsafed.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations; a very present help in every time of trouble. We adore and bless thee as our rock, and our fortress, and our deliverer; our God, and our strength, in whom we will trust. We thank thee for all thy past goodness, and for the abundant encouragement which thy frequent interpositions in our behalf afford us to confide in thy future care and mercy. Thou hast been our stay in the day of our calamity. How often hast thou enlightened our darkness; shielded us from danger; girded us with strength to combat with temptation; and made the way of safety and of duty plain before us? O Lord, thy way is perfect: thy word is tried: thou art a buckler to all them that trust in thee. Impressed with a sense of thy goodness, we would now humbly and gratefully devote our lives to thy service. Who is God, save the Lord? or a rock, save our God? Other lords, in time past, may have claimed and received the homage of our hearts; but henceforward we will love thee, O Lord, our strength: we will be called by thy name, O our God, who alone art worthy to be praised. Not only art thou entitled to our affection and obedience, as our Creator and benefactor, thou hast redeemed us from the snares of death and the sorrows of hell, and not spared thine own Son, but delivered him up that he might save us from our enemies, and from the hand of them that hate us. Therefore will we give thanks unto thee, O Lord, continually, and sing praises unto thy name. Strengthen our feeble resolutions, we beseech thee. Confirm our imperfect and wavering fidelity. Teach our hands to war and our fingers to fight; and let not our goodness be as the morning cloud, or as the early dew, which passeth away. May this sacred day, and the services in which we are to engage, be sanctified for this end to our souls. May the day recall to our thoughts the dying love, the endless life, and the universal dominion of Him who is the Lord of the sabbath; who liveth and was dead, and is alive for evermore, and who hath promised to be with his people always in their worshipping assemblies, even unto the end of the world. May thy house and service be a foretaste of heaven; of that temple which the Lord God doth lighten, and of which the Lamb is the perpetual light; and of that pure and blissful service which unites the hearts and the harps of saints and angels in harmonious thanksgivings before the throne of God and of the Lamb, for ever and ever. Be with all thy worshipping people. Especially bless, and strengthen, and encourage thy ministering servants. Deal bountifully with the afflicted who are detained from thine ordinances. And enlarge, this day, we farther beseech thee, the empire of thy Son, by giving him everywhere the hearts of his enemies, and by making him, as thou hast promised, the head of the heathen. Hear us, O Lord, we entreat thee, and let the grace of thy Holy Spirit sanctify, and the abundance of thy mercy pardon us, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our only Lord and Saviour, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be glory everlasting. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XIX.

REMARKS.

The works of the Lord are great; sought out of all them that have pleasure therein. Varied and magnificent as are the objects of nature, it is as the works of the Lord that they possess their chief interest in the eyes of the Christian. In them he beholds the productions of his Father's hand, and reads, as in a mirror, the perfections of that character, which he has learned to love with the warm affection of a son. From a walk, or from a journey, he returns with a mind affected, not by the simple features of the scenes through which he has passed, but by the suggestive power of nature to bring God before his thoughts, and to exalt the charms of every landscape, by identifying it with the unseen agency that gave it being, and made it the theatre of the divine glory.

But it is not on the works of God that the Christian chiefly delights to dwell. He has another page in which his eye can trace, in brighter lines, the features of that countenance which has captivated his affections. 'The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work;' but how small a portion of God would he have known, had his mind been confined to these dumb and lifeless memorials of their Maker's power! It is in the 'law,' or the revealed word of God, that he finds a 'perfect' transcript of the divine image; a 'sure testimony' to the divine character and purposes; a 'right' standard by which to form his conceptions of the divine mind and will; a 'pure' exhibition of the uncreated purity and unblemished perfection of the divine nature; a 'cleansing,' transforming fountain of living water from the throne of the divine compassion, in which his soul has but to wash in order to be clean; a 'true and righteous' reply to all the anxious inquiries which conscious guilt, and the fear of future judgment, are continually pressing upon his heavy laden and harassed conscience. The works of God are great, but the word of God is familiar and kind. In his works, God is seen obscurely, as through a cloud, and partially, as from a distance; in his word, he is beheld near, and without any darkness at all. In the one, it is his power, his wisdom, his inaccessible majesty, that strike upon our senses, in the awful forms of 'fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind fulfilling his pleasure;' in the other it is his mercy, his boundless compassion as a Father who pitieth his children, and is not willing that any of them should perish, but that they should have everlasting life, that penetrates the heart of the reader of the gospel. Nature tells us of God; but the message is accompanied by no balm to the wounded conscience, no intimation of pardon, no promise of sanctification, no hint of goodness that can reconcile the claims of offended justice with the forgiveness of sin, and the restored happiness and purity of the sinner. All this is reserved for the gospel, the revealed word or law of God. And no wonder the psalmist, turning from the stern and imperfect teaching of 'the heavens which declare the glory of God, and the firmament which sheweth his handy-work,' should think with delight upon the 'perfect law of the Lord,' and multiply the forms of his love and thankfulness for it, with an untiring copiousness and variety of phrase and illustration, which show how entirely the subject had possessed itself of his heart.

Entering into his spirit, with what gratitude should we prize, with what seriousness study, with what cordiality receive, with what simplicity and decision of purpose practise and apply, the lessons of the divine word. Aware of their design to make men wise unto salvation, and no less aware of the obstacles to this design, arising out of the state of our understandings and hearts, how humbly shall we join him in the confession, 'who can understand his errors?' and how earnestly adopt his prayer, 'cleanse thou me from secret faults; keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins.' It is only by his light that we can be brought to know ourselves. It is only through his grace that sin, which naturally reigns in our hearts, can be effectually overthrown, and cease to have dominion over us. It is only when, in addition to the instruction derived from the works, and ways, and word of God, we enjoy the secret, internal, and all-powerful teaching of the divine Spirit, according to the promise of the Saviour, that we shall be 'upright and innocent from the great transgression.' Impressed with these solemn convictions, how gladly shall we plead the promise of the Saviour to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, and escape from the distressing apprehension lest our suit should be unheard, by presenting 'the words of our mouths, and the meditation of our hearts' through the infinitely acceptable mediation of him whom we have learned at once to adore as 'Lord,' and to love and trust as 'our strength and our Redeemer.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we come before thee this evening, deeply impressed with a sense of thy presence, and with the proofs which every where surround us of thy being and perfections. Thou hast never left thyself without a witness. In our own circumstances, in our daily experience, in the events of providence, in the blessings of our lot, and in the afflictions and sorrows that try our patience and our faith, we behold the working of thy hand, and adore the indications of thy sovereign will and paternal care. Thou art never far from any of us. Thou art present not only in the world without and around us, but in our hearts and consciences. In a still small voice thou proclaimest to every one of us, that verily there is a God that judgeth; that we are the clay and thou the potter; and that we are all the work of thy hands, and the subjects of thy government. But blessed be God, we are not left to find our way to the knowledge of thy character, through the dark intimations which thy works and ways afford. Thou hast addressed us in thy word; thou hast spoken to us by thy Son. Blessed be God for the glorious light of the gospel of Jesus Christ, by whom thy character and purposes have been clearly revealed, and in whom thou art beheld, reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. This thy law, O Lord, is perfect, converting the soul: this thy testimony is sure, making wise the simple. Enable us, we entreat thee, to set our seal to every truth which thou hast been thus graciously pleased to make known to us; acknowledging it to be very right; loving it because it is pure; delighting in it because it is clean; and resting in it with confidence, because it is true and righteous altogether. May its effects correspond with its regenerating and sanctifying design. May it enlighten our darkness, cure our folly, correct our prejudices, and supply an antidote to all our errors. May it prove a source of purity to our affections, and of peace and healing to our consciences and hearts. May it furnish us with comfort when we are in trouble, direction when we are perplexed, support when we are ready to stumble; and, when we are called to die, may it sustain us with a calm and tranquil hope. O may we prize it more than gold, yea, than much fine gold, and experience its consolations to be sweeter than honey, and the honey comb. And for the attainment of these ends, be pleased to accompany the reading and hearing of thy word with the effectual teaching of thy holy Spirit. May its sacred lessons, to which we have this day listened, be imprinted upon our memories, and written by the finger of God upon the fleshly tables of our hearts. May it be in us as a well of water, springing up unto everlasting life; supplying us with principles and motives, rules and admonitions, consolations and encouragements, suited to our respective characters and dispositions, and to the various temptations, relations, and circumstances in which any of us may be placed. May it teach us the knowledge of ourselves and of our errors; be sanctified as the instrument of cleansing us from secret faults, and of restraining us from presumptuous sins: may we be delivered by it from every evil thought and work, and be preserved unto thy heavenly kingdom, upright and innocent from the great transgression. These, our prayers, are now before thee. Let the words of our mouths, and the meditations of our hearts,—let our supplications for ourselves, for our friends, for the church of Christ, and for our brethren of mankind, which we now present to thee through Jesus Christ, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XXXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXVII.

REMARKS.

After long wandering, and many hardships in Mesopotamia, Jacob had returned to the land of Canaan. Like Abraham and Isaac, the heirs with him of the same promise, he sojourned in that land, bound to it by a stronger tie than the instinct that unites the heart of man to the soil of his birth, and the scenes of his childhood. 'By faith,' we are elsewhere told, he pitched his tabernacle in the land where his father was a stranger, 'not receiving the promises, but only seeing them afar off; but persuaded of them, and having embraced them, he confessed himself a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth.'

God had blessed him with a numerous offspring; and in them the eye of the patriarch might trace the dawning accomplishment of the great promise that had sustained the faith and hope of his fathers.

Clouds, however, were not wanting in his sky. Discord, envy, jealousy, found their way into his dwelling, and, with other passions, which his example and authority were insufficient to repress, soon began to prey upon the peace of his family. Nor was the venerable patriarch himself wholly free from blame, in the progress of these disorders. To love one member of a family more than the rest, may be nothing more than an acknowledgment due to superior merit, a sentiment not less natural and proper in a parent than in any one else. But for groundless partiality, or even for an injudicious display of a justifiable preference, there can be no defence; and, in either case, the consequences are likely to be baneful to all parties. The love of Jacob for Joseph appears, from the narrative, to have been the weakness of age; and it was displayed in a way characteristic of a fond and doting sentiment. The result was unfavourable to Joseph; much more so to his envying brethren; and the unhappy parent, in his turn, was speedily brought to taste the poison, which his misjudging fondness had infused into the intercourse of the members of his family. In the case of Joseph, we behold a youth whose early piety and amiable temper might have justly insured him a place in the affections of his brethren, no less than in those of his father, an object of hatred and animosity to the former, and of a grave rebuke from the indulgent lips of the latter. In the conduct of his brethren we behold the fatal progress of sin, seizing occasion, on the slightest grounds, to substantiate itself into a feeling, cherishing that feeling into a deadly purpose, and embracing the first favourable opportunity to wreak its madness, by plunging into a crime at which nature, reason, humanity and conscience revolt and shudder. The behaviour of Reuben is some relief to the dark shadows of the picture, which deepens in gloom as we turn to the aged heart-stricken patriarch, bowed down by grief at the sight of his child's bloody coat of many colours, and refusing to be comforted, saying, 'I will go down into the grave unto my son, mourning.'

From a scene so painful, let us turn for a moment to the restraining hand that was all the while laid, unseen, upon the principal actors; and that was so soon to bring good out of evil, and to convert the gratification of malignant passions into the means of preserving life, and of working out a great deliverance, essential to the truth of God, and to the prolongation of the line of the heirs of the promise. In this light, the transactions we have briefly reviewed were regarded by the generous mind of Joseph at a subsequent period. The consideration that it is not man but God who is the master of events, is the great principle of scripture, and the sheet anchor of the believer's confidence in dark and troublous times. Sin does not cease to be sin, because God restrains and overrules it; affliction does not become 'joyous' instead of 'grievous,' because, through the kindness of providence, it 'worketh the peaceable fruits of righteousness in them that are exercised thereby;' but to know and be persuaded that both are controlled and held in check by Him who is 'wise in heart and mighty in power,' and hath 'all things put under him, that he may give eternal life to as many as obey him,' is surely enough to stay our fears of the one, and to act as a sovereign balm in allaying the smart of the other.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast led us and fed us all our life hitherto. Thou hast been with us in our going out and in our coming in, and all thy ways towards us have been mercy and truth. Thou art our God, and we will praise thee: thou hast been our fathers' God, and we will exalt thee. In the midst of thy benefits we would not be unmindful of the hand that bestows them; nor forget, in the abundance of temporal blessings, that we are but pilgrims and strangers upon the earth. By faith we would realize better enjoyments than any which flow in the channels of this world; and raising our hearts to thyself as our portion, and to heaven as our rest and our home, we would sojourn here as in a strange country, looking for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. In every relation of life, enable us to bear upon our minds the duty which we owe to thee and to one another. May we be concerned to promote thy glory, and to advance the eternal interests of our fellow-men, by our endeavours and example. May we be preserved from the weaknesses, as well as from the corruptions into which good men have at any time been betrayed. May our whole intercourse with society be conducted on the principles of the gospel of Christ, and be a copy of the meekness and wisdom, the purity and love, the firmness and the gentleness, of Him who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who was in the world but not of it; who was alive to all our affections, but divinely superior to all their infirmities and imperfections. May all in whom we are interested, share with us in the bounty of thy providence, and in the grace of thy Spirit. Preserve them from the evil that is in their own hearts and in the world. Let not the young be led astray by the error of the wicked. Let them not promise themselves impunity in the ways of sin. Let them not yield to the first motions of corruption, or look with indulgence on the early risings of passion. O let them bear in mind the precipice over which so many have been dragged, who have given way to the devices and desires of their own evil hearts; and let them tremble, lest, surrendering themselves to the indulgence of an ungoverned will, they should share the misery of those who cannot cease from sin, and who shall utterly perish in their own corruption. Sanctify the heart of man, O Lord, as well as restrain and overrule the evil that is in it. Diffuse through society the Spirit of thy Son. May love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, and all the fruits of the Spirit spring up in the intercourse of man with man, instead of those works of the flesh, which prey upon the heart of individuals, waste the peace of families, and convert the world into a scene of distrust and discord, violence and division. May all events be directed and overruled with a view to the universal extension of the Redeemer's reign of righteousness and peace. And may the hearts of thy people, firmly settled in the belief of thy word, wait patiently, while they strive earnestly, for the accomplishment of thy promise, that the wilderness and the solitary place shall yet be glad, and that the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. All that we ask is for the sake of Jesus Christ, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, be honour and glory, both now and for ever. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXI. 1—22.

REMARKS.

On ordinary occasions, when our Lord visited Jerusalem, he entered the city without courting or attracting observation. At the time to which the passage which we have now read refers, his conduct was different. With the solemnity of one whose least action was significant, and who, impressed himself, was anxious to impress others with the importance of his situation and the part he was called to act, he prepared to give to his last visit to Jerusalem something of the air of a triumphal procession, and laid his commands upon his disciples, and did what was necessary himself, with a view to this novel ceremonial. All this was done both to recall to the minds of spectators the features of the promised Messiah, as described in the writings of the prophets, and to shadow forth the kingly office which it was his prerogative to exercise even in his estate of humiliation, and the ensigns of which he would soon more fully and gloriously display, when on his resurrection from the dead, the Lord should say unto him, 'sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.'

In the midst of the procession he moved forward to Jerusalem. Who that beheld him, encompassed by applauding multitudes, and the forms of triumph, could have imagined that the reverse of the picture was full in his view; that his eye looked beyond the eager homage of the crowd, and rested on Mount Calvary and its bloody cross? Yet so it was. And it is this circumstance that lends its deepest interest to the scene, and affords an insight into the Saviour's heart, which may well touch all the springs of sympathy and affection, and adoring and wondering gratitude, in our bosoms. From love to us, he not only was willing to submit to shame and suffering, but rejoiced to meet them. What nature most shrinks from, he advanced to encounter; and, as if the calm posture of expecting patience might seem to betoken extorted consent or reluctant acquiescence, he clothes the decision of his purpose in the garb of triumph, and hastens to die with the look and mien of a conqueror. 'For the joy set before him, he endured the cross, despising the shame.' 'Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me: I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart.'

In the midst of the triumphal procession our Lord was still the same that he appeared in the humble abodes of poverty, or in the midst of a crowd of suppliants for the exercise of his compassion. Zion beheld its King approach, not a blood-stained conqueror, not a gloomy tyrant, not a proud and stately monarch, who looked as if all around were made for him, and he had neither mind nor heart for any: 'Behold, thy King cometh, meek, and having salvation.' The path he travelled, the triumph he assumed, were all for sinners; and the aspect he wore bespoke the mild benignant character of his mission. Change of circumstances wrought no change in his heart. 'We beheld his glory,' said one of the companions of his life, who had treasured up the remembrance of all his looks, in all that he had done and taught, 'we beheld his glory; the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.' Can we forget, now that he has ascended to a higher seat, and all the shadows that rested on his glory, while he was on earth, have for ever fled away, that the image by which he is presented to our faith is, 'the Lamb in the midst of the throne.' In the heavens which retain him, he wears the human form, stands the fleshly representative of the fallen family of man, and presents the prayers of his struggling brethren on earth, perfumed with 'much incense,' mingled by hands on which the nails of the cross have left their perpetual print. 'For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. For in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.'

When our Lord entered Jerusalem, he proceeded to the temple, and vindicated the honour of his Father's house, by expelling from it them that bought and sold within its precincts. He had signalized the commencement of his ministry by a similar act; and, in both cases, he fulfilled the language of prophecy, and gave evidence to the spectators of his righteous zeal, of the inseparable connection between the purest love for man, and the deepest sense of what is due to the honour of God. Let not the lesson be lost on us. The human heart is the divine temple. The Saviour hath approached it, in the name of the Lord, to reclaim it from satan; to cleanse it from its impurities; to beautify it with his salvation; to rekindle the long quenched fire of heaven on its altars; and to awaken in its sullen recesses the gladdening melody of prayer and praise. 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock,' is his language. Let us not trifle with the heavenly visitant. Let us not presume on his long-suffering as a pretext for indifference and delay. Let us throw open the door, and invite him to enter as 'the Lord of the temple'; and having given him admission, let us further remember that 'the temple of God is holy, which temple we are, and that if any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy.' It is of Jesus, the compassionate Saviour, whom we have beheld approaching Jerusalem, 'meek and lowly, and having salvation,' of whom it is written, 'the zeal of thy house hath eaten me up.' 'Behold, the Lord shall come suddenly to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: Behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?'

PRAYER.

O Lord, who hast so loved the world as to send thine only begotten Son, not to condemn, but to save it, be pleased to open our ears to the joyful sound which proclaims his mission, and to open our hearts, that we may admit him to that place in our affections, which is due to him that cometh in the name of the Lord to save us. May we be profoundly affected with the great love wherewith he hath loved us; and while he stands at the door and knocks, may our hearts answer to his call, and may we hasten to lift up the gates, and to open the doors, that the king of glory may come in. Blessed God, who hast not been repelled by our guilt and the manifold disorders which prevail in our souls—the sanctuary on which thou didst impress the image of thy glory—show thyself strong, we beseech thee, for our deliverance from the corruptions which have established themselves in our hearts, and set up the throne of thy Son in the living temple which he claims as his own. Sprinkle our consciences with his most precious blood, that the deep stains of our transgressions, against thy will and commandment, may be blotted out. Purify our affections by the sanctifying influences of thy Holy Spirit, that the will to transgress, the desire to sin, may no longer prevail over us. Touch the springs of godly sorrow, of grateful recollection, of willing, cheerful, cordial obedience, that our soul, body, and spirit may be holiness unto the Lord, an habitation of God by the Spirit. As lively stones may we be built upon the foundation, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious; and, being built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, may we offer up continually spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. And as thou hast permitted us to pray, not only for ourselves, but also for others, be pleased, we beseech thee, to open the hearts of our brethren of mankind to the love, and faith, and obedience of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Thy Son hath come into the world; let it not always be true that the world knoweth him not: he hath come unto his own; let not his own for ever persist in receiving him not. Multiply the number of those who, in meekness, humility, and love, receive him, and to whom he gives power to become the sons of God. May our friends and kindred, our acquaintance and neighbours, joyfully hearken to his voice. May thine ancient people behold in him the promised representative of their father David. And may the time be hastened, when men everywhere shall be blessed in him, and all nations shall call him blessed. Now, blessed be the Lord our God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things: and blessed be his glorious name for ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XXXIX.

REMARKS.

We here behold Joseph suddenly raised, by the special interposition of the Almighty, from the condition of a youth cast away by his brethren, and sold for a slave, with no apparent hope of release, into one of trust, power, and honour. 'And the Lord was with Joseph:' What, then, though all else were against him? Greater is He that is for him. He maketh the cup of sorrow, the cup of blessing. The Lord with him, the portion of his inheritance and his cup, what though the 'archers sorely grieved him,' and a cup of bitterness had been mingled for him, God gave the youth wisdom and grace, and he found favour with God and man. 'And the Lord was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man.' God is the father of the fatherless, and the friend of the oppressed. Let 'integrity and truth preserve' the young in setting out in life and struggling with its difficulties, and as God was with Joseph, so will he be with them. Joseph, by his piety, resignation, and fidelity, combined with the fact that the Lord made all that he did to prosper, would teach this Egyptian to fear the God whom he served. Let servants and youths, brought into the house and employment of strangers, even though irreligious, be faithful to their God, and blessing will come in the end. The irreligious man will himself learn their value. And let godless persons be taught how much of their comfort, prosperity, and safety depend on those that fear God. Let not the righteous, even when humble and despised, imagine they are of no use in the earth. For one Joseph, God blessed the house of Potiphar, nay, all the land of Egypt. God here fulfils his promise to Abraham, by blessing Joseph and making him a blessing. He was enabled to resist the temptation to which his prosperity exposed him, from the wickedness of his infamous mistress, by calling to mind the presence of an all-seeing God: but yet he did not escape the sufferings brought upon him by her revengeful spirit. Such is the dark and lothesome character of guilt, that instead of admiring the integrity and uprightness that have resisted its wiles, it is filled with hatred and revenge, and under the intolerable sense of self-degradation, would destroy the innocence that is a standing rebuke of its own guilt. By her falsehood and revenge, Joseph is cast into prison. What profit is there, some may say, in being righteous, seeing that wickedness prospers and piety is oppressed? Wait patiently and see the end of the Lord. Even though the grave should close in sorrow over the righteous, yet a day shall come when God will 'bring forth his judgment as the light, and his righteousness as the noon-day.' So was it with Joseph. The fear of God and fidelity to his master brought him to the dungeon for a time, but the Lord made it the way to honour, to the rule of a great kingdom, and the preservation of Israel. Learn from this, submission to the will of God, and patience in the way of duty. 'Consider him,' of whom Joseph was a type, 'who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds.'

God did not forsake his young servant. There would be that in his character and bearing which would declare his innocence, and the heart of the stern keeper of the prison was turned to him. All this, however, was the doing of the Lord—'because the Lord was with him, and that which he did the Lord made it to prosper.' Learn hence to acknowledge God. Rather choose a prison and death, than the pleasures of sin for a season, and the issue will be favour, even life for evermore.

PRAYER.

O God, who reignest over all, and whose eyes are over the righteous, and his ears open unto their cry, we now draw near unto thee, as the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations, their refuge and their rock, whose name is a high tower, into which the righteous runneth and is safe. We delight to contemplate thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; as his God and our God, his Father and our Father. What are we or our father's house, that it should be so with us? Behold, O God, we are vile: what shall we answer thee, O thou preserver of men? We are utterly unworthy of all the truth and all the mercy thou hast shown unto thy servants. But, Lord, it is not our worth that is the measure of thy grace, and therefore, O God, our hearts are glad. Glory be to God in the highest that thy love is everlasting; that we have been found of thee when we sought thee not. Do thou, who didst promise to be with Jacob in all places whither he went, and to keep him and bring him again in peace, who leddest Joseph like a flock, by the hand of Moses and Aaron, be our God and our guide even unto death. Grant unto us, we beseech thee, for the sake of our Lord Jesus Christ, an interest in all the blessings of the everlasting covenant, which is well ordered in all things and sure. Let thine Almighty Spirit dwell in us, and lead us in the way of truth and holiness, even in the way everlasting, and bring us at last to thy tabernacles. O our heavenly Father, do thou, who didst preserve thy young servant from violent death and the snare of the wicked one, who didst deliver him from anguish and oppression, when his feet were hurt with fetters, and he was bound in affliction and iron, keep our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. Keep us by thy mighty power, through faith, unto salvation. Let thy presence ever go with us. Help us to be ever with thee, to act and to endure as seeing thee who art invisible, that in the wiles and temptations of the devil, the world, and the flesh, we may say, Shall we do this great thing and sin against God? Do thou, who art able to keep us from falling, preserve us without spot and blameless to the coming of the Lord Jesus. Help us to fear God, and to have no other fear; to be faithful in all our relations, that others, seeing our good works, may glorify thee, our Father in heaven. We thank thee for the rest of the past night. Guide us this day in the way that leadeth to the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Guard us from all evil. Let integrity and truth preserve us. Make thy word a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. We commend us and ours to thy mercy and care; our friends to thy favour, our enemies to thy forgiveness and blessing; and all men to thy gracious compassions. And all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CXVIII. 22.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXI. 23—46.

REMARKS.

Ver. 23—26. The leaders of the Jews were ever ready to question and to cavil with our Lord, and that people seem yet, in the just judgment of God, to be the victims of this wretched spirit. They asked, as their fathers had fasted, 'for strife and debate,' not for instruction, and our Saviour repeatedly took the cunning in their own craftiness, involved them in the meshes of their own net. Christ will not break the bruised reed nor quench the smoking flax; but he will not account to the proud. Why should He? In the present case, if they had answered that John's baptism was from heaven, the consequence was plain, they had no alternative but to receive him to whom John testified, saying, 'Behold the Lamb of God.' If they said 'of men,' their safety was perilled with the multitude, who held John as a prophet. They were silent. 'We cannot,' that is, 'we will not tell.' If we did, we must believe and obey. How many indulge this guilty spirit; insolently and impiously demanding authority from Christ, instead of meekly saying, 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?' O let us beware of this spirit. It was that which cast the angels that sinned out of heaven, and will land sinners at last in the confusion of hell. The prejudices of the multitude ran counter to those of their leaders, but it does not appear that they led them to Christ. Thus many fall short of eternal life. Ver. 28—32. In this parable our Lord reproves the Jews who professed to serve God, but did it not, and exposes the danger of all self-righteous formalists; teaching us not only that the most rebellious and worthless who do, in humble penitence, turn to God and serve him, are accepted before them, but that there is more hope of the very outcasts of the earth than of them. Watch, then, against this too common sin of self-righteousness and formality. Ver. 33—46. This magnificent parable, full of such solemn instruction as might make sinners tremble at their own iniquity, represents God's dealings with the Jewish church. The owner of the vineyard being God; the vineyard being his church, represented under the same beautiful figure, Psalm lxxx. 8. 'Thou broughtest a vine out of Egypt,' &c. It is an exact history of the way in which the Jews had requited God's wonderful mercy to their souls, and treated those messengers he had sent unto them at sundry times and in divers manners, and how, last of all, they crowned their awful guilt by crucifying the Son of God. How wondrous the mercy and forbearance of God! How fearful the guilt of man! Are we better than they? By nature, 'no, in no wise.' All abusers of God's mercy will be self-condemned; their character is foretold; their privileges shall be taken away, and the despisers of Christ utterly destroyed. The convictions of conscience only provoke the malignity, and aggravate the condemnation, of the wicked.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we now would bow down before thee, in the name of Christ, and humble ourselves in the dust at the thought of the impiety and rebellion of our hearts, our too frequent contempt of thy word and commandment, our self-righteousness, formality, and pride, in refusing to own the authority of him who made, preserves, and redeems us, and rejecting even the Son of God, who loved us, and gave himself for us. O most merciful God, teach us, from the lessons and examples set forth in thy blessed word, to learn there our own character and conduct, our waywardness and guilt; and while our hearts accord in condemning the perverse obstinacy and cruel enmity of thine ancient people to thy truth and to thy servants, and 'their awful guilt in crucifying the Son of God, O let us not forget that by nature we are no better than they, and that wherein we have been made to differ, we have been entirely the debtors to thy grace. Let us not be high-minded, but fear. Help us, O God, to shun their guilt, that we may not experience their fate; lest, if we reject Christ, he may reject us, and our candlestick be removed out of its place. For if God spared not the natural branches, let us take heed that he visit not us with greater condemnation. For we sin against even higher privileges and greater light. We pray, heavenly Father, that we may be led to behold, with supreme reverence and affection, 'the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world,' and to whom all the prophets gave witness. O may we come to his rising, and rejoice in his light. May we behold him as the Sun of Righteousness, and receive and rest upon him as 'Jehovah our righteousness.' Let his blood, shed by men who knew not what they did, be applied by the Holy Spirit to our souls, to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, lest, if we receive it not for pardon and sanctification, it should rest upon us to our eternal condemnation. May it purge our consciences from dead works to serve the living God. Let the same mind be in us which was also in Christ Jesus, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness. We thank thee, O God, for all the encouragement vouchsafed in thy word even to the chief of sinners, and the abundant provision made in the person, character, and work of our blessed Redeemer, for their comfort and salvation. Let us not proudly despise any, but seek their peace and salvation. We pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Let them prosper who love her. O God, have mercy upon Zion. Heal her breaches. Return, O God, and visit this vine which thine own right hand hath planted. Gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel, with the fulness of the Gentiles, that the wilderness and the solitary place may be glad for them, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose; till the thirsty land become a pool, and the dry land springs of water; and all the ends of the earth may draw water out of the wells of salvation, and sit under the shadow of him whose name is the Branch, with great delight. We unite in thanking thee for our great and numerous privileges. Help us to improve them, remembering that to whom much is given, of them also much shall be required. We thank thee for the common bounties of thy providence. Thou hast made our cup run over, and goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our lives. Accept, in the name of Christ, our thanksgivings for the mercies of the past day. Forgive, for his sake, the sins that have marked its course; purge our hearts and consciences in that blood which cleanseth from all sin. Watch over us during the night. Let thy banner over us be love. Refresh us with needful rest. Restore us to thy service if spared to see a new day. If called hence, as we may be before its dawn, receive us, O God, to thyself. We commend ourselves, our friends, and relatives into thy hands. Bless and forgive those who may have injured us. Be gracious to the sick and distressed. Bless all in authority. May they be ministers of God for good. Prosper Zion, and build up the walls of Jerusalem, and let the glory of the Lord speedily cover the earth. Hear, and accept, and answer us, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XL.

REMARKS.

The chapter now read is rich in most beautiful lessons. Let us observe a few of them. The offices of butler and baker were of no small importance and responsibility in the establishment of an eastern monarch. It is not told why these men offended the king, it not being necessary to the history of God's providence with Joseph. They might or they might not be guilty of some crime. Such parties often do commit crimes and suffer merited punishment, and tyrants often cast off and punish their servants and favourites at their own capricious humours. Their favour is proverbially uncertain. Hence the advice of inspiration, 'Trust not in princes, nor in the sons of men, in whom there is no stay.' The incidental occurrences of this case seem of no moment in themselves, and turn up, men would say, at hazard; but such events, in the providence of God, are often connected with the condition and fate of the believer and people of God, of the church, and of the world. 'The lot is cast into the lap, but the disposal thereof is of the Lord.' Let us thence learn to trace in our condition, when the issues are evolved, the beautiful, though, for a time, concealed links in the chain of God's providence. The 'captain of the guard' was probably Potiphar, who had by this time, though he might not find it prudent to confess it, discovered the innocence of Joseph, and seen enough to teach the falsehood and guilt of his wife, and he might therefore wish to do him justice, and make so excellent a character useful. 'When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.' So the pious and upright shall always find it. Their character will speak for itself, and will command respect in the sphere in which they move, how humble soever they may be.

The casting of these officers into prison, and indeed all the minute events of Joseph's history, as we have perused them, might seem mere accidents, curious in themselves, but not previously designed by infinite wisdom. Yet so it was; and observe how beautifully in them all God made even the wrath of man to praise him. If any one of the incidents of Joseph's history had been otherwise than they were, the same issue had not taken place. On how many minute circumstances do the mightiest events depend, showing how necessary to the government of the world is the constant, universal, and minute superintending providence of an all-powerful, wise, and omniscient God. Indeed, events equally singular in the providence of God, and equally clearly indicating his directing hand, are daily taking place in the world and in our own history. Could we mark them, or have them traced by an inspired hand, as they affect our present and eternal condition, as they are mixed up with the church and with the government of the universe, how beautiful and wonderful would the chain appear. Let us thence learn to serve God in every thing.

God often taught by dreams, and may do so when he pleases. But let not persons from thence make their dreams and fancies the measure of God's providence. It is absurd to do so. There is nothing more divine in the vagaries of fancy during sleep, than in its reveries when we are awake. It is sinful. Because God forbade it. Those who fear God will, like Joseph, have pity on their fellow-men. They could find no interpreter of their dream. Joseph first instructs them that God alone could reveal such secrets. Both the men were sad, though the dream of one only was adverse. Guilt is fearful. Joseph was sold by his brethren, but stolen by the Ishmaelites, as they had no right to buy a human being. Joseph did not expose the guilt of his brethren for their hurt, but the same tenderness made him tell the worst to the chief baker, that he might prepare for death. It is no kindness to hide such an event. Rather tell the truth in love. How ungrateful is the human heart! The butler soon forgot Joseph; but he did not lose his reward. God made this very act turn out for Joseph's exaltation. Here let us be consoled with the thought that our Intercessor will never forget our suit. See Isaiah xlix. 14.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we, thy sinful and dependent children, would now come into thy presence, to offer thee the homage of our hearts, and the obedience of our lives, beseeching thine acceptance in the name of him whom thou hearest always, and in whom thou art always pleased. Thou art God alone, and besides thee there is none else. Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created at the first. Thou art the sovereign ruler and supreme disposer of all beings and of all events, and none may say unto thee, What doest thou? Of thee, and through thee, and to thee are all things, to whom be glory for ever and ever. How delightful to thy children the thought that thine eyes are in every place, and thy kingdom ruleth over all; that a sparrow cannot fall to the ground, nor a hair from our heads, without our Father. We therefore, O God, with humble confidence and love, would cast ourselves anew upon thy care, putting our trust under the shadow of thy wings. We pray that thou, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who didst so tenderly and wonderfully preserve and conduct Joseph, thy young servant, in his trials and sufferings, who didst comfort and sustain him in the anguish of his soul, and in the house of bondage, mayest sustain and guide us in this the place of our pilgrimage. Help us, O God, to be faithful in the duties to which we are called, and the trials we have to meet; to recognise thy wise and gracious hand in all that befalls us, and to be followers of them who, through faith and patience, are inheriting the promises. May we profit by the examples of thy holy word, seeing that whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures, might have hope. Help us to draw water, for our comfort and refreshment in this wilderness, out of these wells of salvation. We especially pray that the Spirit of all grace may enable us to set the Lord Jesus Christ always before us, as the great object of our faith, revealed in the scriptures, for they are they which testify of him, as the author and finisher of it, and as our great example; the 'leader and commander of his people;' the light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel. Pardon and purify us by thy Spirit, in the blood of Christ. Create in us, O God, clean hearts; renew right spirits within us. While serving thee, our God, in faithfulness and truth, teach us to maintain on our spirits compassion for the sufferings of our fellow-men, remembering that we ourselves are in the body, and liable always to be 'bound with them.' We this day renew our expressions of thanksgiving for all our personal and social mercies, privileges, and blessings. Let thy goodness lead us to repentance. While thou hast restored us to the enjoyments and the duties of a new day, and art causing the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us, let thy presence this day go with us, and compass us with thy favour as with a shield. We commend to thy compassionate regards, all the families of the earth; our friends; all whom we love, and in whom we are interested; bless them in time and for eternity. We pray for our enemies. Bless thy church. Extend the borders of Zion. Build up the waste places, the desolations of many generations. Pity the distressed. Comfort all mourners; and do for us exceeding abundantly, above all we can ask or think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXII. 1—22.

REMARKS.

This picturesque parable is exquisitely beautiful, and solemnly instructive. Its meaning and its lessons are very obvious. The 'marriage feast' is the gospel dispensation, and its rich provision for the wants of sinners, and the honour conferred upon them by the invitation of the great Bridegroom of his church, Jesus, the Son of the king eternal. How abundant and gracious the riches of divine grace, in the perfect righteousness of Christ, the efficacy of his blood, the power of his Spirit, the treasury of his word, the wells of salvation it reveals, and the everlasting glories of heaven, all wrought out, purchased, and possessed by Jesus Christ, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and freely offered to the chief of poor and outcast sinners. God sends his messengers to call sinners to come and share in all this fulness and riches in glory by Christ Jesus. The Jews rejected and despised them. Earthly passions and pursuits engaged the most: the rest were so actuated by the malignity of Satan as to persecute and murder the servants of this great and condescending Lord. They received that recompense that was meet. The indignant monarch, the King of kings, destroyed these murderers, burnt up their city, and scattered in ruins their polity and nation. The same Lord over all is yet rich in mercy to sinners, and issues to us the same invitations. O let us beware that we give them not the same treatment. Let us guard against a worldly spirit, the besetting sin and curse of our day, bringing ruin on its millions, and threatening desolation to our country for our contempt of Christ.

Christ will not be mocked, neither has his blood been shed in vain, nor shall his grace and mercy be lost. He will gather in the outcasts; and they who are forgiven much will love much. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. The Jews rejected his free salvation: self-righteous sinners do the same. But he commanded the preachers of his gospel to go far hence to the Gentiles; those whom Israel despised. To the poor in spirit the gospel is preached, and they will hear it. His table was furnished with guests. He himself provided the wedding garment, that is, his perfect righteousness. He gives himself. They 'put on Christ.' He is made unto them wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. Even among those, however, who come to the marriage, there may be unworthy and contemptuous guests, as a Judas among the apostles, and false-hearted hypocrites and traitors in every age. The king, whose eyes are in every place a flame of fire, speedily detects such and will cast them out. The marriage hall was splendidly illuminated in oriental countries. The master of the feast provided a long white robe for the guests. It was insulting not to take it and put it on. So with those who dare to appear in their own righteousness, which is as filthy rags, destitute of that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. They insult the grace of the Redeemer, tread under foot the Son of God, do despite to his Spirit, account his blood an unholy thing, and shall, when he comes to see the guests, to make everlastingly joyful with his presence those who truly have honoured his invitation and accepted his free bounty, and to see that there are no polluted and contemptuous intruders, be thrust into outer darkness, punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power. The number of such in the professing church, alas, shall not be few, but alarmingly great. How fearful and inscrutable the thought that many shall be called, of whom a multitude are utter despisers, and others presumptuous hypocrites, and of them all 'few are chosen.' May the Lord stir up all to anxious thought and self-examination, that they receive not the grace of God in vain.

The pharisees, though they could not resist the wisdom by which our Lord spake, yet were continually attempting, with the cunning of corrupt and self-seeking hypocrites, to entangle and ensnare him. They detested, as they dreaded, his searching exposures. We have, on the one hand, from ver. 15—22, a striking instance of the ingenuity of Satan's servants, in their well-laid plot to inveigle Christ, and of his divine wisdom in breaking its meshes. They plausibly do homage to his truth and lofty fidelity, and they then frame their question in a way that must involve him either with the people, who were jealous of their national independence, or with the Herodians, who were jealous for the rights of Cesar, and, in short, with the conflicting sentiments of the various classes on this difficult subject, and their views respecting him as the Messiah. Our Lord, on the other, at once evades their snare, and rivets their obligations to be faithful to God, and submissive to the government whose authority they owned in their current coin. They were to give honour, obedience, and tribute to Cesar, but in no case to permit Cesar to interfere with their sacred and paramount duties to God, by whom kings reign and princes decree justice.

PRAYER.

O God, the Ruler of heaven and earth, the King of kings and Lord of lords, God over all, blessed for ever, we would, this evening, with hearts filled with gratitude for thine infinite grace and condescension, and awed by thy glorious majesty, render thee our unfeigned, hearty, and united thanks for thine abundant grace, the free and rich provision made for the salvation of the chief of sinners—that every one that thirsteth, and he that hath no money—that the wretched and miserable, the poor, the blind, and the naked are encouraged and invited to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb, to eat and drink the bread and the water of life, to sup with him and he with us. Lord, we are utterly unworthy of this glorious grace. Not unto us, not unto us, but to him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God, even his Father, to him be the glory and dominion for ever and ever. O Lord, preserve us from the guilt of rejecting the invitations of mercy. Deliver us from all hardness of heart, and contempt of thy word and commandments, from all worldliness and indifference of spirit; and keep us back from all presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over us. O clothe us with the Redeemer's righteousness. Renew us in the spirit of our minds. Grant unto us humble and sincere hearts; and preserve us from all formality and hypocrisy from daring to mock our Saviour, by professing to be his, and coming before him as his people come, when in truth we are deceivers and enemies. Let us be stirred up to search and try our ways; and do thou, O God, search and try us, and see if there be any wicked way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. Correct us, O Lord, but with judgment, lest thou bring us to nothing. Grant, O God, we beseech thee, that at last we may be approved of our Lord, and made joyful for ever in his presence, with exceeding great joy. We thank thee for all the mercies of the past day. Lay not our sins to our charge. Come over the mountains of our provocations this day. Rectify our improper tempers, dispositions, and affections. Give us the rest and sleep of thy beloved. Should another day dawn upon us in life, let it be in the light of thy countenance; and do thou give us peace. We renew our prayers for all for whom we ought to pray, in all our relations, and in the merciful and benevolent spirit of our holy faith, and after the example of our blessed Lord; and all that we ask is for his sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 16—22.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. God not unfrequently subjects his people to long-continued affliction; his dealings in this respect seem mysterious, but all is ordered wisely, and, could we comprehend the plan of his procedure, the period of his people's troubles, as well as the time and manner of their deliverance out of them, would appear to us the very best. The providence of God is continually employed in superintending, directing, and controlling the affairs of men; and he makes the course of the seasons, the state of the weather, the measure of cold and heat, the abundance or scantiness of the crops, &c., the instruments of bringing about most important changes in the condition of individuals, families, and nations. Ver. 9—14. In the providence of God there is a wonderful dependence of one event upon another, so that the most minute and insignificant circumstance is often productive of consequences the most momentous, extending not only to time but to eternity. Ver. 14, 38—45. God has ever a special care for his church, and in the providence which he exercises over the world, orders all events in such a manner as to accomplish the designs either of affliction and discipline, or of prosperity and enlargement, which he has formed in her behalf. Ver. 1—25. God has an inscrutable access to the minds and hearts of men, and can present to them such ideas, and produces in them such trains of thought as he pleases. Ver. 25. Dreams, although not generally to be regarded, excepting as indicating the state of the bodily health, or the prevailing bias of the mind in its waking hours, accompanying it into the season of repose, yet may be, and have been, employed by God as vehicles for imparting important revelations to the church and to the world. Ver. 16, 38. Not only the supernatural knowledge of prophets, but the wisdom by which men are fitted for the management of public affairs, and the government of kingdoms, comes from the Spirit of God. Ver. 38, &c. The eminent talents and virtues of individual servants of God, are often of immense influence in promoting the good of the church, and in inclining the hearts of men to acknowledge God. Ver. 38—52. God frequently converts the afflictions of his servants into occasions of joy and gratitude.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

We ought believingly to acknowledge, and devoutly to observe, the particular providence of God, as extending to all events and circumstances, the smallest as well as the greatest. If we fail to do so, we detract from the perfect and glorious character of God, and withhold from him that recognition of his sovereignty and government which we owe him. Although God may appear to disappoint our hopes and protract our afflictions, let us patiently wait for him, knowing that his time is the best, and that in so doing, we honour him, maintain a serene and quiet frame of mind, and become prepared for receiving good at his hand. However mortifying to our pride it may be, we ought to confess and repent of our faults as soon as they are brought to our remembrance; and we ought especially to be deeply concerned, and to hasten to repair the evil done, if our fault have had the effect of injuring any individual, however obscure or humble. God is to be devoutly acknowledged as the giver of every excellent endowment, and the author of all that is good in ourselves or others. We must glorify him, not only by devoting the talents we possess to the purposes for which they have been intrusted to us, but also by a distinct disowning of any credit as due to ourselves, and ascribing all the honour and praise to him. This may have a happy influence as an example, and may lead those who hitherto have been ignorant of his claims, or regardless of their obligations to him, to glorify our Father who is in heaven. Moderation and economy in the use of the bounties of providence, and a prudent foresight in making provision for ourselves and families, are quite consistent with devout reliance on the care and faithfulness of our heavenly Father, and are impressively taught by the fluctuations in the productions of the earth, and the occasionally recurring seasons of scarcity which, for good and important ends, take place under his management. We ought to be very sensible of the kindness of God in alleviating our afflictions, and in overruling them for his glory and our good. And it is very becoming to commemorate, in our families, these tokens of divine tenderness and love. We see in Joseph an example of integrity, fidelity, and diligence in the execution of the trust committed to him. Finally, let us see in Joseph an eminent type of Jesus, to whom, after humiliation and suffering, is now committed the administration of the affairs of the world; and let us apply to him that, according to our need, we may obtain largely out of his fulness, even grace for grace. No spiritual blessing can be dispensed to us but by him; and if we have not recourse to him we must perish in our destitution and misery.

PRAYER.

O thou, who art the hearer of prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come. Enable us to approach thee by that new and living way which thou hast opened and consecrated by the blood of Christ. May we know, from our happy experience, that it is a good thing to draw near to God. We adore thee as the infinite and self-existent Jehovah; the omnipotent and glorious Creator; the universal and eternal Lord. Thy character is adorned with every amiable attribute; with all moral excellence. Thou art good unto all; and thy tender mercies are over all thy works. Teach us to venerate thy glorious majesty; to love and delight in thy holy and excellent perfections; and to place our confidence under the shadow of thy wings. We confess and lament our great unworthiness. We have sinned against heaven and in thy sight. We have forfeited thy favour and lost thine image; and we deserve nothing at thy hands but indignation and wrath for ever. We would take refuge in Christ, in whom thou art reconciling sinners unto thyself. Behold us in him; let thine anger be turned away from us for his sake; give us acceptance in the Beloved. Cause us to experience the sanctifying power of the truth, as it is in Jesus; and make us altogether such as thou wouldst have us to be. May thy good and holy Spirit quicken to us the means of instruction and edification with which thou hast favoured us; and sanctify us in spirit, in soul, and in body; and make us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Teach us to feel our dependence on thy bounty, and to glorify thee in receiving and in using the gifts of thy providence. We rejoice that our great High Priest has the administration of the affairs of the world; and that he who died for us orders all things according to the counsel of his will, for our education and training for heaven. Make us contented and thankful, and to set our affections on things above. We thank thee for rest and preservation during the night. Keep thy good hand around us during the day on which we have now entered. Set a guard upon our thoughts. May our meditations of thee be sweet and profitable. Preserve us from all evil, especially from sin. Supply all our need. Direct our way. Quicken and strengthen us in duty and in trial, and preserve us unto thy heavenly kingdom. Let our prayers come before thee as incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the morning sacrifice, for the sake of our great Mediator and Advocate. And to thee, O Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be everlasting praise. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XVI. 8—11.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXII. 23—46.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 24—32. That which is here called the resurrection, comprehends the whole doctrine of a separate and invisible world; a future state of rewards and punishments. This was the doctrine which was denied by the sadducees, who (see Acts xxiii. 8.) said that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit. The one doctrine is here identified in effect with the other. Ver. 31, 32. The doctrine of a future and eternal world, in which men shall live in happiness or in misery, is clearly taught in the Old Testament, particularly in Exod. iii. 6. where God calls himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and ought to have been acknowledged by every one who received, as of divine authority, the books in which it is contained. Ver. 29, 30. The future and eternal world will be of a spiritual nature in its condition, character, arrangements, and happiness. Ver. 29. Our inability to comprehend all the circumstances connected with any doctrine, or to reconcile it with our pre-conceived notions, is no valid ground of objection to its truth. It is the office of faith to credit the divine testimony, and to rely on the power, wisdom, and veracity of God, for the fulfilment of every promise and declaration which proceeds from him. Ver. 34—40. No countenance is given to any such distinction among the commandments of the moral law, as was held by the scribes and pharisees, who thought that if they were exact and punctual in observing one or more of them, they might, without offence to God or danger to themselves, use considerable liberty with the rest. The two commandments here specified by our Lord comprehend the whole law. Ver. 37—40. There are two grand fundamental principles on which all the statutes of the divine law depend, viz. love to God, and love to our neighbour; and there can be no acceptable obedience which does not arise from these. Ver. 41—45. The Christ or Messiah is a person of transcendent dignity, whom the most glorious earthly monarch is bound to venerate and adore as his Lord, and the Lord of the universe. But he is also the son of David, descended from him by a real, although extraordinary generation. There is a wonderful and mysterious union, in the constitution of his person, of the divine and human natures, which will continue through eternity. He is thus Emmanuel, God in our nature. He is the root and the offspring of David. Ver. 46. The Jews of that day were woefully ignorant of the true meaning of the scriptures, and consequently of the divine dignity of the Messiah they professed to be waiting for.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

We ought to avoid all useless speculation respecting the truths of religion, and not to aim at being wise above what is written, and to guard against the injurious influence of gross and carnal views of divine things. How sublime is the dignity of the redeemed sinner! With what delightful confidence may we repose ourselves on Jehovah as our covenant God, and intrust to him, in Christ, all our concerns for time and for eternity! since living or dying we are his; and with similar feelings we may think of our departed friends who have died in the faith. Let us habitually remember, with reverence, esteem, and affection, the great leading principles of that holy, just, and good law, which, under every dispensation of religion, must be the rule of life and the living principle of all obedience, love to God and love to man. Let us endeavour to enlarge our views of the doctrine of Christ, as contained in the New Testament, by a careful study and comparison of the Old Testament, which testifies prophetically of him. Let us seek to form exalted ideas of the divine nature and majesty of Christ; venerate and worship him as the mighty God; commit our souls and all our interests into his hand, with entire and joyful trust; and obey and glorify him as our Lord, and the Lord of the universe. What reason have we to rejoice in the evidences which Jesus, the Son of Man, exhibited in the days of his flesh, of his perfect knowledge and comprehensive understanding of all truth, and in the divine skill with which he answered those whose aim was, not to obtain instruction, but to entangle him in his discourse! And with what confidence may we sit at the feet of him who spake as never man spake, being indeed the very wisdom of God!

PRAYER.

O thou great and glorious Jehovah, who art the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, the infinite, self-existent, and eternal God, we would come unto thee through the mediation of him in whom thou hast revealed to us thyself, thy character, and thy dispensations, and by whom alone we are permitted to approach thee. Give us the spirit of grace and supplications, and manifest thyself to us as thou dost not unto the world. We adore and thank thee that, having spoken in former times to thine ancient people by the prophets, thou hast, in these latter days, spoken to us by thy Son; that, having revealed thyself to them as the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, thou hast made thyself known to us as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Enable us to regard thee, in the exercise of faith, as our covenant God, as our reconciled Father in Christ. For his sake blot out all our trespasses; speak comfortably unto us; and bless us with the hope of inheriting a glorious portion as the children of thy family. We would be joyful in the assurance thou hast given us of a never ending and inconceivably blessed life in thy presence, purchased for us by the blood of the eternal covenant. May the prospect of it sweeten our present existence, and soothe our present sorrows. May this hope, which we have in Christ, prove a powerful instrument in the hand of the Spirit of grace and holiness, to purify our souls, even as he who is the object of our faith is pure. May we learn to love thee with our whole heart, and soul, and strength, and mind, and to love our neighbours with a sincere, and cordial, and ardent affection. May we delight in thy word, and esteem all thy precepts, concerning all things, to be right. May we grow in a holy and affectionate obedience to thy will, and in conformity to thy character; and be at length prepared for beholding thy face in righteousness, for walking with Jesus, for associating with angels, and for the services and enjoyments of a holy heaven. We thank thee for the privilege of hearing the voice of Jesus speaking to us in the scriptures. May what we have read of his word this evening, furnish sweet and profitable meditation to us, while we retire to rest upon our beds. May thy presence be about us during the silent watches of the night. May we, as the objects of thy love, enjoy refreshing sleep, and be kept safe under the shadow of thy wings; and, if it be thy good pleasure, may we awake in the morning and find ourselves still with thee: or, if this night should conclude our pilgrimage on earth, may we awake to find ourselves with Christ in paradise. We ask all in his name; and to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, we would ascribe the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXVI. 8—14.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. We are ever entirely dependent upon God for the support of our lives, and the means of subsistence. Ver. 1—5. God may at any time, withdraw from us without any injustice, those supplies of his bounty which are needful for our comfort, or even for the continuance of our lives. Ver. 6—20. The church of God in the world is liable to trials and afflictions, and the people of God to poverty, destitution, and difficulties. God in his own time and way brings to pass, by most wonderful arrangements of his providence, every word which he hath spoken. The extraordinary, and, to human apprehension, most improbable intimation made in Joseph's dream, (compare chap. xxxvii. 5—10.) now begins to be accomplished. Ver. 7—20. In Joseph dispensing to Israel supplies of food, we see a type of Christ dispensing to his church the bread of life. High station, and offices of extensive authority, are dangerous, by bringing such as occupy them into contact with the corrupt fashions and sinful usages of the world; and so rendering them less alive to the sinfulness of these customs, and even to the guilt of positive transgressions of the law of God. Joseph swore by the life of Pharaoh, and practised dissimulation and dishonesty, towards his brethren. Ver. 21, 22. God hath placed conscience in the soul to testify against sin; and although in the time of prosperity her warnings may be disregarded, her voice is at length heard to the dismay of the sinner when distress and anxiety come upon him. Then his sin finds him out. Ver. 25—28, 35. When the conscience of the sinner is thus roused, every event to which any doubt or suspicion may be attached, aggravates his alarm. The sound of a shaken leaf chases him. Ver. 36—38. Even good men, in time of straits and trials, sometimes manifest much unbelief, in desponding and doubting the goodness and faithfulness of God, and shrinking under the apprehension of evil, from what they have good reason to consider the way of duty.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Ver. 1—5. The people of God may lawfully traffic with, and avail themselves of the resources of the world for their subsistence and benefit. We may, and ought, to render honour and respect to those who are elevated above us in rank, or who are placed in stations of authority; and practise the ordinary courtesies of society in our intercourse with it. When by the duties of our stations, or by the leading of providence, we are brought into contact with the world, we must carefully avoid conformity to it, in practices which are sinful. Dissimulation, or falsehood, can never be justified even for the most excellent ends. We are not permitted to do evil, that good may come. We ought carefully to distinguish between the virtues and the faults of great or good men; that we follow not their mistakes and failings. We may, for good reasons, see it to be our duty to withhold from those whom we love, the expression of our sympathy and affection, for their trial and benefit: and when we have discovered the path of duty, we ought to proceed in it, in opposition even to the feelings of natural affection. We ought to attend to the very first warnings and rebukes of conscience, and consider our ways, and immediately repent and turn to God. He is ever ready to receive us and wash us in the blood of his Son; and will sanctify to us all the discipline of his holy providence. Let us commit ourselves in all our doubts and perplexities to God; constantly rely on his faithfulness and wisdom; and trust him for support, and guidance, and enlargement, in the darkest and most discouraging circumstances. Let us be ever 'travelling from our own emptiness, to the fulness that is in Christ,' and seeking new supplies of that bread which came down from heaven to be the life of our souls, and which endureth ever.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most glorious God, thou art the Author and Sovereign of universal nature. Of old didst thou lay the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands. The sea is thine, for thou madest it; and thy hand formed the dry land. Thou makest grass to grow for cattle, and herbs for the use of man. The eyes of all wait upon thee, and thou givest them their food in due season. We are entirely dependent upon thy bounty for our being, and for our well-being. Teach us to acknowledge thee in all our ways, and thy hand in all our comforts and enjoyments. When thou withholdest from us that which is good, or inflicteth upon us any suffering, may we devoutly acknowledge thy sovereignty and justice, and say from the heart, it is the Lord! let him do what seemeth him good! We confess, O Lord, our manifold and highly aggravated sins; that we are unworthy of the least of thy mercies; and deserve nothing at thy hand but indignation and wrath for ever. We praise and adore the unspeakable mercy which thou hast manifested in the humiliation, obedience, and sacrifice of the Lord our righteousness. We rejoice that it hath pleased thee, that all fulness of spiritual and heavenly blessings should dwell in him for the benefit, and comfort, and salvation of our poor, destitute, and perishing souls. May the Holy Ghost draw us to that store-house of good things which is laid up in Christ, and enable us to put forth the hand of faith to take of the things that belong to him, so that out of his fulness we may receive even grace for grace. May we know our spiritual need. May we hunger and thirst after righteousness. May we open our mouths wide, and be satisfied with good. Lord, increase our faith. In the season of trial may we look to that Rock which is higher than we. May thy strength be made perfect in our weakness. May we not faint in the day of adversity. May we look out of ourselves, and find to our own sweet experience, that through Christ strengthening us, we can do all things. May we rest in the Lord. May we in patience possess our souls, and find that, in the end, those things which appeared to be most against us, were working together for good to us; for our joy and comfort here, and our perfection and glory hereafter.

We acknowledge the gracious providence which hath sustained us during the night, and brought us to the beginning of a new day. We commit ourselves to thy protection, and guidance, and favour, throughout the course of it. May all our need, temporal and spiritual, be graciously supplied according to thy glorious riches by Christ Jesus. May thy glory be this day and every day the aim, and thy holy will the rule, of our lives. And when we have finished our pilgrimage on earth, may we be received into the Canaan that is above. May our prayer come up before thee with acceptance, and may we receive an answer in grace and mercy, for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE XVII.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXIII.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—3. The authority of ecclesiastical rulers is to be revered, and their ordinances are to be obeyed, when they give forth the mind of God in his word, even when their personal character is evil. Ver. 4—33. Even in a true church, the office-bearers may be so corrupt as to exhibit nothing better than empty formality, or even vain ostentation and disgusting hypocrisy in their personal conduct, and thus to be beacons, instead of examples, to the people. Ver. 6—12. While a courteous observance of the forms of society, and of the respect to which individuals of rank or authority are entitled, is not only lawful but a Christian duty, there may be such an ascription of honour and majesty to persons of distinguished talents and influence, or to those who occupy certain ecclesiastical offices, as is highly displeasing to Christ, being an invasion of his sovereign prerogatives. Of this we have many sad examples in the popish hierarchy; in the impious titles arrogated by the bishop of Rome, and in the absurd and superstitious veneration and submission rendered to the priests, by the ignorant and deluded people. Ver. 13—15. There is nothing more deplorable, nothing more destructive to the souls of men, than to be placed under the government or influence of hypocritical, avaricious, ambitious, and self-seeking teachers. They who obey and follow them shall die in their sins. But their blood God will require of those who have held them in ignorance and error. Ver. 16—22. Oaths are not to be trifled with, but, on the contrary, ought to be deliberately and cautiously uttered, and, when once pronounced, faithfully and religiously kept. Ver. 23—28. True religion has its seat in the heart. It purifies the fountain, and the stream is thus pure also. Whereas false teachers of the pharisaical spirit, substitute external rites and ceremonies in the place of inward piety and purity; and enjoin, with much more strictness, the minutest matters of positive institution, than the essential principles of love to God, delight in his character, and reverence for his authority. By all this they make a fair and specious appearance, but they neglect and sacrifice what is truly excellent, and good, and indispensable to the real service of God. Ver. 29—33. Whosoever the internal principles of faith, and love, and fear of God, which constitute the essence and spirit of true religion, are wanting, men may profess to disapprove of the open outbreaks of sin in others, but they do in fact cherish the same enmity against God. Such persons will be tried, not by their fair exterior, but by what God, the omniscient judge, sees to be in their hearts. Ver. 34—36. It is a very heinous offence against the Redeemer, and cannot but greatly aggravate the guilt of sinners, when they not only refuse to comply with his gracious invitations to repentance, but persecute and afflict his servants. This opposition and injury he will regard as directed against himself, and he will visit those who are guilty of it with dreadful condemnation and ruin. Ver. 37—39. The tenderness and patience of the Saviour, in urging sinners to come to him and partake of the blessings of his grace, will vindicate the severity of the judgments he will inflict upon them, for their obstinate rejection of the offers of mercy. Ver. 39. Even the most awful threatenings of the Saviour are combined with, and designed to, persuade sinners to believe and embrace promises of mercy. And the heavy judgments which have been inflicted upon Israel, will be followed by a time when he will return to them, and will prepare them as a people for at length welcoming and obeying him. The terror of the Lord should persuade us; and when he visits us with affliction it ought to have the effect of drawing us to him as the only source of comfort and salvation. What a solemn and impressive warning is given in this portion of scripture, against pride and vain-glorying, ostentation and hypocrisy, self-seeking and carnal ambition! Such dispositions as these, when indulged and permitted to rule in the heart, have led men to reject and persecute Christ, and made them monuments of his just indignation.

PRAYER.

O Lord, holy and omniscient, who beholdest the inmost recesses of the soul, who triest the reins and heart, and who art of purer eyes than to look upon sin without infinite abhorrence, we beseech thee to cause the portion of thy most blessed word, which thou hast now permitted us to read and meditate on, to make a deep, and salutary, and lasting impression upon our minds. May the solemn and alarming rebukes which proceeded from the lips of the holy Redeemer, in the days of his flesh, and which have been recorded for our warning and instruction, suitably affect our consciences. Thou knowest, and we would consider for our self-humiliation, that we are by nature no better than those whose pride and selfishness, iniquity, cruelty, and unbelief called forth the holy indignation of thy gracious and condescending Son. May thy holy Spirit savingly impress this conviction upon our hearts. May we perceive more clearly our need of thy pardoning mercy, and of the precious benefit of the prevailing mediation, and atoning death, and perfect righteousness of Christ. Forgive, in thy great compassion and kindness of thy love in him, all that thou seest in us inconsistent with thy purity, and opposed to thy will. And give us grace to understand our errors and unworthiness, and to detect and put away from us the plague of our hearts. Do thou, the God of peace, sanctify us wholly, bringing down every imagination, and every high thing which would exalt itself against the knowledge and authority of thy law, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. May our affections be spiritualized, our hearts purified, our desires elevated. May our wills be renewed more and more, until they become entirely conformed to thy will. May we yield our members instruments of righteousness unto godliness. And may our whole spirits, and souls, and bodies, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. We adore and bless thee for the continued protection and bounty of thy providence; for all our personal and domestic comforts; for all our temporal blessings; for all our religious privileges; for the unspeakable gift of thy Son, who hath purchased for us all our enjoyments and all our hopes. May we have a covenant interest in the gifts of thy providence. May all things be ours, sanctified to us by the grace and Spirit of Jesus. And may we have a growing experience of those spiritual blessings which are the special provision made in the covenant for the good of thy children. We commend ourselves this night to thy care and love. O thou who keepest Israel, watch over us, and preserve us in safety, and, if it be thy holy and blessed will, bring us to see the light of a new morning. Let the light of thy countenance shine upon us; and whether we wake or sleep, may we be with thee. Graciously accept of our worship, and hear our prayers, for the sake of him whom thou hearest always. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XC. 14.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLIII.

REMARKS.

This chapter records the second visit of the sons of Jacob to Egypt to buy corn. Simeon had been left behind, as a pledge that they would return, and bring their brother Benjamin with them. When this was told to the patriarch he was deeply affected, and expressed his determination not to allow Benjamin to accompany them. The famine however continued, the corn brought from Egypt was nearly consumed, and Jacob, as the head of a numerous household, felt that it was necessary they should again return to Egypt to procure provision. When God has a purpose to accomplish, in opposition to the fondest attachments and desires of men, he is at no loss for means. A famine is subservient to his will, as well as the visit of an angel, or characters of fire on the wall of a banquetting-room, or a flash of lightning from heaven. It is affecting to observe the struggle in the mind of Jacob. His heart was bound up in Benjamin, and he would most willingly have kept him under his own roof and eye. But want was pressing upon his household. The patriarch consented to part with him, painful as the trial was; and giving special instructions to his sons, commended them, with characteristic piety, to the mercy of almighty God. Whatever we possess, even our dearest child, is the property of the Supreme Ruler, and he has a right to take it from us in his own time and way. But when the time of trial comes, true piety is our only and sure refuge. How forcible and pathetic the conclusion of the patriarch's charge to his sons, 'If I am bereaved of my children, I am bereaved.' These words express at once the severity of the affliction which he dreaded, and the necessity of submission under it, should it occur. Ver. 15—28. The reception which the sons of Jacob met with on their second visit, was very different from that which is recorded in the preceding chapter. Joseph ordered a dinner to be prepared, and his brethren to be taken into the house. This unexpected kindness filled them with suspicion and fear, which led them to mention to the ruler of Joseph's house the fact that they had found each man's money in the mouth of his sack. His answer allayed their fears, and strongly indicated his own piety, proving that he had profited by the example and the precepts of his master. Masters may be eminently useful by the right exercise of the influence of their station. The example of a pious master is an high privilege to those who serve under him. Joseph's servant treated his brethren with marked kindness. Simeon was brought out to them, in fulfilment of the promise which Joseph had made. Ver. 28—34. Joseph had probably been engaged till noon in the weighty affairs of government. The time was now come when his brethren were to make obeisance before him. It is said, with the inimitable simplicity which distinguishes the sacred history, that his brethren 'brought the present which was in their hand into the house, and bowed themselves to him to the earth.' Joseph's dreams in Canaan were now fulfilled. Behold the other sheaves making obeisance around the upright master sheaf! Behold the sun, and the moon, and the eleven stars doing homage to him who was hated of his brethren! The affectionate nature of Joseph was strikingly displayed on beholding Benjamin—he retired to his chamber and wept. He then seats them at table, and shows special affection to Benjamin. How wonderful are the providential dealings of God! The sons of Jacob are guests in the mansion of the chief ruler in Egypt. A famine has restored them to the society and love of the brother whom they had sold for a slave. The cloud of bereavement, which had darkened the home of the patriarch, is clearing away; and the little circle of his household is on the eve of being again filled up. There had been an interval of salutary trial, but already the dawn of a brighter day had arisen, with additions of splendour beyond their former experience, soon to be followed by long prospects of prosperity and peace. Believers sow in tears that they may reap in joy.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, thou art the Ruler as well as the Creator of all things. All things are in thy hand, from the greatest to the smallest. Not a sparrow can fall to the ground without thine appointment. Thy footsteps are often in dark and stormy waters, but justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. Though at times thou humblest thy creatures in the very dust, and barest thine arm in the infliction of overwhelming calamity, yet mercy is mingled with thy darkest judgments, and thy purposes are as kind as they are wise. Particularly towards thine own people, thy dealings are dealings of mercy and love. Thou rejoicest over them to do them good. Thou leadest them by ways which they know not, and thus vindicate thy claims as a sovereign. But thou art ever promoting their welfare, helping on the work of their sanctification, increasing their joys, confirming their faith, and reviving their hopes. We desire to cast in our lot with them, and to rest in safety under the shadow of thy wings. Teach us to acknowledge thy hand, from day to day, in ordinary as well as extraordinary events. Let us be concerned to be the objects of thy care and love, as our God in covenant; and from the singular array of thy providential dispensations in promoting our spiritual improvement, let us be able to derive some measure of assurance, that we are indeed of the number of thy chosen. Help us to bear in mind that growth in grace and in the knowledge of Christ should be our grand and daily concern; and let us feel, that whatever furthers this should be acknowledged as good, however, for a time, painful to the body, or distressing to the mind. Weaken the ties which bind us to the things that are seen and temporal; and, depending on thy Spirit, help us to travel on through the wilderness, earnestly seeking a better country, and striving to attain a meetness for it. Especially, O God, when we are visited by affliction, may we not only regard its season as one of very solemn duty, but be concerned to improve it as one of endearing privilege. May our afflictions impress us more deeply with our own sinfulness, lead us to form an higher estimate of the value of thy favour, and teach us to consider habitually the shortness and uncertainty of life, as well as the vanity and insignificance of the world. We thank thee for the mercies of the past night and this morning. As we have entered on a new day, we most humbly entreat thy guidance and blessing amidst its duties and cares. Remember the human race in thy great mercy. Send the truth of salvation abroad into all lands. Visit the afflicted; comfort and support under the pressure of trouble; awaken and sanctify largely by means of it. Bestow upon our kindred and friends the joy of thy salvation. Prepare us for all the events which are before us. Forgive our manifold and aggravated transgressions; and graciously hear our prayers, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXIV. 1—28.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This passage contains a very striking and solemn prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem. Our Lord had been discoursing to the pharisees in the temple, and on leaving it his disciples called his attention to the magnificence and beauty of the building. He immediately took occasion to foretell the time when it was to be utterly and for ever destroyed. The words, 'not one stone left upon another,' intimate the completeness of the desolation foretold. At the time the prediction was uttered, there was no probability that such an event would occur. The temple still stood in its glory. Judea, though a conquered country, was under the peaceful protection of the Roman government. There were no signs of approaching war. And yet, at the distance of forty years, the prediction was literally fulfilled. Our Lord not only predicts this event, but some of the more remarkable events and changes by which it was to be preceded. Among these, there were to be wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes. Accordingly we find that, previous to the siege of Jerusalem, the Roman empire was greatly agitated in various parts. Pestilences, earthquakes, and the violent death of emperors were frequent.

In addition to these particulars, our Lord foretells the severe persecutions to which his followers would be exposed, before the destruction of the holy city. This part of the prediction also was literally fulfilled.

Nothing can be conceived more terrible than the destruction of Jerusalem, as set forth in this passage. Instant flight into places of security is enjoined. Not a moment was to be lost in preparation for flight. His disciples are exhorted to pray that it might not happen in the winter, when travelling was hazardous and difficult, or on the sabbath day, when travelling was prohibited. The calamity was to be unparalleled; and so the event proved. Jerusalem was deluged with blood. The flames, in many places, were extinguished with blood. Eleven hundred thousand human beings perished in the siege, besides those who were slain in the provinces. So many were crucified that, Josephus states, they could not find 'room for crosses, nor crosses for the bodies.' Yet observe the mercy of God towards his people; for the sake of Christians the time of this fearful calamity was shortened.

As foretold in this passage, both before and during the siege many false pretenders appeared, declaring themselves to be the Messiah, and professing to work miracles. Our Lord warned his disciples against the arts of these deceivers. His language in ver. 27, has been considered as referring not merely to the destruction of Jerusalem, but to his coming to judgment. That coming will be like lightning, sudden, conspicuous, far-spread, irresistible.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us acknowledge, with gratitude, the varied and powerful evidence on which the Christian religion rests, of which prophecy forms an important part. Let us behold, in the destruction of Jerusalem, a demonstration at once of the justice and the faithfulness of God, as well as a conclusive proof of the divine authority of him who came to seek and to save us. The Jews possessed high privileges, but they abused them; and though God long and patiently suffered their wickedness and presumption, yet at last his sovereignty was displayed in the desolation of their temple, the overthrow of their metropolis, and the almost entire extinction of their name as a people. Privileges involve a responsibility proportioned to their value; and if they are undervalued and neglected, the supreme Giver will vindicate his own claims, in the infliction of appropriate punishment. Let us not forget, therefore, that to whom much is given of them much will be required; and that it is a 'fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, thou art just and righteous, and all thy words are faithful and true. Though thy name and thy memorial, in all generations, have been the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; yet thou wilt by no means clear the guilty. Thou hatest sin and lovest righteousness; and thou art angry with sinners every day. It is matter of thankfulness to us, that while this is thy character, it has pleased thee to reveal thyself as the God of patience, and to declare that judgment is thy strange work. May we not be of the number of those 'whose heart is set in them to do evil, because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily.' May the consideration of thy 'goodness lead us to repentance.' May we remember the tokens of thy displeasure against sin, exhibited for warning in ancient times. Thou didst sweep away the world of the ungodly by the great flood. Thou didst destroy with fire the cities of the plain. Thou didst send twice into captivity thy chosen but disobedient people. And at a later period, when the blood of the Lord of glory rested on them and their children, thou didst bring the destroying armies of the heathen into their land, and utterly destroy their temple and city. O teach us to learn from these events the exceeding sinfulness of sin, the importance of deliverance from its condemnation and power, and the indispensable necessity of an interest in the death of thy Son. We thank thee that salvation has been placed within our reach, and that we have been called to look unto Jesus as the 'Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world.' May we cleave to him with a lively faith, and in a state of intimate and endearing union with him; may we be enabled, by thy Spirit dwelling in us, to purify ourselves, even as thou art pure. Forbid that our privileges should lull us into security, or lead us into presumption. Let them rather quicken us to serve thee. We would remember thine ancient people the Jews, whom thou hast made a by-word among all the nations of the earth. We thank thee that there is a time foretold in thy word when thou wilt gather them into one, and when thy kindness and mercy towards them will return. Hasten that happy time. Have respect unto thine ancient covenant. Let not the thick veil of unbelief continue to blind the descendants of thy friend and servant Abraham, but let the light of the glorious gospel shine into their minds. Let 'all Israel be saved, and their sins and iniquities remembered no more.' We acknowledge thy kindness during the past day, and rejoice in the near prospect of the sabbath. Remember the heathen, and cause thy saving health to be known among them. Prosper thy cause wherever it is known, and crown it with glory. Sanctify affliction. Let it be the means of rendering savingly impressive the precious truths of thy word. Show mercy to our kindred and friends, and embrace them within the bounds of thy new and better covenant. Dwell in the midst of us.

Bless all the members of this household. May those who are more advanced be strong in faith, and may the young be fervent in piety. Prepare us for the solemn duties of the sabbath. May it be a day of triumphant power in all the congregations of thy saints. Forgive our sins, and answer our prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SIXTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XX. XXI.

REMARKS.

PSALM XX. This is evidently a prayer for the king, offered by the church. It is the duty of all the members of the church to pray for those in lawful authority. The offices of kings and other rulers are appointed for important ends under providence. If rightly discharged, they contribute signally to advance the divine glory, and to promote the prosperity of religion; while it is to be carefully borne in mind, that government, in its varied forms, is the ordinance of God, an institution which he has been pleased directly to sanction, and which possesses a peculiar sacredness, in its resemblance to his own government and supremacy, as the sovereign Lord of heaven and earth. Hence prayer for kings and other rulers is the subject of express injunction in the word of God. 'I exhort,' says Paul, writing to Timothy, 'that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority.'

In this psalm, the church prays for the protection and defence of the king, amidst the perils of war. His life, as identified with the privileges and prosperity of the people of God, was eminently useful, so that its preservation could not fail to prove a great public benefit. These blessings are prayed for as the gifts of God alone, and are connected with the acceptance of the king's own prayers and sacrifices, which he had offered before engaging in the undertaking that exposed him to danger. While the gratification of the king's desire is earnestly prayed for, the church declares God to be the only source of her confidence and hope. The safety and triumph of the king would, if vouchsafed, afford joy; but Jehovah alone was the bestower of the blessings; his name alone was the tower of strength.

At ver. 6. David expresses his firm belief that God will hear and save him. He knew that the prayers of the church have power with God, and that unreserved and affectionate confidence in him is the sure omen of final success. The heathen, trusting in mere means and an arm of flesh, were overwhelmed with discomfiture and shame, but the church, trusting in God, was delivered and crowned with victory.

PSALM XXI. As the preceding psalm was a prayer for the king, so this is an expression of gratitude for his deliverance and success. Here, as before, the church ascribes all the glory to God. He is the hearer of her prayers, the author of her triumphs. Some of the blessings granted are especially acknowledged, such as the establishment of the king's government, length of days, and the certainty of deliverance from all his enemies.

Though there can be no doubt that these psalms referred, in the first instance, to David, yet it is reasonable to suppose, both from the generally prophetic character of the book of psalms, and from the extraordinary force of many of the expressions made use of, that there was a prospective reference to the Saviour, of whom David was, in many respects, a striking type. The success of the Saviour, in his great undertaking, was the subject of frequent and fervent prayer to the church; and that success was of the most wonderful and glorious kind. He 'saw of the travail of his soul, and was satisfied.' A crown of pure gold was set upon his head, when, having risen from the dead and ascended to heaven, he sat down on the right hand of God. His 'throne is for ever and ever; a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of his kingdom.' Angels, principalities, and powers, are made subject unto him. Length of days also was bestowed upon him. David lived to a good old age, but still he died. His descendants reigned long upon his throne, but still a time came when the sceptre departed from Judah. Christ, however, is priest and king for ever. 'Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end.' He rules already in the midst of his enemies; and though there be violent opposition to his cause, yet field after field will be rescued from the power of Satan, till 'all the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ.' The name written on the vesture and the thigh of the Redeemer is, 'King of kings, and Lord of lords.' Even the last enemy, the king of terrors, will be destroyed by him; and then shall that 'saying be brought to pass, Death is swallowed up in victory.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we ascribe all praise unto thee, by whom alone kings reign, and princes decree justice. Thou art the fountain of power, and of all blessedness and honour. Thy throne is above the heavens, and angels and men, through all their ranks and degrees, are subject unto thee. Thou only givest strength and victory. Without thy blessing the mightiest are weak, and the wisest are foolish. We thank thee for the protection thou hast extended towards thy church in all past times. Thou hast raised up kings and rulers to be the instruments of thy providence in protecting and delivering thy chosen. Thou hast most graciously heard the prayers of thy people, when, with united energy, they have come up before thee in behalf of thy servants. We gratefully acknowledge these things to be proofs of thy love for the souls of men, for salvation is thy great work, to the accomplishment of which, all events and dispensations are made subservient. May we bear in mind that salvation is a personal concern, and that our true wisdom is to secure an interest in it, in the way and by the means which thou hast been pleased to appoint. When we consider what thou hast done for thy church, and that her members are only precious in and through the work of Christ, may we be led to prize that work more highly, and to rely on it more unreservedly than we have hitherto done. O give us clear and comforting views of its wisdom and sufficiency; and enable us to wait for the testimony of thy Holy Spirit, who alone can guide us into all truth. Help us to acknowledge thee as the source of all blessing, to trust entirely to thee in all our undertakings and engagements, and to be careful to give thee the glory alike of our worldly successes, and of our spiritual attainments. We rejoice that thou didst honour Christ with such wondrous victory. We would honour and serve him as the Anointed of God, the king of Zion, and the head over all things to the church. Subdue all his enemies under him. Let the wicked, both among Jews and Gentiles, be made to lie prostrate before the glories of the cross; and let the time speedily arrive when Jesus, the Mediator, will be hailed as supreme, by the people of all lands. Bless our Sovereign and all in authority over us. May they rule for thy glory. We thank thee for the return of the sabbath. Meet with thy people in their holy assemblies. Bless the church with which we are connected. Enrich her ministers with a double portion of thy Spirit. Encourage her elders in their work and labour of love. Establish all her people in their most holy faith. Bless the congregation with which we are accustomed to worship. Let thy ministering servant, who is to proclaim to us the message of life, be strengthened for his arduous duty, and honoured with tokens of success. Let thy people receive their portion of food in due season. Let the careless be awakened, and the openly wicked reclaimed. Go with us, whom thou hast mercifully preserved during the past night, to thy house of prayer, and enable us to spend this day in thy service. Graciously hear our prayers, and pardon our sins, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII. 23.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXII.

REMARKS.

This is one of those psalms, which, in all its principal parts, may be justly considered as referring to the Messiah. That it had a reference to the circumstances of David, at the time it was written, is no doubt true; but the full explanation, both of its general scope, and of many of its most remarkable expressions, can only be obtained by applying it to our Lord. The words with which it commences, were uttered by the Saviour on the cross; at ver. 16. the mode of his death is foretold in the words, 'they pierced my hands and my feet;' while at ver. 18. there is a prediction of the casting of lots upon his vesture, which was literally fulfilled on the scene of his crucifixion. This psalm is one of several, which illustrate very strikingly the manner in which, under the ancient economy, the Holy Spirit carried the views of the inspired penmen beyond their own circumstances and trials, forward to those grand subjects, alike of prophecy and of type, the person and work of our Lord.

This psalm obviously divides itself into two parts. The former, extending from ver. 1—22. describes, in forcible and graphic terms, the sufferings of the Saviour; the latter, extending from ver. 22—31. describes his exaltation and victory. Nothing can be more impressive or affecting, than the description given of his sufferings. If this psalm were to be restricted to David, we would say, that numerous and varied as his afflictions were, there is a tone of exaggeration in it, not to be easily understood, as occurring in an inspired composition. But, when it is applied to our Lord, the whole becomes as intelligible as it is striking. His sufferings were unspeakably severe. They were sufferings for the sins of his people. And at last, as the close of his sufferings drew near, and as the countenance of Jehovah was hid, he exclaimed, as he hung upon the tree, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'

The latter part of the psalm describes the exaltation and victory of our Lord, with their consequences. These were the result of the divine approbation of the Redeemer's work. They were necessary to the full accomplishment of that work; for intercession and the exercise of kingly power still remained as indispensable parts of it. They were also a reward conferred, for the honouring of the law, by rendering perfect obedience to it, and for the triumphant endurance of the curse in the room of his people. 'Wherefore God also,' says the apostle, referring to this very subject, 'hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name.' In ver. 22. the Saviour himself speaks, as is evident from the quotation of his words, in Heb. ii. 12. and, with most endearing condescension, calls his people his brethren. The exaltation and victory of our Lord, as described in this passage, were to consist in his having a church upon earth; in his glorifying God by means of that church, as he had already done by his work of humiliation and obedience; in the extension of his church to all nations, and to every class of sinners; and in the continuance of that church through all ages, as a monument of the Redeemer's triumph, and as a public testimony to the perfection of that righteousness, on which, as a foundation, the peace and hopes of the church exclusively rest. These are noble subjects of thanksgiving and praise; and well may they, to whose hearts they are precious, labour to extend the knowledge of them, that 'all the ends of the world may remember and turn to the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations worship before him.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, thou art the righteous Lawgiver and Sovereign of heaven and earth. We stand in awe of thy Majesty, which is unspeakably great. Thou art clothed with light, as with a garment. Thou art the holy One of Israel. Evil cannot dwell before thee, nor fools stand in thy presence. All thy works are holy. Thy commandment is holy, just, and good. We abase ourselves in the dust, for we have sinned against thee, and in thy sight. Though thou art great, we have not feared thy greatness, nor had respect unto thy glory. With desperate presumption we have trampled on thy law, and incurred its tremendous penalties. We are a race of sinners; the whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint. Nor can we help ourselves. We can render no sufficient answer unto thee. To all men naturally, there is only a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation. But ever praised be thy name, that thou hast had pity upon us. When we were ready to perish, thou didst come to our deliverance. Thy voice was heard declaring, 'Deliver from going down to the pit; I have found a ransom.' We bless thee for that new and better covenant which was sealed with atoning blood, and which includes in its wise provisions, pardon even to the chief of sinners, through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. We adore the manifestation of thy glory in the doing and the dying of the Saviour. 'Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us; and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.' We look back with adoring wonder and gratitude on his advent in our world: his life of sorrow, suffering, and shame; and the awful agony which preceded his death. Enable us to behold him as the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world; and, as we stand in faith at the foot of his cross, may each of us, in reliance on his infinite merit, exclaim, 'My Lord, and my God.' O that our guilt may be washed away in his blood, and our persons accepted in his righteousness; and that, as he was raised from the dead in token of the completeness of his sacri-face, we may be raised with him to newness of life, and animated with the hope of sharing in his glory. As thou hast exalted him to thy right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour; may he plead our cause there—reign over us as our spiritual King, and in us by his Spirit; and under his mediatorial care, may we show forth in our comfort and holiness, the unsearchable riches of thy grace. Fill us with the peace and joy of thy children, that we may rejoice continually in the righteousness of the Saviour, and may declare its perfection and beauty abroad, from day to day.

Let the time soon come, when all nations shall know Christ, and trust in him. Send forth the gospel with triumphant power; and, as thou hast given the government of all things into the hands of Christ, give him to reign in the hearts of all men. We thank thee for this sabbath-day, now drawing to its close. Bless a preached gospel throughout the world. Keep thy good hand around thy chosen; rapidly increase their number, and sanctify the influence of their holy examples. Dwell in the midst of us. Bless old and young with thy salvation. Let our souls be in health, and prosper before thee. Preserve us during the darkness of the night; and if spared to enter on a new day, enable us to walk in thy fear. May we remember, for our direction and comfort, the truths which we have this day heard. May a savour of divine things be kept alive upon our hearts; and growing in the purity and the heavenly-mindedness of the gospel, may men take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. Hear our prayers, and pardon all our sins, for the sake of our Redeemer. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCIV. 11.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLIV.

REMARKS.

In this chapter, Joseph continues to pursue the same line of conduct in regard to his brethren, on which, we have seen, he had already entered. It consisted of an intermixture of kindness with apparent severity, and was directed to the objects of acquiring full information as to the condition of his father and his family, recalling to his brethren's recollection the sins they had committed, humbling them under a sense of their guilt, and making trial of their affection to their father and to Benjamin. He had already found full information as to the state of his father's family, without awakening in their minds any suspicion as to who he was; but, it was proper that they should be still more deeply humbled by still severer sufferings; and especially, that it should be tried, whether they cherished towards Benjamin, who was now their father's favourite, and who had just been peculiarly distinguished by the ruler of Egypt, those feelings of envy and jealousy which had formerly marked their conduct towards Joseph, or had escaped from the dominion of these sinful passions, and now felt towards their father and brother suitably to the relation subsisting between them. Their sense of guilt which had already been impressed upon their minds by Joseph's conduct, (xlii. 21.) must have been deepened and confirmed when they were overtaken by Joseph's steward, when the cup was found in Benjamin's sack; and when Joseph proposed to retain Benjamin as a slave. This must have been very painful to them, and though they were innocent of the particular crime here laid to their charge, they justly regarded (ver. 16.) their present affliction as a punishment for former transgressions, and acknowledged God's providence and justice in the matter.

They likewise, by their conduct in regard to Benjamin, afforded conclusive evidence that they not only regretted their sinful conduct in regard to Joseph, but were now acting under very different principles. Had they been as indifferent to their father's happiness, and as destitute of paternal affection, as when they sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites, they would, on this occasion, have at once agreed to his proposal, that Benjamin should remain with him, and have returned to the land of Canaan. But, instead of this, we find that for the sake both of their father and of Benjamin, they were most desirous that their youngest brother should accompany them, and Judah, in particular, urged this upon Joseph in a speech never perhaps surpassed for its simple and affecting eloquence, and manifesting on his part the most disinterested and devoted attachment to his aged parent.

If Joseph used his cup for the purposes of divination, as seems to be implied in ver. 5. he was therein guilty of a sinful conformity to heathen superstitions, but many are of opinion, that the words 'whereby he divineth,' might be translated, 'for which he would make diligent search.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the King eternal, immortal, and invisible. Thy dominion is an everlasting dominion, and thy kingdom ruleth over all. None can stay thy hand from working, or say unto thee, What doest thou? Thou hast the hearts of all men in thy hand, and turnest them whithersoever thou wilt. Do thou humble us under a sense of our ignorance, of our entire dependence on thee, and of our unworthiness of the least of all thy mercies. Give us a deeper and more affecting sense of thy glorious perfections, of thy constant presence with us, and of thine overruling providence. May we feel more and more deeply that we are bound to acknowledge thee in all our ways, and to set thee ever before us, and be enabled, through thy Spirit, more fully and faithfully to discharge this duty. Do thou lead us to view every event in our life, and every circumstance in our situation, in connection with thee, the great ruler and disposer of all things, and in connection with the great purposes for which thou hast created and preserved us. Grant, O God, that all our afflictions and disappointments, whether traceable more immediately to thine own agency, or to the instrumentality of our fellow-men, may be made the means of impressing us with a deeper sense of sin's exceeding sinfulness, and of humbling us under a conviction of the manifold and aggravated violations of thy law, of which we have been guilty during all our past lives. May we be encouraged to confess our sins by the assurance that thou art faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. There is but one Mediator between God and man. There is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved, but that of Jesus only. But we rejoice in the assurance that thou hast laid the iniquities of us all upon him, that by his stripes we might be healed. Grant that we may know more of him, and of the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable to his death, that we may attain at last to the resurrection of life. Enable us to love him, whom we have not seen, and though now we see him not, yet believing what thou hast revealed to us concerning his present power and authority, may we rejoice in him, with a joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. Assist us, O Lord, to discharge aright, according to thy word, the various duties resulting from the relations in which we stand to each other, and to our fellow-men. Bring us more and more under the influence of that love which is the fulfilling of the law, and grant especially that we, who are now assembled before thee, may ever love one another, out of pure hearts, fervently, as thou hast given us commandment, and may be ever ready to make sacrifices of our own ease and comfort, for the promotion of one another's welfare. Blot out, O Lord, all our sins. Guide us ever by thy counsel, preserve us from all danger and from every temptation, for all that we ask is in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, whom thou hearest always. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM L. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXIV. 29—51.

REMARKS.

At ver. 29. our Saviour seems to leave the subject of the destruction of Jerusalem, which he had described in the preceding verses, and to bring before his disciples the end of the world and the final judgment. They had inquired, ver. 3. what should be the 'sign of his coming, and of the end of the world;' and whatever ideas they might attach to the words when they put the question, our Saviour, in his answer, plainly introduced both the destruction of Jerusalem and the final judgment, and gave them information concerning these events. He did so, because they were both suggested by the words of the questions proposed to him, and because the destruction of Jerusalem, the event to which mainly, if not solely, the disciples had respect when they requested information; was well fitted to be a type or symbol of the end of the world and the final judgment. There was a close resemblance, in many respects, between them. They were both great and striking manifestations of Christ's power for the accomplishment of important purposes connected with the triumph of his cause. The one was the conclusion and winding up of the Jewish, and the other of the Christian dispensation; and both were fitted to give the same views of God's character, and the principles of his moral government, and to bear, in a similar way, upon the fates of the good and the bad respectively. It is for these reasons that the two events are, in our Saviour's answer to the questions propounded to him, so closely connected together, that it is not very easy to determine precisely what was intended to apply to the one, and what to the other. Ver. 29. seems to connect these two subjects; and may be considered as giving a comprehensive summary of what was to take place in the earth, during the interval between them, in connection with the preaching of the gospel and the extension of the church. The language is plainly figurative, but the same figures are employed in other parts of scripture, such as Isaiah xiii. 10; xxiv. 23; Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8; Acts ii. 19, 20; and Rev. vi. 12—17. This figurative language is plainly intended to describe striking and important changes or revolutions in the state of public affairs, and in the general aspect of the world. Sometimes it refers to civil, and sometimes to ecclesiastical changes; sometimes to changes which were altogether excellent and salutary, and sometimes to those which, in their immediate consequences, were pernicious or destructive, but were afterwards to be overruled for good. The sun, moon, and stars are used as symbols of dignities or authorities, either in the church or in the world. Great changes have been effected in the external aspect of the world, by the diffusion of Christianity, and greater still shall yet be produced by it. From ver. 30, 31. we learn that the consummation of all things, and the end of the world, are to be ushered in by signs in heaven and by distress on earth, and that then Christ is to appear with power and great glory, to inflict fearful vengeance upon all his enemies, and to make all his chosen people supremely and everlastingly happy.

The disciples had asked information upon two points, viz. the times and the signs of his coming, and of the end of the world. Christ first describes the signs of these events, and then, in ver. 32. proceeds to advert to the times or seasons, but with somewhat more of caution or reserve. He states, in general, that the times were to be inferred from the signs already described, and that this process of inference was analogous to what they were accustomed to, with respect to natural appearances and ordinary affairs. Ver. 34. must refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, which took place about forty years after our Saviour's death. Ver. 35. may be regarded as a transition from that event to the final judgment, the period of which latter event, we are told in ver. 36. is not to be made known, and forms no part of the revelation which God has been pleased to give to man.

The remainder of the chapter, from ver. 37. contains our Saviour's practical application of the truths just declared, of the ignorance in which men were to be kept of the period of the final judgment, and which is equally suitable, as pointing out the improvement to be made of our utter ignorance and uncertainty as to the time when we may be called out of this world, and have our everlasting destiny determined. Since we are every day and every hour liable to be summoned hence, how imperatively are we called upon to be ever watchful; and how careful should we be that we may never be found breaking Christ's laws, or neglecting the objects which he has enjoined us to aim at, and thereby endangering our immortal souls. How many are there who, notwithstanding all the threatenings and warnings of God's word, live as if they knew not that Jesus Christ once tabernacled upon earth, and set before men the way of life and the path of duty; that he will come again to judge them, and that they know not how soon they may be called to give in their account?

PRAYER.

O God, thou art the hearer and the answerer of prayer, and unto thee should all flesh come. Enable us to draw near unto thee, through that new and living way which Christ has opened up, that through thy Spirit helping our infirmities, we may worship thee who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth; that with all humility we may confess our sins, and with all fervency offer up our desires, for things agreeable to thy will and needful for our salvation. We are indeed unworthy to come into thy presence, or to take thy holy name into our polluted lips. Our hearts are naturally deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. We have still a law in our members which wars against the law of our minds, and often brings us into captivity to the law of sin and of death. During this, and every other day of our past lives, we have been sinning against thee, in thought, word, and deed. It is of thy mercies that we are not consumed, and because thy compassions fail not, that we are still in the land of the living, and in the place of hope. When there was no eye to pity us, and no hand to help us, then thine own eye pitied us, and thy right hand brought salvation. In the fulness of time thou didst send forth thy Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem us who were under the law, and thou art now, in Christ, reconciling a guilty world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. Herein, O God, is love, not that we have loved thee, but that thou hast loved us, and given thine only begotten Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Grant, Lord, that we, beholding thee as thou art revealed in the face of thy Son, may be constrained to love thee with all our hearts, to devote ourselves to thy service, and to labour for the promotion of thy cause. While we look back to Christ's humiliation, and sufferings, and death as the only ground of our hope and confidence, and enter habitually through faith into that within the veil, whither he, as our forerunner, is for us entered, may we also be enabled to look forward to the period when he shall come a second time, without sin, unto salvation; to be admired in his saints, and held in reverence of them that believe, as well as to take vengeance on those who know him not, and obey not his gospel. Thou hast appointed a day in which thou wilt judge the world in righteousness, and in which we must all appear before thy judgment-seat, to give an account of our actions. We know not when this day may come, but thou hast told us that as death leaves us, so judgment finds us, and we are daily reminded that in the midst of life we are in death. Enable us, under the influence of these truths, impressed and applied by thy Spirit, to be ever watching and praying, lest we should enter into temptation. Make it, O Lord, the great desire of our hearts, and the object of our most fervent prayers, and strenuous exertions, that at whatever time the Lord may come, he may find us engaged in his service, exhibiting the same mind which was also in him, and walking even as he also walked. May our minds be deeply impressed with the fearful consequences of being called hence while still impenitent and unbelieving, and may the terrors of the Lord concur with a deep sense of thy redeeming mercy, in constraining us to give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, and to be ever pressing towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Hear us and answer us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXVI. 6.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLV.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains the account of Joseph at length making himself known to his brethren, and is, in the highest degree, beautiful and interesting. He could scarcely have made himself known to them, without referring to the manner in which their intercourse had terminated when they sold him into Egypt; but knowing that this discovery would probably fill them with the apprehension that he might now take vengeance upon them, he, with great kindness and delicacy, quickly passed on to a different aspect of that transaction, viz. that it was to be regarded as God's doing, and intended by him for promoting their happiness. 'So now, it was not you that sent me hither, but God.' He did not, of course, intend by this statement to express any conviction of his own, that they had been guilty of no sin in selling him, or to lead them to think lightly of their offence; but it was the natural suggestion of kindness and affection, at a moment when they might be supposed to be deeply affected by a sense of guilt and danger, to turn their thoughts to a more pleasing aspect of that event. It was true that God had intended, in this way, to provide for the final accomplishment of his own merciful and gracious designs in regard to the family of Jacob, and that he had now overruled it for securing that end. But neither this consideration, nor any other, could affect the moral character of the transaction, as a deed done by Joseph's brethren; it could not affect their responsibility and guilt, and should not in the least have diminished their compunction. God maketh the wrath of man to praise him, and restraineth the remainder of his wrath. Even our sinful actions are comprehended in the great scheme of God's providence, and when they are reflected upon, should be viewed in connection with his agency in permitting and overruling them. They may, when we look back upon them, be regarded as being, in a certain sense, dispensations of God's providence, which we are called upon to improve, as fitted to call forth certain feelings, and to enforce certain lessons. But though this view of them may and should be taken and improved, we must carefully guard against allowing ourselves to imagine that, in consequence of God's superintending and overruling agency, our responsibility and guilt are at all diminished. Joseph's brethren had already experienced important advantages from those results which God had brought out of their sin, and had the prospect of deriving still further benefits from the same source, but this did not make their conduct, in selling their brother, less heinous; it should not have made them less humble and penitent, but should rather have contributed to make them walk softly all their days. The history of Joseph, of the conduct of his brethren towards him, and of his conduct towards them, strikingly illustrates some of the principles of God's moral government, and especially his bringing good out of evil, and overruling all events and all influences, for the fulfilment of his predictions and the accomplishment of his designs. He sees the end from the beginning; he has the hearts of all men in his hand; he controls every influence, the most powerful and the most feeble; he is constantly providing for the accomplishment of his own designs, and in his own time and way he will fully effect them, though probably by a series of events which no human wisdom could foresee, and no human power could control. Have not all of us, when we survey the way through which God has led us, abundant ground to praise him for his great forbearance and kindness, in making not only our afflictions but even our sins instrumental in advancing his own glory and our true welfare? And should not this consideration, while it does not in the least diminish our hatred of sin, and our earnest desire to be wholly delivered from its pollution, produce more cordial resignation to his will, and lead his people to wait on him with all humility and confidence, assured that yet they shall have good reason to praise, and that all things shall be made to work together for their good.

PRAYER.

O Lord God Almighty, enable us to approach thee with profound reverence and godly fear, regarding thee as glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, and continually doing wonders, and remembering that thou knowest our very thoughts afar off, and art intimately acquainted with all our ways. There is no searching of thine understanding. We can never, at any moment or in any circumstances, depart from thy presence or flee from thy Spirit. When we contemplate thy constant presence with us, thine unlimited dominion, and thine immaculate holiness, it becomes us to be ashamed and confounded before thee. To us, indeed, belong only shame and confusion of face, because we are sinners, but with thee there is forgiveness, that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption, that thou mayest be sought after. Thou hast looked upon us with compassion, in our low and lost estate. Thou didst say, Save from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom. Thou hast laid our help on one able and mighty to save. Thou hast set forth thy Son to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, and when he had by himself purged our sins, thou didst raise him up to thine own right hand, and gave him glory, that our faith and our hope might be in him. Enable us to place our sole reliance on what he has done and suffered in the room of guilty men. May we be firmly persuaded that he is able and willing to save, even unto the uttermost, all that come unto thee through him; and renouncing every other ground of hope, and abandoning, henceforward, every attempt to establish a righteousness of our own, may we rest on him alone for salvation, as he is set before us, and offered to us, in the gospel. We would count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, and desire to be willing to bear the loss of all things, that we may win him, and be found in him. May we cordially exult in the assurance, that he who once died for sins and rose again for our justification, is now seated at thy right hand, King of kings and Lord of lords, and will make all things to work together for good to them that love him. May we delight to trace thy wisdom, and forbearance, and kindness, in thy dealings with thy people in every age. And assured that thou canst easily bring good out of evil, and that they who put their trust in thee shall never be put to shame, may we become every day more resigned to thy will, and more disposed to regard with thankfulness, all the dispensations of thy providence concerning us. Uphold and comfort us by the assurance that, though clouds and darkness are sometimes round about thee, yet that justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. May we dwell more habitually upon all thy great and precious promises, and thus be encouraged to lay aside every weight, and to run with patience the race that has been set before us, until we attain to the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls. Hear our prayers, forgive all our sins, and do for us above what we can ask or think, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXVII. 34.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXV. 1—31.

REMARKS.

The statements contained in these verses are intended to illustrate the nature of Christ's kingdom, the principles on which its blessings are conferred and enjoyed, and the course which, in consequence, men ought to pursue, that they may ultimately share in its rewards; and the aspects in which the kingdom of heaven is here represented are powerfully fitted to deepen our sense of responsibility, and to call forth diligence and watchfulness. This illustration is conveyed by means of two parables, the parable of the ten virgins, and the parable of the talents. These two parables, like most of those delivered by our Saviour, are substantially appeals to men's natural sense of what is fair and just and reasonable. Every one must be constrained to condemn the conduct of the foolish virgins as here described, to regard it as in the highest degree imprudent and dangerous, and must be satisfied that their exclusion from the marriage feast, with all the miseries it implied, was perfectly reasonable in itself, and was the natural result of the folly which they had chosen to manifest; their neglect to make due preparation for what might every moment occur, exposed them to inevitable exclusion; and severe as was the punishment, and inexorable as was the judge, it is plain that as they had sowed so were they now reaping, and that they were themselves alone to blame for the fate which had overtaken them. We profess, like these virgins, to have gone forth to meet the bridegroom, to be aware that he may come to us at any moment, and, without warning, settle instantly and irrevocably our eternal destiny. And, in these circumstances, it is the height of folly to let an hour pass over our heads unprepared, for that which may every moment occur, and which, if it do find us unprepared, will sink us in everlasting misery.

Both these parables are intended to impress upon us a deep sense of our responsibility for the mode in which we spend our time, exercise our faculties, and improve our opportunities. In addition to this general lesson, which both of them forcibly inculcate, the parable of the ten virgins is designed more immediately to enforce the necessity of vigilance; while that of the talents is intended to impress the necessity of diligence. No one can fail to see how strikingly the condition of men in this world, as the subjects of God's moral government, who are one day to be brought to trial for all things done in the body, is set forth in the history of the servants who received different talents from their master; and how fair and reasonable was his conduct. And if men are really placed in this situation, and if such infinitely important consequences are suspended, and that most reasonably and righteously, upon their acting suitably to their condition and obligations, should not this representation bring home to our minds, with peculiar power, the fearful danger, even of sloth and negligence, in every thing connected with God and eternity, and the necessity of living to the glory of God, and in the view of the judgment-day.

What we know of God's character and purposes, and of the relation in which we stand to him, imposes upon us an imperative obligation to do our utmost that he may be glorified, and that we and others may be saved. We can give no good excuse for not bringing forth fruit, and if we were to attempt it, we might by our own confessions and professions be covered with confusion. It was quite just and reasonable to condemn and punish the servant who had hid his talent in the earth. And it is quite sufficient that we 'have not,' i. e. that we have done nothing for effecting the purposes for which our talents were given us, in order to warrant and secure our condemnation, our expulsion from God's presence, and our eternal ruin.

PRAYER.

Wherewithal, O Lord, shall we come before thee, or bow ourselves before the most high God? We are sinful dust and ashes. We have been all guilty of the folly of departing from the fountain of living waters, and of hewing out to ourselves broken cisterns that can hold no water. We have been spending our money for that which is not bread, and our labour for that which satisfieth not. But thou hast no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that they should turn from their ways and live. Thou hast made Christ to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Thou art now graciously inviting and beseeching us to be reconciled unto thee through Christ, and art assuring us, that them that come unto thee, thou wilt in nowise reject. We must lament that we have neglected the great salvation, and paid little regard to him who was speaking to us from heaven. We have not been duly concerned to understand the nature of Christ's kingdom, and to live like the faithful subjects of him who reigns in it. Thou hast given us all many talents, capacities, and opportunities for promoting thy glory, advancing thy cause, and securing our own true welfare. To thee we owe all our worldly substance, and all our sources of influence. Thou hast appointed the boundaries of our habitations, and determined all the events which have befallen us. Thou hast fully made known to us thy will. Thou hast imposed upon us the most powerful obligations to glorify thee in our bodies, and in our spirits, and to devote ourselves, and all that we have, to the promotion of thy purposes. And yet, O Lord, we must confess that we have forgotten thee, the God that made us, and lightly esteemed thee, the rock of our salvation. We have not spent our time, or employed our worldly substance, or exercised our faculties under a due sense of our responsibility, and for the great ends for which they were bestowed upon us. We have no excuse to offer unto thee for our neglect and disobedience. We confess our guilt and folly. We beseech thee to look upon us, not as we are in ourselves, but in the face of thine own anointed One, and for his sake, to heal all our backslidings, to receive us graciously, and to love us freely, and let our iniquity be taken away. May we become much more diligent in thy service, and much more attentive to the work which thou hast given us to do. Enable us to guard carefully against every thing that may tempt us to neglect the salvation of our souls, or to fail in the faithful and diligent improvement of all our talents. Impress us at all times with the conviction, that while we are to occupy till Christ come, we must then give an account of all things done in the body, and have our everlasting condition determined by the improvement we have made of the talents and privileges thou hast bestowed. May all that we have learned concerning thee, and thy character, impress us with a deeper sense of our obligations to be ever abounding in thy work; and do thou communicate to us, such supplies of grace and strength, as that we may all at length, having finished our course, and kept the faith, receive the crown of life, and be admitted into the joy of our Lord. Blot out, O Lord, all our sins, supply abundantly all our wants, and preserve us in safety into thy kingdom, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 1—10.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Joseph, being a faithful servant, would bestow nothing on his father and brethren without Pharaoh's knowledge and consent. Being a sensible man, as well as an affectionate son and brother, he was not ashamed of his kindred in their necessitous circumstances. Hence he informed Pharaoh of their arrival, and took and presented some of them to the Egyptian monarch. Pharaoh being deeply sensible of Joseph's valuable services, received Jacob and his sons with all kindness. When Jacob was brought into Pharaoh's presence, with the privilege of old age and the authority of a patriarch and prophet, he blessed the king of Egypt, 'The Lord bless thee, and keep thee.' And when the king, struck with his venerable appearance, asked him of his age, Jacob spoke of his life as a pilgrimage, referring to his many wanderings without a fixed habitation, but more especially to this world being a place of pilgrimage in relation to his eternal inheritance. He spoke of the days of his pilgrimage as both few and evil. They were fewer than those of Abraham and Isaac, the former of whom lived 175 years, and the latter 180 years; and they were evil days, that is, full of sorrows, with which Jacob was visited for his sinful deception of his aged father, Isaac. Jacob and his children, placed in Rameses, understood to have been a district of the land of Goshen, were amply provided for by Joseph there. Meanwhile Joseph wisely and faithfully discharged the important duty devolved on him, of dealing out corn to the Egyptians. But he does not appear to have availed himself of having bought them for bread, to reduce them to a state of personal slavery, as some have thought. And he restored them their lands again, only stipulating that a fifth part of the produce should, in lieu of all taxes, belong to the king for ever; no hard condition, surely, in a country where, by reason of the fertility of the ground, the people were thankful to hold lands on condition of retaining one half of the produce. Joseph also gave them seed, a token that the famine was near an end; an intimation from a quarter that they had already found worthy of credit, that they might now sow in the assurance of an abundant increase. Jacob, finding his death approaching, desired to be buried in Canaan, in testimony of his faith in the promise of God, that his posterity should one day possess that country. And when Joseph swore to comply with his wishes, he bowed himself on his bed's head, giving thanks to God, and in token of his full satisfaction.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Nothing can be more beautiful than to see a son, whom providence has advanced in the world, honouring and cherishing an aged parent, and, with united kindness and rectitude, doing good to those relatives and friends who have been less successful in life than himself. Am I always kind to my relatives, never ashamed of them in their honest poverty, and so conducting myself as that my relatives never need to be ashamed of me? Every one should have some honest, useful employment. It is not creditable, it is even sinful, to be idle. Every hour must be accounted for. How like is our present life to a pilgrimage! How many changes do we witness and experience! Onward we move from journey to journey. How few the total sum of the days of this pilgrimage! Often how full of evils, of trials, of sorrows! But, what then? It cometh speedily to an end; and if the evils and sorrows end with it, we shall soon be quit of them. Let me live, then, let me feel, as a stranger and pilgrim here below, journeying cheerfully along, leaning on Christ, guided by the Holy Spirit, with my desires fixed on the rest that remaineth for the people of God. When in a situation of trust, let us be guided by a principle of strict integrity, not giving anything away without the permission of our employer, even as Joseph did not, at his own hand, provide for his kindred; and using all things intrusted to us to the fair advantage of those whose stewards we are, even as Joseph dispensed for Pharaoh's interest, not indeed without a wise and kind regard for the welfare of the people, the stores of corn that he had taken up with Pharaoh's money in the seven plenteous years. Am I thus honest, conscientious, faithful? When the hour of our dissolution is perceived to be at hand, may we, like Jacob, be enabled to manifest our confidence in the faithfulness of God. May his promises then support and comfort the parting spirit. Assured that he will care for us after death, as well as in this life, may we bow with composure and joy to his summons to leave this world.

PRAYER.

O Lord, most mighty, most gracious, we would bless thee at all times; we would magnify thy name together. Clouds and darkness are round about thee, but justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. Thou givest not an account unto any, but in exercising thy absolute sovereignty, thou doest all things well. Marvellously and graciously didst thou deal with thy people of old, God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. And art thou not the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, without variableness or shadow of turning? We thank thee for the fulfilment of the promise given to Abraham of a seed in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed. That, in accomplishment of that promise, thine only Son took our nature, and obeyed and suffered the just for the unjust. We thank thee that Jesus Christ hath brought in an everlasting righteousness. Holy Spirit, take of the things of Christ, and communicate them to us. Communicate spiritual life to those of us whom thou mayest see to be yet dead in trespasses and sins. Fan the feeble spark into a flame. Renew and sanctify each one of us, day by day. Write thy law on our hearts, and make us a willing people in the day of thy power. Yea, Lord, let thy law be a light unto our feet, and a lamp unto our path. May thy statutes be our delight and our counsellors. O God, bless, for our instruction and direction, the portion of thy word that we have just read. Enable us to cultivate kindly affections one to another. Unite in the bonds of Christian love, those whom thou hast united by the ties of nature and of blood. Make us forgiving and kind, as Joseph was. Make us faithful and just, as well as kind, and affectionate, and tender-hearted, even as Joseph was faithful in all the house of Pharaoh. And as in thy mercy (glory be to thy name for it) we have One greater than Joseph to provide for us, O may we be submissive and obedient to him who is our Saviour, placing confidence in his wisdom, and power, and love. Throughout the pilgrimage of life, and amidst the solemnities of death, may we remember and be cheered by thy promises. We rejoice that they are all yea and amen in Christ Jesus; and that sooner shall heaven and earth pass away, than one jot or tittle of them fail. If thou bringest us to hoary hairs, wilt thou not be with us? If thou takest us early away, shall not that be gain? O may thy presence go with us in all the journeyings of our pilgrimage, to protect and guide us. Be with us to-day in every step we take, in every duty to which we may be called, and whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, may we do all to thy glory. Hear and answer us, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE L.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXV. 31—46.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Here is a description of a very awful and glorious scene, which every one of us shall witness, and in which we are all personally and deeply interested. We are taught the certainty, and something of the manner of the judgment. The Son of man, robed in glory, girt about with power, attended by the holy angels, and seated on a throne of glory, is to be the judge. All nations are to be summoned before him; the inhabitants of every clime; the human race of every rank, of all ages, of every generation. The dead shall be raised. Not one sleeper in the dust, of the many millions who die between Adam and the judgment-day, shall be overlooked or a-waiting. Then we are told that the judge will separate that countless multitude into two, and only two, great divisions. This separation will be made with unerring precision, according to the real character of every individual. There will be no mistake, no partiality, no injustice; for however impossible it is for man to judge correctly concerning his fellow-men, the Son of man is thoroughly acquainted with the nature of every motive, and thought, and word, and act. Does not this knowledge, possessed and exercised by Jesus Christ as the judge of all, prove him to be really and truly God, for God claims it as his own prerogative to search the heart and know the thoughts of the children of men? Amos iv. 13. Those included in the one great division, shall be manifested to be the children of the kingdom, by the judge proclaiming before all the fruits of their faith and love to him; the kindnesses done by them, for his sake, to poor afflicted believers, whom he calls his brethren, and which kindnesses he counts done to himself. The other great division shall be manifested to be the children of perdition, meriting the awful doom pronounced on them, not merely by the proclamation of their gross sins, but by publishing their neglect of Christ's people, and so their neglect of Christ. And observe that the duration of the punishment of the wicked, and of the happiness of the righteous, is expressed by the same word, and is declared to be everlasting. If the righteous are to enjoy everlasting life, the wicked are to endure everlasting punishment. Hence, this passage contains the doctrine of eternal punishment, which some, to their everlasting ruin, it is to be feared, deny, and affect to disbelieve.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

What wonderful and important events have yet to befall us! What scenes have we to witness! What feelings to experience! Death, the resurrection, the judgment, eternity! Are we prepared for these things? How may I peacefully close my eyes in death, believing that when I open them again, it shall be in the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, sitting in judgment on my soul? Soon I die, either God's friend or God's enemy; and on a great day approaching, I am to receive the public judgment either of life everlasting, or of everlasting punishment. Does it not concern me to know what I am, and what awaits me? O my soul, let me consider this matter! None but a pardoned sinner can die in peace, and receive, on the day of judgment, the award of everlasting life. But no sinner is pardoned except by a sovereign act of God's mercy, and God's mercy is exercised only through Christ's atonement and intercession; and the effect of it, so exercised, is to produce faith in the sinner; faith that worketh by love; love first to Christ Jesus, and then to those that are his, manifested by obeying Christ's commands, and doing good and showing kindness to all, especially to Christ's people. Am I such a pardoned sinner? If I am not, then sure as the Lord liveth, woe is me. If I am, then I can look forward with peace and joy to the solemn scenes and events through which I have to pass. Even the great judgment-day will be to me a day of vast enjoyment. Nevertheless, neither now, nor on that day, can I have ought of which to boast. For it is my Saviour alone who, by his grace and Spirit, worketh in me, and by me, every one of those things which, at the judgment, he, from the judgment throne, will commend, and for which he will reward me, from the foundation to the top-stone of the work of my salvation; therefore, let the praise be to grace, grace. Let us learn from this passage, that though we may have little money to give, visits of love, and acts of attention, and words of kindness to the poor and afflicted, for Christ's sake, indicate a love to the Redeemer which he notices with approbation.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, we adore thee as the greatest, the wisest, and the best of beings. We thank thee for the injunction to be careful for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, to make our requests known unto thee. Seated on a throne of grace, thou hast ordained thy Son Jesus Christ the mediator of a covenant with thy people, which is ordered in all things and sure. But, O God, we would remember that, though now seated on a throne of grace, thou wilt one day appear seated on a throne of judgment. Deeply impress on our minds the fact that we are rapidly ripening for the judgment. Lay bare to us our natural unpreparedness for a day of strict impartial judgment. Lord, what can the spiritually dead expect, but to be left in the power of death eternal? But, most merciful God, we adore thee that thou hast made provision, by the scheme of redemption, for communicating spiritual life to those who are spiritually dead. We bless and adore thee for that great mystery of the gospel, the union of believers with their Saviour. O unite us to Christ, that we may be partakers of the spiritual and divine life that is in him. May we, being members of Christ, be obedient and submissive to our glorious Head. May we, being members one of another, love each other as we do ourselves. Incline and enable us to do good to all as we have opportunity, especially to such as are of the household of faith. Being the disciples of a Master who went about continually doing good, may it be as our meat and our drink, to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and visit and comfort the poor and afflicted. Enable us to manifest the reality and strength of our gratitude to Jesus Christ, by abounding in works of faith and labours of love. O give us such a view of our obligations to our Redeemer, as shall quell every feeling of spiritual pride, and impress us with the conviction that, when we have done all, we are unprofitable servants. O Lord, what are we that thou shouldst put it in our power to do any kindness to others? Blessed be thy name that, when we have nothing else to give, thou acceptest of our smallest acts of kindness done for thy sake. Verily, O Lord, this day's thoughts, and words, and acts, will make a part of our account at the great judgment. Pardon what thy searching eye has seen amiss; for the sake of Jesus Christ blot it out. Give thy blessing on what we have been enabled to attempt in discharge of the duties required of us. Accept of our thanks for the mercies we have received and for the comforts we have enjoyed. And now, O Lord, we would lay us down in peace, and sleep: do thou make us dwell in safety, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE II.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Joseph's two sons were now rather above twenty years of age, and he took them with him when called to the death-bed of his father. Jacob summoned all his remaining strength for the interview, and perhaps he was endowed with supernatural vigour, to enable him to utter the prophecies with which he was inspired. And first, he related the Lord's promise given to him at Luz or Bethel, in early life: when he was fleeing from Esau, to take refuge with his mother's kindred. Assured of the fulfilment of that promise, he declared the adoption of Joseph's two sons into the number of his sons; so that each of them should be the head of a tribe. This identified these Egypt-born children of Joseph with the rest of Jacob's descendants, and would have its influence in hindering Joseph and his family from attempting to root themselves in Egypt by purchasing estates, and conforming to the manners and worship of the Egyptians. Manasseh and Ephraim were presented by Joseph to his father to receive his blessing. The being whose blessing Jacob invoked on the young men, he called 'God, before whom his fathers, Abraham and Isaac, did walk; the God who had fed himself; the angel who had redeemed him from all evil.' This being was our Lord Jesus Christ, and this is one of the places which teach, that it was the second person of the Trinity who appeared to, and was known by, the patriarchs and other Old Testament saints. In Mal. iii. 1. Christ is called the messenger, or angel of the covenant. Also, Exod. xiv.

(compare ver. 19. with ver. 24.) Besides, Christ from the beginning was the only Mediator of reconciliation, and of all the covenants between God and man: no communion between God and man, but by him. Therefore, all the appearances and acts of deity towards men, were by this Mediator. Jacob divinely directed, persisted in laying the hand of honour, the right hand, on the head of Ephraim, the younger son; though Joseph attempted to rectify what he supposed his father's mistake, and prophesied the superiority of the tribe of Ephraim over that of Manasseh; which superiority afterwards very manifestly took place.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Important lessons may be learnt at a death-bed, especially the death-bed of a believer. Have we been privileged to witness such? If we have, were we solemnized and instructed by them? Better the portion of Ephraim and Manasseh in being joined to Jacob's house, and made sharers of the fortunes of Jacob's posterity, than anything that could have fallen to their lot in Egypt, as the sons of him who was next to Pharaoh in the kingdom. And better far, a portion with God's people, though joined with humble worldly circumstances, than the greatest possessions and honours of the ungodly. God often grants to his people beyond their hopes: Jacob had not thought to see Joseph's face, and yet God showed him Joseph's seed. Note God's sovereignty in preferring the younger son before the elder. In everything, God doeth according to his own will. Note also, the subjection of the natural affections of Jacob and Joseph to the divine will: they acquiesced at once in the divine arrangement regarding Ephraim and Manasseh. However difficult and painful it may sometimes be, to bring our natural affections into entire subjection to the appointments of providence, we must observe, through divine grace, to do so. Above all, let us, by our instructions and examples, endeavour to lead all the objects of our natural affections to Christ, and by the frequent fervent prayer of faith, commend them to his care; then we can easily accord in all the divine appointments concerning them, for we know that all things work together for good to those who love God. It is God alone who can efficiently bless; yet, words of blessing from a pious person's mouth are not to be despised, for they are the prayer of a righteous man, which availeth much. How very comforting to a dying saint to be able to leave his children and relatives to the care of his covenant God; to be able to say in the confidence of humble faith, 'Behold I die, but God shall be with you.' May this comfort be ours, when to us the solemn hour of death arrives.

PRAYER.

Almighty Jehovah, in whose hand our life is, we would come to thee this morning by that new and living way which thou hast appointed, even by Jesus Christ. Behold, O God, our Shield; look on the face of thine Anointed, and be well pleased with us in him. Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive all honour, and glory, and praise, and blessing. Thou Lamb of God who takest away the sins of the world, we rejoice in thine exaltation and glory. Halleluiah! he who died for our sins on Calvary, hath now on his vesture and on his thigh, a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords. Lord Jesus, we trust in thee. Enable us rightly to understand and value the blessedness of being numbered with thy people. May we even count the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt. May we endure the difficulties and hardships of the Christian life, as seeing him who is invisible. May we look not to the things that are seen and temporal, but to the things that are unseen and eternal. Keep us mindful of thy promises, O faithful God, and may it be our strength to rest on them, and our joy to declare them in the land of our pilgrimage. And as thou art justly entitled, in the exercise of thy sovereign wisdom, to cross our inclination, and order events very differently from our judgment, may we learn and practise submission to thy will in all things. Our covenant God, we earnestly beseech thee, become the covenant God of every member of our family, and of all who are near and dear to us: then, O how safe shall they be, and how satisfied and happy shall we be; for, do not all things work together for good to them who love thee? May we all be helpers of one another's faith, and live together as fellow-heirs of heaven.

O Lord, we bear about with us bodies of sin and death. May we die daily. Let the instances of mortality that we witness, lead us to lay to heart our own latter end. We bless thee for the records of thy people's triumph over death, which we find in thy word: for the instances of it also which we have witnessed. And O, when our own dying hour cometh, let thy joy be then in our heart, and thy praises on our lips. Like Jacob, thy servant, let our faculties then be entire; and let us be strengthened to bear our testimony in the presence of beloved relatives, to the power and preciousness of the gospel salvation. We cast all our cares on thee this day. Keep us mindful of our dependence on thee, and give us grace to ask thy counsel and blessing in every step and duty of this day. With united thanksgivings for the mercies of the past night, we commend ourselves to thy keeping and guidance, and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXV.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXVI. 1—35.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The triumphal entry of our Lord into Jerusalem having indicated a popular feeling in his favour, the Jewish rulers, though eager for his destruction, had determined to defer their attempt against him till after the passover, lest there should be an uproar of the people. The cry, Crucify him, crucify him, showed how little they had to fear on this behalf. It is understood to have been Mary, the sister of Lazarus, who anointed Jesus at Bethany. The resolution of the chief priests, to attempt nothing against Jesus till after the passover was soon overthrown, when Judas Iscariot, influenced by a strong desire of gain, proposed to betray him into their hands for a sum of money. In the evening, we find Jesus calm and steadfast, seated at the paschal supper with all his disciples around him. There he plainly told, that one of the twelve should betray him: thus showing Judas that he was aware of his design, and preparing the other disciples for what was about to take place. Then he showed who was to be the traitor, and intimated that traitor's tremendous guilt. Note, here is a proof of the eternity of hell's torments, for, if the sufferings of Judas were ever to terminate, and never-ending happiness succeed, it could not be said that it had been good for him that he had never been born. After the Paschal lamb had been eaten, the Lord's Supper was instituted, to commemorate, throughout the ages of the New Testament church, that death which the passover prefigured, during the times of the Jewish economy. When our Lord said of the bread, 'This is my body,' and of the wine, 'This is my blood,' he spoke figuratively, as he did when he said, 'I am the door—I am the way.' He meant, this is the representation of my body and blood. Hence, the popish doctrine of transubstantiation, which teaches that the bread and the wine are converted by the priest's consecration into the real body and blood of Christ, has no foundation in scripture, as it has none in reason:—as a further proof of which, observe that the wine, after consecration, is called by our Lord himself, 'The fruit of the vine.' 'This is my blood of the New Testament;' that is, this wine represents my blood which is to be shed as realizing and confirming the new covenant, with all its blessings to you. This drinking of new wine with his disciples in his Father's kingdom, means his partaking with them in heaven, of those pure satisfying joys which are set forth under the figure of new wine. The papists pervert this sacrament of the Supper in these three points: holding transubstantiation—refusing the cup to all save the priests, for which they have no scripture warrant—and giving an unbroken wafer instead of broken bread.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

God maketh the wrath of man to praise him; yea, the deeds of the wicked to forward the decrees of his counsel, though like the Jewish priests, when consulting and bargaining for the death of Christ, they think not so. He deriveth praise also from the faith and love of humble affectionate disciples. Should we not devote our best—our all, to that kind Redeemer who laid down his life for our sakes? Some, even of those who profess to be Christ's followers say, Why all this? What need of it? But Christ approves of it, however humble the individual, and intrinsically valueless the gift. More precious the memorial of that affectionate woman's manifestations of her love, than the notoriety of chief priests and rulers achieved by crucifying the Son of God. We cannot show kindness to Jesus Christ personally, but he has told us, that what is done to his people, he counts done to himself. How insignificant the rewards given to the workers of iniquity! a moment's gratification for ruining a fellow-creature for time and for eternity! Nay, only thirty pieces of silver for betraying to death the Lord of glory. How dreadful the real recompense of every sin! An eternity of woe unutterable, so that it had been better for the sinner that he had never been born. How sorrowful and how jealous of ourselves should it make us, to know that so many of Christ's professing followers betray him, and bring disgrace on the profession of gospel doctrines. How extraordinary the love of Christ to his people! Knowing that Judas was to betray him—knowing that many a follower in after ages would do the same, with his own dreadful agonies in immediate prospect, he devised and instituted a feast of love, to refresh and comfort his saints till he should come again. The intrusion of the traitor then, and of hypocrites throughout ages to come, which he clearly foresaw, cooled not his love to his own. Richly he has provided for them, and if traitors and hypocrites presumptuously intrude themselves into the children's table, they must bear their iniquity. Nevertheless, let us all examine ourselves, for the heart is deceitful. Let us distrust our own strength, and be strong only in the Lord.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, what shall we render unto thee for all thine unmerited kindness? Thy mercies are new to us every morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Thou makest the outgoings of the evening and the morning to rejoice over us. May we see the hand of our reconciled Father in every comfort we enjoy. We bewail the corruption of our heart—the perverseness of our will—the sinfulness of our conduct. How much of each hast thou this day seen in every one of us? O for Christ's sake, grant a free forgiveness. Cleanse thou us, and we shall be clean. Enable us in every way to show our love to the blessed Saviour. Let us never be ashamed of manifesting the sense that we entertain of his excellency. Suffer us not to deny him; enable us to confess him before men. O Lord, we mourn over the terrible depravity of our fallen nature as exhibited by the chief priests of the Jews, and by that disciple who betrayed his Master. Let us not forget that the same root of corruption is in us. Blessed be God for restraining grace, that may have prevented the gross out-breakings of this corruption. Lord, cleanse thou us also from secret sins. O give us a tender conscience and a humble spirit. Teach us to be very distrustful of ourselves, and to place full trust in thee. O Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that we love thee. By thy grace and Spirit maintain that love warm and vigorous. Without a continual supply from thee, most gracious Lord, it would languish and decay. O let none of us, like Peter, shrink from acknowledging our connection with Jesus of Nazareth; though we should die for thee, we would not deny thee. For, blessed Saviour, didst thou not die for us? Didst thou not remember us with a most tender affection, even when thine own terrible agonies were very near at hand? Enable us rightly to call to remembrance thy dying love, especially as often as we sit down at the communion table. May the love of Christ constrain us to love him who first loved us, and to manifest that love all day long, and every day by a holy life and conversation. Let us be neither traitorous nor self-confident disciples; but create in us a clean heart, and renew in us a right spirit, and perfect thy strength in our weakness. And now, Lord, draw thou the curtains of safety around us. Let no sins prevail against us: let no evil or danger come near our dwelling or persons this night. Refresh us with slumber, and when we awake, may we be with thee. O Lord, hear, forgive, and do, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE II. 3.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS XLIX.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains a variety of predictions, uttered by the patriarch Jacob in the prospect of his departure; and that at a season when his words were fitted to make the deepest impression upon those to whom they were addressed, and which, therefore, were uttered at that season, as made choice of by the divine Spirit, to give to them that peculiar measure of interest and solemnity which is usually commanded by whatever falls from the lips of those who speak as dying men, and under the impression that they are soon to go the way of all the earth. And, irrespective of the influence which his words were fitted to have from this circumstance, the best effects were produced by the part which, on this occasion, Jacob was called to act; for, as a man whose heart was touched by the grace of God, who was now ending his life in peace, and speaking of the divine doings that were to happen to his posterity,—who was teaching them no less piously how to die, than he had before taught them how piously to live,—and in addition to the inheritance which his affection was bequeathing them, was now leaving them a legacy more precious still, the efficacy of all his prayers, and the memory of many virtues. What he here did say to his children was calculated to come most impressively home to them. Brightening the last hours of his saint with the richest display of his power and presence, and enabling him to discover severally to his sons the things concerning them that should be hereafter, Jacob was an instrument in God's hand, of reproof to some of them, of joyful comfort to others, of instruction to them all. The predictions here uttered, regarding each tribe, are full of meaning, and it would require a very lengthened commentary to do justice to their exposition. That regarding Judah, in particular, is deserving of special attention, for it fixes the genealogy of the Redeemer, pointing out the tribe whence he was to descend.

But the prediction, while it showed that he was to spring from the posterity of Judah, showed, over and above this, several things regarding the character and pretensions of the Messiah. Was Judah, for instance, one who, as ver. 8. tells us, was to be the object of praise? How true this of him who was there predictively spoken of, for did not God praise him, and often give to him the testimony of his acceptance? Did not the angels praise him, and, with their songs of pious psalmody, join together in a new acclamation of joyful applause to his honour, when, in Bethlehem, he was born king of the Jews? Did not the Spirit praise him, and give to his work the homage of his own co-operation, by carrying its blessings home to the hearts of those for whom it was intended! Did not the heavenly inhabitants all praise him, and, loud as the voice of many waters, were they not heard by the apostle John, celebrating him, in the most fluent strains, as worthy to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and blessing! Did not those, who were even strangers to his grace, and enemies to his glory, all praise him, when, acting, as they seem to have done, under a supernatural impulse, the multitude suddenly filled the air with hosannas, and signaled our Lord's last entry into Jerusalem? Nay, are there not in every age, a select company employed in singing the praises of the Redeemer, or magnifying the riches of his goodness for what he hath done for their souls? Or again, is it said of the tribe of Judah that it shall be successful and victorious in war; that his hand should be on the neck of his enemies? And how literally was this realized in Christ! Or yet again, is it predicted regarding the Messiah, that to him shall the gathering of the people be? Well, then, has it not been so in every age? Or, finally, is it said, at ver. 11. regarding Judah, binding his foal unto the vine, and his ass's colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes; a description which was intended to represent the great abundance of wine and milk which the tribe of Judah should possess. And to the believing mind how exhibitively was all this of the fullness and freeness of those precious blessings which the Messiah's kingdom was to bring along with it!

PRAYER.

Unto thee do we desire this morning to lift up our souls, O thou that dwellest in the heavens. Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock. Thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth. We thank thee for all that goodness of which thou art ever affording us the most endearing manifestations. We would bless thee, in an especial manner, for the great love wherewith thou hast loved us in Jesus Christ, and for that display which thou hast made of thy perfections, in the scheme of our redemption through him. We thank thee for the promise thou didst make of old unto Abraham, that in his seed should all the families of the earth be blessed; to Jacob, that the Shiloh should come; and to the patriarchs, that they should all be righteous. We thank thee for the mercy that prompted, and for the wisdom that planned, and for the power that accomplished the great work of our redemption. We would count it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Apply to each of us the efficacy of Christ's death for pardon and purification. Create within us clean hearts, renew within us right spirits. Restore to each of us the joys of thy salvation, and grant that, in soul, body, and spirit, we may be preserved blameless unto the coming of the Lord. May we look to the cross of Christ, and yield to those affecting motives which it presents to all holiness, both of heart and life. As we advance in life, may we grow in likeness to thee, so that when, like the patriarch of old, we come to go the way of all the earth, we may be prepared for the enjoyment of that rest which remains for the people of God, and be enabled to say with the apostle, that we know that when the earthly house of this tabernacle shall be dissolved, we shall have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. With ourselves we would, this morning, be mindful of all our brethren of mankind. Add unto thy church daily such as shall be saved. Give the heathen to thy Son for an inheritance, and the uttermost ends of the earth for a possession. Let the kingdoms of the earth become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ, and to him let the gathering of the people be. Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end. Abundantly bless our temporal provision, and let there be no want in our land. Sanctify affliction to those who are afflicted, and prepare the dying for death, and judgment, and an eternal world. Be very gracious, we beseech thee, to our friends, and to all who are connected with us by the ties of kindred, or affection, or neighbourhood. Encompass them with thy favour as with a shield, and let the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. To thy guidance and protection we would commend ourselves this day, both as a family and as individuals. Do thou instruct us to avoid the temptations that may be before us, or help us to overcome them, and making it as our meat and our drink to do thy will all the day long, may we walk in the fear of the Lord, and the comfort of the Holy Ghost. Hear our prayers in these things, and be pleased to send us an answer in peace, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXVI. 36—75.

REMARKS.

In what is here stated regarding our Lord, between ver. 36—40. we have two most useful lessons in what is one of the most delightful departments of practical piety, namely, that of private prayer.

What our Lord here did, teaches us the obligation of prayer, even when all appearances seem against the success of it. The language employed by the Saviour on this occasion, and the temper he displayed, were such as to show how much the aspect of his present state did argue against a favourable issue to any supplication he might present. 'O my Father,' he said, 'if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.' Indeed he knew, as we learn from St John, at the very moment that he offered it, that the cup of his sorrows was not to pass away from him. Yet he still prayed in the words now mentioned; and persuaded though he felt that the cup should not pass, he, at the same time, never doubted that the petition he presented should not be uttered in vain, that though not answered in the way he expressed, it should yet virtually be heard, and produce the effect, if not of removing the cup, yet of preparing and fortifying the mind to drink it.

Now we may all find comfort in this example, amid the heaviest pressures of our state, and if, under all our sorrows, we repair to the footstool of mercy, pour forth the prayer that is not more expressive of our wants than characteristic of our importunity, and never once doubt that its fulfilment is a thing which God delights to give, commands that we should ask, and warrants us to expect, we shall then be like-minded with him who, when his sorrows began to darken, offered up prayers and supplications to him that was able to save, and as his sorrows increased, prayed the more earnestly. In even the most fervent supplications which we offer, we may not receive what we ask, but still we may receive what is better than we ask, and there is an effect produced by the mere exercise of prayer upon the tone and temper of the mind that is itself its own reward. We can never be aware whether any, and what part of our petitions is to be directly answered. Yet we have the warrant of Christ's example for believing that, whether we are to be relieved from approaching suffering or not, our duty and our interest do both lie in seeking a refuge beneath the shadow of his right hand who considers our trouble, and knows the soul in adversity; in making him the depository of all our griefs who, though he doth afflict us, is a Father still, and in never for one moment doubting that, though the direct deliverance which we ask is not to be granted, yet the prayer itself shall not return back without some blessing sent along with it. Blessed indeed are those families who thus call upon the name of the Lord. Shielded by the armour of prayer, affliction, however much it may disturb, will yet have no power to overwhelm them, and if St Paul's distresses be engraven on the forehead of their state, St Paul's comforts and consolations will also be engraven on it. 'We are troubled on every side,' said that great apostle, 'but not in distress; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed.'

Our Lord here teaches us another lesson on the subject of prayer. He instructs us in the pre-eminent value of that prayer which is secret and solitary. We read at ver. 39. that he went a little farther than, that is to say, a little beyond, his disciples, and fell upon his face, and prayed. He did not open his heart even to his own disciples. He could not unbosom himself to his Father so long as even they were witnesses of the sorrows he should utter, and though he doubted not their sympathy with him, he nevertheless did withdraw himself about a stone's-cast from them, and felt it indispensable that he should be alone. And thus it is, more or less, with praying men. There is an air of stillness and of solitude that is congenial to the state of the mind when under the pressure of its spiritual wants. There are griefs into which none but God can enter, and there is a bitterness of the heart with which the stranger that is in our own house is not permitted to intermeddle. We cannot divest ourselves of the belief that God is peculiarly gracious at the voice of our 'secret cry.' Sweet is the comfort to be derived from calling upon God in the meeting of his saints, or from blessing him with our household at home. But, to a pious man, the happier hours of devotion are the hours which he spends in pouring out his heart in the presence of God alone. Learn then, O man, the lesson here read out by thy Saviour. 'And thou, therefore, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.'

PRAYER.

We thank thee, O Lord, for that liberty of access which we ever have to the footstool of thy throne of grace. We desire to come before thee this evening, as we are permitted to do in the multitude of thy tender mercies, blessing thee for the assurance thou hast given us, that thou art the hearer of prayer, and the comforter of all of us in all our tribulations, and rejoicing to believe, that if we approach thee in his name whom thou hearest always, thou wilt listen to our cry, and wilt fulfil our petitions, and even, while we are yet speaking, wilt condescend to hear. O hear the prayer we desire to put up, for mercy to pardon our offences, and grace to help us in the time of need. We are sinners in thy sight, and we acknowledge before thee the need in which we stand of his salvation, who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; whose soul was exceeding sorrowful, and who bore the chastisement of our peace. We pray for a conformity to the death of Jesus Christ. Seeing that we are at enmity with thee, do thou reconcile us by the death of thy Son. Knowing the plagues of our sinful hearts, may we seek shelter beneath the sanctuary of his cross, who was there lifted up as an hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest of divine wrath, in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins. And O, for his sake, do thou send thy Holy Spirit into our hearts. Without him we can do nothing well pleasing in thy sight. Pour him out, therefore, in rich abundance upon us. Work in us through him the whole of thy good pleasure, and the work of faith with power. We thank thee for the mercies of the day. We commit ourselves to thy protection throughout the night, and reposing beneath the shelter of thy wings, we will not be afraid of the terror by night, nor of the arrow that flieth by day, nor of the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor of the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. We would commend to thee the large family of affliction. Hear the cry of the humble, revive the spirit of the disconsolate, supply the wants of the needy, comfort those who are bereaved, and prepare the dying for their great change. Hear our prayers, and forgive our sins, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE VIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—GENESIS I.

REMARKS.

There is much instruction to be gathered from the incidents referred to in this chapter. The pious solemnities that were performed with reference to the interment of Jacob and Joseph, are fitted to remind us of the duty and respect which we owe, in regard of the sepulture of our departed friends. So far indeed, as they themselves are concerned, it matters not what seemly decencies are paid toward the remains of our deceased brethren. In the language of inspiration, 'they know not any thing; also their love, and their hatred, and their envy are now perished; neither have they any more a portion in any thing that is done under the sun.' But though this be the case, we are yet taught by our very nature to pay, by a becoming interment, the homage of our respect to the bodies of the dead, both as being a part of material human nature, and in reference to the immortal spirits of which they were once the tenements, to comfort ourselves amid our heaviness, by the expression of our dearness to the departed, of their worth to us, and of our value for them. Having its foundation in nature, the custom has existed in almost all countries. Even the Saviour himself permitted the cost of Mary's ointment upon his head and feet, because she did it against his burial, and did commend to the esteem of all posterity the respectful regard she thus showed him, while the affecting circumstances of his own interment, when it did take place, did sanction the seemly respects which are shown to the remains of the departed.

How instructive too is the conduct of Joseph, as here exhibited. He was now upon his dying bed, and the frame of his spirit then, just indicated what had been the frame of it in the vigour and maturity of life. Instead of being anxious about the disposal of his temporal revenues, which were perhaps very great, the bent and bias of his mind had run upon the covenant God had entered into with Abraham, and the progressive fulfilment that was carrying on regarding it. As an apostle tells us, he made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and he gave commandment concerning his bones, and he did this in the exercise of faith. He made mention, we say, in faith of the departing of the children of Israel, calling it into his own mind, and over and above this, making a profession in the presence of others of the confidence he reposed in its accomplishment, and assuring them, as we may gather from what he says to his brethren in ver. 24. that, in despite of all their affliction in Egypt, they should yet be led forth out of it, and that though he should not live to see their deliverance, he did nevertheless die in the faith of it. And he gave commandment also in faith concerning his bones, charging them to carry up his bones along with them when they went to Canaan, and doing so, that he might at once manifest the confidence he put in the accomplishment of the promise, and the dutiful reverence which he cherished for the memory of Jacob his father, who, in the exercise of the same grace of faith, did purchase a burial place there as an earnest, and as indicating a persuasion, of future possession. And we know that his charge was strictly complied with. His brethren, we read, embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt. And Moses ultimately took it under his protection, and in the end, the mortal remains of this man of God were conveyed in safety to Canaan, and buried in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor, and which he left as an inheritance to the children of Joseph. How instructive this pattern of faith! Let us imitate the patriarch in this respect. Let us pray that our faith may be increased, and trust in the divine testimony, knowing that whatever God hath promised, he is faithful and able to perform it.

PRAYER.

We desire, O Lord, to come before thee at this time, and to bless thee for the rest and preservation of the past night. While many since last night, have slept the sleep of death, many more been laid down on beds of affliction, from which they shall arise no more, on this side of eternity, we are preserved before thee in health of body, and in soundness of mind;—the living, O Lord, the living to praise thee, as we desire to do this day. Thou hast preserved us, but our time is both short and uncertain. Behold thou hast made our days as an handbreadth, and our age is as nothing before thee, and though a man do live threescore and ten years, and rejoice in them all, yet dost thou at last bring him to death, and to the house appointed for all living. And the frailty we experience is the fruit of our corruption. Thou with rebukes dost correct man for his iniquity; thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth. O humble us when we think of our guilt in the sight of Almighty God. May we betake ourselves to him who gave his life a ransom for many, and his flesh for the life of the world, and died that he might put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh. Jacob is not, and Joseph is not. For there is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit: neither hath he power on the day of death, and there is no discharge in that war. But though man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more, yet blessed be thy name, for the prospect of that glorious inheritance which thou hast revealed in thy word, and confirmed by thy grace. Do thou grant that we may ever have respect to it. Unlike the men of this world, may we remember that there remaineth a rest for the people of God, and exercise an holy fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into rest, any of us should seem to come short of it. Being strangers and pilgrims upon earth, as all our fathers were, may we walk as citizens of another country; and knowing that this is thy will respecting us, even our sanctification, and that no unrighteous person shall inherit the kingdom of Christ, and of God, O may we ever abound in those fruits of righteousness which are to thy praise and glory, always doing those things which are acceptable in thy sight, so that when the day does come that like Jacob we must gather up our feet into the bed and yield up the ghost, and be gathered unto our people, we may be ready to give in our account, and found meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Thou who art the God of all the families on the earth, we beseech thee to dwell in this house. May the name of it be, The Lord is there. Do thou say of it, This is my rest, here will I take up my abode. May every member of this family be a member of that family of which Christ is the head. Preserve each of us this day from those numerous accidents to which human life is ever exposed. Keep each of us from all evil, especially from sin, the greatest of evil. Hold up our goings in thy paths, that our footsteps slip not. And unto thee, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost be ascribed, as is most due, all glory, and honour, and power, and praise world without end. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII. 11.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXVII. 1—32.

REMARKS.

Several important purposes were subserved by the admission of a traitor into the number of Christ's own immediate disciples, and one of these certainly was, the stronger testimony which was thereby given to the truth of his own character and mission. We read at ver. 4. that Judas said, that he had betrayed innocent blood. And the force of his testimony consists in this, that it was his interest, if he could, to have proved him guilty. We see a man competent to judge of Christ, prejudiced against Christ, favoured with the best opportunities of observing Christ, and even after he had betrayed him, we see this man bearing testimony to the spotlessness of his character, and acquitting him of all the crimes with which he had been charged. We need no better evidence that he was innocent, than the evidence that Judas did say it. We may be assured that, considering what he had done, he would have borne another testimony to him, could another testimony have been borne. Judas was not the man to declare him innocent, could any suspicion of guilt have been thrown upon him. But he knew that he was innocent, and the moment therefore, that conscience was allowed to speak, that moment he exclaimed that he had sinned, in that he had betrayed innocent blood; and he made this declaration too, be it remembered, in circumstances of affecting interest, in the prospect of death, under the immediate view of a world of retribution, when impressed with the terrors of a tribunal, before which he was about to appear. We look upon all this therefore, as unequivocal evidence to the truth of our Saviour's mission and character. We regard it as evidence just so much the stronger, the more wicked and ungrateful Judas can be proved to be; and we may in this justly admire the wisdom of God, in making the very wrath of men to praise him, in multiplying the proofs of the Saviour's divine commission, by the agency even of very gross and very guilty characters, in deriving as much strength to his own cause from the lips of a very traitor, as was ever derived to it from those who sealed their faith with their blood.

How affectingly, too, is there here set before us the despair which is the result of an incomplete repentance. Judas was grieved because of the guilt which he had committed, but he wanted that in his repentance,—an apprehension, namely, of the mercy of God in Christ,—without which, repentance can never be of a 'godly sort,' and therefore did he pour out his soul in an agony of despair. An apprehension of divine mercy is just as necessary an element in true repentance, as a consciousness of demerit; and under our conviction of guilt, and our grief and humiliation because of it, instead of giving way to a spirit of despondent horror, we should never forget that such a punishment has been borne to atone for it as may appease the justice that has been provoked, that such a ransom has been paid to redeem us, as may discharge the debt that is incurred by it, that such a sacrifice has been presented, as may save us from the retribution of which it has made us the object, that such assistance has been provided as may well revive our feeblest hopes, and that we are invited, and besought, and even commanded, to take the advantage of them.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we would come this evening before thee, with the offering of humility and self-abasement. Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell in thy sight. Thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel. Wherewithal shall we come before the Lord, and bow ourselves in the presence of the most High God. We are indeed a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters, who have forsaken the Lord, and trampled under foot the Son of God, and done despite to the Spirit of grace. Lord give us to come before thee mourning over and confessing our multiplied transgressions. Humble us under a sense of our guilt, and yet suffer us not to fall into any despondency of thy mercy, but give us that everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, which, in the gospel of thy Son, we are encouraged to cherish. We bless thee for the provision made for sinners in the gospel; that thou hast there made known to us a Redeemer by whose merits thy mercy is manifested in the salvation of sinners, even while thy justice is satisfied in the condemnation of sin. O for his sake take away all our iniquity; receive us graciously, heal our backsliding, and love us freely. Give us that repentance which is after a godly sort, and which never needeth to be repented of, and sanctify to us the gift of thy Son, in his turning each of us from his iniquity. Impart unto us that faith which is his peculiar gift, which worketh by love, which purifieth the heart, which overcometh the world, which is fruitful in every good word and work. Clothe us with the robes of his righteousness, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, that we may be found in him, and may know him, and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable to his death. And grant, holy Father, that he who was made manifest in our nature, may be made manifest in our persons. Help us, we beseech thee, by the agency of thy Spirit, to abstain even from the appearance of evil. Reclaim us from every wicked to every perfect way, from darkness to light, from sin to holiness, from the love and the service of satan, to the love and the service of thee our God. And for this end do thou sanctify all our means of grace. Bless to us this evening the reading of thy word, that it may be profitable to direct; the privilege of prayer, that we may be refreshed, as we draw nigh to thee, in this act of devotion; the ordinance of affliction, that we may feel we are chastened of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world; bless to us the appointment of the Christian Sabbath; and when we worship thee on the first day of the week, may we find that thou art specially gracious on that day of rest. And with ourselves we desire to remember before thee all our brethren of mankind. Send the knowledge of the gospel to the heathen; make the savour of Christ's name manifest in every place. Our friends we commend to thy friendship, our enemies to thy forgiveness, our benefactors to thy reward. Visit the abodes of the afflicted and the dying, and give to them that support and those consolations which this world cannot give, and which death itself cannot take away. Spread over us the wings of thy protection this night. Be thou our refuge and our defence, and if agreeable to thy will, may we be raised up in health and strength, on the morning of a new day, fitted for its duties, and fortified for its trials. Hear our prayers in these things; God of our righteousness, forgive our unworthiness to appear before thee, and bless us, and accept of us, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

SEVENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XXIII. XXIV.

REMARKS.

PSALM XXIII. This psalm is thought to have been composed by David, after he was delivered out of the many troubles and persecutions he had suffered during the life of Saul, and was firmly established in his kingdom. It expresses, accordingly, in very simple and beautiful language, the peace and security he was enjoying; his thankfulness to God, the author of all his mercies, and implicit confidence in God's continued goodness. David compares the goodness of God, in regard to the blessings, temporal and spiritual, he enjoyed, to that of a shepherd leading his flock to feed among rich pastures, and to quench their thirst beside the gentle flowing stream. This figurative allusion to the pastoral life, by which the psalmist illustrates, in the first four verses, the goodness of God's providence and the riches of his grace, is changed, in ver. 5. to that of a sumptuous feast. God's preparing a feast for him even in the presence of his enemies, is very expressive of the abundant support and happiness David experienced when placed in the most desperate circumstances. The allusion to the custom, in eastern countries, of pouring rich oils on the heads of guests, and presenting them with an overflowing cup, in token of hospitality, illustrates still farther the divine goodness towards David, and therefore, his past experience naturally leads him to express his confidence that the same goodness will be continued during his remaining time on earth, and that he shall enjoy the high privilege of serving God for ever.

The image of a shepherd is frequently employed, in allusion to the most high God. Agreeably to this figure of speech, his people are his sheep, and his holy word is the food by which they are fed. What common food is to the body, the promises of God's word are to the soul of the believer; its nourishment and support, amidst the duties and trials of this world, till he reaches the better country, where he shall hunger no more, nor thirst any more.

Jehovah promised, Ezek. xxxiv. 23. 'I will set up one Shepherd over (his people) them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.' This promise of God's continued care and protection of his church he performed, by sending into the world his only begotten and well beloved Son, 'the great,' 'the good,' and 'chief shepherd' of God's people, who 'gave even his life for the sheep.' See John x. xxi. 15, &c.

PSALM XXIV. is generally believed to have been composed for the memorable occasion of the ark of God being brought by David, and the whole nation of Israel, from the house of Obed-edom to mount Zion, the place of its future residence. Ver. 1, 2. celebrate the infinite dignity and sovereignty of Jehovah, as the Creator of all things. Ver. 3—6.

describe the character and happiness of the true and acceptable worshipper. The procession having arrived on Mount Zion, and the ark, containing the symbol of the divine presence, having been carried to the gates of the place prepared for its reception, the Levites are supposed to be divided into two choirs, and to sing alternately the 7th and remaining verses, in which the majesty of the one living and true Jehovah, as the creator, preserver, and moral ruler of the universe, is celebrated in the loftiest strains.

This psalm may be considered, by way of accommodation, as a prophetic description of our Saviour's exaltation to heaven, an event, above all others, interesting to Christians, as affording the most astonishing and convincing proof of the divinity of his character and mission, the truth of his doctrine, the acceptance of his sacrifice, and the certainty of his second and glorious appearance. The holy places, made with hands, into which the ark was carried, were the figures of the true, into which our Lord has entered, Heb. ix. 24. He is the Lord of glory. 'King of kings, and Lord of lords.' The Lord of hosts, mighty in battle, having ascended to heaven in glorious triumph over death, in his own person, and from which we are assured of his return, to conquer this last enemy for his people. Let it be our earnest prayer that we may cultivate that purity of heart which is indispensably necessary to qualify us for the service of God on earth, and his enjoyment in heaven.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we adore thee as the Father of light and of life, with whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning. From thee cometh down every good and every perfect gift. We adore thee as the author of our being, and the great source of all our happiness. Thy providence has sustained us in life, and supplied all our returning wants. Thou hast preserved us from dangers which we could neither have foreseen nor prevented. When from the power of sin within us, or the influence of temptation from without, we have, like sheep gone astray, each turning to his own way, thou hast magnified thy great name, even the riches of thy mercy and grace in Jesus Christ, in bringing us back to thyself, the shepherd and bishop of our souls, in restoring us to peace of mind, and causing us to walk in the paths of righteousness. We acknowledge our great unworthiness of all the goodness, the mercy, and the truth which thou hast shown us. Thy goodness we have often requited with ingratitude, and thy laws, which are holy, just, and good, we have often violated. Enter not into judgment with us, for in thy sight no living can be justified. For the sake of thy Son, our advocate and intercessor with thee, the Father, forgive us all our past offences, and grant us thy Holy Spirit to renew us more and more in the spirit of our mind, and restore unto us even the joy of thy salvation. Keep us straight and undefiled in the way of thy commandments, and let our dwelling be in thy house for ever. We desire to render unto thee our united gratitude for thy providential care of us during the past night, and for the light and mercies of a new morning, even another sabbath of the Son of man. May we be deeply impressed with a sense of our invaluable privileges as Christians, and enabled to walk worthy of them. Whilst many of our fellow-creatures, through the ignorance that is in them, are bowing down themselves to stocks, and stones, and graven images, the works of men's hands, we are invited to worship thee, the creator of heaven and earth, the preserver and moral ruler of the universe, the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in him the God and Father of all who believe. Prepare our hearts for thy service, this day, in the sanctuary, that we may worship thee, who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Forbid that we should draw near unto thee with the mouth, whilst our hearts are wandering after the vanities of the world. May we approach thee with clean hands, and a pure heart. May thy servants in the ministry be enabled to preach the gospel with all plainness and fidelity, and the hearers to receive the word of truth with faith and affection, that it may have an abiding influence on their principles, and temper and conduct; and may the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in us that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XXV. 6.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXV.

REMARKS.

Although it is uncertain on what particular occasion this psalm was written by David, it is probable, from ver. 11, 15—19. that the distress, perplexity, and difficulties into which he was plunged, by the rebellion of his son Absalom, may have given rise to it. In ver. 7. he prays God 'not to remember the sins of his youth,' and in ver. 11. to 'pardon his iniquity, for it is very great;' referring, no doubt, to certain aggravated sins he had committed in his youth, and which he may have considered as the remote and prime cause of his son's rebellion having been permitted. Then, in the 15th and following verses, he speaks of himself as being ensnared, desolate, and afflicted, as having numerous enemies, hating him without any just cause of offence; and, in ver. 22. he prays for the restoration and happiness of his nation, which supposes it, at that time, to have been in a distracted condition.

Agreeably to this condition, in which David is supposed to have been when he composed this psalm, he expresses (ver. 1—3.) his confidence in God for every blessing, but especially for protection from his enemies, and prays most earnestly that his trust in God may be made to appear to be well founded; that he may at no time have cause to be ashamed of it, by his enemies obtaining any triumph over him.

God being our creator, preserver, and redeemer, the God in whom we live, and move, and have our existence, and without whom we can do nothing, it is impossible we can exceed in the confidence we ought to repose in him. As God, however, dispenses all his blessings through the instrumentality of means, it is evident that well founded confidence, for obtaining any blessing, whether temporal or spiritual, implies, on our part, the faithful use of those means which he hath appointed, otherwise our confidence is founded in ignorance, or what is worse, in presumption, and therefore David prays as in ver. 4, 5.

When we are compassed with difficulties, and our hearts cast down, or almost overwhelmed by a sense of guilt or danger, the remembrance of any deliverance we may have experienced ourselves, or the recorded examples of the goodness of God's providence to others, generally proves a source of great comfort, and even strong encouragement to trust in his mercy and goodness.

Such appear to have been the sentiments which influenced David, when, in the 6th and remaining verses, he reminds God of the character he has always sustained for mercy and faithfulness towards the humble, the penitent, and the afflicted, and those who are sincerely desirous to do whatever they know to be his will. Such persons, David assures us, are not only blessed in themselves, but that also their 'seed shall inherit the earth,' (land) i. e. the land of Canaan, which the nation of Israel were to continue to inherit whilst they continued obedient, and which, being a type of heaven, contains a promise of an eternal inheritance to the man who feareth the Lord, and trains up his seed (children) to imitate his own example.

What additional reason have we Christians to exercise faith in God that he will fulfil all his promises, the truth of which have been so amply confirmed to us under this new and better covenant, sealed by the blood of Jesus Christ, who died for our offences, and was raised again for our justification, and who lives for ever in heaven as our great high priest, and is able to save for ever all who come unto God by him.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort. Thou art near unto all who call upon thee in truth and sincerity. Thou art a present help in every time of need. They who know thy name have trusted in thee, and they who have trusted in thee have never been disappointed. We bless thee for the clear and full discovery thou hast given us, in thy holy word, of thy character and our own duty, and the way to immortal life and happiness. But we acknowledge that we have not made that improvement of our privileges which we ought to have done; that, instead of seeking that wisdom which cometh from above, we have been trusting to our own wisdom and strength; walking according to the counsels of our own hearts, which are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. We have gone astray from thee, even from our very youth. Remember not against us the sins of our youth, nor the transgressions of our riper years. In the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out all our iniquities, and fill us with that godly sorrow for sin which worketh repentance unto salvation, and which needeth not to be repented of. Thou art the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. This is thy name and memorial to all generations, and we rejoice to know that, though thy throne is encompassed with clouds and darkness, and thy footsteps hid in the mighty deep, yet justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne, righteousness and peace go before thy face continually, and all thy paths are mercy and truth unto them that keep thy covenant and thy testimonies. Be thou at all times our refuge and defence, and when at any time our hearts are overwhelmed with grief, lead us to the rock that is higher than we. May our minds be stayed on thee, and filled with that peace which flows from an interest in thy favour, and the well founded hope of future and eternal happiness. May we be anxious about nothing in this world, but in every thing, by prayer for such blessings as we need, and deprecation against the evils to which we are exposed, and thanksgiving for thy mercies, let our requests be made known unto thee, and do thou, the God of peace, fill us with all peace in believing. Follow with a rich blessing the preaching of the gospel. May the time soon come when all the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto thee, the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations come and worship before thee. Bless our native country, and all ranks of persons among us, and grant that we may be distinguished more and more for that righteousness which exalteth a nation, and may we hate sin, which is the reproach, and must prove the ruin, of any people. Bless all our friends and relations. Reward our benefactors; forgive our enemies; and enable us from the heart to forgive those who offend us. We commit the keeping of our souls to thee this night, as unto a faithful Creator, and do thou, who neither slumberest nor sleepest, preserve us from all evil. Forgive the sins of our holy duties, for sin mingles with our best services, and help us to spend all our remaining sabbaths and time on earth in a manner acceptable to thee, and profitable to ourselves, that we may be admitted to the enjoyment of that everlasting rest which remaineth for the people of God. These blessings we humbly but earnestly ask of thee, in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXIX. 8.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS I.

REMARKS.

The chief subject of this book is the departure of the nation of Israel out of Egypt, as is implied in the name Exodus, which signifies the going out or departure. The book of Genesis, besides a general history of the first ages of the world, contains the history of Abraham, and his posterity by Jacob, and ends with the death of Joseph, embracing a period of 2370 years. The book of Exodus includes an additional period of 144 years, extending from the death of Joseph, to the erection of the tabernacle, after the Israelites had been one year in the wilderness.

The first chapter begins with the names of Jacob's sons; who, with their families that went down into Egypt, amounted to seventy persons. It next gives an account of their great increase, after the death of Joseph and his brethren, in order to show God's truth and faithfulness in fulfilling the promise made to Abraham (Gen. xv. 5.) regarding his numerous descendants by Isaac. The 8th and remaining verses give an account of the grievous nature of the oppression suffered by the Israelites, which was also the subject of prediction, (Gen. xv. 13.) and the cruel and barbarous method to which Pharaoh and his people had recourse to prevent any increase of the Israelites, lest by exceeding the Egyptians in number, they might eventually become their masters.

The condition of the Israelites in 'the land of Egypt, and the house of bondage,' may be considered as an emblem of spiritual slavery.

How degrading soever and miserable the slavery of the human body may be considered by us, and must have been felt by the Israelites, yet the slavery of the human mind to sin is infinitely more, inasmuch that, if continued, it deprives the individual of all true happiness, not only in the present, but also in the future life. He who is a slave to his appetites or passions, instead of keeping them in subordination to reason and conscience, enlightened by the word of God, is lost to virtue and holiness and spiritual improvement. In such a condition, without the moral image of his Maker, he must be destitute of all true peace of mind; and, being unfit for the happiness of heaven, necessarily excludes himself from its blessed society. The individual condemned to bodily slavery in this world may at the same time be a freeman of Christ, (1 Cor. vii. 22.) and blessed with that spiritual liberty wherewith all the children of God are made free indeed. He knows that his sufferings terminate with the present life, and are even the means, through the divine blessing, of preparing him for the happiness of eternity; whereas, he who is a slave, in a moral or spiritual sense, can have no true peace here nor happiness hereafter. Let it be our earnest, importunate and daily prayer, that we may be redeemed more and more from all iniquity; from the reigning power of sin within us, and the influence of temptation, and purified unto Christ, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Let not sin reign in your mortal bodies, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. (See Rom. vi.) The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we adore thee as the great creator, the constant preserver, and the moral ruler of the universe. Thou doest according to thy will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; no creature can stay thy hand from working, nor say unto thee, What doest thou. Thou rulest over the kingdoms of men, rendering all their plans and counsels subservient to the accomplishment of thine own infinitely wise and gracious purposes. Thou causest the wrath of man to praise thee, and restrainest the remainder of his wrath. We are all in thy hand as the clay is in the hand of the potter, and thou canst do with us whatever seemeth good in thy sight. We rejoice to know that thou art not only the sovereign ruler of the universe, and the disposer of all lots, but also that thy goodness and wisdom are equal to thy greatness. Thou art indeed angry with the wicked every day; but thine eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show thyself strong in behalf of those whose heart is perfect towards thee. May our minds be impressed at all times, with a deep sense of the majesty and purity of thy character, and our own sinfulness and unworthiness. Lead us more and more to see what an evil and bitter thing it is to depart from God. We bless and adore thy great name, that when all flesh had wandered from the love and service of thee, the one living and true God,—when there was no eye to pity nor hand to help; thine eye saw and pitied, and thy right arm brought salvation. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation in the house of his servant David, as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us. We bless thee for the faithfulness thou hast shown, in performing thy promises of mercy to thy church, and for the deliverances which thou hast often wrought in her behalf. We especially bless and adore thee, for the great salvation thou hast wrought for us by thy Son Jesus Christ. We have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. We pray, O Lord, that as we profess to be thy redeemed children—redeemed, not with such corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; may we consider ourselves as bound, by every obligation, to thy service. Let us not yield our members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, but may we yield ourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto God. Let no sin at any time obtain dominion over us; aid us by thy Holy Spirit, to live not to ourselves, but to him who died for us and rose again. Make us truly grateful for thy preserving care during the past night, and for the light and mercies of this morning. Preserve us this day from all evil, and enable us faithfully and conscientiously to do our duty. Whilst engaged in the duties of our calling during the week, may we retain on our minds a sense of thy presence, and of the great account we must render unto thee. We pray for the whole family of man, that all who are partakers of our common nature, may soon be partakers of our Christian privileges. Bless our native country, and all ranks of persons among us. Sanctify affliction to all who are visited with it, and prepare the dying for their great change. Guide us by thy counsel while we live, and afterwards receive us into glory, and all we ask is for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE XLIV.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXVII. 33—66.

REMARKS.

Calvary, the place where our Saviour was crucified, is here called Golgotha, a Hebrew word which signifies the place of a skull, 'so called by some from its fancied resemblance to a skull, but more probably either because criminals were executed there, or perhaps because the place contained sepulchral caverns for the dead.' Many of the particulars connected with our Saviour's last sufferings and death, having been the subject of ancient prediction, their exact fulfilment in the person of Jesus of Nazareth, is here narrated to convince the candid and humble inquirers, especially among the Jews, that Jesus of Nazareth, who had suffered the infamous death of crucifixion, was indeed the true Messiah promised in the Old Testament Scriptures, and the Saviour of the world; and thus to do away with the offence of the cross, which was occasioned by the ignorance and prejudices of the Jewish nation, as well as by the philosophical speculations of the Greeks, (1 Cor. i. 22. &c.) and thus also to confirm the faith of all in the truth of the Christian religion; and in particular, of the promises of the gospel which are so wonderfully adapted to the sinful and helpless condition of man.

Among the miraculous circumstances connected with our Saviour's sufferings and death, the rending of the vail of the temple is both instructive and interesting to every believer. This seems to have been the inner vail of the temple, which separated the most holy place, which was typical of heaven, from the holy, and into which the high priest only could enter once every year with the blood of a sacrificed animal. The vail itself was a type of our Saviour's flesh or human nature. (Heb. x. 20.) When this vail therefore, which concealed the most holy place, was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, at the moment our Saviour cried with a loud voice, 'It is finished,' and yielded up his spirit into the hands of his Father, this was evidently intended to intimate most significantly the dissolution of the old covenant, or Mosaic dispensation, and the commencement of the new covenant, or Christian dispensation, under which the Gentiles, in common with the Jews, were to be admitted to a share of all the blessings and privileges of God's children: that Jesus Christ, in virtue of the acceptance of his sacrifice, was henceforth to appear in heaven as our great high priest and intercessor; and that, through his mediation, all believers should have access unto God, for the acceptance of their persons and their title to eternal life. (See Heb. ix.)

Whilst the darkness over all the land, the earthquake, and the rending of the rocks, were evident demonstrations of the innocence of the sufferer, as well as of the dignity of his character; the opening of the graves was evidently designed to teach us, that a flood of light was to be thrown on the doctrine of immortality by our Saviour's own death and resurrection, whilst the circumstance of the bodies of departed saints not having been raised to life till after our Saviour's own resurrection, must have also been designed to show that he is what the beloved disciple denominates him, 'the first begotten of the dead,' i. e. the first of the whole human family who rose from the state of the dead to die no more; that in this, as in every other thing, 'he might have the pre-eminence.' How consoling to Christians to be assured that their Saviour and elder brother, who was dead, is now in heaven; that he has taken possession of it in the name of his people; that he sits at the right hand of God, as our great high priest and all-powerful intercessor; and that, in due time, he shall return from the most holy place, not made with hands, to bless his people with eternal life. Let it be our prayer that we may be enabled to suffer with Christ; to bear our trials in this world with a similar spirit of patience, and resignation, and fortitude, that we may also reign with him for ever, in his Father's kingdom.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art holy who inhabitest the praises of Israel; thou art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; evil shall not dwell with thee, neither shall the foolish stand in thy presence. We acknowledge our great unworthiness to come into thy presence, or to take thy name into our sinful lips. We are altogether as an unclean thing: we have gone astray from thee, the fountain of living waters, and hewn out unto ourselves cisterns—broken cisterns, that can hold no water. When we reflect on the sins we have committed, and the duties we have neglected, we acknowledge that we have great reason to lay our hands on our mouths, and our mouths in the dust, crying, Unclean, unclean, God be merciful to us sinners. We bless thee, though we are unworthy to lift up our eyes unto the place where thine honour dwelleth, that we are not only permitted but encouraged to come unto thee, in the name of Jesus Christ our great high priest, who died for our sins and rose again for our justification, and who liveth for ever in heaven to make intercession for his people. We bless thee, that he came into the world on the great errand of our salvation: that he was obedient to the whole will of his Father unto death, even the death of the cross; and that, in token of thine acceptance of his sacrifice, thou didst raise him from the dead, and gave him glory, that our faith and hope might be in thee. We bless thee that thou art in Christ reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their sins and trespasses, and that through him we may be justified from all those things from which we could not have been justified by the law of Moses. May we see more and more the evil nature of sin, and the value of that salvation which is through Christ, and which shall be followed with eternal glory. Enable us to follow out the great end of our Saviour's death and resurrection; as he died an offering for sin, may we die to its love and practice; and as he rose to the power of an endless life in his Father's kingdom, may we set our affections chiefly on things above, where Christ sitteth at thy right hand. May we receive the doctrines of Christ with faith and affection, and endeavour to imitate his example in his suffering, as well as in his active obedience, doing with diligence and fidelity whatever we know to be our duty, and suffering with patience and fortitude whatever thou art pleased to appoint, and may we be preserved safe unto the day of complete redemption. Having boldness to enter into the holiest, by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, may we come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Forgive the sins we have this day committed, and our shortcomings in duty. We pray that the boundaries of Messiah's kingdom may be extended, that he may see more and more of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. Visit the fatherless and the widow, comfort the afflicted, and prepare the dying for their great change. Watch over us this night, and let no evil come nigh our dwelling. While we live, may we live unto the Lord; when we die, may we die unto the Lord; that being thine in time, we may also be thine in eternity. These our humble, but earnest supplications, we present in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM II.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. Moses is called 'a goodly child;' by Paul, (Heb. xi. 23.) 'a proper child;' and by Stephen, (Acts vii. 20.) 'exceeding or divinely fair,' all which expressions seem to imply, not only that there was great natural beauty, but something uncommon in his appearance, which convinced his parents that providence intended him for some important service. Ver. 5. The ancient Egyptians bathed once at least every day in the Nile, and probably the princess and her attendants had a particular place assigned them, which Jochebed was aware of. Ver. 9. Moses' mother was hired to nurse him, by which remarkable arrangement of providence he was not only preserved from the premature fate of the other Hebrew boys, but educated in the knowledge and worship of the one living and true God. Ver. 11. By a law of ancient Egypt, whoever saw a person on the highway maltreating or attempting to murder another, might punish the offender, or put him to death; Moses was therefore guilty of no crime, according to the customs of his country, in slaying the contentious Egyptian. But, in the state of public feeling against the Israelites, it would not have been safe for him to become the public assailer of their rights, and hence the necessity of his flight. Ver. 15. It is the im-morial custom of travellers to repose at wells, which, being places of public resort, enable them to obtain any necessary intelligence. The shepherds, who are often young women, repair to them at certain hours with their flocks.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

What a memorable instance does this chapter furnish of the truth of God, and his faithfulness to his promise. Nearly 400 years had elapsed since he had promised to Abraham that Canaan was to be the inheritance of his posterity. And, apparently in the face of this promise, they were enslaved in a foreign land; their spirits crushed by a grinding servitude, and their very existence, as a distinct people, brought into imminent jeopardy. But at the period of greatest danger, the Lord showed that 'he remembered his holy covenant.' By this part of sacred history two important lessons are taught us; first, that let the state of the church or of individual believers be as gloomy and disastrous as it may, it becomes them not to fall into despondency or despair, when they remember that their divine Head, who conducts the administration of providence, has said that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the one, and that he will make all events, even the most untoward, work together for good to the other. For wise purposes he often appoints seasons of public and private distress to his people, and in long deferring to answer their importunate prayers for deliverance, he may appear to be unmindful of his truth, and to have forgotten to be gracious. But the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, and in his own good time will deliver them, and make even the wrath of man to praise him. This truth is strikingly exemplified in his manner of delivering the Hebrews from the exterminating sword of Pharaoh, as well as of preserving Moses, the appointed instrument of that deliverance. Another important lesson, suggested by this chapter, is, that the most lively faith, both in the general providence or the special promises of God, is not only compatible with a diligent use of lawful means, but will stimulate the believer to a more active and strenuous application to them; and such was the conduct of the pious parents of Moses, and such also should be our conduct. So while we rely wholly on the providence and grace of God, we should remember that we are not to do so as passive, inactive machines; that we are endowed with faculties which we are bound to exercise, and favoured with opportunities and means of growing in knowledge and holiness, which we are assiduously to use for our spiritual improvement. It is only in this way we can receive the blessing of God.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, thou art entitled to the reverence, the homage, and the esteem and gratitude of all who draw near thee, for thou art good as well as great, and gracious as well as almighty. Early were we cast on thy care, and no lapse of time, no change of circumstances, have ever found us without the tokens of thy mercy, and forbearance, and love. From day to day thou hast made thy goodness to pass before us, and supplied us with all that could minister to our comfort and welfare. Often hast thou disappointed our fears; often hast thou exceeded our hopes; often hast thou turned events, apparently the most adverse, into sources of pure enjoyment and permanent benefit, insomuch that there is not an event in our lives, nor an incident in our experience, which may not furnish us with a theme of gratitude and a subject of praise. While we thank thee for the bounties of thy providence, which thou art indiscriminately bestowing upon all, we supplicate those better and richer blessings which are the special marks of thy favour. We pray that, as we are fallen and guilty creatures, thou wouldst give us the blessedness of those to whom thou impute no iniquity; that as we are polluted by sin, thou wouldst give us clean hearts, and renew right spirits within us; that as we are ignorant, thou wouldst teach us; and weak, thou wouldst uphold us, and give us that true and lively faith by which we shall be united to Christ, as the branch is united to the vine, and obtain the influences of his Holy Spirit to sanctify our nature, so that we may become thy children; may be conformed to thine image, observe thy laws, and serve thee in righteousness and holiness all the days of our lives. We thank thee for the mercies of the by-past night, and for the continuance to us of health of body and soundness of mind. When we mingle with the world, help us to exemplify those principles of love, and those sentiments of duty which, as thy people and the disciples of thy Son, we profess to entertain: to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and if thou art pleased to visit us with any trials, to support and comfort our minds with an unwavering faith in thy wise and holy providence, which presides over every event, and will direct all for thine own glory and the good of thy people. Bless this family. May all its members be members of the household of faith. Bless our brethren and kinsfolk according to the flesh. May all our friends be thy friends, and heirs of the kingdom which Christ has gone to prepare. Hear these our humble supplications, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE XLVII.

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW XXVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. The descent of the angel was to do honour to Jesus. The terrific splendour of his appearance was intended to make it clearly appear he was more than man, and also, at the same time, to fill the soldiers' minds with consternation, so that they might flee, and thereby both make way for the departure of Jesus, and the admission of witnesses to examine the tomb. Ver. 10. There is an indescribable beauty and tenderness in the use of the term, 'my brethren,' in this passage. Christ did not say my disciples, but 'my brethren,' to assure them that, though they had forsaken him in his last sufferings, he had not altered in affection towards them. Having loved them from the beginning, he loved them to the end. Ver. 13. The story which the soldiers, at the instigation of the chief priests, engaged to palm upon the world, carried absurdity upon the face of it. For, not to speak of the improbability of a whole band of sentinels falling asleep at their post, or any Roman soldiers admitting their having committed a trespass which would have endangered their lives, how could they know that the disciples took him away, as, by their own admission, they must have been unconscious? and yet this story was the only defence that could be set up by those who denied the resurrection of Christ. Ver. 17. It is wonderful that, with the clear, repeated, and overwhelming testimony of their senses that Jesus stood before them, any were found who doubted. But their doubts having led them to examine more closely and dispassionately the evidence of this remarkable fact, have been overruled by providence for the greater establishment of our faith.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The resurrection of Christ is not only an important fact in his history, and therefore an important doctrine of his religion, but that on which the truth of all the rest is suspended. Without this he could not have established his claim to the character of a true prophet. Without this he could not have endowed his apostles with the divine wisdom and grace by which they were qualified to be the first preachers of the gospel. Without this we could have had no evidence that his atonement was accepted, and could have founded no expectations on Jesus, more than on any other man who was distinguished for wisdom and virtue; and accordingly the apostle Paul pronounces it to be the corner-stone of his religion. If Christ be not risen, your faith is vain. Without this, in short, all that preceded it in his character and life would have been of no avail to us. We could not have obtained the blessings of his purchase, had he not risen again to apply, by his Spirit and intercession, the merits of his death to us. A fact, therefore, of such importance to the truth of the gospel, and to the faith and hope of Christians, required to be established by evidence of no vague or doubtful character. Accordingly the historian tells us that he showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, at times so numerous and in ways so diversified, that it may be justly affirmed, there is no event in the history of the world more clearly and satisfactorily proved. And therefore we have great reason to join in the grateful exclamation of the apostle Peter, 'Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance uncorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

PRAYER.

O Lord, in presenting ourselves this evening at thy throne of grace, we acknowledge ourselves altogether unworthy of so inestimable a privilege and so distinguished an honour. We cannot look up to thee, much less expect any favour or blessing at thy hand, from any claims we have established on thy regard; and when we contemplate thy character, in all its majesty and holiness, or contrast ourselves with the purity of thy law, we have great reason to be dismayed at the recollection of those sins by which we have provoked thy displeasure and alienated thee from us. It is only when we regard thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that we have confidence in approaching thee. We rejoice that through him we can not only raise our hearts, and contemplate thy glorious majesty, without slavish fear, but entertain the hope of obtaining every necessary blessing, if we only ask them in the name of him who has merited them all by his death, and is now become our advocate with the Father, interceding that we may have them. Help us, then, to exercise a habitual and lively faith in his merits, to which we owe all the privileges we now enjoy, and all that we hope hereafter to be; in his death, by which he has made a full and satisfactory atonement for our sins; and in his resurrection, which affords the strongest grounds for placing our hope on him, for that eternal inheritance which he has purchased for us by his blood, and for all things necessary to prepare and qualify us for it. And while we trust in his righteousness to justify us, and in his Spirit to sanctify us, may we ever live as the children of such unspeakable mercies, conforming ourselves in all respects to thy will, and to the perfect example of our divine Redeemer; so that as he died on the cross, we may die unto sin, and as he rose again from the grave, we may rise to newness of life; a life in which all the graces and virtues of his character may shine; and may it be our daily study and aim to advance thy glory. Pardon wherever we may have come short of this end, during the day that is now ended. Accept of our united acknowledgments for the continuance of our temporal comforts and social enjoyments. Extend the shield of thy protection over us during the silent watches of the night. Give us such repose as may restore us, with renovated energy, to the duties of another day. And to thy name, through Christ, be everlasting praise. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CV. 23—27.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS III.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. He who in this verse is styled 'the Angel of the Lord,' is in the 4th and 6th verses called expressly 'the Lord,' or Jehovah, 'and God;' and if there be any meaning in language, and any credit to be attached to the scriptures, this must be considered as the testimony of inspiration to the perfect equality and identity of the Son with the Father. The Lord appeared 'in a flame of fire,' which may denote that God is both holy and just. And the miraculous preservation of the bush from the natural effects of the fire, indicated, that not only Israel, the people of God, would be divinely protected and delivered amid the persecution of all their enemies; but that the church in all ages would be so encompassed 'with God's favour as with a shield,' that, 'the gates of hell would not prevail against it.' Ver. 5. Putting off shoes, has from time immemorial been an expression of respect and reverence in the East. Ver. 14. 'I am that I am,' is a mode of speech denoting self-existence; and simple as it is, is the strongest that can be employed to describe the infinite superiority of Jehovah above all 'that are called gods.' Ver. 22. The word translated 'borrow,' signifies simply to 'request.' The Egyptians were deeply in the debt of the Hebrews, and as that people would not be persuaded, by considerations of justice, to give them what was due, the Lord would inspire them with such terror, that they would gladly part with their most valuable effects; and thus He who is the sovereign Disposer of all, provided his people with necessities for their journey.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How much soever Moses was skilled in the learning of the Egyptians, he required qualifications for the important office to which the Lord had destined him. In the peaceful solitudes of Midian he continued for a long series of years, during which, doubtless, he was, by habitual communion with God, and his own heart, improving himself in faith and piety, and thereby in the way of being prepared for the high and difficult services he was afterwards to render to the ancient church. It was thus too, that a greater than Moses prepared himself for his peculiar work, by retiring to meditate and pray on the eve of entering on his public ministry; and from this conduct of Him who gave us in all things an example that we should follow his steps, we learn that it is our duty, as servants of God, before engaging in any important duties, whether in the church or in the world, to betake ourselves to meditation and prayer.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious Father! Thou hast made another day to dawn upon us, and given us the comfortable prospect of the continuance of life and all the varied blessings by which it is sweetened. While we express in words our lively gratitude for that and every gift of thy bountiful providence, we pray that thou wouldst enable us to evince that gratitude by the cheerful obedience of our hearts and lives; and, while thou art addressing us by every motive that can influence the human mind; beseeching us by thy mercies, constraining us by thy love, alluring us by thy promises, and persuading us by thy terrors, may we yield thee that love and service which by the law both of nature and grace we are bound to give. Thou hast formed us with a capacity of loving and serving thee. But alas! we have not loved and served thee as purely, and constantly, and supremely as we ought to have done. Though we may not have bowed the knee to graven images, or worshipped in the temple of those that by nature are no gods, we have often given our hearts and affections to other objects than to thee, and have thus violated the first precept of thy law, which requires us to have no other gods before thee. Pardon our sins both of omission and commission; enable and dispose us henceforth to love thee with pure hearts fervently, for the divine excellencies of thy character, and for the manifold tokens of thy kindness, especially for thy kindness towards us in Christ Jesus, and from a firm and enlightened persuasion that thy service is the only reasonable, and free, and happy service; to resolve that whatever others around us may do, as for us, we shall serve the Lord. Confirm and establish us in this resolution; and as we know from painful experience, that we are too apt to fall into sin in spite of what we know to be our interest and duty, we pray that thou wouldst strengthen us with all might by thy Spirit, in the inward man, and animate us by that faith which overcometh the world, the flesh and the devil, and which will keep us steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Prepare us for all that is before us in the course of this day; amid all the scenes and duties to which we may be called, may we carry about with us a sense of thy presence, and of the relations in which we stand to thee, and be enabled to live to thy glory. In any trials which may be appointed to us, help us to manifest the spirit and temper of the disciples of Christ; to endure as seeing thee who art invisible; to have our affections crucified unto the world, and the world unto us; and to pass through all its progressive stages as strangers and pilgrims who are seeking a better country, that is, a heavenly. Bless all whom we are bound by natural or Christian affection, to remember at thy throne of grace. Be a sun and shield unto them; give them grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from them which thou knowest they need. Be gracious to every member of this family. Let thy presence go with us wherever we go, and thy blessing rest on us wherever we dwell, all which we ask and hope to receive through Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXIX.

SCRIPTURE—MARK I.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. It is generally allowed that Mark wrote after, and had seen the gospel of Matthew. This may account for his passing over every thing relating to the birth, family and early years of Jesus, and beginning his history with the preaching of the Baptist, as that was really the preparation and commencement of the gospel dispensation which the Son of God introduced. Ver. 9. All the prophets, priests and kings of the old dispensation, were consecrated to their office by being anointed with oil; and hence, as Jesus was to fill these offices as our Mediator, it became him to be set apart to his peculiar duties by the effusion of the Spirit, of which the sacred oil was merely an emblem; his baptism then, which he submitted to merely 'to fulfil all righteousness,' was his solemn inauguration into his office; for then 'the Spirit of the Lord God came upon him,' and 'he was anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows.' Ver. 14. It is remarkable that Jesus did not preach in Galilee till after the Baptist was laid aside from his ministry. To have come at any earlier period, would have distracted the minds of the people between the rival claims of the two preachers, and produced the same lamentable effects as afterwards were realized in Corinth, when some said, 'I am of Paul; and others, I of Apollos.' But Jesus showed his divine wisdom in postponing his visit to Galilee till John was imprisoned; and then he found the testimonies of the Baptist yet fresh in the minds of the people, who were thereby prepared to receive him.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

When the preaching of John, and his own baptism, had paved the way for Jesus publicly assuming the character of Messiah, he entered on his office; and this chapter details many of his proceedings in attestation of the claims he set forth to be 'the prophet that was to come.' No mark of a divine mission more striking and incontrovertible can be given, than that the person pretending to it possesses the power of doing things beyond the reach of human art or power, and of altering the course of nature by a word of his mouth. This evidence Jesus of Nazareth abundantly furnished. But it is of essential importance to bear in mind, that while the miracles which our Lord performed in Galilee proved the divine origin of the gospel, they were selected also with a special view of illustrating its peculiar doctrines. He came to preach repentance and the forgiveness of sins; and he brought with him a pledge that he had power to bestow this invaluable gift. As disease was introduced into the world by sin, so Jesus, by curing all manner of disease, gave assurance that he had power to forgive sins also; and by the easy and instantaneous manner by which he showed that he could cure the most inveterate maladies of the body, he has given a sensible sign, that, as the Physician of souls, he is able to remove the still greater evils of spiritual disease. And as he cast out devils from the bodies of those who were possessed, he has given us, by that means, a palpable demonstration that he will destroy all the works of the devil by that mighty power whereby he is able to subdue even all things to himself. Let us then apply by faith to this divine physician of souls. He still pursues the mighty plan of benevolence he began on earth; and by the energy of his word and Spirit, are his servants healed of all their spiritual diseases.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we would repair this evening to thy throne of grace, to pay thee the worship and homage which it is thy sole prerogative to receive. Thou art entitled to this tribute from us, as well from thy glorious majesty, as thine unwearied goodness to us; and this day which has now closed has added one more to the innumerable claims thou hast to our gratitude and love; for the comforts and blessings thy parental care has bestowed on us, ever since we had a being, where shall we begin, or where shall we end, if we attempt to enumerate the praises of the Lord! Though we should speak with the tongue of men and of angels, yet where could we find terms in which we could adequately express the riches of thy favour? Even eternity itself would be too brief a span to utter abundantly the memory of thy great goodness. We would especially at this time, express our liveliest thanksgiving for the blessings of that great salvation which thy Son and our Saviour hath procured for us. O may thy Spirit be given to us, whose province it is to take of the things of Christ, and show them to our souls, that he may lead us to repose unwavering confidence in the author and finisher of our faith; inspire us with gratitude for his generous and divine love in giving himself for us; and convince us, from experience, that there is no sin, however deep its dye, which he is not able to remove; no fear, however desponding, which he cannot dispel, and no spiritual malady, however inveterate, for which he has not an adequate remedy. Thus let us become partakers of that peace and joy which flow from believing; and realize the blessedness of that man whose transgressions are forgiven, whose sins are covered, and to whom thou imputest no iniquity. May we deem the past part of our life as more than sufficient to have wrought the will of the flesh; and may it henceforth be our daily prayer, and the constant aim and endeavour of our lives, to be growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour; to bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, and to be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, that thus we may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, and show forth the praises of him who called us out of darkness into his marvellous light. To thee, who never slumberest nor sleepest, we commit our bodies and souls this night. Let thy blessing and protection be extended to all in whom we are interested, and let our persons and services meet with acceptance, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXII. 5.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS IV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The acknowledgments by Moses, ver. 1, 10. of his own insufficiency for the task assigned him, remind us of our insufficiency for the work which God has given us to do; but the ample means for the accomplishment of his purpose furnished by the Almighty, to the messenger whom he sent to his afflicted people, point to that sufficiency which alike in his case and in ours, is of God, and of God only. Throughout the greater part of this chapter, and especially in ver. 5, 8. our attention is directed to miracles as a proof that God is with them who work them, and sanctions what they teach. A miracle, in the common sense of the word, is an exercise by man of greater power than is possessed by him in the ordinary course of nature; and unless on the supposition of intentional deception on the part of the superior being who furnishes him with that power, (which as regards the Almighty is utterly absurd), cannot be viewed otherwise than as a sign of that superior Being's approbation of the instructions promulgated by the person exercising it. A miracle is, in fact, an affirmative reply given by God to an appeal made to him. It is not meant to be asserted that every thing which is beyond the power of man, is necessarily the direct work of the Almighty; for we have the authority of scripture itself, that there are both good and evil beings, superior in point of power to man, but inferior in that respect to God, by whom supernatural deeds may be, and have been, performed in the world. Such exercises of power by the former, may be directly employed by God for the accomplishment of his purposes; and in that case, amount to the same thing as if they proceeded immediately from his hand; and by the latter may be permitted by him for some good end, but in no instance (under his ever watchful and all-pervading providence) in such a way as to give any countenance to that which is not truth. In the few instances in which he has allowed such an attempt to manifest itself, as in the case of the Egyptian magicians, overpowering evidence on the opposite side has not been wanting. From all this the conclusion is, that when a supernatural act stands alone, inasmuch as it either proceeds directly from God, or is under his control and direction, it is to be regarded as a certain proof that he is with the person who exhibits it as such; and that when there is contending and contradictory evidence of this description, the preponderance on the side of truth is always such as to be abundantly manifest to the candid and enlightened mind. In ver. 21. the Almighty states his determination to harden Pharaoh's heart; not however by any direct evil influence, for in this sense God tempteth not any man, but by withholding the free gift of his grace; in which sense, whom he will he hardeneth. This he does, however, not capriciously, but in accordance with those principles of rectitude which he has implanted in the human mind, and which are based on eternal and unchangeable truth. This accordance we are sometimes permitted in so far to see, as in the case of Pharaoh, who had persevered in so inexcusable a course of iniquity, that the Spirit of God no longer strove with him.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Amidst the many trials and temptations of life, let us never go forth leaning on our own strength; and as the Almighty gives no command which he is not likewise ready to give the means of executing, let us both place unlimited trust in him, and also remember that we shall be utterly inexcusable if we fall short of his requirements. The obvious connection of ver. 24. with the two succeeding verses, seems to indicate that the sin for which God was angry with Moses, arose partly at least from an improper compliance with the wishes of his wife; let the word of the Lord then be the only rule of our conduct. At the same time, domestic love is the express command of our heavenly Father, and mutual concessions, so far as wisdom and duty permit, are the bond of peace and the will of God regarding us.

PRAYER.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who hath visited us in our house of bondage, and hath remembered us in our low and lost estate. When we had forsaken thy law and disregarded thy commandments, when we had broken thy covenant and forfeited all claim to eternal life, when we were sunk in sin, in misery and in death, when we were utterly helpless, when sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, thou didst so love the world, as to give thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, might not perish but have everlasting life. What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits? Alas, O Lord, what have we rendered? We bow before thee in the dust. God be merciful unto us sinner. Measure not thy mercy by our merits, but look upon us in the face of thine Anointed Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. Enable us to give to every one that asketh us a reason for the hope that is in us; and may our faith, founded on the evidences which thou hast set before us, and ingrafted in our souls by thy Spirit, purify our hearts and overcome the temptations of the world. Let not our perverseness and ingratitude provoke thee to abandon us to our own devices. Cast us not away from thy presence. Take not thy Holy Spirit from us. Be thou the guide of all our actions, and our protector in all our dangers. So conduct and support us amidst all the changes and varieties of this uncertain state, that no prosperity may make us forget thee who art the author of it, and no adversity may make us murmur against thy goodness. May no prospect of worldly advantage, nor any dread of worldly loss, ever lead us to swerve from thy holy commandments; but may our conversation in all things be such as becometh the gospel. Teach us so to watch over our ways, that temptation may never be able to surprise us, and enable us so to control our passions and affections, that they may never obtain the dominion over us. May we live in thy fear that we may die in thy favour; that when the dust shall return to the earth as it was, the spirit may return unto God who gave it. All that we ask is for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXX. 3.

SCRIPTURE—MARK II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 5—12. The history of the cure of the man who was sick of the palsy is a strong confirmation of the more direct and express assertions of our Lord's divinity contained in scripture. Reason and revelation concur in assigning to God, the exclusive right to forgive sins. It is true indeed that God may make known to any of his children that he sees fit, his mind concerning forgiveness, not only in general, but as regards the case of individuals, and may empower them to declare what he has thus made known to them. It seems a doubtful point whether and how far this power was communicated to the apostles. But the words of our Saviour in this place, considered even simply in themselves, seem to assert a right of forgiving sins inherent in himself. It is certain, from the context, that they were understood in this sense by those who heard him; and, instead of contradicting their view of the matter, he wrought a miracle in order to confirm it, and that too in such a way as to leave uncontroverted their belief that none but the Almighty could forgive sins. Ver. 18—22. The scriptures recognise the propriety of suiting our conduct to circumstances, where it can be done without the sacrifice of principle; so that that may be becoming in one man, or under one set of circumstances, which would be unbecoming in another man, or under another set of circumstances. Ver. 24. It was not because the disciples plucked a few ears of corn that the Pharisees found fault with them, for this, under the Jewish dispensation, was expressly sanctioned by the proprietor of all things, although no such license has been extended to us; but it was because they did it on the sabbath-day that these formalists blamed them. Ver. 25—27. Our Lord teaches them (illustrating what he said by an example) that the sabbath-day and the other institutions of the law, were designed as a means to an end; that they were valuable only in so far as they promoted the performance of natural and spiritual duty, and that where they either failed to produce this effect, or had a tendency to prevent it, a strict adherence to the letter of them was worse than useless. Although the conduct which our Lord on this occasion sanctioned in his disciples, needed not such a defence, he adds, ver. 28. that as he himself instituted the sabbath, he had also the power to set aside whatever circumstances were merely positive in the institution, whenever he saw fit. Lest this should be misunderstood, we may remark that the commandment regarding the sabbath, enjoins both a moral and a positive duty. The moral duty is to worship God; the positive is to set apart every seventh day more especially for that purpose, and it is the latter and not the former, with which our Lord asserts a right of dispensing.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

When we reflect on the incarnation of the eternal Son of God, how clear is the inference that we have nothing to fear if we embrace so great salvation, and that it is utterly impossible to escape if we neglect it. In how striking a view does it exhibit the enormity of sin, and how strongly does it urge us, by the motives both of love and of fear, to detest and avoid it. In regard to the sabbath, whilst we avoid superstitious notions, and a formal and hypocritical observance of it, let us remember that it was instituted by God and was made for man, and that it is both our sacred duty and our true interest faithfully to keep it holy. Let us guard against the delusion, that it existed only as a part of the Jewish dispensation, and consequently ceased with that dispensation. It existed from the beginning of the world, and shall continue until the end of it; until the termination of that imperfect state of being, to which alone positive institutions are adapted, until that which is perfect being come, that which is in part shall be done away.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, in thy favour and love were our first parents created, and dwelt in the ever present light of thy countenance. But man being in honour and happiness did not abide. By the disobedience of one, have many been made sinners, and death and misery have passed upon all men, because all have sinned. But as thou saidst in the beginning, Let there be light, and there was light; so hast thou caused the Sun of righteousness to arise, and enlighten and restore a dark and a ruined world. Although thou art unchangeable in thy nature, and irconcilable to iniquity, in thine unsearchable wisdom and unbounded goodness, thou hast devised a method so great and so glorious, that even the angels desire to look into it, whereby mercy and truth have met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other; whereby thou art just, and yet the justifier of all who believe. Thou hast reconciled a guilty world unto thyself, by the blood of thine only begotten and eternal Son; who, having by one offering perfected for ever them that are sanctified, returned to his original glory, our all-prevailing intercessor, as he shall be our final judge. Surely he shall guide his flock like a shepherd; his grace is sufficient for all who put their trust in him. He will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able to bear; but will, with the temptation, make also a way to escape. In the depths of sorrow, degradation and sin, and in the region and shadow of death, we have heard the glad tidings of salvation; and his invitation to all who are weary and heavy laden is, Come unto me, and I will give you rest. God forbid that it should be our condemnation, that light hath come into the world, and that we have loved darkness rather than the light, because our deeds are evil. Being justified by faith, may we have peace with thee our God, through our Lord and Saviour; and as we have named the name of Christ, may we be enabled by thy grace to depart from iniquity. Teach us to regard ourselves as no longer our own, but bought with a price; and ever to keep in remembrance, that thou hast appointed a day, in which thou wilt judge the world in righteousness, when every work shall be brought into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Sanctify to our spiritual improvement, all the ordinances of thine appointment, and may the happy influence of a due attention to the means of grace, appear in the peaceable fruits of holiness and integrity. Keep us and ours this night, and for ever, under the shadow of thine Almighty wings, and grant an answer in peace to all our requests, for the sake of our Saviour. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLV. 17.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS V.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The contents of ver. 1—3. may, to the careless reader, seem a deception; but this is not to be confounded with a case in which one step, which we have a right to take, or which we think will meet with no opposition, is taken, ostensibly as all that we mean to do, but in reality as a means of taking another step, which is beyond our right, or which we think will be opposed. The Lord and proprietor of all things had a perfect right, whenever he saw fit, to accomplish his ultimate intentions in regard to the children of Israel, and to him the opposition of Pharaoh was as nothing. But, without entering into the question, whether this alone amounts to a complete vindication of the ways of God in this matter, (with all humility be such an expression used), we would add, that had the indulgence here demanded been granted by Pharaoh, and a corresponding relaxation of his severity in other respects taken place, the final departure of the Israelites might have for a season been delayed; nor is it any objection to this view of the case, that the Almighty had already arranged the method of their entire and immediate deliverance, and had in so far intimated it to Moses, for he saw the end from the beginning, and knew that the proposal made to Pharaoh would be rejected. This principle, in fact, pervades the whole scripture history; and every objection being thus removed, we find, in the case now before us, a remarkable instance of the goodness of God, in putting Pharaoh to no more severe a test, and in affording him an opportunity, at so small a sacrifice, of averting the calamities which threatened him. Ver. 4—9. Unimproved advantages are a sure means of hardening our hearts. Ver. 10—14. The deepest affliction often (although not necessarily) goes before the greatest deliverance. Ver. 15—18. How much better a master is God than man, the one ever having a regard to the best interests of his creatures, the other actuated often by mere caprice, and often even by passion and malevolence. Ver. 19—23. The conduct neither of the officers nor of Moses can be fully vindicated.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

From the apparent difficulties which ver. 1—3. present, and yet the natural and easy explanation of which it admits, we ought to learn not rashly to harbour in our minds doubts and objections against any part of the word of God. We ought to wonder that we are not more frequently unable to give complete solutions of difficulties, when we remember how far above the range of ordinary matters are the subjects with which the scriptures are conversant, how very briefly events are often related, and how much brevity tends to obscurity; when we remember, farther, that the contents of the word of God are frequently in the shape of indirect allusions, which of necessity are not so plain as direct statements; that the Old Testament, more particularly, was written in a very distant age and country, with reference to a very different state of manners and religion from the present, and in a language which has, for very many generations, ceased to be either spoken or written. The other practical inferences we leave to the reader's own reflections.

PRAYER.

For ever praised and adored be that goodness which hath not, long ere now, cut us off in the midst of our sins, and consigned us to that dismal abode where God hath forgotten to be gracious, but which even now is inviting us, in the gospel of reconciliation, to return to the paths of holiness and peace. O Lord, may thy Holy Spirit prepare our hearts to receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which alone is able to make us wise unto salvation. In that fountain which thou hast opened to the house of David, do thou wash us thoroughly from our iniquities, and cleanse us from our sins. It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps; do thou, O Lord, who seest the end from the beginning, lead us in the way everlasting. As strangers and pilgrims upon earth, may our conversation be in heaven. There may our treasure be; there may our hearts be also. We commit our ways unto thee, do thou bring them to pass in righteousness, and by whatever means may seem good unto thee, keep us from falling, and at last present us faultless before the presence of thy glory, with exceeding joy. Deny us what blessings thou wilt, but deny us not life eternal. We desire to submit with supreme resignation to whatever afflictions thou, in thine infinite wisdom and goodness, mayest see to be necessary for our salvation, and we leave all our concerns, with perfect confidence, to thy disposal, sensible that thou, who sparedst not thine own Son, but didst deliver him up to death for us all, wilt, with him, also freely give us all things. Withdraw our affections more and more from the things of time. Convinced of the uncertainty of every earthly blessing, seeing that we have nothing in this life which we can truly call our own; that our friends are constantly disappearing from around us; that the objects of our wishes are daily vanishing from before our eyes, we pray, almighty God, that thou wilt enable us to fix our desires on hopes which shall not be disappointed, on joys which are beyond the reach of alloy or uncertainty. Extend, we beseech thee, to the whole human race the same blessings which we have solicited for ourselves. We entreat thee, in an especial manner, in behalf of our own friends and relations. Convert the unconverted here and throughout the world; arouse secure and careless sinners, and build up saints more and more in their most holy faith.

And all things that are expedient for ourselves and for others, both for time and for eternity, we beg of thee, our heavenly Father, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI.

SCRIPTURE—MARK III.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 6. Wickedness, self-sufficiency, and prejudice will resist any means of conviction. Ver. 11. There are evil spirits who possess a greater degree of mere intelligence than man, but how utterly ineffectual for good is mere unsanctified knowledge. That our Saviour's hour was not yet come, explains the first part of ver. 7, 12. Ver. 15. Our Lord furnished the apostles with the power of exhibiting the very same evidences of their divine mission which attested his own. This shows the absurdity of drawing the slightest distinction, in regard to their authority, between his instructions and theirs, whether contained in their discourses or epistles. Ver. 19. Judas probably was not, at this time, an openly profane man, else our Lord most likely would not have selected him; for had he done so, his example would not have been calculated for our imitation, and the outward wickedness of such an instructor, whatever proof he might have exhibited of his mission, would have put the belief of his hearers to too severe a test. But our Saviour knew his inward depravity, and the manner in which it would afterwards manifest itself, and (among other reasons which have been pointed out) he wished to have such a one much in his presence, as a security to our minds against deception, and to employ him in the work of the ministry, to prove that its efficacy is not destroyed by the unworthiness of its outward instruments. Ver. 22—27. In regard to admitting that evil spirits have been permitted to manifest greater powers than are possessed by man, (see remarks on Exod. iv.), the nature of the supernatural works here referred to, and more particularly the object for which they were exhibited, sufficiently prove that they were not to be traced to such an influence. Ver. 28, 29. The sin alluded to seems obviously to be failing to recognise, appreciate, and seek after, despising, and consequently not obtaining, the grace of the Holy Spirit, through which alone we can have faith in Christ, which is the only means of salvation. This explanation is borne out by the context; it is the only one which is reconcilable with the fact that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin, and, not to mention other arguments, it derives important confirmation from our Lord's farewell address to his disciples, in which he represents the gift of the Holy Ghost as more essential to their best interests than his own personal presence. Ver. 31—35. How close and endearing is the relation which subsists between Christ and his true followers?

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let the wicked and unbelieving reflect that a time is coming when, like the unclean spirits, they shall be compelled to confess that Christ is the Lord, and shall tremble in his presence. Warned and instructed by the words of our Saviour, let us venerate and adore the Holy Spirit, and earnestly desire his sanctifying influences to guide us into all truth, and lead us in the way everlasting. To the timid and desponding we would say, that the vague fears and doubts which they are apt to entertain on this subject, are in themselves a proof that this sin is far from them. What they stand in need of is not a more willing heart, but a better instructed mind, and he who knows also pities their infirmities, and regards them as his brother, and sister, and mother.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we would approach thy footstool in the name of Christ, for we feel that on thy mercy and the merits of our Saviour must all our hopes depend. We throw ourselves on thy unbounded goodness. We acknowledge our need of a Redeemer. We look up from the depths of sin and of misery to thy throne of grace. We tremble when we anticipate thy righteous tribunal. Gracious God, in judgment remember mercy. We have no merit of our own to plead before thee; may the righteousness of Christ be imputed unto us. We have no sacrifice to offer unto thee; may the sufferings of our Saviour be accepted as the price of our salvation. God forbid that we should do despite unto the Spirit of thy grace, but may the Holy Ghost reign in our hearts, renew our natures, sanctify our lives, enable us to obey thy commandments, and seal our souls to the day of redemption. May our experience of the sad consequences of sin, of the utter disproportion between its transitory and uncertain rewards, and its lasting and certain punishments, lead us in future, with undeviating consistency, to follow after that godliness which hath the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come. May past errors lead us to distrust ourselves; may we think upon our former ways, and make it our constant prayer that our sufficiency may be of thee, the Lord. Enable us to walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time. Seeing that there is no work nor device in the grave, whither we are all hastening, may we not be slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving thee, our God. May we walk in the ways of the righteous, that our latter end may be like his; that the king of terrors may to us be a messenger of peace; that the night of death may be but the dawn of an eternal morn, and the grave but the entrance to a better world, where we shall be before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple. Enable us to perform aright, in our respective stations, our duty to our brethren of mankind. Our hearts' desire and prayer unto thee, in their behalf, is that they may be saved. We commend especially, to thy mercy and saving kindness, those who are near and dear to us. Do for them exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think; and, none found wanting, may we all meet at last in the kingdom of heaven, and be for ever with the Lord. We offer up all our petitions in the name of him who hath taught us thus to address thee, Our Father, &c.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVIII. 7.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS VII.

REMARKS.

We find in the end of the preceding chapter, that notwithstanding all the signal marks of God's presence and favour to Moses, he is still distrustful and discouraged. His great error and sin lay in his looking to himself at all in the matter, as by any possibility able to accomplish the great work to which God had called him. It is plain that his very distrust and fears, as to his own capabilities to appear before Pharaoh and assert the deliverance of his people, arose from the idea still clinging to him, that the work was to be accomplished by human power; an idea which, if he had renounced as he ought, his difficulties should have vanished. Instead of asking, 'how shall Pharaoh hearken unto me?' he should have remembered that it was not his own message, but God's, he was called to deliver, and that the work was to be done, 'not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.' God, who is long-suffering to us-ward, still bore with his fearful servant, and reminds him that it was not he that was to speak to Pharaoh; that he was, in this case, to be as a God, or rather, perhaps, God, that is, in the place, or clothed with the authority and commission, of God to Pharaoh, and therefore he need be under no concern about the matter. The cause and the issue were God's, and he would vindicate his own power and authority over the proud monarch of Egypt, and constrain him to bow. Yet, that the faith of his servant might not be too severely tried, God reminds him that he had given him the aid of Aaron, his brother, who should utter the words with the requisite dignity and grace. How gracious and condescending is our heavenly Father, in accommodating himself and his dealings even to the weaknesses of his people. Thus hath he provided a Saviour, who is bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, not ashamed to call us brethren, and touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift. Moses has now nothing to do then, but to declare the command of God to Aaron, and Aaron will declare it to the monarch. He is warned, however, that he must not, in the first instance, expect success; that Pharaoh's heart would still be hardened, but the issue would be a greater display of God's power and glory in the sight of the nations, in the deliverance of Israel. Ver. 3, 4. See remarks on Exod. x. for fuller explanation. It is thus, by the judgments which he executeth, that God manifests his supremacy over the highest. Moses could no longer resist. He and Aaron did as they were commanded. Observe their ages, noted in ver. 7. God chose two men, venerable for their years, and on whose lips wisdom might seem suitable, and a message from God to a proud and imperious monarch might come commended by the voice of gravity and experience. There are certain things which 'even nature herself teaches' to be becoming. Let us not, therefore, despise the ordinary fitness of human conditions and relations, even in the discharge of religious duties. Let us learn also, from the age of Moses and Aaron, that it may please God to lead his servants through a long course of trial and training, before he judge them meet to be honoured in his service, and to wait patiently the Lord's time.

God knew that the authority of Moses and Aaron would be challenged. It was right that Pharaoh should have evidence that they spake in the name of God, and though he would not yield to it, it is given. Ver. 8—10. A miracle is a work either above or contrary to the ordinary laws of nature, by which we learn that he who performs it is invested with an authority and power above nature; in other words, with that of God. We hold, then, a real miracle to be absolute proof of a divine commission, and by consequence it cannot be performed in support of falsehood. If it could, there could be no certain evidence from miracles for a divine commission. Though an undeniable miracle was wrought, Pharaoh quieted his fears by the imitations of the magicians. Whatever the magicians did, it was by their enchantments; their tricks and juggles, which they practised so long as the miracles were of such a kind as they could imitate on a small scale, and thereafter they ceased. These remarks apply to what is related ver. 14—24. It is plainly here affirmed that there was such a miracle wrought as that Pharaoh might know that he who commanded him to let the people go was Jehovah, (ver. 17.) which could not have been the case, if the magicians had done the same. Let it be observed, that any apology for a miracle would be enough to a man in Pharaoh's disposition of mind to make him resist the authority of Moses. 1. Let us beware of resisting the evidence of God's word to our own destruction. 2. Let us adore the condescension of God in assuring our hearts in the discharge of duty. 3. Beware of being hardened in prosperous wickedness, and be thankful in a humble condition. 4. God is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works, and his counsel shall stand.

PRAYER.

O Almighty God, Lord of heaven and earth, we acknowledge thy glorious sovereignty. We own thy power, wisdom, justice, and holiness. We confess that we are nothing, that we know nothing, and can do nothing; and yet we have rebelled against thee. We lift up our hearts against thee, the most high God, and too often shut our eyes to the manifest displays of thy presence, perfections, and agency. We have too often refused to acknowledge thine authority, and hardened our necks against God. O how wondrous thy long-suffering. How great thy forbearance with the impiety and high-mindedness of the worms of the dust. But thou wilt not always strive. Thou wilt not always be mocked. Thou wilt cause thyself to be known by the judgments which thou wilt execute against the proud and the rebellious. We are by nature such. But, O Lord, deal not with us as we have sinned. Thou hast not yet done so, but hast remembered mercy for us. Thou hast had compassion on us; thou hast found out a ransom, a glorious remedy for our condition. Thou hast not sent thy Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. Lord, let us not receive the grace of God in vain. Lord, we believe, help thou our unbelief. Bring us by thine almighty Spirit into subjection to the obedience of Christ. Teach us simple submission to thy will. Save us from distrust. When thou commandest may we obey in the strength of the Lord. Help us to wait with patience thy time, and to follow the leadings of thy providence, as thou knowest the end from the beginning, and we are but of yesterday, and know nothing. Preserve us from all hardness of heart and resistance to thy commands, or to the truth of thy word. Lead us in a plain path, and guide us by thy word and Spirit in the way everlasting. We adore thee alike in thy sovereignty and in thy wondrous condescension to our condition; the unspeakably tender grace that, knowing our frame, remembers that we are dust, and has provided a Saviour who, while Christ the Lord, is yet of the seed of Abraham, bone of our bone, and thus a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God. To thee, then, we come in his name. O grant us mercy to pardon, and grace to help. As our day is, let, we beseech thee, our strength be. Help us to serve and glorify thee. Supply us with water out of the wells of salvation. Carry us on from strength to strength. Bring us at last perfect before thee in the new Jerusalem. Satisfy us early with thy goodness. Accept of thanksgiving for all past mercies, which we cannot number. This day, which in mercy thou hast brought us to see, surrounded with benefits, be our shield and buckler. Save and help all who are near and dear to us. Keep them and lift them up for ever. Have pity on the distressed. Have mercy upon Zion. O compassionate sinners. Let them be converted unto thee through all the earth. Take unto thee thy great power and reign. Hear, O Father of mercies, these our prayers, for the sake of him who is our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 11.

SCRIPTURE—MARK IV. 1—20.

REMARKS.

The same parable is given in Matthew and Luke, in nearly similar terms, but so varied in some of the circumstances as both to give it fresh interest, and to show that there was neither servile copying nor collusion, but each spake as he was moved by the Holy Ghost. Our Saviour himself expounds it, and it requires few remarks by way of explanation. One is astonished how the multitude did not understand it; that even the disciples themselves, those 'who were about him,' and constantly attended him, did not see its full meaning. Ver. 11. But being of a teachable spirit, our Saviour said to them, 'Unto you it is given,' graciously granted, by the Spirit of God, (without whom, however obvious, they cannot be spiritually discerned, even when revealed) 'to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God,' those great and glorious truths which have been hid from ages and generations. 'But unto them that are without,' that is, to them who were no better than heathens, whom the Jews so described as outside the pale of God's vineyard, it was not given, and that for an express but awful purpose, foretold by the prophet Isaiah, that they might be left in that darkness, unbelief, and impenitence which their sensuality, wilful blindness, and hardness of heart merited and brought upon them, in the just judgment of a holy God, whose warnings and invitations were despised. See Isa. vi. Matth. xiii. 11—17. All which persons are most aptly described in this parable, by similitudes which may be easily understood and applied, and which give a striking description of the great majority of the hearers of the gospel, solemnly conveying to each and all of us the lesson, 'take heed how ye hear;' and enforcing it by the consideration impressed upon us, not only expressly in the word of God, but daily intimated in his providence, that 'from him that hath not'—that improves not his talents, of whatever kind, and especially his spiritual privileges—'from him shall be taken away even that which he hath.' But we are encouraged to make this improvement by the last part of the parable intimating to us, that all are not of this sort, and that those who improve the gospel receive blessing from God.

Let us beware of treating lightly the word of the living God; of contemptuously treading it under foot; of making a profession of receiving it with gladness, in the day of prosperity, while in the day of trial we cast it away; or of permitting the engrossing cares of the world, or the stupifying and hardening gratifications of earthly and sensual appetites and pursuits to debase and make gross the heart, to shut the spiritual eye, render dull the spiritual ear, and utterly destroy the saving effects of the word of God, which is the alone instrument, 'the sword' by which the Spirit of God reaches the conscience and quickens the dead soul, the light by which he reveals the Redeemer, directs the soul to him, sanctifies, comforts, and saves it. Watch and pray for the Spirit of God, that his word may not return unto him void; that it be not to us a savour of death unto death, but of life unto life; and that, watered in our hearts by the dew from on high, it may bring forth the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the glory and praise of God.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we adore thee as the God of our salvation, and in the name of him whom thou hearest always, and in whom thou art always well pleased, do we give thee most humble and hearty thanks, that when darkness had covered the earth, and gross darkness the people, thou didst send forth thy word to lighten them, and great hath been the company of them that published it, that holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and in the last days thou didst speak to men by thy Son from heaven. We rejoice that the day-star from on high hath visited us, that Jesus Christ, the Sun of righteousness, has arisen with healing under his wings, and that now the light shineth to us who were in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death. O Lord God of hosts, our covenant God, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, shine, we beseech thee, into our hearts, to give us the light of his glorious gospel. Reveal thy Son himself in us. Remove the veil that covers our spiritual sight. Grant us, for this end, the Spirit of the Lord, that we may have liberty, and beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, may be changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord. Quicken us by thy word, and we will call upon thy name. Sanctify us by thy truth; thy word is truth. O let it not be to us either as water spilt upon the ground, that cannot be gathered up again, or as seed sown on a hard, neglected, unfruitful soil, which bringeth forth no fruit to perfection, and is speedily carried away or destroyed. O let it not be to our condemnation that light hath come into the world, and that we have loved darkness rather than light, because our deeds were evil. Let us not harden our hearts and provoke the Lord to give us over to strong delusion, so as that we should either reject or disobey thy truth, hold it in unrighteousness, or believe a lie; for no lie is of the truth, or can sanctify or save our souls.

Help us to remember the words of him who came in thy name to save us, and gave himself for us, Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. Revive and quicken us. O thou who hast promised to pour water on him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground, be as the dew unto Israel, that we may grow in thy service as the lily, and cast forth our roots as Lebanon, that our branches of righteousness may spread, and our branches of holiness may be as the olive-tree, and the odour of our good name as Lebanon. May we revive as the corn and grow as the vine. For this purpose may we abide in Christ, without whom we can do nothing; and as we have received so let us walk in him. Let thy statutes be our songs in the house of our pilgrimage. Lead us in the way of thy testimonies, that our footsteps may not slide; and though it may be through a way that we have not known, bring us, we pray thee, to the city of habitation. We thank thee for the mercies of this week. They have been many and precious. Bless to us its trials; forgive its sins, which are great. Wash them away in that blood which cleanseth from all sin. Prepare and solemnize our minds for the duties of the approaching sabbath. If spared in thy mercy to enter upon them, may we rise refreshed with needful rest, animated with gratitude, in the gladness of thy nation, and prepared to spend in the Spirit the Lord's day. Be gracious, O God, to all who are near and dear to us. Let the name of the God of Jacob defend them, and let him that dwelt in the bush, the angel Jehovah, who redeems his servants from all evil, and hath fed and led them all their life long in all generations, be with them to keep them in all their ways, and to preserve them to the day of redemption. Let thy name be known throughout all the earth, and thy saving health to all nations. Bless and preserve thy servants who go forth in the Spirit of Christ to seek the lost. Sustain their souls. Give them souls for their hire. Bless thy Zion, even the whole Israel of God. Comfort the afflicted. Give the peace of thy chosen to mourners in Zion. Be our God even unto death, and at last our exceeding great reward. Into thy hands we commend ourselves, and all in whom we are interested, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

EIGHTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVII. 4.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XXVI. XXVII.

REMARKS.

PSALM XXVI. How admirable is the consistency of scripture; how splendid and satisfactory the light thus thrown on its divine origin and invariable truth? When the tongue of calumny and the jealousy of power had banished David from the land of his nativity; when there resorted to him the unfortunate, the desperate, and the discontented of his countrymen, when their abode was in the caves of the rocks, or in the fortress reluctantly conceded by the stranger, how powerful were the temptations under which he laboured to follow the practices then and now prevalent amongst those similarly situated. The manners of the times might seem to justify him in returning evil for evil. The habits of the country at that and at the present day would have afforded apology for plundering the helpless traveller, or selling protection for a bribe. The instigation of his reckless followers prompted to these and many other such deeds of violence; and his own human passions bursting forth occasionally, had nearly hurried him on to retaliation of injuries, and commission of wrong. But the man after God's own heart was preserved, through the divine blessing, from thus forfeiting his integrity. He sat not in council with vain persons, and shunned the congregation of evil-doers. He trusted in the Lord, and therefore he did not slide. Hence could he boldly expostulate with Saul, 'What have I done, and what evil is in mine hand? The Lord judge between thee and me.' Thus did he confute the aspersions of his enemies; and thus was he enabled to call on the Lord to judge him, because in these respects he had walked in his integrity; because he had kept the loving-kindness of God before his eyes, and walked in his truth; because he had not gone with dissemblers, nor cast in his lot with the bloody men. He ceased not to love the habitations of the Lord's house, and the place where his honour dwelleth. He was prepared to wash his hands, not in mere external form, but in token that he was innocent of the crimes charged upon him, in hope of one day being restored to the privilege of compassing the altar of the Lord, of publishing in his sanctuary the mercies of the Most High, and telling of all his wondrous works. Happy indeed are they whom his grace thus enables to set the Lord always before them, and under every temptation to hold fast their integrity. Thus, like David, they baffle the malice of the slanderer and live down the calumnies of the evil speaker. Thus may they count on the clouds which now hang over them being in a good time dispelled. Or, if their appointed period of trial should be ordained to last while life endures, theirs is the gracious promise, (Matth. v. 11, 12.) 'Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven.'

PSALM XXVII. Long had David stood forth in the front of battle, and often had he triumphed over the foes of his country. Her defender in war, the asserter of her independence, the ruler over her tribes, the author of her civilization, the restorer of her worship, he had every claim on the gratitude and affection of her children. Accordingly, when his strength began to abate, and he had narrowly escaped the sword of his adversary, his men swore unto him, saying, 'Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Israel.' To their request he here declares his cheerful assent. He was content to remain at home, to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of his life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple. Thence could he look down, in conscious security, on his enemies, now baffled and subdued; and there could he, undisturbed and tranquil, offer, in the divine tabernacle, sacrifices of thanksgiving, and sing praises unto the Lord. Still he felt that the safety of his life, and the continuance of his authority, depended solely on the blessing of heaven. Therefore did his heart say, 'Thy face, Lord, will I seek.' Therefore did he implore the Lord to teach him the right way, and lead him in a plain path. Therefore he fainted not, but believed to see the goodness of God in the land of the living; and hence did he admonish others that they should wait on the Lord, and be of good courage, that so their hearts might be strengthened.

Such is the true believer, the devoted follower of the Son of David. He has his mortal foes to withstand, in the form of corrupt inclination and worldly temptation. Should these assume the form of personal danger or outward suffering, he sinks not into despondency, nor chargeth God foolishly, but submits him to the chastening of the Lord. As he prays that he may not be led into temptation, he avoids exposing himself rashly to those trials in which he sees others fail, those associations which corrupt good manners, those connections and engagements which too often pervert the principles and conduct of professing Christians. But when temptation is unavoidable, when his Master calls him to fight the good fight of faith, he goes forth fearlessly, not in his own strength, but relying on that which is from on high. He is strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and therefore becomes more than a conqueror, through him who loved his people. Still the sanctuary of the most High is his favourite place of resort, and the duties of that sanctuary, his approved means of striving to obtain spiritual strength. He is glad when they say unto him, 'Let us go into the house of the Lord.' He delights in holding communion with him who is invisible, and joining with his fellow Christians in pouring forth the tribute of thanksgiving, praise, and reverential supplications before the throne of divine grace, through him whom the Father heareth always. From such exercises he goeth forth, strengthened and encouraged to encounter every trial, and resist every temptation. By the sympathies of such exercises is his heart kindled into warmer affection; and thus is he taught to set the Lord always before him, assured that they at whose right hand He is, shall not be greatly moved.

PRAYER.

Lord, how lovely is thy dwelling-place, how amiable are the tabernacles of thy grace, how blessed is the man whom thou choosest and makest to approach unto thee. While we give thee glory for all thy Fatherly care and providential goodness, while we praise thee for Jesus Christ, thine unspeakable gift, and for all the benefits of the Redeemer's purchase, we would gratefully remember the provision which thou hast made for our spiritual improvement. Let thy blessing be upon the exercises of this day. May we ever account a day spent in thy courts, better than a thousand wasted in the tents of sin. Enable us to engage in the public duties of this day, refreshed by thy presence, by a recollection of our recent intercourse with thee, and in humble confidence of thy favour and blessing, through our all-sufficient and ever-gracious Saviour. We know not what changes, and trials, and afflictions, are reserved for us in thy unerring wisdom. We desire to commit ourselves without reserve to thy wise and righteous disposal, believing that thou knowest what is good for us, better than we possibly can; and assured that thou makest all things work together for good, to those who are truly thine. We pray that thou, in thy providence, mayest be pleased to spare us those temptations which may be too ensnaring for our watchfulness, or too powerful for our resistance. We pray that when we are tempted, thou mayest be at hand to support and deliver us, to make thy grace sufficient for us, and perfect thy strength in our weakness. And we beseech thee, that in all our ways we may be enabled to acknowledge thee, and that our paths may be directed by thy unerring wisdom. We bless thee, that we have been preserved from evil during the shade of the night now passed; and raised up to the light and the duties of a new day. O be thou graciously pleased to guide us in our going out and our coming in, to deliver us from all evil, and to sanctify all that we do, or that may befall us, day by day, to the praise of thy holy name. Hear, O Lord, and when thou hearest, forgive the imperfection of all our services, and accept of them and of us, in Christ, our only Mediator. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVIII. 6.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XXVIII. XXIX.

REMARKS.

PSALM XXVIII. Man is born unto trouble even as the sparks fly upwards. The youth of David was a succession of changes, perils, and wondrous preservations. His middle age was a period of exertion, labour and frequent conflict with foreign and domestic foes. His declining years were embittered by the unnatural rebellion of a darling son, the merited chastisements of divine providence, and the repeated attacks of inveterate foes. Even after he had retired in person from the strife of swords, the events of at least three battles are recorded, in which his faithful defenders had to contend with gigantic champions and numerous enemies. Still the favour of heaven had delivered him from all his dangers, and prolonged the period of his dignity and authority. Therefore his soul is poured forth in fervent and confiding supplication for deliverance from external inroads, from treasonable conspiracy and domestic rebellion; and therefore he blesses the Lord, his strength and his shield, in whom his heart had trusted, and by whom he was helped. For himself, for the hosts of Israel, for their success and the prosperity of his people, he gives all glory to the Almighty, and implores the continuance on their behalf and his own, of his God's heavenly blessing and saving grace. To us belongs the example thus exhibited of resignation to the divine will, under even the severest trials; of trust in the Lord, in prospects apparently most unfavourable; of unwearied application to him for strength in the day of trouble, and deliverance in the hour of peril; of grateful acknowledgment for every benefit which he bestows, and all the success with which he blesses our weak exertions; and above all, of unwearied prayer for the welfare of our Zion, for the prosperity of our native land, and for the preservation and continuance of scriptural faith and undefiled religion among all classes of our countrymen.

PSALM XXIX. Who is he who regardeth not the works of the Lord, neither considereth the operation of his hands? Surely the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth forth his handy-work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night teacheth knowledge. Or, if the invariable succession, and constant re-appearance of these manifestations of his omnipotence and wisdom, may have so accustomed us to them, that we lose the habit of referring them to their author, are there not occasional displays of his wondrous working, to strike the most thoughtless, and appal the most hardened? Can weak man be unaffected when the tempests level the mightiest of his works; when his boasted navies, with all by whom they are navigated, are overwhelmed in the deep; when the God of glory thundereth with that voice which is powerful and full of majesty; when he breaketh the cedars of Lebanon, and shaketh the wilderness, and divideth the flames of fire. Such elemental tumults were often the instruments of God's providence, in behalf of his people Israel. He rained down great stones from heaven on the hosts of Canaan, and arrested in their progress the sun and moon, till Joshua had avenged the people on their enemies. The stars in their courses fought against Sisera; and probably the recent occurrence of some such favourable interposition, had at once called forth the gratitude of the psalmist, and encouraged his confidence, that the Lord would continue to give strength, and bless his people with peace. How manifold are the works of God, how unsearchable his counsels, how wondrous his ways! How unspeakably beyond our finding out, are the small portions of his creation which we behold! Who can comprehend the full thunders of his power? Let us then stand in awe before him. Let our hearts be penetrated with the deepest reverence of him, and the most humbling thoughts of ourselves; and let us hold fast our confidence in him who can do for us above what we can ask or think of, through that blessed Redeemer whose cross is the wisdom of God, and the power of God, for our salvation.

PRAYER.

Thou, O Lord, art a God of knowledge, and by thee actions are weighed. No darkness nor shadow of death can conceal from thee any of the works which thou hast made, neither is there any creature that is not manifest in thy sight. To thee are known all the wanderings of our hearts, the idleness of our speech, the sinfulness of our lives. O do thou enable us to look on our thoughts, words, and actions, as tried by the infallible test of thy unerring law. Give us to discern how perverse have been our thoughts, how vain our conversation, how worthless our conduct, how hopeless our state, wert thou to enter with us into judgment. Lead us to that Saviour in whom thou reconcilest sinners to thyself, to that blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abel; and fill our hearts with that bitter compunction, that godly sorrow, that humility and contrition, which thou hast declared that in him thou wilt not despise. While it is thy pleasure that we yet tabernacle on earth, we know that we must encounter many trials and temptations. Do thou graciously support and strengthen us under them. Let no danger intimidate, no pleasure allure us into forgetfulness of our God. Save us from being cast down by the evil reports of erring men, or elated by the flattery of human applause, or misled by the fashion of the world, to follow the multitude in doing evil. And let the means of grace which thou hast appointed, be sanctified for our benefit, that we may walk in our integrity, and bless the Lord in the congregation of his people. We would especially acknowledge, with fervent gratitude, the high privilege of a day set apart for thy peculiar service, the blessed rest of thy holy sabbath, the solemn and stated call to withdraw our thoughts from the engrossing cares and pursuits of a transitory world, and the opportunity this day afforded us of meeting our brethren in the Lord, and uniting our hearts and voices in praise, and thanksgiving, and prayer to him who is the Father and the Maker of us all. O may our services ever find acceptance with thee in Christ Jesus. May the preaching of thy word be blessed of thee as the means of enlightening, comforting, and establishing our hearts in thy truth. May our fellowship in thy public worship unite our hearts in brotherly love; and may our earthly sabbaths be indeed an earnest of that eternal sabbath, where thy servants, assembled before thy throne, shall praise thee for ever and ever. We pray, O Lord, that the blessings of divine truth may be diffused more and more over the face of the earth; that thou mayest prosper the efforts of those who labour according to thy mind and will in this great cause; and that the multitudes of our fellow mortals, who yet lie in spiritual darkness, may have the cloud now encompassing them dispelled by the glorious light of the everlasting gospel. We desire to pour forth our thanksgivings for all the unmerited blessings, spiritual and temporal, which we have this day experienced. We beseech thee to continue to us thy gracious care and inexhaustible bounty, that so we may repose in peace under the shadow of thy almighty wings; may receive, day by day, our daily bread, and be kept by thy mighty power, through faith unto salvation, in Christ our strength and Redeemer. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLV. 17.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS VIII.

REMARKS.

When the Lord poured forth the vials of his wrath on Pharaoh and his people, to compel the release of Israel from the bondage of Egypt, each successive plague was followed by a reluctant and selfish concession, to be soon retracted or evaded. Take away this plague, was the word of the king, and I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice unto the Lord; but when he saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart and hearkened not unto them. Under the next infliction, he yielded so far as to say, Go ye, sacrifice to your God in the land. Nay, farther, I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the Lord your God in the wilderness; only, ye shall not go very far away; entreat for me. But, when the entreaty was heard, Pharaoh hardened his heart at this time also, neither would he let the people go. What was the result? The answer is heard in the cry of misery, ascending from house to house, as the destroying angel passed onward, smiting the first-born; in the roar of the waves which overwhelmed the monarch and his mighty army. Little do we generally consider how common is this hardness of heart. How many are there whom no kindness can soften, no benefits excite to thankfulness! How many again, who shrink from suffering, and succumb, in apparent contrition, under the chastening of the Lord; but, when his hand is removed, return again with redoubled relish to former sins and indulgences. Like the Israelites, when he destroyeth them, then they seek him, and inquire early after God; but when he spareth, they forget that God is their rock, and the high God their Redeemer. Let us beware of such obduracy and unthankfulness. Let us acknowledge the Almighty in all the dispensations of his providence. When his judgments are abroad in the earth, let the sons of men learn righteousness. Let us pray, that on us may fall the blessedness of him whom the Lord chasteneth, and teacheth out of his law; and let us, in an affectionate sense of our mutual relation and dependence, exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day, lest any of us be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, thou art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. Who hath an arm like unto thee, or who can thunder with a voice like thine. Impress on our hearts a deep sense of thy glorious majesty, of our own weakness and unworthiness, that we may stand in awe before thee; and, trembling at thy word, flee for refuge to the hope which is set before us in Christ Jesus, our all-sufficient Saviour. Let not our hearts be hardened, nor our eyelids lifted up, but every thought within us be subdued to the obedience of Christ. Thou commandest the morning, and causest the day-spring to know his place; thou sendest man forth to his labour, and givest him, refreshed and protected, the means of procuring his daily bread. Enable us and all around us to profit by our opportunities. What our hand findeth to do, may we do it with all our might. This day, may thy good providence preserve our bodies from danger, and thy grace keep our souls from sin, and to thee be the glory in Christ, for ever and ever. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 33.

SCRIPTURE—MARK IV. 21—41.

REMARKS.

How glorious is the mission on which the Son of God came into the world? He came to sow that smallest of seeds, which, when put into the earth, is almost invisible; but, watered from heaven, groweth up, and shooteth out great branches, that the fowls of the air may lodge under its shadow;—to plant this blessed tree which overshadoweth the Christian world, and the fruit of which is for the healing of the nations. He came to illuminate the face of the globe with that light by which all things shall be made manifest, and whose steady radiance shall guide the feet of his people in the paths of peace. He came to cast into the ground that good seed which bringeth forth, in some thirty, in some sixty, and in some an hundred fold, which in his true followers bringeth forth fruit unto holiness, and maketh their end everlasting life. In executing this great office, how wonderful was his wisdom, and how beautifully simple his method of instruction? Yet, how decisive was the testimony borne to his divine character, and how wondrous the working of his mighty power! When he spake, the wind and the sea obeyed him; when he said, Peace, be still, the tempests ceased, and there was a great calm. What a lesson to us, that we take heed how we hear! What cause of thankfulness that the word which he spake in parables, as his hearers were able to bear it, was expounded in all things to his disciples, and by them handed down to us, that he who runs may read! Hence are we taught, while avoiding ostentation or vain glory, to provide things honest before all men, and to let our light so shine before men, that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father in heaven. Hence are we warned to beware of indulging in secret sin, since there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested, neither any thing kept secret but that it should come abroad. Hence do we learn to do to others as we would be done by, for with what measure we mete, it shall be measured to us. Hence are we urged to the careful improvement of every talent, because he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath. And above all, is the lesson impressed on us, that we take heed lest there be in us an evil heart of unbelief, and that in every trial, spiritual or temporal, we cast our cares on him who careth for us, lest we be condemned as unnecessarily fearful, and having no faith.

PRAYER.

Most merciful Father, how precious is thy grace! how unwearied thy loving-kindness! thou hast added another day to our lives, and brought us to its close in peace and comfort. O may each day be marked by steadier faith in a Redeemer, by increasing watchfulness against temptation, by unwearied diligence in the duty which thou requirest, by more ardent zeal for thy glory, and by a more affectionate concern for the welfare of our brethren! Forbid that there be in us an evil heart of unbelief, to depart from the living God. Suffer us not to be a prey to spiritual delusion or self-conceit, but enable us to have our conversation in simplicity and godly sincerity, as in thy sight. Teach us to walk in love, as Christ who loved us, and to show that we are his disciples by having love one to another. Take us this night under thy gracious protection. Let no evil come nigh our dwelling. May our rest prove refreshful, and our awaking be with the Lord. And may the remainder of our sojourning here be devoted to thy service, through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCIX.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS IX.

REMARKS.

In this chapter three plagues are recorded, the fifth, sixth, and seventh; the murrain which destroyed the cattle of the Egyptians; boils and blains which tormented their own persons; rain, hail, and fire which desolated the whole land of Egypt. How fruitful of miseries sin is! It is big with plagues and ruin. And they that will not listen to the voice of God directing them what to do, shall listen to it declaring what they must suffer. There are two alternatives, obedience or punishment. He that persists in refusing the first, must accept the second.

How abundant was the evidence God granted to Pharaoh! He is informed not only that there will be a grievous distemper among the cattle, but when it should take place; and the cattle of the Hebrews is exempt from this plague. So that 'all the beasts that died belonged to the Egyptians;' which is the sense of the 6th verse.

Men are commonly most touched by personal calamities; 'all that a man hath will he give for his life.' And God makes the ashes of those furnaces, at which the poor Hebrews had been condemned to burn brick, a plague to torment their cruel masters. The Lord often turns the instrument of oppression into a whip by which the oppressor may be scourged. Boils and blains manifested the faith and patience of Job, but the unbelief and obstinacy of the Egyptians. The afflictions of good men make them better, those of bad men commonly render them worse. Deceivers and deceptions can only last for a time. Soon they must condemn themselves, and fly ashamed from before the face of truth. 'The magicians could not stand before Moses.'

Pharaoh is warned of still more plagues and worse. O how foolish to doubt that he who thus plagues him, both can destroy him, and will, unless he repent. Sinners 'pass on, and are punished.' Hail, lightning, and thunder terrify the Egyptians, and ruin Egypt. Yet some of the people of Pharaoh had so much faith in the Lord as to fear him, by which their property was saved. Hence we learn that even in the most abandoned communities there are commonly some who fear the Lord, and also, that no act of faith, how weak soever, is without reward, not of debt but of grace.

The king of Egypt suffered a worse plague than any of the ten calamities that desolated his kingdom, the plague of a hardened heart. And as the other plagues were punishments of his wickedness, so was this also. He raised up himself against the Lord; strengthened himself to resist him, and the Lord 'made him stand;' not at once utterly overwhelming him, that the power which Pharaoh braved might be the more clearly displayed, and others might, by his fate, be warned of the sure destruction which awaits the enemies of God.

Men who shut their eyes are punished with want of light, and with stumbling and falling; they will not see, and God takes from them the light they will not use; they love lies, they covet delusions, and God sends them 'strong delusions to believe a lie.' We must not suppose God first inclined Pharaoh to sin, and then punished him for sinning. 'God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man; but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.' James i. But he who cherishes sin is justly punished by the increase of the inclination, and by the fruits of sin, death.

PRAYER.

O Lord God of Israel, who didst perform wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, to make unto thyself a glorious name, and who leddest forth thy people out of that house of bondage, overthrowing their enemies in the Red sea, may thy name be blessed for ever. As thou didst promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, so didst thou perform unto their children, for all thy promises are yea and amen. O Lord, we rejoice that out of the Egypt of this sinful world thou hast redeemed thy church, the spiritual Israel, not without wonders and miracles of grace, destroying the power of sin and of death, and giving them the victory, through Jesus Christ, our Lord, and liberty to serve the Lord even in the wilderness of this mortal life. O God, who hath kept us to see the light of another day, accept our grateful thanks and praises. May the devil be this day bruised under our feet. May we walk in the Spirit, not fulfilling the deeds of the flesh. And when we see thy hand stretched out to punish them that proudly oppose thee, may we not be high-minded, but fear. O God, deliver us from 'hardness of heart,' from 'a seared conscience,' from blindness of mind. Shine thou into our hearts, giving us the knowledge of thyself in the face of Christ. May we dwell in Goshen, being separated from the world in its pride and unbelief, and separated also from its plagues and miseries. O may we be redeemed from all iniquity, from our vain conversation, from the power of this present world, and may we live under the powers of the world to come. Sanctify us wholly, in spirit, soul, and body. We pray for all men. Bless and enlarge thy church. Be the God of our friends. Reward our benefactors. Forgive our enemies, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM IV. 6.

SCRIPTURE—MARK V. 1—25.

REMARKS.

How fierce and terrible this wretched man had become. The devil makes men a plague to themselves and a terror to others. Where he reigns, fear, and rage, and whatever constitutes hell, hold their empire. The demons acknowledged Christ. So will the most wicked of men do at the day of judgment. But the acknowledgment which is forced is thankless. They deserve no praise who admit what cannot be denied. God and the devil divide the obedience of the rational creation; and God and Satan are not more opposed than are the temper and condition of those whom they respectively actuate. The one party enjoy already some foretaste of heaven, the other forestall the darkness and misery of hell. The devil, the accuser of the brethren, is the destroyer of the creatures. Mischief is his employment and his pleasure; and, if he cannot work his will upon the higher, he will upon the lower, creation. 'Let us enter into the swine, if thou drive us out of the man.' This was the only miracle of a destructive kind which our Lord performed; but, indeed, all he did was to permit the devil to exhibit himself; he only, in this instance, rended the chain of that roaring lion. O Lord, what would become of us, unless thou didst restrain him that goeth about seeking whom he may devour.

But what ails the Gadarenes? One has appeared among them that has turned a monster into a man, having cast the devil out of him. But then he has also destroyed 2000 swine, which were worth a great deal of money. And who can tolerate a Saviour who causes so much loss of property! Alas, how many Gadarenes do we behold among ourselves, men who refuse the spiritual deliverance, and all the riches that Christ bestows, because he plunges some of our temporal riches into the sea. And because they are more concerned about the unrighteous mammon than about the true riches, therefore they beseech Christ to 'depart out of their coasts.'

He that hath known the blessed power of Christ is willing to leave all and follow him. And as his heart is full of gratitude, so his tongue of the praises of the Lord. He tells how great things Jesus had done for him, that other diseased souls may be induced to take the powerful medicines of this great Physician, and be cured of the deadly bite of the old serpent.

PRAYER.

O God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hast sent thy dear Son into the world, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have eternal life, may we repent and believe the good news of salvation which he brings, and may we be baptized with the Holy Ghost. We are blind, weak, and corrupt, may the Spirit of Jesus Christ enlighten our understandings in the knowledge of him our Saviour. Strengthen us with all strength, in the inner man; purify us from all our corruptions, and work in us mightily to do thy holy will. Forgive us all our sins, through Jesus Christ, our great high priest, and may we know that our sins are pardoned, for his name's sake. And, O God, enable us to leave all and follow Christ. May we not question, but obey thy will, meekly submitting ourselves to thy gracious and righteous disposal. Lord, sustain us under all trials; purify us by the afflictions thou sendest, and may our faith come out as the fine gold from the furnace. O Lord, may thy kingdom come; may thy will be done by us, as it is done by angels in heaven. May we be kept by them, through faith to salvation. The Lord perfect that which concerneth us. Send forth thy light and truth to every land. Let thy praise be spoken by every tongue; let every knee bow to thee. And to thy name, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be endless praise. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 1—6.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS X. XI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

1. When God is said to 'harden the heart' of Pharaoh, we are not for a moment to suppose that he who is the source of all purity, implanted in the mind of the Egyptian monarch a principle of obstinacy in sin, or exerted any positive influence on him in this way; but simply, that he left him to his own heart's lusts, and gave him up to the hardening effects of sin. As Jeremiah is said to have been 'set over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy,' (i. 10.) when the meaning merely is, that he was to foretel such things, so God is said to 'harden' when he simply intimates beforehand that so it shall be, and leaves the sinner to the consequences of his own folly. If you ask a reason for this peculiar phraseology, I would say that it is designed to mark God's absolute and universal supremacy. Even the sins of men, on which, in the inscrutable arrangements of heaven, so much may depend, are not the results of chance, or unknown or unnoticed by Jehovah. They are permitted by him; they are bounded by his boundless sway; and they are even overruled in the issue for the accomplishment of his own glorious ends. 'He maketh even the wrath of man to praise him.' 2. In the account given us (chap. xi.) of the Israelites 'spoiling the Egyptians,' by receiving of them gold, and silver, and other articles of value, the original terms, rendered 'borrowed' and 'lent,' are nearly synonymous with the terms 'asked' and 'gave;' and they by no means convey the idea that the Israelites obtained possession of property, not their own, under false pretences. God is the sovereign proprietor of all, and says he, 'the silver and the gold are mine.' Long and severely had the Egyptians spoiled the Israelites, and now the property is restored by the supreme owner to its rightful occupants. The Egyptians are, by the judgments of the Lord's hand, inclined to grant to Israel whatever they might require; and a portion of the riches of the land of Pharaoh is transferred to other proprietors, by him of whom it has been declared, by inspiration from himself, 'The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof.' 3. When it is said (xi. 8.) that Moses went out from Pharaoh in 'great anger,' we must not interpret it of violent passion, but of that holy indignation against sin which is perfectly consistent with that benignant feeling which breathes in the words of an apostle, 'Many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you, even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ.' Of a greater than either Moses or Paul it is recorded, that on one occasion he looked round on the unbelieving multitude 'with anger; being grieved with the hardness of their hearts.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. In the plagues on Egypt we see so many standing memorials of the greatness of God; the security and happiness of the church; the awful consequences of sin; and the peculiar guilt which attaches to those who 'provoke the Lord to jealousy.' 2. God has a supreme right to demand that the mightiest of the sons of men shall 'humble themselves' before him. This is one great design of his providential dealings with them; and it is at their peril if they obstinately and perseveringly refuse to do so. Of Belshazzar it is specifically recorded, that 'he humbled not his heart before God;' of Nebuchadnezzar, that he prided himself in the survey of his magnificent capital; of Herod, that he 'gave not God the glory;' and Pharaoh, though he seemed to abase himself, was punished for his insincerity. 'God resisteth the proud.' 3. The fact, as here recorded, that Moses, after delivering his solemn message to Pharaoh, 'turned himself and went out' from his presence, telling him also, a short time afterwards, that he would 'see his face no more,' reminds us that there is a period fixed in God's sovereign arrangements, when the time allotted for repentance shall be over; when God shall give up sinners to their own lusts, when conscience shall cease to strive, when 'our day,' shall be past, and 'the things which belong to our peace be for ever hid from our eyes.' What a solemn call to listen to the warning voice, and to improve 'the accepted time, the day of salvation.' 4. Pharaoh was willing that the people should go a certain way into the wilderness, that they might fear God; but he did not wish that they should go forth in a body, with all their children, and without any intention to return. But the absolute folly of such a partial surrender was shown to him; and we are thus taught that God's people may, like Caleb, 'follow him fully,' and that we must not 'halt betwixt two opinions.' 5. God may arm the elements against us, and it is of his mercy that we are preserved from their fury: yea, the smallest and most contemptible of his creatures, may be made instruments of his sore judgments upon us. 'We dwell in houses of clay, which are crushed before the moth.' The ravages of locusts should lead us to cease from man; to set our affections on the green pastures of the Zion above, which no locust shall ever invade; and to 'labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that which endureth to everlasting life.' 6. The judgment of the darkness, deep, long-continued, and attended with circumstances of peculiar horror, (Psalm lxxviii. 49.) while it was a severe infliction of God's justice on account of sin, presents to us a most just and solemnly instructive representation of our state by nature, as immured in the prison of spiritual blindness, reminds us of the signal mercy of God in causing 'the day-spring from on high to visit us;' and illustrates by contrast the mighty power of God, in 'calling his people out of darkness into his marvellous light.' In the dwellings of Israel 'there was light;' and the voice of melody and rejoicing is heard in the habitations of the righteous. Believers 'walk in the light,' while others stumble on in darkness. 'Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.' If we have this light in us we will show it by a holy conversation; and our great desire will be, to 'let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father who is in heaven.'

PRAYER.

Father of lights, with whom is no variableness or the least shadow of turning! from thee cometh down every good and every perfect gift: We bless thee that thou hast not left us to sleep the sleep of death; that the darkness of Egypt has not fallen around our dwelling, that we are again permitted to see the light of a new day; and that our habitation has not been swept away by the hail and the tempest of thy wrath. Thou art the great guardian of our sleeping hours, and thou makest the outgoings of the morning and of the evening to rejoice over us. Gracious Father! grant us in thy great mercy the tokens of thy favour. Speak not to us in thy wrath; visit us not in thy sore displeasure. May our sins be washed away in the blood of atonement. May we have a personal interest in the great salvation; and may the peace of God, which passeth understanding, keep our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Give us not over to the hardness of our own hearts. May we not stifle the voice of conscience, nor disregard the warnings of thy Spirit. May we guard against the deadening and destructive influence of evil passions, and of a worldly spirit. May we give more earnest heed to the sure word of prophecy, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in our hearts. May our habitation be the dwelling of peace, and may the light of heaven ever shine upon it. May he who commanded the light to shine out of darkness shine into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Jesus Christ. And may our family be blest of the Lord, as one of the families of Israel; and may our friends ever enjoy thy protection and favour. Keep us this day from all evil, and fit us for every duty. May we be in thy fear at all times, and may it be our firm determination to serve thee with our whole hearts. May we never attempt to obey two masters, whose interests are at utter variance with each other. May we have a single eye to thy glory. May we go through the wilderness of this world, leaning on Jesus as the beloved of our souls; and when flesh and heart faint and fail, be thou the strength of our heart and our portion for ever. Our Father which art in heaven; hallowed be thy name, &c. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLI. 1—5.

SCRIPTURE—MARK V. 25—43.

REMARKS.

Many are the distresses of the poor; and the poor of Christ's flock are not exempted from the ordinary trials of life. Let us seek to do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith; and while we seek by the use of means for the cure of bodily diseases, let us not forget that the wasting plague of sin is destroying the vitals of our spiritual frame, and that by an application to Christ, the only physician, we may find a cure. What awful infatuation to neglect the balm of Gilead; to reject the physician there! Many are the devices of men to secure their salvation; but alas, they are utterly worthless; and blessed are they who, by practical conviction of the uselessness of human resources, have been led by a living faith to Christ, who is the way, and the truth, and the life! This poor victim of disease was strong in faith. She desired but to touch the hem of his garment, convinced that if she did so, a cure would follow. Humble faith dwells unseen in the heart of a contrite follower of the Redeemer; but it hath power with God; it aims at and it expects great things; and though neglected or contemned by man, it is honoured by him who looks to the heart. 'Only believe!' Yes, Jairus: with thee, and with the dear object of thy affectionate care, all will be well if thou shalt 'only believe!' In all trials a simple reliance on God's promises, and on the merits of the Redeemer, will be found to be a sure and stable security; and it is the afflicted believer only, who, in the midst of severest sufferings, can say from the heart, 'It is well!' Christ by an astonishing miracle of power and of mercy, raised the young woman to life. He gave the command; and the soul, which had taken its departure, instantly returned to the lifeless clay. The evidence of divinity is complete. The witnesses are sufficient in number, and they are above all suspicion. Infidelity is put to the blush, while the prayer of faith is heard. May the Lord Jesus raise my soul from the death of sin, to the life of righteousness!

PRAYER.

O Lord! we bless thee for health of body and for soundness of mind. While many of our brethren around us are stretched on beds of pain, or have been long confined to the chamber of sickness, thou hast removed disease far from our dwelling-place, and hast graciously supplied our every want. Give us grace to be thankful, and may we diligently improve all the mercies which mingle in our lot. And O! put us not off with temporal comforts. Feed our souls with the bread of life. Heal our spiritual maladies. We recognise in Christ, thy well-beloved Son, a physician of infinite value; and, labouring under the disease of sin, we would appeal to him in faith for the balm of Gilead which faileth not. May we by a living faith draw near to him, and obtain health to our souls. And may we consecrate all our powers, and all our opportunities, to his service and glory. We rejoice in Christ Jesus as the living one, and as the author of life to the dead. We bless thee that he gave his life a ransom for many, and that he rose again triumphant from the grave. As he lives, may we live also. May the quickening energy of his Holy Spirit awaken us from spiritual death, and may we walk with him in newness of life. May each day, as it passes along, witness our progressive advancement in the way to heaven. May we grow in humility, in self-denial, in heavenliness of mind, in love to one another, and to the whole household of faith. Establish thy covenant with each one of us. Guide us by thy counsel, and afterwards receive us to glory. We thank thee for thy preserving care of us this day; and we would rear our memorial of gratitude before thee, and say, 'thus far the Lord hath helped us.' Blot out the sins of this day, and of all our days, in the blood of atonement; and graciously remove every ground of controversy betwixt ourselves and thee. We would lie down in peace and take quiet rest; knowing that thou, O Lord, makest us to dwell in safety. Hear our prayers, and give us an answer in peace, for our great Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXVI.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XII.

REMARKS.

1. The hurry and bustle attendant on the departure of Israel from Egypt, formed no excuse for the neglect of religious duty, and we must ever guard against the temptation to forget God amid the cares and anxieties of secular life. The more we are engaged in the business of this world, the greater care should we take to cherish a sense of God, and to be very pointed and serious in our religious duties. 2. Each family was required to provide a lamb as an offering to the Lord, and poor families might unite in this. Domestic piety is essential to the continued existence of religion in the world; and the altar of the family must be crowned with the hallowed incense of the morning and the evening sacrifice. 3. The blood of Christ, sprinkled on the heart and on the conscience, is the divinely constituted means of safety from the terrors of God's wrath. It gives boldness of access to the throne of grace. It becomes a wall of protection round about believers, while it marks them out as separated from a world lying in wickedness. 4. The paschal lamb is a remarkably striking typical representation of Christ, who, as our passover, has been sacrificed for us. He is the Lamb of God, without blemish, offered in the prime of his days, enduring the fire of his heavenly Father's wrath, while not a bone was broken. Do we receive him in his whole character, and for all the purposes of salvation? Do we rely on him with constant and habitual confidence? Do we feed on him in our hearts, by faith, with thanksgiving? In the daily exercise of godly sorrow for sin, and in habitual readiness for every duty, we shall find the life of faith and grace a feast indeed; a source of joy such as the world can neither give nor take away.

PRAYER.

Wherewithal shall we come before thee, O Lord, and bow ourselves before the most high God! We bless thee that thou hast left us in no fearful uncertainty regarding the ground of our acceptance, or the way of access to thy heavenly throne. Thou hast revealed thyself as the God of all mercy; and thou hast assured us that the blood of Jesus Christ, thine own Son, cleanseth from all sin. We would come before thee, in the name of him whom thou hast set forth to be a propitiation for our sins, and who ever lives to make intercession. May his peace-speaking blood be sprinkled on our guilty consciences; and being justified by faith, may we have peace with thee, and rejoice in hope of thy glory. May we mourn with genuine contrition on account of sin; and habitually cherish the godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of. Give us those supplies of grace and of spiritual strength that are suited to our necessities, and which thou hast promised to bestow. Quicken us for duty and for trial. May we have our loins girt and our lamps burning; and may we be as men that wait for the coming of their Lord. Almighty Father, may a sense of thy great goodness to us, to our family, to our friends, to our land, to our church, ever remain with us; and may those seasons of great deliverance and of great mercy, which 'are much to be remembered' by us, make on our hearts, in the review of them, a deep, and salutary, and lasting impression. We bless thee for thy wonders to Israel, and for thy gracious interpositions in behalf of the church in later times. May thy hand and thy power appear unto us as to thy people of old. Build up Zion, even in troublous times; and may thy name be great, from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same. We cast our cares upon thee; thou carest for us. Family sins do thou, our Father, forgive; and accept of our fervent thanks for family mercies. Keep us, this day, in thy fear and favour. Fit us for all that is before us; and when the days of the years of our pilgrimage are ended, may an abundant entrance be administered to us into thy kingdom and glory, for the great Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 109—113.

SCRIPTURE—MARK VI. 1—29.

REMARKS.

1. Christ 'came to his own, and his own received him not.' O the fatal power of prejudice in turning men away from God. The men 'of his own country' upbraided Jesus with the poverty of his relations, and his consequent want of the means of education; and by so doing they succeeded too fatally in their malignant designs. May God, by his grace, deliver us from those awful prejudices of unbelief, which stand in the way even of the mighty power of Christ, and which render the gospel of peace a savour of death rather than of life to the soul. 2. It was a gracious commission which Christ gave to his apostles, to go forth as the heralds of light and life to a world blinded by sin, and lying in all the impotence of spiritual death. He gave them the most ample credentials, while he taught them the duty of a simple and entire dependence on himself. The ministers of the gospel do not now receive their commission in exactly the same way, nor have they the same miracles to show. But the message is one and the same; and 'how shall we escape, if we neglect the great salvation?' Clear and full is the revelation of truth and of grace that is made to us; and ample is its evidence. A fearful responsibility attaches to ministers, if they allow the trumpet to give an uncertain sound, and an awful doom awaits those of their hearers who turn away from him that 'speaketh from heaven.' 3. In the case of Herod, we mark the terrors of a guilty conscience. He had heard John with pleasure; he had been pleased with his preaching, and he respected his manner of life. But the faithfulness of the Baptist in reproving him, gave him offence; and no marvel if the world hate those who testify that its works are evil. Men may admire general descriptions of truth and virtue, but when conscience is probed, and when particular sins are pointedly exposed, then does the rooted enmity of the carnal mind to God clearly appear. How mysterious that the holy man of God should die by such means! And yet edifying are the issues of it. He dies a martyr to ministerial fidelity; and 'the memory of the just is blessed.' 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.'

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God almighty! how shall we, guilty and polluted creatures, venture into thy presence, and take thy name into our polluted lips. Behold us, not as we are in ourselves, but in Christ Jesus, thy well-beloved Son, who died for us, and who rose again. We mourn over that unbelief and hardness of heart which keep us at a distance from the Saviour, and prevent us from realizing his glorious grace. O may the prejudices of the carnal mind be removed, and may we enjoy the blessedness of those who are not offended in Christ. May we live by faith in and on him. May the mighty work of grace be begun, and carried on, and completed in us by the gracious working of his power; and may we abound in all those fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ, to the praise and glory of thy great name. We thank thee that the message of salvation was sent to our world and to our land; and we pray that the light which now shines around us may shine also into our hearts. May the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, give unto us the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, that the eyes of our understanding being enlightened, we may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to them who believe. May Satan be seen falling as lightning from heaven, and may Christ Jesus be magnified in us, whether it be by life or by death. May the gospel of thy grace have free course and run and be glorified. Send the knowledge of salvation to the heathen; to the victims of Mahometan and antichristian delusion; and to our own countrymen in other lands, who are destitute of the means of grace. Revive thy work in the midst of the years. Give testimony to the word of thy grace, at home and abroad; and grant that the time may soon come when Messiah, the prince, shall take to him his great power and reign over every land. Heavenly Father, we commend us to thee during the silent watches of the night. May our sleep be refreshing. May our dreams be devout, and may our waking thoughts be of thee. Go with us on the journey of life. May our path be as the morning light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. May we press on to higher and higher attainments, and gain daily victories over the world and our own hearts. May our last days be our best days. May our closing hours be our brightest hours. At evening-tide may there be light. Keep us as the apple of thine eye; and bring us to thy heavenly kingdom, for the Lord the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 38.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In memory of the event which proved the immediate cause of their liberation from the house of bondage, viz. the destruction of all the first-born of the Egyptians, the Israelites are required from this time forward to sanctify to the Lord, that is, to set apart, or consecrate, all their first-born males, both of man, and of beast; the former to serve, the latter to be slain at the altar. The design of this significant ordinance, they are enjoined, when brought into the land of promise, carefully to explain to their children, that so being observed through successive generations, it might serve as a token on the hand, or as frontlets between the eyes, to perpetuate the grateful remembrance of the marvellous preservation and deliverance which they had just experienced. For the same purpose, they are commanded to eat unleavened bread—unfermented cakes, seven days every year. Unleavened bread was an appropriate memorial of the suddenness of their release, and also, like the bitter herbs eaten with the paschal lamb, of the grievous thralldom which they had long endured. Leaven, moreover, being an expressive emblem of corruption, bread unleavened aptly shadowed forth that 'spirit in which there is no guile,' that genuine self-mortifying obedience which in every age has characterized those who are 'Israelites indeed.' From Succoth, the Israelites, instead of marching right forward to their destination, through the country of the Philistines, which they could not have attempted without provoking a very unequal contest with that warlike people, are directed to proceed eastward to Etham, on the borders of the desert of Shur. Thither they are guided, by a remarkable symbol of Jehovah's special presence, which, alternately in the form of a pillar, of cloud and of fire, seems to have constantly accompanied them till their arrival in Canaan. The reason assigned for carrying with them the bones of Joseph, is as worthy of notice as the fact.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The consecration of the first-born of Israel, and the periodical use of unleavened bread, for a long series of ages, afford demonstrative evidence of the authenticity of the Mosaic records, and consequently of the whole sacred volume; since it is utterly impossible to account for the existence of such monuments of fact, on any supposition but one, viz. the previous undoubted existence of the facts themselves. But the grand design of these, and similar ordinances, was, that one generation of his chosen might praise the works of Jehovah to another, and 'declare his mighty acts.' In meditating on them, besides being stirred up to reflect on the daily and hourly miracles of his providence, and especially on the more visible interpositions of his preserving and directing hand, in the critical emergencies and determinations of our lot, shall we forget, that we have all shared the offers at least of a redemption, compared with which deliverance from the iron yoke of Pharaoh was less in importance than a moment to eternity. Forgotten indeed the redemption of the soul cannot be, so long as baptism and the eucharist hold their place among the rites of the church. But let us take heed that the observance of these solemnities do not degenerate into a mere bodily service, a heartless and pernicious 'form of godliness.' Ever let them be revered as memorials and seals of all that is precious in the new and better covenant; and embraced as occasions—the one of dedicating our children, the other of consecrating ourselves and all that we have, to his service and glory, who redeemed us by his own blood from the grasp of Satan, and 'the wrath to come.' And at once, to secure and evince our unreserved devotion to the Lamb of God, evermore let us pray that the Holy Spirit, thoroughly purging out the old leaven of malice and wickedness, may write the law of love upon our hearts, thereby constraining and enabling us steadfastly to follow him whithersoever he goes: thus also, in a nobler way than by lavishing idle homage on their unconscious dust, inciting us to honour the memory of our illustrious ancestors of the faith, by emulating their virtues, and pressing eagerly and hopefully after them, to the full inheritance of the promises.

PRAYER.

Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth, and sea, and all things therein, we would humbly approach thee with the sacrifice of thanksgiving and praise for the mercies of the past night, and the manifold comforts of this morning. Shepherd of Israel, thou watchest over us and ours, with an eye that never slumbers and never sleeps. Thou art our sun by day and our shield by night. Thou leadest us in green pastures, and beside the still waters. We feel that thou art drawing us to thyself by the cords of love; thou hast not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. May thine ineffable goodness prevail with us to forsake every idol, and to present unto thee our souls and our bodies a living sacrifice. God of our fathers, and our God, we thank thee for all the manifestations of thy paternal kindness and regard to this revolted world. Especially we bless thee for the revelation of thy glorious grace and righteousness in the face of Jesus Christ. We rejoice that Messiah hath come, and put away sin by the once offering up of himself; and that there is now no condemnation to them who being united to him, walk no longer after the flesh, but after the Spirit. May he be made unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption. And enable us to give ourselves to him in an everlasting covenant: through his grace may we be crucified unto the world, and the world unto us: and setting him always before us as our Redeemer, pattern and guide, may we be transformed into his image, and so made meet for the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. God of peace, blot out the multitude of our iniquities; accept of us and our imperfect services in the Beloved; and grant for his sake, that goodness and mercy may follow us all the days of our lives, and that we, and all who are dear to us, may dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVII. 25.

SCRIPTURE—MARK VI. 30—56.

REMARKS.

How justly may his name be called 'Wonderful,' in whom we here behold so marvellously blended the dependence and submission of man, with the power and the majesty of the most high God. The same adorable person heals multitudes afflicted with divers maladies, by simply permitting them to touch his body as he passes by—walks on the tempestuous sea—enlarges, by his creative benediction, a portion of bread which had scarcely sufficed for twenty men, into a superabundant supply for five thousand—departs into a mountain to pray. The miracles of the loaves is distinguished by the peculiar publicity of the circumstances in which it was performed; a threefold demonstration of its reality having been afforded to every individual of that numerous assemblage: it shows that the Saviour, while he is chiefly concerned in the spiritual and eternal happiness of his people, sympathizes also in all their temporal wants and privations; and incontestably proves that he wields at his will the energy by which all things were created, and by which all things consist. The contemplation of its several particulars is admirably fitted to impress on our hearts the much needed exhortation, 'be careful for nothing,' &c.; to make manifest the sin of allowing the smallest portion of his unmerited bounty to be lost or misused; and the duty of carefully considering the necessities of our poorer brethren. This wondrous work of beneficence ended, Jesus withdraws from the society of men to hold undisturbed communion with his Father in heaven; an argument which might well be supposed omnipotent to convince his followers, whatever be the amount of their present attainments in faith and holiness, or the multiplicity or urgency of their secular affairs, of the indispensable necessity of finding time for secret prayer. The disciples embark with reluctance, for their blessed Master remains behind, and a terrible night they encounter on the deep. How often have we, in consequence of lightly or wilfully parting from him, plunged ourselves into fearful danger and distress. Henceforth whatever we essay to do, wherever to go, let us make conscience of ascertaining that his sanction, and consequently his blessing, is with us; that in the darkest hours of peril or sorrow, we may have for an anchor of the soul the word long tried, and never by one real believer found wanting: 'weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' And devoutly exercising ourselves, to remember and turn to grateful account the peculiar pledges of his favour to our souls in time past, and the wonders of his loving-kindness and tender mercy to the church in every age, let us endeavour continually to 'abide in him;' that when at length we descend into the swellings of Jordan, deserted by every earthly friend, we may be sustained by assured tokens of his gracious presence, and hear his voice above the noise of those dread waves, saying, 'Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid.' Beautiful are the pictures of nature's sympathy exhibited in the concluding verses of this chapter: Christianity views them with interest, but meanwhile she sadly ruminates how few there be that discover even an equal concern in the health of the soul, which involves the question of its eternal death or life; as in that of the bodies of their friends, which by an inexorable decree must, when a few days are past, lie down in darkness and corruption, 'till the heavens be no more.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth, who hast set thy glory above the heavens. What is man that thou art mindful of him? Give us at all times to feel how weak, how dependent, how sinful we are; and let a double portion of the spirit of humility be poured out upon our hearts when we thus come before thee with the voice of supplication and prayer. Holy Father, thou hast mercifully preserved and guided us to the close of another day, and permitted us again, gathered round the family altar, to confess our sins, to adore thy majesty, and show forth thy praise in a song of Zion. Help us, we entreat thee, to trace all our comforts, temporal and spiritual, to the inexhaustible and eternal fountain of thy grace in Christ Jesus. Forbid that the very multitude and abundance of thy gifts should ever lead any of us to forget thyself, the author and dispenser of all good; or our own utter unworthiness of the least of thy mercies. Grant rather that the thought may be constantly and affectingly present to our minds, that it is in thee we live, and move, and have our being: and that thou hast therefore an infinite right, not merely to the humble acknowledgments of our lips, but to the cordial and devoted obedience of our lives. And amidst all the manifestations of thy unmerited favour, help us ever duly to distinguish thine unspeakable gift. God of mercy thou hast not spared thine own Son, but delivered him up for us all. Glory be to thy name for all that he did, and suffered, and procured for sinners. We bless thee for the heavenly truths he revealed, for the holy precepts he enjoined and exemplified, and for the stupendous works of compassion and benevolence by which he was invincibly declared to be the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. We pray that his name may be adored, and his saving health proclaimed, from the rising to the setting sun. And O may it be given unto each of us to eat of his flesh, and drink of his blood, that we may have eternal life. May the chastisement of our peace come upon him, and by his stripes may we be healed. May the law of the spirit of life which is in him, make us free from the law of sin and death. Out of his fulness may we continually receive grace according to our varying necessities, and be all conducted by his power to the everlasting rest that remaineth for his people. Holy Father, through the intercession of our great high priest we desire to look for a gracious answer to our evening prayer; and entreat thee to protect us from all evil during the watches of the night, and to raise us up in health and comfort on the morning of a new day, for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVI. 7.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XIV.

REMARKS.

There is before us one of the most illustrious demonstrations of the all-controlling power and retributive justice of Jehovah, recorded in the bible. Ver. 1—5. The position of the Israelites is now perilous in the extreme. Without discipline, without arms, pent up in a deep and narrow valley, in front the trackless sea, and though as yet this circumstance was unknown to them, a powerful and exasperated enemy about to pour upon their rear, well might their destruction appear inevitable. But never will the counsel of the Lord lead his people into straits, from which his hand is not able to bring them safely and triumphantly out. The supreme end of all that he does or permits us to do, is the manifestation of his own glorious perfections, and to this he makes subservient, no less the ruin of incorrigible transgressors, than the salvation of the humble and contrite ones. Yet, while the perfections of his nature and the honour of his name imperatively demand, either the repentance or the destruction of all presumptuous sinners, far from us be the thought that, in suffering any to persist till they perish in their rebellion, he becomes partaker of their guilt. The hearts of Pharaoh and his people are hardened by the permission, indeed, of Jehovah, but not through his co-operation. If he withhold subduing and converting grace, he only withholds what he is under no obligation to bestow. He wrongs not the fruitless desert by restraining from it the rain and the dew, which diffuse fertility and flowers over the face of happier climes; nor the mass of ordinary men, by the matchless gifts bestowed on Newton or Milton; nor the dark islands far off upon the sea, by the privileges of civilized and Christian Britain. Ver. 5—10. Strange, we are ready to say, that the 'great cry' of anguish and despair should be so soon borne down by the din of preparation to renew the desperate contest with Israel's God. Yet so it ever is. Affliction may grieve, appal, confound, but in itself has no power to renovate the heart. The bursting of the thunder cloud drives the fiercest denizens of the forest to their caves, but no sooner has the last peal of terror died away, than they sally forth, fiercer than before, to pursue their prey. Who has not been virtuous in purpose, when there seemed but a step between his soul and the world unseen and everlasting; and who has not wept over the issue of the resolves to which such hours gave birth? Ver. 10—13. The sight of Pharaoh's chariots and horsemen fills the camp of Israel with consternation; a few betake themselves to prayer, the multitude to harsh ungrateful murmurs. Meanwhile Moses, with the eye of faith, looks calmly on, and sees that mighty host rushing to one untimely and inglorious grave. Ver. 13—15. Happy they to whom the arm of the Lord is so revealed, in preparatory trials and deliverances, as to enable them, when called to encounter the last enemy, meekly and confidently to say, 'my soul, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord.' Ver. 15—19. Prayer, the great cherisher of faith though it be, must not interfere with the claims of active duty. In the Christian's ear this word must ever be sounding 'go forward,' whether the path be smooth or rugged, the sky cloudy or light; let him therefore constantly endeavour to realize the full persuasion that nothing is too hard for the Lord, and that it is always better to depart and be with him. Ver. 19—21. In prospect of the most formidable temptations and conflicts, let the good soldiers of Christ farther reflect, that no adversary can approach them one hair's-breadth nearer, nor annoy them one instant longer, than their Master sees proper to permit, and that he can make those very things, which are comfort and protection to them, work dismay and death to their foes. Ver. 21—23. By bringing his people into deep waters, the Saviour effects two great purposes; he convinces them, by experience, of the utter vanity of all creature reliances, and that simple dependence on him is in itself a resource equal to every possible emergency. Ver. 23—26. An hour will come when the most daring persecutors of the followers of Christ shall wish to retreat, for sooner or later they shall find, that in fighting against them, they fight against him. And if his angry looks be so terrible here, what must his frown be in the place where his mercy is clean gone for ever? Ver. 26—31. The grand catastrophe is now complete; Jehovah has triumphed gloriously, his chosen are free, and all the pride of the tyrant is buried in the avenging wave. These things were written for our learning, that we, habitually cultivating the fear of the Lord, and reposing unlimited confidence in his power and grace, may cleave to the path of duty, whatever be its hardships, waiting for the hour of perfect freedom, when numbered with those who have gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, we sing, with the harps of God in our hands, 'the song of Moses and of the Lamb.'

PRAÏER.

Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? To whom can we go but unto thee; thou hast the words of eternal life. Speak peace unto us, the sheep of thy pasture, this morning, and let thy hand be upon us for good throughout the day. Bless to our souls, we pray thee, that portion of thy holy word which we have now read. Make it quick and powerful; a discernor of the thoughts and intents of our hearts. As thou knowest we severally require, render it profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness. O Lord, may we learn to tremble lest the latter end of the wicked should be ours. Try us, O God, and cause us to know ourselves. Keep back thy servants from all presumptuous sins. Inspire us, we earnestly beseech thee, with that godly fear which is the beginning of wisdom. Forbid that having so often made light of the terrors of thy justice, we should also be found guilty of rejecting the overtures of thy grace. Forbid that thy long suffering patience should only aggravate our final condemnation and ruin. O let none of us love the darkness rather than the light, because our deeds are evil. Enable us solemnly to bear in mind that the wages of sin is death, and that we know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh. Suffer us, therefore, no longer to despise the remonstrances of conscience or the warning voices of thy providence. Suffer us no longer to grieve and quench the Holy Spirit, no longer to neglect or to trifle with the great salvation. O Lord, without thee we can do nothing. Make us a willing people in the day of thy power. Give unto us, on the behalf of Christ, to believe on his name; and do thou, for his sake, sprinkle our hearts from an evil conscience; work in us both to will and to do of thy good pleasure, and enable us henceforth to walk in all the ordinances and commandments of thy law blameless. God of our righteousness, turn not away our prayers from thee, nor thy mercy from us. And hasten, we entreat thee, the time when all the ends of the earth and all the islands of the sea shall share with us the privileges and the blessings of the gospel of peace. And unto thee, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XV.

SCRIPTURE—MARK VII.

REMARKS.

The divine wisdom, dignity, and authority of Jesus are never more apparent than when we find him employed in confuting the cavils, and baffling the machinations of those remorseless persecutors, the scribes and Pharisees. His example, on this occasion, instructs us that we should study to be always prepared to justify any part of our conduct which may be called in question, by an appeal to the word of God, and to render a reason as well for the peculiarities of our belief as for the fundamental principles of the 'common faith' which it comprehends. From the part here acted by his adversaries, and the recompense which it met, let the ever seasonable injunction be impressed on our minds, 'first cast out the beam out of thine own eye,' &c.; let us learn to beware of putting the shadow of religion in place of the substance, and to reject with abhorrence every pretended supplement to the sacred canon, and every doctrine, by whomsoever propounded, which tends to weaken or nullify the obligations of the divine law. Many are offended at the declaration that our nature, in its fallen state, is totally corrupt and depraved. But what saith he 'whose Spirit searcheth all things?' 'Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts.' The due consideration of this awful truth has a powerful tendency to abase every proud thought, and to engender the salutary conviction, that the great scripture principle of the necessity that a clean heart be created, and a right spirit renewed within, is that alone on which it is possible to effect a thorough, universal, and permanent reformation of the life. Just and impressive views of the total corruption of our nature, are also fitted greatly to enhance the long-suffering mercy of Jehovah, and to render doubly precious the dispensation of sovereign grace, in which ample provision is made at once for the remission of guilt and the restoration of the soul to the beauty of holiness. Will not that be a blessed state in which all the imaginations of the thoughts of the heart shall be only good, and that continually? The compassionate Redeemer, who never can belie his own gracious promise, 'him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out,' would seem for a moment to reject and almost to disdain the suit of the Syrophenician woman, the more fully to exercise and manifest her faith, to confer additional value on the benign answer he is about to return to her prayer, and to teach us, that with sincerity we must unite importunity and perseverance, in seeking an interest in his atoning blood. In the cure of the deaf man, there are circumstances for which no very satisfactory reason has ever been assigned. Might they not be expressly intended to check the presumptuous desire of being wise 'above that which is written,' and to show us that, for the present, we must be content, in many instances, with simply knowing the Saviour has acted in such a manner, confidently expecting that, in the light of a higher sphere, we shall be able, with inexpressible fulness of intelligence and delight, to say, 'he hath done all things well.'

PRAYER.

Father of the spirits of all flesh, with the deepest reverence and self-abasement we desire again to prostrate our souls at the footstool of thy throne of grace. Thou art the high and the holy One, who inhabiteth eternity and the praises thereof. We are sinful dust and ashes. Our hearts are by nature deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, and we are chargeable in thy sight, who art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, with innumerable acts of delinquency and rebellion. If thou shouldst mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? But with thee there is mercy and plenteous redemption for the chief of sinners. Be merciful to us that we perish not. Enable us to repent, and embrace with the whole heart the gospel message of reconciliation. Give us right perceptions of the extent, the spirituality, and immutable obligations of thy holy law; and pour upon our hearts the spirit of conviction and contrition, that we may look upon him whom our sins have pierced, and mourn as one mourneth for an only son. But while we lament the guilty cause, let us be filled with exceeding joy, through the blessed effects of his humiliation and obedience unto death, even the death of the cross. Precious to our weary heavy laden souls is the assurance that the blood of thy Son cleanseth us from all sin. For his sake hide thy face from our transgressions, and remember them no more for ever. And vouchsafe to us also, we do earnestly pray, deliverance from the bondage of corruption. Baptize us with the Holy Ghost as with fire. Sanctify us wholly in soul, and body, and spirit. Enable us to delight in thy law after the inner man, and make us altogether such as thou wouldst have us to be. Holy Father, we desire to intercede with thee on behalf of our beloved relatives and friends. With us may they be washed in the fountain opened in the house of Israel, and created again in Christ Jesus unto good works; and when all our wanderings and trials in this land of strangers and pilgrims are ended, may we have a joyful meeting in the light and purity of his heavenly kingdom. Gracious God, forgive, we entreat thee, the sins of the day and the week now past, and surround us by thy favour during the hours of repose. Grant also that we may be duly prepared for the solemn and delightful services of the approaching sabbath. And do thou strengthen the hands of every faithful minister, and bless all the assemblies of thy saints, and let thy word have free course and be glorified in all the regions of the earth. And unto thee, with the Son and the blessed Spirit, shall be ascribed the glory, as it was in the beginning, now is, and ever shall be. Amen.

NINTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XVI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXX.

REMARKS.

This psalm is entitled a song at the dedication of the house of David, and is generally supposed to have been written after the dwelling of this prince had been polluted with the vile conduct of his son Absalom. There are contained in it several highly interesting topics of reflection. The sacred writer commences by an ascription of praise to God, for various mercies manifested towards him. These seem to have consisted in deliverance from the hand of his enemies, when he was nigh to losing both his life and kingdom. Accordingly he humbles himself before God, acknowledges the relief which he had experienced, and declares his total dependence to be upon him who was the author of his life, and the fountain of his salvation. We have here an excellent pattern of conduct, when placed in similar circumstances. The more God raises us, it becomes us to be more lowly in the hour of trouble, to have recourse by prayer to a throne of mercy, and when the blessing is received thankfully to acknowledge the same. Having expressed his own sentiments of gratitude to his Maker and Redeemer, he proceeds to animate others to the performance of the same duty. And he had ample reason for doing so. For though the people of God may have no present sense of any remarkable mercy lately received; nevertheless, past experience of the divine faithfulness should, upon all occasions, constitute matter of gratitude and praise to God. It is admitted that believers may experience, for good reason, the displeasure of their heavenly Father. In these cases however, he is not only slow to anger, but is soon pacified; while, as it were to counterbalance any effect of his wrath, his favour is productive of the sweetest joy, and what is best of all, when once secured, however interrupted for a time, is of an imperishable and enduring nature. The sacred writer, advertng to the occasion of this psalm, next goes on to speak of his late experience. Here he frankly acknowledges that he had abused his prosperity. Instead of remembering that he stood wholly by grace, he had forgotten to keep himself in awe, and therefore trusting to his own resources, he had felt the bitter consequences of doing so. The people of God, though often in trouble, have their times of prosperity. In such a condition they are very liable to fall into carnal security. It becomes all such, therefore, in these circumstances ever to remember, that whatever they have depends wholly upon unmerited grace. Consequently lest God may see it necessary, not only to withdraw from under their heads the smooth pillow of those benefits upon which they are ready to slumber, but also their sense of reconciliation to him, it becomes them to stand constantly in awe, and join trembling with their mirth. In the time of outward ease, men understand not the folly of their way. But when they have smarted for their conduct, and tasted the fruit of their spiritual forgetfulness, they come to perceive these, and to wonder at their past blindness. The conclusion of this sacred song exhibits the psalmist declaring his recovery from trouble, as well as from sinful security, praising God for his kindness, and binding himself for the future to have a view at all times to the glory of his Saviour and God. Correction therefore, it would appear, raises a believer out of spiritual sloth, and ever constrains him to active exertion. For though a man may have erred from the path of duty, and that he may see the evil of doing so, may have felt the rod, he is not on that account to sit down in listless despondency; but on the contrary, without any delay, to make supplication for mercy to pardon, and grace to help. And if he do so, he will not be disappointed. God has no delight in the death of any sinner; and no pleasure in the destruction of a transgressor. He would rather that such a one, instead of going down to the pit, would glorify his name. The prayer of penitence, when grounded upon the covenant of peace, in the all-prevailing Mediator, may expect an answer. And when this has been experienced, he will not only glorify his Maker, but rejoice in him as all his salvation and all his desire; will not only serve him in prosperity, but have recourse to him in trouble. This may well be the case. God was angry with him, but his anger is turned away: Grief has given way to gladness, and sorrow to songs of salvation.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, who art over all, God blessed for evermore, unto whom shall we go but unto thee, for thou alone art worthy to receive all homage, and thou hast in thyself the words of eternal life. Thou art the everlasting God, the creator of the ends of the earth. Thou art the supreme governor among all the nations of men. Thou art the unfailing refuge of all them who place their trust in thy ever holy and all-excellent name. On this, the morning of thy hallowed day, we will then praise thee for the glory of thy majesty, and we will join together in acknowledging the greatness of thy mercy. For verily thou art a great God, and a great King above all gods. Thou hast in thy hands the depths of the earth, and also the strength of the everlasting hills. Thou art also good and gracious. In thee all thy creatures live, and move, and have their being. Thou didst at first create us out of nothing, breathe into us the breath of life, and make us living, and rational, and immortal spirits. Thou still sustainest us upon the earth. Thy goodness is new to us every morning, and thy faithfulness every evening. How great is the loving-kindness of the Lord! And all this is highly enhanced, when we call to mind our own unworthiness. What is man that thou art mindful of him; or the son of man that thou deignest to visit him? Not only have we sinned against God, in times and ways unnumbered. Not only have we, by a thousand iniquities, deserved thy righteous displeasure; but, notwithstanding all the bounties enjoyed by, and all the privileges conferred upon us, we are ever, by reason of hearts naturally depraved, and by reason of unbelief, ready to depart from thy ways, and scorn the paths of thy commandments. It is our encouragement, however, to know that there is mercy with thee, that thou mayest be feared. O then, for the sake of thy Son who died for sinners, and who rose again, who is even at thy right hand, and whom thou hearest always, lift on us the light of thy countenance and love us freely. O do not remember our sins against us, but mercifully blot them all from the book of thy remembrance. Thou hast no pleasure in the death of the wicked, thou hast no delight in the punishment of the rebellious. Thou knowest that there is no profit in our blood, and no praise from us in the dust. We now therefore cry, and make supplication unto thee. And we trust that thou wilt hear and have mercy upon us. We stand in need of purifying grace, no less than pardon. Create in us clean hearts, renew within us right spirits. Conform us more and more to thy blessed image, and having a sense of thy forgiving love in Christ brought home to us by thy Spirit, let us run with enlargement of heart the way of thy commandments. Let thy grace strengthen us against inward weakness and outward temptations. If left to ourselves we become foolish and thoughtless; and are ever ready to fall down the prey of our spiritual enemy. Deliver us then by thy power, lest we expose ourselves to thy correcting hand. If however, we should come to meet with trials let us not despond, but rather, resigned to thy will, hope in thy returning mercy, and having our soul's desire to thee, and to the remembrance of thy name, comfort ourselves with the recollection, that though weeping may endure for a night, joy will come in the morning. For these purposes bless to us the means of grace, and bless the same to all who are privileged to enjoy them. Go forth on this thine own day, with a preached word everywhere. Let thy name be glorified in the conversion of sinners, and the edification of saints; wherever the name of the Saviour is declared in truth, may he be the power of God, and the wisdom of God unto salvation. Draw nigh to such as are in distress. Comfort the mourners, relieve the oppressed, speak peace to the dying. Hear this day the prayer of the aged man. Hear the prayer of the man engaged amid the cares of life. Hear the prayer of the inexperienced man. And may all these, with ours, ascending to heaven above, draw down a blessing, even the answer of peace, from thee the mighty God of Jacob. And to thee, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be all praise for ever and ever. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXI.

REMARKS.

This psalm seems to have been composed at a time when the writer was placed in circumstances of great and imminent peril. Accordingly he commences it by an earnest prayer for deliverance. God is frequently pleased to expose his people to a variety of trouble. But when he does so, he does not deprive them of the privilege of access to him; nay, if faith and hope in his promises be not altogether for the time extinguished, they will, at such seasons, be more constrained to draw nigh unto him, for mercy to pardon and grace to help in time of need. Nor will they be disappointed. In themselves they are weak, and frequently little able to escape the snares which their cunning enemies lay for them. But greater is he who is for them than all who can be against them. The word of God having given the believer an assurance of his everlasting redemption, may be to him a sufficient guarantee that his real interests can never be materially affected, and he may therefore well commit himself and all that concerns him into the hands of a covenant-keeping and faithful God. The writer of the psalm before us illustrates this farther by his experience of past mercy. And surely this ought to be a great ground of hope in the divine goodness. For, surely, if the Almighty have protected and preserved us in times past, has even considered our trouble, and known his people in their adversity, they may well be glad and rejoice in him, as David did, at all times and in all circumstances. The troubles of a righteous man may be very great. In the case of the divine Saviour, of whom, as in many other cases, the psalmist may be here considered as a type, trouble was peculiarly grievous. They are here recounted. He may have pain of body, weariness of soul, arising sometimes from one cause and sometimes from another; sometimes from within the man, sometimes from the world without. Nay, these troubles may rise to such a height as to bring the spirit into great and terrible temptation. In all these cases the refuge of the believing soul is just that which is pointed out in the psalm. And what is that? It is neither more nor less than trust in God. This we find the psalmist ground upon the providence of God, which protecteth all his creatures; upon the promise of God, which respecteth his own; upon the power of God, which can rise above all opposition; and upon the justice and holiness of God, which will eventually silence all lying lips, and destroy all those who speak grievous things, proudly and contemptuously, against the righteous. This sacred and consolatory song very properly concludes by describing the privileges of those who exercise this faith. Such are preserved from the enmity of man, and guarded against the malice of the world, and thus may have a peace and a comfort which no contingency can ever take away. Accordingly, he exhorts all to have confidence in God. They who cherish the same will have their hearts strengthened, and their souls kept by the power of God unto salvation.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most blessed God, who art the Father of lights and the fountain of all blessing, we would upon this, the evening of thy holy day, come into thy presence, and worship at the footstool of thy throne on high. Thou art our Creator. Thou didst at first form us out of nothing, breathe into us the breath of life, and make us rational, and living, and immortal souls. We depend upon thee for the continuance of life and all its enjoyments. Were thy hand withdrawn for one moment, our breath would depart, our countenance would change, we would decay and die. Let us then ever remember that we are not our own, but that we are thine, and that to thy unmerited kindness we owe every thing which we have, and every thing which we hope to possess. More especially, O our God, let us, in the day of trouble and grief, when these may come, put all our trust in thy mercy. The carnal spirit, we feel, is most ready at such seasons to look to the creature, and expect to find relief in the world. But alas, that is vain. Let us then be animated with the spirit of those who, being reconciled to, are in covenant with, thee through Christ, and thus knowing that their immortal interests are secure, have, in tribulation, not only peace, but even comfort and joy. And that this may be the case, may thy Holy Spirit open to us, out of thy word, our fallen condition as sinners, lead us to increasing faith in Christ the Saviour, and so fill our souls with all joy in believing. We know that without this there can be no true happiness here. We are every day exposed to temptation. But if we have an interest in thy word, and a share in the riches of thy grace, a triumph will be obtained by us over every enemy. We know that we are every day liable to suffering. But if we have an interest in thy word, and a share in the riches of thy grace, all things, whether prosperous or adverse, will work together for our good, as well as for thy glory. We know that we are every day subject to death. But if we have an interest in thy word, and a share in the riches of thy grace, we shall, at the last hour, be able to commend our spirits into thy hand, seeing thou hast redeemed us, Lord God of truth. Our souls then would wait for the Lord; yea, our souls would wait for the Lord more than they who watch for the morning light. Keep us ever in thy fear; guide us ever by thy counsel; leave us not to ourselves; give us not over to the world. Follow with a blessing all the religious exercises in which we or thy people any where may have been engaged in. Pardon the sins of our holy things. Forgive our formality, our insensibility, our indifference, which too frequently mingle with our religious services. Let thy knowledge be spread over all people. Comfort, this evening, the depressed, and be gracious to the dying. Let thy hand be about us and all our friends. If it be thy holy will that we should see the light and partake of the enjoyments, fit us for the duties of another day. The longer we live, let us live the more to thy praise, and be gradually fitted for spending an eternal sabbath in the land of rest. Mercifully forgive our unnumbered sins; and all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM xcvi. 1.

SCRIPTURE—Exodus xv.

REMARKS.

The sacred song before us was composed at a very remarkable period. Emancipated after a series of marvellous wonders from the bondage of Egypt, and directed to proceed towards the promised inheritance, the favoured people of God are brought to the shores of the Red sea. Here they find themselves placed in a most perilous condition. With the army of Pharaoh pressing hard behind, with impassable mountains on each side, and with the rolling waters of the sea in front, they feel themselves in a most perplexing strait. But deliverance, as ever was the case, is at hand. At the command of the Almighty, Moses the leader of Israel, stretches his hand over the billow: no sooner is this done, than the waters, dividing, form a passage, and the redeemed of the Lord, passing through the same, immediately stand secure on the opposite shore. God having thus saved Israel, Moses and the people join in this song of thanksgiving and praise. The matter of it is just what upon such an occasion might be expected. It commences with an ascription of praise to, and an expression of confidence in, God. He is the fountain of all blessing, no less than the object of universal and eternal homage. He is, more especially in the season of trouble, a very present help to them who are his own; and is on these grounds unceasingly worthy of regard and love, as well as abundantly fitted to call forth the graces of encouraging faith, and elevating hope. This sacred song next records the destruction of the Egyptian host, and attributes the triumph gained over them in this respect, not to any thing in Israel who had been saved, but to the might and the mercy of him who is in all his doings glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, ever doing wonders. Hence we may learn two useful and necessary lessons. 1. Experience of extraordinary mercy, requires expression of extraordinary gratitude. God indeed ever deserves the praise of all creatures. But more especially is this the case, when we have been visited with some peculiar manifestation of his kindness, and love. 2. All our blessings, and more especially those which consist in deliverance from evil, should ever be considered as coming not from the creature, but from the hand of him, who, as he is omnipotent in power, and unerring in wisdom, maketh all things work together for his own glory, and the good of his people.

The termination of the chapter presents us with a striking manifestation of human depravity. God had just delivered Israel from trouble and danger, and done so by a display of his most glorious perfections; nevertheless, at the first inconvenience they begin to murmur. As formerly, he removes the cause of complaint, and even renews his promise to them. But he here proved them. Does not this teach us to be at all times humble, and to search our own heart lest there be in them any root of bitterness? We are very apt to forget the past goodness of God, and when trouble again visits us to repine under his hand. This is great ingratitude. But it is ever our encouragement that our faith is then tried. If we then return unto God, he will heal us. If not, we can expect nothing else than the consequences of rebellion against him, and so feel the punishment of such as through unbelief were not permitted to enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

PRAYER.

O Lord, who art the only living and true God, praise waits for thee in Zion, and thou alone art the object of adoration and homage, obedience and love. Thou art great, and greatly to be had in reverence, being a great God, and a great King above all gods. This striking perfection of thy all-glorious nature, thou hast exhibited in all the works which thou hast done among the children of men. In the beginning thou didst make the heaven and the earth, and all that therein are. At thy command, for thou art omnipotent, the sun and all the host above shone in the fair firmament. At thy command, the earth, with its strength, and fertility, and beauty, stood upon her everlasting pillars. At thy command, man and beast, and every living thing, were seen to people the fair fabric. Surely there is no God like unto thee, and there is none among the sons of the mighty who can once be compared unto thee. Glorious art thou in holiness, fearful in praises, ever doing wonders. As in the omnipotence of thy power, thou hast created, so in the exercise of that attribute thou still superintendest the affairs of thy universe. All things are under thy command and guidance; all creatures, animate and inanimate, depend upon thy providence and care. Thy mercy is in the heavens; thou art the preserver of man and beast. Let us then extol thy name, let us tell thy excellence, let us show forth the wonders of thy power. We would ever adore thee, especially as the Redeemer of the guilty, through thy Son, our Saviour. Blessed be thy name, that thou didst think of us in our low and in our lost estate. Blessed be thy name, that thou didst send the Son of thy love to die for us. Blessed be thy name, that our redemption has been accomplished, and that he is now a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance unto Israel, and the remission of all their sins. O Lord our God, as our bodies are constantly sustained by thy power in life, and breath, and all things, may our souls be redeemed from sin, through the might of thy grace. Deliver us then, we beseech thee, from the punishment of guilt; emancipate us, we beseech thee, from the dominion of sin; raise us, we beseech thee, above the power of temptation, so that we may experience upon our souls the influences of that Almighty Spirit which quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things that be not, as though they were. We are very ready, we acknowledge, to forget our dependence upon thee, and to ascribe our mercies to our own merits. O deliver us even from such a delusion; may we ever remember, that as thou art the God of our life, and the fountain of our salvation, so every blessing, whether it be the attainment of good, or whether it be deliverance from evil, is owing solely to him in whom we live, and move, and have our being. Let us therefore often meditate on the riches of thy love. For thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people whom thou hast redeemed, thou hast guided them by thy strength to a holy habitation. We commend us unto thee at this time. As thou hast spared us through the night departed, and brought us to the light and enjoyments, fit us for all the duties, of another day. O Lord, save us from outward accident. O Lord, keep us from evil. O Lord, visit us with thy goodness. O Lord, comfort us with the hope of thy salvation. Guide us by thy counsel, prepare us for thy will, and finally receive us to thyself. And all we ask is only in the name, and for the sake, of Christ. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXVI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—MARK VIII.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains variety of interesting and instructive matter. At the commencement of it we are favoured with an account of a remarkable miracle, somewhat similar to one previously recorded, and in which four thousand individuals are fed with seven loaves and a few fishes. We are, in this instance, furnished with a striking testimony to the omnipotent power of the divine Saviour; and that, though man, he was indeed over all, God blessed for evermore. Moreover, we may perceive in this instance the truth of his doctrine; and that he was what he pretended to be, the Son and the sent of God. And still farther, we have in this instance a beautiful and attractive illustration of his benignant compassion. He had pity for the multitude. Accordingly, that they might not faint by the way, he performs a marvellous miracle in their behalf. How weak is man, how great his dependence upon God! In himself he has no resource, and thus, for every thing which he has, or may hope to enjoy, must be indebted to the kindness of that blessed one. How should we distrust ourselves and look only to God! We are ready to look to the creature, but we should, instead of being cumbered about many things, have recourse only to the Creator. After this, as he came to another district of the country, we are presented with a strange exhibition of unbelief. He had wrought, among those whom he addressed, many striking miracles, in manifestation of his divine power. Still however his enemies, the Pharisees, in a spirit of pertinacious obstinacy, ask a sign. As he wrought not miracles for satisfying vain curiosity, he refuses to gratify them, and accordingly, with an ominous admonition, he bids adieu to those who would not receive him. Farther on in the chapter, we find, in the case of his disciples, a very salutary lesson of human frailty, and of Christian duty. Having forgotten to take a supply of food with them, these individuals, from what passed among them, seem still to have distrusted his providential care over them, and might therefore be well said to have eyes but to see not, to have ears but to hear not. On coming to Bethsaida, we have an account of another miracle performed by the divine Saviour. And it is particularly mentioned, evidently for two reasons. 1. With reference to the signs employed. Sometimes our Lord employed outward signs in his miracles, and sometimes not. This he did to show that in these themselves there was nought, and that he could do without them. 2. With reference to the gradual nature of the cure. Upon some occasions he healed at once by a command. Upon others this was not the case, but the benefit was conferred by progressive acts. At the end of the chapter, our Lord, to prepare his disciples for what was at hand, announces to them some truths, which, though far from being welcome to them, were nevertheless of the most wholesome nature. These were the following. Having announced to them his approaching death, and most severely rebuked Peter for questioning his word upon this matter, he takes occasion, from this circumstance, to preach in most emphatic terms the duty of self-denial.

He was to suffer before he could enter into glory. They who believe upon him, as living in a world careless of God and lying in wickedness, must be prepared, in the exercise of their profession, to suffer also. But he withholds not due and ample encouragement. For by acting in a different manner, even with the attainment of a whole world, they forfeited eternal bliss, while attachment to his cause, and reception of his word, would insure to them, in the world to come, an eternity of peace and joy. Who would hesitate for a moment which of these alternatives he would choose? For surely is it not better far, infinitely better, to attain finally the everlasting joy of God's chosen; than with all which a world could give, to lie down at last in devouring flames and everlasting burnings? There can be no doubt upon this. Let us then take up our cross and follow Christ, and through bad and good report be faithful unto death, that we may obtain a crown of eternal life.

PRAYER.

Eternal God, who art every where present, the Father of lights, and from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift, we may well adore and bless thy name. O how many have been thy wonderful works, and thy compassionate thoughts to the fallen sons of men. But alas, we are most ready to forget the God who made us, and lightly esteem the rock of our salvation. Deliver us from this sin, and remember it not any more against us. We adore thy name for all the mercy shown to us throughout this day. And now we pray that we be enabled to glorify thy name, both by reason of thine own excellence, and by reason of thy kindness to us. May we rejoice in thee at all times, as our help and our hope, and instead of ever desponding in times of trial, may we take thy past, as a pledge of thy future love. Above all things, we pray for spiritual blessing; and while thou art feeding our bodies with the bread which perishes, feed our souls with the bread of life which cometh down from heaven, and of which, if a man eat, he shall never die. Lord, evermore give us this bread. May our souls then be enlightened with the knowledge of thy truth, fitted with heavenly grace, and inspired by the breathing of thine eternal Spirit. Then we shall live happily here, and be prepared for the exercises and enjoyments of hereafter. We lament before thee, the sad depravity of our hearts; we mourn over our readiness to depart from thy ways. O stablish us in the faith! O conform our souls to thy image! O strengthen our resolutions! In the day of duty may we be diligent, in the season of trial patient, in the hour of temptation faithful. Taking up our cross may we follow Christ, and whatever inconveniences may arise in this career, may we be strengthened to bear with them all, and be more than conquerors through him who loved us. Be with us, and with all connected to us, whether by the ties of nature, or friendship, or grace, this evening. Watch over us. Let no evil come nigh unto us. If thou art pleased to spare us until another day, when we awake may we behold thy face in righteousness, and be satisfied with thy likeness. Hear and accept for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXI.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XVI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—3. However prosperous men's circumstances may be for a time, privations and troubles, in various forms, may be expected by them sooner or later; and when they are actually subjected to them, instead of repining against God, they should bear them with resignation, piously acknowledging his hand, and look to him, in faith and prayer, for relief. Ver. 4—8. The Lord will not utterly desert his people, who look to him and cry to him in their straits, even though they may feel and express themselves more strongly than the circumstances of their case can justify; a truth, however, which they should be careful not to abuse: nay, he will surely provide what is necessary for their support. Ver. 9—15. The miracles here described demonstrate Jehovah's power and willingness to help his people. Ver. 16—31. The doctrine of the perpetual and universal obligation of the sabbath is here plainly taught and strikingly illustrated, in as much as it existed before the giving of the law of Moses, and the greatest care was taken to honour it, while, at the same time, diligence on the other days of the week, to procure what is necessary for the life that now is, is clearly enjoined. Ver. 32—36. And, finally, the laying up of a certain quantity of the manna, instructs us in the duty of keeping the Lord's past goodness in pious and grateful remembrance.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

We are all passing on, as it were, through the wilderness, in the journey of life; let us see to it that we have indeed left, in our hearts and in our habits, the worse than Egyptian bondage of sin, satan, and the world, and that we be on the way that leads to the heavenly Canaan. If it be happily so with us, let us not, on account of any difficulties which may arise, begin to hanker after the sins and follies which we have forsaken. Whatever straits may arise, we have no reason to fear that our God will abandon us to perish, or suffer us to faint unrelieved by the way. Let us beware of rashly and unthankfully imputing any want of kindness or of care to him who is more interested in us than we are in ourselves; let us beware of this, lest, when relief comes, it come less blessed than it would otherwise come, and come at least with a Father's frown; and lest, however valuable in itself, it furnish us with an occasion of stumbling. Though we are not now to expect food to be furnished to us miraculously, yet we are here encouraged to believe, that by his powerful and gracious providence, certainly neither less real nor less valuable, God will supply all our temporal wants. In John vi. the Lord Jesus Christ expressly teaches us to regard the provision of manna, made for the Israelites, as intended for our spiritual instruction, and typical of the provision made for our souls in the gospel. 'I am that bread of life,' said he, 'your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.' 'If any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I give is my flesh, which I give for the life of the world.' How thankful ought we to be for this spiritual food, which can nourish us up to eternal life! and how earnestly ought we to pray, 'Lord, evermore give us this bread!'

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever-blessed Lord God, look upon us in mercy, now that we approach thee in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Saviour, and in a dependence on the assistance of thy Holy Spirit. Thou art infinitely exalted, yet infinitely condescending. Though thou art altogether independent of us, and we have offended grievously against thee, thou takest a kind and fatherly interest in all our concerns, both temporal and spiritual. We thank thee for all those instances in which the dispensations of thy providence towards us have been directly and obviously favourable. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits. Give us grace to be thankful also for all the privations and troubles with which we have been visited, and to say, from the heart, Shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not receive evil also? Continue, we beseech thee, to furnish us with whatever is necessary for our bodily support, while we sojourn on earth. Give us day by day our daily bread; and having food and raiment, may we be therewith content. But O let us not be so concerned and busied about the meat that perisheth, as to neglect that meat which endureth unto everlasting life. Feed us, we pray thee, with the bread of life that cometh down from heaven. Lord, refresh our souls with light, and pardon, and peace, and holiness, and all the blessings of gospel salvation. May it please thee, also, to keep us in a spirit of habitual and constant dependence on the communications of thy grace, so that we may daily and hourly be obtaining fresh supplies from the inexhaustible fountain of our Redeemer's fullness. May the pure and noble enjoyments which thou hast provided for us, abundantly satisfy our souls, so that we may never become desirous of returning to the follies and sins of the world, which we profess to have heartily forsaken. Lord, enable us so to conduct our temporal concerns that they may not interfere with those of our souls and of eternity. Give us, especially, to have a most conscientious regard to thy holy sabbath. May we wisely prepare for its weekly return; may we hail it when it actually arrives; and may we enjoy it as a foretaste of the rest which remaineth for thy people, and improve it as a preparation for an eternal sabbath in heaven. We bless thee for watching over us during the darkness and silence of the past night, and for sparing us to see and enjoy this day. With the light of the morning lift upon us the light of thy gracious and reconciled countenance. Take us under thy protection throughout the day. Keep us from all evil, and assist us in every duty. Never leave us, O Lord; never forsake us. While we live, may we be guided by thy counsel, and when we die, may we be received to thy glory, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIII.

SCRIPTURE—MARK IX. 1—29.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—10. The first thing contained in this passage is an account of our Lord's transfiguration on the mount. Ver. 11—13. In this, we have a proof and a display of the divine glory, of the supreme Godhead, of the Redeemer; for, he who had taken upon him the form of a servant, now reassumed, for a short time, the glory which he had with the Father before the world was. Here also we have a proof of the souls of believers in a state of separation from the body, and of consciousness and happiness; for, though Elias was in the body, having been translated without tasting of death, Moses had died, and his body was buried. We learn, too, from the appearance of Elias, how great will be the glory of the risen bodies of Christ's people, when he shall change their vile bodies, and fashion them like unto his own glorious body. And, from the intelligent intercourse which now took place, we may infer that the saints will be able to distinguish one another, and to become personally acquainted in heaven. Ver. 14—29. After a brief allusion to the coming of John the Baptist, in an office and character similar to those of Elijah, Mark gives a full description of our Lord's casting out a deaf and dumb spirit. From this history we may infer the reality of the demoniacal possessions recorded by the Evangelists; the duty of parents and others to bring their children and friends to Christ; the necessity of faith to the accomplishment of any thing truly great and good; and the power of the Lord Jesus Christ to destroy the works of the devil in every sense.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How delightful to contemplate, in what we read in the first nine verses of this chapter, the man of sorrows for once, during the period of his humiliation, arrayed in divine splendour, and attended by some of the citizens of heaven! Let this confirm our faith in his Messiahship and divinity. 'We have not followed cunningly devised fables,' says the apostle Peter, 'when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.' We have here a beautiful example of pious conversation, and a call to study to improve our intercourse in that way. And what topic can be more interesting than the decease which Jesus accomplished at Jerusalem, the atoning death of the Son of God, in all its circumstances and results? Let us improve the affectionate but inconsiderate proposal to remain on the mount. It is right that we should not weary of ordinances in which we hold communion with Christ, but rather wish such seasons to be prolonged. There is a proper limit, however, to this. Our life must not be altogether a life of devout contemplation; it must also be very much a life of action. The most favoured opportunities here below must have their close. Let us carefully attend to God's declaration and command, 'This is my beloved Son, hear ye him.' Let us mark and improve the history and ministry of him who came in the spirit and power of Elias, as a fulfilment of prophecy, and as intended to prepare the way for our submission to the Saviour. As for the account of the miracle of the casting out of the deaf, and dumb, and foul spirit, it abounds with important practical instruction. Let us be thankful that the power of Satan over men's bodies is now so much restrained; but let us remember that his influence over men's mind is still great. Let parents be even more anxious for the spiritual cure than they are for the bodily health of their children; and let us all apply for ourselves to the Lord Jesus Christ, that he would deliver us from the bondage of sin, satan, and the world, and bless us with the spiritual liberty wherewith he makes his people free.

PRAYER.

Most gracious God, may we find it good for us to be here, and to be thus engaged at this time. Though we cannot be always employed in positive acts of worship, may we delight in frequent opportunities; and even while we are discharging other duties, may we be ever ready to turn to thee, and in respect of the prevalent disposition of our minds, pray without ceasing; pray always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit. Glory be to thee, O Father of mercies, and God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for sending thine only begotten and well beloved Son into the world, to suffer and die for us miserable and perishing sinners. And blessed be thy name, O thou divine Redeemer, who didst so long veil that glory of which a glimpse was given on the mount of transfiguration, and didst accomplish that decease at Jerusalem on which all our hope of mercy is founded. What could we have looked for but fiery indignation, hadst thou not put away sin by the sacrifice of thyself? But if even while we were enemies, we were reconciled by thy death, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by thy life? How are we indebted to thy bounty, O Lord, we whom thou hast redeemed with so precious a ransom, enriched with so noble a gift, honoured with so high a privilege! What fear, what love, what thanks, what praise, are due by us to thee who hast thus pitied, thus loved, thus rescued, thus sanctified, thus exalted us! The whole of our ability, the whole of our hearts and services, our very life and being, are thy just tribute. But, alas, how weak, and sinful, and lukewarm are we! What can we do without thee? Thou, therefore, from whom all good things do come, impart to us, for thy name's sake, of thy good treasure, that of thy own good gifts we may give back again to thee, and, by thy grace, be enabled to trust, and serve, and please thee, and to render thee due and daily praise for all thy works of mercy, yea, even for the very power of rendering thee this praise. What requital shall we make for all thy inestimable mercies! Thou commandest us to love thee, but how can we ever love thee enough? nay, who are we, that thou shouldest desire or accept our love at all? In truth, however, may we be able to say, Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that we love thee. Thou art our strength, our fortress, our refuge, our helper, our deliverer: in a word, thou art our God; and whatever we have, or can do, or are, or hope, all is of thee, and in thee, and by thee, and to thee. The case of the demoniac is but a faint emblem, O Lord, of our sinful, degraded, and enslaved condition, from the very womb. Deliver us, by thy grace and power, deliver us and ours from this wretched thralldom. Enable us, we pray thee, to realize the blessings of salvation, through faith in the righteousness of the Redeemer. May it be given unto us, in behalf of Christ, to believe in his name. We believe; Lord, help our unbelief; Lord, increase our faith. Open our ears to hear thy truth. Enable us to incline our ear and come to thee, to hear that our souls may live. Open also our lips, that our mouth may show forth thy praise. May nothing proceed out of our mouth but that which is good to the use of edifying. May we delight to speak of the things of God, and to spread abroad the savour of the Redeemer's name. Strengthen us also, we beseech thee, for all the duties of the Christian life, that we may prove the sincerity of our profession, and the reality of our deliverance from the guilt of sin and the bondage of the devil, by the evidence of a useful and holy life. Give us repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, that we may recover ourselves out of the snare of the devil, who are naturally taken captive by him at his will. May we be strong in thee, and in the power of thy might. Taking to ourselves the whole armour of God, may we be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. We thank thee, heavenly Father, for thy goodness towards us throughout the day which is now drawing to a close. Pardon, we pray thee, whatever thou hast seen amiss in us, for in many respects we have erred and come short. Take us under thy protection during the watches of the night; grant us needful refreshment; and spare us to see and to enjoy a new day. May we pass the remainder of our days in thy fear, and may we die in thy favour, for the sake of the Lord Jesus, for whom we bless thee, and to whom, with thee, the Father, and the Holy Spirit, one God, be ascribed equal and eternal praise. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXVI.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—7. The miraculous supply of water from the rock in Horeb, again teaches that trials must be expected; that murmuring under such trials is very sinful; and that the Lord will certainly provide, by his providence and grace, all that is needful for his people in their progress; in particular, that he invites them to partake abundantly of the refreshing blessings that flow from a Saviour's love, saying, 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come to the waters.' Ver. 8—14. The contest with Amalek, teaches that God's people have to struggle against spiritual enemies; that they should exert themselves in the contest with all their might; and yet, that their success depends solely on divine assistance, for which they should continually look in answer to prayer, and through the intercession of the Lord Jesus Christ. Ver. 15, 16. God's interposition in favour of his people ought to be kept in grateful remembrance, and to him the whole praise of success should be ascribed.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us go on in every thing 'according to the commandment of the Lord,' as we can gather it from his word, and the leadings of his providence, in dependence on his teaching; and we shall find that he will order our footsteps and delight in our way. And yet, though moving at his command, and plainly in the way of duty, we are not to calculate on exemption from trouble; on the contrary, he may allow us to be temporally and spiritually in want, that he may keep us entirely and sensibly dependent on himself, and may get the greater glory in relieving us. Let us beware of murmurings against the Lord on account of our straits. Let us look patiently and believingly to him, and he will provide necessary refreshment both for our bodies and for our souls, according to his own gracious promise, 'When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them. I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.' Enjoying the full light of the New Testament, let us carefully observe and improve the typical import of this miracle, and its evangelical application. 'Our fathers did all drink the same spiritual drink,' says the apostle to the Corinthians, 'for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ.' The rock was a type of Christ, and the water, of the blessings of his salvation. As the rock was smitten by the rod of Moses, so Christ was smitten by the sword of divine justice, when he bore the curse of the law for us. Blood and water flowed out when his side was pierced by the soldier's spear; striking emblems of pardoning and regenerating grace. If we would partake of these blessings, let us believe in his name, and rely habitually on his grace, according to his own words, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his heart shall flow rivers of living water.' As Amalek met the Israelites by the way, when they were come forth out of Egypt, and smote the hindmost of them, even all that were feeble behind them, when they were faint and weary, (Deut. xxv. 17.) so satan and the world will often set upon us in an unexpected, unprovoked, treacherous, cruel, and dastardly manner: against this we should study to be on our guard; and, whether they assault us in that way, or more openly and boldly, we must fight the good fight of faith, and resist them with all our might. While our hands are stretched out to God in prayer, we shall always be successful, but if our hands turn heavy, and we cease to pray, Amalek will prevail—every spiritual enemy and every evil propensity will gain ground. Let us always pray, and not faint. Let us also praise the Lord for every advantage we gain; and according to the genius of the gospel, let us set up an altar in our hearts, and let every one of us prosecute this holy warfare under the captain of salvation, and under the standard Jehovah-nissi, the Lord is my banner. Our enemies are defeated, but they are not entirely put down. We must make no league with Amalek, no compromise with sin. Let us maintain the conflict to the last, and then the triumph will be complete.

PRAYER.

Blessed be thy name, O heavenly Father, for the fellowship with thee and with thy Son Jesus Christ, with which thou favourest all thy believing people. Blessed be thy name for the refuge and help they find in thee. Let thine ear be ever open to our cry, and let thine eye be ever upon us for good. Should all things appear to be against us, and all our means of deliverance fail, be thou our present help in the time of trouble. To thee all things are possible; and when thou beginnest to work, difficulties disappear, and sorrows are dissipated. For ever blessed be thy name, if thou hast given us to know thee as our reconciled God, to accept of thy salvation, and to find rest under the shadow of thy wings. Thou knowest, O Lord, our need of refreshment in this our journey through the wilderness of life; thou knowest all the wants of our bodies, and all the longings of our souls. In both respects do thou supply us; in both respects may bread be given unto us, and may our water be sure. O let us not mistake the true nature and the true source of consolation; let us not be guilty of the sin and folly of forsaking thee, the Fountain of living waters, and hewing out to ourselves broken cisterns that can hold no water. O God, thou art our God, early will we seek thee: our souls thirst for thee, our flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is. We stretch forth our hands unto thee. Hear us speedily, O Lord; our spirits fail: hide not thy face from us, lest we be like them that go down into the pit. O satisfy us early with thy goodness. Lord, give us living water, that drinking thereof, we may never so thirst again, but that it may be in us a well of water, springing up into everlasting life. Carry us on safely, we beseech thee, quite through this desert; and bring us at last to the place where we shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on us, nor any heat: for the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne, shall feed us, and shall lead us unto living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes. But, O Lord, we would not forget that we are yet in the wilderness, and exposed to the assaults of many enemies. In the name of our God we will set up our banners. Lord, hear us in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend us, and save us, and give us the victory. We beseech thee, O Lord, more particularly to defend us from all the dangers, both temporal and spiritual, to which we may be exposed, and to assist us in all the duties to which we may be called, during the day on which we are now entering. While we bless thee for thy care during the night, we implore the continuance of thy favour. Our voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will we direct our prayer unto thee, and will look up. May we walk in the light of thy countenance; in thy name may we rejoice all the day. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for thine own sake, O our God. Lord, accept of our imperfect services, and grant us an answer in peace; in the name, and for the sake of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXVII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—MARK IX. 30—50.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 30—32. It is an important point in the evidence of the gospel that the Saviour's death and resurrection were distinctly foretold, though it was long ere his disciples understood his declarations with regard to these events. Ver. 33—37. Humility is true greatness. This part of the passage is also conclusive against the alleged supremacy of Peter; for now a call was made on our Lord to assert that doctrine, had it been true, whereas he answered in such a way as entirely to quash the idea of supremacy in any of the apostles. Ver. 38—40. Those who seem to honour Christ are not to be hastily condemned by us because they may not altogether agree with us. We should be glad that his cause is promoted by whatever instrumentality. Ver. 41, 42. The Lord will acknowledge and reward services, and severely punish injuries done to his own people. In ver. 43, 45, 47. the necessity of self-denial, and the renunciation of all sin, is put in a very strong light. In ver. 44, 46, 48. the doctrine of the eternity of the future punishment of the wicked is clearly taught in the same words thrice repeated. And finally, while the same general truth is taught in the two last verses of the chapter, the inevitable doom of apostates is particularly shown.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

What the disciples did not understand in our Lord's predictions of his death and resurrection, we now see illustrated in the light of actual fulfilment. How wonderful the love he manifested in dying for us! and what encouragement have we to rely on his atonement and to glory in his cross! In his resurrection, let us ever see the grand proof of his divine mission, and the pattern and pledge of the happy and glorious resurrection of all his followers. As there are still many things which we do not understand, let us not be afraid to ask him: but let us inquire in his word, and pray for the teaching of his Spirit; and he will guide us into all truth. How unseemly are pride and affectation of superiority in the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, whether they be ministers, or hearers, of the word! Our place before God is the dust. And if we would be prepared for any true dignity, we must be converted and become like little children,—we must become humble and teachable. Let us be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Let us be careful to exercise charity towards all who hold the Head, even Christ, though they may not exactly walk with us, or belong to our denomination. Let us not seek to stop, or thwart their exertions in the cause of religion; but let us remember how the apostle Paul said, 'What then? in whatever way Christ is preached, I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.' And, though some may not be so far advanced as we are, let us beware of driving them away, or irritating them, by harshness. Let us also beware of doing any thing to offend, or stumble, any of Christ's people, however weak. How awful the idea of eternal misery! Surely the sinners in Zion may well be afraid, and fearfulness surprise the hypocrites. 'Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?' How awful to think, that instead of being consumed by the fire of God's wrath, the wicked shall be preserved by it, and continue immortal in the midst of it! Surely no anxiety to escape so tremendous a doom can be too great. Let us be thankful that a way is opened up for our escape; for, God so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have everlasting life.

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who wast, who art, and who art to come; thou art worthy to receive glory, and honour, and power, for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they exist, and were created. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy, and all nations shall come and worship before thee. All thy works praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints bless thee. We will speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; to make known to the sons of men thy mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of thy kingdom. Thou, O Lord, madest us that we might promote thy glory, and be perfectly happy with thee; and glory be to thy name! though we have rebelled against thee, thou hast provided a way for our restoration to thy favour. We confess and deplore before thee our great sinfulness by nature and practice. Behold, we were shapen in iniquity, and in sin did our mothers conceive us. Our hearts are deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. We have done the things which thou hast forbidden, and we have left undone the things which thou hast commanded; so that there is no spiritual health in us. God be merciful unto us, sinners. See, O God, our shield; look upon us in the face of thine Anointed. Blot out our manifold offences, for the sake of him who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification. Lord, humble us under thy mighty hand, that we may be exalted in due time. Teach us true humility, both towards thyself, and towards our fellow-creatures. Give us a right and charitable frame of spirit towards all men. May we be ready to do good to all, as we have opportunity, and especially to those who are of the household of faith. Lord, sanctify us by thy Holy Spirit, and form us more and more after thine own image. Convince us of the absolute necessity of obtaining deliverance from the love and practice of sin, in order to escape the coming wrath. Deliver us from presumptuous sins, and from secret faults: let no iniquity obtain dominion over us. Save us particularly from the sins that most easily beset us, and enable us heartily to renounce them, though they may have been dear to us as a right hand, or a right eye. While we tremble at the thought, we yet acknowledge thy goodness, O Lord, in unveiling to us, in some degree, the terrors of the place where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. Lord, avert from us a doom so insupportable. Lord, save us from going down to the pit, for thou hast found a ransom. Lord, enable us to flee for refuge to the Saviour. Whatever else thou deniest us, deny us not thy grace; take not thy Holy Spirit from us. Of whatever else we may come short, let us not come short of heaven. We offer thee our united thanks for thy goodness to us during the day. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High; to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Deliver us from the pestilence that walketh in darkness, as well as from the arrow that flieth at noonday. May we lay ourselves down in peace, and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest us to dwell in safety. While we sleep, let no plague come nigh our dwelling; and may we awake in the morning to sing of thy mercy. Our waiting eyes are towards thee, O Lord. Hear in heaven, the habitation of thy holiness. When thou hearest, forgive, and send us an answer in peace, for the sake of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 33—37.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XX.

REMARKS.

The law thus given from Sinai, was the same which originally had been written on the fleshly tables of the human heart. It was no new discovery of the divine will, but the republication of that same rule by which man had been bound from the beginning. The fall of Adam, and the consequent corruption and depravity of our nature, had effaced from the human soul both the knowledge of God's law, and the disposition to obey it. And now that, in his infinite wisdom and adorable mercy he had chosen, and was proceeding to set apart a peculiar people, 'to prepare the way of the Lord,' it was fitting and necessary that the moral law, forgotten and despised, should be proclaimed anew, so that the terrors of its threatened condemnation might prove a schoolmaster to lead men to the Saviour, of whom Moses in the ceremonial law was inspired to write.

PREFACE TO THE LAW.—In the giving of a law, the first point to be determined is the authority from whence it proceeds. In the preface, accordingly, to the ten commandments, we find the authority of the lawgiver explicitly asserted in these solemn words; 'I am the Lord thy God which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.' Here there are three separate grounds enumerated, on which the giver of the law demanded the obedience of the Israelites. 1. I am 'the Lord,' that is, the sovereign Ruler of the universe, to whom alone it rightfully and inalienably belongs to require the submission of all creatures, and to prescribe the rule according to which it shall be rendered. 2. I am 'thy God,' that is, the God to whom, as a people, they were so especially bound, having been received into covenant with him, through their father Abraham; and being therefore under an express oath of allegiance to do his will. 3. I am the God 'which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage;' that is, the merciful and gracious Being who had distinguished them by special tokens of his love, pitying their sorrows and sufferings under the hard bondage of Egypt, bringing them out with a high hand, and with a stretched out arm, and leading them towards the rich inheritance he had promised to their fathers. The first reason for demanding their obedience was one of sovereignty, the second of covenant allegiance, the third of national and personal gratitude.

It is obvious that these reasons for keeping all the commandments of this law remain, not merely in the same, but in augmented force. He is still the same sovereign Lord of heaven and earth: to whom alone belongs the dominion and the power. As professedly belonging to the spiritual Israel, brought into a covenant relation to him through his Son Jesus Christ, we are avowedly under a special obligation to do his will; and as the redeemed of the Lord, ransomed by the amazing price of Christ's precious blood, we are not our own; and by the ties of the deepest and liveliest gratitude, are bound to make it our meat and our drink to do the good pleasure of the Lord.

FIRST TABLE OF THE LAW.—With regard to the law itself, which on these grounds demands our unqualified obedience, it is divided into two parts or 'tables' as they are commonly called; the former comprehending what relates to our duty to God, and the latter what relates to our duty to man. In the table prescribing our duty to God, there are four separate commands. The first refers to the object of worship, the second to the means of worship, the third to the manner of worship; and the fourth to one of the chief times of worship.

1. We must worship the Lord our God, and him only must we serve. Whosoever any creature has the chief place in our hearts, we commit idolatry. And as his eye seeth under the whole heaven, that sin wherever men are guilty of it, is aggravated by the fact, that it is done 'to his face.' 2. We must worship God in his own appointed way, and in no other. To worship him by means of images is expressly, and with peculiar emphasis, forbidden; as that by which he holds himself specially dishonoured. 'He is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.' 3. We must worship him with deep reverence and holy awe, remembering that he is clothed with infinite majesty and honour, and that we are unworthy to take his great and fearful name into our polluted lips. All levity, and much more, all profanity, in the use of God's names, titles, attributes, ordinances, word, or works, is forbidden under this solemn sanction; that though men may regard this sin with indifference, God, who is jealous of his own glory, will not suffer it to go unpunished. 4. That while our obligation to worship God as individuals, and as families, returns with every returning day, we are required to make a more solemn and public expression of our homage, by ceasing one day in seven from our ordinary secular pursuits, and devoting that day exclusively to the public and private exercises of devotion. The command on this point enjoined the Israelites 'to remember the sabbath,' implying that the institution existed previous to the giving of the law from Sinai. It declares, that on the seventh day, God himself had rested from all the works which he had created and made; thus lending the high authority of his own example to the holy rest, for which, from the beginning of the world, a seventh portion of man's time is authoritatively and immutably required. The seventh day sabbath reminded man of his Maker; but the first day sabbath, observed since the resurrection of Christ, in compliance with the example and authority of his inspired apostles, reminds us of the yet more gracious character in which he is revealed in the gospel, the Saviour of sinners, the Redeemer of a lost world. The sabbath indeed was 'made for man,' expressly for his benefit; and therefore, as our Lord hath clearly taught, is not to be understood as prohibiting those works of necessity and mercy which the interests and the welfare of human nature require, even on the sabbath, to be performed. We must, however, cautiously beware how we draw this exception beyond its just and intended limits.

SECOND TABLE OF THE LAW.—Of all fellow men, our parents have the first and most sacred claim on our love, and God has taught us to recognise and reverence that claim as it deserves, by putting the command respecting the duty of children towards their parents at the head of the second table of this holy law. Turning from the domestic circle to the world around, the succeeding commandments arrange the duty we owe to our neighbour,—and every man is our neighbour,—under these separate heads; our duty stated in the sixth commandment towards our neighbour's person; we are not to kill the body, not to take life unlawfully, nor to do any thing tending to injure it. In the seventh, towards our neighbour's chastity, we are straitly forbidden to say or do what, from its impure and polluting character, may tend to corrupt and destroy the soul. In the eighth, towards our neighbour's property, we are not unjustly to invade or injure it. In the ninth, towards our neighbour's reputation, we are not falsely or maliciously to defame it. And lastly, and what constitutes a safeguard against the breach of all the preceding commandments, we are not to covet. Out of the heart are the issues of life; and it is by prayerfully keeping our hearts with all diligence, watching and subduing all inordinate motions or affections, towards our neighbour and all that is his, we shall be kept through divine grace from running into the open violation of any of these commands. This last command is furthermore an impressive intimation of the extent and spirituality of the divine law, as taking cognizance not only of our external conduct, but of the very thoughts and intents of our hearts. It is needful to observe, that while all the commands of the second table, with one exception, are put in the form of prohibitions, they bind us actively to do the contrary of what is forbidden. To say, 'Thou shalt not do this, is to say, Thou shalt do the opposite: thou shalt not bear false witness, that is, for example, thou shalt 'every man speak truth with his neighbour.' Thus not only binding us to abstain from evil, but positively 'to do good unto all men as we have opportunity.' The 'fulfilling' of all this law, the principle which at once prompts and ensures true obedience is love,—love to God in Christ, and love to man for his sake. For the sum of all these commands is this; ‘thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind: and thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.’

The terror of the Israelites, when the Lord thus manifested his presence on Mount Sinai, and their anxiety that Moses might stand between them and God, reminds us of our need of a Mediator; of our unfitness to stand before God on any merits of our own. While the command which was given to Moses to make a plain and simple ‘altar of earth,’ or if of stone, at least not of ‘hewn’ stone, was evidently intended as an additional safeguard against idolatry, which delighted in the splendour of its altars, and of its graven images.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, thou art very great, thou art clothed with majesty and honour. Thou art the maker and preserver of heaven and earth. Thou alone art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power, for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. Thou art the sovereign Ruler of the universe, to whom every knee should bow, and every tongue confess. Thou art our God, and thou hast been our fathers’ God. Thou art the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom thou hast loved us with an everlasting love. O impress our minds with just views of thy glorious perfections, and fill our hearts with a deep and abiding sense of thy great and undeserved mercy, in sending thy Son to visit and redeem our souls. Blessed be thy name, that thou hast laid help for us on one so mighty, and so willing to save. Wert thou to enter into judgment with us, we could not answer thee; by deeds of the law no living flesh shall be justified, for we have all sinned, and come short of thy glory. O that we may be found before thee, having not our own righteousness, which is of the law, and which is as filthy rags, but having the righteousness of Christ, even the righteousness which is of God by faith; washed, and justified, and sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. But while we rejoice with humble and heartfelt gratitude, that we are not under the law, but under grace; we would remember that the law is holy and just, and good. O that we may obtain clear and solemnizing views of its extent, for it is exceeding broad; and of its spirituality, for it reaches to the very thoughts and intents of the heart. May it give us the knowledge of our sins, and thus prove a schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness, to every one that believeth. May that love of God which is the fulfilling of thy law, be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, that constrained by this divine principle we may learn more and more to deny ourselves to all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in the present evil world. May the fear of the Lord be before our eyes continually, that we may stand in awe, and not sin. May we be enabled to worship and serve thee, now, and at all times, with true hearts and right spirits. May we delight in all those ordinances of thy grace, which bring us into communion with God. May we especially account thy sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord and honourable, turning our foot away from whatever would profane it, not doing our own ways, nor finding our own pleasures, nor speaking our own words; that so we may delight ourselves in the Lord. May we be kindly affectioned one toward another; remembering this thy holy commandment, that he who loveth God, should love his brother also. May we have grace to cherish, and exercise all those domestic affections, which bind the family circle together in the bonds of mutual love. May we be holy in all manner of conversation in our intercourse with others. May we be enabled to do justly, and to love mercy, and to speak every man truth with his neighbour; whatsoever we would that others should do unto us, may we do so also unto them. Lord, let us not think that we have already attained, or that we are already perfect. But forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, may we press on towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God. And when at length he who is our life shall appear, may we also appear with him in glory. We are unworthy of the least of these thy mercies, but worthy is the Lamb who was slain for us. For his sake take away all our sins, and send us an answer of peace, and to thy name shall be all the praise, world without end. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIV. 3—6.

SCRIPTURE—MARK X. 1—27.

REMARKS.

Nothing is more essential to virtue and piety, than purity in the relations of domestic life. It is there our minds receive the first, and strongest, and most indelible impressions. If therefore, corruption be allowed to establish its seat within that sacred circle, the very fountains of life are poisoned. And as it is out of the connection of husband and wife that all other domestic relations spring, it is obviously of fundamental importance that this connection be so formed and regulated, as to command the respect and ensure the confidence of their children. Nothing can tend more powerfully to secure this important end, than the solemn recognition and enforcement of the doctrine taught in the opening verses of this chapter, as in the corresponding passage of Matt. xix. that marriage is a divine institution, an institution whose obligations cannot be violated without incurring God's righteous displeasure. To prove that the marriage of one man with one woman, in opposition to the loose and licentious views which prevailed extensively in the world, was God's own design and appointment, Jesus referred to the decisive fact, that from the beginning of the creation God made them a male and a female, a proportion between the two sexes which ever since has been most exactly maintained. And while this fact clearly condemned the polygamy of the heathen, it not less explicitly forbade the causeless or frivolous divorces prevalent among the Jews, which indeed were little better than polygamy under another name. In a state of innocence, such as that in which our first parents originally stood, the marriage tie would have remained for ever unbroken. Sin, by introducing death, created one sure means of dissolving it, and the evil lusts and passions of which sin was the fruitful source, soon must have produced many more. To the prevalence of the many gross irregularities which subsequently arose in a fallen world, in regard to the marriage state, is to be ascribed the permission which Moses gave the Jews to write a bill of divorcement, and to send a wife away. On account of the hardness of their hearts was this permission given. It was a liberty granted to prevent worse consequences among a people, who, from their previous habits and natural dispositions, could not safely have had a more rigid rule upon this subject imposed upon them. That permission, however, such as it was, they had stretched far beyond its intended limits. It was never designed to sanction separation, except for some weighty and important cause. Whereas they had wilfully perverted it into an authority for breaking asunder the marriage tie for any cause, however shameful or capricious. Under the perfect economy of the gospel, not only was no such license to be allowed, but as men were now to be favoured with a clearer revelation of the will of God, and addressed by more powerful motives to obedience, not even the permission given by Moses was any longer to endure. Marriage was to be invested with all the sacredness which it had in the beginning, and nothing but the sin of adultery would henceforth warrant man to separate those whom God had united. In thus restoring marriage, so far as that can be done in a fallen world, to its original basis, fencing it round with so many obligations, and guarding against its unlawful dissolution by so heavy a responsibility, our blessed Lord was laying a foundation for domestic peace and happiness, as well as for public virtue.

In an interesting connection with this subject follows the incident which the evangelist next relates, of the bringing of young children unto Jesus.

That incident, though it has no direct reference to infant baptism, yet bears upon it in a way greatly calculated to confirm and encourage parents in dedicating, through that solemn ordinance, their infants unto Christ. Nothing can be more clear from what took place on the occasion in question, than this, that even infants are capable of receiving Christ's blessing, and that this blessing he is willing and ready to bestow. Let parents seek that blessing for their offspring; not once only, at the baptismal font, but continually at a throne of grace. Let them, in their daily prayers, place their children anew as it were in the Redeemer's arms, and let them rest assured, he will not fail to prove that it was not in vain he said, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me.'

From the case of children, we are led on by the inspired narrative, to the review of one of the most formidable temptations by which manhood is assailed. 'The love of money is the root of all evil.' How truly was that saying realized in this man, whose great possessions formed a barrier between his soul and the Saviour. In many respects his character seems to have been fitted to call forth affection and esteem, for we are told that Jesus looked upon him with feelings of more than ordinary interest. His natural dispositions were most probably amiable, and his general deportment attractive and engaging. But all this did not make him a child of God. With all that was so pleasing to the sensibilities of our nature, he was still loving and serving the creature more than the Creator. Like many other amiable men, he had no just or spiritual views of the true nature and malignity of sin; and was still, consequently, in the pride of his heart going about to establish a righteousness of his own. He was willing to do many things for God, but to abandon his rich possessions was a trial he had not contemplated, and for which he was unprepared. It is easy to serve God when his commands and our own inclinations chance to agree. It is when they come into collision, that the sincerity and the strength of our love to God are proved, and surely, if the riches of this world, ministering, as they do, so powerfully to pride, and carnality, and self-indulgence, are fitted to oppose so mighty an obstacle in our way to heaven, we have little cause to covet them. 'For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?'

PRAYER.

Almighty and most merciful God, thou art the former of our bodies, and the Father of our spirits; and great cause have we to make mention of thy loving-kindness in the morning, and of thy faithfulness every night. Assembled as we are anew around the domestic altar, we would remember that thou settest the solitary in families, and determinest the bounds of our habitations. We would praise thy name for the provision thou hast made for the welfare and happiness of mankind, by implanting within us those affections which bind us together, and by establishing and blessing all those endearing domestic relations, on which, in this life, our mutual comfort so greatly depends. Grant, O Lord, that in all these relations, we may be found through thy grace faithful to each other, and faithful to thee; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, dwelling together in the unity of the Spirit, which is the bond of perfectness, living as heirs of the grace of life, and walking in all the statutes and ordinances of the Lord, blameless. Blessed be God for the abundant encouragement we have received, not only to come ourselves, but to bring even the young and tender, unto Christ our Lord. As we were all in infancy dedicated to the Saviour in the holy ordinance of baptism, may we be kept by his mighty power through faith unto salvation. Alas! how little have we realized the obligations which our early dedication unto God involved! we have sinned against Heaven and before thee, and are no more worthy to be called thy children. Lord grant unto us the grace of true repentance, that as we have done iniquity in the time past, we may do so no more. May we indeed have power given us through faith to become thy children, that day by day we may commit our way unto the Lord, and that night by night we may lie down trusting in the care and protection of our Father in heaven. And seeing, O Lord, that in this world we are beset on every hand with temptations and snares, let us not be high-minded, but fear. Lord, let not the cares of this life, neither the deceitfulness of riches, nor the lusts of other earthly things, enter in to entice us away from thee. May we learn to live above the world even while we are in it. Knowing that the fashion of this world passeth away, that here we have no continuing city, nor sure place of abode, may we have our treasure in the heavens, and our hearts there also; and by patient continuance in well-doing, be seeking for glory, honour, and immortality. May the love of God be so abundantly shed abroad in our hearts, that we may be ready at all times to deny ourselves, to take up our cross, and to follow him who redeemed us, not with corruptible things such as silver and gold, but with his own precious blood. May our souls be so filled with a sense of what he hath done and suffered for our sakes, that we may be ready to suffer the loss of all things for his sake, and to esteem even the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt. And grant that, following him in the regeneration, through good report, and through bad report, we may at length be found meet for the inheritance of the saints. And when he who is our life shall appear, may we also appear with him in glory. Hear us, good Lord, and when thou hearest forgive; turn not away thy face from us, neither our prayer from thee, and all that we ask is for Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 4—10.

SCRIPTURE—Exodus xxiv.

REMARKS.

The transaction recorded in this chapter is of a peculiarly solemn and important kind. God had chosen the Israelites, the seed of Abraham, for a peculiar people. The time had now arrived for establishing them in the inheritance he had promised to their fathers. And as their whole institutions and history were designed to be a figure or shadow of the kingdom of Christ, their relation to God was here confirmed by a covenant suitable to that design. They were no doubt temporal possessions and privileges which this covenant secured, but these were so ordered as to be typical of blessings spiritual and eternal. The manner accordingly in which the covenant was ratified, and the whole circumstances connected with it, were such as clearly pointed to the sacrifice and mediation of the future Messiah. The Lord had, immediately before, not only given forth that moral law which is binding upon all men, but, as the king of Israel, had published that judicial law according to which the Israelites, as a nation, were to be strictly governed. On their adherence to that law as a people were their national privileges to be suspended. And that they might be distinctly aware of the terms on which they were to be invested with the inheritance of Canaan, God gave instructions to Moses to prepare for a solemn public contract, by which the allegiance of the Israelites might be openly pledged to their covenant God. By the divine command he repeated to all the people the words of the law, and received their full and unqualified assent to what the Lord had enjoined. He built, moreover, an altar under the mountain, erected twelve pillars opposite to it, to represent the twelve tribes, and having offered sacrifices, he took the blood of the slain beasts, and sprinkled one half on the altar and the other on the people, that is, either on the elders, who appeared for the people, or on the twelve pillars which represented the tribes; Moses, as the typical priest, going between the altar and the people, and mediating between God and Israel in this solemn transaction. God thus bound himself to fulfil his promises to the people, while the people, in their turn, vowed allegiance to God. At the same time the blood of the sacrifices with which the covenant was ratified, proclaimed that the blessings promised were not of debt, but of grace; that divine mercy, propitiated by the blood of atonement, was the only ground of their title to those temporal blessings which were the appointed shadows of good things to come.

The incidents which followed are full of a meaning which can be rightly explained and understood only by a reference to the spiritual and typical import which the whole transaction involved. It is recorded that immediately after the ratification of this covenant, Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel, went up into the mount, and saw the God of Israel. Unspeakably glorious as was the manifestation of his presence which they beheld, it shook them with no terror. On the contrary, they were not only enabled to look upon it undismayed, but they did eat and drink while thus standing, as it were, before the unveiled countenance of Jehovah. When he appeared in awful majesty, on the same mount, at the giving of the law, the penalty of breaking through to gaze upon the Lord was death. Thereby teaching that by deeds of the law no living flesh shall be justified; that on the ground of his own righteousness no one could appear before God. But now that God had entered into a covenant of mercy with his people, and that they had embraced him as their God and their king, his justice, satisfied by the blood of sprinkling, had sheathed the sword of vengeance. They could now come unto God and live.

Even so the sinner in his natural estate of enmity and alienation, cannot think of God without the most agitating terror; the prospect of appearing before him is then nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation. But when the blood of Christ has washed away his sins, instead of standing afar off and trembling with dismay, he has boldness to come unto a throne of grace; he is permitted to hold near and intimate communion with God as a reconciled God and Father, and to see his face in peace.

It is, however, of unspeakable importance to bear in mind that no mere external privileges, as members of the visible church, can ensure us of the divine favour. Though outwardly the people of Israel had joined themselves in a solemn covenant unto the Lord, we know that through unbelief, their carcasses fell in the wilderness. And in like manner how many are there still who avouch the Lord to be their God, who take the memorials of the Saviour's sacrifice into their hands, and eat and drink at a communion table, as it were in his immediate presence, who all the while, in their hearts, are at as great a distance from God as ever, and to whom Christ, at his final coming, will testify and declare that he never knew them. Let none then rest in names, and forms, and professions. But let all bear in mind, that not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, for that, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, thou art the high and the lofty One who inhabitest eternity, and whose name is holy. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look upon sin. The heavens are not clean in thy sight. Thou chargest thine angels with folly. How much more abominable and filthy is man, who hath drank up iniquity like water! We, O Lord, are all by nature the children of wrath, even as others. We have committed two great evils; we have forsaken thee, the fountain of living waters, and we have hewn out for ourselves cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water. Our whole nature is corrupt; our minds are blinded through the ignorance that is in us; our hearts are depraved; there is no health in us. In us, that is, in our flesh, there dwelleth no good thing. To do evil, indeed, we can, but to do good we have no knowledge. Even the good that we would, that we do not; but the evil that we would not, that we do. Blessed be God that we are not under the law, but under grace! Blessed be God for the rich provisions of a covenant of mercy; a covenant which is well ordered in all things and sure. In and through that covenant we rejoice to believe that thou art just, and the justifier of the ungodly, who believe in Jesus. May the blood of that everlasting covenant be applied to our souls, that our guilt may be taken away; that the curse of a broken law may be forever removed from us, so that, whereas we were sometime far off we may be brought nigh through the blood of Christ. Receiving it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that he died for sinners, even for the chief, may we obtain peace through the blood of his cross, even peace with God. O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God. Herein indeed was love, not that we loved God, but that God loved us, sparing not his own Son, but freely giving him unto the death for us all. May that love of God, that perfect love which casteth out fear, be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, that so we may be encouraged and strengthened with humble confidence to draw near to thy presence, and to hold communion with thee as our reconciled God and Father in Christ Jesus. And, O Lord, may we find grace to walk worthy of that high vocation wherewith we have been called. May we live as becometh those whom God hath chosen out of the world, to be an holy nation, a peculiar people unto himself. Having avouched the Lord to be our God, having solemnly engaged that whatever others do, as for us and our house we will serve the Lord, may we come out from the world, and be transformed by the renewing of our minds, and give ourselves up, soul, and body, and spirit, as living sacrifices, holy and acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service. May our life be, even now, hid with Christ in God; and when he who is our life shall appear, may we also appear with him in glory. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM IV.

SCRIPTURE—MARK X. 28—52.

REMARKS.

It certainly did not well become Peter or his brethren, to boast of their sacrifices in the cause of Christ. He who will not forget even a cup of cold water given to one of the meanest of his disciples, did not need to be reminded of what his followers had done for himself. But still with that patient and condescending kindness, which towards his disciples, amid all their failings, he so uniformly displayed, he was pleased to assure them they would have no cause to regret the choice they had made in forsaking all, that they might follow Christ. Even in this life, the outward losses the Christian may be called at any time to sustain in his Master's cause, are far more than made up by the abundance of those inward and precious consolations, which divine grace never fails to supply. But when he looks forward to another world, to the day when the wicked shall have ceased from troubling, and when the weary shall have rest from all their afflictions, and all their trials, he cannot but reckon with the apostle, that the sufferings of this present time are not once to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in God's people in eternity.

It is not improbable that the apostles, clinging as they still were, so closely to the hope that Christ was to set up a temporal kingdom, may have been too ready, at that time, to interpret these gracious promises of Christ as an encouragement to look for earthly honours in his service. There was, therefore, a peculiar fitness in his choosing that moment to lead them to the contemplation of his death. It was by the way of the cross, and by that way alone, Christ could reach the throne of his kingdom. And his followers must be contented to be conducted by a similar path—often through much tribulation, to enter into the kingdom.

This, however, is a conclusion to which human nature is most reluctant to come. Pride and self-indulgence recoil from a cross. Accordingly we find that so slow of heart were the apostles to learn the lesson their Master designed to teach them, that two of their number, still carnally longing after worldly distinctions, presumed to request that places might be assigned them, one on his right, and the other on his left hand, when he should come to his glory. They knew not what they were asking. At that moment they had no just views, either of the nature of his kingdom, or of the principles according to which its honours and rewards should be dispensed. There will be no favouritism, in determining the places men are to occupy in a future world. They will be assigned to those for whom they are prepared, for God will render unto every man according to his deeds. And how must the disciples have felt themselves rebuked by the thought, that while they had been presuming to bring forward their pretensions to places of prominence and superiority, their divine Master, so great, so good, so distinguished by every attribute that should command the grateful homage of the world, had himself been among them 'as one that served,'—had come, not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

Of all the Saviour's miracles, so illustrative as they were of the great end and design of his mission, none, perhaps, is in all respects so appropriate, as that of his giving sight to the blind. The state of darkness, as to the natural world in which the blind live, is an impressive emblem of the spiritual darkness in which sin has involved the human soul. Christ came to be the light of the world, and his opening of the blind eyes was peculiarly significant of his giving saving light to them that were sitting in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. The Lord needed not only to open to us the scriptures; he needs also to open our understandings, to understand the scriptures. And while called to pray earnestly for that divine illumination,—that anointing of the eyes with the eye salve of the Holy Spirit that we may see, we may learn an important lesson from the case of Bartimeus, such as should encourage us to persevere in this prayer. If he does not grant our requests the instant they are preferred, it is not because he does not hear, but because he desires to prove our faith, to exercise our dependence, and to fill us with a deeper sense of the value of those blessings we come to implore. Blind Bartimeus cried loudly, and cried often, before Jesus seemed to be giving any heed to his supplication. But in the end he had his request and more; he sought a bodily and temporal blessing; that he obtained,—but he received along with it a blessing spiritual and eternal. It is thus that God often exceeds the utmost desires of his people's hearts. Let us then ask, and we shall receive; let us seek, and we shall find.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, thou art the hearer of prayer, and unto thee shall all flesh come. Blessed be thy name, for the freedom of access we enjoy to thy throne of grace, and for the sure promise we have received, that whatsoever things we shall ask in Christ's name, believing, we shall receive. Help us to ask in faith, believing that thou art, and that thou art the rewarder of them that diligently seek thee. O Lord, do thou impress our minds with a deep and abiding sense of the preciousness of Christ. May we account all other things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of the Saviour; may we feel that all other things are less than nothing and vanity, compared with winning Christ, and being found in him. Under this conviction, may we be ready to follow him through good report, and through bad report; to take up our cross, to deny ourselves, and to go after Jesus. And grant, that we may be daily growing up into him in all things, who is the head, that we may attain to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. May we take his yoke upon us, and learn of him who was meek and lowly of heart; putting on bowels of mercies, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, that so men may have cause to take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. Forbid, O God, that we should think we have already attained, or that we are already perfect. This one thing may we do, forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, may we be ever pressing on towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus our Lord. And instead of proudly and self-complacently assuming a right to thy favour, may we feel that we are less than the least of all thy mercies, and that it is only because thy compassions fail not that we are not consumed. Truly we are unprofitable servants. We have done the things we ought not to have done; we have neglected those things it was our duty to do. Good Lord, sanctify to us all the trials and vicissitudes of our earthly pilgrimage. When oppressed at any time with afflictions, may we learn to look unto Christ, who endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the majesty in the heavens. And grant, heavenly Father, that we may be apt to learn those lessons of heavenly wisdom which the dispensations of thy providence towards us may be fitted and designed to teach. May we walk before thee as children of the light and of the day, committing our way unto the Lord. In thy light may we see light clearly, and rejoice in the hope of thy glory. Forgive, O Lord, the sins of this day, and of all our days. We thank thee for the goodness and mercy, thou art still making to follow us. May we lie down this evening and take quiet rest; may no plague come nigh our dwelling, and at whatever time we awake, may we be still with God. Let thy mercy, O God, be still on us, as we hope in thee. And to thy name, in Christ Jesus, shall be everlasting praise. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XXXII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The conduct of the Israelites at the foot of Sinai, reminds us that a spiritual worship is not congenial to the human heart, that carnal man is constantly corrupting true religion, by altering, adding to, or taking from it, with the view of accommodating it to his own passions. Ver. 5. It is worthy of being carefully considered, that the feast held at the making and setting up of the golden calf, was declared to be a feast to Jehovah. They thus professed to worship God by means of the golden image, not to worship the image itself. It was used by them 'merely as a help to their devotions,' just as the Roman Catholic uses images, 'to help his devotions;' yet the Lord declared their conduct to be idolatry, and he abhorred and treated it accordingly. Thus all use of images in his worship is an abomination to the Lord. Nothing is more offensive to God, or more ruinous to mankind, than to misunderstand and misrepresent his character, and pollute his service. This is the fountain of all evil in the world. Men like not to retain God in their knowledge, and he gives them up to vile affections. Ver. 10, 14. In regard to his designs and dealings, God often speaks to us after the manner of men; as when he threatens to punish, and then repents of his purposes, and turns from them. Such language describes the change in his outward dealings, but intimates no change in his secret counsels. Ver. 19. The manner in which Moses broke the tables of the law, intimates that the Israelites had, as we all have, broken the law itself. Ver. 11—13. The promises of God to his people, the works already performed in their behalf, and the reproach which their ruin, however deserved, would bring upon his cause, and such like arguments, are suitable and powerful in the mouths of those who are interceding for the church. Ver. 20. Sinners shall be made to eat of the fruit of their own ways, and be filled with their own devices. Ver. 21—24. The excuses offered for sin, are to the last degree, weak and untenable. Ver. 25—29. In times of general defection, the few faithful among the many faithless, shall have high honour, as well as trying duties put upon them; and they must not shrink from doing the Lord's work, at whatever sacrifice. Ver. 30—32. A devoted servant of God is ready to make every sacrifice but that of his soul's salvation, for the spiritual welfare of those to whom he is endeared by the ties of kindred or of grace. Ver. 33—35. Though the Lord forgives his erring people, he still chastens them for their sin, to keep it in remembrance, and to make them walk humbly all their remaining days upon the earth.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

It is a melancholy fact regarding the church of God, regarding the separate sections of the church, and regarding almost every individual believer, that short and passing seasons of revival have been almost always followed by speedy backslidings and decays. How astonishing to contemplate the vanishing nature of the impressions made on most of us by all the sacred ordinances which we observe, and by all the solemn and instructive events of divine providence towards us. We read, or hear the word, and forget it. We confess our sins to God, and go away to commit them over again. We dedicate ourselves to his service, and give ourselves up to the practice of sin. We even sit at his holy table, and then return with the dog to his vomit, and with the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire. We recover from affliction, and still trifle with eternity. We see death ploughing down our neighbours, and friends, and still do not consider our latter end. The Lord alone can fix our hearts in his service, and make them right with himself, and steadfast in his covenant; he only can keep our affections set on things above.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the King of glory. Thou art clothed with light which no man can approach unto, and live. We thank thee for the revelation which thou hast given of thy character and will, both in the works of thy hand, and in the word of thy grace. We especially praise thee for having made thyself known to us, as God, in Christ, reconciling us to thyself, and not imputing our trespasses unto us. We lament that such slight and passing impressions have been made by these discoveries, on our minds. Our understandings are still darkened by error and sin. Our hearts are awfully dead to the awakening truths of thy word. We remain strangely insensible of our condition toward thee, and the eternal world. There is in us a mournful want of true relish for thy service. And even when we draw near to thee with our mouths, and honour thee with our lips, our hearts continue, or soon depart, far from thee. After all our approaches to thy throne of grace, and all the manifestations given to us of thy glory, and all the professions which we have made of repentance, and love, and new obedience, we have been still turned aside by a heart that is deceitful above all things, and grievously infirm, and we have straightway forgotten all thy mercies, and all our solemn engagements to be thine. Lord, enter not into judgment with us. Let it repent thee concerning thy servants. Satisfy us early with thy mercies. May we know and see, that it is an evil and a bitter thing, thus to have forsaken the Lord our God. Humble us under thy mighty hand. Exalt us in the righteousness and strength of Jesus. Blessed Redeemer, we look to thee to enlighten us by thy word and Spirit, to give us peace through the blood of thy cross, to purify our heart by the inworking of thy grace, to save us by thy mighty power from the hand of all our enemies. Lord prevent us from attempting to serve thee longer with a double mind. Give us truth in our inward parts. Bring us over to thy side; that we may no longer try to serve God and mammon, and continue halting between two opinions; but follow thee fully, and serve thee in sincerity and truth. O Lord, enable us to keep our hearts with diligence, for out of them are the issues of life. Set a watch before the door of our lips, that we offend not against thee. May we ponder the path of our feet, and be companions of them that fear thee. Be at our right hand, and at our left, that we may not be moved; may we live in the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit. Dwell within us O holy and gracious Sanctifier and Comforter, that we may live every hour for eternity, and be found meet for the kingdom and glory of the Lord. We pray for thine own blessing to each member of this family, for abundant grace to all the families of thy people, for comfort to the afflicted, succour to the tempted, and eternal life to those who are passing through the valley and shadow of death. We pray for the coming of thy kingdom of grace in the hearts of all men, that thy will may be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. And now, Lord, receive us graciously and love us freely, accept our thanksgivings for the mercies of the past night, and of this morning. Keep us in thy fear throughout this day. Preserve us by thy mighty power through faith unto salvation, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXIV. 3—6.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. In describing where and how the disciples would find a colt ready for his use, Jesus showed both his omniscience and his power over the hearts of men. His entrance into Jerusalem displayed his steadfast love to his Father, and to his own people, in not shrinking from the sufferings awaiting him; his humility in the outward circumstances in which he was contented to appear; and, at the same time, his glory in the homage which he received from the applauding and enraptured multitude. Ver. 9, 10. The term hosanna means, 'Save, we beseech thee.' The hosannas with which the people welcomed and accompanied Jesus, at his entrance into Jerusalem, were an acknowledgment that he was the long expected Messiah, Saviour, and King. Ver. 11. He entered the temple as one that claimed supreme authority over it, as he, in fact, to whom it belonged, and who had long been worshipped in it. Ver. 15. And next day, having gone into it again, he repeated the act which, Matthew seems to say, he performed also the day before. (Matt. xxi.) He cast out of it, and cleansed it from, the buyers, and sellers, and money changers, who had turned it into a house of merchandise, and a den of thieves. And he thus purified his temple, to show his authority and intention to make a speedy and effectual reformation of his church on earth. Ver. 14. By cursing the barren fig-tree, Jesus warned his disciples of the doom about to overtake the unbelieving Jews, and all fruitless professors in his church. Ver. 20—23. He instructs them that by faith they too might do even greater works, even remove mountains. Ver. 24. Such power from God, however, was to be expected only in answer to fervent and believing prayer. Ver. 25, 26. And no prayer could be heard, unless those who offered it showed their conscious unworthiness, their conscious need of mercy from God, whom they had offended so greatly, by showing or cherishing a forgiving spirit toward any who might have offended them. Ver. 27—33. Great was the wisdom of Jesus' answer to those who questioned his authority. They dared not to deny that John had his commission to baptize from heaven. And yet they could not own the commission of John to be from heaven without admitting the force of John's testimony to the Messiahship of Jesus. When the enemies of Christ first determine to reject his word, and then seek plausible objections to it, instead of directly answering their unreasonable cavils, it is often better to point out some palpable inconsistency in their own sentiments or conduct, so as to shame them into silence, or even lead them to condemn themselves, and seek deliverance from the judgments which they have been provoking God to pour upon them.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us stand in awe of Jesus, who knoweth all things, and therefore searcheth our hearts, and trieth our reins. We ought also to adore him, as the king of glory and the prince of peace. Jesus is still walking up and down in the midst of his churches, to observe the character and conduct of those who fill them. Are we trees of righteousness, planted by his hand, and bearing fruit to his praise? or are we mere cumberers of the ground, barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord? As he came to his temple, and drove the buyers and sellers out of it, so he is coming again to shut out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity; and we cannot escape, unless we are now really spiritual worshippers, and living temples of God. This however we are, if we truly believe in God, and in his Son, Jesus Christ; if we live a life of prayer; and if we manifest our dependence on the mercy and grace of God, by showing a spirit of mercy and love to all around us. Instead of attempting to stand out in opposition to the will and gospel of Jesus, and to justify such enmity, let the language both of our hearts, and lips, and lives be, 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?' Make me willing in the day of thy power, to serve thee in the beauties of holiness.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou rulest over all. The earth is thine, and the fulness thereof, the world, and they that dwell therein. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; to make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom. Lord, we bless thee and magnify thy name for coming into this world of sin and misery, and dwelling among us, God manifested in the flesh. We bless thee for all the tokens thou didst give us of thy condescension and love as well as of thy greatness. O Father, we remember, with faith and thankfulness, the humiliation of thy Son, his works of power and mercy, his obedience unto death. We praise thee, O Lord Jesus, for having come in the name of the Lord to save us. Thou hast set up thy kingdom on the earth, and art gathering into it a faithful people. O establish thy reign of grace in our hearts, producing righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. This evening we look back on our past lives, and confess, with shame and sorrow, our procrastination, our backslidings, and our obstinate continuance in sin, the iniquity of our thoughts, and words, and actions, our unholy tempers and habits, our earthliness, and pride, and folly, our neglect of commanded duty, our commission of forbidden sin. We are little better than cumberers of the ground, and yet we beseech thee, merciful God, to spare us, till, by thy grace working in us, we recover strength before we go hence and be no more in this world. Great has been thy long-suffering toward us. Let it prove our salvation. Fill us with repentance and faith in Jesus. O may we seek thee with all our heart, and find thee as the hearer of prayer. Cleanse our hearts from every unholy passion which would separate between God and our souls. Spread the spirit of truth, and holiness, and peace through the church. So make thy way to be known upon the earth, and thy saving health among all nations. Have mercy on our kindred. Convert the unconverted among them, and bless, with increasing grace, and usefulness, and joy, such of them as do believe. Reward our benefactors. May they find mercy with the Lord in that day. Forgive our enemies, and dispose us to love them, and as much as lieth in us, to live at peace with all men. Draw near with thy compassion and effectual aid to the sick, and sorrowful, and dying. In the multitude of their thoughts, may they be visited and sustained by the consolations of thy Spirit. O look down in mercy on this house, and visit with thy salvation all its inmates. May we lie down in thy fear, and rest under the shadow of thy wings. And if thou art pleased to spare us through the sabbath that is so nigh, O may we not spend it so unprofitably as many have been spent, that are for ever gone; but may we spend it wholly in thy service, in private and in public, and so become meet to do and to bear thy holy will here, and to dwell in thy presence for ever. And all that we ask is only for the sake of Christ, our strength and Redeemer. Amen.

TENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXII.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. That man, and that man alone, is truly and necessarily happy whose transgression is removed by the sacrifice of Christ, whose sin is covered by the blood of atonement, to whom the Lord no longer reckons iniquity, but rather manifests his mercy, and whose heart, delivered by divine grace from all malice, guile, hypocrisy, and envy, is right with God, and becoming stedfast in his covenant. Yet the blessedness of such a state is little felt, or valued and sought after by us. Most men are pining away in their iniquities, and contented to remain so. Ver. 3, 4. The wretchedness of the man who is wasted by the guilt and power of that sin which he is aware of, and yet refuses to acknowledge and forsake, is most strikingly and affectingly shown. How true it is that he who covereth his sins shall not prosper. This is the melancholy condition of not a few. They cannot go on at their ease in sin, and in departing from God, yet they will not return from broken and empty cisterns to the fountain of living waters. They keep silence, refusing to come to the throne of grace to spread out their whole case before the Lord, and plead for deliverance. And, therefore, their consciousness of guilt, and their fear of divine anger, continue pressing heavily upon their minds, extort from them many a fruitless groan, and make them feel as if scorched by the drought of summer. Ver. 5. In such circumstances of guilt and distress, the first step to peace is unreserved confession of sin. This leads to immediate, solid, and lasting tranquillity of mind. When we come to God in this manner, and pour out our heart before him, and make the Most High, the holy, the merciful One, our refuge, looking to him as 'God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them,' then we experience a sudden and comfortable relief. We have peace through the blood of the cross, and begin to go on our way rejoicing. Ver. 6, 7. When we contemplate the graciousness of God, his readiness to pardon, as shown in his dealings with the repenting suppliant, we will, if we have any fear or love of God in our hearts, be induced and encouraged to come to him, in like manner, in our guilt, weakness, and distress, that we may, in our turn, taste and see that he is good, and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them that call upon him. And every one who thus flies into the 'strong hold,' that is ready to receive the 'prisoners of hope,' finds himself safe from all the evils which overwhelm the wicked, and praises the Redeemer for 'compassing him about with songs of deliverance.' Ver. 8. Such also have the promise and the experience of being guided, day after day, through all perplexities and dangers, by the word and Spirit; and are thus qualified to counsel and help forward, in the way of life, their weak, ignorant, and erring brethren. Ver. 9, 10. A teachable, submissive, obedient frame of mind is indispensable, however, in the case of all who would experience this pardon, deliverance, direction, and peace. The unsanctified and rebellious in heart or life, must continue miserable, and lie down at last in sorrow, and make their bed in hell. They only who live, trusting and encouraging themselves in the Lord, shall be compassed about with his mercy at all times, and on every side. Ver. 11. Let, then, such as are accepted in the Beloved, and love him and his followers, with a pure heart, fervently, rejoice evermore in this testimony of their conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, they have their conversation in the world.

PRAYER.

O Lord, this is the day which thou hast made to keep in remembrance the finished work of Jesus, whereby he made reconciliation for iniquity, and brought in an everlasting righteousness. He died for our offences, and rose again for our justification. By raising him from the dead on the morning of this first day of the week, thou hast given a perpetual testimony that his work, in behalf of all that believe, is accepted, and that in him they have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of thy grace. O Lord, we beseech thee, for Christ's sake, make us to know this day the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered; to whom thou imputest not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile. Lord, we acknowledge that we have many a time restrained prayer, and refused to spread out our whole condition before thee. We have confessed our sins without forsaking them. We have prayed for thy favour and still cleaved for happiness to other things. O Lord, it is righteous in thee to hide from us the light of thy countenance, to deny us thy grace, and to leave us under guilt and corruption, while we trifle with thy majesty and holiness, and regard iniquity in our hearts. We bless thee that when we confess our sins, thou art faithful and just to forgive them, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. We come before thee, this morning, O Lord, to pray that we ourselves may be enabled to see and confess our real state and character in thy sight. We would pour out our hearts before thee, and make the Most High our refuge. We would seek thee while thou art to be found, and call upon thee while thou art near. We would forsake every wicked way and every unrighteous thought, and return to the Lord for mercy and abundant pardon. We draw nigh to thee, O Lord, to confess our sins. Draw nigh to us to forgive them. Fill us with the spirit of repentance, as an evidence that thou hast granted us remission. Show us Christ's glory, as an evidence that the Father has revealed his Son in us, and accepted us in the Beloved. Melt down our hearts in thy presence, as an evidence that thou art sitting as a refiner and purifier over us. Fill us with longings after thee, as thou art seen by thy people in the sanctuary, and found in the ordinances of grace, that we may thus know that thou hast begun a good work in us, and wilt perform it until the day of Christ. Be graciously present with all the congregations of thy people this day. Clothe thy priests with salvation, and cause thy people to shout aloud for joy. Let this be a great day of the Son of man, a day of the Redeemer's power, to make many willing to serve him in the beauties of holiness. Enable us to keep it all holy unto thee. Preserve us from thinking our own thoughts, from finding our own pleasure, from speaking our own words. May this day be to us not a weariness, but a day of rest, a time of refreshing from thy presence. We pray, O Lord, for our friends. Impart thy grace to save their souls. We pray for our enemies. Forgive them. Fill us with a forgiving and charitable spirit. Heal the sick. Prepare the dying for eternity. And as we know not what a day or an hour may bring forth, O teach us to-day, while it is called to-day, to harden not our hearts, but to hearken to thy voice. Let this day be a time in which thou shalt be found of us, O Lord. Sanctify us in soul, body, and spirit for thy service. Pardon all our sins; and accept of our persons and services, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xxxiii. 18.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM xxxiii.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. God is the fountain of his people's joy. 'All our springs are in thee.' And it well becomes those whom he has not only justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, but by his indwelling Spirit rendered upright in heart and life before him, it well becomes them to spend their days, not in sorrow, but in gladness, not in unbelieving or unthankful mournings, but in holy and grateful praise. Ver. 3. Singing the new song of the ransomed, for redeeming love, is to be their special exercise. The grounds of their praise are manifold. Ver. 4. The doctrines and commandments, the promises and threatenings of his word, are all in harmony with one another, worthy of his absolute perfections, and suitable to our present condition and future prospects. And all his works, and providential dealings, are in perfect unison with his nature, purposes, and revelations. Ver. 5. In his word, and works, especially in his plan and work of redemption, we see mercy and truth met together, righteousness and peace kissing each other. While for Christ's sake, the abundance of his temporal bounty has always filled, and the influences and evidences of his grace shall yet overflow the earth. Ver. 6. By the word of the Lord, and by the breath, or Spirit of his mouth, by the Son and Holy Spirit, Jehovah created the universe at first, is now creating men anew unto good works, and will at length supersede the whole present economy of things by the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Ver. 7. In the wonderful arrangements whereby the waters are kept within the ocean's bed, the Lord has displayed an understanding that is infinite. Ver. 8, 9. He by whom such mighty works are so easily performed, ought to be the object of all men's holy fear, especially when we consider how certainly he frustrates all those counsels which oppose his designs, and fulfils his own wise and holy purposes, in all ages. Ver. 12. How highly favoured were the ancient people in being under the special protection of this great Creator and Disposer of all things! How unspeakably happy are the people whom he forms into a spiritual nation, and interests in all the blessings of his redeeming love! Ver. 13—15. Let us remember that from his dwelling-place on high, he beholds, searches, and controls all the inhabitants of the earth. Ver. 16—17. Let us remember also, that safety cannot be found in any earthly resources, or refuges, such as the numerous armies, or personal strength, or horses used in war, in which such confidence was placed of old. Ver. 18, 19. It is in God alone that our help is found. Such as cherish a child-like reverence toward him, and hope in his mercy, are never lost sight of by him, are delivered from all evil temporal and spiritual; and often, when outward means of safety fail, are wonderfully preserved to the glory of his name. Ver. 21, 22. The saints and faithful in Christ Jesus, are thus induced to look to God, and wait for him that both in his daily providence, and by the visitations of his Spirit, he may guide them in perplexity, strengthen them in difficulty, and save them from danger, and visit them with his mercy.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, we come before thee on this evening of thy holy day, to thank thee for the opportunities which we have had, of waiting on thee, in the public and private exercises of thy worship. Blessed are the people who know the joyful sound. May we be of that happy number. We mourn the weakness of our faith, the coldness of our love, the vanity of our minds, and the earthliness of our conversation. In all things we come short of thy glory. In many things we greatly offend against thee. Yet to whom can we go, but unto thee. O Lord, thou only hast the words of eternal life. May we now have access unto thee through Jesus by the Spirit. Fill us with all joy and peace in believing, and cause us to abound in hope by the power of the Holy Ghost. Remember not against us former iniquities, O Lord. Remember us rather with the favour which thou bearest unto thine own. O visit us with thy salvation, that we may see the good of thy chosen; that we may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that we may glory with thine inheritance. We would sing a new song unto thee for the salvation wrought out for us by Jesus, and now applied to the soul by the Holy Spirit. We praise thee, O Lord God, for the truth and righteousness, the wisdom and mercy, the power and sovereignty, displayed in creation and providence, and especially in the work of redemption. We would celebrate these thy perfections, with reverence and love, with faith and thankfulness. And we pray that these holy tempers and dispositions may be awakened and nourished in us and in others, by all the manifestations of thy glory, which thou hast given to us in the work of thy hands, and the word of thy grace. We magnify thy mercy and grace, O God of salvation, for all the good done this day to the souls of men. Let the ordinances that have been administered and observed, be still accompanied with an abundant blessing, for the conversion of sinners, and the building up in holiness and comfort, of all that believe. Fill the whole church of God on earth with the spirit of truth, and holiness, and unity. Regenerate this depraved and wretched world. Stand by, and render successful in their labours, thy devoted servants, who are preaching the gospel in distant lands. Hasten the time, when heathen idolatry, and Mahometan delusion, and Popish superstition, and Protestant lukewarmness, and the infidelity that abounds, alas, in countries called Christian, shall vanish before the Sun of righteousness, rising on all lands, with healing in his beams! Bless the land in which we dwell. May our earthly sovereign rule in thy fear, and be protected and prospered by thy favour. May all who are in authority over us have a spirit of judgment from the Lord of hosts, when they sit in judgment. Bless the ministers of Christ, and may their flocks hear and obey the voice of the good Shepherd. May parents train up their children in the ways of godliness. May masters give to their servants what is just and equal. May servants study to honour Christ in all things. Bless all who are dear to us. Our relatives do thou bring within the bond of the covenant. Sanctify both their mercies and their trials for the good of their precious souls. Our friends and companions, whether around us, or in distant parts, we commend to thee and the word of thy grace. And for the house in which we dwell, we pray, that thy fear may be in every heart and before every eye. Our sabbaths are passing away; prepare us for the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Be our God and guide even unto death, and our portion for ever, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XXXIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. What are all the blessings of the covenant to the Jew or to the Christian without the presence of the God of the covenant? What would the land of Canaan, although it flowed with milk and honey, have been to the Israelites, even if an angel had been sent to drive out their enemies, if the God of Israel refused to dwell there, and to cause the joy and glory of his presence to be realized? Would heaven be heaven to the man of God, would the New Jerusalem be the better country to the Christian, although its twelve gates were twelve pearls, and the foundation of its wall garnished with all manner of precious stones, and the street of the city pure gold, as it were transparent glass, although there the wicked ceased from troubling and there the weary were at rest, if the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb were not its temple, if the glory of the Lord did not lighten it, and the Lamb whom he loves was not its everlasting light? What is heaven, what is earth, without the presence of him of whom the believer has learned to say, with all his heart, 'Whom have I in heaven but thee; and there is none on earth that I desire besides thee?' You see the punishment of the people's sin: 'I will not go up in the midst of thee.' 'Put off thine ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.' This, like the command to cover themselves with sackcloth, is a call to repentance. Ver. 7—11. Behold the fulfilment of the threatening of God. The tabernacle is put 'without the camp,' nay, 'afar off from the camp.' The tabernacle was not only the type of the 'tabernacle of God' in the New Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 3. but, like the temple, the residence of God, in which he manifested his glory, and admitted the people, through their mediator, to personal communion. Exod. xxv. 8.; xxix. 43, 45, 46. Ver. 12—17. Moses, who was alone treated as the friend of God, solicits, for the people's sake, the restoration of God's presence, and knowledge of God's 'way,' pleading God's own promise, 'Thou ast said,' and God's covenant with the people, 'Consider that this nation is thy people.' God's answer is explicit and gracious, ver. 14. 'My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest.' This is God's 'way,' in which he fulfils the promise of the covenant. Mark how different, in the end and in the means, from man's way. There is no other way which leads to 'rest,' and apart from God, without the presence of God, there is no solid, no soul-satisfying rest. Is not this enough? For himself, enough: 'I will give thee rest;' but Moses (ver. 15, 16.) sues for the people with himself. What a suit! Better to die in the wilderness than live even in the promised land without the presence of God! Who will now say that the Jews looked only to carnal things and temporal promises? Being in this also accepted he is emboldened to ask greater things than this. Ver. 18. 'I beseech thee, show me thy glory.' A petition worthy of the 'man of God.' The meekest, the most humble of men presents the highest, the boldest petition. But had not Moses already seen the glory of God? Had he not been forty days on the mount, and seen God there in a glory so transcendent and terrible that even he said, (Heb. xii.) 'I exceedingly fear and quake?' What, then, is the glory of God? Mark it well, sinners; hear God himself proclaiming the truth. Ver. 19. It is his goodness that is his glory; it is, you see here, in his goodness, his grace, his mercy, that he is glorious. As a lawgiver and as a judge, holy, just, and almighty, Jehovah is glorious, and it was the glory of his holiness, his justice, and his power, that Sinai in its terrors, addressed to the eye and ear, as well as in its proclamation of the law of righteousness unfolded; but it is goodness, inspiring not terror but love and confidence, it is grace, it is mercy, sovereign and free to all, attracting, winning, not repelling the worshipper, that is the proclamation of Jehovah's name, in which his glory is manifested in the covenant to sinners on earth. His glory is mercy meeting with truth or faithfulness, and righteousness kissing, consistent with peace. Psalm lxxxv. 9, 10. Ver. 20—23. All that man can see and live, Moses is permitted to see.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. Behold the real source of blessedness or of misery, the enjoyment or the non-enjoyment of the presence of God. That is the real, the radical distinction between nation and nation, between church and church, between man and man. The world, the man of the world, cannot live with God; the flock of Christ, the man of God, cannot live without God. O God, withdraw not from us. 2. Learn the duty and the proper disposition of a nation, a church, a congregation, a family, or an individual deprived of the presence of God. Humbled before God, humbled to repentance, stripped of their ornaments, let them see what they have done, what God, unless they repent, is about to do. Is this our case? 3. If this be your condition or the state of those around you, without God, pray as Moses prayed. Let the example of Moses especially teach us two things. First, What we should ask, and how. 'Show me thy way,' the way of thy covenant, precepts, providence, people, peace. 'Show me thy glory' in thy way, in thy Son. Second, How much we should expect to receive. Moses' effectual fervent prayer, for himself and for the people, availed much. How should we then pray in faith, now when Christ, 'the brightness of God's glory,' has died and risen from the dead, and the Spirit of Christ, who ever liveth to make intercession for us, is promised to reveal his glory, and his covenant and way to all that will.

PRAYER.

God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, let our prayer be accepted in thy sight, for the sake of our Mediator and Intercessor within the veil. May his Spirit, promised to help our infirmities, teach us, assembled before thee this morning, what we should pray for, and how we should pray as we ought. We thank thee that in Christ thou hast revealed the brightness of thy glory to us, so that in Jesus, as he lived and died, we behold thee, the God of our salvation. O God, may we see our need of thy perpetual presence to guide and guard us in the right way, to lead us through the wilderness, give us victory over our enemies, and bring us, saved and made meet for glory, into the mansions in the land of promise, which Christ is preparing for saints. Above all, may our hearts be so moulded, according to the tenor of thy covenant, that we shall learn, in spirit and in truth, the prayer of Moses, the man of God, "Show me thy way. Show me thy glory. If thy presence go not with us, lead us not up hence." May we see, may we all remember this day, that it is by thy presence, and the mighty work of thy Spirit within us, that we are separated from the world, or enjoy the privileges or walk worthy of the vocation of the people of God. If we are deprived of the light of thy countenance, or see others around us living without God and without Christ in the world, let us not rest, let us give thee no rest, till we plead in faith the promises of thy covenant, and receive the answer of peace. Lord our God, may we be humbled to repentance, when we see so little evidence of thy peculiar presence in our own souls, in the lives of those around us, in our nation, or in the administration of the ordinances dispensed in thy church. In this spirit may we be stirred up to pray fervently, and watch and wait for the out-pouring of the Spirit from on high, the revelation of thine arm, and the manifestation of thy power. Accept our united thanksgiving for the rest of the night, and enable us, during this day, to live to thee and walk with thee, for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 129.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XII. 1—27.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—12. You perceive that Christ is not contented to act on the defensive, or let the unconverted Jews and their rulers, when they were not immediately opposing his truth, alone. He speaks 'against them,' and so plainly that they see it is against them that his words are directed. The parable which predicts their rejection and destruction, is intended to intimate the causes of their punishment, their abuse of their peculiar privileges, maltreatment of the prophets sent to call them to repentance, and rejection of Christ. God, on account of their obstinate unbelief, gave the kingdom of heaven to the Gentiles, bringing them into the place of the rejected Jews, whose opposition he thus made, in the depth of his wisdom, the means of accomplishing his purposes, fulfilling his prophecies, and manifesting his glory. So enraged were the chief priests and scribes, when they heard this parable, that if they had not been restrained by the fear of the people, they would have laid hold of Jesus, and dragged him to death. What they could not do by force they attempted by fraud. Ver. 13—17. If Jesus had said it is lawful to give tribute to Cesar, he must have excited the people to be his enemies, who would have considered him an impious traitor, betraying, like the Herodians, his country's liberty and the cause of God. The pharisees would then, with the people on their side, have effected his destruction. Had he said it is not lawful, the Herodians would have accused him to the Roman governor, as an encourager of sedition and rebellion. This was the dilemma. His answer, which shows that civil and religious rights do not interfere with one another, confounded and rebuked both the Herodians and the pharisees. Their plot was defeated: they could not lay hold of his words. Ver. 18—27. The sadducees, a sect of free-thinkers and free-livers, were the opponents of the pharisees on religious, as the Herodians were on political, grounds. Christ, while he annihilates their pretended objection, and exposes their gross ignorance, takes occasion to show that Moses, to whom they appealed, had taught that there is, after death, a future state of existence. In denying a future state and a resurrection, therefore, the sadducees were chargeable with fearful heresy and infidelity.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. Mark, on the one side, the conduct of Christ toward the Jews, and let that be the example which you imitate in your intercourse with the world. By silence, if that had been prudence, he could have avoided their displeasure; but, with all the divine wisdom which shines so glorious in these interviews, he had too much love to the souls of sinners to lull them, even tacitly, by the manner in which he associated with them, into the delusion that they were, as they imagined, heirs of salvation. Hence he was hated, persecuted, crucified. If we do not contradict the world, if we conform to its course, if, by treating its votaries as our friends, we cherish the damnable delusion that they are the friends of Christ and of God, it is not wonderful that we are not exposed to 'the contradiction of sinners,' that we are treated by the world as friends, or not treated as enemies. Such conformity to the world is denial of Christ. Never will the church be separated, as she ought to be, from the world, nor Christians like Christ, until the true members of the church show, on all occasions, their sense of the sin and misery of those who are not believers, who are without Christ, and their abhorrence of all that is opposite to Christian holiness. 2. Mark, on the other side, the treatment which Christ received from the world. Mark it, that in his sufferings you may behold his love, and expect the same treatment. It was deadly hatred which his conduct excited. This is still the spirit of the world toward Christ. How few have we among us who are not opposing and crucifying Christ; some in the spirit of the pharisees, others of the Herodians, others of the sadducees. 3. Mark what Christ says to these men, and through them to us. First, He denounces their doom unless they renounce the course of the world, and, repenting of their sin, receive him as their Saviour and Lord. To us the kingdom of God is preached by his servants. We are now the vineyard of the Lord. If we are like the Jews in their sin, despisers of Christ, our punishment shall be like theirs, and beyond theirs, tremendous. Secondly, He says, Render to God all that is God's, and to Cesar, 'the powers that be,' what is theirs. Piety and patriotism are never at variance, never separate. There is no patriotism without piety. Thirdly, Live not as the sadducees, but as one to whom life and immortality have been brought to light, as an heir of the kingdom of heaven, mortifying your members that are on the earth.

PRAYER.

God of grace, who hast loved us with an everlasting love, and given thy Son to be the propitiation for our sins, help us, this evening, to glorify thy name. We thank thee that thou hast, from the beginning, revealed thy name and will in the covenant of grace to the church, and above all, that in the fulness of time thou didst manifest thy love to the world, in giving thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. We believe that he was wounded for our transgressions. Lord, may the Spirit which he has promised to send forth, take of the things of Christ, revealed in thy word, and so reveal them to our souls that the love of Christ shall be shed abroad on our hearts. May we know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings. Enable us, while we profess to be his disciples, to imitate his example. In our intercourse with the world, may we walk as he walked. Let us not deceive ourselves by imagining that the offence of the cross has ceased. May we be prepared, as our Master, to experience the devil's temptations, and to meet that enemy in the world, both as a roaring lion seeking to devour, and as a serpent to beguile and ensnare us. O give us grace, while we deal faithfully with sinners, to walk as Christ did in wisdom toward those that are without, and to be able always to render a reason of the hope that is in us. Impress the instructions of his word upon our hearts. May we see how precious are the privileges by which we are distinguished, and how great the national and personal responsibility connected with these. Enable us to render unto thee the things that are thine, and to those in authority over us the honour and obedience that is due. Let us realize the character of heirs of the kingdom of God; and while we live on earth, may we have our conversation in heaven. Forgive, for Christ's sake, the sins of this day. For thy goodness in providence we glorify thee with the gratitude of faith, and we pray that when we retire to rest we may be defended, during the night, from danger and temptation, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLV. 7.

SCRIPTURE—EXODUS XXXIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—9. God is about to manifest his 'glory' to Moses, in answer to his prayer, and that manifestation he connects with the restoration of 'the tables of the covenant,' which were broken by Moses, when he saw the people worshipping their calf. Jehovah is here renewing his covenant with the people after their sin, and every word in the proclamation of Jehovah's name, as well as the outward circumstances, and the occasion of his appearance, proclaims, that it was the covenant of grace, into which he was entering with the Jews under the Old Testament, and the same which is revealed to us in the New. The gospel itself, as revealed in the New Testament, does not contain a more explicit and copious declaration of the grace of God; nor, if this proclamation is viewed as the answer to the prayer of Moses, a more emphatic intimation, in terms express and incontrovertible, that the glory of Jehovah, as revealed in the covenant, is the glory of his grace, in the light of which all his other perfections are magnified. Epithet upon epithet, each more expressive of grace than the preceding, is applied to Jehovah, in order to give the sinner full confidence in his love and willingness to save to the uttermost, and the chief of sinners encouragement to come and enter freely into covenant. The effect of the revelation of the glory of God to the soul is, as the example of Moses shows, to awaken desire, which is breathed in the prayer of faith, of the blessings of the covenant. Ver. 10—28. God's answer to the prayer of Moses is the covenant of which the promises and requirements are here recited. On his part, he promises to drive out their enemies, and to manifest his presence and peculiar favour by a course of providence, which would be acknowledged to be his immediate work. These promises are urged as reasons for their obedience to his commandments; the ten commandments, which, with the others given here, are expressly declared, ver. 28. to be 'the words of the covenant.' This then is the light in which the ten commandments ought to be viewed. They are, like the precepts of the New Testament, the requirements of the covenant of grace, addressed to those who are partakers of the promises, and to be performed by a believer, knowing the name of Jehovah, as a service of love, of liberty, and of gratitude, to a reconciled God. Although the form of the revelation is different, it is the same covenant, both in the promises and in the commandments, that is addressed to us. Ver. 29—35. Moses returning from the sight of God's glory, was obliged to veil his face. It was the glory of Christ with whom he had held communion, that shone in his face. Christ was the glory of the Mosaic covenant, to those who saw the end from the beginning, (2 Cor. iii.) but there was a veil upon the heart of most of the Jews: their minds were blinded so that Christ was not recognized, and the true nature of the covenant, both in its promises and in its commandments, misapprehended and lost sight of.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. That veil referred to here, is done away in Christ. To us is revealed God, manifest in the flesh, in 'the brightness of his glory,' Jesus Christ. There you see God, unveiled as he is, in the infant of Bethlehem, the man who went about doing good and healing diseases, the man of sorrows, who, on the cross, to which he was brought by the malice of ungodly enemies, prayed for his murderers. In him behold your God. 2. In this glorious and gracious character, God is seen and heard proclaiming to us the covenant of grace. View both the promises and the commandments of that covenant in the light of Christ, the risen Saviour, the conqueror of the devil, the world, sin, and death. As the Canaanites, &c. were devoted to destruction, and the Israelites obtained an assurance of final and full possession of the promised land, so have you, by the resurrection of Christ your covenant head, an assurance of victory over all your enemies, and of eternal life, rest, and blessedness in the kingdom of heaven. Their enemies, wars, victories, possession of the land of promise, are the type and pledge of yours. It was by faith, by faith alone, that they fought and overcame. It is by faith, by a fight of faith alone, that you can overcome the world, or any of your enemies that are in the world. 3. Do you take the two tables of the law, as the words of the covenant, and see in these, as performed by Christ, the duty which you owe to Christ? He is your example and strength. In Christ you see love to God and man exhibited in perfection. That love is the glory of Christ; and that glory is, through the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, to be reflected in you. The more you know Christ, the more brightly will his image be reflected in you. The man who sees his glory, becomes, through its transforming power, like Christ; he is 'a living epistle of Christ, known and read of all men,' that is, a Christian.

PRAYER.

God of grace, we adore thee as the God of glory, and bless thee that in this character, the proclamation of thy name to us is Jehovah, Jehovah God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, forgiving iniquity, and transgression, and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty. We would give thee eternal thanks, that thou hast manifested the glory of thy grace to us, in Christ thy Son, God manifest in the flesh. Enable us to behold him full of grace and truth, the Mediator of the new and better covenant, in which we are brought near to God, and have access, with boldness, into the holiest of all. Day by day may we behold, in his life and death, the grace and glory of the God with whom we have to do; that, comprehending with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height of the love of Christ, we may be filled, through the knowledge of it, with all the fulness of God. O may it be as a covenant God that thou art known, and contemplated in thy word, in thy works, and in thy Son; may every view of thy perfections endear to us both the promises and the commandments of the covenant. May the effect of our knowledge of Christ be the reflection of his image in our lives, so that we manifest the same supreme love to God and man which he exhibited, whose meat and drink it was to do his Father's will, and who laid down his life to save his enemies. God of our salvation, grant that we and ours may this day, and evermore, be living epistles of Christ, known and read of all men; different from the world in our faith, by which we overcome the world, and glorify thee in our several spheres by a labour of love and patience of hope, in our prayers, in which we hold sweet communion with thee, and in our progress from glory to glory, till in Zion above we appear before thee holy, and without blame in love. Accept our united thanksgiving for the rest of the night, and the blessings and privileges of which, in thy grace, we are this day partakers. Lead us in thy way, defend us from all our spiritual enemies, and give us grace to fulfil the duties and endure the trials to which we are called, so as to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour. Bless the church with which we are connected, and all churches of Christ throughout the earth; and may it be the fervent prayer of our hearts, that thy name, O Father, may be hallowed, thy kingdom come, and thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM CX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XII. 28—44.

REMARKS.

How varied and precious is the instruction conveyed in this portion of the word of life, in its application to practical purposes! Here is presented the sum of our duty in love of the proper kind and degree to God and man, and in immediate succession, the motive to this duty, or the source of this love, the knowledge of the glory of Christ the Saviour, David's Son, and David's Lord, as it is exhibited in the work of salvation, in the humiliation of his earthly, and the glory of his heavenly state. With these glorious and fundamental truths are set before us examples, in the scribes, of pride, selfishness, oppression and hypocrisy, to be avoided as opposite to the law of love, and in the widow, who cast her two mites into the treasury, of faith, humility, self-denial and devotedness to God, to be imitated by us if we would be the disciples of Christ. Ver. 28—34. None but he, who himself gave the law to Moses, could have thus laid his hand upon the pervading principle that animates all its requirements, and in one word unfolded the spirit of the whole to us. Mark the divine wisdom of your Saviour's words. He gives to God the place, and the kind of homage, and the degree that is due to God. Love to God is the first commandment, love with all the heart, since God is one; love which consecrates all the faculties and powers of our nature to God, and proclaims the most energetic exercise of these to be our reasonable service. Like this is the second commandment, 'love thy neighbour as thyself' love him in God, because thou lovest God, selfishness being swallowed up, and self-love kept subordinate to the love of God. Any commandment of the first table of the law which is not obeyed from love to God, and of the second, from love to God and man, is disobeyed, whether external compliance be given or withheld. Love is the image of God, the blessed One, and pure and perfect love is pure and perfect blessedness.

The scribe who knew that love was the fulfilling of the law, and proclaimed this conviction in opposition to the popular creed, and in the presence of his prejudiced and exasperated fellow-scribes, was 'not far from the kingdom of God.' Of that kingdom which is 'righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost,' love is the character by which the citizens are distinguished from the world. Without love there is no righteousness, no peace, no joy in the Holy Ghost, for the first-fruit of the Holy Ghost (Gal. v.) is love. Love, too, is the end of our election in Christ, and of all the blessings bestowed on us in Christ, Eph. i. 3, 4. Faith in Christ worketh by love, and without faith in Christ or beyond the measure of our faith, there is no love either to God or man. The carnal heart is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of love. Ver. 35—37. Why did Christ receive no answer to this inquiry? Because none of the scribes or people knew the glory of Christ. The answer is, Emmanuel; God with us, the Word made flesh, David's Lord born of the seed of David, according to the flesh. Behold the condescension which David's Lord manifested in becoming for us David's Son. 1 John iv. 7—11. Ver. 38—40. 'Beware of the scribes,' &c. Pride is abomination in the sight of God. A proud professor of religion must be a hypocrite. There is no love to God or man in the heart that is the seat of pride and vanity. Although the proud make many prayers, God will not hear. There is no form of pride so disgusting as spiritual pride. Ver. 41—44. All the rest gave of their abundance or superfluity, so that there was no self-denial in the sacrifice which they made; the widow had but two mites, but she gave her all to the God in whom she lived, and confided in his providence and his promise for her support. She loved much. She obeyed the first commandment.

Make the poor widow your example, in her love to God, her faith in God, her self-denial, her humility, her surrender of her all to God. Contrast her with the scribes. It is not learning, theological or secular, that makes man or woman truly great or truly happy in the sight of God. The scribes were learned; the poor widow was most probably one 'who knew, and knew no more, her bible true.' It is not exalted station or honour. The scribes had the front seats, and salutations, and all that marks dignity among men; the poor widow was the humblest in the land. It is not riches. The scribes were rich, the widow had but one farthing which she gave to God. She had not even one mite now left. It is not friends or family comforts. Her husband dead; she had no earthly comforter. Yet, with all their learning, honours, riches, and friends, the scribes were but reserved to 'greater damnation,' while without a friend, without a mite, without honour, learning, or talents, the widow was, in the sight of God, the greatest, the richest, the wisest in the land of Judea. God was her friend, God her portion, God her glory, God her all; and in God, and in the kingdom of God, she was blessed.

PRAYER.

O Lord, who would not glorify thee, who hast said to our Lord, when he ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, and receiving gifts for men, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. We rejoice to hold communion with thee through a risen Saviour, and desire to experience the power of his resurrection. By that may we realize ourselves begotten again to a living hope, and raised with Christ to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us who are kept by the mighty power of God, through faith, unto salvation. Through union to him in his death and resurrection, may we realize ourselves as called to participation in his victory over sin and death, and him that hath the power of death, as blessed with all spiritual blessings among the inhabitants of heaven, to whom, as members of the one family in heaven and on earth, in Christ the universal Head, we are already come; and although our life is at present hid, when he, who is our life, shall be revealed in his glory, without sin unto salvation, may we also be revealed with him in glory. O may we live every day of our appointed time as those who are sealed with the earnest of the inheritance, the Spirit whom he sends forth to the day of redemption. Every day may we experience more of the mighty working of his power, witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God, shedding abroad the love of Christ in our hearts, and enabling us to stand, and having done all to stand, maintaining the fight of faith, and in the spirit of patience obtaining the victory. Father, put thou both the first and great commandment, and that which is like it, into our minds; write thou these, according to the promise of thy covenant, on our hearts, and let them be exemplified more and more in our lives, that we may be holy and without blame before thee in love. May the Spirit enable us to call Jesus, Lord; revealing to us the mystery of godliness, which is not revealed by flesh and blood. By the knowledge of that may we be blessed. Guard us against pride, above all against spiritual pride, against the love and the spirit of the world, against hypocrisy and self-deception; and while, like the poor widow commended by the Saviour, we give all that is ours and ourselves to thee, may we do it as those who know that they are bought with a price, saying, God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified to me, and I to the world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 14.

SCRIPTURE—LEVITICUS VIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter presents a detailed account of the ritual observed, by divine appointment, on the consecration of Aaron and his sons to the office of priesthood, under the ancient Jewish economy. It may perhaps be difficult to determine what is the precise meaning of every particular ceremony that was performed, and of every successive sacrifice that was offered on that solemn occasion; but we can be at no loss to perceive that the whole was graciously designed to serve as a shadow of good things to come, and to direct the faith of the church forward to another priest of an infinitely higher order than Aaron, who should be made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

In perusing this chapter, or any similar portion of the Old Testament scriptures, we should carefully consider, that however unlike the Mosaic economy may be to that of Christ in form, they are not different systems of religion, but merely different dispensations of the same covenant of grace. To the Jewish church was the gospel preached as well as unto us, only with a less degree of clearness and simplicity. They saw afar off, and exhibited in promise, what we behold brought nigh, and realized in performance. The same truth which is presented to our minds in words of simple meaning and literal announcement, was imparted to theirs through the medium of mystical signs and bleeding sacrifices. The Aaronical priesthood had distinct allusion to the Saviour that was to come, in its appointment and consecration; and from Christ alone did the whole system of its services derive all its significance and all its importance.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Repeatedly are we reminded in this chapter, that every circumstance pertaining to the investment of Aaron with the sacred office to which he was raised, was ordered by divine authority: this is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done. And how interesting is it to consider, that as Aaron was called of God to this honour, and did not assume it; so also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. It gives strong confirmation to our faith to be assured, that our Lord Jesus Christ was not only perfectly qualified for the work which he undertook, but divinely commissioned for the performance of it. His appointment to the office of Mediator was the thing which the Lord commanded to be done, and in the execution of all the parts of that office, he could truly affirm, 'I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.' 'Wherefore he is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him: for him hath God the Father sealed.'

With what confidence may we now draw nigh to God, seeing we have such an High Priest as the Lord Jesus Christ, who needeth not daily to offer up sacrifice first for his own sins, and then for the people's, for this he did once when he offered up himself, and then for ever sat down on the right hand of God. Even the most eminent of those who were honoured with the office of priesthood under the law, were men who had infirmity. Aaron and his sons needed purification and pardon themselves, before they could be allowed to minister in the presence of Jehovah on behalf of others: the sacred garments were not to be put on until Moses had brought the priests to the door of the tabernacle, and washed their bodies with pure water. But Jesus possessed really, and by the constitution of his person, that moral purity which belonged to the legal priesthood only emblematically. What they were merely in figure, he was in truth, a high-priest holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners. Let us look to him in the assurance of faith as the Lord our righteousness; and relying on the prevalence of his constant intercession, let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy to pardon and find grace to help in every time of need.

PRAYER.

We bow our knees this morning unto the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named; for unto thee, O Lord, every knee should bow, and every tongue ascribe praise. But where-with shall we come before the Lord, and bow ourselves before the high God? Thy excellency might justly make us afraid; for thou art not a man as we are that we should answer thee, and that we should come together in judgment. We feel that it becomes us to stand in awe of thy majesty, for we are sinful dust and ashes: but we rejoice that we are warranted at the same time to confide in thy mercy; for this has been thy name and thy memorial in all generations, the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious. Thou hast set forth thine own Son, to be a propitiation for our sins, and hast raised him from the dead, and exalted him to glory, to be a perpetual intercessor on our behalf. Him thou hearest always; and because he hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour, thou hast been pleased to declare thy willingness to receive graciously all who come unto thee by him. By him therefore would we now offer the sacrifice of praise to God, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to God in his name. We desire to acknowledge thee as the giver of every thing that contributes to our domestic comfort and happiness. We have to praise thee for the preservation of our lives and health, and for the continued supplies of whatsoever is needful for our bodies, or may be instrumental in furthering the welfare of our souls. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loads us with his benefits, even the God of our salvation. In looking forward to the duties of this day, we humbly plead that sufficient grace may be bestowed, to enable us to discharge them faithfully and fully. Whether we sit in the house, or walk by the way, may we be shielded by thy providence from danger, and restrained by thy grace from sin. Be thou our strong habitation, whereunto we may continually resort. May we walk in the light of thy countenance, and in thy name may we rejoice all the day. Great are thy tender mercies, O Lord; we therefore beseech thee to maintain the cause of the afflicted and the right of the poor. Relieve the fatherless and widow; give food to the hungry, raise those that are bowed down, and heal the broken in heart. May the Lord fulfil the desires we have now so imperfectly expressed, and do for us above all that we are able to ask, for the sake of his own Son, our Saviour. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII. 26.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The divine mission of our Lord Jesus Christ is attested not only by the numerous miraculous works which he performed, but by the distinct prophetic annunciations which he made from time to time, regarding the events that were to befall the Jews as a church and nation; and the success which was to accompany the efforts of his own disciples, in promulgating the gospel throughout the world. One of the most remarkable of these predictions is narrated in the chapter before us, and such is the minute correspondence between the statements here made, and the undoubted facts of Jewish history, that no one can compare them, with an unprejudiced mind, without the fullest conviction that Jesus was as wonderful in counsel as he was excellent in working, and that he was in truth a prophet, mighty in word and deed before God and all the people.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The Lord is governor among the nations, and all his ways are ways of judgment. Whatever subordinate agency may be in operation, at any time, for evil or for good to a people, the permission or appointment of that agency is invariably to be ascribed to God. A nation may be invaded by a foreign enemy, or permitted to enjoy tranquillity in all its borders; it may be torn asunder by civil dissensions, or firmly compacted as one family in the bonds of loyalty and love; it may be groaning under the exactions of rigorous and unjust laws, or rejoicing in the blessing of a mild and equitable government; it may be cursed by the exaltation of the vilest of men into its seats of authority and power, or made happy by the promotion of the wise, the virtuous, and the prudent, but in none of these changes of condition is there any thing accidental. Man may execute his part, in bringing about one or other of those alternate and opposite states, and according to the part which he takes, may be the deserving object of praise or blame; but the freest actions of man are made mysteriously to subserve the purposes of the most wise, and righteous, and holy government of God. It is God who increaseth the nations and destroyeth them. He enlargeth the nations and straiteneth them again. Sometimes he blesseth them so that they are multiplied greatly. Again they are diminished and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow. In all the great changes that are taking place around us, and especially in those changes that may affect our interests as a nation, whether prosperous or adverse, let us look not to second causes merely, but to him whose throne is in the heavens, and who doth according to his will among the inhabitants of the earth. The Jews furnish a most instructive exemplification of the maxim which regulates the divine government towards communities. Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people, and must, sooner or later, bring them to ruin.

PRAYER.

O Almighty God, who art high above all nations, and whose glory is above the heavens, we come together this evening to adore thy sovereignty, to make confession of our sinfulness, and to cast ourselves anew on thy mercy in Christ Jesus. From the place of thy habitation thou lookest upon all the inhabitants of the earth, and exercisest over them a wise, and righteous, and holy providence. Thou considerest all their works, that thou mayest show thyself strong on behalf of the upright in heart, and plentifully reward proud doers, by executing upon them the judgment written. When we look to Jerusalem, the place where thou didst set thy name at the first, and see what thou hast done to it for the wickedness of thy people Israel, we may well tremble for ourselves, lest we also should be cast out of thy sight, and have all our holy things laid waste. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear so is thy wrath. Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger; the Lord shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them. Thou hast dispensed blessings to us in greater profusion than to almost any other nation on the face of the earth. Thou hast blessed us in the city and in the field; thou hast made us plenteous in goods, and in the fruit of our cattle, and in the fruit of our ground, and hast established pure religious ordinances in the land which thou hast given us, that we should be a holy people to show forth thy praise. But, alas, are we not a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters? We have forsaken the Lord; we have provoked the holy One of Israel unto anger; we have gone away backward. How justly mightest thou pour out upon our land the full vials of thy wrath, making us a detestation and a curse, an astonishment and reproach to other nations. If thou shouldest bring an utter desolation upon our state, causing our enemies to ride over our heads, and us to bow submissively to their yoke; if thou shouldest take away from us the judge and the prophet, the honourable man and the counsellor, the cunning artificer and the eloquent orator, and appoint children to be our princes, and babes to rule over us, so that the people should be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour; if thou shouldest make heaps of our cities, and leave our towns without inhabitants; if thou shouldest completely quench the light of thy blessed word, and give us over to the service of dumb idols, or the superstitions of popish ignorance, we should be constrained to acknowledge that thy judgments were righteous, because we have forsaken the covenant of the Lord God of our fathers, and our tongue and our doings have been against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory. But, O Lord, we earnestly deprecate thy displeasure, although our iniquities do testify against us. Whilst we plead that thou wouldest not enter into judgment with us as a family, we would also seek the good of the land in which we dwell. Avert from it, we humbly beseech thee, the infliction of deserved evils; continue towards it the enjoyment of thy wonted kindness. Make us to mourn truly both for our personal sins and for all the abominations that are done in the midst of the land. May we, of this house, ever serve the Lord, and be found in all conditions cleaving to him with purpose of heart. May the knowledge and love of Christ increase in this neighbourhood, and in this nation, and be speedily extended throughout the world. May we abide this night under the shadow of thy wings, and may we awake in the morning with renewed energy of body and mind, and be still with God. We ask all in the name of Christ, to whom, with the Father and the Holy Spirit, the one living God, we desire to ascribe all glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCIX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LEVITICUS X.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

This chapter presents an affecting but most instructive example, of the guilt incurred by profaning the solemn ordinances of God's house, and especially by presuming to draw nigh to him in any other manner, than that which he himself has prescribed. Ver. 1. 'Strange fire;' If these words are to be understood literally, they intimate, that the crime of Nadab and Abihu consisted in kindling the incense not with coals taken from the altar of burnt offering, but from some other place, in opposition, it would seem, to the express command of God. They might conceive that fire was an element which possessed the same essential properties from whatever source it might be derived, and therefore, that it could be of no consequence whether it were taken from a common hearth, or a consecrated altar. God judged otherwise. In ver. 9. we find a command to Aaron and his sons, that they should drink neither wine nor strong drink, when they were to go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they should die there: viz. as Nadab and Abihu had just done. Ver. 12—15. Moses reminds them of their duty, lest this affair should have banished it from their thoughts. Ver. 16—18. The priest's eating the sin offering of the people, might be intended to teach that their sin was in some sort laid upon him, as Christ is said to bear our sins.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How needful is it to have the sanction of divine authority, for every thing that we observe and do in the worship of God. He hath not left the order of his house to be arranged or altered, according to the fickle humours or vain fancies of men; but hath established it by law. No outward performances, however costly in themselves, or splendid and imposing in appearance, can possibly be pleasing to God, if their origin is to be traced to human invention, and their end is to be found merely in the gratifications of human pride and vanity. 'It is a dangerous thing,' Bishop Hall remarks, 'in the worship of God to decline from his own institutions: we have to do with a Being who is wise to prescribe his own worship, just to require what he hath prescribed, and powerful to revenge what he hath not required.' In every act of worship therefore, let us propose to ourselves the question, What mean ye by this service? And let us be sure, that we be able to answer in the words of Moses; 'this is the thing which the Lord hath commanded to be done.' Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear, for our God is a consuming fire. There is something in the thought of having immediate communication with a Being of absolute purity and perfection, and of inconceivable majesty and glory, that when realized, can hardly fail greatly to impress and solemnize the mind. In our acts of worship, it is true we behold no outward manifestations of a divine presence; no luminous cloud fills the temple where we assemble with unapproachable glory, and no awful voice from on high is ever heard to testify the acceptance of our persons, or give us an assurance that our prayers have come up in memorial before God. He, before whom we stand, may in this respect, as in others, be said to be a God who hideth himself. His presence however is real, although his essence be invisible. In the assembly of the saints therefore, great fear is due unto the Lord. 'Honour and majesty are before him, strength and beauty are in his sanctuary. O worship him therefore in the beauty of holiness; fear before him, all the earth. 'A bishop,' saith the apostle Paul, 'must be sober, of good behaviour, and not given to wine. Let ministers of the sanctuary give heed to the injunction that was laid on Aaron and his posterity, for all time to come; that they may not offer strange fire before God, which may devour both them and the people of their charge. What a fine example of resignation under trial does Aaron here exhibit. The desire of his eyes, the children on whom his fondest hopes had rested, are taken from him by a stroke, indicative of the anger of God. But he held his peace. He felt the severity of the dispensation, but he bowed submissively to its equity. However dark it might seem, he was satisfied it must be right, for it was the doing of the Lord.

PRAYER.

O Lord God Almighty, thou art to be feared above all gods, for all the gods of the nations are idols, alike impotent to help their votaries, or to hurt their despisers; but thou hast a mighty arm, strong is thy hand and high is thy right hand; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of thy throne. A fire goeth before thee, and burneth up thine enemies round about. Thou takest pleasure in them that fear thee, and wilt fulfil their desire; but unto the wicked thou sayest, What hast thou to do, to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my name and covenant in thy mouth. We are conscious, O most holy Lord God, that we cannot stand before thee on the ground of personal righteousness. We have neither the clean hands nor the pure heart that would entitle us to a blessing from the Lord. On the contrary, our hearts are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked, and the transgressions of our lives have been more in number than the hairs of our heads. When therefore we stretch forth our hands thou mightest hide thine eyes, and turn a deaf ear to our supplications. Instead of granting our requests, thou mightest righteously cast us away from thy presence, or consume us in thine anger, and cause our blood to be mingled with our sacrifice. But though our sins are sufficiently numerous and heinous to deserve thy displeasure, and to provoke the manifestation of it in the execution of fearful judgments against us, yet do we feel encouraged, through the merits and mediation of our Lord Jesus Christ, to seek thy favour with humble confidence, and to hope in thy mercy. If thou, Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared, and that forgiveness we now humbly ask in his name who died for our sins. Purge us with the blood of the Lamb, and we shall be clean; wash us, and we shall be whiter than snow. Put thy fear into our hearts, that we may not depart from thee. Make us to understand the way of thy precepts; so shall we talk of thy wondrous works. May we remember thy judgments of old, O Lord, and refrain our feet from every evil way. Thou hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes; hold thou us up and we shall be safe, and we will have respect to thy statutes continually. We pray for the peace and prosperity of our country; we also seek the good of thy church. God be merciful unto us, and bless us, that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked. Rid us and deliver us from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood. Fulfil the desire of them that fear thee; exalt the horn of thy people; let the children of Zion be joyful in their king. Be gracious to all the members of this family; with favour do thou compass us as with a shield. Cleanse each one of us from secret faults, and keep us from presumptuous sins. Let integrity and uprightness preserve us. We now wait on thee. Let the words of our mouth and the meditation of our hearts be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XIV. 1—31.

REMARKS.

The evangelist here narrates some of the deeply affecting incidents that occurred in the history of our blessed Lord, immediately previous to the consummation of his sufferings on the cross. The conspiracy of the chief priests and scribes, fully justifies the observation of Solomon, when he says the counsels of the wicked are deceit. These men knew well that Jesus had done nothing worthy of death, and consequently, that it was in vain to seek any real ground of accusation against him; but rather than suffer him to live, they were resolved to sacrifice every principle of honour and conscience, as well as every dictate of religion and humanity. They consulted how they might take him by craft, and put him to death. We are ready to exclaim against the baseness of such conduct; but alas, it is baseness not peculiar to the people of the Jews. In our own day, we may observe the enemies of the cross but too closely following the steps of those priests. Candour, they are aware, would ill serve their purpose in their assaults upon the church of Christ; but they think it not impossible that they may gain their end by craft. They therefore take counsel together against the Lord, and devise deceitful matters against them that are the quiet of the land. Ver. 3—9. That no one can honour Christ, without receiving from him more abundant honour and reward, is a truth beautifully illustrated in the case of the woman, who, in testimony of reverence for his person, and gratitude for his benefits, brake a box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head. To some of the disciples indeed it appeared doubtful, whether this transaction should be regarded as prudent or commendable; but their censures were speedily silenced by this authoritative intimation, 'she hath wrought a good work upon me.' Whatever sacrifices we may make for the sake of Christ, will be duly appreciated, even to the giving of a cup of cold water in his name. Ver. 10, 11. What a solemn caution does the conduct of Judas hold out to all professors of Christianity! He was one of the twelve. He associated with the other apostles in preaching the gospel, and doubtless spake with as much apparent earnestness of the grace and glory of his Master's kingdom as they did; he was with them in their hours of retirement, and seemed to be interested in the conversation, and edified by the prayers of Jesus, as deeply as they were; and it is probable, that in profession of veneration for his character, and attachment to his person, he was outdone by none. But his heart was not right with God, it still went after its covetousness. Though he was numbered with the disciples, and had obtained part of their ministry, he was in reality of the synagogue of Satan. Let us take heed and beware of hypocrisy, and of that covetousness which often leads to it. Ver. 12—21. What satisfactory proof do we here find of the divine nature of our Lord and Saviour. Does he not show himself to be possessed of the attribute of omniscience? Does he not manifest such a minute and accurate acquaintance with the actions and affairs of men, and even with the dispositions of the heart, as can properly belong to God only? In sending two of his disciples into the city, and foretelling the precise spot, and the particular circumstances, in which they should meet a man with whom they had previously been unacquainted; and foretelling, too, the reception he should give them, after they had stated their errand; did he not evince, not only that all things were naked and open to his view, but likewise, that all hearts were in his hand? And was not this also apparent in the accusation, which, in the presence of all the disciples, he brought against Judas? How must that apostate have been confounded when he was made to know that all his actions had been observed, and that the most secret purposes and plottings of his heart were fully understood. Ver. 22—25. If we are disciples of Jesus indeed, let us by all means keep the feast of the Lord's supper. The observance is commanded by the highest authority, and to all who engage with suitable dispositions, it never fails to be accompanied with the highest advantage. Ver. 27—31. There is no knowledge of more importance to the Christian, than the knowledge of himself, and yet there is none of more difficult attainment. If we have it in any good degree, it will make us humble, watchful, prayerful and charitable. If we be destitute of it, we shall easily be lifted up with pride, and continually be liable to fall into the snare of the devil. How little of this knowledge did Peter possess, when he boasted so confidently of his courage and fidelity, and would lean to his own understanding, rather than listen to the faithful caution of his Lord.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou knowest the hearts of the children of men; thou seest all their goings. From thy inspection there is no darkness, nor shadow of death where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves. Kings of the earth and rulers may take counsel together against the Lord, but thine hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee. Gather not our soul with sinners, nor our life with bloody men, in whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is full of bribes; but let integrity and uprightness preserve us, for we wait on thee. May we never withhold good from those to whom it is due, when it is in the power of our hand to do it, but let us not deceive ourselves, by supposing that charity to our fellow-creatures comprehends the whole duty of man. May we be disposed at all times to honour the Lord with our substance, by employing it liberally and cheerfully, in any way that may seem truly fitted to promote the glory of thy name, or the interests of thy kingdom in the world; and however humble our services or sacrifices may be, may we derive encouragement to offer them, from considering the respect which thou hast uniformly manifested unto the lowly. We rejoice to think that we serve a Master who will receive graciously the smallest testimony of our regard for his person, and who will never forget any work or labour of love which we may show towards his name. May we never be ashamed to confess our Redeemer before men; and should the wicked speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against us for thy sake, may it be enough for our encouragement to remember thy promise, Them that honour me, I will honour. O Lord, we would be admonished by the many examples recorded in thy word, of the danger of making shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. May we take heed and beware of hypocrisy, for the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment. Preserve us, O Lord, for in thee do we put our trust. Thou hast delivered our soul from death, wilt not thou deliver our feet from falling, that we may walk before God in the light of the living? We dare not affirm that we will never deny thee in any wise, but we desire, with all humility, to say that it is our fixed purpose, in the strength of thy grace, to cleave to thee and to thy service all the days of our life. Leave us not nor forsake us, O God of our salvation, but do thou preserve our going out and our coming in from this time forth, even for evermore. Thou hast put gladness in our hearts this day, by bestowing upon us many personal and domestic comforts and blessings, for all of which we desire to give thanks. And now we will lay us down in peace and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest us to dwell in safety. Harken to the voice of our supplications, and send an answer in peace, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXVI. 13—19.

SCRIPTURE—LEVITICUS XVI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

To the Israelitish worshipper the ceremonial observances of the day of annual atonement were peculiarly solemn and awakening; and to us, who have, by the gospel of Christ, received a deeper insight into the nature of the principles on which they were founded, they are still full of interest and edification. One of these principles, that of substitution, entered largely into the institutions of the Mosaic law, a remarkable instance of which appears in the dedication of the males of the entire tribe of Levi to the peculiar service of God, in place of the first-born males of all the other tribes. But it was especially in their sacrifices that this principle was recognized, and on the anniversary of atonement the whole services of the day were founded upon it. The victims died as substitutes for those in whose name they were sacrificed, thus publicly declaring that the latter were sinners deserving of death. God appointed this significant rite as an act of confession and penitence, and promised to receive it when offered with suitable feelings, as the means of forgiveness and reconciliation; for, although it was utterly insufficient of itself, yet by being a type of the great atonement, it derived virtue and efficacy from this one true and all-sufficient sacrifice. Hence, the doctrine of atonement or expiation for sin was intimately associated with that of substitution. The minds of men were in this manner, under the Mosaic law, rendered familiar with the leading doctrine of the gospel, and sinners were prepared to receive the substitution and atonement of Christ as their only ground of reconciliation to an infinitely holy and just God. In this sense the law is said by an apostle to be 'a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ.' But while the high priest was, especially on the day of atonement, a type of Christ, he was in every thing infinitely his inferior. This was indicated in various ways, which have been noticed in the epistle to the Hebrews. The high priest, as a sinful creature, offered up an atonement for himself, but Christ made no such atonement, for he was 'without sin.' The high priest frequently resumed his sacrifices; Christ died once for all, and thus 'by one offering perfected for ever them that are sanctified.' In like manner also, the high priest entered yearly into the holy of holies, which was a type of heaven; but Christ, once for all, 'entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.' This remarkable difference is strikingly summed up by Paul in Heb. ix. 24—26.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The doctrine of the atonement is calculated to fill the mind at once with self-abasement and with hope: with self-abasement when we think of the malignity of our sins, which could not be simply pardoned, but required to be expiated; and with hope when we find God so loving the world, that he gave his only begotten Son to death—the death of the cross, that 'whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.' And again, when we turn from the Father to the Son, sentiments still more intense and powerful arise in the mind. That the eternal Son of God should, for our salvation, humble himself to become a man—a man of sorrows!—that he should even subject himself to the wrath of the infinitely holy and just One, due to sinners; that after his ignominious death, he should carry his human nature to heaven, to present himself in that nature before the everlasting throne, as our mediator and advocate,—who can estimate the vastness of this love? What feelings of affection and thankfulness, ought it to excite in the minds of those who are the objects of it! Can a whole life, can eternity itself, spent in his service, make an adequate return?

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father! we bless thee that we who are united by many endearing earthly ties, are, through thy good providence, again permitted to worship at thy footstool. We have been preserved during the silent watches of the night, because thy sleepless eye has watched over us, and thy unwearied arm has upheld us; and we are now permitted to kneel before thee, because thou waitest to be gracious to us. We humbly confess, that we are altogether unworthy of this renewed proof of thy paternal care. But thou art the Lord God, merciful and gracious; and instead of casting us off in thy just displeasure, thou hast continued to surround us with tokens of thy favour, and to encourage us with the most gracious promises. We desire to be grateful for the temporal blessings which thou permittest us to enjoy; and to receive with submission, and even with thankfulness, the afflictive dispensations wherewith thou hast been pleased to visit us, knowing that thou doest all things well; but above all, we would adore and bless thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. O teach us to feel more deeply and more influentially, that there is no other name given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved, but the name of Jesus; that, as we are sinners, we can only come before the throne of thy holiness through the Saviour of sinners. Enable us through thy Holy Spirit to accept of Christ as our substitute, and our sacrifice of atonement;

and to come before thee, clothed in the robe of his righteousness. We bless thee, that he who died for our sins rose again for our justification; that he is now seated at thy right hand, making continual intercession for us, and that to him thou hast committed the judgment of the last day, because he is the Son of man. We rejoice to believe that in him all fullness dwells; and that he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities. While these blessed views preserve us from despair, O Lord, suffer not our weak hearts to pervert them into a cause of presumption. We beseech thee to look down in mercy on all who are now assembled before thee. Take each individual under thy divine protection. Accommodate the dispensations of thy providence and grace to our various circumstances, enlighten our darkness, change our sinful propensities, supply our wants, exalt our affections, renew us in the spirit of our minds. We commit ourselves, and all who are dear to us, to thee. Bless our friends, reward our benefactors; turn the hearts of our enemies, and, if they have sinned against us, enable us to forgive them, as we expect forgiveness from thee. Make us all fellow-workers together with thee, in promoting the eternal interests of each other, and of our fellow-sinners. Day after day, so long as thou art pleased to preserve our lives in this fleeting world, may we take counsel together while we advance through its changing scenes, led by thy unseen hand, comforted and guided by thy Holy Spirit, looking to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; and at last, having finished our course and kept the faith, may we meet at thy right hand, never more to be separated. Hear and accept of us for the sake of him whom thou hearest always, our Redeemer and advocate, Jesus Christ. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXV. 1—5.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XIV. 32—72.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The garden of Gethsemane has been justly regarded as the place where those peculiar and mysterious sufferings commenced, which were derived immediately from the hand of a just and holy God, who thus showed his abhorrence of sin, by punishing it in the person of his own Son, the willing substitute for sinners. Jesus was, through his whole life, a man of sorrows; but from this period, till he expired on the cross, the full vial of affliction was emptied upon his head. From the commencement of his ministry to its close, he had been subjected to the hatred and contempt of those whom he earnestly desired to save; but now he was to be abandoned by the very disciples, who received his instructions and shared his confidence, to be condemned at once by the blinded council of his own peculiar people, and by an unprincipled heathen governor; to be buffeted, scourged, and crucified. To these indignities and tortures, however, though revealed to his prophetic view in all their terrors, he meekly looked forward. They moved not the settled purpose of his soul, nor caused his heart for a single moment to quail. The storm of human wrath might burst on him in all its fury; the insults of the people, the crown of thorns, the nails of the cross, the spear which was to pierce his side, what were they to the Redeemer of a guilty world! But O! the expiation of human guilt, when God laid on him the iniquity of us all! the dismay, the intolerable anguish of that indignation and wrath which fell upon him when he suffered the just for the unjust. God alone could inflict it; the Son of God alone could endure it. No wonder that he should exclaim, 'my soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death;' no wonder that he should fall on the ground in agony, and while the blood burst from every pore, should pray, that, if it were possible, the hour might pass away; that fearful hour of the power of darkness!

Yet, amidst all this tumult of soul, mark his resignation. 'Nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt.' 'Dreadful, unspeakable, as is the anguish of my crushed and tortured soul, let me drink the cup to the very dregs, if this be necessary for finishing the work thou hast given me to do.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The blindness and perverseness of the Jews, in rejecting the Son of God, and embruing their hands in his blood, have been a theme for wonder, and a cause of humiliation in every age of the church. Well may we exclaim in astonishment, Is this the promised Messiah, to whose day this once favoured people looked forward with anxious expectation; the hope of whose appearance was their refuge in danger, and their comfort in distress? Blind and infatuated, alas, they knew not what they did. But are we better than they?

Let us learn humility and self-distrust in the defection of the disciples, and especially of Peter, after the most solemn asseverations of attachment. 'If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee.' They were, doubtless, sincere in these declarations; but they trusted too much to the depth of their affection, and the strength of their untried resolution. See what happened; when danger actually arrived, they all forsook him and fled; and when Peter, rallying his drooping courage, stealthily followed his master to the high priest's palace, the fear of detection caused him to add falsehood and perjury to cowardice. What a lesson is here for us! In the hour of our prosperity we are ready to say with the psalmist, 'my mountain stands strong, I shall never be moved;' but when temptation comes, how feeble are found to be the graces in which we trusted. In nothing does the deceitfulness of our hearts prove more conspicuous and lamentable, than in the coldness of their attachment to him by whose holy name we are called, 'God forbid!' we say when all is at peace around us, 'God forbid that we should glory save in the cross of Christ!' But let persecution or temptation arise, and too many are offended, and walk no more with him.

What a contrast, we have seen, to all this weakness and selfish terror is exhibited in the character and conduct of Jesus. O let us never forget that he suffered, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we are not worthy to lift up our eyes to the place where thine honour dwelleth; yet thou investest us to present ourselves before thee, and to look up to thee as children to a father, able and ready to help. And now, O Father, we obey thy gracious invitation, trusting in that mercy and grace which are revealed to us in the gospel of thy Son. We come, casting away from us all dependence on our own righteousness, and entreating thee to regard us in the face of thine Anointed. We have no services of our own to plead; we have no rights of our own to demand. But Christ has died for sinners such as we are; and we plead the merits of his sacrifice, and the all-prevailing efficacy of his intercession. O for his sake pardon our sins, and receive us graciously, and love us freely! Our sinful hearts, O holy God, are naked and open before thee: our secret thoughts are read by thy all-seeing eye. Create in us clean hearts, renew right spirits within us. Raise our affections from earth to heaven, from the fleeting things of time to the endless glories of eternity. O bestow upon us the spirit of our divine Master; who made it as his meat and drink to do the will of his heavenly Father; and who, even in his darkest hour of trial, said, 'Not my will, but thine be done.' We apply, O Lord, to thee, for without thy aid we are powerless and lost. O suffer us not to fall; let thy guardian arm be around us. Save us, O Lord, else we perish. To every member of this family we earnestly pray for thy blessing. O grant that wherever we go, a Father's hand may protect us, a Father's counsel may guide us, a Father's smile may cheer us. Teach us in all things to follow where thou leadest, and to obey what thou commandest; may we be fellow-workers together with thee, in promoting the good of our fellow-creatures. In joy and sorrow, in health and sickness, in life and at death, may we lift up our souls unto thee in reverence and love; and under the guidance of thy Spirit, may we so pass through this mortal life, as to be rendered meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. With ourselves, and those who are dear to us, we desire to remember before thee the church which thou hast planted in our land, and especially that portion of it to which we more immediately belong. O bless all the means of grace, and revive thy good work among us. May our fellow-worshippers in the same house of prayer, be united together in the bands of Christian love. May the minister whom thou hast set over us in holy things, rightly divide the word of truth. May the people receive it with faith and love, and lay it up in their hearts, and practise it in their lives. Extend the blessings of the gospel to the remotest corners of the earth; and O employ us, in our humble sphere, as instruments in thy hand for bringing Jew and Gentile, bond and free, to acknowledge Christ crucified as their only Saviour; and may we and they, united as brethren on earth, at last assemble before the throne of God and the Lamb, to mingle our praises throughout eternal ages. These humble prayers we offer up in the name of Jesus Christ, the mediator of the new covenant. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLIV.

SCRIPTURE—LEVITICUS XXIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The lamps perpetually burning in the tabernacle, seem to typify the light of divine revelation which is necessary to enlighten the natural ignorance of the human heart. Hence the word of God is said to be a lamp to our feet and a light to our path, and Christ himself is declared to be the true light that lighteth every one that cometh into the world. On the several branches of the golden candlestick, mentioned in ver. 4. seven lamps were placed, (Exod. xxxvii. 17—23.) fed constantly with the purest oil; and it is, doubtless, to this that allusion is made in the book of Revelation, when the Son of God is represented as walking in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks.

The shew-bread exhibited continually on the golden table, was a public acknowledgment of God, as the bountiful bestower of the fruits of the earth, for the preservation and enjoyment of his rational creatures. As a ceremony of the Mosaic law, it seems to have referred chiefly to the covenant right which the children of Israel enjoyed to the abundant produce of the land of Canaan, as contrasted with the privations of the wilderness, where, on account of the scanty supply of natural food, they were miraculously fed with manna.

But what requires particular notice, among the things contained in this chapter, is the apprehension and punishment of a blasphemer. This man was not accounted an Israelite, although the son of an Israelitish woman, his father being an Egyptian. He was one, doubtless, of that mixed multitude who left Egypt along with the children of Israel. Such an aggravated transgression as that of speaking contemptuously of the being and government of God, was reserved to have its punishment prescribed when it should show itself in practice, and thus exhibiting the incredible wickedness of the human heart. It is worthy of notice that this first instance of a sin so foul, in the camp of Israel, proceeded not from one of themselves, but from the scion of an idolatrous race, allied to them, indeed, but corrupted by the evil communications of an unbelieving father, and an apostate mother.

This is one of the sins for which there was the same law to the Israelite and to the stranger, because being moral it extends to the whole human race. Besides blasphemy, which is a direct insult to the Creator, those crimes are enumerated which affect the person or property of our brethren, and in such cases the law of retaliation, as it has been called, was established—beast for beast, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, life for life. God, who has made of one blood all that dwell on the face of the earth, is the supreme governor of the Gentile as well as of the Jew, and therefore it concerned his justice to show himself, in such matters, no respecter of persons.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

It is our happiness to live not under the moonlight of the Jewish revelation, but in the noon-day glory of the Sun of righteousness. Let us who have come to the light, walk as children of the light, and let us beware, lest it should prove our condemnation that light has come into the world, and we have loved darkness rather than light, our deeds being evil. There is great reason to rejoice in the privileges of our holy faith, but it becomes us to rejoice with trembling; for if much has been given to us, much also is required at our hands. Let us never forget that our responsibility bears proportion to our privileges. 'He that despised Moses' law,' says an apostle, 'died without mercy. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?' 'It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.' Heb. x. 28, 29, 31.

PRAYER.

In coming before thee, O Lord, on the morning of a new day, we desire to call to mind the blessings for which we are daily indebted to thy never-failing bounty. All things are full of thee. The heavens declare thy glory, and the firmament sheweth thy handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth, who hast set thy glory above the heavens. But, beyond the bounties of thy providence, thou hast magnified thy great name in the blessings of thy grace.

We thank thee that thou hast cast our lot in a Christian land, and surrounded us with the light of the gospel; that thou hast bestowed upon us the invaluable treasure of the holy scriptures; and that, from our early years, we have been favoured with religious instructors, who have opened our minds to the truths of thy word, and have gone before us and urged us onward in the path of duty. We bless and glorify thy name above all, for the promise of thy Spirit to instruct us. We rejoice to believe, that if we seek thee with our whole hearts we shall find thee; for to none of the children of men didst thou ever say, Seek ye my face in vain. O thou whose Spirit enlightens, and whose grace enlarges the soul, we beseech thee to visit us in mercy, and to supply all our spiritual wants. We are ignorant; do thou open our souls to the knowledge of the truth. We are guilty; do thou wash away our sins in the blood of him who died to save us. We are surrounded with enemies; do thou bring us under the banner of the Captain of our salvation, that we may become more than conquerors. O suffer us not to abuse the privileges with which, as professing Christians, we are surrounded. Teach us to walk worthy of our high vocation, and to adorn the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by lives becoming his gospel. Whether we live may we live unto the Lord, or whether we die may we die unto the Lord, that, living or dying, we may be the Lord's. We humbly but earnestly pray, O heavenly Father, that thou wouldst be pleased, in thy great mercy, to bestow these blessings on every member of this family, whether present or absent. Thou knowest infinitely better than we do what is good for them and for us; but whatever thou mayest be pleased to appoint concerning our temporal concerns, whether prosperity or adversity, whether enjoyment or suffering, whether life or death, O grant that our spiritual welfare may be advancing, and that all things may work together for our eternal interests, till we be all prepared for our great change, and for the employment and happiness of the world of spirits, in the presence of our Saviour and our God. While we thus pray for ourselves and our dear relatives, we would not be unmindful of the immortal souls of others. O Lord, grant that thy word may have free course and may be glorified among our neighbours, our countrymen, our fellow-Christians, our fellow-sinners, throughout the world, all who have souls to be saved. May the whole descendants of the first Adam become the children of the second Adam; that as in Adam all die, so in Christ all may be made alive, and that the predicted period may at last arrive when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. And all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake, of thy beloved Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLIV.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XV. 1—23.

REMARKS.

It is impossible to conceive anything more extraordinary or more interesting than the events detailed, with such amazing simplicity, in this chapter. It had been predicted of Jesus that he would be at once a suffering and a triumphant Saviour, 'despised and rejected of men,' yet a king 'mighty to save,' who should 'feed his flock like a shepherd, gathering the lambs with his arms, carrying them in his bosom, and gently leading those that were with young.' Throughout the whole of his life he fulfilled these apparent contradictions. In outward circumstances he had 'no form nor comeliness,' and to the worldly eye there was 'no beauty in him that we should desire him.' Yet there dwelt in him an ineffable grace and dignity, and those who could penetrate beyond the surface 'beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth.' We now see this 'man of sorrows' in the last trying hours of his sufferings on earth. The affecting scene of the paschal supper was over when he gave to his disciples a memorial of his dying love. He had passed triumphantly through the temptation and agony of the garden. He had meekly stood before the council of his own deluded countrymen, who were thirsting for his blood. He is now arraigned as a criminal before the tribunal of a profligate heathen governor; he is condemned; he is crucified; he dies and is buried. Jesus, the Son of God, has finished a life of sorrow by a death of ignominy. The powers of darkness seem to triumph, and the malice of his enemies to be crowned with success. No miracle has blasted the arm of his murderers; no legions of angels have come to his rescue. The sun, indeed, was darkened; the earth shook; the vail of the temple was rent; but God did not come down in wrath to wither the rebels with a glance of his eye, and to assert the majesty of his government, and the divinity of his crucified Son.

Yet the whole scene displayed the ineffable dignity and beauty of the sufferer's character. 'He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearers is dumb, so opened he not his mouth.' While his enemies were 'breathing out threatenings and slaughter' against him, his heart was melting with pity; while his murderers nailed him to the cross, he prayed, 'Father, forgive them.' With what tender affection did he, in the midst of his torture, address his mother and his beloved disciple! With what godlike grace did he accept the prayer of the penitent thief! With what heavenly composure did he commend his spirit into the hands of his Father, while he bowed his head and gave up the ghost! Yet all the while he was enduring more than mortal agony. It was not the bodily torture which he endured; it was not the crown of thorns, the nails, and the spear which constituted that agony. There was more bitter gall in the cup of his sufferings than could be infused by a mortal hand. His appalling exclamation of horror, under a sense of desertion, when the sun withdrew his light, and all nature was convulsed, showed that the mysterious tortures of Gethsemane were still rending his inmost soul. During these awful hours he 'bore our sins in his own body,' for God had 'laid on him the iniquity of us all.' He was then voluntarily bending, in our place, under the rod of the Eternal; offering his soul a sacrifice for sin, and taking on himself the curse of a broken covenant. 'He who knew no sin, became a sin offering for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.' Well did the voice of nature unite with that of revelation, when the heathen centurion exclaimed, 'Truly this was the Son of God.' He hath overcome death, and him that had the power over it. To the believer, death is no longer an enemy, but a friend to introduce them to all the joys of everlasting life, in the presence of their Saviour and their God. 'O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?'

PRAYER.

Again, O Lord our God, we come before thee with the voice of prayer and thanksgiving. Thou hast, in thy merciful providence, preserved us to the end of another week, and we receive it as a token for good that thou permittest us, notwithstanding the increasing load of our transgressions, once more to appear at thy footstool, to crave a Father's blessing. What are we, or what is our fathers' house that thou shouldst thus deign to bear with us. When we look back on the week which is just coming to a close, we are humbled under the remembrance of many opportunities neglected, of many duties unperformed, of many sins committed. Lord, be merciful to us, sinners! If we have done any thing to thy glory during the course of it, we humbly own that it is to thee we are indebted both for the means and the inclination; and we desire to rejoice that thou hast made us humble instruments in thy hands. Give us grace, we beseech thee, to avoid what has been evil in our past conduct, and to persevere in whatever has tended to promote thy holy will, in doing good to our brethren, or advancing the welfare of our own souls. May the same mind be in us which was also in Christ Jesus, who suffered, leaving us an example, that we might follow his steps. And O God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, enable us to take a deeper view of our Saviour's sufferings, and to behold him with the eye of faith, wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, bearing the punishment due to our sins, and rendering thee just, while thou art the justifier of the ungodly. May we regard his death as to us the savour of eternal life, and rejoice in the blessed assurance, that thou who hast not spared thine own Son, but hast delivered him up for us all, wilt with him, also freely give us all things. O fill our hearts with thankfulness, when we remember that he bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and endured the full extent of the atoning agony, till he could say, 'It is finished.' Give us, we beseech thee, an interest in these blessed words, and enable us to know and to feel, that our salvation is accomplished; and that he, who died for our sins, is risen again for our justification, and ever liveth to make intercession for us. O may the souls of those who now address thee, united thus as they are in Christian hope, be also united in Christian love! May we regard each other, not as the perishing creatures of a day, bound together by perishing ties, but as members of Christ's spiritual body; and thus members one of another. May we bear each other's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. And do thou shed abroad thy Spirit in our hearts, that we may go on our way rejoicing; and that others, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven. We pray for all men. O may they be brought from darkness unto light, and from the power of satan unto God. May we, making use of the means which thou hast put in our power, become instruments in thy hand for the advancement and extension of Christ's kingdom. Bless those devoted servants of the cross who have left the comforts of their native land, to preach the gospel to the heathen. O may their labours in the cause of the Redeemer be attended with the demonstration of the Spirit and of power, till the strong delusions of the prince of darkness be dissipated, and the whole earth be enlightened by the glory of the Sun of righteousness. May our supplications and thanksgivings ascend in memorial before thee, and bring down an answer of peace, through the mediation of him who liveth and was dead, and who now appears at thy right hand, making intercession for his people. Amen.

ELEVENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

By the title of this psalm, it appears to have been composed in reference to that trying period of David's life, when fear of the jealousy and rage of Saul obliged him to flee in haste from the royal household, and to leave behind him those to whom he was bound by the tenderest attachment, Michal his wife, and Jonathan who loved him as his own soul. After suffering great fatigues and hunger in his flight, he at length entered the land of the Philistines, and took refuge in the city of Gath. His fame as a warrior had preceded him. The servants of Achish the king, said one to another, Is not this David, of whom they did sing in the dance, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands? Perhaps, they also remembered his having slain their great giant Goliath. This overwhelmed him with such a consternation, lest he should be taken and be subjected to ignominious and cruel treatment, that he was suddenly seized with a falling-sickness; for such seems to be the right meaning of the words, 'he changed his behaviour.' (See Stackhouse's History of the Bible, pp. 463, 464.) Hence, Achish judging rightly, that no danger need be apprehended under such a malady, commanded him to be removed from his presence. Strongly confirmatory of this opinion, are the words in ver. 19, 20; 'Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. He keepeth all my bones, not one of them is broken.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

If in our hearts the love of God truly dwells, a careful observance of the ways of divine providence, will greatly confirm and strengthen our confidence in him, as our righteous and merciful Father. When David reflected upon his deliverance from dangers in Gath, he made the pious and holy vow of blessing the Lord at all times. Every true Christian not only praises God for deliverance from trouble, but is thankful for affliction. 'It is good for me that I was afflicted; before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I have learned thy statutes.' Hence he resolves that his soul shall make her boast in God. Similar were the convictions of the apostle Paul, when he said, 'we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope.' If we have a deep sense of God's loving-kindness abiding in our souls, not only will we sing aloud the praises of our God, but we will also earnestly invite others to join with us in magnifying the name of the Lord Jehovah. For incitement thereto, let us observe how remarkably the Lord, in answer to the prayers of his people, interposes for their protection. He bringeth down the mighty from their seats of lofty pride, and raiseth up the bowed-down, he saveth the poor out of their troubles, supplieth the wants of the most indigent and helpless, while they that are strong and violent as young lions, are often afflicted with poverty, hunger, and nakedness; and wander the wide world throughout without a friend, hated of God, and despised by men! How different this, from the condition of them that seek the Lord! Blessed are all they that put their trust in him. Come, countrymen, neighbours, friends, and come, O mine own soul, and learn the great and interesting lesson, how to live long and see much good. Who teach it so well as the man after God's own heart, especially when moved thereto by the Holy Ghost! Let then truth and honesty be found on thy lips, let thy footsteps be far from the paths of the wicked, and let there be no iniquity in our hands, but let us be continually doing good, doing all in the name, and to the glory of God, and the good of his creatures, under the consciousness that the eyes of the Lord are upon us. What though, in seeking after the righteousness of the Lord, we should be involved in many tribulations? Doth not the Lord deliver the righteous as he seeth meet, out of all their troubles? Doth he not bind up the wounds of the broken hearted, and save them who are of a contrite spirit? But against the enemies of the righteousness of God, is denounced desolation; shame and ruin are in their ways, they shall be left to weep and howl for vexation of spirit; they lie under the divine wrath, and shall inherit the blackness of darkness and despair for ever and ever. Rejoice then ye righteous in Christ, the rock of your salvation, who hath redeemed your souls, and in triumph shout, 'O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, who hath given us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.'

PRAYER.

Thou, O God, art infinitely great and glorious! Heaven is thy throne, the earth is thy footstool. Temples made with hands, cannot contain thee. Thy presence fills immensity. All creatures are naked and open to thy sight, and thou upholdest and governest them every one. The gods whom blinded nations fear, know not their worshippers, nor regard their cry; but thou, O Lord, art a God nigh unto thy people in all that they call upon thee for. The sparrow falleth not to the ground without thy will, nor are the smallest things thou hast made, below thy regard. Thou numberest even the hairs of our heads. However weak or oppressed thy people be, thou sufferest them not altogether to faint and to fail; but upholdest them in their goings. Thou, Lord, freest us from the hands of bloody and deceitful men, and deliverest our life as a bird from the snare of the fowler. What shall we render to thee, for all thy mercies? Open our mouths, that our lips may speak thy praise. Put thy Spirit within us, and we will bless thee at all times. Put thy Spirit within us, that we may discern in all the events of life the operations of thy wisdom and power. O how often hast thou saved us out of our distresses when we had no earthly helper, and turned our mourning into joy; and for sackcloth hast girded us with gladness. Truly thy loving-kindness hath been wonderful! May the remembrance of thy favour, and the knowledge of our own unworthiness, lead us to repentance, to a deep and heart-felt abhorrence of the innumerable transgressions of thy holy and just commandments, wherewith thy word and our consciences accuse us. Alas! we have sinned both openly and secretly, we have sinned often against light, and often in ignorance, and often in violation of our most solemn vows. Work in us, O God, sorrow for sin after a godly sort. Give us grace, enabling us to depart from all iniquity; especially from all those sins which have heretofore so easily beset us, and from those to which we may be most frequently exposed. Suffer us not to forget, that, by continuing in sin, we are treasuring up unto ourselves wrath against the day of wrath, and the revelation of thy righteous judgment, in which thine adversaries shall be consumed. Convince us, O Lord, thou quickening Spirit, that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, when his wrath is kindled, even but a little. Turn us, O God, and we shall be turned; and let iniquity no longer have dominion over us. Wash us in the fountain opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness, through the redemption that is in Jesus; we pray to be delivered from the guilt, power, pollution, and punishment of sin. By the Holy Spirit that quickeneth, may we be transformed into the likeness of the divine image, and be made alive unto righteousness and true holiness; so that the lives we henceforth lead in the flesh, may be to the praise and glory of God; and thus have the evidence that we are the heirs of a blissful immortality. Now unto the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be glory, as it was in the beginning, is now, and shall be evermore. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIV. 16.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In composing this psalm, it is thought by some that David describes his sufferings under the persecution of Saul. If so, it probably has reference chiefly to the commencement of that harassing time when Saul concealed his enmity under the mask of pretended friendship, and affected to take pleasure in his company, whilst, however, his secret malignity occasionally burst forth in fits of dangerous violence. Others think, with great probability, that David designed, in this psalm, to represent the contests which Jesus Christ had with the powers of darkness before he triumphed over them on the cross, and that David's allusions to his own dangers and hairbreadth escapes, served only as an excitement by which he became qualified to depict more graphically Christ's great patience and meekness, and the desperate malice of his foes.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

It is implied in the petition, 'Plead my cause, O Lord, with them that strive against me,' that the petitioner had such a cause that he could venture to make it known before God without disguise, and that so conscious was he of its justice and his own integrity, that he could ask God to take his part therein and maintain his right. We need not expect to enjoy uninterrupted peace in this world; yea, woe is unto us if all men speak well of us. Was not Christ reviled and reproached of men? Or is the servant better than his master? Have not patriarchs, and prophets, and apostles, and righteous men in every age, had their trials of cruel mockings and scourgings? But whilst we need not expect freedom from contention, or from envy, reproach, and injury, (for enmity ever has, and ever will subsist between the seed of the woman, and the seed of the serpent,) let us take the utmost care that we suffer not as busy-bodies or evil doers. May it only be in such causes as we can make known to God, and in which we may reverentially ask him to plead in our behalf. David in his afflictions, Christ in his passion, the church under persecution, and the Christian in the hour of temptation, all supplicate the Almighty to appear in their behalf, and to vindicate their cause? Why should a man, conscious of his uprightness in a righteous cause, hesitate to lay it before a righteous God? In David's prayer, of which we speak, are included, first, a desire that God would appear on his side, by defeating, disabling, and dishonouring his enemies; after the same manner we may pray concerning them that persecute us for righteousness' sake. Second, a desire that God would make known to him his purpose of saving him from his adversaries, and so uphold and comfort him amid all his outward trouble.

Nothing will ever so effectually console us in our tribulation as having the Spirit of God bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.

Supposing Christ to be represented in this psalm, (as some think,) as interceding against the unbelieving and blaspheming Jews, then what a striking answer do we here behold in the present dispersed and despised condition of that people. 'Let them be as chaff before the wind.' Who does not rejoice that, through their fall, salvation is come unto the Gentiles? O may the receiving of them again come soon, and be as life from the dead.

Ver. 11—16. These verses exhibit the character and conduct of David in contrast with the behaviour of his enemies. How true, both in respect of David and of Jesus the Son of David, is this saying, 'False witnesses rose up against me?' Some irreligious and ungodly men are much offended at David for the prayers against his enemies contained in this psalm. But let these persons look at David's conduct for a commentary, both upon his principles and his feelings, and compare them with the actings of his adversaries. Could it be unrighteous in David to pray that their glorying in wickedness, their impious rejoicing at the afflictions of the righteous, should be stopped? Whether the case represented in this psalm, be that of Jesus or of David, we know that God, in his righteous providence, did render unto the enemies of both according to the petitions contained in this psalm. Could it be wrong for the psalmist to pray for what it now appears to have been befitting a righteous God to do? And be it observed, he asked the Lord to do judgment, not according to his own views and feelings, but 'according to thy righteousness, O Lord my God.' May the meek inherit the earth, and may the righteousness of the righteous shine forth as brightness!

PRAYER.

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God, who art the creator of heaven and earth, of all things visible and invisible; thou didst make all very good. How admirable even still, notwithstanding all the disastrous effects of sin, is the order and harmony displayed throughout all thy visible works, amid all their amazing varieties whereby they contribute to promote the universal good, and to enlarge and enhance the delight and happiness of man! But alas! O God of love, we have to lament, with deepest sorrow, that our hearts have become altogether corrupt. They are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. Instead of affectionate kindness, which should bind the heart of man to man, ruling and governing all the relationships of life, and making all men everywhere benefactors of each other, there have sprung up emulations, wraths, strifes, seditions, heresies, envyings, and murders, amongst the wicked themselves; yea, and the wicked rise against them also, O Lord, who walk in thy fear; they gnash against them with their teeth, devise against them dark devices, and be hardly restrained from persecuting them cruelly unto the death. Suffer them not to prevail, but break in pieces the rod of their power, and cause thy redeemed people to dwell in safety. Continue to bless us, O Lord, with the inestimable privileges which have so long been our inheritance in this our fatherland, even freedom to worship thee in spirit and truth, under our own vine and our own fig tree, none daring to make us afraid. Turn away and restrain the beginning of our enemies' wrath, and let it not come nigh our dwelling. Give unto all our enemies repentance and remission of sins, and by thy Spirit lead them into the love and obedience of the truth. Hasten the time when all shall become the willing and faithful servants of the Lord Jesus, and when, by having been renewed by the Holy Ghost in the spirit of their minds, they shall no longer fulfil the lusts of the flesh, but shall in heart and life show forth the fruit of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Suffer us not, under any provocation, to take vengeance upon them that hate or injure us, but enable us to commit our cause to him who judgeth in righteousness. Make us willing to love our enemies and to render them good for evil, remembering that Jesus loved us when we were enemies to thee, to him, and to all righteousness, and gave himself up unto the ignominious death of the cross, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify us unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. May that mind which was in him when he suffered for us in the flesh, be also in us, that henceforth we may manifest obedience in all things to thy holy will, and be enabled, with the heart and lips, to ascribe to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, all praise, honour, and glory, both now and for ever. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM xcvi. 9.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS xii.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

‘Leprosy’ is a loathsome disease, which destroys the skin, and covers the whole body with scales. It is perhaps the most infectious and awful disease incident to the human frame; and with it, as a punishment, did God afflict Miriam. ‘In a vision,’ God sometimes made known his will to his prophets, by a divine operation on their minds, wherein they beheld representations of events as clear and vivid as if they had beheld them transacted before the bodily senses. (Gen. xv. 1; Dan. viii. 1—15.) ‘In a dream,’ God at other times not only caused his prophets to see representations with a mental eye in the glass of fancy, but also to hear, as it were with a mental ear, the declarations of his will. The revelation sometimes began with a vision, which, overpowering the external senses, brought on sleep with a prophetic dream. Gen. xv. ‘Mouth to mouth,’ or as in Ex. xxxiii. 11. ‘face to face,’ denotes not only the directness, the transcendent clearness, and certainty of the intellectual light; but also the amicable manner in which it was communicated. To Moses alone was reserved the exalted privilege of holding direct converse with God.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

In the narrative contained in this chapter, we see pride, ambition, and jealousy, breaking forth in persons exalted to high station and office, in the congregation of the Lord. These vicious feelings seem to have been excited against Moses, because God had conferred on him supreme rank and power over his people. But Miriam and Aaron were ashamed honestly to avow the real causes of their hostility to their brother; but hypocritically pretended to be offended with his having married a wife not of Abraham’s lineage. The plausible pretences whereby we cloak and dissemble our sins, however successfully they may serve for a little to deceive men, hide them not from God. Neither are they generally long hid from men. The Lord descended and stood in visible glory at the door of the tabernacle, and, proclaiming in presence of the congregation his pre-eminent favour for Moses, demands of Aaron and Miriam, ‘Wherefore then, were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses, who is faithful in all my house?’ How meek was Moses amid all their reproaches. Let us follow his example, and not be easily provoked. The proud and vain glorious are always desirous of obtaining credit for doing great and good things, from pure and lofty principle. To them it is a grievous and sore punishment to be found out and exposed in their true character, prosecuting a malicious and criminal ambition from envious and selfish motives. Let all who are sacrificing the dearest interests, whether of their kindred, or of the community, at a shrine they are ashamed of, learn, in the public detection and punishment of Miriam, the certain exposure of their iniquities in righteous retribution. Such are the effects of striving to be the greatest. From God’s severity towards Miriam, let us learn how heinous, in his sight, is the sin of unjustly reproaching and vilifying those who bear lawful authority over us, in things civil, and more especially in things sacred. The despisers of government, the presumptuous and self-willed, who are not afraid to speak evil of dignities, (2 Pet. ii. 10.) may learn, in the case of Miriam, what calamities they bring upon the commonwealth. They provoke the Lord to wrath: he forsakes the nation, withdraws the public and national tokens of his favour; and arrests the progress of national advancement.

PRAYER.

O Lord God, maker of heaven and earth, preserver and governor of the universe, we adore thee as infinite in all thy glorious perfections. All thy works praise thee, and proclaim the greatness of thy majesty. Thy gracious providence towards all men, manifests thy benevolence and thy goodness. Thou sendest rain and fruitful seasons to the just and the unjust, to the righteous and to the wicked. By thy providence thou art calling unto all men to behold and know thee, the author of every good and perfect gift. O God, who can tell all thy loving kindnesses? Who can count all the merciful deliverances thou hast wrought for thy people? Thou freest them from the hand of the oppressor. Thou gavest food when they passed through a desert land, and didst cause the water to spring from the flinty rock to quench their thirst. And withal, O Lord, in thy favour, thou didst appoint a ruler according to thine own heart, who was faithful in all thy house. Raise up such rulers throughout Christendom, as shall prove to be nursing-fathers and nursing-mothers to thy church. Especially so dispose the heart of our rulers, that they may so frame and administer laws in this great empire, that the churches thou hast planted in it, and hast watered from age to age, may have all due support and protection. Lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of thy tabernacle. How glorious is the city of our God, standing upon the mountain of his holiness! How beautiful for situation is mount Zion, the joy of the whole earth! Dwell, O God, for ever in the midst of her, that she may never be removed. Within her may unrighteousness never be found; but be always a refuge in the time of trouble, and be watered abundantly with the healing stream of the waters of life. And whilst thou disposest our rulers to build up Zion, and to restore her waste places, dispose us, and all the people, to give honour to whom it is due; to be subject, for conscience' sake, and to lead, under them, quiet and peaceable lives, in all honesty and godly sincerity. Let not the spirit of pride, envy, and of ambition; excite any to sedition or rebellion against lawful authority. Especially, keep all them that make a profession of believing the gospel and teaching it to others, from being the movers or approvers of sedition; whereby, whether designedly or undesignedly, they hinder the advancement of thy Son's kingdom, even as Miriam did the journeying forward of the congregation of Israel. Alas! O God, that there should have been such strifes and divisions among professing Christians; that there should be so much blindness to the unity of spirit in the church, the body of Christ. We confess this our sin, and acknowledge it is the fruit of a corrupt and carnal heart, in which there is so much pride and rebellion against thee, and out of which proceed so many evil thoughts and unclean desires. In righteousness dost thou punish us for our iniquities. In mercifulness dost thou afflict us. We bless thee, that thou dost chastise us, and awakenest us to a sense of thy fatherly love and gracious care. May we, through tribulations, learn humility, and to put confidence no longer in the flesh. Remove far from us that presumptuous pride which leads us to trust in our own righteousness. Give us grace, that we may receive the Lord Jesus Christ, as all our salvation, and all our desire. Seal us now with the Holy Spirit unto the day of redemption, that henceforth we may ascribe all praise and glory, to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, now and evermore. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXIX. 15.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XV. 24—47.

REMARKS.

The violent clamour of the infatuated multitude without, making the streets re-echo their savage yell, 'Crucify him, crucify him,' have at length determined the purpose of the wavering judge. With the conviction of the perfect innocence of Jesus, and with a strong desire to set him at liberty, yet, Pilate, to please the people in their malignant rabble cry, condemned the holy Jesus to the most cruel and ignominious death the vilest criminals could die. In their casting lots for his raiment, did the twenty-second psalm, ver. 18. receive its fulfilment, for nowhere is it said that David's garments were parted, or that his hands and feet were pierced. This title 'The King of the Jews,' refers to the accusation which the Jews successfully pressed upon Pilate, after he had endeavoured to release Jesus, 'If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend.' Dreading the charge of being unfaithful to his imperial master, and with consenting to the liberation of one claiming to be king of the Jews, Pilate then sat down on the judgment-seat to pronounce condemnation, and tauntingly inquired at the Jews, 'Shall I crucify your King?' When the Jews afterwards found that Pilate adopted this title for the superscription, they murmured much at it, and the chief priests begged Pilate not to write, 'The King of the Jews;' the stern Roman refused to alter it, and thus, though by the title, he meant only to express scorn and contempt, yet in reality this deputy of the greatest emperor in the world, proclaimed Christ King at his crucifixion. Two thieves were crucified with Jesus, whereby that scripture in Isaiah liii. 'he was numbered with transgressors,' was fulfilled. The thieves also reviled him, and said, 'Save thyself and us.' Either both did so at first, and one repented quickly of his impiety, or else the plural is put for the singular, as is not unfrequently done in scripture. However that may be, one received faith in an eminent degree, and after confessing his own fault, and rebuking his companion for his impious railing, he offered to Jesus, in presence of all the mockers, the fervent prayer of saving faith, 'Lord Jesus, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.' Amazing sovereignty and riches of divine grace! The guilty criminal on the brink of eternity confesses his own sin, owns his Lord, vindicates his innocence, and puts his confidence in him as his Saviour, though he saw him dying in the midst of cruel derision. How compassionate, encouraging, and gracious was the reply, 'This day shalt thou be with me in paradise!'

Three painful hours have now passed since Christ was nailed to the cross, and the sixth hour, or noon, being come, a great and horrible darkness overspread the land of Judea, until the ninth hour, or three in the afternoon: and at that awful hour, Jesus, in the unutterable anguish of his soul, cried with a loud voice, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' But O! at the pathetic, heart-melting cry, the murderers of the Prince of life renew their barbarous and brutal revilings. But the time of suffering is near its end. Satan, death, and hell, are receiving their deadly blow. Once more, Jesus, with a loud voice, as with the strong voice of a mighty conqueror, said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit; my life no man taketh from me, I lay it down in obedience to thy will; he bowed his head and dismissed his spirit! Where are the disciples at this sad parting moment, those disciples whom Jesus loved, and called to be witnesses of all he should teach and do. The holy and sympathizing women are looking on afar off; but the chosen witnesses, whither are they fled? Since death sealed the lips of the malefactor, who, with his dying breath, confessed the Son of God, do none else bear witness for him? Shall none of living men again cry, Jesus, son of David? God the Father is himself the first to bear witness, by miracles, to this Son of his eternal love. But is there yet no voice of the living men witnesses of his suffering, to hail Jesus Son of the Highest? Yes, these signs and wonders have wrought conviction in the Roman soldiers who guarded the crucifixion. They mock no more; but, with their commander the centurion, say, 'Truly this man was the Son of God.' Now also the pious counsellor, Joseph of Arimathea, who waited for the kingdom of God, and was a disciple, yet only in secret, through fear of the Jews, casts away fear, and, with courageous boldness, demands the crucified body; and along with Nicodemus, another fearful, but believing ruler of the Jews, entombs it with costly and honourable burial. May our devotions this evening, incline us to look on him who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities.

PRAYER.

Our Father, who art in heaven, and yet art nigh unto all thy people on earth, providing for them food and raiment, which things fill us with many anxious cares, shut out from our thoughts all worldly cares, and enable us, with great fear and reverence, to draw near and behold the great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh. Well may we wonder how it is, that he, who dwelt from eternity in the bosom of the Father's love, amid all the splendours of heavenly glory, should come down to earth, and be found in fashion as a man! Is not this earth filled with thy enemies? Is there not in every man a sinful heart, full of all proud and rebellious thoughts against thee; is it not moving and employing all the members of our bodies, as instruments of unrighteousness and sin? Thy goodness is openly abused, thy laws are despised, thy holy name is blasphemed every day; and doth not thine eyes see, that among all the children of men, there are none righteous, none that seek after God? What incomprehensible impulse moved thine only begotten Son, O Father, to take upon him a nature so vile, rebellious, and corruptible, as thou seest it in us, and by which thou art so grievously dishonoured? O the height and depth of the divine love, that formed the plan of redeeming man! O the amazing love of Jesus to poor sinners, that made him, the Son of God, become the Son of man, and come into this world, not in outward pomp and royal state, but in the poor estate of a servant, that he might share in our miseries, and give us a share in his blessedness, that through his poverty we might be made rich! How wondrous to behold him, who erewhile was in the brightness of his Father's glory, and still remaining an all-sufficient God, exposed to weariness, hunger, thirst, poverty, contempt, revilings, scourgings, and persecution,—to see him who shall hereafter judge the world before God and his holy angels, accused, tried, condemned and crucified; the Lord of life dying on the accursed tree! Thy love, O Jesus, led thee to spend tears, groans, and blood, to save us from sin and hell, and raise us to heaven. We pray not for riches and honours in this world, but we pray that nothing may ever separate us from thy love. Let us no more sin wilfully, seeing we have received the knowledge of the truth. Let not sin reign in our mortal bodies. Let not the fear of man, nor the desire of pleasing man, lead us ever to speak lightly or untruly of thy person, character or work; let us never fall into the snare of thy great enemy, Antichrist, who now sitteth in the temple of God, working with all deceivableness of unrighteousness; but counting the past time of our lives more than sufficient to have wrought the will of the flesh, may we pass the remainder of our sojourning here in godly fear. Let neither tribulation, nor distress, nor persecution, nor peril, nor sword, nor life, nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any other creature, ever separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Rooted and grounded in this love, may we be built up, an holy temple, for an habitation of God through the Spirit; and at last, be presented faultless and blameless, at our Lord's coming, with exceeding joy; and to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be glory now and for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 12.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XIII.

REMARKS.

The searching of Canaan was apparently a reasonable measure; it pleased Moses well, and was permitted by God, who even instructed Moses regarding the manner in which it should be conducted; for, there was no evil in the thing itself; but, to the Israelites, it was a sin, and a snare. It was the suggestion of unbelief, and led to the most disastrous consequences. God was not the author of sin in giving them what they wished. On the contrary, his conduct towards them on this occasion rendered their unbelief just the more unreasonable and inexcusable, and the wickedness of their hearts more manifest; and it more fully displayed and vindicated the righteousness of God, in the awful curse which he denounced, and executed against them. For observe, they got spies as they wished. The Israelites had also the testimony of sense, when with their own eyes they saw the extraordinary fruit of the promised land which the spies had brought with them on their return. But the spies, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua, were destitute of a right spirit and of good courage. The testimony which they gave on their return, abundantly confirmed all that God had declared regarding the goodness of the land. But the unbelief of the other spies found opportunity to exert its influence, and the example of timidity and distrust which they exhibited had a contagious and most fatal effect upon the Israelites. When the truth of God regarding the goodness of the land was confirmed by the testimony of the spies, and the appearance of its fruits, the inveterate unbelief of the Israelites was directed against another of the attributes of God, and questioned his power to fulfil his promise in the face of such formidable opposition as the sons of Anak might offer.

How insidious the sin of unbelief! Its suggestions may appear reasonable, and be of advantage; they may be well pleasing to true believers, and be permitted even by God. How hard to discover the workings of unbelief in ourselves, or in others! But the evil, the sin of unbelief, consists not in the outward act or conduct, but in the state of the heart towards God. Let us, therefore, look to the principles and affections of our hearts, the hidden springs of action, as well as to our outward conduct. Let us study to have pure motives, as well as praiseworthy actions; and so shall we always have a conscience void of offence towards God, and towards men. How inveterate the sin of unbelief! It will resist all evidence, the most varied and multiplied, whether of sense or of testimony; whether afforded by God or by man; whether by ordinary means, or by the most stupendous miracles. How dishonouring to God is this sin! Which of the glorious perfections of Jehovah has it not insulted? His wisdom, and power, his holiness, justice, and wrath, his goodness, mercy, and love, his truth, and faithfulness, each and all of them, even to the denial of God himself, have been disregarded, distrusted, and dis-honoured by the unbelieving heart in the inveteracy of its enmity against God. No wonder then that unbelief is so exceedingly provoking to God. Let us guard also against its contagious influence. The unbelief of the spies increased and confirmed, if it did not excite, the unbelief of the Israelites. Let us beware of those who may be under the influence of unbelief. The more conspicuous and influential their character or station, so much the more dangerous is their example. With what fervour ought we ever to pray for complete deliverance from the God-dishonouring and soul-destroying sin of unbelief.

PRAYER.

Almighty, eternal, and most glorious Jehovah, we would bow down before thee and worship, for thou art God, and besides thee there is none else. We would kneel before thee, for thou art our Maker; fearfully and wonderfully hast thou made us, and hitherto hast thou preserved us. Every day would we praise thee, and show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning; for we laid us down and slept; we awaked, for the Lord sustained us.

But wherewith shall we come before the Lord; how shall we appear in the presence of the High and Holy One. Thou, O God, art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity; thou searchest all hearts, and judgest all men. But we are all as an unclean thing, and our righteousnesses are as filthy rags. We acknowledge our transgressions; against thee, thee only, have we sinned. Our sins are more than we can number. But thou art also a God of infinite mercy, a just God and a Saviour. Thy name and thy memorial to all generations is, The Lord, the Lord God merciful and gracious, forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin, though thou wilt by no means clear the guilty. We would bless and praise thee, O God, that thou hast made known to us the way of salvation. We bless thee, that in the fulness of time, thou didst send forth thy Son to be the propitiation for sin, that, through faith in his blood, we might obtain eternal redemption, even the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of thy grace. May he be made of thee unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption. May we look to him as our example, and follow him as our guide, and cleave to him as our never-failing friend. Out of his fulness may we receive daily an abundant supply of grace suited to our various circumstances and necessities. May he direct us in duty, and succour us in temptation, and comfort us in affliction. May his strength be perfected in our weakness, and his grace be sufficient for us in every time of need.

Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, who appointest our lot, and the bounds of our habitation, bless us in the various relations of life, and in the stations in which thy providence has placed us; and by thy grace may we be enabled suitably to discharge the duties of each. Prosper us in our lawful calling. Preserve us from engaging in any thing that may be displeasing to thee. Make us grateful to thee for all the gifts of thy providence. Make us contented with our lot; and grant us thy blessing with what thou art pleased to bestow. May we be careful for nothing, but in every thing, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, may we make our requests known unto thee our God. May our conversation be in heaven. O may Christ dwell in us, the hope of glory; and even now as we go up through the wilderness of this world, this dry and barren land, may he by his word and Spirit dwelling richly in us, give us a foretaste of the blessed fruits of the heavenly Canaan. And as we draw nearer to the end of our earthly pilgrimage, may we be growing in meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light, and in due time enter into the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

And now, O hearer of prayer, graciously listen to the voice of our supplications, and send us an answer in peace, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XVI. 8.

SCRIPTURE—MARK XVI.

REMARKS.

The resurrection of Christ from the dead is the most important miracle of the New Testament. On this fact the whole system of Christianity rests. 'For,' as the apostle argues, 'if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.' That Christ rose from the dead was established in the most satisfactory manner possible; for he showed himself alive after his death by many infallible proofs, during forty days which elapsed between his resurrection and ascension. He showed himself to such as could not possibly be deceived regarding his person, or regarding the fact of his having been previously dead as well as buried. He showed himself not to one, but to many; not once, but on various occasions, and in various places, by night and by day, unexpectedly, and by express appointment. Several of these appearances are mentioned in this chapter. See remarks on Matth. xxviii.

The unbelief of the disciples is very remarkable. They seem to have forgotten the repeated intimations which Christ gave them of his death and resurrection. We find none of them anxiously waiting at the grave on the morning of the third day to ascertain the truth of Christ's prediction. Even the pious women sought a dead Christ, though they found a living Lord. And when the fact of his resurrection was again and again announced to them, they did not believe it. So that when Christ showed himself to the eleven, he upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not credit the testimony of those who had seen him alive. From this we may learn, that all who do not credit the testimony of the apostles of Christ, who were eye-witnesses, and saw him alive, shall be held by him as inexcusable, and shall be condemned for their unbelief and hardness of heart.

Though salvation was of the Jews, it was not confined to them. The God of salvation is the God of the Jews, and of the Gentiles also. 'For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' And whilst Jesus is the only Saviour, the only name given under heaven by which men must be saved; he is also the Saviour of all under heaven, of every region, and nation, and age. Hence the commission which Christ gave to his apostles was expressed in the most general terms. All to whom the gospel is preached, to whom the offer of God's mercy in Christ is made, have life and death, salvation and damnation, set before them. Christ endowed his apostles with such powers and gifts as enabled them to establish the authority of their commission, and to execute it with abundant success.

It was unnecessary that any of his disciples should see Christ rising from the dead; but a great number saw him ascending to heaven. In his ascension to heaven, and sitting at the right hand of God, his people have a pledge of his appearing a second time, to judge the world; and herein they may contemplate him not only as their forerunner, taking possession of the heavenly inheritance, but also as their king, exalted to the full dignity and exercise of sovereignty, having all power committed to him, and all fulness dwelling in him as head over all things to the church.

The darkest night may be followed by a bright and joyful day. They who seek Christ early, may find him sooner than they expect; and they who seek him earnestly, in spite of doubts and difficulties, may find their greatest fears disappointed, and their highest expectations abundantly exceeded. Peter was the object of Satan's most malicious assaults; and so was Mary Magdalene. But both were the objects of Christ's special care and tender compassion. For the grace of Christ abounds to the chief of sinners, to the vilest of the vile; not assuredly to countenance sin, but to prevent despair. Peter and Mary were indeed great sinners; but they were also great penitents, thoroughly contrite and broken-hearted mourners; and how encouraging the assurance, how strong the consolation, how glorious the hope set before all such in the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ. Rom. viii. 34.

PRAYER.

We would adore thee, O God of our salvation, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, through whose almighty power, and unsearchable wisdom, and abundant mercy, there is salvation even to the chief of sinners. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, by the resurrection of his Son from the dead, hath given us the assurance of eternal redemption, and a lively hope of everlasting glory and happiness in heaven. And blessed be the Son of God, the Saviour of sinners, who humbled himself even unto death, but whom God has highly exalted. O may he who arose from the dead, and ascended on high, leading captivity captive, and receiving gifts for men, according to his gracious promise, send the Spirit unto us in the fullness of his power, and in the riches of his grace, that he may take of the things that are Christ's and show them to us, and cause us to know and enjoy the things that are freely given to us of God. O may Christ be precious to us, as he is to them that believe. May we count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. And may we know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. May all flesh see the salvation of God; may all the nations of the earth know and acknowledge Jehovah to be the only true God, and Jesus the only Saviour. And may the gracious presence of Jesus be vouchsafed to those who go forth in his name preaching the gospel to perishing creatures. May they go in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. And whilst the treasure is in earthen vessels, may the excellency of the power evidently be of God and not of man. O God of Israel, remember thine ancient people, and speedily remove the veil from their hearts, that they may discern Jesus of Nazareth as the true Messiah, and rejoice in him as their Saviour and King. And give testimony to thy word, and countenance the ordinances of thy grace, administered by thy faithful servants throughout the churches. May they have an unction from the Holy One, that their hearts may be encouraged, and that the pleasure of the Lord may prosper in their hands.

O may all of us now before thee believe to the saving of the soul. May each of us know the blessedness of those who are in Christ Jesus, to whom there is no condemnation. May we this night lie down in peace with God; and may the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ. Vouchsafe thy blessing, O Lord, to all whom we ought in any way to remember before thee.

And now, Lord, watch over us continually, and let thy favour compass us as a shield. And may the grace of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, abide with us all for ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIII. 10.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XIV.

REMARKS.

A memorable crisis in the history of the Israelites is recorded in this chapter. Having reached the very borders of the promised land, they were suddenly commanded by God to return to the wilderness, and wander therein, until all the generation that had come out of Egypt, with the exception of Caleb and Joshua, should be consumed and die; because by their unbelief, rebellions, and murmurings, they grieved the Spirit of God, and provoked him to anger, so that he swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. The people, disregarding the encouraging account of Canaan, given by Caleb and Joshua, and influenced by the evil report of the other spies, began to murmur; at first manifesting their unbelief and discontent in loud lamentation and weeping; then in murmurings against Moses and Aaron; and at last in blasphemous reproaches against God himself. In their infatuation, they proposed to return to Egypt, and to stone the servants of God. God is provoked to destroy them: Moses intercedes for them. God punishes that generation, yet preserves them a separate people. In vindication of his righteousness in the destruction of the rebellious Israelites, God enumerates their various and aggravated provocations. On learning the purposes of God regarding them, the people, in some measure, became sensible of their loss and danger; but the spirit of unbelief and rebellion was not subdued. There was no true sense of sin, no real submission of heart to God. Accordingly they rushed headlong to danger, contrary to the command of God, and the advice of Moses. For, when men continue in unbelief, and harden their hearts in sin, they become ripe for destruction; and God may in righteous judgment leave them to their own devices, which will bring upon them swift destruction.

All these things happened to the Israelites as examples to us; and they are recorded for our instruction and warning. In their conduct, there is a remarkable exhibition of the sin of unbelief, of which one feature of peculiar malignity is presented to us in this chapter: for they not only distrusted or denied the glorious perfections of God, but also charged him with iniquity. We see that they could not enter into Canaan, though so near it, because of unbelief; and because of unbelief, thousands apparently not far from the kingdom of heaven, shall be excluded from the rest that remaineth to the people of God. Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it, or fall through the same example of unbelief. Let us beware of every measure of unbelief, as it is generally the origin of the discontent and murmuring and misery abounding in the world, and frequently brings down the displeasure of God upon his own people. For God may pardon iniquity, and yet allow men to feel the effects of their folly; he may save from hell, and yet not save from temporal calamity. How wonderful the power of prayer! 'The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.' He who pleads the perfections of God, employs irresistible arguments, and will assuredly succeed. But it is in Christ that God fully displays his perfections; and in Christ only can man rightly discern them.

PRAYER.

O Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him? What are we, O Most High, that thou shouldst visit us every morning, and try us every moment? Thou hast preserved us during the night, and hast made the outgoings of the morning to rejoice over us. Father of lights, who hast again commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shine in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of thy glory, in the face of Jesus Christ. May the Spirit of all grace raise us from the dust, and quicken us; may he enlighten our minds and purify our hearts; may he increase our faith and our love, and may our fellowship truly be with the Father, and his Son, Jesus Christ. It becomes us, O Lord, to acknowledge with deep sorrow and shame, that we have rendered ourselves unworthy to appear in thy presence, and unfit to engage in thy service; for we have sinned and come short of thy glory. Give us a true sense of sin. May we indeed know and feel ourselves to be guilty, miserable, perishing creatures, without help or hope in ourselves. Justly mightest thou have required our souls of us, and given us over to eternal death, as the wages of our sin. But in thy great mercy hast thou spared us. We would regard it as a token for good, that we are still in the place of hope, and that thou art again permitting us to approach thy throne of grace, and hast not summoned us to thy judgment seat. Most merciful God, look upon us, and deal with us in Christ Jesus, through whom alone there is access to thee, the Father. Having such an High Priest to atone for our sins, and such an advocate to plead our cause, we beseech of thee, O God, that for his sake thou wouldst be merciful to our unrighteousness; our sins, and our iniquities remember no more. Speak peace to us: say unto each of us, Be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee. We are poor and needy; Lord, think upon us; remember us with the favour thou showest to thy chosen; and supply all our need according to thy riches in glory, by Christ Jesus. Bless thy word to us as a means of grace. May it be a savour of life unto life to all, and a savour of death to none of us. Let us never judge of thy thoughts and ways according to our own. Let us never murmur at thy dispensations, or doubt thy faithfulness, because we may not now understand what thou doest. May thy Holy Spirit dwelling in us, enable us to spend our lives in submission to thy will, and dependence on thy promises, and conformity to thy law, and zeal for thy glory. O God, in whose hand our breath is, and whose are all our ways, prepare us for the events of this day, for we know not what a day may bring forth. In duty or trial, in prosperity or adversity, we desire to commit ourselves to thee, our faithful Creator, and most merciful Saviour. Enable us to glorify thee in our bodies, and in our spirits, which are thine. May our bodies be kept in honour and purity, as the tabernacle of our spirits, and the temple of our God; and may our hearts be kept right with thee, realizing thy presence, and enjoying thy favour; so that, beholding the glory of the Lord, we may be transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord. May we spend this and all our days in thy fear, remembering that thou, God, seest us in all our ways. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from all evil. Let goodness and mercy ever follow us. Hear us, Lord, in mercy; do to us and for us, exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, for the sake of Jesus Christ, thy Son and our Saviour. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVIII. 6.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE I. 1—25.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The epithet 'most excellent,' indicates that Theophilus was a person of distinction, holding an important official station. His name signifies a 'lover of God,' and such seems to have been his character. Luke, who had perfect knowledge of the events he relates, addresses his history to Theophilus, to confirm his faith in Christianity. As Luke mentions many other histories of our Lord, which have all perished, with the exception of the other three evangelists, it is plain that they were early received and preserved in the Christian church, as possessing peculiar authority and value. The Levites, or priests, whose duty it was to minister in the temple, being very numerous, were divided into twelve families, or courses, each of which served in turn from sabbath to sabbath. Individuals were appointed by lot to particular services. Thus Zacharias had been appointed by lot to burn incense. Whilst the priest offered up the daily sacrifice, and burned incense on the golden altar, the people were accustomed to assemble without, in the courts of the temple, and to offer up their prayers. Hence prayer is often compared to incense; and the Jews, wherever they might be, were in the habit of observing the hours of the morning and evening sacrifice as special seasons for prayer. This was a most appropriate typical representation of Christ, the high priest of our profession, appearing in the presence of God for us, making intercession on the ground of his atoning sacrifice, and presenting the prayers of the saints before God, perfumed with the incense of his own merits.

The birth of John the Baptist was attended with various circumstances which showed that he was a man highly honoured of God, and which were suitable to the vast importance of the office, and the great excellence of the character of him who should be the harbinger of Messiah, his forerunner, who should go before his face, and prepare the way of the Lord. His office and character were foretold by the prophet Isaiah, and also by Malachi, one of whose predictions regarding him concludes the Old Testament.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

‘Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord.’ ‘The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age.’ To them that sow righteousness shall be a sure reward. They who meekly submit to the will of God, and continue in prayer, though an answer be delayed, and cleave to the Lord even when he seems to disappoint their fondest hopes, shall find that the Lord’s time and way are the best, both for the exercise of their patience and hope, and for the display of his own power and special favour.

No one is sinless; but, by divine grace, true Christians may be blameless in the sight of men, and righteous even in the sight of God, through the righteousness of Christ imputed to them, and received by faith. God will, in faithfulness, chasten even the objects of his peculiar favour for the least symptom of unbelief, which is so dishonouring to him.

It is delightful and profitable to mark the fulfilment of prophecy. If the promises of God rejoiced the hearts of his people in ancient times, how much more ought our hope and confidence in God to be confirmed by the clear fulfilment of these promises, so faithfully recorded in the books of the New Testament, by men under the direction of the same Spirit who inspired the prophets. How great and glorious must the salvation of God be, seeing he made such wonderful preparations for its accomplishment! Even the forerunner of Messiah was made the subject of ancient prophecy; and in reference to him, God made miraculous displays of his character and glory. How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, and what must be our condemnation if we despise Messiah himself, God’s own Son?

PRAYER.

Great art thou, O Lord, and greatly to be praised; thy greatness is unsearchable. The heavens declare thy glory, and the firmament sheweth thy handiwork: day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. All thy works and all thy ways demonstrate thine eternal power and Godhead. Thou hast never left thyself without a witness, in that thou doest good, and givest us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness. But thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name. O may the Spirit of all grace, by whose inspiration holy men of old spake and wrote, enlighten our understanding to discern the truth as it is in Jesus, and open our hearts to receive it in the love thereof. May the word of Christ dwell in us richly, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. Preserve us, O Lord, from all presumptuous confidence in our own wisdom, strength, or goodness. Convince us that we know nothing, and can do nothing aright as of ourselves, and that in our flesh there is no good thing. Convince us that our hearts are deceitful and prone to evil; that we live in an ungodly, ensnaring world; and that we wrestle not only against flesh and blood, but also against principalities and powers, and against our adversary the devil, who, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour. May we, through the Spirit, put on the whole armour of God, and in the strength of Christ, the Captain of our salvation, may we continue steadfast and unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, resisting the devil, overcoming the world, crucifying the flesh with the affections and lusts. Let no presumptuous or besetting sin have dominion over us, lest, if we regard iniquity in our heart, the Lord will not hear us. And may the Spirit of holiness enable us to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord. Search us, O God, and know our hearts; try us, and know our thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in us, and lead us in the way everlasting. May we, this night, O Lord, experience the fulfilment of thy gracious promise, that where two or three are gathered together in thy name, there art thou in the midst of them. Lord Jesus, come even unto us; breathe on us, and say unto us, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. And may the Spirit of Christ abide with us for ever. And if there be any of us still dead in trespasses and sins, O may he quicken them by his mighty power, and raise them to newness of life; may he slay the enmity of the carnal mind, and shed abroad the love of God in their hearts, and abide in them as the Spirit of adoption, that without one exception, we all may walk together in the light, and life, and liberty, and joy of God's dear children. Graciously visit all those whom we ought to remember before thee. Comfort mourners in Zion. Speak peace to troubled souls. Give rest to them that labour and are heavy laden. Let all who trust in thee find that thou art a present help in time of need. And now, O Shepherd of Israel, watch over us this night. Give us the sleep of thy beloved. Whilst we live, may we live to the Lord, that in life or in death we may ever be the Lord's. And unto the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, one God, be everlasting glory and praise. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 16.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XV.

REMARKS.

Many of the ceremonies prescribed in the law of Moses were not required to be performed except in the land of Canaan. The Lord demands no service of his people which he does not give them the means and opportunities of performing. The Mosaic institute was temporary and local. It was a bodily service, and a yoke of bondage. But they who worship God in the spirit, may do so not only at Jerusalem but everywhere. The different sacrifices signified the different acts and duties of religion. They were designed to set forth, 1. The pardon of sin. 2. Communion between God and the pardoned sinner. 3. Gratitude to God for his bounty and goodness. The law of Moses was, in Palestine, the law of the land. Jehovah was not only the spiritual, but civil ruler of the country. And no dissent could there be allowed, for the same reason that nations permit no dissent from their civil law: also to show that, though God does not immediately punish, yet he never tolerates dissent from the truth and righteousness enjoined by his law on all his reasonable creatures. If we will join ourselves to the Lord's people, hoping to partake of their privileges, we must be content to subject ourselves to their sacrifices and duties. He that will not resemble them in these, will not resemble them in those. Even the smallest of God's mercies deserves to be gratefully acknowledged. If daily bread be worth our asking, it is worth our thanks. As there is a great difference in point of guilt, so the law of God makes a wide distinction between sins of ignorance, and sins against knowledge. He that transgresses in the former way, is chargeable at the worst, with inattention and negligence; he that sins knowingly, despises the authority of God. Even sins of ignorance may not go without punishment. The Bible knows nothing of venial sins, though it makes a vast difference among sins in respect of their guilt. Ignorance which is inevitable, is blameless. It will not avail us, however, to say 'we did not know,' when we might have known. By 'sins of ignorance,' in the Bible, are always meant sins which the individual had the means of knowing were sins, if he had used the opportunities of instruction which he possessed. For sins knowingly committed the law of Moses provided no atonement. Blessed be God, 'the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin.' The man who gathered sticks on the sabbath, sinned presumptuously, and, therefore, he was put to death. It matters not how small or seemingly unimportant an action be, which is done in contempt of God. To despise the Lord never can be a trivial transgression. Obedience is often better tested by little things than by great. There was, so far as appears, no natural connection or resemblance between fringes on the borders of the garment, and the commands of God. Yet when those were expressly appointed to represent these, the one would instantly suggest the other. So that every time he dressed himself the Hebrew was taught the necessity of his putting on righteousness, and being clothed with it, as with a garment: and that obedience was an ornament no less than a defence. All the Jews seem to have worn these fringes, Matt. ix. 20. Doubtless many paid far more attention to them, than to that which they signified. Some make their phylacteries very broad, but their obedience very narrow, having much of the form, little of the power of godliness. We must neither dispense with outward institutions, on pretence that true religion is spiritual, and as such, has its seat in the heart; nor, on the other hand, must we put external ordinances out of their place. As means, they are invaluable: but we must never forget they are only means. They should be regarded as a good road is, excellent as affording us facility of proceeding to the place whither we are going. God, who never requires any thing of us without reason, has also authority to require what he does. And if his right, as being our creator and proprietor, admit of any increase, this would flow from his inestimable benefits. The people whom God has created, may well feel their obligations to serve him; the more so, as being the people whom he has also redeemed.

PRAYER.

O Lord God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, thou art the Shepherd of Israel, whose watchful providence and care are over all thy works. We approach thee in the name of him who was promised to the fathers, and foreshadowed by sacrifices and offices of the law; and whom all the prophets sang, and all thy saints of old expected with joyful hope. Thee, Father of mercies, eternal Jehovah; thee, Son of God, Saviour of the world; thee, blessed Spirit of grace, Comforter and guide; thee, our God, who livest for ever and ever, we magnify and praise. We sinners, dust and ashes, are permitted to speak unto God. We bless thee, O

Father in heaven, that one is the Mediator between thee and us, who is our brother, and thy Son; and that, with the power of God, and the sympathy of man, he maketh intercession in thy presence, on our behalf. By the publication of thy mercy, we are encouraged to confess our sins. The Lord blot out all our innumerable transgressions, through Jesus Christ, our sacrifice and priest; and give us the assurance of thy favour, and conscious peace with thee. And may the Father and the Son dwell in us; may our bodies be temples of the Holy Ghost; our hearts, altars whence the smoke of many sacrifices, kindled by fire from heaven, may ascend before thee as incense. Let our old man be sacrificed in the strength of him who suffered in weakness, but liveth by the power of God, and whose strength is made perfect in the weakness of his members. Good Lord, who hast graciously preserved us during the past night, keep us, this day, from all bodily harm, and all spiritual danger. May we be sober, and watch unto prayer. May we be just in all our dealings, truthful in all our words, kind in all our behaviour, as in thy sight. May we not be conformed to this world, neither seek our portion in this life, but choose thee for our sure portion, and wait for the coming of thy Son. May our friends know thee, the true God, and Jesus thy Son, whom thou hast sent. Pardon our enemies. Bless all men. Refresh and enlarge thy church. Let thy word run and be glorified, through Jesus Christ our Lord, in whose name we address thee, Our Father, &c.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXV. 9.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE I. 26—45.

REMARKS.

John, one of the greatest of the prophets, is sent as precursor of Jesus, and Gabriel, one of the most exalted angels, is commissioned to announce him. How great must he be who is thus attended! Gabriel goes to a despised region, and there to a poor woman, living in a poor cottage, yet whose heart was a palace of 'the king, the Lord of hosts.' God loves to honour that which men despise, and to abase that which they honour. For he estimates things and persons according to their real worth. The angel salutes the virgin as a saint, he does not pray to her as a goddess. Yet she is worthily remembered of men, whom the angel proclaimed 'beloved of God.' We would not falsify her own prediction, 'All generations shall call me blessed,' or happy. 'The troubles of holy minds end ever in comforts.' 'Fear not, thou hast found favour with God,' is a message which may well inspire confidence, 'For thy benignity is better than life. Wonderful in itself was the intelligence which Mary received in this wonderful manner, and also wonderful as it respected her. News affects us more, as it more nearly concerns ourselves. The promise of Messiah's advent was the most glorious that heaven ever sent to earth. But what did Mary hear? that she was to be the mother of God's Son, who was the consolation of Israel, the hope of the fathers and the desire of all nations, to whom his Father should give the throne of David,—an endless reign! By the greatness of his benefits, God is wont to exceed our greatest expectations, yea, our highest imaginings. Mary does not question what is told her, but it perplexes her. We may modestly seek resolution of our difficulties, lest they grow into doubts, which, constantly surging in the soul, may gradually wash away the foundations of our faith. God gives us the evidences of his power and faithfulness as pillars to support our staggering faith. Unbelief springs from confining our regards to man; faith comes from the contemplation and knowledge of God. Nothing in the world can be so incredible as that God should lie, or that his power should not be able to do any thing whatever. As when God would humble, so when he would honour us, we are not to hold disputation with him. Let us say with Mary, 'Be it unto me according to thy word.' Christ formed in us, and dwelling in our hearts, is not less a miracle and yet more a blessing, than that which was granted to the mother of Jesus. May Christ be formed in our hearts the hope of glory, and dwell in our hearts by faith.

PRAYER.

O thou faithful God, who, in the fulness of the times, didst send forth thy Son made of a woman, we adore thy mercy and thy love, thus manifested to the world. For the world lay before thee, bitten to death by the serpent, whose head thy Son hath now bruised, and whose works he came to destroy, not without labour, and much suffering, and baptism with blood, and tasting of death. Adored be the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich. And now, since God is made flesh, and Christ is become the Son of man, and our brother, by taking of our humanity, may we also receive his Spirit, be made partakers of a divine nature, and become sons of God. And though we have borne the image of the earthy man, and through him are heirs of sin and death, may we be created anew in the image of the heavenly Adam, and become heirs with him of eternal life. Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, make us, though unworthy, thy sons by faith in Christ; restore to us the character and privileges of thy children, and also the Spirit, whereby they cry, Abba, Father. And may we have the confidence of children in thee, the love, the holy desire in all things, even the least, to please thee. Let it be our meat and drink to do thy will. Forgive, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, the sins and imperfections of the past day. O cleanse us from secret faults, keep back thy servants also from presumptuous sins. May we, from day to day, grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. With more earnestness and less reserve, may we daily offer up our bodies living sacrifices to thee, the living God: and the good Lord make us perfect in every good work to do thy will, working in us that is pleasing in thy sight. Shepherd of Israel, watch over us this night, guarding us from all bodily and spiritual evil. And if we awake not in this world, may we awake in a better, where is day without night, and joy without sorrow, and life without death. We commend all men to thy mercy, our friends to thy love and care. Reward our benefactors, forgive and bless our enemies. And these things we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XVI.

REMARKS.

The sacred history is not only a record of facts, but an exhibition of doctrine, and a lesson of duty; 'being, though literally true, yet pregnant with a perpetual allegory.' This chapter contains instruction, reproof, correction, &c. as necessary as abundant. The sins of the world, and of the church, are written in the punishments of both. The best government, best administered, is not sufficient to prevent murmurs among the governed. When God was lawgiver, and Moses was judge, Israel complained he was an oppressed people. Who says, wherever there is general dissatisfaction, there is bad government? Not the Bible, nor they who have learned of it. Surely ambition is insane. For how hard is power to be obtained, how difficult to be used! If well exercised, it gets no thanks; and if ill, no mercy, no consideration. The owner of it is full of care and anxiety, surrounded with envy, jealousy, and reproach. People are ever ready to believe those who assure them that themselves are good, and their rulers are bad; even though there be the clearest proofs of their rulers' virtue, and their own corruption. He that is conscious of integrity may well be confident in the midst of calumny, and may appeal to God who searcheth the hearts. Men's advancement, instead of satisfying, only whets their ambition. The lust of power, as of money, has no bounds. Satan was high even among the dominions of heaven, but 'thought that one step higher would set him highest.' Let us consider, that if we mount one step higher on the ladder than our appointed place, that step will break and project us to the bottom. If temporal ambition be dangerous, spiritual ambition is damnable. How bold sinners are in their impiety! Instead of acknowledging, they justify their transgression. Moses, the instrument of their mercies, they charge with being the cause of their miseries, and they attribute their sufferings (the fruit of their own sins) to him whose prayers had, by God's grace, saved them often from death. Whom God hath chosen, God will acknowledge. Being conscious of acting with godly sincerity, we need not fear to appeal to him. All the congregation to whom Moses had been as a nursing-father, and for whom he was willing to die, take part against him, and with his enemies. The ingratitude of those we love, is more bitter than death. And have we not taken part against thee, O Jesus, though thou didst shed thy precious blood for us! Let our rebellions, which have pierced thee, O Saviour, pierce us also! They who pretend the people are never discontented, except when they are ill governed, know neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. They are ignorant of all history, sacred and secular. When Israel mutinied, was not Jehovah king and Moses his deputy? We must separate ourselves from God's enemies, else we shall not be able to separate ourselves from their punishment. 'Come out of her, my people, and be not partakers of her plagues.' How merciful is Moses! He would not have those punished who were ready to stone him. He prays for the unthankful people. The spiritual mind, and the carnal mind, are ever true each to itself. There is difference of guilt and of punishment between those who seduce others, and those who are seduced by them to sin. We may not be able to foretell the particular manner in which sinners will be punished; but that they will be punished (except they repent) is as certain as that there is a God who is just. Signal and notorious sins will meet with signal and terrible judgments. Korah and his associates were lately shouting against meek Moses, in wanton malice; now they are shouting in the jaws of inevitable perdition. The congregation who are so terrified by their punishment, were not at all afraid of their sin. The saint fears sin; the sinner fears only the wages of it. O let us be warned. The enemies of the Lord, and of his servants, shall go alive into the pit, whence the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever. God turns sinners' punishments into monuments to warn others. The masts of the wrecked ship serve for beacons. Let no man take upon himself any office in the church, unless he be regularly called thereto. No man must decide upon his own fitness and qualification. Self-love is too partial to judge fairly. When men will persevere in blindness and obstinacy, God will make them feel the full weight of his anger. Sinners will blame any one but themselves, who alone are blame-worthy. While speaking against Moses, they are in truth blaspheming God, who so understands their murmurs. And since others' destruction will not instruct them, he sends it on themselves. Men who will not be taught, must be destroyed. We might suppose Moses and Aaron now so exasperated, that they should feel no concern about so stiff-necked a generation. Quite otherwise. Moses directs, and Aaron makes atonement. So didst thou, O prophet and priest of thy spiritual Israel! These words thy last breath uttered, 'Father, forgive them, they know not what they do.'

PRAYER.

Almighty God, who didst give Moses to be a prophet and leader, Aaron to be a priest to thine ancient Israel, we thank thee, that thou hast given unto us Jesus thy Son, to be our prophet, priest, and king. We praise thee, O God, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for what he performed and suffered on earth, and for what he still does in heaven. We acknowledge, with humble gratitude, his divine instructions, illustrated by his most holy life: his humbling himself to death for our sins; his conquest of death, and satan, and all the powers of darkness; his resurrection and exaltation at thy right hand in heaven; together with those precious gifts of the Holy Ghost, which he hath given to his church. O God, with shame we confess that, as the ancient Israel rebelled against Moses and Aaron, thy messengers to them, so have we rebelled against the more glorious messenger, our Lord Jesus Christ. Like them, we have rebelled against infinite love; and we have, like them, resisted our own good, and sought our own destruction. Lord, let us be pardoned and accepted, even through the intercession of him whose authority we have often cast off, but who has not cast us off from his compassion and love. May we wash in the fountain of his blood and be clean. The Lord take away the stony heart out of our flesh. And may we now at length submit to infinite power, infinite holiness, infinite love and mercy. Thou desirest not our death. May we not seek that which thou dost not delight in, and is our own ruin. Each day we need anew to implore thy mercy to pardon us. May we have faith to be healed, and being justified by faith, may we have peace with thee. May we also rejoice in the hope of thy glory: yea, may we rejoice in all trials, which are sent to prepare us for this blessed consummation. And may thy love be abundantly shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost. May our past sins cause us daily grief; and thy forgiving love, daily joy and thankfulness; and, confidently believing thou hast first loved us, may we love thee. Let thy Spirit witness with our spirits that we are thy children, and heirs with thy dear Son. O let us know that we know thee, by the spirit thou givest to thy children. Gracious God, may we keep all thy commandments, for to them that love thee they are not grievous, but light and pleasant. We pray thee to enlighten, bless, and save all men. Be the God of our friends. Reward our benefactors. May we love our enemies, and do good to them that injure us. Keep us, O Shepherd of Israel, during this day, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXVI. 3.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE I. 46—80.

REMARKS.

God's mercies and favours are only thrown away upon those whom they do not move to gratitude and praise. Next to our sins, the goodness of God is most fitted to excite us to humility. Congenial souls are not soon tired of each other's company. And there is no congeniality so perfect, no affection either so pure or so strong, as those which unite the children of God. The flesh binds not so powerfully or closely as the Spirit. What God promises, how strange or impracticable soever, he will in due time perform. A son was a blessing; a son, by promise of God, an especial blessing; and the assurance that he should be not only a great prophet, but the forerunner of Messiah, this made the cup of Zacharias and Elisabeth run over, and their hearts run over with holy joy and thankfulness. That which God hath given must be given to God. The child, who was a mark of God's faithfulness, must bear in his body the mark of God's covenant. He must also bear the name which God gave him before he was born. Express divine appointments must overrule mere human customs and apparent proprieties. He that will obey God, must obey him in that which is least as well as in that which is greatest. Unbelief dishonours God; when it speaks it blasphemes him. Zacharias read his sin in his punishment. But when his distrust was removed his dumbness was cured, and he has now power to speak when he is qualified to utter God's praises. God frequently draws attention to that which his servants are to deliver from him, by first drawing attention to their persons. When the Lord is evidently making preparation, we may be sure something of note will follow. They that reverently observe God's ways, will always find something worthy of being observed. 'The tongue of the dumb shall sing.' Zacharias is not only enabled to speak, but to speak such things as he never uttered or conceived before. He that a little ago would not believe that he could have a son, now celebrates not only the birth of that son, but the advent of the Son of the Highest, whose way his own child should prepare. As unbelief is blind and deaf, so let it be dumb also, till it learn to disown itself. Zacharias is now filled with the Holy Ghost, which, though not so fully given till after Christ's ascension, was often granted before. And he sings of salvation from all misery, and from sin their parent—and this for men of every clime and every age. O

Lord, open our lips and our mouth shall sing aloud of thy praise.' He that is destined for extraordinary employments needs an extraordinary preparation. The man who is to appear in the face of the world, and is to converse much with all sorts of men, requires to converse much with God in solitude, and to sound the depths of his own heart. And he only is likely to prove superior both to the favours and frowns of men, who has a lively sense of the power and presence, the wrath and favour of God.

PRAYER.

O God, our heavenly Father, who knowest the end from the beginning, and callest the things which are not as though they were, we adore and praise thee. Manifold and rich are thy promises to them that fear and love thee, and yet thou doest ever exceed, in the fulfilment, that thou hast spoken. O how great is thy loving-kindness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee, for them that trust in thee before the sons of men. Blessed be thou that thou hast visited and redeemed thy people. May we be delivered from all our enemies, and serve thee, without fear, in holiness and righteousness all our days. May the light which is come into the world, guide our feet into the way of peace. Shine into our hearts, O God, giving us the knowledge of thyself in the fear of Jesus Christ. May we know thee as our God, and the author of all good; thy Son Jesus Christ as the deliverer from all evil; and may we know our own ignorance, guilt, and misery to be such that thou only canst deliver us from them: and out of Christ's fulness may we receive even grace for grace. O God, forgive all our sins for Christ's sake, who died for our sins and rose again for our justification. And may all the sins which are pardoned be hated and crucified; and may we yield ourselves as servants unto God. Let thy will be ours in all things. Give us humble, meek, patient, and resigned spirits. May we joy in God and have no confidence in the flesh. Heavenly Father, may we be daily more humbled by our imperfections and barrenness. Cut us not down as cumberers of the ground. But spare us, good Lord, and may we henceforth be neither barren nor unfruitful in thy work. Graciously keep us during the silent watches of the night; and may we live in preparation for the endless day to which thy children shall awake, when the night and sleep of death are ended. All that we ask is in the name of the Lord Jesus, our advocate. Amen. Our Father, &c.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXIX. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

'It is in the hand of the Lord to make great, and to give strength unto all.' He is the fountain of honour. He chose the tribe of Judah to be above the rest as to royalty. He chose Levi's tribe for the priesthood; and of that tribe Aaron to be high priest. And we know a greater than Aaron, of whom he says, 'Behold my servant whom I uphold; mine elect in whom my soul delighteth:' a prophet, and priest, and king, all in one, whose name ever endureth—whose priesthood is everlasting.

In every well regulated society there is subordination; there is gradation of ranks: the head and the members; the rulers and the ruled. And so, in the church of God, God is the God of order and of peace. That there might be no dispute, among the tribes of Israel, upon whom the honour of the high priesthood should devolve, the rods or sceptres of each tribe are appointed to be disposed in regular order, the name of each prince written upon the rod; and the rods are left all night before the ark; in the morning the rod of Aaron is covered with blossoms and almonds; those of the other tribes remain dry as before.

Aaron's rod that budded, which was laid up for a token against the rebels, and which continued for ages in this state, became a fit emblem of the Messiah's resurrection, as declarative of his priesthood being acceptable to God; nothing being more fit to represent one raised from the dead, than a dead branch restored to vegetable life, and made to blossom and bring forth fruit.

Rebellion and insubordination are suppressed sometimes by awful judgments, as in the case of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; at other times, as here, by the manifestation of God's sovereignty in the distribution of his special favours.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, and submit ourselves to him in all things. Beware of unholy ambition and rivalry; of emulation and strife; of Diotrophes-like, loving to have the pre-eminence; or with the disciples, striving which shall be the greatest. Let us take warning from the rebellion among the tribes, which could scarcely be suppressed even by miracles, forcing upon them the sense of a present Deity, and alarming them with dread of summary vengeance. Let our submission be willing, and not forced or constrained, as theirs seems to have been. The spirit of the gospel is not of 'fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.'

Behold, a greater than Aaron is here—the great high priest of our profession, who hath an unchangeable priesthood; the rod of whose strength is sent out of Zion, and who ruleth in the midst of his enemies.

Let us give glory and honour to the Son, even as we honour the Father. To him 'let every knee bow, let every tongue confess.' Seek to be united to the Lord Jesus Christ, that you may resemble the rod that budded, and blossomed, and brought forth fruit; and let none of us be barren and unfruitful. Ministers of the gospel, more especially, should not resemble the dry wood, but the fruit-bearing almond rod of Aaron; exhibiting holiness in their conversation, and usefulness in their ministry.

PRAYER.

Almighty and everlasting God, which art, and wast, and art to come; who livest and reignest for ever and ever; who givest life to all that live, and breath to all the inhabitants of the earth, we, thy dependent creatures, sinful dust and ashes, have undertaken to speak unto thee, and to call upon thy name. A glorious high throne, from the beginning, is the place of sanctuary to thy people, even the throne of grace; above it are the cherubim and seraphim, with their wings covering their feet, and who cry, 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts, the whole earth is full of thy glory.' How shall we stand before thee, we who are of unclean lips, and who dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips? So awful is the view of thy holiness and glory, and so humbling to us poor sinners, that we are ready to tremble, and cannot behold. We should exceedingly fear and quake at a sight so terrible, but we view the glory of Christ, of God manifest in flesh—our kinsman Redeemer, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, and we are at once humbled and encouraged. We come boldly to the throne of grace, through him who is our great high priest, passed through the heavens, and who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities; and we implore mercy and grace for seasonable help. We rejoice in the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star; the true Aaron, yea, the true Melchizedek, the priest upon his throne, the alpha and omega, the living one who was dead, but is now alive and liveth for evermore, and who hath the keys of hell and of death. We rejoice in the rod with which, as a shepherd, he feeds and protects his flock; and in his rod of power and authority, as king as well as high priest, to defend and rule his church, and to subdue all his and our enemies. Go forth, O thou mighty One, with thy sword on thy thigh, in glory and majesty, yet in meekness, truth, and righteousness. Let thine arrows be sharp in the hearts of thine enemies; that the people may fall under thee in willing subjection. Upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not upon thy name, thou hast said thou wilt pour out thy fury; but we desire, O Lord, to give thee the glory due to thy name, as our God, Creator, Redeemer, and Comforter; our God in covenant, we would flee from the wrath to come, we would lay hold upon eternal life. We would keep the passover and the sprinkling of blood, lest the destroyer should touch us. We would come under the shelter of the blood of atonement, and have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. And we pray, O Lord, that we may all of us be thy children, by adoption and by regeneration, receiving Christ Jesus the Lord for wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; putting on Christ Jesus, not making provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof. We pray, most gracious God and Father in Christ Jesus, that the blessings we ask for ourselves may be imparted also to all whom we should remember before thee, that they and we may be one in Christ Jesus; and that the blessings of thy grace may descend copiously, and rest upon the heads and the members of the several families around us, and throughout the land. And we do now, most gracious God, offer thee the tribute of our thanks for the mercies of the preceding night and of this new day; and in the name, and in the words of our Lord, we would sum up our requests, saying, Our Father, which art in heaven, &c.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXXVIII. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE II. 1—24.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. The decree issued by the Roman emperor, for the enrolment of all the families of that vast empire, called, in the style of that great and haughty people, 'the whole world,' is an event of importance and notoriety, which fixes the date, most unquestionably and fully, of the birth of the Messiah.

A great, a mighty, and far-famed emperor reigned over the greatest nation on earth, who issues his important and high decree; but an event takes place, by the world, at the time, unnoticed and unknown, of far greater importance than all the fortunes of the most august of the Cæsars, the advent of the Son of God, the Saviour, whose name is called Wonderful, Counsellor, &c. Ver. 6—8. 'And so it was.' Mary, enrolled at Bethlehem, according to prediction, is thus publicly recognised as the lineal descendant of the house of David, with Joseph, her husband, of the same family. Wonderful are the ways of divine providence, in thus making the counsels and decrees of men to praise him, executing his supreme decree. Behold greatness combined with meanness; the greatness real, the meanness only apparent; the blessed virgin bringing forth her son, the heir of David—in his divine nature, the heir of all things. Judge not by appearances. He who is the Lord of all, grows up not as a wide-spreading cedar, or majestic oak, but as 'a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground.'

During the watches of that memorable night, an event thus takes place, first in importance in the annals of time. It is signalized by the throng of angels, by a multitude of the heavenly host, who sing, 'Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good-will to men.' In this sinful apostate world, which resembles the sea which cannot rest, there has seldom been a pause from fierce contests. But at this time, when the Saviour was born, the temple of Janus was shut, the symbol of universal peace through the Roman empire, the world; while glory redounds to God in the highest, compared with whom, even Augustus Cæsar is but a worm. Humble shepherds are made first acquainted with the great and blessed events of the nativity, while the inhabitants of the palace are passed by; and they justly count themselves highly honoured by this communication, and, trusting the care of their flocks to him who never slumbereth, they repair to the scene where the heavenly babe was born, 'they then made known abroad the saying told them concerning the child, and returned praising God.' Ver. 19. What, meantime, were the feelings of the mother of Jesus? These cannot be imagined or described. 'Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.' Ver. 21—24. Every thing was done according to the law, in regard to circumcision and presentation in the temple. Thus it behoved that all righteousness should be fulfilled in regard to the Messiah, as well as by him.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us mark, admire, and adore the wondrous ways of the Lord, in the time, place, and circumstances of our Saviour's nativity. Nothing is contingent; nothing of chance; every thing by all wise, determinate counsel and foreknowledge. Go to the stable and manger of Bethlehem, and learn humility and contentment, even in mean circumstances. Repair to the plain where the shepherds tend their flocks by night; realize by faith, in holy meditation, the amazing events then announced, and the celestial harmony of the angelical hosts. Have you not still greater reason than the angels to praise and to rejoice? Why should you be insensible of your unspeakable mercies, while the angels proclaim them with joy? O why do you not all cry out with rapture, Glory to God in the highest, glory to the prince of peace, glory to the Holy Spirit for the amazing good-will to men!

PRAYER.

O thou ruler of all, God of our lives, length of our days, our times are in thy hand, and we desire to acknowledge that we are thine. The day, O Lord, is thine, the night also is thine. To the close of another day and of another week thou hast brought us. Another portion of our precious time is gone. We anticipate the commencement of the sabbath of rest suspending our worldly occupation, and giving us a respite from our ordinary cares. We thank thee, O Lord, for that great salvation which, in the fullness of time, has been brought near to us; and that we are privileged to join with, and to emulate, the angels in their song. With glory to thee, O Lord, every morning should begin, and every evening close. Every successive week, and month, and year; every sabbath, and every sacramental season, invites us to meditate of and to celebrate the wondrous doings of the Lord, in nature, in providence, and in grace. Many, O Lord, are the wonderful things thou hast wrought, while blind, thoughtless, rebellious man observes not the operation of thy hand, neither regardeth thy doings. We would magnify thy works which we behold. Especially would we look with holy wonder into the great mystery of redemption, God dwelling with men! humanity joined to divinity! the Lord of all a babe in the manger at Bethlehem; angels celebrating his birth, while humble shepherds are the heralds of the event; the greatest event silently taking place, the great ones of the earth unconscious of it, which has produced the most important revolution in the history of the world, for lo, the prophecy is fulfilled, 'I will shake all nations, and the Desire of all nations shall come;' and, 'the stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall fill the whole earth.' Now is come salvation, the tabernacle of God is with men! We have access, both Jew and Gentile, through one Mediator, by one Spirit, to the Father. We would ascribe to thee, most High, the glory in the highest; we would bless thee for the peace made by the blood of the cross, and sealed by the Spirit in the hearts of thy children; and we would rejoice in the good-will shown to rebellious men, that God, the Lord, might dwell among them. And we pray, O Lord, that we, now before thee, one family, may be one in Christ Jesus, in whom all the families of the earth are blessed; that we may be accepted in our morning and evening sacrifices, and enjoy the blessedness of those whose God is the Lord. To thee, O Lord, we commend all the concerns of thy church and people; praying that peace may be with them, and mercy, and on all the Israel of God; and that thy way may be known on earth, and thy saving health among all nations. And we pray that there may be preparation, this evening, throughout this land of light and of sabbaths, for the services of the approaching holy day; that thy ministers may be assisted in their studies, and blessed in their souls; that they may come forth, fully fraught with the blessings of the gospel of peace, and may there be great grace, and mercy, and peace multiplied upon all thy people. And now, O Lord, we commend ourselves to thy gracious protection during the night watches. Let no plague come nigh our dwelling. Give us to rest in quietness of body and of mind, and to rise rejoicing in thy love. Blot out, we beseech thee, all our sins, and the iniquities of our holy things. Hear us and answer us, for our blessed Redeemer's sake. Amen.

TWELFTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXVI.

REMARKS.

Atheism is the root of all evil, the fear of the Lord is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death; but when the fear of God is wanting, nothing truly good can be expected. To the wise and devout observer of mankind, the works and ways of the multitude around declare most plainly and undeniably that they are utterly destitute of the principle of religion—the fear of God. It is still a part of the language of indictments in the law of the land, 'that such a one casting off the fear of God did so and so.' A reason this, surely, why the fear of God should be taught and inculcated as an essential part of good rule as well as of internal culture of the mind and of the heart. From human depravity, from the contemplation of man the greatest foe to man, how delightful to turn with the psalmist to the divine character, and in direct devout address. Ver. 5—7. 'Thy mercy is in the heavens,' &c. The view of the mercy of Jehovah is indeed delightful and pleasing, like the eye looking on the blue serene vault of heaven: his faithfulness and truth are also marked as with a sun beam; his righteousness is not like man's, movable as the vapour, yet deceiving the eye as if solid; but like the mountains, the most stable and durable of all material things: and his 'judgments,' not shallow and superficial like those of men, but profound and inscrutable like the unseen movements and secrets of the mighty deep. These glorious perfections are not only to be subjects of solemn reflection, but also of immediate devotional address in prayer, adoration, thanksgiving, and expressions of holy confidence, as these perfections are gloriously manifested in the face of Christ Jesus. Ver. 7. Our Saviour bids us behold 'the fowls of the air how our heavenly Father feedeth them,' and to infer that he will never cease to provide for his own people: and so the psalmist here, 'Lord, thou preservest man and beast, how excellent is thy loving-kindness, O God; therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.' Ver. 8, 9. Better blessings still than those of earth, than food and raiment, are enjoyed by God's people, even 'the goodness of his house,' the precious and soul-satisfying provision, and regaling feast, and reviving draught from the river which gladdens the city of God. The fountain is in Jehovah himself, and can never fail as the streams of earthly joy always do. The water of life proceeds from the throne of God, and of the Lamb. God also is 'light,' and he that knows the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, may be said to dwell in the midst of light, and is thereby enlightened, and enlivened, and truly blessed. Ver. 10, 11. Thus is encouragement given to pray for the continued enjoyment of the Lord's special mercies, and their effects to be vouchsafed still more and more to his people: and his holy, faithful, and righteous dealings in behalf of the upright in heart, who shall most assuredly have the 'dominion in the morning' of deliverance, and in the resurrection, so that the insolent sons of pride shall not be permitted to move a foot against them, nor the hand of violence to shake them from their confidence and firm standing. Ver. 12. The conclusion is in the language of holy triumph, like that of Moses and the Israelites, when they saw Pharaoh and his host lying lifeless on the shore of the Red sea; 'there are the workers of iniquity fallen, they are cast down and will not be able to rise.'

PRAYER.

O thou, most great, most holy, most wise, most faithful, most merciful Jehovah, who art above all, and through all, enthroned in glory, sitting between the cherubims, whom all the hosts of heaven obey, whom all thy saints love and works praise, and whom legions of rebel angels fear and dread, thy name is venerable, thy works are to be admired; thou art God alone! This day especially thou art in thy temple to be held in reverence, whilst, as the God of Israel, thou givest strength and power to thy people. We thank thee, O most blessed God, for the revelation of the Sun of righteousness, the brightness of thy glory, and the express image of thy person; who, upholding all things by the word of his power, has by himself purged our sins, and is now, in our nature, at thy right hand. In him we rejoice that there is a glorious union and harmony of thy mercy and truth, of thy righteousness and grace. We pray, most gracious Father, in Christ Jesus our Lord, that we may be made to know experimentally, and savingly, what it is to delight ourselves in thee, as rich in mercy to all that call upon thee, as faithful in keeping covenant with thy chosen One, on whom our help is laid, as immovable in thy regards and in thy engagements to thy people, for thou art the Rock of ages, the dwelling-place of thy people, in all generations. We desire, O Lord, to bless thy name, that we are invited this day to come to thy house, to thy feast of fat things; to thyself

O Jehovah, our provider, our healer, our banner, our peace, our righteousness, our sun, our shield, who givest peace and glory, and withholdest no good from thy children; and we pray, holy Father, that we may come near even to thy seat, that we may wait upon thee humbly and heartily, that we may draw nourishment to our souls from thy blessed word, through the influences of thy Spirit and blessing; comfort from thy precious promises; warning from thy threatenings and reproofs; direction and light from thy perfect precepts, so that we may not err from the straight line of duty and of safety; and O may we so occupy this blessed day, this golden portion of time, that the fruits may appear good and abundant many days hence. Our Father in heaven, we pray that thy great name may be glorified this day, and every day, be hallowed here, and in every place, and more especially that through the means of thy faithful word and precious ordinances, there may be wonders of power and of grace done in the name, and by the power of the Lord Jesus among us, by thy servant our pastor; and on all the churches an abundant out-pouring of thy Holy Spirit, making the whole hill of Zion, even thy church, and all places around, a blessing. O send down showers of blessings, and so let thy kingdom advance, and thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. And now, O Lord, what wait we for, but thy blessing to be on us, now worshipping, as we trust, in one of the dwellings of Jacob, who are about to worship thee in the gates of Zion, which thou lovest still more, when we would rejoice soon to have fellowship with thee, and with thy people. We commend ourselves to thy gracious care and keeping, O thou hearer of prayer, and fountain of light, and of comfort, of holiness, and of peace! Pardon all our sins, O Lord, and the sin which has attended us in this approach to thy holy presence, and hear us, and do far above what we are able to ask or to think, for our blessed Redeemer's sake, to whom, with thee, O Father, and the ever blessed Spirit, be all honour, and glory, and blessing, and praise, now, and for ever more. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CL.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXVII.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. It is at once foolish and sinful to allow our own peace of mind to be disturbed, because the wicked often are prosperous in this world; the fading grass, and withering herbs of the field and garden, might serve to correct this error, for these afford fit emblems of the evanescent nature of all earthly glory. The best remedy for this evil, and at the same time, the means of attaining true and lasting blessedness, is faith—trust, scripturally warranted and divinely taught, in the promise and perfections of Jehovah, as our God and Father in Christ. And the effect of this will be, to place our happiness in God, as our God, and portion,—in God himself, and not merely in his gifts. The felicity of the ungodly such as it is, is of very short duration, ‘the pleasures of sin for a season.’ Ver. 9, 10, 13, 17, 38. The felicity of the ungodly is at length exchanged for destruction, not only the punishment of loss, but of positive misery. Ver. 3, 5—8, 27, 34. It is the duty and privilege of the godly, to persevere in faith, in patience, and in pursuit and practice of holiness. Ver. 11, 21, 30. The pious are meek, beneficent to the needy, and much addicted to the study and the inculcating of the word of God. His heart meditates wisdom, and his tongue gives utterance to it, while his temper and his life adorn and recommend it. Ver. 3, 4, 6, 9, 11, 19, &c. Even in this life, the Lord usually shows his special favour to the pious; he takes charge of them, and defends them in dangers. Ver. 12, 14, 32—40. The impious plot the destruction of the godly, but in vain, for their salvation is of the Lord; and his name is a strong tower to which they run, and are safe. Ver. 14, 15. Oftentimes the stratagems of the ungodly are made to recoil upon themselves. Even a heathen poet hath remarked that the wicked plotter falls by his own device. Like another Haman, who was suspended upon the gibbet he had erected for Mordecai. They fall into the ditch they have digged for another. Ver. 19. In a season of scarcity, the pious comfort themselves with this promise, that God will feed them and satisfy them with bread. Ver. 25. David gives us, as the result of his own experience, and comforts the children of the pious, with this, that he never knew the posterity of God’s people begging their bread. An eminent divine (Dr A. Clark) mentions, that his own observation during the course of a pretty long life, and through a very extensive range, confirmed the psalmist’s words. This is, doubtless, very comfortable and encouraging, both to pious parents and children. They know, doubtless, what hunger is, and what it is to be in straits, yet the Lord does appear often very wonderfully in behalf of his people, feeding them as it were by the instrumentality of the ravens, like the prophet, raising up for them very unexpected succour: their extremity is God’s opportunity. The title, ‘Jehovah Jireh,’ is most encouraging; ‘The Lord will provide.’ On the mount he will appear. Gen. xxii.

Beware, O believer, of a querulous spirit, of envying the prosperity of the wicked. When Caractacus, a king of the ancient Britons, carried in triumph to Rome as a prisoner, saw the grand buildings of that capital of the world, he expressed his wonder, that they, who possessed such splendid palaces should envy the poor cottages of Britain.

O learn, believer, more and more to live by faith, to trust more simply and implicitly on God’s promises and covenant, and seek to find your happiness, not only from God, but in God: joying and glorying in him, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have obtained reconciliation.

PRAYER.

O God of all grace, whose we are, and whom we are bound to love, and worship, and obey; we again bend before thee, the God of all the families of Israel, and with David, would we return from public services of the day, to seek a blessing on our own household. Thou, O most glorious and blessed God, hast permitted many of us this day to join the worshipping assembly, to contemplate thy majesty and thy loving-kindness in the midst of thy temple, and to hear the blessed truths of thy word, which are able to make us wise unto salvation. There we have had thy word nigh to us, in our mouth, in our ear, and, we would hope, also in our hearts. Thou hast spoken to us, and we have been permitted 'to speak unto the Lord, we who are dust and ashes.' It is of the Lord's mercies we are not consumed. Here we are assembled around this domestic altar, to give thee praise; to implore thy pardoning mercy, and thy renewing and quickening grace. May we hide thy word in our hearts, that we may not sin against thee. May we not only be hearers, but doers of thy word. O that our ways were directed to keep thy commandments, then shall we not be ashamed when we have respect unto all thy righteous judgments; we will keep thy precepts. O leave us not to ourselves, but establish us. By constant reference to the truths of thy blessed word, building ourselves upon our most holy faith, by prayer in the Holy Ghost, and looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, to eternal life, would we desire to keep alive the flame of thy love in our hearts, and to enjoy a continued sense of thy favour. O Lord our God, undertake for us, help us for the glory of thy name. Bless us as a family; O if there be any of us unconverted, still strangers to the power and life of godliness, merely bowing the knee with others while the heart is unhumbled, and the carnal mind, in its enmity against thee, still holding out; O that this may be the day of thy power, in which such shall be made willing; in which, by the mighty energy of thy word and spirit, the strong-holds of pride, and of self-righteousness, and of ungodliness, and of worldliness, shall be brought down; and the Lord alone shall be exalted. O that every heart here may be a throne and an altar for thee; every body and soul a temple, in which Jehovah, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, shall reign supreme! For our friends also, and our brethren, we would pray that they may enjoy the peace of thy children; for their good, as well as our own, we will seek the prosperity of Zion, and that there may be many obtaining that salvation which thou hast appointed therein, for Israel thy people, that they may be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation! May the Lord God make known to all men his salvation. Let men of every nation, of every colour, of every tongue, be blessed in Messias, and call him blessed. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who only doth wondrous things! Blessed be his glorious name for ever, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory! O Lord, hear our humble and united prayers: in thy great mercy for our blessed Redeemer's sake blot out all our sins. Grant us all the blessings we need, and far above what we can ask or think; and to thee, the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost, one ever blessed Jehovah, be glory, and honour, and praise, now and evermore. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVI.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XX.

REMARKS.

The great design of the Bible is to teach us 'what we are to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man.' In the prosecution of this design, the sacred writers are often brief where other writers would enlarge, and as often diffuse where other writers would be entirely silent. Accordingly, while the first year of the wanderings of the children of Israel is minutely dwelt upon by the sacred historian, the long series of thirty-seven years which follows, though doubtless not without important occurrences, is passed over in silence, and we are here carried at once to the first month of the fortieth year of these wanderings. Few of those who saw their commencement are now alive; and the few who survive are, one after another, rapidly called away. The first event recorded in this chapter is the death of Miriam. She was a faithful servant of Jehovah; yet having, on a very memorable occasion, been a murmurer (xii. 1.) she was excluded from the privilege of entering Canaan.

Her brothers were in this the partners of her doom; and the occasion of their incurring it is fully recorded in this chapter. The Israelites of this generation, who partook so largely of the rebellious spirit of their fathers, finding at Kadesh no water, like their fathers, on a similar occasion, broke out in loud murmurs against Moses and Aaron. Moses, now as then, laid the case before Jehovah; and now as then, was directed to fetch water for the people from the rock. He did not, however, now as then, follow his instructions with strict fidelity and a becoming spirit. The divine displeasure was therefore kindled against him, and in punishment of his offence, Jehovah declared that neither himself nor his brother, who, it appears, was equally in the offence, would be permitted to conduct the congregation of Israel into the land of their inheritance. Wherein, then, did the offence of Moses consist? Of this, very different explanations have been given. Perhaps we can best arrive at the truth by looking at the explanation given by Jehovah himself. His charge is, 'ye believed not,' or, (as the original may be rendered,) 'ye were not faithful to me, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel.' Of the sanctity of his name, or, in other words, of the reverence due to his various perfections, God is at all times jealous, saying, 'I will be sanctified in them that come nigh unto me, and before all the people I will be glorified.' He was peculiarly so, during the residence of his people in the wilderness, because the great object of the discipline by which he there exercised them, was to raise them above the grovelling conceptions of his character and perfections which they brought along with them from Egypt, and gradually to fit them for the place which he intended them to occupy, as the guardians of his name and worship, in the midst of an idolatrous world. For this they were as yet by no means prepared; for, though the worshippers of Jehovah in name, they were, in sentiment and conduct, half heathens, who had very faint conceptions of his holiness, showed little trust in his promises, and limited the extent of his overruling power and providence, by viewing him rather as their own petty national Deity, than as the omnipotent sovereign of the universe.

Now, in carefully inspecting the narrative of the miracle at the rock of Kadesh, we see much in the conduct of Moses, that was calculated to foster, in his countrymen, these unworthy conceptions of Jehovah, and therefore to counteract the ends of their discipline in the wilderness. Thus, forgetful of the reverence due to the majesty and holiness of Jehovah, he proceeded to the work of performing a miracle in his name, with a bosom agitated with the fires of unholy passion. These he allowed to break forth in vehement reproaches against the people; reproaches which, however just in themselves, were then peculiarly unseasonable; 'Hear now, ye rebels,' &c. From intemperate words, he proceeded to disobedient deeds; for while the command of Jehovah was simply to speak to the rock, that thus a people, prone to stop at second causes, might behold the omnipotence of him who could supply their wants by a word, he, instead of this, spoke not to the rock at all, but smote it—smote it twice; thus leading the spectators to ascribe the miraculous supply which followed, rather to some magical virtue in the rod, than to the will of the Almighty. To crown his guilt, he planted his brother and himself, as it were, in the place of God. 'Must we,' says he, 'fetch you water out of this rock;' we, as if God was nothing, and Moses and Aaron everything, in this work of supernatural power. What peculiarly aggravated the guilt of such conduct was, that Moses and Aaron were the persons to whom God himself had committed the guardianship of his character among their countrymen. Viewing these various circumstances, then, together, we perhaps account for the sentence passed upon them on this occasion. But whether we do or not is, though not an uninteresting, yet a minor question. The great practical lessons suggested by the memorable occurrence, are fortunately not dependent upon any particular explanation of it. Here we are presented with an awfully impressive illustration of the holiness of Jehovah, to whom sin is so repugnant, that he will not tolerate or connive at it even in the most highly favoured of his servants. Here we have also a striking proof of the weakness of all human virtue, as we behold one who served God so faithfully and so long, falling so far from his steadfastness as to provoke Jehovah to visit his iniquities with stripes, and falling, too, where his chief strength lay. Of the character of Moses, meekness was the distinguishing ornament. Yet his meekness gave place to passion at the water of Meribah. Provoked in spirit, he there 'spoke unadvisedly with his lips,' and was betrayed into conduct which involved him in deep guilt, and brought upon his head a punishment, from which he sought, by repeated supplications, to be released, but sought in vain. Deut. iii. 23, 27. O what an awakening call is this to prayer, to humility, to habitual watchfulness! what a lesson to 'him who thinketh that he standeth to take heed lest he fall.'

PRAYER.

Father of mercies, God of all grace and consolation, vouchsafe thy gracious presence to us, thy guilty and rebellious offspring, while we bewail before thee our manifold sins and transgressions, and implore thy pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace. Have mercy upon us, O God, according to thy loving kindness; according to the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out our transgressions. It is to thy mercy alone that we can appeal, for we deserve nothing from thy justice, but wrath and tribulation. We are a seed of evil doers; our offences exceed all calculation but thine own; we are daily adding to their number by fresh provocations, in opposition to our own clearest convictions, our most solemn engagements, and thy paternal dealings with us, both by mercies and by trials. We cannot offer one plea in palliation of our offences. Sinners from the womb upwards, we merit the full weight of thy severest displeasure; and whatever destiny thou mayest assign to us, we must acknowledge the justice of thy procedure. Yet we will not despair; for, blessed be thy name, encouraged by thine own gracious promises and invitations, we flee from thy justice, to seek refuge in thy mercy. We flee to lay hold of the rich provisions of grace which thou hast treasured up for sinners in Christ. Pleading the urgency of our wants, and his abundant merits, we entreat thee to look upon us, not as we are in ourselves, but in him thine anointed. For his sake retain not thine anger against us, but spread over us the broad mantle of thy forgiveness. And, Lord, we would plead not only deliverance from wrath, but admission to favour. To give us a meetness for its enjoyment, O do thou subdue the carnal, disobedient, rebellious spirit within us, and do thou produce in us every holy principle which can lead to devoted and persevering obedience. May we be united by faith to Jesus Christ, the grand centre and depository of spiritual influences; that by grace derived from him, we may triumph over inward corruptions and outward temptations, and walk before thee in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives. For this, we have, alas, no resources within ourselves, for we are not more guilty than weak, dependant, and helpless. The testimony of thy word, the falls of the most holy of men, our enemies, our temptations, and our daily experience of the workings of a depraved nature within us, all unite in testifying that our own best strength is but weakness; that the power to will and to do must proceed from thee; and that we can stand only when thou upholdest us. A single spark is sufficient to inflame our corruptions. The least temptation overpowers our unstable goodness. And neither past attainments nor present purposes afford us any security against falling into sins, deeply offensive to thee, and dangerous to our own peace and safety. Most merciful Father, do thou then undertake for us. Uphold our goings in thy paths, that our footsteps slip not; and O send us such liberal supplies of the Redeemer's grace, that we may be not only steadfast and immovable, but always abounding in the work which thou hast assigned us; and that, amid all the toils and trials of our Christian warfare, we may be able to combat with ever growing boldness, reposing upon the assurance that we fight with strength not our own, and that we shall come forth more than conquerors through him that loved us. Follow, for this purpose, with thy blessing, the holy lessons, and prayers, and vows of the day that is past. Accept of our grateful thanksgivings for thy goodness to us last night. As thou hast been the protector of our sleeping, be also the guide of our waking hours. Watch over us this day, to hallow our intercourse with each other, and direct us in all our ways. Cause thy blessing to rest upon ourselves, and all whom we ought to remember before thee. And hear us, not according to the imperfections of our requests, but thine own surpassing mercy and grace in Christ Jesus. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXVIII.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE II. 25—52.

REMARKS.

When the Son of God became man, the glory of his divinity, though veiled, was not entirely concealed. A series of miraculous events connected with his birth and early years, announced him to the devout and inquiring as no ordinary visitant among the dwellings of men. Of these, one is the testimony borne to him upon his presentation in the temple, by two aged and inspired servants of the most High. In that humble babe, whose earthly relatives were so poor, that they could not afford the offering of a lamb, required on such occasions of those who were in easy circumstances; one of these saints, then led by the Spirit of God into the temple, discovered the divinely appointed Saviour of both the Jewish and Gentile world; predicted the nature of his gospel as the grand touchstone of character; described the different effects which it would produce, according to the different dispositions which it met with in different individuals; and, as he held the babe in his arms, felt such a transport of holy joy and delight, that he desired from that moment his dismissal from this world, as if he felt it a kind of profanation to look at or touch ought earthly, after having seen and embraced the long-promised Saviour. The other, actuated by similar emotions, gave utterance to them in expressions of devout 'thanksgivings unto the Lord, and spoke of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel.' This was indeed, honour done to him, who, in the lowliness of his condition, presented so little comeliness to attract the eye of the carnal.

On the events of our Saviour's life from this period, till the commencement of his public ministry, the evangelical record is extremely brief; but if brief, it is not un instructive. Among other matters, it bears honourable testimony to the piety of those with whom the Redeemer spent his early years. Joseph and Mary, though poor in earthly condition, were rich in the treasures of heavenly grace; and like all who are so, they cultivated, with studious diligence, the means by which grace is fostered and matured. They dwelt at the distance of seventy miles from Jerusalem, and the road between that city and Nazareth was always difficult, and often dangerous. Yet, in compliance with the divine command, they regularly attended all the great festivals there. Mary, as a female, might have claimed exemption from the arduous duty: but she loved the ordinances of God's house, and was therefore, on these occasions, always the companion of her husband. And when their youthful charge arrived at those years, when, according to Jewish maxims, children ought to come under the yoke of the law, they did not leave him behind. They had respect to the command, 'train up a child in the way wherein he should go;' and they were concerned to obtain for him the blessing of God, in the place where he is peculiarly present, to hear the vows and prayers of his sincere worshippers. Can parents overlook the lesson in which this holy pair, by their example, instructs them?

When they look at the conduct of Joseph and Mary, what can they think of those frivolous excuses from distance, weather and health which they suffer so often to detain them from the house of God? And when they repair to it themselves, how can they justify their neglect of duty, in leaving at home the young, whom God has committed to them, that they may be educated for himself? Even the holy child Jesus was subjected to a course of early training in religion. And he was not above its necessity; for though his divinity was infinite, his human mind was susceptible of successive improvements in knowledge and sanctification. His faithful guardians were therefore carefully conscientious in bestowing it. In the absence of such culture, how can so delicate a plant as religion thrive in the bosoms of ordinary children, when depravity is an innate principle; and the seed sown requires protection against rank weeds which are continually springing up, threatening to mar all future growth and progress? To counteract such unhappy effects, let parents walk in the footsteps of Joseph and Mary.

In the holy child Jesus there is a model here also for children; a perfect model which they cannot too closely copy. For in his early as in his later years, he was holy, harmless, and undefiled. Amply recompensing the labours of love bestowed upon him, 'he advanced in wisdom and in stature, and in favour with God and man.' Of his piety towards God, we have a delightful specimen, in his conduct in the temple. They were his parents indeed that conducted him thither; but he himself gave proofs, that when there, he was in the place of his choice; 'answering and hearing questions,' as one who felt he was at home, in his Father's house, and engaged in his 'Father's business;' and finding such interest in the work, that when his parents, at the conclusion of the festival, set out for their residence at Nazareth, he remained behind to enjoy, for a longer season, the rich festival of the soul which the temple services afforded; nor, while he thus delighted in serving his Father in heaven, did he overlook the claims of his earthly parents. He explained indeed to his mother the paramount claims of heaven. But, in due subordination to them, or rather hallowed and strengthened by their influence, his obedience to his earthly parents was cheerful and constant. As if on a level with themselves in origin, endowments and prospects, he continued 'subject to them' at Nazareth; and, if we may credit the universal testimony of antiquity, laboured along with them in the toils of their lowly vocation; thereby sanctifying poverty, and reflecting honour upon honest and virtuous industry. Here then, is an example for the young! O what blessedness is theirs, who are attracted to follow it. They are happy in themselves; they are a comfort to their parents. The blessing promised to those who seek God early rests upon them; and, trees of righteousness, planted in their season, they bear fruit in their season; not the scanty, sickly and sour fruit which necessarily follows late cultivation, but fruit exhibiting the beauty, the fragrance and ripeness of a successful harvest.

PRAYER.

God of all grace, thou uncreated light and infinite love, we approach thee this evening in the all-prevailing name of the Redeemer; and lifting up our hearts with our hands, would unite in venerating and adoring thy holy name. Who, Lord, can suitably declare thy transcendent excellencies? Who can abundantly, utter the memory of thy great goodness? All of us are living monuments of its surpassing riches. For though continually rebelling against thee, we are mercifully spared; yea, not only spared but indulged, and every day furnished with new proofs of thy parental tenderness and care. Lord, how precious are thy thoughts to usward; how great is the sum of them; if we should count them, they are more than can be numbered. In thee, we behold the author of all our blessings, whether spiritual or temporal; of all that distinguishes us as men, all that elevates us as rational and immortal beings, all that animates us with the hope of being assimilated to thyself as Christians. O may we recognise in all these gifts the giver. From the altar of grateful hearts, may the incense of thanksgiving and praise ascend to thee continually. And may we be as unwearied in our returns of love and obedience, as thou art in expressions of benignity and favour. Lord, we would adore thee, more especially, for the great and glorious salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; salvation meeting all our exigencies as ignorant, guilty, depraved, weak and dying sinners; salvation proposing to us deliverance from eternal wrath, and mansions of everlasting glory in the world of the blessed. We lament that deep depravity of nature, which prompts sinners to make light of blessings so inestimable. We lament, that he, by whom they have been dearly purchased, instead of receiving a glad welcome from all, should, by many, be set up as a butt of contention and contempt. And we lament the extent to which each of ourselves is involved in the guilt of such conduct. Root, we beseech thee, out of our hearts, those unholy propensities in which it originates. O do thou subdue our pride, our self-sufficiency, our love of sin, and our hatred to the holy requirements of Jesus. Penetrate us with durable convictions of our utter destitution without a saving interest in Christ; and give us realizing discoveries of his redeeming grace and love; that, at once impelled by an urgent sense of need, and sweetly constrained by the attractions of sacred affection, we may receive him cordially, cleave to him stedfastly, surrender to him devotedly, all our faculties and affections, and live to glory in his cross, and show forth his praise. Give us to set him, the Lord, habitually before us; and depending upon the promised aids of his Spirit, to strengthen our weak resolutions, and, resting upon the hope of the future inheritance of his people to animate our languid endeavours, may we daily make progressive advances in our journey Zionward, and persevere, till triumphant over every discouragement, each of us appear there, to behold thine unveiled countenance for ever. Of the brief season allotted for the journey, we behold another day now brought to a close. O forgive our sinful appropriation of so much of it to ourselves, in forgetfulness of thee, and our heavenly calling; and accept of our thanksgivings for its unmerited mercies. We commit ourselves, our dear friends and relatives, and all whom we ought to pray for, to thy fatherly protection during the silent watches of the night. And if it please thee to spare us to behold the light of a new day, may we rise with bodies refreshed, and our minds quickened with renewed zeal and vigour for thy service. Every day that we live, vouchsafe to us grace to make thy will our law, and thy glory our end. And when all our earthly days are ended, and the night of death seals our eyes, may our bodies, united to Christ, sleep in peace till the morning of the resurrection, and our souls, purified from every stain, join the spirits of the blessed in the land of everlasting life and light. Hear us, forgive us, sanctify and save us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPIRASE XLI.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XXI.

REMARKS.

In the children of Israel in the wilderness, we have a faithful picture of human nature in all ages and countries. The beginning of this chapter presents them in an attitude which challenges our unqualified approbation. Attacked by an active and inveterate enemy, they take prompt measures of defence. Knowing, however, that 'the battle is the Lord's,' they unite to active duty, lowly dependence. They humbly address their vows to the Lord; and when he hears these vows, by granting success to their arms, they, with conscientious promptitude, proceed to pay them. But alas! the shifting quicksand is not more unstable than human goodness. The Israelites having been refused a direct passage to Canaan through the territories of their kinsmen the Edomites, they are obliged to proceed by a difficult and circuitous route. Their souls soon 'become discouraged because of the way.' And at once forgetful of past deliverances, discontented with present mercies, and unsubdued by the successive judgments which a rebellious spirit brought upon their fathers and themselves, they once more assail Jehovah and his servants with a list of fresh grievances, from which they clamorously demand relief. Obstinate distempers demand the application of vigorous remedies. Such is that which Jehovah administers in the present instance. He sends among them fiery serpents, and these, biting the people in great numbers, a violent inflammation instantly seizes them, and they die in excruciating pain and agony. This alarming scourge produces the intended effect. The Israelites are low in the dust, in penitent confession and supplication; and God, who never afflicts willingly, but even amid deserved wrath remembers mercy, listens to their prayers, and provides a miraculous cure. By his direction, Moses erects a serpent of brass upon the top of a pole, in sight of the people; and all who look at it are instantly and effectually healed.

Judaism has often been called typical Christianity; and here we have an example of the propriety of the designation. For, in the alarming scourge with which the Israelites are here visited, and the miraculous expedient adopted by God for its removal, we have a striking emblematical representation of man's ruin by the fall, and his recovery by Jesus Christ. So Christ himself instructs us, 'As Moses,' says he 'lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have eternal life.' John iii. 14. The parallel is indeed remarkable, both as to the evil felt, and the mode of its removal. In regard to the former, we behold, in both cases, disease; that disease the effect of sin; the pain of the disease occasioned by the bite of a serpent; and its end a painful and excruciating death. And in regard to the latter, we behold in both cases, a remedy, appointed by a merciful God; in its nature miraculous; in its operation infallible; accessible to all, and tendered without money and without price. Here, however, the parallel ends. The disease in the one case affected only the body, and death put an end to it. In the other it pervades the soul, and death only widens the field for its never ending ravages. O may we all remember this; for we are all in a state of disease. The fatal poison of sin has insinuated itself into every power and faculty of our natures, and unless extracted, the result is certain, inevitable death. Let us not therefore continue to indulge in the insane folly of cherishing the serpent that stings us; but unfeignedly penitent that we have cherished it so long, and grateful that a thorough and efficacious remedy has been provided, let us direct the eye of faith to the Saviour lifted up on the cross. Let us not despise the remedy. It is the only one, and it is offered to us with the seal and signature of the sovereign Physician stamped upon it. Neither let us delay; for while we delay we die; die the death of the soul, which is cast into hell with the devil, the old serpent. But why should we die, when the means of life are within reach? The remedy, as it is needed by all, is sufficient for all and pressed upon all. 'Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth.'

PRAYER.

On the morning of a new day, marked by a continuation of thy loving kindness toward us, both as individuals and a household, we would seek, Father of mercies, to present to thee, on the family altar, our morning sacrifice of thanksgiving and praise; and with grateful hearts to bless thee, who causest the out-goings of the morning, and the in-comings of the evening, to rejoice over our heads. Lord, how unwearied thy goodness! how numberless the mercies which thou art every hour and moment showering down upon our heads! The rich provider of our temporal necessities, thou art continuing to us health of body and soundness of mind, domestic peace and outward comfort; laying all nature under contribution for our benefit; and making earth and air, fire and water, winds and waves, the ministers of our wills. And thou dost not overlook our spiritual wants. Notwithstanding our sinful abuse of past advantages, we still enjoy thy word, thine ordinances, the ministry of reconciliation, our sabbaths and temples, and the rich promise of thy Holy Spirit, to make these blessed means effectual for our salvation. Truly it becomes us to acknowledge that goodness and mercy have hitherto followed us, and to call upon our souls and all that is within us, to bless and adore thee, the pregnant fountain of all our supplies. Alas! we have each of us cause to rejoice with trembling, for if we have received unnumbered mercies which demand grateful acknowledgment, we have also committed unnumbered offences, which call for penitent confession and humiliation. What good do we possess which we owe not to thee? yet which of all thy gifts that we have not employed as instruments of rebellion against thee? We are indeed a rebellious offspring. Neither kindness nor corrections have the effect of keeping us on the path of obedience. We daily trample upon thine authority; murmur secretly or openly against the dispensations of thy providence, abuse the temporal blessings of our lot, in the indulgence of the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life; and allow our spiritual opportunities to pass away without showing any corresponding progress, either in the mortification of our sins, or the sanctification of our tempers and lives. We have cause therefore to adore thee for thy long-suffering patience and forbearance towards us, and to rejoice that we have not, as outcasts from thy mercy, been long ago consigned to the abodes of final retribution. O teach us to trace the sins which defile us to their true source, the bitter fountain of a heart which is enmity against thee, and seeks its happiness in things carnal and earthly. And may the humbling conviction, while it abuses our pride, quicken our faith, and endeavor to us the cross and the grace of the Redeemer. O give us to go to him, that he may sweeten the bitter waters, by the healing virtues of his own blood, and that he may henceforth direct all their streams in a holy and heavenly course. By the power of his grace, do thou elevate our affections and spiritualize our desires, and suffer us no longer to indulge in the folly of seeking rest in this wilderness. May we be taught to make heavenly and spiritual blessings the supreme objects of our solicitude, and to estimate temporal advantages, chiefly as means for conducting us to these; so as in every step of our progress through the wilderness, to have the eye of faith fixed upon the land beyond it. O be thyself, we entreat thee, our pillar of light to guide us by the way. May we never seek to choose for ourselves, but submissively pitch our tent or pursue our journey, as thou directest. If thy goodness indulge us, may we enjoy the comforts of our situation with gratitude and moderation, and see in every blessing that gladdens us thy liberal hand. If thy providence frown upon us, may we neither despise thy chastening, nor faint when we are rebuked, but submit with un murmuring acquiescence to all thine appointments, beholding in every stroke of the rod the hand of love that wields it. In whatever path thou conductest us, O let thine own Spirit guide, thine own arm protect, and thine own love as a covenant God abide with us, and when the discipline of the wilderness is at length brought to a close, do thou conduct us to the joys of the heavenly rest. Grant that our progress this day may bring us a day's journey nearer it, in meetness for its employments and its holy delights. And to thee, in Christ, be ever the praise. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXVI. 7.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE III.

REMARKS.

As eastern monarchs of old were accustomed, in passing from one part of their dominions to another, to send persons to make the roads straight and level before them, and remove all obstructions to their progress, so Jesus Christ, the king of Zion, had also his forerunner for the discharge of this duty in his behalf. This forerunner was John the Baptist, one, like himself, humble as to worldly condition, but, as we have seen, in the first chapter of this Gospel, pre-eminently distinguished by heavenly honours. These were not bestowed upon him in vain. No sooner did he enter upon his short but brilliant career, than his 'voice crying in the wilderness,' fell like a peal of thunder upon the ears of his slumbering and secure countrymen. All classes of them, far and near, flocked to hear this second Elias; and though the majority knew not the day of their merciful visitation, multitudes, alarmed by his terrific denunciations, in unfeigned sorrow confessed their sins, and submitted to the rite of baptism, in token of their earnest desires after the inward purity which the ordinance represented.

What was then the grand work upon which he insisted, for clearing away the various obstructions calculated to impede the march of the Redeemer. It was repentance—sincere, heartfelt repentance, a duty at all times indispensable for the establishment of the Redeemer's kingdom, either in the world or the heart; but more especially called for then, when the hypocritical and sanctimonious profession of the pharisees, on the one hand, and the thinly veiled infidelity of the sadducees, on the other, had well nigh banished all real piety from the land of God's ancient people. John accordingly executed his commission with bold and fearless intrepidity. He indulged in no vague generalities, but assailed the consciences of each class of his hearers with such pointed applications, that none could escape in the crowd. He pressed repentance upon all; he demanded from all fruits worthy of it; and as a decisive test of its sincerity, he insisted upon the total and unqualified renunciation of the besetting sin; the most practical and palpable proof that sin has no longer the mastery within. Ver. 11—14. Acting upon this conviction, his test for the selfish and cold-hearted was beneficence and active charity, for the fraudulent publican, honesty in the collection of the revenue, and for the turbulent and rapacious Roman soldiery, abstinence from violence and false accusations, and contentment with their wages. If John was thus searchingly close in dealing with the consciences of his hearers, he failed not to give weighty reasons for his conduct, and to prove that he was the reverse of an idle alarmist. Ver. 9, 17. Alluding to the desolating judgments which were, through the instrumentality of the Romans, soon to overtake all the impenitent portion of the Jews, he spake 'of the axe as already at the root of the tree,' for destroying both trunk and branches; and of the winnowing 'fan' of the Lord, which would separate the wheat from the chaff, and consign the latter to 'fire unquenchable.' These were terrible appeals; but they came from a heart full of love. While he therefore insisted upon repentance, and testified that no connection with Abraham, in the way of descent and outward privilege, was any ground of security without it, he directed his hearers to Him who could give them repentance; that omnipotent Saviour who could baptize them, not like him, with water, a weak emblem, but with the Holy Ghost, which, penetrating their hearts like fire, would warm, melt, purify, and refine, and raise them in flames of holy affection and desire to heaven. There is, at no period, saving repentance, except in the experience of these effects of the Redeemer's grace. Applying, therefore, to ourselves all that this faithful servant of God uttered as to its necessity, tests, and obligations, let it be ours, through faith, to apply to him for the heavenly grace. And as the tears of true repentance are found only in the eye of faith, and they flow most freely at the foot of the cross, let us contemplate him crucified, as the grand instrument for producing it in our souls.

Ver. 19. John's faithful ministrations were brought to an abrupt close. His uncompromising boldness in attacking vice in high places, raised the arm of persecuting power against him, and he was shut up in prison. This event was, however, preceded by another, the most memorable in his whole history, his administration of the rite of baptism to the Saviour. This baptism was necessary as the first step in the solemn work of his consecration to the high office, the public functions of which he was then on the eve of commencing. The Jewish priests, under the law, (Exod. xxix. 4.) were washed with water and anointed with oil before entering upon their offices. The great high priest, whom they prefigured, was in like manner washed in the waters of baptism; a rite no sooner administered than, to complete the type, he was anointed with the Holy Ghost, who descended upon him in the shape of a dove, the meet emblem of his own character, miracles, and preaching, as well as of the characteristic graces of his true disciples. This spiritual anointing was, however, more than the mere seal of his commission. It was, besides, a conveyance to him of the qualifications necessary for its discharge; qualifications which, as the supreme Jehovah, he at all times indeed possessed, but as man and mediator, were gifts derived by him from the parent fountain of divine influences. It is our privilege to know that he received them without measure, and that he received for the purpose of communicating. Let us then continually repair to him, that we may draw out of his inexhaustible fulness; and let us test the reality and success of our applications, by the measure in which we exhibit his own spirit, that spirit whose emblem is the dove. He himself invites our applications, and we can fully rely upon his power to benefit us. In him we see the well beloved Son of the Father, in whom he is always well pleased, and through whom he is well pleased with all who rely upon him for the blessings of salvation. This the Father himself declared, when Jesus was merely baptized with water. O can any withhold belief from the fact, when they see him afterwards baptized in his own blood?

PRAYER.

We bless thee, heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ, the unspeakable gift of thy love, and rejoice that in him all fulness dwells to meet the necessities of his people; fulness of merit to justify their persons, and fulness of grace to sanctify their natures. O may it be the privilege of each of us to receive of his fulness, and to present to ourselves and others solid evidences of the fact, in a steady and consistent exhibition of all the diversified graces of his Spirit. May that Spirit take up its habitual residence in our hearts, to perfect, stablish, strengthen, and settle us; and may it ever operate there as a holy fire to cleanse, as a sacred light to direct, and as a well of water to refresh, and to spring up in streams of purity and blessedness, unto eternal life. Hasten, we beseech thee, the period of those copious outpourings of the Spirit, which will issue in the glories of the latter days of the church. Look in pity upon the perishing heathen; collect into the true fold the lost sheep of the house of Israel; overthrow the empire of the man of sin; heal the backslidings, and revive the first love of the churches of the reformation. Be more especially gracious to our beloved national Zion. O do thou repair all its breaches; strengthen all its bulwarks; increase the devotedness and add to the numbers of the watchmen upon its walls; prosper all its plans of usefulness, both at home and abroad; and multiply its provisions more and more, under the safeguard of thy protection, and with the securities of a happy national constitution, which recognises thee as the governor among the nations, and Jesus Christ as head over all things to the church. Bless our native country in all its complicated interests, and all who belong to it, from the occupant of the throne to the humblest subject. Do thou diffuse the leaven of pure and undefiled religion through every class of the community, so that the fabric of national prosperity may rest secure upon the basis of national piety; that every habitation of the land may be a Bethel, and all its inmates priests to offer thee spiritual sacrifices. Let thy special blessing rest upon this habitation. May the ties of blood and of mutual dependence which unite us together, be sweetened and hallowed by the bonds of grace, that we may all be followers of thee as dear children, and members of the household of faith, and may at length arrive at our Father's house in heaven. In our progress thither do thou continue to us our comforts, sanctify to us our trials, strengthen us for our duties, and prepare us for every event that is before us. Be with us this night, and give us to retire to our beds with hearts grateful to thee for the unmerited mercies of the past day. Every day whilst we live, be thou our sun to enlighten, and our shield to protect us. And when death calls us hence, may it find us ready for our departure, and ripe for the grace that shall be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Hear, in heaven thy dwelling-place, these our humble supplications, and forgive and accept of us in Christ Jesus, the Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 12.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XXII.

REMARKS.

In the history of Balaam we are furnished with a very striking instance of one who impiously sinned against conscience, and the clearest and most express revelations of Jehovah. His fame as a prophet having reached the king of Moab, on whose territories the Israelites were already encamped on their way to take possession of the promised land, messengers were straightway despatched, bearing the rewards of divination, that they might the more easily induce him to comply with Balak's request, in solemnly devoting the chosen people of God to destruction—a custom which was prevalent in those times, and to which frequent allusions are made in profane writers. The nature of the message was such as ought to have provoked the indignation of any one who pretended to the character of a prophet, and yet, from the courteous reception which the elders of Moab received, it is quite obvious that Balaam was tempted by the bribe, and professed himself ready, after due consultation, to announce whatever the Lord should be pleased to dictate. It is not improbable that, by detaining them over night, he meant to throw an air of mystery over the whole proceeding, that he might the more easily impose on the credulity of his guests. In this, however, he was strikingly defeated by the immediate interposition of God, who, ere he had time to consult, demanded of him concerning the men who were with him. In place, however, of receiving the permission of heaven to engage in a design so foreign to the divine purpose, he is not only strictly prohibited, but a distinct reason is assigned to render the prohibition still more imperative. And well had it been for Balaam had he remembered the strong terms in which the divine injunction had been couched. On a second and more honourable embassy from the king of Moab, however, who tempted him with still higher prospects of worldly aggrandisement, he seems to have been unable any longer to resist complying with their request. The Almighty, who frequently suffers wicked men to be hurried on by their own evil passions, and in this way accomplishes his own wise and holy purposes, at length permitted him to accompany the princes of Moab, though it is obvious, from the marvellous incident which befel him by the way, and which is related from ver. 22. to the end of the chapter, that his conduct at this time was as displeasing to God as it was at variance with the deliberate convictions of his own heart, inasmuch as 'he fell down before the angel of the Lord, and exclaimed, I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me; now therefore, if it displease thee, I will get me back again.'

In the moral history of Balaam, then, we are presented with a character under a deep sense of God's supremacy, obstinately persisting in the gratification of his own evil passions, and so preferring the wages of unrighteousness to the honours and rewards of true religion. It was not from a mere spirit of recklessness that he pursued the paths of folly and sin, for he was more than once interrupted in these, and solemnly admonished as to the guilt he was deliberately contracting. For a time he seems to have been awed by the divine communications with which he was met, but alas, his hankerings after the 'wages of unrighteousness' silenced the warnings from without, and the remonstrances from within, so that he was left to indulge his unhallowed desires, by accompanying the princes of Moab, though he knew this to be in direct opposition to the will of God. Though it is hardly to be expected that any one, in the present day, can be placed in circumstances similar to those of Balaam, yet it is to be feared there are multitudes who act a part as directly opposed to what they know to be the will of God and their own duty. When first tempted to the commission of sin they may, for a time, successfully resist, but when the indulgence of their favourite propensity is concerned, their fear of God and reverence for religion are put aside, and in place of maintaining a consistent profession of faith, in a life of practical obedience, they give occasion to the enemy to blaspheme by the indulgence of their own sinful lusts and passions. Even in the midst of their ungodliness they may meet with many warnings and exhortations that tend to mar their enjoyment, and break in on their fancied happiness. The voice of God's word and of conscience may interrupt them in their way, and compel them to confess their iniquity, and even promise amendment for the future; but their goodness is as the morning cloud and the early dew, which soon pass away; their resolutions are forgotten; their religious convictions are stifled, and they indulge in sin more greedily than before. 'Lord, keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me.'

PRAYER.

Almighty, and ever-blessed God, we desire at this time to approach the family altar, and to present before thee our morning's sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. Thou art worthy to receive all power, and honour, and glory; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. Impress, we beseech thee, upon our minds, a deep reverence for thy character and perfections, and through faith in the infinite merits of thy Son, and our Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, may we be led to recognise and worship thee, as our reconciled God and Father. We give thee thanks for all the mercy and the grace thou hast conferred upon us, since we came into being. Thou art good—thou hast continually done us good, and great is thy faithfulness. Thou hast magnified thy love in not sparing thine own Son, but in giving him up to the death for us all, that we, through him, may be delivered from the guilt, and saved from the pollution, of sin. We confess before thee our numerous and highly aggravated iniquities, and acknowledge ourselves utterly unworthy of thy notice and regard. O that we were more deeply impressed with a sense of the evil nature and the ruinous tendency of sin; led to hate it with a perfect hatred, and to cherish a profounder sorrow, and a godlier contrition, when betrayed into the commission of it. Look not on us as we are in ourselves, ruined and self-condemned sinners, but regard us through the merits and mediation of the divine Redeemer, who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification; that being justified by faith, we may have peace with thee our God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Sanctify us through thy truth, thy word is truth: and by thy Holy Spirit may we be led in the way of life everlasting, and enabled to live to the praise and the glory of him who suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. Accept of us, O our God, in our united thanksgivings for the mercies of the last night, and this morning. Let thy presence and blessing accompany us this day. May grace, mercy, and peace, be multiplied on all our fellow-men. Bless our friends—forgive our enemies—reward our benefactors. May the lessons of thy word now read, make a deep and permanent impression on our minds. Suffer us not to walk in the counsel of the ungodly, nor stand in the way of sinners; but may we rather run in the way of thy commandments with enlargement of heart. Hear us when we thus call upon thee, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our strength, and our Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXIX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE IV.

REMARKS.

It is important for believers to know, amid the trials and temptations to which they are exposed, that the Saviour whom they serve was in all points tempted like as they are. Hardly had he entered on his public ministry, when he was beset with the reiterated and powerful attacks of the great adversary; thereby showing young converts, and others farther advanced in the Christian life, that, at the very outset of their spiritual career, as well as when about to engage in some higher and holier undertaking, they may anticipate in this, as in other respects, to be conformed to their heavenly Master. And when we farther bear in mind, that during the whole period of the temptation, Christ as mediator was under the direct agency of the Holy Spirit, and so continued free from every stain of sin, we may learn that his people, though sorely harassed with the unhallowed suggestions of their great enemy, should not give way to despondency, or consider themselves responsible for those evil thoughts which involuntarily intrude on their minds, so long as they continue to resist and strive against them. When a child of God, amid the temptations to which he is exposed, is led to exclaim, 'O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?' he may safely reckon on the sympathy and support of his great high priest, who suffered, being tempted, and who knows how to succour them that are tempted. Nor let any imagine, that because he has been enabled to resist one temptation, and thereby foil the adversary, he will, on that account, be more secure against a future attack. No sooner does the Saviour seem to have gained one triumph, than he was subjected to a second and a third assault; and even when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him only for a season. Thus it ever has been, and ever will be, with the followers of the Lamb. While they continue in this world, they may anticipate a variety of temptations, but it is their privilege to know that the Captain of their salvation has obtained a complete victory over that wicked one who waiteth for their halting; and if like Christ, they only keep steadfastly by the word of God, which is 'the sword of the Spirit,' they shall like him, and by him, come off more than conquerors. While with every temptation there is a way of escape, it would appear, that with every triumph the soul is not only made better, but enabled more successfully to engage in the duties and exercises of its heavenly calling. Thus it is said of Jesus, after passing the fiery ordeal to which he had been exposed, that he returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee, and having entered into the synagogue on the sabbath-day opened the book of the prophet Isaiah, and having read a portion of its sacred contents began to proclaim the precious and consolatory truths of the gospel, which he had been commissioned and anointed to preach. Often before this had the blessed words of the prophet been read, but never till then could it be said, 'This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears,' wherein the doctrine of a full and a free salvation is tendered to the poor, by him who is at once the author and the bestower of it. In this tender of the gospel, there is a marvellous accommodation to the varied circumstances of those to whom it is sent. To the spiritually sick it offers the blessing of health—to the captive, it proclaims liberty, and to those who are blind through the ignorance that is in them, it imparts that illumination of heart, by which they are enabled to see and appreciate the wondrous things contained in God's law. All these blessings the gospel offers, and offers them now, the present time being to us, what the jubilee was of old to the Israelites, 'the acceptable year of the Lord.' Sinner! this is your year, your day, your hour. Now, and now only, is the accepted time, and the day of salvation. While these blessings are freely offered, we must never forget that God asserts his sovereignty in the dispensation of them. The Sidonian widow, and the Syrian leper, the woman who was a sinner, and the thief on the cross, are made the welcome recipients of the saving and sanctifying influences of the truth, while those who have long been plied with the offer of salvation, are left, through their impenitence and unbelief, to perish in their sins, having this, as the ground of their condemnation, 'that they loved the darkness rather than the light, their deeds being evil.' Ver. 28, 29. How true was it, that the devil left Christ only for a season. Though at this time he did not attack him personally, yet, by filling the people with wrath, he stirred them up to put him to death. In this their malicious design, they were defeated; for passing through the midst of them, he went down to Capernaum, and continued on the sabbath-days to teach in their synagogues, casting out devils, and healing as many as were brought to him, sick with divers diseases. His chief delight and great employment, however, seem to have been preaching the kingdom of God, in this way leaving an example to all who are put in trust with the ministry, that they be instant in season, and out of season, making known to their fellow-men the glorious gospel of the grace of God; and beseeching them, by every possible motive, 'to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, that they may be saved.'

PRAYER.

Wherewithal shall we come before thee, O Lord, or bow ourselves in thy presence, thou most high God? We will come unto thee in the name of Christ, making mention of his righteousness, and his only. For his sake, may our persons be acceptable in thy sight, and the lifting up of our hands as the incense of old. We confess and bewail before thee the original depravity of our hearts, the ungodliness of our lives, the waywardness of our affections, and the constant tendency we have to yield to the suggestions of the great adversary of our souls, and the allurements of a world lying in wickedness. We mourn over our past sins, and our present unworthiness. We have broken many vows; we have come short of many resolutions, we have misimproved time, and talent, and privilege; and, but for thy mercy and grace might, long ere this, have been given up to judicial blindness, or left to reap the fruit of our own doings in the place of torment. What reason then have we to admire and adore thy long-suffering patience, in that thou art sparing us in the land of the living and the place of hope; that thou art giving us thy word, so full of invitation and promise, and permitting us at all times, and in all circumstances, to address ourselves to thee as the hearer and the answerer of prayer. Glory be to God in the highest, that peace hath been proclaimed on earth, and good-will to the sons of men; that the offer of a full and a free salvation hath been made to the guiltiest of us all, through the blood of the cross, and that we are invited, as helpless and miserable sinners, to betake ourselves for pardon, and purity, and eternal life, to him who is able to save to the very uttermost; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for the transgressors. Lord, we would believe, help thou our unbelief. May Christ be formed in our souls the hope of glory, and henceforth through thy Holy Spirit assisting us, may we be enabled to walk as the children of the light, glorifying thee in our bodies and spirits, which are thine. Subdue within us every unholy propensity. Sprinkle us with clean water, that we may be clean; from all our idols, and from all our filthiness, do thou cleanse us. May our lives, henceforth, be hid with Christ in God, so that when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory. We would look forward in the exercise of faith and hope, to the coming of our Lord and Saviour, when he shall appear without sin unto salvation; when they that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth to share in the splendours of his triumph, and so be for ever with the Lord. Our hearts' desire and prayer for all men are, that they may be saved. Let pure and undefiled religion prosper and prevail. Pity and supply the wants of the poor. Spare the lives of the young and the useful. Prepare the dying for death, and teach the living to live humble and mindful of their latter end. We give thee thanks for thy Fatherly care and kindness this day. May we lie down in thy fear, and rise rejoicing in thy favour. Visit our friends with thy salvation—our enemies with thy forgiveness—our benefactors with thy beneficence. And unto thee, the Father, the Son, and the ever-blessed Spirit, one God, be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVI. 8.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XXIII.

REMARKS.

The truth of the psalmist's statement, 'Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain,' was strikingly illustrated in the experience of Balaam. He had, contrary to many intimations on God's part, gone with the princes of Moab to curse the armies of Israel, for although he declared he 'could not go beyond the word of the Lord his God, to do less or more,' there can be little doubt, that influenced as he was by the 'wages of unrighteousness,' he was quite prepared, but for the restraining power of God, to have acted in accordance with Balak's wishes. 'The Lord thy God,' says Moses, 'would not hearken unto Balaam, but the Lord thy God turned the curse into a blessing unto thee, because the Lord thy God loved thee.' Two of these blessings are contained in this chapter; the one from the 7th to the 10th verse: the other from the 18th to the 24th verse: both of them expressed in language highly poetical, and eminently calculated to impress any ordinary reader with the precious privileges which Israel, as the chosen people of God, enjoyed, and to lead them to join in the prayer of Balaam, 'let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.'

In regard to Balaam, it is to be feared that this prayer was never answered; for we find him, after leaving Balak, returning by the way of Midian, and instigating the princes of the land to seduce the Israelites into idolatry, by a stratagem which, unhappily for all concerned, too soon succeeded. That God might avenge himself for the wrongs which his people had sustained, Moses was afterwards commissioned to go forth to battle against the Midianites, whom he routed with a great slaughter, and also 'slew Balaam the son of Beor with the sword.' Unhappy Balaam, with all thy knowledge of God, and with thy strongly expressed wish to die the death of the righteous, yet unwilling to lead their life, thou wast ultimately left to perish as one of the enemies of God's people. It is melancholy to reflect, that this wilful apostacy of Balaam was after experiencing some signal manifestations of the divine presence and power, and bearing honourable testimony to the value of a religious life as the best preparation for a peaceful death. Reader, it is a sad miscalculation indeed, when the arithmetic of time exceeds that of eternity, and when man is so far abandoned by God as deliberately to choose those very paths which lead down to the chambers of death. Having taken one fatal step, he is urged on to a second and a third, to conceal, it may be, his iniquity, till at length, through a growing hardihood of heart, the never-failing attendant of an ungodly life, he not only places himself beyond the reach of recovery, but actually sinks into a state of hopeless and irremediable ruin. 'Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone.' 'My Spirit shall not always strive with man.' 'I say unto you, that none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper.'

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, we desire to worship thee as the King of kings, and Lord of lords, as dwelling in that light which is inaccessible and full of glory. Heaven is thy throne, and the earth is thy footstool. Thou art here and every where present beholding the evil and the good. Thou compasses our path and our lying down, and art intimately acquainted with all our ways. Thou understandest the thoughts of our hearts afar off; We are but of yesterday—we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away; but thou art the self-existent—the immutable—the eternal Jehovah, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. Thou didst at first make man upright; but alas, he soon sought out many inventions, and by adding sin unto sin, we have rendered ourselves obnoxious to thy displeasure, and are unworthy of thy notice and regard. We have nothing of our own to plead in extenuation of our guilt, for, in our best services we offend and come short of thy glory; but we would plead the worthiness of the Lamb that was slain to take away the sin of the world. We would rest by faith on the merits of that perfect sacrifice which Christ offered up once for all, that he might make an atonement for a world lying in wickedness, and bring in an everlasting righteousness for the justification of all who believe. Lord enable us henceforth to look to Jesus as the author and finisher of our faith. May the same mind be in us that was in him, who ever esteemed it as his meat and drink to do the will of his Father in heaven. And seeing it is not in man who walketh to direct his steps, we pray for the aid and direction of the Holy Spirit, that we may be led in the way of all truth, and enabled to consecrate ourselves as living sacrifices unto God, holy and acceptable, which is our reasonable service. May we be found dying daily unto sin, and living unto righteousness; and from a deep sense of the many and invaluable privileges with which we are favoured, may we strive to approve ourselves the faithful disciples of the Lord Jesus, by walking worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. Forbid that we should be among the number of those who know the truth, but who in practice deny it. Having named the name of Christ, may we be careful to depart from all iniquity, and live in strict conformity with the requirements of the gospel, and the example of Christ. We bless thee for all thy goodness and grace—for the mercies of the past night, and the enjoyments of this morning. We implore thy protection and blessing this day. Let thy Son's kingdom come, and let thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven. Regard, in thy mercy, our friends and all whom we hold dear. Comfort and sustain the sick and the dying, and grant that we may lead the lives of the righteous, that at last our death may be like theirs, and all we ask is in the name, and for the sake, of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM cxxx. 3.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE v.

REMARKS.

No one, we think, can read the marvellous account here given of the draught of fishes, without recalling a similar incident which the Evangelist John relates, in his xxi. chapter, as having taken place in the same sea, and in presence of the same apostles, shortly after the resurrection of Christ. The first incident, which was preparatory to their becoming 'fishers of men,' has not improperly been regarded as indicating the nature of that success with which their preaching was to be attended, when multitudes would be induced to make a profession of faith, many of whom would ultimately fall away; whereas the second incident becomes descriptive of those who were true believers, and who, as such, would persevere unto the end. The former are prefigured by their indefinite number, and the breaking of the net; the latter by the definiteness of their number, 'an hundred and fifty and three,' their quality, and their being all found on the right side of the ship, where the net, which remained entire, had, by the special instruction of Christ, been cast. When Peter and the other disciples who were with him, compared these two incidents, they could not fail to perceive, that whilst by the former they were called to be the followers of Jesus, and as such to aid him in the prosecution of the great work on which he had been sent, by the latter they were more specially commissioned to go forth as the heralds of the cross, and to proclaim the unsearchable riches of divine grace, that sinners might be brought unto Christ, and, as the flock of his pasture, may receive those spiritual supplies by which the divine life is maintained in the soul. And in as far as the ministers of the New Testament, of the present day, are actuated by the feeling of Peter, when he exclaimed, 'Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord,' or by the zeal which he displayed when he, with James and John, forsook all and followed him, then may they expect to be blessed with some measure of the same success in winning souls to the Saviour, and so adding unto the church of those who shall be saved.

Ver. 12. In the healing of the leper, as well as in the cure of the man taken with the palsy, we are furnished with two very affecting instances of the power and compassion of Christ, in doing good to the bodies and souls of men, and the authority with which as Mediator he was invested to forgive sin. In both instances there was an exhibition of faith which was honouring to the Saviour, while both seem to have been accompanied with the same blessed results. Previous to his birth it was foretold that he would be called Jesus, because he was 'to save his people from their sins,' and now, though exalted at God's right hand, it is still in the capacity of 'a Prince and a Saviour.' In heaven he continues to exercise his regal and priestly offices, and whilst all events are under his control, he delights to see the sinner, in the exercise of humility and faith, crying out, 'Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.' The prayer which he thus, by his own Spirit, prompts us to utter, he will, by the same Spirit, graciously answer. He who said to the leper, 'I will, be thou clean,' and to the paralytic, 'thy sins are forgiven thee,' is still able, with a word, to cure the most inveterate disease, and as willing as he ever was, to save to the uttermost all who come unto God through him. Whatever, then, O sinner, be the nature of your malady—whether you are borne down with bodily infirmity, or harassed with a sense of your manifold and aggravated transgressions, do not give way to murmuring or despair. Remember there is balm in Gilead, and a Physician there; that it is the prerogative and promise of Zion's king, to save, and that in this capacity he now with equal authority and grace, proclaims to the guiltiest of the human race the offer of pardon, and purity, and eternal life. O sinner, with such a precious offer from so glorious, and withal, so condescending a Saviour, why will ye die? Rather, like Matthew, leave all and follow Christ. The first invitation he received was straightway accepted. How many offers have you slighted? How many calls have you rejected? Once more Christ has addressed you in these words, 'follow me.' See that ye refuse not him who now speaketh to you from heaven, but let your prayer be, 'Lord, draw me, and I will run after thee; save me, and I shall be saved.'

PRAYER.

O Father of mercies, and God of all consolation, God and Father of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and in him God of all grace and glory, we would again approach the footstool of thy throne, and address ourselves unto thee as unto the hearer and answerer of prayer. We kneel before thee as guilty and polluted sinners, unable to stand the scrutiny of thy law, or to offer any thing like a ransom for the sin of our souls. We have been blessed with talents, but we have abused them, and with high spiritual privileges, but we have misimproved them. Our time has been too much occupied with the pursuits and the vanities of the world, whilst we have been little mindful of the value of the soul, and the realities of eternity. The dispensations of thy providence have often been of a nature well fitted to lead us to a devout recognition of thy supremacy, and of our own dependence upon thee, whilst the blessings of thy grace have been as eminently calculated to awaken our love and gratitude, and to induce us to live no longer to ourselves, but to him who loved us, and gave himself for us, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God. We have been unprofitable servants, and worse than unprofitable, and do therefore stand justly exposed to thy righteous indignation. But we cast ourselves on thy mercy and grace in Christ Jesus, humbly beseeching thee, for his sake, to be merciful to our unrighteousness, and to remember against us our ini-quities no more for ever. Rebuke us not in thy wrath; chasten us not in thy hot displeasure. Speak peace unto our souls, by giving us the well grounded hope and the comfortable persuasion of being justified freely by thy grace. May we know, in our blessed experience, what it is to have passed from death unto life, and may we be enabled to give evidence of the reality of our faith, by maintaining a conduct and conversation such as becometh the gospel. Through thy Holy Spirit, as the comforter and sanctifier of the church, may we be built up in faith and holiness unto salvation. May sin no longer have dominion over us, but being renewed in the spirit of our mind, may our affections be set on those things which are above, that when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we may be found in peace, without spot and blameless, interested in his righteousness, and adorned with the gifts and graces of his Spirit, and made welcome to enter on that rest which remaineth for the people of God. We give thee thanks for all thy past care and kindness. Thou hast hitherto dealt mercifully with us in protecting us amid danger; in supporting us under trial; in comforting us in sorrow; in preserving us amid many temptations; and in sustaining our souls, by the consolations of thy word and Spirit, amid the severest bereavements with which thou hast been pleased to visit us. But whilst we would bless and magnify thy fatherly and affectionate providence, we would ever contemplate and adore, with devout gratitude and holy admiration, the riches of thy grace, as these have been made manifest through the blood of the cross. O that we were led to feel more powerfully the constraining influence of Christ's love, and enabled to live still more devoted to his cause and service. Let the knowledge of Christ and him crucified be imparted to all who are still dead in trespasses and sins. May the sick experience thy peculiar care, and may the dying depart in peace, their eyes having seen thy salvation. May we never forget that we are mortal creatures, because we are sinners, and through faith in the merits of our Redeemer may we be led to exclaim, O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory! Watch over us this night. Raise us to the duties and enjoyments of a new day. May our time here be spent in thy fear and service, and at last may we dwell in thy house above, for ever and ever. And all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII.

SCRIPTURE—NUMBERS XXIV.

REMARKS.

God permitted Balaam to go with Balak, but forbade him to curse Israel. But still the resolution to obtain the bribe and to curse the Israelites remained; else why did he go with Balak? and, though compelled to bless Israel, yet so strong were his avarice and ambition, that it was not from the heart, because he ultimately counselled Balak to entice them, in the matter of Peor, to sin most wickedly and presumptuously against the Lord. But although he was false to God and deceitful to Balak, yet the Lord made him the instrument of his Spirit, in the prophecy which he uttered. This was a very remarkable prophecy, by the utterance of which, in the hearing of the king and princes of Moab and Midian, he published to the nations of the east, the coming of one out of Jacob who was to have dominion and power. By taking up his parable, which means his speaking aloud, he shows that the same Spirit who made the dumb ass speak, could make the avaricious mind, and the false lips of Balaam, foretell prosperity and future renown to Israel. The Spirit of God came upon him. He saw the vision of the Almighty, who had lately appeared to him by an angel, and his mind was so full of that which God revealed to him, that he could see nothing else. Being not now blind, as when the ass reproved him, or as when he was intent on cursing Israel for hire, he becomes loud in their praises, saying, 'How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! and thy tabernacles, O Israel.' He compares them to gardens by the river side, to cedars beside the waters. He predicts that the seed of Israel shall be on many waters, that his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted. He here foretells the future temporal and spiritual prosperity of Jacob; the triumphs of the kings of Israel, especially David and Solomon, over all their enemies, and, finally, the glory of his kingdom who has ascended up on high, leading captivity captive. He declares his knowledge of the true God in these words, ver. 16, 17. 'I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh.' He means that a vision pointed out to him the ways of God in future ages, and hence it is also said, 'There shall come a star out of Jacob. and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel.' This is said to refer also to the future triumphs of Israel, but especially of the kingdom of the Messiah, of whom it is recorded, Psal. lxxii. 8. 'He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the end of the earth.'

Thus we see the power of God's Spirit over the mind of this prophet, for, although he at first approached God by such rites and ceremonies as were hateful to him, yet he now obeys the dictates of the Holy Spirit of God. He did not now look to the seven altars, the seven bullocks, and the seven rams; but he turned away from them, and looking towards the wilderness, he saw Israel abiding in his tents, and the Spirit of God came upon him. Under the power of this Spirit he was not permitted to muse in silence, but to proclaim aloud, to the dismay of the king and the princes of Moab, the wonderful counsels of the God of Israel. Here the slave of worldly ambition, the minister of enchantments and divination is, amidst his deceitfulness, made to minister to the purposes of the true God. This prophecy might be useful, not only to the Israelites, but to the surrounding nations, because every new victory, every new accession of power and territory to the Israelites, would in part verify the prophecy, would inspire them with new confidence in God, and fidelity in his service, and would show even the idolatrous nations, that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, and that he alone should be worshipped, by all nations, in spirit and in truth.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, who art the living and the true God. Thou art eternal in thine existence, infinite in all thine attributes and perfections, righteous in all thy ways, and holy in all thy works. Although many nations are still in darkness, and dwell in the land of the shadow of death, yet ever blessed be God that the great light hath visited us. Thou who didst speak unto the fathers by the prophets, hast spoken unto us by thy Son from heaven. We would hail with pious gratitude, the appearance, in our day, of the Star out of Jacob, and rejoice exceedingly because we are gladdened by the light of the Sun of righteousness. We give thee the praise, because we see and hear what many prophets and righteous men desired to see, but were not permitted. Glory be unto God in the highest, for peace on earth and good-will to men. But what are we, O Lord, that we should be so highly favoured? Like Israel of old, we are by nature covenant breakers, and, notwithstanding our peculiar privileges, we have too often been unprofitable servants. Thy name we have not duly revered, thy pure and holy laws we have broken, thy sabbaths we have not duly hallowed, thine altars and thine ordinances we have too often forsaken, and we are verily guilty in thy sight. Amidst the cares of the world, we have too often forgotten thee, the God that made us, and lightly esteemed the rock of our salvation. Whilst enjoying thy bounty we have been ungrateful children; under thy threatenings and chastisements we have not been humbled, and have not diligently improved the dispensations of thy providence. The heart is deceitful; wo is unto us, for we have sinned. Enter not into judgment with us, O our God, but see our shield; look upon us in the face of thine anointed Son. Ever blessed be thy name, because there is mercy with thee that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption that thou mayest be sought after. Blessed be God for his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Evermore, O God, give us this faith and this life. Open our eyes that we may behold the riches of thy mercy and the wonders of thy law. Give us an interest in the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world, and give us the spirit of true repentance for all past sins. Let not sin henceforth obtain dominion over us, but restore to us the joys of thy salvation, and uphold us by thy free Spirit. Notwithstanding our unworthiness, thou hast opened our eyes, in favourable circumstances, to rejoice in the light of a new day. Thou art this morning covering our table with the bounties of thy providence, for which our hearts would praise the Lord. Give us, we earnestly beseech thee, a rich portion of that bread and water of life which came down from heaven, that our souls may never hunger and never thirst. Let a deep conviction of thy presence go with us, this day, into the society of men, that when we engage in the ordinary duties of life, we may ever be mindful of our duty to our God. Let our thoughts and desires be pure, our words true, our actions just, and by thy Spirit enable us to have consciences void of offence towards God and man, and unto thy name be all the praise. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XXV. (Second Version.)

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VI. 1—26.

REMARKS.

We are here told, that, on the sabbath after the second day of the passover, when the disciples plucked the ears of corn and did eat them, certain of the pharisees said unto them, 'why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?' This accusation was in reality made against Jesus himself, but he repels it by a reference to David, who, although a prophet as well as a king, when pressed by hunger, partook of the shew-bread, and with the consent of the high priest himself, which was contrary to the law. He refers also, in vindication of himself, to the priests, who killed the sacrifices on the sabbath day; and to a passage in Hosea, where God is said to prefer mercy to sacrifice. These were acknowledged facts, and yet were never challenged by a single self-righteous pharisee. See remarks on Mat. xii. 1—21. He administered to the pharisees a reproof, which so enraged them, that they counselled how they might put him to death. Nevertheless, he was continually doing good to the souls and bodies of men, by instructing the ignorant, reclaiming the wicked, by casting out unclean spirits, and by healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of diseases, and even the deadly maladies of the soul. In this chapter he delivers a sermon, for these purposes, which is a different one from that which is recorded in the fifth chapter, and downwards, of Matthew. In addressing his disciples, in this chapter, he said, blessed are ye who are poor, meek, modest, and humble; who can cheerfully part with temporal wealth, riches, power, and honour, when called to do so, in the cause of true religion, and in the service of the true God. To such he says, wicked men, whose fathers persecuted the prophets, may load you with reproaches and curses, may exclude you from society, and say and do all manner of evil against you falsely, and persecute you, even to the death, for my sake; but rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven.

This passage should teach all, in their religious duties, to remember that God knows their thoughts, and that, if they are not sincere, he will not accept of them. Woes are here uttered against those who go with the hypocrisy of the pharisees in their hearts, to the house of God; and, it may be, to the table of communion, as if God would sanctify by his Spirit what his word condemns. If we would avoid this hypocrisy, our repentance must be sincere, our watchfulness and prayer constant and fervent, and in all our trials we must, with Christian fortitude, follow the example of our blessed Lord, who had not where to lay his head.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art our God, and we will praise thee; our fathers' God, and we will exalt thy name together. Thou didst breathe into us the breath of life, and we became living creatures; the spirit of the Almighty has given us understanding; thy good providence has hitherto protected us, and thy bounty has supplied our wants. Thou hast saved us from the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. Unto thee we have all our days been indebted for the blessings of health, friendship, and society; and for the rich spiritual consolations which have soothed our souls in the seasons of sorrow and affliction; but above all for Jesus Christ, thy best gift to men. When we meet together in his name, in the family, or the sanctuary, teach us humility and self-abasement; and teach us to worship thee, our God, in reverence and godly fear. O Lord God of truth, deliver us from all formality and hypocrisy, worldly corruption, and self-righteous presumption, and teach us to seek for acceptance with God only through the merits of Christ. When we read a portion of his word, O Lord, let the light of his Spirit shine into our understandings, to direct our meditations, and to enlarge our desires after heartfelt communion with God. May his word ever be a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path. May it be in our comfortable experience the good seed in a good soil, always growing luxuriant and beautiful; and increasing in the peaceable fruits of righteousness, which are, through Jesus Christ, to the praise and glory of God. Let not our goodness be as the early cloud, and the morning dew, that passeth away; but let our path be the path of the just, that shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Give us the truths of thy word, in the demonstration of the Spirit, and of power, that they may lay open the deceitfulness of the heart, and minister to our edification and improvement; but above all, may lead our souls habitually unto God, the fountain of mercy, through Jesus Christ our Redeemer. O God, let not the vain glories of this world withdraw our affections from the excellence of heavenly wisdom, and the holiness of thy perfections and laws. Let not the temptations of the devil, and the wicked example of the world, entice us to seek after sinful gratifications, and to say, Peace, peace, while there is no peace. Let not the trials and afflictions of this life overcome our patience and resignation to the will of God; but teach us to say, with thy people of old, We glory in tribulations also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope. In our intercourse with one another, teach us, O God, to love one another, as God, for Christ's sake, hath loved us. Teach us mutually, and as thy children, to cherish and practise meekness and patience, brotherly-kindness, forbearance and charity, that we may live together in unity, and may, by the grace of God, depart from all manner of iniquity. With grateful hearts for all thy goodness to us individually, and as a family, we would this evening, commend ourselves to the protection of the God of Israel, who neither slumbers nor sleeps. May thy kingdom come, O God, and thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven, and let all praise and glory be universally ascribed unto God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXI.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY IV.

REMARKS.

Man's happiness consists in knowing the will of God, and in the enjoyment of his favour. All his laws are the dictates of heavenly wisdom and goodness; they all proclaim his excellence and glory, and, when devoutly obeyed, they promote the temporal and eternal welfare of man. For these purposes they are given us by the Father of our spirits, who has adapted them to our nature, character, and condition. To Israel he gave his commandments, his statutes, and righteous judgments. He entered into covenant with these Israelites, gave them laws, and exhorted to obedience by many promises, but punished the disobedient by the heaviest judgments. The blessings which he conferred were tokens of his goodness; his power was manifested in their deliverance, and his holiness and justice in rewarding the righteous, and punishing the wicked. By his laws and ordinances, recorded in the Scriptures, we learn his holy will, and his merciful concern for our happiness. By his solemn warnings he sets before us our danger, if we transgress, and by promising mercy to the penitent and returning prodigal, he encourages to repentance and amendment. When Israel obeyed his laws, which he gave them by his prophet Moses, he blessed them; but when they murmured against Moses, and rebelled against God, and bowed down to idols, then the Lord withdrew his favour and protection, and gave them over to the sword and to the pestilence. How often did they forget the God that made them, and lightly esteem the rock of their salvation! They forgot their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the wonders of God at the Red sea, and mount Sinai, and the pillars of cloud and fire. The miracles in the wilderness, and the passage of the Jordan, were all, in times of temptation and trial, forgotten, and they rebelled against God.

These things have been recorded for our warning and edification. He who spoke in times past by the prophets, has, in the fulness of time, spoken unto us by his Son from heaven. The Messiah has not come in the fire and in the cloud, or by the awful solemnities of mount Sinai, but by his word and Spirit, by his pure precepts, holy life, astonishing miracles, and meritorious death, he has come, bringing salvation, and mighty to save. Let us, therefore, be earnest at the throne of grace, by prayers and supplications, that we may find mercy to pardon, and grace to help us in the time of need. If he, who despised the law of Moses, died without mercy, under two or three witnesses, of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing; and done despite unto the Spirit of grace. To obey his commandments and ordinances, is, at all times, the duty and the interest of all. Obedience, proceeding from a true faith, is the only test of discipleship. Obedience to God's laws is, moreover, the only sure pillar of society; for where the institutions of a nation, and the characters of a people, are at variance with the commands and ordinances of the Bible, that nation cannot stand. Where there is not the fear and worship of God, there are no true charity, justice, and mercy. Where the holy influences of the Spirit of God do not implant and direct the pious affections, that man's religion is but a vision. Like the morning cloud and early dew, it passeth away. Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. It was said of old by Joshua, xxiv. 15. 'And if it seem evil unto you, to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom you will serve; as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.' Happy would that nation have been, had they always followed this advice and determination. Happy is that family in whose hearts the fear of God prevails, and who meditate daily upon his word and obey it. Happy are the young, whose tender minds glow with piety to God, and who are taught to know their Creator and Redeemer in the days of their youth. And thrice blessed is that people whose faith in Christ works by love, and purifies the heart, and overcomes the world.

PRAYER.

Teach us, O Lord, to lift up our souls with our voices, unto thee this morning, in heartfelt gratitude and praise, for thine unmerited and unceasing goodness. When we meet together in thy service, and approach thy pure and holy presence, may we never forget our own unworthiness, but join trembling with our mirth. Thou hast long preserved us as a family, and hast enriched our hearts with many blessings. Thou hast, in thy good providence, caused the outgoings of the evenings and the mornings to rejoice over us. By thy watchful care and bounty, thou hast preserved us during the past night, and hast invigorated the body with health and sleep, and inspired our souls with hope and trust in thee. Thou art day by day filling our mouths with food, and our hearts with gladness, confirming to us the gracious promise that our bread shall be given us, and our water shall be made sure. Around the family altar, we would this morning join in songs of thanksgiving and praise unto our God, for the peaceful repose of the past night, and for the mercies of the morning. Forbid, O our God, that we should be satisfied with the mere outward service of reading, meditation, and praise; but teach us, by thy Spirit, to offer unto thee the sacrifice of sincere and penitent hearts. In mercy deliver us, O Lord, from all hypocrisy and deceit in our religious duties, and from all falsehood and injustice in our worldly dealings. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-speaking, be put away from us, with all malice. Save us from the deliberate omission of any duty, or the transgression of any law. Let our eyes this day be turned away from beholding vanity, and teach us to set a guard upon our thoughts, words, and actions, lest we grieve the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. Command thy light and truth to shine into our hearts, that we may behold the wonders of thy law, and run in the ways of thy commandments. Let our prayers, which we humbly offer in the name, and through the merits of Christ, ascend unto God with acceptance, like the incense of the evening and morning sacrifice. Look not upon us as we are in nature and life, sinful and condemned; but see, O God, our shield, look upon us in the face of Jesus, thine anointed Son. By thy merciful covenant, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; O Lord, give us an interest, now and for ever, in his all-prevailing intercession, and in the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world. We are not our own, but bought with a price, not with corruptible things, such as silver and gold, but by the blood of Christ; teach us then, O God, not to live any longer unto ourselves, but unto him who died for us and rose again. We would embrace in our prayers, O thou Father of all! all our brethren of mankind. May the Redeemer's kingdom soon comprehend all the nations on the face of the earth. Open the eyes of thine ancient people, that they may see their Messiah in our blessed Lord and Saviour. May the fullness of the Gentiles soon be the subjects of the kingdom of Christ. May Romish superstition soon be removed, and may the glorious light and liberty of the gospel soon gladden every nation, from the rising to the setting sun. Say to the north, Give up, and to the south, Keep not back; bring thy sons from afar, and thy daughters from the end of the earth. May we all grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: to whom, with thee, and the ever-blessed Spirit, be glory, both now and ever. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXII.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VI. 27—49.

REMARKS.

Our Lord here addresses himself to all who were at that time, and are now, willing to hear. His doctrine is that of mutual love and brotherly kindness. These were bright ornaments in his own character, and also distinguish the characters of all who bear his name and image. He came not only to save his chosen people from their sins, but to give peace on earth and good-will to men. For this purpose he illustrates, by very impressive examples, the law of Christian love, forbearance, and charity. It is, no doubt, a difficult duty to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to bear the angry insults of him that smiteth us, and to allow him that taketh away our property to do so with impunity. But it is the law of the gospel that we regard all these things as subordinate to the law of brotherly love, and the peace of society. That we rather suffer a small injury than, by furiously resenting it, provoke a greater. That we may thus, by our self-denial and forbearance, bring the offending party to a sense of his guilt, and, by kindly remonstrance, make him ashamed of the past, and bind him in future by this very law of love, justice, and charity, which his avarice and unruly passions had broken. Thus the wise master reclaims the servant, the parent the child, the man in authority the whole community, and thus our blessed Lord subdued his enemies. And were this Christian rule to operate through the wide range of human society, the very disposition to enmity, to inflict personal injury, to steal, and to traduce the character, would be eradicated, and the golden rule, the heavenly disposition of doing to others as we would wish them to do to us, would universally prevail. The true disciples of Christ have here no dispensing power in this matter. By vowing to be his they have bound themselves by this rule, they have sworn to obey it as the law of their lives, for this is the test of their discipleship, that they love one another, and even their enemies, and that they mutually forgive one another, as their common Father, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven them. Hence the people of God pray for their enemies as Christ prayed for his. Their desire is, like their Master who went about continually doing good, to do good to all men, and in all circumstances. They no doubt love, with pure affection and unshaken confidence, those that are of the household of faith, but they extend their prayers and their alms even to their persecutors. They do not regulate their deeds of charity by the expectation of an equivalent return, but lend, hoping for nothing again. Thus they are the ministers of God's bounty, which they use, in part, for the good of their poorer brethren, and even for their enemies, whose hearts they melt by heaping coals of fire upon their heads. Thus they imitate the love of God, who is no respecter of persons, but who causes his sun to shine on the evil and the good, who sendeth rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, to all the inhabitants of the globe, and who sends, by his Son and his Holy Spirit, the blessings of mercy and salvation. God promises thus to bless his people, by mercifully judging those who are candid, charitable, and merciful in judging others, because they thus illustrate the law of charity and mercy, which is the fruit of Christ's purchase, and the ornament of the covenant of grace. It is not because these graces of themselves deserve or merit the mercy of God, but, being the fruit of his Holy Spirit, they have the promised reward.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we would ever count it as our highest honour and our chief happiness that we have access at all times to thy blessed presence. Although thou art far exalted above all principalities and powers, yet thou condescendest to regard us in compassion and mercy. What are we, O Lord, that thou shouldest be so very good and gracious unto us. Although thou didst create us innocent and happy, yet we soon forfeited these blessings, and even life itself, by sinning in Adam. The gold soon became dim, the fine gold was changed, and man, being in honour, did not abide. Our nature soon became corrupted, we forfeited innocence and peace, were banished from thy blessed presence, and have incurred thy righteous sentence of condemnation and death. Wo is unto us, for we have sinned. But, O Lord, we would for ever celebrate thy mercy, because thou didst look in compassion on our fallen and sinful state, and in the fulness of time didst send the promised Deliverer. We would, in time and through eternity, celebrate thy praises, who so loved the world as to send thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. O give us an interest, now and for ever, in all that he hath done, and taught, and suffered for the honour of thy name and laws, for the prosperity of his church, and the eternal salvation of his people. We bear his name by baptism, God grant that we may breathe his Spirit, and bear his image in true piety to God, in benevolence and charity to men, and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world. We are by nature ignorant; enlighten us, O Lord, by thy holy word. We are sinful and corrupted in heart and life; O Lord, purify us by the sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. Teach us to see the guilt and danger of sin, to mourn over past sins, as one that is in bitterness for a first-born and an only child; and in future help us, O God, to depart from all manner of iniquity, in thought, word, and deed. In youth and in age, in prosperity or adversity, may we remember thee, our God, and contentedly submit to thy holy will. Teach us to look to him who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. In the time of sorrow and affliction, lead our thoughts to him who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and when worldly misfortunes befall us, may we, with submission to thy holy will, look to him who had not where to lay his head. Under family bereavements, teach us to say, with pious resignation, The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord; and to seek hope, consolation, and fortitude from him who is the resurrection and the life. Teach us to know that thou causest all things to work together for the good of them that love thee, and are the called according to thy purpose. May love for our ever blessed Redeemer ever glow in our hearts, and may we ever cherish reverence for his authority, and dutiful obedience to his laws and ordinances. May we be all of one mind in his service, by treasuring up his precepts in our hearts, by believing his doctrines to the salvation of our souls, and by living habitually under the influence of one faith, one hope, and one baptism. May we ever cause our light so to shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, may glorify our Father who is in heaven; and may we at last obtain the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls, through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Redeemer. Amen.

THIRTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 8.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XXXVIII.

REMARKS.

This is entitled 'a Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance,' and we at once perceive what it was that he sought to recall to his memory—it was sin. We shall do well to imitate his example, and to remember our faults before God this day, taking the same views of sin as David did, and cherishing the same feelings regarding it. Let us look to our sins in their number; and if we but select a single year, or month, or week, or day of our past life, and compare what we did with what we might have done, and what we were with what we ought to have been, we shall discover sins of omission and commission, sins personal and relative, sins of deed, word, thought, feeling, aim, and motive, beyond computation or even conception. And if we can bear to take a steady view of the iniquities of our whole life-time, up to this moment, we shall perceive, with David, that they are 'gone over our head,' like swelling waves that threaten to overwhelm us, or like stupendous mountains of guilt that pierce the clouds of heaven as if calling for vengeance, and then seem ready to fall upon us, to crush us to destruction. Let us look to our sins in the grievous effects they have already produced on our present well-being. Have they not excited the 'wrath' of almighty God, and kindled against us his 'hot displeasure?' and brought upon us numerous calamities in mind, body, estate, and relations? Still in all this we may hear the voice of a sin-avenging God, saying, 'Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou didst forsake the Lord?' These things are part of the appointed and appropriate 'wages of iniquity.' And yet are they to the impenitent but the 'beginnings of sorrows;' and therefore let us, with David, most of all think of our sins in the guilt which they affix to our characters, and the consequent gloom they spread over our future prospects.

Yet, blessed be God, there is hope in Israel concerning this thing. The Being against whom we have sinned makes himself known in the gospel, as the 'God of salvation' in whom we may trust, yea, is exhibited to believers as a God in covenant, whom they may humbly claim as their own. Realizing his character, let us be encouraged to seek his face. Knowing that he waits to be gracious, let us 'declare our iniquity' with ingenuous confession, and be 'sorry for our sin' with bitter compunction of heart. Let us meekly submit ourselves unto God, under those afflictions which sin has brought upon us. Convinced that he is justified in all that he inflicts, that whatever be the instruments of our punishment, he is its author, let us be dumb, not opening our mouths in the language of complaint against God, or of reviling against man, but acknowledging that we are punished far less than our iniquities deserve, let us possess our souls in holy patience, committing ourselves unto him that judgeth righteously. Let us earnestly deprecate his vengeful wrath, and devoutly supplicate his divine presence and power to support us in our sufferings, and to deliver us from our sins. If he knows our secret sins, he also knows our secret sorrows, even those which no human eye can see, and with which no human heart can sympathise. From him our sighs and groans cannot be hid; with him aspirations, inaudible to mortal ear, sound as loud, and prove as prevailing, if proceeding from a broken heart, as would the most piercing cries.

PRAYER.

Almighty and ever blessed God, we would worship, and bow down, and kneel before thee, our maker. May the feelings of our souls correspond, in some measure, to the lowly attitude of our bodies; and with deep prostration of spirit, with reverence and godly fear, may we now wait upon thee. Thou, O Lord, art of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; sin is the abominable thing which thou hatest. And yet we, alas, are sinners before thee exceedingly. We have gone astray from thee ever since we were born. We have followed the devices and desires of our wicked hearts. We have done those things which we ought not to have done, and we have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and times and ways without number, in thought, word, and deed, we have offended against thy holy law. Our iniquities are gone over our head: as a heavy burden they are too heavy for us. Yet to whom can we wretched sinners repair but unto thyself, the God of love and grace, the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour, Christ Jesus. To us belongeth confusion of face, as at this day; to the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him. God be merciful to us sinners! Lead us by faith to the blood of sprinkling, that our iniquity may be taken away, and our sin purged. Shed down upon us the influences of the Holy Ghost to enlighten our understandings, to renew our wills, to refine and elevate our affections, and to sanctify and strengthen us for all holy obedience. Destroy in us the love of sin; embitter to us its fruits; save us from its dominion. In thee, O Lord, do we hope; forsake us not. O our God, be not far from us; make haste to help us, O Lord, our salvation. We thank thee, O thou preserver of men, that in mercy thou hast spared us to see another sabbath. May we be in the Spirit on the Lord's day. May we be very anxious to improve our religious privileges, and have grace given us to serve thee this day in thine ordinances without distraction. Carry us up to thy holy mountain, and make us joyful in thy house of prayer. Save, we beseech thee, O Lord: O Lord, we beseech thee, send now prosperity. Be with thy ministering servant, our pastor, in declaring thy message, and grant that among us, and in all the churches, the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, in the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints. Have compassion on the afflicted; be to them a little sanctuary, and to all who may, in thy providence, be this day prevented, by necessary causes, from appearing in the public assembly. Let thy gracious presence and the consolations of thy love convert the chamber of sickness and the house of mourning, into the house of God and the gate of heaven. Save thy people, O Lord, and bless thine inheritance; feed them also, and lift them up for ever. Hear, O Lord, in heaven, these our humble supplications; accept our persons, and forgive our sins, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XL. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XXXIX. XL.

REMARKS.

These psalms contain so many topics of useful meditation, that the only difficulty is selection. We have here brought before us, (xxxix. 1, 2.) the great guilt we are all too apt unconsciously to contract by sins of the tongue; that world of iniquity, that unruly and untameable member, full of deadly poison, which defileth and setteth on fire the whole body. How comes it that there are uttered so many profane, or slanderous, or false, or foolish speeches, but because men will not 'take heed to their ways, that they sin not with their tongue.' See James i. 26; iii. 13. The honour of Christ, and of Christ's gospel, is very nearly concerned in the pious and prudent conversation of Christians, more especially when they have to mix with the ungodly; for then 'silence even from good' is better than to drop a single word which might either wound his friends, or cause his enemies to speak reproachfully.

Let us next mark the impressive manner in which the psalmist (xxxix. 4.) describes death as our 'end.' Here, to all our business, and all our pleasure, to all our hopes, and all our fears, to all our joys, and all our sorrows, in so far as this world is concerned, death puts an end; for that is the end of all men, and surely the living ought to lay it to heart. 'Lord, make me to know mine end!' What is the measure of our days? A hand-breadth. What is our age? Nothing. What is our best estate? Vanity; that is, a breath, a vapour, easily dissipated, and leaving no trace behind. 'Surely every man walketh in a vain show,' a mere shadowy image, as the word means. You have seen the dazzling meteor shoot across the firmament; you have admired the rainbow decked in its loveliest hues, or the gorgeous mass of golden clouds encircling and enthroning the setting sun; but you have looked again, and they were gone! Or you may have witnessed some display of the mimic art, in which puppets, or men as contemptible as puppets, strutted their short hour on the stage, were arrayed like monarchs, and talked like heroes; but when you saw them on the morrow, in their native haggardness and poverty, you marvelled at the strange illusion. Such like is the life of man! and the most imposing spectacles this world has to present, are but 'vain shows,' unsubstantial pageants, unreal mockeries. How foolish then to allow ourselves to be unduly 'disquieted' or elated by this passing and perishing scene! How vain to set our hearts on the riches, honours, pleasures, which are not! for not one atom of this world's good can we carry with us out of it, and though we could, it would avail us nothing at the bar of our Judge, or in the world of spirits. Yea, just in proportion to our success in heaping up treasures here, will be the bitterness of our final regrets when we are forced to bid them an eternal adieu. Soon must we 'go hence to be no more.' How full of solemn import are these two short and familiar words, 'No more!' Of each of us it will ere long be said that we are gone, and shall be seen 'no more' on the earth; and the place which now knows us through the week and on the sabbath shall know us 'no more,' for ever. But let every thing in our present condition and future prospects lead us to the Saviour, of whom the second of these psalms contains an illustrious prophecy. Burnt-offerings and sin-offerings were valuable only as the types and shadows of a better and nobler sacrifice, which God required, but which man could not bring. Then was heard the voice which said, 'Lo, I come; I delight to do thy will, O my God!' And in the pure humanity prepared for him by the Father, he actually obeyed and patiently endured all God's will, which was written in his heart. To him, the Prince of life, let us, dying sinners, look. In him, the Hope of Israel, let us wretched sinners rely. Poor and needy we may be, but it is enough if he think upon us. Cares may corrode us, but let us cast all our care upon him who careth for us. Burdens may oppress us, but let us cast our burden on him, and he will sustain us; yea, though we may be sunk in the 'horrible pit' of condemnation, and in the 'miry clay' of foul pollution, he can bring us up from every depth and rescue us from every danger; he can stablish our goings in holiness and peace, and put into our mouths the new song of praise.

PRAYER.

Father of mercies, and God of all grace, we come before thee, in the name of thy beloved Son, Christ Jesus, in whom thou art ever well pleased; and we beseech thee, for his sake, to take away all our iniquity and receive us graciously. Unto thee, whose we are, and whom we are bound to serve, we would present, through Christ, the homage of our bodies and spirits, and the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to thy holy name. Many, O Lord our God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: if we would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered. But we would, in an especial manner, desire to celebrate the riches of thy mercy, and the freeness of thy grace, in thy kindness towards sinners, by Christ Jesus. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift: and thanks be unto Christ, the Son of God, who so readily and cheerfully consented to be given. A body thou didst prepare for him, that in it he might fulfil the law which we have broken, and suffer the penalty which our sins deserve; that he might make an end of sin-offering, and bring in an everlasting righteousness, and thus lay a sure and immovable foundation of hope to every returning sinner. Lord, upon that foundation we would now build, in that finished salvation we would rejoice. Clothe us with his pure righteousness; wash us in his atoning blood; renew us after his heavenly image; subdue us to his entire control; uphold us by his free Spirit; may Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, may Christ be formed in us the hope of glory. We are poor and needy; think upon us, O our God, for good. Thou art our help and our deliverer; make no tarrying, O our God. We have enjoyed, through thy long-suffering forbearance, another day of the Son of man. Impress on our minds a sense of our accountability for the right improvement of the seasons and opportunities with which we are now favoured, and which will soon come to a close. Lord, make us to know our end, and the measure of our days, what it is, that we may know how frail we are. Teach us to cultivate the spirit of pilgrims and strangers here, that we may duly regulate our tempers, and order aright our conversation, that in prosperity we may be humble, and in adversity resigned. Follow with thy rich and efficacious blessing, all the services of this holy sabbath among us, and throughout the world. Let thy kingdom come; let thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Let all those that seek thee, rejoice and be glad in thee; let such as love thy salvation, say continually, The Lord be magnified. Dwell with us as a family. May our hearts be more and more knit together in Christian love; and may our united exercises and enjoyments on thy sabbaths below, prepare us for spending together the glorious sabbath of eternity. And now, Lord, what wait we for? Our hope is in thee; deliver us from all our transgressions, and hear us in our prayers, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY V.

REMARKS.

This chapter contains an account of the re-publication of the ten commandments by Moses to the Israelites. The circumstance is well fitted to remind us of the truth, that we cannot too often hear the law of God rehearsed in our ears, seeing that the knowledge of it is so very needful, both to convince us of sin, and to guide us in duty.

Who is the God that claims our obedience? It is Jehovah, the One living and true God; of whom are all creatures, and through whom are all things. It is he, whom, as professing Christians, by our sacramental engagements, we acknowledge as our God, our wise Creator, our powerful preserver, our gracious benefactor, and the God of our salvation. For remarks on the law of God, see Ex. xx.

Alas! though we like Israel, have publicly and solemnly professed, that 'we will walk in all the ways which the Lord our God has commanded us,' how often have we 'turned aside, to the right hand or the left!' How inconsistent has been our profession with our practice! our promise, with our performance. We 'well said all that we spake' with our lips; but, 'O that there were such a heart in us that we would fear God, and keep all his commandments always, that it might be well with us and with our children for ever!' we cannot, any more than the Israelites, stand up before the divine majesty, justice and purity, and claim to be accepted and happy, on the footing of our own obedience. We, like them, stand in need of 'a prophet from among our brethren,' a Mediator between God and man. And, seeing that such an one has been mercifully raised up by God himself, and is fully authorised and qualified to execute every part of his high office, let us go unto God by him; let us seek for acceptance only through his merits; let us implore every needful blessing only through his advocacy; and especially when we shall have to go near before the holy Lord God in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment, let us make mention of his righteousness, of his only; even of that righteousness, which is adequate to meet all the demands of the perfect law; and which, like him who procured it, is

‘the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.’ At the same time, let us give reverential heed to every message from God that he addresses to us, and yield a prompt, cordial and unreserved obedience to all that in God’s name he enjoins.

PRAYER.

O Thou that dwellest in the heavens, we lift up our souls to thee. We would approach thee with that humility, which is founded on a sense of thy majesty and our meanness, thy purity and our pollution; but we would also come in that spirit of holy freedom, which is prompted by an apprehension of thy mercy and love in Christ Jesus. Enable us to form some adequate conceptions of thy glorious character, and thy wondrous ways. Thou art seated on a throne that is high and lifted up; thou wieldest the sceptre of universal empire; all creatures are in thy hand, all events are at thy disposal. Thou art the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. Thou only hast immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen. We bless thee, O Lord, for the manifestation thou hast been pleased to give of thyself, in the works of thy creation, and the dispensations of thy providence. Thine eternal power and Godhead may be clearly seen from the things which thou hast made; and never hast thou left thyself without witness to thy creatures here below, in that thou hast done them good, and given them rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling their mouths with food and their hearts with gladness. But we would specially thank thee, O God, on our own behalf, that in addition to all this, thou hast blessed us with the brighter and fuller discoveries of thy holy word. Thou didst make known thy ways to Moses, thine acts unto the children of Israel. To them thou showedest thy glory, and thy greatness; to them the voice of the living God spake out of the midst of the fire, and yet they lived. We rejoice before thee, O Lord, that unto us thou speakest, not from mount Sinai, but from mount Zion; not in the voice of terror, but in accents of love and peace. O may we see, that we refuse not him that speaketh to us from heaven! He who despised Moses’ law, died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment shall we be thought worthy, if we tread under foot the Son of God, and do despite unto the Spirit of grace? Lord! turn us to repentance. Lord! save us by thy power. O! that there were such a heart in us, that we might fear thee and keep thy commandments always, not turning aside to the right hand or to the left; that it might be well with us, and with our children for ever. Look thou upon us, and be merciful unto us, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name. Order our steps in thy word, and let not any iniquity have dominion over us. Remember us, O Lord, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people; O visit us with thy salvation: that we may see the good of thy chosen, that we may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that we may glory with thine inheritance. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us according as we hope in thee. Thou hast graciously spared us through another night, and hast brought us to see the light and to enjoy the comforts of this new day. We laid ourselves down and slept; we awaked, for the Lord sustained us. To thy guardian care and holy keeping, we anew commit ourselves and all our concerns through this day. Prepare us for its duties; preserve us from its dangers. May we be in the fear of the Lord all the day long; and every where, and in all circumstances, may we act and endure as seeing thee, who art invisible. Let us not be led into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Bless us in the prosecution of our respective callings and employments; bless us in our basket and in our store; bless us in our going out and in our coming in. Let the beauty of the Lord our God, be upon us, and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it, through Christ Jesus the Saviour. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 8.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VII. 1—23.

REMARKS.

Much of the comfort of domestic life depends upon the proper discharge of the relative duties of master and servant. In the example of the amiable and pious centurion, Christian masters will find a fit model for their imitation. By a kind and condescending behaviour towards their dependents, they might expect, and by such conduct only can they reasonably expect, to gain their affection in return, Eph. vi. 5—9. Let Christian servants, on the other hand, remember that they too lie under corresponding obligations. By their sedulous attention to their employers’ interests, by prompt obedience to their lawful commands, by unshaken fidelity to the trust committed to them, they may become as endeared to their masters as the centurion’s servant was to his. But let all, of whatever rank in life, imitate the centurion’s deep and unaffected humility. He thinks ‘not himself worthy to come’ to the Saviour; and as if his very house were contaminated by the guilt of its inhabitant, he deems it unfit for the reception of the holy One of God. Like him, let us seek to be clothed with humility; let us not think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think; let us abhor that haughty heart and lofty eye which so little besem our dependence and helplessness, our guilt and pollution.

Yet the centurion's singular humility was not incompatible with the most singular and illustrious faith. He had seen or heard of Christ's miracles of mercy; and he concluded, upon the surest grounds, that his personal presence was not necessary for his servant's recovery; that he had only to speak and it was done, to will, and it was accomplished. Through all the disguise of his outward humiliation, the centurion's faith discerned the Redeemer's innate dignity and glory, and hence it procured for him the highest commendation from him who will not flatter, and who cannot be deceived. Let us seek to obtain like precious faith with him.

The other narrative contained in this passage is marked by strokes of the most touching tenderness, and the sublimest pathos. How simply graphic, yet strikingly impressive, is the description! 'Behold! there was a dead man carried out.' That is no unusual spectacle among ourselves. Day after day, we see our fellow-mortals carried out to their long home, and the mourners for the dead going about the streets. Let every passing funeral bring our own vividly up to our view, and suggest to us the momentous question: 'On the day when my body shall be laid in the dust, where will my spirit be?—in heaven, or in hell?'

The corpse carried out for burial was that of a young man, 'the only son of his mother—and she was a widow.' These few words exhibit to us one of those pictures of domestic sorrow which affect every heart. The only survivor of a family that had, perhaps, once been numerous; first left a widow, and now written childless; she is on her way to commit to the insatiable grave all that was dear to her in a world to which she now ceased to belong. They have passed the city gate; the house of death comes in view. But, at the very brink of the tomb, the place where she must leave her dead, there Jesus takes him up, and restores him alive to a mother's fond embrace. He makes no parade of him among the multitude, or throughout the country, as a trophy of his might; he simply 'delivers him to his mother!' Truly was it said, 'He hath done all things well!' The same sympathy and kindness which he showed to the desolate widow, he has taken with him to the heavenly world; and as it is inseparably combined with almighty power, we ought in no circumstances to doubt his ability or willingness to support or save us. And let our views also be carried forward to that day, 'for which all other days were made,' when the same voice, which said, 'young man, arise!' shall summon before his throne an assembled world; there too, shall we stand, and receive that doom which shall fix our state for weal or woe, throughout eternity.

PRAYER.

Almighty, and most merciful Father! we adore thee as the king eternal, immortal, invisible; the only living, and true, and wise God! How excellent is thy name in all the earth; thou hast set thy glory above the heavens, when we consider these heavens, the work of thy fingers, the sun, the moon, and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? We alas! are forgetful of thee, but thou art never unmindful of us; we are too often weary of thy gentle yoke, but thou never weariest in doing us good. Thou art the God of our life, and the length of our days. Thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us. Thou loadest us with benefits; thou crownest us with loving-kindnesses; thou givest us all things richly to enjoy. Bless the Lord, O our souls! and all that is within us, bless his holy name. May our long and ample experience of thy providential bounty, encourage us to seek of thee the richer and more enduring blessings of thy grace. Grant us, we beseech thee, thy Holy Spirit, to convince us of our need of a Saviour, and to show us the gracious adaptation of the gospel method, to our characters and circumstances as ignorant, guilty, depraved, and dying creatures. Lord, increase our faith in Christ thy Son, and may he be made of thee to us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. We rejoice in the many recorded instances of his power and love, while he tabernacled in our flesh; and we believe that he is able and willing to save unto the uttermost all that come unto thee by him, seeing that he once died for sin, and ever liveth to make intercession for sinners. Lord Jesus! to whom can we go but unto thee? We are blind, open thou our eyes. We are deaf, open thou our ears. We are diseased and dying, say in a word, and we shall be healed, and arise to life eternal. In the hour of death, and in the day of judgment, good Lord, deliver us! Preserve us from that pride which was not made for man; adorn us with a meek and quiet spirit. Bless us as a family. May we live together in love; bearing each other's burdens, and bearing with each other's infirmities; subduing our tempers, and regulating our tongues. May the peace of God rule in our hearts, and whatever may be the relation in which we stand to one another, may the glory of God be ever our end and aim in every domestic duty. May every friend of ours be a friend of Christ, and an heir of heaven. Have compassion on the afflicted; soothe and sustain the bereaved; succour the tempted; heal the broken-hearted; save the dying. Be the father of the fatherless, the husband of the widow, the shield of the stranger, the refuge of the destitute, the avenger of the oppressed. Bless abundantly thy church; enlarge its borders, and increase its prosperity. And now into thy hands we this night commend our bodies and spirits; do thou redeem us, O Jehovah! God of truth. Grant unto us the sleep thou hast promised to thy beloved; and, if thou art pleased to spare us to another day, may we be raised up for its duties, invigorated and refreshed. Mercifully forgive our sins, and hear our supplications, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXVI. 5.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY VIII.

REMARKS.

The Lord brought Israel 'forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with great terribleness, and with signs, and with wonders.' The event itself claimed the deepest gratitude of the Jews, and its circumstances were calculated to inspire them with the most reverential feelings of awe, and fear of offending their Deliverer. As additional sanctions to his law, he made its faithful observance the condition of his favour to them as a nation, and threatened them with calamity and disgrace in the event of disobedience. He added the discipline of forty years' wandering in the wilderness, to wean them from their love of idolatry, imbibed in Egypt; to give them experience of his presence and special providence; and to prove them, i.e. to give them and their posterity the benefit permanently resulting from this long probation. Ver. 3. This trial was particularly meant to humble them, and there is a special propriety in the caution against pride being grounded upon their own experience of helpless dependence on a superior power for the supply even of the ordinary means of life. This supply was given immediately and miraculously from heaven, not in the food familiar to man, but in manna, a kind of provision which neither they nor their fathers knew, that they might be led to infer that the goodness of Jehovah was not limited to the supply of their temporal wants; that man was not to live by bread alone; and that the true life-giving and life-sustaining bread is not the produce of earth, but must descend from heaven. Ver. 4. They had other evidences of the protecting care and providence of God, in their raiment waxing not old, &c. It was no part of God's purpose to train them to the ordinary arts of life, which, in ordinary circumstances, and by ordinary means, they could easily acquire; but it did form an important part of that purpose to train them up in special dependence upon him from whom cometh all good, and to impress them strongly with that dependence, by the exhibition of a manifest and standing miracle, during the time of their probation in the wilderness. Ver. 7. Even their sufferings were calculated to enhance their appreciation of the peace and plenty which they were soon to enjoy, while the remembrance of the past was equally well calculated to guard them against the danger of forfeiting their present abundance, and incurring their former privations by the sin of ingratitude. How important and impressive a lesson is taught to us in the fact, that with the Jews all these warnings, cautions, promises, and exhortations proved so ineffectual as to permit them, again and again, to fall into gross idolatry, and at last to incur the condemnation of rejecting him who came to them with the first offer of admission to that better land of promise, the heavenly Canaan, the new Jerusalem, where the Lord God and the Lamb are the temple, and where the saints of God shall reign for ever and ever. And how careful ought we to be in proving our experience of God's mercies, in considering his judgments, in the exercise of our Christian privileges; 'for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he spare not thee!'

PRAYER.

O Lord, from whom we have our being, and in whom we have our well-being, we desire to acknowledge thee as the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and the Lord of lords. Thy judgments are indeed unsearchable, and thy ways past our finding out. But although thou hast made justice and judgment the habitation of thy throne, thou art declaring thyself to us as a God of mercy. Thou art our Father and our God, and the Rock of our salvation. We bless thee that thou hast spoken unto us the word of salvation by thy Son, Jesus Christ, whom thou hast appointed heir of all things, through whom, and in whom, we are raised to the hope of an inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, with thee, our God, in heaven. In this indeed is love; O grant that the sense of thy goodness, and our consciousness of guilt, may lead us to repentance which needeth not to be repented of. May the love of God constrain us to do his holy will, rightly judging that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that he died that they who live might live no more unto themselves, but unto him who died and rose again, that his redeemed might be heirs of glory. We confess before thee our sins; they are more than can be numbered, and highly aggravated: forgive our sins, for the sake of him in whom thou art reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. Through him do thou accept of us graciously; in him do thou love us freely. Strengthen our faith, confirm our love, establish us unto every good thought, and word, and work. Create in us a clean heart, O God; renew a right spirit within us. Impart to us more abundantly of the influences of thy Holy Spirit. Have mercy upon us, O God, according to thy loving-kindness in Christ Jesus; according to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out our transgressions with his atoning blood, and with the washing of regeneration, by the Spirit of all grace. Impress upon our hearts the warnings, realize to our souls the promises, of thine inspired word. Accept of our thanks for thy care of us during the past night, for thy goodness in permitting us to see the light of another day in the land of the living, and in the place of hope. Fit and prepare us for the duties of this day and of life; prepare us for death, for judgment, and for eternity. For us to live, may it be Christ; for us to die, may it prove great gain; and all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake, of our Lord and Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLV.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VII. 24—50.

REMARKS.

John was indeed a prophet, yea, more than a prophet. His coming had been predicted by Malachi, his birth was announced by an angel, he had entrusted to him the honourable commission of preparing the way, going before the face, contemplating the person, and proclaiming the actual advent of the Lord of glory. He was also pre-eminently zealous, holy, self-denying, and instructed in evangelical truth. Ver. 28. He was a burning and a shining light, and, according to the testimony of him who cannot err, among them that were born of women there had not arisen a greater than John the Baptist. Yet he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he. The apostles and evangelists were admitted to a greater intimacy with the Saviour, enjoyed clearer views of the gospel scheme, and received, in more abundant measure, the influences of the Holy Spirit; nay, even the humblest servant of Christ enjoys, under the gospel dispensation, a higher privilege in ordinances, clearer light in doctrine, and more abundant sources of consolation, in the complete canon of revelation, than the most distinguished of those prophets and holy men who ardently desired to behold the day of Christ's glorious triumph, and were not permitted. Having vindicated the dignity of the Baptist's character, and borne testimony to the truth of his commission, our Lord next adverts to the unreasonableness of the Jews in rejecting, and the inconsistency of the pleas on which they grounded their rejection of the gospel message. Like sullen, froward children, who resist all the attempts of their play-fellows to win their sympathy, either in joy or in sadness, they affected to regard as a madman, the stern ascetic who preached to them repentance; and when Jesus came, without any pretension to such austerity, courteous in his manner, social in his demeanour, conversing freely with all classes of men, and affable to all, that he might win them to the truth, by displaying in his own person virtue in her native loveliness, they objected to him, that he was a gluttonous man and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But heavenly wisdom is justified of all her children. John, as became him, in the capacity of one sent to prepare the way of the Lord, to preach repentance and self-denial, and to warn men of the wrath to come, exhibited in his appearance and manners those marks of mortification of which, spiritually, his hearers all stood in need; the Prince of peace, who came with full authority to proclaim the remission of sins, with equal propriety exhibited, in his walk and conversation, the divine benevolence which made provision for the redemption of a lost world. But the unbelieving Jews loved darkness rather than light, their deeds being evil. Ver. 37. How beautiful a contrast to the evil spirit of pride is furnished in the transaction here recorded, of the humble and affectionate behaviour of the woman who had been a notorious sinner, and how gracious our Lord's defence, how dignified and complete his vindication of the propriety of her conduct! The pharisee had indeed invited Jesus to his board; but, regarding him as a poor and mean person, who was receiving rather than conferring honour by the visit, he had neglected to offer him even the usual civilities shown by entertainers to their guests. The behaviour of this poor sinner tacitly reproached his incivility; and the parable of the two debtors compelled him to acknowledge, even on his own theory as a pharisee, accounting himself righteous, while he despised others, the propriety of her behaviour. If she had a deeper consciousness of favour shown to her, it was but natural that she should more anxiously desire to make open acknowledgment of her gratitude and love. Simon, too, was a debtor, and doubtless he knew that he had sins which required forgiveness—probably also he entertained some sense of gratitude towards God, that he was not as other men, nor even as this sinner; but he was not equally impressed with the magnitude of the debt, nor with the generosity of the creditor who alone could remit it. Therefore as (not his sin itself, which was perhaps equally great, though less scandalous and notorious than that of this woman, but) his consciousness of sin, and his sense of its remission, were less lively than hers; he loved little. Her faith saved her, for it led her to the only fountain which hath been opened for sin and for uncleanness. We are not to confound the transaction here recorded, with a similar one which took place at Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, at the close of another day we bow down before thee, our creator, our preserver, our bountiful benefactor. Thy mercies are new to us every morning. thy faithfulness and thy loving-kindness extend over us every night; we continually experience that thou, the Lord, art very gracious. But while we acknowledge thy general providence, which is over all thy works, and express our gratitude for what, under thy special providence, we ourselves have experienced of protection and temporal comfort, we would not forget especially to bless thee for thy best gift, Christ Jesus the Saviour. We desire to bless thee for his atoning sacrifice, for his continual intercession, for his Holy Spirit. We bless thee for the abundant testimony given to him as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world, for his blessed doctrine, for his pure precepts, for his holy life and perfect example. Give us grace, O Lord, to profit by our high privilege. Strengthen our faith, that we may lay hold of Christ and of his righteousness for our justification. Great is our sin, heavy our debt, grievous our transgression, but thy mercy is unbounded. With thee there is mercy; with our God is plenteous redemption. Our souls would therefore bless and magnify the Lord, our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour, who forgiveth all our iniquities, who healeth all our diseases, who redeemeth our lives from destruction, who crowneth us with loving-kindnesses and with tender mercies. Enable us to realize more fully the sense of thy pardoning mercy in Christ Jesus, that the consciousness of our obligation, in all its magnitude, may inspire us with deeper gratitude and more intense love to thee, our great Benefactor. Let not the leaven of pharisaical pride be found in our hearts; take away from us all root of uncharitableness; enable us to come unto thee by that new and living way which thou hast appointed; to cast our cares upon the Lord, who careth for us, that we may rejoice in him who is the God of our salvation. Spread thy covering wings beneath and around us during the silent watches of this coming night, that we may sleep in safety. Give us to awake to the light of a new day, in circumstances of health and comfort; prepare us for its trials, its duties, its events. Guide us through life, comfort us at the hour of death, and be our portion throughout the endless ages of eternity, for the Lord our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XXXIV. 7.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY IX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The Israelites were now about to enter upon the conquest and possession of the land of Canaan, and in the series of remarkable victories which awaited them, they were to experience fresh proof, and unquestionable demonstration, that God was their defence, and the holy One of Israel their helper. They were preparing to pass over Jordan, when they should have to encounter nations more numerous, powerful, and warlike, than themselves, the children of the Anakim, or giants, who were proverbial for stature and military prowess, and whose resistance might be expected to be the more obstinate, because they were in possession of many strong-holds and fenced cities. But the Jews had, for their encouragement, the assurance that these formidable warriors should be subdued, driven out and destroyed, according to God's promise. This was evidently the doing of the Lord; and accordingly his people are warned against ascribing to themselves, what belonged only to him; but there was another warning, of which they stood at least equally in need. When they should witness his dealings in their favour, in the subjugation of the Canaanites, they would scarcely be prepared to deny that the hand of the Lord was manifest in the work; but they might be in danger of falling into the great error of supposing, that for their own righteousness' sake this interference took place, as it was, in part at least, on account of their wickedness that the former inhabitants of Canaan were driven out. Ver. 5, 6. God therefore gives them distinctly to understand, that he regarded them as a stiff-necked people, and that they might see how justly this character applied to them, Moses reminds them of their past misconduct, their murmurings, rebellions, and wickedness at Horeb, where they worshipped the golden calf, and provoked God to anger by their idolatry at Massah, Taberah, and Kibroth-hattaavah, (see Exod. xvii. 7; Num. xi. 1—4.) where they were guilty of sinful murmurings; and at Kadesh-barnea, where they had broken out into resistance and open rebellion (Num. xiv.) Ver. 14. &c. These their sins had greatly provoked the Lord, and it was only at the disinterested intercession of Moses that he spared to destroy them. They are reminded of these things for the purpose of convincing them that it was not because of their righteousness that they were now so signally favoured, but solely from God's regard to his own covenant, and that he might perform the word of promise which he had given to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The Christian will ever be upon his guard against arrogating to himself the triumphs which await him in his warfare. Those sons of Anak, the devil, the world, and the flesh, are too powerful for him, except he fight under the banners of the Captain of salvation, and unless the Spirit of Christ be with him to secure the victory. Then indeed he can do all things through Christ strengthening him. He must also, even when most ready to acknowledge that it is God who fighteth for him, beware of that spiritual pride and conceit which would lead him to consider himself the peculiar object of heaven's regard and complacency, on account of his superior righteousness. Self-examination, and the candid retrospect of his past life, will show the believer on how insecure a foundation all such conceit rests. We may and ought to regard our spiritual privileges, our Christian attainments, our religious experience, as tokens and manifestations of God's love, yet we are ever to keep in mind that these are covenant mercies, transmitted to us through a greater than Abraham; that it is for his sake, not for our own, that we are accepted, and consequently that not self-complacency, but humble adoration of God's unmerited goodness, properly results from and accompanies the believer's experience of his heavenly Father's love. The intercession of Moses was admitted of God, and prevailed for the temporal safety of the Jews: we have an all powerful Intercessor, through whom we have at all times freedom of access to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help us in our every time of need.

PRAYER.

Almighty, most gracious, and ever blessed God, thine we are, and on thee do we depend for the comforts of this present life, and for the joys of eternity. We were early cast upon thy care; thou hast nourished and brought us up as children, but we are deeply conscious, and with shame and confusion of face must acknowledge, that we have proved ungrateful for thy goodness, and unworthy of thy love. Times and ways without number have we sinned against thee, doing the things that we ought not to have done, and neglecting our known duty. It is because thy compassions fail not, that we are not consumed, it is because thou hast no pleasure in the death of sinners that thou art still addressing to us the exhortation and remonstrance, Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die? O Lord, do thou turn us, and we shall be turned; lead us to the smitten Rock, that our souls may be refreshed with the waters of salvation. Give us the bread of life, to sustain us during our pilgrimage; in the hour of trial, strengthen thou our faith, and confirm our patience, that we may not provoke thee by sinful murmurings; write thy law upon our hearts, that we may keep it in constant remembrance; mortify our carnal affections, subdue our rebellious passions, enable us to fight the good fight of faith, and give unto us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord. Sanctify to us all the dispensations of thy providence; enable us, by reflecting upon our past experience, to distrust ourselves, and to put our confidence in thee, who alone canst deliver us from evil, and work in us, both to will and to do that which is well-pleasing in thy sight, and profitable to our own souls. Enable us to finish our pilgrimage rejoicing; give us an easy passage over the Jordan of death, and an entrance abundantly into the land of Christian promise, the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, unto whom, with thee, the Father, and the Holy Spirit, one God, we desire to ascribe all honour, and glory, and blessing, and praise, world without end. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VIII. 1—25.

REMARKS.

The women here spoken of had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities; much had been forgiven them, and they loved much. They ministered cheerfully, and doubtless considered it a high privilege to minister, of their worldly substance to him who had administered to them what was more than all riches. Ver. 5; compare Matt. xiii. 3—23, and Mark iv. 1—20. Our Saviour taught the people in parables, or comparisons, for many wise reasons: this method of instruction was agreeable to the practice of the Jewish doctors, and to the custom among eastern nations generally; it was calculated to engage the attention, and to convey useful lessons, without arousing national, sectarian, or individual prejudices; it had the advantage over direct precept of impressing upon the mind more forcibly, and enabling the memory more easily to retain practical lessons of truth; and it was attended with this peculiar advantage in the case of our Saviour's doctrine, that it furnished a test of his hearers' appetite for divine truth, and of their desire to cultivate the knowledge of this hidden mystery of the gospel. To his disciples, to those who were impressed with his wisdom, and were earnestly solicitous to benefit by his instruction, to them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God; but to the careless and the unconcerned, the scoffer and the worldling, who had no relish of divine things, the mystery or hidden meaning, was, for a time, left unexplained, that their judicial blindness might contrast the more strongly with Christian privilege. The parable of the sower has been opened up by our Lord himself, so minutely in all its parts, and so fully with regard to its meaning, as to supersede all farther explanation. It remains for us only to examine ourselves in regard to its application, and to read to our own hearts the instructive lesson which it conveys. Ver. 18. We must 'take heed how we hear;' the light of the gospel is not to be hid. By the fruits of the Spirit, the presence and influence of the Spirit may best, may only, be ascertained; and the gifts of the Spirit are sure earnest of a more abundant measure of spiritual grace and enjoyment: to him that hath shall be given more fully; but the unfruitful professor shall be deprived of all benefit, even from that which he seemeth to have in privilege. Ver. 21. The true relatives of Christ, are they 'which hear the word of God, and do it.' They are 'heirs with God, and joint-heirs with Christ.' He is their elder brother. Ver. 25. 'What manner of man is this? for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.' He who exercised sovereignty over the elements of nature, even he it is who controls our evil desires and unruly passions. If we rest upon him by faith, the turmoil will cease, a calm will ensue, and the vessel which contains our hope shall reach in safety a haven of rest.

How invaluable are our Christian privileges! We may not indeed minister to our Saviour's personal wants, to his bodily comfort; but we have the assurance, that, whatever we contribute from love to him, for the purpose of relieving the wants, or alleviating the sufferings of the needy and the afflicted, he will account as done unto himself. Freely we have received; let us freely and liberally communicate. The Lord scattereth among us his good seed; let us pray to him that we may be enabled to receive it in an honest and good heart, which is of his own preparation; that neither the devil may snatch away from us the seed of hope, nor temptation and persecution wither the blade of promise, nor the cares or pleasures of life choke and render unfruitful the harvest; but that 'having heard the word we keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.' We have light to guide us: let us walk as children of the light, and of the day. Let us pray for the spirit of adoption, that the Spirit himself may more fully 'bear witness with our spirits, that we are the children of God.' Let us seek not only to have faith, but to keep our faith in lively and constant exercise, that, secure in his presence, whom the winds and the waves obey, we may experience neither fear nor disquietude amid the troubles of life, or from the terrors of death.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we desire to lift up our eyes to that place where thine honour dwelleth, and to worship thee, the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only living, wise, and true God. Thou hast never left thyself without a witness to the children of men; the heavens declare thy glory, and the earth is full of thy goodness. But we desire to bless thee especially for that still clearer and more gracious manifestation of thyself, which thou hast made to us in him who is the brightness of the Father's glory, the express image of his person, and in whom we are privileged to contemplate thee as our gracious and reconciled Father. For his sake, regard us, we beseech thee, not as we are in ourselves, polluted with sin, and prone to evil, but as justified through his blood, sanctified through his Spirit, and partakers of his righteousness. As the redeemed of the Lord Jesus, may we be enabled to evidence our affection for his person, by our attachment to his service, our obedience to his law, our love of the brethren. Enable us to walk in thy statutes, as children of the light and of the day, not as fools, but as wise. When we meditate upon thy law, may we be taught of the Holy Spirit, and instructed unto all saving knowledge. Work thou in us that preparation of heart necessary to the proper reception of thy word, that as good seed, sown in a good soil, it may take root and spring up, refreshed by the dews of thy grace, and matured under the benign influence of the Sun of righteousness, till it bear fruit according to the measure of thy grace, even an hundred-fold. Take away from us the stony heart of unbelief; work in us deep and abiding impressions of gospel truth, that our faith fail not in the day of temptation; let neither the cares of the world nor its pleasures, occupy that place in our hearts which religion justly claims; but do thou enable us to keep our hearts with all diligence, seeing that out of the heart are the issues of life. We desire to place our confidence upon the Lord Jesus Christ, by faith in his name. Enable us to exercise this faith constantly, that we may have our Christian hope as an anchor of the soul, sure and stedfast. We commit ourselves to thy gracious protection during this night, and through life. Never leave us, never forsake us; and when thy good pleasure in us is accomplished with regard to this life, mercifully receive us into thy rest, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY X.

REMARKS.

It is an important truth that 'days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.' For this and other reasons, this chapter deserves serious consideration. Its truths were delivered by Moses when he was an hundred and twenty years old, in the eleventh month of the fortieth year, from the time he and the Israelites left Egypt. He was soon to die on mount Nebo, and they were to cross Jordan, and take possession of the promised land. As there were many of them then alive, who had not witnessed the early occurrences in the wilderness, the aged patriarch rehearses to the people the most important circumstances that had taken place during their long journey through the desert. In this chapter he celebrates the kindness of Jehovah, in writing the divine law on the second two tables of stone, which were to be deposited in the ark, and to supply the want of the first two that had been broken. He reminds them of the death of his brother, and of Aaron's son, Eleazar, succeeding to the office of high-priest. We may observe a marked reference to the important fact, that the Lord separated a particular tribe to bear the ark of the covenant, and to do the duties of the holy ministry. For this purpose, since the tribe of Levi was to be excluded from becoming proprietors of any share of the land of Canaan, and the priests to have no part nor inheritance with their brethren, Jehovah had settled it as a law, that the Levites were to receive the tithe of the produce of the land as their inheritance, appointed by Jehovah to maintain a standing ministry. He rehearses the laws of God, and urges the duties of piety, mercy, and kindness to strangers, as having been themselves strangers in the land of Egypt.

Let us remember that it is the duty of families and of individuals, to review all the kindness of God, in sparing and guarding them, refraining from executing judgment on them on account of sin, crowning them with loving-kindness and tender mercies. They should remember that every benefit he bestows, lays them under a stronger obligation to love the Lord, and to serve him diligently and faithfully; and cheerfully to obey all his commandments. Let them bear in mind, that they have the same duties to perform as had the Israelites, the same promises of blessings in the case of their proving faithful to him, and the same threatenings of judgment in the event of their being disobedient and rebellious.

PRAYER.

O Thou that hearest and answerest prayer, Jehovah, God of truth, attend to the voice of our supplication this morning, and turn not away our prayer from thee, nor thy mercy from us. In the all-prevailing name of him whom thou hearest always, we desire to pray in the Spirit. We know not well how to pray, or what to ask for as we ought, but may the Spirit himself help our infirmities. O that we may have suitable impressions of thy nature and character, thy glory and majesty, thy mercy and grace. We confess, that by nature and practice we are children of wrath, because we are children of disobedience, even as others. If by thy free grace a saving change has been begun in us, do thou carry it on and perform the good work, until the day of Jesus Christ. We acknowledge that our progress in knowledge and in holiness, has not corresponded to the favourable circumstances in which we have been placed for moral and spiritual advancement. We have reason to blush and be ashamed before thee, on account of our transgressions, and more and more to cry for pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace. We, alas! are too often unfaithful servants to thee, our divine Master, undutiful children to our heavenly Father, unthankful to our best Friend, and ungrateful to our best benefactor, and unworthy subjects to thee, the Sovereign of the universe. We cast ourselves on thy mercy and grace, revealed through Jesus Christ. For his sake pardon our multiplied offences, and render us more obedient in the time to come. We thank thee for sending him as our Redeemer; one who is mighty to save unto the uttermost. We bless thee for all that he did, and taught, and suffered for our salvation; for all that he is now doing, and is yet to perform. We desire to rely on his mediation—his finished work of atonement, his resurrection, ascension, and intercession at thy right hand. Do thou graciously enable us to discern more of his beauty, excellence, and suitableness as a Saviour to us; to rely more implicitly on his merits,—to believe more firmly his doctrines—to obey his precepts—to be conformed to his image, submissive to his will, and assimilated to his example. We thank thee for thy mercies to us during the night, for the refreshing repose thou hast vouchsafed to us, invigorating us for the duties of the day. We bless thee, that we are yet in the land of the living, and in the place of hope, and in so comfortable circumstances. Thou hast made the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice over us. Blessed be the God of our salvation, for all his mercies to us. This day be at our right hand, and we shall not be moved. Keep us from evil, that it may not grieve us; save us from danger, that it may not injure us. May we set the Lord before us, and whatsoever we do, whether we eat or drink, may we do all to thy glory and praise. May no corrupt communication proceed out of our mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. May we walk as children of the light and of the day, adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Be gracious to the afflicted, send help from trouble, for vain is the help of man. Be near to them who are near to death. When flesh and heart have begun to faint and fail, be thou the strength of their heart, and their portion for ever. Grant them victory over death and the grave, and make them more than conquerors through him that loved us. Hear our prayers, pardon all our sins, and grant us the answer of peace, and all needful blessings, through Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXIX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE VIII. 26—56.

REMARKS.

Our Saviour's power over satan and his emissaries was signally manifested, in the miraculous cure he performed on the demoniac who met him before entering the city. Out of Mary Magdalene he cast seven devils, but the condition of this man shows him to have been a worse case, and more inveterate, considering the number that possessed him, the period during which he had been tormented, and the terrific influence exercised by the demons over the victim of their cruelty. This is manifest from the description given of the melancholy effect produced on the man, as described by the sacred historian.

For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil, and one proof of this was evident from the circumstance of the unhappy man having been so sore and so long vexed with demons, whose power had been, as it were, completely confirmed and established, and who had driven him to act and to live like one who had completely lost his reason and become quite frantic. The cry which he uttered, when he, seeing Jesus approaching, fell down before him, may be regarded as dictated by the chief of the evil spirits by whom he had been kept in misery. The exclamation was the expression of fear, which the evil spirits felt at the approach of Jesus Christ. It might be terror of his superior power to compel them to quit their victim, and depart wherever the Saviour might command them. It is painfully interesting to notice that while the unbelieving Jews resisted the evidence of his miracles, denying his dignity, refusing to worship him, or to acknowledge him as the Saviour, unclean spirits confessed him to be the Son of God most high. Ver. 28. The principal of the wicked demons may be regarded as (for himself and the others) prompting the man to express the sentiment—I am not here to engage in any contest with thee, for I know thee to be the Son of God, and implore thee not to exert thy superior power over me, and not to torment me at this time. This was uttered in consequence of Christ's authoritative command to come out of the man.

When our Saviour had cured the woman who had been diseased twelve years, but who, on touching his garment, was healed, he asked, who touched me? though he must have known who it was on whom he had exerted his miraculous power. But in that case, as well as in that of the unclean spirits, he put the question, 'what is thy name?' to elicit an answer, not for his own information, but for that of the persons present, that they might be more fully convinced of the certainty and the greatness of the miracle performed. These were manifest from the answer of the evil spirits, about to be dispossessed, acknowledging that many devils were in the man. This appears also from their entering into a great herd of many swine. It is thought that our Lord permitted the evil spirits to destroy these animals, as a punishment to the Gadarenes. They belonged to Jews whom Hyrcanus had prohibited to keep swine; and, as unclean beasts, they were forbidden by the law of Moses, to which these Jews professed to adhere; so that they might well be regarded as carrying on an unlawful traffic in feeding such animals, contrary too to their own sacred law. It is painful to think that the Gadarenes, notwithstanding they were convinced that a great miracle had been wrought by Christ, instead of requesting him to remain and preach to them the gospel, entreated him to depart from them, fearing him as if he had been an enemy, instead of welcoming him as a teacher sent from God. It is thus that sinners say unto Christ, 'Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.'

As the man was found sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind, so every one who applies to Christ for his power to heal spiritually, will be found waiting on him to be taught by him as a prophet, will be clothed by the raiment of his righteousness, purified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, converted to a right state of mind, in opposition to his former condition of guilt, depravity, and moral insanity.

PRAYER.

Father of mercies and God of all consolation, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we desire at this time to draw near to thee, the only true God, through the one Mediator, and by the one Spirit. May we never approach thee with wandering minds, or with hearts not rightly impressed, but always with true hearts, in full assurance of faith. We worship thee as the being possessed of every possible perfection and excellence. The glories of thy nature and the riches of thy grace infinitely transcend the comprehension of the most exalted creatures in the universe. We acknowledge that we are involved in the apostacy of our first parents, and that we have often given evidence of the natural depravity of the human heart, by our violations of thy commandments. Though thou hast nourished and brought us up as children, we have too often acted as rebels against thee. Which of thy laws have we not broken? We have sinned against thee in thought and in feeling, in word and in action, wasted precious time, misimproved our advantages, and not duly occupied our talents. We would take with us words, and say, Take away our iniquity, and receive us graciously, and love us freely. Enable us to hate sin, to forsake every false and wicked way, and to walk stedfastly in the path of the just. Make us thankful, keep us humble, excite us to be watchful, and incline us to be more spiritually-minded. Enlighten our minds, purify our hearts, subdue our passions, elevate our affections. Sanctify us wholly in soul, body, and spirit. Lord, increase our faith, strengthen our love, invigorate our hopes, quicken our zeal in thy service, and fill us with all joy and peace in believing. Blessed be thy great name for all thy mercies, but especially for Jesus Christ, thine unspeakable gift. We thank thee that thou sparedst not thine own Son, but freely gavest him for us, and that with him, also, thou wilt freely give thy people all things. We desire to acknowledge, with gratitude, thy kindness to us this day, for supplying our wants, shielding us from danger, watching over us, keeping us in our out-going and in-coming, and crowning us with loving-kindness and with tender mercies. Forgive whatever thy pure and holy eye may have seen to be wrong in our minds, our hearts, our language, or our conduct, this day. We desire to commit ourselves to thy care and keeping during the silent watches of the night. Watch thou over us, when all our senses shall be sealed in sleep, and we exposed to dangers which we could neither foresee nor prevent. If it be thy holy will, grant us that repose which we think necessary to recruit our minds and our bodies after the labours of the day that is passed; or if debarred from natural rest, may we enjoy spiritual rest in the Lord, in thy character, perfections, and promises, and the hope of at length entering into thy glorious rest in a better world. May we remember thee on our bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. Accept of thanks for every blessing; supply every want, forgive every sin, for all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CV. 8.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XI.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we see the necessity and importance of being taught our duty to God, and of his precepts being frequently enforced, as well as his doctrines inculcated. Though the preceding chapter contains several earnest exhortations to the Israelites to love and serve God, yet Moses returns to the subject, and reiterates his injunctions to the chosen tribes to love the Lord, to keep his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments always. This teaches us 'that precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little' of religious instruction. He addresses another exhortation to them to love and serve God, reminding such as were then more advanced in life, that they had been spectators of the wonders that God had wrought for them in Egypt, and against Pharaoh and his band at the Red sea. As a reason for them to be humble, and watchful, and faithful, he adverts to the judgments which their daring rebellion had provoked Jehovah to inflict on some of their nation, especially the tremendous punishment inflicted on Korah, Dathan, Abiram, and their guilty companions. Observe how strenuously he urges the people to keep all the divine commandments, enforcing them by the promise of blessing in the land of Canaan. He again solemnly warns them against idolatry. Moses further reminds them of what they were to do with the law of God. In order that they might remember and obey it, they were to keep it in their hearts, to be careful in instructing their children in the divine commandments, and to take special means for preserving it in their own memories. As another inducement to persuade them to do this, they were, if they kept God's commandments, to be successful in expelling the heathen nations from Canaan, to possess in it an extensive and valuable country, and to be invincible to all their enemies.

We should be induced to love and serve God by higher motives, yet also by the consideration of his kindness to us in regard to the happy land which he has granted us to inhabit, the many comforts we enjoy, as contrasted with those in other countries, especially the means of grace and salvation. Christians should seriously think of the value and importance of the scriptures and the ordinances of the gospel; and they who are placed at the head of a family should feel and act on their obligations to have their children and domestics instructed in the doctrines and precepts of the scriptures.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, we adore thee as the eternal God, the creator, preserver, and governor of the universe; upholding all things by the word of thy power. We worship thee as the omniscient and omnipresent God. Thou art eternal in thine existence, unchangeable in thy nature, and everlasting in thy duration. What reason have we to prostrate ourselves in the dust before thee! We are frail and sinful dust and ashes. We are but of yesterday and know nothing, our foundation is in the dust, we dwell in cottages of clay, and are crushed before the moth, and our sins are as a thick cloud gone over our heads. We confess that our transgressions are multiplied and heinous, aggravated by our relation to thee as our creator and preserver, our best friend and bountiful benefactor; by the benefits thou hast conferred, the professions we have made, the privileges we have enjoyed, the precepts and the promises, the admonitions and warnings of thy holy word. Most merciful God, look on us in pity, and for the sake of him who came into the world to save sinners, deliver us from the love and the power, the guilt and pollution of all sin. We pray that our souls may be purified by the power of thy Holy Spirit in the blood of Christ, that cleanseth from all iniquity. O Lord, subdue remaining depravity within us, and incline our hearts to keep thy law. Dispose and enable us, by thy grace, to be more faithful to thee, more diligent in duty, more vigilant and circumspect, more steadfast and immovable, more abounding in the work of the Lord. May we feel more strongly our dependence on thee, and our need of thy help; more ardently desiring, and more earnestly seeking the aids of thy Spirit to confirm and strengthen all the principles of the divine life in our souls. Enable us to be more aware of the plagues of our own heart, to watch more carefully, and strive more vigorously against the operation of indwelling corruption, the allurements of the world, and the snares of our grand adversary. May the Holy Spirit render more effectual to us the truths of thy blessed word. May we more forcibly perceive their importance, feel their power, and live under their influence. O grant that the word of Christ may dwell in us richly, and that we may be strengthened with all might by the Spirit in the inner man. What shall we render to the Lord for all his goodness to us? Thanks to thy name for all thy mercies, temporal and spiritual, to us as a family and as individuals. O that we may truly feel thankful in our hearts, whilst we unite in expressions of gratitude to thee for thy kindness to us, during the night that has passed. We laid us down in peace, slept in quietness, and awaked in health, because thou hast sustained us. We render thanks to thee for continuing us in existence, in health of body and soundness of mind, and in the enjoyment of our individual and family comforts. Be with each of us during this day. Help us to cherish a realizing sense of thy presence, of our dependence on, and responsibility to, thee. Keep us in the fear of thee, the Lord, all the day; and in whatever situation we may be placed, may we think, and feel, and speak, and act as seeing thee who art invisible. May we be continued in life and health, and each of us be able and willing, after the close of the day, to meet around the family altar, to present the evening sacrifice of prayer and praise. Forgive us in mercy all our sins, and accept of us and our services, for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XVIII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE IX. 1—27.

REMARKS.

We may well admire the power of the Redeemer, as signally manifested in his not only casting out evil spirits, but communicating to his disciples a delegated power to dispossess all demons, and to cure all diseases. Before sending them forth, he gave them special directions how they were to act in fulfilling the work which they were appointed to perform. He gave them the power of working miracles, to attest the divinity of their mission. Before they were to depart to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom, they were forbidden by Christ to take unnecessary care about the means of subsistence by the way. They were to travel expeditiously, and to return soon to give an account of their labours. It was a sufficient reason for debarring them from loading themselves with bread, that the labourer is worthy of his meat; meaning, that, as the servants of Christ, they would be supplied with the necessities of life by the people to whom they were to preach and perform cures; and they might trust in divine providence that God would supply their wants when they were engaged in their good work.

We see the wisdom of their Master, in giving them this prudent caution (as another evangelist tells us), that when they went to any town or city they were to inquire who in it was worthy—worthy in character for hospitality and piety, that they might not hurt their cause by lodging in a disreputable family. They were to abide in the house they first entered, in order to avoid all appearance of inconstancy or fickleness; and to refrain from going from house to house, changing their abode in the same place, and thus to show nothing like discontentment with their domestic accommodation, thus to maintain a suitable gravity, corresponding with their character as his disciples, rather than to seem anxious to obtain more liberal entertainment. That they might be prepared for what they should experience, he forewarns them, that when any refused to receive them and their doctrine, they were to give a strong testimony against such as rejected the gospel, and showed contempt for the messengers of salvation, as also the Saviour by whom they had been sent. The Jews thought there was something so sacred in the land of Palestine, that when they returned from travel in foreign countries inhabited by idolaters, they stopped at the boundary of their own country, and before crossing it, they wiped from their feet the dust of the heathen-land, that no particle of pagan earth might pollute, as they thought, the soil of the holy land. The significant action, therefore, which the disciples were to do, when they and the gospel might be refused, was to be regarded as an intended intimation, that when the Jews spurned at the Saviour and his gospel, they were no longer to be regarded as the people of God, but the same as they were heathens.

We should be excited to cherish gratitude to God for sending the gospel to our country, formerly a land of heathen darkness. What obligations do we owe to God and the Saviour, when we think that our nation, that was not of the house of Israel, but formerly blinded pagans, have long enjoyed the word of life! How thankful should we be for its happy effects! Has it really been effectual as the means of producing a saving change on our own hearts and lives? Let us be willing to aid its wider diffusion in our own and other lands.

Let us rejoice to know that when the servants of Christ, whether ministers or private Christians, are called to arduous duties, or are placed in difficult and trying circumstances, they are not left to go a warfare on their own charges, not left to their resources, but have the promise of guidance, protection, and support, and are assured that God's grace shall be sufficient for them, and his strength seen to be perfect in their weakness. Let us frequently retire with the Redeemer for prayer and meditation, and give him thanks for the bread of life that came down from heaven; and deny ourselves, and confess and follow him through good report, and bad report.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, thou art the king eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only wise, and true, and living God. Thy wisdom is unsearchable, and thy ways past finding out. Thou rulest in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of this world. Thou rulest in the raging of the sea, and in the tumults of the people. Spotless holiness, and immutable truth, inflexible justice, and inviolable faithfulness, the richest mercy and grace, infinite love, unbounded goodness, the tenderest compassions, and every glorious attribute, are thine. Thou art self-existent, and absolutely independent of all thy creatures. We come not to inform thee of our wants, as if thou wert unacquainted with them; to remind thee, as if forgetful; or to persuade thee, as if thou wert unwilling to supply them; but we would humbly and gladly acknowledge our own helplessness, insufficiency, and entire dependence on thee; and be more grateful to our heavenly Benefactor, by whom our wants are all supplied. How unsuitably have we requited thee for all thy benefits, and, how utterly unworthy of the least of all thy mercies! How prone to overlook their number and value! We have been too apt to be forgetful of thee and thy great mercies, and when comforts have been removed on which our hearts were set, or benefits withheld which we thought essentially necessary to our enjoyment, we have been disposed to feel as if dissatisfied or displeased with thee and thy dispensations. O God, pity, and pardon and purify us in the blood of our Redeemer. By thy blessed Spirit correct our errors and faults, and form in us more of the temper and disposition of thine adopted children. Make us to feel and to act more as it becomes such as are the objects of thy redeeming love, the subjects of thy saving grace, and the heirs of thine everlasting kingdom. Fulfil in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power. May we diligently be followers of them who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises, being rendered faithful unto the death, so that unto us may be given the crown of life. Give us grace to fit us for fighting the good fight, finishing our course, and keeping the faith. What thanks do we owe thee for thy kind dealings to us as a family! It is because we have obtained help from God, that we, who are now before thee, continue till this hour. O thou who declaredst thyself to be the God of all the families of Israel, be our God and portion for ever more. Make us more and more a holy and a happy family, and train us up for the great family in heaven. Send, O Lord, the light of the gospel to the benighted regions of heathen ignorance and idolatry. May the Sun of righteousness arise and shine on them with healing in his wings. Give success to the gospel wherever it is preached, and bless the efforts made to spread it more widely at home and abroad. O thou Shepherd of Israel who never slumberest nor sleepest, protect us this night. May no plague come near our dwelling. May we obtain refreshing sleep, under divine protection, and with the light of the returning day, enjoy the light of our heavenly Father's countenance lifted upon us. Grant us the blessings best suited to us, forgive all our iniquities, and accept of us in Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXXII. 6.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

There is here set before us a renewed charge and an express appointment, regarding the maintenance of the priesthood, and we are thus clearly taught, on the one hand, that they who 'minister in the name of the Lord,' are not to be engrossed with the pursuits and possessions of this world, and on the other hand, that they are not to be left without a suitable support, secured to them by positive enactment. There is presented to us, in the next place, a renewed warning against idolatry in general, and particularly against those debasing superstitions, to which it leads its blinded votaries. All attempts to gain information or assistance from inferior, invisible powers, are declared to be evil and abominable in the sight of God, and peculiarly offensive and inexcusable in the case of those who are blessed with the full use of his word, and the regular ordinances of his worship. As the people of Israel were reminded, much more may all believers of the gospel be admonished, of the more suitable methods provided for learning, as far as necessary, God's gracious purposes concerning them, namely, in the writings of inspired men, whom, 'at sundry times, and in divers manners,' he hath commissioned to proclaim his will; and above all, in the ministrations of that great prophet, like unto Moses, as a lawgiver and mediator, who both reveals the will of the Father, and promises all things needful for our true good. There is, finally, a solemn denunciation of God's displeasure against all who shall refuse that Prophet, to whom he hath borne witness in so many ways, and by such mighty works, and we are assured, that God will require it of every man who shall make light of his grace and truth through the Son of his love, the express image of his person, who hath come as 'a light into the world,' and a refuge from 'the wrath to come.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us learn to value aright the unspeakable privilege of knowing and worshipping the only living and true God, and having his own holy word in our hands to guide our feet in the ways of life and peace. Let us diligently and devotedly attend to its instructions, as the true light to our path, and the source of everlasting consolation to our hearts. Let us consider seriously how unworthy and inconsistent it would be on our part, to act in any respect as if we were still left in all the darkness and doubts of the heathen world, and to imitate any of their vain and sinful devices for discovering the secrets of futurity, or the sources of our felicity. As we know and believe that he, who first gave us our being, alone upholdeth our souls in life, and ordereth our lot on earth, let us duly reflect that, with such a protector and provider, we do not need to seek, and cannot expect to find, any better counsels or surer grounds of confidence than he hath been pleased to make known in his word. Let us learn to commit ourselves, and all that concerneth us, and especially the keeping of our souls, unto him as to a faithful Creator, and rest persuaded, that, according to his gracious promise, he will make all things work together for good to them that love his name. Having received as our Lord that heavenly Prophet who came into the world to show us the Father, and to bring us to the Father, let us learn to possess our souls in patience, and to rest persuaded that 'he who spared not his own Son, will with him also freely give us all things.' Let us be more concerned to secure through him that good part which shall never be taken away from us, than to search into the shifting scenes of our present fleeting existence. Let us look forward every day more earnestly to the duties which belong to us, than to the events which may befall us, and give heed, above all things, to him who speaketh to us from heaven, that he may bring us at last to those mansions in heaven, which he hath gone to prepare 'for all them that love his appearing.'

PRAYER.

We adore and bless thee, O Almighty God, as the Most High over all the earth, who hast created all things by thy power, and who orderest all events by thy providence. In thee alone it is that we do live, and move, and have our being. Our times, O Lord, are wholly with thee; and all that we have here is at thy sovereign disposal. We bless thy great and holy name, that thou hast not left us to sit in darkness, without hope, and without God in this world, but hast graciously made the day-spring from on high to visit us, to guide our feet in the way of life and peace. We give thee humble thanks and praise that thou hast cast our earthly lot in a land of Christian light, and that we have thy holy word in our hands to show us what is good, and what thou the Lord requirest of us. We give praise for the knowledge of him who is the way, the truth, and the life, and through whom thou art inviting us to come unto thee, for rest and peace to our souls for ever. Help us, O our God, to come unto thee, through faith in his name, both for mercy to pardon, and for grace to help in every time of need. Grant us, for his sake, the forgiveness of all our sins, and peace with thee, our God, at all times. Help us to acknowledge thy hand, ordering all things here concerning us, and to yield ourselves, and all that belongeth to us, to thy gracious disposal, that thy will may be done in us on earth, as it is done in heaven. Knowing thy great loving-kindness through the Redeemer, may we be enabled to rest persuaded, that with him thou wilt give us all things needful for our true good, and that nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Help us to walk this day as seeing thee who art invisible, and to sanctify thee, the Lord God, in our hearts. Grant us, in all our duties, the direction of that wisdom which cometh down from above, and the protection of thy good providence in all our ways. Prosper us in our way, as thou seest to be truly for our good, and provide for all our necessities out of the riches of thy bounty. Teach us to rest contented in thy holy will concerning us, and dispose us to be labouring not merely for the meat which perisheth, but for that also which endureth unto life everlasting. Hear us, O Lord, and accept us, and answer us, and all that we do ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXVIII. 24.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE IX. 28—62.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The visible effulgence with which the Redeemer's person was surrounded at this wonderful scene on the mount, may serve to convey some representation of that heavenly glory which is inherent in his divine nature, but which he had veiled, for a season, under the form of man. The attendance of Moses and Elijah, and their communings with him during this display of his glory, distinctly pointed him out as the promised Messiah, to whom the law and the prophets gave witness, and who was now come to fulfil their testimony. Their conversation, in particular, respecting his decease which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem, directs the faith of his followers to his humiliation on the cross, as that great mystery of godliness which is designed to yield so much glory to God and good to man, and into which the angels of heaven and the spirits of the just at all times desire to look. The voice which came from the excellent glory, proclaims him to all people as the Son of the Highest, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, whom it is our greatest concern to hear and to obey in all things that he may say unto us. The whole scene here described presents a glimpse of that glorified state into which the souls of believers do immediately pass after death; when even their vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto their Lord's glorious body, and they shall see him as he is, as Moses did, 'face to face;' when they shall be no longer saddened by any anticipated suffering or apprehended interruption, as these disciples were on the mount, but, triumphing with songs of praise in the purchased blessings of his cross, shall continue to behold, without intermission, those never fading glories which surround his throne in the heavens, as 'God over all, blessed for ever.' Amen.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us desire and do our endeavour to have our souls at all times awake to the unspeakable glories of our exalted Redeemer, and of those heavenly mansions which he has gone to prepare for them that love him. Let us continually look unto him, by faith, as mighty to save, both by the merits of his death, and by the power of his resurrection; and labour, by his grace, to live henceforth not unto ourselves, but unto him who thus died for us and rose again. Let us daily keep in mind, however, that we are not yet come to the heavenly rest, and have not accomplished our spiritual warfare, but, like the disciples here mentioned, must descend from the height of these devout contemplations, to behold and to bear many trials and temptations from an evil world, and from the evil one. Let us duly keep in mind that we must prepare to suffer with our Lord, that we may finally reign with him, and be daily sanctified by his truth, that we may be made meet for his presence. Let us observe, also, that we are not called to be telling every one of our heavenly visions, as if aiming after the pre-eminence over our brethren, but are instructed by our Lord to walk before him in all humility of spirit, even as 'a little child that is weaned of his mother.' Let us remember, above all, that it is only to the good and faithful servant that he will at last be heard to say, 'enter thou into the joy of thy Lord,' and learn, therefore, to follow him as our Lord, in all the duties to which he may call us, without wavering or wearying in his service. Let us neither linger nor look back in our Christian course, but be ready, as he was, to despise every shame and to endure every cross for the joy set before us, when 'he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired of all them that believe, in that day.'

PRAYER.

O almighty and ever blessed God, we adore and worship thee as the great Father of lights, from whom alone cometh down every good and every perfect gift. We bless thy great and holy name for all thy good gifts to us from day to day, and, above all, for thine unspeakable gift, Jesus Christ the righteous. We give thanks to thee, O our God, who in time past didst speak unto men by the prophets, that, in these latter days, thou hast spoken unto us by thine own Son, the appointed heir of all things, and that thou art in him reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. We rejoice, O Lord, to know that we have in him a merciful and faithful high priest, who hath suffered for us, the just for the unjust, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us. Help us to welcome him as our Redeemer, as thou hast graciously provided; and grant us an interest in all his heavenly blessings. Grant us, for his sake, the forgiveness of all our sins, and peace with thee, our God, at all times, and patience and perseverance in thy fear to the end of our lives. Help us to be daily learning of him who was meek and lowly in heart, and to be so growing in his likeness, as that we may finally be made meet for his presence. Help us, under the influence of this blessed hope, to bear patiently all the trials of the present time, and to serve thee, the Lord, with all humility of mind and fervency of spirit. Help us to glorify thee, our heavenly Father, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, in all the duties which belong to us in our respective places and relations. And, when we shall have answered thy purposes with us here on earth, may we be prepared, by thy grace, for seeing our Lord as he is, beholding his glory and partaking of his joy. We give thanks and praise, O Lord, for the mercies of the day that is past. We pray for thy gracious protection during the returning hours of rest. May we lie down in peace, and sleep in safety, and rise in health, thou, the Lord, sustaining us. May thy blessing rest upon our respective relations and friends every where. May they be taken under thy care at all times. May they be kept in thy fear in all their ways. May they be blessed with thy favour, which is better than life. May they be made meet at length for joining the spirits of just men made perfect, in thy presence. May all flesh see thy salvation, and the whole earth be filled with thy glory. May these, the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts, be accepted by thee, through Jesus Christ, our Strength and Redeemer. Amen.

FOURTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XL. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XLI. XLII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

To those who are poor in regard to this world's goods, and exposed to the neglect or unkindness of their fellow-men, it is no small consolation to reflect and to be able to rejoice, that the blessed God himself condescends to consider their case, and commands them to the compassionate care of their brethren. But it is their best and never-failing consolation to know, that while feeling the want of earthly treasures, they are specially invited to make their application to the compassionate Saviour himself, who calls the poor of this world to seek a portion of his unsearchable riches, and who promises to all who trust in his grace, that he will 'set them on high before his face for ever.' Well may the poorest among men, when once brought to the knowledge and the hope of this eternal inheritance and heavenly consolation, be encouraged to 'bless the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting and to everlasting.'

But to the spiritual mind there is a sense of want, a thirsting, and hungering, which is not less important, than the natural craving of the bodily appetite, for its natural food. When long shut out by distance or distress from the offices of God's worship, and the ordinances of his grace, the pious soul thirsteth and panteth for the living God, and watches and prays for opportunities of drawing near to his gracious presence, and experiencing the communications of his favour. There is a natural feeling of attachment to the place where the multitudes of his people resort to seek his face, and a rational hope of his blessing on the means of his own appointment. But the consolations of genuine piety and humble faith, are not confined to times or places of worship. From every corner of the earth, the most removed from earthly sanctuaries, and the most unsuited for devout exercises; from beds of sickness, from dungeons of darkness, from the howling wilderness, from the swelling deep; from every spot, and at every moment, there is a straight path to the throne of grace, and a free opening for the shining of God's countenance, upon the inmost spirit of the humble suppliant; and never should the souls of his people be so cast down, as to be disquieted with the apprehension, that he hath forgotten to be gracious, or to despair of having yet cause to praise him for his mercies.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Do we enter, in any measure, into those feelings of the devout king of Israel, and esteem it to be at once our duty and happiness to cherish such desires after the living God, and to feel such longings for the place where his honour dwelleth? Do we make it in truth a matter of conscience to wait habitually upon God in his house of prayer, and account our personal attendance there as an act of outward homage which we are invariably bound to render to his glorious name? Do we acknowledge, in this act, the sovereign authority of Jehovah, and the sacred law of the sabbath, requiring us to assemble ourselves together in his name, not merely as a dictate of enlightened reason, or as a service beneficial to society, but as a positive duty, which God himself hath expressly enjoined, and which we cannot deliberately withhold, without directly defying his authority, and defrauding him of his claims? Do we experience, also, a spiritual enjoyment in the discharge of this duty, delighting, like the psalmist, to seek communion with the Father of our spirits, and to find a sense of peace in the assurance of his favour? The duty indeed, of worshipping God in public, let us observe, depends not upon our will and pleasure, and arises not from the satisfactions which we may experience in the service; but if we do indeed feel any of that delight, which, as God's creatures, and subjects, and servants, and children, it becomes us to take in giving glory to his name, then will it be no easy matter to keep us from following this our own pleasure; then will it be our inclination to break through the hinderances in the way; then will it be clearly seen, that we esteem a day in his courts better than a thousand; then will it be our settled principle, and certain practice, to 'come and appear before God,' not on one Lord's day, or another Lord's day, but on every Lord's day that rises to us in this world, and especially on this present Lord's day, which, for any thing that we can know, may be the last of our allotted number upon earth.

PRAYER.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive all honour, and blessing, and praise; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. Thou, O Lord, hast made us, and not we ourselves; thou hast hitherto upheld our souls in life, and provided us with all things pertaining unto life and godliness. We bless and praise thy holy name that thou hast brought us to the light of another day of the Son of man in peace, and blessed us with so many means and opportunities of growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. We would welcome him as our merciful high priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and who, amidst all the trials and changes of time, remains to us the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. We would joy in thee, our God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have received the atonement. Blessed be he who cometh in the name of the Lord to save us. May we be in the Spirit on this thy day; and be enabled duly to keep thy sabbaths, and to reverence thy sanctuaries. May we be glad always when it is said to us, Let us go up to the house of the Lord; and may we be enabled to worship thee, who art a spirit, in spirit and in truth, as thou desirest to be worshipped. We beseech thee, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, to shine in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of thee, our God, in the face of Jesus Christ. May we be filled with the knowledge of thy will through him, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding. And may we walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work. May we be comforted by the consideration of his power and willingness to save; and may we taste the peace of them that love thy law. Be merciful unto us, O Lord, and heal our souls, for we have sinned against thee. Command thy loving-kindness in the day-time; and in the night may our song be unto thee, and our prayer unto the God of our life. May we taste, this day, the blessedness of the man whom thou choosest and causest to approach unto thee. May we be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple. May thy word have free course and be glorified. May thy priests be clothed with salvation, and thy saints shout aloud for joy. May all thy churches be multiplied and edified, walking in the fear of God, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost. And may the period promised in thy word be hastened, when all shall know thee, from the least unto the greatest, and all the kingdoms of this world shall be made the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ. Do for us, O Lord, above all that we ask or think; and all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

2 April 1856

SABBATH EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM XLIII. 3.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XLIII. XLIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

When deprived of religious ordinances, or denied the consolations which flow from them, the believing soul cannot fail to be cast down; and the more so, in proportion as he has learned to value such privileges, and to delight in such communications. But it is possible to indulge these regrets so far as to lose all relish for other sources of comfort which God is still pleased to place within our reach, and it is more becoming in all who know the loving-kindness of the Lord, to strive, with the psalmist, to reason themselves into a better frame of spirit. 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul?' We must feel our distresses that we may draw good from our chastenings, but must never give way to despair, which is just going quite away from God, and 'dealing falsely in his covenant.' It would argue a want of all pious affections not to feel deeply the loss of spiritual privileges and satisfactions; but this very sense of sorrow, under such privations, should of itself serve as a proof that God hath not 'taken his Holy Spirit away from us,' and should preserve us in the hope that he will yet restore to us the joy of his salvation. Every true believer must have received tokens of the divine goodness which it should be impossible for him to forget, and must have learned to trust in promises which cannot fail to be fulfilled. Whether, then, looking back to things past, or forward to things future, he must see cause to retain his confidence in God, and, from what he hath done 'in times of old,' to rest assured that he will 'command deliverances' in times to come. Just because his soul is 'disquieted within him,' may he be satisfied that the Spirit of God is working within him new convictions of his own insufficiency and emptiness, and so preparing him yet to go unto God with exceeding joy, and to praise him for ever as 'the health of his countenance,' and the 'God of his salvation.'

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

With all the consolations which we can expect to possess in this mortal and mixed state, we must indeed remember, at all times, that this is not our rest, and must never remain satisfied with any portion of spiritual enjoyment, but should be looking and preparing daily for our passage from an earthly to a heavenly temple, to join the worship of angels through eternal ages. Let us carefully cherish this desire, and continually rejoice in this hope. Let us be thankful for every intimation of pardoning mercy, and every experience of purifying grace; and pray always, in humble confidence, that he 'who hath begun a good work in us, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.' Let us beware of indulging a selfish rather than a saint-like spirit, in complaining of our depressions and desertions; and rather learn to rest satisfied, with child-like reliance, that it is best for us, in all things, to be as the Lord pleases, whether in the way of temporal prosperity or of spiritual consolation. In both these respects, let us be duly careful to use the appointed means of success, in humble dependence on his blessing, and in patient waiting for his pleasure; and let us no more doubt his faithfulness than we would question that of a well-tried earthly friend, though we may not receive all the intimations of his remembrance and tokens of his regard that we may desire. 'Though now for a season, if need be, we are in heaviness through manifold temptations, let us greatly rejoice even in this as the trial of our faith, that it might be found unto peace, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ;' and make it our prayer, without ceasing, in the words of the psalmist, 'O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill.'

PRAYER.

We would now desire, most gracious God, to lift our souls to thee in prayer. We beseech thee, for the Redeemer's sake, to hear us in mercy, and to grant us an answer of peace. We bless thy great and holy name for all the goodness and mercy which thou art daily making to pass before us in this present life, and for the blessed hope of a heavenly inheritance beyond the grave. We give thanks, O Lord, for the opportunities this day afforded us of worshipping thee in thine earthly courts, and receiving instructions and consolations from thy word of truth. We are not worthy of the least of all the mercies and of all the truth which thou hast shown us. We confess before thee, the great Searcher of hearts, that in us there dwelleth no good thing, and that if thou wert strict to mark iniquity, we could not answer thee for one out of many thousands of our offences. Have mercy upon us, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according to the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out all our transgressions. Being justified by faith, may we have peace with thee, our God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; and as he who hath called us is holy, so may we also learn to be holy in all manner of conversation. May it be given unto us to know the love of Christ our Lord, which passeth knowledge; and may we walk in love as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us. May we hold on our Christian course rejoicing, and be found steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead us; let them bring us to thy holy hill and heavenly presence. By all our approaches to thee in thine earthly courts, may our spirits be finally prepared for serving thee hereafter, without sin and without end, in a heavenly temple. Be gracious to all with whom thou hast connected us in this passing life. Remember them with that favour which thou bearest to thy people. O thou Keeper of Israel, who neither slumberest nor sleepest, watch over us during the hours of rest. May we remember thee upon our bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. May we be daily looking and preparing for that rest which remaineth for thy people. May we wait patiently all the days of our appointed time, and be enabled to depart in peace, having seen thy salvation. Hear us, O Lord, and accept of us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 7—10.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XXVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—10. The necessity of obeying the law is here enforced. We are by no means set free from obedience, because we have disqualified ourselves for obeying. On the contrary, our very disqualification is our sin. So much are we bound to obey, that in all our undertakings we should keep God's law 'very plainly' before us as a rule of life. Ver. 2—6. Moreover, we are to set up an altar for God's worship wherever we are. Ver. 7. Burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, all pointing to Jesus Christ, the sinner's 'peace,' are to be offered before we can rejoice in the Lord our God. Though God is called 'love,' and though he gave his Son to die for his people, yet he will by no means clear the guilty. Every law and appointment of God must be obeyed, or the lawgiver is angry with the sinner. God is infinitely merciful, but he is also infinitely pure. Ver. 15—26. Hence, the chain of curses pronounced in this chapter, will eternally fetter those who live and die sinners, without being guided to him who is the end of the law for righteousness.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

As the injunction is to keep all God's commandments, and as conscience accuses us of having broken them all, surely this should urge us to seek, with a zeal that increases every day, the Lord Jesus, in whom all sin is pardoned, and believers are complete for justification. Col. ii. 10. As God insists, with so much reiteration, on our obedience to the law, this should show both the sinfulness of sin, and the need of atoning, cleansing blood, without which there can be no pardon. And as God, in this chapter, commands the people so strongly to adopt measures for keeping them in mind of all the law, we may learn from this that God wishes us constantly to walk by its directions, not that we may be justified thereby, because that would be to overthrow the gospel, but that, by the blessing of the Holy Spirit, we may learn to be perfect, as God is perfect, and pure, as Christ is pure. To know the right use of God's law is one sure mark of a true Christian. When we are taught by the Holy Ghost to use the law always as a guide, but never as a saviour, we understand the gospel, and enjoy the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. Farther, as God commands his people to set up an altar for his worship, ought not every head of a family to set up an altar in his house, and every professing Christian to erect one in his heart, that all we do may be hallowed by holy communion with God. The altar was to be made of unpolished stones. This may show that God is to be worshipped, not by the inventions of man, or the elegance of mere earth-born accomplishments, but in simplicity and godly sincerity of heart. To the curses contained in this chapter, which apply to secret as well as open sins, the people of God are expected to add their Amen, that is, we should be ready to condemn ourselves as sinners against God; to plead guilty when a holy God accuses. The man who is most prompt and most spiritual in self-condemning, is the man that is most according to God's own heart. But self-condemnation should always send us in faith to him in whom there is no condemnation for his people. Rom. viii. 1.

When reading the curses here denounced against sinners, even God's covenant people sometimes feel dismayed. But they find shelter from him who became a curse for them. Gal. iii. 13. This is the substance of that marvellous scheme by which even the Holy God is now in Christ the friend of penitent sinners. The fire of the curse is quenched in the blood of the Redeemer; and the love of God, the love of Christ, the ingratitude of man, should be equally wondrous in our eyes. Since these appalling curses are designed to bring us to Christ, for the law is a schoolmaster, appointed for that purpose, how miserable is the man who is equally unmoved by God's love, and unwarned by God's anathema! O my soul, is it even possible that this may be thy condition?

PRAYER.

O holy, just, and sovereign God, in thy law we desire to see the reflection of all thy perfections. We would be impressed in our inmost souls with this conviction, that sinners like us cannot approach a God like thee, and live before thee. Thy commandments we have broken; thy law we have despised; and though thou hast, in mercy to our souls, warned us of the danger of sin, yet have we, O living God, neglected thy warnings, and turned a deaf ear even to thine entreaties. God be merciful to us sinners. Turn us, that we may be turned. May the eternal Spirit convince us of sin, according to the promise; and bring us to the Lord Jesus, who, in his people's stead, magnified the law and made it honourable; fulfilled all righteousness; made an end of transgression; and shed the blood which cleanseth from all sin. O God of mercy, grant that by a vital and a spiritual union to the Lord Jesus, we may be complete in him. Being guilty, and polluted, and vile in ourselves, O take away our pollution, through the blood which at once atoneth for sin and cleanseth from it. As thou didst give thy Son to be a curse for thy people, give us precious faith in him, that from his death we may derive life; that from his sufferings we may obtain joy; and that, since he bore the curse, we may obtain mercy to pardon. While we beseech thee, O God of mercy, thus to pardon and bless us, we would adore thee for our temporal mercies as well as our spiritual blessings. We thank thee for the preservation of the past night; for the health and the comforts of this morning. Grant that, under the guidance of thy Spirit, we may this day act in spirit and in truth, like the people of thee, the Lord. Amid our intercourse with the world, teach us to remember that if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. Help us, therefore, to set the Lord before us. May thy Son be precious to us. May thy Spirit dwell in us. May holiness to the Lord be inscribed on our hearts. May sin be pardoned; and may thy glory thus be promoted in the salvation of our souls, through Jehovah our righteousness, the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE X. 1—24.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. Moved by the extent of the unconverted world, Jesus Christ sends forth some labourers to seek its conversion, and bids us pray to the Father to raise up others. Hence prayers for ministers and missionaries is a doctrine taught by Jesus Christ, however much neglected by those who call themselves Christians. Ver. 3, 4. Ministers and missionaries should now go forth to their work, depending on God's providence, not in the way of miracle, but in the use of means. Ver. 5, 6. They should make it their first aim to proclaim peace between heaven and earth, in God's appointed way, that is, through Christ's blood believed in. Ver. 6—9. While the word of the kingdom, that is, the gospel, is received, ministers and missionaries are to labour; ver. 10—15. but circumstances may arise in which the servants of Christ should abandon the field in which the Lord of the harvest placed them, when the Lord himself leads the way. Ver. 16. What ministers say, agreeably to the mind of the Spirit in the scriptures, is stamped with the authority of Jesus Christ, ver. 17—20. and when the Lord works with them, great success will follow. As the Lord Jesus is the Saviour, so he is the model for his people to imitate. Accordingly, in ver. 21, 22. he sets us the example of holding communion with God. Ver. 23, 24. Lastly, the Redeemer draws the attention of the disciples to the privilege they enjoyed in waiting upon the Son of God while he dwelt on earth, to labour and die for the redemption of his people.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Since there are still so many millions of unconverted men, Christ's people should be frequently in prayer to the Lord of the harvest to raise up and prepare missionaries for the work. We ought also to beseech God to make ministers and missionaries faithful and assiduous; instant in season and out of season, and to teach them not to conform to the world's hollow formalities. And seeing that God hath in sovereignty sent the gospel to us, O how careful should we be, lest the doom pronounced over Chorazin and Bethsaida be uttered over us at the day of judgment! If our privileges be high, our condemnation will be great, if they are abused; and we should never forget that God's word, however weak the minister may be, is stamped with God's authority. To obey is to obey Christ, to despise is to despise Christ, when what is said agrees with the mind of the Spirit in the Bible; and surely it might make the ears to tingle to hear of despising and rejecting Christ. Let every conscience, then, ask in the sight of God, and as it shall answer to God, Am I honouring Christ's word?

When the Lord Jesus Christ, in his providence, sends forth ministers or missionaries, we may be sure he will bless them and equip them for the work, inasmuch that in Christ's own time satan shall fall from heaven, that is, he shall be brought down from his dominion by the 'stronger than he' that is in the Christian. At the same time, the Lord Jesus, like a true spiritual teacher, turned men's thoughts away from miraculous gifts to spiritual graces, and taught that men should rejoice supremely in the fact that they are heirs of God. To have our own names written in the book of life should be our first endeavour, and even ministers choose a wretched portion, when they professionally seek the conversion of others but neglect their own. As Jesus Christ rejoiced in the success of his servants, and thanked the sovereign God for disclosing the truth to simple minded believers, so Christians should rejoice when another and another are added to the number of Christ's Spirit-taught people. While we rejoice that all the events, both of the world and the church, are controlled by a sovereign God, we should also rejoice that all is now in the hands of a mediator, and if we indeed see light in Christ's light, whereas millions, not worse by nature than we, are left in darkness, we ought to ascribe blessing, and honour, and glory to him who, by his Holy Spirit, hath opened our eyes to see the Lord's salvation.

PRAYER.

O thou who art light, and in whom is no darkness at all, we would praise and magnify thy name for thy sovereign goodness towards us, in sending the knowledge of thy Son to these distant isles of the sea. We adore thee for this, that poor, and miserable, and wretched as we are by nature, thou hast in Christ Jesus made provision for restoring us to thy favour, by blotting out our sins. And since thou hast brought to our knowledge the plan of redemption, and permitted us to learn it by the hearing of the ear, O living God, complete thy mercy, by enabling us, through thy grace and Spirit, to believe with the heart to the saving of the soul. May Jesus Christ be in us, by his Spirit, the hope of glory. May we be taught to live by faith on the Son of God. May the kingdom of God be within us—that kingdom which consists in righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Our heart's desire and prayer, O God, is, that we may have in us the mind of Christ, and be before thee, even as he is, through faith in his name as the Prince of peace. And blessed God, hear our prayers, while we beseech thee to spread the savour of that name throughout the world. May thy church, through all its borders, soon become a missionary church, even till, by the unction of the Holy Ghost, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess at the name of Jesus. May thy ministering servants be full of the Holy Ghost. May they be taught to glory only in the Lord, and to know nothing but Christ and him crucified. While we beseech thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, to sanctify us in the use of all our privileges, we would also thank thee for the happiness and the protection of another day. Forgive the sins we have committed in its course. Sprinkle us with the blood of cleansing, and speak peace unto us. Prepare us for death, judgment, and eternity. Take us under thy guardianship for this night. May no evil thing befall us; may no plague come near our dwelling. Grant refreshing repose.

Prepare us for all our duties. And in Christ Jesus be our everlasting portion, for thy great name's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXX. 3—6.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XXVIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

We are here taught, that in keeping God's commandments, not in a legal, but an evangelical spirit, there is a great reward. To disobey God is to be cursed, to obey him is to be blessed; when obedience flows from proper motives, in public and in private, God meets his people to bless them, and to do them good, when they delight in the law of the Lord after the inner man; on the other hand, God makes every thing in reality, fight against men, when they rebel, and continue rebellious against him.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The Spirit of God, who dictated this chapter, and the whole word of God, saw the end from the beginning, and called things that were not, as though they had been. Accordingly all took place, exactly as this passage of the word describes. The Jews prospered and grew exceedingly, when they obeyed their covenant God. But calamity followed calamity, when they forsook the holy One of Israel. Drought and blasting overtook them as threatened. Again and again, did their enemies carry them into captivity. Their bones have been bleached on many occasions, by the sun and rain of heaven. They have been oppressed and spoiled in every land. Their property has been seized on, by kings and rulers, and scarce anywhere more than in this island, in ancient times. In some popish countries, the children of Jews have been torn from their parents, and trained up as papists. Many of them have been compelled to feign conversion, to escape from the inquisition. Every one is aware, that the name of a Jew is a name of contempt, at least with unthinking men, in every land. Verily, a 'yoke of iron,' hath been put upon the neck of the nation,' by the God who shall come, and will not tarry, whether he come to bless his people, or destroy his enemies. Even the horrific prediction, or threat, in ver. 56, 57. was literally fulfilled in more than one instance. In short, because the Jews did not fear the great and terrible name of the Lord their God, afflictions without an equal befell them. They are found in every land, yet have a home in none. Wherever they are, they are black with the curse of Jehovah; and the marvel is, that, amid all their sufferings, they continue uncrushed, and separate from every other people; a perpetual miracle pressed on the attention of the church, confirming at once the truth of the Christian religion, the misery that attends rebellion against God, and the guilt of crucifying the Lord of glory.

While contemplating the tremendous calamities of the Jews, we ought to remember, that great as they were, they are but the small dust in the balance, compared with the misery which awaits God's enemies, in the world beyond the grave. The professing Christian may fear, lest his privileges, so much higher than those of the Jews, rise up to witness against him at the bar of God; and as many as believe may rejoice in spirit, because the Son of God hath abolished death, and all its terrors, that the curse may have no power over God's children. He fell into the hands of an angry God, that his people might find God, in Christ, reconciled to them for ever. These things should encourage and allure us, to commit ourselves in soul and body, to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; while the possibility and danger of crucifying Christ afresh, should teach us to walk tenderly in spirit, before the Lord our God. 'His blood be on us, and on our children!' How terrific are the effects of that imprecation in time, how doubly terrific in eternity! Therefore, should this be written on our door-posts and lintels; 'thou shalt fear this glorious and fearful name, The Lord thy God.'

PRAYER.

O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, through the power of thy grace, dispose us now to come into thy presence, as children drawing nigh to a parent that loves them. May thy free Spirit endue us with the spirit of adoption, and deliver us from the spirit of bondage. Through Jesus Christ, the first-born of many brethren, teach us to rejoice in our privileges, to hold communion with thee, the Father, and thy Son Christ Jesus. Forbid, O God, that we should ever find peace in any creature apart from thee, the Creator. But fill our souls with the enjoyment of thee, in Christ, even till we be raised to the rank from which sin thrust us down, and enabled to walk in spirit with thee, like two who are agreed. This morning, O Lord our God, would we adore thee, for the teaching of thy blessed word, and beseech thee to accompany it with the teaching of thy Holy Spirit. Open our understandings, to understand it; our hearts to receive its truth, and give us grace to practise it in our lives, to rejoice in thy promises, and tremble at thy rebuke. We entreat thee, O just and sovereign God, to arise and have mercy on thine ancient people. Father, in thine own time, elect from among them, and bring in the remnant of Israel, with the fulness of the Gentiles. And seeing, O God of mercy, that our privileges are so high, forbid that they should ever be abused, or rise up in memorial against us, when we stand before thee our God. Again, do we bless and adore thee, for the repose of another night, the renewed mercies of another day. Teach us to use all as not abusing it. May thy Holy Spirit be with us this day. Go, O God, as a pillar of cloud before us; and teach us, amid all our gettings, to get knowledge of thee, through him who is the way, and the truth, and the life. Hear us in this our prayer; pardon us our transgressions, through the blood that speaketh peace, sanctify us wholly, and the glory shall be unto the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, world without end. Amen

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CIII. 8—12.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE X. 25—42.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 26—28. 'By the law is the knowledge of sin,' and Christ here teaches, that, by the deeds of the law, shall no flesh living be justified. This was the method, indirectly adopted, by which Jesus tried to convince the lawyer of sin. Ver. 29. But even Jesus Christ's teaching does not produce conviction without the Holy Ghost, for the lawyer began to excuse himself. Ver. 31, 32. We are farther taught that an unfeeling heart may be concealed beneath a religious profession. Ver. 33—37. Those whom we most despise, as the Jews did the Samaritans, may be of more service in trial, than those in whom we confide. The chief design of the Saviour in this parable, appears to have been to exhibit the searching spirituality of the law of God; and to convince the lawyer that his fancied obedience was a delusion. 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.' This is the demand of the law of God; and were we to be tried by this standard, as unbelievers will be, not one could stand. Ver. 38—42. Lastly, this doctrine is strongly urged on our attention, that we should seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

This passage of God's word exhibits to us clearly man's natural ignorance of the true way to favour with God. It is to man, like the breath of life, to desire to be his own saviour; to work for, and win heaven, rather than believe and live. But Christ meets such a sinner on his own ground, and tries him by his own standard. 'Be perfectly holy, keep the law in every jot and tittle, and then expect heaven for your doings.' But the lawyer evaded the point, and began to adopt measures for justifying himself; unconscious of his short-comings towards God and man, he tried to escape by starting a difficulty. And this is still the mode pursued by men who will not be convinced of sin. Difficulties are referred to, and questions asked, if possible to parry the thrust of that word which is sharper than a two-edged sword. Though full of Jewish prejudices, this lawyer was at perfect peace in his own mind concerning God's law; though one of the leading characteristics of that law, namely, benevolence to our fellow-men, was not comprehended by him. But Jesus Christ attempted to teach him, and through him, the Saviour teaches us the expansive nature of Christian charity. Neighbourhood is not limited by place or part, as it was among the Jews; but, according to Christ's teaching, benevolence towards all should link all together. Some may be neighbours in the letter, and enemies in the spirit, and the law of God at once detects their character.

This parable is capable of many different applications, and among others, it has been viewed as teaching, that while the character of the priest and levite exhibits the miserable want of true benevolence, which distinguishes many professors of religion, the character of the good Samaritan exhibits the tenderness and the loving-kindness of God our Saviour, who submitted to so many hardships, and such a death, for his very enemies.

Farther, we are taught in this passage, ver. 38—42. that sitting at the feet of Christ, to learn from him as his Spirit teacheth, should be the governing object of our lives. Worldly cares may interpose between Christ and us; but they never do so without injuring and endangering the soul, whatever plausible pretences we may plead for our worldliness. The activities of our men of business, and of merchandize, the cares of our farmers and artizans, are apt to entice them away from Christ, unless the grace of God be their guardian; and he accordingly teaches, that an interest in Christ, attachment to him, dependence on him, for comfort, pardon, righteousness, life, and every thing, form the highest happiness of man on earth. One thing is absolutely needful, an interest in Christ; but that one thing is all. (Col. iii. 11. last clause.) Since the Bible makes this so plain, it should be the desire, and by God's grace, the resolution, of our hearts, to 'wait on the Lord;' and 'rejoice in him always.'

PRAYER.

O God, whilst we magnify and extol thy name together, for what thou art in thyself, glorious in holiness, and fearful in praises, we would magnify thee especially for what thou art in Christ Jesus, to the lost children of men—the God that delighteth to pardon, unto whom judgment is a strange work. Praise waiteth for thee in Zion, because thou art, in Christ Jesus, reconciling sinners to thyself; and O grant, that we may be of the number of those who are thus brought nigh unto thee, through the blood of Christ's cross. Teach us, O God, to sit down in spirit at the foot of the cross. May we there find Christ to be the wisdom of God, and the power of God, all our salvation, and all our desire. Breathe upon our dead souls, by thy quickening Spirit. Thereby unite us to the Lord Jesus, even till we be members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones; out of his fulness may we all receive. May his love constrain us to love him, and all who belong to the household of faith. Impress our hearts with the conviction that one thing is needful, even an interest in Christ. O grant unto us, even unto us, such an interest, that we may know the blessedness of him whose sins are forgiven, whose iniquities are covered, and who lives by faith upon the Son of God. Teach us to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Deliver us from this world's delusions and vanities, and teach us that he that is not for Christ, is against Christ; he that gathereth not with Christ, scattereth abroad. Be near, O God, unto those who are in sickness, in danger, or near to death; may Christ be magnified in their deliverance. Be merciful to us, O God, through Christ our covenant head, for the sins of this day. We have done little for thee, we have thought little of thee; but Lord remember mercy. Take away all our iniquity. Blot out our transgressions like a cloud. Spread over us thy protection for the night that has closed around us; and ere we resign ourselves to sleep, O God, grant that our peace may be made with thee, and with our own consciences, through the blood of atonement. Our hopes, O Lord, rest on thee, thou Shepherd of Israel. Watch over us and all ours; bless us, provide for us, pardon us, make us thine in soul and in body, for ever and ever, through the Spirit of the Lord Jesus. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXV. 12.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XXIX.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we have a striking illustration of the necessity of divine teaching, before any serious and saving impression is made on the human heart. The children of Israel, at the period of their history which is here referred to, had, as we have already seen, many signal tokens of the providential care of Jehovah. And yet, so far was the goodness of the Lord, so signally manifested in their behalf, from leading them to repentance, that we find Moses uttering this pathetic lamentation, 'The Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day.' He therefore recounts, for their conviction, many instances of God's unmerited kindness to them, exhorts them to 'keep the covenant,' into which they had already entered, and which he was about, with their consent, to ratify. He prohibits idolatry, and every species of superstition, upon pain of being visited with all the threatened curses. But alas! these wise and salutary regulations proved too feeble a check to the strange propensity of that people to the sin of idolatry.

In this chapter, also, we see how the perverse and deeply depraved heart of man will pursue its unhal- lowed gratifications in the midst of the richest and purest means of grace; and how, with daring presumption, it will anticipate impunity, while it revels in flagrant iniquity. But Jehovah is a jealous and sin-avenging God, and 'will not spare' the transgressor who flatters himself that he shall escape the vengeance of his insulted Maker. All the curses of the law, we may rest assured, will overtake the man who walks in the imagination of his own depraved heart, 'adding drunkenness to thirst.' Here also we learn that God brings visible and palpable judgments on nations, as the punishment of national sins. And while we are taught this deeply affecting truth, we behold, at the same time, a demonstration of the truth of God's word; for the fact here referred to is announced in the way of prophecy, and we see the fulfilment of the prediction at this day, in the bleak and barren aspect of the land of Judea, which was once proverbial for its fertility; and in the present dispersed state of the Jews, who were once a united and flourishing people. We find the infidel Volney, in astonishing fulfilment of the passage before us, asking these questions: 'Great God! From whence proceed so melancholy revolutions? For what cause is the fortune of these countries so strikingly changed? Why are so many cities destroyed? Why is not that ancient population reproduced?' Thus a most disinterested spectator asked with amazement, in almost the very words of inspiration. But, blinded by unbelief, he knew not the answer which was recorded, side by side with the prediction in this chapter.

The chapter closes with two lessons of the greatest value; that we are not, with presumptuous curiosity, to pry into those things which God has not revealed to us; and that the wide field of inspired revelation lies before us, as a rich and unperishable portion for ourselves and for our children. God has revealed, in the plainest and most explicit manner, all that is needful for our salvation, and for our present guidance, peace, consolation, and spiritual joy. But many of his ways are, to human observation, wrapt in obscurity. 'He giveth not account of any of his matters.' He will teach us that we are but children, and that we must often take his bare word without explanation, or endure the severe trial in the course of providence, without asking why. 'Be still, and know that I am God,' is frequently all the information that we obtain in days of darkness and perplexity, and to the believer this is sufficient; for well does he know that 'the Judge of all the earth doeth right.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations. Thou hast guided and sustained them during their earthly pilgrimage, and hast ever proved thyself to be a very present help in the time of their trouble. We behold the most instructive and encouraging proofs of thy mercy, thy power, and thy faithfulness in thy dealings towards thy chosen people. Thou didst bring them forth from the house of bondage, in the presence of their enemies, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm. Thou didst divide the waters of the sea before them, and didst lead them through the wilderness, under the visible symbols of thy presence. Thou didst feed them with manna from heaven, and didst satisfy their thirst with water from the rock. And thou didst enter into covenant with them, to be a God to them and to their seed. But alas! how depraved, and how deceitful is the human heart! How soon did thine ancient people forsake thy holy law, and violate their most solemn engagement; 'all that the Lord hath spoken, will we do.' And how vainly did they expect impunity, whilst they gave themselves over to sensual indulgences! May we take warning from their unfaithfulness, and from their doom. And when we contemplate the land of promise, now lying in desolation, and the posterity of its rightful possessors scattered to the four winds of heaven, O may we fear lest, by our abuse of still richer privileges, we be condemned to the flames of everlasting burnings. O help us, by thy grace, to flee from the wrath to come, and to lay hold on eternal life. And having named the name of Christ, may we depart from all iniquity, and abound more and more in the fruits of righteousness, to the glory of redeeming love. O help us to rejoice in the fulness and sufficiency of thy holy word. May we ever seek, under the gracious teaching of thy blessed Spirit, to know its meaning, and to feel its sanctifying power. May it thus be effectual in enlightening our minds in the knowledge of thyself, and of thy Son Jesus Christ. May it ever dwell in us richly in all wisdom. May it render us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus, and furnish us thoroughly unto all good works. May it ever be the ground of our faith, the rule of our conduct, and the source of our sweetest consolation. May it be our counsellor in the day time, and our song in the night watches; and may its faithful promises soothe our spirits on the bed of death. And valuing thy word ourselves, may we ever long for the happy time when it shall be imparted, in all its extent and purity, to every nation under heaven. May our friends and connections know 'the joyful sound,' and walk at all times in the light of thy countenance. And may they and we at last meet together in our Father's house, beyond the reach of sorrow or of death. Be present with the sons and daughters of affliction, and when their troubles abound, may thy consolations, through Christ Jesus, much more abound. And now, holy Father, we commend ourselves to thee, and to the guidance of thy good Spirit. Be with us this day to direct us in all our duties, and to sustain us under all our trials. And do thou hear us, and accept of us, and bless us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLVIII.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XI. 1—28.

REMARKS.

Here we behold the value of a pious example. Jesus was frequent and fervent in prayer, and his disciples caught the sacred flame of devotion; but, like all who attempt to pray in earnest, soon felt that they could not pray aright. With the greatest propriety therefore, they applied to Jesus for instruction in this delightful and improving exercise. And in recording this circumstance, the sacred writer gives us an incidental notice of the admirable character of John the Baptist. He was himself a man of prayer, and he taught his disciples to pray. Let parents and teachers attend to this fact, and be careful to improve it in their intercourse with the young. No sooner was the request of the disciples presented to Jesus, than he cheerfully complied with it, and furnished them with a form of prayer, at once brief and comprehensive; so simple that it does not go beyond the understanding of a child, and so full of meaning that, in the opinion of many competent judges, it includes the substance of almost all the petitions which it becomes us to address to our Maker. It is almost unnecessary to notice, what seems to be self-evident, that Jesus intended this prayer rather as a model, the spirit of which is to be followed in our addresses to the throne of grace, than as a set form, the exact words of which are to be habitually repeated. See Matt. vi. 9. Our Lord having prescribed a model of prayer, proceeds to encourage us to pray, from the animating consideration that we shall not do so in vain. This argument is founded on the goodness and placability of the divine nature. Even a man of an unfeeling heart will be overcome with the importunity of a neighbour, unseasonable as his intrusion may be; and will God be more hard-hearted than his own fallen creature? An earthly parent, capricious and passionate as he may be, will not refuse the reasonable request of his child; and will God, who is infinitely good and gracious, reject the prayer of the humble suppliant? No indeed. And this fact, and it is a fact full of comfort to the downcast Christian, is here set before us in a form the most striking and convincing that can be conceived. By appealing to one of the strongest and most invariable principles of our nature—the instructive love of a parent to his offspring—he puts the case in the strongest possible light. ‘If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?’ Observe what is promised; the Holy Spirit. And this gift is doubtless intended in this case to include all spiritual blessings. Obtain the gift of the Holy Spirit, and with him you obtain all the grace that is needful for you in your present circumstances. And observe also, that the promise is limited to them who ask. And thus the necessity of prayer is strongly enforced. We see how triumphantly Jesus defends himself against the false and ungenerous insinuation, that in casting out unclean spirits he was in league with the prince of devils. How dangerous are the prejudices of the unbelieving heart! They blind the understanding, and pervert the judgment, so that even the most palpable evidence is opposed and rejected. O let us strive to overcome all our prejudices, and let us give the miracles of Jesus a patient and impartial examination, and we shall see in them the clearest proof at once of his divinity and of his Messiahship. How fearful are the consequences of apostasy! The last state of it is worse than the first.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, do thou deeply impress our minds when we draw near to the footstool of thy throne of grace, and enable us to realize thy gracious presence. Teach us to come to thee in that new and living way of access which thou hast opened up through Jesus Christ, and give us the spirit of adoption, whereby we may cry unto thee, Abba, Father. Let thy name, thy holy character, and thy adorable perfections be known, revered, and glorified by all thy intelligent offspring. May the boundaries of the Redeemer's kingdom be speedily and widely extended. May Jesus, the King of Zion, gird his sword on his thigh, and ride forth conquering and to conquer, until all the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. And we earnestly beseech thee, heavenly Father, to give us individually a place in that kingdom, which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. May our hearts, and the hearts of all mankind, be brought effectually under the hallowed influence of divine truth; so that thy will may be done in earth, as it is in heaven. And, O Lord, as we are entirely dependent on thee for every breath that we draw, and for every morsel of food that sustains our natural existence, do thou give us day by day, in thy unmerited favour, and for Christ's sake, those temporal mercies which thou seest we need. Feed us with food convenient for us; and may we experience thy covenant love even in partaking of the meat that perisheth. Behold, we have sinned, and what shall we say unto thee, O thou preserver of men? Look upon us in the face of thy dear Son, and for his sake be merciful to our unrighteousness, our sins and iniquities do thou remember no more. Justify us freely by thy grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, and sanctify us wholly by the power of thy Holy Spirit. Having commenced the Christian career, may we never look back with a carnal affection to the world and its vanities; but may we keep the onward path of new obedience, which leads to the heavenly Zion. We bless thee, gracious Father, for the mercies and privileges of another day. Give us heart-felt gratitude for the numberless benefits which thou art crowding into our lot, and help us to improve them all for the advancement of thy glory, and for our own spiritual improvement. And we humbly implore the sanctified use of the various trials and afflictions with which thou art pleased to visit us in the course of thy holy providence. Deal with us in mercy as with thy redeemed children, causing all things to work together for our good. Teach us ever to live as on the borders of the eternal world. May our lives be hid with Christ in God. And when he who is our life shall appear, may we appear with him in glory. Bless, we pray thee, a preached gospel in our own land; and make it effectual, by thy grace, for the conversion and salvation of all our friends and connections. Visit in mercy the habitations of the afflicted and the dying, and be a very present help to them in the time of trouble. Into thy blessed hands, holy Father, we commend ourselves this night. May we feel ourselves safe and happy under thy protecting wings. And in the morning, if it is thy good pleasure to permit us to see its light, may we be still with thee, and may our first thoughts ascend to thee, the God of our salvation. And when at last our days on earth are numbered, may we go to the general assembly and church of the first-born in heaven, and cast our crowns at the feet of Jesus, and sing the praises of redeeming love through all the ages of a joyful eternity. And unto the Father, and unto the Son, and unto the Holy Spirit, one God, be ascribed all honour and glory, dominion and praise, now, and evermore. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXXI. 19.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XXX.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In the commencement of this chapter, Moses is commissioned to give the most gracious promises to the children of Israel. It is taken for granted, that in consequence of their apostacy the threatenings of the preceding chapter will take effect. But this interruption of the stream of God's mercies to that people would not abolish his covenant with them.

And it is here intimated, that after they had experienced the boundless compassion and fatherly love of Jehovah while they remained faithful to his service, and had drained the vials of his wrath when they abandoned themselves to idolatry and immorality, they should still find a resting-place in the favour of their God, and be restored from all their dispersions to the land of their fathers. These predictions were partially fulfilled in the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity. But their highest and most glorious accomplishment is undoubtedly still future, when they shall return to God by faith and repentance. Moses next reminds his hearers that the 'commandment,' the rule of moral duty; or, more generally, the revealed will of God, was not distant and inaccessible, but completely within the reach of all, committed as it now was to writing, and appointed as it was to be regularly read by the priests in the solemn assemblies. The apostle Paul applies this passage in the plainest and most unequivocal way to the method of salvation by Jesus Christ; Rom. x. 4—10. In these verses we have the true key to this passage, and have the brightest and the surest discovery of its evangelical interpretation. Moses now closes his present address to the Israelites in the most affecting and impressive manner, calling heaven and earth to witness that he had faithfully acted the part of God's messenger to them, having impartially set before them 'life and death, blessing and cursing.' And in this closing appeal, he uses at once his authority as a divinely inspired lawgiver, and the tenderness of an affectionate parent, who yearns over his offspring, and longs that they may be led to make the right decision on a matter of vast and eternal importance. 'I command thee to love the Lord thy God, and to walk in his ways.' 'Choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live.' What a touching combination of authority and affection!

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Truly Jehovah is 'long-suffering and slow to wrath.' The blessed truth that he 'waits to be gracious,' receives a striking illustration in his dealings with the Jews. He has indeed for the present cast them out of his church; but he has not cast them off for ever. It was not till the measure of their sins was 'filled up,' in crucifying the Lord of glory and in persecuting his followers, that wrath came on them 'to the uttermost.' And in this mournful period of their dispersion, Jehovah is still waiting to be gracious to them; and will in due time make bare his holy arm for their deliverance and restoration. Let us fervently pray for the speedy arrival of that predicted era, which shall not only usher in the dawn of a glorious revival in the case of the Jews, but which shall prove as 'life from the dead' to the Gentile world. And let us eagerly improve the day of our own merciful visitation, remembering that to whom much is given, of them shall much be required, and that the shades of the long and silent night of death will soon gather around us; that night in which no man can work. O how signally have we been favoured in having the scriptures in our hands from our childhood! And how plainly is the way of salvation set before us in the gospel of Jesus! Let us betake ourselves in all our helplessness and vileness to him who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one who believeth. Let us give our hearts to Jesus; for he is indeed worthy to reign over us. And when life and death are put in our choice, O let us cast in our lot with the people of God! And may our life of holiness be as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

PRAYER.

Who, O Lord, is a God like unto thee, who pardonest iniquity, and passest by the transgression of the remnant of thy heritage, who retainest not thine anger for ever, because thou delightest in mercy! O do thou turn again and have compassion upon us, and cast all our sins into the depth of the sea. Remember us, O Lord, with the favour which thou bearest to thine own, and visit us with thy salvation. Thou hast indeed been good and gracious to us, and hast blessed us with the most distinguished Christian privileges. Thou hast not dealt so with any people as thou hast done with us. Thou hast given us thy precious word in all its extent and purity; and here we are permitted daily to read the wondrous things of God. Thou art permitting us to enjoy peaceful sabbaths and pure gospel ordinances; and in the observance of these we are encouraged to expect the guidance of thy Spirit, and the gracious presence of Jesus our Saviour. Thou hast been plying us from our earliest day, with the promises, the invitations, and the warnings of thy holy word; and thou hast been moving our hearts by the inward operations of thy grace. What more could have been done to melt and win our hearts than thou hast done? But alas! we have remained insensible to all the overtures of thy mercy and love. Thy goodness has not led us to repentance, but we have continued in sin because grace abounds. O enter not into judgment with us. But justify us freely by thy grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. And O may the exceeding greatness of that power by which Christ was raised from the dead be exerted in quickening us from the death of sin, and in raising us to newness of life, even a life of active, consistent, and progressive holiness. May we rise every day to higher attainments in the divine life, until we are rendered meet for the heavenly inheritance. O Lord, look down in compassion on the millions of our race who are still sitting in darkness, and cause the Sun of righteousness to arise and shine upon them with healing in his wings. Remember thy covenant with Abraham, thy friend, and remove the veil of ignorance and unbelief from the hearts of his descendants. Be thou the God of this family. Bless us with all temporal mercies as thou seest we need: and bless us especially with all spiritual blessings in Christ. We would go forward to the various duties of this day, imploring thy wisdom to direct us, thy strength to uphold us, and thy Spirit to revive and comfort us. And when at last the tie of affection with which we are united, as inhabitants of this world, shall be burst asunder by the strong hand of death, may we meet together in a purer and closer fellowship in heaven. And seeing we know not what a day may bring forth, may we ever be in the attitude of those who are waiting for the coming of their Lord. And when he proclaims to us, Behold, I come quickly; may we be able, without hesitation or alarm, to reply, Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Hear us now, holy Father; and when thou hearest forgive, and accept of us and bless us, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXX.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XI. 29—54.

REMARKS.

Jesus, with much emphasis, complains of the Jews as an 'evil generation,' because they refused to be convinced of his Messiahship by the numerous and stupendous miracles which he was daily performing in their presence, and because they insultingly demanded a sign of their own choosing. He refuses to gratify their unreasonable request, but gives them intimation of a sign that would yet be given. This was the sign of the prophet Jonah, whose deliverance from the belly of the fish, after an imprisonment of three days, was symbolical of the resurrection of Jesus, after being confined for such a length of time in the grave. He next warns them of the awful consequences of their unbelief and abuse of the most inestimable privileges. They need not therefore wonder, should the queen of the south rise up in the judgment and condemn them, for she undertook a long and toilsome journey to hear the wisdom of one who was infinitely inferior in dignity and holiness to their present instructor. Nor need they be surprised if the men of Nineveh should heartily concur in the righteousness of their final doom, for these unenlightened heathens repented at the preaching of a fellow-mortal, even though a stranger to their nation, and these professed believers in a divine revelation despised and discredited the words of the Lord from heaven. We live in the days of the Son of man. Let us value and improve our Christian privileges, as we shall answer to God at the judgment day.

As our minds are by nature full of ignorance, and as the most dangerous errors flow from ignorance, let it be our constant study and our daily prayer that our understandings may be savingly enlightened by the word and Spirit of God; for if that inward faculty, which should be to us as the candle of the Lord, is itself the abode of darkness, who can express the gloom that reigns in the heart of such a man, and who can calculate the errors and inconsistencies into which he will fall? May the word of God, in the hand of the Spirit, ever be a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. Alas, how constantly was the meek and gentle spirit of Jesus tried by the prejudices and superstitions of the Jews. Even those who treated him with respect and hospitality, allowed their ignorant and contracted views of religion to blind them to the excellence and purity of his character. Their religion had degenerated into a round of empty forms and ceremonial observances. Our Saviour exposed their hollow formality; their pride and hypocrisy; their cruelty and oppression. He gives them warning, in words that ought to have struck terror into their hearts, that the measure of their national sins was fast filling up, and that an awful retribution would be demanded of the existing generation. How literally have these warnings been verified! Let us stand in awe and not sin; for it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. It was a dreadful aggravation of the guilt of the Jewish doctors and teachers, that they so shamefully abused their high trust as to keep the people, over whom they were placed, in ignorance of the word of God. They should have opened the treasury of divine truth, and exhibited its riches to the inspection and admiration of all; and they should have made a full and generous offer of these riches, as a portion within the reach of every humble applicant. But they excluded themselves from the enjoyment of spiritual blessings; and, by their authority in evil example, they kept back those who would gladly have entered the gates of the heavenly temple. O the unspeakable guilt of those who take away the key of knowledge from their fellow-men; who prohibit the use of the scriptures, or pervert them by false interpretations!

Let us, my beloved family, who dwell in this Protestant country, rejoice at the thought that we have the free and unfettered use of the Bible; that we have Christian ordinances and a pure gospel worship; and that we are permitted to serve the God of our fathers without fear of molestation. Great are our privileges: may the Lord give us grace wisely to improve them! And may they be preserved to the latest generations.

PRAYER.

Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints! Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, for he has visited and redeemed his people. He has thought on us in our fallen and sinful condition, and laid help on one who is mighty. Our souls would therefore magnify the Lord, and our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour. Thanks be to God for his unspeak-able gift. O the breadth and the length, the depth and the height of the love of God in Christ Jesus; it indeed passeth knowledge! May thy Spirit, gracious Father, convince us deeply of sin; may thy goodness lead us to repentance; may thy grace subdue our obstinate and unbelieving hearts. Remove all doubts and misapprehensions from our minds, and give us that faith which is of the operation of thy Spirit. Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. Strengthen and confirm our faith in Jesus as our own precious Saviour, until our souls are filled with all joy and peace in believing. Alas, O Lord, our hearts are full of darkness as well as unbelief. Do thou shine into our hearts by the light of thy word and Spirit, so that we may not any longer walk in the darkness of our natural state. Of us may it be true, that whereas we were once darkness, we are now light in the Lord. And seeing our light is come, seeing the glory of God is risen upon us, may we arise and shine, even as lights in the world. May we ever recommend the gospel of Jesus to all around us, by a pure conversation and a holy life. Help us, we humbly pray thee, to be faithful and unshrinking in confessing Christ before men. And may we, who now bow down together at the footstool of thy throne of grace, at last meet together before the throne of thy glory, and cast our crowns at the feet of Jesus. Father of mercies, do thou perfect that which concerneth us, and render us meet for the heavenly inheritance. Look down in mercy, holy Father, on the dark and desolate places of the earth. Send forth more labourers into thy harvest. Crown their labours with success, until the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. We affectionately commend our friends to thy fatherly care and thy redeeming grace. We tenderly sympathise with all who are confined to chambers of distress. O Lord, thou knowest their frame; do thou pity and spare them, if it seem good unto thee. Purify them in the furnace of affliction. And may those who are entering the dark valley of the shadow of death, experience the presence and support of the heavenly Shepherd. Take us all, heavenly Father, under the shelter of thy protecting wings this night. And if it is thy good pleasure that we see the light of a new day, may we rise up strengthened for its various duties and trials. And now, may the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every good work to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom, with the Father and the eternal Spirit, be praise and glory, world without end. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM xcviil. 1.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY xxxi.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In ver. 1—8. Moses intimated to the people, that owing to his advanced age, and to the divine appointment, on account of his sin at Meribah, he could no longer go out or come in before them, i. e. that he must give up his office as their inspired leader and lawgiver. He then resigned his charge to Joshua, whom he encouraged to be strong and of good courage, because the Lord would, under his guidance, give the people possession of the promised land. The law was now delivered and recorded, and the lawgiver could be dispensed with, in exchange for the inspired general, who was to lead the chosen of the Lord across the Jordan, to victory and to conquest. Ver. 9—13. Moses next consigned the written law to the priests, the sons of Levi, and to the elders of Israel, to be deposited in the ark of the covenant for safe preservation, and appointed it to be read to all the people—to men, women, children, and strangers, in the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles. The year of release was held every seventh year. It was so called because then every Hebrew bond-man was released from his servitude, and every debtor from the claims of his creditor. It was likewise called the sabbatical year, because then the land had rest, being neither tilled, nor sown, nor reaped. The feast of tabernacles or booths, commenced on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, and lasted seven days. It was celebrated as a season of joy, on account of the ingathering of the crops. During its continuance the Israelites dwelt in booths, in commemoration of their dwelling in booths during their wanderings in the wilderness. When they were thus disengaged from the cares of the world, and reminded of the divine mercies, they ought to have been in the best frame of mind for hearing the law read, and for learning to fear the Lord their God. The remainder of the chapter points out the baneful consequences of their future prosperity, in withdrawing them from their duty, and the heavy sufferings which were to follow their departure from the Lord their God.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Although the Christian minister, parent, or friend, whose labour and kindness appeared indispensable to our salvation, or to our earthly comfort and happiness, be removed from us, if we trust in God he will give us consolation; he will heal every wound, and repair every loss. Should a Moses be withdrawn, a Joshua will be appointed in his stead. As Joshua was raised up to save the Israelites from their enemies, and to beat down every obstacle to their entrance into the earthly Canaan, so in this earthly wilderness, Jesus Christ (of whom Joshua, whose name is the same with Jesus, was a type) subdues all the spiritual enemies of his people, and, as Captain of their salvation, bruises every foe under his feet, and spoils the principalities and powers which would prevent their crossing the boundary which separates them from their heavenly rest. Under his banner, and clothed with the whole armour of God, the Christian soldier will be safe from all danger, and be sure of victory and conquest in the end. The law of God, which was once deposited in the ark of the covenant, and read publicly in the year of release, is now, with the addition of the prophets and the gospels, in the hands of all. It is now very near to us indeed, and should be our study and meditation every day, as well as on the holy rest of the sabbath, when our minds should be disengaged from the pleasures, the vanities, and the cares of this life. In the scriptures we think we have everlasting life. In them are contained the unsearchable riches of Christ, and in them grace, mercy, and peace are multiplied to the redeemed of the Lord Jesus. Let us therefore lay up the truths they contain in our hearts, and in our souls; let us teach them diligently to our children, speaking of them when we sit in the house, and when we walk by the way, when we sit down, and when we rise up. Finally, let us remember that the goodness and forbearance of God are not designed to encourage us in sin, but to lead us to repentance. In the Israelites we have a memorable example of the truth, that those who abuse the mercies of God fail not to treasure up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we adore thee as our Father who art in heaven, and we acknowledge with gratitude the innumerable tokens we have received of thy parental tenderness. Enable us to exhibit the affection, the obedience, and the devotion which becometh thy children. May we be drawn unto thee by the cords of love, and may thy goodness lead us to repentance. We have, however, continually to deplore our ingratitude and sinfulness, and to lament that our spot is not the spot of thy children. We blush and are ashamed to lift up our faces unto thee; God be merciful to us sinners. Impart to us, we entreat thee, the light and grace of thy Holy Spirit, that we may see and feel our sinfulness and misery, and be led unto him whose blood cleanseth from all sin, that, being justified by faith, we may have peace with God. Enlisted under the banners of the Captain of our salvation, may we follow him through good report and through bad report; and may he subdue all the enemies of our souls in this earthly wilderness, and finally beat down every obstacle that would oppose our entrance into the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Blessed be thy name for the testimony which the scriptures bear to Christ, and for the grace, mercy, and peace which they impart to those who are under the teaching of the Holy Spirit. May we desire them more than gold, yea, than much fine gold. Being taught by them how hard and bitter a thing it is to forsake the Lord our God, may we strive to be preserved in the ways of religion, which are alone ways of pleasantness and peace. Enable us to tread in the footsteps of him who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. Forbid that we should turn thy grace into lasciviousness; that we should rank ourselves among the friends of Christ, while by wicked works we deny him, or that we should set our hearts upon evil, because sentence against our evil works has not been speedily executed. May we set thee, the Lord, always before us, and may thy fear restrain us from evil. Forbid that the cares or the pleasures of this world should choke the growth of religion in our hearts, or that we should plan or undertake any thing this day upon which we cannot ask thy blessing. Heavenly Father, fit us for all the duties of this day; give us strength to resist temptation, and make us a family whose God is the Lord. All we ask and hope for is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLIII. 3.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XII. 1—32.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. Leaven is fermented dough, which in warm countries soon becomes sour, and communicates its own properties to the flour amongst which it is laid. The kingdom of Christ is consequently compared to leaven, because it was to spread over the whole world. Corrupt doctrine and ungodly practice are also compared to leaven, from their infectious nature. In the verse before us, hypocrisy is called leaven, because it had spread from the higher to the lower orders of the Jews, and had become a national sin. Ver. 2, 3. In the case of the apostles, hypocrisy would have been the height of folly; as ambassadors of Christ, they had forsaken all in this world, and they knew that they could hide nothing from God, from whom they looked for a heavenly reward. Ver. 4, 5. The fear of man cannot justify hypocrisy, for he can only kill the body, but the fear of God should be a powerful preventive against it, because he can destroy both soul and body in hell. Ver. 6, 7. Nor, argues our Saviour, was hypocrisy, that arose from the fear of man, justifiable on the part of his followers, because they might rest assured, that he, who guardeth the life of a sparrow, and numbereth the hairs of the head, would not abandon them in the discharge of their holy duties. Ver. 8, 9. Should they, however, from such hypocrisy deny Christ before men, they are warned that he would deny them before the angels of God. From ver. 10. however, it would appear that exclusion from heaven, would not, under all circumstances, be the awful portion of those who denied Christ on earth. 'Whosoever speaketh against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him,' if, like Peter, he sincerely repent; but he, who like the pharisees, in Matt. xii. exhibits a settled hatred of the truth, by quenching the first dawn of spiritual light on the minds of others, on whom it was making an impression, and slanders the Holy Spirit, by ascribing what he knows to be the work of God, to the agency of satan, it shall not be forgiven him. Nor can the professing Christian who has apostatized from Christ (see Heb. vi. 4.) not from weakness of the flesh or spirit, but from a determined hostility to the truth, and who slanders the strivings of the holy Spirit within him, be again renewed unto repentance. In neither case is it affirmed that were true repentance exercised it would be ineffectual; but it is inferred, that the Spirit, grieved by such depravity, and at length quenched, will not again renew such sinners unto repentance. While ver. 10. therefore is intended to prevent despair in the case of less heinous offenders, it holds out an awful warning against determined infidelity and apostacy. Ver. 15—21. Covetousness is denounced upon the general principle that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of his possessions. This truth is illustrated by a parable, which shows the tendency of riches to withdraw our dependence upon God, and to distract our thoughts from the concerns of our souls; and which exhibits the folly of setting our affections on riches, by the fact that they cannot prolong the life a single hour, and that they are likely to entangle us in everlasting misery. Ver. 22, &c. Over anxiety about temporal things is rephended, and its folly illustrated by the example of the lilies of the field, and of the fowls of heaven. It would be better to render ver. 25. 'Which of you, by over anxiety, can add one moment to his life.' This is one of the lessons of the parable just read, and more suitable to the context. The addition of eighteen inches to the human stature, cannot be called that which is least; and over anxiety about this world, is not in order to increase our stature, but to prolong our lives. In the foregoing passage, we remark, that it is not prudence in the management of our worldly concerns that is reprobated, but covetousness, withdrawing our dependence and affections from God. It is not necessary care for the body that is improved, but over solicitude and distrust.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us beware of the leaven of hypocrisy; no sinner compasses his ends in so detestable a manner; he makes profession of every thing that is holy, as a cloak for every thing that is abominable. Let us set the Lord always before us, and remember that no sin can be concealed from him. To him the darkness and the light are both alike. Let us not fear men who would terrify us into sin, for they can only kill the body, but rather let us fear him who can cast both soul and body into hell. When danger or trouble is ready to overpower us, let us remember that a sparrow is not forgotten before God—that the very hairs of our heads are numbered, and that all things work together for good to those that love God, to those that are called according to his purpose. Above all, let nothing ever tempt us to deny Christ, to slander the work of the Holy Spirit, and thus to crucify to ourselves the Son of God afresh, otherwise, Christ will deny us before the angels in heaven. Let us beware also of covetousness, for it will not profit us, should we gain the whole world, and lose our own souls. Let us likewise remember, that the openly impious and profane, are not the only persons who shall be excluded from heaven; a man may be highly esteemed of men, and still be abominable in the sight of God. If we would enjoy God hereafter, we must glorify him here. Heaven is the inheritance of those alone who live in the fear of God, in the faith of Christ, and under the influences of the Holy Spirit. Let us seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and rest in God's promise that the blessings of this life will be added unto us.

PRAYER.

Most gracious and most blessed God, we adore thee as the searcher of the hearts, and the trier of the reins, of the children of men. The most secret thought and action are open to thee, with whom we have to do. Enable us to set thee the Lord ever before us; not to oppress us with a slavish fear, but to restrain us from every thing that is impure and sinful. When temptations to sin present themselves, let us fear thee, who canst cast both soul and body into hell. We recognise thy providential care over us, and we rejoice in the conviction that the very hairs of our heads are numbered by thee. Forbid, O God, that the cares of this world, or the deceitfulness of riches, should deaden our affections for thee, or distract our thoughts from those things that belong unto our everlasting peace. May it be the great end and aim of our lives to glorify thee, and to seek first the kingdom of God, and thy righteousness, in the assurance that all other things will be added unto us. May thy Holy Spirit so change our feelings, desires and affections, that we may practically regard the concerns of our souls as the one thing needful, and may he lead us, by a living faith, unto the Saviour; and enable us to count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. Be it the chief desire of our hearts to win him, and to be found in him, not having our own righteousness which is by the law, but the righteousness, which is by the faith in him. Enable us, O God, to give evidence of our attachment to Christ, by our observance of his commandments, and, constrained by all thy mercies, may we present our bodies a living sacrifice unto thee, holy and acceptable, which is our reasonable service. We earnestly pray for the extension and advancement of Christ's kingdom at home and abroad, and particularly for its progress in our own hearts. Into thy hands we commend ourselves this night, and all that are near and dear to us, and all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXX. 1.

SCRIPTURE—DEUTERONOMY XXXIII. XXXIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In ver. 1—6. A description is given of the majesty of God in the delivery of the moral law, that the people might be impressed with its importance and authority, and with the divine power to enforce obedience. Although it was called a fiery law, on account of its scorching denunciations, and of its delivery in the midst of lightning, it was given in love, 'Yea, the Lord loved his people,' it was their 'schoolmaster to bring them unto Christ.' Ver. 6. Of Reuben, his father Jacob had said, 'Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel,' yet his posterity are here assured by Moses that they would be spared among the tribes, though shorn of their excellency and dignity, as the descendants of Israel's first-born, 'Let Reuben live and not die.' In ver. 7. It would appear that Moses, by the eye of prophecy, saw Judah lying in affliction, which had driven him to his knees, and on that occasion the prophet intercedes with God on his behalf; 'Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah, and bring him to his people.' This affliction may be the Babylonish captivity, which had a salutary effect in reclaiming his posterity from idolatry. The subsequent part of the verse may refer to the struggles they encountered in rebuilding the city and temple of Jerusalem, and likewise to the gallant defence of their country in the days of the Maccabees, unsupported by foreign aid. On these occasions 'Judah's own hands were sufficient for him, and the God of Jacob was his helper.' Ver. 8—11. Simeon and Levi are joined together in Gen. xlix. where they are reproved by their father for their cruelty to the Shechemites; 'I will divide them,' said the patriarch, 'in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel.' In the passage before us, Simeon is not mentioned, but owing to Levi's subsequent conduct, especially in the matter of the golden calf, his apparent curse is converted into a blessing. From his tribe, sprang Moses the lawgiver, Aaron the high priest, and the other ministers of religion. Aaron is here comforted by the assurance, that notwithstanding the sin that excluded him from Canaan, his Urim and Thummim, i. e. the insignia of his priestly office, would continue in his family. They were to be the priests and teachers of the people. It is true they had no portion among their brethren, but 'the Lord was their portion.' Ver. 2—23. The prosperity and safety of the other tribes are held forth in emblems similar to those in Gen. xlix. While the Israelites walked in the ways of their God, these blessings would never fail them. When in distress he would ride in the heavens to help them. The eternal God would be their refuge, and underneath the everlasting arms would bear them up. Happy the people thus saved by the Lord, the shield of their help and the sword of their excellency.

In chap. xxxiv. Moses is taken up to the top of Mount Pisgah to view the promised land, and after having seen it afar off, he resigns his spirit into the hands of a faithful Creator. His burial place was concealed from the children of Israel, lest they should pay him divine honour.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How holy is the law of the Lord, which was delivered with such solemnity from Mount Sinai. Surely it is not a vain thing; it is our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. One jot or one tittle cannot pass from it; the blood of Christ can alone atone for the transgression of it. How exceedingly should we fear and quake at the thought of breaking it; how deep and godly should be our sorrow, on the slightest violation of it. Although grace and pardon are offered to the believer in Christ, God forbid that we should go on in sin, because that grace abounds. Our proposed repentance may never be found, or, like Reuben's, it may not arrive till we have lost our 'excellency and dignity,' and till we have had awful experience of the hardness and bitterness of forsaking the Lord our God. In time of trouble we should not fail, like Judah, to call from its depths, unto the Lord for help, and to implore that we may be borne up by the everlasting arms of Jehovah. From Levi's case, let us learn, while smarting under the just judgments of God, that if we repent, and cleave unto our reconciled Father in Christ Jesus, the divine chastisements will be converted into blessings. We should likewise learn, that our duties to our nearest and dearest relatives on earth, should never interfere with what is required of us by our Father in heaven. Let us, in fine, keep constantly in mind the privileges and blessings enjoyed by a people saved by the Lord, redeemed by the Lord Jesus Christ, and sanctified by the Holy Spirit. They shall dip their feet in oil, their shoes shall be of iron, and of brass, and as their days are, so shall their strength be. The Lord will ride upon the heavens in their help.

PRAYER.

We adore and bless thee, Almighty God, as the high and the holy One who inhabitest eternity; as the Father of lights, from whom cometh down every good and every perfect gift. In thy hands our lives are, and thine are all our ways; we would therefore desire to glorify thee, in our bodies and spirits, which are thine. We adore thee, that, under the Jewish dispensation, thou didst bow the heavens and come down in awful majesty to deliver thy holy law. As that law was given with such solemnity, may we exceedingly fear and quake at the thought of transgressing it; as it was written by thy finger on tables of stone, let us ever keep before us its eternal obligations. May it be the delight of our hearts, and the rule of our lives. We lament the corruption of our natures which gives us a disrelish for it, which prevents us from seeing any beauty in it that we should desire it, which is constantly suggesting temptations from within and without to transgress it, and which has made us sinners before thee exceedingly. We feel that we cannot of ourselves escape its denunciations, nor satisfy its just requirements. But blessed be thy name, that the hand-writing of condemnation has been blotted out, and nailed to the cross of Christ; that what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, thou didst in mercy accomplish, by sending thine own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh. May the Holy Spirit enable us, by faith, to put our hands upon the head of our atoning sacrifice, and to confess our sins over him with unfeigned repentance, that our iniquity being laid upon him, we may be redeemed by his atoning blood. May thy Holy Spirit subdue the corruption of our hearts, despoil us of our weapons of rebellion, and clothe us with the whole armour of God. May our lives be adorned by all the fruits of the Spirit, and may our light so shine before men, that they may be thereby induced to glorify their Father in heaven. We earnestly pray, Almighty Father, that the light of the gospel may shine upon the heathen nations, and that the means used by our church for that purpose, may be crowned with abundant success. We likewise earnestly pray for the extension of Christ's kingdom in our own land, in our own neighbourhood, in our own hearts. May thy Holy Spirit keep us this day from the evil that is in the world. Take us, and all that are near and dear to us, under thy protecting care, and all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE LIV.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XII. 33—59.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 33. The command to sell all that they had and give alms, was peculiarly applicable to the case of the apostles of Christ. By complying with it, they gave proof of their confidence in their Master's promise, and of the value they set upon treasures in heaven, while they were secured against all anxiety about the things of this world, and free from earthly distractions in preaching the gospel of the kingdom. In ver. 35—40. the disciples of Christ are required to have their loins girt and their lamps burning, lest, as in the case of the rich man, in the preceding parable, their summons to eternity should surprise them like the stealthy and unexpected visit of a thief in the night. In our Saviour's times, the people in the east wore long upper garments, which, when they went to battle, or on a journey, or about any servile work, they fastened up and girded round their waists. The marriages, in Judea, were often protracted far through the night, and it was uncertain when the guests would return home. The night was divided into four watches, of three hours each. The first commenced at sun-set, and ended at 9 o'clock; the second ended at midnight, the third at 3, and the fourth at 6 in the morning. The servants were in the habit of waiting their master's return from the wedding. Their having their loins girt and their lamps burning, indicates their state of preparation for his reception. It appears from this parable that watchfulness is incumbent on all, and that the lesson it contains is applicable to all. Ver. 42—48. The parable which follows has a particular reference to ministers of the gospel. In ver. 49. our Saviour does not mean to say, that it was the object of his coming into the world, to send fire upon the earth, but that fire, i. e. the fire of persecution and great suffering, would be the portion of the early converts to his cause, and he does not, for that reason, wish it to be kindled, but because, through these means, the success of the gospel would be most triumphant, and its evidences most conclusive. Ver. 50. But, before that took place, our Saviour had a baptism to be baptized with. That was a baptism of suffering. Christ was straitened till that baptism was accomplished, because it was thus that human redemption was to be achieved. The effects of the Christian religion, especially on its first publication and reception in any country, are farther described in ver. 51—53. In ver. 54—59. Christ charges his hearers with their want of sagacity in discovering the signs of events which involved the salvation of their souls, while they were quick in predicting the state of the weather, from observing the appearance of the sky; and that while the judgments of God were hanging over their heads, they did not use the opportunities afforded them of averting them. They did not seek to be reconciled unto God, before their final doom overtook them, with the same prudence as the debtor seeks reconciliation with his creditor, before he is dragged before the judge, cast into prison, and confined there until he has paid the uttermost farthing.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The children of God should take comfort, amidst the trials and sufferings in this world, from the promise that it is their Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom; they should strive to acquire treasure in heaven, which the moth cannot corrupt, and which the thief cannot plunder. As we cannot tell when God may require our souls of us, we should be constantly preparing ourselves for our Master's summons, having our loins girt and our lamps burning. Blessed shall we be if, when our Lord cometh, he findeth us so doing. Peculiarly blessed is the portion of the minister of the gospel who turneth many unto righteousness, for he shall shine as the stars in the firmament of heaven, for ever and ever; but awful, indeed, shall be the condition of him by whose instrumentality his people's souls have been ruined. His Lord will come at an hour when he thinketh not; will beat him with many stripes, will cut him asunder, and appoint his portion with unbelievers. Let us not forget, however, that amidst the religious light and privileges we enjoy in this land, we have all means of knowing our Lord's will, and that we are bound to guard ourselves against the corrupt doctrine or the vicious practices of our pastors, should we unhappily have such unfaithful guides. Should it please our heavenly Father to make us pass through the fire of persecution or affliction, let us strive to pass through it as the gold that has been seven times tried. Should we be baptized with suffering, may we be straitened till we are thereby led to a baptism in the fountain which has been opened for all sin and for uncleanness. Should means be used, by our nearest relatives on earth, to separate us from Christ, may they be found utterly powerless in quenching our love and devotion to him. Seeing that without Christ God is a consuming fire, we should earnestly seek the Holy Spirit by whom we are drawn to him, united to him, shielded by him, and saved by him; and we should never forget that if ours is a saving faith in Christ, it will work in us by love, purify our hearts, and reform our lives.

PRAYER.

We approach, this evening, O God, unto thy throne of grace, in the name of the Lord Jesus, who is the only true and living way unto thee; in whom thou seest no iniquity in Jacob nor perverseness in Israel. O thou, before whom a sparrow is not forgotten, watch over us and preserve us from all evil. O thou who clothest the lilies of the field and feedest the fowls of heaven, feed us with the natural food convenient for us, but particularly with that spiritual food which can nourish and sustain our souls through eternity. Wean us, O God, from over-solicitude about the things of this life, and give us grace to value treasures in heaven, and to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. As we know not when our souls may be required of us, may we constantly have our loins girt and our lamps burning, and be waiting for the coming of our Lord. May we be enabled so to act that, whether living or dying, we may be the Lord's. Blessed be thy name for thy sparing mercy; blessed be thy name that thou hast not summoned us to eternity with a load of unrepented guilt. Behold, we are vile in thy sight; O be merciful to us sinners against thee. May thy love-suffering lead us to repentance. Save us, O God, by an everlasting salvation. Justify us freely by thy grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, and sanctify our souls by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Inspire us with that zeal for thy service, with that straitening till our work is accomplished, which our blessed Lord exemplified on earth, and while we are assured that unless we have the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his, let us beware of appropriating to ourselves a title to the blessings of his purchase, while we are not striving to live holy, harmless, and undefiled. In time of trouble may we look to the Captain of our salvation, who was made perfect through suffering, and may nothing be ever able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus. We feel our own natural weakness and insufficiency, clothe us, we beseech thee, with the whole armour of God, that we may be enabled to stand in the day of trial, and finally to be more than conquerors through him that loved us, and gave himself for us. We implore thy blessing upon the church of Christ at home and abroad. May he sprinkle many nations who are now strangers to him, and may he see of the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. Unto whom shall we commend the sons and daughters of affliction, but unto thee, the Physician of soul and body. Bless us as a Christian family: whatever others may do around us, as for us may we serve the Lord. Into thy hands we commit ourselves, this night, and all that are near and dear to us; and all we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FIFTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLV. 3.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM XLV.

REMARKS.

We have the authority of the apostle Paul (Heb. i. 8.) for applying this psalm to the Lord Jesus Christ, and it contains a most vivid and animated description of the glories of his mediatorial person; of the boundless riches of his redeeming grace; of the resistless power of his saving arm; of the rectitude and perpetuity of his kingdom,—‘thy throne O God, is for ever and ever;’ of the honour and joy which would be conferred on him by his heavenly Father, as the reward of his humiliation and sufferings; of his union with his church, here styled ‘the Queen,’ under the idea of celebrating a nuptial solemnity; of the surpassing beauty, and resplendent glory of his bride; of the transporting joy with which she and her attendants would be introduced into the palace of the great King, and of the grateful affection with which he would be regarded, and the lofty praises which would be offered to him by his people, through all eternity.

Ver. 1. ‘My heart is inditing,’ &c. The psalmist’s mind, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, was full of a most sublime and interesting subject, even ‘the king’ Messiah, and his tongue gave utterance to the suggestions of the Holy Ghost, with the same faithfulness and accuracy as a ready writer puts down any composition that has been given him to copy. Ver. 2. The incomparable beauty and excellence of Messiah’s character, as anointed by the Holy Ghost, to declare to perishing men the glad tidings of salvation, are here set before us, as if the psalmist was actually beholding him the moment he spoke. Ver. 3—5. Messiah’s armour, and the conquests which he achieves over the hearts of sinful rebellious men, are here described. Ver. 6—8. Here Messiah is solemnly addressed as God, whose throne is for ever and ever; and yet it is at the same time declared that God, even his God, would, on account of his pre-eminent love of righteousness, and hatred of iniquity, anoint him with the oil of gladness more abundantly than any of his other servants,—a striking proof of the union of the divine and human nature in the person of Christ, a union which so admirably qualifies him for his great work, and which renders his name so fragrant in the estimation of his people. Ver. 9—16. By ‘the queen’ standing at the king’s right hand, in gold of Ophir, we are to understand either the church in general, or more probably the Hebrew church restored to the favour of her Lord, after her long apostacy and separation, and by ‘king’s daughters,’ the churches of the Gentiles. The whole passage seems to be descriptive of the purity and beauty of the church in the latter day, and the universal joy which shall attend the conversion of the Jews to the faith of Christ.

The glory and excellence of the divine Saviour should ever be the subject of our most devout and delightful meditation. And surely if we contemplate him in those views in which he is presented to us in his word, we must be disposed to exclaim with the psalmist, ‘Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips.’ Let us seriously inquire whether we are among the number of those who see no ‘form or comeliness’ in a Being so transcendently glorious, or of those who reckon him ‘the chief among ten thousand, yea, altogether lovely.’ Have we received him as our Saviour, have we yielded submission to him as our Lord, do we glory in his cross, do we exult in his perfect righteousness, do we rejoice in the triumphs of his grace? And, ‘beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are we changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord?’ Is it a source of heart-felt sorrow to us that he is so generally despised and rejected of men, and do we ardently long, and earnestly pray for the arrival of that auspicious period when Jews and Gentiles shall constitute one glorious church, adorned with all the beauties of holiness? Do we desire to make his name to be remembered throughout all

12 June 8
1 June 5
11 June 53
14 April 54

generations, and do we derive unspeakable satisfaction from the assurance that the time will come when all kings shall fall down before him, and all nations shall serve him?"

PRAYER.

At the footstool of thy throne of grace, O thou infinitely glorious, and merciful Lord God, would we desire, on this morning of thine own day, to prostrate ourselves with the lowliest reverence, beseeching thee to pour out thy Holy Spirit upon us, and to enable us to worship thee who art a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. We are unworthy, O Lord, utterly unworthy to appear before thee, the high and lofty One who inhabitest eternity, and in whose presence angels are represented as veiling their faces with their wings. To us belong shame and confusion of face, because we have rebelled against thee; and hadst thou dealt with us according to our sins, or rewarded us according to our iniquities, we would, at this moment, have been lifting up our eyes in hell, being in torments, instead of being permitted to draw near to thee in prayer, in the name of Jesus thy beloved Son. We thank thee, O Lord, for the institution of thy holy sabbath, in which we have so precious an opportunity of waiting upon thee, both in public and private ordinances of thy worship. May we highly value, and diligently improve, this season of holy rest. May our souls this day thirst for God, for the living God. May we ardently desire to enjoy hallowed communion with thee, as our covenant God, through Jesus Christ. May the world, with all its concerns, be this day banished from our thoughts, and may the infinitely important realities of an unseen and eternal state, occupy our deepest attention. May we seriously consider how soon, how very soon, sabbaths and means of grace shall come to an end, and our spirits be summoned into thy presence, to give an account of the deeds done in the body. May we, therefore, spend every sabbath as if it were the last we were to enjoy on earth, confessing all our sins with godly sorrow, imploring fervently thy pardoning mercy, humbling ourselves deeply in thy presence, exercising a lively faith in the blood and righteousness of Emmanuel, examining ourselves strictly and impartially, whether we are indeed new creatures in Christ Jesus, girding up the loins of our minds, watching and praying, and acting as those who wait for the coming of their Lord. And may we be cheered by a good hope through grace, that, when our earthly house of this tabernacle has been dissolved, we shall have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Let thy name and thy Son's name, be this day specially glorified. O may the mighty Saviour this day gird his sword upon his thigh, and go forth conquering, and to conquer. May the time soon arrive when the glad tidings of salvation shall be published in every land, and Jew and Gentile shall turn to the Lord, and all the kingdoms of this world, become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ. Hear, O Lord, in heaven thy dwelling-place, and do for us exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, for the sake of thy dear Son, whom thou always hearest. Amen.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XLVI. XLVII.

REMARKS.

IN PSALM XLVI. we have a very striking specimen of that triumphant confidence in her covenant God, which the church is sometimes enabled to exercise. Fixing her eyes steadily on his Almighty power, his gracious promises, his unfailing faithfulness, and his all-pervading presence; she rises nobly superior to all fears, and bids defiance to all enemies. Is she placed in circumstances of great difficulty and distress? God is her refuge, to whom she flees, God is her strength, from whom she looks for reasonable help in the time of trouble. And what though she be threatened with the most awful and overwhelming calamities, none of these things move her; streams of consolation and joy are constantly issuing from that river which flows from God's inexhaustible fullness, of which she is permitted to drink abundantly. What though she be surrounded by numerous and formidable foes, who threaten to crush and destroy her, God is in the midst of her, to defend her, to destroy her enemies, and grant her final deliverance; if God be for us, who can be against us? Let then all who trust in him, maintain an uncomplaining, composed frame of mind; let them profoundly adore a sovereign God; let them rejoice in the thought, that he will yet be exalted among the heathen—that he will be exalted in the earth, and let them daily repeat the delightful truth, that the Lord of hosts is with them, that the God of Jacob is their refuge. It is recorded of the great reformer Luther, that when his prospects became dark and lowering, and his enemies were assuming the most threatening aspect, he was accustomed to say, 'Come let us sing the 46th Psalm, and let them do their worst.'

PSALM XLVII. This psalm seems to have been composed for the grand occasion, in Israel's history, when the ark of the covenant was conducted to mount Zion, and introduced into the most holy place provided for it in the temple, amidst the joyful acclamations of the assembled Israelites. But by this splendid ceremonial was evidently prefigured a far more important event, even the ascension of the Lord Jesus to the right hand of the Majesty on high, there to take possession of his mediatorial throne, and to appear in behalf of his people. And true Christians are here taught to consider the ascension of their Lord, as an event of transcendent importance, which they ought to celebrate with the most rapturous joy, because then the Saviour who humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, was highly exalted, and triumphed gloriously over all his enemies, and was received by his heavenly Father with ineffable complacency, and poured down those influences of the Holy Spirit, by which multitudes were converted to the faith of the gospel, and by which all nations shall yet be rendered his obedient subjects.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou hast been the dwelling-place of thy people in all generations; thou hast ever been their refuge and their strength, a very present help in the time of trouble. O Lord God of hosts, who is a strong Lord like unto thee, or to thy faithfulness round about thee. Thou rulest the raging of the sea; when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them. May we therefore at all times, place the firmest confidence in thee, persuaded that if we are indeed among the number of thy believing people, thou wilt cause us to drink of that river, the streams whereof make glad the city of our God; that thou wilt ever be in the midst of us, and not suffer us to be moved; that thou the Lord wilt help us in every time of difficulty and distress, and that right early. We desire, O Lord, to thank thee for the opportunity we have this day enjoyed of assembling together in thy sanctuary, in order to engage in the public exercises of thy worship, and to hear the precious truths of thy word. O may the preaching of thy gospel be accompanied with power from on high, for the conviction of sinners; for comforting and edifying the body of Christ. And while so many, alas! resist all the compassionate entreaties of a beseeching Saviour, and treasure up to themselves wrath, against the day of wrath, O may we be indeed his humble, faithful, devoted disciples. May we study to adorn the doctrine of our God and Saviour in all things, by living soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present evil world; may we be panting after greater conformity to his holy image; may we be deeply abased on account of our manifold sins and imperfections; and may we come boldly to thy throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help us in time of need. O may we regard thee as a God to be adored, a God to be loved, a God to be trusted in, a God to be served, and a God to be enjoyed through all eternity. And O may Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, that we, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fulness of God. And feeling an increasing sense of our obligations to him who loved us, and gave himself for us, may we abound more and more in the work of the Lord. May we every sabbath be receiving additional strength from above, to enable us to resist every temptation, to conquer every enemy, and to discharge every duty. And while we thus pray for ourselves, we would also supplicate thee in behalf of all our brethren of mankind; we pray for the young—the more advanced in life—for the aged, and the dying; give them grace and strength to serve and trust in thee, according to their day. We pray for the ministers of the everlasting gospel, especially for thy servant who labours among us in holy things. O may he be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of God. May he be the honoured instrument in thine hand of turning many unto righteousness, and of directing, comforting, and animating thy people. And now, Lord, we commend ourselves to thy watchful care during the hours of repose. May we lie down at peace with thee, at peace with ourselves, and at peace with all mankind. And when our sabbaths on earth have come to an end, O may we spend an eternal sabbath of joy and love in thy presence on high. Hear, O Lord, we beseech thee, these our supplications, and grant us a gracious answer, for the Lord Jesus' sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVII. 7.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA I.

REMARKS.

Moses, the honoured servant of God, and venerated leader of the Israelites was now called to his rest; Joshua is divinely appointed his successor. The people are commanded to advance under his conduct to the promised land. He is divinely encouraged to proceed, with the assurances of triumph and success; and as the grand means of ensuring prosperity to all his enterprises, and of maintaining right sentiments and affections in his soul, he was enjoined to cultivate a most familiar acquaintance with the divine law, and to make it the subject of his daily and devout meditation. And may not the people of God hence learn, that they should go forth to encounter the enemies of their salvation, entertaining the confident and animating persuasion, that through the mighty power of the Spirit of God, they shall certainly obtain the victory? Should they not be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; and should they not rejoice in the thought, that his grace will be made sufficient for them, and his strength perfected in their weakness? If the Lord their God be with them, why should they be afraid or dismayed? Is there any one that can defeat his purposes, or snatch them out of his hand? What though they must maintain a warfare with the devil, the world, and the flesh, at every step of their journey towards the promised land; should not these heart-cheering words of their covenant God dispel all their fears, 'My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest?' And in order that their faith, and love, and hope may be kept in lively and vigorous exercise, let the word of Christ dwell in them richly; let them every day consult it with the deepest reverence and attention, that they may become better acquainted with the character of God, and with the depravity, treachery, and inconstancy of their own hearts, that they may obtain direction in all their difficulties, comfort under all their afflictions, and encouragement amidst all their fears. And let them remember, that daily, and devout, and prayerful perusal of the holy scriptures, is essential to the prosperity of their souls, and that the more exalted their station, and the more arduous the duties which they have to discharge, the more necessary it is that God's word be their meditation all the day.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, the creator of the ends of the earth who faintest not, neither art weary. In thee we live, and move, and have our being. Thou hast given us existence, thou preservest our lives every moment, thou hast allotted to us the situations which we occupy, and whenever the time which thou hast appointed us on earth shall come to an end, then thou changest our countenance and sendest us away. Thou art continually reminding us by the voice of thy providence that from the stroke of death there is no exemption, either to the high or the low, the rich or the poor, the young or the old; that, even thy most faithful and devoted servants must yield to this universal conqueror, and resign to others the offices with which they are invested. May we contemplate these thy dispensations with the deepest solemnity; may we derive from them the salutary lessons which they are intended to teach. May they lead us seriously to consider, that the time of our departure may be at hand, that in a very short period we may be summoned to give an account of our stewardship, and to hear from the lips of our Judge that sentence by which our everlasting destiny shall be decided. We praise thee, O Lord, in behalf of all thy servants who have fought the good fight, and finished their course, and kept the faith; and that thou raisest up others to serve thee, and promote thy great designs to thy church and people. And suffer us not to yield to discouragement while pursuing our journey to the Canaan above. May the hope of being victorious over all our spiritual enemies, strengthen us amidst every conflict. Do thou, our God, be with us, and enable us to perform every duty, to resist every temptation, and to endure every hardship and affliction in thy service. May we highly value, and attentively study, thy holy word; may it be sweeter to our taste, than honey to our mouth; and prove a light to our feet, and a lamp to our path. O may thy Holy Spirit shine into our minds, and quicken our affections, and give us all joy and peace in believing. And may we not only read and hear the scripture, given by inspiration of God, but may we observe to do all that is written therein, that thus thou mayest make our way prosperous, and grant us good success. And now, Lord, we desire to render to thee our united acknowledgments for thy kindness to us during the past night, and for permitting us this morning to assemble at the footstool of thy throne of grace. We beseech thee to vouchsafe to us thy presence and thy blessing this day. May we enter upon the discharge of our various duties with cheerfulness and zeal, not with eye-service as men-pleasers, but in singleness of our heart as unto the Lord, with good-will doing service as to the Lord, and not unto men. May our light so shine before men, that others, seeing our good works, may glorify thee our heavenly Father. May we never forget that thou, God, seest us at all times, and in all places; and may we ever think, and speak, and act as in thy presence. May we diligently cultivate all the graces of thy Holy Spirit. May we be humble, meek, patient, forgiving; not rendering railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing. May we put away from us all wrath, and malice, and clamour, and evil-speaking, and be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another. May we never be overcome of evil, but always endeavour, in imitation of our Lord and Master, to overcome evil with good. O Lord, do thou be our keeper this day, be thou our shade at our right hand. O Lord, preserve us from all evil; preserve our soul. O Lord, preserve our going out, and coming in, from this time forth, even for evermore. Our waiting eyes, O Lord, are towards thee; our hope is placed only in thy mercy. Hear us graciously, and love us freely, for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVIII. 10.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XIII.

REMARKS.

This chapter is full of the most important instructions, and the most solemn warnings. Our Lord here teaches us, that when extraordinary calamities befall any of our fellow-men, we are not warranted to consider them as greater sinners than others, who have been subjected to no such awful visitations; and that instead of sitting in judgment on those who may have been cut off by some sudden and awful stroke, it would be far more profitable to reflect on the declaration here, twice repeated by our Lord, that, unless we repent, we must perish. In the parable of the barren fig-tree, we are reminded of the immense advantages we enjoy under the dispensation of the gospel, for bringing forth those fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the praise and glory of God; and of the aggravated guilt we incur, and the tremendous danger to which we expose ourselves, by neglecting to improve these advantages. Are we, then, still cumberers of the ground? Let us tremble at the thought, that the axe is lying at the root of the tree, and that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, must be hewn down and cast into the fire, the fire of hell that is unquenchable. In the case of the woman who was bowed down with a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, but whom our Lord, nevertheless, found in the synagogue, we have a very interesting example of one who could say from the heart, 'Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth,' and who could declare that it was good for her to draw near to God; for she obtained a cure of her bodily disease, and her mouth was opened to glorify God. It is no trifling cause which will prevent a daughter of Abraham from appearing in the sanctuary. How base and detestable was the hypocrisy of the ruler of the synagogue, in representing the cure of this woman, effected by a word from the mouth of Christ, as a breach of the rest of the sabbath; and how completely and justly was he put to shame, by the familiar and opposite illustration employed by our Lord. In the parables of the grain of mustard seed and of the leaven hid in three measures of meal, we are taught that the religion of Christ, though small in its beginnings, will ultimately overspread the whole world, and be a source of the greatest blessings to all mankind; and that whenever it has obtained a lodgment in any human soul, it will gradually pervade all its faculties and affections, and assimilate them to its own nature. Has it yet obtained admission into our hearts, and is the Spirit of God daily employing it, in order to transform us more and more into the divine image? The answer which Jesus gave to the man who asked him, 'Are there few that be saved?' shows us, that the source of our anxiety should be, not to ascertain how many or how few shall be saved, but whether we ourselves are among the number; and that, while the door of mercy is open, we should make the most vigorous and determined efforts to enter in at the strait gate.

And surely our everlasting salvation is an object worthy of all the anxiety we can feel, and all the efforts we can make, in order to effect it.

PRAYER.

O thou holy, holy, holy Lord God, how shall we, who are but dust and ashes, take it upon us to speak unto the Lord? O how unworthy are we to appear in thy presence, or to take thine infinitely glorious name into our polluted lips! O how justly mightest thou have mingled our blood with our sacrifice, and cut us off while thus worshipping thee with our mouth, and honouring thee with our lips, while our hearts were far from thee. Verily it is because thou art God, and not man, and thy compassions fail not, that we are not consumed. O may thy goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, lead us to repentance. May we think on our former evil ways and our doings, which have not been good, and may we lothe ourselves in our own sight for our iniquities and our abominations which we have committed. May the consideration of the base return which we have made for all thy favours, and especially for the stupendous gift of thy Son, excite the deepest contrition in our souls, and dispose us earnestly to plead for thy pardoning mercy. And, O suffer us not to go on to sin, because thy grace abounds. May we be thoroughly in earnest in the grand concern of salvation. May we strive to enter in at the strait gate, and not be contented with transient wishes and occasional efforts to flee from the wrath to come. And let us not be satisfied with a mere external profession, calling Christ, Lord, Lord, while we do not the things which he says, lest we should be among that wretched number to whom he will say at the last great day, I know you not, depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. May we ever remember that we are not our own, but bought with a price, and that therefore we are bound to glorify thee in our bodies and spirits, which are thine. May we henceforth be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know, that our labour is not in vain in the Lord. We thank thee, O Lord, for thy preserving care and thy heavenly bounty this day. May we never forget, that all we are, and all we have, is thine, that every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights. We beseech thee, to shower down thy best blessings on us as a family. May we be all thy beloved children, through faith in Christ Jesus; all renewed in the spirit of our minds, all animated with the desire of pleasing thee, our heavenly Father, and all studying to promote each other's comfort and welfare. May peace be ever within our dwelling, and our hearts be knit together in love. May we all serve thee in our day and generation on earth; may we all be faithful unto death, that we may obtain a crown of life. And now, O thou, who keepest Israel, who neither slumberest nor sleepest, we commit ourselves to thy care, during the silent watches of the night. May we enjoy undisturbed and refreshing repose if it be thy will. And when the night of death arrives, and the great midnight cry is heard, Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him, may our loins be girded about, and our lamps burning, and we ourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. O Lord, hear, O Lord forgive, for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIV.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA III. IV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

CHAP. III. 5. In this portion of holy writ, we have the most remarkable instance of God's special presence with his ancient people, and of his care over them. The command, 'Sanctify yourselves,' impressively announced the solemnity of the occasion. This charge was enforced by the appropriate consideration that the divine omnipotence was to be strikingly displayed before all Israel. The Jordan, at some periods of the year, was comparatively a small stream; but at the season referred to, the vernal equinox, it usually swelled into a river of great depth and rapidity, overflowing all its banks. By the signal interposition of the Almighty, a passage was made for the Israelites to pass through. CHAP. III. 13—17. The chosen servant of God expressly intimated to the Israelites, beforehand, what was to happen; and an important purpose, in the scheme of providence, was answered by this astonishing event. It must therefore have taken place by divine appointment. Chap. iii. 7; iv. 14. It was intended, in a subordinate sense, to confirm the authority of Joshua, and prove his commission.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How replete with instruction is this narrative? Joshua evinced a simple reliance on the promised interposition of the Most High, and the chosen people implicitly followed the directions of their divinely appointed leader. When the tribes of Israel arrived at the Jordan, that river, to all human appearance, presented an insuperable barrier to their progress. But they 'staggered not through unbelief.' They left it, in unshaken faith, to God to open up a way for them to pass over. In the exercise of that holy principle, Joshua calmly issued the necessary orders, calling upon the children of Israel to come and hear the words of the Lord their God. And, having properly marshalled the vast multitude, he commanded them to move forward. As yet the unconscious stream ran deep and broad before them; but they confided in the divine pledge, and, at the word of the Lord of all the earth, 'Jordan was driven back.' What a reproof to all distrustfulness does this event supply! There was indeed much of speciality in the case. But is it not God's faithful promise to his believing people of every age, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee?' Let us only believe God, and according to our faith so shall it be unto us, if not clearly in reference to the things of time, yet certainly with respect to the far more important concerns of eternity. While we are pursuing the path of commanded duty, though our prospects may become dark, and our advancement be apparently obstructed for a season, let us not be discouraged; for every cloud will be at length dispelled and every hinderance removed, if we rely on the Rock of ages. If our confidence in the all-sufficient Saviour be steadfast and entire, when we pass through the waters, he will be with us, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow us. If we repose our trust exclusively on his finished work, he will sustain us amid the swellings of the mystical Jordan, and convey us safe and triumphant to that 'better country, even an heavenly.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, grant us thy grace, this morning, that we may be enabled to worship thee acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. We adore thee as the God of our life and the length of our days, for in thee we live, and move, and have our being. Thou hast been the hiding-place of thy people in all generations; give us now richly to experience thy favour, through the Lord Jesus Christ, while we draw near unto thee in the lively exercise of faith and of every devout affection. The heavens, O Lord, declare thy glory, and the firmament showeth forth the workmanship of thy hand; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night teacheth knowledge of thee, the Almighty. All thy works praise thee, and thy saints they bless thy name. We thank thee for again permitting us, in the course of thy good providence, to worship together, as a Christian family, at thy footstool. O bless to us the reading of thy word. May we ever seriously remember, that whatsoever was written aforetime was written for our instruction. Establish our confidence in thy power and faithfulness. And may we all seek earnestly to be followers of them who, through faith and patience, are now inheriting the promises. We bless thee for the mercies of the past night and of this morning. Thou art daily loading us with thy benefits. But, O how unworthy are we of any, even the least of thy mercies. We have all sinned and come short of thy glory. We have been unfaithful stewards of thy bounty, and slothful servants in thy vineyard. We have sinned at once against the clearest light and the tenderest love. Have mercy upon us, O Lord, according to thy loving-kindness: according to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out our transgressions. With lowly and penitent hearts we would supplicate thy forgiveness. Regard us not as we are in ourselves, but look upon us in the face of thine Anointed. Grant that, through the atoning blood of our adorable Redeemer, we may know experimentally the blessedness of them whose iniquities are pardoned and whose sins are covered. And may Christ be made, of thee, unto our souls, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption! Pour out upon us, we entreat thee, the Holy Spirit, to help our infirmities, and lead us unto all truth. Take away the hard and stony heart, and bestow upon us hearts broken and contrite. Enable us to lay aside every weight and the sins that do more easily beset us. Help us to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Fit us for the duties and support us under the trials of this day. We would cast all our care upon thee, and do thou graciously sustain us. Prosper our undertakings, so far as they may be agreeable to thy will. Grant us an holy submission to thy divine disposal. Preserve us from every snare and evil way. May Christ be formed in us the hope of glory, and may we be rooted and grounded in his love. Enlarge our hearts, that we may run in the way of thy commandments. May thy presence go with us whithersoever we shall be called in providence this day. Preserve our eyes from tears, our feet from falling, and our souls from death. Our hope, O Lord, is in thee; let our help come from thee: and we ask all in the name, and for the sake, of Jesus Christ, our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PARAPHRASE XXVIII.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XIV.

REMARKS.

How plainly and repeatedly are we taught, in the discourses of our Lord, that mercy is better than sacrifice? But though deeds of compassion or benevolence, and works of necessity, may be performed on the Christian as well as on the Jewish sabbath, we must not violate its sanctity either by worldly employments or recreations. Neither must we countenance any scheme which would have such a tendency, but keep one day in seven holy to the Lord. It becomes every follower of Jesus to cultivate lowliness of mind. Let us earnestly seek to be clothed with humility. Let us beware especially of spiritual pride, and of saying in our hearts, with regard to any fellow-creature, Stand by, for I am holier than thou. A taste for sumptuous entertainments is attended with many evils. It leads, to say the least, to a needless waste of time and substance, which might be far better employed in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. Such feasts too often tend to foster a hollow semblance of friendship, where the reality is wanting. Of true generosity or kindly regard they are very uncertain, equivocal proofs. O how fertile is the perverse ingenuity of man in devising excuses for negligence as to the concerns of the soul and eternity! We are ever prone to walk more by sight than by faith, and to prefer things seen and temporal to things unseen and eternal. The snares into which we fall, or rather, the idols we worship, in the objects of time and sense, may be extremely various, according to circumstances; but the inherent disinclination to godliness, that leads us astray, is in all the same. Let every one, therefore, diligently search out the plague of his own heart in this respect. If we had any just conception of the infinite value of our immortal souls, how anxiously should we inquire, each for himself, 'What shall I do to be saved?' We should then be willing to lose all, that we might win Christ and be found in him. We should be prepared to relinquish our earthly enjoyments and earthly possessions, though dear to us as a right eye, or profitable as a right hand, for the sake of the kingdom of heaven. Such being the case, shall we rest satisfied with a name to live? While even the fruitful branch is purged, the withered branch is lopped off and cast into the fire. Let us examine ourselves whether we be in the faith. If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his.

PRAYER.

Most gracious and ever blessed God, pour out upon us, this evening, a spirit of grace and of supplication. Quicken us that we may call upon thy name, and draw out the desires of our souls after thee. But while we approach thee as the hearer and answerer of prayer, and the faithful rewarder of all those who truly seek thy face, through the divine Mediator, we feel that in thy presence we are sinful dust and ashes. The very heavens, O Lord, are not clean in thy sight, and thou chargest even thine angels with folly. How unworthy, then, are we, the fallen children of men, to take thy thrice holy name into our polluted lips! Thou didst indeed, at first, make man upright, but we have sought out many inventions. How has the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed! We are now, by nature and by practice, the children of disobedience and deserved wrath. From the sole of the foot to the crown of the head there is no spiritual soundness in us; we are covered with wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores. If we should attempt to justify ourselves, our own mouths would condemn us. If we should say that we are righteous, that also would prove us perverse. We have nothing, and can do nothing, to avert thy just displeasure. Imperfection cleaves to our best services; defilement mingles with the purest purposes of our hearts. The sins of our holy things are more than sufficient to condemn us. Penetrated with a sense of our guilt, we implore thy pardoning mercy and thy sanctifying grace. Hear us in him whom thou hearest always, and be at peace with our souls for his sake in whom thou art ever well pleased. May we be justified freely by thy grace, sanctified wholly by thy Spirit, and kept by thy mighty power, through faith, unto salvation. O Lord, enable us henceforth to love thee more, and serve thee better than ever yet we have done. The objects of time and sense have too much engrossed our hearts, to the neglect of the great realities of eternity. Moderate our attachment to earthly things. Wean our affections from worldly vanities. Help us to rejoice as though we rejoiced not, and to weep as though we wept not, and to use this world so as not to abuse it; ever remembering that the fashion of it passeth away. Enable us to make choice of that better part which shall not be taken from us. May we, by the aids of thy grace, be making daily progress in the divine life. Grant us the wisdom that is from above. Grant us that humility which is well-pleasing in thy sight, and that meekness of spirit which, in thy estimation, is of great price. We would ever cherish on our spirits, at thy footstool, a sincere desire for the temporal and eternal welfare of all our fellow-men. Extend, more and more, the boundaries of the Redeemer's kingdom. And do thou abundantly bless and prosper all the means employed for the universal diffusion of Christianity. Comfort the mourners in Zion. Speak peace to the troubled in mind. Sanctify affliction to the afflicted. Mercifully spare useful lives: fit and prepare the dying for death, and judgment, and a blessed immortality. May all who are dear to us, by the ties of nature or friendship, be the objects of thy special favour. May they and we be heirs together of the grace of life. Bountifully reward all who have done us good or wished us well; graciously forgive those who have done or wish us evil, and enable us from the heart to forgive them. We praise thy name for thy watchful care and kind providence over us throughout the day. We commit ourselves to thy protection for the night. Suffer no evil to befall us, and no plague to come near our dwelling. And to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost we ascribe the kingdom, power, and glory for ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA VI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 17—25. Nothing but a clear divine command, could have warranted the unsparing destruction of the inhabitants of Jericho. Every vindication of it on other grounds, must be unsatisfactory. In the case of Rahab, the only exception mentioned, we see a notable instance of God's sovereign grace. Jericho was afterwards rebuilt; but the rebuilders paid the dire forfeiture denounced against him, 1 Kings xvi. 34.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

When the Israelites first approached Jericho, the lofty bulwarks of that fenced city must have impressed them with a discouraging idea of its great strength. Their general too, from his knowledge and experience in such matters, must have been well aware, that its strong fortifications would render it almost impregnable to mere human force. But while he surveyed its ramparts, with the eye of a veteran warrior, he reposed his expectation of reducing it on other means than the devices of ordinary warfare. The mode of attack he was enjoined to follow, could not fail to strike him as being in itself utterly unavailing; and perhaps it appeared to the besieged in the light of a silly and childish parade, more calculated to excite derision, than to inspire dismay. Still, Joshua and the children of Israel trusted in the power and faithfulness of the Lord Jehovah. They acted, therefore, upon the instructions communicated from on high with unwavering confidence. When the appointed time was come, the shout of victory was raised; and immediately the towering battlements of the devoted city were laid low in the dust. 'By faith the walls of Jericho fell down,' Heb. xi. 30. Joshua of old, was an eminent type of Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Messiah, like him, was given to be a leader and commander to the people. But O how immeasurable is the superiority of the divine antitype! He is not merely the grand agent in executing the scheme of grace devised by the Father's love; but he also bore a part in the contrivance of it, and its accomplishment was effected at the price of his infinitely precious blood. If, then, the Israelites relied on the guidance of Joshua, and yielded implicit obedience to his injunctions, with what confidence and grateful alacrity ought we to follow the Captain of our salvation? If we resign ourselves humbly and entirely to the direction he affords by his word and Spirit, he will conduct us in safety through the waste and howling wilderness of earthly trial and suffering; he will enable us to surmount every obstacle, and vanquish every foe, and he will finally make good our settlement in the glorious mansions of immortal blessedness.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most gracious God, we desire again to lift up our hearts with our hands unto thee, and to worship reverently towards thy holy place. Every new day brings to us additional proofs of thy gracious care and unceasing kindness. We bless thy name, that thou hast watched over us during the silence and darkness of the past night. We thank thee, for all that is comfortable in our circumstances at this time. Thy loving-kindness is new to us every morning; great is thy faithfulness. Early, O Lord, were we all cast upon thy care, and hitherto hast thou sustained us through all the dangers and difficulties that have beset our path in life. We would, therefore, call upon our souls and all that is within us, to be stirred up to magnify and bless thy name. But while we sincerely thank thee for health of body and soundness of mind, and all our other temporal mercies, we would praise thee, more especially for the Christian privileges with which we are favoured. We bless thee for thy holy word and all the means of grace that we enjoy. May we be enabled to improve them diligently, ever mindful that of them to whom much is given, much will be required! But above all thy other benefits, would we extol thee, O Lord, for Jesus Christ, thine unspeakable gift. We earnestly desire to regard him as the only foundation of our hopes for eternity, and the source of all present peace and consolation. We confess before thee, our guilt and unworthiness. Grant us, O Lord, a true repentance towards thee, and a sincere faith in thy Son, our Saviour. Iniquities daily prevail against us. The scope of our affections is unsanctified, and the tenor of our thoughts unholy. There is in each of us an evil heart of unbelief. Enter not into judgment with us. In the midst of deserved wrath, remember us with unmerited mercy. Glory be to thy name, with thee there is forgiveness, that thou mayest be feared; with thee there is mercy and plenteous redemption! Blot out our sins in the peace-speaking blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. Give us to experience thee to be in him our reconciled God and Father. And enable us by thy heavenly grace, henceforth to cherish the tempers and dispositions of thy true children. Grant us the victory over the world, the devil and the flesh. Enlighten our minds in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Fill our souls with joy and peace in believing. Sanctify unto us all the dispensations of thy providence, and every solemn warning from thy blessed word. We desire to go forward to the duties before us this day, in an humble reliance on thy guidance and support. Let thy grace be sufficient for us; perfect thy strength in our weakness. Increase our faith; enlarge our charity. Help us in all that we do or undertake to acknowledge thee, that thou mayest direct our steps. Whether outward prosperity or adversity await us, O do thou enrich our souls with thy blessing, and visit us with thy benign salvation. Mercifully preserve our outgoings and in-comings. Help us at all times to realize thy holy presence and inspection. Let goodness and mercy follow us. And do thou to us, and for us, exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XL.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1—7. The design of the first of the parables recorded in this chapter, obviously was to show that God has not only provided the means of restoration, but also, moved with divine compassion, mercifully strives, by his grace and Spirit, to reclaim the lost, and teaches that their salvation inspires the angels on high with the liveliest emotions of joy. Here, perhaps, Christ reasoned on their own principles, and took for granted, for the sake of illustration, what the scribes and pharisees mistakingly supposed to be the fact, namely, that there were some men, and themselves among the number, who needed no repentance. Ver. 8—10. For the purpose of impressing the same humbling, yet consolatory truths more deeply on their prejudiced minds, the important lesson was repeated under a different form. Ver. 11—32. Our Lord next introduces, with a similar view, an example of the tenderest paternal kindness towards a most unworthy object. From this touching narrative we are plainly taught that God graciously receives into his favour the returning penitent, and loads him with the richest tokens of his unmerited love. But while the blessed Jesus establishes these points, by a resistless appeal to the human heart, he paints, in its true colours, the desperate innate depravity of man, when left to pursue an unrestrained course of guilt. And he also justly exposes, in the envious feelings of the elder son, the self-complacent and contracted notions of all those, whether Jews or Gentiles, who trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others, and whose eye is evil, because God is good.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Alas, we all, like sheep, have gone astray, and wandered every one after his own way. But blessed be God, who willeth not the destruction of any of his creatures; he hath sent his only-begotten Son into the world, to seek and save lost and perishing sinners. Christ has redeemed to himself a chosen people, out of every kindred and tongue under heaven, and all these he, as the good Shepherd, will gather at last into the divine fold. At what a price did he purchase his church, even that of his infinitely precious blood! The angels themselves desire to look into the astonishing mystery of redemption, and rejoice, in their celestial abodes, to behold its glorious results. What Christian, then, could be indifferent about the success of the gospel? Though our heavenly Father hath nourished and brought us up as children, we have rebelled against him. Yet he freely extends to us the arms of compassion and forgiveness. We have all forsaken the fountain of living waters, and hewed out to ourselves cisterns, broken cisterns, which can hold no water. But no experience of the emptiness of worldly pleasures will ever of itself bring us back to God. We must be drawn by the all-powerful influence of his converting grace, before we can feel any real desire to return to him. Neither is this the case merely with flagrant offenders. All are alike impotent and helpless. All must be indebted to the divine mercy in the Lord Jesus Christ. How vain is every self-righteous ground of dependence! There is indeed a vast difference in the degrees of human guilt. But can any man set up a plea of innocence? 'There is none righteous; no, not one.' The only distinction in this respect, which exists among the apostate children of men, is a distinction, not of merit, but of ill-desert. And all the claim that could be justly founded upon it, would confer but a poor pre-eminence on the best of our race; a less condemnation, a lighter punishment. 'By grace are we saved, through faith, and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God. Where is boasting then? It is excluded.'

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as the Father of lights and the fountain of every blessing. From thee cometh down every good and perfect gift; and with thee there is neither variableness nor shadow of turning. Thou hast clothed our bodies with skin and flesh, and fenced them with bones and sinews; and thy inspiration has given unto man understanding. By the word of thy power were we brought into existence, and by the exercise of thy providence are we upheld in being. We are bound by every tie of duty and of gratitude to love and serve thee. But, O how prone are we all to forget thee, the God that made us, and lightly to esteem thee, the Rock of our salvation! Thy paternal bounty is the source of all our mercies, and thy paternal care our only secure and unfailing refuge; yet, alas, we daily sin against heaven and in thy sight; and we are utterly unworthy to be called thy children. We have become weary of the salutary restraints of thy law. We have abused thy goodness, and trampled on thy authority. But, ever blessed be thy name, thy ways are not as our ways, nor thy thoughts as our thoughts! Thou hast caused us to hope in thy word. Thou mercifully invitest even the chief of sinners to return unto thee; and thou hast appointed a gracious method of acceptance, through the atoning death and all-prevalent intercession of Jesus Christ our Saviour. O Lord, if any of us be still at a distance from thee, do thou, by the Holy Spirit, bring us back to thyself. And do thou receive us graciously, heal our backslidings, and love us freely. If thou hast already sought and found us, enable us henceforth to cleave unto thee with full purpose of heart. And O help us to live in habitual remembrance that we are not our own, but bought with a sacred price, even the blood of thy Son. While at thy footstool in our own behalf, we desire to remember before thee all our brethren of mankind. O Father of mercies, let thy name be known through all the earth, and thy saving health among all nations! Cause the light of the blessed gospel to shine into the dark places of the earth. Bring in thine ancient people the Jews, with the fulness of the Gentiles. May sinners every where be turned from darkness unto light, from Satan unto God. May all who name the name of Jesus depart from iniquity. And may pure and undefiled religion more and more flourish in our land. In behalf of our friends we earnestly implore thy favour, which is life, and thy loving-kindness, which is better than life. Our enemies we sincerely commend to thy forgiveness. Visit, in mercy, all the chambers of sickness and mourning. Bless us, O Lord, even us here in thy presence, as a Christian household; and bless each of us according to our respective necessities. Supply all our temporal wants out of the treasures of thy providence, and all our spiritual need out of the riches of thy grace in the Lord Jesus Christ. May we all have an interest in the blessings of that covenant which is well ordered in all things and sure. May we be fellow-heirs of that inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled, and which fadeth not away. For the mercies of the day that has now closed, we offer up unto thee our united and fervent thanksgivings. O thou great Shepherd of Israel, who never slumberest nor sleepest, do thou keep watch over us through the silent hours of the ensuing night. We desire to resign ourselves entirely to thy gracious disposal. For us to live, may it be Christ; for us to die, may it be great gain. May we spend the remaining time of our sojourning upon earth in thy fear and service. And when thou hast accomplished in us, and by us, all thy wise and good purposes here below, grant that an abundant entrance may be ministered unto our spirits, into the heavenly mansions of light and glory, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVI. 1—6.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA VII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

1. What is undertaken, without asking counsel of God, and in our own strength, cannot be expected to prosper. 2. The secret sins of individuals may bring down judgments upon the church or community with which they are connected. 3. Sins committed in secret are often brought to light in a remarkable manner. 4. However men may contrive to conceal their transgressions here, there is a time coming, when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us undertake no enterprise, without asking counsel of God by prayer. Acknowledge him in all thy ways, and he will direct thy steps. Let us do all in dependence upon the grace of God, having no confidence in our own strength. He that trusteth to his own heart is a fool. When chastisements and judgments are sent down upon a community or upon individuals, there is a call for humiliation and prayer, and for inquiring into the cause of such dispensations. In pleading for the averting of judgments and for God's returning favour, there should be a primary regard to the manifestation of God's glory. What wilt thou do unto thy great name? Help us for the glory of thy name. In times of trial and judgment, while we ought to be laid low before God acknowledging our unworthiness, we ought also to be active in removing the causes of God's being offended. Up, sanctify the people. 'I thought on my ways, and turned my feet to thy testimonies. I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments.' When the path of duty is set before us, there should be no delay in entering upon it. Joshua rose up early in the morning to discharge the duty to which he was called. Sinners must be exhorted to repent, and to give God glory, by an open acknowledgment of their transgressions. Let us take heed and beware of covetousness, which proved the ruin of Achan. Let us plead that God would search and try our hearts, that no sin may be secretly indulged there, which may afterwards be brought to light to our shame and confusion. Finally, when we read of God's displeasure being manifested in a striking manner against sinners, let us thereby be led to look upon all sin, and especially our own sins, with utter abhorrence.

PRAYER.

Holy Father, Lord of heaven and earth, thou art glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. Thou art to be sanctified of all them who draw near to thee. Solemnize our minds for thy service. Banish all distracting thoughts. May all within us be now engaged in thy service. We have no righteousness of our own, in which to appear before thee. But we come in the all-prevailing name of thy beloved Son, in whom thou art ever well pleased. See, O God, our Shield, look upon the face of thine Anointed, and for his sake grant us the help of thy Holy Spirit, that we may now present to thee a sacrifice and offering acceptable in thy sight. We give glory to thy name, by acknowledging that thou art glorious, and excellent, and infinitely exalted, and infinitely worthy to receive all adoration and praise. We give glory to thy name, by acknowledging that we are less than the least of all thy mercies, that we are chargeable with innumerable transgressions of thy holy law, that we have destroyed ourselves by sin. We give glory to thy name, by receiving the testimony which thou hast given concerning thy Son, that thou hast given us eternal life, and that this life is in thy Son; that thou art in Christ reconciling the world to thyself, not imputing unto them their trespasses; and that through him is preached unto us the forgiveness of sins. It is in his all-prevailing name, that we come before thee at this time, earnestly imploring the help of thy Holy Spirit to teach us to pray to thee. Make us deeply sensible of our spiritual wants, and do thou supply all our need, according to thy riches in glory, by Jesus Christ. Bless to us all the means of grace wherewith we are favoured. Bless to us what we have been hearing from thy word. May we acknowledge thee in all our ways; do thou direct all our steps. Cleanse us from all secret faults, keep us back also from all presumptuous sins, and suffer them not to have dominion over us. May we take heed and beware of covetousness. Deepen our impressions of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. Take away all our iniquity. Receive us graciously, love us freely. May we, by the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, that we may live to the glory of thy name. Accept, heavenly Father, of our united praises for thy watchful care over us during the night, for the rest and refreshment which thou hast given us and that thou hast raised us up in comfortable circumstances this day. Give us this day our daily bread. Watch over us for good, strengthen us for duty. Prepare us for trial.

May we attempt nothing in our own strength, but all in dependence upon thy grace. May we do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to thee, the Father, through him. And to Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, one God, we ascribe the kingdom, the power, and the glory, both now and ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRaise—PSALM IV. 6—8.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XVI.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

From the parable of the unjust steward, we learn, 1. We have all a department of service assigned us, and talents committed to our trust from God who made us, and who hath allotted us our stations in this world. 2. We are all chargeable with the neglect and abuse of the talents committed to our care. 3. We shall one day be called to give an account of our stewardship. 4. The diligence, assiduity, and ingenuity of the ungodly in prosecuting their plans for worldly gain, may put to shame the listlessness, languor, and want of energy often manifested by the godly in pursuit of a better portion. 5. True wisdom consists in using all the good things of this life (the unrighteous mammon) so as to be made subservient to our preparation for a state of blessedness in the world to come. 6. It is impossible to make a compromise between love to this world and fidelity in the service of God; we must make our choice, whether God or the world shall reign in our hearts. 7. It is in believing the gospel that we shall obtain a victory over the world, and be brought to the love and obedience of the law.

From the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, we learn, 1. Riches often prove a great snare to prevent men from attending to the welfare of their immortal souls; while poverty and affliction prove often the means of bringing men to the great Physician of the soul. 2. At death, the soul enters upon a state of happiness or misery, according as it shall be found in a state of nature or in a state of grace at the time of death. 3. After death there can be no change from a state of misery to a state of happiness. As the tree falls so it must lie. Then he that is holy shall be holy still, and he that is filthy shall be filthy still. 4. That we may form a proper estimate of a state of prosperity and a state of adversity in this world, we must take in the whole of man's existence throughout eternity. 5. In the scriptures, which contain in themselves the evidence of their divine origin, we have all the information which God hath seen needful for securing our highest interests. They are able to make us wise unto salvation. 6. If men will not be satisfied with the information given them in the scriptures, as a sure guide to lead them in the way of life, it is in vain for them to expect farther information. No more shall be given them. 7. The same obstinate hardness of heart that induces men to reject the evidence which the scriptures contain, that they are a revelation from God, would induce them to reject any other evidence that might be given. If they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us never forget that we are accountable creatures. Let us be deeply humbled before God for our neglect and abuse of the talents with which we have been intrusted. When we see men devoting all their time, and talents, and ingenuity to the gaining of a perishing portion, which they must soon part with for ever, let us be stirred up, by their example, to give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, that we may be received into everlasting habitations. Let us beware of allowing the world to occupy that place in our hearts which should be kept for God. Let us be thankful that a door of mercy has been opened for us in the gospel: let us press in while the door is open, ere it be shut. Let us never forget that, while the salvation of the gospel is wholly of grace, all who receive the gospel are made holy. We do not make void the law, then, by preaching the faith of the gospel; nay, we establish the law. Let us guard against the deceitfulness of riches; if riches increase let us not set our hearts upon them. Let us not envy the rich. Let us not repine under poverty and affliction; but plead that all trials may be sanctified for our good. Let us remember that now is the time to be wise in laying up a good foundation for the time to come: there is no repentance in the grave, to which we are hastening. Let us be thankful for the scriptures, and plead earnestly for the Spirit to open our understandings to understand them; that in the daily study of the scriptures we may be daily advancing in the knowledge of the only living and true God, and of Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, to know whom is life eternal.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we, thy dependent and sinful creatures, dwelling on this earth, thy footstool, are encouraged to lift up our hands and our hearts to thee, from whom cometh down all our aid. For though naturally we are far from thee, thou hast been graciously pleased, in the gospel of thy Son, so to draw near to us as to give us the strongest possible encouragement to draw near to thee. Pour out upon us, we humbly beseech thee, of thy Holy Spirit, as the Spirit of grace and supplications, that we may serve thee with what is of thine own giving to us. We desire, with our whole hearts, to give thanks to thee for Jesus Christ, thine unspeakable gift. And receiving him as our Saviour, we come to thee with the confidence of children to a Father. Remember us with the love that thou bearest to thine own people. O visit us with thy salvation, that we may see the goodness of thy chosen, that we may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that we may glory with thine inheritance. Give us the dispositions of thy children. May we live blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a perverse and crooked nation, among whom may we shine as lights in the world holding forth the word of life. As thy children, may we be taught of thee. May we delight in thee as our portion. May we be active in thy service. May we be, in all things, resigned to thy disposing will. May we place all our trust under the shadow of thy wings. Thou, O Lord, hast assigned each of us our stations in this world. May we be faithful to our trust. May we, by the help of thy Spirit, discharge all the duties to which we are called, in the several stations and relations by which we are connected together. We live in a world where we are surrounded with temptations; and we have hearts deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. And may we use what thou givest us of this world as not abusing it, remembering that the fashion of this world passeth away. We thank thee, heavenly Father, that we live in a land of gospel light. May we set a high value on gospel privileges. Lead us to the right improvement of them. Thou knowest our weakness, our helplessness, our sinfulness. We look to thee for all needed help. And we rejoice to be assured from thy word, that it hath pleased thee that in Christ all fulness should dwell. May we daily receive out of his fulness even grace for grace. We thank thee, O Father of all the families of the earth, for all thy kindness to us as a family. Sanctify the relation by which we are connected as a family. Make us more and more helpful to one another. May the ties of nature be in us strengthened by the ties of grace. May we be helpers of each other's spiritual joy, and walk together as joint heirs of the grace of life. Accept, O Lord, of our thanksgiving for thy watchful care over us this day, for the supply of our returning wants, and for the measure of health which thou hast permitted us to enjoy. Take us under thy care and keeping this night. Let no evil come nigh our dwelling. Give us refreshing rest. Take the direction of our thoughts and meditations. May we awake, thankful for thy mercies, and prepared for what thou art pleased to appoint for us. Hear, in heaven, these our supplications; and when thou hearest, forgive and accept, through Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM III.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA VIII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

1. We have powerful enemies to contend with, in this our earthly pilgrimage. 2. While we place our dependence upon Christ, we need not fear our enemies. 3. The triumphs of the wicked are but short, and are just preparing the way for their destruction. The deliverances which God hath wrought for his people in former times, may be considered as pledges, that, in like manner, he will fulfill to them the promises which he has given them of final deliverance from all their enemies. 5. God is pleased at times to enrich his people with the spoils of their enemies. 6. The praise of all the deliverances which we obtain is due to God. 7. In the scriptures, life and death, blessing and cursing, are plainly set before us, that we may choose the good and avoid the evil.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. We need not be afraid to enter upon services of difficulty and danger, when God calls us to them; being assured, that he will uphold us and carry us through. 2. Let us seriously contemplate the awful destruction that awaits the enemies of God; that we may dread the thought of offending God. 3. If we put our trust in the Lord, we may rest assured that he will provide what he sees good for us. 4. Let us give God the glory of all the deliverances which he has wrought for us, and especially for that great deliverance from sin, and all its tremendous consequences, through the Lord Jesus Christ. 5. Let us be thankful for having the word of God, and the ordinances of religion, and be careful to attend upon them. 6. Let parents accustom their children to attend with them on religious ordinances.

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, we bless thy name for permitting us to draw near to thee in prayer. We are, indeed, less than the least of all thy mercies. And if thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? But in the Lord Jesus Christ there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. And thou hast been graciously pleased to declare to us, that thou art in Christ reconciling the world to thyself, not imputing to them their trespasses. And thou art beseeching us to be reconciled to thee. We come to thee in his all-prevailing name; and give thanks to thee for thine unspeakable gift. In him receive us graciously, and love us freely. And grant us the help of thy Holy Spirit, that we may now present to thee our souls and bodies, as a living sacrifice. We acknowledge our constant and absolute dependence upon thee for every thing. Thou art the God of our lives, the God of all our mercies, the God of our salvation. Impress deeply upon our minds, a sense of our infinite obligations to love and serve thee. May we be enabled to show the gratitude of our hearts, by the willing obedience of our hearts and of our lives. Write thy law upon our hearts. May we meditate on thy law day and night. Thou knowest all the trials, and dangers, and temptations to which we are exposed; and how insufficient we are, in our own strength, to resist and overcome them. May we find thy grace at all times sufficient for us, and thy strength perfected in our weakness. Deliver us from the power of sin that dwelleth in us. May we, by the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the body, that we may live. May we not love the world, nor the things of the world; but may thy love be shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost which is given us. And deliver us from the cunning devices and furious assaults of the wicked one. May we resist him, depending upon thy grace, and be made more than conquerors over all our enemies, through him who loved us. We give thanks to thee, gracious Father, for all that is comfortable in our outward circumstances. Provide whatever thou seest to be good for us. May we see and acknowledge thy kind hand in all that thou bestowest upon us. May we be contented with what thou art pleased to bestow upon us. And may our great concern be to seek first the kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, assured, from thy word, that all other things needful for us shall be added. While we plead for ourselves, we plead for all with whom we stand nearly connected. We implore for them the same blessing that we ask in our own behalf. Make us more and more helpful to them; and may we seek the good of all as we have opportunity, and be disposed to take a deep interest in their spiritual welfare. Accept of our thanksgiving for the watchful care which thou hast exercised over us during the night; for the rest and refreshment which thou hast given us; and for all that is comfortable in our circumstances this day. Watch over us for good; strengthen us for duty; prepare us for trial; direct all our intercourse together for good. Be thou at our right hand, and we shall not be moved. And all that we ask is in the name, and for the sake, of thy beloved Son, our Saviour; to whom, with thee, and the Holy Spirit, one God, we ascribe the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLVIII. 4—9.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XVII.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

1. We learn the deep interest which Christ takes in his people; he will assuredly take vengeance on their enemies. 2. The gospel breathes the spirit of love and good-will to men; and disposes to forbearance and forgiveness. 3. We cannot, by our best services, be profitable to God. 4. We are prone to be forgetful of God, and unthankful to God for all his mercies. 5. The destruction of the old world by the flood, and of Sodom by fire from heaven, are instructive emblems of the final destruction of the ungodly, at the coming of the Lord. 6. The coming of the Lord will be sudden and unexpected to the ungodly.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. Let all beware of offending against the least of those who believe in Christ. They are dear to Christ, and he will avenge their cause. 2. Let us carefully cherish a forbearing and forgiving disposition towards our offending brethren. If God hath been graciously pleased to forgive us our manifold offences, should not we also forgive our brethren. 3. Let us plead earnestly that the Lord would increase our faith; that our faith may be always kept in lively exercise. 4. What ground of humiliation have we, that we are, at the best, unprofitable servants; that we are chargeable with innumerable transgressions of God's holy law. 5. And how ought we to be farther troubled in thinking of our unthankfulness to God, for his mercies renewed to us day by day. 6. Let us earnestly desire to have the kingdom of Christ established within us; that kingdom which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. 7. Let us, in the exercise of faith, be looking and waiting for the coming of the Lord. That day will come suddenly upon the wicked. But blessed are they that wait for him: blessed are those servants whom their Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

PRAYER.

Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, we bless thy name for being permitted to approach the footstool of thy throne of grace. Unto whom, Lord, should we go but unto thee, for thou hast the words of eternal life? We are poor, weak, and helpless creatures; but with thee all fulness and perfection dwells. We are sinful and polluted dust and ashes: and therefore, we cannot come into the presence of the infinitely holy God, in our own name and righteousness. But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. Therefore are we encouraged to hope in thee. Thou hast declared, that thou hast pleasure in them that fear thee, and hope in thy mercy, as revealed in the gospel. In Christ receive us graciously, and love us freely. Cause thy face to shine upon us, and so we shall be saved. Holy Father, we plead that thou wouldst create in us clean hearts, and renew a right spirit within us, that thou wouldst grant us, from the fulness of Christ, abundant communications of thy Holy Spirit; that the kingdom of Christ may come within us; that kingdom which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Thus, sharing in the riches of thy grace and love, may we love our brethren with pure hearts fervently. May we cast away from us all anger, and malice, and wrath; and put on, as the elect of God, bowels of mercy, forbearing and forgiving one another, even as thou hast, for Christ's sake, extended forgiveness to us. Fit us for usefulness in our stations. May we be earnestly desirous to see the kingdom of Christ established in the hearts of all men. Thou knowest all the trials, and dangers, and temptations, to which we are exposed, and how insufficient we are, in our own strength to resist and overcome them. Let us not lean to our own understanding, nor trust to our own strength; but may we exercise a constant dependence upon Christ. May we continually receive, out of the fulness of Christ, all the grace of which we continually stand in need. May we daily grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. We acknowledge, O our God, that we are prone to forget thy mercies, and to be unthankful for the many kind interpositions of thy providence in our behalf. How often hast thou been pleased to interpose to preserve our eyes from tears, our feet from falling, and our souls from death! And yet we have soon forgotten such signal displays of thy love. But be thou pleased to impress deeply upon our minds a sense of our infinite obligations to love and serve thee. What shall we render to thee, the Lord, for all thy benefits to us? Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits. May we live to thy glory. May the gratitude of our hearts be manifested by the willing obedience of our lives. Holy Father, we earnestly entreat of thee to raise our affections above the world. As those risen with Christ, may we seek the things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. May we often carry our thoughts forward to his second coming and glorious appearing. And as we know neither the day nor the hour when our Lord shall come, may we be found watchful and prayerful, having our loins girt about, our lamps burning, and our light shining, as those that wait for their Lord. Accept, heavenly Father, of our thanksgiving for the mercies of this day. Pardon wherein we have offended against thee. Take us under thy protecting care during the night. Give us rest and refreshment. Take the direction of our thoughts. And when we awake, may our first thoughts ascend to thee, in adoration and praise. We leave all in thy hands. Undertake for us in every thing. And all that we ask, is in the name, and for the sake, of thy dear Son, our Saviour. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCVII. 9.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA XXIII.

REMARKS.

Joshua, the successor of Moses, the lawgiver and leader of Israel, had now reached a period far beyond the ordinary limit of human life. Warned of his approaching dissolution, this holy man, animated by an undying love for the people who had been so long under his care, and with whose wayward dispositions he had had so much experience, summoned all his energies that, by a closing address, he might attest the sincerity of his interest in their welfare. How solemn and impressive is the spectacle! Joshua, 'old and stricken in age,' venerable from his years, but still more from his character, with 'all the elders, and heads, and judges, and officers of Israel' in his presence, prepared reverently to listen to the words of the hoary warrior. A nobler interest now surrounds him than when, by his command, Jericho was invested, or when 'he said, in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, moon, in the valley of Ajalon: and the sun stood still, and the moon stayed;' or when he 'cut off the Anakims, and destroyed them utterly with their cities.' He is about to leave his people for ever; and he would give them this last proof that he bears on his heart their prosperity and happiness as affectionately now, as when, amid personal perils and fatigues, he fought their battles.

He begins his address by reminding them of what the Lord their God had done for them, through him, in making their enemies to fall under them, and giving them their countries for a possession; thus teaching them that God's dealings in time past should beget confidence for the future in that Almighty Being who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; whose ear is not heavy that it cannot hear, and whose hand is not shortened that he cannot save his people, and who would yet do greater things for them.

The believer, whose experience warrants him in saying, 'Hitherto hath the Lord helped me,' inwardly hears faith responding, 'He will never leave thee nor forsake thee.' One attainment leads on to another. One victory is the earnest of many more. He receives out of the fulness which is in Christ, and grace for grace. Ver. 6. Joshua next counsels the people to remember that all their success and prosperity would depend on their maintaining their allegiance to the Lord of hosts; on their entire renunciation of idolatry, and abhorrence even of the names of the false gods of the nations, and on their cleaving to the living God in love, and in trust, and unswerving obedience to all that had been commanded them. And if thus they took good heed unto themselves, they were assured of the presence of their divine protector, who would encourage their hearts, and strengthen their hands, and make them a terror to their foes in the day of battle, and go before them as their invincible leader.

The good soldier of Christ is constrained to sing, 'Blessed be the Lord, my strength, which teacheth my hands to war and my fingers to fight. My goodness and my fortress, my high tower and my deliverer, my shield and he in whom I trust: who subdueth my people under me.' But he knows that 'for all this God will be inquired of to do it for him.' Assured of the faithfulness of him that has promised, he holds fast the profession of his faith without wavering. He works out his salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which worketh in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure. For the Lord is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly. The blessing is found in the way of duty, and only there; and we are forbidden to expect the divine assistance, unless we walk with God in the loving observance of all his commands, and in self-denying renunciation of ourselves. 'The hand of the diligent maketh rich,' and none but his. Ver. 12. Having placed before them the consequences of obedience, Joshua now faithfully points out the consequences of transgression.

'Knowing the terrors of the Lord,' let us be persuaded to 'remember how we have received and heard, and hold fast and repent.' It becomes us to hear with solemn attention the words of Christ: 'Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.' We are surrounded by temptations on every side. Lord, deliver us from evil, and from all 'sin, that it may not grieve us;' and preserve us unto thy heavenly kingdom.

PRAYER.

O thou who dwellest in the high and holy place, whose name is holy, unto thee do we desire to lift up our souls in humble confidence and joy. We would draw near unto thee with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed as with pure water. We rejoice that Christ Jesus, by one offering, hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified, and that we have now boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the rent veil of his flesh. And we would now approach thee as the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ; as his God and our God, his Father and our Father. We have abundant grounds to bless thee, O our God, for the goodness and tender mercy which thou hast made to pass before us. Unnumbered blessings were ours, ere yet we knew the hand that conferred them. Thine eye has ever been over us, and we have been the objects of thine unceasing care and unmerited bounty. Hitherto hast thou helped us. Thanks, especially, be unto thee, for thine unspeakable gift. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us, that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us. Lord, grant unto us that we, being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, may serve thee without fear, in holiness and righteousness before thee, all the days of our life. Being redeemed with the precious blood of Christ Jesus, may we feel that we are not our own, and that we are under the tenderest and the most solemn obligations to live no longer to ourselves, but unto him who died for us and rose again. Enable us to glorify and serve thee with our souls and our bodies, which are thine. Let thy grace be sufficient for us; make perfect thy strength in our weakness. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. May we be animated and encouraged by the promises of thy blessed word; and may we stand in awe of thy judgments. Put thy fear in our hearts, and direct them into the love of God. May we at last receive the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls. Guide us by thy good counsel this day, and preserve us from all evil. Hear, Lord, in heaven, and send us an answer in peace, for the sake of Christ Jesus. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 8.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XVIII. 1—27.

REMARKS.

If we attentively consider the parable of the widow and the unjust judge, we shall find in it an argument for instant and importunate prayer, which is completely irresistible. The argument is from the lesser to the greater, like that employed in Matt. vii. 11. To perceive the force of it, we have only to contrast the character and situation of the parties. The judge neither feared God nor regarded man. He held in contempt all laws, human and divine. Neither equity, nor pity, nor fear, could move him. None, but the most hopeless and desperate, would venture to apply to him for the redress of their injuries. His client was a widow; an unprotected, helpless being. She was injured, and had no bribe to offer as a likely means of securing the favour of a judge who had proved himself to be insensible to every thing else. But her distress overcame her fear, and urged her to hope against hope, and kept up her heart under each successive repulse, until she fairly exhausted the patience of the judge, who, to get rid of her importunity, avenged her of her adversary. The conclusion to be drawn by us is obvious. If the unrighteous judge, who neither feared God nor revered man, was intreated, by the importunity of a poor, despised widow, to do her justice, how much more will a righteous and merciful God be intreated to relieve his dear children, whom he so loved that he gave his well-beloved Son to die for them; and with whose necessities he is perfectly acquainted, before they make them known. In wisdom, God may delay to answer the prayers of his elect; but they are not forgotten. He loves to be sought and waited on in prayer by his people; and 'he will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer.' O what encouragement have God's people to go, 'in full assurance of faith,' to the throne of grace; to 'pray without ceasing,' and not to be dejected, because deliverance does not come at the time and in the way they wish. Their Father hears, and will assuredly answer in his own good time, which is the best. In the parable of the pharisee and the publican, we have very clear and impressive directions regarding the duty of prayer. There is a natural tendency in the human heart to trust in its own righteousness. Even the most highly sanctified have frequent occasion to complain of its power. It is here depicted in all its hideousness, in the conduct of the self-righteous pharisee. In the conduct of the despised publican, again, we recognise the genuine pattern which Christians should imitate. Here was humility, and self-abasement, and entire renunciation of all self-merit. He was content to be thought a sinner, for he felt his unworthiness and guilt; and all he prays for is mercy. Our sole confidence must be in the free, unmerited mercy of our heavenly Father, through his Son Christ Jesus.

The incident of the little children brought to Christ, afforded occasion for a deeply important lesson. We must all become as little children, that is, be full of implicit, unquestioning confidence, loving attachment, docility, and openness to conviction before we can receive Christ, as 'the Lord our righteousness.' A dutiful child easily surrenders itself to the teaching and guidance of an affectionate parent. We must thus be 'born again,' else we shall never enter into a kingdom which is appointed for the 'meek,' the 'poor in spirit,' the 'pure in heart.' This is a 'hard saying' to the natural man, but it is the first lesson we receive in the school of Christ; and when once thoroughly learned, all the others become easy.

In the account of the ruler who came to Christ, ignorantly inquiring the way to eternal life, we are furnished with an exemplification of the absence of this childlike disposition. He came with all the pride and self-confidence of the natural man in full operation. He would be saved in his own way, and through his own endeavours. He could not comply with the terms which Christ proposed. His possessions were dear to him, and he could not surrender them, trusting to Christ for a recompence. He went away sorrowful. Self-renunciation and self-devotedness, are still the terms proposed to those who would enter into life. They must renounce all for the sake of Christ. They must know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

PRAYER.

Holy and heavenly Father, we come before thee this evening, adoring thee as the great fountain of life and happiness, the Creator and preserver of men. Thou art the eternal Jehovah, whose dwelling is in light unapproachable. Thou art of purer eyes than to look upon iniquity, the heavens are not clean in thy sight, and thou chargest thine angels with folly. How, then, shall man, who drinketh iniquity like water, come into thy presence, or take thy holy name in his lips. Our hearts, by natural and original corruption, are unclean and alienated from thee, and to our inherited sins we have added the burden of many actual transgressions. We have lived unmindful of the God who made us at first in his own image; we have lightly esteemed the Rock of our salvation; and we have grieved thy good Spirit by our impenitence. Thou hast nourished and brought us up as children, and we have rebelled against thee. We have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and are no more worthy to be called thy children. We rejoice in the encouragement given to thy children to confess their sins, and in the assurance that thou art faithful and just to forgive them, and to cleanse them from all unrighteousness. We might justly have been deprived of the privilege of prayer, as well as of our other privileges, for we have too much abused them. Thou hast invited us to ask that we may receive, and seek that we may find, and knock that it may be opened to us, but we have been cold, and careless, and dead, in spiritual duties. We have not been importunate in prayer, and therefore we have received little. Nor have we been humbled under a sense of our great unworthiness in thy sight. We have too often been actuated by the spirit of the pharisee, and have valued ourselves on our attainments in the life of grace. How little of the disposition of children and of the spirit of adoption do we entertain. O that our faith in thee were even as a grain of mustard seed, that we might be enabled to plead for its increase. O that thou wouldst teach us self-denial, deadness, and crucifixion to the world, and thorough devotedness to the cause of our blessed Redeemer. May we be enabled to give all diligence, and to add to our faith virtue, and knowledge, and temperance, and patience, and godliness, and brotherly-kindness, and charity; that these things being in us and abounding, we shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. We would humbly bless thee for all the unmerited mercies of the past week, and of this day; and we implore the pardon of all our sins of heart and life. We would commit ourselves, and all who are dear to us, to thy watchful care during the night. We pray for the spread of the gospel: let thy kingdom come in power and in glory. If thou art pleased to spare us, may we be sanctified for the duties of the Lord's-day, and receive from thee the preparation of the heart. Hear, O Lord, and when thou hearest, forgive, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SIXTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XLVIII. 10.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS XLVIII. XLIX.

REMARKS.

PSALM XLVIII. This psalm, originally composed as a song of praise, for some signal defeat of the enemies of Zion, has justly been viewed as bearing a secondary but infinitely more important application. Under the image of Jerusalem, the city of the great king, in which the power and majesty of Jehovah were displayed, is described the church of Christ; in which all fulness of the divine grace and power is manifested with peculiar splendour. God created all things by Jesus Christ, to the intent, that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God. In the church, then, founded on the rock of ages, and raised up for the admiring contemplation of the world, God is greatly to be feared and praised. Here, he discovers himself to his people in all his holiness, condescension and love. And the time is coming when it shall be literally true, that the church shall be the parent of joy and peace to the 'whole earth;' when there shall be but one sheepfold, as there is but one Shepherd. Against this church 'the gates of hell shall not prevail.' Christ loved it, and gave himself for it; and whoever 'touches it, touches the apple of his eye.' He has all power, and will protect it against the attacks of its foes; the ungodly may combine, infidels may rage, satan may raise up persecution; but terror and desolation shall come upon them all. Who shall contend with the Lord, and prosper? The hearts of the godly may be comforted, from all they have seen of the fulfilment of the 'sure word of prophecy,' and confidently anticipate the fulfilment of all that has been predicted as 'the glory of the latter day.' In this anticipation we should rejoice. Our fervent and daily prayer should be, 'Thy kingdom come. And as we are graciously permitted to be fellow-workers together with God, it becomes us well to ponder wherein the great strength of the church lies, that we may lend a helping-hand to the furtherance of its interests, that its invaluable blessings may not only be enjoyed by ourselves, but secured to the latest generation; relying, as we do, on the promise that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, 'is our God for ever and ever.' 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'

PSALM XLIX. The ways of providence, without the light of revelation, are often an inexplicable mystery. Judging from appearances, it would seem better to 'eat, drink, and be merry' with the worldly, than to suffer for righteousness' sake, with the pious and the poor. The psalmist, fully aware of the difficulties by which the theme is surrounded, shows the inefficacy of riches to preserve their possessor from the fate of fools, and of the meanest of the people. Riches and large possessions may confer temporal splendour and gratification upon those who are incapable of higher enjoyments; but death levels all distinctions, and throws bitter mockery upon all the grandeur, wealth, and honours of the world. Riches often prove a snare in life; they are of no service at death, and we cannot carry them hence. Ancient families disappear, their titles become extinct, their very memory is sunk in oblivion. And yet men will not be instructed; but generation after generation continues to pursue a shadow, by seeking permanent happiness in that, which, from its very nature, is incapable of filling the capacities of a soul, which is ethereal and immortal. When will men be wise!

But the righteous hath hope in his death; a hope that maketh not ashamed, and full of the coming glory of the resurrection morn. He may be persecuted by the wicked, and oppressed by poverty here; 'but through union with him who is 'the resurrection and the life,' he shall hereafter be raised in glory, to the possession of a kingdom which is undefiled and imperishable. The certainty of this may well enable him to 'possess his soul in patience.' Let us ever 'look to Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.'

PRAYER.

Our Father which art in heaven! we, thy humble worshippers, would approach thee, on this the morning of thy holy day, with the voice of thanksgiving and praise. This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will be glad and rejoice in it. May we be in the spirit, and find pleasure and profit in meditating on the things that belong to our peace; and may we become holier, better, and happier, in waiting upon the Lord, in the observance of religious ordinances. We would bear solemnly in mind, that on this day Christ the Lord arose from the dead, the first fruits of them that slept; that he, who was 1604 Feb 15 50

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. (Second Version.)

SCRIPTURE—PSALM L.

REMARKS.

crucified in weakness, was raised in power: for thou didst not leave his soul in hell, neither didst thou suffer thy holy One to see corruption. Triumphant over sin and death, the Redeemer ascended on high, leading captivity captive, receiving gifts for men, yea, for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them. And we rejoice that, though now at the right hand of the heavenly throne, he has not forgotten his faithful people on earth; and in faith we would receive his own blessed assurance, In my Father's house are many mansions; I go to prepare a place for you: and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also. I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. May we, through grace, feel the power of Christ's resurrection upon our own souls. Being risen with him, may we seek the things which are above. Forbid that our affections should be set on the perishing enjoyments of this world, when the best treasure of our hearts is in heaven, and our glorified Redeemer has ascended to prepare a place for us in his own kingdom; a place of rest and peace, where we shall see, and praise, and adore him for ever; a place of joy and everlasting fruition, where we shall love, and possess, and delight in him for ever. O that we had the wings of a dove, that we might escape from all the allurements and temptations of this vain and sinful world, and meditate, with unbroken tranquillity, on all that has been done for our souls' eternal interests. May he, who holds the seven stars in his right hand, be graciously present with all his faithful servants this day, to enable them rightly to divide the word of truth; and let thy light be sent forth along with the truth, to make it effectual for the great purposes of awakening, comforting, and edifying. Let the joy of the Lord be the strength of all his people. Make them all joyful in thy house of prayer. Give a portion in season to those who are laid on beds of languishing and sickness. Arouse and enlighten those who care for none of the things of thy sanctuary. And let the everlasting arms especially be around us, both this day, and all the days of our lives; and at last, may we be admitted into that temple whence there is no going out; for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

This psalm is to be viewed, primarily, as a solemn and sublime remonstrance on the part of Jehovah, with his covenanted people Israel, on account of their carnality of mind and wickedness of life, in which judgments, in case of impenitence, are threatened, and encouragements held out to lead them to repentance. The 'Mighty God' is represented as summoning the heavens and the earth to attend, while he pleaded with, and testified against, his people. The judgment is set, and the trial proceeds. The criminals are not charged with neglecting the external legal sacrifices, for in this respect they had been zealous above measure; but with trusting in them for acceptance with God, while they forgot the weightier matters of the law, to 'do justly, and love mercy, and walk humbly with their God.' They substituted a multitude of sacrifices, vain oblations, incense, new moons, sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, and appointed feasts, for purity, justice, and charity. Their hands, in the meanwhile, were full of cruelty, oppression and blood. They are reminded, that even the sacrifices which they offered by divine authority, had no intrinsic power to purify the soul, or any inherent value in the sight of God. The animals used in sacrifice were not their own, but God's, whose is the world and the fulness thereof; and who, had he so pleased, might have required 'every beast of the forest, and all the fowls of the mountains' to be devoted upon his altar. God, moreover, is a Spirit; and though man's life, from its infirmity and tendency to decay, requires continual sustenance; he, by whom the whole world is quickened, is infinitely exalted above all such creature-wants, and can regard with approbation, legal sacrifices only, because of the spiritual affections—the faith and love of those who offered them, in obedience to his will. They are further reminded of their gross violations of the divine law, in which course they had been emboldened through the abuse of the divine long-suffering; they are warned, that unless they repented, vengeance would come upon them, when there should be none found able to deliver; and finally, they are taught, that the acceptable worshipper must unite a spirit of humble sincere gratitude to a life of unspotted purity.

The best interpreters are agreed, that this psalm contains a clear prophetic announcement of events in gospel times, as well as a figurative description of the final judgment, when every man shall receive according to his works.

The promulgation of the law from Sinai was as the dawning of that light which shone forth gloriously from Zion, a light to lighten the Gentile world, and the glory of Israel; and the ruin that overtook the carnal unbelieving Jews, for their rejection of Messiah, in the destruction of their temple and nation, is to be viewed as an emblem of that more fearful ruin which will overtake all, who, trusting in their nominal Christianity and good works, do not come to God through the new and living way, to serve him in spirit and in truth. Professing Christians, whose conduct is inconsistent with their principles, have great need to remember, that, whatever may be the place and the honour they enjoy in the church now, there is a day coming when the mask shall be taken off, and their hypocrisy and wickedness shall be exposed before the universe. Let us 'not be deceived, for God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap. Let us not be weary in well-doing; for, in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.'

PRAYER.

Almighty, and all-blessed God! enable us to come before thee, on this the evening of thy holy day, with that reverential awe which becomes the creature addressing his Creator. May we be impressed by the thought that we have forfeited every claim upon thy bounty, and that by nature we are the children of wrath even as others. May we remember, in all our approaches to thy throne, that it is only through the sacrifice and merits of thine only and well-beloved Son, that we can offer up our supplications to a Being who to the wicked is a consuming fire; and that, as there is only one God, the hearer of prayer, so there is only one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. We bless thee that a way of access has been opened by the blood of the cross, by which guilty and ruined sinners can come, and ask mercy to pardon, and grace to help in the time of need; and that, though far from thee by nature, we are brought nigh, and reconciled, and adopted into thy family. Enable us, at this time, to look in faith to him whom our sins pierced, and mourn, as one mourneth for an only son, and be in bitterness, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. And do thou bring us to the fount of cleansing, that we may be sprinkled from all our filthiness, and all our idols. Wash us, and we shall be whiter than the snow. Create in us a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within us. May we win Christ, and be found in him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness which is of God by faith, that we may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. May we be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, putting on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the wicked one, and to cast down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and to bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. May we know the blessedness of that man whose transgression is forgiven, and unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. And may the love of Christ constrain us thus to judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead, and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them, and rose again. May we be enabled to evidence the reality of our faith, by the purity of our practice. May we daily put off the old man, with all his deeds. Whatsoever things are true, and honest, and just, and pure, and lovely, and of good report, if there be any virtue and any praise, on these things may we meditate, and these things may we do. And this one thing may we do, forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth to those things which are before, may we press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. We adore and bless thy name, heavenly Father, for the renewed opportunities granted us this day of waiting upon thee in the sanctuary. Seal good impressions on our hearts, confirm pious resolutions, and give unto us all more of thy Holy Spirit. Pardon our many sins and short-comings in all our duties. Greatly bless and prosper all the means employed for extending the boundaries of the Redeemer's kingdom. Let thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. We would commit ourselves, our relations and friends, to thy watchful care during the silent night. In life, and in death, and throughout eternity, may we ever be with thee. Lord, hear, forgive, and do to us and for us, more than we can ask, or even think, for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 165.

SCRIPTURE—JOSHUA XXIV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Of the truths implied or expressed in this chapter, the following may be specially noticed. Ver. 2—13. The mercies received from God, ought to be remembered and reviewed. As here, there are mentioned the call of Abraham, the legation of Moses, the emancipation of the Hebrews, their guidance through the wilderness, triumph over their foes, and final establishment in Canaan: so our souls should bless the Lord, and not forget any of his benefits. These mercies constitute a ground of appeal and an argument for obedience. Ver. 14. It were base ingratitude to withhold our service from him, who has done so much for us. Ver. 15. There ought to be no halting in our decision respecting religion. As there is no reasonable ground of hesitation between the competing claims of the masters who demand our obedience, so it is 'to-day' only that we are sure of an opportunity of making a choice. Ver. 14, 15. God will accept only a sincere, willing, undivided homage, one springing from a filial fear, rendered with an upright heart, and consecrated to him alone. We ought individually to form and avow the resolution of adhering in all circumstances to the service of God, and recommending it to others. Ver. 15. It were dastardly to conceal our principles; and the apostacy or hostility of others should excite us to greater boldness and decision. There is an intimate connection 'between personal and family religion. Ver. 15. When parents are pious, it will be their aim to teach also their 'house to serve the Lord.' There is an inveterate aversion in the human heart to the service of God. Ver. 19. It lies under a moral inability, in consequence of its corruption; which, so far from being an apology for disobedience, is itself exceeding sinful. Ver. 20—22. Those who bely their profession, and apostatise from God's service, are peculiarly criminal and condemnable. Ver. 26, 27. We ought faithfully to keep in remembrance the vows we have taken: and to beware of allowing our impressions to evaporate, and our resolutions to fail.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

On ourselves, let us now bring these truths to bear. Many and precious are the benefits which the Almighty has lavished on our ancestors, and on ourselves. Early in our land was the darkness of heathenism dispelled by the light of Christianity. Rapidly was the dominion of popery overthrown. Long have liberty, and peace, and plenty, had their abode among us. And, individually, what experience have we had of the kindness of our heavenly Father, in the bounties of his providence, and the riches of his grace! Well indeed may all that is within us be stirred up to bless his holy name. Surely the mercies of God ought to persuade us to present ourselves living sacrifices unto him, and the love of Christ to constrain us to live, not unto ourselves but unto him. And why should we halt between two opinions? We cannot say that it is evil to serve the Lord. Our consciences bear testimony that the reverse is true. And as there is no reason for hesitation, so there is no room for delay. But let us remember that our service, in order to its being acceptable, must be voluntary, sincere, and cordial. Nor should we be satisfied with aiming ourselves at the rendering of such a service. We should recommend it to others, and especially encourage one another in it, that so this house may enjoy the peculiar blessing of the God of Israel's families. And if our inability be manifested by every effort, let us thereby be urged to implore the promised influence of the Spirit.

PRAYER.

In coming into thy presence, O Lord, this morning, we would express our gratitude to thee for thine innumerable mercies. Though thou art a holy and jealous God, and we have done much to provoke thee to anger, yet thou hast loaded us daily with thy benefits. We have heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us what works thou didst in their days, in the times of old. So graciously hast thou defended, so abundantly prospered, and so richly privileged our land, that we may well say, thou hast not dealt so with any other people. And when we look back on all the way thou hast led us through the wilderness, we see reason at every step of our pilgrimage to set up our Ebenezer, and acknowledge, 'hitherto hath the Lord helped us.' Thanks be to thee for all thy gifts, but especially for thine unspeakable gift. Ever would we magnify thy name, because thou didst not spare thine own Son, but didst deliver him up, and didst, by his obedience unto death, make full provision for our salvation. Yet how ungratefully have we requited thee. We have not rendered again unto thee according to the benefits done unto us. We have been forgetful of thy loving kindness, and shamefully insensible to its claims. Yea, we have rebelled against thee, and have preferred the service of sin and satan to thy holy and blessed service. But still, O Lord, would we hope in thy mercy. Do thou graciously forgive our transgressions; and enable us to yield ourselves unreservedly to thee, as thy willing and faithful servants. Too long have we served other masters, but we would henceforth be for the Lord alone. Do thou by thy grace, for of ourselves we can do nothing, incline us to choose thee with our whole hearts as our God, and to consecrate all the talents thou hast given us to thy service and glory. Sprinkle clean water upon us, and we shall be clean from all our filthiness, and from all our idols do thou cleanse us; a new heart also do thou give us, and thy Spirit do thou put within us, that we may walk in thy statutes and keep thy judgments, and do them. O forbid that we should ever attempt to serve God and mammon. May we have courage to avow ourselves thy servants, whatever temptations we encounter, and whatever defections we witness. And in the exercise of Christian love, let us strive to advance the salvation of our brethren, and such especially as are near and dear to us. Grant, O God, a revival of family religion throughout the land. Let an altar be erected to thee in every dwelling: and let the young be trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Follow with thy blessing the holy services of yesterday. Let the impressions then made, be preserved and deepened; the resolutions then formed, be remembered and executed. May we spend this new day under a livelier sense of our obligations to thee. And O grant, that when we come to die, we may be found to have finished the work given us to do, and may obtain an abundant entrance into heaven. And all that we ask, is for Christ's sake. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XVIII. 28—43.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

In the first division of this portion of scripture, ver. 28—30. we are taught that men are prone to boast of their services, however trifling and imperfect. Some degree of self-complacency seems to have sprung up in the apostle's breast, as he contrasted his surrender of all he had for Christ, with the departure from him of the amiable ruler, who was required to part with his possessions: and thus is pride frequently cherished by an unwise comparison of ourselves with one another. We are taught also, that every service done to Christ, whatever sacrifice it may cost, shall be abundantly recompensed. A decided adherence to him may subject to severe trials, but an ample compensation is provided in the peace and hope which he imparts even on earth, and especially in the felicity he will bestow in heaven. In the second division, ver. 31—34. we have an illustration and evidence of the prescience, and fortitude, and generosity of Christ. His prescience appears in his clear prediction of the contumelious and cruel treatment he should experience, together with his resurrection: his fortitude, in his advancing steadfastly to that city which he knew would be the scene of his sufferings, and his announcing their approach without any indication of fear: his generosity also, in his willingly submitting to such abasement and agony, for the purpose of achieving man's redemption. The following truths, besides, are involved in the third division, ver. 35—43. Ver. 37. No tidings are comparable to the news of the Redeemer's coming. Ver. 38. Divine mercy is the source of every blessing. Ver. 39. Importunity and perseverance should characterize our prayers for deliverance. Ver. 39. Opposition is to be expected in making application to the Saviour. Ver. 40—42. Sooner or later the Lord will graciously listen to the cry for mercy. Ver. 42. Faith is the great instrument by which benefits are received from the hand of the Redeemer. Ver. 43. Obedience and praise ought to be the result of every interposition of providence or grace, in behalf of ourselves or others.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

What matter of thankfulness is there, in our being exempted from the fiery trials to which the apostles, and many of our ancestors, were exposed! The following of Christ, however, still demands the bearing of the cross. Yet well may every friend and object be parted with, that comes into competition with our love and duty to him: for what are they all, in comparison of the present blessedness and the future glory which he guarantees to his faithful disciples? How strong also are the claims which he has on our devoted homage! For our salvation, he submitted to all those bitter sufferings which issued in his death. And as the full prospect of these did not prevent him in heaven from undertaking our cause, nor on earth from prosecuting it, so he generously bore them all, that he might redeem us from ruin. Worthy therefore is he of all the love wherewith our hearts can glow, and all the service which our lives can render. But this we cannot yield of ourselves. We labour naturally under a blindness and poverty, far more distressing than the loss of eye-sight and the want of means. But Jesus is even now passing by, and will not disdain the cry for mercy. Let us, therefore, breaking through every entanglement, spread out our wants before him. And having received an answer to our petition, let us unite in magnifying his name, and following his footsteps, till we come to see his glory in the light of heaven.

PRAYER.

O Lord, our God, we would bow before thee this evening, with reverence and gratitude, for thou art infinitely worthy to be feared and praised. Thou hast made us capable of beholding thy glory in thy works; and whithersoever we turn our eyes, we see the manifestations of thy wisdom, and power, and goodness. In ourselves also, whom thou hast fearfully and wonderfully made, in the preservation of our bodily and mental powers, and in the countless comforts of our lot, we discern the striking tokens of thy benevolence. But especially, O Lord, do we behold the display of all thine attributes, and chiefly of thine infinite love, in the work of our redemption. When we call to mind, that thou didst send thine own Son into the world to be our substitute and surety, that by thy determinate counsel, though by wicked hands, he was subjected to every variety of suffering and sorrow, and that at length he was made a sacrifice for sin; our souls would magnify thee, and would celebrate the worthiness of the Lamb that was slain. And we would rejoice in the assurance, that he who was crucified is now enthroned, and that he who died to make atonement, ever liveth to make intercession. But alas! we are naturally insensible to this revelation of thy character. We are alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that is in us, because of the blindness of our hearts. And even after becoming disciples, our obedience is so partial and polluted, that we must confess ourselves unprofitable servants. Therefore would we implore thee to have mercy upon us. As thou didst at first command the light to shine out of darkness, do thou now shine in our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. Open our eyes, that we may behold wondrous things out of thy law: and in the marvellous light of the gospel, let us see the loveliness, and feel the preciousness, and experience the attraction of the Saviour. Make us willing to forfeit every friendship, and sacrifice every interest, rather than part from him. While we praise him for the benefits we receive, may we go after him in the course of holiness: and may his exceeding great and precious promises excite us to follow him through bad as well as good report. And grant, O God, that we may now experience the everlasting consolation and good hope through grace of thy people, and may be made meet in due time for the glory of heaven. Have compassion on those in other lands who are yet sitting in darkness, and those in our own, whom the God of this world hath blinded, so that they believe not. Have compassion also on the poor and afflicted: and make us willing, according to our ability, to relieve and comfort them. Watch over us during the night: and if raised up by thy providence on a new day, may it be spent in thy fear. O hear us for the sake of Jesus, to whom we would ascribe everlasting praise. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM CXIX. 57.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. A fearful time of reckoning for sin shall assuredly arrive. As the angel of the Lord, who was the Son of God, said to the Israelites, 'ye have not obeyed my voice, why have ye done this?' so will he at length, as judge, call all transgressors to account for their disobedience. Ver. 3. Iniquity uniformly entails punishment. By allowing the Canaanites to remain, the Israelites were tempted to sin, and subjected to suffering; and thus is disobedience always productive of misery here, while it exposes to the wrath of God for ever. Ver. 4. It is the design of the rebuke and chastisement which God administers, to bring to repentance. Ver. 5. There may be much profession of penitence, while the heart is still unchanged. The place where the people were rebuked was called 'Bochim,' or 'the weepers,' on account of the many tears they shed; yet their after conduct showed that there was but little of true repentance among them. Ver. 10—13. The most highly favoured are prone to forget the mercies of God and to fall into sin, so that nothing but divine grace can preserve those even who live in the midst of privilege. Ver. 14, 15. The apos-tacy of privileged professors is peculiarly offensive to God, and exposes to the inflictions of his hottest anger. Ver. 16, 18. God is rich in goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering; being unwilling to afflict, and ready to pardon and relieve. Again and again, as the Hebrew constitution made no provision for a permanent governor, did he raise up persons, called judges, who, in consequence of achieving some emancipation, were invested with the government, and became the destroyers of idolatry and promoters of religion, as well as deliverers of the state. Ver. 17, 19. Mankind are ever prone to abuse the divine patience—to forget the design, and efface the impressions of affliction, as soon as it is removed. Ver. 20—23. The incurring of God's anger involves the forfeiture of every privilege, and subjection to the power of our enemies.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

There is abundant reason for deep humiliation in the retrospect of our conduct. We have been the recipients of many mercies, but have not rendered again unto the Lord according to the benefits done unto us. Our consciences, responding to the charges of God's word, accuse us of innumerable and aggravated sins, while they forbid us to attempt our own vindication. So that well may we shed the tears of godly sorrow. And it is to reduce us to penitence, that we are rebuked and chastened of the Lord. He reproves us in his word, and afflicts us in his providence, to bring us back to him with the relents of the returning prodigal. Such repentance, however, only is genuine as is followed by a real and thorough reformation. We must justify our profession by bringing forth fruits meet for repentance. And let us remember that if it be otherwise, we expose ourselves pre-eminently to the wrath of God. He indeed may bear long with us, and still in compassion load us with his benefits; his goodness being designed, as well as his severity, to lead us to repentance. But if we refuse to 'cease from our own doings, and from our stubborn way,' what is to be expected but abandonment to all that is evil? Let us therefore seek the Lord with supplication and weeping; and, in dependence on his grace, join ourselves to him in a perpetual covenant, not to be forgotten.

PRAYER.

O thou, whose name alone is Jehovah, and who art most high over all the earth, we would rejoice in our privilege of worshipping thee. The gods which the heathens worship are dumb idols; they cannot hear or help their votaries. But thou art the living and the true God. Thou hast created the heavens and the earth. Thy kingdom ruleth over all, and what thou pleasest that thou doest in heaven, and on earth, and in all deep places. To thee also belong all perfection and excellence; and from thee are derived all goodness and blessedness. Unto thy name, therefore, alone would we render the humble tribute of our prayer and praise. And yet, O Lord, well may we be ashamed and blush to lift up our faces before thee. Thou hast nourished us and brought us up as children, but we have rebelled against thee. We have experienced the riches of thy goodness, and forbearance, and long-suffering, but we have thence taken occasion to sin against thee more heinously. We have forsaken thee, the fountain of living waters, and have hewn out unto ourselves broken cisterns that can hold no water. We are by nature sold under sin, yea, we have sold ourselves into the hands of our enemies; and the more we are tried by temptation, the more deceitful and wicked are our hearts proved to be. Surely it is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, and because his compassions fail not. O teach us, gracious God, to humble ourselves before thee, and to sorrow for our sins after a godly sort. Give us that godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, that needeth not to be repented of. May we know the evil and bitterness of sin; and under an apprehension of thy mercy in Christ Jesus, return to thee with our whole heart. And forbid, Lord, that our goodness should be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew, which soon goeth away. May we bring forth fruit meet for repentance, and daily grow in grace, and have our path as that of the just, be like the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Sensible of our own guilt and weakness, we would bless thee for that fulness of merit and grace which it hath pleased thee should dwell in Christ, and would entreat thee, for his sake, to forgive our manifold iniquities, and to enable us in time to come to do thy holy will. Surrounded as we are by spiritual enemies on every side, we beseech thee for thine effectual aid. May we ever fight the good fight of faith; may we overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and be more than conquerors through him that loved us. Have mercy, O Father, upon our brethren. Hear the groanings of the afflicted. Supply the wants of the needy. Redress the wrongs of the injured. And reveal thyself graciously to every mourning spirit. Grateful for thy watchfulness over us by night, we cast ourselves anew on thy care. Keep us in thy fear all the day long. And O be thou our present and everlasting portion, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XCVI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XIX. 1—27.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 2. The most unlikely persons are sometimes selected as monuments of the riches of divine mercy, and the power of divine grace. The office, and the wealth, and the character of Zaccheus, formed a three-fold barrier in the way of his conversion, yet was he effectually called. Ver. 3, 4. The mere indulgence of an idle curiosity has often been overruled for bringing sinners to the knowledge and belief of the truth. As the publican, having sought to see Jesus, under the influence of such a principle, was called: so many have been savingly arrested, while looking into the Bible, or attending the church from vain and even vicious motives. Ver. 5. The Lord knoweth them that are his. Zaccheus was noticed in the sycamore-tree, as Nathaniel was under the fig-tree. Ver. 7. The operations of divine grace are offensive to the self-conceited and self-righteous. Ver. 8. True repentance involves a change of character, and issues in a change of conduct. The penitent cannot fail to make restitution of what they have unjustly acquired, and to be addicted to charity towards the poor. Ver. 10. The grand design of Christ's advent is to save the lost: and that is, by nature, the character of all. Ver. 12, 13. In the parable, certain talents are committed to all, to be used in the service of Christ. Ver. 14. Men are naturally averse to his authority. They say by their deeds, if not with their tongues, 'We will not have this man to reign over us.' Ver. 15. A time of reckoning shall at length arrive. Jesus has gone to heaven, but he shall return as judge. Ver. 16—19. The services of Christians ought to be proportional to their advantages: and their rewards shall be proportionable to their services. Ver. 20—23. Mere slothfulness is as ruinous as positive rebellion. The idle servant was condemned as well as the avowed enemy. Ver. 24—26. All the excuses of sinners will at length appear futile. Their very pleas will be turned into matter of condemnation. Ver. 27. The destruction of the wicked is certain, and shall be tremendous.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

How blessed is that announcement from the lips of our Lord himself: 'the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.' Surely when our condition is so wretched and hopeless, as to be emphatically characterized by the term 'lost,' there ought to be no delay in our application to him. Difficulties indeed, and entanglements, there are in the way. But there is abundant encouragement also. Lost though we are, Jesus is seeking, as he is sufficient, to save us: and sinners though we are, he is willing to be our guest, and bless us with his fellowship. Let us therefore go where he may be seen, and 'receive him joyfully.' But be it remembered, that in accepting his salvation, all sin must be renounced, and a course of self-denial and sanctity begun. Talents have been committed to us by him, with the solemn charge, 'occupy till I come,' and it is not permitted us, either in avowed enmity to rebel against his government, or in hollow profession to be slothful and profitless; for in either case, we should entail his rebuke and wrath. Our talents ought to be laid out in diligent obedience to his authority, and habitual expectation of his speedy return. And if it be so, then, at his second advent, though our ability be from his grace, and our acceptance through his merit, we shall obtain a great reward. But alas! for the fate of others: for their excuses shall be vain, and their punishment dreadful, in 'that day.'

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, let us have access to thee at this time, through Jesus Christ, by the Spirit, and give us the sweet and satisfying privilege of fellowship while we call on thy name. We would now present ourselves living sacrifices unto thee, which is our reasonable service. From thee are all our talents derived. Thou hast bestowed on us many powers and privileges, many means and opportunities of usefulness. And blessed be thy name, that, as thou hast commanded us to lay them out in thy service, thou art a gracious Master, and requirest of us nothing which thou art not willing to enable us to perform. And yet alas! we have multiplied our iniquities against thee. We are sinners by nature and by practice. With our lives, if not with our lips, we have often said, 'we are our own, who is Lord over us?' and yielding to the temptations of the world, we have, instead of consecrating all thy gifts to thy glory, either openly rebelled, or secretly disobeyed. And in consequence, O Lord, we desire to feel that we are lost, deserving of thy wrath, and unable to redeem our souls from destruction. But we rejoice to know, that thy Son came to seek and to save such as we are: and that, having shed his precious blood, to open for us the way of salvation, his language still is, 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come into him, and sup with him, and he with me.' O help us then, we pray thee, to welcome Jesus into our hearts, in faith and love. May we receive him joyfully, and make him all our desire, that he may be all our salvation. May our dependence be alone on his finished righteousness. And grant, O God, that while we glory in his cross, we may bow to his sceptre. May we be willing to have him to reign over us. Whether it be little or much that we are intrusted with, may we have grace to be faithful: and instead of being wicked and slothful servants, let us occupy affectionately and diligently all the talents thou hast committed to us. We would keep in mind the second and glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ. To the time of his return may we daily look forward, and be giving diligence, that we may be found of the Lord in peace when he cometh. O do thou cause salvation to come to this house. May we all be interested in the everlasting covenant: and being united in the bonds of Christian love, be prepared for dwelling with our Saviour in heaven. And grant that thy kingdom may immediately appear, and speedily come over all the earth. Be our guardian by night as thou hast been by day. May our sleep be refreshing; and being raised up by thy good providence on a new morning, may our lives be devoted to thy service. Hear us in heaven, and exceed all our requests, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. 4. (Second Version.)

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES IV.

REMARKS.

During the life of Ehud, the Israelites had been, by his authority and example, in a great measure reclaimed and preserved from those sins to which they were so prone. His death was followed by their return to the open commission of evil. And national degeneracy was the precursor and the cause of national judgments. The judgments of God awakened the Israelites to a sense of their sinfulness, and excited them to pray to him in whose sight they had done evil, and who alone was able to deliver them from that state of oppression to which they had been subjected. Their cry was heard, and the Lord in his mercy raised up Deborah the prophetess, to be their instructor and judge. To her, the Lord made known his purpose to interpose for their deliverance. In effecting their deliverance, Barak was invested with the command of ten thousand men. In the district to which he was directed to lead the army, Heber the Kenite resided. And the statement that he 'had severed himself from the Kenites,' is a proof that the exhortation of Moses (Num. x. 29—32.) to Hobab, from whom Heber was a descendant, had been complied with, whilst the fact that the descendants of Hobab had increased in number, wealth and influence to such a degree, that their alliance was courted by the king of Canaan, demonstrates that the promise by which the exhortation was enforced, had been literally fulfilled. The movements and position of Barak and his army, having been announced to the captain of the host of the king of Canaan, the forces of the kingdom were marshalled. In the conflict that ensued, there was put forth, in behalf of the Israelites, a power which worldly men do not recognise in human affairs. 'The Lord discomfited Sisera and all his chariots, and all his host.' Sisera sought personal safety in flight. He was met by Jael the wife of Heber, who proffered him a refuge and treated him with hospitality, but afterwards slew him. Her conduct in putting him to death, is not to be ascribed to revenge, neither was it dictated exclusively, or chiefly, by patriotism. It was an act in accordance with the will of God; it was performed under the influence of a divine impulse, and it is expressly commended in scripture. Chap. vi. 24—27. In the death of Sisera by the hand of Jael, the announcement delivered at the commencement of the enterprise, which Barak was summoned to undertake, received its accomplishment.

The following truths are illustrated in this portion of sacred history, and are among the lessons which we ought to derive from it. 1. The death of men of eminent station, who adorned that station by their personal excellencies, and who repressed immorality by their authority and example, is a severe and public calamity. 2. When wickedness becomes general in a community, and immoralities are so prevalent as to constitute the national character, the Lord is provoked to send national judgments. 3. The infliction of wide-spread calamities, the depression of a state by its enemies and the ravages of war, are indications of God's displeasure. 4. Amidst all the judgments which God inflicts, he ever watches over his church, and seasonably interposes to call his people to repentance, by raising up his servants to instruct them. 5. In national conflicts, Jehovah, as the moral governor of nations, determines the issue. 6. God punishes the wicked who harden themselves against him, and who oppress his people. 7. The weakest instruments are made effective, when God employs them for executing his purposes.

PRAYER.

O Lord God of Israel, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth. Thy works are perfect, and thy ways are judgment. Thou art a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right art thou. But we, thy subjects, have rebelled against thee. In thy sight we have done evil. We have provoked thee, the holy One to anger. May the revelation of thy wrath against all unrighteousness and ungodliness of men, duly affect our consciences. May we, from thy judgments inflicted on thy people of old, and from the punishment of their oppressors, and from thy judgments with which at any time we or others are visited, learn righteousness. May the instructions addressed to us in thy word, be by us received and improved. Be merciful to our unrighteousness; our sins and iniquities do thou remember no more. Through the righteousness of the Redeemer may we be freely justified; by thy Spirit may we be sanctified. On the path of duty which thou hast prescribed, however difficult and arduous it may be, may we enter, and in it do thou enable us to persevere. Avert from us the judgments which we deserve. Protect us from the dangers which threaten us. In the spiritual conflicts to which thou dost call us, may we be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. May we, by thy grace, be made more than conquerors. Whilst for our personal salvation we pray, we would also present to thee our supplications for our country; that in it the wickedness of the wicked may come to an end, and that, by all classes of the community, the righteousness which exalteth a nation may be cultivated. In all nations may the word of truth be diffused and preached. May thy kingdom come. Vouchsafe to us, this day, thy blessing with all its enjoyments, thy direction in every duty, and thy grace to resist every temptation. May we walk by faith. May we ever live to thy glory. And all that we ask is in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXII. 11.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XIX. 28—48.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The fact mentioned in ver. 28. exemplifies the ardent benevolence and undaunted fortitude of Jesus Christ. He 'went before ascending to Jerusalem,' with the full knowledge of all that he was there to suffer. The incidents recorded in ver. 29—40. furnish proof of his Messiahship and divinity, inasmuch as he manifested supernatural knowledge, and as ancient prophecy received its fulfilment, whilst his reply to the pharisees in vindication of the homage paid to him, and the acclamations addressed to him by the multitude, distinctly intimate, that he was entitled to that homage; that he was in truth, the King whose praises the psalmist had celebrated; that notwithstanding the unbelief and the hostility to himself which were so prevalent, God would most assuredly establish his kingdom, and exalt his name, and that glory to God in the highest, and peace to man, would be the certain and blessed results of his reign. In ver. 41—44. our attention is directed to the deep and overpowering emotions which our Lord felt when he came near to Jerusalem and beheld it, and to the causes by which these intense emotions were produced. He knew the moral and spiritual condition of the Jewish people. He contemplated their impending and their fearful doom. The things belonging to their peace, their salvation, had been proclaimed to them and urged on their attention, but the Messiah, the Saviour, the Son of God, they had despised and rejected. They were about to crucify the Prince of peace, the King of glory. The measure of their iniquity was almost full. Temporal and spiritual judgments awaited them as a nation, whilst to eternal perdition every individual among them who did not believe in him as the Son of God, was exposed. In ver. 45. we are informed of the work of reformation in which Jesus zealously engaged when he entered the temple, and in ver. 46. he declares the ground on which he vindicated himself, and reproved and expelled those who desecrated the temple. 'It is written, My house is the house of prayer.' To the prosecution of the great objects of his mission, Jesus continued assiduously to devote himself; he taught daily in the temple. With malignity his enemies contemplated his conduct and heard his instructions, but for a time their wrath was restrained, and for a season all the people were very attentive to hear him.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

Let us admire and imitate the activity, the decision, and the fortitude of our Lord. Let the fulfilment of prophecy, and the proofs of divine knowledge and authority which he exhibited, confirm and invigorate our faith in him as the Son of God. Let us adore and praise him as the Anointed of the Lord, as the Prince of peace, as the Lord of glory. Let us consider the things that belong to our peace, in this the day of our merciful visitation, since those who neglect them shall finally be lost, lost irretrievably and eternally. Let us take warning from the guilt and the doom of the Jews, lest there be in any of us an evil heart of our unbelief. Let the penitent be encouraged by the tears of Jesus over Jerusalem, to look to him and to trust in him. Let us, when we are invited to the house of God, remember that the duties of the sanctuary are sacred and devotional. Thither let us repair, not only to be instructed, but also to pray. Daily let us be attentive to hear the voice of Christ, and let us follow him.

PRAYER.

O Lord, through Jesus Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life, we would this evening approach the throne of grace. O may we obtain mercy, and find grace to help us, in the time of need. Look upon us not as we are ourselves, but look upon us in the face of thine Anointed. May it be our privilege to joy in thee, through our Lord Jesus, by whom we have received reconciliation. We bless thee for the revelation of thy nature and thy perfections, in him who is the brightness of thy glory and the express image of thy person. And we pray, we may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent, whom to know is life eternal. In his mission into the world thou hast manifested thy love; for herein indeed is love, not that we loved thee, but that thou loved us, and gavest thy Son to be the propitiation for our sins. We thank thee for the proofs which we possess of the truth of his mission, of his qualifications as Mediator, of his tender compassion, of his matchless love. May the things which belong to our peace with thee, through him, engage our attention; with the blessings which he is exalted as a Prince and a Saviour to bestow, may we be enriched. To him we would render the tribute of homage, and gratitude, and obedience. Blessed be the King that came in the name of the Lord, peace in heaven, and glory in the highest. We desire that the blessings of his gospel may be universally disseminated. O may those that are his enemies be subdued. May those who are ignorant of him, be taught to know the truth as it is in him, and to esteem the knowledge of Jesus Christ as the excellency of knowledge. May those who have hitherto rejected him be persuaded to embrace him, and to glory in his cross. Have pity on the Jews, who, for their sins have been given up to spiritual blindness, and who have been subjected to all those judgments which the Saviour foretold. May the Gentiles submit themselves to him. In the efforts made by thy people for the accomplishment of these ends, may we feel a deep interest, and be enabled by thy grace actively to co-operate. In thy service may we ever be, like Jesus our master, devoted and zealous. In the perusal of thy word, and in the exercises of devotion may we ever delight. We commit ourselves and all who are near and dear to us to thy protection during the watches of the night. We pray for the continuance of thy goodness and mercy. We beseech thee to work in us all the good pleasure of thy goodness, and the work of faith with power, that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in us, and we in him, according to the grace of our God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. In his name we offer up these our petitions, and for his sake may we find acceptance in thy sight. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVI. 7.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES V.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The song which this chapter contains affords ample scope for literary disquisition, and we might expatiate on the excellency of the song as a poetical composition; on the truth and sublimity of the conceptions which it embodies; on the propriety and beauty of the figures which embellish it, and on the simplicity and energy of the language in which it is expressed. It is, however, the instruction which it conveys that principally demands our attention. In ver. 2, 3. the subject of the song is described. It is the victory which had been recently gained. And praise is ascribed to Jehovah, who had avenged Israel, and by whom the people had been constrained willingly to prosecute the enterprise which Deborah and Barak had undertaken. In ver. 4, 5. there is a brief notice of one of the most remarkable facts in the history of God's people, and of his interposition in their behalf. Num. xxi. 24—30. In ver. 6—8. we are informed of the depressed condition of the Israelites, preceding the period when Deborah judged them. Commercial intercourse was interrupted. To peril the traveller was exposed. The villages were depopulated. There were intestine divisions. There were the relaxation of military discipline, and the decay of military courage; and there were all the absurdities and impieties of idolatry. In ver. 9—13. the happy change effected under the administration of Deborah is delineated. The supremacy of lawful authority was restored. The pursuits of commerce were resumed. There was security throughout the land. There was the recognition of Jehovah's equity. There was obedience to his institutions. The obligations of Deborah and Barak to the goodness of Jehovah are gratefully acknowledged. In ver. 14—23. the circumstances accompanying the conflict, which terminated in the overthrow of the enemies of Israel, are rehearsed; the achievements of the tribes who had borne a part in the conflict are celebrated; whilst to dishonour and destruction those were doomed who had refused to bear a part in the enterprise to which Jehovah had summoned them. In ver. 24—27. a eulogium is pronounced on the heroine who had completed the victory, by slaying Sisera. In ver. 28—30. the solicitude and impatience of the mother of Sisera—her proud expectations, and her feminine weakness and vanity, are portrayed. In ver. 31. there is expressed an intense desire for the subjugation of the enemies of Jehovah, and for the prosperity and glory of his people.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

1. The wonders wrought of old by God in behalf of his people, should be remembered and recited to confirm and animate our faith. 2. In seasons of national depression and adversity, we should inquire into the causes on account of which such calamities are sent. 3. In seasons of national peace, and safety, and prosperity, God should be adored as the author of these mercies. 4. In the acknowledgment of God as the God of nations, all ranks and all classes of men should unite. 5. After the honour of being fellow-workers with God, in promoting social happiness and improvement, we should aspire. 6. The refusal to co-operate with God, in promoting the welfare of his people, and in advancing the honour of his name, is criminal, and shall certainly be punished. 7. The hopes of the enemies of God's church and people will be frustrated, and his sovereignty and equity will ever be upheld and maintained. 8. By feeling the power, and living under the influence of the truths and counsels contained in this song, the people of Israel had rest forty years, and by imitating their example, we will do what in us lies to secure our country's weal, and the peace, and prosperity, and extension of the church.

PRAYER.

O Lord, each day we rise we will praise thee. We would remember the wonderful works which thou hast wrought. Great and marvellous are all thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are all thy ways, O thou King of saints. Thy dealings towards thy church and people have been ever faithful and gracious. Thou didst show thy glory to the tribes of Israel, and didst publish to them thy statutes. Thou gavest them victory over their enemies. Thou didst put them in possession of the land of promise. Thou didst visit them with judgments when they chose new gods. Thou didst recover them from their backslidings, and didst constrain them willingly to engage in thy service, and didst teach them to rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord, even the righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages in Israel. To us also thou hast displayed thy glory; to us thou hast granted the privilege to read in our own tongue the wonderful works of God. Make us wise unto salvation. Our transgressions do thou forgive, for the sake of him who died the just for the unjust. Heal thou our backslidings. Make us thy people, and be thou our God. We are not our own, but thine; may we therefore glorify thee in our bodies and our spirits, which are thine. Teach us to remember our manifold obligations to thee. Our preservation up to the present day, proves to us that thou art long-suffering. Every moment we are indebted to thy bounty. All our religious advantages flow from thee. May we be ever grateful to thee, the God of our salvation. May we be preserved from the evil that is in the world. May we ever cultivate submission to thy will; may we grow in conformity to thine image. May Christ be found in us the hope of glory. May thy Spirit dwell in us, and being led by the Spirit, may we have the evidence in ourselves, and exhibit it to the world, that we are the sons of God. O Lord, may all ranks of men be made thy willing people in the day of thy power. May our princes, and our governors, and those that sit in judgment, praise the Lord. May all the people walk in thy statutes. May we be honoured to be fellow-workers with God, in extending the knowledge and promoting the influence of the gospel. Remove the obstacles that oppose its success. May those who enjoy it consider the curse pronounced in thy word against those who come not to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Let them that love thee be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might. O Lord, deny us not thy grace. Turn not away thy face from us, nor our prayer from thee. Let thy blessing be upon us continually. And all we ask is in the name of Jesus. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLI. 3.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XX. 1—26.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1. In this passage we are informed of the duty to which our Saviour devoted himself after his arrival at Jerusalem. Whilst engaged in this duty, a question was proposed to him by his enemies, in the answer to which they hoped they would either be furnished with a pretext for accusing him of illegal interference with the peculiar duties of the constituted authorities, or that he would make an avowal of claims which they were prepared to maintain involved blasphemy. They had been mortified by the homage which He had received from the multitude; they had been irritated as well as silenced by the reproof which he had delivered; they had witnessed, with bitter hostility, his conduct towards those that bought and sold in the temple, though they dared not to interrupt him, and therefore did they address to him the question in ver. 2. A direct answer to the inquiry Jesus did not return; and for this obvious reason, that he might frustrate their wicked design in proposing it, but he does in effect answer it; for the reply which should state truly the authority of John's baptism, would declare, at the same time, the authority by which our Lord acted. They, actuated by carnal and worldly motives, professed themselves unable to tell whence was the baptism of John, and Jesus therefore refused to gratify them by answering their unreasonable and insidious question. Evidence the most ample and conclusive to vindicate and establish his authority, he had already exhibited, and that evidence it became them to appreciate.

This incident exemplifies the pernicious influence of prejudice. Against it we should be on our guard. It proves to us that it is unreasonable to demand, in support of revelation, new and additional evidence, when that which is afforded is so abundant, courts our examination, and will ever produce a full conviction of the divine authority of Jesus on the mind of every man who examines it with attention, with candour, with a desire to know the truth, and with prayer to the God of truth. The parable contained in ver. 9—18. was suggested by the circumstances which had just occurred, and by a succession of incidents in which its representations were soon realized. The parable presents to our consideration the former and the then passing dealings of God with the Jewish nation. It predicts the consummation of the guilt of the Jews. It announces the punishment which should be inflicted on them. It declares that their privileges should be transferred to the Gentiles. And the parable is followed up by an intimation that in the events in which it was to be realized, ancient prophecy was also to receive its accomplishment.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The parable teaches us, 1. That our improvement, as individuals and as a church, should correspond with our privileges. 2. That our eternal salvation is connected with the sentiments we form respecting Christ, and the trust which we repose in him. 3. That the rejection of Jesus inevitably involves the unbeliever in interminable and unutterable woe. 4. That the hopes of wicked men, that the divine judgments shall not be inflicted on them, shall prove vain.

The sentiments which were awakened in the breasts of our Lord's enemies by the preceding parable, are exhibited to our contemplation, and the plans which they formed and prosecuted are narrated. In their conduct we behold insincerity, hypocrisy, and malignity. In the conduct of Jesus Christ we have new proofs of his intimate knowledge of what is in man, of the motives which actuate him, of the ends which he pursues; and we have additional illustrations of the wisdom which characterized all that Jesus uttered, and by which he disappointed and exposed the craftiness of his enemies. And we are taught what are the respective rights of God and of Caesar; that, when accurately understood, the duties which we owe to civil governors and the duties which we owe to God, do perfectly harmonize, and that we are bound, as Christians, in the faith and the obedience of the gospel, to have consciences void of offence both toward God and toward man.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we this evening bless thee for the protection of thy providence during the past day, and for the goodness which thou hast made to pass before us. Our short-comings in the discharge of the duties in which we have been engaged, we acknowledge. Our sins, in thought, and word, and deed, we confess. God be merciful to us sinners. Speak peace to us, and let us not again return to folly and to sin. Establish us in the faith of the gospel. May we be begotten again by the word of truth, that we may be a kind of first fruits of thy creatures. May we receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls. May we justly appreciate and carefully improve the privileges we enjoy. Thou didst of old speak unto the fathers by thy servants the prophets; in these last days thou hast spoken to us by thy Son. Forbid, O God, that we should neglect the great salvation of which he is author. We believe in him as the Son of God—the beloved of thee, the Father. O may we reverence him, may we love him, may we obey him, and may the lives which we live in the flesh be by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us and who gave himself for us. Out of his fulness may we receive grace for grace. May we be complete in him. Like him may we be holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. Through him may we have a title to the heavenly inheritance; and do thou, by thy word and Spirit, work in us a meetness for the possession and enjoyment of it. May we be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labour in the Lord shall not be in vain. We pray for the whole human family. May they be blessed in Jesus, and call him blessed. May all who rule over their fellow-men be just. May we, in our respective stations, render to all their due. To the varied circumstances of thy people accommodate the supplies of thy grace. Grant health to the sick, counsel to the perplexed, comfort to the sorrowful, and salvation to the dying. To thee, the Shepherd of Israel, who slumberest not nor sleepest, we commit ourselves and all our interests. Encompass us with thy favour as with a shield. May thy presence ever go with us, and finally may we obtain the rest which remaineth for thy people. And all that we ask is in the name of Jesus. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVII. 11—14.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES VI.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. The path of duty is the surest way to prosperity. That the Almighty ruleth among the children of men, is often affectingly demonstrated by the judgments with which their iniquities are visited in the present life. The case of Israel, as here recorded, affords an example of this. The cause here expressly assigned for the oppression of Israel by the Midianites, was sin. 'The children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord,' and therefore various calamities came upon them. These things are written for our learning. Ver. 7. In the midst of judgment, however, God remembers mercy. When Israel's cry of distress was raised, the Lord not only sent a prophet to reprove them, and to remind them that their rebellion against the God of their fathers was the cause of their present calamities, but also raised up a deliverer for them in the person of Gideon the son of Joash; so that we have, in this act of mercy, a farther confirmation of the doctrine that the path of duty is the surest way to prosperity; for, no sooner do the people, under the pressure of their calamities, return to God, and cry unto him, than the Lord appoints deliverance for them, ver. 14. Thus exhibiting to crying Israel, that view of the divine character which is so beautifully set forth in the words of the prophet, 'Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you: for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever.' Jer. iii. 12. In calling Gideon to the important enterprise of delivering Israel from the hand of the invading Midianites, God graciously condescends to inspire him with courage and confidence, by giving him signs of his presence and favour, according to Gideon's own request. It is condescension on the part of God to accept the imperfect services of his creatures, for our best services are defiled with sin; but when our offerings are accepted, and a gracious answer given to our prayers, it is a token of future mercies yet to be bestowed, and an encouragement to us to continue to seek the Lord. And, like Gideon, it becomes us, in entering upon any important undertaking, to seek counsel from God, and to endeavour to discover whether we have the approbation of God in it. These signs were asked by Gideon, in order to confirm his mind, in the full assurance that he was called by God, to take measures for expelling the Midianites from the land; and in these, and various other ways, did it please God, while yet the written revelation of his will was not completed, to intimate his will to man, and to encourage and assure their hearts in the path of duty. And although these ways of answering prayer, and giving us assurance of divine aid, be now discontinued, we are assured, by the unchanging word of the living God, that they who ask shall receive, and that he will be a very present help in the time of need, to all who call upon him.

What an interesting illustration does this passage of scripture afford at once of the judgments and of the mercy of God. His people sin, and are punished—they cry to him and are heard. They forsake the Lord and fall into trouble—they return to the Lord, and find that in him alone is their help. Let us ever remember, then, that the way of sin is the way of death, and that, as it is our duty constantly to serve the Lord, so with that duty is inseparably connected our own happiness.

PRAYER.

O Lord our God, we desire to feel that it is of thy mercy that we are permitted to behold the light of this morning, and again to draw near to thee in prayer. We are verily guilty in thy sight, and instead of being the children of many mercies, we might have been visited with the tokens of thine anger. We give thanks at the remembrance of thy mercy; and especially do we desire to bless thee for Jesus Christ the Son of thy love, through whom we have access unto thee; and we now pray thee, for his sake, to pardon all our sins, and to pass by our unnumbered transgressions. Teach us ever to bear in mind, that the way of the wicked shall not prosper, but that there is a great reward to them that keep thy law; for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. May our minds be habitually under the conviction, that it is in thee we live and move, and that it is by thee our lot is ordered in the world. Let us never forget our dependence upon thee, and do thou ever direct our steps. Surround us with thy favour as with a shield, and give thy holy angels charge concerning us, that our enemies may never obtain dominion over us. Make a hedge of protection about us, and our house, and all that we have round about, that no evil may befall us, nor any plague come nigh our dwelling. Amid the various pursuits and avocations of this life, may we never forget that one thing is needful, and may we make choice of that good part which will never be taken from us. Looking unto Jesus, may we renounce every other ground of confidence, and may he be made of thee, unto us, wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and complete redemption. May we be effectually called unto fellowship with him, so that having him formed in us the hope of glory, we may be daily growing up unto a meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light. Sanctify us wholly through thy truth, and may the word of Christ dwell in us richly in all wisdom. Beautify us with thine own likeness, and clothe us with thy salvation. Through faith in the blood of atonement, may our consciences be purged from dead works to serve the living God. O that Christ may indeed be precious unto us, as he is to all them that believe; and may we feel the constraining influence of his love in our hearts, sweetly drawing us to himself. And grant, that when the journey of life is over, our dwelling-place may be in thy house above for ever. Our friends and brethren we commend unto thee. May all who are connected with us, be interested in the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, and be kept by thy mighty power through faith unto eternal life. Increase the number of them who believe, and greatly extend the boundaries of the Redeemer's empire, in the increasing diffusion of the gospel. May all nations be blessed in Christ, and all people call him blessed. Let thy good providence watch over us this day, and may the outgoings of the morning and of the evening, be made to rejoice. Prosper us in our lawful affairs, and enrich all our temporal comforts with a blessing. Hear, O Lord, our humble prayer, forgive all our sins, and accept of our persons, through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXI.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XX. 27—47.

REMARKS.

The sadducees were a sect who denied the doctrine of the resurrection, and believed not in the existence of angels nor spirits. They therefore stood directly opposed to the teaching of Christ upon this point. They here bring forward a case which they seem to have thought well calculated to embarrass our Saviour in explaining this doctrine, if not altogether to disprove it. They propose for his consideration the case of a woman who had been married successively to seven brethren, and demand of him to show how the claims of these seven brethren were to be determined at the resurrection, and which of them would be acknowledged as her husband. Here, however, as in other cases, when questions of difficulty were proposed to him, our Lord showed his infinite superiority to all his opponents, and exhibited his perfect knowledge of the future as well as of the present condition of mankind. He shows that the ties by which mankind are connected here have no place in the world to come. In that glorious and happy world all are immortal. No man there dies, nor needs a successor. Ver. 34—36. The happiness of the redeemed shall arise from a purer and more permanent source, and their manner of life shall be like the angels in heaven. Ver. 37, 38. Our Lord having thus exposed the futility of this objection to the doctrine of a future state, next draws the attention of his hearers to the proof of this doctrine, which is afforded by the words of God himself, as recorded by Moses, saying, 'I am the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob.' These words were spoken long after these holy men had left this world, so that as God is not the God of the dead, but of the living, they must still have had a living existence, seeing God still called himself their God. Ver. 39, 40. These triumphant replies to the objections of the sadducees, produced a powerful impression upon the people, inasmuch that it is said the scribes and pharisees applauded him, and durst not ask him any more questions. Jesus then proposes to them a question relating to himself, which was well calculated to excite reflection, and also to show them that apparent contradictions are not always real ones, and that no doctrine is to be rashly rejected, merely because it may seem to be at variance with our views of consistency and truth. The Messiah was spoken of by the Jews as the son of David, because it was generally believed and admitted that he was to be descended from the family of David. And in the scriptures of the Old Testament, which the Jews themselves acknowledged, David himself speaks of Messiah as his Lord and Master. In proof of this, Jesus here quotes from Psalm cx., where David speaks of him as his Lord, sitting at the right hand of the Father. He therefore asks them how Messiah could be both the Lord and the son of David. This question, it is evident, could be answered satisfactorily only by admitting the pre-existence and divinity of the Messiah. For while, in his human nature, he was a son of David, inasmuch as he was descended of his line, he was at the same time, in his divine nature, not only David's Lord, but the Lord and Master of all men. The evangelist Matthew informs us that no man was able to answer him a word, (Matth. xxii. 46.) He then warns his disciples to beware of the scribes, who, while they made a vain show of religion, and were careful to perform outward acts of devotion, were actuated by a worldly and ambitious spirit, and sought chiefly the applause of men. Let the people of God rejoice in the blessed hope of eternal life in heaven, where earthly ties and earthly distinctions are unknown. This hope rests upon the sure foundation of the complete atonement and perfect righteousness of him who was David's Lord, and who, in his human nature, came of David's line. Let us cheerfully submit to his teaching, rejecting the cavils of unbelief. Serving him with meekness and fear, let us beware of imitating those who rest satisfied with a form of godliness while destitute of its power, seeking the applause of man rather than the praise of God.

PRAYER.

O most merciful God, we draw near to thee this evening, believing that thou art, and that thou art the bountiful rewarder of all those that truly seek thee. We give praise to thy holy name for the blessed hope of immortality through Jesus Christ, the resurrection and the life. O may this hope animate us to a faithful and vigorous prosecution of the Christian warfare, that we may, through grace, obtain the victory over sin and death. Ever looking unto Jesus, and relying on his grace, may we put far away from us all lying vanities, taking his word as the rule of our life, and seeking his Spirit as the sanctifier of our hearts. May we, without wavering, believe on him as the Messiah promised of old, who, in the fulness of time, came into the world in the likeness of sinful flesh, and put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. Through faith in his blood, may we receive the remission of our sins, and by his righteousness imputed unto us, may we be justified; and may our faith be productive of those fruits of holiness which are to thy praise and glory. Teach us ever to bear in mind, that the chief end of man is to glorify thee; and as it is not in man that walketh to direct his own steps, be thou graciously pleased to give us of thine own wherewith to serve thee. Make thy grace sufficient for us, and perfect thy strength in our weakness. Carry forward within us the good work of sanctification, until there be formed within us a perfect meetness for glory, honour, and immortality. In the recollection of all thy goodness to us this day, we desire now to offer up our thanksgiving. Thy good providence has watched over us, protecting us from unseen dangers, and loading us with unmerited mercies. And now that the shadows of evening have again closed over our dwelling, we beseech thee to spread over us the shelter of thy protection during the night watches. When we lay us down to sleep, do thou, O Lord, sustain us, and cause us to rest in safety. May we remember thee upon our beds, and may our reins instruct us in the night season. When we awake also, may we remember thee, and may we arise to praise thee. We desire also to bear upon our minds at the throne of grace, all our brethren of mankind. Bless the whole household of faith, and let the wicked be turned unto thee. Prosper the interests of the kingdom of Christ in every land, and give light to them who sit in darkness, and in the region and shadow of spiritual death. Let thy way be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let our native land be the object of thy peculiar care. In all our borders may there be peace, and in all our dwelling-places may there be presented unto thee the morning and the evening sacrifice. Prosper and protect the true church of Christ, and let thy blessing abide upon all who love her peace. Give consolation to the afflicted, and sanctify all their trials. Bless all dear to us, and connected with us; make them and us partakers of the fulness of Christ, and heirs of the inheritance that is above. Let our humble prayers find acceptance in thy sight, through Jesus Christ, our strength, and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XIX. 1—3.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES VII.

REMARKS.

This chapter begins with an account of Gideon's ready compliance with the call which he had received from God, to march against the Midianites. The Lord showed that success does not depend upon human strength. If the cause be the Lord's, one shall chase a thousand. He employs means for the accomplishment of his purposes, but the very inadequacy of the means in themselves to effect the ends intended, shows that their success is owing to the blessing of God himself. In the present instance, God designed to demonstrate to the Israelites that their rescue was not owing to themselves, but to his mercy, that they might not make it the subject of vain glory. Lest Gideon should be afraid to meet the enemy with so small a force, God encourages him in a very remarkable manner. He commands him to take a companion with him, and go down to the outside of the host of the Midianites during the night, and there listen to what he might hear amongst the enemy. Having gone down accordingly, the Lord so ordered it, that at the very time when Gideon and his companion were listening, there was near by the place where they stood, a man of the Midianites telling a dream to his fellow; which dream was, that he had seen a cake of barley bread come into their camp, and run against one of their tents, and overturn it. His fellow, to whom he told this dream, immediately interpreted it to signify the overthrow of their army by the hand of Gideon. This circumstance showed Gideon that the Midianites were afraid of him, and he regarded it as a token of his success. He therefore took courage and returned to his own men; engaged in the conflict, as God directed, and obtained a miraculous victory. In this account we may recognise a striking representation of the triumphs of the gospel, which, as preached by the ministers of religion, is as a light in earthen vessels, or a trumpet in the mouths of the Lord's servants, whereby the powers of darkness are discomfited, and the ranks of our spiritual enemies thrown into confusion. The wicked are often, like the Midianites, made the instruments of destroying one another. Mere sound will often frighten those who are engaged in an evil cause. God maketh the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things does he choose to confound the things that are mighty.

While thus we see the thousands of Midian flying at the sound of trumpets, may it not remind us of the terror and dismay which will seize upon the ungodly at the day of judgment, when the last trumpet shall sound, and when destruction shall come upon them without remedy? Let us take warning in time to flee from the wrath to come, and take shelter under the wings of divine love. The last trumpet will have no terrors to them who are in Christ Jesus, for to them there is no condemnation. The sound which will be to the enemies of the Saviour the knell of everlasting death, will be to his ransomed ones the note of triumph, and the call to everlasting gladness.

PRAYER.

O Lord God of hosts, who is like unto thee among the gods; who among the sons of the mighty can be compared unto our God? Thou rulest supreme among the armies of heaven, and doest according to thy will among the children of men. None can stay thy hand from working, or say unto thee, with efficacious voice, What doest thou? Thy people of old, when they trusted in thee, were not put to shame. In the day of battle, thou didst make them strong, and with the breath of thy mouth thou didst scatter the enemy. We desire to give thanks for all the deliverances which thou didst work out for our fathers in former generations, and we rejoice in the assurance therein conveyed to us, their children, that thou wilt be a very present help in the time of trouble. O teach us ever to make thee our confidence, and to bear in mind that while they who are far from thee shall perish, peace shall be the portion of those that seek thee. Convince us of sin, which is the cause of our misery, and lead us to the blood of sprinkling which cleanseth us from all sin. Through faith in the blood of the cross may we be purged from dead works; and may we present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service. Let us not be conformed to this world, but may we be transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we may prove what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. Neither let us think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, but soberly, according to the measure of faith. Seeing we are not our own, but bought with a price, even with the precious blood of Christ, may we not live unto ourselves, but unto him who died and rose again. May our souls be purified in obeying the truth through the Spirit, and may it be as our meat and drink to do thy holy will. We give thee praise for the rest which thou hast given us during the night, and for the circumstances of peace and comfort in which we have beheld the light of the morning. O let us never forget that sleep is a blessing for which we are indebted to thee, and that when we awake in the morning, it is because thou sustainest us. May thy gracious hand lead us this day, that we may not swerve from thy commandments. While prosecuting the business of life, may we never let go our integrity, that our hearts may not reproach us so long as we live. May we ever be just and kind to all about us, loving our brethren with pure hearts, fervently. And when the business of the day is over, and we have again assembled together in our peaceful dwelling, may we encompass the family altar, and present unto thee the evening sacrifice, committing ourselves anew to thy gracious protection. We commend to thy care all our friends and relations. Protect them by thy power, and give them their portion with thy chosen and sanctified ones. Forgive our enemies, and dispose us heartily to forgive all who may be unkind to us. Give thy consolations to the sorrowful, and revive the hopes of the contrite and the desponding. Spare useful lives, and take the dying to thyself. All our interests, temporal and spiritual, we commend unto thee; undertake for us in all our undertakings. Be our God and our guide, even unto death, and our portion for ever, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xxxvii. 21—24.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE xxi.

REMARKS.

We are here taught that no man's benevolence is to be estimated by the amount of his giving. A poor man may be a far more charitable and benevolent person than a rich man. He cannot, indeed, give so much as the rich, but he may have a far more hearty and generous desire to give. And therefore his little donation to a needy brother or to the service of God, may be far more highly valued by Christ, than the larger contribution of the rich man. God estimates not the sum, but the principle which prompts its bestowment. The poor widow who only gave one mite, is here noticed by our Lord, and pointed out by him as having exceeded the rich who, out of their abundance, had cast into the treasury. While this is an encouragement to the poor to serve the Lord with cheerful minds, although with small gifts, it ought to be felt as a severe rebuke to those who cannot part with their money for religion and for God, but with a grumble and a grudge. In what way can we so honourably or so profitably lay out our substance as by lending it to the Lord, providing for our needy brethren, or promoting the cause of the gospel? See remarks on Matt. xxiv., which refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. We may here observe how striking is the representation given of the consternation and dismay by which the inhabitants of that devoted city were to be overwhelmed. And how awfully significant is this representation, when applied to the manifestation of Almighty power, at the end of the world, when these signs shall proclaim the consummation of all things, and when the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Such forewarnings are well calculated to impress the mind, and to fill the conscience with a salutary dread of the Almighty's power. Accordingly, our Lord exhorts them to take heed to those things, that they might thereby be stirred up to diligent preparation. While the intimations of this destruction, given by our Lord, left all without excuse, the assurances with which it was accompanied, of all needful support and consolation to his own people, were designed to fortify their minds in the prospect of trial. And as the things which were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope, the grounds of confidence here set forth shall be cause of assurance and hope to believers in every age of the church. Let the people of God rest assured, that whatever tumults or commotions they may witness among the nations of the earth, or whatever trials they may be destined to pass through, they shall never cease to be the objects of their Saviour's love, and shall at last lift up their heads with joy. The Lord knoweth how to deliver his people out of temptation.

PRAYER.

O thou who dwellest in the heavens, and whose kingdom ruleth over all, who shall not fear thee and glorify thy name, for thou only art holy? With humility and godly fear we desire to think of thy greatness and of thy glorious excellency; and with shame and contrition we acknowledge that we have sinned against thy divine majesty. Justly mightest thou write bitter things against us in thine anger. We confess that we have often neglected duty, and often been unthankful for mercies. We draw near to thee in the all-prevailing name of our gracious Redeemer, beseeching thee to have mercy upon our unrighteousness, and to purge away all our sin. O may we ever be enabled to look by faith to the blood of the cross, and to build upon the sure foundation which thou hast laid in Zion. May the blessings of the covenant be applied to us by the Spirit, and our souls sealed to the day of redemption. And as we know not in what hour the Son of man cometh, may we be ever watching. Considering that the time is short, may we number our days, and apply our hearts to wisdom. If in our future pilgrimage, trials should be appointed to us, may we experience thy promised consolations. And seeing we are pilgrims and strangers here below, may we ever look forward to the appearing of the great God and our Saviour, believing that our redemption draweth nigh. May the solemnizing conviction that these heavens and this earth shall pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat, and that all kindreds and nations of the world shall be assembled to judgment, stimulate us to fidelity and zeal in thy service, and to unwearied preparation for the coming of our Lord. Grant, most gracious God, that when that solemn day shall come, we may meet our Redeemer with joy, and be welcomed by him into the paradise above. We pray that all our friends and kindred may be interested in the great salvation, and may be preserved by thy mighty power, through faith, unto eternal life. May the sick and the sorrowful be the objects of thy tender care and divine compassion. May the afflictions of the afflicted be sanctified, and may the sorrows of the sorrowful be exchanged for joy. May such as are drawing near to death be prepared for a happy eternity. In the solemn prospect of death, may they be enabled to commit their spirits into the hands of the divine Redeemer, in the blissful hope of that crown of life which he will bestow upon all his faithful followers. We desire to offer up our thanksgiving for all our family comforts. Thou art giving us day by day our daily bread, and year by year our annual supply. Thou hast instituted those endearing relationships whereby we are made helpers and comforters to one another in this vale of tears. O may we never forget to offer up to thee the incense of our thankfulness. Thy kind providence has watched over us this day, and made our going out and our coming in to be in peace. We commit ourselves to thy fatherly care and guardianship through the night watches. May we enjoy quiet and refreshing sleep. Bring us to the light of thy holy day in health of body and soundness of mind, and prepare us for the services of thy house of prayer. May we keep thy day holy, accounting it the holy of the Lord, and honourable. And in thy great mercy fit us for the purer services of thy temple above, through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

SEVENTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXXX.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM LI.

REMARKS.

This is the psalm of a believer who has fallen into sin, and is seeking, with all his heart, new peace and new holiness. If any that know the Saviour, have fallen into sin and darkness, you will find here the only way of return. May the Spirit write it in our hearts. In the very first verse, observe the only thing that draws the soul to seek the face of God; it is 'the loving-kindness of God, the multitude of his tender mercies.' It is a look at Calvary; a sight of the face of Jesus which alone can draw our backslidden heart to cry, 'Have mercy upon me.' But looking unto Jesus makes the soul feel the sinfulness of sin. Ver. 3—5. O what a depth of contrition is here expressed! What a sense of infinite unworthiness; what self-abhorrence is here! Have we ever experienced these feelings? An unawakened heart will never confess sin; but when Christ is really revealed to the soul, he cries, 'I acknowledge my transgressions.' Our sin then appears like a huge dark cloud, or like mountains of division between us and God: 'My sin is ever before me.' And herein the exceeding sinfulness of sin appears; it is done against God! The believer was in the love of God; how basely he has left it. The blood of Emmanuel spoke peace to his conscience; he has trampled it under foot. The Holy Spirit dwelt in him; he has vexed the Holy Spirit: 'Against thee, thee only, have I sinned.' Nothing but this stops the mouth, and makes us feel worthy of hell. And whence did this sin come? 'Out of the heart.' And how came I by such a heart? 'Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me.' This is the very depth of self-loathing. None have felt it but God's children. May the Spirit open up these fountains of godly sorrow in our hearts this morning. But if we are sitting within sight of the cross, we will not be contented with merely loathing ourselves. We will seek complete forgiveness and new holiness. Ver. 6—12. Looking to the blood of the Lamb, the divine surety who died for the ungodly, we will say, 'Purge me.' Remembering how often the record that God hath given concerning his Son, has been sweetest music to our soul in time past, calming our troubled hearts, we cry, 'Make me to hear joy and gladness.' What complete forgiveness is demanded in ver. 9. 'Blot out all mine iniquities.' But will the soul that looks to Jesus be content with forgiveness only? No; he will pray, 'Create in me a clean heart.' O we must be created again if we are to be kept from sin. It is not good resolutions, or promises, or education, that will keep our soul from sin. We must be new created, renewed, born again. To be in the presence of God, and to have his Holy Spirit dwelling in us, make up the chief joy of which we are capable in this world. To be in God, and God in us, the smile of our Father in heaven, and the upholding of the indwelling Comforter on earth; O let us pray for these things. What a change forgiveness and a new heart make in our conduct toward the world. Ver. 13—17. 1. We love to lead others to the same blessedness: 'Then will I teach transgressors thy ways.' O who can invite sinners so willingly as one who has been himself forgiven. May all ministers of the gospel plead in this spirit this day. 2. We love to sing aloud of his righteousness. The righteousness of Jesus is indeed altogether lovely, and we should express our admiration and our joy, by singing praises. Our lips have been long sealed in divine things. O if God has opened them let us show forth his praises; yet meekly remembering our sin, with a broken and contrite heart. 3. We love Zion. The world care not for the affliction of Joseph. But if we have been brought to peace and holiness, we must pray: 'Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion.' O for the time when the sabbath shall dawn on every dwelling in our land, and on every shore of our world.

PRAYER.

Our Father which art in heaven, we thank thee for the quiet rest of the past night, and the mercies of the present morning. But far more we bless thee for the wonders thou hast done for our souls. We acknowledge our transgressions, O give us to feel the infinite weight of them, the infinite vileness of them. Against thee, thee only, have we sinned; against thee, our heavenly Father; we have sinned against thee, O Saviour, in counting thy blood an unholy thing; we have sinned against thee, O Holy Spirit. We cannot justify ourselves. Ever since we were born, we have been hell-deserving in thy sight. Behold we were shapen in iniquity, and in sin did our mother conceive us. But we know that there is forgiveness with thee; we know that thy glorious Son died for the ungodly, and we remember how he said, Look unto me all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved. Lord, we look to Jesus, may we be saved. Wash us in his blood, and we shall be whiter than snow. Make us to hear this day joy and gladness, that our broken bones may rejoice. Thou that didst open the heart of Lydia, open our hearts to attend to the things that are spoken. May we feel this day that our sins are forgiven us, for his name's sake. Hide thy face from our sins, and blot out all our iniquities. And now, O Lord, if thou hast forgiven us, if we are indeed in the light of thy countenance, if thy servants have found favour in thy sight, give us a token for good; make us new creatures. We are the clay, and thou art our potter, for we are all the work of thy hand. Create in us a clean heart. We have no confidence in ourselves. Thou alone art able to keep us from falling. Cast us not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from us. Restore unto us the joy of thy salvation, and uphold us with thy free Spirit. Grant, O Lord, that we may this day feel forgiveness so sweet, and be so filled with the Holy Ghost, that we shall teach transgressors thy ways, and that sinners may be converted unto thee. Especially we pray, that all thy faithful servants in the ministry, may this day speak because they believe. Lord, take them into thy council, fill them with thy Spirit. Let them come behind in no gift, and may they speak the word boldly as they ought to speak. May our souls be refreshed, quickened, edified. May weary sinners be led to Jesus, and to rest, and may sinners this day be converted unto thee. Help us to sing anew of thy righteousness. Open our lips, and our mouth shall show forth thy praise. Help us to offer thee a broken spirit. May we never open our mouth any more but in praises, because thou hast been pacified toward us. Remember thine ancient people the Jews. Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion. Fulfil all thy rich promises to them. Build thou the walls of Jerusalem. May Christ be preached this day in every land. Give testimony to the word of thy grace. And may his glorious name be blessed for ever. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Then shall our prayers be ended, and our praises be begun for eternity. Unto him who alone is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think; unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

23 April 1857

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LIV. 4.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LII. LIII. LIV.

REMARKS.

In PSALM LII. ver. 1—4. we have a vivid description of the Christless soul, or perhaps, as some think, of antichrist—the man of sin. He not only sins, but boasts of his sin, so that he is a monument of God's long-suffering. His tongue is crafty and cutting like a razor, wounding deeply with but a small movement. Like animals that devour all they meet, so his tongue spares none. Surely even now there are many antichrists; this is the natural character of us all. Ver. 5. But mark his doom! the expression is tripled to show the sureness and dreadfulness of it. He shall be like a tree uprooted and carried away by the whirlwind. Jude repeats this awful sentence, 'trees without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots.' Ver. 6. Who will be witnesses of their fall? 'The righteous shall see.' Like Abram looking towards Sodom; like Moses and the Israelites, looking back on the Egyptians drowned, so Christ's people shall see the destruction of antichrist, and of all unbelievers. A dreadful joy shall fill their breasts; we do not know the feeling now. May we be among them that shall see, and fear, and laugh with holy joy. Ver. 7—9. Mark the song of the righteous. Are we planted in the house of God? Once we were like wild trees in the wilderness. Have we been transplanted by a divine hand? Are we green—fresh—full of the Spirit? Such only will join the song of Moses and the Lamb.

PSALM LIII. ver. 1. also begins with a description of the Christless soul. He is a fool; this will yet be seen before an assembled universe; he wishes that there were no God; he says it in his heart: this is our natural condition. Ver. 2. But who can tell this; who can see our hearts? God can. 'God looked down.' O what a sight meets his holy eye every moment. Read what he says (ver. 3, 4.) he sees a universal back-going from God and holiness—a complete pollution, not an individual answering the end of his being; a senseless opposition of his people; they think no more of destroying them than of eating bread, like Joseph's brethren when they put their brother into the pit, or like the Persian king and Haman. (Est. iii. 15.) This word should teach us that we are 'all under sin,' 'that every mouth must be stopped, and all the world stand guilty before God.' But the psalm changes (ver. 5.), God will yet appear in behalf of his own people. Terrible will be the destruction of their enemies. O let us long for the time when God's ancient Israel, and all God's people, shall be gathered into one; when there shall be one Shepherd, and one sheepfold.

In PSALM LIV. ver. 1—3. the suffering Saviour, or one of his suffering members, prays. Persecution will be our lot if we are Christ's, and prayer will be our relief. Selah marks a pause; he waits for an answer; he prays and looks up. If we would pray aright, we should have many Selahs. Ver. 4. We have a burst of joy; amazed at God's answering so suddenly, he cries, 'Behold! God is mine helper.' O how little we believe that God does answer prayer.

Learn how blessed it is to uphold the soul of a fainting disciple; how dreadful to be opposed to one of these little ones. The psalm concludes with praise for the help given. In every thing we should give thanks; we should do this freely, not grudgingly, but willingly; generously, of a ready mind, with this free spirit, for God loveth a cheerful giver.

PRAYER.

O most blessed God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; let our prayer come before thee like incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the evening sacrifice. When the shades of evening draw close around us, do thou, by thy blessed Spirit, draw near and make thine abode with us, for the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Deal bountifully with thy servants, that we may live and keep thy word. Open our eyes, that we may see wondrous things out of thy law. How truly thy word which we have read, describes the condition of every one of us as we are in ourselves. O Lord, thou knowest what is in man. O Lord, convince us of sin; may we never open our mouth to defend ourselves any more. May we stand guilty before thee, for in thy sight there shall no flesh living be justified. If thou wert to deal with us as we are in ourselves, thou wouldst destroy us for ever; thou wouldst root us out of the land of the living, thou wouldst cut us off in thy truth. But thou hast not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities; we flee to the refuge which thou hast provided for the ungodly, we would lay our hands upon the head of the divine Lamb, we would take him as our surety. Lord, increase our faith. To us who believe, make Christ still more precious. May he be the desire of our hearts, fairer to us than the children of men, the chief among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. Enable us to cleave to him with full purpose of heart. May we be filled this night with joy, and with the Holy Ghost. We pray to be made holy. Into thy hand we commend our spirits; thou hast redeemed us, Lord God of truth. Purify us unto thyself a peculiar family, zealous of good works. Make our heart like a well watered garden. Take out every root of bitterness. Implant every grace in us; make us like a green olive tree in the house of God. May thy Spirit dwell in us, and may we be filled with all the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ, unto thy praise and glory. Help us not to be afraid of our enemies; we know that if we live godly in the world, we must suffer persecution. Enable us to say, Behold, God is mine helper, the Lord is with them that uphold my soul. Help us to praise thee for all that thou hast done for our souls. Follow the services of this holy day with thy blessing, which maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow. May the Spirit be given us as on the day of Pentecost. May many be pricked in their hearts, and this night asking the way to Zion, with their face thitherward. May thy children be filled with peace, and with thy Holy Spirit. O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion; may Israel, through our mercy, speedily obtain mercy. May they be like a dew from the Lord, in the midst of many peoples. Thy kingdom come. Keep us looking for that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of him, who is the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ. May we be among those that shall be made like him, for we shall see him as he is. Give us this night the sleep of thy beloved, watch over our dwelling, help our dear friends, comfort all that mourn, and let peace be upon Israel. May the words of our mouth, and the meditations of our heart, be acceptable with thee, through Jesus Christ our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 33.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES IX.

REMARKS.

We have here a most instructive history. Though all but Jotham seem to have been ungodly persons, yet we may learn many lessons from them. The two last verses form the moral of the whole, namely, that God will render a recompense to the wicked. Abimelech was a vain and godless youth. This is plain; 1. From his name; it means 'My Father is King.' He was a concubine's son, and yet he assumes this title probably through vanity. How foolish is family pride; what a mark of our fallen nature! 2. From his craft and falsehood, ver. 2. He insinuates that all Gideon's sons wanted to reign over Israel, whereas it is likely they were of Gideon's mind, viii. 23. 3. From his idolatry. 'They gave him silver out of the house of Baal-berith.' 4. From his companions; 'vain and light persons.' A man is known by his company. We should be companions of all them that fear God. 5. From his cruelty in killing his brethren. The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.

It is pleasant to turn to Jotham. He alone escaped, when his brothers were murdered, and seems to have been a very remarkable person. 1. Of great courage. When the whole multitude were making Abimelech king, he stood upon the top of the hill that overlooks Shechem, and fearlessly upbraided them with their ingratitude. We should add to our faith, courage. 2. Of remarkable parts. His parable is the most ancient, and one of the most beautiful, ever composed. We should pray for both grace and gifts. 3. Under the guidance of God; for he declares prophetically that fire would come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem. And yet he had to run away and hide himself. If we be God's children, we must suffer persecution. This world is not our rest.

Ver. 22. Abimelech reigned three years in peace. God waited three years to see if this barren fig-tree would bear fruit; but he found none. The Spirit strives long with men, but not always. At the end of that time, God stirred up rebellion in Shechem. He raised up Gaal the son of Ebed, 'the son of a slave,' to oppose Abimelech. 'Here was one bram-ble contesting with another; we should look upon war as one of the arrows of God's bow.

In the destruction of the Shechemites, see how God fulfils his word. His eye did not pity, neither did he spare. The fire came out of the bramble, and devoured the cedars of Lebanon. Let us believe the threatenings of God. He will fulfill all his word.

In the death of Abimelech, let us see the end of wicked men. 'A woman cast a piece of a mill-stone upon his head, and all to break his skull.' Did he spend his last moments in seeking pardon and peace with God? Does he cry out, What must I do to be saved? no: his last word is to his armour-bearer, 'Draw thy sword and slay me, that men say not of me, A woman slew him.' Alas, and is this all? He saved his honour, but he lost his soul! 'What shall it profit us if we gain the whole world, and lose our own soul?'

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art light, and in thee there is no darkness at all. If we say we have fellowship with thee and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth. Help us to walk in the light, as thou art in the light, and then we shall have fellowship with thee, and the blood of Jesus Christ thy Son cleanseth us from sin. We praise thee for all thy care of us ever since we had a being. How precious are thy thoughts unto us, O God; how great is the sum of them. If we should count them, they are more in number than the sand; when we awake we are still with thee. But far more we praise thee for the unspeakable gifts of thy grace. Thou hast loved us with an everlasting love, and therefore, with loving-kindness hast thou drawn us. We praise thee for thy holy sabbath day. If any secure sinners have been awakened to cry, God be merciful to me a sinner, thy holy name be praised. If any afflicted soul, tempest-tossed and not comforted, has been brought to rest on the finished work of Emmanuel, thy holy name be praised. If any of thy dear children have been brought to know more of Jesus, to receive more of the Comforter, to walk more closely with thee, thy holy name be praised. For all the light, and peace, and quickening, which our souls have received out of thy law, we bless thy holy name. We will never forget thy precepts, for with them thou hast quickened us. We praise thee for thy holy word which we have read this morning. We know that whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures, may have hope. Make this scripture profitable to us for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and instruction in righteousness. Grant, O Lord, that we, being united to the Lord Jesus, and receiving daily supplies of thy Holy Spirit, may be renewed in the spirit of our minds. Make us partakers of the divine nature, that we may escape the corruption that is in the world through lust. Free us from the sins of Abimelech, for they are the very sins of our natural heart. Turn away our eyes from beholding vanity, and quicken us in thy way. Remove from us the way of lying, and grant us thy law graciously. Hide that word of thine in our hearts, Lie not one to another, for ye are members one of another. Make us companions of all them that fear thee, and keep thy precepts; may we know that we are passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. Make us merciful, as our Father in heaven is merciful, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as thou for Christ's sake hast forgiven us. Put into our hearts all the graces that were in the heart of Jotham. Make us bold in thy cause. Help us not to be ashamed of Christ, in this crooked and perverse generation. Help us to speak of thy testimonies before kings, and not to be ashamed. Fill us with the wisdom that cometh down from above; make us wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. Above all, give us thy holy guidance. May the opening of our lips be right things. May our speech this day be with grace, seasoned with salt, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. Lord, teach us how surely thou hast appointed a day in which thou shalt judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom thou hast ordained. If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquity, O Lord, who shall stand? May we be found in Christ in that day, washed, covered, justified, accepted in the Beloved. When thou renderest the evil of the wicked upon their own heads, may we obtain mercy of the Lord in that day. Be with all our dear friends. May the word and prayer be blessed to them. Be with all who are sick and afflicted; make all their bed to them in their sickness. Make us compassionate as Christ was. Preserve our going out and coming in this day. May peace be upon Israel; and the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with our spirits. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXXV.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XXII. 1—34.

REMARKS.

We have here the treachery of Judas, the great love of Jesus, the vanity of the disciples, and the presumption of Peter. 1. The treachery of Judas, ver. 1—6. Observe the coincidence; 'the priests sought how they might kill Jesus, then entered satan into Judas.' These coincidences are of satan's contriving. Observe the power of satan; he desires to have believers, but he enters into Judas. Unconverted souls are the palace of the strong one. He goes in and out at his pleasure. 'If a minister be not a man of God, he has great reason to fear lest he become a man of the devil.' It is the love of money which opens the heart to satan.

2. The great love of Christ, ver. 7—23. With what divine calmness he sends his two disciples to provide the last passover in the large upper room. O that our hearts were enlarged and furnished to receive the Saviour. 'They went and found as he had said unto them.' When he says, 'Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish'—when he says, 'Come unto me and I will give you rest'—when he says, 'I will send the Comforter,' believe his word; for in all things we shall find as he said unto us. What intense affection does he show during the eating of the passover? 'With desire have I desired to eat this passover with you.' The disciples should have said this—we should say it; but Christ is more willing to give himself than we to receive him. What love he shows in instituting the Lord's supper at such a time! Instead of thinking of himself and his coming agonies, he is thinking how to comfort his people till he come again. If we accept of this bread and this wine, we solemnly declare that we do close with the broken Saviour. Have we closed with Christ? The hand of the betrayer was on the table. It is to be feared that many betraying hands are still placed on that table. Woe is here written against all such. Let us examine ourselves, and apply to Christ to solve the doubtful case, saying, 'Lord, is it I?' 3. The vanity of the disciples. At this solemn hour they strive who shall be greatest. O Lord, what a proud worm is man. This is our very nature. Let us pray to be delivered from pride, especially after solemn seasons. It is far happier to be like Christ; 'I am among you as he that serveth.' Does the Saviour cast them away because of this foolish pride? No: he covers their sin in his own blood; sees no iniquity in them; commends their perseverance; promises them thrones of glory. O what a Saviour is ours! 'One among a thousand.' 'Who is a God like unto thee, who pardoneth iniquity?' 4. The presumption of Peter, ver. 31—34. Satan desires to have Christians more than other men. If we have been turned from the power of satan unto God, be sure satan will try to recover his prey. Learn that satan has no power at all against a Christian, except it be given him from above. He has to beg for it. Peter was to be most tempted of the twelve, Jesus therefore says, 'I have prayed for thee.' If we are much tempted believers, we may be sure we are much prayed for by Christ. His prayer will not fail; so our faith will not. 'We shall never perish.' Peter disregards this sweet promise; feels it unnecessary, perhaps insulting: 'Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison and to death.' 'How much presumption is in man! the stronger he believes himself to be, the weaker is he.' 'A haughty spirit goeth before a fall.' O let us not be high-minded, but fear.

PRAYER.

Our heavenly Father, follow with thy blessing the reading of thy holy word. Hide in our hearts the very lessons it was intended to teach us. Sanctify us through thy truth; thy word is truth. When we read of Judas, O Lord, teach us to be very jealous over ourselves, and to inquire diligently, lest after all we also should be cast away. Show us that we may know much of the Saviour, that we may call him, Lord, Lord, that we may do wonders in his name, and yet betray him after all. Convince us of sin by thy Holy Spirit. Make us lie infinitely low before thee because of our vileness. Convince us that we never can justify ourselves in thy pure sight. Give us a soul-refreshing view of the excellency of the Lord Jesus. Give us a saving hold upon him as all our righteousness and all our strength. Give us to be vitally united to him as living branches to the true vine. Make us confident that he which hath begun a good work in us will perform it to the day of Christ Jesus. When we read that the disciples found every thing as Jesus had said unto them, make us to set to our seal that this is true. O Saviour, it is impossible with thee to lie; thou keepest truth for ever. O Lord, help us to believe that we shall find as thou hast said. Melt our hearts by a sight of the great love of Jesus. As he gave himself to be broken for us, so may we freely accept of him, and may our joy be full. Make us to love that holy ordinance wherein we testify that we close with him as all our salvation and all our desire. May we love to do this in remembrance of him. When we read of thy disciples striving who should be greatest, may we be ashamed of the sins that mingle with our holiest services. O Lord, we blush when we think of our sins. How often we have sinned thy love away. Plead thy blood and righteousness, O our risen Saviour, our advocate with the Father. Cover all our sins. Say to us, Neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more. Change our proud, selfish hearts. Give us the same mind which also was in Christ Jesus. Give us to wash one another's feet; to do to one another as Jesus did unto us. Lord, deliver us from our spiritual enemies. Let us not be ignorant of satan's devices. We know that he desires to have us more than the world, that he may sift us like wheat. O Saviour, pray for us, that our faith may not fail. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one. Help us to submit ourselves to thee: to resist the devil, and he will flee from us. Guard us during the silent watches of this night. Thou that keepest Israel never slumberest nor sleepest. Keep our dear friends from evil. Preserve their souls. Strengthen the sick upon the bed of languishing. Comfort the bereaved. Give bread to the poor. Be with those that are afar off upon the sea. Pour out thy Spirit upon all flesh. Let the wilderness become a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Hasten the coming of the Saviour. Make us love his appearing. Why is thy chariot so long of coming; why tarry the wheels of thy chariot? Glory be to thee, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM LXXVIII. 34—37.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES XIII. XIV.

REMARKS.

Israel, on account of their sins, are now in the hand of their enemies, and it seems to have been in consequence of the relentings of Israel, and in answer to their prayers, that God now determined to grant them a deliverer, more highly endowed, and more specially under the influence of the Spirit, than any of the judges that had recently preceded him.

Samson, like Isaac, and Samuel, and John the Baptist, was the child of a previously unfruitful marriage; and like them too, was expressly foretold by revelation from heaven. These circumstances were, doubtless, designed to mark him out, from his infancy, as destined to hold an important office in the execution of the divine will. But the miraculous birth of all these eminent servants of heaven, was mainly intended to distinguish them as types and forerunners of Christ, the great judge of his people. The 'angel' that appeared to Manoah and his wife was the divine 'Word,' who had often appeared to the fathers, who afterwards became flesh. This might be gathered from several points in the narrative; but it is proved by the 18th verse, in which the word translated 'secret,' is the same that in Isaiah (ix. 6.), when undoubtedly applied to Christ, is rendered 'Wonderful;' and it is with an obvious allusion to this title, that, in the 19th verse, he is said to have done 'wondrously.' The faith of Manoah was languid and undecided till the promises made to him had been confirmed by further proofs. It was his distrust of what had already been revealed to his wife, that induced him to pray, 'O my Lord, let the man of God whom thou didst send, come again unto us.' True, he added, 'and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.' Still, the last part of the petition seems to express, rather the ostensible, than the real object of his prayer; for it conveys a request which was already answered. And accordingly, the angel, on his second appearance, simply repeated his former charges; adding, 'of all that I said unto the woman, let her beware, and all that I commanded her, let her observe. It was in this spirit of uneasy faith that Manoah sought to detain the angel; and that, at the close of the interview, he said, with horror and alarm, to his wife, 'we shall surely die, because we have seen God.' He believed, but his faith wanted vigour and repose. The wondrous doings of the angel seem to have been designed, as they were perfectly adapted, to supply this defect.

The proposed alliance of Samson with the woman of Timnath, was expressly contrary to the law of the Nazarite, by which he was bound, and the remonstrances of Manoah and his wife were supported by the highest authority. For though it be said (xiv. 4.) to have been of the Lord that he sought an occasion against the Philistines, we are not therefore to conclude, either that his irregular affection had been directly prompted by the Spirit, or that it was purposely fostered by himself, with the view of obtaining a just cause of quarrel against his country's oppressors. 'Let no man,' (says James, i. 13, 14.) 'say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed.' Both in the cases of the Timnathite and afterwards of Delilah, Samson transgressed the command of God, and God signally vindicated his own ordinance, while yet he overruled the guilty passions of this man to promote his own designs, 'making even the wrath of man to praise him,' and the wickedness of man to correct him.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we bless thee, that we are permitted to approach thee this morning, with our humble adorations. In the remembrance of thy glory and goodness, we would rejoice and be glad exceedingly, for thou hast graciously discovered them in thy dealings with us. Stir up within us a lively sense of that tender mercy of thine, which is over all thy works; and pour out upon us the spirit of supplication, and of prayer, that when we bow before thy throne, our fellowship may truly be with thee, and with thy Son, Jesus Christ. The day, O God, is thine; the night also is thine; thou hast prepared the light and the sun. In mercy hast thou prepared them for our infirmities; and in wisdom hast thou adapted them to our necessities. We thank thee for the rest of the night, in which thou, who givest thy beloved sleep, hast watched over us, thyself neither slumbering nor sleeping. We thank thee, that thou hast brought us in safety to the morning light; and that ere the busy pursuits of day have called us apart, we are permitted, as a united family, to present ourselves before thee, in the assured hope of obtaining a father's blessing. O do thou mercifully accept of our thanksgivings, and hear us in heaven. Thou, O most gracious God, know-est to what dangers and temptations we shall each be this day exposed; and thou, who art a heart-searching, and rein-trying God, knowest what evil dispositions are lurking in our hearts, ready to betray us into sin. O grant us thy grace accordingly. Especially grant us a spiritual sense of guilt, and a humbling apprehension of our own weakness. Forbid that we should go forth to our worldly employments, in a worldly spirit. Forbid that these employments should excite in us the accursed love of the world, or the covetousness which is idolatry. While striving to be diligent in lawful business, may we also be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, doing all to thy glory. O keep and bless us, in soul and body, through all the business and events of the day, that, when evening shall return with its quiet and repose, we may meet again, a happy and united family, at thy holy altar, there to pledge ourselves anew to thy service, and to have our languid sentiments of piety refreshed from thy sacred presence. Bless, O God, that portion of thy word which has now engaged our thoughts; may its lessons be brought home to our hearts, with demonstration of the Spirit, and with power. We give thee thanks that we have the privilege of living under a settled government, and are not left, as sheep without a shepherd, every man to do what is right in his own eyes. Bless, O God, the civil authorities which thou hast set over us. May that portion of thy power which thou hast entrusted to them, be exercised for thy glory, and the good of the people. Grant that we, under the shadow of their protection, may be enabled, by thy grace, to lead lives of faith and holiness; resting with an unwavering firmness on thy promises, which are all yea and amen in Christ Jesus. Having no confidence in the flesh, but looking exclusively to the merits of Jesus, our blessed Saviour, as the only ground of our acceptance with thee, may we work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in us, both to will and to do of his good pleasure. And, O God, give us that charity which is the bond of perfectness, that we may walk in love as Christ also hath loved us. In these our prayers, do thou graciously hear us. Mercifully forgive our sins; and to thy name, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all glory ascribed, now and for ever. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM xcvi. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE xxii. 35—71.

REMARKS.

1. It is not easy to ascertain our Lord's precise meaning in the paragraph extending from the 35th verse to the 38th. Looking generally at the passage, there can be no doubt that his object is to warn his disciples of a great change which was about to take place in their circumstances. The time drew nigh, when 'this,' said he, 'that is written, (Isa. liii. 12.) must be accomplished in me; 'and he was reckoned among the transgressors;' for the things concerning me have an end. Taking in connection with what he had said immediately before, this intimation is substantially the same with that given, (Mat. xxvi. 31.) 'All ye shall be offended because of me this night, for it is written,' (Zech. xiii. 7.) 'I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.' Hitherto, notwithstanding the ill will of the Jewish leaders, Christ's influence and acceptability among the people has secured him the means of protecting and providing for his disciples; so that when sent out, (ver. 35.) by two and two, they 'lacked nothing.' But now circumstances are changed, the difficulties and changes vastly increased, and they must make all lawful and prudent provision for their subsistence and defence, without trusting to the personal presence and aid of their Master.

2. There is one feature of our Lord's sufferings in Gethsemane, that none of the evangelists, except Luke, has noticed. John, indeed, omits all that took place there, previously to his apprehension; Matthew and Mark describe him as saying, 'my soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death;' but Luke adds, (ver. 44.) that he was 'in an agony,' and that his 'sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.' It is not in man fully to lay open the mystery of that fearful distress, either in its causes or its extent. But the scene is evidently fitted for Christian contemplation. The penitent, weeping over it, feels that his sins, sins which he can recount and particularize, added to the load of sorrow which then crushed the heart of the Saviour, and that these sufferings, mysterious, because in their measure, if not also in their nature, they lay beyond the range of mortal experience, formed part of the price exacted by the Father, and paid down by the Son, for his ransom.

3. A lesson of a different order, and one of very grave practical moment, is taught us by the conduct of Peter, ver. 54—61. That disciple was at all times remarkable for the fiery vehemence of his temper; and here it betrayed him into an act of cruel and cowardly baseness. When forewarned of his danger, he protested (ver. 33.) that he was ready to go with his Master 'both into prison, and to death.' In the fervour of his zeal he drew a sword when Jesus was seized, (John xviii. 10.) and 'smote a servant of the high priest.' Dismayed, however, by our Lord's reproof, (John xviii. 11.) he immediately fell behind, and when Jesus was brought into the high priest's house, 'followed afar off,' as a trembling spectator. Still, even then, he displayed more courage than any of his brethren, John excepted; for while the rest all 'forsook' their Master 'and fled,' (Mat. xxvi. 56.) they two continued to follow him, John xviii. 15. It was when he stood without at the door, (John xviii. 16.) and saw Jesus yielding meekly to his enemies, without any attempt at defence, or means of resistance, that Peter's heart utterly failed. An hour ago, he had affirmed his readiness to go with Jesus even to death; and now he vehemently and repeatedly denies all knowledge of him. The prophecy of our Lord (ver. 34.) was fulfilled; and there was given to all succeeding Christians a most emphatic, because a living commentary, on the text (1 Cor. x. 12.) 'let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.' Oh, how earnestly and how unceasingly should we pray for the grace of humility as a fixed and vital element of character.

4. From the penitent disciple weeping bitterly without, let the reader turn to observe what is passing within the palace. They that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him. This was their 'hour, and the power of darkness.' Having blindfolded him, they 'struck him on the face,' and scoffingly asked, 'prophecy who it was that smote thee.' But his miraculous gifts were not to be prostituted at their base pleasure, and therefore he was silent, 'as a sheep before her shearers is dumb.' 'Many other things,' it is added, 'blasphemously spake they against him.' And what then restrained the wrath of God, that the very lightnings of heaven were not aroused to deliver and avenge his eternal Son. What withheld that stricken One himself that he called not for 'twelve legions of angels,' who were ready (Mat. xxvi. 53.) to come 'presently' at his call. It was because he loved us unto the death, that though 'he saved others,' (Mat. xxvii. 42.) 'himself he could not save.'

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, again we lift up our voices to thee, our unseen, but ever present and gracious protector. What, O Lord, is man, that thou rememberest him? Children of the dust, and of a day, we are crushed before the moth, and from the highest pride of life must look forward to the grave as our resting-place. Guilty and corrupt, we have incurred thy just displeasure, and deserve no better a doom than to lie down with everlasting burnings. Yet would we exalt thy name together, because thou hast had compassion on us in our low estate, because thou hast visited and redeemed thy people. Though thou art the high and lofty One who inhabitest eternity, thou dwellest also with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones. Not unto us, O God, not unto us, but unto thy name be the glory. Thou didst send thine only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. We bless thee, O God, for what we have this evening heard of his sufferings in our behalf. We thank thee for the evidence which these sufferings afford of his intense and enduring love of man, and while we contemplate his incomprehensible agony, may we not only feel the stirrings of human sympathy, but may our souls also be led to loathe the sin whose guilt was laid upon him, and to cleave to him with confidence and love, as all our salvation and all our desire. To as many as receive him, thou givest power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe in his name. May we so receive him by faith, and may he be formed in us, and abound the hope of glory. And, O God, enable us, under the inevitable calamities of life, to take him for our example in suffering. May we feel that even hereunto are we called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. Through thy grace, may we, under every trial, and in our hours of darkest apprehension, be enabled to say from the heart, It is God, let him do what seemeth good in his sight; the cup which the Father hath given us, shall we not drink it? not our will, but thine be done. And especially, O God, grant us the grace of humility and meekness. May we watch always, and with a godly jealousy over our own hearts, knowing them to be deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. We look to thee, O Lord our God, for rest and protection throughout the night. In the insensibility of sleep, do thou watch over us, and so long as thou shalt hold our eyes waking, be our song in the night season, and let trouble be far from us. May our last conscious thoughts be of thee, and the great salvation which thou hast wrought for us, and when we awake may we still be with thee. Hear these our prayers, pardon our sins, and do to us, and for us more than we ask or think, for the sake of Christ Jesus, our strength and Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVI. 7—11.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES XV.

REMARKS.

The foxes here mentioned are that species known more definitely by the term 'jackal,' a creature which abounds in Palestine. In commemoration of his victory Samson called that place Ramath-lehi, that is, the lifting up, or rather, perhaps, the hill of the jaw-bone. Being distressed with thirst, in consequence of his exertions, he prayed to God, who

'clave a hollow place that was in Lehi,' (for the word translated 'the jaw,' in ver. 19. ought certainly to be read thus, as a proper name,) 'and there came water thereout; and when he had drunk, his spirit came again, and he revived.'

Throughout the whole of these transactions, two circumstances are chiefly remarkable. First, the reader is struck with the singular manner in which Samson's private sentiments and fortunes are mixed up with the political condition of his country, and in which, besides, both of these are connected with the divine purposes. Were we to withdraw from the narrative those inspired notices of the Spirit's interposition, which give a unity and directness of aim to otherwise dissimilar and separate events, we should find, in the story of Samson, no more than could be paralleled by a thousand cases in profane history; a heroic individual taking the lead in the assertion of his country's liberties, but goaded on in his daring career by the impulse of private resentments, and so having his patriotism laid open, on the part of his enemies, to the suspicion of impure and selfish motives. Is it not our want of inspiration alone, that prevents us from discovering the precise designs of God in modern times, even while their accomplishment is still in progress? and is it not the deficiency of our faith alone that, after the issue, prevents us from discovering the presence and controlling power of God through and over the capricious feelings and complicated affairs of mortals?

The other circumstance is the desultory and trifling character (trifling in respect of its visible means and operations, not of its results, which were miraculous) of the contest in which Samson had engaged. The whole of the Israelites were enslaved, why, then, did he not first endeavour to rally them around their country's standard? Where was the likelihood that a single individual, however dauntless in bravery and gigantic in strength, should ever be able to cope with or to conquer a whole nation, especially when he entered on the undertaking by mischievously burning their crops, and so bringing upon himself personally a whole swarm of exasperated enemies? All such inquiries are at once answered by a reference to the will of God, who had so decreed. But his decree in the case may also be shown to have been perfectly adapted to the condition of the people of Israel. They were tamed by the oppression which they had so long endured; they were enfeebled in all the nobler attributes of manhood, by the dissolute practices connected with the idolatry into which they had relapsed; they were, in short, sunk in the miserable and helpless weakness of those who knew that they had forsaken their God, while yet they had no inclination to return to his service. And thus they were the heartless and willing slaves of the Philistines, far readier to betray their deliverer than to follow him in struggling for the freedom of their country. The whole of Samson's achievements were fitted to rouse them from this wretched lethargy, and to inspire them with that confidence in God which is the source of all true courage. His efforts were of incalculable value, not so much on account of their own immediate results, as for their moral effect on the minds of his countrymen.

PRAYER.

Evermore, O God, hast thou made the outgoings of morning to rejoice before us. Day follows day into darkness, and night after night, each teaching its proper lesson, passes away for ever, while we are left, preserved by thee, for purposes to be fully unfolded in eternity. O most merciful God, prepare us by thy grace for the fulfilment of these purposes. And grant that in this fleeting succession of time and events, we may be brought so to remember our days as to apply our hearts unto wisdom. How much, O our Father, have we to thank thee for. Many are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to usward, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; if we would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered. No more indeed may we look for miracles to bring us light and deliverance. A finished record of revelation, which thou hast mercifully granted us, is our pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, a light to our feet and a lamp to our path; the sword of the Spirit, to defend us from our spiritual enemies, and the instrument of bloodless conquests, to establish peace and good-will throughout the world. May thy kingdom come, when thy word shall be man's only and universal law. We thank thee, O Lord, for the wise and benevolent arrangements of thy providence. It is not for us to pierce the mystery in which its processes are involved. But there is no element at work in it which is unknown to thee, or beyond thy control. Thine own Spirit, which moved on the void and formless confusion of a newly created world, is still bringing order out of the most perplexed events; and thou art accomplishing thine own great and holy purposes, even by means of those agencies that seem the most turbulent and irregular. Thou stillest the noise of multitudes of waters, and the yet wilder passions that ferment in the tumults of the people. Thou makest the wrath of man to praise thee, and restrainest the remainder of his wrath. O enable us to set thee always before our eyes; to discern thee in all thy works and ways. Let thy Spirit, O God, go with us to the duties and occupations of this day. In the midst of its best enjoyments and busiest pursuits, may we still feel that this is not our rest, that here we have no continuing city. So may we use the world as not abusing it, knowing that the fashion thereof passeth away. May thy grace prevent us from setting our hearts on temporal things. May our conversation be without covetousness; may it be as becometh the gospel. Seeking growth in grace, and increase in the knowledge of divine things, may we advance daily in meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light. Preserve us, O gracious Father, throughout this day from accident, and danger, and sudden death. Enable us to guard against the snares of the tempter, and to flee from every appearance of evil. And if thou shalt see fit to spare us till evening shall once more bring us rest, may we all meet again in peace, to bow ourselves before thee. To thee, and to thy fatherly protection and love we commend ourselves, soul and body together. Never leave us, never forsake us. We are poor and needy; in thee only is our help found. Hear us in heaven, thy dwelling-place, and when thou hearest, answer and forgive, for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XXV. 4—7.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XXIII. 1—26.

REMARKS.

How iniquitous the scene in the court of Pilate. The falsehood and hypocrisy of our Lord's Jewish accusers, their pretended loyalty and patriotism, the easily assumed mask of the selfish and unprincipled, their cruelty, malignity, and hatred, and the perjury by which they hoped to gratify it. How fearful their blasphemy against the Spirit of God, in rejecting his testimony; how wicked and contemptible the whole character and conduct of Pilate, who, to shelter his own tyranny and misrule from exposure and punishment, was ready to surrender the innocent to death. We may notice, that it is remarkable that none of the rest of the evangelists notices the share which Herod had in the trial of our Lord. This person was tetrarch of Galilee, (iii. 1.) And when Pilate found that Jesus, being a Galilean, belonged to his jurisdiction, he sent him immediately to Herod, who was then at Jerusalem. Now, Herod was a man of the very basest character, the same who had murdered John the Baptist; and the son of that Herod who 'slew all the children that were in Bethlehem. (Mat. ii. 16.) Formerly, when he was told of Christ's miracles, his guilty conscience took the alarm, and he said, (Mat. xiv. 2.) 'This is John the Baptist: he is risen from the dead; and therefore mighty works do show forth themselves in him.' Time, however, had probably cured him of this superstitious apprehension; for 'when he now saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad,' having long been desirous to see him, 'because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.' Accordingly, 'he questioned with him in many words.' Still, our Lord, destitute alike of ostentation and resentment, had neither a miracle to gratify the curiosity, nor a pungent word to rebuke the vices of the hardened sinner. The gifts of the Holy Ghost were not to be turned into a show, like the tricks of the magician; so that though Herod questioned much, Jesus answered him nothing. The tetrarch, in the same spirit of savage levity in which he had murdered John, now in mockery arrayed Christ in royal robes, and sent him back to Pilate. 'And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together, for before they were at enmity.' Among wicked men, there never can be the union of genuine love. The objects of all being selfish, they may move together in masses, but cannot be vitally attached. Nevertheless, God has wisely provided that society shall subsist in some sort, even where wickedness most abounds. Community of interest, of taste, of habit, of pursuit, draws men together; and the example of Pilate and Herod teaches, that where all these are wanting, their place may be supplied by community of hatred; for here 'the rulers took council together against the Lord, and against his Anointed.' (Psal. ii. 2; Acts iv. 25—27.) And the instance is not a solitary one; a common enmity to the church has reconciled many enemies, and the ranks of persecutors have always been made up of singularly ill-assorted elements. Barabbas, who, 'for sedition and murder, was cast into prison,' became, through the operation of precisely such a union, the sudden favourite of the proud pharisees, who ordinarily would have spurned him from them, disdaining to pronounce his name. When Pilate said, 'I will chastise Jesus, and release him,' their instant reply was, 'away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas.' Such, accordingly, was the issue—the Saviour to the cross—the seditious murderer to life and liberty.

PRAYER.

It is good, O most high God, to give thanks unto thee, and to sing praises unto thy name; to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night. Teach us how to thank thee for thy merciful preservation of us during another day. And now, when night and silence are inviting us to repose, may our souls seek and find rest under the shadow of thy wings. As we recal and reflect on the occurrences of the day, may we be enabled to trace thy goodness through them all; or should they be marked by some dark dispensations—for thy thoughts are very deep—may we still adore and trust, when we cannot comprehend. We thank thee, O Lord, for our social capacities and enjoyments, from which we derive so many important benefits and consolations. Thou hast written the law of love in the parent's heart, so preparing the gentlest protection for the helplessness of childhood. Thou hast taught the attachments of the child who knows it not, to cling around the parent. O may thy blessing rest on our family affections; may they be halloed, and strengthened by the more endearing bonds of a common faith in thy Son, and a common hope of heaven. Enable us to exercise them under a constant sense of our responsibility to thee. They are the gifts of thy fatherly love to us. May we employ them in provoking one another unto love, and to good works. And we bless thee, O Lord, that thou hast given us, in the gospel, a still richer display of thy love than any thing in nature affords. Thou hast commended thy love to us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. We thank thee that thou hast thus brought life and immortality to light, opening up a new and living way of access for sinners to thyself. May we all, as conscience-stricken transgressors, be brought to lay hold of the hope set before us in the gospel, that being justified by the blood of Jesus, we may also be saved from wrath through him. So may we know and believe the love that thou hast to us. And in so far, O God, as we have already been brought to the knowledge of the truth, do thou, by thy grace, carry us on toward perfection. May we grow in practical holiness, in spirituality of mind, and in relish for those sacred exercises that bring us into thy presence. So may we attain unto the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, and to the full assurance of hope, gifts which are imparted by the Spirit, as the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. We implore thy protection throughout the night. Bless us, O God, with rest, and in our rest. So long as thou shalt see fit to spare us, grant us health of body, and soundness of mind; or if thou shalt see that we need thy fatherly chastisements, O remember that we are dust, and lay thy hand gently upon us; and grant us the gifts of thy grace, that we may be patient under every trial, striving, by committing our case to thee, to turn our afflictions into blessings. Unto thee we commend ourselves for time and for eternity. The Lord bless us and keep us; the Lord cause his face to shine upon and be gracious unto us; the Lord lift upon us the light of his countenance and give us peace. Hear, O God, and answer, and accept; for all that we ask, is for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XXVIII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES XVI.

REMARKS.

The narrative contained in this chapter is full of instruction. The lust of the flesh is one of the evils which we are most urgently warned against in the New Testament. It is an evil to which we are very liable, and it is most destructive in its effects. Very great and very good men have been sometimes made the slaves of sensual passion, and are held up to us as examples, that we may be taught by their fate to avoid the like crimes. This is eminently the case with Samson, who, for a time, seems to have been entirely given up to sensual gratifications. We cannot help being struck with the remarkable change which his indulgence in lust produced upon his whole character. Not only was his moral purity thereby destroyed, but his understanding seems to have entirely left him. It has been said, 'surely in vain is the snare spread in the sight of any bird;' but the conduct of Samson contradicts the proverb. For though he was warned of the design of Delilah, he did not free himself from her snare, but suffered himself to be enticed to his ruin. Such will generally be the case with those who place themselves in similar circumstances. Though they may know and feel that they are sacrificing health and worldly substance, and the well-being of their immortal souls, they cannot free themselves from the dominion of their lust. They are, as it were, under the influence of a charm, and as it is told of the bird, when fascinated by the serpent's eye, they will drop into the serpent's mouth. 'The lips of a strange woman drop as an honey comb, and her mouth is smoother than oil: but her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword. Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell. Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her house; lest thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel.' The way of safety is to avoid the very beginnings of this evil, for no one can tell to what it may lead. Let us then 'make a covenant with our eyes,' remembering that in the spirit of the holy law of God, 'he that looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.' We may also learn from this chapter, that the connections and friendships we form in life, ought to be based upon religion. Whatever love or regard a wicked person may profess, or actually entertain for us, we may be assured that it can only terminate in evil. If we suffer our affections to rest on an unworthy object, and indulge in much intercourse with such a person, we are sure to be sufferers. Our hearts insensibly begin to make apologies for guilt, and to regard it with less abhorrence, and in the end it obtains our entire sympathy, and we become as much 'the child of hell,' as our companion. The narrative we have read, contains also an animating lesson of encouragement. Samson prayed to God in the midst of his calamity, and his prayer was heard and answered. So in our deepest abasement and guilt, if in earnestness of heart we cry unto God, we are encouraged to believe, that through his abundant grace in Christ Jesus he will hear our cry, and deliver us from the horrible pit, and the miry clay, and set our feet upon a rock.

PRAYER.

O God, we acknowledge our unworthiness, even to lift up our eyes to the place where thine honour dwelleth. Thou hast said, that the man who shall ascend into thy holy hill, is he who is of clean hands, and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. But we are altogether laden with iniquity. Our hands are not clean, neither is our heart pure. Our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; we are a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters. Our own hearts condemn us because of our wickedness, and how much more thou who art greater than our hearts, and who canst not look on iniquity without abhorrence. It becometh us to lay our hands upon our mouths, and our mouths in the dust, and to cry, Unclean, unclean. Thou hast commanded us to love thee with all our heart, and soul, and strength, and mind; yet thou hast often not been in all our thoughts, and we have given those affections to the creature which thou claimest for thyself. We confess that the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, have too often had dominion over us. We magnify thy name, O Lord, that thou hast encouraged us to cry unto thee, Be merciful to us for we are sinners. Thou hast invited the weary and heavy laden to come to thee, that they may find rest. Thou hast, of thy free grace, contrived a way whereby we may be redeemed from all iniquity, and purified unto thee a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Grant unto us, O Lord, this great deliverance. Turn us from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto thee, that we may receive the forgiveness of our sins and inheritance among them that are sanctified through the faith that is in Christ Jesus. For his sake receive us graciously, and love us freely. Heal all our backslidings, and remember us ever with that favour which thou bearest unto thine own. Let not sin have dominion over us any more. Thou alone hast power to effect our deliverance, and we pray that in this, the house of our bondage, thou wouldst compass us round with the song of victory. We rejoice in thy declaration, that if any man sin, he hath an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ, the righteous. May he be our advocate and propitiation, that we may be delivered from the curse of thy violated law, and become sharers in the glorious liberty of the sons of God. We pray for thy guidance and protection this day. Do thou give us strength to discharge the duties to which, in the course of thy providence, we may be called. Keep our feet from falling, and our eyes from tears. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLIV.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XXIII. 27—56.

REMARKS.

We have here an account of the greatest and most wonderful event which history has recorded. It opens with the voice of lamentation, as if to teach us to mourn and be in bitterness. The heart can scarcely fail to be affected by the narrative of such cruel sufferings as Christ was called upon to endure. But the lesson is to us, as well as to the Jewish women, 'weep not for me, but weep for yourselves.' It was our sins which caused all these sufferings. 'Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities.' And while it is true that only by looking to the cross of Christ can the sinner obtain peace and comfort, it is also true that no spectacle is so well fitted to overwhelm us with grief. We do not understand or feel aright the purpose of Christ's death, if, on contemplating it, we are not filled with the liveliest sorrow because of sin. But there were many who witnessed that amazing spectacle whose hearts were hardened in unbelief, and whose mouths were filled with mockery. It is so still. How few of us are affected by the sight of Jesus on the cross as we ought to be! With what indifference are his sufferings contemplated! What mockery do we throw upon his gracious work, when we continue in our sins, and refuse to flee for refuge to the only hope set before us! The Jews, in derision, inscribed over the cross, 'This is the king of the Jews;' and are we not guilty of the same contempt, if we say unto Christ, Lord, Lord, while we do not those things which he commands us. Christ, even in the hour and power of darkness, showed that he was able to save to the very uttermost all who come to God through him. The malefactor prayed to be remembered by him, and acknowledged him as Lord, and his prayer was heard. What a lesson of joyful encouragement is here to despairing sinners! What a demonstration of the omnipotence of the grace of God! The invitations of the gospel are unto all. Whosoever will, let him drink of the waters of life freely. God's greatest gift was his Son, and this gift was bestowed upon hell-deserving sinners. Shall he not with him, then, freely give us all things? There is no room for despair. But neither is there room for presumption to him who would sin, because the grace of God abounds. As has been remarked, there was one thus saved, that the greatest sinner might not despair, and there was but one, that none might presume. How unbounded and untiring is the love which Christ here exemplifies! In the midst of his severest agonies, and surrounded with universal mockery, he prays for his tormentors. And what a lesson of gentleness and charity is hereby conveyed to us. 'I say unto you, Love your enemies; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you.' The veil of the temple was rent when Jesus died, to indicate to us that the way of access into the holiest was now open. By one offering Christ for ever perfected all them that are sanctified. Nothing now stands between us and the God of our salvation. Neither his justice nor his holiness forbid the approach of the vilest sinner, for in the sacrifice of Christ mercy and truth met together, righteousness and peace kissed each other. But the way is Christ; and God can only regard us with complacency when he regards us in the face of his Anointed.

PRAYER.

Our heavenly Father, we praise and bless thee that thou hast so loved the world as to give thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have eternal life. We rejoice in believing that there is now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. We rejoice in the perfect sufficiency of that atonement which has been offered for sin. In thee, O God, was our help found. From thee the word went forth, Save from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom. Thou didst stretch forth thy hand to raise us up from the horrible pit and the miry clay, and to set our feet upon a rock. When the fulness of time had come, thou didst send forth thy Son, made of a woman, made under the law, that he might redeem them who were under the law, and that we through him might receive the adoption of sons. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us! Scarcely for a righteous man will one die, though, peradventure, for a good man some would even dare to die; but herein thou hast commended thy love unto us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. O God, give us more and more to feel the need we have of a Saviour, and to perceive the exceeding sinfulness of sin. We have nothing acceptable to render unto thee. Enable us then to present the sacrifice of humble and contrite hearts, which thou wilt not despise. May Christ be made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption. Our prayer is, that we may be found in him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but the righteousness which is of God by faith. O Lord, we lament that we have so little regarded him who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. Teach us, we pray thee, to hate sin and to flee from it. Regarding it as the cause of all our Lord's sufferings, may we be taught to mourn over it with that godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of. Seeing, by our confession of Christ, we are no longer our own, but bought with a price, may we constantly and earnestly seek to glorify thee in our souls and bodies, which are thine. And do thou grant unto us that, being delivered from the power of all our spiritual enemies, we may henceforth be enabled to serve thee without fear, in holiness and righteousness, before thee all the days of our lives. Forgive, we beseech thee, the sins of which we have this day been guilty in thy sight. Be with us during the silent watches of the night. Thou who keepest Israel slumberest not nor sleepest. Give us refreshing sleep, and let no plague come nigh our dwelling. If thou sparest us till another day, grant that we may awake in health and strength, with minds disposed to love and to serve thee, for all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM IV. 1—5.

SCRIPTURE—JUDGES XVII.

REMARKS.

The evil passions of the heart acquire strength with increasing years. This is especially true of the lust for money. Avarice is emphatically the vice of the aged. We have here an affecting instance of its power to overcome the natural affection of a mother for her son. She cursed him because of the money she had lost. Such is the fruit of this vice. It contracts and debases all the natural affections of the heart, and engrosses the whole soul. It will suffer no rival, and in its lordly ascendancy tramples upon all the kindly and charitable feelings which adorn the mind. Like every other vice, it grows by excesses, and is to be guarded against and checked in its beginnings, if we wish to avoid its absolute dominion. Money is said to be the root of all evil, and certainly the love of it has been, in every age, the fruitful cause of family dissensions. The case of Micah and his mother, is one which we see often exemplified. The nearest relations curse and bless one another, every day, according as they receive or are deprived of this idol. We are here presented with a very curious and instructive example of the way in which the affections endeavour to pacify the conscience, so that while we indulge in sin, we may please ourselves with the imagination that all is well with us. No sooner was the money restored to Micah's mother, than she devoted a considerable portion of it to the purposes of idolatry, and the family eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain a priest for their household. The heart cannot rest satisfied with an utter abandonment of all form of religion, and it feels a gratification in cherishing its corruptions. It is thus that, in the history of the world, false religion has obtained the widest sway, and there is a constant tendency to leave the form of sound words which has been delivered to us. Thus we may be convinced of the need there is earnestly to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, seeing we have within ourselves such powerful enemies to that faith. But there seems to be a general principle embodied in the latter part of the narrative, to which it is of importance to attend. It is this, that men are led eagerly to adopt some form of religion, and to satisfy themselves with the mere form. This is an error which may be practised among us, as well as among idolaters. Micah was highly satisfied because he had got a Levite in his house. And how often does it happen among the professing disciples of Jesus, that they are satisfied with mere external observances. They have sabbath ordinances, a church, and a minister, and a form of worship. And these, with them, constitute religion. They say with Micah, 'Now I know that the Lord will do me good,' and this merely because they are in the enjoyment of Christian privileges. It becomes us constantly to watch over our deceitful hearts, lest we should be hearers of the word only, and not doers of the same. And if, with the ancient church, and in the spirit of Micah, we are disposed at any time to say, 'I am rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing,' we may be certain that at that very time we are 'poor, and miserable, and destitute, and blind, and naked.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we bless thee that thou hast revealed thyself as the hearer and the answerer of prayer, and hast invited all flesh to come unto thee, that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly. Help us to draw near unto thee, at this time, with true hearts and with faith unfeigned, believing that thou art, and that thou art the rewarder of all them that diligently seek thee. Raise our affections to the things which are above. Reveal to our consciences and hearts the realities of faith, that we may no longer be engrossed by the perishing objects of time, but may be led earnestly to seek that portion which shall never be taken away from us. Our hearts are deceitful above all things, O Lord, and desperately wicked. Do thou search and try us, and see if there be in us any wicked way, and lead us in the way everlasting. Suffer us not to be led captive by our own evil inclinations. Restore unto us the joy of thy salvation, and uphold us by thy free Spirit. Guide our feet into the way of peace, and restrain them from that path wherein destroyers go. We praise thee for the spiritual privileges thou hast conferred upon us. Thou hast given us thy word to be a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path. Thou hast given us line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. At sundry times and in divers manners thou didst speak unto the fathers by the prophets, but in these last days thou hast spoken unto us by thy Son, and caused the light of thy truth to shine so clearly around us, that he who runneth may read.

O God, impress upon our hearts a deep sense of our responsibility to thee for the use of all the privileges thou hast conferred upon us. May we ever remember, that to whom much is given of them also much shall be required, that if they escaped not who refused to hear him who spake to them on earth, much less shall we escape if we refuse to hear him who now speaketh to us from heaven. O let thy word have free course and be glorified in the midst of us. Bring its truths home to our hearts with the spirit of demonstration and with power. Let thy Spirit take up his indwelling in us, causing us both to will and to do of thy good pleasure. Remove the darkness from our understandings that we may clearly know the truth, and take away the hardness of our hearts, that we may run in the way of thy commandments. From thee, O Lord, cometh down every good and perfect gift, and with grateful hearts we acknowledge all the bounties of thy providence, the mercies of the past night and of this new day. Keep us in thy fear, and sustain us by thy power all the days of our appointed time upon the earth, and receive us at last into thine everlasting kingdom, through Jesus Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—HYMN IV.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XXIV. 1—35.

REMARKS.

It seemed as if by the death of Christ, hope itself was extinguished. He who had showed such power, who had wrought so many miracles, who had bid death resign his dominion over others, had bowed his own head and given up the ghost. All the fair promises he had given seemed to be belied. He was laid in the grave as other men are, and no power was known which could redeem him from its corruption. But the darkness of the night of despair, and utter hopelessness, was broken by a glorious morning. He was sought for among the dead, but he was not there; he had risen again, and thereby gave us the assurance that his work was finished. The battle had been fought, and the victory was won. The dominion of death was overthrown, the powers of darkness subdued; satan's head was bruised by the seed of the woman; life and immortality were brought to light; and it was proved that neither death, nor earth, nor hell, were able to subdue the Son of God. The resurrection of Christ is the most glorious, the most consoling truth in the whole Bible. It lies at the foundation of all the rest, and establishes them all. It is our stay and hope, for if he be not risen, our faith is vain. But by his resurrection he demonstrated his power to save, as by his obedience to the death he showed his infinite willingness to save. All the enemies of our eternal well-being, as they had conspired to slay him, were all combined to hold him in the tomb. When he came forth of the grave, he showed to man that all enemies were put under his feet, and that he was able to save to the very uttermost. He showed that the justice of God was satisfied, and had no farther claim upon the believing sinner. He was raised again for our justification. It was now that the angelic song met its fulfilment, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.' The way of reconciliation was now open. Death was vanquished, sin was trodden under foot. He triumphed over principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly. The glad light of immortality now shone upon those who sat in darkness, and in the shadow of death; and man can now say, 'O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law, but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Christ has risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.' Therefore were such pains taken to establish this grand fundamental doctrine. It was confirmed by evidence stronger than any other fact. There were various witnesses of it, who had seen Jesus at various times, and under great diversities of circumstance. They were convinced of it against their own previous belief, and maintained it at the constant hazard of their lives. Not one of them would receive it on report; they had all to witness for themselves. They would not believe the woman; they refused to credit Peter; they yielded not to the strongest testimony, and it was because they were eye witnesses of the fact, that they finally assented to its truth. Now, however, it comes to us on evidence which cannot be resisted without the deepest guilt, and which will not be resisted without the strongest prejudice. Let us give our joyful assent to this glorious truth, and endeavour to show our practical belief in it, by seeking to be made like unto Christ. He has risen to glory, and in holiness, and it is in vain we shall expect to see his face in joy, if we be not raised to newness of life.

PRAYER.

We give glory unto thee, O Lord, that he who was delivered for our offences, hath been raised again for our justification. Our souls would magnify the Lord, and our spirits would rejoice in God our Saviour, who hath regarded us in our low estate, and with his arm hath brought us salvation. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits, who forgiveth all our iniquities, who healeth all our diseases, who redeemeth our life from destruction, and crowneth us with loving-kindness and tender mercies. Glory be to God in the highest, that peace hath been proclaimed on the earth, and good-will to the fallen children of men. We rejoice to know that Christ hath finished transgression, and made an end of sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness; that he hath been raised as the first fruits of them that slept, and that he will bring many sons unto glory. We rejoice that he hath been made head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all, that he hath spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, and is now possessed of all power and authority over all things. We rejoice that in him we have not an high priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one who was in all points tempted like as we are; who in his exaltation is able to sympathise with us in all our afflictions and temptations, and to send us that relief and consolation of which we stand in need. O satisfy our souls with thy goodness. Out of the fulness that is in Christ, bestow upon us even grace for grace. Renew us in the spirit of our minds, and as thou hast set before us the hope of glory, give us a meetness for the inheritance of thy saints. Make thy way known, O Lord, upon the earth, and thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee, Lord, let all the people praise thee. Behold how many nations are yet sitting in the region and shadow of death. Cause the light of the glorious gospel to shine upon them, and give them peace. Establish and extend, we pray thee, the dominion of the Lord Jesus; and where his name is already known, grant that his doctrine may be adorned by the lives and conversations of those who profess it. We commit ourselves to thy care and keeping this night. Watch over us, and give us quiet rest. We come to that fountain which hath been opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness, that we may be washed therein, and purified from all our pollutions. Lord, make us clean every whit. And to thee, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, one God, we would ascribe all glory, now and for ever. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXV. 12—14.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL I.

REMARKS.

In this chapter, the inspired writer introduces us to a family scene, and details to us part of the domestic history of Elkanah, and Hannah his spouse. Elkanah, a levite, had married two wives, a practice at that time suffered because of the hardness of men's hearts, but what was an infringement of the original marriage law; a law, wise and holy, which is never infringed, without bringing on the violators more or less of personal and domestic unhappiness; and such the inspired narrative informs us, proved to be the experience of Elkanah. One of his wives was named Peninnah, she was the mother of several children; and, as Hannah was childless, Peninnah took advantage of this to annoy her rival; and that, even when the family was engaged in the discharge of religious duties; 'when the time was that Elkanah offered;'—when they went up to the house of the Lord. Is not the temper of Peninnah that of those among ourselves, who make the sabbath, the sacrament, the church, occasions of the vain-glorious display of dress, ornament, or personal appearance? Do we not imitate her as often as we endeavour to triumph over others, by the ostentatious exhibition of advantages of which they are destitute? These provocations on the part of her adversary, appear to have affected Hannah more deeply than we can consider proper; 'she wept and did not eat; she was in bitterness of soul, and wept sore,' thus placing it in her adversary's power to triumph over her. The believer must not permit any inferiority in regard to temporal possessions so deeply to perturb him; but in resignation, in prayer, in grateful, adoring communion with his reconciled Father, should seek an habitual contentment and serenity of mind. To every bereft mother, especially, who has lost a child, and who is sorrowing over that child's grave, too deeply and too long, the God of Sarah, and Ruth, and Hannah, does in effect say: 'Why weepest thou, and why eatest thou not, and why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten sons?' But if Hannah erred in yielding to excess of grief for the want of children, she acted rightly in unbosoming her cares and desires to Him who delights in upholding and comforting his children. But must we not confess, that we too frequently allow ourselves to be discomposed by such mere trifles, as we would blush to mention in prayer; or if we did, it could only be in shame and confusion of face at our sinful weakness, and to implore from God a better, firmer, calmer temper? We find that Hannah's prayer was the voiceless prayer of the heart. 'Now Hannah she spake in her heart, only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard;' a passage invaluable; as teaching us that we may, and ought to commune with our heavenly Father, even in the crowd and bustle of life: that prayer needs not the aid of words: and that the matron, amidst her domestic toils; the weaver at his loom; the ploughman in the field, the seaman on the giddy mast, may have sweet and heartfelt intercourse with God in Christ. Then let us mark the virtuous horror with which Hannah defended herself from the accusation of being drunken. To see the father of a family drunken, is an afflicting sight: nothing is more hideous than to behold a wife or a mother of a family intoxicated. In answer to Hannah's supplications, God gave her a son, whom she named 'Asked of God,' for so the name Samuel signifies; and this child she dedicated to the Lord, as a levite, and as a Nazarite, such as Samson was, his hair being unshorn. Let parents consider their children as not so much theirs, as God's; let them early teach them to lisp in prayer; nay, more, they owe this duty to the church, to set apart the ablest and most amiable of their sons, to serve the Lord in the holy ministry.

PRAYER.

O Lord God Almighty, our Father, author of every good and perfect gift, hearer and answerer of prayer, Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, do thou this morning permit us, sinful and all unworthy though we be, to draw near to thee as thou art in Christ, a reconciled Father, who can now be just, and yet the justifier of the ungodly; and who dost, in thy Son, give us a free and ready access at all times, to a throne of grace. We come before thee, God of our fathers, holy and merciful Jehovah, not on the ground of any claim or merit of our own; we come as the lost, the undone, the polluted, the rebellious; in the prevailing name of that great advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, whose intercessions thou hearest always; and we implore thee, for his sake alone, to give to us the true spirit of prayer, a personal interest in his atoning death, and a personal likeness to his character. We rejoice that our Lord and Saviour hath brought life and immortality to light in the gospel; that types and shadows have passed away; that the Redeemer has come to teach us, to die for us, to reign in and over us; that we live in the noon-day of gospel light; and that now we need not to journey to a distant Shiloh to worship thee, but that every believing and prayerful family is to thee, the Almighty God, a Shiloh, tabernacle, and home. O grant, we pray thee, heavenly Father, that we may duly lay to heart and be improved by the passage of scripture now read by us; and in all our anxieties, may we habitually seek unto thee, as our comforter, our strength, our satisfying portion. Do thou, as our guide and protector, go with us this day, when we engage in whatever employments lie before us, giving us the right spirit of our station; protecting us, if it be thy will, from dangers, diseases, and death; enabling us to overcome temptation, and to walk closely with thee, our God, in whom we trust, in whom we rejoice. Thou hast mercifully watched over us during the night—thou hast caused us to experience of thy morning bounties; O teach us how to serve thee this day, and to live as though we know it were to be our last. Hear us, O Lord God of hosts; forgive us, and accept us, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXVIII. 7—9.

SCRIPTURE—LUKE XXIV. 36—53.

REMARKS.

In the commencement of this passage of holy writ, we read that the two disciples who had gone to Emmaus, a village about seven miles and a half north-west of Jerusalem, returned immediately on their Lord's manifesting himself to them, in order that their brethren might share with them in the joy they felt on account of the resurrection of the Lord; and to this day, every believer rejoicing in Christ as his victorious king, delights in communicating the heavenly transport to others; so social and benevolent is the spirit of faith. While the disciples are eagerly discoursing of the alleged resurrection, behold, of a sudden, their Master is with them; as he still is, with every little party of his sincere followers. He was not silent when he came, and what can more interest us than to mark what the style is of his first salutation. It often happens in the world, when a friend, who was one with us in humble or adverse days, rises to an eminence above us, that he forgets or speaks haughtily to his former associates. Since the disciples last saw their Lord, he had risen from suffering to victory; and that a victory to glory in, over no mean enemies, death and the grave. Has Jesus then, the triumphant, ceased to be as gentle and loving as Jesus the sufferer? How consoling to find that his salutation is: 'Peace be unto you.' Let us rejoice that Jesus in glory has as tender a sympathy with the frail and humble, as Jesus the persecuted and the homeless. The Saviour further manifests his interest in his friends, by being at pains to give them full proof that it was indeed the very Jesus whom they had seen on the cross, who was with them. He gave them five proofs of his identity, and bodily presence: 1. They saw his body; 2. They heard him speak; 3. They touched him; 4. They examined the marks of his crucifixion; 5. They saw him eat. He besides referred them to the great argument for his Messiahship that is contained in the types and prophecies, which were embodied in the Mosaic ritual, in the history of the typical personages among the Jews, such as David; and which were scattered through the Old Testament; for instance, the paschal lamb was a type of Christ; and in the xxii. Psalm, and the liii. chapter of Isaiah, are very minute predictions of his sufferings and character. Indeed, to understand the Old Testament, it is necessary to remember, that our Lord is the great Jehovah, Jesus; the leading object of the Old Testament. The Redeemer then announces, that repentance, and the remission of sin, were to be the two principal themes of gospel-preaching. To depend singly on the atoning sacrifice of Christ for a full and free pardon; and to repent of, and forsake those sins which nailed the Redeemer to the cross; are two great doctrines of the gospel, and what mission more sublime than that here given to the apostles, was ever intrusted to man? Their field was the world; they were to subdue all nations under the dominion of the Prince of peace, and be the founders of a universal monarchy of truth, holiness, and love. To effect an end so great, they themselves had no power; they were to tarry in Jerusalem till the Holy Ghost should come upon them, qualifying them to bear all afflictions, to win all victories. These instructions delivered to his disciples, the Redeemer, after spending forty days with them, at last, from Bethany, ascended into heaven; his last act on earth being the act of benediction. He is now at the right hand of power. To intercede and to bless, is still his favourite work. Knowing that we have a great friend and brother in heaven, of such a character, and in pursuit of such designs, let us, like the disciples, continually praise and bless God, in the church, in our lives, and in our families.

PRAYER.

O God, thou art our God, we will seek thee in faith and prayer; we will come to thee by that new and living way which thou hast opened and consecrated for us to walk in, making mention of the righteousness of Christ, and of his only, and rejoicing that the stone has been rolled away from the door of the sepulchre, and that Christ has risen a conqueror, and more than a conqueror. We praise and adore thee, almighty and most gracious Father, that, in our low and lost estate, thou hast cared for us, and hast given us thine own well-beloved Son, who has undertaken for us, and stood, in our room and stead, the great propitiatory sacrifice—the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. To him, our Beloved, will we betake ourselves in all our distresses, until the day-break and the shadows flee away; and we implore thee, heavenly Father, to enable us, with the feeling of the apostle, to say, We are crucified with Christ, nevertheless we live; yet, not we, but Christ liveth in us, and the life which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved us, and gave himself for us. We rejoice in Jesus as a prince and deliverer, to rule over and defend his people by his sceptre; as a priest, to intercede for them; as a shepherd, to guide them. Our glorying is this, that when he ascended on high, he left behind him his peace—the peace that passeth understanding, as the inheritance of those who love his name, and are waiting for his appearing, when he shall come the second time in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels, to separate for ever between the clean and the unclean, and to take his flock to himself, to feed them in the green pastures of heaven, and beside the still waters that are there. We desire, O Lord, to give thee thanks for bringing us to the close of another day of our lives. Thou hast supplied our returning wants, and showered thy liberal blessings upon us. We thank thee for all the temporal mercies of the week. With a still more erent gratitude, we thank thee for the spiritual advantages with which, during the week, we have been favoured: the many blessed opportunities of secret and family prayer, of reading the scriptures, of communing with thee in our hearts, and of practically obeying those laws of thine which are not grievous, but have so strong a tendency to confer health, contentment, and prosperity. We now implore thee, O Lord, to be preparing us for the solemnities of the coming sabbath. We would bear in mind, that this is the preparation, the day before the sabbath. Protect us during the night; bring us, if it please thee, to the light of another day of the Son of man; and grant to us and ours, thy presence and blessing at all times, and all we ask, is for Jesus' sake. Amen.

EIGHTEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LV. 16—18.

SCRIPTURE—PSALM LV.

REMARKS.

This psalm has evidently a double application—to David the type, and to Christ Jesus, the second and greater David, who is the antitype. It is understood to have been written by David, at the time when the treachery of Ahithophel, and the unnatural rebellion of his son Absalom, had involved him in the greatest dangers; but when he had faith given him to compose a psalm such as this, we may say, that all his foes were already discomfited, and that his soul was already delivered in peace from the battle that was against him. And when any of us can feel the sentiments of this psalm, and can in truth exclaim, 'as for me, I will call upon God, and the Lord shall save me;' we may be certain that that man has in effect already conquered, and that to him the gates of the Jerusalem above have already been thrown open. From the first to the eighth verse, inclusive, the psalmist bewails his afflictions; and in verses 12—14, 20, 21. Ahithophel is spoken of. But we cannot adequately appreciate this psalm unless we hear, in these inspired words, the mournful voice of our Saviour, who was the man of sorrows, the chief of sufferers. It is this circumstance—that the Messiah here speaks, that imparts to this sacred ode so deep and mysterious a meaning and interest. And let us, in our calamities, apply to God for aid and deliverance; let us betake ourselves to the bosom of Jesus, and hasten our escape to him, from the stormy wind and tempest, for he is a hiding-place and a covert. David was betrayed by Ahithophel—Christ, by Judas; let not those who have been at the table of the Lord forget, that to indulge in sin after having gone forward to the sacrament of the supper, is to imitate these two traitors, as their conduct is described here, and in psalm xli. 9; and is to betray the Lord, after eating bread with him.

In the 9th verse, David prays the Lord to destroy and divide the tongues of his enemies; and in 2 Sam. xv. 31. we find him praying thus: 'O Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness,' which prayer the Lord fully answered. Then in the 15th verse, we meet with a solemn and awful imprecation of God's wrath on the psalmist's enemies; but only in so far as they were the enemies of God. In this imprecation, the fate of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, seems referred to, as detailed in Num. xvi. Or, if we prefer it, we may read these words as a prophecy, in the manner of verses 19th and 23d; a prediction accomplished in the miserable ruin of Ahithophel, Absalom, and their party; in the self-murder of Judas, and in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. Alas, this verse will also be fulfilled in the everlasting ruins of all who reject the gospel offer. 'Death shall seize upon them, and they shall go down quick into hell.'

David further expresses in this psalm the utmost confidence in the right hand of him who abideth of old; a confidence which they alone can possess who have at least, as David and Daniel had, their three seasons of prayer daily. To pray steadily to God, for a few minutes, 'at noon,' each day, would have the happiest effects on our temper and behaviour; would invigorate us to encounter the difficulties of life, and would sanctify our prosperous and our social hours.

In conclusion, mark the contrast between the opening and the close of this psalm. It begins with sorrow; it closes with trust and joy. Such is the power of faith, such the advantages of prayerful intercourse with God. He draws near to his people, till their hearts, even in the seasons of calamity, glow with his presence.

PRAYER.

Lord God Almighty, who didst of thine infinite grace, and in thy great wisdom, devise a plan of deliverance for us, rebellious and iniquitous creatures; most holy, most merciful Father! do thou permit us, on this the blessed morning of our Lord's resurrection from the dead, to draw near to thee, in adoring gratitude, and with songs of Hosanna on our lips. The glad sound is in our ears, Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely; that full and free offer we would gladly embrace; and as the hart panteth after the water brooks, so would our souls pant after thee, O God. We were lying in our blood; we were brands already in the burning; we were exposed, for ever, to all the fierceness of thy just indignation; we could do nothing to redeem our own souls, or to satisfy for our sins. Praise then, for evermore, to thy mercy and thy gentleness, which have made us great; for the cross has been raised on Calvary, and on that cross the great atonement has been completed; death and sin have been vanquished; the head of the serpent has been bruised; an everlasting righteousness has been brought in; there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit; and in Him who died for us and rose again, we will evermore rejoice, and do implore thee to grant, that the sabbaths we enjoy on earth may prove to us all to be a foretaste of an unending sabbath-rest in the bosom of Jesus above. Heavenly Father, we thank thee for thy preservation of us through the night. May we be in the Spirit on this blessed day; may thy servant who is to address us in thy name, have power given him to deliver such a message as shall suit our case, edify us, and bring us to thee, with a subdued and child-like heart. May we this day, under the preaching of the truth as it is in Jesus, experience that the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. May many be converted; may thy people be built up in their most holy faith. Be with such as are prevented, by necessary causes, from waiting on thee in thy house of prayer; O do thou bless and comfort them, in what afflictions or occupations soever they may be, and cause them to experience that thou art not confined to houses made with hands, but that thou art ever present with the contrite and believing. And do thou, who art the God of the sabbath, beget in all hearts a deepening veneration for thine own day, and in a way of mercy, bring those who desecrate this day to honour it and thee, and to find safety in Him whose resurrection this day shows forth. And now, O Lord, do thou accept of, and answer, these our prayers, for our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

30 267 L 1887

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LVI. 9—13.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LVI. LVII.

REMARKS.

THE LVI. PSALM, one which believers have often felt to have been penned as if expressly for themselves in their trials and severe exercises of faith, is supposed to have been composed by David when in danger among the Philistines; but it is very applicable also to the state of the Lord Jesus Christ, when beset by his persecutors, and to the condition of all believers, who cannot be too deeply aware that they live in an enemy's country, in a state of society in which many licentious opinions and many atrocious practices prevail, which are inimical to the progress of the kingdom of grace. But let us, like David, have constant recourse to God, and even though the fierce waters come in to our souls, all shall yet be well. The number and designs of the psalmist's enemies are described in verses 1, 2, 5, and 6. 'Every day,' he exclaims, 'they wrest my words.' Let us so speak as to prevent, as far as possible, all misrepresentation of our words. We give too slight attention to the duties of conversation, which is so important a means of good or of evil. In verse 8th, the allusion seems to be to a custom known also among the Greeks and Romans, of preserving the tears shed for a friend's death, in small phials, called lachrymatories. God forgets not the penitent's tears; he will remember that Mary Magdalene and Peter have wept; to him the tear of sincere repentance is, for Christ's sake, a pearl of great price. In verse 12. the psalmist acknowledges that the vows of God were upon him. All who have been baptized, or who have communicated, are, in a peculiar manner, under vows; it deeply concerns them that these be fulfilled. And when we desire, with the psalmist, to walk before God in the light of the living, or to enjoy prolonged life, let us desire this, only in conjunction with the prayer that our feet be kept from falling; and that grace be given us to serve our God, and to promote the cause of his Son.

THE LVII. PSALM is understood to have been composed upon David's escape from Saul, in the cave of Engedi, as narrated in 1 Sam. xxiv.; and it resembles the preceding psalm in giving a description of great sufferings and dangers; an utterance of an earnest desire to be heard of God; a confident trust in his power as engaged in the psalmist's defence; a strong desire to see God exalted even above the heavens; a prediction of utter ruin to befall the enemy; and an expression of a holy vow to praise the Lord, for his mercy and for his truth's sake. 'My soul is among lions,' he exclaims; to the attacks of him who, as a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour, the believer is continually exposed. And what can more stimulate us to seek our happiness in God, than the experience of the writer of this lovely song of Sion, who, in the midst of nets and snares, of spears, arrows, and sharp swords, yet enjoyed such triumphs of holy gladness; such undoubting anticipations of deliverance; such glowing desires that his God should be exalted; such unshaken firmness of heart. How desirable are such habits of soul! Would they not place us on a rock, against which, though the stormiest waves should break, at the worst it would be our feet only that would be wet by the spray. Let us live up to our privileges in this meridian fullness of gospel day; let us make no more sinful compliances with the world; let Jehoshaphat no longer make alliance with Ahab. 'Awake up, my glory.' Let us especially redeem our morning hours to prayer and bible reading; for if we were but more diligent in redeeming the time, and more frequent in our approaches to a throne of grace, we would enjoy religion and duty far more intensely than we do; and ours would be a nobler, a happier, and a safer life.

PRAYER.

Lord God of our fathers, we would now close this holy, peaceful, and blessed day, which thou in thy great wisdom and mercy hast bestowed upon us, in thanksgiving to thee for the sabbath rest, and the sabbath instructions we have enjoyed; praying thee, that through faith in Christ, who as on this day rose from the dead, the first-fruits of them that sleep, we may attain to that better rest which remaineth for the people of God, when we shall walk before thee in the light of the living. We thank thee, gracious Father, for the gift of the holy scriptures, inspired of thee, which are able to make us wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus; and we desire to feel how great is our responsibility, living as we do under the clear shining of a light so glorious. In God we will praise his word; in the Lord we will praise his word. Do thou enable us to discharge all the vows, and to fulfil all the resolutions to be thine in heart and life, which we have this day been led to form under the preaching of the word. Our hearts are fixed, O Lord; our hearts are fixed; we will sing and give praise. O grant that the impressions of this day may remain with us through the week, so that men may take notice of us that we have been with Jesus. We are exposed to manifold temptations; the love of many waxeth cold; may the Holy Spirit, the sanctifier, without whom we can do nothing, inhabit within us, as in a living temple, and make us thy separated, covenanted, and peculiar heritage. We entreat thee, living and true God, in behalf of thy servants who have this day been labouring in the word and doctrine; that many conversions occurring under their ministry may gladden their hearts; that a banner may be given to them to display because of the truth; and that they may see the walls of Jericho fall before the sound of the gospel trumpet. Do thou go forth with all who devote themselves to the missionary work in foreign lands; approve the great cause of missions to be thine own cause, Lord God Jehovah; disperse to the four winds of heaven all heathen, Mahomedan, and popish delusions; may the clear light of the Star of Bethlehem break through every opposing cloud, till the day come, thou hastening its coming, when as there is one God, Saviour, and Sanctifier in heaven, there shall be one faith, one love, one fold on earth. Even so, come, Lord Jesus! Take unto thee, beloved Lord, thy mighty power, and reign.

Do thou be near, gracious Father, this night, as we sleep, giving us quiet and healthful rest, and if such be thy will, bringing us to the light of another day. Be ever with us, and with all whom we love, whether in health or sickness, whether in prosperity or adversity. Guide us while we live; support us when we are dying; and thereafter receive us to everlasting glory, through the atoning blood of the covenant. And all we ask is for Christ's sake alone. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL II.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—11. This is such a song as became the mother of the infant Samuel, the future judge and prophet of God's people. It breathes a spirit of the most pious gratitude, the loftiest and most ardent devotion, and reminds us of the magnificent hymn of Mary, when saluted as the mother of the promised Saviour, wherein she expresses her profound sense of the eminent and undeserved privilege vouchsafed her in being honoured to usher into the world the expected Messiah. To the coming and character of this Prince and Saviour, Hannah's song of praise distinctly points, under the expressions 'the Lord's King' and 'Anointed.' Rapt into futurity, she is carried out, in her thoughts of the wisdom and holiness of the divine government, to the contemplation of that period when, under his reign, universal order and happiness shall be established, and all the enemies of God silenced for ever. Thus, having obtained her child by earnest prayer, Hannah is not unmindful of the thankfulness due for so signal an answer to her petitions; and one matter of praise suggests another, till, by the spirit of prophecy, she espies some distant gleamings of the glory of the Redeemer's kingdom. The weeping suppliant is converted into the grateful encomiast of the divine power and mercy. In her prosperity she remembers the oppression and dependency of her heart in the season of her distress, that the contrast may exalt her conceptions of the goodness of her God; and she is now as liberal in her thanksgivings as formerly she was loud and frequent in her supplications. Ingratitude has no place in a gracious soul. 'He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him. Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee.'

How exalted is the privilege, and how solemn the personal obligations of those who have been the children of many prayers, the sons of many vows! and to how much esteem are pious mothers entitled, for their usefulness in upholding and perpetuating a knowledge of religion, and a sense of its excellency in the world! To their early instructions have many of the most valuable ministers of the church of Christ been indebted for that incorruptible seed which, taking deep root in their soul, and watered by the dews of divine grace, has afterwards yielded a rich and plenteous harvest. How great the influence, how deep the responsibility of mothers, how invaluable to the world the mother who exercises her influence assiduously and conscientiously for the benefit of the world! Faithful and godly parents are warranted, by scripture, to entertain the highest expectations, from their pious instructions and fervent prayers as a means, by the blessing of God's grace, to work the conversion of their children. Ver. 12—36. But while personal piety and consistency of character are indispensable to the success of parental instructions, let it not be forgotten that these, even thus recommended, may be defeated by imprudence and sinful indulgence. While Samuel was increasing in wisdom as in stature, Eli's sons were becoming the reproach of the nation, and bringing upon themselves and family swift destruction. Destitute not only of a spirit of piety, but lost to all sense of decency, they defiled the very courts of the tabernacle with their abominations, scandalized all Israel by their forcible exactions, their unblushing profligacy, and horrid abuse of divine worship; and provoked God to threaten their whole house with speedy and terrible ruin. Behold the disastrous effects of a neglected education, of early indulgence, of weakness, or timidity, or lenity, on the part of a father, when the honour of God and the good of his children demanded the sternest exercise of authority. Their habits of early purity dissolved, and the energy of their minds destroyed, the young, in this case, become the victims of every unruly lust, a curse instead of a blessing to all around, peculiarly a curse to their parents, who stand chargeable as partners of their crimes, in that, like Eli, they restrained them not. 'The rod and reproof give wisdom: but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame. Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.' At the same time, calmness and moderation, and a disposition to kindness rather than to rigour, should distinguish the governor, whether of a nation or a family. 'Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.'

PRAYER.

O God, thou art he who setteth the solitary in families, and thou hast promised to be the God of all the families of Israel. We praise thee for the endearing ties by which we are united. May they constrain us to pray and labour with a view to one another's true welfare, temporal and eternal. We thank thee for the blessing of godly parents and relatives, and for the unspeakable advantages of early instruction in the fear of the Lord. Alas, O God, how disproportioned has our improvement been to the number of our opportunities! How far short have we come of thy glory! Give us, we beseech thee, a spirit of repentance for our past sins and imperfections. Cleanse us in that fountain thou hast opened to the house of David. And grant unto us wisdom and grace to walk in the way in which thy servants have taught us, to follow their path, considering the end of their conversation, and to set thee, the Lord, ever before us, that thou mayest direct our steps. We bless thee for our preservation through the night, and for the mercies of this morning. We bless thee for the spiritual rest of the past sabbath, for the solemn services of thy sanctuary, and the opportunities we enjoyed of entering into thy courts, and paying our vows unto the Most High. May a sanctifying influence remain upon our hearts from the sacred exercises in which we were then engaged. May thy Spirit seal every good impression upon our hearts. May he lead us into all truth; and, amid the turmoil and business of the world, to which we are about to return, may he call up those motives and considerations by which we should be actuated as the professed disciples of the Lord Jesus. Lord, let not the love of things seen and temporal exclude from our contemplation the invisible realities of the eternal world. Write with thine own finger the solemn truths of thy word upon our souls; and may we be living epistles of Christ, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, known and read of all men. We look to thee for needful support and guidance in the duties and trials of the day. Prepare us for prosperity, its dangers and seductions; prepare us for adversity, its disappointments and bereavements; prepare us for our great and last change, and fit us for spending an eternity with thee. Increase our faith, our spirituality, our heavenly-mindedness; and as every day is bringing us nearer to the hour of our departure, may every day find us living more with a view to our final account, and growing in a meetness for the inheritance of the saints in light. And now, may the very God of peace sanctify us wholly; and we pray God that our whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXIV.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN I. 1—14.

REMARKS.

Ver. 1—6. One important object designed by this Gospel was to confute sundry heresies which, even in the apostolic age, had sprung up in the church, respecting the person, nature, and offices of Jesus Christ

God often brings good out of evil—and so the errors referred to were overruled as an occasion to establish the faith of believers in the eternal Sonship of Christ, in his divine authority and power as a Saviour, and to confirm the discoveries that had already been made of the counsels of heaven in the wonderful work of redemption. Jesus is appropriately called the Word. 1st. In respect of his person; because as our words are the image of our thoughts, so is he the image of the invisible God, the exact impression of his substance; 2dly. In respect of his office; for as our words are the interpretation to others of our mind and will, so has Christ been the great medium through whom the mind and will of the Father have been declared to the church in all ages.

Jesus, under the title of the Word, is identified with God. He existed 'in the beginning,' before the rise of the material universe, and prior to the production of any created being. He was 'with God and was God.' He co-existed with the Father, by virtue of that sameness of substance, and communion of glory and blessedness which subsist among the persons of the Trinity. When God prepared the heavens, he was there as one brought up with him. Yea, by him did God also make the worlds. The whole fabric of the universe, and every living thing that inhabits it, were called into being by his word, and continue to be upheld by his power. These doctrines are authoritatively laid down with the utmost brevity, as plain and indisputable maxims, to be received by us in faith, and with profound humility, under a deep sense that our finite minds are incapable of measuring what is infinite.

In his character of Mediator, Jesus is himself the life of men, because of that eternal life which he has purchased for believers, and to which he will raise them up at the last day. And as he is the source and centre of spiritual life, so is he of spiritual light. Let it be our earnest desire that this may not be our condemnation. Let this fundamental doctrine of the divinity of Christ, so clearly declared in this passage, be the subject of our frequent and serious meditations, that we may see more and more the excellency and all-sufficiency of that redemption in which we are invited to put our trust, and may reap more and more the comfort of believing that 'Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.' Let it not be to our condemnation that light hath come into the world, and we have loved the darkness rather than the light.

It is a weakness, incident to human nature, to entertain an undue esteem of excellent instruments and gifted messengers, and to give ourselves up to an implicit reliance on their guidance, as if they were themselves 'the true light,' instead of mere witnesses to it. Let us ever remember that they are subordinate to Christ, their and our Master and Lord.

Notwithstanding the magnificent preparations made for the reception of Christ in the world, how cruel and ungrateful was the entertainment he met with, even from his visible church of Israel, his own people and countrymen, 'his own' by many ties of gratitude and consanguinity, by covenant and by kindred! External privileges are no proof of a wholesome spiritual state. How many, in the present day, are no better than they! Are we or are we not among the number? How consolatory is it to reflect, that while multitudes in the visible church reject Christ, there are still a chosen few who welcome him as their Redeemer and Lord! And how inestimable the benefits conferred on those who do by faith receive him as all their salvation, and all their desire! 'Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God.'

PRAYER.

O God, we thank thee that thou hast not left thyself without a witness. We bless thee that the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared thee. And with the liveliest gratitude and the deepest reverence would we adore that Word, who in the beginning was with God, and was God, and who, in the fulness of time, came into a world that knew him not, and was made flesh, and shed his precious blood for the offspring of his own creative power, that to as many as received him he might give the privilege to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Forbid, O Lord, that this light having come into the world, the darkness of our corrupt hearts should refuse to comprehend it. As thou didst at first command the light to shine out of darkness, so do thou shine into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. Without wisdom and grace from on high, we must lie lost in the maze of our own follies and errors; for we are of a frail and fallible nature, blinded by sin and prejudice, and bewildered by uncertainty. Enrich our souls, then, with those spiritual gifts of which we stand in need. And, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, may we be led to acquiesce in the wisdom, and to perceive the suitableness, to our wants and circumstances, of that scheme of redemption whereby we are saved, solely of free and sovereign grace, through faith in the righteousness of our divine surety. Merciful God, look upon him whom thou hast pierced, and for his sake restore unto us the joy of thy salvation; take away all our sins, and receive us graciously. We rejoice that he came into the world to save sinners, for sinners we are, O Lord; our own hearts condemn us, much more must thou who art greater than our hearts, and knowest all things. Nevertheless, reject us not, though there be no good in us; but as in Christ, thy Son, thou art ever well pleased, so in him be thou also well pleased with us, and through his meritorious obedience and atoning death, accept of us as righteous in thy sight. While we pray for ourselves, we at the same time offer up our prayers in behalf of a world lying in wickedness. Visit the dark corners of the earth, and cause ignorance and horrid cruelty speedily to disappear before the enlightening and humanizing influence of the Sun of righteousness. Bless, in an eminent manner, our native land, and all orders and degrees of men amongst us. May all in authority rule in thy fear, and may those under them live quiet and peaceable lives, in all godliness and honesty. We pray for the ministers of thy word throughout the land, that they may be men of power, by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, and that by the eloquence of their lives, and the purity of their doctrines, they may draw many from their idols to the service of the living God, and may edify and build up thy people in their most holy faith. Abundantly bless our friends, and graciously forgive our enemies. Finally, O Lord, we pray for all who stand in need of comfort and consolation. Have compassion on the sick and the sorrowful. Mitigate the severities to which the poor are exposed; and do thou put it into the hearts of those to relieve them to whom thou hast given the ability. We commend ourselves to thy care through the night. Let no evil come nigh our dwelling; and if we should see the light of another morning, may we rise refreshed, to follow with new ardour in our Christian course. And all that we ask is for the sake and in the name of Christ. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL III.

REMARKS.

In this chapter we now see Samuel called and established to be a prophet of the Lord. Having been faithful over a few things, he was now to be made ruler over many things. At this time prophecy was rare and precious in Israel: 'there was no open vision,' no persons publicly known to have visions, to whom the people might resort to learn the divine mind and will. Samuel was the first settled and acknowledged prophet since the days of Moses; a circumstance that made his call more surprising and valuable as a token of God's favour to himself and the nation. The manner of God's first manifestation of himself to him was very extraordinary. When Eli, by reason of age, could hardly officiate, the Lord one morning, ere the lamps of the tabernacle were extinguished, called to Samuel by name, as he lay in a bed near to that of Eli. Supposing it to have been Eli's voice, Samuel ran to him to ask his will, but was told he had not called, and was bid lie down again. All this having been thrice repeated, Eli at last suspected that God had spoken to Samuel. He instructed him accordingly, if called any more, to reply, 'Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.' The chapter informs us what was the result. The Lord did appear to his young servant, revealed to him the shocking calamities that would quickly come upon the Hebrews, and especially upon the family of Eli, 'because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not,' and assured him that nothing would prevail with him to continue the succession to the high priesthood in Eli's posterity. At the urgent request of Eli, Samuel reluctantly disclosed to him the purport of his vision, when the aged high priest received the message with an expression of the devoutest submission to the divine will. The door of mercy, as regarded the temporal judgments denounced against him and his house, was now irrevocably shut. The patient submission of Eli on this terrible occasion, is an admirable example of the silent reverence due from us to a righteous and sovereign God, whose dispensations, however painful, are ever more full of mercy than we deserve. 'I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him.' At the same time, the mournful effects of his easy and compliant disposition, in so far as the temporal interests of his family were concerned, may teach us the sad danger of indecision in the affairs of our soul. The blood of Jesus Christ now cleanseth from all sin; but if we secure not an interest in him, while it is yet the accepted time and day of salvation, there remaineth nothing for us but the threatened consequences of guilt and impenitence. Our iniquities shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever. O the dreadfulness of being lost beyond hope or possibility of recovery.

PRAYER.

We adore thee, O Lord, as our continual preserver and benefactor. Thou art never weary in doing us good. Thou givest us all things richly to enjoy. Thou preservest our souls from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. Blessed be God, who daily loadeth us with his benefits, even the God of our salvation. We praise thy name above all, for the high hopes to which thy people are called in thy word, and for the precious promises of an undefiled and unfading inheritance in heaven. Alas! what reason have we to bewail our insensibility to what is noble and exalted in our prospects, when we think of the slight influence they exercise over us, and that unmoved by their native attractions, we require all thy reproofs and threatenings to compel us to attend to our own best interests. O Lord, may the powerful working of thy Holy Spirit overcome our aversion to things spiritual and heavenly. And may he lead us to attend to the things that belong to our eternal peace, lest they be for ever hid from our eyes. May we anticipate the day of Christ's second coming, when he shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, and we shall each appear before his judgment-seat, to receive his award.

grant to us, O God, so to live and watch, that these hopes and expectations may be to us full of joy. May we have our loins habitually girt about with truth, and the lamp of faith burning in our hearts, that we may go forth to meet our Lord with joy, and not with grief, and may enter in with him, ere the door be shut. Be with us, O Lord, this day. Bless us in our out-goings and in-comings, and keep us under the shadow of thy wings. Deliver us from all fears and dangers of a temporal nature, from anguish of mind and pain of body, from being disturbed with worldly cares and griefs, compassed about with wants, and beset with the perils either of poverty or of riches. O thou who providest the ravens their food, and arrayest in beauty the lilies of the field, do thou supply all our returning wants; and give us that composure of mind amid all the dispensations of thy providence which flows from a sense of our dependence on a bountiful and merciful Father, who afflicteth not willingly, nor grieveth the children of men. Above all things, may thy good Spirit keep our souls from the evil that is in the world. May he enable us to resist the wiles and temptations of the devil. And may the grace of God which hath appeared to all men, bringing salvation, effectually teach us to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ. And now unto God the Father, &c.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 8.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN I. 15—51.

REMARKS.

‘All men mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not, and many were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.’ But John himself, faithful to the design of his ministry, uniformly ascribes to Jesus the pre-eminence, and rejoices to acknowledge the superior dignity of his person and office. The one was the Son, the other only the prophet of the Highest; the one the Mediator, the other but the messenger of the New Testament. Ministers of the gospel should ever seek the glory of their Master as their highest end, and carefully guard against any respect to themselves that might encroach on his honour. But even in the daily intercourse of life, the example of the Baptist may teach us to be ready to acknowledge, and not as too many are, meanly jealous of the superior worth and merit in others.

From the beginning of the world, Jesus has been the only revealer of God to the church. The visions spoken of as made by Jehovah to his ancient people, were made by the eternal Son, and with the Father, in essence, will, and counsel.

John was not willing that others should think of him more highly than they ought to think. He would not suffer his character to be misapprehended, even when the mistake seemed to conduce to his honour and advantage. Far from being the Messiah, or Elias, or that eminent prophet whom the Jews expected to be raised up as an illustrious herald of the Messiah, he was but a voice crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord. The design of his mission was to rectify the mistaken views entertained of the person, character, and kingdom of the expected Saviour, and to prepare a passage in the hearts of men, by which he might enter and take possession. This he did by preaching earnestly and importunately the necessity of bringing forth fruits meet for repentance, and by exploding the fond notion entertained by the Jews of the advantages they derived from a carnal descent from Abraham, and from the superstitious observance of the ceremonial law. In token of their admission to new privileges, and their undertaking new obligations, he further administered the holy rite of baptism to his disciples, a circumstance which appears especially to have roused the jealousy of the priests, as implying an entrance into a new communion, and a solemn engagement to the duties of a new rule of religion. To the inquiry of the priests as to his right to administer this ordinance, John in substance replied, that his baptism was not designed to make proselytes to himself, but referred the people for acceptance and salvation to another just about to be manifested. Its efficacy depended on the faith and obedience of Him who is the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, and whose prerogative it is to baptize with the Holy Ghost. Learn from this narrative, that the hearts of men are by nature unprepared to receive Christ. They are insensible of sin, and inflexible to God's will. The extent and requirements of the divine law must therefore be proclaimed, and the thunders of its threatenings launched at the head of the guilty, until their spiritual pride be subdued, and they be shaken out of that false security, that fatal indifference, in which they are locked up, and the conviction of their sinfulness and wretchedness be carried home to their inmost soul. Until the conscience be wounded and pricked, and the heart sees no good in itself, the sinner will never apply in earnest to the Lord Jesus for pardon and salvation. ‘They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick.’

Let us imitate the humility of the Baptist, in abasing ourselves, but also his love to Christ, in exalting the Redeemer, honouring the Lamb of God, and pointing him out for Salvation to all the ends of the earth.

PRAYER.

O thou everlasting Father and prince of peace, we bless thee that thou didst send thy messenger before thee, to prepare thy way, and to bear witness of thee, that all men might believe in thee for the remission of sins. Grant unto us hearts gratefully to receive his testimony, and to believe the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. And believing this record, may we be enabled to imitate in thy service the zeal, and ardour, and sincerity of thy forerunner. May we not be ashamed of the gospel of Christ. Being made partakers of his spiritual baptism, may we rise with him unto newness of life; and knowing him experimentally in the beauty of his person, the perfection of his righteousness, the fullness and all-sufficiency of his grace, may we rejoice to acknowledge our obligations to thee, and to speak of the glories and excellencies of Him, of whom the Father declared, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And may our love and admiration of him appear especially in our earnest desires that those near and dear to us may be brought to taste and see that thou art gracious. O may we all be members of that holy and heavenly family of which God is the Father, Christ the elder brother, and whose spiritual supplies the Holy Ghost graciously furnishes according to the necessities of the several members. We desire, heavenly Father, to bewail before thee the sins and short comings of the past day. Wash us, we unfeignedly beseech thee, in the blood of Jesus Christ, which cleanseth from all sin, and grant us more and more to become one spirit with him, as he became one flesh with us. Write a law of gratitude upon our hearts for the undeserved mercies, temporal and spiritual, we daily enjoy at thy hand; and may our gratitude appear in an increased devotedness to thy service, and a growing conformity to thine image. We pray for others as well as for ourselves. Bless the whole family of mankind, and give success to the means employed for extending to others the religious privileges we ourselves enjoy. May the Sun of righteousness enlighten every land, and the Day-star from on high arise upon those who are living in the shadow of death. We implore thy special blessing on our native country, and that thou wouldst long preserve to her the inestimable benefits of outward peace and inward security. Let thy corn and wine abound, that there may be food in our land for man and beast. Bless all constituted authorities throughout the land. May they legislate and rule in thy fear, and with a single eye to the peace, the happiness, the moral and religious well-being of the whole people. Our friends and relatives, wherever they are, do thou abundantly bless, and keep them from the evil that is in the world, especially from the evil of offending thee. O Lord, we pray for all in every quarter who stand in need of comfort and consolation. Bow down thine ear unto their cry, and sanctify the afflictions with which they are visited to their spiritual improvement and growth in grace. We desire to commit our bodies and souls to thy keeping through the night. Watch over our slumbers, and should we be raised to the light of a new day, may we spend it and all our days in thy fear. And now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in us that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 59—64.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL IV.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

The leading doctrines which this chapter illustrates, are: 1. That the Lord is a holy and a righteous God, not only hating sin, but resolved that it shall not pass unpunished. 2. That God is especially displeased with public sins, or with the sins of his public servants, particularly with those who are appointed to officiate in holy things. 3. That he holds parents and magistrates responsible for the full and vigorous exercise of the powers with which he has entrusted them, for the correction of their children and subjects. 4. That all his purposes are unchangeable, and that when his intimated judgments do not lead sinners to repentance, it may be concluded that they are about to be speedily executed.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

When those persons who, notwithstanding their continued enjoyment of the outward privileges of religion, fall into a state of degeneracy and ungodliness, are visited by God with any of his righteous judgments, they are more apt to complain of the visitation than to improve by it; and, in inquiring into its causes, do think of any thing rather than their own sins, although these are the very things of which it is intended to remind them. Through the force of habit or the influence of superstition, men are often careful to maintain the forms of godliness, long after they have manifestly been denying its power; and because these forms are maintained, they blindly imagine that they are entitled to the divine protection and support. Nay, such persons sometimes place greater confidence in the ordinances and symbols of religion, or in their own unscriptural rites, than in the presence and favour of that God whom they profess to honour. They are satisfied with the sign, and have no enlightened concern about the thing which is signified. They are more concerned that the ark be with them, than to possess ny satisfactory evidence that God is with the ark. They dishonour him more by the observance than they would do by the neglect of his ordinances, because they exalt these ordinances into the place of God himself, or convert them into idols! When such delusions are found to exist even among those who professedly belong to the commonwealth of Israel, no wonder that the heathen and avowed infidels entertain no higher notions of the symbols of God's worship than they do of the images of heathen deities. It is worthy of notice, however, that under the influence of mere natural conscience, there is something appalling in the idea of the presence of the true God, even to those who have no just conception of his attributes. And jealous as he is for his own honour, and important as it is that he should be glorified in the sight of the heathen, yet he will rather let his avowed enemies triumph for a season, and 'deliver his strength into captivity,' than encourage hypocritical or backsliding professors to put their trust in the mere signs and ordinances which he has instituted, while they are indifferent to the presence and blessing of Him who alone is worthy of their confidence. There is something awful in the thought of God's vengeance overtaking impenitent sinners in the midst of their sins, even though, at the moment, they be contending with his open enemies. But it is a relief to the mind to contrast with this the mercy which he mingles with the punishment of those offending servants who have humbled themselves for their offences. When informed that awful calamities were in reserve for himself and his family, Eli devoutly and submissively replied, 'It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good.' He died a most striking death, as a solemn warning to others; but in the hours which preceded his dying, he evidently showed that his personal and family afflictions did not take so deep a hold on his heart as did his concern for the ark and the glory of God. It was this, as in the case of his pious and tender-hearted daughter-in-law, that made him comparatively insensible to all other joys and sorrows. The glory was departed from Israel, and the dying saint, in bewailing the event, gave a pleasing indication, that on his own departure, he was about to be admitted to the open vision of a brighter glory that never should depart!

PRAYER.

Thou art great, O Lord, and greatly to be praised; thou art to be feared above all gods. For all the gods of the nations are idols, but the Lord made the heavens. Honour and majesty are before thee; strength and beauty are in thy sanctuary. Thy glory thou wilt not give to another, neither thy praise to graven images. O Lord, all flesh have corrupted their way before thee. They have all been guilty of departing from the living God. They have not liked to retain God in their knowledge. They have worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Alas! alas! we still feel that the human heart is prone to follow after idols. It still goeth after its covetousness, too readily yielding up to some object of earthly attachment, that place in its affections which thou alone art entitled to occupy. We lament to think how much we are disposed to walk in the sight of our own eyes, and after the imagination of our own hearts, to trust in the wisdom of our own devices, and to go forth in the confidence of our own strength. O teach us that our own wisdom is but folly, and that our own strength is but weakness. Let us no longer worship that which is not God, nor place our trust in an arm of flesh. Let us no longer have any confidence in any of our own purposes or performances, in any of our own services or sufferings, but only in Him who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Have mercy on us, O Lord, notwithstanding our manifold sins and provocations. We would think, both with comfort and with holy awe, of the mercy and judgment which were mingled in thy dealings with thy offending people of old. Thou wast a God that forgavest them, though thou seekest vengeance of their inventions. When thou seest fit to correct us for our iniquities, O do thou remember mercy; and even when we are smarting under the rod of thy chastisements, enable us to say, 'It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good.' As a proof that thou hast not forgotten to be gracious, O help us, even in the deepest of our afflictions, to feel a holy and permanent concern for the glory of thy name, the purity of thy worship, and the triumph of thy gospel. Let each of us be ready to say, Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. Even under the hiding of thy countenance let us be convinced that thou wilt never forsake us utterly. Most merciful God! we have laid us down and slept; we have awaked, for the Lord sustained us. Keep us in thy fear during the whole course of the day, to which thou hast brought us. Amid the various duties and endearments of life, may we never forget that thou God seest us, that thy favour is life, and thy loving-kindness better than life. Show us thy salvation. May we love each other out of a pure heart, fervently, but so that God in Christ Jesus, shall, at all times, be the supreme object of our love. Guide us by thy counsel, and afterwards receive us into glory, through Jesus Christ our strength and Redeemer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LV. 1—4.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN II.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 1, 2. From the circumstance of our Lord's accepting an invitation to be present at a marriage-feast, and from his performing a miracle to supply what was necessary for the entertainment, it is obvious, first, that instead of discountenancing or prohibiting marriage, he was ready to honour it as a divine institution; and, secondly, that on proper occasions, festive entertainments among friends are perfectly consistent with the spirit of his religion, provided that all levity and excess are carefully avoided. In the next place, it is manifest, from the gentle but dignified reproof which our Lord addressed to his mother, when she reminded him that their friends had no wine, that, however amiable might be her motives in so doing, she had no right, as an earthly parent, either to suggest or to dictate to him as to the exercise of his almighty power. His expressions, as exhibited in our language, may seem, at first, to be somewhat awanting in tenderness and respect. It must be remembered, however, that it was only in regard to her mistaken and unwarranted interference that he said, 'What have I to do with thee?' and that in addressing her by the term 'woman,' he made use of an appellation, which, as then employed, was consistent with the utmost respect, the same indeed, by which he afterwards addressed her, under feelings of the most tender endearment, while he was suspended on the cross. But respectful and affectionate as his feelings were to her, he could not permit her to counsel him in the character of the Messiah, as to when, how, or in whose behalf, he should begin the display of his miraculous powers. And if she was not permitted in this respect to counsel him, even in the time of his humiliation, what infatuation and impiety must there be on the part of those, who not only account her altogether sinless, but invoke her to command him, now that he is exalted to the majesty of the heavens! She herself felt very differently, silently submitting to the just reproof, apparently comforted that still he had not refused to do what had been suggested, and exhorting others implicitly to comply with whatever he requested. Ver. 6—11. Public and indubitable miracles are the indispensable and conclusive attestation of a divine commission; but the miracles of our Lord Jesus Christ were intended for a still higher purpose than this. They were intended to 'manifest forth his glory.' This is never said with respect to any other by whom miracles were wrought. He was more than a messenger, teacher, or prophet, sent from God. The mighty works which he performed, were performed, not by a power which was merely imparted to him, but by a power which was inherent in him as one with the Father.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

In entering by marriage into the most important and endearing relation of human life, those who are professedly the friends of Christ should see that they proceed in such a way that they may consistently pray for, and reasonably expect, the honour and blessing of his spiritual presence; and it will always be found that those social scenes and occasions are the happiest in which our conversation is most strictly such as becomes the gospel, and in which we have a lively and abiding sense that even then his eyes are upon us. We must never, either from zeal for his glory, or from a desire to promote the comfort of others, far less from any less honourable motive, presume to dictate what course of procedure it becomes him to pursue: and when he finds occasion to reprove us, we must not only take it patiently, but be so much the more ready to leave all things to his disposal, and exhort others implicitly to obey him.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most blessed God, we adore and worship thee as the king eternal, immortal, and invisible. No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. Great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh. We thank thee that the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. We rejoice to know, that he is the one Mediator between God and man, and it is through him alone, that we now venture to approach thy footstool. We bless thee, O Lord, that while it pleased thee that in him all the fulness of the Godhead should dwell, and that all men should honour the Son even as also they honour the Father, he graciously condescended, after becoming a partaker of our nature, to partake of the innocent enjoyments of human life, and to adorn and hallow, by his presence, the meetings of those who rejoiced with trembling, and who were ready to receive him as the sent of God. We bless thee that although he came to bear our griefs and carry our sorrows, he graciously shared in the endearments and in the joys of those who, by seeking his fellowship, showed that, even in their gladness, the fear of God was before their eyes. We bless thee, that great as was his zeal for the manifestation of the glory of God, great also was his zeal in doing good to the souls and bodies of men, seeking to leave a blessing behind him in every family into which he entered. We give thee thanks, O Lord, for the gracious invitations which he has addressed to us in the gospel. O that we may listen to his voice, Come eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Having professedly believed on him for his works' sake—having believed the testimony which thou hast given us of thy Son—having been persuaded and captivated by the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth; may we be ever careful to adorn the doctrines of God our Saviour; and wherever we are, in whatever society we appear, whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, may we do all to the glory of God. And now, most merciful Father, if, in the course of the past day, we have at any time forgotten the invisible presence in which we were placed; if in the intercourse of business, the relaxations of society, or the endearments of the family circle, we have done any thing which our divine Master would not have countenanced, and cannot approve; do thou, for his sake, graciously forgive us. Thou knowest what is in each of us; O do thou cleanse us from all filthiness of the flesh, and of the Spirit. May our bodies and souls be as living temples of the Holy Ghost; and may we be prepared at last for being admitted into the society and the felicities of the upper sanctuary, amid the spirits of just men made perfect. We would now, O Lord, both lay us down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest us dwell in safety. And all we ask, is through Jesus Christ, the Son of thy love. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXVIII. 24—29.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL IX.

REMARKS.

Several important ends are often served by a single event or dispensation of God's providence. For the sins of his ancient people, he permitted the ark to be taken by their enemies, and yet the latter, for the impiety of taking it, were visited with such signal disasters, that they were anxious to get quit of the possession, although they were allowed for many years to oppress the Israelites. By the divine blessing on the pious and unceasing labours of Samuel, this people were at length brought to repentance, and exhibited the signs of a very general and powerful revival in religion. Still, however, there were many things with which God was not well pleased. Toward the latter end of Samuel's life, 'he made his sons judges over Israel;' and although this appears to have been done with general approbation, yet they were afterwards found to be guilty of perverting judgment. With this the people were far more offended than they had been, on other occasions, with sins of the grossest enormity against God; and being weary of being ruled by prophets and judges, they came to Samuel with an urgent application that, like the nations around them, they might have a king to govern them. Samuel was displeased with the proposal, but laid it before the Lord in prayer. God told him that he regarded it as a rejection not so much of his servant as of himself. 'They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me.' Yet he commanded him to hearken to their voice, but 'solemnly to protest unto them,' and to 'show unto them the manner of the king that should reign over them.' They still insisted, however, on having a king to fight their battles; and, to use God's own words, as elsewhere recorded, (Hos. xiii. 11.) 'I gave thee a king in mine anger;' one who should be a fit instrument, not only for punishing them on account of their sin and rebellion, but, at the same time, for successfully conducting them against their warlike enemies. It is evident, then, that here we have an instance of God's doing all things according to the counsel of his will, and that in granting the wishes of his creatures he frequently has ends in view which they are far from contemplating. God raises up and selects those individuals who are peculiarly fitted, both in body and mind, for the duties which he assigns to them, but this is not to be understood as implying, in every case, an approbation of their character. The accomplishment of his purposes is generally brought about by the agency of secondary causes, and often by the agency of persons to whom these purposes are altogether unknown, who are influenced by motives unconnected with any desire to do him honour, and who are directed in their movements by circumstances apparently the most accidental or trivial.

It is very remarkable that, although the elders and people of Israel started the proposal of having a king, and peremptorily insisted on its being carried into effect, yet they did not propose any individual to be exalted to that high dignity, and that none of all their leading men set himself forth as a candidate for such a distinction. They were bent on their own plan, yet they left it to Samuel, or rather to him whose servant he was, to carry it into effect, saying, 'Make us a king; give us a king to judge us.' Thus we find, that even while, in one sense, they rejected God, they did not forget the direction which their fathers had long before received, (Deut. xvii. 15.) 'Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose.' In this respect they are worthy of commendation; but let us see that, in all things, we commit our way to the Lord. Let us regard less temporal losses than the loss of the soul; honour God's servants for 'their works' sake,' acknowledge God in every thing, and make no delay in doing what he commands.

PRAYER.

Ever blessed and most glorious God, how unsearchable are thy judgments, and thy ways past finding out! Thou doest according to thy will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay thy hand, or say unto thee, What doest thou? Thou art the Most High, who rulest in the kingdom of men, and givest it to whomsoever thou wilt. Thou art God, and there is none else. Thou declarest the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure. Thou preservest and governest all thy creatures and all their actions. Thou leavest them, while answerable to thee, to follow the dictates of their own feelings and inclinations, and yet overrulest these for the accomplishment of thine own purposes. Thou guidest them by a hand unseen, and leadest them by a way which they have not known. The heart of a man deviseth his way, but the Lord directeth his steps. The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord. O Lord, we have been guilty of departing from thee, the living God. All of us, like sheep, have gone astray. When we are the farthest from thee, we are the least disposed to understand our errors or seek after God. O turn away our hearts and our eyes from beholding vanity; and quicken thou us in thy way. Instead of being eagerly engaged in pursuing some of the various forms of worldly honour, advantage, or enjoyment, do thou teach us to seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things, so far as needful, shall be added unto us. We thank thee, O Lord, that thou sentest thy Son into the world, to seek and to save that which was lost; that all who believe in his name have been chosen in him before the foundation of the world; and that he has solemnly declared, 'Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out.' Enable us, we beseech thee, cordially to accept of his gracious invitations; to embrace him as all our salvation and all our desire; to submit ourselves to his authority as our only spiritual sovereign; to place ourselves and all our affairs entirely at his disposal; to render him the undivided homage of our affections and our lives; and to rejoice in the blessed prospect of being made partakers with him in the kingdom which he has purchased and prepared for all them that love him. Heavenly Father, we are unworthy of the very least of thy favours. We are unworthy either of the bounties of thy providence, or of the privileges and ordinances of thy gospel. We are unworthy either to hear or to declare 'the word of reconciliation;' yet may we not on this, or on any other ground, presume to decline any duty to which thou art pleased to call us. In every department of thy service, grant us grace to be found faithful, and honour us, if it seem good in thy sight, with an abundant measure of success. Father of mercies, do thou this morning accept of and bless the sacrifice of our adoration and gratitude for all thy goodness both to our bodies and to our souls. We would set out on the journey and duties of the present day, beseeching thee, with thine eye set upon us, to give us direction. Show us, in all things, what thou wouldest have us to do or to avoid; and be thou ever at our right hand, that we may not be moved. Pardon the sins of these our services, and accept of and answer us, for the sake of Jesus Christ thy Son; and the glory be thine, now and for evermore. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLI. 3—6.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN III.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

Ver. 4, 11. Our Saviour, in striking terms, teaches Nicodemus the necessity of being made spiritually and morally a new creature, before he could enter into the kingdom of God. Nicodemus could not comprehend his meaning, and marvelling how these things could be, received no other reply than by being referred to some of those terrestrial changes of the reality of which he could not doubt, although he was necessarily ignorant of the mode in which they were produced. If the agency of the wind is known only by its effects, why should we expect to have any other way of knowing the agency of the Spirit in the regeneration of the soul? The more to convince Nicodemus of the unreasonableness of his doubts, Jesus told him that he here spoke of what he knew, and testified of what he had seen, and appealed to him if it was consistent with the profession which he had already made of his belief that he was a teacher come from God, thus to hesitate in receiving his testimony, merely because it related to a subject, in some respects, above the reach of his faculties. Ver. 12, 13. Jesus had to tell him, moreover, of higher things than these; of things, compared with which these might, in several respects, be justly denominated earthly things. He had to tell him of heavenly things, things which were altogether beyond and above human observation; things which rested entirely on his individual testimony, as the individual who alone had come down from heaven, and whose own mysterious nature as 'God with us,' constituted one of the sublimest of those wonders which he had to reveal; for, at the very moment that he spoke to him, he was the Son of man, who even then was in heaven! Our Saviour intimates to Nicodemus other doctrines of vast interest and importance, declaring the love of God and the way of life to him, and the danger of those who rejected it, the guilt being their own.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

The Lord Jesus Christ is ready to receive all who come to him under anxieties on religious subjects. He is tender toward their infirmities, and knows, even when their faith is in the weakest state, to what a measure of strength and courage it may ultimately tain. The origin of our spiritual disease, as sinners, is in the heart, and therefore the renewing of the heart must form the first part of our spiritual cure. This, and not merely a reformation of outward morals, is absolutely indispensable to our being made meet for the kingdom of God. The Holy Spirit is the sole author of this blessed change in the soul, with all its faculties and affections; and instead of perplexing ourselves about the mode and mysteries of his operation, our great concern should be to pray that it may be exerted on our souls, and that we may ascertain its reality by experiencing its sanctifying and comforting effects. The testimony of one accredited by miracles should be sufficient to silence all our objections, and fully to settle our belief, even in regard to those sublime doctrines and mysteries of redemption which it could never have entered into the heart of man to conceive. Of these, Jesus is the original, 'the faithful and true witness;' and here he may justly be said to 'bear witness of himself,' for the first of them has immediate reference to the union of the divine and human nature in his own person, that 'great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh!' If any thing can add to the amazement which the announcement of such a fact is fitted to produce, it is the farther declaration that the end for which he became a partaker of our nature, was one which made it absolutely necessary that he should be lifted up, or be put to an excruciating and ignominious death on the cross, as a sacrifice for our sins. It is only by faith in this crucified Redeemer that sinners can be saved; but such is the efficacy of his death, such the freeness and fulness of the salvation which he thus bestows, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish but shall have eternal life. And all this glorious plan has originated in the love of God to a guilty world! How good, how transcendently and ineffably great must such love have been! And how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?

PRAYER.

O Lord, thou art the Father of the spirits of all flesh. Thou madest man at first in thine own image, in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness, and crownedst him with glory and honour. But we have sinned, O God, and are by nature the children of wrath even as others. Thou, O Lord, art glorious in holiness; evil cannot dwell with thee; and into thy presence nothing that defileth can enter. We desire to feel the momentousness of the declaration addressed to us by Him who alone can show us the Father, and who is the one Mediator between God and man, and that we must be born again; that except we be born of the Spirit, we cannot enter into the kingdom of God. We thank thee for the blessed assurance which he also has given us, that thou wilt give the Holy Spirit to them that ask thee. Breathe on us, O Lord, and say to us, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. May the Spirit convince us, if not already convinced, of our sin and misery; may he enlighten our minds in the knowledge of Christ; may he renew our wills; and thus may he persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ, as he is freely offered to us in the gospel. We adore and magnify thy name, most gracious God, for that infinite, unchangeable, and everlasting love which prompted thee to send thine only-begotten and well-beloved Son into the world, in the likeness of sinful flesh, to become the propitiation for our sins, and by his obedience unto death, by his perfect, his meritorious, his infinite righteousness, to justify the ungodly, even as many as believe in his name. When we think of thine utter abhorrence of sin and of the awful extent in which it has polluted our whole souls, and when we think, at the same time, of thine ineffable delight in Him who was the brightness of thy glory, and the express image of thy person, how shall we speak of that love wherewith thou hast loved us, when thou sparedst not thine own Son, but deliveredst him up for us all! This is, indeed, a love which passeth knowledge. O that we may love Him who first loved us. O that we may show our love by the keeping of his commandments. O that we may thus adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour, by a life and conversation such as becometh the gospel, and thus have the happiness of finding that thy Spirit, by the increase of his graces in our souls, is testifying with our spirits, that we are born again, and that our works are wrought in God. O Lord, we feel that we need to be daily renewed unto repentance. Pardon, we beseech thee, the sins of the past day. This night be at peace with our souls; give us refreshing sleep; and, when the night of death overtakes us, may we have an entrance ministered to us abundantly into thine everlasting kingdom—into the rest which remaineth for the people of God. And all that we ask, is for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVIII. 5—8.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL X.

REMARKS.

The history given us in this chapter is instructive, as well as affecting. We have to take notice in it especially of the character of Saul, and that of the people of Israel, in the circumstances in which both were placed: and the dealings of God, both with Saul, and with them, are such as ought to warn and admonish us, as with a voice from heaven, (which, indeed, all scripture is,) that we be not ourselves found in the same condemnation.

With respect to Saul, how fair and promising is his outset in the course, which divine providence was opening before him! and yet how mournful and dismal the close of it, as we learn from the chapters succeeding. And from all this history of his life, yea, and of his death, we must see, that the fair profession he was making, as recorded in this chapter, was not sincere, or arising from true spiritual principles. How deceitful is the human heart! 'Who can know it?' and it is to our inward principles God especially looks. Many there have been, and many there are, like Saul, who, to outward appearance, did 'begin to run well;' and yet are hindered, and turned aside, by the unsubdued corruptions of their own hearts. Let each of us see that he be not of the number. Nor is there any root of bitterness more deceitful, more dangerous, more ruinous, than love of the world, of its glory and vanities. How impressively are we taught by the history of Saul the son of Kish, the vanity of all worldly acquisitions, when we prefer them in our hearts, to the things of God. But in this chapter too, we may learn much from the character of the people of Israel. It was worldly pride, vanity, and ambition, with distrust of God, that caused them to desire a king: not that they might serve God the better; but that they might be like the other nations around them. The kingly office, in itself, is an ordinance of God; but in their circumstances then they had no right to demand it. God had manifested to them and their fathers that he was able and willing to protect and to bless them, even without an earthly king; but they disbelieved God, and rejected his counsel. It is a very awful judgment when God grants those requests which an individual or a people may make, or the wishes they cherish, when these requests or wishes are in opposition to the revealed will of God! And so it was to the tribes of Israel, in the case of Saul. God granted their ungodly request, but there was a curse from him upon it to the nation of Israel. For a season they seemed to prosper with their new king: but as they did not ask him in the fear of God, so neither did they and he, in their new relation to each other, follow the commandment of God, and it ended in shame and abasement to both. How often had God led forth this people to victory over their enemies, even when they were but few, and their enemies many and mighty! How often did the arm of the Lord command deliverances for them! But behold them going forth under the king they had sought, and trusting in their own strength and wisdom,—in an arm of flesh; and what is the grievous result? The lamentation of David will tell us. (2 Sam. i. 17, &c.)

PRAYER.

Almighty and everlasting God, we are thy creatures, and thou ever rulest over us by thy power. Enable us to feel with solemnity of spirit, and in the exercise of faith, that it is with thee in all things we have indeed to do. What have we that is not thine; and what are all our possessions without thy blessing and favour. However small our portion of the good things of this life, with thy blessing we shall be happy, and without it we can only have indignation and wrath as our portion, both now and for ever. We confess before thee, that our hearts are by nature worldly, sinful, and altogether polluted, that our affections are estranged from thee, our understandings darkened, and our imaginations vain and evil, and that continually. We are children of disobedience, and therefore heirs of wrath. Thou, O God, hast been pleased to reveal thy grace, thine abounding grace, by Jesus Christ thy Son, who is one with thee, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. By him thou hast perfected, and thou hast brought nigh unto us, a way of deliverance from the wrath to come; and a way of access to every blessing of thy favour, both in time and eternity. But we confess before thee, that we have not given due heed to the salvation which his glorious gospel proclaims, and freely offers. In all these things, we have grievously sinned: we have done despite to thy beloved Son, and to thy Holy Spirit: and we have peculiarly deserved the wrath of God. O Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable sinners. We do beseech thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, and for his sake, to enlighten our understanding, that we may behold of thy divine glory; and that we may learn the exceeding sinfulness of sin, the sin which is in us, each one; and that we may truly repent and turn to thee, with grief and hatred of our sin, and with full purpose and endeavour after new obedience. For this end, O be thou pleased to renew our will, and persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ, as he is freely offered to us in the gospel. Send thy Spirit, thy blessed, gracious, almighty Spirit, who is one with the Father, and with the Son, that he may work in us effectually; that he may lead us to Christ, that he may unite us to Christ by living faith, and that being so united to him who is the head, we may be members indeed of his body, the church, and in him be new creatures; and that a new heart may be created in us, and a right spirit implanted in us. Save us, O Lord, from trusting to any righteousness or deeds of our own, for salvation. Save us from being satisfied with being outwardly numbered with thy people. Save us, O Lord, from the power of the world, and from all its vanities. Save us from deceiving ourselves, thinking that we are converted, if thou seest us to be still unconverted. Bless to each one of us thy holy word: may we be instructed savingly by it. Bless to our souls the whole means of grace, private and public. Pour forth thy Spirit upon us, and upon all who are outwardly privileged as we are, that we and they may be sanctified by the truth; thy word is truth. Thou hast promised thy blessing upon the provision of Zion; O fulfil thy promise through Jesus Christ, and by his Spirit, that thy name may be glorified, and thy church increased every where on earth, and perishing sinners saved. Bless, O God, all thy people on earth, and all thy servants in the gospel of thy Son. May thy glorious gospel go forth unto the utmost ends of the earth; and hasten the time when they shall remember, and turn to thee. We thank thee, as the God of our mercies, for the rest of the past night, and for the blessings and comforts of a new day. We would dedicate ourselves, and all that is ours, every day to thee. Preserve us this day from all evil and danger, and from all the ways of temptation. May we commune with thee in our hearts, amidst all the labours of our hands. Give thy blessing to our lot and our portion; and encompass us with thy favour as with a shield. Bless all our friends, forgive our enemies, and give us forgiving hearts; and may the law of kindness to all men be in our spirit continually. Prepare us for all thy holy will, conducting us by thy counsel. And graciously hear and answer these our united supplications, which we offer in the name, and through the merits and intercession of Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, be all praise and glory for ever. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVII. 1—7.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN IV. 1—30.

REMARKS.

The people of Judah and Samaria, for their sins, had been carried away captive by the king of Assyria. After a lengthened period, they were restored, in the forbearance of God, to their own land. But the Samaritans continued to go on in their ways of sin, even openly rejecting the true worship of God according to his word; after they had been restored to their land. They were mixed and mingled very much with heathens: and they persisted, till the Saviour's time, in the same evil course, though frequently chastised of God for their sins. The remnant of the kingdom of Judah, who had returned from captivity, had re-built the temple of Jerusalem; and the worship of God, according to his law, had been re-established there, and in outward form at least maintained till the Saviour's time on earth, and at that period. The Jews, that is, the people of the kingdom of Judah, having no dealings with the Samaritans, arose, from the opposite courses which each of them, as a people, followed: and as some historians inform us, in consequence of a particular edict issued to that effect by the sanhedrim or council of the Jews. But we may learn, in this portion of scripture, the kindness and condescension of the adorable Redeemer. He was not restrained by such considerations from showing his own mercy and grace to this individual, or to others of the Samaritans. This enmity between the two nations was not dictated by the law of God: such an edict as would forbid mutual intercourse in the kindly offices of life between them, he could not countenance; and by his holy example he reproves it, and all such enmities. He had, indeed, in his own divine mind, a purpose of grace toward the person here spoken of, as well as toward her neighbours, who, we are told, believed upon him: and the expression, 'he must needs go through Samaria,' may be supposed to signify this; as it is known that he might have travelled by another way from out of Judea into Galilee. The conduct and behaviour of this woman, exhibits to us very strongly the character of sinners in general. At the beginning of the Saviour's conversation with her, she shows her own ignorance of all spiritual things. Yet she boasts of what she no doubt considered her own spiritual or religious privileges. 'Our fathers worshipped in this mountain,' that is, mount Gerizim, on which the Samaritans had built their temple. She is quite satisfied of being in the right way; not from any true understanding in her own mind, of the worship of God, which was due to him, and which he commanded; but because her fathers had followed this way. And then, let us observe her judgment on the points of difference between them and the Jews: 'Ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.' There is no reference made by her to the authority or commandment of God. She does not know it. She says and does, what many, many, alas, in our own days, say and do:—thinking that one form or way of worship is just as good as another; and that all may be equally right. We see how the blessed Lord Jesus reproves this state of mind, and all such worship; how he condemns it. And we see here farther, how he causes this erring, unbelieving, and self-righteous person, to feel the truth of his sayings, and to acknowledge the holiness, the truth, the divinity of his person and character. When she is made to apprehend this,—then she confesses her sins, she respects and reverences the Saviour; and she hastens to make others acquainted with what she now feels in her own soul to be both truth and salvation. And so will it be with all who become spiritually acquainted with Christ. To know him in his work and offices, in his person and character, is the very beginning and foundation in the soul of all true godliness. Then will our former worship be seen to be worthless and sinful, yea, all that ever we did; while we knew not in truth the one living and true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he hath sent. Then will we confess our sins, and turn from them to God; and then will we seek that others also should be blest with the same blessings. May we seek knowledge of him. He has come nigh to every one of us by his word, his own gospel, in which he proclaims and offers himself. The testimony of his people given us in the scriptures, calls us to him, as the testimony of this woman called the men of Samaria. And he is now the same Saviour, the same compassionate Redeemer, as he then was. And seeking unto him, we shall experience the power of his divine teaching, by his Holy Spirit, who is one with him; and who, he promises, will come and supply his personal presence on earth: and then shall Christ tarry with us, and we in blessed communion of faith with him.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we come before thee in the name of Jesus Christ thy Son, and unto thee would we seek by him who is the way, and the truth, and the life. We are altogether unworthy and undeserving of thy mercy or favour; but thou, in thine everlasting grace, hast ordained salvation for such guilty sinners as we are. Thou hast sent thy beloved Son into the world in our likeness; and we would bless thy name, as God manifested by him, that he hath given us sure testimony of thy loving-kindnesses, and of thy tender mercies. We would render thanksgiving to thee that we have been favoured with the revelation of the glorious gospel. O Lord, we confess our abuse of this great and precious blessing, in our not being led by it to seek thy salvation as the one thing needful. Suffer us not, we humbly entreat thee, to be satisfied with a form of godliness. Thou art declaring to us by thy Son that those who worship thee, must worship thee in spirit and in truth. Awaken thou our souls to see our need of being made truly such worshippers of thee, as God and our God. Thy Spirit is good, lead thou us into the land of uprightness; into this spiritual saving knowledge of thyself, which would effectually incline our hearts to worship, to love, and to serve thee continually. Thou art thoroughly acquainted with our hearts each one. And if thou knowest any one of us now before thee to be yet ignorant of thyself, and worshipping thee only in the oldness of the letter, O may thy blessed Spirit quicken us, giving us life. And as we read the kindness of Christ, his compassion to sinners, so we know, that as he was and is, such is the Spirit also, as one with him in the glorious Godhead; and in applying the work of salvation to sinners, in coming to them, and dwelling with them, converting and sanctifying the soul. May he come to us, and in our hearts may he dwell, that we may truly know the truth of all that Jesus Christ declares to us by his living word of truth; and knowing and feeling the truth in its power, may we flee to himself, who is alone our sure refuge, our righteousness, and our strength.

May we be quickened together with him; and may we be kept learning of him, and growing in conformity to his blessed and holy image. And by thy word may each of us be daily enabled to lay aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speaking; and may we, as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of his holy word, that we may grow thereby. Forgive our sins, which we have this day committed against thee, whether in heart, in speech, or in conduct. And, O grant, that by thy grace ruling in us, we may be daily more and more dying unto sin and living unto righteousness. Enable us to show forth the praises of him who calleth us; and every day of our lives to be looking forward to the day of his coming, when we must render an account at his judgment-seat of all our deeds. Give us this night, in him, thy blessing and favour. Let no evil come nigh our dwelling. May we be safe in thy keeping; and if brought to another day, may we rise again in thy fear; and may our hearts seek the Lord, and live. We commend to thee, in Jesus Christ, all for whom we ought to pray. Command thou thy blessings in and through him upon them. O may thy kingdom come; and may our kindred, and friends, and neighbours, be blest in its coming to them truly in power. And may it be extended throughout the whole world, until all the families of mankind shall worship thee in spirit and in truth. May all who love thee and thy salvation, prosper. May our lot and our inheritance, and all the dealings of thy providence towards us, be blessed of thee to us unitedly, and to each one of us. Prepare us for all thy holy will, and keep us by thy power, through faith unto salvation. And all that we ask is in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, to whom, with thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, be all power, and praise, and glory. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXVI. 8—12.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL XV.

REMARKS.

It is evident that Saul had never yet learned to set the will of God before his own will. The commission which Saul now received from God, by the hands of Samuel, was clear and explicit in its terms. There could be no mistaking of the matter; and, moreover, Saul did solemnly undertake to fulfil it. He assembles the army of Israel to do this. It is true the commission he received was a very terrible one, but it had come from God, by direct communieducation, and he had no right to dispute its terms; and he makes, besides, profession outwardly of receiving it with all due submission and reverence, and apparently he hastens to fulfil it. But in course of doing this his worldly affections were awakened; his covetousness, his love of the world, and his vain-glory. It is most probable, from the narrative given in this chapter, (ver. 8, 9.) that the proposal of sparing Agag, 'and the best of the sheep, and the oxen, and the fatlings, and all that was good,' originated with Saul himself. In sparing Agag, no doubt he was led by vain-glory, wishing to exhibit himself a great worldly conqueror on his return, by leading a king as his captive, and exhibiting him publicly; and in sparing the sheep, and oxen, and fatlings, he was influenced by covetousness, the desire of possessing what God had forbidden to be possessed by him or by the people. No doubt there were many among the people who would very readily join Saul in this counsel of saving the spoil, expecting their share of its profit. But it is equally clear that if Saul himself had adhered to the commandment of God, the people would have obeyed him. How important and how responsible is the situation of public men, of persons set over others; and how watchful ought they to be that their example be found on the side of righteousness and truth! And this applies in all its force to every one in all the relations of life—to parents and masters, to children, to servants, to neighbours, and friends, and acquaintances, mutually, for there is none whose example may not influence some others of those around him. Now, behold, in the case of Saul, how the committing of sin, of known sin, hardens the heart, and blinds and stifles the conscience of the sinner. When Saul and Samuel met, Saul says, 'I have performed the commandment of the Lord.' How daring this! How pointed and how meek in dignity is the reproof of Samuel, ver. 14. And then, how mean as well as false is the defence of Saul, laying the whole blame upon the people! But such is the nature of sin, and such its consequences in every case. It leads the miserable sinner farther and farther astray from God, and from the path of rectitude. But great peace have they who love God's law. Saul indeed pleads that he feared the people, ver. 24.; but so did Pilate, or desired to please them, when he condemned Christ unjustly. To be actuated by the fear of public censure, or by the love of popular praise, to do what is contrary to God's word, is not only sinful, but a heavy aggravation of sin. Behold, in the consequences that came upon Saul, the justice and the severity of God! Behold it, too, in the miserable end of Agag, the king of the Amalekites. With respect to the severe commandment against the Amalekites, which had been given from God, we can only say, 'Shall not the judge of all the earth do righteously?' We may rest assured that the sins of that nation had been of a very fearful and grievous kind indeed, ere God had given such commandment concerning them. Their cup had been filled; and when the measure of a nation's or of an individual's iniquity is filled up, there is a period at which the judgments of God will not longer tarry. May we all turn to God, while to us he waits to be gracious.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we confess and lament in thy presence that our hearts by nature are altogether unfaithful to thee and to thy glory's cause, in our own souls, and in the world, and that we are continually transgressing against thee. We are by nature lovers of sin, and not of righteousness and holiness. We beseech thee, O Lord, to have mercy upon us, and to visit our souls with thy salvation, sending to us, for the sake of Jesus Christ, thy Holy Spirit, to convince us of the real evil, the exceeding sinfulness of sin, that we may truly repent, and turn from sin to thee, with all our hearts. And we stand in need of receiving from thee that new heart which thou art promising to give; for without thee, and without thine effectual working in us to that end, we can do nothing aright; we cannot glorify thee as God and our God. They who are in the flesh cannot please God. We pray that thou wouldst be pleased to remember us in the love thou bearest to thine own, the unspeakable love thou hast manifested by Jesus Christ, thy Son, to perishing, guilty, unworthy sinners. Such sinners are we; and, O Lord, for his sake on whom thou didst lay the chastisement of iniquity, we pray that thou wouldst forgive our sins that are past, working in us faith in his glorious name, and enabling us, through faith, to receive the atonement which he made as our own, for, blessed be thy name, to us it is offered. We confess before thee our inability to receive it. But we come to thee, in his name in whom thou art well pleased, and we would say, We desire to believe, Lord, help thou our unbelief, and enable us to be conquerors over it. O that we were, by the faith of thy Spirit, united to thy Son, that having in him a perfect righteousness imputed to us, we might be accepted in thy sight, and that we might be partakers also of his life. Enable us, at this time, to receive with meekness the engrafted word. May we fear lest there be in any one of us the evil heart of unbelief which departs from the living God; and if thou seest any one of us still to have it, while we may be deceiving ourselves, may we fear when we read of those who had such a promising outward appearance, and yet who were not separated from their sins, because not received in the spirit of their mind. We thank thee for the mercies of the night past, and of this day. Command thy blessings this day upon us, as individuals and as a family. May we be kept and preserved from evil, from danger, from temptations, and from sin. May we walk in thy fear; and may we know the path of duty, in the light of the knowledge of thy glory shining in our hearts according to thy word; and may no iniquity obtain dominion over us. Another of our weeks on earth draws to an end. Our times are wholly in thy hands. May we be found redeeming the time; and, O Lord, do thou prepare us for thine approaching sabbath. May we this day walk in looking forward to it, and may we receive from thee the preparation of the heart. Prepare thy blessed ordinances of the sabbath for us, and us for them. Prepare thy servants to preach and teach the everlasting gospel; and do thou, by thy Spirit, bless it in their hands to the conversion of sinners, and to the edifying of thy people. Guide us by thy counsel. Uphold thou our goings, that we may glorify thy name. Take away our sins, and graciously hear and answer our prayers, for Christ's sake. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXII. 27—30.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN IV. 31—54.

REMARKS.

The zeal of the Redeemer is accompanied by the most considerate kindness. He knows our frame, and remembers that we are dust. His disciples had gone into the city to buy bread, and having obtained a supply, probably of the simplest, if not of the coarsest kind, they return and beseech their Lord to partake of their humble fare. And while his holy zeal for his Father's glory drinks up, as it were, his spirit, and quenches his bodily appetite, he sympathises with his disciples, not reproving them, far less taunting them for the unavoidable care they now were taking to supply his bodily wants and their own. But he bears them witness how earnestly and entirely he is occupied in the business of his heavenly message and embassy. And not only does he here testify his zeal in that glorious cause, but the satisfaction and pleasure he had in it: 'My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.' We must then examine ourselves, and see whether we be partakers of the same spirit of mind. But we also see that the Lord Jesus looks forward with earnest desire, in the exercise of his own unspeakable love, to the increase of his own and his Father's kingdom on earth, in the salvation of perishing sinners. The disciples would naturally think that there was no great prospect of the Samaritans believing in Christ and turning to God. But God seeth and judgeth not as man sees and judges. Where we may think it most unlikely and improbable that the gospel of Christ shall have any success, there God may be preparing a people for himself, to show forth his praise. The kingdom and the power are his. Our duty is to be up and doing, each one of us to be holding forth the word of life, and waiting upon God, who alone giveth the increase, to bless it. And when we least expect, then the powerful work of the Holy Spirit may be already beginning, and may be even now about to be manifested for the salvation of perishing souls. The account given us here of the Samaritans, is both interesting and striking. When the woman went and told them of Christ, they were led to believe that surely this must be a divine person; and we doubt not but they saw some such change manifested in the woman's own conversation and conduct, as showed that she was now indeed an altered person. This led them to Christ; and having come to him, and learned of him, then they say, 'Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.' And so has it always been. When the power of true godliness, in souls already converted, is made a means of bringing others still unconverted to consider their own ways, they too, when once they are brought truly to seek the Lord, will soon have the witness given them, in themselves, of what Christ is, and what true godliness is. And O how blessed the state of those who know, in truth, that he is indeed the Saviour to themselves! The report of the notable miracle which Jesus had wrought at Cana, on a former occasion, appears to have reached this nobleman at Capernaum. He comes to Christ, and the blessed Redeemer receives him, and did for him indeed exceeding abundantly above all that he asked or thought. Many will come to God in times of distress and suffering, and of threatened calamity. And very often God, in the dispensations of his providence, does order that to be accomplished which they so earnestly sought. But woe to them whose hearts are hardened more and more, after having received such manifestations of the goodness of God, even in temporal deliverances. They are in a very fearful condition.

PRAYER.

O Lord, what are we, thy sinful, rebellious creatures, that thou shouldst look upon us, or condescend to visit us in such loving-kindness and tender mercy as thou art manifesting in thy glorious gospel, by Jesus Christ. We have broken thy holy law, and our whole nature, and our words and deeds form one continued scene of sin and transgression against thee. And yet thou art making manifest, by Jesus Christ, thy Son, that thou hast no pleasure in our death, but art wishing that we should turn unto thee and live. None ever had more need of being turned unto thee than we have. Turn thou us, and we shall be turned. Send forth thy light with thy truth to our souls, with power and efficacy from on high. O that we felt in our own souls the need we have of Christ, and of his gracious kindness, compassion, and love, and of his almighty power to save. O may we hasten to come unto him while he is yet, by his word, and by all its appointed means, even teaching in the midst of us, and declaring to us the glad tidings of great joy. May the time past be to us more than sufficient to have done the will of the flesh, and to be subject to sin and vanity, bringing down upon ourselves the sure wrath of God; and may we now feel and know that sin is our ruin, and that grace alone can save us. We would bless thy name, O God, that where sin abounded, that grace of thine did yet more abound, and that the glorious Mediator of the new covenant is an almighty Redeemer. The blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. O do thou lead us, by thy Holy Spirit, to that fountain opened. And if thy saving work of grace be already begun in any of us now before thee, O let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, and in him, and by thy Holy Spirit, and through thine own appointed means of grace, lead us onward, strengthen us, stablish us, settle us in the faith of Christ, and in the purifying hope of his coming, and of his eternal glory. Follow with thy Spirit's teaching to our hearts, the portion of thy word we have now read and heard. May it profit us savingly. We thank thee for the mercies granted us during the day past. May our sins of this day be forgiven. May we now have access to the grace in which thy people stand; and may thy blessing be upon and around us. Keep us in safety during this night. And if it be thy holy will that we see the light of another day, as that day, O Lord, is thine own, may we be prepared to serve thee. O pour forth thy Holy Spirit upon us, that we may be enabled, on thy holy sabbath, to keep it holy as unto God. Open thou our ear to hear and our heart to understand. And may thy holy word be prepared for us, and sent to our souls by the power of the Holy Ghost. If permitted to worship thee in thy house of prayer, with our brethren, O Lord, grant us there thy special grace, that we may grow by the sincere milk of thy word. Give thy Spirit to thy servants who preach the everlasting gospel. May they preach it faithfully and fully; and may all who hear receive the engrafted word with meekness. Bless all our friends, our relatives, our benefactors; and forgive our enemies. Fit us for all thy holy will; and may thy blessings in Christ be upon us, and upon our lot. O God, hasten the time when thy holy sabbaths shall be hallowed all over the world. We commit ourselves to thee. Forgive our sins, hear our prayers, and graciously accept us in Jesus Christ. Amen.

NINETEENTH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LVIII.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LVIII. LIX.

REMARKS.

PSALM LVIII. This psalm is an appeal of David the type, and consequently of the Messiah the antitype, to the consciences of his iniquitous judges, with a description of their implacable malignity, under the character of serpents, that cannot be tamed by all the arts of the serpent charmer,—whose venomous bite is deadly. He then prays for, or it may be, prophetically, and in the character of Christ the Judge, declares their consumption as the summer torrent, their arrows to be harmless to him and destructive to themselves, and their duration like the snail that consumes its substance as it moves, or as an untimely birth that never saw the light, and their destruction to be sudden, by the whirlwind of God's wrath. The righteous shall rejoice over the ruin of the enemies of the Lord's Anointed, and then shall it be seen that the Most High God ruleth. Such is the church's song of triumph; 'Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah,' &c., Isa. lxiii. 1—4. Let us remember that this character of wicked men is applied, Rom. iii. to all to whom the word of God comes. Let us dread it, and pray for deliverance from the wrath of the wicked and the depravity of our own hearts; but rejoice that he that is for is mightier than all who can be against us.

PSALM LIX. was, in all likelihood, composed by David under those sufferings and trials by which God prepared him afterwards for a kingdom. The occasion is probably that recorded in 1 Sam. xix. 11—18. when his house was beset by the messengers of Saul, and they lay in wait to kill him. The psalm begins with a supplication for deliverance from all similar dangers in time to come, proceeds to describe the danger from which he had just been delivered, and concludes with praise to him who had proved his 'refuge in the day of trouble.' 'Fear not him,' says our Lord, 'who can kill the body, but fear him who, after he has killed the body, can cast both soul and body into hell.' 'I fear God,' said Colonel Gardiner, 'I fear no other fear.' Let us call to mind the occasions in our lives when our feet well nigh slipped, when we should have stumbled and fallen had not he, by his free Spirit, upheld our goings and stayed our downward course, magnifying the glory of his grace in our weakness and infirmity. Let us call to mind him who was greater than David; David's Lord as well as David's son, who endured for our sakes a far greater fight of afflictions; who was exposed to all the wiles of satan, and whose holy life rendered him the object, to the Jewish rulers, of implacable hatred, putting to death the holy One and the Just. But that which they meant for evil God meant for good; and what they did with wicked hands and hearts, God had determined before to be the way of salvation to the lost children of men. Through suffering he was perfected to become the Captain of our salvation, and as the Captain was perfected through suffering, so is the soldier made like unto his captain through suffering, that he may be an heir, joint-heir with Christ of the glory that shall follow.

PRAYER.

Almighty Father, Lord of heaven and earth, this is the day which thou hast made. In it we shall rejoice and be glad. On this day a greater work than creation was finished, and declared to be very good. On the morning of this day thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Saviour, rose from the grave, declaring, not by a voice from heaven, as at his baptism, but by his glorious resurrection, that this was thy beloved Son, in whom thou art well pleased. For the sake of all that thy beloved Son suffered on earth, we beseech thee to pardon and pass by our many and great offences. Bestow on us, for the sake of thy holy One, the blessedness of that man whose sins are covered, and whose iniquities are blotted out. May Christ this day be made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and everlasting redemption. Give us, good Lord, a sweet sense of thy love and tender mercy in Christ. Draw our hearts to thyself by the cords of love, that out of the fulness of our gratitude we may cry out, What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits? We would this day renew our engagements to be Christ's, being constrained, by the mercies of God, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to him, which is our reasonable service. Fill us with a hatred of all sin and a holy jealousy over ourselves, and let thy word and Spirit this day strengthen our souls, that we may go on in our way rejoicing. On this day we would especially remember, at a throne of grace, the church which thou hast planted on earth. Be in the midst of all her worshipping assemblies, in all parts of the world, and let thy word be quick and powerful, discerning the thoughts and intents of every heart. Especially would we remember the Church with which we are connected, and which thou hast watched over since the days of the blessed Reformation, making it a blessing to us and our fathers. Perpetuate these blessings, good Lord, to the latest generations. Revive thy work of reformation in the midst of the days. Free her from every error in doctrine and in discipline, and let her clothing be of wrought gold, the righteousness of saints. That portion of the vineyard with which, in thy providence, we are connected, we commend unto the blessing of the great Head of the Church. Let great grace be upon thy servant, our pastor. Stand by him in his duties this day, that he may feed the flock of Christ committed to his charge, as a faithful shepherd and bishop of souls. Bless the eldership of the church, and may they be patterns unto the church, and uphold the hands of the pastor in every good work. Bless and direct all those engaged in the instruction of the young on this day. May the teachers of our youth be all taught of thee. Let them see of the fruit of their labour for the godly upbringing of the young, that the next generation may be wiser and better than the present. We thank thee for the mercies of this morning, and as thou hast refreshed our bodies by the rest of the night, may our souls be this day refreshed by thy word and Spirit, that our sabbaths on earth may be a sweet foretaste of that everlasting sabbath which remains for thy people. And we would conclude our morning sacrifice in those words in which our Lord taught us to pray, saying, Our Father, &c.

7th, 18th

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LX.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LX. LXI.

REMARKS.

PSALM LX. This psalm describes the sufferings of David and his army in the Syrian wars, and contains a prayer for deliverance; that God would grant his banner, in token of protection on his part, and of fidelity on the part of his people. He then exults in the conquest over his enemies; in their subjection to him as completely as the slave to his master; compelled to do for him the meanest offices, and expresses his security and confidence in the power of God. So may the believer—so may the church rejoice in the protection of Christ, their divine Head. He hath displayed a banner to all them that fear him. 'God forbid that we should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world,' the god of this world, and all that is in it, 'is crucified unto us, and we unto it.'

PSALM LXI. The sentiments are those of an exile driven from his country by persecution, who is tempted to indulge in those feelings of dreariness and desertion which come over the heart of an exile; but he betakes himself to prayer, which, if it were not the duty, would yet be the refuge of the believer in the hour of distress. None so far off but they may draw nigh to God, through Jesus Christ, and he will hear their cry from the ends of the earth. And what is the prayer of the psalmist? 'Lead me to that rock that is higher than I.' That rock is Christ. 'By faith,' says the good Bishop Horne, 'in his sufferings and exaltation, we may defy all the storms and tempests that can be raised against us by the adversary, while, as from the top of a lofty mountain, we behold the waves dash themselves in pieces on the shore beneath us.' That in this, as in so many of the psalms of David, the great source of consolation presented to the heart, amidst the ills of life, are the hopes of the Messiah, the Prince of peace, is very evident from ver. 6, 7. The king here spoken of is the King of saints, he of whom it is said in another psalm, 'Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.' Here also his throne is declared to be eternal, and mercy and truth the distinction of his kingdom. Amidst the shipwreck of earthly hopes and happiness, he is the eternal Rock to which the believer should cling with firm truth, saying with Peter, 'To whom, Lord, shall I go but unto thee, for thou alone hast the words of eternal life?' In him the bereaved soul will find more than it has lost, and in the inexhaustible riches of Christ, be richer than the richest, happier than the happiest, and wiser than the wisest of mankind. Let us abide then in his tabernacle, and trust in the covert of his wings. The very cry which Jesus uttered on the cross, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' assures the forlorn and sorrowing heart that he will not be forsaken; that very cry of desolation is to us, in our time of need, the language of sweetest hope and consolation, and his desertion is our mightiest succour. It forbids us to despair, assures us that none who come to the Father by Christ, will be cast out. 'Why art thou cast down, O my soul? why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance.'

PRAYER.

Adorable Jehovah, Lord of heaven and earth, who didst so love this guilty world, as to give thine only begotten and well beloved Son, to suffer in our room and stead, we praise and magnify thy name for this thy best gift to our world. Thou didst create this world, and the fulness thereof by a word, but thou didst redeem it by the tears, and agonies, and death of thy holy One, bringing a glory to thyself greater than the glory of creation, and to us a peace and good hope through Christ, better than if we had gained the whole world. We give thee thanks for what we have read and heard this day of Immanuel and Immanuel's land. Let not the cares and lusts of the world; let not its vanities and pleasures choke the good seed sown in our hearts, and render it unfruitful; but send from above the dews of thy Spirit, to cause it to grow, and bear in our hearts the fruit of holy desires and affections. May the oil with which this day our vessels have been replenished, keep our lamps burning brightly throughout this week. Give us divine strength to carry our holy principles into holy practice, and our sabbath thoughts into daily life, that by works our faith may be perfected, becoming stronger and stronger by reason of use, making us mighty to contend with the temptations, and patient under the trials, of life. Pardon, good Lord, the sins of thy holy day, of coldness and formality in our devotions, of careless reading and hearing of thy word, and of frivolous thoughts and conversation unbecoming thy day. Mark not the iniquity of our holy things, for in all we sin and come short of thy glory, but remember in our behalf the Lord our righteousness, him who had clean hands and a pure heart, and never lifted up his soul to vanity nor spoke deceitfully. We implore thy protection to us, and all that are near and dear to us, through the night watches. Let our sleep refresh our bodies and fit us for the duties of a new day, and spare us to enjoy the light of another morning, and to thy name, and to thy Son's name, with the Holy Spirit, be everlasting praise, glory, and honour, for ever and ever. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM XLIII. 3.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL XVI.

REMARKS.

God does not complain of Samuel's grief, but only of its duration. 'How long?' Samuel could not but mourn over the royal tree which he had planted, and which, for a time, looked so promising, having so soon withered; but that sorrow which is natural and becoming for a season, may be prolonged so as to become a murmuring against God's justice. The judge who passes sentence of death, may do so with a heart full of pity, and eyes filled with tears, but conscious of the justice of the sentence, his tears are soon dried up, and his heart at rest and quiet. Thus our Saviour wept, whilst pronouncing woes over Jerusalem, but because the woes were the just displeasure of him who had long waited to be gracious, his sorrow is not a prolonged sorrow. So Samuel had mourned enough over the fallen fortunes of Saul. He must now be up and doing. Another king was to be anointed in the room of him who had forfeited his crown, by his rebellion against that king to whom all the sceptres of the earth belong. As his errand is one of danger, so God bids him disguise his purpose; telling the truth but not the whole truth; taking a heifer to offer a sacrifice to the Lord, part of the preparation for the consecration of the future king. The visits of the aged judge, of late years, had been few and far between; his appearance now makes the elders of Bethlehem to tremble, and inquire whether he comes peaceably. Has he come to inquire after blasphemy, or blood, or some secret guilt that lies unatoned upon their little community? but his was a message of peace and great honour. Their city, though little amongst the cities of Judah, was now to give a ruler to Israel—of all Israel's kings the most illustrious, at once the prophet and the ancestor of him who was to be the light of the Gentiles and the glory of Israel.

In the scene which follows the sacrifice, the sons of Jesse pass, one after another, before the aged Judge, and we learn the difference between the choice of God and the choice of man. Samuel looked for a successor to the throne like Saul, higher by the shoulders than any of the people; but God, when he would give to Israel a king, to rule his people in righteousness, chooses him not for his stature, like Saul, but for the dispositions of his heart. Probably Jesse presented all his sons in succession to the seer, whom he at all thought likely to be the object of choice, beginning with the eldest, and had either Samuel or Jesse determined the matter, David would not have been king. David was left with the flock, no one calling for him; but whom men reject, God chooses, for he looketh not on the outward appearance but on the heart. Let us all beware of being guided too much by appearances in the choice of the objects of our attachment. Goodness is the firmest cement of all earthly friendships, the only choice of which we shall have no regret. Of old the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and took them wives of all which they chose, and the universal corruption of principle and morals, and the deluge, were the consequences of the evil choice. Lot chose the fair and fertile plains of Sodom, though the inhabitants were wicked before the Lord exceedingly. He pleased his eyes, but he vexed his heart, and was soon after driven out of Sodom, bereaved of all his flocks and herds, in order to avoid the fate of that devoted city. David appears to have returned to the sheep-fold, after being anointed, to await in patience God's time and way of fulfilling his own promises, but he never forgot that now he was the Lord's anointed, an act which, in his case, had not been an empty ceremony, but the emblem and medium of the anointing of the Holy Spirit. He now felt within him the strivings of nobler sentiments and desires than belonged to the sheep-fold. While thus waiting on God's time, he, in all probability, felt the inspiration of many of those songs of Sion which breathe of a greater than David, even David's Son and Lord, and amidst these heavenly meditations was trained to be the spiritual ruler of God's peculiar people. How different the temper, at this time, of the reigning monarch. The Spirit of God had departed from him, like the last rays of the sun from the arctic regions, and left nothing but the reign of deadly winter. His mind is alternately depressed with melancholy gloom, and stung into madness at the thought of the falling fortunes of his house; and unable to compose or control his moody mind, his courtiers are glad to commend to him one whose musical talents and pleasing manners may soothe his melancholy, and steal away his thoughts from himself; and who is this comforter but his anointed successor, who is thus, by the guidance of providence, brought near to that court over which he was one day to preside, and for which he is now to be prepared by the alternate favours and frowns of his master. Observe the character given of young David—what a combination! A man of genius, a poet, musician, warrior, prudent in counsel and in behaviour, in person comely, and, to crown all, 'The Lord was with him.' Of how few of 'the men of renown,' whether in arts or arms, can it be said, as of David, 'The Lord was with them,' and that they gave back to God the glory of those gifts which he had bestowed!

PRAYER.

Heavenly Father, enable us to choose that good part which shall never be taken from us, not judging after the sight of the eyes, nor after the hearing of the ears, but considering that which will endure and be profitable to our imperishable souls; for what shall a man profit though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Forgive us, gracious Father, for having, in times past, gone too much along with the current of the world, as if our hopes and our inheritance were in this life only. Keep us from ever preferring the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season, to the riches of Christ, which endure for ever. Incline us rather to suffer than to sin against thee, and to bear the reproach of Christ rather than to enjoy, without him, the smiles of the world. O grant that we may be amongst those of whom it may be said, as of David, The Lord is with them. Many there be who say, Who will shew us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us, and then shall we be happier than those whose corn and wine doth most abound. If thou art with us, whether in poverty or in wealth, in health or in sickness, it will be well with us, and even the afflictions of life will yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness. We give thee thanks for thy goodness to us through the silent watches of the night, and for the soundness of mind, as well as health of body we now enjoy. We laid ourselves down, and slept, and awaked, for thou didst sustain us. Vouchsafe thy presence with us throughout the day. Uphold our steps in thy paths, and let not temptations prevail against us, and to thee shall be the glory of all our salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXVII. 37.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN V. 1—24.

REMARKS.

'They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength,' says the prophet, 'they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint.' To encourage us to wait on the Lord in prayer and not to faint, our Lord spoke the parable of the importunate widow, who prevailed in obtaining at last her suit from one who neither feared God nor regarded man. How much more will a just and merciful God hear the cry of those who wait on him in prayer and supplication. The same instruction the narrative of the cure of the impotent man is fitted to impart. His infirmity had endured for thirty-eight years, and yearly was he brought, at the season of the troubling of the water, and laid in one of the porches of the pool. How often thrust aside by those who had friends at hand to assist them in the time of need; yet still he waits on, hoping even against hope, that some favourable opportunity may occur for him also, some kind friend aid his faltering steps, and give him the foremost place who had waited the longest. But a kinder and more powerful friend visited Bethesda, and rendered it in reality, as well as in name, to him a house of mercy. He to whose voice the diseases of the human frame were all subject, took pity on him, and said unto him, 'Rise, take up thy bed and walk; and immediately the man was made whole.' O that we had the same patience and perseverance, in seeking the health of our souls, as we have in seeking that of the body! How sensible to the least derangement of our bodily frame! how insensible to the greater disorders of our spiritual nature! If we fall into ill health of body, we repair to every individual of reputation; try every remedy; wait long and patiently; nay, will spend our all, like the woman in the gospel, upon the physicians, for the bare chance of being better: but how little care and anxiety whether the soul prospers or is in ill health, yea, though it becomes, by neglect, leaner and leaner from day to day, yet instead of waiting more faithfully on the means of grace, reading the word of God, and keeping alive private prayer, we gradually neglect these duties, and desert the house of mercy, and disuse the great means of drawing down heaven's blessing, prayer.

Observe the pharisaic comments of the Jews on the command to take up his bed on the sabbath. This is the censure of men ignorant of the spirit of religion, who preferred that bodily exercise which profiteth little, to that godliness which is profitable for all things. In these words we have also an impressive attestation to the divinity of the Lord Jesus. In the opinion of the Jews he made himself equal with God, an opinion which our Lord does not attempt to refute. 'My Father worketh hitherto, and I work,' is his language. He also declares himself to be 'Judge; yea, all judgment is committed to him. The Father raiseth the dead, and so doth the Son. The Son is to be honoured even as the Father. What language could convey more decisively the claims of Christ to be supreme God? Let us therefore honour him whom all the angels of heaven worship, and at whose feet the saints above cast their crowns.

PRAYER.

Almighty and most merciful Father, we adore thee as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom thou art reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. Thy tender mercy is above all thy works, for when there was no eye to pity us, and no hand to help, thine eye pitied and thy right arm wrought our salvation. Thou didst so love the world as to give thine only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but might have everlasting life. We believe in thy Son, Jesus Christ. We know of no name given under heaven by which there is salvation, but the name of Jesus. In that name alone we come this night into thy holy presence. Remember not, heavenly Father, what manner of creatures we are, but remember what Jesus, our great advocate and intercessor, is. Behold Christ, our shield. Look on the face of thine Anointed. By his humiliation on earth in our nature; by his labours and travail in behalf of the sons of men; by all his sufferings, known and unknown, we entreat forgiveness of our many and great iniquities. If thou, Lord, wert to mark our transgressions and reckon them up in order before thee, yea, if thou wert to call us to account for the sins even of any one day of our lives, which of us would be justified in thy sight? Thy law only searches our hearts and discovers our sins, but that justification which cometh not to any son of Adam by the deeds of the law, cometh to all that believe through the atoning sacrifice and perfect righteousness of Immanuel. We put our trust under the shadow of his wings, and desire to be clothed on by his righteousness. We would go up through this wilderness, leaning on him as the beloved of our souls. Let thy Spirit take of the things of Christ and show them unto our souls, that our souls may go on from strength to strength, until we arrive in Zion at last. Enable us more and more to honour thy Son in our lives and conversation, maintaining a walk becoming the gospel. Carry on, by thy Spirit, the good work thou hast begun in any of our hearts, that we may grow up to the stature of perfect men in Christ Jesus, and that we may have increasing evidences in ourselves that we are thine by saving and sanctifying faith. Evermore defend us against the various temptations of life, and let thy grace be sufficient for us amidst all the vicissitudes of our changing lot. We thank thee for the goodness and mercy that have guarded our steps this day. Let thy good providence watch over us, and all that are near and dear to our hearts, through the silence of the night; and after the refreshing sleep of the night, revive us to the light and enjoyment of another day. And unto thee, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be glory, honour, and praise, world without end. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXLIV.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL XVII.

REMARKS.

David was the Lord's chosen, and had been anointed with oil by the prophet Samuel, as designed in the divine decree to be the future monarch of Israel, the chosen people of God. 'The Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward.' Every part of his history shows him to have been led, and disciplined, and protected by a special providence, which yet always acted harmoniously with secondary causes. The reigning monarch being abandoned on account of his stubborn inattention to the divine commandments, by 'the Spirit of the Lord,' was henceforth subjected to a malignant agency, which preyed upon his reason, and threw his soul into dark despair. The musical skill of David was a successful medicine, and a healing balm to the diseased and troubled soul of Saul; and thus the youthful shepherd was suddenly transferred, not merely to the court, but to the immediate presence of the monarch himself, from whom he received special marks of favour. He soon, however, returned to the obscurity of his native village, and resumed the humble employment of tending his father's flocks.

In this chapter we find him introduced by providence to a wider stage of public distinction, where his actions, by drawing to himself the eyes of all his countrymen, at once paved the way for his future elevation. For the unknown and unpractised stripling became the sole champion of his country against the national enemy. The Holy Spirit has related the circumstances of the single combat between the Philistine giant, Goliath, and the young shepherd of Israel, most minutely. The two armies of the Philistines and of the tribes of Israel, the latter led by the king in person, are drawn forth in battle array, and both being posted upon two mountains which faced one another, are separated by a valley. Suddenly there stepped out of the Philistine ranks, Goliath of Gath, who, confiding in the enormous size and strength of his bodily frame, as well as in the solidity of his brazen coat of armour, challenged the armies of Israel to single combat. He exclaimed in the most arrogant terms, 'Give me a man, that we may fight together.' This challenge coming from one apparently invincible, spread consternation through all the ranks of Israel, and their stoutest-hearted warriors quailed and fled. The Philistine received no answer for forty days, in each of which he repeated his challenge, and notwithstanding the magnificent offers of the king, none could be induced even to try. At this critical conjuncture, help came from a quarter not calculated upon, either by friends or foes. Out of the mouth of a youth, God had ordained strength. The youth David, had been despatched by his affectionate father with a measure of provisions for the support of his three elder brothers, who were serving in the army, and just as he happened to arrive at the camp, he witnessed the universal terror which the sight and words of the Philistine giant inspired among the mighty men of Israel. He felt the dishonour, chiefly because a profane idolator so arrogantly defied 'the armies of the living God.' In spite of the unkindly check which he received from his eldest brother, he expressed aloud his keen sense of the insult which was offered to the God of Israel, and when he was introduced into the presence of the king Saul, with mingled modesty and courage stated his reasons for offering to engage in apparently so unequal a combat. 'The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine.' The issue of the combat we have just read.

The practical lesson which we may receive from this portion of David's history, may be found in its exemplification of the nature and power of faith, that strong stock upon which all the Christian graces must be grafted. Had David gone forth to the fearful odds, inspired merely by natural courage, we might have admired his valiant prowess, but could have discerned nothing for our imitation. He was guided and impelled, however, by that faith which is 'the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen;' by that faith which had led his ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to live as 'pilgrims and strangers,' and which had led Moses not to fear 'the wrath of the king, as seeing him who is invisible.' Through faith then David 'subdued kingdoms, waxed valiant in fight, and turned to fight the armies of the aliens.' Though David engaged in the combat destitute of sword, and spear, and shield, yet he did not despise all means, he used his sling, and was fully equipped with the spiritual armour of hope and faith, and the promises which were to him the sword of the Spirit. The lesson is more profitable, for as every young man on engaging in the career of life may, like David, expect to meet obstacles sometimes so great that the minds of ordinary men are discouraged, let his soul be strengthened to meet the difficulty by living under the power of things unseen, things eternal, and things to come.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we would unite our hearts to offer the tribute of our gratitude, because thou hast preserved us during the silent watches of the past night, and hast allowed us to see the light of a new day. Thy mercies are new to us every day. Therefore we will bless thy holy name. Bless the Lord, O our souls, and forget not all his benefits; bless the Lord, O our souls, and remember his good and perfect gifts. We thank thee that thou hast made the Sun of righteousness to arise upon our benighted world, and remove the gross darkness which covereth the people. Thou hast given thy Son to be a light of the Gentiles. He is the light of the world; he that followeth him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. Send forth, O Lord, thy light and truth into our hearts, that we may not walk in the ignorance and carnality of our fallen nature. Convince us of our sins, in their number, in their variety, in their aggravations, and in their fearful deserts. Convince us of our misery if we still lie under the condemnation of thy broken and despised law, exposed to the hot wrath and the sore displeasure of the living God; for who knoweth the power of his anger? Awaken us, if any now before thee are sunk in spiritual slumber, and let the arrows of conviction pierce the hearts which are at enmity with God, and are not subject to his law. Give us the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of thy Son Jesus Christ, that we may flee to him as the city of refuge, where we shall be for ever secured from the righteous claims of thy avenging justice; that we may enter his kingdom as an ark of safety, where we shall never be swallowed up by the floods and tempests of thy devouring wrath. Lord, save us; Lord, help us; Lord, have mercy upon us. Make our hearts what thou wouldst have them to be. Renew our wills, and assume the government of our dispositions, appetites, and affections. For thy Son's sake pardon our transgressions, and continue to us the guidance of thy free Spirit. We desire to go forth to the performance of our Christian duties this day in the spirit of faith, and with earnest endeavours after new obedience to thy holy will in all things. Lord, hear, and answer us, since all that we now ask is in the name of Jesus Christ, thy Son, and our Saviour. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM L.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN V. 25—47.

REMARKS.

There is nothing more mysterious than life; for, though man may observe the indications and sensible signs, both of its presence and absence, he cannot discover the vital principle itself. We originally receive it directly from 'the Father who hath life in himself.' It is therefore a divine product, requiring nought less than the omnipotent word of the Creator. But Jesus says, 'As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.' The Son therefore, by his inherent prerogative of giving life, proves himself divine, equal to the Father, for the creature has not life in himself. If natural life be formed by union between our soul and body, the Son gives us spiritual life by forming a union between our dead souls and the life-giving God. The resurrection of a soul dead in trespasses and sins, to the enjoyment of spiritual life, in the eyes of all who are truly enlightened, is far more marvellous than the resurrection of the dead and decomposed body. The period during which the latter miracle took place, has long since past away, with the age of our Lord and his apostles, but thanks be to God, the former miracle which excites joy even in heaven is still performed. 'The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live.' Spiritual life then, or a union between God and our soul 'cometh by hearing.' The disciples and others not a few, by hearing the voice of the Son of God, when he was in the days of his flesh, passed from death unto life; and as many since his ascension to heaven, as have listened to the voice of his faithful ministers, have also passed from death unto life. Let us hear that voice. The hour now is. If we are uncertain and in doubt as to the fact of our still requiring to seek spiritual life from Christ, let us examine whether we exhibit the signs and evidences of its presence. The consciousness of the union which has taken place between our souls and God may well dissipate the fears and apprehensions of our minds, with reference to the disunion which death causes between our soul and body, for we shall again hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth out of our dark graves to the light and life of an everlasting day. The resurrection on the last day will be universal, of them that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and of them that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

When our Lord was declaring these solemn and affecting doctrines, some of his hearers (as is still the case with many men), doubted of his divine mission. Our Lord therefore makes an exposition of several branches of the evidences of our holy religion. John the Baptist, a prophet of most eminent sanctity, revered by the great body of the Jewish nation, and predicted of even in the Old Testament, was sent expressly to forewarn the Jews of the Messiah's coming, and to prepare the way for his reception, by preaching the doctrine of repentance. This venerated prophet, whose claims to a divine commission were generally acknowledged by the Jews, bore the plainest testimony that Jesus was the long-promised Messiah. A testimony far more satisfactory is appealed to by our Saviour, in the performance of many mighty miracles. God also bore witness to the claims of Christ with signs and wonders, and miracles. Miraculous works assuredly constitute a divine attestation, and how many did our Lord perform to show that the Father had sent him! A third evidence, to be conjoined with the two former, is in the scriptures of the Old Testament, 'and they are they which testify of me.' In the typical economy of Moses, and in the clear predictions which he and the other prophets were inspired to utter, any humble and careful inquirer would have found, without difficulty, the marks to which Jesus exactly corresponded. Search the scriptures. Why is it that all this amount of evidence has not told upon vast numbers? It arises simply from the moral obstacles in their hearts; their undue preference of human praise; their dislike of the doctrines themselves, and their slavish subjection to corrupt passions. These, in all ages, have been the real reasons which have prevailed against the clearest light.

PRAYER.

Almighty God, we again bow ourselves down at the footstool of thy throne, whence thou condescendest to regard the words of our petitions, our thanksgivings, and our confessions. The frailties and short comings which attend our very best efforts of obedience to thy will follow us in our prayers. Our confidence, therefore, in this, and every other approach which we make to a throne of grace, is not in ourselves, but is founded on the merits and finished work of Jesus Christ. His name is our confidence, that what we now ask we shall receive, and that what we seek, we shall find, and that when we knock, it shall be opened to us. At the close of another day, we would now entreat thy free forgiveness of the sins which we have committed, and entreat also thy gracious acceptance of our attempts to act in accordance with thy holy commandments. We gladly look upon Christ as the altar which alone sanctifies whatever either of will or of deed thy Spirit worketh in us of his good pleasure. For thy Son's sake, accept our persons, our works, and our supplications. Christ having redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, we desire henceforth to adopt thy law as the sole rule of our life and conduct. Lord, acquaint us with the exceeding breadth of thy commandments. By them is thy servant warned, and in keeping of them there is great reward. And let all now before thee know the blessedness of the man whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Let all of us know the blessedness of the man who walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. Give us thy Spirit that we may be born again, that we may be God's workmanship, created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works. Let Christ be begotten in our hearts the hope of glory. Give us that faith whereby we may constantly and implicitly trust in Christ, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins. Give us our daily bread, guide all our steps, make all the events which may befall us in the course of our earthly pilgrimage to contribute to our spiritual welfare, and to thy glory. We resign ourselves to thy protection and care, while the shades of night rest upon our habitation, and our eyelids are closed in slumber. Lord, we entreat for all with whom we are connected by the endearing ties of blood and friendship. Let them and us be united for ever by the tie of a common interest in the covenant of grace. Bless our native land in all its interests, civil and spiritual. Give wisdom to our rulers, that they may rule in the fear of the Lord. Let thy word penetrate to the most distant parts of the earth, and overthrow the habitations of darkness and horrid cruelty. Uphold thy church wherever it is established in the earth. And now, Lord, hear, and accept our prayers, since all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CV. 4.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL XVIII.

REMARKS.

By his illustrious achievement in the combat with Goliath of Gath, David was launched out into life, apparently with the most favourable omens. He very speedily found, however, what most of men learn only by actual experience, that human life is a troubled sea, and that the most cautious and most prudent management will not save us from the trying dangers of tempests and quicksands, of sunken rocks and deceitful calms. This is eminently true of greatness of station. Public life has been generally supposed unfavourable to the acquisition of friends, one of the rarest blessings of life. 'There is a friend,' says the wise man, 'that sticketh closer than a brother.' Never was this observation more fully illustrated among mere men than in the friendship which Jonathan, the son of Saul, contracted with David, the son of Jesse. It was not the slow result of long-continued intimacy. It was formed from the very first moment the two parties saw one another, and seemed to have arisen from the inexplicable law of sympathy. How beautiful the description, 'The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul.' Though Jonathan was most sudden in his attachment, he was neither capricious nor forgetful; though the two parties were very different in rank, the one being the son of a king, and the other being the son of a shepherd, it did not hinder the equality which is so essential to true friendship, and the pledges which the two parties exchanged were never broken. Both of them were in that period of youth which seems most favourable to the contracting the permanent alliances of friendship. We cannot help observing that of the two, Jonathan impresses us most favourably, both as to disinterestedness, from his superior rank, and as to the many and sincere proofs of sincerity and faithfulness which he afterwards showed to his friend. The kindly feelings which, as followers of the Friend of sinners, we ought to cherish towards all men, are not at all incompatible with strong preferences to particular individuals. David truly required a friend at court, for the king began soon to contract a most violent and implacable enmity to him, arising from hateful jealousy of his fame and success. 'And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands and David his ten thousands.' Saul regarded, henceforth, his brave subject with an evil eye, and with his own hand twice attempted to assassinate the man that had so late saved his country from defeat and dishonour. The Lord was a shield to his servant, and turned aside the weapon. Finding open violence unsuccessful, Saul next attempted circumvention and treachery. He put David into a responsible situation, in which the latter, being guilty of imprudence or misconduct, might become liable to punishment; and next imposed perilous services against the national enemy, in fighting with whom David might possibly be slain. But Saul was fighting, as he himself clearly saw, not against man, but against God. Neither his open hostility nor his secret snares were successful. In spite of all his opposition, David increased in acceptance with the men of Judah and Israel, gained additional laurels in his combat with the Philistines, of whom he slew two hundred men, became the object of affection to Michal, the daughter of the king, who was reluctantly obliged to bestow her hand upon his hated rival. One of the chiefest obstacles to our success in life, and one of the strongest temptations to sinful conduct, arises from rivalry and competition. We are apt, in consequence, to be betrayed into despondency or exultation, into jealousy or envy. Let us then constantly remember that it is God's sovereign right to exalt and to abase, and that it is our duty, if exalted, to rejoice with trembling, and if beaten, nay, far excelled by our fellows, to submit with cheerfulness. Thus our breasts will not harbour either pride nor envy. Let us endeavour, like David, that we behave ourselves wisely in all our ways, and that the Lord be with us, and then we will go on our way rejoicing.

PRAYER.

O Lord God, who art seated on a throne, high and lifted up, we again direct our supplications and thanksgivings to the place where thine honour dwelleth. We thank thee that thou art seated on a throne of mercy, whither we may come in the name of Christ, not merely with confidence, but with great boldness. Thou art merciful and gracious to forgive us our iniquities, thou art just and faithful also to forgive us our sins. We adore, with reverence, and wonder, and gratitude, that unsearchable wisdom which has made the claims of justice consistent with the entreaties of mercy, and has harmonized thy hatred of sin with the free forgiveness of sinners. O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! We receive Christ as thy unspeakable gift. We rejoice in his appointment to be the Mediator between God and man. We acquiesce in all the arrangements of the covenant of grace. Our prayer is that thou wouldst enrich our poor, and naked, and empty souls with the fulness of the spiritual blessings which are laid up in Jesus Christ, our invisible

Head. If there be aught good in us, it dwelleth not in us by nature, for in us, that is, in our flesh, dwelleth no good thing; it arises from the working of thy good Spirit, who in Christ Jesus is granted to all his people for their instruction, and sanctification, and rich comfort. But, heavenly Father, even when thy sanctifying grace has been conferred upon us, to enable and fit us for our daily obedience, we still feel our need of thy forgiving grace. Look upon us in the face of thine Anointed, and not as we are in ourselves. May thy Spirit sprinkle our polluted consciences with the peace-speaking blood of Christ, and clothe our persons, naked of all merit, with the unspeakable merits of Christ, who is the Lord our righteousness; and then, being justified by faith, we shall have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Lord, we desire to please thee by our actions and thoughts during this day. And when, by thy watchful and merciful providence, we again unite our praise and prayers this evening, may we find that we have denied ourselves, that we have taken and carried Christ's cross, and have followed him. We would no longer live the rest of our time in the flesh, to the lusts of men, but to the will of God, which is our sanctification. Help us, Lord, henceforth to have, through Christ Jesus, our affections, and conversation, and treasure in heaven, where Christ our Saviour is, and where, after our death, we humbly hope ever to be with him. Take our country, our rulers, our friends, and our enemies, under thy special protection. Pour out thy promised Spirit upon thy visible church. May its bounds soon extend to the ends of the earth, and may thine ancient people recognise Jesus of Nazareth to be the true Messiah. Look in mercy upon the sick, the afflicted, and the dying. And now, Lord, accept our persons and prayers, since all that we ask is for Christ's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM L. 7.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VI. 1—40.

REMARKS.

Men engage in the service of Christ Jesus with mixed motives. If good motives, as well as good ends alone, prompted men to become members of the visible church, the mere fact of being within its pale would be sufficient to impart confidence toward God in a man. As, however, purity and simplicity of intention are found only in a portion of Christ's followers, it becomes absolutely necessary to draw, and to make known the lines of distinction. Our Saviour was tabernacled beside the sea of Galilee, and a great multitude followed him. From what motive? 'Because they saw his miracles.' Curiosity to behold unusual and marvellous spectacles, chiefly, if not altogether, prompted them to go in the train, and to follow the steps, of Jesus; and we do not reckon uncharitably of many men in our own day, that the desire of gratifying the mere love of novelty has led them to wait upon some of the faithful ministers of Christ. While this constitutional impulse of our minds cannot be excluded, even from the most simple-hearted Christian, it may exclusively act upon the minds of many ungodly and wicked men. Let us beware of it, as our only motive. Our Lord's conduct is worthy of our careful imitation, for he gave thanks to the Almighty before he distributed to the multitude; for, while the most simple refreshment both supplies an opportunity and an incentive to the acknowledgment of God's bounteous providence, how often is it that this acknowledgment is omitted or refused even where God's natural bounties are spread out in the greatest profusion. Jesus commanded the fragments to be collected 'that nothing might be lost.' This might be intended to make the miracle more evident to the eyes of the beholders, but it seems chiefly intended to inculcate the lesson, that the profusion of God's natural bounties does not justify either our waste or prodigality. Our Lord did not accept the earthly crown which the multitude here offered him, just as he rejected an earthly kingdom with which Satan had at first tempted him. Had this multitude been wise and truly grateful, they would have offered instead the government of their hearts to Jesus, as their spiritual king, and would not have met the rejection of their offering. But if Christ left the multitude, because they would not apprehend his spiritual claims, his true disciples will meet him and enjoy his society even when their souls are most sunk in dejection, and are contending with the restless fluctuations of doubt. Just as the disciples beheld their Lord walking on the billows of the sea, and felt assured upon hearing his accustomed voice, so in many a scene of danger and perplexing trial he has supported and comforted the minds of his people of every age. 'It is I, be not afraid.'

The multitude, as soon as they found that Jesus, declining the honour which they had offered, had retired to another spot, sought him with an earnestness of perseverance which seemed to indicate the security and strength of their attachment to religion. They dealt with one, however, who judges the heart. They found their real motives in seeking his society at once exposed. It was from earthly and selfish reasons alone that they were putting on the badges of piety. 'Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.' Though the service of Christ may expose us to disadvantages, losses, and mortifications, we should remember, that as a Christian profession may not seldom conciliate respect, and gain us secular advantages from the prevalence of true religion in society, we are bound to examine the purity of our motives with greater strictness of self-scrutiny. For assuredly the Son of man came to give us, not 'the meat which perisheth,' but 'that meat which endureth unto life everlasting.' For its acquisition we should labour with our whole hearts 'to do the will of God.' In doing this divine work, we are to look with faith to him who has finished the work which the Father gave him to do.' In considering and depending upon this work, we will find a new and spiritual life communicated to our souls, until at last we will clearly understand how Christ is the true bread of life, which was only shadowed forth by that miraculous manna which sustained the Israelites during their journey in the wilderness. If this alleged quality of Christ and his doctrine, to impart a new and everlasting life to the souls of men, startle us and be heard with incredulity, let us understand that, though we may not choose to come to Christ for everlasting life, he will still receive an affectionate and believing people; and that the Father will not allow his benignant intentions to mankind to be frustrated. Those whom Christ hath received for his people from the Father, will still come unto him, and will believingly depend upon him, that they may have everlasting life, and may be raised up at the last day. Let us, then, not turn away with disrelish from the Lord's offer, but say, from the bottom of our hearts, 'Lord, evermore give us this bread.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we now adore thy mercy, because while the shades of night are descending upon us and our habitations, thou hast not left us to the darkness of our natural minds. We fully know thy will for our salvation, that we should believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. May he then be made of God, unto each of us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. We confess that we often act unworthily of our Christian privileges, and often act inconsistently with our high calling. Our faith fails us, our watchfulness against sin intermits, our affections become cold and languid, and our imaginations wander to forbidden scenes. If thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. Whither shall we go but unto thee, for thou hast the words of life eternal? Draw us, Lord, and we shall run after thee. Draw us with the cords of a man, and with bands of love. Make us a willing people in this day of thy power. Send forth thy light and truth into our hearts, and let us experience the enlightening and purifying, the sanctifying and comforting influences of thy word. Make our wayward wills conformable to thine, that we all may do thy will on earth, as it is done in heaven. We desire now, Lord, that thou wouldest forgive the sins which we have committed this day, and that thou wouldest not take thy Holy Spirit from us. We place our dependence upon the merits and intercession of Christ the righteous, who is our advocate with the Father, and who is the propitiation for our sins. Let the same spirit which was in him, be also in us. Engrave his precepts and commandments upon our hearts, until we become living epistles of the Lord Jesus, known and read of all men. We would now commit ourselves to thy protection during the coming night. Our friends we commend to thy guardianship. Let us and them be more closely united, by being all partakers of Christ's redemption. Look mercifully upon our country and its rulers. Let the church of God be established, and let it extend its bounds to the remotest regions of the earth. And now, heavenly Father, grant us exceeding abundantly, above all that we can ask or think, since all that we ask is for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRaise—PSALM IX. 7.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL XIX.

REMARKS.

The fame of David, on account of his exploits, had become so great in Israel, that Saul's jealousy was kindled against him. He regarded every mark of honour paid to the son of Jesse, as disrespectful to himself, and calculated to lessen him in the eyes of his people. On this account did he form the purpose of putting him to death, and in order to accomplish it, communicated his purpose to Jonathan and his servants. The affectionate Jonathan informed his friend of his father's intention, and at the same time, offered to act the part of an intercessor, in order, if possible, to bring about a reconciliation. With this view did he, having communicated his plan to David, meet his father, in a place to which it seems to have been his custom frequently to retire, and there did he reason with him on the impropriety of his conduct towards one who had acted the part of a most faithful servant, who had been ever ready to expose his life to the greatest danger on his master's account, and who, in successfully attacking and slaying the Philistine, had been instrumental, in the hand of God, in working out a great salvation for all Israel. Jonathan was successful. He overcame his father's anger, and David, who had been concealed near the place of interview, was once more brought by his affectionate friend into the presence of Saul, and apparently restored to his favour.

Another war, however, broke out between the children of Israel and the Philistines. David again buckled on his armour, and again triumphed over the enemies of Israel, which again kindled the jealousy of Saul, and although he had sworn to Jonathan that David should not be slain, yet so regardless was he of his oath, that while the faithful David did not desist from his master's service, while he even played with his harp as on former times, Saul, who sat with a javelin in his hand, aimed a blow at his faithful servant, from which he narrowly escaped. So intent was Saul on David's destruction, that he even sent messengers to his house to watch their opportunity of securing him. It was in consequence of the affectionate conduct of his wife, who either feared or had learned her father's intention, that David made his escape. The subsequent stratagems which she used to deceive her father, although it is not necessary to justify every part of her conduct, afforded her husband an opportunity of removing himself completely from the reach of Saul and his messengers. The whole narrative, as here given, illustrates the great danger to which David was exposed, and the savage cruelty of the king, who, not contented to wait the issue of his supposed affliction, desired the satisfaction of putting his faithful servant to death with his own hand. David, on his escape from Saul, fled for protection to Samuel the prophet, who had previously anointed him as king, with whom he retired to Naioth, in which, it is supposed, there was a seminary of prophets. Saul having heard of the retreat of David, sent messengers to lay hold of him, doubtless with the view of putting him to death. These messengers, however, no sooner reached the company of prophets than they were inspired of God with their spirit, and remained prophesying along with them. A second and a third party being similarly inspired, acted in the same manner; and even Saul himself, who afterwards followed his messengers to Naioth, became in the way possessed of the same spirit, so that he also, when he reached the place, took off his upper garments, probably his armour and his royal robes, and, to the astonishment of all, performed his part among the prophets of the Lord, as he had done on a former occasion.

How engaging is true friendship! what difficulties does it encounter! to what dangers does it expose itself, and with what patience does it watch for the benefit of the beloved individual! How unreasonable is envious anger! How dangerous to indulge in it! The more excellent the character against whom it is conceived, the more bitter does it generally become, and when it once takes root in the mind, how difficult to overcome it! With what care therefore should we guard against its first risings, lest, if indulged in, we should allow the sun to go down upon our wrath.

How anxiously does the mind of man in the hour of trouble or of danger seek for protection, or comfort, or assistance in the ordinances of God, and the society of his people! How great is the influence which these exercise over the mind! But let us beware lest, in having recourse to them, it should be only for a time. For how many are there who, when the danger is over, return to their former carelessness; who although in the society of the prophets they seem animated with their spirit, on their return to the world, mingle in all its unmeaning and its sinful enjoyments, whose goodness is like the morning cloud, and the early dew, which soon pass away?

PRAYER.

Almighty and most merciful Father, we would approach the footstool of thy throne, with that reverence which becometh us as creatures, and that humility which becometh us as sinful creatures. We adore thee on account of thy great and glorious majesty. We bless thee on account of that goodness which thou makest continually to pass before us. Thine is the air we breathe, thine the food we eat, thine the raiment we wear, thine the earth we tread, thine are all the blessings of social intercourse, the comforts of domestic life, with every thing which tends to sweeten the cup of human enjoyment. Thy people thou keepest as the apple of thine eye, preserving them amid all the snares of the wicked, and giving them deliverance. But while we bless thee for those things which perish with the using, we bless thee above all for Jesus Christ, thine unspeakable gift. Herein indeed, is love, not that we have loved God, but that he hath loved us, and sent his Son to save us. What are we, O God, that thou shouldest thus be mindful of us; what is our father's house, that thou shouldest thus visit us? We are the children of a day, the feeble insects of an hour; we are a people laden with iniquity. Our fathers have sinned, and we their children have borne their transgression. From the sole of the foot to the crown of the head, there is no soundness in us. If thou, O Lord, shouldest mark iniquity against us, who of us could stand? but with thee there is forgiveness, that thou mayest be feared, and plenteous redemption, that thou mayest be sought after. We come to thee in the name of our great High Priest. We accept of the gift of eternal life, through faith in his blood. Enable us ever to evince the heavenly origin of our faith, by its purifying the heart, and working by love, and producing those peaceable fruits of righteousness which are to thy praise, and honour, and glory. Let the same mind be in us which dwelt in our blessed Master. Like him, may we delight in retiring from the world to hold communion with the God of heaven. Like him, may we rejoice in those opportunities which are offered us for going about doing good to our fellow-men, while we study, at all times, to keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and by a careful continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honour, and immortality. We desire this morning to give thee thanks for thy protecting care during the night, for the sweet and refreshing rest we have enjoyed, and for the comfortable circumstances in which we are permitted once more to assemble around the family altar. Be with us, O Lord, to aid us in our duty this day, in our going out and coming in, in our rising up and sitting down. In all our ways we would acknowledge thee. Do thou, Lord, direct our steps. Every day of our lives, may we become more conformable with thy blessed will, more prepared for thy service upon earth, and the enjoyment of thee in heaven. And when the purposes of thy providence with us on earth are finished, may an abundant entrance be administered to us, into thy kingdom and glory, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE XLI. 1.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VI. 41—71.

REMARKS.

However much accustomed to figurative language, the Jews could not comprehend our Lord's meaning when he styled himself 'the bread of life.' Ignorant of his pre-existence, they were equally at a loss to understand Him when he spoke of his having come down from heaven, and of his appearance on earth being of as much importance to the spiritual life of mankind, as bread is to the natural. Hence their murmurings. Our Saviour, aware of the opposition given by the proud and carnal nature of man, to the humbling and spiritual doctrine of the gospel, reminds his audience of the necessity of divine assistance to the implanting of the principle of faith in the human heart; for that 'coming unto Christ,' as well as 'being drawn to him,' is an expression signifying faith in the Son of God, is evident from the 35th verse of this chapter. The gospel finds none willing to embrace it, but God makes his people willing in the day of his power. He enlightens the mind, renews the will, and elevates the affections, so that the enlightened understanding discerns, the renewed will chooses, and the elevated affections cling to the things that be of God. The person thus persuaded to come to him, Christ promises to raise up at the last day, in which he affirms of the individual thus drawn to him the same thing which he had before affirmed of the believer in the 40th verse,—an additional proof of the import of 'being drawn to Christ.'

In the 48th verse, our Saviour again speaks of himself as the bread of life, and declares the great superiority of this bread to the manna which the Jews did eat in the wilderness.

Our Lord who was well acquainted with the thoughts of his audience, knew that they murmured because he spoke of his coming down from heaven, and of his being the bread of life. But what, he inquires at them, would be their thoughts, were they to witness the confirmation of what he had said, in his ascension to the place from which he declared he had descended? It is true, that the human nature of the Saviour had not been previously in heaven. But being both God and man, he is, without particular discrimination, called either the Son of God, or the Son of man; and in consequence of this indissoluble union, that mysterious person may be spoken of as having come down from heaven. Thus does our Saviour show that his kingdom is not of this world, while he reminds his hearers that they are to understand his discourse regarding the eating of his flesh and drinking of his blood, not in a gross or carnal sense, but in that of living spiritually by him, partaking by faith of that fulness which is treasured up in him.

Notwithstanding the patience of Jesus Christ, in his instructions to his audience, the spiritual nature of his discourse was either not understood, or not relished by many among them, and on that account did they go back and walk no more with him. Peter, however, in name of the twelve, on an appeal being made to them, by their divine Master, declares his firm faith in him, and his determination to adhere to his cause. On this bold and honourable confession, our Lord acquainted his apostles with the fact, that although he had chosen twelve, one of them was a devil, by which he teaches all his followers the propriety of answering each for himself, while he gives the traitor to understand, that however little he might be inclined to believe it, his character was well known to him with whom he had to do.

When we hear of the murmurings of our Lord's hearers, and of many of them altogether forsaking him, on account of the spiritual nature of his doctrine, Christian teachers need not be surprised if their hearers should not relish the heavenly truths which they inculcate, or if in the discharge of duty they should meet with reproach or persecution.

Is Jesus Christ the bread of life which came down from heaven, and which is necessary to the support of our spiritual existence? let us partake of that heavenly food which is thus provided for us: in other words, let us ever live by faith upon the Son of God, realizing him in all our actions, and seeing him who is invisible in all his ordinances. And then when he who is our life appears, we also shall appear with him in glory.

Is the Spirit of God necessary to render effectual the instruction of his word? let both those who teach, and those who are taught, implore of God all necessary aid, and then may it be expected that by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, the truth as it is in Jesus will be made effectual for salvation.

Is it in Jesus alone that salvation is to be found? Let us, while others are pursuing their vanities and lies, ever cleave to him as all our salvation and all our desire.

In fine, was there in the little circle of the chosen followers of Christ, one who was a devil? Let us search our hearts, and try our reins, lest, with a name to live, we should be found to be dead, or with a form of religion we should be destitute of its power. 'If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.'

PRAYER.

We desire, O Lord, this evening, to bow the knee before thee, in humble adoration of thy glorious perfections, and while we would return thee our most grateful acknowledgments, for that goodness which has hitherto followed us, and particularly for those renewed proofs of it we have this day experienced, we would with deep prostration of heart confess our unworthiness of the least of all thy mercies. For which of thy commandments have we not broken? which of thy precepts have we not trampled upon? If we say we have not sinned, we deceive ourselves, and make God a liar, for he hath declared that there is none righteous, no, not one. We feel, O Lord, the truth of thy declaration. Our hearts condemn us, and how much more must he who is greater than our hearts, he who knoweth all things, in whose eyes the heavens themselves are not pure, and who chargeth even his angels with folly. With deep humility would we confess before thee our transgressions, earnestly imploring pardon through the blood of thine only begotten and well-beloved Son, of him who when rich became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be made rich. Of thee may he be made unto us wisdom, and knowledge, and sanctification, and redemption, and may we, renewed by the influences of his blessed Spirit, be enabled to abound in all those fruits of righteousness which are to the praise and the glory of God. We rejoice that he is proclaimed to us as the bread of life, of which if we eat, we shall never perish. May we then be partakers of this living bread, and eating his flesh, and drinking his blood, may we now have life in us, and through him be raised up at the last day. But at the same time, may we ever bear in mind that it is the Spirit who quickeneth, and that it is the words which the Saviour hath spoken, that are spirit and life. May we, then, ever prove that his word dwelleth in us, by the whole tenor of our life and conversation. God forbid that we should be among the number who with a name to live, are yet dead in their sins, or with a form of religion, are strangers to its power. God forbid, that while we profess to follow the Saviour now, we should hereafter go back and walk no more with him. Rather let us, with our faces towards Zion, ever move onward in our Christian course, experiencing the blessedness of the man whose sins are pardoned, and whose iniquities are remembered no more; of him who, having put his hand to the plough never looketh back; of him, whose path is like the morning light, which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day; and then when he who is our life appears, we also shall appear with him in glory. We desire to commit to thee the keeping of our souls this night, as to a faithful Creator. Do thou who slumberest not nor sleepest, preserve us from all evil; give us the sleep of thy beloved, and when we awake may we still be with thee. If spared to open our eyes to the light of a new day, may we rise with gratitude for thy preserving care, and with minds determined to enter upon the duties of a new day, with a single eye to the glory of that God whose we are, and whom we are ever bound to serve. Hear our prayers, O Lord, forgive our sins, and accept of us in Jesus the Beloved. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—1 SAMUEL XXVIII.

REMARKS.

In consequence of the persecutions of Saul, David had fled to Achish, king of Gath, who bestowed on him, as a possession, Ziklag, a town which the Philistines had formerly seized, but which, in this manner, came again into the hands of the Israelites. There David dwelt when Achish resolved to make war with the children of Israel: and on forming this resolution he applied to David to accompany him to battle. The son of Jesse, doubtless, unwilling to fight against his own countrymen, yet fearing to offend his benefactor, gave the reply contained in the second verse; which, although an evasive answer, given, probably, to gain time, Achish understood, or pretended to understand, as a promise of effectual assistance, for he immediately promised him preference in his kingdom.

Saul in his present troubles wickedly resolved to seek that assistance from a creature which was denied him by the Creator; denied him because it was sought for merely under the influence of terror, and without faith, or humility, or repentance.

The most probable opinion on the subject of the woman of Endor is, that God here was pleased to interpose to confound the machinations of this impious woman, in her attempt to impose upon the king, and with this view did he send Samuel himself, with the message, which he here delivers to Saul. This message contains a declaration of God's displeasure with the conduct of the king of Israel, and of his having on that account taken from him his kingdom, and given it to David, with a prediction of the death of Saul and of his sons; which, according to the prediction, took place on the following day.

We need not be surprised at the alarmed state of the mind of the king on hearing of his awful doom. Forsaken of God, and without the consolation which he expected from the prophet, he is left with none but the witch of Endor to offer him the words of comfort. We read of no acknowledgment of transgression on his part, no offering of sacrifice, no supplication of any description whatever. But without any action indicative of his own repentance, or of sorrow for the doom of his family, he seems to have rushed on to his destruction.

How dangerous is it to cultivate the society of the ungodly, or to deviate in any way from the path of duty! One false step leads on to another, and evil communication corrupts good manners. There is a danger of either proving unfaithful to God, or seeming ungrateful to our benefactors. The best defence of a land is, under God, the presence of the faithful. When they fail from among men, the wicked become bold, the enemy is encouraged in his hostile attacks. How inconsistent is the hypocrite; at one time denouncing idolatry (for what is the consultation of diviners of any kind but a species of this kind?) and afterwards having recourse to those very means which he formerly denounced, vainly expecting that information from an idol, which God, in his wise providence, had refused to impart! How many are there among us who despise the servants of the living God, and the ordinances of our religion, while continued with them, who after their removal would fain have recourse to them for advice or consolation. But, alas, they apply in vain. The voice which warned them is heard no more, the light which shone around them has been removed, the misimproved day of mercy has gone past, and their salvation has not been effected. Let us, brethren, ponder such considerations, and let them lead us now to value our privileges; to listen to the faithful messenger; to receive the truth in the love of it, to walk in it continually.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, listen, we beseech thee, to our humble prayers, while, on the morning of a new day, we would approach thee in the attitude of children, and with the confidence of those who draw near to a Father both able and willing to help them. But how shall we approach the God of heaven and of earth? Alas, we have sinned, and are not worthy so much as to lift up our eyes to the place where thine honour dwelleth. How many are the blessings we have abused—how many the privileges we have misimproved! We have despised the counsels of the righteous; we have stood in the way of the sinner. Truly, O Lord, we are unworthy to be called by the name of children. But although we be unworthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain for us, and blessed be thy name, that his blood cleanseth from all sin, and that thou art in him reconciling the world unto thyself, not imputing unto men their trespasses. We are therefore encouraged to come to thee by him; in his name to make known to thee our wants, and through him to look to thee as our reconciled God and Father, to call thee Abba, Father, and to implore of thee those blessings which thou dispensest to thy chosen. We thank thee, on the present occasion, for thy goodness during the night watches, for the sweet and refreshing rest we have enjoyed, and for the comfortable circumstances of health and strength in which we are permitted once more to surround the family altar. We would implore thy blessing on the head of each of us now before thee; and in whatever capacity we are placed, and however connected with each other, whether as husband or wife, parent or child, brother or sister, master or servant, enable us to discharge aright each the duties of his station. May we remember our responsibility to thee, and so conduct ourselves as we shall wish to have done when called to render in our account. With ourselves we would pray for the parish and congregation with which we are more immediately connected. May our pastors be faithful, and may the people grow up as willows by the water courses, with minds seasoned with the truth as it is in Jesus. Revive religion among us, and may many, from time to time be found seeking the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, We are journeying to the place of which thou hast said, I will give it thee. We pray for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, and for the approach of that blessed period, when Jew and Gentile, bond and free, shall be brought within the bonds of the everlasting covenant; when all shall know thee, from the least even unto the greatest, and when thou shalt have forgiven all their iniquities. With the sick and the afflicted would we unite our tender sympathy. We would especially pray for any in whom we may feel more immediate interest. Send them, we beseech thee, help from thy holy habitation. Prepare the dying for their departure hence. Spare useful lives, and let spared lives be devoted to thy service. Comfort all who mourn; pour the balm of consolation into the troubled breast, and uphold the bowed down. Now, O Lord, we look for thy guidance and direction throughout this day. Be at our right hand and at our left, that we may not be greatly moved. Lead us not into temptation. Deliver us from evil. Conduct us in the way everlasting, and bring us at last to thy kingdom and glory. For all that we would ask or expect is for the Redeemer's sake, to whom, with Father and Eternal Spirit, be all the praise, world without end. Amen.

FRIDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE LXVII. 4.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VII. 1—27.

REMARKS.

How inconsistent the conduct of the Jewish rulers! Professing to honour Moses, they transgressed an important precept of his law, by seeking Christ's destruction. They condemned him because he performed a cure on the Sabbath day; a work in accordance with the law of love, which is of eternal and immutable obligation; while they justified themselves in the performance of the rite of circumcision on the day of holy rest, when it happened to be the eighth from the birth of the child, although in accordance with the ceremonial law, which was only of temporary obligation. Hence our Saviour's command to beware of judging from prejudice or external appearances, to look more narrowly into the law of God, and the nature of his precepts, that they might learn to judge righteously.

From the conduct of Jesus towards the people of Judea who sought his life, we ought to take a warning, lest, by our rejection of him, he should be induced to forsake us, to remove the candlestick out of its place, and to leave us to the consequences of our unbelief.

In our Lord's attendance on the stated feasts of the Jews, we behold an example worthy of our imitation. Let it then be our great object to follow it, in our observance of all the ordinances of our holy faith.

In the incredulity of our Saviour's nearest kinsmen, we see of how little avail the greatest external advantages prove, without the divine blessing. Let none, then, trust to their descent from pious parents, or their being members of religious families; but let such be the more careful in watching against those worldly prejudices from which even the brethren of our Lord were not exempted.

In the prudence of our Saviour, and his care to avoid persecution and danger till his time was come, we are taught a lesson of self-preservation, that it is our duty, by every wise and prudent precaution, to prolong our lives for farther usefulness.

In the treatment of our Lord by his countrymen, in his being not only exposed to, but actually meeting with unjust censure, we need not be surprised if our lot should not be unsimilar. It is enough if the disciple be as his master, the servant as his lord. In such circumstances let us endeavour to possess our souls in patience, and ever to imitate the example of him who, when persecuted, threatened not, when reviled, reviled not again.

In all our actions let us remember him who sought not his own, but his Father's glory: and let us study to do all to the praise of him whose we are, and whom we are ever bound to serve.

Let us ever bear in mind that integrity and uprightness will preserve us from dangerous mistakes in religion, and that if we improve the light that is given us, more will be imparted, and the experience of the power of the gospel on our hearts will not fail to check our evil passions, and to destroy the prejudices which would otherwise prevent the growth of religion within us.

When we think of the attestation of our Saviour's character by his miracles and his teaching, we ought to receive his doctrine, and ever to bear in mind the importance of attention to both positive and moral duty, giving to the latter that preference over the former which our Saviour taught us to observe.

In the opinion of our Saviour's character here expressed by the Jews, do we see the confidence of error, and the vanity of self-applause. The mistaken people condemn their rulers for a supposed credulity, in appearing to admit the claim of Jesus to be the Messiah, while they boast of their own wisdom in rejecting him; blindly taking it for granted he was the son of Joseph. From this ought we to learn to be humble and diffident of our own opinion, while we weigh well those arguments by which any would induce us to rest our salvation on another foundation than that which the gospel inculcates. 'For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.'

PRAYER.

Most holy and ever blessed God, we desire this evening to draw near thee in the all-prevailing name of our great High Priest, with whom thou art ever well pleased, and through whom thou art ever ready to dispense the choicest of thy blessings to those who ask in faith. Thou art our God, and we will bless thee, our fathers' God, and we will exalt thee. Our fathers trusted in thee, and thou didst hear their cry; we their children, who have risen up in their stead, would approach thee, the God of our fathers, rejoicing in thy promise to be the God of their children, and of their children's children, even to the latest generation of them that seek thee. But alas, O God, what reason have we to blush and be ashamed when we take thy holy name into our sinful and polluted lips? Our hearts are deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. We have rolled sin as a sweet morsel under our tongue, and our most holy actions have been stained with guilt. In approaching thee, O most merciful God, we would lay our hand as on our mouth, and our mouth as in the dust, and we would say, God be merciful to us sinners. Enter not into judgment with us, for in thy sight no flesh living can be justified. Look not on us as we are in ourselves; for we are all as an unclean thing before thee. But look upon us, O Lord, in the face of Jesus thine anointed. For his sake, come over the multitude of our provocations; receive us graciously, love us freely; create us anew unto good works, and enable us henceforward to abound in the fruits of righteousness, which are, through Jesus Christ, to thy praise, and honour, and glory. We desire to glory in nothing but the cross of Christ, by which we are crucified unto the world, and the world unto us. While we look to the Saviour as the foundation of all our hopes, we desire to imitate him in all his imitable perfections, and to grow in conformity with his blessed image. But alas, O God, we feel our weakness; for when we would do good, evil is present with us, and how to perform that which is good, we know not. To thee, therefore, would we look for that assistance of which we stand in need. Let thy Spirit help our infirmities. May he dwell in us richly, renewing our wills, purifying our affections, elevating our desires, and drawing out our whole souls after thee, and the remembrance of thy name. And in whatever circumstances of life we are placed, may we be enabled to evince the temper and disposition of those who are born from above. In prosperity, may we acknowledge the hand that feeds us, and makes our cup to overflow; in adversity may we bow with filial submission before the rod of a Father who afflicteth not willingly, nor grieveth his children, but for their good. In health may we devote our better days to thy service, and in sickness have cause to say, It is good for us to be afflicted. While we live, may we live to thee, and when we come to die, may we resign our spirits into the hands of him who gave them, in the humble hope of a blessed and a glorious resurrection; and at last, may we all appear, being gathered one after another, as a family, before thy throne, there to serve thee for evermore. We give thee thanks for thy goodness throughout another day, and again would we implore thy protection during the slumbers of the night. May our meditations on thee be sweet during the night watches; and if spared to see the light of a new day, may we rise from our beds of rest with our bodies refreshed, our hearts full of gratitude to the Author of every good and every perfect gift, and our minds more than ever determined, that whatever others do, as for us we will serve the Lord; and grant that, advancing from one degree of heavenly attainment to another, we may all at last come, in the unity of the faith, in the bond of love, to serve thee in thy kingdom of glory, and the praise shall be thine for ever, through Jesus Christ, our strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

SATURDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XLIX. 16.

SCRIPTURE—I SAMUEL XXXI.

REMARKS.

1. 'Nay; if one came from the dead, we must repent,' thinks many a heart. But a spirit communed with Saul, from amid the clouds of another world, and told him he was on the eve of battle and of death. Yet scarce have two days passed away (chap. xxviii. 19.) when, as if in mockery of the omen, he rushes to the battle-field, and courts in arms the vengeance he should have deprecated on his knees; neither is it then in truth itself, nor in the vehicle which conveys it, that the energy resides; but its success depends on its being brought into such contact with the mind as that it must be realized and felt. I may receive information which involves my dearest interests, and receive it from a spirit of glory or of darkness; notwithstanding, unless my heart be set in order to view, and appreciate, and embrace it, by one who has access to all its chambers, not even its meanest spring will vibrate. 'It is the spirit who quickeneth.'

2. We cannot but mourn for Jonathan, and are almost astonished to find one like him among either the soldiers or victims of this dishonourable field. Yet, at the same time, we rejoice to think that filial love would be his motive, and that he, who saw meet to ordain his early departure, would take care that even with his 'garments rolled in blood,' he should die in peace. Our connections too, may place us in circumstances that bring life to a premature and painful close, and subject our memory to suspicion. But whatever be our reproach, let us maintain the integrity of all our relations; and though we should die in circumstances that lead men to tremble for us, God himself will cheer our latter end, and give us afterwards 'our resting-place in glory.' 'There be just men unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked.'

3. Saul had been always vain, and at the end we find him not caring what contempt may await him in the world of retribution; but, in the spirit of appalling vanity, still concerned only for what men may do to him, and urging the sword into his own heart, rather than be the scorn of his foes. But the same nature is in us that was in him, and no unregenerated man can tell how soon he may thrust his spirit upon a dark eternity, under the influence of wounded pride or mortified ambition.

4. No man can tell for what an amount of wickedness his example may be held responsible. The armour-bearer of Saul died by his own act, and would be judged as a suicide as well as his master. Yet was it the sanction of the master that betrayed the servant to his crime. And doubtless, no sooner has Saul become the victim of his own remorse, than he trembles anew under the upbraiding eye of the faithful but deluded Doeg. Yet are we all gathering responsibility of this nature upon us. We may not discern or recognise the influence which emanates from us on every side, and is leading not a few to hell. When the dependencies and relations of time, however, are manifested, shall one out of us all be found pure of the blood of souls? 'O Lord, deliver me from blood guiltiness!'

5. The fall of the Jewish monarch was triumph to Philistia, but terror to Israel; and neither party seem once to have referred to him whose designs nothing can embarrass nor retard. Let us, however, bear in mind, that whatever great man, or whatever anointed man, may cease from the world, 'He, whose greatness none can search,' ever lives, and lives to reign; whilst the anointed Priest sits upon his stable throne to effect all the destinies of his church without modification or delay. 'Jehovah is king, for ever and ever.'

6. If God means to raise up our bodies from the dust, it was both a hallowed and a grateful act of the men from Jabesh-gilead to rescue the mutilated remains of Saul and his sons, and commit them with honour to the grave. And in our case also, the doctrine of the resurrection, if honestly entertained and deeply felt, ought to invest every corpse with most reverential interest, and convert our funeral rites into a duty of religion, and an act of faith, as well as a tribute of affectionate esteem. 'Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.'

PRAYER.

O God, thou hast spoken to us at sundry times, and in divers manners, and in these last days by thy Son from heaven. Yet how many of us are of those who rebel against the light, and know not the ways thereof. Consider our case and hear our complaint, O Lord God; lighten our eyes, lest we sleep the sleep of death. Cause us to know the way wherein we should walk, for we lift up our souls unto thee. Teach us to do thy will, for thou art our God. Thy Spirit is good; lead us unto the land of uprightness. Lord, what man is he that liveth and shall not see death? The mighty are exalted for a little while, and then cut off as the tops of the ears of corn. Yea, God destroyeth the perfect and the wicked. Teach us, then, to number our days; and with all diligence may we prepare to meet our God. Let us remember how men shall clap their hands at the wicked, and hiss him out of his place, lest we too be brought down to the sides of the pit. But assured that the death of his saints is precious in the sight of the Lord, may we fall asleep in Jesus, and have our inheritance in light. Help us, Lord, to wait patiently till our change come. May we do nothing that will shorten our days in the midst. Let not our course be finished, until it be fulfilled. Lead us not, then, into temptation, O God, and if sinners entice us, may we not consent. Yet, neither let any of us put an occasion to fall in his brother's way, but may we have grace to walk in wisdom toward them who are without. Amid all the changes of earth, may it be our consolation to discern an immutable God on high, and exclaim, He is steadfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Yet Lord, how long? When wilt thou deliver up the kingdom to the Father? Lord Jesus, come quickly! Behold, the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. Behold, we ourselves, who have the first fruits of the Spirit, groan for the redemption of the body. Come then, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Bid the trumpet sound, and swallow up death in victory. Say, Behold I make all things new, and let the earth bring forth her bud. Take to thyself thy great power, and bring thy sons from afar, and thy daughters from the ends of the earth! Ransom the dust of thy chosen, and fashion it according to thine own glorious body. Claim the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession; and let there be nothing to hurt or destroy therein. Let our eyes behold the new heavens and the new earth, and there may we dwell with thee and all thy saints for ever! All that we ask is in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

SATURDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LI. 6.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VII. 28—53.

REMARKS.

This is the question, 'Is this the very Christ?' (ver. 26.) and Jesus, in answer, declares that he has 'come out from' the presence of God, and 'is sent' with God's authority, ver. 28, 29. Let this assurance at once endear the Father to our hearts, and exalt the Son in our esteem. Jesus has come from the throne of heaven, and is ambassador for God. He was 'Jehovah's fellow,' and 'the express image of his person.' 'Yet he gave himself for us!' and the Father 'spared him not,' but for our sakes, sent him into the world 'to make an end of sin by the sacrifice of himself,' though he were his 'well-beloved Son,' and together they had rejoiced from everlasting. 'The love of God in Christ passeth understanding.' 'Many' who had seen his miracles, acquiesced in the statement of Jesus, but others would have cut him off on the spot, had it been within their power, ver. 30, 31. The same sun that so gently unfolds the blossom, and distils the fragrance of the rose, extracts the poison of the marsh, and sets afloat its vapours. And how often does the truth which commands the reason of one, awaken the contempt of another? Yet, as it is not the influence of heaven which is ever pure, most like its source, that creates the mischief in the first instance, but that on which it shines; so neither is the truth of God, which ever will abide the holiest thing the world possesses, to be blamed when it does not purify the heart; but the heart itself must be acknowledged as the stagnant pool of all corruption. Well then may we cry, 'create in me a clean heart.' No sooner did Jesus observe the officers sent from the Sanhedrim to watch him, than he knew that though 'his hour was not come,' his day must be well through; and foretold that he would soon be in a region which his enemies would covet, but never reach, ver. 33, 34. As yet the gates of mercy are open, and Jesus upon the threshold cries, 'him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out.' But in a little while, Jesus shall retire within the celestial city, and 'shut the door.' What though ye then cry, 'Lord, open,' and 'seek to enter in?' 'Ye shall not be able;' for where Christ and his friends are gone, 'ye cannot come.' All inquiry about Christ is soon overlooked in the feast of tabernacles—a brilliant ceremonial during which all thoughtfulness should cease. Alas! amid its pomp, Jesus descries grief in many a heart, and after that they have proved how vain is the word. He beseeches them to come to him, and in the gift of that Comforter who takes his place on earth, when he enters into glory, he assures them they will find all they long for, ver. 37—39. For the promise of the Spirit then, not less than for the gift of Christ, let us prize our bible, and magnify the hopes of our salvation. Let us see too, that we have 'received the Holy Ghost,' and are 'led by him.' The promise of the Spirit has fallen from the Saviour's lips, like dew upon the multitude; and whilst in reference to his miracles, they coldly said, 'when Messiah cometh, will he do more than this man?' they now exclaim, 'a Prophet,' 'the Christ!' ver. 40, 41. Not more sweet is the offer of pardon to awakened and unexpiated guilt, than is the assurance of the Spirit to a heart brooding over its utter impotence, and tyrannical corruptions, and many fears. Even the Jewish officers, sent to apprehend Jesus, are melted under his last gracious proclamation, and putting up their fetters, they return to their employers, not to deliver up Jesus, but to assert that he is more than man, ver. 45, 46. To offer Christ and his Spirit to the illiterate and hardened is not hopeless labour. The officers are melted by the words of Jesus, but not the Sanhedrim, ver. 47—49. The reason is plain. The officers heard him—but their masters would not. And still it is because they have not given heed to them, that men repudiate the doctrines of the cross. Nicodemus is bolder than once he was, and takes the part of Jesus, amid the sarcastic taunts of his colleagues, ver. 50, 51. Behold 'the smoking wick,' a vigorous torch; 'the bruised reed,' a steadfast pillar, and learn not 'to despise the day of small things.' The furtive inquirer, if gently dealt with, may yet stand forth the dauntless senator. If nothing more, the protest of Nicodemus seems at least to have frightened and dissolved the council, ver. 52, 53. Wicked men may be scared, though they will not be convinced; and put to shame, even when we cannot bring them to reason. Let the upright then assert their principles, and rebuke those who falsely accuse them. This is a restraint which the righteous are bound to lay upon the enemies of God, and it is not possible to estimate how much a secret dread of the godly keeps the wicked in their place.

PRAYER.

Blessed be Father, Son, and Holy Ghost! We give thanks to God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who spared not his own Son, but delivered him up to death for us all; and never would we cease to cry, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. O thou eternal Son of God, we cannot worship nor love thee as we ought. But we adore thee, as the brightness of the Father's image, and to whom is given a name above every name. Thou art the wisdom of God, and all things that thou hast heard of the Father, thou hast made known unto us. O! as thy friends, may we do whatsoever thou commandest, and show that we are under the law to Christ, though redeemed from its curse. Our understanding is indeed darkened, and our heart perverse; and it is the condemnation of many, that they love the darkness rather than the light. But give us an unction from the holy One, and we will walk in the Spirit, and not fulfil the lusts of the flesh. Place us under the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and we shall be made free from the law of sin and death. Yet may we never forget, that even the joy of the Holy Ghost is connected with the receiving of the word, and must be built upon the truth. May we wait for the Spirit, yet search the scriptures. May we quench not the Spirit, yet prove all things. May our faith stand not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. Glory be to thy name, O God, for having put the offer of salvation through the word, within the reach of all, and yet how many know not the law and will be accursed! O thou Spirit in whose hands are the hearts of all men, allow not any to judge themselves unworthy of eternal life. Show them that the same Lord over all, is rich to all who call upon him; and by thy secret energy may they so feel the power of all that Jesus ever said, that they shall exclaim, The words that thou speakest, they are spirit and they are life. O Lord, we thank thee, that we may hope that there are some, who, at least, are awakened by the truth, though they may not dare yet to confess it. Let us, in the spirit of meekness, help all such; and in due time may we see them speaking of thy testimonies before kings and not ashamed. Blessed Jesus, let all of us be more forward to avow thy cross, and defend thy cause, constrained by thy suffering for us. Marvellous love! that prompted thee to leave the radiance of glory for the shades of earth—the society of heaven for the solitude of a desert. Marvellous love! that passed by all the provocations of malice, and grew more attached to man, the more he hated thee! Blessed Jesus, fill us with the Spirit of thy love, and help us to reflect its image. For thee, O let us not refuse the prison, or exile, or death. And what is easier, though rarer for thee, enable us to love our brother, and forgive our enemy. Amen.

1 P. 2.

TWENTIETH WEEK.

SABBATH MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXII. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LXII. LXIII.

REMARKS.

In the former of these psalms, David would seem to be just entering upon unexpected adversity, and so may be considered as showing us how to act when the shock of trial first assails us. In the other, though his circumstances are not changed apparently, his feelings are more allayed, and now he shows us how to act when trouble is continued.

PSALM LXII. Ver. 1—7. When as yet his grief and perplexity are new, David at once betakes himself to God, in humble reliance, and 'silent' resignation, and patient 'waiting.' Even to this 'rock' his enemies pursue him, and threaten him with the 'mischiefs' of their oppression. But encompassed by the Almighty, he dares even to challenge those who hate him, and is only strengthened in his feelings of security by all the efforts of their rage. Ver. 8—12. It is a propitious trial, and should be a welcome enemy that brings us nearer God, and helps us to a surer conviction that 'none shall pluck us from the hand of his love.' And should men still persist in annoying us, let this only induce us to come farther within our omnipotent rampart, and hang ourselves on his steadfast arm with more childlike dependence. We yet shall 'see the salvation of God.' As a proof that, amid all his fears, the psalmist has really attained to quiet rest in God, we find him not only cleaving to this rock himself, but pointing those around to the same strong-hold, and assuring them that, in the end, neither prosperity nor wickedness can avail against that Being who encompasses the faithful with his 'mercy,' and whose 'power' will overthrow the workers of iniquity. 'What, then, though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished.' 'Associate yourselves, O sinners, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together and it shall come to nought. Speak the word, and it shall not stand, for the sake of Immanuel.'

PSALM LXIII. Ver. 1—5. Though still in the wilderness, and pursued, when he wrote the following psalm, David, as one whose fears had subsided, sings in a higher strain, and claims that God as his portion of whom he had just boasted as his confidence. True, as an exile from the sanctuary, as well as an outcast from his kingdom, the usual means of communication with the source of his joy are interrupted. Still his thoughts are of the temple, and the God who was worshipped there. Of old had he communed with him. Often had he tasted of his goodness. And his prayer is for a renewed experience of his love—a bright vision of his glory even in the desert. Ver. 6—8. No privation is so bitter to a gracious mind as that of divine ordinances, and vehemently does it long until the breach be repaired. Yet it will not imagine that holy comforts can only be derived through customary channels, but even amid the desolation of trial, or the loneliness of solitude, it will rise to blissful intercourse with God. Perhaps David would not have ascended at once to so calm a frame by the simple contemplation of God. But he, at the same time, calls to mind how tenderly he had been helped before, and former experience rescues him from present unbelief and despondency, so that, though it be difficult, he still follows after God, and rejoices in his sustaining grace. Ver. 9—11. Past attainments are to be forgotten by the saint, lest he boast and loiter; but former enjoyments may well be brought into view, that they may realize to us our Father's love, and assure us what we may ultimately expect. For doubtless the righteous shall see an end of their miseries, and they who injured them shall understand that there is a God who ruleth in the earth. Not that the punishment of the wicked can be any satisfaction to a holy mind; but it is refreshing to know that God shall yet vindicate his providence, and by the retribution of another world, explain the difficulties of this. Would that all the enemies of God considered how he owes it to himself to punish them, and that in this itself they have an assurance that he will yet visit them for judgment, and consume them with terror.

PRAYER.

Lord, teach us what is man, and seeing that even in his best estate and of high degree, he is but vanity and a lie, let us never trust to an arm of flesh. Show us also, O God, what the world is; and let us feel that, even with all its riches, it is lighter than vanity, so that it may not be set in our hearts. But make known thyself to us, and it will suffice. Enable us to embrace thee through thy Son, and our soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and with fatness. Great, indeed, is the glory of thy power, and the thought of it makes us tremble. But also unto thee belongeth mercy, and in the multitude thereof we shall come unto thee, and not be consumed. We could not have known thee, O God, without thy word; blessed, therefore, be thy name that thou hast spoken unto the sons of men. Yea, let thy name be praised. Some of us have beheld thy excellence, and thy grace has proved sweet unto their taste. Lord, we remember thy love to us in time past; and still following hard after thee, we beseech thee to enrich our poverty, and allay our thirst, and sustain our weakness, and dissipate our sorrow, and enlarge our wisdom, and irradiate our purity out of the treasures of thy fulness. O never let us miss thee in the sanctuary, neither deprive us at any time of those ordinances through which we are wont to commune with thee. In the courts of thy house let us always meet with thee, O God of our salvation, and till we exchange the temple on earth for the temple of heaven, let none compel us to forsake the assembling of ourselves together. But shouldst thou ordain for us a different lot, O God, grant that even in the wilderness of persecution we may retain our sense of thee; even amid the night of trial may we behold our God; even on the bed of death may we sing the praises of thy name. O God, we know that affliction is grievous, and that we especially shrink from the wrath of man. But let nothing and let no one discompose us or make us afraid. Help us to retire at once to thee as our confidence, and exclusively trust in thee as our refuge. May we be silent under the stroke of thy hand, yet never for a moment doubt of thy salvation. As for the thoughtless enemies of thy cause and people, pity them, O God, and show them thy terrors, lest suddenly they come to nought. But if they will not be afraid, Lord, hasten and subdue them. To thy judgment-seat we look for an end to all the ills of time and all the wrongs of men, and we shall wait in silence till thy sentence stops for ever the mouth of those who speak lies, but carries the righteous up to glory. Lord, hear these our humble prayers, for the sake of Jesus, our Saviour. Amen.

14 May. 1861.

SABBATH EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXV. 1.

SCRIPTURE—PSALMS LXIV. LXV.

REMARKS.

If the first of these psalms breathe the very melody of gladness, surely the other introduces us amid the darkest shades of human wickedness and grief.

PSALM LXIV. One might think that of course the man of faith, and charity, and prayer would not suffer from hatred and evil. But look at David, ver. 2—6. Notice how the wicked sought to embitter his peace, and tarnish his name, and expose his failings, and shed his blood, in powerful combination and with subtle craft, and ye may know what all the followers of Christ must needs expect. We may not be able, as David, to make our godliness felt by the station we occupy, or the influence we possess. But if our Christian excellence shall, from any cause, bear upon the wicked to their rebuke or restriction, then may we feel certain that we shall be the objects of their vindictive malice. 'For as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now.' Yet, though the believer be troubled on every side, he is not distressed. He is perplexed, but not altogether without help. David fled to God in prayer, (ver. 1.) and so do all who are at peace with him through Christ. 'They know in whom they have believed,' and assured that his power cannot be defeated, neither his love withdrawn, they lie at his feet until 'their sentence come forth from his presence.' What though they must plead for a season? Deliverance comes at length, and their enemies are put to shame, ver. 7—10. 'Jehovah is greater than all gods, and in the thing wherein they deal proudly, he is above them.' None who trust in him shall ever be forgotten, but they who vex his chosen touch the apple of his eye, and must perish if they repent not.

PSALM LXV. We cannot almost suppose that the anticipations with which the last psalm closed are even already accomplished, and in this David hastens to the temple with the ascription of his praise and for the fulfilment of his vow, ver. 1. Undoubtedly, at all events, the answer of prayer is meant to draw us unto God, and to him who hears our 'intercessions should all flesh come' with the returns of gratitude. It is true we are not worthy of being admitted near to God; but he pardons our guilt for the sake of his Son, and then urges us, through his Spirit, to receive him as our portion and delight, ver. 3, 4. Not even the chief of sinners is prohibited from the service of the temple and the provisions of the covenant. But let him put 'on the wedding-garment,' and he may even sit down at 'the marriage supper of the Lamb,' and be 'satisfied with all the goodness of his house.' Yet is the glory of God not confined to his temple, nor is Zion the only scene of his worship and enjoyment. On the contrary, wherever the psalmist was driven, there he saw the tokens of his God, and found refuge under his wing, even far beyond the seas, ver. 5. And even so shall all who trust in him, and who carry God in their heart amid their wanderings. There may be no Zion where David strayed, nor marvellous Schechinah hovering near; but every mountain is an emblem of Jehovah's strength, and every ocean is the mirror of his infinitude. He reigns over every multitude, and abases the uttermost nations with the fear of his wonders. He leads out each season in its turn, and rules the changes of day and night. It is his sun that sheds summer on the earth, and from his hand autumn receives her fertility and loveliness, ver. 6—13. No one need say, then, that they cannot realize God in distant places, and worship him where no sanctuary opens its gates. Let us but substantiate the presence of God in all his works, and taste his love in all our comforts; let us acknowledge his control in providence, and trace his agency in creation; let us connect his person with the everlasting hills, and adore his fulness in the treasures of harvest, and even nature will minister to grace, whilst grace subordinates nature to holiness and truth.

PRAYER.

O God, our praise shall wait for thee, alike in the courts of thy house and amid the scenes of thy creation. We shall acknowledge thee as the Creator and confidence of all ends of the earth, and we shall adore thee as the hearer of prayer and the God of our salvation. Being girded with power, thou settest fast the mountains by thy strength. Thus far, hast thou said to the sea, shalt thou come, and thou stillest the noise of its waves. Thou createst the light and the darkness. It is because thou hast ordained it that seed time and harvest, and heat and cold, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall never cease. O that all men would wisely consider thy doings, and that we, who dwell upon the earth, were afraid of thy tokens, O God, Lord, enable us to sing forth the honour of thy name, and make thy praise glorious, for how terrible art thou in thy works! Thou still visitest the earth, and doest according to thy will among the inhabitants thereof. Not a sparrow falleth to the ground without thy decree, and the hearts of all men are in thy hand. O may we mark thy terrible things in righteousness, and declare the work of God. Let us ever trust in thee, however dark our lot, and may we feel assured that in vain will the fowler lay his snare for them who have fled beneath thy wing. Holy Father, it is in thy sanctuary that thou showest all thy glory, and spreadest out all thy treasures. O that we may ever enjoy the privilege of dwelling in thy courts, and be satisfied with the goodness of thy holy temple. Truly we are not worthy of so exalted an honour, and in our natural state we cannot even relish such blessedness. But purge us with hyssop and we shall be clean. Renew us in the spirit of our minds, and we shall taste and see that the Lord is good. Thanks be to thy name, O God, Jesus died for our offences, and has risen again for our justification. May each of us be washed in his blood and clothed in his righteousness. Glory to our exalted Head, the Holy Ghost is now given because Christ is glorified! Let all of us be filled with the Spirit, and by him enlightened, purified, strengthened, and refreshed according to his glorious power. O what matters it, if, by our union to Christ and separation from the world, the ungodly hate and persecute us. Still glad in the Lord, and never weakened in our trust, may we bless them who curse us, and feel confident in regard to ourselves, that God will ever keep us, until in due time he bring forth our judgment like the light, and our righteousness as the noon-day. Hear the voice, O God, of our prayer, and as for all our transgressions do thou purge them away, for the sake of Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

MONDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXV. 4—11.

SCRIPTURE—2 SAMUEL II.

REMARKS.

The circumstances in which David was placed, at the period to which this portion of the sacred history refers, were eminently fitted to ascertain the strength of his religious principles, and the amount of their practical influence on his character and conduct. He is now to exchange the sphere in which he has hitherto moved, for one of incomparably greater dignity and importance, but one, at the same time, of unspeakably greater danger. In fulfilment of a divine purpose previously communicated to him, (1 Sam. xvi.) he is now to ascend the throne of Israel. In the prospect of that event, however, he is not so much occupied with the thought of the glory which shall attach to him, as ruler of the chosen race, as he is impressed with the sacredness and awful responsibility of the office with which he is to be invested, and with a sense of his own insufficiency for the right fulfilment of its duties. Hence, instead of discovering an impatient eagerness for the honours of royalty, now that the death of Saul has called him to the throne, he manifests a godly jealousy over his own spirit. He is afraid to move one step without the guidance of a better wisdom than his own. He distrusts all merely human counsel. God is his refuge. He has recourse to prayer; to fervent, intense, reiterated prayer. He prays in the spirit of humble, affectionate, filial confidence. His great aim is to glorify God, by an entire submission to the divine will, and an unreserved acquiescence in the divine purposes; and that he may succeed in this aim, he earnestly implores, and with success, as the event proves, the succours of divine grace. That is, he acts under the conviction that from God 'cometh every good and perfect gift,' that it is not in man to direct his own steps, and that it is at once the highest of our privileges, and the first of our duties, 'in all our ways to acknowledge God.'

Now, this is religion. To maintain this high aim, and to prosecute it in an humble and prayerful spirit, is religion, and nothing else is. Let us not deceive ourselves. Without this, we are destitute of the spirit of the gospel, and cannot be meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.

It is instructive to contrast, with the humility of David, the pride and waywardness of the other individuals whom this portion of scripture introduces to our view. In them we behold a development of the 'carnal mind,' and of the misery which follows the indulgence of its lusts. In the review of this contrast, let us solemnly ask ourselves, are we still under the dominion of an unsanctified nature, or, have we experienced that spiritual regeneration by the Holy Ghost, without which we cannot see the kingdom of God?

PRAYER.

Ever blessed Jehovah! from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, be pleased, of thy great mercy, to endow us with all spiritual and heavenly blessings in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Most especially do we pray thee for the gift of thy Holy Spirit, whom thou hast graciously promised to bestow on them who ask thee. Without his enlightening and sanctifying grace we can neither understand thy truth, nor do thy will. May he teach us to know, love, and obey thy blessed word. Under his guidance may we always walk in the way of thy testimonies, doing those things which are pleasing in thy sight. By his grace may we be made in all things to submit ourselves to thy gracious and holy disposal, and to be in thy hand as the clay in the hand of the potter. May the life we live in the flesh be by the faith of the Son of God; and by faith justified, may it ever be our chief aim, as the disciples of Jesus, to glorify God with our bodies and spirits, which are his. And whilst we would desire to live to thy glory, do thou, merciful Father, keep us from being tempted beyond what we can bear. From the pollutions of our own hearts, and from the artifices of our great enemy, deliver us; sanctify us by thy truth, and preserve us to thy kingdom. We are most unworthy to ask these, or any blessings from thee. Pardon, O Lord, our manifold unworthiness, and in thy compassion answer our humble prayer, supplying our wants according to thy riches in glory by Jesus Christ our Lord, in whom is all our hope. Amen.

MONDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 33—38.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VIII. 1—30.

REMARKS.

The history of Christ's personal ministry on earth abounds with instances of the intense hatred with which he was regarded by that portion of his countrymen who refused to acknowledge him as the Messiah; as also of the schemes of subtle and malignant policy to which they had recourse, for the purpose of discrediting his mission, and resisting his claims. But the entire record of his ministry did not furnish an instance in which that enmity was more unequivocally expressed, or these schemes more skilfully arranged, than the scripture which we have now read. The case in reference to which Christ is here called to pronounce judgment, is one of enormous wickedness, outraging the authority of the divine law, and subverting the foundations of social order and happiness. The accusers are men revered by their station, by their superior knowledge and learning, especially in divine truth, and above all, by the reputation of a pre-eminent sanctity. Of such men, it was to be presumed the only motive that could actuate them in the appeal which they now make, must be a deep solicitude for the maintenance of true religion, and of the virtues which flow from it. And indeed, their care for the preservation of religion and morals might have been questioned, if, with a case which outraged both brought under their review, and supported by evidence that admitted not either of doubt or denial, they had failed to submit it to his judgment who professed to be a divine teacher. In having recourse to his judgment, moreover, it must have been a consideration of weight with them, that the decision which he might pronounce, would supply the means of more exactly appreciating the evidence on which he rested his claims to be received as a divine teacher, and thus would guide them, and the people generally, to that conduct, in reference to these claims, which they ought to pursue.

Thus the matter might have been judged of by those who looked only to the outward appearance. It was now, however, under the adjudication of him who knew what was in man, and who, detecting under the guise of an ardent zeal for religion and righteousness, a spirit of pride, and selfishness, and cruelty, in those who solicited his sentence, not only escaped the snare in which they had hoped to entangle him, but turned into an occasion of their signal discomfiture and disgrace, the incident from which they had expected to extract proof that he was not the Messiah of their prophets.

The whole structure of the narrative makes it manifest that the design for which the scribes and pharisees asked Jesus to interpose his judgment in this instance, was, that they might find means of convicting him of inconsistency, either with Moses, or himself; with the doctrine of the fathers, or his own. Such inconsistency would, in either case, have been decisive against his claims; and his enemies thought he must now fall into it. He must either acquit or condemn the adulteress. If he shall acquit, then the whole testimony of scripture is against him. If he shall condemn, then what becomes of the fullness of grace and mercy, in the remission of the sins of the guiltiest, which he proclaimed as the distinctive feature of the economy which he came to establish? How vain, as well as wicked, their hopes! Their question is answered, but that answer unveils their hypocrisy, and overwhelms them by the awful severity of its withering rebuke.

‘He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.’ Their consciences interpret the reply. Many of them, it may be, were conscious that they were actually guilty of the very crime against which they now profess a holy indignation, and all of them were penetrated with the conviction, that however it might be with them, in respect of that special offence, their characters were such, that they ought not to have appeared as accusers of the detected adulteress. Above all, the answer conveyed the conviction that it proceeded from a perfect acquaintance with their spiritual condition, and a just estimate of their true character. Appalled by the detection of their hypocrisy, and exposure of their wickedness, and consciously incapable of attempting a vindication of themselves, they withdraw in dismay from the presence of their reprover.

The adulteress is next dismissed, after a solemn warning; rebuked for her iniquity, and admonished to ‘newness of life.’

Thereafter, persons of the same description as those whom he had immediately before rebuked, and many of them probably the same individuals, are again addressed by Christ. His discourse is interrupted by questions and objections on their part. These, again, serve as occasions for offering an exposition of the leading truths of divine revelation; such as the proper deity of Jesus; the vicarious nature of his obedience and death; and the impossibility of salvation being enjoyed by any of the human family who reject his atonement. These, let us bear in mind, are the essential truths of evangelical religion; without these, the gospel were a nullity. And it is only the experimental knowledge, and the hearty reception by faith of these truths, and others necessarily connected with them in scripture, that can constitute any man ‘a new creature in Christ Jesus.’

PRAYER.

Most holy and merciful God! Father of the spirits of all flesh! unto thee would we now together lift up our hearts in prayer. Lord! teach us to pray aright, in faith, asking of thee those things which are agreeable to thy will, in the name of Christ, our Mediator. We would now render thee our humble and hearty thanks for all thy merciful kindness towards us, throughout the course of this day. Around thy footstool would we now say in fervent gratitude for thy goodness, Hitherto the Lord has helped us. Goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our life. O! our souls bless the Lord, who loadeth us with benefits. Be stirred up, all that is within us, to praise him who is the health of our countenance, and our God! Almighty and everlasting Jehovah! we would specially magnify thy name together for Christ, thine unspeakable gift, through whom we have access again into the presence of thy majesty, and are enabled, in filial confidence and love, to say unto thee, Abba, Father. We bless thee for his mission, obedience, and death; for his victory over death; for his continual intercession in the heavenly sanctuary; for his perfect righteousness; for his quickening Spirit; and for his blessed word, the gospel of our salvation. May we rest in faith, on his finished work, as our only ground of hope towards God, knowing that our very righteousnesses are as filthy rags in the presence of infinite purity. Preserve us from insincerity and hypocrisy, in professing discipleship to Christ. Deliver us from a selfish and worldly spirit. May we have the same mind that was also in Jesus. May the Holy Spirit take of the things of Christ, and show them unto us, in demonstration, and in power. May thy word be the man of our counsel. By it may we be admonished, instructed, warned, and guided in the way wherein we ought to go, and may we never be allowed to turn aside from the path of thy testimonies, to the right hand, or to the left, but may our path be like that of the morning light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Let us have redemption through the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of our sins. And may the peace of God, which passeth understanding, keep our hearts and minds until the day of Christ, our Lord, in whose name we humbly present these and all our supplications. Amen.

TUESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XXXIII. 8—13.

SCRIPTURE—2 SAMUEL V.

REMARKS.

Though the claims of David to be recognized as king of Israel were founded on a divine appointment, they were resisted by the great mass of the Jewish nation. Of the twelve tribes, only that of Judah acknowledged the sovereignty of the son of Jesse. The remaining tribes united in a confederacy to raise Ishbosheth to the throne of his father. The nation was, in consequence, divided into hostile factions; distracted by intestine discord; and desolated by civil war. From the great disparity of force, indeed, with which the rival sovereigns were able to support their respective claims, there seems to be little reason for anticipating other results than the defeat of David and the ruin of his cause. Far different, however, was the event. For seven long years was the Jewish community involved in the miseries of civil warfare. In each successive contest, the arms of the son of Jesse were crowned with victory. The resources of his adversaries were exhausted. Their courage failed. And finally, their chief, by an act of atrocious treachery, was put to death. With his life ended the hopes of his adherents. They now invoke the clemency of the conqueror. They proffer allegiance to David, as their rightful sovereign. They crave the protection of his government, and the privileges of his subjects; and they urge their plea by every argument that might incline his heart to mercy. They appeal, 1. To the relationship subsisting between him and them as members of the same family; 2. To the services which he had formerly rendered to Israel, and the victories which, on their behalf, he had won, during the reign of their late monarch; and, 3. To the divine purpose, in fulfilment of which he was now become the shepherd and the king of Israel.

Reduced as his enemies now were, to the necessity of casting themselves upon his clemency, David, had he followed the dictates of earthly wisdom, might have inflicted a terrible revenge on their rebellion; and to all the considerations by which they now enforced their prayer, he might have replied, that these should have restrained them from offering that resistance to his authority which had entailed so many calamities on the kingdom. But so did not David act towards his vanquished foes. Too long have the miseries of war desolated the country. The nation must have repose. He proclaims an universal amnesty. Nor does his magnanimity lose its reward. All hasten to pay him the homage of an hearty allegiance. Amid the claims of a grateful population, he is crowned king of Israel. His reign is hailed with enthusiastic fervour, as the commencement of an era, glorious in the annals of their nation. Of the benefits of his government, the most sanguine anticipations are formed; and these are found, in the result, to be far short of the amount of prosperity, temporal and spiritual, which shed so bright a lustre on David's reign.

David, let us bear in mind, was a type of Christ, the King of Zion. The government of David was typical of the Messiah's kingdom. The gospel, like its divine Author, was, at its first promulgation, despised, and rejected of men. Its spiritual beauties were unperceived, its blessings were unappreciated. Its messengers were discredited, persecuted, put to death. The people, and their rulers, were confederate with the prince of the power of this world, in an attempt, audaciously wicked, to obstruct its progress, and to resist its triumphs. And from the first hour that its heralds went forth on 'the errand to save,' these enemies have persisted in their hostility to Christ and his kingdom.

But in the eternal purpose of the Father, the uttermost parts of the earth are given to him for his inheritance. That purpose shall be fulfilled. 'His kingdom shall come.' Already the cross has won unnumbered victories. Around the celestial throne are countless myriads of ransomed and glorified spirits. On earth, too, is a remnant chosen out of the world, who now live by faith, who now fight under the banner of the great Captain, and who shall reign with him for ever in his glory. These are part of his triumphs, and they are pledges of universal empire.

Blessed are the subjects of this kingdom! Christ is theirs; he is their friend, their beloved, their king, their all. And all things are theirs, for they are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

PRAYER.

Almighty God! King of kings, and Lord of lords, thou art governor among the nations. Thou rulest supreme throughout the universe. Thou art the eternal source of wisdom, order, and peace. In thy favour is the stability of thrones, and the prosperity of kingdoms. To thee we gratefully ascribe the blessings which we enjoy, as the subjects of a paternal government, and as the citizens of a free state. Above all, we bless thee for the light of thy holy word; and for the gospel and kingdom of Christ. May his throne be established in our hearts! To his government may we yield the homage of a devoted and hearty allegiance; always, and in all.

things, seeking his glory. May we be partakers of the blessings which he reigns to impart. May we now know him in the fellowship of his sufferings, and in conformableness to his death; and when the trials and sorrows of this sad and fleeting scene are over, may we, of infinite mercy, be received into his presence, and reign with him in his kingdom! Blessed God! hasten the period, when all men shall know thee, from the least to the greatest. Have respect unto thy covenant, and visit, in thy mercy, the dark places of the earth that are full of the habitations of horrid cruelty. Let thy saving health be known among all nations! Let the people praise thee. Lord! let all the people praise thee. And let thy best blessing rest on our native land. Specially preserve and bless our Queen, and all inferior magistrates. May they rule in thy fear; and under them may all the interests of the nation prosper by thy blessing! Hear us, O Lord, in these our prayers; and when thou hearest, forgive; defer not, but answer; and do unto us according to thy great compassion, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

TUESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXXXIX. 15—19.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN VIII. 31—59.

REMARKS.

The discourse recorded in the foregoing context, had the effect of converting many who heard it, to the faith of Christ. And if any degree of prejudice, or opposition to divine truth, on the part of man, might excite our astonishment, we might wonder that it should have failed of producing this effect on all. But there were those to whom that discourse was addressed, who continued, notwithstanding, ignorant of the truths which it illustrated, and opposed to those views of the Messiah's character and kingdom which it set forth. These are the persons addressed in this portion of scripture.

They, in common with the great body of their countrymen, had formed an erroneous estimate of their religious principles; not, indeed, by appreciating them beyond their true value, but by mis-conceiving altogether their nature and design. They imagined that the mere possession of these privileges, without reference to their practical effects, conveyed a title to the enjoyment of the divine favour. They were the children of Abraham, and they had no conception that any thing besides was required to constitute them children of God, and heirs of glory. Accordingly, the mere statement by Christ, that something more was necessary, exasperated their rage, and provoked their insolence. And when that statement was followed by another, to this effect, viz. that it was because 'that they were not of God,' that they heard not the words of his messenger, they gave expression to their resentment in terms the most offensive that language could supply. 'Say we not well, That thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?' Even after they had thus addressed him, Christ, in marvellous forbearance, continued to reason with them, urging on their acceptance the gift of eternal life. The farther discoveries of his grace and power, however, served only to add intensity to their hatred, and to confirm them in their unbelief. Boasting of their descent from Abraham, they reject the message, and disown the authority of Abraham's Lord. Professing zeal for the honour of their patriarchs and prophets, they refuse the homage of their faith and obedience to him, of whom all the prophets bear witness that he is 'the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth;' and whose reign all the patriarchs longed to see established on the earth. 'Abraham rejoiced to see this day; and he saw it, and was glad.' And now that that day had fully come, these children of Abraham, glorying in their lineage, instead of rejoicing in the fulfilment of all the types, and predictions, and promises, by the faith of which the saints had been sustained and sanctified, under the economy that was now to pass away, cling, in infatuated ignorance, to the 'weak and beggarly elements' of an abrogated dispensation, and reject, to their ruin, the counsel of divine mercy and love.

Such is the sad history of the fruits of our Lord's ministry, in multitudes of his countrymen. We marvel at their infatuation, and condemn their wickedness; and we do so the more readily, that it seldom occurs to us to fear that we may ourselves be involved in guilt as aggravated, and in folly as ruinous as theirs. Let us not, however, shut our eyes to the fact, that it is the tendency of our corrupt and carnal nature to pervert and misapply our religious privileges, in the same way as did the Jews, in the instance which we have now been contemplating; and that we are hence in danger of converting into elements of wrath, on the day of final retribution, those opportunities of improvement which are now given us to be a 'savour of life unto life.' Let us, above all, bear continually in our remembrance, that 'the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked;' that of ourselves, we can do nothing; and that in Christ alone is our strength. And let it be our prayer continually, 'Lord, search us, and try us, and see what wicked way is in us, and lead us in the way everlasting.'

PRAYER.

Most holy God! with whom sin cannot dwell, have mercy upon us sinners! By sin we have been brought very low, we have lost thine image; we have forfeited thy friendship; we are obnoxious to thy wrath. Thy law we have broken; thy grace we have despised. We have never appreciated as we ought, thine unspeakable gift; we have often lightly esteemed it. Not seldom have we rested in a mere profession of godliness, and in the enjoyment of external privileges, whilst we were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenant of promise, and without God, and without hope in the world. Thy wrath is revealed against all ungodliness, and unrighteousness of men. We are unclean, we are undone. We have sinned, and what shall we answer thee, O thou preserver of men? Most merciful Jehovah! we bless thee, that with thee is redemption that thou mayest be sought unto; and that where sin aboundeth, grace doth much more abound. We bless thee for the gift of thy Son, whose blood is the propitiation for our sins; and in whom thou art just, and the justifier of the ungodly. We rejoice that whosoever believeth in him shall never perish, but shall have eternal life; and that all who by faith in him are delivered from condemnation, are not only commanded by his word, but by his grace are enabled to walk in newness of life. Lord, bless and pity us. Cause the light of the knowledge of thy glory in the face of Christ, to shine into our hearts. Leave us not to perish under the guilt and power of sin, whilst the message of eternal life is proclaimed to our acceptance; but, in this the day of our merciful visitation, may we have grace to lay hold of the hope set before us. May Christ be infinitely precious to us, as he is to all who believe. May our hearts rejoice in his love. May our lives show forth his praise. Give us the victory over the world, the devil, and the flesh. May we be thine for ever, in the bond of that covenant which is ordered in all things and sure. Have mercy upon all men. Turn again the captivity of Jacob. Restore the exiles of Judah. Bless the ends of the earth, with thy salvation. These our humble and unworthy supplications we present before thee, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM XIX. 12.

SCRIPTURE—2 SAMUEL XV.

REMARKS.

With what a picture of baseness, ingratitude, and unnatural cruelty are we presented in the conduct of Absalom! Recollecting the affectionate generosity with which his father restored him to his favour, we feel indignant at the unfilial requital he received. Nothing, indeed, can be imagined more odious and unprincipled than the character of this man, and his history is a powerful warning to beware of such disobedience and unnatural rebellion. How hateful is the resolute and wicked determination with which he adopted measures to ruin his indulgent parent, and advance his own interests. Under the pretence of being actuated by the highest principles of justice, he insinuated his father's disregard of rectitude; and as nothing so effectually rouses the indignation of a people against their rulers as a sense of their wrongs, real or imaginary, his flattery and falsehood were speedily instrumental in spreading the spirit of thoughtless disaffection. History is replete with the sins which ambition and discontent have originated; and the resources to which they have often prompted, are of the most contemptible description. In the case of Absalom, discontent led to the most perfidious and unnatural conduct. Both in his case and in that of David, their own iniquity did correct them.

Our minds are relieved, as we contemplate this painful scene, when we consider the mutual generosity and attachment which distinguished David and Ittai. Although plunged in the depth of misfortune, and therefore requiring sympathy, with the tenderness which is characteristic of superior minds, David requested the exiled stranger not to think of sharing his misfortunes. On the other hand, Ittai, resolute in his devotedness to his master, insisted on accompanying him. So graciously does our God mingle mercies with his severest judgments. Let us imitate the noble-minded Ittai and David's people, in showing affection and kindness to the unfortunate. It was, doubtless, a mournful alleviation of his sufferings to witness their attachment and their grief. In David's concern for the ark, lest it might be injured or lost, we have an example both of his personal religion, and his solicitude for the interests of the church. Indeed, it should be remembered that the two are generally combined, and carelessness regarding the prosperity of Zion, is too sure an indication of individual irreligion. In particular circumstances, it is proper to consider our misfortunes or our prosperity as evidences of the divine displeasure or approbation. David felt assured, that if he found favour in God's sight, he would restore him to his former spiritual advantages. But the submission with which he contemplated the reverse, and said, 'Let him do to me what seemeth unto him good,' is worthy of our continual imitation. Evidently it is our duty to employ every lawful means to be extricated out of the difficulties in which we may be involved, and we owe a debt of gratitude to those whom God, in his providence, raises up to counsel and to aid us. But we must, at the same time, beware of acting on the unscriptural sentiment, that the end justifies the means. It is impossible to approve of the dissimulation which David practised, in advising Hushai to insinuate himself into Absalom's counsels, that he might defeat the measures of Ahithophel. Without doubt these measures would have been equally overturned, had a different and more justifiable means been adopted. When he had besought the Lord to turn Ahithophel's counsel into foolishness, trusting in his power and in the assurance that he had all hearts at his disposal, he ought to have sanctioned no plan for the accomplishment of his design which was not consistent with the strictest principles of rectitude. In whatever circumstances we may be placed, let us derive consolation and encouragement from the exalted reflection that all hearts are in the divine hand, and that he turneth them as streams of water.

PRAYER.

Most merciful Father, we approach thy throne in the name of our adorable Redeemer, beseeching thee to accept of our morning sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. Make us more and more deeply sensible of our obligations to love and to serve thee. We offer up our expressions of gratitude for the mercies we have received during the night; for the refreshing repose we have enjoyed; for the protection extended towards us during the unconscious hours of slumber; for the blessings which we have already received this morning; and for the comfortable circumstances in which, as a family, we have been permitted again to meet. Graciously be pleased, O Lord, to guide and protect us during the day on which we have been allowed to enter. Most earnestly do we implore thee to impress on our minds the lessons of thy holy word, and to enable us, under the influences of thy most blessed Spirit, to act agreeably to the dictates of thy revelation. Prevent us, we entreat thee, from indulging in unholy ambition, or discontent, or pride, or from exhibiting any want of affection towards each other, in the several relations in which we stand. Allow us not for a moment to give way to any hypocritical pretences, or to seek, in our intercourse with our fellow-men, to attain evil objects by assuming a religious character. Ever let us be animated with the pure, and elevated, and charitable spirit of the gospel of our blessed Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. As we profess ourselves to be his followers, we fervently pray that we may have a constant solicitude to possess the mind for which he was distinguished while on earth. And while characterised for our personal devotedness to thy service, help us, we most humbly beseech thee, to take a sincere and holy interest in the circumstances of those with whom we are in any way connected, sympathising with them in their troubles, and alleviating their cares and their sorrows as far as lies in our power. And, O God, if it please thee, let us all, during this day, find favour in thy sight. Impart to us, individually, such a sense of thy presence and thine almighty power, as shall fill us with joy, and comfort, and elevated emotion. Ever let us confide in thy promises, and trust in thy gracious protection. But shouldst thou be pleased, most holy and sovereign Disposer of events, to hide thy blessed countenance from us, and to show us, by the events of thy providence, that thou hast, on account of our numerous and aggravated transgressions, no delight in us, we do most earnestly implore thee to enable us, in the spirit of the most pious submission, to adopt the language of thy servant, and to say, Let the Lord do to us what seemeth good unto him. And, while thou dost chastise us for our manifold offences, leave us not entirely, nor take thy Spirit from us, but in thine own due time restore us to thy favour, and bless us with the light of thy countenance, and receive us at last to thy glory. Bless all who are dear to us. Keep them from evil, and give them all thou knowest to be for their good. Hear our humble prayers. Pardon the sins of this approach, and do to us above what we can ask or think, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PARAPHRASE V.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN IX. 1—21.

REMARKS.

It was when Jesus was passing through the streets of Jerusalem, either after he had miraculously withdrawn from the temple, or as some suppose, about three months afterwards, at the feast of the dedication, that he saw the man blind from his birth. With characteristic compassion, and that he might impress the minds of his disciples with a deeper conviction of his divine power, he entered into conversation with him. Influenced by the prevailing opinion that external calamities were the consequences of peculiar sins, and perhaps by the heathen notion of the transmigration of souls, his disciples inquired whether his blindness was owing to his own wickedness, or that of his parents. Ignorance is the parent of erroneous sentiments, and sometimes of malicious judgments, and as Jesus is the source of all spiritual knowledge, we ought habitually to go to him for instruction. God permits calamities to befall us, in order that his glory may be manifested. Our Saviour declares that this man's blindness was allowed, that he might be the subject of miraculous exertion, and the means of displaying the divine mercy and power. Without doubt, sin in general is the cause of suffering, but to trace the more conspicuous calamities of our fellow-creatures to particular transgressions would be the destruction of all the benevolent feelings of our nature. How much more charitable and advantageous to resolve them all into the divine appointment! In contemplating the troubles of others, let the general principle which our Lord lays down, predominate in our minds, and the moral benefit will be great. Notwithstanding the vigilance of his enemies, Jesus declared it was necessary for him, while on earth, to complete the object of his mission. His death was approaching, when his earthly labours would be terminated. We also, while in life, have a great work to accomplish, and as we do not know how soon our night may arrive, let us imitate our Master in benevolent zeal and activity. What a glorious and important truth our Lord took occasion to reveal from his present circumstances. Surely the power he now exhibited ought to be a strong encouragement to apply to him, as the light of the world, for spiritual illumination. Unquestionably our application will not be in vain. But, for the procurement of spiritual light, means must be employed. It was symbolically to teach this great truth that our Lord anointed the eyes of the man with clay; and let us remember that, in spiritual matters too, the most unlikely means may be attended with the most important consequences. Siloam, in which the man was told to wash, probably had its name from having been sent or given as a blessing to the Jews, and our Saviour's object was merely to try his faith. In different ways he still tries the faith of his people, and many blessings are withheld on account of unbelief. Only comply with the divine command, and though we may go to ordinances in a state of spiritual darkness, we shall come back seeing. Unusual surprise was awakened by the miracle. Various conjectures were formed and inquiries made. No fact could be better attested, and the man himself decided the question. Nor did he hesitate to narrate the whole particulars. It is delightful to be able to give an account of our spiritual enlightenment, and profitable to retrace the means by which it was effected. But, influenced by the most determined prejudices and unbelief, the Jews were not satisfied. And such has ever been the case. An infatuated bitterness is inseparable from aversion to the gospel; and the Jews, under its influence, were blind to the plainest dictates of reason, urged by this poor blind man, by whom they are so strikingly exposed and reproved.

PRAYER.

Father of lights, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, we, thine unworthy children, presume again to lift our eyes to the throne of thy glory. We cannot praise thee enough. We cannot thank thee with sufficient earnestness for thy constant preservation and kindness. Thou hast been very gracious to us this day. Thou hast supplied our various wants. Thou hast kept us from the evils and dangers to which we are at all times exposed. Thou hast surrounded us with goodness and mercy. Thou hast imparted to us blessings which, in thy sovereign mercy, thou hast withheld from many more deserving of thy favour. O give us truly grateful hearts. Make us feel thy paternal love. And we most ardently beseech thee to give us grace to manifest our gratitude, by the increasing spirituality of our minds and purity of our actions. We lament our natural unthankfulness and disregard of thy providential tenderness. We feel ourselves naturally to be blind, and naked, and miserable. But, O we bless thee with all our heart, that Christ has come into the world to enrich and enlighten all who come under the power of his instructions. We rejoice that he declared himself to be the light of the world. O let us richly experience his illuminating influences. Deeply impress our minds with the consideration, that he that followeth him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. Let us follow him. Anoint the eyes of our understanding with thy grace, that we may behold the world of spiritual glories which thy word has disclosed. We know, from past experience, that unless we be enlightened from above, we cannot see the things of the Spirit of God. O send us daily to wash in the fountain of the Redeemer's blood. And, O Lord, enable us, even in the midst of thine enemies, undauntedly to confess the name of our blessed Master, and to acknowledge the blessing which we have derived from his mercy and his love. Let us have deeper convictions of the divinity of his character and mission, and let us never shrink from avowing our adherence to his sacred cause. May we never be ashamed of the gospel of Christ, but having experienced it to be the power and the wisdom of God to our salvation, may we walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we have been called, and let our light so shine before men, that they may be induced to glorify thee, our heavenly Father. And we entreat thee, most merciful God, to send forth thy light and thy truth, throughout our dark and benighted world. May the Sun of righteousness every where arise with healing in his rays, and may the period speedily arrive when he, who is the light of the world, shall entirely dispel the darkness which covers the earth, and the gross darkness which surrounds its nations. O make us all more and more interested in the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and to the utmost of our power make us instrumental in diffusing the heavenly light, with which we pray that our minds may be more richly illuminated. We commend to thy love and protection all our dear friends, relations, benefactors, and well-wishers; the sick, the distressed, and the dying. O Lord, be very merciful to them all, and bless them according to their necessities. Be with us this night. Keep all evil from our dwelling. Give us the sleep of thy beloved. Restore us to the duties of another day, and help us to glorify thy name, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Graciously hear these our humble supplications. Pardon all our short-comings, and do to us above what we can ask or think, for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM LXIX. 33.

SCRIPTURE—2 SAMUEL XVII.

REMARKS.

We have, in this chapter, a most striking instance of the peculiar superintendence which God exercises over his people, and the general control which he exerts over the human mind. Nothing can be more interesting, than to observe how his purposes are accomplished, while the agents he employs imagine themselves under no superior influence, and to be executing their own designs. David had been guilty of very aggravated transgressions, and he was now enduring the punishment. It was only, however, as a penitent offender he was to be chastised. He required to be more deeply impressed with the evil nature of sin, and to be aroused to a more earnest repentance; but it was not the divine intention that he should be altogether destroyed. Often do we see God acting in this endearing character of a compassionate Father, and it is well when his paternal chastisements produce the effects he has in view.

Nothing less atrocious than the entire destruction of his affectionate parent could now satisfy the cruel-hearted and profligate Absalom. But God signally turned the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness, by the very means by which Absalom sought to accomplish it, viz. the superior wisdom of Hushai. Intelligence of what had occurred was ordered to be sent to David, and once more, for the encouragement of the Lord's people in all ages and circumstances, an immediate interposition of providence was manifested in the concealment and preservation of the messengers. And who can avoid admiring the goodness and compassion of God towards his afflicted servant, in inducing all his followers so faithfully and affectionately to accompany him in his progress? Evidently the interesting fact is recorded, not only as an instance of their attachment and devotedness, but as a peculiar evidence of the divine guardianship. How grateful should we feel for these merciful alleviations of the troubles with which God may be pleased to visit us on account of our sins, and in order to spiritualize our minds; and let us ever learn to realize his hand in the events of his providence. In the melancholy end of Ahithophel, which is awful to contemplate, we are presented with an additional evidence of the miserable consequences of sin, and especially of sins peculiarly aggravated. Such events are found here and there on the divine record, as proofs of the striking fact, that, according to the divine appointment, transgression constitutes its own punishment. Before Ahithophel could have been brought to perpetrate such a deed, what a host of dark and tormenting passions must have raged in his bosom—insulted pride—an intolerable sense of having been thwarted—the fear of a speedy downfall, and the dread, perhaps, of an ignominious death. It is a deplorable consideration, that the very intellectual munificence of providence has often been the ruin of its possessors. Whatever be our qualifications or attainments, let us pray with earnestness that they may never originate vanity or unprincipled ambition; but be made the means of advancing the glory of God, and the highest interests of our fellow-creatures. And in the fact, that, in answer to David's prayer, the counsel of Ahithophel was turned into foolishness against himself, we have every encouragement, in all our circumstances, to offer our petitions to the 'Answerer of prayer.'

Having assembled his numerous army, and as Hushai advised, placed himself at its head, with cruel and heartless determination, Absalom pursued his father over the Jordan. But again did the distressed monarch experience the divine goodness. Deeply thankful he must have been, when he contemplated such a manifestation of the divine superintendence, in raising up friends, even among strangers, so liberally to supply his wants, and exhibit their sympathy. We are naturally impressed with the attentions of a warm heart, and in trouble they are peculiarly acceptable. Let us strive to imitate the generous conduct of David's friends, and in proportion to our means, assist and encourage the disconsolate and distressed. 'He that watereth, shall be watered also himself.'

PRAYER.

O Lord, we bless thee, that we have been once more allowed to celebrate thy praises, to read a portion of thy word, to meditate on its lessons, and to prostrate ourselves at thy footstool. We acknowledge ourselves to be unworthy of the very least of all thy mercies, and we adore thy goodness and thy love, which, notwithstanding our transgressions, continue to be extended towards us. Truly thy mercies are new to us every morning, and we are every instant experiencing the tokens of thy loving-kindness. We deplore our ingratitude and our forgetfulness of thy most undeserved regard. When we contemplate our natural corruptions, and our actual and multiplied offences, we cannot sufficiently express our thankfulness, that thou hast told us in thy word that we have an advocate at the right hand of the divine majesty, even Jesus Christ the righteous. Most humbly do we plead forgiveness, on the ground of his all-sufficient atonement and prevailing intercession. We flee for refuge to lay hold on this wonderful hope, which has been so graciously set before us. We desire to trust with greater exclusiveness and simplicity in his perfect righteousness, and to make it the only ground of our dependence for salvation. O Lord our God, be pleased to receive us for his sake, and increase our faith, and blot out all our transgressions, and inspire us with holy determinations; and pour on us, in richest abundance, the influences of thy Spirit, and sanctify us wholly, and preserve us unblameable. Make thy word more and more the instrument of our spiritual advancement. Sanctify us by thy truth. Deliver us from all evil and unnatural sentiments. In all the relations in which we are placed, let us be animated with the lofty spirit of Christian sympathy and love. And with whatever afflictions, in the course of our journey onwards to eternity, thou mayest be pleased to visit us, on account of our transgressions, let us ever remember, that if really thy children, thou wilt make every thing work for our good. We rejoice in the consideration that all hearts are at thy disposal, and that thou turnest the thoughts of men as rivers of water. We know, and we feel it delightful to acknowledge, that nothing can befall us but what thou dost permit, and what is under thine omnipotent control. And we bless thee for the experience thou hast already afforded us, that of thine infinite compassion thou dost mingle unspeakable mercies with all the chastisements with which thou seest meet to visit thine erring children. Let us acknowledge thee in all our ways, and mercifully direct all our steps. We throw ourselves, O thou God of all grace, on thy protection during this day. We beseech thee, to guide us and to enable us continually to glorify thy name. We commend to thee all who are dear to us, and we entreat thee to have mercy on our ruined world, and to spread the knowledge of thy truth among all its families. And hear these our prayers, and accept of us and our services, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY EVENING.

PRAISE—PSALM CXIX. 41.

SCRIPTURE—JOHN IX. 22—41.

REMARKS.

Fear, especially in religious matters, often produces an unjustifiable cautiousness. Dreading the threatened excommunication from the synagogue, the parents of the man who had been born blind refused to tell how he had received his sight. There is something altogether astonishing in the prejudice which the Jews entertained against the Saviour. So deep and determined was it, that they had resolved to receive no evidence whatever of his Messiahship. And there are too many in our own day who resemble them. We often see the gospel condemned before its evidences are studied, or its doctrines ascertained, and there is no state of mind against which we should be more vigilantly on our guard. Having failed in their miserable attempt to make his parents contradict the evidence he had adduced, the man was again summoned into their presence, and solemnly adjured to acknowledge the truth. This seems to be the meaning of the expression, 'give God the praise.' It is equivalent to a demand, that he should declare an oath, either that he had never been blind, or that he had entered into a collusion with Christ; and to induce him to confess that there was imposture in the case, they declared their own conviction that Jesus was a sinner. Opposition to the Redeemer has often advanced his interests. It has elicited confessions, and established truths which would otherwise never have been known; so it did on the present occasion. Not only did the man adhere to his previous declaration, but while he wisely refrained from entering on a debate regarding the character of Christ, he adduced the most powerful argument in favour of his divine mission. Facts are the weightiest answers to the cavils and the taunts of infidels. Only let the gospel exercise its legitimate influence on our character; let us show, by the consistency and purity of our profession, that our eyes have in reality been opened; and the enemies of the truth will be compelled to acknowledge its divinity.

Determined, if possible, to draw the man into a contradiction, the Jews repeated their interrogations. But their pertinacious unbelief only increased his courage, and emboldened his address. He proved that God hath often chosen the 'foolish things of the world to confound the wise;' and though the Jews persecuted, Christ comforted him.

As a silent reproof of the cruel power which the Sanhedrim exercised, and an intimation that their authority was drawing to a close, our Lord declared, in the hearing of some of their members, that though they rejected him, he had come into the world to exercise a higher authority, and administer more important judgments. And how awful were to be the results of his spiritual administration. While those who were humbled under the consciousness of their spiritual ignorance would receive a spiritual illumination, he declared, that those who should be so elated with their knowledge as to overlook the divine communications, would be consigned over to judicial blindness, and deprived of all the advantages of his mission. And such has been, and such ever will be, the law of his evangelical kingdom. Divine truth invariably either softens or hardens the heart. Let us pray with all earnestness, that we may be preserved from that pride and self-sufficiency which prevent so many thousands from deriving advantage from the preaching of the gospel. Let us not imagine, like the pharisees, that because we possess the word of God, we therefore see, and have no need of an inward illumination. If we do, our sin must remain unpardoned. Impressed, on the contrary, with a conviction of our spiritual blindness, let us trust in the great light of the word, that our sins may be all removed. Enjoying so many opportunities of ascertaining the truth, let us beware of neglecting them, ever remembering, that to whom much is given, of them much will be required. Let us ever beware of shutting our eyes against the truth, lest they be opened, when it is too late, on the awful realities which it shall disclose.

PRAYER.

O Lord, we again prostrate ourselves before thy throne of mercy and love. Bow down thine ear, and hear us. Fill our souls with enlarged and lofty apprehensions of thine infinite perfections. O Lord, how worthy art thou to receive our most implicit homage, and our deepest adorations. We are thy children, continually depending on thee for life and all its enjoyments. And thou art ever exercising over us thy paternal superintendence. We are the constant monuments of thy compassion and thy care. And O we are most unworthy of thy continued mercies. While every day is giving us new and resistless evidences of thy goodness and tenderness, we are sensible that we are every day altogether undeserving of thy gracious providence and protection. We have this day again been unmindful of thy presence, and of the perpetual obligations we lie under to dedicate our time and all our advantages to thy service. How seldom hast thou been in our thoughts; and O how very forgetful have we been of the riches of thy grace as manifested in the glorious gospel of thy Son Jesus Christ. We do most sincerely lament, that the great and purifying truths of thy blessed revelation exert such a limited influence on our minds and character. We lament the strong and frequent dominion which sin has over us. Pardon, O Lord, we most humbly beseech thee, pardon the transgressions we have again this day committed against thee; pardon us for his sake who loved us, and who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from iniquity. O Lord, let thy mercy be great toward us. Turn unto us, and have mercy upon us; and give strength to thy servants, and show us a token for good. O confirm our faith in thy most holy word, and enlarge our knowledge of the gospel of thy Son. We trust that our eyes have been opened by his Almighty power. God grant that we may all be able, from blessed and delightful experience, to say, that although we were once blind, yet we now see. O let us more and still more distinctly see thy truth, and more impressively feel its power. Make us ever rejoice in being called the disciples of Jesus, and let us, in all circumstances, prove the genuineness of our discipleship, by the freedom and boldness with which we plead his cause, as well as by letting our light shine before men. Let us ever adore him for all his mercies toward us, and especially for the measure of spiritual light which he has imparted to our minds. Enable us cordially to rejoice, that for judgment he has come into the world, that he is exalted above all principalities and powers; and that at the right hand of the divine majesty he dispenses the blessings of his salvation to his church, and to his people individually. Let us all be partakers of his grace, and ever preserve us from the deceitful imagination that we have already all the spiritual light which we require. May we constantly come to the light, that our deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God. Accept of our thanks for all the mercies of this day. Be with us during the night. Keep us, and all dear to us, from evil; preserve us to see the light of a new day, and let us, one day after another, till we come to the close of our lives, grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. All we ask is for his sake. Amen.

FRIDAY MORNING.

PRAISE—PSALM CVI. 44.

SCRIPTURE—2 SAMUEL XVIII.

REMARKS.

We here see the security and safety of those who trust in God, in the case of David, and the punishment of treachery, ambition, and rebellion in the cases of Ahithophel and Absalom. We are ready, particularly, to condemn the unnatural conduct of the latter. We are ready to admit, that the sin of Absalom was great, and that his punishment was just: that he was guilty of no common crime in compassing the death of his father, and in striving to seize that sceptre which had been put into his hands by the King of kings, and Lord of lords. And it would be difficult to over-rate the guilt of such a rebellion, or to name a punishment that would be too great for such an offence. But in passing sentence against this traitorous subject, and this prodigal son, should we not feel that in this we condemn ourselves, for, have not every one of us rebelled against a higher sovereign, and a kinder father, than he who sat on the throne of Israel? We have rebelled against our Creator and our Preserver: against our Lawgiver and our Judge. We have cast off our allegiance to him, whose loving-kindness is new unto us every morning, and his faithfulness every evening. He has loved us, and pitied us, and redeemed us. He has promised to guide and to defend us while we sojourn in this wilderness, and beyond the precincts of this passing scene he has prepared everlasting habitations, and endless joys, for all who will now trust and follow him. And yet though he is loading us with the gifts of his bounty, and pleading with us to receive the riches of his grace, how soon do we forget his benefits, how indifferent are we to those spiritual mercies which have been so dearly purchased, and are so freely offered to us. O that God would so open our eyes, that we might see our guilty condition, and to renew our hearts, that they may be pervaded with the desire and the hope of eternal life; then should we return to him from whom we have so fatally departed, and joyfully live in subjection to the Father of our spirits.

Bitter was the sorrow of David for the loss of his offending son, and probably his grief was the more bitter, that it reminded him of his own guilt, and that he saw in it the punishment of his own sin. He had 'despised the commandment of the Lord, to do evil in his sight;' and thus provoking the Lord to wrath, he brought against himself the denunciation, 'the sword shall never depart from thine house.' He must have seen the fulfilment of the divine prediction, and felt the infliction of divine punishment, in this unnatural rebellion which had been raised against him, and this must have increased that flood of tears which flowed, when he went up to his chamber weeping, and saying, 'O Absalom, my son, my son.' He that would escape sorrow, must strive to shun sin, for whosoever committeth iniquity, sinneth against the Lord, and assuredly his sin shall find him out.

PRAYER.

