Uncle Sam's Highlanders invited to Scotland!

Adaptive athletes to compete at Mey

This year, members of the newly formed 501(c)(3) Uncle Sam's Highlanders have been offered an amazing opportunity.

We have been invited to the Mey Highland & Cultural Games in John O'Groats, in the far Northeast Highlands of Scotland. Chief of the Games is HRH Charles, Prince of Wales.

We are invited by the Royal British Legion of Scotland to demonstrate the United States' ability to incorporate Adaptive Athletics into the traditional Highland Games format. Something that has been done for the last 5 years in the United States.

The mission of Uncle Sam's Highlanders is to increase advocacy initiatives for disabled individuals through education and research, funded by charitable donations and grants in accordance with Federal, State, and Local regulations.

We believe that through increasing availability of competitive activities to adaptive athletes, both disabled veterans and non, that every individual can reach their fullest potential.

Sports are healing both physically and emotionally.

This current opportunity is phenomenal not just in the field of adaptive athletics, but in the history of the Highland Games.

Neither US, nor adaptive athletes have ever been invited to participate in the Scottish Highland Games prior to the Royal Happy Birthday America!

Letter from your editor....

Christopher Columbus was not first here!

About this time every year when we celebrate America's birthday, I think about all the trouble I got in the sixth grade.

I was in an "experimental" class at Ruth N. Upson Grammar School in Jacksonville, Florida that had students from Florida State University visiting all the time. We all got used to them and didn't pay them any attention. They were just part of the "scenery."

Our desks were not in rows, they were in circles or groups or whatever suited what we were doing that day. We square danced and sang. We learned so much. Well, I never managed to conquer the Nine Time Tables. But, we did really learn.

Mrs. Peggie McCubbin was our teacher for both 5th and 6th grade. How I loved her! (She remained a wonderful "mother" to me so long as she lived, which was until about 3 years ago. I miss her so!)

Everyone was encouraged to be creative and to have ideas about most everything...until, because I was reading wayyyy above where a sixth grader was supposed to read, I challenged Mrs. McCubbin's talk about how Christopher Columbus discovered America.

I had just read Kon-Tiki by Thor Heyerdahl. I was so excited to raise my hand and say, "Nope. He did not discover America. I read where Mr. Heyerdahl said the Chinese and the Vikings and all kinds of people were here long before Columbus came."

Of course, this was a long time ago. I think I remember a dinosaur or two grazing in our schoolyard. However, I was amazed when Miz Peggie (as I called her as an adult) almost hollered at me that, "Columbus DID discover America!"

Ohhhhh. I just stared at her and felt tears trying to come down my face. I KNEW I was right.

"Yes, ma'am," a wee little voice came out of me and replied to her.

Imagine my delight when, years and years later, I learned of Prince Henry Sinclair, the Jarl of Orkney, who was on this continent almost 500 years BEFORE Mr. Columbus.

I've been to the Westford Knight in Westford, Massachusetts and helped Clan Gunn with publicity when the 500th anniversary of Prince Henry's voyage here was celebrated.

Columbus DID have a connection to Prince Henry. Yes, he did.

In an involved genealogy of Christopher Columbus, you learn it is a very real possibility that Columbus did know about this "America the Beautiful" before he ever set sail in 1492.

Here is what I have learned.

The wife of Columbus was Dona Felipa Perestrello e Moniz. She was a granddaughter – on her mothers side – of Gil Moniz a Knight of Christ, and daughter of the Genoese explorer Bartolomeo Perestrello, also a Knight of Christ.

Bartolomeo Perestrello also had a son. This son, also called Bartolemeo Perestrello, married Guimar Teixeira, the aunt of Tristao vaz Teixeira, who was the first husband of Catrina vaz de Lordelo. Catrina latter married John Drummond, son of Elizabeth Sinclair, a daughter of Henry Sinclair."

It just makes complete sense to me that the family of Prince Henry all knew about his voyage to the New World. It would have been passed down in the family...and Columbus' wife would have told him.

I am still reading. I also remember that I caused a stir at John Gorrie Jr. High School in Jacksonville when I read From Here to Eternity for my very first book report.

Admittedly, I did not understand parts of that book then...but, I did get an "A" on that report!

British Legion of Scotland extending this invitation. We'd like to take 4 adaptive athletes, and 4 traditional to demonstrate the cohesiveness of what we do.

Since we all compete together in brotherhood, the athletes are competing against their personal bests, and everyone does what they can to assist their brother.

While only some of us are former military, we share the "Esprit De Corps"!

By making a tax deductible donation we can go to Scotland and teach them how it's done.

We'll be furthering this mission by helping the Royal British Legion of Scotland bring adaptive athletics to more sports as well as give an opportunity to more athletes, and you can help.

After ten years work! The Third Edition of Scottish Clan and Family Encyclopaedia
by George Way of Plean and Romilly Squire

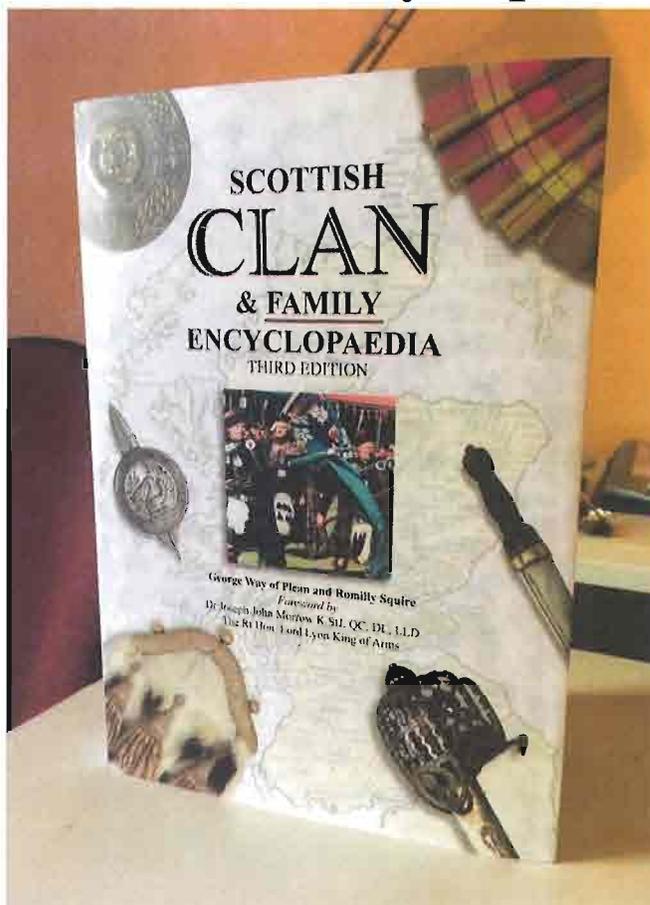

Every person interested in their own Scottish clan or interested in Scottish history needs a copy of The Third Edition of the Scottish Clan and Family Encyclopaedia. Authored by George Way of Plean and Romilly Squire.

In this new and expanded version of the other two editions you'll find extended or updated academic essays - including a hitherto neglected subject: the lowland dimension.

The format is now alphabetical (not two sections); all entries have been revised and updated to early 2017.

For the very first time, every single name has a heraldic illustration by Romilly.

The book is very lavishly illustrated with photographs of the Lyon Court, clan chiefs, et al.

Revised and updated to reflect changes in clan society since its original publication in 1994, the Scottish Clan & Family Encyclopaedia is the definitive single-volume reference work on the Scottish Clans as well as the lowland dimension and Romilly Squire's heraldic illustrations.

Beloved Glasgow School of Art badly damaged by a 2nd fire

LONDON (AP) — Glasgow has suffered a major blow as a second severe fire in four years has gutted the historic Glasgow School of Art, one of the Scottish city's most beloved cultural treasures.

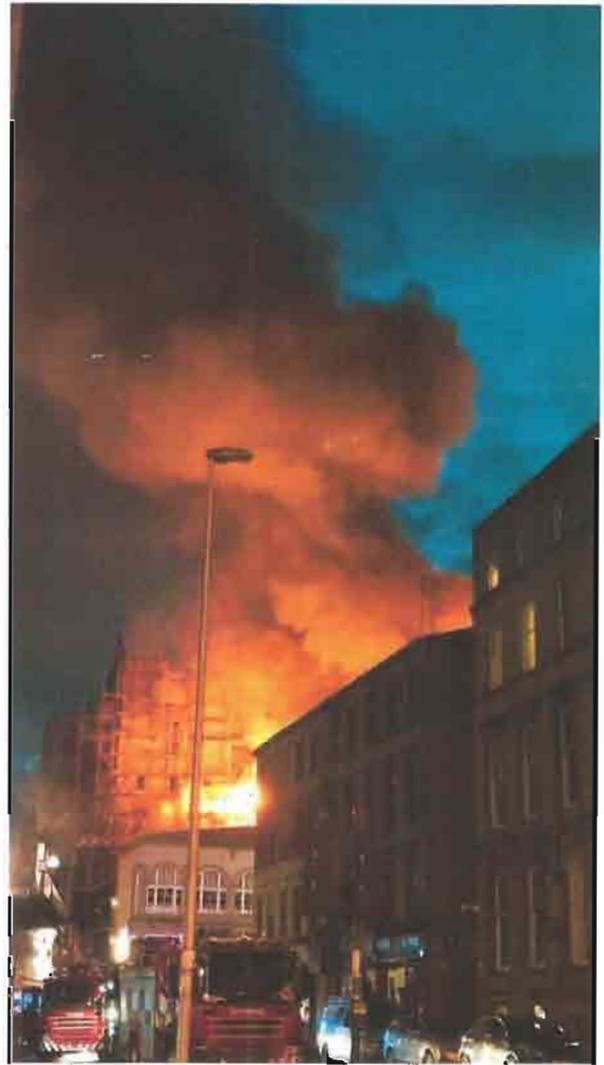

Fire officials said Saturday the fire was mostly under control and that there seemed to be no casualties, but said that every floor of the historic building at the heart of the city center was damaged.

The cause of the fire has not been established. It came near the end of a multimillion pound (dollar) project to restore the building to its former glory after a 2014 fire.

Now the rebuilding project will have to start again — if the structure is still sound enough.

Scotland's First Minister Nicola Sturgeon said the government is ready to provide "any support that may be required" in the aftermath of the blaze.

"This is a very sad morning in the city of Glasgow," she said. "Glasgow School of Art is an institution that is loved not just by its students, staff and the people of this city, but by many around the world."

Flames and smoke rise from the Glasgow School of Art's Mackintosh Building in London, early Saturday, June 16, 2018. A large blaze ripped through the building at the Glasgow School of Art late Friday, the second time in four years that fire has damaged the famed Scottish school. (Douglas Barrie/PA via AP)

Did you know that although tartan is also known as plaid in North America, in Scotland, a "plaid" is specifically a tartan cloth slung over the shoulder, and comes from the Scottish Gaelic plaide, meaning "blanket."

It's all about Scotland...

Carl Peterson

My books have been nominated for the 2018 Readers Choice Awards contest by TCK Publishing!

Both books were doing well early on buy gave fallen into 2nd placé recently.

First to family, friends and fans, a big thank you to all of you that have already voted!

The Alamo book, Now's the Day and Now's the Hour, title taken from the Robert Burns poem Scot's Wha Ha'e and used by Sam Houston to call for volunteers to come and fight for Texas independence 1836.

The little known influence of the Scots and the Scotch Irish as well as other Brits has not been recognized that much but while the Mexican bands plated their music there was music coming from inside the walls of the Alamo.

Scottish music from the fiddling of Micajah Autry from North Carolina accompanied by the bagpipes of Scotsman John MacGregor.

Both Sam Houston and William Travis were avid readers of both Robert Burns and Sir Walter Scott.

Both books can be purchased on amazon or on my websight or ebook versions can be bought on smashwords.com for 99cents.

In fact if you send me your email

Carl Peterson's two books, both nominated for the 2018 Readers Choice Awards address I will send you an ebook version for free. I will do the same for the Ewan Colin Coupar story. I am currently near completion of the follow up to the first Ewan story and would like readers to read the first story before reading the second one.

Please vote for them at <<https://www.tckpublishing.com/2018-readers-choice-voting-page/>>

Ewan Colin Coupar and a Touch of the Fae in the Fantasy Category, a Faerie Fantasy about nine children in Greenock, Scotland, who discover they have Faerie connections through ancestry and other means.

Now's the Day and Now's the Hour in the General Nonfiction Category, is about Scotland's influence in early Texas history including the Alamo.

You only need to vote once in each category. Please let me know when you do so I can keep track. Pass it on and share if you can.

Much appreciated!

Clan Skene and its' whisky history whisky history

With thanks to the Skene Scene, official publication of the Clan Skene Association, President: Al McGalliard, <ALSRX@windstream.net>

Most with an association to the Skene name will be aware of the legend of the son of the Robertson Chief of Straun who saved the King from a savage wolf - using only his Sgian Dubh and that the King gifted him the land which he named Sgian or Skene, in honour of the weapon.

What a lot of people aren't aware of is this small Aberdeenshire parish's incredible Scotch Whisky history.

The origins of whisky in Scotland are lost in the mists of time but it is a skill that has been practiced throughout the land since the middle ages.

Ever since the mid 17th century the government of the land has taxed the water of life and this drove many distillers underground, the highlands of Scotland were the perfect place to hide away from the prying eyes of the taxman and it was in these Highland glens that the spirit was perfected and became much sort after not only in the Highlands but the Lowlands of Scotland and even into England!

In the early 1800s, the Skene lands became notorious throughout Scotland as the route for whisky smugglers, and their clandestine transportation of whisky from the Highland distillers to the Lowlands.

The Skene Ride, the route from the eastern Highlands to Aberdeen was described in 1823 as follows:

"This place is situated between the Dee and the Don, and nature seems to have formed many places of safety to the unfair trader in the surrounding country. The smuggler, in bringing his contraband ware from the Highlands to the Aberdeen market, has to pass through..."

The infamous gauger (exciseman) Malcolm Gillespie patrolled the Skene Ride from 1812 – 1827 and as the smugglers were determined not to surrender their contraband whisky, most were armed with bludgeons and other deadly weapons. There are numerous stories of the battles Gillespie had in and around Skene with the Highlanders. Gillespie seized and destroyed several thousand gallons of contraband whisky and illicit stills.

The whisky that came down from the hills to the Lowlands was certainly well regarded as can be verified by Lady Grant of Rothiemurchus who in her memoirs stated that on King George the Fifth's visit to Scotland in 1822 demanded "true contraband" whisky - he drinks nothing less!

The King must have enjoyed his whisky as very soon afterwards the government brought in the Excise Act which slowly but surely allowed distilleries to register for a small fee and hence kill off the need for the smuggler.

With the demise of the illicit whisky and the smuggler, times became hard for gaugers like Gillespie to make a living and in a cruel twist of fate, he was arrested along with George Skene Edwards in Crombie Cottage, Skene. They had been producing fake banknotes and Malcolm Gillespie was found guilty of forgery and hung from the gallows in Aberdeen in November 1827.

With the Skene name being inextricably linked to whisky for over two centuries, Skene Scotch Whisky carries on the proud tradition of bringing the finest Scotch Whisky to the market (paying all tax of course) under our Cask Classics and Skene Reserve brands

Clan Bell International

This old West Marche Clan, one of Border clans since the early 1100s, were retainers of the Great House of Douglas and also allied with the best border families through blood and friendship. Their land holdings were extensive, and to survive, they engaged in the "rieving" of the period and participated in many battles against the English.

Declared "unruly" by the Scottish Parliament, many of the Clan emigrated to the Ulster Plantation after 1610.

After William Bell, called Redcloak and Chief of the Clan died in 1628, the chiefship became dormant, and without leadership, the Bells ceased to exist as a viable clan.

Clan Bell International (CBI) in the United States represents Clan Bell world-wide with a coordinated network of 20 International Representatives, each representing the Clan in their own country.

CBI is a charitable organization of Scottish descendants and friends of Family/Clan Bell dedicated to the study of Bell genealogy and Scottish history and the perpetuation of family tradition.

CBI cordially invites membership inquiries from persons Named Bell (all spellings), their descendants and friends. Quarterly newsletter published. Tents hosted at major Scottish festivals from coast to coast.

Step into Scotland with immersive AR App

Portal AR allows users to traverse Britain's highest peak, roam the halls of Edinburgh Castle and enjoy whiskey at Highlands distillery

Meilan Solly in Smithsonian Magazine

To generate a portal to another “world,” users of a new augmented reality app must first scan the floor with their device. After positioning the portal in an area free of any mess, they can then walk directly into an immersive 360-degree experience.

In other words, if you’ve ever dreamed of stepping into a wardrobe and finding yourself transported Narnia-style, you’re in luck.

Portal AR, which is available now from the Apple App and Google Play Stores, is the first travel tool of its kind. The world at its purview is Scotland, which boasts attractions like Edinburgh Castle, former home of doomed ruler Mary, Queen of Scots; the shadow of Arthur’s Seat, an ancient volcano better known today as one of the city’s top hiking spots; and St. Andrews, birthplace of golf, which also houses the university where Britain’s future king and queen first met.

According to The Scotsman’s Alison Campsie, the innovative app was launched as part of the country’s Scotland Is Now campaign. Designed in collaboration with Google, VisitScotland, the Scottish Government, Scottish Enterprise and Universities Scotland, its immersive features are intended to aid travelers planning trips to Scotland.

On the app, VR experiences range from a paramotoring tour of Ben Nevis, Great Britain’s highest peak, to the Highlands’ oldest distillery and the eclectic collections housed in Glasgow’s Kelvingrove Art Gallery and Museum.

In addition to allowing users to virtually interact with the country’s landscape and history, Portal AR examines the ways in which Scots, live, work, invest and study. Voiceovers from locals complement video footage of subjects including a satellite-building facility in Glasgow, fashion classes at the Heriot-Watt School of Textiles and Design, and leisurely strolls along the Scottish shores.

As Campsie notes, Portal AR isn’t Scotland’s first foray into groundbreaking mobile technology. In fact, back in 1999, communications company Orange helped the Edinburgh Fringe Festival launch one of the world’s first mobile apps, a guide to the annual arts show.

The festival, which featured 53,232 performances of 3,398 shows in its 2017 incarnation, is, in fact, another one of the distinctive Scottish experiences highlighted by the new app.

The Scotsman’s Brian Ferguson reports the central message of the $8 million Scotland Is Now tourism campaign, which launched in April, is one of inclusivity—touting the country as “one of the most open” in the world. This philosophy underlies the new AR experience, which will be continually updated as Attention Clan Sinclair Members!

Dear Clan Sinclair Members,

Many of you have already heard about the upcoming gathering that Clan Sinclair Italy will be hosting September 23rd thru 29th.

If you are interested in going, please let Sven know. His email is: <bioschiro@libero.it>

Sven said that they can accommodate up to 100 persons on the trip, but there are roughly 30 Italians who are planning on joining us, so that leaves 70 persons from outside Italy. I have a feeling that this trip will fill up fast, so please make your plans now. Once you are on the website, you will find a link to the travel agent who will accept payment for everything except your airfare to Italy. The cost is 1100 Euros per person. If you have any questions, please reply directly to Sven.

Our Clan Sinclair USA website - <<http://www.clansinclairusa.org/home.html>> - has a link to all the details just in case you did not receive this notice previously

May I wear this one?

Contrary to popular belief, there is no law proclaiming who can or can't wear a particular tartan. If there is any control at all, it is only governed by convention.

However, disputes relating to the use of a particular pattern can be tried under the civil law of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act and in rare cases by trademark.

For example, the Burberry Check, first designed in the early 1920s is patented and protected by trademark.

Only wealthy landowners were allowed to feast on these royal fowl

Why the Queen Owns All the Swans in England

In honor of the recent royal wedding of Prince Harry and Meghan Markle, this week we're telling the stories of some of the United Kingdom's oldest and oddest traditions.

Swans, according to those who have eaten them, are tasty birds. The meat is "more like duck than it is like goose," one hunter reports; it's "lean, lightly gamey, moist, and succulent," in the words of a chef.

Today, it's rare for swan to be served, but for hundreds of years in England, eating swan was a mark of status. No one could own or eat one without paying the monarchy for the privilege, and an elaborate system of marks developed to track swan rights. By default, though, the king or queen owned the country's swans, and that's still true: Any unmarked swans swimming in the open waters of England belong to the Queen.

Rules governing swan ownership in England date back before the mid-13th century, as Arthur MacGregor of Oxford's Ashmolean Museum explains in a 1995 issue of Anthropozoologica. By 1361, the crown had an official Royal Swan-herd, and by 1463 there was a "Swan-mote" with commissioners appointed to hear swan disputes.

In England, mute swans are royal swans by default.

Swans were considered royal fowl, but by the beginning of the 15th century, wealthy people could buy the right to own, sell, and eat them. If you wanted to keep swans on your property (a right reserved for those who had property to begin with), you had to buy an expensive "swan mark" from the king, which you'd carve or brand into the beaks of your swans.

These marks, one of the oldest propriety marks in England, might have started as simple lines and shapes, but eventually there were hundreds of swan marks in England and whole books dedicated to keeping track of them. They were designed to look like swords or crossbows, heraldic symbols, and eventually letters. Every year swan-masters would row through open waters, determining the ownership of cygnets and marking them. Any unmarked birds belonged to the crown.

This "highly structured system of ownership," writes MacGregor, seems to be "an English peculiarity." (It didn't even extend to Scotland.) It lasted for centuries, though, and put in place measures that protected the swan population. It was illegal, for instance, to steal swan eggs or to cut the grass or reeds within 40 feet of a swan's nest.

By the 18th century, swan had fallen out of favor as a status meat. Some people continued to mark their swan's beaks until in the late 19th century, when animal cruelty activists argued it constituted "unnecessary suffering" and Queen Alexandra, the wife of King Edward VII, stopped the royal birds from being marked.

This tradition of royal swan ownership carries on today, though: The Queen still owns every unmarked mute swan—the white-feathered bird with a knob on its orange beak, the bird that you most likely think of when you think "swan"—on England's open waters. Every year in the summer, a group of "swan uppers" perform a ritualized swan census, during which they salute the Queen as the "Seigneur of Swans."

Killing swans was outlawed in the 1980s, when the population in England was shrinking, and many people now believe that only the Queen is allowed to eat mute swans. That's not exactly correct, but since she's considered immune from prosecution, if she had a hankering for swan at Christmas, a traditional dish, no one could stop her from acting on it.

The guidon of the Chieftain

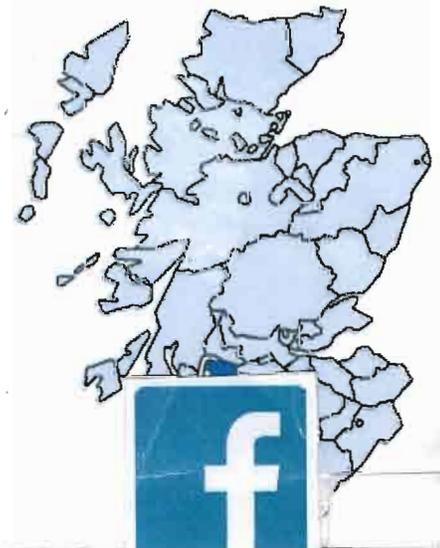

The Chiefly Arms of Paisley of Westerlea

The Paisleys are a family of considerable antiquity, having been associated with Lochwinnoch and Paisley (parts of what later became Renfrewshire), with Cunningham and Kyle (North Ayrshire), Innerwick (East Lothian) and Roxburghshire, since the time of William I King of Scots 1165 - 1214.

William I Paisley (died ante 28 September 1171) and William II Paisley (killed in battle ante 1218) were prominent in the following of the first three hereditary stewards of Scotland, while William II Paisley is also noticed attending the itinerant court of the King of Scots during 1179 - 95.

Separate and quite distinct branches of the family had already developed at Lochwinnoch and Paisley and in the Roxburgshire barony of Hawick before the end of King David Bruce's reign in 1371 and the beginnings of others are found in records for Edinburgh and the three Lothians from 1389 onwards and at Dunrod near Borge (Kirkcudbrightshire) in still Gaelic speaking Galloway from 1585.

was the bedrock of his life. In the Gaelic, Norma was known as Bill's anam cara (soul friend). Many times at Clan Wallace Society annual meetings and gatherings, you could see Bill and Norma walking hand-in-hand like they had just started dating, and they did so for their 53+ years of marriage.

With Norma at his side (sometimes figuratively), Bill completed two combat tours in Vietnam; one as a First Lieutenant Infantry Heavy Mortar Platoon Leader; and one as a helicopter pilot with the rank of Captain. He also completed a three-year assignment to Saudi Arabia. Bill retired as Chief of Concepts and Studies Division, Director of Combat Development after 24 years in the Army with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel.

Bill then worked in the Aerospace industry with McDonnell Douglas/Boeing for 16 years in management. He and Norma settled in Bend, Oregon in 2006.

In Central Oregon, Bill developed skills as an amateur photographer thanks to patient coaching by local professional photographers.

Bill was a Council Member of the Clan Wallace Society and was elected to the Board of Directors. During his nine year tenure on the Board, he was the Treasurer, Executive Vice President, and President from 2007 through 2009.

Bill is survived by Norma and their sons William Wayne Wallace and family - Rafif Jouejati and grandsons Adam Wallace and Ramsey Wallace of Virginia; and CSM Douglas Dwight Wallace and Nicole Nikrandt Wallace and grandson Cayden Wallace of Wisconsin.

A celebration of Bill's life took place at the First Presbyterian Church Sanctuary in Bend, OR on Saturday, April 21, 2018. Bill will be interred in the columbarium of Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia at a future date to be announced.

Bill will be greatly missed by his loving wife Norma and their family and friends. He will also be missed by his CWS family. We bid farewell to a good man and a good friend.

Missing McPersons - This time looking for DAVISON kin

Doug Young Looking For Information re DAVISON Relatives in Indiana, USA. I am looking for any DAVISON (DAVIDSON) relatives I may have in Indiana. I am descended from WILLIAM DAVISON, born in County Armagh, Ireland in 1812. His older brother, RICHARD DAVISON (SR.) born 1809, was the first to immigrate to North America in the 1830s.

He first lived in Northern New York State, but eventually moved to Union Township, Montgomery County, Indiana. WILLIAM, the younger brother, was fiercely loyal to the Crown and moved to Canada in the 1850s and would not move to the US (rebels all ... ha... he was as Orange as they come, but a Methodist). WILLIAM'S oldest son, ROBERT, moved his family to Coal Creek Township, Montgomery County, Indiana in the 1890s.

His brothers, WILLIAM, JR. and RICHARD (Jr. named after his uncle and possibly his grandfather) stayed in Canada. As far as I know, there has not been any contact with our American branch of the family since the 1890s. There seemed to be some friction between ROBERT, the brother who left, and RICHARD (the youngest). WILLIAM, SR. and WILLIAM, JR. had both passed away before ROBERT left with his family for Indiana.

ROBERT was the first, and the only one that I am aware of, to spell his name "DAVIDSON". He lived with his cousin and her husband, LEVI THOMAS, until he purchased some land east of New Richmond, Coal Creek Township, Montgomery Township, Indiana. His uncle, RICHARD DAVISON, SR., an enthusiastic Mason, died in the 1860s. We are hoping to have a reunion and meet up with our American relatives, if there are any left.

If anyone has any information about this family, please contact Doug Young [clanyoung@hotmail.com].

What you can learn from family heirlooms

Bryan L. Mulcahy, MLS

For those with an appreciation of history, the presence of heirlooms will always play an important role. Heirlooms present undebatable evidence to help us connect with where we came from and how the past has influenced our life and accomplishments. We can learn about our families by studying things that were important to them. By having an heirloom, we can gain a greater appreciation and understanding about the people responsible for us being here today.

From a decorative souvenir plate, a homemade item of clothing, tattered family photos or a long-cherished doll passed down through generations, heirlooms and the stories behind them can add life to the names, dates and places found in family trees. Some genealogists have called this “putting meat on the bones”. Family reunions have proven to be a prime time to assemble a collection of heirlooms. They often provide a powerful path to get loved ones to open up and share stories about relatives past or present.

Family Heirlooms can be beneficial for research in a number of ways:

1. Verifying personal information about family members.
2. Providing memorable and specific details about family stories.
3. Shedding light on experiences that impacted family life decisions, migration patterns, and places of residence.
4. Helping stimulate conversation with family members who are reluctant to talk about the past or when visiting elderly family members with failing memories, especially those in various stages of dementia.

Items such as family Bibles may include names, dates, places of birth, etc., that are the only option for researching time periods and areas, where civil and vital records are incomplete or non-existent.

When sorting through interesting heirlooms for special occasions such as a family gathering, oral history interview, or simple curiosity, start investigating the stories behind these items. Experts often recommend the following criteria:

1. Begin asking family members or relatives about the origin of the item. Learn as much as possible about who owned the item and when, what it was used for, and why it became significant.

2. Record the story. Make every effort to record as many details as possible about the origin and history of the heirloom. The story is just as important as the item itself.

3. Pay particular attention to the shape, size, color, and material substance. Does the item look handmade, produced as a limited edition, or mass-produced? While there are exceptions, handmade or limited edition items tend to have more significance than mass-produced items.

4. Examine the item for a patent date and number. The date may help narrow down the period of ownership to a specific ancestor. If you find a patent number, which can help in tracking down a patent application filed by an ancestor, friend, or relative.

5. Consult “antique value” books. Public libraries typically have price guides for most types of heirlooms. Don’t forget to check old magazines and newspapers, and online sources such as Google Images for pictures of your heirloom. On Google Images, the website link to the picture may provide very detailed information. This might be especially helpful if the family has observed the custom of passing down wedding gowns used in multiple ceremonies over the years.
