PREFACE.

THE History of the House of Seton by Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington has ever been regarded as an authentic and valuable Memoir of that ancient and distinguished family—whilst it contains many particulars of a nature more generally interesting and curious. At the close of nearly three centuries, this history is now first printed, from an original manuscript: great part of it no doubt has been made known by the quotations of successive compilators, and probably few genealogical writings have ever been more frequently referred to; but these excerpts, often printed from inaccurate transcripts, have not certainly lessened the utility of a careful edition of the entire work.

The following impression, including the Continuation by Lord Kingston, as previously stated, is printed from two manuscripts in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates—the latter part being collated with a copy belonging to Thomas Thomson, Esq. Deputy Clerk Register of Scotland. Lord Kingston has besides made some slight additions to the principal history, and these, though seldom resting on any authority, it has been deemed proper to preserve in the notes affixed to the present volume.

Regarding the manuscript of the original work, the following particulars have been obligingly communicated by Mr David Laing, secretary to the Bannatyne Club, and a member of this institution:

"The earliest manuscript of the History of the House of Seyton is contained in the first of two volumes, in folio, preserved in the Advocates' Library, entitled "Grant MSS." from their former possessor. It has not been ascertained whether they came to the Library by donation or purchase, having only been discovered a few years ago lying in a neglected corner, without any mark or reference; but under the bookplate of "The Hon" Alexander Grant of that Ilk," in the inside of the boards of each volume is written:—"Castlegrant, March 30, 1740.—This Book is gifted to Lord Elches by LUD. GRANT."

"These volumes consist of papers written or collected by Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington, including a copy of his Practicks of the Law of Scotland, and a Catalogue of the Kings of Scotland, France, and England, compiled in the year 1560. In that portion which contains the History of the Seytons it is worthy of notice that a leaf has been inserted at a subsequent but not very distant period, containing an "Eik" or addition to the account of Seyton [p. 20], but which does not occur in any of the other MSS. of the work; and this circumstance may serve to confirm the supposition that these volumes had remained in the possession of the venerable author."

To these memorials of the family of Seton is now subjoined an Account of Alexander Seaton, Confessor to King James the Fifth, by the laborious historian of the Sufferings of the Scottish Church; a performance, though supplying little not previously known, which would seem properly to claim a place in the history of that family and name from which this early disciple of the Reformation primarily derived his descent.

And the interesting and curious Engravings by which the volume is illustrated are the gift of Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe, Esq. a gentleman whose many disinterested favours of this nature to his country will long recommend his name to the grateful regard of the historian and antiquary.

The Life of Sir Richard Maitland, the author of the following work, has engaged the talents of the first of Scottish antiquaries, and it has justly been remarked that he is never mentioned by writers but with respect, as a man of great abilities and virtue. The amiable feelings of this learned and good man are pleasingly disclosed in the following short introduction prefixed to the Catalogue of Kings, and as all such regarding him must prove acceptable, this address may with little impropriety preface The Historie of the House of Seytoun—the Catalogue is titled, "Heir followis ane breif and compendious Tabill or Cathalog of the names of the Kingis of Scotland, France, and Ingland, with the dait of their regnis; to giddir with the successioun of King Malcolme Cainmoir, and of all Kingis of Scotland sensyn, to the dait heirof; quham thay mareit, quhat successioun thay had, with wham thay war allyat. "The caus quhy that I, ane ignorant, did handill the thingis contenit in this lytill Buik, of female valour (O gentill redaris, to quham I direct the famin), It will pleis yow vnderstand that (thankis be to God) I am vifeit with sic infirmitet sa that I can nocht haue corporale exercitioun to satiffie my spreit and consaff as I have had in tymes bygan. And fen all mortale, of thair awin nature, quhen thair ingyn and mynd is ydill, will rather imagin and revolve ewill thingis of dipplesoun, nor gud thingis and plefand; thairfor, to efschew ydines of mynd, and to occupy tyme fwa that the famin, and the debilitet of my body be mair portabil, I thoched gud to be exercit with sum thing: both becaus in thir dayes I think parell to mell with materis of grit importance, howbeit I war qualifieit, as I am nocht. Quhairfor, amang vther labouris, I gatherit and colleetit the thingis set furth in this lytill volume, quhilksis, as I believe, will offend naman; exhortand the redaris to correct the famin, and nocht to detract it, excusand my ignorance. And howbeit this be written in diuers Histories befoir, yit it heir mair breiflie, mair compendious, and mair easie to find; thairfor, all men excuse my ignorance, and accept my gud mynd and will, quhilk faif wald have done weill, as knawis Almychtie God, to quham I commit the conseruation, governament and gyding of our Queenis maiestie, the haill eftait and commoun weill of this our native cuntrte of Scotland."

It war veray gude, honorable, pleßand, and profitable, that everie girt nobill and gentillmen of heritage, and specialie men of girt houfis, put in remembrance and maid cronicle of thair houfis and furename; of thair begynning and proçes of thair predeceßfouriis lyvis, pertainiclye of actis and deidis sthat thay did in thair tyme; quhat succeßfion thay had, wyth quhom thay war allyat, and quhat was thair end.

It war girt pleßour to ane man to knaw the originall and begynnyng of his hous and furename, and how lang it hes stãnd, wyth gud actis and vertu of his predeceßfouriis; and it war richt profitable, becaus quhen ane man remembris the gud begynnyng of his hous and fure-name, the lang stãnding thairof, the honorable and vertuous actis of his predeceßfouriis, [it] will gif occaßfion till everie man to confërve and mantene the hous that his forbears hes conqueïft, and will be the mair layth to do ony thing that may be the hurt or decay of the famyn. furth in remembrance, it may gif everie man occasioun to eschew all thingis dishonorable or detestable, in eventure that it be spokin mony yeiris after thair deceis from this world, to thair fclander and shame.

Thair is bot certane maneris of begynnyng of houfis in this cumtric of Scotland: ane is by gift of princeis or grit men, for trew and thankfull service; ane vther is be iuft conqueis be ane mannis filuer or geir; the thrid is be maryage of ladyis of heritage; and ferdlie, quhen be even ture heretage fallis to ane man be his mother, or fum vther famell his pre-decessour. And gif tua beis that ane mannis hous hes had begynnyng be gift of princeis or grit men, it will gif occasioun to thair posteritie to be trew and thankfull servandis to thair superiouris, to that effect that thay may augment thair hous thairby. And gif it hes begun be iuft conques wyth ane mannis filuer or geir, it will gif occasioun in lyk maner to thair posterite to be vertuous, and na waifouris, that thay may eik thair heretage be iuft conqueis. And gif it hes begun be mariage of ladyis of heretage, it will gif siclyk occasioun to thair posterite, quhen sic ane thing happennis, to preis thairat. And gif it hes cumit be successeioun of [a] famell, it will gif occasioun till everie man to alia his fone and appeirand ayr wyth the best and maiest honourous hous and party that he may win to, in hope that sic chance may fall to his posterite be maryage. Thair is certane maneris of begynnyng of houfis quhilk ar verray detestable, and contrair to all lawis bayth of God and man, quhilk I wald exhort all men to forbeir (howbeit thay be owermekle vfit in this cumtric): That is to say, be circumventioun of the ignorant and innocent, or be extreme neceffite of the pure, compellit thairby; or be inuentioun of new lawis and practifes, and vther ewill confaitis; or werft of all, be reif and oppressioun. Quhilkis thingis I can nocht call begynningis of houfis, becaus thay ar fene oft tymes [to] cum to ane ewill end; for we may fè be experience how mony grit houfis hes bein in this realme, and now fa far decayit, that šcantlie is left ony of thair posterité, and thair haill houfis and heritage is tranflatit fra thair ſurenames in to the princeis handis, or ſum vther ſtrangear. I culd ſchaw mony in ſpeciall, and part in my tyme, war nocht ſum wald be offendit thair-wyth; bot it is nocht neidfull, becaus thair is mony weill aneuche knawin. The caus of this decay hes bein ſum wrang conques; or be ſum grit oppreſſioun done be ſum of thay hous: ſfor we fè ſum men, barrownis and ſinall gentill mennis houfis, quhilk began before ſum of the ſaid grit houfis, now decayit, and continewit all thair tyme, and yit ſtandis lang eftter thame in honour and ſufficienſt leving.

Bot now to cum to my purpois. I was requeiftit be ane nobill and trew barroun, George Lord Seytoun the ſerd of that name, to collecť gadder and ſet furth the ſtortorie and cronicle of his hous and ſurename, quhilk hes bein verray ancyent and honorable. The caus of his requeift to me was be reſſoun that I knew the evidentis and wrytingis of his hous beſt of ony man in thir dayis, and had ofteſt ſein and handlit thame: and als becaus I was ane dochterisfone of the ſaid hous. To the quhilk requeift I grantit and promiſſit to do the ſamyn, fa far as I vnderſtude and knew. Bot becaus the tyme hes bein verray trublus, I haue had mony impedimentis, fua that I micht nocht perſorne my promeis. Exhortand all reidarlis, gif I omit ony thing, it fall be imput to negligence and ignorance, and nocht to wilfulness. For [I] fall ſay no thing bot I fall haue for me gude apper-ance, to the quhilk all reſonable reidarlis fall be juge; or the croniclis of this realme of Šcotland, or the evidentis and wrytingis of the ſaid hous, or be the reheres of honorabill men quha in my opinioun ar faythfull and of gude fame, or ellis the thingis that I haue ſene or hard in my awin tyme.

Amang the quhilkis, he gaft to the predeceffour and forbear of my Lord Seytoun the surename of SEYTOUN, as the Cronicle of Scotland testifies. Appeirandlie, be refoun that the gentillman that first refaut this surename poiffesfit the landis of Seytoun for the tyme, quhilik hes bein the occasioun of the giffin to him that surename; for thay landis ar callit Seytoun for ane grit caus, becaus thay ly hard vpon the Sey cofi, and the Toun thairof is neir to the fey, Heir we may collect twa thingis: ane is that he was ane gentilman that refault firft the surname, becaus the king gaif surnames to nane bot gentilmen; and secundlie, that he was landit, becaus he tuk the surname be reflexion of the landis that he possedid for the tyme, as said is. And it may weill stond, that his forbearis had broukit the said landis lang befoir that tyme, howbeit thair be na infeftment to schaw thairvpon; and howbeit thair had bein infeftmentis, thay micht weill haue bein tint fenfyn, be reflexion of the grit suddane and cruell weiris that hes bein in this realme of Scotland, and spesialie in thir partis of Lothyane.

To quhom he foundit xx markis of annuell, to be tane of Hartfyd and the Clyntis. This Lord George was in the tyme of King James the Secund, fone to Kyng James the First; and deit in the tyme of King James the Thryd, fone to King James the Secund.

OFF LORD GEORGE,
THE SECUND OF THAT NAME.

George the secund succedit to George the first, his gudscirh, and was mekle gevin to lettres, and was cumnyng in dyuers sicences, as in astrologie, mufeik, and theologie. He wes sa gevin to lettres, that, efter he was mareit, he passit to Santandrois, and thair remanit lang gud space. He pendit the queir of Seytoun from the rymbrafis but, fundit and erectit the Collage thairof, and devydit the personage thairof betuix the proveft and the prebendaris. He biggit the haill place of Wintoun, wyth the yard and garding thairof. In the quhilk gardin I haue fein fyve fcoir torris of tymber, about the knottis of the flouris; ilk ane twa cubite of hicht, haveand tua knoppis on the heid, ane aboue ane vther, als grit everilk ane as ane row-boull, overgilt with gold; and the fchankis thairof paintit with dyuers hewis of oylie colouris.

This George was tane prefoneir be the Phlemmenis, induellaris of

Flemmyngis, he coft ane grit fchip, callit the Aquila, and held lang

Nochtwithstanding that this Lord George wes ane weill letterit and ane nobill man, yit he was fumpaert gevin to voluptie and plefour, quhilk was the caus of his truble in his lyf tyme, quhairthrow he hurt his heritage. I wald exhort all nobill men to forbeir this vice for the mekle mfcheif that followis thairon. He had monye baftard bairnis: as ane, callit William, quha deit wythouth succe ffioun; ane vther, callit James, quha lykwyfs deit without succeffioun; ane, callit Maitter Chrifttell, quha deit within ordouris; and ane, callit Thomas, quha was ane familiar fervand to King James the Ferd—he had thre fonnis: the eldeft, callit George, quha deit without fonnis; the secund, callit Johne, quha deit alfo without fonnis; the thrid, callit Alexander, ane chaplane in the collage. This Lord George tuk the armes of Buchane, quhilk ar thre Cumming fchevis, quarterlie wyth his awin armes, allegeand him [spelt] to be air of the said erldome, be resfoun of his gud dame. This Lord tuk grit plefour of the cumpany of cunning men: he was ane grit fettar in mufeik. He biggit the revestré of Seytoun; pendit and theikit it wyth flane. He wes alsō callit be King James the Ferd, to heir the barony of Wincheburgh recognoscit, for the maist part annalit; fför the quhilk he payit ane thousand markis of compofitioun. And efter lang ficknes, he deit, being of gude age, in the xx yeir of the regne of King James the Ferd, fone to King James the Thryd; and was bureit in the queir of Seytoun, at the hie altar end.

This George louit the landis of the Barnis, the Manis of Wincheburgh and the milne of the famin, and certane landis in Tranent, wodfet be his fader. And als he theikit the queir of Seytoun with flane, and reparalit the famin wyth glaifying windowis; maid the dafkis thairin and cyperingis aboue the altaris, and pauimentit the said queir; and gave to it certane vehtmantis, ane haill compleit fland of clayth of gold, and vtheris of vther filkis.

Efter quhais deceifs, his [ladye] remanit-wedo continualie xlv yeiris. Sche was ane nobill and wyfè ladye. Sche gydit hir fonnis leving quhill he was cumit to age; and thairefter fche paffit and remanit in the place of Senis, on the Borrow mvre, befyd Edinburgh, the rest of hir lyvetyme. Qhilk place fche helpit to fund and big as maift principale. Sche did mony [gude] aëcis: for, efter hir husbandis deceis, fcho mareit hir faid dochter, callit Marioun, firft on the maifter of Borthuik fyne on the erle of Eglintoun, and payit bayth the tocharis; fche helpit to marie tua of hir fonnis dochteris,—ane to the erle of Menteith, and ane vther to the lard of Restalrig, and helpit to pay bayth thair tocharis, in hir fonnis tyme; and efter hir fonnis deceifs, fcho mareit tua of hir fonnis dochteris,—the eldest of the tua, callit Beatrix, on the eldest fone and air of S[] Walter Ogiluy of Dunlugus knycht,—the youngest, on Hew maifter of Symmervale, eldest fone and appeirand air of James lord Symmervale, and payit of thair tocharis threttie fewin hundreth markis,—the rest was payit be George lord Seytoun, thair brother, quhilk was ane thousand markis, togidder wyth the rest of the hail expensifs of the faidis mariagis. This Lord [last mentioned] gave to his thre sifteris that was to marié, ane thousand pundis to thair maryage, of his tochar, quhilk was mekle to him to forbeir, his gudame and his faderis secund wyf haveand the tua-part of his leving. This forfaid Ladie, by all conditioun and thingis forfaid, gave to her dochter and foonis barnis large sowmes of mony, a lytill affoir his deid: That is to sa, To hir dochter, countes of Eg-lintoun, fyve hundredeth markis; to the laird of Carieftoun, fyve hundredeth markis, vpon ane annuell of the lord Yefferis landis and tua hundredeth markis in siller; to Marioun countes of Monteith, fyve hundredeth markis; to Beatrix ladie of Dunlugus, thre hundredeth markis; and to Helynor maiîres of Symmervale, thre hundredeth merkis. She loftit the revestrie, and maid grit lokit

Peraduenture, fum in thir dayis will think that beilding of kirkis, gevin of ornamentis thairto, and funding of preiis, ar superstitious thingis, and maintenances of ydolatrie; and, thairfor, nicht worth to be put in memorie. Bot quha will pleis to reid the historeis and croniclis of all cuntreis, fall find maiſt writtin and tretit of conquessing of cuntreis and landis, moving of weirs, and sdryking of feildis and battellis; sua that quhafaever conquessit monyeſt cuntres and landis, and specialie be the swerd, movit griteſt weirs, vinqueſſit and flew monyeſt in feildis and battellis, war ettemit maiſt valyeand and victorious conquerouris, and maiſt put in writ, to thair fame and glorie: howbeit the said conques and doings procedit of maiſt infaſſiable grendines and maiſt crewell tiranny, contrare all law, bayth of God and man. And fen thingis vnleſſum as thir ar writtin to the commendationoun of the doaris thairof, Quhy may I nocht fet furth sic workis as, throw all Chrifſindome and wyth all the esſaitis thairof, war halδin of griteſt commendationoun and maiſt godlye? Bot how thay pleſit God I refer to him selp, quha feis the hartis and intentiou of all creature. Bot, at the leisf, it schanis the liberale and honourabill hart of the doaris thairof, that rher wald spend thair geir and gudis vpon sic visble and commendit actis, for the tyme, nor to haue hurdit and poikit vp the samin in coffaris, or waiſſit it vpone vnleſſum fenſualité or prodi-galité. And gif I had nocht writtin the sädis werkis, halδin godlie for the tyme, fum wald, or micht, haue reprevit me for omitting and for-getting sic thingis; as the lyk and ſemlabar ar writtin in vther his-tories, in commendationoun and loving of the doaris thairof.

The caus that I set furth the speciall actis and deidis of this Ladie, is to gif occasioun till all ladyis in tyme to cum that happinnis to be in the said hous, or ony vther hous, to follow the said Ladie in honeste conuerfatioun and chaftite; and in kyndness and liberalité to the hous quhamto thay ar allyat, and quhamof thay haue thair leiving.

OFF LORD GEORGE,

THE FYFT OF THAT NAME.

George the fyft of that name succedit to George the ferd, his father; and was lang nurisit in France. And mareit lIsībell, dochter to S' Willame Hammiltoun of Sanquhar, knycht, that tyme capitane of the castell of Edinburgh; and ane of the fenatouris of our fouerane Ladies college of justice. The caus of this maryage wes be reffoun that my lord duik of Chattellarault, erle of Arrane, lord Haṃmiltoun, etc. was gouernour of this realme, and his brother, Johne archebishop of Sanctandros, was thesaurar, and was sumthing sharp to the said Lord George, and maid' him impediment in the brouking of certane few landis of Kirkliftoun, that the said Lord Georges fader gat in few of Dauid Betoun, cardinale of Sanctandros. For the quhilk caus, the said Lord George thocht gude to allya him self with sum of my lord duikis freyndis and furename; and becaus the said S' Willame was griteft, maist substantious and honest, of that fure-name, nixt my said lord duikis self, haveand dochteris at age to mary, he thocht gud to marey his dochter, thinkand thairthrow to haue the mair favour and maintenance of the lord duik and his brother, the archiebishop of Sanctandros: and for reסoble tocher and gratuities gevin and done to the said Lord George; and becaus my lord duik allegit his mareage to be in our fouerane Ladies handis and his, be reffoun of his office, as the indenture of mareage mair fullelie proportis, in the quhilk my said Lord and the said Archebischop are contractaris.
In this Lord Georgeis tyme, the grit tour of Seytoun, and the jammay hous thairof, was reparallit and mendit be S' William Hammiltoun, fader in law to the said Lord George, better nor ever it was befor the said burnyng.

And als this Lord biggit anee grit dyk and wall of flane about the yarde and grit orcheart of Seytoun; and als biggit anee pretty hous upon the gardin fyd thairof, besouth the grit tour, and reparallit the foir werk thairof, brint be the Inglismen.

In this Lordis tyme, vpon the day of , the yeir of God J° v° lxj yeiris, at tua houris in the morning, or thairby, the grit dungeon of Seytoun fell to the grund, bot, be the grace of God, it did na skayth, nother to man nor beisf. The caus of the falling thair-of wes partlie be the grit eild of the famin, and partlie [be] breiking of grit lichtis and eismentis in it, the wall and work thairof, beand auld, confumit.

The foir werk of Seytoun, aboue the foirentres, biggit be this Lordis guddame, Jane Hepburne, beand haill brint and maid rwinus be the Inglismen; this Lord biggit and reparit the famyn, mair sumptuous and costlie nor ever it wes of befoir: be the quhilk reparatioun and tranflation, thair wes lytill or nathing, of effect, left of the auld werk; fau that the biggin, reparatioun, and translatioun, wes mair costlie to the faids Lord nor he had biggit the famyn fra the grund vp. And als the faids Lord biggit the new werk on the north fyde of the faid foirentres, joynd with the famyn, with the entres thairto on the eis fyde of the clois, fra the grund vp; and convoyit be conduitis sufficient wartir to serve the kitchin and vther office housis necesfar in the faid werk, with all vther commoditeis requyrit to the famyn.

And howbeit sum wald allege that it is flatterie to wryt ony thing prayfable in the mannis lyftyme of quham it is writtin; nochtw standing, my opioun is contrair: That ony thing prayfable done, and specialie in making of policy, may be weill aneuche writin in the doars awin tyme, fau that the werk be done modefliie. And howbeit it be sumptuous and costlie mair nor nessesitie requyris, yit it is the maist tollerable kynd of prodigalitie and of sumptuous and immoderat coft; becaus the famyn will be stedable to the posteritie, and decoi of the cuntrey. And gif it falhappin the faid Lord to do ony thing

My noble Lord, and dear Nephew,

The Historick Genealogie of your Lordship's ancient and noble Houfe of Seton I have enlarged from the fourth George Lord Seton (at whose life Sir Richard ends his history), to this present year of God, 1687.

Sir Richard begins your Genealogie att one Dougall Seton, who was grandchild to him who first tooke the name of Seton, in King Malcolme Kenmoir's tyne, who reigned in anno 1061. This Dougall Seton married Jennet Quintfey, daughter to Rodger Quintfey Earle of Wintone [Winchefter], Constable of Scotland; and was in the time of Alexander the First, fifth son to King Malcolme Kenmoir, who reigned in anno 1109. By which marriage it appeares the said Dougall Seton got the lands of Winton.

Sir Richard would have the originall of the surname to be from the two old Saxon words Sey and Ton: the word sey signifying the sea, and ton a mansion place, in our language. The reason, as he fayes, why he got the surname of Sey-ton, was by the reason the town and lands then called Seyton was so called being nearest the sea of any lands for a great space therabout att that time. Others, are of the opinion, that the surname (of the originall) is from Set on (now, vulgo, Seton), as the ancient Slughane of the House signifies, called the motto,—Hazard yet forward.
But my opinion, my Lord, is, that the surname of Seton came with some of that name out of the east parts of Germany; my reason to be so persuaded is out of that famous noble historian Cornelius Tacitus. In his book De Moribus Germanorum, describing the qualities of the people [of] the confines and limits of the east country of Germany, he says,—

"Jam dextro Suyvici maris litore Aeftorum gentes adluuntur: quibus ritus habitusque Suyorum; lingua Britannicae propior." "Suionibus Sitonum gentes continuantur. Cetera simeles, uno different, quod femina dominatur: in tantum non modo a libertate, sed etiam a servitute degenerant."

They having a queen; for which, he doth so calumniate that nation of the Sitones. By which (with all dutifull respect to that noble Historian), it would seem he hath not observed the ancient Asiatick and Grecian historians relating fully, that, in many great kingdoms in Asia, queens have been absolute in their kingdoms; as Herodotus, in his ancient famous history, towards the end of his first booke, called Clio, he writts how Tomeris, Maffagetarum regina, a great kingdom in Scythia Asiatica, now called Tartaria, did valiantly fight and kill in battle the great Cyrus the 1st. Persian Emperour. He says: "Ut hanc pugnam ex omnibus, quae inter barbaros extiterunt acerrimam cenfam extitisse." As also the same historian, in his eight booke, called Urania, records of that heroina for wisdome, conduct, counsell, and valour, Artemisia queen of Caria, who asifted Xerxes in the great expidition against Greece; praising her as ane valiant experimented generall; and a wise counsellor, in the government of his armies; and in fighting his land and navall battles.
EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

Recorded it is by severall authors of ecclesiaftick history, as Theodoret, Rufinus, and Sozonius, that Maria queen of the Saracens, in the time of Vallance the Arian Emperour, she fighting in person, did beat and overcome the Roman army; and they were glad to implore her peace. Likeways, the German history of the Emperours makes mention of the Emperess Irene, mother of Constantine the 6th, who governed the impire with great policie, wisdome, and valour, ten year, in her fon’s minority; and after his deposition from the empires, was again chosen by the Princes to governe, which she performed many years, to the great applause of all.

In our moderne times, att home, [we have] our heroick Queen Mary, the two wise Queens, Mary and Elizabeth, of England: so that, either in the most ancient or moderne times, there has been brave Queens to command nations as soveraignes ever was; or is [this] recorded in any ancient or moderne history, in reproach, as a disparagement to the nation and people, except [by] Tacitus.

As for that nation called by Tacitus gentes Sitonum, it is no les consentaneous to reafone: they, lying on the sea coaft of the East Germany, might have come from thence and inhabited this place of Lothian now called Seton, lying on the Forth; more, as the Picks and Muravians, both people of the inland of Germany, did take and poffefs great lands in this kingdome: the Picks, the beft halfe of Scotland; the Muravians, Murray-land, to which countrey the people gave the name, and to the Clan, yet extant and flourishing in this kingdome.

For this my opinion of the true originall of the surname of Seton in this kingdome, I have produced famous authentick history, and convincing reafons.
My Lord, your Lordship now being the eleventh Lord Seton, the seventh George Lord Seton, and the fourth Earle of Wintone, from father to son, without intermission: The first Lord Seton was created Lord in the beginning of the reign of Robert the Third, now three hundred years Lords of parliaments; your great attavus, called Robert, was created Earle in the beginning of King James the Sixth his reign, being the first Earle he created in Scotland.

My noble Lord, Your genealogie is Propago vetus, profapia nobilis; generosa origo, et intaminatis fulget honoribus, [there] being, to my certaine knowledge, no Remission in your charter chift. All which are Ornamenta hominis, sed magis hominis illius, quem non fanguis solum, sed et virtus nobilitat; ille vere nobilis est qui strenue agendo nobilitatem fibi peperit non nascendo accept.

Your Lordship has in your house the true images of some of your generous and virtuous predececssors. In which case, a grave author fays,— "Sæpe audivi, præclaros viros nostris temporis sōlitos ita dicere, cum majorum imaginés intuerentur, vehementissime sibi animum ad virtutem accendi; non ceram illam, neque figuram tantam vim in se, habere, sed memoria rerum gestarum, eam flammam egregiss viris in pectore crescre, neque prius sedari quam virtus eorum flammam atque gloriæm, adæquaverit."

"Per fasces numerantur avi, semperque renata Nobilitate virent; et prolem fata sequuntur."

The which, none that has the happiness to converse with your Lordfhip has reafone to doubt; beholding your Lordship's dayly projects, virtuous and advantageous desigues, not only for the preservation, but also for the augmentation of the inheritance of your ancient noble House; that it may be truly said of your Lordship, Solus præteritis major, meliorque futuris.

And that your Lordship in your desigues, which are noble, may prosperously persever, and continue long prosperous, will be the great satisfaction of all your noble relations and cadets; but to none more, as none more obliged, than to,

My noble Lord,

Your Lordship's most affectionat Uncle,

And humble Servant.

KINGSTONE.
THE HISTORY OF
THE HOUSE OF SETON
FURTHER INLARGED.

OF GEORGE, THE FIFTH
LORD SETON.

The fifth George lord Seton succeeded to the fourth George lord Seton, his father. This Lord George, after he came from his travels in France, was sent an ambassador to France, to treat of the marriage betwixt Queen Mary and Francis the Second, then Dolphin. At his return, having given an full satisfactory account of his commission, went the second time ambassador to France, with Queen Mary, to see that marriage perfected: the which marriage was solemnized in Nofterdame, the great cathedrall church of Paris, the 24 of Aprill, 1558 years, the said ambassador being present. At the which time, the said Lord George had an noble present sent him of silver plate by Henry the Second then king of France, with an yearly pension of 1200 francs.

Queen Mary, after the deceafe of Francis the Second, her husband, att her coming home, made the said Lord George her great master household, as his predeceflor, Lord John, had been to King James the Firft. The said Lord George was, when Leith was befliged (having had there att that time severall harpe raincounters with the king's pairty), with the French, on Queen Marie's fyle.

The Queen, after her unfortunatt marriage with the Earle of Bothwell, gathered some forces together att Carberry hill, against her then rebells; from whence, Bothwell flying, without fighting, the Queen was forced to capitulat with her rebells, and rendered her self to their discretion, who sent her Majestie prisoner to the castle of Lochleven. From whence, the said Lord Seton brought her to his castle of Nidrie, as is recorded both in French and Scots histories. From whence he went with her to the battle of Landflyde, near Glasgow; where the queen's majestie's pairty war defeat, and dispersd, and the Queen herselfe forced to flee to England, for help and expected safety and reliefe, in that her said distres, from her cuigne, Elizabeth queen of England; who, to her eternall and infamous memory, upon her supposd jealousies, caused murder the said gallant queen most inhumanly, cruelly, and unchristianly, in the castle of Fotheringame, after the said queen had been unjustly detained 18 years her prisoner.

After that unfortunate battle of Landflyde, the said Lord George was forced to flee to Flanders, and was ther in exile two years, and drove a waggon of four horses for his livelyhood. His picture, in that condition, I have seen, drawn and vively painted, upon the north end of the long gallery in Seton, now overlaid with timber. From Flanders, the said Lord George went to Holland, and there endeavoured to seduce the two Scots regiments to the Spaniish service, upon a designe thereby to serve his soveraigne, the Queen, the king of Spaine being very much her freind. Which plott of his being revealed, the rebellious States of Holland did imprison, and condemne the said George to ryd the canoon; but by the freindship and respect the Scots officers had to him and his quallity, he was set by them att liberty: the rebellious States having no hand in it. This is also related in Bishop Spotwood's history.

This Lord George bought the rest of the lands of Weft Nidrie, and the haill reverfions thereof, not conquest by his predecessours. He agreed also with the archbishop of St Andrews for the confirmation of the feu of Kirkliston, together with the office of justitiary of all the lands and regallities pertaining to the said archbishoprick.

In this Lord's time, in the year 1561, the great dungeon of Seton fell to the ground, without hurt of any. From the south side of which, the said Lord George built the great quarter of the hall; and he built all the dykes from the old entry down to the links, over the banke.

Out of the great respect and favour the Queen's majestie car-rried to the said Lord George, for his great service done to her, she would have created him Earl when she created her bastard brother Earle of Murray; but the said Lord George, being att that time the eldest Lord in parliament, did, with most humble thanks, excuse himselfe att her Majestie's hands. Upon which occasion, she caused wryte these verfes in Latine and French:

Sunt comites, ducesque alii, sunt denique reges:
Setoni dominum fit fatis esse mihi.

Ylia des comtes, des roys, des ducs; ainst,
Cet afléz pour moy d'estre signeur de Seton.

This said Lord George, to shew the loyalltie of himselfe and his family, caused carve in stone, in great gilded letters, above the great doore to the entry of that quarter he built, and other imminent places of the house, this inscription in French:

UN DIEU, UN FOY, UN ROY, UN LOY.

He had for his own particular motto, under the picture where he is drawn with the master houfhal'd's batton,

IN ADVERRSITATE, PATIENS;
IN PROSPERITATE, BENEVOLUS.
HAZARD YET FORWARD.

This said Lord George married Isobell, daughter to Sir William Hamilton of Sanchor, shirrie of Air, one of the lords of feffion, and att that time captain of the castle of Edinburgh. His motive for his marriage was, by reafone his waiard of marriage fell in the Queen's hands the time the duke of Chalterault, earle of Arran, was regent to Queen Mary; and his brother, John Hamilton, archbishop of St Andrews, did trouble Lord George in peaceable enjoying the lands of Kirkлиfton, which Lord George, his father, had gott confirmed in few by Cardinall Beton, archbishop of St Andrews. By this allaya, he gott the confirmation of the lands of Kirklifton, with the forsaid superiories, renewed by the said Archbishop Hamilton. In the contract of marriage, the duke of Chauterault and his brother, the archbishop, are contracters with the said Sir William Hamilton of Sanchor, their cufigne, att that time the greatest man of power amongst the Hamiltons, next to the duke.

By this vertious lady, he had five sons and one daughter: his eldest son, James, dyed a young man; Robert, who was Lord after him;
John; Alexander; and William. His daughter, Isobell [Margaret] Seton, was married to the lord Paisley, second son to the said regent duke of Chaulterault and earle of Arran, of whom came the noble house of Abercorne, the eldest son of the said Lord Paisley being made Earle of Abercorne by King James the Sixth.

This Lord George was long time proveft of Edinburgh. After King James the Sixth did take the government of the kingdome upon himselfe, he sent this Lord George ambasfador to France, To renew the old Allay betwixt the two kingdomes, by a moft ample and honourable commiffion, wherein he styles him his moft trufty and well belov-ed Cufigne and Counfellour; which commiſſion I have read myſelfe. A few years after he came home, he dyed, in the beginning of King James the Sixth's reign; and was buried in the colledge kirk of Seton.

OF ROBERT THE EIGHT LORD SETON,

AND FIRST EARLE OF WINTONE.

This Lord Robert succeede to his father, Lord George. This Lord Robert was the first Earle King James the Sixth created in Scotland,—by a very noble patent; and was in great favour and esteem with King James. He was very hospitable, and keeped a noble house, the King and Queen being frequently there; and all French and other ambasfadors, and strangers of quality, was noblie entertained in his house. The said Robert earle of Winton putt on the rooffe of the great hall of Seton; he built the old harbour of Cockainie, for which King James the Sixth granted him a large chartour, a free conquest, with the gift and privilidge of cuftome and anchorage of all ships and goods import-ed and exported, with all other privilidges which burgh royalls have.
He married Lady Margaret Montgomerie, eldeft daughter to the earle of Eglintone. He had by her, fyve sons, Robert, George, Alexander, Thomas, and John; and ane daughter, called Ifobell, who was married to the earle of Perth, by whom she had one daughter only, Lady Jean Drummond—who married the earle of Sutherland, in anno 1629, who gott in tocher with her 50000 merkes, the greatest portion that was ever given in Scotland, before that time. She had to the said earle seveall children; whose eldest son is earle of Sutherland now living. This said Lady Ifobell Seton, countes of Perth, married to her 2d husband, Francis Stewart, eldest son to the earle of Bothwell, by whom she had seveall sons and daughters, who dyed all unmarried.

This Lord Robert, allthough his father left him in great debt, by the great trouble he had in Queen Marie’s tyme, and by seveall ambassays, upon his own charge, to France; yet, by his own hand, and by his vertious ladie’s good government, putt his estate in good condition; provyded his sons and daughters to good fortunes. He dyed in anno 1608; was buried that day King James the Sixth tooke his journey from Holyroodhouse to England, to take possession of that Crown. His Majestie was graciously pleased to rest himselfe att the southwift round of the orch-yard of Seton, on the high way, till the funerall was over, that he might not withdraw the noble company. His Majestie was pleased to fay publickly, in the hearing of all by him, He had loft a good, faithfull, and loyall subject. He was buried in the colledge kirk of Seton.
OF SIR JOHN SETON OF BARNES, THIRD SON TO THE FIFTH GEORGE, LORD SETON.

This Sir John Seton was a brave young man; he went to Spaine, to King Phillip the Second his court, by whom he was made knight of the royall order of St Jago, att that tyme, the order of knighthood in that kingdome of greatest esteem. In memory whereof, he and his heirs, has a sword in their coat of armes, being the badge of that order. King Phillip also preferred him to be gentleman of his chamber, and cavalier de la Boca (which is master-household): he also carried the golden key att his fyde, in a blew ribbing: all which, were the greatest honours King Phillip of Spaine could give to any of his subjects, except to be made a grandee of Spaine. He had a pension granted to him and his heirs of two thousand crowns yearly: when I, the wryter hereof, was att the king of Spaine his court, I was certainly informed of the truth of all this.

The said Sir John, in the heights of his favour with King Phillip of Spaine, was commanded home by King James the Sixth, unwilling to want so gallant a subject out of his court and service. At his return home, he preferred him to be the saurer of his house; was in great favour with his Majestie. It was not doubted, if he had lived some time after the King's coming to the crown of England, he would have highly advanced him in honour and fortune; but he dyed before King James went from Scotland. He made ane great building att the Barnes vould height, before his death, intending that building round a court.

He married the eldest daughter to the lord Forbes, by whom he had two sons and one daughter. His second son dyed a young man. He himselfe dyed in the strength of his age, a young man; and was buried in the college kirk of Seton.

OF THE SECOND SIR JOHN SETON OF BARNES

This Sir John Seton of Barnes succeded to his father; ane gallant man; likeways, gentleman of the privy chamber to King Charles the First. He did acquire, from Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar, land in Irland worth five hundredth pound Sterling a year. The said Sir John was imprisoned, and fined in a considerable soume of money, by the then rebels in Scotland, for being with the marques of Montros, King Charles the First his general, by ample commission, against the Scots rebels, in the year 1646.

He married to his first lady, Ogilvy, daughter to the laird of Pouny, Ogilvy; by her, he had one son and three daughters. His son, called Alexander, married in Irland, ane daughter of ane noble Irish family of Ophuall: dyed without succession. His eldest daughter, Isobell, married the laird of Barfoord; the second daughter, Margaret, married to the tutor of Duffus, in Murray; his third daughter, Lilias, married Sir James Ramfay of Benhame, in the Mairns.

To his second marriage, he married the dowager of Killfyth, daughter to lord Fleming, by whom he had no succession.

To his third wife, he married the only daughter of Sir John Home of Northberwik, by whom he had two sons, George and Charles, and one daughter, Jean: Charles dyed a young man, shortly after his father: his daughter Jean was married to John Hay of Aberlady. His eldest son, George, yet living, possessor of the lands of Barnes.
OF THE HOUSE OF SEYTOUN.

OF ALEXANDER SETON,
FOURTH SON TO LORD GEORGE THE FIFTH.

[He was] so named by Queen Mary, who gave to him ane godbairne gift, the lands of Pluiscalie, in Murray. He was sent by his father when he was young to Rome, finding him of a great spirit, intending att that time to make him a churchman. Att Rome, he was bred young in the Roman collidge of the Jesuites, wher he excelled in learning. He declaimed, not being 16 years of age, ane learned oration of his own composing, De Ascensione Domini, on that festivall day, publickly before the Pope, Gregory the 13th, the cardinall, and other prelats present, in the pope's chapel in the Vatican, with great applaufe. He was in great esteem att Rome for his learning, being a great humanist in prose and poecie, Greek and Latine; well verfed in the mathematicks, and had great skil in architecture and herauldrie. I was told att Rome, if he had stayed ther, it was not doubted but he had been Cardinall.

After he came from Italy, he studied the law in France. Shortly after that he came to Scotland, he made his public lessón of the law before King James the Sixth, the senators of the colleck of justice, and advocats present, in the chapell royall of Holyroodhoufe, in his lawer gown and four nooked cape, as lawers use to pass their tryalls in the universities abroad, to the great applause of the King and all present. After which, he was received by the college of justice as ane lawer; and some years after made lord of the feilion: not many years after that, made president of the feilion (the earle of Montros being then chancellour); and lord Fyvie of parliament. After the earle of Montros his death, he was made lord high chancellour of Scotland.

He acquired the lands of Fyvie, a considerable salmon fishing in Spey, with some other lands in Murray; the lordship of Dalgatie in Fyfe, with some considerable lands in the lordship of Dumfermeline, and very considerable superiorities ther. He acquired the lands of Pinkie, where he built ane noble house; brave stone dykes about the garden and orchard, with other commendable policie about it.

He married, to his first wife, Lady Isobel Drummond, eldest sister to the earle of Perth, and had by her severall sons, who died young, and four daughters: the eldest, called Lady Sophia, married to the lord Fentoun, son to the earle of Kellie; the second, Lady Isobel, married to the earle of Lauderdaill, only son to Chancellour Maitland, lord Thirlstone, whose son was by King Charles the Second three severall times his majestie's commissioner for parliaments and conventions in Scotland; and by the said King created Duke of Lauderdaill, marques of March, during his life, whose third brother, Charles earle of Lauderdaill, is now living. The third daughter married the earle of Seaforth, by whom she had no sons that leaved, but two daughters: the eldest married the lord Bairreddail, eldest son to the earle of Kaithness, by whom she had two sons, who dyed without heirs. To her second husband, she married the lord Duffus, by whom she had no children that lived. The second daughter married the earle of Ballcarras, heir to the first lord Ballcarras, whose son is now earle of Ballcarras. To the second husband, she married the last earle of Argyle, by whom she had no children. The Chancellour his fourth daughter married to the laird of Ballcarras, created Lord of parliament by King Charles the First, in anno 1633, whose posterity now flourishes, as said is.

The said Lord Chancellour, earle of Dumfermeline, married, to his second wife, Lady Grisell Leslie, daughter to the earle of Rothes, by whom he had only one daughter, married to the lord Yester, mother to this earle of Tweedail now living.

To his third wife, he married Lady Margaret Hay, sifter to the said lord Yester, by whom he had only one son and one daughter: his son, Charles, succeeded him: his daughter, Lady Grisell, a brave lady, lived a good age, but would never marrie, though she had noble suitors,—the earle of Sutherland and the lord Lindsay, afterward earle of Crawford.

The first Earle of Dumfermeline, lord high chancellour of Scotland, by his Letter-will, left George earle of Winton, his nephew, sole tutor to his son, Charles earle of Dumfermeline, who keepeed him and his sifter, and their servants, in his house, free gratis, all the years of his tutory. Att the expiring whereof, the said George earle of Winton,—having payed of his estate 30000 merks of portion with his sifter, who married the said lord Yester, and 30000 merks with his sifter, Lady Grisell Seton, who dyed unmarried, which she left to her brother at her death; and at the expiry of the tutory, gave, likeways, to the said Charles earle of Dumfermeline 10000 merks gold of the superplus of his rent, which soume he consigned in the face of the lords of feffion, Chancellour Hay being present. This the said George earle of Winton did the 4 (?) years he was his tutor, though his mother life-rented 20000 merks yearly, with the house of Pinky and Dalgaty; yet he left him, at the expiring of the said tutory, the estate free of all debt whatsoever, with all his jewels and silver plate, which were considerable great, with the household furniture, and all other moveables whatsover.

Alexander earle of Dumfermeline had left to his custody and keeping and government by King James and Queen Ann, when their majesties went to England, their second son, Charles, then not three years of age, whom he keepe in his house three years, and carried him into England himselfe, by land, to the King and Queen's majesties, well and in health; for which faithfull service the King's majestie was thankfull to him.

This Alexander earle of Dumfermline, lord chancellor, dyed in his house att Pinkie, in Aprill, 1622, of his age 67 years; and was succeeded in his office by Chancellour Hay—Spor. f. 542: and dyed with the regreat of all that knew him, and the love of his countrie: was interred att his burial place in Dalgaty, the May thereafter, with great honour.

OF CHARLES SECOND EARLE OF DUMFERMELINE.

This Charles second earle of Dumfermeline was much att the court of England with King Charles the First, to whom he was gentleman of the bed chamber; and by King Charles the Second made lord privy seal, in the which place he dyed.
He married Lady Marie Douglas, daughter to William earle of Morton, who was knight of the garter. By her he had many children: his eldest son, Alexander; the second was called Charles, was killed in one of the king's ships of warr in the battle against the States of Holland; his third son, James. His eldest daughter, Lady Margaret, never married; his second daughter, Lady Hendrieta, married to the earle of Wigton, to whom she had two sons, now living. To her second husband, she married the earle of Crawford, Lindfay, to whom she hath severall children.

This Charles earle of Dumfermeline fyded with the [Covenanters], and carried a commissioun from them to the King.

The said Charles second earle of Dumfermline dyed in anno 1672, in Seton houfe; and was noblie interred att his buriall place in Dalgaty.

OF ALEXANDER THIRD EARLE OF DUMFERMLEINE.

This Alexander third earle of Dumfrraline dyed att Edinburgh, a young man, a few years after his father; and was noblie interred att his buriall place in Dalgaty.

OF JAMES FOURTH EARLE OF DUMFERMLEINE.

This James earle of Dumfermeline, who succeeded to his brother, Alexander, after his father's decease, was some years ane officer in a Scots regiment, under the States of Holland, where he behaved himselfe gallantly. Some time after he came home, and married Lady Jean Gordon, younger to the marquess of Huntly, now duke of Gordon.

This James earle of Dumfermeline was left by his father and brother in considerable debt; but, by his vertuous wise carriage, he extricated himselfe of the greatest part of that trouble: and by his good and wise management, not only preserves, but improves his estate, to his great commendation and honour. This James earle of Dumfermeline is now living.

OF SIR WILLIAM SETON, FIFTH SON TO THE FIFTH GEORGE LORD SETON.

This Sir William Seton, a brave man, was for some years chief justice in the South border of Scotland. After King James was king of England, he was one of his majestie's master-houfhold, and master of the Post of Scotland, for both which he had a pension of King James and King Charles the First.

He married Striveling, daughter to the house of Glorat, by whom he had two sons, William and John: William succeeded to his father; John was an officer in France, in the Scots regiment under Collonell Hepburne, marshall de camp in France, wher the said John dyed. The said Sir William had three daughters: his eldest daughter married Fairly barron of Bred; the secund married Sir John Auchmouty of Goffoord.

This Sir William dyed of 73 years of age, in his house att Haddington, anno 1634; and was buried in the colledge kirk of Seton.
OF THE HOUSE OF SEYTOUN.

OF SIR WILLIAM SETON, SECOND.

Sir William Seton succeeded to the last Sir William, his father, to the place of the master of the Posts of Scotland, during his life, for which he had a pension from the King. He never married; he dyed, of good age, in anno 1662: buried in the college kirk of Seton.

NOW FOLLOWES THE POSTERITY

OF ROBERT THE FIRST EARLE OF WINTON.

I must here sett down Sir Alexander Seton, third son to the said Robert the first earle of Winton, by himselfe, and his posterity, from his being Earle of Eglingtone, to this year of God, 1687; by reason, though he was third brother and had of the house of Seton, yet, as Earle of Eglingtone, was obliged to change his name from Seton to Montgomery, and carry the arms of the House of Eglingtone, as chief of that Family and Clan.

OF SIR ALEXANDER SETON,
THIRD SON TO ROBERT FIRST EARLE OF WINTONE, WHO, SHORTLY AFTER HIS FATHER'S DEATH, WAS EARLE OF EGLINTONE.

This Alexander earle of Eglingtone was sent for out of France by his uncle, the earle of Eglingtone, who, having noe heirs of his own body to succed to the Earledome of Eglingtone, disponed his estate freely to this Sir Alexander Seton, his sisters son; on whom King
James the Sixth, after the decease of the said earle of Eglingtone, his uncle, did graciously confer (on this Sir Alexander Seton, the said earle's nephew, and heir of his estate,) the honours and titles of the Earle of Eglingtone, with the same place in parliament as the ancient noble House of Eglingtone did possess.

This Alexander earle of Eglingtone was much employed in the warr the time of the Scots and Irish rebellions; and bred three of his sons fouldiers. In anno 1650, when King Charles the Second came to Scotland, within ane month came a rebellious English army, commanded by that arche-traitour Oliver Cromwell; at which time, the said King Charles the Second made this Alexander earle of Eglingtone captain of his lifeguard of horse, being ane valiant experimented fouldier. He was surpris'd by ane English party of horse being in the West of Scotland, and taken prisoner, in anno 1651; sent first to the town of Hull, then to Berwick, where he was prisoner several years.

He married, to his first wife, Lady Ann Livingston, eldest daughter to the earle of Linlithgow, by whom he had fyve sons and two daughters: Hew, lord Montgomery; Sir Henry, who died without heirs; Sir Alexander, a collonell in Irland, in the Scots army against the rebells there—he died in Irland; James, likeways ane collonell in Irland, in those warrs, who conquifhed the barony of Colffield, which his son and heir now poiffes; his fifth son, Robert, was first a captain in Irland, against the said rebells, thereafter a collonell of horse in the rebellious warrs of Britaine.

When King Charles the Second went with a Scots army, in anno 1651, to Worceffter, he was generall-major of his majeftie's horfe in that unfortunat expedition, and was att that time hurt and taken prisoner; and was many years a prisoner at Hull, and thereafter many years a prisoner in the castle of Edinburgh, out of which he and the late earle of Kinnoull escaped in disguise, in anno 1659, and went to Holland, to the King. He left his heirs ane good estate in money.

The eldest daughter of this Earle of Eglingtone, Lady Margaret, married the earle of Twedaill, father of this earle of Twedaill now living, to whom she had one son that came to perfect age, syled Drumelior: her daughter, Lady Grisfall, dyed very young. The said Lady Margaret Montgomery married, to her second husband, the earle of Glencairne, lord high chancellour of Scotland. The second daughter, Lady Ann, dyed unmarried.

This Earle of Eglingtone married, to his second wife, the Lady Roel, dowager. He dyed in his house at Eglingtone, in the age of 73, in anno 1661.

This noble Earle was a person of true honour, generofity, and loyalty, but, in the beginning of the intestine warrs, was much carried on by the Presbyteryan ministers against the King; and in anno 1648, rose with these of his countrie, against the Remonfrators, that engaged for the King.

OF HEUGH LORD MONTGOMERY, EARLE OF EGLINTONE.

This Earle of Eglingtone succeeded to his father, Alexander earle of Eglingtone. He married, to his first wife, Anna Hamilton, eldest sister to the then marquiss of Hamilton, afterwards duke of Hamilton,

He built the house of Wintone, being burnt by the English of old, and the policy thereof destroyed, in anno 1620: He founded and built the great house from the foundation, with all the lairge stone dykes about the precinct, park, orchard and gardens thereof.
OF THE HOUSE OF SEYTOUN.

He built, in anno 1630, two quarters of the house of Seton, beginning at Wallace’ tower att the east end thereof, which was all burnt by the English, and continued the building till Jacob’s tower, on the north fyde of the house. By reason his predecessors were great enemies, and very active in the wars, against the English, the house having been three tymes burnt by them, he caused carve, in fine stone, upon the frontispiece of his new building, a crown, supported by two roses and the thristell, being the conicentes of the two kingdoms of Scotland and England; and the embleme, enegantically, signifying the Union of the two kingdoms. Under which embleme he caufed carve and set out in gold letters this verse:—

UNIO NUNC FATIS, STOQUE CADOQUE TUIS.

He built in Cockainie twelve salt pans, wher never any formerly was. He built, to his great charge, ane harbour in the west end of Cockainie, which was destroyed by a forme in January, anno 1635.

from his servant[s] all the keys of his corn and salt girnels. Nevertheles[s], he flayed constantly att the King till the treatie of Pacification, betwixt his Majestie and the rebells. Att the same time, the rebells did take upon them to use a kinde of forfaulture against him, and gifted their estate, out of their mad and diabolicall disfraction (in the heat of their cruel and godles[s] rebellion), to a gentleman of the name of Elphingston, of small account, flyled... But it was thought, it was for the reall behoofe of that arch, cruel, and bloody traitor the then earle of Argyle, created the first Marquis of Argyle by King Charles the First, in anno 1641. After which year, the said rebells renewing their rebellion anno 1643, in which rebellion, the said first marquis of Argyle was ring-leader, promoter, and arch-traitour, in carrying on of the Scots army which was att the battle of York, in anno 1644; wher the king's army, under the conduet of Prince Rupart, was beat, and did prove the first step to King Charles the First's ruine, cruel and unchristian murder.

And att the fight at Phillip-haugh, Montros his forces being defeat, the said Lord George Seton was taken prisoner, and carried, in the winter time, to the Scots army in England, besieging the town of Newarke upon Trent; from thence carried back prisoner (having a guard of horse, both the times, upon his own expenes) to the then castle of St Andrews, where he lay prifomer, in hazard of his life, till such time his father payed fourty thousand pounds Scots; which soume, by the rebellious States (as they styelled themselves, the States of Scotland), att that time sitting in parliament att St Andrews, was distribute among their fellow active rebells.

In anno 1648, when James first duke of Hamilton went, as generall, with ane rich royall army, lifted and sent to England by the power of that loyall parliament, for the reliefe of King Charles the First, then prisomter att Carilbairo castle in the Isle of Wight; the said George earle of Wintone gave, in free gift, to the said James duke of Hamilton, for ordering his equipage for that journey, ane thousand pound Sterline.

The said George earle of Wintone, did conquer two considerable feu lands in Longniddrie, hereditarilly: the ane, from Sir George Douglas, in the east end of the said town; the other, from the then laird of Corfterphine. As also, he bought, hereditarilly, the eynds of Longniddrie from the then Bothwell, lord Holyroodhouse. He also bought the house and lands of Gourleton; the halfe of Ethelstanfoord, from Sir John Tours, laird of Inverleith, and the other halfe thereof, from Sir Patrick Hepburne of Waughton: which lands he provyded to his eldest son then living of the 2d marriage, called Sir John Seton, created knight baronet of Scotland by King Charles the Second.

He had his permission to goe to his own house in East Lothian (in which house and lands, many of the English army and officers did quarter themelves, to his losse of that year's rent), the better to prepare himselfe, to have the honour to be present att his Majestie's coronation, which was solemnized in Scoon the 1st of January, 1651. OF SIR ALEXANDER SETON,
SECOND SON TO GEORGE THE THIRD EARLE OF WINTON, NOW VISCOUNT OF KINGSTON.

This Sir Alexander Seton is of the said George earle of Winton his first marriage, with Lady Anna Hay, daughter to Francis earle of Erroll.

This Sir Alexander Seton, in anno 1633, when King Charles the First came to Seton, being then not 12 years of age, he wellcomed the King, with ane Latine oration, att the iron gate of Seton; wher his Majestie fatt in state, all the English nobility fittig round about him. The said Sir Alexander being attended with his schoolmaster, with a pedagogue, and other four Masters of Art; all grave learned men, clad in fine black cloak, and cloaks lined through with pan velvet; the ground being covered a great way from the throne with carpet: Where, after due reverence thrice made to his Majestie by the said Sir Alexander and his masters, the said Sir Alexander did deliver his oration boldly, with a gesture suitable to the purpose, for which he had the applause of his Majestie, and all present; and, before he rose from his knees, his Majestie did him the honour to knight him, and said to him, "Now, Sir Alexander, see this doe not spoil your schooll; by appearance, you will be a schollar." The said Sir Alexander boldly answered, "No, please your Majestie, it shall not." Immediately after the King went from Scotland, the said Sir Alexander returned to schooll, and studied humanity three years thereafter, with more acracy and affiduity than formerly, by reason of his promise to the King.

In anno 1636, the said Sir Alexander was sent to France by his father; and he, not acquainting his father, immediately went to the colledge of La Fleth, of the Jefuits, wher he studied two years his philosophie; defended his thesifs publickly in the said colledge from 10 to halfe 12 in the forenoon, and two till half four in the afternoon, he, and another fine gentleman of quality, having a throne layed with carpets, erected for them, in the schooll, with a cover of crimfon taffity above their heads, and courtanes drawn about them. Which thesifs were printed in whyte fatine, with the full armes of the House of Seton, with ane oration dedicatory on the head of them; he sent them home to my Lord, his father, being dedicat to him.

After which, he went to Italy, wher he stayed a year; imbarqued att Leghorne, in a great English vessel, and landed att Alicant, in the kingsdome of Vallantia, in Spaine, and went to the court at Madrid, wher he stayed seven months. From Spaine, he imbarqued at St Sebastian, and landed att Rotchell, in France, in June thereafter, having been fix dayes att sea; then travelled, all that summer, through the most part of France. Came home by the Court of England, in anno 1640; from which, King Charles the First (having imprisoned in the Tower the lord Lowdon, and the other Scots commissiioners in the fhirriffes of London their houses, who was sent from the rebellious pretended Estates of Scotland to the King) sent the said Sir Alexander with letters to the marquifs of Huntley, earle of Nidflaill, his own father, and others his loyall subjects, to be carefull of themselves, leaft they shoulde be in danger, for imprisoning the saids rebellious commissoners; ordering the secretary, Sir Hendry Vain, to give him ane ample post-warrand, with an order to Sir Thomas Earle, then governour of Berwick, to prese a ship or bark for him for Scotland, if so he delighted; which order was written by the Secretary his own hand.

In anno 1643, being troubled in Scotland to subscryve the Scots rebellious Covenant, to evite the famyn, was necessitat to go to Holland: having, for that caufe, been from his father’s house, and in Holland, 8 months, thinking in that time the rebellious fury would be abated against him; yet, att his returne, they continued their persecution, in urging his subscription to the rebellious Covenant: The which he absolutely refusing, they, by the order of the rebellious Church Assembly, did, in Tranent church, the October ther-after, by the mouth of Mr Robert Balcanquail, minister therof, at one time, excommunicat the said Sir Alexander,—the Countes of Winton, his mother in law,—the Lady Seton, his sifter in law.
After which, the said Sir Alexander was forced to flee, and goe to France, by sea, in the winter time, who was twixe in hazard of being cast away in that voyage, not daring to goe through England, for the Scots rebellious army lying all over the north of England, he was forced to go to France. And in France, after Charles the Second, then Prince of Wales, came there, did constantly attend him till the letter end of the year 1647. When, upon ane occasion, he went to London, from whence he shortly received [orders] to returne to France; bought ther three gallant horses, resolving to present them to the Prince of Wales. In the time of his stay in England, was frequently with King Charles the First, at Hamptoun Court. The King, thinking himselfe not secure, was advysed to escape out of their hands, incognito, to the Isle of Weight; to the which place the said Sir Alexander was the first that went to him, resolving to receive his commands for his Queen and the Prince of Wales, before his returne to France, as the King had ordered him four dayes before he went to the Isle of Weight. From thence, his Majestie did send him with letters to his Queen and the Prince of Wales, to France. By fortune, there was, in the time, a Scots vessel, the master being of his acquaintance, bound for France. His Majestie, for his and the ship's security, did give him a writ, superscribed by himself, wherein he owns him as his servant sent in that ship by his order for France, desiring noe Dunkirkker, nor any other, to moleste him, the said ship, or his ship goods. The which wryte, written in French, he has still. Receiving his majestie's letters, with a secret verball commission to the Queen, commanding him particularly as a secret to reveal it to none but the Queen herself; which was, That he was assured, in the beginning of the next summer, 1648, there would be ane considerable Scots army for his relief in England. This he did not wryte, only shew in his letter I had something to impart to her, which he would not writ. Which after her Majestie had read, [she] called for him, being in her bed-chamber, desiring to know what he had to impair; which I did. She said, "I wish it may be so." This commissign he never revealed during the King's life. After he had received the King's command, as said is, he was the third day att St Germain, wher the Queen and Prince were, wher he stayed two days; and after the receipt of their letters, delivered them to the King in the Isle of Weight the 12th day thereafter, being the 20th day of December, the said year.

The said Sir Alexander, laying to heart the commissign his Majestie gave him to the Queen, chaigned his resolution for France; came to Scotland with his horfes, resovling to ingadge in that Scots army, when levied, for the King's reliefe; and was ane lieutenant collonell of horse in that unfortunat army.

In anno 1650, when King Charles the Second came to Scotland, he constantly attended him; and, in anno 1651, the fifth day after his Majestie's coronation att Scoon, he was graciously pleased to grant to the said Sir Alexander, for his loyalty, pains-taking, and services done to his Majestie's father, of blessed memory, and himselfe, a patent with the title of honour of Viscount, being the first title of honour he gave to any, after his coronation, not having made a knight before that time.

His Majestie being informed that his father had left him Tutor testamentary to his grandchild, this earle of Wintone, now living; for the love and respect his Majestie graciously carried to the memory of the said Earle, and well understanding of his house, commanded him to look to and be carefull of all affairs of that family, which I did faithfully performe five full years, to my great trouble and expence.

The said Viscount of Kingston, in anno 1666, with the earle of Winton, now living, had the command of the shire of East Lothian, and was at the fight of Pentland hills, in the king's army, under the command of Generall Dallyell; wher the army of the West countrey rebells was defeat. In anno 1678, he was with his majestie's militia troop in the West countrey, upon his own expence, with the king's forces—to stop any rising of the West countrey rebells—under the command of the earle of Linlithgow, then major generall of his majestie's forces therein. Anno 1679, was ordered by his majestie's counfell to have the command of the shire of East Lothian—against the army of West countrey rebells—under the command of the Duke of Monmouth, generall of 14000 men of his majestie's forces, att Bothwell bridge, upon his own proper charges; where the rebell army was totally defeat. The said Viscount Kingston had the command of the militia troop of East Lothian 14 years.

The said Sir Alexander married, to his firft wife, Mrs Jean Fletcher, daughter to Sir George Fletcher, gentleman of the privy chamber in ordinary to King Charles the Firft, and in good esteem with him, who was niece to the lord Innerpeafuer, senator of the colledge of justice; by whom he had only one daughter,—was married to the lord Mor-dingtone.

To his second wife, he had Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Whittingame, by whom he had seven sons and three daughters: the eldest, Charles, dyed a young man; George, after he had been some years a captain of Douglas' regiment, in

This Ethanftanfoord, so called from the English and Saxon king Ethanftanus, at which the king of Scotland did overcome in battle the said Ethanftanus: Near to which place, as our Scots story relaits, the St Andrew's Cross did appear to the Scots king and his army, which was then called the place of Miracle, now, vulgo and corrupt, Martle.

The said Sir John Seton married Christian Home, daughter to Sir place, the said rebells were totally defeat. After he came home to his houfe att Seton, gave ane splendid royall treat to the duke of Mon-

NOTES.

PHILLIP SEYTOUN—P. 17.—The two charters granted by William the First to this Philip and his successor, Alexander, are both printed in Dr McKenzie’s Lives of Scottish Writers. And it is fortunate that these ancient documents, so material to the early history of the family of Seton, have likewise been transcribed by the author of the Diplomata Scotiae, and that the transcripts are still preserved, being now in the possession of Mr Dillon, one of the members of the Maitland Club. To these Mr Anderson has affixed the following Note:—

“Sept. 24, 1701. I copied these two charters from the originals at Seton, by the noble courtesy of the Earl of Winton.”

The charter to Philip, given above, has been collated with the former of these transcripts—the latter, to Alexander, is inserted below.

Lord Kingston adds, that Philip “married Helen, daughter to the earle of Marche.”

ALEXANDER SEYTOUN, first of that name—Ibid.—The following is the copy of the charter he obtained from King William, above alluded to:—

Willielmus Dei gratia rex Scotorum episcopis, abbatibus, comitibus, baronibus, justiciariis, vicecomitibus, prepositis, ministris, et omnibus probis hominibus terrae suae, clericis et laicis, salutem. He “married Jean, daughter to Walter Barclay, chamberlain to King William.”—Addition by Lord Kingston.

Bartine Seytoun—P. 18.—This is probably a corruption of the name Bartholomew—in Lord Kingston’s transcript it is written ‘Bartime.’ Nothing corroborative of his existence seems to have been discovered. According to the above authority, he “married Margaret, daughter to William Cummin, great justice” of Scotland.

Adame Seytoun—Ibid.—It would seem to be doubtful, however, whether this Adame’s name was not Alexander. Yet Sir Robert Sibbald quotes a charter by the Earl of Winchester to Adame de Seton, anno 1246, “De maritatio heredis Alani de Fauside.”—Hist. of Eife, p. 369.

Christell Seytoun, the third of that name—P. 19.—Modern genealogists, with great probability, seem to hold the several notices of all the three Christells mentioned here as relating to one and the same individual, namely, that Sir Christopher Seton who lent so early and efficient aid to the founder of the latter Scottish dynasty in his arduous enterprise to possess himself of the desolated throne. Though doubtless unable wholly to reject the fabulous incrustations of the family annals, it must nevertheless be allowed that our author has shown little inclination to countenance the improbable multiplicity of representatives which crowd the early part of the pedigree of the House of Seton, or to complete his labours by recording the details of their imaginary biography—many of which we see were still available at the distance of more than a century after his time. For, from such authority, it is stated by the noble Continuator, that the first Christell Seton "married Mauld Percie, daughter to Ingrahame Percie"—the second, "Agnes, daughter to Patrick Earle of Marche." Of the marriage of the undoubted Sir Christopher there could indeed be no uncertainty.

For the subjoined particulars regarding Christell's Chapel at Dumfries the reader is indebted to the courtesy of Mr Kirkpatrick Sharpe, as well as for other interesting notices which follow here:—

"The remains of this chapel were overthrown in the year 1715, to defend Dumfries from the Chevalier's army—vide Rae's History of the Rebellion. Many of the stones, but all without ornaments, are still to be discerned in the neighbouring dykes. The site of the chapel was used, for many years, as a place of interment for criminals hanged at Dumfries."

ALEXANDER SEYOUN, the surn of that name—P. 27.—A like uncertainty appears to exist in the history of the three immediate successors of Sir Christopher as himself; and the importance of the error seemed sufficient to induce the eminent Lord Hailes to write a dissertation expressly on the subject—concluding that the notices of all the three refer to "one and the same person, the son of Sir Christopher Seton and Christian Bruce." But it is not undoubted that Alexander who succeeded to Sir Christopher was his son. The allusion to the marriage of but one of the Alexanders in the statement of Sir Richard Maitland, it will be perceived, so far favours the hypothesis of Lord Hailes.

Lord Kingston only adds that the first Alexander "married Isobell, daughter to Duncan Earle of Fyffe,"—leaving the marriage of the third unaccounted for.

Dr McKenzie alludes to a charter by Robert I. in the 18th year of his reign, in favour of Sir Alexander Seton, successor to Sir Christopher, granting to the "Town of Seaton the liberty of having a weekly market every Lord's day after Mass," which would seem very clearly to illustrate the origin of these institutions. The merchants exposed their wares in booths by the church, if not occasionally under the roof itself; and the exactions on the sales of commodities belonged to the clergy, whose presence, and the sanctity of the place, would no doubt tend to the preservation of order and decorum. The almost invariable disposition of parochial churches, not in the centre, but close by the northern boundaries of their enclosures, has probably originated with a view to the better accommodation of those assembled on such occasions, and that the building might afford them its protection from the chilly blasts of a rigorous climate. Instances of the people's adherence to the ancient locality of their commercial intercourse existed even in the present century, if indeed it be yet wholly discontinued.

SEYTOUN OF PARBROTH—P. 24.—Parbroth appears to be situated on the north side of the shire of Fife; the house was ruinous, and the estate had been alienated from the Setons at the beginning of the last century.—Hist. of Fife, 409.

Mr David Seytoun, of this family, who figures so interestingly in the presence of the knightly leader of Flowdon field, occurs, indeed something remarkably, in company with his two opponents, in attesting an Instrument of resignation, April 14, 1497—"Terrarum de le Scroggys [jacentium infra vicecomitatum de Peblis] ad altare Sanctorum Stephanj et Laurentij, martyr-um, in ecclesia metropolitana Glasguensi. Acta erant hæc in hospitio praefati reverendissimi patris, infra oppidum de Edinburgh. . . . præsentibus ibidem. . . . viris magistris David Cunynghame praeposito de Hamilton, David Se- toun rectore de Fethercarne, Riccardo Lauson, Jacobo Henrison clericis. . . . testibus ad præmissa. . . ."—Cart. Glas.

Mr James Henderson of Fordel, the person alluded to here, was Lord Advocate, and also Justice-Clerk, 1494—1507.—Hist. of Fife, 262. But the 'proces' mentioned above probably occurred before the year 1505.—See Bal. An. I. 227.

—Lawson seems to have been ancestor of the Lawsons of Cairnmuir.

David Seton of Parbroth was Comptroller of the Scottish revenue, 1589—1595.—Hist. of Fife, 262.

SEYTOUN OF LAUTHRYSK—P. 25.—Lathrisk is likewise in Fife, near the Eden, and is thus noticed by Balfour:—"In the village of Kettle is the parish church, formerly seated at Lathrisk, belonging to the priory of St Andrews. West of this is Lathrisk, an old house with gardens and enclosures, the seat of Mr Patrick Seaton, a cadet of the Earl of Winton: a predecessor of his got these lands by marrying the heiress, of the same name with the lands.—Lathrisk."

LORD WILLIAM.—P. 27.—The family of Herdmanston, a daughter of which this Lord married, appears to have succeeded to the peerage of Sinclair in the middle of the seventeenth century. About which time, the latter family seem to have been connected with the city of Glasgow:—"Dame Margaret Cockburne, Ladie Sinckelaire, w't in the bur' of Glasgow ye tyme of her deceis, deceissit on ye last day of Junij 1657 yeiris." She nominates, &c. Henrie Sinckelaire her lawful son only executor, &c.—Probate of her Will, Oct. 3, 1657. Com. of Glas. "Elisoun Cobroune Ladie Sinklar" appears October, 1633.—Ibid. But this is certainly an error in the name of the same person.
NOTES.

The preistis chalmeris now in Seytoun—P. 29.—"These chambers are said to have been near the garden wall, on the north side: some remains of buildings are still to be seen, but apparently not so ancient as the 'chalmeris' mentioned here.—Com. by Mr K. Sharpe.

Houses of Huntlie, &c.—Ibid.—To these Lord Kingston adds this notice of the family of Sutherland:

"OF THE EARLES OF SUTHERLAND.

The Earledome of Sutherland, because faityeing of heirs maill, the second brother of the earle of Huntley married the heretrix of Sutherland—of whom this Earle of Sutherland, now living, is descended, being the fifth Earl from that man who married the heretrix,—who did gett the place of the Earles of Sutherland, though he retained his own name of Gordon, which surname they keep to this day."

Lord George, the first of that name—P. 32.—Georgio domino Ceton is a witness in Carta Jacobi 3⁰ regis de civitate, baronia, et regalitate de Glasgow, A. D. 1476.—Carl. Glasg.

Lord George the secund of that name—P. 34.—"George, 2ᵈ of that name, 4ᵗʰ Lord Setoun, son of George the master of Setoun, succeeded his grandfather in the lordship of Setoun. As he was in his voyage to France, he was taken by the Dunkirkers, and spoiled of his goods; for which, to be revainged, he caused outrick a great ship, which was called the Eagle, upon his own expenses,—of a considerable burden, as appears by the streamers and flags, which are yet to be seen in the house of Setoun. They are of rid silk: on the flage are the armes of Setoun, and on the other sid a Circle interlashed with a Triangle, in Gold, with this word, indissolubile; the streamers are also of ride silk, semé of Crescents of Gold, with a Hand issueing out of a cloud brandishing a sword, with these words, hazard yit fordward; and below that a Dragon, Vert, spouting out fire behind and before. He kept this ship at sea against the Dunkirkers for severall years. He married Margaret Campbell, eldest daughter to Collin Earle of Argyll."—Nisbet's Gen. Col. MS. Ad. Lib.

This Lord George tak the armes of Buchane, &c.—P. 36.—The family of Seton's assuming the armes of Buchan is thus alluded to in an introductory sketch to a history of the Cumings of Ernsyde, written in 1622—penes Dr W. Cumin, Glasgow;—and though mistaking the motive of such assumption, the statement is yet curious, and corroborative of the fact:—

"Being also requisit to understand ye reason why ye Lord Seattoune, now E. of Wintone, weareth ye six Bear sheawes—thrie in every crost of his bagge. I being in the palace of Seattoune, familiar with my old Lord, demandat at his Lo: for what cause the Hous of Seattoune weare ye Cumings' armes in ye maner? My Lord answered me, ye his predecessors gatt the lands and lordship of Troup, in Buchan, fra ye Earle of Buchane, Cuming; Soe, as ane tockin of perpetuall band of freindship, ye Lo: Seattoune, att ye time, adiyned ye six Sheawes to his own armes, q' remaines w' ye Hous, as memorie of auld kyndnes, and not ye' armes was gevin be alliena'ne to tack any pairt of ye Cumings' armes: and soe, if auld love & kyndnes should be respected, it is ane great motive and occasione to profes a good will and freindship to remaine betwixt the said Surnames."

Lord George, the last of that name—P. 41.—The Logans of Restalrig, one of whom married a daughter of this Lord Seton, were not less illustrious from their connections and ancient descent than they became conspicuous by the political intrigues and fate of an after representative. Of that strange historical enigma, the Gowrie conspiracy, Wodrow relates the following singular particulars—Life of Mr John Malcom, Minister at Perth, MS. Having stated the sentiments of English writers as to this affair, he adds:—

"If I may mix in any thing of my own, after so many authorities, let me add a verbal account of this matter, which I have from an old minister (my own worthy father—but this needs not be copyed), upon whose part, in the relation, I can fully depend, who was at the old house, where the Earle of Gowrie was killed, a little after the Restoration; and met there with an aged grave countryman, who had been present on the 5 of August, 1600, being then one of the Earle's servants. He showed me the room from qualich the King knocked down, and Ramsay and another came up, and his master, the Earle, was killed. What passed above he could not tell; but neither he, nor any in the house, observed any disorder about the Earle that day: but he well minded, that the King's coming was a perfect surprise to them all,—a servant of the Earle of Gowrie's being married that day, and the wedding dinner being in the Earle's house. When the King came, the Earle most lovingly welcomed him, and told him, He did not expect to see him that day. The King said, He was come from the hunting, and would take a share of the Bride's dinner; every thing passed in the greatest pleasantry, till after dinner, the King desired the Earle to go to an upper room with him, qualich they did in the most freindly way. The old man told all this with tears trickling down his cheeks, 60 and mo years after, being now near 90, but very firm in his health, judgment, and memory. My informer asked him, what was then said about it. The old man answered. He heard it reported that the King was jealous of his master; and the occasion of jealousy, as reported to him, was this: Some time after the Earle's return from travell, he went to Court, and the King made very much of him—his master, he said, was one of the handsomest, loveliest men ever he set his eyes upon. Some time after, the King and Queen being together, he asked her whom she thought to be the handsomest man she knew? The Queen replied, His Majesty. Well, said the King, I believe you think so; but next to me, whom think you the properest man in Scotland? The Queen said, She saw none more handsome than the young Earle of Gowrie. After that the King took up a jealousy.

"My informer said, the old man's relation was so simple and natural, and with so much affection, that he could not but give him credit. Upon the whole, I hope the Earle's, and much more the Queen's character, will save them from the imputations of guilt and jealousy, which sometimes rises on very trifling grounds, and is as the rage of a man."

Lord Kingston adds,—"This Lord is marked among the Lords of Session in the Sederunt 15 November, 1544."

Marie Seytoun—P. 42.—With the Letters of Lady Margaret Burnet, lately published, there is printed a letter in French, signed "Marie de Seton," which seems popularly to have been ascribed to Lady Mary Seton, "one of the four Maries who waited upon Queen Marie of Scotland;" but which the Editor supposes rather to have been written by Marie Pieris, the second wife of George fourth Lord Seton, her mother. Mary the daughter of Lord Seton, by the above Lady, whose name is omitted in the Peerage, was probably about an age with the Queen, and it must be allowed her connections and circumstances give her the fairest claim imaginable to the honour of one of these celebrated Ladies. As regards the letter alluded to, the uncertainty of the writer is no doubt greatly increased by the want of the year in which it was written; yet it may be remarked, that at that time it was surely far from usual for ladies, of whatever degree, to subscribe the names or titles of their husbands.

Lord George, the fyft of that name—Pp. 43, 45.—Lord Seton seems throughout entirely to have espoused the cause of the hapless Mary, but could not, of course, altogether escape imputation.

"The 21. February, [1571], the Cecretar left his ludgeing of the Castell, and was conveyed as a Prince, be the Lord Seatoun, first to the place of Seatoun, and thairefter to Lethingtoun. And sua, the grittest enemie to the King, and to his authority, yea, to God and his Word, takes the protectioune of him that wald be sene grit friend to both."—Ballantyne's Journal, MS.
"When the Lord Seton, about 1555, was Provost of Edinburgh, there was an uproar in it, and two of the bailyes came out to their Provost at Seton, and he finding they were accessory to the conspiracy, he imprisoned them in the Pit of Seton (a place I have seen), which was a dreadful contumely; and rode in presently to Edinburgh, and appeased and choaked the commotion."—Lord Fountainhall’s MSS. Adv. Lib. Balfour, who is more picturesquely circumstantial, seems to place this in 1558. An. I. 310.

"There is a curious picture of this Lord and his children, abominably engraved in Pinkerton. Lord Somerville had one, original, done on wood—Mr Hay of Drummelzier has another, on canvass. I never saw Lord Somerville’s, but Mr Hay’s is extremely well painted, and very old—though such pictures, on wood, are generally the most genuine. I think Mr Hay’s as old as the time; but not having seen both originals, one cannot be positive as to priority.—Some account of the dispersion of the pictures at Seton is given by Grose. Mr Hay of Drummelzier has a great many portraits that, I am persuaded, came from Seton."

Battle of Langsyde—P. 56.—The subjoined particulars, from Wodrow’s Life of Robert Campbell of Kinyeancleugh, MS. possess some interest in relation to the Field of Langside, and are still more curious as regards the individuals to whom they particularly refer.

"A remarkable Passage about Kinyeancleugh, the night before the Battaille of Langside, June 13. 1568.

"The next thing I meet with concerning him is at the time of the battale of Langside, upon which indeed the fate of the Reformation in Scotland did in a great measure hang. Had the Queen and the party who gathered to her after her escape, defeat the Regent and his army, inferior to them in numbers, it’s very probable Popery had again been re-setled in this land. At this time, and no wonder, the whole praying Christians in the West of Scotland, and other places, who knew the choak things stood in, wer giving themselves to prayer; and many of them, particularly Mr Campbell, wer endued with a singular measure of the spirit of supplication: and it was agreeable to God’s kind methods with his people in their straits, that he should vouchsafe answers of prayer to some who could bear, and especially stood in need of them; and this was done to Kinyeancleugh.

"I am well informed by a worthy and learned minister, whose business led him to have some concern in that family, and who hath seen their papers, That the following account is handed down in that family to this time, and their papers vouch it; and I may give it as that may be depended on. Mr Campbell, when he heard of the Queen's escape, and the Regent's coming to Glasgow, came in company with the Gentlemen of Air, and as many of their followers as they could bring. The good Regent had a great value for Mr Campbell, and knew his courage and piety now for 10 years, or more. When the Queen's forces came from Hamilton, on their way to Dumbarton, and encamped at Langsyde hill, the Regent and his officers, lying at Glasgow, resolved to attack them while in the open country, and before they reached the castle and the hills. When Kincardine knew of the resolution upon the 12 of May, 1658, the day before the scuffle, he spent some time in Prayer, in secret, for the Lord's appearing and deciding the righteous cause, referred to him in war; and there he got such liberty, and assurances of victory, that he did not at all question the event of the battle. The family of Loudoun, of which his family came, was at present represented by a young gentleman, not yet major; and by the caresses of his cousin, the Earl of Argyll, who was at this time with the Queen, and other methods, the young Sheriff of Air, for that was the ordinary style of the family, was brought to be upon the Queen's side. Kincardine knew this, and designed him a service, and the publick also. Accordingly, early next morning, June 13, Mr Campbell went into the Regent, who soon allowed him access. Kincardine told his Grace, that he was come to ask what he reckoned a very great favour. He said they were now going to engage with the enemy, and he did not doubt of their success; that he supposed that, in that event, the Regent and Council would forfault the landed men who had joyned with the late Queen; that his chief, the Sheriff of Air, a young raw youth, had been unadvisedly drawn over to that side, and would come to be forfaulted with the rest; and he was come at this time, as the first applier, to ask a gift of his chief's esheat, not that he had any covetous view to so good an estate, but that thereby he might get the youth, not much above 18 years, under his command and management; and he hoped to make him a good subject to the King, and useful for his Grace and the Reformation in the West: for he knew he was of a good temper and excellent dispositions. The Regent smiled, and said, "Robert, it's soon enough to ask this," and wished his hope might be well founded, for the outward probability was not so great. My Lord, said he, I will never doubt of that; for my God, who never forlaid me, has said it to me; and insisted he might grant him his request, in that event. The good Regent was satisfied, to be sure, to see such peremptoryness in so eminent a wrestler as he knew the man to be, and said, "Well, Robert, I'll call the Lords and Counsellors in the other room." Which he did, and communicat Mr Campbell's desire; in short, it was yielded, in the supposition of a victory. The event showed Kincardine's positive hope was well founded, and he got his chief's forfaulture gifted to him.

"As soon as it was expede, he went home to his house, and sent an express to the young gentleman, desiring him to come to Kinyancleugh about matters of the nearest concern to him, assuring him of safety. He came, and, as I was informed, Mr Campbell keipt him some weeks, or months, with him, and dealt so with him, as he thoroughly convinced him how far wrong he was, and brought him over from the Queen’s side; and so instructed him and dealt with him, as after that he was always a firm friend to the Reformation, to his dying day; and then he made a resignation of his whole lands to him, and by his interest got him brought to the Regent’s favour. My informer tells me, that, as a small to-here, (and it was all Mr Campbell would take) for so great a favour to the family of Loudoun, the Sheriff disposed a mill and some four acres of land about it to Kinyancleugh, and his heirs whatsoever; and the disposition bore a good deal of what is above, as the reason of it."

ROBERT the first Earle of Wintone—P. 59.—Lord Somervill states, that this Lord Seton, whom by mistake he names Alexander, was “One of the greatest builders in that age; and at that very time [1584] had the king’s master of worke at Seatoune, building that large quarter of his palace towards the north-east.”—Mem. of the Somervills, I. 460.

Seton from about this period appears to have been commonly denominated a palacé, which may have been so from the circumstance of Queen Marie’s having for a short time held her court in that princely residence. There are two separate views of the ruins of Seton, with many interesting notices, preserved in Mr Grose’s Antiquities of Scotland; and it is understood that Lord Eldin is in possession of some very beautiful drawings of these remains, done by his father, the late Mr Clerk.

"In 1790, the whole was taken down by the present proprietor, to make way for a house, now almost finished, on a design of the late Mr Adam, in the old castle form."—Stat. Acc. What an exchange!

SETON of BARNES—P. 61.—“At the same time, [July, 1625], dyed at Edinburgh, the Lady Kilsyth, younger; since her husband’s death, married to Sir John Seaton of Barnes: A virtuous Lady, fearing God; the worthy daughter of her excellent mother, the Lady Fleming.”—Boyd of Trochrig’s Obituary, apud Life of Trochrig, MS. in Bib. Col. Glas.

ALEXANDER, Earle of Dumfermeline—P. 63.—“In June [1622] Mr Alexander Seaton, Earle of Dumferling, and Chancelour of Scotland, dyed. Mr Calderwood sayes, he was popyishly disposed in his religion; but condemned many of the abuses of the Church of Rome. He was a good Justiciar, and no great friend to the Bishops. The Bishop of Saint Andrews had a view to succeed him, and disposed of his office, as Lord of Session, to his son, afterwards Sir Robert, but was disappointed for some years as to being Chancelour."—Life of Archbishop Spotswood, MS. in Bib. Col. Glas.—"The 16 of Junij this zeire, 1622, betux 6 and 7 horas in the morning, at Pinkie, in Lothian, diey Alexander Earle of Dunfermeling."—Balfour's Annals.

Sir William Seton, fifth son to George Lord Seton—P. 68.—This Sir William Seton was designed of Kylismuir; the family appears to have failed in the person of his successor. Sir William is named a "counsallour" in the Latterwill of "James erle of Abercorne, etc. the tyme of his deceis, quha deceist W[in] the parochin of Mounktoone, vpone the xxiiij day of Merche, the yeir of God J[ay] vj and auchtein yeiris:"

The Fairlys of Braid, mentioned here, seem to be quite distinct from the more ancient family of Fairly of that Ilk, near Largs, in Ayrshire; and are said to be derived from a natural son of one of the Stewart kings. Robert Fairly of Braid, probably father of the above individual, will be remembered by his friendship to John Knox long after the period to which any family pretensions whatever could have transmitted his name.

Sir Alexander Seton, Earle of Eglinton—P. 69.—From Sir Alexander Seton have been derived the noble family of Eglinton to the present time. In Balfour's Annals his succession seems mistakingly placed in the year 1607. The honours, however, appear not to have followed the destination of the estate, and from which, it is obvious, has arisen much vexatious impediment to Sir Alexander. The unwearied Wodrow, who well merits all the encomiums paid him by Mr Fox, has picked up some letters of Bishop Spotswood's, who was much interested in the matter, which afford many curious particulars, not only as regards the earldom of Eglinton, but as reflecting light on the ways of that provident prelate himself and the tortuous policy of his times.—Life of Spot. MS. ut supra. The following extracts however are confined exclusively to the family of Eglinton. The first is from a pretty long letter, relating chiefly to the recovery of certain heritable jurisdictions to the Crown; and is thus preaced:—"In the Collection of Ecclesiastical Papers in the Advocats' Library, I find the following letter from the A. Bishop dated Edinburgh, July 14. this year [1614]. The person to whom it's writ is omitted in my transcript of it; but I suppose it's to Mr Murray of the Bed-chamber," &c.

"I have spoken with the Chancellour, * and his nephew, Sir Alexander Seaton. The Chancellour says, that in his life, never any thing troubled him more than his Majesty's offence at that business of Eglinton; and that both he and Sir Alexander, with many words and oaths, protest, that they are so far from standing in termes with his Majesty, that, to give his Highness contentment, they will not fear to submitt their lives, honours, land and all. Only, Sir Alexander being provided to the succession of that living, and coming in against the liking of many of the friends of that House, feared, as he says, to do any thing that might bring in question the honour and rank they had formerly kepted amongst the nobility. For, if he should have taken his Honour by a new creation, the old would have been forgotten; and his enemies ascribed this to his weakness: Otherwise, that he can enjoy no honour or living but as from his Majesty, and by his Highness' favour and benefit. As he were to think it, so does he take no pleasure to enjoy any of them, without his Majesty's good pleasure; and if he may be so happy, as to obtain his Highness' favour, it shall be all his study to do in his place the best service he can possibly. Such as I shew his Majesty, the young man is of good expectation, and one who I hope shall prove worthy of his Majesty's favour. And so if it please his Majesty to provide, that, in honnour and place due to the House of Egingtoun, he be not prejudged, his Highness may command him in what sort he pleases; and prescribe any thing for it, and he shall be obeyed. You would, therefore, be pleased to entreat his Majesty, that, in such manner as his Majesty shall think convenient for his honour, this business may find a setting, which, I trust in God, his Majesty shall never repent; and if his Highness may be pleased to admitt him to presence, and accept him in place, ye may advise the Chancellour of the time and manner. Alwise, it shall be fitt, in the end of the errand, to remember the Bailziary of Cunningham, and advertise the Chancellour thereof, when you write of the rest, that all may be prepared, and those things done together. For I have craved nothing thereof, nor can well do, because I have been thought by the Chancellour, and others, to be the only instigator of those matters against the Heretable Sheriffs; and it will be meetest that ye signify the same to him upon his Majesty's command."

* The Earl of Dumfermine.
NOTES.

And in his next letter to Mr Murray, Edin. July 29, 1614, the following passage occurs:—

"I wrote before touching matters committed to me anent the Sheriff's and the Earle of Eglingtoun, whereof I have expected your answer, which is not yet come. In the mean time, we have ended with Burlye* anent his right to Kilwinning, and contracted with him for 10 thousand pound, whereof I take upon me the half payment. He is to come himself with the securitis, and gift of the Abbacy in my person, whereof if you hear of any thing, I pray you, give it the furtherance that you may. If he take another advise to stay, and not to come hastily, I will send in the same Gift to be signed, and his letter testifying his consent, which, because of the season, must be furthered, that I may have, upon the Gift, Inhibitions to be raised in time upon the Kirks."

Upon the 3d of August 1614, he writes again to the same person thus:—

* Sir Michael Balfour, first Lord Balfour of Burleigh, had a charter, Sep. 7th, 1614, of the barony of Kilwinning, with the title of Lord Kilwinning, &c.—Peer. But this property had been acquired by the family of Eglinton, on the resignation of William Melville, about the year 1603; and the grant to Balfour seems to have been felt as an intolerable act of injustice.

The Abbey of Kilwinning was amongst the most sumptuous of the monastic edifices in Scotland, as it is now amongst the most dilapidated. Such fragments of it however still remain as may enable the mind to form some idea of its former grandeur and extent, whilst they show it to have belonged to the best era of Gothic building; and must ever awaken the most painful feelings that may arise on reflecting on the circumstances which have thus irretrievably despoiled the country of those wonderful monuments of early piety and taste—at once the depositories and manifestations of its history.

Tradition has assigned a kind of pre-eminence to Kilwinning in the estimation of its former possessors,—probably arising from the masonic pretensions of the place? and the following prophetic rhyme is still adduced as expressing the hopes of the humbled church:

\text{Between old Sanctoun and the sea,} \\
\text{What we have lost, we there shall win—} \\
\text{In victory!}

Kilwinning is yet known in the neighbourhood by the appellation of Sanctoun, corruptly Segton, allusive to St Winnin, the titular patron, to whom some of the most extraordinary miracles on record are ascribed. It is said, and there seems to be some evidence of the fact, that the Earl of Glencairn, who obtained some right to this monastery at the Reformation, pulled down from the church the entire materials of a large mansion house which he then erected at Stevenston, in the neighbourhood,—and no doubt his example would soon be followed by other like purifiers. But of all the actors of that dismal catastrophe probably none pursued the work of destruction more unremittingly than did the Earl of Glencairn. At a meeting at the kirk of Craigie in 1539, with a view to aid the reformers at Perth, his Lordship, finding those present hesitate to comply with his unmitigated measures, thus remarkably discovered his impatient ardour—exclaiming:—"Let every man serve his own conscience, I will, by God's grace, see my brethren in Saint Johnstoun; nay, albeit never man should accompany, I will go, tho' it should be but with a pick on my shoulder: for I had rather die with that company than live after them." The Earl's talents are well known, and lose little by this politic appeal.

"Sir,

This paquet has the Signature for Kilwinning, for which we have agreed to pay to him 10,004 pounds at Martimas, and have made him security. I have also passed our Contract, in the manner I have shewed his Majesty and you, whereby I have him bound to sett all the Cunningham's teinds to themselves. I wrote to you before anent his answer to me about the submission of himself in the matter of the Earl dome to the King: thereanent, I expect to hear from you; and, praying God to give a happy progress, I rest

Yours ever to command,

Edinburgh, August 3, 1614.

Glasgow.

P. S. Sir,—The Signature would be hastened, because of the season, that I may, in time, have Inhibitions served; therefore, I pray you, send it to me by the first occasion. The Chancellour has testified our Agreement by his letter, and mine to his Majesty is only for that purpose."

The following appears to be the letter to the King here alluded to:

"Most Sacred and Gracious Majesty,

The agreement for the Abbay of Kilwinning is made between the Lord Burly and me. In like sort are the conditions perfected between Sir Alexander Seaton and me anent the tythes of the Cunninghams, where they have any within the churches allotted to him. For the speciall churches where the Earle of Glencirn and his friendship have their lands fall in that portion which, by your Majesty's favour, is assigned to me. I trust the Lord Chancellour has testified so much by his letter to your Majesty; and now, because of the harvest season, wherein Inhibitions would be served upon the Tythes, I have sent the Signature of the Abbacy, to which I most humbly intreat your Majesty's hand. If it please the Lord I live a little while, the posterity shall find a princely work done by your Majesty's liberality to our Colledge, and your Highnes' favour shall be seen to be well bestowed. Neither have any of the Cunninghames cause to complain, being better provided for in the surety of their tythes than themselves could have done; at least in this, that they fell not into the Competitors' hands: nor are they to do them any reverence in that behalf. Humbly intreating your Majesty's favour for signing the Gift, I pray God Almighty to bless your Highness with long and happy dayes.

Your Majesty's most Humble,
And Obedient Servant,

Edinburgh, August 3, 1614.

The second Alexander, Earl of Eglinton—P. 72.—The second wife of Lord Eglinton, alluded to here, "was Frances, daughter of Francis Popeley of Woolley Moorhouse, and widow of Sir Thomas Wentworth, Bar. of Bretton

Peerages—her marriage with Lord Eglintoun took place before August 19.
1685, as is proved by an original letter from his Lordship to her, in the possession of Mr Beaumont, Yorkshire. Lord Eglintoun married to his third wife, a lady of 90, and thrice a widow—Catharine, daughter of Sir William St. Quintin of Harpham, also in the county of York."—Com. by Mr K. Sharpe.

melzier is in possession of a good portrait of Lady Anna Hay, the first wife of this Lord Seton.

principal officers taken at Philiphaugh than has hitherto appeared. It is copied

NOTES.

George eleventh Lord Seton—P. 87.—Though the connection of the family of Buccleuch with the house of Seton, as alluded to in the narrative, may not seem to require that it be adverted to in this place; yet as the following document appears to have some reference to a very celebrated individual of that family—Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch,—and has not probably before been made known, little apology may be deemed necessary in thus introducing it here. These extracts are copied from the Records of the Commissariot of Glasgow:

* There is a view of the Cross church of Peebles in Grose's Antiquities, the walls of which seem to be pretty entire.

The author of Satan’s Invisible World Discovered, has dedicated the first edition of that curious Collection to the Earl of Winton, and as this address contains some interesting particulars of his Lordship’s pursuits and life, it is now reprinted, as an appendix to his history. Mr Sharpe, to whom we are indebted for having pointed out this singular production, has accompanied it with the following remarks:—"I send you a transcript of Sinclair’s very amusing dedication of his Satan’s Invisible World, to Lord Winton, the first edition of which is so rare, that, besides one in my possession, I never heard but of one other copy. In the subsequent editions the dedication is omitted; so this has almost the rarity of a MS. it is in none of our Libraries here.† Sinclair also dedicated his ‘Ars nova et magna gravitatis et levitatis; sive dialogorum philosophoricum libri sex de aereis vērā ac reali gravitate, &c.’ printed in 4to. at Roterodam, 1669, to George, Earl of Winton, in the same strain of flattery as to his ancestors.’"

My Lord,

I present your Lo: with an oblation, both lame and imperfect. ’Tis all which my ability can afford. I must sacrifice with barley-meal, because I want frankincense.

But what imperfection is in it, I supply it with the sincerity of my respects, who presents it. 'Tis a subject that the learndest prince, and greatest monarch in his time, was not ashamed to treat of. I seriously implore your Lordship's protection, for I have to do with many adversaries of this visible world, who will not fail to ride tilts at me, with bul rushes and windle-strawes. As for those of Satan's invisible world, in the name of the Lord, I defy them. I know the acuteness of your Lordship's ingine, and profundness of your knowledge, in all such and other matters, that there is no theme which I am able to treat of, or thesis which I am able to publish, but your Lordship is able, by your power and authority, to protect it, and by your reason to defend it.

I am the more encouraged to offer this to your Lordship, a noble Patrician, because I have seen Tracts of this subject consecrated to kings, dukes, and princes: I have sure experience of your Lordship's bounty and favourable aspect, which gave wings to my new philosophical experiments, to fly thorow Holland, France, and Germany, which have made them so acceptable to strangers.

Neque Pharis gravior uilla est, Quam sibi quae Vari praecepit pagina nomen.

If my writings had such good fortune and success abroad, by the auspicious conduct of your Lordship's name upon the frontispice, what must they have at home, where your power, interest, and relations are so considerable? Where your Ancestors are so famous, having been useful to their country, in peace and war; others of them employed in publick affairs at home and abroad, and of all them most eminent for their unstained loyalty to their Prince, and zeal for his interest; and that since Malcome the Third, six hundred years agoe, to your Lordship, who is the twentieth and fifth, lineally descended from Dougald the first of the family.

What a faithful Achates and companion was Christopher Seton the third, to King Robert the Bruce, in all his troubles? whose love to his king was like the love of Jonathan to David, for which, and his valiant atcheivements, he bestowed his sister Christian upon him in marriage, and the flower-de-luce to his coat of arms, one of the chief ornaments of the royal badge.

——— Patruo te princepe celsum, Ballipotens illustrat avus.———

Was not Alexander Seton, the second son of Lord William, and Lady Katharin Sinclair, or rather, Saint Katharin, who builded the famous Chappel of Seton, for his excellent endowments of body and mind, made head of the noble family of Gordons, by marrying the heretrix of Huntly; and that three hundred years ago? And was not his sister Isabel, by the same mother, bestowed in marriage upon that most princely youth John Stuart of Darnly, from which two, the Royal.
race is descended: So that I may say without flattery, your family is come off princes, and reciprocally, princes are come off your family.

Quis venerabilior sanguis, que major origo
Quam regalis erit?

What was that illustrious knight Alexander the third, who during the time of John the Balliol’s usurpation, three hundred and fifty years ago, was made Governor of Berwick, whom the king of England, while he was besieging the Town, could neither by threatenings, nor fair promises, inveigle or perswade to betray his trust. The garison labouring under great penurie of provision, a truce was made upon this condition, That if relief came not before such a limited day, the town should be delivered up. The Scottish army approaching, under the conduct of the valiant Douglas, and King Edward fearing that the town might be relieved, sent to the governour, certifying him (though the dayes of truce were not yet expired) that if he did not render it forthwith, both his sons, the one an hostage, the other a prisoner of war, should be crucified immediately before his eyes.

But the magnanimous father, and incomparable mother, being driven to this insuperable dilemma;

Dextrum Scylla latus, levum implacata Charybdis
Obsidet——

Love to their dearest children perswading, and love and respect to their country and family dissuading, carrie like two invincible heros, and by admirable resolution and constancy, beyond what Roman histories can parallel, they prefer their country to their dearest pledges, fidelity to treacherie, and glory to shame. On which barbaritie, the famous poet Johannes Johnstonus Aberdonensis, wripteth thus in his book intituled, The Scots Heros:—

Hue averte oculos, neu trista fata tuorum, Respice——
Vincit amor patriae constansque in pectore virtus, Omnia pro patria sustinuiisse valens.

This strange tyrannical, barbarous, and monstruous fact, is suppressed in the histories of England, and buried in silence, not unwisely, it being capable neither of defence nor excuse.

My Lord,

Neither can I pass over in silence Lord George, the fifth of that name, Claros inter habent nomina clara viros.

Your great grand-father’s father, who being master of the royal oeconomy to the Queen, was sent by order of parliament to France, to make up a match between Francis the Dolphin, and Mary Queen of Scots. And after, was sent by King James her son, to Henry the Third, for confirming the ancient Alliance, whose third son, Alexander, for his knowledge and skill in juris-prudence, was many years a senator of the college of justice, and thereafter president to the senate, and one of the king's honourable privy councillors, and at last made by King James, Earl of Dumfermling, and lord high chancellor of Scotland; from whom, by his two daughters, he had two grand children, that matchless hero John Duke of Lauderdale, and John Earl of Twedle, both of them as was said of Julius Caesar and Cato, Ingenti virtute, Men of most eminent parts and endowments,

Fortes creantur fortibus, et bonis
Est in iuvenis, est in equis patrum
Virtus: nec imbellum feroce Prognerant aquila columbam.

I come at last to your Lordship's father and grand-father, who imitating their noble ancestors, were notable examples of love and piety towards their sovereign: both of great humility and goodness. Your grand-father was admirable, even to excess, for liberalitie to his other children, and hospitalitie to freinds and strangers, more becoming a prince than a subject. Your mother, of the renowned Gordons, a paragon of nature, for her matchless beauty and goodness,

Rara quidem facie, forma pulcherrima Dido.

My Lord,
I have touched a little the historie of your familie, but cannot relate all it deserves. It is well done by others, and augmented by the learned notes of Sir Alexander Seton of Pitmeden, knight baronet, that honourable gentleman, one of the honourable senators of the college of justice.

But for what end (my Lord) have I celebrated the praises of your predecessors? Is it because I have nothing to say of yourself? Far be it. Your large possessions purchased by the prudence and heroick valour of your fore-fathers, are managed with frugalitie and moderation.

Non minor est virtus quam querere, parta tueri:
Casus inest illic, hic erit artis opus.

The ancient honour and dignitie of your familie is preserved without the least stain or spot of disloyalty; so that I may trulie say, as is ingraven upon the frontispice of your statelie palace, DECUS DECORI ADDIS AVITO.

This Treatise is called SATANS INVISIBLE VVORLD DISCOVERED, but I am ascertain'd, that by your transcendent skill, you have discovered an Invisible World, far beyond what any of your ancestors could do; I mean your subterraneous world, a work for a prince, and a subject to write of, by that great philosopher Kircher. What meanders and boutgates are in it are rather to be admired than beleived. There Dædalus for all his skill would mistake his way? What running of mines and levels? What piercing of gaes? What cutting of impregnable.

rocks, with more difficultie than Hannibal cutted the Alpes.

— Qui montes rupt aceto.

What deep-pits and air-holes are digged! What diligence to prevent damps, which kill men and beasts in a moment! What contriving of pillars for supporting houses and churches, which are undermined! What floods of water run thorough the labyrinths, for several miles, by a free level, as if they were conducted by a guide! How doth art and nature strive together, which of the twain shall advance your Lordship’s interest most! What curious mechanical engines has your Lordship, like another Archimedes, contrived for your coal-works, and for draining of coal-sinks! What a molinious rampier hath your Lordship begun, and near perfected, for a harbour of deep water, even at neip-tides!

Portus ab accessu ventorum immotus et ingens.

How bountiful has nature been in forming a choice coal under ground, within a stone-cast of your new-haven?

Your experimental skill, in improving your coal for making of salt, is praise worthie. Your defending of the salt-pan against the impetuous waves of the raging sea, from the N. E. is singular. Your renting of rocks, for clearing of passages into your harbours, which none of your predecessors were able to do, is stupendious.

As the result of the wise government of your affairs redounds to your self, so does it to the publick advantage of the countrie, and others, so that men may say, — Te toti genium se credere genti.

How manie hundreds of young and old have their being and livelie-hood, by their dependence on your Lordship’s vertuous actions about the coal and salt, and things belonging thereunto, who are your self the greatest coal and salt-master in Scotland, who is a nobleman, and the greatest nobleman in Scotland, who is a coal and salt-master; Nay, absolutelie the best for skill in both of all men in the nation. What fruitful corn-fields, where Ceres hath her chief habitation, lay within the prospect of your dwelling house at Seton! Which perswades me to maintain this paradox, There is no subject in Britan has so much casual and land-revenue within a mile of his house as your Lordship has.

In a word, your affability in converse, your sobriety in dyet and apparel, your friendship and kindness to your freinds, your candor and ingenuity, with the prudent management of your affairs, have indeared all men to you; So that I may say, If your predecessors were famous of old for their feates of war, in the time of war, so is your Lordship famous for your arts of peace, in the time of peace. But, my Lord, I fear I am wearisome, and therefore I shall close as I began, imploring your patrocination to this small enchiridion. And as I have been long since devoted to you in all dutie and love, so shall I ferventlie pray for your preservation and happiness here and hereafter, while I live, and shall think my self happie to be under the character of your Lordships

Most dutiful and obedient Servant,

GEORGE SINCLAIR.

The following genealogy of this branch is copied from a history of the family of Winton, MS. belonging to the Earl of Eglinton, part of which is continued to about the year 1760:—

"Sir John Seton of Gairmilton, 3d son (and 1st of the 2d marriage) of George 3d Earl of Winton, married [Christian, others say Isobel, daughter of Sir John Home of Renton], by whom he had 3 sons: 1. COLLECTIONS UPON THE LIFE OF ALEXANDER SEATON, DOMINICAN FREIR, CONFESSOR TO KING JAMES THE FIFTH, AND AFTERWARDS CHAPLAIN TO THE DUKE OF SUFFOLK, IN ENGLAND.

BY THE REV. ROBERT WODROW, MINISTER OF EASTWOOD.
NOTICE.

To the account of the Life of George fourth Lord Seton, Lord Kingston has subjoined the following Note:—

"In anno 1541, which was in Lord George the fourth's time, Alexander Seton, a learned man, a theolog, by nation a Scotsman, wroth a Commentar upon the 1 and 2 Epistles of Peter, Epistle of St James, and upon the 18 chapter of the Acts; etiam Processum sue Examinationis, et Sermones ad utrumque statum. Vixit anno 1541.—Vide Epit. Bibliothecae Gesneri, at the name Alexander, edit. Tiguri, 1555."

Some of the most distinguished writers of the affairs of the Reformed church have given accounts of this learned divine, though part of their relations still remains unpublished; and from their writings chiefly has the author of The History of the Sufferings of the Church of Scotland composed the following Memoir of him. The manuscript is in Mr Wodrow's own hand-writing, and was discovered a few years ago, by the Rev. Mr Leitch of Largs, in the isle of Little Cumbrae, where latterly some of the author's descendants resided and died; and it now forms part of the voluminous Collection of Presbyterian Biography, from the same pen, belonging to the Library of the University of Glasgow. The extracts from Knox's History, as quoted, have all been carefully recollated with the original manuscript referred to, which is still preserved in the above Library. The author usually notes the time of writing the different Lives in this work—the Life of Seton is dated, at the beginning, "March 21. 1729," —at the end, the day following, which shows the wonderful facility he possessed in these labours.
I have not much to add to what Mr Knox hath preserved to us concerning this valuable man, and almost the first open preacher of the Truth in Scotland; but some hints have offered to me this way, and this good man deserves to have the whole remains about him put together, and the rather that he is misrepresented by some and overlooked too much by other writers, and his Life has not been, that I know of, attempted. Any materials I can recover, will give but a very short and imperfect view of him.

It is but very little I can give of him, till he comes upon the publick stage as a preacher, and confessor of the truth, in Scotland and England. Mr Calderwood, in his MS. says he finds in Mr Davidson's scrolls, That Mr Seaton was brother to Ninian Seaton laird of Touch, in Stirlingshire, a family that was, if I mistake not, a branch of the ancient family of Seatons, better known by the stile of Winton, descended from Alexander de Seaton, whom Sir James Dalrymple gives us as a witnes in a charter of our King David to the very ancient family of Riddel of that Ilk. Whatever be in this, this gentleman, as was ordinary at this time, had education, and probably for services in the church. Whether he had forraigne travail joyned at it, I know not. But its not improbable, since he was pitched upon to be Confessor to King James the Fifth, and the Capellanus Regis was anciently, as some think, much of the same nature, and a post of great honour and trust; and even that of Confessor, in those times, and at present, in Popish countries, is a very important post. When he was made Chaplain I know not; but Spotswood and Knox make him to be in this post at the time of Mr Patrick Hamilton's martyrdom. It's probable they were friends and fellow lovers of the truth.

Whatever be in that, all our writers agree, that he was entered into the Dominican order of freirs, and Mr Knox calls him a Black freir. The knowledge of the truth, as we have seen, was making it's way pretty fast during this reigne, and severall of the freirs were beginning to be enlightened with it, by the occasions and springs I have hinted at in the Introduction.* Whether he had his light from Mr Patrick Hamilton I cannot say, no doubt he was established and encouraged to a more publick confession of it by his martyrdom. But it's probable he might receive this himself in foraigne countrys; and it's so no probable, that had he learned the truth so lately from Mr Hamilton, that he would have so soon and distinctly preached it.

The time of his preaching the truth is a little uncertain, as to it's precise time; but most of our writers place his sermons a little after Mr Hamilton's sufferings. Mr Calderwood, in his MS. finds himself at a loss as to this, and sayes, at the close of his account of him, "I cannot find the precise time of Freir Alexander's flight out of this country, yet since he is placed by Mr Knox in his History as a sufferer for the truth not long after Mr P. Hamilton's death, I have inserted his acts after him."

Mr Knoxes account of Mr Seaton being the ground work of what all the rest of our writers since give us as to him, while in Scotland, I'le begin with that from his MS. and then add what I find in the rest different from him. Mr Knox tell us "That God schort efter (Mr Hamilton's death, and some other appearances for the truth by Ferrier and Carmichael, of quhich before), raysset up against thame stronger champiounis. For Alexander Seytoun, a Blak freir of gude leirning and estimation, began to tax the corrupt doctrine of the Papistrie. For the space of a whole Lent, he taucht the Commandimentis of God onlie, ever beaten in the eiris of his auditoris, That the Law of God had of many yeiris nocht bein trewlie taucht: for mennis Traditionis had obscurit the puritie of it. These wer his accustomed propositionis: First, Christ Jesus is the end and perfectioun of the Law. 2. Thair is no sin quhair Godis law is nocht violated. 3. To satisfie for synnis lyis nocht in manis power; but the remissioun thairof cumet the be unfenyet repentance, and be Fayth, apprehending God the Father mercyfull in Christ Jesus, his sone. While often tymes he putis auditoris in mynd of these and the lyke Heidis, he makis no mention of Purgatorie, Pardones, Pilgrimages, Prayeris to Sanctis, nether of suche trifellis. The dum Doctouris, and the rest of that foirsuorne rabill, begane to suspect him: and yet they said nothing publiclie, till Lent was endit, and he passit to Dundie, and thane in his absence, hyred for that purpoe, opinlie condemned the hole doctrine whiche befoir he had taucht. Whiche cuming to his earis, the said Freir Alexander, thane being in Dundie, without delay, he returned to S. Androis; causit immediatelie to jow the bell, and to giff significationoun that he wald preiche, as that he did indeid. In the whiche sermone he affirmed, and that more planelie than at any uther tyme, whatsoevir he had taucht in all his sermonis befoir, the hole Lent tyde preceeding: adding, that within Scotland their war no trew bischoppis, gif that bischopis sould be knawin be sick notes and vertewis as Sanet Paull requires in bishopis.” Bishop Spotswood gives us the same account, and cites Knox as his voucher, only with this difference, that the bishop (and Mr Petry also from him) makes the first point he taught to be—That the Law of God is the only Rule of rightousnes. Mr Collier, with his ordinary temper, quhen he speaks of our Scots Reformers, whom he on all occasions endeavours to blacken, tells us: “Here (in the propositions above, with Spotswood’s alteration, quhich is certainly a great truth,) is truth and error blended. The 2 first propositions (That the Law of God is the only Rule of rightousnes, and That if God’s Law be not violated, there is no sin committed) are crude and indefensible: they seem to release the conscience from the obligation of human lawes, and make the authority of Church and State insignificant.” I only insert Collier’s words, not to defend the safe propositions here attacked, for with Protestants, or any body that reflects upon a supreme cause, they need no defence; but to give an instance of overdriving matters in this odd casuist: his divinity certainly must be very bad, as many places of his History will not bear an apology. In both he seemes exceedingly byassed towards Rome; and I hope a writer that directly charges that proposition, That the Law of God is the only Rule of rightousnes, as crude and indefensible, and flatly contradicts the Scripture,—Whosoever committeth sin transgreseth the Law, for sin is the transgression of the Law; will not be much regarded in his furious attacks upon our Reformation in Scotland, and the Instruments of it, Mr Seaton, Mr Knox and others.

But to go on, Mr Seaton was very soon persecuted for his freedom, as Mr Knox tells us, quhare I broke of:—“This delatioun flew with winges to the bishopis eiris, quho, but farther delay, send for the said Freir Alexander; quho begane grevouslie to complain, and schairplie to accuse, that he had so scanderouslie spokin of the dignitie of bishopis, as to say That it behovit a bishope to be a preicheour, or ellis he was but a dumme dog, and fed nocht the flock, bit fed his awin bellie. The man being wittie, and myndit of that quhillk was his ane maist assured defence, said, ‘My Lord, the reporteris of sick thingis are manifest lieris.’ Quhairat, the bischop reioyssit, and said, 'Your answer pleissis me weill. I nevir could think of yow that ye wald have bein so foolische as to affirme sick thingis; quhar ar thay knaves that hes brocht me this taill?' Quho compeiring, and affirming the samin that thai did bessoir, he still replyt, That thai war lieris. Bot quhille the witnes wer multiplyt, and men war brocht to attentiooun, he turned him to the bischope, and said, 'My Lord, ye may heir and considder quhat eiris thir assis have, quho can nocht descerne betwix Paul, Isaij, Zacharie and Malachie, and Freir Alexander Seytoun. In verrie deid, my Lord, I said that Paul saysis, It behovis a bispoch to be a teicher. Isaij saysis, Yai that fed nocht the flock ar dum doggis; and Zacharie saysis, Yai ar idell pastouris. I of my awin heid, affirmit nothing, bot declared quhat the Spirit of God befoir had pronunciet: at quhome, my Lord, gif ye be nocht offendit, justlie, ye can nocht be offendit at me; and sa yit agane, my Lord, I say, that thei ar manifest lieris that reportit unto you that I said that ye, and utheris that preiche nocht, ar no bispochis, but bellie-godis.

"Allbeit, after that, the bispoch was heichlie offendit, alsweill at the skuff and bitter mock, as at the bald libertie of that leirnit man, yit durst he nocht hazarde, at that present, to execute his malice consvitt; for nocht onelie feirit he the leirning and bald spirit of the man, bot also the favour that he had, alsweill of the pepill, as the Prince, King James the Fyft, of quhom he had gud credite; for he was at that tyne his Confessor, and had exhortit him to the feir of God, to the meditatioun of Godis Law, and unto puritie of lyffe. Bot the bispoch, with his complices, foriseing quhat danger mycht cum to thair estait, gif sick familiaritie sould continew betwix the Prince and a man so leirnit, and so repugning to thair affectionis, labourit be all meinis to mak the said Freir Alexander odious wnto the Kings Graice, and easilie fand the meinis, be the Gray Freiris (who be thair hypocrisie deceaveth mony), to traduce the innocent, as ane heretyk. This accusatioun was easelie recevit of the carnall Prince, quho altogether wes gevin unto the filthie lustis of the fleische; and abhorrit all counsaill that repugnit thairto; and becaus he did remember quhat a terrour the admonitionis of the said Alexander wes unto his corrupted conscience, without resistence, he subscryvit to thair accusatioun, affirming, that he knew mair thane thai did in that matter; for he understude weill aneuche that he smellit of the new Doctrine, by suche thingis as he had schawin to him under confessioun: and, thairfoir, hepromiseit that he sould follow the counsaill of the bispochis, in punishing off him, and of all utheris of that sect.

"These thingis understand be the said Alexander, alsweill be informationis of his freindis and familiaris, as be the strange continance of the King unto him, he provydit the nixt way, to avoyd the furie of a blindit Prince; and so, in his habit, he departit the realme; and cuming to Berwik, he wrat back

"This letter," adds Mr Knox, "was deliverit to the Kingis awin handis, and of mony red; but quhat could gretitl admonitious (so it runs in my MS. and the Glasgow copy) * availl whair the pryde and corruption of prælatis commandit quhit thay pleissit; and the flatterie off courteouris fostered the insolent prince to all impietie." Thus far Mr Knox goes, and I see nothing further worth noticing in Spotswood, Petry, Burnet, or our other historians. This matter stands, I think, much better in Mr Knox and Mr Seaton's own words than in their abstracts of them.

When Mr Seaton saw he had no answer to expect from Scotland, and he was to expect no justice there, he went up to London, and was very much esteemed there, and justly; he became Chaplain to Charles Duke of Suffolk, who enterained him till his death. While there, he was attacked by Bishop Gardiner, and made a kind of recantation; but, for all that, Spotswood, Knox, and the rest of our writers, believe that he parted with no truth that he had professes. I can give no account of him while in England almost, save as to his persecution from Bishop Bonnar, quhich hapned a short time before his death. He seems to have lived and preached the gospell there for 14 or 15 years after his leaving Scotland. Ple give what accounts I have of him there from Knox,[Spotswood, and] Calderwood, and make some additions from Fox; and soon end.

Mr Knox tells us:—"ALEXANDER SEYTOUN remanit in England, and publiclie (with grit prays and confort of mony) taucht the evangell in all sinceritie certane yeiris. And albeit the craftines of Winchester and of utheris, circumveinit the said Alexander, that thai causit him, at Paules croce, to affirme certane thingis that repugnit to his former trew doctrine; yet it is no dout bot that as God potentie had roung with him in all his lyf, that also in his deith (whiche schortlie efter follow-ed) he fand the mercie of his God, wherupon he exhorted all men evir to depend." Bishop Spotswood is of the same opinion of his innocency with Knox, and sayes, that quhen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, by his crafty and subtle persuasion, induced Mr Seaton to make a recantation of sundry points at Paul's Cross, yet still his sound belife, as to most of the articles of the Christian Faith, appears in the Treatises he left behind him; and adds, that his examination by Gardiner and Bonner (quhich he likewise published, discovering the policy used to circumveen him) doth testify his constancy in the truth, and that he never denied any point quhich formerly he had taught.

* Our author read this—"gentle admonitions," and of course was not quite satisfied.

Mr Calderwood gives us a fuller account, mostly from Mr Fox, which I shall give in his own words:—"Mr Seaton, when in England, became Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk. He was detected and presented by 3 priests—one was Fellow of Whittington College, called Richard Taylor,—the other, John Smith,—the other, John Huntington, who was afterward converted to the same doctrine. Mr Seaton made answer, by writing, to the objections of his adversaries, who had gathered certain articles out of his sermon, preached Nov. 13. 1541, at St Anthony's, London: First, denying many things therein objected against him, taking upon his conscience, that he never spoke diverse of those words; and again, many other things he never meane to such end and purpose as they did wrest them. But for all that he could say for himself, the Ordinary did proceed in his consistory judgment, ministering to him certain interrogatories, after the Popish course, to the number of ten articles. The greatest matter laid against him was for preaching free justification by Faith in Christ Jesus; against false confidence in good works; and man's free will. He was also challenged for affirming, that privat masses and dirigees, and other prayers, profit not the souls of the departed. In the end, he and W. Tolwine, parson of St Anthony's, who had been examined by Bishop Bonner, for suffering Freir Alexander to preach in his church, having no license of his Ordinary, and allowing his sermons, * and for making the holy-water without the generall exorcisme, wer forced to recant at Paul's Cross, and bear a faggot, anno 1541. For at this time certain persons wer troubled for the Six Articles of Popery which King Henry the Eight re-established.—In his sermon he had these words:—'Put the case, I had two servants, the one is called John, the other Robert; and I promise to send you such a day twenty pound by John, my servant; and at my day I send you by Jo. my servant 20 pound, wanting a farthing, which Robert doth bring thee and so thou hast thy twenty pound, every penny and farthing. Yet will I ask, if I be true of my promise, or no, and thou maist say nay. And why? Because I promised to send thee whole that twenty pound by John, and did not, for there lacked a farthing, which Robert brought. Wherefore I say, if thy works do merit, or bring one little jot or title towards thy justification, then is Christ false of his promise, which said, he would do altogether.'

That we may have a fuller view of Mr Seaton's doctrine, in the very morning of the Reformation, I'lle subjoy, from Mr Fox, the Articles gathered out of his sermons by his adversaries. After Mr Fox hath given much the same account of his sermon, and triall, Nov. 1541, as Mr Calderwood gives, he tells us that the Duke of Suffolk made him a free denizen, and that he was a Scotsman, and a worthy preacher. The objections or cavillations picked up by his adversaries are as follow:—

[Certain places or Articles gathered out of Seton's Sermons by his adversaries.

"The sayings and words of Alexander Seton, spoken and preached by him in his sermon, made the thirteenth day of November, at afternoone, in the parish Church of Saint A. in London:—]

"Paul saith, Of ourselves we can do nothing; I pray thee then where is thy will? Art thou any better then Paul, James, Peter, and all the Apostles? hast thou any more grace then they? Tell me now if thy will be any thing, or nothing. If it be any thing, tell me whether it be to do good or ill? If thou say to do ill, I will grant thou hast a greater deal. If thou say to do good, I ask whether is more somewhat or nothing? For Paul said he could do nothing, and I am sure thou hast no more grace then Paul and his companions.

"Scripture speaketh of three things in man; the first is will, the other two are consent and deed. The first, that is will, God worketh without us, and besides us. The other two he worketh in us, and with us. And here he alledgeth Saint Augustine to prove that we can will nothing that is good. Moreover he said thou hast not one jot, no not one tittle to doe any good.

"There is nothing in Heaven or in earth, creature or other, that can be any mean towards our justification, nor can any man satisfy God the father for our sin, save only Christ, and the shedding of his bloud.

"He that preacheth that works do merit, or be any mean to our salvation, or any part of our justification, preacheth a doctrine of the Devill.

"If any thing else, save onely Christ, be any mean towards our justification, then did not Christ onely justifie us.

"I say, that neither thy good workes, nor any thing that thou canst do, can be one jot or tittle towards thy justification. For if they be, then is not Christ a full justifier; and that I will prove by a familiar example: Be it in case, I have two servants, the one is called John, and the other Robert," &c. as above.

"One Scripture I will bring you, which they cannot writhe, to prove that Christ was only promised to be our onely justifier, our onely mean, and that is in the two and twentieth of Genesis, where it is written, In thy seed shall all people be blessed, meaning thereby onely Christ, and he said not in thy seedes, nor in the workes of thy seedes. Wherefore all they that preach that workes be any part or mean toward our justification, do make God false of his promise.

"They that preach that works do merit, do make works the tree, quich are but the fruits of justice, wrought by him that is already a just man, which cannot chuse but bring forth good fruit.

"I would ask a question, whether he that worketh be a good man or bad, for he must be one of them. If he be a good man, he cannot chuse but bring forth good fruits,—if he be an ill man, he can bring forth no fruit but ill fruit; for a good tree cannot bring forth ill fruit.

"He that saith that workes doe merit any thing towards our salvation, doth make workes check-mate with Christ and plucketh from Christ that is his, and giveth it to works. Some will ask, Wherefore then should I do good works? I answer, good workes are to be done for no cause else, but onely for the glorie of God, and not that they doe merit any thing at all. And he that saith that good workes are to be done for any other cause, than for the glory of God onely, and will have them to merit, or be any mean towards our justification, I say he lieth, and beleive him not.

"He that can shew me in any Scripture, that works do merit, or be any mean to our justification, for the first Scripture, I will (without any further judgment) lose both mine eares, for the second, my tongue, and for the third, my neck. For I dare say, he cannot prove in all the whole Scripture one title: wherfor beleve them not.

"Men say that we deny good works, and fasting, and prayer. They lie on us, we depie nothing but popish works, and popish fasting, and popish prayer; and he that preacheth that works doe merit, or fasting doth merit, or praiere doth merite, doth preach a popish doctrine.

"If you ask me when we shall leave preaching of workes? even when they do leave to preach that works do merit, and suffer Christ to be a whole satisfier, and onely meane to our justification; and till then, we will not cease, in God's cause, to set forth onely Christ to be a full and perfect, and only satisfaction.

"If you ask if good workes shall be rewarded, I say yea, and with no lesse then eternall glory; but for no merit that they deserve, for they deserve nothing, but onely because God hath promised, not for the merit of the work, but for his promise sake, and he will not break his promise."

Mr Fox adds some other articles, gathered out of Mr Seaton's sermons, quibch I shall likewise insert here, that the reader may have all the remains of this learned and pious man:—

"Touching Reconciliation spoken of by Doctor Smith (the same I suppose quhom Mr Strype, as we have seen in the Introduction, sayes, made so many turns for and against the truth), preaching in the forenoone at Paul's Cross, Alexander Seton, preaching at afternoone at Saint Anthonie's, and reciting his sayings and scriptures, reproved him for alledging this saying, Reconciliamini Deo, and Englishing the same thus, Reconcile your selves to God; because it is there spoken passively, and not actively, so that there should be nothing in man pertaining to reconciliation, but all in God.

"Also reproving the said Doctor Smith for that the said D. said that man by his good works might merit. Which saying of Doctor Smith the said Alexander Seton reproved in the pulpit at S. Anthonie's, the 13. day of November, the yeere of our Lord 1541. as naughtily spoken.

"Moreover the said Alexander Seton said in the same place, that it was a shame that any such preacher should be suffered so openly to preach such erroneous doctrine as to say that works should merit, adducing, Non sunt condignae passiones, &c. Et postquam feceritis omnia, &c.

"Finally, Seton said, peradventure ye will say, the Church hath determined this matter touching works. And I say, quoth he, that it is Ecclesia malignantium, so determining any thing against Scripture."

This is all I find in Fox concerning Mr Seaton. We have seen that Mr Seaton refused some of those expressions, as not spoken by him. The doctrine, in the generall, he was not, nor needed be, ashamed of; it's the doctrine of the Bible, consonant to sense and reason, and that of the Reformed churches. The Antinomians and Libertines wrest some expressions of our first Reformers against merite, and upon justification; but the Bible itself is not free from the attacks of ill-minded men. Bishop Spotswood insinuates that Mr Seaton left a vindication behind him of his innocency, and Dtr. M'Kenzie goes further, without any voucher, that I can find——" That he was persuaded to renounce several of the doctrines of the Reformers, at Paul's Cross. But repenting of quhat he had done, he published a Vindication, and the whole particulars of his Examination, quhich is still extant in Fox's Martyrology." I have set down above all I find in Fox relative to him; and the Dtr. appears to me, without consulting of Fox, to have asserted that his published vindication is there, and I must receive this among his many mis-citations he gives us.

Before I leave Mr Seaton's persecution at London, let me add a passage I find as to Huntington and him in Strype's Memoirs, vol. 3. "About this time (1540) John Huntington, a zealous preist and poet, compiled a poem intituled The Genealogy of Hereticks, mentioning only the names of such godly men as had been no freinds to the Pope, and no other hereticks wer touched at; as if there wer no hereticks but such as opposed the Pope. By this Huntington and two other preists, was one Seaton, a Scots freir, and an excellent preacher, in London, detected and informed against: but Huntington was afterward converted to the same doctrine himself, notwithstanding of these his present oppositions."
Mr Seaton did not live long after this prosecution; and continued till his death in the Duke of Suffolk's family: and probably the interest of that great man preserved him from greater crueltys, designed against him by Bonner. Dtr.
McKenzie fixes his death in the year 1542. His character may be gathered from what is above. By his Letter, and the notes gathered from his sermons, he apppears to have been a learned, solid, zealous person. Mr Stryp and others term him an excellent preacher. Mr Calderwood, from Mr Davidson's scrolls, sayes he was of a quick ingyne, and of a tall stature.

I have not seen any of his works, but Dempster sayes—"Scripsit Processus Sue Examinationis. In utramque Epistolam Petri. In Canonicam Jacobi. Conciones. So, besides his Examination, or Vindication, according to this author, he wrote a Commentary on both the Epistles of Peter, on that of James, and a volume of Sermons. Mr Chartres, in his account of our Scots divines, sayes—
"Alexander Seaton, a Dominican Monk, fled out of Scotland, 1527, being suspected of heresy. He wrote a Commentary In utramque Epistolam Petri. In Canonicam Jacobi. In Astorvm, Cap. 18. Processus Sue Examimationis. Sermones ad utramque Statum." He seems to have copied this out of Gesner's Bibliotheca, who adds, Vixit Anno Domini 1541, and calls him natione Scotus, et theologus insignis.
