THAT this book is an attempt, only an attempt, with many deficiencies, the writer of it is well aware. The would-be severest critic could not criticise it more severely than he. But a pioneer may surely at all times claim a certain measure of grace and indulgence. And if the critic find here anything that is truly useful at all, he is courteously entreated to lend his much-needed aid to make the book better, instead of picking out the many shortcomings which a first attempt in this philological field cannot but display. The book has been long a-gathering, and has been compiled in the mere shreds and fragments of time which could be spared from the conscientious discharge of exceptionally heavy ministerial work. It has been composed away from all large libraries, to which the writer was only able to make occasional reference; and both in the writing and in the passing through the press—though he has done his best—he has been subject to incessant interruption. But nobody else had hitherto attempted a task, whose accomplishment not a few seemed to desire; hence this book.

Some may be disappointed with the large use of conjecture. The words 'perhaps' and 'probably' may occur oftener than they would like. But, from the nature of the case, this was unavoidable. And indeed all science is daily being advanced by the hypotheses of trained workers. The writer has endeavoured to keep all his conjectures within the bounds of scientific sobriety.

It must not be expected that so satisfactory a guide to the Place-Names of Scotland can ever be produced as the public already has for the names of England and Ireland, and for this simple reason, that the materials to form its foundation, to a large extent, no longer exist. This is sufficiently explained in the body of the work. As will soon be seen, the majority of the names dealt with are Celtic, and the writer would at once frankly confess that he has only an amateur's knowledge of Gaelic; but he has tried what he could, with the aid of dictionary and grammar, and also with the kind aid, to some extent, of a few Gaelic friends. The dictionary used is M'Leod and Dewar's, to whose standard the Gaelic spelling is usually conformed. But a scholarly Gaelic dictionary, such as a philologist would like to be able to consult, is still sadly to seek.

The book owes much to the work of others. Special mention must be made of the valuable contribution of the writer's only real predecessor, Sir Herbert Maxwell, in his Studies in the Topography of Galloway, 1885, of which considerable use has been made, and for which most grateful thanks are now tendered to the author. The historical substratum has, of course, been taken chiefly from Dr W. F. Skene's classic history of Celtic Scotland, 3 vols., edition 1886. Would that the learned historian had condescended to explain some more of those difficult early names, about which he has given us a few most useful hints. The writer has to express his personal indebtedness to Dr Skene for more than one communication with which he has been favoured. For things Celtic and things Norse, too, this book owes not a little both to the published writings and to private letters of the Edinburgh Professor of Celtic, Professor M'Kinnon. His article Gaelic, in the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia, has been very helpful; but, above all, his scholarly series of letters on the Place-Names of Argyle, which unfortunately lie buried in the ephemeral columns of the Scotsman, October 1887 to January 1888. These letters are the most competent contribution to the subject which have yet appeared. To a much smaller extent the writer is under obligation to various publications of Professor Rhys, by whom he has been favoured with at least occasional private help. Hearty acknowledgment is, furthermore, due to the ready assistance of Dr J. A. H. Murray, the laborious editor of the great New English Dictionary, who can always spare ten minutes to help a friend; and through the writer's connection with the great Oxford dictionary he has more than once been privileged to draw upon its unpublished as well as published stores. Topographical books and articles innumerable have been ransacked. Special mention needs to be made of the interesting first chapter of Professor Veitch's History and Poetry of the Scottish Border, 1878, and Bishop Forbes' Kalendars of Scottish Saints. For more reasons than one no material has been borrowed from Isaac Taylor's well-known Words and Places. But both series of Dr P. W. Joyce's most scholarly and most entertaining Irish Names and Places have been freely used.

A few things hitherto unpublished will be found in the Introduction; but the chief contribution to knowledge will be found in the Alphabetical List of Names which follows, of which by far the most is original. No such collection of early name-forms (on which all scientific study must be based) has ever appeared hitherto. Many have been taken from various books, but most of them have been laboriously picked out by the writer from the valuable, but, as a rule, by no means easy to consult, publications of the Bannatyne and Spalding Clubs. The early charters have, to some extent, been systematised in Cosmo Innes' great but unfinished Origines Parochiales, 1851-55, which have been our chief quarry. Volume I. contains the parishes in Dumbarton, Renfrew, Lanark, Peebles, Selkirk, Roxburgh; Volume II. Part I., Argyle, all the Western Isles, Lochaber, Bute, and Arran; Part II., Ross and Cromarty, Sutherland, Caithness. The name-forms have each been dated as accurately as possible; but detailed references have very rarely been given, as this would have added very greatly to the bulk and labour of the work, with but little corresponding advantage.

No attempt has been made to make the List exhaustive. Its size might with ease be trebled; and F. H. Groome's excellent Ordnance Gazetteer of Scotland, 1885, contains many more names than are to be found here. Nevertheless the writer ventures to hope that he has omitted few names known beyond a ten-mile radius, and few names likely to interest the ordinary traveller by road, rail, or sea. Comparisons with places in England are chiefly based on the Postal Guide (July 1890), whose list is the most complete with which the writer is acquainted. Of course it is impossible for one man to know every site even in little Scotland; and thus some few of the explanations conjectured may turn out inapplicable. But it is hoped that the critic will believe that, in several cases, this is not due to lack of effort, but to the fact that a reply post-card addressed to the writer is still lying unused in some spot not far away from the site in question. Valuable hints for the compilation of this list have been received from many friends. Specially deserving of mention are the Rev. J. McLean, Pitilie, Aberfeldy; Mr A. J. Stewart, Schoolhouse, Moneydie, Perth; Dr Joass, Golspie; Dr Laing, Newburgh; Dr Joseph Anderson; Rev. John S. Mackay, Fort Augustus, and probably others. To all those mentioned in this Preface the writer would again express his grateful indebtedness, but he would have it distinctly understood that for all errors and shortcomings he alone is responsible.

Last, but by no means least, he must very warmly thank his publisher for not a few additions and much help most liberally rendered while the sheets were passing through the press. This only he would add, that all communications, corrections, and additions will be gladly welcomed by the reader's fellow-student,

JAMES B. JOHNSTON.

PLACE-NAMES OF SCOTLAND.

INTRODUCTION.

EVERY science has its byways as well as its highways. It is along an interesting byway that this book invites the student to walk. The study of place-names may be said to stand to History and Ethnology in somewhat the same relation as the study of fossils stands to Geology. Each group or set of fossils represents, with more or less strictness, a distinct age of geologic time; so, roughly speaking, does each group of place-names represent a period of historic or prehistoric time. All the place-names worth studying are fossils; no man now living was present at their birth. Sometimes the geologist who wishes to map out his territory finds his task the simplest possible; e.g., for hundreds of monotonous miles over the steppes of Russia he finds the same strata, the same soft Permian sandstones, lying horizontal and unaltered as on the day, or rather age, when first they hardened on the old sea-bottom. At other times, though he may have only fifty, or even twenty, square miles to map out, the geologist finds his task one of extreme difficulty and complexity. Half a dozen different systems crop up in that little space, and igneous rocks rise here and there among the aqueous, crumpling, distorting, and altering all things around; such a region is the Isle of Arran, or the English counties along the Welsh border. Again, the eager fossil-hunter is sometimes delighted on splitting open a nodule, or in cleaving the thin laminæ of the shale, to discover an exquisitely symmetrical ammonite, or a yet more delicate fern, in shape as perfect as the day it died. But, just as often, the only specimens he can find are fragments crushed and broken, which require the highly-trained eye of the expert to tell what once they were.

Now, if the devotee of such a physical science as geology will but lay aside his hammer and his pocket-microscope for a little while, he will find somewhat similar problems to study when he grapples with (Scottish) place-names. Sometimes his task will be all plain sailing, if only he have learnt the rudiments of the craft; e.g., for miles and miles in the central Highlands he will find himself in a purely Gaelic region, where all the names are as unmistakably Gaelic as they were on the far-off, unknown day when they were born. In sound and shape these names are as they have ever been since history began. But in other districts, more especially in those where English has long been spoken, the old names have often come down to us in much-corrupted and truncated forms, sometimes in a ludicrously-altered form, which it requires the greatest skill and care and patience to decipher—if, indeed, the name can now be deciphered at all.

The subject which is here to be treated, the Place-Names of Scotland, is one which has never yet been grappled with as a whole; and even when we have done our best it will be found that there is much, and that the most difficult part of the work, yet to be done. Too many of those who have tried their 'prentice hands at the task have proceeded in the most reckless fashion, in giving way to unscientific guess-work which, like the obstructive undergrowths in the virgin forest, must first be cleared away before we can begin to make our road at all. But much foundation work, much pioneering, has already been done, and done well. And now, thanks to the labours of Skene, and Rhys, and Joyce, and many true men more, it should be impossible that, e.g., Poma Dei should ever again be put forward as the likely etymology of that place which Glasgow railwaymen know so well—Polmadie.¹ Nor do we think that any grown-up person will ever believe any more that the name of Dr Chalmers' well-known first charge, Kilmeny, can have any reference to a command to slaughter a multitude!

Our treatment of the subject will be historic, proceeding strictly in order of time. The first chapter will refer to all we know of the aborigines of Britain—call them Iberians, Ivernians, Silurians, or what you please—and then will rapidly discuss the largest and most complicated portion of our task—the Celtic names. Then purely English or Anglo-Saxon, Scandinavian, and Norman names will each receive a chapter; and with the Norman we will treat the Roman names, a group too insignificant to call for separate handling. Purely modern names will be dealt with last of all; and, as ecclesiastical names form so large and important a group, they will receive a chapter to themselves. The study will be no mere dilettante trifling. The historian, the philologist, the antiquarian, the anthropologist will, each and all, find for themselves side-lights both helpful and interesting; and Dr Murray's great English Dictionary will sometimes be supplemented by earlier instances of words than any which its learned columns now record—see List, s.v. BEN, CARSE, MOREBATTLE, &c.

What further seems needful to be said in introduction, by way of rule, caution, or useful hint, we shall now throw into a series of numbered paragraphs:—

(1) It will be found in Scotland,¹ as in any other country, that the oldest place-names, the names which, like the hard granite, best resist weathering, are those of large rivers, mountains, and promontories, and of all islands. The names of rivers and islands especially are, as a rule, root-words, and therefore archaic, and difficult to explain. In a few cases we cannot explain them at all, because we know practically nothing of the ancient language to which they probably belong. The names of man's dwellings change pretty often; but the name of a big ben or a steady-flowing river has hardly ever been known to change.

(2) Every place-name means something, or at least once meant something. Only in this degenerate 19th century have men begun to coin silly, meaningless names. Only within late years could a Dickens or a Thackeray have had the chance of satirising his neighbour for calling No. 153 in a dingy back street, full 20 feet above the level of the sea, Mount Pleasant, or for christening an ugly brick house, in full sight of a gaswork, Belle Vue. But Brother Jonathan does even worse. In the newly-erected State of Washington some of the county names are—Snohomish, Klickitat,

Yakima, Wakkikum, Chehalis. These monstrosities are not the vocables of the fast-dying Red Indian. They were made by the simple process of shaking the letters of the alphabet in a sack, and then emptying them out, by instalments, on the floor!

(3) It may be taken as a general rule that every name was once fairly appropriate. Therefore try, if possible, to study names, as every honest student studies his quotations, in situ, on the spot. But one must not always expect to find the name appropriate to-day. The cause or circumstance which gave rise to the name may have utterly passed away. What was 'Kingsbarns' once need not be so now. Or the physical aspect of the site may have become entirely altered; e.g., many think that CALTON¹ means 'bald, bare hill,' G. calbh dùn, which may well be; and the 'bald hill' is still to be seen plain enough in Edinburgh; but little trace of it can be found among the wynds and courts which now cover 'the Calton' in Glasgow.

(4) Though every name has a real meaning, never prophesy unless you know. It is quite likely that a name does not mean what it says, or seems to say; and a name which looks like English pure and simple may possibly not be English at all. Abundant illustration of this will be found further on. Meantime, take one illustration. There is a spot in the Stewartry in the parish of New Abbey which at present goes by the sadly vulgar and thoroughly English-looking name of SHAMBELLY. On examination this turns out to be pure Gaelic, sean baile (shanbally), which has the very innocent meaning of 'old house' or 'hamlet.'²

² See Sir Herbert Maxwell's Studies in the Topography of Galloway, 1887 p. 283.

(5) It is thus of the highest consequence, wherever possible, to secure not only an old but the very oldest extant form or spelling of a name. For, though a name may be spelt so-and-so to-day, it by no means follows that it was always spelt thus. And frequently it is only when one sees the old form that any idea of the name's true meaning can be reached. This also will find copious illustration as we proceed. For the present, take just one instructive instance from the writer's own experience. YESTER, the name of a parish at the foot of the Lammermuirs, was long a puzzle. The writer communicated with the courteous Professor of Celtic in Edinburgh University, giving a somewhat foolish conjecture, which need not be repeated. The conjecture Professor M'Kinnon repudiated, but said he could throw no light upon the name. Then his confrère at Oxford, Professor Rhys, was applied to, with the suggestion that Yester might be the same name as the hill Yes Tor in Dartmoor, and was asked for the latter's meaning. We then learnt that Yes is a Cornish superlative, and Yes Tor means 'highest hill;' but Professor Rhys would not venture to identify it with Yester, and declared himself puzzled. But one day we discovered that the oldest charters call the place Ystrad, and the meaning appeared with a flash. For this is just the ordinary Welsh word for 'a valley.' Thus were we supplied with a plain warning against rash guesses, and at the same time found a clear footstep of the Brython among the Lammermuirs. The joy of the palæontologist when he cracks open a limestone nodule and finds therein a magnificent Productus, every curve and line of the shell perfect, is hardly greater than the satisfaction of the historical philologist when he first discovers that a puzzling and prosaic name like CARSTAIRS originally was 'Casteltarres' (sic, c. 1170), Terras being a familiar Scotch surname to this day. Even yet all will not be well unless the student also knows that the oldest usage of the word 'castle' in English was as a translation of the Vulgate's castellum, where castellum means always, not a fortress but a village. Thus Carstairs, if dressed in Saxon garb, would be Tarreston, in Norman garb, Tarresville. It may be taken as a rough rule, with many exceptions, that if we can find a name on record before the year 1200, we have a fair chance of correctly surmising its meaning; whereas if no record of it be found till after 1500, that record may be of small scientific value.

(6) If it be highly desirable to ascertain the old spelling of a name, it is almost equally desirable that we should know its local, native pronunciation. Celtic scholars are so thoroughly agreed as to the need for this, if Celtic names are to be rightly interpreted, that we hardly need to emphasize the rule—wherever you can get a native Gael to pronounce a name listen carefully to him. Such a proceeding will save many a time from writing or talking nonsense. But the rule holds good, to a less extent, about all Scotch place-names, and about Celtic names even when the pronouncer himself no longer speaks Gaelic. The writer does not need to go far from his own Lowland door to find very pertinent examples of this. If the reader will consult the List of this book he will find that, in the case of two of our local Celtic and two of our local English names, the present native pronunciation comes much nearer the true etymology than the present spelling. The four names are the Celtic CAMELON (kámilon) and POLMONT (pómon), and the English FALKIRK (fawkírk) and SHIELDHILL (sheelhill). The liquids

l, m, r always need special watching; and, when the whole truth is known, it will be seen that the Celt makes far sadder havoc with his ls than the Cockney (see p. xxxv).

(7) It should not be thought that a given name must of necessity be all Celtic, all English, or all Norse. Hybrid names occur by the score, e.g., the Celtic and English CAMBUSLANG, the English and Celtic NEWTON-MORE, the Celtic and Norse GARRABOST, &c. Nor must it be supposed that the names in any given district ought all to belong to one language—all Gaelic in the Highlands and all English in the Lowlands. This is far from being the case; though it is true that some districts are nearly unmixed in this respect, e.g., Orkney and Shetland names are practically all Norse; the mainland of Argyle names practically all Celtic, pure Gaelic too, with no Brythonic or Welsh admixture; whilst in Berwickshire there is scarcely a name left which is not English.

When all these seven caveats have been surely learnt and gripped, then, and only then, is the amateur investigator fit to advance a single step in safety.

CHAPTER I.

CELTIC NAMES.

IT is impossible to speak with strict accuracy on the point, but Celtic names in Scotland must outnumber all the rest by nearly ten to one. And their importance may be measured well by the one fact that, up to so late a date as the death of Malcolm II. in 1056, all Scotland was purely Celtic. Wide and difficult though the Celtic problem still is, answers can be found far more surely and accurately than was at all possible fifty years ago. Here, as in every other field, the last half-century has seen science advancing with swift, sure foot. Fifty years ago the subject of Celtic place-names spread out like a vast morass with a little solid footing round the edges alone—a vast morass, with no thoroughfares and no beacons, and with many a Will o' the Wisp dancing deceitfully about, to lead the luckless follower to confusion. Some solid footing there has always been; e.g., nobody who knew Gaelic at all would ever be at a loss to say that Achnacloich meant 'field of the stone.' But whenever any name a little less simple than this was met with, or when men began to argue, Was this stone a Druid relic, or a mere boundary mark? Is cloich a true Gaelic, or a Pictish, or a Brythonic (Welsh) form?—

then at once arose a hopelessly bewildering Babel of tongues. But now the morass has been largely drained, and everywhere good footpaths run.

During the early part of our century all was wildest conjecture as to Britain's aborigines, and most of what had then been written was purest nonsense. Almost everybody was satisfied that our aborigines were Aryans¹ and Celts, and that in Scotland the eldest race was most likely the Picts. Learned old Pinkerton laboured hard with the names (many probably spurious) of the Pictish kings, to prove the Picts Gothic, while industrious Dr Jamieson plied a lusty cudgel in favour of a Teutonic origin. Mais nous avons changé tout cela. That new science called Anthropology, born c. 1862, but now in a vigorous youth, has supplanted the shifty, precarious methods of mere root-guessing. Those who say they know now tell us, that what survives longest of a race is its type of skull and face, next longest its place-names; whilst that which most readily changes is its language. Anthropology has proved beyond question that the primeval inhabitants of our isles, down to the very close of the Stone Age, were those non-Aryan cave-dwellers of dark complexion, black hair, long skull, and short, feeble build, whose remains are found in the long barrows, a people typically represented by the tribe Silures, whom Julius Cæsar describes to us as dwelling on what is now the Welsh border. Their marks may still be recognised by the skilled observer almost all over Scotland from Galloway northwards, and very specially in such a Hebridean isle as Barra. Curious to relate, if we want to find the one living race which is a tolerably pure representative of these

'Iberians'¹ of old, both in build and speech, we must journey to the south shore of the Bay of Biscay and see the Spanish Basques, the folk whose uncouth speech, 'tis said, the Devil gave up learning in despair. In sooth, the Basque tongue is but a poor specimen at the best.

Naturally these old 'Iberians' would give a name to every prominent physical feature in the land; but what these names were we can hardly in any instance tell. Their tongue is dead, drowned by the many later comers in almost utter forgottenness. Written monuments of any kind the British 'Iberian' has none. However, Professor M'Kinnon thinks a pre-Celtic element may still be dimly recognised in the modern Gael's vocabulary; and there are a very few Scottish place-names which may with some confidence be identified with Basque roots, e.g., URR, name of the river which runs by Dalbeattie, which is almost certainly the Basque ur, 'water,' and ISLA, a river in Forfar and Banff, il- being very common in Basque place-names. Besides these, Sir Herbert Maxwell offers to us a handful of Galloway names of which he can make nothing, and which he thinks may be Iberian. This is only conjecture; and, to take just one of the names he mentions, Cutcloy may quite possibly be Celtic for 'hut of stone'—cf. W. cut, 'a cot,' and G. cluch, cloich, 'a stone.' Professor Rhys has done his best to discover for us some more of our aboriginal, or 'Ivernian' names, as he prefers to call them. His method (Rhind Lectures, 1890, No. 3) is, if he can find Scottish names not readily explainable from Gaelic, which resemble the names of some princesses, heroes, or divinities, mentioned in the earliest Welsh and Irish legends, then he conjectures that these Scottish place-names must be pre-Celtic, because all three countries have them in common. Such a method is precarious, and in no given case has he reached demonstration. See List, s.v. ATHOLE, BANFF, CLYDE, DUNFERMLINE, EARN, ELGIN.

After these dim aborigines came the Celts, most westerly band of the Aryans. Till about ten years ago it was considered a settled commonplace of philology that the Aryan's home was somewhere in Western Asia, among the sources of the Oxus, to the north of Persia. Here, again, all is changed. Max Müller almost alone remains by the old flag; and now the suggestion, perhaps first made to Europe by our own Dr Latham, and developed by the acute erudition of Schrader, Penka, and others, has been almost universally adopted,¹ viz., that the Aryan's cradle and nursery must have been among the wide, swampy plains of Central Germany. The skull-men, with their measuring tapes, have fairly routed the men who clave to the dictionary alone. Among the first of the many wandering sons to leave the old Aryan home was the Celt, who went West with the sun, filling what is now France and Belgium, and the lands fringing thereon. It is thought he must first have entered Britain by way of Essex and Kent; when, we cannot say in years B.C., but it was at the end of the great Neolithic Age, for he brought bronze tools and weapons with him. What we have here to say about the Celt can lay no claim to original research; and now that reliable information is so easily obtained, e.g., take Professor M'Kinnon on Gaelic and Professor Rhys on Celts in the admirable new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia, we need say but little. However, a few remarks are absolutely necessary for the intelligent appreciation of our subject. 'Tis pleasant to be able to state that, after long dispute, the main facts about the Celtic race and languages in Britain are now practically agreed on by all scholars. And though there must be a good deal of conjecture still—we cannot help it—yet whatever is said about Scottish Celtic place-names by Drs Skene and Reeves, or Professor M'Kinnon, may be accepted as in all probability correct; moreover, though Joyce deals with Irish names only, he gives us much sure and valuable guiding.

It is likely the first disturbers of the swarthy 'Iberian' were the Goidels, then, after a time, the stronger Brythons. The physical characteristics of the 'Iberian' and the newer race are somewhat difficult to distinguish; but we all think we know the Celt when we see him—a big-boned, short-skulled man of fair complexion, with red or tawny yellow hair, strong, often somewhat fierce in look. The Goidels, or better Gadhels—Gadhel is just Gael, dh being quiescent—and the Brythons—same root, indeed same word, as Briton—these are the names by which the two great branches of the Celtic race in Britain are now commonly known. It is only in popular parlance that 'Gaelic' is confined to the tongue of the Scottish Celt. The Gadhelic race comprehends the Irishman, the Manxman, and even the Cornishman. Perhaps we should explain, however, that, like good patriots, the Scottish Dr Skene calls the Cornish Gadhels, while Welsh Professor Rhys tends to class them with the Brythons. From the few inscriptions which have come down to us, and from the many proper names recorded by Cæsar, it is now considered certain that the most of the ancient Gauls spake a Brythonic speech, practically identical with Welsh; points of contact with Gadhelic tongues are harder to find, but they do exist too. In both Gaul and Britain Brython was stronger than Gael, and largely supplanted him all over England and Wales, and southern Scotland too, leaving to the Gael only Ireland and Man, and remoter Scotland.

Thus, when we come to examine the Celtic place-names of Scotland, we must expect to find two types or groups of names. Yet the stronger Brython has made but little permanent mark among us, and the names indisputably his are few; north of the Grampians, almost none. The Gael and the later-inflowing Saxon very nearly killed him out. The Gael or Gadhel again includes, in Scotland, both an invader and an invaded. Before the Brython entered the whole land seems to have been peopled by the wild, woad-stained Caledonians, those Picti, 'painted men,' of whom so many early historians have to tell. The name first occurs in Ammianus Marcellinus, c. 378 A.D. Our earliest native writers, Gildas, c. 550, and Nennius, of the 7th century, thought them a foreign people, who first landed in Orkney. Until the beginning of the 6th century the northern two-thirds of Scotland was all Pictish, there being both a northern and a southern kingdom of the Picts. The boundary between the two was the massive backbone of the Grampians and that ridge which is now the eastern frontier of Argyle, Drumalban, 'ridge, backbone of Alban,' the Celt's name for Scotland. The Niduari who occupied Galloway were Picts too. In the year 498 the true Scots,¹ the men of Ulster, came over in their wicker boats, conquered all Argyle and the

Isles, south of Ardnamurchan, founded the kingdom of Dalriad Scots, and imposed their speech there too. Even as the Jute and Angle, whose prows were fast turning towards England at this same time, imposed their speech on all England, and have left very few Brython names in any thoroughly English shire, so those Scoto-Irish, in course of time, imposed their tongue on all Scottish Celts, and largely, though not so universally, stamped their impress on the nomenclature too. But from the first the difference between Erse and Pictish must have been small. Were there no other evidence, the names in the Pictish region of the mountains, lochs, and rivers, names which so rarely change, would amply prove this.

A run through Joyce's Irish Names and Places will soon convince any Scotsman that his names and the Irishman's are largely alike; e.g., all the Bals- or Ballys-, all the Carricks-, so common in those parts of Scotland nearest Ireland, as Carrickaboys, Carrickcow, Carrickglassen, &c., and all the Kils- and Knocks-, of which there are scores in either land. The Pict had his own distinctive marks, it is true. In the Postal Guide list for Wales and for Ireland there is not a single Fetter-, For-, or Pit-, all sure sign-manuals of the Pict. But to argue, like Professor Rhys, from the pronunciation in Aberdeenshire (once Pictish) of f for w, fat for what, &c., and on almost no other evidence, that Pictish was not an Aryan speech at all, is surely precarious indeed.¹ But this branch of our subject can never be thoroughly expiscated, owing to almost total lack of material. Scottish education practically began, and almost wholly spread, through the Donegalman Columba and his far-travelling monks, of whom the earliest were all Irish-bred; and down to the middle of the 16th century all Gaelic put into writing in Scotland was practically identical with Erse. The Book of the Dean of Lismore, which dates so late as 1512-40, is the first known MS. of any consequence in Scottish Gaelic.

To draw the dividing line between names Brythonic and names Gadhelic is a more needful matter. Here is a problem, interesting but delicate, which has caused, and perhaps still causes, not a little debate. Here two of our greatest living authorities are not yet quite agreed. Professor Rhys of Oxford has elaborated his theory about the Picts being non-Aryans in his recent Rhind Lectures. In his former work on Celtic Britain, he was inclined to think the Picts Brythons, but said that some of them in Lothian may possibly not have been Celts at all, quoting in support of this such unCeltic names as Inchkeith, Pencaitland, &c. But Dr Skene's verdict is generally held the true one. In his early work, The Highlanders of Scotland (1837), he tells us Pictish was 'a sort of low Gaelic dialect partaking largely of Welsh forms.' But when we quote another sentence from his mature work, Celtic Scotland, i. 225, edit. 1886, 'The generic terms do not show the existence of a Cymric [Welsh] language in the districts occupied by the Picts,' it will be seen that for Welsh in the earlier sentence he would now write British. In Celtic Scotland (i. 211) Dr Skene examines the list of Pictish kings handed down to us, and shows that the earlier part is made up of purely Irish or Gaelic names, all belonging to the Northern Picts, but that the later part shows more connection with the Southern kingdom, and more largely partakes of British, especially Cornish, forms. The southern kingdom stretched over Perthshire south to the Forth. This was the region inhabited by the tribe whom the Romans called Damnonii, probably the same men as the Damnonii of Cornwall. And probably this same Pictish race, in Ireland called Cruithnigh (descendants of Cruithne), the Firbolg of Ireland's legendary history, once occupied all Ulster.

So much for the region north of the Forth. The student will find it worth while to try and understand how things lay in the south too. To begin with, in the far south-west, or Galloway, as in neighbouring Ulster, there were Picts, the Romans calling the tribe here Niduari (see NITH). Then all Dumfries, Berwick, and most of Roxburgh and Haddington were early tenanted by the same great tribe which peopled most of Northern England, the Brigantes, a Brythonic or Cymric race. For, of course, all the old kingdom of Cumbria or Strathclyde, stretching from Clyde to Ribble, was Brythonic. Even after the northern part of this kingdom was incorporated with Scotland, c. 950, we find the people called in 12th-century charters, 'Strathelwyd Wealas' or 'Walenses,' i.e., Welsh or foreigners. But from the testimony of charters also of David I.'s reign (1124-53) we learn that by his time the spoken Cymric must have practically disappeared from Strathclyde. Even by the days of Kenneth M'Alpine, first king of the Scots, c. 850, the Brythons of Scotland had been overrun and largely eclipsed by the Gaels. Next, the Damnonii once spread from Tweeddale away through Lanark to Ayr, Renfrew, and Dumbarton, and south to the Lowther Hills, and north, as we have seen, to the Tay, perhaps a little further. In Tweeddale, probably in West Lothian too, the tribe went by name of Gadeni. Here the place-names have a strong Cornish cast, whilst both Gaelic and Pictish forms are scanty. The typical Gaelic auchen-, bal-, craigen-, and mach-, and the Pictish auchter-, for-, and pit-, are here few and far between.¹ Wherever we find the letter f and the familiar auchter- and pit-, there the Gael or Piet must have been. They are never found in Wales. But, wherever we meet the letter p, there probably the Brython pitched his camp.² That letter seldom occurs in true Gaelic; it is chiefly found in a few imported words like pibroch, from piobair, which is just our English 'piper.' At a very early stage p vanished from true Gaelic; witness that word which must be one of the oldest in every tongue, athair, the L. pater, Eng. father; also ore, a pig or sea-pig, i.e., whale, the L. porcus, found in ORKNEY, which is, curiously enough, perhaps the earliest Scottish name on record. Strabo (bk. ii.), who preserves for us the narrative of the great voyager Pytheas, c. 330 B.C., gives it in the form 'Opkas; even then the p was gone. A modern Gael, even when he sees p printed before him, will often read it b—iompachadh (conversion) he will pronounce imbacha, &c.; thus, too, he will make poll, a pool, into bol, as in BOLESKIN, &c. But, curiously enough, in some quarters the reverse process is found, and that even where Brythonic influence is hardly possible, e.g., in the Hebrides the Norse bol not seldom becomes pol, see p. lxxv; BONSKIED, Pitlochry, is pronounced by some natives Pownskitch; a. 1300 we find 'Palgoueny' as the spelling of BALGONIE; and c. 1320, Prenbowgal for BARNBOGLE.

As p is not found in pure Gaelic, all the pens or pins must be Brythonic, the Gaelic being ben. There are only two pens north of Stirling—PENDRICH, just beyond the Forth, and PENNAN, near Fraserburgh; but the latter's origin is unknown. A common prefix, never found in pure Gaelic or in Irish, is pit-, pitte-, petti-, first met with in the Pictish Gaelic entries of the Book of Deer; e.g., 'pette mac Garnait,' homestead of Garnait's son, &c. Neither Brython nor Gael ever use pit-; e.g., Gaels call PITLOCHRY Bailechlochre, and this is the general rule, the G. baile, 'house, hamlet,' being the equivalent of the Pictish pit-. But names in tru- or tre- are pure Brythonic; for this is the W. tref, Cornish, tre, also Ir. treb, house, home.

A fierce battle has been waged over the question, 'Is the common prefix aber-, "at the mouth" or "confluence of," a purely Brythonic form or no?' Welshmen have always been eager to assert that, 'aber- is Welsh, pure and simple, the Gael always uses inver-.' The ber or ver is the same root in both, the scholastic spellings being abhir and inbhir, and this bhir is evidently cognate with the Eng. bear, L. ferre, Gk. φερρειν. The oldest extant spelling is abbor (see ABERDOUR); but in old charters we often find the Brythonic p for b (see ABERARGIE, ABERDEEN, &c.). The a in aber- is thought to be ath, pron. āh, a ford; for aber- is sometimes found in a name where there is no river-junction or mouth, but where there is or was a ford, e.g., ABERNETHY, near Perth, and ARBIRLOT, the old Aberelloch. Down the river Nethy from Abernethy we find Invernethy, where Nethy and Earn actually meet. This much is certain about aber- and inver-, that in Wales there are scores of abers-, but of invers- not a solitary one. But if aber- be a sure sign of the Brython, which is not quite certain, we may from it alone gain a pretty fair idea how far he ever spread himself in Scotland. He must have travelled all along the east coast from St Abb's to Inverness—witness Aberlady, Aberdour (Fife), Abernyte, Aberdeen, and Aberdour (Aberdeen). He must also have travelled inland from the east coast in every direction for a considerable distance; see Aberfoyle, Aberfeldy, Abergeldie (Braemar), Aberchirder (Banff); and as far west as Aberchalder on the Caledonian Canal. But on the west coast, and north of Inverness, aber- barely exists. There is none in Argyle, land of the Dalriad Scots; none in Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Stirling, Dumbarton, Renfrew, Ayr, land of the Damnonii; none in Galloway, land of the Piets; and none in Cornwall, which is Damnonian too. Speaking generally, if aber- is to be our clue, the Brython hardly touched the land of the northern Piets at all. Then, in Aberdeen, Kincardine, Forfar, Perth, and Fife, land of the southern Piets, there are said to be seventy-eight invers- and only twenty-four abers-, which proportion probably indicates that here the Brythons were the later comers, because no place-names readily change. In Forfar the abhir gets hardened into ar, as in ARBROATH, the famous old Aberbrothick, and ARBUTHNOT, at first spelt Abirbuthenoth; just as fothir, later fetter, becomes in this region hardened into for. Thus we have FETTERANGUS and FETTERNEAR in Aberdeen, but FORDOUN and FORTEVIOT, the old Fothuirtabaicht, further south. Dr Skene would like to lay it down, as a rule, that ar and for belong to the southern, aber and fetter to the northern part of this north-east corner of Scotland, making the Mounth or Grampians the boundary. But this rule has many exceptions; e.g., FORGLEN and FORDYCE stand north of the line, and FETTERCAIRN and FETTERESSO south of it. But, to return from this digression, and to complete the discussion of aber-, it may be remarked that, on the whole west coast, the solitary instance is one which would not easily be guessed under its cheating mask, viz., APPLECROSS in West Ross, which is a modification of Abererosan or ‘Apurcrossan,’ the Crosan being a little burn there. The initial a does, very rarely, get rubbed off, and BERVIE may be, though certainly BERWICK is not, a case in point.

To sum up then—in the study of the Celtic names the aid of the Welsh dictionary will occasionally be required for the district south of the Grampians, particularly Tweeddale; but by far the largest number of our place-names are to be interpreted from the dictionary, and by the laws, especially the pronouncing laws, of Scottish Gaelic. True, more names may have had a Brythonic origin than at first sight appear; for Zeuss in his great Grammatica Celtica (1853) gives it as his opinion, that the divergence between Gaelic, in its broadest sense, and Welsh began only a few centuries B.C., and in the days of Julius Caesar must have been very small.

By far the best known form of Gaelic is Irish; and Scottish Gaelic is as much a variety or dialect of Irish as Broad Scots is of Anglie or Old English—being nearer Connaught Irish than any other. Perhaps the most distinctive note of the Scottish tongue is, that the primary accent is always on the first syllable. In some grammatic peculiarities Scottish Gaelic is more like Manx than Irish, which means, in other words, that Gaelic and Manx have ceased to develop at a further or later stage of disintegration than Irish; and to this day a Manxman can understand a Gael better than a man from Erin’s isle.

Already have we heard that scores of Scottish names are identical with names in Ireland. But let it be clearly understood that, more than this, the assistance in our study to be gained from names in Ireland is immense, assistance splendidly systematised and clarified for us by Dr Joyce in his two handy volumes. The aid from Ireland is all the more precious to the scientific student, because we possess copious remains of early Irish literature, annals, historic poems, and the like, which give us the early forms of many of the Irish names. Abbot Tighernac, c. 1080, and the Annals of Ulster have quite a number of Scottish names too; and sometimes we get forms as old as the 5th or 6th century A.D. From these early, uncorrupted forms scholars can usually tell with certainty the meanings of the names. Irish names are much easier to interpret because they have never, to the same extent, been so mangled and corrupted as in Scotland, either by Dane or Englishman. Again, the Scottish student is not nearly so fortunate as his Irish neighbour, because early Gaelic literature is sadly wanting. Not that early Scotsmen could not handle a pen, and handle it well; but their writings have not been allowed to survive. For this we have to thank the kindly attentions of our invaders; not so much the armies of England's two Edwards', though they did their share but rather the rough hands of pagan Vikings from Norrway, who hated anything which seemed to smell of the mass, and who consigned hundreds of precious Scottish MSS. to the sea or to the flames. These same rude pirates have made early Celtic MSS. very scarce all over Britain. This country contains only about six MSS. which date before 1000 A.D.; but the Celtic clergy fled from their native cells to the Continent, bearing their books with them; and the libraries of

Central and South-West Europe have now rich store of early Celtic MSS., not less than 200 in all. However, the subjects of these continental MSS. make them to be seldom of much service for place-names. Nor do the many later bundles of Scottish Gaelic MSS. in the Edinburgh Advocates' Library and elsewhere yield us much fruit either. Of annals or topographic works they are said to contain hardly any, though there are rare exceptions, like the Islay charter of 1408.

Of two other precious survivals every student of Scottish history has at least heard:—

(1) The Book of Deer in Aberdeenshire; for the touching origin of the name DEER, or 'tear,' see the List. This manuscript contains the gospel of John, and parts of the three other gospels, in Latin; and then, what is important for us, in the blank spaces of the MS.—parchment was costly in those days—there are written in Scottish (or Pictish) Gaelic, grants of land and privileges to the church of Deer, containing several place-names. The MS. is all written in one hand, which some say is of the 9th century, though others make it as late as the reign of David I., c. 1150.

(2) The Pictish Chronicle of the monks of Brechin, a brief work writ in Latin, but clearly a translation from the Gaelic, and containing a good many examples of place-names, which will all or very nearly all be found embodied in our List. It breaks off at the year 966, and its date cannot be much later. Besides, we have several instructive name-forms in Abbot Adarnan's well-known life of his great predecessor, Columba, of which one MS. dates from 710 A.D. Then, from the days of King Alexander I., 'the Fierce,' onwards, we have the copious Abbey Chartularies, whose stores of names of hill and dale, of town and hamlet, have largely been made available by the zeal of the Bannatyne Club. Specially have we to thank the huge industry of Cosmo Innes and Brichtan in the Origines Parochiales, which, alas! cover only half of Scotland (see Preface). The famous Inquisitio de Terris Ecclesie Glasguensis, made by Prince David, afterwards David I., and now printed in the Chartulary of Glasgow, is perhaps the oldest authentic example of such documents. The Chartularies of Glasgow, Paisley, St Andrews, Holyrood, and Melrose are perhaps those most deserving of note. But when, as is often the case, the chartularies have been written by scribes wholly ignorant of Gaelic, their phonetic attempts at the spelling of a place-name often sadly disfigure the real word (see AUCHTERMUCHTY, &c.). Sometimes they get a little more blame than perhaps they really deserve, e.g., we are commonly told that the far-famed name IONA is just a scribe's error for Ioua, the Latinised form of Hy, Hii, as the name is in Bede. Hy, of course, is the English Bede's way of representing the G. aoi (uī), 'isthmus,' Iona being so called because it and its near neighbour, Mull, once joined. But the whole truth seems to be, that the isle's Gaelic name was aoi uain, 'green isthmus;' for both Cuminus, or St Cumman, c. 657, first man to mention the place, and also Columba's second biographer, Adamnan, name it Hyona; cf. the List, s.v.

As an example of what we may find in a charter, and of how little after all place-names change, even in 750 years, take the following list, being all the names mentioned in the charter (in the Paisley Chartulary) granted by King Malcolm IV. to Walter, Stewart or Seneschal of Scotland, in 1158:—'Francis (i.e., Normans) et Anglis, Scotis et Galovidiensibus de terris de Reinfrew, Paisleth, Pullock, Tulloch, Kerkert (i.e., CATHCART), Le Drip, Egilsham, Lochynoc, et Inerwick, Inchenan, Hastenden (i.e., HASSENDEAN), Legerwood, et Birchensyde, Roxburgh, St Andrae, Glasgow, Kelcow, Melross.' Among others, there are the following noteworthy personal names:—'Colvill, Sumervilla, et Macus;' the latter has not yet the appended -vill to make him Maxwell.

The Celt gave names to all Scotland, so we must be prepared to find thousands of Celtic names to study; but, unfortunately for those who wish to make sure of the true pronunciation of a puzzling name, Gaelic is now spoken over less than half its old area. It has been retreating up the glens ever since the days of foreign, Saxon Queen Margaret, and is destined to retreat further still, till finally, at no distant future—cheu fugaces!—it must give up the ghost altogether, even as Cornish has already done. Take the region north of a line drawn from Forres to Campbelton, and throw in the upper valley of the Dee, and there, roughly speaking, is the area in which Gaelic is still a living speech. But Gaelic lived on in most parts of Scotland much longer than is commonly thought. We have the evidence of George Buchanan that it was spoken in Galloway down to the days of Queen Mary. It lingered in Glenapp (south of Ballantrae) a full century later; and it probably continued to be the vernacular of some in Fife till quite 1700. Little wonder then that Galloway and Fife, though now English in speech, are crammed with Celtic names. South of the above-mentioned line we cannot be so sure about the real pronunciation, and consequently, the real meaning of many of the names. But, nota bene, it will not always do to trust local pronunciations and interpretations, even when given by a true Gael. Loch MAREE, so universally and wrongly thought to be 'Mary's Loch,' is a good case in point.

No sure progress can be made until at least something is known of the difficult laws of Gaelic inflection and pronunciation; and, of course, Scottish Gaelic shares its chief difficulties with all the other Celtic tongues. The inflections are sometimes a little difficult, because they largely take place within the word, e.g., nom. eu, 'a dog;' gen., the very different-looking coin, 'of a dog,' earn, 'a cairn,' cuirn, 'of a cairn,' &c. Then it is the rule—and this is of great moment for our study—that whenever certain consonants come between two vowels they aspirate or add an h; these aspirating (and the tyro may well call them also exasperating) letters are b, c, d, f, g, m, s, t; e.g., Adam in Gaelic is Adhamh, and Adamnan, more correctly Adhamnan, is the diminutive, 'little Adam,' 'Adie.' For the extraordinary results produced on the name Adamnan by these aspirations, see p. xcv.

The laws of pronunciation are yet more difficult. Many must heartily re-echo the wish that Gaelic, like Manx, had been written phonetically, according to sound, and not according to what Professor M'Kinnon calls 'the strict and highly artificial rules of the schools.'¹ As things now stand, there is probably no language in the world in which the eye can give less help to the tongue. Of course, there is method in the seeming madness; but, to an untrained eye, the spelling gives almost no clue to the sound, and is usually altogether misleading. Thus, an ordinary Englishman consulting a Gaelic dictionary will find himself altogether at sea. The majority of the numerous diphthongs could, with advantage, be spelt with a single vowel,¹ and the uncouth-looking triphthongs, aoi, iai, iui, are really unneeded. But it is the ‘aspiration’ which causes the chief troubles. When h gets next any letter in the middle or end of a word it has always a tendency to eclipse its neighbour, and to make both it and the h silent altogether. Thus, many of those strange mh’s and dh’s, with which Gaelic is so thickly peppered, have no sound at all; e.g., Amhalghaidh, which looks such a monstrous mouthful, subsides into Oway, so well known to us in the name Macaulay. Hence, too, such pronunciations as Strabungo for STRATHBUNGO, Stracathro for STRATHCATHRO; and, as we have already seen, Gael for Gadhel—here dh is called evanescent. The usual sound of mh and bh is v, as in dambh an ox, hence DAVA, and in dà bharr, ‘two heights,’ or DAVARR. Sometimes it is nearer w, as in Craigwhinnie, the G. creag mhuine, ‘crag of the thicket;’ sometimes the v-sound goes all the way to b, though not in good Gaelic, as STRATHBUNGO = ‘Mungo’s vale;’ and then often, as we have seen above, the aspirate and its neighbour have no sound at all. Yet more puzzling is it when the original consonant falls away altogether, leaving only the h, or else leaving no trace at all: thus G. fada, ‘long,’ unaspirated, gives us the name Loch FAD in Bute, but aspirated it gives us the names of Ben ATTOW and HADDO House.

Another matter of crucial importance is the accent. In Gaelic, which here differs from Irish, the accent tends to fall on the first syllable. Thus, in many names, the second or unstressed syllable is corrupted by indistinct pronunciation, e.g., Damhach becomes DAVA, or oftener falls away altogether; e.g., achadh, 'field,' has in hundreds of names become ach or auch. Almost never has the final syllable survived in a name. But there is one interesting example at least. In a charter of Malcolm the Maiden, c. 1160, in Cosmo Innes' Collections for the History of Aberdeen and Banff (p. 172), we read of a place in the Don Valley, 'Brecachath quod interpretatur campus distinctis coloribus;' and there is still a Breakachy, or 'speckled field,' near Beauly, and in Caithness. Similarly, tulach, 'a hill, mound,' usually appears in names as Tully- or Tillie-, as in TULLYMET and TILLIECHEWAN, though we have the whole word in TULLOCH, and the second syllable intact in MORTLACH. According to Professor M'Kinnon it is a firm rule in Gaelic phonology, in compound names, which Gaelic place-names usually are, that the accent falls on the qualifying word or attributive. Attention to the accent in the native pronunciation will thus save many an incorrect guess at a name's meaning; thus Knóckan would mean 'little hill,' (dimin. of G. enoc), but Knoekán, 'hill by the river' (abhainn), an being here the qualifying word; thus, too, TYRIE, the name of a farm near Kirkcaldy, might from its look mean 'king's house' (tigh rìghe), but when we know it is accented Tírie, it can only be the G. tìr, tìre, 'land, a bit of land.'

English speakers often put 'The' before a name, as 'The Methil,' 'The Lochies' (see p. lxxx); in Gaelic the article is almost never prefixed to a place-name, except in the form t'; ANSTRUTHER, 'the river,' is a rare exception. The nominative of the article, an, is then rarely met with: but the genitive na, in plur. nan, before labials nam, is very often met with; e.g., Balnabruaich, ‘village on the bank,’ Coirnanuriskin, ‘ravine of the goblins,’ Bealach-nam-bo, ‘pass of the cattle.’ The na of the article is very liable to abrasion or corruption: e.g., it may become simple a as in Dalarossie, or simple n as in Kilninver, or may even slip down into i, as in Cullicudden (cf. the Welsh y, as in Bettws-y-Coed, ‘house in the wood’). It is worth remembering that, except in feminine polysyllables, the gen. plural of a noun is always just the same as the nom. singular. With masculine nouns beginning with a vowel the article is an t’, or t’, as in TOB, ‘the bay.’ The same is true of feminine nouns beginning with s, here the t eclipses the s; as in the names COLINTRAIVE and KINTAIL, which are in G. coil an t’snainh, and cinn t’saile.

The mediæ b, d, g approach in sound much nearer to our English tenues p, t, c, and are often found interchanging in names. Final dh often sounds like k or ch. (cf. ARDVERIKIE). The letter d seems often to insert itself, as in the Galloway names, Cúllendeugh, Cúllendoch, and Cúllenoeh, all, as the accent shows, from G. cuileanach, ‘place of hollies’; also, as in DRUMMOND, G. dromainn, and in LOMOND, Old G., Lomne. The s of the English plural in scores of cases affixes itself to Gaelic names, as in CRATHES, LINDORES, WEMYSS. The Eng. diminutive -ie is also very freely found, generally representing all that is left of some ending in -ach, as in BRODIE, CAMLACHIE, &c., but also representing sometimes no Gaelic syllable, as in BANAVIE and LOGIE, from G. ban abh and lag, respectively.

Of all Scottish place-names those sprung from Celtic lips show by far the most sympathy with nature. The

Celt's warm, emotional heart loved to seek out the poetry and colour in the world around, and many of his place-names show that 'stern nature was his daily companion and friend.' Indeed, the majority of Celtic names, be it noted, give either the simplest possible description of the site named, or describe some prominent feature, or else the colouring or appearance of it as it strikes the eye. A very large number of Gaelic names mean simply, 'house on the bank,' 'village by the straits,' 'field of stones,' or the like. The first two of these are represented in Gaelic by those Cockney terrors TIGH-NA-BRUAICH and BALL-A-CHULISH; whilst that mouth-filling name, which awes even a Scotsman, MACHRAHANISH, Kintyre, just means 'thin plain' or 'links,' plus the Norse nish, i.e., ness. Thus we may almost venture to lay it down as a general rule that the simpler the meaning conjectured, the more likely is it to be correct, e.g., take the somewhat puzzling-looking name, MENSTRIE, near Alloa. This we could never explicate without the aid of its old spelling, Mestreth (sic 1263). This is most likely just the G. magh sratha, 'plain of the valley' (at the foot of the Ochils), the final gh and th having now both vanished; though we suppose it is at least possible that the mes-represents G. mias, 'fruit.' From what has been said the reader will not be surprised to find that the words for 'water,' 'river,' 'stream,' occur very often in names—dobhar or dôr (see ABERDOUR, &c.); abhainn or ân or AVON; abh, found in AWE and AVIE-MORE, and in A-RY, the bh here being quiescent; also uisg, uisge, painfully familiar in the shape and sound of that 'strong water,' commonly called 'whisky;' this word we see in COR-UIISK and in ESK. In England the same root rings the changes on almost all the vowels, as in Ax, Ex,

Isis, Usk, and Ux (in Uxbridge); whilst Ox- in Oxford, and Ouse, are probably brothers of the same family.

Whether the last rule be accepted or not, there is no question that personal acquaintance with a spot is highly desirable before making any attempt to solve its name. One sight of a place may prevent ludicrous mistakes, and may also suggest with a flash the real meaning. BOLESKINE, from the look of the word, might well be = Pollanaskin, Mayo, i.e., ‘pool of the eels;’ but, from the look of the place, it must be boll (or poll) eas cumhan (pron. cuan), ‘pool of the narrow waterfall.’ It was personal inspection, too, which brought that happy inspiration which translated COLINTRAVE, on the quiet Kyles of Bute, as coil an t’snaimh (pron. traive, for t eclipses s, and n changes to its kindred liquid r), ‘corner at the swimming-place,’ where the cattle for market were made to swim over. ARDENTRYVE, opposite to Oban, has, of course, a similar origin.

Where Gaelic names now survive in an English-speaking region, and to some extent in Gaelic-speaking regions too (for few Gaels can spell their own tongue), the place-names are apt to get so corrupted by generations of illiterate speakers that one requires to know, not only the look of a place and the true pronunciation of its name, but also something of the lines on which these corruptions or alterations usually run. We already know how apt b and p are to interchange, so too are d and t; e.g., take AULDEARN, near Nairn. It has nothing to do with auld or earn, but is the G. allt fheàrna (fh mute), ‘river of the alders.’ Again, take that kirk whose name Burns has made undying, ALLOWAY, near Ayr. This is probably a corruption of G. allt-na-bheath (vay), ‘river of the birches,’ and so identical with AULTBEA, away up in West Ross-shire. This word allt is a very remarkable one, for it means both 'river,' 'glen,' and 'heights on either side a glen,' thus being plainly akin to the L. altus, high. It recurs again and again in Gaelic names, in the guises of All-, Alt-, Auld, Ault- (see List). As showing the length to which the Gael can go in flinging away his alphabet, we may cite the name BEALLACHANTUIE, on the Atlantic side of Kintyre, meaning 'pass of the seat,' G. suidhe; but the name is now pronounced Bállochanteé, which means that all that is now left of the six letters suidhe is the final long e!

The commonest names are those giving a bare, brief description of the site named; next in frequency are those which give the general appearance of the place as it strikes the eye—rough (garbh) or smooth (mèin, also 'level, gentle-looking'), straight (deas) or crooked (cam), black or dark (dubh), speckled or spotted (breac), long (fada) or short (gearr), little (beag) or big (mòr); such names as GARVOCK, 'rough field,' MINARD, 'smooth height,' MORVEN, 'big ben,' are legion. Almost all of Nature's common colours figure largely in the sympathetic speech and nomenclature of the nature-loving Gael. Specially common are dubh, black, which every one knows in the guise of Duff, but often also sounded dhu, as in DOUGLAS, DHU HEARTACH, ROSSDHU; and ban and fionn, white, light-coloured, clear to the view, as in BANAVIE, BANNOCKBURN, CARFIN, FINDON. Names denoting red or reddish are also plentiful. Here we have two words, dearg, 'red,' also, 'the colour of newly-ploughed land,' as in Ben Dearg; when the d is aspirated it sounds almost like j, as in Barjarg, 'red height,' near Closeburn. The other word is ruadh, familiar to us all in the name of Rob Roy, 'red Robert,' with his ruddy tartan plaid; but also pronounced rew, and something very like roch, as in TANNIEROACH, ‘reddish meadow.’ The dh is preserved in the spelling of the name RUTHVEN, though the name itself is now often pronounced Rivven. Green, chief colour in Nature’s paint-box, is gorm. Every one is familiar with CAIRNGORM, and every lover of Scottish song has heard of ‘Tullochgorum,’ i.e., ‘green hillock.’ Then there is glas, grey, pale, wan, as in Strathglass, GLASSFORD, and probably also in the name of the great Western Metropolis. On that much-controverted subject, the etymology of GLASGOW, see the List.

Few objects make a more striking feature in a landscape than a clump or forest of trees: thus we are prepared to find tree-names bulking largely in Gaelic topography. Common as any, perhaps, is beath (bay), the birch, one of the few natural or indigenous trees of Scotland. This we find pure and simple in Beath and Beith, where the th retains its sound; often the th is mute as in AULT-BEA, West Ross-shire, and CARNBEE, near Anstruther. Through aspiration of the b such forms arise as ALLOWAY, just referred to, and DARNAY (G. dobhar-na-bheath), near Forres. The word dair, gen. dara, an oak, its derivative darach, an oak-wood, and its cognate doire, a grove, have also many representatives. We have the simple Darroch at Falkirk, &c., and we have a Scottish as well as an Irish Derry, close to Crathie. Then there are DAR-VEL, AUCHTERDERRAN, and DAL-JARROCH, near Girvan, &c. The Gaelic for an elm is leamhan (louan), which appears in many a dress. One of these is the very common name LEVEN. The Vale of Leven was once called Levenax or LENNOX, whilst the old form of Loch LOMOND was Lomne, which must just be leamhan; and its sea-neighbour Loch LONG is perhaps the Loch Lemannonius of Ptolemy. He, by the way, wrote c. 120 A.D., but he is supposed to have taken his names from an old Tyrian atlas, and so the forms he gives are probably a good deal older than this date. Lemannonius must be from leamhan; but INNER-LEITHEN is probably not, as some think, from this root. Humbler plants have also contributed their quota, like the sedge, siosg, as in DERNA-CISSOCK, Wigton, and the rush, luachair, as in LEUCHARS.

If trees and plants give feature to a landscape, animals have their own prominence too. And the Celt was very fond of raising a monument to his dumb cattle by means of a place-name; e.g., the Gaelic for a cow is bo, = L. bos; this we find in the name which Scott has made all the world know by the Lady of the Lake, Bealach-nam-bo, i.e., 'pass of the cattle,' bealach being better known to most of us in the shape of BALLOCH; then there is BOCHASTLE, and BOWLAND, near Galashiels, which has no connection with archery, but is just 'cattle-land.' Madadh, the wild dog or wolf, is commemorated in LOCHMADDY and POLMADIE. The ordinary dog is cu, gen. coin, as in Loch Con, and probably also in its neighbour, Ben CHONZIE. The unsavoury pig, muc, has left many a sign of his former abundance, as in AUCHTERMUCHTY, DRUMMUCKLOCH, and MUCKHART, all of which imply the site of a swine-field or pen. Even the swift-gliding, shy otter, doran, gives name to Ben Doran; and so forth.

Not only did the Gael give the names of animals to many spots associated with them, he was also constantly seeing in some landmark a resemblance to some part of an animal. Most common of all do we find druim, = L. dorsum, the back, especially a long back like that of a horse, hence a long hill-ridge. Sir H. Maxwell names 198 instances in Galloway alone, and we find them everywhere—DRUMCLOG, DRUMLANRIG, DRUMSHEUGH, DROMORE, &c. DRUMMOND and DRYMEN are just the G. dromainn with the same meaning. Then there is crubha, a haunch or shoulder, hence the shoulder of a hill, as in CRIEFF, whose name just describes its site; on the other side of the hill is CULCRIEFF, ‘the back of the haunch;’ see, too, DUMCRIEFF and DUNCRUB. Sron, the nose, the equivalent of the Norse ness, and of the English name Naze, is found in a good many names of headlands, where it is always spelt stron, but the t is like the t in strath, a mere Sassenach intrusion to enable the poor Lowlander to pronounce the word. Examples are STRONE itself, Stronbuy, and that little cape on Loch Katrine which is unpronounceable by English lips, STRONACH-LACHAR, ‘cape of the mason.’ CAMERON, too, is just eam sron, ‘erooked nose.’ Besides, there is the widely scattered ceann, a head, and so, a promontory, usually found as ken-, or in its old dative form of cinn or kin- (see KINALDIE); instances are too numerous to require mention.

The Gael has always been a more modest man than his English supplanter. John Bull always dearly loves to perpetuate his own or his own kith’s name, be it in a town, a castle, an hospital, or even by surreptitious carving on his bench at school. There are scores of towns and villages in England, and Scotland too, called by the names of Saxonmen (cf. p. lxx and foll.). The Celt adopted this fashion much more rarely. But a good many of the heroes of Ossian and other early legends are commemorated in this way, e.g., CORRIEVRECKAN, off Jura, is ‘the cauldron’ or ‘whirlpool of Breean,’ grandson of the famous Niall of the nine hostages. COWAL is called after Coill, the 'old king Cole,' of the well-known rhyme; LORN, after Loarn, first king of Scots in Dalriada or Argyle. The seven sons of that legendary eponymous personage, Cruithne or Cruidne, reputed father of the Cruithnig or Pictish race, both in Scotland and Ireland, are always cropping up. According to the Pictish Chronicle, the seven were Fib, Fidach, Floclaw, Ce, Fortrenn, Got, Circinn. Fortrenn was the old name of Strathearn and its vicinity; for the others see ATHOLE, CAITHNESS, FIDDICH, FIFE, MEARNs, &c. The old man's own name we find in Cruithneachan, Lochaber. But Celtic names of the type of BALMACLELLAN, 'M'Lellan's village,' New Galloway, and of PORT BANNATYNE, Bute, are quite rare. The Celt did little in the way of handing down his own or his own folk's name; but, having always been a pious man, there was nothing he liked better than to call a village or a church or a well after some favourite saint. This, however, is so wide a subject as to deserve separate treatment (see Chap. V.).

It is often said that several place-names preserve the memory of the ancient Druidic or Pagan sun and fire worship. This is conceivable, though it is absolutely certain that no Bal- in Scotland represents or preserves the name of Baal, the Phœnician sun-god; and one is surprised to find this unscholarly superstition repeated in a bulky history of Scotland published within the last three or four years. And even though GREENOCK be the G. grian-aig, 'sun-bay,' that will just mean 'sunny bay;' and ARDENTINNY, 'height of the fire,' on the west shore of Loch Long, probably just refers to some beacon or signal fire, whilst AUCHENDINNY probably does not mean 'field of the fire' at all, but comes like DENNY, from the old G. dinat, a woody glen.

The inquisitive amateur, somewhat dismayed by the many difficulties in the study of Celtic names detailed in the early part of this chapter, will now, we hope, be beginning to take heart again. He ought to be further reassured when he hears that acquaintance with about a dozen Gaelic words will enable any one to interpret nearly half the real Gaelic names in Scotland. As fitting close to the section, let us enumerate these :—

(1) Aber or abhir, already discussed.

(2) Achadh, a field, also already discussed in part. From achadh, with its unaccented second syllable, comes the common prefix and suffix ach, as in ACHNACARRY, CABRACH, DORNOCH (c. 1230, Durnach), &c. As a prefix the form is as commonly auch-, as in AUCHINLEYS, AUCHMITHIE, &c.; and ach- and auch- often interchange, as in Ach- or AUCH-NASHEEN, Ach- or Auch-engean, &c.

(3) Auchter, in the spelling of the schools uachdar, Welsh uchder; but even the oldest charters spell it uuchter or ochter, or octre; au and o are here found freely interchanging, as in Auchtertyre or OCHTERTYRE, AUCHTERNEED, in 1619 Ochterneid, &c. This uachdar is literally the summit or upper part, hence, a high field; then, seemingly, any field, as in AUCHTER-MUCHTY.

(4) Bail, baile, a hamlet, or simply a house. We all have heard of the multitudinous Irish Ballys; and ball- or balla- is a common prefix in the Isle of Man. But it is as common in Scotland—BALNABRUAICH, BALLATER, BALLINLUIG, and so almost ad infinitum. In the lowlands of Aberdeen alone there are said to be no less than fifty instances. Occasionally the b has become p, as in BALGONIE, a. 1300, Palgoveny.

(5) Barr, a height or hill, as in BARR, BARRA, BARRASSIE, &c.; the aspiration of the b appears in CRAIGIEVAR, and in the name of 'young LOCHINVAR' (G. lochan-a-bharra). But the second part of DUNBAR probably refers to an Irish St Barr.

(6) Blàr, a plain, as in Blair, BLAIRGOWRIE, BALBLAIR, &c.

(7) Coil, or cuil, a corner, a nook, as in COILANTOGLE, COLFIN, CULROSS, &c. This word is always apt, in names, to be confused with coill, 'a wood' (see the List passim). The island of COLL itself probably means a 'hazel.'

(8) Dail, a field or meadow; the prefix dal- is always Gaelic, and has this meaning, as in DALAROSSIE, DALNASPIDAL; but the suffix -dale is always either Norse (see p. lv) or English, in Scotland usually the former, and always means 'valley.'

(9) Garradh, an enclosure, garden, akin to the Mid. Eng. garth, and the ordinary Eng. yard, usually found as Gart-, as in GARTCOSH, GARTNAVEL (= APPEGARTH); sometimes as Garry-, as in GARRYNAHINE, 'garden on the river,' in Lewis; but garry in names usually represents garbh, rough, as in Glengarry. In GARRABOST, another Lewis name, we have a compound of Gaelic and Norse, = 'garden-place.' Just as in the case of dal or dale, the prefix gart- is Gaelic, but the suffix -garth must be English or Norse.

(10) Inver or inbhir, already referred to (pp. xxvii-xxviii). Unlike aber, and contrary to Isaac Taylor's idea, inver is found practically all over Scotland, save in those northern isles where the Norseman has clean swept the board; but it is much commoner north than south of the old Roman Wall. Aber alone does not occur as a Scottish name, though the railway traveller in North Wales knows it well. But simple INVER occurs again and again—on the south shore of the Dornoch Firth, as name of a little village, formerly Inverlochslin, and near Crathie, and where Bran joins Tay; and then there is Loch Inver, so well known to the Sutherland salmon-fisher. Inver always tends to slide into inner-, as both old charters and modern pronunciations amply testify, e.g., Inver- or INNER-ARITY, Inner- or INVER-KIP, &c. Inver does not exist in Brythonic Wales, and it is rare in Ireland; these facts, coupled with its comparative rarity south of Forth and Clyde, point to its being, in all likelihood, a Pictish word. Sometimes it helps to form a hybrid name, as in INNERWICK, south of Dunbar.

(11) Magh, a plain, probably akin to mag, 'the palm of the hand,' as in MACHRAHANISH; but the final guttural usually vanishes. Thus we get MAMBEG and MAMORE, 'little' and 'big plain,' and also such a curious-looking name as CAMBUS O' MAY, which just means 'crook of the plain;' whilst magh appears in two Inverness-shire names as MOY. MEARNs, the old name for Kincardine, as Dr Skene is never weary of telling us, is probably magh Girginn, to which the only existing early form, Moerne, seems to point.

(12) The Pictish pette, found in names as Pit-, Pitte-, Petti- (see p. xxvii.); also, in 1211, we find the form Put-mullin ('land of the mill'). After the common fashion of such words—cf. the Eng. ham and ton—pette or pit first means an enclosed bit of land, then a farm, then the cottages round the farm, and so, a village. In Gaelic, i.e., the tongue of the Dalriad Scots, which afterwards overspread the whole land, pit is commonly rendered by baile; it is doubtful if it is ever rendered by both, 'a hut' (see PITGAVENY). The region of pit- is the east centre of Scotland from the Firth of Forth to Tarbat Ness. There is, perhaps, none north of Pitkerry, Fearn; and there seem to be none at all in the west.

(13) Tulach, a hillock or hill: the unstressed second syllable usually drops into y or ǝ; but we have the full word standing by itself in TULLOCH, near Dingwall, already so spelt in 1158. Tulach occurs both as prefix and suffix, as in TILLYFOUR, TULLYMET, GRANDTULLY, KIRKINTILLOCH. It has somewhat more disguised itself in MORTLACH, and yet more in MURTHLY, both of which represent the G. mòr t(h)ulach, 'big hill.'

To these, the amateur can, of course, at once add all those Gaelic words entering into place-names which have already become part of ordinary English speech. Such a word is ben, or in its Brythonic form pen, as a suffix, usually aspirated into -ven, as in MORVEN, SUILVEN, more rarely thus as a prefix, e.g., VENLAW and VENNACHAR; penny or penni has nothing to do with pen (see p. lvii). Then there are brae, G. braigh, the upper part of anything, hence BRAEMAR, the Braes of Balquhiddy, &c., but also quite common in Lowland names, as in Cobble Brae (Falkirk), Whale Brae (Newhaven); cairn; corrie, G. coire, lit. a cauldron or kettle; craig or crag, and its diminutive craigan; glen; inch, G. innis, an island or links; knock, G. cnoc, a hill; loch, and its diminutive lochan; and strath. Most of these words have only been used by Southron tongues for a century, or a little more or less. Sibbald in his well-known History of Fife (edition 1710) does not speak of Ben Lomond, but uses the cumbrous phrase 'Lomundian mountain.' The earliest quotation for ben which the writer can find is for the year 1771, when a T. Russell in Denholm's Tour Through Scotland (1804, p. 49), writes :—

' Prompt thee Ben Lomond's fearful height to climb.'
Dr Murray's earliest instance is for 1788; and the earliest example in his great dictionary for the use of the word cairn as a landmark is from John Wesley in 1770.

CHAPTER II.

NORSE NAMES.¹

WHEN we come to deal with the Norse names in Scotland,—perhaps to say Scandinavian names would be more correct,—we find ourselves amongst a group most interesting, and far more numerous than the outsider would think. The story of the Norseman's deeds in Scotland has been skimmed over but lightly by most historians, and therefore it may be useful to set at least the bones of that history before the reader. Dr Skene thinks there is proof of Frisians, i.e., men from Holstein, in Dumfriesshire even before the year 400 A.D. However that may be we have certain evidence that, before the 8th century passed away, bold Vikings from Denmark and Norway had already begun to beach their galleys on our long-suffering coasts. In 793 we find their rude feet on holy Lindisfarne, close to the modern Scottish border; and in 794 they swooped down among the Hebrides, being forced forth from their homes because their own barren rocks could not sustain the growing population. A field the size of a large pocket-handkerchief cannot feed many extra mouths. This quest for resting-place and sustenance drove some as far away as the Volga; it urged others over the cold seas, to Iceland and Greenland, and some rested not till they had coasted down to where mighty New York now spreads and grows. The uprising in the next century of ambitious Harold of the Fair Hair (Haarfagr), who at length made himself absolute king of Norway, drove out many more of his most active opposers, who found in the numerous rocky bays and friths of Western Scotland the quarters most suited for the plundering forays of their long-oared ships. King Harold followed after them, conquered all the isles away as far south as Man (875 A.D.), and made his brother Sigurd their first Jarl. Even before this the Orkneys had been a station of call for the Vikings; while by the 10th century Norse rule had spread over all the Hebrides, Caithness, and all but the south-west of Sutherland. It has little affected Scottish topography south of the river Oykel; though latterly it included the west of Inverness, Argyle, and all Arran, and even reached as far as old Dumbarton.

In Orkney and Shetland the Viking completely superseded the Pictish Celt, who, so far as place-names are concerned, has—strange to tell—left scarcely a trace behind. Almost the only exception, and it is just half a one, is the name ORKNEY itself; and one other partial instance is the Moulhead of Deerness, Orkney, the Múli of the Saga, which is just the G. maol, ‘brow of a rock, cape.’ It must be remembered that here the Norseman had 600 years and more in which to do his obliterating work. The Nordreyar, ‘northern isles,’ as they were called in contrast with the Sudreyar, ‘southern isles’ or Hebrides, did not escape from his dominion till 1469, when James III. of Scotland married Margaret, daughter of Christian I. of Denmark, and received these northern isles as her dowry. But the Hebrides only remained an appanage to the Norwegian crown for a scant three years after King Haco was so sorely smitten, and his fleet shattered, at the brave battle of Largs in 1264.

In these parts of northern and western Scotland, Scandinavian names are found in more or less abundance.¹ They also form quite a notable colony in Dumfriesshire, especially between the rivers Esk and Nith; but the distinctive gill, beck, and rig spread a good deal further than that—away into Kirkcudbright, and up Moffat Water, and not a few have even flowed over into Peebles; though on all Tweedside there is not a single representative of the characteristic Norse suffixes beck, force, garth, thorpe, thwaite, and wald. The Dumfries colony of names, like the Scandinavian names in the Isle of Man, bear a more strongly Danish cast than the others. This points to the now generally-admitted fact that this special group of names is due to an irruption of Danes, coming north from England via Carlisle, and not to any landing of fair-haired pirates direct from the sea. The native Gaels called the Norsemen ‘the fair strangers,’ and the Danes ‘the dark strangers’ or gaill. The most hurried comparison will show how like the Dumfries Danish names are to the kindred names across the Border in Cumberland—fell and beck and bie and thwaite are alike common to both.

In other parts of Scotland, especially those at some distance from the sea, Norse footprints are few and far between. Even on the east coast itself, south of Dingwall, undoubtedly Norse names are very rare.

Mr W. J. Liddell¹ has drawn attention to a series of interesting names connected, he thinks, with the doings of one of these pirate Northmen called Buthar, corrupted into Butter, the man after whom, he thinks, bonnie Buttermere is named. He, it is said, has also given his name to Butterstone or Butterstown, near Dunkeld, and his path from thence to the sea is marked by an old road over the Ochils, still called the Butter Road, and past a Kinross-shire farm called Butterwell, on to Largo Bay. However, Mr A. J. Stewart of Moneydie, a careful student, says Butters-town is from the G. bothar, a road or lane, its name having once been Bailebothar. There is another 'Buter mere' away down in Wilts, mentioned in a charter of King Athelstan's, 931, and there are several spots in Galloway called Butter Hole; all probably refer to the bittern and its haunts, the Scotch name for that bird being butter, the Mid. Eng. bitoure, Old Fr. butor. It ought to be noted, en passant, that here we have several instances of names which seem to say 'butter,' and yet have nothing whatever to do with that useful commodity.

It is usually said that Icelandic is the nearest modern representative of the tongue which these Viking-invaders spake; it would be more correct to say it was Icelandic itself.² Before the year 1300 all the lands peopled by the Northmen—Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland, the Faroes, Orkney, Shetland, and the Hebrides—used the same speech, and so did the Norse or Danish settlers in England, Ireland, and the mainland of Scotland. And this northern tongue, the language of the old

² In our List will be found both 'O.N.,' i.e., Old Norse, and 'Icel.,' but these mean almost the same thing.

Eddas and Sagas, differed as little from modern Icelandic as Shakspeare's English from Browning's. The remote Arctic isle has preserved the mother-tongue with little change. Thus in studying the Scandinavian place-names of Scotland it is chiefly the Icelandic dictionary on which we must rely; though the amateur must again be warned that unless he have some little knowledge of Norse speech, knowing to seek the origin of a name in wh- under lv-, and the like, he will find himself unable, even with his dictionary, to explicate many unquestionably Norse forms. Modern Swedish and Danish are to Icelandic as Italian and Spanish to Latin. They did not begin palpably to diverge from the parent stem till the 13th century. Yet scholars are pretty well agreed that in the Scottish names which we are now dealing with, all of which probably existed before 1300, there are some which have a decidedly Danish cast, whilst the majority are rather Norse. The Norsemen seem to have loved mountainous regions like their own stern, craggy fatherland; hence it is chiefly Norse forms which we find in the names among the uplands of Southern Scotland and North-West England, and chiefly Danish forms on the flat and fertile stretches of Dumfries, a district so like the Dane's own flat homeland, where hills are a rarity even greater than trees in Caithness.

It is also pretty generally understood that the old Norse speech was near of kin to our own Old English, which, of course, came from the flat coast-region immediately south-west of modern Denmark; and the Norsemen themselves emphatically recognised this near kinship. The best living representative of Old English is Lowland or Broad Scots, that most expressive of tongues, so rich in vivid adjectives, whose rapid decay is almost as much to be regretted as that of Gaelic. Broad Scots is just the survival of Anglian or Northern English, giving to us still, in its pronunciations, the same sounds as fell from the lips of the old kings and warriors of Bernicia and Deira. And Broad Scots, both in vocabulary and pronunciation, approximates, in scores of cases, far more closely to Danish and Icelandic than modern English does.¹ In consequence of this, when we have no external evidence to guide us, it is sometimes impossible to say whether a given name is of Anglo-Saxon or of Norse birth. So far as history has to tell, some few names in South-East Scotland might be either, to wit, names containing forms common to both, such as dale and shaw, garth and holm.

In quite another direction there are proofs that the West Highland Gaels borrowed a few words from the Northmen, who settled so plentifully upon their bays and lochs, without leave asked. There is the Icel. gjá or 'goe,' a chasm, which the Gael has made into Geodha. In Colonsay there is a Rudha Gheadha or 'red cleft,' where the Old Norse a is still preserved. The word firth or frith, the Icel. fjörðr, and N. fjord, is, of itself, sufficient proof that the Norse galleys sailed round every angle of our coasts, north and south, east and west. There are firths everywhere from Pentland to Solway, and from Dornoch to Clyde. The Gael has copiously adopted this word fjord, but in his mouth the f gets aspirated, and, therefore, soon disappears. Thus on the west coast we have few 'friths,' but plenty of names ending in -ord, -ort, -ard, -art; the usual pronunciation in modern Gaelic is arst. Such is the origin of KNOYDART, 'Cnud's' or 'Canute's fjord,' ENARD, MOYDART, SNIZORT. The f remains in BROADFORD, 'broad fjord,' and MELFORT. And if the Gael borrowed from the Norsemen, we are told there are traces in modern Norse of vice versa borrowing from the Gael.

The student is well served with early forms of our Scandinavian place-names. For all the 'Norse region,' except Dumfries, Orkney, and Shetland, the Origines Parochiales liberally supply us with old name-forms, and the Dunrobin charters cited there often take us back to c. 1220. For Orkney itself we have the curious early rental-books of the Bishops of Orkney, which have all been printed, the oldest dating from 1497. For the northern counties we also have Torfæus' History of Norway, dating c. 1266; but here, far above all else in value, is the famous Orkneyinga Saga, so well edited for English readers by Dr Joseph Anderson. Its date seems c. 1225, but it embodies songs from several earlier skalds. Of course the Norse names have not altered nearly so much as have Celtic names in a now English region, and thus early forms are not so often of crucial importance; but the names NORTH and SOUTH RONALDSAY (q.v.) are pertinent examples to the contrary.

No one in Scotland now speaks a Scandinavian tongue, but it seems to have lingered on in far sequestered Foula, away to the west of the Shetlands, till c. 1775; and the local speech of Shetland and Orkney is still full of Scandinavian words. This is little to be wondered at seeing that, for centuries, Norwegian kings were wont not seldom there to live, and even there to die. And though the speech be gone the physiognomist can still pick out the Old Norse face, with the blue eyes and fair hair, almost all over Scotland. One usage borrowed from a Norse source has had large influence in Scottish place-names, viz., the measuring of land by rental, the unit being the ounceland—Old G. unga, Mod. G. unnsa, L. uneia, as in UNGANAB in North Uist, the land for which the abbot (ab) was paid an ounce of silver as rental. ‘Ounceland’ rarely is met with; but the smaller amounts are quite common. In an ounce of silver there were held to be 18 or 20 dwts., and ‘penny’ lands (O.E. penig, pening, Icel. penning-r, Dan. penge) abound, e.g., PENNYGHAEI, Pennymuir, &c.; so do all the lesser sums down to the farthing or feorling—there is a place of this name in Skye—and even to the half-farthing. In the Orkney early rentals we read of a ‘cowsworth’ of land, which was = $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, or $\frac{1}{6}$ of a mark of land. In the same rentals (e. 1500) we find a ‘Cowbuster’ or ‘cow-place’ in Firth, and a Noltland or ‘cattle-land’ in Westray.

Though the Danes visited Ireland too, and were there in power all along the east coast for at least a century, having Dublin for a time as their chief seat, there are now barely twenty names of Danish origin in all Ireland. This is rather remarkable when we find their print so plain and oft in Scotland. The leading place-names in several Scottish counties are all Norse—in Shetland, LERWICK and SCALLOWAY; in Orkney, KIRKWALL and STROMNESS; in Caithness, WICK and THURSO; in Sutherland, GOLSPIE, HELMSDALE, and TONGUE; in Ross, DINGWALL and TAIN; in Bute, ROTHESAY and BRODICK. It has been already stated that in Orkney and Shetland Norse names have a complete monopoly; in the Outer Hebrides, where now every man speaks Gaelic, the Norse monopoly is nearly as complete.

Captain Thomas, R.N., who very carefully investigated the subject some forty years ago, reports that in the Lews Norse names outnumber the Gaelic ones by four to one, and that in all Harris there are only two pre-Norse or Celtic names. No place-name of any consequence in the whole Long Island is of Celtic origin, unless we call that queer name BENBECULA an exception. The marks of the Viking grow rarer in the isles south of Ardnamurchan, for here he dwelt about a century less. Jura has very few, Islay has a good many—Conisby, Lanay, Nerby, Oversay, Scaraboll, &c.: Captain Thomas says, here Norse names are to Gaelic as three to one. But, though both JURA and ISLAY are words with a Norse look, and commonly reputed of Norse origin, they are not so (q.v.). Islay's real spelling is Ile, which Dr Skene thinks an Iberian or pre-Celtic word; but Ile has been 'improved' by some would-be clever moderns into Islay, which would literally mean 'island-island.'

Norse and Saxon names sometimes give us a little glimpse of mythology, sometimes of natural, and yet more frequently of family, history. The Teuton was much fonder of leaving the stamp of his name behind him than the Celt. The Saxon was even prouder of his own name than the Northman; and Norse names of the common Saxon type of DOLPHINTON and SYMINGTON are rare. HELMSDALE may be called after some Viking of the name of Hjalmund; 'Hjalmundal' is the form we find in the Orkneyinga Saga; and GOLSPIE may be from some man Gold or Goa. And from Scottish place-names we can pick out a good many of the gods and men oft sung in the grand Old Norse epics. Take, e.g., THURSO, O.N. Thorsa, Thor, the thunder-god's river. This is one of the cases where the river has given its name to the later town upon it. It is almost always so; even 'Water of Leith' is only a deceptive modern instance of the reverse, for as early as c. 1145 we find 'Inverlet' or INVER-LEITH. The mighty Thor is also commemorated in THURSTON, and in many English names, Thurleigh, Thurlow, &c. Ran, the giant goddess, queen of the sea, much feared by the Icelanders, has her name preserved in Loch RANZA, in Arran; in 1433 Ransay, i.e., 'Ran's isle.' Hero-names are seen in HAROLDSWICK, Shetland; CARLOWAY or Carl's bay, Lewis; and SUNART or 'Sweyn's fjord,' Morven. Then there are those two Orkney isles, North and South Ronaldsay, which everyone would naturally think must both be called after the same man, Ronald, Rognvald, or Reginald—these names are all one. But it is not so. SOUTH RONALDSAY was formerly Rögnvalsey or 'Rognvald's isle;' but NORTH RONALDSAY was originally Rinansej, in which name we, following Professor Munch of Christiania, may safely recognise the much-commemorated St Ringan or Ninian of Whithorn. It is popular corruption and ignorance which have assimilated the two. We have been giving only northern examples of places called after gods or men: but they occur, more sparsely, in the south also, e.g., PERCEBIE, 'Percy's town,' in Dumfriesshire.

Unlike Celtic, Norse yields us few prefixes for the making-up of our place-names. They are chiefly two:—
 (1) Fors, which is just the Icelandic for 'water-fall,' familiar to every tourist in the English lakes as force, Stockgill Force, and all the rest. FORSE, pure and simple, is the name of a Caithness hamlet, and FORRES is probably the self-same word. As prefix we find it in FORSINARD and FORSINAIN in East Sutherland.
 (2) Toft, Icelandic and Danish for 'an inclosed field near a house,' as in TOFTCOMBS, near Biggar; but it is commoner as a suffix, as in Aschantoft and Thurdis-toft. But, if the prefixes be few, Norse has yielded us suffixes in abundance. To garth (Icel. garðr) and to dale (Icel., &c., dal) we have already referred (p. xlvi.); examples of the latter are easily found, as in BERRIE-DALE and HELMSDALE; very often it is suffixed to some Celtic word, as in ATTADALE and CARRADALE. Sometimes the Gael has forgotten the meaning of the dale, and so has added his own prefix strath-; hence that tautology 'Strathhalladale.' An interesting set of names is connected with the suffix -shiel, -shiels, -shield, -shields; all these forms appear. This, like the Scottish shieling or shealing, a hut or bothy, comes from the Icel. skjól, a shelter. The O.N. skali is still used in Norway for a temporary or shepherd's hut. The shel- in 'shelter' is in root the same, being connected with the O.E. seild, Icel. skjöld-r, a shield. A shiel is, therefore, 'any place which gives shelter,' and so, 'a house.' The suffix is seen in GALASHIELS, POLLOKSHIELDS, &c. The word is seen in SHIELDHILL, in 1745 Shielhill, and so often pronounced still; also in a more disguised form in SELKIRK, the old Sele- or Seles-chirche. Shiels enters into many names of Lowland farms—Biggar Shiels, Legholm Shiels, &c.

Another very common suffix is -fell, Icel. fjall, fell, N. fjeld, a mountain or hill, as in the Dovrefjeld of the Romsdal. In the Outer Hebrides this aspirates into -bhal or -val, as in Trelavall. Fells are very common in Northern England, but almost equally so in Southern Scotland, e.g., Coulter Fell, Goat Fell, Hart Fell, &c. Noteworthy also are: -holm, the Dan. and O.E. holm, a small island in a river, an islet, Icel. hólm-r, an island, also a meadow near river or sea. Those in the far north, like HOLM itself, one of the Orkneys, and like GLOUPHOLM, are, without doubt, Norse; while those in the south, like BRANXHOLM and MIDHOLM, are probably English in their origin, and they are perpetually interchanging with the purely English ham (see YETHOLM and HODDOM): -hope is not the O.E. hopa, hope, but the Icel. hop, 'a haven of refuge,' as in the two ST MARGARET'S HOPES; the Lowland -hope, as in SOONHOPE, Peebles, is the same word (see HOBKIRK). Soonhope means 'pen, shelter-place, for swine;' there are both a Chapelhope and a Kirkhope near St Mary's Loch: -thwaite, Icel. þveit, a place, is common enough in England, but rare north of the border, MURRAY-THWAITE, Ecclefechan, being one of the very few Scotch examples, but the original form of the name of the MOORFOOT Hills was 'Morthwaite.'

Beck and gill are pure Scandinavian, and common to both Northern England and Southern Scotland. The former, Icel. bekk-r, Dan. bæk, Sw. bäck, a brook, is seen in Bodsbeck and WATERBECK; but it is rarer in Scotland than gill, Icel. gil, a ravine or gully. Quite a cluster of gills are found far inland, to the west of the sources of the Tweed—Duncan, Ram, Snow, Wind Gills, &c.: -rigg, Icel. hrygg-r, Dan. ryg, Sw. rygg, also O.E. hryeg, a ridge of land, literally the back, the equivalent of the common G. drum- (p. xlii.), is a frequent suffix, chiefly in the south, as ROUGHRIGG, TODRIG, &c. But these 'riggs' are seldom of pure Norse descent; BONNYRIGG and DRUMLANRIG, for example, cannot be. A curious popular corruption is seen in BISHOPBRIGGS, which most Scottish folk would naturally think denoted the presence of a bridge; but the name really tells of the 'riggs' or fields of the Bishop of Glasgow: -roe, Icel. vör, a little bay or inlet, is common in the far north, as in AITHSVOE, Caithness, and CUL-LIVOE, Shetland: -goe, Icel. gjá, already referred to (p. lv.), is of similar meaning, literally it is a cleft or gap, as in GIRNIGO and Whaligoe in Caithness.

A very large group of words end in ey, ay, a, the O.N. and Icel. ey, Dan. oe, cognate with O.E. íg, an island. The ending is found all over the north and west, as in PAPA WESTRAY, a double instance, RAASAY, ULVA, and that very curious name COLONSAY (q.v.). Almost in no case has the original -ey been retained. PLADDA, off Arran, is the old Flada or 'flat isle,' another instance of the Celt's very shifty use of the letter p. The name remains uncorrupted in Fladay, off Barra. An almost equally important group are the wicks, O.N. and Icel. vík, a (little) bay: hence vik-ing or 'bayman.' Wick we have still in English in the expression 'the wicks' or corners of the month. LERWICK and BRODICK, or 'broad bay,' are certainly Norse; but this suffix is, in the south, apt to be confused with the O.E. wíc, a dwelling, village, as in Alnwick, and probably BERWICK. Another Old Norse word for a bay or cove is vág-r; but the r of the nominative generally falls away, and we get -way, as in SCALLOWAY, STORNOWAY, &c., which -way must be carefully distinguished from the similar Celtic ending, as in DARNAWAY, G. dór na bheath. In other cases the r in vág-r changes into its brother liquid l, as in Osmundwall, PIEROWALL, and especially KIRK-WALL. This last town first appears in the Orkneyinga Saga, under the spelling Kirkiuvag; before 1400 it has become Kirkvaw, and already by 1497 it is Kirk-wall, and Kirkwall, to many a one's puzzlement and misleading, it is to this day. In Harris and Benbecula vagr appears as -vagh, as in FLODAVAGH and Uskevagh. Of somewhat similar meaning is the suffix -vat (Icel.

vatn, N. vand, water, a lake), as in Loch LANGAVAT, Lewis, &c.

The Norsemen have not only named many of our inlets with their own names of firth and voe and goe, they have named many of our 'outlets' too. Every 'ness' is Norse, this being the Icel. nes, Dan. naes, a nose; hence a cape or 'Naze,' a transfer of meaning precisely parallel to that of the G. sron (p. xliii.). But though names like STROMNESS and DEERNESS are pure Norse, it does not follow that names like BUCHAN Ness and BUDDON Ness are all Norse too; what Buddon actually does mean no one seems sure. Ness often becomes in Gaelic mouths nish, for the Gael almost always aspirates his s, and loves to speak of the 'Shawms of David' (ef. ARDALANISH, MACHRAHANISH, &c.). The Viking has largely determined the nomenclature of our stormy northern and western shores. All the 'stacks,' O.N. stak.—these wild-looking, lonely juts or columns of rock, in Caithness, are Norse; so are all the 'skerries,' N. and Dan. skjaer, a cliff or rock, of which there are numerous examples around the wild Pentland Firth—SCARFSKERRY, SULESKERRY, &c.; and such names as SUMBURGH ROOST are from the N. röst, a whirlpool.

Two remarkable suffixes remain, and demand special attention. The first is -by or -bie, so useful in detecting the foot of the Dane rather than the Norwegian. This is the north. O.E. bý, Mid. Eng. bi, Dan. and Sw. by, almost certainly all derived from the O.N. boer or býr, and all meaning a dwelling, a hamlet or town. The root is the same as that of the good old Scottish word big, to build, but not the same as that of 'bury' or 'borough,' which is from the O.E. byrig or burh, a fortified enclosure. The suffix -by is frequent in the north of England, and almost as frequent in South-West Scotland—CANONBIE, MIDDLEBIE, PERCEBIE, SORBIE, &c. There are nine examples in the Dumfries district, three in Ayr (Crosby, Magby, and Sterby), and only four in the south-east. There is one near Glasgow, BUSBY, and just one north of the Forth, HUMBIE, near Aberdour, Fife. In the extreme north by reappears in the misleading guise of -bay, as in CANISBAY and DUNCANSBAY. But perhaps the most remarkable group of suffixes in the whole study of Scottish names is that evolved out of one compound O.N. word bolstaðr, a dwelling-place, which has been chopped and changed into almost every conceivable shape. It occurs alone, as a place-name, again and again, and in many shapes, as in Bosta, Lewis, Boust, Coll, and Busta, Shetland. Perhaps nearest to the original are the forms -bolsy, found in ‘Scarrabolsy,’ mentioned in Islay in 1562, and -bustar, -buster, and -bister, as in ‘Skelebustar,’ ‘Swanbuster,’ in Orphir, mentioned in the early Orkney rental books, c. 1500, Cowbuster (Firth, Orkney), and Fimbuster, and Libister, old form of LYBSTER. This last shows us the first vowel dropped out, as is also seen in BIL-BSTER and SCRA-BSTER (in 1201 Skara-bolstad). As common as any is the form -bost, as in Colbost, GARRABOST, Shawbost, all in Long Island; there are thirteen names in -bost in Lewis alone. In Islay poor bolstaðr is squeezed down into -bus, as in Eorabus, ‘beach-house,’ Persebus, ‘priest’s farm,’ &c. Then -bol often occurs alone, and, indeed, bol is itself the O.N. for a dwelling, thus we have BORROBOL and ERIBOL in Sutherland; and then that shifty liquid l drops away, and so we get EMBO and SKIBO, near Dornoch. In Islay, Coll, Tyree, and Mull the b may become p, and so for bol we get pol or pool, as in CROSSAPOL, GRISAPOLL. In Caithness it is the second or staðr half which has been chiefly used, staðr being the Norse equivalent of the O.E. stede or 'stead,' a place, as in 'homestead.' Staðr gives us in Caithness scores of -sters—OCCUMSTER, STEMSTER, THRUMSTER, &c. Instead of -ster we usually find, in the Long Island, -stra, as in SCARRI-STRA, or even -sta, as in TOLSTA. Further, metamorphosis could hardly go.¹

An interesting little group is formed by the three names, DINGWALL, TINGWALL (Shetland), and TINWALD (Dumfries), which are all shapes of the same word, þingavöllr, 'meeting-place of the Thing, diet, or local parliament.' In Norse th is sounded t, hence the latter two forms; and every one who knows Grimm's law, knows how naturally th becomes d, hence Dingwall, or, as it first occurs in 1263, Dignewall. The Icel. þing, and the Dan. and Sw. ting mean, properly, a court or assembly, but in our own O.E. the thing is originally the cause or matter which the Thing met to discuss. The ancient little burgh of TAIN is commonly supposed to come from þing or ting too. Its earliest spelling, in 1227, is Tene, which makes this likely. The second syllable of Dingwall, &c., is the O.N. völl-r or vold, Sw. falla, O.E. fald, Dan. and Mod. Eng. fold, an enclosure, or what is enclosed, hence 'an assembly.'

Several Scottish counties have a Norse element in their names, e.g., CAITHNESS, a name never used by any Gael. He always speaks of Gallaibh, 'land of the Galls' or 'strangers,' these, of course, being the marauding Northmen; -aibh is the old locative case-ending. The name Caithness is the O.N. Catanes, 'ness' or 'projecting land of the tribe Cat.' Cat is the name actually given to the district by the man who first mentions it, the Irish Nennius (? of 8th century). This tribe of Cat or Caith took their name from Cat, Gatt, or Got, one of the sons of the legendary Cruithne (see p. xlv). The next neighbour of Caithness, SUTHERLAND, which, curiously enough, contains nearly the whole of the extreme north of Scotland, is the O.N. Sudrland, so named because it lay to the south of the Norse settlements in Orkney and Caithness; just as the Hebrides were termed Sudreyar, as contrasted with the more northerly Orkney and Shetland Isles. Already in a Latin document of date 1300 we find the name as Sutherlandia. The ending of the name ORKNEY, at least, is Norse (see List). SHETLAND or Zetland is the O.N. Hjaltland or Hetland, but what that means Dr Vigfusson in his Icelandic dictionary makes no attempt to explain.

Just one or two noteworthy scraps in conclusion: be it noted that the PENTLAND Frith has nothing to do with the word pent, which would be singularly inappropriate as applied to this swift-running sea-channel, which is no true frith at all. Pentland frith, like Pentland hills, is the O.N. word Petland, the Norse for 'Picts' laud,' which conveys to us some useful information as to the settlements and migrations of the Picts. Cape WRATH, standing in its stormy solitude at the far north-west corner of Scotland, has doubtless been thought to bear a very appropriate name. So it does; but what it means is, not rage and fury, but 'corner, turning point,' or 'shelter,' Icel. hvarf, and Sw. hvarf, the same word as our Eng.

wharf. And that far northern isle in Shetland, YELL, seems to bear a very startling name. But Yell is the O.N. Jali, Icel. gellð or gall, which means nothing more than 'barren.' This last is also the root of that ugly name JAWCRAIG, near Slamannan, spelt in a 1745 map, Jalleraig. The present form is one among many hundreds of examples of 'popular etymology,' or, as likely, of popular carelessness.

CHAPTER III.

ENGLISH NAMES.

To the student who has fairly tackled the Celtic, or even the Norse, names of Scotland, the purely English names are mere child's play. Considering that English is now the vernacular of sixteen out of every seventeen persons in the land, the number of our English or Anglo-Saxon place-names is surprisingly small. We are not aware, however, if the proportion of English to Celtic and to Norse names in Scotland has ever been exactly ascertained or even estimated. The calculation would be rather a difficult one, but full of interest. English has for some time been the language of all the most populous districts; but over a very wide area in the Highlands English influence had scarcely any existence before the Rebellion in 1745; and very few place-names of any interest to us have originated since that date. The place-names of yesterday are of small account.

Both the contemporary historian Ammianus Marcellinus and the contemporary poet Claudian prove, that as early as 360 A.D., Saxons had invaded the Roman province of Britain. How soon they entered Scotland we are hardly able to tell; but we have already alluded to the possible presence of Frisians in the flats of Dumfriesshire before the year 400. Octa and Ebissa, leaders of the Frisians, were probably established in East and Mid Lothian c. 500 A.D.; and, at any rate, by 547 Angles and Frisians, i.e., men from the swamps and plains around the mouths of the Weser, Scheldt, and Rhine, had spread from Tees to Forth. A district on the south of the Frith of Forth was early known as the 'Frisian Shore:' and probably the earliest recorded appellation of the frith itself is that used by Nennius, Mare Frenessicum or 'Frisian Sea.' The true modern representatives of these Frisians are, of course, the Dutch or Low Germans of Holland and Hanover. Though the Angle and the Saxon were thus early on the ground, very few English names indeed can be proved to have been in use in Scotland before the days of Malcolm Canmore, c. 1060; therefore is it that we have made this Chapter III. when strictly it should have been Chapter II. Almost the only exceptions which occur to us are these—that Simeon of Durham (d. 1130), when writing of the year 756, mentions a Niwanbyrig, which may be NEWBURGH in Fife, and Eddi and the venerable Bede (both c. 720) mention 'Coludesburg,' or, in Bede's Latin Urbs Coludi, which is the modern COLDINGHAM. Of course, probably many more English names than these actually existed at as early a date; but our extant information is very scanty.

Professor Freeman informs us that exiles were welcomed from England as early as the days of Macbeth, who, 'as every schoolboy knows,' was slain at Lumphanan in 1057. But the chief inflow of English blood came not till Macbeth's equally famous successor, Malcolm Canmore, had been seated for fully half a score of years upon his throne. By that time the Norman Conquest was a sad reality to Saxon and to Angle; and King Malcolm now gladly welcomed the exiled Saxon royal family to his palace at Dunfermline. Nor was he long in espousing the devout Saxon princess, Margaret, who has left her trace in North and South QUEENSFERRY, hard by Dunfermline. From the marriage of Malcolm with Margaret (1070), and from the incoming of the English exiles about the same time, we may safely date the decay, not only of the old Celtic Church, but also of the Celtic speech. Henceforth Gaelic was a courtly language no more. But just after the Norman Conquest many of our English town and village names must have sprung up. By the aid of the old charters, of which we have a rich abundance after 1116, we can see many of these names coming in and taking shape before our very eyes. And to the student of history the process is quite as interesting as the embryologist finds it to watch the slowly beautiful growth of the ascidian or the tadpole under the microscope. Here, too, is evolution.

The English ending denoting 'town,' 'village,' is ton or ham. We might, for illustration, select almost any Scottish name ending thus. Let us take SYMINGTON, which occurs twice, in Lanark and in Ayr. Both take their name from the same man, Simon Lockhart, a local knight, about whom we read a good deal in the records of the middle part of the 12th century, and whose surname is still preserved in Milton Lockhart, near Carluke. In 1160, in one of the oldest charters of Paisley Abbey, we read, 'Inter terram Simonis Loccardi & Prestwick,' which shows us Knight Simon already in Ayrshire, and prepares us for the entry in 1293, 'Symondstona in Kyl.' Again, c. 1189, we find 'Villa Symonis Lockard' in Lanarkshire, which, before 1300, has become 'Symondstone;' in either case the further advance to 'Symington' is easy. Take one other very similar case, COVINGTON, near Lanark. About 1120 we find among the followers of David Prince of Cumbria a certain Colban. About 1190 we find mention of a 'Villa Colbani,' villa, by the way, being just the Latin form of the Norman-French ville, literally, a countryhouse, then a town. In 1212 we find 'Colbaynistun;' in 1434 this has become 'Cowantoun,' showing how the surname Cowan has arisen; but c. 1480 it has slipped into its modern shape of 'Covingtoun;' for toun is still the good Scottish way of pronouncing town or ton.

As might be expected, genuine English names are to be found more or less all over the Lowlands; but as all the hills and streams had, long ere his coming, received Celtic names, the Angle has named for us very few of these; though sometimes he managed to add an adjective, as in the Black and White ADDER. Perforce he adopted the names he found, though seldom had he much inkling of their meaning. English names for Scottish natural features are rarely found. As for hills, neither MOORFOOTS nor PENTLANDS are true cases in point, and a name like Norman's Law or North Berwick Law cannot be called a very serious exception: and as for rivers, if few even of England's rivers bear English names, there are positively none at all, of any consequence, in Scotland. But there are several hows (O.E. holg, holh) or hollows or valleys, as 'the How o' the Mearns,' famous HABBIE'S HOW at Carlops.

lies between Edinburgh and Berwick, whose original population were the Celtic Ottadeni, a branch of the great tribe of the Brigantes. But 1400 years of Anglian settlement have largely obliterated the traces of the old Celt here, especially as regards the names of the towns or villages. Almost the only notable exception is DUNBAR, mentioned as early as the days of Eddi (c. 720), certainly a Celtic name, and perhaps commemorating St Bar or Finnbarr, an ancient bishop of Cork. In the Highlands, English names, unless they be quite modern, are very rare. Wherever an English or partly English name occurs, the Gael is sure to have a name of his own, e.g., he calls Taymouth BALLOCH, and so forth. And the Gael deals precisely so with Norse names also; he speaks not of Tain, but of Baile Dhuthaic, or 'the town of St Duthac.' Sometimes an English name is just a translation of an older Gaelic one, as in the town now erroneously spelt and called by outsiders FALKIRK, but which is really Fakhirk (1382, Fawkirc), and is so pronounced by the natives to this day. This is Simeon of Durham's Eggesbreth, and the modern Highland drover's An Eaglais bhreac, 'the spotted church,' referring to the mottled colour of its stone.

Place-names of English origin are a faithful reflection of the typical Englishman—stolid, unemotional, full of blunt common-sense. They almost all spell plain 'John Bull his mark,' 'John Bull his house.' Anglo-Saxon names are, as a rule, abrupt, matter-of-fact, devoid of aught poetic, having of music none. How different is Birmingham or 'Brummagem,' or Wolverhampton, from 'Be-a-la-nam-bo,' or COILANTOGLE! and even Balla-chú-lish has something pathetically Celtic about it, if pronounced by understanding lips. For pure expressiveness, however, few names can beat the name (it cannot be very ancient) given to a conspicuous, monument-capped hill near Linlithgow, 'Glower-o'er-em' or Glowrórum. To translate glower into 'English' would be to make the name feeble indeed. A little to the south, near Drumshoreland, is found the feebler name, 'Lookabootye.' The pure Englishman shows in his names almost none of the Celt's inner sympathy with nature either in her sterner or in her softer moods. And the modern Socialist will not be too well pleased to find that most of our O.E. town names give strong expression to the idea of individual rights, and to the sanctity of private property. Many of them are the very embodiment of the adage that every Englishman's house is his castle; so many of the commonest O.E. place-endings imply 'enclosure, fencing-off.' This is the root-idea in burgh, ham, and ton, in seat and worth.

And the English thane, as well as the Norman baron, invariably called the little village, which grew up under the shadow and shelter of his castle walls, after his own noble self. Places ending in -ville, or, as it is sometimes found in Scotland, -well, are Norman; but the burghs, tons, and hams are all English. Burgh, or more fully borough, is the O.E. burg, burh, gen. byrig, dat. huri, biri, hence its other form 'Bury' or -bury, common in England but not in Scotland, though on the Ayrshire coast stands TURNBERRY (in 1286 Turnebyry). The root of burgh is probably the Old Ger. bergan, to shelter; and its earliest meaning, as given in a Kentish glossary dating c. 820 A.D., is arx, i.e., 'citadel, castle,' then it comes to mean, 'a fortified town;' but the idea of 'civic community' or 'town' arises very early also. In names the word occurs chiefly as a suffix, -burgh, but occasionally as a prefix, as in Borrowstoun-ness or BO'NESS, and in BURGHEAD, where the O.E. word burg with its hard g is still preserved intact. The Old Norse form borg (used by Charles Kingsley in his Hereward) also occurs, on the west coast of Lewis, as Borgh, as every reader of the Princess of Thule knows.

The O.E. tun(e) or ton(e) never originally meant a large town; and we still have the common Scots phrase, 'the farm toun,' which means a collection of houses very different in size from Leeds or Bradford. In O.E. the word occurs both with and without the final e; thus JOHNSTONE means not 'John's stone,' but 'John's town.' Ton seems also to have implied a village belonging to a certain class, as FULLERTON or 'fowler's town,' HALKERSTON or 'settlement of the hawkers,' i.e., falconers. Genuine cases of Scottish names in -burgh, called after some man, are hard to discover; but COLDINGHAM was originally Coludesburg or 'Colud's town,' and WINCHBURGH may be another case in point. The peculiar case of EDINBURGH is fully dealt with in the List where it is shown that the name of Scotia's capital is most likely of Brythonic origin—W. din eiddyn, or Dunedin, 'fort on the hill-slope,' i.e., what is now the backbone of Edinburgh, its High Street, from the Castle to Holyrood. The name was merely remodelled, though it certainly was remodelled, in honour of King Edwin of Northumbria. But if burghs called after Saxon thanes or knights are rare, tons are found in a rich plenty, e.g., DOLPHINTON, DUDDINGSTON, EDDLESTON or 'Edulf's ton,' STEVENSTON, &c. Wherever this suffix -ton is still, even occasionally, spelt -town, the name is pretty sure to be modern, of which we see examples in the two CAMPBELLTOWNS, Hutchesontown, PULTNEYTOWN, SINCLAIRTON, &c. Moreover, the amateur must always walk warily in dealing with English-looking tons in the north, aye, and in the south too, for ton is not seldom a corruption of the G. dun, a hill or fort, e.g., EDDERTON, near Tain, is just eadar duin, 'between the hillocks;' and away in the south, near to the boundary-line of the Tweed, stands EARLSTON, a simple name enough, one would think; but Earlston is just the result of careless tongues. In 1144 the name was Ercheldon, which at once shows that here is the 'Ercildune' famed as the birthplace of Thomas the Rymer. To return for a moment to burgh, it may be noted that, with the partial exceptions already mentioned, all other Scottish -burghs are comparatively modern, except perhaps three—SUMBURGH, southmost point of distant Zetland, the Svinborg of the Sagas; ROXBURGH, which we find away back as early as 1134, 'Rokesburch,' presumably meaning 'castle on the rock;' and thirdly, and most curious of all, NEWBURGH in Fife, which, as we saw a few pages back, is possibly the very oldest extant English name in Scotland. Of recent burghs we may mention COLINSBURGH, built c. 1696; MARYBURGH, near Dingwall, c. 1690; and HELENSBURGH, which only dates from 1776.

Ham, O.E. hám, is just our winsome English word 'home,' the original a being preserved in the Sc. hame. A typical example is COLDINGHAM or WHITTINGHAM, though hams, called after Saxon men, are much rarer north than south of the Tweed. Instances not connected with any man's name are BIRGHAM in Berwick and KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM, near Dumfries. EAGLESHAM, the only ham near Glasgow, is a deceptive hybrid, meaning 'church-place' (W. eglwys, G. eaglais, a church). Ham often gets clipped down, for h easily vanishes in an Englishman's mouth, and in a Scotsman's too, if only he were aware of it. Almost no Scotsman, e.g., will pronounce the h in such a sentence as 'John told me that he said,' &c. Thus ham becomes am, as in BIRNAM, and EDNAM, 'home on the R. Eden,' or yet more disguised, as in MIDDLEM, or EDROM, 'home on the R. Adder.' There is one lonely but very interesting ham away up near Forse in Caithness, 'Notingham,' which is so spelt in the Bk. of Scone in 1272.

It is generally said that -ing- in O.E. place-names implies 'descendants of,' e.g., SYMINGTON was thought to be the ton or village of Sym's sons. But in every case of -ing- occurring in a Scottish place-name, so far as we have been able to trace the origin of the names, the -ing- is a later corruption, generally of an, in, or on. See ABINGTON, COLDINGHAM, COVINGTON, DUDDINGSTON, LAMINGTON, UDDINGSTON, &c.¹

As with names Norse so with names English, of English prefixes there are but few (burgh has been already referred to), but English suffixes are almost innumerable, the most of them requiring little or no elucidation. There is, e.g., the little cluster signifying some kind of height or eminence—hill itself, as in Maryhill, Townhill; knowe, the softened Scottish form of knoll, O.E. cnoll (cf. the Dan. knold and W. enol, a (rounded) hillock), just as How is the Scottish form of the O.E. holg, and Pow the Scottish form of the G. poll, a stream or pool; this we find in BROOMIEKNOWE, COWDENKNOWES, &c.; law, the Scottish form of the O.E. hlæw, a hill, a mound, a barrow, as in GREENLAW, HARLAW, LARGO LAW, and also in many hybrids like the LAM-

¹ No doubt such English names as Barking and Woking are real patronymics, and do denote the abode of a family or clan.

MERLAWS, the well-known cliffs at Burntisland, and like MINTLAW. The English form low, as in Ludlow and Taplow, plentiful though it be south of the Border, does not seem to occur in Scotland. To this little group of suffixes mount can hardly be added, for the Scottish -mounts or -monts almost all represent the G. monadh, a mountain or moor, as in ESSLEMONT, GLASMONT, &c.

In many cases it would be more correct to say that a given suffix or word is Scots rather than English, which just means that the word, or often simply the form, though once used in northern literary English, is now preserved only in Lowland Scots. Neither knowe, e.g., nor law is to be found at all in Annandale's most reliable Concise English Dictionary; another instance is that very interesting word kirk or 'church,' fully dealt with in our Index. It may just be added that a charter dating a. 1124, which mentions 'Selechirche' or SELKIRK, is earlier than any document quoted by Dr Murray for the soft or ch form of the O.E. cyrc, our modern church. An interesting instance is -gate, which in Scottish place-names like CROSSGATES, TRONGATE, WINDYGATES, always has its Scottish meaning of 'way,' 'road.' 'I gae'd a weary gate yestreen, a gate I fear I'll dearly rue.' In Scots, unlike both O.E. and Mod. Eng., it never means a door or entrance; but the well-known Border pronunciation 'yet,' which is the English not the Scottish gate, is to be found in YETHOLM, that Roxburgh hamlet at the 'gate' between Scotland and England. Similar is -water, still on the Scottish borders pronounced like the O.E. waeter, which means not only the brook or burn itself, but also the valley through which it flows, as in Galawater, Jedwater, Rulewater: 'Nor Yarrow braes nor Ettrick shaws can match the lads o' Galawater.' A curious and deceiving suffix is -battle. MOREBATTLE, near Kelso, looks very like some bloodthirsty borderer's cry. But when we find the name on record in 1170 as Merebotle, we see that the true meaning is the 'dwelling (O.E. botl) by the mere' or lake. By 1575 it had become Morbottle; it is only within the present century that the o, through ignorance, has become permanently changed to a; and the same is true of fair NEWBATTLE Abbey, near Dalkeith. The Northumbrians still retain the o, as in Harbottle; and there is a Newbottle near Durham. The O.E. botl is also found smothered up in the name BOLTON, which c. 1200 was spelt Botel- or Bothel-tune.

So far as sound goes, the ending -haven might indicate either an English (O.E. hæfen) or a Norse (Icel. höfn, Dan. havn) name; but, as a matter of fact, most of the 'havens' are demonstrably English, and late in origin; e.g., both BUCKHAVEN and NEWHAVEN, on the Frith of Forth, date only from the 16th century. And some 'havens' do not mean a haven at all: such an one is that tautological-looking name belonging to an Islay village, spelt PORTNAHAVEN, but pronounced portnahávn, which at once shows that this is really the G. port na h'abhúinn, 'harbour on the river.'

In looking for truly English names two of our preliminary cautions must always be kept well in view:—(1) Many names may be partly English and partly something else; e.g., that name dear to every Scottish heart, BANNOCKBURN. 'Burn' is good Scottish or O.E., but 'bannock' is neither Scots nor English, and has nothing to do with flour or pease-meal scones: it is just the G. ban cnoc, 'white' or 'gleaming knoll.' BARRHEAD has nothing to do with toll-bars or any other bars, the 'head' simply repeating what has already been said in the G. barr (a head or height). In GOREBRIDGE, near Dalkeith, the 'bridge' is English without doubt; but the gore has nothing to do either with blood or bulls, being the innocent Gaelic word gobhar, a goat. Another well-known name is GLASSFORD, near Hamilton, a name which pictures to the mind's eye some shallow spot in a river of glassy smoothness. 'Ford,' indeed, is English, but the 'glass' is just the common G. glais or glas, grey or dark, as in DUNGLASS, GLASMONT, and many more; or else it is the Old G. glas, a river, as in DOUGLAS and great GLASGOW itself.

All the examples given for our first caveat would serve well for the second, viz. :—(2) An English-looking name may not be English at all. Look well before you leap. We shall just point out one or two more conspicuous instances of the need of this. There are several glens with deceptively English-like names, e.g., mighty Glen LYON, which is probably the G. lithe amhuinn (the h has silenced both the t and the m), 'spatey river.' A little to the south is Glen ALMOND; both the Scottish rivers called Almond were formerly spelt Awmon, showing that here we have simply one of the many guises of the G. amhuinn, a river. Glen Howl, in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, has no connection with cries or roars; it is but the G. gleann-a-ghabail, 'glen of the fork,' where two streams join. And again, in the Highlands, as in Ireland, we meet with many a Letter-. But they were all there long before the days of the Post Office. The first syllable in LETTERFEARN or LETTERFINLAY is just the G. leitir (leth-tir), 'land on the slope of a glen.'

It is both curious and interesting to know that the 'Cockney' very early began to prefix his hs to Scottish names. The hand of an English scribe is clearly seen in such forms as Habberden, Haberbervi, Hinernairn, and Heeles, all found in MSS. of about the year 1290.¹ Though the definite article is so rare at the beginning of Celtic names it is common enough before English ones; but, for euphony's sake, it seems only to be used with words accented on the first syllable, as 'The Lochies (Burntisland), the Methil (Leven), and the Redding (Polmont).

Many types of names very common in England seem wholly wanting in Scotland. In England 'Great' abounds as an appellation—Great Malvern, and the like; but in Scotland there are none. The same remark holds true about 'Little,' unless we count 'The Little Ferry,' near Dornoch, as an exception. Again, 'Market' and 'Stoke' (i.e., place) are very common Anglican prefixes and suffixes, as in Market Drayton, and Bishopstoke, and many more; but in Scotland they are never used at all.

¹ See Rev. Joseph Stevenson's very interesting collection of Documents Illustrative of the History of Scotland, vol. i., under the years 1289-92, and the itineraries and accounts of expenditure of Englishmen quoted there.

CHAPTER IV.

ROMAN, NORMAN, AND PURELY MODERN NAMES.

IN strict propriety the Roman names should have been dealt with before either the English or the Norse ones; but they form a group so small and so unimportant, that little harm can be done by treating them along with those names which stand last in historic sequence, the little handful from the Norman-French, which is, of course, one of Latin's many daughters. The Roman left a deep mark on Southern Britain, and his memory is preserved in many a name there. But even though Rome's legions, from the days of Agricola onwards for more than 300 years, may have marched many a league and thrown up many a camp in North Britain, they never could make much dint upon the hardy savage of Caledonia in his bogs and woods; and traces of Roman influence north of the Roman Wall 'twixt Forth and Clyde are but trifling. England is literally covered with -casters, -cesters, and -chesters, all denoting the site of a camp of the invaders, L. castrum or castra; but, surprising to relate, there is not one such compound name in Scotland, unless it be BONCHESTER Bridge, in the neighbourhood of Hawick. Close by is a place called the Chesters; and any large map of the Border district will show a good many names like Chester Knowes (Chirnside), Chester Hill and Rig (Traquair), Chester Lees (Tweedsmuir); and at most of these spots there are remains of circular or oval hill forts. It is quite certain that the Romans were in Berwick and Peeblesshire; but it is not quite certain that these names are of Roman origin. Of course, in no case is their second part Roman; and Professor Veitch thinks that these Peeblesshire 'Chesters' were the last retreats of the Cymri or Brythons of Forth and Clyde, the forts where they made their final but unsuccessful stand against Piet, and Scot, and Angle. Of any other real Roman names there seems no trace. Verily 'Stat nominis umbra.'

Many a broad acre of Scotland's best land was gifted into Norman hands. But Dr Skene (Celtic Scotl., i. 430) thinks that the Normans, who are just our old friends the Norsemen back again with an infusion of new blood and with a new tongue, had no perceptible influence on Scottish affairs till the reign of David I. (1124-53), a date too late to allow of much result in the way of place-names. And the later frequent intercourse between the courts of France and Scotland had practically no influence on our topography at all. Even as the Gael's common name for his village was bal or baile, and as the Saxon's regular name for the hamlet round his thane's castle was ham or ton, so the Norman's regular name for the castle-village was ville, from the L. villa, a country-house or farm. Ville, in Scotland, has seldom survived uncorrupted, though we have both a MELVILLE and a MOUNT MELVILLE in Fife. Now, in Fife charters of the days of Alexander II. (1214-49), we find notice of a Norman knight called 'Philippus de Malavilla;' and so Melville has the strange meaning of 'the bad (? unhealthy) town.' A 'Galfred de Melville' is found in the Lothians in 1153; in all probability, therefore, 'the bad town' was no place in Scotland, but some spot in Normandy, from which Galfred or his forefathers took their name. The writer does not know of any other villes in Scotland; for, of course, such a vile compound as JEMIMAVILLE (Cromarty) is not a case in point.¹ But we have still among us such common surnames as Bonville, Colvill (sic 1158), and Somerville (1158, Sumervilla).

Moreover, ville was not unfrequently Anglicised into -well, as in Maxwell, already thus c. 1190, which is just ‘Maccus’ ville.’ The man Maccus or Macus we find mentioned in the Melrose charters c. 1144. There is no Scottish place now called Maxwell; but there is a MAXWELLTON, which is just a part of Dumfries, and also a MAXTON, near St Boswell’s. It is evidently the influence of this Norman ending -ville which has changed St Boisil’s name into ST BOSWELL’S; and we venture to think that the final syllable both in BOTHWELL² and MANUEL (Linlithgow) is due to the same influence (see List).

A Norman noble, De Belassize, has given his name to one of the North British Railway stations on the Waverley route, BELSES; and LUNDIN LINKS in Fife owe their title to the family of De Lundin, who are found in Fife in the 12th century, and who were at that time the Scottish king’s hereditary hostiarii, doorkeepers, or ‘door-wards,’ hence the modern surname, Durward. One of the most famous Norman families in Scotland was the Lindsays, whose name we see in Lindsaylands, near Biggar. In an appendix to the Lives of the Lindsays (vol. i.) we find a curious list of no less than eighty-eight spellings of this name, which have all actually been found in some old charter or letter, varying in length from the ten letters of Lyndyssaye to the five of Lynse, which last, if the final e be sounded, gives the exact modern pronunciation. BEDRULE, near Jedburgh, does not come from the W. bedw, a birch, as Professor Veitch supposes. In 1280 its name was Rulebethok, and Bethoc was wife of the Norman Radulph, the earliest known lord of the manor here (c. 1150). The name Bedrule is still locally pronounced bethorule, or was so quite recently, as Dr J. A. H. Murray informed the writer ; though, of course, his old schoolmaster at Denholm, near by, was wont to teach that such a pronunciation was ignorant and vulgar! Bethoc, however, is hardly a Norman name ; we find it again, a. 1300, in the Registrum Aberdonense, in a ‘Kynbethok.’ RULE is, of course, the name of a river.

On a beautiful spot at the head of what is now the BEAULY Frith the monks Vallis umbrosæ founded a priory (c. 1220), which we, in 1230, find styled Prioratus de Bello Loco. The pure French spelling Beau lieu, ‘beautiful spot,’ also occurs ; and in 1497 we meet with ‘Beulie,’ the present pronunciation. Beaulieu, as most are aware, is also the name of a village in Hants, formerly seat of a Cistercian monastery ; which name is also pronounced beuly. Well did the old monks know how to choose out the fairest sites. BELMONT, ‘fine hill,’ is a common name for modern residences ; but we also find it attached to hills, not only in the Sidlaw range, but even away up in Unst. But perhaps the naming has been quite recent. MONTROSE is very French-looking, but we already know that it is just the G. moine trois, ‘moss’ or ‘bog on the promontory.’ Such names as BONNYBRIDGE and BONNYRIGG are usually thought to be at least half French ; but it is doubtful whether the Sc. bonny has really anything directly to do with the

Fr. bon, bonne, good. BURDIEHOUSE, near Edinburgh, is, according to the common tradition, a corruption of 'Bordeaux-house.' Grant in Old and New Edinburgh (iii. 342), thinks that it was probably so called from being the residence of some of the exiled French silk-weavers, the same exiled Huguenots who settled so largely in Spitalfields, London. They also founded the now vanished village of Picardy, between Edinburgh and Leith, whose name is still preserved on the old site by 'Picardy Place.'

Cape, a headland, is just the Fr. cap, head or cape; thus we have few 'capes' in Scotland, and those few, such as Cape Wrath, of quite modern application. Gulf, the Fr. golfe, is not represented at all, either in Scotland or England.

A few quite recent names still remain, calling for a passing word. And, be it remarked, even though a name has sprung up within the last couple of centuries, its origin is by no means invariably easy to trace; e.g., the writer has not yet been able to trace the exact origin of ALEXANDRIA in the Vale of Leven, or of that German-sounding village near Arbroath, called FRIOCKHEIM, but on local tongues Fréackem, although the former is only a little more than a century old, and the latter very much less. Nor does he know why a certain spot in Ayrshire has been called PATNA; nor why a little railway station near Holytown has been dubbed with the Honduras name of OMOA. But he presumes it must have been some Bible lover (?) who christened JOPPA, near Edinburgh, about the beginning of this century, and who planted both a Jordan and a Canaan Lane on the south side of that same city. There is also a Jordanhill to the west of Glasgow, and a PADANARAM near Forfar.

Some recent names are, of course, very easily solved; as, for instance, the three well-known forts planted along the Caledonian valley to overawe the Highlanders at different periods from 1655 to 1748, and called after scions of the reigning house, FORT WILLIAM, FORT AUGUSTUS, and FORT GEORGE. Battles have pretty frequently been commended to the memory of posterity by a place-name; e.g., we have a farm on the south shore of the Dornoch Frith called BALACLAVA, its former name having been Balnuig ('farm town on the bay'). PORTOBELLO, near Edinburgh, like Portobello, near Wolverhampton, takes its name from a seaport on the Isthmus of Darien, where Admiral Vernon won a great victory for Britain in 1739. The name means 'beautiful harbour;' but, as most people know, the Edinburgh watering-place is not itself specially beautiful, and it certainly has no harbour.

The suburbs of the large cities have, of course, modern, and often purely fancy, names; such are TRINITY, near Edinburgh, MAGDALEN GREEN, Dundee, and MOUNT FLORIDA and MOUNT VERNON on the outskirts of Glasgow. The latter name occurs in the Glasgow Directory of 1787. Probably all the place-names north of Inverness, which are neither Gaelic nor Norse, are quite recent; e.g., THE MOUND and THE POLES, near Dornoch, and BETTYHILL, between Thurso and Tongue, the market knoll or stance of the district, so called after Elizabeth, Marchioness of Stafford (c. 1820).

CHAPTER V.

ECCLESIASTICAL NAMES.

FROM the earliest times a distinguishing and far from unpraiseworthy feature of the Scot has always been his warm attachment to the church. The Norseman, a pagan born, drinking to Thor and Wodin, dreaming of Asgard and Valhalla, and, long after his nominal conversion to Christ, a pagan at heart, has left little mark on the ecclesiastical nomenclature of Scotland; the Angle, whose conversion, thanks largely to Iona missionaries, was more real, has left considerable impress here. But the warm-hearted, pious, and always somewhat superstitious Celt has left far more. His personal names, too, have often a churchly flavour; e.g., Macnab, 'abbot's son,' Mackellar, 'the superior's son,' MacBrair, 'the friar's son,' Gilchrist, 'servant of Christ,' Gillespie, 'servant of the bishop,' &c.

Till 1469 Orkney and Shetland had the Bishop of Trondhjem as their ecclesiastical superior; but for all that the Norse churchly names may be dismissed in a few sentences. All northern 'kirks' have received their name from Norse lips, as HALKIRK, KIRKWALL, and KIRKABY; but these are not many. Near Kirkwall, seat of the Bishop of Orkney, stands QUANTERNESSE, and quanter- is the Icel. kantari, which enters as an element into a good many Icelandic words; it is an adaptation of the Canter- in holy Canterbury (O.E.

Cantwaraburh), being used in Icel. for 'bishop.' Then we have the oft-recurring PAPA, and its derivatives PAPILL and PAPLAY, as local names in Orkney and Shetland. Papa is a Latin name for 'a bishop,' in use as early as Tertullian; the Norsemen at first gave the name to any Christian, but soon it came to be applied only to 'a priest.' We have already explained North RONALDSAY as = 'St Ringan's' or 'Ninian's isle,' and that same saint's name reappears in St Ninian's Isle in Shetland. We do not remember any other Orcadian or Zetland isle bearing the name of a saint.¹ A curiously corrupted name, half Celtic, half Danish, is CLOSEBURN, in Dumfriesshire. It has nothing in the world to do with either a close or a burn. In the 12th century the name appears as Kylosbern, though already in 1278 it has donned its present guise. The early form shows that here we have another of the superabundant Celtic kils; only this was the 'cell' or 'church' of a Norse saint; for Osborne is the N. Asen-björn, 'the bear of the Asen' or 'gods.'

Over the true English church-names we must linger a little longer. Seeing that English-speaking monks were at one time owners of a large proportion of the whole area of Scotland, it is not strange that we should find not a few English ecclesiastical place-names. We have both a MONKTON and a NUNTON, the one near Troon, the other away beside Lochmaddy, but both pronounced almost alike, i.e., the local habitants always talk of 'the Munton.' 'Abbey' and 'Abbot' occur again and again in places—ABBEY CRAIG, ABBEY HILL, ABBOTSFORD, ABBOTSGRANGE, ABBOTSHALL, as well as ABBEY ST BATHAN'S. The 'bishop' has left his name too, though he has long since lost the lands, as in BISHOPBRIGGS (see p. lxi) and BISHOPTON: even the humble priest (O.E., preost) has come in for his share of mention. There are at least fifteen Prestons in England, and at least two in Scotland, besides PRESTON-KIRK, PRESTONPANS, and PRESTWICK.

Probably all the many 'kirks' south of Caithness are of English origin. 'Kirk' is the O.E. cyrc; but already by the 12th century, in Scotland (e.g., a. 1124, Selechirche or SELKIRK) as well as in England, the hard c often became the soft ch; and perhaps it may be useful here to inform the benighted Southron that educated Scottish people do not now, as a rule, speak about their 'kirk.' Kirk occurs both as prefix, suffix, and alone, as in KIRKMAIDEN or Maidenkirk, Wigtown, KIRKBUDDO, KIRKCOLM, CHANNELKIRK, FALKIRK, LAURENCEKIRK, and Kirk o' Shotts. There are many Kirktons in Scotland, corresponding to the Kirtons of England, just as the Scotch KIRKABY (O.N. kirkia-bi) corresponds to the English Kirby, in West Kirby, Kirby Stephen, &c. The old, full name of Golspie was 'Golspiekirkton,' and there is a farm called Kirkton there still. KIRKCALDY is English only so far as the kirk is concerned. Popular etymology long explained the name as 'church of the Culdees.' But in the St Andrews charters, c. 1150, the name is 'Kircaladinit,' i.e., 'church by the wood of the den' or glen, (in G. coille dinait,) which bonny wooded 'Den' stands there to this day.

All place-names in the form of St ——'s are also, of course, to a certain extent, English; but only a few are called after really English saints. Take the first two examples which would occur alphabetically—ABBEY ST BATHAN'S, Berwick, and ST ANDREWS; Bathan, or rather Baithen, was a Scot, i.e., an Irish Celt, and was the man who succeeded Columba in the abbacy of Iona, 597 A.D. His name is also commemorated in the north in the hill called Torr Beathan, near Inverness. St Andrew, Scotland's present patron saint, is of course the apostle of that name, whose bones, as a dubious tradition declares, were brought to the east of Fife by St Regulus. But the church built by this last saint (? 400 A.D.) was called by his own name, till rechristened in the middle of the 9th century as 'St Andrews,' by King Kenneth Macalpine. For long, whenever this ancient bishop's see is referred to in any document it is in its Latin form, e.g., in 1158, 'St Andrae;' but as early at least as 1434 we find 'Sanctandrowis,' and in 1497 'Sanctandris.' The old Celtic name of the place was Kilrymont, or, as Abbot Tighernac has it, Cindrighmonaigh, 'the church,' or else 'the head, the promontory of the king's mount.'

Among real English or Anglian saints who have given their names to places in Scotland are the Abbess Æbba, sister of Oswald of Northumbria, commemorated in ST ABB'S HEAD, and St Boisil, contemporary of Æbba, and Prior of Melrose, while the great Cuthbert was being educated there, whose name is preserved in the well-known railway junction, ST BOSWELL'S; however, the old name of the parish here, until the 17th century, was Lessuden. Then, of course, there is St Cudberct, better known as St Cuthbert, great pastor and bishop, missionary too all over Northumbria, most lovable of all the Saxon saints. By far the most populous parish in Scotland, 'St Cuthbert's,' Midlothian, embracing a large portion of Edinburgh itself, is called after him. His name appears in a slightly altered spelling in KIRKCUDBRIGHT, whose present pronunciation, Kircóobry, must have been in vogue as early as c. 1450, when the town's name stands recorded as 'Kirkubrih.' The Gael has made the saint's name into Cudachan (see CLACHNACUDDAN). The name of Canmore's saintly Saxon queen is still preserved in 'St Margaret's,' Queen's Park, Edinburgh, and in the two ST MARGARET'S HOPES, or ship-refuges, one at Queensferry, the other at South Ronaldsay.¹

The Celtic ecclesiastical names form, perhaps, the most puzzling and complex portion of our subject, a portion which it needs much care and skill to unravel. One can hardly say that the whole subject has been set in clear daylight yet, notwithstanding all that members of the Scottish Society of Antiquaries have done. Many of the old Celtic saints and saintesses are to us very dim and hazy personages, almost lost in the clouds of legend and the mists of antiquity; and their identity is often very difficult to establish, especially when, as is frequently the case, two or three bear the same name.

Once more let it be pointed out, that though the Celt never showed any great anxiety to hand down the name of his own humble self attached to some village or glen, he never wearied of thus commemorating his favourite or patron saints. The majority of the saints brought before us in Scottish place-names were either friends and contemporaries of St Columba, or belong to the century immediately thereafter, the 7th. After 700 the Celtic Church began to wax rich and slothful, and its priests were embalmed in grateful memory no more. Foreign saints are rarely met with. KILMARTIN (Lochgilthead), called after good St Martin of Tours, the preceptor of St Ninian, is an easily understood exception. Why the French St Maurus should appear in KILMAURS is not quite so plain. The first in all the Scottish calendar, and, presumably, the first bringer of Christianity to Scotland, was St Ninian of Whithorn, born c. 360 A.D., whose name also appears as Ringan and Rinan. He is commemorated in twenty-five churches or chapels, extending from Ultima Thule to the Mull of Galloway. MAIDENKIRK, near that Mull, is now believed to be the kirk of St Medana, a friend of Ninian. Some have thought that the Nen- in NENTHORN, near Kelso, is a contraction of his name, but the original form is 'Nathan's thorn.'

If Ninian, first of Scottish saints and missionaries, has received twenty-five commemorations, it is no marvel that Columba of Iona (521-597), greatest of them all, has had fifty-five Scottish places called after him, either places of worship, or spots or wells sacred to him; and there are forty-one others in his native Ireland. Of course the saint's name is seldom or never now found as Columba, 'dove,' its Latin shape, but rather in its Celtic form, Colum; e.g., on the west coast there are six isles called Eilean Colum or 'Colm's isle,' in Loch Erisort, Loch Arkeg, the Minch, &c. Then there is Iona itself, often called alternatively Icolmkill, 'island of Colum-cille' or 'Colm of the churches.' For, in sooth, if men called John Henry Newman 'father of many souls,' other men might well call earnest, much-travelling Columba, founder or 'father of many churches.' Sometimes his name is clipped down into Comb, as in Eilean Comb, Tongue; or even into Com, as in GILCOMSTON, Aberdeen, 'the place of the gillie' or 'servant of Columba.'

With the exception of two about to be mentioned, the saint most frequently honoured, next to Columba and Ninian, has been Donan, the former's contemporary and friend, and, to their honour be it said, the only martyr who died by pagan hands in Scotland; and even his death at Eigg, by order of the Pictish queen, is said to have been rather for political reasons. Donan's name lies sprinkled all over the map of Scotland from the north of Sutherland to the south of Arran. These things being so, it is somewhat strange that the great Kentigern or Mungo, bringer of the glad tidings to Glasgow and Strathclyde, should have received such very scanty remembrance. No place-name seems to embody 'Kentigern;' there is a BALMUNGO, but quite likely it has nothing to do with the saint.

Bishop Reeves, the valued editor of Adamnan, has drawn attention to the marked contrast between the names of the parishes on the east and those on the west of Scotland. On the east the names are chiefly secular, even though chiefly Celtic, and probably date from remote pagan times. But on the west the parochial names, in a large number of cases, are found to combine with the prefix Kil- (G. cill, ceall, a monk's cell, then a church, also a grave; see KILARROW), the name of some venerated Scoto-Irish saint. Undoubted instances of this on the east coast are rare. We have, near Beauly, KILMORACK, 'church of St Moroc,' and KILTARLITY, from St Talargain, and KILRENNY (Anstruther), probably from St Ringan, or, perhaps, St Irenæus, but not many more. There are many other names in Kil-, as KILDRUMMY (Aberdeen), KILLEN (Avoch), KILMENY (Fife), and Kilmore (Loth); but in these the kil- may be G. coil, a wood; and, in any case, their second halves do not stand for any saint. KILCONQUHAR (Elie) and KILSPINDIE (Errol) are two very curious names, which can hardly commemorate any saint either (q.v.). Dr Reeves' contrast is true not only of the parish names, but the names generally; e.g., take the case of St Columba. All along the east coast we find but one INCHCOLM, while, as we have just mentioned, there are six instances of an Eilean Colum ('Colm's isle') on the west. Yet the monasteries of Deer (Aberdeen) and St Serf (Kinross) are, to say no more, sufficient proof that the Columban missionaries did not neglect the east.

Students of the Origines Parochiales know that there were many more 'Kils-' among the names of the ancient parishes than among the modern ones. And, just as we still have churches called 'Christchurch' or 'Trinity Church,' so do we find that the old name of the parish of Strathy in Skye, and the old name of the parish where Muir of Ord now stands, was KILCHRIST, the variants Kirkchrist and Cristiskirk also occurring. The first Norse church in Orkney, built a. 1064, was known as 'Christ's Kirk in Birsay,' such a name being given by the Norse only to a cathedral church. There was also at least one Kil Iosa, 'church of Jesus,' and near Beaully is KILTEARN, in 1269 Keltiern, the G. ceall Tighearn, 'church of the Lord;' whilst on Blaeu's map of North Uist we find a KILTRINIDAD, now called Teampul-na-Trianaide, 'church of the Trinity.'

Many of these ancient Celtic saints have had their names so twisted and distorted by centuries of tongues, ignorant alike of spelling and hagiology, that now the personages themselves are hardly recognisable. It needs clever eyes to see St Comgan in KILCHOAN, and yet cleverer to recognise Talargyn (d. 616) in KILTARLITY, or Begha in KILBUCHO. St Begha, disciple of St Aidan and Abbess Hilda, is the well-known English St Bees. Recognition is made all the more difficult from the warm-hearted Celt's frequent habit of prefixing to the saint's name mo or ma, 'my own,' which signifies endearment, and of affixing an -oe, -og, or -aig (cf. G. òg, 'young'), which is a kind of pet diminutive. Thus KILMARONOCK, near Alexandria, like Kilmaronog on Loch Etive, really means 'church of my dear little Ronan.' But KILMARNOCK is really Kilmaernanog, from St Ernan, of the 7th century. This unaccented ma explains the true and still largely-preserved pronunciation of that pretty Renfrewshire village, KILMALCOLM, pronounced Kilmäcóm, 'church of my own Columba;' and Robert of Gloucester (371, edit. 1724) in 1297 writes of our Scottish monarch as 'Kyng Macolom.'

The two names which, above all the rest, have gone through the most extraordinary and varied vicissitudes, almost rivalling the fate of the Norse bolstaðr (pp. lxiv–lxv), are Adamnan and Maolrubha. Adamnan, a man of royal Irish blood, and Abbot of Iona (679–704), is far famed as Columba's biographer. His name means 'little Adam,' and in Lowland Scots it would be 'Adie.' The unaccented initial A easily goes; and we find that, through aspiration, the two aspirable consonants here, d and m, in many cases go too. Thus all that is left of 'Adamnan' is sometimes no more than eon, as in ARDEONAIG, pronounced arjónaig, on Loch Tay, 'height of my own Adamnan,' or than eun as in Ben Eunaich (Eunog), Dalmally. In Orkney all that is left is dam, as in DAMSEY, the old Daminsey, 'Adamnan's isle.' The saint's name appears as veon (v=dh) in KILMAVEONAIG (Blair-Athole), as ennan in Kirkennan (Galloway), as innan in INCHINNAN, Paisley; whilst in Aberdeenshire his name is pronounced Teunan or Theunan.

Maolrubha is a saint who hailed from the Irish Bangor. In 671 he came over and founded the monastery of Applecross in West Ross; and in that district his name is still preserved in Loch MAREE, which, contrary to popular tradition, does not mean 'Mary's Loch.' The Modern Gaelic for Mary is Maire, but the older form, and that which is always applied to the Virgin Mother, is More; thus we have in Scotland, as in Ireland, several 'Kilmorys;' hence, too, is TOBERMORY, 'Mary's well,' whose Lowland equivalent is MOTHERWELL. But the name of St Maolrubha has had to endure far more than this. In the older forms of the place-names his name is sometimes preserved with tolerable plainness, e.g., the old name of Ashig in Strath (Skye) was Askimilruby; and in 1500 the name of KILARROW (Islay) was Kilmolrow, in 1511 it was spelt Kilmorow, in 1548 Kilmarrow, whilst to-day the m has, through aspiration, clean vanished away. The old saint's name appears in another shape in AMULREE (Dunkeld), which is just ath Maolrubha, 'Maolrubha's ford;' and Dr Reeves mentions Sammareve's Fair, held in Keith o' Forres, as also embodying his name.

Maolrubha must be carefully distinguished from St Moluag of Lismore, patron saint of Argyle and friend of Columba, who died in 592. His name is to be found unaltered in Kilmoluag (Tiree, Mull, and Skye), and almost so in Kilmolowok (Raasay). The change is more violent in Knockmiláuk, 'Moluag's hill,' near Whithorn. KILMALLOW (Lismore) has sometimes been thought to come from the saint of Applecross; but the form Kilmaluog, also preserved, shows that this cannot be. The parishes of Raasay and Kilmuir, in Skye, both once bore this same name, Kilmaluog; and Kilmalew was the old name of the parish of Inveraray. Moluag's original name was Leu or Lua, perhaps the L. lupus, a wolf; the Gaelic spelling was Lugaidh. The final syllable has been dropped, and the endearing mo and the pet suffix -oc have been added, hence the forms Moluoc, Moluag, or Molua; the curious spellings Malogue, Mulvay, and Molingus also occur. Somewhat similar in composition is the name of St Modoc, a saint of the Welsh calendar—a rare thing to find in Scotland. The basal name is Aidan = Aedh-an, 'little Hugh,' then Mo-aedh-oc, Moedoc, Modoc. His name we see in KILMADOCK, Doune. On the other hand, we have a few pseudo-saints, like St Brycedale, long the residence of good old Patrick Swan of Kirkcaldy. Of course there never was such a being; the name is really St Bryce's dale, Bryce being a corruption, less common than Bride, of that worthy woman St Brigid of Kildare, whose name is so dear to Irish tongues as Bridget (cf. KILBRIDE). A worse fraud is ST FORT, near Dundee, a silly modern corruption of Sandford, the old name of the estate there.

In Scotland by far the commonest prefix to denote 'church' or 'chapel' is kil. But the Brythonic llan, llan, or lan is also found. This word means (1) a fertile, level spot, (2) an enclosure, (3) a church, with which three meanings the student may find it interesting to compare the similar meanings which appertain to the L. templum, itself also often adopted into Gaelic as teampull, a church or holy cell. Scottish lans are rare; the chief is LHANBRYDE, Elgin, 'St Bridget's church;' but LANARK, c. 1188 Lamarc, must contain the word also, though the second syllable is hard to expound with certainty. In Wales llan-super-abounds. Professor Veitch, in his most interesting History of the Scottish Border, says there are 97 there; but there are actually 187 given in the Postal Guide alone.

Besides kil and lan, the Scotch Celt also occasionally adapted for himself the Latin (or Greek) ecclesia, a church; thus we have ECCLES, near Coldstream, as well as three others south of the Tweed; thus, too, comes ECCLEFECHAN, 'church of St Fechan,' that saint's name having the pretty meaning of 'little raven;' also ECCLESMACHAN (Linlithgow) and ECCLESIAMAGIRDLE (S.E. Perthshire), which queer-sounding appellation means 'church of my own Griselda' or 'Grizel;' and, strangest of all, LESMAHAGOW, 'church of St Machute.' In a charter of 1195 we find St Ninian's, Stirling, called 'the church of Egglis,' which approximates to the G. eaglais, a church; itself, of course, like the W. eglwys, a mere adaptation of ecclesia. M'Dowell (History of Dumfries, p. 37) mentions an estate of Eccles, Penpont, which he says was called after a certain Elsi or Eklis, a knight-templar of the reign of David I.

That same modesty and retiringness which kept back the Celt from giving his own name to his hamlet or farm led him, when he became a devout Christian, to dwell much in seclusion. Hence the very name Culdee or Cuilteach, 'man of the recess' or 'nook.' The Roman missionaries sought busy, wealthy Canterbury or York; but the men of Iona, like the hermits of Egypt and Syria long before, chose rather some dwelling-place like wild Tiree, as did Baithean, or wilder Rona as did Ronan. Their retreats or cells or caves were wont to be called deserta, adapted into Gaelic as discart, where it also has the meaning of a place for the reception of pilgrims. Hence we have DYSART, in Fife, still called by George Buchanan Diserta, and Dysart, near Montrose; and hence, e.g., the old name of the parish of Glenorchy, Dysart or Clachandysert. These Diserts or Dyserts are still more common in Erin's isle.

- ABBOTRULE (Roxburgh). a. 1153, Rula Herevei; 1220, Ecclesia de Rule Abbatis (gen. of L. abbas, abbot); 1275, Abotrowl. The RULE is a river; cf. BEDRULE, and, as to Hereveus, HALLRULE. The name prob. means the lands in Rulewater belonging to the Abbot of Jedburgh. 'Abbot,' fr. L. abbas, abba-tis or -dis, is so spelt in Eng. as early as c. 1123.
- ABBOTSFORD. That used by the monks of Melrose Abbey.
- ABBOTSGRANGE and ABBOTSLAUGH (Grangemouth). The land here formerly belonged to Newbattle Abbey. 'Grange,' in the L. charters granagium (fr. granum, 'grain'), now often = 'a farm,' was the place where the rents and tithes of a religious house used to be delivered and deposited. 'Haugh' is common Sc. for meadow-land by a river; prob. fr. Icel. hagi, a pasture.
- ABBOTSHALL (Kirkcaldy). Now a parish; once connected with Dunfermline Abbey. 'Hall' is O.E. heal, heall.
- ABB'S HEAD (St). 1461, Sanct Abbis Heid. Fr. Æbba, sister of King Oswald of Northumbria, and first Abbess of Coldingham, close by, c. 650 A.D. 'Head,' O.E. heafod, is precisely similar in use to G. ceann or ken-, Icel. höfuth, and Fr. cap, which all mean both the head and a cape.

- ABDEN (Kinghorn). Old, Abthen, Abthania, lands of Dunfermline Abbey. The word is an adoption of G. abdhaine, abbacy or abbotric, fr. G. abaid, abbey. In Chartul. Arbroath, a. 1200, is 'Ecclesia Sancta Mariæ de veteri Munros (Montrose) quæ Scotice (i.e., in Gaelic) Abthen vocatur.' In the Exchequer Rolls occurs 'Abden of Kettins,' Forfar.

- ABERARGIE (Perth). Old, Apurfeirt = Aber-farg; R. Farg is fr. G. feargach, fierce, fr. feary, anger; the f has disappeared through aspiration. Thus the name means 'confluence of the fierce river.'
- ABERCAIRNEY (Crieff). G. carnach, 'rocky place,' fr. carn, a cairn, rock. Aber- seems sometimes to occur where now we see no confluence or ford.

ABERDEEN. 1153, Snorro, Apardion; 1178, Aberdoen; 1297, Abberden; in Latin charters, Aberdonia, 'confluence of DEE' and 'DOX'; the early forms represent, seemingly, either or both. The Southerner had given the name an h before 1300. See Wardrobe Rolls, Edw. I., 23rd Sept. 1293, Haberdene.

ABERDOUR (Fife and Aberdeen). Abdn. A. in Bk. Deer, Abbordoboir. Fife A., 1126, Abirdaur; also Aberdovar, 'confluence or mouth of the stream.' See R. DOUR.

ABERLOUR (Banff). Lour is G. luath ir, 'strong water.' Ir is the Old G. bior; the connection of this word with Eng. beer is uncertain.

ABERMILK (Dumfries). 1116, Abermele. R. Milk is G. milleach, 'flowery or sweet grass,' fr. mil, L. mel, honey. This is one of the only four 'abers' in Dumfriesshire.

ABERNETHY (Perth and Inverness). Perth A., c. 970, Pict. Chron., Apurnethige; c. 1150, Ailred, Abernith; c. 1220, Abyrnythy; 1292, Abernethyn. Inv. A., 1461, Abirnethi. Here aber means the ford near the Nethy's mouth. Cf. ARBIRLOT. Invernethy stands at the actual junction with R. Earn. Nethy is usually thought to be ABINGTON (S. Lanarkshire). 1459, Albintoune, 'Albin's village.' Cf. Albyn Place, Edinburgh, and Abington, Cambridge. Abingdon, Berks, is not the same word.

ABOYNE (Deeside). c. 1260, Obyne; 1328, Obeyn; forms apt to be confused with OYNE. A- or O- will represent Old G. abh, water, river, cf. AWE; and -boyne is perh. G. boine, gen. of bo, a cow; hence 'cow's river' or 'watering-place.'

ABRIACHAN (L. Ness). G. abh-riabhach, pron. reeagh, 'grey water.'

ACHALEVEN (Argyle). G. achadh-na-leamhain, 'field of the elm.' Cf. LEVEN. There is an Auchlevyn in Registr. Aberdonense, a. 1500. In Ir. names we have Agh-, not Ach-.

Perh. the first syllable is G. abh, water, and the second, G. òrd, gen. ùird, a hill, or bòrd, gen. bùird, a board, plank; hence 'water by the hill' or 'ford with the plank.'

The -dre in c. 1295 looks like dur or dobhar, Old G. for water; cf. ADDER. The -hannent or anant might have some connection with G. ceanann (cean-fionn), 'white headed, bald.' But evidently there has been early confusion as to the real word.

Before this it was called, in the Albanic Duan, Oirir Alban, or 'coast lands of Alban,'

- AUCHENMARG BAY (Wigton). -marg might be = G. milleach, flowery (see ABERMILK); but mealy in G. is the milt of a fish, so the name might refer to the manuring of the field.
- AUCHINBLAE (Kincardine). Prob. 'field of the flowers or blooms,' G. blàth; G. bláith, is 'smooth, level.' Auchin- and Auchen- constantly interchange; both, of course, represent the article na or an.

But Rhys thinks in -arder may be a trace of Ammianus' (c. 360) 'Vertur-iones,' and Sim. Durham's (c. 1130) 'Wertermorum.' Certainly A. is in the old land of Fortrenn, which name is = Vertur-iones.

This exactly suits the case, burgh being the Eng. for dun; and with this agrees the Orkney. Sag. spelling c. 1225, Eidiniaborg. This makes connection with St Edana or Medana, the Cornish Modwenna, very doubtful, though the form Medanburgh or Maidenburgh does occur, and we find David I. (1140-50) signing charters 'apud Castellum puellarum,' or the 'Castle of the Maidens.' But, without doubt, the name of King Edwin of Northumbria (616-33) did influence the later spellings, indeed influenced the oldest spellings we have, viz., Holyrood Charter, c. 1128, 'Ecclesia Sancti Crucis Edwinesburgensis,' and Simeon Durham (died 1130), Edwinesburgh.
