

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

PREFACE.

I.

THE present volume covers the period of twelve years from 1568 to 1579, and gives the extant Exchequer Rolls for that period, along with such comptrollers' accounts as have been preserved. The Appendix contains the corresponding portions of the Rentals of Crown Lands and of the Responde Books.

Sir William Murray of Tulibardin was comptroller during the whole of this period. So far as the existing documents relating to his intromissions with the Crown revenues show, his prior accounts are noticeably incomplete.[1] It is again noteworthy that, for the whole period of twelve years now under consideration, only four annual accounts of his have been preserved—those for 1569, 1573, 1574, and 1579; and, like the two printed in the last volume, these have a formal peculiarity which calls for remark.

They are written, not on parchment rolls, as the comptrollers' accounts used to be before Sir

[1] See Exchequer Rolls, vol. xix., pp. lxv et seqq.

William Murray's time; but in books, the leaves of which are of paper. This change of form in the accounts is all the more striking because the method of keeping the national records had been expressly regulated by legislative enactment. As far back as 1469 a statute had been passed authorising the putting into book form of another record, the Rolls of Parliament; and the books were decreed to have the same effect as the rolls formerly had.[1] But it was not until 1672 that a similar measure found a place in the statute-book, authorising the accounts of Exchequer to be made in books of parchment instead of in the older form of rolls.[2] Doubtless the change was dictated in either case by considerations of increased convenience of reference. If it is to be assumed that the book-form in which the comptrollers' accounts printed in this volume have been preserved is the only form in which they ever existed, then they were kept in a manner without warrant of law, and that upon two grounds; for, firstly, they are written, not upon parchment, but upon paper; and, secondly, not upon rolls, but in books. Yet two of Sir William Murray's accounts, which are the first to appear in the book-form, were extended upon parchment rolls as well,[3] and it is possible that those which are now printed from the paper books may have been so extended, the rolls being now lost. It is to be remarked, however, that the paper accounts bear, as the parchment rolls were not in use to do, the signatures of the clerk-register and the lords auditors, authenticating them by vouching the balances. The signatures, historically interesting in themselves, are valuable as showing that we have the principal accounts and not copies.[1]

While the comptroller's accounts for the period of the volume are few in number, the other accounts, those of the bailies ad extra and the custumars and bailies of burghs, form an almost complete series. To be quite complete, there should be one roll of each for each of the twelve years—twenty-four rolls in all. But only twenty-one rolls remain, there being no accounts at all for 1571, no accounts of bailies ad extra for 1568, and no burgh accounts for 1573; while there is a second roll of burgh accounts for 1572.

The entries from the Rentals of Crown Lands are few. They are, all of them, additions to formerly existing rentals; some of them being preserved in duplicate, that is, both as book-entries and in separate documents, having appended the comptroller's warrant to the clerk-register to enter the new tenants as holders of the lands.[2]

The Responde Books form a complete series for the period, and include a number of miscellaneous

[1] Infra, pp. 31, 35, 53.

[2] E.g. infra, pp. 386-370.

documents recording various proceedings in Exchequer.

II.

The records now printed open with a short roll of accounts of custumars and bailies of burghs, embracing only nine accounts, which make up all that remains to show what business was done in the chekker of 1568. The time was one of such disturbance in the administration of public affairs, however, that it is not surprising to have blanks and breaks of continuity in the records. 1568 was the year of Queen Mary's overthrow. She had escaped on the 2nd of May from her imprisonment in Loch Leven Castle, and, eleven days afterwards, when her adherents were worsted in the battle of Langside, had fled into England. Henceforward for five years the country was torn asunder by a civil war, with one party fighting for the Queen, the other for the King; and the machinery of civil administration was clogged and stopped by military necessity. The war has left not a few traces upon the rolls. But there are in the accounts in question several retrospective items which refer to Queen Mary herself while she was still in Scotland, and which call for notice before the consequences of her flight are considered in their relation to the state of the records.

The comptroller's account for 1569[1] records a payment made to William Douglas of Loch Leven and James Dempstartoun, his servant, "for the provisioning and upkeep of the King's mother while she was in Loch Leven Castle." The amount is £1389 12d. Among the liveries of bear and malt in the same account[1] is one of two and a half chalders of Fife bear to Margaret Aitken, the Queen's laundress, "for her work and outlays in washing the Queen's linen (in lautione pannorum lineorum domine regine) during the time of her stay at Loch Leven." Similar entries record the payment of 24 geese and 672 fowl for the Queen's providing during the same period.[2]

These payments for the Queen's service and furnishing were made by order of the Government that opposed her; and the services and furnishings were given rather to them than to her. To put beside them, by way of contrast, is a document preserved in the Responde Book for 1579, which shows that, in one instance at least, payment was far less prompt when it happened to be for furnishings made to her through her own officers in the day of her power. It is a petition to the lords auditors, setting forth that on 6th February 1567 the Queen's argentar or silversmith, Alexander Durham, was due £472 odds to John Hunter and two others "for certain furnising made and furnist be thame to our soverane lordis moder

[1] P. 37.

[2] Pp. 43, 44.

hous." Of this sum, £230 was due to Hunter when, some time afterwards, he died. His executors sued Durham, the argentar, for this amount, before the commissaries of Edinburgh. Durham appealed to the lords auditors, pleading that they alone had jurisdiction in such a cause. The lords auditors discharged the commissaries from proceeding in the cause; but had not themselves, so far as appears from the record, done anything further at the time when the petition was presented. The petition is not itself dated, but appears from its position in the Responde Book to belong to the year 1579; so that the debt had remained undischarged during these twelve years.[1] It is not unreasonable to suppose that other cases like this may have gone unrecorded, in which the claims of creditors of the Queen went long unsatisfied through the passing into the hands of her enemies of the control of the royal revenues.

III.

While the few accounts for 1568 which remain show that an Exchequer was held at Edinburgh from June to October, the absence of any other accounts for that year hardly points to the loss of records that once existed, but rather, when taken in connection with the circumstances about to be noted, to support a conclusion that no other accounts were really given in. The rolls for 1569 have the usual series of accounts of bailies a extra and burgh accounts; yet no one of these accounts is for the period of one year only, as is the ordinary case. All alike cover a back-going period of two years or more. The comptroller' account for 1569[1] similarly covers the period from 1st November 1567. It is rendered in January 1569–70, a date unusually late in the year, for the year, it will be remembered, ran in those days from March to March. This lateness is all the more significant because in 1567 an Act of Parliament had been passed, laying it down that the Exchequer should be held at the accustomed time —"the vacance," and that the lords and clerks of Session were not to be lords and clerks of Exchequer.[2] The time of the "vacance"—that is, the recess in the sittings of the Court of Session, had been fixed by an Act of the same year, to extend between 10th July and 20th October.[3] The chamberlain's accounts and those of the burghs for 1569 were given in during this period;[4] but the comptroller's was, as has been seen, delayed. These circumstances unite in suggesting that in 1568 the state of public business was so disordered that no more accounts were actually rendered in Exchequer than the few which have been preserved.

[1] Infra, p. 27.
[2] Thomson's Acts, iii., 43.
[3] Thomson's Acts, iii., 32.
[4] Infra, pp. 3-26.

For the year 1570 there remain only the accounts of the chamberlains and of the burgh officials; and for the year 1571, no accounts at all. It is in the highest degree probable that in 1571 no Exchequer was held, and no accounts given in. In this year the city of Edinburgh, the usual seat of government and the locality of the Exchequer House, was dominated by Kirkcaldy of Grange, who not only held the Castle for the Queen's party, but had planted cannon in the lantern of St. Giles's to keep the town in subjection. The Regent, Morton, had concentrated at Leith the forces at the disposal of the Government, and endeavoured to hold a Parliament by bringing the lords to meet in the Canongate. But this Parliament had to retire to Leith so as to be beyond the range of Kirkcaldy's ordnance, and even thence had to be adjourned to Stirling.[1] Grange, indeed, held a rival Parliament, and each party forfeited its opponents; but there is nothing in the sources of the history of the period to suggest that the Queen's party ever endeavoured to hold an Exchequer for their own behoof. But Grange could effectually disorder the course of business in any Exchequer the Government might try to hold in Edinburgh; for few occupations are so essentially works of peace and so little likely to prosper during a cannonade as the making up of books and rolls of account. It appears, besides, from a minute of proceedings in Exchequer, preserved in the Responde Book for 1572, that Grange had the Exchequer Rolls in his hands in 1572. The minute records that the sheriff-clerk of Fife appeared before the lords auditors at Leith on 22nd July 1572, and made payment of certain sums due from the sheriffdom of Fife and effeiring to the last two years, besides offering to make count, reckoning, and payment of all the sums due from the sheriffdom for that period. The lords, however, could not "presentlie ressave the saidis comptis, throw inlaik of the rollis, beand presentlie within the castell of Edinburgh," and accordingly ordered the sheriff-clerk to appear before them again when summoned.[1] In a settled state of government it was customary for the rolls to be kept in Edinburgh Castle between the chekkers, and to be brought to the Chekker House each year. Grange in all likelihood kept them out of the hands of the King's party so long as he could.

Yet, while the Queen's party held no formal Exchequer, there does not lack evidence to show (what might be assumed without it) that they took whatever they could secure of the revenues of the Crown; for the Parliament of 1571, just referred to as having been adjourned to Stirling, had to pass an Act specially directed against the

[1] Infra, p. 429.

Queen's party's intermeddling with the customs. No ship, it was ordained, was to leave the country for France or elsewhere without the King's cocket, and no cocket was to be purchased or taken from the King's mother or from her "pretended lieutenant" or any others in her name, under penalty of loss of the offending ship and goods. This Act would not have been necessary had it not been found that, in point of fact, ships were trading with a cocket in Queen Mary's name: and it is little likely that the custumars appointed by the King's party received any dues in respect of goods exported in such bottoms. It is not surprising, accordingly, in view of the divided state of the ultimate authority in the kingdom, to find the accounts in the rolls for 1572 exhibit the same peculiarity as that already noticed as characterising those of 1569—that of extending over a back-going period of two years or more.[1] The earliest accounts of 1572 were given in at Leith in July; others, at Stirling in August and September; and the last of them, in October at Edinburgh; while there is a second roll of burgh accounts for this year, all of which were given in at Edinburgh so late in the year as January 1572–3. All this, while it reveals the disturbed condition of the fiscal administration, shows that the reason why no accounts for 1571 are found among the existing records is that no Exchequer was held in that year. After 1571 the rolls form a continuous series, complete except in so far as there are no comptrollers' accounts for any years other than 1573, 1574, and 1579. Those for 1572, 1575, 1576, 1577, and 1578 may have been rendered and recorded, but have not been preserved.

IV.

The defects in the sequence and completeness of the records, just adverted to, testify negatively to the irregularity of the collection of the royal revenues: the preserved papers give some items of positive evidence pointing in the same direction. The customs, in particular, appear to have been difficult to ingather. It appears from a minute of proceedings in Exchequer, preserved in the Responde Book for 1574, that the custumar of Aberdeen, Thomas Menzies of Pitfodels, rendered no account from 1565 to 1573, and had refused payment for all these years of the Countess of Crawfurd's terce of an annualrent of a hundred marks, which was charged upon these customs.[1] The Aberdeen account is absent from the custumars' rolls in this volume down to 1574, when it begins to be regularly rendered again by a new custumar, John Lowsoun, who is, however, expressly discharged of liability for the intromissions of his predecessor.[2] The records give no answer to the question, what became of the customs of Aberdeen during these years; and it may be supposed either that they were not levied, or, being levied, were either retained by Menzies or fell into the hands of the Queen's friends. Another minute of Exchequer proceedings, similarly preserved in the Responde Book for 1569, shows that, whether owing to a double derivation of title from King and Queen, or to whatever other cause, conflicting claims arose among the custumars themselves. The minute in question records one step in an action the object of which was to check the unlawful exactions of the custumar of Dundee. This officer was demanding a stated payment upon all goods passing out from Perth by way of Dundee, although the Perth merchants had always enjoyed the right of taking their goods past Dundee so long as they had been properly charged with custom at Perth.[1] The rolls show that, while this exaction was going on, that is, in 1569, the custumar of Dundee was paying nothing into the national Exchequer, although in the following year, 1570, his arrears were paid up.[2] Further indications of the unsatisfactory state of the collection of the customs are found in an Act of Parliament of 1578, from which it may be inferred that the payment of the customs was systematically evaded in more ways than one. This measure enacted that the comptroller was to appoint searchers for forbidden and uncustomed goods, and that no licence should be given by any one for exporting merchandise that had not paid custom.[1] Whether the general working of this Act was beneficial to the revenue or not, does not appear from the accounts; but there is a record of one case at least, in which its intention was defeated. Another minute of Exchequer proceedings, dated 3rd September 1579,[2] records how James Mowbray, brother germane to John Mowbray of Barnbogle, on the pretext that he had been made general searcher on both sides of the Forth, had intromitted with the customs of salt and other goods, but had rendered no account of his intromissions either to treasurer or comptroller. It is noteworthy, too, that the statute-book for the same year records how Parliament had been petitioned to intervene "anent the extorsioun tane be custumaris and searcheouris," and had referred the petition to the lords of the Privy Council.[3]

Other minutes of Exchequer proceedings occur in the Responde Books showing how frequently during this period the sheriffs and other collectors of the royal revenues had to be fined for not appearing in Exchequer to account.[4] Not only were these fines exacted, and not, as often happened in prior times, remitted or allowed to run on unpaid for a considerable number of years, but even further extremities of coercion were found necessary, as in the case of that bailie of Lauder who in 1577 was ordered to enter his person in ward in Edinburgh Castle, there to remain till he had made count, reckoning, and payment of the burgh mailles.[1]

An increasing number of memoranda of commissions of justiciary appears among the respondes printed in this volume, some of which are noticeable as forming a record of unusual or novel crimes. One, for example, refers to the trial of persons who have broken into the sepulchres of the dead and stolen away the winding-sheets.[2] Two others refer to what seems to have been an alarming eruption of the infernal powers into Ross and Ardmanach, and enumerate the names of no less than thirty persons, male and female, who had been delated for the crimes of witchcraft, sorcery, and incantation.[3] They belong to the year 1579, and are noteworthy as affording one of the earliest instances of this offence that occur in our criminal records, and as leaving upon the page of the Books of Responde a trace of that spiritual shadow which, in Scotland as elsewhere, attended the reformation of religion.
