holds such intercourse. Acts Ja. VI. 2. One who treats between parties at variance. Baillie.

INTERCOMMUNING, s. 1. The act of holding intercourse with others by conversation, supplying them with food, &c., especially used in regard to those who have been legally proscribed. Wodrow's Hist. 2.

This term is sometimes conjoined with caption, as if it were synon. The meaning seems to be, that others are prohibited from sheltering those who are under a legal caption, ibid.

LETTERS OF INTERCOMMUNING. Letters issued from the Privy Council, or some superior court, prohibiting all intercourse with those denounced rebels, S. Spalding.

MARCH-MOON. The Druids, it is well known, made great use of the mistletoe; and although, from its being unknown in S., there can be no superstitious appropriation of it, we find that its only substitute in this country is used in a similar manner. "In the increase of the March Moon, the Highlanders cut wedges of the woodbine that clings about the oak.
These they twist into a wreath or circle, and carefully preserve it till the next March; and when children are troubled with hectic fevers, or when any one is consumptive, they make them pass through this circle thrice, by putting it over their heads, and conveying it down about their bodies. The like they do to cattle in some distempers." Shaw's Moray.

- RIWELL, Wallace. Roelle, sorte de bouriier, Gl. Roquefort.
- To RIZAR, v. a. 1. To dry in the sun, S. The Smugglers.—Fr. ressoré, dried by the sun. 2. Applied to clothes which have been so long exposed to the open air, as to be half dried, Roxb.
- RIZAR, s. Drying by means of heat, S.
- RIZARDS, RIZZER-BERRIES, s. pl. Currants, S. Brand.—I can form no idea of the origin, unless the word be corr. from Fr. raisin; currants being denominated raisins de Corinthe. In C. B. rheisinwydden, is a currant-bush.
- RIZZIM, s. A stalk of corn, Aberd. It seems allied to Teut. reesem, a cluster.
- To RIZZLE, v. n. To rustle, Gall. "Rizzling. Any thing, such as straw, is said to be rizzling, when it is free of moisture, quite dry, rustling." Gall. Enc.—A. S. hristl-an, crepitare; but in its form more nearly allied to Teut. ryssel-en, id.
- RIZZLES, s. pl. "A species of berry; sometimes called Russles." Gall. Enc. Probably the same with Rizards, currants.
- * ROAD, s. "Large way; path." I refer to this E. word, to take notice of some idioms, in which it occurs, that seem to be peculiar to S.
- In one's ROAD, 1. Applied to one who is deemed a hindrance, encumbrance, or restraint to another. "Ye're like the gudeman's mother, aye in the gudewife's road," S. 2. I wadna see you in my road, an expression addressed to one who, under the pretence of working, is viewed as merely impeding another, S. It is generally the language of an active or impatient person to one who is slow in operation.
- Out of one's ROAD, 1. Used, in a negative form, of one who never loses sight of his own interest, who has the knack of turning every occurrence to his own advantage; as, "Happen what will, ye're never out o' your road," S. 2. Applied to a person who is not easily incommoded, who, without disappointment or irritation, can submit to circumstances that would be vexatious to others, S.
- To ROAD, v. n. Applied to partridges or other game, which, when found by the setting dogs, instead of taking wing, run along the ground before the sportsman, Roxb.
- To ROAD, v. a. To follow game running in this manner, ibid. Evidently from the E. s. denoting a way.
- ROADMAN, s. A carter; properly one who drives stones for mending the public roads, Perth. Duff's Poems.
- ROAN, s. A congeries of brushwood, Dumfr. V. Rone, and Rosin.
- ROAN, s. Herd's Coll. I can see no sense this word can bear but that of boar; Su. G. rone, id. In Lord Hailes' Ed. cow is the word used. Probably a roan is a brown cow, so called from the E. adj. roan.
- ROASEN, part. adj. Roasted.

SAY

This letter, as occurring in the beginning of words, cannot, in many instances, be viewed as a radical. While prefixed in some Goth. dialects, it was thrown away in others, especially before k. The same term sometimes appears with s, and sometimes without it; as in cry and scry; creek of day, and skreek. Ss, is often used by our old writers as the mark of the pl.; as, hors for horsts, horses.

*S frequently occurs as an abbreviation of is and has, S. SA, SUA, SWA, conj. 1. So; consequently; S. sae. Gawan and Gol. 2. In such a manner. Barbour. 3. As; in like manner, ib.—Moes. G. swa, swe, A. S. swa, Su. G. Dan. saa, ita.

To SA, v. n. To say. Douglas.—Alem. Germ. sag-en, A. S. sæg-an, id.

- SHOEING THE AULD MARE. A dangerous sport among children, Gall. "A beam of wood is slung between two ropes; a person gets on this, and contrives to steady himself until he goes through a number of antics; if he can do this, he shoes the auld mare; if he cannot do it, he generally tumbles to the ground, and gets hurt with the fall." Gall. Encycl.
- SHOELIN, part. adj. Distorted, Renfr. A. Wilson.
- SHOES, s. pl. The fragments of the stalks of flax, separated by the mill, or by hand dressing. Shows is perhaps a preferable orthography. Arthur Young writes shoes; whence it would seem that the term is used in E. as a provincial term, for I do not find it in any dictionary.
- To SHOG, v. a. To jog; to shake. V. SCHOG.
- To SHOG, v. n. To shake from corpulence.
- SHOG-BOG, s. A deep mossy puddle, often that through which a spring takes its course, covered with a coating of closely matted grass, sufficiently strong to carry a light person, who, by giving a shop, produces a continued undulating motion, Fife.
- SHOGGIE-SHOU, s. A game. V. SCHUGIE-SHUB.
- SHOGGLE, SUGGLE, s. 1. A large piece of ice floating down a river, after the ice is broken up. 2. A clot of blood, Roxb.—Isl. skoegull, prominencia. Or shall we view our term as originally the same with A. S. gicel, is-gicel, whence E. ice-ice? V. ISECHOKILL.
