INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

“Quidquid sub terra est, in apicium proferet aetas.”—HORACE.

THE first volume of the Calendar of Documents relating to Scotland, enrolled on, or preserved among, the Public Records of England, was commenced in the last week of May 1879.

Omitting the forged charter of homage by Malcolm Canmore to Edward the Confessor, the period of actual time covered by the work begins in the reign of Henry I.,—not later than 1124, and possibly as early as 1108,—and ends with that of Henry III., in 1272, or at least a century and a half.

The majority of writers on Scottish history who have gone below the surface, have touched with more or less perspicacity on two questions—the nature and extent of the superiority claimed by the English over the Scottish kings; and the all but total loss or destruction of the national muniments of Scotland existing at the death of King Alexander III., generally attributed to Edward I., who was accused by Hector Boece and Buchanan of having burned them!

These two questions, though closely connected, are not now so relatively important as they were at the time of the Union of the Crowns. The former, indeed, may be said to have been long practically relegated to the domain of antiquarian curiosity, and will only be noticed when the editor gives his reasons for beginning his Calendar with a well-known forgery.

But as there is much misapprehension on the subject of the disappearance of the early Records of Scotland, both regarding the persons responsible, or supposed to be so, for the loss, and the mode in which that loss took place, it may be proper to give a short account of the matter. This the editor has compiled from Prynne's well-known book,¹ Sir Joseph Ayloff's Calendars of Ancient Charters (1774), the first volume of the Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland, edited by Mr Cosmo Innes (1844), and some other official works not always easy of access.

Not long after Edward I. was invited, or undertook, to regulate the succession to the Crown of Scotland, he issued a writ directed to the Bishop of Saint Andrews, Ralf Basset of Drayton, constable of the castle of Edinburgh, and William of Dumfries, keeper of the Rolls of Scotland, intimating that he had appointed the Abbots of Dunfermline and Holyrood, John de Lithgreynes, Master William of Lincoln, and Thomas de Fisheburne, to examine carefully the charters, writs, papal letters, rolls, enrolments, and all other muniments of those claiming right to the kingdom of Scotland, and likewise those touching himself and his kingdom, in the castle of Edinburgh and elsewhere, and to take and deposit them in a place to be assigned ad hoc; directing them to deliver the keys of the Treasury, doors, houses of the castle, 'archae,' chests, and 'serinia,' &c. This writ is dated at Berwick-on-Tweed in Scotland, 12th August 1291.² Under which apparently proper and fitting step, discovering, as Prynne says,³ 'what great esteem and care the King had of the Records in Scotland,' the muniments in the Treasury of Edinburgh were removed to Berwick in the presence of these commissioners on 23d August following, according to a Calendar still extant.⁴ Not a few of these will be found on the pages of the present Calendar, the result of their having been enrolled or preserved in the Records of England.

As Sir Joseph Ayloffe clearly shows,¹ an inventory printed by him, from a document still in the Chapter House Collection,² which has been generally called by historians, ‘An Inventory taken of the Scotch Records at the time of their being brought into the Exchequer at London by King Edward the First,’ has been strangely misapprehended,—an error, often repeated, that has caused much confusion. It is a document of a very different character, being a schedule of all the bulls, charters, and other muniments in the King of Scotland’s Treasury at Edinburgh on Michaelmas day 1282 (three years before the death of Alexander III.), which being inspected under that King’s order, by Thomas de Carnoto, Ralf de Bosco, and William de Dunfres, his clerks, were ordered to be continued and preserved in that place, together with sundry letters and other papers relating to Scottish affairs, put into boxes, coffers, and bags [not particularly specified], and secured under the seals of these commissioners. Whatever became of these, it is pretty certain that nothing but the mere inventory ever reached the English Exchequer.

It is to be presumed rather than asserted,—for the catalogue, often merely stating the number of sacks, hanapers, pyxes, and of their contents, is too vague to warrant more than a mere guess,³—that the muniments of Scotland delivered by inventory to Sir Alexander de Balliol, Chamberlain of Scotland, on behalf of King John, at Roxburgh castle, after the latter’s coronation in 1292, and those found in Edinburgh castle and delivered in a similar manner to Sir Hugh de Cressingham, Treasurer of Scotland, at Berwick-on-Tweed on 16th September 1296, may have included those already referred to as extant in 1282. These several Inventories are certainly tantalizing. In them there are enumerated, with more or less detail, Papal bulls, treaties, compoti by sheriffs and other officers, memoranda of revenue accounts, fine and plea rolls, wills of the Scottish kings, inquisitions, perambulations and extents of lands, documents relative to fealty done in Man, Bute, and other western isles, besides original charters, and many other desiderata priceless for the purpose of the historical antiquary. In short, they comprised in all probability the entire public muniments of Scotland during the greater part of the thirteenth century, and possibly earlier, and are a loss to be ever deplored. They would have given an insight into the history of the country during a period for which, with the exception of the monastic chronicles and the copies of a few fragments of Exchequer Rolls for 1264-66 and 1288-90, preserved by Lord Haddington,¹ the Records of Scotland are a blank.

There is not a particle of evidence that any of the above documents ever were transferred to England, still less that any were destroyed by the great Edward, whose anxiety was rather to discover than to suppress writings, as is clear from his many writs to the religious houses of his kingdom, commanding search to be made for evidence in support of his claims of superiority. Indeed, it is rather marvellous that the King's wish did not stimulate the monastic scribes to produce the necessary and explicit evidence. This, however, was reserved for a later era.

The only documents as to which there is clear evidence of their being transferred to England formed no part of the old Records of the kingdom, but were merely such as had been drawn up relative to the homage of the new made king, John Balliol, and solely related to this matter.²

As observed by Mr Innes,³ the seventh stipulation of the Treaty of Northampton in 1328 merely provided that writings of this last class, i.e., touching the subjection of Scotland and its freedom, that might be discovered, should be given up to the King of Scots, so soon as found ;⁴ and even this limited condition was not observed, 'as proved by the rolls of homages and fragments of original writs

‘of homage still in the Tower and Chapter House.’ Nor was the Coronation Stone restored, the re-delivery of which was also one of the express articles of the Treaty. Indeed, one may perhaps now regret that Edward I. did not carry off the whole of the ancient Records, as popularly supposed. For, as Mr Innes acutely points out,¹ ‘The original public instruments subsequent to Edward’s time, independently of records of private rights in Scotland, are very inconsiderable,’ and for this loss the ‘Hammer of the Scots’ is certainly not responsible. ‘Very little,’ continues Mr Innes, ‘can be traced of the history and extent of the damages, possibly sustained during the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. Their usual deposition in the Castle of Edinburgh ought to have protected them from all injuries but those of time.’ The editor ventures to add to those remarks, so weighty as coming from one who had deeply studied Scottish antiquities, the suggestion that here is the most likely solution of the disappearance of the oldest Scottish Records. Those before the time of Edward I. doubtless shared the fate of those of later date, in the intestine broils of Scotland, and it may be the turmoil of the Reformation. One thing is certain, none of these ancient muniments are now to be found in Scotland.

Another great man, Oliver Cromwell, has been held responsible for the most fatal of all the disasters that have occurred to the Scottish Records since the time of Edward I. Soon after Dunbar, the Protector caused the Records of the Scottish Parliaments and Courts of Justice to be removed to the Tower of London, where they were placed under the care of Mr Ryley, then Keeper of the Records. This occurred in 1651, and though it was soon discovered that their removal was a great impediment to the administration of justice, yet no remedial steps were taken till 23d July 1657, when the Council of State ordered them to be returned to Scotland. With certain exceptions, they were delivered to Sir Archibald Johnstone of Warriston, the Lord Clerk-Register, to the number of nearly sixteen hundred volumes, consisting of records of private rights and ‘processes of plea,’ and these are now in the General Register House of Edinburgh. From the Inventory given by Ayloffe,¹ it will be seen that none are of an earlier date than 1424, and the great bulk are of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. It may be here remarked that there are still among the Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, a number of signet letters of Queen Mary’s and James VI.’s reigns, and other writs, that must have formed part of the collection removed by Cromwell.

The excepted documents above mentioned were not so fortunate. From the want of any inventory, their real nature must be mere conjecture ; but it is probable that they were original instruments of a public character, many of which must have been extant at the removal to England in 1651. After the Restoration, all that were supposed to remain in the Tower were shipped for Scotland. Of these, no fewer than eighty-five hogsheads were lost in a storm on the passage. Yet the winds and waves were not the sole enemies of these ill-fated Records. Neglect and ill usage were to do their work on the remnants that the sea had spared, and detached instruments and documents of a public nature were suffered to remain ‘in heaps or in barrels’; or ‘loose ‘on the ground and treading (sic) under foot,’ according to James Anderson, author of the Diplomata.² ‘What may remain,’ he continues, ‘I know not, there being many loose papers uninventured ; but, the place where they are kept being dark and ‘very unwholesome, and few or none applying themselves to that ‘laborious work, may make many things in our Records obscure.’

And eighty years after their escape from shipwreck, ten hogsheads still lay unopened in the Lower Parliament House (then used as a Register House), through some unaccountable neglect of the officers in charge.³ Though a partial examination was made of these in 1753, under the authority of the Court of Session, in consequence of an application by the Dean and Faculty of Advocates, nothing more was done till the end of that century, when the Public Records were all removed to the present General

Register House. Since that time, says Mr Innes, ‘everything ‘ that learning and skill and the greatest zeal can do, has been ‘ done to remedy the injuries of time and neglect.’

Such, then, is an outline of the history of the disappearance or destruction of the old and many of the later Records of Scotland ; a calamity for which no one man, king or republican, can be held responsible, but rather due to the causes that have proved disastrous to so many of the better cared for Records of the neighbouring kingdom. There was no Scottish Agarde in the sixteenth or Pryune in the seventeenth centuries, to rescue them ‘ from putrefaction and oblivion,’ or undertake ‘ that painful, ‘ troublesome, sordid work ’ of disinterring them from ‘ dust and ‘ cobwebs,’ so picturesquely described by the learned puritan ; and by the time of the industrious Anderson there were few or none left to be cared for.

In this absolute dearth of materials in their own country, Scottish antiquaries and historical writers were under the need of looking into the English archives for what they could no longer find at home. And the search was intensified by a curious circumstance. The laborious Rymer, searching for materials for his great work, discovered in the Chapter House at Westminster, the forged charter of homage by Malcolm Canmore and his son to Edward the Confessor.¹ Somewhat rashly, ‘ perhaps ‘ unwittingly,’ as Sir Thomas Hardy says,² ‘ he gave it an importance to which it was by no means entitled, by causing it ‘ to be engraved in facsimile.’ The Scottish antiquaries, then in a state of excitement regarding the proposed Union of the kingdoms, took alarm, and a literary controversy of great virulence arose. The disputants engaged were George Ridpath, Bishop Nicolson, Rymer himself, Anderson (of the Diplomata), an English barrister and ex-colonial judge, William Atwood,—whose book had the distinction of being burned by the Edinburgh hangman at the command of the Scottish Parliament,—and Thomas Ruddiman. Some of the disputants, Anderson and Atwood in particular, attacked each other in terms now happily unknown in such contests. It had one good result; for Anderson, searching for authorities in support of his views, was the first person to make practical use of the splendid collection of early charters and other documents relating to Scotland then and still preserved in the Treasury of Durham, some of which were engraved in his great work, the Diplomata Scotie.¹

Thus these two questions, the alleged destruction of the old Records by Edward I., and the superiority of England over Scotland, came to be mixed up; and the search for documents disproving the latter kept alive the tradition of the former. Sir Francis Palgrave² has given a full and interesting account of this charter, and some other forged documents of a later date, still in the Exchequer, where they were deposited in November 1457 (36 Hen. VI.) by John Hardyng the poet and chronicler, who professed to have obtained them in Scotland at the risk of his life, and to have been offered one thousand marks of gold by James I. to give them up. He was rewarded by a pension of £20 out of Exchequer, and there can be little doubt he was the author of the whole collection.

Apart from its having been the occasion of a great literary warfare, the document is a curiosity in its bold anachronisms and sweeping acknowledgment of homage. And yet, if we may trust a modern historian,³ who has probably devoted as much learning and study to the matter as any other man living, this spurious deed is not so very wide of the truth. Mr Freeman points out how the kings of Scots held under three different tenures. They held the Irish kingdom of Scotland north of the Forth, under a merely external English supremacy; Cumberland [Cumbria] as a territorial fief of England; and Lothian or Northern Bernicia as an earldom in the English kingdom. Thus Edward I. claimed more than his ancestors' ancient rights over Scotland, but less than their rights over Lothian.

³ E. A. Freeman, Historical Geography of Europe, 1880, vol. i. p. 550.

Many learned persons during the last hundred years or more have drawn materials for Scottish history and antiquities from the Public Records of England. Among these the eminent Sir David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes, whose Annals still maintain their ground as a model of scrupulous accuracy and acute criticism, George Chalmers, the author of Caledonia, and the Rev. George Ridpath, author of The Border History of England and Scotland, derived some of their authorities from this source, under considerable difficulties from the nature of the facilities then afforded to inquirers. At a period nearer our own day, two Scottish lawyers, John Riddell,¹ and Thomas Thomson, Deputy Clerk-Register, Sir Francis Palgrave, Deputy Keeper of the Records, and the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, have done much to bring to light the Scottish documents in the Public Records. The last named gentleman, indeed, has made the subject peculiarly his own, and besides the many works edited by him for the Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs, his two volumes² produced under the direction of the late Lord Clerk-Register, Sir William Gibson-Craig, have in great measure given rise to the present Calendar.

The instructions given to the editor when this work was intrusted to him were simple and clear; namely, to calendar all documents connected with Scottish history from the earliest period to the end of the reign of Henry VII. After careful consideration, he laid down the following rules for his own guidance. Keeping in view the fact that British Strathelyde once embraced, not only the modern Cumberland, but also Dumfries and other western shires in Scotland between Solway and Clyde; while on the east, Northumberland, under its ancient name of Bernicia, stretched from the Humber to the Forth; that these districts were inhabited respectively by homogeneous races, similar in manners and customs and governed by the same laws; and that the rights, more or less real, of the Scottish kings in the southern portions of these great terriories were not finally extinguished till the close of the thirteenth century,¹—he felt that a Calendar which should omit any reference to them could not be truly called a Scottish Calendar. He who should set himself to collect materials for Scottish history under the belief that the marches of the two countries have from time immemorial been the Solway, the Cheviots, and the Tweed, would start with at least one important disqualification for the work. Further, in order to give an adequate view of the intimate relations between the two countries at the earliest period of record, it was essential that notice should be taken of the occurrence in various parts of England, not only of the surnames that in time came to be considered as exclusively Scottish, such as Balliol, Brus, Comyn, Hay, Lindesay, Olifard, Ridel, Sumerville, and many more, but of others, as De Quency, Umfranville, Avenel, Luvel,² Mortemer, Lascelles, and many equally noble, but shorter lived or less remembered in their adopted country. That occurrences of the epithet ‘Scot,’ at first clearly indicating nationality, but eventually a surname, be remarked. It will be seen how widely spread this was in all ranks at an early date.

And if in the course of carrying out these views, some extracts exclusively relating to England should occur, the editor has little doubt that the English archæologist will not interpose his veto, while his Scottish congener will regard such occasional interpolations as a species of quit-rent or honourable acknowledgment for the privilege of ransacking the archives of England. But apart from this, it has often happened that an entry which seemed to have little or no connection with Scottish history, has afforded a date, or evidence regarding some historical person or event, that would have been otherwise unattainable.

² This singularly short-lived family, no fewer than ten of whom occur between 1155 and 1291, as barons of Castle Cary, co. Somerset, and of Hawick and Branxholm, who were among the magnates of Scotland from the time of William the Lion, if not earlier, till the Wars of the Succession, and whose genealogy,

The History of the House of Ycevy, is one of the rarest and most curious of family histories, has absolutely been forgotten in Scotland. Their historian, and even Dugdale, were unaware of their large Scottish possessions, and the editor believes he is the first to show the identity of Lovel of Branxholm and Lovel of Castle Cary, a discovery to which he was led by a notice in Agarde’s invaluable Placitorum Abbreviatio.

In short, in such a work as the present, involving an assiduous scrutiny, so far as the capacity of a single individual extends, throughout the vast field of the Public Records, an opportunity which may never again occur, the editor felt he would rather be blamed for apparently exceeding ever so slightly the letter, certainly not, as he believes, the spirit, of his instructions, than for the sin of omission of any matter of historic interest.

Appended to the Preface will be found a Schedule of the Records examined by the editor in the course of his work. One of these demands something more than a passing notice. This is the unique Pipe Roll of 31 Henry I. (1130-31), the oldest record, next to Domesday Book, in the English archives. From it we learn how frequently David I. visited the English court in the former year, a piece of evidence which corroborates the statement of Ordericus Vitalis, a chronicler whose veracity was much doubted by Lord Hailes. The simplicity of the times is shown by the accounts of corrodies and other allowances for the expenses of the royal progress. These also afford a guide to his route. The occurrence so far south as Wiltshire,¹ of Gospatroe and Dunecan, names exclusively associated with the Border counties, is to be remarked; as also the singular instance² of Gospatric of Newcastle purchasing immunity from the 'ordeal of iron,' by a large fine. Godereda, daughter of Gospatric son of Aldret, appears as owning land in Yorkshire or Northumberland³; and Uetred son of Walleof, whom a later record seems to identify with the father of Hestilda wife of Richard Cumyn, makes a considerable fine for the liberties of his land in Northumberland.⁴

The minute details of the sheriff's account for Carlisle,⁵ under which name must be understood the shire as well as the city, and the notice of its silver mine, are of great interest. For the first half of the twelfth century the only other original documents extant are the charters² from the great collection of the Duchy of Lancaster. The first of these, though undated, is earlier than the Pipe Roll just referred to, and gives a picture of the Scottish King before his accession, while the first among English magnates, yet then as ever the friend of the ecclesiastical order. William Peverel, possibly the great baron of that name, reputed son of the Conqueror, is the first witness. The second shows the settlement of the de Brus family in Scotland by this King; and the third, probably granted to the second Robert, founder of the Annandale line, by a Bishop of Glasgow, whose name is unfortunately lost, is interesting as being executed at Carlisle and witnessed by King David and his son Earl Henry.

(Malcolm IV.) From these the student of history may learn how the King of England entertained the young Malcolm of Scotland at Nottingham and the Peak of Derbyshire in 1157,⁴ doubtless with hunting and other amusements, after, it may be, procuring from his inexperience the surrender of his hereditary claims on the northern counties, a question discussed with much acumen by Lord Lyttelton⁵ and Lord Hailes.⁶ The cost of the wine consumed is specified. In this reign⁷ the royal domain of Tindale first appears: conferred in 1159⁸ on William of Scotland, possibly as a surrogate for the surrender of his elder brother's claims; and which, as a Liberty, was held by simple homage uninterrupted by the Scottish Kings, till confiscated by Edward I. on the deposition of John de Balliol; shown by its annual recurrence in the Pipe Rolls, with one exception,¹ when it would seem to have been temporarily seized by Henry II. after William the Lion's rebellion and capture. From other entries² it is evident that the reigning King Malcolm, and not his youngest brother David, then owned the Honour of Huntingdon, and that the former must have owned large possessions in some northern county, probably Westmoreland, which at that period was often included in the compotus for Yorkshire.³ Fotheringay, indissolubly connected with the tragic fate of Mary Queen of Scots, first appears by name in this reign.⁴ There are also large sums expended on the strong border fortress of Werk, the green mound of which still seems to breathe defiance to the northern strand of Tweed.⁵ And the historical genealogist may remark the Cumins, Balliols, Avenels, de Haias, de Colevills, de Quencis, de Sumervilles, Ridels, Olifards, appearing not only in the shires immediately in dependence on the Honour of Huntingdon, with which most of them were connected, but some farther south, as the Comyns and Balliols in Somerset, Dorset, and Wiltshire,⁶ in which last county the Balliols long held the considerable estate of Mere with the hundred. The Bishop of Candida Casa, or Whitherne, a see which long maintained a close connection with York in defiance of the rest of the Scottish Church, occurs.⁷ And the third Earl Gospatric, head of that great house, which must now be styled not merely noble but royal,⁸ is found accounting for his knights in Northumber-

There can be little doubt, from the researches of Mr Skene (Celtic Scotland) and others, that the first Gospatric's father, Maldred son of Crinan the Thane,—identical with Crinan abbot of Dunkeld, for there is no other known,—was the younger brother of Duncan king of Scotland, slain by Macbeth. Mr Skene points out that the name Gwas Patricius is purely Celtic, signifying 'the 'servant of Patric.' An instance of this form of Gospatric will be found in the following Calendar, No. 1712.  (William the Lion.)

For the remainder of Henry II.'s reign the Pipe Rolls are still the only record, with the exception of a few charters, the Treaty of Falaise with its hard conditions, wrung from the captive King of Scotland, and a document of doubtful character, whereby the submission of the Scottish Church to the see of York, left an ambiguous question in the Treaty, and likewise denied by the Scottish prelates, with the single exception of the Bishop of Whitherne, at the council of Northampton in 1176, was apparently settled under the hand of William himself later in the same year. This is unhesitatingly pronounced by Lord Hailes to be a forgery.³

A charter,⁴ with a fine example of the Great Seal of Scotland, confirming to Robert de Brus (II.) his possessions in the Vale of Anand, granted at Lochmaben the caput of the barony, is witnessed, besides others, by Richard de Morville the Constable, the Steward, Henry Luvel [of Hawye], Huetred and Gilbert the two sons of Fergus Lord of Galloway, the youthful Rolland⁵ his grandson, and what is equally interesting, by Odinel de Umfranville the lord of Prudhoe, and Robert son of Truite, a great man in Cumberland, who constantly appears in the Rolls of the time, showing how little the border line between the countries was then regarded.

Among historical events we find chronicled⁶ that the passage of the King of Scotland beyond seas from Southampton, cost 7*l.* 10*s.*, probably in Henry's favourite vessel the 'Esnece' (or Snake), when William went, soon after his accession to the throne, to serve under Henry's banner in Brittany.

Odinel de Umfranville, not now a witness to charters, is allowed² 20*l.* for knights in his castle of Prudhoe on account of damage caused by the Scots. Robert Troite, and the sheriffs of other northern counties,³ fall sadly short in their returns on account of the waste by the [Scots] war. Under the Honour of Richmond, its keeper, the celebrated Ranulf de Glanville, accounts for expenses on a chamber in the castle of Bowes, near Barnard castle, and repairing the gates and bulwarks of the tower, against the arrival of the King of Scotland.⁴ And in 1175 the warlike lawyer, in accounting for the revenues of the same Honour expended on the war, accounts⁵ for twenty marks for the ransom of the Chamberlain of the King of Scots,⁶ as unlucky as his master. In 1176⁷ he accounts for heavy fines inflicted on Gospatric son of Orm and many other Westmorland landowners for traitorously surrendering Appelbi castle to the King of Scots. There is no special entry for the passage of this important captive to Normandy, unless it be included⁸ in the freight of forty vessels, among them the 'Esnece,' conveying Earl William de Mandeville and the King's retinue, with the Earl and Countess of Leicester, the widowed Countess of Brittany (the King of Scotland's sister), and other royal prisoners in Porchester castle, from Southampton to Rouen, on 10th August 1173.

 by William to Pope Alexander III., in its stilted phraseology and misstatement of facts, defeats its too apparent object—the subjection of the Scottish Church to York, and declares its true character.

Returning to the Pipe Roll, we find large sums laid out in provisioning and fortifying the eastles of Werk² and Edinburgh;³
 the fee of the latter's keeper, Alan constable of Richmond;⁴ provisioning and fortifying Norham and some castles in Yorkshire,⁵ and that of Roxburghe;⁶ and it would also appear that, besides the men of Westmorland, some influential barons in the northern counties, as Ædgar Unnidring, closely related to Earl Gospatric,⁷ Thomas de Museamp,⁸ Walter Corbet,⁹ and others, had either sided with or countenanced the King of Scotland.

A bloody tragedy, the murder in an especially cruel manner, characteristic of the age and barbarous province of Galloway, of one brother by another,¹⁰ is recalled by the mere enrolment of a fine. Gilbert, son of Fergus Lord of Galloway, the murderer of his brother Uchtred in 1174, had purchased the 'benevolence' of Henry II. by a promise of 1000*l.*,—a transaction severely criticised by Lord Hailes, who, however, understates the amount, calling it 1000 marks. Gilbert paid 80*l.* 11*s.* to account of his debt in 1179,¹¹ and in 1181 he managed to pay 11*s.* more,¹² leaving his debt still 917*l.* 19*s.* In the course of the next three years¹³ he further reduced the debt, but at his death in 1185 the amount due was 838*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* This large sum was never paid, though with the strict official routine which is a marked feature of the Pipe Rolls, it was carried on from year to year for at least fifteen years after Gilbert's death. And curiously enough, the clerk who made up the Roll 3 Ric. I. (1191-2) having in

The murderer—whose son Duncan fitz Gilbert or De Carric, as he is indifferently styled in the Rolls, was the first Earl of Carrick—was the lineal ancestor of Robert de Brus, the restorer of Scottish monarchy. Perhaps the one treacherous occurrence in that great man's career,—the slaughter of the Red Comyn,—may be traceable to his wild Galwegian blood.

Henry II.
(William the Lion.)

To this period may be assigned the original charter by William the Lion in favour of Furness Abbey,¹ granted at Carlisle, valuable as showing the close connection still subsisting between the Scottish kings and that house. The Honour of Huntingdon had been taken from William in 1174, and given to Simon de Senlis, a descendant of the first Earl of Northampton, and an account of its revenues appears in 1185,² soon after the death of the new owner.

Touching on more domestic matters, Richard Maltalent³ occurs in 1170 in Northumberland, a county that gave rise to many afterwards peculiarly Scottish surnames. In 1179, two manors in Cumberland, Gamelesbia and Glassanebia, are noticed,⁴ which were disputed between various claimants from that date at intervals, for one hundred years and perhaps longer, certainly till near the close of Henry III.'s reign. One of these, under the description of the land of Gamel son of Ber, occurs⁵ in 1130–1, as then the property of Hildret, sheriff of Carlisle, and Odard his son. The latter and his son Robert de Hodelme⁶ are named in the latter's pleadings against Richard fitz Troite, who had appealed him for these lands in 1199;⁷ and the editor, anticipating matters a little, may point out a continuation of this same plea⁸ in 1210, where a Cumberland jury, after hearing the original charter by King Henry I. to Hildred de Karleolio and

They will again appear in (William the Lion.) litigation in the course of our progress, and after various ownerships, a moiety of them is found at the close of Henry III.'s reign, falling to the succession of a number of persons, the majority of whom dwell in Scotland.²

A lady of royal blood, Alicia de Romeli, appears³ under the style of the 'Countess of Coupland,' a title not found in Dugdale, but evidently taken from her barony of that name in Cumberland. She was the youngest of the three daughters and coheiresses of William fitz Duncan, earl of Moray, whose father, Duncan II. (King of Scotland for rather less than two years), is now known to have been the eldest lawful son of Malcolm Canmore by his first wife Ingeborg, and thus the representative of the Scoto-Celtic line. By Duncan's marriage with Ethelreda, daughter of Earl Gospatric,⁴ his son William thus conjoined a double descent from this ancient royal stock. His male line ended, as generally believed, in William the 'Boy of Egremund,' who, tradition says, was drowned in the Wharfe, when his three sisters became coheiresses of Skipton in Yorkshire, and the baronies of Allirdale or Coupland, and Egremund in Cumberland. She was twice married, but survived her husbands, and died childless. They will be met with again in these pages. In 1187,⁵ her dower from one husband,—probably Gilbert Pipard, her first,—Badeleching in Berkshire, is noticed. Her

Strangely enough, there was another Gamelsby in Cumberland, nearer the Solway, within the township of Burgh-on-Sands; and the county historians, Nicolson and Burn, say that this was the property of Helewysa, and is not to be confounded with the other. For etymological reasons, the subject is interesting; for they seem to have derived their names from Gamel son of Bern, and Glassam son of Brietrie, two King's drengs in the reign of Henry I., a late date to give rise to a place-name ending in by. The editor, however, not being an etymologist, puts this forth with

Whether the match came off or not does not appear; but the Earl paid up his fine in the next reign.³

Henry II.

Hugh Ridel of Witering makes a fine in 1188 for his land in Northampton.⁴ This branch of the Ridels also owned Craneston in Mid-Lothian at this early date, given them, according to Chalmers,⁵ by Earl Henry, son of David I.; and it remained with them till the time of David II. They kept their Northampton estate till Edward IV.'s reign.⁶ Alan son of Earl Henry,⁷ a Yorkshire landowner in 1183, and afterwards, may have been a natural son of the above prince.

This reign closes with a charter to Furness Abbey,⁸ by Avicia de Lancaster, wife of Richard de Moreville the Constable, and her son and heir William, confirming the land of Neubi near Ingleborough, given to the monks by Waltheve son of Edmund, by special boundaries, clearly of much local interest.

For the ten years of Cœur de Lion's reign, the Pipe Rolls still continue to be the principal mainstay of the Calendar. The Feet of Fines, however, so valuable to the genealogist, begin in this reign, continuing in unbroken succession to 1834. Richard commenced his reign with a generous act,⁹ the restoration of Scottish independence, styled by Lord Hailes 'this ever-memorable instrument.' By it he restored to William the castles of Roxburgh and Berwick, released him from the conditions extorted by Henry II., and gave him back the Honour of Huntingdon; in short, restored the state of Scotland to its condition before his capture. According to Lord Hailes, ten thousand marks were to be paid by the Scottish king for this restitution. No

Richard I.

A personage who, for the next thirty years, made a considerable figure in English history, Earl David, brother and then heir presumptive of the King of Scots, received from Richard, on 24th June 1190, a charter of confirmation of the Honour of Huntingdon, given him by his brother King William, the tenant in chief.² The only other document of a public nature in this reign is the letter by Richard, confirming in affectionate terms to William the payments and allowances in food and other necessaries enjoyed by his ancestors on their visits to the court of England, and the escort due by the prelates and other great men of the provinces through which they passed.³ Some inaccuracies and omissions in previous versions of this have been corrected.

Touching more domestic matters, there are the agreement,⁴ without date, and possibly some years earlier than the conjectural date [1189] assigned, by which the lord of Annandale gave to the See of Glasgow the churches of Moffat, Kirkpatric, Drivesdale, Hodelm, and Castelmile in that district. The surname 'Le Scot' is found⁵ in Buckinghamshire for the first time; and those of Maxwell and Frasier in Yorkshire, where Herbert de Makeswelle and Ralf Frasier appear.⁶ Another surname, hitherto supposed to be peculiarly Scottish, is found in Cambridge and Huntingdon,⁷ where William Muschet, the sheriff, renders his account.

¹ In the notice of the transaction in Ridpath's Border History (p. 105, note), the authorities appear to be Robert of Howden and Benedict of Peterborough. Ridpath seems to doubt the truth of the statement, and gives good reasons for his opinion. There is much valuable information in his work, which sometimes reveals facts overlooked by later writers.

In an account of the Bishopric of Durham,² the surname of Hameldon first occurs, 1196-7, when Richard de Hameldon owes ten marks towards the late Bishop's debts. In the next reign, 1209, Robert and Roger de Hameldon occur in Northumberland.³ There are other instances of the surname both in the northern and midland counties. It is no new discovery⁴ that, instead of the fabled descent from the Earls of Leicester, the Scottish ducal family in all likelihood descend from these Northumbrian knights, that great county having been the cradle of not a few other Scottish houses. But the editor has not seen anywhere that the argument in support of the Hamilton origin from Leicester, the cinquefoils in their shield, may also hold good for Northumberland, where the well-known Umfranvilles, great territorial lords, bore a single cinquefoil on their shield. A vassal adopting this would add to the number of the charges, and here is possibly the origin of the three cinquefoils in the Hamilton escutcheon.

William de Brus (of Annandale) is discharged of his father Robert's debt of 200*l.* to Aaron of Lincoln, a well-known Jew of the period, on producing a quittance in Hebrew,⁵ which must have been a sealed book to the Barons of Exchequer. Another grant to Furness⁶ by William de Moreville, constable of Scotland, the last male of his family, witnessed among others by Joceline bishop of Glasgow, and Reiner abbot of Melrose, brings Richard's reign to a close.

of the charters of the de Quencis, gives an interesting table of descent drawn up from these. This names two nephews of Earl Saher, Roger and Saher of St Andrew. They appear in this Calendar, which also supplies some other members of the family. Lora, wife of William de Valoines [the Chamberlain], would seem to have been a daughter of Earl Saher, who besides Robert his eldest son, said to have died young, and Roger the second Earl of Winchester, had another son Robert, the second husband of the Countess of Chester. The connection of the de Quencis with Scotland requires illustration. Their rise and decline were equally rapid.

1199-1216. The reign of John introduces the reader to a much more extensive class of Records. The Patent, Close, Charter, Oblata, Fine, and Liberate Rolls begin in this reign; and practically, also the Rolls of the 'Curia Regis,' known technically as the Coram Rege Rolls. For though these last begin in 5 Richard I., there is nothing in them relating to Scotland in that reign.

John.
(William the Lion.
Alex. II.)

The fickle and treacherous character of the new king ere long introduced elements of discord into the relations between the two countries, as will appear later. Yet, at the instance of Earl David, he is found granting privileges to the burgesses of Dundee on 26th October 1199;¹ the first instrument to be found in this reign, illustrating the progress of commerce between the countries. In 1199-1200, the cost of carrying two thousand marks from Ravendene² to York and London, which the King of Scotland gave to King Richard, is stated.³

On 30th October 1200, John sends William a safe conduct and an escort,⁴ probably for the purpose of his coming to do homage, which Lord Hailes, citing Robert of Howden, says he performed at Lincoln on 22d November same year.

From two entries,⁵ the latter dated 6th January 1201-2, directing Harold earl of Orkney and his chaplain to come and see the King, it may be perhaps inferred that John was intriguing with that insular potentate, who had lately fomented rebellion against the King of Scots. A few years later, on 24th July and 30th November 1205, John writes diplomatically to William on business pending, and urges him to come to York.⁶ Here may be remarked the singular fine of ten bulls and ten cows, made by William de Braiosa, to be freed from going to escort the King of Scotland,⁷ increased by a later entry⁸ to three hundred cows, thirty bulls, and ten mares, which are divided among several religious houses. In March 1206-7, John sends William a safe

Under the compotus of Durham,⁵ seven thousand marks of the above fine appear to have been paid by 1211–12, when its carriage from Norham to Nottingham is discharged. The Prince of Scotland's expenses at Hertford amounted to 7*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*⁶ He was no doubt on his way to London, where he was knighted by John at Clerkenwell, on Mid-Lent Sunday (4 March) 1211–12,⁷ the cost of the ceremony being 14*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, as appears in the unique Misæ Roll of that year. His father had just before granted to John the young Prince's marriage, and they had both sworn fealty in the most solemn manner.⁸

 These men were for John's Welsh expedition.²

John was not, however, on such friendly terms with Alan's father-in-law, Earl David. Their relations were apparently amicable in the earlier part of his reign. In 1202 John frees him from all his debts to the late kings Henry and Richard, and himself, and the Jews, up to Christmas ;³ grants him the marriage of a great heiress, Matilda de Cauz, for his favourite natural son Henry of Brechin,⁴ and when the son fails to obtain her hand, forgives his father the large fine of one thousand marks which he had promised for the match ;⁵ commands payment of the Earl's penny for Cambridge and Huntingdon, and arrears ;⁶ gives his son another rich heiress, the daughter of Ralf de Cornhill, to wife, and her land ;⁷ sends the Earl himself to Scotland, to remain there while his brother King William came to York at the end of 1205 ;⁸ allowed him to become surety in 1208 for his brother's large debt of 2776*l.* to 'Aaron the Jew of Lincoln by ten charters,' the real creditor being probably John himself ;⁹ had the Earl's contingent of knights under Henry of Brechin (if not the Earl himself) in his Irish army in 1210,¹⁰ and granted him a large abatement from his debts to the Jews for himself, his brother, and his mother.¹¹ But before long these pleasant relationships were altogether changed. It may be inferred that Earl David sided with the English barons ; for we find a curt despatch¹² to the Earl, ordering him at once to deliver up the castle of Fotheringay, and a few days later, 24th and 25th August 1212, summary orders issue for Turkish engines to cast stones, and that the posse comitatus of Northampton, both shire and town, instantly besiege the castle.¹ Temporary peace between them had been made, for a year later, 13th June 1213, the Earl is found to have charge of one of the many Scottish hostages in England, the son of David de Lindeseie. About July or August 1214, Peter bishop of Winchester, urges the Earl, 'as he loves himself and his hostages,'—a significant hint, as his son and heir John was then in the King's hands, who was given to starving his captives,—to come at once to London and discuss the affairs of the kingdom.² Probably to the King's satisfaction, as on 5th March 1214–15, the Earl has a writ restoring his third penny of Cambridge and Huntingdon.³ And by another, dated at the historic Runnymede, 21st June 1215, the King restores all the Earl's hostages, including his son John, to his natural son Henry, and the castle of Fotheringay to himself;⁴ Henry recovering his own lands of which the King had deprived him 'at will,' by another missive of 24th June from Windsor.⁵ But at the close of same year John again makes free with the Earl's possessions.⁶ And on 2d October 1216, within a few days of his own death, the King orders certain persons to do their will in the woods of the Earl and other King's enemies, vindictively adding, 'so that 'the traces of their doings may appear for ever.'⁷

Being a Pipe Roll entry, (William the Lion. Alex. II.) neither the day nor year can be fixed; probably 1210. On 26th November 1212, a considerable sum, 36*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, is allowed for the robes of themselves and their governesses.² And two seams of fish, fifty pounds of almonds, and one hundred pounds of figs were purchased for them, then at Windsor.³ From this time they seem to have accompanied the Court in its rapid movements. At Nottingham, February 1212-13, they had robes of green, trimmed with rabbits' fur, with russet hoods; and their master had a hood of same to keep the rain off.⁴ Three weeks later they were at Winehester,⁵ and on 25th March 1213, with the Queen at Waltham.⁶ A month later, they were with her Majesty at Winchester.⁷ By 21st May they had reached, via Rochester, the House of the Temple near Dover,⁸ having possibly been solaced by messages from their father, whose knight, Adam de Hastings, receives three marks at Rochester.⁹ From 29th June to 6th July they were at Corfe castle with the Queen and Eleanor of Brittany the King's niece; when the King commands the Mayor of Winehester to provide dark green robes for the young ladies, and of bright green for their maids, and thin summer shoes for all, to be brought by him to the castle.¹⁰ A few subsequent entries¹¹ comprise the remaining notices of them in this reign. The last notice of their father is on 1st January 1213-14, when John commands Engelard de Cygoney, the sheriff of one of the western counties, probably Woreester, to allow the King of Scotland's man to buy fifty or sixty lampreys there, with the curious salvo that John is to have one turn about with the King of Scots.¹²

King of Scotland, are remarkable as evidence of the claim of superiority over Cumbria, for the name of the land, 'Straddune,' indicates a site north of Solway.¹ The inquisitions of knight's fees, and tenures in Cumberland and other counties, from the Red Book of Exchequer,² and the unique service of 'inborewe' 'et utborewe' between England and Scotland, rendered by Earl Patric for his Northumbrian possessions, are worthy of notice. Nor must we omit the beautiful charter, with its seal, perhaps depicting the patron saint of the granter, by the widowed Alicia de Rumeli, for the souls of herself, her ancestors, and her two husbands, to the monks of Furness, of the wide district of Borrowdale, with ample rights of hunting and hawking, by boundaries so minute as probably still to be recognised³; another by Hawyse de Quinci, to the Hospitallers of Clerkenwell, for the soul of her late husband, Robert de Quinci⁴; that by Earl David to the Holy Trinity of London, with its fine seal⁵; and the four Annandale charters,⁶ with their array of witnesses, and local boundaries, places well known in border history; one, the grant by William de Brus to Holmcoltram Abbey, curious from its reservation of sturgeon and whale to the granter. Indications of trade are not many; but besides the notice already referred to, we find three burgesses of Dundee in Scotland sued by a citizen of London for a debt of 40*l.*; the plaintiff, however, being mulcted in a third of his claim that he may get the other two.⁷ So costly was justice in those days.

If we may judge from three writs,⁸ Saher earl of Winchester was interested in shipping adventures, from his Fifeshire port of Leuchars, and elsewhere; and from several others,⁹ it would seem that trade between Scotland and the eastern and southern parts of England had even then attained considerable dimensions.

With the reign of Henry III. the area of record begins to expand; for now the Papal Bulls and Letters, the Memoranda Rolls, containing enrolments of the important business done in the offices of the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancers, the Originalia Rolls, often containing extracts from earlier rolls not now existent, the Files of Chancery, and Writs of Privy Seal; and lastly, the important Inquisitions post-mortem, containing not only minute particulars of the landed possessions of deceased tenants in capite, their value, their occupiers, their cultivation, and the name and age of the heir, but frequently other matter relating to living persons, all commence.

Henry III.
(Alex. II.)

This long reign naturally divides itself, as respects its relations with Scotland, into three periods,—the first, from 1216 to 1249, embracing the chief portion of Alexander II.'s reign, for a part of which the English king himself was in minority; the second, from the death of Alexander till the majority of Alexander III. in 1261; and from this last year till 1272.

The first public instrument is a letter from Honorius III.¹ urging the Scottish king to make peace with Henry, and give up his 'disloyal' alliance with Lewis the Dauphin. Three months later, Henry himself writes to the Pope,² complaining of the Canons of Carlisle, who, notwithstanding his excommunication, adhered to the Scottish king, and had elected an excommunicated clerk as their bishop, whose name is not given, but it may be presumed was a Scotsman. Later in that year, Alexander made peace and did homage, receiving the earldom of Huntingdon and lands in nine counties, held under him by Earl David, his uncle.³

At the same time Ranulf de Bonekille, a well-known border baron, receives similar restitution of his English goods, forfeited by adherence to Alexander, an instance among many others in the Records of the difficult position of landowners in both countries when war broke out.⁴ The King of Scots probably

 Henry III. in his possession, though Lord Hailes says he merely held the (Alex. II.) city; for there are three writs on record, commanding him to deliver it and all his prisoners to Robert de Veteripont, the lord of Brougham, who had been appointed keeper, and threatening force if not surrendered.¹ On 8th July 1219, a knight of the Temple occurs as ambassador to Scotland from the French king.²

The controversies between the Kings, in which Pandulf the Legate was arbiter, are referred to in several instruments, as progressing favourably at Norham in 1219,³ though long years passed before these were settled by treaty in 1237, the provisions of which were not finally carried into effect till 1242.
 The ward of the late Earl David's Honour was committed to Alexander till the heir's majority;⁴ a grant which was made the ground of one among the many charges against Hubert de Burgo at a subsequent date. After some preliminary proceedings,⁵ and two rather curious letters from the Bishop of Durham on the important point of etiquette, viz., as to the two Kings entering York simultaneously,⁶ Alexander married Johanna of England in June 1221. Her jointure was settled by an instrument on 18th of that month, on various lands in Scotland;⁷ but there seems no mention of any dowry given by her brother. The important question of the marches now first appears on record 10th May 1222, when the Sheriff of Northumberland, with the Bishop of Durham and several northern magnates, are commanded to settle the eastern march at Witelawe, where an encroachment on England was suspected.⁸
 The Sheriff's report⁹ shows that the dispute was not settled, through the violent proceedings of two important personages, David de Lindsay, Justiciar of Lothian, and Patrie earl of Dunbar. Nearly a quarter of a century later, twenty-four Northumbrian knights make a 'recognizance' of the same border line.¹ And the year after, on 1st December 1246, twelve knights of same county perambulate the line under the eyes of another David de Lindsay, also Justiciar of Lothian, and other officials of both kingdoms.²

Henry III.
(Alex. II.)

The law of the march receives an interesting illustration³ in 1248, where a mixed jury of twelve knights, six of each country, decides that offences by one holding lands in both kingdoms, or his retainers, could only be tried on the border and not in the ordinary courts of law.

A letter from the Queen of Scotland to her brother, without date, but probably March 1223, assures the latter of her husband's disposition to aid him in his contest with his Irish malecontents.⁴

A pecuniary transaction between the Kings is of considerable interest, as inverting their generally accepted relations towards each other. On 14th May 1225, the King commands that 1000*l.*, given by the King of Scots to the King's brother Richard in aid of the Gascon war, be sent under escort to Winchester.⁵ The money was paid before 19th July.⁶ Five years later, 8th April 1230, the King declares that an aid of two thousand marks made by the King of Scots for his transgression, was a voluntary present by him, and not to be drawn into a precedent.⁷ There is no record of its actual payment, but directions are given in May as to sending one half of it from Berwick to London.⁸ Lord Hailes, under the year 1230, mentions, on the authority of Mathew Paris, that Alexander spent Christmas of that year at York, where Henry 'loaded him with presents,' from which his lordship draws the moral, that the receiver of presents tacitly acknowledges some pre-eminence in the giver. From the Records, however, it is clear that Henry and Alexander were not at York on Christmas 1230. The former King was then at Westminster, where he granted more than one charter.⁹ Both were at York at Christ-

Henry III.
(Alex. II.)

It is somewhat singular that before this time the Scottish king was owing the sum of one hundred marks for the ward of his uncle Earl David's lands. To this constant reference is made in the Pipe Rolls for Northumberland, and occasionally orders are given to distrain him for the sum. But it was never paid, and was still due at his death. No conjecture can be made as to the reason for this; in the frequent money transactions of the two kings, it would have been an easy matter for Henry to have retained the amount in settling Alexander's claims on the northern counties, and otherwise.

On 6th May 1233, Henry ratified the appeal made by the Archbishop of York to the Pope against Alexander being crowned in prejudice both of the royal dignity and the rights of his See.³ From the tenor of several Papal letters, about three years later, some discord seems to have existed between the two kings, as Alexander is exhorted by Gregory IX. to keep the peace.⁴ And Henry, on 27th March 1237, accredits envoys to meet those of Scotland at Doncaster respecting peace.⁵ A few months later, he commands the barons of the Cinque Ports to equip galleys to clear the Irish sea of certain Scottish pirates.⁶

On 25th September 1237, the important agreement⁷ was concluded between the two kings at York, through the mediation of Odo the cardinal legate, whereby Alexander surrendered his hereditary rights to the northern counties and some other claims, on condition of receiving 200*l.* of land, for which he did homage and fealty. Though Henry gave immediate commands to extend these lands,⁸ vivâ voce in fact, as his writ bears,⁹ the transaction was not concluded till April 1242, when he granted his charter to Alexander;¹⁰ and shortly after, the Bishop of Glasgow and Henry de Balliol received seizin at Penrith on behalf

Henry III.

An interesting state secret is revealed in the fact, that Alexander, now a widower, must have contemplated marriage with a sister of the Queen of England; as may be gathered from the letter of 9th August 1238, from Henry, whose envoy was charged verbally on the subject.⁴ The Scottish king's subsequent marriage to Mary de Coucy did not, according to Lord Hailes, tend to improve his relations with Henry.

In 1242 a tragic event occurred, productive of international consequences,—the murder at Haddington of Patric the young Earl of Athol, son of Thomas of Galloway, who was now dead. According to Lord Hailes, the reputed murderer, Walter Biset, after escaping with difficulty from Scotland and the vengeance of Athol's relations, ungratefully sought to embroil the two nations in his quarrel, and 'made a vow for the salvation of Athol's soul and his own, to repair to the Holy Land and never to return.' Walter Biset may have visited the Holy Land, but he died in Scotland. The first notice of him in England is on 28th August 1243, when Henry III. commits the manor of Ludeham to him during pleasure.⁵ During the three succeeding years he appears as receiving considerable gifts (in the aggregate three hundred and fifty marks) from the King; and he with his brother John Biset was sent to Ireland on the King's affairs,⁶ the King, on 8th December 1246, confirming the above manor to him and his heirs till 'they have recovered their lands in Scotland.'⁷ For five years he is lost sight of,⁸ till in November 1251, an inquisition is held whether he was seized in Ulvington, county York, at his death shortly before, the precise date of which is unknown, but said to have happened 'far off in Scotland, in a certain island called Arran.' His nephew, Thomas Biset, asserting a claim to the manor, had come and

On 30th January 1251-52, Henry, at the instance of his daughter Queen Margaret, pardons Alan, son of Thomas earl of Athol, for slaying some men of John Biset in Ireland, and plundering some Irish merchants at the siege of the castle of Dunaverty in Cantire.² Alan was a bastard son of the Earl of Athol, and the affray was probably connected with the feud for the murder of the young Earl.

The following relate to the war so stimulated by Biset's intrigues. A proclamation, 20th April 1244, to the sheriffs of counties, to prevent the passage of strangers to or from Scotland with compromising letters;³ a summons to the king of Tyrconnel and other Irish chiefs to join in a Scottish expedition;⁴ orders for cross-bow bolts, timber for engines, corn and other munitions of war to be sent to Newcastle-on-Tyne.⁵ Peasee, however, was soon concluded at the Newcastle conference, which seems to have been held in the open air.⁶ The originals of the obligation by the King of Scotland,⁷ and the letter by himself and his magnates to the Pope, requesting its confirmation by his Holiness,⁸ are not now to be found, and several of the names are much corrupted by the copyist.

In the following year, a papal rescript by Innocent IV. providing that ecclesiastical causes, when tried out of Scotland, should be heard only in Carlisle or Durham, as nearer Scotland, never in York, struck a blow at the ancient claim of the latter see on the obedience of the Scottish Church.⁹ Another, from the same Pope, inflicted a considerable penalty on non-resident holders of benefices either in Great Britain or Ireland.¹⁰

The death of Alexander II. is only noticed casually in the Cumberland Pipe Roll, when the escheators are directed to answer for his manors in the county,¹¹ John de Balliol, father of the future king, being then sheriff. Curiously, a distraint had been ordered against the late king in Trinity term, about the time of his death, for the long-standing one hundred marks.¹²

A rent roll of these manors is given in the escheator's account of Cumberland, 34 Henry III., embracing a period of twenty-one months from Alexander's death.¹

1249-72.
(Alex. III.)

The new King of Scotland was a child in his eighth year, and Henry III. appears to have made a direct application to the Pope to forbid his being anointed or crowned without his consent, an opposition which he had tried indirectly by means of the Archbishop of York during the late reign. Innocent IV. with promptness refused this request, as derogating from the Scottish king's honour, and likewise a gift sought by Henry, of the tithe of benefices in Scotland, as being unexampled.²

An event destined, in the next reign, to bring much woe on Scotland, but at first attended by happy auguries,—the marriage of the young king to Margaret, eldest daughter of Henry,—receives much notice in the Records. The preparations were on a truly royal scale. Besides the thousands of hens, hundreds of swine, hares and partridges, scores of swans, cranes, peacocks, and pheasants, the 'brawns,' without which no mediæval feast was complete, and salmon 'calewar' from Cumberland and Newcastle, commanded by writs from Windsor,³—herrings by the 'last,' and 'haddock,' 'congres' and other fish in thousands,⁴ were ordered to be bought at Scarborough. The seneschals of Galtrees and other forests were commanded to send hinds, does, boars, swine, and roes, by the hundred, to stock the royal larder at York.⁵ And the consumption of wines amounted to no fewer than 132 casks (dolia), costing 22*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*⁶

Besides this profusion of meats and drinks, the adornments of the body were not forgotten. The 'philosophy of clothes' as regards outward splendour was well understood in those days; and one cannot read without interest of the robes of samite trimmed with ermine and minever,⁷ for the royal parents of the bride, the 'queyntisis' or quaint devices of violet samite with the three leopards (embroidered probably) both on front and back,

III.) and other 'queyntisis in plenty,' to be worn at ehurch by the boy Edward and his three attendant knights ;² of the fair sword with silken seabbard, the ' preeious eouch ' and gilt spurs for his knight-hood, given to the youthful bridegroom.³ We know less about the bridal attire, for the ' schedule of certain things,' enclosed with the writ eommanding the Treasurer and Edward of Westminster (who seems to have been the Court jeweller) to lay out two hundred marks for the princess, is lost as irreeoverably as the King's verbal instructions.⁴ But the two fair saddles and ornate reins, and two more with searlet ' sambueas ' and many jewels, the rich and preeious eouch similar to her husband's, the ten cloths of gold ' to take to Seotland,' the green robes for her maidens, the robe of scarlet and minever for her lady of honour,⁵ the gold and silver eups and vases and posnet, fermails and rings ' of pree,' given to the bride, are all daily reeorded.⁶

The interests of religion were amply provided for, as the eeelesiastieal antiquary will see in a list of the ornaments of the ehapels of the bride and her brother Edward, and their cost, eharged on the Irish revenues.⁷ The poor of York were remembered, a pleasing feature in the pageant ; the King's almoner being empowered to distribute eloth and boots, the price of both earefully speeified.⁸ Preeious cloths were given in the form of robes to stranger knights,⁹ costly jewels to the shrine of St Edward, a ehaplét to the Queen-mother of Seotland ; and an ouche to Earl Patrie, the only noble reeorded as so honoured.¹⁰

The event duly took place on the morrow of Christmas 1251, and on the following day Henry bound himself to pay, as his daughter's 'maritagium,' the sum of five thousand marks within four years from Easter next thereafter.¹¹ The dowry was eertainly small, eontrasted with the splendour of the marriage festivities ; and as Lord Hailes says, Henry gave thirty thousand marks to his sister the Empress of Germany. What was still worse, it was not paid for many years, notwithstanding repeated applications by Alexander. However, the two royal children were despatched with all honour to Scotland, the King pardoning a number of outlaws on the occasion, and the Sheriff of Northumberland being commanded to make Alexander New Year's gifts at Newcastle.¹ Frequent messages and letters passed between Queen Eleanor and her child,² who seems to have visited her mother in the spring of 1253 ;³ and one sees the tender parent's maternal care in the ' three veils and three yellow ' hoods ' sent to Scotland to shield the little Queen from the northern blasts.⁴

Henry III.
(Alex. III.)

The evils attending the minority of a sovereign are notorious, and during Alexander's nonage, Scotland was harassed by the contests of the great nobles for the guardianship of their King, in which Henry took an active interest, siding with the party of which Earl Patric, Robert de Brus (the future competitor), the High Steward, and Alan Durward, were leading spirits, and are styled on record ' the King's friends.' The opposition, consisting of the heads of the Comyns, with Robert de Ros, and John de Balliol, being styled the Queen's ' gainsayers.' Some historians have blamed Henry for his interference as being due to interested motives, and a wish to assert the superiority of his crown. Perhaps this may be too harsh a judgment, and parental affection possibly accounts for some part of his action. Whatever his faults, he appears to have been a kind father and brother. Be this as it may, the records are full of notices of the communications between Henry and Alexander and the rival nobles. In August 1254, the celebrated Simon de Montfort and Gilbert de Segrave were despatched on a secret mission to Alexander.⁵ In August 1255 the Earl of Gloucester and others were accredited to the prelates and nobles of Scotland, and especially to the ' King's friends ' by name, who were taken under his protection.⁶ Henry summoned his army to the Border,⁷ and at

III.) and daughter met him at Werk castle, under the escort of his half-brothers Geoffry de Lezignan and William de Valence, and other nobles,² whither also the leaders of the Comyn party came.³ And at Roxburgh, on 20th September, Alexander appointed certain of the 'King's friends' as regents and guardians of the Queen and himself, to hold office till his majority, which was approved of by Henry, who seems then to have been either at Sprouston in Roxburghshire, or at Carham a few miles off, on his own side of the march.⁴ Matters being thus apparently settled, the King and Queen of Scotland visited England about midsummer 1256, and spent some time with their parents at Woodstock and Windsor, where the account of the preparations is curious.⁵ And it is tolerably certain that Prince Edward, now a youth of seventeen, went to escort his sister from Scotland, his first recorded visit to a country in whose affairs he was destined to take so important a share.⁶ In October this year, Henry ordered payment of 300*l.* to his daughter, the Queen of Scotland, that her husband had given her out of the arrears of the marriage portion. To do this, however, he kept his merchants waiting, to whom he was owing four thousand marks.⁷ With uncalled for extravagance, he at same time gave the King of Scotland five hundred marks.⁸

Dissensions again arose in Scotland. The Queen-mother (Mary de Coucy) and her second husband, John de Brienne (or Acre), came to Scotland, and, in spite of their oath to the contrary,⁹ joined the party of the Comyns. In July 1257, Henry sent envoys to promote peace between Alexander and the malcontent nobles;¹⁰ and shortly afterwards, the latter having secured the persons of the King and Queen, he summoned the barons of Yorkshire and the border counties to join his expedition for their delivery.¹¹ Two of the 'King's friends,' Alan Durward and Walter de Moray, were provided 'during the disturbance of Scotland' with safe retreats in the castles of Norham or Bamburgh, and Werk.¹ The Earl of Stratherne, William le Latimer, and Robert de Neville, were all enjoined by Henry to see to the solace and comfort of his young daughter, and the Earl reports his diligence in the affair.² Several other writs show the King's anxiety to settle the affairs of Scotland, even though some of the opposite party had been admitted as regents.³

His suspicions of the Comyn party are shown to have been well founded, by a secret bond of manrent, 18th March 1258-9, between certain Scottish nobles (five of whom were members of that powerful family), and Llewelin prince of Wales and other Welsh nobles, in which the former make common cause with the Welsh magnates against the King of England, saving allegiance to their own sovereign.⁴ The document next but one to this bond is a letter, on 14th May after, from Henry to Alexander, who had sent John de Dundemur (one of the parties to the bond of manrent, it may be noticed), to request payment of the maritagium, excusing delay on account of his expedition against his Welsh rebels and other heavy expenses, but holding out hopes of partial payment at Michaelmas following; yet curiously still objecting to his coronation.⁵

About this time several letters pass between the Pope, Henry, and Alexander in reference to the appointment of John de Cheyam,⁶ the Pope's chaplain, to the see of Glasgow.⁷ On 20th May 1260, a further payment of five hundred and fifty marks to account of the maritagium, appears in some intricate transactions at the Roman Curia.⁸ On October 3d, a further payment of five hundred marks is made, out of money for the household, to Robert Byset, the King of Scotland's knight;⁹ two hundred marks on 10th November,¹⁰ and three hundred marks from the issues of Durham.¹¹ On 14th November, 100*l.* is commanded to

Henry III.
(Alex. III.)

1249-72. be laid out in jewels as presents for Alexander and his retinue.¹ Henry III. The Queen of Scotland was confined at her father's court, either (Alex. III.) at Windsor or the Tower, shortly before 25th March 1261, of her first child, a daughter, Margaret the future Queen of Norway.
 On that day the King her father sends his servant and fisherman to catch pike and bream in the fish pond of the Bishop of Winchester at Taunton, 'against the instant purification of his ' daughter, the Queen of Scotland.'² On 28th July same year, 1000*l.* was paid in further reduction of the balance of the Queen of Scotland's marriage portion, by a complicated transaction in which the Steward of Scotland was concerned.³

On 23d March 1261-62, Henry, in reply to a further demand by Alexander, pled the emptiness of his Exchequer, and 'intolerable expenses,' as his excuse for non-payment, and promised to settle the balance at Michaelmas and Easter following.⁴ A letter from him to Haco king of Norway, refers to dissensions between the latter and the King of Scots, and recommends peace.⁵ On 13th March 1262-63, Henry, writing to Alexander, reports his recovery from illness, and makes excuses, in his usual style, for non-payment of his debt.⁶ A letter from Robert de Neville to Walter de Merton the Chancellor, makes allusion to a great fleet under the Kings of Denmark and Norway, being reported off the Western isles of Scotland, perhaps the expedition which ended disastrously for the Norwegians at Largs.⁷

From this period, however, Henry's own domestic troubles with his barons diverted his attention from the affairs of Scotland. In this struggle he was aided by several of the greatest of the Scottish magnates, and at Lewes many of their men were killed, according to Lord Hailes, citing the chroniclers; Sir Richard Cumin and the elder Robert de Brus being made prisoners.⁸ The wife and son of the latter had safe-conducts through England to procure his ransom.⁹ Early in March 1264-65, Henry makes an urgent appeal to his son-in-law to aid in the deliverance of Prince Edward, who was a hostage in the hands of the barons, along with his nephew Henry son of the King of Germany; and commands his daughter the Queen of Scotland to use her influence to the same end.¹ Alexander responded to the appeal, sending the Abbot of Jedburgh and three other envoys to Henry.²

After the successful issue of the barons' war at Evesham, Henry rewarded his Scottish allies with grants out of his enemies' forfeited lands. John Comyn³ and John de Balliol⁴ receive considerable gifts, and Comyn the enviable privilege of hunting in the royal forests on his journeys between England and Scotland,⁵ and fortifying his house at Tyrsete in Tyndale;⁶ while Robert de Brus of Annandale and his son Robert obtained large ransoms from three northern barons, Sir Robert de Hilton, Sir Walter de Faucunberg, and Sir John de Melsa, whose forfeitures had been given to them by the King.⁷

During the few remaining years of Henry's reign there are no international transactions of any moment recorded. The King seriously contemplated going to the Holy Land, as appears from several instruments in 1270.⁸ Many Scottish crusaders joined the expedition, which was led by Prince Edward. Among these, David earl of Athol, Richard and Robert de Brus (the son), and Alexander and Eustace de Balliol appear, with Antony Bek the future warlike Bishop of Durham.⁹

It is doubtful if Alexander ever obtained from his father-in-law the arrears of Queen Margaret's dower. By an instrument dated 2d November 1270, they then amounted to 2000 marks, for which Henry granted an assignment of a debt of 4000 marks due by Llewelin prince of Wales.¹⁰ This writ is cancelled, for the sufficient reason that Alexander received nothing.

Having thus indicated the chief international and diplomatic instruments of the reign, those relating to the important subject of trade may now be alluded to. Closely connected with this are to be especially remarked the many permissions given to

Henry III. to buy corn, meal, and other articles of food in Ireland. That (Alex. II.) island, so renowned in later times for its verdure, must have been a veritable land of Goshen, and probably enjoyed in former days a climate more suited to bring grain crops to maturity than now.
A trader in corn would certainly not be sent there in these

The first religious body to obtain such permission was that of Vauday (Vallis Dei), seated at Kar¹ in Galloway, on 15th February 1220-21,² to last for four years from Easter. Another Galloway churchman, the Abbot of Dundrennan, has a similar one for three years, shortly after.³ The bailiffs of King's Lynn, a port of large trade with Scotland, are commanded, on 8th August 1223, to allow the wines, etc., for the King of Scots' private use, to be shipped, and all the small Scots vessels to depart.⁴ They are commanded to release corn-laden vessels for Scotland and Norway.⁵ In August 1224, the Abbots of Melrose and Cupar have leave to trade beyond seas; a Dieppe merchant to bring wine for Scotland to Berwick; and the bailiffs of Yarmouth are commanded to release Scottish merchant vessels and fishing vessels of all countries.⁶ Those of Southampton are commanded to release John Ruffus, a Scottish burgess of Berwick, and his ship the 'Portejoye.'⁷ In April 1225, the Abbots of Melrose and Cupar have leave to send wool to Flanders;⁸ and in May, Alexander of Dunwich, a Scottish merchant, is allowed to carry his cargo of barley and beans northwards from Lynn.⁹ In 1226 the Abbot of Holmeoltram has leave to buy corn in Ireland, till Henry's majority;¹⁰ and his neighbour of Glenluce in Galloway for a year,¹¹ repeated in 1227;¹² John of Dunwich and Hugh son of Odo, two Scottish shippers of corn, are respectively allowed to depart from Sandwich and Lynn;¹³ Jocc of Dunwich, with a cargo of Gascon wine for Scotland, has leave to sail (the port is not named), and another corn vessel for Scotland is released from Lynn.¹ In September 1227, the monks of Kilwinning have leave to buy corn in Ireland for a year,² a privilege repeated in 1252.³ In 1229, a Berwick merchant's wool arrested at Dover is to be released on his proving his nationality;⁴ three Scottish ships, with cargoes of corn, wine, and salt, are released at Lynn;⁵ Simon of St Andrews, a merchant of the King of Scots, has leave to trade in England for a year with his vessel;⁶ and hides and wool arrested at Romney are delivered to a Berwick burgess by the Constable of Dover.⁷ The Abbot of Melrose's vessel—friar William of Bowden, supercargo—is allowed in 1230 to trade in England for a year;⁸ and at the direct intervention of the King of Scots, a strict inquiry is ordered as to the plunderers of the ship of John Ruffus, his burgess of Berwick, when she was in danger near Yarmouth, and restitution to be made.⁹ The vessels of six traders of Lynn are released from arrest and permitted to sail for Norway and Scotland.¹⁰ Closely connected no doubt with trade is the singular fine, on 5th July 1234, by which the King's good men of Newcastle-on-Tyne give one hundred marks that no Jew shall thenceforth remain in their town.¹¹

Henry III.
(Alex. II.)

In September 1237, after the treaty at York, Henry commands the Mayor of Dublin to release the goods of Scottish merchants arrested on account of William de Marisco's piracies, and the Mayor of Drogheda to release the ship and goods of the Ayr burgesses so seized.¹² Roger de Quency earl of Winchester has leave for his men, Richard Ruffus and Erkin of Kirkcudbright, to go with their vessels to Ireland for corn and other victuals.¹³

After an interval of five years, and an isolated reference in 1242 to a ship freighted from Scotland to London,¹⁴ we come in November of that year to an affair of some moment, the arrest of a quantity of what are styled warlike stores, consisting of many sacks of wool, and lasts and dickers of hides, captured for the King at Yarmouth, Dunwich, and other places.  Henry III. of the Scottish colony of traders at Dunwich, co. Suffolk, and the (Alex. III.) mayor, Lucas 'le Scot,' a person who with his family occurs often in the Calendar.² Dunwich, in very early days the seat of a bishopric, and later a place of considerable trade, has been long swallowed up by the sea; and its records having probably perished, its history is but little known.

Difficulties naturally arose on occasion, and at one time the King of Scots himself, at another the Justiciar of Lothian, are obliged to guarantee debts due by Scots to the citizens of Bordeaux, before the arrestment of Scottish vessels and merchandise at the English port of Lynn in security is discharged.³

Trade and money being inseparable, it is singular that the only reference to the latter, connected with Scotland, occurs on 8th July 1251, when Henry commands all the sheriffs of England to make public proclamation against any money, Scottish in particular, being current in the realm, but the King's new money only.⁴

In October 1252 the Abbot of Glenluce again has leave for seven years to buy a ship-load of corn in Ireland for his house.⁵
 And in March following, Robert le Stater of Berwick, who must have been a large trader, has a gift of his ship and cargo cast ashore by stress of weather in Lincolnshire.⁶

A process ensued regarding her cargo which had been plundered, and which the sheriff was accused of having undervalued designedly. It was of sufficient importance to be heard before the King's Council; and in the pleadings a minute account is given of the ship's furniture and its value, which the Council ordered to be levied on the wreckers and their lands for the owner's benefit.⁷ In 1258 the Scottish mayor (or ex-mayor) Lucas of Dunwich and his son Richard were accused of violently impounding the goods, consisting of jewellery, of a citizen of Acre, the proceedings wherein are remarkable.⁸ The Abbot of Arbroath obtained in 1260 an inspeximus of the charter granted to his predecessor half a century earlier by King John ;¹ Berwick and its burgesses are granted considerable privileges in 1260 ;² and Luke of Dunwich is again attached for transgressions on German merchants of Hamburgh,³ the Mayor and community of which city had arrested English goods in that port till justice was done to their countrymen.⁴ The 'law of merchants' is illustrated in 1261, when Henry commands all Scottish goods at Lyun fair to be arrested, till justice was done on six Scottish traders for a debt, which their own King was dilatory in seeing rectified.⁵ In May 1263, the bailiffs of all the ports of England, Ireland, and Gascony are commanded to arrest a vessel, the crew of which had run away with her, and restore ship and cargo to the owner, John le Escot of Berwick.⁶

Henry III.
(Alex. III.)

In 1266, at John de Balliol's request, the Abbot of Dundrennan had licence to trade with wool and goods in England, taking back corn and other victuals for the sustenance of his monks and brethren.⁷

In 1268 some merchants of Douai trading to Scotland have redress for the plunder of their vessel near Whitby.⁸ These men were under the express protection of the Queen of Scotland, who writes to her father on their behalf.⁹

With an interesting notice of a cargo of sea coal, occurring in a plea by the Prior of Tynemouth against a number of persons, some with Scottish surnames, who had plundered his vessel at Shields,¹⁰ these references to trade may fitly conclude.

We may now trace the career of Johanna sister of Henry III., the three Scottish princesses, sisters of Alexander II., and some others of the royal family.

With the exception of two letters of uncertain dates¹¹ from Johanna to her brother Henry, and the grants by him to her, perhaps in lieu of a dower, of which no trace appears, this Queen of Scotland makes little figure in history. The chief interest in her career begins somewhat paradoxically at her death. In

He gave Hugh de Gurlegh (or Gourlay), her valet, a valuable ward,¹⁴ and his benefactions to Tarente Abbey, her burial place, only ceased with his own life. Her obsequies cost eighty marks;¹⁵ the Abbess received yearly gifts of wine for divine service, and herrings and other fish from Southampton for their use

Of the three Scottish princesses, Johanna’s sisters-in-law, it appears that the two elder only, Margaret and Isabella, lived in England as state hostages; the youngest, Margery, shared the fortunes of her brother till married to the Earl Marshal.

In 1221 Margaret was married as his fourth wife to Hubert de Burgo. Her career was a checkered one, and involves somewhat more detail than those of her sisters. Isabella appears at Corfe castle in 1221,¹³ and in the following year visited her own country,¹⁴ the citizens of London providing her outfit.¹⁵ In 1225 she married Roger le Bigod, then a minor, the heir of the earldom of Norwich,¹⁶

Margery, the third of the sisters, in this case styled 'Margaret,' first appears on record on 10th March 1228-29, when her brother, the King of Scots, granted to her for her marriage the whole land of Tyndale under some reservations, and a declaration that if she married out of his kingdom, he would give her other lands in exchange. This deed was confirmed by Henry III. on 25th December 1230.⁴ While in her possession the princess granted a charter to David de Lindesie of Chirdene, a part of Tyndale.⁵ In 1235, according to the Chronicle of Melros, cited by Lord Hailes,⁶ she was married at Berwick to Gilbert, Earl Marshal of England; the second of five brothers who succeeded each other in that high dignity in the brief period of twenty-six years. He was killed at a tournament shortly before 27th July 1241, when his widow is temporarily dowered from his lands in Oxford, Buckingham, and Sussex.⁷ She again appears in the following year, in an agreement with Earl Walter Marshal regarding her dower lands in various English counties,⁸ and, after 19th June 1244, when she is cited to answer for an unjust disscizin in the county of Dorset,⁹ the records are silent concerning her.¹⁰

Margaret, the eldest of the sisters, is the only one who has made her mark on English history. Her first appearance as the wife of Hubert de Burgo,—to whom she was married at York in 1221, at or about the time when her brother married Johanna of England,—is on 3d November 1223, when her husband acknowledged before the King and Council that he had given to Margaret, his firstborn daughter by the princess, two manors, and delivered the charter to the child in their presenee, which the King confirmed.¹ Honours and lands were conferred on the pair. Hubert was created earl of Kent, with remainder to his heirs by the princess, who were preferred to his children by a previous marriage; and lands in Essex, Kent, and other counties were given them to support the dignity.² The King gave them, besides the Honours of Carmarthen and Cardigan, the homage of John de Braose for the Honour of Gower, and licence to build a castle at Hadleigh in their Honour of Rayleigh,³ with a house and garden in the royal city of Winchester,⁴ and fortified these grants to the Countess by a solemn oath on the Holy Gospels, in which Hubert also joined, 2d July 1232.⁵

Henry III.

This sunshine of royal favour was suddenly eclipsed on 16th October of same year,⁶ when the sheriff of Essex, under penalty of 4000*l.*, was commanded to take Hubert, then in a chapel, a prisoner to the Tower, whenever he came forth; the sheriff of Norfolk being likewise commanded to capture the Countess, then in the sanctuary of St Edmunds, and take her to the same fortress.⁷ The Earl kept to the chapel, however, for two days later; the King ordered his official seal to be broken to pieces,⁸ and, apparently to starve him into submission, allowed him food only once a day, consisting of 'a halfpenny loaf and a measure of 'beer,' and ordered his psalter to be taken from him.⁹ He was summoned to stand his trial, and strieter orders given to watch him in chapel on 22d October.¹⁰ His wife and daughter had safe conducts, November 7th and 13th;¹¹ and he himself had restoration of his lands that the King had taken, with the exception of four castles,¹² indicating a partial reconciliation. But on 15th December the King declares that his treasurer took possession at the New Temple, of a quantity of jewels, silver plate, and money belonging to Hubert, besides a silver gilt cross with reliques, a cup of a 'gryphon's egg,' and other treasure of his wife's.¹³ In

From this he escaped to the church of St John, maintaining himself there apparently in safety for a month, though watched by the Sheriff and posse comitatus of Wilts;⁵ perhaps eluding them also, as on 8th January following, Geoffrey de Bruis is pardoned by the King for letting him go.⁶ By June of that year he was again in favour, and he, his wife, and daughter had restoration of various lands;⁷ and later in the year, Horneby castle was also restored. They were again in disfavour with the King, on account among other offenses of marrying their daughter to the young Richard de Clare,⁸ darkly alluded to in a writ restoring their lands with the exception of castles, and freeing them from the King's wrath, 29th October 1239.⁹ Hubert died on 12th May 1243 at his manor of Banstede in Surrey, and on the 19th of same month the Countess received a grant of the house of Banstede for a residence, and other lands till her dower was settled,¹⁰ with the castle of Horneby at a later date.¹¹ His daughter (or daughters, for some authorities say there were two) by the Countess predeceased him. merchants who came to it, without payment. Other notices of her occur in the Records in connection with her property.¹ She was probably present at the marriage of her nephew Alexander III.,² and her last public appearance recorded is on 3d September 1256, when she gives the King a gold mark for permission to use the clauses in her charters, which she had not done hitherto.³ She died between that date and Michaelmas term 1259, when her stepson John de Burgo makes an agreement with her three executors as to payment of his debt to her.⁴ Inquisitions follow regarding some of her manors,⁵ and the King prosecutes a number of persons who had after her death, plundered one of them, Elmore in Gloucestershire.⁶ A long litigation took place regarding another, Wetelay or Whetelay, in Nottingham, between Alexander III. as her heir in blood, and John de Burgo, eldest son and heir of Hubert by a previous marriage, as heir of investiture. The question is often referred to by Alexander in his communications with Henry. A full statement of the pleas on both sides is given in the last article of this Calendar,⁷ but the case was certainly not settled in Henry's reign.

On the failure of issue of these three princesses, the succession to the throne of Scotland would have devolved, after Alexander III., then under age and as yet childless, on the heirs of David earl of Huntingdon. That prince died about five years after his brother King William, shortly before midsummer 1219, when Henry directs Falkes de Breaute to take possession for the King of all his lands.⁸

Some disturbances however occurred, the servants of William Marshal (probably the second earl of that name, as the elder William died this year) having taken possession of Fotheringay and Yardley, and turned the Countess Matildis out of her dower lands.⁹ As already seen, the King of Scots obtained the ward of the Honour of Huntingdon, and the custody of the heir John 'le Scot,' then a boy of twelve or thirteen years of age. The Earl

Marshal seems to have retained possession of Fotheringay for more than a year afterwards, notwithstanding several peremptory mandates from the King and Pandulph the legate.¹ Ranulf earl of Chester and Lincoln, the uncle of the young heir, obtained his ward from the King of Scots.² The young Earl probably attained majority about 25th April 1227, when the King took his homage and commanded his uncle to give him seizin of his father's lands.³ He appears in a curious case before the assizes of Huntingdon on 7th April 1228, where the Abbot of Sautrey produced the late Earl David's will, bequeathing his body to that abbey with lands in Connington, which they held. Earl John challenged the will as granted on death-bed, but the result does not appear.⁴ We find his mother was alive in May 1231, claiming lands in Lincolnshire against Anketill Lokard.⁵ This is her last appearance in the records. Her son succeeded his uncle in the title and chief portion of the earldom of Chester, as representing the eldest of the coheireses, about December 1232, when he owes 50*l.* for his relief.⁶ Little more appears of him, excepting ordinary transactions regarding his great estates, and the like. Even the date of his marriage to Helena the daughter of Llewelyn prince of North Wales is not mentioned. He died without issue before 5th June 1237,⁷ not without suspicion, according to Dugdale, of poison administered by his wife. She remarried before 22d November of same year, less than six months after the above date, Robert de Queney younger brother of Roger earl of Winchester.⁸ From a document giving minute directions by Henry regarding the custody of the Earl's castles and management of his lands, which contains a reference to the 'state' of the Countess, the contingency of possible issue was contemplated.⁹ Speculations on events that might have occurred, if certain other events had not taken place, are in general not of much profit; yet the student of his country's history sees at a glance the great results that might have ensued, if this young scion of Earl David's old age¹⁰ had lived to something like his father's years, and been succeeded by a son of his own. There might then have been seen a King of Scots in possession of the great earldoms of Chester and Huntingdon, with the influence which these conferred in the affairs of the southern kingdom,—the perilous and disastrous consequences of the disputed succession would have been obviated,—and future Scottish kings, aided by such powerful relatives as the Balliols, Bruces and others, owning great estates in both countries, might have again extended their realm to the Tyne and the Ribble. But the current of history was not destined to run in such a channel.

The King, after settling the widowed Countess's dower¹ and other matters connected with the Earl's executry,² took in his own hands the earldom of Chester,³ giving the several heirs an equivalent elsewhere. Thus he gave to John de Balliol and Devorguilla of Galloway his wife, the manors of Thorkeeseie and Ludingland, and the farm of the town of Yarmouth;⁴ to William de Fortibus son of the Earl of Albemarle, and Christiana of Galloway his wife, the manors of Driffeld in Yorkshire, and Tingden in Northamptonshire.⁵ These sisters represented Margaret the eldest daughter of Earl David. Devorguilla succeeded in 1245 to the share of her sister who died without issue.⁶ Isabella de Brus, the Earl's second daughter, received the manors of Wrytel and Hatfield in Essex;⁷ while to Henry de Hastings and Ada his wife, the third daughter of Earl David, he gave the castle of Bolsover in Derbyshire, and manors in the shires of Worcester, Nottingham, Salop, and Stafford.⁸ Some of these were said to be granted 'in tenancy' to the several heirs, till the King gave them a reasonable exchange for their shares of the earldom of Chester; but they probably became permanent possessions. The De Brus family certainly owned Writtle and Hatfield till they were forfeited in the War of the Succession. The Honour of Huntingdon was divided among the heirs by William earl of Albemarle, who was empowered to do so by the King,⁹ the sheriffs of Northampton and other shires being commanded to give

We may now refer to matters of a miscellaneous nature during the reign, in which occasional notices of these personages will occur, taking a glance in passing at charters and other deeds, and the fine series of inquisitions.

One of the very few dated Annandale charters² on 11th November 1218, reveals an interesting fact—that Christina Countess of Dunbar, second wife of the first Earl Patric, was the mother of Robert de Brus, perhaps the third of that christian name, and had dower in Hertness. She was probably the widow of William de Brus, who owned Hertness in 1198.³ The difficulties attending these undated charters and the Brus succession otherwise, are much enhanced by the fact that all the Annandale line, with one exception, the above William, were named Robert. Four other charters⁴ follow to or by this Robert, the last giving as the tenure, a pair of gilt spurs at Carlisle fair. Saher earl of Winchester, about to set out for the Holy Land, sends a ship from Galloway to Bristol for arms.⁵ Robert of London, brother of the King of Scotland, applies to Hubert de Burgo to aid him in recovering arrears due by the late King John.⁶ Alan lord of Galloway sends more than one urgent application to Henry regarding the Irish possessions of his brother and himself, of which they have as yet had little benefit ;⁷ on which the King gives directions⁸ in accordance with Alan's wishes.

From several entries on the records, Ada widow of William de Courtenay, and eventually wife of William of Home, had an intervening husband Theobald de Lascelles.⁹ She was a daughter of the first Earl Patric of Dunbar. A curious letter from Richard de Umfranville to Hubert de Burgo, pleads for his castle of Hirbottle, showing its value as a defence on the Marches.¹⁰ The various steps of the partition of the great Rumeli inheritance between the Earl of Albemarle and the De Luci heiresses give many boundaries and descriptions interesting to border antiquaries, and also show how a great noble could protract the operations of law by special pleading, and, when it suited his purpose, by violence.¹

The interests of Duncan de Carrie in Ireland are intrusted to the Justiciar of that country, on Duncan's urgent request.²

The Perambulation of the Forest of Huntingdon in 1225 is an example of a species of document little known in Scotland.³ An ecclesiastical question arose in 1226, in which the King shewed a strong personal interest. The prior and monks of Durham elected Master William Scot archdeacon of Worcester to the see of Durham. The King opposed, and wrote to the Archbishop of York urging objections to the bishop-elect, and asking a day for his attorneys to be heard.⁴ The King's real ground of opposition,⁵ which does not appear in his letter to the Archbishop, perhaps from its being mutilated, is clearly stated in a letter to his emissaries at Rome a year later, where he directs them to shew the Pope and cardinals how perilous it would be if any Scotsman was set over the bishopric of Durham.⁶ Another ecclesiastical occurrence (or occurrences, for they may relate to separate events) is notable. On 15th September 1227, certain persons are indicted at Canterbury for robbing a vessel, and killing among others the 'Elect of Norweye' in her.⁷ In June of the next year the King gives the ship of war at Grimsby, in which the 'Elect of Orkneye' was found, who was afterwards killed, to the Archdeacon of Salop;⁸ and in July, the master of the vessel is summoned to London with his ship.⁹ No such person occurs in the catalogue of the Bishops of Orkney, given in Mr Anderson's Orkneyinga Saga. The impartiality of law is shown in the fine inflicted by the Justiciar of the Forest on so high an official as William Olifard the Justiciar of Scotland.¹⁰ 'Clerks of Oxenford' then as now sometimes came into collision with authority, and on 22d June 1231, Nigel the Scot and four others, found with bows and arrows in the King's forest of Shotover, are delivered to the Chancellor and masters of the University.¹¹

In a long roll of clerks who were accused of participation in the riot against the Legate at Osency, near Oxford, in 1238, the names of several Scotsmen—John Curry, Roger the Scotsman, Peter the Scotsman—appear,¹ and Reginald of Cuningham is freed by shewing an alibi; while Engelram de Balliol and others are mainperned by Henry de Balliol.² On 30th September 1237, the church of St Andrew the Apostle of Scotland and its canons are found in possession of the churches of Ruskache and Carlingford and others in Ireland, by gift of Hugh de Lacy earl of Ulster, and a royal confirmation of that date.³

The valuable series of inquisitions post mortem begins (so far as this Calendar is concerned) with that on the death of Gilbert de Umfraville lord of Redesdale,⁴ one of the greatest men⁵ on the English marches, and in right of his wife, Matilda countess of Angus, a Scottish magnate. He died before 13th March 1244-45. From the details of the tenures, occupation of land and other particulars, we may infer by analogy what the nature of similar holdings was on the other side of the march. The word 'bondagia' survives to this day in the 'bondagers' of Northumberland, probably not with precisely the same meaning.⁶

Other proceedings are recorded connected with the succession of this important personage.⁷ In the last of these documents the sum of 1s. daily is assigned for the sustenance of his infant heir and his nurse.

The much litigated manors of Gameleby and Glassaneby again appear in 1245, with new claimants, Thomas de Lasceles and his wife, and Eva widow of Robert Avenel, against William de Ireby.⁸

Six of the Annandale charters,⁹ without date, have been assigned to the time of Robert de Brus, the Competitor's father (1215-45). In this and other like cases the editor has been guided by the character of the writing and other circumstances, and the valuable

wards Curator of the Historical Department in the General Register House, to Lord Lindsay. He shews that they held a position above the villein or serf, and were much like the 'hus-bandman' in Scotland. (Lives of the Lindsays, vol. i. Appendix, No. xi.)

advice of the officials of the Public Records. Yet possibly with some of the charters, a more intimate acquaintance with the old border families, members of which form the bulk of the witnesses, may enable the antiquary to fix a more precise date, and even a little later, in the Competitor's time. While on the subject of the Annandale family, it may be observed that there was another important stock of Brus seated in Norfolk,¹ with large possessions in Essex, Somerset, and other counties,² flourishing during this reign. 'Robert' being also their family name, and their heads holding office as sheriffs and justiciars³ contemporaneously with the other line; much difficulty has been found in keeping them distinct, and the editor is not satisfied that he has altogether overcome it in the Index. He is not aware if the two stocks were related. They seem both to have sided with the King in the war with Simon de Montfort.

Besides several other border inquisitions at this time,⁴ one, regarding the possessions held by the second Earl Patric of Dunbar in serjeanty in Northumberland, is remarkable, both from its containing a minute description of the lands and the vassals, some being cadets of his house, and its giving the archaic form noticed by Mr Skene, 'Quaspatricius,' as the first Gospatric's christian name.⁵ Another, of the possessions of Johanna de Morville in Burgh-on-Sands, shews that tenants by cornage were bound to go in the vanguard of an army invading Scotland, and in the rearguard on its return.⁶ The oven of Penrith is specified as belonging to the King of Scotland;⁷ an interesting notice of a feudal possession still to be seen in the villages of Normandy and Brittany.⁸

On 5th April 1248 Henry makes a 'remission to the soul of 'Hubert de Burgo' of 27 marks, two palfreys and two goshawks, demanded from his son John, perhaps in remorse for his treatment of the dead justiciar.⁹

The Scottish connection of the Lovels of Castle Cary is again shewn in a claim by Cristiana Lovel and her second husband against Richard Lovel her first husband's brother, in Trinity

On 13th December 1248, the third Earl Patric, whose father, accompanied by William de Lindesi, had licence to go abroad on 28th June previous, and died on his travels,² does homage and receives his Northumbrian lands.³ The severity of the Forest law, even in the case of a magnate like John de Balliol, is shown in the royal command to the Justiciar to respite the distraint for 'lawing' the dogs in his manors.⁴ Another great Northumbrian baron, Robert de Muscamp, died about this time;⁵ one of whose three daughters and coheireses was Countess of Stratherne. The settlement and partition of his estates is unique as far as the editor's experience extends (an opinion borne out by others who have more intimate knowledge of the Records) in its singular division of the mansion-house, room by room, among the coparceners, a custom which still prevails in the Channel Islands;⁶ and otherwise interesting from its notices of tenures, and giving the boundaries of Cheviot forest. The inquisitions of Ada de Balliol⁷ who held considerable estates in Northumberland and Yorkshire, and had two sons, Hugh and Robert, do not give her husband's name and surname. She was the daughter of Sir Hugh de Bailliol, from whom a considerable part of her estate was derived.

Within three months after the royal marriage in 1251, a distinguished lady, the descendant of one royal line, and destined to be the ancestress of another, rested with her fathers. On 15th March 1251-2, Robert de Brus, son and heir of Isabella de Brus, did homage for his late mother's lands of Writtle and Hatfield,⁸ and his men were freed of tallage, the land being the King's ancient demesne.⁹ The future competitor for the Crown of Scotland received an additional favour from the King, his relief of 100*l.* for these manors being reduced to 100*s.*¹⁰ The widow of his uncle John earl of Chester, died about this time, and Tottenham, held by her in dower, was partitioned among the three heirs of Chester —Balliol, Brus, and Hastings.¹ Two extents, one of the capital messuage of this manor, the other of that of Kemeston, Bedfordshire, which became Balliol property, perhaps relate to this partition.² Another great heiress connected with Scotland died about this time—Isabella de Valoines, widow of David Comyn of Kilbride. She with her two sisters, Lora wife of Henry de Balliol³ and Cristiana wife of Peter de Maunle or Mauthle, were coheiresses of the Honour of Valoines, and appear constantly in the records. David Comyn must have been a younger son, for Kilbride in Scotland, from which he or rather his son William took his designation, was Valoines property in the reign of William the Lion, and evidently came to him through his wife. The inquisitions on her death in May 1253⁴ relate to lands in Suffolk, Hertfordshire, Essex, and Norfolk, in which her son William, then seventeen, succeeded her. From these it appears that the lands were much in the hands of villeins, in this respect differing greatly from the border tenures. A charter immediately following,⁵ viz., an inspeximus of one by King John, confirming to the Prior and monks of Durham, inter alia, many churches and lands in Lothian under specific names, ‘besides all that they possess in ‘that district by will of the monks of St Cuthbert, to be disposed ‘of as the charter of Edgar king of Scots attests,’ is interesting and valuable, as distinctly shewing the superiority of the English kings over that district, and confirming the view taken by Mr Raine, founded possibly on the identical charter of Edgar so referred to.⁶ That original document no longer exists in the Durham treasury, merely a copy made, however, early in the 15th century. Anderson, in his Essay on the Independence of Scotland, printed it from the original then existing, but curiously

⁶ History of North Durham, p. 377, Appendix of charters, No. vii. There are, however, six other charters by Edgar to Durham relating to their possessions in Lothian, but none so comprehensive as this. There is also a charter by him (No. viii. of the list) which Mr Raine pronounces a forgery, probably by Hardyng.

1249-72. failed to see the chief feature of it,—the distinction drawn by Henry III. Edgar between his title to Lothian, which he held by gift (Alex. II.) (donum) of the English king,—and that to the remainder of his kingdom, which he called his paterna hereditas, whereby, as pointed out by Mr Raine, he would have triumphed over Atwood his opponent, who had disingenuously printed the same deed in a garbled form, omitting the distinction between the two tenures.

A scholar of Oxford, whose name, Reginald of Irewyn, indicates a Scottish origin, appears at this time to have received assistance in his studies from the private purse of Queen Eleanor.¹

The Report by four knights of the county, on the state of the castle of Carlisle, when delivered by Robert de Brus of Annandale to his successor the Earl of Albemarle in October 1255, is very curious, and perhaps not altogether creditable to the retiring keeper.²

We now come to a document—one of the too few remaining of its class, the Border County Assize Rolls—which gives a vivid picture of the times and the rough and ready justice of the marches. This is the Northumberland Assize Roll, 40 Hen. III. (1256).³ From it we learn some particulars regarding the Douglases and their neighbours at Faudon,—how the felon taken ‘red-hand’ might be beheaded by his pursuer, who got back his stolen goods as his fee for acting as the minister of justice,—that murder, robbery, and other offences were matters of everyday occurrence,—that when the hue and cry was raised in a township those neighbours who did not join in it were fined by the justices,—that some of the great men of the county took oppressive tolls, and did other highhanded acts. It also shews that Malcolm earl of Fyfe, who was fined for non-attendance on the assize, was thus a landowner in the county; and that the young Queen of Scotland’s wagon, with valuables from her father’s court, was robbed on its way to Scotland.

Some of the rare inquisitions and other documents originating in Scotland in Alexander III.’s reign will be found.⁴ These have been already printed in Vol. I. of the Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland. Some others of equal interest from the Chancery Miscellanea, seem to have escaped notice.¹ No. 2671 contains a long list of Scottish landowners in 1244, some bearing names long extinct, who made oath with Earls Patric (of Dunbar) and Walter Comyn, freeing themselves of complicity with William de Marisco and other enemies of the King of England. Another in 1262, indicates that John de Cheyam, the bishop of Glasgow intruded by the Pope against Alexander's wishes, was then in full possession of his see. The Patent Rolls shew that he was then in Scotland;² and on 5th February 1262-63 he dates a letter from his manor of Alnecrumbe in Teviotdale, bespeaking the good offices of Walter de Merton, the Chancellor of England, on behalf of Sir Nicholas Corbet, cousin of the King of Scotland.³

An Englishman, Robert,⁴ at this time occupied the see of Dunblane, and appears to have been a considerable landowner in Nottinghamshire,⁵ and a favourite of Henry, from whom he had certain privileges;⁶ in particular the important one of being allowed to take 100 quarters of his own corn to Scotland at the instance of Queen Margaret, in spite of regulations to the contrary.⁷

On 21st September 1263, Henry Lovel, evidently the baron of Castel Kari, had died, and Richard his son and heir did homage, and received his father's lands, paying relief of 100*l.* as a baron.⁸ In little more than a year, 18th October 1264, an inquisition occurs as to the age of Hugh Lovel, brother of this Richard Lovel lately deceased, and whether he was the latter's heir in the barony of Kari Lovel, the value of which was 150*l.*⁹ Some additional particulars regarding the Lovels appear in a plea, where Alicia the sister of this Hugh Lovel, accuses him of unjustly despoiling her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister by their father Henry Lovel. 1249-72. In a later plea against Hugh for restoration of a watercourse at Castle Kary, another step of the lineage is given in the name of Henry III. (Alex. III.) his grandfather Richard Lovel.¹

The curious charters by William the Lion and his son Alexander, settling the succession to the earldom of Menteith between two rival brothers, both named Maurice, are preserved in Henry's, charters of inspeximus.² So also the charter by David I. and his son Henry to Richard Cumyn and his wife Histilla, of the heritage of Huetred son of Waldef, her father, in Tindale, is recited in a charter of confirmation on 8th February 1261-2 by Henry III. to John Cumyn the great grandson of the original granters.³

A plea between Simon Baard, who was a Northumbrian landowner, and his wife Isabella, against William Cumyn and his wife Euphemia, regarding a debt arising out of a manor in Scotland called Athelgalthwyn, turned on a nice point of law, viz., whether a debt arising out of a Scottish transaction was recoverable in the English courts;⁴ but unluckily is not decided. The Steward of Scotland having purchased the ward of the Honour of Skipton in Craven from Prince Edward, and being dilatory in making payment, summary commands were given to reinstate the Prince.⁵ The turbulent Scottish community of Dunwich again appears in a case of assault and murder in 1263.⁶

Roger de Queney, earl of Winchester and constable of Scotland, the last male of his illustrious house, died on St Mark's day 1264. The settlement of the great estates in the Midland and other counties held by him under various titles, among his three daughters, occupies many inquisitions and like documents.⁷ In several regarding a manor of his brother Robert de Queney's who had died about the same time, it is noticed that Robert left two daughters coheiresses, one the wife of Sir Humphry de Bohun junior, the other unmarried; evidently from their ages, the issue of the Countess of Chester. The Earl having left a widow, his third wife, who remarried Roger de Leybourne the great Kentish baron, and was dowered in many of her former husband's lands,¹ the co-heiresses, the Countesses of Derby and Buchan, and Elizabeth wife of Alan de la Zouche, though they received some fees and church patronages in 1266,² seem not to have had a final partition till 1270,³ when the clerks of Chancery must have been busily employed in engrossing the various documents. Would that a similar collection had been preserved of inquisitions of the Scottish possessions of this great noble, for such must have once existed. In them and those of his kindred the Balliols, we should have had a picture of the tenures of Galloway, over which time has thrown impenetrable obscurity.⁴ 1249-72.

A grant, interesting to all Oxford men, and Balliol scholars especially, dated 22d June 1266, bears that the King assigned from the farm of Oxford, 20*l.* to John de Balliol, in loan, for the scholars whom he maintained there.⁵ The Abbot of Jedburgh in 1266 maintains a plea on behalf of his house to the church of Arthuret, against Johanna de Estoteville the lady of Lidel.⁶ An extent of the lands, and a subsequent inquisition on his death, 1269,⁷ go to shew that Bernard de Brus, a near relative (perhaps the brother) of the Competitor, had probably fought against Henry in the Barons' War.

In October 1267 the curious appeal is tried, in which William de Douglas accused Gilbert de Umfranville, lord of Redesdale, of maligning him to the Lord Edward, and seeking to deprive him of Faudon which he held under Gilbert; and narrated the violent proceedings of a band of Gilbert's men of Redesdale, who burned his house, robbed him of his goods, and, after wounding his son William in his preface, Lord Haddington's 'etceteras' are not satisfying. On page 33 there is an account by the same earl, of Roger de Quency's land in Laudonia, where there is a little more information, e.g., the rent of two parts of Travyrment, Noderyf, Lawedir, Herewyt, and Mertun is 100*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*; the profits 63*s.* 3*d.*, '&c.'

1249-72. almost to death, carried the plaintiff a prisoner to Hirbottle castle, Henry III. keeping him there for eleven days.¹ The case, two years later, (Alex. III.) went against Gilbert,² though then a far greater man than Douglas. Little did he foresee that long before the close of the next century, his own family would be expelled from Scotland, and their earldom of Angus possessed by the descendants of his vassal.

An inquisition ad quod dampnum, taken at the Maidens' Castle in Inglewood forest on 18th August 1268, regarding the bounds of that forest, and the privileges of the King of Scotland's township of Penrith and others therein, is interesting; and would have been more so, had the seals of the fifty knights, freeholders, and verdurers of the forest, all once appended, been preserved.³ In this year Sir John de Balliol, head of the house, and father of the future king, died, shortly before 12th November. The several inquisitions on that event⁴ show his great possessions in Northumberland, Yorkshire, and Hitchin in Hertfordshire. None are extant for Bernard's castle his chief seat, or his lands in Durham, and these have probably shared the fate of the early records of the Palatinate.⁵ Hugh his son and heir did homage and received licence to go abroad on 26th December following, probably to visit the foreign possessions of the house.⁶ He was accompanied by Eustace de Bailliol, whose near relationship may thus be indicated.⁷ He is supposed to have been his uncle.

In little more than two years Hugh was dead,⁸ without issue, and his widow Agnes de Valencia, the King's niece, had dower from his lands.⁹ In the extents of the lands for this purpose, a class of small rentallers styled 'selfoders,' is named. Alexander de Balliol, the next brother of Hugh, who had accompanied Prince Edward to the Holy Land, returned on 23d February 1271-2, and on doing homage received his brother's lands, being pardoned his relief at the Prince's request.¹⁰ Much interest

⁵ The executors of Bishop Cosin actually burned eight or nine large chests of documents belonging to the see. Sir Thomas Hardy says, 'It is to be feared that nearly all the muni-
'ments anterior to the time of Bishop Hatfield

'were consumed in that disgraceful conflagra'tion.' (Preface to Bishop Kellawe's Register, attaches to the Assize Roll of Northumberland (53 Hen. III.),¹ as in addition to some matters already referred to, it contains stringent regulations for the preservation of salmon coming up to spawn in the streams between the Tyne and Tweed, prohibits nets, 'stirkeldis,' or other engines of destruction, and appoints a specific close time, besides a regular board of conservators. Millers, it will be observed, are in an especial manner the objects of suspicion.

With a passing reference to three assize cases at Dunwich in which the Scottish community are concerned, one a false claim of property in a vessel,² and the other two accusations of murder and theft,³—an inquisition⁴ regarding the great Lyndesay fee in Westmoreland and its heir, the son-in-law of the late Sir John de Balliol, and the curious correction of the father's name in the Exchequer Records,⁵—the legal decision on the point whether an Englishman captured in bad company on the north end of Berwick bridge and beheaded as a robber in Scotland, was a felon in England⁶—the editor concludes this outline of the contents of the Calendar by referring to the two last instruments in date,⁷ the inquisitions on the death of Helewysa de Levington, apparently widow of Eustace de Balliol. Her husband accompanied Prince Edward to the Holy Land about 14th July 1270.⁸ Ingram de Balliol, who was defendant in an assize case in Northamptonshire on 8th October thereafter, styled Eustace de Balliol, for whom he seemed to act, his father, who may thus, from the rarity of this christian name, be identical with the crusader.⁹ Yet none of Helewysa's considerable estates in Westmoreland and Cumberland devolve on Ingram. Thomas son of Thomas de Multon of Gillesland is her heir in Burgh-on-Sands, Kirkoswald, Laysingby, and others; while Levington, Skelton, Kirkandres, with the moiety of the much litigated manors of Gamelsby and Glassanby and others, devolve on the heirs of six ladies, only two of whose number are of Cumberland, the remaining four bearing surnames connecting them with Galloway or the south-west of Scotland, in which country they are all said to dwell. There is another curious point 1249-72. to be noted in these inquisitions, their dates. The first was taken Henry III. in Westmoreland (the place is not given) on 21st November, the (Alex. III.) second at Carlisle on 23d November, both days said to be in ‘the King’s fifty-seventh year.’ Henry III. died at Westminster on the 16th of that month, seven days before the date of the second inquisition, but the news of his death had not reached the north—a striking contrast to the day of the electric telegraph.

Such, then, is an outline—necessarily imperfect at best, for to have included all references that were deserving of notice would have protracted these remarks to an inordinate length—that may perhaps convey to those who consult this Calendar some slight idea of the varied nature of the documents contained in it, the search for and arrangement of which in due order has been the editor’s engrossing and continuous labour for many months. Yet if the work is arduous, it is full of interest to him who chances to have his heart in it, and dull and unimpressionable would be his spirit who could pause after so long a companionship, day after day, with the silent records of the long buried past, and take no heed to the lessons they convey.

To borrow the eloquent words of a distinguished man :¹—‘The ‘record of the past is the bond of the present,—one language, one ‘faith, one history, one ancient birthplace, one common mysterious ‘unsearched original—these are the strong sinews which hold to‘gether in a living unity the many separate articulations jointed ‘to each other to form a people and a nation. . . . Without an ‘accurate knowledge of the past, all attempts to improve and raise ‘the present must be to a great degree shallow and empirical. . . .
 ‘In our institutions, in our manners, in our language, that old ‘past is still with us. . . . The foundation of all rational im‘provement and renewal, is that full and accurate acquaintance ‘with earlier times, of which it is indeed our great object to study ‘and preserve the records.’

In closing the reign of Henry III. we have reached the end of a long era in the history of the country, and it is to be hoped

¹ The late Bishop of Winchester, then Dean to the Archæological Institute of Great of Westminster, in his address at Winchester Britain and Ireland, in September 1845.

found materials to interest not only the historical student or the political economist, but also the genealogist and etymologist. For these last the editor has been careful to record the surnames of the commons—the villein and the serf—as well as of the high and noble of the land.

Nor does he profess that all the documents calendared are new discoveries, not before known, at least not before printed. What is claimed, and what is indeed the true object of a calendar, is that here are gathered together in due order of time, public and private acts and writings of men of all ranks, from popes and sovereigns downwards, so arranged that the reader shall see—so far as record can shew him—the true motives of the actors on the stage of history, often little resembling those publicly assigned.

It is a trite but not the less true remark that error is inseparable from human undertakings. This is especially the case with the work of a calendarer. It is impossible for him to use assistance in collating his abstracts with the originals, save in a very few instances. To do so in all cases, even if practicable under the regulations as to silence in the Public Record Office, would greatly increase the time occupied, besides adding to the cost. Thus the calendarer must depend chiefly on himself—and in the course of a lengthy abstract, errors in names and dates, and omissions, may and do happen when the attention has been long concentrated. Seeing how such have occurred with many of his able predecessors, the editor cannot hope to have enjoyed immunity from similar slips,—all he can say is he has done his best to avoid them, and the originals are there to test his accuracy. His most indulgent critics will be those who from their own experience know the difficulties attending this species of labour.

A list of Errata is given after the Preface, and the editor begs his readers to follow the excellent advice of Prynne in the 'Epistle to the Reader' in his History, and correct the same before they consult the Calendar.

The Index, in the arrangement of which he has had the advantage of being assisted by fair hands, an aid now specially acknowledged, will, he trusts, be found a material help to the reader, and supply a ready means of reference to any omissions in the Preface.

The name of every person or place is inserted, with the exception of the mere formal names of counties, and those of places where the writs of the English kings are tested. It did not seem right to encumber the Index with these. A few documents hitherto unprinted have been given as an appendix in the original Latin.

Upon consideration, the editor thought it unnecessary to add a glossary. It is to be presumed that most of those who consult the Calendar have some previous acquaintance with mediæval terms and law phrases, and for those who have not, the occasional explanations in the text, and notes, will meet most difficulties. A complete glossary would have added to the length of the book, and a partial one is not a satisfactory performance. The Table of the contemporary reigns of the kings of England and Scotland may be found useful.

The agreeable duty now remains to the editor of acknowledging the assistance with which he has met in the course of his work. In the first place he must express his sense of the courteous manner in which the Master of the Rolls and Mr Hardy, the Deputy Keeper, caused all the necessary documents to be submitted to his inspection, and his thanks for the countenance and aid with which he has met from the latter gentleman, and from those of his able staff of assistant officers, with whom he has come in contact. It would be difficult to over-estimate the value of the Handy-Book of Dates, by Mr J. J. Bond, senior Assistant Keeper of the Records, to all who have occasion to consult it. To his fellow labourer in the kindred field of Irish antiquities, Mr H. S. Sweetman, whose valuable Calendar has been the model on which the present one has been drawn up, he has been often indebted for counsel.

Mr Dickson, the Curator of the Historical Department in the General Register House, Edinburgh, has unreservedly given the editor the benefit of his great official experience in regard to all details connected with the work.

From those who attend the Public Record Office in the pursuit of business or literary research he has to acknowledge much friendly aid. Among these he must name Mr H. G. Hewlett, Keeper of the Land Revenue Office ; Mr W. Floyd, whose extensive reading enabled him to point out several documents that would otherwise have escaped notice ; Mr Stuart Moore, whose acquaintance with the early records of Northumberland is great ; and Mr J. A. C. Vincent, whose skill as a transcriber of early MSS. is known to not a few.

Beyond all, however, he must especially thank Mr Walford D. Selby, who presides over the literary search room. His knowledge of the records under his charge is only equalled by the ability with which he can decypher a doubtful reading or give the meaning of an obscure expression, and the readiness with which he places his information at the disposal of inquirers. Without his valuable assistance this Calendar could not have attained such completeness as it may be found to possess.

Preface, p. xxvii, line 16.—The expression 'unique' applied to the Misæ Roll (14 John) must be qualified. It is so among the Exchequer Records, but there is an earlier one (11 John) among those of Chancery, which the editor had inadvertently included in his schedule among the Oblata Rolls, of which series it now forms one.

ib., p. lxiii, note 3.—Henry de Balliol occurs even earlier. On 27 May 1203 John grants him 200*l.* 'of Anjou esterlings,' yearly at Exchequer, while he has lost his land in Champagne in the K.'s service. On Thursday, 6 May, same year, he receives 2 marks from the K. at Sutton. [Misæ Roll, 11 John, m. 4.]

CALENDAR.

CALENDAR OF DOCUMENTS

RELATING TO

EDWARD THE CONFESSOR.

1065. 1. Malcolm K. of Scotland and the Isles adjacent, to all Christians, June 5. Danes, English, and Scots. The K. and Edward his eldest son and heir, Earl of Carrik and Rothesay, have acknowledged themselves to hold their kingdom of Scotland and the Isles, of their over-lord Edward, son of Ethelred late king of England, by liege homage and fealty, as their ancestors did in times past, as sufficiently appears by the records, wherefore they have become Edward's "men" during their lives, with him to live and die against all men, as his liege subjects, and will bear liege fealty to him and his heirs, as God shall aid them. The K. appends his seal for himself and his son, at York, 5th June, 9th year of his reign, in the Parliament of his said over-lord there, with consent and advice of his Consort Margaret, daughter of Edward son of Edward Ironside, of Edward Ethelynge her brother, and other magnates of his kingdom.

This is one of the well-known forgeries of John Hardyng the Chronicler. It is printed in Anderson's Independence of Scotland, Appendix I., and in Sir F. Palgrave's Documents and Records relative to Scotland, preserved in the Treasury of Exchequer (1837), Appendix I. It is now more defaced and illegible than when printed by Anderson, with whose text Sir Francis collated it. A considerable fragment of the seal, as described by both, still remains appended, in brown wax; the Scottish Lion, within the double tressure.

By a "convention and fine," between William K. of Scotland and "his lord" Henry K. of England, son of Matilda, at Falaise (in Normandy), whereby William, the bishops, clergy, earls, and barons of Scotland became the liegemen of Henry, William, his brother Earl David, his barons, and other "men," agreed that the Scottish church should make to the English church such subjection thenceforth, as it ought and was wont to make in the time of the K.'s of England, predecessors of Henry. Also Richard bishop of St Andrews, Richard bishop of Dunkeld (Duncoldre), Geoffry abbot of Dunfermline (Dunremele), and Herbert prior of Coldingham (Galdingham), agreed that the English church should have that right over the Scottish church which de jure it ought to have; and that they themselves would not gainsay the right of the English church. William delivered to Henry the castles of Roxburgh, Berwick, Jedburgh, Edinburgh, and Stirling, to be kept up at his expense; and also Earls David, Duncan, Waldeve, Gilbert, the Earl of Anegus, Richard de Moreville the constable, Nes son of William, Richard Comyn, Walter Corbet, Walter Olifard, John de Vaux, William de Lyndeseye, Philip de Coleville, Philip de Valoines, Robert Frembert, Robert de Burneville, Hugh Gifford, Hugh Ridel, Walter de Berkele, William de la Haye, and William de Mortemer, as hostages for the performance of the treaty.

147. W[illiam] K. of Scotland to Pope A[lexander III.]. Writes respecting the subjection of the Scottish church to the see of York, claimed by the latter; that by authentic writings which he (W.) has seen, as well as from the relation and evidence of ancient and credible men, diligently seeking the truth, he has found that of old it pertained of right to said see, and was lost through the hostility and power of the K.s his predecessors, but as by the grace of God, perpetual peace is now again restored between his lord the K. of England and himself, he humbly requests that, inasmuch as he has, by the Pope's authority, restored to his lord the K. and his kingdom, and the see of York, the foresaid possession and subjection, the Pope may ordain (as it cannot, without the greatest detriment to William and his kingdom, be passed over), that it may so be as agreed between his lord the K. and himself, in the treaty which he (W.) has confirmed by his oath. For he knows

HENRY II. it would redound to the greatest danger of their souls, if that which ——— they know to be competent does not take full effect.

RICHARD I.

1189. 196. The letter of the K. of England of the delivery of the castles Dec. 5. of Roxburgh and Berwick, and restoration of all the liberties possessed by the Scottish K. before his capture; and as to restoring letters if any should be found; and letters found, though not restored, to be of no value:—

Richard K. of England has restored to his dearest cousin William K. of Scotland, his castles of Roxburgh and Berwick, as his own by hereditary right; has likewise freed him from all bargains which the K.'s father, Henry K. of England, extorted by new charters on his capture; provided that William shall completely perform whatever Malcolm K. of Scotland, his brother, performed or ought de jure

RICHARD I. to have performed to Richard's ancestors; Richard doing to him the same, viz., in entertainment coming to court, during his stay there, and returning from the court; and in procurations, and all liberties and dignities, and honours justly due to him, as shall be ascertained by four of the English peers chosen by William, and four of the Scottish ones chosen by Richard. The marches of the kingdom of Scotland also to be restored, as they were before William's capture, notwithstanding any encroachment. As to his lands in England whether domains or fees, viz., in Huntingdon or elsewhere, the Scottish K. and his heirs to possess them on the same terms as K. Malcolm, unless the latter shall have granted any; in which case the services of these fees shall pertain to William and his successors. Richard also restores to William the allegiances of all his men, which Henry his father took, and all the charters which the latter had from him on his capture. If any escape notice or are found, they shall be of no effect; but William becomes the liegeman of Richard, for all lands for which his ancestors were liegemen, and he has sworn fealty to Richard and his heirs. Appends his seal. Agreement, in form of chirograph, bearing that it was made between Engleram bishop of Glasgow, and Robert de Brus, on oath, and finished and confirmed between Jocelin bishop of Glasgow, and the said Robert. By this final agreement peace is confirmed between the church of Glasgow and its bishops and Robert de Brus and his heirs. Or places himself on men of the 'visne.' And Henry asks it to be admitted that she, without him and against the fact that she was dowered as aforesaid, has procured dower in Scotland of the third part of his barony there [Hawick, Roxburghshire (?)]. [Circa 412. Pleas in a month from Michaelmas in the K.'s 9th year.
 Oct. 30.] Northumberland :—Richard de Umfranville by Geoffry de Luci his attorney, complains that Eustace de Vesci deforces him of the custody of Henry Bataille's heir, which is his by reason of the enfeoffment which Robert 'with the beard,' Richard's great grandfather (proavus) gave to Gilbert Bataille the heir's ancestor. For when Gilbert came with him to the conquest of England, Robert gave him seizin of Faudon and the moiety of Netterton, to be held of him and his heirs for the service of a knight. He held it for his life, and Walter Bataille his son after him, and after him Henry Bataille the heir's father. And so he should have the custody and counsel of the heir.

Eustace, by John and Simon his attorneys, defends, and says that it was agreed (placitum) by the K.'s writ in Northumberland between Odinell de Umfranville, Richard's grandfather, and William de Vesci, Eustace's father, in the 2d year of K. Henry at Werkeworthe, regarding the custody of Henry Bataille, at a county court on the morrow of the Purification of the Blessed Mary, by friends convened on both sides, that for 15 marks, and a horse, and a goshawk, which William gave to Odinell, the latter should quit-claim the custody of the aforesaid Henry and his heirs for ever, and also their marriages, when they happened; and this he offered to derain against him by his freeman, Ernald Brud, who would prove by his body that he was present and saw the same, either against Richard, or any other of the county who contradicted it. And if evil chanced to Ernald, by another in his place.

Richard's attorney denied any such acquittance or agreement, inasmuch as Henry was a knight three years before his father died, and thus could not be under age when that happened; and likewise Walter, Henry's father, was a knight before his father died; and thus none of Gilbert's heirs was under age when his ancestor died, wherefore there could be no agreement regarding their custody. If this was not enough, he placed himself on the great assize, as to their rights in the custody; and asked that it should be admitted that Eustace's attorneys had not denied that the plaintiff's ancestors had first enfeoffed the heir's ancestors as aforesaid. Decreed—that Richard should have the custody and counsel of the heir, inasmuch as Eustace's attorneys did not deny that Richard's ancestors first enfeoffed those of the heir, and they could not show that Eustace or his ancestors ever had seizin under the quittance alleged to have made by Odinell. And Eustace is in amercement for an unjust deforcement.

- JOHN. The said Richard by Simon de Roucestre, his attorney, complains ——— that Robert fitz Robert unjustly deforces him of the said heir, whom 1207. the aforesaid Simon, Richard's seneschal, committed to him to be kept till Richard his lord's return from Poitou, where he was when Henry Bataille the heir's father died; so that after his return, the said Robert, at the summons of Richard should deliver him the heir; and he produces a suit testifying same. Robert comes and says that he did not receive him to be kept, but as one (illum) whom Simon and Ranulf Brun seneschal of [Eustace?], between whom there was a dispute as to his custody, had committed to him to be kept till it should be derained who should have him. And he was ready to deliver him then. Decreed—That Robert should prove that he did not receive him as the attorney of Richard alleges. Pledges by law; Simon Tirel, Robert de Normanville, seneschal of the Abbot of Selebi.

The same day given to William her husband in banco. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 61, fragment.]

655. Pleas between the Ouse and Derwent. Walter de Hameldun appeals Robert de la Bere of robbery, and the abduction of Sampson de la Pumeria's wife, and does not prosecute. Therefore let him be taken, and his pledges are in amercement, viz., Sampson de Pomeria and Robert de la Falaise. This imparlance was placed at Westminster by the Justices' precept. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 64, fragment.]

656. Pleas in the octave of St Andrew coram Rege. Warwick:—Gilbert de Lindesia and Friar Robert, the attorneys of the Prior of the hospital of Jerusalem, as they say, claim the mills of Louesham and Warwick versus Thomas Basset and Henry de Warwick. A day is given them on the K.'s first coming to London. And they have guarantees, Symon de Pateshulle and James de Poterna, in the plea. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 58, m. 10.]

657. Northumberland and Rutland:—Henry de Manerio, Samson de Copland, Martin de Langeton, Walter de who were sent to Carram to see if the infirmity whereof Earl David essoins himself de malo lecti, is sickness or not, came to York and reported that they neither found the Earl at Carram nor any one who [knew about him?]. Earl Henry de Bohun therefore, on the second day, Monday, of Quadragesima (sic), appears versus the said Earl Judgment of court—that Rihalle and the twenty knights' fees in the plea, be taken. And Earl David be summoned to come coram Rege, &c. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 66, m. 1, dorso.]

658. Northumberland, Lincoln, (and) Rutland:—Earl Henry de Bohun appears versus Earl David, concerning Rihale and twenty

JOHN. knights' fees, which he claims from the latter. The first summons ——— was for the octave of St Hilary, and Earl David essoined himself [1199— de malo veniendi, and had a day for his essoin coram Rege on 1216.] the octave of the Purification; and then he essoined himself de malo lecti, and a view by four knights of the county of Northumberland was appointed at Carham. They came on Monday after Ash Wednesday (Cineres), and said that they neither found the Earl at Carham nor any one who could tell anything of him. The court decides that the land of Rihale in Rutland be taken in the K.'s hand.
 Also seven knights' fees held by William Grimbald of the Earl in Northampton, of the fee of Huntingdon; five knights' fees held by Richard Basset of said Earl in the same county of that fee; two knights' fees held by John de Wilebi of him in same county and fee; one knight's fee held by Robert son of Henry Noriot of him in same county and fee; one knight's fee held by Reginald de Acle of him in same county and fee; and four knights' fees held by Philip de Panton of him, in said fee and the county of Lincoln. And that the said earl be summoned to be before the K. on the Wednesday next after Mid Lent. Henry de Bohun earl of Hereford, then offers himself, and Earl David does not come. Therefore the judgment of court is that Earl Henry have his seizin through default of said Earl David. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 66, m. 4.]

659. York:—Walter Aleman, Richard de Tange, Evrard de Karlun, Ralf de Branhop, Walter de Stockeld, Richard de Brertun, Patrick de Berewich, Richard de Rodeclive, Richard Dagon, Hugh son of Apolic (?), William de Stocley, jurors, between Robert fitz Walter plaintiff, and Robert de Humaz, whom Eustace de Vescy and Ema his wife have called to warrant, are in amercement, and let the Sheriff have their bodies, as the assize is respited till the octaves of St Hilary, if the K. does not come to these parts sooner. That day given to Hugh de Caltun, Rannulf de Otteburn, Roger son of Richard de Rikele, Fulco de Rufford, Nigel Pincerna, Robert de Linton, Mathew de Brom, Henry son of John, and William de Dinelgeby, attorney of Rannulf de Luvetot. [*Coram Rege, John,
 'incert.' No. 70, m. 2.*]

660. Cumberland:—Juliana de Yrebi by attorney appears versus William de Corebi in a plea of one carucate and the fourth part of a carucate of land in Eustapelid and Blenetarm; and he comes not. But essoins himself de malo lecti before the Porter of the Tower of London, and not before the Justices who were at London.
 Therefore decided that there is no essoin. And the land is taken in the K.'s hand. And he is summoned for the octaves of St Hilary.
 The same appears versus Robert de Romile and Sibilla his wife regarding the same amount of land in said villis, taken in the K.'s hand for the same reason. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 70, m. 3, dorso.]

JOHN. 661. Northumberland:—Richard de Chartray for himself and ——— Matillidis his wife appears versus Elisabet wife of William Bard' who [1199– had essoined herself de malo lecti in a plea. And she was seen 1216.] by David de Burgedon, Hugh Bataille, Nicholas de Lilleburn, Nicholas de Hauekille, who have neither come nor essoined themselves. Judgement—that they be attached to be coram Rege on Tuesday next before Ascension day, &c. And it is to be observed that William her husband came on the day whereon she has essoined herself, and a day was given him in banco on Tuesday next after the Close of Easter, and then he essoined himself de malo lecti. And since it is not usual that a man and his wife have two sicknesses in the same plea, when their essoins are made on different days, the trial of that essoin is respited till the foresaid term, and leave is given by the court to the 'essoniators' to rise and attend. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 66, m. 4, dorso.]

662. York:—Eustace de Vesci, who had first attorned in his place William Russelle, and Nicholas Basset versus Ralf de Tilli, in a plea of duel waged regarding the manor of Lodenham, came before Sir G. fitz Piers and removed William, putting in his place Nicholas aforesaid and Simon Tirelle. [Coram Rege, John, 'incert.' No. 68, m. 1.] lately arrested with merchandize. Tewkesbury. [Patent, 1 Hen.

III. m. 14.]
- 1216–17. 664. Pope Honorius [III.], to [Alexander II.] K. of Scotland, and Jan. 16. his 'fautours,' wishes a spirit of sounder counsel. Upbraids him with having departed both from his faith to his natural lord, and his devotion to the Roman Church his mother, not being ashamed to forsake these; that he ought to suffer if need be, imprisonment and exile, and keep truth and loyalty (?). The Pope earnestly commands and urges him by apostolic letters, that having regard to the tender age of his beloved son in Jesus Christ, Henry the K. of England, and to the Church of Rome, forsaking evil counsel, he return to the fealty of said K., and his devotion to the apostolic see, notwithstanding his disloyal oaths made to Lowyz [the Dauphin]; unless he does this quickly, he is not wise. The Pope promises his especial grace and the favour of the apostolic see, and moreover to aid him in recovering Heury's favour, and also his own right. The Lateran, first year of the Pope's pontificate. Norman French.

HENRY III. 665. David de Hastings has letters of conduct to endure till fifteen ——— days from Sunday next after the Conversion of St Paul this year.
 Jan. 30. Oxford. [Patent, 1 Hen. III. m. 13.]

1216-17. 666. The K. to Falkes de Breaute. The K. has committed to March 14. W[illiam Marshal] son of the Earl of Pembroke, all the lands of S[aher] earl of Winchester, and of Earl David, during pleasure, to sustain himself in the K.'s service, and commands Falkes to deliver the same to him forthwith. Winchester. [Close, 1 Hen. III. p. 1, m. 22.]

April 10. 667. Falkes de Breaute, William de Cantilupe, and W. earl of Albemarle are commanded to give seizin to W[illiam] Marshal junior, of the lands of the K.'s enemies in their bailliaries, holding of the fees of S[aher] earl of Winchester, and of Earl David, the K. having granted them to him during pleasure. Winchester. [Close, 1 Hen. III. p. 1, m. 19.]

April 26. 668. The K. to Pope Honorius [III.]. Informs him that the Canons of Carlisle, favourers and adherents of the K. of Scotland and others, the enemies of the Pope and K., despising the Legate's authority, irreverently and contumaciously celebrate divine offices in forbidden places, in presence of his enemies and excommunicated persons. That they have become subjects of the K. of Scotland, though excommunicated, who is in hostile possession of the town of Carlisle, received him as their patron and lord, and done fealty to him; and even in prejudice of the K.'s right, and that of the church of York, at the instance of the said K. of Scotland, they have elected a certain excommunicated clerk as their bishop and pastor. Seeing how that church is placed on the border of Scotland, it greatly concerns the K.'s peace and that of his kingdom, that such a head and members should be settled there, whereby the weal of his kingdom and himself may be provided for, and the power of injury taken away from his adversaries. He implores the Pope to change the state of that church, removing from the foundation the said schismatics.
 Although they abound in riches, their bishop is so afflicted with need and poverty, that he scarcely knows where to lay his head; and no other fit person can be found by the K. who would take the said bishopric. The K. knows for certain that no better arrangement could be made, in the opinion of himself and his Council, than that the said schismatics should be removed, and in their room, who are called 'regular,' but are altogether 'irregular,' and enemies of the Roman Church, prebendaries should be appointed who would be obedient to the Church, and helpful to the K. Asks the Pope to signify his will to the Legate on these matters. Winchester.

When G[ualo] Cardinal priest of St Martin, was in England, he saw the desolation and ruin of the church of Carlisle, not omitting to notice that it stands on the confines of England and Scotland, and by the Pope's mandate, he set over the See, H[ugh] formerly abbot of Beaulieu, a man careful in his doings, illustrious in letters and morals, devoted to the Roman Church, and faithful to the K. Northampton:—Theobald de Lacelles for himself and Ada his wife, claims versus William de Cantilupe seven carucates of land in Bulewic as Ada's dower from William de Cortenay her former husband. But he will with pleasure (libenter) give her legal tercc. Thomas and Ada deny that the manor is the 'capud baronie,' but it is a knight's fee by itself. And Reginald fitz Urse, William de Cortenay's ancestor, dowered Beatrice his wife therein, and she held it all her life. And Ada was therein dowered 'nominatim.' William repeats his assertion adding that the manor was the 'primum anteffementum' of William de Cortenay, and asks judgment whether said William could give dower therein as it is 'capud baronie.' And if Reginald dowered Beatrice, it should not injure him, this being by permission of Reginald's heir. Thomas and Ada say that William de Cortenay and his ancestors held more lands of the K. in capite, and ask judgment in this case whether her husband could dower her therefrom or not. - [1222. 832. Hugh de Bolebec to the K. Informs him that on the Circa quinzaine of Michaelmas, being the day fixed by the K. of Scot-Oct. 13.] land, he, with the knights of Northumberland, met in person at 'Revedeneburne' David de Lindsay, Justiciar of Lothian (Laoudie), Patric earl of Dunbar, and many other knights sent by the K. of Scotland. The business on which they had met being opened, they elected six knights for England, and six for Scotland, as jurors, to make a true perambulation between the kingdoms, viz., between Karham and Hawedene. Whereon the six English knights with one assent proceeded by the right and ancient marches between the kingdoms, the Scottish knights totally dissenting and contradicting them. Wherefore it was agreed between the Justiciar and Earl, and HENRY III. the writer, to elect other twelve knights, six on either side, and to ——— associate them in the perambulation with the first twelve, for [1222.] greater security. These being elected and sworn, the English knights agreed on their said boundaries, and the Scottish knights to different ones, as before. And inasmuch as the Scottish knights thus stood in the way of the business, the writer, in virtue of the K.'s command, elected and caused to be sworn, twenty-four discreet and loyal knights of his county, that they might settle the ancient marches between the kingdoms. These accordingly, on oath, declared the true and ancient marches between the kingdoms, as follows, viz., from Tweed by the rivulet of Revedenburne, ascending towards the south as far as 'Tres Karras,' and from thence in a straight line ascending as far as Hoperichelawe, and from thence in a straight line to Witelawe. But on their wishing to go thus, and beginning to make the perambulation, the foresaid Justiciar and Earl with their knights, resisting with violence, hindered them by threats from so doing.

 Whereupon the English knights (nostri) thus hindered, firmly asserted that the above were the true and ancient marches. He asks the K.
 to signify his pleasure on the matter.

Oxford:—The Master of the soldiery of the Temple in England claims versus Hugh de Hoddingesele, and Basilia his wife, that they shall warrant to him, along with David de Lindesi, 6 hides of land in Bradewelle that he holds of them, and claims by the charters of Alan de Lymesia, and Gerard his son father of said Basilia, and grandfather of said David, whose heirs they are, which he holds and proffers, bearing that Alan and Gerard gave to God and the Blessed Mary, and the brethren, 10*l.* of land in Bradewelle in frank almoigne. He complains that Hugh, Basilia and David, and their bailiffs, distrain him and his men to plough and harrow, and do other customs, to his loss and damage to the value of 20 marks. And, moreover, they impark his 'avers' in the common pasture. Hugh and Basilia come

- HENRY III. and deny. And acknowledge the charters. But that they exact ——— nothing in contravention thereof. A day is given to hear their trial 1223. in a month from Easter. Meanwhile to keep the peace. Basilia appoints an attorney. [Coram Rege, 7 & 8 Hen. III. No. 17, m. 15.]
- Oct. 31. 861. The K. directs the Sheriff of Suffolk to give David de Lindesi, who is in ward of A[lexander] K. of Scots, reseizin of all his and her heirs of him and his heirs for the yearly reddendo at Easter,

- 864. Cumberland:—William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle was summoned to answer to the K., why he detains from the K. the moiety of Alicia de Rumelly's land in Cumberland, belonging to the K. by reason of the custody of the daughters and heirs of Richard de Lucy, who are heirs of said land. Wherein Thomas de [Muleton (?)] the K.'s prolocutor, says that the 'Boy of Egremunt' had three sisters [Cecilia (?)], Anabilis, and Alicia de Rumelly aforesaid. And the said 'Boy's' land was partitioned among these three sisters, as he died without heir of his body. And of Cecilia came of said Earl, whose heir the Earl is. And from Anabilis came the said Lucy, and inasmuch as Alicia the third sister, died without heir of her body, return to the said daughters of Richard de Lucy, whom the K. [has in custody]. And by the Earl's unjust detention [he alleges that] the K. is damaged and sustains loss to the extent of 1500 marks. The Earl by his attorney comes and denies. And will not answer to the writ, as it

HENRY III. alleges that Richard de Lucy's daughters are in the K.'s hand, and — not in his. Nay, they are married, and therefore he will not answer 1223. unless the court decides. Thomas says these daughters are under age, although married; and were given in marriage by the K. A day is given them to hear the trial in the quinzaine of St Hilary.
 Afterwards the K. advocated it coram Rege, because through him they are in the said Thomas's custody. And the judgment of court is that the Earl shall answer. And the Earl by his attorney comes and says he ought not to answer to the K., as no ward is due to the K. for these lands. For the Earl holds no lands in these parts of the K. by knight's service, nor did his ancestors, but by cornage, and therefore the K. should have no ward. Thomas de Muleton says that the 'Boy of Egremunt' was in the K.'s ward, with his whole Honour, and died in ward; and after him, his three sisters were in his ward and were given in marriage by the K., and the Earl does not deny this. The court decides that the said daughters have recovered seizin of their part, and the K. shall have the ward, and the Earl is amerced for an unjust detention. And when the K. pleases to speak of the damages he shall do his will. [Coram Rege,

 Henry the K.'s grandfather, afforested the whole of the shire after his first coronation, except Wauberge, Sappele, and Hopheie, which were his demesne woods, and remained forest; and at that time the woods of Bramptone and Alkemundesbiry were the K.'s demesne so it is in the discretion of the K.'s Council, whether these woods remain forest or not. These are the meaths and bounds in Wauberge; first in Wikinlande towards the south, as the old ditch (fossatum) stretches to a place called Five Oaks towards the north, viz., between Wauberge and a grove which was the Abbot of Ramsey's demesne; and so descending to the duct coming from Wulvele, and descending by said duct to Wodeswardemede, and from thence to the ditch stretching towards Grenecroft; and so as the way (iter) extends through the midst of Halou towards Huntingdon, and from Halou to Wardiche, and thence to the ditch of Hildegare, and so as that ditch stretches towards Bradelege, and from thence to the duct of Akemundebiry; and so by that duct as far as Thinkeslonde, and

The meaths and bounds of Sappelege:—from Sappelehorne as the old ditch stretches, separating the field and wood, to the Earl's wood, and so as the old ditch stretches towards Stokemeduwe, and so descending as far as Erneswest and excluding the grove called the 'Canons of Huntingdon's grove,' and so descending by the duct as far as Hesel-hulle, and so ascending the mount towards the south, and so between the plough land and wood as far as the way coming from Ripetone,

[And to remove all occasion of strife or contention between the parties or their bailiffs, careful provisions were made as to the division by lot.] And the Earl was to have 100s. of land, over and above his share, which Thomas de Moleton had granted to have the daughters' share in a fitting place. He begs the K., in case the Earl complains in his absence, to appoint a day when they are both present, when he may justify himself. Henry the grandfather. And from Richer it descended to Adam his son, Richard's father, and from Adam, &c. And Peter comes and defends, and says he ought not to answer, as he claims no more than what his ancestors died seized of, from father to son, from their first acquisition (a primo conquestu), and the enfeoffment of their ancestors, and will not answer unless the court so decides. Richard says this should not hurt him, for his ancestors acquired a certain part, and he a certain part by the diversion (transturnum) of a certain water, and says the writ is reasonable by the custom of the kingdom. And as no land is specified in the writ, nor without a view can it be known how much Richard claims, the court decides that there shall be no perambulation unless Peter consents. But on the day when the Sheriff makes a view or weaponslaw (wapent'), let Richard shew them the land he claims, and set 'meaths and bounds,' and let Peter show the same, and if any lands be within the bounds hinc inde, Richard may claim by a writ de recto and Peter defend, either by the great assize or a duel, which he pleases. 1228. 1000. Pleas of the Crown in the county of Huntingdon. Essoins April 7. taken at Huntingdon on Friday next after the Close of Easter. The assize inquires whether David earl of Huntingdon, father of [Earl] John, was seized in demesne as of fee in 8 virgates of land in Cunin-ton, at his death. Which land the Abbot of Sautre holds; who comes and admits that said David died seized therein, as the writ says. But that he before his death bequeathed said land to Sautre along with his body, so that they were thus seized of both; and asks judgment whether the Earl could leave them; producing a writing sealed with the Earl's seal, bearing that the latter made his will in presence of the Abbots of Sautre and Wardon, Henry his son, David de Esseby, and many others, in this manner. First, he bequeathed with his body, to God and the church of St Mary of Sautre, 8 virgates of land in the vill of Cuninton, viz., those which the monks hold, as their charter attests. The Earl [John] says this charter ought not to hurt him, for it was not made in 'liege poustie' (ligia potestate) of his father; and denies that his father assigned to the monks, but died seized thereof. And asks his father's seizin.
 A day is given,—Thursday next before the feast of St Mark

Jan. 4. 1265. Gregory [IX.] to the Archbishop of York, and [Bishop] of Carlisle. If Alexander K. of Scotland will reflect that the Pope is specially bound by the tie of affection to [] the K. of England, and that he likewise sincerely loves the K. of Scotland, he will see that his Holiness must urge, and aid in making, the peace between the kings perpetual, believing that from such concord, great benefits will result to either kingdom. The K. of England had recently acquainted him of the amicable agreement long ago made between his grandfather Henry [II.] and his father John, and William K. of Scotland, whereby the latter made liege homage and fealty to his grandfather, father, and himself, and Alexander in like manner, to his father and himself ; which his [Alexander's] successors [and] the Earls and Barons of Scotland are bound to give to himself and his successors, and the said Earls and Barons to side with the English

HENRY III. kings against their own, if the latter do not keep the bargain. But if — the men of one kingdom flee to the other, in fear of crimes committed, 1235-36. he (sic) and his men must not receive them; and the men of either K. shall obtain the lands which they held in the other, before the agreement. Accordingly, the K. of England has requested his Holiness to sanction the said agreement. Wherefore the Pope exhorts the K. of Scotland earnestly to keep the same, which tends so greatly to the peace and tranquillity of either kingdom; and directs the Archbishop and Bishop to use their efforts accordingly; and if both cannot see to it, either may execute his wishes. Given at Perugia [Circa Feb. 13.] 1518. Pleas coram Rege in a month from St Hilary. Northumberland:—Robert de Ros was summoned to answer to Thomas de Strattun for disseizing him of his bailliary, and likewise for many transgressions in the K.'s forest of Northumberland. He defends as being himself one of the K.'s justices in the forest, and challenges the right of Thomas in the matter, and shows that he lawfully took the bailliary in the K.'s hand. Thomas justifies his right by referring to the K.'s roll in the hands of Sir W. de Raleghe, and adds that Roger Bertram, in confederacy with the said Robert de Ros, hunts at will

HENRY III. in the K.'s forest, and he and his men were attached for killing two stags and a 'broket,' and uncoupling his hounds in the forest, but 1240-1. were not fined; and Roger de Merlay, William fitz Ralf, Roger de Muncews, Richard Barbator, William Hache, were attached and not fined. Thomas also accuses the said Robert that when he goes through the forest, from some of his manors to others, he associates with himself Adam de Plesseto, Stephen son of Robert de Horsele, William Trater (?), Robert Walensis, and many other evildoers, and persons attached for forest offences; and in spite of the foresters, they take, sometimes four deer, sometimes three, sometimes more, sometimes fewer, to the destruction of the forest and the K.'s damage; and also that Earl Patric took a hind and William de Ros a roe, and the Earl bound himself to appear before the Justices, and appeared, but was not fined. And William de Ros gave neither pledge nor gage, having a good warrant, he said, and the plea against him was released before the Justices. Robert comes and denies the damage, &c., but admits that while itinerating as a justice of the forest through the same, he has caused a deer or more to be taken, but not to the damage of the forest. That Earl Patric on his journey towards Scotland, asked a deer from him, which he on the K.'s behalf granted to the Earl. As to the roe, he avows he gave it on the K.'s behalf, as Chief Justice of the Forest, and possessing such power. And likewise when any knight is ill, or any lady pregnant, and desiring venison, it is lawful to give them a deer on the K.'s behalf. That those whom Thomas says were not fined, were all fined, but that Thomas had so carelessly and obscurely presented their pleas and attachments, that scarcely anything could be made of them (quod vix potuissent attingere aliquid certum) to the K.'s good (commodum) or the ends of justice. That Roger Bertram as being a baron of the K., was not fined before him, but he and W. his brother were fined before the K. afterwards at Windsor, like all other barons who trespass in the forest. And that Thomas has made these charges from hatred and malice, because Robert took his bailliary in the K.'s hand, till it should appear by what warrant he held it. Moreover, to obviate suspicion of his own execution of his office, he besought the K. to make inquisition on the charges, if it was fitting that this should be made on the Chief Justice of the Forest. Afterwards it was decided before the K. and his council on the morrow of Pentecost (May 20th) that as Thomas had no clear probation or suit except his foresters, who were also hostile, having been turned off, and it was found that Robert had rightly disseized him, till inquiry was made, that the Justice was freed of all the charges, and Thomas in amercement for a false claim, the Justice having acted as befitted the K.'s honour. Robert puts in his place Robert Mallore or John de Plessetis. [Coram Rege, 25 Hen. III. No. 53, m. 7.] not blush to serve laymen and others against the honour of his

 of the Earl, Robert de Bernham, Robert de Durham (Donelm') William de Mordington, and Simon de Grubbesheved (Grubbet), knights of Scotland, to the lieges. The Sheriff of Northumberland had received on the day of St Edmund the Martyr, at the march of England and Scotland, letters patent from the K. of England, dated 10th September previous, bearing that the K. had heard from the K. of Scotland's envoys, that the laws and customs of the Marches of the kingdoms in the time of their predecessors kings of England and Scotland, hitherto used, were now less well observed ;

HENRY III. and as injury had been done to Nicholas de Sules against said laws, the K. commanded the Sheriff to cause the same to be inviolably kept, and to give redress to said Nicholas if found due; and they having on the said day of St Edmund, convened at the march on Tweed, under the said precept from the K. of England, and another from the K. of Scotland, for the purpose of correcting offences against said march laws and customs, did duly correct, according to the ancient and approved custom of the March, such matters as required redress. And it was proponed on the part of the K. of Scotland, that Nicholas de Sules had been injured by being impleaded before the K. of England for transgressions by his men of Scotland dwelling in Scotland, perpetrated in England. The said knights, having carefully inquired into the matter by the elder and more discreet persons on both sides of the march, according to ancient march law and custom, say, that the said Nicholas de Sules has been injured by being so impleaded elsewhere than at the march, although he holds land in England; for no one of either kingdom, although holding lands in both, is liable by march law, to be impleaded anywhere but at the march, for any deed by his men dwelling in England, done in Scotland; or for any deed by his men dwelling in Scotland, done in England. In testimony whereof they append their seals, with those of the Sheriffs of Northumberland and Berwick, both present at the inquisition.

 toll, and hiring shops for their wares. But the Earl now six years past, set up a market in Pritelewelle on Monday, diverting the trade from the Countess's market of Reyleghe, whereby she is damaged to the extent of 20*l.* The Earl appears and denies the damage; indeed, he says the Countess's market is bettered by his. And if it is any way deteriorated, this is not on account of the Earl's, but for merchants who came to Reylegh, taking 'prises' from them, and paying nothing for the goods. The parties both put themselves on

The jurors, William de Wardewyk, Adam of the ditches (fossatis), Alan Gerboud, Adam de Turstanefeud, William de Melmeby, William de Ayllineby, Adam de Bochardeby, Everard de Agelunby, Adam Armestrang, Michael de Rokisburg, Henry Laineweale, Robert de Berewys, William son of Ivo, Adam Caperun, Adam the sergeant (serviens) and William the man of Wydo, say, that there are in the said land, arable, meadow, and curtilages, $43\frac{1}{2}$ measured acres, which John de Boleton holds as 37 acres 1 rood, and pays 12*d.* per acre. He also holds the K.'s gardens for 20*s.*; total 57*s.* 8*d.* They say that John de Mora held $5\frac{1}{2}$ acres of these, before the said John de Boleton had entry thereto by the K.'s letters, whereof each acre is worth 15*d.*; total, 6*s.* 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. John de Boleton held 5 acres 1 rood, each acre worth 18*d.* yearly; total, 7*s.* 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. The brothers of St Nicholas' Hospital held 4 acres, value of each 12*d.*; total, 4*s.* The house of St Sepulchre held 5 acres, worth 12*d.* each; total, 5*s.* Adam the sergeant held 4 acres, worth 4*s.* yearly. Total of this last extent 69*s.* 3*d.*; the increase whereby to the K. is 11*s.* 7*d.* of yearly rent. They say it will be more to the K.'s advantage that the late tenants should hold the lands by the same parcels as now, for the increased rent, and wards, escheats, and grassums that may fall in from them to the K. and his heirs; than that John de Boleton or any other single person should do so. All the old tenants are ready to hold by the new extent, if it please the K. And Sir Johr de Mora, knight, came and offered to the K. 10 marks instead of two palfreys, that he and the others might so hold. Whereon let the K. declare his will. [*Inq. p. m., 34 Hen. III. HENRY III. 1806. Innocent [IV.] to the crusaders of the kingdom of Scotland.

— His dearest son in Christ, the K. of Scotland, has reminded the Pope 1251. that his Holiness at one time (olim) was of opinion that the Sept. 4. redemptions of vows of crusaders, likewise offerings bequeathed or left in aid of the Holy land, in Scotland, should be granted to those willing to cross the seas for that purpose; but inasmuch as he is said to have lately (nuper) granted these to his dearest son the K. of England and his agents, the K. of Scotland has humbly besought the Pope to see to his subjects' interest. The Pope therefore confirms the grant to the Scottish crusaders, and declares that the letters granted to the K. of England shall in no way prejudice it. Milan, 2d of the

But they know not if he was seized the day he died or not. For they know not the date of his death, nor can know it. For he died far off in Scotland in a certain island called Araane (Arran). Some say he died on Tuesday before the feast of St Michael, and others say he died the Tuesday after, at vespers; but the fact (certitudo) is as yet unknown. That on Tuesday before Michaelmas there came a messenger of said Walter to Ulvington, with letters patent from his lord, directed to Gerard de

HENRY III. Boghes his bailiff there, bearing that Walter had given the manor to his said nephew Thomas, and that Gerard should put him in seizin thereof. But Gerard was absent, having gone to the court regarding a plea coram Rege in the octaves of St Michael. So the messenger having shown the letters to many of the country side (patria) awaited Gerard's return. When he returned on Sunday next after the quinzaine of St Michael, and had received and seen the letters, he said he dared not give seizin to any one, unless he saw Thomas in propria personá. It was arranged that the attorney of Thomas should remain with Walter Biset's reeve till he heard further. On the next day, viz. three weeks after Michaelmas, the said Thomas arrived at Ulvington and was housed there. And immediately before dinner, he sent for Gerard who was at the nearest vill, and asked seizin from him under the letters. And the latter, in presence of two freemen (liberis) a rustie, and the reeve of the vill, gave him seizin, saving all rights. And so Gerard forthwith retired. And Thomas said his uncle was then in good health, and received from the reeve his uncle's rent for the last term of Pentecost, as also the tallage imposed in his uncle's time, then in the reeve's hands and keeping. And so departed with the money. Soon after, on the report in the county that Walter was dead, the K.'s escheators came, took the manor, and now hold it. [Inq. p. m., 36 Hen. III. No. 58.]

And each of them appointed a new seneschal and reeve to keep his part; and they deposed the seneschal and reeve of the aforesaid lady, and held courts during said time, and received amercements from many, and took homages of all the free men, and rent from the term of St John Baptist, and multure of the mill, and sold part of the meadow, and caused attorn and earry another part, and reap and carry the corn in autumn, and did other acts of property, till the aforesaid term after Michaelmas, when they delivered the manor in lease to their said mother to be held for her life, paying to them 40s.

 1251. Ada died at Stokesley on Saturday next after the feast of St James the Apostle in the (K.'s) 35th year, as lessee (firmaria) of her said sons. Also that the attorneys of the said Hugh and Robert put themselves in seizin of said manor after the death of said Ada, before she was buried. And on the morrow after the burial Hugh came and entered seizin for himself and his brother with many, and held possession for until he was expelled by force by the K.'s letters and the whole country, who came with the Sheriff and escheators viz., [Bar]tholomew same year. William is absent, and made other defaults. The Sheriff ordered to summon him, reports he has no land in the county. Whereon John le Fraunceys, keeper of the land of Walter son and heir of Odard de Wygeton, says that he is in seizin of the aforesaid lands and delivers her dower therefrom; saving to John the crop presently on the land, and to Isabella her damages against William, on account of her dower delayed to this very day, which the Sheriff is ordered to ascertain without delay. [Coram Rege, 37 Hen. III. No. 91, m. 13.]
- (Trinity Term.) 1934. The K. to the Barons. As it appears to the K. by inspection of the rolls of his chancery, and the charter which the K. granted to Isabella de Bruis of the manors of Writel and Hatfield, in part of her heritage of the earldom of Chester, that these were to be held by the service of one knight only, the K. wills that they release the demand of 100*l.* they have made on Robert de Bruis, son and heir of Isabella, for his relief of said manors; and that he pay 100*s.* for same, 'as is just.' The Queen being pregnant, he asks that his daughter M[argaret] Queen of Scotland, may join her mother, for the latter's solace and recreation till her purification, after which the Queen of Scotland will return. - HENRY III. 1938. Pleas before the K.'s Council at Westminster, in the octaves of Michaelmas anno 37. Lincoln :—The Sheriff was commanded to be before the Council, and to produce the inquisition the K. directed him to hold, concerning the late shipwreck of a vessel at Malberthorpe in Lyndeseye, which he had neglected to return in contempt. And Robert le Blund, prosecutor on behalf of Robert Stater, burgess of Berwick, to whom the K. had granted the wreck at the instance of the K. and Queen of Scotland, says that said wreck was valued at less than it was worth more than (ultra) the half of the fair value, inasmuch as it was only valued at 4 marks; and there was in the ship a cable (cabulum) worth 4 marks, and other ship's furniture (armamenta), worth about 40 marks. He says also that much was plundered (distracta) from said ship. The Sheriff said he had caused the wreck to be valued by the oath of four vills, viz., Malberthorp, Setlethorp, Strudthorp, and Fulesthorpe and Stuton, and delivered the same to them, to answer to the K. and Council at pleasure. And Robert le Blund the prosecutor, says it was undervalued at 4 marks, being worth about 50 marks. And as the wreck was delivered to those who valued it at that price, it was clearly undervalued designedly (maliciosé). Therefore Robert de Wylleby, John fitz Hugh, Ralf de Trihampton, and Henry de Stepyng, are commanded to inquire by oath of seamen (marinellorum), and others of the visne of Malberthorp, how much the wreck is worth, and what was plundered therefrom; and if they discover any detainer of her chattels and furniture, to recover the worth from his lands and chattels, except from the Countess of Lyncoln, who has satisfied the foresaid Robert regarding her share of them; and to pay the value of the chattels and furniture to the said Robert le Blund or William le clerk his socius, for the grantee Robert Stater's use, without delay. And it is to be noted that he has elsewhere placed himself on an inquisition, as appears in the roll of Trinity term last. [Coram Rege, 37 & 38 Hen. III. No. 94, m. 15.]
- [Circa 1943. Pleas at Westminster [in a month after Michaelmas and on Nov. 3.] the morrow of All Souls]. Devon:—John Cumyn claims versus Alan de Haldeswurth, a carucate of land in Bampton as his right, whereto he has no ingress but by Juliana, John's sister, to whom John demised it for a term now past; viz., for three years. Alan by attorney, appears and calls to warrant the Abbot of St Augustine's, Bristol. Whō defends his right and acknowledges that he had ingress by Juliana, who was not a tenant, but enfeoffed by John by charter, which he proffers. Judgment: That the Abbot goes sine die, and John takes nothing by his writ, but is in amercement for a false claim, with leave to procure another writ if he will.
- Afterwards it is attested that the charter produced by the Abbot is a false one. Judgment: That the imparlance be resumed. HENRY III. Cadehou, and William the K.'s late chaplain; from his Council and ——— their offices (balliis), in consequence of their demerits. That he would 1255. not restore them or their accomplices or 'fautours' to his favour until they had atoned for their offences against the K. of England and himself, which he would compel them to do by all lawful means.
 In the event of any foreign prince invading Scotland, it was agreed on both sides that they might be restored to favour. By the advice of his father-in-law and his own magnates, he had ordained that Richard and Peter, bishops of Dunkeld and Aberdeen; the Earls of Fyfe, Dunbar, Stratherne, and Carrik; Alexander the Steward of Scotland, Robert de Brus, Alan Durward, Walter de Moravia, David de Lindeseie, William de Brechin, Robert de Meyners, Gilbert de Hay, and Hugh Giffard; should be appointed of his Council, Regents of the kingdom, and Guardians of himself and his Queen; that they should not be removed from the Council or their offices, except for manifest demerit, for seven years complete, beginning from the feast of the Translation of St Cuthbert [14th Sept.] 1255, or such shorter period as might be agreed on between the two kings. That vacancies were to be supplied by the surviving Regents. Nothing was to be done concerning feudal wards or escheats without their consent.
 They were to appoint sheriffs foresters and other minor officers in room of those removed for offences. That the royal castles should remain in the hands of their present custodiers. The K. farther promised to the K. of England to treat his daughter with conjugal affection, and the honours befitting her rank; and to the regents, to ratify all their covenants and reasonable grants. That he had caused Patric earl of Dunbar swear on his (the K.'s) soul that the foregoing engagements should be fulfilled, subjecting himself to the Papal coercion and censures should he fail in performance. The K. of England therefore promised to the K. of Scotland that on the expiry of the term specified, no prejudice should arise to him or his kingdom thereby. Sprouston. (Roxburghshire).

Nov. (?). 2034. Report¹ to the K. by Thomas de Lascelis, William de Derewentewater, Robert de Castelkayrok, and Alan de Orreton, knights of the county of Cumberland. At his command they had visited and inspected the castle of Carlisle, and its condition when delivered by Sir Robert de Bruys to Sir William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle. They found it in bad condition; all the leaden gutters of the great tower decayed (deficiunt), and the doors and windows likewise. The joists and planking are broken and rotten; and the walls of the tower in a bad state, for want of mending and covering. The Queen's chamber which was covered with lead, needs great repair and covering; and the chimney thereof needs instant (?) repair or it will speedily fall on the chamber, which is very dangerous. Maunsell's turret [turella] and the turret of William de Ireby, and the turret beyond the inner gate, which were levelled and made worse, in the great [war] in the time of K. John the K.'s father, were never after restored or repaired. The chapel, the great hall, the kitchens, the granges, the stables, the bakeries, the breweries, and the houses beyond the gate, and the bridges within and without the castle, demand repair and covering beyond measure (ultra modum). There is a great 'crenacia' within the turret of William de Ireby from below, requiring repair anew, which was shown to Sir Henry de Bathonia, with the other defects above named. A bretasche within Maunsell's turret, lately (de novo) blown down by wind, is now burned, and so are the doors and windows of the great tower and of the stables and kitchen; and the bolts (serure) of the doors with their iron work, carried off. Great part of the paling within and without the castle is likewise burned and destroyed. The corn of the castle demesne was so expended in autumn both in sheaves (garbis) and summages that the bailiffs of the county could scarcely find seed for the demesne. The servants' liberations and provender of the work cattle and oxen, the hay and forage on which the horses of the Sheriff, Constable, and the servants' and carters' work cattle and oxen should be sustained during the year, except at grasstine, were all expended and wasted before the bailiffs of the county received said castle. The Reporters append their seals. (No date.)

[m. 1, d.] Alan de Harecarres and Agnes his wife complain that Isabella de Muschaump wife of Richard de Moryn has disseized them of the common pasture pertaining to their freehold in the vill of Lowyk, in a wood containing about 200 acres, which they were used to have all the year for their work cattle. Isabella avers that she holds the wood in the same state as Robert de Muschaump her late husband did at his death. The jury find that the said Robert had disseized Alan and Agnes a year before his death, and thereon the K.'s escheators seized the manor. They had promised the plaintiffs common in the said wood, but meanwhile the K. assigned the manor to Isabella in dower, who held it free. The plaintiffs therefore are in amercement for a false claim, with leave to take another writ if they will.

 justices. The township of Alnewyk came by twelve [jurors]. They present that one Gilbert of Niddesdale, a stranger, joined himself to a hermit called Semannus of Botelesham, and when they were on a moor, Gilbert beat the hermit, wounded and left him for dead, taking away his clothes and a penny, and fled. And in his flight he met Ralf de Beleford a K.'s sergeant, who took him charging him as a malefactor, and led him to Alnewyk. The hermit came there and accused him of the robbery and assault. Gilbert confessed the charge before the Bailiff and the men of Alnewyk, whereon the sergeant made the hermit behead him. The Sheriff and the coroner being asked by what warrant he was beheaded, say that this is the custom of the county, that so soon as one is taken 'cum manu opere' (red hand) he is at once beheaded. And he who pursues him for his stolen goods has them for beheading him.

[m. 13, d.] The township of Wulloure came by twelve [jurors].
 William Yrrumpurs committed burglary in the house of Thomas the forester in Wulloure, and stole seven fleeces, valued at 2s. The men

 His chattels were 9s. 6d. which the Sheriff received. Hereon came the bailiffs of the Earl of Stratherne, William de Huntercumbe, and Richard Moryn, the heirs of Robert de Muschauz, and claimed the chattels, as the accused was justified in their court, and say that such is the custom of the county. This to be spoken about.

[m. 13, d.] The township of Roubiry came by twelve [jurors]. They present that Robert of Creglinge (Crailing?) and James 'le Scot,' two strangers, were taken on suspicion of larceny by the bailiffs of William de Valence, and put in William's prison at Rowebyri.
 Robert afterwards escaped to the church there, acknowledged his larceny, and abjured the kingdom, before William of Baumburgh the coroner. He had no chattels. James was delivered to the Sheriff, who answers for him, and to the trial for the escape against William de Valence. The town of Rowebyri did not take Robert. Therefore is in amercement.

It is said he has no chattels, being a stranger of Scotland. The vill of Corebridge did not take him, and is in amercement. It appears that he left three stolen horses behind him. William de Valence's bailiffs took and keep them without warrant. Their value is 40s. for which William de Valence shall answer.

They present that John Comin takes toll at Newburg and Hehis- ham from the K.'s men, where none was ever levied, and by what warrant they know not. To be spoken about.

John of Dumfries, Adam of Dumfries, and Eva his wife, were lodged in William le Despenser's house in Corebridge, and a strife arose between them for Adam's wife. Adam struck John with a knife (cutello) in the belly, causing instant death. He and his wife forthwith fled to Rowbyry church, confessed the deed, and abjured the kingdom, before the coroner. Their chattels are 10*d.*, for which the Sheriff to answer; and the vill of Corebridge is fined for not taking them.

[m. 14.] They present that William de Nutel, clerk, a native of Nottingham, wounded a certain unknown Scotsman between Ovington and Ovingham, so that his life is despaired of. He fled to Corebridge church, acknowledged the deed, and that he had been a malefactor in his own county for reset of thieves and other evil deeds; and abjured the kingdom before the coroner Adam Baret. 1256. 2051. Cumberland:—Final agreement made in the K.'s court at May 26. Carlisle on the morrow of Ascension, 40 of the K.'s reign, before John, abbot of Burgh St Peter's, Roger de Thurkelby, Peter de Percy, Nicholas de Haulau, and John de Wyville, justices errant, and others the K.'s lieges; between Alan de Moleton and Alicia his wife, complainants, and William de Fortibus, earl of Albemarle [defendant].
 Alan and Alicia complain that the Earl, by reason of a fine made between them in the K.'s court at Bedford before the justices, regarding the bounds of the forests of Alredale, Cokermue, and Kaldebek, deforced Alan and Alicia and their men of Braythweyt, Husacre, and Bottermere, of the common pasture and estovers in Derwentefelles, which they held before said fine, since there was no mention made therein of these. Agreed between them in court; viz., the Earl granted that Alan and Alicia and her heirs, and their men aforesaid, should have common pasture for all their work cattle in his forest of Derwentefelles, which had remained to him and his heirs by said fine, and reasonable estovers in same forest by view of the Earl's foresters, if, being warned, they wished to be present. If not, the same to be taken without their view. Saving to the Earl and his heirs their closes and houses in the forest at the date hereof, and power to make enclosures (apruamenta) therein, provided Alan and Alicia, her foresaids and men have sufficient common pasture and estovers as aforesaid. And if their 'avers' enter the said closes and enclosures from defect of the fence, they shall not be impounded but chased out without detriment or giving any thing for their escape.
 The Earl also grants to Alan and Alicia her heirs and their men of Botremere a common entry and exit to their pasture in the forest, of forty feet in breadth, beyond the Earl's arable land in Botremere, towards the south, and another entry and exit of the same breadth, beyond his arable land in said vill towards the east. And that they and their men of Braithweyt may have a like entry and exit of same breadth to their pasture towards the south, next to the Earl's sheepfold in Coldale. And the Earl also restored in court to them an acre of land lying in a place called Godrichesskales, and a stable with its site, next the entry of Derewenteswatre for ever. And for this grant remission and quit-claim, Alan and Alicia granted to the Earl and his heirs common pasture for all his 'avers' in their forest, and reasonable estovers therein by view of their foresters when summoned, and in their absence without view; saving to Alan and Alicia and her heirs, their closes and houses in the forest on the day of this agreement, and right to make enclosures therein, provided the Earl and his heirs have sufficient common pasture and estovers as aforesaid. But it shall not be lawful to Alan and Alicia or their fore-saids or men, without the Earl's or his heirs' consent, besides [extra]

HENRY III. the old hays and closes that they have in the Earl's forest at this ——— date, to make any closes in future, or raise houses, or claim any thing 1256. therein except common pasture, entry, and exit as aforesaid. Nor shall the Earl, his heirs, or men, without the consent of Alan and Alicia or their foresaids, have any right besides their old hays and closes in the latter's forest, to make any closes, or build houses or claim any thing therein save common pasture, estovers, and entry and exit as aforesaid. And both parties agree that they and their respective heirs may have pannage for swine 'agisted' in their several woods in mast time (tempus pessone) for ever. Saving to them respectively the pannage of their tenants, viz., of those who are bound to give it to their lord's swine, wherever they may be 'agisted,' whether in the forest or out of it. And this agreement is made, saving to Nicholas de Moristeby, Nicholas le Englays, Nicholas le Fraumeys, John Lanlauerd and Adam de le Hou, the men of the said Alan and Alicia, and her heirs, and their heirs, and to the Earl's men of Sadmurdak, common pasture and reasonable estovers, corresponding to their several holdings, and free entry and exit, respectively; the former to the Earl's forest, and the latter to Alan and Alicia's forest in Derewentefelles, as they had before the said fine was made, except in the lord's closes or future enclosures; under the limitations and provisions as to breaking fences, and others foresaid.

 pasture claimed by Gilbert in their lands, woods and moors in Kaldebek and Halteclo, and reasonable estover in the same. Agreed demesne lands both ploughed and not ploughed; likewise in the demesne 'haya' of Karbek by its ancient metes and bounds; or in their close adjacent to their court in said vill towards the south, in a straight line from the same. And if his 'avers' or those of his tenants stray into the demesne lands, 'hay' or close, they shall not be impounded but driven out without detriment, and if twelve or more enter and feed they shall be fined 6*l.*, and if fewer than twelve, 4*l.*

 Latimer who has been instructed, if he can be present,—if not, to go without him; lest from want of aid the K.'s friends are troubled and give way to their enemies; and he is to take the needful funds from the issues of his bailliary. The K. has also written to the Earl of Albemarle to give succour with the knights of his bailliary when required. If the adverse party meanwhile keep quiet, it seems good to the K. that de Neville and his followers do the like, keeping themselves in readiness to attend another parliament at Roxburgh, where the K.'s friends are to assemble in three weeks after Easter, as the K.

May 13. 2126. The K. to the K. of Scotland. The latter's envoys, master Adam, provost of the city of St Andrews, and Thomas de Normanville, had carefully (diligenter) related to the K. what had been enjoined on them by the persons whom the K. had sent to the parliament (colloquium) at Edinburgh. In the matters befitting the K. of Scotland's and his friends' interests, which the K. thinks worthy to be toiled after, for several reasons the K. was unable to send the persons whom the said envoys thought should be appointed, or others equally fitted, at the day fixed, especially as three of them had crossed the seas on important affairs of their own. Since then the K. has convened his parliament (colloquium) at Oxford, in a month from Pentecost, from whence he intends 'Deo disponente' immediately to set out against his Welsh rebels. He therefore asks the Scottish K. to prorogue his parliament till the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Mary next, at a nearer and more convenient place, and that meanwhile the K.'s friends in Scotland should be protected from any discord or contention. The K. hopes that the result will be to the honour and advantage of all. Asks him to reply what he thinks should be done. Winchester. [Close, 42 Hen. III. m. 8, dorso.]

May 14. 2127. The K. to William le Latimer sheriff of York and Robert de Neville sheriff of Northumberland. The K. has sent back the 'prudent men' master Adam de Malcarueston provost of St Andrews, and Thomas de Normanville, the K. of Scotland's envoys, to said K., asking him in writing, to prorogue his parliament fixed (captum) at Edinburgh, in the quinzaine of Trinity, for reasons assigned in the letter, till the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary next. Commands them to send some discreet man whom they can trust to the K. of Scotland, with the K.'s letters, that he may hear that K.'s answer and report it to the K. They are nevertheless to attend personally at Edinburgh on the quinzaine of Holy Trinity, when, if necessary, and the said K. is unwilling (noluerit) to prorogue his parliament, and they see the K.'s friends need it, they are to assist them with their utmost power. Winchester. [Close, 42 Hen. III. m. 8.]

May 16. 2128. William Latimer sheriff of York is commanded to go as often as he conveniently can to the K.'s daughter M[argaret] Queen of Scotland to see that she has necessary solace and succour, as the K. has demanded of him by his letters patent; and he is to reimburse himself from the issues of his bailliary, without however neglecting the provision for the K.'s Welsh expedition. Winchester.

1258. 2129. Pleas at Oxford before H. le Bygod Justiciar of England, and R. de Thurkelby and H. de Bathonia, in a month from Holy Trinity. Cumberland :—The Sheriff sent the inquisition which he had been commanded to make as to the land and heir of Odard de Wigeton, certifying that Odard held of the K. in capite, the manor of Melmerby with its pertinents, viz., Steynton, Blakhille and Wardwik, by cornage, and its value was 20*l. per annum*. That Odard held in capite of W[illiam] de Fortibus earl of Albemarle, the manor of Wygeton by cornage, and it was worth yearly 15*l.* That Walter, Odard's son, was his next heir, and twenty-one years of age and more. Hereon came John de Langeton and said on behalf of John le Franceys, who held the manor of Melmorby in custody till the heir's full age, that Walter was not yet of age, and that the inquisition so taken by the Sheriff, was made by jurors who did not know his age. Walter the heir being present, says he is twenty-two years of age and asks seizin. And moreover says that the Earl of Albemarle of whom his father Odard held the manor of Wygeton, delivered seizin thereof to him as of full age, and took his homage. Further, that many of his neighbours (de patria ubi natus fuit) were in court, who knew and could testify to his age. And he produces Gilbert de Hauteclou, Nicholas de Metelthone, Peter de Ros, William de Lasceles, Andrew de Feugeres, Roger la veyle, John Bakun, Nicholas le taylur, and John of Ely. Who say on oath that Walter is of age, and will be twenty-two years old from the instant Assumption of the Blessed Mary [August 15th]. Asked how they know this,—say it is evident from the inquisition before the Sheriff, at which they were present. And they say that John le Fraunceys was there and removed several jurors, consenting to the others on the inquisition. That the Earl of Albemarle made an inquisition in his court at Cokermue, and found that Walter was of age and gave him his land. That the present K. gave the custody of the manor of Melmorby to Walter late bishop of Carlisle, till the heir's age. The Bishop demised it to William de Huntercumbe, and he to William de Shelford, and the latter to John le Fraunceys. The judgment of court is, that the heir recover seizin, and the Sheriff is directed to give it; and the K. has taken Walter's homage. [Coram Rege, 42 & 43 Hen. III. No. 106, m. 1.]

Aug. 4. 2132. Pleas at Dunwich on Sunday next after the feast of St Peter 'ad vincula,' in the K.'s 42d year, before Roger de Thurkelby and William de Swineford, sheriff, whom Roger associated with himself.

Suffolk :—The Sheriff having been directed to summon a jury of Dunwich and vicinity to inquire who had arrested the goods and merchandize of Reginald le enfaunt citizen of Acre [Acon] of Dunwich—for what cause, and into whose hands they had come—which Reginald valued at 100 marks and more; Walran de Muncy, William de Money, Geoffry Ridel, Walter de Henham, Warin de Barsham, Edmund de Wimundhale, Henry de Biskelee, foreign jurors; Robert Bernard, Dyonisius de Aldeburgh, Alan le rey, Eustace fitz Walter, and William Bullok, John de aula and Augustin le clerk, jurors of Dunwich; the Jury,—say on oath that Reginald and his wares arrived [applicuit] at Dunwich. And Lucas le Escot hearing it said he was a surgeon, spoke to him as to curing his [Lucas'] wife of an infirmity which afflicted her. And Reginald took all his goods to the house of Richard, Lucas's son, committing them to Richard and Lucas to be kept for him. He took care of Lucas's wife for four days; but she feeling herself little or no better (alleviatam) of her infirmity asked her husband to remove Reginald, which Lucas accordingly did, expelling him from his house.
 Reginald then went to Richard the son's house, demanding his goods.
 But Lucas and Richard answered him 'precisé' that he should not have his wares till he had made good some trespasses done to them by him. But they alleged none against him. And so they arrested and yet detain his goods and wares. Lucas and Richard came and produced some wares that they had of the plaintiff's, but he on seeing them, asserted that many of those arrested were awanting;
e.g., ten gold rings weighing 5 ounces of gold; whereof three had three rubies; and other three three emeralds; and other three three cameos (camaheuz); and the tenth ring a diamond. Also that there were awanting three dozen and five buttons (butones) of crystal, six pounds of 'azure,' and thirteen 'curde de ginge-brato.' The jury being asked whether the goods and wares arrested by Lucas and Richard were there produced, [just] as Reginald had committed them to be kept, reply, they cannot say or know this in truth (pro vero). But for saving their consciences they

HENRY III. say that the goods and wares which Reginald deposited, and ——— which Lucas and Richard arrested, were not wholly produced here 1258. as so committed. And that the deficiency of the goods and wares through the arrest of the same in their custody by Lucas and Richard, was carried off (amotus), but the amount they know not.
 And as Lucas and Richard acknowledge the fact of the arrest, and a shortcoming in the goods is found by the inquisition, they are committed in charge to Hubert de Bavent, William de Metefeud, Richard de Biskele, Walter de Shelfhaug', Simon le Daneys, and Simon Basset, to have them coram Rege in the quinzaine of St Michael, to answer for the trespass. Reginald to attend to prosecute.

HENRY III. Enviayn, Jeneu Chch', Roys son of Ednevet, and their friends and allies, as follows. That without the consent of the Welsh prince and 1258-59. magnates, they will make neither peace nor truce henceforth with the K. of England, or any magnates of his realm, or of the realm of Scotland, who at the date of the instrument, are adverse and rebels to the Welshmen and the granters, unless they are all similarly bound with themselves. That they will allow no power, whether a force of horse or foot, to issue from Scotland against the said prince and magnates; nor afford aid to the K. of England against them, but shall be their faithful allies. Should the K. of Scotland compel them to make peace or truce with the K. of England, or other adversary of the Welshmen, they will bonâ fide procure this also for the latter, and the advantage of their country. In no way, unless as above compelled, will they violate the present agreement; but rather induce their lord also to enter into the same. Welsh merchants shall have safe conduct to come and trade in Scotland. And they will persuade Scottish merchants to go to trade in Wales. Each of the granters, saving his allegiance to the K. of Scotland, has sworn on the Holy Evangelis, in the hand of Gwyd' and Bangr', envoys of the said prince and magnates. And they append their seals to this ehyrograph remaining in possession of the Welshmen. The aforesaid princes and magnates taking a like oath in the hand of Alan de Yrewyn the granters' envoy, and appending their seals to a counterpart of the said bond, to remain with the granters.

On account of the peace between himself and the K. of France, his expedition against his rebels in Wales, and the affairs of Sicily, he is involved in great expenses, and is unable to pay it at present. But by Michaelmas next he hopes to do so in whole or part. Regarding a writing made between them, which the K. of Scotland wishes restored, the K. can do nothing in the absence of his nobles and councillors present at its execution. As to Alexander's request by his said envoy that the K. would not object to his coronation, the K. thinks the present an unsuitable time for it, but when a better season arrives, will act as befits his honour. In respect to his request that the K. would not assist the K. of Man, the K. informs Alexander he will neither oppose him in doing justice, nor has he been urged by any one; but if anything is reported to him son of Muthe, Gamel of Hindeford, Richard the seneschal of Kare-horseback to do all the usual liberation in the household, with grooms and hounds, of which service these served first,—Robert Collan, Robert Seevel, Laurence Lovel, Adam of Forfare, Edward of the HENRY III. above named Richard and Adam molendinarius (the miller) met on Sunday next after the feast of St Michael at the church of the said Saint,¹ and Adam in the cemetery there defamed Richard, calling [Circa 1259.] him a thief, viz., ‘Galuvet,’² and said that he would make Richard clear out of the town. It chanced on the following Thursday that Richard walked in the street, while Adam stood in the door of a house. A woman said to him, ‘withdraw yourself, here is Richard.’ Adam said ‘I will not, I have as sharp a knife as he.’ And then entered the house and drew a knife to disembowel Richard, who in defending himself drew a sword, and struck Adam with the flat. Then Adam twisted (circuivit) his arm round the sword, and Richard snatching it away, wounded him mortally. Then Richard said, I have not killed thee, thou thyself didst it.’ The barons jurors concur ‘in omnibus’ with the burgesses jurors. They all say that Richard is faithful, but Adam was a thief and defamer.

 ——— letters patent, brought by the Steward to the K.; and they were 1261–62. delivered to master Henry de Gaunt the keeper of the K.'s wardrobe.

(On margin.) And it is to be observed that the Queen delivered to W[alter] de Merton the Chancellor, a letter of the K. of Scotland acknowledging receipt of 1000 marks wherein the K. of England was bound to him for the maritagium, &c. And the said Walter delivered it to master Henry de Gaunt, keeper of the K.'s wardrobe; as more plainly appears in the roll of the 45th year, month of July. So he has in all 1000*l.* [Liberate, 46 Hen. III. m. 12.]

March 21. 2294. A[lexander] K. of Scots to Robert de Montalt his sheriff, and his bailiffs of Forfar, directing them to hold an inquisition whether the five daughters of Symon the janitor of Montrose (Monros) are his heirs in the land of Inyaney, and the office of the gate of the K.'s castle of Montrose. Montrose. 21st March, 13th of the K.'s reign.

Inquisition by Robert de Montalt, knight, regarding the land of Iniany next Falerikkum, by these barons (barones); viz., the barons of Old Munros, Rossyn, Fethyn, Kynel, Inverkilerd, Inverlunan, Kynbladmund, Lexyn, Dun, Brechyn, Kinabir, Little Pert, Melgund, Pannemor, Pannebride, Tunryny, and Roskolbyn, and great part of the burgesses of Montrose. The jurors say that one called Crane held the land heritably by gift of K. William, and died seized in fee. After him Swayn his son held it and died seized in fee. And after him Symon his son held it and died so seized. Symon had five daughters by two espoused wives, viz., Margaret, Agnes, Swannoc (Swan neck), Cristiana and Mariota. And that Crane, Swayn and Symon never joined the host (fecerunt exercitum) nor gave aid, nor 'did aught else in the world' for the land, save the office of the gate of the K.'s castle of Montrose. And the said women are nearest and lawful heirs of Symon.

March 23. 2295. The K. to the K. of Scotland. John de Londors, the latter K.'s clerk and envoy, has clearly made known his business, and the K. has replied and ordered him to explain, vivâ voce. He has written to the K. of Norway to send back Alexander's envoys, and about the matter discussed between these two kings. Likewise to the Pope on Alexander's behalf, as he would in his own. He has summoned the Bishop of Carlisle to come in a month after Easter that he may take counsel regarding the church of Salkhull (Salkeld), in dispute between the K. of Scotland and the bishop. He would willingly have kept the said envoy longer, if he had seen his way to paying his debt to Alexander. But being at 'intolerable' expense this year in his various and urgent affairs, and not having received the issues and provision due him, as in past years, and besides

HENRY III. having already satisfied Alexander the Steward of Scotland regarding ——— 500 marks, as the K. of Scotland had requested (whereby the 1261–62. Exchequer was drained) the K. asks him not to be troubled if at present he does not receive the balance. As the K. is unwilling to assign a farther term or terms, unless to keep them, he requests the K. of Scotland to accept one moiety of the money at Michaelmas next, and the other at Easter, without weariness or grief; asking this delay as he intends to keep these terms in every way. Windsor.

May 19. 2302. Pleas of divers counties [at Bedford before H. de Turri and others the K's justices errant] on the morrow of the Lord's Ascension.

Symon Baard and Isabella his wife are in amercement for many defaults, versus William Cumyn and Eufemia his wife. Symon and Isabella were summoned to answer to William and Eufemia in a

HENRY III. plea that they should deliver them 540 marks which they owe and unjustly detain, &c. And William and Eufemia by their attorney
1262. say that a certain Eufemia, grandmother of Eufemia, encoffed the latter in the manor of Athelgalthwyn in Scotland of the grandmother's heritage. And she delivered the same to the foresaid Isabella to be kept for the use of the said Eufemia for three years, answering to the latter yearly for 100 marks for said manor, as she was under age. And Isabella at the end of the said term acknowledged herself to be owing the said Eufemia 300 marks; so that the latter granted to Isabella the manor to be held for other three years, she paying 80 marks per annum. And Isabella in like manner acknowledged herself to be due Eufemia 240 marks, the total being 540 marks; and granted her writing to pay the sum at the pleasure of said Eufemia. But Symon and Isabella ever since have detained and continue to detain the money, whereby William and Eufemia say they are damaged to the extent of 1000 marks, and therefore bring the suit and propound Isabella's writing witnessing the debt. Symon and Isabella say that they were not bound to answer the writ, as the said manor of Athelgalthethwyn in respect of which the debt is demanded, is out of the kingdom of England, viz., in Scotland. And they are in seizin of the same, as the free hold of Isabella, by the feoffment of Eufemia, grandmother of Eufemia and mother of Isabella. And the tenement in respect of which the debt is demanded, is in Scotland out of the K. of England's power. And likewise the contract of debt and the obligatory writing proffered by the plaintiffs, was made out of England, as they admit in their narration. Nor are the witnesses thereto of that kingdom (except Simon Baard only), by whom the writing could be proved if needful. They ask judgment if they ought to answer here to the said debt or writing. And Isabella, asked if she executed the said writing? said, 'No, nor was it ever made by her.' And William and Eufemia by their attorney say, that Simon and Isabella have no lands or tenements out of the kingdom of England, by which they can be distrained or justified. And that the said Simon and Isabella are the K. of England's 'men' and in his power. And have nothing in said manor save by the demise (dimissio) of the plaintiffs as aforesaid; and therefore both parties are of this realm, and of the power of the K. of England. And Simon and Isabella have nothing within the realm of Scotland whereby they can be distrained or justified; and this the plaintiffs are ready to verify by the K. of Scotland's court or otherwise as the court decides. And in like manner that the said Isabella in her lawful widowhood granted them the writing which they have proffered regarding the said debt, by the witnesses therein named, or otherwise as the court shall decide; some of whom are of this kingdom and some of Scotland; [and ask] whether (si) they ought not to answer to this plea for a debt which is not [one]

HENRY III. of land or tenement out of the kingdom, although due by reason of — (occasional) such a tenement.

1262. A day is given them to hear their case (judicium) in a month from Holy Trinity at Chelmerford. And Simon appears by Robert Scherwind or Thomas of Ireland (de Hibernia). And Isabella appears by John Bayard or William le petit.

He took a horse with heather, and detains the value of the horse, 4s., and the value of the heather, 1d., as his escheat, because they rooted up the heather in his common. Dec. 15. 2374. An assize held at Grenestede on Monday next after the feast of St Lucia Virgin, in the K.'s 49th year, by letters of the Bishop of Chichester, before Nicholas de Turri justice appointed, and Goceline, parson of Grenstede. Sussex:—The assize inquires whether Hugh Lovel [and others, among them Gilbert le Escot, William de Hamelesdon] unjustly disseized Alicia Lovel of her freehold in Storketon, and of the manor, except the advowson of the church, and the service of Ernald Mochi. Hugh and the others are absent. But Henry de Hoxshete his bailiff comes, and says nothing contra. The jury say that the land was once Henry Lovel's, the father of Alicia, who enfeoffed her and her sister Cristiana therein, viz., each of them a moiety; to be held of him and his heirs by them, so that if either sister died without heirs of her body, the other and her heirs took the whole. And they remained in seizin all their father's life, sometimes leasing the land at pleasure. After Henry's death, Alicia did homage to his son and heir Richard Lovel, for

- HENRY III. herself and her sister, being the elder, and Cristiana being due her
 ——— the 'esnescia,' and the sisters then divided the holding, each knowing 1264. her purparty. Then they leased the whole to one master Richard de Pageham, after which Cristiana died without heir of her body.
 Whereon Alicia took her sister's part under her father's donation, and for long time held it, selling wood and giving at pleasure, leasing it with her own share to said Richard de Pageham. And in process of time the said Richard her brother died, on whose death the aforesaid Hugh Lovel the defendant obtained his brother's heritage, and purposing to defraud Alicia, made with the said farmer an agreement to have his term of the said land. Which, however, was never completed, for the farmer, understanding that Hugh only wished to have entry so as to disinherit Alicia, declined the transaction, and instantly delivered the land to her. Whereon she sent her men, who remained in seizin in her name for long time, until Hugh and all the defendants but one, came and broke three boards of the wall of the house, and entered and ejected Alicia's men. And Richard who was the farmer, is present, and clearly attests the foregoing facts.
 Wherefore the jury find that Alicia was disseized as she says.
 Judgment:—That she recover her seizin. And Hugh and his followers are in amercement. [Coram Rege, 44-49 Hen. III. No.

- HENRY III. Abbot of Gedeworth (Jedburgh). Her attorney says that Robert her ancestor presented Robert his clerk in K. J[ohn's] time, who was duly instituted, and died last as parson. From Robert the right of presentation came to Eustace his son and heir. He dying without heir of his body, it reverted to Nicholas brother of Robert, as his uncle and heir. From him to Johanna as his daughter and heir. The Abbot, by attorney, says he should not answer to this writ. That the church is not vacant; nay, is full. For he and his convent hold, and have held it in proprios usus, for twenty years past and more, as of their own patronage. And is ready to verify, if the court thinks he should do so. Johanna is likewise ready to verify. Defendants absent. But Andrew Wake as their bailiff says that they entered under the K.'s writ, and the Sheriff gave Robert seizin under same. Henry says that the K. gave said Robert, Bryan de Goniz his father's land, and not his. Both place themselves on the assize. The jury say that the said Bryan gave to Henry the said freeholds half a year and more before the battle of Lewes, enfeoffed him therein, and Henry was in peaceable possession for a year and more. That after the battle of Evesham, the K. by writ commanded the Sheriff of Somerset to give Robert all Brian's land, on account of the war. And he gave Robert seizin; but not of Henry's land. - [Circa
Oct. 13.] 2452. Pleas coram Rege in the 51st year, the 52d year beginning; [quinzaine of St Michael.] Northumberland:—William de Douglas appeals Gilbert de Umframville, lord of Redesdale, and John de Hirlawe, that they falsely gave the Lord Edward the K.'s son to understand at the siege of the castle of Alnwyk, that he was an enemy of the K., and asked a gift from lord Edward of the plaintiff's manor of Faudon, which he held from Gilbert by the service of half a knight's fee. Lord Edward granted Gilbert's request, provided his accusation was true. Afterwards by the K.'s precept, and that of the lord Edward, an inquisition was made at Boulton, before William de Huntercumbe keeper of the peace in Northumberland, and John de Hawelton justice assigned ad hoc; and the jury on oath found William was never against the K. or his son, and had done nothing for which he should lose his land. The inquisition having

HENRY III. been returned to the K.'s court, the K. and his son, after the K.'s ——— peace had been proclaimed in every county in England, commanded 1267. the Sheriff by their letters to re-seize William in his said manor, and in the goods carried off by the said Gilbert and John, and to maintain him therein. After William had been seized for eight days and more, Gilbert, by assent and counsel of John, on the vigil of St Margaret [July 19] sent about 100 of the K.'s enemies, some of them outlaws from the valley of Redesdale, to Faudon, where with premeditated insult, they on said day assaulted William, his wife, and their family then in his house; and in three places thereof they applied fire upon William himself, his wife, William his son, Henry de Mulefen, William de Wardrobe, Patric de Douglas, and Gille-rothe de Douglas; and vi et armis, feloniously, and against the K.'s peace, ejected William from his said manor, and led him prisoner to Gilbert's castle of Hirbotle, and detained him in prison for eleven days; and broke the doors and windows of his house, entered his chamber, and carried off therefrom in robbery 31½ marks, silver spoons, cups, mazers, clothes, arms, and jewels, such as gold rings and gold fermails, to the value of 100*l.* And wounded William's son William in a deadly manner in the neck with a sword, so that they all but cut off his head; and wounded and bound the foresaid Henry and others, his four servants, and led them away bound; robbing them of a sword, price 2*s.*, a supertunic, a belt, a purse with three silver shillings, and other small things to the value of a mark. And all this in felony and against the K.'s peace. He offers to deraign against Gilbert, as being a man who has passed age,¹ by the body of his freeman [] by name, as the court shall decide. Gilbert and John come and deny all the charges.
 And Gilbert asks judgment in the case; as William has appealed elsewhere in the county certain men of Redesdale, of whom he makes no mention in the present case, and thus varies his charge. Likewise he makes no mention of any day on which all these things were done 'and there are many days in a week'; nor specifies the hour of the day; nor any certain place.

As it appears by the coroner's roll of appeal made in the county and the return here, that he now varies his appeal in the aforesaid claims, the court finds that there is no appeal whereby they can be placed at law, and Gilbert and John may go quit thereof; and let William be kept in custody for a false appeal. But for keeping the K.'s peace, Gilbert and John being asked how they wish to defend themselves from the said felony, ask a decision on this,—as the said William has appealed others of the fact, and Gilbert of giving orders and sending them, and John of counsel; whether they ought to answer for the giving orders and sending, or also for ¹ i.e. for a duel; sixty years, according to Bracton.

- HENRY III. counsel, until the fact is ascertained. And inasmuch as William ——— has appealed in the county Henry de Mulesen and others concerning 1267. the fact, which is not yet ascertained, the judgment of court is that

HENRY III. tenements in Stokeworsy Radweye, in the county of Somerset, and — Harham in the county of Wilts, (whereof he had seizin and occupa-1268. tion in the beginning of the late war), to his damage of 50*l*. Robert Waleraund says he and Robert were of the K.'s party, and adhered to him and Edward his eldest son, throughout the war; and admits that Robert was seized of the lands. But after peace was proclaimed at Winchester, it was publicly declared that Robert should deliver the lands in the K.'s hand; and accordingly at Canterbury, he of his free will did so, and places himself on the record of the K. and Council. And Robert de Briwes says, that Robert Waleraund may say what he pleases about the delivery of the lands, but that he deforced him in his occupation thereof, as his writ alleges; and asks an inquiry by the country. Afterwards Robert Waleraund comes and says that the said plea is ineptly enrolled, because when he pleaded with Robert de Briwes, he stated against him, that he was not bound to answer to the writ regarding occupation, for after Robert delivered the lands in the K.'s hand as aforesaid, the K. enfeoffed the said Robert Waleraund therein by his charter, put him in seizin, and he did homage to the K. therefor. And says, as he then said, that without the K. he cannot answer Robert de Briwes therein. He says also that said enrolment should not hurt him nor benefit Robert de Briwes, for at the time they pleaded, the latter was Chief Justice de banco without a 'socius' and without control, and asks judgment accordingly. Robert de Briwes puts himself on the record and asks judgment.

 them his whole rent in the vill of 'Derdon', to be held by them from said feast of St Barnabas till they are fully repaid. Which done, the said rent shall revert to William or his heirs or assigns. A tally of the Exchequer of receipt was made in William's name and delivered pledges, viz., Simon of Fauldon, and William Galbrath of Tyndeley, HENRY III. acres of land. Gilbert merely says that at one time he took the ——— tenement, by the precept of the Lord Edward, as William was accused 1269. of having been against the K. and said lord Edward in the late dis-June 25. turbance in the kingdom. That afterwards he restored seizin to William by the lord Edward's precept, viz., about the feast of St Michael in the K.'s 51st year, and has never since interfered with said tenement, and claims nothing but the service due him from said manor. William and Custancia say that after Gilbert had seizin of the tenement by the lord Edward's precept, he [William] went to the K.'s court, and showed both to the K. and lord Edward that he never joined the disturbance against them; and placed himself on a jury of the county, by whom the matter was tried. So that the K. himself by his writ enjoined the Sheriff of the county to give seizin to William; which the Sheriff did accordingly as they say, about the 'Gule of autumn' in the aforesaid year. And they were in peaceful seizin for eight days until Gilbert unjustly disseized them and burned the houses on the tenement.

 And place themselves on the assize. The jurors say on oath, that at one time William was charged with having been against the K. and lord Edward in the late troubles. And was afterwards cleared thereof by an inquisition held by the K.'s precept. And the Sheriff of the county was directed by the K.'s writ to give William and Custancia seizin, which he did accordingly. And after they were seized, Gilbert sent his men and ejected them from their holding, and while it was in his possession their houses were burned. And the jury find that he disseized them unjustly as the writ says. The judgment of the court is that William and Custancia shall recover seizin by view of the jurors; and Gilbert is in amercement.
 Damages, besides the above combustion, 90 marks; whereof 20 marks.
 Damages of the above combustion, 20*l.*; to the judgment for damages of combustion. (Some explanatory words seem wanting.)

[m. 3.] William Douglas was summoned to answer to Gylemin of Wollouere in a plea to show cause why he deforced him of 30*s.* of rent in Faundon which William Batayle demised to him for a term not yet expired. During which term the said William Batayl sold the rent to William de Douglas, by reason whereof the latter ejected Gylemin therefrom. And further that whereas the said William Batayle had demised the said rent to the plaintiff at the feast of the Purification of the Blessed Mary in the K.'s 48th year, for the term of six years, the said William Batayle, at the feast of the Invention of the Holy Rood next thereafter, sold the same to the said William de Douglas, whereon the latter ejected the plaintiff within the aforesaid term, from said rent, to his damage, as he says, to the extent of 20*l.*
 William comes and defends. Afterwards he gives a mark for leave ——— given to him by William.

1269. [m. 4.] Nicholas Corbet and Margery his wife by their attorney, June 25. claim Alan of Spyredon as their neif (nativus) and fugitive, with his chattels, &c. Alan comes, and they agree. And Nicholas gives a mark for licence; Alan acknowledging himself to be their villein.
 So they recover seizin.

[m. 4, d.] The Prior of Tynemouth sues [130 persons, among whom are] Nicholas 'le Eseot,' Henry 'le Eseot,'...John Prudfote, Henry of Cugate,...Henry of Gawey,...John 'le Eseot,...Adam Thurbotheued,...Alan Orre,...William of Rokeburgh, Adam of Dunbar,...

 (Shields?), burning the same, beating and maltreating his monks there, and carrying off his vessel laden with sea coal (earbone maris eareatam); to his damage to the extent of 300*l.* The plaintiff not present; therefore in amereement.

[m. 5, d.] Bamburgh:—Walter Comyn who bore a writ of mortaneestry against William de Waloynes concerning the manor of Newenham, is not present. Therefore he and his pledges in amereement, viz., John de Woderington and Alexander the reeve there.

[m. 9.] Richard de Gosebee and Margery his wife appear versus Simon Baard and Isabella his wife, in a plea that they should hold the agreement made between them regarding the manor of Eydene.
 They (ipsi) come not, and otherwise have made default. The Sheriff is ordered to distrain them by their lands. He has not done so.
 Therefore is again enjoined, &c., and to have their bodies at Leicester at the said term [three weeks from Michaelmas].

[m. 10.] Nicholas de Graham and Maria his wife were summoned to answer to David le Mareshal in a plea that they should permit him to have common pasture in Belleford pertaining to his freehold in Middeltone, of which Malise earl of Stratherne (Stravernie) unjustly disseized Richard le Mareshal his father, whose heir David is. Richard was in seizin of common in 300 acres of pasture in Beleford, with all his work eattle, for a year, as pertinent of his said freehold in this K.'s time, taking therefrom profits to the value, &c. And the right descended from him to the plaintiff David. Nicholas and Maria deny the seizin, and place themselves on the eountry. And David likewise. A jury, elected by consent of parties, say on oath that Richard was in seizin of common in 200 acres of pasture. The judgment of the court is that David recover seizin of common of 200 acres. And Nicholas and Maria in amereement. And David also for a false claim of 100 acres.

HENRY III. [m. 10, d.] Twelve jurors ultra Coket, and twelve jurors citra
 ——— Coket, have presented that there is a great destruction in the county 1269. waters of salmon at the time when these come up to spawn (ad June 25. friandum), and also when the young salmon (salmunculi) go down to the sea, to the great detriment of this and all the neighbouring counties; and they sought on behalf of the county that a statute should be made to prevent the same in future. Therefore by consent of the county, both knights and other freemen, it was ordained and provided, that as heretofore, from the feast of St Michael until the feast of St Andrew, no net should be dragged or placed at weirs or pools (stagna), or at mills or mill pools (exclusas), and that no one fish in the Tyne, Walspyk (Wansbeck), or Coket, or other waters in the county with nets, 'stirkeldis,' or other engine during the said term, or without engine. It is also enacted and provided that from the feast of the Apostles Philip and James [1st May], till the Nativity of St John Baptist [24th June], no net or 'wyle' shall be placed at pools or mills or mill pools in the said waters, nor shall any net be placed at weirs, unless previously [it is seen] by the keepers appointed or to be appointed thereto, that the meshes (?) (caliga) are wide enough to permit the young fish to have safe transit through the middle. It is also enacted and provided that if any fisher, or miller, or other 'man' of any one, be convicted, his lord shall give the K. a mark for each offence, unless he can show it was done ignorantly. Such fisher or miller, or other delinquent however, so often as convicted, shall be sent to the K.'s prison, and not repledged save by consent of the 'custodes' provided or to be provided 'ad hoc.' And in the water of Tyne the Constable of Newcastle shall be 'viewer' that this provision is kept from Tynemouth ascending as far as Edwynestrem, as it was wont to be in past times. And from Edwynestrem ascending as far as Lambeley, on the south side, and as far as Botylaund on the north side, these shall be conservators (custodes et visores), viz., Robert de Throkkelawe, Thomas de Dyveleston, Thomas de Blencheshope, and Robert de Bottelaund.
 In the course of the Wanspyk, these shall be conservators, viz., William de Cambhou, Gilbert de Oggel, Roger de Woderyngtone, and Ralf de Esyndene. In the course of the Coket, viz., from Cokemuthe as far as Cahou these shall be conservators, viz., William de Toggessdene, Adam de Plessetis, Adam Galun, and John de Kerstyrne. In the course of the Blyth, these shall be conservators, viz., Hugh le Vigurus, and Roger Skaufyn. In the course of the Alne, viz., from Alnemuthe as far as Alnewyk, these shall be conservators, viz., Nicholas de Haekyle and John de Alnemuthe. In the course of the Tylle these shall be conservators, viz., John de Benlegh and Robert de Forde. In the course of the Glene as far as Glenemuthe, and thence to the Liberty of Norham, these shall be conservators, viz.,

HENRY III. Michael de Kyllum and Alan de Holthale. And all these shall take oath before the Sheriff for faithful and diligent observance of their office; and if any one die, become incapable, or fail in his duties, and be convicted thereof, another shall be elected in his place by his companions, who shall make oath as above. The nets and other engines found in said waters, contrary to the said enactment, shall be burned by the conservators. The county consents to this provision enduring till the next advent of the justices. So if the county then consents, it may be affirmed or amended by the justices, as seems fitting.

HENRY III. for a year and a half, and Samuel was custos thereof for same period. It chanced that anger and discord arose between Sir Hector and Samuel; and on account thereof Sir Hector recognised [Circa 1260.] and took seizin of the land, not judicially but voluntarily, and so cultivated the same, and at length deceased. See No. 2193. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

1260-61. 2675. Memorandum :—That William de Dufglas, John de Lambirtun and Richard de Bykyrtun, knights, by the precept and [letters] patent of Alexander the illustrious K. of Scotland, have extended and delivered to Eymer de Makswelle, 20 . . . of land in the fee of Pencatland; viz., all the land on the south part of the water of Thyne, by these bounds from Kethe ascending as far as Kyngisburne, and from Kyngisburne to the bounds of, as far as the right bounds of Ormistun; and by the right bounds of Ormistun as far as the water of, and so by the bounds of Walter Avenel's land as far the old channel (decursus) of the water of Th[yne], and descending by said channel as far as the water of Kethe. In testimony whereof [they append their seals]. Dated at Pencatland, on Thursday next before the feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed [Mary 1]260.

Seals all gone. Document much mutilated.

[Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

[1262 ? Before Michaelmas.] 2676. B. dean of Lanarek to J[ohn] bishop of Glasgow, and master A. de Derteforde, official. He has made diligent inquiry in the chapter of Lanarek by trustworthy persons, regarding the church of Colbaynston (Covington) as commanded, as to the presentation of Adam de Quarenteley. And has learned that the church was void after the death of Sir Walter Mockard from the morrow of Holy Trinity, 1262. And regarding the right of patronage, he learned that John lord of Colbaynston was the true patron; that the Lady Maria, mother of the K. of Scots, made the last presentation, as said John was then in her custody. Wherefore John had letters patent from said Lady Mary, which the writer has seen, that the same should not prejudice him or his heirs. That the said John's fee was seized in the K.'s hand before the late rector Sir W. Mockard's death, for a certain debt due to the K. That the church was not 'pensionary,' but it does not appear to him to be 'letigiosa,' unless from divers letters directed to him by the Bishop and Official. That Adam the presentee is legitimate; that his morals, life, and honesty declare him to be amiable and praiseworthy. That the church is taxed at 100s., and given to farm for 12 marks. Appends his seal, and those of trustworthy men. (Seals all gone.) There is a letter from the Dean to the Bishop and Official in similar terms, on same membrane, regarding a presentation by the K. of Sir Richard, his chaplain, to this church.

HENRY III. This second presentee's legitimacy is unknown to the writer. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No 11.]

1262-63. 2677. In the year of Grace 1262, on Monday next before the March 5. feast of the Blessed Gregory, this inquisition was made by Sir Alexander Uviet, sheriff of Lanark, by the K.'s precept, and these jurors; viz., Sir Robert de Berclai, Adam de Folcardistun, Malcolm de Bigger, Alan de Bengou', Thomas son of John de Machan, Thomas Wer de Lesmahagu, Richard de Achinlec, Gilmor son of William son of Konel, Adam the reeve of Machan, Adam Curtais, Philip de Duueglas, William Lyne, Symon de Hotun; who say, that on the first article, they hesitate and doubt, viz., whether Henry de Wiston was a minor on the day when he granted to Hugh de Moravia knight the lands of Sornefaloch, Heyfhunt, and Drumgran. But being again asked whether said Henry was then of lawful age or not, say on oath, to the best of their belief, that he was a minor, viz., within the age of twenty-one years. But on the other two articles following, they are 'certain and secure,' that he was not vested or seized of said lands, when he gave them by charter to Hugh son of Augustin, as the latter asserts. For said Henry was coerced by violence and fear, and in prison, on the day when he granted the lands to said Hugh. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

[June or July 1264.] 2678. To her dearest lord and father the K., M[argaret] his most devoted daughter, Queen of Scots. Earnestly entreats him to procure the deliverance of Sir Richard Cumin, brother of the noble man Sir J[ohn] Cumin, who had been made prisoner in his service. (No date.) [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

 April 13. and . . . Commands them to go to the land of the Abbot and convent of Melros, next the water of 'Galv,' . . . respecting a diversion of the course of the water; and return the inquisition with the writ, under seal, to the K. Berwick, 13th April, 19th of his reign. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11. Partly obliterated.]

1268-69. 2680. Alexander K. of Scots, to Thomas son of Ranulph, his sheriff Jan. 6. and his bailiffs of Rokesburche. Commands them to inquire what persons, and at whose mission or procurement, plundered the land of Horvedene in the hands of [Ja]mes Giffard and his farmer; and whether the plundered goods have been brought to any one in their bailliary; and to return the inquisition under seal, and the writ, to the K.'s chapel. Kelso [Kelchou], 6th January, 20th of his reign. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

1269. 2681. Nottingham:—An assize, before G. de Preston, and other Sept. 30. justices itinerant, at Leycester, on the morrow of St Michael, in the K.'s 53d year; to inquire whether Margaret widow of Hubert de

HENRY III. Burgo, aunt of Alexander K. of Scotland, was seized in demesne and ——— of fee of the manor of Weteley, except 4 messuages, 1 bovate, 40 1269. acres of land, and the advowson of the church of the manor, at her death; which John de Burgo senior, holds. Who appears and says there should be no assize; for Alicia countess of Eu (Ausi), enfeoffed his father Hubert, whose heir he is, and said Margaret, in the manor, to be held by them and their joint heirs; so that if they died without such heirs, the manor should revert to Hubert's right heirs; and proffers the Countess's charter, and the K.'s confirmation [both recited at length] to that effect; and that Margaret was merely seized for her life, and on her death her executors had delivered to him all the charters.

The K. of Scotland, by his attorney, says the proffered charter is invalid; for that fifteen years before its date, the Countess of Eye had enfeoffed Hubert and Margaret, and the deceased Magota their daughter, by another charter; to be held by Hubert and Margaret and Magota, and their heirs, whereby Margaret remained in seizin of the manor all her life, and died seized in demesne as of fee. And that Magota died in the lifetime of her parents, whereby her right was annulled, and remained with Hubert and Margaret. Hubert died before Margaret, whereby his and his heir's right was annulled, and thus the whole right remained with his surviving widow.

[After further pleadings on both sides, the case was transferred to Westminster, on the octaves of St Martin, before M. de Litelbyri, and other justices de banco, Richard de Middleton, the K.'s chancellor and others.]

John de Burgo pleads that though the K. of Scotland is the nearest heir of Margaret his aunt, in the line of blood, yet he is not so in this manor, held by her under the conditions aforesaid.

The K. of Scotland, by his attorney, reiterates his former pleadings, and asks an inquisition.

John de Burgo pleads that the K. of Scotland does not dispute the Countess of Eu's charter, nor the other facts averred by him, and therefore he [John] should not be compelled by the 'simple dictum' of the K. of Scotland, to place himself on an inquisition. But it seems to him that unless the right (ius) is to be once and for ever (omnino) determined, no inquisition should be taken. The result is not stated. [Coram Rege (Tower Series), 53 Hen. III. No. 39, m. 37.]

 Gilbertus de Behulle, milites de regno Anglie; et Ranulfus de Bonekhulle, Robertus filius Comit̄is, Robertus de Bernham, Robertus de Donelm', Willelmus de Mordingtona, et Simon de Grubbesheued, milites de regno Scoccie; salutem in Domino. Noveritis quod cum vicecomes Norhumbrie tales litteras a Domino Rege Anglie recepisset ad Marchiam Anglie et Scoccie die Sancti Edmundi

 'Norhumbrie salutem. Audivimus nunciis Domini Regis Scoccie
 'referentibus quod leges et consuetudines in Marchia inter Angliam
 'et Scocciam temporibus predecessorum nostrorum regum Anglie et 'predecessorum ipsius Regis Scoccie, hucusque usitate, minus bone

 rigendas secundum antiquam et approbatam consuetudinem eiusdem Marchie que corrigenda erant more debito correximus. Tandem propositum fuit ex parte Domini Regis Scoccie quod iniuriatum est Nicholao de Sules super hoc quod ipse implacitatur coram Domino Rege Anglie pro transgressionibus per homines suos de Scoccia et in Scoccia morantibus, in regno Anglie illatis ut dicitur et perpetratis.
 Nos diligenti factâ inquisitione more solito et debito per seniores et discretiores de Marchia tam de regno Anglie quam Scoccie secundum antiquam et debitam consuetudinem, dicimus quod iniuratum est predicto Nicholao de Sules de hoc, quod ipse implacitatur alibi quam ad Marchiam pro aliqua transgressione per homines suos de Scoccia facta in regno Anglie, licet terram habet in Anglia. Quia nullus de regno Anglie vel de regno Scoccie licet terras habet hinc vel inde, per leges dictę Marchie debet alibi implacitari quam ad Marchiam pro
