D I S S E R T A T I O N

O N T H E

S C O T T I S H M U S I C.

——Nugaeque Canoraec.

Nostras nec erubuit Silvas habitate Thalia.

V I R G.

T H E genius of the Scots has, in every age, shone conspicuous in Poetry and Music. Of the first, the Poems of Offian, composed in an age of rude antiquity, are sufficient proof. The peevish doubt entertained by some of their authenticity, appears to be the utmost refinement of scepticism. As genuine remains of Celtic Poetry, the Poems of Offian will continue to be admired as long as there shall remain a taste for the sublime and beautiful.
The Scottifh Músic does no less honour to the genius of the country. The old Scottifh songs have always been admired for the wild pathetic sweetness which distinguishes them from the music of every other country. I mean, in this Essay, to try to fix the æra of our most ancient melodies, and to trace the history of our music down to modern times. In a path so untrodden, where scarce a track is to be seen to lead the way, the surest guide I have to follow is the music itself, and a few authorities which our old historians afford us. After all, the utmost I aim at is probability; and, perhaps, by some hints, I may lead others to a more direct road.

From their artless simplicity, it is evident, that the Scottifh melodies are derived from very remote antiquity. The vulgar conjecture, that David Rizio was either the composer or reformer of the Scottifh songs, has of late been so fully exposed, that I need say very little to confute it. That the science of music was well understood, and that we had great masters, both theorists and performers, above a century before Rizio came to Scotland, I shall immediately show. He is by no contemporary writer said to have been a composer. He is not even extolled as a great performer; nor does tradition tradition point him out as the author of any one particular song; and, although we should allow him to have had ability, the short time he was in Scotland, scarce three years, was too busy with him to admit of such amusement.—Let us endeavour to trace back our music to its origin.
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

The origin of music, in every country, is from the woods and lawns *.

The simplicity and wildness of several of our old Scottish melodies, denote them to be the production of a pastoral age and country, and prior to the

* The rise of music is so beautifully described by Lucretius, that the classical reader will excuse the following quotation.

At liquidas avium voces imitarier ore
Ante fuit multo, quam laevia carmina cantu,
Concelebrare homines possent, aureisque juvare:
Et zephyri cava per calamorum fibila primum
Agrestis docuere cavas inflare cictutas,
Inde minutatim dulceis didicere querelas,
Tibia quas fundit digitis pulsatia canentum,
Avia per nemora, ac silvas fultusque reperta,
Per loca pallorum deferta, atque otia dia.

LUCRET. lib. 5.
the use of any musical instrument beyond that of a very limited scale of a few natural notes, and prior to the knowledge of any rules of artificial music. This conjecture, if solid, must carry them up to a high period of antiquity.

The most ancient of the Scottish songs, still preserved, are extremely simple, and void of all art. They consist of one measure only, and have no second part, as the later or more modern airs have. They must, therefore, have been composed for a very simple instrument, such as the shepherd's reed or pipe, of few notes, and of the plain diatonic scale, without using the semitones, or sharps and flats. The distinguishing strain of our old melodies is plaintive and melancholy; and what makes them soothing and affecting, to a great degree, is the constant use of the concordant tones, the third and fifth of the scale, often ending upon the fifth, and some of them on the sixth of the scale. By this artless standard some of our old Scottish melodies may be traced; such as Gil Morice—There cam a ghost to Marg'et's door—O laddie, I man loo' thee—Hap me wi' thy petticoat—I mean the old sets of these airs, as the last air, which I take to be one of our oldest songs, is so modernized as scarce to have a trace of its ancient simplicity. The simple original original air is still sung by nurses in the country, as a lullaby to still their babes to sleep. It may be said, that the words of some of these songs denote them to be of no very ancient date: But it is well known, that many of our old songs have changed their original names, by being adapted to more modern words. Some old tunes have a second part; but it is only a repetition of the first part on the higher octave; and these additions are probably of more modern date than the tunes themselves.

That the science of Music, and the rules of composition, were known amongst us before the 15th century, is certain. King James the First of Scotland is celebrated by all the Scottish historians, not only as an excellent performer, but as a great theorist in Music, and a composer of airs to his own verses. ‘Hic etenim in musica (says Fordun) in artis perfectione, in tympano et choro, in psalterio et organo, ad summæ perfectionis magistrium, natura creatrix, ultra humanam aestimationem, ipsum vivaciter decoravit.’ Scotichron. vol. 2. lib. 16. cap. 28.—Fordun has a whole chapter, the 29th of his history, on King James’s learning and knowledge in the ancient Greek, as well as in the more modern scales of music, which, for its curiosity, fity, is worthy to be read by the modern theorists in music.
D I S S E R T A T I O N O N

The next authority is John Major, who celebrates King James I. as a poet, a composer, and admirable performer of music. Major affirms, that, in his time, the verses and songs of that Prince were esteemed amongst the first of the Scottish melodies. I shall give the whole passage:

'In vernacula lingua artificiosissimus compositor; cujus codices plurimi, et cantilenae, memoriter adduc apud Scotos inter primos habentur.—Artificium cantilenam (composuit) Tusfen, &c. et jucundum artificiosumque illum cantum, at Beltayn, quem alii de Dalketh et Gargeil mutare studue-runt, quia in arce, aut camera, clausus fervabatur, in qua mulier cum matre habitabat.'

It is a pity that neither the words nor the music of these celebrated ballads have come down to us. According to the historian, the last must have been full of humour, and extremely popular; his words may imply, that several parodies or imitations of the subject had been made, which time has likewise deprived us of.
Amongst the number of our old Scottish melodies, it is, I think, scarce to be doubted, that many of King James's compositions, which were esteemed amongst the first of the age, are still remaining, and make a part of our finest old melodies; but as no tradition down to our time has ascertained them, they, in all probability, pass undistinguished under other names, and are adapted to modern words. There can be little doubt, however, that most of James's compositions have shared the same fate with many other old airs. Tassoni, the Italian poet, as afterwards mentioned, says expressly, that 'King James composed many sacred pieces of vocal music,' which are now lost. All our old heroic ballads, such as Hardiknute, and others, were undoubtedly sung to chants composed for them, which are now loft. Among those still preserved, are the episodes of Offian, which are at this day sung in the Highlands. Gill Morrice—The Flowers of the Forest—Hero and Leander, &c. are still sung to their original pathetic strains. These, however, are but a few of many old ballads whose airs are now unknown. In the MS. collection of Scottish Poems, made by Banatyne before the 1568, the donation of the Earl of Hyndford to the Advocates Library, at Edinburgh, the favourite poem, The Cherry and the Slave, and like... wife a poem of Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington, father to the famous Secretary Maitland, are entitled, 'To be sung to the tune of the Banks of Helicon.' This must have been a well-known tune 200 years ago, as it was sung to such popular words; but it is now lost. It cannot exist under other words, as the metrical stanza of the Cherry and the Slae is so particular, that I know no air at this day that could be adapted to it. We find also, in old books, many names of songs, yet neither of the verses or tunes do we know anything at this day. Gavin Douglas, in his prologue to the 12th Aeneid, recites the beginning words of three well-known songs in his time, 1480, thus:

- 'The schip fails over the salt fame,
- Will bring thir merchandis and my leman hame.'
- 'I will be blyth and licht,
- My hert is lent upon sa gudly wicht.'
- 'I come hidder to wow.'

And, in the prologue to 13th Aeneid,

- 'The jolly day now dawis.'

In the same way a great many of King James I.'s poetical pieces are now lost, or, perhaps, as his poem of Chrift's Kirk of the Green, may erroneously be ascribed to others.

It may be suspected, from the above high-strain-ed authorities, that his countrymen have rather allowed themselves to be carried too far in displaying the qualifications of their King. I shall, however, produce the testimony of a foreigner, a celebrated author, who does James still more honour than the writers of his own country; and, singular as the proposition may appear, I shall endeavour to prove, that the Scottifh melodies, so far from being either invented or improved by an Italian master, were made the models of imitation in the finest vocal compositions of one of the greatest masters of composition in Italy.

The celebrated Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosia, formerly Venufium, famous as the place of birth of Horace, flourished about the middle or towards the end of the 16th century, and died in 1614. Blancanus, in his Chronologia-Mathematicorum, thus distinguishes him: 'The most noble Carolus Gesualdus, Prince of Venusium, was the prince of musicians of our age; he having recalled the Rhythe into music, introduced such a strife of modulation, modulation, that other musicians yielded the preference to him; and all singers and players on stringed instruments, laying aside that of others, everywhere eagerly embraced his music.*—He is also celebrated by Merfennus, Kircher, and almost all the writers of that age, as one of the most learned and greatest composers of vocal music in his time.

To apply this account of the Prince of Venosa to the present subject.—Alessandro Tasani, in his Pensieri Diversi, lib. 10. thus expresses himself: We may reckon among us moderns James King of Scotland, who not only composed many sacred pieces of vocal music, but also, of himself, invented a new kind of music, plaintive and melancholy, different from all other; in which he has been imitated by Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa, who in our age has improved music with new and admirable inventions‡.

How

‡ * Noi ancora possiamo connumerar, tra nostri, Jacopo Re di Scozia, che non pur efe sacre compose in canto, ma trova da se stesso, una nuova musica, lamentevole e mefita, differente da tutte l’altre. Nel che poi e stato imitato da Carlo.
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

How perfectly characteristic, this, of the pathetic strains of the old Scottish songs! What an illustrious testimony to their excellency!

Some of the Dilettanti, in the Italian music of the present times, may perhaps sneer at being told, that the Italians, the refiners of music, owe the improvement of their music to the early introduction of Scottish melody into it: Yet nothing is more certain, not only from the candid acknowledgment of Tasfoni, but from the testimony of the Italian.

Carlo Gesualdo, Principe di Venosa, che in questa, nostra età, ha illustrata anch'egli la musica con nuove mirabili inventioni. —Let me here do justice to the refiner of this record, who, next to Tasfoni, deserves the thanks of every Scotfman; I mean the late Patrick Lord Elibank: For although Tasfoni is well known as a poet, particularly by his celebrated la fechia rapita, the first of the modern mock heroic poems, yet his book De Diversi Pensieri, though printed near two centuries ago, and containing a great deal of learned and curious observations, is but little known on this side of the Alps: And the above curious passage, which had so long escaped the notice of every Scotfman, might quietly have slept in the dark repose of great libraries, had not the penetrating research of this learned Nobleman, about twenty years ago, produced it to light. From him I had a copy of that passage, since published by Sir John Hawkins.
Italian music itself before the Prince of Venosa's time, as I shall attempt to illustrate.

It is at this day no longer a question, that the art of composition in parts, or what is called harmony, is the invention of the moderns; but by whom invented, or at what particular aera, is not so clear. As the cultivation of modern music was chiefly among the ecclesiastics, on account of the church services daily in use to be sung by them, the rules of harmony undoubtedly took their rise, and were improved among them. Guido d'Arezzo, a Benedictine monk, about the beginning of the eleventh century, is, by many authors, said to have reformed the scale, by introducing the lines and the notation on them by points, instead of the letters of the alphabet, formerly in use; from which the name of counterpoint, for the art of composition in parts, is derived. From that period, it was by degrees improved, until it was brought to perfection in the golden age of the restoration of other polite arts and sciences in Italy, the Pontificate of Leo X. At this time flourished the venerable Palestrina, 'fated the father of harmony; and in the same century, though later, the Prince of Venosa, mentioned above. As the productions of a harmonist and thorough master of the art of counterpoint, counterpoint, the compositions of Palestrina, even at this day, strike us with admiration by their artful fugues, and the full and sublime harmony of their parts. Nothing in the church stile, except the grandeur and loftiness of the choruses of the late great Handel, can exceed them: Yet, in one great point, the music of Palestrina is deficient. We may be entertained with the artful contrivance and learning of a well wrought fugue, or elevated by the harmony of a full choir of voices, yet still melody or air is wanting in the music of the venerable Palestrina. To any person versant in the compositions of the great masters of harmony in Palestrina’s time, there will appear the same stile, artful contrivance, and learning, running through every species of their compositions; their massa’s, motetti, madrigals, and canons. The harmony is full, but they are deficient in melody.*

I

* Although Palestrina is with propriety styled the Father of Harmony in Italy, as, by the solemn grandeur of his harmony, and fine contrivances, he certainly carried the art of counterpoint far beyond any thing known before the age of Leo X. yet it is but justice to say, that harmonic composition flourished in several parts of Europe besides Italy, and that there existed several eminent masters, even before the time of Palestrina. Lewis Guicciardin, (nephew of Francis,
I do not remember to have seen any cantata, or song for a single voice, of the age of Palestrina. The Francis, the historian) who was contemporary with Palestrina, and died before him in 1589, as cited by Abbé de Bou, in his Critical Reflections, gives a list of several eminent Flemish composers; and adds, that, in his time, it was the practice in the Netherlands, and had been a custom there of long standing, to furnish Europe with musicians. The old church services, that had long been in use both in England and Scotland, several of which still exist, are solid proofs of the profound knowledge of our old composers in counterpoint, before the time of Palestrina. The church services of Marbeck, and of Tallis, who was organist to Henry VIII. are original and learned, and abound in fine harmony. Geminiani, that great musical genius, on hearing Tallis's anthem, 'I call and cry,' is said to have exclaimed, in rapture, 'The man who made this must have been inspired!' No less eminent was Birde, the scholar of Tallis, and several others mentioned by Morley, in his Introduction to Practical Music, in the number of which Morley himself may be ranked. From that time a continued succession of very eminent composers in the church style, through the reigns of Queen Elizabeth, King James, and Charles I. have flourished.—To digress a little on the subject of the English music. The science of music, from the earliest ages, appears to have been patronised by the Kings of England; hence the study of music became a branch of education, through every rank, from the Prince downwards, inasmuch that the gentleman who had not been taught music was judged
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC. 209

The Italian music for private entertainment, at that time, seems to have been the madrigal, usually composed judged to be deficient in his education. Morley, whose excellent book was printed in 1597, mentioning, in his introductory dialogue, in what universal use and reputation skill in music was then held, makes Ph tempered thus speak: 'Being at a banquet, supper being ended, and music-books, according to custom, brought to table, the mistress of the house presented me with a part, earnestly intreating me to sing; but when, after many excuses, I protested unwillingly that I could not, every one began to wonder, yea some whispered to others, demanding how I was brought up.'—In Peckham's Complete Gentleman, a book held in great esteem in the reign of James I. the author requires of his gentleman 'to be able to sing his part sure, and at sight, and withal to play the same on the viol or lute.'—In the following reign of King Charles I. both the knowledge and practice of music continued to be universal.—In Walton's Complete Angler, a book which contains many curious facts and critical observations relating to the times, the learned and ingenious annotator, Sir John Hawkins, mentions the following:—'In an old book of enigmas, the foliation of one of them is a barber, who is represented by a wooden cut as shaving a person, while another, who is waiting for his turn, is playing on a lute, and on the wall hangs another lute or citrern.' This fact, says the annotator, explains a passage in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman, which none of his editors seem to have understood. Morose, in Act 3. Scene 5. cries out, 'That curfed barber! I have married...
Dissertation on

composed for some favourite stanza or love verses of Petrarcha, Ariosto, or Tasso, commonly in the fugue

' married his cittern, that's common to all men.' His editors Upton and Whaley, not understanding the manners of the time when Ben Johnson wrote, read the above, ' his cittern or reservoir.'—The music cultivated for private entertainment, at that time, was the Madrigal and Glee, in three or more parts, many of which still continue to be sung in several societies of vocal music. Their harmony is good, though generally languid and deficient in air.—The time was now at hand, when the triumph of harmony was to cease in England. The purity of the times would not admit of so superfluous an appendage to devotion, as music: When the Book of Common Prayer, of Thanksgivings, and Praises to God, was condemned by the meeting of Westminster Divines, as 'a great hindrance to the preaching of the word'; the choral church service, of course, was expelled. The Psalms of David made a narrow escape: To strip them, however, of any pretence to music, it was enjoined the minister or clerk, 'to read the psalm, line by line, before the singing thereof.' In conformity with these ordinances, the Parliament, 4th January 1644-5, repealed the statutes of Edward VI. and Queen Elisabeth, for uniformity in the Common Prayer, and ordained the same to be abolished and disused in every church and chapel throughout England and Wales. To follow out these ordinances, the organs were removed from the churches; and to put an end to the study

* Neal's Hist. of the Puritans.—Nov. 1644.
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC. 211

Fugue style, and of three or four parts. The madrigal, when sung by proper voices, is soothing and as well as practice of church music and harmony, the choral service-books were zealously collected together and destroyed. The painted glass windows, as favouring of idolatry, were broken down. It was well the churches themselves escaped demolition. The cathedral of St Paul's and other churches were converted into barracks and horse-quarters, and the porticoes were leafed out for shops. Where had the muse of Milton now taken flight, who thus exclaims?

O! let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloysters pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antique pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly light,
Casting a dim religious light;
There let the pealing organ blow
To the full-voic'd choir below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness through mine ear
Dissolve me into extasies,
And bring all heaven before mine eyes.

Il Penseroso.

Happily the reign of fanaticism was short. The year 1660 restored the liturgy, and with it re-established the choral church service, with the organs and choristers. The Italian opera had been established from the beginning of the century in Italy, and had now found its way into France.

Melody,
and pleasant; but, wanting air, soon becomes luguid and dull: A certain proof, this, that the music
Melody, in the songs for a single voice, with the recitative and chorus, attended with instrumental accompaniments, were novelties which began to be adopted by the English composers. On the Restoration, by the opening of the theatres, with music as their attendant, the national taste became much improved. Into the solemn, rigid, harmonic aile, a mixture of air and melody was introduced. The canon, the madrigal, and glee, gave way to airs for a single voice, duets, and catches, more suited to the convivial taste of the English. In the number of the old organists and chapel-masters, several fine composers appeared. Musical interludes were introduced into the old plays of Shakespeare, and Beaumont and Fletcher. Matthew Locke, a chorister originally, and the composer of some fine anthems, set to music recitatives and songs for the incantation scenes of the witches in Macbeth, which for the expression of the words, particularly in the first recitative, 'Speak, gifter! speak!' and the solemnity and sweetness of the songs, and fullness of the chorus, may at this day be esteemed fine compositions.—Michael Wtfe, besides his anthems, which are excellent, composed some good duets and catches: His two-part song, Old Chiron, is well known.—Purcell next appeared; one of the greatest musical geniuses that England or any nation, either before or since his time, can boast of. Purcell was fond of the Italian music; and in that which he composed for the theatre, he certainly formed his taste on it. In his songs there is a mixture of recitative; but the recitative of Purcell (as Lock's before him)
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

sic of Italy, at the above time, was altogether artificial and harmonic; and that melody, the soul of music, him) exceeds in melody that of the Italian, which is often dry, and unvaried. In his cantata, 'From rose bower,' the first recitative cannot be exceeded, either for melody or expression. In judging, however, between the Italian stage-music, and that of the English at this time, we must consider, that the Italian recitative, in their opera's, was meant to express a sort of musical discourse, with proper regard to emphasis and cadence, without running into song, which in its part was kept distinct from any mixture of recitative. The English stage-music, or that of the interludes introduced into plays, was confined under no such strict rules; and, therefore, where the subject or words required expression, a mixture of recitative and air was agreeable and pleasing to an English ear. This seems to be the taste, very properly adopted by the English composers for the stage, at this time. The genius of Purcell was universal. For sublimity and grandeur in the church style, his Te Deum and Jubilate will keep their rank while any taste for church music shall remain: For his stage-music, consisting of single-voice songs or cantatas, and songs of two and three parts, they are well known. His most applauded, are those made for Dryden's King Arthur, the Tempest, Indian Queen, and Oedipus. That fine collection, the Orpheus-Britannicus, which contains most of his stage-songs, is in the hands of every lover of music. His love-songs are pathetic and tender, and finely varied; and his martial songs are most animating and spirited. His two-part song in the tragedy of Bonduca, 'To music, was not then regarded or cultivated. Harmony, and the art of composition in parts, it must be confessed, is one of the noblest of the modern inventions: That a fondness, however, for that only, to almost the total neglect or exclusion of air and melody in music, should have universally prevailed at "arms" and "Britons, strike home!" is one of many which might be mentioned. He was the first who introduced the trumpet as an accompaniment to his songs. I have been told by a person, who was well acquainted with Handel, that, on hearing one of Purcell's songs, accompanied by Grano on the trumpet, that great master was so fond of it, that, in his opera of Rinaldo, the first which he composed in England, he made the song "Hor la tromba" for Grano, one of the finest trumpet songs that ever was composed, or perhaps ever will be composed, as that noble, martial instrument is now neglected and laid aside, as too manly for the soft manners of the age! Indeed, the whole opera of Rinaldo is excellent, notwithstanding the ridicule of the Spectator, which, by the bye, does not affect the music.—To conclude: If we are to look for a good national taste in music, at any time, in England, I imagine it must be in the compositions of Purcell, and his contemporaries Lock, Wise, Blow, &c. To speak of the merit of the present theatrical music in England, would be rash: I shall, therefore, here conclude this digression, which, in an essay on so defunctory a subject as music, will, I hope, be excused.

at this time in Italy, is a remarkable fact. We shall further illustrate this from another historical fact in the annals of music.

The Opera, that noble and elegant species of the musical drama, now so much improved and established in most of the theatres in Europe, and which chiefly consists in airs for a single voice, with instrumental accompaniments, was not known in Palestrina's or the Prince of Venosa's time. It was first introduced in the beginning of the seventeenth century. The dramatic poem of Euridice, made by Ottavio Rinuncini, a Florentine poet, was set to music by Jacopo Peri, who, on that occasion, invented the recitativo, or musical discourse. The opera of Euridice was first represented on the theatre at Florence in the year 1600, on occasion of the marriage of Mary of Medicis with King Henry IV. of France. What appears most remarkable, so much was harmonic composition universally

* It is curious to observe, that the state of music in England, at the same period, appears to have been precisely similar to that in Italy, that is, purely-harmonic, as may be seen from the compositions of Marbeck, Tallis, Birde, &c.; and, after them, of Henry Lawes, Lanere, and Campion, down to the Restoration.
fally established, that, in the above opera, there is not one air or song for a single voice. The whole opera consists of duetti, terzetti, cori, and recitativo.

To return to my subject:

In the above state of music in Italy, we may suppose the Scottish melodies of King James I. had found their way into that country. Is it, then, to be wondered at, that such a genius as the Prince of Venosa should be struck with the genuine simplicity of strains which spoke directly to the heart, and that he should imitate and adopt such new and affecting melodies, which he found wanting in the music of his own country? The sweet, natural, and plaintive strains of the old song Waly waly up the bank—Will ye go to the ewe-bughts, Marion—Be constant ay—and many other of our old songs about that age, must touch the heart of every genius, of whatever country, and might enrich the compositions of the greatest foreign master.

Purpureus late qui splendeat unus et alter Adfuitur pannus.

I hope we shall no longer hear the absurd tale, that the Scottish music was either invented or improved proved by an Italian, when we see it proved, by so great an authority as Tassoni, that the Scottish melodies, above two centuries ago, and in his time, had been adopted into the finest vocal compositions of one of the greatest masters and reformers of Italian music, the Prince of Venosa.—To return to the Scottish songs:
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC. 217

It cannot be doubted, that, under such a genius in poetry and music as King James I. the national music must have greatly improved. One great step to the improvement of the science of music, was the introduction of organs, by that Prince, into the cathedrals and abbeys of Scotland; and, of course, the establishment of a choral service of church music. We have seen, that he had composed several anthems, or vocal pieces of sacred music*, which shews, that his skill in the scientific parts of music must have been very high; and he established a full choir of singers in the church service, which was brought by him to such a degree of perfection, as to fall little short of the English†, who,

* Che cose sacre compose in canto. Tassoni.

† Divinus Cultus, hoc rege, decentibus, mirum in modum, ornatus est ceremoniis, Introducto novo cantandi ritu musico: Qua in arte ipse plurimum pollebat, viroque domi who, at that time, were thought to excel all other nations in church music.

King James is said to have been a fine performer on the lute and harp, with which he accompanied his own songs*. Playing on these instruments must, by the Prince's example, have become fashionable; and, of course, a more regular and refined modulation in the Scottish songs must have been introduced. The simple scale of the pipe, by the introduction of the stringed instruments, became, in consequence, much enlarged, not only by a greater extent of notes, but by the division of them into semitones.

The

in ea peritissimos alebat. Infuper quae vocant organa qualia nunc sunt, antea enim veteribus et necio an fatis, ad sacram harmoniam, accommodis cantibus utebantur, tum primum per eum in Scotiam sunt adducta. Tantum vero quidam nostrates ea in brevi proficeri, ut Anglos (quos aiunt reliquis nationibus hac in arte anteferri) haudquaquam deinceps inferiores haberentur. Boeth. Hist. lib. 17.—A noble and irrefrangible testimony, this, of the establishment and excellency of church music in England and Scotland, in the time of King Henry VI. and James I.; that is, a century before Palestrina.

* In uno vocis, et in taetu Citharae (natura) dulciter et dilectabiliter illum praedotavit. Fordun, vol. 2. c. 28.
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC. 219

The great aera of poetry, as of music, in Scotland, I imagine to have been from the beginning of the reign of King James I. down to the end of King James V’s. * The old cathedrals and abbeys, those venerable monuments of Gothic grandeur, with the choristers belonging to them, according to the splendour of their ritual church service, were so many schools or seminaries for the cultivation of music. It must be owned, however, that, altho’ the science of harmonic music was cultivated by the church composers, yet as the merit of the church music; at that time, consisted in its harmony only, the fine flights and pathetic expression of our songs could borrow nothing from thence.

This was likewise the aera of chivalry: The feudal system was then in its full vigour.

The Scottish nobility, possessed of great estates, hereditary jurisdictions, and a numerous vassalage, maintained, in their remote castles, a state and splendour

* Within this aera flourished Gavin Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, whose excellent translation of Virgil’s Æneis may compare with Chaucer, the first poet of that age; Bellenden, arch-dean of Murray; Dunbar, Henryson, Scott, Montgomery, Sir D. Lindsay, and many others, whose fine poems have been preserved in Banatyne’s excellent collection, of which several have been published by Allan Ramsay, in his Evergreen.
Dissertation on

dour little inferior to the court of their kings. Upon solemn occasions, tilts and tournaments were proclaimed, and festivals held with all the Gothic grandeur and magnificence of chivalry, which drew numbers of knights and dames to these solemnities.—Thus the poetic, the sublime Warton!

Illumining the vaulted roof,
A thousand torches flam’d aloof,
From costly cups, with golden gleam,
Sparkled the red Methelin’s stream:
To grace the gorgeous festival,
Along the lofty windowed hall,
The flowered tapestry was hung,
With minstrelsy the rafters rung;
Of harps, that, with reflected light,
From the proud gallery glittered bright.
To crown the banquet’s solemn close,
Themes of British glory rose;
And, to the strings of various chime,
Attempered the heroic rime.

Ode on the Grave of King Arthur.

James IV. and V. were both of them magnificent Princes: They kept splendid courts, and were great promoters of those heroic entertainments*.

In

* Pitfcottie’s History of James IV. Leslie, &c.

We have two fine pictures of these Princes by two very eminent masters, which I cannot resist the pleasure of exhibiting in this place.

The
In the family of every chief, or head of a clan, the Bard was a very considerable perfon: His office, upon solemn feasts, was to sing or rehearse the splendid actions of the heroes, ancestors of the family, which he accompanied with the harp. At this time, too, there were itinerant or strolling minstrels, performers on the harp, who went about the country, from house to house, upon solemn occasions, reciting heroic ballads, and other popular episodes.

These wandering harpers are mentioned thus by Major: "In Cithara, Hibernensis aut silvestres
Scoti,

The learned Erasmus thus describes King James IV. "E-rat ea corporis specie, ut vel procul Regem posset agnovere, ingenii vis mira, incredibilis omnium rerum cognitio."

The French poet Ronfard, who came to Scotland with the Princes Madalene, wife to James V. and was an officer in the King's houfehold, gives the following beautiful decrip-tion of that Prince:

Ce Roy d'Ecoffe etoit en la fleur de ses ans,
Ces cheveux non tondu comme fin or linfans.
Cordonez et crespez, flotans defli sa face ;
Et, par fon col de lait, lui donoit de bon grace,
Son Port etoit Royal, fon regard vigoureux,
De vertus, et de bonneur et de guerre amoureux.
La douceur, et la force, illuflraient fon visage,
Si que Venus et Mars en avoient fait partage.
DISSE不合格ATION ON

"Scoti, qui in illa arte praecipu sunt."—To these sylvan minstrels, I imagine we are indebted for many fine old songs, which are more varied in their melody, and more regular in their composition, as they approach nearer to modern times, though still retaining "their wood-notes wild."

* * *

To frame an idea of the heaven-born genius of the ancient minstrel or wandering harper, in a rude age, see Dr. Beattie's fine poem, the Minstrel, Part I.

---Song was his favourite, and first pursuit,
The wild harp rang to his adventurous hand,
And languish'd to his breath the plaintive flute;
His infant muse, though artless, was not mute.

Meanwhile, whate'er of beautiful, or new,
Sublime, or dreadful, in earth, sea, or sky,
By chance or search, was offered to his view,
He scanned with curious and romantic eye,
Whate'er of lore tradition could supply,
From Gothic tale, or song, or fable old,
Rous'd him, still keen to listen, and to pry;
At last, though long by penury controll'd,
And solitude, his soul her graces 'gan unfold.

Minstrel, Part I.

The laft of these strolling harpers [was Rory or Roderick Dall, who, about fifty years ago, was well known and much cared for by the Highland gentry, whose houses he frequented. His chief residence was about Blair in Athole and Dunkeld.
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

To the wandering harpers we are certainly indebted for that species of music, which is now scarcely known; I mean the Port. Almost every great family had a Port that went by the name of the family. Of the few that are still preserved are, Port Lennox, Port Gordon, Port Seton, and Port Athole, which are all of them excellent in their kind. The Port is not of the martial strain of the march, as some have conjectured; those above named being all in the plaintive strain, and modulated for the harp.

The Pibrach, the march or battle-tune of the Highland Clans, with the different strains introduced of the coronach, &c. is fitted for the bagpipe only: Its measure, in the pas grave of the Highland piper, equipped with his flag and military ensigns, when marching up to battle, is stately and animating, rising often to a degree of fury.

To clas the old Scottish songs, according to the several aeras in which we may suppose them to have been made, is an attempt which can arise to conjecture only, except as to such of them as carry more certain marks, to be afterwards taken notice of.

Of Dunkeld. He was esteemed a good composer, and a fine performer on the harp, to which he sung in a pathetic manner. Many of his songs are preserved in that country.
Of our most ancient melodies, I have, in the beginning of this essay, given a few, such as Gil Morrice, &c. with what I imagine to be the signatures of their antiquity. To what aera these can be referred, I do not pretend to say: My conjecture, however, is, that, from their artless simplicity, they belong to an age prior to James I. The investigation of other pieces of our oldest music, by the same standard, may be an agreeable amusement to the curious.

From the genius of King James, his profound skill in the principles of music, and great performance on the harp, we may esteem him the inventor and reformer of the Scottish vocal music. Of his age (some of them very probably of his composition) may be reckoned the following simple, plaintive, and antient melodies: Jocky and Sandie—Waly, waly up the bank—Ay waking Ob!—Be constant ay—Will ye go to the ewe-bugets, Marion.

From these, by an insensible gradation, we are led to what I conjecture may be called the second epoch of our songs, that is, from the beginning of the reign of King James IV. James V. and to the end of that of Queen Mary, within which period may be reckoned the following songs, the old tragic ballads
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

lads Busk ye, buxh ye, my bonny bride, and Hero and Leander—Willie's rair and Willie's fair—Cromlet's Lilt—The Flowers of the Forest—Gilderoy—Balow my boy—The Gaberlunye Man—The bonnie Earle of Murray—Leeder Haughs in Tarow—Absence will never alter me—Tak' your auld cloak about ye—and the old melody lately revived, called Queen Mary's Lamentation, which, I am well assured, belongs to, and bears the signatures of that age. In the preceding airs, besides a more varied melody, there is likewise an artful degree of modulation, observable in several of them, in the introduction of the seventh of the key, as in Waly Waly—The Flowers of the Forest—Queen Mary's Lament—The bonny Earle of Murray. This strain is peculiarly characteristic of the ancient Scottish songs, and has a fine pathetic effect, which must give pleasure to the most refined ear. As, in the foregoing observation, it is remarked by Tassoni, on the new-invented music of King James I., that it 'was plaintive and melancholy, and different from all other music,' it may, with probability, be conjectured, from James's skill and masterly performance on the stringed instruments, that this peculiar strain, of the seventh of the key, may have been Il trov'va da se stesso, un nuova musica, lamentevole e mezza, differente da tutte l'altr'.

first invented and introduced into our old music by that Prince.

In the third aera, which comprehends the space of time from Queen Mary to the Restoration, may be classed the following songs, Through the lang muir I followed my Willie—Pinky Haufe—Etrick Banks—I'll never leave thee—The Broom of Couden-knows—Down the burn Davie—Auld Rob Morris—Where Helen lies—Fie on the wars—Thro' the wood, laddie—Fie let us a' to the wedding—Muirland Willie.

From these we are led to the last aera, that is, from the Restoration, to the Union. Within this period, from their more regular measure and more modern air, we may almost, with certainty, pronounce the following fine songs to have been made, An' thou wert mine ain thing—O dear minnie, what sal I do—The bush aboon Traquair—The last time I came o'er the moor—Mary Scot, the flower of Tarow—The bonny boatman—Sae merry as we ha' been—My dearie an' thou die—She rose and let me in—My apron, dearie—Love is the cause of my mourning—Allan water—There's my thumb I'll ne'er beguile thee—The Highland laddie—Bonny Jean of Aberdeen—The last of Patie's mill—The yellow-hair'd laddie—John Hay's bonny lassie—Tweed-side—Lochaber.
We are not, however, to imagine, that, from this last period, the genius of Scottish music had taken flight: That is not the case. Indeed, the number of Scottish songs has of late not much increased; it, nevertheless, is true, that, since that last period, several fine songs have been made, which will stand the test of time. Amongst these are, The birks of Invermay—The banks of Forth—Rosalin Castle—The braes of Ballendine. The two last were composed by Olfald, whose genius in composition, joined to his taste in the performance of the Scottish music, was natural and pathetic.

In thus classing the songs, as above, it is obvious, that no fixed or certain rules can be prescribed. Some of these old songs, it is true, are certain of themselves the precise aera to which they belong; such as, The flowers of the Forest, composed on the fatal battle of Flodden, where the gallant James IV. and the flower of the Scottish nobility and gentry fell;—The Souters of Selkirk, composed on the same occasion;—Gilderoy, made on the

* This ballad is founded on the following incident:—Previous to the battle of Flodden, the town-clerk of Selkirk conducted a band of eighty souters, or shoemakers, of that town, who joined the royal army; and the town-clerk, in reward
the death of a famous outlaw hanged by James V.;
—Queen Mary’s Lament;—The bonny Erle of Murray, slain by Huntlie in 1592. In general, however, in making those arrangements, besides the characters which I have mentioned, as I know of no other distinguishing marks for a fixed standard, the only rule I could follow was to select a few of the most undoubted ancient melodies, such as may be supposed to be the production of the simplest instrument, of the most limited scale, as the shepherd’s reed; and thence to trace them gradually downward, to more varied, artful, and regular modulations, the compositions of more polished manners and times, and suitable to instruments of a more extended scale.

If, in following this plan, I have been successful, it will afford entertainment to a musical genius, to trace the simple strains of our rude ancestors through reward of his loyalty, was created a Knight-banneret by that Prince. They fought gallantly, and were most of them cut off. A few who escaped, found on their return, in the forest of Lady-wood edge, the wife of one of their brethren lying dead, and her child sucking her breast. Thence the town of Selkirk obtained, for their arms, a woman sitting upon a sarcophagus, holding a child in her arms; in the background a wood; and on the sarcophagus the arms of Scotland.

through different ages, from King James I. who truly may be stiled the Father of the Scottish songs, so distinguished from the music of every other country, progressively downwards, to modern times. This, to a musical genius, may afford the same amusement it has given to me, in considering the melodies thus selected and arranged, trying them by the signatures above pointed out, and adding others to the above number.

A second point I also had in view: It was, from the number of our Scottish songs, to select a few of those which I imagine to be the finest, and most distinguished, for originality of air, agreeable modulation, and expression of the subject for which they have been composed. Upon a review of these airs, thus far I may venture to say, that, for genuine flight of fancy, pleasing variety, and originality, they will stand the test of comparison with the music of any country, and afford entertainment to the most refined taste.

I have hinted that our Scottish songs owe nothing to the church-music of the cathedrals and abbeys before the Reformation; for, although music made a considerable part of the ritual church-service, yet, from some of their books, which have escaped escaped the rage of the Reformers, we find their music to have consisted entirely of harmonic compositions, of four, five, often of six, seven, and eight parts, all in strict counterpoint. Such were perfectly suitable to the solemnity of religious worship; and, when performed by a full choir of voices, accompanied by the organ, must undoubtedly have had a solemn and awful effect upon a mind disposed to devotion. Church-music has nothing to do with the passions. The style of such composition is to calm the mind, and inspire devotion, suitable to the majesty of that Being to whom it is addressed. Nothing, however, can be more opposite than such harmonic compositions to the genius of love-songs, which confine in the simple melody of one single part.

It is a common tradition, that, in ridicule of the cathedral-service, several of their hymns were, by the wits among the Reformed, burlesqued, and sung as profane ballads. Of this there is some remaining evidence. The well-known tunes of John come kiss me now—Kind Robin lo’es me—and John Anderson my jo—are said to be of that number.

At the establishment of the Reformation, one of the first pious works of the Reformed clergy was,
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

To translate, into Scottish metre, the Psalms of David, and to introduce them into the kirk, to be sung to the old church-tunes. John Knox's book of psalms, called The Common Tunes, is still extant, and sung in the churches, and consists of four parts: a treble, tenor, counter-alt, and bass. The harmony of these tunes is learned and full, and proves them to be the work of very able masters in the counterpoint.

In order, however, to enlarge the psalmody, the clergy soon after were at pains to translate, into Scottish metre, several parts of Scripture, and some old Latin hymns, and other pieces. At the same time, as they had no objections to the old music, they made an effort to reclaim some of those tunes from the profane ballads into which they had been burlesqued, and sung by the vulgar.

A collection of these pieces was printed at Edinburgh about the 1590, by Andro Hart, in old Saxon, or black letter, under the title of, A compendious book of godly and spiritual songs, collected out of sundry parts of the Scripture, with sundrie of other ballats, changed out of prophaine synges, for avoiding of sinne and harlotrie, &c.

Amongst
Amongst these ballads, John come kis me now makes his appearance; stripped indeed of his profane dres, which had promoted sinne and barbarie; but, in exchange, so strangely equipped in his penitential habit, as to make a more ridiculous figure than his brother Jack, in the Tale of a Tub. As a curiosity, I shall give two or three of the stanzas of this new-converted godly ballad.

John come kis me now,
John come kis me now,
John come kis me by and by,
And mak na mair adow.

The Lord thy God I am,
That (John) does thee call
John, repreents man,
By grace celestial.

My prophets call, my preachers cry,
John come kis me now,
John come kis me by and by,
And mak na mair adow.

To laugh were want of godliness and grace,
And to be grave exceeds all power of face.

What a strange medley of canting absurdity and nonsense! Such shocking indecent familiarity, under the name of Devotion! This was the leven, which, which, fermenting into that wild spirit of fanaticism in the following age, involved the nation in blood, and overthrown the state of the three kingdoms. Of this leaven, from some late appearances, there is reason to apprehend that too much still remains among us. To proceed:
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC. 239

If the other tunes, preserved of the old church music, were in the same stile of John come kis me now, our fine old melodies, I think, could borrow nothing from them.

I shall conclude this essay with a few observations on the Scottish songs.

The Scottish melodies contain strong expression of the passions, particularly of the melancholy kind; in which the air often finely corresponds to the subject of the song. In this, I conjecture, the excellency of the ancient Greek music consisted, of which we are told such wonderful effects. The Greek musicians were also poets, who accompanied their own verses on the harp. Such, likewise, was the Saxon Alfred; and in the same light we may see our James I. who both of them accompanied their own poems on the lute or harp. Terpander is said to have composed music for the Iliad of Homer.
mer; Timotheus played and sung his own lyrical poems; and the poet Simonides his own elegies:

Quid moeæius lacrymis Simonidis!

exclaims Catullus; and, inspired with the genius of music, in this fine apostrophe, cries out our great poet!

And, O sad Virgin, could thy power,

But raise Museus from his bower!

Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing,

Such notes as warbled on the string,

Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,

And made hēl grant what lov did seek.

Let us acknowledge the excellency of the Greek music; yet as the principles of harmony, or composition in parts, seem not to have been known to them, at least as far as has yet been discovered, this excellency of their music must have resulted from the natural melody of their airs, expressive of the words to which they were adapted. In this light, therefore, we may run a parallel between the ancient Greek music and our Scottish melodies; and, in spite of the prejudices which we are apt to conceive in favour of the ancients, it is probable that we do the best of their music no hurt in classing it with our own.

What person of taste can be insensible to the fine airs of, I'll never leave thee—Allan Water—An' thou wer't mine ain thing—The braes of Ballendine, &c. when sung with taste and feeling!

Love, in its various situations of hope, success, disappointment, and despair, are finely expressed in the natural melody of the old Scottish songs. How naturally does the air correspond with the following description of the restless languor of a maid in love!

Ay wa'king oh!
Wa'king ay and wearie;
Sleep I canna get,
For thinking o' my dearie.

When I sleep, I dream;
When I wake, I'm irie *;
Reft I canna get,
For thinking o' my dearie.

The simple melody of the old song Waly! Waly! is the pathetic complaint of a forfaked maid, moaning

* Irie is a Scottish word that has no correspondent term in English. It implies that sort of fear which is conceived by a person apprehensive of apparitions.
moaning herself along the late-frequented haunts of her and her lover. The old Scottish word waly signifies wail, or heavy sorrow, and lamentation,

Waly! waly! up the bank;
And waly! waly! down the brae;
And waly! waly! on yon burn side,
Where I and my true love did gae.

Thus Petrarch, in one of his beautiful sonnets:

Valle, che de lamenti miei fe' piace,
Fiume, che spesso del mio pianger cresci,- Colle che mi piacefili, hor mi rincresci,
Ov' ancor per sfovanza amor mi mena——
Quinci vede'a l mio bene! — &c.

How soothing and plaintive is the lullaby of a forsaken mistress over her child, expressed in Lady Anne Bothwell's lament! How romantic the melody of the old love-ballad of Hero and Leander!
What a melancholy love-story is told in the old song of Jocky and Sandy! and what frantic grief expressed in I wish I were where Helen lies!

It were endless to run through the many fine airs expressive of sentiment, and passion, in the number of our Scottish songs, which, when sung in the genuine natural manner, must affect the heart of every very person of feeling, whose taste is not vitiated and seduced by fashion and novelty.

As the Scottish songs are the flights of genius, devoid of art, they bid defiance to artificial graces and affected cadences. A Scots song can only be sung in taste by a Scottish voice. To a sweet, liquid, flowing voice, capable of swelling a note from the softest to the fullest tone, and what the Italians call a voce di pezzo, must be joined sensibility and feeling, and a perfect understanding of the subject, and words of the song, so as to know the significant word on which to swell or soften the tone, and lay the force of the note. From a want of knowledge of the language, it generally happens, that, to most of the foreign masters, our melodies, at first, must seem wild and uncouth; for which reason, in their performance, they generally fall short of our expectation. We sometimes, however, find a foreign master, who, with a genius for the pathetic, and a knowledge of the subject and words, has afforded very high pleasure in a Scottish song. Who could hear with insensibility, or without being moved in the greatest degree, Tenducci sing 'I'll never leave thee, or The braes of Ballendine!—or Will ye go to the ope-bughts, Marion, sung by Signora Corri?
It is a common defect in some who pretend to sing, to affect to smother the words, by not articulating them, so as we scarce can find out either the subject or language of their song. This is always a sign of want of feeling, and the mark of a bad singer; particularly of Scottish songs, where there is generally so intimate a correspondence between the air and subject. Indeed, there can be no good vocal music without it.

The proper accompaniment of a Scottish song, is a plain, thin, dropping bass, on the harpsichord or guittar. The fine breathings, those heart-felt touches, which genius alone can express, in our songs, are lost in a noisy accompaniment of instruments. The full chords of a thorough-bass should be used sparingly, and with judgment, not to overpower, but to support and raise the voice at proper pauses.

Where, with a fine voice, is joined some skill and execution on either of those instruments, the air, by way of symphony; or introduction to the song, should always be first played over; and, at the close of every stanza, the last part of the air should be repeated, as a relief for the voice, which it gracefully sets off. In this symphonic part, the performer performer may shew his taste and fancy on the instrument, by varying it ad libitum.

A Scottish song admits of no cadence; I mean, by this, no fanciful or capricious descant upon the close of the tune. There is one embellishment, however, which a fine finger may easily acquire, that is, an easy shake. This, while the organs are flexible in a young voice, may, with practice, be easily attained.

A Scottish song, thus performed, is among the highest of entertainments to a musical genius. But is this genius to be acquired either in the performer or hearer? It cannot. Genius in music, as in poetry, is the gift of Heaven. It is born with us; it is not to be learned.

An artist on the violin may display the magic of his fingers, in running from the top to the bottom of the finger-board, in various intricate capricio’s, which, at most, will only excite surprise; while a very middling performer, of taste and feeling, in a subject that admits of the pathos, will touch the heart in its finest sensations. The finest of the Italian composers, and many of theiringers, possess this to an amazing degree. The opera-airs of these these great masters, Pergolesi, Bomelli, Galuppi, Perez, and many others of the present age, are astonishingly pathetic and moving. Genius, however, and feeling, are not confined to country or climate. A maid, at her spinning-wheel, who knew not a note in music, with a sweet voice, and the force of a native genius, has oft drawn tears from my eyes. That gift of Heaven, in short, is not to be defined: It can only be felt.

I cannot better conclude this essay, than in the words of one who possessed it in the most exalted degree. Addressing himself to a young composer, he speaks thus: "Seek not to know what is genius. If thou hast it, thy feelings will tell thee what it is. If thou hast it not, thou never wilt know it. The genius of the musician subjects the universe to its power. It draws its pictures by sounds. It expresses ideas by feelings, and feelings by accents. We feel in our hearts the force of the passions which it excites. Through the medium of genius, pleasure assumes additional charms, and the grief which it excites breaks forth into cries. But, alas! to those who feel not in themselves the spring of genius, its expressions convey no idea. Its prodigies are unknown to those who cannot imitate them. Wouldst thou
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

thou know if thou art animated with one spark of that bright fire? Run, fly to Naples, and there listen to the master-pieces of Leo, Durante, Fofmelli, Pergolesi. If thine eyes are filled with tears, thy heart palpitates, thy whole frame is agitated, and the oppression of transport arises almost to suffocation; take up Metafisico, his genius will inflame thine own, and thou wilt compose after his example. These are the operations of genius, and the tears of others will recompense thee for those which thy masters have caused thee to shed. But, if thou art calm and tran-quill midst the transports of that great art; if thou feelst no delirium, no ecstacy; if thou art only moved with pleasure, at what should transport thee with rapture, dost thou dare to ask what genius is? Profane not, vulgar man, that name sublime! What does it import thee to know what thou canst never feel?"

P. S. Since printing the foregoing sheets, I have seen a small volume, just now published at London, entitled, Select Scottish Ballads, volume II. in which the first piece is a comic poem, called Poblis to the Play, beginning thus, 'At Beltane,' &c. From reading

* Rousseau, fous le mot genie.
reading this poem, which is said by the editor to be taken from a MS. of Dr Percy's, the learned and ingenious publisher of the Reliques of Ancient Poetry, and discovered by him in an ancient MS. collection of old Scottish songs, preserved in the Pepysian Library. Although at present I will not take upon me to determine with precision, yet I incline to think that this may be the poem mentioned in the quotation from Major, p. 200. of this Dissertation, as a popular ballad composed by King James I. and, taking it as such, I think the Public is greatly indebted to Dr Percy for the discovery of one of the desiderata of the poetical works of that Prince; and likewise to the ingenious editor of the Scottish Ballads, for giving it to the Public. The editor has added a short note, as the remark of Dr Percy on this poem, which is as follows: 'This song, written by King James I. is a proof that Crichton's Kirk on the Green was written by his descendant James V. being evidently a more modern composition.'

High as my opinion is of Dr Percy's judgment, I can by no means submit to his decision on this point. I have read both the poems in question with attention, the result of which, in my humble opinion, is, that they appear to be compositions of the same age. It must be confessed, that, in judging...
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

ing of ancient writings, it is no easy matter, to fix, with precision, the true aera to which poems written even within a century of one another may belong. To give one example: No body will doubt that the poem called The King's Quair was written by King James I. As little doubt is there of the authenticity of the Aeneis of Virgil, by Gavin Douglas; and, although there has elapsed near a century between the first and the last of these poems, to one who was to judge only, from the language, without knowing the precise age in which these poems were written, it would be difficult to ascertain which of them is most modern. To give another instance: Chaucer, at this day, appears to be as modern, and fully as intelligible in his language, as Gavin Douglas's Aeneis, written above a hundred years after.

Language, like manners, varies in its progression. At different periods it is sometimes rapid, sometimes slow, and often stationary, according to the influence of contingent circumstances. Who would judge, from the language of Boccaccio, or Petrarcha, and that of Metastasio, that near four centuries had elapsed between them? The truth is, that, from Chaucer to near a century after, the English language appears to have advanced very little, that is,
is, during the bloody wars between the houses of York and Lancaster; so that, of writings falling within that period, it is no easy matter to discern any discrepancy of language. But, to come to a closer examination, there appears in both poems a similarity of phrase and of words, of which several instances might be given, sufficient to show that they are coeval, and probably the works of the same hand. Indeed, to give judgment between them, or to say that the one is of an age older than the other, appears to me to be so nice, that, were I not convinced, from their internal marks, that they have been written in the same age, one might be induced to think, from sundry stanzas in the poem of Pebis, that it is much more modern than Chrift's Kirk. The following stanzas, by changing only the orthography in a few of the final syllables, might pass for the language of the present century, so inconclusive are the arguments that may be used on this head.

See the 1st, 2d, and 4th stanzas.—The following 9th stanza, in the modern Scottish orthography, might pass as the production of the present day:

"Then they came to the town's end,
Withouten more delay,
He
THE SCOTTISH MUSIC.

* He before, and she before,
  * To see wha was maist gay:
  * All that looked them upon
  * Leuch faft at thair aray;
  * Some said that they were market folk,
  * Some said the Queen of May
    * Was come,
  * Of Peblis to the play.'

In short, unless in some uncouth words only, which, in a ludicrous poem, describing the low manners of the times in the vulgar language, and which words occur occasionally and as frequently in the poem of Christ's Kirk as in that of Peblis, the one is as intelligible to every Scottish reader, who is acquainted with the vulgar language of his country, as the other.

After all, I imagine my complaisance to Dr Percy carries me rather too far, when I argue this point, upon his own principles, while there is the most positive evidence against the Doctor's conjecture; evidence which must outweigh all conjecture. Mr George Banantyne, one of the canons of the cathedral of Murray, living in the age of James V. gives the strongest negative testimony, that that Prince was not the author of Christ's Kirk of the Green, by asserting positively that the poem was written by King King James I. Let me ask the gentlemen on the other side of the question, Have they ever heard of any testimony, coeval with Banantyne, that contradicts him? No; it will not be alleged; nor is there is any such assertion for more than a hundred years after. Bishop Gibson is the first who, in anno 1691, says, in his edition of Christ's Kirk, that it is supposed to have been written by James V. and, upon his bare supposition, later writers have followed him. Thus far I think it necessary to add to what I have already said on this point, in answer to the opinion of Dr Percy, taking it, upon the credit of the editor of the Select Scottish Ballads, that the foregoing remark is his.