Electric Scotland News

I now have Electric Scotland and Electric Canadian up and available on our new hosting service.

Electric Canadian is now solid and can now be accessed under https://electriccanadian.com and as I purchased an SSL certificate for it it now shows it's a "secure" site in the Google browser.

Electric Scotland is now mostly available and have now got our Disqus comment system working on both domains. Also the site is now displaying as "secure".

I have now created a dedicated page for our ScotNews RSS feed. I have replaced the feed on our index page with a link to the new page which can now be found at: https://electricscotland.com/scotnews.htm

I still haven't been able to contact Steve which means no databases to send over to get our various PHP programs working which of course includes our community. I have no idea where Steve is... has he died, or in hospital I know not. I did see he'd posted up a comment on his Facebook page on the 19th of August but that's the only sign of him.

While I have access to the main hard disk where our sites are hosted I don't have access to the PHP or MySQL databases and as I don't have the main admin password for the windows server I am somewhat stuck and not sure what to do next.

I have emailed the vBulletin folk to ask if there is any way to recreate the databases so I could back them up. Also I note that in the bottom menu there is a menu item "Archive" which does let you view all the messages including the links. That could be a way of taking copies of any messages you might like to retain in the event I have to create a new community.

Our congratulations go to Field Marshal Montgomery in winning the World Pipe Band Championship. You can listen to there winning medley on the BBC at: https://www.bbc.co.uk/events/edbp8g

George Washington Inaugural Buttons http://www.georgewashingtoninauguralbuttons.com/

This site is being used to explore the relationship that the USA had with Scotland and in particular the Inaugural buttons that have been undervalued for years now. There is also new information on the Rattlesnake buttons and we hope to get a paper on this in the new few weeks. Well worth a visit and even if you only read the home page.

Here is the video introduction to this newsletter...

Scottish News from this weeks newspapers

Note that this is a selection and more can be read in our ScotNews feed on our index page where we list news from the past 1-2 weeks. I am partly doing this to build an archive of modern news from and about Scotland as all the newsletters are archived and also indexed on Google and other search engines. I might also add that in newspapers such as the Guardian, Scotsman, Courier, etc. you will find many comments which can be just as interesting as the news story itself and of course you can also add your own comments if you wish.

The Highlander who became a champion of Aboriginal people

Highlander Duncan McNab long dreamed of becoming a missionary to the Aboriginal people of Australia and after leaving Scotland in the 1860s, he was to become their champion.

Duncan McNab (1820-1896), Catholic missionary, was born on 11 May 1820 at Achrinich, parish of Morven, Argyllshire, Scotland, son of Patric McNab and his wife Cirsty. In 1832 he went to Blair College, a seminary near Aberdeen, and in June 1835 to the Scots College in Rome but left on 8 August 1840 before taking his oath as a missionary. He returned to Scotland and was ordained a priest on 8 March 1845. Inspired perhaps by his kinship with Mary MacKillop, he dreamed of a mission to the Australian Aborigines but was refused by a bishop perpetually short of priests, and spent twenty years in parish work. He dabbled in Gaelic literature and at Airdrie in 1862 fell foul of Irish parishioners, probably by arguing the Scottish birth of St Patrick.

Given leave to migrate McNab arrived at Melbourne in the Chariot of Fame on 29 July 1867. For eight years he was tied to parish work in Geelong, Portland and Bendigo. In March 1870 he was refused permission to join the New Norcia Benedictines in Western Australia, but in September 1875 he was permitted to start a personal mission in Queensland. At Mackay he began to see that the one hope for Aborigines was to treat them not as 'a problem'. He therefore sought for them the right to own land and to be treated as responsible adults by law and as individuals. His dour common sense did not appeal to either the government or his clerical superiors, while his fervent and mystical Catholicism made him suspect in the Protestant majority. In March 1876 he became ill and went south to recuperate. On his return he began raising money for work among tribes at Gympie, Kilcoy, Durundur and Bribie Island. He was gazetted a commissioner for Aborigines but became unpopular with other commissioners by advocating individual homesteads rather than reserves. He quarrelled with Bishop James Quinn who considered him a tool of government and refused help, while Tom Petrie believed that he was the dupe of supposed converts. In June 1878 he wrote a long appeal to Rome for help but received no reply and decided to appeal in person. In August 1879 he sailed in the Kent and next year induced Pope Leo XIII to authorize a Jesuit mission to the Aborigines, vainly importuned the Colonial Office in London, travelled through the United States and returned to Victoria. After persuading the South Australian Jesuits assigned to Aboriginal missions to select the Northern Territory rather than Queensland, he turned his attention to Western Australia.

McNab arrived at Perth early in 1883 and became a chaplain to Aboriginal prisoners on Rottnest Island. His recommendations on vocational training to the 1883 commission on Aboriginals were implemented half-heartedly. He then made a reconnaissance to the north and in April 1884 settled alone at Goodenough Bay, near Derby. For two years he laboured patiently with little success but in April 1886 he was joined by Fr William Treacy. In August he visited Derby and was diverted to the pastoral care of miners at Hall's Creek. In his absence Treacy had been struck down by fever and went south, and the mission buildings were destroyed by fire. This was the last straw. According to Aboriginal tradition, McNab, tired and old, rode from Derby to Albany accompanied by one faithful Aborigine. He took ship for Melbourne where he lived in a Jesuit house at Richmond and worked quietly as a parish priest until he died on 11 September 1896.

McNab's curious mixture of Celtic mysticism and Scottish common sense antagonized many but his proposals for native welfare would, if adopted, have saved much agony. His name is still revered in the tribal traditions of the north-west..

The Story

Here is a wee story from The Little Manitoban book I put up on the Electric Canadian section above...

OH! mother, may 1 have Mary over to play with me after school to-morrow?

"Yes, my pet, but you will have plenty of time to sweep the dead leaves out of the arbor and dust the parlor before she comes."

When Eunice came home from school she found her mother had gone out. She took the broom, and as she was going to the arbor she noticed a stately lily withering away. "Oh!" said she, to herself. "it is too bad to allow it to droop like that; I will go and get some water."

Near it she noticed a lovely pansy, which also needed water.

"Now," thought the little girl, "I will water the plants in the window," and this work was just done when the gate opened, and in came her little playmate, Mary.

They played together quite a while, and Eunice said: "I am so sorry, Mary, 1 haven't the new game mother promised me."

"She may be getting it this afternoon, and we can have it the next time I come."

"Perhaps so. I'll go now and get something for us to eat." But the cook wouldn't give her anything.

"How horrid," she pouted; "there is no cake nor anything else!"

After this Mary went home, and Eunice took up her broom again and went to sweep the arbor. She saw something on the rustic seat with a napkin thrown over it. It was a lovely lunch, which had been prepared and placed there for her by her mother.

Then Eunice dusted the parlor and behind a chair there was the new game her mother had bought for her!

Now, Eunice wished she had done her work as she had been told before Mary came, and she made up her mind to be more careful in future and do what her mother told her.

CARRIE WILSON.

Winnipeg, Man.

There are around 40 short stories in this collection and the one above is one of the shorter ones. Hope you enjoy them.

And that's it for this week and hope you have a great weekend.
